With the arrest of two men, one of Eastland and the other near Olden, and who were carried to Dallas by federal officers, the Samuel Butler extortion case seems near its end. It was reported on good authority, but not official, late Saturday afternoon.

An Eastland ex-football player, who was said to have been recognized by Samuel Butler Friday morning at Cisco when the youth who called to Butler to throw out the money and the flares, lighted up the scenery, was arrested and questioned. Another suspect was picked up by officers near Olden as he was trying to make his way toward Fort Worth. It is said on good authority, but not official, that both of these men were taken on to Dallas for further questioning. Officers are sure of one of the men implicated and have developed a good case already, it was said, against the other.

Officers Meet Cisco Train

Friday morning officers with machine guns arrived at the passenger depot at Cisco to meet the early morning T. & P. train going west. A part of the official group had gone on to Putnam, the next train stop where they thought according to letters written that the extortioner might ask for the money to be dropped. The train started up and was almost to the freight depot when the order was given by a stockily built man on the right of way, to Butler to throw the money were on the train accompanying from the train. The officers who were on the train accompanying Butler immediately lighted flares which were signals to officers in cars, but who were still nearly two blocks away that the money had been thrown. When the flares lighted up the surroundings the young man fled and Butler was said to have recognized him as an Eastland youth. Officers surrounded the flat in the colored section just north of the freight depot, but when they closed in there were no signs of the youth. After a search of the country north of Cisco until about 9 o'clock in the morning the search was suspended and the trail taken up elsewhere.

Two Men Arrested
Friday afternoon the case had so developed that the arrest was made in Eastland and the suspect picked up on the highway a few miles to the east, near Olden. The suspects are said to have been carried to Dallas and held for further questioning. There were several implicated in the extortion plot it is said, and the Eastland youth may have been only the tool of the real heads of the plotters.

Ploeters Write Letters
The plotters had written three letters to Samuel Butler, prominent oil man of Eastland and connected with the Arab Gasoline company, who was said to have recently inherited wealth from his mother who died in Eastland a short time ago. Two of these letters were written from Fort Worth and one from Eastland. They were all printed and used the Fort Worth Star-Telegram classified columns for communications in answer to the notes.

The letters follow:
Copy of the letter received July 24, 1936, Mailed in Eastland July 23, 1936.

Back to the Primitive

No poet has ever sung adequately the Summer Cottage, and perhaps none ever will for when its charms are felt most, there is no burden of the Lord upon the feeler to write it. Thus it happens that one of the nearest approaches to poetic appreciation of that primitive, perennial abode is made by an editor writing, doubtless, in a stuffy, tobacco-soaked office. "One by one," he says, in the Toronto Star, "the summer cottages, after eight or nine months of sleep, are opening their eyes and looking across the bay at each other, as the board shutters are pried off the windows. And presently as a towel is put on the line to dry, the cottages like to be inhabited rather than empty and idle, an experienced observer of them will tell you. They try, in their poor, dumb way, to welcome the incoming occupants. Drive your motorboat past a cottage that is empty one day and occupied the next, and you will see its sullenness gone and its whole expression one of beaming satisfaction. They tell us that plants breathe and feel. Some inanimate objects certainly seem to have personality. Take, for instance, the case of an elderly skiff, not done for by any means, but no longer a first-rater. You bring home a new one for use on special occasions, give it the preferred place at the boat house and at the dock, favor it with cushions and all that. Do you suppose that old skiff doesn't resent it? It cannot growl or late; but it will bump the new skiff viciously and knock the varnish off until somebody rushes to the rescue. Well, the tired business man is working like a pioneer, making his lodge in the wilderness mosquito proof and mouse proof, renewing his dock or wharf, repairing the strange and wonderful veranda steps that he made himself, and which have, for each step, a slant all its own, the whole structure unique like the distinctive work of an old master. And the tired business man is eating what is set before him. He is not sending this back, sampling that, and ordering something else. He is taking what is handed to him, is glad to get it, and the experience is good for him." Enough! We can fancy many a T. B. M. tied to his job, crying in anguish, "Stop! You are breaking my heart." Let us merely add the philosophic reflection, with which the aforesaid writer winds up his tender tribute, that it is probably this "annual return to the primitive" which reconciles the city man to the hardships of our electrified, gasolined, skyscrapered life. Let him be "wild" for a little while in the summer, and then he can endure, and even appreciate, civilization for the rest of the year.

A Skyscraper View

A newspaper man, climbing to the top of a tall building in process of construction, was impressed by the complexity of the work going on all about him. He felt a great awe and respect for the laborers and skill of the steel workers, plasterers, masons, bricklayers, plumber, electricians and the rest. Marveling that every girder, every rivet, every block of stone, every wire in the huge structure was going into its proper position to perform its appointed service, he exclaimed: "These are the man who make the city—the bankers, merchants, traction magnates!" Then he thought of the engineers and draftsmen in their offices who had planned the whole thing on paper before ever a shovel-full of earth was lifted from the ground to make room for the building's foundation. And he realized that these men, too, "make the city." But he didn't complete the list as he should have. Engineers do not devise skyscrapers to be built in the heart of the desert, nor does anyone pay workmen to combine their materials cleverly into such a building on a prairie. If it were not for the many other citizens who must have homes and food and clothing and entertainment and education, there would be no need for the buildings. So all the groups mentioned and all those not mentioned combine to make a city. Big cities are noisy, dirty and crowded, and their dwellers often long for the quiet, lonely places where nature is unmarred by skyscrapers. Yet the skyscraper has more uses than one. From its top-most tower the thoughtful observer gets a new glimpse at humanity, realizes man's dependence upon his fellow-creatures, feels, a little, man's insignificance—the people on the streets below look no bigger than ants—and with a thrill, senses man's courage and power.

OUT OUR WAY

THE ALARM CLOCK

RESORT HOTEL

BEGIN HERE TODAY

ANN HAMILTON, pretty young secretary in a large business office, goes to a travel agency to make plans for her two-week vacation.

BILL WARE, travel bureau employee, persuades her to go to Lake Racine. Bill is obviously attracted by Ann, but she gives him little thought.

Ann goes to the mountain resort and at first is lonely. Then she meets RALPH SPRING, head houseman, who tells her he is not interested in girls. Ralph introduces her to JIMMY LAIRD, wealthy playboy. Jaime is handsome and attentive. Ann tries to persuade him to do something useful with his life but he laughs at this. She also meets LEFTY PERRY, married but flirtatious.

Bill Ware arrives at Lake Racine and is annoyed to find Ann with so many other admirers. He and Ann plan a mountain climbing trip.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER IX

ANN awoke with the dream that she was sailing into a crimson sunset with Jaime Laird at her side. The sun was streaming in her windows, and she felt a little lazy when she was awakened. It was a fine day for a sail.

She lay back in her bed and yawned luxuriously. There were only a few days each year that she could enjoy the luxury of late sleep. She pressed a button, and the waiter came to the room to take her order for breakfast in bed. This luxury was the final touch!

She didn't feel like the Ann Hamilton who pounded a typewriter the other 11½ months of the year. But as she lay back, waiting for her coffee, she thought of the uniqueness of a resort hotel, isolated in a beauty spot, where people came and mingled for a brief time and then went back to their regular, ordered tasks in the workaday world.

She sensed the danger in vacation romances now, but thought she was sufficiently aware of herself to avoid them. A resort hotel was an artificial community, isolated from the home and the world's work. It was the scene of color and gaiety the year round. There was a complete lack of restraining contacts, and this left one adrift. The edges of all experience were blurred. And vacation romance was sometimes blurry. The easy familiarity in a resort hotel deceived one about the things that really counted.

Ann was a little bewildered by the admiration she had been receiving. She began to distrust her own impulses.

She was going to meet Jaime today with a feeling of premoni-tion. Jaime had made no effort whatsoever to gain her love. He would have laughed at the old-fashioned word "courtship." She had simply fallen for him from the start.

AND it was strange that she should feel this way. It wasn't his money—plenty of which he seemed to have despite his losses at gambling; it was mainly his manner toward her. Jaime was personable, charming, and they enjoyed the same things. They laughed at the same jokes. But, in the back of her mind, was a faint desire to reform him.

The idea grew until it subordinated all other considerations. It satisfied some urge in her that she couldn't define.

But a desire to reform a man does not help gain insight into the man's real character. The vacation experience blinded Ann. She didn't know Jaime Laird.

She got up and flung the windows open. Gone were her doubts when she saw the bright sun on the choppy waves out there.

When she went downstairs she met Bill Ware in the lobby. He came toward her again with his ridiculous air of proprietorship. He was sure of himself—that young man!

But Ann recalled his sincere avowal of his feeling for her. His chin was stubborn. He had said, "Perhaps every man is selfish over the girl he loves."

Bill couldn't afford yachts and gay parties, but when he saw something he thought was really worth while, he went after it.

SHE was talking to Bill on the porch when Jaime drove up to take her to the regatta on St. Regis Lake. For a moment the two men eyed each other with cool, measuring regard. Bill couldn't find it in himself to dislike this personable youth who had somehow walloped his chances of sweeping Ann off her feet.

But Bill felt that, of all the men at the resort, Ann had picked the wrong man. After he had waited all these years to find the right girl, she had fallen for a weakling. All that Bill could do was to wait—and see what would happen.

Instinct told him that Ann was infatuated with this gay lad. The way she looked at him, the way she made him tie his reefer around his throat as a protection against the morning chill, the bright chatter she conjured out of the air for him—all convinced Bill of the futility of his own blunt efforts to make her see his love.

When the pair drove away, their gay voices drowned by the roar of Jaime's expensive motor, Bill felt forlorn and lonely. His throat hurt.

It was a bitter ordeal he endured on the mountain that morning, but the ordeal was not in the climb. He lived too intensely at all times. He had stubbornly laid his course, and he wasn't going to deviate from it, no matter how much it hurt! He was in love with the girl.

To Ann it was an idyllic day. She lay back among the pillows in the stern of the sailboat, while Jaime kept his hand on the tiller. The regatta on St. Regis Lake was exciting. The whole fleet was out, and the pink and white sails dotting the lake looked like butterflies on the wing.

SAILING was new to her, but it was no less pleasing than Jaime's behavior today. He was deferential. He remembered all the little things that pleased her. His flattery was warm and, since there were so many other pretty girls who waved gaily to him from boats, it was convincing.

When the boat was in its pen again, and they were driving along the shore, watching the sun set behind the neighboring mountain range, there was a look in Jaime's eyes that made her believe in him at last. She didn't distrust her impulses any longer. Just now she wanted to know him better. She yielded to her own urge to heart-searching.

He parked the car on a peninsula which jutted out into the lake, and for a long time they sat there, silent. He slipped an arm around her, holding her close.

"Have a good time?"

"What do you think?" she asked, smiling. "It was marvelous. Too soon this is all going to end."

"Why must it end? I don't want it to end."

"Work!" she said succinctly. "Back to the pots and pans."

"Oh—work! Let's not talk about anything disagreeable now." Suddenly his eyes shone, and he turned to her. "What do you say? Let's pack our duds and run up to Canada for the week-end. You'll be back in plenty of time to climb that absurd mountain you've promised to climb with Bill Ware."

"That sounds very attractive," she said. "But—"

"We'd have a gay time! Don't be a fossil. What do you care what a lot of porch-sitters at the hotel would say? We're young. We'll have our fun where we find it. It's nobody's business but our own—up here in the mountains!"

Her voice was calm. "Yes, in a vacation place, a resort hotel, it's nobody's business but our own. That's why I couldn't go. I'm thinking about—us."

ALASKAN HISTORIES ASSAILED

Juneau, Alaska — (UP) — Not a single good, accurate history of Alaska has been written since Bancroft's edition in 1884. Dr. Cecil Rebe, of the University of Alaska, contends. He is gathering material in the Territorial Museum and Judge James Wickham's library for a large-scale historical work sponsored by the university.

VANCOUVER, B. C. — (UP) — Scotch music and egg hatching do not mix. A local Italian is demanding damages from his Scotch neighbor on the grounds that every time the latter started playing his bagpipes, all the Italian's brooding hens took flight, flew off their nests and the eggs never did hatch.

The Ford V-8 tells its own story

WE DEPEND on the Ford car to tell its own story of value and service. For if the people who use our cars every day are not praising them, it matters little what we may say.

The last word must be spoken by the car itself. The owner who tells his next-door neighbor how his car behaves in actual service is the most effective advertiser.

A great many Fords are being bought these days on the recommendation of present owners.

Ford Motor Company
Detroit, Michigan

Attention of Mr. Henry Ford

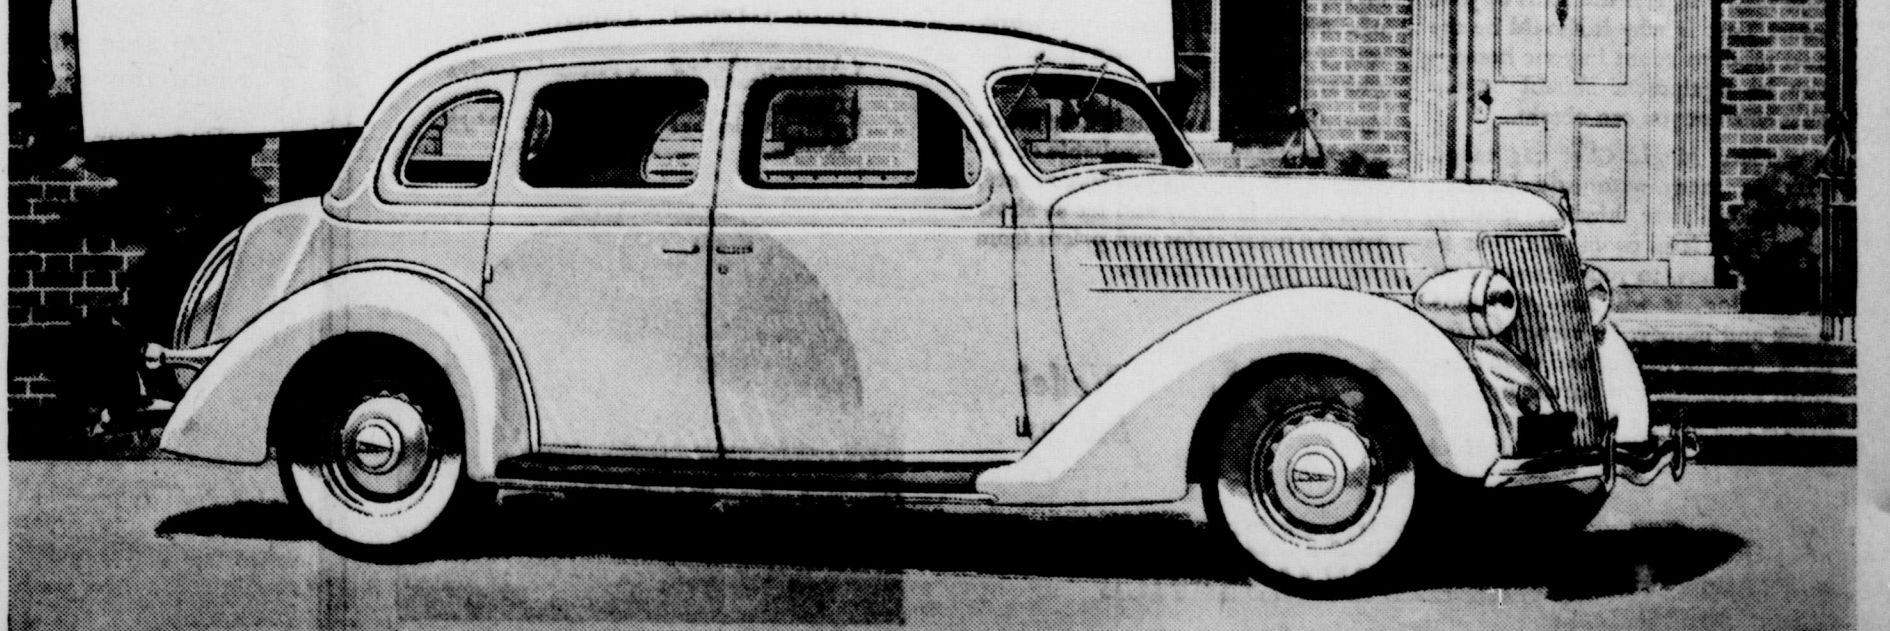

Gentlemen:

After driving one of your Model A cars for six years and getting exceptionally fine service from it, I purchased a V-8 which I have driven a small mileage and find it to be a very satisfactory car.

Both the Model A and the V-8 appeal greatly to what little I know about mechanical design. However, the greatest pleasure I get from driving my Ford is due to my respect for the general policies of your company, and the belief that the method of making and distributing the product is a beneficial one for the people of America.

Yours very truly,

JAPAN TRACES 6-YEAR COURSE OF ARMY PLOT

TOKYO, Aug. 8 (U.P.)—Misguided patriotism and a flaming desire to have Japan ruled by a unified army under direct command of the Emperor have been recorded as the moving impulses behind the February uprising which brought sentences of death to 16 young Japanese army officers and a civilian colleague.

The official statement employed some 20,000 words to review the background of the incident which for a few breathless hours rocked the Japanese empire last winter.

Somewhat sympathetic in tone, the statement declared the army officers who led the revolt had been swept into false enthusiasms against the Emperor's advisers and against wealthy magnates by biased interpretations of a series of events involving the Empire dating back as far as 1930.

The center of the conspiracy, the report held, was in seven men—two active army captains, three active lieutenants, a retired captain and a retired paymaster.

"They had constantly deplored the corrupt tendencies of the age and the flippancy of the public mind and felt deep concern for the future of the country," the report said.

World Issues As Factor
"The London treaty issue of 1930, the Manchurian incident of 1931, and the resultant views among some intelligentsia warning against the tendencies of the age, demand in the army ranks for fundamental solution of the Manchurian incident, etc., created a state of tension in the situation at home and abroad which made it difficult for any man concerned in the welfare of the nation to stand silently by, according to the testimonies of the accused."

The report, detailing circumstances of the trial by the military court which brought the death sentences and verdicts of various terms of imprisonment against others of the rebels, continued:

"They considered that time had come for planning to effect rapid progress of national fortunes through promotion of the national spirit, adequate national defense armament, stabilization of the people's life, etc.

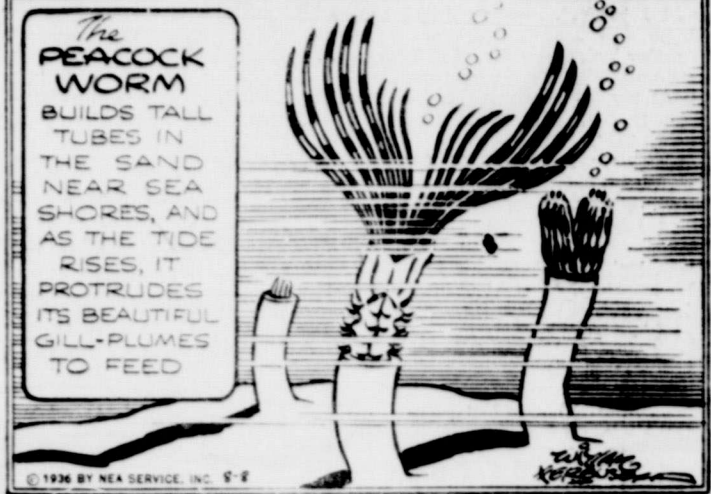

"Great enthusiasm, therefore, came to be entertained by the accused in the form of seeing the nation through the difficulties. Meanwhile they thought that means were lacking to insure the soldiers at the front and those in the barracks that members of their families they leave behind in the agrarian villages and the poverty-stricken agrarian and fishing villages in general would be adequately cared for.

Leader Ex-Cadet
"Zensaku Shibukawa (an ex-cadet sentenced to death as an adviser and director of the revolt), having been a student at the military academy for a time, was acquainted with most of the men in the army in general, the support was enlisted of the radical-minded Capt. Eichi Okura, Capt. Saburo Suganami and Capt. Yoriyoshi, the report stated. Their sole purpose was to consolidate an army united as one body under the direct command of the Emperor.

The report declared that action against some of the men for distributing seditious literature last year irritated the plotters and that their movement gained impetus.

"When there was a change in the Genro, statesmen close to the Throne, the bureaucracy the military leaders, the political parties and the financial magnates, constituting the so-called privileged classes.

Three Captains Enlisted
As this radical view was not in keeping with the sound and sober view of the officers and men of the army in general, the support was enlisted of the radical-minded Capt. Eichi Okura, Capt. Saburo Suganami and Capt. Yoriyoshi, the report stated. Their sole purpose was to consolidate an army united as one body under the direct command of the Emperor.

post of inspector-general of military education they drew hasty conclusions on the basis of hearsay in biased quarters and contended that the supreme command prerogatives of the Emperor had been interfered with," the statement continued.

"Extreme indignation therefore was evinced. Additional stimulus was forthcoming from the assassination of the late Lieut. Gen. Tetzuzan Nagata, director of the military affairs bureau of the war office, by Lieut. Col. Caburo Aizawa.

"This series of circumstances led the accused to believe that behind the alleged interference with the supreme command prerogatives of the Emperor existed conspiracy and clandestine activities of the statesmen close to the Throne, and the financial magnates.

"Thus they took the line that methods transcending law must be adopted and units of the Imperial army used for their ends, viz., they must resort to direct action in order to visit upon them the penalties of heaven." It was their idea that such a coup was a patriotic action justified by the emergency nature of the times.

TENDER BISCUITS DEVELOPED

ITHACA, N. Y. — (U.P.) — "Very tender" biscuits from a new type wheat flour is claimed by the Cornell University agricultural experiment station. The new wheat, known as No. 19, was sent to a milling concern and then tried in homes and bakeries. Girls in the research laboratory who tried the flour reported the flour that it "yielded products which were more tender than those of the flour with which we were comparing it."

BASE
YOUR CHOICE
ON PERFORMANCE!

A Good Refrigerator must....

- ☐ Keep Foods Safely
- ☐ Freeze Ice Quickly
- ☐ Operate at Low Cost

FOR TRUE VALUE....BUY AN ELECTRIC REFRIGERATOR!

● All refrigerators are not alike. All do not offer the same value or provide the same performance. Neither price nor appearance determine true refrigerator worth. The basic test of any refrigerator is its ability to provide satisfactory trouble-free performance all the time. Many buyers overlook this fact.

Buy your refrigerator this way:

First, and most important, demand that it maintain temperatures below 50 degrees. Many refrigerators cannot. Yet in temperatures over 50 degrees, food spoils quickly and endangers health.

Second, demand that your refrigerator freeze ice quickly. If it cannot, you are not receiving true refrigerator value. You must have fast-freezing ability in summer when ice needs are many and when frozen desserts are an important part of menus.

Third, look for low operating cost. But remember, low operating cost is worthwhile only when the above performance is maintained.

Demand evidence of such performance when you buy. If you do, you will choose a modern electric refrigerator and receive the utmost for your money!

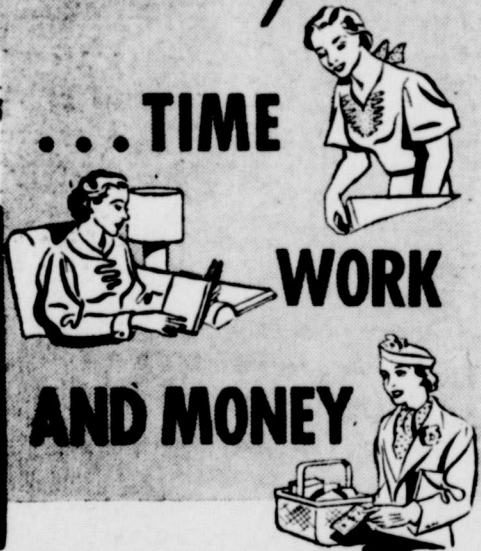

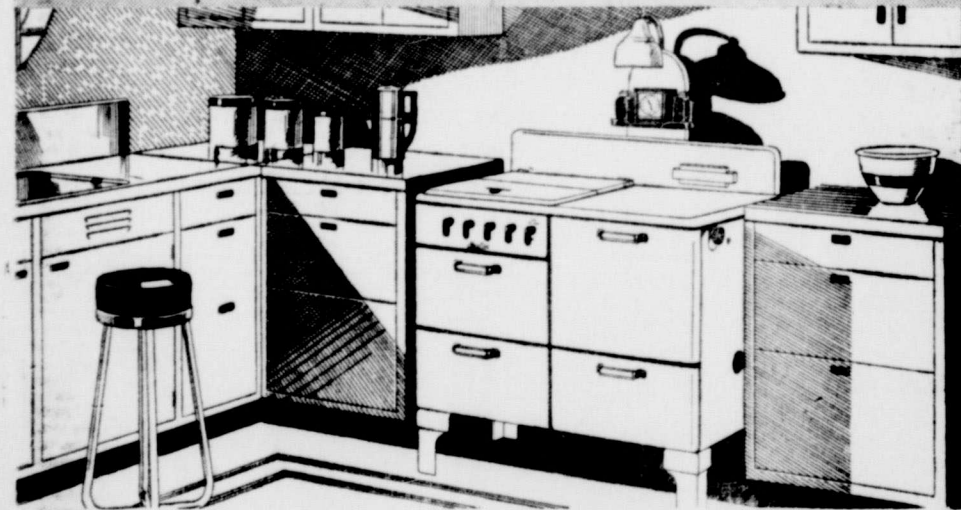

● MODERNIZE — CHOOSE AN ELECTRIC REFRIGERATOR! ●

Do you know that your increased use of Electric Service is billed on a surprisingly low rate schedule ... and adds only a small amount to your total bill?

'Hypnotic' Baby Is Doing Well

Born in Ohio's rare "hypnosis birth," the 10-pound baby girl shown above greeted the amazed eyes of its mother, Mrs. Leonard Loomis, 21, of Columbus, six and a half hours after Dr. A. H. Kanter, as shown below, put the woman into a deep hypnotic sleep. During the delivery, which Dr. Kanter maintained was painless, no anesthetic was used, witnesses testified. The baby is doing splendidly.

Picture Accuses Dr. Thorpe

In an effort to support charges that Dr. Franklyn Thorpe, shown left below in Los Angeles courtroom, often entertained women in his home, the top picture was offered in evidence in the child custody-divorce suit of Mary Astor, film star, against Thorpe. Miss Astor's lawyers declared the photo was that of the doctor embracing Norma Taylor, blond dancer. Miss Taylor indignantly denied she ever breakfasted in bed with Thorpe, as plaintiff's counsel alleged. She said she visited the Thorpe home only as an appendicitis patient. At right below is Nurse Nellie Richardson, who gave testimony damaging to Thorpe concerning women's visits.

picked candidate of the utility interests.

"I do not think he can make the people of this district believe that. In one of his Congressional Record broadcasts there is printed an anonymous letter which I charge that he wrote himself, and in which he said: 'I believe that none of the local utility companies in your (Blanton's) district are unfriendly toward you and I don't think they are fighting you.'"

"There is no utility issue in this campaign. None was mentioned in the first primary and my opponent knows as much then as he knows now."

Judge Garrett said Blanton's statements that a judgment was rendered against him in Tarrant county in 1922 was false and the C. L. Garrett was on a Mineral Wells resident.

Garrett charged his opponent with negligence and ineffectiveness in looking after the interest of the laboring classes of the district. He said of his and other county judge's trip to Washington this year for the relaxation of WPA rules.

The candidate favored "the use of every practically and constitutional means to put the farmer on a par with the individuals in other industries."

"The farmer ought to be the first concern of the government of this country. He must be protected in the profitable cultivation of his acres and he must be made happy and content, able to enjoy the advantages that other people enjoy."

Garrett said this district is a basic agricultural territory. After favoring a tariff on foreign farm and ranch products, Judge Garrett declared he is "unabashedly opposed to the federal control of our oil resources."

"Texas is the largest oil producer of the six large producing states. The other states are predominantly oil consuming states. Aside from the fact that Texas ought to control its resources as a matter of political principle, if control of the development of this resource were given into the federal hands, the votes of the oil producing states would dominate all legislation pertaining there-to and Texas would be at the mercy and endorsed a defense adequate to the nation's need.

Favoring a "balanced budget" attained by the elimination of useless expenditures, rather than an increase in taxes, Judge Garrett declared:

"During the eight years that I served my county as county judge it has been the policy that I have followed and I am proud to say that the results speak for themselves. We eliminated useless or unnecessary expenditures and reduced excessive expenditures. We balanced our county budget. We brought relief to our property owners in a period of trying economic conditions. I propose to take the same policies to Washington."

Garrett also said he favored, free speech, is a states-right democrat

SIX BILLION IN GOLD WILL BE SHIPPED BY U. S.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 8 (U.P.)—Inability to complete a road needed for transportation was discussed today to have delayed the Treasury in its plans to move $6,000,000,000 of its huge gold stocks into an impenetrable hoarding place in the Kentucky hills during August.

The storehouse—equipped with every known "burglar proof" device—is being finished in the heart of the recently mechanized Port Knox, Ky., military reservation.
Treasury officials, using mighty armed guard forces, had hoped to move the gold from New York, Philadelphia and eastern centers during August. But shipments probably will not begin until September as the result of a delay in finishing a concrete approach road, they said.

Meanwhile secret conferences as to how to guard the most valuable shipment of precious metal is the world's history are on foot.

Consider Military Guard
It was believed that the task would be assigned to post office inspectors and the secret service.
Guards will be posted along the route as the heavily armored trains start their trip. Some thought was being given to asking military precautions also.

Local police authorities will be asked to cooperate in the shipments of the hundreds of tons of the gold metal, which Uncle Sam took over and melted into bars under the Gold Act of 1934.
The Kentucky shipment is in line with the Treasury's policy of taking most of its vast $10,500,- 000,000 gold stocks from mints and assay offices along the Atlantic and Pacific coasts into safer interior points.

Mint Shipment By Mail

About $2,000,000,000 was moved in 1933 from San Francisco to the more impregnable Denver mint in the first of the transfer operations. This was shipped as parcel post—guarded by post office inspectors.

Moving the gold through the streets in heavily armored trucks to and from the trains late at night under drawn guns, the Denver shipment was delivered without a hitch and few if any outside persons knew its movements.

The Fort Knox vault is a "fort like" two story affair on a raised level of ground. The interior is steel and concrete. The interior is granite. It is 165 by 121 feet, filled with cabin-like subterranean vaults that can be flooded by water through pressing a button.

Building Cost $600,000

The structure is surrounded by two ditches to be filled with water.
Torch-proof steel and "burglar proof" locks are used throughout the building, which cost Uncle Sam in the neighborhood of $600,000.
When the Kentucky shipments are finished, the Federal government will have three quarters of its record breaking gold stocks safely guarded underground at interior points. The remainder will be left at mint and assay offices as a "working balance."

Although shipment plans are unknown, some sources said that it might require 50 or 55 armored trains to move the precious cargo.
