Baltic dealings 'important'

■ How the Soviet Union deals with Lithuania's drive for independence could affect Washington-Moscow relations, Baker warns Shevardnadze.

By BARRY SCHWEID
AP Diplomatic Writer

WASHINGTON — Secretary of State James A. Baker III told Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze on Wednesday that how Moscow deals with the drive for independence in Lithuania holds "very important" consequences for superpower relations.

Baker's strong statement, at the conclusion of a 3½ hour session at the State Department at the opening of a new round of U.S.-Soviet talks, elicited a public assurance from the Shevardnadze that the Kremlin would find a peaceful solution in the Baltic Republic.

"Let me tell you very authoritatively and seriously I have no doubt we will be able to find a solution to that situation, that we will find a wise and fair solution," Shevardnadze said.

He added, without elaboration, that it would be in the interests of the Lithuanian people, the entire Soviet Union, Europe and peace.

At the conclusion of the first of three days of scheduled talks, Baker said Shevardnadze had brought a letter for President Bush from Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev. Baker declined to disclose any of the contents, saying that was up to Bush, who will meet with Shevardnadze at the White House on Friday morning.

The two ministers also discussed nuclear missiles. They hope to agree on the extent of the limitations to be placed on nuclear-tipped cruise missiles in a treaty Bush and Gorbachev would like to sign at a summit meeting here in June.

But the dramatic disagreement between Lithuanians determined to have their own nation and a Kremlin determined to avoid splintering the Soviet Union drew most of the public attention.

"This is a very, very important matter," Baker said. "I have pointed out to the minister how very important it is in terms of the relationship between the United States and the Soviet Union."

Baker said there was no disagreement with Shevardnadze "with respect to its importance, and with respect to the importance of resolving it through dialogue and through peaceful means."

Earlier, Baker told reporters he was encouraged that the Soviets seemed to be considering a referendum in Lithuania to determine its future.

"A referendum is, of course, one way for parties to express self-determination," Baker said before he escorted Shevardnadze to his 7th floor office.

A class act

WASHINGTON (AP) — Janis T. Gabay of San Diego, teacher of the year with a crystal apple and a presidential salute to show for it, says she once thought of quitting because she saw such lack of respect for her profession.

But Ms. Gabay declared herself optimistic about U.S. education Wednesday as President Bush and his wife, Barbara, honored her at the White House.

"The kind of people Jan represents are ambassadors to the most powerful province mankind might command — that great undiscovered realm right under your hat," Bush told a crowd that included 11 members of Ms. Gabay's family.

"For almost 40 years, the Teacher of the Year program has singled out the few, really because they represent the many," he said. "The program's goal is really not to identify the best teacher but the best in all teachers."

MC students get object lesson in accessibility

■ After spending a day in wheelchairs, Midland College architecture students discover that "hadicapped accessible" signs and the accompanying hardware don't necessarily make access easy for the physically disabled.

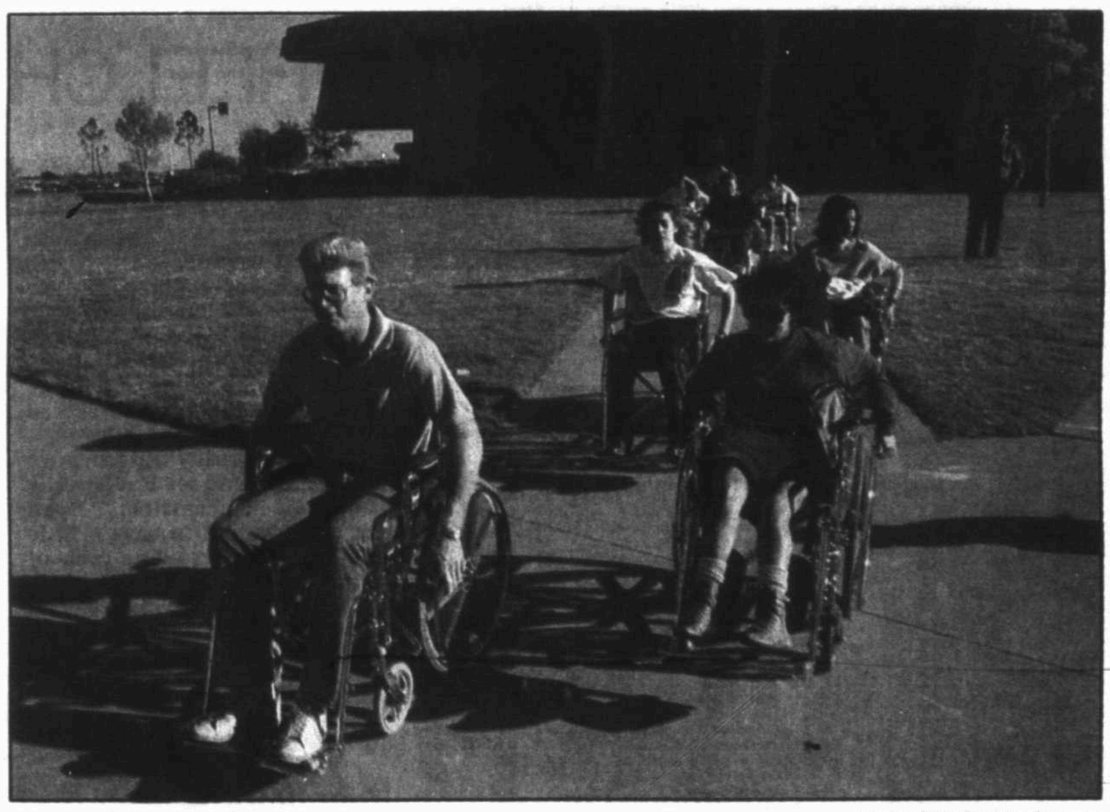

By David Morris
Staff Writer

The words "handicapped accessible" took on a new meaning for some Midland College architecture students Wednesday.

Tooling around campus in wheelchairs, members of John Edgar's Architecture Design class learned that the familiar "handicapped" insignia does not guarantee easy access.

"This will be a lasting memory," said freshman architecture major Melissa Cranford after she negotiated a maze of narrow corridors, uncooperative doorways and steep wheelchair ramps.

■ City officials await instructions on the cleanup of an area used for asphalt disposal after tests by the Texas Water Commission indicate the area contains traces of toxic chemicals.

By Brian Pearson
Staff Writer

Tests on samples taken from a city of Midland tar pit show mostly asphalt and some toxic materials such as lead and chromium, two reports released Wednesday show.

The Texas Water Commission and a Fort Worth engineering firm hired by the city each took soil samples from the site, located near the Orchard Lane-Carver Street intersection on the city's east side.

Ron Edington, a Carter and Burgess Inc. consultant who conducted one of the tests, said the pool of black ooze does not appear to be a public hazard.

"The material in the pit is composed primarily of hydrocarbons," Edington said. "We don't see any danger to the surrounding area at this time.

"The only danger we see is someone entering the area illegally and falling into the pit."

Edington said he found the pit last fall while inspecting the city's underground gasoline storage tanks. He reported the finding to city officials in February.

Deputy City Manager Mike McGregor said city workers have been dumping asphalt and possibly toxic substances at the site for more than a decade. Oil and other hydrocarbons also were suspected to be in the pit, he said.

McGregor said city managers did not know about the site until Edington reported it. The city immediately erected a chain-link fence around the pit, which measures about 75 feet by 100 feet and is

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Legendary jazz singer Sarah Vaughan, the "Divine One" renowned for her unusual range and flowing style peppered with flavors of be-bop and scat, died of cancer eight days after her 66th birthday.

Vaughan

Harold Levy, her manager and friend, said she died late Tuesday of lung cancer at her home in the Hidden Hills area of the west San Fernando Valley. She had been ill for nearly a year and was released from Cedars-Sinai Medical Center hours before her death.

"Sarah Vaughan was among the most powerful, influential and soulful voices of all time, a perfectionist with an astonishing vocal range and a genius for conveying emotion through her music," said Quincy Jones, who first worked with Vaughan in 1957 as the arranger on "Misty."

Some of her other memorable songs included "Broken-Hearted Melody," "Send in the Clowns," and "If You Could See Me Now."

Vaughan's voice, over which she had phenomenal control, had lovely tone and was true in pitch. She had a mastery of Big Spring death inspired by aliens?

BIG SPRING (AP) — A Howard County jury Wednesday found a Big Spring woman guilty in the shooting death of her husband, despite the woman's claim that she killed him to keep aliens from torturing him forever.

Janice Brown had pleaded innocent by reason of insanity to the May 31, 1989, death of her husband, Lonnie.

Police said Mrs. Brown had planned to kill her 5- and 6-year-old daughters and herself to keep the aliens away.

The jury received the case Wednesday afternoon and reached the verdict shortly afterward.

During testimony Wednesday, a psychologist testified that Mrs. Brown knew it was wrong to kill her husband.

"Someone can be as nutty as a fruitcake, and still know his actions are wrong," said Ron Cohorn, a clinical psychologist at Malone-Hogan Clinic, who examined Mrs. Brown last month.

Neighbors and friends testified in the trial that Mrs. Brown was terrified that aliens were going to torture her husband and her children for eternity. Psychologists have testified that Mrs. Brown was diagnosed as a paranoid schizophrenic.

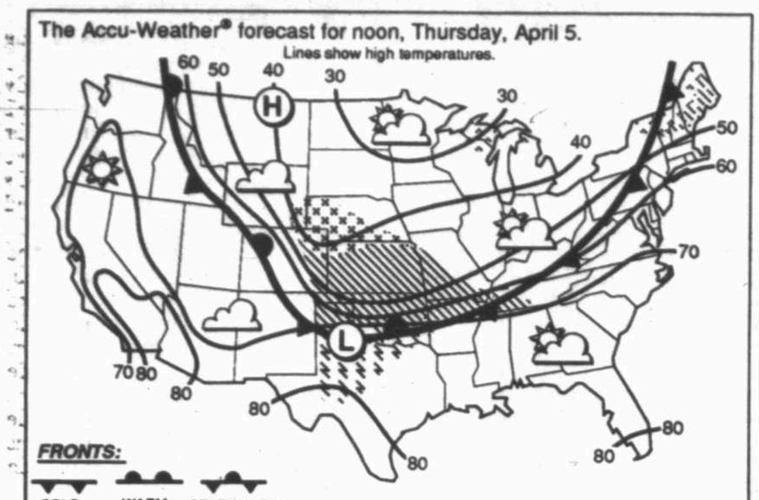

Meena Patel, a Midland psychiatrist Brown saw prior to the shooting, said Brown had taken anti-psychotic medication under her care but didn't like its side-effects of sluggishness and weight gain.

Mrs. Brown called Patel immediately after Lonnie Brown was killed and asked Patel what to do, the doctor testified. Patel said she told her to call the police.

"She was scared, histrionic, helpless. She didn't know what to do. I asked her why she did it and she said, 'Aliens were going to torture him so much and I

Cooler temperatures likely

National Weather Service forecasters at Midland International Airport are predicting cooler temperatures today with a 20 percent chance of showers or thunderstorms.

The high will be in the upper 60s and winds will be gusting out of the northeast at 10 to 20 mph.

Tonight will be mostly cloudy with a 20 percent chance of light rain. The low will be near 40. Friday will be cloudy and cool with a high near 50 and a 20 percent chance of light rain.

Wednesday's high was 83, 10 degrees off the record of 93 set in 1939. The overnight low was 47 degrees. The record low for today is 28 degrees set in 1970.

STATE

Much of Texas enjoyed sunny skies Wednesday, while a weak cold front was slipping into the South Plains.

The cold front stretched from near Childress to Clovis, N.M., by late Wednesday afternoon, but it created few weather changes.

Winds behind the front and just ahead of it were blowing from the north, while winds over the rest of the state were generally from the south and the southwest. Wind speeds were in the 5 to 15 mph range.

It was partly cloudy over much of South Central Texas and in far southern tip of the state.

The warmest spot Wednesday was Waco with 84 degrees, while the cool spot was at Dalhart with 68 degrees.

Temperatures were in the high 60s at 3 p.m. over the northern part of the Panhandle, and in the mountainous area between El Paso and Wink.

NATION

Showers produced locally heavy rain over the Northeast during the night and into the day Wednesday, triggering flood watches in Maine and New York state. Heavy snow fell in New York state.

Heavier rainfall totals for the 24 hours up to 8 a.m. EDT included 2.91 inches at Boston; 2.69 inches at Portsmouth, N.H.; 2.50 inches at Providence, R.I.; 2.17 inches at Hartford, Conn.; 2.05 inches at Albany, N.Y.; and 2.05 inches at Portland, Maine.

By afternoon, showers extended across much of the middle and northern Atlantic Coast region.

Flood watches were issued for streams and small rivers across much of Maine and for the St. Lawrence Valley and Lake Placid region of eastern New York state.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

about 50 yards from the nearest house.

Edington said he studied four samples, two from inside the pit and two from 10 feet away. The samples, drawn from 4 feet deep, were tested for metals, hydrocarbons, solvents and pesticides, he said.

Traces of lead, chromium, toluene and trichloroethene were found, he said.

Toluene is found in gasoline and paint thinners, while trichloroethene is found in degreasing solvents. Chromium is found in products used to coat steel and other metals.

The pit is mostly a pool of liquid asphalt, oil and other hydrocarbons, Edington said.

"It's just asphalt," Johnson said. "We're not seeing any type of toxic metals at all."

However, he said the tests showed traces of some of the toxic materials found by Edington. In addition, he said he did not test for materials such as transmission fluid and oil.

Johnson said the asphalt has apparently trapped the toxic materials and not allowed them to ooze into the surrounding soil.

To make sure, soil samples from between 25 feet and 30 feet from the pool will be taken within the next two weeks, he said.

McGregor said the city will clean up the pit as soon as Edington specifies how to excavate and dispose of the materials.

"It needs to be cleaned up," McGregor said. "We're going to do it as quickly as we can."

Edington said he could not estimate the cost of cleaning the site until he conducts more studies.

"The price will depend on the volume and how it's disposed," he said. "It's too thick to pump and too thin to scoop out with a back hoe."

He said the material may have to be transported to a hazardous waste dump rather than Midland's landfill.

Mike Butler, director of engineering and transportation, said he has known about the pit for about eight years.

"I was aware we were using the pit, but there was never any concern because it was just asphalt," Butler said.

didn't want him to go through that,'" Patel said. "In her mind it was the right thing to do."

Howard County sheriff's deputy Jimmy Wallace said Mrs. Brown told him she had killed her husband and planned to kill her two daughters and herself to keep aliens from torturing her family. Mrs. Brown said the aliens were outside waiting to come inside, Wallace testified.

Wallace said he recovered a .22-caliber rifle from the snack bar in the kitchen.

He testified that Mrs. Brown said one of the girls looked at her and asked, "Momma, are you going to shoot me like you shot Papa?"

Mrs. Brown told Wallace that she could not shoot the girls.

"She wasn't suffering from a defect that would render her unable to know her act was wrong," Cohorn testified Wednesday.

"We will be exploring the question of the degree to which there is, in fact, the beginning of some dialogue in Moscow," Baker said.

Baker said he intended to ask Shevardnadze about the cancellation of scheduled meetings between Lithuanians and officials of the Soviet Interior ministry. Shevardnadze, however, seemed to be unaware of such scheduled meetings.

"What happened today I have no information yet," the foreign minister said through an interpreter.

Later, neither Baker nor Shevardnadze gave any indication how the matter was resolved.

But responding to a question before his meeting with Baker, the foreign minister insisted the Soviets had not used force to deal with the secession movement in Lithuania.

"Of course," he said, "in any country, in any state, measures are taken in order to have order, in order to have a normal situation."

WHEELCHAIR: Ramps not always helpful

(From 1A)

"It's helped me a lot to realize the problems that the handicapped do have."

Ryan said he wants to educate building designers to the special needs of handicapped people.

"Nobody is really trained to go into a building to see if it is really handicapped accessible," Ryan said. "You've got to have a little bit of horse sense — it's a game of angles."

Edgar, meanwhile, said that architecture schools have been lax in teaching the importance of handicapped accessibility.

After seven years of college and a master's degree, Edgar said, he had learned almost nothing about building with handicapped people in mind.

He said he wants his own students' education to be more comprehensive.

"The architect is the one responsible, more than anyone else, for handicapped accessibility," Edgar said as he rolled his temporary wheelchair down an MC sidewalk. "As they go through design school, this (activity) builds their awareness."

Ryan agreed.

"This gives them our view — our problems that they don't normally find," he said. "We've got to start a change in what they consider minimum accessibility. Putting them in chairs gives them an idea how to do that."

The consensus among class members was that bookshelves need to be lowered, walkways leveled, and automatic doors without raised thresholds installed.

Students managed most of the tour without getting out of their wheelchairs, but an especially steep floor in the Allison Fine Arts Auditorium proved their undoing.

"One thing that shocked me was that not only do they (handicapped people) have to deal with the physical problem — but they also have to deal with getting through doors and everything else," said Carroll Simpson, a sophomore architecture major.

Ms. Ryan said she hoped a few hours of frustration for the students would translate into greater sensitivity later on.

"The best way for them to learn is to put them in the situation," she said.

Ms. Cranford, for one, promised to apply her newfound insight.

"I'm going to be more aware and put more things in my designs to make builings more accessible," she vowed.

scat singing, improvising, swinging and phrasing. "'Why do they always call me a jazz singer? I'm just a singer,' Sarah would always say," said Levy. "She was a singer's singer. The greatest."

She once told an interviewer that horns influenced her more than other singers, which was evident from her harmonic and rhythmic sense. A ceaseless innovator, she added that she never sang a song the same way twice.

Pianist George Shearing, who worked with Vaughan in the late 1940s, said her death was very significant for him because she was the first vocalist he performed with after emigrating to the United States from Britain.

"She's going to be very much missed in terms of being the exemplary voice in the pop field. She was the best contralto in pop," said Shearing. "She would hold on to great, big long notes without vibrato."

"Now that she's gone, there's no one to measure great singers with," said entertainer and jazz aficionado Bill Cosby.

"Sarah Vaughan was a complete vocalist and musician," Frank Sinatra said. "She was an instrument and she had an incredible sense of humor. Put those attributes together and we're talking about one of the finest vocalists in the history of pop music."

In a rare tribute to a celebrity, Mayor Tom Bradley ordered flags at all city buildings lowered to half-staff through Friday. That last happened when Lucille Ball died last April.

In New York City Wednesday night, a packed house for a regularly scheduled performance at the famed Apollo Theatre stood in respect to Vaughan and listened to a recording of her singing one of her hits, "The Nearness of You." Then they cheered and applauded.

Vaughan's style was formed by her early association with be-bop, singing with Billy Eckstine, Charlie Parker and Dizzy Gillespie in the Earl Hines and Eckstine bands in the 1940s.

During that time, with her deep, sultry voice and dramatic colorings, she was known as the most distinguished jazz singer of the '40s.

"Vocally, she was a giant singer," said Mel Torme. "Had Sarah decided to go another way she would have been a great legit singer. She could have done opera, for instance.

Soviets pick new ambassador

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Soviet Union, shuffling the top level of its foreign service, is expected to send a new ambassador to Washington in time for the June summit meeting betweem President Bush and Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev, administration officials said Wednesday.

Aleksandr A. Bessmertnykh would replace Yuri V. Dubinin, who has headed the Soviet Embassy here since 1986.

Dubinin is slated to become the new Soviet ambassador to France, said the officials.

Bessmertnykh, an urbane, experienced and well-traveled 56-year-old expert on the United States, Canada and the Middle East, is the first deputy foreign minister.

Dubinin, 59, who came to Washington fluent in Spanish and French, swiftly developed facility in English and oversaw the opening of the Embassy to news conferences and other sessions with diplomats and reporters under the glasnost, or openness, policy of Gorbachev.

The wavy-haired, smiling envoy was a self-described "popularizer of perestroika," the Gorbachev program for restructuring the Soviet economy. But he could also take on assignments with a hard edge.

As the Soviet ambassador to the United Nations, Dubinin in 1986 blasted the Reagan administration's slashing of the Soviet staff there from 275 to 170 as "large-scale political sabotage."

Bessmertnykh, an arms control specialist and a graduate of the Moscow State Institute of International Relations, is considered particularly close to Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze, who began three days of talks Wednesday with Secretary of State James A. Baker III.

Salvadoran government, rebels begin peace talks

GENEVA (AP) — El Salvador's government and leftist rebels met for U.N.-mediated peace talks Wednesday in a new effort to end their civil war, but disagreement quickly surfaced on the issue of a cease-fire.

Both sides and U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar agreed to seek a truce as an "initial objective" on the way to a negotiated settlement. But Shafik Handal, chief delegate of the Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front guerrillas, made plain his group links acceptance of a cease-fire to progress on political reforms.

The rightist, U.S.-backed government of President Alfredo Cristiani says suspension of fighting must have priority.

The two sides signed a U.N.-sponsored declaration committing them to seek a cease-fire and a definitive end to "the armed conflict through political means as speedily as possible."

The accord called for promoting moves toward democracy and respect for human rights in El Salvador, and reintegrating the FMLN fighters into the nation's shattered society.

The talks then recessed until May. No date or location was announced for the next round.

El Salvador's civil war has killed some 72,000 people since it began in 1980.

Siege at airport marked by shots

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — A private trying to desert the army held an empty American Airlines jumbo jet for a third day Wednesday, and fired at a commercial plane arriving from Miami, a radio report said. No one was injured.

Radio Metropole said Pvt. Gerald Pierre, who earlier threatened to blow up the Airbus A300 with grenades unless he was flown to the United States, fired a submachine gun once in the direction of a Haiti Trans-Air flight shortly after it landed.

Passengers and crew members were delayed getting off the plane, and officials later closed the airport.

Pierre, on the third day of the siege, appeared on the steps of the American Airlines Airbus several times Wednesday, firing into the air and then ducking back inside, radio reports said.

Estonia's president rebuked by Gorbachev

TALLINN, U.S.S.R. (AP) — Mikhail S. Gorbachev phoned the president of Estonia today and sharply criticized the Baltic republic's drive for independence, Estonian media reported.

Arnold Ruutel, president of Estonia's Supreme Soviet parliament, told official television that Gorbachev used strong words and was generally very angry during the conversation.

In a later radio interview, Ruutel said Gorbachev criticized Estonia's Supreme Soviet for declaring the republic an occupied state.

"When I heard of your resolution I was completely beside myself. You must declare the resolution null and void. It is an invalid one," Ruutel quoted Gorbachev as saying.

"It seems to me that I have to introduce similar measures as those taken in Lithuania," he quoted the Soviet leader as saying. Ruutel did not elaborate on those remarks when asked by the radio interviewer.

Soviet soldiers and tanks moved into Lithuania after officials in the republic refused to back down on their claim of independence, but Moscow has repeatedly said it would not use force there.

Ruutel said that after he explained Estonia's position and that it would not give up its desire for independence, the Soviet president calmed down, the television report said without elaboration.

No further details were available from the reported phone conversation.

Estonia said last week it would seek to re-establish independence at the end of a still-undefined transition period. But unlike their Baltic neighbors in Lithuania, the Estonians are taking a more careful line on secession and have called on Moscow to start negotiations.

The Estonian parliament's deputy speaker, Marju Lauristin, one of the leaders of the People's Front political movement, said she was pleased with the conversation despite its beginning.

"In spie of this first negative reaction, it is a contact and every contact is needed for negotiations," she said.

Lauristin said Gorbachev demanded from Ruutel a full report on the situation in Estonia. She said the report was being prepared and would be sent to the Soviet president as soon as possible.

Gorbachev's call followed appeals from non-Estonian nationalities to Moscow to protect the rights of Soviet citizens in the republic.

Estonia declared support for Lithuania's March 11 declaration of independence and called on Gorbachev in a parliament resolution to halt army pressure and stop "political provocations" against Lithuania.

The Baltic republics of Lithuania, Estonia and Latvia were independent from the end of World War I until Soviet annexation in 1940.

Meanwhile, Edgar Savisaar, elected the republic's premier on Tuesday, said his government would focus on restoring independence, economic reforms and attempts to avoid conflicts among Estonia's ethnic groups.

Ethnic Estonians make up only about 60 percent of the republic's 1.6 million people. Slavs and other non-Estonian nationalities have voiced fears that the republic's move toward independence would hurt their interests.

"The area where this will be solved is economic," Savisaar said. "With politics, we can't make them happy, we can't improve it. ... But the Russians are also interested that the material side of life begins to grow better."

Savisaar, the chairman of the People's Front, said following his election he would cooperate with all ethnic groups.

His statements today appeared to confirm reports from sources who said the new government was unlikely to include any of the 27 legislators representing the interests of the non-Estonian population in the 105-member parliament.

Labor Party head claims votes for ruling coalition

Successful new government could signal move toward proposals for Middle East peace talks

JERUSALEM (AP) — Labor Party leader Shimon Peres said Wednesday he had enough support in parliament to form a ruling coalition and requested a special session to approve the new government.

Peres refused to name the members of the proposed government. He said secrecy was necessary as he tried to recruit more lawmakers into a broader government. But radio reports questioned whether the Labor leader actually had the needed votes.

"I said we have a majority. More than that I won't say," Peres said on Israel radio.

If Peres succeeds, the new government may move toward accepting U.S. proposals for starting Middle East peace talks. Yizhak Shamir's refusal to accept the proposals led to the fall of his government March 15.

Peres' Labor Party had accepted compromise proposals by Secretary of State James A. Baker III for opening a dialogue with Palestinians as a step toward Israeli-proposed elections in the occupied territories.

Conservatives in the coalition government that was headed by Shamir refused to go along, creating an impasse that led to a vote of no-confidence against Shamir's government.

Peres notified President Chaim Herzog that he had succeeded in getting majority backing in the 120-member parliament, or Knesset, to replace the coalition.

He said he had appealed to the speaker of parliament to convene the legislature "as soon as possible," preferably by Sunday, to approve the new government.

Peres and other Labor leaders refused to provide details on the composition of the new government.

"I have time until the Knesset convenes to make the list and divide portfolios. There is still work before us," Peres said.

Until earlier Wednesday, Peres had only 60 assured votes. He needed at least one more legislator to vote with him or abstain.

State-run Israel and army radio stations quoted sources from the rival Likud bloc as saying they doubted Peres had the needed votes. They speculated he was simply trying to lure more supporters.

Other reports said Peres succeeded in enticing a defector from the right-wing Likud, led by Shamir.

Yossi Sarid of the left-wing Citizens Rights Movement identified the legislator as Avraham Sharir, a former tourism minister. Sharir could not be reached for comment.

Sarid and leaders of two other left-wing parties — Mapam and Shinui — questioned the wisdom of bringing a defector into the government. They said it was not certain whether they would join such a Cabinet.

"We see this as a problem that goes to the very core of Israeli democracy," said Amnon Rubinstein of Shinui. "I resigned from the government over peace, but democracy is also important to me."

However, the leaders of the three parties said they might vote in support of such a coalition during the special Knesset session. Their 10 votes would still allow Peres to form the government.

Labor legislators Chaim Ramon and Moshe Shahal said the party had decided on secrecy concerning the composition of the government because it did not want to expose defectors or parties willing to join a Labor government to pressure from Likud.

"The political system is full of pressure on all those who want to support this government," Ramon said on army radio.

With the parliament vote not likely until Sunday, Likud has time to try to lure potential Labor coalition partners back into its fold.

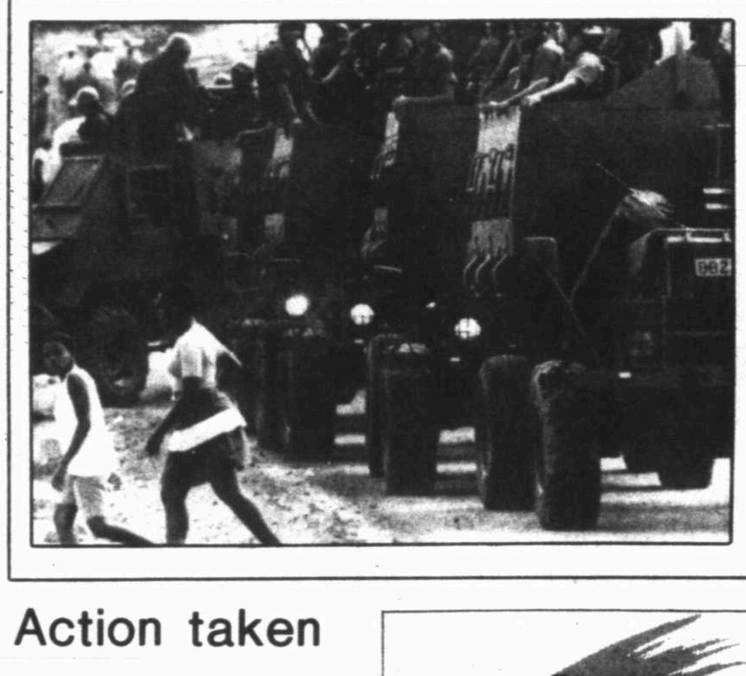

If Peres wins the vote of confidence in parliament, it could be the first time since 1977 that Labor rules without Likud. The two parties have shared power in coalition governments since 1984.

Peres was prime minister from September 1984 until October of 1986.

Peres said he and his Labor colleagues had worked with a "candle at our feet" in order to form the new government before the beginning of Passover on April 9.

"If we didn't succeed in putting together the government before Passover, we would have stood for long weeks without a functioning government, without the defense ministry manned, with waves of immigrants to be absorbed, and with serious economic problems," Peres said.

Shamir's coalition, formed in December 1988, fell at a crucial time as Israel faced key questions on the peace process and on how to handle a wave of Soviet Jewish immigrants.

Dental Implants Do.

LUCKY NUMBER 12496

The Implant Alternative.

If you've been disappointed in conventional solutions to your missing teeth, you should know about an important new alternative: dental implants.

A dental implant is a tiny cylinder which is surgically implanted in your jaw to replace the root of the tooth. Once in place, your natural jawbone bonds to the implant, making it a stable foundation for replacement teeth, a permanent bridge, or anchored, removable dentures. Dental implants are fixed so securely, in fact, they can actually restore the feeling you had with your own natural teeth. As well as your ability to eat just about anything you want—confidently.

Call to learn more about dental implants. They'll help restore the feeling, and the freedom of your own natural teeth.

Lava from volcano threatening homes

KALAPANA, Hawaii (AP) — Lava from Kilauea Volcano incinerated two homes in this rural Hawaii Island community Wednesday, threatened at least four others and authorities said many more could be destroyed unless the flow stops.

Residents of 59 homes have been ordered to evacuate them. Civil defense officials said all residents of the 125-home coastal community should be ready to pack their belongings within 72 hours.

The two wooden houses were the 77th and 78th homes destroyed during Kilauea's seven-year eruption, and the first Kalapana-area homes destroyed by lava since December 1986. Property damage is estimated at $20 million.

"Right now, the flow is very vicious, angry," said Harry Kim, administrator of the Hawaii County Civil Defense Agency.

The first home in the subdivision of Kalapana Gardens, owned by John and Ruth Duff, erupted in flames after the molten rock surged beneath the raised structure at dawn. A second home, owned by Coren Lewisohn, burned five hours later when lava crept around a support pillar and set fire to the latticework.

The flow had entered the 125-home coastal community in and around Kalapana Gardens on Tuesday from the west, passing within several feet of two homes. Those homes remained standing Wednesday. The lava flowed 100 yards toward the ocean down a gulley and began threatening the Duffs' home around midnight.

Lava flowed over a 3-foot stone wall bordering the property and destroyed a tool shed before stopping. Two other fingers of lava moved to within 20 feet of the structure overnight. Just before 6 a.m., lava surged toward the home and it was burned out within an hour.

Lewisohn talked with reporters as the house he built was consumed by flames.

"If the lava takes away the house, nothing can take away the experience of building it," he said, adding: "I'm gaining a lot of respect for the awesome force of nature."

Tenants who were renting the first home left Monday, said neighbor Ed Torrison, whose home was just 30 feet from the lava.

Torrison, who watched the flow from his back yard, said he expected his home to be destroyed Wednesday or Thursday.

"It's a shame to watch this sort of thing happen, but it's kind of exciting, too," Torrison said.

Torrison said he was going to watch the flow from his balcony until the last possible minute, and take pictures as his home burns. "I've got 12 shots left," he said.

The flow on the west side of the subdivision split into two fingers overnight, with one flow moving toward the burned home and the other turning east into the subdivision.

Lawmakers OK discrimination bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Senate committee Wednesday approved a major bill to combat job discrimination, but the Bush administration threatened to veto the measure it said would result in racial hiring quotas.

"The reality is that we have had a retreat on civil rights and we have to turn it around," Sen. Paul Simon, D-Ill., said as the Labor and Human Resources Committee approved the bill 11-5 and sent it to the floor.

Sponsors said the measure was designed to reverse six Supreme Court decisions last year that civil rights forces described as severe setbacks. The bill has strong support from every major civil rights organization.

Attorney General Dick Thornburgh threatened the veto in a letter to committee chairman Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass.

The administration, Thornburgh wrote, "opposes as inconsistent with equal opportunity any legislation that would encourage quota systems or otherwise divide our society along racial lines."

Sponsors said they hoped for quick floor action on the measure, which has 40 Senate co-sponsors. Civil rights forces said they have enough votes to win Senate approval.

The administration has been urging approval of a more modest version.

Under the bill, racial discrimination would be banned in all workplace activities, including hiring, promotion, demotion and firing. It would bar on-the-job harassment, which the Supreme Court ruled last year is not covered by federal law.

Employers would be held liable for actions in which discrimination was a motivating factor, even if those decisions would have been made for non-discriminatory reasons. The bill would provide means of locking in settlements in civil rights suits that otherwise might be reopened later.

The measure would expand the rights of employees to challenge a seniority system adopted for discriminatory reasons.

The most heavily debated portion of the bill would overturn last year's Wards Cove decision by the Supreme Court. Under the ruling, involving an Alaska cannery, those filing discrimination suits must show that such hiring practices were not based upon business necessity.

Thornburgh said in Tuesday's letter to Kennedy that the "administration is determined to help root out racial bias and bigotry."

However, if the measure "were presented to the president in its current form, I and other senior advisers would recommend that it be vetoed," Thornburgh wrote.

Senate critics, led by Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, told the committee the bill would go far further than overturning a handful of Supreme Court decisions.

"It is, in my view, a radical reworking of our nation's basic employment anti-discrimination law," Hatch said. "Hiring the most qualified person will not be a satisfactory explanation if an employer's numbers are not right."

Republicans were divided over the measure, with a number of them among the co-sponsors.

"If this committee did not move and this Congress did not move on this issue, this administration would not either," said Sen. David Durenberger, R-Minn., a supporter.

He said his remark did not reflect on the administration's commitment to civil rights, but he applauded the lawmakers for "putting the pressure on the rest of this process."

Bill would strike AIDS from contagious disease list

WASHINGTON (AP) — A bill introduced in Congress on Wednesday would give the Bush administration an opportunity to remove AIDS from a list of contagious diseases used to prevent foreigners from entering the United States.

The bill was sponsored by Rep. J. Roy Rowland, D-Ga., on behalf of the National Commission on AIDS. The administration's position on the bill was not clear.

The federal Centers for Disease Control recently recommended that AIDS be stricken from the list, along with several other diseases. That recommendation is under review by the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS), but officials say the department lacks authority to remove it.

The entry restrictions have prompted dozens of international organizations and agencies to call for a boycott of the Sixth International Conference on AIDS in San Francisco in June. France and Switzerland also have said they won't send official delegations to the meeting.

"It seems such a compelling thing," said Dr. June Osborn, chairwoman of the National Commission on AIDS, whose members were appointed by Congress and the White House.

"The U.S. is being looked at with such astonishing horror" by officials and organizations in other countries, she said.

Under a law passed in 1987 by Congress, infection with the human immunodeficiency virus, or HIV, which causes AIDS, was added to the list of contagious diseases for which foreigners can be barred from entering the country.

Administration officials have said they do not have the authority to eliminate the restriction and have done all they can within the limits of their power, including expediting waivers for those who want to attend the conference. But they have said that since Congress directed that AIDS be put on the list, congressional action would be required to remove it.

Rep. Henry Waxman, D-Calif., one of the co-sponsors of the bill, said that while he believes the administration already has the authority to act, the legislation would make that authority "absolutely clear."

The measure would give the HHS secretary authority to decide which diseases pose a threat to the public health and would require exclusion from the country. It does not mention HIV or AIDS.

Bush, Gorbachev must push peace

Iraqi President Saddam Hussein's admission Monday that his country has binary nerve gas weapons that it could use on Israel in the event of an attack has certified a long-suspected aspect of the shaky Middle East equation.

Hussein issued a direct statement to Israel in which he said that "if Israel dares to hit one piece of steel on any industrial site" like it did in its 1981 air strike on a nuclear reactor near Baghdad, "we will make the fire eat half of Israel."

The admission means that weapons long controlled by the "superpowers," the United States and Soviet Union, and several other nations now are present in the arsenals of at least two Middle East countries as well. Israel also is believed to possess nuclear weapons.

Hussein's acknowledgement means that these Middle East players have gained the weapons necessary to catapult the volatile region into chemical or nuclear warfare.

It also signifies that developing countries in that region are actively seeking such capability and in the forseeable future, Iran, Libya or other "renegade" nations likely will acquire chemical or nuclear capability.

The Hussein acknowledgement comes juxtaposed against the recent progress by the superpowers — the United States and Soviet Union — to step back from the nuclear threshold through approval of an agreement which should lead to the dismantling of nuclear arsenals.

That was significant since it signaled that the United States, which ushered in the nuclear age with development of the A-bomb in 1945, and the Soviet Union, which countered the U.S. buildup of nuclear weapons to fuel the arms race of the 1960's through the 1980's, recognized the nuclear path as a deadend street.

So, both the United States and the Soviet Union now face the challenge of working to overcome the nuclear threat spawned in the developing world in recent years. That won't be easy since values in the Western world or the Communist world aren't always shared or embraced by those in the developing world.

Yet it is essential that President Bush and Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev work to reduce the nuclear threat in the nations of the developing world. A nuclear war started at whatever level could prove disastrous for the world and the two leaders have a role to play in preventing that result.

JACK ANDERSON
Pentagon squanders money on frills

WASHINGTON — The Defense Department suffers from a bad case of vanity. Some top officers worry more about appearances than they do about weapons strength. They have no qualms about wasting money on fancy cars, doodads on uniforms and flowers around military bases.

Anderson

Andrews Air Force Base outside Washington, D.C., is a perfect place for squandering money on frills. It is the base where the president's plane is kept and where members of Congress begin and end their junkets. Andrews is also the port of entry for visiting heads of state. And it simply wouldn't do to have the place look austere.

Top officials at Andrews want to spend $9.5 million for a makeover. In addition to expanding facilities, the money will pay to spruce up the route traveled by visiting dignitaries. The messy overhead utility lines on the base are passe, and the sidewalks and parking lots are ordinary. Andrews wants a visitors' center, and officials there are worried that the hangars, telephone poles and parking lots aren't dignified enough for visiting dignitaries.

Andrews "enjoys a responsibility as the most visible of any military installation," a base spokesman told our associate Scott Sleek. "Leaders from around the world gain their initial impressions of the United States Air Force and our nation as they transit Andrews."

With Andrews dressed up, those dignitaries can now get a first impression of a wealthy country that spends money on frills. Then their second impression will come on the drive between Andrews and downtown Washington where they will see how the taxpayers of that wealthy country live — some in poverty, some victimized by crime, some sleeping on steam grates. Burying a few utility lines won't change that.

This isn't the first time that big spenders at the Pentagon have favored aesthetics over fiscal prudence. One Air Force general once spent $75,000 for an avenue of 50 flagpoles on his base. When someone complained, a member of the very unit that installed the flagpoles was assigned to investigate them. Surprise. He concluded that the charges of wasteful spending were unsubstantiated because the flags were top of the line.

Andrews used to have a glossy 1981 Mercedes 240D for the use of visiting brass. The car was paid for out of the base's Morale, Recreation and Welfare Fund. That money is supposed to be used to maintain libraries and recreational facilities for all personnel on the base. But the Mercedes wasn't available for an ordinary GI to check out for the evening.

When the Army ROTC decided to create a new image by changing its name to Army ROTC Command, it spent $300,000 on the promotion. About 60,000 cadets and 5,000 officers got new shoulder patches and a regimental crest.

The Army post at Fort Jackson, N.C., recently spent more than $235,000 to beautify the grounds when a hiring freeze was in effect because of budget cuts.

When the nation celebrated the 100th birthday of the Statue of Liberty three years ago, the extravaganza was supposed to pay for itself. At least, that was the official line. In reality, the Navy spent more than $1.6 million of your money to show off its ships and the Blue Angels aerobatic team.

With the Evil Empire now on the wane, Congress is agonizing over troop and weapons reductions. It would be a shame to see valuable people and hardware lost while the daily waste at the Pentagon goes unchecked.

MINI-EDITORIAL — The Bush administration reacted with a predictable dodge recently when confronted with evidence that drug addicts who want help have to wait in line for treatment. A coalition of state drug experts issued the figures about waiting times. The Health and Human Services Department countered by saying the state agencies have unspent money for drug treatment programs. The states fired back that the money was tied up in federal paperwork. It's all part of the Bush dodge — to appear to be interested in winning the drug war without actually devoting the resources necessary.

Legislators failing

Is is not ironic that our legislature has proven itself guilty of the very things it has been accusing our educational system of for years: Poor performance, lack of accountability, and incompetence? Let us look at the past and current legislative special sessions through the same glass with which the legislature looks at the educational system.

Had this past special session been a TEAMS (Texas Educational Assessment of Minimum Skills) composition, it would have rated a "1," which is failing. It briefly addressed the topic, "Equality in School Funding," but was off-topic at least 50 times through amendments, and failed to have a logical conclusion. What an example our legislators have set for the students and teachers of Texas! They can't show mastery of minimum skills in school funding.

Accountability? How do our legislators account for the money wasted during this past session in which nothing was accomplished? How much did this fiasco cost the taxpayers? Could not this money have been better used for equalizing school funding?

If the legislature fails to address, stay on topic and conclude the mandate of "equalization of school funding" by May 1, the state will cut off funding to local districts. Property-poor districts will find themselves without funds to operate and meet payrolls.

Will our legislature show mastery of minimum skills by equalizing school funding this session, or will those in it continue to display incompetence?

It's up to them!

Women need to unite

Wake up women of Texas!

Whether you consider yourself a Democrat or Republican, the time has come for us to stand together united. If we want conditions for women in Texas to improve, we have to vote into office competent politicians who don't just give women's issues lip service. We cannot afford to sit back and wait for things to change. The time is now for women to become a major force in the election of candidates.

Clayton Williams' remark about rape is not only ignorant but totally inexcusable. In a time where one out of four females will be sexually assaulted by the time they are 18, to make such a comment is an affront to women everywhere. Williams should know rape is not a crime of sex; it is a crime of violence which in no way could possibly be pleasurable. He has shown his lack of education on the issues affecting women.

We don't need anymore "Cow Camp" mentality or "barnyard" language in our statehouse. Williams, the joke is one you!

Remark meant nothing

In response to the criticism of Clayton Williams, I'd like to say I've heard that remark before and thought nothing of it then and that's exactly what I think now. It's just a phrase and nothing is meant by it.

If the news media can't pick out some other phrase to center on, then I consider that poor writing. I'm sure there were other comments made, but you'd think these were the only words spoken.

I'm a 57-year-old grandma and I'm behind Clayton Williams all the way.

GEORGE WILL
Court contradicts First Amendment law

WASHINGTON — Not much news here. Other than last week's Supreme Court ruling that contradicted 70 years of First Amendment law.

The court affirmed the right of governments to stipulate permissible amounts of political speech by certain groups. They are groups that the elected politicians who wrote Michigan's censorship law think speak too much. The court's opinion was written by Justice Marshall and joined by Rehnquist, Brennan, White, Blackmun and Stevens. It says government may decide that a particular kind of speaker — a corporation — is exerting undue influence in what is now a government-regulated marketplace of political ideas.

Will

A Michigan law (similar to the laws of the federal government and 20 states) makes it a felony for corporations to spend general funds for independent expressions of opinion about political candidates. In 1985, the Michigan Chamber of Commerce, a nonprofit corporation whose members are mostly for-profit corporations, wanted to express itself regarding a state legislative election. So the chamber challenged the law.

Justice Marshall, while affirming the law's proscription of independent corporate spending, concedes that spending to support candidates constitutes political speech. But he says the law's abridgement of the corporate right of free speech is compatible with the First Amendment protection against laws "abridging the freedom of speech."

This is so, he says, for two reasons. State laws grant corporations advantages that enable some of them to amass wealth that poses a "potential" for "unfair advantage," or the "appearance" thereof, in the marketplace of ideas. And First Amendment guarantees are less important than the compelling state interest in fine-tuning the "fairness" of political debate, as defined by the political incumbents who write such laws.

Thus the court authorizes suppression of speech that might have "corrosive and distorting effects."

It does say, astonishingly, that corporate speech may be censored to ensure that political expenditures "reflect actual public support for political ideas." So actual speech can be banned to prevent a potential harm, such as "distortion," or to ensure that expenditures on behalf of a cause are proportionate to the popularity of the cause.

Justice Scalia asks: Since when does the First Amendment permit government to limit the speech of individuals, or associations of individuals, just because the government has decided to confer some advantages on them? The Court has now authorized censorship to combat what Scalia calls "the New Corruption." This evil is political expenditure — speech — that (in the court's formulation) does not "reflect actual public support for the political ideas espoused."

Thus does the court casually abandon the principle that (in words from another ruling) government may not "restrict the speech of some elements of our society in order to enhance the relative voice of others." For the first time since Oliver Wendell Holmes left the bench, Scalia says, the court has held that government can directly restrict speech "that has the mere potential for producing social harm." The potential harm can be the "appearance" of corruption, or a "distortion" of something.

This ruling will, says Scalia, "require adjustment of a fairly large number of significant First Amendment holdings." He wonders if govenment may now "convict individuals for selling books found to have a potentially harmful influence on minors, ban indecent telephone communications that have the potential of reaching minors," and so on.

Actually, this ruling is too implausible to have power as precedent. If it is not ignored as an embarrassment, it is a revolution. It sanctions repeal of the First Amendment whenever elected politicians feel a compelling need to legislate against "the New Corruption," meaning "too much of one point of view," at least if the point of view comes from corporations.

Or from people deemed unduly wealthy. Scalia says it would make just as much sense to prohibit persons whose net worth is above a certain figure from making independent expenditures on behalf of political ideas, causes or candidates.

Michigan's censorship regime for rationing speech is, like most campaign reforms, enacted to benefit the enactor. Michigan permits labor unions to make expenditures of the sort that are felonies when made by corporations.

I walked out of the house last Sunday morning and found Jill Stevens tying a green ribbon to her old oak tree.

"What's up?"

"It's for George. I want him to know that there is always a warm welcome for him when he comes back."

Buchwald

"Comes back from where?"

"From playing golf. He left at 7 o'clock this morning, and I don't know if I'll ever see him again," and she burst into tears.

"You'll see him again," I assured her. "He has to come home after it gets dark. Did he leave a note when he went out?"

"Yes. It was stuck to the mirror and it said, 'I'm off to kick some ass with a little white ball, and find the bluebird of happiness.' "

"Well, at least he didn't sound depressed. Have you told the children?"

"I explained to them that their daddy was on a very important mission to Central America to save the country, and that's why he couldn't spend Sunday with them."

"Did they buy it?"

"You have to be kidding. They may be lazy, but they're not dumb. I've been thinking that since he won't come to us, maybe we should go to him."

"You mean, show up on the fairway?"

"Not necessarily. It could be near a water hole or in a sand trap."

"I don't think that's a good idea. If every fatherless family showed up to see a loved one on a golf course, there would be no place for the golfers to play. In my opinion you're better off keeping the vigil here."

"I worry about him," Jill confided. "He's been complaining about his game lately. He mentioned that he's overshooting the hole."

"All golfers say something like that. Just be grateful if he returns home. Many duffers are too ashamed to face their families after playing 18 holes."

"He claims that he's doing it for us."

"I believe that he's telling the truth. Most golfers maintain that they play the game to protect their loved ones from Castro's Cuba. I know George and I am sure that, at this moment, he is dedicating every chip shot to you."

"I sent him a note from the children, but it was returned with a stamp 'Addressee unknown.' I wonder if he'll find me as attractive as he did when he left."

"Sure he will. You're a beautiful woman. Remember this: Golf doesn't change a man's attitude toward his wife. He'll always remain the same person unless he crashes into somebody else's golf cart."

"I was thinking of taking up the sport myself," Jill said.

"Do you think he'll get the significance of the green ribbon on the old oak tree?" Jill asked.

"He would be a very, very insensitive golfer if he didn't."

Snapping turtles' turn up in sewer

By DAN BLAKE

NEW YORK (AP) — They may not chomp on pizza and fight teen-age hoods, but they do live in New York City's sewers. Dank-dwelling snapping turtles have been pulled out from sewage treatment plants.

Their diets sometimes consist of cold cuts.

Some of the turtles recovered from the Bronx and Manhattan plants have weighed 50 pounds or more, according to Tina Casey, a spokeswoman for the city's Department of Environmental Protection.

"They're big enough to do serious damage to any hoodlum," she said, but not quite the size of the characters of the new hit movie, "Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles."

The last time any of the big snappers came out of a New York sewer was 1988, when two were found, lean, mean and on screens intended to sift tree limbs and other large objects from sewage, Casey said. Periodically, younger snapping turtles or other, smaller breeds are found.

Workers at the Bronx screening station have kept a few of the greenish-brown reptiles around as pets, feeding them cold cuts and meatballs, she said.

When a "monster" turtle surfaces, the department has the American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals take it to upstate New York and set it free. But they have to be handled carefully — the turtle's powerful jaws can "easily put a nasty dent in your body," Casey said.

Casey ran across the sewer turtles' existence two years ago while researching the mythical blind albino alligators that don't inhabit the city sewers after supposedly being flushed down toilets. While the sewers are too cold and too sparse of alligator food, they seem to be all right for freshwater turtles, she said.

"Alligators look tougher, but turtles really know how to survive in New York," she said. "They're real New Yorkers."

Two theories about how the turtles got into the sewer system get the most credence at the department. One suggests they are backwashed into outlet pipes from the Bronx River or maybe the East River, Casey said. The other is that the turtles hatch in ponds at the Bronx Zoo or Central Park Zoo and crawl out to find their way into the sewer system.

Look for them if they make a sequel.

Cancer test proving inaccurate

By Daniel Q. Haney

BOSTON (AP) — Four years ago, a new test that seemed to detect all forms of cancer from tiny blood samples appeared destined to revolutionize the way doctors screen people for the disease.

Now, many specialists doubt the method will ever live up to its promise. For reasons they cannot explain, the test seems to work only in the hands of the physician who invented it.

In 1986, Dr. Eric T. Fossel of Boston's Beth Israel Hospital said he had found a way to tell whether a patient had cancer simply by examining a bit of his blood in a nuclear magnetic resonance scanner, or NMR. It would detect tumors too small to feel, or spot on X-rays.

Fossel continued to work on the method and reported more encouraging results as he tested thousands of blood samples. The discovery was so important that many other doctors hurried to try it out, but all failed.

Two studies published in Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine, which had first described Fossel's apparent breakthrough, add to the mounting evidence against it.

"We were unable to determine whether or not a person had cancer based on the blood test," said Dr. Paul Okunieff of Massachusetts General Hospital.

Carefully mirroring Fossel's methods, Okunieff tested blood from 79 people with cancer or pre-cancerous diseases and 66 people in the hospital for other reasons. The test could not tell them apart.

Terje Engan directed a Norwegian group from the University of Trondheim that conducted a similar comparison of blood from 104 cancer patients and 164 healthy people. When the people studied were the same sex and age, the test could not distinguish those with cancer from those without.

In his report, Okunieff reviewed 18 studies, including his own, that have used NMR to diagnose cancer. Only six — all by Fossel — worked.

In one of those studies, doctors from the West German Cancer Center in Essen sent blood samples to Fossel from 54 men with testicular cancer, 88 men who had been successfully treated for the disease and 57 healthy men the same age.

Fossel, who had no information about the patients' status, conducted the NMR tests and sent back the results. The German doctors found that Fossel's findings were 90 percent accurate.

So the question remains: How can a test work for one person but nobody else?

"I honestly don't know what went wrong, but there is this big difference between what he's getting and what other people reported," commented Dr. Robert Shulman of Yale University School of Medicine.

Fossel refused to discuss the latest reports, but issued a statement implying that others have not duplicated his results because they didn'td follow his methods.

"Clearly, the NMR cancer blood test requires close adherence to the specified techniques," he wrote, "but when carried out correctly, this method is a candidate system for detection of cancer as well as for monitoring cancer therapy."

At the National Cancer Institute, which has financed some of Fossel's research, Dr. Roger Aamodt said he is "reasonably sure" that the test will not be suitable for general cancer screening. However, he said it might still be of some benefit in checking the progress of treatment or recurrence in some patients.

Aamodt and Okunieff said they thought Fossel had honestly tried to obtain accurate results.

"We are still in a position where it is up in the air," said Aamodt. "This has been a controversial area since the first finding. A lot of people looked at this and said it didn't make sense. All along there have been questions. What you are seeing is science in action."

Jurors in Poindexter's trial still deliberating

WASHINGTON (AP) — Jurors in John M. Poindexter's Iran-Contra coverup trial deliberated a third day Wednesday without a verdict on charges that the former national security adviser lied to lawmakers and obstructed Congress.

The jury of eight women and four men have not sent any notes to U.S. District Judge Harold Greene indicating how the deliberations were proceeding.

Poindexter, 53, a retired Navy rear admiral who was President Reagan's national security adviser from late 1985 until he resigned as the Iran-Contra affair unraveled in November 1986, is accused of five felony counts of conspiracy, obstructing Congress and making false statements.

The judge, meanwhile, denied a defense request to clarify an instruction he had given to the jury on Tuesday when it asked to review more than 5,000 copies of electronic messages stored in Poindexter's White House computer. Backup copies were found in the White House computer system.

The indictment charges that Poindexter deleted the messages from his computer just days before he resigned.

Greene told the jury it could not review them because the messages, known as PROF notes, had not been admitted into evidence.

The judge also denied the defense request that he tell the jury that the PROF notes were not admitted into evidence because they contained classified information.

Tax refunds up over year ago

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Internal Revenue Service has refunded more than $34 billion to taxpayers this year, up 12.7 percent from the same time a year ago.

The IRS said Wednesday that through March 29, refunds had been certified for 40.53 million taxpayers, an 8.7-percent increase over 1989. At this point last year, 37.3 million refunds totaling $30.5 billion had been certified.

Almost eight of every 10 returns that have been processed — 78.6 percent — qualified for refunds. At this time last year, the figure was 77.6 percent.

IRS spokesman Steve Pyrek said that 60.13 million returns had been received through Friday, up 3.5 percent from 58.13 million a year ago. The agency has processed 51.5 million of them, 86 percent, compared with 48 million, or 83 percent last year.

Taxpayers who file between now and the deadline can expect refunds in about eight weeks.

A person who filed a return at least eight weeks ago may call a computerized IRS telephone number to find out why any refund has not been received. Toll-free numbers are in the tax booklet.

You will need to know the first Social Security number on your return, your filing status and the refund amount.

Nixon has heart problem

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former President Richard M. Nixon has a heart disturbance that is not life-threatening but is reducing his stamina, an aide said Wednesday.

His doctors advised him to cancel his schedule for two weeks.

The former president, 77, was not admitted to the hospital after the problem was discovered during an examination at the Cornell University Medical College in New York City. He will recuperate at his home in Saddle River, N.J.

Dr. Jeffrey Borer, a cardiologist at the hospital, said the ailment is a benign supraventricular heart rhythm disturbance. He said that electrical signals which cause the heart to beat were being generated abnormally.

"That's not a big problem and not hard to deal with," Borer said. "In these circumstances we generally control the situation with medication because the heart is beating faster than it ought to and therefore is less efficient."

Nixon will be required to take medication for at least two weeks.

Measles cases spread

SAN FRANCISCO (HNS) — Health officials in Alameda, San Francisco and Santa Clara counties are declaring public health emergencies in the measles epidemic in an effort to obtain special state funding to help with the crisis.

Up to 15 new cases of measles a day are being reported to health officials in Alameda County, with a total of 206 cases in the Oakland area reported since October.

So far, Alameda County is the epidemic's hot spot. Scattered cases have been reported elsewhere, and some counties are waiting to see if measles explodes locally before declaring an emergency.

In Alameda, San Francisco and Santa Clara counties, however, the Health Commission and health directors also decided Tuesday to seek emergency status. Only six cases of measles have been reported in San Francisco since the epidemic started last fall, but officials want to seek state money for vaccine now, fearful the epidemic will quickly spread.

On the basis of the declared health crisis, Kears said his office would immediately seek emergency funding of about $30,000 from the state Department of Health Services for additional vaccine and to provide outreach immunization clinics throughout the community.

4 paintings returned

DETROIT (AP) — Four 17th-century paintings went back on display Wednesday at the Detroit Institute of Arts, nearly eight years after they were stolen and used as drug collateral, museum and FBI officials said.

"They are not the greatest treasures in the museum collection, but some of them were very popular," museum Director Samuel Sachs II said. All were returned in good condition, he said.

The oils were stolen May 28, 1982, from a storage room while the museum's Dutch and Flemish exhibition area was being renovated, Sachs said.

The paintings were recovered between Dec. 7 and Jan. 19 in Miami as part of an undercover drug investigation, said FBI Special Agent John Anthony.

"We believe the original motive was to use these paintings as collateral in a major cocaine shipment from Miami to Detroit," Anthony said. The FBI has identified several suspects.

The paintings include "A Woman Weeping" (which was originally attributed to Rembrandt, but experts since have determined it was painted by an unknown follower of the Dutch master), "St. Michael in Combat with the Rebel Angels" by Lucas Franchoys the Younger; "Laughing Boy" by a follower of Frans Hals; and "River Scene at Dordrecht" by a follower of Aelbert Cuyp.

Killer allegedly has pot

SAN QUENTIN, Calif. (HNS) — After the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that Robert Alton Harris would not be executed as scheduled Tuesday morning, the convicted murderer was not returned to his regular Death Row cell at San Quentin Prison, but as punishment for his alleged possession of marijuana he was sent to the Adjustment Unit, where he may have to stay for a year.

Lt. Cal White, a spokesman for the prison, confirmed that Harris was now on "grade B" status, meaning that most of his privileges have been taken away. Administrative hearings into the marijuana allegation could take as long as 15 business days to resolve, White said.

Last Friday, after Harris' stay was announced, California Attorney General John Van de Kamp announced that guards had found three balloons full of marijuana in a pillowcase in Harris' cell, supposedly enough to roll 12 joints.

Harris' brother, Randall, and friend Michael Kroll, a free-lance writer, were suspected by prison officials as possible suppliers of the marijuana. Both vigorously denied it, claiming guards had searched them before each visit and watched them closely during the course of their visits with Harris. Both have been barred from further visits.

Inmates offer personal view of prison

■ These men don't want others to follow in their footsteps.

By David Morris
Staff Writer

Handsome, clean-shaven and bookish behind a pair of black-rimmed spectacles, he does not look like a man who has recently been denied parole.

Thomas is serving 17 years at the Huntsville State Penitentiary for delivery of cocaine, but he is in Midland this week urging school children not to make the mistakes he did on the road to prison.

"I just don't want anybody to go through what I've had to go through," said Thomas, who asked that his last name not be used.

Thomas and his fellow prisoner, Ken, talked to a small audience at First United Methodist Church Wednesday night — under the close watch of an armed guard.

Prison administrator Doug Eckles said the prisoners' visit to Midland is part of a statewide Community Education Program.

"It's kind of a reversal on 'Scared Straight,'" Eckles said of the inmates' low-key presentation. "We try to get kids to see that if you get involved with drugs and alcohol it can change you and lead you to the penitentiary.

"It can happen to anybody. You don't have to go out and kill somebody — if you do drugs, eventually you're going to get caught one way or another."

It doesn't matter how smart you are or how much potential you've got, Eckles said — drugs will ruin your life regardless.

Ken said he had been preparing to enroll at the University of Texas at San Antonio when his expensive cocaine habit led him to commit a string of six armed robberies.

Thomas, meanwhile, said his drug addiction caused his expulsion from college and the Future Farmers of America. He said he refused to admit he had a problem.

"It's the guys that stand in line at the Salvation Army waiting for a bowl of soup that have a drug problem," he remembers thinking. "I don't have a drug problem — I just use it. Every day."

Thomas said after leaving school he moved from town to town, working at various jobs and partying with friends who encouraged him to keep using drugs.

"Since I've been locked up for the last two years, do you know how many of those people have written to me? Do you know how many of those people have come to visit me? Not a one."

Thomas said the toughest part of being in prison is his separation from his 16-month-old daughter.

"That's my little girl, that's my kid, and it tears me up every day

■ An archeologist has found a site in northwestern Oklahoma with charcoal dating to at least 26,000 years ago.

By Anntoinette Moore
Associate City Editor

A site in northwestern Oklahoma he's been working on since 1986 is too old — by at least 15,000 years.

Wyckoff, director of the Oklahoma Archeological Survey at the University of Oklahoma in Norman, is in Midland to speak to the Midland Archeological Society, at 7:30 p.m. tonight at the Blakemore Planetarium, located behind the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave.

The Burnham Site, near Woodward, Okla., so far is just a jumble of bison bones, some flakes of worked flint that may have been imported from Central or West Texas, a cobble, a broken stone scraper and a stone knife.

And, most significantly, five carbon-14 dates that range from 40,000 to 26,000 years ago. Carbon-14 is a radioactive carbon isotope used to date organic remains, such as charcoal, in archeological sites.

In North America, the earliest generally accepted human cultural horizon "is Clovis. The earliest we can seem to date that is 11,500 years ago," Wyckoff said.

Scientists have speculated that human groups first followed the ice-age game animals from Siberia to Alaska across a land bridge in the Bering Sea sometime after 13,000 years ago.

So finding artifacts dating to at least 13,000 years before that is "pretty scary evidence for a white, Anglo-Saxon Presbyterian," Wyckoff said, laughing. "I can't handle people being here 40,000 years ago.

"Obviously, we have evidence of people working tools," he continued. "Some of the flint is exotic, which implies — at the very least — movement" of people into and out of northwestern Oklahoma.

"What we've got to prove is that those artifacts washed from a former surface that's as old as the radiocarbon dates tell us," Wyckoff said.

Although a few sites exist that date to earlier periods, either the dates or the material are questionable. For example, a rock shelter near Austin shows good evidence of human occupation that can be dated to 10,000-11,000 years ago, he explained. "There's something deeper and older there," but it hasn't been excavated and reported.

Cultural biases also may have affected the scientific interpretation of early sites.

In Chile, the Monte Verde site has "solid" dates of 12,000-13,000 years ago, Wyckoff said. Surely, if people were living in Chile by then, they were in North America before that.

"There are other sites around (in South America), but they get criticized because they weren't dug by Americans."

At the Burnham Site — uncovered by Oklahoma landowner Keith Burnham while building a pond — "we've found these artifacts around the bones of a bighorn bison," he continued. It has been identified as a transitional species between bison antiquus — which lived about 10,000-11,000 years ago — and bison latifrons — which lived some 35,000-40,000 years ago.

Because of this, "I tend to like the radiocarbon date that indicates it's around 26,000 years ago," Wyckoff said.

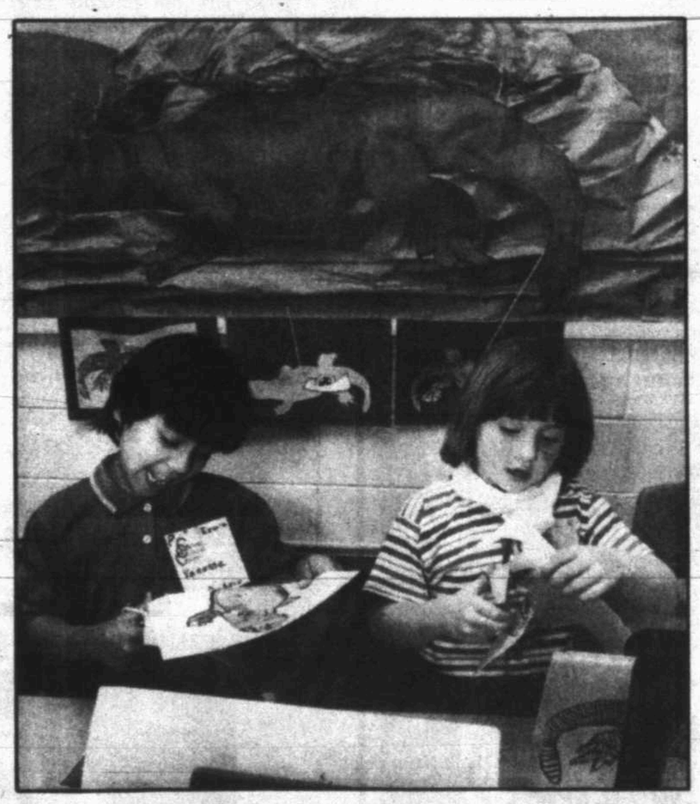

When the site first was excavated in the fall of 1986, "we weren't even looking" for remains of hu-

Judicial task force works on plan

By James Cullen
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — A state task force on judicial selection Wednesday moved toward a compromise proposal that would combine single-member district elections and countywide retention elections.

Task force members Wednesday reviewed a proposal based on an Illinois judicial election plan, which sponsors said has the best prospects for getting legislative approval and resolving a Midland-based federal voting rights lawsuit.

"The concept is very simple and it's precisely a compromise," said Rep. Bruce Gibson, D-Godley, co-chairman of the task force that also reviewed proposals for a "limited" voting plan that would allow blocs of minority voters to elect judges and merit selection plans that would have the governor appoint judges who later would run for re-election in countywide retention elections.

The task force also reviewed proposals that the state distribute information pamphlets on judicial candidates, limit campaign contributions in judicial races, create an advisory committee to screen potential judicial appointees for the governor in cases of court vacancies and remove judicial elections from the partisan ballot.

But Gibson and two other legislators hope to build a consensus for House Bill 86, filed Wednes-

Todd

He is Victor Lucero who, by the standards of the tall, husky, and rotund Cook brothers, is just a tad larger than a good-size bug. But, then again, most people standing alongside Eddie Cook's sons, Mark, Kyle and Kenneth, would be like bits and pieces compared with the whole.

"They're huge, friendly giants," the 5-foot-2 Lucero said of the Cook brothers who, like their daddy, farm cotton. The Cook brothers, who stand about 6-foot-7 and range about half as wide, have good use for Lucero. He's a real bug man — an entomologist for the Texas Agricultural Extension Service (TAEX) — and helps them to work bugs to their advantage.

Lucero's role is to help the farmers and even the ranchers control the bad bugs, the pests, and to get along with the good bugs, the beneficial insects, that gobble up the bad bugs. The pesky bugs delve into cotton bolls, gnaw on leaves, and suck blood out of livestock.

Lucero is mostly a cotton man, though he was raised amid the apple and pear orchards of the Espanola Valley north of Santa Fe in neighboring New Mexico.

He's candid about that.

"I don't know much about how to feed or groom, especially show or production animals," he said without apology. "But there are insects that hinder the animals" to the degree that livestock "don't utilize their time well."

A head of livestock makes the best of its time by eating efficiently and effectively to put on minimum fat and maximum muscle which, to the beef, pork, mutton and goat producer, is money in the bank. It's supposed to work that way.

"Horseflies and other bitting flies, especially in humid areas, cause gadding, and the cattle turn crazy."

"They don't know where to go. They get up and run."

The horsefly pesters cattle, and sheep get bothered by the flightless sheep ked or sheep tick.

"It's kind of like head lice on a human," he said.

"I'm a native of Santa Fe, where the mountains touch the sky, and the Rio Grande runs clear," he said. "But I like it here."

Lucero grew up on the banks of the Rio Grande.

"When I came out to West Texas, I was a foreigner. I guess I've been accepted pretty good," he figured.

"Out here in West Texas, you have to prove you're worth your salt," which Lucero, now 25, ably and quickly did. His relatively small stature, especially when he's standing alongside the rugged Cook brothers, and his youthful appearance proved no hindrance — maybe a challenge but no hindrance.

In shifting to West Texas, he experienced the fickle West Texas weather.

"I got to see both extremes in West Texas. '88 was wet, extremely wet. '89 was dry, and I hope '90 will be in between."

Lucero grew up in a land where the Indian, Hispanic and Anglo cultures merge and bond together.

"The Anglo and Hispanic culday, which would require judges to run in partisan single-member districts for their first election and later seek re-election in nonpartisan countywide retention elections.

Rep. Henry Cuellar, D-Laredo, said the bill he co-sponsored would give minorities the opportunity to elect their own judges to comply with the federal Voting Rights Act, but it also would give all voters in a court's jurisdiction a voice in selecting every judge.

Another sponsor, Rep. Sylvester Turner, D-Houston, said he supports the single-member district concept favored by minority plaintiffs in the lawsuit, but he also supports the idea of making judges accountable to the entire jurisdiction.

"What concerns me is there may be cases where judges will play to the district from which they come," he said.

The group also filed House Bill 87 that provides for election of justices of the 13th Court of Appeals in Corpus Christi from single-member places, which resulted from a similar lawsuit in Brownsville.

The Legislature started looking at judicial plans after U.S. District Judge Lucius Bunton in January ordered election of state district judges from single-member districts in nine urban counties, including Midland and Ector counties. Bunton ruled countywide elections diluted minority voters in violation of the Voting Rights Act.

The 5th Circuit U.S. Court of Appeals has set aside Bunton's order while it considers the state's appeal, which will be heard April 30 in New Orleans.

Suspect jailed in assault-rifle killing of man

Staff Report

ODESSA — An Ector County man was in jail on murder charges Wednesday night following a killing involving an AK-47 assault rifle, Ector County Sheriff's Department and jail officials confirmed.

Sheriff's Capt. Gene Kloss said Jose Guadalupe Navarrete, 24, was arrested in connection with the killing early Wednesday of Gerardo Resendiz Lomeli, 24, in a trailer park about four miles west of Odessa.

Kloss said Lomeli's body, which had multiple gunshot wounds, was sent to Austin for an autopsy.

Kloss said Navarrete turned himself in to Odessa police officers and surrendered the rifle about 1:20 a.m. Wednesday. Odessa police contacted Sheriff's deputies, who arrested Navarrete Wednesday afternoon after an interrogation, Kloss said.

A jail spokesperson said District Judge Joe Connally set bond at $40,000. Kloss said Justice of the Peace J.E. Pressly formally charged Navarrete with murder.

Kloss said the shooting occurred around 1 a.m. Wednesday in the trailer house where Navarrete was living, 4550 Spartan Drive. He did not say why Lomeli, of 1805 Penbrook, was in Navarrete's trailer or what sparked the shooting.

A man who was with Navarrete when he went to the police was released, Kloss said.

At least one neighbor interviewed by deputies after the shooting said he heard gunfire, Kloss said, but did not call police.

HOUSE: Bill's funding formula changed

The speaker acknowledged taking a firmer hand in proceedings than this past special session, which climaxed with divided House members failing to endorse a bill.

"Every once in a while people have to see what democracy is all about," he said. "So they saw it."

While the $450 million measure received a key committee endorsement Wednesday afternoon, at least one Lewis lieutenant, Calendars Committee Chairman Hugo Berlanga, D-Corpus Christi, already was anticipating its demise.

Berlanga said convincing a majority of members to vote for the bill "is going to be tough."

He said Lewis is "still amenable" to forging a "real strong consensus," and he would defy his own amendment ban to allow changes from the floor in that event. The House is scheduled to vote on the measure this coming Monday.

The new measure received a 7-2 endorsement from the House Public Education Committee Wednesday. Dissenters were Republican Rep. Alan Schoolcraft of Universal City, and Hispanic Democratic Rep. Greg Luna of San Antonio.

Lewis hoped the new measure would fly better with members on two counts.

The dollar allocation formula was changed, he said, to better predict the amount the state would pay for school finance equalization on a year-to-year basis.

WEST TEXAS IN BRIEF

Ancient turqoise trade topic of museum talk

Staff Report

"Turquoise Trade Among the Anasazi" is the topic for a 2:30 p.m. Sunday slide lecture at the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave.

Guest speaker is Dr. Joan Mathien of Albuquerque, N.M. She is archaeologist with the Branch of Cultural Research, Southwest Region, National Park service.

The lecture is part of Texas Archaeology Awareness Week observance, which begins Sunday, and is done in conjunction with the exhibition "Turquoise and Tobacco," now on display at the museum.

The exhibition is a Spanish/English presentation of maps, photographs, documents and artifacts focusing on Spanish and Native American trade systems in the Southwest from the pre-Hispanic era with emphasis on the late Spanish colonial period.

MISD trustees meeting

The Midland Indpendent School District Board of Trustees will meet at 4 p.m. today at the MISD Administration Building, 702 N. "N" St.

The board is scheduled to take action on the location of a new junior high school on its north Midland site. However, MISD spokesman Ted Miller said a final decision on the site probably will not be made at Thursday's meeting.

"They're not going to choose a site for the school," Miller said. "If they did, I would be surprised."

The 30-acre school is slated for construction on a 100-acre tract of land, a 75 percent interest in which is being donated to MISD by the Abell-Hanger Foundation.

Nearby residents have told board members they are concerned that the new school will interfere with their semi-rural lifestyle if it is built too close to their neighborhood.

Meanwhile, board members are expected to approve a 3.7 percent hike in starting teachers' salaries and will consider a plan to expand gifted education to all grade levels.

Man released on bond

A 45-year-old man was released late Wednesday afternoon from the Midland County Jail after being arrested on a heroin charge Tuesday.

Lupe Guzman was found with seven papers of the drug, valued at about $140, and $900 in cash, said Gary Painter, Midland County Sheriff. Guzman was picked up after the sheriff's department received a tip.

Bond for Guzman was set at $50,000.

In New Mexico, for instance, the Anglos, Hispanics and Indians join in fiestas.

In West Texas, there is more of a tendency for aloofness. "I think that was the biggest adjustment for me."

But "the thing I had a hard time grasping when I first came out here was the size of everything, especially the farms," which range in size into the hundreds, maybe thousands, of acres.

Around Santa Fe, the orchards are "small and easy to manage." And a family can "take care of" a small, say 30- or 40-acre orchard.

"Here, the farms are so big. People farm 1,000-acre farms — big time — just miles and miles of cotton."

Lucero favors bugs.

"Bugs have their place in our environment. They serve as pollinators and are a food source within the food chain. Birds feed on them, and insects feed on insects. It falls into an interlocking web in the food chain. It's a dynamic system. The beneficials (such as the lady bug, wasp and praying mantis) are feeding on your pests. They are meat eaters."

Among farmers and "bug men," the big thing nowadays is "integrated pest management (IPM)," which involves cultural, mechanical, biological, and chemical practices, Lucero noted. "You want to manage the living system" wherein the beneficial insects keep the harmful insects in check.

And farmers, according to Lucero, "are the number one environmentally-conscious people. They live amid their crops. Their livelihood is dependent on this living system."

And when pesticides are misused, that's when "the whole picture of agriculture gets a bad rap," Lucero lamented. "It's kind of like the Exxon Valdez (oil-tanker accident)," Lucero said, "but look at the benefits of petroleum."

And bugs keep Lucero, the bug man, in business.

"If the world did not have bugs, I would not have a job," Lucero said. "That's the biggest deal. I couldn't pay the rent, and I might have to be an engineer, and I didn't like calculus."

SITE: Bison bones reveal prehistoric puzzle

man activity, such as flint tools, he said. Then, in May 1987, two flakes from the resharpening of a stone tool were found during screening of soil excavated near the bison.

Wyckoff and his crew, with the help of the Oklahoma Anthropological Society, returned to the site in 1988. They enlarged the excavation and found two broken tools in the midst of more bison bones.

They also recovered scattered pieces of charcoal — "none larger than a matchhead" — for radiocarbon dating. Two dates came back from the University of Arizona: 26,000 and 40,000 years ago.

Based on these early dates, Wyckoff obtained a $12,000 grant from the National Geographic Society to fund more excavation last October. An interdisciplinary team composed of people from the University of Kansas, Dartmouth University, the Zuni Indian Nation, the University of Wisconsin and Oklahoma State University returned to the site for 23 days.

Although at first glance, it seemed to be a classic site: "bison with resharpening flakes and broken tools in a deep arroyo," Wyckoff said. "It sounds like your typical bison kill. The bison were driven into arroyos where they couldn't move around" as the spear-waving prehistoric hunters closed in for the kill.

However, after backhoe trenching revealed the subsurface geological layers, Wyckoff changed his interpretation.

"Based on what we've recovered, I have to believe that bones, flakes and artifacts did wash into the gully from a short distance away," he said.

Wyckoff has his eye on a "suspicious profile" — a layer chock-full of charcoal and bone fragments, including a piece of charred log — located about 10 feet below the current surface.

He admitted the layer is "too old, but it's the best looking part of the profile.

"My colleagues are going to think I've been out chewing on funny weeds," he said, laughing.

Actually, "they think we're doing a good job, not making any wild claims. They understand that we're puzzled," by the early dates.

"We haven't set out to prove that people were here 26,000 years ago," Wyckoff stressed. "Our goal is to find out where the artifacts are coming from and how old they are. We've had good support from people who have been critical of early claims in the past."

The next step is to submit a proposal to the National Science Foundation for 1991 excavation funds.

Wyckoff and his crew will be looking for a buried soil horizon with evidence of human occupation, as well as continuing to excavate around the bison bones.

He's confident that such evidence exists, and cited Southern Methodist University archeologist David Meltzer.

According to Wyckoff, Meltzer has pointed out that "we're looking for sites that immediately predate Clovis. Maybe nobody's here.

"Maybe we had groups that didn't last successfully — abandoned this country and moved to South America," he speculated.

"We have to let the evidence speak for itself. But you have to recover the evidence very carefully."

He said he does not intend to intimidate the children he speaks to.

"Our goal is if we can get to one kid in an audience, then we've got something there," he said.

Midland Crime Prevention Commission representative Judy Norwood, who helped arrange the prisoners' visit, said she thinks the community outreach program is effective.

The public is invited to a presentation by Thomas, Ken and Eckles at 7 p.m. today at Scharbauer Elementary School, 2115 Hereford Blvd.

Comanche Peak power plant continues start

GLEN ROSE (AP) — Technicians at the Comanche Peak nuclear power plant Wednesday continued a low-power start-up that could take two or three weeks to complete.

The $9.1 billion plant, 80 miles southwest of Dallas, logged its first nuclear chain reaction at 5:42 p.m. Tuesday.

"It's business as normal today," Jerry Lee, Comanche Peak spokesman, said Wednesday. "It's really going very smooth. It's just a matter of performing the tests, analyzing the tests, moving forward."

He said the plant could be ready to operate at 5 percent of power — the limit under a permit from the Nuclear Regulatory Commission — in the next three or four days.

The plant would operate at the 5 percent level until the NRC authorizes a full power license.

The low-power start-up marked a crucial turning point in Comanche Peak's long and troubled history. In addition to being behind schedule and over budget, the plant has also been the source of numerous protests from citizens groups.

However, no protesters have picketed or telephoned the plant, said Mark Manroe, a spokesman for Comanche Peak.

"There are some people who will always be uncomfortable with it, and that's unfortunate. But the people who are our immediate neighbors support us and we plan to continue to earn their support."

Dallas publisher takes stand in anti-trust suit

HOUSTON (AP) — The publisher of the Dallas Times Herald testified Wednesday that the paper lost thousands of readers and advertising strength when the rival Dallas Morning News struck a deal for 26 syndicated columns and comics that had appeared in the Times Herald for years.

Publisher John Buzzetta was the first witness in the Times Herald's $33 million antitrust suit against The Dallas Morning News over transfer of the Universal Press Syndicate columns.

After The Morning News' parent company, A.H. Belo Corp. formed a joint venture with the Kansas City-based syndicate last year, UPS canceled the Times Herald's contract for the features.

"I was shocked," Buzzetta testified Wednesday, referring to the cancellation notice. "I'd never seen something like this happen.

"Here, in one fell swoop, I was going to lose some of the best features this newspaper had published for years and years. I thought I was going to have some serious losses."

Buzzetta tallied the circulation losses at 9,000 to 10,000 daily readers and more than 15,000 on Sunday.

The Times Herald had been posting increases in circulation before Universal Press canceled the features, said Buzzetta, who bought the paper in 1988.

But afterward the paper began to lose "loyal readers" faithful to such features as Dear Abby, Erma Bombeck and Doonesbury, which were moved to The Morning News.

"If you lose features, it means you lose some really loyal readers, and circulation goes down," he said.

If circulation declines, advertising follows, he said. The newspaper gets 90 percent of its revenue from advertising sales and 10 percent from newspaper sales, he said.

Public Notice

Southwestern Bell Telephone Company intends to file an application with the Texas Public Utility Commission to introduce new optional services – Call Control Options. The initial service areas will be Laredo, McAllen and Austin. Expansion into other service areas will be based on availability. Customers in other areas will be notified when these services become available.

Call Control Options include six new services – Call Blocker, Call Cue, Call Return, Priority Call, Call Trace and Selective Call Forwarding. The features will be available to single-line residence and business customers.

Call Blocker – enables the customer to block incoming calls from a maximum of three specified telephone numbers and/or to block the last incoming call.

Call Cue – enables the customer to automatically redial the last outgoing telephone number dialed. If the recalled number is busy, equipment will monitor the line for a maximum of 30 minutes and will let the customer know when the call can go through.

Call Return – enables the customer to automatically redial the telephone number of the most recent incoming call. If the number is busy, Call Return will continue to dial the number for up to 30 minutes, or until it completes the call.

Priority Call – provides the customer with a distinctive alerting signal, ring or Call Waiting Tone (if the customer has subscribed to Call Waiting), when the customer is called from a maximum of three preselected telephone numbers.*

Call Trace – enables the customer to initiate a trace of the last incoming call received. The number, date and time will be recorded by Southwestern Bell Telephone so that the call's origin can be identified.

Selective Call Forwarding – enables the customer to forward incoming calls from specified telephone numbers (maximum of three) to another telephone number.

Proposed Rates (monthly)

	Residence		Business
	Individual	Packaged	Individual	Packaged
Call Blocker	$3.00	3.00	$3.00	2.00
Call Return	3.00	3.00	4.00	3.50
Priority Call	2.50	1.00	3.00	2.00
Call Cue	2.00	2.00	4.00	3.50
Selective Call Forwarding	2.00	1.00	2.65	1.00
Call Trace	1.00	1.00	1.00	1.00

Installation charges for residence customers will be $2.70 per feature,with a maximum installation charge of $5.40 per request per line. Installation charges for business customers will be $5.40 per feature, with a maximum installation charge of $10.75 per request per line.

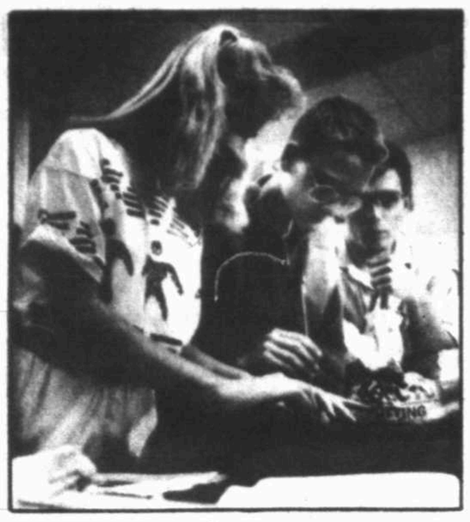

The proposed date for Call Control Options to be offered is May 1, 1990. These services, however, will not immediately be available to all customers in all areas of the state. Customers in other areas will be notified when these services become available.

Call Control Options are projected to generate first-year annual revenues of $1,761,000.

Persons who wish to comment on this application should notify the commission by April 20, 1990. Requests for further information should be mailed to the Public Utility Commission of Texas, 7800 Shoal Creek Boulevard, Suite 400N, Austin, Texas 78757, or you may call the Public Utility Commission Public Information Office at (512) 458-0223 or (512) 458-0227 or (512) 458-0221 teletypewriter for the deaf.

Southwestern Bell Telephone

*Some telephone equipment may not be compatible with Priority Call Service.
In addition to the $1.00 monthly rate, Call Trace will cost $8.00 per use.

AP Laserphoto

Seeds sprout research along with tomatoes

ABILENE (AP) — Tomato seeds from space apparently sprout more quickly than their earthbound counterparts.

That, at least, is what students and a Breckenridge school teacher are finding out.

Linda Sims' school is one of three in Texas giving a hand to NASA scientists by raising tomato seeds that were sent into earth orbit aboard the space shuttle "Challenger" on April 7, 1984.

Science classes at Abilene Wylie and a junior high in Snyder also got the out-of-this-world seeds.

Ms. Sims said the space seeds planted by her students "sprouted before the earthbound ones did."

"We were very surprised," she said.

The space seeds were placed aboard a Long Duration Exposure Facility and were to be in orbit only six months. Space Shuttle Challenger was supposed to retrieve the seeds, but when the shuttle exploded on Jan. 28, 1986, plans were scrapped.

First Texan convicted of evading drug tax

AUSTIN (AP) — The first Texan has been convicted of evading a new state tax on illegal drugs and faces the maximum 10-year prison sentence, State Comptroller Bob Bullock said Wednesday.

Odis Weaver, 48, of Texarkana, was arrested last September with 7.3 grams of cocaine, Bullock said.

He was convicted of tax evasion under a law that took effect Sept. 1. The statute requires a tax of $200 per gram on controlled substances and $3.50 per gram on marijuana.

Criminal tax evasion is a felony which carries a possible prison sentence of two to 10 years.

Bullock said comptroller agents seized $1,680 from Weaver's bank account for payment of the drug tax in September.

Weaver also was convicted by a jury of possession of cocaine. He faces a 34-year-prison sentence on that charge and was ordered by the court to forfeit $8,000 in his possession.

"When the drug tax law was passed by the Legislature, some people thought it was a joke," Bullock said in a statement. "But there's one more drug dealer in prison today who isn't laughing about it."

In a separate development, an Austin man said to be the first Texan charged under the new drug tax law avoided prosecution by agreeing to pay $10,000 in fines and serve a 10-year prison sentence for drug possession.

Larry Dockwiller, 33, agreed to pay two $5,000 fines and accept 10 years' probation for possession of cocaine in addition to the 10-year sentence for possession of marijuana.

Dockwiller is scheduled for an April 12 court appearance on the various charges. Assistant District Attorney John Bradley said that under the plea bargain, the tax evasion charge will be dropped.

Dockwiller could have faced an additional two to 10 years in prison and up to a $5,000 fine if he had been convicted of tax evasion.

But the state comptroller's office said it would continue civil action to recover a $40,000 drug tax bill it claims Dockwiller owes.

Dockwiller was charged with tax evasion when he failed to produce marijuana tax stamps when he was arrested near Georgetown on Sept. 5.

The silvery stamps are emblazoned with a skull and crossbones and carry the motto, "Death and Taxes."

IRS pays out $32 million

HOUSTON (AP) — It's every taxpayer's dream. Howell Corp. lived it.

The Internal Revenue Service called the company in for an audit. The company walked out with a $32 million tax refund.

"We're elated, absolutely elated," Howell president Paul W. Funkhouser said Tuesday.

The oil and gas company got a break when the IRS asked for a routine extension on a three-year time limit for auditing the company's books, in an audit that began several years ago.

Howell consented, opening the door to let the company file amended tax returns for 1978 to 1980.

The company was able to reduce its income for those years because it paid $19 million to the federal government in February to settle alleged violations of crude oil price and allocation rules in 1978, 1979 and 1980. The company admitted no wrongdoing in that settlement.

The payment had the effect of retroactively reducing the firm's taxable income for those years.

Anti-abortion activist tried

AUSTIN (AP) — A trespassing trial has begun for anti-abortion activist Rex Moses, who was arrested last May during a demonstration at an Austin abortion clinic.

The trial before Travis County Court-at-Law Judge Wilford Flowers is in connection with a May 6, 1989, demonstration at which members of Moses' Austin Rescue organization blocked entry to the Reproductive Services clinic in Austin.

Moses founded Body of Christ Rescue in Corpus Christi last year. Moses' organization previously was based in Austin under the name Austin Rescue.

Moses also faces three other criminal complaints in connection with protests staged by Austin Rescue in 1988 and 1989.

13 years on the run over

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — It took 13 years for the long arm of the law to finally knock on Jack Henry Womack's door.

But Womack said he wasn't surprised when he answered the door at his home in the south Dallas suburb of Duncanville and saw two deputy U.S. marshals waiting to arrest him on a drug indictment issued in 1977.

"He said he had always expected something like this to happen," deputy marshal Bobby Hogeland said.

Womack, 45, was among several suspects named in a federal grand jury indictment that resulted from an investigation in San Antonio that federal authorities codenamed "Operation Casino."

He was charged with conspiring to smuggle marijuana.

Two years ago, the marshal service began tracking scores of fugitives named in old indictments obtained by the Drug Enforcement Administration.

Greek Communists hope for socialist alliance

PIRAEUS, Greece (AP) — Despite the collapse of communism elsewhere in Europe, Greek Communists are hoping to share power in an alliance with the socialists after elections Sunday.

The most recent polls predict the Communist-led Coalition of the Left and Progress will win 10.5 percent of the vote, down from 11 percent it scored in November elections.

The conservative New Democracy party is expected to remain at 46 percent and the Panhellenic Socialist Movement, or PASOK, at 40 percent.

If the conservatives fail to win a majority in the 300-member Parliament, the Communists may be able to share power again, as they have for the last 10 months.

They teamed up with the conservatives after inconclusive elections in June, and then with the socialists in an all-party government in November. Meanwhile, Communist regimes in Eastern Europe were being toppled in popular revolutions.

"The Greek people will not judge us because of the myths that existed in Eastern European countries," said Mimis Androulakis, the Communist Party's key strategist and reformer. "They have judged us by our decades of struggle for democracy and progress in Greece."

The Greek Communists were outlawed from 1947 to 1974, and political scientist Mihalis Spourdalakis says this may have saved them.

"In Greece, the Communist left has always been identified with the struggle for civil rights, for parliamentary democracy. On the other hand, we have had an authoritarian anti-Communist tradition. Communism is therefore not identified with authoritarianism, but rather with progress," he said.

Menia Mendrinou, a long-time Communist Party organizer, said the party's supporters may have "been numbed by events in Eastern Europe, but they won't vote for any other party. They still believe that the party will protect their interests."

The Communists contend that their jettisoning of the hammer and sickle emblem when they formed the Coalition in March 1989, and their alliance with the conservatives in June, were precursors of broader changes elsewhere.

"We knocked down the walls before they were knocked down in Europe," Communist Party secretary-general Grigoris Farakos is fond of saying.

Opponents, however, believe that it is this ideological disintegration that has damaged the Communists.

The Coalition of the Left and Progress was formed in March 1989, comprising the Communist party, dissidents who had left the party, and some former supporters of the socialists.

"The Coalition is going through a crisis of policy," said Angelos Hagios, a prominent Communist Party member who broke away after the party joined with the conservatives in June. "These contradictions — working first with New Democracy, then with both, then with PASOK — show a lack of independent leftist policy."

Even Androulakis, who is hoping to retain his Parliamentary seat in the port city of Piraeus, acknowledges the party has a fight ahead of it. He points out that a slight drop in popularity could cost the Coalition some of the 21 seats it has in Parliament, and its strength as a power broker.

Hagios, a candidate for the newly formed leftist Popular Opposition, believes his party may win a seat in Parliament at the Coalition's expense.

Pollster Panayote Dimitras expects the Communists may be further damaged by a burgeoning environmentalist movement. The environmentalists may improve on the one seat they won in November — attracting voters who blame the three major parties for the 10-month political stalemate.

"If they win a second or third seat, everything changes. They become the key to power," Dimitras said.

A recent decision by the Coalition to field joint candidates with the socialists in five constituencies has led to heated protests from some supporters. The move may block a New Democracy majority in Parliament by denying it of two of the three seats it holds in these areas.

WORLD in brief

Iraq proposes weapons pact

AMMAN, Jordan (AP) — Iraq's foreign minister told a session of Arab ministers Wednesday that Iraq will destroy its chemical weapons if Israel did the same and signed the 1968 nuclear non-proliferation treaty, an official said.

The Egyptian official, speaking on condition of anonmymity, said Tareq Aziz of Iraq made the offer when he met behind closed doors with other foreign ministers of the Arab Cooperation Council. The Egyptian attended the talks.

The organization, formed in February 1989, has Iraq, Egypt, Jordan and North Yemen as its members.

Earlier, Aziz reiterated accusations that Israel is preparing to attack Iraq and other Arab countries.

His comments came after President Saddam Hussein of Iraq declared Baghdad has binary chemical weapons and will use them against Israel if attacked.

Carter praises Arafat

PARIS (AP) — Former President Jimmy Carter praised PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat at the end of two meetings Wednesday for what he said were Arafat's efforts to advance peace in the Middle East.

"He has done everything possible these last months to promote the peace process," Carter said after a 90-minute private meeting at the Hotel Crillon. "He's explored all the possibilities to make progress toward a total peace settlement."

A jovial Arafat told reporters the peace process was given a new impetus by the Crillon meeting with Carter and one earlier Wednesday that included President Francois Mitterrand.

Troop withdrawal set

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — South Korea has formally agreed to a U.S. plan to cut 7,000 of the 43,000 American troops stationed in the country by 1993, the Defense Ministry announced Wednesday.

The ministry said the two countries also agreed to change their joint command system to give South Korea more control over its military.

"We have reached full agreement on a gradual U.S. troop withdrawal, which will initially affect 7,000 noncombatants," a ministry statement said.

TV station off the air

Twenty Maronite Catholic bishops met for three hours, then issued a statement after meeting with patriarch Nasrallah Sfeir at his mountain seat in the Bkirki monastery north of Beirut.

Prisoners hold out

MANCHESTER, England (AP) — More than 25 inmates surrendered at devastated Strangeways Prison on Wednesday and authorities negotiated individually with others in an attempt to end a 4-day-old uprising.

Ivor Serle, a prison guard and chairman of the local branch of the Prison Officers' Association, said he doubted the rebellion inside the Victorian prison, which was severely overcrowded when rioting began Sunday, would end during the night.

Wide-brimmed hats top couture Easter bonnets

NEW YORK (AP) — For your Easter bonnet, and all season long, the bigger the brim the better. But beware. You have to be willowy — and willing to walk.

Some of the millinery shown in the couture collections here and abroad was wider than the runway. Not flattering for the fleshy, and certainly not comfortable in even the roomiest of cars.

To be safe, settle for a scaled-down straw — the runway numbers tend to be exaggerated anyway — perhaps in metallic.

"I've done a group entirely in gold straw, where the color and shapes make the story," says designer Frank Olive.

His gold straws include flip brims, stovepipe and coachman styles. Another idea is the "pagoda" crown, three accordion-like layers that gently squash. Crushable, foldable straws, by the way, are readily available and relatively inexpensive.

At Liz Claiborne, colors range from ethnic spice colors and trims to tropical brights and desert neutrals. Styles range from the kicky to the casual — baseball caps, visors and tennis hats.

Two young designers, Debbye Strickler and Lisa Keys, turned their creations into wearable art. Brims are scalloped, pointed like a starfish, rippled and turned up like deep cuffs. Trimmings range from lampshade fringe to cameos.

Say "aye-aye" to the nautical look. It's everywhere. Sonni of California trims a white sailor with gold braid and eagle or coin accents.

Whittall & Shon experiments with a nautical theme in sculptural, close-to-the-head designs in red-white-blue. Nautical colors also are mixed with gold, particularly metallic edging to emphasize shape.

Designers create for working women

NEW YORK (AP) — A reaction to public and corporate greed, a resistance to high prices, and the reality of the workplace are influencing American fashion today, says a fashion consultant who has studied the effect of events on what people wear.

"Fashions are less flamboyant, less ostentatious," says Laura Sinderbrand, an industry consultant and former director of the design laboratory at the Fashion Institute of Technology in New York City. "This is in reaction to the greed we see around us.

"Opulence, especially in evening wear, has leveled off, without the jewel-encrusted fabrics and glitter of recent years."

American designers, like Geoffrey Beene, Donna Karan, Michael Leavitt or Gordon Henderson, are aiming their lines at working women who aren't necessarily preoccupied with clothes but who want things that are efficient and creative, she says.

"Much of the clothing you can wear all day. It has to look right in the evening," she says. Increased attention to accessories and versatility of designs enable working women to wear the same clothes at work and after hours.

The revival of the dress is one of the most significant trends in 1990s fashion, she thinks. "Women are moving away from dressing like men. We have a generation of women who are wearing dresses for the first time, and they're finding it an exciting new experience."

Ms. Sinderbrand, who advises industry organizations like the Crafted with Pride in U.S.A. Council, says she can chart the course of current fashion while walking to work along Manhattan's Avenue of the Americas (or Sixth Avenue). "What I see being worn on Sixth Avenue is a marvelous barometer of fashion. What's emerging are skirts in softer shapes. Dresses. Long coats and sweaters. Soft blouses with ruffles."

The careerist uniform of suit and bow tie worn by women with board room ambitions has been for the most part phased out, which she attributes to their increased self-confidence.

American consumers are balking at expensive, extravagant clothes, she says. "Prices had been getting out of hand. The working woman has a home, family and other demands on her money."

Designers are responding with well designed, less expensive clothing. "And these designs are not to the European conception," she says. Ms. Sinderbrand cites the strengths of American clothes: They are well made, fit well, and are of good fabrics, she says.

The major exception to the resistance to European influence is the continued adaptation of Chanel design, which she terms a "homage" to the legendary French designer whose styles effectively marked the end of Victorian and the beginning of 20th century fashion.

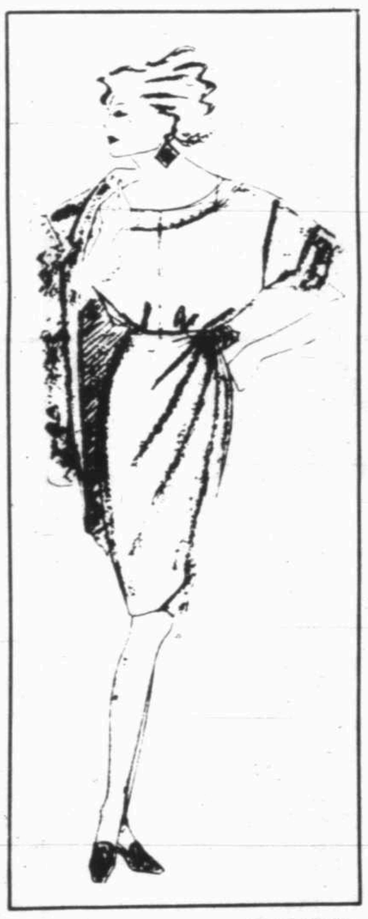

What have been the benchmarks of American design during this century? "Doing away with hobbled skirts and tightly laced corsets. We are also more body and health conscious. Denims and cotton work clothes are worn by everyone.

"This is the most dramatic statement we have made about ourselves."

Leather, suede create soft styles

Associated Press

If you associate leather clothing with stiff jackets or coats for winter wear, you may be in for a surprise.

Leather and suede have been transformed into soft and swingy sarong skirts, dresses, walking shorts and even jeans, all in brilliant colors, that can be worn year round. These clothes are in the spring lines of G-III, the country's largest leather clothing maker, and have gold buttons, quilted linings, and silk screened Indian prints to help make them into wearables for all seasons and occasions.

Some tips on caring for leather fashions are offered by Morris Goldfarb, the company's president:

- Store them in cloth covers, such as old sheets. This will help the skins "breathe." Never use plastic.
- Use brown paper for pressing. Switch the iron to its lowest setting, and don't use steam. Move the iron quickly to avoid overheating, which can discolor or damage the skin.
- Don't clean frequently, and never dry clean. This dries out the natural oils. Us a damp cloth with mild soap.

Aromatherapy claims potpourri of benefits

By Valli Herman
N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — Beauty doesn't come in a bottle, but it may be at your fingertips. That, at least, is the foundation of aromatherapy, a reborn system of skin care.

Aromatherapy products are beginning to be offered in major stores and are receiving growing interest from cosmetic and skincare manufacturers who are paying more attention to the scent of their products.

Aromatherapy pairs massage with pure oils extracted from flowers, trees and other plants to moisturize, cleanse and soothe the skin.

The promoters say the natural scents stimulate specific associations in the brain. When the oils are applied to specific parts of the body, they are said to trigger responses in glands and nerves, to affect energy levels, tension and even sexual drives, according to Judith Jackson, author of an aromatherapy guidebook, who has launched a namesake line of aromatherapy products.

For example, Jackson writes, upward strokes of massage tone the neck. Tapping pressure points on the face and neck with fingertips stimulates circulation, reportedly aiding skin and general body health.

A more advanced user might practice the lymph slide, a light massage that sweeps across the cheekbones, stimulating the lymph nodes that outline the face.

OTHER COMBINATIONS of aromatherapy products and massage are said to help everything from acne to depression.

Though the idea of aromatherapy may bring out the skeptic in some, advocates like Jackson say a soothing touch, a delightful aroma and pure ingredients might motivate users to adhere to a skin-care regime.

Aromatherapy also includes the herbs used in tea, baths, steams and room fragrances.

For example, a shower gel is said to invigorate its user; a lotion, to calm.

The practice has had a low profile since its popularity around the turn of the century. Yet the principles have been used recently by cosmetics manufacturers like Rachel Perry of Chatsworth, Calif., who selectively includes essences in her products and has plans to advertise the aromatherapy characteristics.

"It seems with everything going back to the '60s and '70s, people are more open to hearing about it," she said.

While aromatherapy isn't endorsed by some medical or skincare experts, it is gaining visibility.

JACKSON IS ONE of the first practitioners to establish her namesake line of oils, creams, lotions, fragrances and bath salts in a major store. Saks Fifth Avenue here carries the line, which retails for $12.50 to $42.50.

It recently brought Jackson to the store for a day of awareness-raising about aromatherapy.

According to Jackson, her massage techniques can help us know ourselves, or a partner, and calm us with scents mixed for that effect.

For the novice, a pamphlet guides customers toward the appropriate scents, she said.

For the connoisseur, Jackson offers her book "Scentual Touch: A Personal Guide to Aromatherapy" (Henry Holt and Co. Inc.; $14.95) as a guide to aromatherapy's history, its applications and techniques.

Jackson focuses on the multiple impact of her products, concentrating on the moisturizing and soothing properties when applied topically.

She claims that the massage adds to the effect, improving blood circulation at the site and helping to remove toxins.

Her book illustrates the massage techniques and offers "recipes" for treating insect stings, small wounds, cellulite, depression, acne and chapped skin.

NATURAL ESSENCES, not synthetic, are said to be better at accessing brain centers, especially those that trigger the sense of smell. In turn, the scent increases energy, lifts the mood, heightens the libido and untangles nerves, according to Jackson.

Perry and Jackson agree that the power of the sense of smell, particularly for natural scents, is often underestimated.

"Odors and memory access the same part of the brain," Jackson said.

Bruce Senesac, a professional dancer and a masseur, uses Jackson's oils in his massage service, Backs B. Nimble, located in a beauty salon.

"Before I started using her oils, after four or five sessions, I'd be really tired. Now I can do seven or eight and feel wonderful when I'm done," he said.

However, doctors warn that aromatherapy can be irritating to the skin.

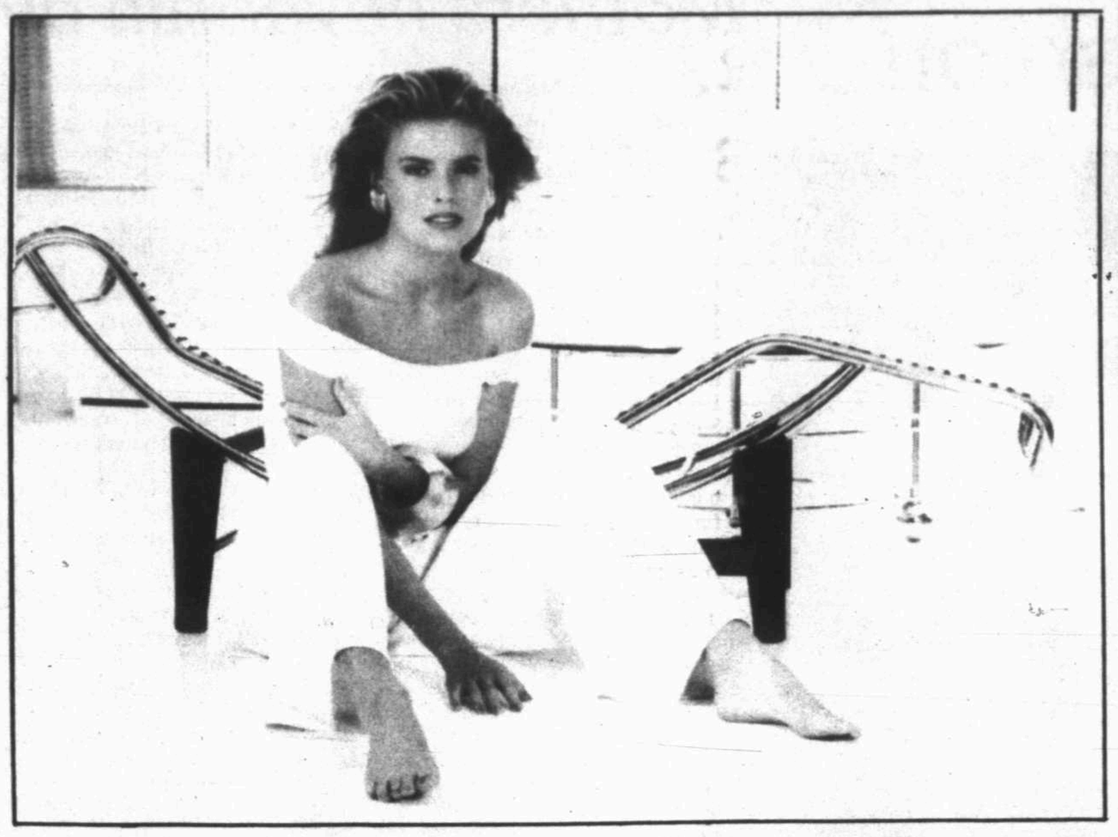

"Any product you apply on your skin can give you a reaction," said Dr. Patrick Abergel, a Santa Monica dermatologist. "The most common reaction is contact dermatitis.

"When the product is too irritating, you get a rash: redness and flakiness of the skin and itching."

Abergel said some products may cause an allergic reaction that may not show up after the first several uses.

Nor are natural products a panacea. Vera Brown, a skin-care expert with salons in Los Angeles, has studied aromatherapy but doesn't recommend it for the face.

"I feel I don't want anything on my face with any odor to it," she said. "I think a good facial, by a highly trained facialist, can give you as much benefit as aromatherapy."

Check makeup for shelf life

N.Y. Times News Service

Has your makeup outlasted its shelf life?

Makeup that sits in a drawer or handbag exposed to atmospheric and temperature changes can break down.

Ingredients in cosmetics, like those in food, can separate or turn rancid. Each application introduces dirt and oil, though this can be mitigated by using clean brushes and applicators.

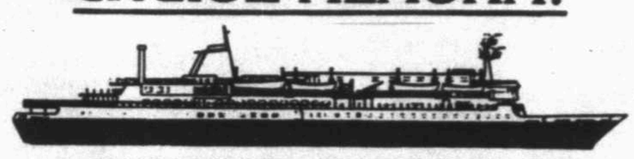

Dr. Janice Teal, director of product and package safety for Avon cosmetics, said that mascara poses the most danger because applicators often touch the eye.

Suntan lotion has the longest shelf life; its ingredients must survive high temperatures.

TYPE OF MAKEUP	SHELF LIFE	REPLACEMENT SIGNALS
Liquid foundation	2 years	Oil separation
Lipstick	2-3 years	Beads of oil on sides
Liquid mascara, and eye pencil	3 months	Contamination by bacteria and fungi, though not detectable, occurs with use
Eye shadow, and face powder	2-3 years	Flaking
Suntan lotion	5 years plus	No visible signs

Old, new accessories key to spring fashion

By Mary Hellman
Copley News Service

In a season of new directions, accessories wed old and new.

"This is a season of options," said Lisa Longworth of Nordstrom. "You express your individuality in the way you put things together."

Here are some of those options:

■ Jewelry — Regardless of your spring fashion statement, there's probably a pair of shoulder-duster earrings in your future. Boutique owner Valerie Lee said of this look, "Women are responding to it incredibly. They put it on and find they can wear it. It works with all the new looks — soft and ethnic."

With a soft silhouette, Lee recommends a line of pearls or a mix of gold with pearls or crystals. Ethnic looks are complemented by drippy earrings with multistrands and lots of color.

When it comes to necklaces, the more the merrier, according to Longworth. Chunky metal necklaces pair with multistrand beads or pearls.

"This isn't a hippie look," she said, "The jewelry is sophisticated and that makes it very career."

As an alternative, Lee suggests a satin cord with a great find — a key, an antique bead or a childhood ring.

The "year of the dress" has sparked new interest in bracelets. Matching cuffs in brushed gold are dramatic. For fun, mix chains and bangles over ladylike gloves in Jackie O style.

■ Belts — Belts play a toned-down role in a season of chemises and flowing, soft suits.

"We're moving away from the big structured belt," said Longworth. She suggests using a scarf for a belt or looping a long scarf over a belt and allowing it to flow.

The belly-dancer influence also is coming on strong, Lee believes.

■ Shoes — Fashion's down-to-earth mood means flats.

"This change may be hard for some career women to accept," said Longworth, "so there's always the option of a lower heel. But flats are easier to work in and more comfortable."

With their soft clothes, designers showed mules, sandals and flat sling-backs in neutral suedes and leathers. Another strong contender is a metallic flat in bronze, silver or gold — all fresh-looking with summer whites.

For an ethnic influence, watch for tapestry and embroidered flats or woven leathers. And for the adventurous, Karl Lagerfeld styled sneakers with spectator details for Chanel, and London designer Rifat Ozbek covered tennis shoes with sequins.

■ Hosiery — Once saved for evenings, the shimmery stocking is a new basic for day. Donna Karan paired her sexy suits with softly shiny hose in delicate neutrals. The same colors are well-suited for shorts suits and miniskirts.

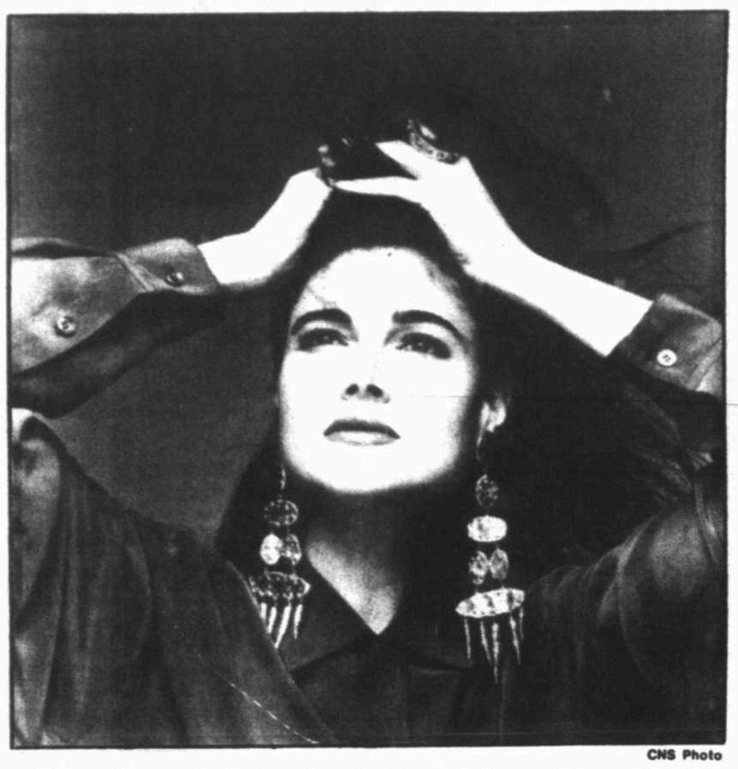

For spring, Hanes picked shades of Pink Crystal, Soft Peach, Moss, Gray Mist and Seashell for its signature Ultra Silk hose. When in doubt, opt for a nude beige.

■ Scarves — Floaty chiffons, romantic florals, gilded geometrics — scarves are one of spring's most versatile accessories.

"They can be used as belts, on hats, as sarongs or hip wraps," said Lee. "They still look good French-style, wrapped around the shoulders."

Regardless of what spring fashion statement is made, there's probably a pair of shoulder-duster earrings as a part of it.

Mothers never run out of spit

By Erma Bombeck

I received a birthday card from my daughter that said she loved me. When you opened it up, it continued, "But I never forgave you for cleaning my face with spit on your hanky."

Bombeck

We laughed. She, because she thought I was embarrassed. I, because I never used a hanky. I used fingers.

In truth, I thought the sentiment was rather ironic coming from a kid who drank from the water jug in the refrigerator and deposited so many crumbs in it that it looked like a Christmas paperweight.

Since she is not yet a parent, how is she expected to know that mothers are endowed with a spit supply that develops during pregnancy, much like milk glands? After birth, there is an increased amount to fulfill the demands of child raising.

Mothers need all the spit they can get. At first it seems gross, but you soon adapt to it. How else do you remove a milk stain from a bib? Lipstick kisses from a cheek? Chocolate from lips? Bird-doo and mud from shoes? Ice cream from noses? Spilled food from shirts?

Mothers need saliva to tame flyaway hair and cowlicks, remove mustard from car seats and get fingerprints off walls and doorknobs. They need it to condition swim goggles. (You don't think kids are going to use their own spit, do you?) With each child, I had a fear that my spit would dry up before I had her trained to soap and water.

Parents do a lot of gross things in the name of motherhood and fatherhood. It doesn't matter on what economic level you live, when a child hands you a shoe with a knot in the shoestring that he has wet on all day long, the first thing you do instinctively is put it in your mouth and try to loosen up the knot with your teeth. If we had an ounce of pride, we'd say, "You put that shoe in my face one more time and I'll cut its tongue out!"

And what is the first thing you do when a child wants to get rid of his gum? You stick out your hand and say, "Spit it out in here." You have absolutely nothing in mind as to what you're going to do with it. It just seems the thing to do.

There isn't a mother alive who has watched her child play in his food until it looks like road kill, and when he doesn't want it, hasn't eaten it herself rather than "waste" it.

We are born to sacrifice, but my daughter is too young and too inexperienced to know these things. I live for the day when she has spit on three children, a Naugahyde sofa, a steering wheel, a light switch and the handles of a shopping cart, and doesn't have enough saliva left to put on mascara. Then, she'll know.

Dear Abby

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: For the second time in two weeks, I am putting a child under 2 years of age into the hospital to restore teeth that have become decayed from "ad-lib" or "demand" breast feeding. Some babies develop serious tooth decay because their mothers allow them to nurse frequently throughout the day, and also to sleep with them at night, nursing whenever the child feels restless or hungry.

Van Buren

When children are given a bottle with milk or fruit juice to have in bed at night or nap time, the last swallow of fluid does not go down the throat — it remains behind the upper front teeth, bathing them in a fluid that is readily turned into the acid that causes tooth decay.

La Leche advocates breast feeding until age 3. Mothers who do this should clean the baby's mouth AFTER EACH FEEDING. A soft terry washcloth will do the trick. — JOHN P. KENNEDY, DDS, PARK RIDGE, ILL.

DEAR DR. KENNEDY: Thank you for a very important letter. The Academy of Pediatric Dentistry in conjunction with the American Academy of Pediatrics recommends that a child should have its first dental visit between 1 and 2 years of age.

Years ago, many mothers felt that baby teeth required little or no care because baby teeth would be replaced with permanent teeth eventually. Not true. Unless baby teeth are properly maintained, the permanent teeth will be undesirably affected.

Before new mothers leave the hospital, they are routinely given instructions on baby care. If dental care is not included, it should be.

DEAR ABBY: On Feb. 9, 1987, my wife went to the hospital for a biopsy of a lump on her right breast. Well, it was cancer in an advanced stage, and had already spread to her lymph nodes. The biopsy turned into a radical mastectomy, but the nightmare was not over yet. She endured three years of chemotherapy, and I watched her suffer from all the side effects, until it slowly wore her down. She died on Dec. 27, 1989.

Abby, this all happened because she was too embarrassed to expose her breasts to strangers for a mammogram! Besides, cancer always happens to someone else, right? Well, this time, it happened to us. There is no greater pain than to watch helplessly while someone you have loved for 32 years slowly and painfully slips away.

Abby, you reach out to thousands of readers every day. Would you please print this letter in your column so women will read it and go regularly for mammograms? If they don't go for themselves, perhaps they will go for those who love them. If I can convince even one woman by sharing my story, perhaps I can prevent her family from suffering the way I have. Thank you for all the good you do. — BILL F., ANDERSON, IND.

CONFIDENTIAL TO UNMARRIED, PREGNANT AND BETWEEN TWO FIRES: Since you state that you are morally opposed to abortion and your only problem is whether to keep the baby or surrender it for adoption, I urge you to contact an organization called BIRTHRIGHT. Its toll-free number is: (800) 848-LOVE. The people there are very much concerned about women in your plight and will help you to make a decision you can live with. God bless you. I wish you well.

The facts about drugs, AIDS and how to prevent unwanted pregnancy are all in Abby's new expanded booklet, "What Every Teen Should Know." To order, send a long, business-size, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)

Simmons wins

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Lionel Simmons of La Salle, the third-leading scorer in NCAA Division I history, was named Wednesday as the winner of the 14th annual John R. Wooden Award as college basketball's outstanding player.

Simmons

Simmons, a 6-foot-6, 220-pound senior, received 1,174 points in the balloting of 1,000 sportswriters and broadcasters from around the country to 831 points for runnerup Gary Payton of Oregon State.

Derrick Coleman of Syracuse finished third with 816 points, followed by Hank Gathers, the Loyola Marymount star who died after collapsing on the court during a West Coast Conference tournament game on March 4. Gathers got 532 points.

Nevada-Las Vegas forward Larry Johnson, who played at Odessa College a year ago, finished fifth with 489 points and Louisiana State guard Chris Jackson was sixth with 455 points.

Trial reset

LAS VEGAS (AP) — A new trial date of April 23 was set Wednesday in heavyweight champion Buster Douglas' suit seeking to break his contract with promoter Don King.

Douglas

U.S. District Judge Howard McKibben set the date after attorneys for King and Donald Trump agreed to put on hold a scheduled April 16 federal trial on suits they filed in New York.

McKibben had earlier set a trial date of April 9, but indicated at the time that April 23 would be preferable, as long as the New York suit was not started before that time.

Jordan honored

NEW YORK (AP) — Chicago's Michael Jordan, who averaged 36.4 points, 8.1 rebounds, 5.9 assists and 3.8 steals per game while leading the Bulls to a 12-3 record in March, was named the NBA's Player of the Month on Wednesday.

Jordan's biggest game of the month was on March 28, when he had career-highs of 69 points and 18 rebounds in a 117-113 overtime victory against Cleveland.

He followed that with 49 points, 12 rebounds, four assists and five steals in a 107-106 overtime victory against New York on March 30. Jordan, the league scoring leader, also had 45 points, seven rebounds and five steals in a 117-105 triumph over Indiana on March 10.

Hyde seeks gold

■ Midland High senior leads the individual medalist field after three of the four District 4-5A girls golf rounds.

By Joe Wyatt
Staff Writer

Jenny Hyde's final putt Wednesday hung on the edge of the cup for an interminable period of time. Then it dropped for a bogey five and a two-stroke lead in medalist play after the third round of girls' District 4-5A golf at Ranchland Hills Country Club.

"I didn't think it was going to go in. I think the wind blew it in," smiled Hyde, a Midland High senior.

Hyde, who entered the round with a three-stroke lead over San Angelo's Lisa Balsch, fashioned a 39-45—84. Balsch used an 83 to creep one shot closer to the leader with one district round to play.

San Angelo, meanwhile, used the round to increase it's 10-stroke first-place lead to 19 with the day's best score, 358, and a three-round total 1,070.

Abilene Cooper remained in second place with a 377 for 1,099, while third-place Midland High inched 10 strokes closer to Cooper with a 367 for 1,131.

"I was extremely pleased with our team effort today," said MHS golf coach Quinn Eudy. "They came out with the good attitude they've displayed all year.

The Bulldogs, still trailing Cooper by 32, have only next Wednesday's round at Odessa Country Club to earn one of the two regional qualifying berths.

Hyde, who leads third-place Tiffaney Kennedy of Odessa Permian by 13 strokes, needs only one more solid round to be one of the two medalists going to regionals from 4-5A.

"It feels great to be leading," Hyde said. "And Odessa Country Club is very similar to Ranchland but maybe a little shorter.

"I think I can play a good round over there. I think we all can."

Velarde embroiled in starting battle

■ The former Midland Lee standout finds himself uncertain of hot corner starting job with Yankees.

By Bill Grimes
Staff Writer

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. — Not even a batting average well over .300 in late-season play last year could assure former Midland Lee standout Randy Velarde of the starting third base job for the New York Yankees going into this lockout-delayed major league baseball campaign.

After mid-winter talk which centered around hot corner competition between Velarde and rookie Mike Blowers, the Yankees handed Blowers the job on a silver platter.

Or did they?

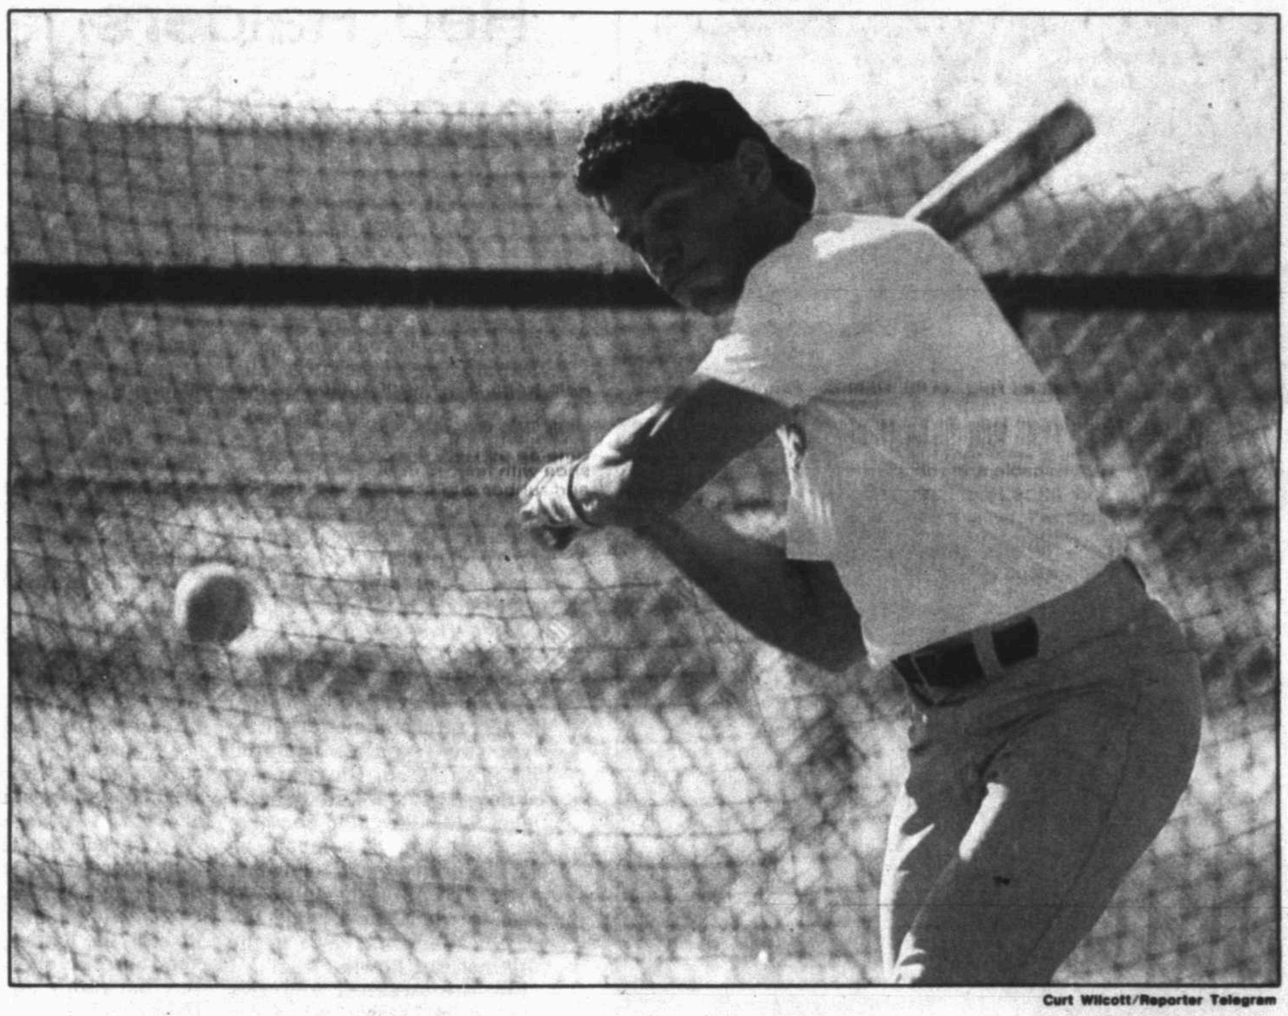

Though Velarde didn't help himself by committing two errors at third base in a recent exhibition contest, the former Rebel is seeing time there as well as shortstop, where Alvaro Espinoza is the incumbent.

And Blowers' big league experience consists of a whopping 13 games after a four-year minor league career in which he averaged only .263.

At worst, Velarde appears to have the team made as a utility player. In addition to working at third and short, Velarde is ticketed for emergency duty at second base and the outfield.

While Velarde outhit Blowers .278 to .261 during early exhibition games, the former Montreal farmhand had slugged two home runs to Velarde's none through Tuesday's action.

Neither player made Yankee spring fans forget Clete Boyer with their play in the field. Velarde committed four errors in the early going, while Blowers was charged with three miscues.

Curt Wilcott/Reporter Telegram

Randy Velarde works on his hitting stroke in Midland recently during the off-season.

Despite being closer to a big league niche than at any time in his five-year professional career, Velarde didn't hide his disappointment on the outcome of the non-battle at third base.

"I'd be lying if I said I wasn't hurt," Velarde said during the first week of camp. "I'd like to be considered (for third base).

"After the season I had last year, he'd feel like he'd be given an opportunity. But here, I still feel like I have to prove myself."

But Blowers said it is he who needs to prove himself.

"...who's to say he's not going to be the third baseman," the former

UIL sanctions prep coaches

AUSTIN (AP) — Three high school coaches Wednesday were suspended by the University Interscholastic League, which voiced concern over the number of complaints reaching the UIL about abuse of game officials.

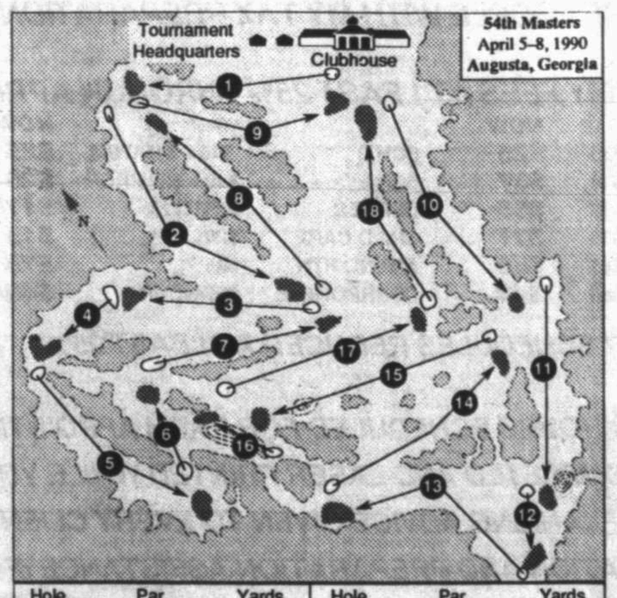

The UIL State Executive Committee suspended Georgetown girls' soccer coach David Winter for three games next season; Montgomery boys' basketball coach Ronnie James for one game; and Shiner boys' basketball coach Billy Turek for one year in basketball.

Turek has switched jobs and will coach football next year, and he was suspended for one football game, UIL spokesman Peter Contreras said.

Winter and Georgetown trainer Rich Frazee were accused by officials of cursing them and calling them "gutless" following a contest with Pflugerville. Official Janusz Janas said Frazee grabbed another official.

Winter also was placed on probation for one year and will be publicly reprimanded through publication in the UIL newspaper. Frazee was assessed the same penalties, including a three-game suspension.

Shark's foes span the years

AUGUSTA, Ga. (AP) — Greg Norman faces an old friend and a new nemesis — Jack Nicklaus and Robert Gamez — in his quest for the elusive green jacket this week in the 54th Masters.

"Jack is Jack," Norman said Wednesday of Nicklaus, who last week won his first start on the Senior PGA Tour. "His confidence is high and on the rise.

"He's hitting the ball extremely well; hitting it high and long. He has a new driver, a new putter. He's lost some weight. He strong and fit. He looks and acts like he's 35 instead of 50. He has that pride. He thinks he can win."

So does Gamez, the 21-year-old rookie who has won two times on the PGA Tour this year. The second came at the expense of Norman, when he holed a 176-yard shot for an eagle-two on the final hole at Bay Hill in Orlando.

Gamez, not awed after his first trip over the Augusta National Golf Club course, said he viewed the Masters "as another tournament," and was "confident enough I can win the championship on Sunday."

Mavricks erase huge Spur lead

Associated Press

Rolando Blackman scored 28 points and Derek Harper 27 to lead the Dallas Mavericks to a club-record-equaling comeback victory Wednesday night, 104-98 over the San Antonio Spurs.

San Antonio led 46-27 with 6:05 left in the second quarter before Dallas began its climb. The 19-point deficit matched the largest a Dallas club has overcome to win. The Mavericks also won from 19 down at Portland on Nov. 13, 1984.

David Robinson led San Antonio with 32 points and 12 rebounds.

While the Spurs concentrated on feeding Robinson inside, the Mavericks rallied behind their guards. Harper's three-pointer put Dallas ahead 89-88 with 4:30 remaining.

Bucks 121, Pacers 116

Back from a one-game suspension, Alvin Robertson scored 10 of his 30 points in overtime and Jack Sikma made four free throws in the final 27 seconds. Robertson was suspended for a fight against the San Antonio Spurs on March 31.

Cavaliers 101, Hawks 95

Brad Daugherty scored 24 points and Mark Price dished out a career-high 20 assists as Cleveland beat Atlanta, leaving the teams tied for the final playoff spot in the Eastern Conference.

The Cavaliers won for the 10th time in 14 games while sending the Hawks to only their second loss in six. Both teams are 35-38, with nine games to play.

Knicks 118, Bullets 107

Patrick Ewing had 37 points and 17 rebounds, leading the New York Knicks to their sixth straight victory at Capital Centre.

The Bullets' last victory over New York at Capital Centre was Jan. 28, 1988, although they defeated the Knicks at the Baltimore Arena last February.

Kiki Vandeweghe had 21 points, hitting 10-of-12 shots for New York, which broke a four-game road losing streak. Gerald Wilkins added 16 points.

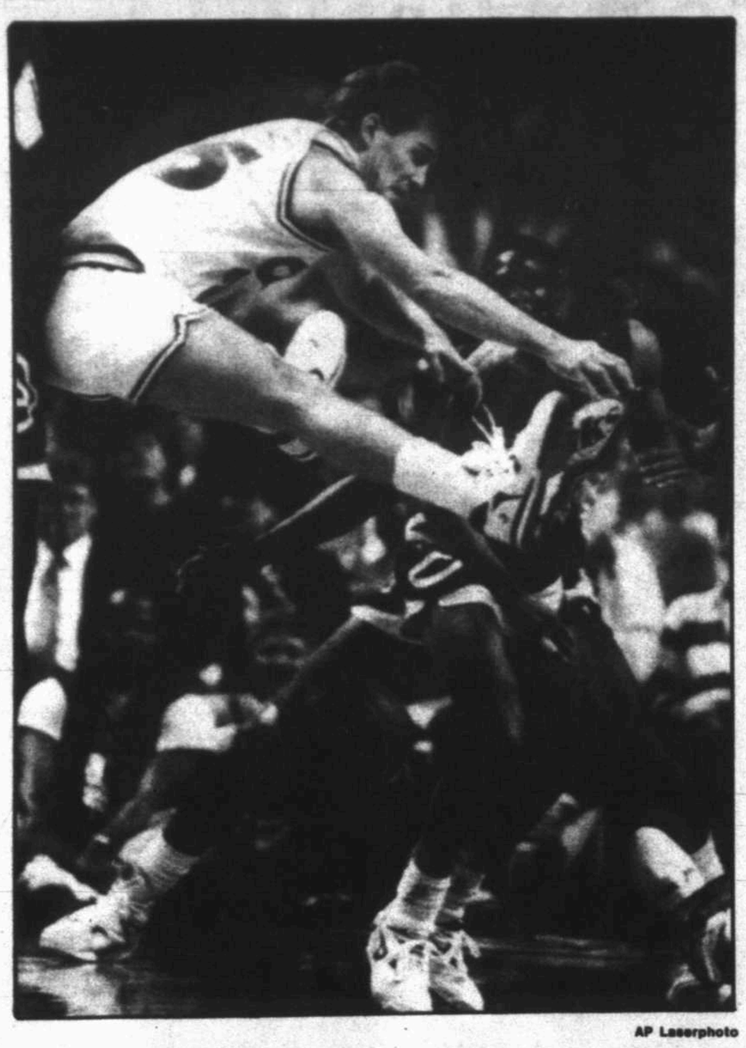

Bernard King led the Bullets with 33 points. Jeff Malone had 22 points, while Darrell Walker scored 14 and grabbed 13 rebounds for Washington, which had won three straight games.

Celtics 125, Nets 106

Larry Bird had 43 points and 15 rebounds, leading Boston over New Jersey, handing the Nets their 14th loss in the last 15 games.

Hitting 16 of 29 shots, Bird also had six assists and two steals.

He scored 13 points in the first period, pacing the Celtics to a 12-point lead. But the Nets battled back behind Sam Bowie, who finished with 25 points, for a surprising 60-58 halftime lead.

AP Laserphoto

Warriors 128, Heat 114

Chris Mullin scored 30 points on 10-of-13 shooting and rookie Tim Hardaway had 20 points and 16 assists for Golden State,

Mullin has led the Warriors in scoring the last three games and nine of their last 10.

Golden State moved to within 1½ games of Houston and 2½ of Seattle in the race for the eighth and final playoff berth.

Associated Press

Brian Bellows scored two goals and goalie Jon Casey stopped 30 shots Wednesday night, leading the Minnesota North Stars to a 2-1 victory over the Chicago Blackhawks in their NHL playoff opener.

By virtue of the victory, the North Stars, who finished fourth in the Norris Division, grabbed the home-ice advantage from the division-champion Blackhawks.

The series continues with Game 2 in Chicago Friday night and then shifts to Minnesota for Games 3 and 4 Sunday and Tuesday.

Bellows scored his first goal on a power play in the first period and then broke a tie early in the third period with the game-winner. So adept were the North Stars that Chicago was unable to pull its goalie for a final attack until six seconds remained in the game.

NHL Playoffs

Blues 4, Maple Leafs 2

Ron Wilson scored twice and Jeff Brown had a goal and two assists as the St. Louis Blues defeated the Toronto Maple Leafs the opening game of their first-round Norris Division playoff series.

NHL goal-scoring champion Brett Hull also scored for the Blues, who lost seven of eight to Toronto during the regular season and were outscored 42-21. Adam Oates had two assists.

Wilson scored only three goals in 33 games during the regular season and was a player-assistant coach with Winnipeg's Moncton farm club of the American Hockey League before being acquired by the Blues Jan. 22. Wilson, who hadn't scored since March 11, got goals in the first and third periods.

Wilson's second goal, a shot from in front after a pass from Gino Cavallini, completed scoring with 8:07 remaining after the Blues started the third period with a 2-1 lead.

Red Raiders face tough grid schedule

LUBBOCK (AP) — Texas Tech was the surprise football team of the Southwest Conference in 1989, using big plays and a slashing running back to compile a 9-3 record and finish the season with a bowl victory.

But a treacherous schedule in 1990 and heavy losses to graduation on offense have the Red Raiders' "backs to the wall" heading into the fall, says Tech head coach Spike Dykes.

"We've got some work to do," said Dykes, who was named Southwest Conference Coach of the Year in 1989. "I look at our schedule and think we have got to get good in a hurry."

After five of the first six games on the road against teams including Ohio State, Arkansas and Texas A&M, the Red Raiders return home for a date with the reigning national champion Miami Hurricanes.

"Boy, that's a tall order," Dykes said. "We could be worse than 2-and-5 at one point and be playing pretty good football."

Texas Tech was the only SWC team to win a bowl game last year, beating Duke 49-21 in the All-American Bowl.

But the sweetest victories came at mid-season when the Raiders, who finished the season ranked No. 19, used late-game pass plays to beat Texas and Texas A&M.

Tech, which completed spring practice Wednesday, lost nine of 11 starters on offense, including All-Southwest Conference running back James Gray and the entire offensive line.

"The offensive line is tender," Dykes said, adding that some of the players vying for starting spots have never played in a college game.

"Any time you lose a James Gray you don't replace him. You just hope to go on to the next stage and develop from there," he said. "But we have got some tools. We are not barefooted."

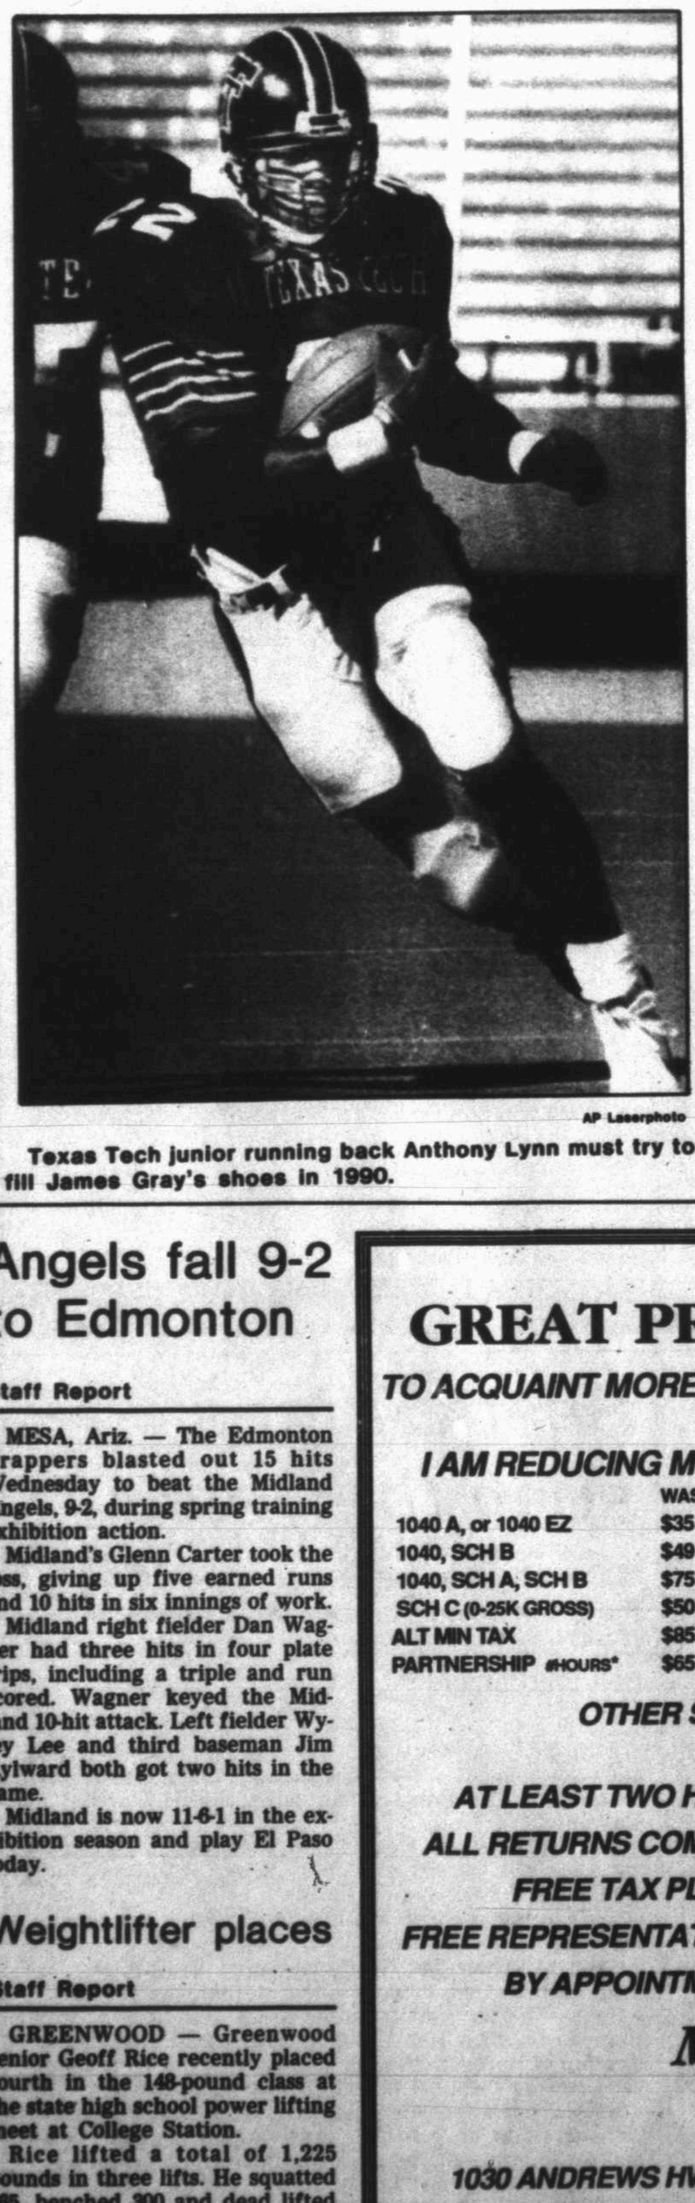

Without Gray, who averaged 100-plus rushing yards per game last season, returning junior quarterback Jamie Gill and junior running back Anthony Lynn will highlight a pass-oriented offense, Dykes said.

Defensively, the Raiders return eight starters.

Anchored by senior linebacker Charles Rowe, a consensus All-SWC selection last year, and sophomore free safety Tracy Saul, who was named SWC Defensive Newcomer of the Year in 1989, the Raiders' "bend but don't break" style defense is the backbone of the team, Dykes said.

The kicking game worries Dykes the most, he said.

Junior Lin Elliott, who connected on nine of 19 field goal attempts last year, has struggled this spring.

Angels fall 9-2 to Edmonton

Staff Report

MESA, Ariz. — The Edmonton Trappers blasted out 15 hits Wednesday to beat the Midland Angels, 9-2, during spring training exhibition action.

Midland's Glenn Carter took the loss, giving up five earned runs and 10 hits in six innings of work.

Midland right fielder Dan Wagner had three hits in four plate trips, including a triple and run scored. Wagner keyed the Midland 10-hit attack. Left fielder Wyley Lee and third baseman Jim Aylward both got two hits in the game.

Midland is now 11-6-1 in the exhibition season and play El Paso today.

Weightlifter places

Even if he loses, Nicklaus wins

By Glenn Sheeley
Cox News Service

AUGUSTA, Ga. — He could play poorly this week at Augusta National and people would say that hey, Jack Nicklaus is 50 years old, don't forget, and that's a lot of trips through Amen Corner.

But if you're talking about pressure, consider the consequences had Nicklaus come up parched in the Arizona desert last week instead of winning his debut on the Senior PGA Tour. Especially after Nicklaus, a six-time Masters champion with a notable ego, was perceived as belittling the quality of play on the 50 and over circuit.

"I managed to put enough pressure on myself to play well," Nicklaus said after his first Masters practice round. "I've seemed to do that all my life. I probably put a little more pressure on myself than I need to. I was nervous about it. I didn't know how I'd perform. Particularly since I hadn't been in contention for a long time.

"But I performed well," he said. "I was really happy with last week, really proud of it. And I think a lot of the work that I've done paid off."

Mobbed by fans Tuesday even in a threesome that included Arnold Palmer and Greg Norman, Nicklaus drew both a crowd and a firm focus on the Masters. He won in 1986 with his pre-Augusta game in shambles. He will step to the first tee Thursday possessing a confidence reminiscent of the days when he and Palmer dueled on a regular basis.

"The win last week made me feel like I could play golf again," Nicklaus said. "It's the best I've hit the ball in years. My swing hasn't felt this way since the mid-70's."

As odd as it sounds, in some respects the hard part is over for Nicklaus. Granted, the Desert Mountain course in Scottsdale, Ariz., was designed by Nicklaus and surely no coincidental spot to begin his senior play. But at Augusta National Nicklaus has won more times than anyone else in the world.

"If I'm going to pick a tournament that would be easier for me, I'd have to pick this one," Nicklaus said. "But that doesn't mean I'm picking myself to win the tournament, by any means.

"I won six times here," he said. "The things of my game that I've lost have been the strength to play out of the rough and you don't have any rough (here). The few par 5's that you're going to reach on a regular basis, which are 13 and 15, you're probably going to reach with a good tee shot."

The way Nicklaus's day began, it wasn't looking like his lucky week. Leaving the West Palm Beach airport Tuesday morning, his Gulfstream II-B jet suffered engine pressure problems, causing an aborted takeoff. On board were his wife Barbara, son Jack II, wife Barbara and grandson Jack III. Asked if the incident was unsettling, Nicklaus brushed it off as routine, stunned that it would be interpreted otherwise.

On the second hole, he hit a ball that shot through a fairway trap, caught the lip, caromed and hit a spectator under the eye.

But settling down, Nicklaus played well enough to consider the possibility of winning his premier senior event and the Masters on consecutive weeks. He has done more shocking things. Remember 1986.

"I've gone for 30 years where most of the time I've walked into a golf tournament I've been the one that people have expected to win," Nicklaus said. "I'm sure it will be when I get back out on the senior tour. But that's all right. I like that. It makes me work. It makes me try harder. People expect me to do well. I don't want to disappoint them. I want to play the best I can.

"I think the question somebody asked me last week was, 'What would you do if you win this week and then won again next week?'" Nicklaus said. "I think I said, 'I'd probably have a nice, long retirement. What else are you going to say? I hadn't won a tournament in five years. It would be a nice problem."

Baylor basketball coach shops around

Cox News Service

WACO — Baylor coach Gene Iba said that he hasn't been contacted by Oklahoma State officials concerning the school's vacant head basketball coaching position. However, Iba said it is a position that interests him.

The Oklahoma State job opened Monday when Leonard Hamilton became the University of Miami's head basketball coach. Hamilton coached the Cowboys for four seasons and took them to the second round of the National Invitation Tournament this season.

"I haven't been contacted by anyone at Oklahoma State officially," Iba said Tuesday. "But if they were interested, I'd talk to them."

Iba considers Oklahoma State one of the top four programs in the Big 8 along with Oklahoma, Kansas and Missouri.

HYDE: San Angelo team to beat

From 1D

"Jenny is starting to play some real competitive and consistent golf," Eudy said. "She's getting it together both mentally and physically. I think she's ready to make a big jump.

"And playing at Odessa Country Club will be a lot like playing here (Ranchland). I think we have several girls that are ready to shoot a low score there."

Odessa Permian is fourth in team scoring with 1,162, followed by Midland Lee's 1,198 and Abilene High's 1,213.

From 1D

Montreal Expo farmhand said. "Nobody has told me the job is mine.

"I'm still trying to win a job and so is he."

Velarde came a long way toward erasing the Yankees' doubts that he could hit major league pitching with a two-month spurt interrupted by a pulled rib muscle that kept him out of the lineup for a month.

Velarde crushed American League pitching at a .326 clip after being recalled from the Yankees' Columbus, Ohio, affiliate in mid-July. He added two home runs and 11 runs batted in, despite batting only 86 times.

He also had 28 hits and 28 games played. Most of his major league playing time was at third base.

Velarde had hit the big leaguers infrequently during 1987 and 1988 stints with the Yankees, batting only .175 in those two seasons. But he got off on the right foot after being called up in '89.

"Getting off to a great start was the difference," Velarde said. "I had six hits in my first three games in mid-July."

And, the right-handed swatter eliminated any thoughts that the Yankees might platoon him with a respectable .290 mark against righty pitching, while tattooing lefties at a .420 clip.

Velarde's off-season training was set back somewhat by post-season wrist surgery, but he ultimately was able to develop a training program that included regular weight training work at the Texas Institute of Sports Medicine in Midland, two or three hours of batting practice with a pitching machine at Zachery Field, and regular infield practice with Midland High players.

"I weighed 193 pounds on Feb. 1," he said. "I was only 177 pounds at the end of the season."

Velarde was able to maintain his training schedule despite the distraction wrought by the ongoing labor-management problem in major league baseball — a problem which climaxed with a month-long lockout, which in turn caused a shortened spring training schedule.

"I had to go with a plan to be in shape," Velarde said. "We had to be in shape to be prepared."

As a younger player, the 26-year-old Velarde wasn't involved in the actual negotiating sessions between the Major League Baseball Players Association and the owners' Player Relations Committee. But that didn't preclude him from voicing his opinion, especially on a proposed player performance plan that went nowhere in the negotiations.

"I think the player performance plan would have developed more of an 'I' attitude," Velarde said. "Things like sacrificing and giving yourself up to move the runner over to third base (by grounding to the right side of the infield) would have been overlooked."

The player performance plan would have focused on high-profile statistics such as home runs, RBI, batting average and stolen bases.

No matter what happens during the 1990 season — whether he's at third base, shortstop, or the bench, Velarde can appreciate the differences between his West Texas home and the high-pressure atmosphere in New York.

"The fans and the media demand that the Yankees win," Velarde said.

"New York is an exciting town and I've grown to enjoy playing there."

Velarde has enjoyed a meteoric rise to major league legitimacy. After an outstanding career at Lubbock Christian College, he was a 19th-round pick by the Chicago White Sox in 1985.

The Yankees picked him up in a trade for pitcher Scott Neilson and infielder Mike Soper before the 1987 season, and he made the major leagues for the first time later that season after stops in Albany, N.Y., and Columbus.

Associated Press

As usual, nothing's simple with the New York Yankees. While most teams are trying to sort out their rosters, the Yankees are trying to sort out Don Mattingly's contract talks.

On Tuesday, Mattingly said that if the didn't get a contract extension by opening day, he would file for free agency after the season. On Wednesday, his agent, Jim Krivacs, met with Yankees owner George Steinbrenner.

Chisox 9, Texas 1

Former Texas Ranger Scott Fletcher doubled and drove in three runs to haunt his former teammates before a national TV audience over ESPN.

Astros 6, Blue Jays 3

At Kissimmee, Fla., Mike Scott and Dan Schatzeder combined on two-hitter and Terry Puhl's two-run single in the seventh broke a 2-2 tie. Manny Lee had both Toronto hits.

Scott, who will start Monday's opener against Cincinnati, allowed one unearned run and one hit and walked three over five innings.

Braves 10, Yankees 5

Cardinals 10, Reds 8

At Plant City, Fla., Terry Pendleton hit a three-run homer and Tom Brunansky drove in three runs, including a two-run homer. St. Louis has won just two of nine exhibition games.

Expos 4, Dodgers 1

At Vero Beach, Fla., Tom Foley's two-run double capped a three-run eighth-inning rally.

Abbott hopes to work quietly

By Ken Peters
AP Sports Writer

PALM SPRINGS, Calif. (AP) — The clamor and the curiosity have subsided. Jim Abbott goes — quietly, he hopes — about the business of becoming a successful pitcher.

"This year, I'm going to go out there and blend into the woodwork and let the big guys do their thing," he said, referring to California's other pitchers. "At the end of the year, hopefully people can look back and say, 'Hey, you did a good job, too.'"

Abbott, who went directly from pitching the United States to a 1988 Olympic gold medal to pitching in the majors last year, was a natural as a story and as an athlete.

He was an Olympic hero, a Sullivan Award winner, and a pitcher who was born without a right hand. Fans and media besieged him as he made his first circuit of American League cities.

He survived well; he had a 12-12 record that could have been even better with improved fielding and hitting support, and he showed remarkable patience with fans and reporters.

"A guy who comes right out of college and makes the major leagues, that's a tremendous adjustment," Angels catcher Lance Parrish said. "Then he was in constant demand by the media. Most of us would have gone crazy, but I never saw him lose his temper. He was very gracious."

Even the television crews from Japan, whose viewers grew fascinated by Abbott when he beat their national team in the Olympic final, no longer covered his every outing.

Heading into his second season, Abbott has been concentrating on his craft with one priority: adding a dependable cangeup to balance his overpowering fastball and darting slider.

"It's a lot more pleasant," Abbott said. "It's nice to be able to not have to worry about all sorts of things, just to go out and work on pitching. Now each time I pitch, I'm not going to have to repeat my whole life story every time afterward."

Last year is kind of a blur in his memory.

"Everything happened so fast," he said. "I guess it was a crash course."

Abbott lost his first two decisions, 7-0 to Seattle and 5-0 to Oakland. That seemed to give credence to skeptics who questioned whether the Angels kept Abbott on their roster simply because he would be a drawing card.

"I know we (players) say we don't pay any attention to what we read," Abbott said, "but there were times when all the things that were written, saying I didn't belong, bothered me."

But, he added, the confidence shown in him by Angels manager Doug Rader and pitching coach Marcel Lachemann never wavered, and that helped him keep going.

Abbott got his first win on April 24, a 3-2 victory over Baltimore. There were other confidence-builders as the season wore on, including a four-hit, 5-0 shutout over Boston and Roger Clemens on May 17. He threw another four-hit shutout at Boston in a 4-0 win on Aug. 30.

"There were a lot of things that helped my confidence and that was a big one," Abbott said.

He finished the year with a 3.92 earned-run average, striking out 115 in 181 1-3 innings. He lost six times in games where the Angels were held to either one run or were shut out, and allowed 16 unearned runs, more than any other California starter.

Abbott expects this season to be more fun than last year.

"It was kind of stressful, but it was my own fault," he said. "I think I just put too much importance on everything that was going on. Now I feel I don't have to live up to anyone's expectations. Even if I couldn't play baseball any more, I certainly wouldn't like it, but I realize it wouldn't be the end of the world.

"Last year was a very memorable year. I think I became a much better pitcher and a much better person."

NFL wants to expand by '92

LONDON (AP) — NFL commissioner Paul Tagliabue said the league will expand no later than 1993 — the first time the NFL has set a specific timetable for adding teams.

"Expansion is a very top priority, possibly by 1992, certainly by 1993," Tagliabue said Wednesday during a teleconference to discuss a summer preseason game in London between the Los Angeles Raiders and New Orleans Saints.

Tagliabue and former commissioner Pete Rozelle previously said expansion would take place two years after a new collective bargaining agreement had been signed with the NFL Players Association. The league and union have been without an agreement since 1987.

NFL spokesman Dick Maxwell, who attended the news conference in London, said the league would add four teams — either four at once, or two in one season and two more shortly thereafter.

Tagliabue said the NFL was concentrating on the U.S. for new franchises, but said cities in Mexico, Canada and Britain could be considered for expansion teams.

Asked about the possibility of an NFL franchise outside the U.S., Tagliabue said: "I could see that down the line. I think it's possible that it could be in this decade.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

THURSDAY, APRIL 5, 1990

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Only hard work and patience will bring you what you want. Complicated business negotiations will require the advice of experts; pay for the best. Lasting career success depends largely on your ability to become more diplomatic and less dominant. A new business partner will improve the bottom line. An unexpected windfall or bonus could provide a winter vacation. You opt for travel over a carload of gifts. A teen-ager's academic success is a source of family pride.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actors Gregory Peck and Spencer Tracy, director Roger Corman, actress Bette Davis.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Do not allow people who are prejudiced or limited in scope to influence you. Trust your own judgment about new ideas and people. A mystery will be solved; stay alert.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Get household chores out of the way early. Work-related financial questions may be answered by sunset. A phone call could bring an intriguing last-minute invitation. Dress to impress.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Now is an opportune time to discuss mutual financial responsibilities with your mate or partner. Keep entertainment expenses within reason. A younger member of the family may need a new sense of direction.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Your intuition makes it easy for you to solve work problems today. Money can be made by giving an old idea a new twist! Go over your finances before making any purchases or promises.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Use your contacts more judiciously; be prepared to give as well as take. Try to find out where you stand with an influential associate. A newcomer could make you a fascinating proposition.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Today's business transactions will bring lasting benefits. Your imagination could be excited by an out-of-towner's observations. Resist the urge to make snap judgments. A relationship goes like clockwork.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A low-key approach is best if a disagreement arises. Do not attempt to intimidate the opposition or force an issue. It is important to say the right thing at the critical moment.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Strive to be more patient with those who mean the most to you. Mate or partner may express confusion over some personal goals. Offer to act as a sounding board this evening.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Adopt a different approach where a special relationship is concerned. Someone you have upset is slow to forgive. Giving credit where it is due may lessen an associate's envy.

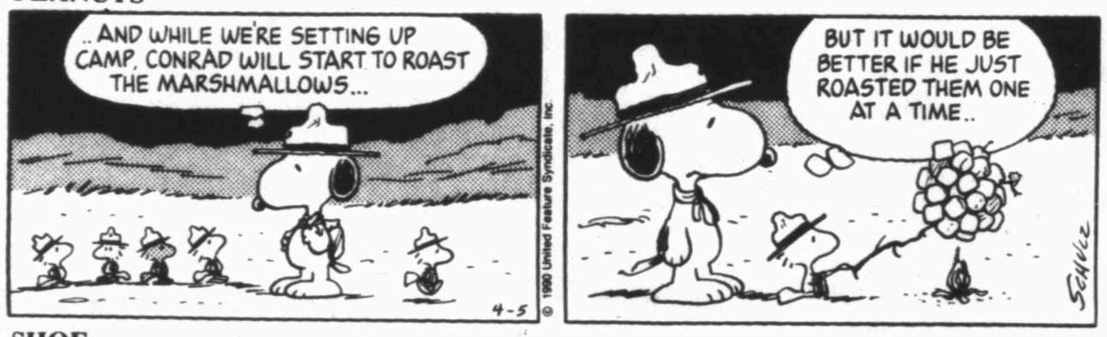

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Political differences can cause trouble today. Help comes from an unexpected source. A sense of humor improves your chances for happiness in love. Refuse to be involved in friends' personal squabbles.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Things should start looking up financially. Careful money management will be required to keep the pressure off. Work in tandem with a co-worker to increase productivity on the job.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Be on the lookout for bargains. You may have a chance to attend a special sale or auction. Talking with a young person could be both entertaining and enlightening. Avoid sounding condescending.

TODAY'S CHILDREN are outgoing and energetic, likely to talk and walk earlier than other children. Affectionate and friendly, these Aries will generously share their toys, hoping for a hug or kiss in return. Born leaders, they can be a bit bullying unless the tendency is nipped in the bud. Teach these youngsters that power and responsibility go hand-in-hand. For all their prized independence, these Rams rely on the love and loyalty of their families.

The bidding:

Opening lead: Jack of ♡

We remember being taught that, when trying to develop a suit, it is right to lead low cards up to honors. That way there will be times when an opponent's high card is wasted on air. But don't confuse generalities with gospel.

The auction was straightforward. With a balanced 21 points and a five-card minor suit, South's opening bid of two no trump was impeccable. Despite the six-card minor, North didn't even contemplate looking for an 11-trick game. In all other respects, his hand was balanced.

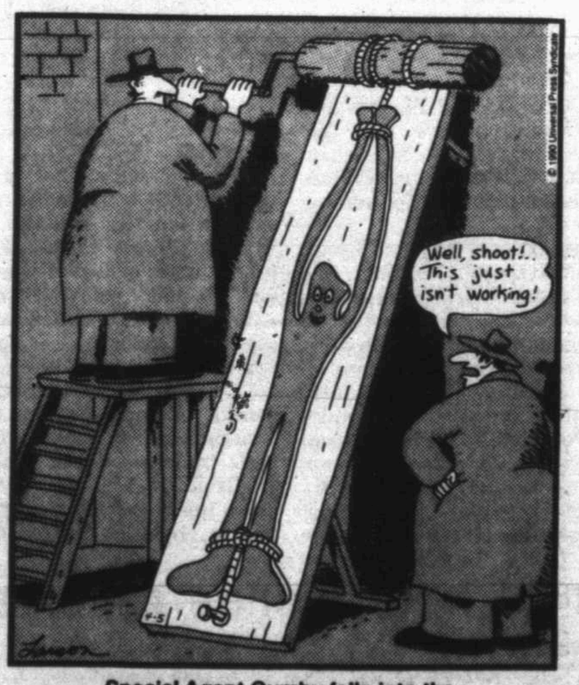

West led the jack of hearts and the play was soon over. Declarer won and led a low diamond, and it was only when West discarded a spade that it dawned on declarer the contract was in danger. East captured the jack with the ace and knocked out another heart stopper.

With only two tricks available in diamonds, declarer needed two club tricks to make the contract. But East won the first club and forced out the remaining heart stopper and declarer had to be satisfied with eight tricks.

Note the difference if declarer leads the queen of diamonds at trick two. If East ducks, declarer abandons diamonds and drives out the enemy's two high clubs. In the fullness of time, declarer will take two spade tricks, three hearts, one diamond and three clubs.

Therefore, East must win the ace of diamonds and revert to hearts, but declarer is still in control. After winning the heart, declarer simply ducks a diamond, wins the heart return and then takes four diamond tricks to go with the three hearts and ace-king of spades, for a total of nine.

Singer Gloria Estefan released from hospital

Estefan

"It's great to be home," Miami Sound Machine's 32-year-old vocalist told about 150 people gathered at the airport, expressing her gratitude to news media and to fans who showered her with encouragement, flowers and cards.

"I have felt every one of those prayers from the first moment," Estefan said. "I think that was very important in the way that I feel and the way I recuperate."

Estefan suffered broken vertebrae when a tractor-trailer struck her tour bus March 21 on a snowy Pennsylvania highway. She was transferred to the New York hospital the next day, and doctors performed delicate surgery to implant two steel rods in her spine.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The doctor treating Lee Atwater for a brain tumor said Wednesday the growth is "aggressive and dangerous," and will require chemotherapy in addition to radiation treatment.

In a statement issued through the Republican Party headquarters, Dr. Paul L. Kornblith said that working in Atwater's favor were the facts that he was in excellent health and "the lesion is quite small and has been detected early in its development."

Atwater was in Montefiore Medical Center in New York City where a team of physicians led by Kornblith implanted radioactive isotopes into the tumor Tuesday in an effort to kill the growth on the right frontal lobe of Atwater's brain.

GENEVA (AP) — Exiled King Michael of Romania plans his first visit to his homeland since a Soviet-installed government forced him to abdicate 42 years ago, a spokeswoman said Wednesday.

Michael

Michael plans to leave April 12 for what spokeswoman Danielle Maillefer termed a "sort of private pilgrimage" of no more than 10 days, accompanied by his wife, Queen Anne.

The provisional Romanian government was informed of the private visit "through diplomatic channels," Ms. Maillefer said.

Michael left Romania four days after his Dec. 30, 1947, abdication. He said he signed the document because he was threatened his supporters would be massacred, if he refused.

At a news conference shortly after the overthrow of Nicolae Ceausescu in December, the 68-year-old Michael said he would head a constitutional monarchy if asked to by voters through a national referendum. "If people want me to come back, I will come back," he said.

Michael is related to the British and other European royalty and holds a British passport. He settled in Switzerland in 1956.

John Paul II

John Paul has accepted an invitation from the Italian Olympic Committee to visit the stadium on May 31 and bless the remodeled arena, the Vatican announced Wednesday.

Host team Italy will play its first game there June 9 against Austria and the stadium will be the site of the final of the month-long competition.

He visited the stadium, which was built for the 1960 Summer Olympics, for a Holy Year sports celebration in 1984.

Workmen are now trying to meet the deadline to finish the modernization, which includes putting up a roof over the stands.

PARIS (AP) — A court has ordered actor Yves Montand to submit to a blood test to determine if he is the father of a 14-year-old girl whose mother has filed a paternity lawsuit.

Montand

The court concluded Tuesday that Montand and former actress Anne Florange had a relationship for several years after they met in 1972 while making films in southern France.

Montand, 68, could refuse the test, but would "bear all consequences of this refusal," said the court. There was no immediate indication how the actor would respond.

Valvano willing to deal

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Jim Valvano is willing to compromise on the $500,000 buyout clause his contract requires North Carolina State to pay if the school forces the basketball coach's resignation, his lawyer said Wednesday.

"He doesn't want to stick it to the university that's been good to him," attorney Woody Webb said. "By the same token, he's been good to it, too."

Though Valvano's contract has the $500,000 buyout clause, Webb said, "It's safe to say he's willing to come off that."

Webb said a compromise proposal would be delivered to university attorneys, who have told Valvano he would not be permitted to remain as coach.

Webb also said he thought State was softening on its initial offer of a $106,000 payoff, but he declined to give details.

Valvano's salary is $100,035, but sneaker contracts, product endorsements and local TV and radio programs would make his total income many times that amount.

UIL: Reprimands abound

From 1D

Georgetown's girls' soccer program was placed on probation for a year, and will be publicly reprimanded, Contreras said.

Turek, according to a complaint by officials, refused to leave a Dec. 19 Shiner-Hallettsville basketball game after he was instructed to do so following a third technical foul against the Shiner bench.

"If I leave, then the rest of the team is going to leave also," Turek allegedly told officials. Turek also received a public reprimand.

Assistant varsity basketball coach J. Britsch, who left the game in place of Turek, was placed on probation for one year and will be publicly reprimanded. Shiner's boys' basketball program also was put on probation for a year and will be publicly reprimanded.

In addition to the one-game suspension next season, James of Montgomery was placed on probation for a year and will be publicly reprimanded for allegedly telling officials, following a Dec. 18 basketball game with Magnolia, that if he "didn't need my job," he would whip them. "I can, I've whipped larger men than you."

James testified Wednesday he made the statement about the officials to an assistant, and not directly to the officials.

The two officials also said Montgomery players cursed them as they were leaving the gym, and were not supervised by a coach at the time.

James in a letter said he thought the officials "blew the incident way out of proportion."

Montgomery's boys' basketball program was placed on one-year probation, and it will be publicly reprimanded.

Also, on Wednesday, the UIL executive committee:

— Reprimanded El Paso Andress boys' basketball coach Roshern Amie as a result of a published comment attributed to Amie that "monkeys in stripes" had cost Andress a playoff loss to Plainview in Midland. "I would never use the word 'monkeys,'" Amie said.

— Reprimanded Plainview boys' basketball coach Carl Irlbeck, who was quoted following a 63-62 loss to Amarillo, as saying, "I believe those guys (officials) were honest when I took them. Now I feel they aren't."

— Supported Amarillo Palo Duro's decision to reprimand junior varsity boys' basketball coach Gerald Tucker as a result of two JV players allegedly verbally abusing officials following a 75-74 loss to the Lubbock JV on Feb. 2. One official said he also was struck on the arm by a player waving his arms.

The school's decision to suspend the two players from UIL activity for the remainder of this school year was reinforced by the UIL committee, which also placed the players on probation for 1990-91.

— Placed Slidell's girls' basketball program on probation for one year, following game officials' complaints that fans had cursed them after a 42-41 Slidell loss to Ponder. Slidell also was instructed to present to the UIL by June 1 a plan for crowd control at basketball games.

— Reprimanded Banquette High School after a official complained that a spectator at the Banquette-Benavides boys' basketball game on Feb. 6 nudged him and said, "They lost because of you."

CBS, which dismissed Brent Musburger on Sunday, denied a report on Wednesday that ABC's Al Michaels will work a practice baseball broadcast this weekend.

NBC's Bob Costas, meantime, said he was not interested in the CBS baseball announcing job left open by Murburger's departure. Speaking on ABC Radio, Costas said trying to switch networks would be "an unseemly thing to do."

"If Neal Pilson of CBS were to make that offer," Costas said, referring to the president of CBS Sports, "... I could go to them on that basis and make that request, but I will not do that even if I had a chance to move over — and I don't think that I will — for a simple reason.

"They didn't try to lose baseball," said Costas, who was the No. 2 play-by-play man at NBC. "It wasn't their fault. They dealt with me in good faith and I think that I'll be best served if I stay where I am and hope that NBC has baseball back in 1994. And then as a good, team player, it will be my assignment to have, instead of trying to manuever myself all over the network map. I just think it's an unseemly thing to do."

Oil prices fall

NEW YORK (AP) — Energy futures prices dropped sharply Wednesday amid selling linked to a seasonal demand reduction and a report that showed abundant supplies.

Market analysts said a bearish attitude toward oil futures intensified when crude fell below $20 a barrel on the New York Mercantile Exchange.

The contract for May delivery of West Texas Intermediate, the benchmark grade of U.S. crude oil, fell 52 cents to settle at $19.78 a barrel, adding to Tuesday's loss of 18 cents. Contracts for later delivery also posted declines.

Dollar mixed

Gold traded in London at $374.50 a troy ounce. In Zurich, gold was bid at $374.50 an ounce.

Silver prices also were mixed. On New York's Comex, silver bullion for current delivery settled at $5.160 a troy ounce. Silver traded in London at $5.02 an ounce, unchanged.

Vote for special trustee to find buyer for carrier

■ Unsecured creditors have aligned with unions to call for a sale, rather than liquidation, of Eastern Airlines.

Associated Press

NEW YORK (AP) — Unsecured creditors of Eastern Airlines, frustrated by the company's mounting losses and plans to reduce debt payments, have agreed to seek the appointment of a special trustee to find a buyer for the carrier.

The unsecured creditors' committee voted unanimously Tuesday to reject Eastern's latest reorganization proposal, which would give them only 25 cents for each dollar owed. A majority of the creditors also voted to seek the appointment of a special trustee, sources close to the committee said.

"This group has had it and they're not going to take it anymore," one of the sources said.

The move puts the creditors in alliance with Eastern's unions, which have sought a trustee since Miami-based Eastern filed for bankruptcy protection on March 9, 1989. The Chapter 11 filing came five days after the start of a crippling strike by pilots, flight attendants and Machinists.

Until recently, the creditors had been supportive of Eastern efforts to rebuild. The unions, meanwhile, have argued that a trustee should take over the management of Eastern from Frank Lorenzo, chairman of Eastern's parent Texas Air Corp. They accuse Lorenzo of draining Eastern's assets into its sister carrier Continental Airlines and Texas Air.

In a meeting in New York Tuesday with officials of Eastern and Texas Air, the committee of unsecured creditors rejected Eastern's plan to repay 25 percent of the $980 million it owes them, the sources said.

The creditors' committee authorized its attorneys to ask the U.S. Bankruptcy Court to appoint a special trustee to sell the airline, said the sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity. The committee dropped an earlier threat to press for a liquidation of Eastern.

PI goes on block

Officials of Dun & Bradstreet announced today in a video report to its employees that Petroleum Information Inc. of Denver will be put on the block for sale as part of a restructuring move, but no prospective buyer was named.

The information company which gathers and supplies data and information in the form of logs, maps and publications to the oil and gas industry employs about 30 in Midland and has had a presence in the Permian Basin since the late 1960s. It is uncertain how a sale might affect operations in the Permian Basin and elsewhere.

The company operated printing facilities in Midland until 1989 when it announced it would close those operations and move them to Denver.

Midland firm makes Fortune Texas list

Staff Report

A Midland-based company is among the Texas-based companies included in the two lists of the nation's largest companies released Tuesday.

Insilco, which was purchased by Wagner & Brown in 1988 was 398 on the list with $766 million in sales. The manufacturing company was down from 387 on the list last year.

The major list shows companies in the Fortune 500, a ranking of the nation's largest industrial companies compiled by Fortune magazine on the basis of 1989 sales. The list does not include No. 3 Exxon, which has announced plans to move to Irving, but has not yet moved. Exxon had 1989 sales of $86.565 billion.

Also Tuesday, Forbes magazine released a list of the "Super 50" companies, which it said reflected the biggest companies in America based on their "across-the-board strength" in sales, profits, assets and the market value of their stock. Exxon was also third on that list.

FORBES Super 50

40. JC Penney, $16.1 billion in sales; $802 million in profits; $12.7 billion in assets; and $8.25 billion in market value of stock.

Senate OKs Ryan as S&L overseer

■ T. Timothy Ryan Jr. was named the top savings and loan regulator by the Senate despite opposition by Democrats based on his lack of banking experience.

By Dave Skidmore

Ryan

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate confirmed T. Timothy Ryan Jr. as the nation's chief savings and loan regulator Wednesday despite Democrats' complaints that he lacked banking experience.

President Bush's nominee, a 44-year-old labor law attorney, won approval on a 62-37 vote to begin a five-year term as director of the Treasury Department's Office of Thrift Supervision.

Seventeen Democrats joined all 45 Republicans in voting to confirm Ryan, who was nominated less than two weeks ago. Thirty-seven Democrats were opposed.

Ryan's admission that he tried marijuana and cocaine 17 years ago as a law student figured little in the debate.

"I don't think that had any part in judging the fitness of this nominee," said Sen. Donald W. Riegle Jr., D-Mich., chairman of the Banking Committee, which endorsed Ryan on a 11-10 vote last week.

Riegle and other opponents said he was professionally unqualified to oversee the nation's 2,500 S&Ls. Supporters stressed his management experience and credit him, as the Labor Department's top attorney early in the Reagan administration, with helping to clean up the Teamsters Union.

The appointment removes a constitutional challenge to the administration's S&L bailout. A federal judge ruled two weeks ago that the agency's officials lacked authority to seize failed institutions. The decision was delayed by an appeals court, but only until April 11.

In case Ryan was defeated, Riegle had prepared legislation that would remove the basis of the legal challenge and allow President Bush to appoint an acting director without challenge.

"Mr. Ryan ... (is) part of a generation coming forward now ... whose members may have at one or more times experimented with drugs. ... To me it would be a bad policy to write them off," said Sen. John Warner, R-Va.

Opponents praised Ryan's skill as a lawyer, but said his lack of knowledge will force him to learn on the job and rely on the administration for advice rather than exercise independent judgment.

"We don't have time for a rookie on this team. There is no time for a learning curve. There will be no spring training for this job. Opening day will be the first day on the job," said Sen. Bob Graham, D-Fla.

Supporters, however, argued that Ryan has the intelligence and leadership skills to succeed.

Water Wonderland could reopen

Staff Report

Efforts are underway to reopen Water Wonderland, with a target opening date of May 5, according to J.R. "Junior" Franks.

Franks led a group of employees who took over the entertainment complex from owner Sam F. "Sonny" Henderson last May under a lease-purchase plan.

He said he hopes to finish renegotiating a lease with Henderson by the end of this week, so the park can open for the warm weather season on May 5.

"Mr. Henderson's been out of town, so he hasn't been able to look at the lease," Franks explained. "He's expected back tonight (Wednesday), so hopefully we can have this wrapped up the end of this week."

SCOTT BURNS

When investing funds, assess broker

By Scott Burns

Burns

Q. I am 72, retired, and live alone. In 1986 I sold my house, bought a smaller one, and had the difference of $130,000 to invest. After a lifetime of using savings accounts, I allowed myself to be tempted into investments. I never believed in the stock market and mistakenly thought that investments did not fluctuate as stocks do.

In June, 1986 I invested $50,000 into the Dean Witter Hi Yield Securities fund. Share value was $14.93. I elected to receive the taxable income.

Last October my account executive called and suggested that I take my money out of that account and place it in another, a Freddi-mac, since the value of my investment had dropped. I took his advice and transferred to the Freddi-Mac.

I also have five custodial accounts for my five grandchildren in the same high yield fund, leaving the income to "grow" (and be taxed).

My account executive flippantly declared that I could deduct $3,000 a year on my tax return to cover my loss. He claims the children did not lose money since they ended up close to the original investment but he ignores the fact that they have been taxed on bogus earnings.

Was I right in agreeing to place the money in the Freddi-Mac?

I also put $50,000 in the Dean Witter Government Securities Trust. It was at a lower yield but I felt it was more secure. I still have this account although the monthly income and value per share have dropped. Should I hold on to it?

I am tempted to take out all my money but resent the fact that I would be penalized with fees in addition to the losses. What should I do? —H.C., Hackettstown, N.J.

A. Your broker can afford to be flippant: while you have lost money or broken even, at best, he has enjoyed commission income on over $100,000 in transactions.

His recommendation to sell the Hi Yield fund, however, was a good one. From an asset value of $9.80 a share at the end of September, it fell to $7.70 recently. By redeeming when you did you beat the rush out of one of the very worst performing junk bond funds. Morningstar, a Chicago based service that rates mutual funds, recommends that shareholders "follow the crowd to the exits."

Your Dean Witter Government Securities Fund investment is more problematic. While not a disaster like the Hi Yield fund, this fund has nothing in particular to recommend it.

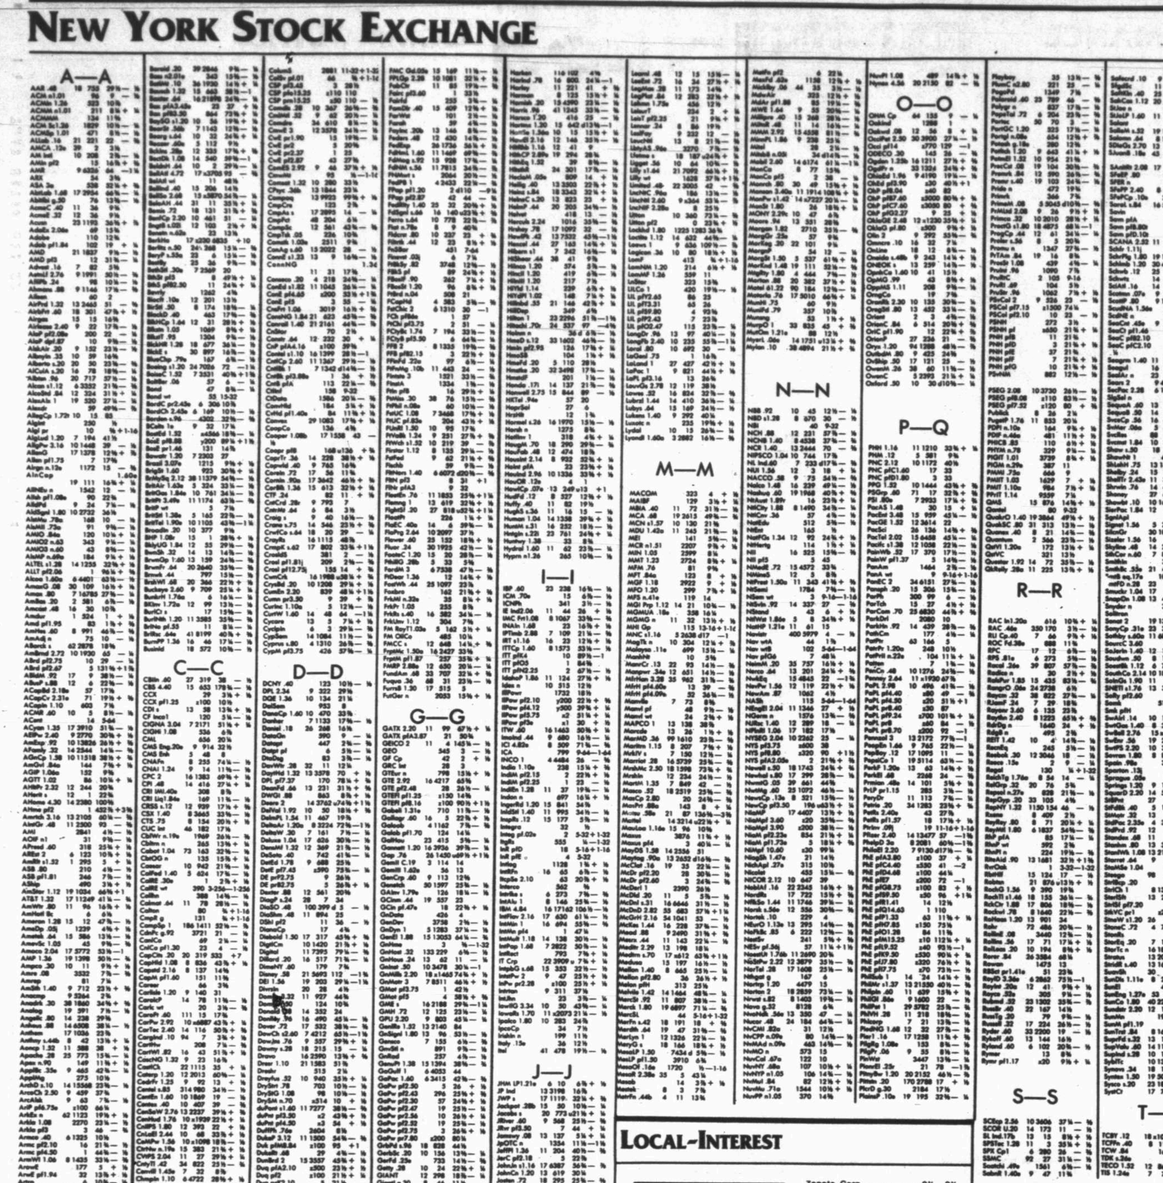

This fund is about 90 percent invested in Ginnie Mae mortgage backed securities and offers a current yield, according to Income and Safety (a Fort Lauderdale based newsletter on income mutual funds) of 7.7 percent.

Why is the yield so low?

Fund expenses. The expense ratio for the fund — the total of management and operating expenses divided by fund assets — is 1.21 percent.

ACTIVITY HIGHLIGHTS

Runnels gas find flows 2.53 Mmcfd

Staff Report

An unidentified gas discovery, possibly Gardner, was completed in Runnels County, northeast of a producer in the Winters Southwest (Goens) field.

WESTERN PRIDE RESOURCES INC., San Angelo, tested the No. 3 Vancil "A" for a calculated absolute open flow of 2.532 Mmcfd from perforations 4,304 to 4,307 ft. Condensate gravity was 64.9 degrees API and gas-liquid ratio was 57,800:1.

Total depth was 4,360 ft., where 4 1/2 inch casing was set.

The well topped the Palo Pinto at 3,674 ft., Goen at 4,130, and Gardner Lime at 4,311 ft. on ground elevation of 1,831 ft.

Kent County field gains 120-barrel extender

SOJOURNER DRILLING CORP., Abilene, has extended the Maben (Cisco) field of Kent County northeast with completion of activity in the area.

On potential test, the No. 1 CRM-Irwon flowed 120 barrels of 38 gravity crude and no water on a 20/64 inch choke. The well flowed from perforations 5,498 to 5,539 ft.

Permitted as a 6,200 ft. wildcat, the well was drilled to 6,351 ft. with 4 1/2 inch casing set at 5,731 ft.

DEVELOPMENT WELLS

■ DRILLING PROGRAM SET IN HOCKLEY. Texaco Inc. plans to drill five wells in the Levelland field of Hockley County, three miles south of Pettit. All five are on the Ira P. DeLoache lease, with contract depth of 4,860 ft.

(From 1E)

While your fund isn't the most expensive GNMA fund (that honor appears to belong to Thomson McKinnon with an 8.0 percent yield and a 1.70 percent expense ratio. Prudential Bache is a close runner up at 8.2 percent yield and a 1.66 percent expense ratio), it is very close to the top.

Needless to say, your broker at Dean Witter was not free to sell you funds from competing brokerage firms that compare favorably.

He was, however, free to offer you independent funds that also have commissions — such as Franklin, Kemper, or Putnam. Why didn't he?

Yield-To-Broker. He is encouraged to sell company created product.

The average GNMA fund, according to Income and Safety, has a gross yield of 9.4 percent, an expense ratio of 0.90 percent, and a net yield (the money they can pay out to you) of 8.5 percent.

Wall Street routinely sells sizzle to people who want steak.

What to do?

This broker has not earned his keep. He didn't look at your needs and make reasoned recommendations. He sold the product of the moment. See the branch manager. Tell him you want to change account executives and you want him to recommend one that is responsible.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Common stocks finish last during bankruptcy

By Bill Doyle

Q. Last year, I invested in stock. This year, the company whose stock I bought filed for bankruptcy. May I take my money back?

Doyle

A. No! You can't get your money back from the company or from the brokerage firm through which you purchased the stock. The only way you can recover your money is by selling that stock at the same price you paid when you bought it. With the company in bankruptcy, it's most unlikely you will be able to do that.

Each share of stock represents a share of ownership. As a stockholder, you are a part owner of that company. Ownership carries with it the possibility of financial reward through dividend payments and increased market value of the stock. But it also entails risk, as you are finding out.

If the bankruptcy results in the company being liquidated all its assets will be sold and the money raised will be distributed. For you and other stockholders, the bad news is that all debts — including bonds the company issued — must be paid off before stockholders get anything.

If the company has preferred stock, the owners of that stock will have the next claim on the money. Common stock is last in the corporate pecking order. Common stockholders collect only after — and if — all debt and preferred stock obligations have been met.

However, in some bankruptcy cases, companies are reorganized and owners of preferred and common stock receive newly issued securities and/or cash. There is no blanket scenario to cover all bankruptcies. Keep tabs on your case by staying in touch with the court-appointed bankruptcy trustee.

Q. My mother made it clear to a broker that she knows very little about handling stocks she inherited. She trusted the broker to handle everything. How much responsibility does the broker have to keep her informed of any changes?

A. The brokerage firm sends your mother a confirmation statement every time a security is purchased or sold for her account. Also, she receives periodic statements — either monthly or quarterly — listing everything in her account.

I'm assuming by "trusting the broker to handle everything," your mother leaves her stock with the brokerage in "street name." From you letter, it also seems she has a discretionary account — giving the broker authority to buy and sell securities for her, without consulting her in advance.

To my mind, that's a mistake unless she has absolute faith in the broker. In the hands of an unscrupulous broker, a discretionary account is an invitation for "churning" — rapid buying and selling to garner commissions.

Q. My mother's broker never informed her that a transaction for her account involved a capital gain. Fortunately, her accountant caught that on her income tax return. Otherwise, the tax penalty would have been severe. Shouldn't the broker have told her?

A. Not necessarily. A broker's job is to buy and sell stock. The chore of handling taxes is the accountant's.

Q. My broker left his firm and my account was turned over to someone else at that firm. I did not learn of this until quite some time later, when I phoned to place an order. I feel I should have been informed of the change. Am I right?

A. This is one of those "maybe" situations. Even though informing you would have been good customer relations, there's no rule it had to be done.

Friends sue over reputation of fine arts station

CHICAGO (AP) — Most radio stations can hire and fire, switch ad policies and conduct programming experiments without creating an uproar. But not WFMT.

WFMT has friends, and the Friends of WFMT won't stand for any tinkering with the venerable fine arts station.

The Friends are suing to protect WFMT's international reputation, says Herbert Kraus, president of the 400-member citizens' group that was rebuffed in the first round of its court fight to prevent tampering with the station's "unique character."

But the FM station may have to give up some traditions to survive, say officials of WFMT, whose owners are under fire for staff cutbacks, a revised ad policy and alleged mismanagement.

WFMT, which turns 40 next year, has carved out a special niche in broadcasting.

The nation's first radio "superstation" in the late 1970s, WFMT is heard across the country and around the world through syndication and satellite relay.

It produces broadcasts of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, the city's Lyric Opera and live performances elsewhere, as well as in-studio concerts, talk shows and radio dramas. It has won numerous awards, including more Peabody awards than any other station.

It also has a weekday talk show by Studs Terkel, Peabody and Pulitzer Prize-winning author and broadcaster, who's been at the station for 27 years.

"It is really the best fine arts-classical music station in the country, probably in the Western world," said Leon Despres, head of the Friend's legal team.

"It never sacrificed quality. It never used jingles for advertising. It was just consistently interesting — musically, aesthetically. ... You just aren't bored by anything."

But WFMT's not for everybody.

Local columnist Dennis Byrne says "you can search the world over and not find another station as stuffy."

Why does WFMT "find it necessary to bore its listeners with a Saturday afternoon of news from the BBC?" Byrne asked in the Feb. 6 Chicago Sun-Times. "What other station would find it more important to tell its morning listeners about a lute recital ... than expressway travel times?"

Even Kraus concedes there are problems. "Their share of the audience has gone down, so they probably are doing some things wrong. ... We're just concerned about the general character.

"Maybe there should be more music and less talk," he said. "A little stuffy? That could be true also."

WFMT's audience is aging and the station needs new listeners, said Alfred Antlitz, the station's general manager.

"We're taking something that's very good and saying we need to fix a few things to make it much stronger," Antlitz said.

WFMT's programming goes beyond classical music to a fine arts mix "that our core audience is intensely loyal to, though it tends to turn off people who just want background music," he said.

WFMT — owned since 1969 by the Chicago Educational Television Association (CETA), which also owns local public television station WTTW — served for years as a model for commercial success in fine arts broadcasting.

But lately it has had trouble making ends meet, Antlitz said.

Financial woes this year prompted the firing of eight of its more than 40 employees, and a decision to accept pre-recorded advertisements ("jingles" to the Friends) for the first time in WFMT history.

WFMT prefers announcer-read ads, but the policy cut into potential revenues, Antlitz said, adding it was too soon to gauge the change's impact.

The Friends fear too many changes will reduce WFMT's audience and revenues, prompting a decision to sell. Fine arts stations elsewhere — KLAC-FM in Los Angeles, for example — have been turned into more profitable rock stations, Kraus noted. Jazz stations also have been scuttled in recent years, such as WRVR in New York.

WFMT supporters would try to buy the station if it went on the market, Despres said, but 98.7 FM would be worth "easily $25 million" as a commercial frequency.

The Friends lost the first round of their court fight Feb. 6. Circuit Judge Albert Green ruled they had no standing to file their lawsuit, which contends the donation of the station to CETA by WGN Continental Broadcasting Co. made WFMT a charitable trust.

Dairy substitutes better than butter, lessen clutter

By Jean Carper

Attention, cholesterol worriers. It's not just how much fat, but the type of fat you eat that pushes blood cholesterol up or down.

Carper

In a recent study, 20 men ages 27 to 47 with high cholesterol (average 240) ate three different high-fat diets — 40 percent of calories in fat. Yet, on two of the high-fat diets their cholesterol went down; on one it stayed up.

The culprit: saturated fat, mainly butter fat, says Jean T. Snook, Ohio State University, who conducted the study. The lone villain in raising cholesterol was saturated animal and dairy-type fat. The other two diets that did not boost cholesterol were high in vegetable oils — either polyunsaturated fats, like corn oil, or monounsaturated fats like olive oil. These diets also were low in saturated fat — 8 percent of calories.

On the high-fat vegetable-oil diets, cholesterol plummeted 16 percent to 21 percent. When men returned to the high-butter diets, their cholesterol soared again.

This does not mean you should eat a high-fat diet, says Dr. Snook, that has other dangers. Her point is that to reduce cholesterol, you must cut down specifically on saturated animal-type fat, not just on all fats.

More clout for calcium

Eat foods high in calcium to prevent colon cancer. That's what some experts are increasingly urging, based on strong new evidence.

Dr. Cedric Garland, a researcher at the University of California at San Diego, in fact, recently estimated that eating 1,200 to 1,400 mg of calcium per day might prevent an astounding 65 percent to 75 percent of colon cancers. That would require doubling or tripling present calcium intakes, which average 700 mg daily for middle-aged men and 450 mg for middle-aged women.

New research shows that calcium definitely suppresses the proliferation of surface cells on the inner lining of the colon. Such rapid cell growth is a sign of developing cancer.

For example, Dr. Michael Wargovich, of the University of Texas M.D. Anderson Cancer Center in Houston, gave varying doses of calcium to high-risk patients who already have polyps, small precancerous growths in the colon. He found that 1,500 mg of calcium per day for three months suppressed precancerous cell growth by 23 percent. In another test, 2,000 mg of daily calcium for a month reduced the dangerous cell growth 30 percent.

Dr. Garland says food is the most reliable calcium source — a cup of skim milk has 300 mg; a cup of non-fat yogurt, 450 mg.

No snoozes from aspartame

Sugar helps put you to sleep, but the artificial sweetener aspartame (Nutrasweet) does not, according to new research. At least if you're a woman.

Previous studies show that eating carbohydrates, including sugar, can alter mood. Contrary to popular belief, carbohydrates generally make people feel more relaxed, sleepy and, in some cases, less depressed. A Kansas State University researcher wanted to know if aspartame did the same thing.

In the new study, 120 young women at different times drank 12 ounces of water or Kool-Aid sweetened with either sugar or aspartame. Their moods were observed and measured by psychological tests. According to Dr. Elizabeth Pivonka, the women's moods did not change after drinking water or aspartame-sweetened Kool-Aid. However, after drinking the sugary Kool-Aid, the women tended to be less alert and more sleepy.

This does not mean aspartame will keep you awake, but it apparently does not affect brain chemistry, making you drowsy the way sugar can.

'Maintenance' key to diet success

Long-term psychological support, education crucial to maintaining weight loss

By Molly O'Neill
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — Joy Segal's desk on the second floor of Zabar's was a fortress of envelopes full of chocolate-flavored formula diet powder.

The aroma of bread and pastries rose from the store below, but Mrs. Segal was immune to its temptation.

She smiled triumphantly.

"I've lost 135 pounds," said Mrs. Segal, 39, the assistant controller of the Manhattan food store. "I haven't weighed this little since fourth grade."

Mrs. Segal is poised like a victorious warrior starting a new life.

She has been on her liquid formula diet since May 11, 1989, and now, 20 pounds past her goal, she can chase her two children and she can fasten an airliner's seat belt.

But she is terrified to eat solid food again. "I could be like a junkie and not stop," she said.

Mrs. Segal is not alone.

It has been 16 months since Oprah Winfrey rapidly dropped 67 pounds on a liquid formula diet and contributed to a nationwide renaissance of the weight-loss method.

And nearly a million Americans are trying to establish normal eating habits after the fast, health professionals estimate.

(Ms. Winfrey has regained 17 pounds, but refuses to comment on the aftereffects of the diet.)

A five-year study by Dr. Thomas Wadden at the University of Pennsylvania showed 98 percent of all dieters regain their weight within five years.

The liquid diet industry, the medical profession, entrepreneurs, major pharmaceutical companies and individual dieters are all hungry for a sliver of success.

But interviews over two months with 31 patients after fasting and recent medical studies suggest the nature of the formula diets could lead to psychological and physiological burdens that limit the diets' long-term effectiveness.

"If there are 100 chapters in the maintenance program to be written, we're only on Chapter One.'

Dr. Theodore VanItallie, a consultant to the United Weight Control Corp., a formula weight-loss program based in Englewood Cliffs, N.J., has concluded rapid weight loss can be sustained only by long-term psychological support and nutritional education.

He has been in the vanguard of obesity study for 27 years.

Acknowledging the potent psychological area between feast and famine, the premier liquid formula diets, like Optifast and United Weight Control Corp., are using behavior modification training.

"We have shifted from acute intervention to the long-term reality of keeping the weight off," said Jim Parsons, a vice president of Optifast Programs, "but if there are 100 chapters in the maintenance program to be written, we're only on Chapter One."

In an effort to treat the morbidly obese, those with at least 100 pounds or even half their body weight to lose, Dr. Saul Genuth and Dr. Victor Vertes developed the 320-calorie milkshake-like formula derived from milk and egg protein that eventually became Optifast.

"It's not like you lose 100 pounds on a fast," says Barry Adler, president of Diet Fast, a formula diet program. "Now everybody knows somebody who lost 100 pounds and gained back 120."

Across the country, dozens of obesity specialists have noticed an increase in patients on the fast-and-binge roller coaster over the past three years.

Monday, at a conference of the American Federation of the American Societies for Experimental Biology in Washington, Dr. Adam Drenowski, director of human nutrition at the University of Michigan, is to present findings that yo-yo dieting, cycles of rapid weight loss and gain frequently associated with liquid formula diets, creates a craving for calorie-dense mixtures of sugar and fat.

Government can keep a secret

By Michael J. Sniffen

WASHINGTON (AP) — After seven years of trying, the government thinks it finally has an accurate count of how many secrets it creates: 6.8 million a year.

That's a 35 percent decrease from the previous count, but nearly all the drop came when the Navy decided it really didn't originate more secrets than the rest of the government put together.

It's still just an estimate but it appears that the "top secret," "secret" and "confidential" stamps were wielded 6,796,501 times in the fiscal year which ended last Sept. 30.

"It appears that this unprecedented drop is primarily the result of more accurate counting, rather than an actual tremendous decrease in classification activity," said Steven Garfinkel, who has spent the past seven years trying to get the government to produce fewer secrets and count them more accurately.

Garfinkel heads the Information Security Oversight Office, created in 1982 when then-President Reagan rewrote all the rules for classifying documents.

In his annual report to President Bush, released Tuesday, Garfinkel praised the Navy for finally figuring out what he has been trying to count each year.

The government doesn't actually count its secrecy decisions each year. It samples the number of times some offices decide to classify information. Then it projects those numbers to reflect the number of decisions in all offices.

Moreover, there are two kinds of secrets: original secrets, of which 500,000 were produced last year, and derivative secrets, of which 6.3 million were created. For example, an official creates an original secret by deciding that all photographs from a spy satellite will be kept secret; another official creates a derivative secret each time he stamps one of the photos "top secret."

A derivative secret also is created when one official copies another official's original secret into a new document — the government equivalent of the friend who says, "Don't tell so-and-so, but I just learned that ...."

For 1987 and 1988, the Navy reported creating far more original secrets than the rest of the government combined. As Garfinkel put it in his report to Bush, both the Defense Department and his office "expressed skepticism about the accuracy of these data."

In 1989, the Navy learned what went wrong. Some of its sample offices were "reporting the number of all classified documents on hand, not just classification decisions that they had originated," Garfinkel said.

Fixing that error knocked about 3.5 million off the number of secrets created last year.

Garfinkel said it didn't hurt that the Navy sampled seven times more offices than before, conducted its samples for almost half a year and provided all sample offices with "extensive instructions and training."

Of the four agencies — the Defense, State and Justice departments and the CIA — that create nearly 99 percent of the secrets, only Justice created more secrets in 1989 than 1988. Not only that, Justice reported significant increases in the number of overclassified and mismarked documents.

But Garfinkel said that was far from a failure at Justice.

He said the number of secrets rose because more FBI agents are assigned to catch spies and FBI field offices are keeping better records. The bureau creates more than 90 percent of Justice's secrets.

In addition, Garfinkel praised the FBI for starting to review actual documents as well as surveying agents, which he said is how the bureau found the misclassified items. "That's a commendable effort to achieve better quality control," he said.

Overall in 1989, Garfinkel said, "the strides were modest, but what's most important is we finally have the Defense Department count in the ball park. These numbers can provide a benchmark to look at future activity."

Town sends its best for White

KOKOMO, Ind. (AP) — Residents of AIDS patient Ryan White's old hometown, many of whom fought to keep the teenager out of their schools, expressed hope Wednesday that he'd win his latest battle — this one for his life.

"I hope he gets better and is able to do something in life," said Brian Correll, 22, a student at Indiana Unversity's Kokomo campus. "I hope he can enjoy life a little more."

White, 18, remained in critical condition at Riley Hospital for Children in Indianapolis, where he has been hospitalized since March 29 with an AIDS-related respiratory infection complicated by his hemophilia.

Also Wednesday, a U.S. Senate committee voted unanimously for a bill aimed at easing the nation's AIDS crisis.

"This one's for you, Ryan," Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., said in a telephone conversation with White's mother, Jeannie, after the Labor and Human Resources Committee approved the Comprehensive AIDS Resources Emergency Act. The bill, which has bipartisan support, would provide an additional $600 million a year for two years to combat acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

White's physician, Dr. Martin B. Kleiman, said there was still cause for hope.

"He's holding on. His status deteriorated in the first day or two and then reached a plateau. "Any patient who is critical must stabilize before he can recover and Ryan has stabilized.

"There have been patients who have been this ill and have recovered," the doctor said. "We can maintain patients at this level for prolonged periods of time."

White is on a life-support system. He has been unconscious and heavily sedated so the equipment would function more efficiently.

White, who contracted AIDS from contaminated blood products, has waged a five-year battle with the disease during which he grew from an object of scorn in his hometown of Kokomo into an international spokesman for AIDS patients. He fought a successful court battle to attend school and helped reinforce the message that AIDS cannot be spread through casual contact.

"I was stunned when I heard he was back in the hospital," said Kokomo resident Ron Shanks. "I just figured he'd keep on living. I hope he can pull through."

"I hope he pulls out of this," said David Rosselot, the attorney hired by a group of Western Middle School parents to keep White out of school.

In 1985, Rosselot pressed a lawsuit that relied on a state law barring children with communicable diseases from attending school.

"The attempt of the parents at that time was not to keep Ryan White out of school. The intent of the lawsuit was to keep acquired immune deficiency syndrome out of school," he said.

Scientists say they've moved atoms to form precise patterns

By Malcolm Ritter

NEW YORK (AP) — Scientists report they have moved atoms one at a time to make patterns with great precision, an "absolutely fascinating" step that could lead to creating new materials and making computers work even faster.

In a process like dragging ping pong balls across the bumpy bottom of an egg carton, atoms were arranged in one experiment to form the letters "IBM," with the design stretching only 660 billionths of an inch long.

Donald Eigler and Erhard Schweizer, who did the work at IBM's Almaden Research Center in San Jose, Calif., describe the results in today's issue of the British journal Nature.

The precision was such that scientists could choose an individual atom on a surface as the point to place a second atom to build up the design, Eigler said in a telephone interview.

Physicists familiar with the work called it a significant demonstration that individual atoms can be placed with high precision to form patterns.

Someday, that ability may let researchers build vanishingly tiny electronic components, allowing computers far faster than today's supercomputers, scientists said. Atoms, they added, also may be assembled someday into molecules to create new substances and materials.

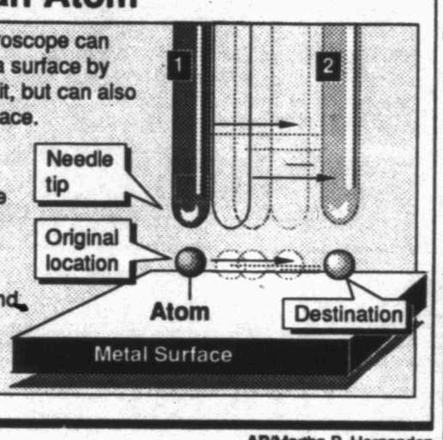

"The implications are really remarkable," commented Stuart Lindsay of Arizona State University. He called the work "absolutely fascinating."

The IBM scientists arranged atoms of a heavy gas called xenon on a surface made of nickel. They used a device called a scanning tunneling microscope, which produces extremely detailed images of surfaces. It can sense atoms on a surface by passing the tip of a needle over it.

How to Move an Atom

A scanning tunneling microscope can not only sense atoms on a surface by passing a needle tip over it, but can also pull atoms across the surface.

1. Without actually touching the atom, the needle tip attracts it like a magnet in order to maneuver it across the surface.
2. The atom is dragged and released to its desired position as the needle tip is withdrawn.

Source: "Nature" Magazine

AP/Martha P. Hernandez

The new work took advantage of the fact that the tip holds a magnet-like attraction for atoms. When the tip was brought close enough to a xenon atom, it could pull the atom across the surface.

The needle had to tug hard enough to haul a xenon atom over bumpy rows of nickel atoms on the surface, but gently enough not to lift it off the surface, Eigler said.

The amount of pull was adjusted by changing the needle tip's height. Typically, the tip hovered about 10 billionths of an inch above a xenon atom.

Atoms could be moved about 16 billionths of an inch per second. Once they were positioned, the tip was withdrawn.

It took 22 hours to arrange 35 atoms into the "IBM" design, Eigler said. In another experiment, seven xenon atoms were arranged into a chain.

The work was done at about minus 452 degrees Fahrenheit, almost as cold as anything can get. That kept the xenon atoms from wandering around, Eigler said.

In addition, it was done in an extremely high vaccuum to keep unwanted molecules from contaminating the surface, Eigler said. The surface can be kept free of contamination for at least a month, Eigler said. Lindsay said that degree of control was impressive.

Eigler said he did not know of any commercial use for placing xenon atoms on nickel. But perhaps some more useful kinds of atoms will lend themselves to the technique, he said.

Such atom-by-atom placement should help scientists learn more about how atoms and molecules behave on surfaces, which might help in developing semiconductors, the building blocks of many electronic devices, he said.

It also may provide a way to store electronic information at a density perhaps 2 million times greater than is now possible, so that more could be stored in a given space, he said. Electronic information is now recorded in sort of a Morse code consisting of 1's and 0's, and that might be translated into the presence or absence of an atom at a particular location, he said.

B-2 bombers could each cost $1 billion

WASHINGTON (AP) — Reducing production of the B-2 bomber will raise the cost of a single plane to more than $1 billion, says a congressional study that several lawmakers on Wednesday called grounds for canceling the "flying Fort Knox."

"It confirms my very worst fears that if you stretch out the B-2 program it simply adds billions of dollars to its costs," said Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., as he joined with a bipartisan group of B-2 opponents in releasing the Congressional Budget Office report.

Leahy and Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif., introduced legislation to stop procurement of the stealth aircraft at the 15 planes now in production.

The Bush administration's plans call for building 132 of the radar-evading aircraft by 1996 at a cost of more than $70 billion. Air Force Secretary Donald Rice told a congressional panel Tuesday that the Bush administration is weighing alternatives to that proposal.

According to the CBO study, canceling the program would save $41.5 billion.

"What we ought to do is have the guts now to say enough is enough and stop at the 15 that are in production," Leahy told a Capitol Hill news conference.

Legislation to kill the B-2 garnered just over 30 votes in the Senate last year. Leahy and Cranston said they have "picked up strength" but declined to provide numbers on the opponents.

However, Rep. Jim Slattery, D-Kan., said Wednesday that a head count in the House indicates that 195 members oppose the bomber.

The CBO report concluded that if the Air Force reduces its planned buy of 132 to 66 the total cost of the program, which the agency estimates is about $75 billion, will be reduced by $18.6 billion.

However, the cost of a single plane — now estimated at $530 million — will rise to $860 million.

If the administration decides to buy 33 planes, at a rate of three per year, the bomber would cost $1.7 billion a copy.

"The stealth is a budgetary black hole — it attracts and devours public funds like a condensed star attracts and devours light," said Sen. Joseph Lieberman, D-Conn., who joined Leahy, Cranston and Sen. Mark Hatfield, R-Ore., at the news conference.

Further complicating the B-2 issue is the annual cost of the program. In the mid-1990s, the Pentagon plans to buy 10 planes in a single year and 24 the next year. Budget requests would then total nearly $10 billion a year.

Leahy pointed out that last year Defense Secretary Dick Cheney urged Congress not to "nickel and dime to death" the program because stretching out the program would drastically increase the cost.

"He's right. The CBO report shows he's absolutely right," Leahy said of Cheney.

Pegasus' first flight postponed

EDWARDS AIR FORCE BASE, Calif. (AP) — Rain forced postponement of Wednesday's inaugural flight of a winged Pegasus rocket, an economy vehicle designed to put small satellites in orbit after an aircraft launch.

The flight was tentatively rescheduled for today.

If the weather improved, the 41,000-pound rocket would be strapped under a B-52 and flown to 40,000 feet for launch over the military's Western Test Range, according to the Pentagon's Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency.

The 440-pound launch payload, dubbed Pegsat, will be placed in a polar orbit of 368 miles. Pegsat will release a small, experimental Navy communications satellite.

Remaining on the Pegsat frame will be an instrument package to send data back to scientists about the stress on Pegasus and its payload as it goes through the atmosphere and into space.

Two canisters designed to release chemicals to produce an artificial "northern lights" effect over central Canada also will be aboard. Scientists will use the glowing clouds to study Earth's upper atmosphere.

PART-TIME $$$$$ AVAILABLE

April 2 the Midland Reporter-Telegram became a morning newspaper instead of an afternoon newspaper. As a result we have several routes which need to be re-filled with qualified, responsible individuals. Due to this one-time large number of routes available, now is the best time ever to obtain a route in your area!

Often asked questions:

Is it worthwhile for adults also?

Yes! Our current carrier force is already 60% adult and 40% youth. Morning newspaper routes are attractive for:

- ADULTS who have full-time jobs, yet want to supplement their income with a steady part-time job.
- MOTHERS who can't justify a part time job and daycare, because as a carrier, you do not need daycare!
- COLLEGE STUDENTS needing a part-time job which will work with classes!
- YOUTHS who are involved in afternoon school functions, but want to work!
- SENIOR CITIZENS wanting regular exercise, added income, or just want to work with people, neighbors, and friends!

Depending on the size of the route(s), from $150 to $500 monthly! Some motor routes make even more, although currently none are expected to be available. Depending on your service record, you may qualify to move up to a motor route later!

How long does it take?

The actual delivery takes 1-2 hours Monday - Saturday, and 2-3 hours on Sunday, again depending on the size of the route(s). Also, a few hours a month are needed to collect from subscribers. Many carriers choose to handle some of this by putting envelopes in subscribers' papers. Some collecting in person will be necessary though.

When do the papers have to be delivered by?

6:00 am Monday - Friday, and 7:00 am Saturday and Sunday.

Do I ever get a day off?

The job requires a 7-day a week commitment. However, carriers do take days off by finding a friend or family member to substitute for them!

RESERVE YOUR ROUTE NOW! CONTACT:

HOW TO PLACE A GARAGE SALE AD
Follow these simple instructions to get the most from your garage sale advertisement.

(1) Decide the address and dates where the sale will be held.

(2) Compile a list of the major items you want to advertise (furniture, appliances, speciality items, specific sizes or types of clothes) along with a few smaller items (pictures, kitchen utensils, etc.) If more than one family will be participating in the sale, ask each family to write out a list of the items they want to sell.

(3) Combine the lists of items to be sold, the complete address, the day and times the sale will be held. Remember, the best days to advertise for your sale will be at least the day before and each day of the sale. The deadline for placing your ad will be before 5:00 the day before you need your ad to appear, Monday - Friday.

(4) NOW - Call Classified at 682-6222 with the days of the sale and the items you want to list.
We offer two types of ads: word ads and space ads.
EXAMPLE WORD AD:

1234 MAIN Street. Saturday 9:00 - 4:00. Kids' clothes: boys 2T-4T, girls 6x-14, dining room set and lots of miscellaneous.
