Jet fighter hits hotel, killing seven

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — A jet fighter crashed a mile short of an Indianapolis International Airport runway today, plowing into a hotel where at least seven people died and others were injured as the jet exploded in "fireball," police and witnesses said.

Up to 25 people were missing and seven were confirmed dead in the accident at the 220-room Ramada Inn Airport, which occurred just after 9 a.m., said Robert Duncan, an attorney for the Indianapolis Airport Authority.

Up to 10 people were transported to area hospitals, said Larry Curl, a spokesman for the fire department rescue units on the scene.

A temporary morgue was established at the east end of the hotel. Authorities believe 107 people were in the building at the time.

Firefighters continued to search room-to-room for more people.

The point of impact was the second floor, just above the main lobby, according to Curl.

The pilot of the plane, an A-7 Corsair jet fighter, bailed out before the crash, and apparently was not seriously injured, a broadcast reporter at the scene said.

The plane went down about one mile east of the airport, first hitting a bank and slamming into the north side of the building.

The hardest hit areas were the second and third floors of the hotel. Black smoke poured from the building.

Jim Yanuzzi, 38, of Flemington, N.J., a guest staying in a second-floor room in the east end of the motel, said he heard "a big explosion and the whole building shook.

"I went to the door, opened the door, and the hall was full of black smoke. I went back into the room, grabbed a chair and broke out the window."

He said he jumped onto the roof of a first-floor structure and then climbed down a ladder to get to the ground.

Outside, Yanuzzi said he saw a man on fire rolling on the ground and several women running out of the motel.

Joe Hays, who was working in a office building across the street said he raced to a window when he heard an explosion. "There was just debris and a big fire ball."

There are numerous hotels on the east side of the airport area, about 10 miles from downtown Indianapolis

Bob Horn, executive assistant manager at the nearby Adam's Mark Hotel, said: "There are a lot of casualties that they are taking out of the building. The hotel ran close to full last night."

Horn said the plane scraped the front of Bank One and crashed into the front of the hotel, "right in front of the canopy."

"There is a lot of emergency equipment in front of the hotel and it's pretty badly burned," Horn said.

"For the type of disaster there is not that much confusion going on. The building is on fire and the majority of people are out of the building that were able to leave," he said.

A disaster center was immediately set up, and streets in the area were closed off.

In Washington, JoAnne Sloane of the Federal Aviation Administration said the plane was an A-7 Corsair that "evidently flamed out and the pilot bailed out." She did not know who he was or whether he landed safely.

The A-7 Corsair is an old, single-engine, single-seat attack jet that was used extensively during the Vietnam War. It is no longer flown by the active Air Force, but is still operated by Air National Guard units in at least 10 states.

The A-7 is a subsonic plane designed for ground attack. The plane can be equipped with 20mm or 30mm machine guns and can carry a variety of missiles and bombs.

After record plunge, market rebounding

NEW YORK — Stock prices shot higher in heavy trading on the New York Stock Exchange this morning, rebounding from Monday's $500 billion selloff as exchanges in London and Frankfurt also rallied.

The Dow Jones industrial average rose about 123 to 1,862 in the first 90 minutes as traders rushed to buy stocks that had been beaten down in Monday's tumultuous trading that pushed the Dow down 508 points, in the worst day since the great crash of 1929.

About 40 million shares traded in the first 20 minutes, putting the New York Stock Exchange on track for another record day of trading volume.

Trying to calm the markets, the exchange asked securities houses not to use computerized program trading, which moves huge blocks of stock and contributes to the volatility of the market.

The stock market also was buoyed by an announcement that the Federal Reserve would inject money as necessary to support the health of the markets and banking system.

A statement from West German authorities today eased concerns that Germany would allow its interest rates to rise, a move that might choke off economic growth in the United States by forcing interest rates higher here as well.

The market's action continued to perplex analysts. Investors seemed torn between the theory that massive U.S. trade and budget deficits would cause the dollar to fall and trigger high inflation and high interest rates, and the alternate theory that interest rates and inflation would be dragged down by a recession.

"Right now you can build a case for whatever you want," said Morgan McDonnell, managing director of Moseley, Hallgarten, Estabrook & Weeden Inc. in Chicago.

Local stockbrokers today had a variety of descriptions and opinions to explain Monday's plunge of the stock market.

"Bizarre."

That's the best word Glenn Little, president of Little & Co., could come up with to describe what happened on Wall Street on what is already being dubbed Black Monday.

"What we've got is something we've never seen before," so it's impossible to know what to expect next, the Midland stockbroker explained Monday after the market closed.

"A correction, albeit a large one," is what Rocky Monzingo, branch manager for A.G. Edwards & Sons called Monday's 508 point drop in the Dow Jones Industrial Average. "There were a lot of excesses built in to the index as it has climbed to the high extreme in the last few months."

Edwin T. Atkin, vice president and resident manager of Shearson Lehman Brothers Inc., also called the drop a correction. "We have been in a bull market since 1982, without much correction. It appears we got five years of correction all at once," he explained.

Calling Monday's drop "the appearance of a crash, but not a crash" he attributed the drop to a number of factors that came together all at once. "The large trade defecit, worry over inflation, higher interest rates, a weak bond market and events in the Persian Gulf all played a hand in the dive," said Atkin.

He said it was hard to tell how long the correction would take, but he thought the worst was over, and some recovery would be seen this week.

According to Monzingo, early trading today may show further downward pressure as some investors are forced to liquidate additional stock positions to meet margin calls. He said the market may find support not far below its Monday close.

"We may see a bounce to the upside today or it could take until later in the week," Monzingo said.

"There's been a lot of blood letting, but I don't think investors will continue the way they have been bleeding on their equity investments," he added.

Market changes could affect most Americans

By ROBERT A. BENNETT
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Unless the stock market bounces back quickly and substantially, most Americans are likely to be hurt by the dramatic decline in stock values — even those who own no stock at all.

Most economists say the biggest threat is psychological: People and businesses will feel poorer and therefore will hold back on spending, causing a slowdown in the economy and a rise in unemployment.

"This affects even those who don't have direct investments in stocks," said Henry Kaufman, the chief economist of Salomon Brothers, a major Wall Street firm. "If you're just an average citizen, you're working somewhere, and the developments in the financial markets today may influence the company you work for. It may result in cutbacks."

Jessica's foot 'improving'

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Jessica McClure returned from early morning hyperbaric oxygen chamber treatments today to a hearty breakfast of cream of wheat, a vanilla milkshake, apple juice and milk, a Midland Memorial Hospital official said.

The child's right foot appeared to be improving Monday, but her orthopedic surgeon, Charles Younger, admitted "it's not out of the woods yet."

Jessica — two pounds heavier — was stable today after a seven-member physician team "inspected, cleaned, tested and rebandaged" her severely-damaged foot during an hour-long exam Monday, a hospital spokeswoman said.

During the exam, which Jessica endured under general anesthesia, the foot was still swollen but appeared to have "reasonable" circulation, Younger said.

Vascular and general surgeon Shelton Viney said Monday he performed a "Doppler" examination during the exam.

The Doppler "listening" device is a small laser that is "beamed" into the skin and zeroes in on the flow of red capillary blood cells, Viney said. It allows the physician to see the circulation in the foot, he added.

Results showed her big toe and outer and inner sides of the foot are not receiving adequate supplies of blood, Viney said.

Younger said they cut away a bit of dead superficial tissue on the bottom of her foot during the exam.

"We saw nothing major that needed removal. This was more like removing the skin off a blister," Younger said.

The orthopedic surgeon said the Doppler exam proved just some toes — not the entire foot — may be in danger of amputation, but declined tacking a percentage onto the situation's chances.

"Our plan is to go back to surgery Friday and do a skin graft," Younger said.

Distress calls monitored as new mine spotted in gulf

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — A mine was reportedly spotted in the main shipping lanes of the Persian Gulf today and radio monitors said an unidentified vessel was issuing distress calls 10 miles from the Iranian coast.

Diplomatic sources said the U.S. Embassy in Bahrain was advising Americans to "keep their heads low" following the U.S. attack Monday on two Iranian oil platforms.

In Washington, Adm. William Crowe, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and President Reagan's senior military adviser, said he believed Iran might resort to terrorism to retaliate for the U.S. attack.

"They obviously will look for ways, but probably more in line with the 'silent hand' than what they have done thus far," he said.

But he also acknowledged that "the Iranians have the capability to mine."

Marine salvage executives said the Iranian tanker Khark 3 reported sighting the mine at 9:30 a.m. in a major shipping lane about 40 miles off the Iranian coast.

The Iranian tanker warned vessels to avoid the area, said the executives, who spoke on condition of anonymity. The executives said they believed the report was accurate because it came from a commercial craft.

The area is about 100 miles north of the oil platforms destroyed by the United States. U.S. officials said the attack was in reprisal for an Iranian missile strike Friday on a U.S.-flagged tanker.

Nearly two hours after the mine sighting, a distress signal was picked up by radio monitors from an unidentified vessel that gave its location as 10 miles from the Iranian coast.

"The vessel only put out an SOS but it did not identify itself or mention what happened," said one radio monitor. Because of its location only Iranian boats can help it, he said.

Also today, Iran's official news agency quoted Oil Minister Gholamreza Aqazadeh as saying the U.S. attack caused $500 million in damage and has threatened the gulf with an oil spill.

A "number of oil company workers were wounded, two of them seriously," he was quoted as saying at a news conference in Tehran.

Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency, which carried Aqazadeh's remarks, also quoted Iran's parliament speaker as saying Iran will avenge the U.S. attack "in the coming days."

"We have said we will not let any aggression go unanswered. This is not a threat but a reality," said Parliament Speaker Hashemi Rafsanjani.

Pentagon officials said the platforms were built for drilling but were used by Iran to stage attacks on shipping as part of the 7-year-old Iran-Iraq war. Iran also has been widely accused of laying mines in the gulf.

Former Contra leader returns under amnesty

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — Former Nicaraguan rebel leader Edgar Chamorro has returned home under a government amnesty, saying he will "work for peace and reconciliation."

In another development, government censors told an opposition radio station that reopened this month that it could not broadcast news without permission.

Chamorro, who arrived Monday, had left Nicaragua before the leftist Sandinista government took power in 1979. He was a director of the U.S.-backed Contra rebels from 1982 to 1984, when he left the group, charging they were manipulated by the CIA.

Foreign Ministry sources said the Nicaraguan Consulate in Washington granted Chamorro an entry visa within the framework of the amnesty, which is available to rebels who lay down their weapons.

At the airport, Chamorro said he would stay "as long as I can." However, in Washington last week he said he would visit Nicaragua for two weeks to speak, write, travel and think about whether to return permanently.

Asked why he left the rebel movement, he said he did not agree "with the injustices and atrocities that the forces backed by the United States commit."

"It is time for them to stop," he said. He did not elaborate.

The Contras have been accused of attacking civilian targets.

In an interview before leaving Washington, Chamorro said he wanted to test the Sandinistas' promises of amnesty and greater freedoms.

"It is important for Nicaraguans to go back with an open mind and see if the Sandinistas really mean what they are saying," he said in the interview.

The Sandinistas, who came to power in a revolution that overthrew the late President Anastasio Somoza, have offered an amnesty since 1985. Chamorro is a third cousin of Pedro Chamorro, a Contra director.

As part of a Central American peace plan signed by five regional presidents Aug. 7, Nicaragua has allowed opposition media to reopen, declared a partial, unilateral ceasefire and permitted banished priests to return. It has also opened talks with the unarmed opposition.

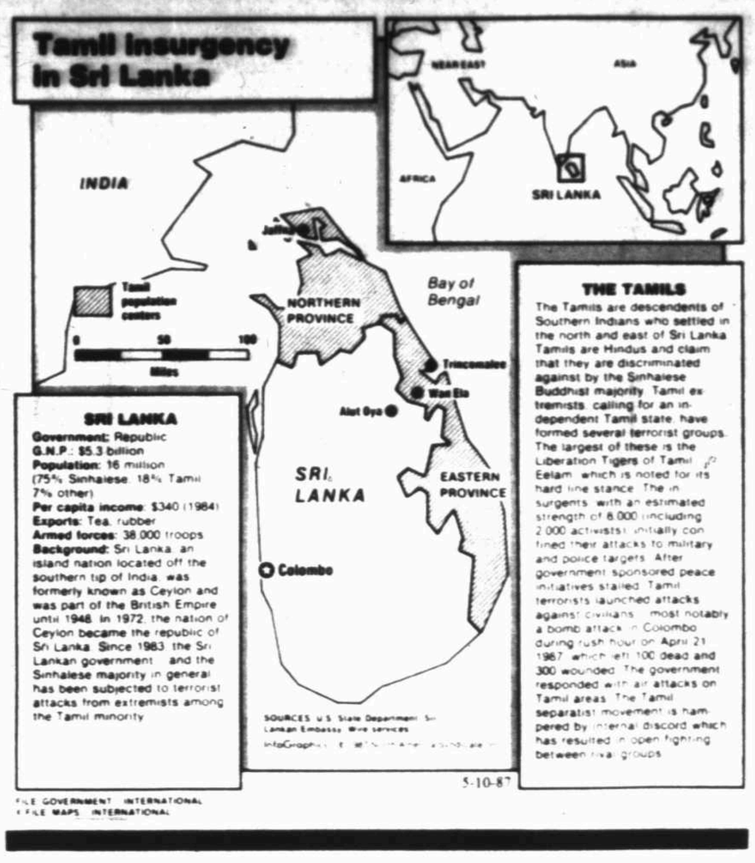

Radio Catolica, a Roman Catholic station, was one of the media outlets allowed to reopen under the peace accord.

The station was playing the musical introduction to the news program on Monday when government censor Lt. Lissette Torres called and told them not to broadcast the show, news director Auxiliadora Echegoyen said.

The news program was to be the station's first since it resumed operations Oct. 2, featuring musical and religious programming. It had been shut down since Jan. 1, 1986, when it failed to broadcast President Daniel Ortega's end-of-the-year message.

Isolda Hurtado, Interior Ministry press secretary, said Radio Catolica may broadcast news, but must apply for the legally required permission for the program.

Indians meet fierce resistance from Tamils

COLOMBO, Sri Lanka (AP) — Indian troops led by tanks met fierce resistance from Tamil guerrillas today as the soldiers tried to link up with an Indian force holding the center of Jaffna, Sri Lankan military sources said.

Indian Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi meanwhile said he was optimistic a settlement could be reached and that his troops won't be in Sri Lanka "forever."

An Indian column led by tanks and armored personnel carriers was trying to move into Jaffna from the north today, to meet Indian forces on the city's southern waterfront, according to the sources who spoke on condition of anonymity.

There was no independent confirmation of the reports. India, which launched its offensive Oct. 10, has not allowed journalists to visit Jaffna.

The Sri Lankan military sources said Indian soldiers were also searching for eight top leaders of the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam to break the backbone of the rebel organization.

Indian troops are in Sri Lanka to enforce a July 29 peace pact aimed at ending ethnic violence in the island country off the southern coast of India. The Indian-sponsored plan calls for the Tamil rebels to lay down their arms in exchange for a measure of autonomy.

The Tigers, whose chief stronghold is Jaffna, have refused to abide by the agreement. Their four-year guerrilla war against Sri Lanka's Sinhalese-dominated government has taken more than 6,000 lives.

The Tigers, who have entrenched bunker positions and are using hit-and-run tactics, have vowed to fight to the last man. They have an estimated 500 fighters in Jaffna, including a 150-man suicide squad known as the Black Tigers.

On Monday, Indian troops pushing in from the west of Jaffna met the Indian soldiers based in an old Dutch colonial fort in the south of the city, said Foreign Ministry spokesman D.K. Maitra in New Delhi. The troops coming from the south captured the central bus station, town hall and other public buildings in the middle of the city on Monday, he said.

Civic leaders in Jaffna said Monday that as many as 700 civilians were killed in the battle. In a letter carried from Jaffna, the group urged Sri Lankan President Junius R. Jayewardene to call a halt to the offensive.

Indian officials in New Delhi and Colombo denied there had been heavy civilian casualties but said they were unable to give figures. They said Indian forces held back their firepower in an effort to minimize civilian casualties.

Jaffna, about 180 miles north of Colombo, had a peacetime population of 150,000.

Car bomb explodes at Colombian Defense Ministry

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — A car bomb exploded in the Defense Ministry parking lot Monday and wounded eight people, and five small bombs went off in Medellin but caused little damage and no injuries, officials said.

Telephone callers to Bogota radio stations claimed a previously unheard of group calling itself the People's Insurgency set off the bomb at the ministry. That organization was presumed to be a leftist guerrilla group. The callers did not identify themselves.

Sixteen vehicles were damaged or destroyed and scores of windows in the five-story Defense Ministry building were shattered, police said.

A ministry statement said the bomb appeared to have gone off in a manhole leading to telephone lines and a water main. But people 100 yards away were injured, indicating that perhaps the bomb was inside a car.

About 90 vehicles were in the lot when the bomb exploded at 4:30 p.m. Hundreds of employees fled the ministry building.

In Medellin, Colombia's second-largest city, Mayor William Jaramillo told the Bogota radio station RCN that no one was hurt in the five explosions.

The five bombs were small and did little damage, a National Police spokesman told the Associated Press, speaking on condition of anonymity.

The Medellin bombs exploded against the facades of four stores and a police guard shack in a neighborhood, the spokesman said.

The Defense Ministry explosion came 10 days after the assassination of Jaime Pardo, Colombia's leading leftist politician and president of the Patriotic Union party.

Pardo was the 470th Patriotic Union member killed in two years. His killers are thought to be members of right-wing death squads.

Station must get permit for news, Sandinistas say

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — A radio station that was silenced and then reopened by the leftist government was told by censors Monday it could not broadcast any news without official permission.

Auxiliadora Echegoyen, the news director of Radio Catolica, said the station had begun broadcasting the musical introduction that identifies the news program when government censor Lt. Lissette Torres called on the telephone.

The censor informed the Roman Catholic station that it could not broadcast any news program without prior government permission, in accordance with the law, Ms. Echegoyen said.

Isolda Hurtado, Interior Ministry press secretary, said Radio Catolica must apply for the legally required authorization for the news program and register the name of its director, the broadcast time and other information.

Ms. Hurtado added that the Interior Ministry has no objection to Radio Catolica broadcasting news.

The censorship applied only to the news program and the station continued on the air with religious and music programming.

Ms. Echegoyen said she did not know if Monsignor Bismarck Carballo, the station's director, would seek permission to broadcast news.

Ignacio Briones Torres, assistant news director, said the program had included a commentary calling for a general amnesty in the country.

Amnesties are among the points in the Central American peace plan signed by the presidents of Nicaragua, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and Costa Rica on Aug. 7.

Radio Catolica also had planned to broadcast an interview with Lino Hernandez, director of the independent Permanent Commission on Human Rights, in which he urged President Daniel Ortega to carry out the peace plan.

The station reopened Oct. 2, a day after the opposition newspaper La Prensa published its first edition since June 1986.

Ortega's leftist Sandinista government said it was allowing them to resume operations in compliance with the peace plan's stipulation that the signatory countries must have freedom of the press and of speech.

Radio Catolica was shut down Jan. 1, 1986, when it refused to broadcast a speech by Ortega.

The peace plan is aimed at ending lengthy civil wars in Nicaragua and El Salvador and lesser conflicts in Guatemala and Honduras. Together, the fighting has claimed more than 100,000 lives, left tens of thousands homeless and seriously damaged the region's economy.

Train hits bus, killing 50

MORO, Pakistan (AP) — A speeding passenger train slammed into a crowded bus and killed at least 50 people today after the operator of a railroad crossing apparently failed to close the gate, authorities said.

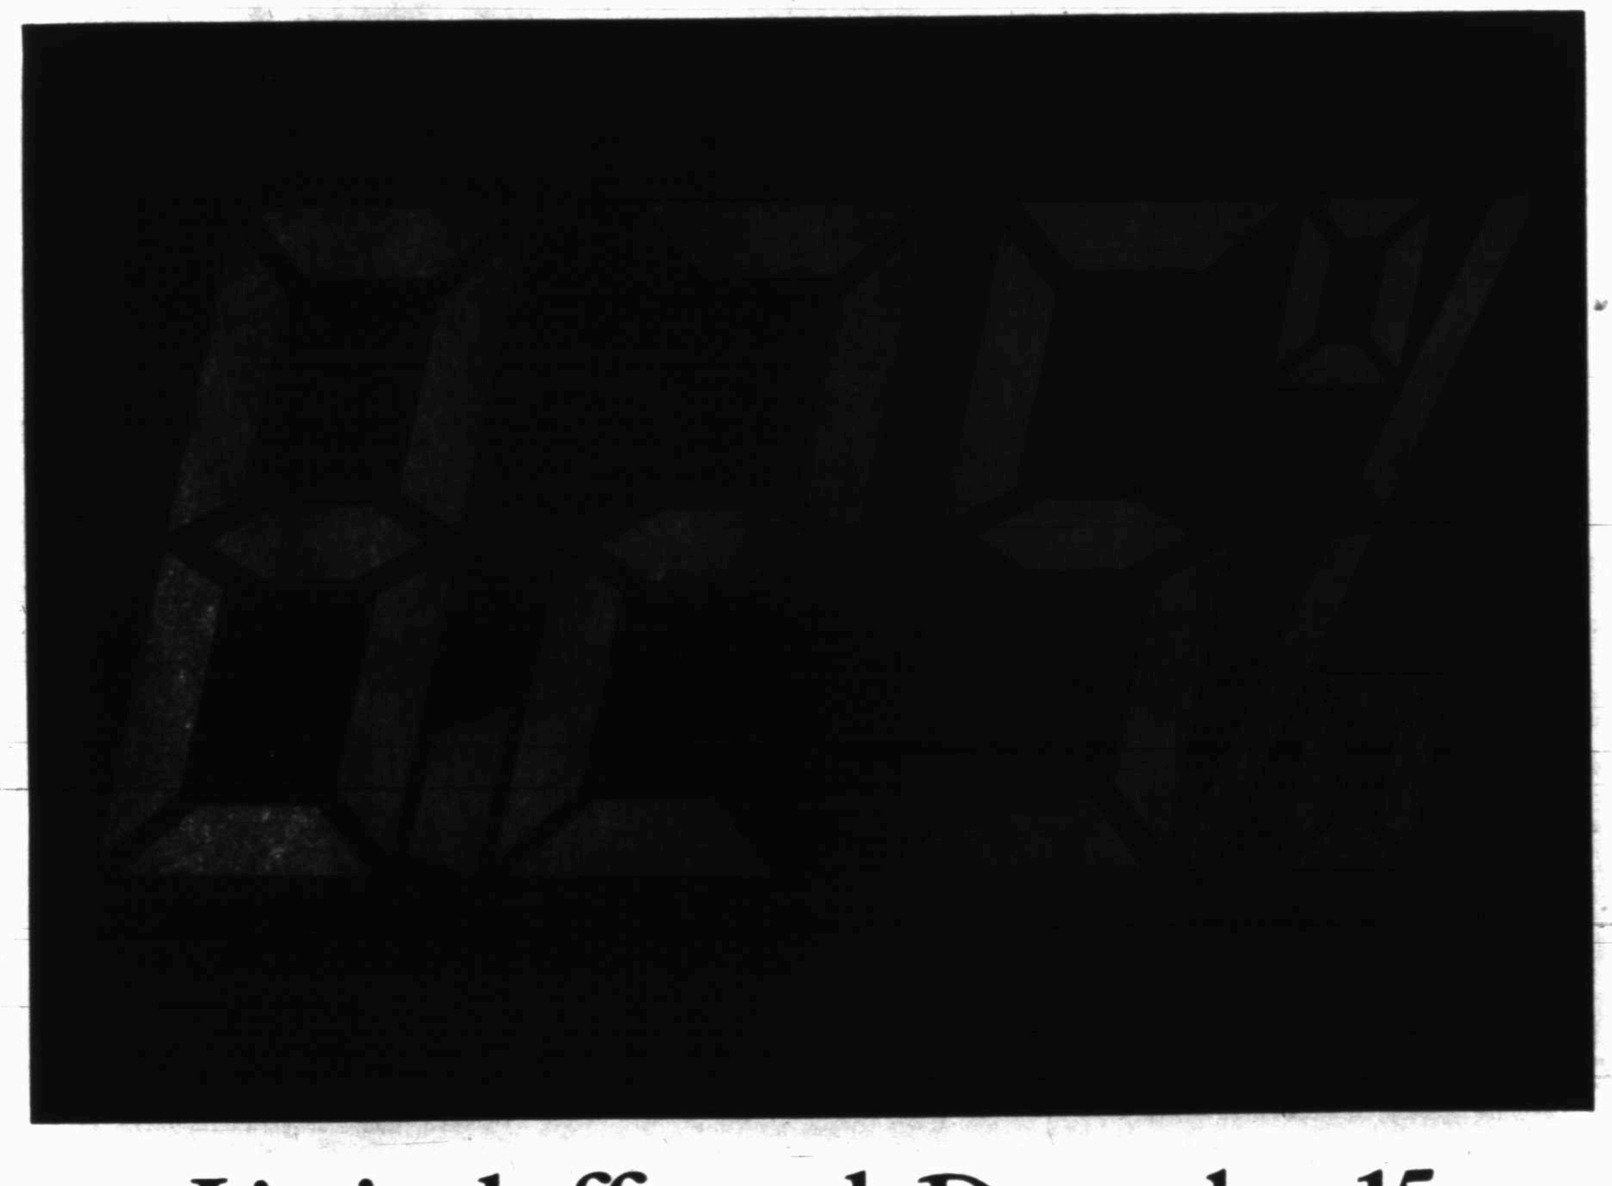

About 40 people were injured, police said.

Witnesses told reporters the gate operator fled the scene, a main railroad crossing in this remote town about 150 miles north of Karachi.

The train, which was carrying about 200 passengers, hit the bus at the crossing and dragged it about 150 feet. The bus broke up and bodies were flung along the track, police said, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Medical authorities said it appeared all the dead and wounded had been aboard the bus.

Junet, a 10-year-old newspaper vendor was trapped in the wreckage of two trains which collided head-on Monday in South Jakarta, Indonesia, for more than 12 hours before being freed by rescuers.

Bodies still trapped in trains' wreckage

JAKARTA, Indonesia (AP) — Rescue workers today freed more bodies from the wreckage of two passenger trains that crashed head-on, killing at least 152 people, many of them children, police said.

Communications Minister Rusmin Nuryadin said officials of two railway stations were being questioned about why the Jakarta-bound train did not wait for an outbound train to pass on the single track before the collision Monday.

"The train from Rangkas Bitung was already 20 minutes late, but why was it permitted to leave the station after a brief stop?" said Nuryadin, the communications minister.

Police said 17 railway personnel have been detained for questioning.

A police spokesman said 154 people were hospitalized in critical condition and 116 others suffered minor injuries in the crash in the district of Bintaro Jaya, 10 miles south of Jakarta.

Rescue workers assisted by more than 300 soldiers and police officers have been working around-the-clock to help recover the victims, while 25 ambulances and three helicopters carried them to hospitals.

Woman on hunger strike

MOSCOW (AP) — A Jewish woman has begun a hunger strike to win the right to emigrate and stopped nursing her baby to conserve her strength, the woman's husband said Monday.

Alexander Kholmyansky told The Associated Press that his 27-year-old wife, Anna, began fasting Sunday to pressure Soviet authorities into granting the couple an exit visa.

"She will just be taking water. No fruits, no vitamins, nothing but water," Kholmyansky said.

Mrs. Kholmyansky stopped breast-feeding their 5-month-old daughter, Dora, during her hunger strike to keep up her strength, Kholmyansky added.

Kholmyansky, 37, said exit visas for himself and his wife are being denied partly because his father-in-law objects to their emigration.

Under Soviet law, parents of a would-be emigrant must submit a certificate that says the applicant has no financial obligations toward them.

U.S. jets collide, injuring 2

SAARBRUECKEN, West Germany (AP) — Two U.S. Air Force fighter jets on routine training missions crashed in West Germany on Monday, injuring the two pilots who had ejected, authorities said.

West German police said the planes collided in the air. A U.S. Air Force spokeswoman said, however, that military officials were still trying to determine what happened.

"We cannot to say at this moment whether it was a collision. The Air Force is still investigating," Air Force spokeswoman Capt. Kathleen White told The Associated Press.

An Air Force statement said the pilots of the F-16C and F05 were hospitalized but that their condition was not immediately known. Their identities were not released.

Police said the F-16C pilot suffered a pelvic fracture and the F-5 pilot was still unconscious. Both were hospitalized.

The jets crashed north of Saarbruecken, near the border with France, about 1:40 p.m., the Air Force said.

Guinness book sets records

LONDON (AP) — The Guinness Book of Records published its latest edition Monday and set a record of its own — in the field of publicity stunts.

The editors unveiled the new volume at London's Covent Garden plaza with a copy of the book 11 feet tall by 10 feet wide, which they claim is the world's biggest volume.

The Guinness Book of Records previously listed the largest volume as the Super Book, published in Denver in 1976. That volume measured 9 feet by 10 feet, 2¼ inches.

"It never ceases to amaze me how people keep coming up with new records. Some are frivolous but others are important to history and knowledge in setting things straight," said Guinness editor Norris McWhirter.

Will further retaliatory strikes be needed?

WASHINGTON (AP) — Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger hinted today that several rounds of additional retaliation may be needed to "drive the message home" to Iran that the United States will not tolerate its attacks on merchant shipping.

And he said that U.S. forces in the Persian Gulf will be cut back "when and if Iran changes."

Weinberger, in a series of television interviews, defended the U.S. Navy attack on an Iranian military facility Monday and indicated that future action may be necessary to end Iran's "indiscriminate, unprovoked attacks on non-belligerent shipping."

"If they keep it up, there will be additional responses that we hope ultimately will drive the message home to them," Weinberger said on the "CBS Morning News." "This is a situation in which either we carry out principles of freedom of the seas or we give up and walk away."

Weinberger said the only condition under which the United States would decrease the level of its gulf forces would be "when and if the Iranian behavior changes or when and if the other nations of the world take sufficient action to dry up the Iranians' ability to get the materials necessary to carry out these indiscriminate attacks."

The United States has been urging that the permanent members of the United Nations Security Council approve a resolution calling for a trade embargo on Iran.

President Reagan said Monday the Iranian facility, a former oil platform standing in two separate sections, was "a command and control tower with radar and the ability to track shipping through the gulf."

He said the platform's destruction by U.S. ships was "an appropriate and proportionate response to their missile attack on a freighter, which wounded some of our people."

His reference was to Iran's Silkworm missile attack last week on one of the 11 Kuwaiti tankers flying the U.S. flag. The attack injured 18 crewmen, including one American, the ship's captain.

Asked if the United States has the capability to destroy the Silkworm missiles sites, Weinberger, in an interview on ABC-TV's "Good Morning America," said, "It is generally within our capability to do militarily what has to be done in the gulf and specifically I think the answer ... is yes."

Reagan said Monday that Iran is not "stupid" enough to go to war with the United States after the Navy action, but Senate Democrats are still pushing for a formal vote on Reagan's gulf policy.

The Democratic-controlled chamber was scheduled to vote today on a motion to halt a filibuster which has blocked floor action on a binding resolution that could set up a vote early next year on Reagan's gulf policy.

The Democrats, holding a 54-46 margin, need 60 votes to invoke cloture, the parliamentary device used to end a filibuster.

U.S. commandos on Monday also boarded another Iranian platform about six miles away from the first after seeing it being abandoned, the Pentagon said.

The commandos destroyed some radar and communications gear found at the platform, originally used for oil drilling and converted to military use, but made no effort to destroy the structure itself before leaving, officials said.

Fred S. Hoffman, the Pentagon's chief spokesman, disclosed the action about 6½ hours after Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger announced that four U.S. Navy warships had destroyed the other Iranian sea platform.

Reagan, asked by reporters if the United States is at war with Iran, answered, "We're not going to have a war with Iran. They're not that stupid."

The pending Senate resolution provides that within 60 days after enactment, Reagan would have to send Congress a detailed report, answering a number of questions about his policy of reflagging the Kuwaiti tankers and protecting them with Navy convoys in the warn-torn gulf.

Thirty days after that, Congress would be required to act on a resolution expressing some type of view, either positive or negative, on Reagan's policy.

"I think there's a majority in the Senate for it, but whether we've got the votes for cloture, I don't know," said Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee.

Senate Democratic leaders began pushing the resolution after Republican opponents stalled their drive to have the chamber invoke the War Powers Act, the controversial 1973 law which limits a president's right to send troops to areas of imminent danger.

The law requires a White House report within 48 hours after the troops are sent. Under certain conditions, they then would have to be withdrawn unless Congress approves their deployment within 60 days.

Reagan, as have his predecessors, argues that the law is unconstitutional.

GULF

However, Aqazadeh insisted the platforms were purely oil facilities that were undergoing repair when struck by the U.S. Navy warships.

"The two platforms are still on fire," Aqazadeh was quoted as saying. "There is a possibility of an oil spill and pollution of the Persian Gulf waters." U.S. officials have said the platforms were destroyed.

Shipping sources reported at least four U.S. warships, possibly the same ones that shelled the Iranian platforms on Monday, remained near the wrecked oil facilities.

They said private vessels were reporting no other movement in the area, which is in waters that Iran considers an "exclusion zone." The zone, which extends roughly halfway across the gulf, is not acknowledged by the U.S. Navy.

"Only mangled metal and charred remains were apparent from the distance, and smoke could still be sighted," said one source, quoting a report from his company's vessel.

No Americans were killed or injured in Monday's attack, which won support from Arab nations and several U.S. allies and was condemned by Moscow.

Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger hinted today that more violence might be necessary to teach Iran that the United States will not tolerate its attacks on merchant shipping.

"If they keep it up, there will be additional responses that we hope ultimately will drive the message home to them," Weinberger said on the "CBS Morning News."

STOCKS — REACT

Bond prices surged. Traders said one reason was that investors were putting money in bonds out of fears of the possibility — however remote — that the devastation in stock markets would cause another 1930s-style depression by wiping out people's investments and causing a crisis in confidence.

In contrast, analysts said the rebound in stocks seemed to grow out of a conviction that corporate earnings were good enough to support higher prices.

Prices of U.S. Treasury bonds soared early today as investors sought a safe haven in government securities offering fixed incomes.

Local investors expressed concern over the day's activity, but didn't succumb to "panic selling" as was seen in many areas nearer the exchange, according to Merrill Lynch vice president and financial consultant Jake Young.

"We hope we are at or near a stop," he said Monday. His customers are "looking at and assessing the value of their position at the end of the day — adopting a 'wait and see' attitude," Young said. It is unlike Midland investors to take "rash actions."

Bill Hill, resident manager for Howard, Weil, LaBouisse, Fredrichs also indicated that he had seen no panic selling among his clients. "I didn't see any of our clients looking for a 1929 crash," he said. "This (crash) doesn't add up," said Hill, "employment is up, inflation moderate and the economy growing."

Hill said there were probably a lot of factors that precipitated the stock plunge, but a weakness in the bond market was probably the prime cause. "I think the fact that in November, there may not be a 30-year bond, which is popular with the Japanese and others, has created some of the weakness.

As for what the plunge might mean to the economy, Hill thinks there might be some economic slowing down.

One local investor thinks it could go further than that. Using computers and a satellite financial wire service, Bill Cogdell of Cogdell Investments buys and sells in the stock market daily and calls himself a full-time stock investor.

He says he didn't lose a dollar in the plunge, but he calls it "terrifying." He said it could lead to a worldwide recession. "When the New York Stock Exchange gets a cold the rest of the world gets pneumonia. It will be interesting to see whast takes place in London, Tokyo and Zurich."

Cogdell, however, is inclined to call the crash a natural event: "There are always fluctuations in the market, and the flip side of a speedy rise is a speedy decline — and stocks always decline faster than they rise."

He said it would probably be sometime before it becomes clear if the stock market is entering a crash or bear market.

Paine Webber, a major New York brokerage house with local representation, instructed local offices to "not comment" on Monday's markets, according to the receptionist.

Little said that one possible positive outcome of Monday's heavy trading volume is that it may "separate the men from the boys" among the brokerage firms who have invested in the computer capacity to handle the massive number of trades seen on Monday.

"We may find out who bought advertising and glitter and who spent wisely," he said.

Little added that many local investors seemed "stunned" by the day's developments but that some customers were submitting buy orders because they perceive the chance to get into the market cheaper than they have been able to in some time.

He expects that some high dividend yield stocks will act as "anchors" to stop the free fall of stock prices.

He added that through friends in Chicago he heard of two highly leveraged brokers who had to close their business because they were unable to meet margin calls.

From his own local customers, Little said he had no trouble collecting margin money Monday, but he doesn't know how long that will last, he said.

Monzingo of A.G. Edwards warns investors against comparing Black Monday 1987 with the renowned "Crash of '29."

"Today is a far different market with different types of players."

As for the effect of the market on oil prices, local economist Jim Williams thinks there may be some fluctuation up and down, but oil prices should remain in the $18 to $19 range.

"A drop in stock market would normally signal a recession, lower oil demand and lower oil prices, but in this instance we have the Persian Gulf putting upward pressure on oil prices," said Williams, who added that it was possible oil prices could even go upward.

Williams said it was hard to predict what might happen in the stock market because it was driven by rumor and momentum: "In a panic situation, it is feeds on itself. The more it goes down, the more it goes down."

IMPACT

Those hurt most immediately, of course, are investors who sold stocks Monday that they had purchased at higher prices while the market was surging upward during the summer.

In addition, the market plunge of the last four days has sharply cut into the spending power of investors who planned either to sell stocks soon or to use them as collateral for big-ticket purchases, such as a home or car.

The market plunge also put pressure on many other consumers who already had put up stock as collateral for past loans. As their stock declined in value, they were forced to put up more assets by their banks as collateral to back their loans. In fact, the market's decline probably was aggravated by people forced to sell their stock to repay their loans as the value of their collateral declined.

Another large group of Americans wincing from Monday's market plunge consists of workers who are very close to retirement and who had planned to cash in stocks that they held in Individual Retirement Accounts or 401(k) employee savings plans.

People who sat tight and held their stocks or mutual funds are poorer on paper, but the decline in stock values should have no direct effect on them until they decide to sell.

Although the values of most pension funds have plunged, that should not affect pensioners. Under most plans, a retired person's company is obliged to make the promised payments, whether or not the pension's assets are earning enough to finance the payments. The drop in stock values, though, might put a squeeze on many companies that suddenly find their pension plans underfunded.

As a result of the bull market, many pension funds had become "overfunded" and some companies were able to skim the excess off the top and include that amount in their profits.

Although most pension funds are guaranteed by the federal government, the labor movement is concerned about the drop in their values because the companies contributing to them will be less profitable.

"Overfunding gives labor bargaining room to seek more," said Henry Schechter, deputy director of the department of economic research at the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations.

But the greatest fear by far is the psychological effect the stock market's plunge might exact.

"We've been expecting a trigger mechanism that was going to scare consumers into pulling in their spending horns to produce the next recession, and this could do it," said A. Gary Shilling, who heads his own New York economic consulting firm.

If stock prices remain at or below their closing levels of Monday, "it will undoubtedly lead to a recession because it depletes confidence," said Irwin L. Kellner, chief economist for the Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co. "People who own stocks are obviously less wealthy than before."

UPDATE

The four incisions made in the foot Saturday to allow fluids to drain will be covered with skin graft using donor tissue from the child's thighs, Midland plastic surgeon Terry Tubb said.

Because foot swelling is expected to continue, doctors will place temporary grafts over the incisions — rather than sew them up — and remove the grafts once the swelling has abated, Tubb said.

The foot swelling — brought on by a fluid influx needed to counteract her dehydrated condition — was hindering the damaged capillary circulation process physicians are trying to correct, Younger continued.

"But this is not a major artery problem. We are worried about the microscopic flow of blood and trying to increase the formation of new blood vessels," Viney said.

It was further determined Monday the use of the tissue expanders to heal a sore on her forehead would be delayed, Tubb said.

Tubb was in no rush to insert to the silicone "skin stretchers" under the forehead skin and said he wanted to wait until bruising and swelling decreased.

Silicone implants — done in lieu of a skin graft — will stretch skin covering the deeply-wounded area injured while Jessica's forehead was pressed against the well casing, Tubb explained.

The child's spirits were described as "good but cranky at times," but Viney said the first two days she was in the hospital, "she was so sleepy she'd let us do anything to her."

Jessica's hyperbaric oxygen chamber treatments — done three times daily — will regenerate blood vessels and capillaries ruined while her wedged foot received virtually no circulation during the 58-hour entrapment, hospital officials have said.

In the chamber, oxygen is released at three times the amount a person receives normally, officials have said.

This intense oxygenation process aids in rejuvenating the creation of the vessels and capillaries, Younger said Monday.

"I'm in no rush and I have days and days," Tubb said. "The medical personnel needs to slow down and give mother nature time to work. She's going to be here awhile."

Budget slashing begins

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan today began systematically slashing $23 billion from federal programs under the Gramm-Rudman law, because he and Congress have failed to compromise on a plan to reduce the federal deficit more selectively.

From AIDS research to law enforcement to military readiness, government programs could lose about one-tenth of their fiscal 1988 budgets. Half of the cuts come from the military and half from domestic agencies.

James C. Miller III, director of the president's Office of Management and Budget, said there could be furloughs at the Justice Department, layoffs at the State Department, and delays in developing a space station.

"I think what we ought to do is avoid" the cuts, Miller said. But he refused to support the idea of Reagan convening a budget summit with congressional leaders to solve the problem.

"We're going to hold to our guns," he said, and Congress is "playing with fire" if it believes Reagan won't veto a tax increase. He said Monday's stock market crash wouldn't change that.

"I don't think that what is perceived to be an impasse right now is a major determinant of what happens on Wall Street," he said.

The cuts are temporary for now, with the money held in escrow, as the law gives the politicians a month to figure out alternative ways of reducing the fiscal 1988 deficit. But if they fail to agree on adequate reductions in the red ink, the cutbacks become permanent on Nov. 20.

Under the law, the Office of Management and Budget computes the across-the-board Gramm-Rudman cutbacks based on a formula designed to spread the cuts around.

The law this year cuts $11.5 billion each from domestic programs and from the Pentagon, although within those broad categories specific areas were exempted. No cuts will come from huge areas of the budget, including Social Security, welfare and veterans benefits and the military payroll.

The non-exempt portion of the military budget will lose about 10.5 percent and domestic programs about 8.5 percent, Miller said, figures only slightly different than estimates released last week by the non-partisan Congressional Budget Office.

Responding to the threatened cuts, Congress' Democratic leaders have been pushing ahead with a deficit reduction package. But their plan would accomplish half the deficit reduction through a variety of tax increases, a strategy Reagan has promised to veto.

Monday's stock market crash has been blamed by some analysts in part on the huge U.S. budget deficits under Reagan, and the market collapse has heightened the hostile rhetoric between the White House and Congress.

Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III suggested Sunday that the Democrats, by proposing the tax increases, were to blame for the previous week's stock market losses. On Monday, as the worst single-day stock plunge since 1914 was unfolding, House Speaker Jim Wright, D-Texas, called Baker's remarks "balderdash."

Wright called on the administration to calm the markets by working with Congress to reduce the deficit through a combination of spending cuts and some new taxes.

The budget deficit in fiscal 1987 was about $155 billion, down from a record $221 billion the previous year. But estimates show it will head higher again in the new fiscal year, which began Oct. 1, unless action is taken.

The Gramm-Rudman law envisions a deficit of $144 billion this year as an interim step toward a balanced budget by fiscal 1993. The automatic spending cuts were restored to the law recently to help force the deficits downward.

The $23 billion cutback is the maximum under the law for fiscal 1988, but smaller across-the-board reductions might be imposed later if Congress and the president agree on measures that get part wa to the deficit goal.

Environmental ruin harming all nations

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Environmental destruction is becoming a critical problem throughout the world, and is increasingly harmful to developing nations, foreign leaders said at a U.N. debate.

"While economic and social development suffer from severe national and global imbalances, threats to the environment are becoming global in scope and devastating in scale and effect," said Norwegian Prime Minister Gro Harlem Brundtland, chairwoman of the U.N.-sponsored World Commission on Environment and Development.

Mrs. Brundtland's group in April issued a report, based on three years of work by members from 22 countries, that calls for implementation of the concept of worldwide "sustainable development."

"Early, we came to recognize that poverty is the main cause and effect of environmental degradation in many developing countries," Mrs. Brundtland said at Monday's debate.

"All nations will ultimately share the same destiny. Our environment and economies have become so intertwined that we may no longer choose to remain apart," she said.

Encroachment of desert, loss of rain forests, a worldwide warming trend, acid rain, rising ocean levels, ozone depletion and overuse of agricultural land were among the numerous difficulties cited during the U.N. General Assembly debate.

Robert Mugabe, prime minister of Zimbabwe, cited the loss of 15 million acres of land worldwide to desert each year as particularly critical for Africa.

"Those who are poor and hungry will destroy their immediate environment" through overuse of agricultural land, overgrazing, use of marginal land and cutting down forests, Mugabe said.

Indian Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi said developing countries need assistance and industrialized countries need to conserve.

"Growth in the developing countries is being hampered by protectionism, by the deteriorating real terms of trade, by the unfavorable conditions for the transfer of technology and by the curtailment of the flow of development assistance.

"The lion's share of the world's natural resources has been pre-empted by a few countries," he added. "The average citizen of the industrialized countries consumes 10 times more fossil fuels and minerals than the average citizen of the developing world.

London's historic botanical gardens decimated by hurricane-force winds

By AUDREY C. WOODS

LONDON, England (AP) — The hurricane-force winds that uprooted thousands of London's ancient trees forever altered the Royal Botanic Gardens laid out at Kew more than 200 years ago.

The leafy squares and parks that make London the most livable of capitals lost many of their finest trees in Friday's storm. In every neighborhood the drone of chainsaws can be heard and the people who live here understand that it will be generations before London can look as it did last Thursday.

The destruction is felt most deeply at Kew, which had about 11,000 trees in its 300-acre park, many of great age and many rare examples from around the world.

In a few hours before dawn, 500 to 1,000 trees were torn from the ground at Kew, established during the reign of George II in 1759. Many more were badly damaged and may have to be cut down.

Saddened staff have barely begun to catalog the devastation. But one thing is already clear: "The face of Kew Gardens will never be the same again," said spokeswoman Christine Brandt.

"The staff are profoundly distressed," she said Monday. "Some of us have worked here for years and it is like our children are gone."

The toll across southeast England was very high because the ground was sodden after days of heavy rain and the trees were in full leaf, offering resistance to the wind. The bigger the tree, the greater the effect as gales reached 94 miles per hour in London.

Sevenoaks, in Kent county, lost six of the oaks that gave it its name. Three hundred eighty trees fell across the surface lines of the London Underground Railway, and about 5,000 lay across the railroad lines in southern England, rail spokesmen said.

Falling trees accounted for most of the 17 deaths counted in southern England as people were crushed in cars or trucks or, in some cases, died in accidents while trying to repair damage to their houses caused by fallen trees.

In London, noble oaks and some of Europe's finest plane trees, the heritage of wise 18th- and 19th-century builders, thudded down early Friday in Georgian squares and Victorian streets.

Hyde Park, Green Park, St. James' and Hampstead Heath all suffered. Big trees were down in Berkeley Square, Belgravia and Soho. In Chelsea, the 17th-century Physic Garden lost many trees, including its oldest, a holm oak believed to have been planted in 1772.

Kew, a world-renowned horticultural center that preserves endangered species and shares its expertise with many countries, is on the River Thames at the southwest edge of London. It is a place for spring walks and summer picnics, a year-round inspiration to legions of amateur gardeners.

The London Evening Standard newspaper already has started a fund aimed at planting a tree for every one lost in London, and offers of help have nearly swamped the Kew office.

"We have had nonstop phone calls from all over the world," said Miss Brandt. "The first phone call I had this morning was from a tree surgeon in Oregon volunteering to come over and help. Another gentleman offered four of his men to come and help.

"There have been offers of cranes and equipment, offers of young trees people have in their gardens, offers of money," she said. "The public have been overwhelmingly generous."

None of the offers can be accepted yet. Paths are being cleared so heavy equipment can move in. The park is closed to the public and will be opened one area at a time after checks to be sure no weakened limbs present a hazard.

"It could take the whole winter to check all the trees," Miss Brandt said.

Acres of greenhouses that protect plants from all over the world withstood the storm remarkably well.

Garden workers arrived as the storm abated and patched up broken glass, saving a collection of tropical plants from cold temperatures that would have been fatal.

15,000 Sudanese march for Islamic laws, against IMF

KHARTOUM, Sudan (AP) — Fifteen thousand people marched peacefully to demand the government apply Islamic laws and scrap a loan agreement with the International Monetary Fund that led to price increases.

Monday's demonstration was organized by the opposition Moslem fundamentalist group, the National Islamic Front. It is the third largest party in Sudan's 264-seat Parliament, with 51 seats.

Protesters, many of them women in veils, carried banners demanding the immediate application of Islamic laws, which were suspended when a popular uprising overthrew President Gaafar Nimeiri in April 1985.

Prime Minister Sadek el-Mahdi's government says Nimeiri's laws were unfair and incorrectly applied.

Chanting "There is no God but Allah" and "Islamic punishment for renegades," the demonstrators condemned rebel leader John Garang, whose followers are mainly Christians and animists from the south. The marchers called for new military action to end the four-year-old rebellion.

With riot police on trucks following closely, the demonstration moved to the Council of Ministers, the headquarters of the Cabinet. Leaders of the protest submitted a memorandum demanding general mobilization and the enactment of a high treason law to try supporters of the rebellion.

The memorandum also demanded immediate abrogation of an agreement signed recently with the International Monetary Fund, or IMF. The memo suggested imposition of a national economic plan based on self-reliance and cuts in "extravagant" government expenditures.

Moving measure 'bugging' Soviets

The Senate last week poured cold water on the current love-in between Washington and Moscow. In an 85-8 vote, the lawmakers passed a State Department authorization bill which, among other things, would require the Soviet Union to move its spanking new embassy.

This action is not sitting well with the Soviets or, for that matter, some at the State Department. Eager to please the Kremlin in the wake of the agreements on medium-range missiles, U.S. diplomats have resisted renegotiating the embassy agreement with Moscow even though they have the power to do so under present law.

The Soviet Union's new embassy, a lavish compound perched atop Mount Alto, the highest spot in Washington, is merely a shell that houses sophisticated eavesdropping and electronic-surveillance equipment.

U.S. security analysts believe the Soviets could tap virtually every telephone conversation, radio signal and satellite transmission in the D.C. metropolitan area. Should the U.S.S.R. formally occupy its new digs and crank up the listening devices, the threat to U.S. security would be severe.

Under terms of the embassy agreement, the Soviets may not take up residence in their new embassy until the U.S. Embassy in Moscow is ready. Thanks to unbelievably lax State Department security precautions, it won't be ready for a long, long time.

The top floors of the partially completed new American embassy in Moscow have to be reconstructed. A sweep of the building by counterintelligence agents proved it to be riddled with Soviet bugs.

The embassy agreement also stresses reciprocity, although one wouldn't know it by the respective embassy sites. The new Soviet compound occupies the choicest parcel of real estate in the District of Columbia. The new U.S. Embassy in Moscow is located in a bog adjacent to the Moscow River.

The Senate bill requires that the Soviet Embassy be relocated at a site no more than 90 feet above sea level. The Mount Alto site is 350 feet above sea level.

Soviet tempers are likely to exceed that elevation by a considerable margin. We say, "Tough."

Another View:

Defining 'insider'

In 1983, R. Foster Winans, a Wall Street Journal reporter, made an estimated $700,000 for himself and two friends by trading stocks based on his prior knowledge of what the Journal was going to print, and when, in its widely read "Heard on the Street" column. The scheme was unethical and a breach of the Journal's rules for employees. When it was exposed, Winans was fired and pretty much drummed out of the business.

But was it also a crime? A lower court found it was: Winans and his two friends were convicted in 1985 of securities fraud. But the case is now before the Supreme Court (it was argued there the other day), which is expected to overturn the convictions and redefine what counts as criminal "insider trading."

The guidelines used to be easy enough: Only corporate officers are considered to be "insiders"; if they trade their stocks based on non-public information about their company's plans, they commit a crime — effectively defrauding the other stock market players.

But nowadays, a company's outside lawyers, investment bankers and other financial consultants are privy to the same information and are capable of using it — or altering the company's plans — to gain a personal advantage over the investing public. To get at that kind of fraud, the Securities and Exchange Commission has relied on a legal theory of "misappropriation," accusing a number of these consultants recently of stealing and abusing ("misappropriating") insider information from the real insiders.

Legally that's reaching, but in its nature and its effects, the fraud committed by the consultants is indistinguishable from insider trading. If the Supreme Court throws out the misappropriation theory, Congress should write a new law that permits prosecution of these corporate consultants.

But Winans isn't one of them, and it's important that any new securities fraud law preserve the distinction between those who are participants, with information about a corporation's plans that no one else could have the same ability to obtain, and those, like Winans, who only know what any diligent outsider could have dug up. To make it a crime for someone to use or even sell such research and speculation about corporate behavior is to endanger free speech itself.

Winans and his friends were charged and convicted under the misappropriation theory, but the only privileged information they had or could have misappropriated was about the Wall Street Journal's publishing plans, not about the securities-related corporate plans of any company. Winans broke the trust of his employer, but that's hardly something the federal government should be criminally prosecuting.

The brokers and investment bankers whom the SEC has indicted recently are hoping the Supreme Court will throw out the Winans conviction and with it the entire misappropriation theory of insider trading. A much better ending would be a law that acknowledges that the outside experts a company calls in can be insiders — without stretching the idea so far that almost any exchange of ideas about corporate behavior could be subject to criminal investigation and penalties.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Tuesday, Oct. 20, the 293rd day of 1987. There are 72 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Oct. 20, 1973, in the so-called Saturday Night Massacre, Watergate special prosecutor Archibald Cox was dismissed by Solicitor General Robert H. Bork. Attorney General Elliot L. Richardson and Deputy Attorney General William B. Ruckelshaus had resigned rather than carry out President Richard M. Nixon's order to fire Cox.

On this date:

In 1740, Maria Theresa became ruler of Austria, Hungary and Bohemia upon the death of her father, Holy Roman Emperor Charles VI.

In 1803, the U.S. Senate ratified the Louisiana Purchase.

In 1903, a joint commission ruled in favor of the United States in a dispute concerning the boundary between the District of Alaska and Canada.

In 1944, during World War II, Gen. Douglas MacArthur stepped ashore at Leyte in the Philippines, 2½ years after he'd said, "I shall return." Said MacArthur: "I have returned."

In 1947, Hollywood came under scrutiny as the House Un-American Activities Committee opened hearings in Washington into alleged Communist influence and infiltration in the movie industry.

In 1967, seven men, including a Ku Klux Klan leader and a sheriff's deputy, were convicted in Meridian, Miss., on charges of violating the civil rights of three murdered civil rights workers.

In 1964, the 31st president of the United States, Herbert Hoover, died in New York at age 90.

In 1968, former first lady Jacqueline Kennedy married Greek shipping magnate Aristotle Onassis on the island of Scorpio.

FBI doesn't hurry for pinstripe crime

WASHINGTON — If someone called the FBI and told them that a bank robbery was in progress downtown, you can bet the place would be surrounded by police and federal agents within minutes. Marksmen would be silhouetted on nearby rooftops and a steely-eyed lawman with a bullhorn would be calling on the desperados to come out with their hands up.

Jack Anderson

But what if the robbery was taking place in the bank's executive suite instead of the lobby, and the crooks were wearing three-piece suits instead of ski masks — and it took 17 telephone calls over a period of eight days to get a response from the FBI? The average American would figure it was just another Woody Allen parody of life in our times, and laugh till the tears rolled.

Well, this very episode actually occurred in California not too many months ago, and nobody laughed. In fact, William Crawford, the state's no-nonsense savings and loan commissioner, can be forgiven if he cried a little. He was the guy who placed the 17 phone calls to the FBI and waited eight days for some action — while the owners of the S&L he was calling about were carting off cash by the carload.

Crawford, who is fair as well as tough, doesn't blame the FBI. As he explained to our associate Michael Binstein, the bureau's Santa Ana office had only 12 agents to deal with the deluge of white-collar crime that threatens to engulf their office and every other FBI outpost in the West.

The Los Angeles FBI office, for example, has roughly 32 agents to grapple with 450 bank fraud cases. And there are only about 40 prosecutors in all of California with the know-how to follow the devious tracks of financial swindlers. Small wonder, then, that it sometimes takes two years to prepare a fraud case — or that California has become the world capital of white-collar crime.

One reason for California's preeminence is the laws it has passed that make life difficult for prosecutors. The prosecution must compile all available evidence before bringing its case. That includes bank records, but these can be obtained only by a search warrant. And to persuade a judge to approve a warrant, investigators generally have to have an insider who is prepared to fink on the targeted bank or S&L. That's not easy.

The FBI has declined to pursue many tenuous cases in order to concentrate on those it has a chance to win. But even this strategy often comes to naught because judges are often lenient toward the few white-collar criminals brought before them.

Consider this absurd appeal by the attorney for a crooked banker not long ago in California: "It was not an intentional act of thievery or stealing, Your Honor. It was manipulation of funds, and I hope you can see the difference." The judge, with keener eyesight than most, apparently did see a difference — and sentenced the banker, involved in a scheme to steal millions of dollars, to one year in prison. Not too long after that, another thief was sentenced in California to three years — for purloining a parrot.

Misconduct by insiders in the California S&L industry over the past several years has cost shareholders, creditors and the federal deposit-insurance fund hundreds of millions of dollars, according to investigators for a House Government Operations subcommittee. In a review of 35 failed or failing financial institutions, they found insider misconduct in 27 of the cases.

The criminal misconduct ranged all the way from sticky-fingered tellers stealing small amounts of cash to executives and their buddies conniving in sophisticated schemes that netted them millions. A common thread the investigators detected was that many of the corrupt S&Ls were owned by one individual or a small group, with passive managements and directors.

They also found that insider fraud is not confined to failing financial institutions; the successful ones can just cover it up longer.

BE OUR GUEST — It's no secret that the United States has failed spectacularly to bring peace to the Middle East. Marines, money and moral strictures haven't worked. Now our sometimes-allies are about to try. A secret State Department assessment made this prediction: "European frustration with American initiatives will probably result in a renewed European initiative." Of course, most of our frustrated friends in Europe also have hostages they're worried about in Lebanon or Iran, not to mention a far greater dependence on Middle East oil.

SOVIET SAMARITAN — Greed isn't exclusive to capitalism. According to a recent report in the Soviet Union, a man who found a schoolteacher's purse containing 68 rubles (about $90) returned it to the owner — with a bill for 45 rubles. She paid the outrageous reward, but her husband later recovered the rubles from the rascal — by exactly what means the report didn't say.

MINI-EDITORIAL — The nation's capital has now joined such progressive jurisdictions as California, at least on paper. Motorists must now by law cede the right-of-way to pedestrians in crosswalks. As anyone can attest who has been in Washington more than 10 minutes (and lived to tell the tale), this was a long overdue recognition of an important civil right. But being old Washington hands, we offer this suggestion to innocent visitors walking the streets of our fair city: Don't try to push your new legal advantages for the next couple of years. There are an awful lot of slow learners behind the wheel here.

LEWIS GRIZZARD

Not telling the truth can sneak up on you

There used to be the belief in this country that "every little boy has a chance to grow up to be president."

What we really meant back then was every child had a chance to grow up to be president, but back then how were we to know little girls would someday care about anything but a degree in Home Ec and a husband with a hairy chest?

Grizzard

What else we didn't know is that presidential politics would become a steady exercise in muckraking, and when a little boy or little girl grew up and tried to be president, somebody would dig each and every wart out of their past.

We know what happened to Gary Hart and Joe Biden and their presidential bids. We found out Hart fooled around with the ladies and Biden fooled around with the truth.

Now, we come to Republican candidate Pat Robertson, the evangelist. Turns out, according to the Wall Street Journal, the Rev. Robertson gambled, drank, and caroused his way through college and when he married his wife, she was already seven months pregnant.

I gave up on the hope of this little boy ever growing up to be president a long time ago. Actually, I don't want to be president.

Regardless of that, however, I feel the compelling need to go ahead and reveal the sordid shortcomings of my past before somebody else, for whatever reasons, might start digging through it.

Who knows? I might replace Pat Sajak on "Wheel of Fortune" one day. I might even become a television evangelist myself. It's inside work with no heavy lifting, and the pay is great.

I simply want to get the past off my chest before the leeches have a chance to latch hold of me.

Let's start at the beginning:

■ When I was 6, my mother served liver one night, and I got rid of mine by feeding it to the dog under the table.

"Did you eat your liver or did you give it to the dog?" my mother asked.

I lied, and said I ate it. Worse, my dog was sick for weeks from the liver and died.

■ When I was 11, I bought some dirty pictures from a friend at school. Every guy did that I suppose, but I still have mine.

■ When I was 14, I tried to put my hand inside Kathy Sue Loudermilk's sweater.

I wasn't successful, however. There wasn't room for anything else inside of Kathy Sue's sweater.

■ When I was 17, I cheated on a history exam. I couldn't remember Millard Fillmore's first name.

■ When I was 27, I folded, mutilated and spindled a computer card.

■ When I was 35, I said to somebody, "It takes one to know one." I stole that from Alvin Bates, who used to say the same thing back in high school.

■ Last year, when I was 40, I said, "What this country needs on the Supreme Court is a jurist like Robert Bork."

There it is, and I feel a lot better now that it's all out in the open.

Meanwhile, did you hear one of the presidential candidates is gay?

Bork debate only start of extreme politics

To understand why Southern Democrat senators opposed the Supreme Court nomination of Judge Robert Bork you have to go back to 1964.

Prior to that year, Democrats had built their election power on a coalition between big city voters in the Northeast and the solid South. In 1964, despite Southerner Lyndon Johnson's landslide win, Republican Barry Goldwater carried several southern states and lost only narrowly in others. In short, he shattered the solid South.

Charley Reese

This would prompt a memorandum from Democratic election mechanic, Larry O'Brien, to LBJ. The essence of the memorandum was that the only hope Democrats had of keeping southern states in their column was to increase dramatically the black vote. What followed shortly was the Voting Rights Act, designed to do precisely that.

Since then, Southern democrats have played race politics. They count on a block vote of blacks just as in the segregation days they counted on a block vote of white Democrats.

Now Southern Democrat senators no more associate with grass roots black Americans than they do with grass roots white Americans. For that reason, they depend on the professional black organizations to give them their marching orders. These organizations said vote against Bork. The Southern Democrats, like the good special interest politicians they are, voted against Bork.

In this whole sorry episode, the most irrelevant issue was Robert Bork's qualifications. He need not have wasted his time appearing before the Senate Judiciary Committee as the outcome had already been decided. The chairman of the committee, the vile demagogue Joe Biden, not only pre-announced his opposition but provided space and staff assistance to Bork's opponents. The hearings, like most hearings in Washington, were just a charade, a part of a disinformation campaign to paint a decent, intelligent man as a monster.

Well, just as human waste can make the flowers grow, some good has come out of it. The Bork affair has stripped away all the pretense and subterfuge of Senate Democrats and renegade Republicans.

They stand naked as brazen idealogues and cowardly captives of the extremist left. To serve their partisan and ideological ends, they made a mockery of the Constitution and the American judicial system. They set a vicious precedent of politicizing judicial appointments that goes far beyond anything seen before in American history. They mooned the people in their own states and showed clearly that they represent only that horde of ideologues camped on the banks of the Potomac.

They have practiced the kind of extremist politics that threatens the democratic process itself. They have told the American people in plain terms that their votes in the 1984 presidential election mean nothing. That is an extraordinarily dangerous thing to do for when you send the message that change cannot be effected by voting, you are also sending the message that people must find another way.

Americans have not been wracked with political violence so common in other countries because we had a consensus that we would all play by the rules. Sure, we would have our partisan differences but there were limits. The Bork lynchers have exceeded those limits, broken the rules, and destroyed the consensus.

American politics will never be the same again. The Bork affair is not the end of nastiness in politics — it's the beginning. These men in the United States Senate have sown seeds which will produce a harvest no American will like.

Extremism begets extremism for it makes the moderate position untenable. It was the extremism of the abolitionists who created the extremism of the secessionists for the moderates in both the North and South were forced to choose one of the two extremes in the late 1850s.

After the Bork affair, only fools will grant their political opponents an assumption of good intentions.

IN RE: Robert H. Bork

Ronald Reagan, Orrin Hatch, Strom Thurmond vs. Joe Biden, Ted Kennedy, Robert Byrd

This verdict is up to you.

It's been called "the main event of this Congress," and "President Reagan's greatest legacy."

It's the battle over Robert Bork's nomination to the Supreme Court. And in this battle there's a secret weapon—you.

That's right. You can make the difference.

Because it's also a battle of the concerned, patriotic citizens of America versus every narrow, self-serving, liberal special-interest group that's come down the pike!

The liberals are spending millions to defeat Judge Bork. They know he will end their flagrant use of the Supreme Court as a political tool to further their own self-interests at the expense of a strong and free America.

They're running television commercials, full-page ads in all the major newspapers, and hiring high-priced lawyers and lobbyists to pressure U.S. Senators.

But the real key to the Senators' votes is people like you!

Your two Senators will pay a lot more attention to your telephone call or note than some hot-shot Washington liberal in a three-piece suit... if you act now!

So pick up the phone and call your Senators at (202) 224-3121. Or mail them the coupons below. Or better yet, do both.

The stakes don't get any greater. And remember, this verdict is up to you.

Ham operator to be honored for Saragosa project

John V. Wright Jr., meteorologist-in-charge of the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport, has nominated Odessa "ham" radio operator James "Jim" Jeffrey for a National Weather Association award for his setting up a West Texas radio network that played a major role in the Saragosa tornado disaster-relief efforts.

Curt Wilcott Reporter-Telegram

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

An Odessa amateur radio operator (ham) who set up a radio network called the "West Texas Connection" that was "critical in relaying information" on the May 22 Saragosa tornado is to receive the National Weather Association (NWA) award for his "important contribution to meteorological operations."

The "ham," James "Jim" Jeffrey, is to receive the NWA award Wednesday night at the association's 11th annual meeting in Houston, according to John V. Wright Jr., meteorologist-in-charge of the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport.

Wright nominated Jeffrey for the award by the NWA, which is made up of meteorologists, weather forecasters, weather observers and others interested in the science of weather watching.

The radio network which Jeffrey had set up prior to the Saragosa tornado was tracking the "wall cloud" before it became a tornado and struck the West Texas community of 350 people. In the tornado's wake, 30 people were killed and about 120 others were injured.

"I shudder to think what would have resulted if the (West Texas) Connection did not exist during the Saragosa disaster," Wright said.

The meteorologist called the Saragosa tornado "beyond doubt...the most catastrophic weather-related event in the United States in 1987."

"We don't know how serious it would have been without the West Texas Connection," Wright said. "Because of the West Texas Connection, we were able to get a tornado warning out 21 minutes before the tornado (struck the community). You usually don't get that lead time."

As a result of Jeffrey's network of amateur radio operations in West Texas, emergency help, medical supplies, food and clothing, and rescue and disaster-relief crews were at Saragosa on the night which the tornado struck the largely Spanish-speaking community of farm-and-ranch workers about 130 miles southwest of Midland.

Other than by radio, Saragosa was without communications because telephone lines were down.

"It (the West Texas Connection) was the only communications for the next 36 hours," Wright said. "Everybody jumped on the band wagon after they realized the severity of it."

The West Texas Connection radio network consists of more than 100 hams and 14 repeaters and remote base stations in a 50,000-square-mile area of sparsely populated West Texas.

Wright said that the tornado warnings partially were based on two rotating wall clouds reported by two Skywarn weather spotters — ham radio operators Charles E. Towry and Glenn A. Humphries, both of Balmorhea.

Balmorhea, near the foot hills of the Davis Mountains, is eight miles south of Saragosa.

In the 36 hours following the tornado, "ham radio and the West Texas Connection performed flawlessly, providing the only communications into the area, and earning the respect and admiration of law enforcement, news media and countless others around the state and the country," according to ham radio operator Joe Milam.

"All in all," Milam reported, "the tragedy that struck tiny Saragosa was met by one of ham radio's finest responses. Hams from as far as 300 miles away in any direction were able to participate in the relief operations, thanks to the ingenuous quality and reliability of the West Texas Connection."

R.G. "Bob" Edgerton, Midland County emergency management coordinator and radio officer, has noted that the privately funded radio project known as the West Texas Connection "would never have been done without the extraordinary commitment of Jim Jeffrey, WA5QMJ (radio call) of Odessa. It was his original concept and his vision of the potential that kept the project going."

Jeffrey is a 55-year-old outside salesman for Cummins Supply Co., which deals in oil field, power-line and other industrial sales.

Jeffrey's West Texas Connection was lauded by a company officer.

"That's the sort of thing that brings out Christianity in all of us," said Ray Guttenfelder, office administrator for Cummins headquarters in Fort Worth. "I think we do our best when we suffer adversity. We rally around the flag."

Ex-boss says man wanted to be fired

By JULIE HILLRICHS

A cook who claims he lost his job after spending several hours trying to help free Jessica McClure, wanted to be fired so he could qualify for unemployment compensation, a company spokesman said this morning.

Foods Fantastic owner Charlene Bunnell said Monday she told David Kelly, 40, Saturday not to come back after he failed to show up for work Friday morning.

"We gave Dave (Kelly) the opportunity to come in Saturday afternoon and discuss whether he cared about his job," Mrs. Bunnell said. "He chose to go to the press with his story and to go to the well site to assist with the clean-up instead."

Kelly told the Reporter-Telegram this morning he has received other job offers from several local food establishments, but had not decided what he planned to do.

He said Mrs. Bunnell had arranged to cater an Exxon Corp. function for 60 people during the rescue drama, and he was the company's only cook.

Kelly said Mrs. Bunnell told him, "David, I understand how you feel about what's going on down there, but what's important is that we had 60 meals to prepare for Exxon and you really put me in a bind."

Mrs. Bunnell told the Reporter-Telegram that the decision to terminate Kelly "had nothing to do with his participation in the rescue of Jessica.

"The termination decision was made prior to Friday. Unfortunately, our regular payroll period ended Thursday, and Friday was a logical termination point. David did not come in on Friday," she said.

"David contacted me on Saturday morning and was given the opportunity to come in Saturday afternoon to discuss whether or not he cared about his job here. He chose not to come in...

"He told us Monday morning that he didn't like working here, but he wasn't going to quit. He was going to wait for me to fire him so that he could qualify for unemployment compensation," Mrs. Bunnell said.

However, Kelly said he did not want to lose his job.

"I have never wanted to be fired from a job," Kelly said. "At this time and date — with the money situation as it is — it's asinine for anyone to want to lose their job.

"I do understand that they are scrambling to survive in their business, but I do not appreciate their attempt to discredit me. I feel that insults the intelligence of the community and the nation and all one has to do is look at what happened and when it happened."

Mrs. Bunnell said that over the weekend eggs were thrown at the company building.

Kelly said he didn't condone "people egging the business or doing damage. If people want to buy there they can...If they don't want to they don't have to. She (Mrs. Bunnell) made her decision based on her feelings and I respect her for that."

Kelly, employed at Foods Fantastic for 2½ months, said he recently received a $1-an-hour raise and had heard only praise from his boss previously.

Attached to a recent paycheck was a note that read: "Thanks Dave. We're excited to have you and hope all will work out for you and for us," said Kelly.

Kelly said that, at the well site last week, he passed signals to various crews and handled the air hose pumping fresh air into the cavity from Thursday through the rescue on Friday night.

While working at the site, Kelly said he learned that the McClure family were fellow church members.

"That made it a little more personal for me," he said.

Managers anticipated market crash

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Although they're responsible for almost $12.7 billion in stock market investments, the custodians of the state's four large endowment and retirement funds "sat back and watched" Monday's Wall Street selling spree.

The managers of the four funds — the Employees and Teacher Retirement Systems, Permanent School Fund and Permanent University Fund — all have reduced their portfolios' stock holdings over the past several months, taking profits where they could. They expected to take some lumps Monday and planned to reassess their positions once the market stabilizes.

"Our position is that we're not trying to dump stuff to sell," said Joe Perrone, chief investment officer for the $19.3 billion Teacher Retirement System. "Obviously, we're not buying."

About 470,000 teachers contribute to the fund, which provides pension income to about 101,000 retired educators. Perrone said the TRS sold about 5 percent of its holdings when the Dow Jones Industrial Average topped out at 2,700 points in August, taking a $1 billion profit.

"We had gotten pretty defensive," Perrone said, explaining that the TRS had reduced its equity holdings to about 39 percent of the total portfolio, about $7.5 billion. "The worst thing you can do is just lose your head and say, 'Sell, sell.'"

"We wouldn't even know what we were selling it for."

Nancy Goerdel, director of the investment division of the Employees Retirement System, said that that $4.2 billion pension fund had taken a similar position. "We're watching it," she said of Monday's crash.

The ERS, with about 106,000 contributing members and about 24,000 covered pensioneers, also took some profits during the summer, with equities now accounting for 20 percent — about $840 million — of its portfolio. "We're not quick to move in or move out at any time," Goerdel said.

"There's a lot of speculation both ways, so it's too early to panic."

Jim Hooks, investment officer for the $7.5 billion Permanent School Fund, said he's been taking profits for the last year and a half. "We've been anticipating this and we sold out in anticipation," Hooks said.

"While you can't be happy about (Monday's drop) because the stocks you do own are going down, we're in a position to pick up some good prices with our cash," he said. The PSF, whose investment income supports the Foundation School Program to the tune of about $185 per student, has reduced its equity holdings to about 40 percent — about $3 billion — of its total investment.

Michael Patrick, executive vice chancellor for asset management at the University of Texas System, refused to comment on how Monday's massive sellout would effect the $3.3 billion Permanent University Fund or its $1.3 billion stock market investment. But Shannon Ratliff, chairman of the UT Regents Lands and Investments Committee, said he believed PUF investors have been working "to at least soften the blow."

Ratliff said the PUF has been taking profits from the market for the last 24 months. "Obviously you can't get out of everything," he said.

The state Treasury does not invest in the stock market, spokesman Bill Cryer said.

Chamber's seminar designed to try and keep students in school

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

A Step-Up-To-Success seminar designed to inspire high-school freshmen to stay in school and prepare for careers will be held Saturday, Nov. 7, in the Midland College Student Center.

"This is our way of helping combat the drop-out problem," Elvia Hernandez, executive director of the Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce Inc., said Monday in a Step-Up-To-Success planning session at Midland College.

Keynote speaker for the 8 a.m.-to-3:30 p.m. seminar will be Dr. Pat Jaramillo, director of counselor-education at The University of Texas of the Permian Basin.

Ms. Hernandez expects up to 250 students from Midland and Lee freshman high schools, which have a combined enrollment of about 1,500, to attend the seminar, which is being sponsored by the Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce. The seminar is geared to attract Hispanic and other minority students.

Midland public school administrators "just gave us their blessings" in conducting the seminar, Ms. Hernandez said.

Two days prior to the seminar, on Thursday, Nov. 5, the Hispanic chamber will sponsor an appreciation reception for Hispanic teachers, administrators and counselors in the Midland College Student Center. The reception will be held from 3 p.m. to 7 p.m.

The Nov. 7 seminar will include five panel discussions by successful career people, including Hispanics, on careers in such fields as medicine and health, business and service, education, high-technology and engineering, and the law.

Dr. John W. Martinez, cluster and bilingual coordinator for the Midland Independent School District, said the school drop-out rate among Hispanic students can be attributed to the students' lack of positive role models, inability to deal with all-English curriculum when many of the Hispanics are limited in English and the compounding problems of poverty.

"We would like to make Midland College a reality for them," Martinez said. "They can enroll here."

Hispanic chamber's program is to help young Hispanics break the cycle of underachieving and to experience that "You can be anything you want to be."
— Elvia Hernandez

For many Hispanic students, said Midland petroleum geologist Eduardo Gonzales, education is "a very abstract thing — at least it was." Gonzales, a chamber board member, said that the long-term educational needs of Hispanic students need to be addressed more fully.

Ruben Vargas, Midland High School marketing and distributive education coordinator, noted that as a high school student he would "have dropped out of school" had it not been for a school vocational program, which inspired him to stay in school. "Education was not as important as work was," Vargas said.

Nick Sanchez, director of the Boys Club of Midland and chairman of the Hispanic chamber's education committee, noted that he didn't have any Hispanic teachers in his years in community public education.

"I didn't have any role models," said Sanchez, who nevertheless stayed in school. "The coaches made it a point that you did good in school." In addition, Sanchez said, "It came down to my parents," who encouraged him to school in school.

And a primary function of the Step-Up-To-Success seminar is to provide role models for the students who might be tempted to drop out of school.

"The first year in high school is very critical" for drop-out prone students, Ms. Hernandez said. The Hispanic chamber's program is to help young Hispanics break the cycle of underachieving and to experience that "You can be anything you want to be."

Midland's unemployment rate down slightly

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Assistant Business/Oil Editor

A minor reduction in the local unemployment rate during September failed to reflect a slight deterioration of the overall employment picture, according to Texas Employment Commission figures released this morning.

Midland's jobless rate was down 0.1 percent from August to stand at 8.2 percent, but total employment among city residents fell by 700. A reduction of 800 workers in the available labor pool compensated for the employment decline, to nudge the jobless rate down fractionally.

The situation was much the same in Odessa, where a 400-worker decline in total employment was offset by 600 fewer workers available in the labor force, which combined to push the unemployment rate down from 9.7 percent in August to 9.5 percent in September, reported Joe Hatcher, office manager for the TEC in Midland.

"We definitely saw an exodus of individuals from the labor pool, but whether they just quit looking for work or went back to school is debatable," Hatcher said.

He added that his agency welcomes any improvement in jobless conditions, but prefers to see increases in total employment rather than declines in the percentages.

Midland's total employment figure of 47,900 is up 2,200 from last September, while the labor pool count is an identical 52,200 available workers. Those factors combined to put this year's rate at roughly two-thirds of the year-ago level, which was 12.5 percent.

Odessa has seen similar improvement. Employment is up 2,400 to 51,600, while the labor pool has shrunk by 2,800 workers to 57,000. Combined, these indicators have virtually cut in half the number of unemployed workers from 10,600 in September of 1986, to 5,400 last month.

A majority of surrounding rural counties in the Permian Basin saw minor declines in their unemployment rates like Midland and Odessa, TEC figures indicate.

Four of the seven outlying counties had lower rates in September, led by the decline in Pecos County, which was down 0.6 percent to 10.6 percent. Other declines were: Winkler, down 0.4 percent to 7.8 percent; Andrews, down 0.2 percent to 6.2 — the lowest rate in the region; and Howard, down 0.1 percent to 8.6 percent.

Ward County registered no change in its jobless rate of 8.4 percent.

Minor increases were seen in Reeves County, up 0.6 percent to 12.8 percent and Dawson County, up 0.7 percent to 10.6 percent.

Midland improved its standing in the statewide rankings although both the top and bottom spots remained unchanged from August. The Bryan-College Station metropolitan area continued its rate of 5.6 percent, the state's lowest and McAllen's 17.7 percent rate is still the highest of Texas' 22 metro areas.

Midland moved to No. 11 in the rankings from 15th, while Odessa held at No. 18.

Police seek men who attempted to kidnap Odessa teen

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — Police today continued to seek two men who allegedly attempted to kidnap a 13-year-old Crockett Junior High School student from the school's parking lot late Monday evening.

Police Spokesman Cpl. John McAhon said the girl was standing on the southeast corner of the Crockett Junior High parking lot at about 6:45 p.m. waiting for a ride when two men pulled up in an older model car, grabbed her and tried to force her into the vehicle.

The 13-year-old girl fought the men and hollered as the men attempted to drag her into the vehicle, McAhon said.

The two men apparently were scared off when someone came around the corner of a building.

According to investigating officers, the girl described the two men as both being about 6-feet, 1-inches tall and of medium build.

The Crockett student told officers she couldn't tell if the men were Hispanic or Anglo, that they were both wearing blue or black ski masks, dark blue jackets and faded blue jeans.

McAhon said the girl described the vehicle driven by the men as an older model car with primer paint on it.

Circus buff's house overflows with memorabilia

By LELA DAVIS

BEAUMONT (AP) — Harry Kingston is Beaumont's ultimate circus buff. He's so well known under the big tops that if the elephants could talk, they would say "Hello, Harry."

Everybody else does, from animal trainer to circus owner.

More than a frequent circus visitor and friend, Kingston's collection of circus memorabilia is so vast, it almost fills a two-story house.

A great deal of it is on display at the Heritage Museum in the Harvest Club during this week's South Texas State Fair.

When Circus Vargas opened a recent three-day run in the Beaumont Civic Center, Kingston, chief photographer at KBMT-TV, was partly responsible for its arrival.

He's the Beaumont circus friend who helped the marketing director and the 24-hour man guide the circus vehicles into downtown Beaumont. They call it "arrowing."

Every year at circus time, the 24-hour man, so named because he arrives 24 hours ahead of the circus to set up the last-minute logistics, takes Kingston with him to place the directional arrows from the highway into town.

"Each circus has its own kind of arrows and arrowing," Kingston said. "For Vargas, if you turn the arrows up, the driver should go straight ahead. If they're turned down, slow down. And when you signal a turn, the arrow is pointed whichever way the driver is supposed to go."

Kingston said that just as one circus won't cover another's poster, neither will a circus cover another's arrows.

"It's an unwritten law, but that doesn't mean they aren't competitive," he said. "They pull all kinds of tricks including booking ahead of another circus run in a city or purposely booking into a neighboring city so close that they kill the attendance for the other circus."

Although Kingston and his wife go to every circus performance they can make and their house is a veritable circus museum, Kingston says the greatest part of the circus to him is the logistics. "You have to keep up," he said of the road work, "or you blow the date."

He paused, and with great drama, added: "Circus is a constant war. You've got to win the war every day. You fight the wind, the rain, the cold and the heat."

This circus enthusiast has definite views about the art.

"If it's not under a tent, it's not a circus," he says. "When Ringling Bros. (who folded their tents years ago and moved performances inside) says it's the greatest show on earth — that's what it is. A show. It's just a great big variety show. Anybody can put a circus in a building with air conditioning and padded seats. But you don't hear the squeaking sound of the pulleys. Nothing is the same."

As far as Kingston is concerned, there are only three tented circuses. "They've divided up the country. The Clyde Beatty-Cole Bros. Circus plays the East Coast and in (toward the center of the country). Vargas plays the West Coast and in, and Carson & Barnes takes the middle," he said.

That's only as a general rule, of course. Recently, Circus Vargas went to Washington D.C., for the first time in many years. "Carson & Barnes is the only five-ring circus in America," Kingston said. "Also, they have more elephants than any of the others — 25 to Ringling's 18."

Kingston says he never had any desire to "run away with the circus." Before he married five years ago, he used to spend a week out of the year traveling with the Carson & Barnes Circus, helping with the logistics.

He says his wife Dianne, a teacher at Trinity Church Day School, shares the circus enthusiasm. "When Dianne and I were dating, we went to eight circuses in one year." he said.

"Our two-story house is full from top to bottom with posters, elephant tubs (the tubs they stand on, not the kind they bathe in), lion-taming chairs, costumes, stakes, pieces of tent...

"We have posters up to 24-sheet billboard size," he said. He also has a 1903 original Barnum & Bailey poster which he calls very rare.

"But I cherish my Cole Bros. posters the most. And I have a circus model from 1937 when Clyde Beatty was with the Cole Bros."

He says Beatty, who died in 1965, was just the greatest wild animal trainer of all time. "Nobody can equal him."

Kingston is extremely proud of Beatty's autograph the trainer gave him in 1961 when Kingston was a kid. He also values one from the high-wire daredevil Carl Wallenda and the great clown Emmett Kelly.

Kingston belongs to three circus organizations — the Circus Fans of America, the Circus Historical Society and the Circus Model Builders. He attends the national conventions of all three, but his greatest desire is to own an original circus calliope.

"And I will, someday," he said.

WEST TEXAS IN BRIEF

MISD board resolution opposes Proposition 1

From Staff Reports

The Midland school board has adopted a resolution opposing Proposition No. 1 on the Nov. 3 ballot.

At their most recent meeting, trustees took the position opposing the proposal that says, "The State Board of Education shall be composed of members who are appointed from districts instead of elected, with equal representation from throughout the State of Texas."

Members instead advocate an elected state school board.

In 1984, the Texas Legislature passed House Bill 72, which dissolved the 27-member elected State Board of Education and created a 15-member appointed State Board. That appointed board was to revert to an elected Board on Jan. 1, 1989.

Proposition 1 would perpetuate the appointed board indefinitely.

In opposing Proposition 1, the Midland School Board joined the Permian Basin School Board Association and the Texas Association of School Boards along with many other school boards across Texas.

Retired land man attends Texas A&M with his children

Ogden

"All of my children are college graduates or in college — now it's my turn. I just had to finish my degree before all my kids did. It's a matter of principle...Once an Aggie, always an Aggie. Is there any other place to go?"
— Emil Ogden

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — A retired oilman turned Texas Aggie philosophy major is sharing his college experience with his children, after waiting until they had gotten their chance at an education.

"All of my children are college graduates or in college — now it's my turn," said Emil Ogden, 60, a senior in philosophy. "I just had to finish my degree before all my kids did. It's a matter of principle."

Four younger Ogdens are currently enrolled at Texas A&M University. There's also Dr. Paul Ogden of Scott & White Hospital in Temple, who is an associate professor of internal medicine at Texas A&M.

Freshman daughter Laura is a general studies major. Joe is a junior studying electrical engineering. Also, there's daughter-in-law Beverly, a sophomore education major, and Stephen, who is working on his master's degree in business.

Another son, Michael, is a Texas A&M graduate and daughter Kathy is a graduate of Stephen F. Austin State University.

Ogden attended Texas A&M before. After serving in World War II and playing minor league baseball with the Odessa Oilers in the Longhorn League, he used his GI Bill benefits to study physical education at Texas A&M in 1949. But a growing oil business soon took precedence over his formal education.

Ogden, a petroleum land man in 1953, contracted oil and gas leases from landowners door to door.

He merged that company with Chaparral Minerals, which consisted of several old stripper wells in McCamey in 1973, just before the OPEC oil embargo. The Bryan Woodbine Field was discovered in 1982 and Chaparral Minerals helped develop it.

He sold his assets in 1985 and decided to get his degree.

"Once an Aggie, always an Aggie. Is there any other place to go?" he asked.

But it was not easy starting over, he said.

"At first, studying was traumatic and like force-feeding. The profs and students were a little shocked to see me there, but my mind is much sharper now than when I started two years ago."

He boasts about his 3.87 grade point average and how the students chide him because he wrecks the class curve on exams by making an A.

Now that Ogden is sharing the rigors of student life with his own children, he says he finds that being both parent and student is a two-edged sword.

"My kids put pressure on me not to make any C's. Better not bring those home," he said, adding that he plans to graduate in December.

Sessions will take oath of office Nov. 2

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — FBI Director-designate William S. Sessions said his swearing-in ceremony has rescheduled for Nov. 2 after two earlier ceremonies were canceled owing to the Texas federal judge's problems with a bleeding ulcer.

Sessions said Monday that retired Supreme Court Chief Justice Warren Burger will administer the oath of office to him in the FBI Building in Washington.

The 57-year-old chief judge of the Western District of Texas twice missed having oath of office ceremonies because of the flareup of the ulcer, located on the duodenum. He lost more than two pints of blood and twice was hospitalized, once in Washington as he arrived for his first swearing-in ceremony and once in San Antonio.

After his release from San Antonio's Methodist Hospital a little more than a week ago, Sessions took a brief vacation to an undisclosed location and came back to the courthouse office Friday.

For the next two weeks, Sessions said he will continue to work daily at the federal courthouse in San Antonio. "I'll be here, opening mail and reading it, signing orders and generally carrying on the business of the court," he said.

But Sessions, a federal judge since 1974 and the Western District of Texas' chief judge since 1979, still is not working a full day. "I leave at 2 p.m. I'm just trying to do what the doctor ordered, and that is take it easy," he said, noting that he feels fine now.

"But I do plan to keep a cut-back schedule before I go to Washington," the judge said.

Sessions won unanimous confirmation from the Senate last month after he was nominated.

Long hair ban prompts student to quit school

HOUSTON (AP) — Parents are concerned about a school district's ban on long hair that led to the expulsion of a 7-year-old and prompted a high school student to withdraw from classes.

Johnny Vigh withdrew from Dulles High School last month after Fort Bend Independent School District officials told him he would be expelled if he didn't cut his shoulder-length hair.

"My hair is not unruly or scuzzy or anything," Vigh said. "I take time in styling it. A lot of people at school came up to me and said they liked my hair. People enjoyed it. I don't see how they could say it's disruptive."

Seven-year-old Bryce Cooke, whose hair falls a few inches below his collar, was expelled last week from an elementary school for violating the hair length rule.

The American Civil Liberties Union in Houston has fielded several calls from district students and their parents who want to know whether they have any legal recourse against suspensions based on hair length.

"I think this issue is coming up again because of political symbolism," said ACLU attorney Bruce Griffiths. "A generation of parents look at long hair as a symbol of fire or whatever, and the school administration sees it as a symbol of going back to rebellious times."

Griffiths said the ACLU would consider arguing a hair length case on the issue of sex discrimination if it found the right case.

Vigh, a drummer in a heavy metal band that plays professionally, says he wants to make music his career and wouldn't be accepted in a band if his hair were any shorter.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR VOLUNTEERS

Just this past week we found out how much love and sensitivity Midland has — lots! Helping the disadvantaged, the helpless, is what often stimulates a lot of us to give more of ourselves. Being needed and actually doing something about it is the best feeling in the world.

This week's volunteer opportunities will center around the physically and mentally handicapped. Volunteer alone or bring along some friends. There are plenty of opportunities to have fun and enjoy yourself! There are so many ways that we can help those that are less fortunate:

- Teach sewing or arts and crafts.
- Help a child or adult to read.
- Assist with basic everyday skills — balancing a checkbook, paying bills, consumer education, personal hygiene.
- Take someone grocery shopping.
- Plan an outing for individuals or groups.
- Read for the blind.
- Teach someone to play cards, golf or swim.
- Be a special friend and visit regularly.
- Help indirectly by serving on a board of directors.

Volunteers give Midland a lift. Volunteers make a difference!

Distillers use different formulas

Although the law requires that bourbon whiskey be made of at least 51 percent corn, most high-quality distillers use about 75 percent corn in their blend, along with rye and barley.

Others use wheat instead of rye. Each distiller has his own secret grain formula.

Prison board hires two firms to build first private prisons

By JIM WARREN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Texas prison board awarded preliminary contracts Monday to two firms to build and operate the state's first private penitentiaries.

Corrections Corporation of America, the pioneer in the private prison industry, has four sites under consideration. A partnership, Becon-Wackenhut, also has potential sites in four counties.

The board voted to tenatively give Becon-Wackenhut and CCA each two, 500-bed units. If the Texas Department of Corrections staff cannot reach a final agreement with one of the firms, a partnership between Pricor Inc. and Century Development Corporation will be the alternate.

The units would be minimum-security, pre-parole centers for inmates close to their release date. Most areas of the state under consideration want a prison to create jobs. Six companies were finalists, and the board Monday cut it down to two.

Becon-Wackenhut currently runs three correctional facilities with more than 1,000 beds and recently received a contract from California. CCA, the nation's largest private prison company, has nine facilities in five states and runs jails, prisons and detention centers for federal, state and local governments.

Board Chairman Al Hughes said TDC, which originally planned to build one 2,250-bed unit during this two-year large udget cycle, now will build two prisons. Also, the board is working on the site selection for four, 1,000-inmate units. With the 2,000 private beds included, TDC could have 11,000 new beds within several years to help ease the prison overcrowding problem.

"If we build all these units by 1991, we'll be OK," Hughes said, noting that court orders require the system to "de-populate" some units by 1989 and that the system is legally bound to keep its inmate population below 95-percent capacity.

So even with the new beds on line by 1991, "We'll have to start (building) again," Hughes said.

Several of the board members are traveling to potential sites next Tuesday and Wednesday to help them decide where to build the four, 1,000-inmate state-run prisons.

The board will talk about private prisons again at its Nov. 9 meeting. In the meantime, CCA and Becon-Wackenhut will negotiate with the TDC staff over costs, sites and other details.

Under a new law the Legislature passed this year, TDC can contract with private companies to build and operate state prisons if the firms can meet high standards and do the work for 10-percent less than the state. Figures from TDC and the Legislature Budget Board show the state currently houses inmates at an average cost of $41.67 per day. To undercut the state by 10 percent, a private firm must house those inmates for $37.50 per day.

...TDC can contract with private companies to build and operate state prisons if the firms can meet high standards and do the work for 10-percent less than the state.

Take quiz to see what you know about Texas

By LEON HALE
Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — How about another Quiz On Texas? Some of this stuff is trivial and if you don't know the answers it doesn't necessarily mean you're poorly informed about our state. But it's fun to fool with. Don't peek at the answers down below until you've finished the test. Here we go:

1. Let's say you got on a raft and floated down the Rio Grande from El Paso. Which of the following numbers comes closest to the mileage you will have traveled by the time you reach the mouth of the river below Brownsville? A. 750 miles. B. 1,300 miles. C. 560 miles.

2. Who was Susanna Dickinson and why does her name appear in so many books about early times in Texas?

3. In the national mind, Texas seems most often a bald prairie or a desert, populated by jackrabbits and rattlesnakes. Yet it's possible to visit an area of this state where 1,000 flowering plants grow. Also 85 kinds of trees, 60 species of wild shrubs, and 26 kinds of wild ferns. Where might that area be?

4. We all know how Houston got its name. But who was Harris County named for?

5. If you've read the most popular Texas books published in the last 30 years, you may recognize where this passage comes from: "Usually, fall is the good time to go to the Brazos, and when you can choose, October is the best month — if, for that matter, you choose to go there at all, and most people don't."

6. Here's an easy one. Many Texas towns share their names with towns in other states. Pasadena, Tex. and Pasadena, Calif., for example. Here's a list of Texas towns. Glendale. Norman. Barstow. Bellville. Cameron. Midland. Lincoln. La Grange. What states have towns of the same names?

7. Other day I heard a Texan say that a certain city in our state is the only one in the nation that has an entire Indian reservation inside its corporate limits. Is that true?

8. Many Texas counties have Spanish names. See how many of the following county names you can translate. Val Verde. Concho. Bandera. El Paso. Bosque. Frio. Brazos. Lavaca. Colorado. Llano. Palo Pinto. Real. Refugio.

Now for the answers.

1. The Texas Almanac says the Rio Grande flows more than 1,250 miles from El Paso to Brownsville, so B is the right answer.

2. Susanna Dickinson, with her little daughter, was inside the walls during the Battle of the Alamo. Her husband was killed in the fighting. C. Richard King wrote a book called "Susanna Dickinson, Messenger of the Alamo." According to King, Mrs. Dickinson delivered to Sam Houston the news that the Alamo had fallen.

3. The Big Thicket. I got that question out of Howard Peacock's "The Big Thicket of Texas, America's Ecological Wonder". People are forever asking where the Big Thicket is, and what it means. Peacock's book (published by Little, Brown) is the best single source of answers to Big Thicket questions that I've found.

4. John Richardson Harris, a New York Yankee who came down here in 1824 and built a store and a warehouse on Buffalo Bayou. He also went in the shipping business, but hadn't been here but about five years when he died of yellow fever on a trip to New Orleans.

5. That's the opening sentence of John Graves' "Goodbye To A River," which gets a multitude of votes as the best Texas book ever written.

6. Glendale in California, and seven other states also have Glendales. Norman in Oklahoma. Barstow in California. Bellville in Illinois, and in five other states. Cameron in Louisiana. Midland in Michigan. Lincoln in Nebraska. La Grange in Illinois, and also in 10 other states. A popular town name.

7. It's true. The Tigua Indian Reservation is now in the city limits of El Paso.

8. Val Verde means green valley. Concho, shell. Bandera, flag. El Paso, the pass. Bosque, brushland. Frio, cold. Brazos, arms. Lavaca, the cow. Colorado can mean ruddy or red or colored. Llano means level, as in level ground, a plain. Palo Pinto, I suppose, can mean painted stick, or spotted wood. Real, royal. Refugio, refuge.

If you got four out of eight, you pass. If you got six, you're wonderful. If you caught me in a mistake, don't tell anybody.

Thatcher backs U.S. attack on oil platforms

DALLAS (AP) — British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, who winds up her visit to Texas today, says President Reagan was "absolutely right" in calling for an attack on two Iranian drilling platforms in the Persian Gulf.

Thatcher, who was to leave Dallas for London this morning, said she supported Monday's retaliatory attack.

"(The attack) was a measured response," the prime minister said. "It was directed at targets which were monitoring U.S. and other shipping and which in fact were concerned at directing attacks at that shipping.

"We are fully in support of President Reagan," Mrs. Thatcher said.

Mrs. Thatcher would not say whether she had been contacted by the United States prior to the attack, but said she was in frequent contact with U.S. officials concerning the situation in the gulf.

Gunfire from four U.S. naval destroyers, using about 1,000 five-inch shells, demolished the platforms. Government officials said the attack was in retaliation for a Iranian attack Friday on a U.S. flagged Kuwaiti ship.

The prime minister, who had been visiting her son, Mark, and his wife, Diane, also offered get-well wishes to Nancy Reagan, recovering from a mastectomy Saturday.

"We share everyone's joy at Nancy Reagan's rapid recovery," Mrs. Thatcher said. "She has the heart of a lion and we're so pleased that she will soon be well."

A Dallas party planner who catered two meals at the home of Mark and Diane Thatcher said she was nervous about meeting the prime minister.

"She was just like anyone"s mother. It was hard to believe that she is a world leader," Glenda Chesshir told the Denison Herald.

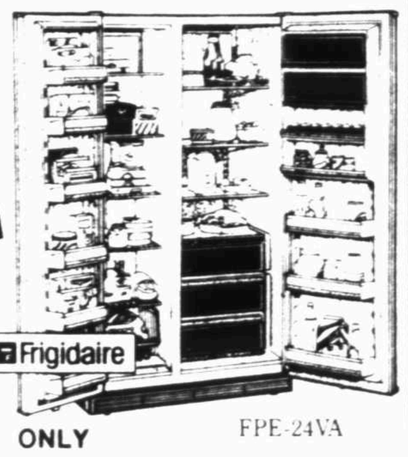

Ms. Chesshir said she was interviewed twice before winning the job.

"My chef and I were checked out by both the British police and our own U.S. Secret Service before I got the final OK," she said.

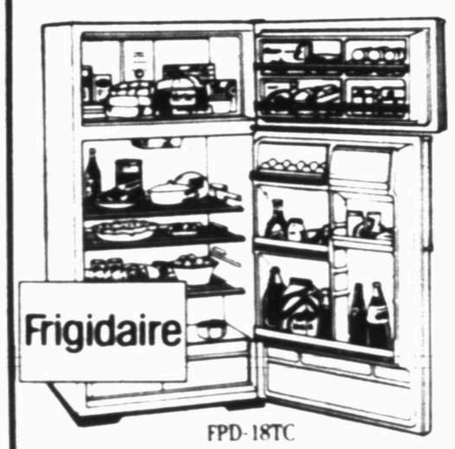

"After lunch, when they went for a ride around Dallas, the prime minister stuck her head in the kitchen and waved, saying she would see me for dinner," Miss Chesshir said.

It is tempting first to tackle the suit that will produce the most tricks. More often than not that is the right approach. Once in a while, however, you have to determine how many tricks you need from your long suit before you know how to handle it. This example is most instructive.

Your opening two-club bid followed by the two no trump rebid described a balanced hand of 23-24 points. After checking fruitlessly for a 4-4 heart fit, North made the value raise.

There are seven fast tricks outside the diamond suit. How do you propose to play the diamonds? Strangely enough, the answer lies in your hearts!

If the heart finesse is on, you need only four diamond tricks to fulfill your slam, so you can afford a safety play. If the heart finesse is doomed to fail, you need five diamond tricks, and the only way to get those is to hope to drop a singleton or doubleton queen.

Since you want to be in dummy for the heart finesse, win the ace of spades and, to preserve dummy's entries, carefully run the queen of hearts. When that wins, you need only four tricks from the diamond suit. So you abandon hearts and lead a low diamond from the table. Simply cover any diamond that East produces. If West wins, it means the suit is breaking no worse than 3-1 and you have four sure diamond tricks.

What if East inserts the nine and, when you win the king, West shows out? Continue with a diamond to the jack and East's queen. Win any return, cross to the king of clubs and take the marked finesse for the diamond ten. And if East shows out on the first lead of the suit, win and lead toward the jack. Again, you are guaranteed four tricks. Try it!

Dental group honors greatest smiles

Minelli Selleck Shepherd

CHICAGO (AP) — Lisa Minnelli, Tom Selleck and Cybill Shepherd have America's greatest smiles, says the American Dental Hygienists' Association.

The Chicago-based organization announced the honors Monday as part of this week's National Dental Hygiene Week.

The celebrities were selected on the basis of a healthy smile, not necessarily a glamorous one, the association said, adding that good oral hygiene and healthy teeth are essential to a great smile.

Ms. Minnelli is best known for her concert and film performances. Selleck is the star of the "Magnum, P.I." television series and Ms. Shepherd stars in the television series "Moonlighting."

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Actress Dianne Wiest is using her Oscar-winning role in "Hannah and Her Sisters" as the framework of an advertisement seeking volunteers for a diabetes study.

The ad campaign for the study sponsored by the National Institutes of Health was launched Monday at Vanderbilt University Medical Center in Nashville.

About 900 volunteers are in the study, but researchers need 500 more people with diabetes, said Dr. Rodney A. Lorenze, a Vanderbilt researcher.

In the ads, Ms. Wiest, says, "It was great winning an Oscar for my role as a sister, but what's really great is that my sister-in-law is a volunteer in...a national research study to help prevent diabetes' life threatening complications."

The 10-year study compares the effects of two forms of insulin treatment on preventing or slowing complications from diabetes.

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A copyright suit claiming Stevie Wonder stole his Academy Award-winning song "I Just Called To Say I Love You" from a Los Angeles songwriter has been revived by a federal appeals court.

The 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals said Monday that Lloyd Chiate could go to trial with his claim against Wonder.

Wonder, whose real name is Stevland Morris, won an Academy Award in 1985 for best original song from a motion picture.

SAN SADURNI D'ANOIA, Spain (AP) — King Juan Carlos and Queen Sofia raised their glasses in this tiny wine-making town to toast a French misfortune that gave birth to a Spanish success story.

The monarchs on Monday commemorated the appearance 100 years ago in northeastern Spain of the phylloxera, an insect that munched its way south through the vineyards of France to feast on grapevines in Catalonia.

The plague destroyed nearly all the vines in Catalonia and forced vintners to plant new varieties of grapes that resulted in modern-day cava, a white sparkling wine made following the same process used to produce champagne.

Now cava, the Catalan word for wine cellar, competes with French bubbly. Last year ,cava makers sold 116 million bottles worldwide, said the Cava Regulatory Commission.

CORTEZ, Colo. (AP) — Rep. Ben Nighthorse Campbell was listening to testimony about stolen Indian artifacts when he recalled that he has a knife his great-grandfather carried into the battle of Little Bighorn.

A witness had just told Rep. Sam Gejdenson, D-Conn., chairman of the Interior subcommittee on general oversight and investigation, that many artifacts are illegally possessed by private citizens.

"You've got me wondering about this knife," Campbell, D-Colo., said at Monday's hearing here. "Maybe I don't have a knife."

After a U.S. attorney said it was not against the law until 1979 to carry off artifacts, Campbell said, "Well, in that case, I guess I do have a knife after all."

Campbell said his Northern Cheyenne great-grandfather Blackhorse was one of the thousands of Indians who overwhelmed Lt. Col. George Armstrong Custer's cavalry in 1876.

"I have every reason to believe the knife was in the battle," Campbell said, "and it sure wasn't used to peel potatoes."

LOMA LINDA, Calif. (AP) — Baby Paul, who received a transplanted human heart hours after he was delivered by Caesarean section four days ago, was progressing and doing as expected Monday, a hospital spokeswoman said.

"We know that he's doing all right at this point," said Anita Rockwell, a Loma Linda University Medical Center spokeswoman. Baby Paul was listed in critical but stable condition.

The infant, diagnosed before birth as having a fatally defective heart, was delivered to Alice and Gordon Holc of Canada on Friday and underwent transplant surgery about three hours later.

The Holcs spent much of the weekend with their newborn, who remained on a respirator, Ms. Rockwell said.

"It is just really nice to have him alive and doing well," Mrs. Holc told the Vancouver Sun in their hometown of Vancouver, British Columbia.

"He's hooked up to so many lines, he's got a lot of attachments, a lot of equipment on him now," Holc told the newspaper.

du Pre

LONDON (AP) — Jacqueline du Pre, a cellist whose brilliant international career was cut short by multiple sclerosis, died Monday. She was 42.

At 15, Miss du Pre won the Gold Medal of the Guildhall School of Music and the Queen's Prize for British instrumentalists under age 30. She made her concert debut at London's Wigmore Hall the following year and her North American debut in 1965 at New York's Carnegie Hall.

Miss du Pre turned to teaching after she became disabled in 1972. She was awarded the Order of the British Empire in 1976 and Britain's "Musician of the Year" award in 1980.

Karl Lagerfeld designed this Fendy fur (left) of tiny pieces of pelt worked into a geological pattern. A glenchecked two-piece tailored suit (center) with over-knee skirt and long-lined coat was shown by Lagerfeld. The Chanel house presented this classic dog-toothed jacket over a short black velvet tight-fitting skirt with large belt (right).

Chanel, Ungaro show season's couture

By BERNADINE MORRIS
New York Times News Service

PARIS — In different ways, two major designers electrified their audiences as the fall and winter couture openings reached the halfway mark. Emanuel Ungaro put on a display of elegance that blurred the line of demarcation between masculine and feminine clothes, perhaps forever. Meanwhile, Karl Lagerfeld has updated the venerable house of Chanel so successfully in the last five years that with this year's collection he has virtually banished its image of quiet, staid and predictable clothes.

The basic sources of inspiration for Ungaro are military uniforms and the elaborate garb of the 18th-century dandy. But these styles are so transmuted by ruffles and combinations of luxurious fabrics that they become the epitome of ultrafeminine dress. Ruffles decorate the shoulders, hips and, especially, the hemline, where they audaciously frame the legs. The collection is a tour de force.

For Lagerfeld, the 17th century is the source for several evening dress designs. The more exotic pieces in the collection can be traced more specifically to the costumes for "Atys," an opera by Jean Baptiste Lully, which made its debut in 1676 at the court of Louis XIV and was revived at the Opera Comique last winter and at Versailles this past spring. ("Atys" is the story of a shepherd and his love for a wood nymph. More germane to the fashion scene is that the opera was staged with all the elegance and pageantry of the Baroque.)

Even the Chanel suits have been transformed by Lagerfeld's sure hand. Today, they hug the body; sometimes the waist is indented. The heavy braided edges have vanished along with the masses of gold chains that once were indispensable. Hemlines are as short as they are anywhere, and narrow, sleeveless dresses with high waistlines have a special cachet.

Taken together, these designs remind us that Lagerfeld was the first to bring irreverence to contemporary couture fashion. The debut of Christian Lacroix has overshadowed this fact.

Philippe Venet provided strong support to these stellar players. His canvas is narrower than theirs, but no designer in the world has a better understanding of how coats should fit.

In addition to rounded capes with gently curving borders, he shows soft coats gathered into arched yokes much like smocks, strict double-breasted, fitted styles with fullness at the back, and long-torso styles with gathers below the hips. Enhancing these diverse shapes are luxury fabrics such as mohair and cashmere in colors with a special glow, including geranium red and citron yellow.

Waist-length jackets in these colors call attention to another Venet specialty, the fancy skirt. Some are made of black ribbons and white ribbons worked in a basket weave effect, while others are dotted with paillettes or appliqued with contrasting ribbons and bows.

By contrast, Ungaro, who favors brilliant colors and unexpected mixtures of fabrics, surprised his audience by focusing on black for the first part of his show. But what black! Velvet ruffles rippled around the hips and shoulders of nipped-waist wool suits. Later, velvet puffed sleeves embellished slender black dresses, velvet skirts accompanied coats with ruffled velvet collars and slender velvet trousers combined with metallic blouses. A sexy black velvet dress with a sweetheart neckline had a triangular cutout under the bust.

DEAR ABBY

Hospital lab's error causes tragic surprise

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: My wife, Kathy, and I are both Jewish, so when she became pregnant in 1985, I took a simple blood test to determine if I was a carrier of Tay-Sachs — a hideous disease that predominantly strikes Jewish children. About one out of 30 Jewish adults is a Tay-Sachs carrier. If a carrier marries another carrier, there is a one out of four chance that their baby will develop Tay-Sachs.

I was tested at a local hospital and was told I was not a carrier, so since both parents must be carriers in order to produce a Tay-Sachs child, there was no reason for Kathy to be tested.

In June 1986, Kathy had a beautiful baby. We named her Abigail. She appeared to be a normal, happy baby, but when she didn't sit up or progress the way other babies her age did, we became concerned and consulted a specialist. His diagnosis: Tay-Sachs. We were devastated! Abby, our daughter will never crawl, walk or speak. Instead, she will go blind, become paralyzed, have seizures and die before she is 3, 4 or 5 years old.

How could this have happened when I was told I was not a carrier? Our specialist called the hospital and discovered that the lab technician had made a simple mathematical error! We later learned that the hospital's policy was to only "spot-check" their results. Meanwhile, we looked into suing the lab, but were advised by several prominent malpractice attorneys that in New York it is not possible to collect damages for "pain and suffering." We finally found a lawyer who agreed to take our case, but were told not to expect too much.

Abby, no amount of money can compensate for having to watch one's child slowly die, but we want to warn other prospective parents so this won't happen to them. No one should have to go through the hell we are presently going through. You may use my name. — DAVID ASTOR, QUEENS, N.Y.

DEAR MR. ASTOR: My heart goes out to you, Kathy and your precious daughter. Thank you for caring enough to write as a warning to others.

Readers, be aware that Tay-Sachs has occurred in non-Jewish babies, too — but the incidence is much lower. And in order to reduce the possibility of a laboratory error, the man and woman should be tested twice — preferably at different labs.

DEAR ABBY: I appreciated your answer to that letter from "Considering Marriage" — the older, impotent man who was considering what he presumed would be a sexless marriage to a younger woman in a wheelchair. Thanks for setting him straight.

My husband has been a paraplegic since he was a teen-ager (spinal cord injury), but being in a wheelchair has not stopped him from being the sexiest, most satisfying lover a woman could want. — FULFILLED

DEAR FULFILLED: To assume that all people in wheelchairs have no sensual feelings and cannot perform is a popular myth that needs to be dispelled. Thank you for validating my statement.

DEAR ABBY: I have never written to you before. However, when I read the letter from "Crying in Monroe, Mich.," it brought back some terrible memories, as I had also lost a beautiful Siamese cat in a clothes dryer. I since have learned that many others have lost cats this way, as cats go where it is warm. Everyone should always look inside washers/dryers before turning them on. All you hear is one thump. — ALSO CRYING

AT WIT'S END

For youth, credit is way of life

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

I'll just bet there are some "old timers" out there reading this column today who remember when the worst thing that could happen to them was to owe someone. They lived by the philosophy handed down from their fathers: "If you can't pay cash for it, you can't afford it. If you can't afford it, do without!"

Today, credit is a way of life. Young people want it all and they want it today. Debtors comprise the biggest fraternity in this country and the numbers are growing every day. People owe for meals they can't remember eating. They owe for vacations where they had a rotten time. They owe for appliances that no longer work. They owe for luggage that has been lost and face-lifts that have fallen to their knees.

They owe the government taxes on money they made but never saw because they owed it. (The government should understand that. It owes several "tril" and has the highest deficit in the history of the country.)

Our parents and grandparents come from a time when they saved pennies in jelly glasses and joined Christmas clubs where they deposited 50 cents every week. They put clothes in layaway where they paid a dollar on them whenever they could and hoped the clothes wouldn't go out of style before they could spring them.

I remember an uncle who bought a secondhand carpet from my parents for $3. He'd pay $1 on it, then borrow 50 cents back the next week. It took him a little over two years to pay off the three bucks. They still talk about him.

With no trend in sight of things ever getting back to where they were 20 years ago, what's the answer?

Well, to begin with, car designers are just going to have to come up with an automobile that outlasts the payments. The way it is now, payments last three years and the car expires at 18 months. That means for 18 months, you're not only making car payments, but paying for the repairs. Someone has to close the gap.

Before you buy any apparel, you must ask yourself, "Am I going to love this coat in the spring of '88 as much as I love it in the fall of '87?" because that's how long it's going to take to pay it off.

Before you buy a house, a good rule of thumb is to ask yourself if your co-signer makes enough in a week to pay the interest on it for a month. If he doesn't, shop for a new co-signer or you could lose everything.

Before you try to keep up with the Joneses, be sure they're not trying to keep up with you.

Finally, we're all going to have to start seeing real money once in a while just to get a handle on how many ones it takes to make a ten and how when you take five of them away, you only have five left. We were playing Monopoly the other night when I landed on Park Place. I said I couldn't afford it. Later, one of my kids landed on it and charged it on his credit card.

That's the difference between young and old ... between a son and his mother.

STATE IN BRIEF

Paper says CIA airlifting Texas mules for Afghanistan guerrillas

LONDON (AP) — The U.S. Central Intelligence Agency is believed to be flying Texas mules to the Pakistani city of Peshawar near the border with Afghanistan for use by Afghan guerrillas, a newspaper reported.

The Observer, a liberal British weekly, said in its Sunday edition a shortage of pack animals in the area following an epidemic earlier this year is the reason for the CIA airlift.

The Observer quoted unidentified diplomatic sources in Islamabad, the capital, as saying that new arms supplies carried into Afghanistan by the mules include 120mm long-range mortars and mine-clearing equipment.

The report described the mortars as "the most sophisticated weapons to reach the guerrillas since (U.S.-made) Stinger missiles were delivered to them in October 1986."

It said the purpose of the new consignments was reported to be to improve the ability of the guerrillas to lay siege to Soviet garrisons inside Afghanistan.

TEA selects two teachers of year

AUSTIN (AP) — Jimmie Rose Driver, a first grade teacher at Agua Dulce, and Margurette B. Troutman, a Highland Park English teacher, have been selected as the 1988 Texas teachers of the year.

The Texas Education Agency announced the selections Monday, saying the state competition for the first time in its 19-year history had recognized outstanding educators at both the elementary and secondary school levels.

Mrs. Troutman will represent Texas in the national teacher of the year competition, the agency said.

Gunman shoots people from car

HOUSTON (AP) — A gunman in a passing car opened fire at a group of people standing on a street corner and injured four, police said.

Sgt. C.E. Andersen said most of the people who may have witnessed the Sunday night shooting have refused to cooperate with police. Andersen said the area is known for its narcotics trade and trafficking in stolen goods.

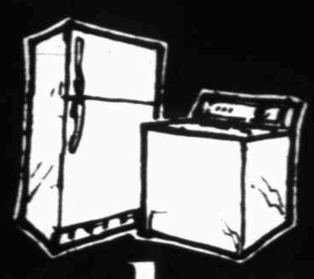

Three of the men were shot in the legs and one was shot in the hand, police said.

Redskins' Carlton Rose meets Dallas' Danny White
...veteran players can't save Cowboys

Redskins club Cowboys

Seven veterans not enough for Dallas

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

IRVING — It wasn't Lee-Permian, but then in a place like Dallas, they make do with what they have.

In this case, it was players dressed in Dallas Cowboys and Washington Redskins uniforms. Even without a Roger Staubach, Joe Theismann, John Riggins, Harvey Martin, Mel Renfro, Charley Brown, these traditional antagonists draw a crowd.

Monday night 60,415 fans showed up at Texas Stadium to see the Redskin replacements defeat the veteran-sprinkled Cowboys, 13-7. That's more than the "real NFL" players have been able to draw to the stadium with the hole-in-the-roof this year.

With George Rogers, Kelvin Bryant, Dexter Manley and Doug Williams still missing, this was supposed to be the Cowboys' best chance to beat Washington, but it wasn't to be.

"We couldn't generate anything offensively," said Coach Tom Landry, who started Danny White at quarterback and Tony Dorsett at running back. The fans let him know they disapproved with every White failure and every Dorsett fumble and the "We want Sweeney" chants.

EVEN SO, starting inside the Dallas five with less than two minutes to go and trailing 13-7, White directed a drive that ended on the Washington 14 when a White pass to wide receiver Kelvin Edwards was jarred loose of the ball just shy of the goal line.

"I told Kelvin to keep moving and find an opening," White said. "He had a good hole and if I had hit him a little lower, it might have worked."

Like Landry, White, making his first start since the strike started, blamed the Cowboys' woes on poor field position.

"We had to create field position. We needed to get the ball in their end of the field, but we couldn't make the big play."

Poor field position is putting it mildly. In the first half, Washington began offensive series at the Dallas 46, 43, 41 and 49, yet came away with only a 19-yard field goal by Obed Ariri for its efforts.

That came on a 44-yard drive after a Dorsett fumble. The Skins were forced to settle for three thanks to end Don Smerek and linebacker Russ Swan who smeared Wayne Wilson for a yard loss on third and goal from the one.

Kevin Brooks recovered a fumble by Lionel Vital at the Dallas three to thwart another drive. And Randy White personally wrecked another after being lured offside on a fourth and two at the Dallas 16. First came a 12-yard sack and then a rush that forced quarterback Tony Robinson to throw an interception.

This came with 1:12 left in the half and when the Cowboys drove to the Redskin 47 with 12 seconds left in the half, it was their first penetration of Washington terrain. They were so surprised they were imediately socked with a delay of game penalty.

THINGS OPENED up in the second half, the Skins driving 80 yards with the kickoff for a touchdown and a 10-0 lead. The drive took six plays.

White's 38-yard touchdown pass to Edwards was Dallas' immediate answer to the Skins, culminating an 80-yard drive on which White completed four passes.

With 6:13 left in the game, Washington expanded its lead to 13-7 on Ariri's 39-yard field goal.

The win gave Washington sole possession of first in the NFC East at 4-1 while Dallas, seeking to make hay while the other veterans were away, slipped to 3-2.

"It was a big game and one that would have helped us. Now we are back where we started after that loss to St. Louis and we are going to have to make it up against someone down the line," White said.

The booing? "It doesn't make my job an easier. That's all I care to say about it." Yet Danny did admit, "We could really use that home field advantage that a supportive crowd gives a team."

For the Cowboys, Vital, a 5-9, 195-pounder who is considered too little to play in the NFL, proved embarrasing by gaining 120 yards against what amounted to three of Dallas' regular defensive front four (Smerek, Randy White and Tall Too Jones).

Asked if he surprised , Landy said, "We play as a unit. Unless the whole unit is there, you are not going to have consistency."

But for better or worse, the day of the Replacement players are over. A few may stick, but next week it will be the veterans coming off a long layoff. It means fans probably will be watching the same kind of mistake-prone football they've watched the last three weeks as the free agents have gone through what amounted to summer drills.

Cardinals own burden of proof

Herzog licking chops as Twins use 'other' pitchers

ST. LOUIS (AP) — The burden of proof now rests with the St. Louis Cardinals.

Despite trailing Minnesota 2-0 in the best-of-seven World Series going into tonight's game at Busch Stadium, the Cardinals remain unconvinced the Twins are for real.

In fact, Cardinals Manager Whitey Herzog says the Twins couldn't win in the National League East, or the American League East, for that matter, because they have only two bona fide starting pitchers.

TONIGHT, THE impostor, rookie Les Straker, takes the mound for Minnesota against the ace of St. Louis' staff, left-hander John Tudor.

"When you have two starting pitchers and two days off (during the World Series), that's a hell of an advantage," Herzog said Monday, one of the off days.

"I don't think they could have won the AL East or the NL East with that type of situation when you play every day. But that's the way it is. ... Put them in the same division as Detroit (AL East) and the Tigers would win by 15 games. That's because of the pitching staff. It's nothing against them."

To some of the Twins, however, it sounded like something against them.

"He's grasping at something," Twins third baseman Gary Gaetti said. "I don't know what. Would they win in the AL East? Would they win in the American League at all?"

And Twins first baseman Kent Hrbek said: "Too bad we're not in their league."

The Twins won the first two games, 10-1 and 8-4, behind the pitching of Frank Viola and Bert Blyleven, who had 32 victories between them this season. Viola was 1-0 against Detroit in the playoffs, and Blyleven beat the Tigers twice in the five-game series.

Straker, 8-10 during the season, started the Twins lone loss in the playoffs, although it was not credited against his record. The loss went to Jeff Reardon in relief.

Tudor, 10-2 after spending most of the season on the disabled list with a broken leg, was 1-1 in the Cardinals' seven-game playoff victory over San Francisco.

"In a playoff, you can get by using only five of your nine or 10 pitchers," Herzog said. "I've always said you shouldn't have an off day during the playoffs. With the off days, you can't see the depth of the pitching staffs, and it doesn't show the true strengths of the team."

Only 10 of the 37 teams that have fallen behind 2-0 in the World Series have come back to win. It has happened in each of the past two years, however. St. Louis led Kansas City 2-0 and 3-1 before losing the 1985 World Series. The New York Mets trailed Boston 2-0 last year before winning in seven games.

The Cardinals' consolation is they are home, and away from the Metrodome in Minneapolis, where Minnesota built the best home record in baseball this year, 56-25. On the other hand, the Twins this year had the worst road record, 29-52, of any team to ever win a pennant.

"At one point, I would have been happy not to have to go back (to the Metrodome)," Herzog said. "Now, I hope we see it again."

Twice in Game 1, Cardinals outfielders lost fly balls against the opaque backdrop of the Metrodome ceiling, and the noise from the crowds of 50,000-plus was defeaning.

"I've never seen it like I did in Minneapolis," Herzog said. "It was constant noise with people screaming and cheering all the time. That's great. Those fans hven't had a lot to cheer about for a long time."

The Twins were last in a World Series in 1965. The Cardinals have gone to the Series three of the past six years, beating Milwaukee in 1982 and losing to Kansas City in '85.

Herzog said he didn't feel Busch Stadium would pose any particular problems for the Twins, some of whom compared it with Royals Stadium in Kansas City.

"Like I said in 1985, it's almost like not having a road park," Herzog said. "We might be five feet deeper in the gaps. They really don't have anything to worry about. They'll have no trouble with the lighting. Candy Maldonado (of the Giants) lost a ball in the lights during the playoffs, but that was the first time I've seen a player lose a ball in the lights at this ballpark in a long time."

The other major change for Game 3 will be the designated hitter. For the first year, the DH is being used at the American League park, but not in the National League stadium. Until this year, the DH rule had been used in all World Series games in alternating years.

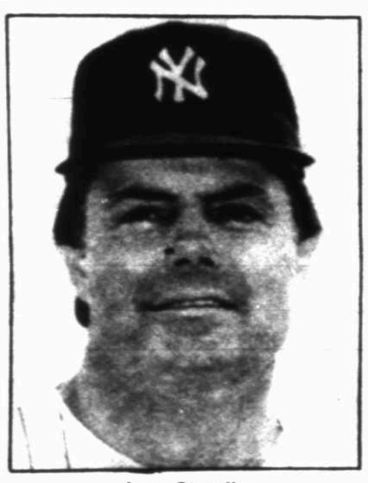

TWINS PITCHERS have been taking batting practice to prepare for Games 3, 4 and 5, and Manager Tom Kelly says it won't change his strategy. He doesn't intend to engage Herzog in a battle of double switches.

"We don't have a National League-type club," Kelly said. "We have an American League-type, designated hitter club. I can't make too many changes because who am I going to take out? Am I going to take out Hrbek? Am I going to take out Gaetti? ... Maybe I could fool around at second base with (Steve) Lombardozzi and (Al) Newman. Maybe I could do something with (Dan) Gladden and (Mark) Davidson in left field.

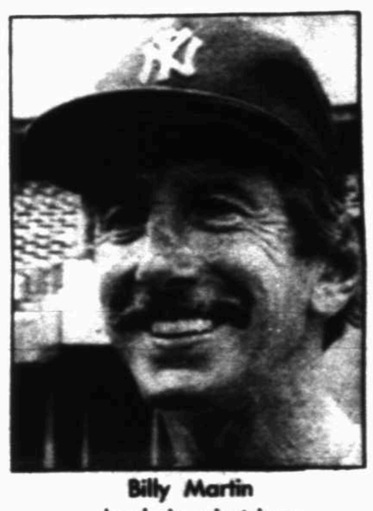

"But you build your team for the league and the park, and we play the DH," Kelly said. "I'm not interested in making double switches."

The lack of a DH also will deplete Herzog's injury-riddled offense, however. Cardinals home-run leader Jack Clark already is on the disabled list, and Herzog won't be able to use third baseman Terry Pendleton at home, except as a pinch hitter, because of an injured rib cage. Pendleton was able to play as a DH against right-handed pitchers in Minnesota, but he can't throw or hit right-handed.

Herzog used Tom Lawless at third base in Game 1 and Jose Oquendo in Game 2.

It's official: Steinbrenner brings back Billy Martin

NEW YORK (AP) — Only George Steinbrenner could knock the World Series and the end of the NFL strike out of the sports headlines.

Billy Martin is coming back as manager of the Yankees for the fifth time.

Steinbrenner, ignoring Martin's brawls and angry words that forced his four previous firings, brought Martin back Monday to replace Lou Piniella, who promoted to general manager in place of Woody Woodward.

"I'm anxious to return as Yankee manager and I'm looking toward bringing an exciting and winning team to Yankee fans," Martin said in the statement.

Martin's last dismissal by the Yankees came just before Game 7 of the 1985 World Series.

"I feel this is a step forward in my baseball career and gives me the opportunity to learn a new facet of the game," Piniella said in the statement.

The Yankees finished fourth in the American League East, nine games behind first-place Toronto, in Piniella's second season as manager. The Yankees were second in his first year.

Steinbrenner's decision to hire Martin had been expected since last week, but Piniella's move to the GM post was a surprise.

Woodward reportedly asked out of the position.

"I felt like the demand of the schedule I was asked to keep was not one I wanted to continue," Woodward said. "I wanted to see what was out there. My plans are to be available to talk to any club that might be interested."

On Aug. 8 in Detroit, Steinbrenner issued a two-page statement in which he said he might have made a mistake by hiring the inexperienced Piniella as manager. He later reminded everyone that what counted was the "bottom line."

The bottom line was that the Yankees, who led the American League East by three games at the All-Star break, finished fourth with an 89-73 record.

TERRY WILLIAMSON

A dirty job, but someone has to do it

Williamson

I'll let you in on a secret, if you promise not to tell anybody. Sports writers are frauds.

We like to pretend, especially to ourselves, that we are a hard-bitten bunch who study the world with a cynical eye and regard what we do as mere employment. No more, no less.

It's probably an overreaction to hearing "Boy, I'd like to have your job" for the 100th time from someone who has no idea what it's like to face either a deadline or a heavy rush from a Lawrence Taylor.

It is a popular misconception that a sports writer's duties end when a game ends. As it happens, that's when they begin.

It is also a popular misconception that this business is thoroughly enjoyable and rewarding. As it happens, the first part is true.

I LOVE this job, I admit it, and never do I love it more than now, in the midst of Lee-Permian week.

This is a marvelous time, a time of resolution and beginning in one. It is a time of improbable dreams and, sometimes, even more improbable realities. Unless, of course, you're going to tell me you really thought the annual quest for getting tickets to this contest is more fun than the game itself.

Of all sporting events — and I have attended most — there is no other with the variety, excitement and sheer entertainment value of a game between Lee and Permian. There is nothing even close on the high school horizon.

I love it as a spectator (Bless you, HSE, for bringing us a Sunday replay). I love it even more as a journalist. If you can't write about this event, you can't write about anything. There are interesting stories and interesting people under every goal post.

This competition brings us the sort of matchups that simply don't happen otherwise.

The flood of memories always sweeps over me at this time of year. Remember the great games with the great titles? "The King is Dead" victory in 1983 seemed to start it all. Tickets have been hard to come by since then.

AND THEN there was Shootout II in Lubbock that same year. "The Night the Lights Went Out in Ratliff Stadium" and "Exodus II" came in 1985. "The TV Game" came in 1986, when KTPX televised the first District 4-5A game live, telecasting it instead of the baseball playoffs. It drew one of the highest ratings the station had ever had. Last year, Permian failed to make the playoffs for the first time since 1979 with a loss to Lee.

And this year, a Permian Basin record crowd of around 27,000 is expected for Friday night after a season of poll leap-frogging. I can hardly wait.

But don't tell anybody. I'm supposed to be working. Honest, boss, I'm burning up these computer keys. It's a dirty job, but someone has to do it.

MARTIN

"Nothing Lou did hurt us in any way," Yankees first baseman Don Mattingly said. "He did what he could. He put the best players on the field every day and made the right moves. We just didn't produce. We didn't play well when we had to. But we never lost respect for Lou. Never. We played hard for him."

Piniella had one year remaining on his two-year contract — though Steinbrenner's decisions have never been affected by that.

The Yankees suffered major injuries to their first two hitters in the lineup — outfielder Rickey Henderson, with a right hamstring strain, and second baseman Willie Randolph, who had torn knee cartilage that necessitated surgery. They missed a combined 109 games.

Piniella did not talk with Steinbrenner for almost a month after missing a scheduled call from his boss on Aug. 3. Piniella later apologized for not being in his hotel room to accept the call.

He was 90-72 in his first year as manager, and his two-year record was 177-145.

Martin is the Yankees' 15th manager since Steinbrenner bought them from CBS in 1973.

He last was dismissed as Yankees' manager on Oct. 27, 1985, just before the start of Game 7 of the World Series between Kansas City and St. Louis. He had been named manager that April 28, replacing Yogi Berra 16 games into the season.

On Sept. 20 in Baltimore he got into a fight with a bar patron at the Cross Keys Inn, where the Yankees were staying. The next night, he broke his arm as he fought Yankees' pitcher Ed Whitson in the hotel lobby, in an elevator and in the parking lot.

Although the Yankees were 91-54 under Martin, Steinbrenner decided to switch to Piniella.

For the last two seasons, Martin has been an adviser to Steinbrenner and a television commentator on some Yankees broadcasts.

Martin's first term as Yankees manager was his most successful. He replaced Bill Virdon on Aug. 2, 1975, two weeks after he was fired by the Texas Rangers.

In 1976, New York won the its first pennant since 1964, and in 1977 the Yankees won the World Series by beating the Los Angeles Dodgers in six games.

But the Yankees fought while they won. Martin nearly brawled with Reggie Jackson in the dugout at Fenway Park on June 18, 1977. It was a dispute with Jackson that led to Martin's first Yankee firing the next season.

On July 18, 1978, Jackson did not follow Martin's instructions to bunt after a bunt sign was flashed, then attempted to bunt after it had been taken off. Jackson was suspended for five days. Martin continued to show anger at his star player and on July 23 at O'Hare Airport in Chicago, Martin said of Jackson and Steinbrenner: "One's a born liar; the other's convicted."

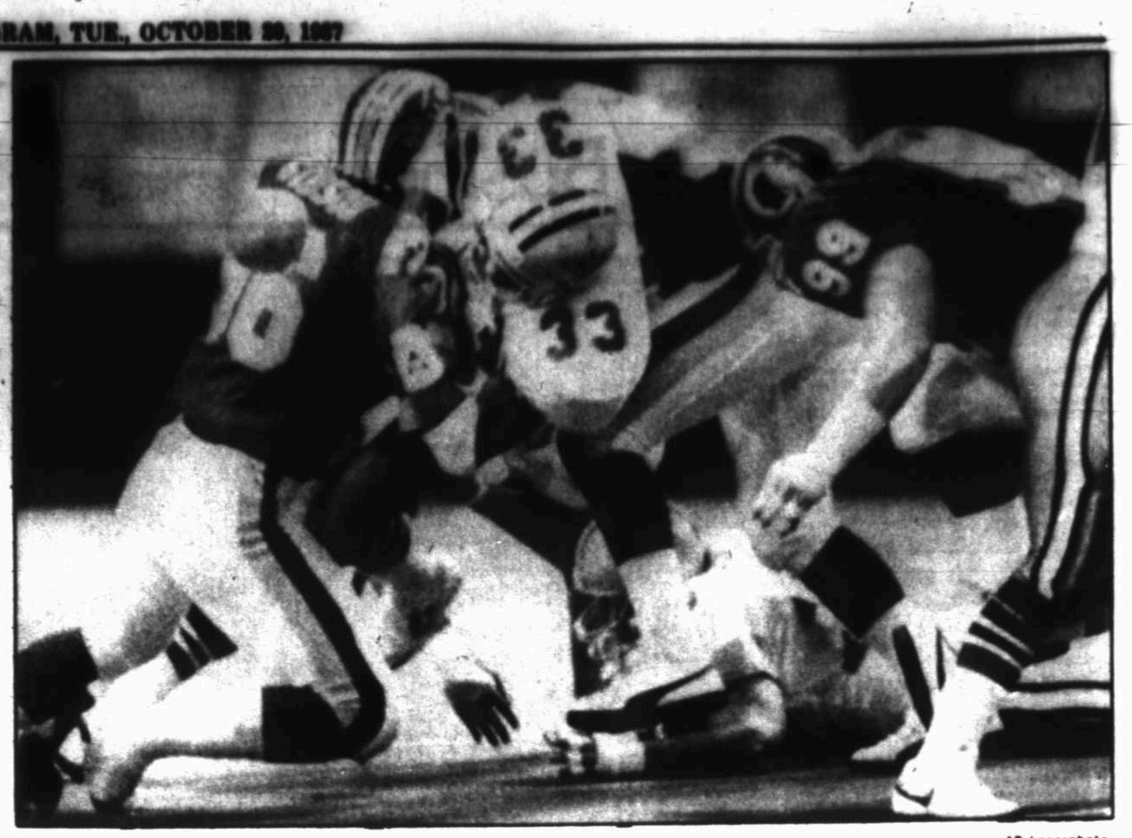

Martin resigned in tears the next day on a hotel balcony in Kansas City, Mo., and he was replaced by Bob Lemon. But just five days later, Steinbrenner announced that Martin would return as manager in 1980.

Steinbrenner could not wait that long, and Martin returned for a second term on July 18, 1979. The Yankees, shaken by the death of Thurman Munson, were 55-41 under Martin, finishing fourth, and he was fired on Oct. 29.

He went to the Oakland Athletics for three seasons and was twice named The AP American League Manager of the Year. The A's finished second in 1980 and won the West in 1981.

They fell to fifth the next season and Martin began acting irrationally. After he was refused a contract extension, he ripped apart his office in frustration.

He returned to New York for his third term on Jan. 11, 1983, joking with Steinbrenner at a Yankee Stadium news conference.

Summer grid camps clears first UIL hurdle

AUSTIN (AP) — Allowing coaches to hold their own summer camps and the biennial realignment of districts were the two most-discussed proposals Monday at the 47th annual University Interscholastic League Legislative Council meeting.

Of the 82 proposals presented to the 20-member group of school administrators, of which 45 dealt with athletics, only two were defeated and several were set for a referendum ballot in February.

One issue put on the referendum ballot was a proposal to allow coaches to conduct summer camps in football, basketball and volleyball in which incoming seventh, eighth and ninth graders from a coach's attendance zone could attend for the first time.

In an effort to keep costs affordable, committee members added an amendment that would require coaches to set camp fees through a school district's superintendent.

"We want camps to avoid vying for athletes and coaches," said UIL Director Bailey Marshall. "In other states you have this situation where popular coaches who have won state championships and the best players in the area are being coaxed into going to one camp or another."

In another proposal that garnered substantial attention, the committee approved policy outlines for procedures to be used by the UIL for conference and district realignment in January.

Under the change, Class 4A for the next alignment period will increase from 16 districts to 24. The increase was designed to eliminate the north-south zoning of individual districts in the class.

In one of several new district assignment policies, any school may elect to be elevated one conference, provided a notification has been sent to the UIL by Dec.1, 1987.

NFL sets temporary rosters at 85

Associated Press

With temporary rosters set at 85, NFL teams are balancing the return of regular players this week with the best of the replacements who played during the 24-day strike.

Among those who will stay, for now, is Los Angeles Raiders replacement quarterback Vince Evans. The 32-year-old Evans was out of football for two years before catching on with the Raiders' strike team.

Indianapolis Coach Ron Meyer cut just 16 replacements, retaining 71 players, although he said more would be cut later this week.

BUT PHILADELPHIA and Cincinnati cut all their replacements. Detroit Coach Darryl Rogers said there was a slim chance any of the Lions' replacements ultimately would make the 45-man roster, although none were cut Monday.

The replacements departed with some sadness at San Diego, where the irregulars went 3-0, putting the Chargers at 4-1, their best start since 1981.

"Just another day at the office," said quarterback Mike Kelley, who threw a touchdown pass and a 67-yard completion to set up a field goal as the Chargers beat the Raiders 23-17 Sunday. San Diego's first-ever victory over the Raiders at Los Angeles.

"That's what made this so special," Kelley said. "We did it for us. We were fighting for us."

Pittsburgh Coach Chuck Noll said backup quarterback Bubby Brister might have become No. 1 over struggling Mark Malone had he crossed the picket line. Instead, Noll said, Brister may now be behind both Malone and Steve Bono, the Steelers' quarterback during the strike.

"He missed a golden opportunity," Noll said of Brister. "We'll have to see how they look after they come in, but it could well be that Bono will be the backup. Steve played well for us and the big thing was that we won with him at quarterback."

ATLANTA KEPT only two replacements — quarterback Erik Kramer, who threw for 335 yards and three second-half touchdowns as the Falcons overcame a 17-0 deficit and beat the Los Angeles Rams 24-20 Sunday — and Rich Kraynak, a linebacker on injured reserve.

The New York Giants kept offensive linemen Dan Morgan and Mike Black from the group that went 0-3 and left the Super Bowl champions in desperate straits at 0-5 overall.

Cleveland retained 15 strike players, although Coach Marty Schottenheimer said the active roster for next Monday night's game with the Rams would be the same 45 who were on the roster when the strike started.

Miami kept 14 replacements, New Orleans 11 — including much-traveled quarterback John Fourcade — and the New York Jets 15, including defensive lineman Scott Mersereau and linebacker Jay Brophy.

"The strike is the reason one of our players is with us," Jets Coach Joe Walton said, referring to Mersereau, a fifth-round draft choice of the Rams from Southern Connecticut.

"As we entered the season, one of our biggest question marks was the defensive line, particularly nose tackle. He's shown he can play. At this point, that area looks a little brighter," Walton said.

Another player who may have earned a job was punter Tommy Barnhardt of New Orleans, who averaged 44 yards a kick in three games. Regular punter Brian Hansen, a former Pro Bowler, averaged 36.9 in two pre-strike games.

Many coaches feared tension between the returning strikers and the replacements.

IN NEW ENGLAND, where 12 players crossed the picket line, Coach Raymond Berry was quick to tell his players he wanted no friction. And Berry retained former Midland Lee and UTEP star Larry Linne, who was brillant in the replacement games.

Running back Craig James, one of the strikers, noted that all the players ate together "and there was no food fight."

"If anyone has a problem, they've got to handle it on their own," James said. "The air is cleared and we're playing ball. We've got to bring ourselves back together and we're doing that."

"They made their beds the way they wanted them," Buffalo linebacker Darryl Talley said. "I haven't decided how I'm going to deal with it."

"It's going to be a weird week. I know there's going to be some tension," said San Francisco receiver Dwight Clark, one of 15 49ers to cross the picket line.

Mavs' Tarpley admits drug use

Tarpley

DALLAS (AP) — Dallas forward Roy Tarpley has confirmed that he had been treated for cocaine and alcohol problems over the summer and said that he is having problems with his aftercare program.

In September, Tarpley had announced he was counseled voluntarily for a problem he didn't identify. He said then the problem had been resolved.

But on Monday, a day after he showed up late for an exhibition game with the Boston Celtics, Tarpley confirmed what some had speculated — that he sought treatment for drug problems.

Rick Sund, the Mavericks' vice president of basketball operations, said Tarpley's treatment for cocaine and alcohol abuse lasted five to six weeks at the NBA drug treatment facility in Van Nuys, Calif.

Tarpley is the first player in Mavericks history to be placed under the restrictions of the NBA's drug program.

Following Sunday's game, in which he did not play, Tarpley talked about his problems in the meeting with Sund and general manager Norm Sonju.

"I was beginning to slip away from my aftercare duties," Tarpley said in a news conference after practice. "So I decided to talk about it with Norm and Rick and my counselors.

"After we talked yesterday, I started felling better about my aftercare, and I tried to talk with my teammates about it today after practice started. I want them to know some of my problems and that it was relating to drugs and alcohol."

Sund said at the news conference that Tarpley would remain with the team.

TARPLEY, A 7-footer who was named to the All-Rookie team last year, will continue to play with the Mavericks but will be subject to severe restrictions and random testing by the counselors who administer the NBA's drug program, Sund said. Tarpley, 22, will not be permitted to drink so much as one beer under the rules.

If he tests positive a second time, he will be immediately suspended without pay and admitted for rehabilitation. The period usually lasts 30 days. Tarpley is in the second year of a five-year contract, which pays $2.6 million, including $450,000 this year.

A player testing positive a third time is suspended permanently but is allowed to petition the league and players association for reinstatement after two years.

"My understanding is that he is being tested quite extensively," said Gary Bettman, the league's vice president and general counsel. "Drinking is not permitted. It doesn't constitute a relapse as far as a strike in the drug program is concerned, but it does in terms of his treatment."

Sund said Tarpley will be in the "aftercare phase" of his rehabilitation process "for as long as he is probably in the NBA.

"When you're an alcoholic or a drug addict, you are never out of the woods," said Sund. "We hope that with continued counseling and a good aftercare program that he will beat his problems."

Tarpley played an important role on a Mavericks team that won the franchise's first Midwest Division title, averaging 18.7 minutes and seven rebounds per game. He averaged 13

Chaparral netters stage court coup

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — The Midland College tennis team seems set for some national recognition after its victory Tuesday in the ITCA Western Region National Junior College tennis tournament at Odessa College.

The Chaparrals defeated Tyler JC by identical 5-4 scores in the tournament finals to capture the title in a tournament that boasted five of the top 10 junior college teams in the nation.

"This tournament will go a long way in deciding the rankings for our spring play," said MC coach Joe Williams. "Without question, our men will probably be ranked No. 1 in the nation and the women will probably be No. 1 in our area and No. 3 overall behind Anderson and North Greenville of South Carolina.

"So, we're really pleased with the outcome. And I'm really pleased with our women since we had only five girls on our team and had to default two matches (one in singles and one in doubles) every time we played a match."

Rain forced a postponement until Tuesday with the men tied at 3-3 with Tyler and the women down 3-1 due to the two defaults.

"We had a lot of tight matches and won a lot of three-setters," said Williams.

The MC women pulled off two key victories against Tyler. MC's No. 2 player, Rebecca Nevarez defeated Leva Holm-Larson of Tyler, who won the No. 2 singles national title last year, by a 6-2, 6-4 margin. Sara Hancock and Caroline Bhaguandas defeated Holm-Larson and Catherine Vigander by a 7-5, 6-3 score in doubles action. Holm-Larson and Vigander were national titlest last year also.

In men's singles, MC's No. 1 Johan Dysholm defeated Poles Marinkavic of Tyler after losing the first set by a 6-4 margin. Dysholm came back with 7-5, 6-0 victories to take the match. All three of the men's doubles matches went three sets and four of the singles matches went three sets.

Strike fallout may hurt owners

Associated Press

In the process of crushing the players union, the NFL owners may have turned off a lot of fans, particularly in such major markets as Anaheim, Calif. and East Rutherford, N.J.

By playing games with replacements, then by refusing to allow the regulars back for this past weekend, the NFL virtually eliminated from playoff contention two major market fixtures, the defending champion New York Giants and the Los Angeles Rams.

The fallout is likely to come in television ratings — Los Angeles tends to turn out losers early, and fans in New York seem bemused by the Dwarfs who masqueraded as Giants for three weeks, dropping the team's aggregate record to 0-5. That's the worst start ever for a Super Bowl winner — Pittsburgh was 1-4 in 1976 after winning two straight championships.

Those Steelers are one possible example for New York to follow. They rebounded to win nine in a row, finishing 10-4 and reaching the AFC title game.

"We'll take responsibility for the first two, but not the last three," Harry Carson, the Giants' captain, said Monday. "We're not in a big hole, we're in a big canyon. You're either gonna see a very good football team go down the drain or you're gonna see one of the greatest comebacks of all time."

The Giants weren't the only big losers during the strike.

Minnesota, 2-0 before the strike, went 0-3 with a replacement team nearly as bad as the Giants. That left Coach Jerry Burns virtually conceding the NFC Central title to the Bears.

"We're going to have to regroup and get together with the 'A' club and lay down the problems in front of us," he said. "We'll try to get back on track and make a run at the wild cards. Chicago's schedule is easier and they're in the most advantageous position now."

The Rams, 1-2 during the strike despite the return of 11 veterans for Sunday's game at Atlanta, now are 1-4, three games behind San Francisco in the NFC West. So is Kansas City, a playoff team last year, but 0-3 during the strike, and Philadelphia, which began the season as a team on the rise but got an 0-3 performance out of the Illeagles.

Thnem, there are teams like Tampa Bay and Houston, who went 2-1 with strike teams and now are 3-2, their best starts since 1981, and San Diego, which went 3-0 in the strike to take over the lead in the AFC West at 4-1. New Orleans, a team on the rise when the season started, went 2-1 and now is 3-2, a threat for its first over-.500 season in its 20 years of existence.

San Francisco, which started with one of the best replacement teams, got back such important regulars as Joe Montana, Dwight Clark and Roger Craig, and went 3-0 to go three games up on the Rams, who were supposed to have been their most serious challenger in the NFC West.

And America's Second Team of Dallas Cowboys looked a lot better than the first. Going into Monday night's game against Washington, Dallas was 2-0 during the strike and 3-1 overall.

Syracuse rises, Razorbacks fall

Associated Press

While Syracuse continues to rise, the Southwest Conference continues to fall.

The Orangemen, fresh off a 48-21 victory over Penn State that snapped a 17-year losing drought against the Nittany Lions, moved into the Top 10 in the Associated Press college football poll Monday for the first time since 1968. Syracuse jumped from 13th last week to No. 9, their highest position since Oct. 19, 1964.

"Our object and dream was to get in the Top 20. That's what we feel very comfortable with," Coach Dick MacPherson said. "We're thrilled to be in the Top 10. We're in great shape."

He said it's more important to be a consistent Top 20 team over a period of a few years than to make brief trips into the Top 10.

Arkansas, 15th last week, fell out of the Top 20 with a 16-14 loss to Texas, which is the only undefeated team in the SWC but is only 3-3 overall.

Since the AP poll began in 1936, 20 teams have been ranked every week except from 1962-67 when only 10 were ranked. No SWC team was listed in the Top Ten for seven weeks in 1967, but since the poll resumed ranking 20 teams in 1968, the SWC has been represented in the Top Twenty every week until now.

"We knew it was coming, unfortunately. Parity has arrived in the conference," SWC spokesman Bo Carter said.

Carter said he couldn't tell whether the SWC's stumble was affected by the loss of Southern Methodist, banned from playing this season by the NCAA for repeated rules violations.

He said the league's absence from the rankings is due mainly to fierce competition within the conference.

"It has not been a case of getting beat badly outside of conference because SWC teams are 15-13 against outside opposition," Carter said. "It's just a real tough battle within the league."

The SWC's decline this season could put the conference into a hole that's tough to climb out of.

Staying in the Top 20 means guaranteed newspaper and television coverage across the country — a boon to recruiting, MacPherson said.

"Our goal was to have a winning season and go to a bowl game. The better the season, the better the bowl," he said. "I think there's a gradation of levels of bowl games and we're trying to get in the biggest one we can."

Meanwhile, Oklahoma, Nebraska, Miami and Florida State held onto the top four spots.

Oklahoma, which has been No. 1 in every poll this season, trounced Kansas State 59-10 and received 42 of 60 first-place votes and 1,179 of a possible 1,200 points.

Nebraska has been runner-up every week and the Cornhuskers received 12 first-place votes and 1,134 points for a 35-0 triumph over Oklahoma State.

McWilliams' 'Horns lucky or spectacular?

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas, a surprise 2-0 leader in the Southwest Conference football race, was either spectacular or lucky in nipping Arkansas 16-14 on the final play of the game, says coach David McWilliams.

The Longhorns won the game on an 18-yard pass from quarterback Bret Stafford to 137-pound wide receiver Tony Jones, who was hit in the end zone by two Arkansas defenders but held on to the ball.

McWilliams, a player and coach for over 30 years, said he had never been involved in a game that was won or lost on the last play, and he could not see Jones catch the winning touchdown pass.

"I did not see that it was a catch. I knew he had a shot at it," McWilliams said.

He told his weekly news conference Monday that Stafford felt Arkansas' linebackers and defensive backs were "dropping off, playing so deep, that we were going to have a hard time getting the ball over them (and) the best thing" was to throw underneath the coverage.

Texas had worked on the pass route, with the 5-foot-7 Jones cutting from the left toward the middle, but had not used the play in a game.

"Three spectacular things had to happen in that drive for us to win — spectacular, lucky, whatever you want to call it — Champagne recovering the fumble, Metcalf on the fourth-and-10 and that throw," McWilliams said.

The three feats were a fumbled Texas pass reception at the Arkansas 47, which was recovered by center Alan Champagne, a fourth-and 10 completion to tailback Eric Metcalf for a first down and the Stafford-Jones connection.

COWBOYS

"I enjoyed coaching these guys," said Landry. "It was exciting. They were hard working and responsive."

And the man for whom the crowd chanted. "I have a lot of respect for Danny and consider him a friend," said Kevin Sweeney, who quarterbacked Dallas to two wins in White's place. "I think he deserves better. I appreciate the crowd's support, but I'm a White fan, too."

As for sticking with the Cowboys, "I hope I proved I'm not too small. That's the issue that hurt me, but with repetition and practice helped me throw better."

Now it's just a question of keeping his fingers crossed and hoping for a reprieve.

NFL games may be 'retribution' battles

ORCHARD PARK, N.Y. (AP) — Buffalo Bills quarterback Jim Kelly shied away Monday from statements he made on national television suggesting that some union players might take retribution against teammates who crossed the picket line during the 24-day NFL players' strike.

"No comment," Kelly said several times when asked about what he said on CBS' halftime show Sunday. "I don't want to talk about that."

Kelly, whose reported weekly salary of about $93,000 is the largest in the NFL, had suggested that some of the team's veterans were angry at those who crossed and may not be willing to forgive and forget.

"For example, Carl Byrum, our starting fullback who crossed the line," Kelly said Sunday. "They (the irate veterans) say, 'Go on and hand the ball off to him, Jim, and we'll see what happens with the offensive line."

Byrum wasn't sure how to take Kelly's comments.

"I saw that on the news," said a smiling Byrum, who rushed for 139 yards in the Bills' 6-3 overtime victory over the New York Giants Sunday. "I think the guys are joking. At least I hope they're joking."

While he refused further comment, Kelly implied that some players were going to make a distinction between those who stayed out the entire strike and those who didn't.

"Everybody who was at practice last week for us — the people that we consider our players — they were here today and everything worked out good," Kelly said after the team's first workout since the strike.

"We went out together as a team, we wanted to stick together as a team, and the guys that stayed out (and) did what they were supposed to do, we're behind each other."

Most of the returning players said they didn't think there would be any retribution against those who walked away from the strike, but some also weren't ready to say all was forgiven.

Spray cans in the lockers of at least two players were labeled, "Scab Guard: Kills Nasty Germs on Contact."

"They made their beds the way they wanted them," linebacker Darryl Talley line. "I haven't decided how I'm going to deal with it."

"It's going to take some time to get back to the way it was," defensive end Bruce Smith said. "There is going to be some resentment and some harsh feelings."

Center Kent Hull dismissed talk of retaliation. "I don't think anybody's going to retaliate against anybody," he said. "I think there may be some cold shoulders for a while, but by the end of the season, I think this is going to be a football team."

Rookie defensive end Leon Seals, who crossed the line last week, said he hadn't sensed any "negative reaction so far." But he added, "I'm expecting something. It just hasn't hit me so far."

Coach Marv Levy said the spectre of lingering bitterness "was enough of a concern that I devoted 20 minutes to it in our (pre-practice) meeting."

After talking to the players about the strike and its aftermath, Levy said, "I told them, 'When I walk out of this room, I'm not going to talk about it any more. It's over.' "

Laudner wants to shake 'Buck-Ninety' tag

ST. LOUIS (AP) — It's not that Minnesota catcher Tim Laudner is embarrassed by it, but he does wish his fan club would come up with another name.

"The Buck-Ninety Club," is catchy, except when you're talking about your batting average.

Laudner hit .191 during the regular season, triggering the fan club's name. You'd never know it from his post-season production, though.

In the American League playoffs against Detroit, Laudner had just one hit but it was a two-run single than put the Twins in front for keeps against Jack Morris in Game 2. In the World Series against St. Louis, he has two singles, a home run and four RBIs in the first two Minnesota victories.

In Game 1, his RBI single made the score 3-1 and set the stage for Dan Gladden's grand slam. In Game 2, he singled home two runs in the big fourth inning and accounted for the final run with a homer in the sixth.

"It was exciting, very exciting to be able to hit a home run in the World Series," he said.

The 3-for-6 gave Laudner a .50(World Series batting average. Wil the Buck-Ninety fan club change it name, then?

"I hope so," he said, "for my sake."

"I think hitting is contagious," Laudner said. And the Twins have been hitting, setting a record by becoming the first club to score five or more runs in seven consecutive post-season games.

Dollar rebounds

LONDON (AP) — The dollar rebounded in Europe early today and gold bullion fell back from a five-year high amid worries over sharp declines on the world's stock markets.

Midmorning dollar rates in Europe compared with late Monday:

—1.7910 West German marks, up from 1.7775

—1.4875 Swiss francs, up from 1.4687

—5.9885 French francs, up from 5.9237

—2.0132 Dutch guilders, up from 1.9925

—1,296.75 Italian lire, up from 1,284.25

—1.3045 Canadian dollars, up from 1.2955

The British pound fell to $1.6710 from $1.6865.

The dollar closed in Tokyo at 142.80 Japanese yen, up from Monday's close of 141.35 yen. In London trading later today, the dollar was quoted at 142.25 yen.

GOLD

Gold bullion, meanwhile, fell back from five-year highs reached late Monday. A trader said the market failed to gather momentum following Monday's sharp rise.

London's five biggest bullion houses fixed a recommended gold price at midmorning of $481.60 a troy ounce, up from an opening bid of $475 but down from $484.50 dollars late Monday.

In Zurich, gold was bid at $478.50, down from $488.50.

Earlier, the metal closed in Hong Kong at $478.07, down from $481.97.

Silver bullion was quoted in London at a bid of $7.90 a troy ounce, down sharply from $8.30 on Monday.

Market crash blamed on world-class fears

By CHET CURRIER
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — As the stock market's recent slide reached panic proportions, it became something more than just a financial event.

Many analysts saw the record-breaking dive in stock prices as a vote of no confidence in the ability of U.S. and foreign leaders to cope with the trade and debt problems afflicting the world economy.

And indeed, the tremors were felt in overseas securities markets from Japan to West Germany.

ANALYSIS

One analyst, Hugh Johnson at the firm of First Albany Corp., called it "a full-scale financial panic on a world-wide basis."

He blamed it on fears of "a collapse in cooperation among international monetary authorities."

Martin Sass, head of the New York money management firm M.D. Sass Investors Services, cited concern about "trade deficits fueling the fires of protectionism in Washington."

And he said investors viewed the apparently successful fight against President Reagan's nomination of Robert Bork to the Supreme Court as evidence that "Reagan is losing control of Congress."

John Oliver Wilson, chief economist at the San Franciso-based Bank of America, maintained: "The market is sending a clear message to Washington that they've lost confidence in the leadership."

All interpretations of the market's behavior, even in the case of a $500 billion drop in value in a single day, are subjective and colored by the opinions and prejudices of the interpreters.

But the picture being drawn by many observers looks something like this:

Investors in the U.S. markets have grown increasingly worried that the so-called Group of Seven industrialized countries won't come up with a mutually acceptable plan to deal with world trade imbalances.

The Japanese and West Germans, perhaps quite understandably, are reluctant to risk inflationary consequences in order to stimulate demand in their countries for U.S.-made goods.

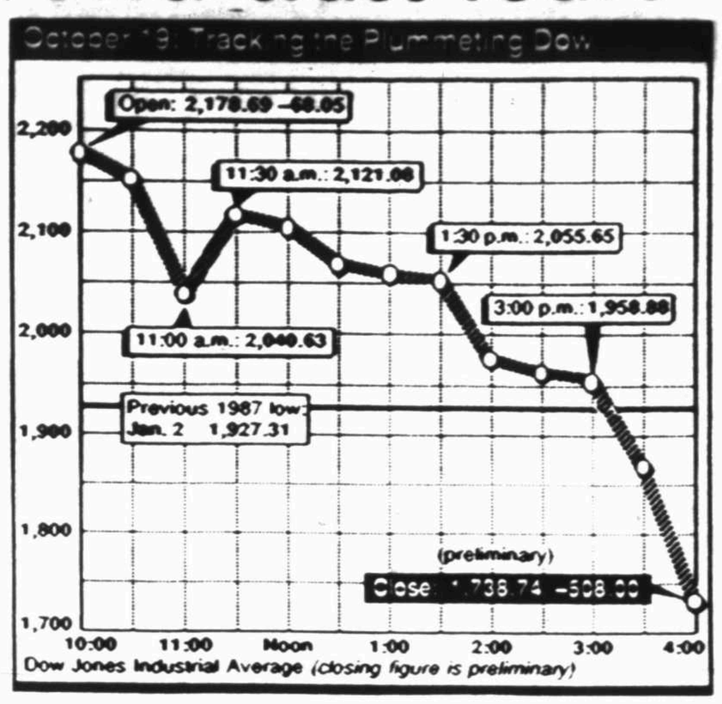

A White House statement on Monday asserted that "the trade deficit, when adjusted for changes in currencies, is steadily improving."

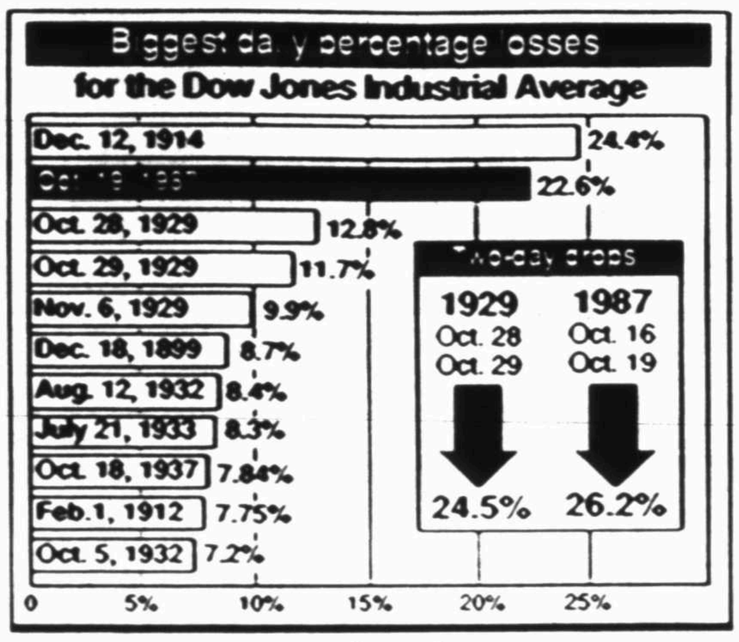

But stock and bond investors evidently don't buy that. With interest rates rising in West Germany and Japan, they reason that U.S. interest rates must keep climbing, too.

Otherwise, foreign investors might pull their money out of this country, making it much more difficult for the U.S. government to finance its huge budget deficit.

Higher interest rates, in turn, would stand to increase the odds of a U.S. recession by squeezing borrowers at a time when many individuals and institutions are heavily in debt.

Reagan 'puzzled' by Dow collapse

By TOM RAUM
AP Economics Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan says he sees no reason for panic over the stock market's record 500-point collapse because "there is nothing wrong with the economy."

But a senior administration economist, Commerce undersecretary Robert Ortner, said the market's nosedive Monday was either a short, sharp correction or "the first signal of the next recession."

"We never claimed here that the business cycle has been abolished," Ortner said.

The Dow Jones industrial average plunged 508 points on Monday in a fall rivaling the great crash of 1929. The plunge, which wiped out more than $500 billion in market value, followed a 235-point drop last week.

While a White House statement said the president was concerned about the market fall and was closely watching developments with advisers, Reagan himself shrugged off the market turmoil.

"I don't think anyone should panic because all the economic indicators are solid," he said.

"I think everyone is a little puzzled because — I don't know what meaning it might have — because all the business indices are up," Reagan said, answering questions as he left the White House to visit his wife in Bethesda Naval Medical Center. "There is nothing wrong with the economy," he added.

Reagan suggested the selling wave may have been triggered by people who saw "a chance to grab a profit. I don't know. But I do know this: more people are working than ever before in history. Productivity is up. So is our manufacturing product up. There is no runaway inflation as there has been in the past."

Earlier Monday, before the full extent of the market plunge was known, Reagan said "all leading indicators are sending a message: steady she goes." He made the comments at a swearing-in ceremony for new Commerce Secretary C. William Verity.

The stock market is one of 11 business barometers included in the government's chief forecasting gauge, the Index of Leading Indicators.

Ortner, in an interview, said "stocks are a leading indicator of the economy and they can have an effect on the economy even when they are somewhat misleading. They have also predicted more recessions that we have had."

Monday's plunge "may be a short, sharp correction in the midst of an expansion or it may be the first signal of the next recession," said Ortner, the Commerce undersecretary for economic affairs.

"I am willing to wager that this is nothing like 1929," he said, adding that he had told his stockbroker to buy "some good blue chips. This is not insider trading. There are some excellent values in the stock market this afternoon."

Economists don't compare 'Black Monday' with 1929

NEW YORK (AP) — The U.S. economy is more resilient, and the government is better prepared for a rescue than in 1929, the last time the stock market collapsed so rapidly, analysts say.

The chance of economic ruin is always present, but a repeat of the Great Depression of the 1930s seems unlikely, economists said Monday after the Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks lost 508 points.

"We have to step back now and say is 'Apocalypse Now' justified? As I look at the outlook for the economy, our political system, I don't think so," said Alfred E. Goldman, director of market analysis for A.G. Edwards & Sons Inc. in St. Louis.

The U.S. economy already had been in recession for two months by Oct. 28 and 29, 1929, the Black Monday and Black Tuesday that prefaced the century's worst economic downturn.

In contrast, today's domestic economy is growing at about 3.5 percent annually.

The dollar's decline has helped correct the trade deficit, although slowly, so the manufacturing sector of the economy has gained strength.

Consumer spending also remains healthy despite high debt, and inflation remains modest.

"We are not in a recession, and the U.S. economy if anything looks like it's on the verge of starting to do better. We're more competitive," said Kathleen Cooper, chief economist for Security Pacific National Bank in Los Angeles.

Counselors advise clients to resist panic

NEW YORK (AP) — Stockholders riding this ferocious beast of a market are advised by some to hold on tight and dig in their spurs because it may be too late to sell.

Reasoning that stock prices may have hit their lowest levels with Monday's Wall Street bloodbath, many investment counselors are encouraging clients to look long term.

After all, during the past 50 years the stock market has outperformed most other forms of investments, including bonds and Treasury bills.

"It's a big mistake to sell out ... How much further can it go down?" wondered Steven B. Enright, director of financial planning at Seidman Financial Services, an affiliate the Seidman & Seidman accounting firm, referring to Monday's unprecented 508-point collapse in the Dow Jones industrial average.

Admittedly, experts never thought it would go this far, but many are erring on the side of caution when they warn that the widely watched Dow Jones market barometer could plunge several hundred more points before hitting bottom.

Calls from panicked investors to brokers and financial planners jammed phone lines across the nation Monday as stock prices plummeted.

Experts can only hope that their clients have heeded earlier calls to diversify. "If you're not in the stock market 100 percent, hopefully you won't have gotten hurt too bad," Enright said.

For those heavily invested in stocks, there's little advice except to stay in. For those who simply don't have the stomach to hang on, one alternative is to sell and take a tax writeoff.

Robert Wagman, a San Francisco-based senior manager in Price Waterhouse & Co.'s executive financial services group, noted that investors can write off up to $3,000 in losses annually. Losses in excess of $3,000 must be carried forward to future years unless they are offset by capital gains in a similar amount, he said.

Bankers discount impact of massive stock selloff

Pister

DALLAS (AP) — The stock market's precipitous drop is unlikely to have a major impact on the banking industry because the economy remains fairly healthy, officials at the American Bankers Association's annual convention said Monday.

The officials also predicted little change in commercial banks' strong push to enter the volatile securities industry despite the market decline.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks plummeted again Monday in a dramatic decline that began Friday.

But most banking officials took the news in stride during the ABA's annual convention in Dallas.

"The end is not here. Chin up," said L. William Seidman, head of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., which insures deposits in federally chartered financial institutions.

William V. Shipley, chairman of Chemical Bank New York Corp., added that Monday's drop was not the start of another 1929 stock market crash.

Bankers and economists said the stock market's selloff represented a technical adjustment in an otherwise bull market.

"The fundamentals in the economy are not consistent with a free-fall," said William E. Gibson, chairman of the ABA's economic advisory council and an executive vice president at Continental Illinois Corp.

Gibson said the economy was growing at a moderate pace, prospects for keeping inflation in check were good and unemployment remained low.

"I think the stock market is responding to the high interest rate levels," said Robert H. Dugger, the ABA's chief economist. "It's a technical adjustment to what's happening in the credit markets."

FERC delays Order 500

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission has postponed the start of a controversial natural gas pipeline relief measure for two months to Jan. 1 and made it easier for gas producers to comply, the commission announced Monday.

The commission had planned a Nov. 1 effective date for its interim rule requiring gas producers to offer relief from take-or-pay contracts if they want to use the pipelines to transport gas to other buyers. Members voted Friday to make the new date Jan. 1.

The interim rule would have required the owners of 100 percent of the gas being transported to agree to offer the pipeline take-or-pay relief. The new rule would require the pipeline to carry the gas if the owners of 85 percent of it offer relief.

The relief is a simple crediting of the gas being transported against the take-or-pay obligation, cubic foot for cubic foot. The pipeline could apply the credit to any contract it has with the offering producer.

Conoco pushes development

WASHINGTON D.C. (SWN) — A Conoco executive told a Senate committee that opening the coastal plain of Alaska's Arctic National Wildlife Refuge for only oil exploration — without rights to develop what may be found — stops far short of what the nation should be doing to secure domestic oil supplies.

Raymond LaGarde, director of industry and regulatory affairs for Conoco's North American exploration department, testified before the Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources. His appearance was part of the ongoing Congressional debate as to whether ANWR's coastal plain should be opened to any type of oil activity.

"To enact proposals to allow exploration to proceed without the attendant development rights would be a mistake," he said.

LaGarde said the oil industry is willing to take the risk that an oil prospect is dry in exchange for the right to share in the rewards for taking the risk.

"The right to explore, separate from development, is of little value to industry," he said.

The Houston-based executive voiced opposition to proposals for "phased leasing" in the area. "Phasing simply is another word for delay. Delay in this case means slower evaluation of reserves, less efficient development of the province as a whole and diminished value to the consumer and the federal treasury."

LaGarde recommended that the government open the entire coastal plain to exploration and development and hold competitive lease sales on a regular basis. This, he said, would help industry and government planners, allow for the earliest contribution of new reserves to the domestic market, and "lower the cost of the product to the consumer over the long term."

OIL & GAS DIGEST

Shamrock records third quarter loss

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Diamond Shamrock R&M Inc. reported a $6.6 million third-quarter loss that company officials attributed to a $9.3 million settlement with the Department of Energy.

The third-quarter loss totaled 28 cents per share, compared to last year's $42.7 million loss, or $1.91 per share. Discounting the DOE settlement, the company earned $2.7 million, or 11 cents per share.

The DOE settlement, reached earlier this month, concerned federal allegations that Diamond Shamrock mixed regulated and deregulated oil in its pricing structures in 1980 and 1981.

The total settlement was for $15 million, but company spokesman Kathy Hughes said that comes to $9.3 million in after-tax dollars.

Bogert Oil revenues rise substantially

OKLAHOMA CITY (SWN) — Bogert Oil Co. announced an increase of $40,185,000 in the year-end estimated future net revenues of its oil and gas properties. As of Sept. 30, future net revenues were $75,060,000 compared with $34,875,000 as of Sept. 30, 1986, an increase of 115 percent.

Quantities of oil and gas were up substantially from the prior year, with 2,598,000 barrels of oil and 51,269,000 MCF of gas reported as of September 30. This represents increases of 234 percent for oil and 82 percent for gas over the prior year quantities.

According to Richard D. Bogert, chairman, the substantial gains in oil and gas were the result of an active exploration and development program and property acquisitions. During fiscal 1987, the company drilled 54 productive wells (12.7 net) and purchased interests in approximately 400 oil and gas wells for around $8 million.

Teneco announces new offshore wells

HOUSTON (SWN) — Tenneco Oil Exploration & Production announced offshore production from three new fields off the coast of West Africa in the Republic of Gabon.

Gabon is now the fifth nation outside the United States where Tenneco produces oil, and the three new fields mark the first company-operated international offshore production. Since 1982 Tenneco has discovered nearly 24 million barrels of reserves on the 250,00-acre Obando Marin permit. Tenneco, as operator, has a 50 percent interest in the Obando Marin block. The remaining 50 percent is held by London & Scottish Marine Oil plc (LASMO).

During the four-year exploration phase 14 wells were drilled on six prospects. Six exploratory wells produced oil — several testing at rates over 5,000 barrels per day.

Oil production is from Cretaceous N'Tchengue Ocean and Pt. Clairette sands, from depths of 9,500 to 10,000 feet. Production is estimated to reach 15,000 barrels per day in November.

Geodyne revenues climb from year ago

TULSA (SWN) — Geodyne Resources, Inc. reported net income for the second quarter ended Aug. 31, of $1,138,710, or 7 cents per common share, compared with a net loss of $457,827, or 11 cents per common share for the same period last year.

Revenues for the second quarter of fiscal 1988 were $2,874,582, up four times from the $707,131 reported for the second quarter of last year. For the first half of the current year, revenues were $3,861,246, more than double the $1,610,425 reported for the first half of the year ended Feb. 28, 1987.

Net income for the six months ended Aug. 31, 1987 was $808,804, or 4 cents per common share, compared with a net loss of $702,296, or 18 cents per common share, for the same period last year.

Enron donates computer equipment

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — Enron Corp. of Houston has donated a computer laboratory to the University of Nebraska-Omaha's College of Business Administration.

"We're delighted. This gives us a competitive edge and provides a higher quality opportunity for students," said John M. Harding, assistant dean of the college.

The Enron Foundation Microcomputer Lab houses 35 microcomputers and 20 printers. Sixteen of the computers are linked to the university's mainframe computer system, VAX.

The computers will be used for accounting, finance and general word processing, Harding said.

Enron formerly had headquarters in Omaha.

Ensource to acquire properties

HOUSTON — Ensource Inc. announced two separate agreements to acquire producing properties, including an intrastate gas pipeline, the award of five federal OCS leases, and a revised bank credit agreement.

Ensource announced that it has executed an agreement to purchase the assets of Anderson Petroleum Inc. and Anderson Pipeline Corp. for $7,777,000 from the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. through the Continental Illinois National Bank and Trust Co. of Chicago, effective Aug. 1.

The purchase is expected to close by Oct. 30. The assets include a 21 percent average working interest in 240 wells principally located in the Ozona field in Crockett and Sutton Counties, Texas.

Ensource already owns an average working interest of 46 percent in 54 of the wells. Ensource estimates net proved producing and behind pipe reserves attributable to the interests being acquired at approximately 9.4 BCF of gas and 196,000 barrels of oil. The company believes that there is additional potential from undeveloped locations which would become economical at higher gas prices.

In addition to the working interests in producing properties, Ensource also acquired a 100 percent interest in a 145-mile intrastate pipeline system and compression facilities which serve the producing properties in the Ozona and two smaller nearby fields. The pipeline currently serves proved producing reserves estimated at 32 BCF with additional behind pipe and undeveloped potential.

Ensource also announced the purchase, which was effective Aug. 1 of a 34 percent working interest in approximately 1,500 acres in the Slaughter Field in Cochran County, Texas for $968,000. Net proved reserves attributable to this purchase are estimated at 290,000 barrels of oil. There are additional probable reserves from infield drilling and secondary recovery in the developed area of the lease. In the undeveloped portion of the lease, there are potentially 36 undeveloped locations as well as secondary recovery potential.

Two wells have already been drilled on the undeveloped portion of the lease and are presently being completed.

In addition, Ensource announced the award by the Minerals Management Service of five federal OCS leases on which Ensource and its working interest partners were the successful bidders at the Aug. 12 Federal Western Gulf of Mexico lease sale. The OCS leases, in which Ensource has a 25 percent working interest, cover High Island Block 143 and Galveston Blocks 273, 275, 281, 283 and 302.

All blocks are in close proximity to the Texas state waters boundary and are in 50 or less feet of water.

In conjunction with the Anderson purchase, Ensource also announced an agreement in prinple with Wells Fargo Bank to replace the company's current bank credit agreement with a new secured revolving credit facility.

The new agreement, which increases the company's bank credit limit from $40 million to $45 million, is anticipated to be in place prior to the closing of the purchase of the Anderson Properties. The new agreement provides for a 3-year revolving line of credit followed by a 4-year amortizing term loan.

Stock-oriented fund sales fueled market dive

NEW YORK (NYT) — Monday's historic plunge in the stock market was fed in large part by huge sales of shares in stock-oriented mutual funds. Several of the largest mutual fund management companies said the number of phone calls from investors was about double the normal volume.

Trading activity by the investors was extremely heavy as shareholders switched out of stock funds and into other funds, primarily money market funds that invest in short-term fixed-income securities. Funds oriented toward medium- and long-term bonds and gold also attracted investors frightened by the falling market.

But activity was so hectic that it was difficult to gauge the numbers of investors who were calling and how many were switching their investments.

"At this point, we don't know what's happening," Tracey K. Gordon, a spokesman for Fidelity Investments, said during Monday's early trading. "Things are happening too fast."

Thomas V. Williams, senior vice president and managing director of mutual funds at Kemper Financial Services, said: "We've just seen a genuine panic. In equity funds, up till about a week ago, we were running positive cash flow. That has now turned to negative cash flow, with the vast majority of that in exchanges."

Most investors were switching funds within a family of funds rather than redeeming their shares and seeking a refund of their money. Such a move to a money market fund is usually available at no cost, and gives investors the option of moving back into the stock market with as much ease as they left.

Managers of mutual funds said that the number of investors switching funds compared with the number asking that their shares be sold was at least 10 to 1.

But the managers said they had prepared for the volume of Monday's telephone calls after last week's market drop.

Over the weekend, Fidelity, which operates a 24-hour telephone service, increased the staff manning the switchboards by 20 percent.

By Monday afternoon, the number of calls was expected to jump to more than 200,000 from an average of 115,000 before the end of the day, according to Rab Bertelsen, a spokesman for Fidelity.

Concerned that the large volume of fund switching and redemptions could deplete capital reserves, some investors Monday were questioning the cash positions of mutual funds.

But fund managers said there was little cause for concern because they had built up reserves over the last few months in anticipation of a market drop.

The switching and redemptions did not immediately put pressure on the funds to dump stocks to raise cash, fund managers said. "Generally, the cash position in our funds has been high," said Brian S. Mattes, vice president of the Vanguard Group of Investment Cos. "We had no need to sell securities for the cash position."

Nonetheless, to maintain the former cash levels, mutual funds will have to eventually sell stocks from their portfolios, if they had not already begun to do so, analysts pointed out.

Mutual funds have taken a huge leap in aggregate size since 1979, with the majority of their investment concentrated in the equity markets and money market funds, according to the Investment Company Institute, the Washington-based national association of the mutual fund industry.

Moreover, in contrast to 1929, the Federal Reserve has shown a willingness to inject more money into the economy to prevent interest rates from soaring and choking off growth.

In 1929, the Fed was actually tightening the money supply, making things worse, said Stephen Slifer, senior vice president of Shearson Lehman Brothers Inc.

"I have a hard time believing corporate America is worth 20 or 30 percent less this morning than it was yesterday morning," Slifer said.

Monday's collapse wiped out more than $500 billion worth of market value, and that is likely to crimp consumer spending by taking wealth out of people's pockets and making them more nervous about the economy.

But Slifer said he expects the economy to keep growing, although perhaps at a rate of 1.5 to 2 percent next year instead of 3 to 3.5 percent.

"The basic thing that really turned the 1929 situation into a depression was, I think, the lack of safeguards in the monetary system. The fact that banks were allowed to close, that you had a sharp reduction in the money supply and you had things feeding on themselves in a downward spiral in the real economy," said William Cline, senior economist for the Institute for International Economics in Washington.

Stock prices are still at the level of early 1986, Cline noted.

"Nobody thought we were going to have a depression in April 1986, and yet we've had a joyride that's just brought us back to the level of then," he said.

Presumably, the stock market is more stable today than in 1929 because the Securities and Exchange Commission requires stock purchasers to put up at least 50 percent of the purchase price. In the Roaring Twenties, some buyers pyramided tiny investments into empires and were wiped out when falling stock prices made them unable to repay their loans.

But the advent of computers has created its own instability by making it possible to move huge quantities of stocks on the basis of technical factors unrelated to the value of the companies involved.

The biggest danger comes from the United States' heavy reliance on foreign capital to finance its interlinked budget and trade deficits.

Foreigners fear that a falling dollar will wipe out their investments here, so they demand higher yields to compensate for possible exchange rate losses. That pushes up interest rates here, hurting the U.S. economy.

Chemical, Marine Midland rejoin prime rate herd

NEW YORK (AP) — Chemical Bank and Marine Midland Bank, which jumped ahead of the industry last week by raising their prime lending rates to 9.75 percent, today rejoined other major banks at 9.25 percent.

It was the first cut since July 1986 in the prime rate, the interest commercial banks charge on loans to their biggest corporate customers with the best credit ratings.

Last week, Chemical and Midland were alone among major U.S. banks in raising their prime rates to 9.75 percent from 9.25 percent.

Banks had increased the rate to 9.25 percent from 8.75 percent on Oct. 7.

In the bond markets today, interest rates plunged as bond prices soared after investors shifted funds from the battered stock market into bonds. The yield on the Treasury's closely watched 30-year bond was quoted at about 9.45 percent at around 9:30 a.m., down sharply from 9.94 percent late Monday.

ADVICE

For those not invested in securities, "the objective, rational thing to do is to sit tight," Wagman said.

Money market instruments, which provide investors with liquidity and a decent rate of return, are a wise haven for cash.

In terms of fixed-income securities, "We'll obviously see interest rates rising ... but I would not go long, not over five years," Enright said.

For only the most squeamish investors, there is gold bullion or precious metals mutual funds. Gold often has been seen as a refuge in times of economic turmoil.

BANKS

Gibson said the stock market also was reacting to the consistently huge budget and trade deficits as well as concern over possible disharmony among major industrial nations regarding currency stabilization.

"The banking industry has to be watchful about the stock market trends," said Dugger. "We're in a very critical period economically."

Seidman said that a continued decline in the stock market could ultimately erode consumer confidence and halt economic growth, bringing about a recession.

That, in turn, could change the way consumers and corporations save or borrow their money.

"I don't see any near-term or immediate effect on the banking industry, but it will be affected if there's a recession," said Seidman.

He said most banks are "fairly well hitched against inflation rates and inflation."

Charles H. Pistor Jr., newly elected ABA president and chairman of First RepublicBank in Dallas, said most bankers probably would continue their efforts to move into the securities business despite the recent market downfall.

Pistor said banks proposed to deal in securities through separate subsidiaries, thereby having little impact on banks' assets.

FERC

In the gas-short 1970s, many pipelines signed contracts requiring them to pay for certain amounts of gas whether they took it or not. Estimates vary, but the Natural Gas Supply Association, a producers' group, says pipelines on June 30 had outstanding about $4.3 billion in unsettled liabilities to producers for gas not taken.

Collapsing gas prices led many users and producers to make their own sales deals, using the pipelines simply as transportation companies, and only about 40 percent of gas now flowing is owned by the pipeline.

The commission is trying to encourage pipelines to declare themselves "open access" carriers, and to do so is letting local distribution companies change their contracts with pipelines, converting obligations to purchase from the pipeline into obligations to buy transportation service from the pipeline.

A federal appeals court ruled that the commission also had to deal with the take-or-pay contracts between pipelines and producers.

In the new 85 percent provision, the commission said it was trying to prevent owners of small shares in a lease from blocking desirable transactions. Pipelines must be provided the names of the holdout minority owners.

The pipeline must carry all the gas offered by the 85 percent. If the holdout minority owners want to offer credits in later deals, they must offer them for all deals the majority has made up to that point.

In a partial dissent, Commission Michael Naeve said this mechanism for pipelines to "bank" take-or-pay credits not agreed to by the 15 percent minority "will result in enormous administrative complexity and may limit the ultimate amount of gas made available for transportation."

In another partial dissent, Commissioner Charles Stalon said he would have voted for a one-month delay, but not two months.

The Natural Gas Supply Association, which opposes the requirement to grant take-or-pay relief to pipelines, said in a statement the delay was welcome but failed to address the unfairness of the requirement in the first place.

FEARS

"I think the jury is still out," said Sass, "but the market is obviously betting that we're going to go into a recession."

All this is hardly a new worry. It has been widely discussed on Wall Street and elsewhere for months.

Investors, however, have turned increasingly pessimistic about the outlook as the last three monthly reports on the trade deficit failed to live up to their hopes for improvement.

John Phelan, chairman of the New York Stock Exchange, said Monday's drop represented a "culmination of things that have been building up for the last nine months."

The search on Wall Street now shifts from looking for a bull-market peak to trying to spot a bottom of the Slide of '87.

"I don't know where this ends," acknowledged Sass, who said he wasn't dumping any stocks he holds for his clients but wasn't ready to buy just yet either.

"It's like catching a falling knife," he said. "I'd rather have it hit the floor first and then bounce before I pick it up."

Chet Currier has reported on Wall Street for The Associated Press since 1974.

REAGAN

Presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said in a statement issued after the close of markets that Reagan "is keeping close watch on the markets here and in other countries. We will continue to closely monitor these developments. The president has watched ... with concern the continued drop in the stock market."

Fitzwater's statement said administration officials, at Reagan's behest, had consulted with financial-market officials and with financial leaders. "Those consultations confirm our view that the underlying economy remains sound," the statement said.

Asked if the administration was alarmed by the market's fall, Fitzwater said, "No. We feel the underlying economy is sound. On the other hand, it is a situation we have to watch."

Reagan was asked by reporters if stocks would fall again on Tuesday. "I don't know. You tell me," he said.

Asked what he would tell "little old ladies who lost their shirts," Reagan said: "I don't know of anyone — are you talking about a specific case?

"How about how many people must have sold out in order to get a profit because they bought it back before it was ever this high?" Reagan asked.

Quatro Products stocks everything you need from Pittsburgh Paints to make your home beautiful, with a fresh paint job. "We are a distributor for Pittsburgh Paints," Bogle explained. "So whether you need one can or 100 cans, we can take care of your needs."

"While we have over 1,000 colors to chose from," Bogle explained, "we have sophisticated equipment to ensure color accurate matching." Bogle went on to point out the high quality standards demanded by Pittsburgh Paints. "They have been manufacturing paint for more than 100 years," he said. "They invest a lot of time and money into research and development to meet their high quality standards."

Master Shine Shoe Shine establishes Midland pickup and delivery service

"Success through service" is the motto at Master Shine Shoe Shine.

Owned by Ralph "Bo" Scott and Leonard Jones, Master Shine is putting its motto to use by expanding their service area to Midland.

Beginning next week, Master Shine will pick-up and deliver your leather goods right to your door. That's right! Simply call 366-3568 and Master Shine will pick-up your leather goods, give them the treatment these quality items deserve and deliver them back to your door, looking better than new.

Bo and Leonard have more than 50 years of combined experience in caring for leather goods. That includes purses, shoes, boots and clothing.

"We make our own special oil to treat leather," Bo explained. "Our oil penetrates into the leather bringing out the shine, and that shine will last a long time."

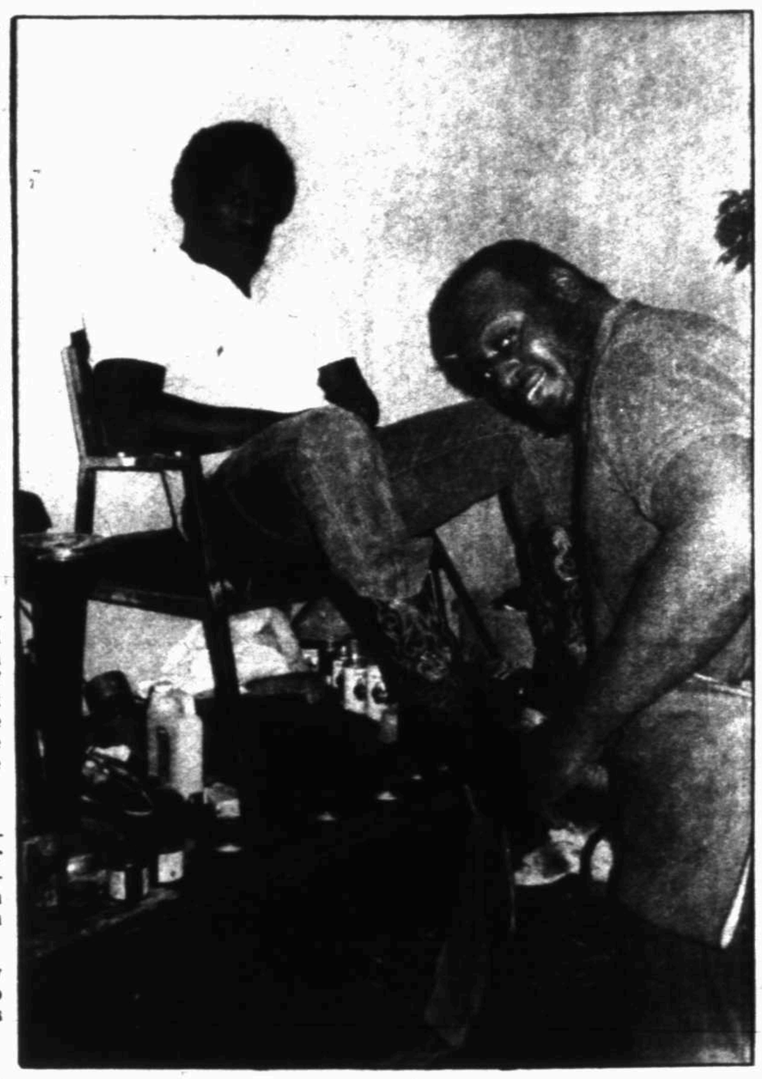

Master Shine also cleans and conditions suede and does dye work.

Do you have a pair of leather tennis shoes that are looking worn and weathered. Master Shine can clean and dye them to look like new. If you have a purse in the closet that you haven't been carrying because of stains or scuffing, Master Shine can take it and make it fit to use again.

Get your boots ready for the ocming winter months with Master Shine. And if you have leather furniture or car seats, Master Shine can get them in shape and keep them that way.

Shoe and leather repair is a family tradition of rBo and Leonard, who began shining shoes in Bo's father's shop in Amarillo, Texas.

"We take great pride in our work and the art of a fine shoe shine," Bo epalined. And now that same quality service is available in Midland. For pick-up serivce call 366-3568 or in Odessa stop by Master Shine Shoe Shine in the Santa Fe Square, 3952 E. 42nd Street.

Two shoe shine stations are available at Master Shine, so your wait is never a long one. Come in to 3952 E. 42nd or call 366-3568 for pickup and delivery in the Midland area. Master Shine experts are experienced in the care of all leather goods, including purses, coats, furniture, car seats and boots and shoes.

Dimension Cable offers increased station capabilities with FM stereo hookups

"Hook your wagon to a star" with Dimension Cable's FM stereo connections.

"The FM stereo connects directly into your stereo receiver to increase stations capabilities and improve reception," explained Doug Smith, Dimension Cable general manager. This connection will allow you to listen to your favorite television programs in stereo, and so much more!

KKGO, a 24-hour jazz music radio station from Los Angeles is available with the FM stereo connection. "This station plays everything from Herbie Hancock to George Winston and Liz Story," Smith said. "It is very unique and there is no station like it in the Permian Basin. 'New Age' jazz, which is an expanded jazz sound with no vocals, is a popular item on this station."

Another station available with the FM hook-up is WFMT out of Chicago. This classical station plays 24-hours of artists including Beethoven, Bach and Mozart. Performing musicians and groups include the Boston Pops and New York Philharmonics.

"We've had a number of inquiries about this unique feature," Smith related. "And if you already have basic cable, the addition of the FM hookup can be yours for only 10¢ per day."

Cable offers a variety of alternative channels, including C-SPAN I & II. These channels cover the United States House of Representatives and Senate.

"The Bork Hearings were covered in their entirety, as were the North Hearings," Smith pointed out. "We have seen a rapid increase in popularity of these two channels as election time approaches. Coverage of candidates and their respective campaigns are covered extensively on these channels."

Lifetime Cabletelevision Network is another alternative channel that is very popular with young professionals. This channel features shows on parenting, relationships, fashion and beauty, and fitness.

Highlights of Soviet television are on the Discovery channel during the month of November. "This is a chance for our children to see what goes on in other places," Smith pointed out. "Through the media of television we bring new ideas and different cultures into our home. It breaks down some of the isolation."

The Arts & Entertainment cable channel focuses on programming like ballet and music. An example of a show airing this month is "Footsteps: In Search Of Lost Cities". This exclusive A&E premiere series recreates the drama of the lost civilizations of Petra, the temples of King Solomon and the jungle pyramids of Guatemala.

Of course, on the premium channels the fun continues with movies, children and family shows and adult comedy. New episodes of the "Gary Shandling Show" will premiere in October and November, as well as an offshoot of the "Bizarre" comedy show, "The Super Dave Osborne Show".

Sports, music and movies are all on The Movie Channel, Showtime, HBO and Cinemax — all available from Dimension Cable. For more information or to subscribe or upgrade your present subscription call 694-7721.

Dimension Cable general manager Doug Smith explains the advantages of FM stereo hookups, including increased station capabilities and improved reception.

Bill Dillon explains the importance of Medicare Supplements

Bill Dillon Insurance, located at 1202 Andrews Highway, can help you with Medicare supplements and all your insurance needs.

Just about everyone agrees — Medicare is one of the most important programs available to senior citizens.

But, Medicare doesn't pay for everything. And, for some folks, what Medicare doesn't pay can put a severe strain on retirement finances.

State Farm's Medicare Supplement insurance can help by paying many of the expenses Medicare doesn't pay. The Supplement is designed to cover the gaps in Medicare. When combined with Medicare it provides a high level of health insurance protection. State Farm will not cancel or refuse to renew your policy because of poor health or because you have too many claims. Premiums for your policy cannot be increased unless they are increased for all other policies like yours.

State Farm's policy includes coverage for: Medicare deductibles, Medicare co-payments, Hospitalization for more than 150 day a year, and much, much more. When Medicare deductibles increase (as they often do) — State Farm's benefits increase the same amount. The level of protection remains the same. Of course, it may be necessary to adjust premiums on all Medicare supplements policies because of the increased benefits.

You have ten days to examine your policy, and if for any reason you decide you don't want it, just send it back and we will refund all of your money.

Call Bill Dillon Agency at 694-9536 to answer any question. When you buy insurance, you buy a promise — a promise by the insurance company to protect you against certain financial losses. The promise you buy is no better than the company that stand behind it. State Farm has earned the reputation for standing behind their promises. That is why millions of people look to the State Farm organization for their insurance needs.

Put your company in the Headlines on the Business & Industry pages

Ever wished you could see your company's name in the headlines? You can! The Business and Industry pages, published each Tuesday in the Midland Reporter-Telegram, give you the opportunity to tell your story.

The Business and Industry pages offer advertisers a unique format. The articles and pictures on the pages let readers know what various businesses have to offer.

The pages are not just for one type of business. In fact, the pages feature consumer businesses, as well as commercially-oriented companies. There are furniture stores, travel agencies, restaurants, temporary services, home improvement experts, chimney sweeps and more that take advantage of this format.

Both advertisers who offer services and those who are selling a product have been very satisfied with the response they have received by advertising on the Business and Industry pages.

What's really amazing is that your business can be on these pages for a remarkably reasonable rate. If you've never taken advantage of this unique advertising format, ask your account executive about the special introductory offer.

All it takes to begin advertising on the Business and Industry pages is a call to the retail advertising department at 682-5311. Ads on this page are set up on a contract basis. The number of articles and pictures an advertiser gets is determined by the size of the ad that is run each week on the pages. The advertiser pays only for the ad, thereby spreading the cost out over a 13 or 26 week period (the introductory offer varies from this).

Advertisers do not have to worry about writing the articles or taking the pictures themselves. The Midland Reporter-Telegram has an advertising feature writer that will take care of that. When possible your articles will be coordinated with special events, such as grand openings and seasonal sales.

Put your business in the headlines of the Business and Industry pages, call 682-5311 and ask for your account executive or the retail advertising department.

Olsten Temporary Services winds up recruiting drive with party

As Olsten Temporary Services winds up its "Let Olsten Tempt You" recruiting drive and the National Temporary Help Week, a party certainly seemed in order.

This nation-wide recruiting program includes a grand prize trip to Hawaii, eight regional prizes of overnight trips for two and 15 local prizes that included luggage, a Sony Walkman radio and a sports watch.

During their recent recruiting drive Olsten signed up even more new employees, with a variety of skills, to serve Midland employers. These new temporary employees will receive all the benefits available to Olsten temporary workers, including a free cash-in-hospital program, major medical/dental insurance, vacation with pay and holiday pay.

Olsten temporaries are also eligible to join the Olsten Golden O Club. After working a specified number of hours, Golden O Club members are able to select from valuable gift items.

"Another benefit we feel is rather unique to Olsten is our 'early pay' system," said Joni Hodges, co-owner. "Our workers receive a paycheck at the end of the week they work. We appreciate the efforts our workers put forth, and we want them to be paid as soon as possible."

Olsten has a network of offices in the United States and Canada, so it's easy to work along with Olsten. Let your service representative know your travel plans in advance and your records will be sent to the Olsten office at your next destination.

"Although we have signed many new employees during our recruiting drive we are still looking for quality workers to fill assignments," said Joan Pertree, co-owner.

Party participants at Olsten Temporary Services celebrate National Temporary Help Week. This national holiday saw a variety of activities to show appreciation for hard-working temporary workers.

"Even during the best of economic times it is important to a business to monitor its accounts receivable," said Russ Robken, owner of R & R Collection Service Inc. "But when we are going through a time of economic crises, as we are now, it is imperative to the survival of a business to stay on top of their accounts receivable."

"Our personnel are trained in collection techniques and laws," Robken said. "All information is kept in strictest confidence."

"Statistics show that the sooner an account is turned over to a collection agency, the better the chances are for recovery," Robken pointed out. "For example, when an account becomes six months old from date of service or date of last payment, the chance of recovery is approximately fifty percent. When an account becomes nine months oldthe recovery rate drops to 25 percent. At a year the average is even lower."

"We offer competitive rates and there is no charge unless we effect collection on the account," Robken explained.

R & R Collection Service Inc. is a member of the American Collectors Association and the Healthcare Clients Service Program. Employees are bonded and insured and attend seminars to update their knowledge of collection law and techniques. Memoir cites Reagan officials as having made racist jokes

By CHRISTOPHER CONNELL

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's first secretary of education says mid-level Reagan administration officials made racist jokes and other scurrilous remarks during civil rights discussions at the White House.

T.H. Bell, in a memoir of President Reagan's first term, said the slurs included references to the late Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. as "Martin Lucifer Coon" and calling Title IX, a federal law guaranteeing women equal educational opportunity, "the lesbian's bill of rights."

Bell's memoir is titled "The Thirteenth Man: A Reagan Cabinet Memoir." In it, he says that "since I had heard Ronald Reagan speak out convincingly against all forms of discrimination, I felt that my own dedication to enforcement of the civil rights laws as they applied to education would have the full support of the president."

Instead, he said, he was confronted with "evidence of apparent bias among mid-level right-wing staffers at the White House and at OMB. I was shocked to hear their sick humor and racist cliches."

Bell did not identify those who made the racist or scurrilous comments. He was en route Monday evening from his home in Salt Lake City to Los Angeles and could not be reached for further comment.

In his book, he says the jokes about King were made as Reagan was deciding whether to sign or veto a bill establishing King's birthday as a national holiday. He eventually signed it.

Blacks were not the only targets, Bell writes.

"They delighted in making other slurs. Arabs were called 'sand niggers' " in discussions about State Department issues in the Middle East, Bell said.

Bell added, "I do not mean to imply that these scurrilous remarks were common utterances in the rooms and corridors of the White House and the Old Executive Office Building, but I heard them when issues related to civil rights enforcement weighed heavily on my mind."

NATION

Bell added, "It seemed obvious they were said for my benefit, since they often accompanied sardonic references to 'Comrade Bell.' "

Elsewhere in his book, he depicts Edwin Meese, the former White House counselor and now attorney general, as "a man who literally detested the federal government." He calls Meese "the champion of the far right in the White House."

Bell, now a professor of educational administration at the University of Utah, said Meese led a group of "movement conservatives" who operated "almost like a secret society" and fought to abolish the Department of Education and steer administration policies to the right.

They despised Bell and other "pragmatists," including Vice President George Bush and then-White House chief of staff and now Treasury Secretary James Baker, according to Bell's memoirs.

Bell quit Reagan's Cabinet at the end of 1984 after four years of battles within the administration over budget, appointments and policies.

He also commissioned an advisory report, "A Nation At Risk," that sparked moves in most states to raise school standards and improve the teaching profession. The April 1983 report also convinced Reagan to begin visiting schools and championing education reforms.

Of Reagan, Bell says "I never felt that his policies were aimless or wandering or lacked clear focus." But he adds that "I had to defend some proposals to Congress that were, in my view, absolutely wrong."

Reagan eventually backed off efforts to slash education spending, and abandoned a campaign promise to abolish the Education Department, which Meese once called "a ridiculous, bureaucratic joke."

Bell said Meese and the other "movement conservatives...proclaimed their ideological identity on cuff links and neckties. Their logo was the profile of Adam Smith, the author of the classic economic work, 'The Wealth of Nations.' "

Once when Bell wore a gift tie from De Paul University emblazoned with small red symbols of that campus, Meese asked him, "Is that the hammer and sickle?"

The title of Bell's book, being published by The Free Press, a division of Macmillian, refers to Education's status as the 13th and newest member of the Cabinet.

Bell said he had an informer inside a group of arch-conservatives who had been placed in high positions in the Education Department, and also an "informant in the Baker camp" at the White House.

Bell said he had doubts at the start about whether he fit into the Reagan administration.

"I hate jelly beans," said Bell, and when Reagan passed a large jar of jelly beans around at the first Cabinet meeting, "I decided then and there that I wouldn't eat those sugary, sticky morsels just to be in step with the others."

Bell, who stands barely 5-foot-5, also discovered that "my legs wouldn't touch the floor if I sat back in the chair. I didn't like jelly beans and my chair didn't fit. Cabinet meetings were apparently not going to be enjoyable for me."

John Stennis to forgo Senate re-election

Stennis

WASHINGTON (AP) — John Cornelius Stennis, a dignified man in a wheelchair, has become a Senate institution.

Every morning the Senate is in session, an aide pushes the wheelchair and its 86-year-old occupant down the subway tunnel leading from the Russell Senate Office Building — named for Stennis' friend and mentor, Sen. Richard Brevard Russell of Georgia.

Stennis, courtly and genial, immaculate in dark suit and white, french-cuffed shirt, waves and smiles at those who pass by.

At a side door to the Senate chamber the chair is rolled onto a lift that elevates it over the obstacle posed by a short stairway, then pushed to the side of the old mahoghany desk once occupied by Mississippi's Jefferson Davis, later the president of the Confederacy.

On Monday, shortly after he underwent surgery for a partial blockage of his bladder, Stennis's office in Jackson, Miss., announced he would not seek re-election to a seventh consecutive six-year term.

Stennis' Senate desk, like its present owner, has its scars.

A Union soldier bayonetted it when federal troops were quartered in the Senate chamber at the beginning of the Civil War and when anger against seceding Southern states — and Jefferson Davis — ran high.

The careful repairs on its side distinguish it from other Senate desks.

When Stennis sits behind that desk or in the wheelchair at its side, he is never alone for long.

He is the Senate's president pro tem, it's most senior member, the second-longest serving senator in American history.

He is chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee, and former head of the Senate Armed Services Committee.

He is a politician who began his career as a stout segregationist but who now applauds the changes in the South wrought by the Civil Rights movement and who voted in 1983 to extend the Voting Rights Act.

A former state judge, Stennis has presided over the proceedings of senators accused of ethical violations. Some have said that if they ever were in that position, they would wish Stennis to be their judge.

His colleagues say his own integrity, fairness and his devotion to the Senate as an institution never has been questioned. He often is described as "the conscience of the Senate."

And the 99 other members of what used to be called the most exclusive club in the world never leave him sitting alone for long.

One after the other, senators of both parties drift to empty chairs near the wheelchair, sit and engage their senior colleague in conversation.

If he chooses, and he sometimes does, arrangements have been made to permit him to stand like other senators who engage in debate.

But Stennis is confined mostly to the wheelchair.

His left leg was amputated after a bout with cancer three years ago.

His body bears other scars.

He was shot twice by robbers in 1973, left bleeding and near death on the sidewalk near his home in Washington.

Few thought he would return to his Senate desk. He proved them wrong.

In January, Stennis will have been in continuous government harness for 60 years, a career that began with his election to the Mississippi Legislature in 1928.

A senator since winning a special election in 1947, Stennis has cast more than 13,200 roll call votes over the last four decades.

Colleagues say he is routinely the first in the door in the morning and the last to leave at night.

He responded to 96 percent of the roll calls taken so far this year.

In his career in Washington, he has served with 402 other senators, including many of the giants of the institution's 20th century history.

Although his memory runs to near the dawn of the century and to his parents telling their parents' stories of the fall of Vicksburg or of the burying of the family silver, Stennis always has been focused on the future.

On his long office table, once used by Richard Russell, is a small plaque that reads, "Look Ahead."

"That's part of my philosophy," Stennis said in an interview two years ago. "As a young lawyer I used to have to listen to people lamenting the past. You can't do that. You have to look ahead. I realize that life's not altogether what you make it. But that's a good part of it, what you make yourself."

His retirement, Senate Majority Leader Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., said Monday, is "tantamount to the proclamation of the end of an era."

Stennis retirement puts Byrd in good position

WASHINGTON (AP) — The decision of Sen. John C. Stennis not to seek re-election next year places the Senate's majority leader, Robert C. Byrd, in position to become the Senate's president pro tem and third in line of succession to the presidency.

This could happen if Byrd, D-W.Va., wins re-election to the Senate and if Democrats retain their Senate control. Democrats now hold a 54-46 Senate majority. Two Democrats and two Republicans have announced they will not seek re-election next year.

There are many ifs involved.

If Republicans capture the Senate in the 1988 elections, Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., would become the Senate's most senior member and resume the post as president pro tem he lost when Democrats became the Senate's majority party in 1986.

But if Democrats retain control, Monday's decision by Stennis, D-Miss., — coupled with the earlier decision of Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., not to seek re-election — would make Byrd the chamber's most senior Democrat.

Goetz says he won't stop defending self

Goetz

NEW YORK (AP) — Bernhard Goetz says his six-month prison sentence for illegal possession of the gun he used to shoot four young men on a subway won't deter him from defending himself.

"I have letters from people who have been permanently injured in crimes and say they would gladly trade places with me," Goetz said in a telephone interview late Monday. "They say they would rather have gotten my sentence than their injuries and gone through what they have gone through."

Goetz, 39, was sentenced earlier in the day by acting state Supreme Court Justice Stephen Crane, who presided over an eight week-trial stemming from the 1984 shootings. The jury convicted Goetz on June 16 of a single charge of illegal possession of a weapon, and acquitted him of attempted murder and assault.

Goetz, who is white, said he shot the four black 19-year-olds because he believed they were about to rob him when one approached and demanded $5. They said they were panhandling money to play video-game machines that they intended to burglarize.

Before sentencing, the state Probation Department had recommended Goetz receive "intensive supervision coupled with indefinite psychiatric intervention," but no jail time.

Besides the jail term, Crane fined Goetz $5,000, put him on probation for five years, ordered him to perform 280 hours of community service at New York University Medical Center, and directed him to undergo psychiatric treatment. Goetz remains free on $5,000 bail, pending appeal.

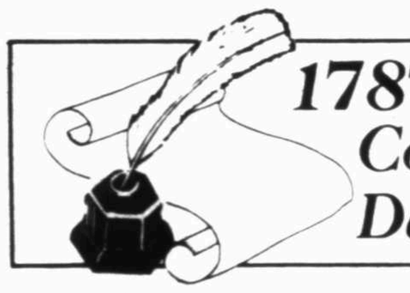

He could have received a maximum penalty of seven years in prison, but first offenders like him often do no time.

The judge said statistics show about half of first offenders convicted under the weapons law get prison terms.

"A non-jail sentence for Mr. Goetz would invite others to violate the gun law," Crane said. "Whether you agree with the law or not, it is the law and it was the law on Dec. 22, 1984, and it remains the law."

"It's not going to be a deterrent," Goetz told The Associated Press when asked what effect the sentence will have on his self-defense philosophy. In a threatening situation, the gunman said, he intends to defend himself "completely."

"If you break the law, you're a criminal," he said. "If you obey the law, you're a victim."

Associated Press

Saturday, Oct. 20, 1787

PHILADELPHIA TODAY

Many of Philadelphia's leading citizens gathered today for the meeting of the Pennsylvania Society for the Abolition of Slavery. A major topic of discussion was the provision in the new Constitution dealing with the slave trade. Generally, the members were quite pleased that the slave trade would be abolished in 1808. After the meeting, the society issued the following statement:

"We rejoice in the prospect of the good effects of this part of the proposed Constitution of our country, inasmuch as it will afford when it shall be exercised this first instance of a foreign power by a public acknowledgement doing homage to the Christian principle of doing to others what we wish them to do to us."

CONFEDERATION TODAY

A quorum was present today and Congress conducted business. It asked the Georgia and North Carolina to cede their western lands to the United States. The body recognized George Miller as the British Consul for North Carolina and South Carolina, although Great Britain and the United States did not have a treaty to establish consuls. And finally, Congress passed a resolution authorizing the postmaster general to reduce (!) mail rates by 25 percent, effective April 5, 1788. Congress went further, refining fixed rates for mailing packages, hoping more customers would use the government postal service.

RATIFICATION TODAY

It had been a little over a month since the federal Convention had adjourned. Several states were rapidly moving toward ratification, led by Pennsylvania, which already had scheduled elections for delegates to the ratifying convention on Nov. 6. In this atmosphere, many anti-Federalists were growing increasingly nervous that the new Constitution would become the law of the land before their concerns were seriously considered.

George Mason expressed his concerns today in a letter to Elbridge Gerry. He reported that Virginia was giving the Constitution a mixed reception, although, "in general it seems to be approved." He added that even the advocates admitted shortcomings in the document, and hoped Virginia's leaders would make a thorough examination and suggest amendments to correct the deficiencies. In essence, Mason was afraid that the Federalists would gain ratification so quickly that there would not be an opportunity for amendments. Finally, Mason asked Gerry how the Constitution was faring in Massachusetts. He wanted word directly from an ally, so he would not have to rely on "public reports or common newspaper intelligence."

DELEGATES TODAY

Richard Dobbs Spaight submitted his expense voucher to the state of North Carolina for his services related to the Convention. He claimed 277 pounds, 6 shillings, and 8 pence for expenses in Philadelphia from May 9 to Sept. 18, and about 128 pounds for his round trip from North Carolina to Philadelphia. He claimed a month for travel in each direction.

Robert Morris attempted to square his account for tobacco shipped to France with his agents, Constable and Ruckers of New York. Morris has expressed his annoyance that the New York office was paying too much for wheat. There was a surplus throughout the country and with some bargaining, the agents should be able to buy grain for a reasonable price.

LOOKING BACK

Slavery and the Constitution

In 1787, many Americans believed slavery was already headed on a course toward extinction. Massachusetts had abolished the institution and other states either had or soon would have legislation to gradually abolish slavery. Further, George Mason, one of the largest slave holders in the country, had offered the most impassioned anti-slavery speech in the Convention. Many delegates believed the institution of slavery would end gradually, making an anti-slavery provision in the Constitution unnecessary. Besides, the delegates from Georgia and the Carolina's would not tolerate abolition as part of the document.

The statement issued by the Pennsylvania Abolition Society today was a typical anti-slavery response to the new government. They believed slavery eventually would be eliminated if there were a ban on the slave trade. Without an influx of more laborers, the Southern states would follow the Northern states and gradually abolish the institution. These early reformers had no way of knowing how important cotton would become in the Southern economy.

Kosher meat plant doing well in Indianapolis

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Hebrew National's decision to move its kosher meat plant from New York City to Indianapolis, a city with a tiny Jewish community, was accompanied by predictions of ruin.

But after a year in a former pork processing plant, the company is cranking out 750,000 pounds of its famous frankfurters, salami, bologna, pastrami and corned beef here each week.

"Sure, people expect a kosher product to be made in New York, but would you think twice about using a sun tan oil that was made in Minnesota?" asked Harvey Potkin, vice president of manufacturing for the Bronx-based National Foods Inc., Hebrew National's parent company.

The decision to leave New York was met by disbelief.

Not only was the world's largest kosher food processor leaving the city with the world's largest Jewish population, but it was moving to Indiana, where Jews comprise just 0.4 percent of the population. And it was moving into a plant that once processed pork, consumption of which is forbidden under the Jewish dietary laws.

"I'd be the first to admit that we would have preferred to remain in New York, but the events that took place were threatening the ultimate survival of our company," Potkin said recently.

Hebrew National's decision to move came during a strike by members of the United Food and Commercial Workers union at the former plant in the New York City borough of Queens.

The strike, which began in June 1986, remains in arbitration over severence pay.

When company and union representatives failed to agree on a contract, Hebrew National moved part of its operation, and eventually all of it, to a downtown Indianapolis plant already operated by a sister division, United Beef Packers Inc.

"The strike was getting nasty and employees were being threatened," said Potkin, who oversees operations at the plant here. "Rather than risk injury, a decision was made to relocate on a permanent basis."

But a kosher food processor can't just move into a plant — especially one that used to process pork.

A team of 40 people, including rabbis, worked 48 hours to make the plant kosher. That involved boiling or steaming practically the entire 60,000-square-foot plant, said Potkin, a Brooklyn native.

When the company's decision to move was announced, many strikers, and some of the rabbis who supported them, predicted the move would lead to the company's ruin.

"Making kosher food in Indianapolis — such a thing is impossible to think," Rabbi Michael Engelman of Brooklyn told The New York Times.

But, not only is production forging ahead, the company says the move has resulted in an improved product due to advanced technology and Indianapolis' proximity to the company's suppliers in Nebraska and South Dakota.

"Instead of taking three days for the meat to get to the plant, now it just takes one," he said. "So it's given us a better ability to obtain a fresh meat supply."

About 200 union jobs were lost in New York; the Indianapolis plant now employs about 300 workers, who make an hourly wage about half of what the company paid its New York employees.

But Potkin insists the decision to move was not an economic one. It will be years before the company can recoup the money it lost during the strike and invested in the new plant, he said.

"We did what we had to do as a result of the strike to survive, to remain a viable company," he said.

As for the rabbinical certification of Hebrew National's product, Potkin said the plant never operates without at least one or two of the four rabbis it employs.

"We have brought in supervisors who are just as qualified as they would be in New York or Jerusalem," said Rabbi Tibor H. Stern, the company's head rabbi.

"We're even that much more concerned, because there's that doubt in people's minds."

Bork strategy to be discussed

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate Democratic and Republican policy meetings may determine whether debate begins quickly on Robert H. Bork's Supreme Court nomination, or if a long delay is likely.

Both parties hold their weekly strategy sessions today, and the Supreme Court nomination is expected to be discussed thoroughly. Fifty-four of the 100 senators have declared themselves against the nominee.

Senate Majority Leader Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va. has been growing impatient with Bork's GOP supporters, who have demanded time to make their case and rebuffed his calls for a quick vote. He even hinted that he might move to table the nomination — in other words, take it off the agenda.

However, the timetable for a debate on Bork has now become more complicated, since the Senate will first deal with a controversy over invoking the War Powers Act.

Planned parliamentary maneuvers might leave the Senate no choice but to debate whether Persian Gulf hostilities must trigger the act. This could hold up the Bork debate indefinitely unless it is taken up by unanimous consent.

Nancy ready to go home; Doctors advise her to remain few more days

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nancy Reagan feels so good just days after breast cancer surgery that "she thinks she can go home," but she's been advised to remain in the hospital several days longer, her spokeswoman says.

President Reagan predicted his wife would be back home "in a few days" as he returned to the White House on Monday following a three-hour visit with Mrs. Reagan at Bethesda Naval Medical Center.

"She's just doing great," a beaming president called out to reporters.

Reagan, who says his wife's recovery is ahead of schedule, greeted his wife of 35 years with "a big kiss and hug" and presented her with a small wicker basket filled with "her favorite snack" — home-baked cookies, according to Elaine Crispen, the first lady's press secretary.

Presidential physician John Hutton reported earlier in the day that "Mrs. Reagan's recovery is continuing very well and she feels wonderful."

The first lady underwent a modified radical mastectomy on Saturday to remove a cancerous left breast and several lymph nodes. On Sunday, Hutton reported that laboratory tests on the lymph glands showed her cancer had not spread and that her chances for a complete recovery were excellent.

"I'm feeling just great," Mrs. Crispen quoted the first lady as telling her. Mrs. Reagan is doing so well, "she thinks she can go home, but we won't let her," her spokeswoman added with a chuckle.

Mrs. Reagan's doctors said she should stay in the hospital from five to seven days in total.

Mrs. Crispen said the first lady, the daughter of a neurosurgeon and a stickler on getting the president to adhere to doctor's orders, said she'd go along with their advice.

"I've made sure others follow doctors' orders, and now I'm going to follow some myself," Mrs. Crispen quoted her as saying.

"She's looking foward to going home, but she knows that it's best to stay a few more days," Mrs. Crispen added.

Mrs. Reagan has been keeping busy during her stay in the hospital and is "not at all down" about having lost a breast, Mrs. Crispen said.

"We had a girl-to-girl talk. ...She believes it's a matter that each individual has to deal with," Mrs. Crispen said. "She's got a good attitude."

On Monday, Mrs. Reagan got her first visitor outside her family — long-time friend Mary Jane Wick — and has been keeping busy doing routine paperwork, looking over her get-well cards and flowers and chatting on the telephone with her children, step-children and friends, Mrs. Crispen said.

She has been reading the weekly magazines, daily newspapers and the book "Life and Death in Shanghai" by Nien Cheng, who was a recent guest at a White House state dinner.

"The doctors told her to keep active, so she's been walking up and down the hall," the spokeswoman said. "But they've also said, 'Get some rest, don't overdo. ...After all, you did have surgery.' "

The first lady was told by friends who had similar surgery to make sure she doesn't pamper her left arm, the spokeswoman said. Lymph nodes under that arm were removed to determine whether the cancer had spread.

Mrs. Crispen said she's seen the first lady "hold her mirror, comb her hair," using the arm, and added that "it's not glued to her side" with bandages.

Cables, flowers and get-well messages have arrived from around the world, ranging from opera star Luciano Pavarotti to former Redskin quarterback Joe Theismann.

Donald Woomer Sr., and Linda Despot of Hollidaysburg, Pa., pose with the first installmanet check in their North America lottery record win of more than $46 million in the Pennsylvania Super Seven lottery game that they held the single winning jackpot ticket.

Couple wins record lottery

HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP) — The small-town couple who won a record North American lottery jackpot of $46 million say they will travel, help relatives and take in stock car races but aren't talking about stock market investments.

Donald R. Woomer, 55, and Linda K. Despot, 37, claimed their first-year check of $1.4 million on Monday, the same day investors took a bath as the stock market suffered its biggest plunge in history.

In each of the next 25 years, the couple, whose odds of winning were 1 in 9.6 million, will receive similar annual payments after 20 percent federal income tax is withheld.

At a news conference here, the couple, who live together in Hollidaysburg, were asked if they would invest some of their winnings in stocks.

They did not respond, but the suggestion triggered a burst of laughter in the room.

They did say that returning to work was not in their plans.

"The morning I looked at the numbers that was it," said Woomer, a self-employed plasterer. "Early retirement," added Ms. Despot, a bookkeeper at a car dealership.

Woomer and Ms. Despot have been living together for about five years, and marriage also may be in the future.

"It's looking good," said Ms Despot.

Woomer is separated, but not divorced from his wife, and said he supposes she may get some of the prize. Woomer has a 29-year-old daughter and a 32-year-old son. Ms. Despot has a 14-year daughter from a previous marriage.

The Super 7 jackpot swelled to $46 million over five weeks as no one won the lottery.

NATION IN BRIEF

Two successful AMRAAM tests reported by Air Force

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Air Force is reporting two more successful tests of its new AMRAAM aerial dogfighting missile, bringing to 37 the number of favorable trials out of 45 conducted to date.

Both of the two most recent tests, conducted last week, involved the weapon's ability to discriminate among targets, the service said in a statement Monday.

The AMRAAM — Advanced Medium Range Air-to-Air Missile — is a so-called "smart" missile that has been under development since 1981. It is designed to use its own small radar to home in on enemy planes without having to be guided by a pilot.

Summer cooling costs up

WASHINGTON (AP) — A new government survey says the typical American household spent $430 on air conditioning this summer, about $17 more than normal.

While costs varied widely from region to region, residential cooling from May through September cost only about 4 percent more than in a normal year, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration said Monday.

Residents of the east south central states faced the highest air conditioning costs, averaging $580 for the season, according to the study by NOAA's Assessment and Information Services Center. That was $38 more than they would have been expected to pay in normal summer weather.

But the average residence in the Pacific Coast states required only $235 for air conditioning during the summer, $7 below normal.

New ribavarin tests OK'd

WASHINGTON (AP) — The federal government is giving its OK to new clinical tests of ribavirin, a drug whose developer believes it will help delay the onset of AIDS in people infected with the virus that causes the disease.

The Food and Drug Administration gave its approval Monday, allowing testing of the drug in a clinical setting on 32 patients with lowered white blood cell counts or AIDS-Related Complex.

Approval for the new, if limited tests, is the first action on the drug since ICN Pharmaceuticals, Inc., of Costa Mesa, Calif., called a news conference last January to announce that just-completed clinical trials had shown the drug to be effective in preventing progression to full-blown AIDS.
