Reagan calls for Iranian cease fire

■ Treaty examined; Iranian leader en route to U.N. — 2A

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — President Reagan called upon Iran today to say whether it will accept a cease fire in the Persian Gulf war, declaring that the U.N. Security Council will have no choice but to impose sanctions if Iranian military action continues.

In an address prepared for delivery at the opening session of the 42nd U.N. General Assembly, Reagan also pledged to pursue reductions in long-range strategic nuclear arms in the wake of an agreement in principle with the Soviet Union to eliminate intermediate-range land-based missiles.

In addition, the president said he will continue to seek peace in Central America, but warned Nicaragua that "We will not, and the world community will not, accept phony 'democratization' designed to mask the perpetuation of dictatorship."

Reagan opened his address by welcoming U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar back from a peace mission to Persian Gulf countries, saying, "All men and women of goodwill pray that the carnage can soon be stopped."

Noting that Iranian President Ali Khamenei will address the General Assembly on Tuesday, Reagan said, "I take this opportunity to call upon him clearly and unequivocally to state whether Iran accepts" a previous Security Council resolution calling for a cease fire.

"If the answer is positive, it would be a welcome step and major breakthrough," he said. "If it is negative, the council has no choice but rapidly to adopt enforcement measures."

The United States is supporting a proposed resolution calling for sanctions to enforce compliance with the cease-fire. Iraq has said that it will comply.

"We do not seek confrontation or trouble with Iran or anyone else," Reagan said. "When the tension diminishes, so will our presence."

Reagan also said that although the Soviet Union helped draft the cease-fire resolution and secure its approval, the Soviets had also called for withdrawal of U.S. naval forces from the gulf and "made the false accusation that somehow the United States — rather than the war itself — is the source of tension" in the region.

"The United States hopes the Soviets will join the other members of the Security Council in vigorously seeking an end to a conflict that should never have begun," he said.

Turning to Nicaragua, Reagan warned, "The temporary relaxation of controls — which can later be tightened — is not democratization."

The president's remarks came after the government in Managua authorized the immediate reopening of the opposition daily La Prensa in what was described as an effort to comply with a Central American peace plan.

Addressing Nicaragua's Sandinista rulers, Reagan said, "You must end your stranglehold on internal political activity. You must hold free and fair national elections. The media must be truly free — not censored or intimidated or crippled by indirect measures like the denial of newsprint or threats against journalists or their families. Exiles must be allowed to return to minister, to live, to work, and to organize politically.

Supporters, opponents to share views of Bork

WASHINGTON (AP) — A number of prominent Americans are ready to testify for or against the nomination of Robert H. Bork to the Supreme Court following a record five days of testimony from the nominee before the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Bork completed his testimony in an unusual Saturday session, and the spotlight now turns to the scores of individuals and groups that have taken public stands on the nomination.

Among the pro-Bork forces scheduled to testify today were William Rogers, former secretary of state, and former attorneys general William French Smith, William Saxby and Ed Levy.

Scheduled to testify against Bork were Nicholas Katzenbach, former attorney general; William T. Coleman, former transportation secretary in the Ford administration; Mayor Andrew Young of Atlanta; former Democratic Rep. Barbara Jordan of Texas, and Burke Marshall, who was in charge of civil rights for the Kennedy administration Justice Department.

The committee also is to hear from retired Judge Harold Tyler and Robert Fiske, the current and former chairmen, respectively, of the American Bar Association panel that rated Bork's qualifications. In a controversial vote earlier this month, 10 members of the panel gave Bork the highest rating, four voted him unqualified and one took the middle ground of no recommendation. The number of unqualified votes is considered unusual.

When Bork was nominated for the U.S. Court of Appeals in 1982, Coleman headed an ABA investigation into his role in firing Watergate special prosecutor Archibald Cox on Oct. 20, 1973. Coleman may be questioned about Bork's comments to him at the time.

Bork was questioned extensively during last week's hearings on the firing that became known as the "Saturday Night Massacre." Then solicitor general, Bork fired Cox on orders of President Nixon, after Attorney General Elliot Richardson resigned, and his top deputy, William D. Ruckelshaus was fired rather than carry out the directive.

Bork told the hearings that despite the firing, he assured Cox's top assistants that the independent Watergate team would stay together and could continue Cox's effort to secure Nixon's tape recordings. Cox's pursuit of those tapes led to his ouster.

Bork also told the hearings that he had not originally planned to name a new special prosecutor to head the team, and it wasn't until several days after the firing — following a public outcry — that Nixon agreed to do so.

According to one committee source, speaking only on condition he not be identified, panel members want to know if Bork told Coleman the same story.

A federal judge had ruled at the time that Bork's action was illegal, although the decision was vacated when a new prosecutor was named.

Bork was questioned for about 90 minutes on Saturday by Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa., who has not said how he will vote on Bork's nomination. Bork denied that he would try to extend the power of the executive branch if named to the high court.

"The impression I always sided with the president is wrong," Bork said. "My record is not one of unvarying support for the executive branch. I will give you a fair shake. I will give everybody a fair shake."

Long debate anticipated on farm credit bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — Debate on a financial rescue package for the Farm Credit System opens in the House floor this week, but key components of the complex bill are expected to remain snarled at least until next month.

Floor debate in a congressional work week shortened by the Rosh Hashanah holiday is guaranteed to be overshadowed by Senate Judiciary Committee hearings on the nomination of Judge Robert H. Bork to the Supreme Court.

As lawmakers break the ice on the farm credit bill, they plan to consider a bare-bones bailout proposal for the faltering system of borrower-owned lending institutions, which posted $4.8 billion in operating losses in the last two years.

Also scheduled for debate are the issues of borrowers rights and features to expand restructuring of loans to financially troubled farmers.

But plans to set up a secondary market under which farm mortgage loans could be pooled and resold to investors were put on hold temporarily at the end of last week amid burgeoning controversy.

"Hopefully we have avoided a blood bath that the Agriculture Committee probably would have won but that would not have been helpful to everybody involved," Rep. Tony Coelho, D-Calif., said after the secondary market issue was put off until Oct. 7.

The delay bought time for both House committee chairmen who have been skeptical about the proposal as well as the Reagan administration, which says the plan being pushed by the American Bankers Association could harm the Farm Credit System far more than it might help.

New hearings on the proposal were scheduled immediately by two House chairmen who have been skeptical about the proposal: Fernand St Germain, D-R.I., of the Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs Committee, and Edward J. Markey, D-Mass., of the House telecommunications and finance subcommittee.

Also postponed until Oct. 7 was a sweeping restructuring of the network of 37 banks and almost 400 local lending institutions.

The 70-year old system is one of the pillars of the credit system on which American agriculture is based. It operated in the black in the farm boom of the 1970s but ran into deep trouble when land values and crop prices sank in the early 1980s.

The House Agriculture Committee skirted a potential deadlock by sending the measure to the floor without a specific sum for a "cash infusion" to keep the system afloat. Instead, it authorized "such sums as may be necessary" for the fiscal year that starts Oct. 1.

House Agriculture Committee Chairman Kika de la Garza, D-Texas, has prepared an amendment that would provide $2.5 billion in emergency funds, which aides said would be contingent on sale of a like amount of system assets.

Critics have been saying the system's assets are unlikely to bring in that much. The system itself has asked for $6 billion.

Meanwhile, a Senate subcommittee headed by Sen. David Boren, D-Okla., resumes drafting of its own version of farm credit legislation containing a secondary market.

Royalty leads list in Fortune

NEW YORK (AP) — Hey buddy, can you spare a billion?

For a sultan, a pair of queens, a potato processor, a college dropout and 127 others, the answer is yes, says Fortune magazine.

Topping the list are the Sultan Hassanal Bolkiah of Brunei, 41, who is worth $25 billion, and King Fahd of Saudi Arabia, 67, who cashes in at $20 billion, Fortune reported in its Oct. 19 issue. Both can thank oil.

In all, the magazine said, 132 people control 98 billion-dollar family fortunes, including 47 American fortunes, 12 Arab, 10 Asian, and six each in Britain, West Germany, the Netherlands and Canada.

The youngest billionaire listed was William Gates, 31, of Seattle, Wash., the founder of the Microsoft computer software company. A Harvard dropout, he was said by Fortune to be worth $1.2 billion.

There are three members of the Mars family, famous for their candy bars; two Rockefellers; August Anheuser Busch Jr. and Alfred Henry Heineken, both beer brewers; three Marriotts, of the hotels; two Gallos, of the wines; and Estee Lauder, 79, the queen of cosmetics.

There are two real queens, as well — Elizabeth II, 61, of England, with an estimated $7.4 billion (but she "turns off palace lights to save money," says Fortune); and Beatrix, 49, of the Netherlands, with $4.4 billion.

But while some were born to wealth, others achieved it. John Richard Simplot, born 78 years ago in a one-room log cabin on the banks of the Snake River, now heads the world's largest potato growing and processing outfit, J.R. Simplot Co. of Boise, Idaho, Fortune said. It put his worth at $1 billion.

Schroeder finds public reluctant to lend support

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the fifth in a series of articles overviewing the Democratic and Republican races for the 1988 presidential nominations.

By JIM WARREN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — If only her name were Patrick, she says, people would be lining up to support her for president.

During a recent stop in Austin, U.S. Rep. Pat Schroeder said the gender issue is the one thing holding people back in her unofficial bid for the Democratic presidential nomination.

"People tell me things like, 'I like your record, but...' and I say right back to them, 'But what?' " says Ms. Schroeder, an eight-term Congresswoman from Denver. "Washington, D.C., is kind of the last men's locker room."

To test the waters, Ms. Schroeder has been on the speaking circuit, driving home her theme — a Rendezous With Reality. After seven years of Ronald Reagan, she says it's time to stop the Happy Talk because there are no Magic Solutions.

Ms. Schroeder, 47, received some national attention earlier this year when she unsuccessfully vied for chairman of the House Armed Services Committee. And before former U.S. Sen. Gary Hart pulled out of the presidential race, Ms. Schroeder was one of his top supporters.

Two weeks ago, she shocked many political observors by finishing third in a TIME magazine poll behind the Rev. Jesse Jackson and Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis, who came in only two points ahead of Ms. Schroeder. The Harvard-educated lawyer finished first in several categories among the seven Democratic hopefuls.

She finished first in "Someone you would be proud to have as president" and "Someone you would buy a used car from." More important — especially since she specializes in arms control and civil service reform — was her first-place showing in the question that asked who would best manage the economy.

Ms. Schroeder is tough on the Pentagon. She says the United States spends too much money on expensive military hardware, not enough on personnel and conventional forces.

Alluding to Republicans' claims of welfare cheats in the 1970s, she says, "The welfare queens of the '80s are the defense contractors."

Every year, Ms. Schroeder offers her own defense budget. "And mine includes things like mine sweepers," she says.

Late-season tropical storm first of year to threaten Texas

Associated Press

A late-season tropical storm churning into the Caribbean is the first this year to pose a potential threat to Texas.

Emily, born Sunday from a tropical depression east of Barbados, was expected to strengthen as it moved west-northwest at 15 to 20 mph, forecasters said.

"Conditions favor some strengthening during the next 24 hours," National Hurricane Center forecaster Hal Gerrish said in the initial advisory on the storm. "All interests in the Lesser Antilles should closely monitor the progress of this storm."

The storm brought 45 mph winds and 5-inch rains to Barbados early today and headed on toward St. Vincent, packing winds of at least 60 mph, forecasters said.

"Barbados had gale-force winds at 3 a.m. and the storm has moved to the southwest of Barbados. The next (likely landfall) location would be St. Vincent," said Miles Lawrence, hurricane forecaster at the National Hurricane Center in nearby Coral Gables.

Tropical storm warnings were posted early today for the southern Caribbean.

The center was only 50 miles east of St. Vincent, or at 12.8 north latitude and 60.5 west longitude at 6 a.m. today. The storm was moving west-northwest at about 20 mph, Lawrence said.

The fifth named storm of the season, Emily is the first that could enter the Gulf of Mexico. Usually, storms developing late in the season swing along the Atlantic coast of the U.S. instead of into the Gulf.

There were four previous named tropical storms in this year's hurricane season, which began June 1 and ends Nov. 30.

Only the first, Arlene, reached hurricane status with winds exceeding 74 mph. All the other storms died at sea, including Dennis, which expired Sunday.

While September hurricanes are statistically rare for Texas, they are not unusual.

Earlier pacts meant to cut nuclear weapons

WASHINGTON (AP) — Reagan administration officials say the tentative treaty on Soviet and U.S. intermediate-range nuclear missiles is the first pact to reduce nuclear arsenals. But liberals and conservatives alike say earlier agreements either cut, or were intended to cut, nuclear weapons.

The treaty on Intermediate Nuclear Forces (INF), which Secretary of State George P. Shultz and his Soviet counterpart, Eduard A. Shevardnadze, on Friday said they expect will be signed at a summit later this year, requires America to dismantle 332 single-warhead Pershing 2 and cruise missiles now stationed in Europe.

And it would call upon the Soviets to dismantle their SS-4, SS-12, SS-20 and Skateboard missiles, estimated by U.S. officials at more than 1,500 warheads. The Soviets have not said precisely how many intermediate-range weapons they have.

Edward Rowny, one of President Reagan's top arms control advisers, said of the INF pact, "Among its other accomplishments, it would mark the first agreement ever to eliminate nuclear weapons, instead of simply limiting their increase."

Previous arms control agreements set limits on the numbers of weapons each side would keep, Rowny and other administration officials say.

But critics on the right and left say that eliminating intermediate-range nuclear missiles will do little to ease superpower tensions unless the two sides come to terms on a proposed agreement to limit each side to 6,000 longer-range nuclear weapons, down from 12,000 for the United States and 11,000 for the Soviets.

And they note that a previous superpower treaty called for strategic cuts by the Soviets. The second Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty, SALT II, signed in 1979, called for the Soviets to reduce their strategic nuclear delivery sysems from 2,504 to 2,250. The United States had only about 1,900 strategic nuclear delivery vehicles, and remains at about that level.

The Senate never ratified SALT II, and the Soviets refused to reduce their arsenal, increasing it marginally instead, from 2,504 to 2,520, according to Pentagon statistics.

"That showed they did not really intend to reduce their systems," said James Hackett, who was acting director of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency in early 1981 and is now at the conservative Heritage Foundation in Washington.

Although Reagan criticized SALT II before he became president, he adhered to it until last year, when the United States breached the pact by equipping an additional B-52 bomber with cruise missiles without dismantling other systems.

James P. Rubin, research director at the liberal Arms Control Association, labeled as "false" the Reagan administration claim that the INF accord would be the first to require the superpowers to dismantle nuclear weapons.

Over the past 15 years, SALT limits have forced the superpowers to destroy old weapons as they field new ones, Rubin said, calculating that the Soviets have dismantled 607 launchers, most of them with single warheads, and the United States 48.

The administration is "technically correct" in arguing that the INF pact is the first to specify the destruction of nuclear weapons, said John Steinbruner of the liberal Brookings Institution in Washington.

But, he says, the SALT treaties "prevented deployment of hundreds of weapons."

"The weapons being reduced in the INF accord are marginal in the military sense," Steinbruner said.

The INF pact, one intelligence source concluded, "is not the treaty that the Reaganites were bragging they could get out of the Russians. Instead of a hardnosed START treaty, we are getting a pretty soft INF treaty."

"The medium-range missiles are something that the Russians can give up. They have enough other missiles," said the source, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Repudiating SALT II while agreeing to eliminate U.S. intermediate-range nuclear weapons from Europe, as Reagan is doing, could put the United States at a disadvantage, Rubin said.

Iranian leader prepares to address U.N. gathering

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Iranian President Ali Khamenei left for New York today to address the United Nations and renew a demand that Iraq be branded the aggressor in the Persian Gulf war, the Islamic Republic News Agency reported.

Khamenei is the first ranking Iranian official to travel to the United States since the Islamic Revolution and overthrow of the Iranian monarchy in 1979.

The state-run agency, monitored in Nicosia, said Khamenei was accompanied by a large delegation that included Mustafa Mir-Salim, a presidential adviser, Alireza Moayari, deputy prime minister for political affairs and several Parliament members.

IRNA did not say if the group planned to make any stops en route to New York. Khamenei was scheduled to address the 42nd session of the U.N. General Assembly on Tuesday.

The dispatch said: "The Iranian delegation is expected to assert Iran's demand for identifying the aggressor in the Iran-Iraq war."

IRNA said that while in New York, Khamenei will meet with U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar to discuss the July 20 Security Council resolution calling for a cease-fire in the 7-year-old war.

Perez de Cuellar visited Iran and Iraq earlier this month seeking to get Iran to accept the resolution. Iraq said it would comply if Tehran did.

The resolution also calls for a withdrawal to international borders, an exchange of prisoners and an impartial inquiry into who started the war.

Iraq has stressed it will not endorse any change in the resolution. But Iran has insisted that Iraq must be condemned internationally before Tehran will agree to a truce.

A confidential report submitted by the U.N. chief to the Security Council last week said Iran would accept an undeclared cease-fire with Iraq during an inquiry to name the agressor.

The report was made available to The Associated Press by a U.N. source.

Perez de Cuellar told the Security Council that once the party responsible for initiating the war has been identified, "the undeclared cessation of hostilities would be replaced by the declaration of a formal cease-fire."

Iraq invaded Iran in September 1980 following a series of border clashes. Iraq maintains Iran started the war weeks earlier with artillery attacks on border towns.

Interpretation of 1972 missile accord could affect future treaties

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Senate committee says Reagan administration efforts to change the way the United States interprets a 1972 treaty on anti-ballistic missiles could cast a "dark shadow" over Senate consideration of all future treaties.

A report released Sunday by the Foreign Relations Committee warned that the administration's attempt to adopt a new view of the 15-year-old Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty could cause the Senate to be more cautious about ratifying a possible treaty on intermediate-range nuclear forces (INF).

"The administration's theory of treaty-making, having cast a dark shadow over the Senate's consideration of all future treaties, could severely complicate and greatly prolong the committee's consideration of an INF treaty," the 106-page report warns.

While releasing the report, the committee also sent to the Senate floor a resolution, sponsored by Sen. Joseph Biden, D-Del., that rejects the attempt to reinterpret the ABM pact.

"This report underscores the profound constitutional issues which will surround Senate consideration of an INF agreement if the treaty power question is not resolved," Biden said in a statement.

The report was the latest round in a long-running fight between President Reagan and congressional Democrats over the 1972 pact, which limits the variety and type of defenses that each superpower can deploy.

At issue is development of Reagan's Strategic Defense Initiative, known informally as "Star Wars." The administration wants to move from the existing interpretation to a so-called "broad" view of the ABM treaty, which would allow expanded testing of Star Wars.

Reagan has asserted that the executive branch has the right to unilaterally change how a treaty is interpreted, although he says he won't make such a change without consulting Congress.

Last week, however, the Senate split generally along party lines as it voted 58-38 to approve a proposal banning spending for expanded Star Wars tests that violate the existing view of the ABM pact.

Secretary of State George P. Shultz declined to indicate Sunday whether President Reagan would veto the bill if it eventually reaches his desk.

Shultz said on ABC's "This Week With David Brinkley" program that he and Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze discussed the ABM treaty during their meetings last week.

"One was in terms of the things they would permit to be done while within the ABM treaty," he said. "They changed it a little bit, the character of those things. And the other was to say, alternatively, we each agree to abide strictly by the ABM treaty as narrowly defined, during the period that we agree not to withdraw from it."

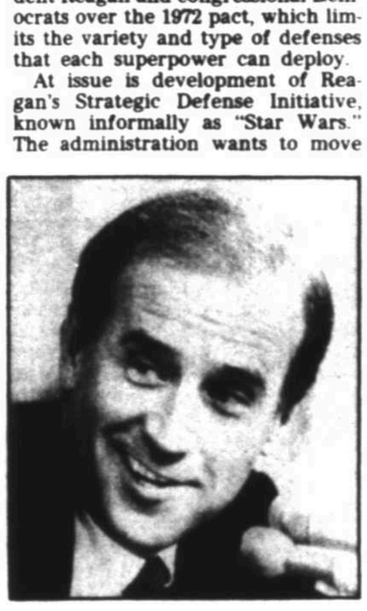

Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., chairman of the Armed Services Committee, said Sunday that the Senate measure merely insists that the Reagan administration stick to the traditional interpretation that it said it would stay with when it sought money for SDI.

Barbados spared majority of tropical storm's force

MIAMI (AP) — Tropical Storm Emily brushed the Caribbean island of Barbados this morning with gale-force winds and heavy rain, then swept on toward St. Vincent, forecasters said.

Barbados was spared the main thrust of the storm, but still received 5 inches of rain and was pummeled by 45 mph winds, according to the National Hurricane Center. Emily's highest sustained winds were clocked at 60 mph.

"Barbados had gale-force winds at 3 a.m. and the storm has moved to the southwest of Barbados. The next (likely landfall) location would be St. Vincent," said forecaster Miles Lawrence.

Tropical storm warnings were posted early today for the southern Caribbean.

At 6 a.m. EDT, Emily's center was only 50 miles east of St. Vincent, at 12 degrees 48 minutes north latitude and 60 degrees 30 minutes west longitude. The storm was moving west-northwest at about 20 mph, Lawrence said.

Emily, the fifth named storm of the 1987 Atlantic hurricane season, began as a depression Sunday morning, but within seven hours exceeded tropical storm-strength winds of 39 mph.

Near-hurricane force gusts were recorded by an Air Force reconnaissance plane sent into the storm Sunday, said forecaster Bob Case, adding that the storm system appeared to be strengthening.

The poorly organized storm about 1,700 miles southeast of Miami was spotted Sept. 14 as an area of disturbed weather off Africa.

Four panel members remain undecided

New York Times News Service

WASHINGTON — After five days of intense questioning of Judge Robert H. Bork, four members of the Senate Judiciary Committee say they are still undecided on whether to vote to confirm his nomination to the Supreme Court.

Both Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa., and Sen. Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz., indicated they were still not persuaded to vote for Bork and voiced concern about changes he has made in his previous positions.

"I think we really have to hear the other witnesses who are coming on," Specter said on the CBS News program "Face the Nation." "There are some very complex questions which have to receive considerable thought. For example, Judge Bork has made significant shifts from his writings to what he testified about."

"I share the same concerns," DeConcini said on the same program. "The judge has made some very strong, what I consider radical, views known over his years of being a judge, and particularly before being a judge. And now he has changed."

Other members of the committee who say they are still undecided are Howell Heflin, Democrat of Alabama, and the Senate majority leader, Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia.

Of the undecided members, Heflin appeared to be the most congenial toward Bork during the hearings. When asked if that indicated a favorable vote, the Heflin said on Saturday that he remained undecided. "When he looks like he's been downtrodden a little bit, I like to perk him up a little bit," he said.

And although throughout the hearings last week Byrd repeatedly told Bork he had yet to make up his mind, Congressional sources and political analysts predicted it would be hard for the Democratic leader to vote for the nomination.

Some analysts noted that the divisions in the committee merely reflect the fact that uhe Bork nomination is still wide open in the full Senate, where estimates place 35 votes both for and against the Bork nomination, with as many as 30 Senators undecided.

Although both sides in the Judiciary Committee could count only five firm votes each, each was claiming benefits from the week's testimony.

Tom C. Korologos, a Republican consultant who is leading the White House lobbying effort for Bork, said Friday that he could "smell" a majority Senate vote for Bork.

He added that although Bork might not have the 60 Senate votes needed to break a filibuster, he expected that possibility would be averted through legislative horse-trading and other tactics.

Korologos and key committee Republicans, like Orrin G. Hatch of Utah, said Bork's testimony had been so impressive that the American people would see there was no basis for the charges that he was racist or antifeminist and would overwhelmingly support his nomination.

Bork supporters were also relieved that even after five days of at times grueling questioning, there were no "blow-ups," and that the "whole notion of Bork being a bomb-thrower, this right-wing ogre, was pretty effectively dissipated," said one supporter who will testify this week.

But the Democrats also saw gains. One big concern was that Bork would be so impressive and persuasive that public opinion would overwhelmingly swing in his favor. According to Democratic aides on the Senate Judiciary Committee, that did not happen.

"At least we did not have another Ollie North up there," said one aide, referring to the outpouring of public sentiment in favor of Lt. Col. Oliver L. North when he testified this summer before the Congressional committee investigating the Iran-contra affair. "That fact that we came out of the week at about the same place we went into the week is a real plus for us."

The opposition, led by the committee chairman, Joseph R. Biden Jr. of Delaware and Edward M. Kennedy of Massachusetts, refuses to predict privately which of the four undecided senators will vote with them. But the opponents concede that the decisions will rest primarily on their evaluation of Bork's testimony, rather than on the upcoming testimony this week.

Still, the Biden camp is expecting to get the most political mileage from civil rights advocates who will be testifying against the Bork nomination on Monday. That group will include William Coleman, Transportation Secretary under President Ford and a Republican; Barbara Jordan, former Democratic representative in Congress from Texas; and Mayor Andrew Young of Atlanta. Also to testify against Bork will be a former Yale Law School colleague, Prof. Burke Marshall.

"I would say that every position that Judge Bork has taken over the last 25 years that have given him the reputation as a conservative has been modified, qualified, abandoned or re-explained," Marshall said.

SCHROEDER

Pat Smothers, president of the Texas Women's Political Caucus, says women are more acceptable as national candidates since Geraldine Ferraro ran for vice president in 1984. Also, Ms. Smothers says, women are begining to give larger political donations, which should work to Schroeder's benefit.

Justice Oscar Mauzy of the Texas Supreme Court, a longtime player in Democratic politics, says Ms. Schroeder has one element that no other Democratic candidate can offer — a sense of humor.

"All these other clowns are so bland," says Mauzy, who has not committed to any candidate. "I've always thought (humor) is a very important part of a candidate's repertoire."

As a feminist, Ms. Schroeder has led the fight for maternity benefits, day care assistance and tax changes to enourage families to stay together. She chides fellow Democrats for letting the Republicans take credit for being the "family values" party.

Ms. Schroeder has challenged the other candidates to write their own federal budget — as she has — so voters will know how each candidate plans to balance it. She calls President Reagan's solution — a balance budget amemdment to the Constitution — a "ploy" and asks who will enforce the amendment if Congress runs deficits.

Line-item veto power for the president also is unnecessay, Ms. Schroeder says. "This plea that he (Reagan) can't balance his budget because he needs a line-item veto is like saying the dog ate me homework," she says. "It's pretty weak."

Besides the gender issue, the chairwoman of the Civil Service subcommittee faces other hurdles. One prominent Texas Democratic operative, who asked not to be named, says the party is looking for a more centrist candidate. "Nominating Pat Schroeder sure isn't going to help me keep Democrats in office in these marginal (state legislative) districts," the veteran campaign worker says.

Ms. Schroeder also has been relatively unsuccessfull in picking up old Gary Hart supporters. When she announced in June her exploratory bid for the White House, Ms. Schroeder said she needed her fellow Coloradoan's backers to help her build a base.

"I think unfortunately a lot of Hart supporters are a little reluctant to commit to anyone," says Ms. Smothers of the Texas Women's Political Caucus. "They're all a little down right now."

Committee Chairman Joseph Biden, D-Del., who previously stated his opposition to Bork's nomination, wrapped up the 3½-hour Saturday session with praise for the nominee as "an honorable man."

"I find you neither a racist nor insensitive," Biden said.

Groups including the National Organization for Women, the National Abortion Rights Action League, the AFL-CIO, the American Civil Liberties Union and the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights oppose Bork's nomination.

Groups including Concerned Women for America, the American Conservative Union and the National Right to Work Committee are urging confirmation.

President Reagan called Bork after his testimony ended Saturday to commend him on his testimony.

White House spokesman Mark Weinberg quoted Reagan as telling the judge, "You demonstrated yet again your qualifications to serve on the highest court."

The president added that phone calls to the White House are running 6 to 1 in Bork's favor.

Iran resumes attacks; Iraqi jets fire on vessel

WORLD

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — The tanker war flared in the Persian Gulf as Iran resumed attacks on shipping and Iraq reported its jet fighters fired on a vessel off Iran's vital Kharg Island oil terminal.

Meanwhile, Arab League foreign ministers meeting in Tunisia scheduled a Nov. 8 summit meeting in Jordan to discuss the 7-year-old Iran-Iraq war and possible sanctions against Iran.

A military spokesman in Baghdad, the Iraqi capital, said Iraqi jet fighters attacked a "large maritime target," which usually means a ship, off Iran's Kharg Island oil terminal in the northern gulf Sunday night.

The planes scored "accurate and effective hits" on the unidentified ship, said the spokesman, who was quoted by the Iraqi News Agency, monitored in Cyprus. There was no word on casualties, and no independent confirmation of the hit.

Earlier Sunday, Iranians in a speedboat fired machine guns at the 39,915-ton Saudi Arabian tanker Petroship B, in Iran's first attack on shipping in 10 days.

There were no reported injuries and the ship sustained minor damage, said a source close to the Saudi ship's owner, Petromin Tankers and Mineral Shipping Co.

The attack occurred in the Strait of Hormuz at the southern end of the gulf. The Petroship B brought its load of kerosene and diesel oil to Jidda, a Saudi port on the Red Sea, said the source, speaking on condition of anonymity.

A report by the British Broadcasting Corp. said the sea raiders were Revolutionary Guards, irregular fighters loyal to Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini.

Since the Iran-Iraq war spilled over into the Persian Gulf in 1984, hundreds of ships have been attacked in the waterway. The Reagan administration agreed to reflag 11 Kuwaiti tankers after Iran last year began focusing on that country's commerce, charging Kuwait was aiding Iraq.

Iran and Iraq had refrained from ship attacks in the gulf during the peace mission of U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar, which concluded Tuesday.

In Tunis, foreign ministers or representatives of 21 Arab League countries issued a communique Sunday emphasizing that the warring nations should adhere to the U.N. Security Council's July 20 resolution calling for a cease-fire.

The Arab League countries generally support fellow member Iraq, which has said it will accept the cease-fire plan if Iran does. But Libya, Algeria and Syria, political enemies of Iraq, have opposed action against Persian Iran.

At a meeting in August, the ministers had discussed possibly breaking relations with Iran if it did not abide by the truce.

Iranian President Ali Khamenei is expected to spell out Iran's position on the cease-fire when he addresses the U.N. General Assembly in New York on Tuesday.

In Moscow, the Soviet Communist Party daily Pravda accused the United States and its Western allies Sunday of using the Iran-Iraq war to turn the gulf into a practice area for naval exercises.

"The Persian Gulf is being turned into a site for all sorts of NATO naval exercises in conditions that are almost akin to combat," Pravda said.

A new U.S. military command officially took over U.S. forces in the Persian Gulf area Sunday. Rear Adm. Dennis M. Brooks assumed charge of the new Joint Task Force Middle East.

The task force includes the 11-ship Middle East Force in the gulf and two supporting battle groups in the Arabian Sea, south of the gulf. The two groups are headed by the aircraft carrier Ranger and the reactivated World War II battleship Missouri.

Superstitious elders, accustomed to bad weather, had interpreted the pope's failure to arrive three years ago as a sign of God's anger against the Dene.

It was the final stop for the pope after a 10-day tour of the United States. He flew home to Rome Sunday night.

Hess' death draws flood of letters

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — The death of Rudolf Hess provoked a flood of letters to newspapers and magazines expressing feelings ranging from condemnation of the former Hitler deputy to descriptions of him as a national hero.

Hess

The letters echoed the passions, contradictions and complexities of a national debate that continues to trouble this country more than 40 years after the end of World War II.

Hess committed suicide in West Berlin's Spandau Prison on Aug. 17. He was Adolf Hitler's former deputy and the last prominent Nazi imprisoned in West Germany for war crimes.

Hess had increasingly become a catalyst for renewed soul-searching about the nation's collective guilt for crimes committed during the Nazi era.

Many letters denounced the Allies for not releasing the 93-year-old Hess when his health began to fail after nearly five decades behind bars.

"Much is written about torture and human rights," Maria Buske of Berlin wrote to West Berlin's Morgenpost, "But where were they in Hess's life? Forty-two years of solitary confinement-...dangerous criminals are pardoned after 20 years."

For many, the issue was not whether Hess was guilty of war crimes, but whether the Allies should have shown mercy for an old and sick man, confined to solitary confinement in a prison that existed only for him.

Ingeborg Heller of Berlin wrote to the tabloid Morgenpost: "Hess was made to pay for all of the crimes the Nazis committed without hope of mercy. I don't want to know how many Nazis, who are equally as guilty, still enjoy their freedom around the world."

Hess was captured after flying to Scotland in 1941 in a self-proclaimed bid to end World War II. He was the lone prisoner at Spandau after 1966.

The United States, Britain, France and the Soviet Union took turns guarding Hess at the prison. Although the three Western powers indicated they were ready to release him on humanitarian grounds, the Soviet Union refused repeated pleas.

Many writers, however, passionately attacked the notion that Hess was a victim.

"Hess was not victim, he was a criminal," said a letter by Ulrike Kraemer in the Bielefelder Tagebiatt. "Hess was not only Hitler's deputy, he was a co-author of the Nuremberg race laws. He helped develop the (Hitler) cult in the Third Reich to perfection."

Others noted that Hess had never repudiated his Nazi past and therefore deserved no mercy. They said Hess's confinement was necessary as an example for all those who would forget or deny the actrocities committed by the Nazis.

His defenders were equally passionate.

"Hess is and will remain a great German," Wilhelm Hoernicke of suburban Frankfurt town of Eschborn wrote in a letter to the nationally circulated weekly magazine Der Spiegel. "Now we have a real martyr who stands for all Germans who have had to submit to an evil humiliation campaign since 1945."

"There is no excuse for the horrible way the Allies treated Hess," Rolf Plewka of Recklinghausen wrote in Spiegel's Sept. 7 edition. "Hess is dead, but his name will never die.... He will go down in history as a martyr for peace."

Canadian pilgrimage has religious, political roles

FORT SIMPSON, Northwest Territories (AP) — Receiving Holy Communion from the pope was a tearful experience for tribal elders, but John Paul II's colorful pilgrimage to this Indian outpost was also highly political.

Leaders of Canada's half a million Indians and Inuit (Eskimos) are locked in dispute with the federal and provincial governments over native rights, including comprehensive claims for land and resources.

Hours before arriving Sunday, the pope strengthened his address to reinforce native demands for self-government.

He also affirmed their right to a "land base and adequate resources necessary for developing a viable economy."

"Every time this statement is made, it helps," said George Erasmus, president of the Indian Assembly of First Nations.

The pope was repeating sentiments he expressed in Yellowknife three years ago when fog prevented him from speaking to assembled Indians in Fort Simpson. But native leaders have suffered setbacks since then, and made several trips to Rome to urge the pontiff to reschedule his visit. The pope returned to Rome this morning.

In March, negotiations on spelling out aboriginal rights in the Constitution broke down and no further sessions are planned.

The Northwest Territories is taking the federal government to court over a separate constitutional accord that would make it harder for the vast region — with only 50,000 inhabitants — to become a province.

"I hope (Prime Minister) Brian Mulroney and the (provincial) premiers were watching," said Nick Sibbeston, a half-Indian Meti who is leader of the Territories' government.

He said the pope's four-hour visit, which drew some 4,000 members of the Dene Indian nation, was much more political than spiritual.

"It was a world stage for a few hours for the Dene and aboriginal peoples across Canada," Sibbeston said.

French missionaries brought Roman Catholicism to caribou country in the 1850s, and the papal visit was intended to boost a church facing decline because of a lack of priests and disinterest among youth.

The pope stepped right into a controversy when he praised past and present missionaries as "best friends" with respect for Indian customs.

Since the 1950s, Indians have been trying to repair the damage done by missionary schools where natives were punished for speaking their own languages and taught to emulate white culture.

The pope apologized for past errors in his remarks three years ago, and again last week when addressing Indians in Arizona, but he omitted the sentiment Sunday.

"The pain is still there and we would have liked some recognition of it," said Erasmus.

He said the drumming that welcomed the pope to a campground overlooking the Mackenzie River was once prohibited.

"They had a missionary who was going out burning those drums," Erasmus recalled.

For many of the Indians and Inuit from more than 20 settlements across the northern third of Canada, the chance to see, touch and take Communion from the pope brought tears.

"He lifted up our hearts," said 59-year-old Mary Redhead, a blind woman from Sturgeon Lake, Alberta, who was blessed by the pontiff.

Greg Noltcho of Saskatchewan said: "It's like greeting Jesus Christ on earth."

There was a moment of magic as the pontiff approached the 55-foot tepee where he celebrated Mass in vestments covered by a Dene caribou hide.

It had rained heavily before his arrival and Indians wearing parkas and traditional fringed jackets pulled plastic sheets over their heads for cover.

But with his appearance, the clouds suddenly lifted and a giant rainbow appeared.

Pope John Paul II returns to Rome airport

ROME (AP) — Pope John Paul II returned to Rome Monday following a 10-day trip to the United States and a stop in Canada.

The TWA 747, flying from Edmonton, Alberta, touched down at Leonardo da Vinci shortly before 11 a.m. local time.

The pontiff made no remarks to reporters, but in a message over the loudspeakers at the airport he thanked the journalists who had traveled with him.

Opposition newspaper to resume publication in Managua

New York Times News Service

MANAGUA, Nicaragua — The opposition newspaper La Prensa, closed down by the Sandinista government 15 months ago, has received permission to resume publication free of censorship, its publisher said today.

"We will be on the streets by Oct. 1," Violeta Barrios De Chamorro, the publisher, said as she left a Roman Catholic mass in Managua.

The government's decision to allow La Prensa to reopen is its most substantial step to date in the peace process that was set in motion by the signing of an accord in Guatemala last month.

Under terms of the accord, agreed by five Central American presidents, Nicaragua is required to restore press and political freedoms and civil liberties and to grant an amnesty by Nov. 7. The accord also calls for an end to aid for insurgent groups, including the anti-Sandinista rebels, in the region.

A Sandinista communique released in Costa Rica said La Prensa would be allowed to reopen "without any restrictions other than those imposed by the responsible practice of journalism."

Costa Rican Foreign Minister Rodrigo Madrigal Nieto, who was in Managua over the weekend, aided in the talks that led to the Sandinista announcement.

The Nicaraguan television reported that Madrigal brought Chamorro together with Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega Saavadra on Saturday.

Madrigal, who was attending a meeting of Central American foreign ministers here, said on his return to Costa Rica that the decision to reopen La Prensa was "one of the most transcendant actions taken in support of the Guatemala agreements."

According to Madrigal, no deal was struck between Chamorro and Ortega. "There is no condition whatsoever, nor any kind of commitments," he said.

La Prensa was ordered to close down on June 26, 1986, following a Congressional vote supporting new United States aid to the Nicaraguan rebels, known as contras. Ortega charged that La Prensa, whose owners strongly opposed Sandinista rule, was functioning as a tool of American policy.

He also accused the newspaper of accepting money from the Central Intelligence Agency, an allegation editors denied.

For four years before it was closed, La Prensa was subject to prior censorship. Official Government policy was to prevent publication of news about military matters or economic emergencies, but in practice much material criticla of the regime was cut even thought it did not touch on those areas.

Aquino reorganizes Filipino military

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — President Corazon Aquino began to reshuffle the military today, naming an "anti-coup force" commander for Manila and a new military spokesman.

Meanwhile, several thousand people gathered at a major intersection in suburban Quezon City today to protest Saturday's unsolved killing of Lean Alejandro, 27, secretary general of a leftist coalition called the New Patriotic Alliance.

Fighting between government forces and Communist rebels blocked rail service from Manila to southeastern Luzon and the military said it thwarted a plan to blow up a foreign freighter on Mindanao island.

Mrs. Aquino conferred Monday with Defense Secretary Rafael Ileto, Chief of Staff Gen. Fidel Ramos and other senior commanders. Afterward, the military announced that Brig. Gen. Ramon Montano, deputy chief of staff for operations, was named commander of the National Capital Regional Defense Command.

The command was established as an "anti-coup force" to control all armed forces units in the Manila area. The government is trying to strengthen and streamline the Manila area armed forces so they can respond better to future coup attempts.

Before he was forced out last week, Aquino advisor Joker Arroyo had complained that Manila area forces failed to respond adequately to presidential orders to strike at mutineers holding radio and television stations during a failed coup last month.

Demonstrators, dressed to represent, from left, Corazon Aquino, "Uncle Sam" and a military terrorist, lead a rally today in Manila. They were protesting alleged militarism and the ambush-slaying of leftist leader Leandro Alejandro.

AP Laserphoto

The reshuffle included the replacement of the military's chief spokesman, Col. Honesto Isleta, who was accused of understating Mrs. Aquino's role in quelling the Aug. 28 coup attempt, which left at least 53 people dead and hundreds wounded.

He was replaced by Col. Oscar Florendo, the statement said. Ramos said other changes would be announced later.

Montano, the new chief of staff, had been in charge of internal security and police units in Manila and its suburbs. He was removed in January after troops opened fire on protesters demanding land reform, killing at least 12 people.

Demonstrators in Quezon City planned to march today toward the presidential palace, but organizers dropped the idea to avert a clash with security forces.

In a statement distributed to the protesters, the Communist-dominated National Democratic Front said Alejandro's murder was a sign that leftists "threaten the entire reactionary classes and the U.S.-Aquino regime."

"The seeds of a provisional revolutionary government have begun to sprout in many areas of the countryside," the statement said.

Many Filipinos have accused the United States of pressuring Mrs. Aquino into granting the armed forces a greater role in national policy. U.S. diplomats deny the charge.

Police said they had no leads in the killing of Alejandro, a popular former student leader. Gunmen firing from a van shot him dead as he returned from a news conference in which he had called for protests against the government to protest military influence.

Authorities said troops were on alert to prevent provocateurs from using today's "indignation rally" to stir up new violence. Schools and colleges near the presidential palace closed for the day.

Alejandro's assassination raised tensions in a country still reeling from the Aug. 28 mutiny and the Cabinet shakeup that followed.

Today is the 15th anniversary of President Ferdinand Marcos' imposition of martial law and newspaper commentators urged calm so that the government is not prompted to curtail civil liberties. Marcos was forced into Hawaiian exile in a February 1986 civilian-military uprising that brought Mrs. Aquino to power.

Railway officials said service from Manila to the heavily populated Bicol region of southeastern Luzon 120 miles away was suspended because of clashes with Communist rebels near the town of Del Gallego.

Authorities said suspected Communist rebels blasted a bridge near the town Sunday. It was not clear whether the target was a rail or highway bridge.

In Cagayan de Oro, 300 miles south of Manila, police said they defused a powerful bomb affixed to a Panamanian-registered freighter, the Coral Reefer, minutes before it was to sail for Japan Sunday with a cargo of pineapples.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Winnie Mandela fights broadcast of TV movie

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Winnie Mandela is upset that no one sought her permission or advice on a television movie about her marriage to jailed African National Congress leader Nelson Mandela, her lawyer says.

She is trying to prevent further broadcasts of the British-produced "Mandela," said the attorney, Ismail Ayob.

The film, broadcast on Home Box Office cable television in the United States Sunday night, is to be televised this week in about 30 countries, but not in South Africa.

The 2¼-hour film was made in Zimbabwe last year by TVS Television. It stars two Americans — Alfre Woodard as Mrs. Mandela and Danny Glover as Nelson Mandela.

The script, written by South African-born playwright Ronald Harwood, depicts the couples' relationship before and after Mandela was imprisoned in 1962. Mandela, 69, is serving a life sentence for sabotage and conspiring to overthrow the South African government.

Wildlife area prepared

CANCUN, Mexico (AP) — Mexico has taken steps to protect a 1.2 million acre southeastern area rich in birds, marine life, mammals, mangroves and tropical forests.

Known as Sian Ka'an, the region earlier this year was declared a reserve, a designation that carries general limitations on hunting, timber-cutting and construction.

It also is listed as one of 271 biosphere reserves in 70 countries under a United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization program to protect examples of different types of ecosystems.

Sian Ka'an, meaning "enchantment from the sky," was the ancient Maya Indian name for Quintana Roo, the state where the reserve is located.

Soviet toys criticized

MOSCOW (AP) — Dolls whose hair falls out or whose legs don't match. Chemistry sets that can send a budding young scientist to the hospital. A toy camel that, for no apparent reason, has stripes like a zebra.

Such are some of the poorly designed and shoddily manufactured toys now being created for Soviet boys and girls, Pravda lamented Sunday.

"You rarely find so much junk, lack of taste and technical ineptitude as you do in the toy sector," the Communist Party daily said in a sharp criticism of goods on sale in Soviet toy stores.

The production of toys, like the consumer sector as a whole, suffered in the Soviet Union for decades from the accent placed on rapid industrialization, the building of dams and factories and the production of steel, cement and electricity.

Hirohito surgery slated

TOKYO (AP) — Japan's 86-year-old Emperor Hirohito, suffering from intestinal trouble, will undergo surgery Tuesday at the Imperial Household Agency's hospital, the agency announced.

Tomohiko Tomita, the agency's grand steward, told a televised news conference today that the emperor began complaining in August of stomach discomfort, and doctors "found there was an obstacle to prevent passage in the intestine."

Hirohito, the world's longest-reigning monarch, decided that Japan would surrender in 1945, ending World War II.

The Imperial Household Agency handles the affairs of the emperor and his family.

Gorbachev hospitalized

HAMBURG, West Germany (AP) — A West German newspaper reported today that Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev had to be hospitalized during his Black Sea vacation after suffering serious food poisoning.

The mass-circulation newspaper Bild, citing no sources for its story, said the Kremlin leader may have been the target of a poisoning attempt.

There was no Soviet comment on the report today. Gorbachev's motorcade was seen traveling to the Kremlin this morning.

Cuomo acts as 'envoy' of Jews visiting Uman

New York Times News Service

MOSCOW — Gov. Mario M. Cuomo arrived Sunday in the Soviet Union on his first diplomatic mission, the unexpected envoy of some travelers from Brooklyn.

On a commercial jet out of Frankfurt carrying him on the last leg of his flight here from New York, Cuomo was besieged by a group of 20 Hasidic Jews from Brooklyn asking him to intervene in a dispute with the Soviet government.

The Hasidim were going to Uman, near Kiev, to visit the grave of a rabbi. They believe that such visits, especially during Rosh ha-Shanah, the Jewish New Year that begins Wednesday night, bring success in life. They want to be able to spend nights in Uman and not have to return each evening to Kiev, as the Soviet government currently requires.

Cuomo, who had been busy talking to reporters about the more dramatic issue of nuclear weapons as part of an effort by him to display competence in foreign affairs, promised to raise the Uman issue later this week in his meetings with Soviet officials.

For the most part, it was a day of settling in and resting before a fuller day Monday of meeting with Soviet officials. Cuomo said he would meet Wednesday with Anatoly F. Dobrynin, the Communist Party's senior foreign policy adviser. Dobrynin frequently meets with visiting American politicians.

The governor and his wife, Matilda, were greeted at the Moscow airport by Vladimir M. Vinogradov, the foreign minister of the Russian Republic.

Vinogradov said he was delighted that the rainy skies earlier in the day had cleared before the governor's arrival.

"Maybe everything has changed for the better," Cuomo said, an allusion to the recent Soviet-American agreement in principle to conclude a treaty eliminating medium- and shorter-range nuclear missiles.

On the plane, Cuomo took note that his efforts to reach out into foreign policy were fueling speculation that he would run for president. He repeated that he was not a candidate, holding up a sign he had scribbled on a sheet of looseleaf paper: "I'm not running. I'm strolling."

Dare To Challenge This Winner?

Bob Jones was the overall winner of the MRT-YMCA ½ Marathon Run and Relay last year. Jones' time of 1:15.34 was only 1.81 minutes behind the record set in 1985 by Phil Stenforth of Austin. Last year 234 runners participated in the race. The 1987 Run and Relay should have a substantially larger number of entries because the RRCA has sanctioned the MRT-YMCA ½ Marathon Run and Relay as the Texas State Championship. Bob Jones is out to recapture this title and break the record set by Stenforth. Challenge him on November 7, 1987!

Bush eyes Robertson successes

By JONATHAN WOLMAN

An Analysis

WASHINGTON (AP) — George Bush, keeping a stiff vice presidential upper lip despite some sobering campaign news, was in Milwaukee, Omaha and goodness knows where else last week on a meal-by-meal fund-raising journey.

By Thursday in Little Rock, Ark., he seemed to be getting a little giddy.

Leaving the Pulaski County Courthouse, the vice president spotted a clump of potential voters. In the wink of an eye, Bush bounded over an orange-and-white police barricade, extended his mitts and started shaking hands, two at a time.

"Are you coming back to Razorback country?" one woman shouted.

"Wooo-pig-sooie," Bush called back in his best hog-calling imitation. With that, he gave an exuberant thumbs up and his many-car motorcade headed for the airport. Next stop: dinner in Indianapolis.

The week began inauspiciously for Bush.

— First, the vice president, who has been leading the GOP field in presidential polls, had his clock cleaned in an Iowa GOP straw poll, finishing third — third! TV evangelist Pat Robertson got 33.6 percent of the 4,200 votes cast by people who paid $25 apiece to attend the Iowa GOP event. Sen. Bob Dole got 25 percent, and Bush 22 percent.

— Then, Dole's charismatic wife, Secretary of Transportation Elizabeth Dole, stepped down from the Reagan Cabinet and said she'd commence to setting up shop for her husband in her native South.

— Next, Bush forces were rebuffed in an effort to boost their standing in Michigan, where Robertson and Rep. Jack Kemp of New York have been outmaneuvering Bush in the state which chooses the first delegates to the 1988 Republican nominating convention.

Robertson also has made strong showings in South Carolina and Florida.

"I've won four out of four and if that isn't electable I don't know what is," he said in response to claims that even if nominated he could not win.

Bush's campaign manager, Lee Atwater, called Robertson's back-to-back victories in Iowa and Michigan "just a blip on the radar screen." But Bush sounded properly concerned as he took to the fund-raising trail.

In Omaha, the vice president told reporters, "We've got some work to do. The message to me is just work doubly hard. I think we'll do fine, but it's a good lesson."

The vice president — due to make his candidacy official next month — hasn't been doing a lot of factory-gate campaigning in 1987. Instead he often goes from fund-raising lunch to fund-raising dinner, rolling up a campaign war chest he puts at about $11.5 million.

Last week's campaign workload:

Monday, Sept. 14, fund-raising luncheon in Milwaukee; fund-raising dinner in Cincinnati.

Tuesday, fund-raising buffet in Omaha.

Wednesday, "Ask George Bush" forum in Whitefield, N.H.; fund-raising dinner in Garrison, Md.

Thursday, fund-raising luncheon in Little Rock; fund-raising dinner in Indianapolis.

Friday, fund-raising dinner, Washington, D.C.

In Little Rock, about 120 people paid $500 each for seafood gumbo and veal, a meal Bush described as "very expensive but very wonderful."

Bush said he wasn't intimidated by Elizabeth Dole.

"They've been asking me, hey, what about Liddy Dole, now that she's free to campaign," he said. "I say, look, I'll put Barbara Bush up against her or anybody else across this country for being a secret weapon."

"Nobody's going to out-hustle us. Nobody's going to do more in the precincts or across these states than I am. And we've got to go into the early states so that we come out respectably, and then move into Super Tuesday," Bush said.

That's the pro-Bush strategy. Here's an anti-Bush scenario:

Robertson beats him in Michigan, where the evangelist's followers have had stunning success in a state where moderate Republicans like Bush have dominated for years. Dole, the Kansas farm boy, beats him in Iowa. Somebody else — who knows, maybe Kemp — beats him in New Hampshire, where Bush stumbled in his 1980 effort to challenge Ronald Reagan.

The Republican race is thus thrown wide open, except Bush is branded a loser before all those millions of dollars can do him any good on Super Tuesday, March 8.

Cocaine-filled condoms found in man's stomach

NEW YORK (AP) — Doctors found 46 condoms filled with cocaine inside the stomach of a man who sought treatment for severe abdominal pain and constipation about a week after he returned from Colombia, police said.

Fidel Figueroa, 31, of the Bronx, went to Lincoln Hospital's emergency room Saturday. X-rays led doctors to operate, and they discovered the condoms and called police, said Hugh Barry, a police department spokesman.

Police believe he swallowed the cocaine-filled condoms during a recent trip to Colombia in order to smuggle the drug into the United States, Barry said. He apparently hoped the condoms would pass through his system.

He went to Colombia Sept. 8 and returned five days later.

Army adjusts aim of recruitment advertisement

NATION

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Army, seeking new recruits in the wake of a dwindling pool of potential applicants and increased competition from the private sector, is placing new emphasis on character virtues in ads that previously focused on excitement and high-tech weaponry.

And some of the other armed forces, struggling with the same problems, have, like the Army, hired new ad agencies and may also be modifying their recruiting campaigns, Pentagon and ad industry officials say.

Young & Rubicam, a major Madison Avenue ad agency, won the $100 million Army ad contract earlier this year, inheriting the "Be all you can be" campaign, which was widely regarded in the ad industry as extraordinarily successful.

Army Maj. Greg Rixon describes the new campaign as "evolutionary rather than revolutionary."

In Young & Rubicam's first Army ad, previewed earlier this summer, the "Be all you can be" theme is retained, but gone is the old tag line "Find your future in the Army." In its place is "Get an edge on life," a slogan that will be retained in two more Y&R ads now being tested and scheduled for release in January, according to William Green, senior vice president at the agency.

"What we're trying to say is that while we believe the campaign we inherited was a very sound one, and very successful for the Army over a period of almost seven years, that it was time to move it to a new plateau," he said in a recent interview.

Green said ad executives, in an attempt to "provide added rationale and reason for the youth of America to consider the Army as an option," are trying to move beyond the single-focus Army ads that told of the high-tech training and excitement the military provides.

The new ads, he said, will portray the Army "as a place where the youth can learn about those kinds of qualities that will contribute ultimately to their long-term success in life" like self-discipline, maturity and character.

The company's first Army ad is a far cry from the fast-paced ads that boasted "We do more before 9 a.m. than most people do all day." The new ad portrays a young serviceman patrolling the Berlin Wall.

"The way I see it, the world's a tough place, and to succeed you need every little edge you can get," the soldier says. "That's why I joined the Army. Oh, not just for the college money they're giving me, but for something else that's gonna help me stick to it through the whole four years. ...These three years didn't just get me ready for college, they got me ready for life."

The "Sentry" ad also focused on the concept of giving something back to the country, but Green said in future ads "forays into societal benefits will be infrequent. ...We believe it is more motivating at this point in time in the campaign to try to stick with those personal, internal benefits."

Military advertising is inherently difficult, says Robert Ravitz, senior vice president of Grey Advertising Inc. and account manager of the Pentagon's joint recruiting program.

"We call it deep sell," said Ravitz. "You can buy a tube of toothpaste and if you don't like it you can throw it away. If you're recruited in the military, it's two to four years of your life."

And the selling job has grown increasingly difficult.

"The mission is becoming a lot more challenging," Green said. "The population base of the prime recruiting age is shrinking."

Dole, Bush, others address GOP women

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — "I like Bush," Carol Elmquist said. "I wish you could take him and give him a charisma transplant."

She didn't have much hope that could happen, so the West Palm Beach woman flashed a Dole sticker Sunday to indicate that Senate Republican leader Bob Dole of Kansas was her choice for the 1988 GOP presidential nomination.

Dole, Vice President George Bush and four other contenders for that nomination addressed the biennial convention of the National Federation of Republican Women.

In addition to Bush and Dole, the GOP women heard from Rep. Jack Kemp of New York, former Gov. Pete du Pont of Delaware, former secretary of state Alexander M. Haig Jr. and television evangelist Pat Robertson.

With 140,000 members, the federation describes itself as the largest women's political organization in the country and it is a prized source of campaign volunteers. In 1986, according to federation officials, its members worked a total of 4,375,000 hours on Republican campaigns.

Judy Hughes, president of the federation, called the women "practical politicians" more interested in finding a winner than in ideology.

The federation is one women's political group that does not get involved in discussions of the Equal Rights Amendment or abortion.

"We do not take a stand, like a vote, on ERA or abortion because the strength of our organization depends on unity, and our organization would be split on those two issues," Mrs. Hughes said.

Federation members are Republican Party establishment and are inclined to support the vice president. Mrs. Hughes estimated that a poll of the federation on presidential preference would probably reflect surveys showing Bush favored by about 50 percent of Republicans.

Random discussions with those attending the convention found few expressing support for Robertson, Kemp or Haig.

Asked if they thought there was much support for Robertson, several of the GOP women, referred to him as a preacher and said they would not support him.

"He's kind of adversarial," Ms. Elmquist said of Haig, shortly after he spoke.

A Nevada delegate didn't like Kemp's background as a professional football player although she was an ardent supporter of former actor Ronald Reagan.

Gov. Kay Orr of Nebraska told the convention that talk of "women's issues" was "behind the times."

But the men who found themselves addressing an audience of nearly 2,500 female political actvists whose support they want for their presidential campaigns did not ignore "women's issues."

Bush and Robertson said they thought it was time women got equal pay for equal work and the audience indicated warm agreement with that concept.

But Robertson also suggested he wasn't entirely comfortable with the growing movement of women with children into the work force. The television evangelist said inflation had forced many such women into the job market and he added that after paying expenses such as child care, clothing and transportation, the average women was clearing only $1,800 a year.

Asked later where he got that figure, Robertson said he wasn't sure. He conceded there were many highly paid women and said the $1,800 net might apply to secretaries and women working at jobs paying close to minimum wage levels.

Dole drew repeated applause during a highly personal account of his background.

After saying he didn't much like to talk about himself, the senator added, "People have to know who you are."

LaRouche fraud-conspiracy trial opens

BOSTON (AP) — Lyndon H. LaRouche saw himself and his followers as "saviors of Western civilization," entitled to anything they could steal, the government said as a $1 million fraud and conspiracy case against them came up for trial.

Jury selection was scheduled to begin today in U.S. District Court in the case against the political extremist, five of his organizations and seven supporters.

They are accused of plotting to finance LaRouche's 1984 presidential campaign by illegally charging credit card accounts and securing big loans with no intention of repaying them.

"LaRouche would frequently state that most people were 'muck' who did not deserve their money," the government alleged in a 67-page outline of its case.

He "would repeatedly state that people with money did not deserve to keep their money" and that he and his National Caucus of Labor Committees "were deserving of anybody's money they could get their hands on given the fact that he and defendant NCLC were the 'saviors of Western civilization.'"

LaRouche's attorney, Odin Anderson, has asked that LaRouche be allowed to miss some of the trial so that he can campaign for the 1988 Democratic presidential nomination.

The direction of the government's case could hinge on a ruling from Judge Robert E. Keeton on whether the acting U.S. attorney, Frank McNamara, has authority to grant immunity to witnesses, a right reserved usually for the U.S. attorney.

McNamara had been acting U.S. attorney, with the power to petition for immunity, pending Senate confirmation, but his 120-day appointment expired last month.

Attorney General Edwin Meese reappointed him on an interim basis, but judges here have refused to honor that move.

Diet Pill Sweeping U.S. Advertisement

New Super "FatBuster" Lose Weight - No Dieting

SALT LAKE CITY, UT - An amazing new super "FatBuster" pill trademarked CalStop has recently been perfected that reportedly "guarantees" weight losses of 10, 20, 50 pounds or more while allowing you to "eat as much as you want of your favorite foods until you achieve your ideal weight and figure!"

CalStop, the FatBuster, does all the work with NO starvation "diet menus" to follow, NO calorie counting, NO exercise and NO hunger pangs. The FatBuster is absolutely safe. It contains no stimulants or amphetamines. No harmful side effects have been reported.

Scientifically Proven

In a carefully controlled "double-blind" clinical study, doctors found that every single person who took the FatBuster formulation lost a substantial amount of weight. These dramatic results have been scientifically verified and are published in the prestigious British Journal of Nutrition as follows: "Bodyweight was significantly reduced during the study even though patients were specifically asked not to alter their dietary habits."

Doctor Endorsed

Dr. J.B. Dorius, a public health M.D., states: "The FatBuster bonds with food preventing absorption of a substantial portion of the calories, forcing the body to burn fat, flab and cellulite for energy." Now you can eat and lose weight automatically, without willpower and without dieting! No matter how many times you have tried to lose weight and failed before, you will reach your weight loss goal with the FatBuster. It's guaranteed!

Here are some samples of the glowing reports of easy and fast weight loss from formerly overweight people:

Volunteer military serving nation well

When the United States abandoned the draft and adopted the All-Volunteer Force 14 years ago, critics charged that the reform would erode the nation's military readiness. Specifically, the naysayers said the services would be dominated by minorities and the culturally disadvantaged. To the contrary, the AVF currently is comprised of a cross-section of capable young persons who are performing their duties in an exceptional manner.

A statistical breakdown of the four branches shows why the Department of Defense is particularly high on both the number and the quality of recruits.

The Army is enjoying its most successful recruiting year ever. Approximately 91 percent of its recruits are high-school graduates, compared with 75 percent of the overall youth population. Nearly two-thirds of the recruits rank in the upper echelons in the armed-forces aptitude test. That quality translates into a better fighting force because the Army is spending less time on disciplinary problems and more time training troops.

Similarly, the Navy is having no problems filling its ranks with talented young persons. Approximately 90 percent of its recruits have high-school diplomas, and most of them score well on the armed-forces tests. Not surprisingly, the likelihood of these well-trained sailors getting into trouble is far less today than it was 10 years ago.

Nearly 98 percent of Marine recruits are high-school graduates and their success in the aptitude tests mirrors that of the Army and the Navy. Likewise, the Corps reports a sharp downturn in discipline problems during the last 10 years, which bears witness to the higher caliber of its recruits.

The Air Force, which has never had a recruiting problem, boasts a 99 percent high-school completion rate among its enlistees. As one of the more specialized of the services, the USAF has an extensive training program for men and women and can afford to be quite selective in its recruits.

Moreover, service retention programs continue to be successful, with all branches reporting a steady increase in re-enlistments. Of course, persons in technical specialties, particularly fliers, are frequently lured into the private sector once their tour of duty is completed. Nevertheless, recent increases in military pay and benefits, combined with a resurgence in patriotism, have made service life more attractive than it was during the 1970s.

The ability of the military services to attract and retain quality volunteers depends to a large degree on economic conditions and the pool of youth available for active duty. Accordingly, the various branches have mounted an aggressive recruiting campaign to meet their quotas in order to counter the declining number of 18-year-olds forecast through the mid-1990s. Although the percentage of blacks has increased somewhat in all of the services, whites still account for approximately 75 percent of the recruits.

The success of the All-Volunteer Force notwithstanding, there still are those who would bring back the draft. Sen. Ernest Hollings, D-S.C., has introduced a bill to that effect, contending that citizenship carries with it certain burdens as well as benefits. We are all for citizens meeting their responsibilities, but conscription makes no sense when the four branches are flush with highly qualified and motivated volunteers.

Our national security is greatly enhanced by these capable men and women who want to serve their country. Congress, for its part, should ensure that they are fairly compensated for their service.

Another View:

Trusting government

A bipartisan group commissioned a Gallup Poll recently on public attitudes toward local, state and federal government, and the answers were clear-cut. Voters trust their local government the most and Washington the least, with the state government in between. Though, the respondents probably didn't think of it that way, they were confirming that federalism is alive and well.

The nation's founders took great care to preserve competing political entities within the United States. They granted certain powers to the federal government and reserved all other powers to the states or people. The states were expected to act as a check and balance on the central government laboratories for political economic and social experimentation. If their experiments were ill-advised, as they often are, at least the damage would be limited. If they worked well, other states — and the federal government — could learn from them.

States, in turn, grant certain powers to their political subdivisions, such as townships, cities and counties. This is mostly for administrative convenience, but it also encourages competition within the states themselves on taxes, schools and other matters.

The "Federalist Papers," written to argue the case for adoption of the new Constitution, whose bicentennial we are now observing, reasoned that state and local politicians would be more trusted because they are closer to the people. The Gallup Poll, commissioned by the U.S. Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations, found exactly that.

Of the 1,044 Americans polled, 37 percent said they have the most trust in local government, 22 percent in state government and 19 percent in the federal government.

Their view of taxes is consistent with that. Asked whether federal, state or local taxes were the least, 30 percent chose the federal income tax, 12 percent the state income tax and 24 percent the local property tax. Interestingly, unhappiness with the federal income tax actually declined 7 percentage points since 1978, possibly a reflection of the tax cuts and reforms that have taken place during the 1980s.

Americans like their government close to home, where they can keep an eye on it, though voters understand that government isn't to be greatly trusted in any case.

When considering the checks and balances built into our constitutional system, we tend to think of the separation of powers within the federal government. We should also remember the crucial checks and balances built into the federal system as a whole. It's a work of art and the public knows it.

Evidence implies coverup in VA probe

WASHINGTON — Veterans Administration documents indicate that Administrator Thomas Turnage was urged by subordinates last November to contact his friend Attorney General Edwin Meese about a potentially embarrassing FBI investigation of alleged police brutality at the VA medical center in Cincinnati.

Jack Anderson

A month later, Turnage wrote to Meese's associate attorney general, Stephen Trott, saying the VA hoped that the FBI probe would be wrapped up quickly because it was hurting worker morale at the hospital.

Trott's response came two weeks later: The FBI had turned up new leads and, once they were investigated, Justice Department attorneys would decide quickly whether the case would go to court.

In March, the Justice Department announced that it would not seek prosecution of the hospital's police chief, Daniel Wilson. In testimony before Congress, police officers at the medical center had accused Wilson of hurling racial epithets at blacks as he beat them bloody for such transgressions as begging on the premises and parking in unauthorized places.

A spokesman for Turnage said he never contacted Meese. And, we have found no further communication with the Department of Justice other than Turnage's letter to Trott. Nevertheless, that letter has fueled speculation that the case is being covered up.

We can't say with certainty that a coverup is afoot, but our associate Stewart Harris has dug up additional evidence that, in our opinion, tends to support the theory:

— At a recent hearing, Sen. David Pryor, D-Ark., waved a secret FBI report that he said does not exonerate Wilson. The Justice Department is resisting efforts to make the report public, although normally such reports are released with deletions of the portions protected by privacy laws.

The Government Accountability Project, a public-interest group, filed suit under the Freedom of Information Act to obtain a copy of the FBI report. Even though some of the witnesses interviewed by the FBI have signed affidavits supporting the GAP's access to their testimony, the FBI is stalling release of the report.

— VA officials considered prosecution of two officers who blew the whistle on Wilson. According to VA records, agency officials met with the U.S. attorney in Cincinnati on Nov. 18, 1986, and asked that Paul Headley and John Berter be prosecuted for making "false statements." The meeting was held before the FBI had concluded its investigation of the allegations against Wilson. Cathy Brinkman, the assistant U.S. attorney who worked on the case in Cincinnati, declined comment. Headley and Berter have not been prosecuted.

— The day after the Cincinnati meeting, a regional VA official in Chicago wrote a memo recommending that Turnage "make the appropriate contacts at the Department of Justice to facilitate an end to the FBI's investigative activities." It was another official's memo that suggested that Turnage could raise the issue with his good friend Meese.

— In Senate testimony, VA center police officer Harold Hipple said Wilson had bragged about being sent in to "clean up" the Cincinnati hospital. He said Wilson claimed that James Fasone, chief of security for the VA, and the director of he Cincinnati hospital were "completely behind him." Fasone did not return our calls.

PRODUCTION GENIUS — The Iranians may have been sharp businessmen when they were conning missiles out of Ollie North for empty promises of hostage releases. But they're pretty hopeless when it comes to the automobile trade. In a secret meeting with Iranian news executives, the head of Iran's heavy industry revealed that the Saipa car factory, which makes Renaults, exports them for $3,000 apiece — though the production cost is $2,900 each. Why does the factory keep turning out cars at such a ridiculous profit margin? Because, the minister said, the factory is run by the Revolutionary Guards, who use it to produce cartridge shells also. The Renaults are just "busy work for us," he explained.

CONFIDENTIAL FILE — A joint study by U.S. and Japanese intelligence analysts had a candid — and hair-raising — estimate of Soviet capabilities in the event of a conventional war in the Far East. It would take the Soviets a mere three months to take the northern Japanese island of Hokkaido. And within six months, the Kremlin would control the strategically critical sea lanes around all of Japan.

EVANS & NOVAK

Rush to detente raising concern in Europe

BONN, West Germany — Although the full impact of President Reagan's rush to detente still lies ahead, its risks were exposed here when the leading Social Democratic strategist on East-West relations told parliament that "security by military strength" is an "illusion."

Those words in last week's defense debate by Egon Bahr, long the key Social Democratic Party (SPD) leader, angered Defense Minister Manfred Woerner, a stalwart of the Christian Democratic Union (CDU). He leapt to his feet in the Bundestag and accused Bahr of proposing "nothing more than hope or wishful thinking."

Rowland Evans and Robert Novak

But Bahr is riding the floodtide of the Mikhail Gorbachev-Ronald Reagan courtship and nuclear disarmament. The CDU's long dedication to military strength as the true path to security is suddenly made to look out of date. In Bahr's surprising words, "Military confrontation will be replaced by a peaceful contest of systems, ideologies and economic cooperation."

Chancellor Helmut Kohl, the CDU leader, said privately that his decision to scrap West Germany's own 72 Pershing 1 missiles was rendered inevitable by the political impact of East-West detente on German politics. Most defense-oriented CDU policymakers agree. "We were made to feel," one CDU defense strategist in the Bundestag told us, "that the garbage was already in the bag." He meant that the U.S. promise to modernize the German-owned Pershings was irrelevant because Kohl knew the Bundestag would never approve modernization — with or without U.S. backing.

The slow rot that some German leaders feel is starting to destroy the NATO consensus on how to preserve European security has now moved from the Pershings to the next level down: "short-range" missiles up to about 500 miles.

Kohl has signaled a desire to get rid of "short-range" weapons because if they are ever used, it will only be on the soil of East and West Germany, letting the rest of Europe escape nuclear devastation. But the U.S. wants to modernize these short-range weapons, particularly the 250-mile Lance missile. Thus, the "double-zero-zero" — the elimination of all U.S. and Soviet missiles down to 500 miles — has already opened a breach between Washington and Bonn on the next stage.

The loss of trust in the U.S. has not been so great since Jimmy Carter suddenly canceled the neutron bomb after months of political pressure on his allies to approve its deployment in Europe. The basic concern today is that President Reagan rushes toward massive elimination of nuclear weapons in Europe without assurance that an equally safe deterrent is ready to take the place of the nuclear deterrent.

That fear is compounded by an inexplicable (and so far unreported) top-secret briefing for key Bundestag members in Washington this summer, apparently given by the CIA. The thrust of the briefing, according to both CDU and SPD political leaders who received it is this: The U.S. now believes that Soviet ability to launch a surprise conventional attack on NATO forces poses a much smaller risk than NATO doctrine has preached for 20 years. That means the call-up of Soviet reserves would give the West plenty of warning time if a surprise attack were ever launched.

We were told by one CDU leader who received the briefing: "The newest CIA analysis claims that Soviet conventional forces are deployed for defense, not offense, which if true is a most surprising change in the threat perception held by NATO all these years." The suspicion here is that the new "threat perception" may be politically inspired to reduce fears of defenselessness to conventional Soviet attack once Euro-nuclear weapons are gone.

American officials in Bonn claim that the briefing reflected only one of many opinions in the intelligence community and that German officials who received it are making far too much of it. Nevertheless, Bahr and other left-wing leaders claim it justifies their attacks on the German defense budget; right-wing leaders are using it to justify their growing disillusion with Reagan's arms-control policies and their distrust of the U.S.

So rancid a mood clearly poses a danger of destabilizing the Western alliance, but the Reagan administration's beady-eyed pursuit of the new detente may be blinding it to that danger.

CHARLEY REESE

Hart's insincerity continues to shine through

Former Sen. Gary Hart hides his remorse well. I watched his nationally televised mea culpa and on the whole I think Richard Nixon is a more credible I-did-wrong-and-I'm-sorry speaker. I wouldn't buy a new car from Hart.

Charley Reese

Hart is just doing what he's always done, playing politics. What's an ex-pol to do but keep on being a pol. He had to find a forum to say, I did wrong and I'm sorry so he can hit the speaker's route and shrug off any future questions by saying, I've already handled that.

I still think patriots ought to chip in a few bucks for a small statue, or at least a brass plate, recognizing Donna Rice's contribution to the well-being of the republic. If she hadn't helped Hart scuttle his presidential quest, he might conceivably have been elected.

It never was Hart's lust for the flesh that was the main problem with him as a public official. It was his enormous ego, his duplicity, and his bad judgment. If a man's wife cannot trust him, then voters shouldn't. If a man seeking the presidency doesn't have any better judgment than to associate with Louisiana fixers and Miami's fast fun set in the middle of a campaign, then he is not the kind of man on whose judgment you would wish to bet the world.

Hart never was and never will be a genuine intellectual. That some journalists have called him that only reveals the intellectual level of those particular journalists. A case of the pretentious duping the pretentious.

Hart played the game of substituting carefully calculated position papers for passionate conviction, a common ploy of people who are all ego and no heart. Like Jimmy Carter, there is cunning but no life in Hart's eyes. Buried under the debris of years of calculating, pretending, posturing and manipulating, there no doubt is a real Gary Hart, but who knows him? Perhaps not even Hart.

Genuine people — people in whom there is no gap between what they feel, what they say, what they believe and what they do — are hard to find these days and all the more to be valued when they are found. Most of the ones I've run into are in the military services. That may be true because a battlefield is a difficult place to be a fake. The military services still require people to underwrite their beliefs with their lives.

There are too many men like Hart in politics. And they are to be found in both parties. It makes no difference what positions they espouse if they are only doing it to get elected. A liberal phony and a conservative phony are still phonies.

All of us, naturally, are subject to the same temptation to be a phony as the politician. Whenever we react out of fear instead of conviction, we are being phonies. Whenever we condone by silence something we disagree with, we're being phonies. It isn't necessary to be argumentative. It's enough to say quietly, I disagree.

A 17th Century samurai put it bluntly when he said, "Life is too short to do anything you don't want to do." Well, we may not have that option but certainly life is too short to spend it pretending to be something we aren't or saying things we don't mean.

Most of the opportunistic politicians I've known are not cowards. They just don't have any strong convictions. They don't care much about public affairs. To them, it's just a nice job and to keep it, they have to do and say certain things, so they do them and they say them. And they hire people to tell them what they are.

We were lucky that Hart's ambitions were sabotaged by his ego and his lust and if our luck holds, we'll end up with somebody in the White House who is, at the least, a real person instead of a marketing concept. For a change, I'd like a president who can get boiling mad and also laugh his head off at a good joke.

ATLANTA (AP) — Playing soldier may be a child's game, but Douglas Matthews has become a millionaire by providing the military with pilots who pretend to be Russians.

Matthews, a decorated fighter pilot in Vietnam, doesn't fly much anymore, but his Flight International Group Inc. pilots travel the world, "attacking" U.S. aircraft and ships from planes electronically equipped to simulate Soviet fighters.

Flight International wins about 50 percent of the battles, Matthews said during an interview at the company's Atlanta headquarters.

That's OK, he said. "We're not going against the entire American defense system ... And they're not pulling out all the stops."

In the last year, Flight International has won a $100 million contract from the Air Force, a $800,000 contract from the Navy, and a $22 million contract from the Federal Reserve Bank to ferry checks around the country.

He said no other company has won such a contract, although there have been other bidders.

All of the company's 130 pilots are retired from the military as either tactical or electronic warfare officers. They fly more than 60 highly maneuverable Learjets and Mitsubishi turboprops loaded with more than $1 million of electronics that allow them to masquerade as fighters or cruise missiles.

Defenders know when, but not where, the simulated attack will occur.

The planes carry radar, electronic warfare and communication jamming devices and air-to-air, surface-to-surface, gunnery and missile targets.

"We're giving them (trainees) a real-life 'Red Storm Rising.' We're those (Russian) backfire bombers," Matthews said, refering to Tom Clancy's bestseller about a war fought with highly computerized planes and ships.

"We're training our guys to fight in an electronic war," he said.

Electronic gadgetry has replaced many of the old dogfight tactics that were the mainstay of air warfare as recently as the Vietnam War, Matthews said.

Matthews' 70 percent stake in his company is worth $19.1 million, using Friday's closing stock price of $13.62½ per share. Flight International's revenues for the fiscal year ended April 30 were $20.8 million.

While Matthews is making money, he says the government is saving money — $20 million a year by the Navy, $30 million by the Air Force. It costs less to rent Flight International's planes than to fly expensive fighters for training missions, he said.

And by using Flight International, the Navy and Air Force free their pilots to do "just the big deals."

Matthews, 42, learned many of his flying skills at Miramar Naval Air Station near San Diego before it became known as the "top gun" school featured in the movie of that name.

He later flew 155 combat missions in Vietnam, winning two Bronze Stars, 10 air medals and two Purple Hearts.

While a pilot with Atlanta-based Delta Air Lines, Matthews borrowed $2,000 to found Flight International as a pilot training school in 1976.

The company won its first wargame contract in 1980. Matthews quit his airline job in 1983 and spent the next 24 months setting 122 flying records to draw attention to his company.

Flight International operates out of 18 locations around the world, but principally at Newport News, Va.; Carlsbad, Calif.; Jacksonville, Fla.; and Naples, Italy. It is scheduled to open a service operation later this year at DeKalb-Peachtree Airport in Atlanta.

Working with other countries does not compromise U.S. defenses, Matthews said, "because we try to emulate Russian tactics to everybody else."

Future of Florida's service tax unknown

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — Republican Gov. Bob Martinez, who once championed the state's tax on services to help cope with Florida's runaway growth, is now fighting to repeal the much-maligned law and shield himself from a backlash.

The Democratic-controlled Legislature was scheduled to convene in a special session today to decide what to do about the 3-month-old tax, but nobody was betting on the outcome.

Repeal could devastate the budget and the state's ability to meet its needs.

The tax was expected to raise more than $740 million toward this year's $18.5 billion budget and $1.2 billion toward next year's. Florida, the nation's fourth-largest state with 12 million residents, has no state income tax and a growth rate of 890 residents a day.

"I do believe there is a growing movement toward repeal, but I don't have any scorecard at all," said Martinez, who is in his first year as Florida's second GOP governor since Reconstruction.

The law levies a 5 percent tax on hundreds of services, including advertising, legal, accounting, pest control and lawn maintenance.

After its passage, the advertising industry retaliated with a searing campaign. Industries that normally advertise in Florida shunned the state, and broadcasters complained they lost millions of dollars worth of commercials.

In response to the pressure, Martinez has shifted positions so often that two newspapers referred to him as Gov. Gumby, after the pliable cartoon figure that bends in all directions.

On Sunday, the governor bristled at newspaper editorials attacking his changing stance. He noted that former Gov. Bob Graham changed his position in 1984 about a much-maligned tax on worldwide earnings of companies.

"I'm not the first to flip-flop on a tax. And of course some editorials have flip-flopped on the revenue as well," Martinez said.

The Legislature is sharply divided on the issue. Many Democrats have called for revision to make the tax more palatable; Republicans and some Democrats have called for repeal.

Those favoring repeal are uncertain whether to approve a tax to replace the lost revenue.

"It's a little difficult for me to want to respond to what the governor wants to do because we really don't know," House Majority Leader Ron Silver said Sunday.

Silver sarcastically suggested that the Legislature, before taking any action, call the governor for "an update on exactly what his position is going to be."

Martinez threw legislative leaders for a loop last month when he suggested the services tax be put to a referendum. House and Senate leaders objected. The governor then embraced repeal.

Polls have shown widespread opposition to the tax, which passed in the spring with bipartisan support.

Train enthusiast lives in 'ultimate' mobile home

MARION, Ill. (AP) — Not even the constant whistling of his "neighbors" bothers 70-year-old William Schreiber, who says he's living a boyhood fantasy in a 1912 railroad car.

"I first thought I could get myself a mobile home, and then I said to myself, 'Why not get the ultimate and buy the original mobile home,'" says Schreiber, who lives in the car with his German shepherd, Hexie.

"It just suits what I need. My living conditions, the way I like to live and the things I like to do," he said.

"I always liked trains."

For years, Schreiber collected model trains. But it wasn't until 1973 that Schreiber and two friends gave the real railroad business a go.

They founded the Crab Orchard & Egyptian Railroad in this Southern Illinois town of 15,000, starting off with a steam engine and some railroad cars.

The line ran sightseeing trips from a depot in downtown Marion, the company's headquarters, to the Crab Orchard National Wildlife Refuge.

But when that proved unprofitable, Schreiber and company switched to diesel engines, providing a short-line railroad service for industry, particularly coal companies.

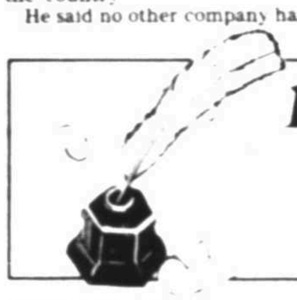

And in 1975, Schreiber, torn between moving into a mobile home or an apartment, opted for the 700-square-foot yellow and green rail car, which he bought from a private owner in Chicago for a price he wouldn't disclose.

"I wouldn't do it if it wasn't fun," Schreiber said of living in the rail car, parked at the company's headquarters.

There are advantages.

"Well, I don't have a yard to take care of.

"It's snug. There's plenty of room for me and the dog," Schreiber said of his home. "It's got everything I need."

1787 Constitution Daybook

Associated Press

Friday, Sept. 21, 1787
PHILADELPHIA TODAY

The Supreme Executive Council of Pennsylvania today confirmed that Col. John Bull was the rightful owner of a black slave named Port. Philadelphia County had confiscated the slave from Edward Stiles in 1778 and sold him to Bull. Stiles was disputing Bull's ownership of the slave. The council confirmed that the man was legally confiscated and sold to Bull, thus closing the case.

CONFEDERATION TODAY

In a cost cutting measure, Congress voted to eliminate the offices of comptroller and auditor effective Nov. 1, 1787. The Board of Treasury would assume the responsibilities of these offices.

The board decided that it would no longer fund the education of White Eyes, son of the Delaware chief during the Revolution. Col. George Morgan asked Congress for authorization to send the Indian home to his tribe.

RATIFICATION TODAY

In Philadelphia, momentum was building in support of the Constitution. Today the leading citizens of Germantown met, unanimously approved the proposed Constitution, and expressed their hope that it would soon be ratified. News of the Germantown meeting was printed in two Philadephia papers the next day and, within a month, accounts of the Germantown action appeared in 21 newspapers from Portland, Maine, to Charleston, S.C.

On the same day, the Philadelphia Independent Gazetteer reported the observations by an unnamed gentleman of conversations by local tradesmen about the federal Convention. The following is a sample of his notes:

A (sea captain) — By George, if we don't adopt the Federal Government we shall all (go to the wreck). A (shoemaker) — If we do not adopt the alternative in the Federal Convention now — we shall never have such another opportunity of having it (mended). A (house carpenter) — We shall never do well, till all the little rooms in the federal mansion house are (thrown into one).

DELEGATES TODAY

Thomas Fitzsimons, a fairly quiet member of the Pennsylvania delegation during the Convention, became an active proponent of the Constitution when the proceedings were over.

Today, friend William Bingham answered his request by reporting Congress' action on the new Constitution. Bingham wrote that the document was received and read on Wednesday, Sept. 19. He noted — with some displeasure — that the body would not discuss the Constitution until the 26th. Although the discussion was postponed, Bingham was certain Congress would send it to the states for ratification.

Although Alexander Hamilton only attended the Convention sporadically, he was forced to curtail his law practice during summer. Like everyone else he needed to pay the bills and today asked William Neilson to reimburse him for his services in the Hayton v. van Kleeck case.

LOOKING BACK
Slavery in Philadelphia

In 1780, Pennsylvania had become the first state to pass an anti-slavery law. Slavery was not abolished immediately, rather the wheels were turning in the direction of gradually eliminating this institution. And, although owners could continue to own their own slaves indefinitely, the children born after 1780 were free. Further, new slaves could not be imported into the state.

By 1787, many Pennsylvanians were evading the provisions of the 1780 law so that in 1788 a new enactment strengthened many of the provisions. For example, the slave trade was forbidden and violators were fined 1,000 pounds if they tried to import slaves. The 1780 and 1788 laws apparently achieved their goals. In 1790 there were 3,737 slaves in the state (210 in Philadelphia); in 1800 there were 1,706, and by 1840 only 64.

At least three Pennsylvania delegates, Robert Morris, Thomas Fitzsimons, and James Wilson owned one slave each.

NATION IN BRIEF

Budget woes may leave Army without choppers

WASHINGTON (AP) — A new congressional study says an Army decision to hold down costs by going without new helicopters through much of the 1990s and relying on less capable Vietnam-era choppers will reduce the nation's combat readiness.

"The Army was aware of these consequences when it made the decision to reduce current helicopter production," the General Accounting Office said in a new report. "According to Army leadership, a production gap until LHX production could begin was inevitable because the Army could not afford additional production of the Apaches, AHIPs and Black Hawks."

Producing more Black Hawk, Apache and AHIP helicopters to fill the production gap until the new LHX crafts are ready would cost $10 billion just to buy them and up to $10 billion for additional operation and maintenance costs, according to the GAO, which is a research arm of Congress.

"It has never been anything but a budget issue," said Maj. Phil Sousa, an Army spokesman, adding, "I don't recall where we have to continually be buying airplanes. Is that carved on a stone someplace?"

Trade consultations urged

WASHINGTON (AP) — The head of the Senate Finance Committee is urging the Reagan administration to consult closely with the Congress as it comes close to finalizing a framework for trade negotiations with Mexico.

Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, said Saturday the United States is likely to soon reach agreement with Mexico on a provision calling for talks in seven specific trade areas, including textiles, agriculture, steel, investments, technology transfer and intellectual property, electronics, and information on services.

Citing problems with similar trade negotiations between the U.S. and Canada begun earlier this year, Bentsen cautioned that for the best results the federal government should work closely with Congress and his committee.

Toxic waste plan worthy

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States could solve the problems of deciding what constitutes hazardous waste and what should be done with it by considering a plan to make toxic waste management a government monopoly, says a researcher who has studied European management systems.

"Experience to date suggests that a publicly controlled monopoly on hazardous waste management offers some advantages over reliance on a private, competitive market," wrote Sandra Postel in a paper published Saturday by the Worldwatch Institute, a Washington environmental research organization.

No country, though, is doing a good job in reducing the amount of waste generated, she said.

Ms. Postel visited Bavaria, one of the West German states, and Denmark, both of which operate publicaly owned waste management companies.

Partly cloudy skies expected

From Staff and Wire Reports

According to reports from the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport, skies will be partly cloudy with less than a 20 percent chance of late evening thunderstorms tonight. The low is expected to be in the mid 50s with northeasterly winds at five to 10 mph.

Tuesday's forecast calls for possible morning cloudiness, becoming sunny by the afternoon. The high should be near 80 and the winds should shift slightly to the east at five to 15 mph.

Sunday's record high of 85 fell 22 degrees short of the record high of 107 set for that date in 1953. Today's low of 55 was 15 degrees above the record low of 40 which was set for this date in 1983.

STATE

Showers and thunderstorms are possible across portions of Northwest Texas and South Texas tonight.

A high pressure system located over the northern plains was building southward across the state today, causing most of the state to have clear to partlyu cloudy skies. Mostly cloudy skies prevailed over the Panhandle, South Plains and portions of South Texas.

Some heavy thunderstorms were reported late Sunday afternoon and evening across portions of West Texas.

Scattered showers were reported at dawn over the southwest third of the Panhandle and northwestern portions of the South Plains. Scattered showers and thunderstorms are located over the middle coastal plains, extending offshore into the Gulf of Mexico early today.

Forecasts called for a chance of scattered showers and thunderstorms over Northwest Texas through tonight. Scattered thunderstorms are also forecast through tonight over extreme South Texas and along upper sections of the Texas coast.

Lows tonight will be mostly in the 60s and 70s except in the higher elevations of Southwest Texas where readings will be in the 50s.

Highs Tuesday will be mostly in the 70s and 80s except in the Big Bend area of Southwest Texas where readings will be in the lower 90s.

NATION

Showers and thunderstorms rumbled through the southern Plains today after blowing down an Oklahoma State Fair pavilion tent, while the West and Southeast enjoyed mostly fair skies.

Rain fell throughout northern New England early today, and light showers were scattered through the Great Lakes region.

"Good Neighbor Club" Send A Gift Of Love

This year when you go out of town for 3 or more days, send a "Gift of Love". Instead of stopping the delivery of the Reporter-Telegram - just call our circulation department and tell us you want to become a member of our "Good Neighbor Club". While you're away your paper will be delivered to a local nursing home of your choice with a card "compliments of a caring Midlander". When you return, your regular delivery will be resumed.

It's so easy to be a member of our "Good Neighbor Club". All you have to do is call our circulation department and say "I want to be a member of the "Good Neighbor Club". Tell us how long you will be out of town, where you want your paper sent and when to resume delivery to your house. We will do the rest.

It's just a simple gesture at a cost of pennies a day, but the residents will thank you for sharing your Reporter-Telegram subscription, and the Midland Reporter-Telegram will thank you for being a "Good Neighbor".

Guardian Angels

Midland school students benefit from those who work as crossing guards twice a day during the school year, according to the police officer responsible for coordinating the effort.

The 18 part-time guards, who work at the city's busiest intersections near schools, help protect hundreds of children from traffic, according to traffic Sgt. Bill Morgan.

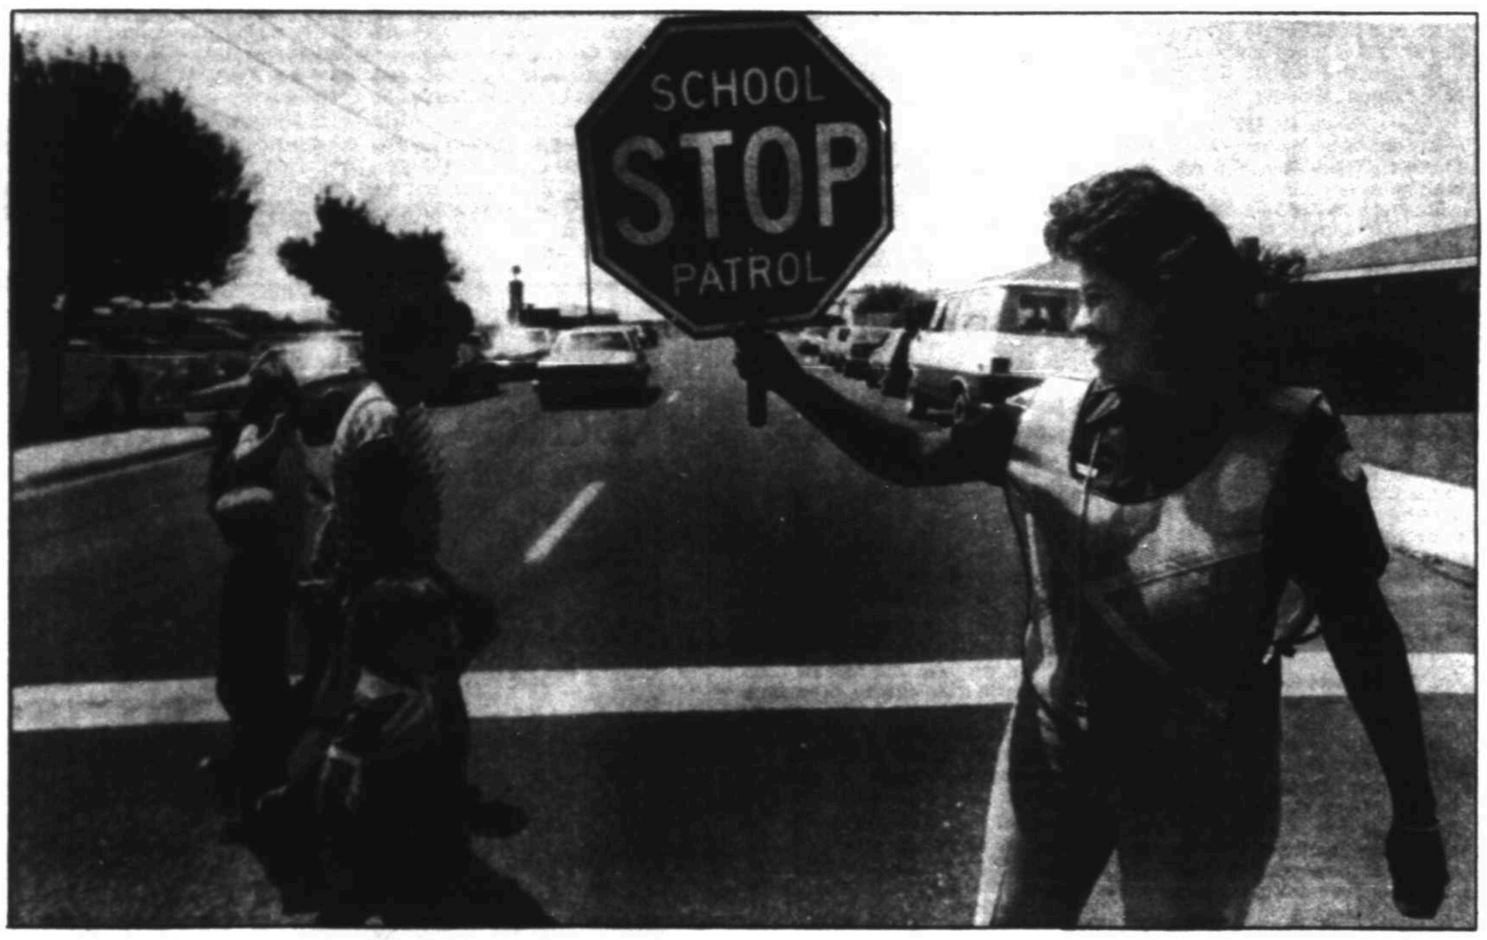

"The kindergarten kids, the first, second and third-graders, they are the ones who benefit most," Morgan said. "Because they are new to school, they are not familiar with traffic, or particular traffic patterns. The guards really help us out there."

The guards work four hours a day, from 7:30 a.m to 9 a.m., and from 2 p.m. to 4:30 p.m. New guards are paid $4.50 an hour, and can make up to $6.10 hourly.

One of the guards, Juanita Tucker, has been with the city since 1968, and another, Dixie Smith, was hired just after that, Morgan said.

Potential guards are not required to take any kind of physical or written examination, but they should have an interest in what they are doing, the sergeant said.

"We interview them, and try and find the people that seem to have an interest in it," Morgan said. "Most of them have been with us for quite a while, and we rehire them every year."

Lydia Urias, a guard at Bonham Elementary School, 909 Bonham St., halts traffic on Cuthbert Street for a bunch of students and their mother. Ms. Urias has been a crossing guard for three years.

The traffic engineering department of the city determines sites which require crossing guards by the amount of vehicle traffic that travels routes near schools and number of children that cross particular streets.

This year, officials tried to recruit volunteer crossing guards. City Manager Fred Poe announced in May that guards would be included in an effort to recruit an all-volunteer group to supplement city services and ease the budget crunch at City Hall.

But, several days before school began, the police traffic division was notified that no volunteers had been recruited. All of the paid guards were then hired back.

"I think we started a little too late to get any volunteers this year," Morgan said. "Since (first day of school), we have had one or two volunteers, and probably if someone quits, we will try and get a volunteer (replacement)."

Morgan said the city's long-range goal is to implement volunteer guards, which would save the city about $100,000, he said.

Regardless of their paid status, the guards are invaluable, Morgan said.

"Their only duty is the safety of the children," he said. "They are usually well-liked and get along with everyone."

Crossing guard Abigail Cruz, left, guides a group of youngsters across Neely Avenue from Rusk Elementary School. Ms. Cruz has been a guard for four years. Irma Trevino, above, a crossing guard at Big Spring and Dakota Streets, waits in her car in the warm afternoon sunshine.

MC board tentatively OKs degree plan for substance abuse counseling

From Staff Reports

A degree program in Alcohol and Drug Abuse Counseling has been given a tentative green light by the Midland College Board.

One credit course in Alcohol and Drug Abuse Counseling is being taught this fall as a pilot.

Based on the enrollment in that one course, we plan to seek approval by the Texas Coordinating Board of Higher Education for a 60-hour associate degree program," said Dr. Jess Parrish, college president.

"This approval is necessary before we could start such a program. I want to emphasize that we might not begin offering the entire program next fall, because of a lack of funding."

He also noted that those who already have college degrees can take 30 hours of the specialized courses and be eligible for certification.

Parrish said there was a higher-than-anticipated enrollment in the introductory course, which is being taught by Debra Pockat, a family counseling specialist with Clearview Hospital.

"In order to offer a degree curriculum, we would have to have a full-time instructor. This is required by the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools in order to have the program accredited. Total start-up cost is estimated at about $60,000 for the first year," Parrish added.

Board members authorized the college to seek approval of the course. The program would provide the classroom instruction necessary for those seeking a license as Certified Alcohol and Drug Abuse Counselors.

The college will also be joining with other governmental agencies in having a single election day. Election of the Midland College trustees will be conducted on the first Saturday in May, in accordance with state regulations.

Thus the College Trustee Election will be held simultaneously with County, City, School, and Hospital District voting.

Five members of the Midland College Foundation Board have been reappointed for new three-year terms. Renamed were Murray Fasken, Jack E. Brown, and three current members of the Midland College Board of Trustees: Jack Huff, William D. Klein, and Ralph L. Way.

Also, Dr. Weldon J. Horton has resigned as Director of the Murray Fasken Learning Resource Center. Horton will leave the post he has held since 1979 in about three weeks to become Manager of Reference and Information Services, King Fahad University of Petroleum and Minerals in Dhahran, Saudi Arabia.

DEATHS

Mrs. Velma Brown

Brown

Mrs. Velma Brown, 89, of Midland, died at her home Friday.

Services were to be 3 p.m. today at Greater St. Luke A.M.E. Church.

Mrs. Brown was a black pioneer in Midland. She came to Midland in 1925 to be the maid for Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Scharbauer Sr. She worked for the Scharbauers for 22 years.

In an earlier interview with the Reporter-Telegram, Mrs. Brown said she was treated like one of the family. "I don't know where I could have been treated any better." She also credited the Scharbauer family for helping her fight battles when she faced discrimination.

In 1947, she began working as a maid for the Joe L. Crump family. She was employed by them for 22 years.

Because she worked for two of the city's most prominent families, many avenues were opened to her, she said in the earlier interview.

She operated a catering service and became one of the first blacks to operate a business in Midland.

Mrs. Brown retired in 1965.

Having no children of her own, she lived with her Godchild, Mrs. Bertha Starks.

She is survived by several relatives.

Many residential burglaries investigated

From Staff Reports

Midland police are investigating several residential burglaries, including one which netted burglars items valued at more than $3,500.

According to reports, an 18 karat gold man's diamond nugget ring valued at $3,000, $550 cash, a .357 caliber handgun valued at $400, two gold necklaces valued at $100, and a .22 caliber bolt action rifle valued at $200 were stolen from a residence in the 1700 block of Western Drive.

The burglary occurred sometime between 7 a.m. Saturday and 7 p.m. Sunday, police said.

A washer and dryer valued at $400, a king-size bedspread valued at $300, and other household items valued at more than $200 were stolen from a residence in the 4900 block of Castleford Road. Reports said the burglary occurred between 4:30 p.m. Friday and noon Saturday.

A 16-gauge semi-automatic shotgun valued at $800, an antique single-shot shotgun valued at $300, and a desk top calculator valued at $180 were reported stolen from a residence in the 800 block of Stanolind Avenue, police said. The burglary occurred between 9:30 p.m. Saturday and 10:15 a.m. Sunday.

A set of sterling silver forks and set of sterling silver spoons, as well as assorted black pearl and coral jewelry was reported stolen from a residence in the 1600 block of West Tennessee, police said. The value of the items, which were stolen between Sept. 1 and Sunday, were not listed on police reports.

Police Roundup

Police are investigating at least three other residential burglaries, according to reports. Among the items stolen were a bicycle valued at $250, two videocassette recorders valued at $619, two AM-FM cassette stereos valued at $190, and $170 cash.

The burglaries were reported in the 700 block of West Cuthbert, 1300 block of East Oak Avenue, and 1100 block of West Wall Avenue, police said.

In other reports, police said 16 tires valued at $916, a battery charger valued at $180, and an impact wrench valued at $125 were stolen from Swinney's Gulf service station, 801 W. Interstate 20.

Reports said the burglary occurred between 10 p.m. Saturday and 6 a.m. Sunday.

Airline smoking ban enforcement eyed

From Staff Reports

At its regular meeting beginning 10 a.m. Tuesday, the City Council will consider a resolution opposing legislation which would require airport operators to enforce a smoking ban.

Deputy City Manager Mike McGregor said last Friday that the city is opposed to having to enforce smoking bans on airlines. He said if the bans are instituted they should be enforced by the airlines.

Under the proposed legislation in the U.S. House of Representatives smoking would be banned on flights of two hours or less and would have to be enforced by airport operators, McGregor said.

If airport operators do not enforce the ban on airlines they could be denied federal airport improvement funds, he said.

Other items to be considered by the council are several health fee increases and new charges at the Midland Health Department, 501 Andrews Highway.

Several fee increases to be considered include hiking immunization shots from $5 to $10, water samples from $5 to $8, pregnancy tests from $3 to $5 and venereal disease tests from $5 to $10.

'Veterans News' fights mistaken identity

ARLINGTON — The owner of a newspaper that uses ad sales to help unemployed veterans complained that some businesses are pulling their advertisements because his publication is being confused with one under investigation by the U.S. Postal Service.

Johnnie Jaynes founded the "Veterans News" four months ago to print veteran-related news and help jobless veterans.

But advertisers have erroneously linked the local quarterly with the "Veterans News Digest," which the U.S. Postal Service alleges has billed small businesses in several states for unsolicited ads that never ran in any publication, Jaynes said.

The "Veterans News Digest" is owned by Paul Necessary of Conyers, Ga.

"Business people thought it was me doing this, and some have stopped placing ads," said Jaynes, who solicits contributions and $10-$20 ads to finance his newspaper. "Even though I do all I say I do, they are afraid that I could be bogus and lying."

The 28-year-old ex-Marine said he distributed 9,000 copies of the first edition on Sept. 10 for free, but the $700 printing cost and food purchases for veterans consumed all the proceeds from ads.

"People are now reluctant to buy an ad," he said. "I'm being hurt, and so are a lot of hungry veterans because of this other outfit."

Necessary has been unavailable for comment since postal authorities won a court order on Sept. 10 temporarily stopping incoming mail to his Dallas mail-drop. His wife, however, said her husband has done nothing wrong.

The Postal Service initiated its investigation last month after Jaynes reported receiving numerous complaints contending that he had wrongly billed the businesses for $47-$87 ads, Ms. Broussard said.

Jaynes said the complaints began shortly after he listed his business number with the telephone company and directory assistance operators erroneously gave the "Veterans News'" number to callers seeking the other publication.

But Jaynes said the mistaken identity won't force him to give up a dream realized after years of thinking about ways to help fellow veterans.

Cookie Rogers, executive secretary for the newly formed Veterans Council of Tarrant County, described Jaynes as a "guardian angel" who tries to help anyone in need.

College president's daughter owns travel agency popular with students

KILLEEN (AP) — The daughter of the president of Central Texas College purchased a travel agency 14 months ago, and since then the college has booked 95 percent of its travel through her, the Houston Chronicle reported.

The agency arranged a number of trips for school administrators, and school president Phillip R. Swartz spent $107,000 on travel in a recent 17-month period, the Chronicle reported in a copyright story published Sunday.

In all, the community college spent about $1 million in the past year on travel, the newspaper said.

Swartz arranged all his trips through Casa Blanca Tours and Travel Inc., a Killeen agency purchased by his daughter, Kasey Morrarty, last year, according to the newspaper.

Operators of several competing travel agencies told the Chronicle they no longer receive any official business from the college.

Swartz refused to comment on the travel agency and said he was referring the matter for review by the college governing board, the Chronicle reported. Ms. Morrarty did not return calls, the newspaper said.

Telephone calls made to the college Sunday by The Associated Press went unanswered.

Central Texas travel records show that chancellor Luis Morton Jr. spent nearly $140,000 on travel during the same period, frequently taking his wife at college expense. Morton was reimbursed for $3,465 he spent on 218 taxi rides during one 16-day trip to Washington and New York.

The college, in a formal statement to the Chronicle, said: "Travel reimbursements for the chancellor and president are not charged to any state general revenue, federal fund or local tax account. Travel for these personnel are paid from other local funds."

The travel tab for Central Texas and its affilitates during the period Jan. 1, 1986 through May 31, 1987 was $1.78 million, according to travel records the Chronicle obtained from Swartz and Morton through the state's open-records laws.

Ron Dusek, a spokesman for Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox, said the college may be violating the state's conflict-of-interest laws if Swartz influenced the decision to funnel the college's travel business to his daughter's agency.

"The law wouldn't prohibit the president's daughter from doing business with the college as long the president had no decision-making authority or influence over it," Dusek said.

"If the president personally involved himself in getting business for himself or his family or a business partner, then that would be a conflict of interest."

Ms. Morrarty purchased the agency in July 1986. Since that time Central Texas and its affiliates have used the agency for 95 percent of all travel, said Robert C. Farrell, the college's internal auditor. Farrell said he does not know why the school began using Casa Blanca Tours.

Marvin Mickan, the only college board of trustees member reached by the Chronicle, said he sees no problem with using the agency.

Central Texas is one of four operating units of the American Educational Complex, governed locally by an elected board. It includes the American Preparatory Institute, the American Technical Institute and the Research Institute for Advanced Technology.

The college and its sister entities handle more than 120 federal contracts worth $28.5 million, providing the U.S. military with educational and technical training courses at 42 military installations in the United States and 139 others in foreign countries.

Some of the federal contracts are classified, and state officials have said they do not know exactly what Central Texas and the other American Educational Complex entities do for the government.

Records show most of Swartz's trips were to foreign installations where the complex has teaching outposts. The school reimbursed Morton for 52 trips taken during the 17-month period, including 11 to Laredo, six to Las Vegas, Nev. and the remainder to New York, Washington, Austin and Houston.

Mickan said the school serves no military installations in Laredo. He also said the school does have training materials translated in South Texas.

The school denied in a statement that Morton made the trips to visit relatives. The statement said he has been working on project development plans for Latin America and much of his assistance has come from people in Matamoros and Latin America.

Responsibility for Odessa's animal control program to be considered at meeting

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — A proposal by Ector County Commissioners to shift total responsibility for running the city-county animal control program to the City of Odessa will be considered when council members meet Tuesday.

Under the present agreement, the Ector County Health Department oversees general operations of the animal shelter, including the hiring of personnel. Maintenance of the shelter, which is located on city property and operates in a city-owned building, has been the responsibility of the city.

Operation of the animal control center, especially in the areas of personnel and disposition of animals, has generated considerable controversy in the past few years.

Commissioners court members have spent much time hearing protests over such things as the sale of animals for medical research purposes and methods used at the center to dispose of unwanted animals.

Personnel problems also have resulted in a couple of lawsuits being filed by employees who claimed they were discriminated against for various reasons.

The center's director, Dr. C.K. Jones, recently resigned and the position remains open, pending the outcome of discussions concerning shifting responsibility for running the animal control center to the City of Odessa.

The proposal to be considered by city council members Tuesday grows out of recommendations from a joint city-county study.

Council members also will consider amending a city ordinance that would allow extension of city water lines beyond the city limits to provide water service to residents living in areas where water wells have been contaminated.

Amendment of the existing ordinance would allow the city to enter into a contract with the Texas Water Commission. The cost of actually extending water lines would be paid by the Environmental Protection Agency.

Brandley hearing could net new trial

STATE

CONROE (AP) — Clarence Brandley, who returns today to the courthouse where he was sentenced to die six years ago for the rape-slaying of a teen-ager, is hoping for a third trial to get him off death row.

Brandley, who turns 36 this week, was convicted of killing 16-year-old Cheryl Fergeson. He has had two execution dates, both of them stayed.

His case has triggered allegations of racial discrimination and demonstrations by Brandley supporters, who claim the only reason he was convicted and sentenced to death was because he is black and the victim was white.

Defense attorneys, who already have succeeded in getting a visiting judge assigned to the case, also want this week's evidentiary hearing moved from Montgomery County. They contend Brandley can't get a fair hearing in the county directly north of Houston.

County prosecutors have said they would oppose such a request.

Brandley was one of several janitors working at Conroe High School Aug. 23, 1980, when Miss Fergeson was found raped and strangled.

He was the only black man among them, however, and his attorneys contend he was singled out because of his race.

The Texas Court of Criminal Appeals in July granted this week's hearing, saying issues raised by defense attorneys three months earlier should be reviewed in court. A key issue is a claim that statements from two former janitors — fellow workers — should clear Brandley.

Last week, Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox said a months-long inquiry of the case by his office determined that any new evidence uncovered was inconclusive as to Brandley's guilt or innocence.

Mattox refused to release the actual report except to prosecutors and defense attorneys.

"Some new evidence was found, but it would not be considered clear and convincing evidence of Mr. Brandley's guilt or innocence," Mattox said.

The attorney general did say he favored moving the case out of Montgomery County.

Brandley was convicted by an all-white jury on circumstantial evidence. Defense attorneys insist prosecutors never pursued leads which would have cleared him.

Brandley, who in recent weeks has declined requests for interviews on death row, has said in the past he was skeptical of the Mattox probe, calling it a smokescreen.

"They all work together," he said. "This whole ordeal is that no one wants to admit that what happened was wrong."

"I don't have anything to hide," he said. "I'd much rather be retried. I think there's still a lot of doubt in many people's minds."

Miss Fergeson was manager of the Belleville High School volleyball team, which traveled 60 miles to Conroe for a Saturday morning scrimmage. She was noticed missing shortly after the team arrived.

Two hours later, she was found dead. Brandley and another janitor said they found her body while searching a storage loft above a stage in the school auditorium.

Brandley was arrested within a week and charged with her slaying. His first trial ended in a hung jury, 11-1 for conviction, with the lone dissenter opposed to the death penalty. A second jury deliberated 85 minutes before convicting him and took 65 minutes to decide he should be put to death.

Man survives hanging re-enactment

GIDDINGS (AP) — Handcuffed, 67-year-old Woodrow Wilson climbed up the stairs to the gallows where his great-uncle, a murderer and an outlaw, was executed 109 years ago in a public hanging.

Sunday afternoon, as a crowd of about 100 people watched, one man covered Wilson's head with a black hood and secured the noose. Another chopped the rope that held the trap door shut.

The crowd was silent as they watched Wilson plummet eight feet through the trap door and dangle off the ground, hanging by his neck.

Then a cheer broke out — as Wilson announced that he was OK.

"I'm alive," Wilson said. "I did it the way Bill Longley did."

Longley was Wilson's great-uncle. Official records showed that Longley was hanged in Giddings in 1878 for murdering at least 32 people.

But Wilson, who owns a flea market near Giddings, has long felt differently.

Wilson, whose grandfather married Longley's sister, said he and a cousin researched the case and concluded that the outlaw escaped death by bribing a sheriff and using a body harness like the one Wilson used Sunday.

He said Longley fled to Louisiana, where he died 41 years after he was supposed to have been hanged.

He said he staged the re-enactment to straighten out the record how his great-uncle died — or, rather, how he didn't die.

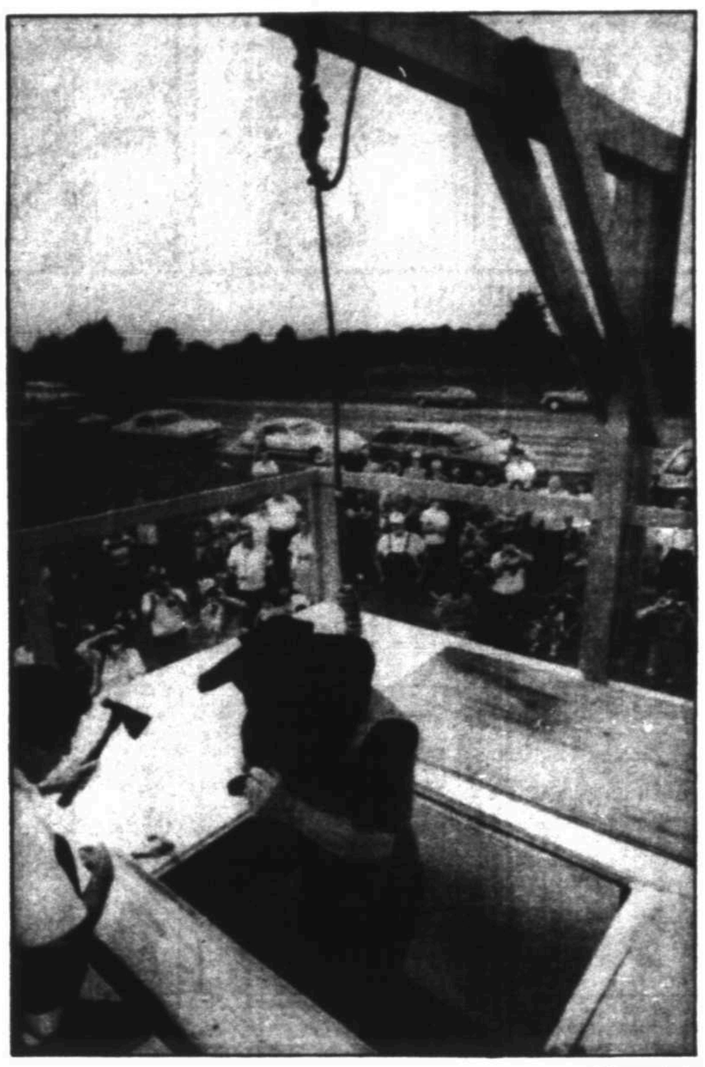

Wilson prepared for the hanging with simulated runs, from a three-foot drop. He said the body harness he wore, concealed under his clothing, was similar to mountain-climbing equipment. The harness had two metal hooks to attach to the noose.

Wilson suffered cuts behind his ears from rope burns.

"They'll heal. I'm just grateful that I'm still here. I'll live long enough to hang twice, maybe," Wilson said.

Wilson hopes the outlaw's history — and his stunt — will attract people to Giddings, "one of the best little towns in Texas."

Giddings is 50 miles east of Austin.

Clean-up volunteers 'hit the beaches'

McFADDIN BEACH (AP) — About 200 people hit McFaddin Beach this weekend — not to catch some rays but to pick up trash strewn along the shore.

"I wanted to do something for our city by picking up trash," said 13-year-old Shalequa Landry of Port Arthur, one of those who opted to spend Saturday cleaning up McFaddin Beach.

Miss Landry and Demersias Dancy, also 13, lugged a bag crammed full of bottles, papers and cans as they participated in Texas Coastal Cleanup Day.

"I'm encouraged by the turnout," said clean-up coordinator J.J. Jackson, noting that about 200 turned out on Saturday — almost three times as many as the 70 people who participated in the last cleanup.

More than 5,000 volunteers picked up at least 145 tons of trash from beaches in 18 coastal counties, said Ralph Osio of the Texas General Land Office, one of the event's sponsors.

In April's Great Texas Beach trashoff, 278,240 pounds of trash were removed from accessible shoreline, he said.

The 9 a.m.-to-noon follow-up on Saturday — co-sponsored by the Center for Environmental Education's regional office in Austin — covered 186 miles of accessible beaches in the 18 Texas coastal counties, Osio said.

About 118 groups, including Boy Scouts, senior citizens, scuba divers and garden clubs, are members of the Texas Adopt-A-Beach program and worked in the cleanup, he said.

A teacher at St. Mary's Catholic School in Orange said it was an ideal opportunity for a science lesson. About 25 students learned how non-biodegradable waste can harm the environment and they were surprised that fragile-looking plastic foam takes years to disintegrate.

"We care about our environment," teacher Sandy Leyendecker told the Beaumont Enterprise. "We also felt it was a service to the community. And we love the beach."

Many volunteer trash collectors on McFaddin Beach, located south of Port Arthur between Crystal City and Sea Rim State Park, said they were amazed at the large quantity and the wide variety of rubbish they found.

"I think I can safely say that everybody that saw this end of the beach was appalled," Steve Lovelady said. "It was disgusting."

They picked up rubber gloves, polyethylene rope, fluorescent tubes, milk jugs, spaghetti containers, an ice bag from Alaska and a tea bag from Japan.

"The majority of the stuff we got was definitely dumped by ships," said Mike Blanchard of Groves.

The Center for Environmental Education and the Texas General Land Office, which organized the clean-up day, asked volunteers to write down which countries' trash they found.

The agencies hope to influence the U.S. Senate to ratify an international treaty that will prohibit ships from dumping trash within 25 miles of shore.

Between 70 and 90 percent of trash on Texas beaches washes up from the ocean, where ships and oil platforms dispose of it, state Land Commissioner Garry Mauro said.

A&M devises plan to manage enrollment

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — Texas A&M officials are proposing a plan to manage enrollment by raising admission standards for automatic acceptance to curtail freshman registration.

The plan was outlined Sunday and the Texas A&M University System Board of Regents Committee recommended 6,600 as the target size for the entering freshman class next fall.

It also recommended a policy to set the size for subsequent classes 14 months in advance of the time that most prospective students would enter college. The full board was expected to act on the committee's recommendations this afternoon.

Regents Chairman David G. Eller noted the need to manage enrollment at the College Station campus.

"The fundamental question is one of how fast we can grow," Eller observed, referring to a 2,500-student increase this fall.

But Eller warned against thinking in terms of "putting 'caps' and 'ceilings' on anything — rather that we are considering the pathways which are best for the citizens of this state for additional growth and development."

Dallas leads nation in use of car phones

DALLAS (AP) — Dallas is the nation's top market for car phones with the highest percentage of cellular telephones in any major U.S. metropolitan area, an industry analyst says.

As of March 31, there were 38,000 car phone subscribers in Dallas, up from 22,000 in January, economist Herschel Shosteck said. The 64 percent increase happened with two of cellular's largest user groups — construction and real estate — in major decline, he said.

"It proves what people have always thought — that Dallas would be cellular's ideal city," said Shosteck, whose Silver Spring, Md., firm tracks the cellular phone industry.

Celluar service is offered in 129 U.S. cities, and its customer base accounts for about 1 percent of the population. But the base could grow as high as 7 percent, analysts say.

Dallas's cellular penetration rate is 1.09 percent, making it the only top 10 market to break the 1 percent barrier, Shosteck told the Dallas Times Herald.

Cellular phones pass radio signals between transmitter "cells" as a car moves through the city. Car phones account for the bulk of sales, but hand-held portables and portables stored in briefcases are gaining popularity as they're made smaller and lighter, Shosteck said.

Nationwide, the cellular industry expects to have more than 1 million customers by the end of the year, up from 655,000 a year ago, he said.

The two companies that provide the cellular network for Dallas say they've only scratched the surface of the market.

"We could triple our size in the next five years," said Dan Yost, president of MetroCel Cellular Telephone Co., which activated its network in March 1986.

Sales professionals, construction crew chiefs and service company executives are obvious target markets, but companies also want to attract casual users.

"We're in the unusual position of trying to downscale our image," said said John Stupka, chief executive officer for Southwestern Bell Mobile Systems, which began providing cellular service to Dallas in mid-1984. "We've got to persuade people they don't have to be affluent to have a cellular phone."

STATE IN BRIEF

Columbian president on jet with gear malfunction

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A jetliner carrying Colombian President Virgilio Barco made an "uneventful" emergency landing at Kelly Air Force Base because of a landing gear problem, officials said.

The Colombian Air Force presidential plane landed at Kelly about 1:30 p.m. Sunday because the front landing gear would not retract after takeoff from Travis Air Force Base, Calif., officials said.

The plane, which had 49 people aboard, later continued on to Bogota after the landing gear was inspected, arriving there about four hours behind schedule.

Kelly spokeswoman Capt. Lisa Bogdanski described the landing there as an emergency landing but added, "It was an uneventful landing." Emergency crews stood by as a precautionary measure but were not needed.

Barco was returning to Colombia from South Korea, where he was on an official visit.

While in Seoul, Barco, 66, underwent emergency surgery for peritonitis Sept. 9, soon after his arrival for a three-day state visit. The medical problem forced him the cancel trips to China and the Philippines.

The blue and white Boeing 707 had taken off from Travis, where the plane had made a scheduled stopover, Sunday morning and Kelly officials were notified about 90 minutes later that the plane would be diverted to the base because of the mechanical difficulty.

Second murder probed

SULPHUR SPRINGS (AP) — For the second time in less than two months, police in this Northeast Texas city are investigating the Sunday morning murder of a woman abducted from an overnight job.

The body of Rena Lynn White, 35, was found Sunday in the back yard of a vacant house, said police chief Dennis Lewis.

A clerk at the Best Western Motel, she was discovered missing at 8:15 a.m., Lewis said. Also missing was $400, the chief said.

Shortly before 9:30 a.m., a woman moving belongings out of a vacant house discovered Ms. White's body in the back yard. She apparently was killed by a single gunshot wound to the head, Lewis said.

Similarities to last month's abduction and slaying of a convenience store clerk lead investigators to speculate the same assailant is responsible, Lewis said.

On Sunday, Aug. 2, Diana Havner, 38, disappeared from her job at a convenience store near Interstate 30. Her body was found the following Friday.

An autopsy revealed she had died from repeated blows to the head and had been sexually assaulted.

New state law problematic

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A new state law allowing pseudonyms of rape victims to be used in public records may make it impossible to prosecute some accused sex offenders, a prosecutor says.

Bexar County District Attorney Fred Rodriguez said if the victim's true identity is kept secret during the actual trial, it will be impossible for attorneys to properly question potential jurors about whether they are personally acquainted with the victim of the crime.

The law provides that the victim's true identity may be divulged only to the defendant and to the victim's lawyer.

"This is a ridiculous law," Rodriguez said.

He said that Senate Bill 1392, which became law earlier this month, "probably had good intentions."

The amendment to the Texas Code of Criminal Procedure allows the victim of a sex offense to choose a fictitious name to be used to identify her in all police reports, indictments and the actual trial of the defendant in the case.

The law makes it a Class C misdemeanor for a public employee to divulge the true identity of a rape victim who chooses to use a pseudonym.

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 22, 1987

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Dealing with a family member or partner about finances may be an intense experience. Before you can change, you need to accept yourself as you are. Reward yourself more. Rest and recreation will enable you to keep your energy level where you must have it to succeed. Relationships based on less than total honesty will leave you with an empty feeling and are best dissolved. New faces on the social scene are like a breath of fresh air.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: Giants slugger Jeff Leonard, Mets infielder Wally Backman, actor John Houseman, singer Debby Boone, actor Scott Baio, Colorado Sen. Tim Wirth, newsman Richard C. Hottelet, Dodgers manager Tom Lasorda.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Feel free to ask important questions of influential people. Their answers will both astound and amuse you. Revise a budget to allow for a home expansion. You need more room now.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Messages could go astray. Do not despair. A last-minute development turns a delay into an advantage. Family-oriented evenings hold special appeal now. Relax with the people who know you best.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Discussions with higher-ups regarding your earning power should be productive. Travel is favored, especially for salespeople. A good day for making overdue changes and putting things in order.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Give help if asked; otherwise, keep your own counsel and remain at a distance. Your confident attitude helps you overcome all obstacles. A financial situation is reasonably stable. Avoid taking unnecessary risks.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Splendid ideas should produce excellent financial returns. A real estate deal deserves further scrutiny. The emphasis now is on being more self-reliant. Others look up to you. Do not let them down.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Travel is helpful in promoting new business. Dress your best for work conferences. A neighborly relationship offers contentment. Engage in conversations with young people. You need to develop new interests.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Office and domestic affairs proceed at their own pace. Money comes from an unexpected quarter. Financial pressures lessen. Your intuition is your best guide in both business and romance. Trust your instincts.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Welcome new work responsibilities. A fatter pay envelope should follow. The best reward is knowing what a good job you are doing. Your intuition is sharp.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Use your time judiciously. Your work performance is being evaluated and a raise or promotion could be in the works. A financial situation shows improvement.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A sudden boost in your personal resources makes the future look rosy. Forget past mistakes and plan for the future. Make a phone call if it will ease your anxiety over a loved one.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Community affairs are of special interest now. At work, maintain a steady pace and avoid biting off more than you can chew. Find a way to reward someone who has granted special favors.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): An important project moves ahead at top speed. Do your best if asked to perform special services. Others will reciprocate. Avoid guesswork; get the facts about a financial arrangement.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AQJ4 ♡AQ ◇KQ93 ♣876
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
Pass	1 ♡	?

What do you bid now?
A.—You have the strength and shape for a one no trump overcall, but that would be our second choice. Experience shows that when you have a good four-card major, it is usually wiser to make a takeout double.

Q.2—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠A93 ♡AK ◇AJ62 ♣A983

North	East	South	West
Pass	1 ♡	?

What do you bid now?
A.—This time, your hand qualifies for a no trump overcall, but it's much too strong for one no trump, which has a limit of a good 18 points (or a bad 19). Your hand is a fine 20, and the way to show it is to double and then bid no trump over any response by partner.

Q.3—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠A5 ♡AQJ4 ◇KQ53 ♣AKQ
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
Pass	1 ♡	?

What action do you take?
A.—With 25 high-card points, it might seem that 3 NT would be automatic. However, that would be rather short-sighted. Partner is unlikely to produce anything in the way of high cards, but he might have a long enough suit to offer play for game in his strain. Double first, then cue-bid hearts next. When you later bid three no trump, you will have described your hand perfectly.

Q.4—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠72 ♡AQ965 ◇KQ93 ♣74
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	1 ♡	Pass
1 ♠	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—This is not the hand where you should consider a jump in no trump. Your hand is mildly unbalanced, and if partner has three-card heart support he, too, will be unbalanced. Under those circumstances a suit contract would be preferable, and you should look for a heart preference by making your natural bid of two diamonds.

Q.5—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠J95 ♡J65 ◇AQ6 ♣J1085
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♡	Pass	1 NT	Pass
3 ◇	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—Your diamond holding improves your hand considerably. Since you have already shown 6-10 points, you can now tell partner that you have a maximum with most of your cards in his suits by jumping to four hearts.

Q.6—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AK7 ♡Q6 ◇A876 ♣KQ63
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 NT	Pass	2 ♣	Pass
2 ◇	Pass	2 ♡	Pass

What action do you take?
A.—You have a maximum no trump and partner has shown some values by going through the Stayman process. Since you have sufficient high cards for game, make your natural call of three no trump. Partner may, or may not, correct to four hearts; however, he will know you have a maximum opening with only two cards in his suit.

Metcalf

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — Michael P. Metcalf, chairman and chief executive officer of the Providence Journal Co. and publisher of The Providence Journal and Evening Bulletin, died Sunday from head injuries suffered a week earlier in a bicycle accident, the newspaper said. He was 54.

Metcalf died at St. Anne's Hospital in Fall River, Mass., where he was taken Sept. 13 after he fell from his bicycle while riding near his summer home in Westport Harbor, Mass.

His family has been a dominant force in the newspaper company since before the turn of the century. Under his direction, The Journal Co. broadened its interests to include cable television, broadcasting and telecommunications nationwide.

Despite the company's far-flung interests, Metcalf remained focused on his primary role as publisher of the three newspapers — the Journal, Evening Bulletin and the Sunday Journal.

He guided the development of a $60 million production plant that features a new newspaper printing process known as flexography. The plant opened officially the same day Metcalf was injured.

DULUTH, Minn. (AP) — Nearly a thousand blond, blue-eyed girls waited in line with their mothers for up to three hours, hoping they looked enough like a young Jessica Lange or Tess Harper to land a role in the movie "Far North."

One-quarter made the first cut Saturday in the search for three girls to play non-speaking "flashback" characters in the movie, which begins filming here Oct. 2. It is being produced by playwright-actor Sam Shepard, Miss Lange's companion.

The cast will include two girls who will play Miss Lange's character at ages 5 and 13, and a girl resembling co-star Miss Harper as a 7-year-old. Miss Harper will play Miss Lange's sister in the film.

Sarah Tuttle, a 12-year-old from Esko, thought she had a pretty good shot at a role. She knows how to ride a horse, a prerequisite for the 5-year-old part, and she can drive a tractor, a requirement for the 13-year-old role.

But, she said, "The lady said I didn't look enough like the person they needed. I'm not really disappointed."

BEDMINSTER, N.J. (AP) — Millionaire publisher Malcolm Forbes gave Elizabeth Taylor a custom-painted purple motorcycle, and the violet-eyed actress gave him a silver and ruby ring consisting of a helmeted skull.

But don't get the wrong idea.

"We're good friends, why complicate things with marriage?" Forbes asked Sunday as Miss Taylor nodded in agreement.

"The only engagement we have is to take this for a spin," she said of the gift, a 1988 Harley Davidson 883 "Hugger."

With that, Miss Taylor, who has been taking motorcycle driving lessons, clambered onto the machine behind Forbes and the two rode off, followed by 50 members of Forbes' motorcycle club, the Capitalist Tools.

The two wore matching fringed red-leather jackets bearing the Capitalist Tools logo.

Experts give memory-enhancing tips

Copley News Service

Scott Bornstein remembers how he became a memory expert: "By osmosis."

His father, Arthur, bills himself as the leading memory training authority in the country — an unofficial title he has worn over four decades, through old TV shows like Art Linkletter's "House Party" to countless business, professional and college seminars.

The younger Bornstein, now 30, recalls the skepticism when he joined his father on the seminar circuit at the age of 18.

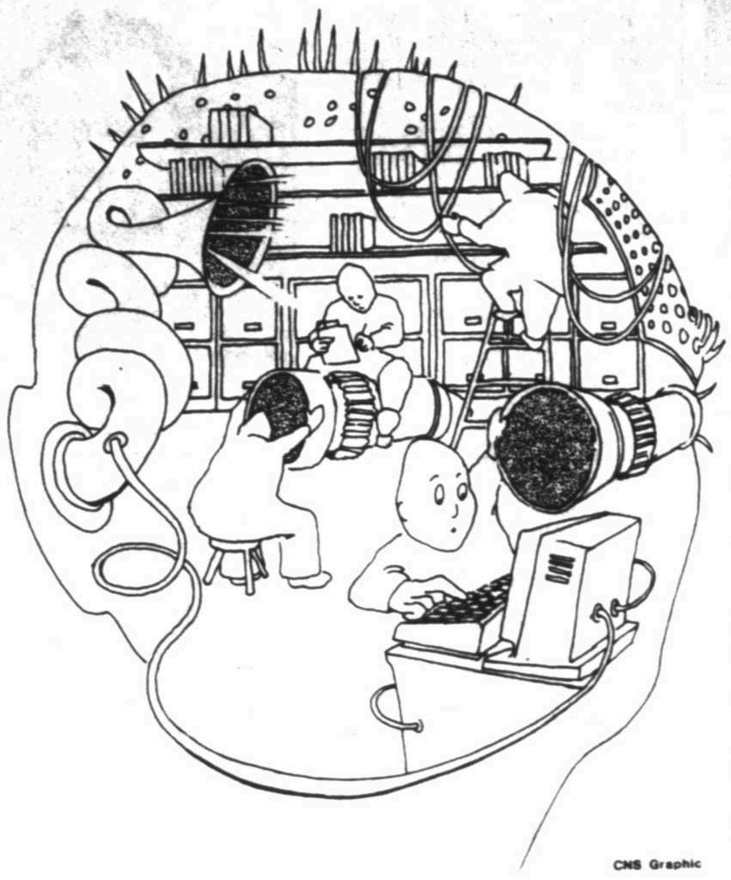

Skeptics soon became believers.

"When I could memorize a 70-digit number in a minute and a half," he said, "that tended to establish a certain amount of credibility."

Bornstein holds a bachelor's degree in economics from the University of California at Los Angeles (he carried a 3.6 grade point average).

He said living in the computer age is an advantage for people now studying memory-building, because computers and the memory have much in common. Computers use the principle of organizing, storing and retrieving information — and so does memory. Understand computers and you've got the key to memory, he said.

"The whole foundation for learning is built on self-confidence and motivation — the self-confidence growing from the feeling that you know you'll be able to retrieve information, as you would from a computer," said Bornstein, sounding every bit like the son of the man who wrote the book, "Bornstein's Miracle Memory Course," more than 20 years ago.

CNS Graphic

THE YOUNGER Bornstein — author of his own book on using memory techniques for learning, "Vocabulary Masters," published in 1983 — not only helps his father at the Bornstein School of Memory Training in West Los Angeles, but also has his own career in which he lectures on memory-building to corporations and professional organizations, and at high schools and colleges.

Bornstein explained the three basic principles of the "Bornstein memory method":

Any time you want to file something away in your mind for easy reference, anchor it to a location. One example is remembering a grocery list and relating it to an automobile; picture trying to balance certain items on the hood of the car as it drives along — tomatoes, milk, lettuce and the like. The next time you look at the hood, it will remind you of those specific items.

A similar technique could be used for remembering the names of business associates; tie each person's name to a part of a car — one could be the bumper, another the hood, another the windshield, and so forth. When you need to introduce them all at a meeting, mentally run through the "parts" of the car.

"You could do the same thing with rooms in your house to remember objects or peoples' names," Bornstein said. "It's using an organizational tool — which just happens to be the way a computer is set up. The mind, like a computer, recognizes what you're looking for, and goes back to retrieve it."

TO STORE and easily call upon a cluster of information, try linking. The mind recalls patterns and relationships. Tie one thing to another, and that to another, and that to another. Sometimes, the principles of location and linking mesh together, as in this example Bornstein uses to remember the U.S. Cabinet departments: A letter is sent to an attorney (Justice), transported across the state (State), goes to the Chamber of Commerce building (Commerce), then on to a hospital (Health and Human Services). Next to that is a house (Housing and Urban Development); inside that house is the interior (Interior); walk outside and see the laborers (Labor) working on the fence (Defense), and the fence has energy (Energy) running through it.

The acronym method makes a word formed from the first (or first few) letters of a series of words. An acronym used to remember the Great Lakes, for example, would be "h-o-m-e-s" (Lake Huron, Lake Ontario, Lake Michigan, Lake Erie and Lake Superior).

The acronym method also can be tied to the linking technique; the acronym "a-t-t-s-a-c-h-h-i-l-d-e-e" could be used to remember the U.S. Cabinet posts (Attorney General, Treasury, Transportation, State, Agriculture, Commerce, Health and Human Services, Housing and Urban Development, Interior, Labor, Defense, Energy, Education). That, in turn, could be joined with the linking story about the Cabinet to reinforce the thought.

Bornstein said that although visual cues form the basis of this memory technique, even visually impaired people have been able to use the methods by forming in their own minds what they think the elements look like — the essence being organization and the relationship between elements, to be recalled later.

HE SAID anyone old enough to visualize, is old enough to use the memory system.

Bornstein said the mind customarily recalls things for two to three days, but with strong visual stimuli, the amount of time can be extended to five to seven days. For longer retention, he said, a periodic review using the visual stimuli should be done one day, one week and one month later.

Research 'vacations' for adventure-minded

By WANDA ADAMS
Hearst News Service

Vacationing in Culebra, Puerto Rico, 64-year-old August Kroll spent the balmy nights counting turtle eggs.

About the time when other holiday-makers were ordering their after-dinner drinks, he and his companions would scramble down a 600-foot embankment, miner's lights strapped to their foreheads. They'd spend the night observing 1,000-pound leatherback turtles scraping nesting pits in the sand. Or they'd count the hatchlings as they struggled out of eggs laid two months before.

At dawn, they'd climb wearily up the steep hill to record their finds before tumbling into bed.

Kroll isn't a biologist on a busman's holiday. He's a retiree who spent most of his life in blissful ignorance of leatherback turtles and their habits. But he's one of a growing number of people who spend their holidays as paying volunteers on research expeditions from Cha-cha Bamba, Peru, to Devil's Garden, Calif.

Their travel wish books are the seasonal catalogs of organizations such as Massachusetts-based Earthwatch, the University of California's University Research Expeditions Program and the Foundation for Field Research, with headquarters in Alpine, Calif. They choose from dozens of projects, studying everything from Viking fortresses in England to volcanos in Iceland.

Costs range from $800 to $1,500 for meals and lodging during the average two-week hitch, plus the cost of getting to a "staging area" which might be halfway around the world. Amenities range from tents to relatively lavish hotel rooms, from restaurant meals and hot showers to picnic fare beside a snow-fed stream.

WITH SEVEN Earthwatch expeditions under his belt, Kroll can testify that conditions and accommodations vary widely. While working with dolphins in Hawaii, he swam in warm ocean water all day and slept in a cushy dorm room on a university campus.

Studying bald eagles last January, he hunkered all but motionless in a blind all day, freezing despite two sets of thermal underwear, two pairs of wool socks, pants, waders, three T-shirts, a windbreaker, a parka and a face mask.

"You gotta be a little loosey and goosey to enjoy this sort of thing, and a sense of humor is almost a survival necessity," he admits.

But he'll never forget those magnificent bald eagles soaring above him, or the immense turtles at Culebra single-mindedly dragging themselves up the deserted beach, or the baby turtles — "cute little guys" hatching out and making for the sea.

And he takes with him the knowledge that, in both cases, the work of research teams is helping to keep these rare animals alive.

Cardiac nurse Sarah Parkhurst has been on only one expedition, an investigation of ancient dwelling sites at Nasca, Peru. But she's already eyeing others in the catalog of the University Research Expeditions Program.

Like Kroll, Parkhurst admits that expedition vacations aren't all easy living. On her Peru trip, the team's job — measuring aqueducts and unearthing pottery shards — called for a long daily hike in the hot sun while keeping a wary eye open for wild dogs. Her enjoyment of the bougainvillea-covered hacienda where they stayed was tempered by the lack of promised hot showers.

BUT THE sights and opportunities for exposure to another culture were everything she could have wished for. There were the villagers who watched with puzzlement as the team trekked out each day at dawn.

"They wondered how people could have the money to come down here. They took the (ancient) irrigation ditches so much for granted. Why would anybody come here to see that?" she recalls.

There was the scary-spectacular flight over the famed Lines of Nasca, fantastic images of spiders, whales and other animals etched into a desert so dry that the last big rain was in 1954. She spent one evening listening to a talk by Maria Reiche, a German researcher who has spent 40 years in Nasca seeking the still-unknown origins of the Lines. On the weekend, she and another woman visited a wildlife reserve several hours up the coast.

For Gwyneth Thorsen, a hospital administrator who admits to a lifelong yen to "dig in the dirt," a highlight of an Earthwatch expedition to Easter Island was a talk by the famed Norwegian adventurer Thor Heyerdahl.

Heyerdahl's research crew had just unearthed a new ceremonial statue significantly different from any they'd found before. Just being around when discoveries such as these are made gives team members the exciting feeling of being on the cutting edge of the scientific world, Thorsen says.

In return, the scientists get dozens of willing hands to gather the thousands of little bits of information that make up that big picture.

Research expeditions available

Hearst News Service

Is a research expedition for you? The answer is probably yes if you like: "Nova," National Geographic magazine, visits to the zoo and the aquarium, and science-related nonfiction, says Blue Magruder, spokeswoman for Earthwatch, the granddaddy of the research expedition organizers.

It helps if you are in generally good health, don't mind meeting new people or being thrown into new situations and can do without all the comforts of home for limited periods of time, she adds.

No special skills are required for most projects, says Rebecca Simon of University Research Expeditions Program. Participants generally spend the first day or two learning the tasks required of them. When exceptional skills are necessary — scuba certification for underwater work, for example — the expedition catalogs make this clear. Age is not usually a barrier.

Knowing what to expect shouldn't be a problem. All the programs provide extensive briefing materials to participants weeks in advance of departure. These include information on weather, living conditions, recreational opportunities, what to pack, how to get there and even, when pertinent, an update on the political situation.

As to costs, there's a considerable range, from as little as $500 for short, in-country expeditions to as much as $3,000 for longer projects. Most projects run for two weeks and cost between $1,000 and $1,500. Travel costs to the staging area, medical expenses, liquor, sightseeing excursions and other incidentals are not included in the expedition fee, which is technically a tax-deductible contribution.

Most expedition organizers require a hefty advance — $200 is usual — and full payment is usually required 90 days before departure date. The $200 is generally refundable up to the 90-day period unless the expedition is cancelled. As always in traveling, check the policy before buying.

Academic credit is sometimes available for expedition participants who are students, sometimes fellowships and scholarships can be arranged for teachers.

Here's a list of organizers:

■ Earthwatch. Founded 1971. Nonprofit. Expeditions conducted by researchers from institutions around the world. Averages 100 projects annually. "Earthwatch" magazine, published four times a year, includes expedition guide. Membership, $25 annually, prerequisite to expeditions. Address: Earthwatch Expeditions, Inc., 680 Mount Auburn St., Watertown, Mass. 02272. Phone: (617) 926-8200.

■ University Research Expeditions Program. Founded 1976. Nonprofit. All expeditions conducted by University of California faculty and scholars. Averages 25-30 expeditions annually. Offers annual catalog, spring newsletter and expedition update. Address: University Research Expeditions Program, Desk H-29, University of California, Berkeley, Calif. 94720. Phone: (415) 642-6586.

■ Foundation for Field Research: Founded 1982. Nonprofit. "Explorer News" issued quarterly. No membership fee. Foundation expeditions have a broader time and price-range — as little as five days and $200. Address: Foundation for Field Research, 787 S. Grade Rd., Alpine, Calif. 92001. Phone: (619) 445-9264.

■ The Oceanic Society: Week-long expeditions working with spotted dolphins off Grand Bahama Island. Cost $995, plus air fare. No special experience or swimming skills required. Address: The Oceanic Society Expeditions Office, Fort Mason Center, Bldg. E, San Francisco, Calif. 94123. Phone: (415) 441-1106.

Neuro-linguistic therapy developed for athletes

Copley News Service

Chuck Coleman, 43, is sitting with his eyes closed in Rebecca Patterson's office, running an imaginary VHS tape of his last triathlete race.

Patterson, a Neuro-Linguistic Therapist, is working with Coleman to eliminate the hesitation he experiences when he first hits the bicycle pedal after the swim segment of the race.

"I see myself in slow motion the first moment my legs hit the beach coming out of the water from the swim," says Coleman. "I feel fresh, as if I've not exercised at all.

"I am visualizing shifting the blood from the upper part of my body to my legs so that they feel strong and ready to pedal. I get to the showers, strip off my goggles and wet suit. I'm shivering as I get into my bike gear because the water is cold and the sky is still overcast.

"Now I'm mounting my bike. My legs are like pistons. There's no hesitation when I hit the pedals — the blood is strong in my legs and I'm ready to go."

The "reprogramming" continues as Coleman runs his tape. Now he's in the midst of the race, the point at which his self-doubt and fatigue usually kick in and he wonders whether he can make it. Instead of concentrating on the ache in his legs and difficulty in breathing, Patterson suggests he visualize using the non-running muscles in his leg to finish the bike segment. When he jumps off the bike, he's ready to run at his best speed.

Three one-hour sessions later, Coleman is ready. Two months later in the next Masters multimedia race, he takes his first gold. Not only has he beat his old rival, but he now is considered the favorite for his next race.

"Learning NLP is like getting an owner's manual for your brain," says Patterson.

Created by Dr. Richard Bandler and John Grinder in 1978, NLP is becoming an important part of the training program for competitive athletes.

"Through conversation with the client, the therapist can discover what is really going on in the subconscious," Patterson explains. "If the patient's highest value in the competitive situation is to win, he can learn to have a new set of beliefs that allow him to have the success he wants.

"Some patients have emotional blocks — they may believe, for example, that they can't win because they only have four hours a day to train, the sun isn't out or they didn't have Wheaties for breakfast. Once we have a clear handle on the belief system, we can help him learn a new set consistent with his values."

DEAR ABBY

Mother's upset with Grandma's list of priorities

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Our son is 3 years old. Our daughter is 5. My parents live one hour away — by car. I recently phoned and asked them to come and stay with their grandchildren for a weekend while we attend a convention in another city.

My mother immediately checked to see if the dates (two months away) were on their "RV group" weekend. Since we so rarely ask them to baby-sit our children, and the children love "Nini and Papa" so much, I was hurt, and wrote and told them so.

Mother wrote back, listing her priorities as follows: (1) Her job. (She sells real estate.) (2) Her favorite activity. (Taking RV group trips with her husband, who is retired.) (3) Her grandchildren.

Needless to say, I engaged a baby sitter. My parents are now saying that we should understand their need for freedom. Abby, they have stayed with our children overnight only once in a year and a half, when we delivered the kids — never have they driven to our home to baby-sit for the evening.

We have decided never again to ask them for anything. Are we right or wrong to feel as we do? — THIRD PLACE BUT NO SHOW

DEAR THIRD PLACE: You are wrong. Some grandparents consider it a privilege and a joy to baby-sit their grandchildren. Others do not. No matter how much the grandparents "love" their grandchildren, caring for them for a day, or a weekend, can be very tiring. Your parents have let you know that they are not available as sitters. It's their right. Your resentment is unjustified and unbecoming.

DEAR ABBY: In response to your fidelity survey: My husband of six years told me a year ago that he had been unfaithful "once." I was devastated, and decided to "get even" with him, so I had a four-time affair with another man.

I told my husband about my affair some months later, and he was not the least bit jealous. He hardly reacted at all — as though he didn't care. I had expected him to harp on me about it like I still harp on him. Let me tell you, Abby, his lack of jealousy hurt me as much as when I learned about his one-nighter.

Why didn't he react to my affair like I reacted to his? Does this show a lack of love for me on his part — or a lack of security on my part? — FURIOUS IN MINNEAPOLIS

DEAR FURIOUS: I don't know the reason for your husband's reaction, but it's entirely possible that he doesn't value fidelity as much as you. Not all men (or women) are fiercely possessive of the one they love, but women have a tendency to be more possessive than men. However, generalizations are dangerous. Especially this one.

DEAR ABBY: "Mrs. Couch Potato" complains because her husband stays up half the night watching reruns and old movies on TV — then he comes to bed at 2 or 3 a.m. wanting to be "romantic." You suggested that she talk it over with him while they're both wide awake.

It won't work. Talk is cheap. She needs action. I know a woman whose husband watches everything on TV continuously, including commercials. They have no time for romance at all. She said that although her husband loves CBS' "60 Minutes" more than sex, he detests the silly comments by Andy Rooney at the end of the program. So they have agreed to make love every Sunday during the last 30 seconds with Andy Rooney. — THE ORIENTAL WISE GUY

DEAR ABBY: "No Music, Please" complained about hearing music when his telephone calls were put on hold. We've tried it both ways in our small business with three lines, and found that music at least lets the caller know that he has not been disconnected when all the lines are busy. Before we added music, we got a number of callbacks from angry customers claiming we'd hung up on them.

Of course, the music should be pleasant, at a reasonable volume, and most important, the call should be handled as quickly as possible. — ED MILLER, EDMONDS, WASH.

DEAR ED: My mail is running 2-to-1 in favor of music instead of dead air when the caller is put on hold — and for precisely the reasons you mentioned.

Brawl fires 4th quarter Buffalo rally

ORCHARD PARK, N.Y. (AP) — Some of the Buffalo Bills may have needed a small brawl in the third quarter to get them into the game with the Houston Oilers, but not quarterback Jim Kelly.

"Jim is so competitive ... if you played him in checkers, he would cheat to win if he had to," said Bills center Kent Hull after Kelly engineered a startling 21-point fourth quarter Sunday that gave the Bills a 34-30 victory over the Oilers.

Kelly, who was criticized last year after throwing fourth-quarter interceptions that cost the Bills chances in several games, almost had to answer the same criticism again.

The Oilers had taken a 27-20 lead with a 12-yard touchdown pass from Warren Moon to Ernest Givins late in the fourth quarter when Kelly, on the first play of the next possession, was intercepted by Houston's Jeff Donaldson.

"You probably thought 'not again' when I threw the interception in the fourth quarter," said Kelly, who threw for three touchdowns and 293 yards.

Houston took advantage of the interception with a 30-yard Tony Zendejas field goal that made it 30-20, but Kelly was itching for another chance. The 10-point deficit only provided more incentive.

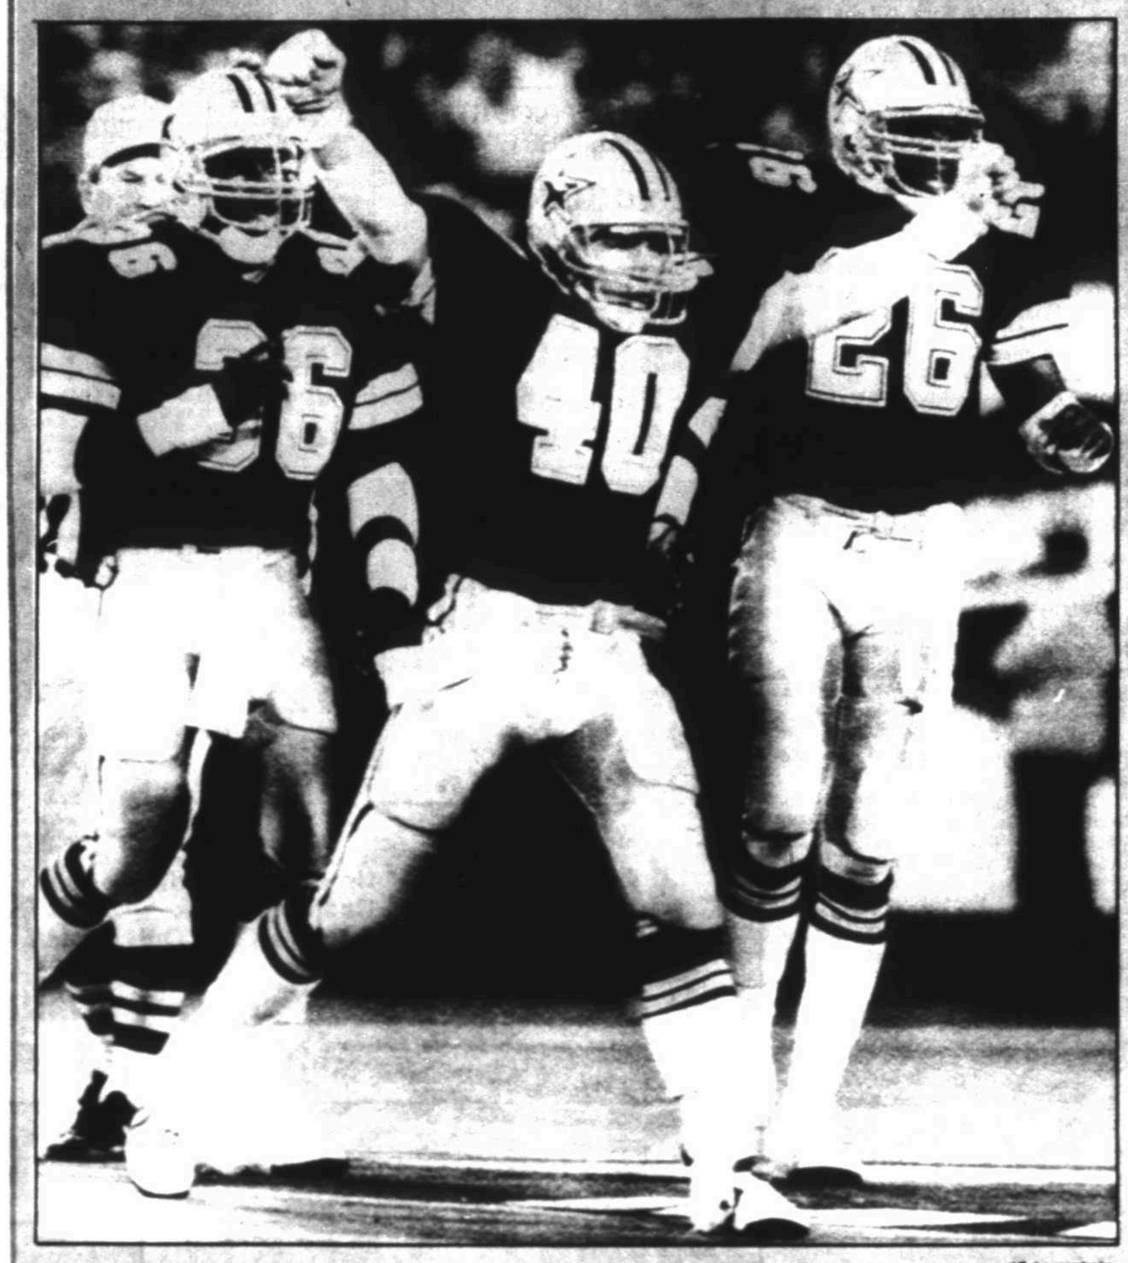

"In my heart and in my soul, I wanted the ball back so badly so I could show the fans, my teammates and all the reporters that Jim Kelly has a winning spirit and that I'd do whatever it takes to win," Kelly said.

With 4:52 remaining, Kelly ushered the Bills 80 yards in five plays before Robb Riddick, who caught an 11-yard touchdown pass from Kelly in the second quarter, scored on a 2-yard run that brought the Bills to within three with 3:22 left to play.

The Buffalo defense, which came to life after it was involved in a third-period melee that ended with the ejection of Bills defenders Bruce Smith and Darryl Talley and Houston offensive tackle Doug Williams, then rose to stop Houston on four plays.

Call off Cowboys' death watch

AP Laserphoto

Bill Bates leads the Cowboys in cheer after another interception of Phil Simms Sunday at the Meadowlands. Dallas hung on to win its first game of the season, 16-14.

By TOM CANAVAN

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — The death watch on the Dallas Cowboys has stopped for now, and one just might be beginning for the New York Giants.

The Cowboys got three field goals from Roger Ruzek, survived a last-minute scare and ended their longest regular-season losing streak since 1963 by defeating the Giants 16-14 Sunday, handing the Super Bowl champions their second straight loss.

"It felt like winning the playoffs," said veteran nose tackle Randy White. "It's a great feeling. What we needed was a game like this to get the confidence back and get rolling on the right track. If the strike happens it will probably screw everything up, but it was great to win the game today."

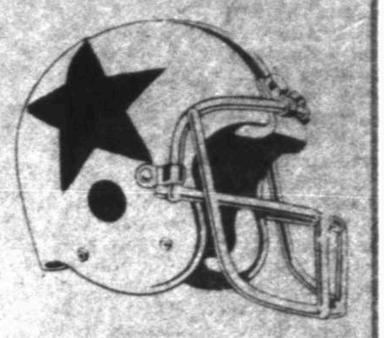

The Cowboys came into Giants Stadium desperate for a victory on the eve of what might be a players strike. They had not won a regular-season game since defeating San Diego 24-21 last Nov. 16 and they were in danger of losing their seventh straight game, something the club had not done since its expansion season in 1960.

The Cowboys won because they made the big plays when they had to, and the Giants didn't. The biggest one the Giants missed came with six seconds to play when Raul Allegre was wide left with a 46-yard field goal attempt after the Giants drove from their 2 to the Dallas 29 in the final minute.

"I'm down," said Giants team captain Harry Carson. "This one hurt. We were the Super Bowl champions. We have yet to play like Super Bowl champions. We have not played well. We're getting injuries.

"The thing is, it would be one thing if we were playing well and teams beat us. We are not playing well, though," said the linebacker.

There is no denying that the Giants are not playing well. Dallas beat them in almost every offensive category, holding the ball for 41:42. The Cowboys defense also picked off four Phil Simms passes and recovered a Lionel Manuel fumble.

Four of those mistakes came in the opening half when Dallas opened a 10-7 lead. Bill Bates' interception and 28-yard return set up a 1-yard TD pass from Danny White to Thornton Chandler. Ruzek kicked a 46-yard field goal on Dallas' second offensive series.

New York had taken a 7-0 lead in the first quarter on a 5-yard pass from Simms to Stacy Robinson that capped a 71-yard drive. It was the Giants' only scoring drive of the game.

Their other score came midway through the third quarter when safety Terry Kinard made his second of three interceptions and returned it 69 yards to the Dallas 1. Simms, who completed 17 of 36 passes for 219 yards, then hit Mark Bavaro for a 14-10 New York lead.

Ruzek cut the margin to one point with a 43-yard field goal late in the third period. Dallas got its winning score by marching 65 yards in 11 plays with Ruzek hitting from 28 yards out with 5:12 to play.

"I'm happy to come back and perform well here," said Ruzek, who is 5 of 5 on field goals this season. "It was very fulfilling and a great ball game for our team."

No miracle settlements appear on NFL horizon

NEW YORK (AP) — NFL teams played what could be their final games of 1987 Sunday, 48 hours away from a strike that seemed inevitable unless someone could "pull a rabbit out of a hat."

There was hardly a hint of optimism as 26 of the league's 28 teams took the field under the shadow of the second strike in six years and the fifth since 1968. It will start when the other two teams, the New York Jets and New England Patriots, complete their game Monday night.

"My agenda now is to prepare for a strike," Gene Upshaw, executive director of the NFL Players Association, said at union headquarters in Washington, where picket signs were ready for Tuesday's walkout.

No new talks were scheduled, and the two sides were unable even to agree on their disagreements. The owners claimed the players' demand for free agency was the sole issue that couldn't be resolved easily; the union said the owners were stalling on a vast range of issues.

Owners, meanwhile, were going ahead with plans to play games with free agents. Several teams claimed they had nearly full rosters signed to resume play in two weeks, with the fourth week of the season.

WAS THERE any hope?

"I'm still working on the theory that we might be able to pull a rabbit out of a hat," Jack Donlan, executive director of the NFL Management Council, said Sunday. "I don't think it's likely, but I have to keep thinking that way."

But Upshaw saw no rabbits on the horizon following the most recent meeting, an informal three-hour session between the two chief negotiators Friday. At those talks, the union rejected Donlan's request for a 30-day extension of the strike deadline in return for concessions on issues other than free agency.

"We need someone to make the deal," Upshaw said. "Obviously, when Jack talked to me, it was just part of a grand plan. We've met one-on-one eight or 10 times. I'm not going to meet with him one-on-one again if he's going to be vague and general."

The versions of those informal talks were symbolic of the chasm between the sides.

The Management Council said Donlan offered concessions on pension, roster size and other issues. Upshaw said he heard nothing specific that could make him postpone the strike deadline.

TWO MEMBERS of the Management Council executive committee said Sunday they were convinced the dispute could be settled quickly if not for the union's demand for what it calls "unfettered" free agency — the right of a player to change teams without his new team having to compensate the old one.

"The other things are nothing," said Tex Schramm, president of the Dallas Cowboys. "If you eliminated free agency, you wouldn't have any trouble with the other things and there wouldn't be any strike."

But the union, which contends the owners are playing up free agency as the issue because some players are opposed to striking for it, reiterated what it has been saying for nearly a year — that the issues are "horizontal, not vertical," that free agency is no more important than a series of economic demands.

"If we give in on free agency, they should give in elsewhere. We haven't had any bargaining. I told him Friday, and I've told him a number of times, we're willing to give in some if they're willing to give in some."

Montana's last-second magic pulls one from Bengals' hat

Associated Press

The heroics of Joe Montana and Jerry Rice, made possible by the strange strategy of Cincinnati Bengals Coach Sam Wyche, gave the San Francisco 49ers a stunning 27-26 victory Sunday on the second — and perhaps last — week of the NFL season.

Rice caught a 25-yard touchdown pass from Montana with no time left. The All-Pro wide receiver outjumped rookie cornerback Eric Thomas in the end zone to make his dramatic game-winning catch, Montana's third touchdown pass of the game.

But it was the Bengals' poor strategy that cost them as much as the Montana-Rice connection.

The Bengals, ahead 26-20 with the ball at their own 45 with 54 seconds to play, had quarterback Boomer Esiason run three times, losing 10 yards as the 49ers used their timeouts. The Bengals then took a delay penalty with six seconds left, putting the ball on the 30.

But they didn't punt on fourth down and James Brooks was stopped for a 5-yard loss, stopping the clock on the exchange of possession with two seconds left.

Montana lofted the ball to Rice, who went up and cleanly caught it in front of Thomas, who had been burned twice in the game for touchdown passes.

Ray Wersching's extra point gave the 49ers the victory.

"I really don't blame anybody but me for this game," Wyche said somberly. "We had the game won."

"I thought we should have kicked it or given them two points (on a safety)," Brooks said. "Two points is going to win the game."

Instead, the 49ers said thank you for the gift.

"He was open when he lined up. I couldn't believe it," Montana said of Rice. "I looked at him and said, 'Hey, get into the end zone.' Nobody came up to bump him (at the line of scrimmage). There was only one guy playing behind him."

Cleveland picked off six passes, two by Clay Matthews, who ran 26 yards for his first NFL touchdown with the first one. Mike Johnson intercepted a third-quarter pass on a strange play in which Pittsburgh's Louis Lipps dropped the ball but kicked it just before it hit the ground. Johnson caught the rebound and, five plays later, Bernie Kosar hit Gerald McNeil for an 11-yard touchdown.

Dan Marino continued his domination of the Colts with 254 yards and three touchdown passes. Miami holds the NFL's longest victory string against one team, 14 over the Colts.

Marino, who has never lost to the Colts, twice victimized rookie safety Freddie Robinson, who missed tackles at the Indianapolis 15-and 2-yard lines on scoring passes to Mark Clayton and rookie Troy Stradford. Mari-

Big wins renew SWC pride

By DENNE H. FREEMAN
AP Sports Writer

Arkansas can take up this week where Texas A&M left off in restoring some pride to the Southwest Conference.

Texas A&M mastered an Associated Press Top Ten team by blasting Washington 29-12 in Kyle Field on Saturday.

In other games, Arkansas ripped Tulsa 30-15, Texas Christian stunned Brigham Young 33-12, Texas Tech bashed Lamar University 43-19, and Baylor survived Nevada-Las Vegas 21-14.

In the SWC's only loss Saturday, Louisiana State downed Rice 49-16.

With the 5-1 effort, the league is now 9-10 against outside competition.

The Aggies' victory over Washington was the SWC's first victory in five tries over a Top Ten club.

Arkansas meets unbeaten and untied Miami in Little Rock on Saturday in a nationally televised (ESPN) clash at 3 p.m.. The Hurricanes will be well rested. Miami has been idle for two weeks since it defeated Florida in an opener.

The A&M defense throttled Washington quarterback Chris Chandler, sacking him four times and keeping him off balance with a constant blitz.

"We beat a great team. We beat a team that could be in the Rose Bowl this year," Texas A&M Coach Jackie Sherrill said.

Texas A&M will play Southern Mississippi in Jackson, Miss., at 1 p.m.

Texas Tech and Baylor open the SWC regular season when the Bears host the Red Raiders at noon (Raycom TV) on Saturday at Baylor Stadium.

In other games, Southwest Texas State is at Rice at 6 p.m., Houston hosts Sam Houston State at 7 p.m., and Oregon State is at Texas at 7 p.m.

Twins won't let up on A's

Puckett HR nips Tribe, lead is 3½

Associated Press

The Minnesota Twins are thinking about clinching early in the West, while the Toronto Blue Jays have given Detroit something to think about in the East.

The Twins used a two-run homer from Kirby Puckett to beat Cleveland 3-2 Sunday and maintain its 3½-game lead over Oakland in the American League West. The Athletics beat Kansas City 7-6, dropping the Royals six games off the pace.

"I'm just trying to help this team put away the division title," Puckett said. "We'd like to finish our home schedule strong with six more wins, and that might clinch the title before we go out on the road."

Detroit, meanwhile, lost 11-4 to the Milwaukee Brewers, who hit three homers off Tigers ace Jack Morris. The Tigers now lead Toronto by just one-half game in the AL East. The Blue Jays beat the New York Yankees 6-2.

"It's that time of the year, right?" Toronto Manager Jimy Williams said of the scoreboard watching, and relief ace Tom Henke added: "You can't help but see. It's right there in front of you."

Rangers 2, Angels 1

Darrell Porter walked with the bases loaded and one out in the bottom of the 10th inning to give Steve Howe the victory. Charlie Hough worked eight innings for Texas, allowing one run on six hits, and Howe pitched the ninth.

Scott Fletcher started the winning 10th with a single that chased Greg Minton in favor of DeWayne Buice. Fletcher stole second and went to third on a grounder before Buice walked Pete O'Brien intentionally. Buice then walked Tom O'Malley to load the bases and walked Porter on four pitches.

Twins 3, Indians 2

Les Straker allowed six hits in six innings for the Twins, and Jeff Reardon pitched the ninth for his 28th save. Puckett's 26th homer of the season came with one aboard and gave Minnesota a 3-0 lead in the sixth.

Dave Clark's two-run homer with none out in the Cleveland seventh chased Straker.

The Twins' magic number is now 10, meaning any combination of Minnesota victories or Oakland losses amounting to 10 clinches their first division title since 1970.

AL Roundup

Athletics 7, Royals 6

Oakland built a 7-0 lead with the help of four hits from Mark McGwire, a two-run pinch single by Reggie Jackson and a rare error by Royals center fielder Willie Wilson, then held on to beat Kansas City. The A's swept the three-game series in Kansas City.

Wilson dropped a fly ball in Oakland's three-run fifth, snapping his string of consecutive errorless chances at 325, five shy of Brian Downing's league record. Wilson had not made an error since Sept. 16, 1986. Jackson had his two-run hit in the inning.

The Royals scored three runs in the bottom of the fifth — two on a homer by Larry Owen — one more in the sixth on George Brett's homer and two in the seventh before Dennis Eckersley came on to earn his 14th save.

Brewers 11, Tigers 4

Paul Molitor, Robin Yount and Dale Sveum had the homers off Morris, 18-9, whose 39 homers this year trails only Bert Blyleven of Minnesota, who has given up 42. Bill Schroeder and Glenn Braggs also had homers for Milwaukee after Morris was gone.

Morris, only 6-5 since the All-Star break, gave up six runs, although only two were earned, on nine hits in six innings. Juan Nieves gave up two runs on four hits in the 5⅔ innings for Milwaukee, and Chuck Crimm pitched the final 3⅓ innings for his 10th save.

The Brewers scored four unearned runs in the second after Tigers left fielder Kirk Gibson misplayed B.J. Surhoff's line drive for an error. Gibson homered in the Detroit eighth.

Blue Jays 6, Yankees 2

George Bell, Nelson Liriano and Willie Upshaw homered as Toronto split its four-game series in New York. Bell's homer was his 46th, tying him with McGwire for the major-league lead.

Toronto broke a 2-2 tie with three runs in the seventh against rookie Al Leiter. Charlie Moore singled home a run and, with two out, Liriano hit his second homer of the season.

Jimmy Key worked into the sixth inning before getting some bases-loaded help from Dave Wells, who pitched two scoreless innings. Henke finished for Toronto, which still has seven games left with Detroit, including four in Toronto starting next Thursday.

Red Sox 5, Orioles 1
Red Sox 6, Orioles 3

Dwight Evans hit his 34th homer and Roger Clemens pitched a three-hitter for his 17th victory in the opener. In the second game, Todd Benzinger hit a two-run homer off Tom Niedenfuer to snap a 3-3 tie.

Fred Lynn hit a two-run homer in the Baltimore eighth to tie the nightcap.

The Red Sox, who had lost four of their previous five, took the season series from Baltimore 12-1. Overall, the Orioles have lost 12 of 13, and 21 of 28.

White Sox 5, Mariners 3

Carlton Fisk's run-scoring single ignited a four-run fifth inning, and the White Sox defeated Seattle behind the pitching of rookie Jack McDowell. Fisk's single scored Ivan Calderon, who had two doubles and two singles.

Pirates playing spoiler

Rally to beat Mets in 14 innings

Associated Press

The New York Mets found out the hard way how teams that are out of the pennant race can do a lot to decide the fate of contenders.

"We were playing a team that had nothing to lose and threw everything at us," losing pitcher Bob Ojeda said after the Pittsburgh Pirates beat the Mets 9-8 in 14 innings Sunday. "If they played like this all year, they'd be in first place."

The Pirates rallied from a 6-2 deficit in the sixth, a 7-6 deficit in the eighth and an 8-7 deficit in the 12th to beat the Mets on Andy Van Slyke's sacrifice fly after Barry Bonds tripled.

The loss dropped the Mets 2½ games behind first-place St. Louis in the National League East.

"We're not trying to be spoilers, we're just trying to find out what it's like to be a contender," Pirates Manager Jim Leyland said after his team left last place for the first time since June 28. "In the not-too-distant future, we want to be in the race ourselves."

The Pirates have won 11 of their last 14 games, including four of seven in the last week against the top three teams in the NL East. They moved past Chicago to exit last place in September for the first time since 1983.

Bonds, who homered to lead off the game, tripled in the 14th, and Van Slyke lofted a fly ball to medium-range right field against the Mets' drawn-in outfield, allowing Bonds to score as Darryl Strawberry's throw sailed over the catcher's head.

Astros 3, Padres 2

Houston snapped a five-game losing streak and ended San Diego's four-game winning streak when pinch-hitter Jim Pankovits broke a tie with a bases-loaded single in the ninth inning.

Mike Scott, 16-12, pitched a four-hitter for his eighth complete game, while Mark Davis, 8-8, was the loser in relief of starter Eric Nolte.

Benito Santiago, whose 23 game-hitting streak is the longest in the NL this year and ties the longest hitting streak by a rookie in modern major-league history, did not play.

NL Roundup

Cardinals 10, Cubs 2

St. Louis extended its lead in the East with a 15-hit attack that saw John Morris knock in four runs and Vince Coleman three against Chicago.

Morris, whose father died last Wednesday, returned to St. Louis from the funeral two hours before the game. He drove in a career-high four runs with two singles and an infield out.

Vince Coleman had two run-scoring groundouts and a solo homer, the third of his three-year career and his second that went over the fence.

Right-hander Bob Forsch, 11-5, allowed Andre Dawson's two-run homer in the first to win for the first time in six starts since Aug. 10. Forsch allowed three hits and struck out eight before leaving with two outs in the sixth because of a strained groin.

Phillies 4, Expos 1

Philadelphia hit three homers, one of them by winning pitcher Kevin Gross and another a record-setter by Mike Schmidt, and knocked third-place Montreal three games behind St. Louis.

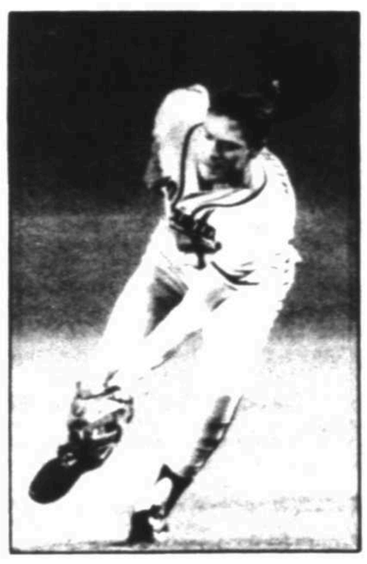

Schmidt's two-run homer in the eighth inning gave him 526 for his career and 487 as a third baseman, one more than Eddie Mathews.

Gross, 9-14, allowed five hits in 7⅓ innings for his first victory since Aug. 15. He got relief help from Steve Bedrosian, who earned his 39th save.

Reds 10, Giants 6

Cincinnati kept San Francisco from edging closer to the West Division title by scoring six runs in the ninth inning, the last four on Nick Esasky's grand slam.

The Reds, who entered the ninth trailing 6-4, snapped the Giants' seven-game winning streak. With 13 games remaining, the Giants need any combination of Cincinnati losses and San Francisco victories totaling six.

Atlanta's Dale Murphy makes the catch...

Kal Daniels, who previously had a double and two homers, singled to help spark the Reds' rally, which made a winner of reliever Rob Murphy, 7-5.

Dodgers 5, Braves 3

Los Angeles defeated San Francisco as Ralph Bryant had three hits, including a two-run single that highlighted a four-run first inning.

Rookie Tim Belcher, 3-1, allowed five hits in six innings before Alejandro Pena pitched the final three for his sixth save.

Los Angeles greeted Atlanta starter Charlie Puleo, 5-8, with four straight singles in the first, including Bryant's ground single up the middle with the bases loaded. John Shelby followed with a sacrifice fly and Mike Scioscia made it 4-2 with another single.

Collusion ruling expected

NEW YORK (AP) — The head of baseball's Player Relations Committee says today's ruling by arbitrator Tom Roberts on alleged collusion against free agents by owners will not have much of an impact.

"I don't expect things to change much, no matter how the decision goes," said Barry Rona, executive director of the group that represents the owners. "If we lose, I don't expect the clubs' conduct on free agents will change much."

Meanwhile, Donald Fehr, the executive director of the players union, said Rona's comments were a message to clubs that even if they lose the case, "they are not to pursue free agents."

After hearing 32 days of testimony and poring through 5,682 pages of transcript and 288 exhibits, Roberts was scheduled to announce his decision on whether baseball owners are guilty of collusion against free agents.

Roberts will rule on an action brought by the Major League Players Association against the owners. The players say owners conspired to restrict the movement of free-agent players in violation of their collective bargaining agreement.

The action was filed on behalf of 62 free agents in 1985. A similar action covering 1986 free agents currently is being heard by arbitrator George Nicolau.

None of the 1985 free agents — including players such as Kirk Gibson, Carlton Fisk, Butch Wynegar and Phil and Joe Niekro — received offers from teams other than the one they were with the previous season.

Observers are split on how Roberts' ruling will effect the game. Many have said a decision in favor of the players could have far-reaching effects on the game and its financial structure. Others, including Rona, have said a ruling for either side would create little change.

The players association has asked that if they win the case, 1985 free agents should be able to void their contracts and seek damages in arbitration hearings.

NFL ROUNDUP

Eagles 27, Saints 17

Philadelphia's defense forced five turnovers and had three sacks, while Randall Cunningham passed for two scores. New Orleans, seekings its first 2-0 start ever, led 10-0, but a 30-yard field goal by Paul McFadden and Cunningham's 19-yard touchdown pass to Mike Quick and 25-yard pass to Kenny Jackson triggered the victory.

The Saints were held to 36 yards on the ground, with Rueben Mayes limited to 20 yards on 13 carries.

Raiders 27, Lions 7

Rusty Hilger, the Raiders' maligned quarterback, passed for 234 yards and one touchdown and Marcus Allen rushed for 79 yards and another score. Hilger, who completed 20 of 39 passes, put the Raiders ahead for good with a 14-yard scoring pass to Dokie Williams at 2:14 of the third quarter, shortly after Williams recovered Karl Bernard's fumble of the second-half kickoff at the Detroit 23.

The Lions had the ball in Raiders territory on 10 separate possessions, but could score only once, on a 2-yard pass from Chuck Long to Scott Williams following a blocked punt.

Seahawks 43, Chiefs 14

John L. Williams ran for 112 yards, his first 100-yard game in the NFL, and Dave Krieg passed for three touchdowns in Seattle's romp. Norm Johnson kicked a team-record five field goals, from 34, 25, 46, 27 and 49 yards for Seattle.

The Chiefs fumbled four times, including three times in the third quarter, when the Seahawks got 20 points.

Krieg had touchdown passes of nine and 17 yards to the Daryl Turner in the second-quarter, and also passed two yards to tight end Mike Tice for a score in the third quarter.

Rookie linebacker Brian Bosworth of the Seahawks wore the No. 44 he used at University of Oklahoma after his agent, Gary Wichard, obtained a one-game temporary restraining order against the NFL in Seattle District Court Friday. NFL officials had ruled Bosworth had to wear a number in the 50s or 90s during the regular season because he is a linebacker. Bosworth wore No. 55 in Denver last Sunday.

Chargers 28, Cardinals 24

San Diego built a 28-0 halftime lead as Lionel James returned a punt 81 yards for a touchdown and ran seven yards for another score. The Chargers converted two St. Louis turnovers into 14 points, with Chargers linebacker Billy Ray Smith producing an interception and a fumble recovery.

But St. Louis quarterback Neil Lomax, who completed 32 of 61 passes for 457 yards and three touchdowns, rallied his team to all of its points in the second half. Lomax's 17-yard TD pass to Stump Mitchell with 1:48 remaining completed a 10-play, 80-yard drive and was the fourth straight scoring drive for St. Louis.

Lomax then got the Cardinals down to the San Diego 5 after a 19-yard punt return by Vai Sikahema, but on fourth down, a wide-open Earl Ferrell dropped a pass at the goal line.

Vikings 21, Rams 16

Wade Wilson's third touchdown pass of the game, a 41-yarder to Hassan Jones with 30 seconds remaining, gave Minnesota its dramatic win. Wilson, who is starting in place of the injured Tommy Kramer, drove the Vikings 80 yards to the winning score. He hit Jones for 20 yards on fourth-and-16 from the Minnesota 25 with 1:10 remaining, then Jones got behind Los Angeles cornerback LeRoy Irvin for the touchdown.

Johnnie Johnson blocked a Vikings punt and raced 19 yards for a Rams touchdown early in the fourth quarter.

Bears 20, Buccaneers 3

Walter Payton's 1-yard dive for a touchdown gave the 33-year old veteran the rushing touchdown record. But Payton, the NFL's all-time rushing leader, gained only 24 yards in 15 carries.

Neal Anderson, who teams with Payton in the Bears' backfield, made up for that with 115 yards, including a 27-yard touchdown run in the second quarter.

Otherwise, the Chicago offense sputtered with two fumbles and two interceptions. Payton did catch a 9-yard TD pass from Mike Tomczak.

Tampa Bay's Steve DeBerg, who passed for five touchdowns against Atlanta last week, was replaced in the fourth quarter by top draftee Vinny Testaverde after going 18-for-36 for 195 yards. Testaverde, who made his NFL debut, completed one of four passes for 14 yards.

Falcons 21, Redskins 20

A muffed extra point snap was the difference as Atlanta upset Washington. Scott Campbell passed for two touchdowns in his first Atlanta start and Gerald Riggs got the winning TD on a 4-yard run with 6:47 remaining.

Campbell, who replaced David Archer after a 48-10 loss at Tampa Bay last week, completed 17 of 35 passes for 271 yards. Riggs ran for 120 yards.

Broncos 17, Packers 17

With 1:15 left in overtime, Packers linebacker Brian Noble stopped a Broncos drive by intercepting John Elway at the Green Bay 24 and returning it 10 yards. But Davis fumbled the ball back on the next play.

Denver hurt itself with six turnovers on the muddy field, including three interceptions of Elway, who hit on 30 of 48 passes for 285 yards. Rookie Don Majkowski, starting his first NFL game, hit 10 of 20 passes for 121 yards for Green Bay.

San Francisco's Jerry Rice snags a last-second touchdown pass from Joe Montana to secure a 27-26 win over Cincinnati Sunday. The Bengals' Eric Thomas comes in to late to defend the pass.

COWBOYS

The Giants' last-ditch drive came after they stopped Herschel Walker on a fourth-and-goal play at the 1 with 1:52 to play, a coaching decision that left Tom Landry open for second-guessers.

"They didn't have any timeouts left and I felt even if we didn't get the score they still had 99 yards to go," said Landry.

Most of Landry's players applauded the each's decision, saying it showed confidence in them.

The move almost backfired, but Allegre's miss made the decision a moot point. It also left Dallas tied for first in the NFC East with Washington, Philadelphia and St. Louis.

And that was something Giants guard Billy Ard made a note of for those ready to write the Giants off in 1987.

"Hey, this is different year," Ard said. "We're 0-2 and a game out of first place. Next week week we win, we're 1-2 and if a couple of other teams lose we're right back in it. It's not like everyone is 2-0."

The Giants played most of the game without guard Chris Godfrey, who sprained a knee. Running back Joe Morris and linebacker Lawrence Taylor also missed some time with slight concussions.

Dallas played the second half without guard Nate Newton, who also suffered a sprained knee.

OILERS

That set up the winning drive, which began ominously for Buffalo with an offensive interference penalty and an incomplete pass.

The drive ended 54 yards later when Kelly beat a Houston blitz, hitting Ron Harmon with a 10-yard touchdown pass with 57 seconds left in the game.

The defense came up big one more time when Ron Pitts intercepted a Moon pass with 19 seconds remaining to snuff out any Oiler hopes.

Kelly's heroics stunned the Oilers.

"I never thought the whole game that we'd lose," said Moon, who also threw scoring passes to Givins and Drew Hill. "When we went up by 10, I felt pretty comfortable."

But the Oilers were hurt by 10 penalties that cost them 113 yards. Two, including a 33-yard pass-interefence call that gave the Bills the ball on the Houston 5, aided the drive that led to Riddick's fourth-quarter touchdown.

"I did not think we'd do the foolish things we did today," Oiler Coach Jerry Glanville said. "I thought we were past that. Watching it, I could not believe what I was seeing."

The loss obscured superb performances by Houston halfback Mike Rozier and Zendejas. Rozier scored on an 8-yard run and rushed for 150 yards, and Zendejas kicked three field goals, including a 52-yarder that tied a personal best.

Jets know Pats are balanced

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — Bob Crable isn't interested in statistics. He knows what he sees and feels on the field.

On that field tonight, when Crable and the New York Jets play New England in what is expected to be the final NFL game before a threatened players' strike, Crable has seen and felt the power and precision of the Patriots' attack.

"They've had a balanced attack as far back as I can remember," the Jets' sixth-year linebacker said. "They try to run the ball, and when they do it well, they can run time off the clock as well as anyone."

The NFL's numbers say the Patriots were the worst rushing team in the league last year. They ran for only 1,373 yards, averaging a mere 2.9 yards per attempt. There were no 100-yard games for any runner.

Last week, in the season-opener against Miami, however, New England ran for 159 yards, 95 by Tony Collins.

"Collins is quick and he cuts back well," Jets safety Harry Hamilton said. "He's a quality back."

As is Craig James, according to Jets Coach Joe Walton.

"I recall that James was hurt last year against us," Walton said, "and that might have effected them. When he is healthy and Collins is healthy, they are very dangerous."

Herzeg: 'Just a slap in face'

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) — Houston Oilers General Manager Ladd Herzeg has released a statement admitting he slapped a man while protesting loud music at a wedding reception being held in the hotel where his team stayed on the eve of their loss to the Buffalo Bills.

But Herzeg, 41, denied that he dropped his pants or shoved another wedding guest during the altercation Saturday night, as some members of the wedding party alleged.

Herzeg, who is also executive vice president of the Oilers, was arrested and charged with misdemeanor assault in connection with the alleged fight with the brother of the bride.

Herzeg, whose Oilers lost 34-30 to the Bills Sunday, was arrested about 11:30 p.m., booked into jail and later released on $100 bail on charges of third-degree assault, officials said. His court date is set for 9 a.m. Tuesday.

The wedding reception was being held in a courtyard that some of the Oilers' rooms overlooked. Herzeg said he had been assured the music would stop at 11 p.m., which it did. But the music started up again shortly before 11:30, he said.

Herzeg said he was concerned about the team getting a good night's sleep.

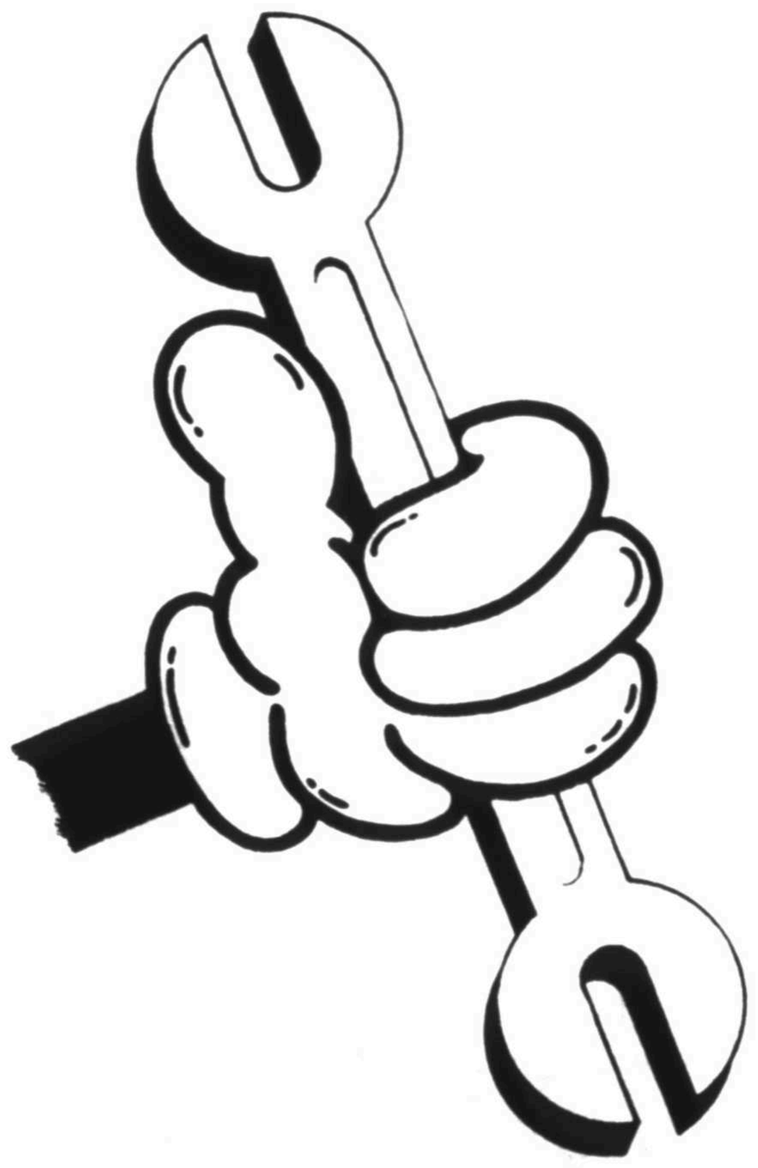

"I went down to talk to the band leader to see what time the music was going to stop," Herzeg told reporters. "And somebody grabbed me and he looked drunk and I slapped him upside the face. Then I went upstairs."

Herzeg denied several charges by members of the wedding party, including an allegation that he dropped his pants and "mooned" reception guests.

Navy's Robinson still uncertain after visit

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — David Robinson, the San Antonio Spurs' top draft pick, had the run of the city, but he still isn't convinced he wants to play for the struggling franchise.

Robinson, his brother, Chuck, their parents, Ambrose and Freda Robinson, and Robinson's agent, Lee Frentress, spent the weekend touring the city, meeting Spurs officials and players and city officials.

Robinson said Sunday that he had a great weekend, but is not ready to make a decision.

"I'm trying to stay neutral, but it's hard because all the weekend has been wonderful and it's great to be wanted," the 7-1 Navy center said at a news conference.

"I'm not trying to pressure myself," he said. "I can definitely say I have a good impression of the city. This is a fantastic place and we all love it here."

Robinson and Spurs Coach Bob Weiss talked about the franchise Sunday.

"They have a positive feeling about where they want the team to go and they feel I can be an integral part of it," Robinson said about Spurs officials.

Robinson had been unable to visit the city because of his military commitment at Kings Bay, Ga., and his participation in the Pan American Games.

The Spurs are coming off their worst season at 24-58 and are trying to rebuild the team with young players such as current players Alvin Robertson, Johnny Dawkins and Walter Berry.

Mayor Henry Cisneros, who has helped attract numerous businesses to the city, was enlisted to encourage Robinson to join the Spurs.

Cisneros said he was impressed with Robinson's athletic and academic prowess, but despite the city's red-carpet treatment, Robinson should not be pressured into making a quick decision.

"We've done everything we could except widen the San Antonio River to bring in a battleship," Cisneros said. "He can be good for San Antonio and San Antonio can be good for him and it can be a good match."

Weiss said he did not know what to expect from Robinson, but he was encouraged after their conference.

"I think he is open-minded and I think favorably so," Weiss said. "He's not going to say anything nor should he. It's not a good bargaining position and I don't think he's made up his mind yet."

Fentress would not allow Robinson to interpret NBA regulations about his eligibility.

The NBA, in an agreement with its players union, has said that San Antonio would have a year to sign him, whether he plays or not.

The league, however, also has a by-law that would make Robinson a free agent if he hasn't signed within two years. The Spurs are hoping on that rule to avoid Robinson's abandoning ship.

"It's something that right now doesn't need to be addressed," Robinson said, when asked how he interpreted the rule.

Four tied in for Open lead

FRANKLIN, Wis. (AP) — Four golfers held a share of the lead as rain sent the $600,000 Greater Milwaukee Open into a fifth day — but only the weather could determine if the rain-plagued tournament would be completed.

Tied at 15-under-par when play was suspended Sunday were Dan Pohl, Bill Kratzert, Wayne Levi and Gary Hallberg. All had at least 11 holes to complete on the 7,030-yard, par-72 Tuckaway Country Club course.

Officials scheduled play to resume at 8:30 a.m. CDT today but the forecast called for cloudy skies with showers developing, especially in the afternoon.

"We've only got about 11 holes to get in," an optimistic GMO President Gordon Kress said, adding that he had been assured the course would be in shape unless something drastic occurred, such as an all-night downpour.

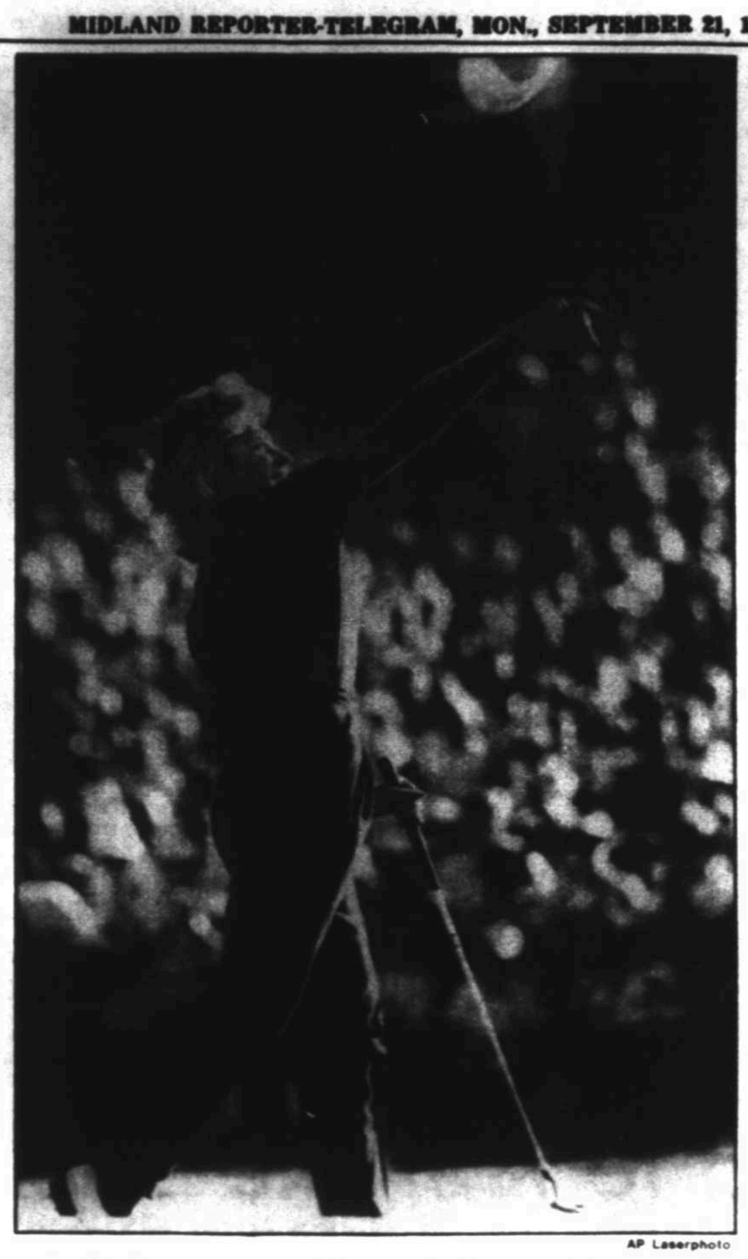

The main problem confronting tournament officials was the fact that half the golfers — 15 of 29 groups to be exact — managed to complete the fourth round Sunday.

Under PGA rules, that meant the round had to be completed, if not today then at some other time in the future, possibly in October. Otherwise, they might have simply shortened the tournament to three days.

"Continuing play Tuesday is not an option," said PGA spokesman Dave Lancer, explaining that contracts for the tournament do not run through Tuesday.

For some golfers, including Kratzert, the delay meant canceling lucrative appearances at golf outings. George Burns, who had fallen far off the pace, dropped out of today's action because of a scheduled appearance, Lancer said.

Pohl, scheduled to participate in the Ryder Cup competition that starts with practice rounds Tuesday at Dublin, Ohio, said he had hoped to fly home and visit his family on the day off.

Braves ask for domed stadium

ATLANTA (AP) — Officers of the Atlanta Braves baseball club have asked legislative leaders to consider building a multipurpose domed stadium — not just a football stadium — in Atlanta.

House Speaker Tom Murphy and other legislators met with Braves officials last week.

The talks were an outgrowth of proposals to build a domed football stadium for the National Football League's Atlanta Falcons.

Rested Stephenson rallies to beat Lopez

Safeco Classic

KENT, Wash. (AP) — While most of Jan Stephenson's competition is ready to call it a year, she's only just begun.

Stephenson won the 15th tournament of her 14-year LPGA career, closing with a 68 Sunday in the $225,000 Safeco Classic to beat LPGA Hall of Famer Nancy Lopez.

Stephenson's 277 total was 11 under par for 72 holes on the 6,222-yard Meridian Valley Country Club course and a stroke better than Lopez, who shot a 5-under 67 in the final round.

The effort was worth $33,750 for Stephenson. Lopez collected $20,812 in her last tournament of the year, which she ended by finishing no worse than second in her last four tournaments.

An automoble accident in April resulted in four broken and two cracked ribs for Stephenson in addition to pulled back muscles and ligaments, putting her out of action for two months.

"Now I'm fresh and everyone else is tired," she said. "It's been like a new season after having two months off."

Missie Berteotti, who shared the second-round lead with Stephenson and 54-hole lead with Cindy Hill, finished with a par 72 for third place at 280. Chris Johnson's 68 gave her fourth place at 281. Hill sagged to a 74 to tie at 282 with Missie McGeorge, who fired her second 67 of the tournament.

Lopez won the Cellular One-Ping Championship the previous weekend in Portland, Ore., when Stephenson missed a four-foot putt on the final hole, missing out on a playoff and finishing in a three-way tie for second place.

"Last week I played ahead of Nancy," Stephenson said. "I had a two-shot lead and bogeyed 16 and 18. This time it was up to me. There's a lot of satisfaction. I had to get even."

Stephenson still had some putting problems as late as the third round Saturday, when the longest she sank was a 5-footer.

She birdied the second hole with a 10-foot putt and fourth with a 20-footer, then missed a 4½-foot birdie try on the fifth.

"The first four-footer of the day is pretty crucial for me," she said. I wanted to be 2 under after nine holes, so I was ahead of schedule. Then I started to think, it's coming back to haunt me."

Java Gold wins Marlboro

NEW YORK (AP) — The $1 million Jockey Club Gold Cup on Oct. 10 is next for Java Gold, the outstanding 3-year-old colt who has added the Marlboro Cup to his list to triumphs.

"He's beat the young and the old; he's carried weight," trainer Mack Miller said after Sunday's $750,000 Marlboro at Belmont Park.

Miller said he isn't certain whether Java Gold will race on Breeders' Cup Day at Hollywood Park Nov. 21. But it is excpected a Gold Cup victory would enable Miller to retire Java Gold for the season and perhaps for good.

Not only did the Marlboro victory solidify Java Gold as the nation's top 3-year-old, it put the Rokeby Stable colt in the running for Horse of the Year honors.

Java Gold was sidelined with a virus and cough in late April and missed the Triple Crown series. He now owns a four-race winning streak, including the Whitney and Travers at Saratoga.

Ronstadt expanding her repertoire

By TODD EVERETT
Hearst News Service

Linda Ronstadt first achieved world renown for her performances of rock 'n' roll and country music. In the past several years, she's branched out considerably. With the esteemed arranger and conductor Nelson Riddle, she's recorded three well-received albums of standard pop songs from the '30s through '50s.

Her most recent album was the best-selling "Trio," with Dolly Parton and Emmylou Harris. She sings with Chuck Berry in the upcoming feature film, "Hail! Hail! Rock 'n' Roll." And she's sung operetta and opera, starring in New York productions of "The Pirates of Penzance" and "La Boheme."

But these days, Ronstadt's working on a project that takes her back to her childhood in Tucson, Ariz. She's recording an album of traditional Mexican music, backed by a band of virtuoso mariachi musicians.

During a break in the recording sessions, Ronstadt took a few minutes to discuss her lifelong affair with Mexican music. She did so with bubbly enthusiasm, racing from one thought to another and eager to share what she's learned while preparing the album.

"Our family always considered ourselves Mexican. That was our culture. I recently went with two girlfriends to a school in Cuernavaca, to get a crash course in basic grammar. We were all from Latin families, and all grew up eating tamales. So we were astounded to discover that we were (considered) just American girls. We'd say, 'Our families are Mexican.' And they'd say, 'Oh no, you aren't — you're from over the border!

"A huge number of Germans settled in Northern Mexico in the last century. My great-grandfather came in 1810, and married into a Spanish family. My grandfather was born in the middle part of the 19th century, close to Magdalena in Sonora, which is a couple of hours south of Tucson.

"I DIDN'T grow up speaking Spanish. My father speaks Spanish and my older brother speaks Spanish a little bit, but he learned it in school. When I was growing up, there was a trend to discourage children from speaking Spanish in school. They were spanked if they didn't speak English.

"My father sang only in Spanish. We got serenades on our birthdays. Whenever there was a little party, we'd all sit on the floor, my father would get his guitar out and we'd all sing."

She recalled that when she moved to Los Angeles more than 20 years ago, she brought with her a record, "La Negra," that she wanted to base a pop record on.

"It was a folk tune from Veracruz, and a great piece of music — rhythmically, one of the most interesting things I'd ever heard. The Mexican radio stations used to play this copycat rock 'n' roll. It sounded like American rock 'n' roll, but was in Spanish. And I thought, 'Why would they want to copy all these basic southern American blues rhythms when they've got these wonderful rhythms away down south in their own country?' 'La Bamba' is from the same region.

"When I first came out here, people would ask who influenced me. They'd be thinking of people like Chuck Berry, whom I'd eventually get to, but my first answer would be Lola Beltran. None of the music press had ever heard of her, so they'd either misspell her name, or not mention it at all.

"She's the greatest singer in Mexico — a world-class singer, on the level of Edith Piaf or Billie Holiday. My father was a huge fan of hers, so we always had her music around the house. She sings with a mariachi and does a lot of traditional stuff.

"WE SANG together in Tucson, which was a real thrill for me. She defines what the vocal tradition is for women, and there's nobody who's been able to touch her."

Ronstadt has recorded a few songs in Spanish, but "never Mexican music, which is quite different. While rock 'n' roll is very much on the beat, Mexican music is stretched all over the place — it's more like Puccini."

She points out that Anglo listeners tend to misunderstand mariachi music.

"The bands are so fabulous. To a lot of people, that music means chips and beer. They don't realize that the music is a carefully preserved tradition, and that the musicians require a great deal of subtlety and skill.

"The mariachis started in the late '20s and early '30s, when string bands started using the guitarron (a large, heavy-stringed guitarlike instrument) for the bass sounds, instead of the big harp they'd been using. And then they added trumpets. When radio broadcasts started, the bands needed instruments that would cut through the airwaves.

"It's become an orchestra. That combination of horns and strings playing together in close harmonies is just an incredible, wonderful thing.

"About a year ago, before last Labor Day's concert, a hospital in Tucson invited me to come and perform at their fund-raising festival. There were songs that I'd always wanted to sing, but I didn't know any of them well enough. And then they told me that Ruben Fuentes would do the arrangements for me. He's really the godfather of music in Mexico, who has always helped arrange for Mariachi Vargas, which is generally acknowledged to be the finest mariachi in the world."

AFTER LAST year's Tucson appearance, she performed with Mariachi Vargas in Los Angeles and in San Antonio. Those concerts led to the album of traditional Mexican music she's currently recording.

"One of the reasons I did those gigs was that I figured that if I met Ruben Fuentes, he'd do the record with me. We met and he was really surprised — he probably thought that I was going to select contemporary material, and I picked out all of these old folk songs.

Carl Reiner proud to feel like 'top banana' again

ENTERTAINMENT

By BOB THOMAS

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Carl Reiner is that oddity in the world of entertainment — a performer of rare comedic talent who is willing to subordinate his own ego to enhance the work of others.

Over the years he has illustrated that tendency by playing second banana to Sid Caesar ("Your Show of Shows") and Mel Brooks ("The 2,000-year-old Man"). He created and occasionally appeared in the classic TV comedy series, "The Dick Van Dyke Show."

In more recent times Reiner has written and/or directed films for such comics as Van Dyke ("The Comic"), George Burns ("Oh, God!"), Steve Martin ("The Jerk," "All of Me") and John Candy ("Summer Rental").

Reiner's new film is "Summer School," a high school farce starring Mark Harmon.

Mark Harmon a comic? Mark Harmon, People magazine's "sexiest man alive," the libertine Dr. Robert Caldwell of "St. Elsewhere," the beer philosopher in those TV commercials?

"Casting Mark was my idea," Reiner said. "I had seen him play the killer Ted Bundy in the TV movie, 'The Deliberate Stranger,' so I knew he could act. Then I happened to see him on a talk show where he was asked about being 'the sexiest man alive.' He giggled and said, 'Come on, now.' I thought he handled himself very well."

When Reiner suggested Harmon for "Summer School," Paramount production chief Ned Tanen responded, "Do you think he can do it?" Reiner thought he could. Harmon's response was the same: "Do you think I can do it?" Again Reiner was affirmative.

"Mark is like a smart quarterback," observed the filmmaker. "He listens to instructions from the coach, then he carries them out with his own skills." Harmon played football at the University of California at Los Angeles.

Reiner admired his star's malleability, also his fearlessness. Four weeks before the start of "Summer School," Harmon broke his shoulder in a horse riding accident while shooting a beer commercial. It appeared he might lose the movie, but Reiner arranged for the classroom scenes — Harmon plays a teacher of remedial English — to be filmed first. Even so, the actor was in constant pain.

The brief role of the English teacher who quits when he wins a lottery is played by Reiner himself. He often makes such Hitchcock-like cameos in his films, and that's enough for him.

Reiner didn't always play second banana.

"I was an actor before I went into the Army," he recalled. "But they couldn't find plays for me, so I started getting up in rec halls, and I was the main comedian. Then I got into Maurice Evans' entertainment outfit, and I went overseas as the top comedian.

"After the war I was a top banana in 'Call Me Mister,' a Broadway revue about people coming back from the service. Then I slowly slipped from top bananaship. My next show was 'Inside USA,' in which I understudied Jack Haley. After a couple more shows in which I was a...top banana, I met Sid Caesar."

Reiner was born in the Bronx 64 years ago and started work at 16 as a machinist's helper. He took drama lessons at night, and his first job was singing second tenor in a tour of "The Merry Widow." His experiences in a summer theater in Rochester, N.Y., later produced a novel, "Enter Laughing," which provided his debut as a film director in 1957.

Between 1953 and 1967, Reiner collected 11 Emmys for his work on "Your Show of Shows" and "The Dick Van Dyke Show." Today his public performances are largely limited to the cameos in his own films.

Does he miss the laughter and the applause?

"I still have my moments," he said. "For instance, for 'Summer School,' I did 10-minute television satellite interviews — 45 of them in two days. Each one is a performance; I have to get charged up for them. And I also get my kicks by emceeing dinners and benefits here in town. They scare me because I don't prepare for them; I work without a net.

"I'm also beginning to feel like a top banana. There has been enough input from the world that says, 'Hey, you did OK.' For instance, recently the Museum of Broadcasting had a showing of the original Dick Van Dyke pilot, which was called 'Head of the Family,' and the first episode of 'The Dick Van Dyke Show.'

"I didn't want to go because I thought, 'Who wants to pay $6 to see this old stuff?' But when I came out, the audience went crazy. They really were nuts. I never got a reaction like that in my life.

"Most actors have a lack of self-esteem, even though they looked like they've got a lot of it," he said. "Yes, I enjoy hearing the applause."

But he also enjoys providing others with applause. Next he will guide the Tony award-winning musical comedy star Robert Lindsay of Broadway's "Me and My Girl." After seeing the show, Reiner was inspired to write a script for Lindsay, "Bert Rigby, You're a Fool," which he will film for Lorimar.

Neighbors win state lottery

CROWNSVILLE, Md. (AP) — Ruth Dean and Alda Keene are living on easy street. The two women have each won over a million dollars in the Maryland lottery over the past two years. They live just a few houses apart.

"I know the chances are in the millions to one. On the same street in the same neighborhood, that's very unusual," said lottery spokesman Carlton Dotson. "In fact, it may be a first. It must be a first."

Mrs. Dean, 39, is the latest member of the neighborly winner's circle. She found out last Saturday that she had won $2.5 million of a $5 million jackpot. Mrs. Keene won $1.3 million in 1985, splitting the money with four others.

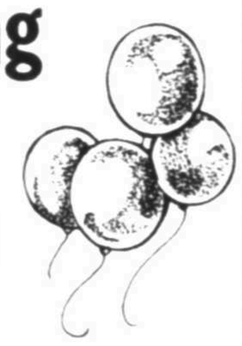

Mrs. Keene, 70, said she was as astonished to learn that her neighbor won the lottery, too.

"I've got a granddaughter who lives next door," she said. "She's hoping it'll go up and down the street."

Dollar stronger

LONDON (AP) — The dollar strengthened slightly in Europe and Japan in quiet trading today as markets awaited this week's talks in Washington among finance ministers of the leading industrial democracies. Gold weakened.

The dollar rose 0.35 yen to a closing 143.08 in Tokyo, helped by Japanese press reports that the talks were likely to reaffirm a target range for the dollar. It later was quoted in London at 143.25 yen.

Other dollar rates at mid-morning, compared with late Friday:

1.5000 Swiss francs, up from 1.4965.

-6.0280 French francs, up from 6.0225.

Iraq signs pipeline contract

Billion-dollar project strategic

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — In an effort to increase oil exports to pre-war levels, Iraq has signed a billion-dollar contract to build a pipeline across Saudi Arabia to the Red Sea.

Iraqi Oil Minister Issam Abdul-Rahim told reporters the 620-mile line, "one of the most strategic and important pipelines which Iraq has built," would be capable of transporting 1.65 million barrels a day to the Saudi terminal of Yanbu on the Red Sea.

Before the Iran-Iraq war began in September 1980, Iraq's oil exports amounted to 3.6 million barrels a day. Abdul-Rahim said production now was more than 2 million barrels a day. Analysts say it is about 2.5 million barrels a day.

Iraqi officials and a consortium of Italian, French, Japanese and South Korean companies signed the pipeline contract Sunday in a ceremony at the cultural center of the Oil Ministry.

Iran has attacked Iraq's oil ports on the gulf since the early days of the war. Iraq resorted to pipelines to export its oil, badly needing the revenue to bankroll the war effort.

An Iraqi pipeline through Syria to the Mediterranean has been shut down since 1982 because of a dispute between Iraq and Damascus, which supports Iran.

Two pipelines from Iraq through Turkey to the Mediterranean have a total capacity of 1.5 million barrels a day.

An existing pipeline from southern Iraq to a Saudi pipeline linking Yanbu and Ras Tanurah terminal on the gulf takes about 500,000 barrels a day of Iraqi crude.

Laserographic

Kuwait and Saudi Arabia also sell about 350,000 barrels a day on behalf of Iraq. That oil is extracted from the neutral zone on the border of the three countries.

Work on the new pipeline is beginning immediately and should be completed by Sept. 19, 1989, officials said.

The companies that won the contract are Saipem of Italy; Mitsubishi Corp. and Mitsubishi Heavy Industries of Japan; Hyundai of South Korea and FTIE Capaj and Sider Export of France.

Abdul-Rahim declined to give an exact figure of the cost, but said "it will cost a billion (dollars) plus."

Conservation technology key in energy projections

By JEFF NESMITH
Cox News Service

WASHINGTON — New energy-saving technologies, such as a superinsulated house and a car that gets 98 miles per gallon, could mean world economic growth can be sustained at the current rate through 2020 without any increase in energy consumption, according to a new report.

Energy-efficient technologies already in existence could reduce per capita energy use in industrial countries by 50 percent while economic growth continues, according to the report, "Energy for a Sustainable World."

Developing countries could reach the standard of living enjoyed in the mid-1970s by Western Europe with only a modest 30 percent increase in per capita energy consumption, the report states.

"Our analysis indicates that the global population could roughly double, that living standards could be improved far beyond satisfying basic needs in developing countries and that economic growth in the industrialized countries could continue without increase in the level of global energy use in 2020 much above the present level," said authors of the study.

Written by an international team from the University of Sao Paulo, Brazil, the University of Lund, Sweden, the Indian Institute of Science and Princeton University, the report was released last week by the World Resources Institute here.

The authors' findings are in stark contrast to the view that economic growth is tied to energy consumption. The latter view has resulted in global energy projections that increase from two- to three-fold by 2020.

Traditional energy projections attempt to establish a relationship between energy use and economic growth, then extend this figure into the future. The study released last week concentrates on the end uses of energy and asks how those needs can be met more efficiently.

Benefits of a low-energy future would be many, the study concluded.

Three major problems might be eased: insecurity arising from overdependence by industrial countries on Middle East oil, the threat of global climate change from the atmospheric buildup of carbon dioxide from burning fossil fuels and the threat of nuclear weapons proliferation that accompanies the spread of nuclear power around the world.

Among the opportunities the study identifies for replacing new energy sources with new energy conservation are:

— Superinsulated houses now coming on the market, which make it possible to heat a house with 1,300 square feet of floor space in the New York City area with about $160 worth of electricity per year.

Texas cities expect to fare well in efforts to gain jobs

WASHINGTON (AP) — Houston and Dallas will provide almost a million new jobs between them by the turn of the century, according to a recent nationwide economic survey.

Harris County ranks third with 560,000 new jobs and Dallas County fourth with 428,000 on a list of 46 counties across the United States that are projected to provide one of every three new jobs between now and the year 2000.

NPA Data Services Inc., a Washington-based research firm, said the 46 counties will all have job increases of 100,000 or more, led by Los Angeles which is expected to gain some 805,000 new jobs in that period.

Los Angeles is also the county expected to see the nation's largest overall population growth in the time span, and most of those counties with top job prospects are those with leading population growth, the study commented.

Five of Texas' six largest counties are on the 46-county list.

Bexar County (San Antonio) is 19th with a projection of 165,000 new jobs over the next 13 years; Tarrant County (Fort Worth) is 20th with 164,000; and Travis County (Austin) is 28th with 149,000.

"Very large proportions of growth in both population and employment have been occurring in a relatively small number of counties. This pattern is projected to continue into the future," said the report by Carlton M. Strong and Nestor E. Terleckyj.

Total U.S. job growth is expected to be 25.1 million between 1987 and the year 2000, the report indicated, with the 46 counties supplying 9.4 million of those.

While many metropolitan areas are gaining populations, changes in the economic structure of those regions are occurring with the movement of job growth to the suburbs, the report observes.

Developers big factor in thrift crisis

DALLAS (AP) — Two dozen troubled Texas savings and loans that contributed to the federal thrift insurance fund's plunge into insolvency were owned by real estate developers who bought into the troubled industry in the early 1980s, a newspaper reported.

Entrepreneurs with real estate development backgrounds either own or owned 20 of the state's 24 most deeply insolvent S&Ls, the Dallas Times Herald said in a copyright story Sunday.

Most of the remaining four floundered in emulating the strategies of those 20, it said.

One developer-thrift owner planned to open a branch office on the moon, and another loaned $3 million to buy the Rolls-Royce collection of Bhagwan Shree Rajneesh, the newspaper said.

A third financed a real estate project for a private overpass on a 10-lane Dallas freeway, while another operated a chain of barbecue stands, it said.

Most of the 24 institutions have lost all their owners' investments and $3.8 billion of depositors' money, the Times Herald said. The losses were replaced partially with emergency loans from the Federal Home Loan Bank of Dallas, which has advanced at least $2.4 billion to the ailing S&Ls, the Times Herald said.

The two dozen savings and loans stumbled through the first quarter of 1987 losing money at the rate of $8.94 million a day, the newspaper said.

All of the institutions are under the strict supervision if not outright control of federal and state regulators, and seven of them have been declared insolvent, the newspaper said.

Federal Home Loan Bank reports dated March 31 show the Texas 24 have repossessed $2.7 billion worth of property from delinquent borrowers. Thrift consultants say repossessed properties have increased since March and will cause further heavy losses for the S&Ls, which must either keep them in hopes that values will increase or sell a loss.

Thrift experts say the two dozen S&Ls are at the center of the Texas thrift crisis, in which risky lending and outright fraud virtually bankrupted the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp. and required Congress to pump $10.8 billion into the agency that insures S&L deposits up to $100,000.

Landowners prepare for betting boom

HOUSTON (AP) — Although Texas voters have yet to decide if they want pari-mutuel betting on thoroughbred racing, some local developers and landowners are ready and waiting for the proposal to pass this fall.

Proponents contend a racing industry would be a shot in the arm for the ailing economy in the Houston area, but opponents argue that gambling is immoral and might contribute to vice and crime.

The Harris County Commissioners Court has agreed that a local option providing for thoroughbred racing in the Houston area will be included on the Nov. 3 ballot along with the statewide racing issue.

If race track betting is approved, the Fulshear-Simonton area west of Houston is expected to flourish as a regional center for horse farms and thoroughbred breeding and training facilities, The Houston Post reported Sunday.

And several ranchers in the area are prepared for rapid conversion to horse farms, according to industry sources.

Figures offered by the Texans for Economic Development Committee show that a single track would provide 1,200 permanent jobs along with $30 million in annual revenue for the Houston area.

The Texas Department of Agriculture estimates that horse racing would bring $1.25 billion a year to the Texas economy besides providing jobs for 10,981 people.

Ed McMahon, Houston builder, developer, rancher and entrepreneur, owns a house and barn complex on a 400-acre ranch in the Fulshear area he plans to sell for use as a horse farm if pari-mutuel betting is approved this fall.

If voters reject the proposal, McMahon said the ranch will be subdivided for luxury housing. But McMahon said he believes that the benefits of a racing industry outweigh the possible drawbacks.

'Yup-mobile' added to gas guzzlers list

WASHINGTON (AP) — Volvo, the Swedish car that is advertised as safe and durable and is a favorite of young professionals, has two models on the government's list of gas-guzzlers, those automobiles subject to a federal excise tax because of their poor fuel economy.

Volvo's 780 and 760-740 series will be liable under the 1975 law designed to encourage people to buy fuel-efficient cars. The two lines received 17 miles per gallon in the city and 20 mph on the highway, according to the Environmental Protection Agency's annual ratings, released today.

Fred Hammond, spokesman for Volvo's U.S. headquarters in Rockleigh, N.J., said buyers will have to pay an extra $650 for each of the lines.

"I don't think we're too happy about it," he said.

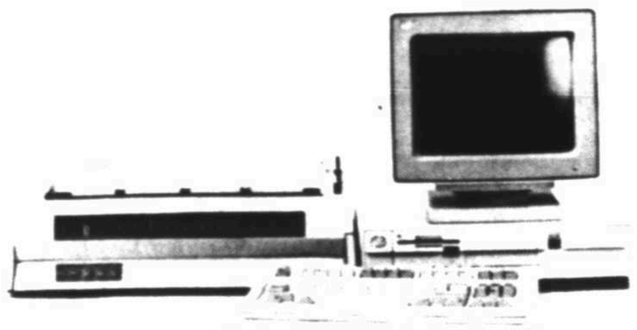

The EPA list contained little that was new in the ranks of the most economical cars. For the third straight year, a Japanese-made Chevrolet Sprint took top honors with a rating of 54 mpg in urban driving and 58 mpg on the highway.

A Honda Civic was again in second place with 50-56 mpg result.

Bringing up the rear was a new entry, the Lamborghini Countach, an exotic from Italy that gets 6 mpg in the city, EPA's lowest figure ever, and 10 mpg on the highway. This bears the highest gas-guzzler tax, $3,850.

Last year's biggest guzzlers, several Rolls-Royce Models, are next-to-last with 8-10 mpg ratings.

Steve Suggs of Goochland, Va., sits in a Conestoga-type wagon built in the mid-1800s, which he just bought at an auction in Intercourse, Pa., for $400.

Horse-drawn carriages make comeback

EDITOR'S NOTE — You won't spot them on I-95, or any other interstate highway for that matter, but buggies are moving out of the back of the barn. Horse-drawn carts and carriages of all types are making a comeback among a small but growing group of aficionados and the Amish country of Pennsylvania naturally is one of their favorite shopping marts.

By TARA BRADLEY-STECK

INTERCOURSE, Pa. (AP) — Jerry Zaetta's idea of unwinding after a trying day as a Michigan parole officer involves a horse, a carriage and an open country road.

Zaetta has found it's the most effective way to shake off long days working with rapists, child molesters, burglars and murderers.

"With the type of work I do, it's very relaxing to come home, hitch up the carriage, put my foot on the dashboard and go down the road," says Zaetta, 42, who lives in the Detroit suburb of Romeo.

Steve Suggs' idea of relaxing involves restoring carriages as much as driving them. His blue eyes twinkle and his tan, Colonel Sanders-like face breaks into a broad smile when he talks about lightly sanding and painting an old farm wagon.

"It's not a disease, but it's habit-forming," says Suggs, 54, who maintains a "personal museum" of about 75 horse-drawn vehicles on his 100-acre farm in Goochland, Va.

"It's something we can hold on to, something that's familiar. It's a connection, a link to your heritage, like roots, you might say."

With the advent of the automobile in the early days of the 20th century, horse-drawn vehicles were sent to the scrap pile or pushed to the back of the barn. Except for the Amish, few people continued to use carriages.

BUT ABOUT 25 years or so ago, accompanied by a burgeoning interest in horses for recreation, horse-drawn carts and carriages began making a comeback. Old buggies were refurbished and Amish craftsmen and commercial firms, eager to keep up with demand, began manufacturing new models.

Today carriages can be found rattling down country lanes, poised for posterity in personal museums or transporting people to picnics and weddings. Whether they're used for sport, recreation or restoration projects, carriages are making a comeback.

"Our membership seems to be growing by leaps and bounds," says Frank Morrow of Beaver Falls, Pa., president of the Carriage Association of America, which focuses on restoring and collecting carriages.

When the Carriage Association was formed in 1962 it had only "a handful" of members, Morrow says. Today the group claims 4,000 active members and 7,000 participating members.

The American Driving Society, which is dedicated to the sport of driving, began with 100 members in 1974 and now has 1,300.

"We're sort of growing in spite of ourselves," says Ann Pringle, executive secretary of the group based in Metamora, Mich.

REASONS RANGE from a fascination with elegance and tradition to a family's desire to use the pony the children outgrew to an historian's love of antiques, all combined with a hint of exhibitionism.

For Jud Wright, 71, a carriage dealer from Penryn, Calif., who judges driving competitions, there is "no greater thrill" than to don the proper coaching attire of top hat and black suit and put four horses hitched to a snazzy coach through their paces.

The renewed interest in carriages is in part a knee-jerk reaction, says Charley Poppe, 40, of Williamsburg, Ohio.

"Our grandparents, who grew up with carriages, were thrilled to drive a car. They didn't want to slow down again," he says. "But a new generation comes along and this is a whole new fascination for them."

From spring through fall in just about any corner of the country, carriage buffs congregate at parks or large estates to see and be seen.

Such meets usually feature two main competitions. The first is a pleasure driving event in which participants are judged on the basis of performance — the horse's response to the driver's commands via the reins — and the appearance of the carriage, harness, driver and passengers.

The second event is combined driving, similar to that featured in the Olympic Games. The three-stage event features marathon driving, obstacle driving, dressage (the way a horse moves) and presentation (the general appearance of horse, driver and carriage).

FOUR TIMES a year, horse-drawn vehicles of all shapes and sizes are brought to this Lancaster County town in Pennsylvania's Amish country to be sold to the highest bidder at Martin's auction.

Old milk wagons rub elbows with finely restored coaches, rough buckboards share a patch of grass with sporty gigs and romantic sleighs nestle next to Conestoga wagons.

"We're about the only auctioneers who really specialize in carriage auctions," says Larry Martin, 42.

Larry and his brother, Paul Jr., 38, had been conducting horse and estate auctions in the 1960s, but they "stumbled into the carriage business by accident" when asked to liquidate a carpet company's private carriage collection in 1971, Larry says.

From humble beginnings selling a few dozen buggies in a grassy field, Martin's has grown to become the largest, regularly held carriage auction in the country.

Martin's conducts three large, four-day auctions in May, August and October and a select sale in April, all of which attract thousands of carriage enthusiasts from around the country bidding on hundreds of horse-drawn vehicles.

"I'm the president of the local driving club and we set up our schedule according to Martin's schedule. We don't plan any horse shows or driving events or anything on the weekends of Martin's sales," says Jerry Trapani, 40, a blacksmith in East Islip, N.Y.

"WE'VE BEEN coming to Martin's for years. This is our vacation. We have friends from all over the country that we get to visit at every Martin's auction," says Vicky McCaffrey, 44, a horse-breeder from Schoharie, N.Y., who collects old commercial vehicles draft horses can pull.

The auction gives collectors a chance to sell their less valuable carriages and buy carriages of higher quality. And it gives restorers the opportunity to sift through an unlimited assortment of parts.

Prices range from $75 for a pony jog cart to $40,000 for an original Kimball park drag coach.

That's a far cry from what Russ Rogers paid for horse-drawn vehicles 30 or 40 years ago.

'Diamondlike' material useful as film substance

By CARLOS BYARS

Hearst News Service

Scientists and engineers prize diamonds for more than their decorative value. And now researchers at the University of Houston have discovered a new way to make one of nature's rarer materials into films only a few atoms thick.

In electronics, the diamond offers two important qualities: It is an excellent insulator and also the best conductor of heat known to man. This means that transistors and miniature electronic circuits built on diamond films do not need big, bulky cooling devices to keep from overheating. Electrical parts can be jammed closer together, reducing the size and increasing the speed of equipment such as computers.

After several years of work and a little luck, Wayne Rabalais and research associate Srinandan Kasi have found a way to create little circular patches of what they term "diamondlike" material. By every possible test, what Rabalais and Kasi are making is diamond. But ever the careful scientists, they only claim the material is "diamondlike."

Diamond, which is simply a crystalline form of carbon, can be made by squeezing carbon under high pressure and high temperature. But these tiny diamonds are not suitable for the thin films needed for electronics and defense.

Rabalais and Kasi went the other way. They start with a carbon-rich gas, separate the atoms with electricity and use a series of magnets and vacuum pumps to remove everything but the carbon. An electrical charge speeds the carbon atoms to a target where the atoms bond and form diamond crystals.

"We first saw this on nickle, then we tried various other metals and then tried gold. If we could do it on gold we could do it on anything. And it worked," Rabalais said.

Rabalais and Kasi found that one secret is to use only 20 to 180 volts of electricity. Other researchers used a charge of about 500 volts and hydrocarbon gas. The high charge gave the gas so much energy that some of the hydrogen atoms became embedded as impurities in the diamond crystals.

Having learned to make thin diamond films from pure carbon, Rabalais and Kasi now want to add other materials to the carbon. This is called "doping" and is the process by which transistors and electronic chips are created.

Transistors are so quickly destroyed by heat that for many uses they must be bolted to massive hunks of heat-absorbing aluminum called heat sinks. Rabalais says diamond-film transistors and other electronic devices should be able to handle much higher temperatures. This will allow the devices to be packed more closely together, making for smaller, faster circuits.

Another characteristic of diamond films is that they act like an anti-reflective coating and are nearly invisible to many kinds of radar and laser beams. Rabalais says this may be an important asset for future weapons systems.

The most notable characteristic of diamond is that it is the hardest material known to man. Rabalais says that thin, transparent coatings of diamond could improve the durability of optical lenses, cutting tools and magnetic storage discs for computers.

Rabalais said the National Science Foundation gave him a grant to study the reactions of carbon with metal surfaces. Discovering how to make pure, thin-film diamonds was an outgrowth of that research, he said.

Rabalais and Kasi use an impressive assembly of large, stainless steel pipes, vacuum pumps and electronic controls and power supplies. Their samples of diamond film are only a quarter inch in diameter. The diamond layer is so thin it is measured in angstroms, a unit used to measure light waves. One angstrom is about equal to .0000000004 inches. Their layers of diamond are about 300 angstroms thick.

"It took 10 years for us to develop the instrumentation," Rabalais said. Almost every piece of equipment is especially made either in his laboratory or the department's machine shop.

"Even Bell Laboratories would take two years (to duplicate the equipment.) You can't buy it commercially; you have to build it yourself," he said.

Rabalais holds the title of Distinguished University Professor of Chemistry. He has been at the University of Houston since 1975.

American fast food may surprise Soviets

MOSCOW (AP) — The newest breakthrough in superpower relations will deliver American-style pizza to Muscovites, who may be surprised to learn the U.S. version contains neither salt pork nor olive pits.

Pepsico Inc. on Thursday signed a contract to open two Pizza Hut restaurants in Moscow, a joint venture that will bring the first American fast food to Soviet citizens.

The move could result in a network of Pizza Huts if the two "test units" prove successful, said Don Kendall, chairman of the executive committee of Pepsico Inc., which owns Pizza Hut.

He said the restaurants should be open in time for the 1988 summer tourist season.

The Pizza Hut outlets are likely to draw mobs of consumers. Pizza is already popular here, although the local version differs markedly from the style favored by Americans.

Dozens of pizzerias have opened in Moscow and other Soviet cities over the past three years.

But service is slow, choices are few, and diners often can get only Vietnamese mango juice or Soviet champagne to drink.

They face hours of vying for the attention of indifferent waiters at the relatively few restaurants open to the general public.

Because of chronic food deficits, spicy tomato sauce and cheese are rarities, usually supplanted by canned whole tomatoes, chopped egg, mayonnaise and salt pork.

Black olives are available, along with the pits.

An American Pizza Hut team will go to Moscow in the coming months to select managers and oversee the building and initial startup of the new restaurants.

The Soviet administrative staff will be sent to London for training and will in turn teach new employees how to make and serve the pizzas.

Kendall said the Soviets will eventually take over the entire operation.

Most pizza ingredients can be purchased locally, and others will be provided by Pizza Hut to allow a full menu to be offered at the Soviet restaurants, he said.

"If they are successful, we will expand it," Kendall said.

Kendall has been doing business with the Soviets for decades, having brought Pepsi-Cola to Muscovites during a 1959 trade fair.

Kendall said Pepsico's existing arrangement with the Soviets, which trades Pepsi-Cola concentrate for Stolichnaya vodka, has led to the establishment of 18 bottling plants in the Soviet Union, with another due to open soon.

Of the two soon-to-be opened Pizza Huts, only one will be open to average Soviet citizens, accepting non-convertible rubles.

The other will accept only hard currency from foreign tourists and Westerners living Moscow.

That will allow the businesses to pay their local payroll and buy raw materials in rubles, while Pepsico takes its share of the profits out of the hard-currency income.

The Soviet government will own 51 percent of the businesses, and Pepsico will own 49 percent, with profits split along those lines, Kendall said.

U.S. business expansion into the Soviet market is hampered by the difficulty in earning hard-currency profits. The Soviet government is reluctant to spend its limited hard currency, earned primarily through oil and gas exports, on anything but necessities such as grain and machinery.

In most cases, Soviet citizens are forbidden to possess hard currency.

IF YOU FEEL FORTUNATE YOUR CHILD JUST SMOKES MARIJUANA, THEN YOU SHOULD KNOW MORE ABOUT MARIJUANA.

Shall we start with the facts?

Marijuana makes your child lethargic, apathetic and paranoid.

That's frightening. But so is this: Marijuana also causes mood shifts. And it causes your child to lose his memory.

It gets worse.

Marijuana causes a loss of motor coordination. Think about that next time your child drives the car home at night.

Had enough? No?

OK. Marijuana affects your child's reproductive system as well. It decreases your son's testerone level. It can even lead to infertility.

Your daughter's reproductive system can suffer, too. With marijuana, unfortunately, come menstrual irregularities.

There's more.

Marijuana also does damage to your child's lungs. You think cigarettes are bad? Marijuana is far worse.

There are other effects that seem to show up with this "minor" drug: decreased productivity, absenteeism, impaired performance as well as impaired judgement and impaired learning capability.

Put it this way. It doesn't do much for your child's education.

If you'd like more information about marijuana or any other problem drug, contact your local agency on drug abuse.

PARTNERSHIP FOR A DRUG-FREE AMERICA

In east Ghana, harvest almost too good to believe

By LARRY JAMES

TAKLA, Ghana (AP) — Manra Soko smiles broadly as he shucks a corn cob to show a visitor the extraordinary results of this year's harvest.

For Soko and a handful of his neighbors in this small village in eastern Ghana, the harvest is almost too good to believe. In the past six months his yield increased more than 300 percent and he is eagerly looking forward to his first significant cash crop.

Even better results have been reported with other grains in Ghana. Twenty sorghum test plots in the northwestern part of the country yielded an average production increase of more than 1,000 percent.

The gains are the result of Global 2000, a privately funded agricultural development project that aims to end world hunger by the year 2000.

The project began three years ago when Japanese business executive Ryoichi Sasakawa contacted agronomist Norman Borlaug to see if something could be done to end hunger in Africa.

Borlaug, architect of Asia's "green revolution," organized Global 2000, naming former President Jimmy Carter as chairman. The group began operations in 1986 with projects in Ghana, Sudan and Zimbabwe.

Four years ago Ghana suffered catastrophic food shortages because of the continent's devastating drought and the government's policies, which discouraged farm production.

Global 2000, with a staff of four and an annual budget of only $230,000, hopes to double yields and make it possible for Ghana to feed itself.

Farmer Soko's remarkable results were achieved simply. He got good seed, fertilizer when he needed it and advice on planting.

The project is creating a stir throughout the country. But there is also skepticism about whether it will endure, or follow the route of some past projects, which ended when the Western experts left and the financial support dried up.

"Many of those programs were large-scale projects which required substantial coordination and follow-through," said Marcel Galiba, Global 2000's coordinator for Ghana's central and eastern regions.

"We deal only with small farmers with no more than several hectares (acres) of land. The seeds and fertilizer we use to get these yields are already available locally, but it is true this program needs government support to make it work.

"When people say to me this will fall apart after we leave, I say it is up to the government to see it doesn't. I ask, do you want to be self-sufficient in food or not?"

The government says it does.

"What Ghana needs now is not so much foreign food or financial aid, but the transfer of development technology," said Imoro Seidu, Ghana's upper west regional undersecretary of agriculture.

"Food aid and financial assistance will only provide temporary solutions, whereas the availability of appropriate technology will help make Ghana self-reliant," he said.

There are obstacles to food self-sufficiency in Ghana, including a deficient transportation system. It can take more than three days to travel from the northeastern region to the capital, Accra, even though the distance is only 370 miles.

When Global 2000 started operations in Ghana last year, the project was restricted to 20 test plots in the northwest, where sorghum and millet are the main crops.

Each participant was required to get at least 10 other farmers to observe the new methods of planting and fertilizer application he used.

Results exceeded even the most optimistic hopes. Yields increased as much as 4,717 percent.

This year 1,410 farmers in the northwestern region are using the new technology and Global 2000 has had to refuse requests from hundreds of others who want to sign up. Projects are under way nationwide.

Dr. Eugenio Martinez, the Mexican agronomist who directs operations in Ghana, says the greatest revolution may be going on in the country's banks.

"We are now in the process of inviting bankers to come and see what is happening. In the past bankers have complained, and with reason, the loan repayment rate of farmers is very low. But you see, if you don't produce then how do you pay? In our experience everyone came to pay us with a big smile."

Global 2000 insists that farmers pay for their fertilizers and seeds and allows them to pay in cash or in kind.

"The important thing is we've shown that it's possible to extend credit to the farmers. And technology and credit have to go together," Martinez said.

Food shortages, high prices battled in drought-torn India

By SEEMA SIROHI

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Food shortages and high prices are beginning to hit the dinner tables and pocketbooks of India's middle class in the aftermath of country's worst drought of the century.

At least 16 of India's 25 states were affected by the drought that destroyed this year's crops as well as much of the seed for next year's.

The poor who live in drought areas were the first and hardest hit and many have been forced to eat wild herbs and roots, resulting in disease and sometimes death from poisoning.

But the drought's effects are now reaching the urban middle class.

Such essentials as cooking oil, vegetables, lentils, wheat and rice are in short supply and often very expensive in India's large cities. Housewives complain that prices on some items have doubled in recent weeks.

Jaya Mohan said she has given up serving greens and meat at family meals and is skimping on tomatoes and onions — the main ingredients of curry dishes.

Poonam Khanna, expecting her first child, said she budgets so she can afford fresh fruit. But she passes up "desi ghee," a rich extract from cream that Indian grandmothers insist is needed by pregnant women.

Kamal Vohra, a bank executive, said his wife squeezes lime over onions and calls it salad.

"I have been told not to expect tomatoes or too many vegetables," he said.

The government is coming under increasing criticism, although it has promised to distribute grain and other necessities from its stockpiles to areas hurt the hardest. Food merchants also are under fire on charges that they are hoarding foodstuffs in order to get higher prices under the counter.

The government's wholesale price index, the most closely watched indicator of market prices, rose more than half a percent weekly for three consecutive weeks.

In mid-August the index was 8 percent above January's figure, compared to a 6 percent rise for all of 1986. If the trend continues, India will face double digit inflation this year.

To make matters worse, authorities say, hoarding and black marketeering are on the rise.

In Calcutta, for example, when the Marxist state government ordered the price of mustard oil, the main cooking oil in the region, lowered to $1.90 a kilogram (2.2 pounds) from $2.60, it disappeared from the open market.

Rita Karat, a women's rights activist in New Delhi, said the full impact of price rises does not show in government indexes.
