Mantle gets Midland accident victim's liver, man claims

By Katherine Poteet
Staff Writer

A man reportedly related to the person killed in a Midland automobile accident claimed Friday that the victim's liver was the one donated to Mickey Mantle.

Tim Schultheif called several New Jersey and New York newspapers and television stations Friday, making the claim that the 63-year-old baseball legend received Richard Foley's donated liver, Christina Johnson, a reporter with the News Tribune of Woodbridge, N.J., told the Reporter-Telegram.

Schultheif claimed his mother and Foley's mother Debra, who lives in Keansburg, N.J., are sisters and that Southwest Organ Bank, which conducted the removal, had asked Ms. Foley's permission to donate Foley's liver, Ms. Johnson said.

Schultheif will conduct a press conference today at 10:30 a.m. EDT at the Keansburg Pentecostal Church. Schultheif claimed the reason he knew Foley's liver was donated to Mantle was because Foley's liver was removed at about 10 a.m. Thursday, the same time it was announced that a match had been found for Mantle.

Jacqueline-Ryan Funeral Home in Keansburg on Friday denied that Schultheif was related to the Foley family. The funeral home, which will be handling arrangements for Foley's funeral, said the immediate family — including Foley's mother — was requesting that no media attention be drawn to Foley's death.

Officials with the Southwest Organ Bank said Friday the center did not contact the Foley family and that family members of donors are never told who receives the organs. Also, officials said even if the liver went to Mantle, the center would not be able to release that information.

Foley died two days after being hit by an automobile — driven by 79-year-old Edwin Hall of Windgate — at about 5:50 a.m. Monday, said police Sgt. David Garcia. Foley had just been released from the Midland County Detention Center after being arrested two days before for disorderly conduct.

Foley apparently stepped in front of the vehicle and Hall could not avoid him, Garcia said. No charges have been filed against Hall.

Foley was declared dead at about 3:30

Drug cartel arrest

BOGOTA, Colombia — A top leader of the world's biggest drug gang, Gilberto Rodriguez Orejuela, was arrested Friday in a raid in the southwestern Colombian city of Cali, and one report said he was found hiding in a closet. Rodriguez Orejuela, along with his brother Miguel, heads the Cali cartel, which supplies 80 percent of the world's cocaine. His arrest came amid increasing pressure from the United States to crack down on the cartel. There are indictments against both brothers in several cities in the United States, including a federal indictment issued Monday in Miami that charges 61 people with drug conspiracy. Colombia, however, forbids extradition of its citizens.

OKLAHOMA CITY — In the days after the April 19 bombing, God seemed to be everywhere in Oklahoma City — in quiet moments of individual prayer, in the great memorial services of a community struggling to endure. Aviator thanks God, Marines for his rescue

Associated Press

AVIANO AIR BASE, Italy — A tearful U.S. Air Force Capt. Scott O'Grady thanked God on Friday for delivering him and said that the Marines who flew into Bosnia to snatch him to safety were the real heroes.

Exactly a week earlier, O'Grady was tumbling through the skies, thrust into terror and hostile territory by the ejector seat of his F-16C fighter jet, which had been ripped apart by a Bosnian Serb missile.

His fate wasn't assured until Thursday morning, when he came running to the helicopter of an elite Marines rescue team.

"They say they were just doing their job, but they came in there, they risked their lives to get me out," O'Grady said to squadron members and other well-wishers in a hangar at this NATO base Friday.

"If you want to find some heroes, that's where you should look, because those are the biggest heroes in the world," he said.

Earlier in his brief speech, the 29-year-old pilot from Spokane, Wash., gave thanks to others who were rooting for him, including his family and friends.

"If it wasn't for God's love for me and my love for God, I wouldn't have gotten through it, and he's the one that delivered me here and I know that in my heart," O'Grady said.

But Lt. Gen. Michael E. Ryan, who commands Allied Air Forces Southern Europe, said O'Grady deserved some credit on his own.

"He knew what had to be done once he hit the ground and he did it marvelously," said Ryan.

Tears ran down O'Grady's face, drawing attention to a red burn on his left cheek, the only visible sign of his ordeal. He was burned there and on the back of his neck while bailing out, according to Navy doctors.

For about five minutes, the cavernous hangar was silent except for the whirr and click of cameras and O'Grady's steady voice. In his first public appearance since the rescue, he thanked the

Gingrich takes Clinton up on 'showdown'

NASHUA, N.H. (AP) — Even as he insisted anew he was not running for president, House Speaker Newt Gingrich caught the White House off guard Friday and accepted President Clinton's offer for a face-to-face forum with New Hampshire voters. Both sides said they welcomed a Sunday showdown, but were bickering over details.

Gingrich set off a dramatic back-and-forth between his aides and the Clinton White House as he opened a four-day visit to New Hampshire, home of the first presidential primary.

Clinton will be in the state for a commencement address and a picnic with elderly residents Sunday. When asked Thursday about sharing the state with Gingrich, the president said it would be nice to get together with the speaker and "let citizens ask us questions."

Gingrich had barely landed in the state Friday when he gleefully accepted. "I think it would be fabulous for both of us," Gingrich said.

At two news conferences, he said it would be a dialogue, not a debate, because "this isn't the campaign year and I am not a candidate."

But it clearly would be a coup for Gingrich for the event to take place; the nine official GOP White House hopefuls could only dream of a face-to-face meeting with the president in such a critical state.

"We don't need to debate," Gingrich said. "We don't need to score points off

Girl Scouts retire Old Glory in ceremony

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

Old Glory, tattered, torn and tired from years of faithful service, was flown for the last time.

This particular old American flag, flown over Midland, was retired, returned to "mere pieces of cloth" — by cutting away the canton or blue block with 50 white stars — burned and buried in a Friday morning ceremony conducted by Midland Girl Scouts.

"This flag has served us well," a youthful voice rang over the ceremonial grounds. "It deserves to be retired in honor."

Eighteen Girl Scouts within the ranks of the Permian Basin Girl Scout Council participated in the ceremony at council headquarters, while about 500 additional scouts attending day camp and their leaders observed the patriotic ceremony.

The youthful nine-member color guard marched smartly in formation in bearing the spent flag. At the staff, the flag was unfurled,

Judge settles fight over Finals tickets

HOUSTON (AP) — Michael Harwell was willing to give up his company identification badge and his key to the executive washroom, but his tickets to the NBA Finals were another matter.

It took a state district judge to settle that dispute, nearly as heated as the battle between Shaq and The Dream. In the end, Harwell found himself slam-dunked.

State District Judge Richard Bianchi ruled Thursday that Harwell must surrender six tickets to the Orlando Magic-Houston Rockets series for the NBA title. He also must give up rights to purchase season tickets to Rockets games next season.

"It is unfortunate that the sides could not have resolved this dispute as rational adults and that it had to wind up in the courts system," Bianchi said. "They have managed to make a black lining from what has been a very silver cloud for this city."

The lawsuit, filed by Houston Cellular, also demands damages, and a full trial has been set for October. But attorneys said they believe the dispute was largely settled by Bianchi's decision.

The dispute started when company officials decided against paying for a formal Rockets' corporate sponsorship and purchasing a suite at The Summit. Deadlines for regular season tickets were approaching when sales director Matt Karst said he gave the go-ahead for Harwell to buy six season tickets for use by clients.

Harwell paid nearly $10,000 for the tickets but was reimbursed by the company. He and others had used the tickets several times by January, when he accepted a job offer from another company.

By all accounts, the professional split was amiable, and neither side thought about possible complications from the season-ticket situation when he left.

But the dispute came to a head several weeks ago, when Houston Cellular contacted the Rockets to order its playoff tickets. Company officials discovered that Harwell had purchased the company's allotment of playoff tickets in his name.

State education board rejects plea on district book selection

AUSTIN (AP) — The State Board of Education rejected a plea Friday that its individual members be prohibited from influencing school districts' choice of textbooks.

Board member Will Davis said there were concerns that the proposal by People for the American Way — which describes its purpose as promoting civil rights and civil liberties — was unconstitutional.

"I'm not going to gag anybody, and I don't want them gagging me," said Davis, a Democrat from Austin.

People for the American Way's petition stemmed from conservative board member Donna Ballard's criticism of state-approved health textbooks.

The books, which some have been called too explicit or inappropriate in their treatment of sex education, were endorsed by the state board before Ms. Ballard joined the panel.

In a letter to school board presidents in her election district, the Republican from the Woodlands said she would have voted to reject the books had she been on the board at the time.

She said they contain "offensive" and "often politically charged" sections, and that they ask children to make their own choices "without regard to existing authority."

School districts have been allowed to use state money to buy books only from the single state-approved list, unless they received a state waiver. Changes in state education law this year will give districts a broader range of choices.

Ms. Ballard told the local board presidents in the letter that she respected their right to make their own choices. But she added that school districts' options included adopting or rejecting the books, or buying them and then not using them.

That last option was particularly criticized as wasteful of tax dollars by Harriet Peppel of People for the American Way.

Ms. Peppel and Cecile Richards of the Texas Freedom Alliance asked for a rule forbidding state board members to influence school districts in adoption of instructional materials.

But the state board's school finance committee rejected the idea Thursday, and the full board endorsed that action Friday with a voice vote.

Ms. Peppel said her group heard of several school officials who felt pressured by the letter from Ms. Ballard, although the board member has said she simply was outlining their choices.

Doctors identify cluster of infants with brain defect

EAGLE PASS (AP) — Health experts have identified another cluster of babies born with no brains or partial brains along the Texas-Mexico border, this time in the Eagle Pass area.

Two other babies were born with spina bifida, a related neural tube defect, the San Antonio Express-News reported Friday.

The cluster of cases is the largest since 1991, when six infants were born with the brain defect, known as anencephaly, in a six-week period in the Brownsville-Matamoros area.

The Texas Department of Health Neural Tube Defect Surveillance and Intervention Project, which monitors such cases along the border, documented the cluster in Eagle Pass and across the border in Piedras Negras, Mexico, from December 1994 through March.

"We are concerned with the unusual number of anencephaly and spina bifida cases," said Dr. Russell Larsen, project director. "This is why we are calling it a cluster, and this is why we are investigating."

Two cases of anencephaly and one of spina bifida were reported in the Eagle Pass area, and four cases of anencephaly and one of spina bifida were reported in Piedras Negras.

The information was contained in a periodic report issued this week that Larsen sends to the Centers for Disease Control.

Larsen's research team is investigating the occurrences with medical officials from Piedras Negras.

"We have been working very closely with Dr. Larsen and the project team to attempt to determine the cause of these defects in a firm, collaborative effort between both countries," said Dr. Benjamin Eloy Chapa of Mexico.

Babies afflicted with anencephaly are stillborn or die shortly after birth. Spina bifida is treatable, and many people who receive proper medical attention lead productive lives.

Discoveries of clusters of anencephalic babies in Cameron County several years ago led to close attention being paid to the defect all along the Texas-Mexico border.

Midland to see some clouds

Staff Report

The forecast for today calls for partly cloudy skies and a 20 percent chance of showers and thundershowers with a high in the low 90s and south to southeast winds at 10-20 mph.

Tonight should be mostly cloudy with a 30 percent chance of showers or thundershowers and a high in the mid-60s, according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport.

Sunday should be mostly cloudy with a 30 percent chance of showers and a high in the mid-80s.

After an overnight low of 74, Friday's high reached 96, compared to the record high for that date of 106 set in 1994. The record low was 55 set in 1955.

STATE

Sirens sounded over several areas in West Texas and the Wichita Falls area Friday as several tornadoes were spotted over the area.

There were no immediate reports of damage or injuries.

Watchers reported large tornadoes near Vernon and Alpine and possible tornadoes near Wichita Falls, Marathon and Alpine. All were in open country, police said. Baseball-size hail was reported with the storm.

The tornado was part of a severe thunderstorm that raged over the rolling hills along the Red River, between Childress and Wichita Falls, as well as the valleys around the Davis Mountains late Friday.

The storm formed along and ahead of a dry line over portions of the low rolling plains, where very warm and muggy air collided with drier air.

Mid-afternoon temperatures ranged from 78 at Dalhart to 95 at Lubbock.

Meanwhile, stiff southerly winds stirred warm, humid air over the eastern half of the state Friday. Winds of 10 to 25 mph were common under partly to mostly cloudy skies.

Temperatures warmed into the 90s across much of the region due to enough sunshine and the southerly winds. Afternoon temperatures ranged from 87 at Wichita Falls and Palacios to 99 near Del Rio.

AVIATOR: Rescued pilot calls Marines 'real heroes'

(From 1A)

Marines who darted through early morning fog to scoop him up.

F-16 jets flew overheard in his honor and babies in strollers clutched tiny American flags. Parked behind the dais was an F-16, its cockpit open.

O'Grady was flying in a NATO mission on June 2 when his plane was hit over northwest Bosnia.

He told his debriefers that he felt the plane break up and ejected from the aircraft. He found himself plummeting down through cloud cover and then emerged to see a village in Bosnian Serb territory.

O'Grady opened his parachute and landed several hundred yards inside a wooded area. He immediately hid by flattening himself on the ground and covering any exposed skin with his gloves.

Shortly after he landed, two civilians came within a few dozen feet of O'Grady but did not spot him. He reported that he could hear search parties looking for him, as well as occasional gunfire, and expressed relief that the search parties did not include dogs.

A Navy doctor has said O'Grady told him that he ate insects and grass and drank rainwater when his survival rations ran out.

As he left the hangar at Aviano on Friday, O'Grady was handed a magnum of champagne, which he didn't immediately pop. No official celebrations were planned, said Capt. Bob Wright, who was flying adjacent to O'Grady when the missile hit.

Wright recalled how he tried to control his shock at seeing the missile strike O'Grady's aircraft so he could concentrate on marking the position.

Ryan said the flight was over an area where NATO did not suspect that the Serbs had a missile-launcher.

"In my personal opinion, they intentionally set a trap," the general said.

O'Grady wants to resume flying soon, Ryan said. But first he will be returning to the United States to see his family. The trip also may include a visit to the White House.

Aviano, in northeast Italy, is the staging area for daily NATO flights to enforce a U.N.-declared no-fly zone over Bosnia, where war has been raging for more than three years.

Officials concede failures in downing of F-16

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — As the Clinton administration celebrated the flawless rescue of an American pilot in Bosnia, NATO and administration officials acknowledged Friday that intelligence and planning failures contributed to the downing of the F-16 fighter in the first place.

Gen. John Shalikasvili, the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and other senior military officials have said in testimony before Congress this week that NATO did not expect such an attack because there was no intelligence indicating that the Bosnian Serbs had deployed sophisticated surface-to-air missiles in the area.

Since late last fall, however, NATO officials have reported mounting evidence that the Bosnian Serbs have improved their air defenses on the ground by dispersing their mobile surface-to-air missiles to new sites around the country, by upgrading the missiles' capabilities and by installing dummy sites in places where they could distract NATO air crews.

In addition, the Bosnian Serbs have repeatedly said they will protect their air space by whatever means they can. And after NATO twice bombed Serbian ammunition dumps late last month, the Bosnian Serbs declared the U.N. peacekeepers an enemy and voided all Security Council resolutions affecting them.

A number of senior U.S. and NATO military officials have pointed out that NATO has flown 69,000 flights over Bosnia to prevent the Bosnian Serbs from flying their own aircraft, a point Lt. Gen. Wesley Clark, director of the Strategic Planning and Policy for the Joint Chiefs of Staff, made again in testimony on Thursday and again Friday: the F-16 was only the fifth NATO plane — and the first American plane — to have been hit and only the second to have been shot down.

The mere fact that an American plane was hit has fed criticism of the Bosnia policy on Capitol Hill, with lawmakers of both parties raising questions about the vulnerability of American troops if they are called on to help U.N. peacekeepers and demanding to know why NATO did not destroy surface-to-air missile sites, especially after Bosnian Serb missile attacks on NATO late last year.

In retrospect, NATO and American officials said Friday, NATO should have been warned that the Bosnian Serbs might change their pattern of attack by the the combination of their increased military capability, their known intentions and their threats of retaliation.

"We probably got a little bit complacent," said a NATO official directly involved in the air operations over Bosnia. "We got used to their routine."

Clark made that point even more bluntly at a hearing of the House International Relations Committee on Thursday.

"Not recognizing there was a threat," he said, the F-16, which was shot down near Mrkonjic Grad, was not accompanied by aircraft that could have protected it from attack.

"The problem was an intelligence failure that led to a planning failure," he said.

In a news conference Friday in Aviano, Italy, the commander of NATO air forces in southern Europe said that he believed the American pilot, Capt. Scott F. O'Grady, flew into a deliberate trap when he was shot down by Bosnian Serb missile seven days ago.

NATO routinely monitors the skies over Bosnia as part of a Security Council mandate to bar the Bosnian Serbs from flying aircraft.

It is not unusual for air patrols to be accompanied by special aircraft carrying electronic jamming equipment that prevents surface-to-air missiles from hitting the planes. But the cost — both in manpower and the use of equipment — has made it unfeasible to fly these extra aircraft except in areas where there is a recognized threat.

In response to the downing of the F-16, NATO now regards overflights over all of Bosnia as potentially dangerous and last week changed its rules of engagement to give NATO aircraft additional protection.

NATO will now try to avoid flying over Bosnia and rely mainly on aircraft that will fly over water close to the coast and look in with long-range radar.

Any air patrols that must fly over Bosnian territory will now be accompanied by special aircraft, such as F4Gs or EF-111s, that specialize in jamming air defenses.

The U.S. commander speaking in Italy, Lt. Gen. Michael Ryan, said the Bosnian Serbs had been targeting NATO aircraft "in a very major way" since last November, adding about the downing of the the F-16, "My personal feeling is that they intentionally set a trap and sprung it and we have lots of indications that this was the case."

SHOWDOWN: Gingrich accepts Clinton's forum offer

each other. We should talk about our ideas and our visions of America's future."

The White House was initially at a loss to answer Gingrich's overture, and said Clinton was speaking hypothetically when he made the offer. But the White House then embraced the idea in theory — even as it said there were many logistical and format obstacles.

"I think the American people, when they see their leadership together in a bipartisan fashion addressing the concerns of the nation, are encouraged their leaders are doing the right thing," said White House press secretary Mike McCurry.

Clinton wouldn't see a joint appearance as a 1996 presidential skirmish because, McCurry said, "last time I checked, the speaker was not running for anything."

Perhaps not. Still, he was gushing with excitement at the prospect of a one-on-one session with the president. Gingrich even offered to meet Clinton twice Sunday — once to discuss foreign policy and again to talk domestic issues. He also invited Clinton to join him moose watching "if he's got time."

And responding to Clinton's Thursday statement that it would be fun to take Gingrich to a Dunkin' Donuts, a favorite Clinton 1992 campaign haunt, Gingrich glanced down at his considerable midsection and said: "I hardly need to go to Dunkin' Donuts, but I could be talked into it."

The deal was still tentative Friday evening, as Clinton and Gingrich aides negotiated into the night over details. The Gingrich side said it was confident of a deal; White House spokeswoman Ginny Terzano said the administration was hopeful. Another White House spokeswoman, Mary Ellen Glynn, said it was unlikely a decision would be reached before today.

Gingrich initially offered to hold the event in Jackson, a mountain town where he will be Sunday morning. Clinton countered by inviting Gingrich to an afternoon senior citizens' picnic in Claremont that Clinton already planned to attend.

Gingrich said that site was fine with him, as long as other residents were allowed in, the forum lasted an hour or more and the subjects would not be limited to elderly issues. He also said each side should select a co-host, or agree on a neutral moderator.

McCurry suggested Gingrich was asking too much.

"I don't think they understand; it's a senior citizen's picnic," McCurry said. "It's a pleasant afternoon event. The president has a commitment to attend."

But he said that if Gingrich would like to attend with no change in the circumstances, "We say, great."

The prospects of a dramatic showdown between the Democratic president and the Republican speaker spiced what otherwise might have been a less-than-hoped-for opening day of Gingrich's New Hampshire foray.

Protestors, most of them opposed to spending cuts in the House budget, greeted Gingrich at all of his stops in New Hampshire. "Some cuts never heal," read a sign outside a Nashua event.

Also greeting Gingrich were fresh New Hampshire and national polls showing that a run by the speaker for the White House is not popular among voters — even if it is the talk of Washington. In the state and national polls, majorities of Republicans said Gingrich should stay put as speaker.

He mentioned the polls at his first event here, and appeared to have gotten their message.

"I'm not here running for president; I'm here as speaker of the House," Gingrich said. Yet when offered a chance to flatly rule himself out of the 1996 contest, Gingrich demurred.

"I am not closing the door on being a candidate, but I am not here as a candidate," he told reporters at the Manchester airport.

LIVER: Man claims Mantle gets organ

p.m. Wednesday at Memorial Hospital and Medical Center.

Thomas Funeral Home officials in Midland confirmed that they picked up Foley's body Thursday after any organs were removed. Foley's body is scheduled to be returned to New Jersey today.

Mantle, who received a liver transplant Thursday, was taken back into surgery Friday because of bleeding near his transplanted organ.

According to hospital officials, Mantle's surgery went smoothly and he was in good spirits.

CEREMONY: Girl Scouts retire American flag

attached to th halyard and hoisted to the pinnacle of the flagpole.

The scouts, all at attention, recited the Pledge of Allegiance: "... one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all."

The old flag flew for a minute before it was ceremonially returned to the tender hands of the color guard. Flag bearers held Old Glory fully spread, open and vulnerable. Then, girls gingerly cut away the canton from the red-and-white field of 13 stripes. The red symbolizes valor, the blood of Americans who died for their country; white denotes purity; and blue represents justice and the color of the sky and the oceans.

"It is no longer a flag but mere pieces of cloth to be committed to the flames," the voice declared.

First, the blue block of white stars, and then the field of 13 stripes, was placed in the waxing flames.

In the meantime, observers turned their backs to the burning flag, now pieces of cloth, to honor the national flag — Old Glory, the Stars and Stripes.

In the background, a coronet player sounded taps.

Within moments, a new Stars and Stripes flew high on the staff and the colors waved in the morning wind.

The Girl Scouts then sang the "The Star-Spangled Banner:" "... O'er the land of the free and the home of the brave!"

Afterward, ashes of several flags that had flown over Midland from the sites of banks, the National Weather Service and others were buried on the grounds where the flags are retired and honored.

"I've got tears in my eyes," said Midland City Council member Pat Schneider, who observed the ceremony. "We all need to show respect for our flag because it represents our country."

Twelve-year-old Terry Lynn Hunt, a member of the color guard, said that she had "been waiting to do this (honor) all of my (Girl Scout) life. I think we did a good job. I feel really honored."

Laura Franks, who played taps, said that the retired flags had served their country well and "deserved to be honored."

Deadline goal fades but both parties commit to negotiations

JERUSALEM (AP) — Self-rule negotiations with the PLO should not be judged "with a stopwatch," Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin said Friday, conceding that completing the talks by July 1 is a fading goal.

Rabin said both parties are committed to completing arrangements for Palestinian elections and withdrawal of Israeli troops from areas the Palestinians will administer. But they clearly differ on how soon that will happen.

Rabin's comments came in Cairo, Egypt, where he and Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak made a show of patching up recent differences and pledging to work to maintain momentum for the Middle East peace process.

Secretary of State Warren Christopher joined the two men at a session U.S. officials said took place at American initiative.

A senior administration official, speaking on condition of anonymity, quoted Mubarak as telling Christopher that "the clouds have been dispersed" from Egyptian-Israeli relations. "We discussed a lot of our bilateral problems," Mubarak was quoted as saying of his meeting with Rabin. "We put a lot behind us."

Rabin said Israeli and the PLO 'have passed the point of no return' in achieving the peace promised by their September 1993 agreement.

On his flight home from Cairo, Rabin said his visit succeeded in "removing all kinds of misunderstandings between us and Egypt."

In recent months, Egypt and Israel have been at odds over Egyptian pressure on Israel to join the nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty and open its nuclear facilities to international inspection. The Egyptians also were outspoken in criticizing an Israel plan, since suspended, to take land in predominantly Arab East Jerusalem for new settlements.

Christopher said that good relations between Israel and Egypt were essential to maintaining the recent positive signs in the negotiations between Israel and the Palestinians and between Israel and Syria.

"When the two leaders come together they can achieve enormous progress in the pursuit of peace," he said. "This is that kind of a time."

Christopher was flying to Syria on Saturday to confer with President Hafez Assad and confirm a date for Israeli and Syrian military leaders to meet in Washington. That meeting will focus on security arrangements for the Golan Heights as a first step toward any future agreement for Israeli withdrawal from the strategic area.

U.S. Secretary of State Warren Christopher, left, Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin, center, and Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak shake hands before their meeting in Cairo, Friday.

Palestine Liberation Organization leader Yasser Arafat is pressing Rabin to complete the self-rule negotiations by July 1, a date set by both parties.

Noting that the original goal for Palestinian elections was July 1994, Arafat said Thursday night on CNN's "Larry King Live" that "we are in need of this election because we are suffering. ... We can't have elections under occupation or in the presence of the Israeli military forces."

When Rabin was asked Friday in Cairo about the July 1 "deadline," he replied testily, "Look, I have said and I will say it again, it is a target date. We will make a sincere effort to meet it."

"Let's look at it not with a stopwatch; let's look at it with historic perspective," he said.

An initial phase of the agreement could be completed by July 1 to permit elections, he said. "We are not intervening in what kind of election it will be," he said.

Rabin said Israeli and the PLO "have passed the point of no return" in achieving the peace promised by their September 1993 agreement.

Zulu conflict threatens Mandela's government

DURBAN, South Africa (AP) — The green hills and gullied townships of Natal are running with Zulu blood again, endangering South Africa's fragile unity and exposing the limits of even Nelson Mandela as a peacemaker.

Gunmen spray bullets at commuter trains, peace marches degenerate into running battles, hit squads slay families and torch their huts. Scores die each month in the latest flare-up of the Zulu civil war, and everyone expects it to get worse.

"I almost wish we could go back to the white government, because our leaders are not doing as they promised," said Efram Mhlongo, an organizer of the Zulu nationalist Inkatha Freedom Party. "All they want to do is see themselves on television."

More than any black-white grievance, the conflict in KwaZulu-Natal province threatens stability in Mandela's new South Africa. Parliament and Cabinet lurch from crisis to crisis over it and the normally soothing president has grown increasingly bellicose.

The bloodletting pits warrior people with a proud history against each other. They battle under the colors of political parties that represent choices between tradition and modernity. Ordinary crime, competition for jobs and a traditional love of fighting also figure in.

Tensions have been further raised by jockeying for local elections in November that will determine grassroots power in the province.

On one side sits Inkatha, headed by Chief Mangosuthu Buthelezi. He claims to represent Zulu traditions — respect for family and the tribal structure of chiefs and village leaders — that have endured since the Zulu empire was founded in the early 19th century by the legendary warrior Shaka.

On the other, Mandela's African National Congress preaches a multiracial, modern state without group privileges — ideals that appeal to more educated Zulus but threaten many anxious to maintain tribal identity.

In the past decade, the war between the Zulus claimed more than 15,000 lives but often went unnoticed next to the larger black struggle against white minority rule.

This time is different — the whites are out of power and fissures among South African blacks are exposed for all to see.

The sparks have smoldered since Buthelezi, leading the country's second largest black party, agreed to participate in South Africa's first all-race election last year on condition that international mediators later would settle Inkatha's demands for provincial autonomy and special status for the Zulu kingdom.

Mandela and the ANC captured the country; Buthelezi and Inkatha won KwaZulu-Natal. But Mandela has refused to start mediation, calling the matter an internal one that can be settled with talks between the parties.

"The ANC has never accepted the IFP (Inkatha) won in Natal," said Inkatha secretary-general Ziba Jiyane. "They can deal with the white parties, but they believe in black politics they should be the only party."

With the friction between the leaders came fresh attacks and clashes on the battlegrounds in KwaZulu-Natal. Since late April, killings have occurred at the rate of one to 10 a day, often around weekend funerals for victims of violence the previous week.

Guns abound. So do rumors of former ANC guerrillas running training camps, and of Inkatha taking lessons from right-wing guerrillas-turned-mercenaries from neighboring Mozambique.

Some recent attacks involve a tactic common in the Mozambique civil war — setting ablaze huts to empty rural areas and terrorize a largely illiterate population.

Atop a hillside near Sundumbile, north of Durban, white-bearded cowherd Toyi Mathonsi stared down a lush slope at the shells of a half-dozen huts recently put to the torch.

"They got that one first, then those, then those over there," he said. "That next one is where I live, but I can't leave. I've got to stay with my cows."

The attackers strike at night and no one can say who they are. The 200 hill dwellers can't even form a self-defense force: They are too divided between ANC and Inkatha, Mathonsi said.

Mandela, blaming Inkatha for fomenting the warfare, last month dropped his conciliatory manner.

He ordered in extra troops and police to keep the peace, threatened to cut funding to the province and talked of amending the constitution to give himself greater emergency powers.

Court deal: Hong Kong, Britain may see some warmth after 3-year freeze

HONG KONG (AP) — Britain and China struck a deal Friday on a court to protect Hong Kong's legal system under Chinese rule, presaging a possible warming of relations after a three-year war of words.

The deal, a tradeoff with compromises on both sides, was welcomed by the business community and denounced by the leader of Hong Kong's largest party.

"Landmark sellout, landmark betrayal," said Democratic Party leader Martin Lee.

China has promised Hong Kong "a high degree of autonomy" after it recovers the colony in 1997, and a Court of Final Appeal is to replace Britain's Privy Council as guarantor of Hong Kong's separate legal system.

Civil libertarians are counting on the court to protect Hong Kong's freedoms, while the business community expects it to guarantee the commercial laws that make Hong Kong a safe international financial center.

The United States has long pressed for such a court, and at a Senate Foreign Relations subcommittee hearing this week, former U.S. attorney general Dick Thornburgh testified to a "clear and present danger to the rule of law in Hong Kong" if one is not established.

Negotiations to set up the court have been deadlocked since 1991.

Britain finally compromised by agreeing to exempt "acts of state" from the court's powers, and to drop its insistence that the court be up and running well before the handover.

Instead, the court will start hearing cases from July 1, 1997, the end of 156 years of colonial rule.

China, in return, abandoned its demand for mechanisms that would let it overrule the court.

The deal faces a rough passage through the legislature, which rejected an earlier deal in 1991. The Democrats, who have 17 of the Legislative Council's 60 seats and enough allies to form a majority, say they will fight for changes.

The new deal was reached in marathon talks Thursday in the Joint Liaison Group, the Anglo-Chinese body overseeing the transition. It was approved by the Hong Kong government Friday, after which Gov. Chris Patten presented it to the Legislature.

The Hong Kong General Chamber of Commerce said the deal may mark "a breakthrough in the relationship between the Chinese and British governments."

Relations have been cold since 1992, when Patten defied China's objections and set about broadening Hong Kong's democratic system. China saw this as a last-minute spoiling tactic, uncalled for because it had already guaranteed Hong Kong an elected legislature and a home-grown chief executive. It vowed to disband the bodies elected under Patten's rules and hold new elections.

In light of past disputes, Friday's court deal amounts to "one of the more successful cooperative efforts on transitional matters by China and Britain," said Zhao Jihua, the Chinese chief on the Joint Liaison Group.

It showed that if the two "work sincerely together ... there is no problem that can't be solved," Zhao told a news conference.

But only one lawmaker praised the deal, and Democratic Party leader Lee protested that Britain had dug "a big legal hole" by giving China latitude to decide which "acts of state" are above the court's jurisdiction.

"China can deny jurisdiction to our courts over anything" it likes, he said.

Patten said that "acts of state" was a term in the Basic Law, the constitution China has prepared for Hong Kong. "Some members may find that uncomfortable, but that is a fact," he said.

The Basic Law speaks of "acts of state such as defense and foreign affairs." It's the "such as" that strikes many Hong Kong people as disturbingly vague. They wonder whether the clause could be used to suppress anti-Beijing protests after 1997.

Independent lawmaker Emily Lau chastised Britain for sticking with a court composition that allows for only one overseas judge on the five-member bench. Judges from abroad are to be included for their expertise in English common law, and because they are supposedly less susceptible to Chinese pressure.

Japan's lower house OKs war resolution

TOKYO (AP) — Japan's governing coalition rammed a resolution of remorse for World War II through Parliament on Friday, but an opposition boycott and Asian criticism shattered hopes for a harmonious commemoration of the war's end.

Japan's biggest opposition group, the New Frontier Party, boycotted the vote in Parliament's lower house after the coalition rejected its demand for several minor alterations to the resolution.

The New Frontier action appeared to be motivated by political rivalry and was separate from Asian demands that the resolution include an apology for Japanese atrocities in World War II.

Still, the scene of a half-empty chamber voting on the resolution erased any possibility of a quiet end to what has turned into a raging dispute about history.

Fifty-five legislators from the coalition's dominant Liberal Democratic Party and 14 from Prime Minister Tomiichi Murayama's Socialist party also failed to attend the vote, according to a tally by the Japan Broadcasting Corp.

Although many missed the vote for scheduling reasons, at least some of the Liberal Democrat legislators skipped it to protest the resolution's expression of "deep remorse" over Japan's "acts of aggression" in the war.

Gruesome torture-murder trial haunts Canada

TORONTO (AP) — The videotaped shrieks and sobs of a terrified teen-ager being raped and sodomized sear the Toronto courtroom, horrifying most of the 200 people present.

A juror holds a hand to her mouth. Another stares blankly into space. A spectator flinches at a sound of agony he hears but can't see. Another merely shakes his head.

Details of how the young girl was sexually assaulted, tortured and murdered pound the senses of the jurors, court personnel and members of the public attending the trial of Paul Bernardo.

These same terrible details — filtered, toned down and shorn of much of their gruesome reality — are eventually published or broadcast to a disbelieving public.

Bernardo, 30, faces two counts of first-degree murder in the 1991 and 1992 deaths of Leslie Mahaffy, 14, and Kristen French, 15, both of southern Ontario. He also is charged with aggravated sexual assault, forcible confinement and indignity to a human body.

Karla Homolka, 25, Bernardo's ex-wife and the star prosecution witness, pleaded guilty to manslaughter and is serving a 12-year prison sentence. The videotapes depict her participating with her husband in the sexual assaults on the young girls.

For two years, judicial censorship prevented the press from publishing details of the case. This was done, prosecutors say, in the interest of assuring a fair trial for Bernardo.

Now, it's all coming out.

"Despite the press ban, most journalists and editors had a reasonable idea of what this case was going to be about," said Philip McLeod, editor of the London Free Press, a southern Ontario newspaper.

"But it wasn't until the testimony unfolded that any of us realized just how horrible it would be."

Highlighted in recent days have been videotapes taken by Bernardo and Ms. Homolka as the victims were raped, debased and tortured. The tapes were shown only to the jury and the court officers. The public and the press, however, heard the audio portion and the prosecution's description of the scenes.

On Friday, jurors were shown a copy of a letter that Bernardo and his ex-wife allegedly wrote to Ms. Homolka's 15-year-old sister, Tammy, three days after she died in 1990 after choking on her own vomit.

Although Bernardo is not being tried for Tammy's death, the defense agreed to allow testimony regarding her death entered at this trial. Prosecutors allege Bernardo and Karla Homolka drugged and raped Tammy before she died.

The letter, which was buried with the girl and found when her body was exhumed for a second autopsy in 1993, was shown to jurors on TV monitors but wasn't displayed to courtroom spectators. The court made transcripts available to reporters afterward.

"My life will never be the same now that you're gone," Bernardo wrote. "If I ever caused you any harm or pain, Tammy, please forgive me. I only wanted the best for you. I (wanted) you to be happy and to experience the joys of this world. Please forgive me, Tammy."

The horror of the testimony attracts some spectators.

People line up for hours to get tickets for one of the 118 public seats available in the courtroom. Many have attended every day since the trial started May 1. Court officials say the trial seems to attract an unusually large number of young women.

Editors have been faced with daily decisions about how much the public needs to know.

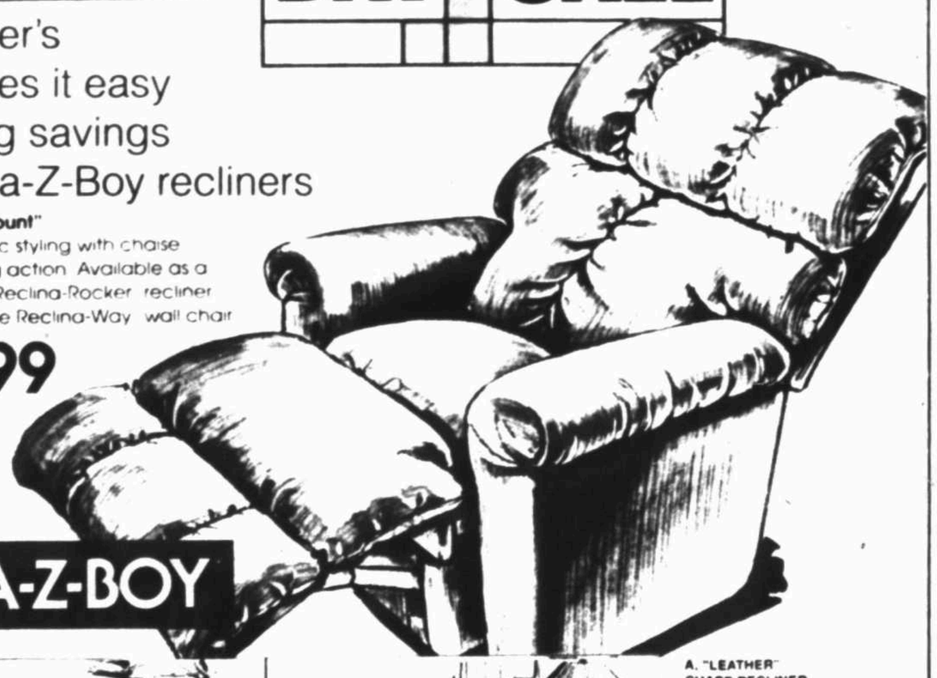

"We've really struggled and agonized over this," said Paul Woods, Ontario bureau chief of the Canadian Press news agency.

Los Angeles County coroner Dr. Lakshmanan Sathyavagiswaran, left, demonstrates on prosecutor Brian Kelberg in court how murder victim Ronald Goldman's throat may have been slashed during the Simpson trial, Friday.

Coroner offers details of Goldman's struggle in Simpson's murder trial

LOS ANGELES (NYT) — Trapped and frantically fighting, Ronald Goldman was slashed and stabbed more than two dozen times before succumbing, the chief coroner of Los Angeles County told jurors Friday in the O.J. Simpson murder trial.

Describing the death scene in vivid detail, the coroner, Dr. Lakshmanan Sathyavagiswaran, told jurors that Goldman was cornered by his assailant in a tight, enclosed area outside Nicole Brown Simpson's condominium, and that the knife wounds he suffered were probably inflicted in less than a minute.

"If Mr. Goldman was confronted by the assailant in this confined area, he has no means to escape, especially if he is cornered between that railing and the tree and that sapling. He's stuck there," said Sathyavagiswaran (pronounced lahk-SHMAH-nin sat-thee-vah-GISH-wahn).

He said that he had visited the crime scene twice and that he was surprised by how small the area was.

In their second day of looking at grisly photographs of the bodies of Mrs. Simpson and Goldman, the jurors appeared to have regained much of their composure, appearing grim but largely impassive.

On Thursday, Judge Lance Ito abruptly adjourned the proceedings as jurors seemed to be overwhelmed after hours of viewing the photographs. Friday, the easel holding the photographs was moved several feet back from the jury box, a move intended to soften their impact.

The testimony continued to be painful for Frederic Goldman, the victim's father, who sobbed quietly in his seat in the front spectator row.

His wife, Patricia, and his daughter, Kimberly, placed their arms over his shoulders to comfort him. At other moments, Goldman could be seen staring intently at Simpson, who sat not far away with his lawyers.

Simpson, who had been visibly distressed on Thursday as the coroner described how his former wife met her death, seemed more disengaged Friday, occasionally taking notes, but for the most part ignoring Sathyavagiswaran's testimony about Goldman.

Wholesale prices suggest ease of inflationary pressures

WASHINGTON (AP) — Wholesale prices flattened out in May after an April spurt, suggesting that inflationary pressures were easing in the face of a slowing economy.

"It looks like the price situation is not as bad as before," said Samuel D. Kahan, an economist with Fuji Securities Inc. in Chicago. "If the current weakening of the economy continues, one can assume prices will continue to slow down."

The Labor Department reported Friday its Producer Price Index was unchanged in May after a 0.5 percent surge in April that matched the January advance. Many analysts had contended the April jump was an aberration.

Prices for finished wholesale goods had risen only 0.2 percent in February and were flat in March.

Prices for goods still in the production pipeline also reflected little price push in May. Intermediate goods costs were up just 0.2 percent, while prices for crude goods dropped 0.8 percent, the second decline in three months.

The latest report showed "little pickup in inflation pressures," agreed economist Bruce Steinberg of Merrill Lynch & Co. in New York. "Given the sharp slowdown in (economic) activity now taking place, inflation pressures should remain muted."

The PPI measures inflationary pressures before they reach the consumer. The Consumer Price Index for May will be released Tuesday and some analysts are predicting a 0.3 percent rise, down from 0.4 percent in April.

Wall Street investors ignored the flat PPI report, preferring to focus on statements earlier this week by Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan that suggested the central bank would not change its interest rate policy soon.

As a result, both bonds and stocks continued to slide. The Dow Jones Industrial Average was down 34.58 to 4,423.99 and 30-year Treasury bonds were off another 1 11-16 point.

The flat PPI performance in May, paced by declines in both the volatile food and energy components, meant wholesale prices for the year were rising at an annual rate of 2.7 percent, compared with 1.7 percent for all of 1994.

The food index fell 0.6 percent, the fourth decline in five months. Energy was down 0.2 percent, the second drop in three months. Excluding food and energy, the so-called core index rose 0.3 percent, reflecting large price increases for tobacco, alcohol and paper goods.

The improvement in food prices was widespread, including a 14.1 percent drop in vegetable costs, largest since a 26.6 percent fall in January. Vegetable prices had soared 17.8 percent in April, reflecting the impact of severe flooding in California.

Onion prices declined 65.4 percent; tomatoes, 64.3 percent; asparagus, 47 percent; and sweet corn, 40.7 percent.

'Superman's' hometown pulls for actor Reeves

METROPOLIS, Ill. (AP) — Superman's hometown is pulling for its adopted son, Christopher Reeve, and what better way than to send a superhero a super-sized get-well card?

Organizers of the 17th annual Superman Celebration have had an 8-foot card available for people to sign since Monday. They stopped counting after 3,000 signatures.

"I signed it because I thought it was a very nice thing for Christopher Reeve," James Tidwell, a 9-year-old Superman fan from Paducah, Ky., said Friday.

The 42-year-old "Superman" actor was paralyzed from the neck down in a riding accident over the Memorial Day weekend.

The red- and blue-framed plywood card near the base of the 15-foot Superman statue on Superman Square is stealing the show. The Chamber of Commerce and The Metropolis Planet weekly newspaper have been flooded with calls from all over the country with questions about the card, which will be sent to the actor after the festival.

"Anytime anything has happened to Superman, like when he died in the comics or when the movies first came out, that certainly brings a new awareness that there is a real-life Metropolis and that we do have this celebration," said Clyde Wills, the Planet's editor and publisher.

This town of 6,700, founded in 1839 along the Ohio River, realized in the early 1970s, when it was going through tough economic times, that it was the only U.S. city with the name of Superman's home, so it claimed the Man of Steel for its own.

Superman arrived on Earth from the planet Krypton in Action Comics in 1938. His alter ego was Clark Kent, who worked at the fictional Daily Planet in the imaginary city of Metropolis.

Last year's Superman Celebration was the most successful ever, with about 50,000 to 60,000 visitors.

U.S. wants to stay out of Bosnian conflict but some Americans are already at war

By John Diamond
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Bosnian Serbs menace NATO warplanes with guided missiles, yet allied commanders decline to order strikes to knock out the missile sites. Even the mobile battery that downed Capt. Scott O'Grady's plane escaped unscathed.

Clinton administration officials cite two factors behind the limited-response strategy: Mobile surface-to-air launchers are hard to find and the NATO allies are reluctant to plunge deeper into the conflict.

"It would be a widening of the war that a majority of the troop-contributing NATO nations did not wish to see," Gen. John Shalikashvili, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, told lawmakers.

Defense Secretary William Perry said Friday he can either press for a change in NATO strategy or simply order planes to avoid high-risk missions.

"If my air commanders tell me that the only safe way to conduct a mission is to conduct a pre-emptive strike against ground radars first, then we will either get them the authority to do that or we'll tell them they don't have to do that mission," said Perry, who was at NATO headquarters in Brussels, Belgium.

While the administration maintained it wants to stay out of the Bosnian conflict, O'Grady's harrowing experience drove home the point that some Americans are already at war in the Balkans.

Bosnian Serb radars regularly lock on or "paint" NATO aircraft flying deny-flight missions over Bosnia, according to a senior U.S. military officer who spoke on condition of anonymity. While many NATO planes have been fired upon, only two aircraft — one British and one American — have been shot down through 69,000 sorties flown since April 1993.

The SA-6 missiles of the type used to down O'Grady's F-16 are mounted on tracked vehicles that hide in the rugged, forested terrain or in villages, the military officer said. U.S. war planes can knock out the SAMs by tracking their radar signals and firing radar-seeking HARM missiles. But the Bosnian Serbs typically turn on those radars only sporadically.

Lt. Gen. Wesley Clark, a senior planner for the Joint Chiefs of Staff, told lawmakers Thursday that NATO "very carefully tracked their locations" but had not yet launched any strikes against the SAM launchers. Pre-emptive strikes would have been difficult, but "could have been done," Clark said.

"Under the rules of engagement that we're operating under, if the missile site comes on and paints the aircraft, this constitutes hostile intent and at that point that missile site can be attacked," Clark said.

The Bosnian Serb missiles are mostly Russian-made and are deployed throughout the 70 percent of Bosnia they hold. Military experts and weapons manuals estimate the arsenal probably includes more than 100 individual missiles of at least eight types.

■ News analysis

Designed to attack low-flying aircraft — the typical posture of the NATO air cover operation — the SA-6 was developed in the 1960s by the Soviet military. According to David C. Isby's reference work, "Weapons and Tactics of the Soviet Army," the SA-6 radars can be electronically foiled. During the 1973 Arab-Israeli War, SA-6s hit their targets only once for every 55 missiles fired.

Following the June 2 downing of O'Grady's F-16, U.S. Adm. Leighton Smith, the NATO commander in charge of the Bosnian overflights, ordered all aircraft flying deny-flight and possible air strike missions over Bosnia to be accompanied by a battery of escort aircraft capable of coping with SAM launchers.

Lawmakers of both parties say that's not enough.

"If you're going to have them fly over territory where they have SAM missiles ... I think it's irresponsible not to have acted to protect them," said Sen. Hank Brown, R-Colo., after a closed briefing Friday with U.S. military officers.

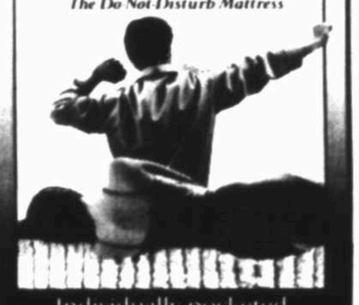

Sen. John Kerry, D-Mass., said NATO should have launched retaliatory strikes on Serb SAM launchers.

That drew a testy response from White House spokesman Mike McCurry.

"U.S. senators are free to speculate on military action, but White House spokespeople are not," McCurry said.

Perry said pre-emptive strikes are "only one of many ways to deal with an air defense system."

Microsoft on-line plans undergo antitrust scrutiny

WASHINGTON (AP) — The most anticipated event in the computer industry this year, the rollout of Microsoft's new Windows software, faces new questions after the Justice Department launched an antitrust investigation of the company's new on-line service Friday.

At issue is Microsoft's plan to incorporate its planned on-line service, The Microsoft Network, with the new Windows 95 program. The new Windows software is expected to sell 20 million copies this year alone and will be an important selling point for personal computers this fall, industry analysts say.

Such broad distribution by the largest maker of personal computer software could give Microsoft's new on-line service a crucial competitive edge over America Online, Prodigy and other existing on-line services, critics argue.

The Justice Department issued "civil investigative demands," the civil equivalent of a subpoena that marks the beginning phase of an investigation, to two leading computer on-line services companies, Prodigy and America Online.

Both companies complained to the Justice Department about Microsoft's plans to link its on-line service to the operating system software, which controls a computer's basic functions such as activating printers or lighting up monitors.

Details of the government's investigation were sketchy.

Prodigy spokesman Brian Ek said Justice Department investigators asked his company about "the bundling of Microsoft Network with Windows 95" and requested comment on the merits and disadvantages of such an approach. America Online also confirmed it had received a similar demand.

Justice Department spokesman Bill Brooks, reading a statement, said the agency is "looking at the possibility of anticompetitive practices in the computer software industry." He didn't provide further details.

Microsoft's top attorney, William H. Neukom, declined to speculate about the outcome of the government's case and defended the linking of the on-line service to the new Windows as legal.

"We regret that some of our competitors, faced with new competition, have resorted to complaining to government regulators rather than competing vigorously in the marketplace," said Neukom.

Microsoft Network will enhance competition in the on-line service business through competitive pricing and new services, he said.

The development comes just three weeks after Microsoft scrapped a $2 billion purchase of Intuit Inc., maker of the leading finance software program Quicken, after the Justice Department filed an antitrust lawsuit to block the deal.

Earlier, Microsoft settled a four-year government investigation by agreeing to end certain business practices that had harmed competition. A federal judge in February rejected the settlement, saying it wasn't in the public interest, and the case is pending before the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia.

Industry analysts speculated the Justice Department may force Microsoft to remove the on-line service from the Windows 95 software before the software goes on the market. That may be one reason why the Justice Department appears to have moved quickly this week; America Online and Prodigy were given just four days to comply with the government's information request, according to a government document obtained by The Associated Press.

Jonathan Jacobson, a partner and antitrust law specialist at the New York law firm Akin, Gump, Strauss, Hauer and Feld, said the speculation is that the Justice Department "wants to be in a position to make a case against Microsoft sufficiently before Windows 95 is in the marketplace."

Microsoft is set to release the new software Aug. 24. Company spokesman Greg Shaw provided no details on timing of the manufacturing, only saying, "We've got quite a bit of time before that happens."

The Microsoft Network would offer home shopping, entertainment, news and bill paying services. The Redmond, Wash., company has carefully promoted the new service by rolling out announcements of some five dozen companies that will provide services, including the Home Shopping Network and NBC.

Computer users with the Windows 95 have to follow a separate sign-up procedure to use the Microsoft Network, said Russell Siegelman, Microsoft's general manager for on-line services.

"Windows 95 users don't have to purchase (Microsoft Network). They're completely separate purchase decisions," Siegelman said.

Court awards former president $272,000 for legal costs during Iran-Contra probe

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government owes former President Bush $272,352 for legal expenses during a special prosecutor's investigation of his role in the Iran-Contra affair, a court ruled Friday.

Bush had sought $461,346, but the panel of three appellate judges that supervises independent counsel investigations said that amount was not justified.

Independent Counsel Lawrence Walsh accused Bush of "misconduct" and of completing a "coverup" after the then-president pardoned six Iran-Contra defendants on Dec. 24, 1992.

Walsh also investigated Bush's failure to turn over his 1986 diary notes until December 1992, after he lost the presidential election to Bill Clinton. The White House said it did not discover the diaries until September 1992.

The Ethics in Government Act allows government reimbursement of lawyers' fees for people who are the subject of an investigation by an independent counsel but are not indicted. A subject is someone whose activities are within the scope of a criminal investigation.

"We conclude that President Bush is entitled to an award of reasonable attorneys' fees incurred," the judges said.

The amount covers lawyers' fees between December 1992 and November 1993. Bush's legal team was headed by Atlanta lawyer Griffin Bell, attorney general during the Carter administration.

Bush maintained for years that he was "out of the loop" in the Iran-Contra affair, which involved the sale of U.S. arms to Iran and the diversion of profits to the Nicaraguan rebels when such aid was barred by federal law.

On Dec. 24, 1992, Bush pardoned former Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger; former assistant secretary of state Elliott Abrams; CIA officers Clair George, Alan Fiers and Duane Clarridge; and former national security adviser Robert McFarlane.

Weinberger and Clarridge had not yet been tried on Iran-Contra charges, while George had been convicted and the other three had pleaded guilty.

The three-judge court said there was no doubt that Bush was a subject of Walsh's investigation.

Bush's Christmas Eve pardon of the six men was an "extraordinary circumstance," but it still would not have triggered an investigation of the president without the independent counsel law, the court said.

The court said Bush's lawyers spent a large amount of time drafting court papers — never filed — that would have challenged Walsh's authority. Given the scope of Walsh's investigation, the court said Bush's lawyers were "quite justified" in considering such a challenge.

But it said the former president failed to justify all of the expenses he claimed. The panel deducted $106,878 for duplicative work by lawyers, saying Bush had not "sufficiently justified the level of staffing."

The panel also deducted tens of thousands of dollars in travel time and expenses. The government should not have to pay extra money for Bush's decision to use an Atlanta law firm, the court said, noting there was "no shortage of lawyers" in Washington, D.C.

The court said it rejected Attorney General Janet Reno's objection to hourly fees "in the $300-$400 range" in her evaluation of Bush's fee application.

Also on Friday, the panel granted $18,155 in legal fees to another man investigated in the Iran-Contra affair, former U.S. Ambassador to El Salvador Edwin G. Corr. He was compelled to give testimony under immunity before a federal grand jury. Walsh's final report said Corr testified falsely but that he would not be prosecuted.

The panel includes Judge David Sentelle of the District of Columbia Circuit, senior Judge John D. Butzner Jr. of Richmond, Va., and senior Judge Peter T. Fay of Miami.

Energy raised

Don't eat candy for quick energy. Try raisins. They're a far better "energy food." The reason: You don't get the typical letdown after eating raisins the way you do after eating plain table sugar, according to Gene Spiller, Ph.D., at the Health Research and Studies Center in Los Altos (Calif.).

Typically, Dr. Spiller explains, after eating sugar or sugary foods, such as an ordinary candy bar, your blood sugar rises but then drops below "fasting blood sugar levels" three hours or so later. This drop can leave you feeling tired, sometimes shaky and hungry and craving more sugar to get yourself "up" again. In a test Dr. Spiller had 10 men and women eat plain sugar, glucose or about 4 ounces of raisins. As expected, blood sugar rose in all cases. But the drop did not occur after eating raisins as it did after eating plain sugar. Dr. Spiller mainly credits the 10 grams of fiber in the raisins with blunting the blood-sugar fall.

Vitamin C puzzle

Can you count on vitamin C to raise your good HDL cholesterol? Maybe, maybe not. It depends on how much vitamin C you already have in your blood, according to recent research at the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Human Nutrition Research Center on Aging at Tufts.

Good HDL blood cholesterol is the stuff you want more of because it helps prevent plaque buildup in arteries that can lead to heart attacks and strokes. Several studies have suggested taking vitamin-C supplements boosts good HDL cholesterol. But some studies found little or no effect from vitamin C. A possible explanation: In the new Tufts study, researcher Paul Jacques discovered that 1,000 milligrams of vitamin C daily did boost good HDLs by about 7 percent, but only in men and women who had low blood levels of vitamin C to begin with. However, the vitamin C had no effect on HDLs in two-thirds of the volunteers who had higher blood levels of vitamin C. So vitamin C pills raise HDLs only if the vitamin is in short supply.

Infection antidote

It's more cheers for mother's milk. Breast-feeding can help keep your baby safe from infectious diarrhea. In fact, your infant is five times more apt to suffer diarrhea from salmonella bacteria if you don't breast-feed, says Dr. Madeleine Sigman-Grant, assistant professor of food science at Penn State.

In a new study of 90 infants, Dr. Sigman-Grant found that 83 percent of cases of salmonellosis occurred in babies who were bottle-fed. The infection occurs when the infant swallows salmonella bacteria in food or water or through mouth contact with a contaminated object. The baby suffers symptoms ranging from mild diarrhea to bloody diarrhea and dehydration.

However, components in mother's milk possess antibiotic activity, attacking the salmonella bacteria and preventing their ability to cause infection.

Exercise vitamins

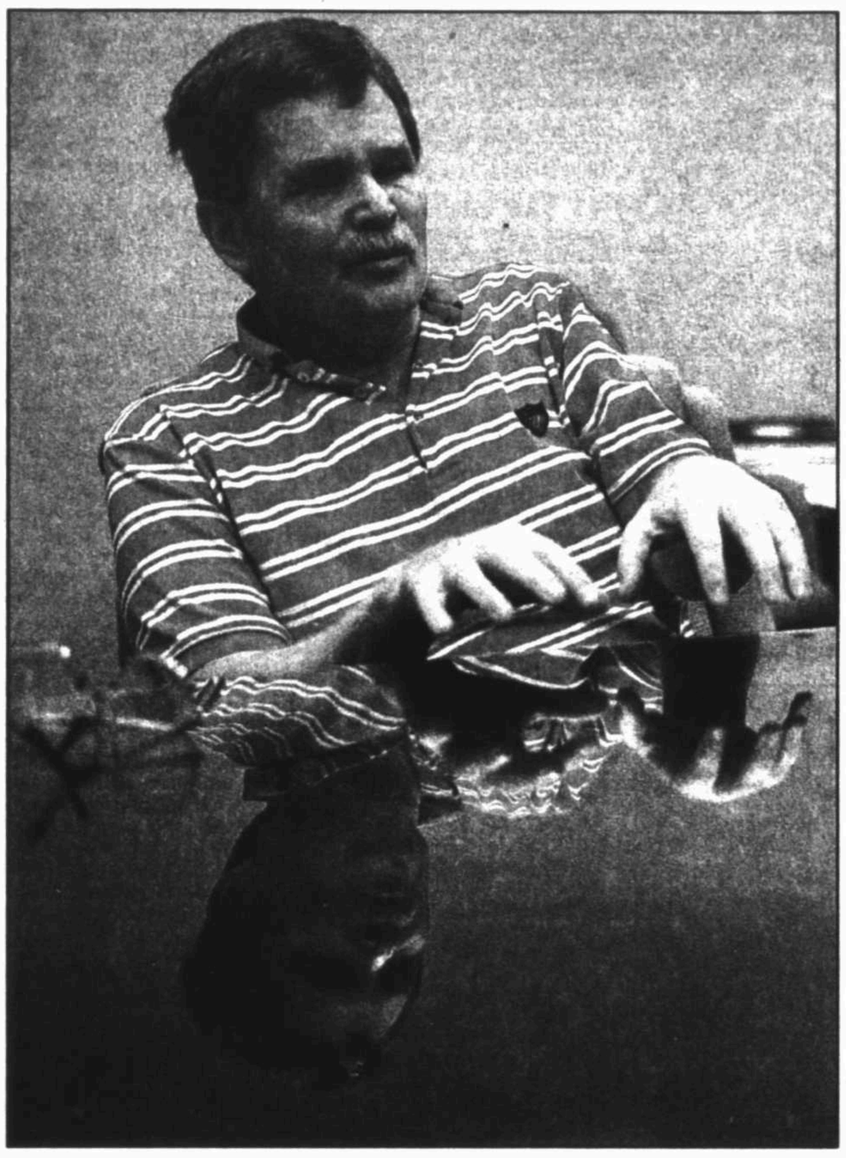

If you indulge in strenuous exercise, you need extra doses of vitamin E and vitamin C to protect against damage to your cells. Here's why, says William J. Evans, Ph.D., research physiologist at Pennsylvania State University. When you exercise heavily, you consume more oxygen, and burning more oxygen generates more chemicals called free radicals that careen around your body attacking the fatty molecules in cell membranes. This tends to oxidize, or turn such fat rancid, impairing cell function.

But lots of antioxidant vitamin E and vitamin C in your muscle and blood cells lessens the damage from the exercise-induced free radicals.

The antioxidants help rev up the body's ability to repair the damage done by the byproducts of exercise.

The antioxidants are especially important in repairing exercise-induced damage in those over age 55 and in so-called "weekend athletes," says Dr. Evans.

AIDS patient Jim McCarty talks about Mail-Order-Meds in May in Austin. McCarty is a client of the new Austin company, which mails prescriptions overnight to people with HIV/AIDS.

Austin-based company sends HIV/AIDS patients medicine through mail

By Dick Stanley
Associated Press

AUSTIN — As if having AIDS weren't enough, Jim McCarty had another problem.

In addition to his AIDS-related nerve condition, which makes walking difficult and driving impossible, the former legislative aide had seven continuing prescriptions to fill and refill at different pharmacies.

Then, three months ago, McCarty found MOM.

Mail Order Meds Inc. is a 7-month-old Austin company specializing in HIV/AIDS that mails prescription drugs overnight nationwide to people with the disease.

"If it wasn't for them, I'd be in trouble," said McCarty, 52, who lives in North Austin and takes about 20 pills a day.

"MOM wants to take care of you," say the brochures for the company with more than 700 clients across the country. The company also sells vitamins and nutritional supplements and offers tips on insurance, clinical trials and research.

The Austin company is a division of the Care Group of Lake Success, N.Y., an early 1980s pioneer in home care for people with HIV/AIDS that grossed $36 million last year.

"We're the friendly voice on the end of the phone for our clients, answering questions about prescriptions, diet and exercise or referrals to social service organizations," said Pam Greenfield, MOM's director of marketing.

Most of MOM's clients pay through private insurance policies, said Mark Le Blanc, manager of client services. The rest, such as McCarty, pay through state or local programs for people with low incomes. There is a small copayment, which, in McCarty's case comes to about $18 a month.

Still in the works is "MOM's House" on the Internet, a members-only on-line computer service of news and information.

"We hope to have our home page up by the end of the month," Le Blanc said. "We plan to have doctors and dietitians answering questions interactively."

McCarty already is delighted with MOM's service.

"I don't have to worry about my drugs running out," he said. "They watch it on their computers and send (them) when it's time. They call me and let me know it's coming."

Expert offers prescription for summer seasonal weight loss

By Dr. Valeric Peck
Associated Press

Want to lose some weight for the summer?

Eat less. Exercise more. And don't expect a miracle, especially in pill form.

The prescription of less food and more activity should work for someone who isn't terribly obese but who put on weight over the winter and wants to lose 10 or 15 pounds to look better in a bathing suit.

Dieting and activity are also the cornerstones of any long-term effort to take off substantial amounts of weight and to maintain that loss.

The simple rules may not be sufficient by themselves, however. Long-term weight loss usually requires training in behavior modification to achieve changes in lifestyle and eating habits — things best done in an organized weight-loss program.

Medical opinion has become increasingly opposed to the concept of a crash diet, designed to peel away the pounds quickly for people who are moderately obese. One reason is the possibility of damage to the health.

Another is recent evidence that most people have a fixed weight "set point" to which they return after a quick dieting effort.

Rapid weight loss is appropriate only for very obese people who are in a medically supervised program.

There's ample evidence that short-term over-the-counter diet pills don't work. They contain phenylpropanolamine, a decongestant common in many cold and sinus preparations that is supposed to reduce appetite and step up the metabolism of body fat. Scientific studies don't support those claims.

There's also a limit — in the neighborhood of 1 to 2 pounds a week — to the amount someone who is moderately overweight can safely lose without medical supervision.

That weight loss can be accomplished with a diet of about 1,000 to 1,200 calories a day. For health's sake, such a diet should include adequate amounts of protein and essential nutrients. The best way to reduce dietary calories is to cut back on foods rich in fat, which pack the most calories per unit of weight.

As for exercise, any sudden, major increase in physical activity should be approved beforehand by a physician.

If the news about short-term weight loss sounds grim, there are glimmers of hope for overweight people who want to lose weight over the long term.

There are successful programs that enable people to take weight off slowly and keep it off. Such programs must be tailored to individual needs.

A recent study even indicated that medication might help in some cases.

Over a four-year period, severely obese persons who took phentermine and fenfluramine, two prescription medications that reduce excessive overeating, took weight off and kept it off. They regained the weight, however, when they stopped taking the medication.

In the end, it comes down to a simple equation for most people. The number of calories in, determined by the amount and type of food consumed, and the number of calories out, in the form of activity, are the basic determinants of weight gain or loss.

Back pain exercise must fit needs of each individual patient

By Dr. Gerard P. Varlotta
Associated Press

When it comes to exercise programs to relieve back pain, one size definitely does not fit all.

Each exercise program must be carefully tailored to fit the needs of an individual patient.

Exercise can help an aching back, usually as part of a comprehensive treatment approach that may include drugs such as anti-inflammatory medications, muscle relaxants, painkillers and even antidepressants in low doses.

Many times, the pain is caused by damage to one of the discs that separate bones in the spinal column, or degeneration of the spinal column caused by arthritis, trauma or mechanical problems that may be due to poor posture.

Whatever the cause, an exercise program is designed after a medical history, a physical examination and X-rays, and may include a range-of-motion studies.

The resulting recipe for back pain caused by disc damage includes lumbar stabilization exercises, designed to produce a more stable spinal column by activating and retraining the muscles that support it. Over time, this decreases the wear and tear on the discs and joints of the back.

The exercises can include arch-ups (a version of push-ups that don't require lifting the knees off the ground), stretching exercises to lengthen the hamstrings, and wall exercises — moving up and down with the back against the wall.

There are postural exercises as well, such as arching the back like a cat.

A physical therapist usually works with the patient, taking several weeks to develop and perfect the individual program.

Basic aerobic exercises such as walking, on a treadmill or in the street, and bike-riding are almost never out of place. More strenuous exercises such as a step machine and cross-country ski machine can often be used.

A different set of exercises is recommended for patients whose pain is caused by an instability of the vertebrae of the spine, which causes them to impinge on the nerves. Such patients usually are young and physically active, and a different approach is needed.

Additional treatment may be needed to maximize an exercise program including injected medications, such as steroids, and perhaps acupuncture.

The physicians should work with each patient and the therapist to isolate specific patterns of motion that cause pain and develop an exercise regimen.

It can include contract-relax exercises, mobilization techniques and resistance exercises such as weightlifting.

Once begun, an exercise program for back pain generally goes on indefinitely. The reward for most patients is long-term pain relief that can be achieved no other way.

Change, not weather, affects chronic pain

By Jane E. Brody
N.Y. Times News Service

Before you decide to take your arthritis to Arizona, consider these surprising new findings about the influence of weather and climate on chronic pain: Patients living in the relatively warm, dry climate of San Diego reported a greater sensitivity to changes in the weather than those who had to cope with the cold and damp conditions of Boston or Worcester, Mass.

A better bet than any of those three cities for chronic pain sufferers seeking relief from the vagaries of weather might be warm and moist Nashville. In a study of the four cities, chronic pain patients living in Nashville reported that they were least likely to be affected by changes in the weather.

The study, by Dr. Robert N. Jamison and colleagues at Brigham and Women's Hospital in Boston, involved a questionnaire survey of 558 chronic pain patients in the four cities. The findings were published in the current issue of the journal Pain. In an interview, Jamison, a clinical psychologist, said they revealed that "weather affects pain no matter where people live. ... The findings suggest that our bodies adjust to the local climate, and when changes occur in that climate, we react to them with an increase in pain."

Jamison explained: "If you spend two weeks in Florida sipping pina coladas, you may feel a lot less pain than you did shoveling snow at home in Boston. But if you move to Florida and your body gets used to that warm climate, when the temperature drops you may hurt just as much as you did when the weather changed in Boston."

Thus a spell of wet weather in normally dry San Diego might be more disruptive to pain sufferers than the year-round dampness of Nashville, whose residents become accustomed to wet conditions. The researchers were also surprised to find that younger patients — the survey involved people 18 to 85 years old — reported the greatest sensitivity to weather changes. Patients with arthritis were also highly sensitive.

The researchers conducted the four-city survey to examine more closely the longstanding belief that patients with chronic pain — arthritis, headache, backache and the like — are sensitive to weather changes and can often predict those changes as much as a day ahead based on an increase in pain.

The researchers sought to determine if weather-induced changes in pain sensitivity varied with climate. They especially looked at whether those who live in cold, damp climates suffer the worst weather-related effects; and what characteristics define patients who are most sensitive to weather changes.

Although the survey showed, as pain patients know all too well, that cold, damp weather is perceived to have the greatest effect on pain, pain is more likely to be affected by a change to cold, damp weather than a steady climate of it. Two-thirds of the patients said weather changes affected their pain, and of those, slightly more than half said their pain was affected even before the weather changed.

"The real culprit may be a change in barometric pressure, since patients are most likely to report an increase in pain in advance of weather changes," Jamison said. The barometric pressure typically falls before the onset of wet weather, and, he suggested, "when the outside pressure falls, body tissues — tendons, ligaments, muscles and bones — may readjust by expanding to varying degrees and, in doing so, can trigger the sensitized nerves that send out pain signals."

He likened the phenomenon to the old wet-dry barometers made of stretched leather. When the atmosphere is dry, the leather shortens, but when conditions get damp, it lengthens. "Moisture also affects how the body changes," he said.

The psychologist said he is now planning a study to monitor the physiological changes that occur in response to weather changes. Meanwhile, those trying to limit the effects of weather on their aches and pains might be best off staying home in the climate their bodies are used to and using various strategies designed to minimize pain and bestow a greater sense of control over it, including learning to pace activities, using distraction and relaxation techniques and realizing that pain will fluctuate. "If you wake up in the morning in pain, you know you will have a bad day, so don't try to do as much, learn to say no more often," Jamison suggested.

'Water birthing' controversial with parents, officials

By Alessandra Stanley
N.Y. Times News Service

MOSCOW — In a promotional video for Russian water birthing, a woman in an advanced stage of labor bobs above wind-tossed waves of the Crimean Sea. The camera zooms in as a nude midwife helps the woman to shallow water, where she sprawls against a rock as her baby's head slowly pushes into the chill, bloody water.

The newborn is fine. The mother, shivering, smiles weakly as she cradles her infant. Later, on the beach, the midwife swings the newborn by his legs in the air — part of the vigorous postpartum exercise endorsed by followers of Igor Charkovsky, who claims to be the inventor of water birthing.

"This is what makes all the West accuse us," the midwife, Marina Dadasheva, said dryly as she switched off the videotape. "They say it is violence."

Water birthing is a alternative method of delivery that has small but determined groups of adherents in Britain, Australia and on the West Coast of the United States. French obstetrician Frederick Leboyer pioneered the "birth without violence" movement by introducing serenity to the delivery room and placing newborns in warm, soothing water to lessen their trauma.

Others, including French obstetrician Michel Odent, went further, adapting underwater delivery — in hygienic hot tubs or tanks — in the 1970s and '80s to make labor and delivery more comfortable.

BUT NOWHERE is water birth as entrenched, controversial and rigorously practiced as in Russia, a country known for poor obstetric care and a long tradition of faith healing and mystical cults.

Charkovsky's method uses water less to reduce pain and stress than to increase endurance both during the birth and later in life. He advocates ice-water dips for pregnant women and newborns, and insists on massages, physical training and swimming exercises for babies immediately after delivery. He claims his techniques will produce superbabies.

Here, followers of Charkovsky work almost underground, under censure from government health authorities. Charkovsky, 60, has no medical training and started his career as a physical education instructor. But he began experimenting on animals' adaptability to water in the 1960s, and soon declared that water birth — immediately followed by intensive physical and mental training — would produce a smarter, stronger breed of children.

Charkovsky now lives in Madison, Wis., and gives lectures on his method. In Soviet times, he worked in near-secrecy out of his home in Moscow. As alternative birthing methods began to come into fashion in the West in the 1970s, the mysterious Russian became a legendary figure in certain circles in Europe and the United States.

DINA KORTOVA, 23, an aeronautics engineer, is a true believer. She planned to give birth a year ago in the ocean off Australia, among the dolphins. When she couldn't get a visa, she delivered her baby in a plastic pool in her kitchen, with only a neighbor standing by to help. She said her baby walked at 9 months and could swim almost from birth. "Some people say he is mad, but I believe in what Charkovsky is doing," she said.

Not all water births end happily. Last April, emergency medics were summoned to an apartment in Moscow where a woman and her husband had tried to deliver their baby in a bathtub by themselves. The medics pronounced the baby dead at the scene, and a preliminary hospital report said the child had drowned. The Moscow prosecutor's office is weighing whether to open a criminal investigation into the death.

"In theory, it could happen," Mrs. Dadasheva said rather tentatively, referring to the accident. "People who aren't trained and are not ready should not try it by themselves."

AT AN international conference on water birthing last April in Wembley, England, which attracted about 1,200 participants, Russian followers of Charkovsky were allowed to attend, but not to be speakers. "They are afraid of us because we do not work with doctors," said Mrs. Dadasheva, who was there.

One of the organizers, Sheila Kitzinger, a British water-birth advocate, explained that the Charkovsky contingent was too removed from the mainstream. "I think what Igor does to babies is absolutely appalling," she said. "His movement is a cult."

Charkovsky moved to the United States two years ago after being dismissed as a crackpot by Russian health officials as well as more conventional water-birth experts and threatened several times by Russian law-enforcement officials with criminal prosecution. But he said he does not find the United States more ready to accept his theories.

"Americans are just not ready," he said in a recent telephone interview. "They can deliver babies under water, but they don't want to make them swim. It's like building an airplane but not making it fly."

Charkovsky maintains that a baby's body and instincts — such as fear — must be reprogrammed at birth. In 1988, he horrified his British fans by plucking newborns from their mothers' arms to twist their limbs into what he claimed was a better posture. He showed films of himself plunging a baby head-first in a hole in a frozen lake. "After that," said Odent, who now heads the Primal Health Research Center in London, "he stopped being such a legend."

In Russia, followers like Mrs. Dadasheva have adapted Charkovsky's theories into a brisk practice. Like others, she calls herself a "spiritual midwife," because she has no training in traditional obstetrics. Mrs. Dadasheva said that she had delivered 2,000 water babies in the last eight years, and that not one had died during childbirth.

SHE SAID clients tended to come to her complaining of horrible treatment while giving birth in hospitals, where medication is scarce, doctors are overworked and maternity wards are usually crowded, dirty and riddled with infection.

There are no reliable statistics on the number of water births performed in Russia. Alexander Naumov, a water-birth practitioner, estimated there were close to 1,000 water births in Moscow a year, and 3,000 others across the former Soviet Union. He said that in Moscow there were more than a dozen registered water-birthing centers, and that more than 25 professional water-birthing midwives minister to patients at home.

Few are as loyal to the full Charkovsky method as Mrs. Dadasheva, who nonetheless has a more gentle approach than he does. She concedes that not all clients sign on for the full package.

"Sea birth is not for everyone," she said. "It takes much preparation — physical and spiritual."

Mainstream doctors listening to suggestions of alternatives

By M.A.J. McKenna
N.Y. Times News Service

BOSTON — In a crowded hotel ballroom, 400 cancer specialists, pain experts and family physicians cradled giant binders bearing the seal of Harvard Medical School and tipped their heads toward the stage. Behind the podium, silhouetted against quotations from the giants of medicine, Dr. David Eisenberg rose to speak.

"An exploration of our patients' knowledge, hopes and dreams about alternative medicine is the next wave in medical care," the Harvard professor told them.

Alternative medicine?

That scene at a conference in Boston in April made a stunning point. The techniques of alternative medicine — including chiropractic, homeopathy, acupuncture and herbs — are becoming an issue for mainstream medical care.

The new popularity of unorthodox practices signals a social shift, according to observers: It shows that Americans are beginning to take responsibility for their health.

"People who enter this arena are people who say, 'I'm not a car who goes to the doctor to be fixed,' " said Linda Gooding, an immunologist at Emory University who two years ago created one of the first medical-school courses in alternatives. "They believe that the idea that health is so complicated the average person cannot understand it is not really true."

The amount of interest is huge. A study published in 1993 by a Harvard team led by Eisenberg found that one-third of the population uses some form of nontraditional care — for the most part, without telling their primary-care physicians.

"We have discovered an invisible mainstream," he said last month during the conference, the first public academic examination of alternative medicine. The audience — two-thirds of them M.D.'s, from 38 states and several other countries — were facing the fact that some of their patients are probably consulting alternative healers as well.

"Physicians should ask every patient about the use of alternative medicine," said Eisenberg, the country's most visible scholar of nontraditional practices. "If that were to happen, the debate would shift very quickly. We, the doctors and nurses of the United States, would realize that our patients are doing this all the time."

The Harvard conference is not the only sign of growing interest in alternative medicine. Besides Emory, 31 medical schools now offer courses in the subject. Some — including Columbia University, Georgetown University, the University of Maryland and the University of Illinois — have opened research centers to study specific techniques.

Two years ago, the National Institutes of Health created an Office of Alternative Medicine to investigate the scientific validity of alternative practices. Emory's Gooding has an OAM grant.

This year, two publishing houses have launched three alternative-medical journals, one peer-reviewed as medical journals are; numerous books on alternative health methods are scheduled for release this year. Atlanta is the home base of three institutions well-known in alternative circles: the Atlanta School of Massage, Life College of Chiropractic in Marietta and Newton Laboratories, a homeopathic manufacturer in Conyers.

And despite having the most restrictive laws on the East Coast regarding alternative medicine — most practices are illegal here unless performed by an M.D. — Atlanta harbors a broad range of healers.

In an attempt to gain legitimacy, 100 of them recently organized into the Georgia Holistic Practitioners Association to lobby the state for licensure laws; according to members, the group has also discussed some form of self-policing for qualifications.

Alternative medicine covers an enormous spectrum. Some of its varieties are widely used, including ethnic systems such as traditional Chinese medicine; practices based in nonstandard interpretations of science, such as homeopathy; and modern developments such as mind-body medicine.

But to the consternation of critics, alternative medicine also embraces practices such as ayurveda — a popularized ancient Indian system whose chief proponent, Dr. Deepak Chopra, has been strongly criticized by the Journal of the American Medical Association — and unproven techniques such as spiritual healing.

"People are subject to great risk of harm when it comes to alternative medical care, and it's an area ripe for abuse," said Andrew Watry, director of the Composite State Board of Medical Examiners. "For some reason, people are just not as informed when they are consuming these services as they are when they're buying a car."

But alternative medicine has some surprising supporters. Chief among them are doctors and nurses who believe its holistic focus can bring back to traditional medicine something that managed care has sacrificed: Attention to the whole patient, not just the disease.

"As a surgeon, it doesn't take too long before you find yourself saying, with disappointment in your voice, 'Is this all there is?' " said Dr. Robert Cowgill, an oncologic surgeon at St. Joseph's Hospital who also performs an alternative technique called healing touch.

"If you put blinders on and say, 'We will only be interested in the body; we will ignore the spirituality, the emotions and the mind,' you're robbing yourself of all a physician can do."

Dangers of summer fun can be minimized

By Dr. Ed Smith
N.Y. Times News Service

Over the years of treating patients, I've noticed a significant increase of certain conditions immediately after Memorial Day that I'd like to discuss here, hoping to help you avoid some of the pain of early summer.

SUNBURN: We often forget that skin shielded from the sun for months looses its protective tan and think we can pick up where we left off last summer in the sun. I've seen more serious sunburns after Memorial Day than any other holiday. Be sure to limit your first exposure to the sun. Wear a hat if necessary. And don't forget your high SPF skin lotion.

MUSCLE ACHES: Many folks decide it's time to get out and really get the yard in shape. Muscle pulls, aches and pains can incapacitate you for days and weeks after, so remember to temper you enthusiasm for yard work and sports with a realistic view of your current fitness level.

FRACTURES: Many fractures seen in the emergency room around the holidays involve alcohol. Drinking and holiday activities don't mix well. Don't drink and drive. Don't swim while intoxicated. Don't drink and use power equipment.

DROWNINGS: Drownings frequently occur this time of year. Boating accidents are common. With all the excitement at home, children are often not watched as carefully as needed. It's great the summer is just around the corner and with a little care, we can avoid the problems mentioned above.

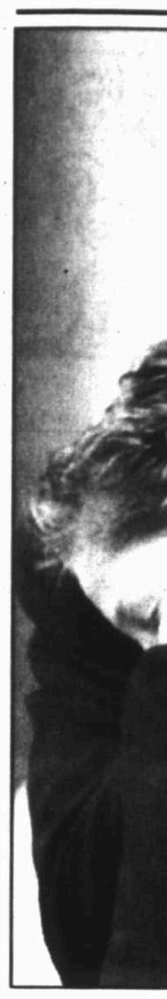

Dr. Ed Smith, who practices medicine in the Phoenix area, writes for the Mesa Tribune.

Oklahoma City bombing tests faith of 'city of God'

By David Briggs
Associated Press

OKLAHOMA CITY — Upstairs at the First Christian Church, where families awaited word of their loved ones, there was little talk of God.

Then a chaplain began to help notify a family that a baby had died in the federal building bombing; the baby's two grandparents were missing and presumed dead. It was, the chaplain said offhandedly, one of God's miracles that so many people had survived.

"And one of the uncles of the baby, a son of the two people who were missing, just almost got violent over that statement because he did not feel God's grace in these three loved ones that were dead," recalled Roger Ford, a United Methodist funeral director volunteering as a crisis counselor.

"God," Ford said, "was not a popular subject where I was working."

In the days after the April 19 bombing, God seemed to be everywhere in Oklahoma City — in quiet moments of individual prayer, in the great memorial services of a community struggling to endure.

Nearly two months after the explosion, however, the story is no longer a simple one of faith overcoming tragedy in the Bible Belt.

Not for the thousands whose lives were changed forever by the deaths of the 168 people they loved. And not for many Jews, Muslims and black Christians, who feel as excluded in tragedy as they often do in everyday life.

In scores of conversations cutting across race, age and denominational lines, a more complicated picture emerges of a city grappling with central questions of faith.

If God permitted this unparalleled act of domestic terror to take place — as many people here have come to conclude — what sign was the Creator sending to a community once so self-assured in its faithfulness?

"We have, to some degree, been stripped of our innocence in the Midwest," said the Rev. Keith Arledge, pastor of Trinity Baptist Church.

In the middle of the destruction that first terrible night, the Rev. Steve Vinson remembers a deafening silence and, for the first time in his ministry, asking the question: Where was God?

'And then I looked up and I saw the cross on the building in the background and just a peace like I have never experienced in my life flooded, flooded me," he said.

In this city of nearly 1,500 churches, where billboards proclaiming "God Bless Oklahoma City" greet visitors from the outskirts all the way downtown, it's understandable that many residents immediately began looking for God's role in the bombing.

Deaths caused by human evil shatter all the assumptions individuals hold in their heart of hearts that living a good life will protect them from evil, said Ann Kaiser Stearns, a psychology professor and author of "Living Through Personal Crisis."

"This is why there is so much anger, and why it's appropriate to have so much anger, even at God," she said.

But what Kaiser Stearns calls the inevitable human question — how could God do this? — is not easily broached in this theologically conservative city.

"My God does not kill children. My God is not responsible for the death of children," said the Rev. Nicholas Harris of First United Methodist Church, badly damaged in the bombing.

He has mentioned the tragedy only once in Sunday services.

"It could have been me. If it was, I hope they would say, 'Hey, he's in a better place' and wouldn't want them to grieve over me," Harris said. "It's a faith statement. It's not callousness. It's what I believe."

Many others search deeper for why mass murder on such a scale would occur here.

If God rules over creation, they say, then God must have allowed this act of terror to occur. And there had to be a reason God chose one of the most religiously observant areas in the nation, where nearly three-quarters of the population belong to churches or regularly attend services.

The answer emerging in varying forms in local churches is that the city was put to the test — and passed.

"What Satan meant for evil, we really have wrought for good," Marsha Waldo said during a Bible study class at First United Methodist Church.

"It's like it had to happen in Oklahoma, in the Bible Belt, where people are neighbors and we do give," said John Davis of Trinity Baptist Church. "We're the innocent of the world, of America, and I think people just were really moved by what we did so there's a lot of people who are going to go back to California or New York and see what God's like, what Christ's like, living through people."

"Together in the Heartland" was the banner over the local newspaper stories, and members of the two dominant religious groups in the city, the United Methodists and Southern Baptists, echo that persistent theme.

But talk with groups of Muslims, Jews and blacks and there is another story, one of exclusion even in the midst of universal heartache.

One wall of the Islamic Center of Greater Oklahoma City is lined with boxes of blankets and food sent by Muslims around the country. In the center of what also doubles as a gymnasium, a large prayer mat is set up for Friday services.

SATURDAY, JUNE 10, 1995

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Sweeping changes are coming at place of employment. Luckily, you are a pro when it comes to adapting to new standards. Travel for business and pleasure in late summer. An investment you make then could mean greater financial security by Christmas. Early in 1996, seek advice from a business wizard. A support network of close friends proves to be a lifesaver next spring.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: defense attorney F. Lee Bailey, children's author Maurice Sendak, legendary performer Judy Garland, actress Hattie McDaniel.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Routine matters require special attention now to prevent costly mistakes. A co-worker is willing to lend a helping hand. Beware of someone who tries to push you too hard. Catch up on your reading.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Greet the day with a new mindset, showing appreciation for your friends and family. Stop magnifying trivial problems. Knowing when it is time to move on will keep you from wasting valuable years.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Avoid getting caught up in a crowd. You will get much farther if you rely on your own talents. Romance looks highly promising. Welcome a last-minute invitation. You could meet a dream date.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You and a loved one may have to deal with a sensitive matter. Thoughts of romance and socializing can make it hard to concentrate on domestic obligations. Ask direct questions and you will get straight answers.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): The emphasis now is on showing someone that you truly care. One who has been reluctant to express appreciation finally does so. You feel much better about a gesture you made.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A personal sacrifice may be called for. Friends try to influence you, but the final decision is yours. Choose wisely. It is time for a display of independence where romance is concerned.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Romance is real but a little confusing. You feel a need to perfect certain routines. Work at improving communication with loved ones. You can avoid crowds by shopping in your own neighborhood. Curb spending.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Check the bottom line on your budget before going shopping. Romance has its ups and downs. Be patient. A trip with your mate could mend some emotional fences.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Getting together with co-workers on a social basis occasionally is a great idea, provided you not become intimate friends. Keep family matters to yourself.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Complete shopping and household chores early in the day, leaving the afternoon free for hobbies or sports. Someone you meet at a social event could give you a hot job lead or investment tip.

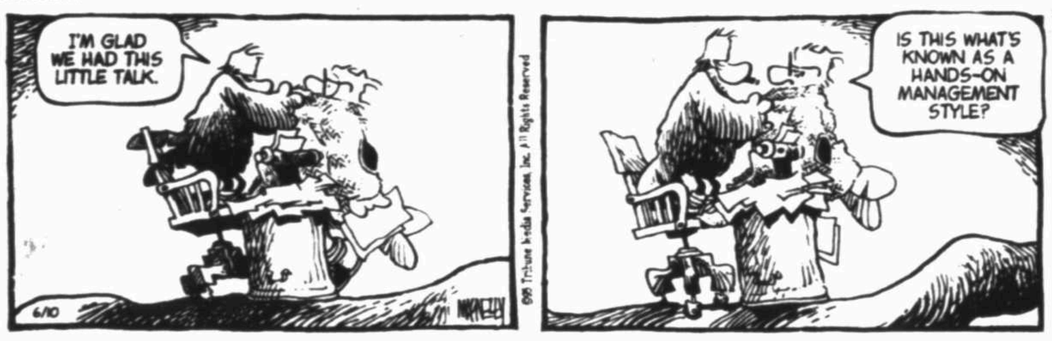

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You could be put in charge of organizing a social function connected with your office. If tempted to begin a romance with someone at work, consider the consequences.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Do not become reckless with your hard-earned savings. A down-to-earth attitude is your best bet. An opportunity arises to make money through one of the arts. Prompt and decisive action is essential.

Its official: Sly Stallone, fiancee call off their plans for his third wedding

LOS ANGELES — Stallone Wedding III has been called off.

Stallone cancels plans for what would be his third wedding.

"No reason is being given, but it's official. It's off," Sylvester Stallone publicist Paul Bloch said Friday.

Stallone and actress Angie Everhardt had announced their engagement in April.

The 48-year-old Stallone, whose latest film is "Judge Dredd," has been married twice. Everhardt, 25, has never married.

NEW YORK — The anniversary of a cancellation got canceled.

An event to mark the scuttling of Robert Mapplethorpe's exhibit at a Washington gallery six years ago got wiped out itself after the late photographer's estate refused to allow his photos to be used.

Random House, which has published Mapplethorpe's often sexually explicit, sadomasochistic work and is bringing out an unflattering new biography, had planned the memorial Monday to focus on censorship issues.

But Mapplethorpe's lawyer, Michael Stout, called the event's timing "peculiar," adding: "This is not an event that the foundation feels is part of its mandate."

"This was not an homage to Robert, or a celebration of free speech. This was nothing but commercialism," said Mapplethorpe's art dealer, Howard Read.

The Mapplethorpe biography, by Patricia Morrisroe, depicts the artist as a selfish hedonist who betrayed his talent and was corrupted by fame and fortune.

Robert Evans, publisher of Random House, called the foundation's move "curious."

In 1989, complaints forced cancellation of a Mapplethorpe exhibit at the Corcoran gallery, which receives government funds.

DEDHAM, Mass. — Sen. John F. Kerry's ex-wife is suing for higher support payments, saying his income is up substantially.

The lawsuit was filed April 6, seven weeks before the Massachusetts Democrat married Teresa Heinz. The widow of Sen. John H. Heinz III of Pennsylvania controls a fortune estimated at $675 million.

Sen. Kerry's ex-wife wants higher support payments.

Both Kerry and his former wife, Julia Thorne, said the lawsuit has nothing to do with his remarrying May 26.

Thorne said she bears no animosity toward her former husband. Asked about the timing of the lawsuit, she said: "I am not a legal expert. I don't know."

"This is a routine modification which we've been discussing for more than a year," Kerry said. "Julia and I are very good friends."

They divorced in 1988.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Grand Ole Opry star Little Jimmy Dickens is back home after six days in the hospital, still uncertain what made him faint backstage.

Dickens, 74, underwent tests after being stricken at the country music show last week.

"He's doing pretty good," his wife, Mona, said Friday. "The doctors are still not sure what caused it."

She said it's uncertain when her husband will return to performing.

Dickens, best known for his 1965 hit "May the Bird of Paradise Fly Up Your Nose," was released Thursday from Baptist Hospital.

Lady Bird Johnson was back in the thick of Washington this week, and the city showered her with affection and accolades.

On Wednesday, she received the Honor Award of the National Building Museum at a black-tie dinner that brought more than 500 friends from the worlds of business, government and horticulture to the museum's Great Hall.

She received the award for her leadership in campaigns to beautify roadways, parks and urban plazas. Among the speakers were Senator Daniel Patrick Moynihan, D-N.Y.; former Gov. Ann Richards of Texas and Mrs. Johnson's granddaughters Catherine and Lucinda Robb.

Thoughtful Moments™

The Footprints of God

In deepest sleep one night I dreamed
That on the beach I walked
God was by my side each step
And quietly we talked.
Then on the sky my life was flashed;
[illegible] serene.
[illegible] the sand
[illegible] in sa[illegible]
Of suffering, pain, and strife—

Just a single set of footprints
At the worst times of my life.
"God—you said you'd stay by me
In good times and in bad—
Why then did you leave me
Each time my life was sad?"
"My gracious child," God [illegible]
"When your life had [illegible]
[illegible] single set of [illegible]
[illegible] times I carried you."

New leaders of Reform Judaism relate worship to fellow baby boomers

By David Briggs
Associated Press

'We have to make Judaism so compelling for our children, our adults, that Judaism is going to be an integral part of their lives.'
— Rabbi Paul Menitoff, new head of the Central Conference of American Rabbis

NEW YORK — Their father's generation fought anti-Semitism in their jobs, colleges and communities.

It was a generation that came of age at the birth of Israel, and supported the Jewish nation through wars and political turmoil.

Now, at a time when American Jews are integrated into all areas of the nation's life and Israel is relatively secure, two baby boomers are leading Reform Judaism into a new era when religion must find a compelling voice independent of Israel and ethnic ties.

"The issue for us is to really establish ourselves as Jews," said Rabbi Paul Menitoff, new head of the Central Conference of American Rabbis. "For us, the world is open. If anything, we're being killed with kindness."

Menitoff, 53, this year became executive vice president of the Central Conference of American Rabbis; Rabbi Eric H. Yoffie, 47, was recently named president-elect of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations.

They see themselves as a new generation of leaders sensitive to their fellow American-born baby boomers' search for the personal dimension of faith.

In a recent conversation with both men at Yoffie's office, they spoke of the need to reinvigorate synagogue worship and help the 1.3 million Reform Jews in North America relate to a God that makes a difference in their lives.

"They want worship that is heartfelt, that is not perfunctory," Yoffie said. "The rabbinate and the laity recognize that it's a new agenda now."

Yoffie, director of the Commission on Social Action for Reform Judaism, had been criticized by some before his election as a candidate who would put relatively greater emphasis on politics than theology.

But in interviews and public statements, Yoffie has made clear he sees presenting a compelling religious vision to its members as Reform Judaism's greatest challenge.

"The purpose of our union remains what it has always been: to reignite the flame of Sinai in the hearts of our people, and to create synagogues which are warm and welcoming communities with Torah at their center," he said.

Menitoff said baby boomers are confronting their own mortality, and are searching for spirituality that offers a way of dealing with the coldness of the world.

"We have to make Judaism so compelling for our children, our adults, that Judaism is going to be an integral part of their lives," Menitoff said.

Yoffie and Menitoff said there are serious issues facing the Jewish community. The intermarriage rate has increased by a factor of 10 in the last 30 years, and apathy and assimilation also threaten the religious vitality of the community.

But Yoffie said Reform Judaism is not giving in to denial or despair.

"We respond with renewal," he said.

Part of the effort to attract new members, he said, involves offering courses of interest in the community, and embracing non-Jewish spouses and urging them to convert to Judaisim.

Ultimately, however, creating vibrant, welcoming synagogues will be the key to the movement's success, said Yoffie, who will succeed longtime UAHC leader Rabbi Alexander M. Schindler next June.

"The ethnic dimension will no longer be able to sustain the Jewish community," Yoffie said. "We have to supply them with a religiously compelling vision. ... That's the central task."

Missions narrow Angels lead to one

By Mike Butts
Sports Writer

First place could be slipping away from the Angels. And Friday San Antonio's David Pyc was the one making Midland's perch at the top of the Texas League Western Division a precarious one. Pyc pitched the Missions to a 4-3 win at Christensen Stadium to move San Antonio and El Paso to within one game of the Angels.

Only seven games remain in the league's first half and the Missions could tie Midland at the top by winning the last game of the six-game series tonight.

"This win gave us a foot in the door," Pyc said. "The door's open and it's ours to kick down."

The win gives the Missions two in a row over the Angels and insures them a win in the first half series with Midland. That would be used if needed to break a tie between the two teams at the conclusion of the first half.

Pyc is one of the few pitchers who does well in and actually likes to play at Christensen, with its homer-aiding wind. He gave up three runs in seven innings but the Angels left 10 of their 12 men on base with Pyc on the mound.

"I went eight innings twice here last year so I like to pitch here," said the Mission left-hander. "I'm not intimidated by this park. If they hit it out, they hit it out."

Angels Ty Boykin and Leon Glenn did hit it out against Pyc on two consecutive pitches in the eighth to cut a Mission 4-1 lead to 4-3. But Matt Herges came in to get the save, striking out three in the final two innings.

"Every time he pitches against us he does a good job," Boykin said. "He hits his spots and keeps the ball away from us. It's tough because you know the pitch he throws and what he's going to get you out with."

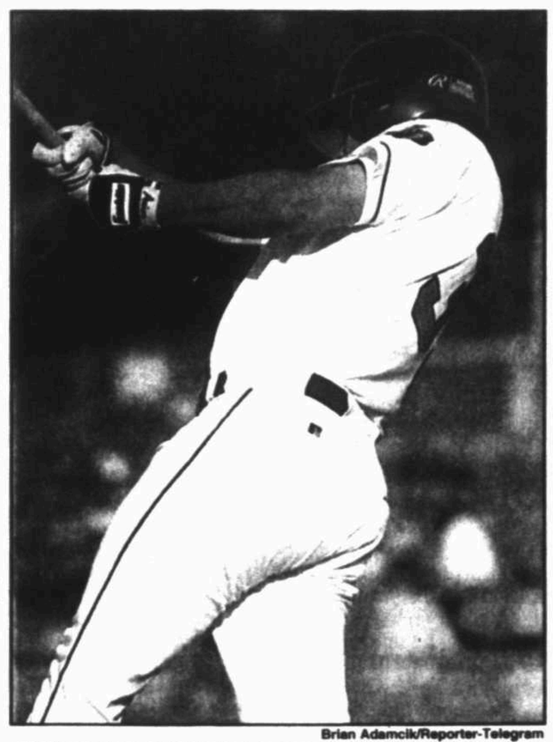

That pitch would be the sinker.

"I start the sinker away and I get a lot of movement away from right-handed hitters and they gave me an all right-handed lineup (except Glenn) tonight," Pyc (6-2) said.

When the Mission hurler gets batters leaning over the plate, he comes back with an inside pitch which, in his own words, "freezes" batters.

If Angel starter John Snyder had gotten the runs Mid-

Midland Angel owner Miles Prentice literally knocked on wood as he sat at Angel general manager Monty Hoppel's desk Friday afternoon. And if Angel fans knew the object of his wishes, they would have joined him in enough knuckle rapping to beat Hoppel's desk to sawdust.

The good news about this year's Midland Angels is obvious. The club has a chance to win the first half of a Texas League race for the first time since the league divided the season into two parts in 1977.

The better news is a little less obvious. The Angels, in first place in the league's Western Division, have a decent chance of keeping their best players for most or all of the '95 season.

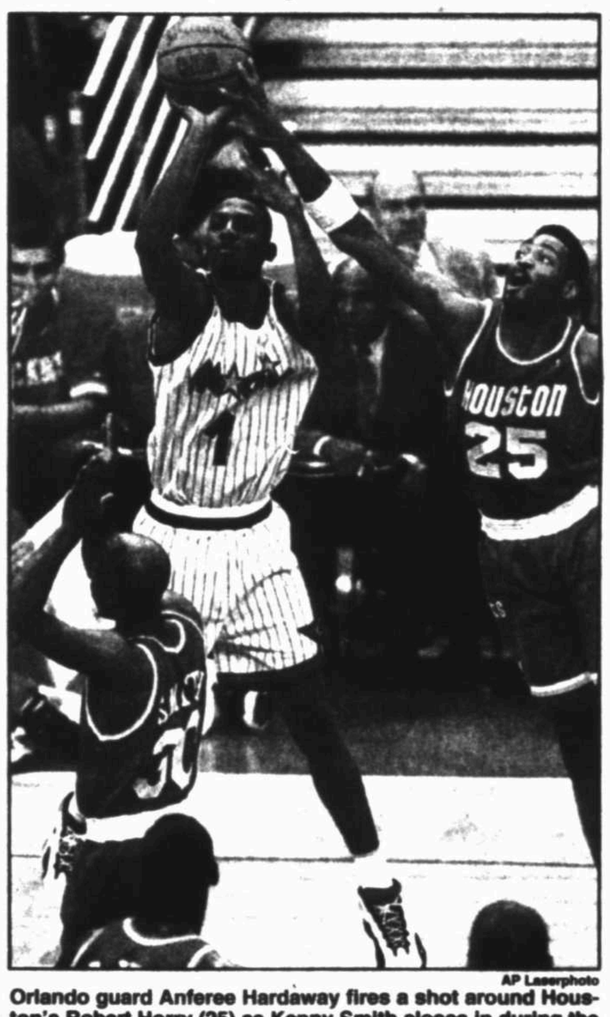

"Last year was an aberration with all the injuries on the big league club (California)," Prentice said of the number of Angels moved up a level in '94. "This year our Triple-A (Vancouver) is loaded."

Hoppel credits Prentice with doing what he can to keep top Angel players at ORLANDO, Fla. — The Orlando Magic's high-powered offense broke down, and Houston's road show roared right by.

The Rockets, led by Hakeem Olajuwon's 34 points, took a 2-0 lead in the NBA Finals on Friday night, running past Orlando 117-106 and setting an NBA record with their seventh consecutive playoff road win.

The series shifts to Houston for Sunday night's Game 3, the first of three at The Summit, where the Rockets are 4-4 in the postseason.

A big first half by Olajuwon and reserve point guard Sam Cassell, who tied his career playoff high with 31 points, put the Magic down by 22 at halftime, and they never recovered.

Shaquille O'Neal had 23 of his 33 points in the second half and Anfernee Hardaway added 32, but they didn't get much help. The team that led the league in scoring during the regular season simply got too far behind to catch up.

Now Orlando, only the second team to lose the first two games of the finals at home, may have fallen too far behind in the series to catch up.

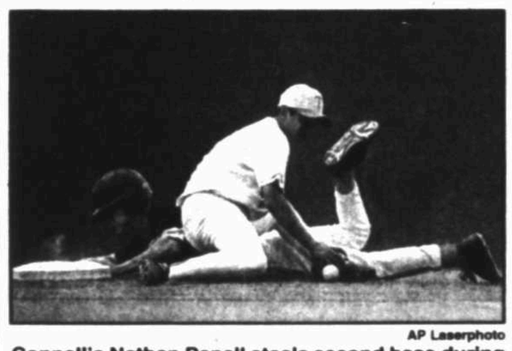

Only two teams have managed to come back from an 0-2 deficit in the finals — the 1977 Portland Trail Blazers won the title after dropping the first two games to Philadelphia, and Boston bounced back to beat the Lakers in 1969.

While Houston set another NBA record with its ninth road victory of the postseason, the Magic lost consecutive games at home for the first time this season.

"In the first half, we executed everything we wanted to do; the guys passed the ball, the ball movement was great," Cassell said. "The defense was excellent, we allowed them one shot and we did the things we needed to do on offense."

Clyde Drexler overcame early foul trouble to score 23 points for Houston, and Robert Horry had

AUSTIN — Brent Smith went 4-for-4 and Coppell exploded for seven runs in the fifth inning, claiming the Class 4A championship with a 12-2 victory over Lamesa in the state baseball tournament Friday.

Coppell (28-5) won the title in its third tourney appearance. Its previous best showing was as runnerup in Class 2A in 1985.

Lamesa, which held a 1-0 lead after three innings and tied the game at 2-2 in the fourth, couldn't overcome five errors. The Tornadoes finished the season 22-9.

The teams were deadlocked 2-2 after four innings in what shaped up as a defensive struggle.

In the fifth inning, Coppell's Nathan Panell drew a walk to open the inning, then stole second and scored on a single by Allen Roberts. A fielding error, two more walks and a ball that got by Lamesa catcher Fidel Ogeda resulted in two more runs.

With two outs and the bases loaded, Josh Florence hit a sinking liner to left field. Rather than field it on the bounce, Lamesa's Rudy Fernandez attempted a diving catch and the ball rolled past him as all four Coppell runners circled the bases.

Chang vaults in Muster's path

PARIS — Now comes the hard part for Michael Chang.

He ended Sergi Bruguera's two-year reign over the French Open and reached his first Grand Slam final since his triumph here as a 17-year-old in 1989. But to regain the crown, he must stop the seemingly unstoppable Thomas Muster.

Michael Chang advances to Sunday's French Open final with a win over Sergi Bruguera.

Chang's straight-sets semifinal victory Friday over a weary Bruguera was a struggle compared to Muster's brisk annihilation of Yevgeny Kafelnikov.

"To play against him, you feel like a small moth against a big elephant," Kafelnikov said after Muster bulldozed to his 34th straight victory on clay, 6-4, 6-0, 6-4, tying Bjorn Borg for the third-longest clay winning streak of the Open era.

The match took only 83 minutes.

Fever wipes Timber Country out of Belmont

■ 104 degree temperature forces Timber Country out of the Belmont Stakes.

By Michael Madden
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — By 6:30 last night, D. Wayne Lukas had recaptured his composure. An hour earlier, said one of his owners, William T. Young, "When Wayne gave us the news, he was very emotional."

Timber Country was out of the Belmont Stakes. The colt didn't eat his 10 a.m feed. The Preakness champion had spiked a fever, first to 103 degrees and then to 104 (the normal temperature for a horse is 99.5-101.5 degrees). The overwhelming favorite to win the Belmont was not going to run.

Can horse racing better be encapsulated than in that one hour? Shortly after 5 p.m., Lukas had received congratulations when his brilliant Serena's Song had been sent off at 1-9 odds in the Mother Goose Stakes, a classic for fillies, and had romped home, the easiest of winners.

Now, less than an hour later, Lukas was on the phone to the New York Racing Association offices across the parking lot from his barn to give the world the word. His colt, who was expected to duplicate the effort of his filly, could not run Saturday.

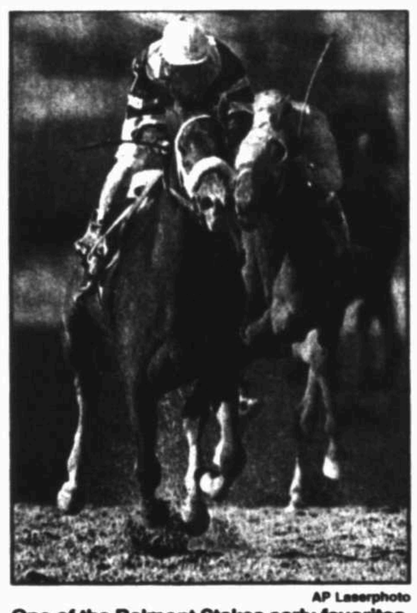

"We haven't got beat yet," a more composed Lukas said about 6:30, referring to Thunder Gulch, his "other" horse in today's Belmont, in which he will seek to become the first trainer to saddle the winners of five straight Triple Crown events. "Just say a little prayer and hope to heaven (Thunder Gulch) can carry the load."

Can an hour, can a day say as much about the vagaries of tending to a thoroughbred as this day?

"Trainer after trainer was telling me (Friday morning) that Timber Country never looked better than when he returned to the track," said Lukas. "The colt was as sharp as I've ever seen him (Friday morning)."

The first inklings of trouble came early in the afternoon when Timber Coun-

Mantle undergos second surgery in as many days, begins recovery

By Jay Jorden

DALLAS — Mickey Mantle was always in control. On a baseball field, he dominated with his bat, his glove and his speed. Off the field, he charmed with his warm smile, easy manner and stunning good looks.

Whether winning games or winning friends in bars, Mantle left little to chance. Now everything is up to chance, in part because of the control he lost when his life spun into alcoholism.

A stroke of luck gained Mantle a liver just days before he would have died. Now he must hope his luck holds out a few days longer and the transplanted organ avoids infection, rejection by the body or the kind of bleeding that rushed him into surgery early Friday.

Mickey Mantle is lucky to be alive.

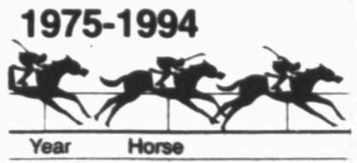

"What we would have seen, had we not found a liver for him, is that Mr. Mantle would have suddenly — maybe by today, tomorrow or Sunday — started taking a turn for the worse in a very rapid and very nasty way," Dr. Goran Klintmalm, med-

BELMONT: 3-year-old catches cold

try's feed tub was untouched. Lukas had a horse entered in the fifth race at Belmont, "and Timber Country had a temperature then of 103, but we decided to wait an hour or so to see what would happen," said the trainer.

Nothing good. By the time Lukas returned to the barn to prepare Serena's Song for the Mother Goose, he was a trainer torn. He had to prepare the best 3-year-old filly in the country, but he also had his eye on the best 3-year-old colt in the country. The sickly Timber Country.

By the time Lukas returned from accepting the plaudits for Serena's Song's victory, Timber Country's fever had gone up another degree. Medication was given. "There was no recourse," said Lukas.

It was then that Young, one of the colt's owners (he has a one-third interest, as do Gainesway Farm and Robert and Beverly Lewis, the owners of Serena's Song), went over to Timber Country's barn.

"I just decided to go over to the barn after watching Serena's Song," said Young, "and maybe poke my head in to check on Timber Country. But he hadn't eaten his feed and his fever had spiked. And Wayne was very emotional when he gave us the word."

Timber Country was expected to go off as a 4-5 (or perhaps 3-5) favorite Saturday. The Preakness winner had earned so much respect that even Billy Mott, the trainer of Cigar, was saying in the Suffolk Downs press box last Saturday that it was Timber Country he was eyeing as Cigar's main rival for the big handicap races in September and, of course, the Breeders' Cup Classic in October.

"It's just a simple but sad story," said Young, who has owned horses such as Tabasco Cat, Storm Cat, Flanders and Harlan, all trained by Lukas. "After all, you have to be philosophical about it ... after all, he did win the Preakness, he did win a classic race."

Timber Country's late scratch brought back memories of the 1970 Belmont when Personality, another Preakness winner, was scratched just before the Belmont. And in what Lukas hopes will be a foreshadowing of Saturday's race, Personality's stablemate, High Echelon, went on to win the Belmont.

"You're not in the Belmont but two or three times if you're lucky," said Young, who first made his money with Big Top peanut butter and then was chairman of the board of Pepsi-Cola for 10 years. "So this is difficult."

But, Young went on, still standing outside Timber Country's stall as the sun was setting, "it's not the end of the world. The colt caught a cold just like you or I do. The sun will rise tomorrow."

Said Lukas, "Could a bat have left Africa on Thursday, flown across the Atlantic and landed in Timber Country's stall all in one day?"

Lukas rides Serena's Song to Mother Goose victory

NEW YORK (AP) — It was a nice day for a jaunt in the park, and that's what Serena's Song took Friday at Belmont Park.

The 1-20 favorite ran the 1 1/8 miles in a leisurely 1:50 1-5 and won the Mother Goose by three lengths over Golden Bri.

Serena's Song, winning her sixth straight graded stakes against other 3-year-old fillies, had company until the homestretch, but there was no coubt she was far superior to her five rivals.

"She makes my job very easy," jockey Gary Stevens said.

In her second straight win since finishing 16th in the Kentucky Derby after setting the pace for a mile, Serena's Song paid $2.10 and 2.10. She earned $120,000 from a purse of $200,000 and boosted her career earnings to $1,471,435 a record of 10 wins, two seconds and one third in 17 starts. She has won six of seven starts this year and earned $874,100.

Golden Bri, a 9-1 shot, paid $2.10 after finishing six lengths in front of longshot Forested. Despite a six-horse field there was no show betting.

It was the fifth Mother Goose victory for trainer D. Wayne Lukas, who will try for his second Belmont Stakes triumph Saturday when he sends out Kentucky Derby winner Thunder Gulch. Preakness winner Timber Country, also trained by Lukas, was expected to be the favorite for the Belmont, but was scratched Friday after developing a fever.

Lukas said the next start for Serena's Song, owned by Robert and Beverly Lewis, could be the 1 1/4-mile Coaching Club American Oaks on July 8 at Belmont.

"We're happy to bring Serena's Song here and share her with New York," Lukas said.

Serena's Song broke on top, but after a half-mile she was second, a head behind Golden Bri, ridden by Jose Santos. That order was quickly reversed, and Serena's Song led Golden Bri by a narrow margin around the turn and into the stretch. There is only one turn in 1 1/8-mile races at Belmont Park, which start out of a chute.

Completing the order of finish were Ravishing Raven, Love Tunnel and So Cheerful.

Oilers expect contribution from former Aggie Thomas

HOUSTON (AP) — It's been nearly two months since the NFL draft and the Houston Oilers still can't believe the heist they pulled off with the third-round pick of Rodney Thomas.

If anything, the Oilers' disbelief has grown this week with Thomas' strong showing through the first three days of minicamp.

Head coach Jeff Fisher now expects the 5-foot-10 running back from Texas A&M to make an immediate contribution on special teams — at the very least.

"We think we'll be able to use Rodney as a role player," Fisher said. "He has some pass-catching abilities, so we would like to utilize him out of the backfield. He conceivably could carry the ball eight to 10 times a game to spell Gary (starting running back Gary Brown).

"We were just fortunate and surprised that Rodney was still on the board in the third round. We had heard that some other teams considered taking him higher, and I know we had him rated high."

With all that praise, Thomas might be expected to have an overinflated ego. But the rookie from Groveton is humble.

"My main concern is just to get a job, and that means making the team," Thomas said. "In that regard, I'm sure I'm no different than any of the other rookies here. Houston always has been like a second home to me. Making this team would be a dream come true."

Thomas thinks the Southwest Conference's tarnished image in football might have diminished his chances in the draft. It didn't, however, diminish his abilities.

"We don't get as much attention as some of the other conferences, so I'm not sure how many people actually knew what kind of player I was," Thomas said. "Whether people want to accept it or not, we have some pretty good players coming out of the SWC."

Thomas didn't get much fanfare outside of Texas because he split time at A&M with Greg Hill, who now plays for the Kansas City Chiefs, and standout runner Leland McElroy.

In four years with the Aggies, Thomas rushed for 3,014 yards and 41 touchdowns, but he started in only 17 of 44 collegiate games.

"I'm just glad we were able to get him," said Oilers running backs coach Sherman Smith. "When we looked at all the running backs, Ki-Jana Carter was the cream of the crop. But you had to put Rodney right up there in the top five to 10 backs.

"I won't mention any names, but Rodney is a lot better than some of the backs drafted ahead of him."

Pats' Bledsoe soars with jet pilot

BEDFORD, Mass. (NYT) — As Air Force life support specialist Warren Hensman was telling Drew Bledsoe how to wear a jet pilot's gravity suit designed to help withstand extreme G forces at high speeds early Friday morning, he pointed out that "as you pull those extra G forces, the suit keeps the blood in the upper extremities. It can be worn loose or tight. Some pilots like to wear it loose. Others like it tight, if they have high G tolerance."

"It'll be interesting to find out if I have any G tolerance," Bledsoe shot back 90 minutes before he would climb into an Air Force Thunderbird F-16 fighter plane with Capt. Dan Torweihe at Hanscom Air Force Base and get his answer.

It would turn out that he had enough to take the same "9 G" pressure ride, the plane's maximum, that his Miami Dolphins rival Dan Marino took earlier this year. But long before Bledsoe learned he possessed at least as much of the right stuff as Marino, Hensman made clear that other stuff might get in his way if he found flying an F-16 a little different in reality than his dream might have been.

"If you begin to feel queasy, don't try to hold it in," Hensman advised in an understanding tone as he handed Bledsoe an air sickness bag. "Swallow your pride and hurl. You'll feel great after that."

"Right," Bledsoe said. Queasily.

Soon after, Hensman went into an explanation of just what Bledsoe was to do if he had to eject from, say, 15,000 feet. Not that he would, of course, but you can never be too safe, a point Bledsoe noted had already been made by the presence of eight ambulances and EMT drivers right outside the Base Operations building at Hanscom, where the elite Thunderbirds aerial demonstration team will perform this weekeend during an air show.

The presence of ambulances and parachutes probably explains why a year ago, when Bledsoe was first scheduled to make this flight, someone mysteriously canceled it. It probably also explained why this year Bledsoe never mentioned it to the Patriots, who learned about it Wednesday and said they couldn't have stopped him contractually, anyway.

"I got the invitation last year, but somebody screwed up and canceled me out of it," Bledsoe said before his flight. "I'm a little nervous, but I always wanted to do this. I didn't really ask the Patriots about it."

Brodeur spends off day in delivery room, focuses on Game 4

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — Martin Brodeur walked into the New Jersey Devils' locker room Friday and the bags under his eyes were as visible as the smile on his face.

This wasn't either a case of the Eastern Conference final wearing on the young goaltender or a long night watching reruns of Rod Brind'Amour's bad-bounce goal that helped Philadelphia win Game 3 Wednesday.

This was a matter of love.

Instead of resting Thursday — the day after the Flyers beat New Jersey 3-2 in overtime to end the Devils' six-game playoff winning streak and cut New Jersey's lead to 2-1 in the best-of-7 series — Brodeur got up early and went to St. Joseph's Medical Center in Paterson to see his fiance, Melanie, deliver their child, a boy, named Anthony.

"I think it went fine," Brodeur said before practice. "I didn't see the baby come out because they did a C-section, but I saw him just seconds after being born. It was a great experience. It's hard to describe."

When asked if the experience was more nerve-racking than a playoff game, Brodeur answered as he has all season.

"I wasn't nervous at all," said the 23-year-old, who will be getting married this summer.

Brodeur, who has given up only 19 goals in 13 playoff games, isn't showing any signs of being worried about Game 4 at the Meadowlands Arena today. The Devils can make things tough on the Flyers by winning.

"I don't think they (the Flyers) played much better than in the first two games," Brodeur said when asked about Game 3. "They weren't on top. I looked at what they said on TV and they were a lot more patient. They had a few chances but nothing to go crazy about. Their power play didn't work well."

The big difference was Brind'Amour's flip shot from the left point with 6:03 left in the third period. It bounced about five feet in front of Brodeur and hopped over the goalie's leg.

"I think I looked the wrong way," Brodeur said. "From the angle they showed on TV, you could see the puck coming easy. But maybe I looked the wrong way. I was looking through people and I didn't react until it bounced."

Brodeur had little chance on Eric Lindros' game-winner early in the first overtime, which capped a 3-on-2 break.

"I think it was good the last two days to think about the way we played," he said. "I think we feel good about ourselves. We let that one slip away. We'll just have to play hard again."

Stephane Richer said the Devils were not as intense as the first two games of the series, two easy New Jersey wins at Philadelphia.

"I think they played the same and we were not sharp," he said. "The second and third period we were up a goal and didn't focus, then they got the lucky bounce."

Flyers coach Terry Murray said Friday that the pressure still was on his team.

"We have to go into that building and get another game out of there to even the series," he said. "If it goes to a 3-1 series, it makes it a lot more difficult. We want to execute and play patient again and hope we get another win."

Ruddock tilts scales at 243-pounds, ready to slug it out with Morrison in IBC heavyweight bout today

■ Tommy Morrison enters today's fight all business.

By Craig Horst
AP Sports Writer

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Razor Ruddock, looking formidable despite fighting only once in two years, weighed in at 243 3/4 pounds Friday as he prepared for the fight that likely will determine his boxing future.

Tommy Morrison, who also is at the crossroads of an up-and-down career, came in at 227 pounds. Morrison will fight Saturday in the IBC heavyweight title bout two inches shorter and with a reach 2 1/2 inches less than the 31-year-old Ruddock, who is 6-foot-3 with a 78-inch reach.

Ruddock is 28-4-1 with 20 knockouts; the 26-year-old Morrison is 44-2-1 with 38 knockouts.

Morrison, showing huge, muscular arms and a tight upper body, was all business as he waited to prove that he could regain the magic that brought a 12-round decision on June 7, 1993 against George Foreman and the WBO championship.

He has been lackluster since, losing the title in the next fight.

"He's scared," Morrison trainer Tom Virgets said. "In the bouts that he was scared is when he performed the best. It motivates him. He'll attempt to do things properly and correctly because he knows you can't make a mistake against a puncher like Razor."

Morrison is known for his lack of defense and a lack of conditioning, and a Ruddock uppercut could produce a quick fight.

But Morrison also has a punishing left hook that he hopes, as Ruddock does, will produce a win and push him back into the top 10.

Ruddock endured two tough losses to Mike Tyson, and came off the floor to knock out James "Bonecrusher" Smith in 1989.

For two years, Ruddock stayed away from boxing, except for a January 1994 decision against Anthony Wade, to handle personal problems. Morrison was better-known for his barroom brawling and acting until he became a born-again Christian last year.

Gant homers twice for Reds; Bichette keys win

Chicago Cubs outfielder Sammy Sosa steals second base as Colorado shortstop Walt Weiss is late with the tag during the Rockies 2-1 win Friday afternoon.

■ Cincinnati wins its sixth game in seven tries, 5-2 over Houston.

The Associated Press

HOUSTON — Ron Gant hit a pair of home runs Friday night, carrying the streaking Cincinnati Reds to a 5-2 victory over the Houston Astros.

Gant, who has four of the Reds' six homers against the Astros this season, hit an opposite-field homer with two outs in the eighth inning off Shane Reynolds (2-5), breaking a 2-2 tie and giving the Reds their sixth victory in seven games.

The Reds are now 8-1 on the road and 15-5 overall against Central Division teams. Cincinnati is 5-0 against the Astros and has come from behind to win in each game.

Gant's second homer of the game, his 11th of the year, made a winner of Xavier Hernandez (4-0). Jeff Brantley pitched a scoreless ninth for his seventh save.

Thomas Howard gave the Reds a pair of insurance runs in the ninth with a two-run triple off John Hudek.

Reynolds went eight innings, allowing seven hits and three runs. He struck out eight and walked one batter.

The Reds tied the game 2-2 in the seventh when Eddie Taubensee doubled, went to third on Bret Boone's infield hit and scored on Jeff Branson's single.

Gant drove an 0-1 pitch from Reynolds into left-field seats, giving the Reds a 1-0 lead in the second.

The Astros scored twice in the bottom of the inning. Craig Shipley led off with a single and scored on Orlando Miller's one-out triple off the glove of center fielder Reggie Sanders. Scott Servais followed with a sacrifice fly to score Miller.

Rockies 2, Cubs 1

CHICAGO — Dante Bichette hit a run-scoring double off Mike Perez in the 10th inning, giving Colorado a 2-1 victory, the Rockies' eighth win in nine games.

Mike Kingery opened the 10th with an infield single off Mike Perez (0-4), took second on Jason Bates' sacrifice and scored when Dante Bichette doubled into the left-field corner. Bichette was 3-for-5 to extend his hitting streak to 15 games.

Darren Holmes (5-0) pitched 1 2-3 innings, striking out three, and Mike Munoz finished for his first save since June 7, 1994.

Chicago, which lost its fifth straight, tied the score in the eighth on Sammy Sosa's RBI single. Vinny Castilla singled in Bichette with one out in the sixth for the Rockies' first run.

Braves 3, Cardinals 2

ATLANTA — Mike Mordecai, inserted only an inning earlier as a pinch-runner, drove in his first run of the season with a 10th-inning single, giving Atlanta the victory over St. Louis.

It was the Braves' fourth consecutive win and first in extra innings this season. They lost their first four extra-inning games.

Mordecai, in his 13th at-bat this season, singled over the head of left fielder Bernard Gilkey with one out off loser Rene Arocha (3-4). Fred McGriff opened the inning with a walk and took second on a sacrifice bunt by Mike Kelly.

Chipper Jones led off the eighth inning with his ninth homer of the season, giving the Braves a 2-1 lead in the pitchers' duel between 1994 Cy Young winner Greg Maddux and runner-up Ken Hill.

Marlins 5, Pirates 4

MIAMI — Quilvio Veras hit a two-run homer and Chris Hammond pitched eight solid innings, lifting Florida over Pittsburgh and extending the Marlins' winning streak to four games.

Hammond (2-1) allowed seven hits and three runs in 8 1-3 innings to outduel Denny Neagle (5-3) and hand the Pirates their seventh loss in eight games on a 10-game road trip.

Hammond took a 5-2 lead into the ninth and was trying for Florida's first complete game since last July, but Rich Aude doubled with one out. Randy Veres surrendered a two-run homer to pinch-hitter Al Martin before getting the second out, and Yorkis Perez got Dave Clark on a pop-out for his first save.

Gonzo returns with home run in Rangers' win

The Associated Press

ARLINGTON — Juan Gonzalez hit his first home run of the season, leading the Texas Rangers past the Chicago White Sox 6-1 Friday night for their eighth win in 10 games.

Gonzalez, the AL home run champion in 1992 and 1993, missed 35 of Texas' first 41 games because of back problems. He hit a two-run shot in the first inning, his first homer since last Aug. 10, the Rangers' last game before the strike.

■ AL Roundup

Darren Oliver (3-1) struck out 10 in 7 2-3 innings, and allowed only four hits. Oliver, a converted reliever trying to solidify his spot in the rotation, set career highs for strikeouts and innings in a game.

Mark McLemore started a three-run first against Wilson Alvarez (1-3) with a one-out single. After Will Clark struck out, Gonzalez homered the opposite way to right field.

Gonzalez missed the first 33 games this season because of a herniated disc, played six times and then missed the two games before Friday night with tightness in his back.

Indians 7, Brewers 4

MILWAUKEE — Kenny Lofton scored four times and Carlos Baerga hit a three-run homer as Cleveland beat Milwaukee for its seventh straight victory.

Lofton, who had three hits, tied a career-high for runs. Cleveland won for the 12th time in 13 games.

Chad Ogea (1-0) earned his first major league victory, allowing three earned runs on six hits in seven innings.

Jose Mesa pitched the ninth for his 14th save in as many opportunities.

Baerga's three-run homer off Sid Roberson (1-2) in the fifth put the Indians ahead 5-4. Following singles by Lofton and Omar Vizquel, Baerga hit Roberson's full-count offering 366 feet for his seventh home run this season.

Orioles 10, Angels 4

BALTIMORE — Jeff Manto hit two home runs for the second straight day, and the Baltimore Orioles beat the California Angels 10-4 Friday night.

Rafael Palmeiro also hit a pair of home runs for the Orioles and Chris Hoiles connected for a two-run shot.

Tim Salmon and Jim Edmonds each hit two-run homers for the Angels.

Russ Springer (0-2), making his first start since May 11, was roughed up for 10 hits, four of them home runs, in five innings.

Red Sox 4, Athletics 1

BOSTON — Knuckleballer Tim Wakefield, discarded by Pittsburgh in spring training but dominant with Boston, pitched 7 1-3 innings of hitless ball as the Red Sox beat Oakland .

Wakefield (4-0) finished with a three-hitter. He's won four starts in 14 days since joining Boston on May 27, and has an 0.54 ERA.

Wakefield, trying to pitch the first no-hitter for the Red Sox and the first at Fenway Park overall since Dave Morehead on Sept. 16, 1965, against Cleveland, lost his bid when Stan Javier lined a clean single to center field.

Mariners 11, Yankees 1

NEW YORK — Tino Martinez homered and drove in four runs as Tim Belcher and the Seattle Mariners sent New York to its 14th loss in 17 games.

Martinez hit his eighth homer in the second inning and had a three-run double during a six-run fifth. Edgar Martinez and Darren Bragg hit two-run homers in the ninth.

Belcher (3-0) gave up six hits in seven innings. The Mariners roughed up Melido Perez (3-3).

Tigers 6, Twins 5

MINNEAPOLIS — Reliever Rick Aguilera's wide throw to the plate set a two-run rally in the eighth inning that lifted Detroit over Minnesota.

The Tigers trailed 5-4 when Cecil Fielder led off the eighth with a single off Dave Stevens. Pinch-runner Danny Bautista took third on Alan Trammell's pinch-double with one out off Mark Guthrie.

Aguilera relieved, and Chris Gomez hit a comebacker to the mound. Aguilera's throw to catcher Matt Walbeck was wide, however, and Bautista scored the tying run.

Sugar Land blanks Lubbock Coronado for 5A title

The Assoicated Press

AUSTIN — Shawn Thompson pitched a shutout and Mike Scarborough hit the only home run of the state baseball tournament as Sugar Land Elkins won the Class 5A championship Friday night with a 6-0 victory against Lubbock Coronado.

Elkins (32-2) won the title in its first tournament appearance. The Knights came from behind and defeated Corpus Christi Moody 11-6 in the semifinals Thursday.

Coronado (28-5), which knocked off top-ranked Grand Prairie 4-1 in the semifinals, got off to a slow start and couldn't capitalize on a few choice scoring opportunities.

Scarborough's solo home run, a towering 410-foot shot, gave Elkins its final margin of victory in the sixth inning.

Thompson remained undefeated on the season, improving to 7-0 as he gave up six hits with two strikeouts and four walks. Aided by strong defense that included two pickoffs, Thompson only twice faced more than four batters in an inning.

Steven Truitt and Mike Petersen each went 2-for-3 for Elkins. Eric Nelson and Josh Ellis each scored two runs for the Knights.

Coronado pitcher Barry Ledbetter (3-2) took the loss, giving up all six runs before being replaced in the sixth inning.

Elkins put the game out of reach by scoring three runs in the fifth inning. Ellis singled in a run and Truitt added a two-run double, giving the Knights a 5-0 lead.

Elkins got some help from a slow start by Ledbetter in taking a 2-0 lead after the first inning.

Ledbetter hit the first batter and walked the second, setting up a two-run single by Petersen.

Coronado was primed to score in the bottom of the fourth with the bases loaded and two outs. But facing a count of three balls and one strike, Frederick Tobias swung and popped out to left field, ending the inning.

Earlier in the seventh, Coronado's Trevor Cothran, a courtesy runner for catcher Brian Fox, was thrown out of the game for charging into Elkins' Petersen at third base during a run down. Cothran was tagged out, ruining another scoring chance.

Coronado's Doug Campbell led off the first with a double, but he considered turning it into a triple and hesitated. He was tagged out diving back to second.

Class 3A

Hallettsville 6, Luling 2

AUSTIN — Frank Bludau pitched a two-hitter as Hallettsville defeated Luling 6-2 Friday to claim the Class 3A championship at the state baseball tournament.

■ UIL Baseball

Hallettsville (29-1) took the title in its second tournament appearance, using a three-run third inning to pull away from Luling, which finished the season 25-2 after its first trip to the tourney.

Bludau (8-0), who also had two singles and scored a run, was strong in broiling heat that surpassed 100 degrees on the field. He mixed fastballs with curves to keep Luling batters guessing. He gave up a run in the first and watched another score come in following an error in the fourth.

Starting pitcher John Mundine (10-2) took the loss for Luling, going two-plus innings and giving up three runs.

Class 2A

East Bernard 14, Pilot Point Selz 2

AUSTIN — Greg Kubes went 3-for-3 and scored three runs while throwing five strong innings as East Bernard repeated as Class 2A champions with a 14-2 victory Friday against Pilot Point Selz in the state baseball tournament.

The game was stopped after the top of the fifth inning under the 10-run rule, which states that a team leading by 10 runs or more after the opposing team bats in the fifth is declared the winner.

East Bernard (23-3) won its second straight 2A title in only the team's second trip to the state tournament.

Selz, which could not overcome six errors, finished the year 26-5 after making its first appearance in the state tournament. The Bearcats made history on Thursday as pitcher Russ Horton fired the first no-hitter in a 2A tournament game in a 1-0 victory against Grand Saline.

Class 1A

D'Hanis 7, Corsicana Mildred 4

AUSTIN — Pete Martinez drove in four runs, including three with a bases-loaded triple in the third inning, catapulting D'Hanis to a 7-4 victory over Corsicana Mildred Friday in the Class 1A championship game of the state baseball tournament.

D'Hanis (24-4) won its first title in four appearances at the tournament. The Cowboys' previous best showing was runner-up in 1990.

Mildred, which held an early 3-1 lead, finished the season 16-6 after making its first tournament appearance.

Jacob Dominguez (12-3) went all seven innings for D'Hanis, giving up 10 hits with one walk. He had four strikeouts.

David Arnold (10-4) took the loss for Mildred, giving up 11 hits over seven innings with one walk and five strikeouts.

Mildred threatened in the bottom of the sixth and seventh innings. The Eagles loaded the bases with two outs in the sixth, but Zack Goodin blasted a shot right at the mound and Dominguez caught it for the final out.

The Eagles scored a run in the seventh and had runners at second and third with two outs. But Dominguez struck out Sean Bynum for the game's final out.

MANTLE: Clot forces second surgery

ical director of the Baylor Transplantation Institute, said Friday.

"To me, it's a real game of chance and to me, Mickey Mantle was very lucky," said Scott McCartney, a reporter for The Wall Street Journal who has written a book about the Baylor Transplant Institute. "He was here at the right time, the right donor came up and the match was made."

That luck faltered a bit in the early morning hours of Friday when internal bleeding was detected by a nurse. It took surgeons about 30 minutes to correct the problem.

After the procedure, the 63-year-old Mantle was taken off his respirator, watched morning TV shows and was in good spirits.

"He said that he feels good and, when asked what his thoughts are, he said, 'Incredible,'" surgeon Dr. Robert Goldstein said. "So I think right now that he's doing remarkably well and we're very, very pleased with his progress."

Mantle's condition was upgraded late Friday from critical to serious but stable at Baylor University Medical Center. Doctors said the first 48 to 72 hours after the transplant would be a dangerous period in which infection, rejection or bleeding could occur.

A Baylor spokeswoman said in a recorded update that Mantle is awake, alert and resting comfortably.

On Thursday, a surgical team removed Mantle's liver, which was ravaged by cancer, hepatitis and heavy drinking, and replaced it with one from an unidentified donor.

On Friday morning, Mantle began losing blood and received transfusions before his second operation. There was no further bleeding Friday and Goldstein said Mantle could leave the hospital within several weeks.

"We went in and cleaned out a little bit of blood clotting, found one or two spots that we could put a stitch in and closed," Goldstein said. "It took all of about 30 minutes."

Added Goldstein: "Now I think we'll be dealing with the typical problems we see after transplants, such as infection."

Mantle was diagnosed with progressive liver failure after he was admitted to the hospital on May 28, complaining of abdominal pain.

Mantle's son recalled a conversation he had with his father before the liver transplant.

"I mentioned to him — this was before we knew about how soon we were going to be able to get him a liver — that 'if it does happen and you are approved and following all the procedures they will have done and you do get the surgery, there will be some changes in your life that you ought to get accustomed to,'" David Mantle said. "A man like my father, all athletes have their egos. And I said, 'You're just going to have to maybe calm that down a little bit. There's going to be some other rules to follow.'"

SEASONING: Low turnover helps Angels succeed

(From 1C)

Midland's Double-A level.

"He kind of put it in (the organization's) ear, 'let's let guys stay here and put up some big numbers,'" Hoppel said.

The guys putting up the biggest offensive numbers, and the player's Angel supporters are most anxious about losing, are third baseman George Arias and catcher Todd Greene. The two led all of professional baseball in home runs entering Thursday night's game. Arias hit number 18 Thursday and Greene had 19 before Friday's game.

Just the same, both owner and general manager agreed that a player could get called up to Triple A any day. Hence the wood knocking. But they also both preach the advantage of not moving players up too soon. Prentice cited former Midland Angel Tim Salmon, '93 American League Rookie of the Year with the California Angels, as an example.

"You look at what a full year did for Salmon," Prentice said. "They left him alone here and they let him play a full year at Triple A."

Said Hoppel: "I've talked to scouts and they say the best thing for a player is to have him stay a full year at each level."

If the Angels can hang on to win the West and keep most of the team together, the franchise will have its best squad in years. A first place finish assures Midland of a playoff spot against either the Eastern Division winner, if the Angels also take the second half, or the winner of the West's second half race.

In fact, the only time the Angels finished higher than second in the first half in the '90s was last year. And that was with a 34-34 mark, 9 1/2 games behind El Paso. The last Angel playoff season was '91, the season the club had Salmon and third baseman Mark Howie, whose 123 RBIs set a franchise record. The team won the second half that year.

"I would love to go to the playoffs," Angel shortstop Tim Harkrider said. "That was my goal coming to Midland this year. Last year it seemed like the month of August took forever because we were out of it."

The Angels last playoff appearance before '91 was '75. That was also the last time Midland hosted a playoff game. A first half Angel win would guarantee at least one home playoff game this year.

"I guess we're really not thinking about that," Angel pitcher Jeff Schmidt said. "We're just thinking about winning this series with San Antonio."

Midland players probably weren't thinking much about the playoffs when they stood six games behind first place San Antonio May 9. But pitching and overall execution has come together with good hitting to put the Angles on the brink of a little history making.

"We hung around long enough for the other teams to hit their slumps," outfielder Basilio Ortiz said. "And now we're in this position."

It's a position Angel fans could get used to.

land has put up lately, he would have picked up a win. He had a two-hit shutout going through four innings. The fifth was his downfall with the Missions starting the frame with a homer, two doubles and a single.

Snyder (4-5) gave up five of his eight hits to the last two batters in San Antonio's lineup. No. 8 hitter Ryan Luzinski, son of former big-leaguer Greg, went 3-for-3 with two doubles and an RBI.

"It's nice to come out and have a big game when you need it," Luzinski said, talking over the loud music and joking in the Missions' clubhouse. "It means a lot for my confidence and for the team."

Texas League teams take a four-day break for the Texas League-Mexico League two-game series Sunday through Wednesday. Midland (33-28) then ends the first half with six games at El Paso. They would , of course, prefer to go to the extreme West Texas city with the division lead.

"When we came into this series we knew what our job was," Boykin said. "The first night we had a great come-from-behind win (13-10) but that's not going to happen every night. (Today) is a very, very important game because we don't want to go into El Paso tied with San Antonio."

The Missions (32-29) will finish the first half with six games at last place Wichita. That could give them an edge with El Paso and Midland going head-to-head.

Meanwhile, Pyc continues to like Christensen as much as most hitters do.

"I seem to have my best and longest outings here," Pyc said. "If they release me and the Angels pick me up I might be able to win 20 here."

ANGEL DUST: The Angels send Ryan Hancock (6-1) to the mound tonight at 7 p.m. against the Missions' John Cummings (0-0).

NBA: Rockets defense holds Magic to 34 percent shooting

(From 1C)

11 points and a career-high seven steals. Kenny Smith, who had 23 points in Game 1, was scoreless in 19 minutes, but it didn't matter with the Rockets shooting 52 percent.

"When you have five guys contributing, everybody being a part of it, everybody knowing they're going to be a part of it, that's when you're going to be successful," Cassell said.

The Magic's two 23-year-old All-Stars carried their more tested teammates. Nick Anderson, whose four missed free throws in the final 10.5 seconds of Game 1 cost the Magic a win in regulation, was 4-of-13 from the field and Dennis Scott was 3-of-10.

All through the playoffs, the Magic had relied on 50 percent or better shooting. After shooting 47 percent in Game 1, a 120-118 over-time loss, Orlando hit 46 percent of its field goals and finally got hot in the final period when it was too late to matter.

The Magic hit six of their first seven shots of the fourth quarter to cut a 19-point deficit to 11 on Brian Shaw's 3-pointer with 7:02 to play. Anderson's 3-pointer with 5:44 remaining cut Houston's lead to single digits, 101-92, for the first time since early in the second quarter.

After a nightmarish first half, the Magic opened the third with a 12-4 spurt to cut Houston's lead to 67-53. But their offense kept sputtering, and the Rockets raced back to an 80-57 lead with 4:28 left in the third period.

Two 3-pointers by Hardaway keyed a 10-0 run that pulled the Magic within 13 before Cassell's 3-pointer and fast-break layup put the Rockets up 90-71.

After missing their first six shots of the game, the Magic came back to tie it on Scott's back-to-back 3-pointers. But Orlando's shooting woes persisted, and Houston finished the period with a 10-1 run.

Things got even worse for the Magic in the second quarter as Houston stiffened its defense, controlled the boards and seemed to grab every loose ball.

Olajuwon, who had 22 points in the half, had a layin and turnaround jumper to give the Rockets a 47-29 lead with 5:49 left. Cassell scored Houston's last seven points to put the Magic down 63-41 and finished the quarter with 16.

Trojans head into World Series title game

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — All-America Gabe Alvarez had a record-tying five hits and three RBIs Friday night to lead Southern Cal past Miami 7-3 and into the College World Series championship game.

Though Alvarez committed an error in the second inning that led to three runs, sixth-seeded Southern Cal (49-20) advanced to today's title game against top-seeded Cal State Fullerton (56-9).

FRENCH OPEN

FRENCH: Muster takes clay game into Sunday's men's finals

(From 1C)

Muster won five games at love, had no double faults and committed only 18 unforced errors, compared to 38 for Kafelnikov. Only twice did the ninth-seeded Russian get a break point, and Muster held each time.

Chang needed 2 hours and 38 minutes to wear down Bruguera, 6-4, 7-6 (7-5), 7-6 (7-0).

The Spaniard had won 19 straight French Open matches but said his stamina this time around was subpar due to knee surgery in February that limited his playing time. He lost both tiebreakers with a series of unforced errors, seemingly lacking the patience that was his best weapon the past two years.

"My legs didn't work well enough," Bruguera said. "When you are tired, you don't think well enough."

Chang said he was excited to be back in a Grand Slam final for the first time since 1989, when he became the youngest winner of a men's Grand Slam singles title. But he seemed unsurprised to learn that Bruguera was picking Muster to win Sunday's final.

"It's going to be a very, very tough match," said Chang, who has lost all three career matches against Muster. "Thomas is a great competitor, and he knows how to play particularly well on this surface."

That bordered on understatement. Though the Muster-Kafelnikov match lacked any hint of suspense, the Center Court crowd nonetheless gave Muster a standing ovation at the end for his dominating performance.

"Thomas is something unusual," Kafelnikov said. "I can't really explain what's happening when you go on the court, when you know that you have to play against him. Something is already in the mind, that Thomas is something like a wall. He's unbeatable."

Muster scoffed at such talk

"I've improved my game, that's true, but I'm not unbeatable." he said. "I'm a human being, and I can make mistakes."

But the 27-year-old Austrian had an invincible aura to him on the court, with his grunts much fiercer and louder than Kafelnikov's, and his tactic of striding back on court before the umpire announced the end of the changeover break, preparing to serve even before his rival had left his chair.

Kafelnikov was reduced to racket-slamming frustration in the second set, incurring a warning. In the third, convinced he was going to lose, the Russian started playing better, winning some points with serve-and-volley tactics.

"I was practicing for Wimbledon already," he joked.

But when Kafelnikov obtained his second and last break point of the match while ahead 4-3, Muster slammed a cross-court forehand winner and two aces to reassert himself.

Muster turned pro in 1985, and came back strongly from a severe knee injury inflicted by a drunk driver in 1989.

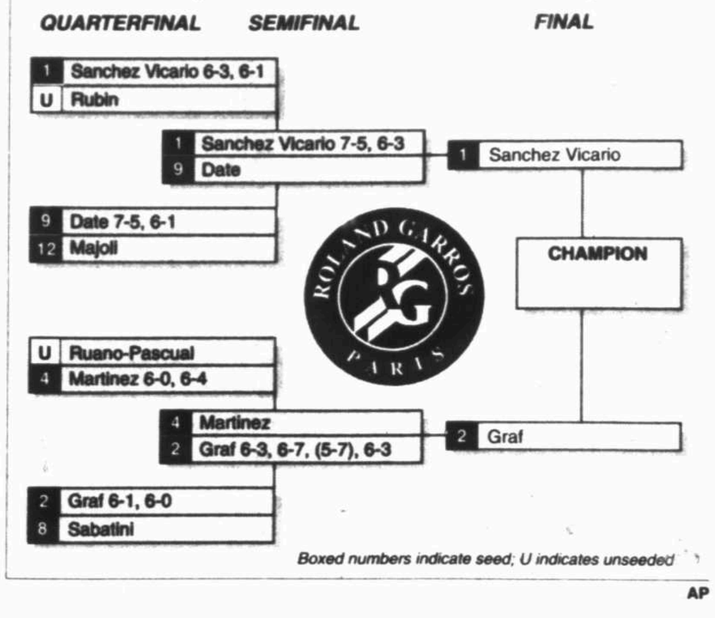

He has long been one of the world's top clay-court players, winning all but one of his 28 tournament titles on the surface. But he has never before reached a Grand Slam final — only former Dutch star Tom Okker won more tour titles, 31, without winning a Grand Slam.

"It would be great to win the slam, but it's not going to change my life," Muster said. "I'm happy the way I'm living."

Seedings have meant little in this tournament — Muster was seeded fifth, Chang sixth, Bruguera seventh. But Chang, using fishing as an analogy, left no doubt he sees Muster as the favorite.

Bruguera's loss ensures the crowning of a new men's champion this year. Arantxa Sanchez-Vicario was defending her women's title Saturday against second-seeded Steffi Graf in a final that also had the No. 1 ranking on the line.

Love's 63 sets Kemper mark, gives him lead

The Associated Press

POTOMAC, Md. — Davis Love III had played a better round of golf before. Twice, in fact.

No one, however, ever had a lower round at the Kemper Open than he did Friday.

Love shot an 8-under-par 63, matching the course and tournament record, for a two-stroke lead over Scott Hoch after two rounds. Love completed 36 holes at 11-under 131, breaking the tournament record set by Chris Perry in 1987 by one stroke.

"I played about as good as I can play, except for maybe two or three swings," he said. "It was a wild day."

Love had a double bogey and a bogey, but he more than offset that with an eagle and nine birdies on the 7,005-yard TPC at Avenel course. His 63 tied the Kemper mark set by Ted Schulz in 1991 and matched by David Toms in 1992.

Love's best round on the PGA Tour was a 60 at last year's Hawaiian Open, and he captured the 1992 Greensboro Open with a 62 on the final day.

It's doubtful that either of those rounds were as zany as the one he played Friday. Love parred only six holes and got two straight pars only once.

Starting on the back nine, Love birdied No. 10 and followed that with a double bogey on the par-3 11th after he hit an 8-iron into a creek. He parred 12, then shaved five strokes off par with a birdie-birdie-eagle-birdie run. His eagle on the 467-yard 15th came when he holed out with a pitching wedge from 155 yards.

His hot streak ended with a bogey on 17, but he had five birdies on the back nine to move into position for his second tournament victory of the year.

"I've got a lot of confidence, but I've got to keep doing the things I'm doing," he said.

Hoch shot a bogey-free 65. Tom Kite (68), Wayne Grady (69), Robert Gamez (70) and Phil Blackmar (68) were tied for third at 135. Vijay Singh, who started the day tied for the lead with Gamez, shot a 71 and was tied with Mark O'Meara (70) at 136.

Seve Ballesteros (143), Pete Mickelson (144) and Fred Couples missed the cut of 142.

Kite is winless on the tour since 1993 and has only one top-10 finish in 12 events this year.

"This has not been the best year I've had in terms of playing. I've made a lot of birdies, but I've been offsetting them with bogeys," he said. "This has been a slump, and two good rounds doesn't mean it's over. But I've gotten some good birdies here."

Kite is the leading career money winner at the Kemper Open. That's one reason he began the week with a healthy attitude.

"Anytime you go places where you've had past success, it gives you a lot of confidence," he said.

Grady hasn't won since 1990 and came into the tournament ranked 185th on this year's money list. But he followed his opening 66 with an up-and-down round that featured six birdies and four bogeys.

"I feel like I've played well lately, but this the first time I've gotten anything out of it," he said. "It's good to see my name on the leaderboard again. It's been about five years."

While Grady parred less than half the holes, Gamez had a round that appeared comparatively routine — 15 pars, two birdies and one bogey. But he hit only 10 greens in regulation.

Greg Norman shot a 66 but was seven strokes off the pace. Still, he was glad to get some competition one week before the U.S. Open.

LPGA First Bank

BROOKLYN PARK, Minn. — Julie Larsen and Tina Tombs both birdied three of the last four holes in 6-under-par 66s that left them tied with Cindy Rarick for the first-round lead in the First Bank-Edina Realty Classic.

Kristal Parker-Gregory, Caroline Pierce and Pat Bradley were all one stroke back, while Jane Geddes and Val Skinner had 68s in the $500,000 LPGA tournament at the Edinburgh USA Golf Course.

Larsen, who's in her fourth year on the LPGA Tour, played the par-5s three under par — a great improvement over how she played the long holes in last week's Oldsmobile Classic.

Larsen, who is still seeking her first victory, opened her round with a birdie on the 492-yard No. 1 hole before finishing with birdies on Nos. 15, 17 and 18.

On 17, a 365-yard par-4 with an island fairway, Larsen knocked an 8-iron to about 15 feet. On the final hole, a 370-yard par-4, the 28-year-old made a 16-footer to take a share of the lead.

Tombs also used good putting and a strong finish to grab a share of the lead. The 33-year-old, who has made only one cut in nine starts this year and is third from last on the money list, finished with eight birdies.

Rarick, who was 42nd on the money list entering the tournament, did not have a bogey while making three birdies on each nine.

BellSouth Seniors

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Harold Henning turned in his best round this year with seven birdies and no bogeys in a 65 that gave him a one-stroke lead after the first round of the $1.1 million BellSouth Senior Classic.

He tried remembering the last time he shot a 65 and couldn't.

"It was a long time ago, I can't remember," Henning said. "I'm as surprised as everyone else because nothing over the last two years suggested I could still play this kind of golf. It is a surprise."

Jim Dent posted an early 66 that looked like it would hold up until Henning made the turn in 32 and strung together birdies on Nos. 13-15.

The Hill brothers, Dave and Mike, were at 67. Dave Hill rallied from a double bogey on the par-4, 391-yard No. 4 with four birdies.

European TofC

HAMBURG, Germany — Bernhard Langer, not troubled by chilly, gusty winds, fired a 6-under-par 66 and opened a four-stroke lead in the $1 million European Tournament Players Championship.

Long-hitting John Daly wasn't as lucky against the strong wind that raked the course. He shot a 77 and missed the cut in the tournament he was using to get ready for next week's U.S. Open.

Langer had a 133 for the two rounds. His closest rival, at 137, was England's Jamie Spence.

Ryder Cup players Sam Torrance of Scotland and Italy's Costantino Rocca were another stroke back at 138.

Graf, Sanchez Vicario clash for No. 1 ranking, Grand Slam title

PARIS (AP) — It's an ideal matchup: No. 1-ranked Arantxa Sanchez Vicario versus No. 2 Steffi Graf for the top rung in women's tennis and the French Open title.

The two play Saturday, with Graf seeking her fourth French Open championship and Sanchez Vicario her third. In addition, the winner takes top spot in the world rankings.

It's the first time since a Graf-vs.-Martina Navratilova showdown at Wimbledon in 1987 that No. 1 and No. 2 have played each other in a Grand Slam final with the top ranking at stake.

Sanchez Vicario, despite a stomach virus, has not lost a set in six matches here and yielded just 24 games. She met only one seeded player, No. 9 Kimiko Date in the semifinals.

Graf has had a slightly rougher road, facing three seeded players and losing 39 games. Thirteen of those games were in the semifinal victory over fourth-seeded Conchita Martinez, who was unbeaten in her last 26 matches before losing to Graf in a 2 hour, 33 minute match.

Graf feels the tough match helped her.

"You are more satisfied when you win a match like that," Graf said. "It is more important to me to play well than anything else, but I think I won this time because I fought."

Graf is unbeaten in 1995 after returning to the tour following back and leg problems. The only set she lost in 24 matches this year was to Martinez.

Sanchez Vicario knows about breaking winning streaks. She stopped Graf's at 32 last year when she beat her in the final at Hamburg, Germany.

The Spaniard has won three of the last four matches they played, but overall Graf leads 24-8, with a 11-4 mark on clay.

Sanchez Vicario took time off after an ankle injury in March and is 31-5 for the year, winning two tournaments.

Despite the stomach ailment, she has been playing doubles as well as singles this week.

"Even with the virus, I am happy with my condition because knowing that I probably was not 100 percent, but still with the virus," Sanchez Vicario said. "I still have to be careful. But hopefully my energy is coming back and that is what counts."

Graf doesn't expect much difference in Sanchez Vicario's game.

"She is very consistent. I think she uses the court very well," Graf said. "She doesn't make a lot of mistakes and really fights and runs well."

Graf has 15 Grand Slam titles to Sanchez Vicario's three. Last year, Sanchez Vicario was judged the world's top women's player by the International Tennis Federation, despite Graf's No. 1 ranking at year's end.

Graf's last Grand Slam title was the Australian Open in 1994. Sanchez Vicario beat her for the U.S. Open title last year, the last time the two clashed.

Fox's condition improves slowly

Auto racing driver Stan Fox stays in fair condition.

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Race driver Stan Fox, seriously injured in a first-lap crash in the Indianapolis 500, remained in fair condition Friday in the neurocritical care unit of Methodist Hospital.

"Each day, he is more awake, and the swelling in his brain continues to reduce," a recorded message at the hospital said Friday. "Stan's eyes are staying open longer and he is looking around. He can follow simple commands."

Fox underwent surgery to remove a blood clot from his brain and was unconscious and in critical condition for five days after his car slammed into the concrete wall in the first turn of the Indianapolis Motor Speedway's oval as the May 28 race began.

The hospital said Fox's family expressed thanks for the many flowers that had been sent to him at the hospital, but suggested that additional flowers be delayed until he is further along in his recovery.

Dr. Kenneth L. Renkens, a neurosurgeon, has said it could take a month to determine the extent of the head injury.

GMC's 4-door Yukon fills wagon niche

By BOB PLUNKETT
Special to The Reporter-Telegram

Steep tracks, rutted and weathered by dry Nevada winds swirling off the high desert, shot straight up a barren slope littered by sage, rock and succulents.

When viewed through the windshield of a 4-wheel-drive sport-utility wagon I had steered through 2,000 vertical feet of altitude gained on a rough off-pavement course in eastern foothills of the Sierras, a prudent driver might naturally assume this intended route should not be tackled without ropes, winches or sure-footed mountain mules.

But I had ventured into these hills to test the mettle of the latest off-road warrior from the GMC Truck Division of General Motors, and a steep stretch of ruts was not going to turn me back, at least not without trying.

Besides, this vehicle packed powerful weapons for wilderness ventures: A strong frame, big V8 muscle, sturdy 4-wheel-drive system and high chassis clearance.

So I tackled that steep and slippery grade.

Racking the floor-mounted transfer case lever forward, I shifted into the lowest reaches of 4-wheel-drive, then pulled the column-mounted automatic transmission's stick down to first gear. Hands locked on the steering wheel and the right foot eased into accelerator.

Tires, with special off-road tread patterns designed to grip dirt and gravel, bit into desert debris, backed by the power of 200 horses and massive amounts of engine torque.

Up we climbed, this wagon and I, bumping over loose rocks and plunging through deep erosive tracks, tires spitting out the scree but never loosing traction, despite a scary slant to this slope.

Ace,

You had to see the uphill progress to believe it.

Yet inside this wagon, draped with plush comforts like a cushy leather seat, I never felt the roughness of this road, except for a dramatic tilt of cab during the climb.

Evidently, GMC's new full-size 4-door Yukon wagon can tackle such obstacles of the outback world and still keep riders comfortable with living-room conveniences.

The big machine, with a V8 tucked beneath the hood and broad bucket seats trimmed in supple leather set inside for driver and passenger, provides the plush touches of a luxury sedan, plus rugged off-road hardware with optional 4-wheel drive system.

Check out the room remaining in back seat and rear cargo bay and you'll discover this sport-utility wagon, which rides on a full-size GMC truck chassis, could also haul three backseat riders and a batch of camping gear, golf bags or snow ski equipment.

It's so big inside, in fact, that Yukon in 4-door conformation forges a virtual new class of vehicle among domestically-produced sport-utility wagons — its maximum cargo capacity of 122.5 cubic feet amounts to at least 40 more cubic feet of space than the nearest American rival.

To find its new position in the GMC lineup of SW wagons, understand that the Yukon 4-door measures more than the redesigned GMC compact wagon, Jimmy, and not quite as much as gigantic Suburban. Its 117.5-inch wheelbase, six inches longer than the 2-door Yukon, exceeds Jimmy's 4-door wheelbase by a full ten inches but falls 14 inches short of the massive Suburban.

Park a Yukon 4-door next to Suburban and you will be pressed to tell them apart, since both look similar from front bumper through the B pillar. Beyond the front seat back, however, Suburban earns extra room to add a third tier of seats so it can carry up to nine people, while Yukon maximizes with six riders.

Yukon also has less rear overhang than Suburban.

Yukon's 4-door variation begins with a rectangular ladder-type chassis with welded crossbars and boxed front. This is a special frame unique to Yukon, rather than an abbreviation of Suburban's chassis.

Tack on variable-ratio power steering and power brakes linked to the 4-wheel anti-lock system and Yukon ends up with important ingredients for smooth maneuvers on pavement.

The 5.7-liter iron-block engine, generating 200 hp, provides serious muscle for moving this mass of metal as well as towing a trailer's load. When outfitted with optional towing package, the wagon can pull a rig weighing up to 7,000 pounds for the rear-wheel 4x2 edition, or 6,500 pounds in 4x4 mode.

The Viper: Excitement in the fast lane

By Tom Keene,
Special to the Reporter-Telegram

If I were asked what sports car I would buy if money were no object, I'd be quick to reply, "the Dodge Viper." If I pondered that question, however, I might prefer a more practical vehicle.

There's no doubt in my mind that the Viper RT/10 is the most exciting vehicle I've ever driven. It is also the meanest-looking machine I've ever seen. Everything about this two-seater suggests that it reeks power from the word go until it comes to a screeching stop, and that image is right on the money. Under a very long hood is a ten-cylinder, 400 horsepower engine that makes no excuse when you touch the gas pedal.

The excitement begins when the engine starts. Prior to that, it is a struggle just to get into the car. For one thing, the Viper now has a canvas top and side windows with a mere slit for a rear window, which are difficult to remove. The original design did not include rainy-day protection, so the Dodge people answered the problem, but the design needs improvement.

There's no easy way to get into the seat. Worse, it is more difficult to get out of it. Nevertheless, there is something about this car that makes one willing to struggle. When the engine starts, all the efforts fade, and the heart picks up its pace.

The muffler has a distinctive throaty tone. The exhaust system consists of a stainless steel catalyst and muffler assembly, with dual exhaust pipes that run down each side of the car just under the doors. When the Viper was introduced in 1992, the pipes could cause burns if touched. The 1995 model has a protective enclosure, but you can still feel the warmth.

The instrumentation is pure and straightforward. All the car's vital signs can be seen at a glance. The more important instruments — tachometer and speedometer — are clearly visible through the spokes of the steering wheel. I tried to figure out how an air bag could be installed, but I came up blank and decided to leave that to Chrysler's designers. Hopefully, it won't be the canvas top guy.

This car has six gears forward and one reverse. They are fully synchronized and each gear seems to snap into place as you run through the scale. I consider shifting up and down the fun of driving a sports car. I wasn't totally efficient and I suspect I could have obtained higher speed more quickly if it had an automatic transmission, but manual shifting is part of the fun and excitement.

The real excitement is nudging the accelerator pedal knowing the 400 horsepower will leap into action. Not only is the leap immediate, I could feel top torque performance (435 pound-feet) at only 3600 rpm's. There isn't any car that can come close to this power.

The Viper is not the fastest car I've ever driven, nor is it the quickest, yet the importance of 0-to-60 mph pales when hearing the roar of the engine. The brakes on this sleek animal are as large as the wheels on a few cars. They are vented disc brakes with four-piston fixed calipers. The advantage is being able to hit the brakes hard and often, knowing they are not going to burn out.

As for comforts, there aren't any. An air-conditioning system is available, but I couldn't locate a cup holder. For practical purposes, the storage capacity is zilch. As for power locks and windows, there aren't any of these either. Fortunately, it has a security alarm.

This is a $60,000 car that no one will steal. The driver stands out like a sore thumb, with stares following every movement of the Viper, which explains my second thoughts about buying this car if money were no object. I'm just too self-conscious.

Some people may wonder why General Motors would buck tradition and come out with a radically different, air-cooled rear-engine car for the 1960s. Much of the reason was the swift success of Germany's little Volkswagen in the late 1950s, when VW sales mushroomed in the United States. Not only was VW's 1930s styled two-door Beetle a worldwide favorite, but VW's van-like Microbus was stealing sales from the station wagon market.

The Corvair would be considerably larger than the VW, but it would offer both cars and bus-vans, as VW was doing.

Compact cars were the latest thing in 1960, when Ford introduced the Falcon, and Plymouth the Valiant. At first, Chevrolet's rival compact was its new air-cooled, rear-engined Corvair—quite out of the ordinary. Some buyers, however, resisted rear engines and air-cooling, so to play it safe Chevrolet introduced an additional compact in 1962: the Chevy II (Nova).

Corvair sales were greatly depressed following the widespread circulation of Ralph Nader's bestselling book, «Unsafe at any Speed." Other cars were also lambasted in the book, but Corvair got perhaps the severest criticism. It was labeled an unstable, unsafe car that was prone to spin out of control because of its concentration of weight at the rear.

The Corvair wasn't as bad as the book would have you believe, but it did have serious faults with its suspension and cornering. GM thus redesigned the Corvair to correct these faults. Some improvements had been made by the time the illustrated 1964 model was on the market, and for 1965 a redesigned, snappily styled Corvair appeared.

But the bad publicity had done its damage, and sales continued to dwindle. After '65 there were few yearly changes in the Corvair, which was withdrawn from the market early in 1969.

Still, there are numerous loyal Corvair owners today, and these cars have increased in value. The C.O.R.S.A. (Corvair Society of America) is an excellent worldwide club for all who are interested in Corvairs. They have more than 130 local chapters in various cities. Their national headquarters mailing address is P.O. Box 607, Lemont, IL 60439-0607.

Every motorized vehicle on the road produces exhaust. While only a few decades ago, nobody really paid too much attention to exhaust, today everyone does.

The various elements found in the exhaust must be at or below government prescribed limits for your type and age vehicle. If not, you may be fined. If regulations change, as they well may, you might even have to junk your dirty-exhaust vehicle.

All motor vehicles built within the last 20 or so years, have specific devices designed to ensure that the engine's exhaust is as harmless as possible. It should be part of your regular maintenance practice to see that those devices are all working up to snuff.

Depending on the age and engine type of your vehicle, you may find a different collection of pollution control devices. Not everything is on every car or truck.

An emission's control standard that's found on almost all engines is a positive crankcase ventilation (PCV) valve. Small and relatively inexpensive this valve directs gases from the engine's crankcase back into the fuel/air mixture. You'll usually find the PCV sitting atop the engine's valve or camshaft cover, attached to a thick black hose. The hose runs to the air filter housing or intake manifold.

A vast host of cars on the road also utilize an exhaust gas recirculation (EGR) valve. This device directs a small amount of exhaust gas back to the engine to help cool the combustion process, reducing an offensive exhaust element called oxides of nitrogen, or NOx. This occurs only under certain — part throttle — conditions. If the EGR system is defective, the exhaust gas may be recirculated also during idle, which results in a faulty, emissions-laden idle. Or if the exhaust gases are recirculated at full throttle, engine performance is reduced.

If your engine has one, you'll find the EGR valve located either near the exhaust or intake manifold. A steel tube connects the valve to the manifold that it is not attached to. Inspect that the steel tubing is not rusted or corroded through and that it's solidly connected at both ends. Engine vacuum is usually used to operate the EGR valve, so check that the valve's rubber vacuum hose is connected and not cut, torn, hardened, brittle or leaking.

Many engines are also equipped with a pump that injects fresh air into the hot exhaust to help burn anything that's still unburned, much like a bellows and a hearth. Most of these air pumps resemble a small air-conditioning compressor and are driven by a belt, like the a/c or alternator. The air pump has heavy hoses or metal tubing connecting its one-way check valve to the exhaust manifold. The tubing connects at each cylinder's exhaust port — very close to the engine. The one-way check valve keeps the hot air from going back to the pump.

Start by checking the pump's drive belt. It cannot be frayed, cracked, brittle or loose. Continue by inspecting the tubing, checking that it's not corroded, cracked or kinked.

Next, you'll find that most modern vehicles rely on a sensor mounted in the exhaust manifold to help the engine computer regulate the amount of gasoline the engine needs under all conditions. This sensor is called the Oxygen (02) sensor and it may remind you of a small spark plug sticking out of the exhaust manifold. Though there are sophisticated tests to ensure that the sensor is operating correctly, you can check that it's threaded tightly into the manifold and that its wire is connected tightly. Check the connection for corrosion, as well.

Your car or truck's final shot at cleaning the exhaust is its catalytic converter. This device scrubs the exhaust gases as they pass through it on their way to the tailpipe. The converter is filled with various rare metals which change the chemical composition of the exhaust gas as the hot gases pass through the metals. The catalyst looks much like a flattened muffler and is mounted beneath the vehicle, in the exhaust pipe between the engine and the muffler. Some expensive high performance cars with dual exhausts use dual catalysts. To inspect the catalytic converter, you must raise the car and support it on safety stands or ramps. Check the catalyst for severe dents, cracks and rust. Rap its body with a hammer and listen for rattling inside — if you hear any, replace the converter.
