Sexual affair

SHALIMAR, Fla. — A 45-year-old woman accused of having a six-month sexual relationship with a 12-year-old boy has been placed on probation. Pam Mouer, a child-care worker, was sentenced Wednesday to 10 years' probation and ordered to pay $500 in counseling for the boy, who remains infatuated with her, his family said. Judge Robert Barron also ordered Ms. Mouer never to see or talk to the boy again. She pleaded no contest Feb. 13 to performing a lewd act on a child. She has since separated from her husband, who has custody of their two children. The boy was a friend of the Mouers' 14-year-old daughter.

Henreid dies

SANTA MONICA, Calif. — Actor Paul Henreid, the stoic resistance fighter Victor Laszlo in the film classic "Casablanca," has died. He was 84. Henreid, who created another of cinema's vintage moments when he sentimentally lit two cigarettes and handed one to Bette Davis in "Now, Voyager," died Sunday, a daughter, Monika Henreid, announced Thursday. Henreid died of heart failure at Santa Monica Hospital, said hospital spokeswoman Wendy Guillies. A private funeral was held Thursday. Henreid's career spanned 50 years. His credits included "Night Train," "Devotion," "In Our Time," "Between Two Worlds," and "Of Human Bondage. But his roles in "Casablanca" and "Now, Voyager" were the defining moments of his career. In 1942's "Casablanca" he starred with Humphrey Bogart, Ingrid Bergman, Dooley Wilson, Claude Rains, Sydney Greenstreet and Peter Lorre. "Now, Voyager," released that same year, featured Henreid with Miss Davis and Rains. Henreid was born Paul George Julius Hernreid Ritter von Wasel Waldingau in Trieste, Italy, on Jan. 10, 1908.

Wynonna's coming-out party is a smash

By Allen E. Howland
Assistant City Editor

For the 4,000 fans that filled Chaparral Center, she was their only need.

Wynonna's Thursday night coming-out party coincided with her taking over the top spot with her first solo No. 1 hit on the Cashbox and Billboard Country charts, "She Is His Only Need."

"Thank you all for coming to my coming-out party," she told the crowd at the end of a rollicking rendition of "Little Bit of Love" that closed the 10-song set of her first-ever solo concert.

The daughter half of one of country's all-time favorite musical duos captivated the crowd with a mix of up-tempo favorites from her debut solo album "Wynonna," which was released Tuesday, and classic hits that she and her mother put on top of the charts.

She returned to the stage for an encore of "No One Else On Earth," and closed the night with the aptly titled "It Ain't Easy to Say Goodbye."

As she walked off stage, she said "It was a great night. I'll never forget it."

The expressions of the rapt fans mirrored that sentiment throughout the hall. Pauses were punctuated by screams and squeals throughout the performance, an act that she met with a broad smile that seemingly dimmed the floodlights around her.

Sheriff returns to jail

■ Judge revokes bond of former Presidio County sheriff because he doesn't think Thompson will show up for his May 8 sentencing on federal drug charges.

Associated Press

Federal Judge Jerry Buchmeyer of Dallas revoked bond for former Presidio County Sheriff Rick Thompson of Marfa and ordered him to jail Thursday to await sentencing on May 8 on federal drug charges.

Thompson was arrested when he showed up at the Midland federal courthouse. He was being held Thursday night in the Midland County Detention Center.

"The range of imprisonment is such that there is no condition of release that could guarantee his appearance at the time of sentencing," Buchmeyer said in his order, assistant U.S. Attorney Tom Beery told the Reporter-Telegram Thursday night.

Buchmeyer issued the order after he received a presentence report from the U.S. Probation Office in Dallas.

Beery, in Midland, said Thursday night he had not seen a copy of the confidential pre-sentence report, but would receive it today.

"I'd like to take a look at the pre-sentence report to see what prompted it, but I'm never sorry to see a guilty person behind bars," Beery said.

Thompson was indicted in January on drug charges in connection with 2,400 pounds of cocaine seized from a horse

CRMWD takes bids for pipeline project

■ Georgia company submits lowest bid for Lake Ivie project.

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

ODESSA — More lake water from Central Texas will be flowing into Midland and other West Texas cities and towns by 1995 as a result of possibly the largest water pipeline project in Texas history.

Another step toward that more-water assurance happened Thursday.

Georgia pipeline contractor John D. Stephens submitted the apparent low bid of $75.9 million for the laying of 156.3 miles of underground pipeline from Lake Ivie southeast of Ballinger to Midland and Odessa by way of San Angelo.

"It's a start of the final step in developing the last of our renewable surface-water sources," Midland Mayor Carroll Thomas said of the Colorado River Municipal Water District (CRMWD) project. "They (lakes) fill up. Our underground reserves don't fill back up."

The pipeline and Lake Ivie will offer West Texans from Abilene and San Angelo to Midland and Odessa "a lot more certainty about our future water supplies," Thomas said.

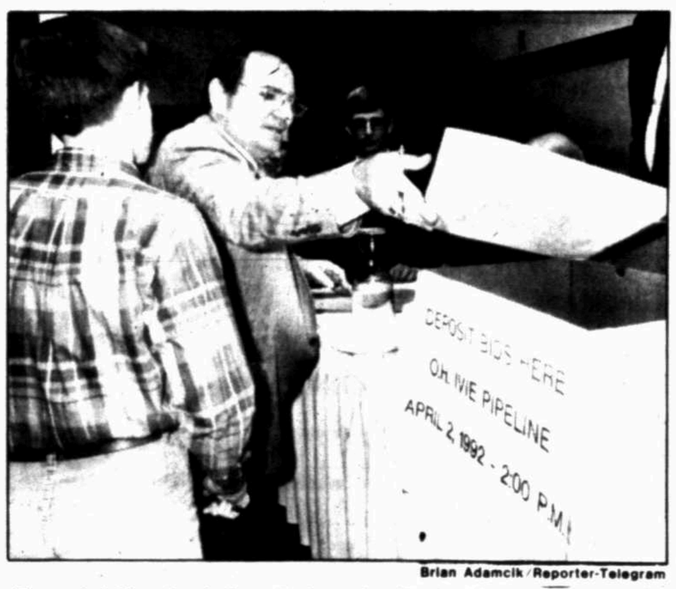

Of the project's nine bidders from California to Georgia, Stephens, 52, submitted the two lowest bids: $75.9 million based on a concrete-steel pipe and $81.6 million based on steel pipe. The Stephens' bids include cost of the pipe, which is to be manufactured by Gifford-Hill-American of Dallas and Lubbock.

The CRMWD board is to award the contract on the pipeline project on April 16 in the CRMWD Big Spring headquarters following a review of the low bids, said O.H. Ivie, the water district's general manager.

The project is to be built in three phases: 48.3 miles of 60-inch diameter pipe from Lake Ivie to San Angelo; 54 miles of 53-inch diameter pipe from San Angelo to Garden City, and another 54 miles of 53-inch diameter pipe from Garden City to midway between Midland and Odessa.

The third lowest bid, $86 million, was a joint venture headlined by Garney Companies Inc. of Kansas City, Mo.

Candidates get rough reception

By Scott Shepard
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — Democratic presidential candidates Jerry Brown and Bill Clinton received stinging rebukes Thursday from two of New York's most powerful political forces: the Jewish community and Wall Street.

Brown, in a morning meeting with Jewish leaders, was interrupted by hecklers who criticized his overtures to the Rev. Jesse Jackson as a running mate.

Clinton, during a lunchtime speech on Wall Street, was booed by button-down bankers after he called the 1980s a decade of greed and said he opposed a cut in the federal tax on capital gains.

The rough receptions suffered by both candidates indicated just how volatile the Democratic presidential race has become with only five days remaining before New York's pivotal primary.

Polls show a sizeable number of New Yorkers undecided between Jury convicts mob's Gotti on 13 counts

Gotti

NEW YORK (AP) — John Gotti, the brash Mafia boss who blasted his way to the top of the nation's most powerful crime family, was convicted Thursday of racketeering and murder charges. He faces a life sentence.

"I'll be OK," Gotti told supporters after listening to the jury forewoman announce "guilty" on all 13 counts. His top lieutenant also was convicted.

The federal district court jury decided the mob boss had murdered five of his associates in the Gambino crime family.

The stunning verdict, after just 13 hours of deliberations, crowned the government's six-year crusade to put the "Teflon Don" behind bars. Three times since 1986, Gotti had beaten charges against him.

This time, Gotti, 51, was done in by his own voice and the testimony of once-trusted underboss Salvatore "Sammy Bull" Gravano. Gotti was heard on hours of secretly recorded tapes, openly discussing murder and other Mafia business.

"The Teflon is gone. The don is covered with Velcro, and all the charges stuck," said James Fox, special agent in charge of the FBI's New York office.

Gravano, who admitted to 19 murders on the stand, said he committed 10 at Gotti's direction and provided a chilling narrative of the killings that boosted Gotti from capo to mob boss.

Just before the jury forewoman read the verdict, Gotti was smiling confidently. He showed no reaction as she began

Morales launches criminal investigation against Tilton

By Karen Potter
N.Y. Times News Service

AUSTIN, Texas — Attorney General Dan Morales raised the stakes Thursday in his legal battle with television evangelist Robert Tilton, announcing he has begun a criminal investigation into whether Tilton violated state fraud laws.

Thwarted in his attempts to investigate the minister under civil statutes, Morales said the criminal inquiry could possibly lead to jail time for Tilton if it is proven that he systematically defrauded his followers and donors.

However, Morales said he had no evidence of any criminal violations by Tilton and his Word of Faith World Outreach Center Church, based in the Dallas suburb of Farmers Branch.

A lawyer for Tilton said that the attorney general has no authority to initiate a criminal investigation, and she suggested that he will not follow through.

"The attorney general tends to have a need to save face," said Tilton attorney Diane Henson of Austin. "And I don't know what they're really going to do.... They can puff all they want. That's just not their jurisdiction."

Morales announced his new "enhanced and intensified" legal strategy at a news conference Thursday, two days after Tilton ignored Morales' latest deadline for turning over financial records of his ministry, which brings in an estimated $65 million a year.

Tilton this week took the drastic step of unincorporating his church to deny Morales' latest claim to records under the state law governing non-profit corporations.

But Morales said he would not be deterred, and he promised to fight on for weeks or months if necessary to protect the interests of Texas consumers.

"If Robert Tilton believes we are going to back down in this investigation he is sorely mistaken," Morales said. "And if Robert Tilton believes he can flout the law and operate in some fashion with immunity from state civil and criminal statutes he is sorely mistaken. I think he is going to find that out soon enough."

The beginning of the criminal investigation was one facet of a four-pronged legal attack Morales announced Thursday.

Morales also appealed a federal judge's ruling that his office acted in bad faith and could not investigate Tilton under the state's deceptive trade practices and charitable trust laws; announced he would continue to demand records from Tilton under the nonprofit corporation law; and said his office would turn over to federal officials documentation that may trigger federal prosecution.

Morales said that, contrary to the assertions of Tilton's attorneys, the FBI, Internal Revenue Service and postal inspectors have not conducted a thorough investigation of Tilton's church, and he urged them to do so.

The attorney general said that he was beginning the criminal investigation into Tilton and his "business" both because of roadblocks in his investigation under civil statutes and because of new allegations. He said that his office would investigate whether Tilton had violated fraud or theft by deception laws.

In Texas, the state's attorney has limited criminal jurisdiction and Morales will have to find a local district attorney to team up with if he is to pursue the criminal investigation to the fullest. The only way Morales could get a grand jury to issue indictments or to enforce the issuance of subpoenas is if a district attorney would agree to let him present his case to that county's grand jury, officials said.

Spokesman Gray McBride said that if Morales' office finds sufficient reason to pursue a criminal violation, he will have no problem getting cooperation from the local district attorney in that county.

"The district attorney would play a lead role in the prosecution of the case in court," McBride said.

Morales did not offer any more specifics Thursday about the allegations his office is investigating. The investigation followed the broadcast last fall of an ABC News "PrimeTime Live" report on Tilton, which suggested that prayer requests went into the trash bin after donations were removed and that Tilton lives a lavish lifestyle on money from his followers. During a court hearing last month, Tilton and his wife, Marte, said those allegations were false.

Tilton attorney Henson said that if Morales continues harassing the church, the ministry may return to the court of U.S. District Judge Sam Sparks, who gave Morales a dressing down when he blocked much of his investigation last month.

"We've had one federal judge rule already that they're acting in bad faith," Henson said. "I think this is just a continuation of that."

trailer parked at the Presidio County fairgrounds. He was originally held without bond but was later released on $5,000 bond and confinded to his Marfa home with an electronic monitoring device.

Thompson pleaded guilty to conspiring to import the cocaine and faces 10 years to life in prison and a $4 million fine, although prosecutors have recommended he receive 10 years without parole.

Three other charges originally filed against Thompson were dropped when he struck a deal with prosecutors to plead guilty to the importation charge.

Thompson's attorney, Barry Crutchfield, also was not at home or in his office. Beery said Crutchfield had been in trial.

Barbara Thompson, Thompson's wife, reached at home said she was surprised by the news but did not know the motivation behind it. She said Thompson has complied with the orders of his probation.

GOTTI: Mafia don faces sentence of life in prison

announcing, "Guilty."

At one point, Gotti — impeccable as usual in a charcoal double-breasted suit, white-on-white shirt and floral tie — motioned to his lawyer to remain cool despite the result.

His attorney, Albert Krieger, sat dejectedly at the defense table as the word "guilty" echoed through the courtroom. "I anticipated the jury would spend more time evaluating some of the issues," said Krieger.

Asked how Gotti handled the verdict, Krieger replied, "He is a realist, a person of enormous mental and emotional strength." The verdict will be appealed, he said.

"Our country is sick to the core if it is willing to pay for testimony by literally absolving a person of 19 confessed murders," Krieger said of Gravano's appearance.

Gotti and co-defendant Frank Locascio, who have been jailed without bond since the indictment was unsealed in December 1990, could be sentenced to life in prison. Sentencing was scheduled for June 23.

"Today's verdict by a courageous jury is the end of a very long road. Justice has been served, and it feels awfully good," said U.S. Attorney Andrew Maloney.

Locascio, 59, also was convicted of murder and racketeering, and faces the same sentence. He was acquitted of a single count of illegal gambling.

"Where's the proof? Where's the proof?" muttered Locascio's son Salvatore, seated in the courtroom as the verdict came in. Reputed Gambino capo Jack D'Amico said, "It's total insanity."

The jurors remained anonymous and sequestered at an undisclosed hotel throughout the 10-week trial because of allegations of jury tampering in other Gotti trials.

Gotti was convicted of ordering the murder of his predecessor as head of the Gambino crime family, "Big Paul" Castellano, to assume control.

The Dec. 16, 1985, assassination of Castellano and his lieutenant, Thomas Bilotti, was the cornerstone of the indictment.

They were gunned down at the height of rush hour outside a popular Manhattan steakhouse.

Gotti "became boss immediately after the murder. That's why he murdered him," Assistant U.S. Attorney John Gleeson told the jury.

Gotti reveled in the role of crime boss. He dressed in $1,800 designer suits with hand-painted silk ties, was host of an annual Fourth of July blast with illegal fireworks, and walked away three times after the government brought him to trial.

He appeared on the cover of Time magazine as well as in the Ravenite Social Club, his favored hangout in Little Italy. The media dubbed him "The Dapper Don."

But prosecutors presented a different picture of Gotti: a cold-blooded killer who murdered with words instead of weapons.

"Murder plays a central role in the business of this enterprise. It is the way in which discipline was maintained. . . . It's the way in which power was obtained," Gleeson said in his summation. "Murder is the heart and soul of this enterprise."

Gotti and Locascio were charged with murder, murder conspiracy, illegal gambling, loansharking, obstruction of justice, bribery of a public official and tax fraud.

Much of the trial drama in the Brooklyn courthouse focused on the showdown between Gotti and Gravano, his once-trusted confidante.

Gravano, Gotti's closest aide, turned against the Mafia and cut a deal to testify. He spent nine days on the stand, detailing a lifetime of murder and mayhem — much of it ordered by Gotti, he said.

FBI bugs planted in Gotti's hangouts "opened a window" into the Gambino family; Gravano "opened the door," Gleeson said.

The defense presented two different villains: Gravano, a psychotic killer who admits to 19 murders, and an ambitious prosecutorial team that would stop at nothing to convict Gotti.

Gravano "knows and believes that he has this valuable product to sell . . . John Gotti's head on a silver platter," said Krieger.

Gravano, a stocky man with slicked back hair and a broad flat face, testified as Gotti shot him a withering glare.

In a soft, slightly hoarse voice, the 47-year-old Gravano told of taking the Mafia's solemn oath of silence, or "omerta." He went on to break it, providing a spellbinding narrative of how Gotti's henchmen shot Castellano and Bilotti.

Gravano said he and Gotti watched from a car parked a block away: "Tommy (Bilotti) squatted down to look through the window. . . . He was actually watching Paul get shot."

A few moments later, he and Gotti drove by to see Bilotti's body sprawled across East 46th Street. "We pulled up. . . . I told John he was gone," Gravano said.

The trial was the fourth for Gotti in the last six years. A 1986 assault case was dismissed when the complaining witness declined to identify Gotti.

The following year, he was acquitted in a federal racketeering case. Gotti was again found innocent in 1990 of conspiracy and assault in the shooting of a union official.

Libyans with firebombs ransack Venezuelan Embassy

TRIPOLI, Libya (AP) — Young Libyans with firebombs ransacked the Venezuelan Embassy and tried to storm the Russian mission Thursday during a day of protests against countries that supported a U.N. air and arms embargo on Libya.

The U.N. Security Council, in emergency session, demanded Libya pay for damage to the embassies and laid blame for the attacks on Col. Moammar Gadhafi.

"This is so transparently and obviously directed to bring pressure on members of the Security Council," said U.S. Ambassador Thomas R. Pickering.

Women and schoolgirls carried white flowers to the embassies of India and Morocco, two of the five U.N. Security Council members that abstained in Tuesday's 10-0 vote to impose sanctions on Libya.

Hundreds of students smashed furniture and ripped up the garden at the Venezuelan mission. Others tried to break into the Russian Embassy and destroyed four cars, then burned a Russian flag on the ambassador's limousine when they were turned back.

Rocks were thrown at the Austrian mission and boisterous protests were held outside the Belgian, French and Italian embassies.

Despite the violence, there were no mass attempts by foreigners to leave the country. Many Western countries, including the United States, had warned their citizens in recent weeks to leave Libya.

Diplomats said they thought the demonstrations were orchestrated, possibly by revolutionary committees loyal to Gadhafi. With the intense police activity in Libya, it was unlikely the demonstrations could have occurred spontaneously, they said.

Many protesters arrived in busloads, and police reinforcements turned up early at several targeted embassies.

"We didn't ask for protection," said Austrian Ambassador Wilfried Almoslechner. "They just came."

"They just watched it unfurl," said Aga Babyan, the Russian first secretary.

The official Libyan news agency JANA said dozens of demonstrators were hospitalized after clashes with riot police. Western diplomats said they had no reports of any injuries.

The sanctions were imposed on Libya after it refused to surrender six alleged intelligence agents sought in the bombings of Pan Am Flight 103 in 1988 and a French airliner in 1989, which killed a total of 441 people.

The sanctions will take effect on April 15 if Libya does not hand over the suspects.

It was only the second time the Security Council had voted to punish a country for ignoring its demands on peace and security.

High to be in mid-60s

Today's forecast calls for cloudy skies with a 20 percent chance of showers and a high in the mid-60s. Tonight should be partly cloudy with a low in the mid-40s, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Saturday should be partly cloudy with a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms and a high in the mid-70s.

After an overnight low of 38, Thursday's high reached 46 compared with the record high for that date of 94 set in 1946. The record low for that date is 29 set in 1987.

STATE

Texas skies were partly cloudy Thursday behind a cold front that brought unseasonably low temperatures. Light rain dampened North Texas following morning reports of sleet. Showers also were reported along the coastal bend.

Winds were variable at 5 to 10 miles an hour with northerly winds in the Panhandle.

Temperatures reached only into the 40s to 60s. Readings at 3 p.m. included 37 degrees at Guadalupe Pass in West Texas to 66 degrees in Brownsville in the Lower Rio Grande Valley.

West Texas was expected to become partly cloudy through Saturday with widely scattered showers and thunderstorms possible Saturday. Highs today were to be in the 60s except 50s in the mountains. Lows tonight were to be mainly in the 40s and highs Saturday mainly in the 70s except 60s in the mountains.

NATION

Low temperatures were in the 20s and low 30s across Mississippi, Alabama, George and Arkansas. Records were broken or tied in those states and in Indiana, Missouri, Ohio, Tennessee, and West Virginia.

Dave Ihle, a meteorologist at the Southeastern Agricultural Weather Service Center in Auburn, Ala., said the cold was a threat to at least five crops: peaches, apples, watermelons, green beans and tobacco.

Warnings for frost and freezing temperatures were posted over much of Georgia, northern and central Alabama, northern and central Mississippi, South Carolina except the southern coastal beaches, and much of Arkansas.

A winter storm warning was posted for early Friday across northeast Maine. Showers were scattered at midday over Texas. Snow extended over the lower Great Lakes, lower Michigan, the central and southern Appalachians and the lower Ohio Valley.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

WYNONNA: Solo performance wows loyal fans

of her band and three back-up singers on the multi-tiered stage throughout the show, stopping atop the bridge over the drummer's head for "She Is His Only Need," drawing the greatest ovation of the night.

"Man, I was nervous," she said at the close of the song as she finished the first live version of her hit.

"I feel like I'm singing in public for the very first time."

The emotional peak of the show came early, when she dedicated the stirring ballad "I Can Still Feel All That Love From Here," to her mother, Naomi, who served as road manager for the show and watched from behind the sound-mixing board at the foot of the stage.

As her daughter launched into the third verse of the song, Naomi lifted her ever-present sunglasses to dry a tear as she beamed with pride at Wynonna's emotional delivery.

Billy Dean spent his "best birthday ever, doing what I like best, playing music," and opening the show for Wynonna on the first day of his 31st year.

Dean entertained the crowd with his current No. 6 Cashbox hit "Only the Wind," and his Academy of Country Music Song of the Year-nominated "Somewhere in my Broken Heart," and other favorites.

His female fans screamed with delight as he did a strictly G-rated bump and grind to the "Steamroller Blues," midway through his 12-song set.

In addition to several selections from his self-titled debut album, Dean treated the crowd to a preview of his next single, "Billy the Kid," and a cut from his next album "Cast Iron Heart," which he has been recording in Nashville with the Oak Ridge Boys.

"Time is a very interesting thing and I'm very aware of the time limit we have here," he said.

Turning 30 was "a kind of a bittersweet birthday" but the West Texas hospitality extended by fans who inundated him with cards and best wishes softened the blow.

WATER: Pipe to be laid in 3 phases

(From 1A)

But Garney had dropped its original bid from $110 million to $86 million were it to be awarded the contract for construction of the pipeline's three phases.

The highest bid was $120 million by Gilbert of Texas Construction Company of Fort Worth and Texas Industrial Company.

Of the nine bidders, Stephens was the only single bidder. The others were joint ventures.

Of the range of bids, Stephens noted that "Everybody looks at projects in different ways. That's the reason you take bids."

The 156.3-mile Lake Ivie pipeline project "is the largest job of its kind that has ever been let in Texas," Stephens said.

Stephens, who digs trenches and lays pipelines "pretty well from Texas back to the East Coast," has been in pipeline-construction work for 30 years. He lives in Stone Mountain community in Georgia.

"We don't see any major (pipeline) problems," Stephens said following the opening of bids by CRMWD's board of directors in the Holiday Inn Center in Odessa at 2 p.m. Thursday. "We know what we can do. We're in the business."

The work, he said, is "very repetitious."

"The ground conditions are roughly the same all the way through," Stephens said.

Construction, which is to get under way at mid-year, is to be completed by February 1995, Ivie noted. The 48.3-mile Lake Ivie-to-San Angelo phase is to be finished by July 1993, according to Stephens' projections.

Ivie said that Stephens' low bid was "nearly $8 million below my estimate.

"We are pleased with the bid we got," Ivie said. "We are running on a tight budget, and this will safely let us do the job within our budgeted dollar amount."

Last year, CRMWD issued for sale $115 million in revenue bonds to raise money for the building the pipeline and installing six 3,000-horsepower electric power station to pump the water uphill to Midland-Odessa.

Pump-station costs will be about $18 million, Ivie said.

All told, Ivie said, the lake and pipeline projects amounts to about $180 million: $65 million for Freese Dam which impounds Lake Ivie and for developing the 30-square-mile lake basin and $115 million for the pipeline-pump station projects and engineering costs.

Lake Ivie, which was named after O.H. Ivie who has been general manager of the 1949-created CRMWD since 1965, was finished in March 1990.

Freese and Nichols, a Fort Worth engineering firm, designed the dam and pipeline projects.

Midland is bearing about 30 percent of the cost of the pipeline, noted Midland City Manager Fred Poe.

The indebtedness incurred in the sale of the bonds will be paid off by water-bill revenue.

The water district will absorb about 62 percent of the cost, and San Angelo will finance about 8 percent.

The district is made up of member cities of Big Spring, Odessa and Snyder. In addition to those cities, the CRMWD serves cities such as Midland, San Angelo, Stanton, Robert Lee and Abilene by contract.

Midland, which owns 16.54 percent of the water in Lake Ivie, guaranteed that percentage of funds to help finance the $65 million cost of the 554,000-acre-foot Lake Ivie project.

Poe noted that in each month's Midland water bills, about 25 percent of each household and business water bill, not including fees for trash pickup and sewage disposal, is committed to paying off the debts.

Currently, Midland receives water from three sources: The CRMWD's Lake Thomas, which is southwest of Snyder, and Lake Spence, which is just west of Robert Lee, and from the Midland-owned Paul Davis Field north of Midland.

Lake Ivie, which is at 99 percent capacity, "will be the best water we have by far — as far as quality is concerned," Poe said. "It's going to be one of major supplies of water in the future."

The Lake Ivie system is designed for supplying water to West Texas "possibly beyond the year 2040," Ivie said.

The pipeline system is designed to carry up to 90 million gallons of water a day from Lake Ivie to San Angelo in the 60-inch line. San Angelo is entitled to 25 million gallons a day. The 53-inch line from San Angelo to Midland-Odessa is designed to carry 65 million gallons a day.

Ivie said that "every penny" of the $180-million cost of the lake and pipeline project is "derived from the sale of revenue bonds.

"There's not one penny of tax money in the project," Ivie said. "It doesn't belong to the taxpayers. It belongs to the people living in the cities who are deriving their water supply from CRMWD. Only those who are using the water are paying for the project."

CANDIDATES: Wall Street rebukes Clinton

(From 1A)

Brown, the long-shot anti-establishment candidate, and Clinton, the shaky front-runner.

Brown, hoping to cut into Clinton's lead among blacks, has touted his choice of Jackson as a potential running mate.

But the mere mention of Jackson's name by Brown at a meeting with Jewish leaders Thursday drew hisses and boos.

One heckler, state Assemblyman Dov Hikind of Brooklyn, was removed from the meeting after he jumped to his feet and began shouting just a few feet away from Brown.

"You insult the Jewish community by picking Jesse Jackson," shouted Hikind, a Clinton supporter.

Jackson has long been anathema to the city's Jews for calling New York "Hymietown," embracing PLO leader Yasser Arafat and accepting support from Black Moslem leader Louis Farrakhan, who once called Judaism a "gutter religion."

But Brown defended his choice of Jackson, saying the civil rights leader is one of the few Americans with stature enough in the black community to help heal the nation's racial divisions.

"We have to have everyone pull together. ... We've got to make room for all of God's children," Brown said.

"This is a pre-Weimar situation," he added, referring to the German democracy destroyed by the Nazis.

Brown also apologized for saying in a speech on Wall Street that he wanted to drive "the money lenders from the temple" and then reading a list of Clinton's financial backers, many of whom had Jewish names.

He said he was reading from an article that he hadn't seen before and stopped as soon as he realized the implications.

Clinton also ran into trouble Thursday on Wall Street, saying in a speech at the New York Stock Exchange that the 1980s were a period when "the stock market tripled and wages for working people went down."

Bronx cheers from the crowd led him to explain that he had nothing against Wall Street and wealth, but that he wanted to make corporations more responsible for investing in American jobs and workers.

"I want opportunity first and then responsibility from Wall Street to Main Street to the meanest streets of this country," he said.

Earlier in the day, Clinton met with about 40 black clergy leaders to ask for their support, but carefully sidestepped reporters' questions about whether he would consider Jackson as a running mate.

"I have said repeatedly that I am not going to play the personality game" regarding a vice-presidential choice, Clinton said.

Kurdish youth reveals surviving Saddam's killing pits

By Louis J. Salome
N.Y. Times News Service

SUMOOD CAMP, Iraq — A bullet in his left shoulder, his mother and three sisters lifeless at his feet and 50 more Kurds dead or dying in the pit where he stood, 12-year-old Taimur Abdullah begged the Iraqi soldier for life.

A tear started to bubble in the soldier's eye, Taimur recalls, but it evaporated when a nearby officer saw the sliver of sympathy. The Kurds deserved none, the officer said.

The soldier again sprayed the pit with bullets, striking Taimur in the lower back. That was supposed to silence Taimur with all the others from his mountain village of Kolajo.

But it didn't.

When the soldiers walked away from the long, narrow, three-foot-deep pit to await the bulldozers that would bury their victims and their crimes, Taimur escaped.

Now he can tell the story of Iraq's killing pits near its border with Saudi Arabia, where Saddam Hussein's soldiers had transported thousands of Kurds to be slaughtered.

Taimur is the only person known to have seen the pits and lived to tell the horror.

It happened four years ago, when Saddam Hussein launched his vicious campaign to exterminate the Kurds he could no subjugate. At the time, the United States and other Western governments were helping Iraq beat back Islamic fundamentalist Iran.

The World

With inspiration perverted from the Koran, Saddam declared the Muslim Kurds to be infidels. He destroyed about 4,500 of their mountain villages, used chemical weapons, and exterminated more than 180,000 of them.

His sad, dark eyes permanently rimmed in red, Taimur conceals his pain and his hate, but not his fear. Now 16, he evokes the fragility of a boy. But his eyes reveal the fright of an old man too often beaten.

Taimur considers himself a "Peshmerga," a Kurdish fighter, now. He moves constantly to avoid detection by Iraqis who he believes want to bury him and his story for good.

When he speaks publicly, Taimur seeks privacy far from the camp and the scores who want to hear his account — again — and away from the possibility of betrayal. His large eyes balloon in panic at the thought of being exposed.

Except for the ending, Taimur's story is similar to those told by many of the 4,000 or so displaced Kurds who live in this squalid refugee camp not far from the town of Kifri, on the southern front, where Kurds and Iraqis still eye each other through cross hairs.

After the Kurds fought the Iraqis near Taimur's village, the Kurdish inhabitants fled, but were later caught by police and Kurdish collaborators, according to Taimur.

With his father, mother and three sisters, Taimur and his neighbors were dragged from one village to the next before being dumped in notoriously brutal Topzawa Prison at Kirkuk.

Just before the villagers were taken to the prison, Taimur, his father and all the other men were blindfolded, handcuffed and taken away.

Thousands join massive riot in Caracas

CARACAS, Venezuela (AP) — The National Guard fired tear gas into a Roman Catholic cathedral during noon Mass on Thursday as they battled thousands of protesters in some of the worst rioting since a Feb. 4 coup attempt.

Scores of people were injured. An Associated Press reporter saw at least five people detained. A photographer was beaten by police, and an AP reporter was sprayed with tear gas.

The violence enveloped downtown Caracas after police broke up a peaceful demonstration by friends and relatives of the coup leaders in front of the prison where they are held.

About 200 people had gathered by the prison and jingled keys above their heads. Blocked by a line of women police officers, the group crossed the plaza singing the national anthem and were attacked by a mobile cannon that blasted them with streams of water.

The disturbance then spread to surrounding streets, as businessmen, students and shoppers joined in. Businessmen in neckties helped students assemble barricades, as bottles and potted plants rained down on police from office windows.

Police on motorcycles fired tear gas and guns as the protesters ran and regrouped. Some of the gas cannisters entered San Francisco Cathedral.

The scale of the rioting indicated ordinary citizens were joining what had been isolated protests against unpopular economic policies and the suspension of some legal rights since the coup attempt against President Carlos Andres Perez.

"We've been living with this situation for two months now and it's only getting worse," said Ruben Rodriguez, a businessman who left his office to join in the protests.

Protesters chanted their support for jailed coup leader Lt. Col. Hugo Chavez: "Chavez, our friend, the people are with you!"

Under the partial suspension of constitutional rights, police can raid houses and make arrests without warrants, and people are banned from holding protests.

Soldiers battle Palestinians protesting earlier clash

Eighteen Palestinians were wounded in Thursday's confrontations, which came as Gaza Strip residents shut most shops and businesses in a protest strike and the army imposed a curfew on Rafah, the site of Wednesday's violence.

Responding to the heightened tensions, Palestinian leaders in Israel and Tunisia called for international protection for the 1.7 million Palestinians living in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip.

In Jerusalem, Palestinian leader Faisal Husseini called for international protection for the Palestinians, who have been rebelling against Israeli rule since December 1987.

The clash Wednesday in the Gaza Strip broke out when Israeli troops opened fire in a refugee camp market after being attacked by firebombs, U.N. officials and Arab reporters said.

They said four Palestinians were killed and more than 50 were wounded by live ammunition. The PLO charged that at least 10 Palestinians were killed and 50 wounded.

By either count, it was the bloodiest single confrontation between Palestinians and troops in the occupied lands in three years.

In Tunis, meanwhile, a top Palestine Liberation Organization official said the group had asked the U.N. Security Council to meet urgently and protect Palestinians in the occupied territories.

Indian Christian groups clash in southern Mexico

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Scores of people were injured in a clash between Indian converts to evangelical Protestant religions and believers in a traditional Indian form of Roman Catholicism, authorities said Thursday.

The fighting occured Wednesday at a squatter settlement on the outskirts of San Cristobal de las Casas in Mexico's southernmost state, Chiapas.

News reports said between 50 and 100 people were injured in the clash, among the worst sectarian violence in the region. The Red Cross evacuated 22 injured people, most suffering from gunshot wounds, according to Dr. Genoveva Mijanos Diaz.

The clash at La Hormiga involved Chamula Indian squatters who have been expelled from their villages for abandoning their centuries-old religion, a blend of Roman Catholicism and pre-Hispanic Indian beliefs.

Religious differences have split Indian communities throughout southern Mexico in recent years as evangelical Protestantism has attracted converts. The sectarian differences have been sharpest among the Chamula, who are among Mexico's least assimilated Indians.

Wednesday's violence broke out when several hundred Indians from the Chamula religious and political capital, San Juan Chamula, attacked La Hormiga with guns and clubs, news reports said.

The so-called "expulsados" often speak little or no Spanish and have no job skills.

Libyans with firebombs ransack Venezuelan Embassy

TRIPOLI, Libya (AP) — Young Libyans with firebombs ransacked the Venezuelan Embassy and tried to storm the Russian mission Thursday during a day of protests against countries that supported a U.N. air and arms embargo on Libya.

The U.N. Security Council, in emergency session, demanded Libya pay for damage to the embassies and laid blame for the attacks on Col. Moammar Gadhafi.

"This is so transparently and obviously directed to bring pressure on members of the Security Council," said U.S. Ambassador Thomas R. Pickering.

Women and schoolgirls carried white flowers to the embassies of India and Morocco, two of the five U.N. Security Council members that abstained in Tuesday's 10-0 vote to impose sanctions on Libya.

Hundreds of students smashed furniture and ripped up the garden at the Venezuelan mission. Others tried to break into the Russian Embassy and destroyed four cars, then burned a Russian flag on the ambassador's limousine when they were turned back.

Rocks were thrown at the Austrian mission and boisterous protests were held outside the Belgian, French and Italian embassies.

Despite the violence, there were no mass attempts by foreigners to leave the country. Many Western countries, including the United States, had warned their citizens in recent weeks to leave Libya.

Diplomats said they thought the demonstrations were orchestrated, possibly by revolutionary committees loyal to Gadhafi. With the intense police activity in Libya, it was unlikely the demonstrations could have occurred spontaneously, they said.

Many protesters arrived in busloads, and police reinforcements turned up early at several targeted embassies.

"We didn't ask for protection," said Austrian Ambassador Wilfried Almoslechner. "They just came."

"They just watched it unfurl," said Aga Babyan, the Russian first secretary.

The official Libyan news agency JANA said dozens of demonstrators were hospitalized after clashes with riot police. Western diplomats said they had no reports of any injuries.

The sanctions were imposed on Libya after it refused to surrender six alleged intelligence agents sought in the bombings of Pan Am Flight 103 in 1988 and a French airliner in 1989, which killed a total of 441 people.

The sanctions will take effect on April 15 if Libya does not hand over the suspects.

It was only the second time the Security Council had voted to punish a country for ignoring its demands on peace and security.

High to be in mid-60s

Today's forecast calls for cloudy skies with a 20 percent chance of showers and a high in the mid-60s. Tonight should be partly cloudy with a low in the mid-40s, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Saturday should be partly cloudy with a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms and a high in the mid-70s.

After an overnight low of 38, Thursday's high reached 46 compared with the record high for that date of 94 set in 1946. The record low for that date is 29 set in 1987.

STATE

Texas skies were partly cloudy Thursday behind a cold front that brought unseasonably low temperatures. Light rain dampened North Texas following morning reports of sleet. Showers also were reported along the coastal bend.

Winds were variable at 5 to 10 miles an hour with northerly winds in the Panhandle.

Temperatures reached only into the 40s to 60s. Readings at 3 p.m. included 37 degrees at Guadalupe Pass in West Texas to 66 degrees in Brownsville in the Lower Rio Grande Valley.

West Texas was expected to become partly cloudy through Saturday with widely scattered showers and thunderstorms possible Saturday. Highs today were to be in the 60s except 50s in the mountains. Lows tonight were to be mainly in the 40s and highs Saturday mainly in the 70s except 60s in the mountains.

NATION

A cold wave swept across the Southeast on Thursday, threatening crops in a large area.

Low temperatures were in the 20s and low 30s across Mississippi, Alabama, George and Arkansas. Records were broken or tied in those states and in Indiana, Missouri, Ohio, Tennessee, and West Virginia.

Dave Ihle, a meteorologist at the Southeastern Agricultural Weather Service Center in Auburn, Ala., said the cold was a threat to at least five crops: peaches, apples, watermelons, green beans and tobacco.

Warnings for frost and freezing temperatures were posted over much of Georgia, northern and central Alabama, northern and central Mississippi, South Carolina except the southern coastal beaches, and much of Arkansas.

A winter storm warning was posted for early Friday across northeast Maine. Showers were scattered at midday over Texas. Snow extended over the lower Great Lakes, lower Michigan, the central and southern Appalachians and the lower Ohio Valley.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

WYNONNA: Solo performance wows loyal fans

of her band and three back-up singers on the multi-tiered stage throughout the show, stopping atop the bridge over the drummer's head for "She Is His Only Need," drawing the greatest ovation of the night.

"Man, I was nervous," she said at the close of the song as she finished the first live version of her hit.

"I feel like I'm singing in public for the very first time."

The emotional peak of the show came early, when she dedicated the stirring ballad "I Can Still Feel All That Love From Here," to her mother, Naomi, who served as road manager for the show and watched from behind the sound-mixing board at the foot of the stage.

As her daughter launched into the third verse of the song, Naomi lifted her ever-present sunglasses to dry a tear as she beamed with pride at Wynonna's emotional delivery.

Billy Dean spent his "best birthday ever, doing what I like best, playing music," and opening the show for Wynonna on the first day of his 31st year.

Dean entertained the crowd with his current No. 6 Cashbox hit "Only the Wind," and his Academy of Country Music Song of the Year-nominated "Somewhere in my Broken Heart," and other favorites.

His female fans screamed with delight as he did a strictly G-rated bump and grind to the "Steamroller Blues," midway through his 12-song set.

In addition to several selections from his self-titled debut album, Dean treated the crowd to a preview of his next single, "Billy the Kid," and a cut from his next album "Cast Iron Heart," which he has been recording in Nashville with the Oak Ridge Boys.

Dean closed his section of the show with "Only Here for a Little While," an appropriate closing number, he said later, relaxing in his dressing room with a birthday brew.

"Time is a very interesting thing and I'm very aware of the time limit we have here," he said.

Turning 30 was "a kind of a bittersweet birthday" but the West Texas hospitality extended by fans who inundated him with cards and best wishes softened the blow.

WATER: Pipe to be laid in 3 phases

(From 1A)

But Garney had dropped its original bid from $110 million to $86 million were it to be awarded the contract for construction of the pipeline's three phases.

The highest bid was $120 million by Gilbert of Texas Construction Company of Fort Worth and Texas Industrial Company.

Of the nine bidders, Stephens was the only single bidder. The others were joint ventures.

Of the range of bids, Stephens noted that "Everybody looks at projects in different ways. That's the reason you take bids."

The 156.3-mile Lake Ivie pipeline project "is the largest job of its kind that has ever been let in Texas," Stephens said.

Stephens, who digs trenches and lays pipelines "pretty well from Texas back to the East Coast," has been in pipeline-construction work for 30 years. He lives in Stone Mountain community in Georgia.

"We don't see any major (pipeline) problems," Stephens said following the opening of bids by CRMWD's board of directors in the Holiday Inn Center in Odessa at 2 p.m. Thursday. "We know what we can do. We're in the business."

The work, he said, is "very repetitious."

"The ground conditions are roughly the same all the way through," Stephens said.

Construction, which is to get under way at mid-year, is to be completed by February 1995, Ivie noted. The 48.3-mile Lake Ivie-to-San Angelo phase is to be finished by July 1993, according to Stephens' projections.

Ivie said that Stephens' low bid was "nearly $8 million below my estimate.

"We are pleased with the bid we got," Ivie said. "We are running on a tight budget, and this will safely let us do the job within our budgeted dollar amount."

Last year, CRMWD issued for sale $115 million in revenue bonds to raise money for the building the pipeline and installing six 3,000-horsepower electric power station to pump the water uphill to Midland-Odessa.

Pump-station costs will be about $18 million, Ivie said.

All told, Ivie said, the lake and pipeline projects amounts to about $180 million: $65 million for Freese Dam which impounds Lake Ivie and for developing the 30-square-mile lake basin and $115 million for the pipeline-pump station projects and engineering costs.

Lake Ivie, which was named after O.H. Ivie who has been general manager of the 1949-created CRMWD since 1965, was finished in March 1990.

Freese and Nichols, a Fort Worth engineering firm, designed the dam and pipeline projects.

Midland is bearing about 30 percent of the cost of the pipeline, noted Midland City Manager Fred Poe.

The indebtedness incurred in the sale of the bonds will be paid off by water-bill revenue.

The water district will absorb about 62 percent of the cost, and San Angelo will finance about 8 percent.

The district is made up of member cities of Big Spring, Odessa and Snyder. In addition to those cities, the CRMWD serves cities such as Midland, San Angelo, Stanton, Robert Lee and Abilene by contract.

Midland, which owns 16.54 percent of the water in Lake Ivie, guaranteed that percentage of funds to help finance the $65 million cost of the 554,000-acre-foot Lake Ivie project.

Poe noted that in each month's Midland water bills, about 25 percent of each household and business water bill, not including fees for trash pickup and sewage disposal, is committed to paying off the debts.

Currently, Midland receives water from three sources: The CRMWD's Lake Thomas, which is southwest of Snyder, and Lake Spence, which is just west of Robert Lee, and from the Midland-owned Paul Davis Field north of Midland.

Lake Ivie, which is at 99 percent capacity, "will be the best water we have by far — as far as quality is concerned," Poe said. "It's going to be one of major supplies of water in the future."

The Lake Ivie system is designed for supplying water to West Texas "possibly beyond the year 2040," Ivie said.

The pipeline system is designed to carry up to 90 million gallons of water a day from Lake Ivie to San Angelo in the 60-inch line. San Angelo is entitled to 25 million gallons a day. The 53-inch line from San Angelo to Midland-Odessa is designed to carry 65 million gallons a day.

Ivie said that "every penny" of the $180-million cost of the lake and pipeline project is "derived from the sale of revenue bonds.

"There's not one penny of tax money in the project," Ivie said. "It doesn't belong to the taxpayers. It belongs to the people living in the cities who are deriving their water supply from CRMWD. Only those who are using the water are paying for the project."

CANDIDATES: Wall Street rebukes Clinton

(From 1A)

Brown, the long-shot anti-establishment candidate, and Clinton, the shaky front-runner.

Brown, hoping to cut into Clinton's lead among blacks, has touted his choice of Jackson as a potential running mate.

But the mere mention of Jackson's name by Brown at a meeting with Jewish leaders Thursday drew hisses and boos.

One heckler, state Assemblyman Dov Hikind of Brooklyn, was removed from the meeting after he jumped to his feet and began shouting just a few feet away from Brown.

"You insult the Jewish community by picking Jesse Jackson," shouted Hikind, a Clinton supporter.

Jackson has long been anathema to the city's Jews for calling New York "Hymietown," embracing PLO leader Yasser Arafat and accepting support from Black Moslem leader Louis Farrakhan, who once called Judaism a "gutter religion."

But Brown defended his choice of Jackson, saying the civil rights leader is one of the few Americans with stature enough in the black community to help heal the nation's racial divisions.

"We have to have everyone pull together. ... We've got to make room for all of God's children," Brown said.

"This is a pre-Weimar situation," he added, referring to the German democracy destroyed by the Nazis.

Brown also apologized for saying in a speech on Wall Street that he wanted to drive "the money lenders from the temple" and then reading a list of Clinton's financial backers, many of whom had Jewish names.

He said he was reading from an article that he hadn't seen before and stopped as soon as he realized the implications.

Clinton also ran into trouble Thursday on Wall Street, saying in a speech at the New York Stock Exchange that the 1980s were a period when "the stock market tripled and wages for working people went down."

Bronx cheers from the crowd led him to explain that he had nothing against Wall Street and wealth, but that he wanted to make corporations more responsible for investing in American jobs and workers.

"I want opportunity first and then responsibility from Wall Street to Main Street to the meanest streets of this country," he said.

Earlier in the day, Clinton met with about 40 black clergy leaders to ask for their support, but carefully sidestepped reporters' questions about whether he would consider Jackson as a running mate.

"I have said repeatedly that I am not going to play the personality game" regarding a vice-presidential choice, Clinton said.

Kurdish youth reveals surviving Saddam's killing pits

By Louis J. Salome
N.Y. Times News Service

SUMOOD CAMP, Iraq — A bullet in his left shoulder, his mother and three sisters lifeless at his feet and 50 more Kurds dead or dying in the pit where he stood, 12-year-old Taimur Abdullah begged the Iraqi soldier for life.

A tear started to bubble in the soldier's eye, Taimur recalls, but it evaporated when a nearby officer saw the sliver of sympathy. The Kurds deserved none, the officer said.

The soldier again sprayed the pit with bullets, striking Taimur in the lower back. That was supposed to silence Taimur with all the others from his mountain village of Kolajo.

But it didn't.

When the soldiers walked away from the long, narrow, three-foot-deep pit to await the bulldozers that would bury their victims and their crimes, Taimur escaped.

Now he can tell the story of Iraq's killing pits near its border with Saudi Arabia, where Saddam Hussein's soldiers had transported thousands of Kurds to be slaughtered.

Taimur is the only person known to have seen the pits and lived to tell the horror.

It happened four years ago, when Saddam Hussein launched his vicious campaign to exterminate the Kurds he could no subjugate. At the time, the United States and other Western governments were helping Iraq beat back Islamic fundamentalist Iran.

The World

With inspiration perverted from the Koran, Saddam declared the Muslim Kurds to be infidels. He destroyed about 4,500 of their mountain villages, used chemical weapons, and exterminated more than 180,000 of them.

His sad, dark eyes permanently rimmed in red, Taimur conceals his pain and his hate, but not his fear. Now 16, he evokes the fragility of a boy. But his eyes reveal the fright of an old man too often beaten.

Taimur considers himself a "Peshmerga," a Kurdish fighter, now. He moves constantly to avoid detection by Iraqis who he believes want to bury him and his story for good.

When he speaks publicly, Taimur seeks privacy far from the camp and the scores who want to hear his account — again — and away from the possibility of betrayal. His large eyes balloon in panic at the thought of being exposed.

Except for the ending, Taimur's story is similar to those told by many of the 4,000 or so displaced Kurds who live in this squalid refugee camp not far from the town of Kifri, on the southern front, where Kurds and Iraqis still eye each other through cross hairs.

After the Kurds fought the Iraqis near Taimur's village, the Kurdish inhabitants fled, but were later caught by police and Kurdish collaborators, according to Taimur.

With his father, mother and three sisters, Taimur and his neighbors were dragged from one village to the next before being dumped in notoriously brutal Topzawa Prison at Kirkuk.

Just before the villagers were taken to the prison, Taimur, his father and all the other men were blindfolded, handcuffed and taken away.

Thousands join massive riot in Caracas

CARACAS, Venezuela (AP) — The National Guard fired tear gas into a Roman Catholic cathedral during noon Mass on Thursday as they battled thousands of protesters in some of the worst rioting since a Feb. 4 coup attempt.

Churchgoers responded by throwing rocks at the troops.

Scores of people were injured. An Associated Press reporter saw at least five people detained. A photographer was beaten by police, and an AP reporter was sprayed with tear gas.

The violence enveloped downtown Caracas after police broke up a peaceful demonstration by friends and relatives of the coup leaders in front of the prison where they are held.

About 200 people had gathered by the prison and jingled keys above their heads. Blocked by a line of women police officers, the group crossed the plaza singing the national anthem and were attacked by a mobile cannon that blasted them with streams of water.

The disturbance then spread to surrounding streets, as businessmen, students and shoppers joined in. Businessmen in neckties helped students assemble barricades, as bottles and potted plants rained down on police from office windows.

Police on motorcycles fired tear gas and guns as the protesters ran and regrouped. Some of the gas cannisters entered San Francisco Cathedral.

The scale of the rioting indicated ordinary citizens were joining what had been isolated protests against unpopular economic policies and the suspension of some legal rights since the coup attempt against President Carlos Andres Perez.

"We've been living with this situation for two months now and it's only getting worse," said Ruben Rodriguez, a businessman who left his office to join in the protests.

Protesters chanted their support for jailed coup leader Lt. Col. Hugo Chavez: "Chavez, our friend, the people are with you!"

Under the partial suspension of constitutional rights, police can raid houses and make arrests without warrants, and people are banned from holding protests.

Soldiers battle Palestinians protesting earlier clash

RAFAH, Occupied Gaza Strip (AP) — Israeli soldiers fought stone-throwing Palestinians Thrusday protesting a bloody clash that left four men dead a day earlier.

Eighteen Palestinians were wounded in Thursday's confrontations, which came as Gaza Strip residents shut most shops and businesses in a protest strike and the army imposed a curfew on Rafah, the site of Wednesday's violence.

Responding to the heightened tensions, Palestinian leaders in Israel and Tunisia called for international protection for the 1.7 million Palestinians living in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip.

In Jerusalem, Palestinian leader Faisal Husseini called for international protection for the Palestinians, who have been rebelling against Israeli rule since December 1987.

The clash Wednesday in the Gaza Strip broke out when Israeli troops opened fire in a refugee camp market after being attacked by firebombs, U.N. officials and Arab reporters said.

They said four Palestinians were killed and more than 50 were wounded by live ammunition. The PLO charged that at least 10 Palestinians were killed and 50 wounded.

By either count, it was the bloodiest single confrontation between Palestinians and troops in the occupied lands in three years.

In Tunis, meanwhile, a top Palestine Liberation Organization official said the group had asked the U.N. Security Council to meet urgently and protect Palestinians in the occupied territories.

Indian Christian groups clash in southern Mexico

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Scores of people were injured in a clash between Indian converts to evangelical Protestant religions and believers in a traditional Indian form of Roman Catholicism, authorities said Thursday.

The fighting occured Wednesday at a squatter settlement on the outskirts of San Cristobal de las Casas in Mexico's southernmost state, Chiapas.

News reports said between 50 and 100 people were injured in the clash, among the worst sectarian violence in the region. The Red Cross evacuated 22 injured people, most suffering from gunshot wounds, according to Dr. Genoveva Mijanos Diaz.

The clash at La Hormiga involved Chamula Indian squatters who have been expelled from their villages for abandoning their centuries-old religion, a blend of Roman Catholicism and pre-Hispanic Indian beliefs.

Religious differences have split Indian communities throughout southern Mexico in recent years as evangelical Protestantism has attracted converts. The sectarian differences have been sharpest among the Chamula, who are among Mexico's least assimilated Indians.

Wednesday's violence broke out when several hundred Indians from the Chamula religious and political capital, San Juan Chamula, attacked La Hormiga with guns and clubs, news reports said.

The so-called "expulsados" often speak little or no Spanish and have no job skills.

Report clears captain in Titanic rescue effort

LONDON (AP) — The captain of a ship that was near the sinking Titanic should have tried to save the more than 1,500 people who died, even though he probably couldn't have done anything, an official inquiry concluded Thursday.

The captain's son viewed the report as partial exoneration for a man "portrayed as a liar and a drunkard, the baddie in a great drama."

The report disagreed with an official finding in 1912 that said Capt. Stanley Lord of the Californian might have saved everyone if he had responded quickly after the Titanic hit an iceberg.

The report, presented by Capt. Peter Marriott, chief inspector of marine accidents for the Department of Transport, said Lord saw the Titanic's distress signals, but did not take proper action.

Still, Marriott said, Lord could not have reached the scene until "well after Titanic had sunk" in the freezing north Atlantic on a calm April night in 1912.

"This, of course, does not alter the fact that the attempt should have been made," the report said.

The 46,328-ton Titanic of the White Star Line was British-operated but U.S.-owned. It was the largest and most luxurious liner in the world when it sank southeast of Newfoundland on its maiden voyage from Southampton to New York on the night of April 14-15.

The British Cunard liner Carpathia responded immediately to radio SOS calls from Titanic and collected lifeboats holding 705 people, the only survivors.

Lord was censured by the British inquiry that reported in July 1912 that his cargo-passenger vessel, bound for Boston from London, could have reached the Titanic after seeing distress signals and "might have saved many, if not all, of the lives that were lost."

Lord, who was never prosecuted, argued that his ship was too far away to grasp the situation. He and his defenders blamed lax British regulations that allowed the Titanic to sail with only enough lifeboats for half its 2,228 passengers and crew.

The new inquiry, begun two years ago, was a response to pressure from the captain's family and British ships' officers.

The report, published 12 days ahead of the 80th anniversary of the disaster, is likely to be the last official word on a long campaign to clear the reputation of Lord, who died in 1962 at age 84. Lord went back to sea and retired in 1927.

"The innuendo was that my father could have saved hundreds of lives but slept while the Titanic sank," said his son, Stanley Lord, 83, a retired banker. "How frightful that must have been for a man who ran his ship like clockwork, the most thorough and meticulous of persons, and a teetotaller as well."

The crucial question of the distance between the Californian and the Titanic was not resolved.

One expert who helped compile the report, Capt. Thomas Barnett, concluded the distance was three to four miles, while Capt. James de Coverley estimated it was 11 miles.

Marriott accepted the longer estimate.

The association represents British shipmasters and had backed the Lord family's plea for a new investigation.

Mexico tax plan slows investments

MEXICO CITY — Some U.S. companies are putting a hold on new investment in Mexico because of a government plan to require Americans working there to pay Mexican income tax of up to 30 percent of their salaries, according to an association of businesses in Mexico.

Between ten and 15 companies in the San Diego area have "put operations on hold" and another 12 have done the same in El Paso, said Tony Ramirez, a director of the National Maquiladora Association, a group of foreign businesses in Mexico.

"The whole idea of the free trade agreement is to eliminate trade barriers, and this creates a trade barrier," Ramirez said. "It'll put the fear of God in anyone who is going down there to work."

The United States is negotiating a free trade accord with Mexico and Canada.

The Mexican government announced the new tax law earlier this year. It requires Americans working in Mexico to begin paying income tax in July.

"We put a project on hold, waiting to see what happens with the tax," said Jorge Aguilar, vice president for North American operations of International Rectifier, a semiconductor firm.

He said the plan to transfer an automated assembly line to Mexico would have amounted to a $10 million investment.

But a spokeswoman from Mexico's Treasury Department said the Americans will be fairly taxed, since they make their income in Mexico.

Other countries, including the United States, charge foreigners an income tax, according to the Internal Revenue Service.

"I don't think it's a bad idea to have some sort of income tax," said Don Lauby, general manager for Wells Manufacturing Co., a machine parts firm in Reynosa. "But the way they did it was to throw it out on the table just to see what the wolves would do with it."

The Maquiladora Association has lobbied top Mexican government officials to get the law changed. Some analysts say that the government will end up rolling back the law.

"The amount of money they'll bring in by this is minimal compared to the investment at risk," said Alfred Rich, director of Mexico operations for Universal Paper Goods.

"(President) Salinas is interested in making Mexico look as attractive as possible," said Susan Kaufman Purcell, a director for the Americas Society, a New York-based think tank. "I don't see how this fits in with his game plan."

As it stands now, the new law applies to anyone who works for more than 15 days a year in Mexico, and they must begin paying in July, Mexico's Treasury Department said.

Anyone who makes less than $10,000 yearly in Mexico will be exempt, the Department said.

Those making between $10,000 and $80,000 will be taxed at least 15 percent of their income, the Department said, and those making more than $80,000 yearly must pay at least 30 percent.

Sharp's tax talk vital for Texas

Texas Comptroller John Sharp is absolutely right to look at the possibility of replacing the state's outdated and inequitable property tax system with a value-added tax. That doesn't mean Texas should switch to the value-added taxing system, but rather that Sharp's interest in making a change puts the issue of the state's revenue system back where it needs to be — on the front-burner.

The property tax system may have been a reasonable one a century ago when most individuals invested their money in land and Texas was still largely an agricultural state. But Texas, while still a leader in cattle and grain production, isn't as tied to the farm or ranch now, and as a result the property tax system doesn't burden Texans equally or fairly.

In testimony presented in June of 1991 to the Governor's Task Force on Revenue, John C. Goodman of the National Center for Policy Analysis in Dallas indicated the state's tax system needs to be restructured away from property taxation as the basis for revenue. He noted at that time that the average marginal tax rate on income in Texas is 3 percent Lbelow the national average, while the rate on capital income is 7.4 percent above the national average and the rate on labor income is 14.7 percent below the national average.

But the value-added tax idea isn't the only one. The income tax idea has already been talked about and criticized, but Texas also could go to a progressive income tax, proportional income tax or a payroll tax, or some combination of all the alternatives. The point is finding a tax system that meets the needs of today.

The gut issue is to raise the money needed to finance state government by a method that is fair and equitable and which places the least burden on all the people of Texas. There are sharply divided opinions about how much government the people of Texas need and how much waste exists in government now. The present system isn't doing the job, and Sharp has revived the discussion of what Texas needs to do to design a new revenue system for financing the public school system and all the state's spending programs.

Essential to that discussion is the question of how to keep state spending at the lowest level while meeting the governmental needs of all Texans. Finding that answer is crucial to solving the state revenue dilemma.

Gas price right

In regard to the retail price of gasoline in the United States, we never had it so good!

A chart from Cambridge Research Associates shows that in 1947 a gallon of gas cost 23 cents. In today's dollars — adjusted for inflation — that 23 cents is equivalent to $1.49 per gallon. So at today's pump price of around $1.15 per gallon, which includes 34 cents of taxes, U.S. consumers have the best gas deal in the world.

Bring on Bluegrass

I agree with Ruby Griffith that Midland needs a Bluegrass Festival. Our family comes from Oklahoma and springtime is synonomous with the sound, flair and togetherness that Bluegrass music brings to the hill of Oklahoma and Arkansas.

Let's do it, Midland. We'll pick a park, plant some dogwood trees and look forward to our own annual Springtime Bluegrass Festival. What a wonderful "down home" idea!

Baker did say it

It was with great interest that I read William Safire's column in your Sunday, March 23rd edition, headlined "Let's count those Patriot missiles in public."

Evidently this was an edited version of his March 19th column in The New York Times, headlined, "Blaming the Victim."

I did not know that a subscribing newspaper could edit a syndicated columnist to the extent that the main thrust of his writing is drastically changed. For the benefit of you readers, allow me to incluee here the four paragraphs that were cut:

"This terror-bombing, throat cutting and arm twisting is supposed to give Israelis the confidence necessary to take risks for peace.

"Mr. Bush's unprecedented rejection of humanitarian aid to a democratic ally — while continuing loan guarantees to dictatorships with no strings attached — followed the revelation that his Secretary of State said, '(Expletive deleted) the Jews, they don't vote for us anyway.'

"At a Bush speech the other night, a White House aide sought me out to say, 'You know, Baker never said that.'

"Though constrained by the rules of deep background, I can confirm that Mr. Baker did say that, with the same vulgarism that made it so memorable, to two high officials on two different occasions. President Bush and his top staff know he did; it has been agreed that everyone would deny it was ever said. But James Baker said it — twice — and meant it. (years from now, memoirs will confirm this; I'll remind you.)"

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Friday, April 3, the 94th day of 1992. There are 272 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On April 3, 1860, the legendary Pony Express began service between St. Joseph, Mo., and Sacramento. The service lasted only a 1½ years before giving way to the transcontinental telegraph.

On this date:

In 1882, the notorious outlaw Jesse James was shot to death in St. Joseph, Mo., by Robert Ford, a member of his own gang.

In 1936, Bruno Hauptmann was electrocuted in Trenton, N.J., for the kidnap-murder of the Lindbergh infant.

Pentagon defends its official versions

WASHINGTON — To hear the Pentagon tell it, the Patriot missiles were the heroes of the Persian Gulf War, intercepting incoming Scud missiles like swatting flies out of the sky. That is the only version of the story the Pentagon wants circulated.

Anderson

Aldric Saucier, a civilian defense scientist with 25 years of experience, likes the Patriots too. In fact, he has so much confidence in them, that he thinks the Pentagon should stop wasting money on the pipe-dream Star Wars program and put that money into the proven Patriots. The Pentagon doesn't want to hear that, so Saucier was fired.

Another civilian scientist, Theodore Postol, thinks the Patriots were grossly overrated during the war, but the Pentagon doesn't want to hear that either. They apparently don't want you to hear it, because they have put a "classified" stamp on Postol's article on the subject. Postol is a researcher at Massachusetts Institute of Technology who published his views about the Patriots in the Harvard University journal "International Security."

Saucier and Postol are worlds apart in their views about Patriot missiles, but they are in the same camp as far as the Pentagon is concerned — experts who overstepped their bounds by contradicting the party line.

Saucier was fired by the Army in February for "unacceptable performance." He says he was fired because he exposed SDI as a program riddled with waste and mismanagement.

His whistleblowing activities began shortly after he joined the SDI research project. He complained to his bosses that billions of dollars were being wasted on studies that were thrown away without being read. He told our associate Jan Moller that he suspected the only reason the studies were done was to keep money flowing from Congress to the SDI office since the SDI program was otherwise falling short of all its original goals.

Among Saucier's allegations are that the Army has ignored and suppressed existing, cost-effective technology in favor of more costly methods that don't work. And Saucier says the SDI program lied to Congress about the merits of the "Brilliant Pebbles" space-based interceptors that would circle the earth and destroy enemy missiles.

The Pentagon finally axed Saucier when he submitted a paper last year suggesting that the SDI money would be better spent on upgrading the Patriot missile system. Saucier has since been granted protective whistleblower status at the request of Rep. John Conyers, D-Mich., chairman of the House Government Operations Committee. Saucier's firing is under review.

Postol is also suffering for being outspoken. He says his article in the Harvard journal published last winter was taken from publicly available data, as evidenced by his 100 footnotes. He concluded that the Patriots performed far worse in the Gulf War than the public was led to believe.

Shortly after that article appeared, the Defense Investigative Service came knocking on Postol's door, telling him that his article contained classified information. In testimony before Congress, Postol later claimed that the Defense Investigative Service was acting as a water boy for Raytheon, the main contractor on the Patriots. Under direction of Raytheon, the Army combed through Postol's article and classified it, paragraph by paragraph, even though it had already been widely published.

The Saucier case touched off an investigation into the waste of money on SDI, and the Postol affair has renewed the issue of government over-classification of documents.

Neither Saucier nor Postol set out to be a hero, but the effect of what they have done shows how hard the Pentagon will work to keep civilians from raising embarrassing questions about pet projects.

CHARLEY REESE

Misunderstandings can perpetrate errors

Years ago I interviewed a crusty police captain who was an outstanding marksmen. Just as I about to leave, he launched into a tirade.

"And don't call Dan my son. He's my son-in-law. Your (expletive) newspaper misreported that 10 years ago and it got in your files and every (expletive) time you guys write about me, you repeat the (expletive) mistake," he said.

Reese

And justly so. Errors do get perpetuated by being stored in newspaper files and now by being stored on computers. It's a standing operating procedure for most reporters and magazine journalists pull up everything that's been written on a subject before tackling a new story. If there are errors in the old files, quite often they get repeated in the new stories.

I'll give you a current and serious example of the eternal life of error in today's electronic media environment.

Do you remember when the Japanese Prime Minister Kiichi Miyazawa said that Americans lack a work ethic? Of course, you do. It gets repeated almost daily by some politician, some letter writer, or some journalist.

Only one problem: Miyazawa never said that.

Charles Burres, a staff writer for the San Francisco Chronicle, who reads some Japanese, read Miyazawa's statement in the original Japanese, checked it with respected translators both in the U.S. and in Japan.

Miyazawa was talking about the shift from production to money manipulation games such as leveraged buyouts and junk bonds. "In this area," he said, "I have long thought something like a work ethic must be lacking." Then he went on to say the same thing about Japanese money manipulators.

In other words, he was not talking at all about Americans in general or American factory workers. He was talking about Michael Milkens and Ivan Boeskys and their Japanese equivalents who speculate, wheel and deal, and pull off insider trading deals. Those greedy characters certainly do lack a work ethic in the traditional meaning of those words.

Burres pointed out in a letter to the New York Times that repeating this error of translation not only helps poison relations between two countries, plays to bigotry, but also discredits the United States press in the eyes of the Japanese whose own newspapers correctly reported the prime minister's remarks.

If we are going to live up to our responsibility in this global world of near-instant communications, then we're going to have stop sending journalists to countries unless they can speak and write the language of the country. Otherwise we're just faking it and often contributing to misunderstanding.

I know from personal experience that if you don't speak and write the language, you aren't going to learn much more than an ordinary tourist, and while I enjoy traveling on an expense account as much as anyone, I have resisted a couple of suggestions for an overseas trip since that first experience. I believe it is a waste of money and ultimately a disservice to the readers. A journalist, unlike a tourist, purports to understand complex events in a foreign country. How can you do that if you can't talk to ordinary people or even read the local newspapers? Truth is you can't.

What you do is end up talking to other American journalists, American embassy officials, and foreign government officials assigned to propagandize visiting American journalists.

It is hard enough to find out what is really going on in your average American city and with our own government in Washington, much less a foreign government.

Readers and viewers in this age of near-instant communication must develop the habit of rational skepticism and not blindly swallow as divine revelation anything that appears in print or is spoken over the airwaves.

WILLIAM MURCHISON

Today's politics includes total loss of privacy

Gov. Bill Clinton's apology — "I should not have done it" — for playing golf at an all-white country club was fully to be expected. Clinton could lecture at Harvard on political damage control. Had the turnip growers' association berated him for preferring squash, Clinton would have called a press conference and exuberantly downed a jar of pot likker.

Murchison

Ah, well. The bigger point here is what's happening to the right of association in these United States, to the point that even slick-talking presidential candidates sometimes fall victim. Slowly, slowly we're turning private clubs into public utilities. It's not a happy sight.

A club — I should add here that the only private club to which I belong is one that studies and celebrates antiques — is made up essentially of likeminded individuals with a common, usually highly limited purpose. This means the members more or less resemble each other, in terms of race, sex, creed or social class. The right thus to assemble is, or was once, regarded as fundamentally American.

Not so these days. Men's dining clubs in various cities, including New York City, Chicago and Los Angeles, have been ordered by state legislators to admit women. The Boy Scouts of America, under court attack over policies barring homosexuals, atheists and girls, recently set up a new program, "Learning for Life," that admits all three.

The racial question has proved dicier still. Professional golf tournaments can be played only at clubs offering full membership to women and blacks. New Orleans' city council last year passed an ordinance forbidding Mardi Gras krewes, the private associations that stage the parades, from discriminating in their choice of members. Two major krewes canceled their parades, and the city worries that the grand institution of Mardi Gras is in jeopardy.

Gov. Clinton tees up his ball in perilous territory indeed.

Is any of this important really? Can't we just tell private clubs that the limits of privacy have been redefined and they had better get with the new world order? Isn't pluralism better than "brotherhood" in the old white-Anglo-Saxon-male sense?

Maybe it is. I don't see that's for me or anybody else to judge. What seems clear is that, as a society, we're getting very close to telling people of both sexes and all races that privacy isn't a very high priority anymore. That strikes me as dumb and dangerous. Yes, and profoundly un-American.

Bodyguard agency assists frightened women

By Don Terry
N.Y. Times News Service

MILWAUKEE — When Gregory J. Kottke opened his bodyguard agency here a few weeks ago, he figured most of his clients would be professional athletes, wealthy business executives and maybe a visiting rock star or two.

It has not worked out that way. Most of his clients are women with low incomes, frightened faces and sad stories.

Kottke has become a bodyguard for battered women.

"My phone has been ringing off the hook," he said. "There are a lot of scared and abused women out there."

In an unusual experiment and partnership, perhaps the only one like it in the country, Kottke has joined forces with a local women's group, the Task Force on Battered Women, to protect physically abused women in their homes and even in the halls of the county courthouse, the scene of a recent murder that shook Milwaukee.

It is an alliance forged out of necessity, fear and a deepening frustration with the legal system, said Barbara Pollack, the coordinator of the group's legal advocacy program.

"Domestic violence is not a priority with the police or with the courts here or anywhere else in the country," Ms. Pollack said. "So we're getting a profesional bodyguarding agency to do what the system is not doing: protecting battered women."

One example, she said, was the March 9 attack on a 51-year-old woman, Shirley Lowery. She was stabbed to death in the courthouse here as she sought an injunction against her estranged boyfriend. The man was arrested minutes after the stabbing.

The bodyguards had helped Ms. Lowery move to a secret apartment a few days before she was killed, but she did not call them to escort her to the courthouse, her daughter, Vannessa Davis, said, because she thought she would be safe there.

Mary Pat Brygger of the National Woman Abuse Prevention Center in Wahington said she knew of no other advocacy group in the country using professional bodyguards to shield victims of domestic violence.

"Most programs are so overwhelmed and underfunded," she said. "There are so many needs. But I think it's a wonderful idea. I hope it can spread."

Lt. Samuel M. Leatherwood, a spokesman for the Milwaukee County Sheriff, said that in a majority of domestic abuse cases bodyguards are not necessary or even wise. "Overall, the system works pretty well to protect these women," he said.

"But the bodyguards are probably doing some good," the lieutenant added. "How much is hard to say. Whether having a bodyguard around makes the man more irate or more determined to get the women at some other time has to be measured, too. It can be a very complicated and dangerous situation."

Two months ago, to help get their business off the ground, Kottke and his business partner, Aubrey McCroy, contacted the battered women's group and offered their services. At first the executive director, Deborah Neas, thought it was a joke, and besides, she said, the group could not afford to pay them much, if anything.

But she met with them, and they said they would base their fees on a sliding scale. Their typical rate is $30 an hour, but poor women pay nothing and most of their clients are poor.

Massive mushroom found in Michigan

TRAVERSE CITY, Mich. (AP) — It sounds like one of those late-night, B movies: "Attack of the Giant Fungus!" And when folks in upper Michigan first heard about it, many thought it was an April Fool's joke.

But scientists aren't laughing about the discovery of what may be the world's largest and oldest living organism, covering 38 acres beneath a forest near the Wisconsin line.

It's believed to be 1,500 to 10,000 years old and weigh about 100 tons — about the same as an adult blue whale.

"Without organisms such as this, it wouldn't take long before life on Earth would cease," Johann N. Bruhn, a research scientist with Michigan Technological University in Houghton, said Thursday.

The fungus is an integral part of the ecosystem, feeding on decayed wood and producing carbon dioxide essential for plant life. Plants then turn the carbon dioxide into life-giving oxygen, he said.

Bruhn wrote an article about the gigantic fungus in this week's issue of the journal Nature with Myron L. Smith and James B. Anderson, both of the University of Toronto. They discovered the fungus while doing research for the U.S. Navy in 1988.

After the article was made public Wednesday, the scientists were deluged with inquiries from the United States, Canada and Britain. Some people sought information from bemused state and local officials.

"We've been getting calls since it came on the news this morning," Margie Burns, a technician with the Michigan Department of Natural Resources, said Thursday. "I wish they had let us know something about it."

Over at the Iron County Chamber of Commerce, manager Lois Goriesky also was taken aback.

"I heard about it on the late news and I thought, 'Oh, someone's playing an April Fool's prank,'" she said by telephone.

But she couldn't resist pondering the natural wonder's commercial utility. The tourism industry is second only to logging in the county, where the biggest town is Iron River, population 2,095.

Local United Way officials to evaluate recent report

ALEXANDRIA, Va. (AP) — Local United Way officials around the country say they will take a close look at a report on the management problems of United Way of America before deciding whether to resume dues payments to the national organization.

The national group's board of governors met in closed session for six hours here Thursday to receive the report from a Washington law firm hired to look into allegations of mismanagement that led to the resignation of William Aramony as president.

United Way spokesman Tony DeCristofaro said the report, expected to be 60 to 80 pages long, would be sent to local bodies overnight and released at a Washington news conference Friday.

"I can't say it's going to be the final report, but it's going to be a significant report on the results to date," DeCristofaro said.

The spokesman said most local United Ways are still withholding dues payments, which many of them suspended after controversy arose about Aramony's $463,000 in salary and other compensation, plus generous travel allowances. Questions were also raised about management and hiring at spinoff service companies associated with the national body.

Aramony announced his resignation Feb. 27 and was dropped from the payroll March 17.

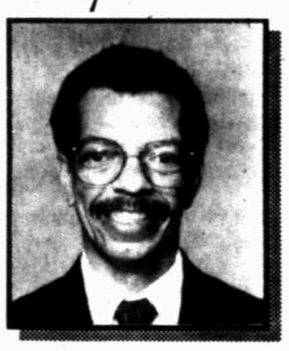

The acting president of United Way of America, Kenneth Dam, told affiliates at a meeting in Indianapolis March 22 that cost-cutting measures are already under way but the organization may have to be dismantled unless dues payments are resumed.

The 1,400 local affiliates, which raise money and give grants to charities, customarily send 1 percent of the funds they raise to the national office, which has a budget of $29 million to provide administrative support.

Brian Hassett, president of United Way of Central Massachusetts, based in Worcester, Mass., said officials were told at the Indianapolis meeting that the report from the law firm of Verner, Liipfert, Bernhard, McPherson & Hand "might not be as detailed as some of the United Way folks had initially perhaps expected."

"I hope they can take as much concrete action as soon as possible, because this is still kind of lingering and as soon as they can move on some of this the better off we are going to be," he said.

NAME: William E. Howard
OCCUPATION: Sales Representative, Jack Sherman Automotive Headquarters
VOLUNTEER POSITION: United Way Board of Directors, Project Blueprint Steering Committee, Project Blueprint Alumni Association, Big Brothers, Midland/Lee Youth Center Board.

William Howard heeded the call to volunteerism through a television news segment one night. Now he is helping others to answer the same call.

Howard saw the "Wednesday's Child" segment on KMID-TV about Big Brothers/Big Sisters seven years ago, and signed up as a Big Brother volunteer. His first match lasted five years; he now has another Little Brother.

"It filled a lot of time that I had," he says. "It was exciting to have an influence on a young man and to find the energy to keep up with him."

Then he heard about Project Blueprint and completed its Board Institute. "It made me curious about how the United Way system really works. It was the beginning to my non-ending volunteer efforts," he says with a laugh. "Board Institute really piqued my curiosity and I wanted to get more involved."

The Project Blueprint Alumni Association was formed and he soon was elected president. Under his leadership, the organization has become one of the most active in the nation an7d helps sponsor numerous service projects, including a fund-raising Summer Extravaganza in which all proceeds are given to the United Way campaign.

William added Project Blueprint Steering Committee to his list of volunteer duties, including board member Midland/Lee You Center, United Way Board of Directors and United Way Executive Committee.

"Now that I'm on the inside of United Way, I can see the need for volunteers, the need to make sure I have a voice in how the funds are spent." Howard says. "I have a better feeling about the Midland community because of the efforts I've seen through United Way."

Atlantis finishes mission

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (NYT) — The space shuttle Atlantis glided safely back to earth Thursday after a nine-day mission that NASA said was nearly flawless.

The Atlantis, with its crew of seven, rolled to a stop under clear skies on a runway at the Kennedy Space Center about 6:25 a.m. It circled the globe 142 times while the crew conducted a series of observations on the chemistry and physics of the earth's upper atmosphere.

"We believe it was an outstanding mission," said William B. Lenoir, associate administrator of NASA. "The vehicle performed very very well."

Daniel S. Goldin watched his first shuttle landing as NASA's administrator just three days after being confirmed by the Senate. He replaced Richard Truly, who was ousted earlier this year by the Bush administration in a conflict over the direction of the space effort.

"When Atlantis touched down on the runway, I was teary-eyed." Goldin said.

The shuttle's Florida landing is just the ninth at Kennedy in a series of 46 shuttle flights in the last 11 years. Each Kennedy landing saves NASA at least $900,000 because it is not necessary to ferry the shuttle back from the landing site at Edwards Air Force Base in California.

Mint marks anniversary

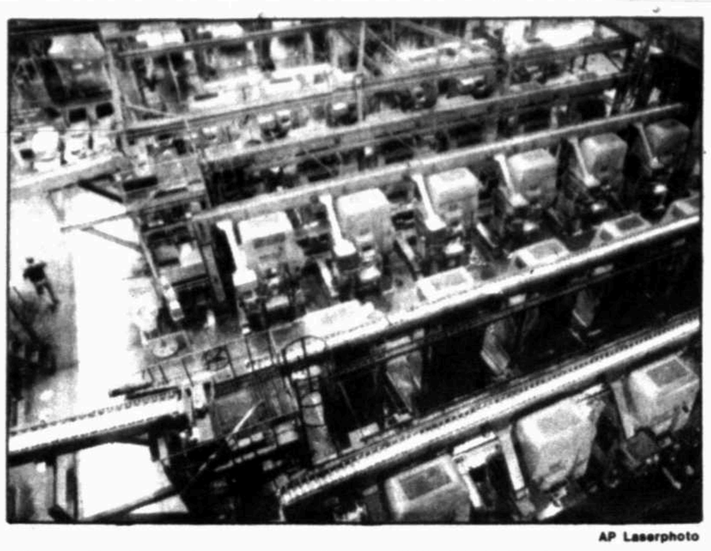

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — When the U.S. Mint opened in Philadelphia in 1792, coins were made one at a time in a press that required a sharp tug and a quick jump out of the way. Today's machines make 11 coins per second.

Both types of equipment were on display Thursday as the Philadelphia Mint celebrated its 200th anniversary.

"It took the United States eight years, from 1792 to 1800, to make its first 1 million coins," said mint superintendent John T. Martino. "It now takes us 20 minutes to make 1 million coins at Philadelphia."

Actor Fred Harper portrayed David Rittenhouse, the first mint director, and Steve Bednarik, a medal maker, portrayed Henry Voigt, the first chief coin maker, during a brief ceremony.

Bednarik inserted lead blanks and swung the arm on a replica 1793 screw coin press.

AP Laserphoto

The coin-stamping room at the U.S. Mint in Philadelphia.

"What they did back then had to be hard work," Bednarik said. "If it swung back, it would hit them in the jaw and hurt."

Congress created the mint on April 2, 1792, in the same legislation that authorized coinage of a cent, dime, quarter dollar, half dollar and dollar.

The first mint, about two blocks from the current 500,000-square-foot building near Independence Hall, was the first building constructed by the federal government for its own use. It remained in operation until 1833.

It was succeeded by two other buildings in the city before the mint moved to its current site in 1969.

Navajo students get apology for candy gag

LEUPP, Ariz. (AP) — Navajo students got the last laugh on a candy company that printed an Indian joke on its wrappers — the company apologized Thursday and agreed to print a joke by the students on future wrappers.

Sunmark Inc., a subsidiary of Nestle USA, delivered a formal apology to students at Leupp Boarding School on the Navajo Reservation in northern Arizona.

The 7th- and 8th-graders agreed to call off a local boycott of Nestle products and halt a campaign to persuade American Indians nationwide to join the protest, said their teacher, Linda Minas.

"The kids feel really good about what they have done," Minas said.

The joke, on wrappers of some Laffy Taffy, was: "Why were the Indians the first in North America? They had reservations."

Nestle spokesman Richard Curd, speaking from the company's Glendale, Calif., headquarters, said someone at Sunmark had already spotted the joke as offensive months before the company heard from the students. The printing plates were destroyed, he said.

"The kids said, 'We should get get some candy out of this,'" she said.

Foley should step down, Dallas congressman says

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Talk of a rebellion against House Speaker Tom Foley burst into the open on Thursday when a Dallas congressman called for him to give up the speakership after this term.

"It is time for new leadership in this institution," Democratic Rep. John Bryant said in a brief speech on the House floor. "I call on the speaker to retire after this Congress."

Bryant said he launched the challenge to Foley's leadership in hopes of encouraging other Democrats to declare their candidacies for speaker. A public rebuke for a sitting speaker by a member of his own party is a rare event in Congress, where House leaders control everything from the flow of legislation to office space.

"I just thought it was time somebody said the obvious," Bryant said in an interview later. "My goal is to basically say what everyone knows, and that is, the king has no clothes."

Bryant's remarks at the House microphone aired publicly the discontent that many lawmakers have expressed in private conversations in recent days. The Dallas Democrat's challenge to Foley sent another shock wave through an institution that has been in turmoil for weeks over the House check-kiting scandal.

Bryant's speech came shortly after other Democrats angrily confronted the speaker at a closed meeting that focused on Foley's handling of problems at the now-closed House bank.

"Maybe this will wake him up," said Rep. Joseph Early, D-Mass., another outspoken Foley critic. "In my political opinion, he will not continue as speaker. When will the change happen? Probably at the next Congress."

Foley, who has downplayed criticism of his performance, said he has no plans to step down after this term. But at news a conference before Bryant's speech, the speaker acknowledged the widespread feeling of discontent in the House.

"There have been happier times, no question about it," he said.

Senator resigns to protest federal debt

WASHINGTON (NYT) — The head of a Senate hit squad aimed at stemming massive federal deficit spending has become the second senator in less than two weeks to announce his retirement in protest against soaring government debt.

Fed up with the same issue, a group of mostly freshmen congressmen vowed Thursday to press for a constitutional amendment to require the federal government to live within its means.

"The budget deficit is completely out of control," Sen. Kent Conrad, D-N.D., warned Thursday on the Senate floor. Because of that, he announced, he would not seek reelection this fall.

"He's very frustrated that more has not been done to control the deficit," a Conrad aide said.

Just last week, Sen. Warren B. Rudman, R-N.H., made a similar announcement, citing "the skyrocketing national debt" as his chief political frustration and the "primary factor" in his decision to leave the Senate after two terms.

Conrad, 44, came to the Senate five years ago after promising voters he would not seek a second term unless the federal deficit was brought under control. Toward that end, Conrad became a fierce opponent of unbridled growth in government spending.

Pole signs pose dangers to utility workers

■ City law prohibits posting advertisements on telephone poles.

By Debbie Lincecum
Staff Writer

For the latest word on lost pets, garage sales or homes for rent, Midlanders sometimes need only look at the nearest telephone pole.

But posting notices on poles is not only forbidden by a city littering law, it is dangerous, according to local utility companies. City staffers and others said the nuisance is not likely to end soon.

"Our instructions to our outside forces are, when they see signs on our poles, to remove them," said Linda Basham, area manager of public relations for Southwestern Bell. That company and TU Electric own the more than 10,000 utility poles in the city.

Peter Carhart, distribution superintendent for TU, said the tacks, nails and staples left in poles can be a real hazard for workers.

"If we need to climb a pole that has signs on it, we're going to remove them," Carhart said. Workers use metal hooks on their boots to climb the wooden poles, so hitting a nail could cause a climber to slip, he said.

Climbing poles to make repairs is not always necessary, but at times it is not possible, Carhart said. The utility pole on the southeast corner of Midland Drive and Illinois, for example, is so spiked by used staples and tacks that it can no longer be climbed.

"It's our company policy not to leave anything stuck on our poles," Basham said. "Unfortunately we aren't going to see them all."

Maybe tacking them to poles isn't a good idea, but the renegade advertising signs have a long history behind them, a UTPB professor said.

"It goes back to Roman times and probably further than that," said Roger Bednar, professor of speech communications at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin.

"It's a very basic form of mass communication. We see it as an easy, self-controlled way to communicate with a lot of people at one time."

In other words, it's free and it works.

Sharla Hotchkiss, director of Keep Midland Beautiful, said the paper and cardboard signs obviously do little to help fulfill her agency's mission.

"But then you have to think, if you're the one with the lost dog, you want to get that out to people. You want some way to let them know," she said.

In fact, a great number of pole signs around town are meant for the people in the neighborhood, where the lost pet may be seen, or where the garage sale can be found.

"It's been an ongoing problem for years," said Roberta Allison, city code enforcement officer. "It gets bad when we go into the big (summer) garage-sale season."

Enforcement is rare, however, with the limited city enforcement staff busy on other work. While they doubt the trend is at its end, city staffers said people could use common sense to keep the problem from getting worse.

"They're not supposed to be there at all, but it might be better if people would only take them down when they're finished," Allison said.

But on most major city streets there are faded, torn remnants of pole signs, printed on everything from cardboard box lids to metal scraps.

"Maybe we would find some type of alternative to those signs," Hotchkiss said. "We all need to communicate, but maybe there's a better way."

Midlanders who want to get a face painted, peek at a damsel in peril, partake of a symphonic performance, pamper a pet, please a police officer, praise a science project, ponder how to spell pontificalibus, pick up trash, purchase a painting, pat a llama or pot some peonies can participate in a plethora of activities this weekend.

In fact, so many activities are planned for Midlanders this weekend, there isn't any room for a lingering cold front.

Events scheduled include the Midland Glad-Bag-A-Thon, the Regional Scripps Howard Spelling Bee, Trinity School's annual Funfest, the Texas Trash Off, the "Just Say No" Family Fun Fair, the Regional Science Fair, the Midland Police Department Open House, the SPCA Vaccination Clinic, breakfast with the Easter Bunny at Midland Park Mall and a plant potting clinic at a local nursery.

Dozens of events organizers across the Tall City are keeping their collective fingers crossed that the sunny skies and warmer temperatures predicted for today and Saturday come through.

"We haven't had any problems with weather yet," said Sharla Hotchkiss, coordinator of the Midland Glad-Bag-A-Thon and executive director of Keep Midland Beautiful.

Events will kick off 7:30 p.m. tonight with the senior division (grades 9-12) of science exhibits being judged at the Permian Basin Regional Science Fair in the gymnasium of the University of Texas of the Permian Basin.

The junior division (grades 3-8) will be judged 9:30 a.m. to noon Saturday. The awards ceremony for participants will be 2 p.m. Saturday in Odessa's Nimitz Junior High School.

Science projects will be open for public viewing 4-5:30 p.m. Saturday in the UTPB gymnasium.

"We have 483 junior projects entered in the fair and 140 senior division projects," coordinator John Hurn said. "We are expecting about 750 students since two or three people worked on some projects."

Also kicking off the weekend will be Trinity School's Funfest auction tonight from 7 to 10 p.m.

The silent auction and cocktail buffet will have such items up on the block as a day of dove hunting, whimsical paintings incorporating hand prints of little tykes, bird houses painted by fifth-graders, a baseball signed by Nolan Ryan, a weekend for two in New York City complete with two tickets to view a production of the television show Saturday Night Live, and a band to play at a party.

The public is invited to attend the auction. For location and reservations call 697-3281.

Mitsubishi presents case in crash trial

■ Testimony in the lawsuit filed by Williams Aviation is expected to conclude today.

By Michael Kashgarian

Alcohol consumption by the pilot, one of two engines not operating at capacity, and lack of maintenance may have contributed to the Feb. 14, 1990, crash of a Mitsubishi MU-2 turboprop near Putnam that killed all five passengers, according to defense testimony in a lawsuit against Mitsubishi.

A seven-person jury, one an alternate, listened to testimony Thursday in support of Mitsubishi, which is being sued by Williams Aviation in Judge Lucius Bunton's U.S. District Court. The trial began Monday with testimony expected to conclude today and jury deliberation set for Monday.

Williams Aviation claims Mitsubishi was negligent in the manufacture, design and lack of testing of de-icing equipment that contributed to the crash.

Mitsubishi claims the crash was the result of pilot error.

Defense witness Terrence Heaslip, an aircraft accident investigator from Canada, testified that he believed one of the plane's two engines had slowed down considerably — to about 30 percent — before the crash.

"The left engine was operating at least 100 percent if not more . . . and the right engine had flamed out and was wind-milling," Heaslip said.

Heaslip testified he concluded that ice had built up on the leading edge of the engine inlet and an anti-icer, which involves the use of heat, was activated. That caused loose ice to be ingested by the engine and led to engine failure.

An anti-icer should be activated before entering icy conditions, Heaslip said.

"I think the flame-out is consistent with the anti-icing being put on at that last minute," he said.

A plaintiff expert witness earlier had testified to the contrary and that both engines were operating at a normal level upon

Lawyers grill Lubbock pathologist at hearing

By Chip Brown
Associated Press writer

CANYON — An exhumation hearing into the beating death of a 72-year-old man quickly turned into a cross-examination Thursday of a Lubbock pathologist who has come under scrutiny for autopsies he performed for the state.

Dr. Ralph Erdmann took the Fifth Amendment as the first witness in the exhumation hearing of a defendant accused of killing Hilton Merriman, who was found in a pool of blood at his home near Canyon on May 13, 1990.

Six men were indicted for beating Merriman to death. One man has already been convicted and sentenced to die in the case.

At issue Thursday was Erdmann's autopsy of Merriman, which concluded a severe beating caused the victim to die of severe brain swelling.

Attorneys for Douglas Nathan Palmer contend Merriman's death may have been complicated by a heart condition. Attorneys acknowledge the victim was beaten but contend Merriman's heart disease was purposely overlooked by Erdmann as a cause of the victim's death.

Steven Losch, an attorney for the NAACP Legal Defense Fund-Capital Punishment Project, contends Erdmann routinely performs "made-to-order autopsies that support the police version of a case."

Erdmann, who was indicted in February by a Hockley County grand jury for falsifying an autopsy report, refused to answer over

Scholar offers insight on skinheads

Delano Lopez offers his insight on the American skinhead movement Thursday night at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin's student lounge.

By Darren J. Waggoner
Staff Writer

Delano Lopez believes today's American skinhead movement evolved from the "greasers" of the fifties. Further evolution, he says, is a scary thought.

"Authenticity is their goal, and the skinheads define themselves by bashing — stalking others and beating them to death. Their culture will not be reproduced as long as bashing defines them," he said. "Try to imagine something worse than six to eight guys stalking an unarmed individual and beating him to a bloody pulp."

Lopez's unique perspective on skinheads was gained through association.

In the summer of 1990, as part of his undergraduate thesis, he moved to New York City, shaved

Defendant takes stand in murder case

By Chris Van Wagenen
Staff Writer

Closing arguments in the Willie Lane Jr. murder trial will be heard today in 142nd District Court.

The third day of the trial being heard by Judge Pat Baskin saw the defendant take the stand.

Lane testified Thursday he felt threatened by Melvin Burton Jr., the 61-year-old man who was fatally shot at the New Dew #4 night club in April 1991.

According to Lane, Burton had flashed a closed knife at him during a heated exchange where both men apparently stated each would kill the other one, but only after the victim sought him out seated on the other side of a pool table.

Following a birthday party at another friend's house, Lane said he entered the Lee Street location where he found a dice game going on, involving Burton and some other men.

The 58-year-old defendant said he didn't gamble that night, but Burton did — leading to some other words and a flash of knives between the victim and Clay Caston, a friend who had won some money at the table.

After Caston left, Burton sat on the pool table and turned to Lane asking if he could talk with him.

According to testimony by the defendant and another witness, Carolyn Wilson, Burton came around the table to where Lane was sitting and the two began to exchange words.

Ms. Wilson testified Burton asked Lane why everyone always messed with him, to which Lane replied if "you treat me like a man, I'll treat you like a man."

During questioning, Assistant District Attorney John Westbrook pursued that statement.

"You thought you were better than Melvin and you didn't like him because he didn't give you the respect you wanted?" Westbrook said.

"No way that's right," responded Lane.

Ms. Wilson testified Burton said he'd kill Lane and Lane retorted that he'd kill Burton. After another back and forth exchange, witnesses said impact.

Heaslip testified the other expert failed to consider all the facts.

Heaslip's theory was based on his investigation at the crash scene and later during an engine inspection.

Placement of the wreckage, damage incurred and impressions made in the ground were described to jurors by Heaslip, who explained his interpretation of such observations.

The investigator also showed jurors differences in parts of both engine that were reportedly indicative of his findings.

On cross examination by the plaintiff, attorney Clint Coddington suggested the flame-out occurred after the plane encountered problems and was spinning toward the ground.

Both defense and plaintiff witnesses agreed that loss of pilot control occurred rapidly before sending the plane spinning about 13,000 feet to the ground.

"Nothing was happening very fast . . . until the very last minute," Heaslip said.

The plaintiff maintains what sent the plane spinning out of control was related to the rapid build-up of ice on the aircraft's wings and tails. Williams Aviation contends the situation could have been avoided if Mitsubishi had not made false claims about the aircraft's ability to fly in known icy conditions and about the effectiveness of the de-icer equipment.

The de-icer system consists of pneumatic de-icer boots attached to parts of the plane including the wings and tail. When activated, the rubber-like boots inflate and break accumulated ice.

The de-icer doesn't work properly unless at least one-quarter of an inch of ice has collected.

Supporting Mitsubishi's claim of pilot error was the introduction of blood-alcohol reports of the pilot, 51-year-old Kenneth Mardis.

Tests on "bloody fluid" taken from a body part of Mardis indicated a .05 gram-percent alcohol content, a toxicologist testified.

That amount, which under Texas law is half the illegal minimum level of driving while intoxicated, may have been residual alcohol from drinking the night before the morning crash, defense attorneys suggested.

Drinking within eight hours before operating an airplane is prohibited by federal law.

Williams Aviation maintains the alcohol may have been the result of decomposition. The toxicologist and a medical examiner both said they believe part of the alcohol was the result of decay but a larger portion was from consumption.

A third major argument in favor of the defense came from the testimony of Clayton Williams Jr., owner of Williams Aviation.

Williams testified that years ago, while on board the airplane, the pilot performed an aerobatic loop.

"I thought it was a demonstration showing me it could do it," said Williams, who added that he enjoyed the stunt.

The MU-2 is not designed for such flight, the defense informed Williams.

Williams was asked about a discussion of "the incident" that took place at Williams' residence after the crash. The phrase reportedly refers to an incident about a week before the crash when the airplane, on auto-pilot, experienced problems.

"I don't know anything about that," Williams said.

According to maintenance records for the aircraft, a device for the MU-2's auto-pilot system had been ordered about a week before the crash but had not been installed.

When Williams was asked about the needed maintenance, he replied, "I don't know anything about it 'till this morning." Williams added that he has a chief pilot who would handle that.

The chief pilot and president of Williams Aviation, Aubrey Price, who testified Wednesday, was not questioned about the part.

In addition to the legal action currently before the court, several wrongful death lawsuits have been filed by families of those killed.

Killed in the crash, in addition to the pilot, were four Midland business associates of then-gubernatorial candidate Williams. They were Jamie Winkel, 45, Randy M. Kidwell, 37, Robert Smith, 62, and Aaron Giebel.

The men were en route to Dallas from Midland when the crash occurred.

Police search for robbery culprits

Staff Report

ODESSA — Police are searching for two men in connection with a Wednesday night robbery in the parking lot of Temple Baptist Church, Odessa police said.

Billy W. Coston, 58, had let his wife in the car and was walking around the car when a man approached him from behind and demanded his wallet. The couple had just left an evening church service, police said.

Mrs. Coston spotted a gun and began yelling for by-standers to get away. The robber then placed the gun to Coston's head and again demanded the money. Coston complied, and the man fled on foot with another man, who had seemingly "come out of nowhere," police said.

The men escaped with $60 and the wallet, police said.

The man with the gun is described as 5-feet-8, 160 pounds with a black jacket, blue jeans and a tan-colored stocking mask. He is believed to be around 20-years-old. He was carrying a blue steel semi-automatic handgun, police said.

The other man was not identified.

Police seek robbers

Police are searching for two men in connection with an early Thursday morning robbery at the 7-Eleven store at 115 W. Wadley Ave., police reports said.

The men entered the store, picked up four cases of beer and began to walk out. The clerk attempted to stop them, and one of the men pulled a blue steel revolver and threatened him. The clerk let them go, and the men fled the scene on foot with the beer in tow, reports said. Police were called at 1:58 a.m.

Both men were wearing blue jeans and blue jackets. The man with the gun is described as black, age 21 to 23, 6-feet-2 and 195 pounds. The other man is black, 18 to 20-years-old, 5-feet-10 and 150 pounds, reports said.

MC to offer presentations on life after high school

Staff Report

Is there life after high school? Midland College attempts to answer that question for students at Midland and Midland Lee high schools April 7-9 with a series of presentations.

"What we have done is divided the presentations into three general areas: for those who are still undecided, those planning to attend Midland College, and those currently planning to leave home," said Jan Reed, Midland College student activities director.

Most of the presentations are being made by Midland College's faculty and staff. Also involved will be community leaders, bankers and employment specialists.

Joseph Baressi, Midland Independent School District superintendent, and David Daniel, president of Midland College, will have presentations at both high schools on "There Is Life After High School" and the implications of post-secondary education versus the alternatives.

Joan Baskin, former Midland Chamber of Commerce president, will speak at both high schools on "What Do You Want? What Will You Settle For?"

"Not all students are going to attend Midland College after graduation, and not all students are going to leave home to attend a large university. At this point, some of the students still haven't made up their minds. What we are trying to do is make them aware of the options which they have and some of the responsibilities they will face," Reed said.

Many of the presentations are being given in the form of quiz shows, slide presentations, videos and other graphics.

Lawmakers push to include anti-gang measure in special session

AP Laserphoto

Rep. Sam Russell, D-Mount Pleasant, left, and Rep. Eddie De La Garza, D-Edinburg, encourage Gov. Richards to include drug and gang issues on the special session agenda.

AUSTIN (AP) — Two state lawmakers said Thursday they want Gov. Ann Richards to include anti-gang and drug-fighting proposals in an expected special legislative session on public school finance.

Richards' press secretary, Bill Cryer, ruled out that idea for now. Cryer said education funding "should be enough to keep everybody busy."

But Rep. Sam Russell said he will try to convince Richards to add the issue to a special session agenda.

"Our schools are being besieged by armed gang members. . . . We just need to do more to protect our school kids and to reduce the numbers that we apparently are losing to gangs," said Russell, D-Mount Pleasant, who heads the House Committee on Criminal Jurisprudence.

There have been reports of shootings and other crimes on a number of Texas school campuses.

Russell and Rep. Eddie De La Garza, D-Edinburg, who heads a subcommittee on gangs, asked Richards to allow lawmakers to consider in the upcoming special session:

■ Amending privacy laws so police can tell school officials of students arrested or convicted of drug trafficking and gang-related violent crimes. De La Garza said in one case, a 12-year-old girl who was sexually assaulted away from school ended up in the same classroom with the boy accused of attacking her, unknown to school officials.

■ Providing harsher penalties for drug and weapons convictions if the arrest takes place within 1,000 feet of a school.

■ Expanding the jurisdiction of school district police to include the entire district, rather than just school campuses.

■ Authorizing the diversion of 25 percent of drug forfeiture money and property seized by law enforcement agencies to school districts for prevention programs designed to deter drug and gang activity.

Cryer said many of the proposals sound worthy, but that school finance problems will make for "an all-consuming kind of session."

"I cannot imagine that we could open it up, at this point at least, to other things until we get education finance settled," Cryer said.

Richards has not announced when she will call the special session, planned because the Texas Supreme Court in January ruled unconstitutional the state's public school tax system.

Cryer said the governor is aiming for a session in mid- to late-May.

The lawmakers said the gang problem should be addressed as soon as possible, although they added that additional legislation would be prepared for the 1993 regular session.

Wilson persuades committee to drop his name from list of House's worst check-kiters

By Ron Hutcheson
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Rep. Charles Wilson says he doesn't expect parades and celebrations in his East Texas district just because he failed to make the list of worst abusers in the House check-kiting scandal.

But the Lufkin Democrat was breathing a little easier on Thursday after confirming that his name was not among the top 22 lawmakers with the most egregious overdrafts at the now-closed House bank.

"I am very, very comfortable about the election in November," Wilson said at a news conference in his Washington office. "I think we'll do better than we did last time."

The East Texas congressman, a 10-term House veteran, was one of two lawmakers who persuaded the House ethics committee that he did not meet the panel's criteria for punishment as a blatant abuser of the bank's overdraft protection.

After hearing appeals from most of the 24 lawmakers originally targeted as abusers, the committee dropped Wilson and Rep. James Scheuer, D-N.Y., from the list before releasing it to reporters Wednesday night.

Wilson said the committee accepted his evidence that the bank waited four days to credit him with a $9,000 deposit that would have avoided an overdraft. To land on the abuser list, a lawmaker had to overdraw his account by more than a month's salary in eight of the 39 months covered by the ethics investigation.

Although the committee had originally concluded that Wilson met the eight-month rule, the change in his bank records knocked him off the abuser list. Wilson acknowledged, however, that he still has about 80 overdrafts on his record.

"I don't expect a big parade because I'm not on the list," he said. "I don't feel that there's any particular exoneration. But, on the other hand, I never felt I'd sinned against humanity in the first place."

Wilson's Republican opponent, Donna Peterson of Orange, said she will continue to hammer away at the check issue. Peterson held Wilson to 56 percent of the vote in their last matchup two years ago.

"It doesn't matter if he's 24 on the list or 29 on the list. The point is, abuse is there and it's on the record," she said. "The people of East Texas are too smart for that."

While Wilson expressed satisfaction with his treatment by the ethics committee, several lawmakers who landed on the final list railed against the watchdog panel.

Rep. Joseph Early, D-Mass., angrily challenged committee members to confront him with their findings face to face on the House floor. The committee rejected Early's appeal of his 140 overdrafts.

"They ran like rats!" Early said in a floor speech moments before the list was released. "What is wrong with going eyeball to eyeball if you are not afraid?"

Cheating allegations surface at police academy

FORT WORTH (AP) — Officials are looking into claims members of a class at the Fort Worth Police Department's training academy were planning to cheat on a routine first-aid examination.

The investigation began after training supervisors discovered the class may have made preparations to cheat on the test Tuesday. The Dallas Morning News, in a copyright story in Thursday's editions, reported the investigation involves 23 of the 26 members of the training class.

But a police spokesman told The Associated Press Thursday a much smaller number of class members were involved.

"There's at least one or more individuals involved," said Lt. Ralph Swearingin, police spokesman. "The exact number and extent has not been determined. But that (23) has not been proved to be factual. Early indications is the the number is considerably smaller."

Any final action will be determined by Police Chief Thomas Windham, Swearingen said. The investigation may take weeks, he said.

Until the allegations are proven, normal instruction will continue.

Swearingin said because trainees are not full-fledged police officers they are not guaranteed the same protections awarded to city employees.

The trainees could be dismissed, if the allegations are proven, he said.

Police say the cheating was discovered before the exam took place and involved the development of crib notes.

"I don't believe there was any cheating that took place, but there were indications that it was going to take place," Windham said.

Windham said the investigation is being conducted by Deputy Chief Ralph Mendoza and training academy Capt. B.J. Corder.

A source familiar with the investigation told the newspaper supervisors found crib notes with test answers penciled on them. The source said a further search of briefcases and belongings of trainees turned up copies of the first-aid exam and a traffic test that had been administered to previous training classes.

The trainees must complete the six-month training course that includes classroom and physical training in order to become sworn police officers. The trainees are scheduled to graduate in May.

There are three police recruit classes in training at the academy, but Windham said the investigation is limited to members of the one class.

Recruits are paid about $1,800 a month while attending the academy.

"We consider this to be very serious," Swearingin said.

Texas Supreme Court decides against some record-copying rules

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Supreme Court has decided in favor of an information service that fought some rules imposed on copying public records in the Gaines County clerk's office.

The Permian Report, a computer-based registry of documents affecting title to oil and gas properties, sued after being denied permission to microfilm certain records in the clerk's office.

The clerk had offered to sell copies of records at $1 per page or allow handwritten copies, but more than one million pages were involved, according to a lower appellate court's opinion.

After a 1990 trial, the clerk was allowed to adopt rules to permit access to public records while protecting them. The state district court in Gaines County decided the rules were reasonable.

But The Permian Report appealed rules that said reimbursement may be required for cost of a supervisor to control the reproduction procedure; an indemnity bond or cash deposit may be necessary to cover any loss from the copying procedure; a certificate of insurance can be required for protection for personal injury or property damage; and if the records are microfilmed, the clerk may obtain a copy at cost.

The 8th Court of Appeals in El Paso decided that those rules were unreasonable and unenforceable.

It upheld other rules, such as a provision for the clerk to set a reasonable time for the copying process, said James Allison, lawyer for county clerk Pat Lacy, whose predecessor made the rules.

The Supreme Court denied an appeal Wednesday by the county clerk.

Allison said the rules were meant to protect records when someone seeks to copy all the office's documents. He said he did not believe the clerk had received other voluminous requests.

State agencies unite to teach students environmental issues

AUSTIN (AP) — A new state committee created to educate Texas' youth about cleaning the environment announced plans Thursday to begin its program by training 1,600 science teachers.

The Texas Environmental Education Advisory Committee said the best way to get its message to students is by training teachers how to spread the word.

Jim Collins, the Texas Education Agency's director of science, said the key to the program's success is "to hand it to a teacher . . . so they understand how it was developed and how it is to impact a classroom."

The 40-member panel was created as part of a Texas Senate recycling bill passed last year. The group is composed of representatives from school districts, state universities, several teachers' groups and many state agencies.

The committee said it could hear as soon as May 1 whether it will receive $236,400 in federal funding it needs to launch the program next spring.

"We will look for any type of funding we can to ensure the success of this program. We cannot ignore the importance of environmental education to this state," Collins said.

"It's going to take millions to do it properly, and that's what we're looking at. This will not be a Band-Aid type approach to environmental education," he said.

Land Commissioner Garry Mauro said he hopes public donations and contributions from state agencies will help kick off the project regardless of whether it receives federal grants.

Texas Water Commissioner Peggy Garner said her agency has donated $25,000 for the project. She said next week the commission and Gov. Ann Richards will announce another program to teach school children the importance of recycling and garbage reduction.

"Good environmental education in Texas schools is essential if we expect strong environmental citizenship in our state. Establishing that foundation of understanding and sensitivity for the environment at a young age is extremely crucial," Ms. Garner said.

Collins said the committee's program will begin by educating science teachers, then will be expanded to include teachers specializing in a variety of subjects.

"Every curricular area can have an impact on our environment," he said.

Collins said the training would begin by giving teachers existing information.

"We don't have to go out and create materials. The departments across the state already have fantastic materials" which the teachers will be taught, he said.

Report shows decrease in pollution by chemical companies

By John Powers
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Texas chemical industry is making progress in reducing pollution, but companies released 317 million pounds of chemical waste into the air, water and land and by underground injection in 1990, according to industry figures.

The emissions included more than 42 million pounds of carcinogens and toxins that can cause birth defects.

The Texas Chemical Council, which represents more than 95 percent of the chemical manufacturing capacity in the state, released its "Texas Chemical Industry Emissions Report" at a news conference Thursday to show the decrease in pollution from 1987 to 1990, the latest figures available.

Jim Woodrick, chairman of the chemical council, said emissions released into the air decreased 18 percent in the four-year period, water releases decreased 46 percent, underground injection dropped 48 percent and land releases dropped 74 percent.

The amount of carcinogens and what are known as "heritable mutagens" and "developmental toxins," which can result in birth defects, declined 15 percent.

Woodrick said Texas has more than 50 percent of the nation's chemical production capacity, but accounts for only 13 percent of all emissions released into the environment.

"The important thing to remember is that the public has been looking for results with the chemical industry's pollution prevention plans and that is exactly what they're getting — results," he said. "We are proud of the reductions, but we will not stop there. We will certainly continue our commitment to further reduce emissions in Texas."

He also said the Environmental Protection Agency changed the reporting standards on ammonia compounds, so only a portion of them were reported, resulting in the apparent decrease in underground injection. But the report takes into account chemical delisting to ensure the figures show "real" decreases, Woodrick said.

He also said some of the reductions might result from a decline in chemical production because of the recession, but he did not know how much. Some areas of the chemical industry have shown a production decline, but others have had increases in volume, he said.

When asked why the public should trust pollution figures reported by the industry itself, Woodrick said people should have confidence in the figures because of the "significant amount of engineering and technology" that goes into recording and gathering the numbers.

The emission figures in pounds per year were: Air releases in 1990, 94.07 million, down from 114.31 million in 1987; water releases, 1.63 million, down from 3.02 million; land releases, 1.21 million, down from 4.68 million; and underground injection, 220.22 million, down from 424.02 million.

In addition, plants transferred 73.85 million pounds of waste to off-site locations for legal disposal in 1990, a 23 percent decline from 95.58 million in 1987.

Carcinogen, developmental toxin and heritable mutagen releases for 1990 were 42.12 million pounds, down from 49.74 million in 1987.

The voluntary emissions report, which includes figures for the 181 plants covered by the chemical council, will be available to the public at 23 public libraries across the state, including the Odessa Public Library.

SKINHEADS: Scholar joined gangs for research

his head and joined a gang. Before the summer had ended, he had joined six other skinhead gangs.

"I slept out on the streets with them and, in some cases, up in their high-rise apartments. I would go with them to their riots. We spent a lot of time just hanging out, drinking and talking about the music," he said.

Evading the "ultimate skinhead status symbol" of bashing kept him on the move.

"This is the one problem I had during my field research. I was not going to participate in the violence. If I would have stayed with each gang longer, there would have been more pressure to do so," Lopez said.

Lopez believes today's skinheads are yesterday's punk rockers.

"Like skinheads; rap, punk and all the other movements started out as deviant but, unlike the skins, the others have all been incorporated into the mainstream, more or less," he said. "People used to fear rap when it first got going, but now you can go down and buy it at the local record store. Skinheads are turning toward more hardcore punk rock music. They are rejecting diffusion — they don't want to be watered down like rap."

Lopez believes the general public misunderstands the various skinhead movements.

"People see skinheads as psychopaths and, although some are, most are not. They are results of our culture. They have taken what they see in the movies — the hero killing and hurting others — and they do the same," he said. "Also, everyone believes skinheads are racist groups. But about 60 percent of them are simply Pro-American — with black and Hispanic members — and only about 17 percent target minorities."

According to Lopez, skinheads express themselves through their music.

"It plays a large role in every aspect. The skinhead culture is so intrinsically transferred through their music," he said. "Not simply in the sound but also the packaging and labeling of the tape itself. Someone will buy one tape, and it will be copied a thousand times. The copy with the handwritten songs titles written on them says a lot about who they are — at least to them it does."

Lopez, a 1991 graduate of Simon's Rock College, has previously given the lecture to students at Cornell and Duke University.

LUBBOCK: Lawyers grill pathologist at hearing

(From 1B)

200 questions posed by defense attorney Millard Farmer.

Farmer interrogated Erdmann about several complaints from police officers and fellow pathologists that Erdmann's work "is a threat to the public."

"How many (district attorneys) have you helped perform fake autopsies?" Farmer asked.

"I plead my rights," Erdmann responded.

In the motion to exhume Merriman's body, the defense claims the district attorneys in Randall, Potter and Lubbock conspired with Erdmann to perform examinations biased for the state.

Randall County District Attorney Randy Sherrod, who is arguing the state's case against Merriman's suspected killers, refused to comment on the hearing, but offered in opening statements that there will be "no testimony to show Dr. Erdmann put innocent people in the penitentiary."

Erdmann's wife, Joan, also pleaded the Fifth to questions that she accepted at least $17,000 for bone and tissue samples from bodies autopsied by her husband.

In opening statements, Randall County Assistant District Attorney John Davis said the state was unable to obtain tissue samples from Merriman's body because Erdmann has failed to produce the evidence.

"The samples Dr. Erdmann furnished us with were not from Mr. Merriman," Davis said. "They were tissue samples from a 29-year-old man whose name I do not know. We don't know if he took the samples at the time of the autopsy. We don't know if he has them or not."

Erdmann, clad in a black suit with a plain black tie, took the stand and warned defense attorneys, "Upon the advice of my counsel, I wish not to answer any questions." When Farmer opened questions after lunch by asking, "Did you have a nice lunch, Dr. Erdmann?" Erdmann replied, "I plead my rights."

Farmer said, "If I waited a week for you to answer, this wouldn't change, would it?"

"A year," Erdmann replied with a smile.

MURDER: Case winds down

(From 1B)

Lane went out the door, while Burton returned to his place on the pool table facing the entrance.

Lane admitted being "very angry," recalling he had been threatened in a similar manner by Burton at another southeast night club on another occasion after the defendant had spoken with the victim's son about his father's behavior.

Lane said when he left Burton the first time on the night of the shooting, he returned to his car to retrieve a .38-caliber handgun for protection, which he placed in a pant leg pocket.

"My intention was not to go back in and kill him," Lane testified. "I wanted to go back in and reason with Melvin about all this killing talk."

Lane testified that when he reentered the club, he told Burton "I told you 100 different times to quit (harassing) me."

At that exact moment, Lane said Burton stood up from the table and replied "I told you I'd kill you . . .," at which point the victim began reaching in his pocket for what the defendant believed was a knife.

"The minute I seen the knife (coming out) I pulled my pistol," and shot the victim three times, Lane said.

Lane then walked from the scene to a club next door where he had Ms. Wilson call his wife. He then drove to the police station where he was arrested.

FAMILY MATTERS

'Woman's work' causes problems in relationship

By Jim May, Ph.D.

DEAR FAMILY: Two years ago when things looked like they might slow down again, I went out and found a job. I was very lucky and I found a job that I truly loved. My husband was all for it and really liked the extra money. Things have gone very well at home and at the job. Our 5-year-old son adjusted well to my working and he seems happy.

May

Then came the bad news. In December when things really did slow down, the company had a round of lay-offs. I think that I was very fortunate to stay employed, but they changed my job. I had to start traveling two or three days a week. I've tried to schedule my trips so that I leave on Monday and come back either late Tuesday or Wednesday night. My husband didn't like it but he tolerated it. Now he's started complaining about my traveling and about everything else.

He's not happy with having to take care of our son while I'm gone and do things around the house. He says that it's my job to take care of my son, not his. He says that I'm supposed to take care of the house, not him. I've tried to reason with him but I've not made any progress. Now he starts being grumpy and in a foul mood on Sundays and for a day or two after I get back.

I don't think that it's fair for him to act like this. Now we need the money I bring in and we both agree to that. I just don't know what to do with him. I dread Sundays and I'm getting where I hate to come home. I know that's not right, but that's the way things are now. I'm getting as grumpy as he is and I know that's not good for our son.

What can I do to make things better? We both agree that I need to keep my job. I just don't know what to say to him to get things back the way they were. DISTRAUGHT

DEAR DISTRAUGHT: Schedule a time when you can talk without distractions — no television, radio, son, etc. — to discuss this matter with your husband. Such discussions work better when both are rested and awake, when the room is well-lit, and when the couple sits facing each other so they can look each other in the eye.

First, discuss what's different now from when you were getting along. An obvious answer is your traveling, but there may be more "different" than you realize. Try to consider what is different "in you," not just "with him or her." After identifying those differences, discuss what positive actions can be taken. Think in terms of taking the smallest positive action that might change something.

Next, discuss the concept: "You don't have to like it, you just have to do it." You two can spend endless hours being unhappy over something that is unavoidable (like your change in job duties), or you can learn to accept the situation. For example, your husband's attitude is undesirable but maybe he has some other needs that are not being met. There is no one "right way" to live your lives, but there are many ways that will work.

The challenge is to find a way that will work for both members of a couple. In your meeting you may want to tell your husband about your observations that he seems upset when you are preparing to go out of town and when you return. Tell him how the traveling affects you. Discuss ways that could address those feelings.

What could each of you do that would help? Perhaps he would feel better if the two of you could spend some "alone" time on Sunday evening. You might feel better if the three of you could plan time together on Sunday afternoon to play games, go to the park, etc.

Work on creating helpful solutions. Come up with an idea and try it. If it doesn't work for either or both, modify and try again. Don't waste time blaming, but put your energy into developing potential solutions and adjusting as necessary.

DEAR CONFIDENTIAL (WIMPED OUT): You and your husband certainly have experienced a nightmare. Unfortunately your plight is becoming more common. When you get caught with a major illness between insurance coverage, things get complicated fast.

Re-contact Mental Health Mental Retardation, but ask to speak to a social worker rather than the psychiatrist. You need some specific social services ideas and solutions. Help is generally available, but people need to know how to approach the problem. Most medical service agencies have a sliding pay scale that takes into account total financial situation, debt as well as income.

Continue to turn to God. He will not fail you.

Dentists say multiple visits keep plaque from worsening

By Ellen Whitford
N.Y. Times News Service

Most adults need to see their dentist three or four times each year — not twice — to control plaque, the gluelike substance that leads to gum disease affecting 75 percent of all adults.

"Many studies indicate that professional cleaning twice a year simply isn't enough for many people," said Edward Taggart Jr., a San Francisco dentist. "No matter how well you brush and floss your teeth, if you wait six months between (dental) visits, gum disease can get established."

Dr. Taggart, director of postgraduate periodontology at the University of California in San Francisco, was in Atlanta recently for the 80th Thomas P. Hinman dental meeting.

Studies indicate that people who are susceptible to gum disease — including gingivitis, an inflammation of the gums that is the first stage of periodontal disease — benefit from three or four cleanings each year, said Dr. Taggart and several Atlanta dentists.

Gingivitis is marked by red and puffy gums that bleed easily. But people with more serious gum, or periodontal, disease may actually have fewer symptoms, said Michael McDevitt, an Atlanta periodontist.

> 'The name 'gum disease' is a little misleading. It's really a bone disease.'
> — Dr. Michael McDevitt
> Atlanta periodontist

"The name 'gum disease' is a little misleading," he said. "It's really a bone disease. ... You can be lulled into a false sense of security if you rely on your own assessment."

The American Dental Association doesn't specify how often people should see their dentists, said spokesman Phil Weintraub, "because everyone's dental needs are a little different.

"Your dentist will specify what constitutes regular dental care," he said. "But three or four times a year doesn't sound excessive."

Damage to the underlying bone often occurs in episodes that last just a few weeks, Dr. McDevitt said. A lot of damage can accrue in six months, he said.

Gum disease is the most serious threat to dental health in adults, responsible for 70 percent of all the teeth lost by people age 40 and older. Three out of four adults will have some form of gum disease in their lifetime, according to the ADA. Women are more susceptible than men, studies indicate, probably because of hormonal changes.

In a healthy mouth, all the teeth are anchored to bone by an apron of gum tissue. When teeth are not well cleaned, particularly around the gum line and between teeth, clusters of bacteria take up residence in sticky deposits called dental plaque.

The plaque bacteria gradually erode the gum tissue, causing craters — periodontal pockets — under the gums, which pull away from the tooth surface. The deeper the pocket, the more serious: Infection can spread to the underlying bone, softening it and weakening support of the teeth.

Even people who brush conscientiously can reach only about 1 millimeter below the gum line, Dr. Taggart said. But the sulcus — the gum "cuff" around each tooth — is about 3 millimeters deep. "So even if you're really perfect at cleaning your teeth, there are still some areas where germs can collect," he said.

Untouched, the plaque will calcify, hardened by the minerals in saliva. Calcified plaque — "calculus," dentists call it — is impossible to remove at home. Above the gum line, it's mainly a cosmetic problem. But below the gum line, tartar provides a sort of scaffold on which further plaque accumulates. The gums become inflamed.

In every dental cleaning, the dentist or the hygienist — "the first line of defense," Dr. Taggart said — should measure the sulcus around each tooth.

He or she should scale the teeth and under the gums, to remove tartar on the teeth's root surfaces and to smooth them, he said.

People with periodontal pockets of 3 to 5 millimeters may need topical or local anesthesia for a deeper scaling and root planing. The procedure costs about 10 times as much as a regular cleaning, he said.

People with periodontal pockets deeper than 5 millimeters may require surgery to expose the root surface so it can be properly cleaned.

DEAR ABBY

Father's medication too heavy

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: In February 1991, my 80-year-old parents spent two weeks with my husband and me in our Florida home. We hadn't spent that much time together in many years, and I was shocked by how my father had aged. His eyes were glazed and he seemed to be living in a fog much of the time.

Van Buren

I was concerned about Dad's medication, and my mother told me that his doctor had prescribed all the pills — and Dad had been going for checkups every three months for the last 10 years and was still taking the pills.

After they went home, a letter appeared in your column about overmedication of older people. One point it made was that since the organs become less efficient at ridding the body of toxins as one ages, a dosage that is appropriate at 70 may be too strong at 80.

I phoned my mother and read her the letter, and urged her to contact my father's doctor and discuss it with him. She did — and the doctor cut the dosage in half, and eliminated some pills altogether.

My parents just left after spending two weeks with us again this year. Abby, my father is a new person! He seems years younger, and that glazed look is gone from his eyes. Thank you for printing that letter last February, and please consider reprinting it. If it helps improve the quality of one person's life as much as it did my father's, it will be worth it. — HIS DAUGHTER IN NAPLES

DEAR DAUGHTER: I am printing your letter to remind others that a dosage of medication that is appropriate at 70 may be too strong at 80. The message bears repeating.

DEAR ABBY: I love cats but cannot keep any because of my husband's allergies. Luckily, I have nice neighbors who are willing to "share" theirs. My husband enjoys having the cats in our yard because they keep the moles out of our lawn and other rodents out of the garden. They are also very sweet-tempered and "visit" us when we are outdoors.

Our problem is that the four of us share the same back yard with a neighbor who hates cats and has threatened to kill them if they come into her yard. She's repeated this threat three different times, and we're starting to believe her. The cost of a fence that would stop a cat is just not possible at this time.

Do you or any of your readers know of a plant that would repel cats that we could plant along the edge of our properties? I know that marigolds are supposed to repel mosquitoes and other insects, and that there are plants to repel moles. Perhaps if we made the property line "undesirable," the cats would stay in our yards. — GRATEFULLY YOURS

DEAR GRATEFULLY: To quote Dr. Irwin David, my veterinary medical expert: "There are plants that repel insects, but not cats. Even if you planted a hedge, it would have to be very thick and tall to prevent a cat from going through it or over it."

So, your only solution is to keep the cats under a watchful eye until you and your neighbors have saved enough to split the cost of a sturdy fence. Sorry.

DEAR ABBY: I am submitting a limerick that may be a bit too suggestive for your column. Maybe not. You be the judge.

"But roosting in another's nest
"May lead to cardiac arrest."

Medicare coverage depends on eligibility

By Steve Edwards

QUESTION: What are the eligibility requirements for Medicare coverage?

Edwards

ANSWER: Most people are eligible for Medicare coverage at age 65. Every person who has worked long enough to receive Social Security is eligible for Part A hospital insurance. Spouses of eligible workers are also eligible, as are certain divorced persons, widows and widowers, and dependents. Certain other individuals, who are being treated for End State Renal Disease or kidney failure which requires dialysis treatment, may also be eligible for Medicare. In addition, certain disabled individuals who have collected Social Security disability benefits for two years may also be eligible for Medicare benefits. There are additional examples pertaining to eligibility. Therefore, it's important to recognize that many people under 65, including younger people, may be eligible for Medicare because of their disability, or status as a disabled dependent.

QUESTION: How do you apply for Medicare coverage?

ANSWER: Application for Part A and Part B insurance should be made at a Social Security office about three months prior to your 65th birthday and ends three months after you turn 65. There are some good reasons for this, including the fact that you are continuing to work and will use the employer group insurance plan from your job. Since your employer may offer you insurance coverage, it may not be necessary to pay for the additional premium for Part B until you retire. If you are retiring from a job which offered you health insurance coverage after age 65 and if you elected to temporarily pass up Medicare Part B, you may enroll directly into Part B when you retire at any time during the year, provided you transfer directly from your employer plan.

Medicare also holds an annual Part B open enrollment period for all eligible beneficiaries in January, February and March. However, there may be penalty assessed to the monthly premiums for individuals who are delayed enrolling in Medicare Part B at 65. This penalty is 10 percent for each year of delay after age 65. There is no penalty, however, for individuals who delayed enrolling in Part B because they were covered by the employer's health insurance program.

QUESTION: Can you explain some of the new regulations regarding Medigap insurance?

ANSWER: Medigap insurance should be easier to buy and simpler to understand with major reforms, enacted as part of the 1990 budget, now in place. Most significant among the reforms is a limitation on the number and kind of Medigap policies which can be sold to seniors.

At the direction of Congress, the National Association of Insurance Commissioners has developed a basic program of benefits, plus nine separate packages which can be used to expand coverage.

The basic package, available in all states, covers only Part A hospital co-insurance ($163 per day for days 61-90 of a hospital stay); 365 days in the hospital once Medicare coverage has stopped and the 20 percent co-insurance for covered Part B medical or outpatient services.

Those "core" benefits must be included in all policies. Not all packages will be available in all states and not all insurance companies will sell all packages.

Seniors new to the Medicare program have a six-month grace period during which they cannot be denied Medigap coverage due to a pre-existing health condition. Once Medigap coverage is in effect, it cannot be taken away for health reasons. However, insurers can make seniors wait six months before treatment for pre-existing conditions can be covered.

Congress also had tried to ensure that seniors do not purchase Medigap coverage which duplicated benefits to which they already are entitled. So, if a senior with a Medigap policy becomes eligible for Medicaid, he or she now must be allowed to suspend the Medigap policy. If or when that person is no longer eligible for Medicaid, Medigap coverage must be reinstated without a waiting period of any other penalty.

Patients, nursing homes face Medicaid changes

By Lauran Neergaard

ATLANTA (AP) — Ellen Wolcott was 80 and had been on Medicaid one month when her posh nursing home told her it couldn't afford her anymore.

Mrs. Wolcott, who is mute from a stroke, was so frightened of leaving the familiar Knollwood Terrace that she began vomiting and had to be hospitalized.

Knollwood in February became the first nursing home in the nation to oust its Medicaid patients because of a change in federal law that increased the cost of caring for them.

"What happened to our families is not an isolated thing. It's going to continue to happen all over the country," said Mrs. Wolcott's daughter, Nancy Gattone. "Our elderly Medicaid patients are being shuffled about like old shoes. It may be legal, but it's absolutely immoral."

Of 62 patients who need a new place to live, most are middle-class people who went broke paying for nursing home care before going on Medicaid. They have until April 30 to find a new home.

"There a Medicaid crisis now in every state," said Dina Elani of the American Association of Homes for the Aging. "Most homes are losing money."

Nationwide, financially pinched states are lowering Medicaid reimbursements. An AAHA survey found that 15 states are being sued over the rates, and 35 more are taxing health-care providers to supplement Medicaid revenues.

ILLINOIS RAN out of Medicaid money last summer and couldn't pay hospitals and nursing homes for eight months. Last month, the state borrowed $500 million to pay the bills, but about $350 million still is owed.

In Georgia, 20 homes have gone bankrupt in 18 months and more than 200 are losing money because of Medicaid cutbacks, said Fred Watson, president of the Nursing Home Association.

But Knollwood is the first to tell its 62 Medicaid patients to go, a decision administrator Keith Hart said was forced by a 1990 change in federal Medicaid law. It required homes that cared for seriously ill patients to also accept moderately ill ones.

The state reacted by lowering Medicaid payments to homes based on their number of moderately ill patients. The reason: Caring for them should cost less.

Not so, says Patricia Nemore, staff attorney for the National Senior Citizens Law Center in Washington.

"The two distinctions are really not very meaningful in terms of nursing home people because their condition changes," she said. "They might need more service one day and less a week later when they're a little more stable."

For Knollwood, the change meant a drop in Medicaid reimbursement from $98.04 a day to $62.74. Private patients pay $80 to $130 a day.

Nursing homes in Georgia have to agree before they open to participate in Medicaid. But state law doesn't force them to stay in the program.

ANGRY KNOLLWOOD families pushed legislation in February to block that loophole. Modeled after Tennessee's Medicaid program, the legislation would force homes that withdraw from Medicaid to continue to care for needy patients who already live there. The bill has passed the Legislature and is awaiting the governor's signature.

But the legislation won't help the 62 Knollwood residents find new homes by the April 30 deadline. By early March, only half had.

Ms. Gattone had to enroll her mother in a personal-care home, which does not provide medical care and isn't eligible for Medicaid. Ms. Gattone doesn't know how she'll pay the $1,800 a month bill, or what will happen if her mother's condition worsens. Personal-care homes accept only patients who don't need round-the-clock care.

Ginger Hall fears that if she can find a new home for her mother, she won't survive the move. Martha Ferrell, 75, suffers from Alzheimer's and Parkinson's diseases and is fed through a tube.

"A psychologist told us that 50 percent of these patients would not be living in three months because of the trauma of the move. And the homes we're looking at have told us they don't know if they can stay in Medicaid another year either," Mrs. Hall said. "I just don't know what we're going to do."

Nursing homes evolve as elderly population increases

BALTIMORE (AP) — Nursing homes need to develop more comprehensive health programs to curb costs and provide better care for the rapidly growing elderly population, the chief of the Johns Hopkins' Geriatrics Center says.

"The number of elderly is mushrooming," Dr. John Burton told about 250 doctors from around the country at the 19th annual Geriatrics Symposium, a week-long conference held recently.

"Delivering disjointed care can be catastrophic. Because the elderly are so frail and vulnerable, you need to have a full integration of programs," he said.

The number of Americans in nursing homes has tripled since the mid-1960s to more than 1.6 million people. In 1965, $4 billion was spent on caring for the elderly, jumping to $42 billion in 1988, the last year complete figures were available.

About 45 percent of Americans who are over 65 have spent some time in a nursing home. Thirty percent of nursing home patients stay for less than three months, 20 percent stay three months to a year, 30 percent stay one to five years and 20 percent stay longer than five years, Burton said.

But many nursing homes are small and isolated from hospitals and physicians, Burton said.

Doctors, researchers and health care workers at the Geriatrics Center at the Francis Scott Key Medical Center in Baltimore are developing programs to deal with the changing needs of the elderly.

The center offers daycare programs and doctors who make house calls for elderly patients who wish to live at home but need part-time care. For patients who need full-time treatment, the center stresses a team approach involving patients, families, social workers, doctors and nurses.

By being informed about treatment, patients and their families can choose procedures they want or don't want, said Dr. Susan Denman, an assistant professor of medicine at Johns Hopkins.

But nursing homes don't only have a medical obligation to patients, Burton said. Health care professionals must work to ensure the comfort, dignity and psychological well-being of their patients.

Dr. Steven Levenson, a medical instructor at Johns Hopkins, said there is an increasing trend to "demedicalize" nursing homes, as doctors rethink polices on medicating or restraining patients.

Various mulches help improve garden yields

Mulching is one of the real keys to successful vegetable gardening in Texas. When properly done, mulching can go a long way toward insuring high yields of quality vegetables.

Mulching can be simply defined as "any material spread on the garden to protect the roots of plants from heat, cold or drought, reduce problems with weeds and keep fruit clean."

Kiker

The following materials can be used for mulching:

■ Clear plastic: It helps warm the soil early in the season. A problem is that it will stimulate weed seed germination and growth. Clear plastic can be laid over seeded rows to stimulate early germination. It should be removed as soon as seedlings emerge from the soil. If weeds are not a problem, clear plastic is an excellent mulching material.

■ Black plastic: It warms soil early in the season and also reduces the weed population. Adequate soil moisture should be available when black plastic is applied. Cut holes through the plastic after it is applied over the bed to allow for seeding or transplanting.

■ Paper: Various types of paper can be used as mulches, with newspaper being the most common. Several sheets of newspaper laid flat over the surface of the garden row works as a mulch; however, this will reduce temperature of the garden soil. Paper mulch used early in the spring when the soil is cold will delay the maturity of many garden vegetables. Paper can be used to greater advantage if applied after crops are growing and soil has warmed up.

■ Organic mulches: Organic mulches are by far the most common. They are most beneficial in the summer, reducing soil temperature and saving soil moisture. Organic mulches should not be used too early in the spring as they will slow plant maturity.

Mulches or organic matter will help prevent soil crusting, help control weeds, prevent erosion and lessen fruit rot as well as save moisture and reduce summer temperatures. After the soil warms, apply organic mulches at a depth of one to two inches thick around growing plants.

With such organic materials as sawdust, leaves and rice hulls, it will usually be necessary to increase the amount of garden fertilizer by about one-fourth to compensate for nutrients used my microorganisms during the breakdown process. At the end of the season, organic mulches should be turned under to help improve the soil's physical condition.

Thinning fruit is a key practice for both backyard gardens and commercial growers. Thinning is important for getting good-sized peaches and other fruit, thereby increasing the crops value.

For top production, fruit should be 6 to 8 inches apart. On a well-pruned tree, leave about 600 fruits.

It is always best to thin fruit trees early in the season. Fruit thinned at bloom will average about one-fourth-inch larger than fruit thinned at six weeks of age.

Thinning at 28 days after blooming is a good guideline because the danger of frost is normally past at that time, the fruit thins easier, and increased fruit size can still be realized. However, thinning after pit hardening will be of little value other than to prevent limb breakage. All doubles (twin fruit) should be removed.

Thinning can increase the value of the fruit crop dramatically. Peaches two-and-a-half inches in diameter are often worth twice as much as two-inch peaches.

Thinning can be done by hand or by using a mechanical tree shaker. Studies are being conducted by the Extension Service on the use of chemicals for thinning, and this practice looks promising.

Dead chicken proves worth, wins show

By Bill Whitaker
The Associated Press

ABILENE — It's fitting I first heard this story from Bob Cluck since it is, by all accounts, clearly a clucker.

Specifically, it's about a clucker that clucked its last during a recent livestock show.

By now, the Abilene Reporter-News has published every honor, statistic and accomplishment of note stemming from the recent stock show season. But the best tale of all concerns 15-year-old David DeFoore, a freshman at Anson High, and his prize-winning chicken.

From what David's father, Rick DeFoore, tells me, David raised his prize white chicken from chickhood. Guess you could say David became about as emotionally attached to that chicken as anybody could. And he figured he'd enter the Jones County Livestock Show just to see if it could place.

Funny thing about chicken-judging — at least, it's funny to those of us not raised on a farm. Seems when the judge judges, youths competing stand in a line and hold their chickens out by the legs upside-down. This way the judge can easily check the chickens' breasts to see which bird has the best-quality meat.

"Well, that's what happened this time," Rick said. "These judges may check chickens several times, comparing one to another. It may take a few minutes, depending on how many kids you have. The judge had already checked David's chicken and moved him up to the front of the line.

"All of a sudden, that chicken squawks, relieves itself of gas and manure, kind of shudders and then becomes real still."

Everybody, judge and competitors alike, looked around to see what had happened. Real quick, they deduced this poor chicken had given up the ghost.

How did that happen?

"Who knows?" Rick said. "It could've been the stress of the competition, hanging upside-down and being overweight."

Anyway, this left David terribly depressed. To quote his father, David was "ready to pack up his dead bird and leave."

One of the officials, however, said he might as well stay.

"Son, you've already entered and we've already judged it," the grieving lad was told.

"He's a pretty sensitive kid," father said of son. "I mean, he wanted to leave, even though it was his first competition. You can picture it — everyone laughing and snickering and he's there mortified."

But David stayed. He stayed and won first place in the medium bird division — and right in front of all those folks who'd been snickering at him and his dead chicken. He stayed a little longer and won reserve champion roaster honors as well.

In the end, David reportedly found great satisfaction in winning, though the experience isn't one he'd care to repeat.

That's pretty much the end of this clucked-its-last story, though Bob Cluck did put forward one very mind-boggling question: Just how do you suppose the kid who got beat by David DeFoore's dead chicken in that medium-sized bird division felt?

Not good, I'll bet. It's a cinch that chicken went straight to the proverbial pot.

For the record, Rick says his wife, Janet, a true animal lover, did try to do CPR on David's hapless chicken, massaging its breasts and trying to stir life amidst its tired feathers. However, when one youth came up and did mouth-to-mouth on the chicken, even Mrs. DeFoore was shocked.

She was even more shocked when another youth picked up the chicken by its legs and asked: "Is this that dead chicken that won?"

"My wife said that's when she finally gave up any further ideas about doing CPR on that chicken."

Planting reports indicate wheat stocks to be tight

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's farmers intend to plant more corn and spring wheat this year, but less durum and winter wheat, the Agriculture Department said Tuesday.

That means that while there should be enough corn to feed the country's cattle herds and poultry flocks, wheat stocks are expected to remain tight and consumer prices for bread, baked goods and pastas could go up.

Consumer activists say food prices could rise sharply if this year's wheat crop is damaged by a hot, dry summer in the Great Plains and fails to replenish the nation's dwindling reserves.

"Even with a good year, the cost of food is going to go up. And it's going to go up sharply for bread and baked goods if there is a dry year," said Rod Leonard, executive director of the Community Nutrition Institute.

Observers worry this year's crops could be hurt by a combination of unusual weather factors: El Nino, a warming of the Pacific waters off the Southern Hemisphere, which causes a shift in weather patterns across the United States, and changes in the atmosphere due to the eruption of Mount Pinatubo.

USDA, meanwhile, said corn farmers intend to plant 79 million acres this year, a 4 percent increase from last year and 7 percent above 1990.

Farmers also intend to plant 17.2 million acres to spring wheat, a 10 percent increase. But durum wheat acreage is expected to total only 2.54 million acres, a 22 percent decrease from last year. It would be the smallest area since 1970.

The winter wheat acreage is also off 1 percent from 1991, totaling 50.3 million acres.

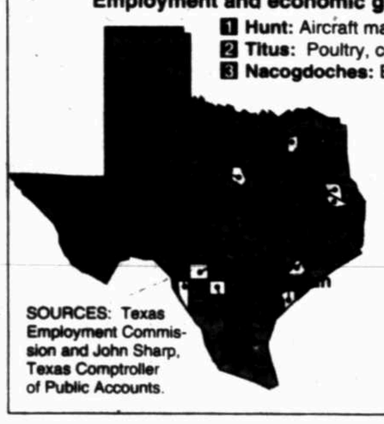

At the same time, USDA said there were 886 million bushels of wheat in storage on March 1, the lowest stocks for that date on record.

Cold weather threatens to hurt Texas fruit crops

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — Agricultural producers got rain and cold this week, increasing potential for fruit crop damage in the Hill Country, the Texas Agricultural Extension Service reports.

The El Nino effect — warm Pacific Ocean currents that increase moisture across Baja California — is sending the rain system this way, said Richard Wynne, meteorologist at the Southwest Agricultural Weather Service. The weather has been following the same pattern since November.

There was some damage to fruit trees in the northern portion of the state after temperatures dropped below freezing in the middle of March.

"The whole state is in a vulnerable situation because everyone is in the post-bloom stage," said John Lipe, an Extension horticulturist in Fredericksburg. "If we have a hard freeze (below 28 degrees), it will cause serious damage because there won't be any buds to replace the ones lost."

If the freeze lasts more than three to four hours, 28 degrees may still do some damage, but because peach trees naturally produce too much fruit, we can afford to lose some, he said.

Gardens are in full swing, with planting of warm season vegetables near completion in most areas.

Livestock is in good to excellent condition throughout the state and producers are spraying animals for lice and ticks.

Pasture conditions are improving and fertilizer and weed control are in progress.

The following specific crop, livestock and weather conditions were reported by district Extension Service directors:

FAR WEST: Soil moisture adequate to short. Small grains improving. Range, pastures fair; forage quality low. Home garden reparations under way. Ranges improving rapidly. Livestock improving. Good peach set.

WEST CENTRAL: Soil moisture short to adequate. Wheat in good condition. Oats growing well. Livestock good to excellent; some parasite, insect problems. Some frost damage to peaches. Garden numbers reduced by heavy rain.

PANHANDLE: Soil moisture adequate to short. Wheat crop growing well, being treated for insect problems. Livestock in good condition. Land preparation, fertilization, irrigation under way. Ranges greening up.

SOUTHWEST TEXAS: Soil moisture adequate. Pastures, ranges, small grains making excelling growth; rust severe. Cotton planting under way. Vegetable harvest winding down. Peach, apple, pecan blooming complete. Peanut planting soon.

SOUTH PLAINS: Soil moisture adequate. Land preparation, herbicide/fertilizer applications under way. Ranges, pastures, wheat good; slight freeze damage. Vegetable land preparation and planting under way. Freeze damage to fruit.

Shaq expected to go pro

Associated Press

O'Neal

SAN ANTONIO — All-American center Shaquille O'Neal is expected to skip his senior year at Louisiana State to turn professional.

The 7-1 O'Neal, who dominated college basketball for three years, scheduled an afternoon news conference in San Antonio today to reveal his plans. The news conference was planned for 1 p.m. CST at Fort Sam Houston, the U.S. Army post where his father is stationed.

O'Neal, 20, declined to discuss the matter Wednesday night when he attended a San Antonio Spurs game with family members.

He also chatted during the game with sports agent Leonard Armato of Los Angeles, who represents former Lakers star Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, Hakeem Olajuwon of the Houston Rockets and Karl Malone of the Utah Jazz.

Although O'Neal has not publicly discussed his intentions, indications were he would enter the June NBA draft. Several news organizations have cited sources saying the announcement was imminent.

"If I do go pro, I've promised my parents that I'll get my education. When I go back to get my degree, it'll be a national TV event," he said last week.

LSU coach Dale Brown said he met with O'Neal and his family Sunday night in San Antonio and told them he supported O'Neal's decision, whatever that will be.

LSU athletic director Joe Dean said O'Neal may already have retained an agent. Whenever he turns pro, O'Neal is expected to sign one of the largest contracts in all of sport.

"I'm sure the word is out that he is going to go pro," Dean said, adding that he "pretty well" knew O'Neal was leaving college basketball when he didn't return to school Monday morning after spring break.

Subsequently, Brown reportedly told Dean on Monday morning he was "99 percent sure" O'Neal would not be back.

"Then when Dale got the word there was a press conference on Friday, we knew," Dean said.

A few weeks ago, Brown advised O'Neal to turn pro because of what Brown perceived as the undue physical pounding O'Neal has received from opposing teams, which often triple-team him. But Brown said he remained neutral during Sunday's meeting with O'Neal.

Therapy for Jose

MIAMI (AP) — Jose Canseco, arrested two months ago after allegedly ramming his Porsche into his wife's BMW, has agreed to seek counseling.

The Oakland Athletics star, faced with an aggravated assault charge, consented to 26 one-hour sessions with a psychologist, psychiatrist or psychotherapist.

If Canseco completes the once-a-week sessions, the charge will be dropped in November. It is uncertain whether his wife, Esther, will participate in the counseling, attorneys said.

The bill for therapy will go to Canseco, who has a five-year, $23.5 million contract with the A's.

Canseco was arrested Feb. 13 after he allegedly ran into his wife's car twice, then got out and spit on her window. The BMW sustained $10,000 damage, police said.

Switzer not guilty of libel

Associated Press

AUSTIN — Former University of Oklahoma football coach Barry Switzer and newspaper reporter Jack Taylor Jr. were guilty of invading one another's privacy, a jury ruled Thursday.

But jurors said Switzer hadn't libeled Taylor in the ex-coach's autobiography, "Bootlegger's Boy."

Taylor claimed that Switzer's book linked the reporter to a scheme to plant drugs on an Oklahoma football player around the time of the 1988 Orange Bowl.

After four days of deliberations following a six-week trial, the jury voted 10-3 to award $95,000 in exemplary damages to Taylor and $18,500 in exemplary damages to Switzer.

But because the jury didn't award any actual damages, lawyers said neither man likely will have to pay anything.

Switzer, one of the winningest college football coaches, was jubilant. Taylor appeared shaken.

Taylor's attorney, Jack Ayres of Dallas, said the verdict was defective because it contained no actual damages and that he would recommend Taylor seek another trial.

"We feel our reputation, and my family name has been restored by this verdict.," Taylor said. "Although it is not entirely as we had hoped."

Switzer was happy but tired.

For the second time in three years, Christian Laettner single-handedly pushed the Duke Blue Devils to the Final Four with a last second shot, this year against Kentucky.

Laettner: Hero or villain?

AP Sports Writer

MINNEAPOLIS — After all he's accomplished, Christian Laettner is still explaining himself.

He's a hero for delivering Duke to its fifth straight Final Four, and personally responsible for two of the last three. Or he's a villain for stepping on an opposing player's chest en route to Minneapolis.

■ Related stories/2C

Laettner has shown he is a versatile player who combines a guard's touch with a center's strength. Then again, he's perceived as a bully who throws his weight around and laughs at some other team's misfortune.

Sometimes, the word nasty is used in describing Laettner. Whatever he's called, he'll live with it.

"I think there's a lot of good and there's some bad," he said. "Some writers think there's a lot of bad and some think there's a lot of good. ... You take it with a grain of salt ... "

The hero-villain portrait of Laettner was exposed all in one night at Philadelphia. In the heat of battle at the NCAA East Regional, he was fouled by Kentucky's Aminu Timberlake under the basket. Before reaching the free throw line, he left his footprint on Timberlake's midsection, and that led to a technical foul.

It conjured up all the negative images, like the verbal outburst that led to his technical foul in last season's final of the Atlantic Coast Conference tournament. He got another technical this season in an ACC game against Wake Forest. Laettner has been known to celebrate a foul regardless of the way it goes, or yell at teammates for doing something wrong.

Grant Hill, the substitute point guard for Duke, learned that if he didn't hit Laettner in a certain spot with an entry pass, he would hear about it.

Baseball can wait a few more days

Hold on just a second, all you baseball junkies out there. College basketball hasn't quite put an exclamation mark on the end of its current campaign yet.

Patterson

I know, I know. Spring is here. The grass is green again. The hallowed Opening Day is Monday. And all is right with the world again.

All has been right with the world, though, ever since the NCAA Tournament — the greatest sporting event on the planet, bar none — started two weeks ago.

Where else can you witness such athleticism, such down-to-the-wire, sudden-death excitement as the 64-team extravaganza that is staged for us each year? Nothing beats it, baby.

(Sorry, but for a moment, my soul was temporarily possessed by Dick Vitale — and did it feel horrible.)

Baseball's a fun and enjoyable game, to be sure. But baseball doesn't give you Grant Hill-to-Christian Laettner to beat Kentucky in overtime. Baseball doesn't give you a career-first three-pointer by Georgia Tech freshman James Forrest to upset Southern Cal at the buzzer. Baseball doesn't give you UTEP beating Kansas, and it doesn't give you Michigan's Fab Five freshmen advancing to the Final Four.

This tournament will be hard-pressed to find a single most memorable event, unless, of course, Laettner takes two more 80 foot passes from Hill, dribbles, fakes, and puts in two more game-winners to beat both Indiana and Michigan.

Indiana has been another story in the tournament, but the Hoosiers are out of time. Pack 'em up, Bobby. Time to yield to Coach K.

And yes, the Swishigan Wolverines are on a role and should have no trouble with a tough Cincinnati team. The Wolverines' win over Ohio State ranked right up there as one of the best games of the tournament.

But as talented as the five freshmen are, they won't get by the Dukies. Duke is all the evidence one needs that God vacations in North Carolina every March and April.

The college game has no better assemblage of team talent than Lang, Hill, Hurley, Davis, and Laettner — the best NCAA tournament player ever, even before he set the all-time tournament scoring record last week, and even before he had the game winner against Kentucky.

Duke also has Cherokee Parks who, if nothing else, possesses the best name in college basketball. He won't be another Laettner, but he looks like he'll evolve into an adequate replacement.

As individuals, Michigan is probably a better team. If they haven't all defected to the NBA, by the time Chris Webber, Ray Jackson, Jalen Rose, Jimmy King and Juwan Howard are all juniors, they'll make '92 Duke look like '92 Longhorns. No one — except the players themselves, they say — expected Michigan to go this far in its first season. The sophomore Wolverines will surely open next season ranked either No. 1 or No. 2.

But first things first — after Laettner cuts down the net Monday night in Minneapolis' Metrodome, then you can bring on baseball. And then we can all sit back and watch the Texas Rangers slowly unravel again this summer.

Associated Press

MINNEAPOLIS — The Final Four is the ultimate experience for a college basketball player and except for the Duke Blue Devils there isn't a lot of experience this year.

Duke has made the national semifinals its March vacation spot. The Blue Devils have been in the Final Four for five straight years and six of seven, winning it all last season.

Everybody but the freshmen on top-ranked Duke (32-2) know what it's like to go through the weekend that culminates the 64-team, one-and-out NCAA tournament.

Seniors Christian Laettner and Brian Davis, like Greg Koubek last year, wound up each of their college seasons in the Final Four, the only players in college basketball history to do that.

You can even take it lightly.

"The more Final Fours you go to, the more cousins you find out you have who need tickets," Blue Devils coach Mike Krzyzewski said.

The other teams need only to have names of immediate family members on their ticket lists.

Indiana (27-6), Duke's opponent in Saturday's second game, is at its fifth Final Four under coach Bob Knight, the last in 1987 when the Hoosiers were champions. In fact, the only Final Four appearance by Knight which didn't end with a title was the first, 1973, when UCLA beat Indiana on the way to its seventh straight title, the last team to repeat as national champion.

These current Indiana players, however, are playing beyond the third round for the first time.

"Our players are playing hard and that should be attributed to them making the Final Four," Knight said.

A salient point by Knight, who has been spending much of the tournament making rather odd statements on topics from bullwhips to cerebral reverse to wind currents in the Metrodome.

Knight and Krzyzewski have a long, close relationship and teams with similar styles although no team in the country has a player like Laettner especially at this time of season when the All-American seemingly wills his team to victory.

"When he was a freshman he was not nearly the player he is now," Knight said of Laettner, the tournament's all-time leading scorer and master of the regional championship buzzer-beater. "He has the ability to pass, shoot and create for his team."

Duke and Indiana will follow the game between Cincinnati, the team no one really knows, and Michigan, the team with the freshmen everybody knows.

Cincinnati (29-4) has seven first-year players on the roster, five junior college transfers, a freshman and a transfer from Akron. The Bearcats worked their way to the Final Four through the Midwest Regional and are still the team which could walk through a Twin Cities hotel lobby without being noticed.

"Our guys chase cameras like this dog in my neighborhood chases cars. It's unbelievable," said Cincinnati coach Bob Huggins, who is in his third year with the Bearcats and second NCAA tournament, the first with Akron in 1986.

"Our guys see a TV truck going down the road and they're more apt than not to get off the bus and follow it. It wouldn't do any good to tell them not to. I couldn't tell them not to enjoy it even if I was Scrooge. They're going to enjoy it because that's the way they are. They have fun in life."

So does Michigan and its group of freshmen starters known as the "Fab Five" to everyone but themselves. They don't like the name, but you have to like the way they play.

The Wolverines (24-8) were third in the Big Ten and won their first four tournament games at Atlanta and Lexington, Ky.

Loss to OSU woke up Fab Five

Associated Press

MINNEAPOLIS — Michigan got to the Final Four by beating Ohio State. And, it might be argued, by losing to Ohio State.

The Wolverines (24-8) won the Southeast Regional title last weekend by beating Ohio State 75-71 in overtime. It capped an impressive run by the Fab Five freshmen, sending them to the NCAA tournament semifinals Saturday against Cincinnati.

But it was Michigan's previous meeting against the Buckeyes, on March 3, that seemed to wake up the marvelously talented youngsters. They haven't dozed off since.

In that game, on the road, the Wolverines led with only a few minutes remaining. Then came turnovers and mistakes, and Michigan wound up losing 77-66.

"They grabbed us by the throat and took the lead," coach Steve Fisher said. "You could see afterwards in the kids' eyes what they had been through.

"After that, things changed a little. They got the idea that when the coaches speak, they ought to listen."

They kept listening as the NCAA tournament began, winning early round games against Temple and East Tennessee State. They listened some more in the regional semifinals against Oklahoma State, winning despite the fact Chris Webber scored only 4 points — 11 below his average — because of foul trouble.

In the regional final, against a Buckeyes team that had beaten them twice during the regular season, Michigan listened — and remembered — again.

The Wolverines couldn't help but remember late in the game, when they went scoreless for 6½ minutes, committing turnovers on four of five possessions. During that time, Ohio State turned a 57-50 deficit into a 61-57 lead.

"Every time a team makes a run on us, we always go back to that (Ohio State game) as a reference and say we won't let anyone do that to us again," guard Jalen Rose said.

And they didn't. Rose hit a jumper to make the score 61-59. Then Webber blocked a shot at one end and tied the score at the other with a dunk. After the Buckeyes took a 63-61 lead, Webber's follow shot with 29 seconds left, followed by a defensive stand, sent the game into overtime.

Michigan never trailed in overtime and led by as many as eight.

Afterward, some Ohio State players said it was Michigan that played like veterans. Others said the Wolverines were stronger physically than they had been in the previous meeting.

Webber, the strongest of all at 6-feet-9, 240 pounds, disagreed.

"No, mentally we got stronger," he said. "When they made that 11-0 run on us, we showed character and mental toughness."

Fisher already had seen his young team progress in other areas.

"We're smarter with the basketball," he said during the final week of the regular season. "We don't try to do things quite as quickly as we did early."

The only thing they're trying to do quickly now is win the national championship. The Wolverines won the title in 1989, but that was with an experienced group led by Glen Rice and Rumeal Robinson.

"I don't want to wait 'til my last shot," Webber said. "I don't want to play four years and say, 'OK, this is my year.' You're never promised anything."

Virginia switches offense to accomodate Burges sisters

By Wendy E. Lane
AP Sports Writer

NCAA Women

LOS ANGELES — The last time Virginia and Stanford played in the Final Four, Heather and Heidi Burge were novel newcomers. Now the world's tallest female identical twins are simply dominating.

Both 6-foot-5, the Burges have honed their games and become the focus of the Cavaliers' formerly guard-oriented offense. On their third straight trip to the Final Four, they are focused on the NCAA championship.

"We're not freshmen," Heidi said. "Things are expected of us now. We're ready to play."

"We're more ready for the pressure," Heather said.

Having grown up in suburban Palos Verdes Estates, the twins will be playing in front of dozens of family and friends when Virgina (32-1) plays Stanford (28-3) in the second semifinal Saturday. Western Kentucky and Southwest Missouri State face off in the earlier game.

As freshmen, the Burges were on the Virginia team that went to its first Final Four but lost to the Cardinal, the eventual champion, 75-66 in the semifinals. Stanford coach Tara VanDerveer knew then how good they were eventually going to be.

"They've matured a lot," she said. "They've played very well with each other, but they're also the kind of players that make other people around them look good."

"We take things personally," Heidi said. "If someone's on your back, the other gives back an elbow and the coach sees it and then it becomes a big thing."

"We try to be the best," Heather said. "I think it kind of annoyed our teammates and the coach."

The two 20-year-olds with the California-girl looks try to be different on and off the court. But in a meeting with reporters Thursday, both were wearing the same color nail polish.

"We were almost sick of each other our first two years but we're glad, deep down, to have each other being so far away from home," Heather said.

Heather is the physical post player, averaging a team-high 17.4 points and 8.5 rebounds. Heidi is most comfortable shooting from outside and averages 10.2 points.

Since they first started playing basketball as high school freshmen, the two learned to work in tandem, spending long hours at the gym to perfect their games.

"We have a high-low situation that's just great," Heidi said. "If they collapse on her in the low post, which often happens because she's such a powerhouse, that leaves me wide open."

Heather is officially the center, but Heidi often takes over when her sister is on the bench. Their opponents never get a break.

"I thought that when we played them two years ago they were very physical," VanDerveer said. "They stood behind and pushed our post people out. Depending on how the officials call it, that could be a major factor in our success in the post."

Heather and Heidi like hearing such comments, seeing them as an indication that they've moved past being what Heather calls "human oddities" to highly regarded players.

"The focus is off the Guiness Book and people see that we're a major part of the team," Heidi said.

Win could bring Knight new chair

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Indiana coach Bobby Knight will have a new chair to throw if his team beats Duke in the NCAA tournament, North Carolina Gov. Jim Martin said Thursday.

Martin offered the chair as part of a wager with Indiana Gov. Evan Bayh. Bayh said Indiana will give the state a limestone statue of a Blue Devil if Duke wins Saturday night in the Final Four game.

TENNIS: MC also to host Region V match

(From 1C)

Other men's teams include McLennan, Temple, New Mexico Military, Temple, Tyler, Laredo, and Tyler.

Entered in the women's division are Temple, McLennan, Tyler, Collin County, Odessa, Midland, Mesa (Arizona), and Cooke County.

In team competition, the matches end as quickly as one team wins five matches. So it is possible that a team could win five singles matches with another still on the court. Any singles or doubles match not completed when one team reaches five victories is stopped.

These matches and the Region V tournament April 24-25 will be the last chances to see the Midland College tennis teams in action before they complete their action at the national tournaments in Tyler and Corpus Christi.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

FRIDAY, APRIL 3, 1992

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Partnerships can pay handsome dividends, especially during late spring and early summer. Show more initiative and you will reap a wonderful reward! Even those who have always encouraged your efforts will be surprised by all you accomplish between now and November. Christmas will find you basking in new prestige and wealth. Wait until early in 1993 to make up your mind about romance. Your personal life is entering a period of great change.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actor Marlon Brando, actresses Doris Day and Marsha Mason, comedian Eddie Murphy.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Creative and artistic pursuits can bring great pleasure today. Welcome an opportunity to quietly indulge a whim. A one-on-one encounter holds greater appeal than group activities.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Look for ways to liven up a social gathering or journey. A friend or neighbor makes a useful suggestion. Confiding in your mate about a delicate situation will get you interesting feedback.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Someone close to you may need extra attention now. Avoid those who are ill-natured or reckless. Some gossip you hear could upset you. Consider the source and ignore it.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Go ahead and revive an old relationship. Things could be much better the second time around! Do not let someone's secret actions put you in an emotional bind.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Business you have not been able to handle until now can be successfully dealt with today. Loved ones are willing to lend a hand with tasks that would be boring if done alone.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Although your morning is likely to be uneventful, the tempo will pick up after lunch. Use discretion when handling sensitive personnel problems. A great time to reach out to those you admire.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): The pressure on you to make a commitment remains powerful. Insist on obtaining more data. Confiding in an associate who has your interests at heart strengthens your resolve.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): The day starts promisingly enough. But if you give ear to false financial concepts, you risk heavy losses. Keep quiet about your intentions. By next week, you could change your mind.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): This should be an ideal day to celebrate your arrival at a major milestone. An artistic venture could be involved. Share your aspirations with your family.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): If your financial position appears sound, let well enough alone. This is not a good time to take unnecessary risks. Call close friends with good news. Try an innova..ve approach in the arts.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): It is very important you work out a specific plan of action and line up trustworthy allies. Any mistakes in this area could impede progress. Offer wise counsel to your mate and family.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You cannot expect things to crack wide open on your first try. Be persistent! The idea of eventual success keeps you forging ahead. Continue to add to your storehouse of specialized knowledge.

Opening lead: King of ◇

We have remarked before that rubber bridge and duplicate are more like two different games than versions of the same game. That holds true for both the bidding and play. Suppose you arrive in six hearts at rubber bridge and in the finals of a major pair championship. Would you play the hand the same way?

Note North's heart raise. South's bidding showed a near-solid heart suit at least six cards long, so the doubleton queen was excellent support. Indeed, in many partnerships North could have raised immediately with this holding.

After the lead of the king of diamonds, an experienced rubber bridge player would make short shrift of the hand. Win the ace of diamonds and draw trumps, then duck a club! As long as clubs are no worse than 4-2, declarer will score one spade, six hearts, one diamond and four clubs, and all is well.

What about at duplicate? First, declarer must decide whether the majority of the pairs are going to bid the slam. If the answer is no, declarer should play as safely as possible, i.e, exactly the same way as the hand would be played at rubber bridge.

Let's suppose that declarer concludes that most of the field will be in slam. Chances of a 3-3 club break are 36 percent. If the clubs are 4-2, declarer can still get home by ruffing a club and playing West to hold the king of spades. That gives declarer a combined 68 percent chance, good enough to try for the overtrick by going for an even club break. As the cards lie, South suffers a one-trick set, but should emerge with a near-average score.

Goodall tours new primate exhibit at Fort Worth Zoo

FORT WORTH — Jane Goodall toured a new zoo primate exhibit and was soon on a first-name basis with the resident chimpanzees.

Goodall

"They have such distinct characters," she said Wednesday, signaling through a window to 11 chimps at the Fort Worth Zoo.

"There is Goliath, for instance, and over there is Mary. And this is Kirk — he seems to be everyone's favorite," Goodall said.

The renowned chimp researcher spent much of her life in Africa, living among her subjects, but now travels to help save primates and other African wildlife.

Goodall, 58, spoke to a zoological group and praised the zoo's World of Primates, which opens Saturday. At the exhibit, she took on primate mannerisms, lowering a shoulder and avoiding eye contact.

"I miss this so much," Goodall said.

The Texas cities in the tour are Houston and Dallas in August.

NEW YORK — Ringo Starr, showing the same quick wit at a news conference that the Beatles displayed more than 25 years ago, announced a world tour Thursday with some heavy hitters, including Joe Walsh and Burton Cummings.

Starr will tour with a band, he said at Radio City Music Hall, "because melody is pretty thin with just the drums." He chose the eight members of his All Starr Band, he said, "because everyone else was working. Ha. Ha. Ha."

Starr will have a new album, "Time Takes Time," released by Private Music May 22, preceded by a single, "Weight of the World." It's the first studio album in nine years for the one-time drummer of the Beatles.

"Besides recording, I'm writing again," Starr said. "I haven't been. Everybody knows my story. I went into rehab and it has been 3½ years now and I'm getting my life together."

He'll perform a few Beatles hits on the tour, some previous solo songs and songs from the new album. Other members of the band will perform their hits.

The band members are Walsh and Timothy B. Schmit, from the Eagles; Nils Lofgren, from Bruce Springsteen's E Street Band; Tim Cappello, from Tina Turner's band; Dave Edmunds, from Rockpile; Todd Rundgren, from Utopia; Cummings, from Guess Who; and Zak Starkey, Ringo's son, also on drums.

The group will tour in the United States in June and August, and in Europe in July.

DETROIT — Jimmy Hoffa is a hero to Danny DeVito, in town to film a movie about the former Teamsters union leader.

Hoffa "did more for the people in his union than any other man has ever done. He took working men and women and put them into the middle class," DeVito said Wednesday.

DeVito is directing "Hoffa," a fictionalized account that focuses on his life, not his unexplained 1975 disappearance outside a Detroit restaurant. Jack Nicholson plays Hoffa, who is presumed dead.

"I'm not writing my own history; I'm telling you what I think happened," DeVito said. "It's not 'JFK.' "

Hoffa vanished after a bid to regain control of the union following his release from prison, where he served time for mail fraud and jury tampering.

FORT WORTH — Gennifer Flowers, who said she had a 12-year affair with Democratic presidential candidate Bill Clinton, has taken an acting role on an episode of a cable TV show about adultery and politics.

Ms. Flowers said Wednesday she will play a reporter on the HBO show "Dream On."

"It'll be fun being on the other side for a change, asking the questions," she said during a visit to Fort Worth.

The dreams of the show's main character are the themes of each episode. In the episode with Flowers, he dreams he sleeps with a political candidate's wife and the media finds out, said Richard Licata, spokesman for HBO in Los Angeles.

NEW YORK — Author Don DeLillo said terrorists have replaced writers as shapers of national thought.

"Acts of terror are providing a kind of narrative, which is making writers less influential than they used to be," he said.

The selection of DeLillo's novel "Mao II" as winner of the 1992 PEN-Faulkner Award for Fiction was announced Tuesday.

In the book, writer Bill Gray puts it this way: "Years ago I used to think it was possible for a novelist to alter the inner life of the culture. Now bomb-makers and gunmen have taken that territory. They make raids on human consciousness."

DeLillo said it has "been a long, long time since the private, inner vision of a writer entered the world so completely that an adjective had to be invented, like Kafkaesque, without which people cannot quite explain what they are talking about."

Cavaliers break 50 win mark

Associated Press

RICHFIELD, Ohio — The Cleveland Cavaliers reached 50 wins for the second time in franchise history Thursday night, beating the Los Angeles Clippers 115-98 and ending their six-game winning streak.

The Cavaliers (50-22) must win eight of their last 10 games to eclipse the 1988-89 team mark of 57 wins. Cleveland has won 11 straight at home and 12 of 14 overall.

Larry Nance scored 19 points and Mark Price and Brad Daugherty each had 18 for Cleveland, which pulled away by outscoring the Clippers 63-38 in the middle two quarters.

The Cavs led 64-52 at halftime, then ended all doubt with a 12-0 run that made it 90-64 with 3:40 left in the third quarter. Price started the run by sinking two technical foul shots, one for an illegal defense and the other on Gary Grant for arguing a foul call.

Ron Harper, playing his first game at the Coliseum since being tradfed to the Clippers in 1989, led Los Angeles with 20 points, 13 of them in the first quarter. He hurt his left ankle while stopping suddenly on an aborted fast break late in the second quarter, returned for the third period but then spent the fourth quarter in the locker room.

Charles Smith scored 16 and Danny Manning 15 for the Clippers, whose four-game road winning streak also ended.

Cleveland shot 56 percent from the floor and made seven of 10 3-point attempts.

NBA Roundup

Rockets 137, Nuggets 114

HOUSTON — Hakeem Olajuwon and Sleepy Floyd each scored 17 points as the Houston Rockets beat the Denver Nuggets at the Summit, snapping a six-game losing streak.

Olajuwon and Floyd were two of nine Rockets who scored in double figures, matching a club record for the third time. Olajuwon's tally gave him a career total of 13,384 points, surpassing Rudy Tomjanovich, now coach of the team, for second on the all-time Rockets scoring list.

The Rockets' Dave Jamerson scored 16 points, and Kenny Smith and Larry Smith each added 15. Others scoring in double figures were Vernon Maxwell with 14, Carl Herrera with 13, Buck Johnson with 12 and Otis Thorpe with 10.

Knicks 117, Hornets 96

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — Patrick Ewing had 25 points, 14 rebounds and four blocked shots as New York dominated Charlotte on the boards and extended its road winning streak to six games.

The Knicks, who have won seven of their last eight and beaten the Hornets eight straight, also got 16 points from John Starks. New York outrebounded Charlotte 75-35 in a 29-point win March 7 and had a 44-29 rebounding edge Thursday night, including 23-6 in the first half.

The Hornets, who won 12 of their previous 14 at home and 12 of 19 overall, were led by Anthony Frederick and Kenny Gattison with 16 points apiece. Larry Johnson scored 15.

Trail Blazers 118, Jazz 86

PORTLAND, Ore. — Clyde Drexler emerged from a brief shooting slump to score 33 points in 29 minutes as the Portland Trail Blazers routed Utah to gain a little breathing space in the Pacific Division race.

Drexler, playing despite a strained right knee and sore big toes, was 13 for 16 from the field as the Blazers increased their lead over second-place Golden State to 2½ games with eight games to play. The Warriors lost 109-105 to the Suns in Phoenix.

Drexler had made only 12 of 41 shots in Portland's last two games, losses to New York and Phoenix.

Suns 109, Warriors 105

PHOENIX — Andrew Lang had 19 points and 13 rebounds as Phoenix beat Golden State, the Suns' 13th consecutive regular-season victory at home over the Warriors.

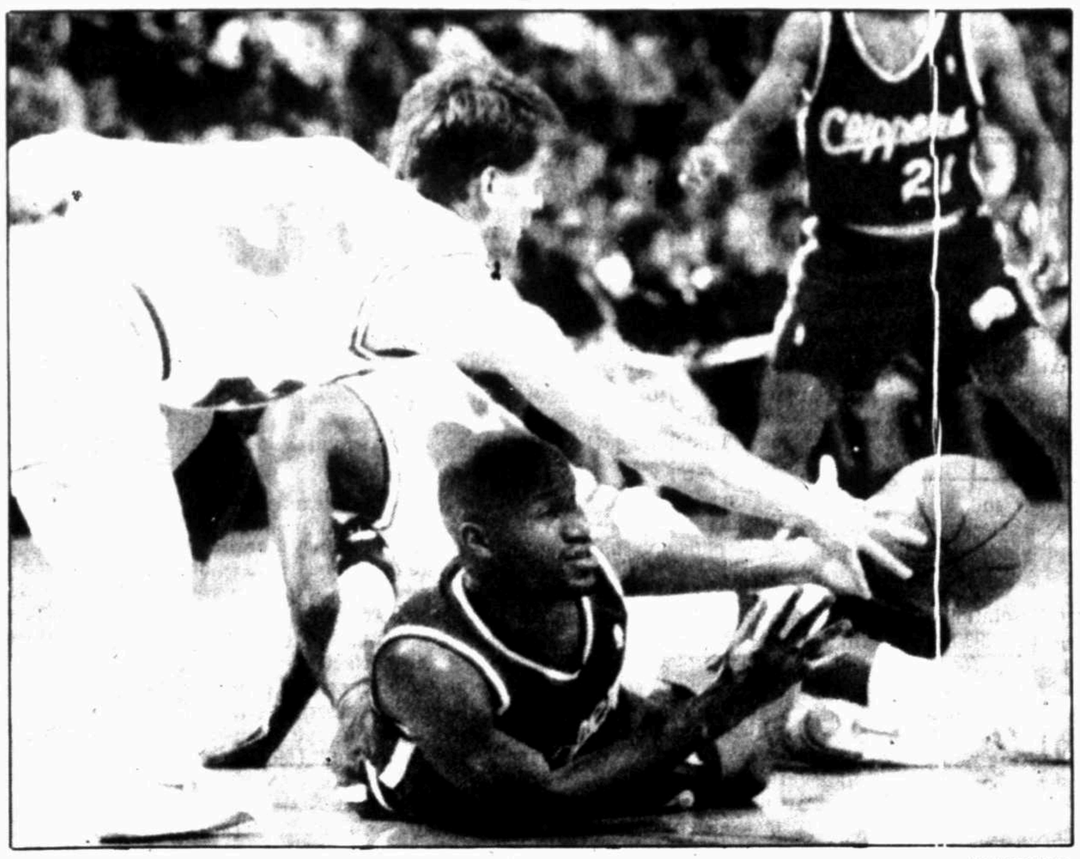

Lang made two free throws with 5.6 seconds remaining to match his career scoring high and give the Suns a 108-103 lead.

SuperSonics 111, Kings 103

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — Eddie Johnson scored 28 points and the Seattle SuperSonics outscored Sacramento 15-6 in the final 4:42 and beat the Kings 111-103 Thursday night.

The SuperSonics trailed 81-70 late in the third quarter before taking an 84-83 edge into the fourth period on Shawn Kemp's dunk at the buzzer.

The teams then exchanged baskets until Seattle overcame a 97-96 deficit with its game-ending spurt.

Dallas loses Manny Hendrix in Plan B deal

■ More Sports/ 10C

IRVING, Texas (AP) — The Dallas Cowboys added a veteran player and lost another Wednesday in the final day of Plan B dealing.

The Cowboys finished the two-month Plan B signing period by reaching a contract agreement with offensive lineman Frank Cornish of the San Diego Chargers, giving them four Plan B additions. Cornish signed a two-year contract worth $900,000.

But the Cowboys lost cornerback Manny Hendrix, who agreed to a one-year contract with the San Francisco 49ers. That gave the Cowboys six Plan B defections. Sources said he signed a deal worth $425,000, $50,000 more than he was to make in Dallas this year.

"We did not go into Plan B thinking this was going to be a bonanza for us," said Cowboys coach Jimmy Johnson. "We were just trying to keep from falling behind and shore up some areas that have been deficient."

Cornish, 24, started all 16 games at center as a rookie in 1990 but backed up at center and guard last season. He also deep snaps on placement kicks.

Hendrix, 27, started 18 games for the Cowboys over the past three years but lost his starting spot to rookie Larry Brown last season.

Zvereva upsets Navratilova

N.Y. Times News Service

HILTON HEAD, S.C. — The shadows cast by the palm fronds that rim the brand-new stadium court caught and held her eye too often. The chill in the air seeped into her serving shoulder and took the heat out of her serve.

The passing shot of the opponent made an unwelcome breeze as it streaked down the sidelines. The slippery clay undermined her movement and provoked her into indecision she could ill afford.

When it was over, and she had identified herself as the daily upset victim at the Family Circle Magazine Cup, the second-seeded Navratilova found plenty of reasons to be annoyed by her 6-4, 6-2 loss to Natalya Zvereva. Even before she played this third-round match, she was wary of Zvereva's 2-0 hold over her on clay, and she played that way.

"If she didn't pass me on the first shot, she'd pass me on the second," said Navratilova, whose ground strokes were not steady enough for the baseline duels to which Zvereva's ramrod passes confined her.

"She likes a target and I certainly gave her that," the four-time champion said after absorbing this punishment from the 27th-ranked Zvereva. "Regardless of what I did, she was doing the right thing."

"I expected to do this to her on clay," said Zvereva.

RTC to stop selling failed thrifts

■ The bailout agency says it will no longer sell insolvent S&Ls until Congress appropriates more funds.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The savings and loan cleanup agency said Thursday it will cease sales of failed thrift institutions until Congress provides it with more money.

The announcement from the Resolution Trust Corp. came a day after the House rejected, 298-125, a bill that would have kept the cleanup going for another six months.

The RTC still can seize insolvent institutions and keep them open under government control — a tactic it has adopted in previous financing delays. And, to stem any runs, the agency can borrow from the Treasury.

But, without legislation, it cannot proceed with takeover deals to protect depositors.

Bush administration officials hammered the House for what Deputy Treasury Secretary John E. Robson called "a total failure of responsibility" even though large majorities of both Democrats and Republicans rejected the bill.

Meanwhile, the chairman of the House Banking Committee, Rep. Henry B. Gonzalez, D-Texas, said he would wait for a proposal from President Bush before scheduling action by his committee on any new legislation. That likely will delay a final congressional vote for at least a week.

Gonzalez, after meeting privately with committee Democrats, said he would allow his panel simultaneously to consider both the president's bill and his own legislation, which would provide enough money to operate the RTC for a year.

Gonzalez's bill would charge the savings and loan industry roughly $500 million a year to offset the taxpayers' share of the new bailout installment.

He also would ban so-called "open thrift assistance," which protects S&L stockholders in addition to depositors. And he would extend the time limit for filing fraud and negligence suits against S&L officials from three years currently to five years. He would require any settlements of the suits be made public.

The RTC so far has used $88 billion of $105 billion appropriated by Congress, protecting 20 million depositors in 640 thrifts. But its authority to spend the remaining $17 billion expired on Wednesday, leaving it unable to handle about 50 insolvent S&Ls it has seized but not yet closed and an additional 50 to 100 expected to fail this year.

"The failure by the House . . . to remove this deadline . . . means added costs and more unnecessary delay in completion of this important but unpopular task," Albert V. Casey, the RTC's president, told the Treasury Department in a letter.

Casey said commitments to sell several failed thrifts with government assistance will be honored over the next 10 days. But if Congress fails to act by April 15, he predicted the next sale would be delayed until July because of the lead time needed to prepare institutions for sale. Every day's delay costs an average $2.5 million, he said.

He also said they delay will hinder his effort to shrink his agency, forcing him to retain for several months roughly 1,000 positions he had hoped to eliminate.

At the White House, spokesman Gary Foster said, "The failure . . . is just another example of the inability of Congress to enact legislation that saves taxpayers money. . . . We . . . hope that the House will reconsider it as soon as possible."

Last week, the Senate, 52-42, approved a bill freeing the RTC to spend the $17 billion remaining from previous allocations and providing an additional $25 billion, enough to last until April 1993.

Prices retreat

NEW YORK — Energy prices paused Thursday from a recent advance that has pushed crude oil close to $20-per-barrel.

West Texas Intermediate for delivery in May settled at $19.80 a barrel on the New York Mercantile Exchange, 4 cents lower than Wednesday's close.

Unleaded gasoline for May delivery lost 0.57 cent to finish at 61.72 cents a gallon. Home heating oil for May delivery shed 0.17 cent and settled at 54.28 cents a gallon.

At the New York Mercantile Exchange, lower-grade sour crude for delivery in May edged up 1 cent to settle at $17.25 a barrel.

Among other refined energy products, natural gas prices posted minor declines also. The May natural gas contract settled at $1.352 per 1,000 cubic feet compared to $1.381 on Wednesday.

At the New York Mercantile Exchange, lower-grade sour crude for delivery in May edged up 1 cent to settle at $17.25 a barrel.

Analysts characterized the activity in the energy futures pits as a consolidation after a bullish phase that reached a climax Wednesday when crude oil broke out of the trading range it had been locked into for weeks.

Want ads up

NEW YORK — Slightly more help wanted ads appeared in U.S. newspapers in February compared to a month earlier, even though the unemployment rate hit a six-year high.

The Conference Board, a business research group, said Thursday that its help-wanted index regained most of the ground it lost a month earlier. The index, based on the volume of job ads in 51 major newspapers across the country, fell in January to a nine-year low.

Dollar falls

NEW YORK — The dollar fell against most major currencies Thursday in response to an increase in unemployment benefits claims.

Stocks fall

A fishy story

Midland man invents device to bait hooks

By Melia McEwen
Staff Writer

Rich Sites has invented a new device he hopes will hook a great number of the country's 38.9 million fresh water fishermen.

Sites' E-Z Baiter is already making a splash at trade shows, and is being offered at a number of retailers, including Walgreens, Academy, Gibsons, and the Lake Jackson Wal-Mart store. Sites is trying to have his product offered at local Wal-Mart stores and Kmart stores.

The E-Z Baiter is also being marketed through Texas Fish and Game Magazine.

Sites said sales are going well. "Fishermen are like golfers," he said. "They want every device that comes on the market."

The device Sites designed is a plastic cylinder — manufactured for the company in Lubbock — that lets a fisherman bait his hook with stink bait without having to touch the bait. All he has to do is drop his hook into the top of the device, twist the bottom a few times and the Baiter will compress the bait into a plug around the hook. It can bait 40 to 50 hooks before needing to be refilled.

He has high hopes for the product, noting that in his research he discovered there are 14 million catfish fishermen in the U.S., a sport that is increasing in popularity. And it could help increase sales of stink bait, dough bait and cheese bait, which, though effective, have many fishermen reluctant to handle them because of the smell. It could also help increase catches because, as Sites pointed out, catfish use smell to find their food.

The 23-year-old Midland High School graduate came up with the idea after numerous fishing trips with his dad, Jack, who is an investor in the company, E-Z Baiter Inc.. along with Charlie Wheat, Dale Sullins and Charles Luig.

In fact, he made and marketed a smaller version while still in high school.

The patented device was introduced at the American Fishing Tackle Manufacturers Association Trade Show in Anaheim, Calif., last August and caught the eye of a number of representatives from such retailers as Wal-Mart and Kmart, as well as the president of the Magic Bait company, who is interested in helping market the E-Z Baiter already filled with his product.

He also displayed his device at the Catch 92 show in New Orleans, and will attend an upcoming show in Miami.

Sites designed the company's trade show booths as well as the product's packaging and labeling.

Sites, who left Southwest Texas State University after his third year to work on the product and get the company running, plans to make a career of inventing things. "I like to build the products, start the company and then let others do the marketing and distributing," he said.

Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram

Midlander Rich Sites displays the E-Z Baiter he invented. He hopes to attract the attention of many of the nation's 38 million fresh-water fishermen.

U.S. factory orders up

WASHINGTON (AP) — Orders to U.S. factories rose 0.5 percent in February, the government reported Thursday. It was the second straight small gain and, analysts said, a fresh sign that the manufacturing sector was slowly reviving.

But another government report said first-time claims for jobless benefits rose for a second week in a row in mid-March as businesses continued to hand out pink slips despite the emerging economic recovery.

In its report, the Commerce Department said orders for both durable and non-durable goods rose to a seasonally adjusted $236.4 billion, the second straight 0.5 percent advance after falling 3.7 percent in December.

"These data confirm that the manufacturing sector is improving, albeit at only a modest pace," said Marilyn Schaja, an economist with Donaldson, Lufkin & Jenrette Securities Corp. in New York.

"Manufacturing is on an upswing, but a weak upswing," agreed Kris Bledowski of Cahners Economics in Newton, Mass. "The early gains will be only so-so."

In the other report, the Labor Department said initial claims for unemployment insurance unexpectedly posted the second straight increase for the week ended March 21.

The report said 456,000 claims were filed, up 9,000 from the previous week to the highest level since 460,000 applications were made in the week ending Feb. 29.

The four-week moving average, which many analysts consider a better gauge of labor activity, also rose, up to 448,750 from 444,000 a week earlier.

The Labor Department is scheduled to release today its unemployment report for March. Many analysts expect the rate to remain about 7.3 percent as previously discouraged workers re-enter the market at the same time job growth remains soft.

Analysts point out that businesses often delay hiring workers in the early stages of a recovery. Instead, companies tend to rely on overtime to meet rising demand until they are confident the turnaround can be sustained.

Factory orders for durable goods — items such as trucks and turbines expected to last more than three years — slipped 0.3 percent in February, to $120.2 billion, after gaining 2.4 percent a month earlier.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Many mutual funds charge research fees

By Bill Doyle

Q: In 1962, I invested in two mutual funds. I am about ready to make some changes and wrote to both funds asking for records of my accounts, so I will know my "basis" -- cost for tax purposes -- and, on my income tax return, be able to report my capital gain or loss, which will be the difference between my basis and the amount I receive when I redeem my fund shares.

Doyle

I wrote to both funds and asked for records of my accounts. Each fund responded with much of what I need, but with gaps in the data: One omits 10 years; the other misses six years. Each asks $20 per year to do any further research.

Is this normal procedure?

A: It has become just that at many mutual funds. Some funds provide complete information such as you seek at no cost. Others levy charges on a per-year basis – especially for very old records. There's no head count on how many charge and how many do not, but it's fair to say the majority lay on fees.

The standard reason – "excuse" might be a better word – given for charging is that producing account records involves time and effort, which costs money.

That theory held water in years gone by, when financial transactions were posted by hand. But the mutual fund industry laid aside the quill pen and embraced the computer decades ago. I have vivid recollections of mutual funds bragging about becoming computerized back in the 1950s.

Unfortunately, you and all too many other mutual fund shareholders who did not keep their own records and who now need the data are stuck. You will have to pay up to obtain the records.

The lesson in all this is that every investor should keep personal basis records for every security owned.

With mutual funds, that's relatively simple: Just file away the annual summaries funds send to each shareholder. Your basis is every investment you made in a fund, plus all reinvested dividends and reinvested capital gains distributions.

Q: I recently purchased shares of two mutual funds, about which I know very little. One is an "income plus" fund, which pays about 12 percent interest. The other pays 10 percent.

Do you think I made good investments?

A: No! Definitely not.

To begin with, mutual funds do not pay interest. They pay dividends. A mutual fund collects interest from bonds and other debt securities it holds in its investment portfolio and collects dividends from stocks it holds. After deducting its operating expenses, the fund distributes the balance of that money to shareholders as dividends.

If you had read the prospectus of each fund, you would have learned that and much more about the funds. Your lament about knowing very little about the funds is a cop-out. Always read the prospectus!

You almost certainly will be in for another shock. Almost all mutual funds with "income plus" or "high yield" in their names hold low-quality debt securities, a k a "junk bonds."

The two you named in your letter are junk-bond funds. Such bonds pay very high interest because, otherwise, no one whose financial elevator goes all the way to the top would buy them.

Market prices of junk bonds have taken big tumbles in recent years, bringing their share values down, down, down.

Your two mutual funds are highly speculative, suitable only for people who are willing to take big risks.

Tyson 'cooperative' as he begins second week

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Mike Tyson began his second week in prison Thursday by volunteering for work assignments and cooperating with an education assessment, correction officials said.

"He's adjusting to incarceration very well," Department of Correction spokesman Kevin Moore said. "He's very polite, very cooperative."

The 25-year-old former heavyweight champion was sentenced last week to six years in prison following his conviction on rape and criminal deviate conduct charges. He was found guilty of assaulting Desiree Washington, a Miss Black America beauty pageant contestant, in his Indianapolis hotel room last July.

Tyson's attorneys were continuing to work Thursday on legal papers seeking his release from prison pending an appeal. The Court of Appeals rejected that request Tuesday.

Alan Dershowitz, the Harvard University law professor representing Tyson, plans to ask the state Supreme Court to review the decision to deny Tyson bail while he appeals.

Tyson volunteered for work assignment Wednesday at the Reception-Diagnostic Center in Plainfield, 15 miles west of Indianapolis. Moore said Tyson cleaned up the inmates' day room, where prisoners watch television and read magazines.

LAETTNER: Record book will prove his worth

(From 1C)

"I like to have that said about me, first of all, because I think that's needed in basketball," he said. "There aren't too many excellent players who are nice on the court. There are times that I'm the nicest person on the court, and when I'm all smiles ... And there are times when I'm not."

His hero act was a replay. Laettner hit the game-winning basket to beat Connecticut in the 1990 NCAA East Regional, despite not being the original choice as the shooter. He worried about that shot, but not the one that beat Kentucky last weekend.

"This year was a case where I think everyone on the team wanted me to take the last shot, maybe because they were scared to take the last shot, maybe because they were confident that I would take a good shot," Laettner said. "Right now, it's my role, and no one can ever tell you it's something they've always wanted to do. It's just a situation you're put in."

Two years ago, Laettner was the go-to man as an afterthought. Four years ago, no one thought a 6-foot-10 kid from upstate New York could make it in big-time college basketball. Again, it was a matter of image.

"Christian's a lot better than I thought he would be," Duke coach Mike Krzyzewski said. "How could you have imagined that he was going to be this good?"

Laettner had no doubts, but Angola, N.Y., and the Nichols Schools didn't exactly draw a multitude of attention, except for Krzyzewski's and a few others.

Even off the court, Laettner has had to deal with the type of scrutiny reserved for movie stars. Two local newspapers this week wrote stories detailing his sexual preference — he's dating a 5-foot-4 volleyball player at Georgia — in response to rumors which have followed him for much of his life at Duke.

When the rumors cease and cynics stop, Laettner can point to the record book. He's the second-leading scorer in Blue Devils history — 123 points behind Johnny Dawkins — the top scorer in NCAA tournament history and one of three Duke players to reach the Final Four in each year of eligibility. For future critics, Laettner has an answer for how he and Duke should be considered.

"Just as a player on Duke's first national championship team, a player that did a lot of things for Duke," he said."

UIL threatens Lincoln

AUSTIN (AP) — The University Interscholastic League has threatened to suspend Dallas Lincoln High from all sanctioned events if the school does not investigate alleged violations by its junior varsity boys basketball program.

The UIL's state executive committee unanimously voted Thursday to give Dallas Lincoln until April 13 to investigate the alleged abuse of a basketball official by coach George Dixon and one of his players.

Dallas Lincoln and the District 10-5A executive committee were ordered to investigate the incident and to take appropriate action.

Haas leads foursome atop McMoRan board

Associated Press

PGA

NEW ORLEANS — Jay Haas sank a 5-iron from 196 yards for the first eagle in four years of tournament play on the tough 18th hole at English Turn and shared the lead Thursday in the $1 million Freeport McMoRan Classic.

The 18th, a par-4 with a stroke average of 4.61, is the toughest finishing hole on the tour.

Seve Ballesteros, Chip Beck and Brad Bryant also carded 67s for the first round over the 7,116-yard course.

"I don't recall ever having holed a shot on the last hole, other than a chip or a putt," Haas said. "I could see it the whole way, and you could tell from the people, the building roar, that it was going to be close.

"I think that was the first time I ever got on that green in two. I was just trying to carry the green. When I hit the shot, it felt good — like a putt for a birdie. It just rolled on up there. It looked like a putt."

Six were tied at 68: Bob Eastwood, Scott Gump, Lon Hinkle, Jeff Maggert, David Rummells and Duffy Waldorf.

Ballesteros failed to make the cut at the TPC last week, so he used Saturday and Sunday to consult with golf guru David Leadbetter in Orlando, Fla.

"Simple things," Ballesteros said. "Some adjustments with my shoulders. The swing was there, but the alignment wasn't there."

Rummells said his problem was his putting.

His best finish in eight tournaments this season was a tie for 29th in the Honda Classic three weeks ago. Ironically, one of those in the tie at Honda was John Riegger, the friend he turned to for help with his putting.

Greg Norman, leading money winner in 1990 — the last year he won an event on the tour — was in an 11-way tie at 70.

Master champion Ian Woosnam, also the defender at New Orleans, was tied with 17 others at 71. Mark O'Meara, third on the money list this season, and Tom Kite.

(From 1C)

"If this was a football game, we won," he said. "No damages. No award. I'm worn out, tired."

After the verdict, most of the jurors lined up for Switzer to autograph copies of "Bootlegger's Boy" that were given to them to follow during the lengthy trial.

Taylor sued Switzer for libel, slander and invasion of privacy. He was seeking $30 million. Meanwhile, Switzer sued Taylor for invasion of privacy, alleging the reporter had illegally obtained his income tax returns. Switzer sought $6 million.

Co-defendants in Taylor's lawsuit were Switzer's brother, Don; Austin writer Edwin Allen "Bud" Shrake Jr.; book publisher William Morrow & Co. Inc.; and Switzer's corporation, Prime Time Inc.

All the defendants were found to have invaded Taylor's privacy, but no actual damages were awarded. The jury also charged Switzer and his company with malice, and essentially awarded Taylor a $95,000 penalty from Switzer.

But the jury also found that Taylor invaded Switzer's privacy when he obtained the coach's tax returns. Taylor testified that he received the returns anonymously and never wrote a story based on them, but they were in his files and available for other reporters to view.

The jury found that Taylor was guilty of malice, too, and awarded Switzer and Prime Time a total of $18,500.

Taylor's attorney, Jack Ayres of Dallas, said, "There is a significant legal problem with a verdict."

He said a jury cannot award exemplary damages without actual damages.

"This will probably necessitate a new trial," he said. "Our recommendation to our client will be to re-try the case."

Concerning Taylor's allegation over Switzer's book, jury Foreman Gram Poole said, "A major problem was the different ways you could read the manuscript."

In a six-page chapter called "The Setup," Switzer targeted Taylor, an award-winning journalist whom the coach disliked because of what he said were Taylor's "negative" stories about him.

The chapter mentions Taylor, who then worked for the Dallas Times Herald, in describing an alleged conspiracy to plant drugs on reserve Sooner linebacker Brad McBride.

According to testimony, Times Herald sports writer Dan Langendorf gave McBride's girlfriend a recorder to tape telephone conversations with OU football players.

The woman later tried to get McBride to pick up a package of cocaine in Miami, but he refused. Meanwhile, according to testimony, the woman told Langendorf that the drug transaction was about to occur.

Taylor said Langendorf had called him for advice, and that he told his fellow reporter it was a matter for the authorities. Taylor said he then called Oklahoma law enforcement officials.

Switzer said that when he learned Taylor had notified the law about the alleged drug deal, he believed Taylor was involved in the conspiracy.

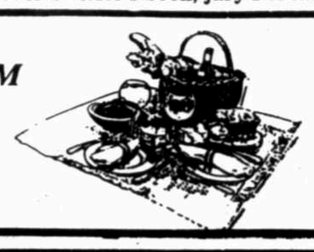

Testifying, Switzer insisted that Taylor was involved "up to his eyeballs." Langendorf was Taylor's man "in the field," he said.

Taylor denied having anything to do with the alleged scheme.

The trial featured blistering testimony, much of it dealing with allegations of Switzer's womanizing and gambling, and drug use by OU players.

Cletus Bianchi, a jury member, said: "We had to cut through a lot of smoke that wasn't relevant."

Shaky Bear leads The Tradition

Associated Press

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. — Jack Nicklaus was uncharacteristically erratic Thursday, but his flashes of brilliance outweighed his mistakes and gave him the lead in the first round of The Tradition.

Nicklaus made just seven pars but offset a bogey and double bogey with eight birdies and an eagle for a 7-under-par 65.

Nicklaus is after his third straight championship in the $800,000 tournament, played on the 6,864-yard Cochise Course at he designed Desert Mountain.

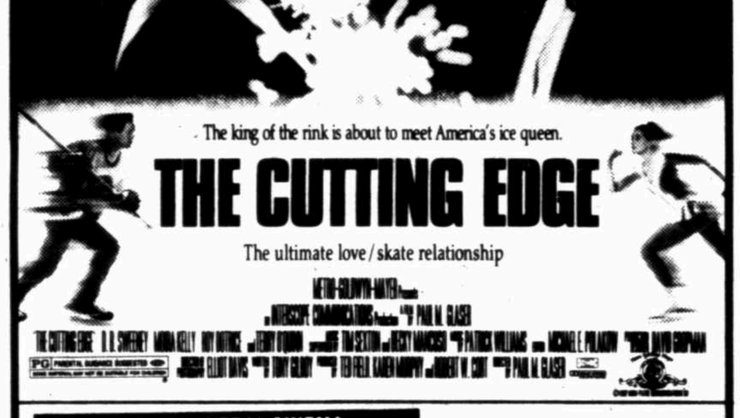

Scores were low because of greens softened by nearly a week of sometimes heavy rain. Nicklaus' round tied the tournament record set by Phil Rodgers in the first round last year.

"People talk about how the course will play really long because it's wet out there, but did you ever see a soft course where the pros didn't shoot good scores?" Nicklaus said.

FOCUSING ON THE PAST — By: Billy Joe Walker

THE SANTA FE EXPEDITION, 1841. About 350 Texans led by Gen. McLeod and Maj. Howard left Brushy Creek for Santa Fe June 21, 1841 for the purpose of opening a direct trade route between the Texas settlements and Santa Fe and to establish jurisdiction over the territory east of the Rio Grande which was claimed by Texas. At Laguna Colorado the expedition was induced to surrender to Mexican troops under Governor Armijo. Several Texans were brutally murdered and the rest bound and marched to Santa Fe thense to El Paso and finally to Mexico City where they were imprisoned.

BARNYARD BUDDIES

Bring these popular farm animals out of the barnyard and into your own yard! It's easy with our step-by-step traceable pattern that shows you how to create these charming outdoor ornaments now appearing on lawns all across the country. The pig measures 27" long by 19" high; and the sheep is 27½" long by 18" high. Make them from exterior grade plywood by tracing the full-size pattern onto the wood, cutting, sealing, painting and adding the final details.
