Local workers honor strike against AT&T

From Staff and Wire Reports

WASHINGTON (AP) — Management and labor are far apart on wages and other issues as American Telephone & Telegraph Co.'s 675,000 operators and technicians are striking the company for the second time in 12 years.

Larry Armstrong, strike director of Midland Communications Workers of America Local 12127, said about 1,000 workers in Midland-Odessa and area towns would honor the strike and that pickets were set up late Saturday night at the Southwestern Bell office at 410 W. Missouri Ave.

On Sunday, Armstrong said he expected about 5 percent "would probably cross the picket lines" today.

Only minor service disruptions were reported Sunday, the first day of the walkout, as managers and supervisors worked in place of the striking employees.

"Management people are handling the jobs very capably and efficiently," AT&T spokesman Pic Wagner said Sunday. "I expect that the same will be true when the need for equipment service arises."

ACCORDING TO JAY Allen, public relations director for Midland's Southwestern Bell, management personnel are working as operators and Midland telephones will be installed only in emergency cases.

"I'm an operator right now," Allen said, adding that he worked 13 hours Sunday. "I'm surprised how well things are going. The only delay I can foresee is that it might take longer for directory assistance and long distance operators."

However, Wagner acknowledged that the real test of the system would start today, when business calls flood the lines.

"The company says the customer won't notice the difference," Armstrong said. "But they will, especially when trying to reach directory assistance, the long distance operator and they just won't have the manpower for installation and repair."

Armstrong said "there's no telling how long this will last, and usually the general public is quick to blame strikers for any trouble" which may occur during this type of dispute.

"This union (Midland) does not support any violence, sabotage or vandalism in any way or fashion," Armstrong said. "The people that take part in any other action other than picketing are acting on their own and are not supported by the union."

ACROSS THE COUNTRY, picket lines were set up outside Bell System offices, where striking workers predicted the company would be unable to keep up with the crush of service requests.

No new talks were scheduled between AT&T and the three unions representing the strikers — the CWA, the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, and the Telecommunications International Union.

"I don't think it's unfair to ask for an increase in our wage and pension," said Armstrong, who is a cable splicer technician making top-scale — $515.50 weekly — wages. "As soon as something acceptable is brought up, there won't be any delay in getting back to work."

Management mans the phones

While union employees at Midland's Southwestern Bell are outside the building picketing, management is inside dialing.

Management personnel began manning the phones as operators when the president of the Communications Workers of America decided Sunday to strike American Telephone & Telegraph Co., after failing to successfully negotiate a three-year contract. About 1,000 Midland-Odessa CWA union workers failed to report to work this morning.

Tommy Haislip

Along with the CWA, the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers and the Telecommunications International Union opted to strike at midnight Saturday. CWA, the largest of the AT&T unions, represents about 5,000 of the company's 675,000 telephone operators and technicians.

During prior separate bargaining sessions Saturday with representatives of the three unions, management offered to give experienced workers a 3.5 percent a year pay raise for each of the next three years.

Union workers nationwide turned the offer down. In Midland, there doesn't seem to be any hostility between the union strikers and management.

"Those guys are just doing what they think they have to do," said Jay Allen, Southwestern Bell's public relations director.

"It's a friendly atmosphere," said CWA Local 12127 vice president Tommy Haislip. "In fact, we circled around the front door with management about 11:45 p.m. Saturday for a quick prayer to keep things peaceful."

And while both sides are maintaining a tolerable atmosphere, the phones still have to be answered.

"Management people either know, or are learning how to do the job," Allen said this morning.

"Obviously, you can't step right in, but I'm surprised how well it went yesterday (Sunday)," he added.

Allen said he had a "crash course" Sunday on how to use the long distance operator switchboard. Although it takes about four weeks to train an employee on the board, Allen said he learned the basics in about an hour. This morning, some 17 management personnel were working the 30 positions usually manned by the union workers.

"It's going really good," said Shirley Lemley, a Bell group manager of long distance operators. "People have grabbed on and gone with it. And the customers have been really understanding."

Although company representatives have said telephone customers would be largely unaffected, initially, by the strike, Allen said customers may have to let the phone ring several times.

Meanwhile this morning, Haislip was organizing picket lines.

"Everything has gone pretty smooth so far," he said. "A few non-union members have crossed the line."

Because Texas is a right-to-work state, Haislip said about 10 percent of the company's employees eligible to join the union are not members and are continuing to work.

Shultz rules out use of American troops in Nicaragua

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State George P. Shultz is ruling out an armed U.S. effort to topple the leftist Sandinista government of Nicaragua, although he says covert support for guerrillas there will continue.

He also said he hopes Cuba, Nicaragua and leftist guerrillas in El Salvador will "see that it is in everyone's interest to have a negotiated solution" to the region's problems.

In an appearance Sunday on the NBC-TV program, "Meet the Press," Shultz called the recent House vote against covert aid to anti-government guerrillas in Nicaragua "a very important thing...and of course we take it very seriously."

But he said the administration hasn't "by any means accepted the House verdict as the final verdict" and is "working hard" to make sure the Senate doesn't go along.

He made clear the administration will continue its efforts, covert and otherwise, to stop Nicaraguan support for rebel movements in El Salvador and elsewhere in Central America.

"As long as there is a government trying to overthrow other governments in the region, it presents a real problem..." Shultz said.

But as for suggestions the administration will intervene to topple the Sandinista government, Shultz said, "I don't see any armed U.S. effort to overthrow the government of Nicaragua, absolutely none."

Shultz said the administration is "not trying to bring... about" an insurrection against the Sandinista government either, although he said the Nicaraguan people could do that on their own. He also did not challenge reports that Washington has armed several thousand anti-Sandinista guerrillas.

He also said U.S.-backed rebels, known as contras, could be offered asylum in the United States if agreement is reached.

Veterans' convoy doesn't make it to Midland

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

The lack of time, money and organization terminated a Vietnam veteran convoy which was to pass through Midland Sunday.

The convoy was to stop in Midland with speakers to address the local chapter of the Brotherhood of Vietnam Veterans. And when only one car showed up, one member of the Brotherhood became angry.

"I've heard these stories in (Viet) Nam," said Don Isbell, responding to the reasons why the convoy did not arrive.

About 50 cars carrying some 200 Vietnam veterans and their families left Houston Saturday morning on a convoy to Austin and Midland to create public awareness of a House bill that would provide disability benefits for veterans affected by Agent Orange.

Convoys will be organized throughout Texas this month, according to Houstonian Albert Reynolds, a Vietnam veteran who organized the Texas Agent Orange Convoy. In September, Reynolds said he hopes to have a massive group of veterans in Washington, D.C., to make congressmen aware of Agent Orange.

Between 1965 and 1971, the United States sprayed nearly 11 million gallons of herbicides, including Agent Orange, on Vietnam in an effort to destroy crops and deny the Viet Cong the protective cover of the jungle. The spraying stopped when the number of birth defects increased among Vietnamese women.

After battling a thick jungle of Veterans Administration red tape for more than a year in search of answers about the controversial defoliant, veterans finally saw a glimpse of light. Rep. Larry Don Shaw, D-Big Spring, was instrumental in the passing of Public Law 97-42, which allows treatment for eligible veterans for certain disabilities caused by Agent Orange.

But veterans want more. House Bill 1961, waiting in the House for final vote in the fall, would provide veterans with limited compensation for Agent Orange-related cancers, liver disorders and skin disorders.

"We are totally puzzled at the actions of President Reagan and the Veterans Administration," said Reynolds, vice president of funding for the Houston Brotherhood.

"There is no moral reason to continue to withhold medical aid from these dying men and their families," he said, explaining that the Reagan administration does not want the bill passed.

Reynolds, who was to lead the convoy into Midland, showed up about three hours late Sunday and announced that the convoy had dispersed.

"I've talked to Don (Isbell) and he understands," Reynolds said. "He was furious at me when he thought I might lie to cover up why the Texas Agent Orange Convoy arrived with only one car."

Reynolds told reporters and a few local members of the Brotherhood that "we had a tremendous send off in Houston Saturday morning and arrived in Austin in the afternoon, but most of the veterans had to be back to work and couldn't continue."

"I've got money. I could afford this trip. It was bad organization on my part to expect the others to continue. But you learn," Reynolds told reporters Sunday evening.

Reynolds said a convoy will be organized later this week in Midland. The veterans, their families and supporters are invited to conjoin the convoy to New Mexico, where it will stop at the capital and the Vietnam Memorial in Eagle Rock.

"I'm going (to Washington) if I have to go by myself," Reynolds said. "I'm going for help."

The National Weather Service forecasts showers for today along the Gulf Coast from Texas to Alabama and parts of Florida, and in parts of Oregon, Nevada and Idaho.

Scattered showers do not help area's drought

Scattered showers and anything but a drought-breaking rain dampened parts of Midland County late Sunday afternoon and night. Many areas were untouched. "Now, it didn't rain out here," said Valley View community farmer E.F. "Gene" Jones. But he told how a farmer can tell a drought-breaking rain: "If the frogs is swimming and a croaking, and there's water standing in the (playa) lakes. Otherwise, it won't break no drought. But it's a sign that it could."

In the Greenwood area, Chris King "didn't even get a drop. It went somewhere else."

Southwest of Midland in the Warfield community, the Vernon Chandler farm received .7 of an inch.

"We had the most rain I've seen (in months)," said Naomi Chandler. "It sure was pretty. Some of my animals had never seen rain before."

Most of the Chandler cotton farm land is bare; this year, the land has been without a planting rain. But if there is underground moisture or it becomes adequate very soon by more showers, the Chandlers may plant some Sudan grass as a cover crop "to keep the sand from blowing."

"Most of it (the land) is bare. It'll blow if we don't plant a cover crop, and we can't afford it (to lose top soil)," Mrs. Chandler said. Sunday's scattered showers "was really a big deal."

In the Gardendale area, farmer Norman Koonce didn't spot any rainfall on his land. But a week ago Sunday, a strip of his land got about 1 1/2 inches of rainfall from scattered showers. "We had water in the furrows," but not enough to plant a crop on even if it weren't so late in the season.

"It's been a bad year," Koonce said. "We're kind of farming it to keep the land clean, hoping it won't blow and hoping for a better year next year."

Showers in the city were either scattered or non-existent. The National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport reported .04 inch of rainfall. That brings the year's measurable moisture to a mere 2.4 inches. For tonight and Tuesday, the weatherman is allowing a 30 percent chance of thunderstorms.

East of town at the Midland Farmers Co-operative cotton gin, rainfall was almost nil, said Hoot Leonard, co-op manager.

"We got just a trace," he said.

At harvest time, he expects to gin upwards of 2,000 bales of cotton, which would be a scant yield.

"It looks pretty bleak," said Leonard. In the past 17 years, the gin's lowest bale turnout has been 6,500. In the 1979 bumper crop, the gin produced 22,000 bales. Last year's yield was 12,600 bales. The plant is the only cotton gin in the county. The gin's 10-year average is 13,300 bales.

"We've got to start worrying about next year now."

"We don't anticipate any union workers to cross," Haislip said.

As non-union member Suzanne Pettwert to work this morning, picketers asked if she knew there was a strike.

"Yes," she said, while walking toward Southwestern Bell's Missouri Avenue entrance. "I have a kid to support and can't afford to stay off work."

APPEARING LATER ON the same program, AT&T Chairman Charles Brown said that although the two sides differ widely on a new Wages and job security were at issue in the talks, which were adjourned as the old pact expired at midnight Saturday, local time.

"I would not expect a settlement in the next day or two," CWA President Glenn E. Watts said Sunday on the ABC television program "This Week With David Brinkley."

"We want at least double the kind of money they're (AT&T) talking about. The company knows the area in which we must go and they're unwilling to meet that," he said.

Wage package, other unspecified bargaining issues related to the scheduled divestiture of the huge telecommunications company remain unresolved.

"There are a lot more issues than economics, I assure you," Brown said. "The divestiture has caused some complexities in bargaining."

The CWA had been stressing employment security in the negotiations, seeking guarantees that AT&T and the Bell companies will retain employees for new jobs as each moves separately into different segments of the telecommunications industry.

The company's last money offer would have limited wage gains for experienced workers to 3.5 percent per year for the next three years. It also would have retained cost-of-living protection that has provided percentage raises equal to three-quarters of the annual increase in the Consumer Price Index.

As a sweetener to entice union officials into accepting the contract, the company had offered a $2.50 a week one-time pay raise for inexperienced workers earlier last week. Union spokesmen said that offer was unacceptable.

AMONG CWA EMPLOYEES, a top-scale systems technician makes $585.50 per week. A top-scale operator makes $389.

Most reported problems with telephone service Sunday were minor, and directly dialed calls were unaffected. AT&T's Wagner said some delays in directory assistance help were occurring because managers were operating computer terminals with which they were unfamiliar.

In some areas, people seeking to place operator-assisted long-distance calls were being told by a recording that only emergency long-distance calls could be placed with operator help.

Customer-dialed long-distance, which Wagner said comprises 97 percent of all long-distance calls, was unaffected.

Sunday's walkout was the first system-wide strike of AT&T since 1971 when workers were off the job for a week.

who helped organize the event.

Studds said he will announce around Jan. 1 whether he will seek a seventh term. A re-election victory would show voters consider a candidate's sexual preference "relegated to where it should be — irrelevance," he said.

He repeated he is relieved that his homosexuality is out in the open, saying "when one is functioning with more energy and enthusiasm, one is apt to be more effective with his colleagues."

"When Gerry stood up to be recognized, about three-quarters of the people stood up and applauded. There were no boos, which is kind of what I expected," said Ed Camara,

"He didn't kill no one. He didn't rob no one. It's a private matter," said Mary Augustine.

The reception showed "a depth of decency in people that in my most optimistic thoughts I never would have thought possible," Studds said before returning to Washington.

Labor likely to endorse Mondale

BOSTON (AP) — AFL-CIO leaders, opening a three-day policy-making meeting, are expected to revamp labor's 1984 presidential political strategy by agreeing to endorse a White House favorite sooner than had been planned.

Several members of the executive council are pushing to have the endorsement decision made as early as this October — rather than in December — in a move to bolster the campaign of former Vice President Walter F. Mondale.

At the same time, the council is being lobbied heavily by other Democratic presidential hopefuls to stick with its initial plan of settling the question in December, which would give them more time to try to wrest the endorsement from Mondale.

Several labor officials, who asked not to be identified, said there was sufficient support on the 33-member executive council to sway the board in favor of the earlier endorsement.

The political jockeying highlights an otherwise routine council meeting.

The labor leadership, paying tribute to longtime ally Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, invited the Massachusetts Democrat to discuss economics and national industrial policy today. Kennedy last year took himself out of contention for the 1984 Democratic Party presidential nomination.

When asked what the executive council would do about the presidential endorsement, Glenn E. Watts, president of the Communications Workers of America, has said "there's a good likelihood that they'll advance the decision to the (AFL-CIO) convention" in October.

Jerry Clark, political action director of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, whose union backs Mondale, said "we favor having it (the endorsement) done as early as possible."

AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland has steadfastly refused to take sides in the presidential race, saying all along that he wants the labor movement to unite behind a candidate before the primary season so that unionists can have a voice in selecting the Democratic Party standard-bearer.

There is a difference of opinion within the executive council about advancing the endorsement date from December to October.

Under the December plan, the endorsement would be decided at a meeting of the AFL-CIO's general board, which consists of the leaders of all the nearly 100 federation affiliates. Should the decision be made in October, it probably would also be made by the general board, at the AFL-CIO convention in Hollywood, Fla., on Oct. 3.

"There's a little bit of a controversy now about that (process) being speeded up," said Kenneth T. Blaylock, president of the American Federation of Government Employees and a council member. "But the way I read the majority of the council, they're going to stay with it in December."

Sam Fishman, head of the Michigan AFL-CIO, said the decision should be made at the federation's October convention, rather than in a meeting of the general board consisting of the heads of the approximately 100 affiliates.

"I would argue that since the national convention of AFL-CIO is the highest body of the American labor movement...that would be the most appropriate place for the decision to be made," he said.

Mondale and Sens. Alan Cranston of California and John Glenn of Ohio have been contacting labor leaders to press their points of view. And each candidate has representatives at the Boston hotel where the meetings are being held.

It wasn't immediately known whether political operatives working for Sens. Gary Hart of Colorado and Ernest Hollings of South Carolina would attend. Former Florida Gov. Reubin Askew has said he would like labor's support, but would not accept the endorsement.

Cranston last week made an emotional appeal to the United Food and Commercial Workers union, one of the AFL-CIO's largest affiliates.

Workers strike against Campbell's

CAMDEN, N.J. (AP) — Clergy members used silver bowls to bathe the feet of striking migrant workers near the end of a 560-mile trek from the tomato fields of Ohio to the headquarters of Campbell's Soup Co. to seek higher wages.

"That people would strive for their rights in such gentle ways, like Gandhi, that is very important for me," said the Rev. Michael J. Doyle, a Roman Catholic priest who helped welcome the workers as they arrived in Camden on Sunday.

California farm labor leader Cesar Chavez had joined the march outside Philadelphia on Saturday morning.

"We've marched almost 600 miles. It is only a matter of time before we convince Campbell's that they must deal with us," said Baldemar Velasquez, leader of the workers' group, which calls itself the Farm Labor Organizing Committee.

The workers, who pick tomatoes on about 4,700 acres in northwestern Ohio, are seeking three-way talks with Campbell's and the growers it buys tomatoes from. They contend their pay is so low they are forced to bring their children into the fields to make subsistence wages.

The workers struck the growers in 1978 and launched a boycott of Campbell's products a year later. A month ago, about 75 workers began the march from Toledo, Ohio, to Camden. Along the way, the marchers have been sheltered by churches and fed by supporters' donations.

Joined in Camden by 100 family members, the marchers planned to walk "the final mile" to Campbell's headquarters today.

A company spokesman, Ralph Collier, said the company would give the marchers a "courteous" greeting. Campbell's President Gordon McGovern is out of town, but a "legitimate" representative will meet with the marchers, he said.

But Collier said the giant soup maker "without question will not negotiate" with the group. The company "cannot tell farmers how to run their own businesses," he said.

On Sunday, the marchers were hosted for lunch by Quakers at the American Friends Center in Philadelphia, then walked to Independence Hall amid cries of "Vamos, vamos!" — "Let's go!" in Spanish.

Church bells pealed as the workers, waving red flags and strumming banjos, crossed the Benjamin Franklin Bridge and entered Camden, where they attended an afternoon Mass.

Sheaves of wheat and farm implements "baptized by use" decorated the packed cathedral, where 10 clergy members joined in the Mass and in the washing of the feet, Doyle said.

"That was our greeting to them, to wash their feet in clean water," the priest said. "Some of them were bruised and swollen, and all of them were tired."

"I'm very happy," said one of the marchers, Jose Angel Garcia. "People helped us all along the way. We're going to defeat Campbell's."

"It is not fair that they would fare so badly in America, which eats so well," Doyle said of the workers. "They are human beings crying for a human wage."

"The fact is, this boycott is on and these people have been at it for six years. That's what matters," said labor leader Chavez.

The marchers are to start back to Ohio on Tuesday aboard "one old bus and several vans," Doyle said.

On another subject, Shultz declined to criticize in a decision by the French government not to intervene directly in Chad to stop Libyan-backed rebel forces who are trying to topple the Chadian government.

He said Chad is in an area of "prime concern" for France and "The French have to decide what they are going to do...I'm sure they will exercise their responsibilities properly."

In a demonstration of U.S. concern, the Reagan administration has sent two AWACS electronic surveillance aircraft to monitor, under U.S. fighter cover, future Libyan-backed air and ground attacks in Chad.

"President Reagan personally approved the decision to deploy the warplanes Saturday morning," State Department spokeswoman Anita Stockman said over the weekend.

The administration appears to want France to get even more involved, such as by sending in French combat aircraft.

Shultz seemed to place increased emphasis on the need for a negotiated solution in Central America, including negotiations that could help end the guerrilla war in El Salvador.

Referring to guerrilla movements and U.S. efforts to stop them, Shultz said, "The existence of this guerrilla activity makes it difficult for economic development to take place, and its obviously one of the reasons why you want to stop it."

"I hope that the strength that is evident down there will lead people to see that it is in everyone's interest to have a negotiated solution and get on with economic development," he said.

Wages and job security were at issue in the talks, which were adjourned as the old pact expired at midnight Saturday, local time.

"I would not expect a settlement in the next day or two," CWA President Glenn E. Watts said Sunday on the ABC television program "This Week With David Brinkley."

"We want at least double the kind of money they're (AT&T) talking about. The company knows the area in which we must go and they're unwilling to meet that," he said.

Wage package, other unspecified bargaining issues related to the scheduled divestiture of the huge telecommunications company remain unresolved.

"There are a lot more issues than economics, I assure you," Brown said. "The divestiture has caused some complexities in bargaining."

The CWA had been stressing employment security in the negotiations, seeking guarantees that AT&T and the Bell companies will retain employees for new jobs as each moves separately into different segments of the telecommunications industry.

The company's last money offer would have limited wage gains for experienced workers to 3.5 percent per year for the next three years. It also would have retained cost-of-living protection that has provided percentage raises equal to three-quarters of the annual increase in the Consumer Price Index.

Texas cotton farmers fight to save crop

PEACOCK (AP) — Some cotton farmers still reeling from the financial pressures of last year's ruined crop are now fighting to save this year's crop from two old enemies.

Experts told the Dallas Times Herald that current damage from boll weevils and boll worms would cut the yield on some of Texas' 4.3 million acres of cotton by at least 10 to 15 percent. An acre normally produces about 300 pounds of cotton.

The devastation is centered on this 26-county area in Northwest Texas known as the Rolling Plains where the state's second largest cotton crop is planted. An expected 10 percent decrease in the normally high yields from those 700,000 acres will cost farmers about $13 million, experts say.

And heavier losses on individual farms could wipe out the profit margin for some of the producers.

"If we can't make enough money to pay for harvesting, we probably won't harvest," Stonewall County farmer Bill Meador told the newspaper.

The crop devastation began in early June when millions of weevils, who survived a mild winter, began attacking the young cotton bolls.

"At the rate we're going, I don't know how long I'm gonna stay at it," said Meador, who owns 2,500 acres near Peacock, 100 miles east of Lubbock. He has farmed the land for 25 years out is still reeling from last year's devastation when the weevils ruined his crop.

There is no cotton planted near Meador's home, but he set two weevil traps on his front lawn July 1 and caught 12,000 weevils. He spent $9.65 per acre spraying 600 of his 2,500 acres July 12 to kill the weevils, but the pesticide killed both them and the insects that eat bollworms.

Now Meador has a bollworm on every plant, he says. The weevils and worms are not related but both destroy the bolls, where the familiar white fiber is formed.

The crop damage will worsen statewide when a second generation of boll weevils hatches in two weeks, agricultural officials say.

Emory Boring, Texas A&M's extension entomologist in Vernon, told the newspaper that when the second generation of weevils hits the Rolling Plains this month "you could have 10,000 to 20,000 weevils per acre."

The pests have spared the state's most productive region, the High Plains, as well as the Gulf Coast and the Rio Grande Valley.

But in East Texas, about 25 percent of the crop will not be harvested because of weevil damage, and the remaining 75 percent will yield much less cotton and the fiber quality will be lower, said James Robinson, an extension entomologist in East Texas.

The weevils and worms are also attacking 225,000 acres of a nine-county cotton growing region in West Texas near San Angelo.

Mattox doesn't mellow with age

By CANDICE HUGHES

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Some people mellow with age. Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox isn't one of them.

"People back me in a corner and I fight," Mattox says.

His friends use words like ambitious, intense, tenacious, independent, outspoken and feisty to describe the attorney general. His foes add words like vicious and rash.

Mattox is in one of the biggest fights of his career and he is handling it in his usual fashion.

A Travis County grand jury is investigating Mattox's campaign finances, his ties to South Texas rancher Clinton Manges and accusations that Mattox threatened the law firm representing Mobil Oil, which is involved in a lawsuit with Manges and the state.

Many public officials would react with a terse denial of wrongdoing and refer all questions to their lawyers. But not Mattox.

"JIMMY'S GOT a low boiling point," says Dallas Senator Oscar Maury, a friend of Mattox's for nearly two decades. "Sometimes he talks before he thinks."

Mattox has lashed out at "big oil," fired off countercharges against its lawyers and grabbed headlines by calling for a boycott of Mobil to force a settlement in the state's high-stakes oil royalty suit.

He has vowed to "do right and take the consequences" and "fight no matter what happens." He portrays his battle as a righteous one: Jim Mattox fighting against the fat cats for the schoolchildren of Texas.

If he wins, he will wear his scars like medals on the campaign trail. He won't talk about the possibility of losing.

Said one close aide: "He ain't going to say 'I'm sorry.' He ain't going to say 'I was wrong.' That's just not going to happen. He's convinced he is right."

Mattox is a loner with an appetite for combat. When he was in the Texas House, he led the opposition to then-Speaker Billy Clayton.

"I don't see that he's changed a whole lot," Clayton said. "He is kind of a maverick and he played the same role back then. He gave me some good fights. He's a hard hitter. He goes after the jugular."

MATTOK DID well in the Texas House. He established the House Study Group, which has since become an integral part of House operations. He was named outstanding freshman by his colleagues in 1973; in 1975, Texas Monthly magazine put him on its coveted "Ten Best" list.

Washington was another story. Mattox's defiant nature and love of battle kept him off the congressional fast track.

After he arrived in Washington in 1976 as the new representative for the 5th Congressional District in Dallas, Mattox wrangled with House Speaker Tip O'Neill.

The issue was the House dress code. A presidential edict to turn up the public thermostats had just gone out and it was warm on the House floor. Mattox showed up in shirt sleeves as he defied the rules and O'Neill.

The young congressman basked in the spotlight of national publicity for three days. And for the next six years, every time he asked O'Neill for a leadership position, he was turned down.

"Frankly you'd think somebody would learn to be more diplomatic over the years, but Mattox hasn't seemed to," says his old friend Doug Zabel, press secretary to Texas Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower.

MATTOK SAYS he had a tough childhood. When he was 12 years old, his father left his mother to raise three children alone. She did it by waiting tables and relying heavily on her oldest son, Jimmy.

It was a real struggle, said one old friend. "He's always been a fighter. Those were the skills he developed. He had to go with his gut instinct so he trusts only himself now. I don't think he'll ever be close to another human being."

Mattox has said he "ran with a tough crowd" as a boy. "A number of the guys I grew up with ended up in prison," he said once. But a strong Southern Baptist code instilled by his mother kept him out of trouble, he said.

But there were plenty of brushes with authority figures, hints of how Mattox would deal with legislative leaders later in life.

Although he is locked in combat with "big oil" these days, Mattox enjoyed cordial relations with the business community as a member of the U.S. House Banking and Currency Committee.

HE SUPPLEMENTED his long-standing source of campaign funds in organized labor with healthy contributions from bankers and other businessmen.

Mattox has successfully evolved from working man to businessman despite having spent all but two years of his adult life in public service.

As a teen-ager, Mattox bussed tables, washed dishes, loaded freight. He worked his way through college and then helped his sister, Janice, and his brother, Jerry, pay for their educations.

When he finished law school at Southern Methodist University in 1968, Mattox said he was $10,000 in debt. In 1981, his Congressional financial disclosure said he was worth between $396,000 and $1.5 million.

Despite his comfortable financial circumstances, Mattox lives modestly. When he left his four-bedroom Washington townhouse last year, he still had furnished only a couple of rooms.

SINCE HE moved back to Austin, Mattox has been living in a $450 per month, two-bedroom apartment. He says he's looking for a house.

On the verge of turning 40, Mattox is still single, a fact he attributes to the caution of a child of a broken home. He refuses to discuss his reputation as a ladies' man.

Jim Mattox never stops running. Maybe it's because he has run for office every other year for more than a decade. Even now, with more than three years to go in his term, he often refers to himself as a "candidate" rather than officeholder.

Mattox also outworked the opposition Maury said.

"He knocked on every damn door in that district," Maury recalls. "That's what he does best. The first time he ran for Congress in 1976, he walked the whole district with a sandwich board on his back that said 'I need a job.'"

THE RELATIONSHIP between Mattox and television cameras seems to approximate that of a moth to a flame. He finds the limelight irresistible and is an expert at finding it. During the Democratic primary for attorney general, for instance, he held a press conference in a garbage dump to call attention to his conflict of interest charges against an opponent.

"I play at politics rough," Mattox admits. "But I don't know of anything I've done that's improper."

Mattox says he learned to play rough by having "it done to me first."

The year was 1966, the race was for Democratic precinct chairman and Mattox had been recruited by Maury, who was impressed with the young Mattox's sharp wits, liberal convictions and burning energy.

Mattox says he lost by three votes after being branded as a man with "socialistic tendencies." He hasn't lost a race since.

It was Jim Mattox against the fat cats. Jim Mattox for the common man. Jim Mattox against the world.

And it was a theme that would mark his races for the Texas House in 1972 and 1974, his Congressional races in 1976, 1978 and 1980 and his 1982 race for attorney general.

Private plane crash kills three men in El Paso

EL PASO (AP) — Three men stationed at Goodfellow Air Force Base in San Angelo were killed when a single-engine private plane crashed on takeoff at El Paso International Airport.

The crash of the Cessna 172, which took place Sunday morning, also injured a woman. All four were about 19 years old, according to police, who declined immediately to identify the victims.

The aircraft, which belonged to a Goodfellow Air Force Base flying club, was en route to San Angelo when it fell about 200 to 300 feet into an area at the eastern end of the airport, officials said.

Two of the men were dead at the scene when rescue workers arrived. The other man and the woman were airlifted by a Military Assistance to Safety and Traffic rescue helicopter to Beaumont Army Medical Center.

The man died after arriving at the hospital, said Capt. Stephen Markelz, Beaumont officer of the day. The woman was taken into surgery to treat multiple head wounds and other possible injuries.

William McCombs, FAA supervisor, said the plane took off at about 11:25 a.m. for San Angelo.

"He climbed out, and it didn't look like he had any significant altitude, then the tower saw him turn toward the ground," McCombs said.

Records did not indicate whether the airport control tower had any radio messages showing the plane in distress, he said.

Crews to begin reopening gas well

WEATHERFORD (AP) — Work crews planned to begin reopening a gas well that burned out of control for five days before experts used a chemical to extinguish the fire.

The blaze was put out Sunday morning when a 15-second blast of a chemical called dry powder was sprayed on the well, said Saul Nier, a spokesman for Houston-based Red Adair Co., a company that specializes in fighting wild fires.

The same procedure failed Saturday because of an equipment malfunction, Nier said. The fire-fighting team completed installation of a new well head Sunday afternoon.

The well blew out Wednesday, burning six workers.

Fred Williamson, president of Williamson Drilling Co., owner of the rig, said work on reopening the well would begin today.

Three of the workers injured in the blast, Dennis Barrett, 24, of Weatherford, and Douglas Dumas, 20, and Paul Ruiland, 20, both of Mineral Wells, were in serious condition at the Parkland Memorial Hospital burn unit in Dallas.

Hot air plentiful in 'Diner'

NEW YORK (AP) — Eddie's due back from his honeymoon in Cuba, and Modell wants to bet Boogie $50 that the newlywed will leave his bride at home to join the guys at the diner.

They wait, and talk. "When girls think of a guy as sexy ... I don't understand the whole concept," Modell says. "When you got a girl, you got something to look at."

Finally, Eddie arrives, and grabs some fries and gravy off of Fenwick's plate. "Elyse," he tells his buddies, "feels it's time for me to grow up."

In other words, she doesn't want Eddie to spend his spare time at the diner. The next half-hour is like that — a lot of hot air, and some laughs — as "Diner," a comedy special tonight on CBS, picks up where the critically acclaimed movie of the same name left off.

It's called a "special," presumably because CBS has no plans, for now, to make a series of the show. CBS apparently once considered "Diner" for its fall schedule.

Most of the action takes place at the Fells Point Diner, in Baltimore, and the characters are the same as those in the motion picture. The actors, except for Paul Reiser, who plays Modell, are new.

The cast includes James Spader as Fenwick, Mike Binder as Eddie, Max Cantor as Shrevie, Michael Madson as Boogie and Mady Kaplan as Beth. Alison LaPlaca plays Elyse, who was mentioned frequently in the motion picture, but did not appear.

It's 1960, a simpler time by almost any measure, and Elyse and her friend Beth, Shrevie's wife, still can't figure out what attracts the fellows to the diner.

"Can you believe how obsessed guys get at things?" Elyse says. "Eddie, he talks about batting averages ... Batting averages."

Beth decides Shrevie ought to stay home, too.

"What? Are you crazy?" he shouts when she breaks the news to him. "This is the most insane dinner conversation I've ever had."

"Why do you have to go to the diner?" she asks.

"Because ...," says Shrevie, who takes off for the place anyway.

Trouble is, the attraction — presumably the camaraderie, the man-or-boy-talk — never seems that appealing. But maybe that's the point. Maybe the diner is a place to spend that uneasy time between adolescence and adulthood.

ANSWERS TO BRIDGE QUIZ

- Q.1 - Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠95 ♥J84 ♦A106 ♣Q9852
Your partner opens the bidding with two hearts. What do you respond?
A. - There is no point in introducing your club suit. Your job is to set the trump suit as soon as possible, and three trumps to an honor is excellent support for a demand bid. Start off by bidding three hearts — partner might want to initiate a cue-bidding sequence.
- Q.2 - As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠95 ♥AQ8752 ♦1063 ♣54
The bidding has proceeded: North East South West 1 NT Pass 2 ♥ Pass 3 ♥ Pass ?
What action do you take?
A. - By raising hearts partner has shown a good fit and a maximum no trump opener, i.e., 17-18 points. You want to be in game, but you really don't want the lead coming through partner's hand. Bid three no trump — that will mean that the lead comes up to partner. Your hand should produce six tricks, and partner might find it easier to make three more for game than the four you would need had you contracted for ten tricks in hearts.
- Q.3 - As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠A1092 ♥765 ♦K852 ♣96
Partner opens the bidding one club. What do you respond?

Reason to help

You've seen it coming over the past several years. It arrived in Minnesota recently when State Rep. Randy Staten authored a law that requires Minnesotans to respond in cases of emergency or face fines of up to $100.

That state's law was drafted in response to the growing callousness on the part of the public in general and goes a step further than "Good Samaritan" laws in some states which relieve of liability those who render aid in emergency situations.

You might believe it's unthinkable for someone to sit by and watch a 6-month-old child crawl into a river and drown or to gather and watch — but not try to stop — two youths from raping a 13-year-old girl. But it's all too apparent that such callousness is not unthinkable because those incidents have occurred in the past few months.

Staten says such apathy "is totally unacceptable conduct for a civilized society." He's absolutely correct.

Attribute the rampant public apathy to society's litigiousness, blame it on the violence depicted by television and movies or say that the death of America's farm society brought it about, none of those explanations is quite good enough although each may have contributed.

Social responsibility demands each of us take action to protect those around us. If we fail to do that, we are no better than those threatening us. The Minnesota law makes helping mandatory, much in the vein of Texas' law which requires motorists to stop and render aid in event of traffic accidents.

Minnesota's law protects a person from liability unless he or she is intentionally cruel or reckless when rendering aid. That's a necessary part of any statute requiring citizens to act during emergencies.

But if our society has made us this uncaring, that we have to employ a law requiring us to act to protect one another, then that's the type of law we need.

High legal price

The high cost of civil justice is evident in a new Rand Corp. report.

Plaintiffs in lawsuits claiming injury or death from asbestos exposure netted only 37 cents on every dollar spent by all parties in cases closed over the last decade. The rest went to litigation costs, mostly lawyers' fees. The lawyers made more out of these claims than the claimants.

There has to be a better way.

Another View:

Cautious optimism

The recent flurry of diplomatic activity in Central America does not mean that peace is at hand. But, considering the level of violence in that troubled region in recent years, the mere fact that people are talking together is cause for cautious optimism.

Ambassador Richard B. Stone, President Reagan's special envoy to Central America, has been especially active since the weekend. With the help of Colombia's President Belisario Betancur, Stone was finally able to hold his long-awaited first meeting with a representative of the rebels fighting the U.S.-backed government of El Salvador. Both men acknowledged that the session was only a preliminary step to further discussions. But rebel spokesman Ruben Zamora, of the Democratic Revolutionary Front, described the session as constructive, and U.S. officials called it positive.

Stone next traveled to Nicaragua for a private meeting with leaders of that country's revolutionary Sandinista government. Relations between Nicaragua and the United States have been at rock bottom for several months now, with the Reagan administration accusing the Sandinistas of aiding the rebels in El Salvador, and the Sandinistas accusing the United States of trying to overthrow their government by funneling aid to Nicaraguan rebel groups. Just as in Stone's meeting with Zamora, no details of what was discussed were made public, but both sides emerged with positive assessments, and indicated that further discussions will be held.

Equally encouraging, although somewhat less publicized than Stone's shuttle diplomacy, was the agreement among the nine Latin American foreign ministers who met in Panama over the weekend to reconvene later this month. That session was organized by the four countries that make up the so-called Contadora group — Mexico, Venezuela, Colombia and Panama — in order to get all five Central American countries to discuss their differences. The most significant thing about that session was the willingness of the Nicaraguans, who are at odds with several of their neighbors, to take part in the meetings — something that they had resisted for some time. They will also be part of the next Contadora session, which could lead to an agreement by the Nicaraguans and Hondurans to step back from their increasingly tense borders.

But the political and military situation in Central America is so complex that it will take substantial progress in all three of these diplomatic arenas before the violence there can be stopped or even slowed down. Still other negotiating arenas must be opened up before a lasting peace settlement can be achieved.

The most urgently needed, and potentially the most complex, are talks between the Salvadoran government and the rebels of the revolutionary front. The guerrillas and their political supporters believe that their popular support in parts of El Salvador entitles them to share power immediately. The Salvadoran government and the Reagan administration insist that the rebels must try to win power peacefully, by laying down their arms and taking their chances in elections. Unless this impasse is ended, the fighting will continue in El Salvador regardless of what happens elsewhere in Central America.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Terrorists have 'invisible bomb'

WASHINGTON — A hair-raising new development has occurred in the subterranean world of international terrorism. The CIA has learned of the invention of an "invisible bomb" — that is, a secret, sophisticated explosive undetectable by standard bomb-searching techniques. At least a dozen are believed to be in the hands of terrorists.

The disturbing details are known to only a few Western intelligence agencies. Sources with access to top-secret CIA files on the "invisible bomb" told my associate Dale Van Atta how it was detected. Here's what happened:

Last spring, an Arab courier visited a Geneva hotel that is partly owned by Jewish interests but which is also frequented by Arabs. He left behind a portable radio and an innocent-looking suitcase.

But the last minute, the courier — who was linked to a radical Palestinian guerrilla group — got cold feet. He contacted U.S. officials and was steered to the CIA. The terrorist warned that he had left a bomb in the hotel.

Though the CIA officials were skeptical, they notified the Swiss authorities who sent a bomb squad to the hotel. The suitcase and radio were picked up.

The Swiss reported back to the CIA that the two items had been sniffed repeatedly by their bomb-detecting dogs and there was no explosive in either. The tip must be a hoax.

The CIA's turncoat Arab source was questioned again. He insisted the suitcase was indeed a bomb.

With some reluctance, the CIA asked the Swiss to check again.

They did. This time they discovered that the Arab courier was right. The suitcase was a powerful bomb.

"It scared the ... out of the Swiss," one source said. "It was so sophisticated that no one ever found one before."

The explosive was molded into the cardboard of the suitcase. Though the material did have a distinctive smell, it was not any that bomb dogs are trained to detect.

The explosive power of the suitcase material was judged to be greater than C-4, the "plastique" that is a favorite of terrorist groups. One source said the Geneva hotel bomb packed enough wallop to blow up a seven-story building.

With new respect, the CIA gave their Arab tipster an extensive interrogation. They learned that the bomb-maker was an Arab living in Baghdad who had made at least a dozen of his "invisible bombs." Some sources thought it possible one of them was used for the bombing of the U.S. Embassy in Beirut.

The potential of this new terrorist weapon is so alarming, my sources said, that none of the Western intelligence agencies privy to the secret raised objection when one agency set out to find the bomb maker and eliminate him and his lethal products "with extreme prejudice."

DIPLOMATIC DIGEST: Protocol-conscious State Department officials have been amused by a habit of Sen. Rudy Boschwitz, R-Minn. His letters to Secretary of State George Shultz always bear a little doodle of a smiling face next to the signature. The senator's aides said Shultz isn't singled out for this attention. Boschwitz has been putting the smile cartoon on all his personal mail for years.

Foggy Bottom and the Pentagon are echoing with praise for Reginald Bartholomew, the U.S. negotiator who is credited with talking a reluctant Greek government into renewing the lease on American military bases in Greece. Officials say that without Bartholomew's skillful handling, there would have been no agreement. Described by a fellow diplomat as a colorful figure with great charm and a "huge ego," Bartholomew succeeded by matching the Greeks' histrionics with his own. One Bartholomew habit that may have disarmed the Greeks was his habitual reference to himself in the third person.

Better late than never, the hard-eyed cost-cutters in the Office of Management and Budget are finally going to check into the Agency for International Development. The agency disburses billions of dollars a year in grants, contracts and low-interest loans to underdeveloped countries, and AID insiders have known for years that a lot of the money is wasted. Careless officials approve impractical public works projects and give scant supervision even to the worthwhile programs. This cavalier openhandedness was bad enough in the old days, it is unacceptable in a time of $200 billion budget deficits. Sources at AID say the free-spending officials are anticipating lean times ahead as a result of the OMB scrutiny.

CHEESE IT, THE FEDS: Some of the fancy, "New York style" aged cheddar cheese you find in the supermarket may have come from government warehouses, where it has been aging at the taxpayers' expense for as long as three years.

Desperate to cut down on its nearly 1 billion pound supply of surplus cheese purchased under price-support programs, the Agriculture Department has sold 8 million pounds of aged cheddar back to the cheese industry at about $1.55 per pound — 10 percent above the federal support level. Most if it, my reporter Susan Benesch was told, has gone to small companies, and another 2 million pounds will be sold this year.

INSIDE REPORT:

Quieting adviser didn't end gloom

WASHINGTON — After months of trying, President Reagan's aides think they have finally muzzled Dr. Martin Feldstein, the sour-sounding chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers.

"We think we've turned off Dr. Gloom," one senior White House staffer told us. Led by White House chief of staff James Baker, such aides have pleaded with Feldstein to stop calling publicly for higher taxes and higher interest rates.

But just as Feldstein seemed to be coming under control, an informal presidential adviser who is not on the payroll — New York economist Alan Greenspan — upset the White House. Speaking at the National Governors Conference in Portland, Maine, Greenspan sounded much like Feldstein in painting a gloomy picture of the future.

STRAUSS WORRIES KISSINGER: Henry A. Kissinger has privately commented that he would have much preferred ex-secretary of state Edmund S. Muskie to Robert S. Strauss as a Democratic member of his bipartisan presidential commission on Central America.

Former Democratic national chairman Strauss is regarded by Kissinger as potentially the commission's most partisan member. Strauss never has disguised his ambition to be secretary of state if a Democrat is elected president next year.

However, Strauss tells friends he does not feel himself bound by prevailing foreign policy sentiment in the Democratic Party. He says he has given up political ambitions and is ready to be the elder statesman. He also told the White House before accepting commission membership that he had serious differences with the administration's policy and would not pull any punches if he joined the commission.

GLENN'S TV BLACKOUT: Sen. John Glenn's debut as a presidential candidate on a nationally televised panel show was so lackluster that it will not be repeated soon.

Impartial politicians thought Glenn did himself no good when he appeared on ABC's David Brinkley program July 31. He is not likely to appear on other such question-and-answer programs in the foreseeable future.

Actually, Glenn's appearance came well ahead of his campaign timetable for participation on Sunday panel shows. He accepted the invitation when told that the program would spotlight Central America, featuring both Glenn and Henry Kissinger. But Kissinger did not accept, and the program turned into a straight Glenn interview on many more subjects than Central America.

SMOTHERED REAGANAUTS: Anticipation turned to gloom among 21 conservative Republican senators who make up the informal Steering Committee when they got to the State Dining Room for a long-sought political session with Ronald Reagan Aug. 2.

The gloom was induced by the presence of "at least 25 White House staffers," according to one Steering Committee member, arrayed around the big table with the president in the center. Commenting to one of her colleagues, Sen. Paula Hawkins of Florida said she wouldn't have dreamed of bringing up anything controversial with all those aides listening.

Georgia's Sen. Mack Mattingly was annoyed because the Steering Committee had been told not to bring any of its own staff to the session, yet Reagan was awash in staff. That tended to save the president from answering questions that might embarrass him, but the smothering of the Republican conservative senators, Reaganists to a man, made a mockery of the long-awaited meeting.

ASKEW KNOCKS MONDALE: Democratic governors listening carefully heard former Florida governor Reubin Askew, a far-behind Democratic presidential contender, administer an indirect rebuke to front-running Walter F. Mondale at the Governors Conference in Portland, Maine, last weekend: Stop courting special-interest constituencies.

Askew's veiled criticism came when, following Mondale's pledge to be the "best" education president ever elected, he told the assembled Democratic governors that he would not engage in the practice of special promises to special groups.

Down that road, said Askew, would lie a presidency in which the chief executive could not possibly redeem his promises and therefore could not live up to expectations. Askew's belief that Mondale is overpromising mirrors that of many leading Democrats — by no means limited to presidential candidates.

CHARLEY REESE

Liberals' world not as planned

Joseph Califano is the perfect Washington fixer. Former cabinet officer, former aide to Lyndon Johnson, now a high priced lawyer, he has done a good job for his latest employer, the House of Representatives.

A year ago allegations flurried of sexual misconduct and drug use in and around the halls of Congress. Califano was hired to conduct a special investigation. After one year and $1 million, he has discovered: (1) a Republican slept with a 17-year-old girl page three years ago; (2) a Democrat slept with a 17-year-old boy page 10 years ago (one hopes there is more of a difference between Republicans and Democrats than their sexual preference for children); and (3) the majority chief page had an affair with a 17-year-old girl page three years ago.

Overlooked in the hoopla over the two congressmen, Rep. Dan Crane, R-Ill., and Rep. Gerry Studds, D-Mass., is that the allegations Mr. Califano was hired to investigate were not all of vintage sin. Could it be that Califano has tossed out three old sins for the press to chew on in the hope that the public will assume that Crane and Studds are the only two miscreants in the entire Congress? If the public buys that, then Califano has earned his fee.

Crane and Studds should have been expelled instead of censured, since neither has the decency to resign. Studds especially deserves to be kicked out because he has not even expressed any remorse except for the hoopla. Instead, he fell back on that self-pitying cry of homosexuals that his perversion increases his burdens. What hogwash. If, as homosexuals like to argue, sexual preference should not be a factor in judging a person, then why should homosexuality be an excuse for indecent behavior?

Studds' offense is not his sexual preference but the fact that a grown man fed liquor to a child and seduced him — a child that was in the relationship of an employee. That's why the unrepentant blackguard ought to be expelled along with Crane who committed an identical offense.

The House Committee on Standards of Official Conduct could only bring itself to vote for a reprimand, thus saying that the House standards are not very high, a fact which is more than evident to any casual observer of the Congress.

To be fair, the moral standards of the country as a whole are not very high, a fact which is witnessed to by the garbage on television and in the movie houses.

What is shocking about America today is that it is impossible to shock people. No matter what perversion, insanity or horror is paraded before the public, the majority shrugs, some intellectuals fly to its defense and others say, "It's only a matter of opinion."

Liberals and libertarians need have no fear of the Moral Majority for it is a minority. The liberals have won. The American Establishment reflects their viewpoint, not Jerry Falwell's. The liberals have the kind of world they said they wanted, a world free from "puritan" hangups and "Victorian" standards.

Only it is not the kind of world they predicted if their ideas were accepted. It is the kind of world Christians and other religious people predicted if the liberal ideas were accepted — a cynical, brutal and violent world which shows every indication of becoming more brutal and more violent until perhaps with a little thermonuclear help it reaches the point of satiety.

To be precise, it is not that moral standards are low but that they no longer exist. People cannot make moral judgments for they have no criteria.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Ten years ago: Vice President Spiro Agnew denounced as "damned lies" reports that he had taken kickbacks from contractors in Maryland.

Five years ago: The Carter administration announced that Egyptian President Anwar Sadat and Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin were invited to meet President Carter to discuss the Middle East impasse.

One year ago: Frustrated by the Reagan Administration's "New Federalism" program, leaders of the National Governors Association formed their own plan to change the division of federal and state responsibilities.

Today's birthday: Former Supreme Court Justice Arthur Goldberg is 75.

Thought for today: "In order to have good soldiers, a nation must always be at war." — Napoleon Bonaparte, French general (1769-1821).

Leak caused by frozen valve

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — A butane leak that forced the closing of the state's busiest highway and led to evacuations of 166 public housing units was caused by a valve that froze open, Fire Commissioner Joseph Rizzo said.

Officials ordered the Schuylkill Expressway closed and the Tasker Homes housing project evacuated for about five hours Sunday until the leak at an Atlantic Richfield Co. refinery was stopped.

Residents of the Tasker Homes, across the expressway from the refinery, said they could hear the roar of the butane escaping from the tank.

"It sounded like an airplane going down or about to explode or something," said Martha Holman, a housing project resident.

Defoliant sprayed six years later

NEW YORK (AP) — Agent Orange, the defoliant which the Army stopped using in Vietnam in 1972 because of concern for the health of U.S. forces, was being sprayed in the United States by a government agency for six years afterward.

NBC News reported Sunday that Agent Orange was sprayed along with other defoliants on the border in New Hampshire and Maine to mark the boundary with Canada.

The defoliant was sprayed from 1972 to 1978 along 32 miles of the border by helicopters and ground crews by the International Boundary Commission, a seven-member U.S. agency, the network said. NBC said no one in the area was directly exposed to Agent Orange.

Office encourages testimony

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — The municipal prosecutor's office says it is a "public interest" that battered women testify against their assailants even when they want to withdraw the charges.

About 70 percent of Anchorage women who file assault charges against husbands or lovers later decide not to prosecute, says Assistant Municipal Prosecutor Mike Marsh. But under an experimental program by the office, when a woman tries to dismiss a charge she is told it's not her decision. If there's been an assault, the state will press charges anyway.

Once the man realizes that we will support the woman and force her to talk, he said, "in 95 percent of the cases" the man agrees to accept six months of probation and counseling.

'No danger of violent eruption'

VANCOUVER, Wash. (AP) — Although Mount St. Helens shot a steam plume 3,600 to 4,600 feet above the rim of its crater over the weekend, a scientist said there appears to be no danger of a violent eruption.

"It's not a hazardous situation," said Chris Trisler of the University of Washington geophysics center. "It's a little different activity from what we've seen recently but we aren't moving into any alert stage."

Mount St. Helens has been quietly erupting since February. The volcano became active for the first time this century in March 1980. Its May 18, 1980, explosive eruption blew away the mountain's peak, leveled 150 square miles of forest, left 57 people dead or missing and produced a cloud of volcanic ash that circled the globe.

Deputies hospitalized for bites

NORWALK, Calif. (AP) — Two sheriff's deputies have been released from a hospital after being treated for bites they said they received from a man holding onto a police dog.

Deputies John Falkner and Thomas Rosas said they both were bitten by 22-year-old Charles V. Lamping as Falkner tried to rescue the dog, which they said Lamping had in a chokehold.

Lamping suffered scalp lacerations during the struggle and was booked at the hospital jail ward for investigation of assault and assault on peace officers, said Deputy Robert Stoneman.

The deputies went to the house Sunday after a woman said she was being assaulted by Lamping, her former son-in-law, he said.

Officials frustrated over case of missing university professor

MEXICO CITY (AP) — U.S. officials are frustrated by the lack of progress in solving the case of a University of Colorado professor who disappeared last year on his way to a teaching job in Mexico.

One woman reported seeing the professor, Nicholas Schrock, suffering from amnesia and wandering in tattered clothes in western Mexico. But U.S. Embassy officials say that appeared to be a false lead and that they believe Schrock was murdered.

"Unfortunately, we appear no closer to a solution of the case than we were a year ago," U.S. Ambassador John Gavin told The Associated Press. "Although the investigation into the crime remains the domain of Mexican police, the United States government continues to stress to high Mexican officials the importance we give to resolving this case."

SCHROCK WAS ON HIS WAY to a summer teaching job in Guadalajara May 31, 1982, along pothole-ridden Highway 15, which extends from Nogales on the Arizona border 1,432 miles south to the Mexican capital.

Somewhere, sometime between May 31 and June 2, he vanished.

Since then, seven police in the western town of San Ignacio have been booked on murder charges then freed for lack of evidence. At one point a body was found and sent to Colorado for identification. It was not Schrock's.

There have been rumors that the professor is still alive. Investigators say the lure of a $5,000 reward offered by the University of Colorado for finding Schrock may have encouraged the sightings.

A REAL ESTATE AGENT in Hermosillo, 1,200 miles northwest of Mexico City, told reporters last month she saw a dazed man wandering the streets and identified him as Schrock after seeing newspaper photographs.

But U.S. officials, who have circulated photographs of Schrock to newspapers and government offices in western Mexico, checked that and other leads without success.

"There have been alleged sightings of Schrock. But so far we have been unable to come up with any concrete evidence he's alive," said Tom Johnson, who follows the case at the U.S. Embassy.

Tire blowout forces jet landing

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Passengers "were just praying that we would make it" after a tire blowout forced a Republic Airlines DC-9 with 102 people aboard to land with only one engine and a jagged six-inch hole in its wing.

As fire trucks and ambulances stood by, the jet touched down smoothly Sunday with no injuries. It was the fifth emergency landing or aborted flight on Republic since April because of equipment failures or human error.

A Republic spokesman denied there was any emergency, but passengers said they were told to assume the "brace" position for the landing. And the pilot circled for an hour, dumping extra fuel, before coming in.

The Tampa, Fla.-bound flight, which originated in Eureka, Calif., had stopped in Las Vegas and had just taken off for its next stop in Memphis when a tire blew out, Republic spokesman Raymond Tyler said in Minneapolis.

"Just at the very end of the run there was a big bang. And then we were up off the ground and then bang, bang, and we seemed to lose power after that on maybe on the order of a mile," said Louis F. Stolar, 50, of Milwaukee.

"Every time we heard a pop, we lost altitude," said Christopher Liberty of San Francisco. "About the fourth pop, the plane started shuddering ... and then we gradually went higher, and that was about it. We started circling around for about an hour."

The plane dumped 20,000 pounds of fuel as a precaution before landing, said an airport tower worker who declined to give his name.

Passengers said the crew kept calm in the hot cabin, where the air conditioning had gone off, and demonstrated how to sit with their heads down for the landing.

"I just kept praying we would make it. I think there was a whole lot of people on that plane praying," said Sister Marie Therese, a nun from New Orleans.

Airport spokesman J.J. Balk said the plane's return to McCarran was "definitely an emergency landing," but Tyler refused to classify it as an emergency.

"An emergency exists when there is a life-threatening situation. A precautionary landing occurs when there is not a life-threatening situation," Tyler said. "But it is other than routine, possibly."

He said pieces of the tire went into one of the aircraft's two engines.

Gavin said the U.S. consulates in Mazatlan, Hermosillo and Guadalajara "have devoted countless hours in attempting to clarify circumstances surrounding his disappearance."

IF THE CASE HAS upset American officials, Mexicans also are worried that a reputation for danger will hurt the tourist industry, a key part of the nation's attempt to capture badly needed funds during continuing financial problems here.

Millions of American tourists visit Mexico's Pacific resorts every year. Hundreds of thousands visit the resort city of Mazatlan, 675 miles northwest of Mexico City and only 60 miles south of the area where Schrock disappeared.

When investigators began searching a year ago, they found Schrock's truck in the town parking lot of San Ignacio, almost midway between Mazatlan and Culiacan, the Sinaloa state capital.

The local police inspector and six policemen were booked on charges of murder, theft and abuse of authority in the case. The policemen claimed they were tortured into confessing. They said they found Schrock's abandoned truck on the highway.

ONE YEAR LATER, all the men are free after a court dropped the murder charges for lack of evidence, but found them guilty of theft and abuse of authority for taking the truck and Schrock's personal possessions.

They were fined an average of $20 each and given one- to two-year jail sentences which, under Mexican law, carry provisions for suspension and release on bond.

The Sinaloa state attorney general said the police officers were still possible suspects in the case, but murder charges were dropped so the men could be tried later if new evidence turns up.

"If the judge had found them not guilty on the murder charge, we would not have been able to reopen the case," said Attorney General Jorge Chavez Castro.

Ruth Schrock, the wife of the 42-year-old professor, has traveled to Mexico to search for help in the case. "No one could have any confidence in the quality of the investigation mounted so far," she said in a recent interview in Colorado.

Gavin also implies the investigation of the case has been unsatisfactory.

Incumbents collect campaign funds

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senators seeking re-election next year have been raising campaign funds at a record pace, including three incumbents who have already amassed war chests of more than $1 million apiece.

A total of $10.3 million has been raised so far by 27 incumbent senators who have not ruled out re-election bids in 1984, according to financial reports filed with the Federal Election Commission. The senators reported they have a total of $9.6 million in the bank.

Finance reports for the first half of 1983 were due July 31. Of the 31 senators who have not ruled out re-election bids, reports were available for 27. At the same point in 1981, 29 incumbents had raised $7.8 million and reported they had $8.2 million in the bank.

Sen. John Tower, R-Texas, reported his campaign has $1.6 million in the bank while Sen. Bennett Johnson, D-La., told the commission he has $1.2 million cash in hand. Sen. Bill Bradley, a New Jersey Democrat, has $1.1 million in cash, according to his spending report.

Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., raised $1.7 million this year in preparation for an expected challenge from James B. Hunt Jr., his state's popular Democratic governor.

Helms' report was not available from the FEC on Friday, but Claude Allen, the senator's campaign spokesman, provided campaign figures. Allen said the report had been filed with the commission.

Reports were also not available for Sens. Roger Jepsen, R-Iowa, Rudy Boschwitz, R-Minn., and Larry Pressler, R-S.D.

Vacationers tear-gassed; Military games blamed

By the Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

The scenario was supposed to be played out like this: an enemy had taken over the town of Bishop, Calif., in the eastern Sierra Nevada, and the U.S. Army was parachuting into the hills, to organize and arm the citizens who had fled there to fight a guerrilla war.

They called it Operation Volcanic Ash.

They got it half right: some tourists and locals around Bishop were volcanically angry during the weekend, as the war games by the combined 3rd Battalion 12th Special Forces (Green Beret) reserve, ROTC and National Guard spilled over into civilian life, when about a dozen people were accidentally tear-gassed at a tourist camp Saturday night.

Whether it was a few military types who got carried away in the heat of "battle," some high-spirited warriors who got bored with just dropping flour-sack bombs out of aging aircraft, or even local civilian survivalists who decided to get in on the action, is not yet known.

"At this time, I don't know that it was my people involved," said Maj. Robert South, who is commanding the operation and investigating the incident.

He emphasized Sunday that no one on the exercise is authorized to have tear gas. "I'm terribly, terribly dismayed that it happened," he said. "I don't think you can truly point a finger at my unit or anybody. There's a good possibility it may have been ... someone else in the area that wanted to go out and play games."

There were other reports from locals and tourists of armed men creeping around a visitors' lodge, of uniformed men stopping residents and asking for identification, of soldiers from one of the "teams" caching a rifle in a tourist's trailer, unbeknownst to the parents of the teen-agers who let the soldiers in. But, South added, "When an incident like this happens, you start hearing from the whole countryside."

Tourist killed by falling body

PARIS (AP) — A Canadian tourist standing outside Notre Dame Cathedral was struck and killed by the falling body of a young French woman who leaped to her death from the cathedral's tower.

Police identified the French woman as Veronique Stalla-Bourdillon, 24, of Versailles, and the Canadian victim as Joanne Pelletier, 29, of Quebec. They said a French man and woman suffered minor injuries.

A police spokesman said Mrs. Stalla-Bourdillon climbed over a rail on the first platform of the tower Sunday and then fell 100 feet to the pavement as several thousand tourists in the square in front of the church watched in horror. It was the 23rd fatal jump recorded in the cathedral's 793-year history.

Police said Mrs. Pelletier and her sister were visiting the cathedral with a group of tourists escorted by a guide.

Crowd protests air show

RAMSTEIN AIR BASE, West Germany (AP) — About 100 people demonstrated against a U.S. military air show here and four small bombs exploded near the Hahn U.S. Air Force base 40 miles away.

Hundreds of police officers carted away most of the protesters and the show of jet fighters maneuvers, air stunts and mass parachute jumps was presented without interruption Sunday.

No injuries were reported at the blasts at an officer's club near the Hahn U.S. Air Force Base.

Cabinet minister sentenced

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — The Israeli Supreme Court has sentenced a former Cabinet minister to three months in prison for stealing about $1,750 from a state-subsidized charity fund when he was a city mayor.

Aharon Abu Hatzzeira's lawyer said he was considering another appeal and won a deferment of the sentence until Oct. 2. But the verdict appeared to end a three-year legal battle that aggravated ethnic tension in Israel.

Abu Hatzzeira, 43, is the first Israeli Cabinet minister ever convicted of a crime. He is from an aristocratic Moroccan Jewish family, and his supporters claimed his trial was a plot by the Ashkenazi (European Jewish) establishment to discredit the Sephardic (Oriental Jewish) community.

A district court convicted Abu Hatzzeira in April 1982 of fraud, theft and breach of trust in stealing the equivalent of about $1,750 from a state-subsidized fund in his late father's name.

Mugabe reaffirms promise

HARARE, Zimbabwe (AP) — Prime Minister Robert Mugabe reaffirmed his promise to establish a one-party state at 20th anniversary celebrations for the ruling ZANU party.

He told a rally of his Zimbabwe African National Union on Sunday that only card-carrying party members would be able to serve in the 100-seat National Assembly once other parties are eliminated. He did not say when this would happen.

Mugabe's party now holds 57 seats in the body, 20 seats are reserved for whites and the rest are held by members of the Zimbabwe African People's Union and followers of Bishop Abel Muzorewa.

Intelligence officer killed

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — A Soviet intelligence officer was killed when the jeep he was riding in was hit by gunfire on the way to a militia outpost in Afghanistan's southeastern Zabul province, Agency Afghan Press reports.

The agency, run by Pakistanis and funded by the Afghan resistance, said the attack was earlier this month but did not give a date. The report could not be independently confirmed.

Soviet troops intervened in Afghanistan in December 1979 to support the pro-Moscow regime in its battle against Moslem insurgents.

JUCHITAN, Mexico (AP) — Supporters of the ousted left-wing government in this Pacific Coast town occupied municipal offices to demand the Oaxaca state legislature reinstate the city administration.

Authorities took no action Sunday to force the leftist protesters out, and there were no reports of violence.

The state legislature ousted the city government after two people were killed and 20 injured in a political rally July 31. The local administration was elected in 1981 on a ticket of the Campesino-Student Coalition and the Communist Party.

Alleged pilot put on display

N'DJAMENA, Chad (AP) — Chadian authorities today put on display before a large crowd a man they claimed was the pilot of a Libyan plane shot down over the weekend at the desert town of Faya-Largeau.

The man was brought before 50 journalists and 5,000 civilians at the Palace of Congress and identified as Abdassalam Charfadine, pilot of a Soviet-built Sukhoi bomber.

Libya repeatedly has denied it is involved in bombing attacks, although it says it is providing logistical support for rebel forces seeking to topple the government of President Hissene Habre.

The government said Charfadine was shot down Saturday and contended that there were 12 Sukhois based in the Aouzou strip, a region in northern Chad that Libya occupied in 1973.

Charfadine said the planes were rotated in and out of the strip by two under command of the Libyan air force. He said their mission was to cover the movements of rebel troops led by former President Goukouni Ouedde.

Another attack is planned on Faya-Largeau, the man said, "but I do not know when."

In addition to the Sukhois, he said other warplanes were engaged in Chad as well as light tanks that returned to Libya between missions.

Habre, who returned to the capital Friday after personally leading his forces in retaking Faya-Largeau, has appealed several times to France to intervene with its air force against the Libyans.

However, French Defense Minister Charles Hernu said Sunday there was no possibility of an immediate French intervention. He cited a 1976 military accord between Paris and its former colony that provides only for logistical support.

Defector kept in seclusion

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — A Chinese air force pilot who defected in his MIG-21 was kept in seclusion today while South Korean authorities considered his request for political asylum in an undisclosed third country.

In Peking, the Foreign Ministry said only that a Chinese plane was missing from a training flight and that an investigation was under way. But in Taiwan, military officials of the rival Nationalist government said they would reward the pilot with $4.5 million in gold if he came there.

Sources close to the South Korean government said authorities reviewing Sun Tienchin's request were likely to grant his wish for asylum, following the precedent of a similar case last October.

On Oct. 16, Wun Yung-keng, 25, also a Chinese pilot, landed his MIG-19 near Seoul and asked for political asylum in Taiwan. His request was granted, although his aircraft remained in South Korea.

One source, who asked to remain anonymous, recalled that South Korea cited humanitarian reasons for allowing that pilot to go to Taiwan and said it was "most likely" the government would settle Sun's case in similar fashion.

As for the aircraft, the sources said South Korea would be willing to meet with Chinese officials to negotiate its return to China.

Despite the absence of formal ties between the two countries, China and South Korea successfully negotiated the return of a Chinese airliner and its passengers when the plane was hijacked to South Korea in May while on a domestic flight.

Search continues for Baalbek victims of car-bomb explosion

By The Associated Press

Rescuers searched for more victims in Baalbek's central market today as residents of the ancient Lebanese city staged a general strike to protest a car-bomb explosion that killed 35 people and wounded 133.

Most of the dead were buried in a mass grave before dawn Sunday, six hours after a car loaded with 220 pounds of explosives devastated the crowded market in the predominantly Shiite Moslem city of 40,000 inhabitants.

Schools, shops and banks were closed today in a "day of mourning" called by city leaders and the local pro-Iranian militia that runs the city in east Lebanon's Syrian-controlled Bekaa Valley, police said.

IT WAS THE SECOND deadly car bombing in Syrian-controlled Lebanese territory in a three-day span. A remote-controlled car bomb destroyed a Sunni Moslem mosque in the northern city of Tripoli during midday prayers Friday, killing at least 20 worshippers.

"The wandering massacre hits Baalbek," said the front-page headline of Lebanon's leading independent newspaper An-Nahar today.

Prime Minister Shafik Wazzan said the Baalbek and Tripoli bombings were part of a "plan by foreign hands that seek to rekindle internal strife in Lebanon whenever a ray of hope for the nation's salvation appears."

But despite the two bombings in its sector of Lebanon and despite the urgings of U.S. special envoy Robert C. McFarlane, Syria said its Lebanese-based troops will stay put.

MCFARLANE, WHO IS conferring with Saudi Arabian leaders today, met with Syrian President Hafez Assad in Damascus for six hours Sunday to discuss efforts to remove foreign forces from Lebanon.

After the session, a Syrian spokesman reaffirmed his government's opposition to the Lebanese-Israeli troop withdrawal accord. He said the pact, signed May 17, "is being imposed on Lebanon" and "transforms Lebanon into an Israeli protectorate."

McFarlane, who made no statement after meeting Assad, flew to Jidda, Saudi Arabia, for talks with King Fahd. Saudi Arabia is Syria's main financial backer, and McFarlane is expected to urge Fahd to bring pressure on the Syrians to help defuse the critical situation in Lebanon.

A group calling itself the Front for the Liberation of Lebanon from Foreigners claimed responsibility for Sunday's blast in Baalbek and warned such attacks would continue "until no foreigner is left on Lebanese soil."

THE BLAST DEMOLISHED a coffee shop in the market center and devastated the surrounding area.

Police said that most of the casualties were Lebanese civilians — merchants and residents of the low-income neighborhood — but that two Syrian soldiers were among the victims.

The Front for the Liberation of Lebanon from Foreigners, which claimed the bombing in a call to the Beirut office of a French news agency, has taken responsibility for a series of bomb attacks aimed chiefly at Syrian and Palestinian targets. Its political affiliation is not known.

Baalbek, like the rest of the northern Bekaa Valley, has been under Syrian control since 1976, when the Syrian army entered Lebanon to police a cease-fire that ended 18 months of Christian-Moslem civil war.

Syria has deployed up to 50,000 troops in northern and eastern Lebanon. They face an estimated 28,000 Israeli troops who have been in southern and central Lebanon since the June 1982 invasion against Palestinian guerrilla strongholds.

Aircraft carrier's visit sparks protest

TOKYO (AP) — The U.S. aircraft carrier Midway entered a port near Nagasaki today, on the eve of the 38th anniversary of the atomic bombing of the city, and prompted protests from anti-nuclear activists attending a conference there.

The 51,000-ton carrier, escorted by the guided missile cruiser Sterett and two other ships, arrived at Sasebo to unload arms before returning to its home port south of Tokyo for refitting, a Sasebo city official said.

U.S. Navy spokesmen did not answer telephone queries as to why the Midway visit coincided with the annual observance of the anniversaries of the atomic bombings of Hiroshima and Nagasaki, when anti-nuclear sentiment in Japan is at its peak.

The timing of the visit could cause new problems for Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone's government, which has sought to strengthen security ties with the United States.

Spokesmen for Nakasone declined comment, but a Foreign Ministry security office official said the government viewed the Midway visit as "routine."

"Of course there are sentiments about past history... We Japanese think that any nuclear war should be avoided," the official, Yoshinori Katori, said in a telephone interview. "On the other hand we don't understand why people link this to the Midway."

Chisato Tatebayashi, spokesman for the opposition Japan Socialist Party, called the Midway visit a "tangible challenge" to Japan's anti-nuclear principles and to the conference.

He said the party would file a "strong protest" with Nakasone's government when the Parliament reconvenes.

Nakasone has been criticized by political foes and pacifist groups for his strong support of the U.S. military presence in Japan and an increased defense role for Japan.

On Saturday, some of the 48,000 anti-nuclear demonstrators attending atom bomb anniversary ceremonies in Hiroshima protested his presence there as inappropriate.

Today, participants in the World Conference against Atomic and Hydrogen Bombs issued a statement protesting the Midway visit, conference official Naoko Matsushita said.

The two-day conference, sponsored by several Japanese and foreign pacifist groups, opened in the southwestern cities of Nagasaki and Sasebo today, following earlier meetings in Tokyo and Hiroshima.

The group's statement said the Midway's port call was meant to undermine Japan's so-called non-nuclear policies, which prohibit introduction, production or possession of nuclear arms on Japanese territory.

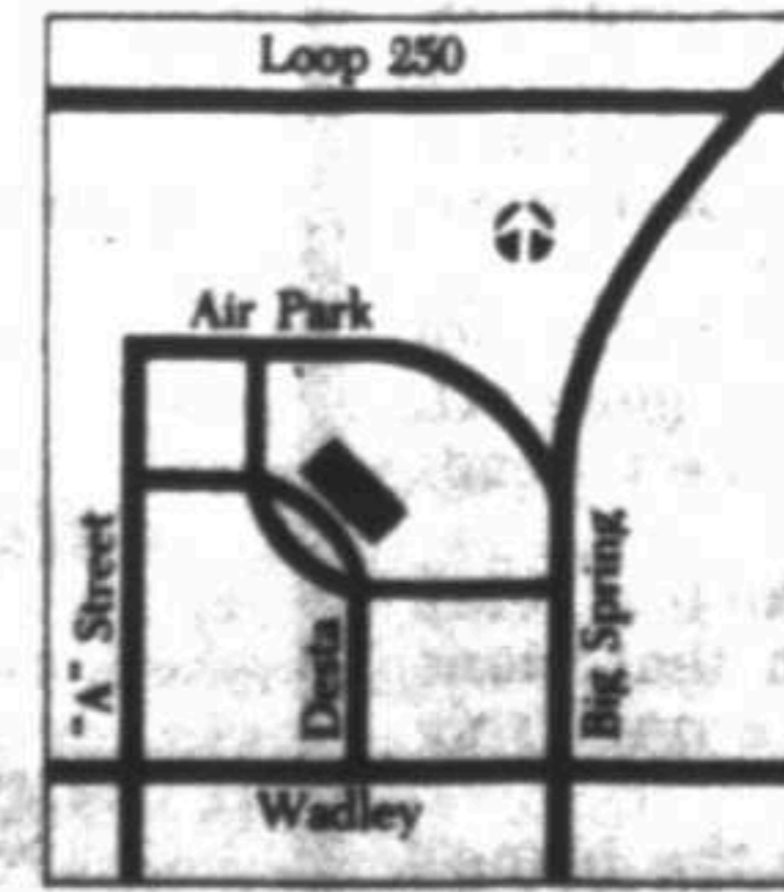

Mrs. Matsushita said 300 conference participants left Nagasaki to join 400 others attending a subcommittee meeting in Sasebo to stage a rally and march in the port city today.

The controversy centers on whether U.S. Navy vessels visiting or based in Japan carry nuclear weapons. The protesters claim the Midway is equipped with nuclear arms in violation of the Japanese ban.

Gators rally to beat Cubs

Beaumont's Golden Gators rallied for three ninth-inning runs and a 6-5 Texas League victory to spoil the Midland Cubs' return to Cubs Stadium Sunday night.

A two-out solo homer by James Steels that cleared the Marlboro Man in left won it for the first-half winners, but it was Pat Casey's two-run single moments before that tied it, even though Pat, a troublemaker for Midland all season, was cut down going for two at second.

If Midland pitcher Stan Kyles, 7-11, reacted to a baseball hit his way like a cat does to a mouse, he not only could have had the victory, but a shutout as well.

The three runs off Stan in the early innings could have been avoided by a little better timed jump or a little quicker reflexes, neither however was an error.

What Stan did in the ninth was, though. After a lead off double by Jeff Ronk, Kyles pounced on John Krok's grounder along the first baseline and instead of throwing to first with his bare paw, became involved in a wrestling match with the ball and attempted to shovel it to first with both elbows.

Kyles had come into Sunday's game as Midland's most effective pitcher the second half. In nine games since June 14, he showed an ERA of 2.55 in 74 innings, four complete games and a 4-4 record, pretty sensational, considering the 7-24 record of the Cubs in recent weeks.

Tom Lombarski homered over the scoreline in the seventh to break up a 3-3 tie that had existed since the third inning and then the Cubs added an insurance run in the eighth off reliever and winner Wes Smith. Don Hyman singled, streaked to third with some heads up base running, when Jeff Rutledge's single off the glove of Ozzie Guillen trickled into short left, and scored on a wild pitch.

While not many good things have happened to Midland in the last five weeks, Rutledge's play at shortstop is an exception. The 22-year-old from Fresno, Calif., came up with a series of glittering saves Sunday, the best of which was his chest sialom to glove Krok's first inning sizzler into the hole. Rutledge rolled over to toss to Trey Brooks for the force at second and just missed getting a double play at first.

Brooks knocked in a first-inning run with a sacrifice fly and walked twice, but was 0-for-2, which leaves the TCU ex from Baytown 4-for-his-last-38. Typical of the way things have been going for Trey was illustrated in the third. One run was in and runners on first and third. Brooks hit a liner that seemed labeled base hit, but shortstop Guillen went into the hole for a Leaning Tower of Pisa catch that robbed Trey of at least a single.

CUB PRINTS—Darryl Banks, 10-9, will start for Midland in tonight's second game of the series. The Cubs loss Sunday was their fifth straight. The pitching job by Kyles would have been good enough to win the four previous defeats, games in which Midland pitching was raked for a total of 44 runs. Lombarski's homer was his 15th. Mike Anichich, who went on a homer binge earlier in the season, apparently is on a double binge. He doubled in a first inning run, his fourth two-bagger in 21 at bats. Anichich also singled to go 8-for-24. —TED BATTLES

White is still No. 1

IRVING (AP) — Danny White threw two interceptions and was booed but he's still the starting quarterback for the Dallas Cowboys.

All jobs are supposed to be wide open in 1983 according to Coach Tom Landry's blueprint for the season. Backup quarterback Gary Hogeboom clearly had the hotter hand Saturday night in rallying the Cowboys to a 20-17 National Football League preseason victory over the Miami Dolphins.

With Dallas trailing 17-6 and less than two minutes to play, Hogeboom flipped a screen pass to rookie running back Chuck McSwain which was turned into a 67-yard touchdown.

After a successful outside kick, Hogeboom completed four passes to take Dallas from the 50 to the Miami 1-yard line where McSwain scored with two seconds to play.

Hogeboom completed 17 of 31 passes for 199 yards while White hit 10 of 16 passes for 85 yards, plus the two interceptions. White was booed by some fans when he left the field after his second interception.

"Of course, it could change during the season," Landry added on Hogeboom's behalf. "It's always good for you if you are the quarterback at the end of the game and you win it."

Many of the Cowboys joked about the quarterbacking "controversy."

"Asked about it, wide receiver Drew Pearson quipped, 'I'm not worried about that one, I'm worried about the wide receiver controversy. That's giving me enough problems.'

"The other one will work itself out. I'm just glad we have not only two but three good quarterbacks. Glenn Carano didn't get out there but he has been doing a good job in training camp."

Pearson said Hogeboom had the hotter hand. "Gary moved the team at the end and hit the key passes, which was good," said Pearson. "He looked a little rough in some situations, but when it counted he hit the key man. That's a big plus for our team because that gives him a lot of experience in that situation."

Pearson said the Cowboys, who have been disappointed by losing in the National Conference title game the last three seasons, got a big lift out of the last-second victory.

"Any time you win one, especially pulling one out of the fire like this one it does something for your team," Pearson said. "Everytime you win one it is another block in your building toward success."

Hogeboom said he was optimistic about winning the job away from White.

"I wouldn't be here right now if I didn't think I could be No. 1," he said. "I don't think I've ever been as pumped up after a game as I was this one."

Raines' slam paces Expos

By Associated Press
Tim Raines belted his second grand slam of the season to back Steve Rogers' two-hit pitching as the Montreal Expos completed a three-game sweep of the Pittsburgh Pirates with a 6-0 victory Sunday.

The victory was the Expos' fourth in a row and dropped the Pirates, losing their fourth straight, to third in the NL East.

Rogers, 14-6, becoming the NL's first 14-game winner, didn't allow the Pirates a hit until Mike Easler slapped a grounder into left field with two out in the fifth. It was Rogers' fourth shutout.

Ivan DeJesus bunted home Joe Lefebvre with the tie-breaking run in the seventh inning and Mike Schmidt later added a two-run homer as the Phillies won 5-2 to sweep the slumping Cardinals, losers of seven straight.

Hubie Brooks' third hit of the game, a tie-breaking two-run single in the 10th inning, led the New York Mets to a 6-4 victory over the Chicago Cubs.

NOLAN RYAN pitched a three-hitter and the Astros broke a tie with an unearned run in the ninth inning for a 2-1 victory over the Giants.

The Atlanta Braves jumped on Los Angeles starter Alejandro Pena for three runs in the second inning, with the help of a shaky defense, and went on to a 5-2 victory, increasing their lead in the NL West to 5 1/2 games.

In the American League, Greg Luzinski hit his third homer in three games and LaMarr Hoyt won his fourth straight as Chicago defeated Baltimore 4-3.

Chris Codiroli and Keith Atherton combined on a six-hit shutout as the Oakland A's blanked the Minnesota Twins 6-0 for their 10th win in 14 games.

Chris Bando hit a two-run homer and Tom Brennan threw a seven-hitter for his first major league shutout as the Cleveland Indians snapped a five-game losing streak and gained a split of a doubleheader with a 7-0 victory over the Texas Rangers.

In the first game, George Wright drove in one run and scored twice, pacing Texas to its fourth straight triumph, 4-3.

Hal Sutton could hear Ol' Bear coming

By WILL GRIMSLEY
PACIFIC PALISADES, Calif. (AP) — "The old bear is coming."

Like a tidal wave, the whispers rolled through the gallery of some 23,000 people walking the canyons of the Riviera Country Club, and they did not fall on deaf ears.

"The crowd wasn't the only one knowing the bear was coming," said Hal Sutton, the leader as the PGA Championship headed toward its conclusion. "I was well aware of the fact."

But he held up like stanchions of steel and won the 68th edition of one of golf's major tournaments by a single stroke over a rallying, 43-year-old Jack Nicklaus, the Golden Bear, the most intimidating personality in golf.

"After I had made my third straight bogey on No. 14," the 25-year-old pro from Shreveport, La., said, "I turned to my caddy, Freddie Burns, and said, 'This is what it's all about.'"

"I told myself I didn't need to do this two weeks in a row on national TV," he added, referring to loss of a six-stroke lead two weeks ago at Williamsburg, Va. "At that stage, something inside you tells you you've got to get going."

"Besides I hate the word 'choke.' I'm relieved to get it off my back." Having seen another lead dwindle to a single stroke and the shadow of the Golden Bear bearing down on him, Sutton collected himself and played the final four holes like Old Man Par himself to capture the $100,000 first prize and his first major title.

He finished at 274, one ahead of Nicklaus, with the great efforts of Peter Jacobsen (276), Pat McGowan (277) and John Fought (278) lost in the wild closing drama.

It boiled down to a duel between the world's greatest golfer of all-time, Nicklaus, and the emerging "Golden Boy" being acclaimed as the possible successor to the throne.

"I thank Jack for not making another birdie," Sutton said afterward.

"I used to be awe of him, but I'm not in awe of him now. I respect him a whole lot, and I just hope some day I can do some of the things he did."

The two-year pro recalled that as a kid in Shreveport he and his two friends used to pretend they were the "The Big Three" when they played golf.

"I was 13 at the time," Sutton said. "My friends pretended they were Arnold Palmer and Gary Player. I was always Jack Nicklaus."

Nicklaus, gracious in defeat, congratulated his conqueror and told him, "You'll win many more of these."

"I think he'll be one of the greats," Jack said. "Besides a fine golf game, he has a good head on his shoulders and priorities in the right places."

It was Nicklaus who suggested there were similarities in their respective careers — two decades apart.

Both came from well-to-do families — Jack son of a Columbus, Ohio, druggist, and Sutton son of a Louisiana oilman. Both won national amateur titles and both got off to a quick start in their pro careers.

Jack won the first of his 17 major pro titles in 1962 as a rookie, beating Arnold Palmer in a playoff at Oakland. This is only the second year on tour for Sutton, who is the leading money winner with $397,664. The new PGA champion looks like a football halfback at 6 feet, one inch and 275 pounds. He has massive shoulders and powerful arms. He tackles a golf course with the grimness and precision of a Ben Hogan.

Ever since he joined the tour, the pros have marveled at the power and consistency of his game, his unflappable temperament and maturity well beyond his 25 years.

"He has all the tools — he will be one the greatest," says Lee Trevino, predicting Sutton will be a dominant figure through the next two decades, following Palmer, Nicklaus and Tom Watson in the line of succession.

JIM MURRAY

Is it his fault he can't putt for Peete's sake?

Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

You can tell right away what's wrong with Calvin Peete's golf game. Even a driving range instructor could spot it.

It's his left arm. He doesn't keep it straight. His left elbow flies. He's got a takeaway like a 10-handcapper. You see him swing and you reach for your wallet. The word goes around the clubhouse. "Hey, we got a dude with a flying elbow. It doesn't straighten in. See if he's got a game for Saturday. Give him two a side with two presses."

It's a fatal flaw. Those of us who have it know all too well the results: a big, banana slice over two fairways into the hillsides or a smother hook that never gets off the ground as it slides out of bounds. The top shot into the water.

That's the first thing they teach you in golf: keep your left arm straight. Everything else is secondary. If you don't do that, forget the rest of the game.

Only, Calvin Peete can't. His left elbow has got a permanent bend built into it. It's as much a part of Calvin Peete as the color of his skin or the calm, contemplative attitude he got from a lifetime of knowing that life doesn't always deal you aces, that you got to learn how to play the deuces and treys, too, if you want to stay in the game.

CALVIN PEETE never worried about his left elbow when he broke it falling out of a tree at the age of 12 in Florida. At the time, it didn't seem important. Calvin didn't think he was going to be needing it for much of anything, anyway. Golf was furthest from his mind and Calvin reasoned you didn't need a straight left arm for most of life's other activities. Calvin figured he was going to have to make money a lot harder ways than putting for it.

The doctor who treated the arm was less cavalier about it. The elbow was broken in three places and the simple thing was to clean the wreckage and let Calvin do what he could with an arm that would be useful mainly for opening mail. He would never have to cut steak with it, anyway.

But the doctor demurred and put the pieces back together as best he could. "When I saw the diagram of the break on my cast and saw the surgery the doctor did, I knew I was lucky I would ever have any use from that arm again," Peete recalled the other day as he stood on a practice tee at Riviera Country Club on the eve of the PGA tournament. His doctor was a scratch handicapper with a scalpel.

A LOT OF people thought a bent elbow was the least of his handicaps when Peete took up golf. In the first place, he wasn't blond. He didn't go to Brigham Young or Wake Forest. He not only hadn't been to college, he hadn't even finished high school. The bigots were ready when he took up the game. "You don't run in golf," they jeered. "You think." "You can't slam dunk a putt, Sonny." "This isn't baseball, you can't steal a birdie." "A par-5 isn't the long jump, fella." "You can't run a 63." He listened and held his counsel. Something he does well. He kept his patience. He started the game at age 21, which is about the time most people are giving it up. They told him you never can expect to play championship golf unless you take up the game about the time you start to walk. You should tee on a 4-iron. Peete nodded. People were always telling him he couldn't do things.

With a late start and a crooked left elbow and a childhood about as far removed from the country club atmosphere as you could imagine, Calvin Peete developed into probably the best player, tee to green, in the game today. It's a sports story to boggle the imagination.

The statistics are astonishing. You look at them and you conclude you are dealing with a guy who was brought up at Winged Foot in the summer and Seminole in the winter. Or a black Ben Hogan.

You are dealing with a guy who drives the ball in the fairway 85 percent of the time. Who hits greens 71 percent of the time. Who leads the tour in both those all-important categories. Who averages 70.7 strokes around, which is only 1100th of a percentage point behind the leader, Raymond Floyd.

Bobby Jones would gasp. Harry Vardon would hawk the tee trying to copy his grip.

ONLY TWO players have won more money than the $392,668 Calvin Peete has won this year. This could make J.P. Morgan gasp. Or John D. Rockefeller.

He has won six tournaments in a year and a half. Most guys don't win that many in their lives. He has won twice as many tournaments this year as Tom Watson.

You would half expect most players on the PGA tour to be looking for that tree to fall out of or that doctor to patch them up. But it gets better. The plain facts of the matter are that Calvin Peete would be to golf what Man o' War was to the race track if he could putt. Calvin, not Man o' War.

Calvin, you see, putts like Man o' War. Or that fabled gorilla of Sam Snead's. Calvin putts like a guy playing customer golf with the boss present.

He hits the ball so close to the hole, he couldn't three-putt if both his elbows were broken. But he lags seven-foot putts. Seven feet is three-putt range to Calvin. He misses more birdie putts than anyone on the tour. He putts like a guy who just stepped on a light socket or just put up his wife's fur coat on the match. For all the tour categories he leads in, he's off the board in putts per round. He knows what the white Ben Hogan felt like in his declining years.

Golf isn't the only thing Peete thought he was never too old for. Education was another. His golf was good enough for the tour. So was his arithmetic. He used to sell jewelry for a living. Calvin could drive, chip and add, all right, but he was a little weak on the minor British poets, the principal parts of transitive verbs and the major exports of South American countries.

So he went to high school in Detroit at the age of 39, got his diploma and became a full-fledged member of the PGA, an organization he adorns by his presence. Believe me, when they say on the first tee at the PGA, "It's your honors Mr. Peete," it's not just the golf expression. They can mean it.

Camacho wins feather title

From wire reports

Hector "Macho" Camacho won the vacant and disputed WBC super featherweight title Sunday against Rafael "Bazooka" Limon after flooring Limon twice in the fifth. Referee Richard Steele stopped the fight at 2:52 of the round and awarded the bout to Camacho.

Undefeated middleweight John Collins of Chicago stopped Kenny Whetstone of Miami, Fla., at 2:42 of the ninth round in scheduled 10-round Sunday at Las Vegas.

Tennis

Jimmy Connors defeated Tim Mayotte 6-3, 6-4, 6-2 to win the $300,000 High Stakes tournament at the Newport Beach, Calif.

Third-seeded Jimmy Arias of Grand Island, N.Y., defeated Andres Gomez of Ecuador 6-4, 2-6, 6-4 Sunday to become the first American to win the U.S. Open Clay Court tournament since Jimmy Connors in 1979.

Football

Sammy Greene scored two TDs and the British Columbia defense forced seven turnovers in a 32-16 CFL win over the Calgary Stampeders. Greene, who electrified the crowd of 37,406 with a reverse-field 65-yard kickoff return, hauled in TD passes of 23 and 20 yards from quarterback Roy Dewalt and finished with seven catches for 62 yards.

Quarterback Dieter Brock passed for two TDs and 430 yards as the Winnipeg Blue Bombers beat Montreal, 35-26, Sunday.

Lemar Parrish, former all-NFL defensive back, posted a $5,000 bond Sunday on drug charges after his arrest at an apartment Friday night where police found cocaine.

John Hannah says he won't come back to play for the New England Patriots unless his family is behind it. "I have to go back (home to Crossland, Ala.) and figure out what is best for my own family and my family business. When I figure out the best thing to do, then I will make that decision."

Sid stops El Paso on four hits

By Associated Press
Sid Fernandez — who often finds himself compared favorably to Los Angeles Dodgers' ace Fernando Valenzuela — probably has garnered at least a few more admirers with his latest mound effort for San Antonio.

Fernandez struck out 17 and tossed a four-hitter as the Dodgers — San Antonio's version, that is — downed El Paso 4-1 in Texas League action Sunday night.

In other games, Tulsa blanked Arkansas 5-0 behind the two-hit pitching of Tony Fossas. Shreveport knocked off Jackson 6-1 and Beaumont clipped Midland 6-5.

Robbie Allen hit a three-run homer for the Dodgers in the fifth.

Dan Burns, 2-2, was the loser for El Paso.

Fossas, who retired the first six Arkansas batters and the final 18 in a row, surrendered two singles and a walk while striking out eight.

Steve Buchele hit a solo homer for Tulsa in the seventh. The Drillers scored three runs — including two unearned tallies — in the third.

Fossas improved his record to 6-6. Losing pitcher Todd Worrell fell to 2-1.

Don Mazilli slugged a homer for Shreveport, while Mark Schuster drove in two more runs with a single. Kevin Bates also batted in two runs with a single and a triple.

Benji Biggus, 10-5, was the winning pitcher. Jackson's Rob Schilling, 3-7, took the loss.

Sloan Cathey, 4, Big Spring, Texas, appears to be having a ball as he imitates clowns at Cheyenne's Frontier Days Rodeo.

Rizzo strikes jackpot

DANVERS, Mass. (AP) — Patti Rizzo, the 1982 LPGA rookie of the year, was ready to quit the women's golf tour early last month after five payless weeks.

Instead of going home to Florida, though, she decided to stick it out. She got back in the money at Indianapolis in the U.S. Open and realized she had made the right decision.

"I've put a lot of pressure on myself to win this year even though I knew I had to work my way up," the 23-year-old former University of Miami, Fla., All-American said Sunday.

"Now I feel like I belong."

Rizzo's determination, along with her anger over a 1-over-par 73 Saturday, paid off as she charged from behind to overtake Jane Lock and fashion her first Ladies Professional Golfers Association win in the $175,000 Boston Five Classic at Radisson.

"I was ready to go today," Rizzo said after finishing with a 4-under-par 68 for a 72-hole total of 277 and a 2-stroke victory over Lock.

Palmer begins long climb back

By BEN WALKER
AP Sports Writer

The last time Jim Palmer pitched in the minor leagues, he was 22 — a number he would later make famous in Baltimore while winning three Cy Young Awards with the Orioles.

At that time, shoulder and back injuries were threatening to put a premature end to what many felt could be a promising career.

On Sunday, Palmer returned to the minors on a 20-day rehabilitation assignment, a 37-year-old pitcher trying to overcome nagging injuries that may rob him of his final years.

He took the mound on a hot and muggy afternoon in Hagerstown, a small blue-collar city nestled in the hills of western Maryland, wearing No. 22 on a jersey specially made for him by his new team, the Hagerstown Suns of the Class A Carolina League.

Underneath his jersey, he wore a good-luck Minnesota Twins T-shirt that he had won "12 or 13 straight games with last season." He changed into his uniform in the middle of the Suns lockerroom because, as the team said, it didn't have an extra locker for him.

A crowd of 8,192 came to Municipal Stadium, where advertising covers the outfield walls, to see the Suns take on the Durham Bulls two weeks ago, more than 7,300 fans jammed the small ballpark when the San Diego Chicken showed up.

This time, the fans mainly came to watch an aging hurler with arm trouble, a pitcher with 265 major-league victories who has not thrown since June 25 and, some say, may be finished.

His first outing in more than a month was not vintage Palmer, yet he seemed pleased.

He went five innings and allowed seven hits and two runs, while striking out five and walking two. Prior to the game, the Orioles said they wanted him to throw either five innings or 70 pitches. He threw 72 pitches against Durham.

Palmer left trailing 2-1, but the Suns rallied for three runs in the bottom of the fifth inning and went on to win 8-6, giving him the victory.

"My arm felt a lot better than I thought it would," said Palmer, who threw an assortment of fastballs, changeups and "a couple of sliders."

"I could have pitched longer," he said, but added that those involved with his recovery program felt it would be better not to risk injury.

Palmer appeared loose and relaxed while discussing his performance and frowned when told the Orioles had lost in Baltimore to the Chicago White Sox. He bristled only when someone suggested that the Bulls had seemed to hit him well.

"I didn't think the balls were hit that hard," he retorted.

Palmer said he "kind of" requested a visit to the minors last week during a meeting with Orioles Manager Joe Altobelli. The right-hander went on the disabled list for the third time this year on July 8 because of tendinitis in his right shoulder.

Up until then Palmer pitched in six games for Baltimore with a 2-2 record in 32 1/3 innings.

Palmer and the Orioles decided on Hagerstown, which is 70 miles west of Baltimore, because it's convenient, he said.

So the man with eight 20-win seasons and a slew of racy underwear ads made the hour-and-15-minute trip Sunday morning for an experience he likened to "spring training," a chance to stretch out his arm without the pressure of having to win.

The anticipation of his visit naturally had created a stir.

Russian, Czech lead advance

HELSINKI, Finland (AP) — World record-holders Anna Ambrosene of the Soviet Union and Jarmila Kratochvilova of Czechoslovakia led the advance through the heats today in the World Track and Field Championships.

While heats, qualifying and semifinals predominated the program, finals also were scheduled in the men's and women's 100-meter dashes, and in the men's triple jump.

Ambrosene, the world record-holder in the women's 400-meter intermediate hurdles won her second-round heat in 56.30 seconds.

The other heat winners were Ekaterina Fesenko of the Soviet Union (56.43), Debbie Flintoff of Australia (56.47) and Nawal El Moutawakil of Morocco (56.52).

Sunday's opening program was filled with drama, excitement and disappointments.

There was Norway's Grete Waitz, a major pioneer of women's long-distance running, wearing down the early pacesetters and becoming the championships' first gold medalist by capturing the women's marathon.

The 29-year-old former schoolteacher from Oslo was timed in 2 hours, 28 minutes, 9 seconds in beating runner-up Marianne Dickerson of the United States by exactly three minutes.

Dickerson, running only her third marathon, sprinted past Raisa Smekhnova of the Soviet Union with about 100 meters remaining to earn the silver medal. Dickerson was clocked in 2:31:09 and Smekhnova in 2:31:12.

The other gold medalists were Edward Sarul of Poland, who won the men's shot put with a heave of 70 feet, 2 1/4 inches, and Ernesto Canto of Mexico, winner of the 20-kilometer walk in 1:20:49.

Sarul, who finished only 11th in last year's European Championships, made his winning throw on his final attempt, overtaking Ulf Timmerman of East Germany.

Timmerman finished second at 69:54 and Remegius Machura of Czechoslovakia was third at 68:10.

people O'Neal's son undergoing drug rehabilitation in Hawaii

NEW YORK (AP) — Griffin O'Neal, the 18-year-old son of actor Ryan O'Neal, has been put in a private drug rehabilitation center in Hawaii because "he had to have help," his sister says. "He had to be in a situation where he was not indulged, where he couldn't do just anything he wanted, and where someone would slap his head if need be, to tell him, 'no,'" said 19-year-old actress Tatum O'Neal.

Ryan O'Neal

Tatum O'Neal

Griffin and Ryan had a fight in May at the Bel Air home of actress Farrah Fawcett, with Griffin losing two front teeth, the magazine said. Two weeks later the Malibu police booked Griffin after neighbors reported him "tearing his room apart," and Griffin spent three days behind bars.

Griffin, also an actor, underwent treatment in a drug-rehabilitation program at Los Angeles Westwood Hospital in 1981. He is currently in Habitat, a $800-a-month "survival school" on Oahu. "This path of destructiveness is just his way of begging for affection, but in the wrong way," Miss O'Neal said.

Tom Selleck

HONOLULU (AP) — It was the perfect scene for a television police show, a jeep crashing off the third story of a parking garage. But the cameras weren't rolling and there were no stand-ins for actor Tom Selleck and his stepson, Kevin. They suffered only minor injuries Sunday in the accident at the Outrigger Canoe Club in Waikiki when the stick shift stuck on the jeep and it crashed through a barrier with the younger Selleck behind the wheel, authorities said. Selleck and his 15-year-old son were taken to Straub Hospital by ambulance, but were released a short time later. Selleck's publicity agent in Hollywood, Calif., Esme Chandler, said Selleck, 38, will report as scheduled today to his first day of shooting for the new fall programming of "Magnum P.I." The Jeep landed on its nose in an asphalt-covered area, smashing the front of the vehicle, said Martin Kelly, assistant manager at the Canoe club.

WENDOVER, England (AP) — British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, resting in the country following surgery to repair a torn retina in her right eye, is recovering satisfactorily, a spokesman says.

M. Thatcher

She attended church Sunday near her country residence, Chequers, four days after the operation. Later, according to her London office at 10 Downing St., she was examined by her personal physician, Dr. John Henderson, and by Dr. Richard Packard, who performed the operation.

The prime minister is in good spirits and "settling entirely satisfactory," said a Downing St. spokesman. The spokesman added Mrs. Thatcher is still wearing the dark glasses she was sporting Saturday when she left Princess Christian Hospital in Windsor, west of London.

Mrs. Thatcher is expected to spend most of her time at Chequers, in Buckinghamshire north of London, until she leaves for a summer vacation in Switzerland at the end of the week, aides said. ATLANTA (AP) — Civil rights leader Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy returned to the pulpit at West Hunter Street Baptist Church after more than a five-month absence while he underwent bypass surgery. "A lot of people thought I was going to die," Abernathy told the congregation Sunday. "A lot of people hoped I was going to die. A lot of people are surprised to know that I am preaching at West Hunter Street one more time...I just came by to tell you this morning that if you trust in God...and let God be your doctor, everything will be all right."

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Impotence caused by neurological factors happens more gradually

Dear Dr. Solomon: How do you account for a man in his forties suddenly becoming impotent? Is there something physically wrong? I would think my husband is having an affair on the outside but I know him too well for that. What would you advise? — Mrs. J.G., Grand Rapids, Mich.

Dear Mrs. G.: Dr. Paul T. Chandler, of Deaconess Hospital in Cincinnati, says that impotence caused by psychological factors usually occurs suddenly; in patients I see with neurologic impotence, the onset is more gradual. Regardless of the cause, your husband should see a physician to determine an appropriate course of treatment. Worrying about the condition can only make matters worse.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I would like to breast-feed my baby, but I would also like to keep my figure. Is there any way I can breast-feed without developing unattractive, flabby breasts? — Constance, Alexandria, Va.

Dear Constance: According to Dr. Stanley A. Gall, of the Duke University Medical Center in Durham, North Carolina, flabby breasts are not so much a consequence of breast-feeding as they are a characteristic of a particular woman. Dr. Gall recommends that women who choose to breast-feed wear a well-fitted, supportive bra during the time they are nursing.

Pregnancy itself causes some stretching of the breasts, but they will be no more or no less flabby whether you decide to breast-feed or not.

Dear Dr. Solomon: If a woman watches her weight, keeps in good shape, exercises and gets enough rest, why should she have more of a problem becoming pregnant at 35 than at 25? I'm talking about myself and I know that I'm in at least as good health today as I was 10 years ago. So why should I be having such a problem becoming pregnant? — Robyn, Rochester, N.Y.

Dear Robyn: I can respond only in a general way since I obviously do not know the particulars in your case. Dr. Robert A. Hatcher, of the Emory School of Medicine, has suggested a number of factors that might affect fertility as a woman grows older.

For example, if you had been using oral contraceptives, you might be experiencing a delay in the return of fertility. Or if you had been using an intrauterine device, you were at some risk of pelvic inflammatory disease, which, in turn, can affect fertility. Moreover age itself may be a factor.

This does not mean that you will not be able to become pregnant. You do not indicate how long you have been trying to conceive, but women in their thirties and even in their forties can successfully bear children.

Dear Dr. Solomon: The husband of a friend of mine was involved in a serious automobile accident. He has made a remarkable recovery and is now able to do everything he used to do. But my friend tells me that they are no longer able to have sexual relations. What would you advise in a case like this? — Francine, Newport, R.I.

Dear Francine: It is very difficult to comment on as complex a situation as you present, particularly one that involved people I do not know. I would simply note that sexual relations may encompass a wide range of activities and that any of these could be satisfying if the people involved found them to be appropriate.

I would also point out that love is more than sex and that if the love is strong, a satisfying sexual adjustment can usually be worked out.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My teen-age son has a bad acne problem even though he scrubs his face with soap and water religiously. I can guarantee that he keeps himself clean. Why doesn't the acne clear up and what else would you suggest he do? — Mrs. J. O'R., Atlantic City, N.J.

Dear Mrs. O'R.: If acne were caused by dirt, your theory would hold water. But scrubbing the face with an abrasive soap and water may do more harm than good. In fact, Dr. John R.T. Reeves, a dermatologist at the University of California, San Francisco, School of Medicine, recommends against their use.

There are a number of agents such as benzoyl peroxide and antibiotics that can be applied to the skin that have proven effective in the treatment of acne. Your family physician or pediatrician should be able to advise you about them or he may suggest a referral to a dermatologist if the condition warrants it.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I am a school counselor and it is my job to refer children with school problems for psychological evaluation. Very often we get a report that gives the youngster's diagnosis as a borderline personality. As far as I'm concerned, this doesn't tell me anything. Does anyone else use this diagnosis and, if so, what does it mean? — Sue, New York City

Dear Sue: Dr. Dana Charry, of Saint Joseph Hospital in Reading, Pa., says that borderline personality is a specific diagnosis with specific characteristics. These patients lack a sense of identity and have difficulty in dealing with their feelings. Although they may be drawn into intense interpersonal relationships, these relationships are seriously impaired and unstable.

Dr. Charry further describes these patients as often being bright and verbal. Their problems can be traced back to their early childhood.

For Shelley, Philadelphia, Pa.: The purpose of aspirin in the treatment of arthritis is to reduce inflammation; it will not cure the disease. The correct dosage of aspirin should be determined by your physician. A trial-and-error approach may very well result in error, something that can and should be avoided.

For Grace, Indianapolis, Ind.: Many physicians recommend the administration of pain-relieving drugs on a regular, round-the-clock basis, rather than waiting until the patient is in pain. The regular administration of these drugs appears to have a beneficial psychological effect on the patient and may permit some reduction in the total daily dose of the medication required to provide relief.

Hobos are a dying breed

BRITT, Iowa (AP) — Hobos, those colorful characters who ride the rails and live by their wits, may soon go the way of the steam engine and the Pullman sleeper, faded from the American landscape, say vagabonds at the National Hobo Convention.

Only a dozen hobos — or "bos," as they call themselves — showed up for their annual gathering here over the weekend. "Steamtrain" Maury Graham, a five-time past National King of the Hobos, said there are hardly any honest-to-goodness hobos left. "There's a few still riding in the West, but hobos, they're a dying breed," he said sadly. In the last few years, such venerable hobo legends as "the Hardrock Kid" and "Hobo Bill" Mainer have "caught the Westbound," hobo parlance for death, Graham said. Most others, like "Connecticut Slim" and "Alabama Tom," have become too old and infirm to make the trip to the convention, he said.

Part of the reason for the disappearance of the hobo is the changing nature of the railroad, Graham said. "It used to be that a hobo had to be a good naturalist — he had to know all the roots, berries, grasses and weeds that are edible, and how to catch small game without weapons and how to be a good fisherman," he said. "But to survive as a hobo today, you practically have to be a pharmacist. They're hauling things in freight trains, like chemicals and pesticides, that weren't even invented five years ago." The hobos are losing some of their population to other "vagabond peoples," such as tramps, bums and hitchhikers — whom they carefully distinguish from their own ranks. A true hobo is married to the rails, Graham said. Hobos trace their roots to the Civil War, when jobs were scarce and men began following the railroad westward, laying track. Tramps, however, were mostly infantrymen who marched, or tramped, as soldiers in the war, then walked the countryside afterward looking for jobs. "They wouldn't ride the rails and they wouldn't associate with hobos," Graham said. Hobos regard bums with disdain. "A hobo will always work for something you give him," said Sparky Smith, 70, who first went on the road in 1931. "A bum, he won't work. He'll just take what you have and won't even say thank you." The hobos are a proud and independent people who do not want to be confused with "winos that live under a bridge," Graham said.

Many have families back home and most have trades, said Graham, who said he was a cement mason in Ohio and raised two daughters before returning to the rails he had ridden as a teenager. "Fry Pan" Jack Fisk is a cook; "Frisco Jack" is a cable splicer. Many hobos are poets and craftsmen, Graham said. The hobos simply don't want to be "homeguards," he added. "A homeguard — you know what that is? He's a guy who stays at home to guard his home. And he gets refrigerator and television privileges." A hobo prefers a "natural life," he said.

Bikers hold reunion

CHARLESTON, W.Va. (AP) — The Capital City Motorcycle Club, whose members were straddling Harleys when Marlon Brando was still in short pants, took their memories for a spin at a weekend reunion — their first get-together in more than 40 years. J.J. Coleman brought his ukelele, just like he used to back in the 1930s, to brighten up the motorcycle meetings. At its peak in '38, the club had 87 members. "We'd dance and drink beer," says Coleman. "There was never any fights or any of the stuff you hear about with these modern motorcycle gangs. We weren't rowdies." But Jessie Lowry, who with her husband Jack helped organize the reunion, wouldn't swear to that. "Tell him about the time you stole my 3-month-old

Stock market loses

NEW YORK (AP) — Stock prices tumbled in early trading today after several major banks raised their prime lending rates by one-half percentage point to 11 percent.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks fell 47.88 points over the past two weeks amid investor fear that interest rates would be headed up.

Declines led a commanding 5-1 lead over advances on the New York Stock Exchange, whose composite index fell 0.97 to 92.63.

Big Board volume totaled 29.80 million shares at noon EDT, against 33.41 million at that hour Friday.

Among the banks raising their prime, or base, lending charge were Citibank, Chase Manhattan Bank, and Chemical Bank.

Dollar value continues to be a problem

By CHET CURRIER AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — In the late 1970s there was much concern over the ailing state of the U.S. dollar.

As the dollar sank steadily in value against the Japanese yen, the Swiss franc and other major currencies, experts lamented its decline as a symptom of fading U.S. eminence in the world economy.

Since then, the situation has been dramatically reversed. Last week the dollar reached its highest level in more than a decade.

But hold off on the cheers and applause for a moment. A strong dollar, it turns out, is a problem just as a weak dollar was. A different kind of a problem, but still a problem.

To be sure, some of the effects of the dollar's rise are beneficial. It makes imported goods relatively cheap in this country, thus helping to reduce domestic inflation.

That is not the whole story, however. Europeans complain that, with a strong dollar, the United States in effect is hogging all the benefits of economic recovery for itself.

Because of the dollar's elevated position, they say, they must keep their interest rates as high as possible to try to discourage capital from fleeing their borders.

Q. We are retired on $12,000 a year, which leaves us about $500 short on outgo each month. My wife has $67,000 from an inheritance.

Q. My husband and I invested $30,000 in a municipal bond mutual fund, on which we were charged a 2 percent commission.

Q. I am interested in acquiring no-load stocks. How do I go about buying them?

Q. There's no such thing as "no-load stocks." You buy stocks through brokerage firms, which charge either a commission or a markup.

Q. I've seen a number of newsletters and such, which claim to have sure formulas for fund switching.

Q. I'm not asking people to do with less," he says. "I'm just saying, 'Can you do with what you've got?'"

Limit Social Security, other programs?

WASHINGTON (AP) — A few members of Congress are sticking their necks out over an issue that their most influential colleagues say is political suicide.

The proposal is taking several forms, but most versions would trim the annual cost-of-living increases, now pegged to the Consumer Price Index, to the amount of increase in the CPI minus 2 or 3 percent.

The idea is that because of small errors in the formula, the growth in government pension checks each year actually runs somewhat ahead of the actual inflation rate.

Predictions made of life in year 2000

By LOUISE COOK Associated Press Writer

A new look at life in the year 2000 suggests an older society with less crime and changing economic demands.

There will be fewer traditional families and more singles. Homes will be smaller and so will cars. Rural areas will keep growing, but there also will be some movement of people back to the big cities.

Three billion barrels lifted, more coming

By The Los Angeles Times—Washington Post News Service

PRUDHOE BAY, Alaska — It is summertime on the North Slope of Alaska, a barren, windswept desert of tundra on the Arctic Coast that sits atop the largest known oil reserve in North America.

But the temperature is 37 degrees here, and the wind makes it seem 10 degrees colder. Still, the icepack has been pushed back from shore and within a few days, the annual flotilla of barges will make its way into Prudhoe Bay laden with equipment and prefabricated buildings to expand the oil field and extend its life.

On a manmade 2 1/2-mile gravel causeway that juts into the sea, workers and equipment are bustling in preparation for the arrival of a 610-foot seawater treatment plant, the centerpiece of a $2 billion project that will enable an additional one billion barrels of oil to be retrieved from underground by flooding the wells.

Fifteen years ago this month, oil was discovered at Prudhoe Bay, and now 1.5 billion barrels a day — one-fifth of the total U.S. production — come down the trans-Alaska Pipeline from 200 miles north of the Arctic Circle, across three mountain ranges and the Yukon River to the port of Valdez.

Since the pipeline opened in 1977, three billion barrels of oil have made the 800-mile journey and have filled 3,400 tankers.

BUT EVEN WITH the technological fixes now being made, the Prudhoe Bay field is expected to start declining later in this decade, and the hunt is on for more oil in Alaska, both onshore and off.

"One of every two barrels of oil to be found in the United States will be found in Alaska," said Harold Helms, president of Arco Alaska, which made the original Prudhoe Bay discovery in 1968 and which, along with Sohio, now operates the field on behalf of eight oil companies.

Forty-five miles off Yakutat in the southeastern part of the state, the semi-submersible drilling platform Ocean Odyssey has been working in 450 feet of water for 115 days in hopes of finding oil in the Gulf of Alaska. The project is costing $43 million, the most Arco has ever spent on a well.

Arco is also doing exploratory drilling far out in the Navarin Basin, between Nome and the Aleutian Islands, and Exxon, Chevron, Phillips and Texaco have either begun drilling at other sites or will soon do so.

Despite this work and despite the sizeable activity at Prudhoe Bay, and at the recently-discovered Kuparuk Field 40 miles west of here, there are more oil wells in Los Angeles today than there are in the entire state of Alaska.

THERE IS A LIVELY debate in Alaska about the prospects for all this exploration and its effect on the state. No one knows of course, how much oil still remains to be found. Is Prudhoe Bay just the start, or is it all there is?

The oil companies are optimistic that more and more oil remains to be found, and they are backing their optimism with cold cash. Others here worry that the future may not be so rosy, and they think the state should rein in its spending and begin making other plans before the oil runs dry.

But that is in the future. In the meantime, Prudhoe Bay is alive with oil work. About 6,000 people are here now (twice the winter population), working in one of the most hostile environments on Earth. In the winter, when the sun does not shine for 56 consecutive days, the temperature gets down to 50 and 60 below zero, and the wind-chill factor makes it seem like 100 below.

The prefabricated buildings are brought in by barge every summer, and set up on concrete pilings six feet above gravel paths that are laid out on the tundra. Outside, Caribou, Arctic foxes and an occasional polar bear roam amid about 600 oil wells spread out over 250 square miles. There are no trees.

Construction of additional oil wells will continue for another four years until there are approximately 1,000 at this site.

IN THE ARCO complex, 400 workers live in motel-style buildings centered around the cafeteria, gymnasium, movie theater and satinas. They get television by satellite, with the receiving dishes pointed almost at the horizon to catch the signals from the satellite hovering over the equator.

The workers — men and women — do 18-hour shifts for seven days straight and are then flown to Anchorage or Fairbanks for seven days off before coming back. They earn $60,000 to $90,000-a-year.

At lunch, one man was asked what attracted him to this strange life.

"Money," he said. In all, $16 billion to $17 billion will be invested at Prudhoe Bay, and an additional $7 billion will be spent developing the nearby Kuparuk Field. The pipeline cost an additional $8 billion to build.

"There is a larger investment at Prudhoe Bay than in the entire U.S. auto industry," said Howard Edwards, of Arco Alaska.

EVERYTHING HERE is immense. The seawater treatment plant that is expected to arrive in a few days is 610 feet long, 150 feet wide, and 113 feet high. It is mounted on a barge that will be sunk in place in 12 feet of water. When it begins operating next year, the plant will draw two million barrels of water from the sea every day, remove the oxygen and all organic material and sediment and distribute the water by pipeline throughout the field, where it will be pumped into the oil reservoir 10,000 feet below the surface.

The goal is to keep up the pressure and keep the oil wells flowing at 1.5 million barrels a day. Because oil floats on water, the treated seawater will be used to force the oil up the wells.

The existing wells bring up a mixture of oil, natural gas and water, which is carried by pipes to central facilities where the gas and water are removed and pumped back under the ground.

The Prudhoe Bay field includes 26 trillion feet of natural gas, about 1 1/2 times the annual U.S. consumption. But there is no pipeline to carry it south and no other way to bring it to market. Until a delivery system can be developed, the gas is returned to the underground reservoirs.

Every day, 2.3 billion cubic feet of gas are pumped into the ground, "enough to heat and light the city of Chicago," according to Jim Ferro, construction supervisor at Prudhoe Bay.

"This is Prudhoe Bay. The numbers are so big it's mind-boggling after a while," said Tim Akers, who was running the plant that pumps the gas down 18 injection holes.

PRUDHOE BAY and the companion Kuparuk Field are the success stories of Alaska. The world's unquenchable thirst for oil demands that more be found.

Nearly 1,000 miles south of here, a 25-minute helicopter ride from Yakutat on the Alaska Panhandle brings visitors to the Ocean Odyssey, a brand new $106 million drilling platform that rises 246 feet above the Gulf of Alaska and rests on pontoons that are sunk 80 feet below the water line.

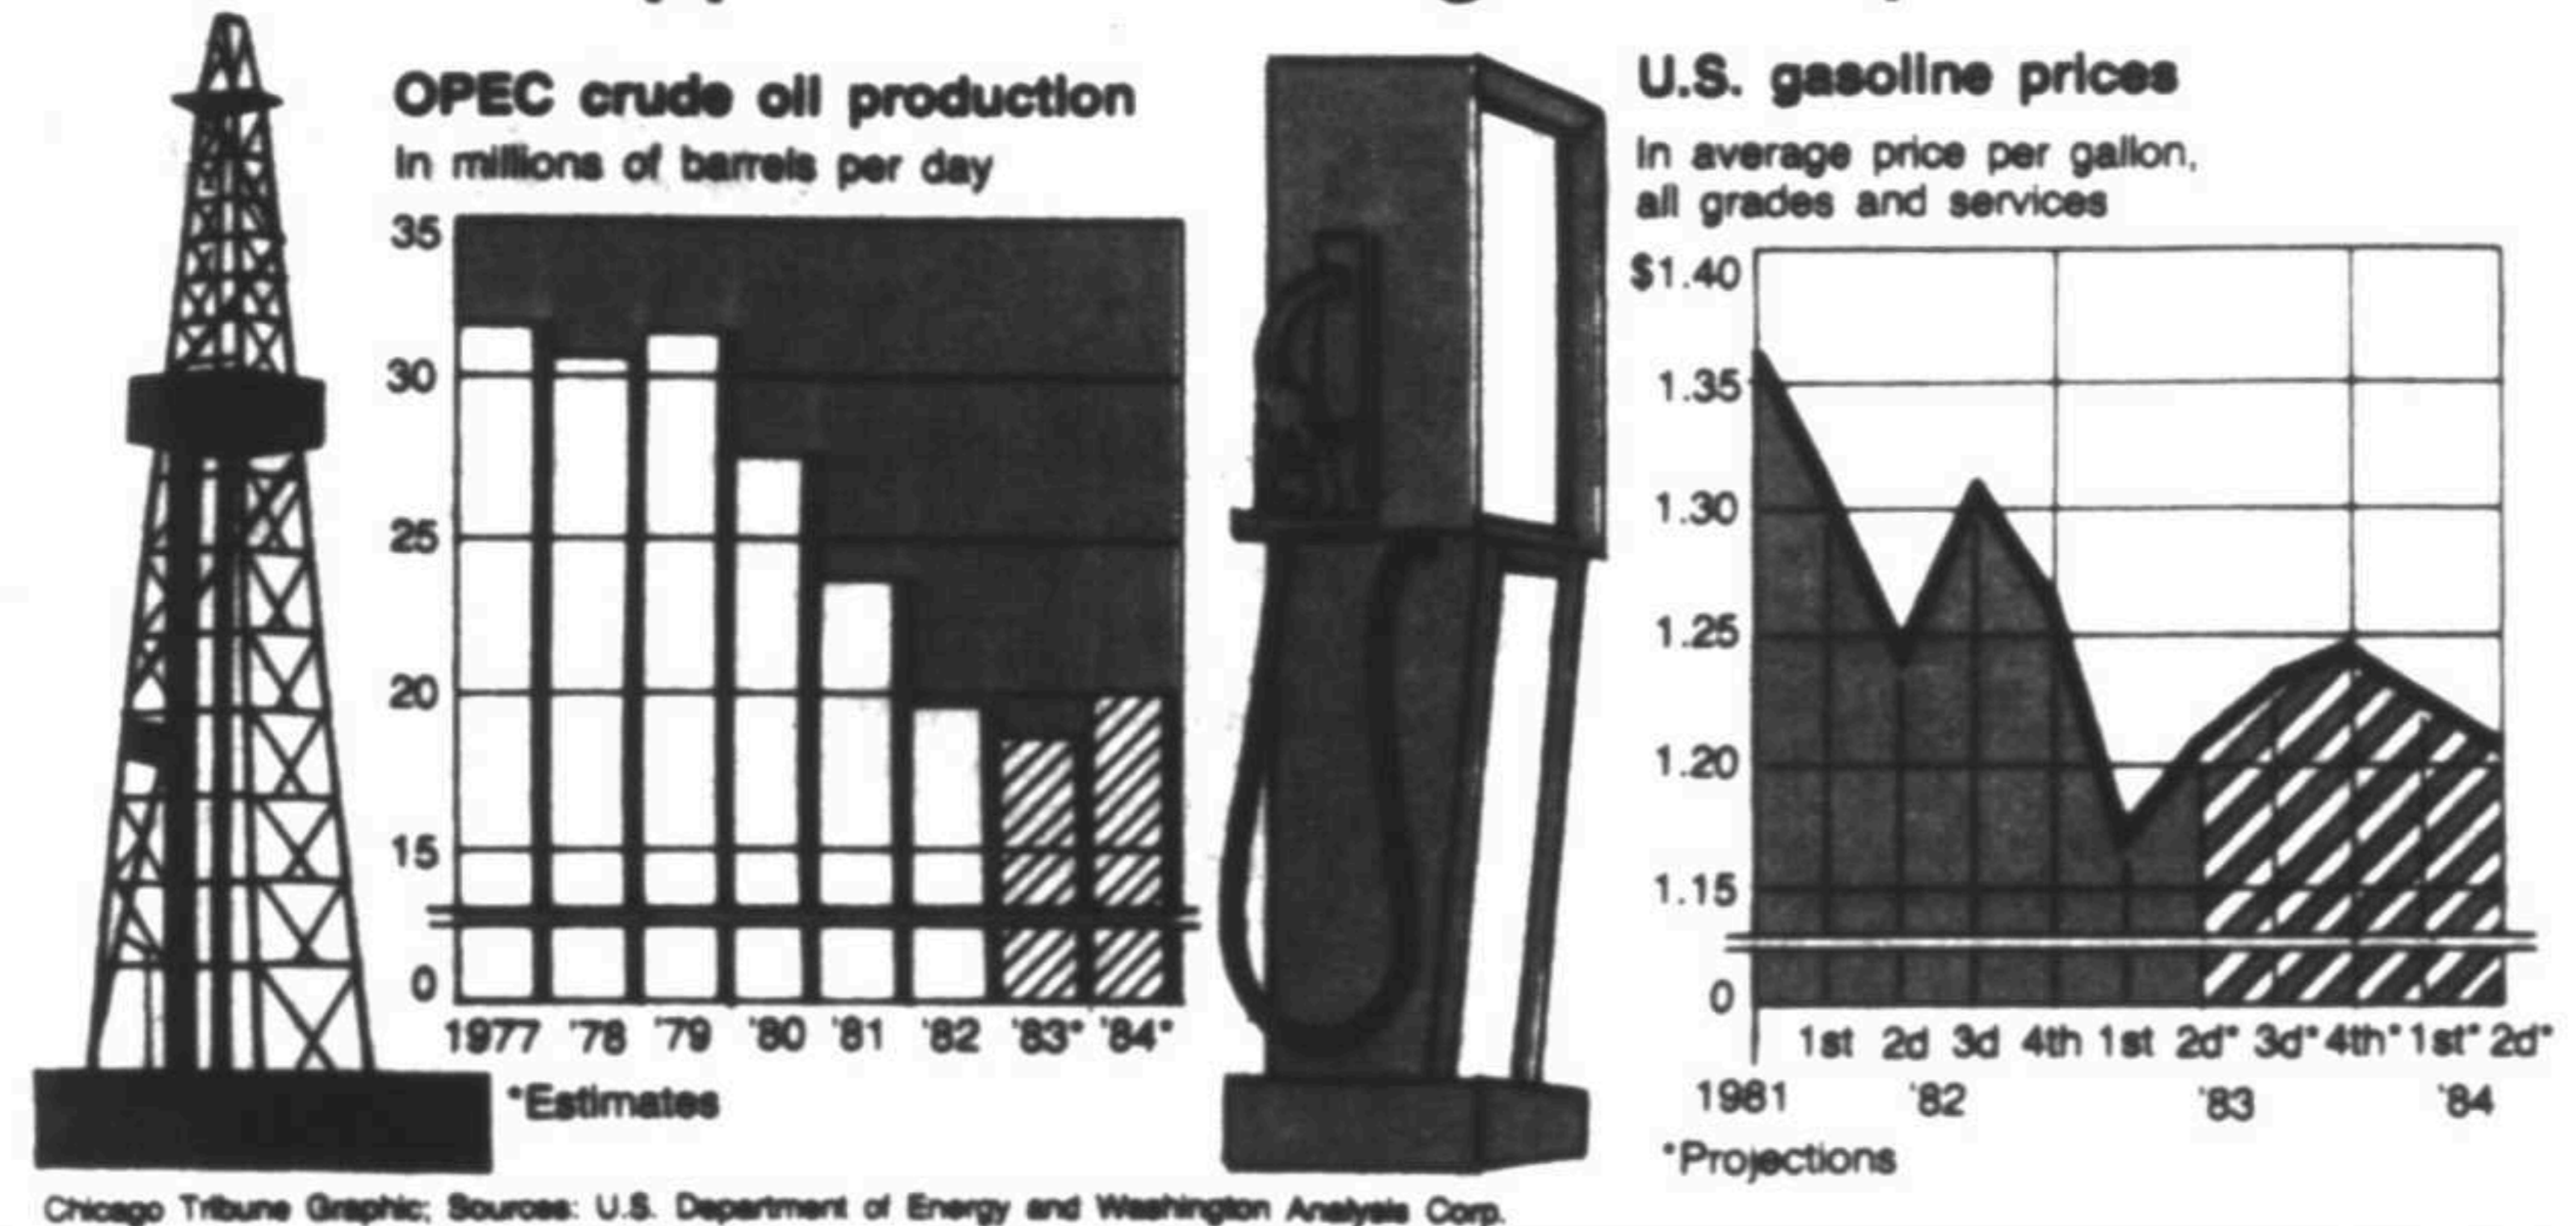

At Prudhoe, the mood is success. Aboard the Ocean Odyssey, the mood is hope.

"If we don't strike oil, they told us we're going on the unemployment line," said Paul Kelly, one of 70 men aboard the platform, a self-propelled vessel that averaged nearly 10 knots on its trip to Alaska last spring from Japan, where it was built near Tokyo.

By the time the project ends in September, the hole could be as deep as 18,000 feet below the sea floor. They have not gone deep enough yet to have found anything.

Exploring for oil is a high-risk, high-gain business. As in the entertainment industry, one winner pays for many losers. Oil companies expect to drill many dry holes before they strike oil. But the rewards for finding it are huge.

'DeLorean' politics fishy failure in Boston

By Warren T. Brookes Hearst Feature Service ANALYSIS/OPINION The latest vogue in liberal political economics is what is called "industrial policy." Briefly stated, it involves the recognition that U.S. taxpayers already support — directly or indirectly — a whole panoply of subsidies and protections for industry and business. Theoretically, the only thing missing in all this is a "coherent strategy" so that all this largesse is efficiently directed to support more winners and protect fewer losers. And that's where the rub comes. As John DeLorean showed, politicians have a hard time not only in picking winners, but especially in refraining from supporting their own losers. Sen. Paul Tsongas, D-Mass., one of the leaders of the "Atari" Democrats (also known as DeLorean Democrats) and a prime exponent of Harvard Professor Robert Reich's industrial policy thesis, recently got a DeLoreanesque lesson in its pitfalls.

Analysts see no interest pushing

NEW YORK (AP) — Some private analysts have concluded from the Federal Reserve's latest batch of monetary data that the central bank made no moves in the past week to tighten credit conditions and push up interest rates. The Fed reported Friday that the nation's money supply rose $1.2 billion in late July. Despite the higher than expected rise, interest rates were little changed after the report was released. "It was not a horrible surprise," said Robert Sinche, chief economist at Bear, Stearns & Co., adding that he saw no evidence that the Fed was tightening credit. Sinche predicted interest rates would hold "relatively stable" over the next few weeks. The Fed said its M1 measure of the money supply rose $1.2 billion in the week ended July 27, to a seasonally adjusted average of $517.3 billion from $516.1 billion the previous week. M1 includes cash in circulation plus deposits in checking accounts and nonbank travelers checks.

Maps of the future

"Jurying an exhibition is always a pleasure. It is a particular pleasure when one has an opportunity to view fresh, new and inventive work."

— Laurence Miller

Hope is a constant factor from the moment an artist commits his time, money and effort toward preparing for an invitational art show until the judging takes place. In the case of the Museum of the Southwest's annual art show and sale, nine artists' efforts were monetarily rewarded.

Juror awards went to Midlanders John Harmon, clay-wood-acrylic "Large Zag for Jim," and M. Andrews, color photograph "Bubble Gum Daze;" Odessa Paula Babb Cox, mixed media "Georgia in Red Chair;" Linda Stanton of Austin, two oil pastels — "Chivalry and Lust" and "Soft Dancing;" Polly Little of Irving, oil "Cricket's Lost;" David Blow of Denton, serigraph "American Postcard P5;" Ken Dixon of Lubbock, watercolor-bichromate "Panda Mountain;" and Nancy Lowrey of Denton, graphite-pencil-acrylic "45 Birds, C." In addition, Frank R. Cheatham of Lubbock received the Midland Arts Association Purchase Award adding his work "Tomb Object P1071" to the museum's permanent collection.

For 24 other artists, the effort was not in vain. Their works were chosen along with the prize winners to hang in the 17th annual Southwestern Area Art Show. Last day to view the show, which has been on display at the museum this summer, is Aug. 14.

Hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Saturday and 2 to 5 p.m. Sunday. There is never a charge to view any of the exhibits at the museum located at 1705 W. Missouri Ave.

"Our 17 year tradition of exhibitions devoted to exploring trends in contemporary art in the Southwest is reflected by the calibre of this year's Southwestern Area Art Show," said Stuart Chase, assistant to the director at the museum. "Non-representational and traditional forms of expression represent artists who have made strong and convincing statements about themselves and their environment."

Juror for the show was Laurence Miller, director of the Laguna Gloria Art Museum. In his juror's statement he said of artists in general and of this show in particular:

"Artists are among the most important people of our society. It is imperative for us to take the opportunity to look at their work with the hope of seeing. For, if we are able to see, perhaps we will have fresh insight into ourselves and the world around us."

"Most importantly, artists are topographers of the future. In this exhibition, the future looks bright, cheerful and inviting."

Odessa police investigate rape

Odessa — Police here are investigating a reported rape and robbery that took place in a northside home early Saturday morning.

The 45-year-old victim told police she was asleep between 5 and 6 a.m. when she awoke to find a man standing over her. The man was armed with a knife and told her "I'll slit your throat if you scream."

Police said the man apparently entered the residence through the bedroom window and took the woman's purse containing $20 when he fled. It was found outside the house, minus the money.

Police said the only description they have of the man is that he is black and about 6 feet tall.

Narcotics agents arrest suspect

Frustrated surfers Pat Devlin, left, and Jack Coulehan head an El Paso Surf Club that claims 500 members. The only problem is the club is 600 miles from the nearest surf spot. The members contend California will drop into the sea after an earthquake and make this high desert city an ocean paradise.

El Paso Surf Club waits for ocean swells

EL PASO (AP) — Surf conditions at landlocked McKelligon Canyon Cove, 600 miles from the Pacific Ocean, call for southwestern swells of six to eight feet, Jerry Attrix says.

Attrix is an aged and fictitious surfer who belongs to a wacky club that has picked mile-high El Paso to wait for the California earthquake that allegedly will make this desert city into an oceanside paradise.

"El Paso's a goofy place, so why not make it the world's highest and driest surf spot?" asks Jack Coulehan, a Dallas-based flight attendant who three years ago helped organize the 500-member club.

Few in the surf club really expect California and most of the Southwest to fall into the sea, but members poke fun at the mythical surf spot.

Attrix, Frank Furter — "a real hot dog" — and Mack RuhMay — a surfer who "hangs around a lot" — were once featured on radio surf reports broadcast by club members in this parched West Texas city.

Mayor Jonathan Rogers even declared Aug. 13, 1982, as El Paso Surf Club Day to thank the group for making his city the nation's highest and driest surfing community.

The club also was awarded a plaque by the Red Cross to thank members for their volunteer aquatic work, Coulehan said.

El Paso, a border city of 480,000 that shares the waist-deep Rio Grande with Ciudad Juarez, Mexico, is nearly 600 miles from the Gulf of Mexico and 600 miles from San Diego, the nearest real surf spot. Most members cannot surf, but they remain undaunted.

"Our sole aim is fun," Coulehan said. "Some get so caught up in it that they think maybe there is an inland ocean."

Car racks carrying surfboards and bumper stickers that say "El Paso Surf Club" bolster the club's seriousness. The club meets monthly and has concocted a special drink called a jalapeno daiquiri. Jalapenos are hot chili peppers native to the region.

Why daiquiris?

"They're somewhat tropical," said Coulehan, who heads the Dallas chapter. There also is a chapter in Melbourne, Australia, but few Aussies realize El Paso is not even close to the ocean, he said.

Chapters also are found from San Diego to San Francisco, at Daytona Beach, Fla., and in Orogrande, N.M. The El Paso chapter — the largest — is headed by co-founder Pat Devlin.

Devlin, a restaurant waiter, and Coulehan were living in San Diego when they seized on the idea of a surfing club. Friends would kid the pair about surf conditions in this cactus-filled city, and the joke snowballed.

The pair posted a meeting notice for the El Paso Surf Club in the University of Texas at El Paso newspaper, and attracted city-wide interest.

With no dues and the only requirement being an occasional donation of daiquiri mix at club meetings, membership swelled to about 500. "We're a totally loose and carefree club," Coulehan said.

Parties would feature members telling tongue-in-cheek jokes about surf conditions at Clint, a tiny desert town near El Paso, at McKelligon Canyon Cove — the rockstrewn canyon that overlooks El Paso, and downtown. "The surf is murkier downtown," Coulehan said.

Boy recovers rapidly from surgery

ODESSA (AP) — Javier Garcia Jr. proudly lifts his blue T-shirt to display a row of black stitches that descend from the top of his chest to just above his navel.

In June, surgeons at Fort Worth Children's Hospital opened the 5-year-old Odessa's chest to close a hole the size of a quarter between the upper chambers of his heart.

Two days after the operation, Javier was walking through the hospital's halls, looking for someone to play with. "He hasn't stopped being active since," his mother said.

Mrs. Garcia and her shiny-eyed son were waiting at Women's and Children's Hospital in Odessa to see Dr. Hudson Allender, a Fort Worth pediatric cardiologist.

Allender, 33, has joined his associate, Dr. Ralph Tierney, who has been conducting bi-annual pediatric cardiology clinics at Women's and Children's since 1976.

Those clinics now will be every three months since there are no pediatric cardiologists between El Paso and Fort Worth to meet the rising number of children being diagnosed with cardiac problems, Allender said.

"There's lots of kids in this area with heart disease," Allender said, noting that pediatrics is getting "more sophisticated" in recognizing such ailments in children.

"It's like that cigarette commercial. 'We've come a long way, baby,'" Allender said.

Of every 1,000 babies born, six to eight will have a heart defect of some kind, he said. Twenty percent to 30 percent of those with heart defects will undergo surgery.

Altogether, 55 children from throughout the Permian Basin were seen by the specialists in one July visit. Allender examined 46 of them. "Heart disease in kids generally involves a plumbing problem," he said, explaining that tiny holes in the heart can get larger as children grow older.

But, the doctor said, "Heart attacks and sudden death are very uncommon in kids," who recover quickly from surgeries.

Children usually can be discharged from the hospital within 10 days of most heart surgeries, Allender said, while most adults who undergo open-heart surgery are hospitalized for at least two weeks.

Allender said heart diseases in children are congenital — present at birth — while heart diseases in adults usually result from "living too well."

Although dealing with children presents some unique challenges,

Allender said he would much rather treat youngsters than oldsters.

"You couldn't pay me enough to treat adults," he said.

Children, the doctor said, don't have "hang-ups" on body image, as many teen-agers and adults do.

Most children, he said, adapt well to heart disease. The hardest part of the diagnosis is trying to explain the problem to a child, especially if the patient has no symptoms.

Javier Garcia had no symptoms. His mother said the hole in his heart was the size of a pinhead when he was born.

Allender, who diagnosed the boy but did not perform the surgery, said Javier is "pretty much cured."

"He should become eligible for the draft and be able to play pro football, if he's good enough," Allender said.

Bell asks PUC for 'business as usual' rate hike

AUSTIN (AP) — Southwestern Bell today asked state officials to forget for the time being that it must break away from its parent company next year, and just consider a "business as usual" rate hike that would boost phone bills an estimated $6.45 a month.

The phone company asked the Public Utility Commission to consider for now $497.2 million of the $1.7 billion rate hike request Bell filed last June. It said it plans to go after the rest of the money later.

Today's proposal would raise the cost of basic residential service by amounts ranging from 60 to 82 percent, depending on the size of the city. Rates are lower in smaller communities.

A spokesman said the phone company hopes to put the higher rates into effect under bond Oct. 31, pending a final ruling by the PUC. But the company promised not to charge any higher than the PUC staff's preliminary recommendation.

Bell spokesman Dale Johnson said the rate increase the telephone company asked for today was a "business as usual" case and did not include any costs related to a court order that Southwestern Bell divest itself from its parent firm Jan. 1. He said the company would address that question — with new information to back up the rest of its rate hike request — by Oct. 3.

Last year the phone company asked for $471 million more and got $249 million more.

Johnson acknowledged the rate hike sought today included the highest percentage jump ever in basic home service.

"Of the $497 million, more would be in local rates than ever in the past, but that's related to need — not divestiture," Johnson said.

In Houston, the basic service rate would jump from $10.75 to an estimated $17.20. In Dallas, the rate would increase from $10.10 to $16.55.

In Austin, phone customers paying $8.05 would be billed $15.50, and in Lubbock, the rate would go from $8.80 to $15.25.

"Southwestern Bell has a significant revenue deficiency whether divestiture and access charges are considered or not," said Bell lawyer Jon Dee Lawrence. "This proceeding must go forward."

Photographer views life through lens for 70 years

By TOM ZITO
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

SARASOTA, Fla. — Seventy years and 140,000 exposures have clicked into the past since the Christmas when Joe Steinmetz's parents gave him an amateur photo processing outfit. He had been making snapshots for a couple of months with a box camera he received on his seventh birthday, Oct. 7, 1912, but developing the pictures was something else entirely.

"I remember pouring the chemicals into the film tank," the gray-haired Steinmetz recalls, "and then making these little contact sheets. And I said to myself, 'Well this is just magic!'"
Steinmetz says this in the living room of the home he shares on Pelican Cove here with his wife, Louise. The walls are covered with her oil paintings and a few Steinmetz photographs — a jovial closeup of a camel's face ("I call this 'Keep a Stiff Upper Lip,'" Steinmetz says), a portrait of Emmett Kelly in a rubbish heap ("my favorite picture"), a beach scene snapped in Florida.

THERE ARE ALSO three stacks of dry-mounted photos rather haphazardly piled against a wall. The nonchalant manner in which they are displayed and the somewhat battered condition of the prints reveal much about Steinmetz; he certainly doesn't take his photography too seriously. The two most prominent items in the room are a hologram of a girl blowing a kiss, and a lamp, the base of which holds a plant whose leaves, when touched, turn the bulb on and off.

"Is that the damnest thing you ever saw?" Steinmetz says.
WELL, not quite. The prints lying on the floor are much more astonishing, composing an extraordinary social document of how Americans have lived their private lives over the past half century. And the hundred or so images are but a tiny representation of the more than 100,000 negatives that are filed in green card cabinets in the closet in Steinmetz's study.

This awesome piece of history came out of the closet recently when Manhattan's International Center of Photography opened a show of 100 Steinmetz photos that exhibit director William Ewing calls "the discovery of the decade." The presentation is called "Killing Time," a title used by Howard photo historian Barbara Norfleet to characterize the action in many of Steinmetz's images, which tend to be portraits of leisured individuals who seem to have nothing to do other than idle away hours.

"PERHAPS SOUTHERN COASTAL Florida eally lets you know about the secret of having money," Norfleet writes in the introduction to a book of Steinmetz photos, "Killing Time," which serves as a catalogue for the show. "It is not for power, or to determine social class, but for personal freedom."

A good example of the Steinmetz vision can be seen in the image "Longboat Key Florida 1958." It is at once a documentation of a period in time, as well as a mythologization of the Beach Scene — an artful splicing of spontaneity and formality, an unusual cross between formal photography and the snapshot, something contemporary documentary photographers often try with little success.

In the Steinmetz image, one encounters a family in the midst of a surfside cookout. Dad is displaying a hot dog to Junior, Mom is breezily chatting with Sis. . . . And yet the entire scene seems almost pristine; there's no sand on the beach blanket, there's no seaweed scattered about the shore. It's as if Steinmetz somehow was able to find in real life the attributes that usually exist only in imagination.

ALTHOUGH STEINMETZ HIMSELF gags on some of the philosophical musings applied to his work, he admits that his best images often have something to do with money, sunny and funny, particularly the last. "All I want to do is make people laugh," he says.

Still, this impressive body of work "has a little more impact than he realizes," says John D. MacDonald, the creator of Travis McGee, the detective who understands the peninsular, often low-life nature of Florida as do few other characters. MacDonald lives a few miles up the coast from Steinmetz, and generally eats lunch with him on Fridays. "I suppose we've been working the same street for a long time, just different sides of it," MacDonald says. "Joe's work is very clear and specific and distinct. Some reviewers have the idea that when he looks at people on the beaches and in their back yards, he's making sport of them. Nothing could be further from the truth. He takes them on their own terms, and he's accumulated a wealth of social data."

In a sense, Steinmetz came into the world as a statistical piece of this data. He was born to a wealthy Main Line Philadelphia family, his father a metallurgy engineer who designed seamless steel tanks for high-pressure gases, his mother a pianist who studied at the Boston Conservatory. Steinmetz was listed in the Philadelphia social register, attended Germantown Academy and graduated from Princeton with a degree in English. So much for surface biography as in many of his photos there is more lively subtext: "Daddy was passionately interested in stamp collecting, aviation and inventing," Steinmetz says. "To think of him as a man engaged in a standard vocation is not to understand him. He invented a way of rigging balloons over London to foil the German zeppelins during the war. There were also some less practical ones: he received a patent for torpedo shields that were to be hung from the sides of boats, which would have served absolutely no good, and a rather strange car lock, which was a strap that came up from the front axle of the car and over the hood and was padlocked to the steering wheel."

"MOTHER WAS A talented pianist from Colorado Springs, where she would ride across the mesas and practice her arpeggios. Her name was Frances Oma Fields. She tried to get me to study the piano. She'd say, 'Have you studied your hour today?' and I'd say, 'Yes, Mother.' In fact I'd been studying a comic book for an hour as I played around on the keys I had rhythm but no melody, although I can still play part of the 'Darktown Strutters Ball.' I was not a terribly good student. My great achievement at Germantown Academy was to get up in the bell tower and make a snapshot up there. I signed it 'The boy that stood highest at G.A. Ha! It had nothing to do with academic standing, and for years afterward I thought that all these new kids were probably going to try this and get killed when they fell off the roof."

The thing that interested me most as a child was magic. Across Westview Street from our house lived a man named Walter Gibson. He gave shows around the neighborhood. We'd pay 10 cents and go sit on the lawn and watch him perform. There was one trick he did with a V-shaped wine glass. He poured water into the glass and then made it turn red, then turn blue, and then he'd drink it. To a young boy, this was quite amazing. Well, he had a tie-in with a magic shop, and for 25 cents you got the wine glass and two red and blue celluloid filters that were the heart of the illusion. I did that trick once for a few coolies on the Great Wall of China and it worked wonders. Life becomes very boring without magic.

"When I graduated from Germantown, a lot of my classmates were going to Princeton, which was one of the reasons I wound up going there. I had three desires. One was to get into the Triangle Club, which put on these wonderful musical shows. I wanted to have a good tap routine ready, so I went to Al White's dance studio on Market Street in Philadelphia and said, 'How much to learn to tap?' They said, 'Oh, $30 for a 10-week course.' I told them I didn't have much time, and I said, 'Here's $30, you feed me things as fast as you can.'"

"AND IN A week I got into the Triangle Club. I wanted to be in the club because it let you travel, get away from school. You'd get on the train and be entertained by the alumni in whatever town it was and they'd trot out the debutantes, and the debutantes would lead you down to the station half drunk. And you'd be half in orbit and hit the next town and try your luck again.

The second thing I wanted was a letter in high jump, which I got for jumping 2 inches above my height, which at the time was 6 feet and now is 6 feet 1 inch. The last thing I wanted was to get a diploma and graduate. I thought I wanted to be in the advertising business because I had subscribed to Printers Ink in high school and thought it was the most fascinating magazine. So I majored in English and thought that would help me in my career, but reading 'Beowulf' in Middle English doesn't exactly make for snappy advertising copy."

Cancerous fish found

WASHINGTON (AP) — Cancerous fish infest major waterways near four U.S. cities, Cable News Network has reported.

The network said Thursday that tumors were found on fish in the Buffalo River near Buffalo, N.Y.; the Black River near Cleveland, the Hudson River.

Scientists are trying to determine if there is a serious threat to the health of millions of people who live near the waterways, CNN said.

"All that scientists currently know is that there is a link between the dumping of toxic wastes into these waterways and the biological devastation visible in countless fish pulled from the rivers," the network said.

Summer time to start house plants from seed

By ELVIN MCDONALD

Special seed-starting mixes sold everywhere these days make growing baby house plants a snap. Late summer is as good a time to start as any and a seed planted today means you'll have something wonderful to look forward to next week, next month, next year!

One of the prettiest flowering pot plants you can grow from seeds is the cyclamen, not just any, but one of the more heat tolerant and quicker-to-bloom miniatures such as Helena or Bambini. Packets are offered by the Geo. W. Park Seed Co., Inc., Greenwood, S.C. 29647.

A recent article in "Florists' Review" magazine recommends sowing cyclamen seeds an eighth to a quarter-inch deep in "nutrient enriched peat." A packaged mix such as Pro Mix or Jiffy Mix makes an excellent substitute. For best germination (seed sprouting), keep temperatures constantly between 65-68°F. and the planting dark around the clock.

Keep the growing medium nicely moist to the touch of your fingers at all times. When you see green sprouts, move immediately to a bright window, such as one facing north or east, or a few inches beneath the tubes in a fluorescent-light garden. Protect from hot rays of sun shining directly on the tender leaves.

Mini cyclamen seeds sown in late summer or early fall will come into bloom next spring and early summer. Put your nose to the blooms of each seedling because some are sweet smelling.

Other house plants you can grow from seeds right now include fancy-leaved coleus, hybrid geraniums, countless begonias, philodendrons and geraniads including gloxinia, African violet and lipstick vine. How-to drawings and instructions that make growing tiny seeds easy are in my new Begonia newsletter. Send 50 cents coin and a stamped, self-addressed, long envelope with "Begonias" written on the back flap to Elvin McDonald Reader Service, Box R, Niagara Falls, N.Y. 14306; in Canada, 4141 Glenayr Ave., Niagara Falls, Ont. L2E 6K1.

Q: What causes streaks of black on leaves of cattleya orchids? One plant has a weak new growth and already the small leaf has black on the tip. I have been cutting the black portions off and spray weekly with the fungicide Phaltan. Many plants have already been lost.

A. Professional orchid grower Robert M. Scully, Jr., responds: "Sounds like virus in cattleyas. The symptoms described are classic. I suggest the plant be destroyed at once."

"Further, at each time the cutting is done the instrument used is contaminated with virus particles, which can be spread days later to a healthy plant. Sterilize the cutting tool with flame or alcohol."

Q: How can I keep gardenia buds from turning brown? Also, how can I keep mites from spinning webs among the leaves?

A. Be sure your gardenia doesn't become dry enough between waterings to cause even the slightest wilting. Feel the surface soil with your fingers; maintain between nicely moist and damp.

The presence of red spider-mites always indicates something awry, usually air that is too hot and dry, or stale and unmoving, often in combination with soil that is habitually allowed to become too dry. Step one is to take your gardenia outdoors or into the bathtub and give it a good shower of lukewarm water. Repeat every three days for at least two weeks.

Meanwhile, try to maintain temperatures below 80°F., increase humidity and get fresh air moving through the gardenia. Keep the soil evenly moist. I would also spray every three days through this period with Safer's Insecticidal Soap (a free brochure on controlling bugs in house plants is available from Safer Agro-chem, Inc., 13910 Lyons Valley Rd., Jamul, Calif. 92036).

Quick Take: George Harmon Scott, author of the superb large-size paperback "Bulbs: How to Select, Grow and Enjoy" (HP Books, Box 5367, Tucson, Ariz. 85703), recommends three tulips for mild climates in the Fall 1983 "Pacific Horticulture" (Box 22609, San Francisco, Calif. 94122; $10 yearly). They are Tulipa clusiana (lady or peppermint stick tulip), bright yellow T. sylvestris and yellow-centered rose-lavender T. saxatilis.

Q.T: A new national employment project has been launched by the National Council for Therapy and Rehabilitation through Horticulture. Details: Horticulture Hiring the Disabled, 9041 Comprint Court, Suite 103, Gaithersburg, Md. 20877.

Q.T: The "African Violet Magazine" ($9 yearly including membership in the African Violet Society of America, Inc., Box 1326, Knoxville, Tenn. 37901) reports great success in controlling spider-mites in indoor gardens by releasing the predator mite Phytoseiulus persimilis. One source is Rincon-Vitova Insectary, Inc., Box 96, Oak View, Calif. 93022.

DEAR ABBY

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR READERS: A woman wrote: "After 20 years of dating, I have come to the conclusion that my mother was wrong when she said, 'A lady never calls a gentleman - she waits for him to call her.'"

"I recently met a very attractive man and we seemed to hit it off very well, but instead of his taking my number and saying the usual, 'I'll call you,' he gave me his number and asked me to call him."

"Perfect! I had the option of either calling him or not. It was all up to me. I'd like to hear the opinion of men on this. -- DON'T CALL ME. I'LL CALL YOU"

My mail has been running 300-to-1 in favor of women calling men. Some of the choice responses:

DEAR ABBY: The notion that it is not proper for a lady to call a gentleman should have gone out with the invention of the telephone. I am flattered by any serious call from a woman who is interested in me. - S. B. IN BEL AIR, CALIF.

DEAR ABBY: I'm a 26-year-old male who has never been out on a date. Why? To say that I suffer from a crippling case of shyness is putting it mildly. I'd give anything if a woman called me. Then I'd be sure she wanted to go out with me. The feminist movement has helped some, but it isn't moving fast enough for me. - FRUSTRATED IN PHOENIX

DEAR ABBY: As a 23-year-old single woman, I say BRAVO! Why shouldn't the woman take the initiative instead of waiting for a man to call her? The same goes for dancing. I love to dance, and when I'm at a club and the music is great, if nobody asks me to dance, I'll ask a man. It takes nerve for a woman to ask a man to dance, but I can take rejection if I'm turned down. It's only fair. Men have had to risk

rejection for years. - UP FRONT INGEORGETOWN

DEAR ABBY: In all my years of dating, I've seen very few relationships that weren't loused up in the end when the woman took the initiative and pursued the man. Somehow the male ego automatically goes into overdrive and then burns out as soon as the woman becomes aggressive. I'm sure it goes back to prehistoric days, when it was instinctive for the male to hunt, pursue and then conquer the female.

Your mother was right, and so was mine. A lady never calls a gentleman. - LEAVE THE CALLING TO ME

DEAR ABBY: Life has become much simpler since I quit asking ladies for their phone numbers. I just hand them my card with a simple, "Call me."

If they do, they're interested. If they don't, it's no big deal. From the lady's standpoint, she avoids the creeps, reserving the right to make or not make contact. - LADY'S CHOICE IN COLUMBUS

DEAR ABBY: I hope your idea catches on. I'm a 26-year-old male, and I am tired of my palms dripping sweat and my tongue tying itself up in knots every time I call a woman.

I'd be ecstatic if a woman called me and said, "Let's go out sometime." - CALL ME IN OREGON

DEAR ABBY: Count me as one man who is 100 percent in favor of having the woman call the man. Why not give her the option? If she's interested, her call will show it. If not, then it wouldn't have been worth the effort on the man's part to call her anyway. - OPEN-MINDED IN R.I.

Actress believes inner beauty key to outward beauty

By COLETTE COUCHEZ
Copley News Service

If you want to learn more about the secrets of dressing for success, you may try consulting a designer. If perhaps you want to discover the secret to achieving a "model-perfect" face, you could enlist the help of a makeup artist. And, if you wanted to learn more about staying in shape, the logical person to ask would be a fitness expert.

But a better alternative for improving your looks includes going right to the source... a lady who has it all. And the best possible choice you could make is the exquisite Super Beauty Linda Evans.

Seen each week as the soft-spoken and angelically beautiful "Krystle" on sizzling nighttime soaper "Dynasty," she is indeed one of the most stunning women in the world today. And, she has such an enchanting way about her, both on-screen and off, that each time she walks into a room she performs the impossible... she makes everyone forget how beautiful she is, inside.

Says Linda: "The truth of the matter is I believe beauty is a direct result of thinking a certain way. Naturally the proper care of the face and body, the correct hair and skin care, etc., are important; but for me, the secret is all in how we think. What I know for sure, is that I just want to be the best ME I can be."

Recently Linda took that very philosophy and turned it into a book, ("Linda Evans Beauty and Fitness Book," Wallaby/Simon & Schuster) in which she shares her actual beauty secrets.

Dental costs vary

New York had the highest average dental charges among seven cities surveyed in 1981 and 1982 by the Health Insurance Association of America.

The lowest charges were found in St. Louis. With the exception of the initial oral examination, New York's fees were consistently higher for cleaning, filling, crown, root canal and extraction procedures, the association said.

Pentagon fears high-tech civilian specialists may flee wartime posts

By the Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — If war should come, America's vaunted high-tech armaments might be crippled because thousands of civilian specialists who now keep the intricate weaponry functioning could refuse to man their posts under wartime conditions.

Reflecting the military's little-noticed but growing dependency on civilian employees, high-level officials in the armed forces increasingly are concerned about the uncertainty of how these workers would respond under conditions of modern warfare.

Civilians workers, employed under contracts with private companies, now provide high-tech maintenance on aircraft aboard U.S. aircraft carriers, keep U.S. missile sites in Europe at high operational hum and man secret listening posts in remote areas. And they are responsible for maintaining the crucial readiness of the Worldwide Military Command and Control System, the nerve network through which the president and Joint Chiefs of Staff would receive warning of an attack and direct U.S. forces in a crisis.

"We are dependent on them," acknowledges Lawrence J. Korb, assistant secretary of defense and the Pentagon's manpower chief. The loss of such employees, a Pentagon report says, would be "catastrophic."

A PENTAGON TASK FORCE assigned to study the problem discovered recently that no one knows how many such civilians there are, but it estimated the current number at 5,000 "mission essential" civilians and perhaps 1,000 "mission critical" civilians. And because the Pentagon is falling further behind in its ability to train its own technicians to service and operate increasingly complex new weaponry, the task force concluded that the military's dependence on essential civilians "should and will steadily increase."

The new dependency is causing increasing anxiety in field commanders' headquarters and in the Joint Chiefs of Staff war room about how these civilians would respond if, as military men put it, "the fuse goes off."

There is no evidence, according to the Pentagon, that the civilians who have served the military in previous wars have "bugged out." Indeed, thousands of civilians worked alongside U.S. combat troops in Vietnam without any known incidents of desertion.

And while there is no reason to believe that the current crops of civilians are any less patriotic or professional than their predecessors, no one in the Pentagon can be certain how the civilians would react under the unprecedented dangers and tensions produced by a modern, high-intensity and perhaps nuclear war.

FUTURE WARS, the Pentagon task force warned, "will involve new scenarios of suddenness and intense actions by enemy aggressors that will not permit the time for planning, training and replacement (of civilians) as in the past."

As a result, the report urged the Pentagon to "take measures now that will both enhance confidence in the retention of contractor personnel and increase their effectiveness in military operations."

"The generals are getting concerned about this," said Ron Cuneo, vice president of Honeywell's Federal Systems Division, which provides hundreds of civilians to the military. "They want to have a warmer feeling that their missions will be satisfied in a crisis." The generals are concerned, Korb said, "that we develop a coherent policy." That turns out to be easier said than done. Although the Pentagon has been grappling with the problem, a coherent policy so far has eluded the best minds of industry and the military.

One fundamental difficulty is that while soldiers are subject to the Uniform Code of Military Justice — which provides a range of court martial-imposed sanctions, including the firing squad, to enforce discipline — civilians are not covered by military law.

THE ENTHUSIASM OF SOME field commanders for trying to bring their civilians under the military code has been dampened by a series of recent U.S. court decisions holding that such action would be illegal short of a formal declaration of war, an unlikely event in today's hair-trigger world. And Pentagon lawyers doubt that they could legally conscript essential civilians even in wartime, an action that would bring civilians under military law.

Despite this impediment, Pentagon officials realize that they cannot afford to give up on the search for a solution because the problem is growing more urgent as the civilian labor force in the military increases in size.

Its growth has been spurred by the increasing number of complex weapons systems on which the military depends but which it cannot easily operate or maintain. On one modern aircraft carrier, for instance, a group of admirals recently was agog at the wonders a civilian technician could perform with the ship's combat information computer — wonders nobody else on board could produce. The Army's new Patriot anti-aircraft missile batteries are expected to go into operation in Europe with technicians from Raytheon, the manufacturer, providing maintenance and service.

"There's a wealth of mind-boggling equipment coming in and it's very difficult to maintain," said Honeywell's Cuneo. "We retrain all our people 30 to 40 days a year; you can't justify training a military guy on one black box that's only going to be around a couple of years."

ALONG WITH THE PENTAGON'S shortage of training money, there is a simple lack of manpower. Congress, Korb points out, has refused to increase the size of the active-duty force. To replace its civilians with military personnel, "we'd have to take guys out of foxholes," he said. "And in the long run, using civilians is cheaper."

Adding to the problem is the fact that the military cannot keep the technicians it has trained. Even with recent pay increases, these uniformed technicians can get higher pay from private companies, which raid the military for technicians. Often these ex-soldiers end up at their old jobs, but with higher pay and without having to salute anybody.

"The military's in sad shape," said John Marshall, director of field administration for Grumman Corp. "They can't train 'em and they can't hold 'em."

IN POLLING THE CIVILIANS to find out what would persuade them to stay at their posts, defense officials found three main concerns:

- That in a crisis the civilians' families be evacuated along with other military families, not last.
- That civilian employees be given protection against being shot as spies if their positions are overrun by the enemy.
- That they be given extra pay for hazardous duty and bonuses for staying on the job in combat.

Index shows growth in U.S. economy

By the Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

According to the men and women who keep U.S. industries stocked with parts and raw materials, all indicators pointed to a pickup in the pace of economic expansion in July. In fact, an index based on those indicators hit its highest level in more than a decade, the National Association of Purchasing Management reported Monday.

The so-called Purchasing Managers' Composite Index, fashioned by the U.S. Department of Commerce from data supplied by the association, registered 67.1 percent last month, up sharply from 59.6 percent in June and 56.1 percent in May. Readings above 50 percent indicate an expanding economy.

The index rests on five components from the association's monthly survey of purchasing managers representing 350 industrial companies selected to reflect a cross section of the nation's industrial base. These components, adjusted for seasonal variation and variously weighted, are new orders, production, employment, vendor performance and inventories.

The association said the improved index reflects "a broad-based, classic recovery from the long recession."

—Employment was up for 23 percent of the respondents, the largest percentage since June, 1979, and up from 20 percent in June and 16 percent in May. Only 12 percent said employment declined, down from 19 percent in June.

—Production, despite annual 1- and 2-week plant shutdowns at many facilities, was strong, with a net difference of 32 percentage points between managers reporting better or worse production, the largest difference since September 1978.

—New orders showed a 31-point difference between managers reporting more or fewer new orders, up from 24 percent in June and 20 percent in May.

—Inventories continued cautiously building as managers reportedly remain wary, with 24 percent of the respondents reporting higher levels of supplies, compared with 16 percent in June; 22 percent reported reduced inventories, down from 24 percent in June.
