Reagan heads West

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan flew west on vacation today with a stack of bills to be signed and a renewed call for a total Soviet troop withdrawal from Afghanistan.

Reagan and his wife, Nancy, who celebrated Christmas at the White House for the second year, headed first for Phoenix, Ariz., to visit Mrs. Reagan's recently widowed mother, Edith Davis.

On Tuesday, they will travel to Los Angeles, where Reagan will take part in recommissioning ceremonies for the battleship USS New Jersey.

The next day, they will make their annual pilgrimage to Palm Springs for the New Year's holiday. They will stay at "Sunnylands," the 200-acre estate owned by publisher Walter Annenberg. The Reagans return to Washington Sunday.

Before he left Washington, Reagan declared the Soviet occupation of Afghanistan a failure and said the United States supports a negotiated settlement there, based on a complete withdrawal of Soviet forces.

"We in the United States sincerely hope that the new leadership of the Soviet Union will take advantage of the opportunities the new year will no doubt offer to achieve a solution for Afghanistan," Reagan said in a statement issued Sunday.

Although his official schedule was light, Reagan was likely to sign a number of bills passed in the closing days of the 97th Congress.

Among those acted upon, but unsigned, were the 5-cent-a-gallon increase in the federal gasoline tax, a nuclear waste disposal bill, an anti-crime measure, and legislation guaranteeing Social Security disability recipients continued payments while federal officials question their eligibility.

Also awaiting presidential action was a bill giving tax breaks worth $75 million to the pharmaceutical industry over the next five years to encourage development of drugs to treat rare diseases for which the potential market is too small to justify the development expense.

On previous vacations, the president's staff has publicized bill signings and written presidential statements, highlighting the business aspects of the trip.

Reagan and his wife were joined for Christmas at the White House by their daughter, Patti Davis, and had more than a dozen guests for Christmas dinner. Ms. Davis planned to fly west with her parents.

The work on Reagan's Christmas weekend schedule was completed well before the holiday began, although Mark Weinberg, a White House spokesman, said the president did "routine" paperwork on Sunday.

A Reagan statement marking the third year of Soviet-backed rule in Afghanistan was put together last week and made available Sunday.

A white day after Christmas

A three-inch layer of snow blanketed the Permian Basin area Sunday, forcing most people to dig their cars out from under the snow and ice. Jimmy Wells, left, of Austin scraped ice from the windshield of his car Sunday afternoon. The Wells family, including son Eric, right, was visiting grandparents Mr. and Mrs. Dalton Brown at 203 Acklen Drive.

Midland's white Christmas a day late

By HALLYE JORDAN

Santa apparently checked his list again Christmas night — and realized that one item mentioned by many had been skipped. So, with the help of Jack Frost, he revisited Midland, dropping a snowy blanket on the Tall City Sunday.

According to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport, an average of about 3½ inches of snow accummulated between early Sunday and this morning, although no more precipitation is expected through Tuesday.

With a traveler's advisory in effect until noon today, or whenever the icy roads melted into less dangerous slush, the employees of the Texas Department of Highways and Public Transportation were out early this morning sanding hazardous bridges and overpasses on the highway, a spokesman at the Odessa office said this morning.

Area towns received ice, sleet and snow in varying amounts with Lamesa reporting about four to five inches of snow, Andrews reporting about three inches and Rankin only reporting a trace. Slick streets, which were blamed for the death of at least one area resident, were reported in Andrews, Big Lake, Crane and Stanton.

An Odessa woman was killed Sunday morning when her car skidded off icy FM 1729 near New Deal. Nita Bostick Armstrong, 49, apparently was traveling east when her car overturned and she was partially thrown from the vehicle and pinned under it. According to Justice of the Peace Dardie Williamson of Shallowater, who pronounced the woman dead at the scene, the car ran off the road, into a field and apparently struck a power pole. Mrs. Armstrong was traveling alone. Her body was taken to Resthaven Funeral Home in Lubbock and services are pending with Wallace Funeral Home in Tulia.

In the Permian Basin, however, only two minor accidents were reported around Penwell, according to the Department of Public Safety.

"We lucked out," a Midland DPS spokesman said.

Thirty-nine people died statewide in accidents over the holiday period, which began at 6 p.m. Thursday and ended at midnight Sunday. Fifty-two people were predicted to die in traffic related accidents, according to the DPS.

According to Darrell Adams, assistant director of aviation, runways at Midland Regional Airport were cleared by noon Sunday and a few flights did depart and arrive during the morning.

"We lost a couple of flights that overflew us (Sunday morning) but we're practically normal today," he said.

Partly cloudy skies will remain in the Midland area through Tuesday, a NWS spokesman said, although no more moisture is expected. The overnight recorded amount of .39 of an inch of precipitation pushed the monthly total to 1.18 and the yearly total to 14.43 inches.

Temperatures will drop into the lower 20s tonight and are expected to reach only into the lower 40s Tuesday.

Winds will be northwesterly at 10-15 mph tonight, shifting to northerly at 10-15 mph Tuesday.

Sunday's high temperature of 37 was 40 degrees short of hitting the record high of 77, set for that date in 1955. The overnight snowy low of 20 was 11 degrees warmer than 1939's frigid low of nine degrees.

Israelis move in for talks

KHALDE, Lebanon (AP) — Israel poured troops and tanks into the hills surrounding this Beirut suburb today to halt sectarian fighting that threatened the opening of Israeli-Lebanese talks here on the withdrawal of foreign forces from Lebanon.

"They (the Israelis) have moved into the hills and there hasn't been any shooting today," said Lebanese army spokesman Col. Fawzi Abi Farhat.

He said the Lebanese army had been assured by the feuding rightist Christian and leftist Druse Moslem militiamen who have been battling in the area for five days that there would be no fighting while the talks were in progress. Negotiations are scheduled to begin Tuesday.

The two private armies traded heavy artillery fire throughout the night in the hill towns of Shweifat and Kfar Shima, overlooking Khalde, the state radio reported. Police said 18 people were killed and 27 wounded in sectarian fighting in the past 36 hours.

Abi Farhat, the army's "security coordinator" for the talks, said 100 Lebanese soldiers were now responsible for security in and around the Lebanon Beach Hotel in Khalde, the site of the talks.

But "the Israelis are responsible for that area," he said pointing to an Israeli tank about a mile away in the surrounding hills.

There were no immediate reports from Israel on the deployment of its forces to halt the fighting.

An Israeli armored personnel carrier was parked outside the Lebanon Beach Hotel, and Israeli soldiers were putting up barbed wire on the edge of the highway leading to it.

The Lebanese state radio had said earlier the government was exerting pressure on Christians and Druse to stop the fighting, which had gone on for five consecutive days. Shelling also was reported at the mountain resort town of Aley, 7½ miles southeast of Beirut.

Five Christian militiamen were killed overnight in an attack on Druse gunmen in the village of Maaroufieh, near Shweifat, Beirut newspapers reported today.

The clashes have claimed 170 lives since they began two months ago, police said.

Fighting Sunday extended to the edge of Beirut International Airport, headquarters of the U.S. Marine peacekeeping contingent in Lebanon. No Marines were reported involved.

Farhat also said part of a 30-member Israeli logistics team had arrived at the Khalde hotel to prepare for the negotiations, which will alternate between Lebanon and the Israeli Galilee border town of Kiryat Shmona.

Louisiana, Colorado residents slosh through rain, snow

By The Associated Press

Floods from almost 15 inches of rain washed through Louisiana communities today, blocking more than 1,000 people from their homes, and Colorado residents were urged to stay home until the snow from a Christmas Eve blizzard could be cleared.

A Greyhound bus careened off icy Interstate 80 near Kearney, Neb., early today, injuring 20 people, as freezing rain, sleet and drizzle spread from western Oklahoma into a large part of Kansas and Nebraska.

Streets were flooded in the Beaumont and Port Arthur areas of Texas, where the storm dropped 13 inches of rain, and the Hildebrandt Acres residential area was evacuated. The southeastern Texas town of Bridge City near the Louisiana border was cut off by flooding early today on Texas 87.

Residents of El Paso were warned to prepare for a foot of snow as the storm out of Colorado left accumulations of 8 inches at Clovis, N.M., and 7 inches at Lubbock.

In northern Mississippi, rescuers in boats and four-wheel drive vehicles evacuated dozens of families as rain sent rivers out of their banks and marked the state's wettest December on record.

Mississippi civil defense officials said about 70 families had left their homes in Grenada, about 15 homes were evacuated in Calhoun City and other evacuations were under way in Greenwood, Tupelo and other communities.

Tornadoes on Sunday damaged buildings and timberland in Neshoba County and flash flooding affected several hundred homes in Grenada County.

Louisiana officials said more than 50 roads were impassable in places and many bridges were washed out.

Flash flood watches were posted today for all of Arkansas and Illinois and the southern and eastern sections of Missouri and southeastern Iowa.

But some states in the nation's snow belt had the warmest Christmas holiday of the century, delighting joggers but dismaying skiers.

Massive traffic jams developed today in snowbound Denver and delays continued at Stapleton International Airport as the city dug out from under the record weekend blizzard that claimed three lives.

Colorado authorities urged commuters to stay home unless they had jobs essential to public safety. To make matters worse, the Colorado State Patrol was forced to close a section of Interstate 70 near downtown Denver when some low-level radioactive material spilled from a van.

Steady weekend rain spilled waters from bloated rivers and bayous into residential areas of Louisiana, forcing evacuations across the central and northeastern parts of the state, officials said.

Up to 14½ inches of rain had fallen in Alexandria, La., since late Saturday and parts of southwest Louisiana had received about 10 inches with forecasters predicting another 3 to 6 inches today.

"There's no relief in sight for Louisiana for at least another day," Nolan Duke, a meteorologist with the National Weather Service in Kansas City, said early today. "They're flooding like crazy. It's coming down faster than it can drain. It's a slow-moving storm system and it's been raining like that for two days."

Pollution could put funds up in air

WASHINGTON (AP) — Hundreds of communities across the nation could lose millions of dollars in federal highway money because they have failed to reduce air pollution enough to comply with national health standards, officials say.

As of last month, the Environmental Protection Agency prepared a list showing that 472 counties in 44 states would not meet the Dec. 31 deadline under the Clean Air Act for lowering emissions of five pollutants.

Under the act, the areas that have not been granted extensions and do not meet the deadline face the loss of millions of dollars in highway money and grants for local air pollution programs.

Also, the law calls for construction bans on new factories or on additions to factories which would emit any of the pollutants which are above federal standards.

The exact number of counties subject to the sanctions has not been determined because, as the deadline approaches, states are coming forward with new evidence that they are now in compliance.

Only North Dakota is in compliance with all pollution standards that call for reducing sulfur dioxide, carbon monoxide, ozone, nitrogen dioxide and particulates — small particles such as soot.

Five other states — Alaska, Connecticut, Delaware, New Jersey and North Carolina — are meeting all standards except for car-related pollutants and have been granted extensions until 1987 to meet those requirements.

EPA Administrator Anne Gorsuch said imposing the sanctions would be "an unhealthy, regressive step." But she said she intends to follow the law.

Environmentalists say the administration is talking tough to force Congress to pass weakening amendments to the Clean Air Act. The law has been up for review for two years, but Congress is still deadlocked over administration attempts to loosen restrictions on polluters.

Environmentalists fear the sentiment for a strong law could evaporate if hundreds of cities lose federal highway money and get hit with bans on new factories.

The National Clean Air Coalition, supported by some members of Congress, contends that the administration is taking a more hard-nosed approach than the law calls for.

The coalition says the EPA would be justified in imposing new sanctions in only 10 states which have counties not operating under approved cleanup plans. In all the other cases, new data will show the counties are in compliance or have come so close that penalties would not be justified, the coalition argues.

The coalition said EPA was backing away from plans to go after all 472 counties it listed in November and would instead seek to enforce penalties against approximately 139 counties in 39 states.

EPA officials would not confirm that number, but they did say they would target areas first where the pollution is the worst.

Whatever the number, no penalties are expected to be imposed for at least six months while the EPA goes through an appeals process.

Israeli soldiers wait outside the Lebanon Beach Hotel in the Khalde suburb of Beirut Sunday in preparation for talks between their nation and Lebanon on withdrawal of Israeli forces from Lebanon. The talks are set to begin in Khalde Tuesday.

Massacre testimony continues

JERUSALEM (AP) — Attorneys for the Israeli military chief of staff and an aide to the defense minister today sought to discredit testimony about when the two officials learned of the Beirut massacre.

In occasionally heated exchanges, the attorneys cross-examined two witnesses, both military officers, before the three-man judicial panel investigating the massacre. It was the second day of testimony by witnesses called by officials who have been warned the panel's findings may harm them.

The first session was conducted behind closed doors Sunday.

At the focus of today's session were two officers who were staffing the Defense Ministry situation room Sept. 16-18, when Lebanese Christian militiamen massacred hundreds of Palestinian civilians in the Sabra and Chatilla refugee camps of west Beirut.

The militiamen had been sent into the camps by Israel to flush out Palestinian guerrillas, and Israeli officials say they never expected a massacre.

Lt. Col. Reuven Gai, who had testified that he promptly passed on reports of a possible massacre to Defense Minister Ariel Sharon's top civilian aide, Avi Dudai, stuck to his account under sharp questioning by Dudai's lawyer.

Gai, an officer in the Defense Ministry's national security unit, said that on the morning of Friday, Sept. 17, he had given Dudai raw, unsubstantiated information that 300 civilians had been killed in the camps.

The commission has warned eight civilian and military officials, including Prime Minister Menachem Begin, that they may be harmed by the inquiry's findings.

But attorney Gabriel Cohen sought to discredit Gai's memory of events. Sharon has testified he heard of the massacre late Sept. 17.

Cohen produced an army major, Yehuda Meraz, who testified that he heard Gai telling about how he received the raw data about the massacre.

Meraz said he asked Gai whether he had passed the information to Dudai for transmission to Sharon.

"Gai said he didn't remember," Meraz testified.

The commission has warned eight civilian and military officials, including Prime Minister Menachem Begin, that they may be harmed by the inquiry's findings. The panel has no power to issue charges.

Sharon, who is to appear again before the panel next Sunday, was notified that he could be cited for failing to order the Lebanese militias out of the camps quickly enough. Dudai was warned that he might be cited for failing to pass on massacre reports to Sharon.

During the session today, attention also focused on whether the chief of staff, Lt. Gen. Raphael Eytan, had early knowledge of the massacre. Eytan has received a warning similar to Sharon's.

His lawyer, Lt. Col. Elan Schiff, called Maj. Avraham Kober, who was in the Defense Ministry situation room on Saturday, Sept. 18, and asked him for his account of events.

Kober testified that at midday Saturday he was phoned by a senior Foreign Ministry official, who asked him about claims made by Morris Draper, a U.S. negotiator on the Lebanon crisis, that a massacre was taking place.

Kober said he contacted Dudai, who told him to report to Sharon. The lawyer exhibited the log in which Kober had written that "the Defense Minister knows about and has already talked to the chief of staff (Eytan) about it."

Lawyer Schiff then pointed to erasures and scribblings near the notation and asked Kober what they meant. He questioned him in detail about his method of making entries in his log and asked him for a specimen of his signature to show the judges.

Kober said he did not know the meaning of the erasures and scribblings. Schiff asked him if he would take a lie detector test. Kober agreed.

The implication apparently was that the log had somehow been altered to draw Eytan into the circle of blame for failing to halt the massacre promptly.

American ideas don't reflect Lebanese feelings, Sharon says

PARIS (AP) — Israeli Defense Minister Ariel Sharon, in an interview published today, said the Lebanese situation and American proposals for an overall Middle East peace "are completely separate" and should not be linked.

"On the Lebanese question, our interests are very close to those of the United States," Sharon said in the interview with the French newspaper Le Figaro.

"On the other hand, our point of view is very different from theirs on the problem of the West Bank and Gaza," he said. "So, why link a problem for which the solution presents little difficulty to a problem where there is a real antagonism?"

In previous interviews, Sharon has accused the United States of attempting to link Israeli-Lebanese negotiations to efforts to secure an overall Middle East peace. The Lebanese talks, focusing on the withdrawal of foreign armies from Lebanon, are to open Tuesday in a Beirut suburb.

Sharon said Israel's policy in the Middle East was very clear and is "founded on the accords signed four years ago in Camp David. Camp David is in our eyes the only realistic plan. We must first fulfill this accord. "Camp David calls for autonomy for the Palestinians in the West Bank and Gaza. Let us discuss that."

Asked for Israel's definition of autonomy for the occupied West Bank of the Jordan River and the Gaza Strip, Sharon said, "The Palestinians of the territories will freely manage their affairs in all domains except those that relate to internal and external security, which will be controlled by us."

He said residents of the two territories can have Jordanian citizenship. "They can consider King Hussein as their king, monarch of a Palestinian state which already exists on the other side of the Jordan since 70 percent of the Jordanian population is Palestinian," Sharon said.

Israel has rejected President Reagan's peace plan, which calls for Palestinian autonomy in confederation with Jordan. The Israelis say adoption of the plan would lead to creation of a hostile Palestinian state on Israel's borders.

An estimated 1.2 million Palestinians live on the West Bank and Gaza, seized by Israel in the 1967 Middle East war.

Shooting investigator doesn't intend to resign

ROME (AP) — The state prosecutor in charge of investigating the shooting of Pope John Paul II has no intention of resigning, the Italian news agency ANSA reported today.

Quoting unnamed judicial sources, ANSA said Ilario Martella plans to complete the investigation of the attempted assassination of the pope.

There was a report Friday by The Daily American in Rome that said Martella had asked to be removed from the case because he felt it had turned into a "political fiasco."

ANSA said Martella had refused to comment on the Daily American report, just as he has declined to discuss any part of his investigation with the press.

The prosecutor could not be reached for comment despite repeated telephone calls to his office and home by The Associated Press.

The English-language Daily American quoted an unnamed member of the Chamber of Deputies, who it said was close to the prosecutor and Justice Minister Clelio Darida, as saying Martella was upset by a parliamentary debate on the subject.

During the Dec. 20 debate, Defense Minister Lelio Lagorio called the shooting of the pope "an act of war in peacetime," and said that concerns about a Bulgarian connection were fully warranted.

According to the Daily American's source, Martella "was angry and distressed" at the way the investigation had lost its legal character and was said to believe that politicians had ruined some of his leads by interferring in the case.

Martella has implicated three Bulgarians and five Turks in the May 13, 1981, attack carried out by Turkish terrorist Mehmet Ali Agca. In his only statement, issued after the arrest Nov. 25 Of Sergei Ivanov Antonov, the Rome station chief of Bulgarian airlines, Martella said he had no evidence of a conspiracy by international groups to kill the pope.

ANSA said Martella plans to travel to West Germany to investigate the "Turkish branch" of the papal shooting.

CIA behind Bulgarian part in plot: Czechs

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia (AP) — The CIA is orchestrating reports of Bulgarian involvement in the shooting of the pope to weaken Western European opposition to NATO missile deployment, Czechoslovakia's news agency claimed today.

"Anti-communist centers want to injure the international prestige of the Socialist countries, to weaken the movement which is expanding in Western Europe against the U.S. missiles which are to be deployed at the launching bases in West European countries...," the CTK news agency said, quoting from an article from Washington in the Czechoslovak Communist Party newspaper.

The article said "CIA misinformation activities" it claimed were behind the reports of Bulgarian involvement in May 13, 1981, shooting of Pope John Paul II were part of this campaign.

The Warsaw Pact has accused the United States and its North Atlantic Treaty Organization allies of escalating the East-West arms race with its planned deployment of 572 cruise and Pershing 2 missiles in Western Europe beginning next December.

NATO says the missiles are to counter Soviet SS-20 missiles aimed at Western Europe from bases alone the western edge of the Soviet Union.

Bulgaria has denied any connection with the shooting of the pope by Turkish gunmen Mehmet Ali Agca, though Italian investigators arrested a Bulgarian in the investigation and issued an arrest warrant for another.

The so-called Bulgarian connection to the shooting has severely strained relations between Italy and Bulgaria.

The government-run media of most Warsaw Pact states have come to the defense of their Bulgarian ally.

Over 300 die in holiday traffic

By The Associated Press

At least 316 people died on the nation's highways during the three-day Christmas weekend, about the same number as last year but fewer than could be expected on a non-holiday weekend.

The National Safety Council had estimated that between 300 and 400 persons could be killed in traffic accidents between 6 p.m. Thursday and midnight Sunday.

Last year, 320 people died in traffic accidents during the Christmas weekend, also a three-day observance.

The Safety Council said that during a three-day, non-holiday weekend at this time of the year, 360 highway deaths could be expected.

The worst Christmas observance was in 1965 when 720 people died on the nation's highways.

Soviet nuclear explosion detected

WASHINGTON (AP) — Seismic signals, presumably from a Soviet underground nuclear explosion, were recorded by the U.S. Atomic Energy Detection System on Saturday night, the Department of Energy announced today.

The signals originated at 9:35 p.m. CST at the Semipalatinsk nuclear test area in Siberia, the department said in a statement.

Spokeswoman Terry Egan said it was the sixth apparent Soviet underground test to be detected this year. Thus far in 1982, the United States has announced 18 underground tests of its own, she said.

Three U.S. residents among those killed in Chinese airline crash

PEKING (AP) — Three U.S. citizens died in a Christmas Eve explosion that killed 23 people aboard a Chinese airliner in Canton, the U.S. Consulate in Canton confirmed today.

A spokesman for the consulate identified the dead Americans as Neil David Konheim, 31, of Los Angeles; Liang Tong-ji, editor of the Chinese language newespaper Express in the United States; and Professor Conrad P. Heins. The ages and hometowns of Mrs. Liang and Heins were not immediately available.

The Canton newspaper Yangcheng Evening News, giving the first detailed account of the Christmas Eve disaster, said flames leaped from every window and door and smoke billowed more than 100 feet skyward when the plane made an emergency landing.

The newspaper said it took 330 firefighters an hour to put out the fire aboard the plane.

Twenty-five people also were injured in the inferno aboard the four-engine Soviet-built Ilyushin-18 of China's state-run CAAC airline. The plane landed with 69 people aboard on a flight from Changsha, capital of Hunan province. Chinese officials have refused to disclose many details about the disaster.

Coverage of the fire was difficult because China's Communist government is sensitive about news coverage of domestic disasters and does not have a system for disseminating information to the foreign press.

China does not announce domestic air mishaps unless foreigners are aboard the plane involved. Canadians, a Japanese, a Mexican and several overseas Chinese were also on the Canton plane.

Correspondents in Peking relayed virtually all information through long-distance telephone calls to the U.S. Consulate in Canton and other foreign diplomatic officials, and through local newspaper accounts.

The headquarters of CAAC, acronym for the Civil Aviation Administration of China, said Sunday that the fire was under investigation but refused to elaborate. The airline did not acknowledge that people were killed and injured until more than 2½ days after the disaster.

The injured were taken to hospitals and one survivor was placed in a hospital where officials said the telephone could not be used for outside calls, the U.S. Consulate said.

One of those injured was Janette Rangel Konheim, 26, a Mexican citizen and wife of the dead American. She was hospitalized for treatment of smoke inhalation.

A Canadian resident, Chen Li-Fang, was killed and two others were missing. The airliner crashed in the picturesque southwest city of Guilin, killing 112 people, including 54 Chinese from Hong Kong. The cause was never announced.

China acknowledged what it called the nation's first hijacking last July 25, when five men tried to commandeer an aircraft over Shanghai and fly to Taiwan.

Bill Ramsey teaches handicapped persons to drive at the West Virginia Rehabilitation Center in Institute, W. Va. Ramsey, who heads a national organization for driving teachers of the handicapped, says current technology will permit almost anyone to learn to drive.

Deaf motorists more observant than hearing ones, driving teacher says

INSTITUTE, W.Va. (AP) — Deaf motorists are more observant than those who can hear, and being a genius is no advantage behind the steering wheel, says a driving instructor who specializes in teaching the handicapped.

"Of course, I'm a little prejudiced," Bill Ramsey said with a laugh. "But, I should know what I'm talking about."

Ramsey, who teaches driving at the West Virginia Rehabilitation Center, is also president of the National Association of Driver Educators for the Disabled.

During nearly two decades of teaching, Ramsey has worked with hundreds of slow learners, quadriplegics, paraplegics and deaf people, among others.

"I even helped one guy get a driver's license even though he was considered to be legally blind," he said.

Ramsey, who uses many of the latest technological aides, said deaf people are particularly good drivers.

"They've got it all over us hearing people when it comes to driving," he said in a recent interview. "It's because they've always taken in everything with their eyes, and, as a result, they tend to see everything."

He also thinks slow learners are among the best drivers, while geniuses make the worst.

"A slow learner concentrates totally on driving," he said. "However, most people let their minds stray while they're driving and this is particularly true with the most highly intelligent people.

"Why, I know of a technical company in the Kanawha Valley where a secretary is assigned to go out into the parking lot each morning to check for cars with running motors and burning headlights. If she didn't, a lot of people wouldn't be able to get home after work."

Teaching paraplegics and quadriplegics is the most rewarding thing Ramsey's ever done, he said.

"In our society, and especially in a largely rural state like West Virginia, you've just got to be mobile to be able to live anything that resembles a normal life."

He recalled teaching a partially paralyzed young man who had been an All-America football player. "He just wasn't responding well at all until he began driving," Ramsey said. "The day he got his license he told me was the first time he had wanted to go on living since becoming paralyzed."

In preparing his students for the highway, Ramsey first makes them familiar with an automobile dashboard in one of 14 computerized driving simulators at the center. Seated at the controls, they must cope with driving situations in films projected in front of them.

"These films are so realistic that I've had students scream and duck when a car comes at them head-on," he said.

After the students master the simulators, they graduate to an off-street driving maze on the campus of adjoining West Virginia State College.

"By the time I'm through with them and before they attempt to drive on the highway, they will have experienced 99 percent of the things that can happen on the road," Ramsey said. "In fact, they'll be almost paranoid about what can happen on the highway; they'll be driving defensively and will be prepared for anything."

Clark still has confused periods

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Artificial heart recipient Barney Clark still has confused periods and sometimes forgets he retired five years ago, but doctors expect his mind to clear as he makes a "slow, steady" recovery, hospital officials say.

"He has been confused in a sense that sometimes when he talks, he talks about things in the past," University of Utah Medical Center spokesman John Dwan said Sunday. "That continues."

He said doctors for the 61-year-old retired dentist were not worried about the episodes of confusion.

"They say that's not that unusual in postoperative patients who have undergone serious surgery and who have been in an intensive care environment that long," Dwan said. "I heard yesterday, for instance, that he was talking like he was practicing dentistry and running his office.

"But (the doctors) say that's a normal kind of situation...and they feel it will clear."

A series of Dec. 7 seizures suffered by Clark had raised the specter of possible brain damage. However, doctors said later they believed the crisis — which temporarily put Clark back on the critical list — was caused by a chemical imbalance.

Doctors "continue to hope for slow, steady improvement day-by-day. They don't expect any dramatic changes," Dwan said.

Clark, still in serious but stable condition today, rested most of Sunday, his 25th day on the plastic Jarvik-7 artificial heart. He celebrated Christmas Day with his family and the 10 caroling children of Drs. William DeVries and Lyle Joyce.

It was DeVries who implanted the polyurethane Jarvik-7 heart Dec. 2. The air-powered device replaced Clark's diseased natural heart, weakened by cardiomyopathy, a degenerative disease of the heart muscle.

Dwan said Clark sat in a chair for Yuletide festivities, smiling and nodding his head in approval as each song was completed.

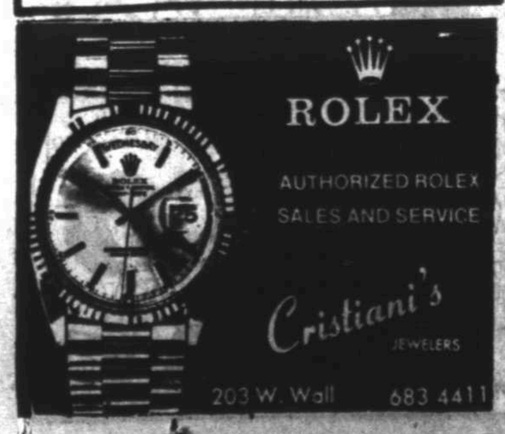

"The Christmas party was just super," he said. "They had (the children) dressed up like sheep in a manger...Dr. Clark was very responsive to that. He would smile, nod and when they finished a song, he would say 'Thank you.'"

Dwan said doctors scoured the hospital for a Christmas tree, finally "borrowing" one from the Medical Center's ambulatory care center.

"I hate to tell you," Dwan said with a chuckle. "It's an artificial heart, so you've got to have an artificial tree. Actually, I think the reason it's an artificial tree is because that's the first tree Dr. Joyce and Santa's other helpers found."

Handicapped man battles agency, charges his superiors prejudiced

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Harold Reitan had polio when he was 18 months old. Possessed of two useless arms, he has learned to light cigarettes and carry shopping bags with his mouth. He writes with a pencil clenched between his teeth. He types by tapping the keys of an electric typewriter with the pencil.

After his bosses at an obscure federal agency became unhappy with him a couple of years ago, Reitan, whose job is to reduce barriers for the handicapped, lost his clerical and secretarial help. Joyette Young, a claims examiner for the federal workers' compensation program, ruled in September that he was entitled to $2,000 in medical expenses because of damages to his mouth from typing, furniture moving and other chores.

Reitan has usable muscles in his left leg only. He swings along on a steel hip, deploying his spindly right leg as a kind of balance peg. A year ago, he was transferred from his main-floor office to a basement cubicle, a shift that forced him to scurry into a fast-closing elevator, then press the floor button with his nose, then scurry out of the elevator and walk almost a city block down a forlorn hall.

He is 58. The move to the basement and the other factors sent him to the cardiac care unit of Suburban Hospital in May with heart failure and allied afflictions. He says the collapse of his health and an appeal to the White House got him back upstairs.

HIS BOSS, Robert Johnson, denies White House intervention. He says Reitan was sent to the basement because his job changed and his new fellow workers were there. He says Reitan's return aboveground, to a cubicle in the outer office of his old office, was strictly an internal decision, part of Johnson's effort to accommodate several handicapped staff members.

Reitan is a stubborn fellow who shows no signs of bending. His bosses, who blame him for the situation, are proving equally stubborn. The result so far is a standoff: Reitan has been accused of refusing to work. He accuses his superiors of giving him nothing to do. The way for his firing has been paved by three consecutive annual unsatisfactory-job-performance ratings stemming from the standoff. But Reitan has checked that maneuver by claiming discrimination because of his handicap.

The situation is rendered even more poignant and dramatic by its setting. Reitan's title, after various shifts and demotions, is senior barriers compliance specialist. He is an expert at eliminating physical barriers that get in the way of the disabled. He works for the Architectural and Transportation Barrriers Compliance Board, a federal agency with a staff of 23 that has been in business since 1975 promoting cuts in curbs so people in wheelchairs can cross streets easily, elevator doors that open and shut at a glacial pace and public toilets with wide doors and handrails.

SO FAR, REITAN has been a consistent loser inside the Barriers Board and a winner in other forums. In an unusual decision that offered no ruling on the question of fault but did order a remedy, the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission decreed in August that his personnel record should be rewritten, he should get a promotion and he should receive back pay for the raises. The increase is about $8,000, to about $53,000 a year.

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Tuesday, December 28, 1982

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Academy Award winning actress Maggie Smith shares this birthday with you, as do journalist-author Joyce Haber, jockey Jorge Velasquez, golf's Hubie Green and actors Martin Milner and Lew Ayres.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You will soon be rewarded for your sacrifices. A money transaction is likely to be delayed. Have a contingency plan to get you over the hump. You find a newcomer very attractive.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Others try to include outrageous demands in what was to have been a straightforward agreement for your services. Back away. Retailers attract customers by starting their after-Christmas sales earlier than usual.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You enjoy superb luck in everything you do today. Partner will come around to your way of thinking. Short trips help restore marital bliss and could aid business.

CANCER (June 21—July 22): Grab an unexpected offer and get the jump on a competitor. Romance is fun, but temporary. Accept things as they are and everything will be okay. Guide a child without criticizing him.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Money is not the only thing in life. Give family and home life top priority. Work guarantees are suspect. Ask lots of questions. Eventually you will get the answers you need.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Show your loyalty to those who have backed you in times of trouble. You will pass a test with flying colors. Social entanglements could upset your romantic plans. Guard against jealousy.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A good day for catching up at work and reviewing your objectives. Approach difficult people with an air of self-confidence. The mail brings fabulous financial news—perhaps even a check!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Others welcome your leadership. The better you are at picking and choosing today, the more you impress those in authority. Remember to please your self also! Money rapidly changes hands.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Financial affairs merit careful handling. Changing an influential person's opinion will be difficult. Do your homework before even trying. Although romance holds few surprises, loved one makes an important suggestion.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You want to be part of a bigger group now. To move ahead in business, take the initiative! You make the acquaintance of someone who will affect your career later on.

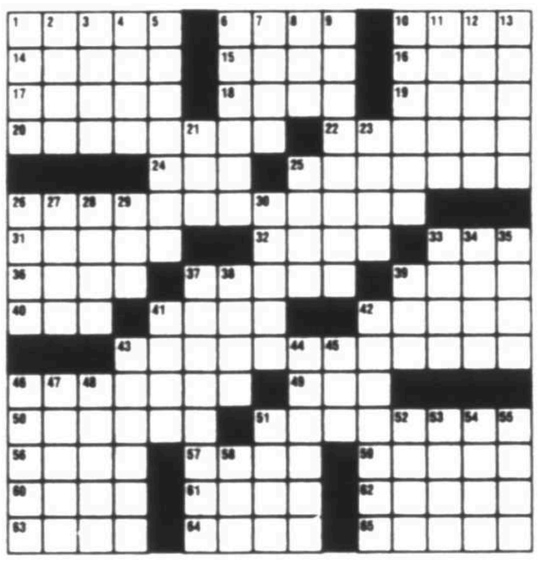

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Strengthen your personal ties. Your mate or partner is your biggest ally today. Sales are up and the financial outlook is generally good. Give a younger person the benefit of the doubt.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Someone from your past reenters the picture. Get several estimates on any home repairs. You feel more secure in your job and your self-confidence rises. Cultural interests hold special appeal.

ANSWERS TO BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠Q54 ♡AJ10 ◇KQ98 ♣AJ7
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 NT	Pass	2 ♠	Pass
2 ◇	Pass	2 ♠	Pass

What action do you take?
A.—The answer depends on your methods. If you are playing non-forcing Stayman, you should pass. Partner probably has a weak hand with five spades and four hearts and is simply trying to locate the best partscore contract. Most rubber bridge players prefer forcing Stayman, in which case partner's two spades compels you to bid again. With three-card spade support and a normal no trump opener, your path is clear—raise to three spades.

Q.2—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠QJ83 ♡6 ◇K983 ♣A742
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South
1 NT	2 ♡	?

What do you bid now?
A.—You have the values for game, and you would prefer to play in a suit contract because of your ruffing values. Cue-bid three hearts, then raise partner to game in any suit he bids. If partner persists with no trump, however, pass—he should have a double stopper in hearts for that action.

Q.3—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠9 ♡KQ84 ◇KJ107 ♣KQ65
Partner opens the bidding with three spades. What do you respond?
A.—What would you like to do? If you trust partner's preempt, you are missing at least three aces. And even if partner's suit is good, you are likely to have at least one trump loser. Pass and just hope that you can make nine tricks.

Q.4—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AJ1065 ♡93 ◇AKJ7 ♣62
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East

What do you bid now?
A.—You have a good second suit, and there is a strong temptation to show it. To bid three diamonds, however, would be a high reverse, showing a hand worth about 18 points. Since that's about an ace more than you have, all you can do for the moment is rebid two spades and wait to see what partner does.

Q.5—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠Q76 ♡84 ◇K93 ♣AQ872
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	2 ♠	Pass
2 NT	Pass	?

What action do you take?
A.—You want to play in game, but you can't be sure whether you would rather be in spades, because of your ruffing value in hearts, or in no trump, because your hand is balanced. Bid three spades, and leave the decision to partner.

Q.6—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AKQ72 ♡K109 ◇J54 ♣76
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	2 ♠	2 ◇

What action do you take?
A.—We know that bridge is a bidder's game, and that there is always a strong desire to tell partner that you have a good five-card major suit. But you also have a dead minimum opening bid, and to rebid your spades freely in this situation would be the action of a roadhog. Pass, and yield the right-of-way to partner. He is in a much better position to decide how to continue.

NEIL SOLOMON, M.D.

Blood vessels in human body would stretch for 70,000 miles

Dear Dr. Solomon: If all the blood vessels in the body were laid end-to-end, how long would they stretch? I've got a beer bet on your answer. — Tony, New York City, N.Y.

Dear Tony: There are 70,000 miles of blood vessels in the body, and they carry 2,000 gallons of blood every day. Our heart really deserves the best care we can give it.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Are girls beginning to menstruate at an earlier age than they used to? I have heard people say this but I don't understand how this could be since menstruation is a natural process. I don't see why nature should change anything about it. — Bernice, Atlanta, Ga.

Dear Bernice: The age of onset of menarche, at least in the industrialized nations, does appear to be falling. The onset of menstruation seems to be related to the person's height and weight; better nutrition, therefore, may account for its earlier appearance in recent years.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I would like to have a tummy tuck. How can I find a qualified and capable plastic surgeon? — Mrs. N.O., Boston, Mass.

Dear Ms. O.: The ABCs of finding a plastic surgeon are: A) Consult your family physician or internist. B) Call your local county medical society. C) Ask your local teaching or first class community hospital. D) Write to the Executive Office of the American Society of Plastic and Reconstructive Surgeons, Inc., at 29 East Madison, Site 807, Chicago, Ill. 60602.

Caution: Avoid anyone who makes exaggerated and sensational claims in the news media.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My mother will soon be going into the hospital for surgery. She is 78 years old and my brother and I would like to make things as comfortable as possible for her. For example, we would like her to have a private room, but the added cost would really be a burden to us. How important do you think this would be? I would even borrow the money if I thought it would make a real difference. — Elaine, Detroit, Mich.

Dear Elaine: Some patients undoubtedly enjoy the privacy of being alone in a room, while others just as certainly enjoy the company of another person. In any event, I believe a study conducted by physicians at the Duke University Medical Center in Durham, N.C., will be of interest to you. Their findings suggest that a private hospital room may not be the best place for an elderly patient.

The researchers explain that the isolation that results from being alone in a room may produce confusion among elderly patients. In addition, the staff of the facility is more likely to use physical or chemical restraint to reduce the risk of injury to the patient since direct nursing observation is often lacking.

You and your brother will have to decide how much your financial situation permits you to do; but, from a medical standpoint, it appears that a private hospital room is not always the best place.

At the crossroads

Secretary of State David A. Dean already has been creating some shockwaves in Texas political circles with his innovations in electioneering. But now Dean has submitted recommendations to the 68th Texas Legislature he believes will maximize participation in the election process.

Dean says Texas is "at a crossroads in its electoral process" and that "Texas voters are in a sense suffering from 'voter fatigue' — too many elections too close together in time in too many locations and in too many different ballot formats." Texas state leaders and election officials must find solutions to these ever-pressing problems, Dean says.

To that end, the secretary of state is recommending the Legislature enact a dozen changes he feels will help. They include the following:

— Holding a Presidential Preference Primary on Texas' regular Primary Election Day.

— Holding a "unitary primary" similar to the unitary primary conducted in the states of Alaska and Washington.

— Electing state judges on a nonpartisan basis.

— Consolidating local elections on three or four specific dates each year and conducting them at the same polling places within each precinct.

— Mandating current officeholders with more than a year remaining in the current term resign their current office when seeking election to a different statewide office.

— Carrying forward statutorily the election central vote tabulation project of the secretary of state's office.

— Holding constitutional amendment elections in presidential and gubernatorial election years. At least 25 percent of all registered voters should go to the polls before the state constitution can be amended, Dean suggests and he says prior to each constitutional amendment election, the secretary of state should provide a written summary of the advantages and disadvantages of the proposed amendments to each registered voter.

— Holding elections of Texas executive branch officeholders in conjunction with presidential elections.

— No longer permitting political candidates to use unexpended campaign contributions for personal use even if income taxes have been paid on the funds.

— Making one official responsible in each county for administration of all elections in that county.

— Giving Texas voters the options of initiative and referendum.

— Expanding to other sources than state voter rolls the selection of Texas jurors.

While not all of Dean's recommendatons may be in the best interest of the state's voters, it's obvious that he has invested considerable time and effort in formulating the recommendation. Some likely will have merit for streamlining and upgrading the state's elections process.

It is true that Texas' voting system is cumbersome and, at times, seemingly designed to discourage voter participation. It should not be that way, of course, because voting is a cherished privilege. The Legislature should carefully consider Dean's recommendations to determine whether some of them would enhance voter participation in future Texas elections.

Another View:

Message to Japan

How many of the 215 House members who voted recently for "domestic-content" legislation to restrict auto imports truly believe that the bill would create jobs? The number probably would fit comfortably into a small Toyota. No matter. It was politics, not sound economic thinking, that gave this protectionist measure life.

As much of the accompanying oratory made clear, the House was really voting for a strong warning to Japan to liberalize its own import policies, or else. The alleged job-creation purpose of the bill that the United Auto Workers union has been touting so heavily is just fluff, and most House members know it. Every auto industry job that might be restored would be more than offset by jobs lost in import-related industries or export businesses subjected to retaliation.

Such counter-protectionism would by no means be limited to Japan. Let the United States, the world's largest trading nation, move to insulate one of its major industries from foreign competition, and a signal would be flashed that would open the floodgates of protectionism in every recession-hit country around the globe.

The House is aware of that danger. It is also frustrated over high unemployment, impatient with Japan's own continuing import-limiting policies and, in the case of many of its Democratic members, indebted to the UAW for political support. And so the domestic-content legislation was passed, requiring that a rising percentage of American parts and labor be included in Japanese cars sold in the United States beginning in 1984. The choice that this gives Japanese auto makers is either to build enormously expensive plants in the United States or see their American markets vastly reduced.

The Senate, for now, seems dead set against adopting domestic-content legislation of its own, and President Reagan has already threatened to veto any such bill. These considerations no doubt induced some House members who might otherwise have yielded to wiser thoughts to vote for protectionism. For all that, the House vote should not be dismissed as effectively meaningless, for it is an unmistakable storm warning.

The dollar effect on American exports of Japan's non-tariff trade barriers is not great in overall terms of trade. The fact remains that these barriers do significantly reduce potential American markets for beef, citrus fruits, cigarettes and other products, and in so doing they cost Americans jobs. The Reagan administration has already told Japan bluntly that it must liberalize its import policies quickly or see protectionist sentiment in the United States swell. The House vote underscores the seriousness of that admonition. Domestic politics in Japan will not make it easy for Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone to lower trade barriers. Domestic politics in the United States could make it enormously harmful to both countries if he does not.

CHARLEY REESE

Just look at who is intransigent

Sometimes people ask why I often defend Israel. One reason is that Israel is often mistreated by the U.S. foreign policy establishment which seems to be committed to serving economic interests of a few rather than the national interests of the United States.

Charley Reese

I will give you a clear example of double-dealing. The Senate Appropriations Committee decided on its own initiative to increase the amount of aid to Israel. President Reagan vigorously opposed it. Now, be clear that the point of this column is not whether Israel should receive more or less or even any aid at all. The point is the hypocrisy which the Reagan administration revealed in its lobbying efforts.

Secretary of State George Schultz reportedly argued that to increase aid to Israel would be to "reward intransigence." An intransigent person is one who refuses to compromise. The president's national security adviser, William Clark, said the increase in aid would undermine the president's peace initiative.

Now let me show why this is hogwash. Just a few days later, the White House notified Congress it intended to provide some new weapons to Jordan. When asked if this weapons sale would be tied to persuading Jordan's dictator, King Hussein, to join in the peace talks, the White House said, "Oh, no, these are two separate matters."

To provide Jordan with new weapons is to reward intransigence and to undermine the president's peace initiative. It is King Hussein who refuses to compromise, not Menachem Begin; it is King Hussein who has, from the beginning, rejected Camp David and joined in the Arab chorus denouncing Egypt for making peace.

The Israeli Prime Minister, Begin, agreed in Camp David to grant autonomy to Palestinian Arabs on the West Bank and five years after that, negotiate a final settlement. That represents a compromise on Begin's part since, in his heart, he believes the West Bank rightfully belongs to Israel (and a solid case can be made that it does). Begin lost some of his oldest friends when he made this statesman-like compromise in the interest of peace.

In contrast, Hussein's position has not changed in 15 years. His position is that Israel must get out of the West Bank prior to any negotiations, any guarantees of security, any recognition of its legal and moral right to exist. Hussein has not changed that position one iota, though, like most Arabs, he comes up with a different excuse everytime you ask him why he won't join the peace process.

Furthermore, unlike Israel, Jordan is no ally of the United States. Hussein comes to Washington from visits to Moscow and Peking. Nor is he a moderate. It is a capital crime in Jordan to sell land to a Jew. But don't worry, there are no Jews in Jordan. Not long ago, he arrogantly announced that any West Bank Arab who talked with, or cooperated with, the Israelis in pursuit of peace would be subject to the death penalty. In 1970, he slaughtered around 18,000 Palestinians and drove the PLO into Lebanon. A real nice guy is this little bald-headed monarch.

So what's with Reagan wanting to punish Israel and reward a truly intransigent Arab? The same old story: money. Poor Israel has no oil. The Arabs have a lot of it and nearly all of it is sold by Mr. Rockefeller's oil companies, mostly to Europe and Japan.

Mr. Rockefeller has set the base line of American foreign policy in the Middle East: Thou shall not offend an Arab. All the rest of it is hypocritical window dressing.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Federal whistleblower hit by death threats

WASHINGTON — James Matthews has found the hard way what can happen to a conscientious government worker who blows the whistle on irregularities. He was suspended for 10 days without pay.

Jack Anderson

He also began receiving anonymous death threats. One day, he came home to find a note in his doorway with a bullet taped to it. The note said, "Quit or die."

The once-underprivileged Matthews, now 38, fought his way up from a Philadelphia slum to the University of Pennsylvania. Eventually, he won a job as a loan specialist intern at the Housing and Urban Development Department in Washington.

Part of his job is to doublecheck applications for rent increases from managers of low-income, federally subsidized housing projects. From his own boyhood experience, Matthews knows that even a small rent hike can be rough on low-income families, so he investigates the requests from management firms with extreme care.

On occasion, he has questioned management's figures when he has found unnecessary long-distance phone calls or discrepancies in employee salaries.

He saw no reason to make an exception of Edgewood Management, a large Bethesda, Md., firm, after it hired his former boss, Elliot Bernold. Edgewood had requested $485,000 in supplemental funds for an ailing housing project while Bernold was still director of housing at the local HUD office.

According to Bernold's version, he took no part in the decision. The funds were approved the day before Bernold left HUD.

On nine or 10 occasions after that, Matthews said, Edgewood requested rent increases. Six times, Matthews recommended that the requests be denied; each time, he was overruled.

He was disturbed over Bernold's cozy relationships inside HUD. But it takes courage for a government employee to challenge the conduct of his superiors. If he reports the apparent wrongdoing, he lays himself open to the most depressing harassments. For our society has not yet outgrown the hoodlum ethos, which honors the man who covers up his boss's wrongdoing above the employee who exposes it.

Matthews finally went to the HUD inspector general and filed complaints of favoritism and rule infractions. Of course, he received not a reward, but retribution. As a beginning, he was handed a 10-day suspension by his supervisor, Juanita Burgess.

Burgess said she suspended Matthews for two reasons: He had violated official procedures, and he did not tell her why he had visited the inspector general.

Obviously, informants are not going to report wrongdoing if they have to clear it with the alleged wrongdoers. The inspector general's office, therefore, told Matthews he didn't have to tell his boss about the visit.

He was subjected to other harassments, including telephone threats and the bullet left at his doorway.

Bernold acknowledged that shortly after joining the management firm, he wrote HUD a letter about arrangements for the supplemental funds contract. In other words, he participated in accepting housing money that his agency had granted the day before he quit as housing director.

This was apparent violation of the law. "I shouldn't have signed it," Bernold said of the letter.

Does Matthews regret having blown the whistle? "I regret it in the sense that I've received no protection from the inspector general's office," he said. He added that he has had many sleepless nights, "but I still feel I did the right thing."

Footnote: Matthews has appealed to the HUD general counsel to overturn his 10-day suspension, but the investigation has been slow. The new special counsel, Bill O'Connor, admitted to my reporter Allan Lengel that Matthews' case has taken "a hell of a long time."

IN THE FAMILY WAY: When Pope John Paul II lambasted the Mafia for its hard-drug dealing recently, it was no news to FBI Special Agent Joseph Pistone. As "Donnie Brasco," Pistone had infiltrated the Mob and had been accepted as a member of the Joseph Bonanno crime family for six years. His undercover work led to indictments across the country and at least six convictions so far.

One of those convicted was a Bonanno boss named Ben "Lefty" Ruggiero. An internal Justice Department document reveals what Pistone found out about Ruggiero and dope.

"In addition to his willingness to commit murder, Ruggiero also has no aversion to dealing in quaaludes and other dangerous controlled substances," the report states. "The government is in possession of numerous tape recordings which confirm Ruggiero's eagerness to make money by selling heroin."

In 1979 and 1981, Ruggiero tried to swing heroin deals in Florida with the FBI's "Donnie Brasco."

"Since May, 1979, allegations have reached the department that traditional organized crime groups have once again become active in the heroin trade," another Justice Department document reports. "In two instances, elements active in this area have been identified as 'third generation' people, that is, grandsons of organized crime members who are getting a start in this area."

COOKIE MONSTER: Just before Vice President Bush left Washington for the recent "Scandinavia Today" celebration in Minneapolis, he got a note from a boy who would be celebrating his 11th birthday while Bush was there. The boy said he'd very much like to meet Bush.

The note went on to say that the boy was also a vice president — of his sister's cookie business. The lad added that Bush was lucky he didn't have a sister for a boss.

Amused by the letter, Bush invited the young vice president and his family to his hotel suite. The boy showed up with a bagful of cookies.

INSIDE REPORT:

Tower will lead backlash on 'mad-hatters'

WASHINGTON — Only the Capitol Hill appropriations committee elite were fully aware that the undecipherable, 300-page federal financing bill passed on Dec. 20 undermines key national security designs that President Reagan had every reason to believe were inviolate.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

Reagan was sabotaged and so were majorities on Senate and House legislative committees dealing with national security. Down the drain that evening went Reagan's military aid program for Pakistan, along with the president's plan to stockpile arms and supplies at NATO forward bases, to guard against surprise Soviet attack.

"Serious damage to our national security may result," an irate Sen. John Tower, chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, lectured his colleagues just before passage of the continuing resolution financing the government to next Oct. 1. In an accusation many senators agreed with, Tower excoriated the Senate Appropriations Committee as simply not equipped to give more than "superficial consideration" to national security issues.

The mad-hatter appropriations process now in Capitol Hill vogue ignored legislative committees with at least some expertise in specific areas. Policies and money are pounded together into an impenetrable package by the all-powerful appropriations committees and brought to the floor on a take-it-or-leave-it basis in the dying hours of the session.

The Pakistan arms package was peculiarly vulnerable, and emergency aid is now required early next year. The Senate-House conference agreement on the money bill to finance much of the government for most of next year ignored Pakistan. It ignored Reagan's personal assurance to President Zia ul-Haq in Washington only two weeks earlier.

That the pro-Israel lobby was at work here, moved by Israel's concern over an alleged "Islamic" bomb, is suspected inside the administration but not substantiated. The simpler truth is that members of the appropriations committees are ignorant about key phases of U.S. foreign policy.

As bad as the slight to Pakistan, equally perverse was the decision by the two appropriations committees to deny Reagan power to reduce arms aid for Spain, Portugal and Greece, among other nations. That compels the president to stay under the imposed overall ceiling by cutting aid to Morocco, Tunisia, Bahrain, Oman and possibly other states that happen to include this country's best Arab friends.

With only a handful of copies of the resolution printed, even well-informed members of Congress who back Reagan's policies abroad were aghast to learn — hours after the voting ended — what they had voted on. But one unsurprised lawmaker was Tower, who kept himself informed on the radical changes forced on him by Sen. Ted Stevens, chairman of the military appropriations subcommittee.

MX missile money was doomed before the appropriations committees exacted their tribute, but a late change in that item infuriated Tower and his armed services colleagues. Under the MX compromise agreed to earlier, the armed services committees were to be the judge of Reagan's 1983 MX deployment plan, thus becoming traffic cop for releasing production money. Stevens grabbed that key role for himself and the appropriations committee, neither expert nor sympathetic when it comes to national security.

NATO's frontline stockpile money, backed by Tower's committee and earlier by the Senate, was excised by Stevens to satisfy politically-powerful demands of the National Guard lobby. That shredded the top fiscal 1983 priority of NATO's supreme commander, Gen. Bernard Rogers.

Conversion of appropriations committees into elite tribunals has revolutionized Congress and threatens the White House. A backlash is certain, led by strong committee chairmen such as Tower. Ronald Reagan, victim of the congressional mad-hatters, will be cheering Tower on.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Monday, Dec. 27, the 361st day of 1982. There are four days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Dec. 27, 1949, Queen Juliana of the Netherlands signed an act granting sovereignty to Indonesia after nearly 350 years of Dutch rule.

On this date:

In 1822, French scientist Louis Pasteur was born.

In 1927, Leon Trotsky was expelled from the Soviet Communist Party following a victory by Joseph Stalin's faction in the All-Union Congress.

In 1945, foreign ministers of Britain, the United States and the Soviet Union met in Moscow and called for a provisional democratic government in Korea.

In 1974, a coal mine explosion and fire in northern France took 41 lives.

Five years ago: Former CIA director William Colby told House investigators that his agency's efforts to mold world opinion had led to occasional false news reports in the United States.

One year ago: Warsaw radio announced that meat rations for all Poles other than manual workers would be reduced.

Officials prepare for alcohol problem at Olympics

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

LOS ANGELES — A prominent alcohol abuse expert has warned the Los Angeles Olympic Organizing Committee to prepare for "significant increases" in drunk driving, alcohol-related crime, public intoxication and drunken rowdiness during the 1984 Olympic Games.

But an Olympic committee spokesman declined to discuss the potential alcohol abuse problem on the record. And what little the spokesman would say about the issue implied that the committee either has not fully considered the alcohol issue or has concluded it does not exist.

The Olympic committee, which already has signed a reported $10 million promotion deal with the brewers of Budweiser beer, refused to make either its chairman, Peter Ueberroth, or any other official available to discuss the committee's plans, if any, to deal with the potential problem of alcohol abuse.

"The issue has been addressed," said a spokesman, but he would not say how.

In question is a fundamental difference of opinion. Alcohol experts fear the Olympics may become, for many spectators, a two-week bender, complete with all the possible consequences. The Olympic committee does not want to talk about it.

The alcohol issue seems unlikely to acquire the prominence of some of the commercially oriented committee's other problems like the dispute over revenues from Coliseum luxury boxes or the controversy over the sites for Olympic equestrian events.

AND SOME law enforcement officials say that they agree with the Olympic Committee's apparent position that alcohol abuse will not be any worse, and may be less prevalent, at the games than it is at sporting events in general.

But still another alcohol expert, a former official of the California state Alcoholic Beverage Control department, says that she thinks the Olympic committee is playing the role of "the ostrich with its head in the sand."

The problem, said Mara Mugford, now a private consultant, is that assuming there will be no alcohol problem increases the risk of having the games disrupted by a rash of drunk-driving tragedies and possibly even alcohol-related homicides.

Mugford coordinated a 1979 state survey that identified the places drunk drivers had last been tippling in Los Angeles before they got in their cars and started to weave home. The overwhelmingly most common point of origin: Dodger Stadium.

Moreover, it also was learned that a top official of the state agency wrote the local Olympic committee three weeks ago, asking officials to meet with ABC department representatives to discuss steps to be taken at the games to avert alcohol-related problems.

But Gordon Kelly, the state official detailed to coordinate alcohol regulation at the Olympics, said that the Olympic committee has failed to respond. Kelly said that he will call the committee to ask for a meeting on the question if he has not heard from the group by the end of the week.

The controversy over Olympic drunkenness began to surface with release to a handful of reporters of a letter to a member of the State Advisory Board on Alcohol-Related Problems from James Mosher, a prominent alcoholism expert at the Medical Research Institute of San Francisco. Mosher also was retained by the state alcoholic beverage agency to conduct the 1979 study.

THE MOSHER letter was a reply to an inquiry from Ray Chavira, a member of both the state alcohol board and the Los Angeles Commission on Alcoholism, who said he sought Mosher's advice because he feared Olympics officials had, so far, totally ignored the risks to public safety of rampant alcohol abuse during the 1984 games.

Much of Mosher's four-page letter consisted of speculation because, he said, neither the International Olympic Committee or any other group has ever recognized alcohol abuse as an issue at the games.

But from what is known about drinking and its effects at sporting events, Mosher warned that the local Olympic committee should take immediate steps to start to plan to deal with it. Mosher made five specific proposals:

—That the sale of alcoholic beverages at the Olympics be either banned or "extremely limited." If an outright ban is not ordered, Mosher suggested that the number of sellers be strictly controlled and that no alcoholic beverages be offered during at least the last hour of each event. But Mosher said that the signing of the $10 million deal with Anheuser-Busch, Inc. that designated Budweiser as the Olympics' "official beer" may make the games' organizers unwilling to take any such steps.

—That the price of alcoholic beverages at the games be deliberately increased so as to make getting drunk more expensive and less likely.

—That sellers of of alcoholic beverages be specially trained in identifying spectators who should not consume more than they already have.

—That Los Angeles County officials organize a special Olympics-related alcohol education campaign at the time of the Olympics to warn of the dangers of mixing the intensity of sporting events with drinking and, in particular, driving.

— THAT THE county enact some form of special Olympics-related alcohol tax to underwrite the expected extra demands for police and emergency medicine services to cope with the inevitable toll of the games.

Mosher said that the tax also would have to be approved by the state Legislature. He said that more funds to deal with alcohol-related Olympics problems could be obtained by enacting special license fees on concessionaires at the games, adding a surcharge to the price of Olympics tickets, at least for selected, high-risk events, and increasing parking fees at the games.

"If Los Angeles County is to respond adequately to the alcohol-related problems that will result from the Olympic Games, steps must be taken in the near future to plan the preventive actions to be taken," Mosher warned. "A coordinated, comprehensive strategy must be devised.

You'd never believe it

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — Becky Lowe and Mary Jane Lindaman met two years ago when both gave birth to daughters only an hour apart at the Hillcrest Medical Center's alternate birthing center.

Of course they vowed to keep in touch, and of course they never did, until one day last week when both were back in the hospital giving birth to sons, this time about four hours apart.

"It's just too bizarre," said Mrs. Lowe, 32. "I just can't stand it."

Now Don and Becky Lowe and Gary and Mary Jane Lindaman are known as the "coincidental couples" by the birthing center staff.

It turns out there's another inter-family coincidence. Mrs. Lindaman's father, Ed Loosley of Ponca City, discovered that he and Mrs. Lowe's father, Dr. Tom Burris, a dentist from Bartlesville, had played golf together during tournaments.

Philadelphia's Carl Hariston (78) holds the ball high after recovering a Dallas fumble in the end zone Sunday as a dejected Cowboy quarterback Danny White (11) looks on. The Eagles went on to pull off a major upset over Dallas.

Eagles sting Cowboys

IRVING, Texas (AP) - The Philadelphia Eagles got some solace from a losing season Sunday.

They beat their bitter rivals, the Dallas Cowboys, 24-20 and quarterback Ron Jaworski set a new club career record for touchdown passes.

"I thought our defense played super," said Philadelphia Coach Dick Vermeil. "We came to Dallas bound and determined that no adversity would affect us...we just never came back after that damn strike. Last week we came back some."

The Eagles increased their record to 3-5 but it would be difficult to get odds in Las Vegas on their chances of making the National Football League playoffs for the fifth consecutive year.

Philadelphia would have to beat the New York Giants next week while New Orleans, Chicago, Detroit and San Francisco all lost.

The 6-2 Dallas Cowboys have not only clinched a playoff berth but will play at home in the first round of the National Conference playoffs.

JAWORSKI'S 112TH career touchdown pass beat Norm Snead's old Eagle record by one and it beat the Cowboys in the process.

Harold Carmichael broke behind the smaller Everson Walls and caught the 10-yard touchdown pass to give Philadelphia a 21-20 lead late in the fourth quarter.

Tony Franklin later added a 22-yard field goal.

"Philadelphia played better than we did," said Dallas Coach Tom Landry. "Philadelphia came in with a 2-5 record and we didn't have the intensity we needed. They have a good football team.

"If we don't play better than we have it won't matter about the playoffs. We go to Minnesota (Monday night) and we need to play well. We need a good game going into the playoffs."

Dalas quarterback Danny White threw touchdown passes of 33 yards to Butch Johnson and 11 yards to Doug Cosbie, but was also sacked five times and threw two interceptions.

"I'm very proud of my guys because I really think they demonstrated what they are," said Vermeil.

Jaworski said he was happy he got the record but "I'm more proud of the win...It's been a crazy year."

Philadelphia jumped ahead 7-0 when Greg Bron batted the ball away from White trying to pass and recovered it in the Dallas end zone for a score.

LEROY HARRIS scored on a one-yard plunge but White's two touchdown passes offset the Eagles' scores.

Rafael Septien kicked field goals of 18 and 33 yards but Jaworski saved the game for Philadephia late in the fourth period.

"This win did not make our season but it does show us how much of the season we let go by when we were not playing up to our potential," said Vermeil.

Running back Wilbert Montgomery of the Eagles said "We were up for Dallas...I believe we are getting our team back to where it was before we went out on strike."

Defensive back Herman Edwards said "I think it gives us more confidence...this win helps our season out.

"When you are 2-5, you just play with reckless abandon. You don't have anything to lose. It's always satisfying to beat Dallas."

White said "I just played terrible. My two fumbles gave them one touchdown."

The game was played in 36 degree temperatures and a steady rain. Ball-handling was tricky.

There were 18,714 no-shows as a crowd of 46,199 fans braved the raw weather.

No team is safe as parity raises head in college basketball

By DAVE GOLDBERG
AP Sports Writer

Is no team safe? Parity in college basketball is one thing, but this is getting ridiculous.

American 62, Georgetown 61; Stetson 76, West Virginia 69; Maryland 80, UCLA 79; Washington 55, Missouri 48, Penn 84, Villanova 80.

And, most incredibly, Chaminade 77, No. 1 Virginia 72.

The college basketball season is barely a month old, and many of the teams who are supposed to be the powers have at least one loss. Defending NCAA champion North Carolina has three, Georgetown, last season's runnerup, has two.

The Virginia-Chaminade game is being called one of the biggest upsets in the history of college basketball. "It has to rank right up there," said Virginia Coach Terry Holland. "What we did was amazing," said Merv Lopes, the winning coach.

A check of the history books indicate they may be right. Never has a team from the NAIA — smallest of the small — come anywhere near the top-ranked team in Division I. Even when that team is in mid-jet lag, as Virginia was, stopping off to play Chaminade following two games in Japan.

But upsets are not really that surprising, particularly in this modern era, when it doesn't matter that much what happens in December.

No less an expert than Al McGuire, who guided Marquette to the 1977 national championship after seven regular season losses, talked recently about parity. "February and March," he said. "That's when it gets important."

One reason for that is the expanded NCAA tournament field, which means that just about every major power will qualify for the tournament. So you don't have to win them all and you don't want to hit a high in December and January and sag in February and March. Georgetown lost two games last December, three in January, one in February and went 7-0 in March before losing by a point in the NCAA finals.

Moreover, there is a lot more balance everywhere. Traditional powers like UCLA, Kentucky, Indiana and North Carolina remain strong, but each of them has two or three or four teams in its conference who can beat it on a given night.

Then there are the new instant powers — Texas Western (now Texas-El Paso — and Jacksonville were early ones. Nevada-Las Vegas, the University of Alabama at Birmingham, Indiana State, Illinois State, Cal-Fullerton, James Madison, North Carolina-Charlotte, Old Dominion, Virginia Commonwealth. Robert Morris, 10 years ago a two-year business school in Pittsburgh, showed up in last season's NCAA tournament.

Moreover, a whole new league, the Big East, has emerged as one of the nation's strongest, with three teams in last year's final four and four — St. John's, Georgetown, Syracuse and Villanova — in the current Top 20. The Southwest Conference, once a doormat, can now compete with anyone.

"The Big East changes a lot of things," says McGuire. "They're in prime recruiting area and those kids who used to go down south are now staying home. They're going to make recruiting tough for the ACC in particular but also for other people."

Expect more upsets this week, during Holiday Tournament time, a traditional time for the little guys to rise up. Even potential Chaminades.

Wouldn't Wisconsin-Green Bay, a small college power new to Division I love to rise up and knock off Marquette tonight in the first round of the Milwaukee Classic? (And look out for Hawaii (a loser to Chaminade, by the way) with Missouri, Arizona State, Oklahoma, North Carolina, Texas Tech, Virginia Tech and Providence in the Rainbow Classic.

On Tuesday, the Tangerine Bowl features Rollins (and Stetson (again?) with Temple and Purdue. Wouldn't it be something if Grambling knocks off Indiana, at Indiana yet, in the first round of the Hoosier Classic? Look out for James Madison against Iowa in the Rochester Classic in Rochester, N.Y.n.

And look out for Wayland Baptist. Chaminade has won eleven of 12 games.

The 12th was against Wayland Baptist. End Adv

Christmas produces odd bowl games

By The Associated Press

Things were a bit out of the ordinary in the Christmas Day Bowl games.

The Washington Huskies needed seven points to beat Maryland in the Aloha Bowl. So they tried a two-point play and won by one.

It snowed at the Sun Bowl, where North Carolina took advantage of the gale conditions to rally in the fourth quarter and beat Texas 26-10.

The Gray beat the Blue. For the first time since 1978.

Ninth-ranked Washington's 21-20 win over Maryland was fashioned on an 80-yard drive in the last four minutes that culminated with a 16-yard touchdown pass from Tim Cowan to Anthony Allen with 11 seconds left. It was Cowan's third touchdown pass of the day to Allen.

"THE LAST pass, was a two-point conversion play," Cowan said afterwards. "We got in an area where we thought it could work so we decided to give it a shot. It worked perfect because it won the game."

And Allen said

"I just happened to mention to the staff that I thought it would be a good play to go with in that situation. And it just so happened that one of them agreed with me and we went with it."

Overall, Cowan finished with 33 completions in 53 attempts for 350 yards and called it afterwards, "the best game I ever played."

No. 16 Maryland had taken its first lead at 20-14 with 10:44 left in the game as Tony Nash culminated an 86-yard, 16 play drive. Then the Terrapins missed a chance to put the game away when Dess Atkinson missed a 32-yard field goal with 3:49 left.

It was a missed opportunity that turned around the Sun Bowl game also. Early in the third quarter, Texas was leading 10-3 and going with the wind, which swirled up to 35 miles an hour in gusts. North Carolina stopped the Longhorns' fullback Ervin Davis on third-and-goal and fourth-and-goal from the 1.

When they got the wind in the fourth quarter, the Tar Heels took over the game. Brooks Barwick kicked two field goals and Rob Rogers added one to the one he had kicked. Then backup tailback Ethan Horton, who finished the day with 119 yards rushing, plunged over from the two. Then, with 1:35 left, linebacker Micah Moon sacked Texas quarterback Todd Dodger and Mike Wilcher recovered in the end zone for another touchdown.

NORTH CAROLINA may have benefited from the snow and win gusts.

"It really didn't bother us much," said Tar Heel Coach Dick Crum. "Believe it or not, we practiced in weather worse than this back home preparing for the game."

The Gray's 20-10 victory over the Blue was largely the work of three of Gray Coach Jackie Sherrill's Texas A&M stalwarts.

Johnny Hector scored two touchdowns, Earnest Jackson ran for 71 yards, and quarterback Gary Kubiak teamed with Reggie Collier of Southern Mississippi to direct the South's offense. Kubiak passed for 126 yards and Collier for 64.

Just give Illinois a tour of the hotel

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — To Alabama's Paul "Bear" Bryant, who has won more games than any coach in college football history, it was just one more party before one more bowl game, but Illinois Coach Mike White wasn't about to pass it up.

"Hey, we don't miss anything. We haven't been to a bowl game every year for 24 years like they have," said Gary Horton, White's chief recruiter, referring to the Crimson Tide's bowl reputation. "If they offered to give us a tour of our own hotel, we wouldn't say no," he said of the Sunday night gala.

The two teams, with identical 7-4 records, will meet Wednesday in the Liberty Bowl. Bryant, with 323 wins, will be coaching his final game. He has announced his retirement.

While Bryant did not attend Sunday night's party for the two schools, the Illinois side of the dance floor was particularly lively, a testimony to the fact that the Illini haven't been to a bowl game in 19 years.

"We lead the league in good times," said a smiling Neale Stoner, the university's athletic director.

Illinois players, meanwhile, dined at a downtown restaurant and then relaxed back at the Hyatt Regency Hotel, headquarters for both Illinois fans and team.

Earlier Sunday, both teams practiced at an indoor facility at Memphis State University.

After practice, a potpourri of Illini football players, some wearing Illinois colors, and similarly decked fans filled the lobby of the 26-story hotel.

White, relaxed but soggy after a 6½-mile run through the rain, held an impromptu meeting there with a few of his coaches. He stopped occasionally to chat with Illini fans.

And several players played electronic games in the hotel's arcade, while others watched National Football League games on a huge television screen.

Occasionally, a belle with a honey-thick drawl would stop by.

"Which one of y'all is the quarterback?" one asked.

"The kids (players) are having a great time," quipped University of Illinois spokesman Tab Bennett. "One of the reasons we came to Memphis was because we were looking for a good, fun and rewarding bowl game. They (the players) had some other options, but they selected the Liberty Bowl," he said.

Since the team's arrival Monday in this Mississippi River city, they have visited Graceland Mansion, former home of Elvis Presley, a locally famous rib place and several night spots, Bennett added.

By game day, just about all of the hotel's 363 rooms will be rented to Illinoisans, said hotel spokesman Paul Zeisel.

Quarterback Tony Eason had never spent a Christmas away from his home in Walnut Grove, Calif.

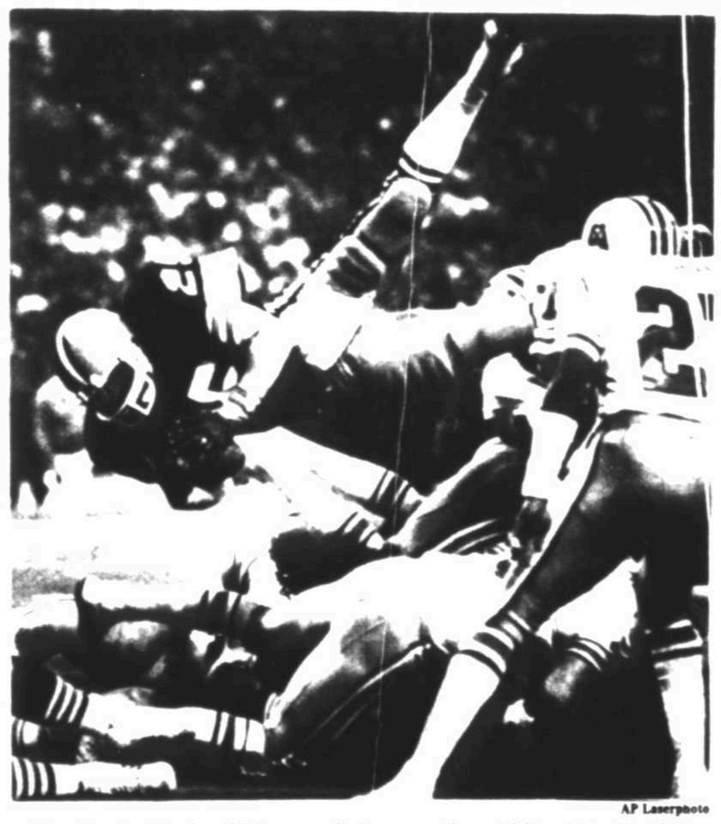

"We're all very tight, my family and I, and it's tough to spend time like this apart, but they understand this type of opportunity doesn't come along very often, so they understand," Eason said. "But I'll be eager to get home after this."

No shows surpass 100,000

By The Associated Press

For the fifth time in six weeks since the National Football League strike, the number of people choosing not to use their tickets to games surpassed the 100,000 mark.

Last week's no-show figure was 106,778, and there were 156,867 no-shows for weekend No. 4. Only once, in the third week after the strike (83,173), have no-shows numbered less than 100,000.

Cleveland's Charles White goes flying over the middle of the line for a game winning touchdown against the Houston Oilers Sunday. A Houston fumble by Earl Campbell set up the score.

Houston extends season of spirit giving

Earl Campbell's fumble at one propels win for Cleveland

HOUSTON (AP) - Houston Oiler running back Earl Campbell extended the giving spirit of the season an extra day in the Astrodome Sunday by playing Santa Claus to the Cleveland Browns.

Although the gifts were unplanned, Cleveland's Clinton Burrell accepted two Campbell fumbles, one at the Oiler one-yard-line, and the Browns used them to gift wrap a 20-14 victory to stay alive in the race for the National Football League playoffs.

"The fumble was the difference," said Oiler linebacker Greg Bingham, who played an outstanding game, sacking Browns quarterback Paul McDonald twice. "You can't fumble at the one with five minutes to play and expect to win."

The Oilers were leading 7-3 in the second quarter and threatening to score when Campbell coughed the ball up at the Cleveland four. The Browns chipped their way out to their 44 where McDonald fliped a 56-yard touchdown pass to Dave Logan and a 10-7 halftime lead.

The Oilers regained the lead in the third period on rookie Donnie Craft's three-yard run, which he set up himself by recovering a fumble by Cleveland's Hanford Dixon.

But the Oilers, who sank to their sixth straight loss and a 1-7 record, couldn't stand prosperity.

The Browns improved their record to 4-4, but aren't assure of a playoff spot.

"If we'e in the playoffs, we'll drink the wine, but we'll need help rom the other teams to stomp the grapes," Cleveland Coach Sam Rutigliano said.

Campbell fumbled again at his own one and Charles White leaped into the end zone on the next play to give Cleveland the victory with 5:40 to play.

It was another frustrating day for the former three-time NFL rushing champion. Rutigliano sympathized with Campbell, but could offer no explanation for his fumblitis.

"You'd have to ask Campbell about that," Rutigliano said. "But that's like asking (President) Reagan about social security. He's got enough problems."

The Oilers took a 7-0 first quarter lead on Archie Manning's eight-yard touchdown pass to Mike Renfro. Browns countered with Matt Bahr's 18-yard field goal. Bahr added a 24-yarder in the fourth quarter prior to White's clincher.

Manning left the game with a pulled hamstring in the first quarter and Gifford Nielsen completed the game. Nielsen hit 18 of 33 passes for 271 yards but suffered three interceptions and was sacked three times.

"We moved the football all over the field but the key is putting it in the end zone and we just didn't get the job done," Nielsen said. "It's unbelieveable what's happened. We just don't have things going our way. We just never found any momentum."

Walton may make Clippers a winner

By The Associated Press

Bill Walton, after playing two games in a row for the first time this season and turning in his best performance of the year, may be ready to help make the San Diego Clippers into a more consistent winner.

The Clippers beat the Portland Trail Blazers 112-105 Sunday night, their first victory this season in nine games with Walton in the lineup, as he had 25 points, eight rebounds and seven blocked shots. The victory also snapped an eight-game losing streak for the 5-23 Clippers.

Before Sunday, Walton hadn't played in a National Basketball Association game that his team won since March 8, 1980. He had missed the last two full seasons because of foot injuries and until now has played only once a week this year to test his durability.

"I was wondering if I ever was going to get a victory again in the NBA," Walton said. "I'm having a lot of fun now. It's great to be running around again after just limping around the last few years. I hope to keep at it and play a lot more."

"It looks like he's back," said center-forward Mychal Thompson, who had 24 points and 12 rebounds for Portland. "That's bad news for the opposition and good news for the NBA. It's great for the people of San Diego. Bill makes a big difference in this team."

ALTHOUGH THE Clippers opened a 17-3 lead early in the game, Portland rallied for a 27-26 lead at the end of the first quarter. But the Clippers forged ahead 53-43 by halftime and led 83-81 at the end of the third period.

Portland tied the score 83-83 at the start of the fourth quarter, but Michael Brooks gave San Diego the lead for good with a 15-foot jumper.

"They couldn't match up with us on a consistent basis," Walton said. "We have more size and we had control of the backboards."

"Basketball is a rhythm game — the more you play, the better your rhythm. The more I play, the better my rhythm will be."

Although Walton played 38 minutes Sunday night in a good show of stamina, Coach Paul Silas said his 6-foot-11 center "is not anything like he's going to be."

"I got winded but I'm just happy to be out there and win a game," added Walton.

"The more Bill gets a chance to practice the better off we are," Silas said. "He really leads things out there. Right now he's playing at about 75 percent."

76ers 124, Spurs 122

Andrew Toney scored 13 of his 23 points in the fourth quarter to pace Philadelphia over San Antonio.

Toney sank two baskets in the last 90 seconds to keep the 76ers ahead of the Spurs, who rallied from eight points down midway through the fourth quarter to cut their deficit to two.

Julius Erving led all scorers with 28 points for the 76ers, while Moses Malone added 27 points and 17 rebounds. Artis Gilmore had 27 points and 19 rebounds for San Antonio.

Lakers 96, Rockets 94

Jamaal Wilkes scored 22 points as Pacific Division leader Los Angeles barely defeated Houston, which has the worst record in the NBA.

A 12-2 spurt by the Rockets gave them an 85-84 lead with 6:09 left in the fourth quarter, but the Lakers took the lead for good, 89-87, on a basket by Wilkes with 4:39 to play.

James Bailey was the game's leading scorer with 24 points for the Rockets.

Kings 120, Jazz 118

Ray Williams had 25 points, 10 rebounds and 10 assists and hit two free throws with six seconds left to help Kansas City beat Utah.

The Jazz trimmed a 24-point deficit to one on a three-point goal with 21 seconds left by Darrell Griffith, who led Utah with 26 points.

Williams' free throws made it 119-116 and Utah's Rickey Green made it 119-118 with five seconds remaining before Kevin Loder added the final point of the game with another free throw with three seconds to go.

Eddie Johnson led all scorers with 27 points for Kansas City.

Sonics 88, Suns 87

Jack Sikma had 20 points and 18 rebounds as Seattle outlasted Phoenix to stay only one-half game behind the Lakers.

The Suns, down by nine with three minutes to go, scored the last eight points of the game and had a chance to win until Kyle Macy's jumper from the top of the key missed with one second left.

Walter Davis paced Phoenix with 25 points.

Bucks 106, Pistons 96

Milwaukee increased its lead to 3½ games in the Central Division as Marques Johnson had 30 points and 14 rebounds against second-place Detroit.

Phil Ford had 13 of his 15 points in the third quarter as the Bucks turned a 56-55 halftime deficit into an 83-76 lead after three quarters.

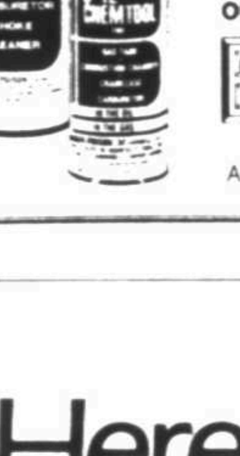

Isiah Thomas led all scorers with 32 points for the Pistons.

Pacers 87, Knicks 81

Rookie Clark Kellogg scored 14 of his 22 points in the third quarter as Indiana broke a five-game losing streak by beating New York.

The Pacers saw a 69-50 lead in the third quarter trimmed to 79-76 early in the fourth period. Two free throws apiece by Herb Williams and Jerry Sichting rebuilt Indiana's edge to seven, and New York didn't get closer than four points the rest of the way.

Kellogg had 18 rebounds for the Pacers, a team high for the season.

Seven teams qualify for short season playoffs

Steelers get shot in arm from Terry Bradshaw

By The Associated Press

Seven teams qualified Sunday for the National Football League playoffs, but it was one of the teams still hoping to get into postseason tournament that made the biggest turnaround of the day.

The Pittsburgh Steelers, who looked sick for most of December, got a shot in the arm from Terry Bradshaw and began to look like the team that has won four Super Bowls since 1975.

"We found the offense we've been looking for," said Steeler Coach Chuck Noll after Sunday's explosive 37-14 National Football League victory over the New England Patriots. "Terry was his old self."

The rejuvenation put things together again after the Steelers' desultory offense had failed them three times in the last four games. What's more, it got them to the verge of the playoffs. Out of the playoffs since 1979, they will land one of the five remaining berths if Miami beats Buffalo tonight in the weekly Monday Night game. Otherwise, they'll have to try to clinch the spot with a victory over arch-rival Cleveland next Sunday in Pittsburgh.

"Winning cures everything," said Bradshaw, who threw two touchdown passes, including a key 46-yard strike to Greg Hawthorne. "The most important thing is to win. You don't worry about slumps."

On what normally would have been the last day of the regular season except for the players' strike earlier this year, the Green Bay Packers, San Diego Chargers, St. Louis Cardinals, Cincinnati Bengals, Miami Dolphins, New York Jets and Minnesota Vikings — despite a loss to the Jets — found their way into the playoffs. The Dolphins gained the playoffs without taking the field, as the result of an NFL formula to decide some of the 16 berths.

The Packers hammered the Atlanta Falcons 38-7; the Chargers outscored the Baltimore Colts 44-26, the Cardinals edged the New York Giants 24-21, the Bengals stopped the Seattle Seahawks 24-10 and the Jets walloped the Vikings 42-14.

The Los Angeles Raiders, Dallas Cowboys, Washington Redskins and Atlanta had previously nailed down playoff berths.

In other action Sunday, the Raiders beat the Denver Broncos 27-10; the Cowboys edged the Philadelphia Eagles 24-20; the Redskins beat the New Orleans Saints 27-10; the San Francisco 49ers stopped the Kansas City Chiefs 26-13; the Cleveland Browns edged the Houston Oilers 20-14; the Tampa Bay Bucs nipped the Detroit Lions 23-21 and the Chicago Bears outscored the Los Angeles Rams 34-26.

And, despite the many games with playoff appearances hanging in the balance, there were 107,852 no-shows for the 13 contests. That marked the fifth time in six weeks since the strike that the figure surpassed 100,000.

Pittsburgh's victory was all the more impressive because it came against a team that had posted two straight shutouts, over Miami and Seattle.

"I was happy with the execution of our offensive line," said Noll. "They came off the ball and controlled the line of scrimmage.

"We started the day wanting to run the football — sort of back to basics. Franco (Harris with 101 yards rushing) had a good game. He had some good holes and took advantage of them. When we ran early, it was partly because we wanted to establish the run and also because it would help our protection of Terry."

The Patriots, meanwhile, were forced to abandon their usually successful running game after falling behind 20-0 at halftime.

"We played disappointingly," said New England Coach Ron Meyer, whose team fell to 4-4 and nearly out of the playoff picture. "I'm not going to blame the loss on anybody. Forty-nine of us lost the game."

Bradshaw completed 17 of 27 passes for 282 yards. He threw the big touchdown pass to Hawthorne after the Patriots, led by Matt Cavanaugh, had closed to within 23-14 early in the fourth quarter. Gary Anderson added three field goals for the Steelers.

Packers 38, Falcons 7

Lynn Dickey connected with James Lofton on scoring passes of 80 and 57 yards as Green Bay beat Atlanta and moved into the NFL playoffs for the first time since 1972.Dickey, who completed 10 of 17 attempts for 248 yards, also set up another touchdown with a 50-yard completion to Phil Epps.

"They dominated every phase of the game," said Atlanta Coach Leeman Bennett. "We got beat by a team much better than us. Green Bay was the best team we have played, with the possible exception of the (Los Angeles) Raiders."

Chargers 44, Colts 26

Dan Fouts fired five touchdown passes, three to tight end Kellen Winslow and two to wide receiver Wes Chandler, as San Diego routed the winless Colts and headed into the playoffs for the fourth straight year.

The victory extended San Diego's winning streak to five games — the club's longest in 18 years — and set up a final-game showdown with the once-beaten Los Angeles Raiders next week.

Fouts said the Chargers had anticipated heavy blitzing from the Colts and had a plan to offset it.

"We cranked it up and really got after them with our running game. Our success running gave them problems and took away their blitzing," said Fouts.

San Diego Coach Don Coryell said he was "very worried" about the Chargers' tendency in the past to let down when they were heavily favored.

"We're very happy to get out of that ball game. It was a legitimate worry," he said.

Cardinals 24, Giants 21

Neil Lomax drilled an eight-yard touchdown pass to Roy Green with 27 seconds remaining, rallying St. Louis over the New York Giants.

Lomax's passes at the finish nullified fourth-quarter heroics by Scott Brunner of the Giants, who directed New York on scoring drives of 64 and 50 yards in the fourth quarter.

Bengals 24, Seahawks 10

Pete Johnson ran for a pair of touchdowns, and Ken Anderson and David Verser combined on a 56-yard TD pass play to lead Cincinnati over Seattle.

Cincinnati got a 34-yard field goal from Jim Breech and a three-yard touchdown burst by Johnson in the fourth quarter to give the defending American Conference champions a spot in the post-season tournament.

Jets 42, Vikings 14

New York cornerback Bobby Jackson covered 157 yards and scored twice, once on a blocked field goal and another on an interception, as the Jets clinched a playoff spot with a runaway victory over Minnesota.

Jets quarterback Richard Todd led the offense, completing 15 of 22 passes for 236 yards and one touchdown. The Jet defense, with the help of Jackson, turned the game around in the second quarter with two touchdowns in 36 seconds.

Raiders 27, Broncos 10

Rookie tailback Marcus Allen, the NFL's leading scorer, caught two touchdown passes from quarterback Jim Plunkett as the Raiders rolled past the error-prone Broncos.

The Raiders put the game away by scoring 24 points in the second quarter to give them a 27-0 halftime advantage.

Redskins 27, Saints 10

Joe Theismann hit wide receiver Charlie Brown on touchdown pass plays of 57 yards and 58 yards to lead the Redskins over the Saints, clinching the home field advantage for the Redskins in the playoffs. The Redskins sewed up a playoff berth last week — the first time since 1976 that Washington has been in post-season play.

49ers 26, Chiefs 13

Dwight Clark atoned for a rare dropped pass by rambling 51 yards on a key third-down play, setting up up Jeff Moore's go-ahead touchdown, and Ray Wersching kicked four field goals to boost San Francisco past Kansas City. The victory kept alive the scant playoff hopes of the defending Super Bowl champions and doomed the Chiefs to an 11th consecutive non-playoff season.

Bucs 23, Lions 21

Cornerback Bobby Watkins' pass interference penalty gave Tampa Bay the ball deep in Detroit territory and Bill Capece turned it into a 27-yard field goal with 25 seconds remaining, leading the Buccaneers over the Lions.

AP Laserphoto

San Francisco tight end Russ Francis (81) twists around to reach for the ball that was stripped away from him by Kansas City linebacker Charles Jackson (51) on a pass play Sunday. Eric Harris (44) recovered the fumble for the Chiefs.

Bears 34, Rams 26

Walter Payton gained 104 yards to become only the fourth man in NFL history to surpass the career 10,000-yard mark in rushing as he paced the Bears over the Rams. Payton's performance and the passing of rookie Jim McMahon overshadowed the 509-yard passing afternoon of Rams quarterback Vince Ferragamo, the second highest in NFL history. Ferragamo also threw for three scores.

Payton, who carried 20 times, now has 10,095 yards in his eight-year career. Only Jim Brown, with 12,312, O.J. Simpson, with 11,236, and Franco Harris, with 10,823, have more rushing yards.

Dolphins, Buffalo square off tonight

MIAMI (AP) — After 10 years as Buffalo's quarterback, Joe Ferguson says he can't remember when the Bills have met the Miami Dolphins in late season when a National Football League playoff berth or division championship wasn't on the line.

"I'm expecting a typical Miami-Buffalo game," says Ferguson, who will lead the 4-3 Bills into tonight's nationally televised matchup in the Orange Bowl. "Seems like it always comes down to playing Miami."

The two teams squared off the last weekend of 1981 with the AFC East crown up for grabs. Miami won 16-6 to run its unbeaten streak at home against the Bills to 13 games.

The Dolphins, coming off a 20-19 triumph over the New York Jets, will carry a 5-2 record into the 8 p.m. CST game. Coach Don Shula, in his 20th NFL season, will be looking for his 200th regular-season victory.

Only three only coaches — George Halas, Culy Lambeau and Tom Landry — have won that many. Shula's overall record, including playoff games, is 209-85-6.

"We've had a lot of big games against Miami over the years and this is certainly another," says Buffalo Coach Chuck Knox. "As the Dolphins showed in their win over the Jets last weekend, they are very much a championship contender.

"We found it difficult to score on the Dolphin defense in our first game this season and need to rebound from last weekend's loss at Tampa Bay," Knox added.

The Buccaneers nipped the Bills 24-23 Sunday. The loss was Buffalo's third in five games since the strike-shortened season resumed and, coupled with a 9-7 setback to the Dolphins Nov. 21, means two of those defeats have come by a total of three points.

"It's frustrating to lose by a point or two because we are a much better team than what we've shown," said Ferguson. "Our defense has been excellent, but our offense hasn't."

Ferguson, who has passed for more than 3,000 yards and 19 touchdowns in 18 career games against the Dolphins, threw five interceptions in the first Miami game.

"I didn't play well that first game. A lot of things went wrong, but mainly I made some bad throws," the quarterback said. "We can't make those mistakes again."

The Dolphins can clinch a playoff berth with a victory Monday night or at Baltimore on Jan. 2. If the club sweeps both, it would ensure the home field advantage for the playoffs.

Soviets nip Switzerland in hockey

DAVOS, Switzerland (AP) — Spartak Moscow edged Davos, Switzerland's top hockey team 5-4 Sunday night in spirited Spengler Cup competition, with seven Canadians on the ice for the Swiss.

After three Soviet goals in the first period, Davos returned to the ice with defensemen Bob Hess, Bruce Affiek and forwards Bernie Johnson, Dave Gardner and Peter Sullivan.

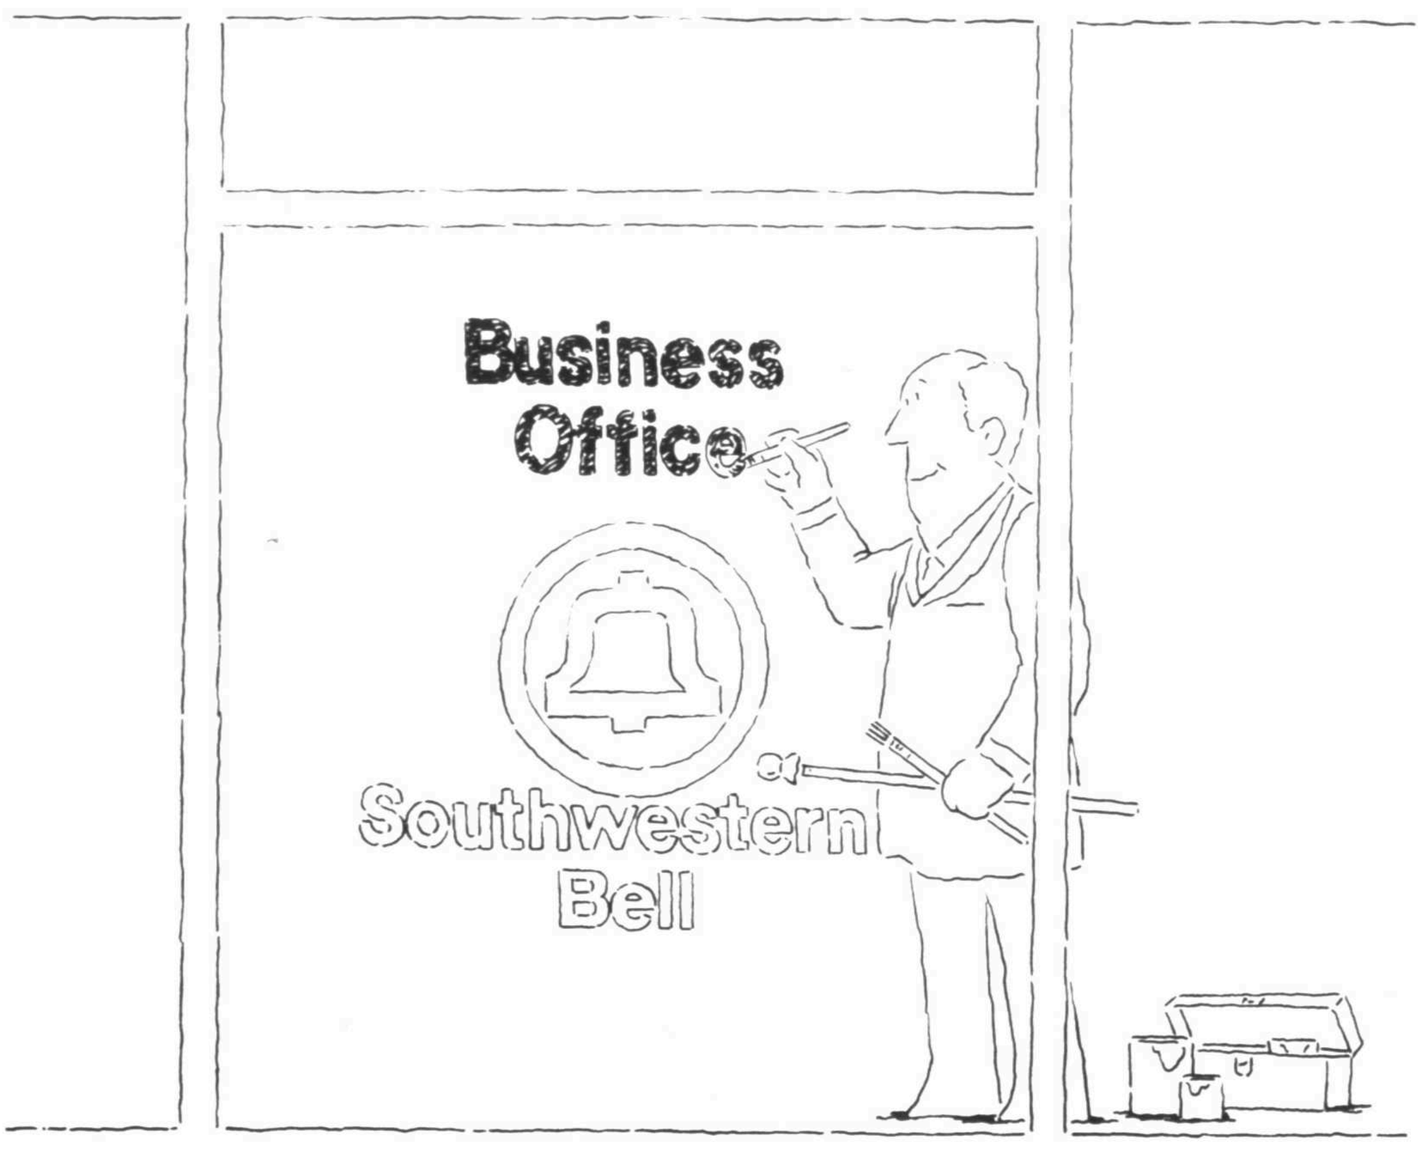

To the cheers of a capacity crowd of 7,500, Gardner and Hess made it 3-2, before Johnson scored the equalizer in the first six minutes of the second period. There was little checking in the fast-skating game.

The Canadians were loaded to Davos for the tourney from other Swiss teams and joined countrymen Kelly Kisio and Ron Wilson, regular Davos players.

Davos, down 4-3 at the end of the second period, fought back with a goal from forward Enrico Triulzi, before Andrei Chistiyakov slapped in the final puck for the Soviets with less than five minutes left in the game.

The victory tied Spengler titlists Spartak with Dukla Jihlava for first place after two games in the round-robin tournament. The Czechoslovak veterans scored a 7-4 victory over North Dakota, the U.S. Entry, in the opening encounter.

Controversy stirs LA football fans

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Raiders are up, the Rams are down, and controversy abounds in the tale of this city's two National Football League clubs.

With two games left in the regular season, the Los Angeles Raiders, who came south from Oakland this season, stand ready for the Super Bowl playoffs at 6-1. The Los Angeles Rams, who play in Orange County now, are out of contention at 1-6.

The controversy over the Rams lies mainly with the leadership, from owner Georgia Frontiere on down.

The Raiders arrived after a federal court antitrust fight, and they may be back in Oakland next season. The northern California city wants to use its eminent domain powers to regain the team.

In the meantime, owner Al Davis is fighting with the Los Angeles Olympic Organizing Committee over leasing of the LA Coliseum.

THE RAMS, who used to play in the Coliseum before moving to Anaheim after the 1979 season, were booed lustily by fans in their old home field last weekend when the Raiders beat them 37-31.

"Reception of the Raiders by Los Angeles fans was exuberant," said Sharon Perrott of nearby Highland Park, who watched the Los Angeles vs. Los Angeles contest from a 50-yard seat. "The Raiders fulfilled every hope for an incredibly exciting football team.

"I was never a strong Rams fan. They played very well, but there was just a quality of 'team' that was missing.

"There was nothing like the final two minutes of this game. When the Rams went ahead (31-30) the crowd went dead silent. When Greg Pruitt ran back the kickoff 43 yards everybody started screaming and standing up. Then came the winning touchdown and the crowd went wild."

Noting the chant of "Rams go home," Perrott said, "They abandoned us. They wanted their real estate deal down there."

FOR ANAHEIM residents, the Rams are their team.

"People who come to this establishment support the Rams nearly 100 percent," said Terry Coates, an Anaheim restaurant chef. "The people are a little bit down this year and what you hear criticized is their defense. They really don't think it is Ray's fault."

The future of Rams Coach Ray Malavasi is uncertain, even though he has a year left on his contract. Tom Flores of the Raiders has no such worry.

The opposite won-loss records of the teams is, of course, a major factor in fan reception. On the plus side for each is that they have exciting running backs from the Los Angeles area.

The Raiders boast rookie Marcus Allen from the University of Southern California, winner of last year's Heisman Trophy.

The Rams have Wendell Tyler, a veteran from UCLA, who rushed for 1,074 yards last year and this season has led the NFL in touchdowns.

When the Rams went to 1-4 in the won-loss column, the clamor for Malavasi's dismissal heightened. At 1-5, there were reports Frontiere planned to fire the coach, the general manager and the supervisor of player personnel. No official comment from the Rams.

The Raiders' come-from-behind victory Dec. 18 did nothing to douse the rumors.

"I used to be a Rams fan, but I can't stand the coaching staff or the owner," said Joe Campos of Los Angeles. "The Raiders are much more exciting. In that, they're on a level with Dallas and I'm also a fan of the Cowboys."

Front offices of the two clubs differ dramatically. Al Davis, the outspoken maverick of the NFL, is backed by decades of football experience. Frontiere is an ex-showgirl who inherited the team and millions of dollars from her late husband, Carroll Rosenbloom. Now married to composer Dominic Frontiere, she often appears to depend on others and has been accused of indecision.

Davis, however, remains his own boss. He was NFL Coach of the Year with the Raiders in 1963, when he also was general manager. He became commissioner of the American Football League in 1966, returning to the Raiders as managing general partner and part-owner when the NFL and AFL merged.

Since then, he has been the majordomo in the handling of his club, which won the Super Bowl in 1977 and 1981. In 1980, the Rams reached the Super Bowl but lost the game to Pittsburgh 31-19.

Paul Winslow of West Hollywood, who has been a fan of both teams, feels the current management is responsible for the fall of the Rams.

"What Rosenbloom took so long to build, Mrs. Frontiere tore down in a few years," he said.

ATTENDANCE AT the three Raiders' home games hasn't been all that was expected, and initially there were some big problems in ticket distribution. The team drew 56,646 for the Rams game, its largest home crowd. The Rams in Anaheim had sold out (69,045) their last six games in 1980 and first seven in 1981. But in this strike-split season, it's been different, with tickets available and up to 12,000 no-shows.

The start of pro football's battle of Los Angeles goes back to 1978, when the Rams announced they were moving to Anaheim Stadium. They had been playing in the Coliseum since 1946 when they arrived from Cleveland.

So the Coliseum was left without a professional football team and NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle said Los Angeles must stand in line with other cities for a possible expansion team in years to come.

Bill Robertson became head of a Coliseum Commission group seeking to land a new tenant.

Overtures were made to established teams having troubles with stadium leases and location. Minneapolis built a new domed stadium following the Coliseum bid. Miami became more satisfied with the Florida atmosphere. Baltimore owner Robert Irsay, who owned the Rams briefly before a unuique franchise swap with Rosenbloom, made a trip to Los Angeles to talk over the possibility of the Colts moving West, his conditions in Baltimore improved.

SKEPTICAL LOS Angeles sports fans began to think they were being used by the other teams.

Under Rosenbloom, the Rams flourished, reaching the NFL playoffs six straight years. He drowned on April 2, 1979 before seeing his club reach the Super Bowl. His Colts had won that championship in 1971.

Rosenbloom negotiated the Anaheim deal, which included some choice land near the stadium. The Rams were successful in their first season in the town known primarily as the home of Disneyland, but the fans cooled during a 6-10 campaign in 1981 that snapped the team's playoff string.

Many Los Angeles fans had been making the trips to Anaheim, about 30 miles south of the Coliseum. But many others became Raiders fans when the club came from Oakland for this season.

NM powers receive tests

By The Associated Press

One month into the high school basketball season, unbeaten teams have already become an endangered species.

Only three AAAA teams, Gallup, Albuquerque Eldorado and Albuquerque Sandia, remain unbeaten while in AAA only Cobre and Tularosa have dodged defeat.

Sandia is 7-0 while Eldorado and Gallup are both 5-0.

Defending AAAA champion Farmington is off to an impressive 6-1 record, despite the fact Coach Marvin Sanders graduated four of the five starters from the team that beat Eldorado in the finals of the State Tournament last March.

The Scorpions had their 28-game winning streak snapped by tough Lehi, Utah in the Farmington Invitational.

The surprise team in AAAA thus far has been Gallup. The Bengals are off to their best start in years under fourth-year head Coach Larry Vendrely.

Hobbs, the perennial power in southeast New Mexico, is 5-2 in Coach Ralph Tasker's 34th year at the helm.

Clovis and Carlsbad, both of whom appear to have enough talent to challenge Hobbs for district supremacy, are off to impressive starts. Clovis is 6-1 while Carlsbad is 7-1.

Ross finds oil by accident in seeking salt water source

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the first in a series of seven stories dealing with the petroleum industry in Oklahoma.

By BILL JOHNSON
Associated Press Writer

OKLAHOMA CITY — Most historians trace the rise of the oil industry in the United States to a well drilled near Titusville, Pa., in 1859 by Edwin L. Drake.

What is less widely known, however, is that the first oil well in what is present-day Oklahoma was drilled the same year.

The main difference is that Drake was looking for oil. Lewis Ross, who drilled the well in Oklahoma, was a salt manufacturer who was looking for a new source of salt water.

A publication of the Oklahoma Historical Society, "Drill Bits, Picks and Shovels," notes that Ross hoped to find a new salt water source by drilling a deep well at the Grand Saline on Grand River in what is now Mayes County.

"Instead he struck a 'vein' of oil at about 700 feet that yielded approximately 10 barrels a day for a year," the publication states.

The depth at which Ross hit his oil also marked a major difference from the Pennsylvania well. Drake, who started drilling in June 1859, struck oil at a depth of 69.5 feet on Aug. 27. The oil rose to just below the surface and Drake installed a pump on the well, which produced 10 to 35 barrels a day.

Drake began selling his oil for $20 a barrel. But, in a move that would was a precursor of what happened in the 1980s, many other people began drilling wells and the price dropped to 10 cents a barrel in less than three years.

But petroleum had been used long before Drake and Ross drilled their wells. This came from oil seeps.

Some mummies in ancient Egypt were coated with pitch — natural asphalt. The Chinese, like Ross also drilling for salt, found natural gas and used it for fuel as long ago at 1000 B.C.

King Nebuchadnezzar used asphalt to build the walls and pave the streets of Babylon about 600 B.C., while the Assyrians and the Persians used asphalt to build their cities.

Even boatmen on the Euphrates River used woven reeds coated with asphalt for their boats.

In what is now the United States, Indians used petroleum hundreds of years before any Europeans set foot on the continent. Remains of oil wells have been found in the oil regions of Pennsylvania, Kentucky and Ohio, and although no one knows exactly how old they are, trees hundreds of years old are growing over some of them.

When Jesuit missionaries arrived in North America in the early 1600s, they found Indians scooping up oil from seepages to use for fuel and medicine. The Toltec Indians in Mexico set mosaic tiles with bitumen.

Indians in Oklahoma used petroleum from oil seeps for medicine and also "would drive a tube or a gun barrel into the ground and then ignite the escaping gas to provide both heat and light," the Historical Society publication states.

In the late 1700s, white settlers had begun copying the Indians and were using petroleum for its supposed medicinal properties. The first commercial use of petroleum in the United States was believed to have been around 1847 when Samuel M. Kier of Pittsburgh, who was one of many who found oil while drilling for salt, began bottling it for sale as a sideline to his salt business.

The Five Civilized Tribes, after being removed to what is now Oklahoma, decided they could get money from the oil seeps on their land by letting outsiders come soak — for a fee — as a cure for rheumatism.

The Historical Society's publication says the most famous of these "health spas" were Boyd Springs, near present Tishomingo; Maytubby's Spring, which is near Caddo, and New Springs, near Oaks.

Judge: Bankruptcy ruling has little effect on Braniff

DALLAS (AP) — A U.S. Supreme Court ruling stripping bankruptcy judges of their authority will have little effect on the pending reorganization effort of Braniff International, according to a federal judge.

Chief U.S. District Judge Halbert Woodward said Friday that all bankruptcy judges in the Northern District of Texas will continue hearing bankruptcy cases under an order he issued this week.

Braniff's bankrupcy case began when the airline ceased operations May 12 and filed for protection from its creditors.

The case is being heard in Fort Worth by U.S. Bankrutpcy Judge John Flowers, who is scheduled to consider a proposed leasing agreement between Pacific Southwest Airlines and Braniff on Jan. 14.

The plan calls for PSA to lease some Braniff jets for a new division and hire some 1,500 workers, giving special preference to former Braniff employees.

Woodward's ruling came after the Supreme Court refused to extend the authority of federal bankruptcy judges Thursday. The court ruled the judges, who are not tenured, were acting unconstitutionally by exercising powers given only to judges appointed for life.

Congress adjourned this week without taking up action on legislation that would have cleared up the problem and the Supreme Court refused to extend the authority of bankrutpcy judges.

Woodward said he based his order, filed Thursday in Dallas, on recommendations prepared by the Fifth Circuit Council, a group of federal district and appeals court judges. Similar orders are being prepared nationwide, he said.

Under the order, bankruptcy judges can continue to hear cases concerning purley bankruptcy issues, including the Braniff case, Woodward said. If an issue is related only to a bankruptcy proceeding, all parties must consent to having it heard by a bankruptcy judge, according to Woodward.

Woodward said if only one party consents, a bankruptcy judge still may hear the case, but any decisions he makes would have to be approved by a federal district judge.

Woodward said there could be some delays in the Braniff case while interpretations of the Supreme Court ruling are studied.

"I'm not saying there won't be any questions about it, but there's nothing to keep Judge Flowers from proceeding just as he has been proceeding," Woodward said.

Treasury Secretary Regan says IMF increase may total $40 billion

Copley News Service

WASHINGTON — President Reagan "has given his blessing" to an increase in quotas for the International Monetary Fund, Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan said last week.

The precise amount of the increase has not been decided, but the "maximum" would be a total of $40 billion for the 146 nations that are IMF members, Regan told the House Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs.

The U.S. percentage of that would amount to some $8 billion in a new pledge to the fund that is currently helping Latin American and other countries with their debt problems.

The additional money is needed, Regan said, because "some $14 billion (in IMF resources) is virtually certain to be committed in the near future, including commitments for major programs in Mexico, Argentina and Brazil," three countries that have borrowed heavily from U.S. and other private banks.

Regan said it is "quite possible" that the other $9 billion the IMF now has available "could be exhausted during the course of 1983."

During his 20-minute long prepared statement and the additional three hours of questioning by members of the committee, Regan emphasized that the world's international financial problems "are worrisome, but not unmanageable."

That was his reply to Rep. Bill McCollum, R-Fla., who asked whether failure to increase IMF quotas and replenish its resources would not result in "worldwide depression" and the "risk of war."

"Were we not to solve (the IMF quota problem), I would agree with you, we could have a worldwide depression through defaults of many nations and the like. That is not something I like to dwell on," Regan said.

"The IMF must have adequate resources if it is to effectively fulfill its responsibilities for maintaining the sound financial system essential for U.S. and global economic recovery," he said.

Regan told the committee that some nations have advocated doubling and even tripling quotas, which are the IMF's traditional permanent resource base.

He termed such suggestions "excessive" and said that the Reagan administration "is still talking in the 40-60 (percent) range."

Any increase in IMF quotas would require congressional authorization and the administration expects to propose legislation on the matter early next year.

Committee Chairman Fernand J. St Germain, D-R.I., voiced his concern about involvement of U.S. banks in international financial problems.

"For the nine largest U.S. banks, loans to Argentina, Brazil and Mexico totaled $31 billion in mid-1982. This amounts to almost 140 percent of the capital of these nine banks. Clearly U.S. banks have found such territory much more fertile than the needs of the domestic economy," St Germain said.

"At a time when millions stand in the unemployment lines, and thousands of small businesses are filing bankruptcy petitions, the idea of an international bailout for adventurous U.S. bankers may not be the most popular item on our legislative agenda," the Rhode Island Democrat said.

"The IMF is not bailing out banks," Regan said. "It's bailing out countries, and the banks are coming along with them."

Regan cited "the major country cases" of Mexico, Argentina and Brazil in Latin America, to explain the IMF's role.

Together their outstanding debts total some $195 billion, of which $137 billion is owed to commercial banks in the United States and other industrialized countries.

"Major financing and debt servicing problems in these countries mean major potential problems for the international financial system as a whole, with adverse consequences for the United States and prospects for recovery," Regan said.

However, he reported, Mexico, Argentina and Brazil have completed negotiations with the IMF and formulated economic adjustment programs that, collectively, "are intended to reduce these countries' current account deficits and net financing requirements from an estimated $22 billion in 1982 to $12 billion in 1983, with further reductions planned for 1984."

Regan said that, as of June 30, 1982, Mexico had total loans and commitments from U.S. banks amounting to $29 billion; Brazil, $22 billion; Venezuela, $12 billion; Argentina, $10 billion; Chile, $7 billion "and the like."

He also said that Mexico has been paying interest on its bank loans and that they are not considered "non-performing."

Labor costs clue recovery

NEW YORK (AP) — Labor costs in the United States and elsewhere are rising more slowly than prices, an indication that a worldwide economic recovery may be underway, the Conference Board reported Sunday.

The board, a non-profit organization which researches financial and economic subjects, said corporate profit margins have been boosted because labor cost increases are now running behind price increases.

The report also indicated that progress on that front has been made in Great Britain, and that labor costs have stabilized in West Germany and Japan after rapid rises the past two years.

"Price-labor cost changes for the U.S., West Germany and the United Kingdom are undergoing the realignment characteristic of the later stages of recession — a realignment that is a prerequisite for recovery," the report said.

It said investors apparently are aware of the improvement and thus have been more bullish in the stock market.

The board reported that leading economic indicators also point to an emerging recovery, although it said "the economic evidence is not yet strong enough to be conclusive."

Ego hurts some at tax time

NEW YORK (AP) — Ego, economic frustration and taxes have helped spur an entrepreneurial boom in America, a recent study indicates.

Ego enters the picture because enterpreneurs must be risk-takers who have the confidence to start new enterprises, according to Business Centres International, which conducted the study.

The frustration has been caused by inflation, recession, unemployment and credit crunches, leading to creative attempts to deal with the situation, the company says.

It adds that a recent cut in taxes from 49.5 percent to 28 percent for investors has helped achieve a better climate for taking financial risks.

OIL FROM TIRES

CHETEK, Wis. (AP) — A hot-air system in operation here produces oil, methane-type gas and other by-products from old tires, according to an energy industry publication.

Energy User News says the process, called pyrolysis, extracts original components from a substance by subjecting it to hot air heat up to 800 degrees Fahrenheit without a flame.

The tires are not directly burned but rather are "gassified" or decomposed until the various components are separated, the journal says.

GLOBAL MESSAGES

NEW YORK (AP) — Traveling businessmen can now step into a phone booth and use a small, hand-held computer to communicate with any telex machine in the world.

The new service also means that home computers and world processors, using phone lines, can take the place of telex terminals.

According to Kenneth Gross of RCA Globcom, the system allows messages to be sent by computer at speed up to 1,200 words a minute. The normal telex speed is about 66 words a minute.

A Frenchman, Pierre Joseph Macquer, defines bitumen as a mineral substance yielding, on distillation, "A great deal of oil very like petroleum."

Lehman didn't sever bonds to consulting firm

NEW YORK (AP) — Secretary of the Navy John F. Lehman Jr. did not sever all his ties with his consulting company as he had promised when he joined the Reagan administration, The New York Times reported today.

The Times said public documents show that Lehman instead gave a British peer the right to use the name of the company, Abington Corp., in business overseas, and that Lehman retained an option to reacquire the company when he left government service.

The company formerly did consulting for Pentagon contractors, including Boeing Co., Northrop Corp. and TRW, the Times said. Lord Chalfont, who acquired the company's name, has done overseas business for those companies, the newspaper said.

Lehman's agreement with Chalfont was made in March 1981, three months after Lehman took over as Navy secretary, according to the newspaper. In October 1981, Chalfont paid Lehman $60,000 for the use of his company's name, the Times said.

The Times quoted Lehman, 40, as saying he did not sell Abington outright because he "wanted to keep the entity in being."

"I had built up a highly respected name in Abington," he told the newspaper. "I retain the right to operate a consulting corporation called Abington. I wanted to keep the option of going back into the consulting business when I get out of government."

The Times said Lehman retained the right to operate in this country under the Abington name, but there is no indication the firm has done any business in this country since he took office.

According to the newspaper, Lehman describes Abington as only a personal holding company. However, the newspaper said, District of Columbia records still list Abington as a management consulting company.

Both Navy lawyers and attorneys at the Office of Government Ethics had approved Lehman's financial disclosure statements, but the Times quoted both as saying they had not studied underlying documents.

Gary Davis, chief counsel of the ethics office, was quoted as saying the office did not know of the March 1981 arrangement with Chalfont, the October payment of the $60,000 or the fact that Abington is still listed as a consulting company.

In January 1981, when Lehman was named Navy secretary, he wrote in his financial disclosure statement that he was selling his interest in Abington, the Times said.

Around the same time, the Office of Government Ethics said it had been advised that Lehman was planning to "sever his relationship with and dispose of his interest in" Abington, the newspaper said.

Federal conflict-of-interest laws prohibit government employees from participating in decisions in which they have a personal interest.

Shell wins in pesticide case

HOUSTON (SWN) — The First District Court of Appeal of the State of Florida has ruled in favor of Shell Chemical Company in a products liability case involving the chemical DBCP (1, 2-Dibromo-3-Chloropropane).

The Panama City case was the result of a 1980 residential spill of a commercial pesticide. The pesticide was formulated, packaged, labeled, and distributed by a Shell customer.

In its opinion filed December 15, the Court held that the retail manufacturer and distributer of a final product whose labeling must be approved by the EPA has the responsibility for providing adequate warning to the public.

Juan Paneque, 57, originally from Oriente, Cuba, prepares coffee in his makeshift quarters under the Miami, Fla., Fifth Street Bridge, which spans the Miami River. Paneque is one of this winter's homeless, an estimated 2 million people whose newcomers include factory workers, teachers and homebuilders. They are sleeping on riverbanks, under freeway bridges and in parks all over the country.

Homeless people find no room at crowded shelters

By The Associated Press

They are sleeping on a riverbank in San Jose, Calif. Underneath freeway bridges in Florida. In tents pitched outside Houston. In parks all over the country.

They are this winter's homeless, in numbers not seen for half a century. Rescue missions are pressed beyond limits. City warehouses and church basements are open for overnight guests. And vacationers share campgrounds with those who have nowhere else to go.

Some are the derelicts and bag ladies chronically on the streets. But a third or more have tumbled from the middle class, many taking their families with them.

Rumors of jobs have steered them West; empty savings accounts have stranded them. Tens of thousands, for the first time in their lives, have no houses, apartments or rooms to call their own.

Among them are growing numbers of children. Homeless shelters in Seattle turned away almost 2,500 people one recent month — 1,400 of them children. Martha Dilts, of the Seattle Emergency Housing Service, calls children "the true, true victims of the recession. Living in cars is very hard on them."

"Without question, this winter will be the worst for the homeless since the height of the Great Depression," said Robert M. Hayes of the New York-based National Coalition for the Homeless.

THE COALITION estimated the homeless population at 2 million, twice as large as last year. This month, in the first Congressional hearing on homelessness since the Depression, witness after witness agreed.

Two to three million Americans "right now are down and out, looking for work, begging for jobs, living in their cars and tents, living in abandoned buildings, scrabbling and scraping as best they can to hold their families and themselves together," testified Mitch Snyder, a Washington D.C. social activist who has worked with homeless people for a decade.

The new homeless include factory workers, lumberjacks, teachers and social workers. They "no longer can be characterized as having some sort of instability," Hayes said. "Some of these folks are economic casualties — they are there because of an incredibly tight housing market and high joblessness."

In recent interviews, dozens of officials from public and private social service agencies characterized the situation facing the homeless as the worst in decades. Among the problems they cited:

—The number of chronic homeless has increased since last year. The main reasons are lower welfare payments due to federal budget cuts and the disappearance of thousands of cheap hotels and apartments.

—FREE SHELTERS are turning away as many as they take in. The Samaritan Shelter in Denver opened last month. Within an hour, it filled all 140 beds and turned away 160 people.

—Cities and charities face a cruel dilemma, coping with growing numbers of homeless and hungry Americans on ever shrinking budgets. A federal measure to provide $50 million in emergency relief passed the House last week but was killed by a conference committee in the final hours of the session.

—A new breed of homeless has appeared. "They could be your next-door neighbor," said Dennis Hamilton of a Little Rock, Ark., rescue mission. A task force of the U.S. Conference of Mayors concluded that the "most significant characteristic of the increasing number of homeless people was their recent unemployment."

Unable to keep their split-level American dreams, these people have bailed out, collected their savings, tied suitcases to station wagons and left town to track rumors of job havens.

The real tragedy "is the rumor mill that keeps shuttling job seekers across the country," said Salvation Army Maj. Raymond Kitchen in Louisville. "You end up with people always chasing something that really isn't there."

SAN FRANCISCO, Phoenix, Houston, Denver and other cities rumored to be economic oases have noticed the influx. The Traveler's Aid Society of Houston said it had seen 22,000 transients in the past 12 months. About 2,500 people migrate to Denver each month, the United Way reports and "they're coming from all over the country," said Sister Sheila Keane of San Francisco's St. Anthony Foundation. "Some of them sell their car in Denver, and take a bus the rest of the way." California's jobless rate was 11.2 percent in November.

Of Phoenix's 3,500 homeless, more than half have been in town fewer than six months. "It's not just propaganda. More homeless people are on the road, more families are going from place to place," said Maj. Bruce Harvey of the Salvation Army in Phoenix.

Versions of the Depression-era Hoovervilles have appeared. About 300 people live in tents and cook on campfires 35 miles outside of Houston. Many of the cars bear out-of-state tags. A sign says "Tent City U.S.A." More dreams unfulfilled.

In San Jose, Calif., the city ordered a count of the homeless after it learned of people living in makeshift shelters on the banks of the Guadalupe River, which winds through downtown.

Some cities and states are trying to find more beds for the homeless.

San Francisco is considering converting vacant port buildings into shelters. The Portland City Council allocated $65,000 to help homeless families with children.

Man lives in auto

BRUNSWICK, Ohio (AP) — When the money ran out and the pressures grew too great for Harold, he simply packed his belongings into his 1973 Buick and declared it his home.

And that's how it was for Harold for seven months, until a veterans agency came to his aid and gave him a room in the Brunswick Motel for December.

Harold, who asked that his full name not be printed, is a 60-year-old veteran. He gave up his life in the car Dec. 9 and underwent a physical at Wade Park Veterans Hospital. He got a motel room through the Medina County Veterans Services office.

But it seems likely that Harold may end up living in his car again.

"The rent runs out Dec. 29," he said last Wednesday in a telephone interview.

Asked what he would do then, Harold said, "Go back to the car."

He said he is hoping to get a place to stay at the Ohio Veterans Home in Sandusky, but he said, "It takes time to get in there."

"Long-term housing is going to be a problem here," said Jason McCourt, director of the county's veterans office. "There's not that much available to us."

Just a few days before Harold was moved, he told a visitor that he couldn't get welfare help because he had no address, and that he could't get a place to stay because he had no money.

"You know, I haven't had a shower or a shave in four months," Harold said then as he sat in his car.

His situation got worse when the car's power steering fluid hose split.

"Everything happened to me when I went broke," Harold said. "This hose breaks, and I've got no money to fix it. But even if I did, I wouldn't have enough to put gas in the car."

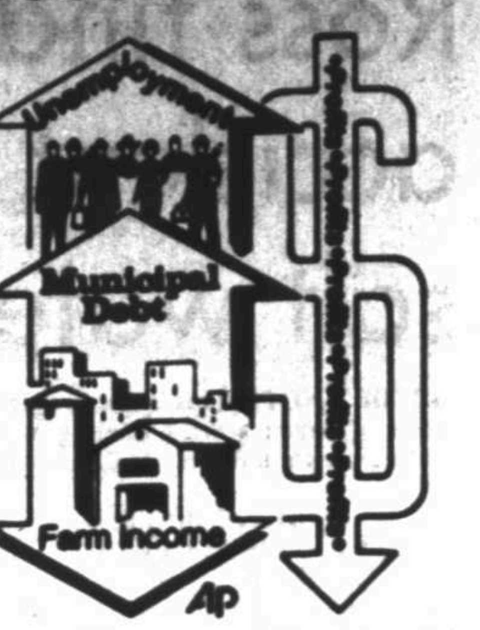

Until spring, Harold was a maintenance worker at a YMCA school. He quit his job after an argument with his boss. Harold couldn't find other work and ended up living in his car, where he kept a supply of paperback books, blankets and empty cups.

The people at Sofko's Family Tavern let Harold stay in the parking lot. During his seven months in the car, he ate whatever he could when he came up with some change or when a friend helped him.

Statistics tell grim story of battered households

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the first of five articles on the impact of the recession.

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK — In perhaps the worst recession since the Great Depression of the 1930s, Americans in 1982 suffered deep pain, the intensity of which could not be conveyed by abstract statistics.

Appropriate to the sense of futility and frustration, however, statistics were relied upon to tell the story. And superficial as they must be, they told a grim story of battered households and institutions.

On Christmas Day, at least 12 million Americans were unemployed. More than 6 million had been reduced to part-time work and about 1.5 million were officially described as being too discouraged to continuing applying.

More than 2 million of the unemployed had been without jobs for more than six months. And many of them, perhaps hundreds of thousands, faced the prospect of never being recalled because their jobs had been eliminated.

The nation was in transition, it was said, from a heavy industry economy to one based on services and information. Electronic technology would "free" man from the lathe, it was claimed, but for now it was throwing him out of work.

Late in the year, blue collar unemployment was above 16 percent, and the Bureau of Labor Statistics esimated that the white collar workforce would grow to 65 percent of all wage earners by 1985, and to 90 percent by 2000.

Already, the evidence was showing in the jobless statistics. In November, unemployment in heavy industry in Michigan rose to 17.2 percent from 16.1 a month earlier. In Massachusetts, strong in electronics, it fell 0.5 percent to 7.2.

Unemployment generally suggests images of urban life, but life was rough on the farm too.

Farm income in 1982 fell to less than $19 billion from $27 billion in 1979. And farmland values, which in 1981 fell for the first time in 27 years, fell again. In the late 1970s they had been rising at 15 percent a year.

Because their farms had appreciated in value during the good days, giving them equity that could be borrowed, and because lower crop prices had forced them to borrow, many farmers were deep in debt at high rates of interest. Many were unable to meet the banks' demands. Many were being foreclosed.

The Farmers Home Administration said that in the first nine months of the year it recorded 844 foreclosures, 2,753 liquidations for financial reasons, and 1,245 bankruptcies. The national loan delinquency rate was 25 percent.

Local officials of the Farmers Home Administration were told to "remain as calm as possible" if irate farmers demonstrated in protest of the agency's credit policies. Some farmers joined to disrupt foreclosure auctions.

Business, small and large, also was hurt.

Profits in general were down, and for many companies they would never come back. In the first 47 weeks of 1982, Dun & Bradstreet counted 23,013 corporate failures, and the figure for the year seemed certain to exceed 25,000.

At that level, the number of failures would be 50 percent more than in the year before, and more than double the figure for 1975, by some measures the worst year of the severe recession of 1973-1975.

Municipalities were no exception to the recession-induced damage, which was compounded by less bountiful aid from Washington and resistance by residents to the imposition of new taxes. They borrowed, and paid heavily for their money.

In 1981, according to the Bond Buyer newspaper, state and local long-term debt totaled $46.1 billion. Through November of 1982 it had already totaled $66.2 lbillion, 61 percent higher than at the same time a year earlier.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Keep money in savings while you research market

By BILL DOYLE

Q. Please don't get mad at what you might think is a dumb letter. We are five girls who live together. Each of us has put $300 into our own investment pool. The $1,500 total is our "play money." However, our main objective is not to lose. If we win, OK. But, even if it goes down the tube, at least we tried.

We don't want to ask our parents for advice. This is something we must do strictly on our own, utilizing outside information. Can you help us invest in the stock market? And, please don't suggest a savings account. We already have one. That's too dull.

Doyle

A. Now, don't you get mad at me for suggesting you keep your money in that savings account until you learn more about the stock market. You should be in no big rush to buy stocks. Consider your $1,500 pool what experienced investors call a "cash position" — waiting to be put into the market. You show good sense in having money put aside. Everybody should.

There's nothing "dumb" about your letter. I count you as five smart young ladies, who have put together an informal investment club. My first advice is to formalize it. Write the National Association of Investment Clubs, 1515 East Eleven Mile Road, Royal Oak, Mich. 48067 for details. The association's annual dues are $25, plus $5 per club member.

Next write Department D, Public Information Office, New York Stock Exchange, 11 Wall St., New York, N.Y. 10005. Ask for a free copy of "Investment Bibliography." That handy little guide lists books for beginning investors. Each of you can study a book or two and learn quite a bit about the market.

Then, pick your stocks. I'm glad you didn't ask me to select them for you. This column never touts individual stocks. Assuming you all do your homework, you could do better than lots of people who have been in the market for years.

• • •

Q. I often see advertisements for "discount" brokerage firms, which charge commissions much lower than I have been paying. Saving brokerage commissions appeals to me. But I wonder if there are risks of which I am not aware in dealing with discount brokers. Are there?

A. Not by the normal definition of the word "risk." You can make or lose money dealing with a discount broker, just as you can with a "full-service" brokerage firm. Both types of brokerages are subject to the same regulations making the risk factor equal.

The difference between the two types is that most discount brokers do nothing except handle buy and sell orders for customers and don't offer the investment advice, research, individual attention and some other things the full service firms usually provide.

However, there is no hard and fast line of demarcation — with discount firms on one side and full-service housed on the other. Some discounters do offer varying degrees of individual service. Some even call themselves "full-service, discount brokers." But, as a rough rule of thumb, the less the service, the lower the commissions.

• • •

Q. As an active trader, I buy and/or sell stock about six or eight times a week through a discount broker. My records show when I place orders "at market," 90 percent of my buy orders are executed at the high for the day; 90 percent of my sell orders are executed at the low for the day.

Is there any way of determining if the prices on the confirmation slips the broker sends me are the prices at which he actually buys and sells for me?

A. You could take your story to the stock exchanges on which your buy and sell orders were filled and ask that the execution of your orders be traced.

Laments similar to yours have been coming in as long as I have been putting a column through the typewriter. Your basic complaint is that you feel you're not getting "good execution" from your present broker. My standard advice to people such as you is "switch brokers."

Answer to today's Crossword Puzzle

Washington women sacrifice a lot with commuter marriages

WASHINGTON (AP) — Bay Buchanan, Treasurer of the United States, lives and works here. Her husband, attorney William Jackson, lives and works in California. They see each other twice a month.

Ms. Buchanan is among a growing number of Washington's married working women, including more than a dozen in the Reagan administration, who have commuter marriages.

"It's not a glamorous situation, and it's not the least bit enjoyable," says Ms. Buchanan, 33, who is expecting her first child in January. "I much prefer living with my husband. Yet I have a job I thoroughly enjoy, and I recognize it's temporary. You don't have this opportunity twice in your life."

Throughout most of each month, from early morning until late at night, Ms. Buchanan and women like her devote themselves to work.

Yet weekends, sometimes only once a month, they head home to their families in California...Delaware...Illinois...Massachusetts ...New York...Pennsylvania...Texas.

Ms. Buchanan, whose full name, Angela M. Buchanan, appears on billions of pieces of America's paper money, says she makes two cross-country trips each month to be with her husband in Fullerton, Calif.

AFTER HER BABY is born, she says she expects to take a three or four-week maternity leave in California and then return with the baby to Washington where she will resume her job.

"Then my husband will do most of the commuting," she says.

Helene von Damm, who is in charge of presidential personnel at the White House, commutes weekends to Flanders, N.J., to be with her husband of two years, Byron Leeds, an executive with U.S. News & World Report magazine. Weekdays, she lives in a rented apartment in the capital's Watergate complex.

"I have one of those very unusual husbands who is totally supportive," says Ms. von Damm, 44. "He doesn't expect more from me than I expect of him."

Of the commute, she says: "It's a physical strain. On Friday night I hustle to the airport, fly to New Jersey, drive an hour to the farm and get there around midnight. The next morning I open the refrigerator, and there's nothing in it. You think you bought something, but it was for the other house. Monday morning I get up at 4:45 a.m. to be at my desk in the White House by 8. In winter, I'll have to get up an hour earlier if the roads are bad."

To many of these women, the trick of juggling two lives in two states lies in careful organization.

"Scheduling for us is like planning the Normandy invasion," says Elise du Pont, 46, an attorney who is the wife of Delaware Gov. Pierre S. du Pont IV and an official in charge of private enterprise at the State Department's Agency for International Department. "It's a management matter."

MRS. DU PONT says she and her husband divide their time between the couple's three houses: the governor's mansion in Dover, their own house in Wilmington and their Capitol Hill townhouse. She says generally she commutes to Delaware twice a week and that her husband frequently has work in Washington.

Of nights alone in the capital, she says, "I like to have the opportunity to be at the office late and get here early in the morning. That's when work is done."

To coordinate her roles as First Lady of Delaware and assistant administrator at the State Department, Mrs. du Pont says she totes around three dictaphones, one for each house: "And I dictate what to plant in the gardens, what to serve for dinner."

Mrs. du Pont, who is part of a newly organized White House task force that recruits women for top administrative positions, says she recently spoke to a group of women working in New York's financal market where she promoted the idea of commuter marriages.

"The point I make to them is that the salary isn't competitive, but the level of responsibility is more than they would get in the private sector and that you come in contact with a broad range of people who can help you in your next position," she says. "I tell them it's only a shuttle away."

Some of the women say they put up with the commute because it allows them a life of their own which they would miss otherwise.

"Had I not been allowed to fulfill my desires, I would be an unhappy wife," says Phyllis Kaminsky, a spokeswoman for USIA and mother of two sons, the youngest of whom is 8 and lives with her in Washington.

MRS. KAMINSKY'S husband, Sam Kaminsky, is an attorney in Johnstown, Pa. He says it has taken time to adjust to living in different places during the week, but he feels that because his wife has a job she enjoys, the couple's marriage has been strengthened.

"It's a two-edged sword with pluses and minuses," he says. "There was a great deal of adjustment and problems in the beginning. This chance to pursue career opportunities has made her happier and the marriage better."

Frequently, what suffers most is the couple's social life. Many of these women say they must be careful of appearances, that they rarely take advantage of the Washington social scene because either they aren't comfortable going out alone or that it will raise eyebrows if they attend events with a man, even if he's just an associate from the office.

"When I socialize with a man, friends sometimes makes comments," says Elizabeth Burkhart, 47, a board member of the National Credit Union Administration, whose husband of 23 years, John Burkhart, is a television director in Houston. "And some of our philandering friends have told John what a good situation he has, and that infuriates him."

Other women say that work and family take up so much time that there is little time left to see friends.

"There is career and family in our life, nothing else," says Rita Rodriguez, a director at the Export-Import Bank, whose 4-year-old daughter lives in Chicago with her father, E. Eugene Carter, a professor of finance at the University of Illinois. "We have no social life. There is no time."

MS. RODRIQUEZ, WHO has been married 10 years, says she flies to Chicago every Thursday night, does government work at a university office Friday and returns to Washington Monday morning.

"Financially, it's a washout," she says. "They might as well endorse my check directly over to the airlines. But we enjoy our jobs."

For some, the biggest problem is loneliness.

"My husband is my best friend, and a big part of my life is missing," says Barbara Thomas, 35, a commissioner on the Securities and Exchange Commission, who has been commuting for two years between Washington and New York where her husband, Allen Thomas, is an attorney.

"We don't have the time or money to sit on the phone for hours, and it's hard to make up on weekends," Mrs. Thomas says. "The better your marriage, the harder it is."

MRS. THOMAS is expecting her first child in April. She says she plans to live in Washington with the baby and that she will take no time off from work. She adds that her husband would commute to Washington on weekends.

Privately, some of the women say that they worry how the commute will affect their marriage, that they find themselves monitoring their children's moods for signs of insecurity and that their husbands sometimes feel left out of their fast-paced, Washington lives.

"There is a bit of envy on his part, a feeling of being left out of a very important part of my life," says one woman. "Let's face it, nuances and emotional feelings are left out of telephone calls."

Lee Ann Elliott, 55, whose husband, William, is an insurance broker in Skokie, Ill., says she made the decision to accept her post with the Federal Election Commission at a family conference which included the couple's 21-year-old son, a senior at the University of Indiana.

"We talked about everything," says Mrs. Elliott, who has been married 26 years. "We discussed how often we would see each other, how we would keep two houses clean, who would get the dog. It has not been a financial step up because of the expenses: two houses, two phone bills, two utility bills, two cars. But I have been able to make a contribution, and I'm enjoying it." (Her husband kept the dog.)

A RECENT study of executive women by Korn-Ferry International, an executive search firm, showed that women executives are much less likely than men to move for their jobs.

The study showed that while 33 percent of the 300 female respondents had been asked to relocate, only 21 percent did, compared with 81 percent of men in a similar study.

"There are no advantages for people who love each other and are married to live apart," says Ann Wexler, who worked in the Carter White House and now owns her own government consulting firm in Washington. Since early October she has been commuting between the capital and Amherst, Mass., where her husband, Joseph Duffy, is chancellor of the University of Massachusetts.

"You have to be realistic," she says."If you have a strong enough relationship, it can work."

The trick of juggling two lives in two states lies in careful organization...Scheduling...is like planning the Normandy invasion...

For the first time, Time magazine's "Man of the Year" isn't human — it's a computer. "The enduring American love affairs with the automobile and the television set are now being transformed into a giddy passion for the personal computer," Time said in announcing the 1982 "Man of the Year." Last year's winner was Polish Solidarity leader Lech Walesa.

Time's 'Man of the Year' isn't man, but machine

NEW YORK (AP) — Time magazine's 1982 Man of the Year has a heart as cold as a silicon chip but a brain as quick as whirling magnetic discs: it's the computer.

"The enduring American love affairs with the automobile and the television set are now being transformed into a giddy passion for the personal computer," the magazine said in announcing its selection Sunday.

The artificial brain won out over Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin, British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, Federal Reserve Chairman Paul Volcker and E.T., the alien hero of the year's biggest movie.

It succeeds the 1981 Man of the Year, Lech Walesa, leader of Poland's Solidarity union.

"There are some occasions when the most significant force in a year's news is not a single individual but a process," according to Time, "and a widespread recognition by a whole society that the process is changing the course of all other processes. That is why...Time has decided that 1982 is the year of the computer."

Time said that when 1982's figures are totaled, 2.8 million personal computers will have been sold by 100 companies for $4.9 billion. Just two years ago, 20 firms sold 724,000 units for $1.8 billion.

"In 1982 a cascade of computers beeped and blipped their way into the American office, the American school, the American home," Time said.

Because of the computer, "America will never be the same," according to Time.

"In a larger perspective, the entire world will never be the same," it added. "The industrialized nations of the West are already scrambling to computerize."

The magazine commissioned a poll of 1,019 registered voters nationwide, in which almost 80 percent said they expected computers to be as common as televisions or dishwashers in the near future.

About two-thirds said they believed the computer would raise production and therefore living standards and would improve the education of their children.

Time conceded it could have chosen as Man of the Year one of the engineers or entrepreneurs who spearheaded the technological revolution, but "no one person in the opinion of the newsmagazine has clearly dominated those turbulent events..."

The computer is the 56th Man of the Year. The first was Charles Lindbergh, and every president since Franklin D. Roosevelt has been chosen, with the exception of Gerald Ford.

Four honorees have represented groups of people: G.I. Joe in 1950, the Hungarian Patriot in 1956, the Young in 1966 and Middle Americans in 1969. But no previous winner has been entirely inhuman.

Lewis fine after surgery

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Comedian Jerry Lewis was in satisfactory condition and "doing fine" today after a quiet Christmas weekend in the hospital where he is recovering from open-heart surgery.

Lewis was limited to only a few holiday visitors, but an adjoining hospital room was filled with flowers, gifts and letters from all over the world, hospital officials said.

The 56-year-old comedian "is doing fine right now. In fact he's resting comfortably," Desert Springs Hospital nursing supervisor Janene Bantz said today. "He has been in good spirits."

Lewis underwent double bypass surgery Tuesday, a day after he walked into the hospital complaining of chest pains.

Among those sending notes and telegrams to Lewis were President and Mrs. Reagan, and some of "Jerry's kids:" beneficiaries of the $300 million that Lewis has raised for the Muscular Dystrophy Association, said Joe Stabile, Lewis' longtime manager.

In light of his "excellent progress," Lewis could be released as soon as the weekend, Stabile said. Lewis walked for the first time Friday and was continuing to exercise with the help of nurses.

Thurmond indicates he may run for another Senate term

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — Despite 28 years under the Capitol dome, 80-year-old Sen. Strom Thurmond says he wouldn't mind sticking around for another six-year term.

Strom Thurmond

Thurmond, a Republican, said he hasn't given any firm response to those asking him to run for re-election in 1984, but indicates he is leaning in that direction.

"People tell me when you reach the height of your influence, when you reach the zenith of your career, you would not be treating your constituents properly by quitting on them now. I think there is some merit to it," Thurmond said in an interview published Sunday.

The veteran senator, a former governor and presidential candidate, has set the 1984 campaign wheels in motion by designating his 1978 senatorial committee to serve in the same capacity again.

Thurmond is chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee and is Senate president pro tem, making him third in line to the president.

James Lovell

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — Astronaut James Lovell had no trouble riding Apollo 8 to the moon, but suffered a broken arm and shoulder while riding two skis down an Austrian mountainside.

Lovell was being flown back to the United States today for medical treatment after sustaining the "complicated" fracture Sunday, according to the Austrian Press Agency.

The accident occurred during a skiing holiday in the Alpine resort of Kitzbuehel with astronaut Neil Armstrong.

After being treated in the Kitzbuehel hospital, where doctors described his conditon as good, Lovell flew to Frankfurt, West Germany, en route to Chicago.

Lovell was among the first three men to orbit the moon aboard the Apollo 8 mission in 1968.

Princess Stephanie

MONTE CARLO, Monaco (AP) — Prince Albert and Princess Caroline of Monaco, emerging from a mourning period, are collaborating on holiday duties that used to be handled by their late mother, Princess Grace.

Albert, 24, and Caroline, 25, appeared at numerous Christmas festivities in their Mediterranean principality last week. Filling their mother's shoes, they helped hand out toys to children.

Princess Stephanie, 17, accompanied her older brother and sister on several occasions — appearing for the first time without the neck brace she had worn since a Sept. 13 accident that killed her mother.

Princess Grace, who starred in films as Grace Kelly before her marriage to Prince Rainier, suffered a stroke while driving on a twisting mountain road near Monte Carlo. The car plunged down a ravine, and Princess Grace died the next day.

ALLENTOWN, Pa. (AP) — Rock singer Billy Joel has hit the charts with an ode to the unemployed and the dying American dream. But his song "Allentown" isn't popular with everyone in this city on the Lehigh River.

"Allentown is not the same kind of city that is portrayed in Billy Joel's song," said Mayor Joseph S. Daddona.

The lead song on Joel's latest album, "Allentown" is part of what some have called "recession rock," reflecting hard times.

Reagan's stitches removed

WASHINGTON (AP) — First Lady Nancy Reagan received the Christmas present she wanted most this year: The removal of four stitches from her upper lip following surgery for a cancerous growth.

Mrs. Reagan's stitches were taken out Sunday by Dr. Diane Colgan, the plastic surgeon who removed the growth last week. Dr. Colgan told the first lady to stay out of the sun and said a slight scar may remain.

On Saturday, spokeswoman Sheila Tate quoted Mrs. Reagan as saying removal of the stitches would be the "best present" of the holiday season.

The growth is the most common form of skin cancer, basal cell epithelioma. It is caused by overexposure to the sun and is curable in 95 percent of all treated cases, Dr. Colgan said.

The Midland Reporter-Telegram
MONDAY, DECEMBER 27, 1982

It's amazing how money disappears so quickly while Christmas shopping. Renee Phillips, 14, left, and Daun Holder, 15, find out as they count their change following a shopping spree at Midland Park Mall. The two Rankin High School students are assisted by Carol Gugliotti, an employee of Peyton's Toy Store.

Pre-Christmas wishing was done by three Stanton students during their break from school. Getting in a little practice before the game, hopefully, is set up in their homes are, clockwise from rear, Gilbert Hinojosa, 13, Isaac Marquez, 9, and Billy Marquez, 6. Gilbert is a student at Stanton Junior High School, while the Marquez brothers are students at Stanton Elementary.

Kids' play

The Christmas presents are gone. Remnants of tightly wrapped packages and gaily colored paper, now reduced to ribbons and scraps, are stuffed in trash cans which overflow in the alleys.

The tree looks embarrassingly naked, caught in the vulnerable position of standing alone, protecting a blank spot in the living room that once contained a collection of mysteries.

Parents are attempting to be happy for their children's excitement in new toys and gifts, but many of the smiles are fading. Long nights of Yuletide celebrations with family and friends and the early Christmas morning awakening are catching up with them faster than the short but growing list of New Year's resolutions.

The parental knees bend, and dark, circled eyes beg for a quick release from the family Pac-Man marathon and a short retirement into the bedroom for a long-overdue nap.

But the excitement has just begun for the children, with hours and hours of free time spreading in front of them throughout the week — time with new toys and time away from classrooms.

The pre-Christmas week was full of nervous energy. Children whose snap decisions led to quick and uneventful completions of shopping lists, bounded around the house, pausing to shake presents with their names on them, before dashing into the kitchen to pester the Christmas cookie-maker and beg for more quarters to spend at the video-game parlor around the corner.

Restless and excited about St. Nick's approaching trip and platters of drumsticks, many wandered outside to roller skate, ride old bikes (that hopefully would be replaced with a bigger and shinier one soon) and play endless games of one-on-one under the driveway's orange basketball hoop.

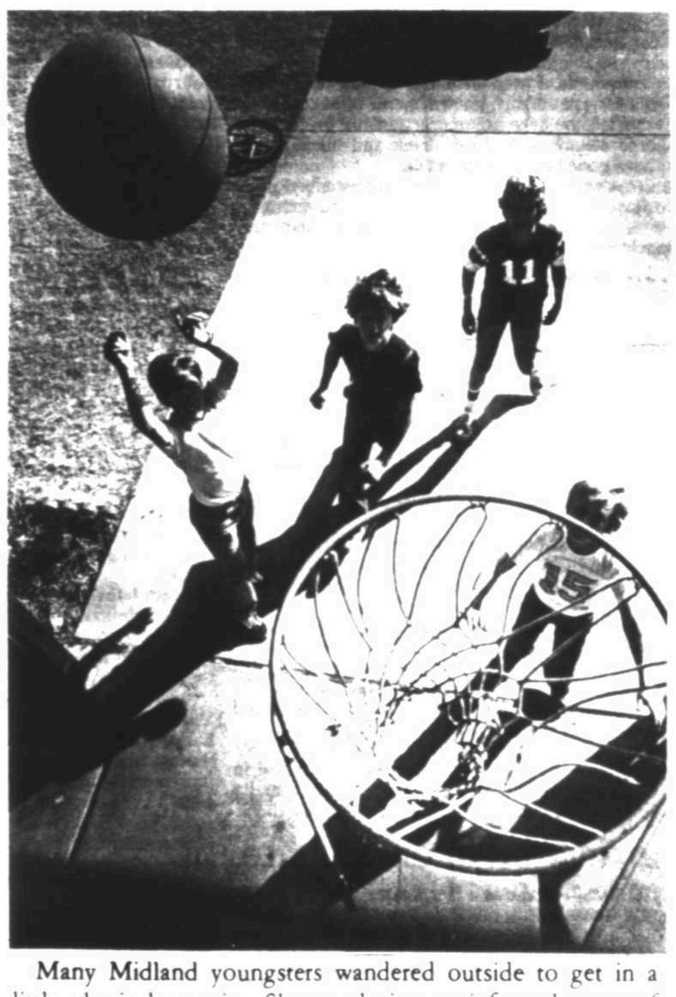

Still other released-from-school students wandered around shopping centers and malls, picking out last minute gifts and pausing at windows to point out priority items previously specified on the wish list that made its first of many revised appearances the day after Thanksgiving.

And older students, home from college, crammed into restaurants and bars to catch up with the hometown gossip over a few beers. The all-night study sessions for final exams were forgotten as thoughts turned to what boyfriends were giving for Christmas, the condition of the slopes in Colorado and the first job interview the week after Christmas.

Pecans were chopped and dumped into fruitcake batter, bags were packed for trips to relatives and bowl game bets were made.

And now, as the scales groan depressingly under the weight of overindulging adults, the spirits of youngsters soar as the race tracks are assembled on the floor, the Barbie dolls moved into their new houses and the new skis are polished and carefully caressed before being snapped lovingly into the racks on the roof of the car.

Little ones gaze at the new sled and wishfully look into the promising sky for snow. Older ones worry about canceled airline flights and the college kids sarcastically think what a shame it would be to be snowed in at Vail for the entire upcoming semester.

Many Midland youngsters wandered outside to get in a little physical exercise. Shown playing an informal game of basketball, are, clockwise from left, David Holmes, 12, son of Bill and Jackie Holmes; Barry Bledsoe, 13, son of Paula and Larry Bledsoe; Todd Strickland, 13, son of Mr. and Mrs. Phil Wylie; and Greg McCright, 9, son of Jim and Barbara McCright

Looking at merchandise often can become boring compared to people-watching, these two 14-year-olds from Abilene discover. Relaxing on the bench are, from left, Lance Villers and Marc Mani. Unlike many out-of-towners who come to Midland to visit relatives during the holidays, these two came along for the ride when Marc's sister drove over for an interview at Midland College.

Matamoros mayor cleans up Boys Town

By The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

MATAMOROS, Mexico — The eight-block stretch of garish nightclubs and rent-by-the-quarter-hour rooms that for decades was this border town's best-known industry sits abandoned and decayed.

The thousands of men once drawn each year by the district's internationally known menu of sexual pleasures don't come here any more, and the people who prospered selling them food, drink and illicit merriment have gone broke or moved on.

Almost a year after the cantina music stopped playing in Boys Town, Matamoros seems to be adjusting to a role as just another tourist town selling tacos and tacky souvenirs to Winnebago-borne tourists.

Bawdy adventure has given way to the mundane. The home of Boys Town is now, courtesy of the city administration's best sloganeering efforts, "The City of Change."

The credit for the transformation in the city of 250,000 is given by some to its reformist mayor, Jorge Cardenas, who launched the assault on Boys Town last February during his second year in office. Others point to federal action that provided greater financial support for city improvement projects.

ONE POINT stressed by Matamoros residents and officials of both opinions is that, judging by the small economic impact of Boys Towns' demise, the lucrative industry apparently had not been sharing the wealth around town.

One Matamoros banker estimated Boys Towns' annual gross income at at least $1 million per year, but said it generated little in tax revenue or in sales outside the district itself.

Most of the money was invested by the nightclub and flophouse owners in bank accounts on the American side of the border, he said.

"Closing Boys Town did not really affect our economy because the underground money did not stay here to generate jobs," said Juan Manuel Martinez, editor of a local daily newspaper, El Bravo. "Even those people who made some money by working there did not even earn the minimum salary in many cases. The owners paid no taxes except for liquor sales and that wasn't so high. The girls just drank colored water."

Few of the neighborhood merchants who would have made money from the tourist flow into the red light district remain to testify about the impact of its loss. But at least one who did said times are much tougher now.

"I guess it's better for the children," said Maria Martinez, 48, as she watched the 2-year-old girl she was baby-sitting play with a grimy 1-peso coin. "For me, though, it's hard. I used to sell food here and now there's no business. How can I make a living?"

DOWN THE STREET, though, Antero Garcia, the 59-year-old proprietor of a tiny grocery, said the loss of a few dollars was worth the benefit.

"This area is surrounded by many poor people with families, and the children had to pass right through here to go to school," he said. "This place corrupted them, but now it's better. There are no more prostitutes and it's quiet."

The blow that brought the tranquility was delivered last Feb. 19 in the early morning hours just as the Boys Town prostitutes knocked off work and barkeeps swept the hole-in-the-wall cantinas on the rutted dirt street. Mayor Cardenas led a force of police who used health code violations and other ordinances to close the nightclubs and hotels and evict the residents.

Cardenas offered jobs as sanitation workers to the prostitutes who wanted to stay in town, and one-way bus tickets to those who didn't. The bordello musicians joined the municipal band and are the pride of the group at Sunday afternoon concerts in the park.

The raid shocked many local residents who believed Boys Town could never be challenged. The last mayor who threatened to clean it up, Ernesto Elizondo, died in a hail of bullets in 1951.

With the highly publicized Boys Town cleanup completed, Cardenas, whose coalition of center-right, socialists and communists had defeated the ruling Institutional Revolutionary Party's candidate, has worked to solidify his popular support with a showy public works program.

CARDENAS' SMALL army of administrative and press aides are quick to recite a litany of facts and figures on the thousands of square meters of paving laid, the hundreds of new mercury-vapor streets lights installed and the 15 new police cars obtained.

Cardenas has stressed public donations in getting needed city improvements made. That pitch has brought in 30 cents for each 70 cents of city money spent, but has also helped keep Matamoros' modernistic city hall in a state of boisterous frenzy.

Housewives in working-class neighborhoods called "colonias" troop down to city hall, pay what money they have collected to a clerk and run upstairs to show the mayor their receipts. "Don Jorge, I gave 2,500," shouts one woman in a 12-person delegation crowding the mayor's office. "I gave 3,000," chimed in another. Cardenas spokeswoman Laura Zuniga de Villareal explained the money would go toward paving the street between two schools in their colonia.

Cardenas attributes Matamoros' progress to improved government efficiency. "The city was a mess. A child would easily know what programs had to be implemented," he said. "All we're trying to do is give an example of how to work because the city needs honesty and good care of the public funds.

"I know I have little official help (from the state and federal administrations) but I have a thousand times more popular help."

Cardenas' opponents charge the mayor is taking credit for achievements made possible by the national officials in the party of the incumbent he defeated, the PRI.

"BECAUSE OF increased state and federal funding to the cities, the current administration now receives as much income in two months as my administration received in a full year," said Dr. Antonio Cavazos Garza, Cardenas' predecessor.

"It's not magic. He is doing more because he has more money. And he has more money because of the new system instituted by President Lopez Portillo. Now the city can carry out the plans drawn up by the last administration. Any other mayor from any other party would be doing the same things as Mayor Cardenas. The next mayor will be from PRI and will do even more."

Cardenas is also criticized by the pro-PRI labor unions.

"He's no friend of the worker and pays very poorly; he allows the streets to be full of insecurity and crime," said Arturo Martinez, an officer of the local Mexican Workers Confederation.

Odessa man charged in ex-wife's abduction

ODESSA — A man arrested on a warrant early Christmas morning has been charged with the Dec. 20 aggravated kidnapping of his ex-wife.

Enrique Delgado Montoya, 40, of Odessa, was arrested by officer Joe Mollinary about 1:40 a.m. Christmas Day on charges of kidnapping his former wife from her home at 517 Amburgey about 1 a.m. Dec. 20.

According to police, a man kicked in the door of the residence at gunpoint and threatened the woman and her new husband, Carlos Lujan. Lujan grabbed a rifle and fired three shots before fleeing the home through a window, leaving his wife behind.

Police said the intruder then forced the woman into his car and threatened to kill her. She jumped from the vehicle at one point, but was forced back into it. She managed to lock the doors before the man could get back in, however.

She then drove to the police station, where a warrant was issued for Montoya's arrest. He remained in jail this morning and was expected to be formally arraigned on the kidnapping charge sometime today.

Man injured in oil well fire

ANDREWS — Bonifacio Hernandez was treated at Permian General Hospital here Saturday for injuries suffered in a late Christmas Eve oil well fire 40 miles west of Andrews.

Two other persons reportedly suffered minor injuries in the fire at BJM Drilling Company's No. 2 rig in the Union Cotton Lease at 10:30 p.m. Friday. Situated on the Union Oil of California Dollarhide field, the rig became engulfed in flames when gas surfaced and blowout-preventer equipment did not contain it.

The fire was brought under control by 3 a.m. Saturday though fire units remained at the scene until noon.

Fire trucks from Andrews, Jal, N.M., and Eunice, N.M., fought the blaze.

Church bus overturns

ELLINWOOD, Kan. (AP) — A bus carrying a Texas church group skidded on ice and overturned early today in central Kansas, but there were no serious injuries, authorities said.

The westbound bus left U.S. 56 a few miles east of Ellinwood after skidding on glazed pavement, said Charles Steadman of the Kansas Highway Patrol. The bus, which was carrying members of the Central Baptist Church of Garland, spun around and flipped on its side, Steadman said.

Five of the 29 people on board were taken to Ellinwood District Hospital for treatment of minor injuries, but none had been admitted, a hospital spokeswoman said.

The church members were headed to Palmer Lake, Colo., on a ski trip.

It was raining at the time of the accident, and falling temperatures had caused patches of ice to form on roads, Steadman said.

No business robberies this month, police say

Christmas tis the season for armed robberies. But this Christmas has been refreshingly different, Midland police say, in that there's not been one business robbery reported so far in December.

"We feel extremely fortunate to have made it through the Christmas season with a minimum of robberies," said Det. Lt. Earl Luckey, noting three purse snatchings and one strong-armed robbery that have occurred so far this month.

During December of 1981, by contrast, nine armed robberies were reported by Midland business establishments.

"A stepped-up watch by the uniformed patrol division and alertness on the part of all our merchants helped" avert the rash of business robberies that stores — especially convenience stores — normally experience at Christmas, said Luckey.

Odessa, on the other hand, reports 25 business robberies this month to date.

Beached whale returns to sea

YARMOUTH, Mass. (AP) — Rescuers managed to get a 7-foot pygmy whale to return to the sea after it became stranded on a bathing beach on Nantucket Sound, but its larger companion died.

Morris Johnson, of the town Office of Natural Resources, said the two pygmy sperm whales may have been mother and baby.

Facelift by laser 'wand' controversial

By JOAN ZYDA
Hearst Feature Service

Can a laser "wand" beam away eye wrinkles, mouth lines, sagging skin and bags? Some chiropractors and licensed cosmeticians think so, but plastic surgeons are trying to convince the Food and Drug Administration and Federal Trade Commission that it's quackery.

"It's a complete fraud," said Dr. David Apfelberg, director of the Palo Alto, Calif., Comprehensive Laser Center, one of the nation's largest centers where lasers are used for other physical problems. "It's not scientific at all."

But it's perfectly legal. An estimated 1,500 lasers are being used in the United States for non-surgical facelifts. Consumers have spent an estimated $5 million on treatments within the last two years.

What's illegal, however, is for such firms to advertise or promote that their procedures are "safe and effective," according to FDA spokesman Bill Rados in Washington.

"We're not willing to say it's quackery yet," said Rados. "We don't have enough information to make a call on it. Therapists who administer it should tell the patient that the procedure is being studied and the patient should give his written consent to be part of the study."

Chiropractors and cosmeticians say the devices can literally remove wrinkles in a series of safe, painless, relatively inexpensive and brief office visits. No hospitalization or drugs are required and a scalpel doesn't touch the patient's face, as in surgical facelifts performed by plastic surgeons. Another claim is that there is no scarring, discoloration or infection such as sometimes are associated with plastic surgery.

"It's another option in the 20th century for those who want to look youthful, and it's not as scary as facial surgery," said Jacqueline Tousley, a licensed cosmetician who runs Face Toners Limited in Orange and Laguna Hills, Calif. According to Tousley, a therapist moves a low-power laser "wand" near the patient's face, pausing whenever a beep signals high electrical resistance by the skin, identifying and stimulating acupuncture points. Patients generally feel a slight burning sensation.

Tousley's patients pay $45 for each 30-minute treatment and are advised to undergo the treatment three times a week at the start, followed by periodic "booster touchups" over the year. "We can't guarantee results," she said, "because it doesn't work on everyone. There are skins that don't respond to the laser."

The controversy was fueled recently when Atlanta's Dr. John C. Munna, who chairs the False and Deceptive Advertising Committee of the American Society of Plastic and Reconstructive Surgeons, took a laser course from chiropractors and submitted his own face for treatment to see what would result.

"The laser creates a temporary swelling. Then, three to four hours later, the swelling subsides and the wrinkles return," Munna said. "It certainly doesn't produce a facelift."

Therapists, Munna contended, will try and sell their patients "a whole series of treatments along with facial massage, a makeup job and eyebrow contouring. After all of that, you leave looking better and feeling better — but it's only temporary. It's the old fountain of youth syndrome."

He also remarked that the therapists use a helium-neon laser with a power output of about one-thousandth of one watt that is "most commonly used at grocery store checkout counters to read coded prices."

The surgeon's group, the world's largest organization of plastic surgeons, has been trying to get the FDA to investigate the treatment, but Munna noted: "It's low on their priorities right now." The society has successfully petitioned the FDA and FTC to institute an investigation of false and misleading advertising by practitioners who make claims about the treatments.

"We brought this action because the public deserves to be protected from practices that have neither merit nor value," said surgeon society president Dr. William Porterfield, who said that advertisements promising permanent benefits from laser facelifts have appeared in 10 states.

High school calculus 'whizzes' accused of cheating

By TIMOTHY CARLSON
Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES — The dedicated students of math teacher Jaime Escalante have carved out a national reputation as high-scoring calculus whizzes. But it's a reputation that had to be twice proved after the prestigious Educational Testing Service charged that most of the students had copied answers on a national college advanced placement calculus test May 19.

On that date, all 18 students at James A. Garfield High School, located in a low-income Hispanic neighborhood of East Los Angeles, passed the calculus test, which was so demanding that only 2 percent of the high school students taking the national Scholastic Aptitude Tests even attempted it. Seven Garfield students made the top score of 5.

The controversy has brought national attention to Escalante's remarkable achievement at a school where no one had even attempting the advanced placement calculus test before he took over the math department in 1979.

The charges were shocking to officials at Garfield, who knew that Escalante's miracle with math students was the product of extraordinary charisma backed up by stunning amounts of devotion and hard work.

The students came to his classroom before school, during lunch periods, after school, on weekends and during holidays to devour freshman calculus texts used at MIT. Escalante worked an average of four to five hours of unpaid overtime every day, drilling the students with an average of 30 to 60 problems a day. In late April, he had a heart attack, but continued to write problems for his students from his hospital bed — against doctor's orders.

According to ETS officials at the firm's Princeton, N.J., headquarters, 14 of the students had too many similar elements of incorrect answers on an essay segment of the test. With thinly veiled harshness, the board wrote letters to the students accusing them of cheating and demanded they retake the test if they wanted their scores validated.

Given only a week's notice, 12 students took a retest on Aug. 31, and all scored passing grades. Seven scored the same scores. One student had joined the Army and another had enrolled at Columbia University; both were unable on short notice to take the retest offered only in Los Angeles. ETS offered them no option and summarily canceled their grades.

Joy McIntyre, ETS spokeswoman, insisted that graders did not look at names, origins or geographical locations when they reviewed the test.

"We have 25,000 kids taking this particular test and to maintain the integrity of our scores we must question students if there are indications that something might be wrong with the tests," McIntyre said.

Escalante's students have gone on to an impressive roster of the nation's best colleges and universities. On Dec. 17, the Los Angeles City Council voted unanimously to demand ETS issue apologies to the students.

Escalante, 51, is a Bolivian immigrant who came to the U.S. in 1964. Despite 11 years experience teaching math and physics in Bolivia and a command of English, he was forced to seek menial labor as a janitor in a restaurant; within six months, he was head chef. Then, according to Garfield physics teacher Ralph Heiland, Escalante got a job as a janitor at the Burroughs Corp., the electronics firm.

After moving up to technician, Escalante designed an improved assembly line tester to detect faulty parts, which he put together with $5 worth of materials and saved the company thousands of dollars. He then was put in charge of quality control at the company's plant in Mexico at a high salary, but quit to get his teaching certification.

Escalante signed on at Garfield in 1974, and in 1979 became chairman of the math department. That year, four students passed the advanced placement calculus test, giving them a full semester of college credit. Eight passed in 1980, and 15 in 1981.

Heiland says Escalante's obsession has had a dramatic carry-over effect on the rest of the school. "We now get many more good students interested in physics, and they can do the work at a much higher level. Frankly, he is the best high school math teacher in the country."

'Mess' needs aid finding, following milk-free diet

By SHIRLEY BRIGHT BOODY
Registered Dietitian
Copley News Service

Dear Shirley: I am 24 years old and have just found out I can't tolerate milk. Do you have a diet especially for this? I am 30 pounds overweight and all the diets I have seen include milk.

Would it be possible to just take a vitamin instead of eating things I hate, like say milk and seafood with tiny bones? I feel like since I have stopped the milk products I have some sort of deficiency. My fingernails curl under and my hair won't grow.

Where can I find Lact-aid? Please help. I am a mess in Massachusetts. — J.C.

Dear J.C.: You can buy lactase, the enzyme needed to break down the milk sugar (lactose) for you under different brand names. Ask your pharmacist. Lact-aid is one, and can be ordered if not available.

Vitamins do not make up for mineral deficiencies. Calcium is a mineral and I suggest you take a simple calcium supplement. You need 800 mg to meet the Recommended Dietary Allowance, daily.

My program will get your weight down at the rate of 10 to 18 pounds per month and will increase all vitamins and minerals for you as you lose weight.

You can take a single vitamin supplement, if you wish. You could have an iron deficiency too. It is very common in young women.

You will feel better when you lose weight and increase your nutrition through better eating habits. Don't despair, you have a whole, wonderful life ahead of you.

Dear Shirley: I have severe arthritis in both legs and sometimes I can hardly walk. I weigh over 200 pounds and I am only 5 feet 3 inches tall. The reason I am so heavy is that I have a bad "sweet tooth" that I can't seem to control.

Do you have any suggestions for people like me who crave sweets? Bakery goods are my downfall and I sometimes eat them all day instead of other food.

Why are some people born with a sweet tooth? — Mrs. H.F., Miss.

Dear Mrs. H.F: Nobody is born with a sweet tooth. It is usually an acquired bad habit learned early in life. Sometimes a medical problem intensifies a desire for sweets.

Undiagnosed diabetes or low blood sugar problems create unusual appetites for sweets which, if taken, can be disastrous. Have a complete physical exam to rule out any such problems, first.

The best way to avoid bakery goods and sweets is to not have them around you. You must control your urge to buy or make them.

Do not permit yourself to go hungry. Eat more frequently and drink a lot of water to dilute strong digestive juices.

If you must have something sweet, make it a date or two. Dates are very sweet, yet have no fat and are only about 19 calories. Take one with a large glass of water when you feel the need.

Forget about being born with a sweet tooth. If I can teach you to feed your body properly, it probably will disappear.

Dear Shirley: Do you know of any foods that might cause migraine headaches? My mother gets them quite often, but she insists they are not caused by anything she eats.

She loves chocolates and eats lots of it. Do you think that chocolate could be causing her headaches?

She won't go to the doctor and she gets mad when I suggest it. What causes headaches? — M.N.S., Ga.

Dear M.N.S.: I cannot tell you what may be causing your mother's headaches. I agree with you that she should be seen by a doctor, because there are so many different causes. Many migraine sufferers are sensitive to foods containing tyramine, including chocolate, red wine and cheese.

Fasting or going too long without food can precipitate a headache. Some people are more sensitive to nitrates, amphetamines and oral contraceptives.

Ask your mother to skip the chocolate for two weeks and see if she is headache-free. Cheese and red wine should also be omitted during that time. I hope it helps. It's worth trying.

If you desire information about my home weight-control program which causes a 10- to 18-pound weight loss, send a long, stamped self-addressed envelope to Shirley Bright Boody, Box 1038, Rancho Mirage, CA 92270.

The Cheerful Charter Blue Birds of Bowie, Fannin and Rusk elementary schools had their first Awards Ceremony recently at the home of their leader, Mrs. Harriet Horton.

The Blue Birds, Amy Hooker, M.A.E. Horton, Stephanie McKnight, Amber Middleton, Kimberly Miller and Cheryl Oakley, received their costume sash, council patch and Christmas Service Award.

The Blue Birds also had a posada, which was attended by their families. The posada included a bluebird pinata and cookies hand painted by the Blue Birds.

DEAR ABBY

Bathrooms can be children's health hazard

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: On Jan. 17, 1980, our "baby-proof" home was the location of a freak accident — the same freak accident experienced by Mr. and Mrs. J.G. of Phoenix.

Our 10-month old daughter, playing with her toys within 20 feet of us, disappeared into the bathroom. Her death followed five days later in a large city hospital after she was resuscitated at our local hospital.

We, too, never dreamed of such a lethal hazard. After a great deal of research and letter writing, we have learned that this is not such a "freak" occurrence. What upset us most was the lack of information we were provided. Constant warnings are read and heard about household poisonings, electrocution, other types of bathroom hazards, plant hazards, auto safety, but never drowning in a toilet bowl!

Further, we learned that this type of accidental drowning information has been recorded at the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission in Washington, D.C. But why did we not hear or read a word about such a tragic possibility?

The sorry lesson we learned is that without supervision, a bathroom must be totally off limits to infants and small children. Thanks for helping to spread the word, Abby. Our lives have been tragically changed. Perhaps other parents will take heed to the danger their bathrooms hold. Sincerely, MR. AND MRS. FRANK DOWNS, SOUTH CAROLINA

DEAR ABBY: This is to thank you for printing the letter from "Mr. and Mrs. J.G. in Phoenix," whose precious toddler actually drowned in a toilet bowl!

As a water safety instructor for the American Red Cross, I am appalled at my own ignorance in not recognizing the toilet as a safety hazard for children. The bathtub I recognized. The toilet bowl, never!

That mother's letter will be read and discussed in every class I teach from this day forward. Please let Mrs. J.G. know that she opened the eyes of at least one person, and that her tragedy should not occur to anyone I can reach through our water safety program. — MELISSA DRUFF, TEXARKANA, TEXAS

DEAR ABBY: My husband had the habit of leaving the toilet seat up until I showed him the letter in your column from "Mr. and Mrs. J.G. in Phoenix." Now he very carefully puts the seat and the lid down so our child will not be tempted to play in the toilet, as she has done in the past.

Please let those parents who lost their child in that freak accident know that because they cared enough to write and share their tragedy, they have changed my husband's habits and may have saved our precious baby's life. — THANKFUL PARENTS

DEAR ABBY: After reading the letter from the couple who had lost their toddler in a freak accident in the bathroom, I felt very guilty for not having written to warn others of that household danger. You see, the same freak accident happened to a grandnephew of mine. Luckily, our toddler was found in time, although he was semiconscious and his lips were blue. He had just learned to walk and was fascinated with the water in the commode. He wandered into the bathroom, evidently pulled himself up and then fell in head first and was unable to get out again.

My heart goes out to the grieving parents who wrote asking you to alert others so that they might be spared the terrible tragedy those parents recently experienced.

Thank you, Abby, for recognizing the importance of their letter and selecting it for publication. And may God forgive me for not writing such a letter myself. — MRS. S., HOLLYWOOD, FLA.

(If you hate to write letters because you don't know what to say, send for Abby's complete booklet on letter-writing. Send $2 and a long, stamped (37 cents) self-addressed envelope to Abby, Letter Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

More than 200 Afghan nationals offered prayers on the lawn of the Federal Building in Los Angeles Sunday marking the third anniversary of the Soviet invasion into Afghanistan.

Afghan nationals participate in memorial

LOS ANGELES (AP) — About 200 Afghan nationals joined in prayers and watched as a replica of the Soviet flag was burned during a memorial marking the third anniversary of the Soviet move into Afghanistan.

Among those at the demonstration Sunday outside the Federal Building in West Los Angeles was Aziz Djamily, 33, a jewelry salesman who said many of his relatives remain in the Afghan capital of Kabul.

"I still try to keep in touch with them, but it is very hard because of the mail situation," Djamily said. "Sometimes it takes five or six months before I hear from them.

"It is very hard for me to think of them with no medicine, no security, no food, no freedom. They can't really describe what is going on, because the government censors the letters, but I can tell it's no good."

Djamily left his country at age 21 to study in Turkey. He toured Europe before coming to the United States in 1972, eventually settling in Los Angeles.

"I was always thinking about politics, and I was interested in seeing how other people behaved under their governments," he said. "At that time, I remember saying to friends how I had always felt the Soviets had an interest in our country."

Rebels claim they attacked Soviet airbase

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — Afghanistan rebels today claimed they inflicted heavy damage and casualties during a mortar attack last week on a Soviet airbase near the Pakistan border.

A spokesman for the fundamentalist Yunis Khalis faction of the Hezbi Islami resistance said 40 Afghan and Soviet troopers were killed or wounded when 50 insurgents attacked Jalalabad airport Dec. 21.

The spokesman, Mohammed Yaqub Sharafat, said the raiders wrecked two helicopters and four armored vehicles without suffering losses.

He did not explain the delay in disclosing the rebel account of the attack and there was no confirmation from other sources, but Sharafat's information has proved accurate in the past.

Jalalabad is in Nangarhar province, about 50 miles west of the Pakistan border.

The Soviets intervened in Afghanistan exactly three years ago today to crush a Moslem insurrection against the Moscow-backed government. An estimated 105,000 Soviet soldiers are deployed in the country.

Soviet and Afghan authorities restrict coverage of the rebellion. Western news agencies gather information on events in Afghanistan through diplomatic briefings in neighboring Pakistan, rebel sources based on the border and accounts by refugees fleeing the fighting.

Pravda calls for U.S. response to proposal

MOSCOW (AP) — The Communist Party newspaper Pravda today called on the United States "to respond now" to the European missile reduction proposals made by party leader Yuri V. Andropov.

Andropov "made weighty proposals. They cannot be brushed aside, nor can their essence be clouded by hasty polemics," Pravda said in the latest Kremlin commentary on the Andropov proposal, which already has been rejected by Washington and its allies.

"Landmarks for the future are being fixed now. A responsible approach, responsible decisions are needed. They are being awaited. The true goals and intentions of the states will be judged from them. It is up to the United States to respond now," the commentary said.

In a speech last Tuesday, Andropov offered to reduce Soviet medium-range nuclear missiles in Eastern Europe to 162, the current number deployed by Britain and France combined.

In return, he demanded the North Atlantic Treaty Organization scrap plans to deploy 572 new U.S.-built Pershing 2 and cruise missiles in Western Europe beginning next December. NATO says those missiles are designed to counter the Soviet medium-range force of more than 600 missiles, including 333 new multiple-warhead SS-20s.

The United States, Britain and France rejected the proposal on grounds that the British and French nuclear arsenals were not under discussion at the U.S.-Soviet negotiations in Geneva on limiting such weapons in Europe.

Britain and France claim their missiles, mainly aboard submarines, are defensive and designed to deter a Soviet attack. France does not belong to NATO's military wing.

President Reagan has offered a "zero option" that would cancel NATO's planned deployment of the new missiles if the Kremlin agrees to dismantle its medium-range rockets.

That plan was rejected by Moscow as a Western attempt to unilaterally disarm the Soviet Union.

Pravda said the Andropov proposal "means that tens and hundreds of Soviet missiles would be reduced, including most advance ones...This means that the balance of forces in medium-range missiles between the U.S.S.R. and the United States in Europe could be equal to zero and the Soviet side would only retain the equivalent of the corresponding systems of Britain and France."

The Pravda commentary did not answer Western questions about the Andropov offer.

Western analysts have said Andropov failed to make clear if his proposal meant the Soviet medium-range missiles would be destroyed or just withdrawn east of the Ural Mountains, the geographic boundary between Europe and Asia in the Soviet Union, where they would still represent a threat to Western Europe.

Solidarity leaders to press for union

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Leaders of the outlawed Solidarity labor movement vowed in a letter handed to Western correspondents today to press for revival of their union, saying this was "an indispensible condition...for social peace."

"The Polish crisis cannot be solved without Solidarity," said the letter, dated Dec. 10 and signed by eight top union leaders who were held in Bialoleka Prison until last week.

Five of the men later were arrested on unspecified charges and the other three were released from martial law internment.

The signers did not include Solidarity chief Lech Walesa who was freed from internment on Nov. 13.

There was no immediate comment on the letter from the Communist government, but authorities have vowed they will not allow Solidarity to be revived.

The government decreed martial law Dec. 13, 1981 after 16 months of Solidarity-inspired strikes and political challenges. The union was suspended and formally outlawed Oct. 8.

"Our union was formed by millions of people and it still exists thanks to their will," the letter said, charging that the ban on Solidarity contradicts "reality" and international human-rights conventions.

"We were elected to the top boards of the union under democratic elections and we received a mandate of confidence from the members of the union," it said.

"No decision of the authorities can strip us of this mandate," it said. "We want to state with emphasis that we shall not give up the moral obligations we took to our members and we shall continue to fight for our union within the scope of our possibilities.

"First of all, we will try to revive its formal registration" by the Polish Supreme Court in November 1980, the letter said.

"We'll operate with the conviction that the presence of our union in the life of the country is an indispensible condition for the people to gain their rights, to exercise control over the authorities and to establish social peace in the country," it said.

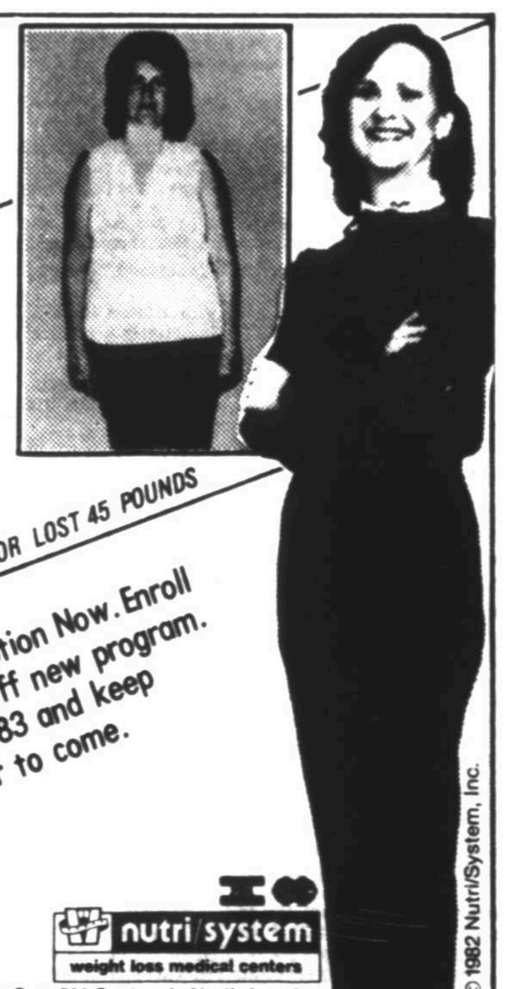

The signers included the union's No. 2 man, Andrzej Gwiazda, along with other members of the union's national commission: Seweryn Jaworski, Karol Modzelewski, Janusz Onyszkiewicz, Grzegorz Palka, Jan Rulewski, Jndrzej Sobieraj and Antoni Tokarczuk.

All but Onyszkiewicz, Sobieraj and Tokarczuk have been arrested. The others were released last Thursday when the martial law government closed its internment centers.

Government's place in regulating commodities market overrated?

WASHINGTON (AP) — A University of Maryland economist says government policies sometimes can worsen commodity market upheavals instead of helping to stabilize the market.

Federal agencies need to be watched closely, even to the point of eliminating them entirely if they become too disruptive, says Bruce Gardner of the university's department of agricultural and resource economics.

Gardner says that the role of government regulation in markets "has become so great that one of the principal uncertainties" is the timing and extent of changes in the rules themselves.

"This has led some to say that government has ceased to be a provider of a stable market environment, and instead has become a destabilizing market participant," he said.

Gardner's views are in a chapter of the Agriculture Department's new yearbook.

It would be possible, he said, for the government never to change the regulations applying to markets. But that would be carrying the goal of stability too far.

One example where the market and the rules have not stabilized involves the U.S. grain trade with the Soviet Union and other Communist countries.

"For years, there had been a relatively stable market environment, one characterized by a simple regulation: No trade shall take place," Gardner said.

"But in the mid-1960s, and more strongly in the mid-70s, the Soviet Union began to change its view about appropriate market reltionships in this area.

"The United States, while not initiating the changes, found it beneficial to cooperate in opening up lines of trade that had not existed before."

Gardner said that government rules affecting U.S.-Soviet trade were not well established and noted that on several occasions there were temporary embargoes and indications that such halts were being seriously considered.

"This seems clearly a case of an unstable market environment due to policy," he said. Even so, "It possibly was preferable to the former state of affairs where no trade took place."

Obviously, Gardner said, it is difficult to set up rules governing trade with the Soviet Union which reflect rapidly changing conditions in today's world.

Therefore, he said, there will be "a good deal of political effort and contentious discussion of that effort" as the United States attempts to develop appropriate guidelines.

One of the key changes affecting producers and consumers is that market information is becoming cheaper to get and to distribute. It also is easier for market participants to act upon.

"Government regulation can provide valuable services to the users of markets, but in today's world it is becoming ever more costly to provide these services and more feasible to rely on decentralized self-regulating mechanisms," Gardner said.

"This means the regulatory bodies that currently exist should be subject to continual scrutiny, even as to the need for continued existence of agencies like the Commodity Futures Trading Commission, the Packers and Stockyards Administration, and the Federal Grain Inspection Service."

Gardner said agricultural markets are unstable because both the quantity produced and the demand for commodities are subject to unpredictable fluctuations from year to year.

Gardeners can grow resistant plants

By EARNEST C. KIKER
Midland County Extension Agent — Agriculture

Many home gardeners are frustrated each year by losses to disease organisms. What they do not realize is that they can begin working toward a more disease-free garden right now, while winter winds are blowing.

Dr. Harold W. Kaufman, extension plant pathologist with the Texas Agricultural Service, says the two most common diseases in far West Texas gardens are nematodes and powdery mildew. Many different things can be done to control these diseases, but the first thing Dr. Kaufman always suggests to gardeners is growing resistant varieties.

Disease-resistant tomato varieties are usually labeled in the nurseries with the initials VFN following the name. The VFN represents resistance to verticillium wilt, fusarium wilt and nematodes. Some of the VFN varieties that have done well in West Texas are Big Set, Small Fry (cherry type), Bonus and Better Boy.

Powdery mildew is a big problem on vine crops. Some resistant cantaloupe varieties that have grown well in West Texas are Perlita, Resistant PMR No. 45 and TAMU-Uvalde.

Finding disease-resistant seedlings and seed in the local nurseries can be a problem in the spring. Now is the time to start checking the catalogs of mail-order seed companies to assure yourself of disease-resistant varieties for next spring.

Holiday plants — poinsettias, kalanchoes, Christmas cactus, cyclamen and azaleas — are a popular way to decorate a home for Christmas. But these seasonal plants require special care to prolong their beauty.

Poinsettias outrank all other Christmas plants combined in popularity. Newer varieties of the once-sensitive plants are well adapted to indoor temperatures.

Put them near a bright window, keep the soil evenly moist and avoid hot or cold drafts. This will keep poinsettias healthy until Valentine's Day, if you care to keep them around that long.

Poinsettias can be cut back after flowering and put aside for summer. The chore of bringing them back into flower, however, is better left to professionals.

Keep kalanchoes in a sunny window. Because they bloom when days are short, it's difficult for them to reflower when kept in the home from one year to the next. Indoor lights provide long days so the plants usually fail to set flower buds.

Kalanchoes do make excellent foliage plants when their blooms have faded. Just remove the flower stalk.

Christmas cactus is not a typical cactus. It requires as much water as any other house plant, although it should not be overwatered. This cactus is one plant that can be kept over to bloom again next Christmas.

Keep Christmas cactus indoors until danger of frost is past, then place it in a shady spot outdoors for the summer. Bring it back indoors before frost can damage it. Keep it in a cool room at night because it will not bloom unless night temperatures are below 75 degrees Fahrenheit.

Cyclamen, or shooting stars, is an old favorite at holiday time. The plant's showy flowers of red, pink, salmon or white really do resemble falling stars.

Unfortunately, cyclamen has a short flowering period in the home because its flowers fade and fall fast at 72 degrees. So it should be kept at 55 degrees whenever possible and away from hot drafts. Also, avoid overwatering.

Azaleas should remain attractive for two to four weeks in the home, particularly if they are put in a 55-60-degree spot each night and as much of the day as possible. They do not prosper at normal home temperatures.

Azaleas also must be kept away from hot drafts and should be watered carefully. Most greenhouse azaleas are grown in virtually 100 percent peat moss.

Florist azaleas are not particularly well adapted outside of East Texas, so it may be best to discard the plant once it has finished flowering.

Plants brighten any holiday decoration. With a little care, they can last long after the toys are broken and the bills are paid.

On behalf of the Midland County Extension Office, we hope you had an enjoyable Christmas and will have a Happy New Year.

Japan doesn't buy American

WASHINGTON (AP) — Despite a cutoff in imports of Danish pork due to an outbreak of foot-and-mouth disease in Denmark, Japan has not increased its purchases of U.S. pork, as many had expected, says the Agriculture Department.

The department's Foreign Agricultural Service reports that instead of buying more U.S. pork, Japan increased its contracts with Canada, Taiwan and Norway.

"According to a major Japanese trading firm, the lackluster performance of U.S. pork in Japan was due to its relatively high price, the strong dollar and a general lack of enthusiasm on the part of U.S. packers to meet the specifications required by Japanese importers," the agency said.

Foreigners' wish lists include wide variety

WASHINGTON (AP) — Just as Americans flock to stores during the holidays, foreign buyers also have year-end shopping lists. They want heifers, eggs and even fish heads, the Agriculture Department says.

The USDA's holiday weekend report on export needs of foreign buyers shows how wide-ranging the world market is for American farm commodities.

Issued weekly during the year, the report is compiled by the department's Foreign Agricultural Service from inquiries received by agricultural attaches stationed abroad, and other sources.

According to the last issue of 1982, here are some of the brief trade leads the agency makes available to U.S. exporters and others who may be interested in selling specific items:

—Peru wants to buy 2,000 Holstein dairy heifers, and Tunisia wants 1,000. Two other dairy-minded customers are Egypt, which wants to buy cheese, and Ecuador, which is interested in powdered milk.

—In the poultry category, the United Arab Emirates wants frozen chicken; a Nigerian company would like to start a joint poultry venture; and Jordan wants 2,000 metric tons of frozen chickens.

—Among European prospects, a buyer in the Netherlands wants rice and syrup; an Italian customer would like regular shipments of Kentucky bourbon, in barrels; in Sweden, there is demand for prime rose oil; and an Austrian company wants protein-rich fish meal.

West Germany, a big market for U.S. agricultural exports, is a potential market for "mushroom spawn for the cultivation of Shii-Take, oyster mushrooms and other species of mushrooms that grow on straw or wood."

Other interests in West Germany would like wines, beef, seafoods, snack items and sugar substitutes.

—In Colombia, a buyer wants some seedless raisins — five metric tons to start with. That's more than 11,000 pounds. Other fruit prospects include the United Arab Emirates, 50,000 cartons of apples — about 40 pounds per carton.

The report said that a company in Japan — the largest foreign buyer of U.S. agricultural products — wants 100 metric tons of fish heads, large and of any variety, for use as fertilizer.

If the initial shipment is satisfactory, the buyer wants 500 tons "regularly thereafter." A metric ton is about 2,205 pounds.

In the Middle East again, a major Lebanese importing firm wants to contact U.S. exporters of hot sauces, while a Syrian buyer is interested in mung beans, split yellow peas and gum.

Officials said anyone interested in more details of these and other trade tips can contact the agency's Export Promotion Division, Room 4945 South Building, Washington, D.C. or telephone 202 447-7103.

Wool supports to grow in 1983

WASHINGTON (AP) — Government supports for shorn wool marketed in 1983 will be $1.53 per pound, up from $1.37 for wool sold this year, says the Agriculture Department.

Mohair supports will be about $4.63 cents a pound, compared to $3.98 for mohair marketed in 1982.

Wool taken from slaughtered lambs "will continue to be supported at a level comparable" to the support price for shorn wool, officials said.

Birthday party leads to federal probe of Boston mayor

BOSTON (AP) — It started out as a gala birthday party planned at the Museum of Fine Arts for the wife of Mayor Kevin White — a mixture of flash, celebration and politics.

The party was never held, and now, according to published reports, has become the centerpiece of an extensive federal investigation, involving as many as four separate grand juries.

It has produced angry words from the mecurial four-term mayor about U.S. Attorney William F. Weld and The Boston Globe, New England's largest newspaper.

White has charged the Globe with "exaggerations" in the way it has reported the federal probe and other problems involving his administration. The Democrat has also complained the federal investigation is politically motivated.

White's lawyer has hinted that Weld, a Republican, is responsible for news leaks in the case.

The investigation, and a series of indictments involving several members of the White administration, have raised questions about the future of the 52-year-old politican who has run the city since 1967.

AP Laserphoto

Boston Mayor Kevin White, left, with his wife Kathryn, attends a function during December of 1980. A birthday party White had scheduled for his wife two years ago, which was canceled, has become the subject of a federal probe.

WHITE'S PROBLEMS began nearly two years ago when city workers complained they were being forced to contribute to a birthday party for his wife, Kathryn.

White canceled the March 27, 1981, party after workers, already angered by city layoffs, threatened to picket the event. But by that time, the state Ethics Commission had begun its own inquiry.

A year later the commission issued a report that said there was "cause to believe" White violated the state conflict of interest law by failing to make it clear to city employees, contractors and city licensees that they were not obligated to make donations to the event.

The commission denied White's claims the party was a private affair, saying the $122,000 in donations "was dramatically inconsistent with the party's being a private, social or family affair."

The report said that at least $110,000 of the donations came from people with connections to the city and noted the guest list was drawn, in part, from a list of contributors to White's 1979 campaign.

WHITE ACCUSED the commission of being unfair and claimed it "found unequivocally no illegalities." The donations were returned, the matter seemingly closed.

But earlier this month, the Globe reported that the commission, empowered only to investigate civil violations, forwarded a more detailed report to the U.S. Attorney's office. The newspaper said the report raised the possibility the birthday party may have been used to launder money to White's organization.

Both the Globe and The New York Times have reported the money may have been received from contractors, who provided kickbacks to stay in the city's good graces. Other news reports say the FBI, Internal Revenue Service and Postal Service are all looking into these allegations.

According to the Globe, the confidential report said:

— George Collatos, a city employee found guilty of extorting money from a local businessman, played a prominent role in the fund-raising. White has insisted Collatos never raised funds for him.

— Contributions from 167 people totaling $108,000 were never deposited in the birthday party bank account. Instead, the funds were placed in two separate accounts 21 days after White said the money would be returned.

"ONE POSSIBLE inference," the commission report said, "was the intent to conceal the receipt of those contributions and to negotiate those checks outside the Commonwealth of Massachusetts" where the commission has no power.

— At least 64 of the contributors deposited cash in their bank accounts equal to the amount of their donations before they wrote checks to the Birthday Celebration Committee. The donations averaged $781 per person.

— The process was reversed when the birthday committee sent the money back. Cash equal to the contributions was withdrawn from the bank accounts after the money was returned.

White's problems were magnified two weeks ago when the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development released an audit that charged the city misappropriated $1.9 million in community development grants.

The federal auditors accused the city of using money to pay salaries for city officials, including a $73,000-a-year deputy mayor, who were not involved in federal programs.

White has fought back, accusing both the Globe and Weld of "reaching" to get him. At a Dec. 17 news conference, White produced blowups of several Globe stories he took exception to, including reports of the federal investigation.

"NOW THAT'S news," he said. "I shouldn't be sitting in this chair if that's true, not for five minutes.

"To a person reading that story it seemed like those funds were really misused and that isn't even close to the truth."

Louisiana officials brace for floods

By The Associated Press

Civil defense officials braced for more flash flooding today as heavy rains that forced hundreds of people to evacuate their homes continued to drench all but extreme southeast Louisiana.

The National Weather Service this morning said about 14¼ inches of rain had fallen in the Alexandria area since Saturday night. Parts of southwest Louisana were hit with 10 inches of rainfall.

Forecasters predicted the storms would continue throughout today.

"As it stands now, I don't think the water is going to recede. I think it will take a day to recede," said Joe Colson, head of Louisiana's Office of Emergency Preparedness.

The weather service said some of the larger rivers and bayous would probably approach or surpass record flood levels in the next couple of days

"THE GROUND already is saturated," the weather service said in a 7 a.m. flash flood warning. "Where flooding already exists, it wil likely become worse."

In Rapides Parish, where about 250 south Alexandria residents had to evacuate, parish and city officials declared a local emergency and asked Gov. Dave Treen to declare a state of emergency today.

Treen was to meet with Colson today at 10 a.m.

"I saw well over 200 houses with their floors under water," said Colson after visiting the central Louisiana city where water stood five feet deep in low-lying areas.

Most of the city's evacuees found shelter with relatives and friends, but about 75 remained at an emergency shelter at the Rapides Parish Coliseum.

"ALL THAT talking about a white Christmas," said evacuee Gertrude Rainey. "Well, we had a wet Christmas."

Deputies and National Guardsmen patrolled the deserted section against looting and vandalism. The state Office of Emergency Preparedness promised drainage pumps to protect five major residential subdivisons from high water.

In northeast Louisiana's Ouachita Parish, about 800 residents in Monroe and West Monroe were forced from their homes on Sunday.

Among the first to go in the 4:30 a.m. Sunday evacuation were 180 elderly residents of the West Monroe Guest House, many of them bed-ridden or confined to wheelchairs.

The state gave Monroe about 30,000 sandbags and several pumps to protect three low-lying subdivisions from flooding, Colson said.

"THE RIVER is up, the streams are full. There's just nowhere for the water to go," said West Monroe Mayor Dave Norris.

If more rain falls, Norris said, "it could be the worst natural tragedy we've ever had."

Mita Introduces the Copier that Reduces... for the Price of Ones that Don't.

Mita breaks yet another technology barrier with the introduction of the DC-133R... the lowest cost, plain-paper, reducing copier available today.

Reduce oversized documents down to filing size.
The DC-133R shrinks oversized computer printouts or legal documents to letter size electronically at the touch of a button... so all of your copies are one standard size and fit into standard filing cabinets, binders, and envelopes.

Reduce the space you need for a copier.
Innovative engineering packs extraordinary capabilities into a copier that asks for less than three square feet of space.

Reduce the line-up at the copier.
A fast, 5½-second first copy time will eliminate wasteful waiting time.

Reduce your investment now and in the future.
The low price will astound you. But more than that... the DC-133R runs and runs and runs to reduce your operating costs in the years to come.

Eliminate operator confusion and mistakes.
The Microcomputer, Sensor-touch Control Panel leads the operator through the copying process and even sounds a friendly reminder if the original is left behind.

Eliminate the long list of things that you can't copy... and can't copy onto.
Start with anything... books, three-dimensional objects, halftones, light pencil lines... and copy onto almost anything... plain or colored paper, overhead transparencies, mailing labels and letterheads.

BALLOONS 'N THINGS
"20% Off Christmas Things"
4311 W. Illinois 694-7957

"The best way for a self-employed person to save up to $15,000 in the next 3 days."

If you work for yourself, then you have until Friday, December 31 to open a KEOGH account at First National.

That's only 3 banking days away.

If you act now, you can designate up to $15,000 (or 15% of this year's earned income, whichever is less) without paying taxes on it until you retire.

Best of all, your contribution doesn't have to be paid until you file your 1982 tax return. For most, that meant April 15, 1983, and not a second sooner.

Maybe you planned to open a KEOGH account this year but just never got around to it.

It's time to get around to it. Remember, December 31 is the deadline.

See Diane Newland or Jimmy Boyle at First National's Trust Division on the first floor of the Marathon Building, 105 W. Missouri. Or call them at 685-2061, 685-2056.

Bid envelopes shall be plainly marked "Proposal for Project No. W-207, Utility Adjustments on State Highway 349."

The successful bidder will be required to coordinate this work with the State Highway Department's contractor on State Highway 349.

Complete copies of plans, specifications, and contract documents may be examined and/or obtained at the office of the Field Engineer in the Municipal Service Center, 1600 South Street, Midland, Texas.

A bid bond or proposal guaranty is to accompany the bid, thereby guaranteeing the good faith of the bidder and that the bidder will enter into the written contract. The guaranty is to amount to five percent (5%) of the total bid and must be in the form of cash or certified check, issued by a bank satisfactory to the City of Midland, or a bid bond. If in the form of cash or certified check, it is expressly understood and agreed that the City of Midland is given the right to retain such as liquidated damages if such bidder withdraws its bid anytime after such bid is opened and before official rejection of such bid, or if successful in securing the award thereof, such bidder fails to enter into the contract and furnish satisfactory performance and payment bonds. If a bid bond is submitted, it shall be executed on forms contained in these contract documents by a corporate surety authorized to do business in the State of Texas, and acceptable to the City of Midland.

The City of Midland, Texas, reserves the right to accept or reject any or all proposals or bids, to waive technicalities, and to make any investigation deemed necessary concerning the bidders ability to perform the work covered by the plans and specifications, to award this bid by items and to accept what in the judgment of the Mayor and City Council is the most advantageous bid.

NOW! At the outset of a Great New Year!
(And a truly exciting event to look forward to in 1983)
SNEAK PREVIEW
ALLTEX is shattering every past precedent. They are so eager for you to see their new apartment community — destined to be the showcase in years to come — that they are unveiling their full plans, in advance of completion. Certainly. Perhaps, ALLTEX is rigging their hand to competition, but it is all to your advantage. You can see the furnished models, choose your location and decide on the floor plan and color decor which suits your desires. Then you can leisurely pack and plan your move on a mutually agreed upon date. All will be ready — actually a custom-ordered apartment/residence; brand new, exactly to your wishes.
HERE ARE JUST A FEW OF THE HIGHLIGHTS OF THE ALL-NEW "The Clusters"
■ Two flagstone-decked pools with adjoining Jacuzzi facilities
■ Two professional, lighted tennis courts for residents only.
■ Equipped exercise center with Universal Power Pac machines
■ A 10-Station Par Course jogging trail around the property.
■ A luxurious central clubroom with pool table, large color TV, fireplace and full party kitchen and bar, exclusively for residents.
...AND LUXURY 1- AND 2-BEDROOM APARTMENTS WITH TASTEFUL AMENITIES
■ Six different color decors; five different floor plans.
■ Custom home, clipped pile carpeting and decorator mini-blinds.
■ Classic French doors leading to private patios and balconies.
■ Ceiling fans, wood-burning fireplaces and mirrored walls.
■ Kitchen with compactors, Microwave ovens, ice-makers, self-cleaning ranges, side-by-side, frost-free refrigerators and more.
■ Baths with custom home fixtures, pulsating shower heads, decorator vinyl flooring and wallpaper flourishes.

BUILDING THE PETROPLEX

The 1st year's payment and buyer qualification will be calculated equivalent to a rate of 8 3/8% loan to value interest will be charged at a rate of 12 3/8% for the 1st 6 months of the loan. After the first 6 months interest will be charged at the most recent 6 months Treasury Bill rate plus 4.25%. Payments on these mortgages are graduated so as to increase the principal and interest payment 7.50% each year for the next 4 years. At the end of the first 5 year period the graduation in payment will cease. A new payment schedule will be computed using a variable rate mortgage to amortize the remaining balance over the remaining 25 years of the mortgage based upon the then current Treasury Bill rate plus 4.25%. The 7 1/2% maximum increase can be more if the original loan principals exceeds 125%. At each 5 year anniversary date, the payment may be adjusted to allow the remaining payments to fully amortize the loan. ANNUAL PERCENTAGE RATE APPROXIMATELY 12.875%. *Principle and Interest only is calculated in monthly payment.
