Four-day summit beginning

■ The rhetoric seems softer as Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev arrives in the U.S. capital for an arms summit.

By Matt Quinn
Reporter-Telegram Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev arrived Wednesday for a four-day summit with President Bush sure to produce a series of arms control agreements and hard bargaining over the future of Germany and Lithuania.

Gorbachev, arriving at Andrews Air Force Base outside Washington, muted earlier combative comments on those two flash points when he wished "peace and well-being to every American home."

"A lot will depend on our results," he said.

Bush spent the day closeted with advisers at the White House boning up for the summit.

He was described by press secretary Marlin Fitzwater as brimming with "anticipation and confidence that democratic values are sustaining positive change in the world order" and looking forward to "frank, penetrating discussions" with Gorbachev.

In his brief arrival statement, Gorbachev did not mention the touchy subject of whether a united Germany should remain in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, but said only that he looked forward to the chance for "informal" talks with Bush on a wide range of issues.

Before ending a 36-hour visit to Canada, Gorbachev said any Western attempt to "dictate" a solution on Germany "will not suit us." He also took a hard line on the other major area of disagreement, the crisis over Lithuanian independence moves. "We will do it our way."

But Secretary of State James A. Baker III told Gorbachev in his welcoming statement: "The eyes of the world are on you and they're on President Bush. Together our nations have the responsibility to leave behind not only the Cold War, but also the conflicts that preceded it. To do that we must see a Germany unified and Europe reconciled."

Gorbachev and his wife Raisa arrived in bright sunshine at 7 p.m. as crowds of people waved red Soviet flags. Baker and Gorbachev were all smiles.

Gorbachev, joined by Baker, was then whisked in an armored Zil limousine flown in from Moscow to the ornate Soviet Embassy several blocks from the White House.

Bush and his wife Barbara were greet-

Strong quake

BUCHAREST, Romania (AP).— An earthquake that was felt from Istanbul to Moscow hit Romania hard Wednesday, killing eight people, injuring 296 and badly damaging buildings in Bucharest and cities across much of Romania, police said.

Large chunks of concrete and plaster fell from buildings onto sidewalks and streets, killing and injuring people.

The quake was centered 100 miles north of Bucharest, in the wooded Vrancea range of the Carpathian mountains, and registered 6.5 on the Richter scale, the U.S. Geological Survey said in Golden, Colo.

Throw the book

BOSSIER CITY, La. (AP) — Officer Jim Viola had to think quickly. A motorcyclist was trying to get away after a 120 mph chase. If Viola didn't catch him, no one would.

So, faster than you can say "information, please," Viola threw the book at him. The phone book.

"I let him have it in the face," Viola said. "It stunned him ... When you're going 20 to 25 and get hit with a phone book, it gets your attention."

Bobby Roberson, 30, was booked with driving while intoxicated, going more than 100 mph in a 55 mph zone, reckless driving, flight from police and numerous traffic violations, said state police Trooper David Staton.

Viola said the only way to catch Roberson was by throwing the phone book, which he keeps with him because he has a portable phone.

Tower surgery

Tower

DALLAS (AP) — Former U.S. Sen. John Tower was reported in good condition Wednesday at a Dallas hospital after surgeons removed his cancerous prostate.

"He's doing very well, very good," said Susan Rutherford, spokeswoman at Zale Lipshy University Hospital.

Tower underwent the surgery Tuesday.

Tower said he hoped to be out of the hospital within a week.

President Bush reportedly is considering naming Tower chairman of the President's Foreign Intelligence Advisory Council.

Midland boy eliminated in spelling bee

By Eric Konigsberg
Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — Midland's Rudy Ramirez was eliminated in the third round of the 63rd annual National Spelling Bee Wednesday when he misspelled the word "propaedeutic."

Propaedeutic refers to elementary or introductory study. Rudy made just one phonetic mistake in spelling the word "propydeutic."

By correctly spelling, in the first two rounds, "lyrically," and "frigorific," Rudy finished 184th out of a record 226 contestants and won a check for $50.

With one day left to go in the contest, 155 local champions remain, competing for the grand prize of $5,000, a trophy cup, and a gift from Encyclopedia Britannica. A total of $26,550 in cash prizes will be awarded by the end of the two-day spelling bee.

Rudy, an eighth grader, was sponsored by the Midland Reporter-Telegram, one of 208 daily, weekly and Sunday newspapers in 47 states that sponsored contestants.

To get to Washington and compete in the Bee this year, the 127 girls and 99 boys ousted nearly nine million competitors at the local middle school level, including schools in Alaska and Hawaii, the District of Columbia, Guam, Mexico, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands as well as the Department of Defense Schools abroad.

Co-champions have been named in 3 of the previous 62 championships. Of the 65 national winners, 30 have been boys and 35 girls.

Park vandalism investigated

By Michael Kashgarian

Of all the parks in Midland only one was specifically designed to be fully accessible to people in wheelchairs. In fact, the Chris Davidson Opportunity Park, located at Ventura Avenue near North A Street, is one of only three of its kind in the entire United States.

But sometime between Friday night and Saturday morning the model park was marred.

Officials of the Midland Association for Retarded Citizens (MARC), which maintains the park, said vandals caused over $2,000 worth of damage.

"It was nothing but wanton destruction," said Steve Davidson, a leader in the development of the park. The park was named after his late son, Chris.

Damage included destruction of concrete trash bins, urns and plant holders; a broken main water line and rule sign; and overturned steel picnic tables.

"Those tables are designed for people in wheelchairs at a certain height, but if they are bent they deny someone of coming outdoors," Davidson said. The damaged tables may be salvageable, he said, but not for use by the handicapped.

Repair of the park will be paid for by MARC, which owns and operates the park, said Ray Unterbrink, executive director of the non-profit organization.

Officials connected with the park said the damage goes further than just the physical destruction. "The real dam-

Hospital director's swearing-in protested

By Brian Pearson
Staff Writer

Loud protests preceded an oath of office ceremony Wednesday for a Midland County hospital director who said he plans to change his residence to another single-member district.

Richard Dulaney, who ran unopposed for the District 4 seat, said he may move into a new house — which he bought in March — as early as next month. The house is located in District 6, represented by Dr. Stephen Wiesenfeld.

Chris McCormack, Midland County Democratic Party chairman, told directors that Dulaney's failure to reveal his moving plans until after the May 5 election has irked fellow District 4 residents.

"We asked Mr. Dulaney to consider resigning," McCormack said. "I don't believe any of those voters understood that Mr. Dulaney was going to move from that district. I consider it inappropriate."

McCormack said he and other District 4 constituents, who would have given Dulaney "significant opposition" in the election had they known about the plans, may research legal means to remove the director from office.

"I am sure that we will talk to people," he said. "I also recognize that this is an area where reasonable minds may disagree.

"But the question isn't just about legality. The question is if he is appropriately representing the members of his district."

John Ingram, a Midland businessman, criticized directors for allowing Dulaney to take part on the board, despite them knowing his moving plans.

Ingram said that although Dulaney is a "fine man" and a "fine businessman" who will be an "extraordinary addition to the board," the point is that he misled District 4 residents.

"I find this to be verging on chicanery," he said. "It seems to be somewhat offhanded to accept this."

Board President Margaret Purvis, before giving up her position as president to Tom Bruner later in the meeting, said Dulaney's plans do not appear to violate state law.

"We have been in consultation with our legal counsel and the Texas Secretary of State's Office," Ms. Purvis said. "We find no legal basis on which to question his ability to be sworn in."

Attorney Ted Kerr, who serves as the board's legal counsel, said the opinion is based on a 1945 Texas Attorney General's ruling. In that case, a county commissioner was allowed to keep his seat after changing residency to another precinct.

However, a Texas Secretary of State spokesman said earlier this month that after researching House Bill 2123, which allowed the district to have single-member representation, Dulaney's plans may violate state law.

The official said he interpreted the law to mean that Dulaney would have to

Board adopts prenatal responsibilities

By Brian Pearson
Staff Writer

Midland County Hospital District directors Wednesday approved assuming prenatal care for indigent mothers, a service which has been operated by the city through the Midland Health Department.

Midland Memorial Hospital officials hope to expand the services and reduce neonatal costs for indigent babies, many of whom are born sick due to improper prenatal care, MMH spokesperson Laurie Johnson said.

The services will be housed in a 2500 Delano Ave. building now owned by the city, Ms. Johnson said. An opening date had not been determined, she said.

Midland City Council already has approved transferring the services to the hospital district, which will receive the 2500 Delano Ave. property in exchange.

"It's not going to make money for us," Ms. Johnson said of the services. "However, it costs the district an awful lot to take care of a sick baby after it's born."

She added that the hospital district already has been paying for laboratory work needed for prenatal care patients.

SUMMIT: Gorbachev reaches U.S.

(From 1A)

ing the Gorbachevs with full military honors at the White House Thursday morning to open four days of talks.

It will be Gorbachev's sixth summit with an American president and his second with Bush. The first Bush-Gorbachev summit, aboard a ship last December in Malta, was cut short by a Mediterranean gale.

With a series of agreements on tap for the two leaders to sign, the main focus leading up to this summit has been on superpower loggerheads over the future of Germany and the Soviet economic blockade of Lithuania, the Baltic republic that declared its independence from Moscow March 11.

Senior administration officials said Bush will make an earnest effort to convince Gorbachev that a unified Germany that remains part of NATO poses no threat to the Soviet Union.

But before flying to Washington, Gorbachev reaffirmed his firm objection to that idea in no uncertain terms.

Gorbachev said he had heard only "an old record that seems to be playing the same note over and over again" from the West on the subject, but also said "we do have some leeway to find an accomodation" on the difficult German question.

A senior U.S. official said Bush would make clear to Gorbachev that the Western allies are "prepared to adapt" to the Soviet fear of a resurgent Germany that is grounded in two world wars.

But Fitzwater said Bush is unwavering in his insistence that Germany remain a member of NATO and rejects the notion that Germany should be "singled out" for special limits on its military forces. That left open the possibility of future negotiations that would reduce German forces along with others on the continent.

Soviet concerns over Germany's future military status have stalled negotiations on an agreement that would slash superpower conventional forces on the European continent.

On another issue, the Bush administration sent mixed signals on whether a trade agreement, which it has held hostage over Lithuania, would be signed at the summit.

Bush said during the weekend that the agreement was "not on the table" and a senior Bush aide said Tuesday that unless the Lithuanian situation changed, there would be no trade agreement at the summit.

■ Related photos/5E

Fitzwater said Wednesday, however, that it was "impossible to say" what would happen on trade when Gorbachev and Bush sit down together. "I intentionally want to be vague," he said, adding that the trade pact was a "carrot" that hopefully will motivate Soviet changes on Lithuania.

But even without a trade pact, there will be plenty of agreements to sign.

Negotiators were rushing to complete a strategic nuclear weapons declaration in time for Friday's White House signing ceremony. Agreements on chemical weapons and nuclear testing were ready for signature.

Among a series of cultural and commercial agreements were a new 5-year grain pact and a civil aviation agreement that would more than triple air service between the two countries.

But, according to senior presidential aides, the heart of the summit will be soul-searching talks between the two leaders on a series of complicated and intertwined issues confronting the superpowers in a world without a Cold War.

The most notable among these are the fates of Germany, the NATO and Warsaw Pact military alliances and the Baltics.

Bush has set aside Saturday for these conversations in the privacy of the rustic Camp David presidential retreat in Maryland's Catoctin Mountains. He and Gorbachev will likely meet there with only interpreters present.

The summit represents an evolution of thinking by the Bush administration about Gorbachev and the end of the Cold War.

After a series of heady encounters between Ronald Reagan and Gorbachev, Bush came into office highly skeptical of the Soviet leader. He ordered a six-month policy review that brought superpower relations to a standstill while senior advisers debated the seriousness of Gorbachev's promises of democratization and economic reform.

PRENATAL: Hospital agrees to administer indigent program

(From 1A)

Dr. Jim Humphreys, Midland County health authority, said he expects the operation to run $130,000 in the red during its first year under the hospital district.

David Porter was the sole director to oppose taking over prenatal services.

"I'm very concerned about the costs of it," Porter said. "I'm not convinced the taxpayers of Midland County want to pay for all of it. We've already spent more than the budget this year."

Porter pointed to a mounting $416,267 hospital district deficit so far this fiscal year. The district has collected about $3 million in tax revenues but had $3.4 million in indigent care bills at MMH.

"I really question whether we have the financial resources to fund physician care for the indigents of Midland County," he said.

Deputy City Manager Mike McGregor said city officials felt the hospital could do a better job of taking care of indigent pregnant mothers.

"It's more appropriate for it to be with the hospital, which can accommodate people better than we have," McGregor said.

He said the city spent about $60,000 a year in general revenues to fund the prenatal services.

In other action Wednesday, hospital directors:

■ approved paying up to $23,000 for half the consulting fees for a feasibility study of a regional blood center.

Odessa's Medical Center Hospital is expected to pay the other half. The financially strapped MCH voluntarily closed the troubled blood center earlier this year.

■ accepted a $90,000 surgical laser donated by the Midland Memorial Hospital Auxiliary. The laser will be able to cut, vaporize and coagulate tissue. MMH's lasers now only cut and vaporize tissue.

■ approved $130,000 in staffing for the hospital neonatal unit. The unit needs to neonatalogists. The hospital has been sending neonatal cases to MCH, Women's and Children's Hospital or facilities in Lubbock.

(From 1A)

live in the district he represents.

Dulaney, 38, a petroleum landman here since 1976, said a single-member district system for the hospital district differs from that of one for city and county governments.

While councilmen and commissioners must advocate and monitor projects such as street paving in their district, the hospital is centrally located and has no projects unique to one district's needs, he said.

"The hospital serves one community," Dulaney said, adding that the hospital district's single-member system ensures representation for predominantly minority areas on the city's east and south sides.

However, McCormack said he does not share that vision of single-member representation.

"That's a very narrow view of the ideas of single-member districts," McCormack said. "Every district is entitled to representation."

Dulaney, whose term will not expire until 1993, said he is ready to move on with his director duties. "The issue has been settled and it's time for public debate to end," Dulaney said.

In addition to Dulaney, Tom Bruner and Dr. Shelton Viney also took their oaths of office at the Midland County Hospital District meeting.

After new directors were sworn in, Bruner was elected board president, beating Wiesenfeld in a 5-2 vote. The board unanimously elected Margaret Williams as vice president, while David Porter was the unanimous choice for secretary.

Directors Ms. Purvis, Pat Estes and James Ramsoure chose not to seek re-election to their respective seats.

Soviet leader seeks German compromise

OTTAWA (AP) — Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev said Wednesday the West's insistence on keeping a united Germany in NATO sounds "like an old record," and indicated he would offer new ideas to break the impasse.

"We do have some leeway to find an accommodation. There are different scenarios that might not be exactly what the West would propose," he told reporters before he flew to Washington for his summit with President Bush.

Western leaders "are trying to dictate to a certain degree," Gorbachev said. "There should be no attempt to dictate a solution."

Gorbachev said he and Prime Minister Brian Mulroney spent "a considerable part of our time" discussing German unification, but said they had not resolved a disagreement over whether a united Germany could belong to NATO.

"In spite of all that, I think we can say we had an exchange which was positive and very constructive," he said. "It was a short visit but a very intense visit."

Mulroney, like Bush and the other western allies, supports keeping Germany within NATO. West Germany currently belongs to the western military alliance; East Germany belongs to the Soviet-led Warsaw Pact.

The Soviet Union has suggested that a united Germany could belong to both military alliances, or a new security system, but has opposed suggestions that it belong only to NATO.

Gorbachev has said failure to somehow neutralize Germany or prevent it from ever again threatening the Soviet Union could stall the Soviet military withdrawal from Eastern Europe.

"We have to find a course of action that will support, rather than do damage to, those very important changes that are happening in Europe and in the world," he said. "It has to be a course of action that we find together.

"I have not yet heard any alternative from the West. It seems that it is just like an old record that keeps playing the same notes again and again. I would like us to ... find a new melody."

At an airport news conference before leaving for Washington, Gorbachev said that the nations discussing German unification must carefully consider the consequences, as well as the views and interests of all sides.

"This is not just a 30-second basketball match," he said. "You have to ask: What does the other side want? Maybe we have to take a time out."

In addition, he said, German leaders have much work to do before achieving unification.

"They have to get rid of euphoria and get down to business because they have enough problems," he said.

Gorbachev also spoke of a "changing Europe, changing for the better. Instead of confrontation, we are getting to know each other better. We are even getting to trust each other."

Mulroney was conciliatory, saying he believes there has been an "inadvertent insensitivity to the legitimate security apprehensions of the Soviet Union."

He told reporters that no country suffered more than the Soviet Union in World War II.

Mulroney urged the United States and the Soviet Union to pursue a compromise course to avoid dealing "a lethal blow" to the progress that has been made in East-West relations.

Gorbachev also answered questions about his problems with the three secessionist Baltic republics. He noted there has been "pressure to use very hard measures to resolve this question."

Clarification

In a story appearing in Sunday's Reporter-Telegram, it was implied that Shelly Demaray's husband had forcefully taken their children to Austin following an automobile accident in which she was involved.

That is incorrect. According to his family, he had legal temporary custody of the children at the time of the accident and still does.

The story also quoted Ms. Demaray as saying she is unable to see the children. That too is inaccurate, according to the husband, who still lives in Austin with the children. He says Ms. Demaray can visit the children in Austin at any time.

The husband's family also says Ms. Demaray has seen the children "at least 10 times, rather than just four times" as mentioned in the story.

The Reporter-Telegram regrets any misunderstandings caused by the article.

PARK: MARC funds repairs

age is the destruction of the memory," Dale Stice, president of MARC, said.

Davidson agreed. "It signifies something to me that is disturbing about someone," he said.

"We want people to come to Opportunity Park and use it and enjoy it but take care of it," Davidson said, adding that the park is open to the public.

Midland police reported that they are investigating the incident but don't have any suspects at this time.

Guy McCrary, former president and chairman of the park committee, said steps are being taken to prevent future vandalism.

"We expect to reinforce our security measures and hope responsible citizens of the community will help in reducing things like this in the future," McCrary said.

Unterbrink agrees that citizens are the key to preventing vandalism. A neighborhood resident near the park notified Unterbrink of the damages early Saturday morning. Unterbrink said that when he arrived at the park, he noticed a concerned jogger trying to replant one of the destroyed plants.

"I don't have any idea who she was," he said, adding that the majority of those who use the park, like the jogger, are appreciative.

Opportunity Park, which opened on May 21, 1989, is on a four-acre tract of land, park officials said. The park was built with about half a million dollars raised through private donations, officials said.

Strong quake jolts Europe, kills eight in Romania

Peruvian earthquakes kills 115

AP

LIMA, Peru (AP) — A strong earthquake killed at least 115 people, injured more than 800 and nearly destroyed several towns in Peru's northeastern jungle, Civil Defense officials said Wednesday.

At least 42 people were missing after Tuesday night's quake, which was followed by a number of aftershocks. One aftershock Wednesday morning measured 5.1 on the Richter scale.

Civil defense officials declared a state of emergency late Wednesday in San Martin province, 400 miles north of Lima.

At least 35 of the confirmed 115 deaths from Tuesday night's quake occurred in Moyobamba, a farming center of 50,000 people and the capital of San Martin, officials said.

Most of the other dead were from nearby villages in the jungle area.

The updated Civil Defense casualty counts said at least 818 people were injured.

The quake occurred at 9:33 p.m. and lasted 45 seconds. It was centered in the jungle 75 miles northeast of Moyobamba, according to the Peruvian Geophysical Institute.

Willis Jacobs, a spokesman for the National Earthquake Information Center in Golden, Colo. said the quake measured 6.3 on the Richter scale. Peruvian officials earlier had said it measured 5.8. The reason for the discrepancy was unclear.

Civil Defense authorities said there were no telephone communications with the area due to the quake.

Local police reports reaching Lima by radio Wednesday said several villages around Moyobamba suffered widespread damage.

WORLD

BUCHAREST, Romania (AP) — An earthquake shook buildings from Moscow to Istanbul on Wednesday and cut a path of destruction across Romania, where eight people were killed and nearly 300 injured.

Chunks of concrete from high-rise buildings crashed to the ground and crushed people in this capital city of 2.2 million, killing two. Tens of thousands of residents rushed into the streets, many crying and screaming in fear as ceilings fell, walls cracked and books toppled from shelves.

Romanians leaped in panic from windows and balconies, and some were badly hurt, ambulance officials said.

It was the third major earthquake since 1977 with its epicenter in Romania's Carpathian Mountains. Its force was felt in the Soviet Union and Bulgaria — where injuries were reported — and in Hungary, Greece, Turkey, Yugoslavia and Poland.

The quake center was 190 miles northeast of Bucharest, in the wooded Vrancea range.

BBC monitors in London, quoting the Bulgarian news agency BTA, said one person died in Silistra of a quake-induced heart attack. Soviet legislator Ilmars Bishers said initial reports indicated some Soviet deaths occurred, but he gave no details.

Richter scale readings ranged from 6.5 to 7.5. Uppsala Seismological Center in Sweden said the quake was felt so widely because it was about 63 miles deep.

"I think it was this deafening sound of cracking walls that scared people," said clerical worker Sica Burcea, 52. "The building was swinging horizontally and vertically. We were lucky only to have some cracks in the walls. I shivered when I realized 1977 was coming back."

More than 1,500 Romanians died in a 1977 earthquake.

A communique from the General Inspectorate of Police said two people died in Bucharest, two in the Danube River port of Braila, and one each in eastern Buzau, southeastern Ialomita, central Brasov and nearby Prahova County.

Food shop clerk Petruta Lungu was killed when she ran outside and was hit by bricks and concrete falling from an upstairs wall, Bucharest police said. A man's body was pulled from rubble outside the shop.

The inspectorate reported 296 people injured, 45 critically. It said 35 of the critically injured were in Bucharest, where 102 were hurt.

"I fell on the stairs as the earthquake was reaching its peak and my fingers went out of their sockets," said Cristina Amza, 28, who was recovering from an operation at Bucharest's Emergency Hospital. "It was a nightmare."

The earthquake lasted for about 45 seconds, the Romanian news agency Rompres said.

In Moscow, Soviet officials said the quake was felt from the Crimea to the Baltics and damaged dozens of buildings in the southwest.

Soldiers attack U.N. compound

MONROVIA, Liberia (AP) — Government soldiers on Wednesday stormed a U.N. compound where members of rival tribes had taken shelter, killing a U.N. security guard, wounding two people and abducting at least 30, witnesses said.

Villagers took reporters to four bodies dumped a few miles outside Monrovia and said they were victims of the attack.

Civilians in the capital were outraged at the attack, with hundreds of people booing and hissing at President Samuel Doe as he tried to calm people several hours later.

"Kill us! Kill us!" the crowd screamed at young soldiers guarding Doe, whose government is fighting for its survival after guerrillas reached within 30 miles of the capital.

Doe said soldiers were not acting on his orders when they attacked the compound early Wednesday, killing the U.N. security guard and abducting about 30 men.

Greek pact reached

ATHENS, Greece (AP) — Greece and the United States today ended nearly a year of contentious discussion on U.S. bases by agreeing to let them stay on Greek soil for another eight years.

The United States has four bases and about 20 smaller units around the country. Washington has announced it is closing two bases as part of a worldwide cost-cutting drive.

Sources who spoke on condition of anonymity said the new accord allows for the two remaining U.S. bases to continue to operate in Greece. They are a major naval base at Souda and an Air Force electronic surveillance station at Gournes, both on the southern island of Crete.

Kiki Munshi, a spokesman for the U.S. Embassy, said in a telephone interview that the defense agreement had been initialed. It is expected to be signed officially in four to six weeks.

The accord ends nearly a year of confusion in Greek government policy on defense ties with Washington. At one point, Greek officials had frozen negotiations on the agreement.

Snakes delay rescue

DHAKA, Bangladesh (AP) — A bus whose passengers included a snake charmer fell into a ditch, and dozens of people lay trapped for hours because rescuers feared the snakes had escaped from their basket, a newspaper said Wednesday.

The snake charmer was among the three fatalities in the accident Tuesday outside Dhaka, the Bengali language newspaper Ittefaq said. It said the unidentified snake charmer was carrying at least six snakes in his basket.

"The passengers were groaning inside the bus ... But fear of snakes prevented the people from rescuing them," Ittefaq quoted villagers as saying.

After about three hours, another snake charmer was called from a neighboring village. He caught three snakes and said the others had fled, the newspaper said.

The bus, which was coming to Dhaka, collided head-on with another bus and fell into a ditch filled with water, according to the report.

Price hikes feared

EAST BERLIN (AP) — East Germans are clearing store shelves and filling their refrigerators because they fear massive price increases when the nation converts to a free market, officials said Wednesday.

East Germans are making a run on canned goods, meat, soap, sugar and "everything that can be stored," said Commerce Ministry spokeswoman Christian Boschek.

Food distributors also are sitting on large stocks of meat and other goods, creating shortages, apparently while waiting for the July 2 economic merger with West Germany, the government said. Unification of the German states' economies is expected to bring higher prices and massive unemployment.

Government spokesman Matthias Gehler said subsidies on food will be scrapped July 2 and prices will be set by the free market, rather than the state.

China conducts tests

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — China has conducted its first nuclear weapons test in nearly two years, Swedish monitors said Wednesday.

Seismic signals picked up Saturday indicated a bomb with a yield of 40 to 50 kilotons was detonated at the Lop Nor test site in Xinjiang Province, said the government-run Hagfors Observatory.

One kiloton has the explosive force of 1,000 tons of TNT. The bomb dropped on Hiroshima, Japan during World War II had an explosive force of 20 kilotons.

Nils-Olov Bergqvist of the Swedish Defense Research Establishment at Hagfors said the Chinese explosion registered 5.8 on the Richter scale.

The last Chinese test was Sept. 29, 1988.

Releases on hold

TEHRAN, Iran (AP) — A Lebanese Shiite Moslem leader with close ties to groups holding hostages said efforts to release six Americans held in Lebanon remain frozen because of negative U.S. positions.

Hussein Musawi, head of the Islamic Amal faction based in east Lebanon, spoke a day after the Bush administration announced it had provided Iran with information on Iranians missing in Lebanon as a gesture of goodwill.

In an interview on the Lebanese Voice of the People radio station, he said "those concerned in Iran and Syria are dismayed by the negative American stands."

Israel says it foiled beachfront assault

AP

NIZZANIM, Israel (AP) — Israeli soldiers killed four Palestinian guerrillas and captured 12 on Wednesday as they sped toward the coastline in speedboats to launch attacks coinciding with the Jewish holiday of Shavuot.

The guerrilla faction of Abul Abbas, mastermind of the Achille Lauro hijacking, claimed responsibility. It claimed all the boats reached their targets and that 11 guerrillas escaped and rocketed the coast at Tel Aviv and nearby towns.

The group said the attacks were in retaliation for the killing of seven Palestinians by an Israeli civilian last week, and for the assassination of a Palestinian military leader two years ago.

The Israeli army said the guerrillas planned to attack beachfront hotels filled with people celebrating Shavuot, which marks the giving of the Ten Commandments. The six small speedboats were sent from a mothership that sailed from Libya, the army alleged.

No Israelis were killed or injured, the army said, although one guerrilla speedboat outran an Israeli patrol boat and splashed ashore near a crowded Mediterranean beach club.

Police evacuated a 30-mile stretch of coast south of Tel Aviv jammed with people on holiday.

Of the six guerrilla vessels, only two got near shore, authorities said.

One carried 11 Palestinians. It was attacked by helicopters and troops as it sliced into an almost empty beach near Nizzanim, 18 miles south of Tel Aviv. Four guerrillas were killed there and seven captured, the army said.

Zvi Amitai, a resident of the Nizzanim communal farm, said he was collecting driftwood when he saw the speedboat and heard gunfire. The guerrillas landed 20 yards away from him.

"They jumped from the boat and didn't shoot, as if they didn't see us," he said. "They just ran for the dunes. I certainly feel like I won the lottery."

Five other guerrillas surrendered aboard another boat that was intercepted by Israeli vessels near a beach north of Tel Aviv. The other vessels broke down or were abandonded at sea, the army said.

Arab leaders blast U.S. policies as talks end

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — Arab leaders ended their summit Wednesday with harsh criticism of the United States, saying its support of Israel encourages the Jewish state to stonewall peace moves and settle Jews on occupied land.

Their statement was seen as a major defeat for pro-American moderates led by Egypt and Saudi Arabia.

The 20-page final communique urged a halt to the influx of Jews into Israel and pledged financial and political support for the Palestinian uprising against Israeli rule of the occupied territories. No figures were made public.

The communique was released after a three-day summit marked by disagreement between hard-liners and moderates. PLO chief Yasser Arafat called the summit to discuss Arab concerns over the immigration of Soviet Jews to Israel.

Some last-minute changes were made on the draft text, tempering an outright threat of economic sanctions, and possibly an oil embargo, on states that encourage Jewish immigration to Israel.

Instead, the leaders instructed economic, financial and foreign ministers of the 21-member Arab League to meet within two months to reevaluate relations and recommend to the next summit possible sanctions against states that facilitate immigration to Israel.

That appeared to be the only concession the hard-liners — led by Iraq and the PLO — made to the moderates.

Israeli officials have said hundreds of thousands of Jews could go to Israel in the next few years because of relaxed travel restrictions in the Soviet Union and tighter entry quotas in the United States.

Arabs fear the emigrants will be settled in occupied territories and drive out the Palestinians.

The Israeli government denies it has a policy of settling Jewish emigrants in the occupied territories.

Libyan leader Col. Moammar Gadhafi, wearing a silver and white African robe, spoke to the conference Wednesday and said, "Palestine will be the graveyard of the Jews."

He said Arabs must increase their population from 100 million to 1 billion to confront Israel with a "population explosion."

Yeltsin to seek Russian sovereignty

MOSCOW (AP) — Newly elected Russian President Boris N. Yeltsin said on Wednesday he will seek sovereignty for the largest Soviet republic within his first 100 days in office. He also demanded that the Soviet premier resign.

"We must turn this pyramid on its head." Yeltsin told a news conference one day after his election.

He said he would try to mend fences with Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev, but he outlined a program far more radical than Gorbachev's.

Under Yeltsin's plan, Russia and the other 14 Soviet republics would remain within a reconstituted Soviet Union, but have far more power than the central government in most matters, excluding defense and national security.

"We must withstand the diktat of the center," Yeltsin said. "If we withstand 100 days, if we are not pulled down ... Russia will be independent in every respect. It will make its own decisions. Russian laws must take priority over the union (national) laws. The Russian constitution must precede the union constitution."

Yeltsin spoke to reporters in the Grand Kremlin Palace, where the Congress of Peoples' Deputies of the Russian Federation named him president Tuesday by a slim, four-vote majority.

National Guard jets collide over Iowa

SPENCER, Iowa (AP) — Two Air National Guard fighter jets collided in a ball of flame Wednesday during a training flight over northwestern Iowa but both pilots and a civilian passenger parachuted to safety.

Debris from the two A-7 jets tumbled to the ground over a wide area in farm fields two miles north of Royal. There were no reports of damage on the ground.

"They just hit head on," said John Schultz, who saw the collision from his home in Spencer, eight miles northeast of the crash site and about 70 miles southeast of Sioux Falls, S.D.

"Each one exploded in a ball of fire, and that was it. I didn't see the parachutes."

The three people aboard the planes did eject and used their parachutes, said Air Guard Lt. Ruth Christopherson.

The three were South Dakota Air National Guard pilots Maj. Gregory Gore of Collierville, Tenn., and Maj. Duncan Keirnes of Sioux Falls, S.D., and Ward Bushee, executive editor of the Sioux Falls (S.D.) Argus Leader, said Christopherson.

"They're all fine, ready to be released to go home," she said.

Bushee was along as part of a public affairs program to acquaint civic leaders with the operation of the National Guard, she said.

Lt. Reid Christopherson, executive officer of the South Dakota Air National Guard, said the planes were among four A-7s taking part in a training mission from the Air Guard's 114th Tactical Fighter Group, based at Sioux Falls.

The two other planes returned to Sioux Falls.

Witnesses said the four jets were conducting maneuvers that resembled mock dogfighting.

The fighters collided about 25 miles north of where a United Airlines DC-10 was flying when an engine exploded July 19. The explosion knocked out the plane's hydraulic system, which powers flight controls, and the plane crashed during an emergency landing in Sioux City, killing 112 people.

Surgery performed on fetus

BOSTON (AP) — In a dramatic but controversial attack on a lethal birth defect, doctors said they partially removed a fetus, rearranged its internal organs and returned it to the womb to develop into a normal, healthy baby.

Experts agreed that the operation is the most ambitious and invasive example yet in the new field of fetal surgery. However, some also questioned whether it is worth the risk to the mother and the fetus.

The surgery was pioneered at the University of California, San Francisco, to correct fetal diaphragmatic hernia, a severe birth defect that occurs in about one of every 2,000 babies. The surgery was reported in Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine.

During development, a hole in the fetus's diaphragm fails to grow shut, and the stomach, intestines and other organs squeeze into the chest cavity. As a result, the lungs fail to develop, and the baby is born unable to breathe.

About three-quarters of all babies with this defect die.

"This problem is immensely frustrating for pediatric surgeons, because the babies are otherwise perfectly nice, but they die," said Dr. Michael R. Harrison, who developed the surgery. "It seemed as though this was one of those situations in medicine where fixing it earlier would be the only way to have an impact."

Harrison has performed the highly experimental repair surgery eight times since 1984. The first six fetuses died, but the last two went on to become healthy children, one boy and one girl.

During the surgery, doctors cut into the mother's uterus and pulled the fetus's arm out through the hole. Wires were attached to the fetus to monitor its heart and oxygen levels.

Through an incision in the fetus, they put the misplaced stomach, intestines and other organs back where they belonged and covered the hole in the diaphragm with a Gore-Tex patch. Finally they tucked the fetus's arm back into the womb and closed the incision.

Durenberger admits additional gift, loan

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. David Durenberger, already the subject of an ethics probe, said Wednesday he failed to report an earlier gift and loan, while Senate colleagues disclosed they talked, wrote, invested and even fiddled to raise their incomes last year.

Durenberger, R-Minn., amended his financial reports for five years to acknowledge a friend's gift of 35 days of lodging in Florida and a $484,000 loan to buy a house. He is being investigated by the Senate Ethics Committee because of a $100,000 book-promotion deal that was not listed on past disclosure reports.

The figures on income, speaking fees and gifts for senators were included in financial disclosure reports that were made public on Wednesday.

Although Democrats control the Senate, the top two Republicans earned more in speaking fees in 1989. Republican Leader Bob Dole of Kansas picked up $108,900 in honoraria; his deputy, Alan Simpson of Wyoming, got $90,600. Sen. Orrin Hatch of Utah, senior Republican on the Labor and Human Resources Committee, was paid $92,499 in fees.

Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, was paid $39,000 for speeches, but his deputy, Alan Cranston, D-Calif., no longer accepts honoraria.

One of the wealthiest senators, John Heinz, R-Pa., whose family started the food company, reported assets that could exceed $17 million; his income for the year may have topped $2.5 million. Sen. John C. Danforth, R-Mo., whose family founded Ralston Purina, disclosed holdings that could be in the $15-million range.

Sen. Claiborne, Pell, D-R.I., may have made $2.8 million or more last year; his assets were in the $8 million range. Also among the richer senators are Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., whose assets are hidden in a trust; Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz., with vast real estate holdings, and Herbert Kohl, D-Wis., owner of the Milwaukee Bucks basketball team. Kohl's 1989 income could have topped $20 million.

Military strikes should be option

One goal of terrorism is to make a strong nation look frustrated and powerless. A small band of fanatics unleashes sudden random violence on citizens of Western countries, then flees into hiding — often slipping across borders beyond the reach of the investigating government agencies.

The frustration was clearly reflected in the report just released by a U.S. presidential commission. The panel was created to investigate the 1988 bombing of Pan Am Flight 103 over Scotland, which killed all 259 aboard.

The report recommended that the United States be prepared to launch pre-emptive or retaliatory military strikes against terrorists or their sponsors.

While on the surface, the get-tough approach may have political appeal and feasibly could work in some instances, there are times when it plays to the designs of the terrorists. A violent reaction to terrorism may make Americans feel less helpless. But it's also a perilous policy that could play into the hands of terrorists. It could invite overreaction and sow discord among countries that need to cooperate in the war against international terrorism. At worst, the United States could wind up killing innocent bystanders, lowering us to the uncivilized standard of the culprits we hope to bring to justice.

The recommended military response dominated the headlines and overshadowed other sensible suggestions that focused on avoiding terrorist attacks in the first place, particularly jetliner bombings.

In fact, President Bush's advisory panel found that the Federal Aviation Administration and commercial airlines aren't doing enough to secure the public from terrorist assaults. Of course, no panacea is on the horizon. Even an explosive-detection device developed for airports has flaws, according to the report.

The panel's prognosis is grim. There are no simple ways to protect against terrorists, who strike whenever and wherever they choose.

Nor are there simple ways to locate terrorists and arrest them. Nevertheless, the United States and its allies must maintain their guard and diligently work together to arrest the wrongdoers when they do attack. The nations of the world that respect civilized behavior must work to overcome terrorism using any means possible — even the non-military response.

But we must try to prevent letting a handful of terrorists provoke this country into dangerous acts of military retaliation until we are ready and as confident of success through that means as possible.

Banks' 'tight spigot' good in perverse way

The bad news is that U.S. banks really have been cutting back available credit.

The good news is that they are cutting back only to real estate developers and small to medium sized businesses.

Good news? Banks are shelling out money to large, established companies that ... create few jobs and have too often ... contented themselves with cannibalizing each other. In the meantime, the banks are cutting off money to the small and medium-sized businesses that create jobs and drive innovation. Can this possibly make sense?

In a perverse way — yes. Federal regulators have been hounding banks to loan only on "cash flow," that is, the amount of free money available for repaying debts, and not on asset values, or even on growth potential. Asset values have had a nasty way of evaporating of late, and contracts vanish in recessions. So stick with the boys that you know have the cash to make good the loans, say regulators. Otherwise, Uncle Sam will be calling on taxpayers to bail out banks just like savings and loans.

Retrenched lending to real estate developers does make some sense. On the whole, the country is overbuilt. There are surely markets and niches in markets in need of development, but on the whole, real estate is iffy. Tighter scrutiny of development loans, and especially speculative raw land loans, is long overdue.

But cutting credit to medium sized and small companies that carry an economy is economic suicide, or homicide, depending on your perspective.

Regulators themselves were sufficiently disturbed to call a meeting to openly urge bankers to lend a little more. Good advice. Now if the regulators will apply common sense on the side of easing credit, and bankers will scrutinize takeover and real estate schemes closely, maybe some money can be found for those real American heroes, entrepreneurial companies.

Strange ideas nothing new

Strange ideas frequently surface in Austin, especially when the Legislature is in session, so state Sen. Don Henderson's proposal to move the Texas Department of Commerce from Austin to Houston should come as no particular surprise.

Still, his fellow lawmakers should waste no time in relegating Henderson's recommendation to the nearest round container.

Henderson, a Houston Republican, offers this rationale for his suggestion:

"The Department of Commerce is supposed to be engaged in business and trade, and Houston is the center for trade and commerce in Texas. Austin is a government and university town."

His boast about Houston is open to argument, and the fact that Austin is a "government and university town" offers an excellent argument for keeping the department, which is a government agency and which needs the technical and educational reinforcement that the University of Texas provides, in the capital.

But there is another reason, too.

Agency officials estimate that such a move would cost the state $2.3 million initially and more than $600,000 annually in operational costs, including such items as telephones, travel and higher rent.

There is a word for that, and that word is waste...

Are our reserve ships seaworthy?

WASHINGTON — Sometimes government agencies are like athletes on steroids. They pump up their figures to create an illusion of strength.

Federal Maritime Administration officials would like you to think that their agency is the bureaucratic equivalent of Arnold Schwarzenegger. The agency, which keeps a fleet of reserve ships for the Navy to use in the event of war, has hundreds of those ships ready to sail.

Anderson

In reality, a large number of the backup ships are rustbuckets that have no place in the inventory of combat-ready vessels.

The Maritime Administration, an agency within the Transportation Department, oversees a fleet of 317 reserve ships docked at various ports throughout the country. For years, the Defense Department and congressional investigators have privately criticized the program. They say that if the United States was pulled into a full-scale war, many of the reserve boats would need major repairs to sail.

Maritime Administration officials have allowed many of the ships to rust at anchor. One old ship was so neglected, that grass grew on the wooden deck. Congressional investigators told our associate Scott Sleek that at least 120 of the ships have outlived their usefulness and should be scrapped.

This leads to another problem. When the Maritime Administration finally has the sense to scrap a ship, it can't do that job right either. Instead of selling the ships to American scrap merchants, the government sinks them or sells them to foreign companies, particularly in Japan and Taiwan.

American scrap companies complain they can't get enough government business, but the Maritime Administration says no American companies bid on the scrap contracts. The American companies counter that claim, saying that they know the bidding is futile because foreign companies get the contracts because they pay more, even if it means a loss of American jobs.

The reserve program is now the target of a congressional probe led by Rep. William Broomfield, R-Mich. He has scheduled a hearing on the problem for June 4. Broomfield thinks the fleet management is troublesome in a time when the Pentagon is trying to cut back on perfectly good weaponry because of the optimistic outlook for world peace.

We first reported on the fleet fiasco last summer when we learned that some old war ships were being used for Navy target practice, or being sunk to form artificial reefs, before they were stripped of their valuables. Radar, communications devices, kitchen equipment and other machinery were being sent to Davy Jones' Locker without so much as a fare-thee-well.

Pentagon investigators estimated the loss at $17 million. The Navy has started a pilot program to strip the ships. But the Defense Department Inspector General's Office now thinks another $40 million will be deep-sixed with the scheduled sinking of 64 old ships under Maritime Administration control.

A Maritime Administration spokesman said it is more costly to strip the ships than sink them untouched.

When the agency isn't sinking ships that should be stripped and keeping ships that should be scrapped, it makes bad trades for more ships. One source told us that the agency often acquires ships that have already been slated for the scrap heap by their owners.

In 1988, the agency traded a $7.2 million aircraft carrier for a $2.1 million cargo ship.

Summit could host very interesting 'menu'

The events in the Soviet Union are having a tremendous impact on the Gorbachev-Bush arms talks starting today in Washington. Here is how some leading American experts are predicting the exchanges will go.

President Gorbachev opens the conversation with, "Mr. President, as you say in your country, I am willing to deal. For openers, I will give up 3,540 intercontinental ballistic missiles."

Buchwald

"Good, and what do you want in exchange?"

"Three thousand, five hundred and forty 7-Elevens."

"I don't understand," the president says.

"My people no longer demonstrate for missiles, but they are dying for convenience stores."

Bush tells Gorbachev, "It isn't my decision. I'll have to go to Congress with that."

"Don't take too much time. I could be out on my ear. Now, Mr. President, what do you want from us?"

"We are asking you to give up all your strategic bombers and blow up every nuclear warhead in your arsenal," Mr. Bush says.

Gorbachev replies, "It's possible, but we cannot do that unless you give us something in exchange."

"Such as?"

"We want your entire Frank Perdue chicken production for the next five years."

"Are you mad?" sputters Mr. Bush. "This country needs all the poultry it can get. The Defense Department would never let me give away our chickens to a nation that still maintains the largest standing army in the world."

"Mr. President, you are aware of what is going on in the U.S.S.R. The people are very upset at the food shortages. We've had riots in Armenia, Lithuania and Latvia. Estonia doesn't love me either. I must have something to offer the citizens of my country, and I am willing to abandon every weapon to do it."

"Mr. Gorbachev, arms reduction isn't as simple as it used to be. The only way you can prove to us that you are sincere about perestroika is to invest in American junk bonds."

"Mr. President, we will bury every cruise missile we have if you promise to build 3,400 Safeway stores in Siberia — but they must come with food in them."

"You drive a hard bargain, Mr. Gorbachev."

"It's to your advantage to see that the Soviet people are happy. You made a good start with McDonald's in Moscow, but that doesn't mean you won the hearts and minds of the Soviet consumer's stomach."

"What would it take for you to give up Soviet conventional forces in Europe?"

"Ten thousand Dairy Queens and every Dunkin' Donuts east of the Mississippi. It's the only way I can calm down the opposition in the Ukraine."

"Mr. Gorbachev, I wasn't prepared for these demands. We're willing to give up certain things like fixed-wing bombers and aircraft carriers, but when you demand Dairy Queens, you're asking for the moon. The next thing I know you'll be wanting International House of Pancakes' franchises."

"I was about to bring that up."

"Then what it boils down to is you are demanding nothing but consumer goods and, in exchange, all you are offering is to destroy heavy war equipment. Why?"

"We have a new saying in the Soviet Union, 'Better fed than Red.'"

GEORGE WILL

Soviet 'transition' holds echoes of history

WASHINGTON — Catherine the Great, Russia's reformer two centuries ago, was given to imagining grand new cities. She once enlisted a distinguished visitor, Austrian emperor Joseph II, to participate in laying two foundation stones of an envisioned metropolis. He commented drolly, "She has laid the first stone of a city, and I have laid the last." He was correct. Today, even the proposed site of this "city" is unknown.

Will

This is a Russian tradition: grandiose designs and disappointing execution. The tradition survived intact when other traditions were ruptured by the 1917 revolution.

Today's political reforms constitute a recrudescence of czarism, even unto a new law making it a crime to "insult" the president, into whose hands power is increasingly concentrated.

Now Gorbachev proposes a five-year transition to a "regulated market economy." Soviet history is so strewn with mendacity and folly that the vocabulary of politics crumbles at the touch. The word "transition" echoes old incarnations about "the glorious transition" to true socialism. And one can imagine derisive muttering across all 11 of the Soviet Union's time zones: "Wonderful. Another Five Year Plan."

This raises an old question concerning the nature and continuity of Russian national character.

In an interview in Encounter magazine, Adam Ulam, head of Harvard's Russian Research Center, is asked how deeply the Soviet system reflects Russian tradition. Ulam rejects the notion that the system is as much a product of Russian history as of Communist doctrine. He is pressed about whether traditions of egalitarianism made the Soviet people receptive to Stalinist collectivization, and today account for public anger about people making profits from cooperatives, and the reluctance of peasants to accept land under Gorbachev's leasehold arrangements.

Ulam answers that far from being receptive, the people resisted collectivization until broken by repression, and ever since have practiced passive resistance so doggedly that they have forced re-examination of the entire practice of collectivization. Furthermore, "that the Russian farmer is now hesitating to accept land is not due to his innate reluctance to take charge of his destiny, but to the haunting memory of what happened to his father and grandfather under Stalin's terror — and how the NEP-men were treated when Stalin decreed that the New Economic Program (the first Soviet flirtation with economic liberalization) had come to an end."

How tentative is Gorbachev's flirtation? After five years of talk about perestroika, bread is still so absurdly subsidized that it is cheaper for a farmer to feed bread to his pigs than to feed them grain. Gorbachev still does not understand the Law of Holes (when you are in a hole, stop digging). He is planning to raise prices, but in a dilatory Five Year Plan, and many prices will still be set by the government. And there will be indexation: Wages and pensions will be adjusted to spare most people much pain.

It looks like a recipe for familiar irrationality at a higher price level. That is not surprising considering that in his recent denunciation of the populist Boris Yeltsin, Gorbachev accused him of attempting "to excommunicate Russia from socialism" and said that "the socialist choice" involves "our fundamental values, our benchmark."

De-Stalinization — ending random terror, establishing rudimentary rule of law — was the easy part. De-Leninization — abandonment of government by commands from the center — has not seriously begun. But wait: Because Leninism involved much more than that, including incipient Stalinism, let us speak instead of de-czarization.

And of the persistence of Russian character and culture. Perhaps what a Russian intellectual said in 1940 has at last come true. He said: "In 1917 we believed that communism had swallowed up Russia; today we see that Russia has swallowed up communism."

Technicians at Kennedy Space Center inspect the Space shuttle orbiter Columbia early Wednesday morning after the launch of STS-35 was scrubbed because of a hydrogen leak in the aft section of the orbiter. The problem was discovered during the fueling of the shuttle Tuesday afternoon. NASA officials are trying to evaluate the problem and determine a new launch date.

Workers search for fuel leak

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Space shuttle Columbia will not take off until next week at the earliest after a fuel leak scrubbed Wednesday's launch, NASA officials said.

Columbia had been scheduled to lift off at 12:38 a.m. EDT with a $150 million observatory called Astro. But it was called off about six hours before launch time when hydrogen began leaking while Columbia's external fuel tank was being loaded.

Workers were expected to enter Columbia's rear engine compartment early today to search for the leak and assess the problem. But first all the hydrogen must be vented from the external tank and the system must be purged with non-flammable helium.

"It's hard to believe at the rate (of) leak we've seen that we missed it," said Bascom Murrah, a NASA official in charge of pre-launch operations for Columbia. "Something gave. But it's a guessing game until we get in there."

It was the first time a shuttle launch had been scrubbed during fueling. More than a half-million gallons of super-cold liquid hydrogen and liquid oxygen were being pumped into Columbia's external tank.

"The system was tight going into launch count, and it passed all of our standard leak tests. We felt good about it," said NASA launch director Bob Sieck. "The problem did not manifest itself until we saw cold cryogenic temperatures. Of course, it is our hope that it is still there under ambient conditions when we go into our troubleshooting."

Columbia's seven astronauts returned to their home base at Johnson Space Center in Houston on Wednesday. They planned to practice liftoffs and landings in a shuttle mission simulator while awaiting a new launch date.

Engineers for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration spent hours opening and closing valves and watching a network of sensors before finding the general area of the leaks late Tuesday.

A 17-inch valve in a pipe that carries fuel from the external tank to the shuttle's main engines was believed to have a leak the size of a pinhole, Sieck said.

Sieck said hydrogen leaked for fewer than five minutes before the fueling was halted. Readings showed hydrogen inside the aft end of Columbia as well as outside the orbiter.

NATION IN BRIEF

Ethnic groups attack statue

PITTSBURGH (AP) — An artist's use of an alleged ethnic slur in the inscription of a steelworker statue is being attacked by Croatians, the United Steelworkers union and other ethnic and labor groups.

The 12-foot fiberglass statue, in the middle of a downtown park, is inscribed with the title and signature: "Hunky Steelworker. Luis Jimenez '90."

"The sculptor's choice of words has touched a raw nerve among our members across a wide range of ethnic backgrounds," said Andrew V. "Lefty" Palm, director of the union district that covers Pittsburgh steelworkers.

"It's a blatant insult," said Edward Verlich of the Croatian Fraternal Union. "We aren't trying to deny anyone freedoms, but we don't want this emblazoned on a statue where a half-million people will see it."

The term "hunky" originated in the late 1800s as a term to describe people of Hungarian descent, but its use was expanded quickly as an insult toward anyone whose ancestors came from central Europe, said Sarah Thomason, a professor of linguistics at the University of Pittsburgh.

"It's also of the same origin as the word 'honky,' which some blacks use to describe whites," Ms. Thomason said Wednesday.

Jiminez, the artist, didn't return calls Wednesday from his Hondo, N.M., studio but he previously has said he meant no insult.

Test site a concern

WASHINGTON (AP) — The State Department expressed concern Wednesday over reports that the West African country of Mauritania may become a testing site for development of medium-range ballistics missiles.

Department spokeswoman Margaret Tutwiler suggested that a "Middle East" country may be involved in the reported program but she refused to be more specific.

She was responding to a report in The Washington Times that Iraq plans to use Mauritania for missile testing. The Times story said Iraq has begun delivering parts of fixed-missile launchers to Mauritania.

"We are naturally concerned over reports that Mauritania may be a testing site for missiles from another country," she said.

"Such a development would be worrisome both with respect to missile proliferation in the Middle East and to regional stability in West Africa.

"We have expressed these concerns to the government of Mauritania and we will continue to monitor the situation."

Death caused found

LOS ANGELES (AP) — An auto accident victim who died on the operating table after sheets covering her caught fire was killed by both the crash injuries and burns, the coroner's office ruled Wednesday.

Angela Hernandez, 26, a mother of four, died early Monday after undergoing emergency surgery at UCLA Medical Center. She had suffered heart and liver injuries when she was crushed in an accident late Sunday in Santa Monica.

Surgeons were about to take Hernandez out of the operating room when the sheets and blankets ignited, the Fire Department has said.

A medical examiner found no smoke in Hernandez' lungs but determined she died both from burns and traumatic injuries suffered in the crash, said Los Angeles County coroner's spokesman Scott Carrier.

"It's going to be listed as an accidental death," Carrier said.

Fire officials have said they were looking at whether a penlike cauterizer used to stop bleeding from an incision was present in the operating room along with pure oxygen. Such a combination was blamed for a flash fire that killed a 15-year-old boy in an operating room at Cedars-Sinai Medical Center in 1988.

Helicopters grounded

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Navy has grounded its fleet of twin-rotor H-46 Sea Knight transport helicopters for the second time this month, the Pentagon said Wednesday.

The 340 helicopters were ordered not to fly after routine maintenance found fractures in the rotor-hub connecting links that hold the rotor blades to the rotor hub, the statement said.

There are 259 helicopters in the fleet assigned to the Marine Corps and 81 to the Navy.

"Aircraft will be returned to flight status following electronic inspections of the connecting links," the statement said. "Periodic follow-up inspections will be implemented to identify and remove from service any links which show evidence of developing cracks."

The problem with the links is not related to trouble in the copter's aft transmission that led to a May 13 grounding order, the statement said.

That transmission problem was discovered after an investigation of an H-46 accident earlier this month.

Role of DEA in abduction questioned

Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON - The kidnapping of a Mexican doctor wanted in the United States in the slaying of a drug agent has led lawmakers to question whether the Drug Enforcement Administration should be spending federal dollars for such actions.

Some in Congress are dissatisfied with DEA explanations about its role in the abduction of Dr. Humberto Alvarez Machain, a Mexican gynecologist brought to the United States in April to face charges in the 1985 murder of DEA agent Enrique Camarena in Mexico.

"As a matter of policy, I have some fundamental concerns with paying money for surrogates to basically kidnap," said Rep. William Hughes, D-N.J., chairman of the House Judiciary subcommittee on crime, which oversees DEA. "It raises some serious international questions."

The kidnapping brought U.S.-Mexico cooperation on drugs to a boiling point. Mexico has asked the United States to return Alvarez Machain to Mexico and is seeking the extradition of DEA agents and informants that it terms "the intellectual authors" of the kidnapping.

The agency originally denied it either offered or paid reward money to a Mexican-born informant and approximately 10 associates who took Alvarez Machain from his office in Guadalajara, Mexico April 2 and delivered him to DEA agents in El Paso, Texas the following day.

But DEA agent Hector Berrellez testified in a Los Angeles courtroom Friday that he offered the informant, Antonio Garate Bustamante, $50,000 to bring Alvarez Machain to the United States.

DEA has acknowledged paying Garate and his associates $20,000 for expenses incurred in transporting Alvarez Machain by plane from Guadalajara to El Paso. However, DEA spokesmen declined to characterize this payment as reward money.

Several members of Congress said actions such as the kidnapping work at cross-purposes with U.S. foreign policy.

"It makes it harder for me when I meet with Mexican officials to deal with them on a candid basis," said Rep. Lawrence Smith, chairman of the House Foreign Affairs international control task force. "By the same token, I understand the frustration DEA feels because for years, I felt the Mexican government was not doing everything it could to solve" the Camarena murder.

Smith credited the government of Carlos Salinas de Gotari with improving Mexico's record on drug enforcement. "I think DEA should be trying to put the years of mistrust to rest."

Hughes said the government has failed to look at the repercussions of the kidnapping of Alvarez Machain, who is accused of administering drugs to keep Camarena awake while he was being tortured.

Last year, Congress authorized $17.8 million to DEA for undercover drug purchases and payments for information. Hughes said his subcommittee would hold hearings to establish whether DEA's use of such funds for abductions is legitimate.

Garate, a former Mexican police officer now living in Los Angeles, said on the witness stand last week that he is paying $6,000 a week in expenses to seven associates who have fled to the United States to escape Mexican retribution for the kidnapping.

A senior law enforcement official, who asked not to be identified, said DEA would continue to pay this money until prosecutors determine whether their testimony is necessary in Alvarez Machain's trial in Los Angeles.

The official said questions about whether DEA payments to Garate constituted a "reward" stems from a "communication breakdown" between DEA headquarters in Washington and agents in Los Angeles handling the Alvarez Machain case.

Peter Gruden, head of DEA's office of professional responsibility, which is in charge of the Camarena investigation, authorized $50,000 for Garate and his associates to cover expenses in bringing Alvarez Machain to the United States, the source said.

"The guys out there (in Los Angeles) understood it would cover not only expenses, but a reward," the source said.

State officials explain well tests, contamination

■ Medical and water experts try to reassure about 100 Midland County residents that there is no "cancer cluster" in their area.

By David Morris
Staff Writer

About 100 Midland County residents concerned about the quality of their drinking water gathered Wednesday to hear an official explanation of well testing and water contamination in their area.

Representatives from the Texas Department of Health, Texas Water Commission, Texas Railroad Commission and the Allison Cancer Center addressed the crowd.

James Corwin, medical director of Midland's Allison Cancer Center, told the crowd that there is no evidence to suggest that cancer rates in their neighborhood are unusually high.

"The numbers really don't get into anything that we would call a cluster," Corwin said.

Some residents have blamed cancer cases in the area on contaminated groundwater.

Recent TWC well tests in south Midland County revealed high chloride levels in some wells and traces of volatile organic compounds in seven others.

Chloride in 20 of the 36 wells tested exceeded the state-recommended level of 300 parts per million, TWC documents show. Three of these wells exceeded 1,000 parts per million of chlorides — ranging from 1,315 to 1,762 to 2,351 parts per million.

Railroad Commission spokesman Hank Krusekopf said the chloride contamination may be due to oilfield activity in the area dating back 20 years.

He said little could be done about the high chloride levels except wait for the groundwater contamination plume to migrate out of the area — which will take many years.

Johnnie Thomas, a County Road 114 resident, said she wanted state officials to determine who is responsible for the contamination so it can be cleaned up.

"He (Krusekopf) said with patience and time the water will clear," she said. "Well, with patience and time everything will clear."

Noreta Livergood, a South County Road 1218 resident whose well was recently sampled by the railroad commission, said the commission has been "sidestepping" the water contamination issue.

"Why can't they go in there and do something?" she asked. "Why couldn't they go in there 10 or 15 or 20 years ago if they knew there was a problem? All I want is good water. We don't want to sue anybody or anything, we just want good water."

Three-year-old Chad Blasingame, assisted by his father Tony, tosses out the first pitch of Wednesday night's baseball game between Midland and Arkansas. A portion of the proceeds from the game will help Chad, who is in need of a bone marrow transplant.

Angels game proceeds will help boy with transplant

■ Chad Blasingame will undergo a bone-marrow transplant June 15, which offers possible relief from the myelofibrosis and leukemia that Chad suffers from.

By David Morris
Staff Writer

Chad Blasingame might not yet grasp the fundamentals of baseball, but his family hopes a bone marrow transplant will give him plenty of time to learn.

Chad, 3, threw out the first pitch in the Midland Angels' game Wednesday against the Arkansas Travelers. And, half the gate receipts from that game went toward paying for the transplant, scheduled for June 15.

Chad suffers from myelofibrosis and leukemia. Chemotherapy has the blood diseases in remission, but Chad's mother Patti Blasingame said only a bone marrow transplant promises permanent relief.

Angels General Manager Monty Hoppel estimated the ball club would raise between $400 and $900 Wednesday for Chad's medical expenses.

Mrs. Blasingame said a donor for Chad was found in March and that insurance will cover the cost of the transplant operation.

The Blasingames are hoping that community donations will help defray costs not covered by insurance, including a $9,000 donor processing fee.

After the transplant operation, Chad will spend several weeks in intensive care at the Baylor Medical Center in Dallas.

Mrs. Blasingame said she and her husband Tony will have to take time off from work and rent a Dallas apartment in order to be near Chad, and that will be a financial burden as well.

So far, about $5,800 has been raised for Chad, said Linda Steward, a Blasingame family friend who has helped with fund-raising. She said donations for Chad could be made to United Bank, 500 W. Illinois Ave., or First City Texas bank, 500 W. Texas Ave.

Mrs. Blasingame, who works as a customer representative for Energas, said Chad's illness was first diagnosed about a year ago. She said he has responded well to chemotherapy, which began last November.

"The first day after chemo he's usually sick," she said, adding that treatments are given at three-week intervals. After the first day he usually bounces back, she said.

"He runs up and down the halls — he's an active 3-year-old," she said.

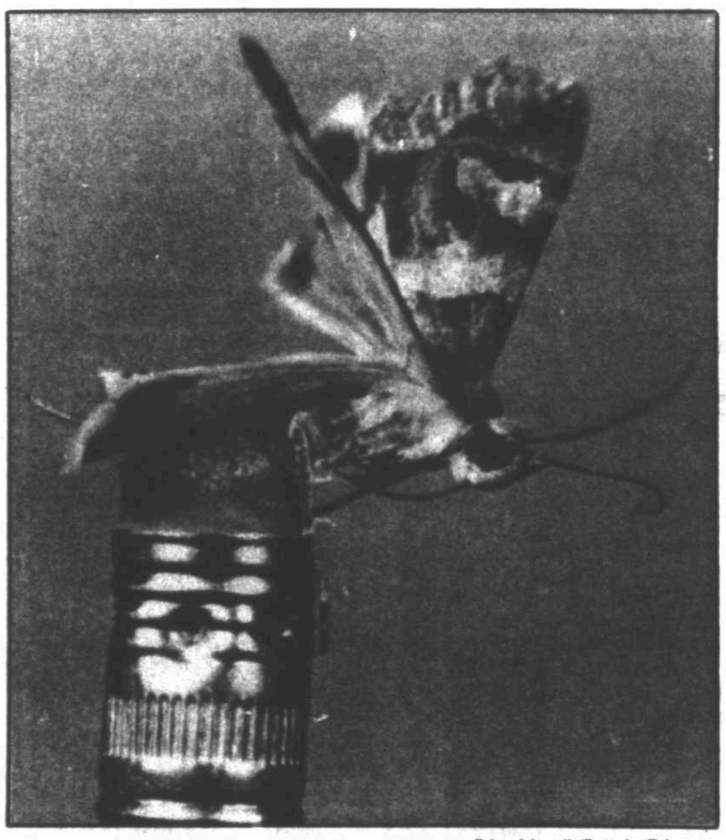
Mrs. Blasingame said Chad didn't understand the significance of throwing out the first pitch in Wednesday's game, but added that he ought to enjoy the experience.

"He loves to throw a ball," she said.

She said she and her husband appreciate Midland's fund-raising efforts on behalf of their son, who celebrated his third birthday Wednesday.

"I'm thankful to the whole community," she said. "They've been really helpful."

Worms as well as moths plaguing Permian Basin



Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram

This is only one of thousands of moths making a temporary insect home out of the Permian Basin.

By Erin Blair
Staff Writer

If the ping-ping-ping of a multitude of moth bodies glancing off your windows is starting to wear on your nerves, have hope. Moth experts say the swarm will die down, quite literally, in the next week.

They're more worried about a plague of Beet army worms.

"Most noctuids live about one week in the adult stage, then they mate, lay eggs and die," said Victor Lucero, a Stanton-based entomologist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service. "It's the army worms I'm concerned about."

Entomologists said the army worms are part of the same family, noctuidae, as the moths. Both pests are thriving this year because of the weather earlier in the year: the hard Dec. 20, 1989, freeze, heavy rains and humidity, and now the dry, windy weather.

Lucero said he has spotted the army worms in cotton fields in Greenwood, Stanton, Tarzan and Lenorah.

Charles Allen, a Fort Stockton-based agriculture extension entomologist, reported army worms in cotton plants, alfalfa, chili peppers and sunflowers in Dell City, 90

Backers try to keep Alpine hospital open

ALPINE (AP) — Supporters of Big Bend Medical Center in Alpine are trying to develop a tri-county financial plan to keep the hospital open.

Rancher and businessman Ralph Meriwether of Alpine is serving as acting coordinator of a special committee set up to get input from citizens in Brewster, Presidio and Jeff Davis counties and provide residents with information on hospital operations.

Meriwether and acting hospital administrator Ron Ballew met recently with some 80 people at Marfa to discuss the hospital's financial problems and discuss ways of stabilizing its income. He says response from the meeting has been good.

"We cannot afford to be without a hospital. Everyone agrees we must have it, but we have to find a way to keep it financially healthy," said Meriwether.

Options available to the hospital boosters include a 1 percent sales tax increase with funds earmarked for the hospital or to have a contractural arrangement between the counties and the hospital.

Former Big Spring resident remains PUC chairman

Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Paul Meek, of Dallas and a former president of the Big Spring Chamber of Commerce, Wednesday received Texas Senate approval to continue as chairman of the Texas Public Utility Commission just moments before the Senate ended the fifth special session.

The Senate voted 25-3 to confirm Meek to a term that expires Sept. 1, 1995. Sen. Bill Sims, D-San Angelo, whose district includes Midland, was absent.

Seven other nominees received unanimous approval, but the Senate left an nominee pending on the Structural Pest Control Board to allow a court challenge of a recent attorney general's opinion on interim appointments.

Sen. Chet Edwards, D-Waco, chairman of the Nominations Committee, said two days of hearings convinced him Meek should continue as chairman of the three-member PUC, which regulates electrical and telephone utilities.

"I think he is a good manager and he will bring stability to the Public Utility Commission," Edwards said.

"I hope his concern for the bond rating of utilities is tempered by his concern for the working people of this state."

Edwards said Meek convinced him he would not seek to shift the burden of proof in rate cases from utilities to consumers. He also said Meek's support of settlements in rate cases would not hurt consumers as long as it was an open and fair process.

Edwards also said Meek assured him he would avoid conflicts of interest as chairman of the board of American Petrofina, which sells gas to Gulf States Utilities Co. and Texas Utilities.

Both utilities have rate cases pending at the commission, but Edwards said Meek is insulated from the American Petrofina operations that deal with those utilities.

But Sen. Carlos Truan, D-Corpus Christi, said it was inconceivable that Meek would continue as chairman of the board of Fina at the same time he serves as PUC chairman.

"One of the major expense items of any oil company is the cost of utilities. Mr. Paul Meek is going to be expected to line up every time with the industrial ratepayers," Truan said.

He called Meek "a clone of (Gov. Bill) Clements, but with a better temperament and a friendlier demeanor."

A Midland man was treated and released from Midland Memorial Hospital Wednesday night following a shooting on County Road 114 West, sheriff's department and hospital reports show.

Ricky Carl Stephens, 22, was shot in the shoulder shortly before 6 p.m. Wednesday with a shotgun, reports show.

The shooting apparently occurred after Stephens and another man got into an argument, Midland County Sheriff Gary Painter said.

It was not immediately known whether anyone was arrested in connection with the incident.

Goddard honored for anti-drug plan

Staff Report

Following a fall 1989 research project involving over 3,500 schools nationwide, the Chemical People Project cited schools that maintain a programmatic approach to student drug abuse prevention.

Among the schools selected for recognition was Midland's Goddard Junior High School.

In correspondence to Goddard principal Jane Carrens, Lloyd Kaiser, project participant and president of QED Communications, Inc. noted, "Your efforts will help an at-risk generation make a lifetime of healthful decisions."

The research and awards program was sponsored by the Metropolitan Life Foundation.

Goddard joins the long list of Midland public schools which have received recognition for their efforts to combat youthful drug abuse.

During the 1988-89 school year, Lee Freshman High School was one of five schools statewide to be honored by the Texas Education Agency for exemplary efforts in drug abuse prevention.

In 1987-88, Midland Freshman High School, Lee Freshman High School and Lee High School were among the elite group of nine Texas high schools nominated for the National Drug-Free Schools Recognition Program.

Career day sponsored

While many students were preparing their summer agendas, Washington Elementary students have been preparing for future careers.

Recently, a career awareness day was conducted at Washington Elementary for the students. Sixteen different careers were presented to students by area professionals.

The professions discussed included engineering, law, medicine, law enforcement, the military, and computer science.

Prior to the individual career sessions, district superintendent Joe Baressi and board president James Fuller addressed the children on the importance of academic excellence, goal setting, and hard work to succeed in the work world.

Refreshments, door prizes, and several presenters were furnished by career day sponsor Mobil Oil. Mobil's participation in the event was coordinated by Clem Johnson, senior employee advisor for Mobil.

"It was a big day for the students, and a real eye-opener," commented Melva Cardenas, Washington Elementary principal.

Sexual assault reported

A 26-year-old Midland woman reported that she was raped early Tuesday morning, Midland police officials said.

The woman said she was sexually assaulted about 5:45 a.m. in a vacant lot east of the 500 block of Carver Street, police said.

The victim said she and the suspect were attending a party when they decided to walk to a local restaurant, police said. On the way, the woman said the suspect made sexual remarks, attacked her with a brick and when she ran he struck her in the back of the head with a rock, police reported.

The man then sexually assaulted her, the woman told police.

Police said the woman was transported to Midland Memorial Hospital where she was treated and released.

An investigation is being conducted and police are looking for the suspect, who is known to the victim, police said.

System given to police

ODESSA — A $7,100 computer system that automatically calls homebound people by telephone to see if they need assistance was donated to the Odessa Police Department on Wednesday, police officials said.

The "Are You OK?" system is programmed to make daily morning calls to people such as the elderly and handicapped who may be in need of help, police said. If a subscriber to the system fails to answer his or her call someone is dispatched to the residence, officials said.

The Benevolent and Patriotic Order of Does, Odessa Drove 162 and the Benevolent Protective Order of Elk, Order 1630, donated the system, police said.

The system is expected to be functioning about 30 to 90 days after its arrival, officials said.

New Mexico art shown

RUIDOSO, N.M. — The finest collection of the New Mexico masters ever assembled in Southern New Mexico is currently on display at Lindavida Fine Art here, says co-owner Linda Smith.

"All the good art is no longer above Interstate 40 in New Mexico," she says. "The collection includes the Taos Society of Artists, a small group of talent that made Taos the cultural center of the Southwest in the early 20th century. The collection represents our heritage from that small but powerful beginning."

The 30-piece exhibit, "American Art by Deceased Artists," opens Friday and closes Monday.

"The museum quality collection is conservatively valued at $2 million," Ms. Smith says.

Hours are 10 a.m. to 7 p.m. For more information call 1-505-258-4583.

MOTHS: Army worms chewing up cotton crops

miles east of El Paso, St. Lawrence, Garden City and Andrews.

"They're so bad in the the cotton right now that it's scaring me," Lucero said. "They're chopping off the cotton terminals and completely devastating some plants."

The army worms attack the plants when they're about 6 inches tall, causing a delay in the growing season while the plant re-establishes its shoots. Lucero believes the worms may be attracted to the scent of the cotton's nectar glands.

"If the planter finds 30 percent of his crop is infested, he needs to take some containment measures," Lucero said.

Allen said the worms are hard to control because they are resistant to some chemicals. He said planters should check with their extension agents to find out what sort of insecticides are most effective against them.

Meanwhile, Lucero said the moths that have become so common in Midland over the past few days are catocala or underwing moths, named for the bright orange and black patch at the base of their drab gray wings. They are commonly known as candle moths, because of their attraction to light, or miller moths. In their larva stage they are mesquite cutworms.

As moths they drink nectar from wildflowers and pose no threat to vegetables, bedding plants or woolen clothes, Lucero said.

He began monitoring the moths about 90 days ago and said the infestation hasn't been this bad since 1981.

Allen explained that both bugs' natural parasites and predators, mainly wasps, died off in the freeze, allowing large numbers of moth and worm eggs to mature to larvae, the stage at which the army worms are most destructive.

The moths were protected from the cold because they were in their pupa stage, buried 6 inches deep in the soil. As moths, their only predators are birds, frogs and spiders.

And vacuum cleaners.

Both entomologists and several Midland exterminators said the only way to get rid of the bugs is to suck them up in vacuum cleaner bags and throw them out.

Leak on ship forces evacuation

FREEPORT (AP) — An accidental mixture of two chemicals aboard a Dow Chemical Co. ship forced the evacuation of a company plant and the surrounding area Wednesday because officials feared the combination could explode.

About 20,000 gallons of amino ethyl ethanolamine were already in the Marine Chemist's tank when about 5,000 gallons of 1,3-dichloropropene were accidentally added about 8:55 p.m. Tuesday, according to Margaret Gaspard, manager of Dow public relations.

Temperatures inside the tank rose, prompting Dow firefighters to pour water on the company ship for several hours Wednesday to prevent a potential explosion.

"It looks to be dwindling down," Freeport Police Chief Charles Bankston said. "The heat has risen and it got to be a dangerous situation."

Dow firefighters poured water on the ship until Wednesday evening, and subsequent readings showed that the tank had cooled somewhat, said Dow spokeswoman Margaret Gaspard. The ship is moored at the Plant A's dock just east of Freeport.

PUC: Potential conflicts of interest become issue with some senators

(From 1B)

But Sen. John Leedom, R-Dallas, praised Meek, who lives in his district. "I do think Mr. Meek will bring to the PUC an objective viewpoint," Leedom said.

Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur, said he suspects Meek has a pro-utility bias, but he voted to confirm him because he believes hefty rate increases such as those Houston Lighting & Power and Central Power & Light are requesting would help elect Democrats in November.

In electing Clements in 1986, Parker said, "The people have voted for the consumers to be had, and they're entitled to get what they voted for." He charged that Clements "appoints people who have a bias for the industry."

But Parker said Meek was probably the best choice that could be expected from the governor's office.

"I'm persuaded that Meek is a fine fellow personally. I think he's a little misguided, but you can't be the chief officer of a big oil company and not be misguided. I mean, chief executive officers of oil companies have not had any on-the-job training of protecting consumers," Parker said.

Meek has served as PUC chairman since November, but a recent legal opinion by Attorney General Jim Mattox would have made Meek and 75 other appointees ineligible to continue serving on state boards and commissions if they did not receive Senate approval in the next special session after their appointment.

The Nominations Committee passed over Dr. Jimmy L. Horner of Wise County, an appointee to the Structural Pest Control Board who did not show up for his hearing and has missed several of the board's meetings, Edwards said.

James Huffines, the governor's appointments director, said several law firms have offered to challenge Mattox's opinion, which overturned a long Senate tradition, and Horner's candidacy offered "the perfect vehicle," since his schedule prevents him from serving anyway.

In addition to the possible court challenge, Edwards has proposed a constitutional amendment, which the governor's office supports, to restore the practice of allowing appointees to serve through special sessions until the Senate acts upon the nomination.

The Senate also accepted Clements' withdrawal of the nomination of McAllen Mayor Othal Brand to the Agricultural Resources Protection Authority after he made a controversial remark playing down the danger of chlordane, a toxic termite poison.

Plainview native sworn in as deputy administrator at GSA

By James R. Owen
Reporter-Telegram Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Rebekah T. Johnson, a Plainview native and a former White House aide, was sworn in Wednesday as deputy administrator of the federal General Services Administration.

Johnson, 31, had been serving as acting deputy head of the agency since last October. As GSA's No. 2 official, she will help supervise the agency's $8.8 billion annual budget and its 20,000-member work force.

GSA, often described as the government's "landlord," is responsible for the federal government's supplies, telecommunications, data processing and transportation.

In a telephone interview following her swearing-in, Johnson described her new job as "one of the best assignments in the city for me."

Helping run the agency, she said, would be much like "running a large company."

A 1979 graduate of Baylor University in Waco, Texas, Johnson left Tiger Management Co., a New York management firm, in August 1987 to join President Bush's 1988 presidential campaign. She had served as chief financial officer for Tiger since January 1985.

Johnson remained in Bush's campaign and then joined the White House staff as a personnel aide, a job she said she planned to keep for no longer than 6 months.

"I was planning to go back into the private sector and buy a small company, ideally in the Panhandle of Texas," she said. "But when the GSA offer came along, it seemed like an exciting opportunity."

Johnson compared the large federal agency to a large private company, one that she acknowledged faces problems.

"GSA has gotten a bad rap over the past decade," she said, referring to widely publicized incidents of abuse and fraud at the agency.

"But when I got here, I was surprised to find a very dedicated work force.

$1 million bingo champ plans to keep working

ARLINGTON (AP) — A woman who won $1 million last weekend says her good luck won't change her longstanding priorities: work, prayer, family and bingo.

Ruby Jean Allen, 52, won the $1 million MegaBingo at the Choctaw Indian Bingo Palace in Durant, Okla. Ms. Allen said she will share her winnings with her sister, Willie Jean Howard.

"I was numb," Ms. Allen said. "I always wanted to buy me a house and be able to take care of my mom."

The million-dollar prize will be dispersed to Ms. Allen over a 25-year period. She'll get $100,000 this year and $37,500 annually for the next 24 years, the Fort Worth Star-Telegram reported Wednesday.

MegaBingo is played via satellite hookup.

She said she did not anticipate further well testing in the area, citing high testing costs. The TWC tested wells south of Interstate 20 and west of State Highway 349.

TWC District Manager William Lockey said results of tests of area caliche pits — including fish tissue samples — have not yet arrived.

Willie Nelson's picnic comes to Austin

AUSTIN (AP) — Willie Nelson's Fourth of July picnic is on the road again; this time to Austin's Zilker Park.

Over the years, the singer's Independence Day event has been held in a variety of locations and generally marred by problems. The picnic has not been held since 1987, when it drew only 8,000 people to Carl's Corner in North Texas.

But Wednesday, Austin Mayor Lee Cooke said his city would be happy to sponsor the event with the promise that $1 of every ticket sold would benefit a children's playground in the park.

"I say, welcome back, Willie," Cooke said.

Nelson, who is performing in Las Vegas, was not on hand for the announcement. He designated his daughter, Lana Nelson, as his representative.

This year promoters hope the picnic, which features mostly country and western music from local and nationally known artists, will draw a crowd of 30,000.

Months of work involved in 8½ minutes of glory

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — For all intents and purposes, it's a giant fuel can.

But the 154-foot tank that feeds NASA's space shuttle with liquid hydrogen and oxygen is nothing short of a technological marvel.

The tank funnels 535,000 gallons of fuel at a smooth, but frenzied clip to the shuttle's three engines during the first 8½ minutes of flight. Once its mission is completed, the $28.4 million tank is jettisoned and falls to earth at a predetermined spot in either the Indian or Pacific oceans. At the moment the tank is freed, the shuttle is 69 miles from Earth and moving skyward at 17,634 miles an hour.

The external fuel tank is a hulking mass of aluminum spacious enough to contain the Wright brothers' maiden flight, but as finely tuned as a Swiss watch. With walls less than a half-inch thick, it's made up of lightweight alloys, 481,450 parts, 38 miles of electrical wiring, 7,000 feet of safety wire, and 4,900 pounds of protective coating.

It is the largest and only expendable component of the shuttle system, the backbone to which the orbiter and two solid rocket boosters attach.

It takes 23 months to assemble a single tank, the creation and handiwork of Martin Marietta Manned Space Systems, a subsidiary of the Maryland-based aerospace and defense contractor.

Assembling a tank requires intensive labor skills that demand watchlike precision and ardent attention to detail. Hundreds of critical steps in the production process are noted in logs by workers and verified by inspectors. If the inspector finds a problem, the work is redone and inspected again. It is a rigorous, elaborate process designed to expose errors in a system that has no tolerance for flaws.

On an average day at NASA's Michoud Assembly Facility in eastern New Orleans, 11 tanks can be found in various stages of production. By the mid-1990s, Martin Marietta expects to resume production at pre-Challenger accident levels: 15 tanks on the line at once, with production time cut from 23 months to 17 months, as more workers are hired.

The tank has three distinct main parts — a liquid oxygen tank, a liquid hydrogen tank, and a cylinder into which the two fit.

It is the mixture of the two gases that helps propel the shuttle.

The upper tank, which houses the liquid oxygen, contains enormous baffles to limit the movement of the heavy oxygen that could tip the entire tank — and shuttle — off balance. The tank curves into a nosecone at the top to prevent aerodynamic drag, with a cast aluminum lightning rod at the very tip.

The intertank in the middle of the fuel tank serves as a connector for the self-contained oxygen and hydrogen tanks, as well as a storage compartment for instrumentation. A single, solid beam running through the intertank absorbs the 6.6 million pounds of thrust at liftoff.

The lower tank, containing the hydrogen, holds three times as much fuel, because the fuel mixture contains more hydrogen.

All that is wrapped up in an inch of protective coating, which provides insulation for the extreme cold of the hydrogen and oxygen, whose temperatures approach absolute zero. At the same time, the coating protects the tank from the intense heat of the launch, when temperatures approach 1,000 degrees.

Because the parts are so big, it takes a 43-acre indoor complex to build the tanks. A fleet of 700 bicycles helps move parts around, as do 80 overhead cranes.

Each section is X-rayed and tested beyond flight endurance standards. Once a section passes muster, it is X-rayed again, cleaned with special detergents, then moved to another part of the Michoud complex where it is sprayed with coating.

The two fuel tanks and intertank are connected, then exterior hardware and electrical connections installed.

The tanks remain at Michoud until space is available in the Vertical Assembly Building at Kennedy Space Center, where they are stockpiled with other shuttle parts. From Michoud's small port at the Mississippi River Gulf Outlet, the tanks are shipped on refurbished World War II barges with Quonset hut roofs.

Franklin against bald eagle symbol

CABALLO LAKE STATE PARK, N.M. (AP) — The bald eagle may be the symbol of the United States, but Benjamin Franklin argued that it was unworthy of national birdhood.

The bird, he said, was a "scavenger and thief" that would steal fish from the osprey — a poor attribute. He preferred the turkey.

The 2nd Continental Congress of 1782 overruled the elder statesman, and the bald eagle got its first official recognition.

The birds have been federally protected since 1940, when the National Emblem Act passed. They're also on federal endangered species lists but have been making a recovery since 1977 when the pesticide DDT was banned.

"There are more eagles now than there were 20 years ago at the height of the pesticide problems that really suppressed the eagle population," says state Game and Fish Department biologist Sandy Williams.

They're not bald. Their name derives from their white heads. Balde was an old English word for white. Their scientific name is Haliaeetus leucocephalus, or white-headed sea eagle.

They follow other marine birds inland to lakes, rivers and reservoirs in search of fish. The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service says Caballo Lake was the only confirmed nesting site of the bald eagle in New Mexico this year.

Up to 80 percent of a nesting bald eagle's prey is fish. They've been clocked at more than 100 mph diving for fish.

Newborns have a soft, thick down for their first three weeks, then a darker, more wool-like covering. Finally, that is replaced by dark feathers. Eaglets 11 to 13 weeks old begin flying but return to the nest for feeding and may hang around the nest for extended periods afterward, biologists say.

Immature bald eagles are mostly brown. The characteristic white heads and tails are attained by age 3 to 5.

Adult females exceed 2½ feet and weigh 10 to 15 pounds, while adult males measure a few pounds and inches less.

Shards of plaque may be at heart of Alzheimer's

By Natalie Angier
N.Y. Times News Service

A tiny shard of a protein so biochemically tough that it can hardly be dissolved, even in a test tube, may be at the heart of the extreme neurological degeneration and related symptoms of Alzheimer's disease.

In a series of papers published over the last few weeks in the journal Science and The Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences, and in reports that will be presented at a meeting in Toronto in July, scientists are casting important new light on the strange protein fragment, known as beta amyloid, and how a few small errors in protein metabolism may spawn a chain reaction of cell death.

Although some researchers reserve judgment, others predict the insights could result in new therapies against the disease.

The latest work strongly suggests that the abnormal accumulation of the protein fragments into stiff, rope-like patches throughout the brain is either a seminal event or one of the significant steps in the development of Alzheimer's.

Many of the researchers believe that these amyloid plaques destroy the surrounding brain tissue, thereby contributing to memory loss, confusion and other hallmarks of the progressive dementia.

Although researchers have known for some time that the plaques accumulate in the brains of people with Alzheimer's disease, they are now able to track the biochemical stages of their formation.

They have gained new clues into the role of the normal protein from which amyloid pieces break off, and they are learning how the presence of just a few protein tatters in the brain may trigger production of beta-amyloid plaques.

'If you could hold them in your hand, they would feel like Brillo pads.'

— Dr. Ralph Nixon, Amyloid expert, Harvard Medical School, Boston

"IN THE PAST year or two, I have seen a lot of my colleagues who were initially skeptical become convinced that amyloid deposits are important" to Alzheimer's disease, said Dr. Blas Frangione, professor of pathology and an amyloid researcher at New York University Medical Center.

Researchers first were drawn to study beta amyloid about six years ago, following the discovery of microscopic patches of what looked like hemp fibers in the autopsied brains of Alzheimer's patients.

When subjected to biochemical manipulations, the plaques proved surprisingly resistant to degradation. "If you could hold them in your hand, they would feel like Brillo pads," said Dr. Ralph A. Nixon, associate professor of psychiatry and an amyloid expert at Harvard Medical School and McLean Hospital in Boston.

Similar plaques also were detected in the autopsied brains of elderly people who had not had Alzheimer's, but they were much more prevalent in diseased brains.

Finally detangling the fibrous patches, scientists found a core of protein fragments surrounded by threadlike remnants of what looked like degraded brain cells.

Several years ago investigators determined that the fragments were short segments, measuring 42 protein subunits in length, that had snapped off a larger protein.

That parent molecule, called amyloid precursor protein, turned out to be about 15 times larger than the fragments in the plaques.

SCIENTISTS FURTHER discovered that the precursor protein is generated by most tissues of the body, including brain cells.

Within the last year or so, they have determined that it comes in at least four forms, and they suspect they play distinct roles in different organs. But until the latest research, they had no clues about what those roles might be.

New studies indicate that normal amyloid protein is vital to orchestrating the growth of cells. In a recent issue of Science, investigators at the University of California at Irvine reported evidence that platelets in the blood may release one kind of the protein at the site of a wound to help stimulate cell division and inhibit the activity of degrading enzymes as part of tissue repair.

And even newer studies indicate that another type of precursor protein may be able to spur the growth of neurons or their finger-like dendrites, although the results are fiercely debated.

The beta-amyloid fragments result from a miscut in the normal clipping of the bigger amyloid protein during its release from cells.

In a paper published in last month's Science, Dr. Sangram S. Sisodia, a molecular biologist at Johns Hopkins School of Medicine in Baltimore and his colleagues showed that, under ordinary circumstances, cells secrete about three-quarters of the precursor protein and clip it off in the middle of the final quarter.

THE RESEARCHERS demonstrated that the tiny beta-amyloid fragment is formed from that hindquarter region of the protein that is supposed to be clipped right in half.

"Normally, you should never get beta amyloid," said Sisodia. "That implies there is some abnormal mechanism by which the precursor protein is broken down in the brains of people with Alzheimer's."

Other researchers have begun to track the enzymes that could be behind the miscutting of amyloid protein. Scientists say that the new line of research holds the greatest promise for devising precise treatments against beta-amyloid formation.

Reporting in the May issue of Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences, Nixon and his colleagues have found active enzymes in the beta-amyloid deposits in Alzheimer's brains that are able to degrade proteins into the smallest possible pieces — just the size, says Nixon, of beta-amyloid fragments.

Exercise controls blood pressure, studies show

N.Y. Times News Service

Regular physical exercise can be as effective as medication in treating moderately high blood pressure, a new study has found.

The findings, being reported Wednesday in The Journal of the American Medical Association, show that previously sedentary people can safely bring moderately high blood pressure under control without drugs if they are willing to exercise vigorously for 50 minutes three or four times a week.

As an added benefit, the 10-week exercise program significantly lowered total cholesterol levels while increasing the protective high-density-lipoprotein cholesterol, which helps to cleanse the body of unwanted cholesterol.

On the other hand, one of the drugs studied, propranolol, lowered the high-density-lipoproteins, wiping out the benefit from the exercise program.

The research team, headed by Dr. Michael H. Kelemen, a cardiologist with the Columbia Plan, a group health practice, in Columbia, Md., also studied the effects of circuit weight training, a form of exercise against resistance using a series of weight machines.

In contrast to a regimen of lifting barbell-type free weights, these machines place moderate loads on the muscles and call for frequent repetitions.

The findings showed that, contrary to widespread concern, circuit weight training had no harmful effects on blood pressure in the 52 men who participated in the study.

In addition to weight training, the men did aerobic activities like walking, jogging or cycling in each exercise session.

The blood pressure reductions occurred even though the participants lost little or no weight and were told to continue their normal diets.

In an interview Wednesday, Kelemen said the findings did not mean there is no place for medications that lower blood pressure.

"We tested only those with moderate hypertension, who represent the vast majority of hypertensives," he said.

Study links infections to amniocentesis

N.Y. Times News Service

Children whose mothers had amniocentesis, a commonly used prenatal test for genetic defects, seem to have more frequent ear infections than those whose mothers did not, according to a study published in a British scientific journal earlier this year.

The study tracked 88 babies whose mothers had amniocentesis and 46 others whose mothers had not, and found that at age 4, 15.8 percent of the amniocentesis group had middle-ear abnormalities, as against 4.5 percent in the control group.

In addition, when questioned about their children's health, 75.3 percent of the mothers who had amniocentesis reported a history of ear infections in their children, as against 57.8 percent of the mothers who did not have the test.

"This still needs to be replicated in another study, and if it is, I would begin to feel comfortable about saying that amniocentesis does cause children to have more ear infections," said Dr. Jo-Anne Finegan, the lead researcher on the study conducted at The Hospital for Sick Children in Toronto.

Pediatricians in the United States said the idea that the test may be linked to ear infections is totally new and cautioned that women should not fear the test, generally recommended for women older than 35 or known to be at risk for genetic defects.

"This is the first time I've ever heard anything at all like this, and I'd want to see another study confirming it," said Dr. Birt Harvey, the president of the American Academy of Pediatrics. "In any case, it's important to remember both that amniocentesis can be a very useful tool and that with antibiotics, ear infections rarely cause any lasting problems."

Amniocentesis is usually performed in the middle trimester of pregnancy, when the middle-ear and eustachian tube structures of the fetus are developing.

In the test, a needle is inserted in the woman's abdomen and a small amount of the amniotic fluid is removed and analyzed.

Finegan's study, published in the British Journal of Obstetrics and Gynaecology in January, speculates that the fluid removal may lead to pressure changes in the ear that "perturb anatomical development."

Clements wants school finance pact before next session begins

By Rick Brown
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Gov. Bill Clements not only wants lawmakers back for a record sixth special session next week, he wants a school finance compromise struck and ready for approval beforehand, he said Wednesday.

That means Clements must resolve his conflicts with a Democratic majority of lawmakers, some of whom already are contemplating bills that take a step back from progress made in previous talks.

Meanwhile, a court master is scheduled to release his school finance proposals Friday, an event minority lawmakers hope will strengthen their negotiating hand.

Wednesday, House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Rep. James Hury, D-Galveston, said talks among state leaders are focusing on a sticking point in previous discussions: the amount of money needed to solve school finance and other woes next fiscal year.

"What we hope to do this time is arrive at a number and then figure out how to get there," he said.

Hury indicated that $700 million is one amount under consideration. Some lawmakers want to provide $550 million for schools and an additional $150 million for human service agency budget shortfalls that are deemed critical.

However, Clements said $550 million for both causes is "adequate to do what we need to do."

In addition to human service agency shortfalls and school finance, the governor said legislator ethics reform also is a likely candidate for the session agenda.

Hury said the $700 million total without question requires a half-cent increase in the state sales tax, an idea that Clements has vetoed once and consistently spoken against.

After the first veto, a second sales tax bill, the product of the past special session, currently sits on the governor's desk and for a certain number of days remains available for his signature until he vetos it.

Hury said action on the tax of some kind must occur by June 15 to garner the full amount needed.

The Legislature's last special session ended in the equivalent of a hung jury. House members Tuesday on a 92-55 vote failed to override a Clements veto and had no recourse but adjournment, House Speaker Gib Lewis said.

Wednesday, the Senate, which had successfully overridden the governor earlier, adjourned after disposing of a handful of pending nominations.

Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby gavels the Texas Senate to a close in the Capitol Wednesday, concluding the fifth special session of the 71st Legislature. The governor is expected to call lawmakers back for a record sixth session Monday to work on the school finance issue.

'What we hope to do this time is arrive at a number and then figure out how to get there.'

— House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Rep. James Hury

Clements said he "probably" will call the new session to begin on Monday. "Hopefully by Monday we will have a bill in good shape," he said.

But the chairman of the Senate Education Committee, Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur, and the chairman of the House Public Education Committee, Rep. Ernestine Glossbrenner, D-Alice, say they are contemplating filing separate bills that backtrack from previous negotiated postions.

Ms. Glossbrenner and Parker earlier had agreed to dilute the level of equity poorer districts would achieve in satisfying the Texas Supreme Court's landmark ruling on school finance.

But both the bills they are contemplating now would advance the original higher standard.

Parker acknowledged following such a course would increase the cost of the legislation.

He said his bill, which two-thirds of the 31 senators have agreed to co-sponsor, would cost $6.5 billion over the next five years. It calls for first-year aid at the $550 million level, he said.

Parker's legislation also includes an optional pre-kindergarten program for 3-year-olds and cedes to the governor the power to appoint the commissioner of education, he said.

Meanwhile, the chairman of the House Hispanic Caucus, Rep. Eddie Cavazos, D-Corpus Christi, said Hispanic and black members are taking "a three-day leave of absence" from the bargaining table.

They are waiting for former Supreme Court Justice Bill Kilgarlin, the special master, to announce the reforms he will recommend should the state fail to meet its court-imposed deadline.

Kevin O'Hanlon, the attorney defending the state, said Kilgarlin's plan may include caps on the amount of money wealthy districts spend on students and forced consolidations of districts for taxing purposes.

While lawmakers negotiate the amount of new state aid to send to schools, Kilgarlin's plan must require no additional aid, which could result in million-dollar losses in some districts.

Depending on the plan the master delivers, Cavazos said lawmakers may see Republican members not only voting for a tax bill, "but filing a tax bill and sponsoring a tax bill."

6th session one for history books

AUSTIN (AP) — When Gov. Bill Clements issues his promised call for another special session, it'll be one for the history books.

A sixth session would break the 60-year-old record for the number of special sessions convened. That mark was set in 1929-30 under Gov. Dan Moody's administration and tied when the current legislative session opened May 2.

"It's history," Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby said after the House voted to end its fifth special session and a sixth loomed. The Senate was scheduled to wrap up some work today on gubernatorial appointments, then adjourn as well.

But Hobby said he expects Clements to call lawmakers back to work quickly.

"I think the governor will call a session as soon as the Senate completes action," Hobby said.

Clements said Tuesday he would call a sixth session. He refused to say just when, but it could be next week.

"We will call the House and the Senate both back in session in due course. Just keep your shirt on."

Under the Texas Constitution, the Legislature's regular session is held for 140 days every odd-numbered year.

The current 71st Legislature met for its prescribed 140 days from January through May last year. The first special session — on workers compensation insurance — was held in June and July, although a second special session was needed in November and December to pass that bill.

Lawmakers then were called to the Capitol for their non-stop third, fourth and fifth special sessions beginning Feb. 27. All of those were called to address the Texas Supreme Court order to overhaul the public school finance system.

According to the Legislative Reference Library, the five 1929-30 special sessions discussed the state's "archaic prison system" and battled with Oklahoma over a 28,000-acre strip of land along the edge of the Texas Panhandle.

To cure absenteeism among restless House members, a resolution was passed in that session authorizing Texas Rangers and county sheriffs to arrest any lawmakers absent without a cause.

While House Speaker Gib Lewis didn't indicate that he was considering a similar measure for truant lawmakers, he did promise to keep them working until a school finance bill is approved.

"I'll stay here to the bitter end to try to do it," Lewis vowed.

Overnight storm destroys about 10 mobile homes

VALLEY VIEW (AP) — A tornado that ripped through a mobile home park near this town destroyed eight to ten homes and injured two people, Cooke County officials said Wednesday.

Royce Martin, Cooke County Justice of the Peace, said he was shocked Wednesday morning when he saw widespread damage from the tornado.

Royce said he and other emergency workers at the scene overnight originally underestimated damage because they were working without lights.

"This morning at daylight, I was very surprised and very thankful that there were not a lot more injuries," Martin said.

Martin said the area is "torn up."

"It's just a lot of twisted metal and two-by-fours, strung for miles," he said. "It was just a large tornado."

Martin said 80 to 90 percent of the homes in FRF Estates, a development located about 4 miles outside of Valley View, had sustained damage. Jo Ann Belz, who owns the FRF Estates with her husband Frank, said the park contains about 90 trailer homes.

Martin said some trailers had their roofs ripped off. One was destroyed by a fire that started after the home was damaged by the storm. Brick houses built near the trailer park also sustained damage, he said.

"All of it's damaged. In fact, we had one well-built brick home out there. It was two-story, and it took the whole top story off," Martin said.

Martin also said that several barns, homes and trees had been damaged in the city of Valley View, a rural farm community about 50 miles north of Dallas.

He said several hundred workers, along with Red Cross volunteers, turned out Wednesday to help clean up the damage.

Cooke County Sheriff John Aston said he only knew of five completely destroyed homes and one injury, although he said he expected more damage to be found later.

Aston said four of the homes were demolished by winds, while one burned in a fire possibly caused by an electrical short as a result of storm damage.

He said the only reported injury was a broken arm suffered by a juvenile boy. He said at least eight families are being housed in a shelter set up by the Red Cross.

2 teen girls wanted to 'mother' baby

GRAND PRAIRIE (AP) — Two teen-age girls who allegedly took a 3-month-old baby from a flea market told police they wanted to mother a baby, an investigator says.

The girls, who were released to the custody of their families Tuesday night, could face kidnapping charges in the abduction of Crystal Lee Grau from outside a flea market stall here Monday. The baby was found unharmed less than an hour later.

"All I can come up with is they wanted to take care of a baby," Grand Prairie police Det. Ron Siebert told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram in Wednesday's editions. "It just doesn't make sense. Going over it in my mind, what were they going to tell their mothers?"

The 14- and 15-year-olds told Siebert they thought the baby had been abandoned.

"Their story is they walked by and asked some people nearby who the baby belonged to, and the people said the baby had been sitting there all day," he said.

He said the abduction apparently was unplanned.

The baby's mother, Tammy Brown of Arlington, said she left the child outside a flea market stall and asked her boss to keep an eye on her. When she returned from another stall 50 feet away, the baby was missing.

Ms. Brown said she saw some girls walking away with a baby carrier but did not realize they were carrying her daughter until she discovered the baby missing. She ran after the girls but lost them in a crowd.

Another flea market vendor said she saw the teen-agers leaving with the baby and became suspicious because she had noticed the girls earlier and remembered they did not have a baby with them.

She took down the license number of the truck the girls got into and turned it over to police. Police found the truck and the baby less than an hour later at the home of one of the teen-agers.

The teen-agers had bought diapers and milk for Crystal.

The mother of one girl said she didn't question her daughter about the baby at first.

"The kids came in the house and told the mom they found the baby and were going to take care of it," Siebert said. "The mother was real sick and she didn't really know what was going on."

By the time the mother realized the seriousness of the situation, police had arrived at the house.

Kimberly Deckard, a 19-year-old Abilene native charged in the kidnapping of a Waxahachie infant, is taken to the Taylor County Jail in Abilene Tuesday night after she surrendered to Abilene police earlier that afternoon.

Baby's mom still upset at abductor

WAXAHACHIE (AP) — A 14-year-old mother reunited with her kidnapped week-old baby says she wants to spend as much time with her child as possible.

Michelle Hughes, who was reunited with her son early Wednesday, also said she can sympathize with the woman who took her son from a Waxahachie hospital last week, but she's still upset.

"I am a little bit mad for her taking her because that put me through a lot of pressure," she said Tuesday night.

Kimberly Denise Deckard, 19, of Dallas, turned the baby over to Abilene authorities late Tuesday after an arrest warrant was filed for kidnapping, Abilene police said. She was released Wednesday after posting $50,000 bond.

Federal authorities speculated that Ms. Deckard may have had a miscarriage and took the child to compensate for her loss.

The baby, Davian Jamal Hughes, was returned to his mother in Waxahachie at about midnight Wednesday after officers matched up the baby's footprints.

Davian Jamal was taken from Baylor Medical Center in Waxahachie last Friday by a woman who posed as a friend of the family. He was 2 days old.

Officials at Baylor Medical Center in Waxahachie said the baby appeared to be in good health after undergoing a complete physical, and was sent home with his mother early this morning.

"We all feel like we're guardian angels of the baby," nursing supervisor Debby Simon said. "I'm tickled pink and everyone here at the hospital is real happy for Michelle and her family."

Clovis residents unite in grief at missing boy's funeral service

CLOVIS, N.M. (AP) — More than 700 people who had helped search for Matthew Roberts helped lay the 6-year-old to rest Wednesday a week after his body was found in a car parked outside the family's home.

A Mass of Resurrection was held at Our Lady of Guadalupe Catholic Church.

"Matthew loved to play with his dogs. He loved Sesame Street," Art Smith, a close friend of the Roberts family said during one eulogy. "We can all take Matthew's lesson to enjoy the simple things in life."

Parents Geoff and Debbie Roberts fought back tears as a police officer carrying a portrait of their blond, blue-eyed son entered the church in front of those carrying the boy's tiny white casket.

"The whole community of Clovis searched and prayed and hoped that we could find Matthew," the Rev. Victorin J. Bachus told the hundreds of citizens who packed the church to pay final respects.

"Every member of this community must now accept the will of God and accept that Matthew is gone," he said.

Matthew's body was found May 23 in a rear storage compartment of a station wagon parked outside his family's home by passersby.

An autopsy revealed Matthew, who disappeared May 8, had been dead inside the car for at least eight days. No signs of foul play were found, but a cause of death has not yet been determined. Police Chief Caleb Chandler says results from medical and criminal examinations would probably not be available until late next week.

As John Lennon's "Imagine" played, friends of Matthew placed roses atop his casket. Some whispered messages to him.

Choir members sang several songs paying homage to Matthew including a hymn dedicated to his parents titled, "Peace is Flowing Like a River."

As the melody filled the church, Matthew's mother leaned over and embraced her husband, unable to fight back tears any longer.

At the conclusion of a graveside remembrance later in the day, Mrs. Roberts put her arms around the casket and weeping loudly, said: "I love you, Matthew."

On Wednesday night, more than 1,000 community members gathered before a brilliantly painted sky at the Clovis High School football stadium to pay final tribute to Matthew.

City leaders including Mayor James B. Moss and Matthew's Highland Elementary School principal, Grace Jones, recalled Matthew and said his presence will never be forgotten.

Moss declared May 20-27 Missing Children's Recognition Week in Clovis.

Dick Ross, Clovis police chaplain, asked community members to use Matthew as a positive force as the city moves on.

"We need to develop a neighborhood watch," Ross said. "Let's take all of our anger, hurt and feelings and turn them into a mountain of possibilities of what we can still do. Matthew will be our symbol."

Residents said Matthew's disappearance brought every segment of the city together as never before. More than 10,000 people had joined a citywide search, knocking on doors, inspecting alleys and combing through trash bins looking for him.

But as his tiny coffin was lowered into the ground Wednesday, residents said they would not be able to rest easy until the cause of death is determined.

"I believe there is still fear in the community," said 34-year-old Murge Mileg, who with her husband and 7-year-old son attended the funeral. "Until it is completely cleared up, there will be fears. As parents, it is only human nature to react that way."

Petition seeks further investigation

CLOVIS, N.M. (AP) — More than 1,100 people signed petitions asking Attorney General Hal Stratton to investigate the death of a 6-year-old Clovis boy whose body was found in the storage compartment of a station wagon.

Clovis Police Chief Caleb Chandler said Wednesday his department is trying to determine whether Matthew Robert's death was accidental or the result of foul play. But he also said police have found nothing to indicate foul play.

"These people who are signing the petition are not trying to make trouble," said Carol Rollins, a Clovis grocery store manager who started the petition drive last Friday.

"We're not questioning our police department. We're questioning the loose ends," she said. "This has been something sad that shook the entire community. All the people worked together to try to find Matthew. Now we're all pulling together to find out why he died."

Stratton said Wednesday he had not seen the petition, but his office would look at the request the same as it would any request.

Chandler said he would be happy to involve any law enforcement agency in the investigation.

Matthew was found dead the evening of May 23. He had run out of the family home, apparently to follow his mother to the store, on May 8 and never returned.

Investigators determined he had been dead at least eight days. He was dressed in the clothes he wore when he disappeared.

Police said Wednesday the Office of the Medical Investigator in Albuquerque ruled out various causes of death, including gunshot wound, stab wound or trauma caused by blunt force.

Hostage situation ends in Tyler

TYLER (AP) — A man who took a woman hostage at a clinic in Tyler Wednesday is the same man who in 1986 held a flight attendant hostage aboard a jetliner carrying 200 people that landed in Dallas, authorities said.

The suspect, Ralph Adolphus Hughes, 38, was in serious condition at a Tyler hospital late Wednesday, suffering from apparently self-inflicted knife wounds, officials said.

Police tactical units knocked out a window and stormed the clinic after Hughes took a female employee hostage. The woman was identified as Barbara Shamburger, wife of Smith County Commissioner Jerry Shamburger.

Big Brothers/Big Sisters Bachelor Auction planned

By Linda Anderson
Staff Writer

This week, many young women's fancy will turn to the fourth annual Bachelor Auction, a fund-raiser for Big Brothers/Big Sisters.

During the auction, several of Midland's most eligible bachelors — along with their date packages — are auctioned off to the highest bidder. Each successful bidder purchases the right to be escorted on one of these dates by that specific bachelor.

This year the date packages include trips to Cancun, Mexico; Lake Lyndon B. Johnson; Ruidoso, N.M.; and San Antonio; dinners at fabulous restaurants and evenings at the theater; and even a ride in a hot air balloon.

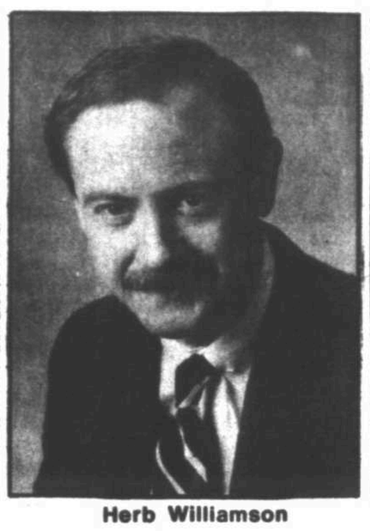
Money raised by the event will help "match more of the children on the waiting list" to Big Brothers or Big Sisters, said Linda Macias, executive director of the agency. "We have 130 kids on the waiting list, and we just received another 63 (names of) kids from MISD (Midland Independent School District) that we're processing."

The Big Brothers/Big Sisters program pairs children from single-parent homes with adult volunteers who help these children through the growing-up process.

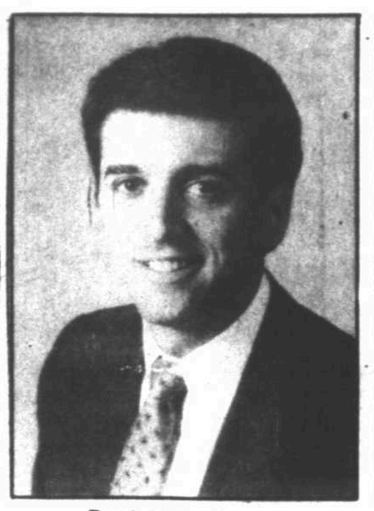
The volunteers are "to be a friend and a mentor" for the children they are paired with, Ms. Macias said, "not a surrogate parent or a psychiatrist."

Mark Lancaster

Steve Green



Herb Williamson



Paul Belvedere

Mark Fleming

THE BIG Brothers and Big Sisters are to "be a positive role model" for the children, added Rick Davis, fund-raising chairman for the auction.

"We hope to raise approximately $20,000," Davis said.

Funds raised by the auction enable the agency to "screen volunteers, recruit them and match them with the kids as soon as possible," Ms. Macias said.

The auction benefits the Big Brothers/Big Sisters program in more than money, because each year "some of the bachelors end up being volunteers in the program," she said. And each year, Ms. Macias said she definitely gets more inquiries from bachelors wanting to participate in the auction.

"We have 41 guys this year," Ms. Macias said. "We had to turn guys away. We're still getting calls. We kept a list for next year — we've got them in writing."

Bachelor's in this year's auction include:

■ Mark Lancaster, 33, a sales man for Executone. A member of Big Brothers/Big Sisters, Lancaster's date package is a sports weekend in Arizona, Arkansas or Nevada, playing golf, tennis or other sports activity.

■ Steve Green, 36, is the basketball coach at Howard College. His date package is "breakfast at Denny's in Midland, snack in Dallas, lunch and dinner in PUCO!" — three days and two nights in Acupulco.

■ Herb Williamson, 41, executive vice president and director of Parker and Parsley Petroleum Company, has a date package that includes four days and three nights in Cancun.

■ Paul Belvedere, 27, a geologist with Arco Oil and Gas, will take his date to "beautiful San Antonio — City of Romance" on a double date with bachelor Charles Viktorian and his successful bidder.

■ Mark E. Fleming, 23, petroleum engineer with Chevron USA, will also escort his successful bidder to San Antonio, where they will visit Sea World, the San Antonio Zoo and the Alamo.

OTHER BACHELORS to be auctioned are Donald Abel, Richard Stafford, Ken Dixon, Tim Dowdel, Jon Andrews, Charles Walne, Wade Fouts, Mike Conaway, Rod Slaton, Patrick Galvin, Edgar Yzquierdo, Bill Rutter, Steve Owen, Scott Wieditz, Jerry Griffith, Cody Bell III, Bob Solis, Cliff Moskal, Jim Hollis, Scott Aycock, Kevin Widner, Dean Eiland, Joe Sena, David Johnston, Jan Bass, Rick Villarreal, Stephen H. Deshaw, Jim King, Mike Leman, Ed Rowland, Lyndon R. Marquez, Ric Garza and Steve Salter.

A drawing will be staged for dates with two bachelors, Kirk Thurman and Larry Wollschlager.

Soap-bubble bottle 'hottest' new fashion accessory

N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — "It's the hottest thing since the mood ring," said Allen Yallouz, vice president of sales for Gigi Accessories.

It is the Giggler, a bottle of soap-bubble solution suspended from a black silk cord. The cap unscrews to become a bubble wand.

His company, one of the accessories wholesalers that carry the product, has been shipping thousands of the bubble bottles to stores across the country.

Yallouz said rock singer Madonna is partly responsible for the fad.

"She had the original one in sterling silver," he said.

She was seen wearing it on a television appearance.

"We sold 1,200 in one week," he said.

No wonder — they are available in just about every department or specialty store across Los Angeles and beyond.

The domestically made item comes in several sizes. The largest, about 2 inches, sells for a suggested retail price of $20.

This year's swimsuits offer elegance and flattering details. Shown is the waist-minimizing one-piece suit by Robby Len.

Retro swimwear offers an alternative in style

By Francine Parnes
Associated Press

Each year about this time millions of mirror-shy women scan swimwear departments for that half-yard of fabric that allows their bodies to withstand public scrutiny with dignity.

This year, fashion forward string beans as well as women of a certain girth will be able to look into the mirror with much the same confidence as their more perfect sisters. For this is the year of retro swimwear. Signaling a return to more generous and forgiving coverage, these figure-friendly suits offer the best of flattering styles from the 1940s and '50s.

The halter tops, high waists, longer leg cut, shirring and draping come straight from the era of the renowned movie queens. And the look is gaining acceptance from all fronts as customers realize that what was good enough for Monroe, Hayworth and Grable is good enough for them.

ASIDE FROM the fact that these suits cover more skin, many designers say the operative word is construction. Some suits have girdle-like panels of spandex to help create at least the illusion of an hourglass figure.

With the current fashion focus on the bosom, many suits feature underwire, boning or constructed bras. Gottex has distinguished itself as a leader in offering a wide variety of suits with built-in bras.

"These suits are not for ladies who want to minimize their bosom," says Lisa Butler, design director for Rose Marie Reid Swimwear and Bill Blass Beachwear.

Butler says one-piece maillots in the Rose Marie Reid line are selling four times faster than two-piece styles. "The emphasis now," she says, "is on the three C's: control, coverage and camouflage."

Jantzen offers a new line designed specifically to build up a flattering figure. It includes suits with a "power net lining" for abdominal control to those with padded bras for a more bosomy look.

"A major difference in the current suits is the technology in the last 50 years," says Norma Kamali, whose most popular group is made from a soft, draped polyester jersey.

Available in a wide variety of colors, the group includes retro looks such as skirted ruffle swimsuits with halters and one-shoulder long-line maillots. Many of the suits generously cover the top of the thigh.

OTHER RETRO styles include split skirts with high-banded waists, recalling the tap pants worn by Ruby Keeler and Eleanor Powell. Palm Point offers one in purple and white print with a bandeau top through J.C. Penney.

One of the most authentic blasts from the past comes from Esther Williams, the legendary Hollywood bathing beauty, who has created the Esther Williams Collection for Misty Swimwear. A best-seller is a two-piece nylon-spandex swimsuit in white or black with a shirred halter and a classic high-waisted sheath bottom.

Recognizing that "a swimsuit is the least amount of clothing you'll ever wear in public," Williams likes to jazz it up. She has recreated the age of glamour with a "Million Dollar Mermaid" collection that features sequins, rhinestones, panne velvet and embroidery.

THE WOMAN who favors the retro look spans a wide age range. "She can be 27 and say 'It's new and different,' or 60 and say 'I remember it,'" says Jon Rogoff, senior vice president for Excelsior Inc., manufacturer of the Esther Williams line.

Hiding figure flaws can be retro swimwear's biggest advantage. "At 45, I want to cover as much as I can," says Kamali.

What some women are balking at, however, is the suit cut low on the leg. Many customers find the straight cut doesn't flatter or elongate the leg, says Janet Stahnke, manager of women's swimwear at Jantzen. "We're only going with a lower leg for our older customer who's used to it," she says.

FOR THOSE WHO seek a retro flavor but desire a skimpier style, there's a '60s look from the likes of Ocean Pacific, Hot Coles and Citrus. It includes brilliant tie-dyes, psychedelic swirls, day-glo neons, peace symbols and flower power daisies.

The current crop of swimwear proves that in the world of style, what's old is new, and what goes around comes around.

Says Norma Kamali: "The biggest challenge in the whole fashion industry is coming up with a bathing suit."

After all, there's only so much you can do to make a half-yard of fabric look new.

Be suitably attired for water fun

By Trish Barr
Copley News Service

The tide of fashion is running high in swimwear for summer 1990. Streamlined, sleek silhouettes are sexy yet functional, whether it be a sophisticated maillot or a slick, skimpy bikini.

As in spring ready-to-wear, life at the beach offers a treasure chest full of choices for women. Fashion waves are rippling in myriad styles that shape and sculpt, patterned by animal magnetism and blazing brights.

Wild things roar on tanks, two-pieces, maillots and bikinis in the richest browns and brightest neons. The newest way to show them is to juxtapose flora with fauna, like zebra stripes with air-brushed blooms.

Primitive patterning inspires ethnic looks with influences from Indo-African tribal crafts like woodblocking, batik and ikat.

Colossal color will be blazing on beaches in brights that contrast and clash when stacked in blocks or scattered in prints. The hottest new color is "limon," a lemon-lime. Other delectable shades include mango, tangerine, persimmon and every berry under the sun.

REMINISCENT OF the '60s are brilliant tie-dyed looks; spray paint; sponge, roller and marbleized prints; and splatter overlays. Flower power is everywhere in daisy florals, psychedelic swirls and free-roaming dots and dashes.

There's even a suit that changes color. When dry or cold, the Mood Suit by Dunk-Is Swimwear is one color; warm or wet it's another. So the wearer can create the look of two suits by sunning in one color and swimming in another.

A variety of silhouettes includes sleek and bare with wide-shoulder, off-shoulder and one-shoulder cuts. In sculpting a beautiful body, the emphasis is on the bust; and tops are pleated, tucked, shirred, twisted, stitched and seamed. Bra cups are molded, underwired, overwired, boned or center-wired in V or U shapes. It's the season of the bandeau, twisted, sculpted, tied in a bow or laced up.

CNS Photo

The look of the islands is captured in this red floral swimwear ensemble of tie-front top, bikini bottom and sarong.

THERE'S A broad range of styles in bottoms. The high-waisted brief is strong, and various versions of the thong are showing up as sunbathers become braver about skin-baring. For the woman who wants to take cover, below-the-waist camouflaging highlights pretty skirts in sheath, flounce, ruffle or skater's silhouettes. A demure skirted look can sometimes be as provocative as a bikini.

On the one-piece front, maillots are popular, either strapless or with wider straps, and sweetheart styles are a favorite, especially those wired at the top. Feeling chunky in a suit? The Slimsuit by Carol Wior is guaranteed to make a woman lose an inch or more off the waist and stomach. A special piece of elasticized Lycra spandex fabric stretches around the body to lift and hold the figure, smoothing out unwanted bulges.

Special detailing adds interest. Zippers, sheers, girlish ruffles, shirring (not only fanciful but flattering), lace, perky piping, plunging necklines, cutout back treatments, bows, textured fabrics, metal studs and hardware, all add zest.

EMBELLISHED SUITS may be inspired by exotic locales like Istanbul, Marrakech and New Delhi. A major influence is the belly dancer: Suits are accented with coins, tiny metal balls, fringe and tassels, along with bright bands of colors and metallic threads.

There's even a bridal look. Bodacious Bodies presents a rhinestone-studded, ribbon-embroidered white maillot with a small bustle in back and available in white or black.

In fabric news, Antron nylon gives soft sheen and unbeatable color, and Lycra spandex gives a figure-flattering second-skin fit. Dacron polyester, cotton and Lycra also make stellar suits. Two new swim fabrics are Waterbrite, which offers super-bright color in solids and prints, and Waterplush, a sensuous fluid fabric with a buttery soft touch.

For her Body Glove line, Robin Piccone makes innovative use of neoprene, molding to the body's natural curves as well as creating the illusion of the classic hourglass figure.

This year's suits, particularly the maillot, go far beyond the beach, becoming real pieces of clothing worn with pleated pants, a sarong or slim, long skirt slit to the thigh, or the newer wide-bodied evening trouser.

Many swimwear collections have expanded separates to include dressy sheer shirtings, caftans and hostess ensembles, making swimwear well-suited to any occasion.

Splashy colors dot playful children's swimwear

By Jane Clifford
Copley News Service

Summer's coming. And that means swimsuits. It's a subject many women may not like to think about, and that's OK, because this is about children's swimwear.

Demand really kicks in in May, say retailers, and they're ready.

The forecast: hot and bright, says Marie Joyce from Nordstrom. Lots of neon — pinks, greens, oranges, yellows and blues — in both suits and accessories.

And lots of suits to choose from.

Harold Palmer, a boyswear buyer at JCPenney, says his store alone will ring up about 2,500 suits between now and July, at the average price of $16. And, if you think boys' suits are all the same — endless variations on the boxer-type trunks — well, you're kind of right.

But this year, he says, the trend for boys is something called "the pieced look," where different types of material and colors are actually pieced together — a wide, black elastic waistband with bottoms that are a combination of solid-color panels.

There's also new fabric in suits, something called supplex. Palmer says it's mostly nylon but feels like cotton. It's very lightweight, comfortable and fast-drying.

Also new for boys is their interest in accessories, he says. They want sunglasses, caps and, above all, waist packs, all in bright colors that coordinate with tank tops or swim trunks.

GIRLS' SWIMWEAR styles this year won't show drastic changes, but they will be pretty much the opposite from boys' suits, says Allison Hiramoto, girlswear buyer for Nordstrom's.

"They want the dynamic, all-over prints," she says. Geometric prints, slashes of color on bright solid backgrounds. In neon, of course.

"Neon is a trend thing, but it's also a safety thing," says Lori Wisner, senior merchandise manager at JCPenney. "You can see your kid in the water."

Girls also want more one-piece suits. And the mono-kini (the one-piece suit that looks like a bikini with its cutout middle) is really popular.

Unlike boys' swimwear, buyers say, styles for girls are heavily influenced by what older girls and women are wearing, by what young girls see on their favorite TV stars and in magazines.

Hiramoto says she learns a lot about what to buy from spending time on the sales floor, listening to her customers. She's learned that they don't want anything too juvenile; and this year, they don't want a lot of ruffles and other decorative additions to the basic sleek suit.

Like all swimsuit buyers, she started building her inventory last October and is stocked with 1,000 suits ranging in price from $16 to a $40 model with a designer label Mom will recognize.

THE SWIMSUIT season is short. Manufacturers already are done making them and orders have long since been filled.

And the buyers' work is done. All they can do is hope they've gotten enough of what it is the kids will want. The name of the game now is sell. And the target is as much the child as the parent.

"For the most part, the kids have their own identity," says Wisner from JCPenney. "They know who they are and what they want."

These are the littlest consumers. They don't have their own money to spend, but they definitely know what they like.

Palmer's seen them. Penney's carries the Sesame Street line. And it's not unusual for a 2-year-old to toddle over to the rack and pick out a bathing suit with Big Bird on it. Her mother may have had something else in mind, but she's not likely to convince the kid.

Palmer, who anticipates being a parent one day, says he's picked up some valuable lessons by observing his customers: "I've learned that the kids usually win out, so you might as well face that up front and buy it."

Help hair overcome ravages of summer

NEW YORK (AP) — Hair, like skin, needs extra protection from sun, sea and chlorine of summer. Whenever possible, keep the hair covered.

A good conditioner acts as a sun screen, protecting and moisturizing the hair. At the beach, a conditioner is even more important because salt water intensifies the sun's rays, according to Dan Garvey of Supercuts, based San Raphael, Calif.

Garvey says chlorine also damages hair, sometimes making normal hair behave as if it were colored or bleached. Before going into the pool, he suggests wetting the hair with fresh water. To keep hair moist, use a spray bottle of water throughout your stay.

Use a conditioner before swimming. It will protect hair and won't allow chlorine to attach. After leaving the pool, shampoo, rinse and condition.

Sun-washed colors fashionable

By Deborah Hofmann
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — Sun-bleached colors are this season's way for men to ease into warm-weather dressing, retailers in the New York area say.

Country Road Australia — a Melbourne clothing store with outlets at 335 Madison Ave. (43d street) and 199 Water St., at the South Street Seaport — sells a beige sand-washed cotton anorak with a cocoa lambskin suede collar ($225).

It looks casually correct over the store's washed-cotton shirts ($68) or cotton sweaters ($65), in faded mango or paprika, or linen-cotton V-neck sweaters ($128) in limestone or olive.

To complete the look, there are neutral linen trousers ($118) or cotton shorts with patch pockets ($68) and soft suede sneakers ($38) or boots ($138).

At Down Home America, 1367 Third Ave. (78th Street), a cotton baseball jacket by Bad Guys ($175) looks fresh in muted blueberry, burnt orange or chartreuse.

An unconstructed linen blazer by Tom Tailor in mustard, celery or basic black ($175) will lend a crisp springy feeling to almost any shirt.

Unmatched linen slacks and jackets are a popular choice at the Frank Stella boutiques, 1382 Avenue of the Americas (56th Street), 440 Columbus Ave. (81st Street) and 1329 Third Ave. (76th Street).

An unconstructed jacket looks new in chartreuse or moss ($200), as do trousers in toast, sage or mustard ($85 to $135). Both also come in black.

For a head-to-toe look — or a fresh accent for year-round grays — search out the sun-faded shades at the To Boot boutiques, at 520 Madison Ave. (53d street) and 256 Columbus Ave. (72d Street) and in Bergdorf Goodman.

Bucks or penny loafers in nubuck, a closely shaved suede, come in mustard, olive, celadon, sienna and khaki ($150 to $195). Slip-ons and moccasins in finely woven vegetable-dyed leather look luxuriously relaxed ($175 to $225).

If your first spring purchase is always a tie, the choice is wide.

At the J. McLaughlin stores — 1343 Third Ave. (76th Street), 976 Second Ave. (51st Street) and 1311 Madison Ave. (92d Street), and 81 Main St. in Westport, Conn. — floral ties in sportswear fabrics like washed cotton, chambray and linen by Tango and Liberty of London have been quick sellers, said Kevin McLaughlin, an owner. All are $20.

Carlos Falchi, known mainly for his leathers, is introducing his ties to the United States this spring.

In one version a large pineapple, a lemon and cherries are stenciled in fuchsia on a periwinkle field, or in muted grape on a mustard background.

Another tie displays large violets shaded in pink on a black field; a variation is a blurry watercolor version, on tan.

These ties are flights of fancy, and quite possibly conversation starters, but what could be more appropriate for going coatless on a spring day?

'Fashionable tan' often is road to skin cancer

By Mike Leggett
N.Y. Times News Service

Scan the evening shift of faces lining the bar at any Gulf Coast watering hole on a summer's night and you can pretty much pick the social status and fishing rank of the ones that scan back.

GUIDES: They're the dark-skinned ones with collars turned up and raccoon-patterned white masks produced by the sunglasses that now hang from Croakies around their necks.

COMMERCIAL FISHERMEN: They're the guys in white rubber boots, maybe shorts, but suntanned almost black by constant exposure. Not many sunglasses here.

TOURISTS: Easiest of all to identify. Shorts, sport shirts and neon sunburns, often already peeling across the shoulders.

All three groups have one thing in common, besides the need for a cool drink at the end of the day. They each are charting their own special course down the road toward skin cancer. Maybe they'll make it, maybe they won't.

"You're born with so much time in the sun before you get a skin cancer and that's determined by your parents," said dermatologist Dr. Dale Schaefer. It's sort of like a savings account. When you've used up the interest, you start grinding down the principal.

Except when these overdraft notices arrive, they come in the form of skin cancers: basal cell carcinoma, squamous cell carcinoma and the deadly malignant melanoma.

Ultraviolet light is the culprit, Dr. Schaefer said. "What it does to damage the skin is reorder the DNA in the cells and as they try to rearrange themselves, that's what causes the skin cancer."

Ultraviolet light in the "B" range is worst. It causes sunburns. The light that induces your skin to tan is UV-A, Dr. Schaefer said, but that doesn't mean there is no damage. The persistent belief that a tan is an indicator of wellness is just plain wrong. "A tan is not healthy," Dr. Schaefer said. "A tan is a sign your body is trying to protect itself from the sun."

Skin damage due to sun exposure is a cumulative thing, Dr. Schaefer said. "You're talking about all the damage you've sustained since you were born. That's why it's important for parents to begin using sunscreen on their kids to limit damage now. Eighty percent of the damage to your skin you'll receive by the age of 18 years."

For some individuals, that means they've pretty much exhausted their allotted time in the sun almost before their lives have begun. From that point on, they're playing a deadly game of Russian roulette with a tube of sunscreen.

And more and more Americans are running out of time at an early age. Dr. Schaefer said in the past year he's treated an 18-year-old girl and a 19-year-old boy with skin cancers. Where skin cancer used to be thought of as a disease that struck in middle-age or later, now it's a disease of the young due to chronic sun exposure.

"You've got a whole generation right now that thinks tanning is great," Dr. Schaefer said. "You still hear about people having tanning contests. Our perceptions of beauty and our perceptions about the way we look are very strong emotions."

The search for beauty, though, has taken a beastly twist for Americans. Some statistics from the American Academy of Dermatology indicate just how deadly and damaging sun exposure has become:

In 1935, the lifetime probability of an individual developing malignant melanoma was about 1 in 1,500. In 1990, the figure has increased by 1,500 percent to 1 in 125. It's expected to be 1 in 90 by the end of the decade.

There will be 600,000 new cases of skin cancer diagnosed this year, though that's considered a gross underestimate.

There will be 27,600 new cases of malignant melanoma in 1990, with 25 percent of those cases in individuals under 39 years of age.

One in seven Americans will develop skin cancer in their lifetime and the number is growing by 3.4 percent annually.

One serious childhood or adolescent sunburn doubles the chances of developing skin cancer, especially melanoma.

Doctors lately have come to believe, Dr. Schaefer said, that melanoma (the most deadly of skin cancers) is related to serious sunburns, especially among the young. The more easily treatable basal cell carcinoma and squamous cell carcinoma result from chronic exposure of the sort hunters and fishermen sustain.

All are successfully treatable, though, if discovered and treated quickly, Dr. Schaefer said. Prevention is the key to skin cancer, Dr. Schaefer said, starting with a sunscreen with an SPF (sun protection factor) of at least 15. Clothing that reduces exposure and a hat to cover the head and face are very important.

Dr. Schaefer recommends monthly checks of each family member for any sign of skin cancer, including changes in warts or moles and new growths. Individuals in the high-risk category should be especially wary. Those would include anyone with fair skin who sunburns easily; outside workers exposed to considerable sunlight; anyone who had severe childhood sunburns, unusual moles or a genetic intolerance for the sun.

The genetic link can't be ignored, either. If one or both your parents have suffered skin cancers, you're probably at a higher risk, Dr. Schaefer said. If you have a question, see a dermatologist quickly.

"You don't have to alter your lifestyle at all except for putting on a good sunscreen," Dr. Schaefer said.

DEAR ABBY

Woman wants to know if it's what's up front that counts

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I have three questions for you:

1. Do men feel deceived if a woman wears a padded bra, giving the impression that she's a 34B when she is only a 32A?
2. Do men get more sexual excitement and fulfillment from full-breasted women?
3. How do men feel about "augmented" breasts? — FLAT IN FLATBUSH

Van Buren

DEAR FLAT: One cannot generalize about what "all men" find sexually appealing, but most sexologists concur that the size of a woman's breasts has little to do with male sexual fulfillment.

I doubt if most men care whether breasts have been surgically augmented or not. (Some may not even know the difference.)

A woman who has always felt that she had less to offer because she was flat-chested is likely to feel a surge of self-confidence if she has breast-augmentation surgery. However, if she finds that due to her new look, she's getting attention from men who previously ignored her, she will not soon forget the depth of their shallowness.

DEAR ABBY: Why are so many men against marriage? I hear these negative attitudes from all kinds of people, including comedians, television personalities and even family members. They all say, "Don't get married; you'll regret it." Doesn't anyone believe in marriage anymore?

I'm 23 years old and have a lot going for myself. I have dated a number of men, none of whom mentioned marriage. A year ago, I met a wonderful man whom I've been dating ever since. I love him very much, and he says he loves me, but these same negative attitudes about marriage are also part of his philosophy. (He practically left skid marks on my carpet when I asked him if we were ever going to get married!) What am I supposed to do? — F.I. IN QUEENS

DEAR F.I.: Leave him — before he leaves you.

DEAR ABBY: My cousin and his wife were driving from Kentucky to Texas when they stopped at a rest stop so he could use the restroom. There was only one car there, and not one person was in sight.

My cousin's wife went back to their car and waited for her husband to come out of the restroom; then she noticed two young guys come out of the restroom, get into their car and drive off.

After waiting for 10 or maybe 15 minutes, my cousin's wife went back to the restroom to see why her husband was taking so long. She found him in the men's room — his hands were tied together with one of his socks, his pants were off, his mouth was stuffed with his other sock and his feet were bound together with a rope. Those two young men had ambushed him in the restroom and taken all his cash — $800!

Abby, please warn your readers to be careful when they see only one empty car — and no people. — RUTH HEFLIN, KENTUCKY

DEAR RUTH: What a sobering thought, but a valuable piece of advice. Thank you for the reminder. Readers: Stay alert and keep your guard up while you're traveling.

AT WIT'S END

Sometimes it's a must to eat

By Erma Bombeck

I am not what you would call your highly motivated dieter. There are no reunions in sight, I am not under the gun to slim down for a beauty pageant, and I can still cross my legs in hot weather.

That is not to say I don't watch what I eat. It means I acknowledge that there are times in a person's life when turning down food is just not possible.

Bombeck

My husband and I have a little cabin about four hours north of our home. We have traveled the road often enough to know that my kidney capacity reaches its peak seconds after we pass into the small town of Payson, Ariz. (All of this has been documented.) There are no public facilities, and it is too soon to buy gas. Therefore, we must stop at a fast-food chain so I can use the restroom.

Am I going to march right by all those people who have bought the right to use the restrooms? Get real. I do the honorable thing and order breakfast. I certainly am not going to corrupt my principles and compromise my integrity for a lousy sausage and egg on a biscuit.

I must eat on airlines ... for humanitarian reasons. It's not the flight attendants' fault that the shrimp is limp and the omelet has the consistency of a handbag. It would hurt their feelings not to take a stab at it. When you cruise up and down those aisles watching faces frozen in horror as people bury their food under their napkins, it gets through to you. People can take just so much rejection. On international flights, when you're flying from one time zone to another, I have eaten four meals in five hours. It's the only thing to do.

The reason I eat in hospitals is threefold. First, I am paying $800 a day for it. Second, if you leave so much as a piece of parsley on your plate, a nutritionist will appear at your elbow demanding to know why you don't want to get well. And third, it's something to do between your bath and your back rub.

Dieters will stubbornly hold out and say that my theory is without substance. They will contend that if you're really serious about cutting back, you will not have regard for feelings, courtesy or even integrity. I disagree.

A few years ago I went to Russia to have a dialogue with Russian women on peace between our two countries. They held a tea and brought in 50 or 60 desserts and insisted each one be sampled. That was a great personal sacrifice for me. I wasn't even hungry. But look what I did for all mankind!

Men's trunks make waves, draw raves

Weatherproof beachwear by Morrow Bay for JCPenney features nylon pullover jackets and cotton shorts worn with a fanny pack.

By Teresa S. Johnson
N.Y. Times News Service

On muscle beach, they're wearing them skimpy and seductive; for skiing at the lake, they're long and neon bright; and at the country club pool, they're comfortable and plaid. And more men are wearing them on the street, or, at least, to work in the yard.

"They" are swimsuits for men, and there's a style to fit every personality. In fact many men are buying several to match their daily moods.

"Swimwear is one outlet where men can express their individuality and sense of style," said Carol Edwards, men's publicity manager for JCPenney.

Unlike business suits that are dictated by your job description, swimsuits allow men a free reign to reveal their personalities or communicate their moods.

"I don't think you can predict what kind of swimsuit a man will wear by what he wears during the day," Edwards said. "He may dress in a conservative pinstripe suit for work, but when it comes to swimwear, he may want something very provocative. Or he might go for the laid-back California style of jams."

MEN ARE beginning to take more interest in color and silhouette, said Tom Julian, associate fashion director of the Men's Fashion Association.

He said men are spending more time selecting swimsuits than even five years ago. One reason for this is because men are more body conscious today. They expend time and effort on getting their bodies into shape and they want the swimsuit that shows it off the best, he said.

Another reason men are spending more time in the swimsuit departments of stories is that there is more to choose from, Julian said.

"When an array of looks is presented, men will spend time selecting the ideal suit for him — one that is comfortable, but also has the best look for him," he said.

That array of looks has grown in recent years to include basic boxers — loose-fitting trunks that resemble boxer underwear and are upper-mid-thigh in length; jams — baggy trunks that reach to just above the knee; and briefs and bikinis — cut thigh-high and close fitting.

"If there is a No. 1 silhouette, it is the tailored boxer style," Julian said. He said the most popular styles are just above mid-thigh in length, with an elastic waist and side-entry pockets.

For the athletically inclined, the bikini is the rage, Julian said. While tiny skin-tight bikinis are still available for the very daring, he said the newest looks are wider, have a waist band and a looser fit. He said this retro look gets its inspiration from the Elvis Presley film "Blue Hawaii."

As in other parts of men's wear, color and patterns are creeping into swim trunks, said Michelle Blough of Dillard's department stores.

MEN WHO are conservative in their fashion taste still prefer sedate plaid trunks, she said, but these days the plaids are likely to be in the newer colors, such as purple and green.

For those who like their clothes more fashion forward, there are plenty of prints in bright colors such as tangerine, purple, and fuchsia often on a black background, Blough said.

The neon colors from the '60s influence continue in popularity, as well, Julian said. These include electric yellow, chartreuse and hot pink.

As for patterns, they span the spectrum from tropical florals to conservative plaids to wild tie-dyes.

But even with all the new colors and prints, when it comes to swimwear, men want comfort first, Blough said. In fact, she said that's one reason she sees for the trend away from bikinis. Boxers are generally cut wider at the bottom so they are more comfortable to sit and swim in.

"They want what will look good, but they look for comfort first," she said.

Combining those two wants is getting easier, Julian said. "To accommodate today's lifestyles, manufacturers are providing swimwear that looks great while still being functional."

As men pay more attention to their swimwear, they are also more aware of what they will wear with their trunks, Blough said. Many manufacturers are producing T-shirts and tank tops to pair with their swimwear.

A new and popular alternative is the popover, a hooded shell that is pulled on over the head.

"You no longer want a very matching set like the cabana sets we used to see," Julian said. T-shirts or popovers should contrast with the swimsuit for an updated look, he said.

All these extras fit in with the trend to take swimwear for men from the beach and onto the street, Edwards said.

"Men are wearing boxer trunks and jams for working out, cycling and to work in the yard," Edwards said.

Slimming suits flatter figure bumps, bulges

By Valli Herman
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — It's less painful than liposuction, easier than 100 sit-ups and much more flattering than a girdle.

It's the Slimsuit by Carol Wior, a specially engineered, and we do mean engineered, swimming garment that helps to hold in the stomach and hold up the figure.

The one-piece suits are guaranteed to take an inch or more off the waist and stomach of the average or full-figured woman.

A patented underlining and bustline underwires help create the effect. The elasticized spandex fabric stretches around the body to lift and hold the figure, while also enhancing the smaller bustline. It comes with a tape measure so customers can see the difference.

Wior has company in the thinner-swimmer category. Cherokee Swimwear also offers a new line for juniors called Beachies that is designed to reproportion the figure.

For women's sizes, Cherokee Swimwear also comes in styles that flatter thinner, bustier or hippier figures.

For larger hips, a skirted suit is the preferred style. For a size-38 bust or larger, a shirred front maillot with a built-in bra gives extra support and shape.

For a size-32 bust and smaller, the swimwear line offers a two-piece suit with a molded bra-top that adds shape. For thick midsections, two waist-accented tank suits help define and reduce the waist.

Of course, the most clever way to detract attention from a not-perfect figure is to draw attention to your suit, not your body. The new Mood Suit, which is available in limited outlets, may be the answer: The light blue fabric changes color when it encounters temperature changes.

Jones advertises Cowboys

AUSTIN (AP) — Despite a 1-15 record last season, the Dallas Cowboys to many sports fans "truly are the New York Yankees of the NFL, they truly are the Boston Celtics," Cowboys owner Jerry Jones told a civic pep rally.

Jones, introducing quarterbacks Troy Aikman and Babe Laufenberg on Wednesday, said, "Other owners in the NFL have told me, 'We'd like to give you some extra draft choices because the NFL needs the Dallas Cowboys.'"

The event at a downtown hotel recognized the Cowboys' making Austin their home for summer training camp after 27 years in California.

With Austin Mayor Lee Cooke as the cheerleader, the audience shouted the slogan, "The Cowboys and Austin — winning starts here."

Cooke described the Cowboys as a National Football League franchise "that a lot of citizens and mayors and council members and people all across this United States would give their eye tooth to have."

Pistons inch closer to finals

■ The Chicago Bulls shoot a measly 33 percent and learn the hard way you can't win in Detroit by scoring just 83 points against the defending world champions.

Associated Press

Mark Aguirre scored 13 of his 19 points in the fourth quarter and the Pistons held Chicago to 33.3 percent shooting in a 97-83 victory over the Bulls on Wednesday night. The victory gave Detroit a 3-2 lead in the best-of-7 Eastern Conference finals, in which the home team has won each game.

"Mark had a big game," Detroit coach Chuck Daly said. "But we worked very well defensively the whole game. They did not shoot as well and that was the key.

"There is no secret to our defense. We just worked hard, that's all. In Chicago, we have to work as hard as we worked here."

The defense, as usual, was aimed mainly at Chicago triggerman Michael Jordan. He scored 89 points in the Bulls' two wins in Chicago over the weekend, but in three defeats in Detroit, he has averaged 28 points — including 22 in Game 5.

Detroit is now 10-0 in the playoffs when holding the opposition under 100 points. When the Pistons allow more than 100, they are 0-3, including losses in Games 3 and 4 at Chicago Stadium.

Detroit's Bill Laimbeer battles to keep control of the ball as Chicago's Craig Hodges (14) and Stacey King (34) try for the first-half steal.

"You've got to give their defense credit," Jordan said. "They took us out of sych on offense."

Jordan took only 19 shots, hitting seven. He said the plan was to spread the scoring around.

"I wanted to do something to draw more attention to everyone else," Jordan said. "(The Pistons) were making me dish the ball to the open man, and then we just didn't make the shots.

"I felt very good about the way we played, even if we didn't make those open shots. Their defense was on. The homecourt can do that for you."

The series moves back to Chicago, where the Bulls are 6-0 in the playoffs, for Game 6 on Friday night. A seventh game would be back at the Palace on Sunday if needed.

Detroit shot 55.9 percent and outrebounded Chicago 45-36. The Bulls have yet to shoot 50 percent against the Pistons.

Aguirre's effort helped the Detroit bench outscored Chicago's reserves 35-13, including 21-6 in the fourth quarter. For the series, the Pistons' bench has outscored Chicago's 183-115.

"I got the ball where I wanted it," Aguirre said. "I got the ball in the post and that's where I can do the most damage. People think of me as a jump shooter, but I'm really not."

Joe Dumars scored 20 points for the Pistons and Bill Laimbeer, who scored a total of four points in the Bulls' two victories at Chicago, finished with 16.

Scottie Pippen had 19 points for Chicago.

"It was one of those nights where we had the shots, but we didn't hit those shots," Chicago coach Phil Jackson said. "Give the defense a lot of credit from Detroit's standpoint. They played a very good defensive game."

During the regular season, the Pistons held opponents to 98.3 points, the sixth-best ever in an 82-game schedule.

"They were very aggressive," Jackson said. "They kept us out of synch and kept a lot of our shooters off-balance."

Aguirre scored Detroit's first eight points in fourth quarter, including a three-point play and a 3-point goal, giving the Pistons an 80-68 lead, their larg-

Siruta conquers life's biggest battle

Beverly Shilling/Reporter-Telegram

Six months ago, B.J. Siruta watched Midland Lee's playoff games while peering out a hospital window. Now, he watches from the sidelines, dressed in full pads.

■ Less than a year after being diagnosed with cancer, B.J. Siruta is back — and thankful for a second chance.

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

Over the course of the last nine months, Midland Lee offensive lineman B.J. Siruta has walked through the darkness that only cancer can bring. Now he is the miracle of Rebel inspiration as he prepares to play football his senior season.

Last August, Siruta was ready to play football. It was the only thing on his mind. Then came that routine pre-season physical — and something was wrong.

"I had no idea anything was wrong with me," said Siruta. "I was just ready to play football. But the doctor found something he didn't like in my groin area and they sent me to another doctor right away."

In fact, Siruta saw a couple of other doctors before exploratory surgery was performed. Siruta had cancer.

"They ran a scan and discovered that the cancer had spread into my lower back," said Siruta. "I was shocked when they told me I had cancer. Everyone left the room and all my emotions just came out. Suddenly, football just wasn't that important anymore."

Now Siruta had another battle on his hands, one laced with fear and uncertainty instead of one with confidence and hope. Football was easy compared to this.

During the following months, Siruta was treated with extensive chemotherapy. And after the chemo treatments, an additional surgery was required to remove a small benign tumor that was left over.

Treatment performed its mission well, but for Siruta, returning thoughts of football consumed him. He had a personal vision. He was going to play football again.

"While I was going through chemo treatments, I would come to school and watch those guys in football. It depressed me that I couldn't be out there with them. But I always knew in the back of my mind that I would be back with them. I just didn't know how long it would take.

"But I know one thing, it kept me going through all the treatments and surgery. I had a lot of other goals, but football is one of them that helped me make it through this."

Siruta missed all the games Lee played in 1989, but he kept up with the team the best he could.

"I couldn't go to the games because I was either in the hospital or too tired from the chemo," said Siruta, "but I kept up with them. I listened to all the games on the radio

Angels cry foul after 8-6 loss to Travelers

By Bill Price
Staff Writer

It did not matter that the ball appeared foul to the majority of the crowd, Midland manager Eddie Rodriguez and Angel left fielder Ruben Amaro.

Third base umpire Rick Roden said it was fair, giving Arkansas' Mike Ross his fourth home run of the year and the Travelers the momentum to go on to an 8-6 win Wednesday night at Angels Stadium.

Ross ended the game with a pair of hits and two RBI, while Traveler left fielder Lonnie Maclin was 2-for-3 with three runs scored and two stolen bases. Ric Christian and Joe Hall also added to Angel catcher Mike Knapp's problems, as they also raced to a pair of stolen bases apiece.

The victory makes the Travelers 18-29 for the season and snapped a three-game Angel winning streak, all over Arkansas. Midland fell to 19-30 for the season.

The eighth-inning blast that the Arkansas third baseman sent sailing over the left field corner tied the game at 5-5 and came off Midland reliever Frank DiMichele. It was the only hit DiMichele allowed in 2⅓ innings, but did plenty of damage.

After the homer, the invigorated Traveler batting order came back for three runs in the ninth to close the door on any hopes of an Angel comeback.

"It's tough to comment on anything you don't have any control over, but we did not lose this game. I'm not saying anything about the umpires, but it took something out of the ordinary for us to end up in the position we ended up in," Rodriguez said.

Reliever Luis Merejo (0-2) took the loss for the Angels while John Lepley (4-2) picked up the win and Dale Kisten earned his second save of the year.

Circumstances in the fifth inning certainly did not point to the Angels finishing with another tally in the L column. After Arkansas nabbed single runs in the first and second, Midland starter Mark Holzemer settled down for the next three innings.

Then in the bottom of the fifth, the Angels exploded for five runs, seeming to take their fourth straight come-from-behind win over the Travelers. Mark Davis led off with a single to right and Kevin Flora moved him to second on a sacrifice bunt.

At long last ... a victory in Arlington

Associated Press

Pete Incaviglia doubled home the winning run with one out in the 10th inning and the Texas Rangers stopped a team-record nine-game home losing streak by beating the Boston Red Sox.

Texas halted a five-game losing skid and ended a long evening of wasted opportunities. Five times the Rangers put a runner at third base with less than two outs without scoring, and they also had a runner thrown out at the plate on a botched play in the ninth.

Julio Franco started the 10th with a single for his third hit of the game. He stole his third base of the game and scored on Incaviglia's double off Wes Gardner (0-2).

Kenny Rogers (2-1) pitched the 10th for the victory. Kevin Brown held Boston to six hits in nine innings.

In the ninth, the Rangers put runners at first and second with one out. Rafael Palmeiro hit a drive off the right-field wall but Gary Pettis, who was tagging at second base, was thrown out when catcher Tony Pena blocked the plate after taking first baseman Carlos Quintana's relay.

The Rangers scored three times in the second. Pettis hit a two-run single and Geno Petralli walked with the bases loaded, finishing starter Eric Hetzel.

Wade Boggs ended a 2-for-20 slump with a solo home run, his second, in the Boston third. The Red Sox tied with it in the fifth as Boggs hit a sacrifice fly and another run scored on third baseman Steve Buechele's error.

The Rangers hit into inning-ending double plays in three of the first four innings.

AL Roundup

Athletics 8, Blue Jays 5

Jamie Quirk drove in two runs with a double and triple in only his second start of the season as the Oakland Athletics avoided a series sweep with a victory over Toronto, ending the Blue Jays' five-game winning streak.

Quirk, who entered the game 1-for-10, snapped a 5-5 tie in the A's four-run, fifth inning with a run-scoring double. He gave Oakland a 1-0 lead with an RBI triple in the first.

Willie Randolph gave the A's an 8-5 lead with a solo home run in the eighth inning, his first homer for Oakland.

Todd Burns (1-0) relieved starter Curt Young in the fifth, when the Blue Jays scored four runs to take a 5-3 lead. Burns pitched 3 1-3 innings and Dennis Eckersley got the last three outs for his 14th save in as many opportunities.

White Sox 5, Yankees 2

Scott Fletcher hit a three-run homer and Sammy Sosa added a solo shot as the Chicago White Sox won their fifth straight game, beating New York and extending the Yankees' losing streak to five.

The White Sox completed their first three-game sweep against New York since April 1985. Chicago got just four hits but improved to 18-6 at Comiskey Park, the best home mark in the majors.

Greg Hibbard (4-3) allowed four hits in 7 1-3 innings. Bobby Thigpen, the fourth Chicago pitcher, finished the combined five-hitter for his 16th save in 19 opportunities.

Royals 4, Tigers 3

Kansas City's bullpen held off Detroit after an injury to starter Storm Davis and the Royals turned four double plays to beat the Tigers for their fifth straight victory.

Kansas City defeated Detroit for the 10th consecutive time at Royals Stadium.

Davis left with two outs in the fourth with a bruised knuckle after stopping Cecil Fielder's hard grounder. Luis Aquino (1-0) pitched 2 1-3 scoreless innings and Steve Crawford worked two shutout innings.

Jeff Montgomery pitched the ninth for his fourth save. Fielder doubled with one out and scored on Larry Sheets' two-out single and, after a wild pitch, Matt Nokes struck out to end the game.

Dan Petry (4-2) lost for the first time in four road decisions and dropped to 5-12 lifetime against Kansas City.

Gary Ward gave the Tigers a 1-0 lead in the third with a home run that carried more than halfway up the grassy slope behind left field.

Frank White's one-out single in the Kansas City third was followed by an RBI double by Kevin Seitzer. Kurt Stillwell's single made it 2-1.

Twins 12, Orioles 3

Fred Manrique and Brian Harper drove in three runs apiece and Gene Larkin kept his hot bat going with three hits and three runs scored as the Minnesota Twins beat the Baltimore Orioles.

The Twins have won six of their last seven games and are 20-7 this month, their best May ever. This is only the seventh 20-victory month in club history; the last was a 21-10 showing in September 1970.

Astros appear to have put hard times behind them

Associated Press

Glenn Wilson isn't making a fuss about being platooned and he wishes others wouldn't either.

Wilson's eighth-inning single to shallow center field drove home Ken Caminiti with the go-ahead run, leading the Houston Astros to a 2-1 victory Wednesday night over the St. Louis Cardinals.

"It's not something that's hard to get used to," Wilson said. "They've made the decision and I'm satisfied with it. So maybe we can quit talking about it all the time."

Wilson extended his hitting streak to six games, hitting .421 during his string.

But he knows when rookie Eric Anthony is fully healed from tendinitis in his knee, he will be the Astros' right fielder.

"Eric is an outstanding player and so I'll just make the best of it," Wilson said.

NL Roundup

Reliever Juan Agosto (4-1) pitched one inning for the victory. Dave Smith worked the ninth for his 10th save. Starter Mike Scott went seven innings, allowed seven hits, struck out three and walked two.

"I've started coming down in the strike zone with my fast ball," Scott said. "I was getting killed with the high fast balls that had been effective in the past."

Joe Magrane, (2-8) despite pitching his fourth outstanding pitching performance, got the loss.

"I threw well enough to win, but I'm results oriented," Magrane said. "I'm 2-8 now, but if I can continue to throw like that, I'll turn it around."

The Cardinals have scored only 15 runs in Magrane's eight losses.

Giants 4, Cubs 1

Rookie John Burkett pitched seven scoreless innings, and Matt Williams hit a two-run homer, leading San Francisco over Chicago.

Burkett, who also drove in a run with his first major league hit, shut out the Cubs until Ryne Sandberg led off the eighth with a homer, his 10th.

Pirates 5, Dodgers 3

Barry Bonds had a two-run homer and three RBIs and Sid Bream was 3-for-4 with a solo shot as Pittsburgh beat Los Angeles.

Walt Terrell (2-4) ended his three-game losing streak by allowing three runs and five hits over 6⅓ innings as the Pirates, who had 14 hits, swept the three-game series. Bill Landrum, the fourth Pittsburgh pitcher, worked the final inning for his seventh save, giving the Pirates their 13th victory in their last 15 home games.

Expos 9, Braves 6

Tim Wallach drove in four runs with a homer and two doubles as Montreal Expos overcame pitching injuries and beat Atlanta.

Wallach's 11th homer, in the fourth inning, left the Expos with a 3-1 deficit. But Montreal batted around in a five-run fifth to chase Tom Glavine (2-3) and win for the seventh time in 10 games. Atlanta lost for the fifth time in seven games.

Dennis Martinez, Montreal's scheduled starter, reported a stiff neck while warming up, and was replaced by Bill Sampen.

Padres 8, Phillies 3

Bip Roberts, Tony Gwynn, Mike Pagliarulo and Joe Carter drove in two runs each as surging San Diego beat slumping Philadelphia.

The victory was San Diego's third in a row and fifth in six games.

SEC finally proves baseball worth

Associated Press

OMAHA, Neb. — Georgia coach Steve Webber says the Southeastern Conference finally has something to brag about.

"We've been telling everybody we're pretty good," Webber said. "Our conference has a lot of pride in our baseball program from top to bottom. Now to put three teams in the College World Series is a testimony to that."

Three teams from the same conference have qualified for the CWS only one time before the SEC pulled the hat-trick this season.

Louisiana State, Georgia and Mississippi State give the College World Series a distinct southern flavor when the tournament opens Friday at Rosenblatt Stadium. It is the 44th annual tournament and the 41st straight to be played at Omaha.

The Pacific-10 South is the only other conference with three CWS teams qualifying in any one year. Arizona State, Stanford and California did it in 1988.

Here's a thumbnail look at this year's CWS teams:

Fullerton State (36-21)

The Titans are led by Rich Gonzales (.383), Mate Borgongo (54 RBIs) and Phil Nevin (14 home runs). Borgongo carries a .376 average and Nevin is at .361. Coach Larry Cochell's second school and second Fullerton team to qualify for the CWS hits at a .320 clip with 49 homers and has a team earned run average of 3.85. James Popoff is 12-4 and Huck Fiener 8-1. The Titans won 17 of their last 21 games after an 18-17 start.

Georgia (48-18)

Brian Jester's .391 average leads the Bulldogs, in their second CWS. Georgia also qualified in 1987 under Coach Steve Webber. Jester also is the team leader in homers (17) and trails J.R. Showalter for the RBI lead 71-62. The team has a btting average of .307 with 85 homers. Eleven-game winners Dave Fleming and Mike Rebhan top the pitching staff, which has a 4.37 ERA. Fleming, a left-hander, has a 3.10 ERA with 143 strikeouts in 139 1-3 innings.

Georgia Southern (50-17)

Coach Jack Stallings, previously at Florida State, brings his second school to the CWS. Rob Fitzpatrick carries a .382 average, has 21 homers and 63 RBIs. Freshman Todd Greene adds a .351 average, 26 homers and 75 RBIs. Team batting average is .314 with 88 homers. Sophomore Joey Hamilton has been the pitching ace with an 18-3 record, nine complete games, a 3.03 ERA and 134 strikeouts in 151 2-3 innings.

Louisiana State (52-17)

Paul Byrd at 16-5, Chad Ogee at 14-1 and John O'Donoghue at 11-3 are enough to make LSU foes nervous, but Coach Skip Bertman's club can hit, too. Wes Grisham is tops on the club with a .389 average, Rich Cordani hits at a .368 average, Lyle Mouton .350 and Tookie Johnson .349. As a team, the Tigers are hitting .331 with 60 homers. Grisham is the team lead-

ANGELS: Ump's decision fair game in Midland loss

From 1D

Wiley Lee followed with a single to score Davis and Amaro drew a walk from Arkansas starter Len Picota. Steve DeAngelis, who hit a double in the first, stepped up and nailed a two-run triple to chase Picoto. Larry Pierson was no more effective than Picoto, however, as Mark Howie doubled to score DeAngelis and Scott Cerny smacked a two-bagger to drive Howie home.

But the Travelers came back with two runs in the sixth to allow Ross' homer to tie the affair. Then in the ninth, Christian tapped a base hit to right off Merejo and stole second, allowing Hall to drive in the go-ahead run. Maclin laid down a bunt and reached safely before Knapp overthrew Jim Aylward as Hall swiped third base.

Knapp's error brought Hall home and sent Maclin to second. Ross closed the game's scoring with a single to right that sent Maclin across the plate.

The Angels end their 10-game home stand and five-game set against Arkansas tonight, as the teams hit the Angels Stadium field at 7 p.m. Joe Grahe (2-4) is expected to start for Midland.

AIR: Jordan held to just 22 points in Game 5 loss

From 1D

est of the game to that point, with 8:52 left.

Detroit eventually built the margin to 89-71 with 5:28 left, and the Bulls didn't threaten again.

"Mark gave us a big lift in the first half and an even bigger lift in the second half," Daly said. "He can attack the basket and he can pass the ball. And Vinnie Johnson was very aggressive offensively. Those two guys made all the difference in this game."

Johnson had eight points and eight assists.

The Pistons took a 54-45 lead early in the second half before Jordan scored seven points of his 11 third-quarter points and Pippen hit a 3-pointer, helping the Bulls close to 60-57 with 4:20 left in the period.

But Dumars, who had nine in the quarter, started a run that enabled Detroit to pull ahead 72-64 going into the final period.

Jordan managed only six points in the first half. Jordan won his fourth NBA scoring title by averaging 33.6 points during the season, but only 26.0 against Detroit.

With Dumars scoring nine of his 11 first-quarter points, the Pistons opened a 23-14 lead — largest of the first half — with 1:53 left in the period.

The Pistons made just one more basket the rest of the quarter, while the Bulls, getting 3-point baskets from Craig Hodges and Jordan, went on an 11-2 run and tied it 25-25 at the end of the first quarter.

But the Pistons scored the first eight points of the second quarter as Laimbeer and Aguirre each scored two baskets.

Pippen then scored the first nine Chicago points in the second quarter as the Bulls twice cut the Detroit lead to three.

A basket by Vinnie Johnson gave Detroit another eight-point lead with 1:49 left in the half, but Chicago cut the deficit to 46-41 at halftime.

Detroit shot 60 percent in the first half, the Bulls 36.6 on 15-of-41 shooting. Jordan took only eight shots, making two.

er with 11 homers. Team ERA is 3.66 for the SEC champs.

Mississippi State (49-19)

Coach Ron Polk brings the Bulldogs to the CWS for the fourth time and hopes to improve on a CWS-best third-place finish. First baseman Mike Alford leads the club with a .364 average and trails team home run leader Tracy Echols (14) by one. First baseman-outfielder John Cohen has a .333 average and a team-high 69 RBIs, two better than Alford. The team hits at a .314 clip with 51 homers. Bobby Reed (15-2) is the top man on the mound with a 2.93 ERA, three saves and two shutouts. As a team, Mississippi State has a 3.83 ERA.

Oklahoma State (53-16)

The Cowboys make their 16th appearance in Omaha and eighth under Coach Gary Ward. His string of seven straight was broken in 1987. OSU has won the championship once (1959), finished second four times and third three times. The Big Eight champs have 12 players batting .300 or better, including Danny Perez (.390), Michael Daniel (.360), Bobby Carlsen (.355) and Mitch Simmons (.350). Daniels leads the teams with 20 homers and 82 RBIs. Gordie Tipton and Dennis Burbank are both 9-1. Tipton has a 2.45 ERA and Burbank is at 3.17. Team batting average is .319 and team ERA is 4.48.

Stanford (56-10)

Jeff Hammonds' .350 average is tops for the Cardinal, who hit at a .317 clip. Ryan Turner (.356) and David McCarty (.351) also are among six regulars hitting .327 or better. Tim Griffin has 21 homers, Paul Carey 15 and McCarty 12. Carey was the CWS most valuable player as a freshman in 1987. Pitching banks on 14-game winners Stan Spencer (14-1 with a 2.78 earned run average) and Mike Mussina (14-3 and 3.09 ERA). Spencer also had 133 strikeouts in 122 2-3 innings. Team ERA is 3.69.

The Citadel (45-12)

Coach Chal Port says disciplinary tradition is a reason his Bulldogs are making their first appearance in the CWS. The Bulldogs swept through the Atlantic Regional without a loss, including a 4-1 victory over top-seeded Miami. Anthony Jenkins hit .600 in the tournament with two home runs and was named the regional's outstanding player. He's hitting .403 with 15 homers and 67 RBIs. Sophomore right-hander Ken Britt (10-1) and senior left-hander Richard Shirer (8-1) lead the pitching staff.

VENTURA, Calif. (AP) — Allen Leavell, a former member of the Houston Rockets, has been sentenced to three years probation and fined $500 after pleading no contest to a charge of attacking a referee.

Blazers feel they can win in Phoenix

Associated Press

PHOENIX — The Phoenix Suns want one more shot at ending their 20-game losing streak at Portland, but the Trail Blazers have other plans.

"We don't plan to wait to come home," Portland coach Rick Adelman said. "We plan to finish it in Phoenix."

To do that, the Trail Blazers will need to beat the Suns on Thursday in Game 6 of the best-of-7 Western Conference title series. Neither team has won on the road during the series.

Portland leads 3-2 after a 120-114 victory Tuesday night in Portland, where the Suns haven't won since April 26, 1984.

Phoenix lost the first two games at the Memorial Coliseum and is trying to become only the fifth NBA playoff team to overcome a 2-0 deficit and win a 7-game series.

"One more shot. That's all we want — one more shot," Phoenix coach Cotton Fitzsimmons said. "We're not snakebitten in their building. We've always played them close and I think the Trail Blazers know that. We just have to regroup, win one more at home and give ourselves one more crack at them in Portland."

The Suns lost 100-98 in Game 1 and blew a 22-point lead in Game 2, losing 108-107. On Tuesday, they had a 106-101 lead with 6:23 remaining but couldn;t hold the lead.

"Every time, we've been robbed in that building," forward Tom Chambers said. "The game always seems to get away from us by a couple of points. Portland keeps taking it away from us down the stretch."

Portland's Clyde Drexler, who made just 11-of-27 field goals in 34 and 12-point losses at Phoenix last week, scored a career playoff-high 32 points in Game 5. He also had 10 rebounds, four assists, three steals and a blocked shot.

"I wasn't worried about my game. I never lost confidence," Drexler said. "It's the same thing I've been doing all year long."

Drexler said he's been battling a cold since Game 7 of the San Antonio series.

"It's going on three weeks now. I'm still congested and it takes away from my stamina," he said. "The first week, I was so tired that after four or five minutes of a game, I almost took myself out. But I don't care if you have pneumonia. You still have to go out and play."

Adelman said Drexler "rose to the occasion" after he talked to him before tipoff.

"He said, 'Be a little more aggressive going to the hole. Take it strong and get things going out there,'" Drexler said. "It was a real confidence booster."

"He was untouchable the way he played," teammate Buck Williams said. "Clyde showed what an exceptional player can do for a ballclub."

Now, it's the Suns who need an exceptional effort from someone to avoid elimination from the conference finals for the second straight season.

"We've been taking the tough road all year," said guard Jeff Hornacek. "If the tough road gets us there, we'll take it."

Agassi, Chang advance at Paris

PARIS — It was children's day at the French Open, a noisy tradition that liberated 8,000 students from the classroom and let them loose to prowl Roland Garros where they howled for their favorites — Michael Chang and the neon-hued Andre Agassi — and hissed at their hero's opponents.

Agassi, the third-seeded player and now the highest-seeded player left in the men's draw, felt within his element and blew kisses.

Chang, still coping with a losing record on clay this spring, wore his grimmest face and tuned out the trilling of his enthusiastic gallery. Both methods worked, and each advanced.

"It's a good start for me and I'm hoping that it won't end," said Chang, who has retained none of the childlike awe he felt as he advanced through this event last year. "If I lose, it's not OK anymore."

A changeable child himself, Agassi, is obstreperous one day and subdued the next, depending on whether his forehands, backhands and serves happen to be fitting him as felicitously as his colorful outfits.

Like Wednesday's audience, he is more likely to create distractions than complain about them.

Wednesday afternoon, Agassi followed up his frenetic first-round performance, where he stomped his racquets and indulged in several tantrums, with a workmanlike second-round victory against overmatched Todd Woodbridge of Australia.

AP Laserphoto

West Germany's Steffi Graf also advanced in Wednesday action at the French Open. Graf downed Jennifer Santrock of the United States, 6-1, 6-2.

Unhappy with the precision of the wide-body racquet he'd been using on European clay, he had several different models airlifted in from Florida and Las Vegas, Nev., and the touch he sought returned.

Woodbridge was disturbed by the din that welcomed Agassi to center court. He said he couldn't even hear the ball bounce during the warm-up and, once the match began, he found he could hardly hit it, a condition that impaired his ability to convert four set points in the opening set and laid the groundwork for Agassi's 7-5, 6-1, 6-3 victory.

Chang had an excruciating match with Marc Rosset, a gangly Swiss teen-ager with a thundering serve and a forehand that descended like a guillotine.

Through two sets, Rosset's pace managed to be simultaneously madcap yet accurate, a clear advertisement for his career-high ranking of 27.

Chang repeatedly discovered himself not merely pinned to the baseline, a position of strength for him, but cowering 10 feet behind it.

In the end, he relied on his steady playmaking and an apparent case of overexertion in his opponent to prevail, 7-5, 4-6, 6-4, 6-3. As victims like Ivan Lendl have learned, Chang doesn't care who hits harder as long as it's his opponent who makes the final mistake.

Agassi was a grouchy competitor here last year when tennis held no charms for him; this time he figures to win his first Grand Slam event.

"Last year I had plane reservations before each match, just in case," he said. "That was my attitude. This year I packed two weeks' worth of socks."

Agassi said the demise of Stefan Edberg and Boris Becker, the only players seeded ahead of him, had no impact on his assessment of his chances here, although it did provide a lesson in the necessity of treating every opponent like a potential assassin.

"I came out here today knowing that the top two players were beaten yesterday, so it can happen to anybody," Agassi said. "You can't take any match lightly."

The premature exit by the top-seeded men's players sent a ripple of intrigue through the rest of the draw.

"Americans tend only to care about big names, but I think this is going to be one of the more exciting French Opens because somebody unexpected is going to come up and win it," said Jim Courier, 19, the Floridian who upset Agassi in the third round here last year before wasting a two-set lead and losing to Andrei Chesnokov in the round of 16.

Steffi Graf, bothered by the sinus condition that inflicts itself upon her each year in Paris, was sneezing and sniffling, but the congestion didn't affect her game any. Graf whisked through her second-round match with Jennifer Santrock, 6-1, 6-2.

Life for students at The Citadel not at all an easy chore

Associated Press

CORAL GABLES, Fla. — Students at The Citadel must walk in the campus gutters as freshmen and do without television until they're seniors.

Coach Chal Port says that sort of disciplinary tradition is a reason his Bulldogs are making their first appearance in the College World Series.

The national championship tournament begins Friday at Omaha, Neb.

"At a military school you're confronted many times with stressful situations, and it kind of conditions you," Port said. "We play very well in tight situations. I can't recall a time this year when we blew up. We got beat, but we didn't blow up."

The Bulldogs didn't even get beat in the NCAA Atlantic Regional. They won four in a row here, including Tuesday's 4-1 victory over top-seeded Miami.

"They were very loose, very relaxed," Miami coach Ron Fraser said.

Bulldogs outfielder Anthony Jenkins, who hit .600 in the tournament with two home runs, said the lifestyle at The Citadel is a good one for an athlete.

"It helps us out a lot," he said, "because of the strenuous tests we get at school every day from the military guys about shaving and haircuts and things like that. 'Clean your room and shine your brass and shine your shoes.' You know.

"You get upset about things like that, but you learn you have to deal with it."

The enrollment of 1,870 at the school in Charleston, S.C., is the smallest of the 48 participants in this year's NCAA tournament. The campus regimen includes daily formation at 7:20 a.m., but when the Bulldogs are traveling they sleep in — and watch TV.

"That's one of the reasons I think we play well on the road," Port said. "We're together and we're enjoying it."

Discipline isn't the only secret — after all, the Bulldogs are the first team from an all-military college to reach Omaha. Their 45-12 record is a result of good defense, a deep pitching staff and an opportunistic offense.

Jenkins is the primary threat. He's hitting .403 with 15 home runs and 67 RBIs.

"Our talent level may not be as good as a lot of people out there," said Port, The Citadel's coach for 26 years. "But with our team together, the whole is greater than the parts."

Fraser, for one, wants to see the Bulldogs continue playing loose and relaxed baseball.

"I hope they go far," he said. "I hope they don't go out there and get all uptight with all the hoopla at the World Series."

SIRUTA: Miracle in the making

From 1D

and would read the newspaper first thing on Saturday morning. I started reading Sports Illustrated and that made me want to come back."

But it was still tough as Lee made its seventh consecutive voyage into the state playoffs and Siruta wasn't a part of it.

"I remember the last playoff game when we lost to Arlington Lamar," he said. "I was in Memorial Hospital at the time and I was listening to the game on the radio. In fact, I could see a little of the game from my hospital room window when the teams moved to the south end of Memorial Stadium. I felt the defeat just like everyone else on the team."

Following the football season, Lee went into its off-season program. Again Siruta was, for the most part, on the sidelines, but Lee line coach Ronnie Stephens was impressed with his attitude.

"B.J. couldn't lift weights or go through the off-season drills, but he was out here every day he could. He would walk the track and did whatever he could do. You could see that it was very important to him that he get back into football.

"He's just a great kid. He's quiet, but a hard worker. You never know he's around because he's always doing what you ask. I wish every kid had his desire. You just knew he was going to come back from this ordeal. He never sat around and felt sorry for himself."

In addition to missing the off-season program, Siruta had to deal with another bothersome result from his chemotherapy treatments. He lost his hair.

"That wasn't really a big deal," said Siruta. "I wore a baseball cap to school. My hair is back now, but it grew back curly. Before it was straight. Still, I would rather have it this way than to wear it like some of the kids I see in school."

Lee's off-season training period gave way to spring training on May 4. Siruta was still on the sidelines. But the day he had waited for finally came on May 14. He got a clean bill of health from his doctors and was told he could again resume football. He finished Lee's last two weeks of spring training — on the field and part of the team.

"He came in during spring training and told me that he wanted his equipment," said Stephens. "I didn't know what to think, but he had clearance and he hit the field running and didn't miss a lick out there. He's going to help us."

Siruta never lost much weight through his experience.

"I only lost 10 to 15 pounds. I only got down to 180," he said. "I'm back up over 190 now."

Naturally, Siruta is a little behind some of the athletes who had the benefit of the off-season program, but it isn't an obstacle that concerns him.

"It really felt good to hit that field," he said. "It was just good to be back out there.

"I'm behind a little. I'm still trying to get my plays down because I played a guard as a sophomore and they moved me to tackle. I was pretty out of shape from the surgery and chemo, and I'm still not all the way back. I still get tired faster than the other guys, but I'm going to work hard this summer and get ready to play. I've got some catching up to do if I want to play next year, but I'm going to play."

Lee head football coach Earl Miller still shakes his head when you mention Siruta.

"He's our miracle out there. He puts everything in perspective for all of us," said Miller. "We thought we had lost him. When something like this happens, football isn't very important. But when a kid bounces back like he has, maybe football is important again. Hopefully, it gave him a focus when he was going through some rough times."

So now, Siruta looks to the 1990 football season and his senior year in high school, but he still has focus.

"When the playoffs come this year, I won't be in the hospital. I'll be out there playing."

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

THURSDAY, MAY 31, 1990

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: You can hold off your rivals and win a pot of gold if you proceed with caution now. Avoid taking unnecessary risks. Although your health may prevent you from engaging in some activities, proper diet and exercise will lead to new vitality. Money worries will largely evaporate by the winter holidays. While singles may wish romance were more eventful, married couples find their relationships more fulfilling than ever.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: poet Walt Whitman, superstar Clint Eastwood, actress Sharon Gless, quarterback Joe Namath.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Your creativity is of major importance. Since influential people are receptive to your ideas, you can earn extra money. Someone may try to change your political views. Stand your ground.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Work is your top priority. Events in faraway places may have a direct effect on your financial fortunes. Indecision could cause monetary losses. Taking a short journey is probably your best option.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Planning for the future should be a top priority. Although working with figures is favored now, handle money wisely. The cooling of a romance is for the best. A child's actions delight you.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Be careful not to injure someone's pride. Advice from experts may be helpful in this instance. If feeling blue, seek solitude until the mood passes. Rest and meditation will perk you up.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Move forward with confidence. Do not be awed by someone who strikes a superior attitude; be yourself. Your partner or mate may be in a difficult mood. Try to find out the cause.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A close pal shares good news. Others are anxious to spend your money; resist them. A hunch is right on target. Follow up on it! A family friend opens new doors for you.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You are inclined to overextend yourself. Finish what you start. Opening new lines of communication will enhance a marriage. Give free rein to your creative talents. Save money for a rainy day.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): The opportunity to earn a higher salary makes you eager to change jobs. Real estate can be a wise investment. Health worries lessen. Travel is favored this evening. Remember to call home.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You have considerable influence with others today. A relative helps you with a financial matter. Joint ventures can pay big dividends; seek family's cooperation. Be more appreciative of mate.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Plan work assignments in the morning, then follow your schedule closely. Good news and interesting talk add zest to your day. A long-time debt may be repaid. A short trip is on the horizon.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Friends play a special role in your professional life. Family's cooperation is necessary to improve a financial situation. Mate could make a special request. Comply without asking a lot of questions.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Innovations prove especially valuable in changing the business picture. Express yourself more clearly and you will reach your career goals sooner. New financial gains put you in a happy frame of mind.

TODAY'S CHILDREN are ambitious and enthusiastic but sometimes flighty. They must learn to channel their energies into one project at a time. A tendency to procrastinate should be nipped in the bud. Too often, these Geminis will ignore helpful advice.

Opening lead: Queen of ♡

If you are going to try some shenannigans at the bridge table, do so as early as possible, before the opponents have learned much about the hand. We enjoyed this piece of larceny.

In some senses, South's king of spades was a mixed blessing. Without that card South might have chosen three clubs as a rebid, which might have led to a club slam that could have been made without a trump lead, since declarer has just enough entries to set up a long spade to take care of the heart loser. As it was, six no trump had no play, largely because of the duplication in diamonds. There were 11 top tricks, and no obvious way to establish a 12th.

Declarer won the opening spade lead in dummy and immediately led the jack of spades. East decided that declarer was going for a finesse, so the defender ducked smoothly. When the king of spades held, declarer claimed 12 tricks.

While we have a certain amount of sympathy for East, we are not sure that, if South was a competent declarer, ducking the ace of spades withstands the cruel light of day. One tipoff is declarer's choice of the jack as the lead from the board. More natural is to lead low to K 10. Another is the undue haste with which declarer is apparently taking a spade finesse. Very few players we know like to go down in a slam at trick two, and if the apparent "finesse" lost, the contract would be doomed. Why not first cash a few tricks to see if you can learn something about the hand?

To us, the play of the jack reeks of a swindle. We would rise with the ace—we think!

Hesburgh collects 121st honor

SOUTH BEND, Ind. (AP) — The Rev. Theodore M. Hesburgh, president emeritus of the University of Notre Dame and holder of the world's most honorary doctorates, has added another notch to his cap and gown.

Hesburgh just took on his 121st honorary degree, a doctorate of honorary letters, from St. Olaf College in Northfield, Minn. He delivered a speech at the school's 100th anniversary commencement on Sunday.

Hesburgh's academic laurels already are listed in the Guinness Book of World Records.

The priest, who retired as Notre Dame president in 1987, passed Herbert Hoover's 89 honorary degrees in 1982.

Fairbanks

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — Longtime Hollywood star Douglas Fairbanks Jr. reminisced about growing up in Rhode Island on a trip here to plug a new television program.

Fairbanks, 80, is host of "Romance Classics" on cable television's American Movie Classics and was at Providence College to introduce a screening of "Wuthering Heights."

Fairbanks was not in "Wuthering Heights," although he said he took a test for the classic, which established the late Laurence Olivier with American audiences.

"It was so bad that it was shown for a joke," he said of his own screen test.

Fairbanks recalled Tuesday the summers he spent in Westerly, where his mother married his father long before stage actor Douglas Fairbanks went off to Hollywood to become a silent screen star. The house where they stayed, Kenneth Ridge, is now a rest home for nuns.

On a visit a few years ago, Fairbanks asked "if they ever looked into the secret panels," he said.

"They didn't know anything about it. But I knocked on the walls and found it. Inside there were three or four pieces of statuary," he said.

Paulsen

GOLDEN, Colo. (AP) — A court battle between comedian Pat Paulsen and his former wife is no joke, with Paulsen claiming she defrauded him of $200,000 and Linda Chaney-Paulsen accusing him of racketeering, libel and slander.

Paulsen testified Tuesday in Jefferson County Court that he set Chaney-Paulsen up in the booking business and she repaid him by diverting money from business accounts of Pat Paulsen Enterprises Inc. in Lakewood.

She also hid business records from him, leaked harmful stories about him to the National Enquirer and faked illnesses to get his sympathy, Paulsen alleges in his lawsuit.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actor Michael Douglas was picked to receive the third annual Spencer Tracy Award, joining William Hurt and Jimmy Stewart as recipients of the honor praising standard-setting performances.

The award, presented Wednesday, was established by Susie Tracy, the late actor's daughter, at the University of California, Los Angeles, to pay tribute to a Hollywood star whose instinctive, natural style sets him apart from other actors.

Douglas won three successive television Emmy Award nominations for his role in the old "The Streets of San Francisco." He won an Academy Award for his role in "Wall Street."

His movie credits include "Romancing the Stone," "Fatal Attraction," "Black Rain" and "War of the Roses."

LOS ANGELES (AP) — "Cheers" star Kelsey Grammer, already serving a 30-day sentence for drunken-driving, was ordered Wednesday to stand trial on a felony cocaine possession charge.

The 35-year-old actor, who plays pompous psychiatrist Frasier Crane on the hit TV series, wore County Jail blue shirt and pants and was unshaven for the hour-long preliminary hearing that resulted in the trial order.

Municipal Court Judge Aviva Bobb ordered him back to court June 13 for arraignment. If convicted of cocaine possession, he could be sentenced to three years in prison.

Grammer has served one week of a 30-day sentence for drunken driving. Filming for "Cheers" is over for this season and Grammer's jailing did not affect the show.

Police stopped Grammer's car on April 14, 1988, for expired license tags. A check showed an arrest warrant had been issued for Grammer because he missed a court appearance on a drunken-driving conviction that year.

While riding in the police patrol car, a packet of cocaine fell from Grammer's pocket, officers said. The cocaine trial involved that incident.

BELLEVUE, Wash. (AP) — Arthur Woodley, an aviation pioneer who brought air shuttle service to Alaska at a time when dog teams were used to transport supplies there, has died at age 84.

Woodley died Monday at his home in this Seattle suburb. The cause of death was not given.

In 1932, Woodley founded Woodley Airways, which offered passenger service between Anchorage and Nome with the motto "Have Plane, Will Travel." It was a one-plane, one-pilot operation, but quickly caught on as an alternative to the month-long dog-sled journey.

Johnson ponders Yankee position

N.Y. Times News Service

On the day after he was dismissed, Davey Johnson said that he expected to return to the big leagues, perhaps even this season, and he did not rule out the possibility that he might surface in New York someday in the pinstripes of the Yankees.

"I wouldn't discount it," Johnson replied when asked Wednesday about the Yankees.

"But I wouldn't want to put that kind of pressure on Bucky Dent. I hope he's successful. Anybody who manages in New York feels the same pressure."

He was asked if he wanted to manage again, and he replied: "I hope so. I want to."

He also was asked if he might return as a manager during this season and he replied: "It's conceivable I'd accept a job this season."

Has anyone called yet? "Nope," he said, laughing.

Johnson, in two telephone interviews on his first day back home in Florida, said he was shocked but not bitter at his dismissal, defended his record and his players, conceded that he had been "a little rebel" and expressed good will for the man who had deposed him as manager of the Mets.

The Yankees were drawn into the managerial drama because they were doing even worse than the Mets.

They stood seventh and last in the American League's East, making life dicey for Dent.

George Steinbrenner, the owner of the club, has been deflecting questions about Dent's security, and refused to discuss the possibility of hiring Johnson after the Mets dismissed him Tuesday in Cincinnati.

But speculation arose immediately that Steinbrenner might make a theatrical move and hire the manager who had steered the Mets from last place to first in the National League's East while attendance at Shea Stadium nearly tripled.

Johnson was asked twice if he might be receptive to an overture from the Yankees, and both times he answered in the same vein: He didn't want to intrude, but he also didn't shoot down the idea.

He was asked if he would feel comfortable in the American League, and he recalled that he had played seven seasons for the Baltimore Orioles.

Then, after he complained that the Mets had stopped communicating with him, he was asked if he could get along with Steinbrenner, who changes managers about once a year.

"One thing, you'd definitely have a lot of conversations," Johnson said.

Vincent not as sure as Ueberroth

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Four years after Peter Ueberroth declared baseball drug-free, Fay Vincent says he isn't so sure about that.

Ueberroth, then commissioner, celebrated the start of the 1986 baseball season by saying drugs were "flat over ... done." Vincent, the current occupant of the office, wishes he could be that certain.

"I worry about it," Vincent told a delegation of Associated Press Sports Editors on Wednesday. "I don't know the extent to which they exist in baseball. Is it 1 percent or 20 percent? There's no way to know and I can't find out."

Vincent said he believes most players would support a drug testing program. "Nobody wants the circumstance to be ignored," the commissioner said. "We've talked to the union about the extent of the problem. Nobody knows. But any statement that baseball is free of drugs can't be supported. I believe there is a problem. I don't know how great it is."

The 90-minute meeting touched on a variety of subjects:

■ On expansion: The commissioner said baseball "has a limited appetite for expansion" beyond two National League teams planned for 1993. He also said the most important issue for new franchises is the quality of ownership. "We have to find powerful ownership with the capacity to put up money and the strength to persevere during times we expect they will lose money," he said. "We need good people. There is a tendency to overlook that. The people are vital."

■ On his investigation of New York Yankees owner George Steinbrenner's involvement with gambler Howie Spira: "We're getting close. We're working hard at it and approaching the later innings. We're trying hard to get it finished. It's being done in a serious way."

■ On Pete Rose's chances for reinstatement: "I don't know what the future holds in terms of that. I'll make the decision. I'll live with it."

■ On television: "Indications are games on Saturday are rated where they've been historically rated. CBS has not heard from its affiliates panting for more baseball on Saturdays. My view is we got the number (of national TV games) to 16. If CBS wanted more, we'd talk. They haven't at the moment. We'll wait and see how the season goes. I think the Sunday night games have been a terrific franchise for ESPN. There's nothing else to do. Everybody's sunburned and tired. So you sit back and watch a ballgame."

■ On Congress: "It's easy for Congress to say it is on the side of more baseball on television. Life is not that simple. Congress doesn't deal terrifically well with facts."

■ On succeeding the late Bart Giamatti: "I miss Bart. Not many days go by that I don't think of our times together. They were great times. He was down to earth. He could use language as vulgar as a stevedore or as florid as a poet. I love the job and the challenge of doing it well. I don't like the way I got here."

■ On his job: "I wonder is it always one crisis after another? First, there was the Rose thing. Then Bart died and that was a terrific trauma. The earthquake at the World Series. Labor. Steinbrenner. Expansion. Given the complexity of American life, the role of baseball and its visibility, this position is one major go after another. It's as good a way as one can spend his time. What I really enjoy is I get paid to go to ball games. I'm going to six games next week, a baseball orgy. And nobody sits in front of me."

O's boss Robinson draws three-game suspension

Associated Press

MINNEAPOLIS — Baltimore Orioles manager Frank Robinson is looking forward to telling his side of the story after he was suspended for three games Wednesday for abusing American League umpire Drew Coble.

Robinson said he will appeal the suspension. The hearing before AL president Bobby Brown is set for Thursday, meaning Robinson's status wasn't affected for Wednesday night's Baltimore-Minnesota game — during which Coble umpired at second base.

"I want to have my say. I want to see what everyone has to say. I'll save my comments for the league president," Robinson said Wednesday.

Robinson, who once threatened to quit because he said umpires were harassing his players, called Coble a "liar" and "a no-good human being" after an argument that resulted in his ejection from Monday's Orioles-Twins game.

Robinson, who is black, has also accused Coble of being prejudiced. Coble said Robinson should be ashamed of himself for making such an accusation.

Brown said the suspension was for "physical contact with the umpire, use of abusive language, delay of the game and inappropriate post-game remarks to the press."

Robinson said that Coble initiated the contact. Asked if he regretted either getting into the argument with Coble or calling him names afterward, Robinson said: "No."

Most Orioles didn't want to talk about Monday's incident. Those who did said they were glad they had a manager who sticks up for them.

"We haven't had real good blood with Coble," Craig Worthington said. "He's made a few bad calls against us and Frank was just sticking up for us. When he feels cheated, he is going to state his opinion."

Said Randy Milligan: "He's just interpreting rules the best way he knows how and is sticking up for the team."

But Milligan added: "Sometimes I don't even know what he's arguing about."

Robinson threatened to quit as manager just before the All-Star break last year because he said he was frustrated by umpires. The threat came after John Shulock ruled that Orioles baserunner Phil Bradley had interfered with Brewers second baseman Jim Gantner.

Tarkanian case draws close to conclusion

LAS VEGAS (AP) — The NCAA Infractions Committee will meet in Kansas City June 23 to consider final action in a 13-year battle with UNLV basketball coach Jerry Tarkanian that reached the U.S. Supreme Court.

The NCAA may ask the university to take some self-imposed action as a final resolution to the landmark case, according to a source who declined to be identified.

The source, who is familiar with the UNLV program, said one possibility could be that the NCAA would ask that Tarkanian's recruiting be limited.

Tarkanian won his first national championship with a 103-73 victory over Duke last month.

"I would expect that they would ask the institution to take some type of action," the source said. "They have no way to get to Jerry, in terms of his job."

Tarkanian is protected from suspension by an injunction he obtained years ago and which remains in effect.

Tarkanian was out of town Wednesday and unreachable for comment.

The battle began in 1977 when the NCAA placed UNLV on probation for recruiting violations and ordered Tarkanian suspended for the same two-year period. The university served the probation, but Tarkanian went to state District Court and obtained an injunction that prevented the university from suspending him.

The dispute went to the Nevada Supreme Court, which sided with Tarkanian, then to the U.S. Supreme Court, where he lost on a 5-4 decision in December 1988. The high court ruled that the NCAA, as a voluntary organization, did not have to provide due process in administering penalties. The same court ruling said a university did, however, have to provide employees due process.

Attorneys said in January that the NCAA and Tarkanian had worked out a stipulation that would require Tarkanian to pay a judgment of $21,000 to cover court costs. He would also pay his own legal fees, estimated at $340,000.

Prices rise

NEW YORK (AP) — Crude oil and gasoline prices rose Wednesday as traders tried to determine the extent of damage an early morning earthquake caused to Romanian oil fields and refineries.

The July contract for West Texas Intermediate rose 10 cents to $18.08 per 42-gallon barrel on the New York Mercantile Exchange following an 18-cent increase Tuesday.

The move prompted Marathon to raise its posted price for WTI to $17 per barrel.

The price of crude rose 20 cents to 30 cents a barrel early Wednesday because of concerns that the earthquake, which struck at 6:40 a.m. Eastern time, had damaged oil installations in Romania and along a fault line into Turkey and the Black Sea, said Peter Beutel, assistant director of the energy group at Elders Futures Inc.

Dollar gains

NEW YORK (AP) — The dollar gained against most major currencies except the British pound Wednesday, benefiting from weakness in West German marks.

The pound was quoted late in London at $1.6930 compared to $1.6953 late Tuesday.

The dollar rose in Tokyo 0.05 yen to a closing rate of 150.75 yen.

Selected late dollar rates in New York, compared with Tuesday's late quotes, included: 1.6825 West German marks, up from 1.6740 West German marks; 1.42265 Swiss francs, up from 1.4105; 5.6735 French francs, up from 5.6380; 1,237.75 Italian lire, up from 1,229.50; and 1.17675 Canadian dollars, down from 1.17945.

Gold was quoted at a bid of $366.65 an ounce late in London, down from $367.60 late Tuesday.

Silver for current delivery fell to $5.047 a troy ounce on New York Comex from $5.138 on Tuesday.

Cashing bonds

Bill Doyle says the ease of cashing of a matured bond depends on the form that bond is in.

Mine closed

GRANTS, N.M. (AP) — Chevron Resources Co. has decided to abandon New Mexico's last uranium mine, which had halted mining and production Jan. 12 because of low uranium prices, company officials said.

Fare wars

DALLAS (AP) — Three of the nation's major air carriers have cut prices on trips of less than 500 miles in the second recent price markdown aimed at luring summer travelers.

Northwest Airlines on Tuesday reduced the fare for a round-trip, short-haul flight to $158, a cut of $40 to $60 per ticket. Both American Airlines and Delta Airlines said they will match the Northwest price reductions in many markets.

Reports indicate sluggish economy

■ Economic indicators released by the government Wednesday gave signs that the U.S. economy will continue to experience sluggish growth, with pockets of weakness, analysts say.

By John D. McClain

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government's main economic forecasting gauge in April fell for the second time in three months, a sign analysts said portends continued sluggish growth with pockets of real weakness.

The Commerce Department said Wednesday that its Index of Leading Economic Indicators, designed to forecast economic activity six to nine months in advance, fell 0.2 percent in April — due in large measure to the third straight monthly drop in building permits.

Underscoring the weakness in the construction industry, the department released a second report saying that new home sales had fallen 1.6 percent to 546,000 units in April. That was the lowest level since 521,000 homes were sold as the nation emerged from the last recession in December 1982.

With the exception of building permits, "all other components are saying pretty much that the economy is treading water — not really falling into a recessionary environment, but still not picking up any strength," said Mark M. Zandi, an economist with Regional Financial Associations in West Chester, Pa.

Economist Gilbert Benz of the Swiss Bank Corp. in New York agreed.

"This doesn't suggest we're moving into a recessionary period," he said. "It does suggest we have slow growth of about 2 percent," which he forecast would continue into the third quarter.

Many other economists are predicting economic growth of about 2 percent for the year, down from 3.0 percent last year and 4.4 percent in 1988. The gross national product, the nation's broadest measure of economy activity, grew 1.3 percent in the first quarter.

Wall Street has 3,000 in its sights

■ The return of the bull market has some analysts believing the Dow Jones could reach 3,000 soon, and some are predicting 5,000 by the end of 1993.

By Chet Currier

NEW YORK (AP) — With the return of bull-market enthusiasm that has carried stock prices to new highs in recent weeks, Wall Street is setting its sights on a lofty target — the 3,000 level in the Dow Jones industrial average.

Should the market keep rising the way it has through May, analysts point out, that once-distant objective could be reached soon.

In less than five weeks from April 27 through the close on Wednesday, the Dow — the oldest and best known measure of trends in stock prices — surged up 233.51 points, or 8.8 percent.

From Wednesday's record reading of 2,878.56, it needed only a 4.2 percent advance to reach 3,000.

As always when the Dow approaches a round-number, many professional traders and money managers are inclined to play down its significance.

For all its renown, the average comprises only a small sampling of 30 big-name stocks that do not necessarily mirror what is happening to the shares of hundreds of other substantial companies.

Still, analysts generally acknowledge that a Dow reading of 3,000 could be widely read as a signal that the bull market of the 1980s had survived a series of scandals, the crash of 1987 and a recession in the securities business itself to persist into the 1990s.

"I think it is a big psychological target," said Robert Stovall, president of Stovall-Twenty-First Advisers Inc.

A quick move to 3,000 would come less than 3½ years after the average first broke 2,000, in January 1987. That kind of advancing pace has few parallels in the history of the century-old average.

It first touched 1,000 in 1966, during some of the headiest days of a "go-go" era of enthusiasm for stocks that faltered badly in the bear markets of 1969-70 and 1973-74.

It took more than 16 years, until early 1983, for the Dow to break decisively above 1,000 and start moving steadily higher.

But as impressive as its recent exploits seem, they have left a many veteran ana-

Greyhound to remanufacture its fleet

By John A. Bolt

DALLAS (AP) — Greyhound Lines Inc., searching for ways to save money and entice new financing, said Wednesday it would remanufacture its fleet of 3,949 buses instead of replacing old ones with new models.

"Instead of buying new buses, we are going to rebuild the ones we have," President Frank Schmieder said, saying it would take five years to work through the fleet.

Greyhound, which operates the only nationwide bus system, has been experimenting with remanufacturing buses for more than a year, and had begun streamlining its maintenance operation even before bus drivers went on strike March 2.

The company has operated a reduced schedule since the 6,300 drivers walked out, and lower revenue and resulting losses have sent the company's balance sheet reeling.

Greyhound already has missed more than $14 million in lease and interest payments, putting it in violation of agreements with its creditors.

The next deadline comes Friday, when the company owes a $2.5 million payment on a $40 million loan. Spokesman George Gravley said a decision on making the payment had not been made. Greyhound also has a $2.8 million interest payment due in mid-July.

In an effort to avoid bankruptcy, Greyhound has offered to repurchase a majority of its $225 million in junk bonds for about $90 million. Greyhound must borrow the money to buy back the bonds, however, and analysts have questioned whether the company can find the financing under current market conditions.

Gravley said negotiations are continuing with possible lenders, but no announcement is imminent. The repurchase offer currently is set to expire June 18 but could be extended.

Greyhound will remanufacture its buses at an expanded garage in Jackson, Miss. and at a second, yet-to-be-determined site.

NARO state convention starts Friday

■ Gubernatorial candidate Ann Richards and Railroad Commission candidates Beau Boulter and Bob Krueger will visit the NARO state convention being held in Midland this Friday and Saturday.

Staff Report

Area mineral and royalty owners will tackle hot topics in Midland Friday and Saturday at a state meeting of the Texas chapter of the National Association of Royalty Owners, Inc., (NARO).

The association is also sponsoring legislation in the Texas Legislature regarding Texas Division Orders. A field hearing by the House Energy Committee will be this afternoon at 1 p.m. at the Hilton. The committee is chaired by State Rep. Tom Craddick and is open to the public.

Appearing at the convention Friday afternoon will be Ann Richards, Democratic candidate for Governor, and Beau Boulter and Bob Kreuger, candidates for the Texas Railroad Commission.

Also scheduled for the convention is a series of seminars, open to the public at a cost of $25 per day, will cover leasing, division order abuses, cost-netting by producers and legal problems. These will be presented both days at the Midland Center, with public registration beginning at 8 a.m.

A.G. (Grier) Brunson, chairman of NARO-Texas, sponsors of the annual meeting, said major issues affecting the state's over 800,000 royalty owners include division orders that attempt

Brokers make arbitration part of contract

By Scott Burns

Burns

Q. I have had dealings with banks, stock brokers, savings and loans, trust departments and discount brokers over the years but I have never been asked to sign an agreement that requires binding arbitration in case of a problem. I would like to have your opinion on this.

I was given an agreement to sign at a bank when I went to buy some Treasury issues. I was told that I would have to buy them through their securities company... which had the customer agreement. This really bothers me. — R.A., Abilene, Texas.

A. Most brokerage houses now have compulsory arbitration in the fine print of the customer agreement documents. Typically, the arbitration is done under the auspices of the New York Stock Exchange although the customer sometimes has the option of having the arbitration conducted by the American Arbitration Association.

Arbitration, as a concept, is good. The idea was to provide a vehicle for rapid response and settlement that would reduce legal costs for both sides; in addition, arbitration panels would be composed of individuals with experience in investments and securities, something very unlikely in a standard jury trial.

But in reality, the entire process for dealing with customer complaints is bad. Let me give you some examples:

■ Short of arbitration, you can take a complaint to the NASD. They will examine your complaint and, if they find it reasonable, may censure the broker and even fine him. I recently learned of one Dallas investor whose broker churned over $14,000 in commissions out of a $85,000 account in just over a year. The broker made multiple trades in high commission products and put the investor, a piano teacher, into a limited partnership. The NASD censured the broker, kept the complaint in his file, and fined him $2,500. That was four months ago.

The broker is still working at his firm, one of the big five, and is regarded as a top producer. The investor recovered none of his money but doesn't know whether he could stand the expense or stress of arbitration to recover his losses.

■ Arbitration itself can be time consuming and costly since many investors choose to be represented by a lawyer with experience in securities law. One case in Dallas, M. K. Peterson vs Rauscher, Pierce, Refsnes and broker Richard Juba, has been in process since November, 1987 and shows no signs of being closed. One of the arbitration panelists is only willing to make himself available for a single day every two or three months, a position that impedes closing the case.

Whatever the merits of the case itself, imagine how you would feel if you went before such an arbitration panel and a panelist told you he didn't like you. That has happened in this case.

I bet it would undermine your confidence in obtaining a fair hearing. Judging from the transcripts, the arbitration panel is following in the footsteps of Judge Roy Bean, celebrated in history as "the hanging judge."

What does this mean for you buying Treasury obligations?

Not much. If you buy Treasuries through a securities firm, you will sign an agreement. If your only transactions are Treasuries, it is unlikely there will ever be a need to arbitrate, particularly if you are the initiator of all transactions.

There is a need for arbitration because individuals give responsibility for their money to securities salesmen who are told by management that their phone and chair will disappear unless they generate enough commissions. The same brokers are measured regularly for the revenue they generate from their client asset base, with 2.5 percent being a typical annual expectation from all accounts. While there are lots of good

K P Exploration buys properties

HOUSTON (SWN) — K P Exploration, Inc., a Houston-based independent producing oil and gas company, has closed three purchases of producing oil and gas properties totaling approximately $5.3 million. The company said it believes the acquired reserves totaled approximately 6,500,000 MCF of gas and 525,000 barrels of oil.

The three properties are located in Victoria and Hockley Counties, Texas, and Jeff Davis Parish, Louisiana. K P said it will operate these properties which will bring the total wells it operates to more than 150. K P further noted that during 1990 it has acquired reserves for a total cost in excess of $8 million in five transactions.

Apache finals Louisiana well

DENVER (SWN) — Apache Corp. has completed its CL&F A-3 well in the KK sand of Gibson Field in Terrebonne Parish, La. The well flowed 7.1 million cubic feet (MMcf) of gas per day and 91 barrels of condensate per day from perforations between 14,700 and 14,805 feet. The flow rate was gauged on a 16/64-inch choke with a flowing tubing pressure of 3,441 pounds per square inch. Following recent acquisitions of additional interests, Apache increased its working interest in the well from 37.7 to 89.3 percent.

The CL&F A-3 is expected to be hooked up to pipeline in early June. Apache expects initial production of between eight and nine MMcf of gas per day and 110 barrels of condensate per day.

NARO: Royalty owners to cover number of issues

to modify oil and gas leases, plus a "lot of question marks" over proposed changes in the Texas unitization and pooling laws, now being backed by many major oil companies.

"These are dollar issues that could impact every Texas mineral and royalty owner in the pocketbook," said Brunson, a Midland royalty trust manager and rancher.

Brunson adds that a royalty interest has typically been considered a cost-free portion of production, but the deductions from many division orders "can and have zoomed up to one-hundred percent in some cases."

On the pooling and unitization front, Brunson declares that proposals now under consideration by independent producers and major oil companies may not serve the best interests of mineral owners and royalty owners.

"Texas has a system designed for the little guy, both producer and royalty owner, and it works," he says. "Thus far, I see no evidence that change is needed."

Anyone wanting to register for these public meetings may call 684-0551.

DOW: Bull market's return has met with skepticism

(From 1E)

lysts unimpressed. For one thing, these observers note, a tripling of the Dow since the '60s still leaves it struggling to keep pace with inflation.

There is plenty of skepticism as well about the prospective significance of a 3,000 Dow for the economy as a whole.

The doubts arise partly from the stock market's penchant during much of the 1980s, and again more recently, for staging its strongest advances during periods of sluggish economic growth.

Whenever business activity has picked up momentum in recent years, stock prices generally have bogged down amid fears of increasing inflationary pressures and higher interest rates.

True to form, the latest market gains have come on evidence of slackening growth, which has been accompanied by a drop in inflationary expectations and a decline in interest rates.

REPORTS: Indicators aren't signaling recession

(From 1E)

The leading indicators had risen a revised 1.0 percent in March, but that was a rebound from February's 1.0 percent loss. The index had been unchanged in January. The March gain originally was reported as 0.9 percent.

Bush administration and congressional budget negotiators could take little encouragement in Wednesday's reports. They would like a stronger economy to spur employment and consumer spending and thus generate additional government tax revenues.

In addition to the construction industry, the manufacturing sector has been pinched by high interest rates resulting from a tight Federal Reserve grip on credit to stem inflation.

BURNS: Arbitration good idea, bad process

brokers out there, the pressures of the business are extraordinary and the best investment anyone can make is in learning enough about money, stocks, and bonds to be able to defend yourself and to be independent.

Q. I understand that a woman drew her own Social Security unless they had never been employed, then they could draw a part of their husband's plan. A friend, who will retire with 35 years service and will draw company retirement benefits, said she would draw her deceased husband's benefits rather than her own since his lifetime earnings had been greater than hers. Is this correct? — S.E., Bedford, Texas.

A. Yes. A person with no work record can draw benefits equal to one-half the primary benefits of their spouse. If they have a work record, they can choose whatever method will provide the higher benefits. Since many women still earn less than men, it is common for working women to opt for the benefits they can receive without having worked.

One implication is that working women who earn significantly less than their husbands (or vice versa) are paying employment taxes that will provide them with little or no benefit.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Cashing bond easily depends on bond's form

By Bill Doyle

Q. One of my municipal bonds is due to mature Aug. 1. In the past, I have experienced delays in receiving the money for matured bonds. What is the best way to cash in a matured "muni" bond?

Doyle

A. That depends on the form of bond, as well as your ability to handle details or your aversion to details.

If the bond is in "book-entry" form, with no engraved certificate printed and your ownership recorded on computers, your chore is simplified. The brokerage firm or bank through which you bought the bond and through which your ownership is recorded, will handle the redemption of your book-entry bond.

In that case, on the maturity date, the bond's face value will be sent to the brokerage or bank and should be credited to your account immediately. Note I wrote "should," because some brokerages and banks are slow crediting customers' accounts. You can cure that by giving specific instructions that a check be sent to you — without delay.

If the bond is in either "registered" or "bearer" form and you have possession of a bond certificate, you have the choice of three methods for redeeming it: in person, by mail or through an agent.

The bond must be presented to the trustee for the bond issue. The trustee, usually a big bank, then redeems the bond at face value.

You can do this in person by going to the trustee's office with bond in hand. If you use the U.S. Postal Service, send the bond by registered mail, return receipt requested, for safety sake.

In either case, make sure you have the correct address of the trustee's office at which the bond will be redeemed. If you do not receive a redemption notice providing that information, telephone the trustee's main office. The trustee's name appears on the bond certificate.

Your third choice is to turn the bond over to a brokerage firm or bank, which will deliver the bond to the trustee, collect the redemption amount for you and probably charge a fee for that service.

Which method is "best" really boils down to which one is the least expensive and gets the money to you fastest. By that score, hand-delivery is number one if the bond trustee is a nearby bank. Otherwise, I lean toward turning the chore over to your brokerage firm or bank — with explicit instructions to forward the redemption proceeds to you as soon as that money is available.

Q. Is it safe to redeem a matured municipal or corporate bond by mail?

A. Sure it is, assuming you take some precautions.

Be certain to mail the bond to the right address. Use registered mail, return receipt requested, insured for 4 percent of the bond's face amoune bond trustee to learn how far in advance of the maturity date the trustee will accept your bond. Ask when your check will be put in the mail. Some bond trustees are painfully slow parting with bondholders' money. This is not a rap at all trustees. Many do their jobs well. But some could use a refresher course in ethics.

Q. A $100,000 municipal bond I owned matured April 1. I didn't get my check until April 10. What can I do about the 10 days interest I lost?

A. You can complain to the bond trustee and bond issuer. But the best you can hope for is an apology. You're certainly not going to collect interest for those 10 days. The bond stopped paying interest on its maturity date. The bond trustee had the use of your $100,000 from the April 1 maturity date until the $100,000 check cleared.

Former FADA employees file lawsuit

DALLAS (AP) — Former Dallas employees of the Federal Asset Disposition Association filed a class-action lawsuit in Dallas seeking severance pay and benefits totaling $10,000 to $50,000 apiece from their former employer.

The lawsuit was filed Friday in U.S. District Court against the Resolution Trust Corp., which was given responsibility to liquidate FADA under last year's thrift bailout, and Steven Seelig, director of FADA Oversight-Dissolution.

140 Card Of Thanks

TO A GRANDFATHER FROM A GRANDDAUGHTER BY TARA DAWSON

In Loving Memory of ERNEST DAWSON

My Pa-Paw lived for over 70 years
Now his family and friends are here to shed their tears
Now the only question that is left to ask is Why
We must try to think about the good and not the sad
If we only try we can make this sorrowful event not feel so bad
But every now and then we need to stop to think about him and cry
Having him gone feels like being cut by a knife
But you must realize he lived a long and fulfilling life
Now he is unbound from this world and is free to fly
Now just one more thing before we must go
Just these few words while our tears still flow
Pa-Paw, we all will love you forever but must now say good-bye.

By Joanne Langston

As a business person, what salary would you pay to an employee who would:

- publicize and market your company and your community all day, every day both nationally and internationally;
- recruit additional supply sources and transportation options, thereby reducing the cost of marketing and distributing your product;
- create and establish programs to train your work force;
- teach you how to create a business plan, to use a computer and to trade with a company in Japan or Belgium;
- host a reception or breakfast creating networking opportunities for you among 1,800 of your customers and competitors;
- sponsor a trade show, displaying your goods and services to over 500 individuals;
- represent your interests in all levels of government and keep you informed about legislation that might affect your business?

Would you pay $30,000 a year? $60,000? $100,000 or over?

Would you believe $170 a year! That's the basic cost of a membership in the Chamber of Commerce, an organization that does all of the above and more, for the City's businesses. Specific instances are detailed in stories throughout this publication; I hope you will take time to read them.

For four years I have been a very active volunteer in the Chamber, have worked in many areas, attended numerous committee, board and executive meetings and participated in three planning retreats and am serving as this year's Chamber Chairman.

Yet I am still challenged to fully comprehend the many facets of Chamber involvement on behalf of the community and its business sector. This involvement is active, progressive, growing and changing to meet new or altering needs and reflecting the talents and interests of the many Chamber volunteers.

The Chamber is a private, not a government entity, even though some of its departments, such as Convention and Visitors Bureau and Economic Development, are wholly or partially funded by government entities under contracts with the city.

The Chamber has an excellent, extremely dedicated staff for which we are all appreciative. But this limited source of manpower could not even begin to handle all of the Chamber programs without the assistance of the many Chamber volunteers.

In fact, I count that each Chamber staff member is augmented by more than 35 volunteers!

I hope as you review this publication that you will take note of these many talented and involved individuals. I hope you will also select the area in which you, yourself, would like to be involved. We not only need your talents and interests, but what you to attain the greatest benefits from your Chamber membership.

Janna King named Chamber president, CEO

The Midland Chamber of Commerce announced May 7, 1990 the hiring of Janna King as president and chief executive officer.

King is an experienced economic development professional and will greatly enhance the Chamber's economic diversification efforts.

She is presently president of the St. Cloud Area Economic Development Partnership in Minnesota. King will begin work in Midland in mid-July.

"We've hired the person we've been looking for," said Clarence Scharbauer III, a Chamber of Commerce board member and chairman of Forward Midland, the Chamber's $2.3 million economic development task force. "She will definitely be an asset to the community. We felt an obligation to the Forward Midland program to find someone to complete our goals in economic development."

King said she looks forward to her assignment in Midland.

"The community has been brought together by the oil bust of the early /mid 1980s and is committed to the diversification of the economy," she said. "This offers a tremendous professional challenge, but the community is making a volunteer and financial commitment commensurate with the challenge."

Janna King

Although more than 100 candidates applied for the Chamber's top staff position, King "was a candidate the Chamber identified and recruited," according to Joanne Langston, chairman of the Chamber's board of directors.

"We determined that the type of person we wanted was probably not going to be in the job market because they were satisfied in their present position," Langston said. "But we were looking for someone who would be challenged by our goals and impressed by the evidence of Forward Midland's community suport. King is that person."

King said her first priority will be to "work with the Chamber board of directors and Forward Midland to develop a strategic plan for the Chamber's direction, so the staff and volunteers know specifically what we want to accomplish."

King has served as the chief executive for the St. Cloud Area Economic Development Partnership since January 1987.

Under King's direction, the Partnership developed an industrial buildings and sites inventory, detailed information on all area industrial parks, a retention/expansion program for area industries and the information bases necessary for companies considering a new manufacturing location.

During her tenure, the Partnership assisted several local businesses in expansion efforts, and attracted four firms, including a major foundry. This created 350 jobs to date with 150 more committed for 1990-91.

She worked with local universities and colleges to establish an optical training program, a foundry training program, an expanded supervisory training program and a business incubator program.

"Janna's success in working with all these entities was a key part in our decision to recruit her," said Langston.

King served as executive director of Community Development in Little Falls/Morrison County, Inc. (Minnesota) from 1981-87 and as economic development program manager for Minnesota's Region 5 Regional Development Commission from 1979-81.

She is a native of Mankato, Minn. and graduated magna cum laude from Gustavus Adolphus College in St. Peter, Minn.

Convention & Visitors Bureau linguists help foreign visitors

By Lisa Barker

Imagine yourself in a foreign country. Surrounded by unfamiliar buildings and people; unable to speak the local language. If you are on vacation, chances are your trip could be difficult...unless you're a foreign tourist in Midland, Texas.

The Midland Convention and Visitors Bureau has recently developed a linguists group to aid international travelers who wouldn't know an "ain't" from a "y'all." A pool of thirty polyglots speaking from Spanish to French, to Russian, Dutch, Arabic and Sechuwan (just to name a few) help travelers by guided tours, or by just giving general directions.

The group meets bi-monthly, in the Chamber of Commerce Board Room. Gatherings usually begin in English, but drift off into groups of linguists with common language abilities.

Volunteers range in age from 18 to 80, and are either second language speakers, or foreign residents of Midland.

Qualifications for membership into the CVB linguists group varies. An ability to either fluently speak or write a second language is a must, as well as a knowledge of Midland, including tourism sights.

Future programs include "native" dinners, with members bringing samples of their home country's traditional dishes. Also planned are slide shows, or home videos of members' trips to different countries.

Chamber brings in new manufacturing company

The Midland Chamber of Commerce recently recruited another California manufacturer to the Tall City.

Fuel Harvesters Equipment Inc., of Grass Valley, Calif., recently agreed to purchase an existing 55,000-square-foot warehouse and office facility in the Midland Industrial Park. The seven-year-old company will employ 25 people by the end of 1990.

"We plan to add another 25 people per year for the next five years," said Powell Clinton, president of Fuel Harvesters. The company's expected rapid growth reflects its market — the recycling industry.

Fuel Harvesters manufacturers machinery used in the recycling of wood which in the past was buried in land fills and city dumps. This includes yard trimming debris such as tree limbs and other wood waste from construction sites and forests. A waste wood grinder and a screening machine are among the six products the company manufacturers.

Clinton said about 75 percent of the recycled wood is used as landscape material or mulch, with the remainder used as fuel for boilers, in place of coal.

The manufacturer's customers include municipalities — such as the city of San Antonio — and private industry. Sales in 1989 topped $7.5 million and are expected to rise to $10 million in 1990.

Why did the firm relocate to Midland?

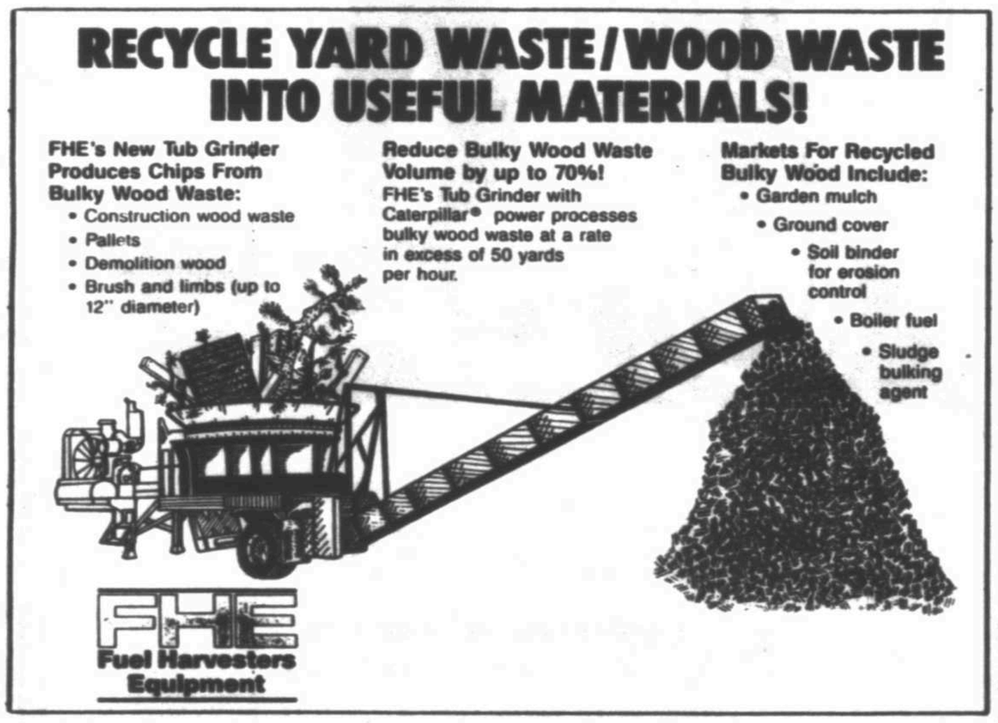
"I'd like to say it was the weather, but it really came down to the building — it was a good facility at a good price," said Clinton. The building, located at 2501 Commerce Drive, includes 14 acres of land and was recently listed at just under $1 million. It was formerly occupied by French Tool and Die Company.

"In California the facility would have been $6-7 million," said Clinton. "In Grass Valley, four acres of bare land would cost what the whole facility cost."

Chamber officials said the Fuel Harvesters recruitment is an important one.

"This is a good example of diversification," said Mike Strotheide, the Chamber's interim manager and an economic development specialist. "Fuel Harvesters is indicative of the size manufacturers that are showing interest in Midland — in the 50-to-100 employee range."

In January, the Midland Chamber brought two other California companies to the Industrial Park — Isotrol Systems and Isoduct Energy Systems.



This advertisement is for Fuel Harvesters Equipment Inc. of California, soon to move to Midland to set up manufacturing.

The Implant Alternative.

If you've been disappointed in conventional solutions to your missing teeth, you should know about an important new alternative: dental implants.

A dental implant is a tiny cylinder which is surgically implanted in your jaw to replace the root of the tooth. Once in place, your natural jawbone bonds to the implant, making it a stable foundation for replacement teeth, a permanent bridge, or anchored, removable dentures. Dental implants are fixed so securely, in fact, they can actually restore the feeling you had with your own natural teeth. As well as your ability to eat just about anything you want - confidently.

There's an important job waiting for you that requires something very specific. Love.

The job is volunteering. And nowadays, because federal, state, and local governments have been forced to reduce spending in many social areas, this job is more important than ever.

At ARCO, many of our employees do a lot of listening, hugging, and hand holding as volunteers at hospitals, human service agencies, and schools in their communities.

We, in turn, give them encouragement and support to do it.

A SUITE FOR THE PRICE OF A ROOM®

As America's first all-suite hotel system, Lexington has learned that the care and service we give our guests is the most important feature we can offer. But, in addition to lots of friendly people, you'll get something from us that most hotels don't have.

A two-room suite for the same price as an ordinary, vanilla hotel room with just four walls and a bath.

We understand it's the little things you miss when you're away from home. Like that first cup of coffee when you're getting ready in the morning. Or raiding the refrigerator whenever you feel like it.

And we're not one of those new, high-priced suite hotels with 15-story garden atriums, tropical birds and waterfalls. We're friendly and relaxed with common sense prices and services.

So, whether you're away from home for a couple of nights, a couple of weeks - or even longer, we think you'd be more comfortable in a suite. Why not try us out and see for yourself!

A SUITE DEAL FOR YOU

We'd like to have you or your out-of town guests give us a try. So, we're making a "Suite Deal" even sweeter.

Simply present coupon at check-in and get $10 off either our studio or one and two bedroom suites.

In addition, we offer substantial discounts to long term guests for training classes, seminars, family reunions, class reunions, and construction crews. For more information please call Ray or Lori at (697-3155).

Offer valid through 12/31/90 subject to availability at the Odessa or Midland Lexington locations. $10.00 Discount applies to published rates.

Tourism committee tells world about Midland

By Susan Snelson

Telling the world about Midland and inviting people from far and near to spend time in our city to enjoy the many attractions which are part of our area is the objective of the Convention and Tourism committee of the Midland Chamber of Commerce.

Members of this committee have spent hours brain-storming and developing ideas to incorporate in an aggressive selling program the tourist and convention attractions of Midland.

Part of the plan is to involve the travel agencies serving this market so that each becomes a developer and promoter of groups that might be brought to Midland.

One of the features being worked on is to recruit people who speak a foreign language and who would have an interest in serving as an interpreter when guests from other countries are in Midland.

Anyone who is fluent in a foreign language is requested to call the Chamber of Commerce and volunteer for this activity.

In the travel agency business many of the agents in Midland take familiarization trips to other parts of the world to develop first-hand knowledge about tourist attractions, hotels, restaurants and key facts.

It is our plan to adopt this idea with organized efforts to bring key people from the tourist industry to Midland for a familiarization experience. When they do come, we plan to have some special tools for use. A tourist script is being developed under the guidance of Joan Baskin, a past president of the Midland Chamber.

It will cover in a most interesting way the history of the area, of the city, its key industries and the many unusual attractions which we feel will compare most favorably with what any other area provides. Plans call for the eventual preparation of a special cassette tape which will be utilized in hosting conventions and tour groups.

Local travel agencies are working on a plan to market for tour groups, special events or exhibits at the Museum of the Southwest or the Petroleum Museum. Many Midlanders participate in groups going to other cities for special events or exhibits. I believe that a properly structured plan will result in many new visitors coming to Midland. As part of the preparations our Chamber committee is developing a comprehensive notebook which can be available to those planning or inviting conventions groups.

It is widely recognized that visitors to a city provide a tremendous economic boost and it behooves each of us to become active in marketing the many first-rate activities and attractions which we have in Midland.

Our committee is hoping to develop ways of getting timely recognition in other areas as to the events and attractions in Midland. Ideas are indeed welcome and I hope that you will call the Chamber and pass on your suggestions as this is a job for everyone, not just our committee.

Education committee aims to reduce dropout rate

By Susan Hammons

The Education committee of the Midland Chamber of Commerce realizes that an educated work force fosters a healthy economy and wants to let business people and other Midlanders know how they can help keep kids in school.

On Sunday, May 6, the Education Committee, the Private Industry Council and th Midland Reporter-Telegram published a four-page tabloid with information about a dozen existing Midland programs that have among their goals preventing school dropouts.

"One of the most startling statistics is that one third of our kids drop out," said Molly Bedrich, Education Committee chairman. "That is both a local and state figure."

The dropout rate is especially high among Hispanics. "One half of the Hispanic students who enter the first grade will never graduate," Bedrich said.

Although some potential dropouts can be reached in the secondary school, teachers in the primary grades say the time to target potential dropouts is at that level, according to Bedrich.

The tabloid, which also can be used as a poster, will give phone numbers for each program that a person can call to get involved. Copies of the special edition will be available at the Midland Chamber.

Among other projects that the Education Committee sponsors are Teacher of the Month and a barbeque to welcome new teachers.

The goal of the Education Committee is to support the school systems in Midland to reach the forefront of a movement toward educational excellence in Texas and to educate a quality workforce.

The objectives are:

- Further develop programs recognizing outstanding educators and incentives promoting excellence in teaching, and raising the professional standing and esteem of teachers.
- Encourage business to become more actively involved in the school systems — committing financial and people resources, enriching business an economic education programs, educating employees to education process concerns, and promoting participation in student academic and attendance incentives.
- Increase business knowledge and understanding of local schools to foster broad public support for education.

Transportation Committee efforts pay off for Midland

By Kyle Womack

The Transportation Committee is a part of the Community Development division of the Chamber. The goals of the Transportation Committee are to monitor street and highway planning and recommend needed improvements; and in cooperation with Midland International Airport, work to secure additional air service for the Permian Basin.

With respect to highways, the Committee has been involved this year in monitoring and participating in the development of a Highway Truck System plan by the State Department of Highways and Public Transportation (SDHPT).

The system is intended to serve as a 30-year plan to identify existing and future four lane divided highways within the State. Similar plans are being developed by all states. With the support and testimony of the City, County and our State elected representatives, the Transportation Committee is optimistic that at least one highway (S.H. 158 from Midland to Sterling City), and possibly another (S.H. 349 from Midland to Lamesa), which serves Midland will be included in the Trunk System plan.

Several major highway projects will also be constructed in Midland this year as a result of continued efforts to increase highway funding for Midland County. In 1989, approximately $13 million were spent by SDHPT in Midland County. In 1990, construction will near $19 million.

These projects include the completion of the interchanges on S.H. 191 at Loop 250 and at S.H. 158, the construction of the main lanes of S.H. 191 from Midland to Odessa, Phase II of the Lamesa Road project and the extension of F.M. 662 to F.M. 1788.

The Department of Airports, in cooperation with both the Midland and Odessa Chambers, has been working diligently to secure additional air service for Midland International Airport. Surveys of major businesses have indicated that the major need for non-stop or more direct service is to Denver, with additional service to Austin, San Antonio and Houston.

In addition to encouraging our existing carriers to expand service, several other carriers have been contacted during the year including Continental, Delta, United Express and others. To show our appreciation to Southwest Airlines, American Airlines and America West for the vital service that they do provide, the Midland and Odessa Chambers sponsored an Airport Appreciation Day on May 16.

Government Affairs group represents political world

An expert committee of community leaders makes certain Midland is represented when government actions affect the Tall City.

Under the guidance of Community Development vice president Nadine Craddick and committee chairman Grant Billingsley, the committee meets monthly to discuss issues such as Worker's Compensation and to plan appropriate responses.

Committee members have made trips to Austin and Washington to lobby for Midland issues, as well as to sponsor receptions for key legislators.

The group also submits endorsements for government nominations and works with other civic groups to solidify the community on such projects as the Freeport Exemption on manufactured goods in transit.

Objectives 2000 to map out Midland's bright future

The success of the Chamber in organizing Objectives for the '80s has lead naturally to Objectives 2000, a community input program designed to carry Midland into the 21st Century.

The purpose of Objectives 2000 is to identify, define and establish goals which the Midland community aspires to achieve during the decade of the 1990s. These goals or objectives, developed through citizen involvement and the guidance of community leaders, will be documented in a final report and distributed for review and reference by planners and decision makers involved in all aspects of life in Midland. The Objectives program is under the sponsorship of the Midland Chamber of Commerce, with funding provided by Forward Midland.

"In the past, the Objectives have become very useful guideposts for progress," according to Ed Runyan, co-chairman of Objectives 2000. "Our hope is that this program will be just as important in building a better community and in extending our grasp for prosperity as we enter the next century."

Darlene Gifford, co-chairman with Runyan, agrees.

"The program was the original catalyst for many important endeavors that have greatly improved life in Midland: the development of Midland College, the construction of the Midland Center and the Lamesa Road project, are just a few," said Gifford.

"Objectives gives us the opportunity to think about the future, to look forward and to dream a little; it's an exciting process."

Objectives 2000 has its origins in 1967, when a group of dedicated citizens established Objectives for Midland, at a time when our community was economically struggling.

Guy McCrary will serve as executive director of Objectives 2000. He held the same position in Objectives for the '80s, while an officer at the First National Bank of Midland.

"I am very gratified by the opportunity to participate again," said McCrary. "It's going to be a little different challenge than in 1979, but I'm confident of a successful outcome."

Four groups are currently in progress. Anyone seeking additional information about Objectives 2000 may call Guy McCrary at 687-5526, Darlene Gifford at 684-1975, Ed Runyan at 682-7375 and Nadine Craddick at 694-2894.

Image/public relations promotes Midland, Chamber

Some of Midland's most creative minds meet monthly at the Chamber to develop ideas with one aim: polishing the image of Midland.

Chaired by volunteer Susan Hammons, the committee this year sponsored the "Midland I Love You" essay contest in the Reporter-Telegram and worked with other Chamber committees to promote and advertise events such as Business Expo 90.

The committee is currently working on a photography project tentatively titled "Lighten Up Midland." The Chamber will ask downtown building managers to turn on their office lights on one special evening. Photographers from across America will be invited to photograph the spectacular Midland skyline.

A photography seminar and contest are also being suggested. The initial target for the project is April 1991.

The committee also coordinates radio and television interviews on Chamber activities and assists the Communications manager on video and multi-image producitons.

Membership services provide key networking

"It's not who you know, it's who you don't," has been a slogan of the Midland Chamber for several years. Providing an environment where members can make business contacts in a social setting is the goal of the Chamber's membership services committee, chaired by Rollie Hyde.

The committee sponsors new member orientations, mixers, membership breakfasts and special events.

Most recently, the committee hosted a successful rally for the Confederate Air Force, attracting 400 civic-minded Chamber members and guests as they welcomed CAF executive director Ralph Royce.

Other events this year sponsored by the committee include three mixers, two breakfasts and the most successful "Pack the Park" promotion for the Midland Angels in the 15 years of the event.

The committee has plans for a baseball mixer on June 21 at Angels Stadium and a breakfast July 24 at Centennial Plaza, featuring new Chamber CEO Janna King.

Also scheduled are a M-Squad-hosted golf tournament and the annual meeting on October.

The Membership Services committee can always use workers who are creative, enjoy planning and executive details or simply have a knack for designing and decorating large meetings on a budget.

If this sounds like your type of activity, call the Chamber today and ask for Jane Inskeep!

The Membership Services committee arranges monthly events for Chamber members and guests, including the popular "Pack the Park" nights at Angel Stadium. This year almost 10,000 fans took advantage of free Chamber tickets, setting a record of 4,336 attendance on April 26.

MOHRE continues to promote area as retirement community

A person retiring in Midland or Odessa can bask in a sunny climate that rivals that of Phoenix, smack a golf ball down the fairway on any one of a number of attractive golf courses and have ready access to medical care.

These are just a few plusses the Midland-Odessa Health and Retirement Endeavor has touted since its inception in 1987 in promoting the area as a retirement haven to boost a sagging energy-dependent economy.

Known as MOHRE, it grew out of combined efforts of citizens of both cities. The Midland Chamber of Commerce, as well as the Odessa Chamber, has helped to support the non-profit organization since that time, said Gene Solloway, current president of the MOHRE board of directors that includes community leaders from both towns.

Instrumental in funding for MOHRE has been the Permian Basin Private Industry Council, which has given $92,000 in grants to the economic diversification project.

"Without the commitment of the PIC board of directors and Willie Taylor (director of employment and training for the Permian Basin Regional Planning Commission) we would not have reached the level of success that we've had so far," Solloway said.

MOHRE statistics point to the success. At least 600 retirement households have been established in the two cities since 1987. Using an average household annual income of $30,000, these retirees pump $19.8 million each year into the local economy.

Of newly established retirement households MOHRE contacted between March 1989 and March 1990, 81 percent moved to Midland-Odessa from out of the area and 80 percent had seen MOHRE's promotion in a magazine, newspaper or television or had heard it on the radio or from family or friends. Eighty-three percent reported that family member live in this area.

Other large contributions to MOHRE or the MOHRE Foundation — which provides a referral service — have included $25,000 from the Odessa Housing/Finance Corp., $20,000 from a local foundation and $10,000 from a Midland organization.

One way MOHRE recently advertised Midland-Odessa to prospective retirees was a 30-second television spot produced by KMID-TV and aired in February and March on CNN in the Minneapolis-St.Paul, Minn. area.

Other promotions have included color ads in New Choices and Mature Outlook magazines — both targeted to affluent people age 50 and older.

Locally, MOHRE has advertised on TV, radio, billboards and in the newspaper, encouraging residents to ask their family or friends to retire here.

Forward Midland's mission includes $2.3 million plan

The Forward Midland program is a $2.3 million, four-year economic diversification and job creation initiative of the Midland Chamber of Commerce.

Forward Midland's mission includes a strategic marketing plan and is under the leadership of Clarence Scharbauer III, chairman.

The marketing plan's primary goals are to:

- Improve, expand and diversify the economy of the Midland area.
- Induce the expansion and relocation of companies and facilities which can benefit from Midland's assets.
- Bring about new employment opportunities and generate payrolls for area citizens.
- Attract capital investment to the Midland area, enhancing the community's ability to provide quality education, infrastructure and public services.

The marketing plan sets benchmark objectives to be reached by 1993. These objectives are:

- Increase employment by 4,800 jobs.
- Increase annual aggregate payroll by $80 million.
- Utilize one million square feet of available office/industrial space.
- Add $40 million in new investment in plant and equipment.

The impact, economic and otherwise, of reaching such goals and objectives will be a greater demand of the goods and services of area businesses, a higher quality of life, improvement in schools and governmental services, more opportunity for area citizens and a generally increased level of economic activity.

Forward Midland's 1990 successes include recruitment of Isotrol, Isoduct and Fuel Harvesters from California as well as the arrival of the Confederate Air Force in the near future.
