Brides' Skirts Longer, Gowns Are Conservative

By LUCY CLAIRE Fashion Expert for Central Press. Perhaps nowhere is the influence of the longer skirt more apparent than in the bridal costumes designed for the elite by Paris couturiers. There is a return, also, to the more conservative gown of the traditional bride in these new models. White or ivory satin is the favored fabric, though for the summer wedding tulle, faille and georgette are still the choice of many conventional brides. Plain white is the preference, sometimes touched up with silver and even strops. Occasionally we find the less traditional bride choosing rose satin, as evidenced by June the dancer, new Lady Inverlyde. For the formal church wedding the bride clings to the tradition of long sleeves and small V or bateau necklines and as most of the fashionable weddings do take place in the church this is the most prevalent mode. The robe de style, which is most becoming to the slim young bride, may be worn sleeveless when the wedding takes place in the home or elsewhere outside of the church but for the church wedding even this type of gown should have long sleeves. The skirts of the robe de style by the way, are not cut as short in the front as they were a year ago. Princess Line and Flare. Princess lines with the skirt flare low, and the skirt itself quite long in front and dipping at the back, are prominently featured. The separate court train that used to float from the shoulders is now a part of the skirt or forms a double train posed from the waistline. The model by Lelong at the left of the sketch. This is of white satin. Here, however, the extremely long train is cut in one with the pleated effect of the bodice which forms the trim. The skirt train falls from a back dipping movement of the pleated effect across the front. No other trimming is used. The veil falls from a pearl embroidered cap. Two different types of bridesmaids' dresses are shown. That in the center is a Jenny model of lace with no princess lines and fashioned in beige lace. It has a high turtleneck collar and four ruffles of tulle set under points well below the hips. Note that the skirt is quite long in front and dips even longer at the back by means of a double tiered sash panel. The frock at the right is also of lace, accepting the length. The cap collar and the very full flare of the skirt emphasize the molded neckline accented by a lace belt. Large horsehair hats are worn with the lace frock.

Athletics Increase Lead To Two Full Games Over Yanks

IN THE REALM OF SPORTS
WITH ALLAN CARNEY
Avalanche Sports Editor

Dick Ratliff, formerly a member of the catching staff of the Lubbock Hubbers, was behind the plate for Littlefield Sunday at Merrill Park and delivered the longest blow of the game, a homer over the left field wall.

The former Lubbock backstop has just returned from East Texas where he has been doing most of the catching for Tyler of the Lone Star League. A number of Lone Star leaguers have already joined clubs in the West Texas League. Ratliff returned to his home at Littlefield. He will spend the remainder of the season with the Littlefield aggregation unless he is able to land a berth on a team in the West Texas League. A number of Lone Star leaguers have already joined clubs in the West Texas League. Ratliff returned to his home at Littlefield. He will spend the remainder of the season with the Littlefield aggregation unless he is able to land a berth on a team in the West Texas League.

Al Mueller, who did the twirling for Littlefield, has been shortstoping for Tyler and lambasting the mid field at a terrific pace. Both Mueller and Ratliff were hitting well in the 300 class when the season closed in the Lone Star.

The contest between Lubbock and Littlefield Sunday carried further conviction that a South Plains league would go over like the proverbial house of cards. The visitors presented a team Sunday that could doubtless hold its own in any class D loop. Lubbock's entry was likewise formidable but not quite up to Littlefield in several departments. Manager Jackson made several changes in his lineup for the first game with Paducah yesterday which will likely result in a decided improvement for the local nine.

WHAT'S THIS?
Aha, this is news! Associated Press dispatches bring us the startling statement that Jack Dempsey, former king of the heavyweights, The Killer, Manassa Maulier and all other felicitations, is to enter the ring again. Strange, isn't it? We've never heard this before—no, more than a dozen times during the last 18 months. But, because the bronzed idol of the fistie world, is yet first in the hearts of his countrymen, and the majority of fight fans are still hoping for a comeback, we dug out the standing headline, "Dempsey Will Try Another Comeback."

But, there may be something more than ballyhoo behind the latest news of his attempted comeback. The match is to be staged at Agua Caliente, reports say. Gene Norville, who was Dempsey's manager for the first time, gave out the news, stating that he carries a million dollar guarantee for the former champion to meet an opponent at Tia Juana's neighboring rival resort in Mexico (Southern California). The manager is reported to have said that negotiations started when Dempsey was offered $500,000 to enter the ring at Agua Caliente and that the figure had been raised to a cool million.

Dempsey has had a brief fling at the promoting game with no marked success and this enormous price may succeed in bringing him back to the ring for another appearance. The fact that Agua Caliente can put up the price to get Dempsey in action is significant when it is considered that Madison Square Garden and other big companies in the east have failed to match him for a fight.

HOUSE PLANS

SMALL, BUT REALLY ENGLISH

BY CORA W. WILSON
NEA Service Writer

BUNGALOWS are popular with many home seekers in this modern day of high cost of servants and the tendency towards compact living quarters.

Here is a house that is characteristically English, though it is small and therefore would be perfectly at home in the most exclusive neighborhood.

This English house built of white stucco on frame construction, half timber and ornamental plaster over the large bay windows, slate roof of variegated colors shading from red to gray, and blue shutters. A stone wall runs around the house enclosing a terrace.

Look well to the plans of this cleverly designed comfortable house and note how every inch of space has been utilized.

On entering the terrace one goes directly into the living room which is 13x13.8. A group of leaded glass casement windows forms a bay, another casement window is of small panes and shuttered. At the further end of this room is a lovely fireplace with book cases on either side; to the right of this room is the garage. In the back of the large living room are two nice sized bedrooms, both square, with closets, a bath and linen closet separating them. These rooms look out on the garden in the rear.

On the left of the living room is a dining alcove just nice for a light painted set of furniture and leading from this room is the large kitchen. It has every modern improvement and two deep closets.

Such a house can be built on a 60-foot lot and will cost between $8000 and $9000.

SHEEPSKINS AS CLAIM-CHECKS WITHIN the next few days somewhere around 160 ambitious young people will burst from the stately cloisters of Texas Technological college-a sheepskin in one hand-ready to tackle what we are pleased to call "life in the raw."

Their natural reactions to these experiences are going to form the barometer, the yardstick, or whatever you wish to call it, by which they shall be judged as citizens. The book learning which they have absorbed during their years in college will help them some as they meet these experiences of life, but the arms with which they will wage their most important battles are those innate talents of character given them by heredity, environment and work.

Far be it from The Avalanche to throw cold water upon the ambitions of the young people who for two, three and four years have dwelt and studied within our gates. Yet they should know that the rose-paths of college days often turn to miry roads when the school gate clangs behind them and the business of making their own bread and butter occupies their attentions.

Somebody said American youth eats "its bread and butter" in college. It really eats its angel food cake. There will be no other time in life so carefree, so immeasurably enjoyable as college days for the poet tells us, "Life is real, life is earnest". The huzzas which laud the college football star as he side-steps and twists his way in a triumphant dash through a broken field may turn to jeers and taunts if he falls to gain when he hits the bread and butter line.

The college graduates of our country generally nod, upon graduation, to realize that they must show something besides a sheepskin when they make their mark in the world. Book learning is all right. It is a good foundation-but it isn't everything. The world still puts a premium upon hard work, application, loyalty and ability as well as upon education. A college degree is not a passport to the green pastures of life. It is merely a claim check upon an opportunity to try to make good.

ABOLISH THE VISA FEE Every American tourist who visits France will benefit to the extent of $8 per visit through the agreement just reached by the American and French governments reducing visa fees in both countries from $10 to $2. It is a saving especially appreciated by student and teacher tourists who usually figure down to the dollar.

Some idea of what this means in dollars and cents to American travelers can be obtained from the fact that the 230,000 tourists from the United States who will visit France this year will pay a total of $300,000 in visa fees, whereas under the old fee they would have paid $2,500,000.

Washington's insistence on collecting a visa tax on immigrants, which under the present restrictive law cannot amount to more than $1,500,000 a year, forces its citizens to pay upwards of $8,000,000 annually in visa fees. So abolition of this tax on all aliens would be a distinct advantage to American travelers.

WHERE'S THE PANACEA? The debate in the wheat market may serve a dual purpose. It should prove an impetus for the early adoption by congress of some form of farm relief, having instantaneously created a panic in Washington over the necessity of prompt efforts in behalf of agriculture. And it must serve the other good purpose of forcing upon the attention of congress and the public some of the obstacles, not yet explained away, to success of the various schemes proposed.

A great world surplus of wheat with the new crop, which promises to be a bumper one, but a few weeks away, means production has far outrun consumption. Thus, in the face of the pledge of the Republican party to relieve the situation, the price of wheat has shrunk below the lowest figure of the last half decade.

Congress can bring relief to the wheat growers and the gamblers in wheat by creating an artificial shortage and an arbitrary price, which means buying up the surplus with money obtained largely from consumers of wheat. That, of course, would prove an incentive for domestic growers to produce a still larger crop next year and the year after, and would necessitate a higher tariff to keep out foreign wheat. Moreover, American wheat could then be sold abroad only if foreign prices were lower than the arbitrary prices here, unless the government unclogged its surplus on foreign markets at less than American prices.

There is another method of relief, directed by natural laws of economics and of supply and demand. It is the diversion of some of the least-productive wheat lands for other purposes. There can be no permanent farm relief if growers persist in producing more than the world can eat.

ELIMINATING THE DEFICIT The deficit of the post office department for the fiscal year ending with June will reach $90,000,000, in the opinion of Postmaster General Brown. Last year the deficit was only $33,000,000. Abuse of the franking privilege is given as the cause for the greater part of the increase.

Obviously the surest way of making the postal service pay its way will be to greatly restrict the franking privilege. Better still, abolish it entirely. Let the government pay and save money by cutting out the extravagance.

On the Firing Line at the Nation's Capital

PRESIDENT HAS MADE BAD WORK OF EXTRA SESSION OF CONGRESS IN OPINION OF CORRESPONDENT

BY CHARLES F. STEWART Staff Writer For Central Press

WASHINGTON, May 20.-President Hoover has made bad work of his congressional extra session. He will be lucky if it does not blight his whole current four years in the white house. If it does, his renomination chances will be dubious.

He came into office with a large majority in the house of representatives and what appeared like a safe one in the senate. In less than three months he has turned the senate majority in his favor into a majority against him-at least on the vital issue of farm relief. Having once been defied by it, he never can depend on the senate again.

Supposedly the representatives will come to his rescue and undo what the senate has done, as to farm relief-but they never can undo that 44 to 47 adverse vote's significance against the administration.

Besides, even though the representatives may stand pat behind the president, refusing to agree to the senators' chosen form of farm aid via the debenture route, the senators may stand pat, too, refusing to agree to anything else-knocking all agricultural plans into a cocked hat, with political consequences to Mr. Hoover too terrible to contemplate.

Moreover, the representatives, themselves, probably will not now be found as overwhelmingly pro-administration on the farm question as they were. It is unlikely that they will prove to have flopped completely, but some of them certainly are squirming uneasily.

When Mr. Hoover became president his party leaders asked him what he proposed in the way of farm relief.

Mr. Hoover as promptly replied that it was congress' job to legislate; his was purely executive-why ask him?

This nonplussed the G. O. P. leaders, who had planned to make him take the responsibility. However, they framed a bill-a farm board with almost unlimited power, subject to the president, and a half billion dollar "revolving fund" to finance crop selling on a better price basis than ever before. Also it was understood that farm tariffs were to be increased-though that was to go into the tariff bill.

Some western representatives, likewise, exported a "debenture clause"-providing in brief, an export bounty to farmers, to an amount variously estimated at $145,000,000 up to $200,000,000, in addition to the "revolving fund."

The leaders felt sure Mr. Hoover would dislike the debenture idea-so rejected it. The bill passed-o. k.

Then the senate got busy. There the debenture demand was made again. Mr. Hoover's friends said he would veto the bill if the debenture item went into it. The debenture-ites wanted to make sure. A committee called on the president to ask him.

It is now clearly indicated that he should have said he would-but not be still balked at legislative responsibility, and left his callers in doubt.

His seeming uncertainty knocked the wind out of his friends. The debenture proposal rapidly gained strength. Alarmed-for he has been anti-debenture all the time-the president announced his opposition to it.

Too late. The senate adopted it. On the ballot 12 Republicans-or 25 per cent of the G. O. P.'s senate strength-voted against Mr. Hoover's known wishes.

Some were "progressives"-at best mighty independent-but by saying what he meant at the right time, the president probably would have had at least 16 more supporters than he actually did, or a majority of 54 to 37, instead of an adverse majority of 47 to 44.

He was yielding when a determined front almost surely would have given him the victory, and replete when it did him no good.

In the meantime the tariff bill has come to light in the house of representatives.

Thou, Too, Borah!

RICH GIRL AND POOR GIRL BY RUTH DEWFF GROVES

THIS HAS HAPPENED MILDRED LAWRENCE meets STEPHEN ARMITAGE when he rescues her fox fur from a thief. Their friendship grows until Pamela Judson, daughter of Mildred's employer, tries to lure him away from her. HUCK CONYOR becomes infatuated with Pamela and she plays both men. Her brother, HAROLD, is in love with Mildred, who tries to keep him from gambling with Huck's crowd.

Mildred has to stay home a week because of an accident to her mother. Both men call and when Pamela finds it out she tells Stephen that Mildred is trying to marry Harold for his money. He defends her and Pamela cables her father to discharge her. Harold tries to have Pamela reinstated but to no avail. Pamela's marriage to Stephen and her mind against Mildred and the latter faces dreary days in search of work.

Huck becomes insistent and Pamela plans to break with him. She snubs him in Stephen's presence and when he objects tells him that they are engaged. Stephens protests when they are alone and she says that was the only way she could get rid of Huck. She pleads with him to confirm the engagement.

Meanwhile, Huck summons Harold and commands him to step out of Pamela's marriage to Stephen under fear of exposure concerning a forged check. Harold tells him he can't force Pamela so Huck plans to dispose of Stephen.

A prospective purchaser guarantees that he will take a car if Stephen can make it do a hundred and insists on the new window model. Stephen takes him out for the demonstration. After the test the man says he is satisfied but wants to stop at a friend's house on the way back. Stephen walks into their trap and the car is stolen from him.

Suddenly he paused and looked at the investigator with astonishment. The association of Stephen's connection with those thefts and the present one had not occurred to him. He was now surprised that it hadn't.

"What was that?" Short became intensely interested on the instant. Mr. Mettles explained about Stephen's honor system, but as he talked he felt that the facts were too blunt. After all Stephen was just a young fool, took too many chances, perhaps, but Mr. Mettles was ready to annihilate Stephen for having allowed the sport car to be stolen, but he was not prepared to believe in a man's theft.

The important point was that neither he nor Short had put the thought into words. Yet each knew that the other entertained it. And right here Stephen's trouble began to take definite form. For the investigator now had his premise ready made for him.

He continued to question Mr. Mettles until he learned all that the latter knew about Stephen. The young man's friendship with Pamela Judson, which Short mentally checked as requiring liberal funds, his loans from the other salesman, and finally his urging Mr. Mettles to let him demonstrate the sports model in a road test. These were the highlights in Stephen's life that reflected suspicion. The theft of the car and the big mistake in Stephen's earlier career were matters that needed only suspicion to weld them upon him as definite charges.

By the time Stephen reached the office Mr. Mettles had been warned not to say anything to put him on his guard "until we've finished our investigation," Short had said. "If there's nothing against him, you'll be glad to know it."

"I'm through with him," Mr. Mettles exclaimed heatedly. "Guilty or not guilty, I'm through. If he didn't take that fellow Flint out to steal the car then he's not a mighty poor judgement anyway. I'm through with him."

"Not until I tell you," Short insisted. "Give him the devil if you wanted to, but don't fire him."

When Stephen returned Short was talking with the salesman who first approached Flint when the latter came in to look at the cars on display. From him Short learned that Flint was a hard-looking customer. Mr. Mettles had said the man was a bootlegger, or claimed to be.

"Probably a member of an organized gang of thieves," was Short's opinion.

He had a chance, as Stephen hurried across the show room to Mr. Mettles' office, to observe the young man unnoticed. Stephen's appearance was a surprise to him. He most certainly looked the antithesis of a thief. But Short did not rely a great deal upon appearances.

He wound up his questions by asking the salesman if he'd ever seen Flint before that day and let him go.

Then the secretary came up and told him Mr. Mettles wanted him in the office.

He found Stephen standing before the manager's desk, white-faced and shaking with suppressed anger over the caustic remarks his employer had just finished hurling at him.

Mr. Mettles was reduced to a purple speechlessness, having said all that he dared in the face of the restrictions Short had placed upon his tongue.

investigator said half-apologetically, "with careful attention to the details."

Stephen sat up a little in his chair and started his tale anew. Short interjected a question now and then and Stephen answered as explicitly as his memory enabled him to recall the events of the day.

No, he had noticed nothing to arouse his suspicions until the actual theft had occurred. Did he think he might have been followed from New York? He did not believe so.

What was his opinion of the theft?

It was the first time anyone had asked it but Stephen had formed an opinion on his trip to town.

"I believe my pocket was picked by one of those men in the room who might have seen me lock the car and put the keys in my top-coat," he said simply.

"Then you do not believe that the theft was planned?"

Stephen sat up suddenly. "How?" he asked.

As Short answered with a question of his own he observed Stephen closely. "Hasn't it occurred to you that this man Flint is a suspicious character?"

"He might be," Stephen agreed. "Didn't you think it queer that he should ask you to stop at a place like J. B.'s?"

"It seemed the sort of place he'd hang out in, in a way," Stephen replied.

"Well, he's a hard-boiled egg even if he has a fine taste in cars."

"So you didn't think it out of the ordinary that a man who could afford to buy one of your cars should have friends in that neighborhood?"

Stephen considered that he had answered the question once so he simply said no.

Short got up to go. There was a matter he wanted to attend to at once.

"We'll have a report for you in a few days," he said to Mr. Mettles, nodded to Stephen and went out. On the street he hastily called a cab and gave the address that Stephen had written after Lefty's name on the list of persons desiring road tests of the agency's cars.

Back in the office Stephen was learning greatly to his surprise that he was not to lose his position. But he was so far from liking Mr. Mettles' manner toward him that he would have preferred to be discharged.

He felt that his future with the agency was doomed. No doubt, he thought, Mr. Mettles was only keeping him on to close a few sales he had in prospect which, very likely, he would be kicked out.

It was after closing time when he left Mr. Mettles' office, but several of the salesmen had lingered to talk with him. Stephen was disinclined to go over the story again. Determinedly brushing the men aside, he made for the door. Outside he decided he'd go home without stopping downtown for dinner.

He almost went past his station in the subway so deeply was he plunged into thought on the train. But not once did it occur to him that he himself was under suspicion of anything graver than misjudgment.

When he got to his room he remembered that he had a date with Pamela. And he felt as much like keeping it as he did like sitting on a flagpole. But he thought he'd better call her up. She might let him off.

Pamela most emphatically refused to consider it. "Margola is giving the thing in our honor," she said of the party to which Stephen was to take her. "Our engagement you know."

"You said you wouldn't announce it until your father came home," Stephen reminded her.

"It's nothing formal. Nobody will take it seriously until dad gives it out," Pamela assured him. "But you're not going to let me down tonight, Stevo, old dear?"

"All right," Stephen said resignedly. "but I'm feeling punk, Pam. I won't be a bit of good."

"We'll fix you up," Pamela promised. "Don't be late."

Stephen changed to his evening clothes with anything but pleasant anticipation of the evening ahead of him. Before going to Pamela he got a light meal in the restaurant of his hotel. While he ate it he wondered what Pamela would say when she learned what had happened. He hadn't even any prospects to marry on now. And hanged if he was going to live on his wife's money. Very likely her father would squash the engagement anyhow.

He got up to go with a feeling that the day had been a disastrous one for him. As he swung down the street he was unaware that his leaving the hotel had been noted by a keen watcher across the street.

IT HAS RAINED Prospects are extremely bright for Lubbock and Lubbock real estate. My client feels that now is the time to sell. We feel personally that it is absolutely the very best time to buy. The man or woman who buys Lubbock real estate on the present market is going to make money. Of course he wants to buy with care and judiciously. We have looked the city over, and for the price we believe that there are no hot bargains quite equal to those out on 26th St., and just off of Avenue U.

This is one of the most attractive newer parts of the city, building rapidly, and these lots will only be two blocks from paving when Avenue E is paved, and this has been ordered done by the city commission. We can sell you these lots yet at the unprecedentedly low figure of $325 each, and they offer the best opportunity in the city to double in price right away.

Just buy and hold and you will do like a lot of people have done on 16th and 17th and 19th Streets, make a real profit. Come to see us.
