World leaders return to economic issues

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. (AP) — President Reagan and the five leaders of key industrialized democracies today returned to their summit talks on the problems that are troubling the world's economy.

U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz gave a thumbs-up sign as he entered the Williamsburg Inn for the third formal set of discussions, which had been marred on Sunday by a dispute, which they ultimately resolved, over a statement on arms control in Europe.

In the last day of their Memorial Day weekend talks, the leaders and their aides crowded around a large oval conference table in this historic town.

The leaders, representing Canada, France, Italy, Japan, West Germany and the United States, were joined in the discussions by their foreign and finance ministers. Also attending the sessions was the head of the European Common Market.

British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher left late Sunday to return to the campaign in the June 9 British parliamentary elections. Foreign Minister Francis Pym and Geoffrey Howe, chancellor of the exchequer, attended in her place.

The foreign leaders already have registered their concern about the high interest rates in the United States they fear are delaying their own recovery from the long recession.

They urged Reagan to try to lower the giant U.S. budget deficits, which they contend are keeping the interest rates high

In addition to interest rates, the leaders discussed high unemployment, trade barriers and the international debt crisis.

Leaving their aides behind, the seven world leaders met alone Sunday in the House of Burgesses, where George Washington, Patrick Henry and other members of Virginia's colonial legislature once sat.

Joining Reagan were Mrs. Thatcher, Canadian Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau, French President Francois Mitterrand, West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl, Italian Prime Minister Amintore Fanfani, Japanese Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone and Gaston Thorn, president of the European Economic Community.

At the end of their talks today, they were expected to issue a statement that would likely restate their intentions to cooperate on ensuring a strong recovery.

Indeed, a draft statement circulating among foreign officials gave renewed support for achieving "non-inflationary growth of income and employment." It also urged greater stability in the exchange markets. The dollar has recently risen in value in comparison with other major currencies.

Sunday's dispute on arms control occurred when the French and Canadians, with some support from the Italians, objected to a strong statement supporting NATO's planned deployment of medium-range nuclear missiles in Europe, according to U.S. and European sources who would only discuss the issue if their names weren't used.

The French and Italians, wanting to keep the focus of the conference on economic issues, objected to having arms control be the subject of the summit's first statement, the sources said. The Canadians sought a firm statement that disarmament was the allies' goal.

Press 'nibbling' at summit stories

By JOHN P. WALLACH
Foreign Affairs Editor, The Hearst Newspapers

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. — The biggest hit of this seven-nation economic summit, at least with the 3,000 members of the world's press corps, has turned out to be a four-inch-wide cookie — "the original Tom's Mom's chocolate chocolate chip cookie."

They are being doled out to the giant press corps free-of-charge, together with overcooked hamburger patties, roast beef sandwiches, corn, potato salad, anemic-looking hot dogs, several brands of beer, soft drinks and garnishes at a lavish salad bar.

Real news stories have been so few and far between here that correspondents have spent a lot of time eating in what one newsman called the "fat farm," the enormous blue and white food tent connected by an awninged passageway to the international press center.

President Reagan asked dozens of American companies to donate their goods to this summit. So just as the Union Gas Company donated 5,000 gallons of gas to shuttle the seven leaders around, Tom's Mom's cookies of Charlevoix, Mich., donated their products.

The television networks have become so desperate that in almost Pirandello-style they are interviewing and videotaping each other being interviewed. "Friday night, we had a live shot from the Wren building," boasted Gordon Peterson, an NBC affiliate anchorman. It was a rare opportunity to actually film what the networks call "a stand-upper" from the grounds of the historic colonial Williamsburg area that has been closed — or "secured," as the secret service jargon goes — to all press since Saturday morning.

"I interviewed Hodding Carter in his capacity as former State Department spokesman," Peterson explained. "As I was interviewing Carter, and as my man was shooting Carter," the anchorman went on, "Carter's man (cameraman) was shooting my man and there was a third crew shooting the two of us, which I thought was a little incestuous."

Japanese crews were seen filming two attractive college coeds politely taking the cardboard trays from correspondents and dumping them, along with apple cores and half-eaten pies into a large waste disposal unit.

Who knows? Maybe the Japanese have uncovered some U.S. secret method of garbage collection that they can copy and improve on — and then sell back to the United States.

The only snafu propriately involved four dozen key lime pies flown in from the Florida Keys. In what is certain to be regarded as a breach of security, two secret service agents dropped the key lime pies during the dessert course of Saturday night's dinner for the seven leaders at Carter's Grove, the former 18th century plantation home here.

The press at least can see the news on a 24-hour, round-the-clock basis. There are television monitors in the press center that beam over giant satellite earth stations live hourly news broadcasts from the BBC and French television.

The same monitors televise the movements of the British, French, West German, Italian, European community, Canadian and American leaders whenever they venture forth onto horse-drawn carriages or onto the cobblestone streets of the restored colonial town.

Reagan's efforts to show his guests around was somewhat shortlived Saturday when a few minutes after they emerged, a sudden downpour thretened to drench the potentates.

The rain didn't stop British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher from inspecing a hand-hewn silver bowl. There were no "freebies," however, so the elegant "Iron Lady" of British politics politely put it back.

There was a moment of brief laughter as Gaston Thorn, the Common Market's Representative, picked up a hand-woven basket, carefully inspecting it. Instead of putting it back down, he thrust it on the head of Pierre Eliot Trudeau, Canada's Prime Minister, who momentarily looked bewildered, then laughed good-naturedly at the joke.

Grave memories

May 30th is a day of remembrance for Tommy Aaron, left, and Clelan Atchison. They remember the men and women who gave their lives in wars, and they mark the graves with American flags. Atchison, a member of American Legion Post 19, served in World War II and Korea. Aaron, whose father Eric Aaron is also an American Legion member, lost an uncle in Vietnam.

Memorial Day activities varied

By The Associated Press

Veterans of the nation's "most unpopular war" were honored this Memorial Day weekend, while a U.S. military adviser slain in El Salvador was mourned in his hometown and two buddies who last met on a World War II battlefield planned a reunion.

The long holiday weekend sent Americans heading for beaches and parks across the country despite flooding from melting snow in the Rocky Mountains and the Sierras and a smog alert in Southern California.

At least 236 people had died in traffic accidents by 8 a.m. today, the final day of the three-day holiday.

Four people were missing in river rafting accidents in California and Colorado, authorities said.

At Arlington National Cemetery outside the nation's capital, 19 members of an honor guard that buried the remains of two unidentified servicemen in 1958 returned Sunday to the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier to mark that ceremony.

A riderless horse led by two men in black berets commemorated dead Vietnam veterans in a memorial at Chicago's Cedar Park Cemetery, where 1,000 veterans are buried.

Vietnam War memorials were dedicated Sunday in Bridgeport, Conn., and Eufaula, Ala., where retired Army Gen. William Westmoreland told a crowd of 800 that the nation is "becoming proud" of its veterans.

"The nation will need stout-hearted men in the future even more," Westmoreland said. "We shall never forget you, we shall never forget you."

In Bridgeport, about 300 people were present at the unveiling of a memorial honoring the 29 area men killed in the conflict.

"The people of Bridgeport will remain forever proud, ever grateful because of the unselfish way our men took up our cause in the Vietnam War, the most difficult, dangerous and unpopular war in our history," said Mayor Leonard Paoletta.

Two former Army privates sent to separate hospitals in France after being wounded in the Battle of the Bulge in 1945 planned to relive their World War II experiences later this week at a golf tournament.

Cy Laughter, 56, who owns a Dayton, Ohio, tool company, has scheduled a reunion with Rayburn Fraley, 63, of Morgantown, W.Va.

"I can't tell you what happened last night, but I can remember in detail everything that happened when we were shot," said Laughter. "It just doesn't go away."

Navy Lt. Comdr. Albert Schaufelberger III, the only U.S. military adviser killed in the Salvadoran civil war, was remembered Sunday in a service on Fripp Island, S.C., attended by 260 people.

West Point's 'warriors' rest at oldest national cemetery

WEST POINT, N.Y. (AP) — The bodies of thousands of this country's finest warriors, men who fought in battles from the Revolution to Vietnam, are buried in a small, shady corner of the U.S. Military Academy overlooking the placid Hudson River.

It is the nation's oldest burial ground for its military heroes.

"They were burying American soldiers there right from the start of the Revolution," said Robert Mulligan, military curator of the New York State Museum in Albany. "There are only two cemeteries in the country which are so important from a military sense: West Point and Arlington. And Arlington derives its significance from the Civil War."

The oldest grave at the cemetery belongs to Dominick Trant, a young Revolutionary War soldier from Massachusetts who died at West Point in 1782, when the fort was a key outpost controlling river traffic.

Soviets say U.S. 'pressured' allies

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union said today the United States pressured its allies into making a statement on nuclear arms at the Williamsburg summmit because it feared there would be disputes over economic issues on the agenda.

The official news agency Tass said the Reagan Administration "hurriedly" turned the debate at Williamsburg from economics to military issues when "acute contradictions" arose on financial questions.

"The American side hastily worked out and imposed on the meeting's participants the so-called joint statement" on nuclear arms issues, Tass said.

The statement issued Sunday at Williamsburg was delayed several hours because of objections by France and Canada to the text favored by the Americans.

The statement supported the North Atlantic Treaty Organization's plans to begin deploying new U.S. missiles in Western Europe.

Amendment ends UTPB restriction

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

An amendment, written by Midland College President Jess Parrish, to free the University of Texas of the Permian Basin from a 60 semester-hour enrollment restriction was approved this morning by the Legislature.

The amendment should benefit UTPB as well as Midland College and other junior colleges.

The amendment, to a bill on public school finance passed Sunday by the House of Representatives, will remove a current law provision which states students enrolling in UTPB must have at least 60 semester hours of accredited college study before they can be enrolled.

The amended bill was approved by both houses today.

Earlier this morning, before the bill had been passed in the Senate, Parrish said, "I think we've got the skids greased. That (signing into amended law by the governor) won't be any problem."

The amended bill passed the day after another bill to expand UTPB from a upper-level only (junior, senior and graduate courses) university to a four-year school effectively died in the House's calendar committee. The bill had passed the Senate.

"I think we're in pretty good shape," said Parrish.

The main bill, sponsored by Rep. Bill Messer of Belton, relates to the calculation of the effective tax rate of a school district, but the amendment was not "germane" to his bill, he noted.

The Parrish-written amendment was a compromise between Midland Rep. Tom Craddick and Odessa Rep. Jay Gibson, who have taken opposing stands on the UTPB four-year bill. Gibson promoted it and lost; Craddick fought it and won. Under current law, UTPB can accept only students who have accrued at least 60 semester-hours of credit.

Meanwhile, the UTPB four-year bill, sponsored by Lubbock Sen. John Montford, remains trapped in the House Calendar Committee, of which Craddick is a member. The bill would have permitted the UT regents to add the freshman- and sophomore-level courses to UTPB curricula.

Midland city, Midland College and other junior colleges voiced opposition to the measure, which, they said, would cut into enrollments at junior colleges.

The amendment sponsored by Messer states that UTPB is organized to "teach" junior, senior and graduate-level courses and strikes the phrase "accept only junior-, senior-, and graduate-level students."

Parrish said the new legislation was needed by UTPB and would benefit that university as well as junior colleges in the area.

He observed that the compromise between Gibson and Craddick was "in itself unusual."

The Parrish-written amendment would allow, for example, the dual enrollment of Midland College students. They could finish up on sophomore-level work at MC while taking junior courses at UTPB.

"I think we're in pretty good shape."

Gibson, who said UTPB's proposed new stance should increase the school's enrollment by 800 this fall, said he was "pleased" with the amendment. Craddick speculated that it would "increase cooperation" between the junior colleges and UTPB.

The measure would bring UTPB "in line" with the nine other upper-level universities in Texas, said Robert Clinton, executive director of the Texas Community Junior College Association.

WEATHER SUMMARY

AP Laserphoto Map

The National Weather Service predicts rain through Tuesday for the Great Lakes and northern New England, with showers forecast for central Florida.

Chance for rain at 50 percent

Evidently the farmers' rain dance is not perfected. More than any real rain, rain has just been threatening and teasing the dry earth with a sprinkling of moisture. By this time of year, the plowed earth around Midland is usually planted in cotton.

Tonight's 50 percent chance of showers and thunderstorms might just help farmers perfect the dance. If not, much of Midland's farmland may go unplanted in the mainstay crop, cotton, due to the lack of adequate underground moisture. But if some farmers plant this late in the planting season just to partake of the government's deficiency payments, their cotton crop may be scant to nil.

While the weatherman at the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport gives a reasonably good chance for rain tonight, his forecast for Tuesday is a less-than promising 20 percent chance of rain.

Tonight's low is to be in the low 60s, and winds are to be easterly at 10 to 20 mph. For Tuesday, the weatherman has predicted partly cloudy skies, a high near 80 and easterly winds at 10 to 15 mph.

Sunday's high temperature of 88 degrees was far afield from the record high of 104 degrees for the date in 1938. The overnight low was 61 degrees, while the record low for a May 30 is 46 degrees in 1937.

Extended forecasts

Wednesday-Friday

West Texas: Widely scattered thunderstorms mainly north. Otherwise partly cloudy with small day-to-day temperature changes. Lows upper 70s south to low 60s Panhandle. Highs mid 80s extreme north to near 104 in the Big Bend.

South Texas: Partly cloudy with a slight chance of thundershowers northwest sections Wednesday and a chance of thundershowers western sections Friday. Highs upper 80s to mid 90s and lows upper 60s to mid 70s.

North Texas: Mostly fair with isolated afternoon and evening thunderstorms. Temperatures near seasonal normals. Lows will be in the 60s and highs will be in the mid 80s to low 90s.

Flood workers build another run-off river

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Flood workers turned a second major thoroughfare into a sandbag-lined river to buy time in the battle against rising waters fed by melting mountain snows, officials said.

"We bought another 24 hours," said Al Haines, city director of administrative services, on Sunday. "If the weather holds up, we'll be all right."

Lower temperatures promised a reduction in the melting snowpack today while showers and thundershowers — and possibly snow in the mountains — threatened to aggravate problems throughout the state.

A two-mile-long, 7-feet-deep sandbag-and-plastic channel created on 1300 South Street has enabled the city to keep Mountain Dell Reservoir from overflowing.

On Sunday another river, City Creek on the north edge of the downtown area, spilled into the streets, rushing past Tabernacle Square, site of the Mormon Church's historic tabernacle and temple.

Sandbags kept runoff out of the square and an appeal was made for volunteers to create another sandbag channel, this one for a half mile along State Street.

Swollen streams were tearing up streets in Davis County, while also clearing mudslides. A dam in Utah County was spilling over and summer homes in Provo Canyon were flooded and National Guardsmen helped residents ate Lakeshore dike against the Spanish Fork River.

Muddy drinking water and broken pipes have forced residents of a half dozen communities to boil drinking water or truck it in from other areas.

More than $1 million has been spent in Salt Lake City alone to battle the floodwaters, but Mayor Ted Wilson said it has prevented many millions of dollars damage to homes and businesses.

"I think we're ahead of the game. A lot of communities wait until the water hits them and then bail it out," Wilson said Sunday night.

Wilson said about 4,000 volunteers showed up. At 9:15 p.m. thousands of spectators cheered as the water started flowing down the street.

The water was being confined to the east side of the street, away from the Mountain Bell building, where all of the telephone switching in the state is done.

At 400 South, the water was diverted into storm drains that carried it a mile west to the Jordan River, which flows into the record high Great Salt Lake.

Water broke through the dike at one spot about 11 p.m., flooding businesses, but the flow was reduced and the sandbag wall was reinforced.

City Creek was flowing at a record 234 cubic feet per second — the previous record was 156 — and could hit 300 to 360 before peaking, probably Tuesday, Haines said.

Davis County Commissioner Glen Saunders said there has been millions of dollars damage, primarily to streets and silt-filled storm systems, with scores of homes receiving at least minor damage.

Motorists were asked to avoid canyons and all roads through Davis County except Interstate 15, the state's major north-south thorofare, Saunders said.

The highway patrol said Lambs, Spanish Fork, Goshen, Maple, Diamond Fork, Tibble Fork and American Fork canyon roads were closed, as was a road off Provo Canyon to actor Robert Redford's Sundance Resort.

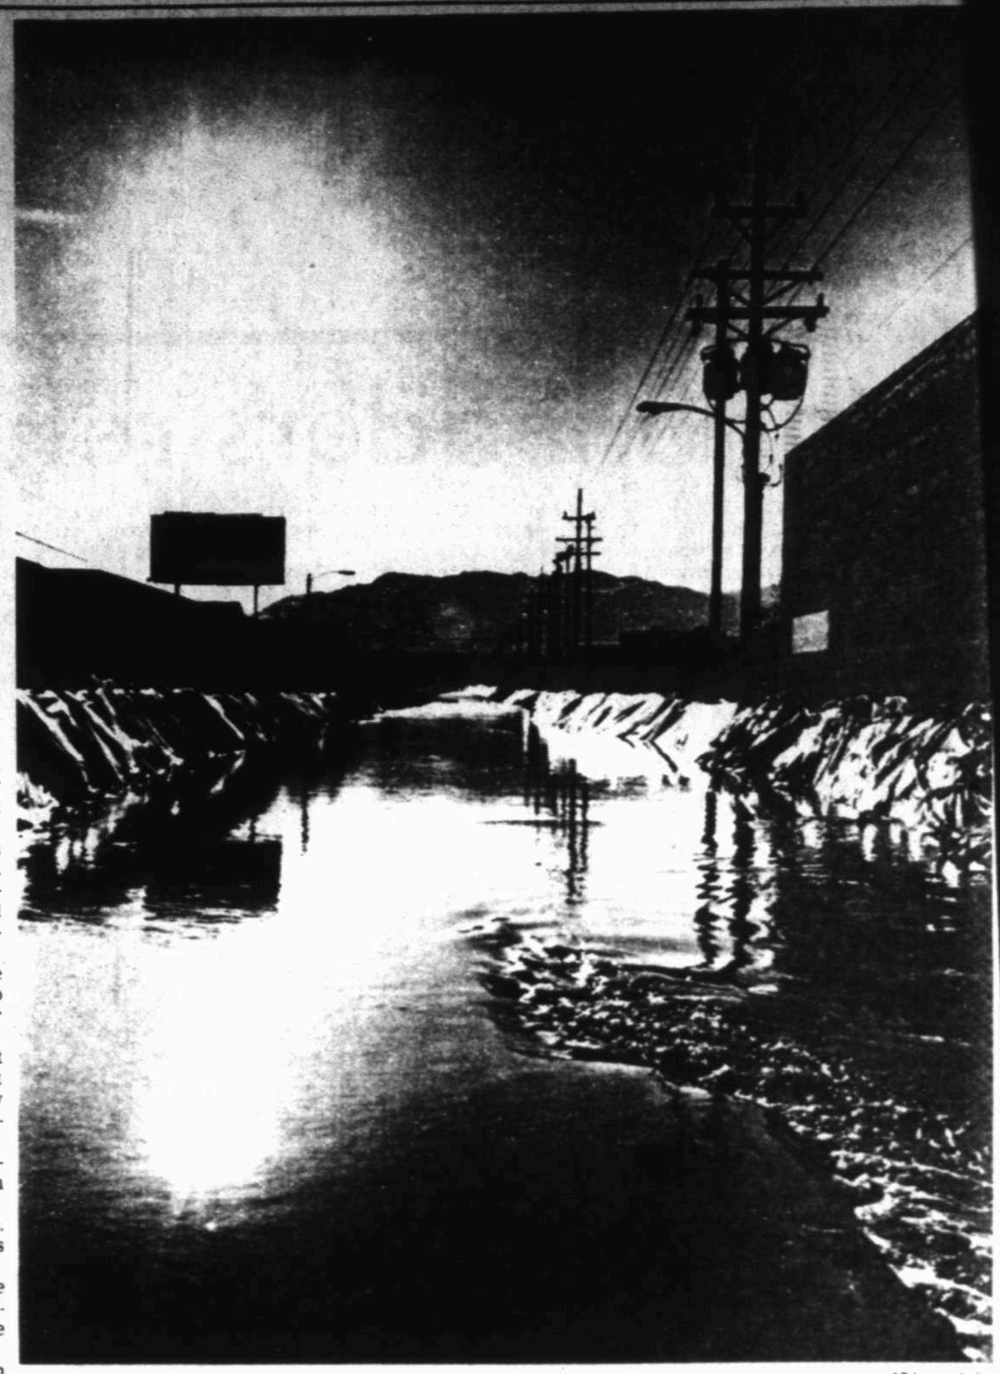

Interstate 15 was flooded at Levan, but a bypass for passenger cars was opened late Sunday, although semi-trailer trucks still were being detoured to U.S. 89.

Water was being restored block-by-block in Fairview after breaks in the water lines. The National Guard trucked water to the community.

Residents in Farmington, Draper, Mapleton, Santaquin and Vernal were told to boil water because of contamination from runoff.

Runoff pushed Goshen Reservoir in Utah County to overflow Sunday, prompting fears that the rush of water down the spillway would damage a highway, said Goshen City Clerk Verna Van Ausdal.

She said workers cut another channel, but it started to erode the dam, so it was plugged again.

Marion's residents still watch for signs of killer tornadoes

By TERRI COLBY
Associated Press Writer

MARION, Ill. — She moves more slowly now, but Alice Silkwood can still walk to the window where she watched in awe a year ago as the tornado that blasted her apartment tore through town, killing 10 people and injuring scores more.

"I was standing in the kitchen watching it and I guess I was just mesmerized. I couldn't move," says the 80-year-old woman. "Just the sight of it was awesome — it just had me spellbound, I guess."

Many town residents — especially school children — still scan the skies nervously whenever the weather is cloudy.

In a memorial service Sunday, about 450 people gathered to remember the 10 who died, pausing for a moment of silence at 3:15 p.m. — the instant the twister hit last May 29, cutting a path of destruction that touched virtually everyone in town.

Mrs. Silkwood clearly recalls the moments after the tornado struck, when she awoke under a pile of rubble in her apartment. She suffered a gashed head, mangled feet and broken bones.

"When I heard my name I couldn't move except this one hand," she said. "I got it up through the rubble and they saw it and came running."

The town sustained $85 million in damage, said Mayor Robert Butler, with about 100 homes destroyed and another 60 suffering major damage.

Most of them have been rebuilt or repaired. Of about 50 businesses destroyed or damaged, all but two have reopened. The 192-unit Shawnee Village apartment complex, where seven of the 10 people were killed, has been rebuilt. And 21 new businesses have opened since the twister touched down.

The reconstruction created jobs and improved business when people began buying building materials, replacing cars and furnishing their new homes, he said.

"It was a terrible price to pay for improving your community, but it is good that as much good has come out of the tragedy as did," Butler said.

Most of the city's visible scars are healed, although trees along the path of the tornado are gone. But the sight of storm clouds on the horizon still sparks more than the usual anxiety.

Educators who coped with the loss of a school also had to deal with children who panicked when clouds darkened the skies.

37-year-old man makes much ado about nothing

POMONA, Calif. (AP) — Doing absolutely nothing is a competitive sport to Bill Fuqua, who is trying for the world record for standing still.

The 37-year-old who stood motionless for 10 hours and six minutes in a Glendale shopping mall brought his non-act to a swap meet at the Los Angeles County fairgrounds for the Memorial Day weekend.

He stood still for three hours, just to stay in shape.

"The Motionless Man: Make Him Laugh. Win $100," said the sign next to Fuqua, but despite the antic efforts of challengers including one boy who put two balloons under his shirt and identified himself as Dolly Parton, the only things that moved were his eyelids.

"I do blink," Fuqua said later. "Once every seven to eight minutes."

Blinking is allowed by the Guinness Book of World Records, which lists the record-holder for motionlessness as Melody Schick, who stayed still for 8 hours, 33 minutes at the National Association of Broadcasters convention in Las Vegas, Nev., on April 15, 1981.

"It's fun not smiling at the jokes," he said. "Sometimes I make a little sound that maybe only the kid nearest to me can hear. He'll tell someone else that I made a noise and then I keep quiet."

Standing motionless can be dangerous.

A few years ago, a man in Arlington, Texas, stabbed Fuqua and punctured his lung. The man apparently thought Fuqua was a mannequin. Fuqua now has a bodyguard, Fred Esquivel.

Fuqua, from Fort Worth, got his start at age 14 when, as a joke, he stood motionless in front of a Christmas tree.

"A lady touched me and said, 'Oh, I thought it was a real person.'"

Some of those trying to crack his serene, sunken-eyed composure at the fair on Saturday also wondered if he was real.

Anti-MX protesters told Congress 'bamboozled'

CHEYENNE, Wyo. (AP) — Sen. Gary Hart told more than 1,000 demonstrators at an anti-MX missile rally that President Reagan has "bamboozled" Congress into appropriating money for the weapon.

Hart, one of six announced Democratic presidential candidates, urged those at Sunday's rally to ask their senators to block deployment of 100 MX missiles in Wyoming and Nebraska.

"If we can turn around 10 votes in the U.S. Senate, we can stop the MX missile, and we have time to do it," Hart said.

However, Reagan's MX plan has the support of Wyoming's two senators and single congressman as well as many people in the community. Nearby Warren Air Force Base has controlled nuclear-tipped missiles for more than 20 years, and many Cheyenne residents seem to take them for granted.

Hart was among a dozen speakers at the "Peacekeeper Sunday Rally" at a Cheyenne park less than a mile from the Air Force base, the command post for the MX missiles.

The rally, the first major protest against the missiles in Wyoming, was organized by a loosely structured group calling itself Western Solidarity, a clearinghouse for local anti-MX and nuclear freeze groups in eight Western states.

About 250 people marched from the state Capitol to Lion's Park to start the rally, many wearing shirts proclaiming "No MX — Not Here, Not Anywhere."

Hart, one of four Democratic presidential candidates to vote against MX financing last week, said the MX still faces key votes, and he urged people to concentrate on "soft" swing votes to kill the project. The congressional resolutions passed last week freed $625 million for MX development and flight testing.

Hart said Reagan "bamboozled a majority of both houses of Congress to spend money we don't have for a missile that threatens the security of the world."

Other speakers included retired Rear Admiral Eugene Carroll Jr., three ranchers who made a self-styled peace mission to the Soviet Union last December, Indian activists and trial lawyer Gerry Spence.

Enders' ouster engineered by four top Reagan aides

Hearst Feature Service

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. — A "cabal" of four Reagan intimates — CIA Chief William Casey, National Security Adviser William Clark, UN Ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick and USIA Director Charles Wick — asked President Reagan to fire top Latin America policymaker Thomas O. Enders.

This was disclosed today by sources close to Enders, who told the Hearst Newspapers that the move was engineered behind the back of Secretary of State George Shultz, who reportedly was infuriated, and has decided to personally take over control of Central America Policy as a result.

According to the State Department sources, there were three main factors responsible for Ender's ouster. The first was the charge that he sat on a "white paper" for three weeks that accused Cuba of stepping up its guerrilla activities in Nicaragua and El Salvador.

The "white paper," which Enders believed would not contribute to the search for a negotiated settlement because it basically contained nothing new, was written chiefly by Constantine Menges, a former CIA National Intelligence officer.

The second factor in Enders' firing and pending re-assignment as Ambassador to Spain was the appointment and confirmation last week of former Florida Sen. Richard Stone, a hardline Democrat, as Reagan's personal envoy to Central America. That, in effect, made Stone the chief policy executor, a fact underscored by Reagan's planned announcement this week that he is sending Stone on a 12-nation tour of Latin America.

The third factor was said to be CIA Chief Casey's own anger that Enders was indirectly responsible for the leaking of a top-secret CIA study that concluded the U.S.-supported rebels in Nicaragua had a good chance of toppling the Sandinista government there. Casey was said to be furious over the comments of one unidentified congressman to the New York Times Tuesday that "the CIA always lies to us." Casey reportedly believes that Enders may have said something along the same lines.

The Enders controversy apparently came to a head early last week when Wick and Casey discovered that Enders had refused to released the "background paper on Central America," charging Cuba with expanding "political-military activism."

Kirkpatrick, who has virtually become Reagan's key adviser on Central America, was said to have requested a meeting with National Security Chief Clark to formally ask that Enders be replaced.

At about 11 a.m. Thursday, Clark personally brought the recommendation to Reagan at a 15 minute meeting in the Oval office. Reagan was said to have signed off on it before giving Shultz the chance to register his own opinion.

The upshot of the firing, according to State Department spokesman John Hughes, is that Shultz himself will take over control and ultimate responsibility for Central America. But the plain fact is that the hardliners now are predominant.

A wider shakeup of diplomatic assignments in Central America also is contemplated.

From left, Senators Lloyd Doggett, Austin; Craig Washington, Houston, and Oscar Mauzy, Dallas, all Democrats, huddle during Saturday's session of the Texas Senate. Lawmakers met in unusual sessions on Saturday and Sunday to consider pending legislation as the deadline for the end of the session (midnight tonight) moved closer.

Lawmakers work to dissolve stalemate, avoid special session

AUSTIN (AP) — After 139 days of deals and compromises, the Texas Legislature churned toward its midnight deadline today with a final-day fight that could determine whether the Texas Employment Commission lives or dies.

Senators and representatives worked today to dissolve a stalemate that could force a summer special session to guarantee TEC's survival — one of several possible topics for a special session some lawmakers say is unavoidable.

Among the other possibilities is teacher pay. The House on Sunday finished the Legislature's work in the 1984-85 budget, approving the $30.8 billion spending plan proposed by a House-Senate conference committee. The budget includes only the teacher pay "step" raises of up to 9 percent required by state law.

Gov. Mark White wants a 24 percent pay raise for teachers, but was blocked by tax-shy House members.

The House on Sunday also approved the establishment of a state ethics commission that would help officials decide what's ethical and what isn't.

The TEC battle surfaced during the weekend as both houses locked into stalemate positions. Neither body wants to kill the TEC, but Sen. Lloyd Doggett, D-Austin, and several minority members of the House are insisting on the addition of a equal employment division at the agency.

Rep. Paul Ragsdale, D-Dallas, said the division would be similar to the federal Equal Employment Opportunities Commission, which rules on unfair job practice complaints.

Doggett won Senate approval in March for his bill setting up the new division, but the measure died on the House calendar late Friday night. He is trying to resurrect the idea by tacking it onto the TEC "sunset" bill. State agencies are required to undergo periodic "sunset" review.

Without approval of the bill, TEC goes out of business on Sept. 1.

Speaker Gib Lewis said Sunday he won't accept a motion to allow a conference committee to work on the Doggett proposal until the Senate appoints its conferees.

Doggett said he won't make the motion to appoint the conferees until the House passes the resolution Lewis said he would not allow.

"I don't want this to become a battle between the House and Senate and between personalities," Doggett said Sunday after the battle had erupted.

Lewis said the fight could be political poison for Doggett, who is considering a race for U.S. Sen. John Tower's seat. If the TEC dies, unemployment taxes on Texas employers could skyrocket, said Lewis.

House votes for ethics commission

AUSTIN (AP) — House members have voted to establish a state ethics commission to answer the questions "people are afraid to ask."

In a Sunday voice vote, the House added its approval to a House-Senate conference committee version of Rep. Jim Turner's "ethics" bill. In addition to setting up a nine-member commission, the measure bans the personal use of campaign money.

The bill now goes to Gov. Mark White, who would have five appointees on the commission. The lieutenant governor and speaker each would name two members.

Earlier versions of the bill gave the commission investigatory powers, but the measure approved by lawmakers leaves the commission with only the power to issue "advisory" opinions.

The opinions would be in response to queries from lawmakers. The identity of the questioners would not be released by the commission, but the opinion would be made public.

Turner, D-Crockett, said the confidentiality provision was needed "to promote utilization of the commission." He said there are "many questions people are afraid to ask."

Budget on way to White

AUSTIN (AP) — A $30.8 billion budget drawn by lawmakers who defied Gov. Mark White by refusing to raise taxes was on its way to the governor's desk today.

One day before the end of the session, the House on Sunday wrapped up the Legislature's work on the 1984-85 budget by approving, 95-51, the spending plan worked out by a House-Senate conference committee.

The proposed budget's first stop is Comptroller Bob Bullock's desk. The Texas Constitution's pay-as-you-go provision requires the comptroller to decide whether the state will have the money appropriated by the budget.

If Bullock clears it — the $30.8 billion is within his latest revenue forecast — it goes to White. The governor has fought for tax hikes to fund a 24 percent pay raise for teachers.

His plan screeched to a halt in the House, where Speaker Gib Lewis and House Ways and Means Chairman Stan Schlueter, D-Killeen, stuck to a no-new-taxes stand.

Man glad he ignored dean's advice

HOUSTON (AP) — A Baylor University dean may have been a little chagrined if the four boys caught with whiskey in their room had heeded his suggestion.

It was 1929 when the dean told Fred Hartman and his companions that Baylor "would be better off if we were some place else."

Instead they returned the next semester, and then again years later to be named Distinguished Baylor Alumni — one of the school's most prestigious awards.

Hartman, who until this month served as board chairman of Southern Newspapers, still jokes he was the only one of the four that did not amount to anything.

The others included former Gov. Price Daniel Sr., the late Air Force General James Roberts and Dr. Clarence Haden, the retired Episcopal bishop of the northern California diocese.

Besides being chairman of the newspaper chain that bought and sold as many as 75 small Southern papers over the past 30 years, Hartman also has been on the Lamar University board of regents, the Texas Historical Commission the Texas Library Commission and the San Jacinto Battleground Commission.

He still serves on the Texas Air Control Board and is chairman of the Harris County Appraisal District.

HARTMAN — KNOWN for his bow ties and his Will Rogers-style wit — celebrated his 75th birthday on May 20.

In an interview with the Houston Chronicle published Sunday, Hartman recalled he got involved in journalism during his junior year in high school. He said he needed an elective but had no aptitude for woodworking.

"So I took a printing course that was being offered. I got some ink under my fingernails and I've been involved up to my ears ever since," he said.

He worked his way through college as a journeyman printer.

While at Baylor, Hartman went from sports editor to editor of the student newspaper, the Lariat.

Hartman once wrote editorials demanding that female students be allowed to ride a train to the Baylor-Arkansas football game with the male students. At that time, Hartman said, female students were not allowed to be in an automobile with a male student after 6 p.m.

But the college president had his way and again reminded Hartman that he wasn't the one who "owned the place." It was a lesson that Harman interpreted to fit the realities of journalism.

"If the publisher, in this case the university president, doesn't want to print something, that's not censorship to me. But if some guys from the outside try to tell the owner not to print it — that is censorship," he said.

IN 1931, HARTMAN landed what he believed was "about the only job on the planet" — editor-business manager of a news publishing company which printed six newspapers along the Houston Ship Channel. They were the La Porte News, Pasadena Record, Harrisburg Pilot, Baytown News, Pelly Herald and Goose Creek Tribune.

"I was a jack-of-all trades. I'd sell the ads, write stories and make up the pages. We only had a total staff, including secretaries, of about seven," he recalled.

Four years later, he joined the Baytown Sun as sports editor.

"His love affair with sports started when he was a boy," said Hartman's son, Bill, who is president of Hartman Inc., which owns nine Texas newspapers. "He would walk the railroad tracks to the ball park in Marlin every day to watch John McGraw and the New York Giants in spring training."

The elder Hartman rarely misses a Houston Astros baseball game and until recently traveled to Florida to write about spring training for the Sun.

In 1944, Hartman was made editor of the Baytown newspaper.

Carmage Walls, a newspaper investor with a fortune estimated at $100 million, offered to buy the paper. The owners agreed but insisted Hartman remain as editor.

Hartman said he and Walls seemed to have "the same chemistry." When Walls needed someone to manage his Texas holdings, Hartman got the job.

HARTMAN SAID THE biggest story of his career was in the late 1930s when his newspapers prompted the idea of the east end of Harris County seceding and forming a separate county from the San Jacinto River to the Trinity River.

"We kept it going wild for nearly a month," he recalled. "But it never made it past the headlines because the Harris County auditor showed us a tremendous bonded indebtedness that we would also have to assume. That killed it."

Hartman's biggest coup probably came when he urged the late Albert Thomas to run for a seat in the U.S. House of Representatives against then-Houston mayor Oscar Holcombe. Thomas was an assistant U.S. attorney with no money and his only backing came from small papers like the Sun.

"He was the darling of Baytown and opened his campaign here, and in the end he won. It was the little guys against the big guys," Hartman said. Thomas served 28 years in the House.

Hartman said his battle days are over. This month he stepped down as head of Southern Newspapers and traded his interest in a dozen newspapers for controlling interest in four — the Brenham Banner-Press, Port Lavaca Wave, Rockport Pilot and Madisonville Meteor.

"I'm through with expansion, and I'm looking forward to horizontal retirement," he said.

Aliases hide dead woman's identity

DALLAS (AP) — She lies in an unmarked pauper's grave, successfully severed from her past by at least 13 names she used to cloud her still unknown true identity.

The gunman who shot Maranda Sonderson to death six weeks ago apparently also killed Raven Lashbrook, Andrew Jackson Spencer III, Shawnee Star Lashbrook, Shaun Madison, Cherrianne Simmons and seven other alias.

The 32-year-old woman, whose activities have been found in police records from Texas to California, managed to cut all ties with her past, said Bill Lene, chief field agent of the Dallas County medical examiner's office.

The 5-foot-3, 100-pound woman with jet-black hair and tattoos on her thigh was known to those with whom she came in contact only by the names she gave them.

Police in California knew her by as many as eight different identities, including Karen Miller, Karen Virginia Miller, Karen V. Miller, Shaun Brooks and Peaches, her street name.

On the streets of Dallas, her name was not so important as her reputation as a master at turning raw chemicals into methamphetamine, or speed, said police.

Detectives discovered the tangle of identities after the woman was killed April 9 during an apparent robbery in the fashionable suburb of University Park.

"We have a few cases each year that we never get an identification on," said Lene. "But this is very unusual because here, we have several names and no good identification."

Last fall, when she was arrested for unlawfully carrying a weapon in Ellis County south of Dallas, she was charged as A.J. Spencer. In the nearby suburb of Grand Prairie, police knew her as Cherry Simmons or Maranda Sonderson, the name she used when she was evicted from an apartment there in December.

University Park police thought they had identified the woman when they found papers signed by Raven Lashbrook at the scene of the shooting. But that name led only to more aliases.

"As it stands right now, all we know is that the person in the ground used a lot of different names," said University Park police Sgt. E.L. Holman. "We don't really know who she is."

The one person who may have aided police is James Perry Sewell, the man who rented the University Park duplex and who was shot in the same incident. But Sewell lies critically injured, in a coma at Presbyterian Hospital of Dallas.

Two men were arrested shortly after the shootings and are being held in Dallas County Jail awaiting trial on murder charges, police said.

As newspapers reported the slaying of Raven Lashbrook, police received numerous calls from people who claimed they knew the woman, Holman said. They gave officers the names they had known the woman by.

"A lot of people knew her on the street for her drug connections," Holman said. "She had a reputation as being a great cook of methamphetamines."

Meanwhile, police in San Francisco, Santa Rose and Alameda County, Calif., notified Unversity Park authorities that a woman with the same fingerprints had been known by eight other names there. She had been arrested on charges that included burglary, receiving stolen property, carrying a loaded firearm in a public place, possession of narcotics and using a forged name on a credit card.

THE BETTER HALF

"You can try to get out of jury duty, but I don't think they're going to buy it."

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Tuesday, May 31, 1983

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: American poet Walt Whitman and the great radio comedian Fred Allen were born on this date. Also sharing your birthday: box office favorite Clint Eastwood, Brooke Shields, Prince Rainier of Monaco, all-star quarterback Joe Namath, minister Norman Vincent Peale and actress Sharon Gless of TV's "Cagney & Lacey." Your quick thinking will let you snatch victory from the jaws of defeat on many occasions this year. Success is assured if you concentrate on your job assignments. Do not take on more tasks than you can comfortably handle. Romance must take a back seat to career now and then. Be sure partner understands.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Follow up on activities started last week. You should already be getting results. The boss will be impressed by your attention to detail.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Your relationship with a friend will grow stronger when you weather a crisis together. Refuse to be baited into losing your temper. Let patience be your watchword today.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Avoid getting into any kind of legal dispute today. This is not a good time to sign papers. Mate is responsive to your suggestions for making domestic changes.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Get a clearer picture of family spending patterns. Knowing where you stand will bring peace of mind. You begin to feel like your old self again!

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Be willing to accept another's suggestions for building savings. Try not to lose your temper when someone offers constructive criticism to loved one.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Travel is best postponed until influential person is in a less contrary mood. Concentrate on fulfilling an obligation. Show your appreciation for your friends in a practical way.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Ask for support from those who care deeply for you. Useful alliances can be made if you choose the right partners. Remain calm when dealing with a fiery customer.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Take the lead at work. Transactions can be completed in record time. Reread any mail before answering it. Business and pleasure will mix after hours.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Do not stifle your natural talents. Rapid advancement is possible if you persevere. Curb spending on luxury items. An afternoon phone call will bring good news.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Do not be surprised if you are asked to use skills that have not been needed in some time. Financial worries lessen. Influential people are more amenable to your plans.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Use this quiet day to get ahead with routine chores. Come to grips with paperwork. An older relative shows new interest in your ideas. Financial backing may be available.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A nerve-wracking chore comes to an end. You feel considerable pride at what you accomplished. Unusual circumstances affect a financial transaction or shopping trip.

Movie adapts to 'soap'

NEW YORK (AP) — Daytime soap opera slips into prime time as part of "The Cradle Will Fall," a made-for-TV movie that uses characters from "The Guiding Light" in subsidiary roles.

"We're not adapting the soap opera, we're adapting the Mary Higgins Clark novel," says Jerome Coopersmith, author of the television play based on the best-selling suspense thriller about a nefarious physician and the dirty doings at his fertility clinic.

The movie, starring Lauren Hutton, James Farentino and Ben Murphy, will be broadcast Tuesday night on CBS.

It was Procter & Gamble, owner and producer of "The Guiding Light," which bought the novel and decided to add characters from the popular soap opera.

Coopersmith is a veteran scriptwriter who started in television doing five-minute, dramatized history segments for "Ben Grauer's Americana Quiz." That led to a stint as co-writer on "The Gabby Hayes Show" in the early 1950s. He also wrote the pilot for "Armstrong Circle Theater," created "The Andros Targets," a short-lived series for CBS, and turned out numerous scripts for "Hawaii Five-O."

He's never written a soap opera, but it didn't matter.

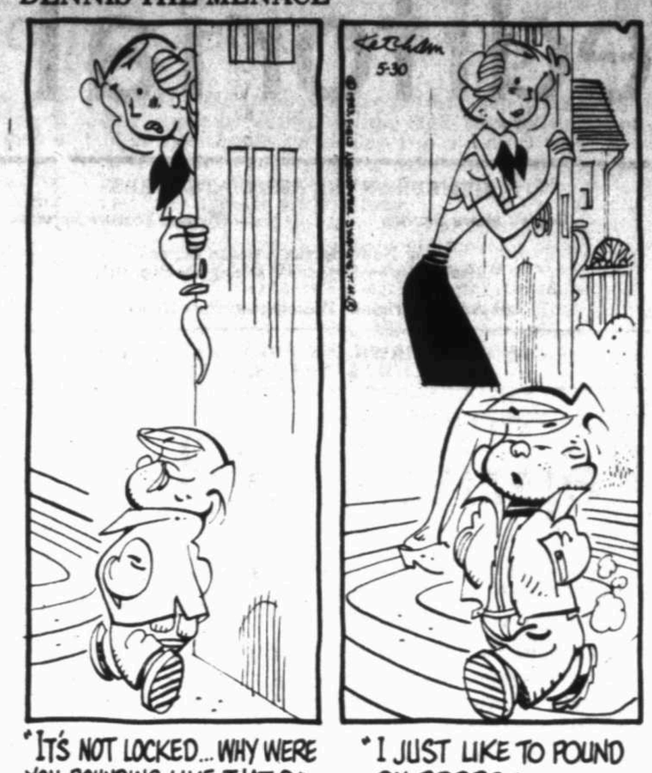

P&G provided Coopersmith with profiles and life histories of the characters, and, Coopersmith says, "I watched 'The Guiding Light' for about a week just to get the hang of the characters.

"It was my job to fit those characters into the adaptation as the opportunities presented themselves. There was one caveat — that they not be used in the major roles," he says. "We couldn't distort what they're all about by forcing them into a preconceived story."

The novel is not a whodunit but a whydunit, since the villain, Dr. Edgar Highly, played by Farentino, is known from the very beginning of the story.

It's his disposal of one of his victims — an act witnessed from a hospital window by a heavily sedated Miss Hutton — that sets the story spinning.

ANSWERS TO BRIDGE QUIZ

BY CHARLES GOREN AND OMAR SHARIF

Q.1—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AJ1054 ♡K85 ◇Q9 ♣Q86
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
Pass	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
2 NT	Pass	?

What action do you take?

A.—Since partner is a passed hand, his jump in no trump cannot show more than 11-12 points. You have a dead minimum opener, which is balanced to boot. Pass. There is no reason why you should want to advertise a five-card spade suit by bidding again.

Q.2—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AJ1054 ♡Q85 ◇9 ♣KQ86
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
Pass	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
2 NT	Pass	?

What action do you take?

A.—In terms of high cards, this hand is equivalent to the previous one. But here you have a second suit and a singleton, so this hand is considerably better. Unbalanced hands tend to play better at a suit contract, so probe for your best spot with a rebid of three clubs. Indeed, if partner rebids three spades, we wouldn't criticize a bold push to game.

Q.3—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AQ8763 ♡72 ◇985 ♣72
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♡	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
2 ♡	Pass	?

What action do you take?

A.—On this auction, your partner almost surely has a six-card heart suit. Therefore, there is no point to rebidding your spades — you are unlikely to have a better fit and you could have a worse one. Since you have a weak hand and tolerance for partner's suit, you should pass.

Q.4—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AK8752 ♡983 ◇6 ♣K106
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♡	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
2 ♡	Pass	?

What do you bid now?

A.—Since partner should have a six-card suit on this auction, you have located a fit. There is no need to rebid your spade suit — you cannot play in two suits. We would jump to four hearts. With the singleton diamond upgraded to 3 points, three hearts is a distinct underbid.

Q.5—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠8 ♡Q108 ◇AQJ852 ♣K96
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ◇	Pass	1 ♡	Pass

What do you bid now?

A.—We are inclined to prefer a raise to two hearts over a rebid of two diamonds. Even though you have a six-card suit, your most likely game is in hearts. Therefore, you should make the most encouraging rebid possible, which is a raise of partner's suit. Had your hearts been weaker, two diamonds would have been the correct rebid.

Q.6—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠8 ♡J108 ◇AQJ82 ♣AK94
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ◇	Pass	1 ♡	Pass

What do you bid now?

A.—In view of partner's response, your hand has improved considerably, so you should plan to bid out your shape. Start with a rebid of two clubs now, then raise hearts at your next turn. That normally shows a 5-4-3-1 pattern and a better-than-minimum opening bid, or a somewhat stronger but more balanced hand. With a minimum you would raise to two hearts at your second turn.

Reprisal raid

South African air-to-surface missiles struck a week ago in Mozambique, killing six people, including two children, and wounding 24 others. The South African government said the air attack was in retaliation for a terrorist car-bomb explosion Friday in Pretoria, the capital of South Africa, which killed 18 people and wounded about 190.

The explosions in Africa are proof that apartheid is not secure. The Pretoria blast proved that black terrorists of the African National Congress, working from sanctuaries in neighboring African countries, are escalating the struggle against the white-supremacist regime. The Mozambique air raid proved that South Africa respects neither human decency nor international law in waging its form of violent revenge on a neighboring black nation.

We do not condone terrorism, black or white. The stain of terrorism is blood-red. Its cry is death to men, women and children. It sacrifices innocents to strike at enemies. It condemns its perpetrators' cause to a vicious cycle of death and revenge. It endangers the civil order.

But when a nation retaliates against terrorist attack by indiscriminately bombing civilians in another nation, it reduces government to the level of terrorism. It plays charades with law. It brings into question the legitimacy of a government which orders such an attack. It threatens territorial sovereignty — the basis of world order.

This is what South African planes have done in Mozambique, streaking out of airfields and strafing suburbs of Maputo. The stated targets were bases of terrorists. But no current guerrilla bases were hit, according to a report by New York Times reporter Alan Cowell in Maputo. Airplanes do not have the accuracy to pinpoint terrorists. Bombing kills indiscriminately, not surgically.

South Africa has the military capability to destroy any black African nation. But South Africa is vulnerable within, to the cruel divisions of its own society with its institutionalized apartheid.

The African National Congress was founded in 1912 "to defend Africans against repression." It was reformist, not revolutionary. It adopted, in 1949, a program of non-violent civil disobedience. But after South African whites shot 300 blacks in the Sharpeville massacre of 1960, the African National Congress was banned. It went underground, where it began a campaign of sabotage. Its leader, Nelson Mandela, was arrested in 1964 and sentenced to life in prison, where he now languishes. Its current president, Oliver Tambo, took the organization into exile and has led the new escalation of attacks on civilian targets.

Mozambique and other black African nations must not harbor guerrillas who attack South Africa. They should be penalized, under international law, if they do so. The United States must condemn such terrorism and join in international efforts to impose sanctions.

But America must not stand silent when a nation flouts international law and attacks another nation.

The United States should condemn South Africa's Mozambique reprisal raid, itself an act of officially sponsored government terrorism. If such forays continue, the United States should freeze trade and investment until South Africa respects international law.

Another View:

Lingering censorship

The irony is so thick you could scarcely penetrate it with a piercing metaphor. The nation's former spy master, Adm. Stanfield Turner — the man who, as director of the CIA under Jimmy Carter, enforced an outrageous agency gag rule — is himself being gagged by those who now run the shop. The CIA's censorship committee, the innocuously named Publications Review Board, has taken exception to several parts of a book Turner is writing on the craft of intelligence.

What makes Turner's case so ironic is that it was under his tenure that the CIA won a major Supreme Court decision denying Frank Snepp, a former agency operative, the earnings from a book he wrote because he didn't clear it with his former employers. The prepublication review rule that snared Snepp has since been expanded by the Reagan administration to effectively gag any official with access to classified material — not just CIA personnel — from ever publishing anything that bears even indirectly on his or her government service, without first submitting it to the censors. More than that, the administration wants to make it a crime, not merely a civil offense, to publish uncensored material.

Turner has complained that the deletions made by the agency have no basis, since the material is not classified and poses no threat to anyone. An aide to the admiral put it more bluntly: The cuts are nit-picking and quibbling, he says. Right or wrong, that complaint touches on a basic flaw in the governmental policy. It gives arbitrary power to the censors who, for whatever reason, can gut a book not necessarily because it reveals strategic secrets but because it may cast some political or administration figure in an unfavorable light. Or, the censors simply may not like the author.

Turner insists the matter will be resolved by negotiation, but hasn't ruled out litigation. In fact, to compound the irony, the attorney he has retained, Anthony Lapham, was the CIA's chief counsel when it went to court against Frank Snepp. Suing could, of course, cost the admiral a lot, something Snepp would know about. Asked for his reaction to Turner's plight, Snepp couldn't help seeing "poetic justice in the fact that the architect of the CIA's censorship should now be feeling the heat."

Beyond that, though, there's also the lingering injustice of a regulation — so far upheld in rubber-stamp fashion by federal courts — that has the potential to censor far more than classified information and to intimidate countless persons who, hesitating to tangle with the intelligence elite, will keep quiet when speaking out could be in the public interest.

CHARLEY REESE

Deficits created by politicians

After all of the posturing, bellowing, bluffing and acting in Washington recently over the subject of the federal budget, we normal people should take a few deep breaths and center ourselves on reality.

Charley Reese

A deficit, which they all lament, is nothing magic. The federal budget deficit simply means they are spending more than they are taking in. The Congress, which has the sole power to appropriate funds could produce a zero deficit simply by reducing expenditures until they matched revenues. The president could submit a balanced budget simply by planning to spend no more than what is available to spend from current taxes.

So what does that tell us? It tells us that neither the Congress nor the White House want a balanced budget for the coming fiscal year. It's not that they can't balance the budget; they choose not to balance the budget.

And what does that tell us? Well, it tells us that if they all took their clothes off, we'd see a big crowd of naked people with large yellow stripes down their backs cavorting about on the banks of the Potomac River.

It tells us that we have voted for some weak, irresponsible people who would rather endanger the national economy than endanger their own chances of being re-elected in 1984.

Don't believe that baloney about defense causing the problem either. Defense spending has declined from 1960 to 1980 until today it's only about 26 cents of each federal dollar. If the Congress voted zero defense appropriations, the budget would still have a deficit. The culprit is social spending, not defense, for social spending consumes the bulk of the federal dollar.

That, of course, is why both the Congress and the political advisors in the White House are afraid to balance the budget. They know they can chisel our armed forces on readiness and training and even stretch out weapons procurement without any immediate political fallout. But they know as soon as they reduce a single subsidy, eliminate a single grant program, or abolish a cost of living increase, the screams and cries will be heard on the moon and most especially in the voting booth a year from now.

They have learned what the old Romans learned: if you get the mob used to free bread and circuses, they will riot if you try to take them away.

Unfortunately, unless we, the responsible people who are paying instead of getting, force our politicians to act like responsible people, the whole economy will come crashing down on all of us.

Already, our labor is taxed by over $100 billion a year just to pay interest on the public debt which is now over $1 trillion and is simply the accumulation of the annual deficits the Congress has been piling up for the last 22 years. This interest is a non-productive expenditure, going into the pockets of mostly big banks, both foreign an domestic.

Candidate Ronald Reagan recognized the danger of deficit spending, but President Reagan doesn't have any more guts than President Jimmy Carter when it comes to eliminating the practice. As for the Congress, there are not enough guts in the whole bunch for a cannibal to make a single sausage link.

What the politicians don't want to do is set priorities and tell people that there are some things we can't afford until we have balanced the budget and re-built our defenses which they allowed to deteriorate.

There is no hope for our economic future unless the dwindling supply of taxpayers apply counter-pressure against the increasing supply of people who are recipients of federal dollars. So you should send your Congressman a message: "Do your duty — provide for my defense and then balance the budget or start packing your bags."

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Reagan aides push Chinese deal

WASHINGTON — Two high officials of Ronald Reagan's rigidly anti-communist administration have been enthusiastically promoting the sale to Red China of a computer system they know will be used for nuclear missile development.

Jack Anderson

The two are Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige and George Keyworth, the president's science adviser. They were recently given the red carpet treatment by Chinese officials on trips to Peking.

The battle over exporting a Hyshare 700 computer system to the People's Republic of China has been kept from the public by the usual methods: stamping the relevant documents "secret." But my associate Dale Van Atta has obtained three crucial memorandums from Baldrige and Keyworth that tell the astonishing story.

A Baldrige memo dated last January 7, to National Security Adviser William Clark, gave the background of the "PRC Hybrid Computer Case."

The Hyshare 700's maker, Electronic Associates Inc. (EAI), was given approval in 1981 to sell the hybrid computer system to the Harbin Polytechnical University "for use in scientific research and education." But as a condition for approval, several items of hardware and one software program were deleted from the original deal.

The Chinese refused to buy the system without the deleted items. EAI appealed for reinstatement of them, complaining that they'd lose an $820,000 sale and be subject to a $580,000 penalty to boot.

So far it sounds innocent enough. But then Baldrige's memo listed the "basic facts on the licensing issue (which) are not in dispute." There were nine of these "basic facts," and the last three are humdingers:

— "The Harbin Polytechnical Institute... is subordinate to 7th Machine Building Industry, which presently contributes to the development and manufacture of strategic missiles."

— Harbin Polytech "is also located near the Military Engineering Institute, which is heavily engaged in military research."

— The clincher: "Intelligence sources expect the hybrid computer to be used for missile development."

But the commerce secretary still thinks it would be a dandy idea to sell the Chinese the computer.

Keyworth, in another secret memo, pooh-poohed the value of the Hyshare 700 in Peking's nuclear missile program. It would have "little impact on their military capability," he wrote. "Facilitating their missile trajectory calculations hardly compromises our own strategic interests. Their ballistic missiles represent a 'force de frappe' to deter the Soviet Union, albeit to a marginal degree."

This comforting idea — that Chinese missiles are a threat only to the Soviet Union — is belied by facts I reported as long as three years ago. China had developed an intercontinental ballistic missile with a 7,800-mile range — enough to clobber much of the U.S. mainland — and had tested it.

Pentagon planners oppose the sale of the Hyshare 700 to Peking. They note that all the United States and China have as a mutual interest is a common enemy — and the possibility of a Soviet-Chinese rapprochement cannot be ruled out.

Pentagon officials argued that the sale of the complete computer system "would make a significant contribution to the design of missile delivery systems for nuclear weapons."

Even Baldrige, in one secret memo, acknowledged that similar computers are currently used by major defense contractors, by the Air Force for "electronic warfare simulations," and even by the White Sands Missile Range, which has four such computer systems for use in designing our strategic nuclear missiles.

But the commerce secretary played down these facts in arguing for approval of selling the Chinese whatever they want... even, as Lenin predicted, the rope with which they can hang us.

THE EMPIRE COMES BACK: High in the Peruvian Andes, a group of Maoist fanatics is waging a little-understood guerrilla war against the moderate regime of President Fernando Belaunde Terry.

They call themselves "Sendero Luminoso" (Shining Path), and what they claim to want is a return to the "purity" of the Incan Empire — presumably with themselves in the role of the Inca ruling class.

After lying low during the 12 years of military dictatorship, the Senderistas came out of hiding when Belaunde was elected in 1980. Their tactics are terror; their strategy is apparently to show Belaunde as too weak to control the country, thus leading his restless generals to stage another military coup.

This would give the Senderistas their hoped-for role of freedom fighters against a dictatorship, and might even bring help from other nations. Meanwhile, Belaunde has yielded to his generals' pressure and unleashed the "Sinchis" — a ruthless counter-insurgency unit created by the CIA in the 1960s.

STILL PAYING: The bills for last year's congressional elections are still coming in — to the taxpayers. A supplemental appropriations bill includes $37.9 million to pay the Postal Service for last year's extra-heavy congressional mailings.

One expensive service provided to the lawmakers is notifying them of their constituents' address changes. The Postal Service charges the taxpayers 25 cents a pop — for a total of $1.5 million last year.

INSIDE REPORT:

Lewis says not yet to White House

WASHINGTON — The White House has sent an S.O.S. to former secretary of transportation Drew Lewis to leave beleaguered Warner Communications Corp. and run President Reagan's re-election campaign, but Lewis is saying no.

Rowland Evans

Lewis would like to get back in the political swim as Reagan's campaign manager. However, he told the White House there is no way he could come on board next February as requested. If he is to be campaign manager, it will have to be much later in the year.

Robert Novak

The millionaire Pennsylvania management consultant privately tells friends that Warner Communications is in worse shape than he originally imagined. Consequently, he says, he cannot leave the Manhattan-based company until things begin to turn around.

BEGIN: DEPRESSED WARRIOR

Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin, architect of Israel's invasion of Lebanon and perhaps the strongest leader Israel has ever had, is taking an unaccustomed back seat these days in the diplomatic struggles to get Syrian and Israeli forces out of Lebanon, presaging a power struggle for succession.

When he asked a Cabinet minister to explain Israel's point of view on one controversial matter to visiting Secretary of State George Shultz, Begin listened to the explanation and then said clearly: "Oh, is that our new position?"

One reason for the feisty prime minister's reticence: the loss of his beloved wife. Begin intimates no longer conceal their worry that the death of his wife has aggravated his poor health and put him in a depression, raising questions about a hot battle for the party leadership between Defense Minister Moshe Arens and Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir.

TEDDY TELEPHONING

Recent speculation that Sen. Edward M. Kennedy may yet enter the race for the 1984 presidential nomination has been partly caused by his own new habit of keeping in close touch with key politicians across the country.

Many of these Democrats, with no previous close ties to the senator, have been surprised during the last few weeks to be told: "Ted Kennedy is calling." A brief stop in any state means Kennedy will run down his list of important politicians for that state and start telephoning.

A footnote: Kennedy has privately advised politicians and journalists to read a recent Time magazine article critical of Walter F. Mondale. That suggests he has not forgiven Jimmy Carter's vice president for the attacks on him in the 1980 presidential primaries.

TOUGH MADAME SECRETARY

White House insiders are betting that the newest member of the Cabinet — Margaret Heckler, secretary of health and human services (HHS) — soon will hang a scalp on her belt by running her conservative deputy secretary, John Svahn, off her reservation.

Heckler, a Massachusetts liberal defeated for re-election to Congress in 1982, has been battling all year with Svahn. Their feud has taken on a personal cast, but it also involves ideological differences.

The president might be expected to side ideologically with Svahn, who worked for him in the California Social Welfare department. But aides are certain he will back Heckler, who charms Reagan at Cabinet meetings with a smile and a joke.

HUMPHREY'S COP-OUT

Hard-line, pro-defense Republican Sen. Gordon Humphrey's vote against the MX missile stunned his defense-oriented colleagues May 25, causing one to say privately that Humphrey has decided that even in crusty, hard-bitten New Hampshire, the MX may turn out to be a political loser.

Humphrey is up for re-election next year. During his first four years in the Senate he has been a rock of support for President Reagan's arms buildup. Three years ago it was Humphrey who fought for a move to replace 100 aging Minuteman II missiles with modernized Minuteman IIIs.

The MX vote was on exactly the same principle; replace aging Minutemen with new MXs. Yet Humphrey said he could not vote to put the MX in Minuteman holes because it would be vulnerable to attack.

Gloomy predictions 'dead wrong'

DETROIT (AP) — Gloomy predictions that by the year 2000 the world will be hopelessly polluted, crowded and lacking critical resources are "dead wrong," a team of more than a dozen scientists said Sunday.

In a voluminous report on global trends in population, the environment and the energy supply, the scientists concluded that "if present trends continue, the world in 2000 will be less crowded, less polluted, more stable ecologically, and less vulnerable to resource-supply disruption than the world we live in now."

"We're not saying things are good, we're saying they're getting better," said Julian Simon of the University of Illinois, who along with Herman Kahn of the Hudson Institute in New York directed the team that prepared the report.

The report, released at the annual meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, was prepared in response to a study commissioned by President Carter, the Global 2000 report which was released in 1980. That study "received extraordinarily wide circulation, and it has influenced crucial governmental policies," Simon said. "But it is dead wrong."

"Sometimes temporary problems arise," Simon said, but "the solutions usually leave us better off than if the problems had never arisen."

The report takes a strong stand against government efforts to protect the environment or regulate natural resources.

The government should take no action to control the production or distribution of oil, Simon and Kahn said in a summary of the report. The government should not "take steps to make the public more 'aware' of issues concerning resources, environment and population." The scientists said there should be no funding for new governmental agencies to support research.

Global 2000, prepared under the direction of the Council on Environmental Quality and the State Department, painted a bleak picture of life in the next two decades. It said the world in 2000 will be more polluted, more crowded, less stable and more vulnerable to disruptions in the supply of natural resources than the world of today.

The Global 2000 report concluded: "Barring any revolutionary advances in technology, life for most people on earth will be more precarious in 2000 than it is now — unless the nations of the world act decisively to alter current trends."

The new report, called Global 2000 Revised, found a bright future everywhere it looked. Among its conclusions:

— Life expectancy has been rising throughout the world, a sign of scientific and economic success. The birth rate in less-developed countries has been falling.

— Though there are still many hungry people, the food supply has been improving.

— Nuclear power is probably cheaper than coal or oil, and will cause the loss of many fewer lives than coal or oil.

— Threats of air and water pollution have been "vastly overblown."

— There will be no serious shortage of land for agriculture, there is no cause for worry about the disappearance of world forests, and there is no evidence for the imminent extinction of many species of plants and animals.

— The climate shows no signs of unusual or threatening changes.

"Our conclusions are reassuring, though not grounds for complacency," Simon and Kahn wrote in their summary of the report. "Global problems due to physical conditions...are always possible, but are likely to be less pressing in the future than in the past."

Scientists often give misleading advice

DETROIT (AP) — Scientists consulted by government policy-makers often give misleading advice based on inadequate analysis or the omission of important information, a researcher says.

"Examples make clear that the problem may not be only conflict of interest, but also that reports and submissions may serve as vehicles to vent strong beliefs or seek to reform," said Theodor Sterling, professor of computer science at Simon Fraser University in Burnaby, British Columbia, Canada.

Sterling suggested that scientists who don't supply thorough, objective advice to the government should be barred from serving on government advisory committees.

Governments depend increasingly on the testimony of scientist-experts, but their dependence sometimes is based on misconceptions, Sterling said.

Governments assume scientists are better able than others to determine the facts, he said. Also, governments believe that scientists behave in an unbiased manner and that scientific disagreements are based only on honest differences of opinion about how to interpret facts, Sterling said.

On the contrary, Sterling said, many policy-makers grasp the facts as well as scientists and enough instances of science fraud have been uncovered to show that scientists are capable of being as irresponsible and self-seeking as anyone else. Certain disagreements among scientists are unavoidable, Sterling said, but many disagreements arise when scientist-experts omit evidence that conflicts with their conclusions.

Speaking Friday at the annual meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, Sterling presented examples of misleading scientific reports to bolster his contention that such misrepresentation is common.

GOP denies attempt to jam lines of Democratic fundraiser

BURBANK, Calif. (AP) — Republican leaders denied any organized attempt to jam phone lines at a nationally televised Democratic Party fundraiser, saying heckling calls were a spontaneous outpouring of support for President Reagan's policies.

"It is easy to accuse others of wrongdoing when seeking a scapegoat for your own failures," Frank J. Fahrenkopf Jr., chairman of the Republican National Committee, said Sunday.

Democratic party leaders estimated between $16 and $20 million in pledges were phoned in during the 17-hour NBC network telecast, but party spokesman Bob Neuman charged that "a concerted organized jamming campaign" blocked many callers.

"It is clear that it has cost us," Neuman said.

The Democratic National Committee is considering suing the Republicans, alleging violation of civil rights or interruption of business relationships, committee chairman Charles Manatt said.

At times during the early hours of the telethon Saturday night, up to 10 hostile calls came in for every bona fide pledge, Neuman said.

About 250,000 pledges were received, averaging $85 each, said party spokesman Terry Michael. He cautioned that those estimates were subject to refinement and a sorting out of bogus calls.

"Despite the well-organized Republican conspiracy to try and jam the phone lines, it appears we'll double our projections (in contributions)," Manatt said Sunday.

He charged that "jammer" calls were instigated by a Republican cablegram to party faithful urging them to express support for Reagan.

"It's quite obvious from the format they're using," Manatt said Sunday. "They take our telephone operators' time all the way through, then at the end they say, 'No I'm not going to make a pledge. I support President Reagan.'"

In a statement released in Washington, Fahrenkopf countered that the GOP "and its actions will stand up to an examination of its credibility."

"All calls to the telethon were apparently the spontaneous (response) of American citizens to the nature and quality of the material broadcast," he said. "There were no dirty tricks or violations of the letter or spirit of the law...Chairman Manatt's charges are serious, are not taken lightly by the Republican Party and are absolutely denied."

Manatt called the telethon the "largest political fund-raiser in the history of America," which cost almost $6 million to stage.

Neuman said many hostile callers appeared to be part of an organized anti-abortion campaign, accusing operators of being "baby killers," although the program made no references to abortion.

The variety show-style telethon called "Celebrate America" was broadcast live from NBC's Burbank studios to the East Coast and tape-delayed during the same hours on the West Coat. It ended at 3 p.m. EDT Sunday.

'Gloom and doom' politician focuses on illegal immigration

Copley News Service

Richard Lamm calls himself a "gloom and doom" politician who finds the world beset by a multitude of problems and is unable to "see my way out of the tunnel."

At the top of his list for several years has been the ever-rising tide of illegal immigration.

Lamm, 47, a three-term governor of Colorado, remains an unflagging supporter of the immigration reform bill now in Congress despite some recent amendments he opposes.

"It's a very controversial subject — but as every house needs a door, every nation needs a border, and we don't have one," he said.

Lamm questioned an amendment by the House Judiciary Committee to the amnesty section of the so-called Simpson-Mazzoli bill.

"It goes too far," Lamm said in an interview, adding that he likes the Senate version better.

Owner charged in deaths

BENTON, Tenn. (AP) — As relatives buried workers killed in an explosion at an illegal fireworks factory, authorities charged the owner with the manslaughter deaths of 11 people, including his mother and brother.

Dan Lee Webb, 30, operator of an isolated worm farm that housed the secret factory, walked into the Polk County Jail early Sunday morning and surrendered, Polk County Sheriff Frank Payne said.

U.S. Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms agents quizzed Webb more than four hours Sunday morning, although no federal charges had been filed Sunday night.

He was held in lieu of bond totaling $300,000 on the manslaughter charges and on a charge of possession and manufacture of illegal explosives.

The explosion, which occurred around 9:15 a.m. Friday, mushroomed into a cloud more than 600 feet high and leveled a two-story metal barn next to Webb's house, witnesses said. Webb was not at home at the time.

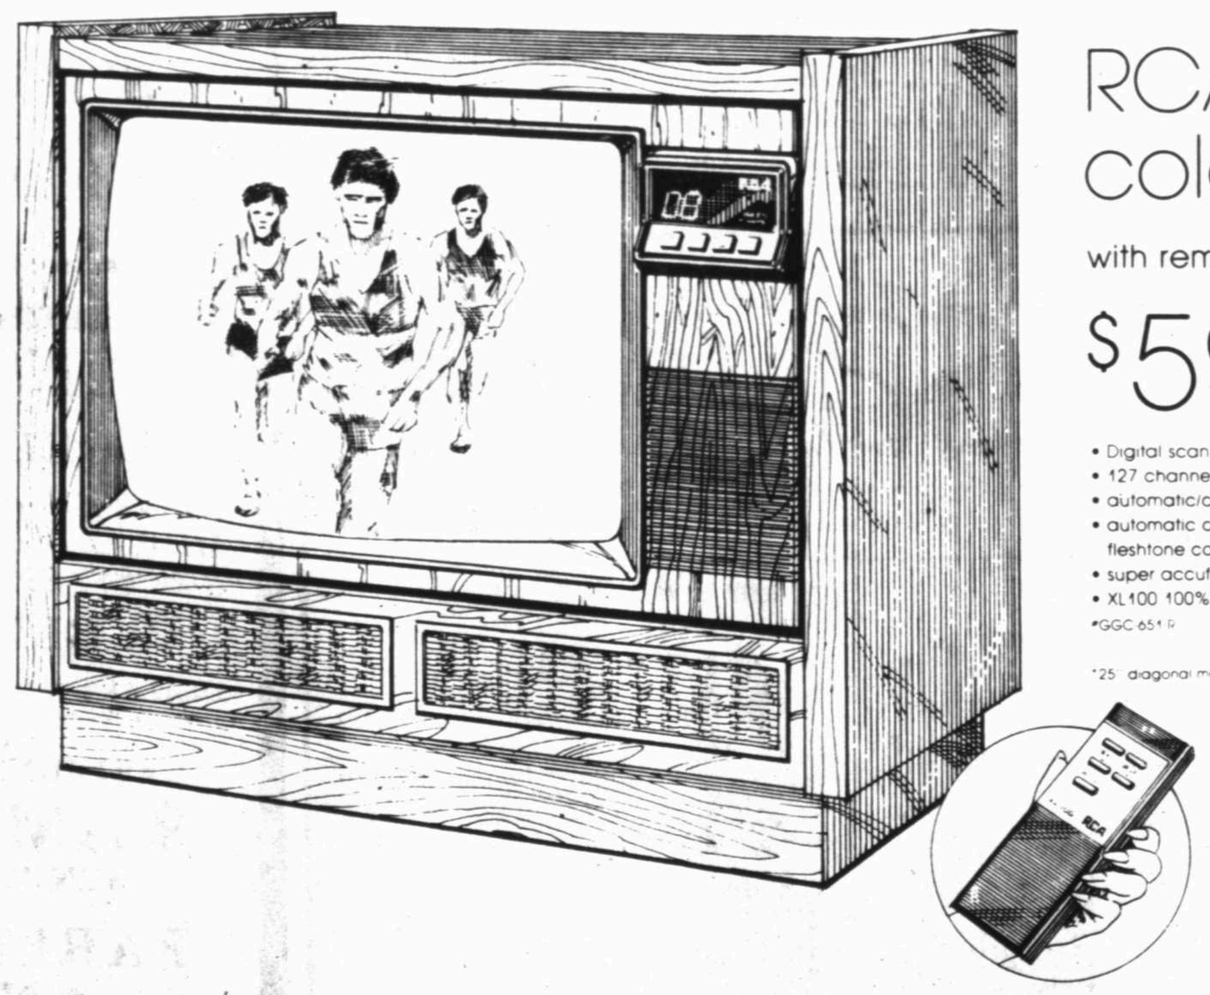

His lawyer, James G. Nave, said Webb has not said where he was during the explosion or before surrendering. "He has decided not to make any statement to the media at this time," Nave said.

The sheriff said Webb "walked into the jail dressed in street clothes and carrying a suitcase" shortly after midnight.

Asked whether his client would make bond, Nave said, "It remains to be seen. That's a pretty large bond." A Thursday hearing has been set for Sessions Court.

Webb's mother, Beatrice Webb, 51, is to be buried Tuesday in nearby Cleveland, Tenn. Services for his brother, David Nelce Webb, were scheduled today in Cleveland.

A local militiaman sits with his dog and AK-47 rifle on a street in the agricultural town of Jalapa, Nicaragua, about 100 miles north of Managua, Thursday. The Nicaraguan government says heaving fighting between anti-Sandinista rebels and government forces has taken place in this area in recent days.

Siege of Nicaraguan town finally stops

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post New Service

JALAPA, Nicaragua — Siege-weary residents clustered at the doors of their houses to watch the first convoy of traffic, civilian or military, to make it in or out of this small town since an ambush by U.S.-backed anti-Sandinista rebels cut the roads almost three days before.

The latest siege appeared to be over by last Wednesday, but few of the people in this town of 11,000 wedged against the Honduran border saw it as other than a brief reprieve.

This was the third time in a month that the only road here has been cut for days at a time; the third time since December that rebels of the Nicaraguan Democratic Force under the command of Pedro Pablo Ortiz Centeno, a former Nicaraguan National Guard sergeant known as "Suicide," have launched a major push in the area.

IN THE CAPITAL the end of the fighting here and opening of the road was presented as a great victory. "Beasts on their way back to Honduras" read the banner headline on one of Friday's Sandinista dailies.

While most of the rest of Nicaragua talks about war but lives in peace, this province of Nueva Segovia is deep in the middle of fighting that is part feud, part civil war and partly what the Sandinistas claim it is, an outside aggression. By official count, the Sandinistas said they had lost 23 men in the latest fighting here and killed 95 "counterrevolutionaries," as the rebels are called. The Sandinistas estimated that the "contra" force that has made Jalapa its strategic target numbers 12,000 troops.

Suicide and some of his commanders leading those troops were straightforward about their objectives for this area when they were interviewed in March just before the current push.

IN THE CENTER of a broad valley, Jalapa has three of the few air strips in this rugged region dominated by mountains and timberland. Its road puts it a 20 minute drive from the Honduran border. If Jalapa could be taken and held for even a matter of days the arms that now have to be carried in by the rebels on mules or on their backs could be brought in by air and truck in large quantities.

If Jalapa could be held longer, Suicide's people said, then Nueva Segovia might be declared liberated territory and international support openly solicited from Honduras, the United States and other countries.

Last week's fighting reached within two miles of Jalapa, at a settlement known as El Carbon easily visible east of here. In one action last Sunday, the rebels ambushed a military convoy that included a group of U.S. journalists. But the rebels never attacked the town itself. Rather, the action seemed a probe, another strike to wear down resistance in the region.

WITH THE FIGHTING over for the moment and the road open, the people here rushed to pick up what could be salvaged of normal life for however short a time.

Men and women in broad straw hats went back to work in the rich tobacco fields that surround the town. Children trudged off to school. Even the ban on beer sales was lifted.

Residents were exhausted from several nights of dusk-to-dawn "revolutionary vigilence," which consisted of sitting all night in their doorways with whistles to blow if strangers passed.

Arafat gets protection from dissident officers

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post New Service

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Palestine Liberation Organization Chairman Yasser Arafat posted armed guards around his offices in Damascus Sunday to protect himself and his supporters from dissident officers serving in the Fatah guerrilla movement in eastern Lebanon.

The enhanced security came a day after dissidents opposed to Arafat's moderate policies responded to his cutoff of aid and supplies to them by seizing food, ammunition and equipment-supply depots on the outskirts of Damascus.

According to reports reaching here, the level of tension in the conflict has risen, despite almost daily visits by Arafat to PLO positions in eastern Lebanon's Bekaa Valley and to northern Lebanon to quell the uprising.

"The revolt is intensifying," a close aide to Arafat told a reporter for Reuter in Damascus Sunday.

Arafat aides said rebels shot their way into the depots, wounding three people, but a spokesman for the dissidents said the takeover was peaceful.

The uprising, which began more than three weeks ago in Fatah, the largest faction in the PLO and Arafat's main base of support, has presented Arafat with a serious challenge to his leadership.

It has added yet another kink in the tangled and volatile situation here. In response to the challenge for leadership in the PLO, Arafat has spoken about the inevitability of war, an assertion that seems aimed at rallying his fighters but also has the effect of heightening tensions.

The indications are that Syria, despite its own warnings of war, has stringently kept in check PLO fighters behind Syrian lines, although they have bragged about breaking through the lines to launch hit-and-run attacks against Israel.

One such attack, in which an Israeli soldier was killed, occurred Friday, but the indications were that the Israelis were refraining from retaliatory action. That was taken as a good sign among optimistic analysts watching the center stage of the conflict, along the front lines of Israel and Syria in the Bekaa.

Israel continued to send tanks and reinforcements into Lebanon Sunday. Local radio reported that there was antiaircraft fire at Israeli planes, which reportedly were increasing their reconnaissance flights over Syrian-held positions. The reports said the firing came from PLO positions around Tripoli. Israeli spokesmen did not not comment on the reports.

Syria's uncharacteristic announcement Saturday that it had ended spring maneuvers, which had raised alarms, was confirmed Sunday by a senior Israeli military source, according to an Israeli radio boardcast.

India lags in applying science to industry

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post New Service

NEW DELHI, India — For a poor and developing country, India has some remarkable scientific achievements.

It is one of only seven countries in the world that has built and launched a space satellite, and one of only six known to have exploded a nuclear device.

Its huge pool of scientific manpower, surpassed in numbers only by those of the United States and the Soviet Union, is engaged in a broad spectrum of projects ranging from lasers to solar energy.

NONETHELESS, INDIA'S scientific achievements are isolated successes. They have not resulted in any broad-based technical excellence or provided any real impetus to industrial development.

Thus, the vision that India's huge educational system, its industrial base and its labor-intensive, low-wage economy could create a sort of intermediate technology for the rest of the Third World is still a distant dream.

The inability to harness these resources effectively is one of India's greatest failures. Indian industry, unable to develop its own technology or absorb the technology it buys from other countries, turns out an assortment of inferior, outdated, largely imitative products that manage to survive only because of tariffs that make imported competition prohibitively expensive.

Consequently, India's importance as an industrial power, as a technical innovator and as an exporter have all declined steadily.

IN 1960, INDIA was the world's No. 12 industrial power; two decades later, it had slipped to No. 22. In the early 1950s, it accounted for 1 percent of all world trade; today, its share is about half of that. In 1955, India ranked as the world's No. 19 exporter; today, it is No. 46.

Also, the notion of India as a technological beacon for the Third World has faded considerably. Indian government agencies and private Indian companies have won contracts to build airports and steel mills and to install communications systems abroad, but the high-technology aspects of these projects are usually subcontracted.

Invariably, attempts to upgrade Indian technology touch off an immediate search for assistance from abroad rather than from India's own research and development establishments. Telephones and automobiles are two examples.

India's telephone system has been virtually neglected since the nation became independent from Britain in 1947. According to a recent survey in Calcutta, it now takes 33 minutes, on the average, to put through a local call. Long-distance dialing is little more than an illusion.

NOT LONG AGO, the government decided to modernize the system by introducing digital switching equipment. However, instead of turning to its own Telecommunications Research Center, which had spent more than a decade developing an electronic exchange, it signed a $200 million contract with a French company. The domestic capability was considered inferior.

India acquired the knowledge to produce automobiles in the mid-1950s, about the same time as Japan, but it has not advanced much beyond that point. Indians who buy a new Indian car today buy the identical model their parents bought a generation ago.

Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's son Sanjay toyed for years with the idea of developing a small car, but he was killed in 1980, and when she finally gave her approval to the project two years ago, she turned to Japan for help.

When the car, to be known as the Maruti, rolls off the assembly line sometime early next year, it will be a product of Suzuki know-how.

THE COUNCIL FOR Monitoring the Indian Economy, in Bombay, has issued a report that says, "Wherever (India's entrepreneurs) have to launch upon even a slightly complicated project, their innate tendency is to rush abroad for technical collaboration."

As a result of this policy, India's level of technical competence has continued to slip behind that of the industrialized world.

"The image of India is one of growing self-reliance, but the total opposite is true," M.B. Lal, the respected development correspondent of the Statesman, has said. "We don't have the basic wherewithal to produce much of anything completely on our own."

In the few high-technology areas where India has been forced to rely on its own resources, the results have been disappointing. For example, the nuclear energy program has virtually foundered since the withdrawal of Canadian technicians after the atomic explosion in 1974.

There are two 120-megawatt reactors "in service," but neither is dependable. One broke down repeatedly in its first nine years of service, then collapsed in March of last year and is still being repaired.

THE OTHER, COMPLETED eight years behind schedule in 1981, has been shut down more than 200 times, contributing to a chronic power crisis in the desert state of Rajasthan.

Two reactors being built at Madras are 13 years behind schedule. Contributing to the delay in bringing them on line was an ammonia leak at a heavy water plant in Baroda that triggered a series of explosions and a fire in 1977 — one of many setbacks that have reduced production capacity to a fraction of the needed 300 tons a year.

Ambitious plans for 8 000 megawatts of installed nuclear power by the early 1980s have produced barely one-tenth of that, all of it unreliable.

Radiation levels at the American-built Tarapur plant north of Bombay are so high that the chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, Homi Sethna, admitted recently that in order to lower trained technicians' radiation exposure, some repairs were being carried out by illiterate villagers with a minimum of instruction.

SOME PEOPLE ARGUE that India's inability to convert scientific knowledge into usable technology is rooted in a culture that has always extolled theory and denigrated action, never putting much value on performance or productivity.

Chinese leaders agree on new chief of state

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post New Service

PEKING — Chinese leaders are believed to have agreed on the selection of a chief of state and several other key officials in an apparent reaffirmation of the moderate economic and political policies of the current regime, according to diplomatic sources.

Li Xiannian, 78, a former army commander and longtime economic planner, is expected to be named China's first chief of state in 17 years, according to these sources. Li is to be designated president by China's Sixth National People's Congress, which convenes June 6.

Li's appointment to the mainly ceremonial but potentially influential position depends upon the concurrence of the six-member Politburo of the Communist Party, of which Li is a member. The change is viewed by reliable sources as "99 percent certain."

China's last chief of state was Liu Shao-chi, whom the late Communist Party chairman Mao Tse-tung branded "China's leading capitalist roader" during the Cultural Revolution. Liu died in prison in 1969.

Reinstating the position, and installing a senior statesman of Li's stature, would represent another step toward a return to normality under the guidance of Deng Xiaoping, China's key leader, in the view of analysts. Li's position is expected to be largely ceremonial — although, under Liu, the prestige of the presidency was great enough for Mao to view Liu as a threat.

Diplomatic sources said that during his recent trip to Yugoslavia, Communist Party Secretary Hu Yaobang reportedly told top Yugoslav officials of Li's ascendancy. Hu and Premier Zhao Ziyang, both proteges of Deng who gained their posts in 1980, are believed to be China's two most important leaders in day-to-day affairs, and that is not expected to change.

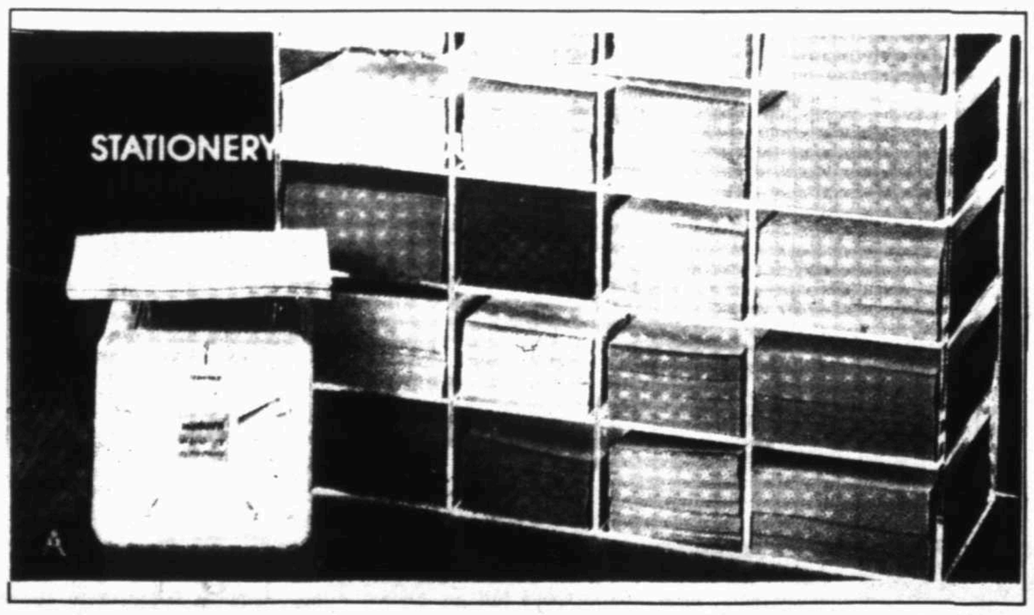

Deng was purged during the Cultural Revolution — he was linked to the disgraced Liu — but returned to power in 1977. He gradually rehabilitated Liu's reputation, and, more important, vastly increased China's range of foreign relations and liberalized its economic policies.

Caps weather Cubs' storm

BY TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Shreveport's Captains weathered a one-out, bases loaded threat in the ninth to beat the Midland Cubs, 13-11, in the final game of the series and homestand at Cubs Stadium Sunday night.

Midland now returns to intra-divisional Texas League skirmishing in the final dash to the first half wire. The Cubs, after two days off, resume the chase Wednesday in El Paso, where they open a seven-game series.

Sunday's loss leaves Midland with a 22-27 record and with three teams to catch in the standings, although 12 of the final 19 games in the first half will be in Cubs Stadium.

It was a six-run fifth that proved the decisive lick in what had been a scoring free-for-all the first four innings. Going into the fifth, Midland held a tenuous 8-7 lead and they could have escaped the inning virtually unscathed had second baseman Trey Brooks been able to find the handle on a double play ball. At the time, there was one out and the bases loaded when John Stevenson grounded to Trey.

But that's the kind of night it was for Midland, a bunch of little things.

In the Captains' four-run first, Rick Baker, playing right for the first time this season, momentarily lost sight of Stevenson's lead off liner. It went for two bases. Don Mazzilli followed with another double, a walk and then Rob Deer's 13th homer, parked over the left field fence.

That wasn't all. In the fifth Jesse Reid leaping off the wall to one hand Don Hyman's "extra baser" and in the sixth it was Deer in right robbing Randy LaVigne.

Then, in the seventh, after a walk to Anicich, Larkin relieved, and got Hyman on a popped up bunt that catcher Randy Gomez caught and fired to first to double the runner, a double play that snuffed out a threat.

BUT IN the final analysis, it was a case of Shreveport's bullpen doing the job, no runs in four innings off Jon Reelhorn and Pat Larkin, the lefthanded ace of the staff.

Dave Wilhelmi pitched a perfect game earlier this season, but he was anything but perfect Sunday. He hung around for five innings, long enough to get the win, but was raked for 12 hits, contributed another five walks, yet escaped by allowing "only" 11 runs.

Mel Hall hit a two-run homer for Midland in the second, his third in his brief Texas League rehabilitation tour. Mike Anicich continued his hot hitting with a single and solo homer in the fifth and cautious Captain pitchers issued him three passes.

Hall returned to Chicago today and left behind a .474 average that included three doubles, three homers and seven rbi.

DEER AND Mazzilli wielded the destructive bats for Shreveport against five Midland pitchers. Deer knocked in five runs with a homer, single, double and sacrifice fly. Mazzilli accounted for four with two doubles and a single.

Doug Welenc started for Midland and lasted three innings. Jim Gerlach, who started the decisive fifth, got the loss, giving up four runs and Ray Soff was tagged for two more before Tim Millner got the side out.

Tim hung around for 3 2/3 innings and again turned in a strong runless performance.

Newcomer Bill Johnson finished up with a scoreless ninth. That kept Midland within reach going into the bottom of the ninth. Tom Lombarski led off with a walk, LaVigne beat out an infield hit to third and on the hurried throw, the runners wound up on second and third. With one out, Anicich walked, but lucky Larkin got a force at the plate and at second to kill the Cubs' hopes.

The win gave Shreveport a 6-4 edge in the series for the season.

Tom Sneva
...Indy 500 winner

Sneva holds breath

Just enough fuel

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — There was one lap to go, 2.5 tantalizing miles to the checkered flag that would signal his victory in the Indianapolis 500, when Tom Sneva saw the flickering fuel light on his control panel suddenly stop blinking and simply stay on permanently.

It might as well have been a siren going off in his crash helmet.

For 10 years, Sneva had been trying to win auto racing's most glamorous event. Every time, though, something seemed to block his way.

But after dispensing with this year's obstacle — rookie Al Unser Jr., who was trying to give his father, three-time Indy champ Al Sr., a birthday present by running interference for him — Sneva wasn't about to let a fuel warning deter him.

"I THOUGHT we had enough (fuel) to go the distance," said Sneva. "That's what the guys in the pits kept telling me. Until it goes on solid, you're OK. It was on (solid) the last lap, but you have to go with it."

So he simply ignored the little light, floored the accelerator and cruised to his first Indy title after three frustrating second place finishes.

Sneva's average speed of 162.117 mph in his MarchCosworth was the second fastest time in Indy history and pushed him past the finish line 11.1 seconds ahead of Al Unser Sr., who was celebrating his 44th birthday.

Geoff Brabham, driving for the Midland-based VDS racing team, piloted his Penske-Cosworth to a fourth place finish, averaging 160.934 for 199 laps to finish behind second place Al Unser and third place Rick Mears.

This was no easy victory for Sneva, the former junior high school prinicipal, the perennial runnerup who had never won this pinnacle of auto racing.

THE UNSERS, father and son, made it exceedingly difficult. For 16 frustrating laps, Sneva battled both of them, challenging the elder Al for the lead in a duel that was complicated by the younger one, who tried to play buffer for his dad.

Sneva used every ounce of his last supply of fuel which he took on with 30 laps to go when Mike Mosley's crash — the last of only four all day — put the race under its final yellow flag. Sneva was lucky to stay in the chase at that point, barely avoiding Mosley's spinout.

"I saw him get into the wall and I was hoping he'd stay up there until I could get by," he said. "I was hoping he wouldn't ricochet off the wall and get me. I just tapped the brakes — just gave them a tap and then accelerated by him. If he comes off the wall, I'm done. It's just instinct which way you go."

Sneva had dodged the bullet and headed for his final pit stop. But he spent 27.9 seconds in there, loading up while the senior Unser was in more briefly, using just 11.4 seconds.

THE STRATEGY looked good at the time though his quick exit from the pits enabled Unser to move into the lead with less than 75 miles to go.

It was then that the younger Unser entered the picture. He was running about five laps behind the leaders but found himself racing with the leaders, his dad and Sneva. The 21-year-old, one of six rookies in the race, then became a blocking back for his father, positioning himself in front of Sneva and refusing to yield the position.

For 16 laps they raced that way — Unser Sr. leading the way, Unser Jr. behind him and Sneva looking for room to move. Every time Sneva tried to step in front of little Al, there was no place to go.

Unser Jr. made no secret of his motives.

"I was trying to help Dad win the race," the youngster said. "That's what I was trying to do. If I could help Dad with the race, I was going to."

He went a bit too far, illegally passing two cars under the yellow, a violation that cost him a two-lap penalty. And his tactics left Sneva annoyed.

"I KNOW this is racing and a driver must take what he can," he said. "But the rule states specifically that a driver should not pass under the yellow. I could understand it if Al was competing for the victory. But he was well behind and had no chance."

The duel stirred memories of last year's wheel-to-wheel final lap battle for victory between Gordon Johncock and Rick Mears. Johncock, the defending champion, was out of the race by then and Mears was running third, where he would eventually finish.

Two other former winners also were gone. Four-time champion A.J. Foyt had made it through just 24 laps before being forced out by a broken U-joint. He finished 31st, his poorest finish in 26 races at Indy. Also sidelined was Mario Andretti, who could not avoid Johnny Parsons' spinout and crashed on the 82nd lap.

Sneva looked like he'd been launched by a slingshot once he shed the Unsers. He steadily increased his lead over the final nine laps and then, with his tank all but drained, he zoomed home, waving happily as he crossed the finish line.

BEHIND HIM came the older Unser, Mears, Geoff Brabham, Kevin Cogan, Howdy Holmes, Pancho Carter, Chip Ganassi, Scott Brayton, and the younger Unser.

The race had produced its peaks and valleys. At the start, record-setting rookie pole sitter Teo Fabi had opened brilliantly, leading for the first 23 laps. But a fuel filter malfunction put him out of the race early.

By 30 laps, Papa Unser had shot in front. Nine times, he and Sneva would trade the lead in this competitive battle. In the end, 76ers' Julius Erving comes up with the rebound in a crowd of Lakers as Philadelphia won its third straight over Los Angeles.

76ers taking no prisoners

INGLEWOOD, Calif. (AP) — The Philadelphia 76ers don't seem satisfied with the prospect of merely erasing their image as a team that can't win a championship. They want to stamp themselves as the most dominant playoff team in National Basketball Association history.

The powerful 76ers, taking command in the final quarter, rolled to a 111-94 victory over the Los Angeles Lakers Sunday to build their NBA championship series advantage to 3-0.

AND THE 76ers seem intent on burying the defending league champion Lakers in the fourth game of the best-of-seven series.

"We want Los Angeles in four," said Philadelphia Coach Billy Cunningham after the victory at the Forum. "We want people to remember this team."

Philadelphia, which last won an NBA title 16 years ago and lost to the Lakers in the finals last year and in 1980, has breezed through this year's playoffs with 11 victories and just one loss.

Another win over the Lakers in Tuesday night's Game 4 at the Forum would make the 76ers the first team in the league's 37-year history to go through the playoffs with just one defeat. Only the 1982 Lakers and the 1971 Milwaukee Bucks made it through the playoffs with as few as two losses.

PHILADELPHIA'S Julius Erving, whose otherwise outstanding NBA career has been blemished by the lack of a championship, said, "We're more determined than ever and more capable of winning our next game, and that's what I think we're going to do."

He said of his image as a player who can't win the big games, "After we get the fourth win, I think things will change; the attitude will be different."

Moses Malone scored 28 points and pulled down 19 rebounds and Erving had 21 points and 12 rebounds for the 76ers, who rattled off a 14-0 string to take command after trailing 76-72 early in the final quarter.

Andrew Toney also scored 21 points in the victory and Bobby Jones came off the bench to add 17.

Kareem Abdul-Jabbar led Los Angeles with 23 points and 15 rebounds. Jamaal Wilkes added 20 points and Earvin "Magic" Johnson had 18 points and 13 assists.

Malone said, "Their backs are against the wall and we want to keep them there. We want to fly back to Philly and have the fans waiting for us at the airport."

Lakers Coach Pat Riley said his players have to forget about their three losses.

"EVEN THOUGH we are down 3-0, this is not our death bed," he said. "We can't look back ... we have to play for the next game.

"You have a dream and you never give it up. We have to continue to believe in ourselves," the Laker coach added.

The Quotebook...

"I mean, if that was an altercation, it was the mildest I've ever been in and the first one I've gotten into sitting down. I told the police I didn't even touch the guy. The guy came up four or five times and wouldn't leave us alone and one of the coaches (Dom Scala) collared him. If my name wasn't Billy Martin, I'd have knocked him (down) 30 minutes earlier. Maybe I've matured; two years ago I'd have decked him." — New York Yankees' Manager Billy Martin, after being accused by a fan of striking him during a ruckus in a hotel bar

Hale Irwin on rampage...3B.

Baseball Today...

1956 — Mickey Mantle of the New York Yankees hit what is regarded as the longest home run in Yankee Stadium history when he homered off the right field facade with two men on base.

Glenn Gregson
...don't jog with Goose

Anicich's bat one of Cubs' brighter spots

TED BATTLES
BATTLE SCENE

One of the brighter spots of the recent homestand was the batting arrival of Mike Anicich. Coming off the disabled list, he showed a 4-for-40 .100 average. Through Saturday's games on the homestand, he went 13-for-24, .542, to boost his average to .266 and, what's more, hit three homers, which is what Manager Tom Harmon has been waiting for...

Kenny Pryce walked a batter April 13 and walked another May 25, which means, unless he works on his location, he'll probably walk somebody sometime in June. Sometimes no matter how hard you try, you just can't seem to improve... Last year before being called up to Iowa, he walked 28 in 124.2 innings. When he goes 2-0 on a batter, you wonder why pitching coach Glenn "Goose" Gregson doesn't go out to the mound give him a hint as to what's causing the fit of wildness...

SPEAKING of the Goose, he's a 90-mile-a-week runner and has done a little competitive marathoning. But don't go jogging with Greg. His idea of a good time is to run down the old mule trail and then back out at the Grand Canyon...

Unless you are paying attention, it's easy to confuse the batting stances of Rick Baker and Mel Hall. They both look like they're peering around the corner of a building. Hall's has been using his style for several years. Rick just adopted his this year. "I feel more comfortable striding into the ball and I get a better look at the pitch. The secret to hitting is getting your pitch and not chasing the pitcher's pitch." It may not be out of the textbook, but you can't argue with the results...

ONE REASON Stan Kyles came within a couple of bad breaks of a shutout in beating Shreveport 7-1 Saturday night was the glove work of Tom Lombarski at third. The all-purpose handyman from Livingston, N.J., came up couple of sparkling stops, one which started an inning-ending double play. Although Tom played for the Phillies organization at Oklahoma City in the AAA American Association last year, he was dispatched to Midland to increase his value as a utility performer (first-third-outfield) and is accomplishing his objective...

The Giants regard Mark Grant, whom the Cubs beat 5-2 in Saturday's first game, as a potential Attlee Hanamaker. Grant, Steve Wilhelmi and Montreal's Bill Gullickson all attended Chicago's Joliet High...

Lefthander Jim Boudreau, who was with the Midland Cubs in spring training at Mesa, Ariz., a first baseman until a senior in high school, pitched his first shutout when he beat Bakersfield 1-0 for Salinas in a California League game. Boudreau's velocity is labeled as supsect for the major leagues, but then they said that his dad didn't have the tools to play shortstop in the major leagues. Lou still managed to make it to the Hall of Fame...

WHEN CHICAGO played Atlanta on TV Saturday, it was mentioned that no Chicago player had come up through the farm system while six Atlanta players were farm grown Braves. They could have mentioned that Atlanta had more Chicago farm system players in the game than the Cubs. Donnie Moore was a 14-game winner for Midland in 1975...

Gary Ashby, 27, former Lubbock Monterey, Texas Tech and Amarillo Gold Sox first baseman, is Texas Tech's new baseball coach, succeeding the retiring Kal Segrist...

Balls off the Cubs Stadium scoreboard this season apparently are in play. Last year they were home runs. A few years back, both rules were used...

While El Paso and Tulsa are the only Texas League cities with American League farm teams, the league still employs the Designated Hitter. At one time, the DH was used when National League farm clubs played American League farm clubs, but discarded when two National League farm clubs squared off...

Giants make Robby happy

Take three from LA on triumphant trip

By Associated Press

They are a weary band of vagabonds returning home, finally.

Winding up their longest road trip in 15 years, the San Francisco Giants can take a great deal of satisfaction in exceeding even the expectations of their very demanding manager, Frank Robinson.

At the outset of this 16-game, five-city junket, Robinson said he would be satisfied to win between seven and 10 games. By winning three of four in Los Angeles, including a 6-4 decision Sunday, the Giants came home with 11 victories.

"To wind up the trip winning three of four in the park of the first-place club, that is really something," Robinson said.

The losing series dropped the Dodgers to within 1½ games of the Atlanta Braves, who beat Chicago 6-2 on Sunday.

On top of that, the Dodgers learned that relief ace Steve Howe, who had not given up an earned run this season, would have to re-enter a drug and alcohol treatment program. He was placed on the 21-day disabled list.

"Losing a pitcher the calibre of Steve Howe hurts this club, no doubt," Dodgers Manager Tom Lasorda said. "To see it happen to him again makes us all feel bad. We feel bad the young man had to go back."

The Giants won Sunday's game on a two-out, bases-loaded single by Max Venable in the ninth inning. The victim was reliever Dave Stewart, who lost for the first time in five decisions.

DARRELL EVANS started the rally with a single and was sacrificed to second. Stewart then walked Jack Clark intentionally and, after fanning Jeff Leonard, Stewart walked Champ Summers to fill the bases for Venable.

"I wasn't thinking anything, really," Venable said. "I just wanted to see the ball and drive it up the middle. It's good to win any game, but it's a great feeling to beat the Dodgers."

Evans and Clark both homered for the Giants, who won for the eighth time in their last nine games at Dodger Stadium.

Braves 6, Cubs 2

Bob Horner hit a two-run double to spark a four-run first inning as Atlanta won for the seventh time in 10 games, all without a homer. In fact, the power-hitting Braves have gone homerless for 13 games.

"I'll take a double any day of the week," Horner said.

Rick Camp, 4-4, scattered six hits before leaving with two out in the seventh to beat Dick Ruthven, 2-3, who has lost only three of 13 career decisions against the Braves.

Bill Buckner homered for the Cubs, who have lost two in a row and three of their past five.

Cardinals 7, Astros 3

Jamie Quirk rapped his second homer in three years and drove in four runs to lead the Cardinals to their fifth victory in six games, while the Astros have lost three of four.

Quirk's three-run homer capped St. Louis' four-run fifth inning.

Dave LaPoint, 4-1, allowed six hits and struck out five in seven innings, and Bruce Sutter shut the door on the Astros. Mike Scott, 0-3, was the loser.

Quirk has only 13 homers in six major league seasons.

Phillies 5, Expos 2

Bo Diaz and Mike Schmidt each homered, and right-hander Larry Christenson pitched Philadelphia to its second straight victory after losing six in a row. Diaz's homer, No. 5, was a two-run shot in Philadelphia's three-run sixth inning, and Schmidt hit No. 9 in the seventh.

Christenson, 2-4, pitched 6 2-3 innings, giving up eight hits after waiting out a one hour 22 minute rain delay at the game's start. Bill Gullickson, 4-6, was the loser as the Expos dropped their second straight after winning five in a row.

Mets 3, Padres 2

The Mets averted a three-game sweep in San Diego with some unexpected power hitting from Mookie Wilson and a tie-breaking single by Hubie Brooks in the sixth inning. Wilson's two-run homer, his second of the year, forged a 2-2 tie and Brooks' single scored Bob Bailor, who had singled, stole second and took third on catcher Terry Kennedy's throwing error.

Ed Lynch, 3-2, scattered seven hits over eight innings to beat Tim Lollar, who has not won for San Diego since opening day, and Jesse Orosco pitched the ninth for his third save.

Pirates 8, Reds 5

Pittsburgh erased a 5-4 Cincinnati lead with two runs in the seventh inning, then scored three more in the eighth to give Chuck Tanner the 1,000th victory of his major league managerial career. Bill Madlock singled home the tying run and later scored the go-ahead run on a bunt by Richie Hebner.

Irwin chips away for win

DUBLIN, Ohio (AP) — Chip shots on the 16th hole — one successful and the other not so lucky — turned Hale Irwin into a winner and David Graham into a loser Sunday in Jack Nicklaus' $380,445 Memorial Golf Tournament.

Irwin sank his 25-foot approach shot for a birdie 2. Graham plunked his into a bunker, took a double-bogey 5 and lost the lead. Irwin shot 3-under-par 69 for a total of 281, nipping Ben Crenshaw and Graham by a single shot at Muirfield Village.

"In match play, it would have been devastating. The other fellows would have seen it," Irwin said of his perfect approach that moved him within one shot of Graham's lead at the time.

Minutes later, Graham lost the lead because of what he called a poor club selection on the tee of the 204-yard No. 16.

"I had hit 5-and 6-irons in practice all week. For some unexplained reason today, I pulled out a 4-iron. It was a very, very bad mistake. I hit the shot 15 yards over the green. I felt I lost the tournament there," the 1980 Memorial champion said.

Graham said of his difficult lie for his approach at 16, "It was a swing and hope situation. I couldn't predict what the ball would do."

His double-bogey dropped the native Australian out of the lead for the first time during the final round, halted twice for more than 3½ hours because of thunderstorms.

Graham shot 74 and settled for a second-place check of $35,200 with Crenshaw. They were at 282, 6 strokes below par on this difficult 7,116-yard layout.

Winkel-Littlejohn win

70 good enough in Stampede

Jamie Winkel and Gary Littlejohn couldn't match Saturday's blazing seven-under-par 63, but they coasted with a par 70 Sunday to win the 18th running of the Ranchland Hills Country Club Stampede golf tournament.

The par round sounds a little mild after the 63 on Saturday, but it was still good for a three stroke lead over the field with a three-day total of 204.

Craig Adams and brother Jim, the defending Stampede champs, lost the repeat bid Sunday with a two-over-par 72 round, ending with a 207 total. Rick Peterson and Gary Littlejohn also ended with a 207 total, but took second place over the Adams brothers on a card playoff. Peterson and Littlejohn had a one-under-par 69 to earn second place Sunday.

Ron Hicks and Dub Huckabee had a 71 Sunday for a 210 total and fourth place while Al Boudreaux and Ted Collins were fifth on a card playoff with the same 210.

Bob Herrell and Steve Thompson, the first round leaders after Friday's 69, again produced a 69 Sunday for a 212 total, but out of the running. Herrell and Thompson had the best round Friday and tied Peterson and Littlejohn for the best round on Sunday, but it was a 74 Saturday that did the team in.

The following are the top finishers in each Stampede flight:

Ram Rod: Winkel-Watling 204; Peterson-Littlejohn 207; Adams-Adams 207; Hicks-Huckabee 210; Boudreaux-Collins 210; Herell-Thompson 212.

Cowboy: Bailey-Kite Sr. 216; Welton-Ray 216; Gibson-Earp 217; Colter-McGee 217.

Wrangler: Spence-Boehm 221; Townzen-Neece 222; Brice-Newman 223; Heitner-Cook 225.

Maverick: Clark-Clark 219; Dickson-Lowery 226; Neal-Coleman 226; McDaniel-Pritchett 233.

Bronc Buster: Wright-Nichols 223; Thompson-Woolard 224; Stoltz-Skeen 224; Adkins-Cruzin 233.

Bulldogger: Shepperd-Orman 227; Tabb-Gillit 229; Lage-Horton 230; Varner-Ballard 231.

Doggie: O'Bannon-Hembree 217; Eggelston-Harris 229; Roye-Teaver 230; McNeil-Harvey 233.

Sheehan masters nightmare

CORNING, N.Y. (AP) — Twice before, Patty Sheehan played here in the Corning Classic and both times resulted in disasters. Because of that, she felt compelled to return to master the place that had given her her worst experiences on the Ladies Professional Golf Association tour.

The third time was the charm for the 26-year-old Middlebury, Vt., native Sunday as she put together a nearly flawless, 9-under-par 63 to win the $150,000 Corning Classic by eight strokes over Cindy Hill.

"Patty's round was absolutely fabulous," said Hill, who turned on the pressure with a nifty 68 on the final round and a 72-hole total of 280 — good enough to match the previous tournament record set last year by Sheehan and Sandra Spuzich, but hardly in sight of Sheehan's four-day total of 272, 16-under-par.

LPGA Hall of Famer Sandra Haynie, who finished third at 281, also fired a 68.

Horns spear Bulldogs twice for Series trip

AUSTIN (AP) — Mississippi State was the only roadblock left in the Texas Longhorns' drive to their 22nd College World Series appearance, and needed to win one of the last two games in the NCAA Central Regional baseball tournament.

Pitcher Steve Labay hurled the Longhorns over the first obstacle, allowing Mississippi State just four hits in Texas 7-0 win in the first game Sunday. Mike Brumley and Jose Tolentino then led a Longhorn scoring barrage in the title game that crumbled Bulldog hopes under the weight of Texas 12-3 victory.

"Texas just had too much firepower for us, especially in the pitching staff," said Mississippi State Coach Ron Polk. "The key was the afternoon game. Texas got a complete game from a pitcher who was well rested and we used two pitchers."

Texas lost to Mississippi State earlier in the double-elimination tournament, and that loss meant the Longhorns had to win both games Sunday to earn the right to play James Madison in the opening round of the College World Series later this week in Omaha, Neb.

"You may have seen a better Texas team, but never one more courageous," said Texas Coach Cliff Gustafson. "We got a great game from Labay and that got us over the hump."

Roger Clemens, 12-5, got the win and Mississippi State starter Hans Herzog, 12-3, took the loss.

Mr. October shows signs of ending slump

By Associated Press

Contrary to the way it's supposed to be, the days have been growing longer and longer for Mr. October.

But with one swing Sunday, Reggie Jackson may have started to hit his way out of a horrendous slump.

Jackson was hitless in 21 at-bats and 8-for-83 and sported an embarrassing .176 average when he stepped to the plate in the ninth inning of a tie game in Cleveland Stadium with one out and a runner on first. As usual, he relished the spotlight and slammed his seventh home run of the season to give the California Angels a 6-4 triumph over the Indians.

"I feel better," Jackson said. "At least I felt today that I could offer at the ball. The guys were very happy for me. They've been pulling for me, and that's the thing that's been keeping me going. My teammates have been fantastic, picking me up and patting me on the back. Everybody's been very supportive. My timing has been off, as it usually is when you struggle. I've been asking God for help and contentment."

Jackson's homer boosted his average to .182. Despite his snail-like start, the Angels have been rolling merrily along and Sunday's victory was their seventh in a row.

Rod Carew opened the ninth with his third single of the game — he is hitting .453 — and was forced by Juan Beniquez before Jackson connected. Fred Lynn also homered for California.

"He (reliever Dan Spillner) just threw me a ball right over the plate," Jackson said. "It may have been a little away, but it was a ball I could work with. I tried to set up all day to hit a ball up the middle. Against Spillner, I looked for a ball that I could get up in the air, although I wasn't looking for a home run."

Blue Jays 6, Red Sox 1

At Toronto, Lloyd Moseby hit a solo homer in the second inning and a two-run shot in the fifth and Jim Gott scattered held Boston to three singles as the Blue Jays climbed into a tie with the Red Sox atop the American League East. Boston's Dennis Eckersley, who missed three starts with tendinitis in his shoulder, gave up six runs and 10 hits in five innings.

Royals 4, Orioles 0

At Kansas City, rookie Pat Sheridan smacked his second home run of the season in support of the seven-hit pitching of Paul Splittorf and Dan Quisenberry as the Royals handed Dennis Martinez his ninth setback in 12 decisions this season. Hal Mcrae and U.L. Washington also had RBI hits.

The outing by the 35-year-old Splittorff was a big boost for the Royals since ace right-hander Dennis Leonard underwent knee surgery Sunday.

Yankees 5, A's 0

At New York, Jay Howell and Rudy May combined on a four-hitter, Don Baylor raced home on a wild pitch to break a scoreless tie in the sixth inning and Oscar Gamble hit a three-run homer. May pitched the final 4 1-3 innings, allowing three hits, striking out five and walking none after Howell left with a blister.

New York loaded the bases against rookie Bill Krueger in the sixth on a walk to Baylor and singles by Lou Piniella and Roy Smalley. A wild pitch and Jerry Mumphrey's grounder produced two runs and Gamble homered in the eighth.

Mariners 6, Brewers 4

Ricky Nelson's tie-breaking homer off Don Sutton triggered a five-run Seattle sixth inning and fellow rookie Matt Young scattered six hits through 7 2-3 innings for his fourth consecutive triumph and the Mariners' third in a row in Milwaukee.

Singles by Richie Zisk, Pat Putnam and Dave Henderson, a walk, Todd Cruz's squeeze bunt, Julio Cruz's sacrifice fly and Steve Henderson's grounder accounted for the other runs in the inning. Cecil Cooper homered for Milwaukee.

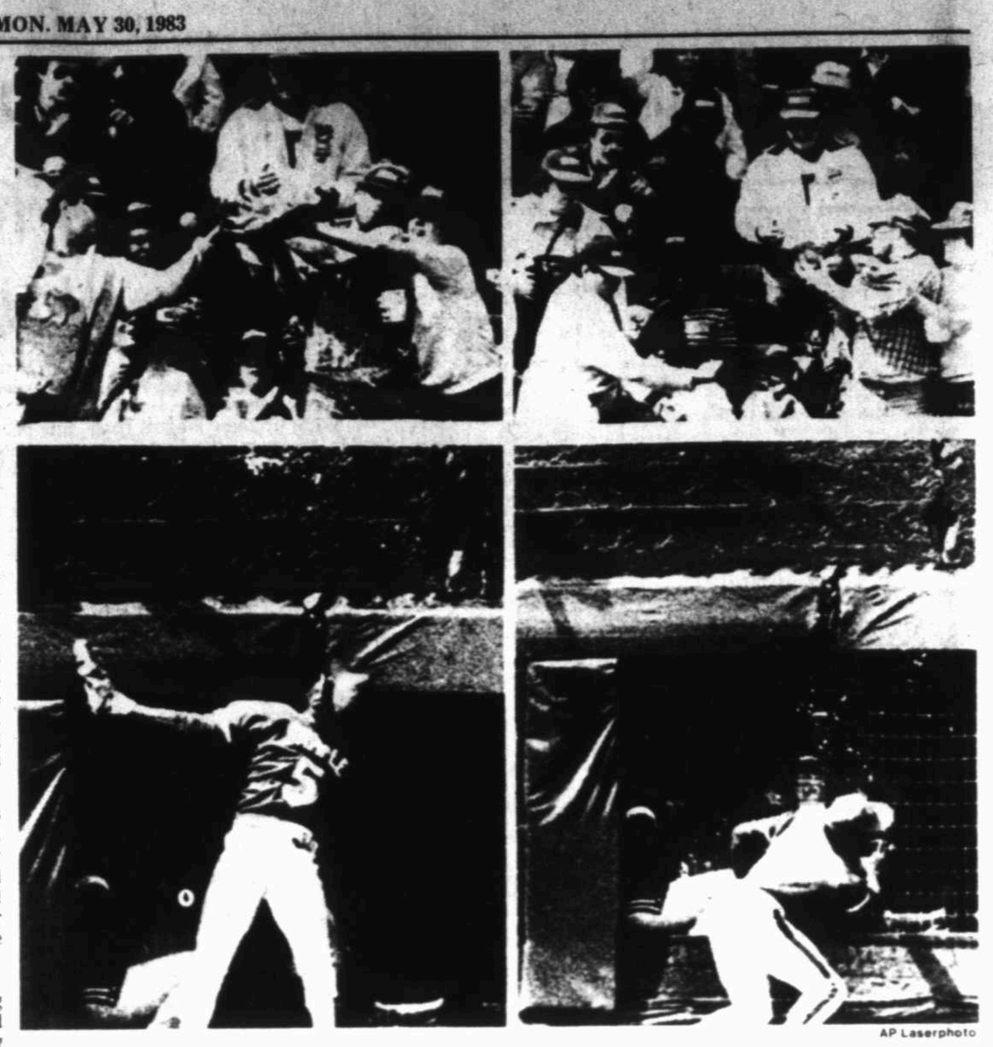

White Sox 8, Rangers 3

At Chicago, Vance Law blasted a home run and a triple and Ron Kittle and Carlton Fisk also homered in leading the White Sox to their third straight victory over Texas. Winner Jerry Koosman allowed two runs in six innings.

Law hit his first home run of the season and Fisk singled another run across in the second inning. Kittle slammed his 10th homer in the third, when Law tripled and scored on the first of two RBI singles by Jerry Dybzinski.

Tigers 7, Twins 6

At Detroit, Kirk Gibson, batting only .196, belted his second home run of the season with one out in the eighth inning to give the Tigers a four-game sweep of the Twins. Gibson's shot made Twins reliever Rick Lysander the loser of three of the four weekend games. Lysander lost both ends of Friday's twi-night doubleheader.

Bonnett repeats 600 success

HARRISBURG, N.C. (AP) — Neil Bonnett knows some things that go around once may come around again, particularly on a race track.

It came around to him as a second consecutive World 600 victory.

A crowd of 137,000 watched as Bonnett held off Richard Petty Sunday at Charlotte Motor Speedway's 1.5-mile tri-oval to capture the $488,010 event, his 12th career victory on NAS-CAR's Winston Cup circuit.

However, Bonnett's one-second victory and $50,405 earnings came after a four-car accident on lap 341 that squelched the victory hopes of then-leaders Bobby Allison and Bill Elliott.

Allison, who was able to continue, further complicated his victory chances by passing the pace car during the ensuing caution period. Allison, who still managed to maintain his Winston Cup points lead and take the earnings lead from Darrell Waltrip, was black-flagged by NASCAR officials and placed at the end of the pack.

Bargain wins futurity

RUIDOSO DOWNS — Double Dutch Bus, a colt who was purchased for only $14,000 in last summer's All American Select Quarter Horse Yearling Sale at Ruidoso Downs, swept to a half-length victory in Sunday's Kansas Futurity.

It was a financial windfall of major proportions, because the first-place purse amounted to $216,654.

Double Dutch Bus was ridden by Henry Uriegas for the M and F Cattle Co. of Carrizozo, N. M. William F. Leach does the training.

Overlooked in the wagering, Double Dutch Bus handed out mutuel returns of $33.40, $8.60 and $4.60. The colt, a son of Rocket Wrangler (an All American Futurity winner) out of Something Smooth, zipped over the 350 yards in a seasonal-record time of 17.65 seconds.

Easily A Twelve is owned by H. Don Farris of Sunland Park, N.M., and Don E. Keith of Bakersfield, Calif. Jerry Nicodemus was up.

Firewater Fancy, piloted by Nicky Wilson for Joe A. McDermott III of Madisonville, Texas, earned $42,289 and refunded a $5.40 show price.

Gators throttle Drillers

By The Associated Press

Beaumont pitcher Willie Hardwick, 1-0, fanned nine and allowed only four hits in eight innings as the Golden Gators beat Tulsa, 5-1, while Jackson edged El Paso 5-4.

Beaumont pitcher Willie Hardwick, 1-0, struck out nine and surrendered only four hits in eight innings while claiming the win.

Catcher Mike Martin had a pair of RBI doubles for the Golden Gators.

Tulsa's lone run came on an eighth inning double by Kevin Buckley.

Dennis Long, 1-3, was the losing pitcher for the Drillers.

Herman Winningham slugged the winning RBI single in the bottom of the seven for Jackson.

Winningham also hit an RBI single in the fifth scoring Michelle Tarver and knotting the score at 3-3.

Summer jobs harder to get

Editor's Note: The local Texas Employment Commission, said manager Ed Miller recently, expects the low 5.4 percent Midland unemployment rate to skyrocket as young people begin to look for work in June.

By STEVEN P. ROSENFELD
AP Business Writer

The economy is on the mend, but analysts say job prospects for the nearly 3.5 million young Americans entering the labor force this summer are not much brighter than a year ago.

With millions of workers laid off from full-time jobs and nearly 30 percent of the nation's factory capacity idle, providing temporary jobs for teen-agers and young adults is taking a back seat to rebuilding businesses following the recession.

"I don't think the recovery has filtered down to summer hiring yet," said Joseph Garcia, a spokesman for the New York City Partnership, one of the most extensive programs organized by business to provide jobs for youth from poor families.

Garcia said an estimated 200,000 youths are unemployed in New York City, but the partnership expects to provide only 16,000 jobs in private businesses this summer, about as many as last year. A federally financed municipal program hopes to provide an additional 45,000 jobs.

"It's the tip of the iceberg but it's better than nothing," Garcia said.

Nationwide, one out of five youths who sought employment could not find work last July, the peak of the summer hiring season. Among black youths, the jobless rate was twice as high. The jobless rate in the 16-21 age group, while down from its peak of 21.9 percent in December, still stands above 20 percent.

Among signs of optimism is a survey conducted by the National Federation of Independent Business, an organization of more than 500,000 small businesses. The poll found 21 percent of those surveyed plan to add employees in the current quarter while only 6 percent plan labor reductions.

While the hiring plans are at their highest level since the April-June quarter of 1979, "unemployment rates will remain uncomfortably high, as good economic news attracts new job seekers who will not immediately find jobs," the quarterly survey cautioned.

Manpower Inc., an employment service specializing in providing temporary workers, has predicted substantially fewer office jobs for students this summer than the 50,000 it estimated were available last year.

"Business is still cautious," said Manpower spokeswoman Kathy Rogge-Anas. "When a secretary goes on vacation the boss tries to get along without her. A lot more people are coming into the office than we have assignments for."

The federal Office of Personnel Management, which is responsible for hiring at federal agencies, reports 10 to 20 applications for every summer job and expects to fill slightly fewer positions than last year's 37,610 summer jobs.

At Sea World, a summer theme park near Cleveland, personnel manager Richard Payson reports 3,000 applications for 300 openings, saying he can afford to be choosy in hiring. "It's nice to be able to screen through that many people for the number of positions available," Payson said.

More federal money is available to subsidize summer jobs this year and a new federal tax credit is available to private employers who hire disadvantaged youngsters.

The Labor Department's Employment and Training Administration hopes more than 50,000 new jobs will open up as a result of the credit, which allows an employer a tax deduction of 85 percent of the first $3,000 in salary paid to a qualified young employee this summer.

In addition, federal subsidies will pay for an estimated 813,000 young workers, compared with 683,000 jobs last summer and 776,700 the previous year. Five years ago, the federal government subsidized nearly 900,000 jobs for disadvantaged youth.

Abby Martin, a spokeswoman at the Employment and Training Administration, estimated that in addition to new summer jobs resulting from the tax credit, 200,000 to 300,000 jobs for the disadvantaged would be provided by private businesses under programs similar to New York City's.

Among the new private programs to emerge this year is one at Cornell University that offers to pay private employers 40 percent of the salary of any of its students hired for the summer and to pay 70 percent of the salary at a job at a non-profit organization.

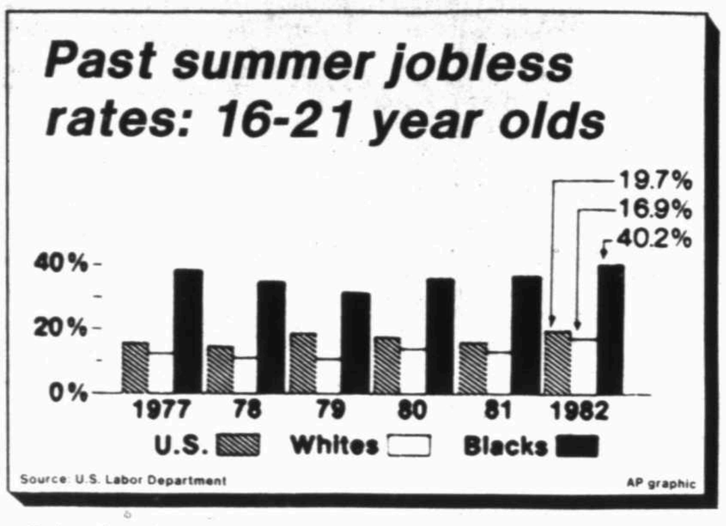

More than 700 jobs have been lined up with financing from part of an anonymous $7 million pledge last fall to the Ithaca, N.Y., school.

In communities yet to emerge from recession, however, many youngsters are not even seeking jobs.

"There is definitely a feeling of hopelessness involved here in respect to the prospects for getting employment," said Ronald Sullivan, director of Gary Manpower, a municipal program with 3,200 jobs available for an estimated 12,600 unemployed youths in the slumping steelmaking city of Gary, Ind.

Economists are hopeful, though, that with more private business groups organizing summer jobs programs despite the downturn of the past three years, a sustained economic recovery should make the outlook bright in future years.

"As the economy straightens out and becomes more healthy, we think that would mean a substantial increase in the year to follow," said Leonard Lunt, manager of urban research at the Conference Board, a business-financed study group.

Market analyst fostering hope in his predictions

By RICHARD GREEN
(c) 1983, The Stamford Advocate

STAMFORD, Conn. — Is Gene Seagle any good? Well, to give his followers an idea, the Stamford-based stock market technical analyst has littered his trail with unqualified predictions made in his Tactics and Technics newsletter and in previous interviews.

One key forecast was made last June, when Seagle told his clients that a new bull market was coming. He explained last week that certain key stocks that represent large portions of the economy were refusing to drop any lower.

By July 1, he had sent out a model portfolio of 75 stocks, including heavyweights such as General Foods, IBM, General Motors, General Electric and Westinghouse — stocks that led the explosive rally that began in August. A recent check of the portfolio found that investors who followed his advice were at least 57.6 percent richer. In the same period — July 1 to May 20 — the Dow Jones industrial average managed only a 46.5 percent gain.

Tactics and Technics usually contains a two-page, single-spaced missive on the folly of Washington fiscal and monetary policy, or an occasional sling or arrow at colleagues and journalists who insist a major market reversal is at hand.

His stock recommendations always include a target price — the new high he expects — as well as a stop order at which investors should sell out in case the stock drops instead of rises.

His most recent message is that this bull market is the kind seen "once in a generation." Seagle writes that any correction in the near future will be less than half the 15 percent expected by most analysts. He is pushing Burroughs Corp. at $51.25 per share for a target of $60 (stop at $45.25), GCA Corp. at $38.375 (target $55, stop at $34.875) MA-Com at $30.125 (target low 40s, stop at $24.875), Sony at $15.675 (target $24, stop at $12.375) and Viacom at $32.375 (target mid-40s, stop at $29).

Tennessee bank problems are 'localized,' says FDIC

Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — The closure of five Tennessee banks by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation Friday does not spell danger to other banks throughout the country, the FDIC Chairman William Isaac told the Washington Bureau.

This was the largest number of failed banks since 1936, days of the Great Depression.

But when asked if this situation might spill over into other states, he said no. It was a localized, state problem.

"The banking system of the country is sound," said Chairman Isaac.

"We closed these banks to protect the people of Tennessee. All depositors will be fully protected. Only the shareholders will lose, fully. Banks will reopen under new ownership without loss of a minute's business, next week, after the holiday."

FDIC sold the banks at auction to the highest bidders, all Tennessee buyers.

Isaac was advised by the state's attorney of Tennessee that it would be illegal to sell them to an out of state purchaser.

Grand jury investigates SEC enforcement chief

WASHINGTON (AP) — The role of a top Securities and Exchange Commission official in a case he handled as a private attorney is a subject of a federal grand jury investigation in New York, The Washington Post reports.

Quoting unnamed federal sources, the Post reported today that the grand jury is examining the role of John Fedders, now the SEC's chief enforcement officer, in an internal investigation that eventually resulted in the indictment of the Southland Corp. on bribery conspiracy charges.

The Post quoted sources as saying Fedders is not a "target ... a person as to whom the prosecutor or grand jury has substantial evidence linking him to the commission of a crime."

But Fedders is a "subject" of the grand jury probe, the newspaper reported, quoting sources as saying the Justice Department defines a "subject" as a "person whose conduct is within the scope of the grand jury investigation."

Before joining the SEC in 1981, Fedders was an attorney with the Washington law firm of Arnold & Porter. In 1978 he was assigned to assist Southland as outside counsel for the internal investigation requested by the SEC, the newspaper said. In 1976, the SEC asked Southland, which owns the chain of 7-Eleven convenience stores, whether it had made any questionable payments or political contributions, the newspaper said.

Following a three-year investigation, Southland and one of its regional officials were indicted earlier this month on charges of conspiring to bribe one or more New York tax officials in return for a favorable settlement of a tax case. Southland has pleaded innocent to the charges.

In addition to the grand jury's investigation, a House Energy and Commerce subcommittee is looking into Fedders' role in the Southland case, the newspaper reported.

The oversight and investigations subcommittee wants to know if Fedders discovered the company's failure to disclose the alleged bribery conspiracy to the SEC and then failed to notify the SEC or outside auditors himself, the newspaper said. Michael Barrett, subcommittee's chief counsel, told the Post that hearings will be held on the matter next month.

Fedders has declined to comment on his services for Southland, citing attorney-client privilege. But the newspaper quoted his attorney, Nathan Lewin, as saying that Fedders "did not know about a bribery conspiracy."

In two appearances before the grand jury and in two closed sessions with the subcommittee, Fedders has refused to talk about his role in the Southland internal investigation, citing attorney-client privilege, the newspaper said.

NAACP chair stripped of power

Margaret Bush Wilson

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

NEW YORK — The NAACP board of directors stripped Chairman Margaret Bush Wilson of all but ceremonial powers Saturday and asked her to resign after deciding that her unilateral suspension of Executive Director Benjamin L. Hooks was improper, unwarranted, arbitrary and embarrassing.

Only one of 51 members of the 64-person board who attended a three-hour meeting at the organization's national headquarters here opposed the actions. About 100 local NAACP members stood on the street outside singing freedom songs, shouting "We Want Hooks," and calling for Wilson's ouster.

The board affirmed Hooks as the organization's chief executive and directed Wilson not to interfere in daily operations, dispense contracts, make non-emergency major expenditures or direct staff members without his approval.

The board also decreed that the chairman "shall not act as a spokesman for the NAACP" and took from Wilson the traditional honor of giving the keynote address at the NAACP's national convention, which this year is scheduled to start July 11 in New Orleans. Board Vice Chairman Kelly M. Alexander Sr. of Charlotte, N.C., who called Saturday's meeting, will give that speech.

Saturday's action appeared to remove most of the structural underpinnings of an often bitter power struggle that has drained the energies of the nation's oldest and largest civil rights organization. Its membership has declined in recent years, and its effectiveness and direction have wavered since the many landmark civil rights victories of the 1960s.

Speaking after the meeting to a cheering crowd outside the NAACP's headquarters building in Brooklyn, Hooks said that he considers himself vindicated.

"I hold no animosities. I bear no grudges. Revenge, and what we call in the South 'getting back,' is not a part of my character," said the 58-year-old Baptist minister and lawyer from Memphis who succeeded Roy Wilkins as executive director in 1977.

"I will work harder than ever before to keep the association the flagship civil rights organization in this nation and to make it stronger, far more effective and to give it an outreach far greater than it has ever had before," he said.

Wilson, a St. Louis lawyer who has been board chairman since 1975, did not attend the meeting and was not immediately available for comment.

The meeting was called shortly after she notified Hooks by letter May 18 of his indefinite suspension. She alleged that he had been insubordinate, conducted himself improperly and failed to cooperate with her efforts to obtain undescribed information about organization operations.

Blacks debate civil rights head

NEW YORK (AP) — The head of the Justice Department's Civil Rights Division defended the Reagan administration's civil rights record in a debate with two black leaders, disputing the notion of unfair "reverse discrimination" against white males.

NAACP Executive Director Benjamin Hooks and former National Urban League President Vernon Jordan debated with Assistant Attorney General William Bradford Reynolds Sunday on ABC's "This Week with David Brinkley."

Both Jordan and Hooks charged that the Reagan administration is insensitive to the needs of minorities, and Hooks said that by opposing affirmative action as "reverse discrimination" the administration was acting as if "white males are the minority."

Calling this "stupid," Hooks said it defied the nation's "long and glorious history of compensating people for certain disadvantages."

But Reynolds insisted the administration has a "remarkably good" record, saying the Justice Department is prosecuting more than 100 cases of employment discrimination against individual blacks and women.

"This is the administration that has brought more criminal prosecutions against police brutality, against Ku Klux Klan activities, against racial violence, against involuntary servitude than any other administration in the history of the civil rights division," Reynolds said.

Reynolds also said that Reagan did not, as many believed, favor tax-exempt status for schools that practice racial discrimination. He said the administration opposed the Supreme Court's ruling on the issue last week because it granted the Internal Revenue Service "full and unfettered" authority to determine which institutions are in the public interest.

In an 8-1 vote, the Supreme Court ruled that the government can deny tax breaks to schools that discriminate on the basis of race.

Jordan called for Reynolds' resignation as head of the Justice Department's Civil Rights Division, saying the administration had harmed blacks by trying to water down the 1965 Voting Rights Act by firing three members of the Civil Rights Commission last week and not appointing a single black federal judge.

It was Hooks' first public appearance since the chairman of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Margaret Bush Wilson, suspended him May 18.

Mrs. Wilson revoked Hooks' suspension last Thursday. On Saturday, the NAACP board curtailed Mrs. Wilson's duties to the point where her powers are largely ceremonial, ending a long conflict over control of the civil right organization.

But Mrs. Wilson said Sunday at Alton, Ill., that she will not step down.

"I have no plans to resign," Mrs. Wilson said before a speech at a fund-raiser for the local NAACP chapter.

In her speech, she said, "There are those who suggest this is a power struggle. But this is about professionalism, effective administration, organized discipline and intelligent board responsibility."

Investigation may lead to claims against state

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — An 11-month federal investigation resulting from the discovery of 17,000 aborted fetuses in a Los Angeles area cargo container may lead to millions of dollars in claims against California by the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services.

The department has concluded, in a report by Inspector General Richard P. Kusserow, that California has been overpaid in matching federal funds for laboratory tests related to these and other abortions in the state.

Under the so-called Hyde Amendment, which prohibits federal funding for abortions unless the mother's life is in danger, many pre-abortion and post-abortion laboratory tests on fetal tissues are similarly ineligible for matching U.S. funds, according to Kusserow's report.

The findings signaled that the department will give more careful scrutiny throughout the country to medical laboratory expenses that could be related to abortions.

The controversy arose because California, unlike the federal government, provides broad coverage for abortion services under its Medi-Cal program. Kusserow's report, a copy of which was obtained by the Los Angeles Times, says that federal "action will be taken to recover any ineligible abortion-related expenditures" that the department has unwittingly made to California in the last three years.

Richard S. Schweiker, the former secretary of health and human services, ordered Kusserow to begin an exhaustive investigation into possible federal violations last year after thousands of human fetuses that belonged to a defunct medical laboratory were found. Schweiker was pressed by several members of Congress and by Judie Brown, president of the American Life Lobby, an anti-abortion group, to call for an investigation.

Kusserow's report said the California laboratory, Medical Analytic Laboratories Inc., had received $174,268 in Medi-Cal payments from 1979 to 1981, including $88,000 in reimbursements that a lab official said were mainly for pathology tests on aborted fetuses. Half of this amount, or $44,000, thus had been paid improperly by the federal government at the request of California, the report said.

Officials of the California Department of Health Services declined comment, pending receipt of the report.

State's drunken driving statute fills county jails with offenders

BOSTON (AP) — A campaign to take drunken drivers off Massachusetts highways has been so successful that county sheriffs complain they are running out of jail space to house thousands of tipsy motorists.

Some officials say the get-tough law, passed last September, may be working almost too well.

Arrests are up, and highway fatalities are down. But prison cells are jammed with drinkers who choose a short jail term instead of a longer hospital stay that could attack the root cause of drunken driving.

"The guys in jail, all they can think about is an ice cold brew when they get out," said Paul Ruane, a former prison official who now works at an underused hospital program for drunken drivers near Worcester.

"There is a tremendous awareness out there of the problem of drunken drivers, but not of the problem of alcoholism — which must be addressed," said Ruane. "People don't see that side."

Sheriffs, alarmed by the wave of new prisoners coming to their jails and houses of correction, say most drivers receive no treatment for alcoholism.

"We're just warehousing them. We don't have the money to do any treatment," said Edward Henneberry Jr., sheriff of Middlesex County, the state's largest county. Nearly one-third of the 628 inmates now in his custody were arrested for drunken driving.

"People have no idea how many drivers are winding up in jail," Henneberry said. "When your neighbor says he's going to the Bahamas for a week and doesn't come back with a tan, maybe it's not because of the bad weather."

The stricter law was designed to stop a "revolving door" in Massachusetts where a motorist arrested for drunken driving could avoid a conviction by agreeing to attend alcohol education classes. Many drivers had been arrested five or more times without a single conviction because they repeatedly agreed to attend a class one night a week for eight weeks, officials say.

Now those drivers face an automatic seven-day jail term or 14 consecutive days at a state hospital for a second offense. A third conviction brings 60 days imprisonment.

The state's public safety office estimated drunken driving arrests will total about 35,000 this year, up from 33,000 in 1982. About 5,000 repeat offenders will be forced to serve prison terms.

But the county jails, where drunken drivers are sent, are bursting, operating at 42 percent over capacity. The state prisons, operating at 27 percent over capacity, can offer no help.

"All we can do is place them in with the general population," said Plymouth County Sheriff Peter Flynn. "Most of these people don't have a criminal history, and we're placing them smack dab in the middle of a population where they don't belong."

The Legislature's "safety valve" for jail crowding was supposed to be five alcohol rehabilitation programs at state hospitals or similar institutions. Repeat offenders would be given a final chance to get help for their drinking problems before being sent to jail.

But only one program — at Rutland Heights State Hospital — has opened, and it has operated at 50 percent capacity.

The reason: Most judges impose the minimum mandatory jail sentence of seven days on second offenders. Many defendants can serve the time on split weekends.

In contrast, a driver who volunteers for the hospital program must be away from home for 14 consecutive days, pay $370.02 for hospital room and board, remain on probation and usually attend Alcoholics Anonymous meetings for 30 weeks after leaving.

NEA head to meet with Reagan, explain opposition to merit pay

WASHINGTON (AP) — The head of the National Education Association will get a chance to personally explain to President Reagan the reasons why his organization opposes merit pay for teachers.

The leader of a rival union, meanwhile, is urging all teachers to keep an open mind on the issue.

"We will not have a knee-jerk reaction rejecting these new (merit pay) proposals," Albert Shanker, president of the American Federation of Teachers, said Sunday on NBC's "Meet The Press."

Shanker said that parts of a merit pay plan that Tennessee Gov. Lamar Alexander has proposed — and which the state affiliate of the NEA helped block — are "quite exciting."

Reagan complained in a letter to NEA President Willard H. McGuire last Thursday that the union's opposition to the attempt in Tennessee to pay teachers by merit instead of seniority made the NEA "a major obstacle to paying our outstanding teachers what they deserve."

The White House said Saturday that the president has agreed to meet with McGuire at a later date to discuss the issue.

Relations between the Reagan administration and the NEA have been frosty. The union was not even invited to the White House last month when dozens of education leaders were called in to hear the recommendations of the National Commission on Excellence in Education.

The NEA contends that with classroom salaries nationwide starting around $12,000 and averaging less than $21,000 for veteran teachers, across-the-board increases are needed, not just bonuses for a select minority.

On another issue, Shanker praised Reagan's appointment to the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights of three Democrats who oppose racial quotas in hiring or schools. Reagan also tapped Linda Chavez, a top Shanker aide, as the commission's new staff director.

But the praise stopped there. Shanker said that while he agreed with most of the commission's criticisms, Reagan's response has been "a disaster."

Reagan has "dumped on the public schools, said that we're not getting our money's worth, that it's a failure, created the impression that teachers are only interested in money..." Shanker charged.

EEOC chief says many employers think civil rights on 'back burner'

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government's equal employment opportunity chief says many employers are surprised when they are accused of job bias because they think the Reagan administration is no longer enforcing civil rights laws.

Many employers have told the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission they did not think job bias laws were being enforced, according to Clarence Thomas, the commission's chairman. Thomas said the Reagan administration "has a perception problem out there."

Thomas said in an interview last week that he knew of cases where employers said, "Why are you guys doing this? I thought civil rights was on the back burner."

FCC head cancels appearance

WASHINGTON (AP) — The chairman of the Federal Communications Commission has cancelled a speaking engagement at a conference after learning it will focus on the liberal bias, rather than the power, of the news media.

Mark S. Fowler, the FCC's Republican chairman, cancelled his scheduled appearance at the June 9 conference after learning it was entitled "The Conservative Movement and the Liberal Bias in the Media: A Private Conference to Plan the Conservative Counterattack." The conference is beng arranged by the National Conservative Foundation, an arm of the National Conservative Political Action Committee.

Fowler, who is listed as a conference sponsor, said he had been asked "to give a speech on the power of the media," not the bias of the media. "I just don't think it's proper for a public official in my position to be attending something like that. I'm going to bail out...," Fowler said Friday.

Veteran wants Reagan's support

WASHINGTON (AP) — The first Vietnam War veteran to be elected to the House has asked President Reagan to drop his opposition to a bill providing vocational training to unemployed veterans of that conflict.

"In a nation that rightly prides itself on recognizing and advancing its veterans, we face among our listeners today over 750,000 Vietnam-era veterans who remain out of work," Rep. John P. Murtha, D-Pa., told a nationwide radio audience on Saturday.

Murtha, who gave the Democrats' response to Reagan's weekly radio address, said many Vietnam veterans have been forced to accept "minimum entry-level jobs" to support their families. A former Marine intelligence officer, Murtha was elected to Congress in 1974.

School can't forget handicapped

BROCKTON, Mass. (AP) — Handicapped children no longer will be barred from kindergarten orientation days in city schools following a U.S. Education Department ruling that such exclusion violated one girl's civil rights.

The parents of 5-year-old Shannon Kinsella, a former March of Dimes poster child who suffers from cerebral palsy, complained after Shannon was barred from an orientation day in September where non-handicapped children met new classmates and were given identification bracelets.

Education department officials notified Kinsella last week that school administrators had agreed to end the practice. School officials had said the handicapped children already had met with school staff members and undergone extensive evaluation.

Third dies from breathing gas

ANNISTON, Ala. (AP) — A third hospital patient has died after breathing argon gas that officials say mistakenly was pumped into the oxygen system at Fort McClellan's Noble Army Hospital.

Charlotte Huddleston, 27, was pronounced dead of cardiac arrest Sunday night at Northeast Alabama Medical Center where she had been transferred after slipping into a coma Wednesday, a spokeswoman said.

An army sergeant and a premature infant died early Wednesday from inhaling the argon, a gas normally used in welding, officials said. Hospital officials said an argon tank that resembled oxygen containers mistakenly was hooked into an oxygen system.

Playing should be 'Moore' sober than in '10,' 'Arthur'

NEW YORK (AP) — Actor Dudley Moore, familiar to many film-goers for his boozy piano renditions in the movies "10" and "Arthur," says he'll be playing it straight at a Carnegie Hall recital next week.

Moore has been rehearsing as much as five hours a day for the June 6 performance with the St. Paul Chamber Orchestra where he and two classical soloists are to perform a Beethoven concerto.

Except for a few classical outings, the 48-year-old London native said he has chosen to keep his serious side hidden, partly out of a childhood fear instilled by tough piano teachers.

"I developed a terror of playing a wrong note," he said in this week's issue of People magazine.

NEW YORK (AP) — Some Brooklynites just can't forgive and forget how their beloved Dodgers blew a chance to win the National League pennant more than three decades ago.

"Go home, ya bums," a man yelled good-naturedly at a half-dozen ex-Dodgers who showed up Sunday for a "Welcome Back to Brooklyn" day that also drew some noted natives.

Former players on hand included pitchers Clem Labine and Ralph Branca, the latter generally remembered for having thrown the ball that Bobby Thompson of the rival New York Giants hit for a home run and a victory in a playoff game for the 1951 National League pennant.

Others returning for the reunion included actors Tony LoBianco and Vic Tayback and singer Julius LaRosa.

LONDON (AP) — Officials at Madame Tussaud's wax museum expressed good intentions, but the museum's updated, life-sized models of Princess Diana and Prince Charles have drawn widespread criticism.

"Di-abolical!" exclaimed the Sunday Mirror, echoing complaints from spectators at Saturday's unveiling who described the wax Diana too thin and too hard.

A museum spokesman said the new version of the 21-year-old princess was needed "especially because she has changed so much since her wedding" of July 29, 1981. "Her smile is wider, her hair longer and she has lost weight," the spokesman said.

The model of Charles, the 34-year-old heir to the throne, sports a scar on the left cheek from a riding accident and left him with less hair than the earlier version, which was placed on display shortly after the royal wedding.

"Diana looks terrible. I don't think much of the Charles model, either," the Sunday People quoted Londoner David Ozrow as saying.

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — The widow of Egyptian President Anwar Sadat has planted two olive trees at the University of South Carolina as a memorial to her husband's mission for peace.

Jihan Sadat, who received an honorary doctor of humane letters from the university in March 1981 along with an honorary doctor of laws degree for her late husband, returned Saturday for a four-day visit to South Carolina.

Crowd 'worries' festival promoter

DEVORE, Calif. (AP) — A sellout crowd of 300,000 partying to the roar of heavy metal rock turned the US Festival into a "zoo" that left one man bludgeoned to death over a drug deal, and the festival's promoter said he was "worried" by the huge crowd.

James Dean Estell, of Pomona, Calif., died Sunday at San Bernardino Community Hospital, about 12 hours after he was bludgeoned in a parking lot at Glen Helen Regional Park, said San Bernardino County Sheriff Floyd Tidwell.

"He was struck in the back of the head with a pipe or tire iron, we believe over a narcotics deal that burned out," Tidwell said.

Steve Wozniak, the Apple computer designer who reportedly put $16 million into the festival, hoped to attract 200,000 people daily, but said Sunday he feared long lines at concessions, toilets and other facilities.

"I'm worried, I don't like it," he said.

Thousands of the revelers, who paid up to $25 for each day of the festival, stayed overnight at the park. David Bowie, Stevie Nicks and The Pretenders were to perform today.

Estell, 23, apparently was beaten in a dispute as he was selling the hallucinogen PCP, or "Angel Dust," Tidwell said.

David Michael Planton, 22, also known as David Morgan, was booked for investigation of murder and held without bail at the county jail, Tidwell said. Authorities said Planton lives in Orange County.

A 17-year-old girl who was with Planton also was held at Juvenile Hall for investigation of murder. Her name wasn't released because of her age.

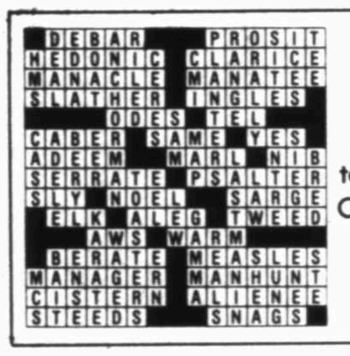

The arrests came shortly after the 3:30 a.m. beating, based on information from witnesses, Tidwell said. The violence wasn't surprising, he said, given the size of the crowd and numerous drug transactions.

"You could have a thousand cops in there and you couldn't control the narcotics," he said.

Tidwell said his deputies were concentrating their patrols outside the 54-acre amphitheater about 60 miles east of Los Angeles, which was covered by a sea of humanity.

He said the crowd was "an absolute zoo to us and it drives us up a wall," but added, "There could be riots and there haven't been. The mood is very good."

Rebels killed in three clashes

GUATELAMA CITY (AP) — Government soldiers killed 13 leftist rebels in three separate clashes in northwestern Quiche and northern Alta Verapaz province, the army said.

It said in a statement Sunday that three soldiers, including a lieutenant, died in clashes in Alta Verapaz, 117 miles north of the capital.

Four guerrilla groups are fighting to topple the conservative military government of Gen. Efrain Rios Montt.

Volcanic eruption causes steam

REYKJAVIK, Iceland (AP) — Grimsvoetn Volcano erupted and sent tons of volcanic ash crashing onto the Vatnajoekull glacier and blasts of steam soaring 1,600 feet into the air, observers said.

Officials reported that Sunday's eruption posed no immediate threat to life or property.

Guerillas attack Jalalabad

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — Anti-communist guerrillas staged three attacks on the southeastern Afghanistan city of Jalalabad, killing or wounding 60 pro-Soviet Afghan soldiers, Moslem insurgents said.

The claims Sunday of the attacks last week could not be independently confirmed.

115-year-old citizen dies

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — Wadera Mohammed Sualeh Hingoro, believed to be Pakistan's oldest man, died at the age of 115, according to news reports.

Hingoro is survived by more than 100 sons, daughters, grandsons and granddaughters, the reports said.

He died of natural causes last week, and "was in good and sound health," a relative was quoted as saying.

The Hingoro family are landowners in the village of Tahir Hingoro, 600 miles south of here in Sind province (state), the news reports said.

Pope to journey to shrine

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Pope John Paul II says he will journey to the shrine of Our Lady of Lourdes at the foot of the Pyrenee mountains on Aus. 15.

The pontiff's trip to southwest France originally was scheduled for 1981 but was postponed because he was shot and seriously wounded in St. Peter's Square that year.

Our Lady of Lourdes is believed to have appeared 18 times in 1858 to a peasant girl, St. Bernadette Soubirous. Millions of people make the pilgrimage to Lourdes each year, drawn by their faith that waters at the shrine can bring up miraculous cures.

The pope announced his plans for the trip on Sunday at the close of his weekly Angelus blessing before a crowd of 40,000 at the Vatican.

Union opens first conference

BUDAPEST, Hungary (AP) — The Interparliamentary Union today opens a six-day conference which will be the first meeting of the organization in a Soviet Bloc country.

IPU General Secretary Pio-Carlo Terenzio, at a pre-conference news briefing, said the meeting of about 200 parliamentarians would discuss detente and disarmament, as well as international economic and scientific cooperation.

Past meetings of the IPU, which has no powers of enforcement and normally meets every two or three years, have all ended in consensus.

Central American nations meet to reduce tension

By The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post New Service

PANAMA CITY, Panama — Squabbling Central American countries brought to a peace meeting here Sunday the same deadlocked positions that have thwarted all earlier attempts to reduce tensions in the embattled region.

A meeting called by four would-be peacemakers — Mexico, Panama, Colombia and Venezuela — opened with the five troubled nations already taking sides: Nicaragua against El Salvador, Honduras, Costa Rica and Guatemala.

"There is a bloc openly against Nicaragua," Nicaraguan Foreign Minister Miguel d'Escoto said on his arrival Saturday in Panama City. He said that the foreign ministers of the other four had already held talks in El Salvador to plot what another Nicaraguan official called a scheme to isolate Nicaragua at the Panama meeting.

El Salvador officials said, however, that the talks took place to discuss a plan that El Salvador hopes will be endorsed at the current conference. The Salvadoran plan calls for ending a Central American arms race, controlling clandestine arms shipments, and strengthening of economic relations and democratic institutions in the region. Each of these points is clearly aimed at the revolutionary Sandinista government of Nicaragua, which El Salvador says is building a huge army, shipping weapons to rebels in El Salvador, imposing sanctions on private enterprise and postponing free elections.

The four host governments, calling themselves the Contadora group after the Panamanian island where they first met in January to discuss their peace initiative, sought to avoid what seemed to be a built-in deadlock by breaking Sunday's first-day meeting into two parts, one to discuss ways to reduce tensions, and another to talk about the specific plans themselves. The Salvadoran plan is among those being discussed.

The meeting was also to hear a report from a group of civilian observers designated by the Contadora group to study border problems along the frontier between Costa Rica and Nicaragua.

Seeking to alleviate what they see as a threat of regional war, the Contadora nations have been trying since January to find a way to relieve tensions. Previous meetings have been unsuccessful, and many diplomats were doubtful about the chances for success at this session because of built-in antagonisms between Nicaragua and its neighbors.

The Contadora nations also disagree among themselves on ways to solve Central American problems. Mexico supports Nicaragua's call for separate, bilateral El Salvador and Honduras. Venezuela has publicly joined Mexico in calling for bilateral talks, yet it quietly supports El Salvador in its fight against Marxist-led guerrillas. Colombia, according to unofficial U.S. observers here, sides with increased American aid to El Salvador. Panama, anxious to be the peacemaker, seeks to play an independent role.

New Marines arrive in Lebanon while terrorist group ambushes Israeli soldiers near Beirut

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Guerrillas killed two Israeli soldiers and wounded three others in an ambush 10 miles southeast of Beirut, the Israeli military command said today.

The command said a guerrilla squad in a vehicle attacked two Israeli military vehicles with bazookas and small-arms fire Sunday on a road south of Bhamdoun. It said the guerrillas escaped.

A group called the Lebanese National Resistance Front — believed to be composed of Palestine Liberation Organization allies — later claimed responsibility for the attack in a statement broadcast by leftist Beirut radio stations.

The deaths bring to five the number of Israeli soldiers killed in the last week of stepped-up guerrilla assaults on Israeli troops in Lebanon.

Other Israeli soldiers traded fire with Syrian troops Sunday across the cease-fire line in the Bekaa Valley, and one Lebanese was reported killed and another wounded when a shell fell on their home near the front line.

Both Israel and Syria had been beefing up forces in the area over the weekend, but Israeli officials, Western diplomatic sources and Lebanese news reports all indicated today that the build-up was subsiding.

In Beirut, helicopters and amphibious vehicles carried ashore a new unit of 1,200 U.S. Marines on Sunday to replace American troops stationed in Lebanon since Feb. 15. And in southern Lebanon, a 23-year-old private from Fiji serving with a United Nations peacekeeping force was killed in a shootout which U.N. officials said was between U.N. soldiers and Israeli-backed militiamen.

Lebanese President Amin Gemayel, a Christian, made a rare public appearance Sunday in predominantly Moslem West Beirut and defended the U.S.-sponsored troop withdrawal accord with Israel.

"I shall abandon not one iota of Lebanon or of Lebanon's dignity," said Gemayel. "The recent agreement that Lebanon has signed was inescapable to achieve liberation."

The president was cheered by a crowd of about 30,000 when he pledged to end Syrian, Palestinian and Israeli control of outlying sections of Lebanon.

Gemayel, who pushed through a shield of bodyguards to shake hands with the crowd, had made other visits to West Beirut but his speech was the first given by a Lebanese president in the Moslem sector since the capital was divided during Lebanon's 1975-76 civil war.

Marine spokesman Maj. Fred Lash said the U.S. soldiers' arrival was a routine rotation of forces. He said Syrian charges of a planned "U.S.-Israeli aggression" were "absolutely false."

The Marines first came to Lebanon last August to help supervise the evacuation of Palestinian guerrillas from Israeli-encircled Beirut and later became part of a multinational peacekeeping force that includes French, Italian and British troops.

Israeli security forces said the exchange of fire between Israeli positions to the south of the cease-fire line and Syrian and Palestinian forces to the north lasted about 20 minutes.

A shell hit a home in Kab Elias, a Syrian-controlled town, killing one Lebanese and injuring another, Lebanon's state-run television station reported.

Moshe Nativ, an Israeli general, said his country was willing to negotiate with the PLO to gain the release of eight Israeli soldiers captured during the war in Lebanon, Israel state television reported.

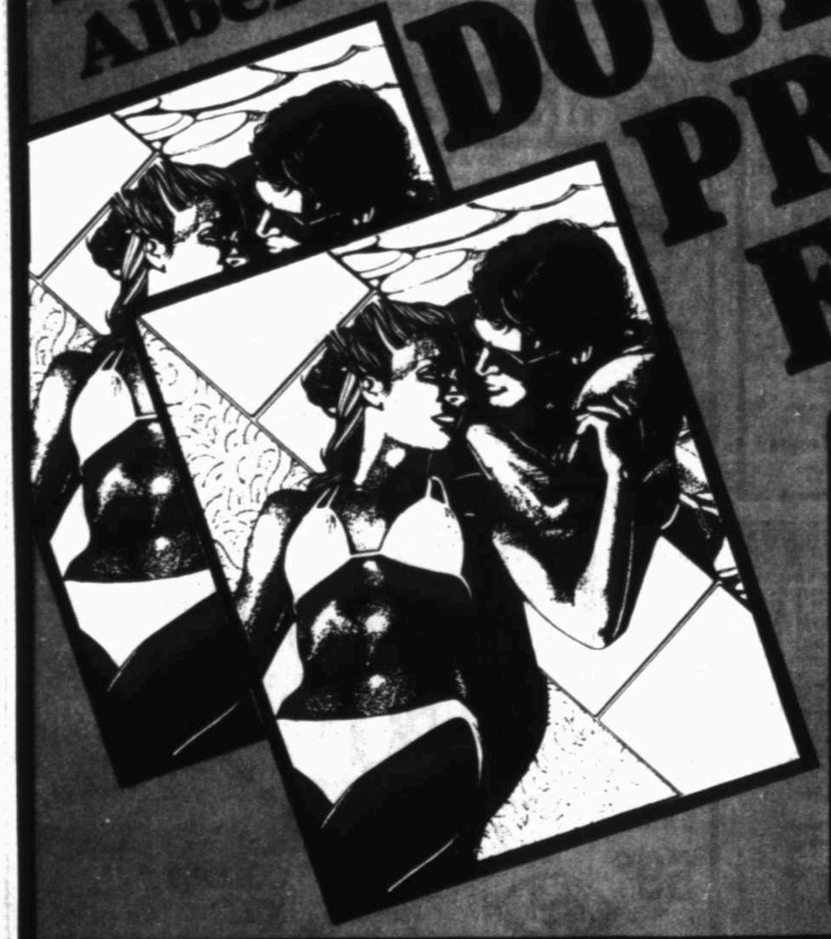

The report said Israel would release 600 PLO prisoners for each of its soldiers held by PLO guerrillas.

In the Syrian capital of Damascus, PLO officials and other sources said a group of PLO rebels seized six warehouses belonging to the Fatah group of PLO chief Yasser Arafat. A mutiny by PLO dissidents has been underway since mid-May.

the art of faith

Text by Georgia Temple

Tenochtitlan fell to the Spanish conquistadores, led by Hernando Cortes, in August of 1521. Thus began 300 years of Spanish rule in Mexico. And along with Spanish rule went the Spanish faith — Catholicism.

Not too long thereafter religious art was introduced into Mexico as a persuasion toward the acceptance of Catholicism. For about 200 years, paintings, sculptures and prints depicting saints and religious persons could be afforded only by the wealthy.

When tin became available as an alternative to canvas during the 19th century, a new Mexican folk art developed, flourished and then died out completely during the early 20th century with development of inexpensive lithographs and steel engravings.

But during the 19th century, thousands of small oil paintings depicting saints were produced on tin by anonymous artists for use by the poor.

An exhibit of this type of work — Mexican Folk Retablos — is on display in the Anthropology Gallery at the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave. The show closes June 19.

Retablos were placed on home altars in Mexico by devout Catholics who were appealing for assistance to the particular saint or religious person depicted. As the exhibit notes state: "The Church's official iconography was strictly followed in representing saints, who were identified through specific costumes and attributes."

In the exhibit, 26 persons can be identified through their attributes (objects or incidents generally associated with a particular saint).

—The Trinity: Depicted by retablo painters as three images of the same person in disregard to a ban imposed by the Catholic church in 1745, God the Father bears the image of the sun, Christ shows the wounds of the crucifixion and the Holy Ghost is traditionally associated with a dove.

—Our Lady of the Immaculate Conception: Mary is shown as a young girl, clutching the dove of the Holy Spirit to her breast, to portray the descent of the Holy Spirit. The roses and lilies symbolize purity.

—St. Joseph: Joseph, Christ's temporal father and patron of the family, fathers, husbands, carpenters and those seeking a home, is traditionally shown wearing a green robe and yellow mantle symbolizing new life, marriage and fertility.

—The Powerful Hand or the Five Persons: The central image of the hand with the stigmata (wounds of Christ) most likely comes from the story of St. Francis. The lambs symbolize Christ in his sacrificial role. The five figures are Christ, Mary, Joseph and Mary's parents, Joachim and Anna.

Little is known of the artists who painted these delightful works.

The exhibit notes state: "These folk artists were generally self-taught and probably made their living at another trade. Some may have been employed in workshops where retablos were produced under the direction of a master.

"Retablo painters worked in a style based on 17th century European paintings and prints. The Mexican artist's lack of formal art instruction and his naive view of nature, however, transformed the European tradition into a highly conventionalized and decorative style."

Capt. Peter Vanherwaarden stands by the Turkish ship "Meric" in Port Arthur. Capt. Peter is a ship chandler, a retailer who brings supplies to a ship.

Ship's chandler can't seem to stay away from ocean

PORT ARTHUR (AP) — He's got the sea in his blue eyes and can't seem to stay away from it. Capt. Peter Vanherwaarden was a ship's captain at the age of 24.

"Just call me Captain Peter," he says. "Nobody can pronounce my last name — it's an old Dutch one."

For about 15 years, Capt. Peter rode the waves. He guided oil tankers, cargo ships and even a yacht.

"I got sick and tired of living out of a suitcase," he says. But he still returns to one ship or another every day of his life.

Capt. Peter is a ship chandler. In sea language, this means a retailer who brings supplies to a ship. The supplies can range from provisions to mechanical equipment. Unusual requests have been made to chandlers over the years, and Capt. Peter is no stranger to weird orders. "They ask me for anything!" he exclaims.

He heads the Sabine division of Houston's Superior Marine Supply; this branch just opened in February and is temporarily operating out of Capt. Peter's apartment.

Whenever a ship pulls into Port Arthur, Capt. Peter is there with his price list. He also brings a copy of the daily newspaper and five copies of "Today's Gulf Coast," which lists area restaurants and events.

"The modern sailor has changed," Capt. Peter says. "They're not going to run to the nearest whorehouse anymore. They like to go to restaurants, and they like to drink. That's part of the business."

THIS DAY, the "Liechtenstein" arrives from Ethiopia. It's manned by a Korean crew. Capt. Peter gets a daily list of all incoming ships from the Sabine Pilots, and he picks which one to visit.

"There, she's coming," he says with enthusiasm.

Capt. Peter is dressed for the occasion. He wears a gray corduroy suit, white turtleneck and boots. He's ready for a sales call.

He drives his little brown Fiat over the rough gravel and parks on the dock. A rat scampers by as Capt. Peter watches the ship pull in.

"Boy, is she dirty," he complains. He points out the green growth and barnacles encrusted on the ship's bottom. "Look at that beard." Capt. Peter shakes his head.

Because he was a sailor himself, Capt. Peter knows how to act when a new ship arrives. "I speak that guy's language and know what he needs," he says.

What worries him is the reception that sailors get in Port Arthur. No one seems to realize that sailors here are an untapped boost to the local economy, he says.

"These guys spend money," he says. "They really are a part of our economy."

Just last week, Capt. Peter met a sailor who spent $1,000 here on a video game. But he's the exception rather than the rule. Most sailors don't know where to go once they dock.

"They always ask me, 'Where can I go shopping?'" he says.

AS A BOOST for his own business, Capt. Peter takes ship captains to the local malls when he has time, but he doesn't enjoy doing it.

"I hate it, but they're so grateful," he says. Some of the items most in demand, especially for foreign crews, are jeans and other articles of clothing that are much cheaper here than in Europe and Asia.

Capt. Peter is trying to work on some type of publication to inform foreign sailors of what's available in Port Arthur. He speaks Dutch, English, German, Spanish and French and wants to list events and other information in all five languages.

"I'm the only one who does this," he says. "The sailors should know where they can go to eat and where there's entertainment. They need to know what's going on. That's the best we can do."

Capt. Peter leaves the "Liechtenstein" without getting its business. A competitor from Houston, who happened to be Korean, won the ship's order. But Capt. Peter is not disheartened. He's done what he could.

"I'll probably get the next ship," he says.

One week later and 10 ships later, he gets an order from a Turkish ship, the "Meric." On board, Capt. Peter talks politics, religion, sex and sea living with Capt. Alper Tijnga. The two capains smoke cigarettes and drink Pilsen Birasi beer from Efes, Israel.

They talk about the responsibilities of a ship master.

"IN THE PORT, plenty problems," says the Turkish captain. "Coast Guard. Customs. If you're a master on board, it's too much. The stress," he says.

Neighbors oppose dump for wastes

DEVERS, Texas (AP) — Five brothers from a prominent Liberty County family have designs on their farmland that have many of their neighbors crying foul.

Arthur, David, Donald, Lamar and Lloyd Maxwell envision truckloads of toxic chemicals — some from the Environmental Protection Agency's 418 Superfund waste cleanup sites — traveling to their land near this Southeast Texas town.

The brothers have signed a joint-venture agreement with a Pennsylvania company that intends to turn 585 of the Maxwells' 10,000 acres into a hazardous waste landfill. The company also plans to put a toxic waste injection well on the brothers' farmland.

"Those boys have sold their souls for a mess of pottage," resident Bill Daniel told the Dallas Times Herald.

Daniel, who in 1961 was appointed governor of Guam by President John F. Kennedy, now is president of People Against a Contaminated Environment.

He vows that the group will fight "an Alamo battle with a San Jacinto finish" to keep Liberty County free of toxic waste sites.

Lloyd Maxwell, 43, brushes aside the opposition as "propaganda based on Love Canal scare tactics."

But in the two years since it was founded PACE has raised contributions ands pledges totaling $540,000 to fight the dump and another waste site tentatively planned near the Liberty County town of Dayton.

THE SECOND proposed site is on hold until its developers, Rollins Environmental Services Inc. of Wilmington, Del., can determine what limitations federal officials will place on it, said spokesman Barney Wander.

PACE members contend both sites pose a serious pollution threat to the Trinity River, Lake Houston and Pine Island Bayou, as well as the Chicot and Evangeline aquifers.

Since the area is only 5 to 30 feet above sea level, they say, floodwaters could swamp the sites and wash the toxic chemicals into the water supply.

"When you dig a post hole hereabouts, you hit water at 18 inches or so," Daniels said.

He maintained "there's no way these poisons won't leach into the aquifers" and contaminate local wells and the source of 50 percent to 60 percent ot Houston's drinking water.

"They haven't said a thing in the world about our site except that it floods, and we can prove that it doesn't," said Lloyd Maxwell.

The brothers cite a Federal Insurance Administration flood hazard boundary map that shows the flood plain approaching — but not reaching — the proposed toxic waste site. The brothers also say the waste pit will be lined with polyethelene over clay to prevent seepage.

Liberty County Judge Dempsie Henley, however, contends that both sites do flood.

"We've gotten federal disaster money on account of flooding in both areas since I've been county judge," said Henley. "And the whole county was awash in Hurricane Carla in 1962."

HENLEY, WHO says 95 percent of local residents oppose the toxic waste dumps, believes action should be delayed until the U.S. Geodetic Survey completes new flood plain maps in two years.

DEATHS

Clyde Cooper

TEMPLE — Services for Clyde C. Cooper, 84, of Temple and formerly of Midland, were held Tuesday in Sheffield Funeral Home Chapel here with the Rev. Jack Riley and the Rev. Cecil Harvey, Temple ministers, officiating. Burial was in Hillcrest Cemetery in Temple.

Cooper died May 23 at his home following a brief illness.

He was born May 17, 1899, in Missouri, moved to the oilfields of Oklahoma as a young man, and later moved to West Texas to work in the oil boom. He settled in Midland and retired in 1960 as plant foreman for Mobil Oil Corp.

He was a member of the Masonic Lodge in Lampasas and a member of First United Methodist Church of Temple.

Survivors include his wife, Alta; a daughter, Mrs. David (Carol) Schubert of Temple; and two granddaughters.

The family has requested memorials be directed to Bell County Heart Fund.

R. Greenstreet

Services for Rosalie Greenstreet, 78, of 1802 W. Missouri Ave., will be at 1:30 p.m. Wednesday at the Episcopal Church of the Holy Trinity with Father Alan Whitman officiating.

Mrs. Greenstreet died Saturday at a Midland nursing home.

She was born July 22, 1904, in Fort Worth and moved to Midland in 1949. She taught school in Midland a number of years before retiring in 1962.

Survivors include her husband, W.H. Greenstreet Sr. of Midland, two sons, W.H. Greenstreet Jr. of Houston and Rex W. Greenstreet of Irving; and four grandchildren.

The family requests memorials be directed to Christmas in April or to one's favorite charity.

Fanny Glennan

Services for Fanny A. Glennan, 83, of Midland will be at 9 a.m. Tuesday at Our Lady of Guadalupe Catholic Church with Father Jim Foelker officiating. Local services are under direction of Ellis Funeral Home and burial will be at 10 p.m. Wednesday in Lawton, Okla.

Mrs. Glennan died Saturday at a Midland nursing home where she resided.

Born May 2, 1900, in Healdton, Okla., she moved to Midland in 1955. Mrs. Glennan was a member of Our Lady of Guadalupe Catholic Church.

Survivors include three sons, T. Jack Glennan and John H. Glennan, both of Midland, and Joe B. Glennan of Deer Park; a daughter, Anna Marie Wilson of Ardmore, Okla.; a sister, Mrs. Mattie Oswalt of Elgin, Okla.; and nine grandchildren.

Police seek Odessan in woman's murder

ODESSA — A warrant has been issued for the arrest of an Odessa man accused of murdering his wife during an argument Saturday.

Being sought is 54-year-old Elias Wade of 705 Fitch. He is wanted for killing 49-year-old Lula Marie Wade at the family home Saturday afternoon.

Police said her body was found face down on the front porch about 3:50 p.m. She had been shot at least twice in the back and was pronounced dead by Ector County Justice of the Peace Manuel Valles.

Wade fled the scene in a pickup truck. Mrs. Wade's body was taken to Hubbard-Kelly Funeral Home.

Police probe robberies at convenience stores

ODESSA — Police are investigating armed robberies at two convenience stores here early this morning.

The first occurred when two black men in their late 20s or early 30s entered the Colonial Food Store at 603 E. Second St. about 1:30 a.m. One of the men told the clerk, Denise Cazee, that he was carrying a gun and wanted the money.

According to police, she told him the gun was really a stick. He then pulled out the stick and hit her across the forehead with it. Both men fled on foot with an undetermined amount of cash.

Ms. Cazee was taken to Medical Center Hospital, where she was released following emergency treatment for a head laceration. Both men were further described as 5 feet, 10 inches tall, slim and wearing Afro style haircuts.

Five hours later, a black man pulled a shower cap over his face as he entered the Colonial store at 600 S. Grandview and took an undetermined amount of cash at gunpoint from clerk Jerry Allen Smith.

Smith told police the man escaped on foot with two bags full of money, part of which was taken from the store safe. The man, who also wore an Afro haircut, was armed with a small caliber, blue steel revolver.

Unity College's students really fly the coop

UNITY, Maine (AP) — While Harvard University's "Coop" may be the nation's best-known college bookstore, students at tiny Unity College also buy their books at The Coop. This, however, is the real thing: a chicken hatchery until a 185-acre poultry farm was converted to a private, liberal arts college.

The U-shaped, barn-red building, with a shingle missing here and there, houses Unity's bookstore, its dining hall and a fledgling art gallery.

To describe Unity College as rural is an understatement. Administrators recall the spring day two years ago when dozens of students lined up along the fence separating the campus from its nearest neighbor, a working dairy farm.

Suddenly, the crowd let loose a cheer; a cow had finally borne her calf.

Unity is carving out a niche as a school specializing in outdoors studies, a booming area that has kept the college alive in difficult times.

Wool shirts and jeans are the campus uniform, giving students a rough-hewn appearance with little trace of preppiness.

Unity has no varsity football, but its woodsmen's team, open to men and women alike, finished first last spring in a major competition against more than a dozen U.S. and Canadian rivals.

Unity traces its origins to the mid-1960s, when a group of local businessmen decided that a college was just what the Waldo County town of 1,200 needed to enhance its agriculture-oriented economy.

"It was essentially yet another liberal arts institution in the boonies," said Louis V. Wilcox Jr., a botanist who has emphasized outdoors programs since taking over in 1980 as Unity's eighth president. "It's still a liberal arts institution, but the focus is now on natural resources management and outdoor recreation."

With a year's tuition plus room and board at Unity adding up to more than $7,000, administrators acknowledge they have little hope of attracting general liberal arts students who can get at least as good an education at a state school for half the cost.

Instead, Unity is targeting a national advertising campaign at students interested in forestry, fisheries, wildlife, ecology, conservation law enforcement and outdoor recreation. Ads have appeared in big-city newspapers, as well as such publications as Backpacker, Outside and Outdoor Life.

"I don't feel we've even begun to scratch the market yet. I think we're just starting to let people know we exist," said Admissions Director Edward Hinkley, who increased the college's enrollment to 336 last fall, up from 305 the year before. The goal for next fall is 350 to 400.

Unity's outdoors programs have attracted students from as far away as Texas and California. About half the student body comes from outside New England; only about 15 percent is from Maine.

"We've gone national, and for this place to survive, it's going to have to continue to go national. If we limit ourselves to New England, we're dead," Wilcox said.

Students say they were attracted to Unity by its small size, relaxed atmosphere and rural character. Some also were influenced by the college's Maine location.

"I had gone on a 16-day survival trip in Maine and I liked the area," said freshman Debbie Matern of Little Compton, R.I., a National Merit Scholarship finalist who plans to work in outdoor recreation with juvenile delinquents.

The college emphasizes a field-oriented approach, taking students to woods and streams for instruction. In forestry, for example, it maintains a sawmill and woodlot operation in the nearby town of Plymouth.

Unity also developed an internship program to allow students to work in national parks, fish and game agencies and recreational programs such as Outward Bound. Graduates have gone on to become wardens, wildlife biologists, park rangers, recreation specialists and foresters.

The new administration has put the school on a stronger financial footing.

One Odessa man killed, two others hurt in mishap

DRYDEN — An Odessa man was killed and two other Odessa residents were injured when the car they were in left the road and rolled over at a point 30 miles north of here Sunday afternoon.

Pronounced dead at the scene by Sanderson Justice of the Peace Jannie McDonald was Eric Van Westmoreland, a 22-year-old man who shined shoes for a living. Westmoreland lived at 903 N. Sam Houston in Odessa.

In undetermined condition at Crockett County Hospital in Ozona with internal injuries was the driver of the car, 23-year-old Timothy Don Pummill of 1309 E. 51 St. in Odessa. He is an oilfield salesman.

In good condition with leg lacerations was Helen Nanette Weber, 18, of 6401 E. Ridge in Odessa.

According to the Department of Public Safety, Pummill was northbound on Texas Highway 349 about 4:45 p.m. Sunday when he apparently fell asleep at the wheel of the 1981 model car he was driving.

The car went off the road, hit a fence and rolled over. Westmoreland's body was taken to Box Funeral Home in Crane.

Nuclear firm's worker takes tainted soil home

DALLAS (AP) — A nuclear company employee has told authorities he was allowed to take radiation-contaminated soil from the plant's grounds and used it to fill low spots on his property, a newspaper reported.

Michael A. Jaschek said in a deposition for the state attorney general's office he took the least-tainted soil found in tests at Gulf Nuclear Inc., a Houston-area firm, and had it hauled to his home in an uncovered truck, The Dallas Morning News said Sunday.

David Lacker, chief of the Texas Health Department's Bureau of Radiation Control, said the disposal represents "a potential hazard" to the public. Gulf Nuclear removed most of the tainted soil three weeks ago and has agreed to remove the rest, Lacker said.

Midland men remain in jail

Two Midland men remained in the city jail this morning after allegedly being caught in the act of burglarizing the M System Food Store at 1200 S. Rankin Highway Sunday night.

Police responding to an alarm said they found the two 26-year-old suspects inside the building shortly after 9 p.m. Formal charges are expected to be filed today or Tuesday.

In a burglary complaint lodged with city police over the weekend, Jerry Lawrie of 4814 W. Storey said savings bonds, a TV set and guns worth a total of $12,325 were taken from his residence Sunday. Entry was gained by removing a window air-conditioner.

Jerry Davis of 3609 W. Wadley Ave. told officers someone pried open his front door Saturday or Sunday and left with jewelry and a .38 caliber revolver. Total loss was placed at $4,850.

And Marjorie Price of 1213 E. Cuthbert reported that her car was burglarized while it was parked at R-J's Restaurant, 2301 E. Kentucky Ave. Taken were two bank bags, a .38 caliber handgun and $769 in cash.

'Fame' wants to live little longer

The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

HOLLYWOOD — "Fame" may not live forever, as the song says, but there's a possibility that the musical TV series will be around at least another season, despite its cancellation by NBC.

MGM-UA, the studio that produced the show, said Thursday that it is trying to put together a syndication deal in which 24 new episodes of "Fame" would be produced for distribution this fall to a combination of independent and network-affiliated stations in the United States and a contingent of foreign broadcasters who already have purchased the shows that ran on NBC.

Since it was only two weeks ago that NBC pulled the plug on the low-rated series, it is too early to tell whether the deal can be worked out. But Lawrence Gershman, president of MGM-UA's television distribution division, said the initial response from stations has been favorable enough to make him believe productionl go ahead.

"The feeling I get is that everybody wants to see it work. It's too good to drop," Gershman said in an interview.

Already signed up to for package, MGM-UA said, are the seven TV stations owned by Metromedia, Inc. and NBC-affiliate WMAR in Baltimore.

In addition, SSC&B Advertising said Thursday that it is backing the syndication effort and is "discussing national sponsorship with several of our clients," according to a statement by Larry Lamattina, executive vice president of the agency. He suggested that while the show's overall ratings were weak, the demographics (young, urban, female) were the kind that many advertisers desire.

If the proposal does get a green light, the series would continue under the supervision of Executive Producer William Blinn with all of the principal performers, who include Debbie Allen, Gene Anthony Ray, Lee Curreri and Erica Gimpel.

"There's nothing that would be done any differently for first-run syndication than for the network," declared Richard Reisberg, president of TV production at MGM-UA.

An important factor in deciding to keep the show alive was the success that "Fame" has enjoyed overseas, particularly in England, where it is among the most popular shows on television. The "Fame" cast has toured there in concert and also has released three hit albums.

In all, Gershman said, "Fame" has been sold in 56 countries outside the United States, and that income would help to cover any difference in cost between the money that U.S. stations are able to put up versus what NBC was paying.

Still, Gershman said, in order to satisfy U.S. advertisers, MGM-TV needs to build a lineup of stations that collectively reach at least 70 percent of the U.S. homes if the project is to get off the ground. That may be difficult, he conceded, because most stations already have set their fall schedules.

American kids know less about sexuality

WASHINGTON (AP) — Children in the United States think they need better sex education at an earlier age to cope with the increasing problems of earlier physical and sexual maturity, says an international study.

Australian researchers said Thursday that a survey of sexual perceptions among youth in five countries indicates that children in the United States and Canada show a disturbing "retardation in sexual thinking" compared with those in other countries.

Children in North America demonstrated they were about three years behind their Swedish peers in their level of sexual thinking, and a year behind their Australian and British contemporaries, said the study.

Dr. Ronald Goldman, a child psychologist at La Trobe University in Bundoora, and his wife, Juliette Goldman, a sociologist, told an international meeting that what children think about sexuality is rarely considered in the debates about sex education.

However, in interviews children say they see a need for sex education starting in elementary school instead of later grades so that they can prepare themselves for the physical and social changes of puberty, the researchers told the Sixth World Congress of Sexology.

"The study shows that children have a much better capacity to understand sexual information at an earlier age than many believe," Goldman said in an interview, "and it shows that they want better information."

A particularly disturbing finding, said Goldman, was that American children were generally more advanced in social development than those of the other countries but had less reliable sexual information with which to work.

"In terms of dating and early sexual activity, the North American children sampled appear comparatively to be both socially precocious and sexually ignorant," said the study, "a combination guaranteed to provide social and sexual difficulties."

Goldman said American teen-age girls showed the most confusion and ignorance about sex, particularly in areas such as birth control, conception, venereal disease and menstruation.

To examine how children think about the varied observations and experiences of sexuality they encounter during their development, the Goldmans devised a 63-question clinical interview.

With permission from school authorities and parents, they interviewed 838 children between the ages of 5 and 15. About 200 children from each of four countries or areas of the world were tested, including Australia, Great Britain, Sweden and North America.

Sweden was selected because sex education is compulsory in schools for all children from the age of 8, while the other countries take a more cautious approach, said the researchers.

DEAR ABBY
Living Will comforting

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Thanks for mentioning the Living Will in your column again.

I read about it in your column five years ago and obtained two — one for myself and one for my wife. We were both 65 and in good health. We're 70 now and hope to have many good years ahead of us, but one never knows.

I am enclosing a copy of the column I clipped. Please give it another run. I am sure there are thousands of people who will benefit from it as we have. — C & L IN EL PASO, TEXAS

DEAR C & L: Here it is.

DEAR ABBY: I want to thank you for the most wonderful present I have ever received. Because of an item in your column last year, I sent for the Living Will. Now I have peace of mind, knowing that if my husband or I should ever become terminally ill, our loved ones will never have to watch us die slow and agonizing deaths as some we have witnessed.

I saw my handsome 6-foot, 200-pound father waste away to an 88-pound skeleton after fighting a two-year battle with cancer. The doctors told us it was hopeless, yet they kept that poor dear man alive month after month with transfusions, tubes, needles and drugs, while he prayed to God to take him.

Abby, you would do millions of readers a priceless service by acquainting them with the Living Will as you did me. — GRATEFUL IN JOLIET, ILL.

DEAR GRATEFUL: Thank you for giving me this opportunity to publicize the Living Will again. It reads as follows:

LIVING WILL

"To my family, my physician, my clergyman, my lawyer: If the time comes when I can no longer take part in decisions for my own welfare and if there is no reasonable expectation of my recovery from physical or mental disability, I request that I be allowed to die and not be kept alive by artificial means or heroic measures, as I fear the indignity of deterioration, dependence and hopeless pain more than death itself. I ask that drugs be mercifully administered to me for terminal suffering even if they hasten the moment of death. You who care for me will, I hope, feel morally bound to follow this mandate. This statement is made to relieve you of responsibility and to mitigate any feelings of guilt.

"Signed:
"Date:

"Witness:

"Copies of this request have been given to:"

The Living Will can be obtained by writing to: Society for the Right to Die, 250 W. 57th St., New York, N.Y. 10019.

Yes, I have signed one. I requested six copies and enclosed my check for $10 to cover cost of documents and mailing. (It is tax-deductible.)

If you send for the Living Will, please be patient. I promise your request will not be overlooked. Be sure to enclose your name and address, clearly written.

The documents are free, but this is a non-profit organization, so all donations are gratefully accepted.

One woman requested eight copies and enclosed her check for $500, saying, "This is the most marvelous thing I've ever heard of." I agree.

P.S. If you or your lawyer have any questions concerning the legality of the Living Will, please write to the above address.

Dance companies awarded $600,000

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nineteen grants totalling $600,000 are going to state and regional arts organizations, according to the National Endowment for the Arts.

The grants will assist the organizations in booking dance companies for the 1983-84 performance season.

In another action, the endowment said fellowships were awarded to 104 choreographers across the country in grants totalling $382,000.

Wives and children also serve time with prisoners

LAT Photo

Richard E. Richard, 26, and his wife, Deborah, 25, a secretary, embrace at the gate of a family visiting area at San Quentin Prison in California. The Richards were married in the prison in February after he had served eight years of his life sentence for a first degree murder committed during an attempted robbery.

By The Los Angeles Times-Wahsington Post News Service

It is a beautiful spring day for a wedding. The bride, as they say in the society pages, is radiant, beaming from beneath the wide brim of her white hat.

The handsome groom, wearing a blue shirt buttoned tight around his muscular neck, is traditionally nervous during the ceremony.

Cheryl and Paul Redd kiss. They walk into an adjacent room and chat with the best man and with Paul's mother for a few hours.

Then, Cheryl, a typist, returns to San Francisco where she lives. And Paul, a murderer, returns to his maximum security cell here behind the granite walls of Folsom State Prison.

There will be no honeymoon this wedding day. There may be one next year. There may never be one. As long as Paul Redd remains in Folsom's security housing unit for troublesome prisoners he is not eligible for conjugal visits. Paul Redd has a life term and has no parole date.

About five years ago, Paul Redd's sister showed her friend, Cheryl Duboise, a picture of her young brother, who was then at the California state prison at Tracy, east of San Francisco. Cheryl began to correspond with Paul and began visiting him.

BUT WHY WOULD an attractive young woman with a good job marry a man doing life in prison?

"It will make me feel good," she says just before the wedding. "When he comes home, he comes to me. That's what I'm happy about."

Cheryl is not unique.

Last year, more than 900 women married inmates in California's prisons. At grim Folsom Prison, women married 91 inmates in 1982.

Richard Wipf, correctional counselor, was deputized nearly five years ago to perform weddings at Folsom.

"Everyone at Folsom has the right to get married," Wipf said.

Women who marry prisoners come from all socioeconomic groups and all races.

LAT Photo

Ronald Craig, an imate in Folsom State Prison in California, pushes his daughter in a swing in the prison's family visiting area. Most California prison inmates are allowed periodically to see their wives and families for two to three days at a time in little apartments ot trailers on the prison grounds.

"They come from all walks of life," Wipf said. "We've had secretaries, schoolteachers, nurses.

"There was this guy who committed about 100 rapes," he continued, "and then we rehabilitated him and he committed about 100 more. This guy had a parole date in the year 2000-something."

"A Mormon schoolteacher from Salt Lake City married that inmate."

But why do women marry prisoners?

"We've got 3,000 captive men in here," Wipf said, "and you've got a lot of unhappy women out there."

BUT WIPF'S REPLY does not explain why so many women marry men with whom they will seldom get to spend the night, men who are often confined in places that require their wives to go through hours of travel and sometimes to undergo humiliating body searches just for a few hours of conversation.

The motivations for prisoners to marry seem clear enough:

—Sex. California prisons allow conjugal visits only between married couples, not among friends or lovers.

—Loneliness. Prisoners are starved for people to care about them, visit them and bring them gifts.

—Prestige. There is status in getting visits and gifts, especially from women.

But women outside prisons presumably have access to relationships both sexual and otherwise. So why get involved with a prisoner?

DEBORAH AND RICHARD E. Richard were married at California's San Quentin in February after he had served about eight years of his life term for a first-degree murder committed during an attempted robbery of a nurse leaving work with $3 in her possession.

Deborah, 25, a secretary, had known Richard, 26, when they both lived in Los Angeles.

Deborah: "I figured he needed me more now than he did then. So that's why I stayed with him. A lot of people feel that I've wasted my life. I could care less what they think."

Lisa and Brett Thomas married at the state prison at Tracy five years ago.

Brett is doing three life sentences for three brutal murders committed during a rash of robberies in Southern California in 1977, including the shooting deaths of an 18-year-old woman and her father at the front door of the family's home.

Lisa: "He's a neat guy. He just went weird for five days. He was in the middle of a robbery and shot somebody. I'm not ashamed of him. I'm ashamed of what he did. But he's my husband."

THE PLAYGORUND IS WET from an earlier rain and the little girl is standing in the mud near a swing set and a red and green slide.

"Get out of that mud," chided the girl's father.

It is just an ordinary father-and-daughter scene in a soggy playground.

But that scene is being played out in the shadows of great stone walls, behind two sets of barbed-wire fences and under the eyes of guards, armed with rifles and shotguns, who look down from two watchtowers.

The loving father is Douglas Winston, 27.

When Douglas Winston was 15 years old, he stabbed a 75-year-old woman to death during a robbery.

Authorities say that he committed three more vicious murders before his 20th birthday. He is now doing life at California's San Quentin State Prison.

But on this day, Douglas Winston is a loving father and husband enjoying what California prison officials call a "family visit."

THE DETAILS VARY from prison to prison, but generally, all married prisoners, except those kept in the tightest security cells, are allowed to see their wives and families for two to three days at a time in little apartments or trailers on the prison grounds. The frequency of visits varies from once a month to once every several months.

At Folsom State Prison, families visit inside the walls in a fenced-off compound topped with rolls of razor wire. The granite East Wall of the infamous old bastille looms above children playing on swings.

The families of the convicts, it seems, are doing time right along with the men. But as grim as the settings are, prisoners and their families cherish those visits.

Psychiatrist defends marriages in prisons

The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

Women who marry prisoners are not necessarily being used by the men, and sometimes do a bit of exploiting of their own, according to a veteran prison psychiatrist.

Dr. Larry Clanon, now in private practice, spent 18 years as a psychiatrist with the California state correctional system, including eight years as head of the California Medical Facility prison at Vacaville.

Clanon believes that conjugal visiting is a highly successful program that helps to keep inmates from becoming completely absorbed in the convict subculture. But, years ago, he was puzzled by inmate marriages.

"The question in my mind," he recalled, "is why would someone marry under these circumstances? It doesn't seem like there is any return for the woman. The man is locked up. He may or may not be released in the near future.

"One of the things that eventually caused me to understand," Clanon continued, "was that actually they were able to develop very intimate relationships with the prisoners.

"The visiting room provides quite a bit of intimacy. There was a great need involved on the side of the men. There were long hours in which they could talk together without interruptions and without a lot of the kinds of problems that come up when people are living together

"I think it's a sexy situation in a number of ways," he goes on. "There is that intimacy. And it's ... seductive in that it's very controlled. They're able to talk about sex, they're able to communicate a great deal partly because they can't have much in the way of sexual relationships, at least until they get married and the conjugal visiting becomes available."

Women who marry prisoners, Clanon says, are often very independent persons, "pretty good managers," who are attracted to convicts because the inmates "have a great need for someone to love them and be concerned about them and be involved with them."

They are women, Clanon says, who "need to be needed — that's what attracts them in spite of the limited kind of return that they get out of it."

And when the prisoner is finally released, the psychiatrist says, it is not uncommon for the woman to dump him.

"I recall a woman," he added, "who married three different guys (in prison) and divorced them .... So the women use the men as well as the other way around."

HERE'S TO THE $5 FAMILY MEAL

No one needs to be reminded that it costs more to feed a family these days. And for someone who works, or is just plain busy, it seems even more expensive. There isn't always time for "scratch" meals. "Fast food" suppers for four to six can top $8 to $10 and all convenience foods run up the grocery bill—right?

Wrong. With family-sized frozen prepared entrees, a family can eat a tasty, imaginative and nutritious meal for less than $5. Frozen prepared main dishes, available in several varieties, make convenience foods a logical choice for busy, budget conscious people. And a few extra touches turn them into "house specialties".

Try an Oriental dinner for a change. Enjoy Chinese Beef and Vegetables without the restaurant cost by simply adding diagonally sliced vegetables, soy sauce and ginger to frozen prepared gravy and sliced beef main dish. Bake 45 minutes in the oven and serve (with or without chopsticks) over hot rice.

There are more possibilities: The family-size package of frozen prepared beef stew takes on a Southern accent when combined with chopped onion, tomato and topped with flaky refrigerated bisquits. Frozen salisbury steak main dish turns into a hearty casserole when frozen chopped broccoli, hash browns and savory herbs are added.

Your freezer holds a wealth of dinner ideas...and each for under $5.

Chinese Beef and Vegetables, shown served with rice, broccoli, hot tea and fresh fruit, can feed a family for less than $5 with the help of a frozen prepared main dish.

Cuba launches anti-U.S. campaign

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post New Service

HAVANA — The Cuban government has begun a massive campaign of anti-U.S. popular mobilization, including island-wide demonstrations and calls for expansion of provincial militias, in response to what it has called "hysterical anti-Cuban allegations" by U.S. officials over the last 10 days.

The campaign began with long front-page editorials Tuesday and Wednesday in the Communist Party newspaper Granma denouncing a May 20 speech by President Reagan to Cuban exiles in Miami and a statement last Sunday by Sen. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz., that the Cuban problem should have been solved by U.S. invasion and annexation.

Anti-Cuban statements have been relatively common in the Reagan administration, and heretofore largely ignored by the government of President Fidel Castro. The Cubans have chosen a harsh public response now, according to Cuban officials, because of what they describe as a crescendo of U.S. "aggression" and criticism that can no longer be ignored.

The Reagan speech seems to have particularly irritated the Cuban government, because it was made in Miami before Cuban-Americans who are among Castro's most vehement critics and include veterans of the Bay of Pigs invasion of Cuba.

In addition, the address came on the 81st anniversary of Cuban independence from Spain, which in the Cuban perspective marked the opening of U.S. domination over the island.

Goldwater's subsequent television interview, suggesting that the United States would be better off with Cuba as its 51st state, also touched a raw nerve here. It recalled the decisive U.S. role in Havana before Castro's 1959 revolution, and the U.S.-sponsored Bay of Pigs attack in 1961 that the government repeatedly cites as an example of what could happen again.

This suggestion has been reinforced recently by U.S. backing for Nicaraguan guerrillas fighting to overthrow the Sandinistas in Managua.

The Cuban government has announced no change in foreign policy, and there is no indication it plans a direct response to the United States. At the same time Castro himself has remained silent and out of public view over the past week.

But for what appears to be a combination of internal political reasons — a need for periodic revitalization of revolutionary spirit in the population, and a genuine concern that Reagan-administration rhetoric has reached such a pitch that its threats might become reality — a series of responses was set in motion.

The first Granma editorial, "Imperialist Hysteria," was unusually long, taking up half the front page and two-thirds of page 2.

Carefully organized, it sought to rebut point by point Reagan's charges concerning Cuban labor unions, foreign military involvement, economic difficulties, official participation in drug-smuggling and the status of Miami's Cuban exile community.

In a pointed reminder, the party organ also said that Reagan's appearance in Miami marked the first time a U.S. president has addressed Cuban-Americans there since 1962, when John F. Kennedy "received from the defeated invaders a flag that was not precisely covered with glory and promised to return it to Havana."

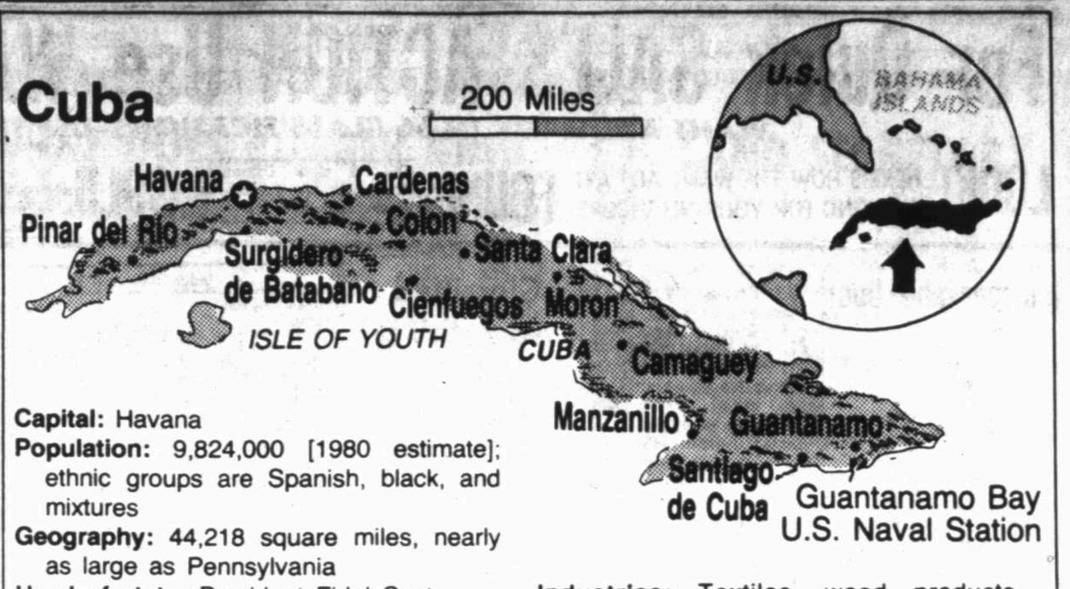

With this as background, the editorial questioned Reagan's leadership and charged his speech was at once an electoral maneuver aimed at Hispanic voters and a real threat to Cuba.

"The mediocre electoral spectacle of May 20, in spite of its burlesque falseness, carries a threat that we cannot ignore," it went on. "It is not exactly lucidity and realism that dictate Ronald Reagan's conduct. Once again he demonstrated to what extremes he is ready to descend. In his hysterical arrogance, Ronald Reagan is capable of any adventure ..."

Referring to U.S. charges repeated by Reagan in Miami that Cuban officials have been involved in drug-trafficking to the United States, the editorial added:

"It is frankly unbelievable that the president of a country where the proliferation of social afflictions such as drug addiction, prostitution in all its forms and degenerations such as generalized pornography would make Sodom and Gomorrah blanch, should accuse Cuban officials — and by extension our government — of promoting drugs that do not need promotion in the United States."

The following day, reacting to Goldwater, Granma published a still more strongly worded editorial portraying the senator's reference to invasion as a reflection of Reagan's foreign policy, and therefore as a threat to Cuba comparable to Hitler's threat to gobble up Austria before World War II.

Capital: Havana
Population: 9,824,000 [1980 estimate]; ethnic groups are Spanish, black, and mixtures
Geography: 44,218 square miles, nearly as large as Pennsylvania
Head of state: President Fidel Castro
Per capita income: $840 [1977]; U.S., $7,043 [1977]
Literacy rate: 94 per cent
Religions: Roman Catholicism prevailed in past
Language: Spanish
Industries: Textiles, wood products, cement, chemicals, cigars
Chief crops: Sugar cane [80 per cent of exports], tobacco, coffee, pineapples, bananas, citrus fruit, coconuts
Minerals: Cobalt, nickel, iron, copper, manganese, salt

History: When Cuba was discovered by Columbus in 1492, about 50,000 Indians lived there. Cuba remained Spanish until 1898, except for British occupation of Havana in 1762-63. Spain failed to carry out guarantees of rights that ended a 10-year uprising in 1878, and a full-scale revolt began in 1895 under Jose Marti. Spain gave up all rights to Cuba at the end of the Spanish-American War in 1898. Although the United States withdrew its troops in 1902, it leased a site at Guantanamo Bay as a naval base under 1903 and 1934 agreements, and U.S. and other foreign investments dominated the Cuban economy. Former president Fulgencio Batista established a dictatorship in 1952. Batista fled Jan. 1, 1959, and guerrilla leader Fidel Castro became premier Feb. 16 of that year, instituting sweeping economic and social changes.

'Soviets want missile agreement'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Ambassador Edward Rowny said today he is convinced the Soviet Union, despite its use of "stalling tactics" at arms control talks, wants to reach an agreement with the United States limiting intercontinental missiles.

"Everything I have seen so far in these three rounds of negotiating persuades me that the Soviets want — and may even need — an agreement," Rowny said.

He said he is cautiously optimistic that the United States and the Soviet Union can reach an agreement based on the proposals President Reagan set forth a year ago.

Rowny, chief U.S. negotiator at the Strategic Arms Reduction Talks (START), spoke to the American Association for the Advancement of Science in Detroit. A copy of his speech was released in Washington by the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency.

His speech was aimed at setting the stage for the next round of the Geneva talks, which begin in early June. The two sides have been in recess since April.

Rowny accused the Soviets of stalling during the earlier negotiating rounds, and he offered four possible reasons:

—The Soviets have placed higher priority on the parallel negotiations in Geneva on reducing intermediate nuclear forces (INF) in Europe. "Until the Soviets are convinced that they cannot thwart the outcome we seek in INF and prevent the deployment of missiles in Europe, they will continue to make progress in START contingent on no deployment of U.S. missiles in Europe," he said.

China silent on citizens' explusion

PEKING (AP) — The Chinese government is keeping silent about the ongoing expulsion of its citizens from Soviet-backed Mongolia, indicating China may not want to upset the normalization talks it has begun with the Soviet Union.

For at least two months, Mongolia has been expelling hundreds, perhaps thousands of Chinese passport holders on various pretexts and loading them onto trains back to China.

About 7,000 Chinese live in Mongolia, including many who moved there as laborers in the 1950s. Now, large numbers of them are being ordered to resettle on government-run farms near the Gobi desert or forced to leave the Communist nation sandwiched between China and the Soviet Union.

The expulsion by Mongolia could not take place on such a large scale without the acquiescence of the Soviet Union, according to foreign diplomatic analysts.

China, Mongolia and the Soviet Union all have maintained a public silence on the matter. Western journalists learned of the explusions only recently from foreign travelers who met displaced Chinese on trains from the Mongolian capital of Ulan Bator.

Some analysts say the expulsion is linked to the current Sino-Soviet consultations on improving relations. The first round was held last October, the second last March and the third round has not been scheduled.

Some observers say China's silence on the expulsion could mean it does not want to upset the new dialogue with Moscow by a vublic protest or retaliation that would set back the process of normalization.

"This must be hard for the Chinese to swallow," said one analyst. "China is always incensed at ill-treatment of overseas Chinese anywhere in the world. It was publicly infuriated when Vietnam started expelling ethnic Chinese in 1979, but so far it says nothing about the people in Mongolia."

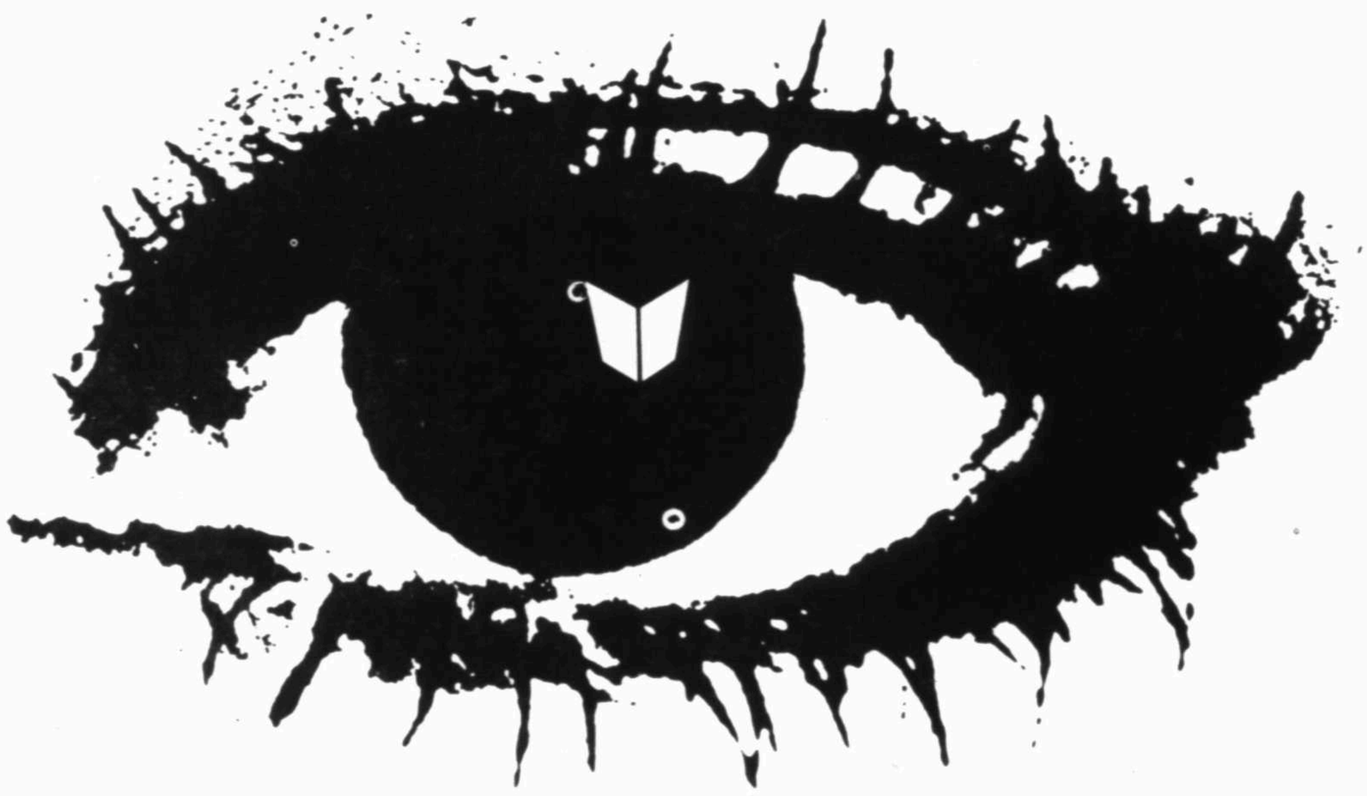

"China obviously is not ready to make this an issue now."

Other observers say Mongolia fears a thaw in the relations between China and the Soviet Union and wants to spoil the process or at least interject itself into the dialogue.

Others say there is no sign of thaw but rather of mutual Sino-Soviet irritation. They say the expulsion, even if started by Mongolia, could be an expression of Soviet dissatisfaction with Peking's intransigence on three other issues.

China has demanded an end to Soviet support for Vietnam's occupation of Cambodia, withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan, and a reduction of Soviet troops along the Sino-Soviet border and in Mongolia. The Soviet Union has about four divisions, each with about 10,000 troops, in Mongolia.

No progress has been detected in any of these areas.

World leaders return to economic issues

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. (AP) — President Reagan and the five leaders of key industrialized democracies today returned to their summit talks on the problems that are troubling the world's economy.

U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz gave a thumbs-up sign as he entered the Williamsburg Inn for the third formal set of discussions, which had been marred on Sunday by a dispute, which they ultimately resolved, over a statement on arms control in Europe.

In the last day of their Memorial Day weekend talks, the leaders and their aides crowded around a large oval conference table in this historic town.

The leaders, representing Canada, France, Italy, Japan, West Germany and the United States, were joined in the discussions by their foreign and finance ministers. Also attending the sessions was the head of the European Common Market.

British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher left late Sunday to return to the campaign in the June 9 British parliamentary elections. Foreign Minister Francis Pym and Geoffrey Howe, chancellor of the exchequer, attended in her place.

The foreign leaders already have registered their concern about the high interest rates in the United States they fear are delaying their own recovery from the long recession.

They urged Reagan to try to lower the giant U.S. budget deficits, which they contend are keeping the interest rates high.

In addition to interest rates, the leaders discussed high unemployment, trade barriers and the international debt crisis.

Leaving their aides behind, the seven world leaders met alone Sunday in the House of Burgesses, where George Washington, Patrick Henry and other members of Virginia's colonial legislature once sat.

Joining Reagan were Mrs. Thatcher, Canadian Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau, French President Francois Mitterrand, West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl, Italian Prime Minister Amintore Fanfani, Japanese Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone and Gaston Thorn, president of the European Economic Community.

At the end of their talks today, they were expected to issue a statement that would likely restate their intentions to cooperate on ensuring a strong recovery.

Indeed, a draft statement circulating among foreign officials gave renewed support for achieving "non-inflationary growth of income and employment." It also urged greater stability in the exchange markets. The dollar has recently risen in value in comparison with other major currencies.

Sunday's dispute on arms control occurred when the French and Canadians, with some support from the Italians, objected to a strong statement supporting NATO's planned deployment of medium-range nuclear missiles in Europe, according to U.S. and European sources who would only discuss the issue if their names weren't used.

The French and Italians, wanting to keep the focus of the conference on economic issues, objected to having arms control be the subject of the summit's first statement, the sources said. The Canadians sought a firm statement that disarmament was the allies' goal.

Press 'nibbling' at summit stories

Foreign Affairs Editor, The Hearst Newspapers

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. — The biggest hit of this seven-nation economic summit, at least with the 3,000 members of the world's press corps, has turned out to be a four-inch-wide cookie — "the original Tom's Mom's chocolate chocolate chip cookie."

They are being doled out to the giant press corps free-of-charge, together with overcooked hamburger patties, roast beef sandwiches, corn, potato salad, anemic-looking hot dogs, several brands of beer, soft drinks and garnishes at a lavish salad bar.

Real news stories have been so few and far between here that correspondents have spent a lot of time eating in what one newsman called the "fat farm," the enormous blue and white food tent connected by an awninged passageway to the international press center.

President Reagan asked dozens of American companies to donate their goods to this summit. So just as the Union Gas Company donated 5,000 gallons of gas to shuttle the seven leaders around, Tom's Mom's cookies of Charlevoix, Mich., donated their products.

The television networks have become so desperate that in almost Pirandello-style they are interviewing and videotaping each other being interviewed. "Friday night, we had a live shot from the Wren building," boasted Gordon Peterson, an NBC affiliate anchorman. It was a rare opportunity to actually film what the networks call "a stand-upper" from the grounds of the historic colonial Williamsburg area that has been closed — or "secured," as the secret service jargon goes — to all press since Saturday morning.

"I interviewed Hodding Carter in his capacity as former State Department spokesman," Peterson explained, "As I was interviewing Carter, and as my man was shooting Carter," the anchorman went on, "Carter's man (cameraman) was shooting my man and there was a third crew shooting the two of us, which I thought was a little incestuous."

Japanese crews were seen filming two attractive college coeds politely taking the cardboard trays from correspondents and dumping them, along with apple cores and half-eaten pies into a large waste disposal unit.

Who knows? Maybe the Japanese have uncovered some U.S. secret method of garbage collection that they can copy and improve on — and then sell back to the United States.

The only snafu propriately involved four dozen key lime pies flown in from the Florida Keys. In what is certain to be regarded as a breach of security, two secret service agents dropped the key lime pies during the dessert course of Saturday night's dinner for the seven leaders at Carter's Grove, the former 18th century plantation home here.

The press at least can see the news on a 24-hour, round-the-clock basis. There are television monitors in the press center that beam over giant satellite earth stations live hourly news broadcasts from the BBC and French television.

The same monitors televise the movements of the British, French, West German, Italian, European community, Canadian and American leaders whenever they venture forth onto horse-drawn carriages or onto the cobblestone streets of the restored colonial town.

Reagan's efforts to show his guests around was somewhat shortlived Saturday when a few minutes after they emerged, a sudden downpour thretened to drench the potentates.

The rain didn't stop British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher from inspecing a hand-hewn silver bowl. There were no "freebies," however, so the elegant "Iron Lady" of British politics politely put it back.

There was a moment of brief laughter as Gaston Thorn, the Common Market's Representative, picked up a hand-woven basket, carefully inspecting it. Instead of putting it back down, he thrust it on the head of Pierre Eliot Trudeau, Canada's Prime Minister, who momentarily looked bewildered, then laughed good-naturedly at the joke.

Memorial Day activities varied

By The Associated Press

Veterans of the nation's "most unpopular war" were honored this Memorial Day weekend, while a U.S. military adviser slain in El Salvador was mourned in his hometown and two buddies who last met on a World War II battlefield planned a reunion.

The long holiday weekend sent Americans heading for beaches and parks across the country despite flooding from melting snow in the Rocky Mountains and the Sierras and a smog alert in Southern California.

At least 236 people had died in traffic accidents by 8 a.m. today, the final day of the three-day holiday.

Four people were missing in river rafting accidents in California and Colorado, authorities said.

At Arlington National Cemetery outside the nation's capital, 19 members of an honor guard that buried the remains of two unidentified servicemen in 1958 returned Sunday to the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier to mark that ceremony.

A riderless horse led by two men in black berets commemorated dead Vietnam veterans in a memorial at Chicago's Cedar Park Cemetery, where 1,000 veterans are buried.

Vietnam War memorials were dedicated Sunday in Bridgeport, Conn., and Eufaula, Ala., where retired Army Gen. William Westmoreland told a crowd of 800 that the nation is "becoming proud" of its veterans.

"The nation will need stout-hearted men in the future even more," Westmoreland said. "We shall never forget you, we shall never forget you."

In Bridgeport, about 300 people were present at the unveiling of a memorial honoring the 29 area men killed in the conflict.

"The people of Bridgeport will remain forever proud, ever grateful because of the unselfish way our men took up our cause in the Vietnam War, the most difficult, dangerous and unpopular war in our history," said Mayor Leonard Paoletta.

Two former Army privates sent to separate hospitals in France after being wounded in the Battle of the Bulge in 1945 planned to relive their World War II experiences later this week at a golf tournament.

Cy Laughter, 56, who owns a Dayton, Ohio, tool company, has scheduled a reunion with Rayburn Fraley, 63, of Morgantown, W.Va.

"I can't tell you what happened last night, but I can remember in detail everything that happened when we were shot," said Laughter. "It just doesn't go away."

Navy Lt. Comdr. Albert Schaufelberger III, the only U.S. military adviser killed in the Salvadoran civil war, was remembered Sunday in a service on Fripp Island, S.C., attended by 260 people.

More than 200,000 rock music fans flocked to Devore, Calif., for the second annual US Festival, an outdoor concert marred by the beating death Sunday of one spectator.

An estimated 1,000 demonstrators in Cheyenne, Wyo., were urged at a "Peacekeeper Sunday Rally" to help block proposed deployment of the MX missile in Wyoming and Nebraska.

Most national parks were filled to capacity, but Yosemite National Park in central California closed 417 of its 750 campsites because of danger from the cresting Merced River, a spokeswoman said Sunday.

West Point's 'warriors' rest at oldest national cemetery

WEST POINT, N.Y. (AP) — The bodies of thousands of this country's finest warriors, men who fought in battles from the Revolution to Vietnam, are buried in a small, shady corner of the U.S. Military Academy overlooking the placid Hudson River.

It is the nation's oldest burial ground for its military heroes.

"They were burying American soldiers there right from the start of the Revolution," said Robert Mulligan, military curator of the New York State Museum in Albany. "There are only two cemeteries in the country which are so important from a military sense: West Point and Arlington. And Arlington derives its significance from the Civil War."

The oldest grave at the cemetery belongs to Dominick Trant, a young Revolutionary War soldier from Massachusetts who died at West Point in 1782, when the fort was a key outpost controlling river traffic.

The bodies of soldiers who were buried at the post before that were moved to the 14-acre cemetery when construction was begun on the new Military Academy.

Today, the bodies of generals lie alongside those of West Point graduates of lesser rank — and in some cases alongside their widows, children and a few civilian workers who died at West Point. There are about 5,000 graves in the small cemetery.

Soviets say U.S. 'pressured' allies

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union said today the United States pressured its allies into making a statement on nuclear arms at the Williamsburg summmit because it feared there would be disputes over economic issues on the agenda.

The official news agency Tass said the Reagan Administration "hurriedly" turned the debate at Williamsburg from economics to military issues when "acute contradictions" arose on financial questions.

"The American side hastily worked out and imposed on the meeting's participants the so-called joint statement" on nuclear arms issues, Tass said.

The statement issued Sunday at Williamsburg was delayed several hours because of objections by France and Canada to the text favored by the Americans.

The statement supported the North Atlantic Treaty Organization's plans to begin deploying new U.S. missiles in Western Europe.

'Diplomatic shuffle' continuing?

WASHINGTON (AP) — Gerald E. Thomas, U.S. ambassador to Guyana and a retired Navy admiral, is the top candidate to replace Deane Hinton as American ambassador to embattled El Salvador, a Reagan administration source says.

White House spokesman Larry Speakes declined to confirm Sunday that Hinton would be replaced, telling reporters, "We have no announcement to make."

But a well-placed official, who spoke on condition that he not be identified, confirmed that Hinton is on his way out and that three or four candidates are being considered to be his successor.

Another source, who also insisted on anonymity, said Sunday night that Thomas was the "leading candidate." He also said that while the final decision had not been made, it would be made by President Reagan "fairly shortly."

Hinton has been in the El Salvador post while the U.S. backed-government's war with leftist guerrillas has wound on inconclusively.

Thomas, 53, retired from the Navy in 1981 and has served in his present post since last year.

If Hinton is replaced as expected, it would follow Friday's announcement that Thomas O. Enders was being relieved of his duties as assistant secretary of state for Latin America. Enders will become the new U.S. ambassador to Spain.

Sources said Reagan was persuaded to approve the changes by National Security Adviser William Clark and others who seek to toughen U.S. policy toward the Salvadoran civil war.

The officials said Sunday that Clark, along with U.N. Ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick and others, convinced Reagan to replace Enders and Hinton by emphasizing that Reagan ought to have his "own people" in the posts.

One U.S. official, speaking on condition that he not be identified by name, insisted that policy differences played no role in the shake-up of the Latin American diplomatic staff while indicating that there were concerns over the execution of that policy.

Enders and Hinton, both career diplomats, were picked for their posts by Reagan's first secretary of state, Alexander M. Haig Jr., who resigned last June.

In an effort to play down Clark's role, the shift was being portrayed by some officials as designed to give Secretary of State George P. Shultz more direct control over Latin American policy.

But one key source, who was interviewed on the understanding he not be identified, said, "It's Clark and the NSC (the National Security Council staff). They want team-players and hard-hitting guys."

"Motley is that kind of guy and so will whoever is picked" to succeed Hinton, the source said. Langhorne Motley, now ambassador to Brazil, has been chosen to replace Enders.

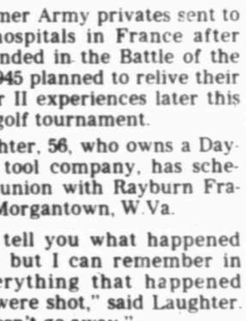

Enders nettled Clark and Mrs. Kirkpatrick last February by trying to promote negotiations with the leftist forces in El Salvador. His proposal conflicted with the Clark-Kirkpatrick view that the rebels should be forced to lay down their arms.

Enders supported the Salvadoran government's drive on the guerrillas, but his call for simultaneous negotiations appeared too conciliatory to administration hardliners.

Hinton, meanwhile, angered some officials with a widely publicized speech in El Salvador criticizing the abuse of human rights there.

AP Laserphoto Map

The National Weather Service predicts rain through Tuesday for the Great Lakes and northern New England, with showers forecast for central Florida.

Chance for rain at 50 percent

Evidently the farmers' rain dance is not perfected. More than any real rain, rain has just been threatening and teasing the dry earth with a sprinkling of moisture. By this time of year, the plowed earth around Midland is usually planted in cotton.

Tonight's 50 percent chance of showers and thunderstorms might just help farmers perfect the dance. If not, much of Midland's farmland may go unplanted in the mainstay crop, cotton, due to the lack of adequate underground moisture. But if some farmers plant this late in the planting season just to partake of the government's deficiency payments, their cotton crop may be scant to nil.

While the weatherman at the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport gives a reasonably good chance for rain tonight, his forecast for Tuesday is a less-than promising 20 percent chance of rain.

Tonight's low is to be in the low 60s, and winds are to be easterly at 10 to 20 mph. For Tuesday, the weatherman has predicted partly cloudy skies, a high near 80 and easterly winds at 10 to 15 mph.

Sunday's high temperature of 88 degrees was far afield from the record high of 104 degrees for the date in 1938. The overnight low was 61 degrees, while the record low for a May 30 is 46 degrees in 1937.

Extended forecasts

Wednesday-Friday

West Texas: Widely scattered thunderstorms mainly north. Otherwise partly cloudy with small day to day temperature changes. Lows upper 70s south to low 60s Panhandle. Highs mid 80s extreme north to near 104 in the Big Bend.

South Texas: Partly cloudy with a slight chance of thundershowers northwest sections Wednesday and a chance of thundershowers western sections Friday. Highs upper 80s to mid 90s and lows upper 60s to mid 70s.

North Texas: Mostly fair with isolated afternoon and evening thunderstorms. Temperatures near seasonal normals. Lows will be in the 60s and highs will be in the mid 80s to low 90s.

Flood workers build another run-off river

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Flood workers turned a second major thoroughfare into a sandbag-lined river to buy time in the battle against rising waters fed by melting mountain snows, officials said.

"We bought another 24 hours," said Al Haines, city director of administrative services, on Sunday. "If the weather holds up, we'll be all right."

Lower temperatures promised a reduction in the melting snowpack today while showers and thundershowers — and possibly snow in the mountains — threatened to aggravate problems throughout the state.

A two-mile-long, 7-feet-deep sandbag-and-plastic channel created on 1300 South Street has enabled the city to keep Mountain Dell Reservoir from overflowing.

On Sunday another river, City Creek on the north edge of the downtown area, spilled into the streets, rushing past Tabernacle Square, site of the Mormon Church's historic tabernacle and temple.

Sandbags kept runoff out of the square and an appeal was made for volunteers to create another sandbag channel, this one for a half mile along State Street.

Swollen streams were tearing up streets in Davis County, while also clearing mudslides. A dam in Utah County was spilling over and summer homes in Provo Canyon were flooded and National Guardsmen helped residents ate Lakeshore dike against the Spanish Fork River.

Muddy drinking water and broken pipes have forced residents of a half dozen communities to boil drinking water or truck it in from other areas.

More than $1 million has been spent in Salt Lake City alone to battle the floodwaters, but Mayor Ted Wilson said it has prevented many millions of dollars damage to homes and businesses.

"I think we're ahead of the game. A lot of communities wait until the water hits them and then bail it out," Wilson said Sunday night.

Wilson said about 4,000 volunteers showed up. At 9:15 p.m. thousands of spectators cheered as the water started flowing down the street.

The water was being confined to the east side of the street, away from the Mountain Bell building, where all of the telephone switching in the state is done.

At 400 South, the water was diverted into storm drains that carried it a mile west to the Jordan River, which flows into the record high Great Salt Lake.

Water broke through the dike at one spot about 11 p.m., flooding businesses, but the flow was reduced and the sandbag wall was reinforced.

City Creek was flowing at a record 234 cubic feet per second — the previous record was 156 — and could hit 300 to 360 before peaking, probably Tuesday, Haines said.

Davis County Commissioner Glen Saunders said there has been millions of dollars damage, primarily to streets and silt-filled storm systems, with scores of homes receiving at least minor damage.

Motorists were asked to avoid canyons and all roads through Davis County except Interstate 15, the state's major north-south thorofare, Saunders said.

The highway patrol said Lambs, Spanish Fork, Goshen, Maple, Diamond Fork, Tibble Fork and American Fork canyon roads were closed, as was a road off Provo Canyon to actor Robert Redford's Sundance Resort.

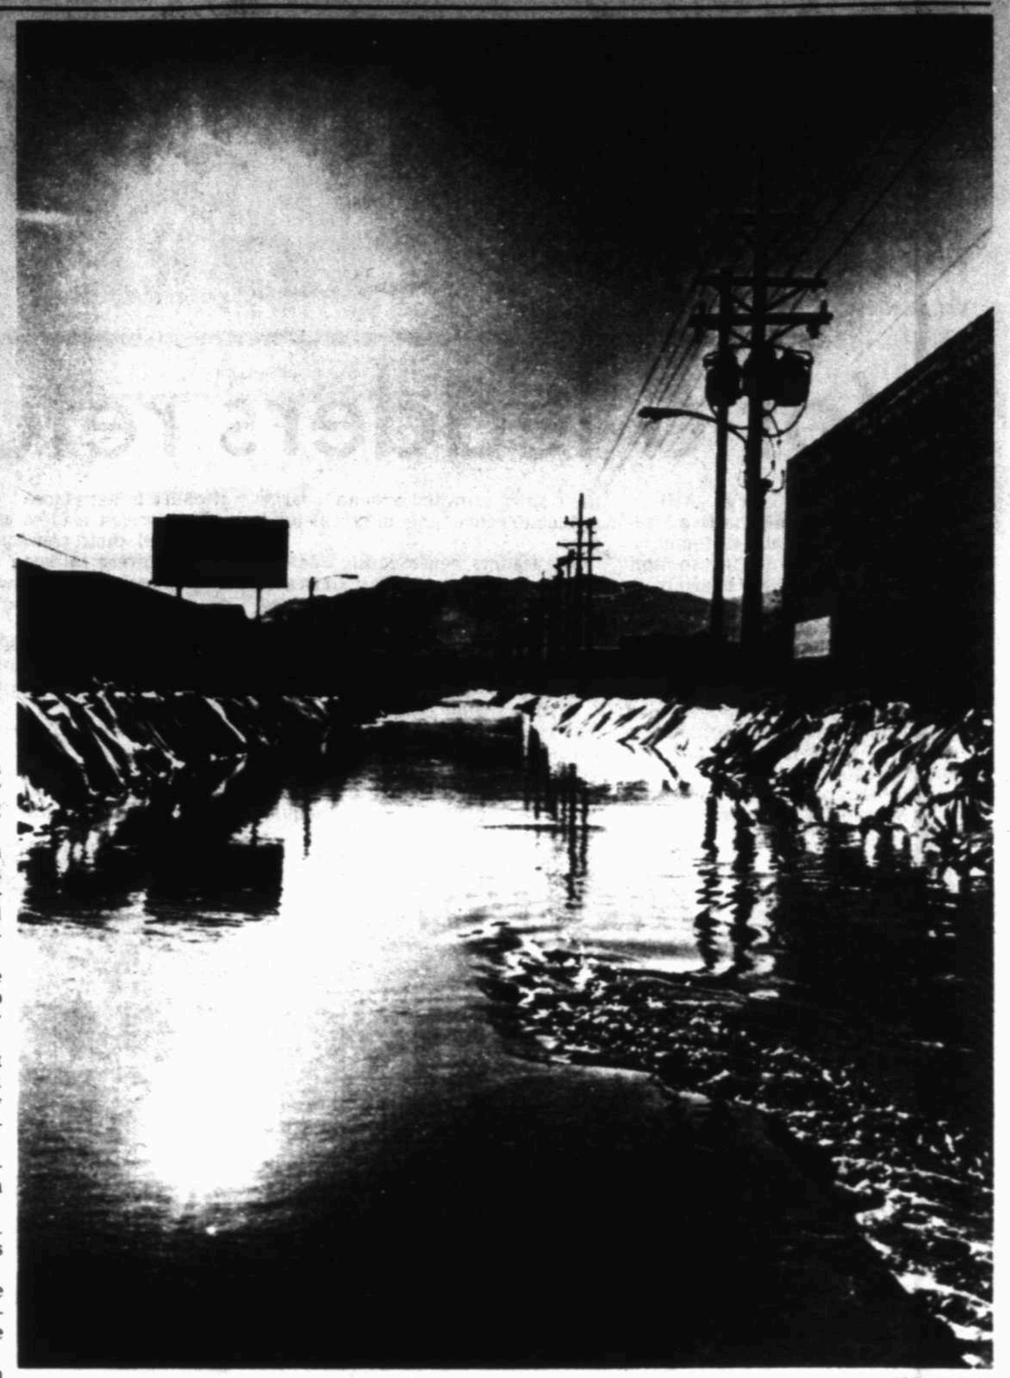

Interstate 15 was flooded at Levan, but a bypass for passenger cars was opened late Sunday, although semi-trailer trucks still were being detoured to U.S. 89.

Water was being restored block-by-block in Fairview after breaks in the water lines. The National Guard trucked water to the community.

Residents in Farmington, Draper, Mapleton, Santaquin and Vernal were told to boil water because of contamination from runoff.

Runoff pushed Goshen Reservoir in Utah County to overflow Sunday, prompting fears that the rush of water down the spillway would damage a highway, said Goshen City Clerk Verna Van Ausdal.

She said workers cut another channel, but it started to erode the dam, so it was plugged again.

Marion's residents still watch for signs of killer tornadoes

By TERRI COLBY
Associated Press Writer

MARION, Ill. — She moves more slowly now, but Alice Silkwood can still walk to the window where she watched in awe a year ago as the tornado that blasted her apartment tore through town, killing 10 people and injuring scores more.

"I was standing in the kitchen watching it and I guess I was just mesmerized. I couldn't move," says the 80-year-old woman. "Just the sight of it was awesome — it just had me spellbound, I guess."

Many town residents — especially school children — still scan the skies nervously whenever the weather is cloudy.

In a memorial service Sunday, about 450 people gathered to remember the 10 who died, pausing for a moment of silence at 3:15 p.m. — the instant the twister hit last May 29, cutting a path of destruction that touched virtually everyone in town.

Mrs. Silkwood clearly recalls the moments after the tornado struck, when she awoke under a pile of rubble in her apartment. She suffered a gashed head, mangled feet and broken bones.

"When I heard my name I couldn't move except this one hand," she said. "I got it up through the rubble and they saw it and came running."

The town sustained $85 million in damage, said Mayor Robert Butler, with about 100 homes destroyed and another 60 suffering major damage.

Most of them have been rebuilt or repaired. Of about 50 businesses destroyed or damaged, all but two have reopened. The 192-unit Shawnee Village apartment complex, where seven of the 10 people were killed, has been rebuilt. And 21 new businesses have opened since the twister touched down.

The reconstruction created jobs and improved business when people began buying building materials, replacing cars and furnishing their new homes, he said.

"It was a terrible price to pay for improving your community, but it is good that as much good has come out of the tragedy as did," Butler said.

Most of the city's visible scars are healed, although trees along the path of the tornado are gone. But the sight of storm clouds on the horizon still sparks more than the usual anxiety.

Educators who coped with the loss of a school also had to deal with children who panicked when clouds darkened the skies.

37-year-old man makes much ado about nothing

POMONA, Calif. (AP) — Doing absolutely nothing is a competitive sport to Bill Fuqua, who is trying for the world record for standing still.

The 37-year-old who stood motionless for 10 hours and six minutes in a Glendale shopping mall brought his non-act to a swap meet at the Los Angeles County fairgrounds for the Memorial Day weekend.

He stood still for three hours, just to stay in shape.

"The Motionless Man: Make Him Laugh, Win $100," said the sign next to Fuqua, but despite the antic efforts of challengers including one boy who put two balloons under his shirt and identified himself as Dolly Parton, the only things that moved were his eyelids.

"I do blink," Fuqua said later. "Once every seven to eight minutes."

Blinking is allowed by the Guinness Book of World Records, which lists the record-holder for motionlessness as Melody Schick, who stayed still for 8 hours, 33 minutes at the National Association of Broadcasters convention in Las Vegas, Nev., on April 15, 1981.

"It's fun not smiling at the jokes," he said. "Sometimes I make a little sound that maybe only the kid nearest to me can hear. He'll tell someone else that I made a noise and then I keep quiet."

Standing motionless can be dangerous.

A few years ago, a man in Arlington, Texas, stabbed Fuqua and punctured his lung. The man apparently thought Fuqua was a mannequin. Fuqua now has a bodyguard, Fred Esquivel.

Fuqua, from Fort Worth, got his start at age 14 when, as a joke, he stood motionless in front of a Christmas tree.

"A lady touched me and said, 'Oh, I thought it was a real person.'"

Some of those trying to crack his serene, sunken-eyed composure at the fair on Saturday also wondered if he was real.

Anti-MX protesters told Congress 'bamboozled'

CHEYENNE, Wyo. (AP) — Sen. Gary Hart told more than 1,000 demonstrators at an anti-MX missile rally that President Reagan has "bamboozled" Congress into appropriating money for the weapon.

Hart, one of six announced Democratic presidential candidates, urged those at Sunday's rally to ask their senators to block deployment of 100 MX missiles in Wyoming and Nebraska.

"If we can turn around 10 votes in the U.S. Senate, we can stop the MX missile, and we have time to do it," Hart said.

However, Reagan's MX plan has the support of Wyoming's two senators and single congressman as well as many people in the community. Nearby Warren Air Force Base has controlled nuclear-tipped missiles for more than 20 years, and many Cheyenne residents seem to take them for granted.

Hart was among a dozen speakers at the "Peacekeeper Sunday Rally" at a Cheyenne park less than a mile from the Air Force base, the command post for the MX missiles.

The rally, the first major protest against the missiles in Wyoming, was organized by a loosely structured group calling itself Western Solidarity, a clearinghouse for local anti-MX and nuclear freeze groups in eight Western states.

About 250 people marched from the state Capitol to Lion's Park to start the rally, many wearing shirts proclaiming "No MX — Not Here, Not Anywhere."

Hart, one of four Democratic presidential candidates to vote against MX financing last week, said the MX still faces key votes, and he urged people to concentrate on "soft" swing votes to kill the project. The congressional resolutions passed last week freed $625 million for MX development and flight testing.

Hart said Reagan "bamboozled a majority of both houses of Congress to spend money we don't have for a missile that threatens the security of the world."

Other speakers included retired Rear Admiral Eugene Carroll Jr., three ranchers who made a self-styled peace mission to the Soviet Union last December, Indian activists and trial lawyer Gerry Spence.

Enders' ouster engineered by four top Reagan aides

Hearst Feature Service

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. — A "cabal" of four Reagan intimates — CIA Chief William Casey, National Security Adviser William Clark, UN Ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick and USIA Director Charles Wick — asked President Reagan to fire top Latin America policymaker Thomas O. Enders.

This was disclosed today by sources close to Enders, who told the Hearst Newspapers that the move was engineered behind the back of Secretary of State George Shultz, who reportedly was infuriated, and has decided to personally take over control of Central America Policy as a result.

According to the State Department sources, there were three main factors responsible for Ender's ouster. The first was the charge that he sat on a "white paper" for three weeks that accused Cuba of stepping up its guerrilla activities in Nicaragua and El Salvador.

The "white paper," which Enders believed would not contribute to the search for a negotiated settlement because it basically contained nothing new, was written chiefly by Constantine Menges, a former CIA National Intelligence officer.

The second factor in Enders' firing and pending re-assignment as Ambassador to Spain was the appointment and confirmation last week of former Florida Sen. Richard Stone, a hardline Democrat, as Reagan's personal envoy to Central America. That, in effect, made Stone the chief policy executor, a fact underscored by Reagan's planned announcement this week that he is sending Stone on a 12-nation tour of Latin America.

The third factor was said to be CIA Chief Casey's own anger that Enders was indirectly responsible for the leaking of a top-secret CIA study that concluded the U.S.-supported rebels in Nicaragua had a good chance of toppling the Sandinista government there. Casey was said to be furious over the comments of one unidentified congressman to the New York Times Tuesday that "the CIA always lies to us." Casey reportedly believes that Enders may have said something along the same lines.

The Enders controversy apparently came to a head early last week when Wick and Casey discovered that Enders had refused to released the "background paper on Central America," charging Cuba with expanding "political-military activism."

Kirkpatrick, who has virtually become Reagan's key adviser on Central America, was said to have requested a meeting with National Security Chief Clark to formally ask that Enders be replaced.

At about 11 a.m. Thursday, Clark personally brought the recommendation to Reagan at a 15 minute meeting in the Oval office. Reagan was said to have signed off on it before giving Shultz the chance to register his own opinion.

The upshot of the firing, according to State Department spokesman John Hughes, is that Shultz himself will take over control and ultimate responsiblility for Central America. But the plain fact is that the hardliners now are predominant.

A wider shakeup of diplomatic assignments in Central America also is contemplated.

Text by Georgia Temple

Tenochtitlan fell to the Spanish conquistadores, led by Hernando Cortes, in August of 1521. Thus began 300 years of Spanish rule in Mexico. And along with Spanish rule went the Spanish faith — Catholicism.

Not too long thereafter religious art was introduced into Mexico as a persuasion toward the acceptance of Catholicism. For about 200 years, paintings, sculptures and prints depicting saints and religious persons could be afforded only by the wealthy.

When tin became available as an alternative to canvas during the 19th century, a new Mexican folk art developed, flourished and then died out completely during the early 20th century with development of inexpensive lithographs and steel engravings.

But during the 19th century, thousands of small oil paintings depicting saints were produced on tin by anonymous artists for use by the poor.

An exhibit of this type of work — Mexican Folk Retablos — is on display in the Anthropology Gallery at the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave. The show closes June 19.

Retablos were placed on home altars in Mexico by devout Catholics who were appealing for assistance to the particular saint or religious person depicted. As the exhibit notes state: "The Church's official iconography was strictly followed in representing saints, who were identified through specific costumes and attributes."

In the exhibit, 26 persons can be identified through their attributes (objects or incidents generally associated with a particular saint).

—The Trinity: Depicted by retablo painters as three images of the same person in disregard to a ban imposed by the Catholic church in 1745, God the Father bears the image of the sun, Christ shows the wounds of the crucifixion and the Holy Ghost is traditionally associated with a dove.

—Our Lady of the Immaculate Conception: Mary is shown as a young girl, clutching the dove of the Holy Spirit to her breast, to portray the descent of the Holy Spirit. The roses and lilies symbolize purity.

—St. Joseph: Joseph, Christ's temporal father and patron of the family, fathers, husbands, carpenters and those seeking a home, is traditionally shown wearing a green robe and yellow mantle symbolizing new life, marriage and fertility.

—The Powerful Hand or the Five Persons: The central image of the hand with the stigmata (wounds of Christ) most likely comes from the story of St. Francis. The lambs symbolize Christ in his sacrificial role. The five figures are Christ, Mary, Joseph and Mary's parents, Joachim and Anna.

Little is known of the artists who painted these delightful works.

The exhibit notes state: "These folk artists were generally self-taught and probably made their living at another trade. Some may have been employed in workshops where retablos were produced under the direction of a master.

"Retablo painters worked in a style based on 17th century European paintings and prints. The Mexican artist's lack of formal art instruction and his naive view of nature, however, transformed the European tradition into a highly conventionalized and decorative style."

Capt. Peter Vanherwaarden stands by the Turkish ship "Meric" in Port Arthur. Capt. Peter is a ship chandler, a retailer who brings supplies to a ship.

Ship's chandler can't seem to stay away from ocean

PORT ARTHUR (AP) — He's got the sea in his blue eyes and can't seem to stay away from it. Capt. Peter Vanherwaarden was a ship's captain at the age of 24.

"Just call me Captain Peter," he says. "Nobody can pronounce my last name — it's an old Dutch one."

For about 15 years, Capt. Peter rode the waves. He guided oil tankers, cargo ships and even a yacht.

"I got sick and tired of living out of a suitcase," he says. But he still returns to one ship or another every day of his life.

Capt. Peter is a ship chandler. In sea language, this means a retailer who brings supplies to a ship. The supplies can range from provisions to mechanical equipment. Unusual requests have been made to chandlers over the years, and Capt. Peter is no stranger to weird orders. "They ask me for anything!" he exclaims.

He heads the Sabine division of Houston's Superior Marine Supply; this branch just opened in February and is temporarily operating out of Capt. Peter's apartment.

Whenever a ship pulls into Port Arthur, Capt. Peter is there with his price list. He also brings a copy of the daily newspaper and five copies of "Today's Gulf Coast," which lists area restaurants and events.

"The modern sailor has changed," Capt. Peter says. "They're not going to run to the nearest whorehouse anymore. They like to go to restaurants, and they like to drink. That's part of the business."

THIS DAY, the "Liechtenstein" arrives from Ethiopia. It's manned by a Korean crew. Capt. Peter gets a daily list of all incoming ships from the Sabine Pilots, and he picks which one to visit.

"There, she's coming," he says with enthusiasm.

Capt. Peter is dressed for the occasion. He wears a gray corduroy suit, white turtleneck and boots. He's ready for a sales call.

He drives his little brown Fiat over the rough gravel and parks on the dock. A rat scampers by as Capt. Peter watches the ship pull in.

"Boy, is she dirty," he complains. He points out the green growth and barnacles encrusted on the ship's bottom. "Look at that beard." Capt. Peter shakes his head.

Because he was a sailor himself, Capt. Peter knows how to act when a new ship arrives. "I speak that guy's language and know what he needs," he says.

What worries him is the reception that sailors get in Port Arthur. No one seems to realize that sailors here are an untapped boost to the local economy, he says.

"These guys spend money," he says. "They really are a part of our economy."

Just last week, Capt. Peter met a sailor who spent $1,000 here on a video game. But he's the exception rather than the rule. Most sailors don't know where to go once they dock.

"They always ask me, 'Where can I go shopping?'" he says.

AS A BOOST for his own business, Capt. Peter takes ship captains to the local malls when he has time, but he doesn't enjoy doing it.

"I hate it, but they're so grateful," he says. Some of the items most in demand, especially for foreign crews, are jeans and other articles of clothing that are much cheaper here than in Europe and Asia.

Capt. Peter is trying to work on some type of publication to inform foreign sailors of what's available in Port Arthur. He speaks Dutch, English, German, Spanish and French and wants to list events and other information in all five languages.

"I'm the only one who does this," he says. "The sailors should know where they can go to eat and where there's entertainment. They need to know what's going on. That's the best we can do."

Capt. Peter leaves the "Liechtenstein" without getting its business. A competitor from Houston, who happened to be Korean, won the ship's order. But Capt. Peter is not disheartened. He's done what he could.

"I'll probably get the next ship," he says.

One week later and 10 ships later, he gets an order from a Turkish ship, the "Meric." On board, Capt. Peter talks politics, religion, sex and sea living with Capt. Alper Tijnga. The two capains smoke cigarettes and drink Pilsen Birasi beer from Efes, Israel.

They talk about the responsibilities of a ship master.

"IN THE PORT, plenty problems," says the Turkish captain. "Coast Guard. Customs. If you're a master on board, it's too much. The stress," he says.

Neighbors oppose dump for wastes

DEVERS, Texas (AP) — Five brothers from a prominent Liberty County family have designs on their farmland that have many of their neighbors crying foul.

Arthur, David, Donald, Lamar and Lloyd Maxwell envision truckloads of toxic chemicals — some from the Environmental Protection Agency's 418 Superfund waste cleanup sites — traveling to their land near this Southeast Texas town.

The brothers have signed a joint-venture agreement with a Pennsylvania company that intends to turn 585 of the Maxwells' 10,000 acres into a hazardous waste landfill. The company also plans to put a toxic waste injection well on the brothers' farmland.

"Those boys have sold their souls for a mess of pottage," resident Bill Daniel told the Dallas Times Herald.

Daniel, who in 1961 was appointed governor of Guam by President John F. Kennedy, now is president of People Against a Contaminated Environment.

He vows that the group will fight "an Alamo battle with a San Jacinto finish" to keep Liberty County free of toxic waste sites.

Lloyd Maxwell, 43, brushes aside the opposition as "propaganda based on Love Canal scare tactics."

But in the two years since it was founded PACE has raised contributions ands pledges totaling $540,000 to fight the dump and another waste site tentatively planned near the Liberty County town of Dayton.

THE SECOND proposed site is on hold until its developers, Rollins Environmental Services Inc. of Wilmington, Del., can determine what limitations federal officials will place on it, said spokesman Barney Wander.

PACE members contend both sites pose a serious pollution threat to the Trinity River, Lake Houston and Pine Island Bayou, as well as the Chicot and Evangeline aquifers.

Since the area is only 5 to 30 feet above sea level, they say, floodwaters could swamp the sites and wash the toxic chemicals into the water supply.

"When you dig a post hole hereabouts, you hit water at 18 inches or so," Daniels said.

He maintained "there's no way these poisons won't leach into the aquifers" and contaminate local wells and the source of 50 percent to 60 percent ot Houston's drinking water.

"They haven't said a thing in the world about our site except that it floods, and we can prove that it doesn't," said Lloyd Maxwell.

The brothers cite a Federal Insurance Administration flood hazard boundary map that shows the flood plain approaching — but not reaching — the proposed toxic waste site. The brothers also say the waste pit will be lined with polyethelene over clay to prevent seepage.

Liberty County Judge Dempsie Henley, however, contends that both sites do flood.

"We've gotten federal disaster money on account of flooding in both areas since I've been county judge," said Henley. "And the whole county was awash in Hurricane Carla in 1962."

HENLEY, WHO says 95 percent of local residents oppose the toxic waste dumps, believes action should be delayed until the U.S. Geodetic Survey completes new flood plain maps in two years.

"We recognize that hurricanes exist here and that this area gets more rainfall than anywhere else in the state of Texas," said Len Jeoris, general manager of the Maxwell project, called Envirosafe Services of Texas Inc. He added that $12 million worth of improvements would be made on the land.

PACE members plan to turn out in force for a July hearing on Envirosafe's application for a permit from the Texas Air Control Board. Later, the group plans to oppose an expected application for a landfill permit from the Texas Water Commission, which has applied for authority from the EPA to handle landfill applications.

"We've hired top-flight technical people — soil engineers, ground water hydrologists, people involved in air emission technology — from three major firms," said Tom Aubry, a Houston attorney for PACE. "We're ready to fight this thing to the Supreme Court."

The Maxwells predict PACE will fail. And in the final analysis, said Lamar Maxwell, the opposition's only result will be that "the lawyers are going to get rich."

Congress' cafeteria U.S.' 'last plantation'

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Doris W. Johnson says she is underpaid and intimidated by her employer, who has refused for more than three years to permit the $11,700-a-year cafeteria cook and her co-workers to organize a union.

"They'll get rid of you if you try to have a union," Johnson says. "I'd like to bargain like everyone else."

Under the laws passed by Congress, most employers who deny a worker's right to unionize can be held in contempt of court or even jailed. But Johnson's boss isn't going to jail, because Johnson's boss is Congress, which has exempted itself from the very laws that guarantee nearly all other workers the right to join unions.

"This place should not be the last plantation in America," says Sen. Patrick J. Leahy, D-Vt., who has introduced bills that would allow Johnson and her fellow Senate cafeteria workers to organize. "Presently, it is the last plantation in America."

The workers, who are predominantly black and Hispanic and who formed the Capitol Employees Organizing Group in 1979, charge that the Senate has repeatedly trampled on their rights, ignoring efforts to discuss grievances and making it clear that unions are not wanted on Capitol Hill. Congressional exemptions to various laws are justified on the grounds that they ensure the separation of powers set forth in the Constitution.

The Senate cafeteria workers' fight to unionize began three years ago, when 130 of the 223 people employed by the Senate's restaurants signed up for a union, only to be told that Congress would deal with them individually.

Rebuffed by the Senate, the organizing group appealed last year to the International Labor Organization (ILO), a United Nations body that intercedes with governments to protect workers' rights. In November, the ILO sided with the employees, saying it hopes that dialogue between Congress and the workers will permit them to "carry out normal trade union activities in full conformity with the principles of freedom of association."

That has put the U.S. government in something of an anomalous position, because the ILO governing board includes representatives of the U.S., which pays a quarter of ILO's two-year budget of $230 million.

On Friday, the ILO board members — including the U.S. representatives — determined that they will decide in November what further action, if any, should be taken. In those same deliberations in Geneva, the union group points out, the ILO board decided to look into charges that the Polish government is suppressing Polish workers' attempts to organize.

"What makes this case interesting is the substance of the situation is not under our control" because Congress decides what laws it will follow, says David Weisz, a Labor Department official who helped transmit the Senate's position to the ILO.

For the employees who serve hamburgers, tuna sandwiches and tacos each day to senators, their staff members and the public, the legal details are largely beside the point. "We need someone to talk to," says William J. Harris, president of the union organizing group. "There is no communication."

Stuart S. Smith, a government public relations officer who has helped organize the group, says, "The greatest grievance is the lack of respect. These people are not allowed to meet with their employer as a group."

Besides the issue of salaries, many of the workers who serve $4.5 million in meals each year in the Capitol and Senate office buildings assert that they are subject to arbitrary firings, and that promotions are based on race.

"The whites come in and are moved up" into management, says Dorothy M. Garnett, treasurer of the union group.

At Unity College, students can really fly the coop

UNITY, Maine (AP) — While Harvard University's "Coop" may be the nation's best-known college bookstore, students at tiny Unity College also buy their books at The Coop. This, however, is the real thing: a chicken hatchery until a 185-acre poultry farm was converted to a private, liberal arts college.

The U-shaped, barn-red building, with a shingle missing here and there, houses Unity's bookstore, its dining hall and a fledgling art gallery.

To describe Unity College as rural is an understatement. Administrators recall the spring day two years ago when dozens of students lined up along the fence separating the campus from its nearest neighbor, a working dairy farm.

Suddenly, the crowd let loose a cheer; a cow had finally borne her calf.

Unity is carving out a niche as a school specializing in outdoors studies, a booming area that has kept the college alive in difficult times.

The outdoor image is apparent from the catalog. On the cover a color photo shows a hiker standing on a rock overlooking a mountain ravine. Inside are descriptions of such courses as Ice Climbing, Canoeing and Chainsaw Safety.

WOOL SHIRTS and jeans are the campus uniform, giving students a rough-hewn appearance with little trace of preppiness.

Unity has no varsity football, but its woodsmen's team, open to men and women alike, finished first last spring in a major competition against more than a dozen U.S. and Canadian rivals.

Unity traces its origins to the mid-1960s, when a group of local businessmen decided that a college was just what the Waldo County town of 1,200 needed to enhance its agriculture-oriented economy.

"It was essentially yet another liberal arts institution in the boonies," said Louis V. Wilcox Jr., a botanist who has emphasized outdoors programs since taking over in 1980 as Unity's eighth president. "It's still a liberal arts institution, but the focus is now on natural resources management and outdoor recreation."

With a year's tuition plus room and board at Unity adding up to more than $7,000, administrators acknowledge they have little hope of attracting general liberal arts students who can get at least as good an education at a state school for half the cost.

Instead, Unity is targeting a national advertising campaign at students interested in forestry, fisheries, wildlife, ecology, conservation law enforcement and outdoor recreation. Ads have appeared in big-city newspapers, as well as such publications as Backpacker, Outside and Outdoor Life.

"I DON'T FEEL we've even begun to scratch the market yet. I think we're just starting to let people know we exist," said Admissions Director Edward Hinkley, who increased the college's enrollment to 336 last fall, up from 305 the year before. The goal for next fall is 350 to 400.

Unity's outdoors programs have attracted students from as far away as Texas and California. About half the student body comes from outside New England; only about 15 percent is from Maine.

"We've gone national, and for this place to survive, it's going to have to continue to go national. If we limit ourselves to New England, we're dead," Wilcox said.

Students say they were attracted to Unity by its small size, relaxed atmosphere and rural character. Some also were influenced by the college's Maine location.

"I had gone on a 16-day survival trip in Maine and I liked the area," said freshman Debbie Matern of Little Compton, R.I., a National Merit Scholarship finalist who plans to work in outdoor recreation with juvenile delinquents.

The college emphasizes a field-oriented approach, taking students to woods and streams for instruction. In forestry, for example, it maintains a sawmill and woodlot operation in the nearby town of Plymouth.

UNITY ALSO developed an internship program to allow students to work in national parks, fish and game agencies and recreational programs such as Outward Bound. Graduates have gone on to become wardens, wildlife biologists, park rangers, recreation specialists and foresters.

The new administration has put the school on a stronger financial footing. "This year we're in the black for the first time in seven years, and we'll have a surplus," said Wilcox. At the end of the fiscal year, the debt should be down to around $200,000, or $100,000 less than it was in 1980, he said.

Although he hopes eventually to establish an endowment, more immediate priorities include repairing old buildings, buying new equipment and raising salaries for faculty members, who have gone without a raise for at least two years.

Nevertheless, faculty morale seems surprisingly strong, in part because of the intangible rewards of being in close touch with the outdoors.

"We don't have to drive 50 miles to do research. I open the back door and step into the woods," said Terry Bowyer, a wildlife management professor. "If you're interested in the outdoors, this is the ideal place to come to learn about it."

'Survivor' finds death at hands of robber

HOUSTON (AP) — Harry Kamion was a survivor. He cheated death as a captain in the Polish underground during World War II and survived torture at the hands of his Nazi captors.

Three times he had wrestled pistols from gunmen bent on robbing his plumbing supply store and sent them running from his store. He was younger then.

Saturday, the 67-year-old Kamion simply pleaded, "Don't shoot me." The gunman answered with three shots to Kamion's chest and one to his wrist. The business man was dead on arrival at Ben Taub Hospital.

"He had survived so much, he was so confident that he'd never get hurt," said his son, Alan.

Detectives said Sunday they had no suspects and were uncertain how much money or property the robber took.

"The war couldn't do it, the Nazis couldn't do it. But here in Houston — far, far away from the terrible past — a simple hoodlum took his life," said Kamion's wife, Evelyn.

Kamion and his wife, who both grew up in Warsaw, moved from New York to Houston in 1961 to start White House Plumbing in one of the city's tougher neighborhoods.

"My dad knew how to handle people no matter how tough they were," said the younger Kamion.

"One time a man came in on a busy Saturday morning and pulled a gun on Dad. My dad was so busy he told the guy to wait a minute and he'd be right with him and he walked away to wait on a customer. The guy waited a time with his gun then just walked out the door," he said.

He kept on display in his store the pistols he took from the three other gunmen.

"He was proud. And he had every reason to be. He was a strong man. He had faced death before and always won. But I guess he was getting older, slower. He didn't make it this time," the younger Kamion said.

Kamion said his father never reported the three men he disarmed because he said those were the rules of the neighborhood.

The elder Kamion's first brush with death was shortly after the German occupation of Poland.

While on a train heading toward a concentration camp, Kamion and a friend used a wedge smuggled aboard to pry open a door. They escaped from the moving train. Kamion was shot in the left leg, and his friend was shot in the head.
