Tough issues on high court's agenda

By RICHARD CARELLI

WASHINGTON (AP) — Thorny disputes over abortion, the right to die, abused children and religion in public schools are among the cases awaiting the Supreme Court on Monday as it begins its 1989-90 term.

Abortion, an issue that dominated the court's last term, again looms large.

After July's decision allowing states to make abortions harder to get, the justices are being urged to continue expanding state regulatory powers.

The court, however, is not expected this term to overturn its 1973 decision in Roe vs. Wade that said women have a constitutional right to abortion. In cases under review from Ohio, Minnesota and Illinois, state officials are not seeking such a reversal.

But legal experts say anti-abortion forces likely will win their long war in the nation's highest court without ever receiving the official declaration of victory a reversal would represent.

Laurence Tribe, a Harvard University law professor, said July's ruling "began, in a very major way, the dismantling of Roe vs. Wade." Its fate, "barring a miracle, is doomed," he said.

"The court may never say Roe vs. Wade is overruled, but is likely to say, 'Roe vs. Wade ... never heard of it,'" Tribe said. "The court in July allowed states to ban privately paid abortions in public facilities. If a state may so drive abortion underground, it's hard to find a stopping point."

Paul Rothstein, a law professor at Georgetown University, agreed.

"You may have a right to an abortion but nowhere to get one," he said.

The Illinois law under study would require the addition of services and equipment by abortion clinics, where the overwhelming majority of abortions are performed on women in their first three months of pregnancy.

Invalidating the law, lower courts said it violated a portion of Roe vs. Wade limiting state regulatory power over first-trimester abortions. The justices are being told the regulations would force many abortion clinics out of business.

The Ohio and Minnesota abortion laws involve parental notification.

In Ohio, an invalidated law would have required a doctor asked to perform an abortion on an unmarried girl under 18 to contact one of the girl's parents at least 24 hours before the operation.

Young girls could bypass parental notification by seeking the permission of a state judge to have an abortion.

The Minnesota law, upheld by a federal appeals court, requires unmarried girls under 18 to provide, if possible, written notice to both parents at least 48 hours before obtaining an abortion. A state judge may waive the requirement.

The court will make its first foray into the growing "right to die" debate. The justices must decide whether a life-sustaining tube may be removed from the stomach of a Missouri woman in an irreversible vegetative state.

LULAC board members skip public forum

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — LULAC foundation board members — some of them at odds with the group's national president over alleged financial irregularities — failed to show up Saturday for a public fact-finding session.

But Jose Garcia de Lara, the League of United Latin American Citizens national president, a league attorney and its national treasurer told of an undisclosed bank account a foundation board member had held.

The account at Plaza National Bank in San Antonio has been the subject of squabbling between de Lara and former national presidents on the foundation board.

"We have an absolute obligation to the public trust," de Lara, a San Antonio architect, told about 50 people packed into a hotel meeting room.

He and a national LULAC executive committee have ordered the 10 foundation board members to step down, but de Lara said he has not been informed of any resignations.

De Lara said foundation board members Paul Garza of Laredo; Hector Godinez of Santa Ana, Calif; Eduardo Morga of suburban Los Angeles; Oscar Laurel of Laredo; and Eduardo Pena Jr. of Washington, D.C., had agreed to the Saturday meeting. But neither they nor any representatives were there.

Also absent was Oscar Moran of San Antonio, in whose name the bank account was set up.

An investigation by LULAC counsel Ruben Sandoval indicates $88,000 is being questioned in connection with the bank account, which was established using LULAC's name but was unknown to its national treasurer, Jose Botello of Dallas.

Moran has acknowledged using the account after he was no longer national president but said he had no time to disclose the account during a transition from his to de Lara's administration, according to published newspaper reports.

Moran could not be reached for comment Saturday by The Associated Press. Southwestern Bell listed three phone numbers under the name "Oscar Moran" in San Antonio. There was no answer at one, and the other two were private listings.

Retired appeals court judge Rudy Esquivel presided over Saturday's courtroom-like proceeding. Sandoval and a four-person panel of non-LULAC members questioned witnesses, whose testimony was videotaped and documented by a court reporter.

However, Sandoval cautioned that it was not a legal proceeding and that no charges were being leveled. It was unclear whether the four-person panel would make a recommendation on the allegations.

With 140,000 members, San Antonio-based LULAC is the nation's largest Hispanic rights organization. It works on job, education and civil rights programs. The LULAC foundation had been charged with seeking corporate gifts for projects.

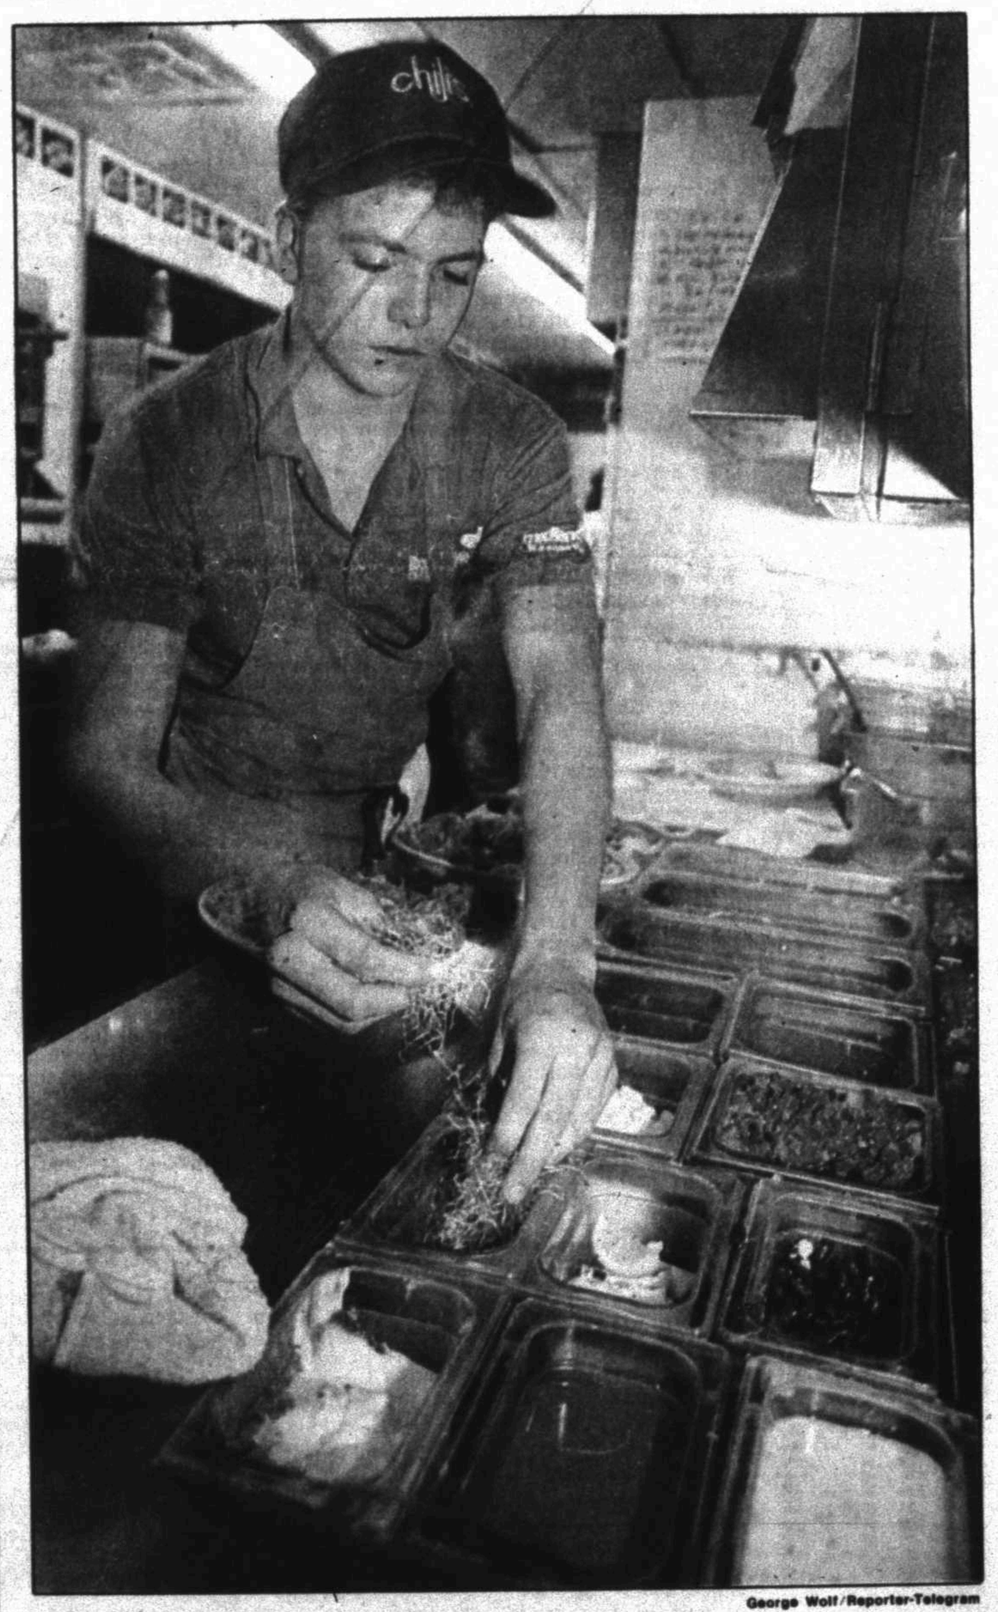

Regarding the alleged financial irregularities, Sandoval said he thought it was time to lay the matter to rest.

"How long do we keep fighting in the media and fighting among ourselves?" he asked.

Other members of the foundation board are Manuel Gonzales of Waco; Roberto Ornelas of Dallas; Pete Villa of Seattle; and Mario Obledo of Sacramento, Calif.

After the board members refused to resign, de Lara said he and the executive committee stopped recognizing the foundation and began taking steps to drop the group from LULAC.

In an interview Saturday, de Lara said a new foundation has been established having the same responsibilities as the old one.

Taking responsibility

Daniel Satterfield, one of a growing number of high school students who are living on their own, prepares a salad while working at Chili's Grill & Bar.

Some teens making do on their own

By BRIAN PEARSON
Staff Writer

A life-sized poster of a scantily clad young woman adorns the wall just inside the front doorway of Daniel Satterfield's teen bachelor pad.

The rest of Daniel's northwest Midland apartment exudes the motifs one would expect from a 17-year-old living without parental supervision.

He said he wanted to spend his senior year at Midland High School, so he chose to stay behind when his parents moved to Mississippi at the beginning of the summer.

At first he lived with his grandmother, who was taking care of a relative at her home, but found the accommodations too crowded, he said. Daniel decided to move out and share an apartment with a friend.

Girls and partying took initial precedence in a life out from under his parents' wings, he said. He did as he pleased, not having to answer to anyone about his lifestyle.

Although graphic posters of the rock band Guns N' Roses still have prominence on his apartment walls, Daniel said he has discovered responsibility as an unexpected peer.

Dozens of Midland and Lee high schoolers like him have made an early venture down independence road. While some left a problem-plagued family nest, others simply wanted to set out on their own or get married and start a home.

However, they quickly stowed all or part of spiritual freedom in the trunk as life's accountabilities begin demanding a front seat.

Daniel's apartment has become a hangout for his friends. He enjoys the liberty of running with the guys, but has to sacrifice more time than ever for work, he said.

"You can't play around with your money," said Daniel, who works full time as a Chili's Grill & Bar cook to pay expenses. "I didn't think I could do it, but it turned out to be easy."

When winter jaws began nipping at Michael Talton last year, the unemployed 19-year-old said he decided he needed help to find a another place to live besides a home without water or electricity.

After his father died two years ago, Talton, now an LHS senior, said he wanted to finish high school here, even after his mother moved to Lubbock six months later.

"It was a big challenge, but I was pretty sure I could make it," said Talton, whose mother periodically sent him some money. "It was no big deal at first."

Lujan to address PBPA gathering

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

A line up of nationally known industry and government speakers has been announced for the annual meeting of the Permian Basin Petroleum Association.

The meeting, which has the theme Recovery '90, is set for Nov. 9-10 at the Petroleum Museum, Midland Hilton and Holiday Inn Country Villa.

One highlight of the meeting will be the keynote address by Secretary of the Interior Manuel Lujan Jr. He will speak at the President's Banquet Nov. 10.

A second highlight will be the the presentation of the Top Hand award to Joseph I. O'Neill, a prominent Midland independent oilman.

Lujan was appointed Interior secretary by President George Bush after 10 years as a member of the House of Representatives from New Mexico.

A native of San Ildefonso, N.M., raised in Santa Fe, he received his bachelor's degree from the College of Santa Fe. Prior to entering Congress, he was a partner in a family insurance and real estate, which his brother Edward now manages.

Lujan was elected to the House of Representatives in 1968 and when he left earlier this year, was ranked 15th in seniority among Republicans and 52nd among all House members. He was a member of the House Interior and Insular Affairs committee, senior Republican on the Energy and Environment subcommittee, and vice chairman of the House Science, Space and Technology committee.

O'Neill is a graduate of Notre Dame University and turned a $5,000 loan into a successful petroleum enterprise.

He started as a lease broker, then began buying leases and drilling wells on his own. Since entering the oil business in 1948, he has built O'Neill Properties Ltd. and has drilled in excess of 500 wells, 57 percent of which were productive.

In addition, he has been involved with the development of Midland Memorial Hospital, Texas American Bank (Now Team Bank Midland) and is a past member of the board of trustees of the Petroleum Museum, Library and Hall of Fame.

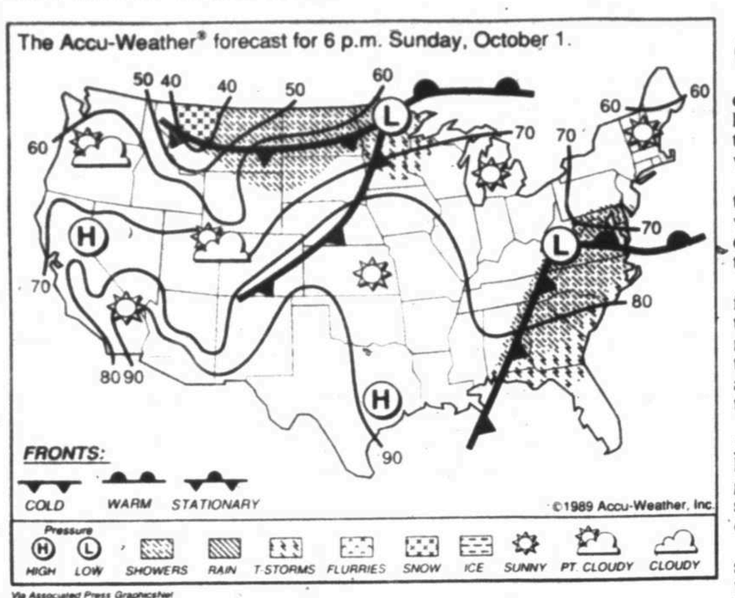

Currently, O'Neill is a director of the National Football Foundation and Hall of Fame, University of Notre Dame Board of Trustees, Emeritus, and president of the advisory board of trustees, Saint Mary's Hospital, Palm Beach, Fla.

Warm days greet October

From Staff and Wire Reports

Warmer temperatures and clear skies are expected for the first week of October, according to National Weather Service forecasters at Midland International Airport.

Today will be sunny and hot with a high expected in the mid-90s. Winds will be from the southwest 10 to 20 mph. Tonight will be clear with a low in the mid-50s.

Monday will be mostly sunny and continued hot with a high expected in the mid-90s.

Saturday's high of 89 was 15 degrees cooler than the record of 104, which was set in 1977. The low of 52 was just 10 degrees warmer than the record low of 42, which was set in 1966.

STATE

Clear skies dominated the weather pattern across Texas for a second straight day Saturday, providing a perfect backdrop for college football games statewide and the State Fair of Texas in Dallas.

A few low clouds lingered in northeast Texas, producing some afternoon drizzle. Broken clouds also dotted skies in the southeast, but brought no precipitation.

The eastern half of the state had variable winds between 5 and 10 mph Saturday, fueled by a weak high pressure system that maintained a hold on the state for a consecutive third day.

The western portion of Texas had southwesterly breezes, also between 5 and 10 mph with little gusts.

Temperatures statewide reached the 80s. Mid-afternoon extremes ranged from 80 degrees at several locations including Marfa, Tyler and Longview to 90 degrees at San Antonio and McAllen.

The National Weather Service said slow-moving clouds over the northeast would move out of the state by Sunday, producing nearly cloudless skies over Texas.

Highs Sunday should reach the upper 80s in North Texas and into the lower 90s in central and South Texas. Higher readings, about 95 degrees, were forecast for West Texas, the NWS said.

NATION

Heavy showers fell on much of the South on Saturday, drenching parts of Florida with more than 2 inches of rain.

Mid-afternoon rain and thunderstorms also were reported in Virginia, South Carolina, Kentucky, Tennessee, Georgia, the Florida Panhandle, Alabama and Mississippi. Showers also fell in Montana, Idaho, Nevada, Oregon and Arkansas.

A flash flood watch was posted through the night over northern Georgia, the eastern half of Tennessee, the western half of North Carolina, the southern half of West Virginia, and over much of the western half of Virginia.

Heavier rainfall during the 6 hours ending at 2 p.m. EDT included more than 2 inches at Milton, Fla., more than 1 inch at Meridian, Miss., and more than 1 inch at Nashville, Tenn., and Pensacola, Fla.

Winds were strong and gusty east of a cold front, which reached from north central Mntana across northwest Utah to central California by late morning. Winds gusted to 38 mph at Cedar City, Utah, and 40 mph at Salt Lake City, Utah, during the morning.

Early afternoon temperatures were in the 50s and 60s over New England; in the 60s and 70s from the Great Lakes across the Ohio Valley and south through the central Gulf of Mexico Coast; in the 80s over southern Georgia and much of Florida; in the 70s over much of the Mississippi Valley and in the 80s across a large portion of the Plains. Temperatures throughout the intermountain region and the Pacific Coast were in the 50s and 60s, and highs were in the 90s in the desert Southwest.

Rapid City, S.D., reached 93 degrees on Saturday, which tied its high temperature record for Sept. 30, set in 1967.

The low temperature for the lower 48 states Saturday morning was 26 degrees at Canaan, Vt. Temperatures around the nation at 3 p.m. EDT ranged from 50 degrees at Limestone, Maine, to 96 degrees at Needles, Calif., and Yuma, Ariz.

COURT

When Nancy Cruzan's parents requested that artificial feeding and hydration be ended for their daughter, hospital officials refused to do so without a court order.

The Missouri Supreme Court ruled that the Cruzans, who say Nancy would prefer to die, have no right to order the termination of such treatment.

Lawyers for the Cruzans are arguing that the family's decision is protected against any state veto by their right to privacy. The court's ruling, therefore, could have an impact on abortion law, which also is based on the right of privacy.

On more familiar legal ground, the justices are reviewing a 1984 federal law requiring public high schools to give student religious groups the same access to school facilities as other extracurricular clubs.

Officials at an Omaha, Neb., high school refused to let a student Christian Bible study club meet on school grounds after classes as do other student clubs. Officials said allowing such meetings — and the federal law — violate the constitutionally required separation of church and state.

Guessing any outcome is hazardous, but the high court is more conservative today than when it outlawed organized prayer and inspirational Bible readings from the nation's public schools in the early 1960s.

The court also will decide whether a Baltimore woman may be kept in jail for refusing to reveal the whereabouts of her infant son, who prosecutors fear may be dead.

The case pits a person's privilege against compelled self-incrimination against the need to protect abused children. Maryland prosecutors said Jacqueline Bouknight has a history of drug use and abusing her son, Maurice, who was born in 1986.

About half of the some 150 cases to be decided by July already have been selected by the court. The rest will be chosen by February.

Over the next nine months, the court will cull about 5,000 appeals, granting review to some but denying review to most. The justices are expected to issue grant-or-deny orders in more than 1,000 cases Monday.

Here are some of the other cases the court is to decide this term:

JUDICIAL POWER

■ May a federal judge order an increase in property taxes to help pay for racially desegregating a public school district? A judge did that in Kansas City, Mo., and was upheld by an appeals court.

■ Did a federal judge exceed his authority when he held four city council members in Yonkers, N.Y., in contempt for holding back the city from carrying out a previously agreed-to housing desegregation plan? The council members say the judge fined them for not voting the way he wanted.

CIVIL RIGHTS

■ May a university accused of discriminating against a faculty member withhold confidential evaluations of that professor's performance? An Asian woman who is suing the University of Pennsylvania over denied tenure wants file information about her, but school officials say revealing it will inhibit candor by those who evaluate tenure candidates.

■ May people who were involuntarily held at state mental hospitals without receiving hearings required by state law sue officials in federal court? A Florida man held for five months without the hearing that state law requires within 48 hours wants to sue in federal court, but state officials say his suit must be filed in state court.

CRIMINAL LAW

■ Do U.S. law enforcement agents need a warrant before conducting searches in foreign countries? Bush administration lawyers argue that the Constitution's ban against unreasonable searches does not apply to the home in Mexico of a suspected Mexican drug smuggler.

■ May statements a defendant makes after an unlawful arrest be used by prosecutors to contradict a defense witness' trial testimony? The court is being asked in an Illinois case to expand previous rulings that allowed the use of such evidence only to rebut a defendant's testimony.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM

■ Is there a constitutional right to take the hallucinogenic drug peyote as a religious practice? The justices are reviewing an Oregon court ruling that, in effect, said the state's criminal law must make an exception for "good faith religious use of peyote by adult members of the Native American Church."

PORNOGRAPHY

■ May states outlaw the mere possession, even in the privacy of one's home, of "lewd" material depicting child nudity? Such an Ohio law was upheld by state courts there.

■ May communities bar anyone convicted of certain crimes from ever operating a sexually oriented business and require inspections of such establishments during operating hours? The Dallas city ordinance at issue also requires that sexually oriented businesses obtain a license issued by the city's chief of police.

Separate bus accidents injure 34

Associated Press

A tractor-trailer loaded with steel coils crashed into a disabled tourist bus in Cleveland Saturday, injuring 22 people. In Iowa, a car rammed a school bus carrying band students in an accident that injured 12, police said.

No fatalities were reported in either accident, police said.

In Cleveland, the bus, known as Lolly the Trolley and designed to resemble a trolley, was used to carry visitors on sight-seeing tours. It had stopped because of mechanical problems in one of the lanes of the "innerbelt" freeway carrying traffic from Interstate 71 to Interstate 90, said Sgt. Kenneth Kirchner.

The 18-wheel truck was unable to stop and struck the bu about 11 a.m., pinning the driver inside his truck, he said.

Twenty-two people were taken to hospitals, and four were expected to be admitted, officials said. Three of the injured were in serious condition, officials said.

The truck driver, Noah Miller, 55, of Colon, Mich., was treated and released at Lutheran Medical Center, said a hospital spokeswoman.

In Dubuque, Iowa, a car crashed into the bus that was carrying a Wisconsin junior high school band, knocking it into a ditch. The car then hit a truck carrying band equipment, officials said.

There were 42 people on board the bus and three in the equipment truck, said Dubuque County sheriff's deputy Jim Schmitt.

Twelve people were admitted to hospitals. None of the students was critically hurt, authorities said.

American soldier killed in helicopter crash

PANAMA CITY, Panama (AP) — One American soldier was killed and two were injured when a U.S. Blackhawk medical evacuation helicopter crashed Saturday in Panama Bay, the U.S. Southern Command said.

The helicopter was returning from a mission on the northern, or Atlantic, side of the Panama Canal to Howard Air Force Base when it went down, according to Southern Command spokeswoman Mercedes Morris.

She said the identifications of the victims would not be released until their families had been notified.

TEENS

He remained in the family home, but without a job he could not afford to pay the bills, leaving him to go to friends' houses to find a place to study, shower or have someone to talk to, he said.

He finally appealed to LHS counselor Nona Ray for help. With the help of his mother, Ms. Ray and the U.S. Department Housing and Urban Development, Talton found a job and an apartment.

A bicycle, his only mode of transportation, gets him to his part-time work at Albertsons grocery store.

"When I spend money on myself, I have to wait awhile," he said. "Living on my own is no picnic.

"If I had to do this over, I wouldn't. It's a lot more complicated than I thought."

At 17 years old, MHS sophomore Jorge Newsome is a family man. A husband in June and a father in August, he said juggling family, work and school has been difficult, but it is what he wanted to do.

Jorge said school has remained a priority because he promised his father that he would get a diploma. His father died of cancer about a year ago.

"I want to make something out of myself," said Jorge, who works full time as a waiter at Mission Country Club. "I don't want to be a waiter the rest of my life."

About the only chance he has to study is during work hours, he said, but he manages to have nothing but A's and B's on his report cards.

MHS Assistant Principal Gene Isaacs said students living on their own do not tend to have poorer report cards than other students.

"Their grades don't seem to slip," Isaacs said. "Mom and dad may still help them with their studies. The students also still have a feeling of obligation to their parents."

However, the independent teens' parents play a lesser role in sharing accountability for grades and absences, Isaacs said.

Although principals and counselors keep parents informed of poor grades, conduct or attendance, the students are held responsible for their actions, he said.

The students must vouch for their absences and answer directly to grade-level principals, who determine whether the teens are abusing the system, Isaacs said. If the students' attendance begins slipping too much, the principal may demand to see notes from doctors.

"What we say is, 'You're grown up and out on your own, so you have to be responsible for yourself,'" Isaacs said. "They really are pretty good about that, although we have some students I'm sure who don't always tell us the truth.

"But as they go along from sophomores to juniors to seniors they become even more responsible."

Isaacs said he sees more and more students each year, especially those who get married, setting out on their own.

At first, the idea was a shock to him, he said, but he has grown more accustomed to it through the years. He could not estimate how many independent teens attend MHS.

"Conditions are just different than they were 20 years ago," he said. "The students are more independent. They're more aware of what's going on today, of the world, of the trends and of each other."

Isaacs said the family concept also has changed, with students being more independent of their parents.

"But it's not too uncommon to see them move back home within two or three months because the realities of life get to them," he added.

Ms. Ray, a senior counselor, estimated that about 5 percent of LHS' 550 seniors live on their own, with an increasing number doing it every year.

She said the independent students usually get an unexpected crash course in maturity.

"Their values begin to change when they're responsible for their own finances," Ms. Ray said. "Sometimes I think they may have more peer pressure out on their own.

"I think we as school personnel need to give these kids the support and help that they can. They're trying to make the most of their education, and we need to be there for them."

Although Bob Masters initially did not like the idea of his son, Billy, an 18-year-old LHS senior, moving out, he has supported him all the way. Billy Masters moved in with his brother, a Midland College freshman.

"They just thought they'd like to strike it out on their own," Bob Masters said. "There weren't any family problems or anything."

Masters said his respect for his sons and bond with them has grown through their independence.

"You give them the roots, then you give them the wings," he said. "That's how they learn about life. I think it's going to work out for them."

Bec Kendrick, 17, an LHS senior who makes straight A's, said when she moved out her relationship with her mother took a turn for the better.

"She respects me a lot more," said Bec, who supports herself by working at K-G Men's Store in Midland Park Mall. "We're better friends.

"I spend a lot more quantity and quality time with my mom. She looks at me as an adult."

Forced to trash carefree lifestyles under the strain of early adulthood, the self-reliant teens have also found themselves growing up in a hurry.

"At first I was out to have fun, then I started thinking about my future," said Bec, who plans to attend college. "I'm not the same person I was back then. It's not just boys and music anymore."

Daniel also said he plans to go to college and study business but may have to get there through a General Equivalency Diploma rather than a regular diploma.

He said his work schedule, which sometimes keeps him out until 2 a.m., makes for hard waking on school mornings.

"You try to get up in the morning and you just can't," said Daniel, who is considering dropping out. "I'm trying to hang in there and finish it."

Jorge, who plans to get a two-year automobile mechanics degree from Midland College, said he welcomed the necessary adjustments, although they have taught him some hard lessons.

"I'm more serious about things," Jorge said. "It's not fun and games anymore. You have to take life step by step."

HOW TO CHANGE YOUR NAME.

When you're a Texas bank that's merging with another Texas bank to form the largest Texas-run bank in Texas, how do you know what to call yourself?

After all, the name Texas American Bridge Bank doesn't mean that much to Deposit Guaranty Bank customers, and Deposit Guaranty doesn't mean that much to the Texas American folks.

So what do you do?

You think up a new name. One without any Federals, or Nationals, or firsts, seconds, or thirds in it.

One that stands for what your bank really is. And means something not only to the Texas American and Deposit Guaranty customers, but all the new customers we hope to attract.

That's why we've selected the name Team Bank.

To represent the team of Ron Steinhart and Terry Kelley, the two Texans who founded the bank.

To stand for the two banks that now form the team totalling over $5 billion in assets and $250 million in capital.

And to show the teamwork and team spirit of the employees of both banks, now working together.

With you.

We think the name kind of sums it up. Team Bank.

And it won't take up too much room on your checks.

Speaker tells Lebanese lawmakers they must find peace

TAIF, Saudi Arabia (AP) — The speaker of Lebanon's splintered parliament told the assembly Saturday that they have no choice but to find a way to end their nation's 14-year cycle of bloodshed.

Christian and Moslem lawmakers, gathered in this mountain resort for their first meeting in more than a year, are divided over the presence of Syrian troops backing Moslem forces in Lebanon and Moslem demands for greater power.

Speaker Hassan Husseini, a Shiite Moslem, told the deputies that failure to resolve their differences would mean "a total loss of hope" in the devastated country, where fighting has been halted by a fragile truce.

"We have no choice but to succeed," he told the parliamentarians.

WORLD

King Fahd, in an opening address read by Foreign Minister Prince Saud al Faisal in Taif's Conference Palace, called on the feuding Christian and Moslem parliamentarians to cooperate in finding a settlement to the conflict in which more than 150,000 people have been killed since 1975.

"Now that the situation has shifted from the arena of warriors to the negotiators' table, it is high time we moved from trading artillery shells and accusations to hasten the peacemaking," the king's message said.

The Saudi monarch said Lebanese must rule their own nation.

Most of Lebanon, except an 320-square mile Christian enclave north of Beirut, is under the control of Syria, which has 40,000 troops in Lebanon. Israel occupies a "security zone" of Lebanese territory along its border.

Fahd is a member of a three-nation committee mandated by the 22-member Arab League to bring peace and reconcile Lebanon's feuding factions.

Fahd, King Hassan II of Morocco and President Chadli Bendjedid of Algeria formulated a seven-point peace plan that calls for political reforms which the Lebanese parliamentarians will debate.

The Taif meeting, the first by Lebanon's parliament outside the country, was designed to reduce sectarian pressures on the legislators that have been a major factor in the collapse of earlier initiatives.

Lebanese deputies who arrived in Taif late Friday said the meeting would last from three to 10 days.

Before the deputies left Beirut Friday, Lebanon's Moslem government leader, Moslem Salim Hoss, said the Taif meeting "could be the last chance for peace in Lebanon."

Conference sources said 63 of Lebanon's 73 surviving legislators — 33 Christians and 30 Moslems — were in Taif in Saudi Arabia's western mountains.

Three Shiite Moslem and seven Christian deputies failed to show up. "No one has refused to come, but some gave medical reasons for not attending," Saud said.

Twenty-five of the deputies in the 99-seat parliament have been killed or died of natural causes since the last general election in 1972. The fighting has prevented elections since then.

A cease-fire in Lebanon took effect a week ago, halting six months of fierce artillery battles between the Syrian Army, which backs the Moslems, and Christian forces led by Gen. Michel Aoun.

More than 900 people were killed and nearly 3,000 wounded in the fighting that included some of the most ferocious bombardments of the war. Most of the casualties were civilians.

The cease-fire, and the lifting of blockades by both sides, was the first phase of the ambitious, seven-point Arab League peace plan.

Mexican president makes first U.S. visit

MEXICO CITY (AP) — President Carlos Salinas de Gortari, who has brought radical economic and political change to Mexico, begins his first official visit to Washington on Sunday with hopes for bringing "maturity" to a historically delicate relationship.

"Mexican nationalism no longer has to feed on anti-U.S. feelings," said an official close to the president. "Anti-Americanism is no longer a valid issue in the Mexican political debate."

Salinas and his wife will be guests of President and Mrs. Bush at Camp David before official visits to Washington and New York. He will receive an honorary degree from Brown University before returning to Mexico on Oct. 6.

"There is a relation of mutual respect that allows cordiality," Salinas said Thursday night about what is often perceived here as a personal friendship unmatched in the historical relationship between U.S. and Mexican presidents.

"Bush has a very important characteristic that appeals to Salinas. He is not an ideologue," said an official close to the Mexican president. "Bush has gone out of his way to show special consideration for Salinas."

Mexicans see the invitation to Camp David as a special honor; it will be only the third time a Mexican president has been there.

Ten months into his term, Salinas has become the symbol of a new image for Mexico: a country regaining self confidence after nearly eight years of economic crisis, a country eager to resume growth and assume an international role in commerce and foreign affairs.

The Salinas and Bush administrations worked closely last July to renegotiate a large part of Mexico's $107 billion foreign debt, the deal was closed after U.S. Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady lobbied commercial bankers in his office.

The Mexicans are hoping for a respite through debt and interest reductions that will make more money available for Salinas' development projects. Salinas also hopes to get improved trade agreements with the United States and to encourage foreign investment.

Salinas has kicked the stagnant Mexican economy in the tail, reducing government controls, selling government-owned companies, opening new fields to domestic and international investors and forcing inefficient Mexican manufacturers to compete with lower-cost foreign producers.

Salinas has been helped here and abroad by his dramatic blows against corruption, including the jailing of previously untouchable labor bosses, and by ordering the arrest of several top drug traffickers.

U.S. officials are pleased by Salinas' battle against drug trafficking, even though many agree with Mexican officials who maintain the real problem is U.S. demand.

Mexico has seized 22 metric tons of cocaine this year, "about one third of the U.S. consumption," Salinas said at a news conference Thursday, "and that means a lot of drugs are getting through."

In foreign affairs, Mexico has departed from the steadily anti-American policy of previous administrations, a policy that appealed to Mexican chauvinists who remember that the United States took over half of Mexico in the wake of the Mexican War in 1845.

The Mexican government "no longer feels inhibited from agreeing with the United States in some foreign policy matters," said a Salinas aide.

Salinas is betting that his campaign to modernize Mexico and collaboration against drugs will help him gain trade concessions he considers important to the Mexican economy.

"We want trade reciprocity," Salinas said, referring to the opening of Mexican markets to U.S. products from refrigerators to compact discs.

Salinas expects to come back with bilateral agreements on specific products such as textiles and steel, although U.S. officials have said they're not sure those agreements will be ready for signature.

Mexico is seeking more foreign investment in an effort to get its economy back on track, and Salinas will meet with investors and top industrial managers during his trip.

He has invited foreign and domestic investors to participate in companies previously run by the government, such as the telephone system, although many investors are still uneasy about Mexico's history of midstream course changes.

Salinas claimed his economic policies have encouraged the return of more than $2.5 billion held by Mexicans abroad and said his government has approved foreign investment projects worth $2 billion in new investments since March.

He said the economy is growing this year at a rate of 2.5 percent — far better than the 1 percent projected.

An East German mother cries as she says good-bye to her daughter as the fence of the West German embassy in Prague, Czechoslovakia, separates them.

East Germans given permission to emigrate

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia (AP) — Thousands of East Germans who sought refuge in West German embassies in Czechoslovakia and Poland began emigrating to the West on Saturday under a remarkable accord between Soviet bloc and NATO nations.

The agreement covers nearly 3,500 East Germans who began crowding into the West German Embassy here several weeks ago and another 600 East Germans at the West German Embassy in Warsaw.

Officials in West Germany, East Germany, Czechoslovakia and Poland announced the accord Saturday.

East Germany, a hard-line Communist nation that had harshly criticized Warsaw Pact ally Hungary for allowing a similar refugee exodus earlier this month, said it was granting the transfer as a "humanitarian act."

There was no explicit mention of the policy toward future refugees, but ADN, the official East German news agency, said East Germany hoped West Germany would follow "normal, international customs" at its embassies abroad after the transfer.

That appeared to indicate East Germany would oppose continuing emigration of its citizens to the West. West German officials in Bonn could not be reached for comment Saturday night.

West German Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher made an unexpected visit to Prague Saturday and delivered the news to jubilant East Germans at the embassy here.

"I call you fellow citizens, and express a hearty welcome," Genscher, speaking from an embassy balcony, told the weary but ecstatic masses huddled in the muddy compound.

He told reporters the solution was agreed on early Saturday in consultations with the East Germans, Czechoslovaks and Poles.

Some of the refugees had spent weeks huddled in tents and on cots in the embassy compound amid growing crowding, spreading disease and worsening weather.

About 400 East Germans were on board — some cheering, others singing, still others appearing a little dazed by the sudden end to their ordeal.

"We are coming, we are coming," a group of young refugees yelled in unison from an open train window, as Czechoslovak uniformed police looked on impassively.

A young woman from Dresden said as she was about to board: "I can't believe it, tell me it's not a dream."

ADN said trains would carry the Prague emigres back to East Germany from Czechoslovakia and on to West Germany. Czechoslovak state television said the East Germans would be issued exit papers while en route to West Germany.

The route was seen as a face-saving measure permitting East Germany to say that it had allowed the emigres to go to West Germany from its territory and not from Czechoslovakia, a Warsaw Pact ally that had vowed not to allow the transfer.

In Munich, West Germany, a Bavarian goverment spokesman said by telephone he believed the trains would leave in intervals of about two hours, with the first expected in the Bavarian city of Hof at 4 a.m. Sunday (11 p.m. EDT Saturday).

The refugees will be housed in emergency quarters maintained by the Bavarian border police, said a police spokesman. The Bavarian official and the police spokesmen spoke on condition of anonymity.

In Poland, the 600 East Germans assembled at the West Germany Embassy in Warsaw were told they would be leaving the city by train at 2:50 a.m. Sunday.

The refugees, some of whom had been allowed to stay in nearby residential neighborhoods, reacted with cheering and weeping.

"I am happy; I am happy" one young man said through the bars of the compound gates.

West German law automatically granting East Germans citizenship on arrival has contributed to more than 100,000 East Germans fleeing to West Germany so far this year.

The East Germans have flooded to West Germany because of disillusionment with political repression and economic stagnation in their homeland.

More than 23,000 East Germans emigrated over Hungary's western border since Sept. 10, when Hungarian authorities authorized free passage to Austria of East Germans seeking a new life in the West.

Hundreds of like-minded East Germans, allowed unhindered travel into neighboring Czechoslovakia but without the necessary documents for Hungary, began crowding the West German Embassy in Prague weeks ago.

Others crossed illegally from Czechoslovakia into Hungary to flee West from there. But hundreds more asked for sanctuary at the Prague embassy after Czechoslovak authorities turned them back at the border or began confiscating visas valid for Hungary in an apparent effort to stanch the westward flow of East Germans.

East Germany, Czechoslovakia and other hard-line Warsaw Pact countries have been critical of reform-minded Hungary for permitting the exodus.

In East Berlin, ADN quoted East German Foreign Ministry spokesman, Wolfgang Meyer, as saying:

"In efforts to end the intolerable situation at the West German embassies in Prague and Warsaw that was not brought about by East Germany, the East German government ... arranged that these people illegally at the embassies will be expelled to West Germany across East German territory with trains of the (West German) railroad."

Hundreds declare end of apartheid on beaches designated for whites only

CAPE TOWN, South Africa (AP) — Hundreds of black and mixed-race people declared the end of apartheid on two whites-only beaches Saturday by picnicking, swimming, singing and praying under the watchful eye of the police.

Protesters at the Strand, a conservative seaside town 20 miles east of Cape Town, made "sure they had staked their claim properly. They walked around and wet their feet in God's water," said Anglican Archbishop Desmond Tutu.

Wearing a yellow sun-hat with the slogan "Free the Beaches," and a T-shirt saying, "Just Call me Arch," the 56-year-old Tutu jogged on the beach. He then held a prayer service after persuading police not to use force on the crowd, which ignored police orders over loudspeakers to disperse.

Organizers had refused to seek permission to hold the demonstration.

Some families left after the police removed foreign television crews and local photographers. But most stayed, opening their picnic lunches, swimming and wading in the water as the crowd grew to 1,500.

About 100 whites watched from the roadside, many criticizing the protest as they talked among themselves.

Police took no action. Many officers even began smiling and waving as they left when the crowds thinned in the afternoon.

"I hope that the inhabitants of the Strand will realize that we have liberated them," Tutu told a news conference later. "They don't have to watch whether black people are walking on their beaches any longer. They will enjoy the liberation of being able to share."

Another 1,000 people gathered in the eastern Cape province city of Port Elizabeth, where former Mayor Graham Richards erected a home-made sign declaring Pollock Beach, reserved for whites for 35 years, was open to all.

The City Council has tried to end beach segregation, but the provincial administrator, appointed by the governing National Party, has refused.

The wood sign resembled nearby municipal signs declaring the beach is for the use of whites only. The new sign said, "We the people of Port Elizabeth hereby declare Pollock Beach open for the use of all people."

Seven buses brought black people from townships 10 miles north of Port Elizabeth. Many black youths chanted and danced around the beach, some carried banners and placards. Whites paid them little attention and mixed freely on the sand and in the water.

"This mass, non-racial picnic reminds us who we are, that we are God's family. It is human selfishness and greed that makes beaches for whites only," the Rev. David Vika of the Interdenominational Ministers Association said at a prayer service after the sign was posted in the sand.

Mubarak urges Israel to talk with PLO

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak, saying a historic opportunity for peace in the Middle East is at hand, called on Israel to open talks with the Palestine Liberation Organization.

In an address Friday before the U.N. General Assembly, he also urged Israel to swap territory captured in Mideast wars for peace.

Israel has steadfastly refused to negotiate with the PLO, calling it a terrorist organization dedicated to destruction of the Jewish state.

Mubarak called the PLO "the sole, legitimate representative of the Palestinian people." He said the organization had adopted positive attitudes toward a peace settlement and "deserves all welcome and support from the international community."

In another major speech to the 159-member General Assembly Friday, President Virgilio Barco of Colombia said drug barons are at war with the world.

He appealed to all nations to sign the Vienna Convention on narcotics trafficking, which provides penalties for drug users and dealers including seizure of ships on high seas and confiscation of properties.

"A new world war is being waged by an aggressor unrestrained by the traditional rules of engagement or by the responsibilities of national sovereignty," Barco said.

Barco is under death threats from Colombian cocaine cartels. Security precautions for his U.N. appearance included sharpshooters atop buildings, bomb-sniffing dogs and reinforced U.N. police.

Barco said the demand for narcotics must be blocked.

Those who consume cocaine are contributing to the assassination of the Colombian people by criminals, he said. "No doubt, somebody a few blocks from this General Assembly hall, in one of this city's fashionable neighborhoods, taking cocaine in the civilized calm of his living room, would balk at this description."

He said that person is as guilty as the trigger men who have murdered Colombian judges and policemen.

U.S. Secretary of State James A. Baker III said Friday that Mubarak's peace plan for the Middle East is negotiable.

"The real question is what position the government of Israel takes when the Cabinet meets next week," Baker told a news conference at the U.S. Mission to the United Nations.

"The Egyptian 10 points is not a competing proposal, it is simply a method of trying to get implementation of the Shamir proposal," Baker said.

He referred to Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir and his right-wing Likud bloc.

Aquino's refusal may cost unity, vice president says

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — President Corazon Aquino's refusal to allow Ferdinand Marcos to be buried in his homeland may cost her the chance for national reconciliation, Vice President Salvador Laurel said today.

The vice president also said lawyers for Marcos and his family will ask the Supreme Court on Monday to reconsider its decision dismissing the former president's petition to return home.

"I feel sorry that she is wasting a very good opportunity to unite the country and our people," said Laurel, who heads the opposition Nationalista Party. "This is a very good chance to achieve true national reconciliation if she will allow the body of former President Marcos to come home."

"But her stubbornness and strict refusal to allow Marcos' body back could create deeper resentment among our people," Laurel said at a news conference. "Let justice be done. I don't think two wrongs will make right."

The 72-year-old Marcos died of cardiac arrest Thursday in Honolulu. Mrs. Aquino has repeatedly rejected appeals for Marcos and his family to come home, claiming his return would trigger domestic unrest.

In an 8-7 vote, the Supreme Court on Sept. 15 dismissed a petition by Marcos asking for his return.

300 Sinhalese extremists surrender in cease-fire

COLOMBO, Sri Lanka (AP) — More than 300 Sinhalese extremists have surrendered in the army's 4-day-old cease-fire, but other radicals launched more attacks and killed three people, the government said today.

A government statement said the extremists had surrendered since Wednesday, when the military halted operations against the People's Liberation Front hoping to persuade the ultranationalists to initiate peace talks.

The cease-fire was to expire early today, but President Ranasinghe Premadasa extended it until 6 a.m. Tuesday. The Front has rejected the truce.

The statement said Front members killed at least three people, including a security force member, on Friday and early today in central and southern Sri Lanka.

The deaths brought to 17 the number of people killed since Wednesday by the Front, which opposes the Sinhalese-dominated government's peace plan granting limited autonomy to Tamils in the island's northern and eastern areas.

Tamils want a separate nation and complain of discrimination by the majority Sinhalese in jobs and education.

The Sinhalese extremists also burned 12 post offices, 11 other government buildings and three government vehicles over the past four days, the government said without elaborating.

Four killed in train crash

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — Two passenger trains crashed on the outskirts of Cairo after one ignored signal lights, killing four people and injuring 46, a news report said.

The accident occurred Friday when one of the trains smashed into the other as it made a stop in the Nile Delta town of Qalyub, the Middle East News Agency said. It quoted a statement by the Egyptian Railway Authority.

The agency gave no further details. It said only that investigations were under way.

General's body returned

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — The body of Gen. Juan Manuel de Rosas, whose 19th century rule left political animosities that are still present, was returned from France Saturday in a move to heal today's divisions.

The casket, wrapped in the blue and white Argentine flag and with a red poncho and a cavalry saber on top, arrived aboard an air force plane from Paris and was flown by helicopter to Rosario, 188 miles north of Buenos Aires.

"We cannot construct a true fatherland atop hatred between brothers," President Carlos Menem said in a televised speech at a Rosario monument marking the spot the Argentine flag first flew in 1812.

Rosas, who exercised iron rule over a confederation of newly independent and rebellious provinces from 1835 until his ouster and exile in 1852, is considered a hero by nationalists and a tyrant by liberals.

"In welcoming Rosas we are saying goodbye to an old, wornout, anachronistic and absurd country, a country of failure, hatred and false illusions," said Menem, who took office on July 8.

Standing beside the president were some of Rosas' descendants, government officials, Roman Catholic church leaders and military officers.

Famous fountain damaged

FLORENCE, Italy (AP) — Vandals broke off parts of horses' legs from the famous Neptune Fountain on the city's Piazza Della Signoria early Friday, authorities said.

Police said they had no idea who damaged the marble fountain, which features the majestic figure of Neptune standing on a chariot drawn by four horses.

Police said two horses' legs were broken off and smashed to pieces by vandals.

Officials of the city's art preservation department said they would meet to discuss restoring the fountain.

Israelis hopeful for peace as new year observed

JERUSALEM (AP) — Israeli politicians on Saturday took an optimistic view of prospects for peace with Palestinians as Jews attended prayer services and festive meals for Rosh Hashana, the Jewish new year.

But violence continued in the Israeli-occupied territories, where two Palestinians were reported killed and 12 wounded.

Troops in the occupied West Bank shot to death a knife-wielding masked man at a roadblock in the village of Meithalun, military sources said. Arab reports said the victim was with a group of men trying to block villagers from leaving for jobs in Israel. Leaders of the Palestinian uprising had declared a general strike on Saturday.

In the West Bank city of Nablus, soldiers shot to death 20-year-old Silham Mabruke and wounded six others during clashes in the area, according to Arab reports. Other Arab reports from the Gaza Strip said soldiers shot and wounded six Palestinians in scattered fighting.

The deaths brought to 577 the number of Palestinians killed by troops or Jewish settlers in the 21-month-old uprising against Israeli rule of the occupied lands. Forty Israelis have also been killed, and 122 Palestinians have been killed by fellow Arabs as suspected collaborators.

Israelis observing the Jewish new year 5750 donned holiday garb and set out on foot for synagogues across the nation. Security was heavy.

Rosh Hashana is one of Judaism's holiest days and many non-observant Jews also attend prayer services on the holiday, which began Friday at sundown and ends Sunday at sundown.

"The peace initiative is alive, fermenting, it is talked about and argued about," Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir said in an interview on Armed Forces radio.

Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak telephoned Shamir from New York during a meeting in New York with Foreign Minister Moshe Arens on Friday and Mubarak and Shamir agreed to continue their dialogue, Israel radio reported Saturday. Israel radio initially reported Mubarak and Shamir had agreed to meet but said later that was an incorrect translation from Hebrew to English and the two leaders had only agreed to continue their dialogue.

Mubarak wished Shamir a happy new year in the rare conversation and said he did not want to see the unity goverment of Israel divided over a proposal the Egyptian leader put forth to promote talks between the Jewish state and Palestinians, according to the radio report.

But Shamir rejected Mubarak's suggestion that Israel trade territory for peace and negotiate with the Palestine Liberation Organization, which Israel considers a terrorist group.

New storm brews over federal response to Hurricane Hugo

NATION

CHARLESTON, S.C. (AP) — Faye Thompson went to a federal aid center Saturday for a loan to rebuild her auto repair shop and patch the roof of her house torn open by Hurricane Hugo. What she got was an application and instructions to come back Oct. 12 to fill out forms.

"My house won't be standing by Oct. 12," said Mrs. Thompson, 42, as a steady drizzle fell. "I need help right now. There's too much red tape. What good is this piece of paper going to do for my roof?"

Nine days after Hurricane Hugo passed, a political storm still rages over how quickly the federal government responded to a crisis in South Carolina, where damage has been estimated at $3 billion or more.

The anger has focused on the Federal Emergency Management Agency, which reports directly to the president and has a budget of $600 million a year.

A chief critic has been Sen. Ernest F. Hollings, D-S.C., who has accused the agency of strangling aid attempts in red tape and has called FEMA's hierarchy a "bunch of bureaucratic jackasses" who would do best to "get out of the way."

President Bush, who flew to South Carolina on Friday for a brief look at the damage, defended the administration's response to the disaster, saying he was "satisfied the federal government has moved, and moved expeditiously."

Charleston Mayor Joseph P. Riley Jr., a Democrat, accuses the agency of being slow to respond.

"The system is not designed to cope immediately and urgently with a major disaster," he said. "They didn't bring in enough people, enough resources."

As one example, he said FEMA officials asked for a written assessment of the need for portable generators, even though everybody knew of widespread power outages.

FEMA already was in the Caribbean attempting to assist victims of Hugo as the storm roared toward the mainland, spreading the agency a bit thin.

Hugo killed 33 people in the Caribbean; 28 deaths on the U.S. mainland are blamed on the hurricane and its remnants.

In South Carolina, some 50,000 people were displaced by the storm, 270,000 lost jobs, and at least 135,000 still had no electricity Saturday.

Gov. Carroll Campbell warned that the state must build 65 miles of protective sand dunes to prevent further damage to the coastline. The tide is expected to rise to 2 feet higher than usual in mid-October, a once-in-a-decade high because the moon will be unusually close to the earth. The tide could further erode beaches.

The governor said he discussed the "mind-boggling" dune project with Bush. Federal funds would cover three-fourths of the $65 million needed for the project.

Campbell requested federal disaster aid the day after Hugo struck the state Sept. 21. A FEMA representative in Charleston took an aerial survey of the coast and Bush signed the disaster declaration before noon the same day.

But the first FEMA office didn't open until Thursday, a week after Hugo battered the region. One of the first five FEMA centers is located in a former toy store and was opened before electrical power was restored. Five more open this weekend.

FEMA spokesman Bill McAda said the agency waits at least four days before it opens aid offices to give victims time to contact their insurance agents.

The centers help people get grants for repairs to homes or businesses and aid for those who lost jobs to the storm. Assistance also can be given on tax questions, insurance claims and price gouging.

Under one program, FEMA reimburses individuals and families who qualify for temporary housing for up to two years. Those who don't qualify under that program can apply for up to $10,000 in grants.

Those who need immediate help with food, clothing and shelter are directed to the American Red Cross.

Residents looking for help are disheartened to find that jobless pay may take two to three weeks to process, and they may not actually receive their loans for two months.

"We're doing the best we can," said FEMA manager Shirley Caraway. "I feel for the people, but this process is necessary. It's something they have to go through. It's their tax dollars."

Local officials gave the federal agency mixed reviews.

Richard Wern, mayor of St. George in the hard-hit rural county northwest of Charleston, said he had no contact with FEMA and no nearby aid center, though hundreds of people were waiting in line in his town for food and water.

"They need money to repair their water systems and their wells," he said. "That would help them become more self-sufficient more quickly."

But in coastal Georgetown, city administrator Mitch Sizemore said FEMA's help in paying for repairs to the municipal power system "is going to be tremendous."

Sizemore said some of the disappointment in FEMA may be based on unrealistic expectations among elected officials unfamiliar with the agency's mission, calling it a "reimbursement agency" that moves in after the initial response by local governments.

Riley said the federal government should cross-train employees in all departments to handle emergencies so thousands of workers could be shipped to disaster areas to process requests.

Senators wonder 'where's the beef?' to Poland plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — Notwithstanding charges it is being too timid, the Bush administration is resisting calls for the United States to directly spend billions of dollars to aid Poland's historic attempt to transform its economy from communism to capitalism.

Bush

It's not that President Bush doesn't want the Poles to succeed.

In an address last week to the 152-nation International Monetary Fund and its sister organization, the World Bank, Bush hailed developments in Eastern Europe as "stunning."

"There is no greater opportunity before us all today than the challenge of Poland," he said.

"We must do more," he said.

On the other hand, Bush mentioned no specific figure for U.S. aid beyond the $219 million already announced.

Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif., called the president's proposal "pathetically timid" and Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, said the "administration's timidity ... is puzzling and dismaying."

"Bush is saying he wants to provide assistance to a newly reformed system, but the bottom line is, 'Where's the beef? Where is the money?'" said Joseph Pelzman, professor of economics at George Washington University.

The president reportedly is considering additional U.S. aid, but the administration seems inclined to channel most Western help through the IMF and World Bank.

The key word in Bush's speech last week was "we." He was speaking to the world, not just to Americans.

"The United States might kick in some more food aid from time to time and put aside some scholarships, but in terms of cash aid, it's going to work through the World Bank and IMF," said economics professor Howard Wachtel of American University.

A Treasury official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said Friday, "The Bush administration believes that the World Bank and IMF have particularly important roles to play in supporting economic reform in Poland, both through policy advice and financial support."

Academic experts on the subject say there are a number of advantages to this approach, both political and budgetary.

"It is a way to provide burden sharing and there is nothing wrong with that," Pelzman said.

Western European democracies have as much, if not more, reason than the United States to help Poland succeed.

Another advantage lies in the technicalities of how the IMF raises its money. The fund assesses each member a quota, which the countries supply from their reserves. The quota can be withdrawn on demand, so it doesn't count as spending for U.S. budget purposes.

Additional direct U.S. aid, unlike an increase in IMF quotas, would mean the administration and Congress would have to cut elsewhere to meet the requirements of the Gramm-Rudman deficit reduction law.

Indeed, IMF officials, who are seeking agreement by the end of the year to double the fund's resources from $120 billion to $240 billion, are hoping U.S. desire to aid Eastern Europe will help persuade the United States to accede to a substantial quota increase.

But, perhaps the most important factors in the administration's thinking are political, both international and domestic.

If the United States charges too strongly into Poland, it could rattle the Soviet Union, already nervous about the Solidarity-led government that took office Aug. 24.

Also, Polish officials are beginning what at least initially will be a jarring reform program causing widespread unemployment and other disruptions as inefficient state-run enterprises are forced to operate in a competitive system for the first time.

The IMF, in exchange for its assistance, normally insists that countries follow through on promised reforms. It acts as sort of an international enforcer. That's in line with what the United States wants, but the administration is not eager for the flak that accompanies the tough cop role.

One of the reasons Congress is so keen on aiding Poland is the millions of Americans of Polish descent who closely watch conditions in their native land.

Having the IMF take the lead "gives the United States political cover. It puts the IMF out front.

Cash government checks within year, official says

WASHINGTON (AP) — You now have just one year to cash your federal government check.

Until now, a government check was good indefinitely. But a new law going into effect Sunday requires recipients to cash their checks within 12 months.

"Americans are sitting on more than $2.5 billion of U.S. government checks" more than a year old, according to Andy Montgomery, a spokesman for the Treasury Department's Financial Management Service.

"There are nearly 6 million of those checks out there — in boxes, desk drawers, attics, you name it," he said. "Some are decades old."

The Financial Management Services said that 427 pre-1956 checks averaging $65.42 were presented for payment during 1988. Many of them, it said, were found by recipients or their estates who came to the service to determine whether the checks were still "good."

The oldest check was issued to a woman in Nebraska on April 15, 1919, for $1.01 in interest on World War I Liberty bonds. She was not identified.

The largest check was made out to a Michigan man for $8,606 in unspecified compensation on April 9, 1954. The smallest was a 2-cent tax refund issued to a Massachusetts man on April 19, 1946.

To remind recipients of the new time limit for cashing government checks, checks dated Oct. 1 and later will bear the phrase, "VOID AFTER ONE YEAR." The new law also requires that checks written prior to Oct. 1 be cashed no later than Sept. 30, 1990.

The Financial Management Service emphasized, however, the time limit does not affect the government's liability. But if the time limit is exceeded, the person holding the cancelled check will have to apply to the agency that wrote it for a replacement rather than just take it to a bank and cash it.

The new law also allows a one-year period during which a claim involving a lost or stolen check may be filed.

At the same time, the Treasury Department has 18 months to begin recovery from a financial institution of funds involving a forged or unauthorized check.

Building embassy annex for business one 'debugging' option

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State James Baker III is close to making his decision on the fate of the bug-riddled U.S. Embassy building in Moscow, with one key option being to construct an annex for top-secret business, officials say.

But some members of Congress might balk at that idea as "empire building," said Rep. Olympia Snowe, R-Maine, a congressional expert on the embassy debacle.

"It would look like we're rewarding the State Department for exorbitant mistakes in the past," she said. "They have to justify the need" for a new building, she said.

Officials at the State Department said Baker's decision on the multi-million-dollar fiasco could come this week.

"Baker is nearly ready to make a decision. The intelligence community has signed onto a plan," said one department official, speaking on condition he remain anonymous.

But he said Baker has not approved the proposal, which would then be sent to President Bush before it is transmitted to Congress.

Baker's dilemma, which he inherited from the Reagan administration, is what should be done with the bug-infested, red-brick building that has never been used by American diplomats.

Listening devices and eavesdropping equipment were discovered in the building in 1985, 13 years after the United States and the Soviet Union signed a construction agreement that allowed Soviet builders to do the job.

Over the past four years, State Department officials have floated a number of possible options for the building, known in Washington circles as the NOB, or New Office Building.

They include razing the building and replacing it with a secure facility; ripping out only the top floors to make them bug-free, or constructing a new annex as a place for secret talks and transmissions.

In April, two key department officials, Ambassador Nicholas Salgo and Ivan Selin, undersecretary for management, told Baker that constructing an annex would be cheaper than the estimated $500 million that might be needed to tear down the NOB and replace it.

The annex idea follows a recommendation by James Schlesinger, the former defense secretary, who prepared a report on the embassy for the Reagan administration. He also suggested making the top three floors of the existing building secure.

A month before Bush was elected, former President Reagan advocated razing the building, saying the United States had "no choice" but to do so.

But congressional sources, also speaking on condition of anonymity, say the annex solution now appears high on the department's agenda.

Rep. Neal Smith, D-Iowa, chairman of the House panel that appropriates money for the State Department, said one possibility being discussed is for the United States to buy the so-called "change" building — the place Russian workers changed clothes — that is situated between the old U.S. Embassy building and the new building.

The change building would be torn down and replaced with a secure annex. The bugged building could then be used for other purposes, perhaps a cultural center, a visa office or an office for visiting American business executives.

The department has not asked for additional money for the embassy building in the 1990 fiscal year.

If Baker endorses building an annex, members of Congress will have some tough questions for the department, Snowe said. For one, they will want to know what the department intends to do with the extra space.

"What do we do with the existing building, what do we do with the building they are in now?" she asked.

Another difficulty is the U.S.-Soviet reciprocity agreement that would give the Soviets the right to demand additional space in Washington, she said. The United States barred the Soviets from occupying their new embassy in Washington after the Moscow problems were uncovered.

Other congressional sources said there are sure to be questions about how to protect those who worked in the annex. Those dealing with sensitive material would be easily identifiable, they said.

Regardless of Baker's decisions, officials said it would take several more years before the situation is resolved.

Lawmakers miss fiscal year deadline on budget

WASHINGTON (AP) — With three days left before the Oct. 1 start of the new federal budget year, Senate Chaplain Richard Halverson began the chamber's deliberations Thursday with a timely prayer.

"Benevolent Lord, grant to thy servants, laboring under the urgent necessity of the fiscal deadline, relief from tension," he intoned.

Few others detect a sense of urgency among lawmakers working on spending and deficit-cutting legislation. Failing once again to complete their budget work by the start of the new fiscal year, members of Congress have demonstrated that they care little about meeting fiscal deadlines.

That attitude is widely expected to be demonstrated again Oct. 16. That day, the Gramm-Rudman deficit-reduction law will automatically trigger spending cuts in many federal programs unless $6 billion in savings are enacted into law — an action that few people believe Congress will take.

Those automatic cuts — split evenly between defense and domestic programs — were written into law with the belief that the slashes would be so draconian that their mere threat would drive lawmakers to settle their differences and finish their work.

This year, fear of those cuts is hard to find.

"The talk around here is incredibly unfocused and unconcerned about" the cuts, complains Sen. Pete Domenici, R-N.M., ranking Republican on the Senate Budget Committee.

Many legislators believe that even if the cuts take effect, they will eventually be rolled back — as they have in the past — and noticed by few if any voters.

"There will be some bad publicity and some ill effect, but ultimately it will be nullified and we'll move on," says Rep. Tim Penny, D-Minn., a fiscal conservative who believes the process must be made stricter.

Technically, the cuts temporarily take effect Oct. 1. Defense Department programs will have 4.3 percent of their budgets withheld, while domestic agencies will be pared by 5.3 percent, the difference arising because many domestic programs — like Social Security — are exempted.

If legislation is not enacted by Oct. 16 trimming the deficit to $110 billion, those temporary cuts become permanent.

But the permanent reductions do little to frighten lawmakers for several reasons.

The cuts can be rolled back by Congress at any time, as happened in 1987 when they lasted two months.

They would be barely noticed if they lasted only several weeks, because agencies can juggle their budgets by delaying purchases or hiring. And many lawmakers prefer them to the alternatives: the capital gains tax reduction Bush champions, higher taxes that some Democrats have suggested, or deep cuts in specific programs.

"People have said, 'Let's have it and see how bad it is,'" said Rep. William Frenzel, R-Minn., ranking Republican on the House Budget Committee.

Lawmakers clearly have higher priorities than obeying budget law deadlines or avoiding spending cuts. Among them are enacting new programs, and protecting favored existing ones from spending cuts.

For example, the tax bill the House will continue debating this week — designed to save $16.6 billion — would earn new revenues and cut spending on some government programs.

Three more arrested in cocaine seizure

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Federal agents made three more arrests in the world's largest cocaine seizure, bringing to six the number held in connection with the 20 tons found in a suburban warehouse, an official said Saturday.

Workers and business owners in the warehouse complex on an upscale, tree-lined street said they were suspicious about the establishment, called Adriana's Pottery Warehouse. Adriana's prosperous-looking operators claimed to be in the velvet painting business.

But when authorities acting on a tip broke into the warehouse by knocking apart a $6 padlock, they found 20 tons of cocaine, the largest seizure in the world by a law enforcement agency.

Its estimated value was between $2 billion and $20 billion, depending on its final form for sale on the street.

Three Southern California men were arrested Friday morning in connection with the case. The other three, all from Los Angeles, were arrested later Friday in their rooms at the Flamingo Hilton in Las Vegas.

A U.S. Drug Enforcement Agency source who requested anonymity identified the men arrested in Las Vegas as Carlos Tapia Ponce, 68, his son Hector Eduardo Tapia Ponce, 34, and Hector Tapia, 66, the brother of Carlos.

The source said Carlos Tapia Ponce is a former Mexican customs inspector who had worked in Ciudad Juarez, Mexico, for 15 years.

The three were arrested for investigation of violation of federal narcotics laws and were booked into the Clark County Detention Center. Arraignment was set for Monday in U.S. District Court in Las Vegas.

The Thursday night raid, 25 miles northwest of downtown near the San Gabriel Mountain foothills, also yielded extensive records and at least $10 million in cash, bundled and stuffed in dozens of boxes.

"It didn't seem like a good business," said David Barron, the owner of a construction company that worked out of a warehouse next door. "They said they were dealing in paintings — velvet paintings. I didn't see a market for that in California."

Nonetheless, there were frequent truck deliveries to Adriana's. Workers in the complex said they came as often as once a week in the last six months.

Investigator says crash was 'unavoidable'

CATLETT, Va. (AP) — The collision between an Amtrak train and a firetruck was the third in five years at a rural crossing, but one official said the crash that killed two firefighters was "unavoidable."

State and federal investigators declined to speculate on the cause of Thursday evening's wreck, but they said there was no sign the train crew was at fault.

"There is no indication that there was any improper action on the part of the train's crew that in any way led to the accident," Amtrak spokesman Michael Stewart said.

The Amtrak Crescent, carrying 379 passengers and a crew of 20, was en route from New York to Atlanta and New Orleans when it struck a Catlett Volunteer Fire Department truck about 50 miles southwest of Washington, D.C.

The National Transportation Safety Board and the state police are investigating the accident, in which 12 of the train's 16 cars and two locomotives derailed.

The track was reopened Friday afternoon.

A preliminary investigation by Amtrak showed the train was traveling at 77 mph at the time of the collision, just below the speed limit of 79 mph, Stewart said.

Local authorities said it was the third collision in five years at the crossing on a private road near Virginia 28. The previous two did not cause any injuries.

The crash highlighted the danger of the crossing, authorities said. There is a railroad crossing sign at the junction, but no crossing bar or warning light.

"It was an unavoidable accident," Fauquier County Deputy Sheriff Robert Mosier said. "The crossing sits on a steep grade, so the driver couldn't stop to look. He had his lights on and the siren running next to his ear, not to mention the sound of the truck's motor."

State police spokeswoman Lucy Caldwell said the firetruck carrying five firefighters was responding to a report of a car fire near a home on the other side of the tracks.

Firefighters Mark Miller, 23, the driver of the truck, and Matt Smith, 22, the front-seat passenger, both of Catlett, died at the scene.

"It really shakes you. It's devastating," Catlett Fire Chief Clyde Lomax said. "We're just trying to stay together, talk this thing out."

Seven people — two firefighters and five passengers — remained hospitalized early today.

One firefighter, Ernest Colbert, was listed in serious condition at Fairfax Hospital. Another, Michael S. Kirk, 21, was in fair condition at Washington Hospital Center.

The fifth fireman, Frankie Herndon, was treated at a local hospital and released.

Caldwell said a total of 68 train passengers and 10 crew members were sent to hospitals, as well as the three firefighters. Another 80 or so passengers were treated for minor injuries at the scene, she said.

Kirk, interviewed by telephone from his hospital bed Friday, said he could not recall the crash.

"I don't remember anything," Kirk said. "The last thing I remember I was mowing the grass ... then I was here."

Last year 594 people were killed and 2,344 were injured in 5,820 grade-crossing wrecks nationwide. In Virginia, six people were killed and 41 were injured in 110 crossing crashes in 1988.

Lincoln denied comments about Grant's drinking

President Abraham Lincoln never said, in response to complaints about Gen. Ulysses S. Grant's drinking, "If I knew what brand he used, I'd send every other general in the field a barrel of it."

Lincoln not only denied saying it but said it sounded like an anecdote told about England's George II.

Recorder reveals USAir jet's rudder misaligned

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — The flight recorder from the USAir jet that crashed at La Guardia Airport last week shows that the plane's rudder was severely misaligned long before the ill-fated takeoff attempt, government officials said Friday.

But an industry source said the cockpit voice recorder shows that the pilots, in going through a checklist, had found that a cockpit gauge showed the rudder properly centered.

The conflicting evidence raised the question of whether the discrepancy was the result of a mechanical problem or whether the crew might have erred in reading what was on the cockpit gauge of the Boeing 737-400.

The rudder position is a central focus of the inquiry into the accident, in which two passengers died and 45 of the other 61 on board were hurt.

On Wednesday, the National Transportation Safety Board said that the rudder trim actuator in the tail, a cockpit-operated mechanism that normally plays a secondary role in positioning the rudder, had been found in the extreme-left position in the tail wreckage.

This would have made the plane veer left on its takeoff run, and was consistent with the captain's statement that the plane had veered left.

The veer and a severe vibration led him to take over the controls and abort the takeoff.

Friday, officials said that the flight data recorder, which steadily records data on 70 of the plane's conditions, like speed, altitude, engine thrust and the positions of wing and tail controls, showed that the rudder had been in the extreme left position from the time the plane left the gate.

This raises several questions investigators are pursuing:

■ Why did the pilots not discover this while going over their checklists before takeoff?

The rudder trim, whose position registers on a cockpit gauge and should agree with the position of the tail, must be checked three times — before engines are started, after they are started, and on the taxiway shortly before takeoff.

■ Could the crew, departing late on a rainy night, have been too perfunctory in reading the checklist items?

Could they have been confused by dim cockpit lighting and beams from lights on the rain-spattered runway?

Could their difficulties have been compounded by the fact that the co-pilot was making his first takeoff in a 737-400 on a regular passenger flight?

■ Was it possible that, because of faulty maintenance or another technical error, the proper relationship between the rudder and the cockpit gauge had been upset?

When a plane is not being flown electronically, on automatic pilot, the primary means for controlling the rudder are pedals at the pilots' feet, which transmit force through hydraulic lines.

On a Boeing 737, the pedals can move the rudder 30 degrees right or left.

FDA raises concerns about grain in cereals

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Food and Drug Administration wants two companies to explain their claims that grain used in three new breakfast cereal can help lower cholesterol.

The FDA said Friday that it has "serious concerns" about the amounts of grain General Mills and the Kellogg Co. are using in the cereals and asked them to submit scientific data showing the levels of grain are safe.

General Mills makes Benefit cereal and Kellogg makes Heartwise and Bran Buds.

The cereals contain husks of psyllium, which contains soluble fiber, which the companies say is safe and has been shown to help reduce cholesterol. Benefit also contains sugar beet fiber, and the FDA asked General Mills to submit data showing it also is safe.

Spokesmen for both companies said their cereals are safe and that they would submit the requested data.

Bran Buds has been on the market for a year, Benefit is being sold in selected test markets, but Heartwise is not on the market yet.

Proctor & Gamble Co., which uses psyllium in its Metamucil laxative, raised the question of whether psyllium is a drug or food additive. The company had asked the FDA to pull Benefit off the market because the cereal had not been subjected to drug-testing requirements.

Proctor & Gamble had asked the FDA to let it make cholesterol-lowering claims for Metamucil but was told more study was needed. "We hope the FDA will take further action to eliminate the inconsistency in allowing these new cereals to make cholesterol-reduction claims while Metamucil cannot," company spokesman Bill Dobson said, reacting to the FDA's action.

The FDA outlined its concerns in separate letters to General Mills and Kellogg.

"We recognize that recent recommendations concerning diet emphasizes the need for consumers to increase their intake of fiber-containing foods," the FDA letters said. "We generally see no problem when this increase is accomplished by the consumption of foods high in naturally occurring fiber.

"In the case of an ingredient that is intended to be added to various food products to increase the levels of fiber in those foods however, we believe there are some serious concerns that should be considered first."

The FDA said there are "well known safety concerns" associated with use of psyllium, including possible allergic reactions. The agency noted that Geneal Mills has warned on its label about this possibility, provides instructions for its use on the package label and advises consuming the cereal with adequate liquids and restricting consumption by children.

Parents to obtain new power on school council

By LINDSEY TANNER

CHICAGO (AP) — Parents will wield unprecedented power to shape public education in Chicago following elections this month that culminate sweeping reforms in the school system often labeled the nation's worst.

On Oct. 11-12, voters will elect members to 540 local councils, which will oversee the city's 603 schools.

The councils — each composed of six parents and five other members, including teachers, principals and local residents without schoolchildren — will have authority to hire and fire principals, develop school improvement plans and spend money.

"It's the worst system in the country. Parents can't do any worse than the current system," said Norman Hodgson, a father of two and candidate for a council that will serve his kindergarten daughter's Northwest Side elementary school.

The councils are a key element of new reform package aimed at decentralizing the Board of Education's powers and eliminating deep-seated problems that have given Chicago's public schools a reputation as the nation's worst.

And nearly everyone who has a stake in the city — from Hispanic lawmakers and black community activists to white corporate executives — is participating in a mobilization effort to get parents and others involved.

Critics say the decentralization goes too far, putting too much power in the hands of those unequipped to deal with it. They say schools can't be expected to cure ills that stem from broken families.

But reformers argue that by getting parents involved, the plan will help break a vicious cycle of problems that may begin in poverty-stricken homes, but has spilled over into schools and created generations of apathetic educators too willing to accept the status quo.

"One of the changes we hope will happen is teachers and principals will stop blaming the families and start thinking about what they can do to make a difference," said Donald Moore, executive director of Designs for Change, an education research and advisory council that helped shape the reform package.

"Who knows more about educating their children than parents, along with educators? We've got to work together," Hodgson said.

That is the battle cry of the numerous corporations, community and civic organizations all trying to make sure the reform plan — passed last year by the state legislature — gets off on the right foot.

Grass-roots organizing efforts by groups like Designs for Change have sent volunteers into the city's housing projects, going door-to-door to recruit candidates for the two-year council positions. School officials sought 10,000 candidates, but passed the mark by Thursday with nearly 14,650, although some neighborhoods still lack full slates.

Corporations have donated hundreds of thousands of dollars and clergymen have devoted sermons to urging their congregations to get involved and vote for the sake of the schools' 410,000 children.

"Everyone's talking about it," said Lucy Moore, a 58-year-old grandmother running in an poor black neighborhood on the South Side.

"So far everyone that I talk to in the neighborhood says they are interested," she said. "They say they will vote. They say our children are at stake. They are our future."

Each council will include six parents, two teachers and two community residents without schoolchildren. School staffs will elect the teacher members. The 11th member of each council will be the principal of the school the council oversees. (In some cases, councils will oversee more than one school.)

> "One of the changes we hope will happen is teachers and principals will stop blaming the families and start thinking about what they can do to make a difference."
>
> — Donald Moore, education expert

Council powers will include signing principals to four-year performance contracts and deciding whether to renew what essentially were lifetime jobs before reform.

Principals will have authority to hire teachers and dismiss them after 45 days probation, regardless of seniority. Before, teachers deemed unsatisfactory had a year to improve. Politics and seniority often made principals hire teachers they didnt' want.

"Before, the central board had to approve every little thing that the school did. Now their role is much more to be a monitor to enforce minimum standards," said Donald Moore of Designs for Change.

The Chicago Teachers Union, which represents 28,000 district employees, including nearly 21,800 teachers, did not return telephone calls seeking comment.

Reform also means shifting more money to schools that serve the most low-income students and eliminating supefluous administrative jobs; 500 already have been cut. For example, the school system trimmed some positions when it stopped testing teacher applicants to prove their state certification.

Chicago's school budget this year is $2.26 billion, up about $200 million over last year. While reform does not call for more state money, it involves shifting budget money to give a larger share to educating low income students, Moore said.

And $40 million that resulted from eliminating board jobs is being pumped into the reform effort, he added.

"What this law does it to put a mechanism in place so that principals and teachers will be held accountable for their schools by the people who have the most at stake ... that is primarily by parents," Moore said.

Chicago's woes gained nationwide scrutiny in 1987, when William Bennett, then President Reagan's education secretary, labeled the city's schools the worst in the nation. The reform effort has put the system in the national spotlight again.

Chicago's school reform is "the most fundamental reorganization of a big city school system since the early part of the 20th century," said David Cohen, professor of education and social policy at Michigan State University.

"I think a lot of people thought the Chicago system was about as poor as any system in the country," said Norm Fruchter, senior consultant for the Academy of Educational Development, a New York-based group that analyzes urban school systems.

Fruchter cited such problems as a double-digit dropout rate a low-income student population approaching 70 percent.

No other system with local school councils puts the kind of control in parents' hands that the Chicago reforms do, Fruchter said.

"Chicago has never had a plan like this. The nation has never had a plan like this," said Sylvia Peters, principal of a South Side elementary school.

Gabor's conviction runs counter to trend

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The colorful case of the city of Beverly Hills vs. Zsa Zsa Gabor adds a footnote to the history of a favorite Hollywood genre: the real-life courtroom drama.

Gabor

Slapping a macho cop in a traffic incident hardly matches the murder, rape and paternity charges against other celebrities in past years. But the Beverly Hills shenanigans still commanded worldwide media coverage.

Miss Gabor's conviction Friday on three of four misdemeanor counts runs counter to the trend in Hollywood trials, most of which the stars have either won or walked away from with light sentences. Miss Gabor's sentencing is set for Oct. 17.

Juries are often awed by celebrities and wind up deciding in their favor, court observers say.

The prosecutor in the "Twilight Zone" case said he thought the jury was overwhelmed by the defendants' celebrity and acquitted producer John Landis and four others. Landis was tried for the 1982 helicopter-crash deaths of actor Vic Morrow and two small children.

Six bailiffs were needed to shield Miss Gabor as she made her way each day to the third-floor courtroom through an international platoon of reporters eager to gobble up the actress' daily sound bite commentaries on the trial and life in general.

The prosecutor, deputy district attorney Elden Fox, called the affair "a media circus."

"This sells newspapers or TV time," Fox said. "There is a great deal of public interest in finding out how their (celebrities') cases are resolved as opposed to Richard Ramirez or somebody else who doesn't quite have the celebrity status."

A Los Angeles jury is debating whether Ramirez, the convicted "Night Stalker" killer, should receive the death penalty. Jurors will resume their work Monday.

One indication of the movieland influence in the Gabor trial was the stage marker on the sidewalk in front of the courthouse.

The tape marking, spelling Zsa Zsa in red letters, showed the defendant exactly where to stand before the battery of news cameras each day to achieve the best angle and lighting.

Hollywood's first notorious trial actually took place in San Francisco. One of the silent screen's most famous comics, Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle, was charged with murder when a 25-year-old starlet fell ill during a hotel booze party and died several days later.

After two hung juries, Arbuckle was acquitted in a third trial on April 12, 1922. His career never recovered. He died at 46 in 1933.

The 1935 divorce trial of Mary Astor and Dr. Franklyn Thorpe caused a sensation because of an alleged diary which chronicled her affairs with top movie figures. The diary was never introduced as evidence, and the actress denied it existed. Miss Astor went on to star in "The Maltese Falcon" and many other films.

Swashbuckling Errol Flynn was charged in 1942 with statutory rape of two teen-age girls. Accounts of the revels aboard Flynn's yacht were trumpeted by newspapers. Famed Hollywood defender Jerry Giesler won an acquittal for Flynn, whose career flourished with the notoriety.

Young Joan Barry came to Hollywood in 1940 to crash the movies and ended up in Charlie Chaplin's bed. After Chaplin abandoned his "protegee," she turned up at his house with a gun, and police ran her out of town. This led to a paternity suit as well as federal charges for infringing Miss Barry's rights.

Even though tests proved he couldn't be the father, Chaplin was ordered to support the baby. With Giesler's help, he beat the federal charges. Largely because of the scandal and his left-leaning politics, the federal government revoked Chaplin's entry permit while he was on a trip abroad several years later, and he exiled himself to Switzerland.

When Robert Mitchum was arrested in 1948 for smoking marijuana, Giesler again came to the rescue. Mitchum received two months in jail and emerged to find his career was in like Flynn's.

Producer Walter Wanger, a Motion Picture Academy president and pillar of the film community, suspected his wife, actress Joan Bennett, was having an affair with her agent and shot the man. Warning that vigilantism was not tolerated in Beverly Hills, the judge gave the producer a light sentence.

In 1958, Lana Turner's daughter, Cheryl Crane, plunged a butcher knife into her mother's lover, Johnny Stompanato, during a violent argument between the two adults. Giesler was the first person the actress called.

Miss Turner gave her most dramatic performance before the coroner's jury. The verdict came in 20 minutes: justifiable homicide.

Changing times have brought suits by homosexuals against their famous lovers: Scott Thorson vs. Liberace; Marc Christian vs. Rock Hudson's estate. The word palimony was coined with Michele Triola's suit against her live-in lover, Lee Marvin, in the late 1970s. Miss Triola received a small settlement.

Coming palimony attraction: Sondra Locke vs. Clint Eastwood.

HOW THEY VOTED

Congressional Quarterly

WASHINGTON — Votes of area members of Congress on key issues during the week ending Sept. 29, 1989.

KEY HOUSE VOTES

House OKs capital gains tax cut. The House gave President Bush a victory Sept. 28, voting 190-239 to reject a Democratic-backed alternative to the president's capital gains tax cut.

The House action left in tact the president's proposed cut in the tax rate on profits from asset sales, which was included in the $16.6 billion deficit-reduction bill.

The Democratic plan would have expanded tax breaks for individual retirement accounts (IRAs) and taxed high-income earners at a higher marginal rate.

Supporters of the Democratic alternative to the capital gains tax argued that a return to general deductibility for IRAs would provide a broader-based tax break — not just a tax break for the well-to-do.

"The...amendment says the superrich should be treated no better by the tax code than those less well off," said Leon E. Panetta, D-Calif. "There is no reason why the middle class should be more heavily taxed, relative to the rich."

Opponents of the alternative supported the president's capital gains tax cut proposal. They claimed lowering the capital gains tax would lead to economic growth and expansion because it would encourage people to sell their assets and pay tax on the gain, rather than sitting on their assets. "Not just the rich will enjoy the benefits from a capital gains (tax cut), but the average American will also benefit," said Ron Marlenee, R-Mont. "(W)e also are providing an incentive for Americans to...make stock investments so they can realize the American dream."

Voting for the Democratic alternative to the capital gains tax cut: Gonzalez (D), Stenholm (D), Sarpalius (D).

Voting against: Smith (R), Combest (R).

House says no to mass-mailings. The House Sept. 25 voted 245-137 to completely cut unsolicited mailings or franking privileges used by members of Congress. Instead, the $45 million used for the mailings would go towards attacking the problem of infants born addicted to crack cocaine.

The House vote came on a motion to instruct House-conferees working on the 1990 Legislative Appropriations bill to accept a Senate-passed amendment to the bill. The Senate provision would have done away with all postage-free mass mailings by Congress and transferred that money to the fight against illegal drugs.

In a sudden political twist, just an hour after the House vote, conferees voted to repudiate the House and Senate plans to cut franking. Instead, they decided to curtail — rather than completely cut-out — the funding for mailings.

Later in the week, the House approved the House-Senate compromise on the 1990 Legislative Appropriations bill with the reduced funding for congressional mass mailings.

Supporters said that the importance of the drug problem easily outweighs the need for mass-mailings by Congress. Silvio O. Conte R-Mass., the author of the amendment asked, "Are you willing to give up a congressional perk and use the savings to combat drug addiction in newborn babies? ... If not, shame on you."

Opponents said although they see "crack babies" as tragic, abolishing the franking privilege is the wrong way of attacking the problem. "If the problem for drug addicted pregnant women is as important...as they say...it deserves to be funded in its own right. It not ought to be used as a cynical political ploy," said Morris K. Udall D-Ariz.

Voting to instruct the conferees to cut money for mass mailings: Smith (R), Combest (R), Stenholm (D), Sarpalius (D).

Voting against: Gonzalez (D).

House repeals controversial employee benefit law. After months of pressure from lobbyists and interest groups, the House Sept. 27 voted, 390-36, to repeal the so-called Section 89 of the 1986 tax-code overhaul. Section 89 was designed to weed out discriminiation in employee-benefit plans.

Since its passage in 1986, the law, which required employers to provide similar health and pension benefits to all employees, has been under heavy attack from business interests as being much too complex and imposing a heavy burden on employers required to administer it.

The amendment calling for repeal of Section 89 was attached to a $16.6 billion deficit-reduction bill still under debate in the House.

The repeal also has strong support in the Senate.

Voting for the repeal of Section 89: Smith (R), Combest (R), Stenholm (D), Sarpalius (D).

Voting against: Gonzalez (D).

KEY SENATE VOTE

Senate increases SDI funding. Late in the afternoon Sept. 28, the Senate narrowly voted to increase funding for the Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI). The surprise 53-47 vote came two days after the Senate rejected a similar increase.

The provision to increase the funds for SDI was an amendment to the fiscal 1990 Defense Appropriations bill, which also overwhelmingly passed the Senate later the same day. The amendment increased SDI funding by $600 million, raising the total from $3.7 to $4.3 billion.

On Sept. 26, the Senate had rejected a move to increase SDI monies from $3.7 to $4.0 billion.

Leaders in the Senate urged their colleagues to vote for the latest SDI increase because it was needed as a "bargaining chip" for negotiations with the House. Earlier this year, the House approved $2.8 billion in funding for the SDI program.

The House and Senate are now in conference, trying to resolve funding differences between their defense bills. One stumbling block is the SDI program. House negotiators have been trying to force a compromise between the House-passed $2.8 billion and the $3.7 billion in the initial Senate bill.

Supporters of the amendment contended that the $3.7 billion was already a compromise and that in order to arrive at a final figure of $3.7 billion, the Senate needed to raise their bargaining number to $4.3 billion. According to Sam Nunn, D-Ga., leaving SDI funding at $3.7 billion, "basically cut[s] out any negotiating position we have." Opponents of the measure argued that there was no need to increase SDI funding for a bargaining position. J. Bennett Johnston, D-La., observed that senators involved in the conference merely needed to stand firm on their figure. "If they think anything less than $3.7 billion is too low for SDI, hold out," he advised.

Voting to increase SDI funding by $600 million: Gramm (R).

Voting against: Bentsen (D).

NATION IN BRIEF

Court says Thornburgh can't challenge rulings

WASHINGTON (AP) — Attorney General Dick Thornburgh will have to take action to drop criminal charges against an Iran-Contra figure if he wants to protect secrets from being disclosed at the man's trial, according to an appeals court ruling.

A three-judge panel of the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Richmond, Va., on Friday rebuffed Thornburgh and said he could not otherwise intervene to challenge secrecy rulings in the case against Joseph F. Fernandez, a former CIA agent.

The appeals court held that only independent counsel Lawrence E. Walsh could appeal rulings allowing the disclosure of government secrets in the trial.

The court said Thornburgh's only recourse to protect the secrets would be to exercise a politically unpalatable option the attorney general had sought to avoid — filing a motion that could lead to the dismissal of charges.

Thornburgh had sought to intervene to prevent the disclosure of the location of CIA facilities in Central America that the trial judge held could be made public as part of Fernandez's defense.

The appellate panel said Thornburgh can still file an affidavit blocking the release of the documents in open court, a move that could force dismissal of the charges against Fernandez by U.S. District Judge Claude Hilton of Alexandria, Va.

Court orders girl's release

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — An appellate court has ordered the release of a 14-year-old girl who was being held for contempt of court after she refused to testify against her father in a sex abuse case.

A three-judge panel of the appellate division of Superior Court ordered the girl's release Friday after her lawyers argued that the trial judge should have conducted a hearing on whether she was able to testify when she refused.

The panel set aside the order of Superior Court Judge David G. Lucas, who sentenced the girl to serve 60 days at the Somerset County youth shelter, said George N. Rover, a lawyer for the girl.

Lucas imposed the sentence Thursday after the girl refused four times in court to testify against her father at his trial on charges of sexually abusing her.

"You have acted intentionally and you have acted with purpose to defeat the functions of this court," Lucas told the girl after she refused a fourth time to be sworn in as a witness.

Judge sentences attorney

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — A Tulsa attorney may be allowed to remain free until he appeals his sentence of a year and three months in prison for accepting an automatic rifle from a client, authorities say.

U.S. District Judge James Ellison sentenced attorney Alvin Floyd on Friday.

Floyd's trial on the weapons charge and on a charge of cocaine possession ended in a mistrial ruling in July. He pleaded guilty to the weapons charge but said he will appeal it.

Floyd is to report to federal prison Oct. 29, but Ellison said Floyd's attorney, Michael Fairchild, could file papers asking that Floyd remain free until his appeal can be heard.

"I am not a dope addict. I do not take cocaine," Floyd told Ellison at his sentencing.

Anti-abortion rallies held across nation

Associated Press

Anti-abortion activists staged rallies Saturday in several states, including Florida where lawmakers are about to re-examine abortion laws in a special session. Nearly 450 people were arrested nationwide, police said.

Protests were reported at women's clinics in Pittsburgh, Milwaukee, Philadelphia, near Detroit, in south Miami, near Boston, in Phoenix and throughout New Jersey, police said.

In Pittsburgh, 190 anti-abortion protesters were arrested in connection with three demonstrations, including one where 25 gallons of tar was spilled on the floor of a clinic's hallway, police said.

Six demonstrators forced their way past a worker into the Women's Health Services Inc. clinic downtown and stood side-by-side with their feet planted in tar-filled, five-gallon buckets, said Sue Roselle, executive director of the clinic.

The tar was spilled when police arrived and tried to take the protesters to police wagons. The clinic remained open.

Several hundred protesters also appeared at two clinics in the city's East Liberty neighborhood, harrying police by repeatedly moving from the Allegheny Women's Center to the Allegheny Reproductive Health Center, about a block away.

In Milwaukee, about 200 anti-abortion demonstrators, including members of Rescue: Operation Milwaukee, picketed a downtown women's clinic. Police arrested 134 people for blocking the entrance at the Affiliated Medical Service Inc., officials said.

Police in Philadelphia arrested 87 people who were protesting outside a downtown abortion clinic. Protesters would be charged with disorderly conduct, failing to disperse and obstructing a highway, police said.

In Lathrup Village, Mich., about 300 activists with Operation Rescue, an anti-abortion group, protested at a suburban Detroit clinic Saturday, resulting in 29 arrests for blocking doors.

"They were arrested for trespassing. They were restricting people that wanted to enter the building from going in. They were requested to move and refused," said Lathrup Village police Sgt. Dan Broschay.

About 1,000 anti-abortion protesters held demonstrations around New Jersey as part of the fourth annual Pastors' Protest Against Abortion, organizers said.

Nobody was arrested in any of the protests at 12 hospitals, said Dr. Alieta Eck, one of the organizers of the protest at the Robert Wood Johnson University Hospital in New Brunswick.

In south Miami, several dozen anti-abortion demonstrators marched Saturday in front of two hospitals, gearing up for Florida's special legislative session beginning Oct. 10.

Florida's Legislature is the nation's first to call its lawmakers together to re-examine its abortion laws following the U.S. Supreme Court's decision this summer granting states more freedom in restricting abortions.

"A hospital should be an institution of healing and not killing," said Rev. Henry Patino, who led an anti-abortion group marching in front of South Miami Hospital.

Elsewhere, in Brookline, Mass., police reported no more than 20 people were staging a demonstration at a Beacon Street abortion clinic.

In Phoenix, about 300 demonstrators — 175 anti-abortion and 125 pro-choice — protested outside a Planned Parenthood office Saturday morning. No incidents were reported and no one was arrested, police said.

In Glendale, Calif., about three dozen anti-abortion demonstrators picketed for two hours outside Glendale Memorial Hospital and left, said police Sgt. Karl Ward. The demonstration was orderly and there were no arrests.

Bakker says God gave him vision of retreat

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Jim Bakker testified that his dream of a Christian retreat was a vision from God, but the demands of fund raising turned it into a nightmare.

Bakker

"In the middle of the night I woke up," Bakker said Friday in his first day on the witness stand for his fraud trial. "It was a vision or a dream, I don't know. God gave me the concept of the Heritage Grand Partner Center and I began to sketch it."

The PTL founder said his biggest burden was raising funds to build the Heritage USA retreat and theme park near Fort Mill, S.C., but he denied overselling partnerships in the project.

Prosecutor Deborah Smith asked Bakker why he told television viewers in 1984 that 50 percent of the 25,000 partnerships at the Heritage Grand Hotel were taken when computer records showed fewer than 4,000 had been bought.

"You were creating a false sense of urgency, weren't you, Mr. Bakker?" Ms. Smith asked.

Bakker said PTL's computers typically ran six months behind, adding: "If you believe the computer records of Heritage USA, I could sell you land under water in Florida."

Bakker is accused of fleecing followers of $158 million by overselling "lifetime partnerships" at the ministry. The $1,000 partnerships entitled bearers to three nights lodging annually in PTL facilities.

Defense attorneys have claimed that the partnerships were not sales transactions and that the money paid for them were gifts to the ministry.

Earlier in the trial, the prosecution presented several PTL partners who said they sometimes were turned away when they tried to use their lodging benefits. Prosecutors contend Bakker pocketed $3.7 million of proceeds to fund his lavish lifestyle.

On Friday, U.S. District Court Judge Robert Potter said Bakker did not have proof to back up his calculations that there was room for 211,062 lifetime partners. The judge refused to allow a chart displaying the calculations to be presented to the jury.

Bakker faces 120 years in prison and fines of more than $5 million if found guilty on all 24 counts of fraud and conspiracy.

The evangelist often responded to prosecutors' questions by saying he could not recall, had not been informed or that he believed what he told television viewers.

When Bakker said he could not recall getting a $50,000 Christmas bonus in 1986, Smith said, "Had your lifestyle become so extravagant that you wouldn't have noticed a $50,000 bonus?"

"I did not look at my checkbook for several years," Bakker said.

Bakker also testified that fund raising at the ministry became a nightmare.

"I think fund raising was my most burdensome job," he said.

"It never left me. You never ever, ever get away from the pressure that you have to raise funds for next week, next month, next year," he said.

Bakker, who was briefly hospitalized during the trial after he was reported to be suffering from hallucinations, took the stand after his lawyers had presented more than 70 witnesses in his defense.

Neither his wife, Tammy Faye, nor his two children were in the courtroom.

In a low voice, Bakker described the roots of his PTL ministry, which he resigned in a sex and money scandal in 1987. He then described his vision to build the 2,400-acre Heritage USA.

Bakker testified that he "had confidence in God" to supply money for Heritage USA. When he left PTL, he said, the ministry's budget was $160 million a year, "which I think boils down to $3 million a week."

He also described his supervision of PTL's television network, the Inspirational Network. "When I left PTL, it was the largest Christian network in the world," he said.

"TV is the most powerful medium in the world today," he said at another point. "I felt the message of Jesus Christ should be propagated over that medium."

Episcopalians compromise on women's role

New York Times News Service

The danger of a split in the Episcopal Church over the ordination of women as priests and bishops has receded after a compromise statement was unanimously adopted by the church's House of Bishops on Thursday.

The statement, voted by the 182 bishops at the meeting in Philadelphia after six days of discussion, strongly reaffirmed the church's decision to ordain women.

The statement also welcomed Bishop Barbara C. Harris, whose consecration last February as the church's first female bishop led to threats of schism from traditionalists. The church decided to ordain women in 1976.

The bishops' statement acknowledged that opposition to ordaining women remained "a recognized theological position" within the church and did not disqualify traditionalists "as loyal members of the family." It called on church leaders to be "pastorally sensitive" to those unable to accept the ordination of women.

The church's information office reported that in the meeting's closing minutes, leaders representing the spectrum of opinion on the ordination issue embraced on the podium.

"It has been a joy to be here," declared Bishop Clarence C. Pope Jr. of Fort Worth, who heads the Episcopal Synod of America, a traditionalist group formed last June.

Many church leaders feared that the group, led by six bishops and organized as a shadow version of the Episcopal Church itself, was the potential nucleus for a breakaway body.

Amid applause, Pope was joined on the platform by Bishop David E. Johnson of Massachusetts, whose diocese elected Bishop Harris to assist him, and by the church's presiding bishop, Edmond L. Browning.

When Browning opened the meeting Sept. 23, he said the debate over women's being priests and bishops was an issue not only within the 2.4-million-member Episcopal Church but also within the 70-million-member Anglican Communion worldwide.

Of 27 national or regional churches that have roots in the Church of England and form the Anglican Communion, only the Episcopal Church has consecrated a woman as bishop.

But the Anglican churches in Canada and New Zealand have announced their intention to follow suit, and 5 of the 27 churches ordain women to the priesthood.

The bishops who met in Philadelphia based their statement on the report of an international commission appointed by the archbishop of Canterbury to study how, over a long period, Anglicans could maintain their unity while both respecting and debating their theological differences about women's ordination.

The commission's report, approved last May by the heads of the 27 Anglican branches, endorsed an American plan that allows parishes rejecting the validity of ordaining women to request a male bishop rather than a female bishop for confirmations or visitations.

But the report, as well as the American bishops, emphasized that the final authority on such requests should remain with the bishop of the local diocese.

In contrast, the six bishops leading the Episcopal Synod of America have said that they would, if necessary, minister to traditionalist parishes even without the local bishop's permission, a step that could precipitate a definitive break with a vast majority of their fellow bishops.

The House of Bishops' statement did not resolve this difference but appeared to reduce the chances that it would be put to the test.

First Christian Church finds crafty way to fund project

From Staff Reports

First Christian Church members got a little closer to financing a new fellowship center through a bake and crafts sale Saturday.

Customers at the 1301 W. Louisiana Ave. church could browse the tables of hand-crafted roses with dollar-bill petals, homemade luggage and an assortment of toys and crafts. Meanwhile, a bake sale was cooking in another room.

"It's a small show, but we have good things," said Brenda Morris, Christian education director. "It's unusual types of things."

Ms. Morris said the church is hoping to raise money to help build a $750,000 family center and do some remodeling around the church.

"We've grown a lot," she said. "We need to renovate because of the growth."

Ms. Morris said the church hopes to break ground for the new facility in January. The building will also be available for meetings for organizations outside the church, she said.

The Rev. Ray Bristol said the facility will be able to "provide a well-rounded program" for church goers.

"The facility will not only meet the children's needs but older folks as well," Bristol said.

He said the church plans to meet half of the $750,000 needed within two months and then borrow the rest.

Like cotton farmers, ranchers await rain

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

TARZAN — Out on the open range where cattle graze, coyotes howl, and working cowboys mend fences and look after their herds, West Texas ranchers always are hoping for timely rains and good market prices to keep things going.

They share a kinship with their neighbors — the cotton farmers.

"That (rain) is our main concern," said rancher Tee Knox who, at 61, is a third-generation West Texas rancher. "Without rainfall, we are in trouble."

Rain keeps the plains vibrant with grasses, which, for ranchers, is money in the bank.

Sometimes there are deficits, particularly when the drought sets in or market prices drop below the break-even mark.

Cattle thrive on good grass or fade off the range for lack of it.

"Our cows are just fancy combines," said Knox, who ranches 32 sections out of his headquarters north of Tarzan in rural Martin County.

Cows are to ranchers what money deposits are to bankers. Cows are the principal that produce the interest and more principal: new crops of calves that ultimately are turned into beef steaks, hamburger, money and livelihoods. And that can't happen without grass and water.

Production costs and cattle prices are ranchers' primary concerns other than rain and grass, Knox said.

"The prices of pickups have gone up, and the price of windmills, and pipe and wire have gone up," lamented Knox.

The problems are similar to those of farmers.

Ranchers are helping themselves. Each time they sell a head of cattle, they put a dollar into beef-promotional causes through the Beef Council to encourage consumers to buy more beef — lean beef.

"I think everybody is all for it," Knox said of the beef referendum to win ranchers' participation in the beef promotional program.

"Of course, beef sales and cattle prices are up, but we also have had a lower number of cattle, which usually increases the price of cattle," Knox said. "The true test of that will be when we get a high number of cattle out (into the market)."

Knox ranches the rangeland which his grandfather, George Wolcott, worked before him as early as 1896. Knox and neighboring rancher John Campbell are cousins. Knox specializes in the hardy Hereford cattle.

"Probably, the Durham (shorthorn) cattle were the first (in West Texas)," Knox said, "but they didn't have the ranging ability and survival that the (white-faced) Hereford cattle have. They didn't produce a calf as regularly as the Hereford cow. Hereford cows are surviving cattle, and they have a lot of mothering ability and reproduce very well. My granddaddy started breeding these Herefords in about 1900," Knox said.

The more a rancher ranches, the more complex and, at the same time, basic ranching becomes. Knox's concerns range from how to build up his best breeding stock to when to market cattle. Timing is crucial.

And there are problems such as getting enough protein to the range animals and controlling predators.

"Yes, sir, we have a big predator problem," Knox said.

It's a big-enough problem that it has the potential to "put me out of business," he said. Each year on his ranch, the trapper kills 75 or 80 coyotes.

Midlander steps up in NFRW ranks

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Every two years, National Federation of Republican Women convention delegates meet to elect new officers and get group members "pumped up" for the next election.

Lou Brown

Considering Lou Brown's campaign for third vice president was a shoo-in, it's a safe bet that this Midlander doesn't need any bolstering.

"It's a great honor," Mrs. Brown said, referring to the position she sought during an election of officers at this weekend's 25th biennial convention in Baltimore, Md.

Only the second Texan to have served on the NFRW executive committee in the past 35 years, Mrs. Brown now ranks third in line behind the national organization's president, who is Huda Jones of Kentucky.

Mrs. Brown said she doesn't perceive there being much of a difference between this position and her previous job as fourth vice president.

In addition to assisting the national president, she will continue to go to other states to build a stronger Republican organization.

"As vice presidents we serve at the discretion of the president, and we all have our own regional areas. We are assigned states for which we are liaison officers for the president," Mrs. Brown said.

Making the transition from a traditional women's club to a working arm of the Republican party has been a difficult task for the NFRW.

Mrs. Brown had made that a goal during her second term as fourth vice president.

Indeed. When the organization extended an invitation to President Bush to attend the biennial convention, the White House staff couldn't make any promises.

That prompted a phone call from Mrs. Brown to Midlander Bobby Holt, co-chairman of the 1989 Presidential Inaugural Committee, who turned things around in a matter of days.

"We started out being a club for women because that was the thing to do. Now we're moving into an era where we aren't going to be taken for granted. We're not just punch and cookie ladies," she said.

Still, the NFRW hasn't evolved to the extent that members are willing to address issues they deem "hotly" contested.

For instance, Mrs. Brown didn't anticipate that delegates would take up discussion on the abortion issue at this convention, but expected resolutions on day care, national defense and the economy.

"We don't think that the National Federation of Republican Women should come out with a strong stand on abortion, such as the one passed by the National Organization for Women.

"We feel that there's room in our organization for both sides, and we urge our members to go out and work for the side of the issue that they really feel strongly about," she said.

Mrs. Brown has been a resident of Midland for 30 years, is the wife of Midland County Commissioner Win Brown, a mother of four and grandmother of one. She has been politically active in the Republican Party more than 25 years with precinct work, club work and assistance in several campaigns.

She served as a county co-chairman of the Reagan for President campaign in 1976 and in 1983 completed a two-year term as president of the Texas Federation of Republican Women.

Mrs. Brown also was elected secretary of the National Federation of Republican Women in 1985 and was county co-chairman of the George Bush for President campaign in 1988.

County sees more 'repeat offenders' on DWI charges

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

A disturbing trend has emerged in Midland drunken driving cases, which officials say may offset the benefits of tougher laws and increased public awareness of the problem.

"We have seen a substantial rise in the number of subsequent DWI arrests, repeat offenders," said County Attorney Mark Dettman, whose office prosecutes misdemeanor cases.

"But the total number of cases has gone down, which is good news."

According to statistics from Dettman's office, five years ago an average of 100 to 120 drunk driving cases were filed monthly by area law enforcement agencies.

"Now we are typically seeing between 50 and 75 cases a month," the prosecutor said.

Dettman cited two reasons for the drop in total cases: public awareness fostered by such groups as Mothers Against Drunk Driving, and tough state DWI laws passed in the mid-1980s that can — and do — land repeat offenders in state prison.

"The number of first-time offenders are decreasing, which I think is indicative of the public awareness of the problem and the change in public attitudes," Dettman said. "But I attribute the subsequent offenders really to the disease of alcoholism. It is a manifestation of the individual's problem with alcohol, as opposed to a general disrespect for the law."

Suspected drunk drivers that receive probated sentences are given an alcohol "evaluation," to determine if a drinking problem exists. But the evaluation is not foolproof, according to Dettman.

"Sometimes the problem is not recognized or uncovered for whatever reason," he said. "Sometimes a person continues to drink or continues to drink and drive despite the treatment that is recommended and offered."

Treatment for alcholism is mandatory if recommended by the probation department. It can include such requirements as attendance to meetings of Alcoholics Anonymous meetings.

If the treatment is not free, it is paid for by the probationer.

"The number of first-timers will never disappear completely," Dettman said. "I think the laws are sufficient, I think public attitudes are sufficient. I couldn't tell you how to make one person recognize they may have a problem with alcohol and seek treatment. I don't think anybody knows the answer to that."

But Faye Higgins, who heads the Midland chapter of MADD, complained that the sentences often aren't as tough as advertised.

"The repeat offenders are becoming aware that some of the time their convictions are reduced to a first offense," Ms. Higgins said. "The fines are not stiff enough. They are not afraid of being locked up. If they get a long enough jail term, if a fine is stiff enough, if they have to make restitution to their victims, they would get help themselves."

I've seen it happen too often: Once gone, always gone

It's just one of those things that happens from time to time, I've been told.

Still, it hurts.

It also takes time to adapt.

Allow me to explain.

Ott

In the last month or so I've had at least a half of dozen good friends move away from Midland. Some made the move because of business opportunities, while others did it for personal reasons.

But the point is, they're gone.

Each time the "going away" scene was the same. We gathered for a party, exchanged toasts and promised to stay in touch.

On the surface it sounds so good. Everyone says things like, "I'll write once a month." Or, "Give me your new phone number, I'll call you regularly."

Of course, it never happens.

Once gone, always gone.

I've seen it happen too many times.

Granted, a big part of it is my fault. I happen to be a terrible letter-writer. Likewise, I don't make long distance phone calls as often as I should. I keep the fond memories in my mind, but for some reason I rarely make a sincere effort to stay in touch.

Thus, old friends have a tendency to just fade away.

Why?

I ask myself that question often. But the answer is always the same. I just don't make the effort.

There is no excuse, of course, for this laziness on my part. When you think about it, it takes very little initiative to pick up the phone and dial a few numbers. Still, I don't do it.

Again, I don't know why.

It certainly has nothing to do with my feelings for those people. They are truly special and some of my best times are associated with their presence. Sitting alone in my apartment I often laugh out loud as I recall our moments together.

Occasionally, a mutual friend will mention their name and the fun memories immediately rush across my brain. I can almost visualize the person sitting across the table from me, intently discussing the meaning of life just like old times.

But the fact remains: I don't stay in contact.

Amateur psychologists have offered a variety of views on the subject. Most concur that the real problem is that I am unwilling to accept reality. If I don't acknowledge the fact a particular person has left, then in my own warped way the leaving never actually took place.

Maybe so, but frankly, that kind of thinking is too deep for me. I figure it is much more simple than that.

Best I can tell, out-and-out laziness is the real culprit. I simply don't take the time to stay in contact.

And that's too bad.

Hearing a person's voice is so much better than remembering its sound.

I bring all of this up because an old friend called the other day. There was no particular reason. She just up and called. We laughed and talked about old times, recalling mutual acquaintances and funny instances from the past.

The conversation lasted for a good hour and a half. When we started to hang up I said, "I'll call you real soon."

I meant it, too.

But I probably won't.

And I don't why.

Should Texans get 'equal' education?

By DARRYL EWING

HIGHLAND PARK (AP) — High school students here look up facts for their term papers in an electronic encyclopedia. They use computers to search for library books, take their pick of computers in the math lab and produce the student paper with the help of laser printers.

Some 12 miles away at Wilmer-Hutchins High School, engineering students crowd around a few computers. They look up books in a card catalog, and student journalists pound out their stories on typewriters.

Such are the differences behind a lawsuit, now pending before the Texas Supreme Court, that challenges the constitutionality of Texas' school financing. The issue before the court: Does Texas owe its students an equal education, or simply an adequate one?

"If we are to be competitive, the state has to do something to make sure that districts have equal and adequate equipment to educate students," said Wilmer-Hutchins Principal Clyde Stokes. "That doesn't mean leaving one school with outdated, insufficient equipment while some others have the best of everything.

"Our problem is that we're limited in the amount and the kinds of things we can buy," Stokes said.

"We can't keep the best teachers because they go off to the property-rich districts because they have the funds to supplement what the state gives," he said. "Parents try to get their students — the high academic achievers — into other schools ... with those kinds of facilities."

Stokes said it's a state responsibility to see that school funding is equitable.

Almost half of Texas schools' funding comes from local property taxes. In 1986-87, for example, local taxes provided $5.8 billion for public education in Texas, compared to $5.7 billion from state coffers. The federal government contributed $864 million.

The people who live in suburban, blue-collar Wilmer and Hutchins pay twice as much, per dollar of property, as residents of Highland Park, another suburb just north of downtown Dallas that's home to some of the state's wealthiest people. Wilmer-Hutchins property owners are taxed $1.31 for every $100 in assessed value. Highland Park's tax is 59.7 cents per $100.

But Highland Park has almost ten times the property wealth, according to state tax records. For each of its students, there is about $1.1 million in property to tax. Wilmer-Hutchins has $124,450 worth of taxable property per student.

As a result, Highland Park was able to spend $4,570 per pupil in the 1987-88 school year, at about the top of the statewide scale, according to state officials. Wilmer-Hutchins spent $3,905 for each of its students, about $700 more than the state average. The Highland Park district has about 4,000 students; Wilmer-Hutchins about 3,700.

Working at a computer at Highland Park High School in a Dallas suburb is Patti Bell. Property-rich schools like this one are contrasted with less fortunate districts in a debate over the constitutionality of Texas's school financing measures.

Highland Park Superintendent Winston Power said he recognizes his district's advantages, and believes something should be done to make sure there is "reasonable and efficient" funding of less affluent districts.

He doesn't have a suggested funding plan, but said the issue needs to be talked over between districts and the state — something he believes isn't happening as long as the dispute is in court.

It has been there since 1984, when 68 of the state's poorer school districts filed a lawsuit contending the Texas school funding system is unconstitutional.

Highland Park is one of 48 districts intervening in the lawsuit in defense of the state. Wilmer-Hutchins is not directly involved in the case.

In 1987, state District Judge Harley Clark concluded that education is a fundamental right. He ruled that Texas' school financing violated the state constitution because it didn't ensure each district the same ability to obtain money for education.

That decision was reversed in 1988 by the 3rd Court of Appeals. A three-justice panel said that though the system didn't provide an ideal education, the struggle for an ideal should be fought through constitutional amendments or in the Legislature, not the courts.

The appeals court said education, although vital, doesn't "rise to the same level as the right to engage in freedom of speech or to exercise religion free of governmental interference."

The case now is before the Texas Supreme Court.

The state has argued that it meets its responsibility by giving additional state aid to districts with low property values, and that all districts are ensured enough money to meet education standards set in state law.

Should the state lose its case, education officials have estimated it could cost Texas up to $1 billion a year in additional funding for public schools.

David Thompson of the Texas Education Agency said it is the state's responsibility to offer students basic and adequate instruction.

"Of course it's good policy to ... make programs that are offered in the wealthier districts available in the poorer districts. No one's denying that," Thompson said. "But it is not a constitutional mandate to do so.

"We certainly cannot deny that there are distinctions. But our job is to make sure that students have access to a basic, adequate education program. If the taxpayers want to do more they can."

Superintendent James Vasquez of the Edgewood Independent School District takes another view. The San Antonio district led the suit against the state.

"The state has a responsibility to provide not only an adequate education, but to make sure that all students have equal access to quality education," Vasquez said.

"In this day and time ... I don't think an adequate education is enough. There's a widening gap in technology that's being used. We don't have computers (at school). (Students) don't have them at home. How prepared do you think they're going to be to function in a society that has become dependent on computer technology?"

The disparities between Highland Park and Wilmer-Hutchins are far from the most extreme to be found in Texas.

A report released in March by the state comptroller found 730 of Texas' 1,100 school districts spend an average $2,976 per student per year. The wealthier districts spend an average $4,268.

The statewide average yearly expenditure per student is $3,290.

Per-student taxable property ranges from $22,032 at Edcouch-Elsa, in Hidalgo County, to slightly more than $6.9 million in Allamore, in Hudspeth County, according to the TEA.

Stokes said Wilmer-Hutchins is holding its own. It has a new building, some microcomputers and a library that, even if it lacks a computerized book-searching system, still has 18,000 volumes.

"I'm determined to do well with what we have," he said.

Austin INS sweep nets 31 aliens

AUSTIN (AP) — U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service officers picked up 31 illegal aliens in a street sweep that was criticized by the local chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union.

The Friday raid in east Austin followed complaints from residents and business owners, said Robert Saenz, supervising Border Patrol agent in the San Antonio district that includes Austin.

A group of men, largely Hispanic, gathers each morning seeking work near East First Street and Interstate 35.

Virginia Raymond, director of the local ACLU chapter, called the raid "unwarranted harassment." She criticized the detainment of two men who were legally in the United States.

Saenz said his officers temporarily detained two Central American men who turned out to be legally awaiting asylum hearings. The men, who Saenz said were not carrying documents to support their claims, were released before the group was taken to San Antonio to be bused to Mexico.

Dallas boy, 8, youngest to fly across the country

NEW YORK (AP) — Eight-year-old Matthew McLendon, perched atop a plastic kiddie booster seat, became the youngest person to fly across America when he landed his family's single-engine Cessna 210 at LaGuardia Airport Friday afternoon.

With two small pillows at his back and metal extensions bringing the rudder pedals withing reach, the 4-foot-5 boy departed Long Beach, Calif., on Sept. 25. He stopped in 11 cities in his cross-country flight.

Matthew, of Dallas, set out from Washington, D.C., early Friday on the final leg of his tour. After a brief stop in Philadelphia, he headed for New York along with his instructor pilot, mother, father and two brothers aboard.

His father, Bart McLendon, and instructor, Rick Barber, flew the entire trip with Matthew. They picked up his mother and brothers Friday in Washington, D.C., for the final leg. The airplane seats six.

Matthew landed in New York at 3:15 p.m. EDT, said George Tarrazi, airport duty manager.

It was a bumpy landing. The small plane hit the ground two or three times before finally cruising down the runway without lifting off again.

The boy's father attributed the uneven landing to Matthew's short stature, which makes it difficult for the boy to see the ground through the windshield.

"He has to look out the side of the craft; it's the only way he can judge his distance from the ground, is out the side window," he said.

He added: "Matthew is not prone to making exceptional landings but we walked away from every one of them."

"I like being up with the birds," Matthew told a group of reporters who greeted him at the airport. "I want to be a pilot when I grow up."

The group was scheduled to fly to Boston Saturday for a celebration.

Matthew, who turns 9 on Oct. 9, is the first 8-year-old to complete the more than 2,500 nautical-mile trip, spokeswoman Nancy Terrell said in Dallas.

A third-grader, Matthew began taking flying lessons eight months ago.

He told the Dallas Times Herald before the flight that he wasn't really that excited about setting a record. What intrigued him, he said, was spending a week flying his family's new airplane.

He also said he enjoys "flying past the birds and talking to the (air traffic controllers)."

Texas, Alabama may gain NASA jobs

HUNTSVILLE, Ala. (AP) — NASA cannot get engineers to move to Virginia to work on the nation's space station, so officials are considering transferring jobs to the Marshall Space Flight Center and the Johnson Space Flight Center in Houston, the head of the north Alabama site said.

Marshall Director Jack Lee said the National Aeronautics and Space Administration was considering moving as many as 100 jobs to the Huntsville center from space station headquarters in Reston, Va.

"We can't seem to get enough people in the Level Two engineering positions to transfer from the centers up to Reston ... so we're considering moving those positions to the centers," Lee said Friday.

The Johnson Space Flight Center in Houston also could gain as many as 100 new engineers, he said.

Moving the engineers from Virginia would not hamper work on the $25 billion space station, he said.

"It wouldn't delay us, it would keep us on track, barring any budget cutbacks," Lee said. Lee said NASA would decide on whether to move the workers "within a couple of weeks."

NASA still hopes to launch the first parts of the proposed $25 billion space station "Freedom" into orbit in 1995, while stretching out completion of the complex from 1998 to 1999.

The space agency has asked for $2.1 billion for space station work during the 1990 fiscal year, but Congress is negotiating an appropriation between $1.6 and $1.8 billion.

Marshall, assigned about 40 percent of space station work, is responsible for a $1.6 billion contract to develop and build the 48-foot-long living and laboratory modules.

Boeing Aeorspace is building the modules as well as the nodes that will connect them in orbit.

About 300 of Marshall's 3,600 workers are involved in space station work. Boeing employs about 650 people on the project at its complex near Huntsville International Airport.

Ms. Higgins says she has complained to Dettman that some of the cases in his office are prosecuted, but not counted as a conviction.

"He has told me that some of the cases just aren't strong enough," she said. "But if we do not sentence them to the fullest extent of the law, we are enabling them to do whatever they want to do."

The decreasing trend in DWI cases — but rise in number of repeat offenders — has been reported from other Texas counties, according to Dettman.

A first time DWI conviction in Midland County likely carries with it a six-month probated sentence, a fine of $250 to $750 and a required course on driving while intoxicated, known as "DWI school."

A second-time offender likely will receive at least 15 days in jail, at least a $300 fine and a 180-day drivers license suspension.

Third-time offenders — because the third offense is a felony under state law — are handled through the District Attorney's office.

RANCH

Knox is not bothered by wandering people, such as vandals and rustlers. "I'm kind of known as a nasty old boy, so they don't mess with me too much."

Knox, who is steeped in tradition, is somewhat of an old-fashioned cowman whose beliefs in the basics are shared by his wife, Jo Knox, and their daughter, Kathy Knox Buchholz, who, with her husband, Gary Buchholz, runs a cattle operation at Bardwell near Dallas.

"We also enjoy showing cattle and working cattle on horseback, and it gets in your blood, " said Mrs. Buchholz, 30. Ranching is "just a way of life that provides a living for you. If you are a good cowboy, you work seven days week, 24 hours day. And you go to church on Sundays.

"You appreciate wide-open spaces," Mrs. Buchholz said. "You appreciate nature. You appreciate beautiful skies, and rain and green grass and being out in the open."

"Ranching is just a way of life," said Jo Knox. "This ranching is not easy. You don't work from 8 to 5. It's the freedom of being able to do what you want to do."

Tee Knox is a practical rancher who monitors the stamina and growth of his calves and who, as a traditional cowman, believes in hard work and the value of the horse.

"We can move a hundred head of cattle with one pickup and two horses very easily," said Knox. "(If) we get a cow that outlaws on us or gives us any trouble, she's immediately shipped.

"I'm chinchy on labor," Knox explained. "And wild cows are labor, and I don't like to put out labor on unproductive cattle."

On a good year when rain has been plentiful and grass is tall, Knox will run 20 to 25 head of cattle per section — 640 acres. On dry years, which are not foreign to West Texas, he will run 15 head to the section. His general guideline is one head per inch of annual rain.

Ranching is a West Texas tradition.

That's not just Knox's viewpoint. It's a fact acknowledged by non-ranchers, such as Martin County Judge Bob Deavenport of Stanton.

"Ranching has been the anchor of the West Texas economy," said Deavenport. "It has been the stabilizing influence. Oil companies and banks come and go, and ranching keeps on going. Not only have ranchers provided the economic base," he said, "but ranchers through their heritage and sense of moral values have contributed to the quality of the character of West Texas."

Greg Jones, who is the Martin County agent for the Texas Agricultural Extension Services, noted the importance of agriculture to West Texas.

"The cotton situation is kind of hit and miss," Jones said. "We are going to make some good crops, and then we are going to miss a few. And the oil business is kind of boom and bust. And in this ranching country, generally, we are going to get enough rain to sustain a ranching economy. And the ranchers are kind of the backbone of this whole country."

Chemical weapons cut holds promise

With President George Bush's call early this week for deep cuts by both the United States and the Soviet Union in chemical weapons and a Soviet response of willingness to match the U.S. in reducing that hideous weaponry, there appears to be another opportunity at hand for the two superpowers to lead the world away from a potentially devastating war in the future.

Bush's call Monday, at the opening of the 44th session of the U.N. General Assembly, was for an 80 percent cut in U.S. and Soviet chemical weapons stockpiles.

In a speech to the General Assembly on Tuesday, Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze said Moscow will join the United States and "radically reduce or completely destroy" all the chemical weapons it has stockpiled. At the same time, Shevardnadze issued a new set of challenges, saying the Soviets will stop production of chemical weapons, halt nuclear tests and stop making weapons-grade plutonium if the United States will do likewise.

Shevardnadze's response follows the Soviet tactic of "one-upmanship" practiced since Mikhail Gorbachev assumed the top post in Moscow. Yet in the matter of reducing the nations' nuclear arsenals, which President Ronald Reagan started in his final term, and President Bush's leadership in the move away from chemical warfare, one-upmanship only appears to serve the world's best interests.

The horrors of chemical warfare were graphically revealed in the mustard gas attacks of World War I and most recently those weapons were used in the Iran-Iraq war of the 1980s. The horror of atomic weaponry was seen in the United States' bombing of Hiroshima and Nagasaki in Japan at the end of World War II. Yet for all that awfulness, the world has continued its flirtation with chemical and atomic warfare by producing and stockpiling weapons.

Now the mood appears right for the world to begin easing away from that threshold. The contagion to abandon this kind of weaponry must be spread to the Third World, however, if the threat is to be reduced.

George Bush and Mikhail Gorbachev have started a process that, with lots of diplomacy and hard work, could give the world a better tomorrow.

JACK ANDERSON

A real 'education summit' is needed

WASHINGTON — An "education summit" implies great thinkers gathered in an inspiring setting to trade lofty ideas. While George Bush was planning such a gathering for Charlottesville, Va., Jesse Jackson was in the trenches with small people in an ordinary setting talking basics.

Jack Anderson

Jackson staged a walk-in with parents in a Washington, D.C., suburb on the first day of school. His simple object was to get parents into the school at least once.

The gesture was at once pathetic and a stroke of genius. Time was when the first day of school was a logjam of mothers and kids, milling around the classroom, finding the right desk and meeting the teachers. Kids, embarrassed by their doting mothers, begged to go it alone. But the right to attend school unescorted on the first day was something that was earned with advanced age, like a driver's license.

Today, mom and dad have already left for work before the school day begins and somebody called a "day care provider" points the kids toward the bus. A man with presidential aspirations seizes the circumstance and suddenly, taking the kids to school is a "photo opportunity."

Maybe President Bush should make Jesse Jackson an "education czar," because it was a darn good photo opportunity. For all the lofty notions coming out of educational summitry, walking the kids to school is the loftiest.

Here's photo opportunity No. 2: A picture of a teacher who is not on strike, a teacher who shows up on the first day and every day charged with energy, a teacher who deserves a higher salary but isn't in it for the money.

A box office smash of the summer was a movie about school boys whose lives are turned around by a teacher. The audiences loved "Dead Poets Society," and the younger the audience, the more they loved it. Admittedly, Robin Williams is an actor and comedian, not a teacher. But the kids who saw his performance were touched because they still believe it isn't too much to ask a teacher to be interesting.

Photo opportunity No. 3. A student holding aloft a diploma that guarantees he or she can read, write and make a living in an increasingly high-tech society. The Aerospace Education Foundation of the Air Force Association released a grim report this month about the "skill gap" — the chasm between the number of high-tech jobs and the people who can fill them.

Here are the facts, according to that report: American industry spends $30 billion a year on remedial education for its workers; 75 percent of the engineering graduate students who get financial support at U.S. universities are foreigners; at the current rate, by the year 2000, 70 percent of the U.S. population will be functionally illiterate; only 75 percent of high school students graduate, and only 55 percent of Hispanic students finish high school; the average Japanese high school student does better in math than the top 5 percent of American students.

"The education system has failed the nation," the report concludes. "It has not produced enough well-educated, technically qualified graduates who can enter the workforce and become productive members of society. This is true at every tier, from entry-level technician to research scientist. And the future doesn't look any better."

Photo opportunity No. 4: A school with classrooms still full and vibrating with ideas at 5 p.m. As long as children are still at the age when adults know what is best for them, let's override their screams of protest and lengthen the school day to coincide with the work day. It would eliminate an entire class of people — latch key children. Only the shopping malls would notice the change.

Photo opportunity No. 5: Any documentary on an excellent school that isn't in Japan. America's challenge is not to adopt the lock-step, dog-eat-dog mentality of Japanese schools where children are berated and bounced out if they can't keep up. Our tradition of personal freedoms, thankfully, would never let us bow to that kind of educational oppression.

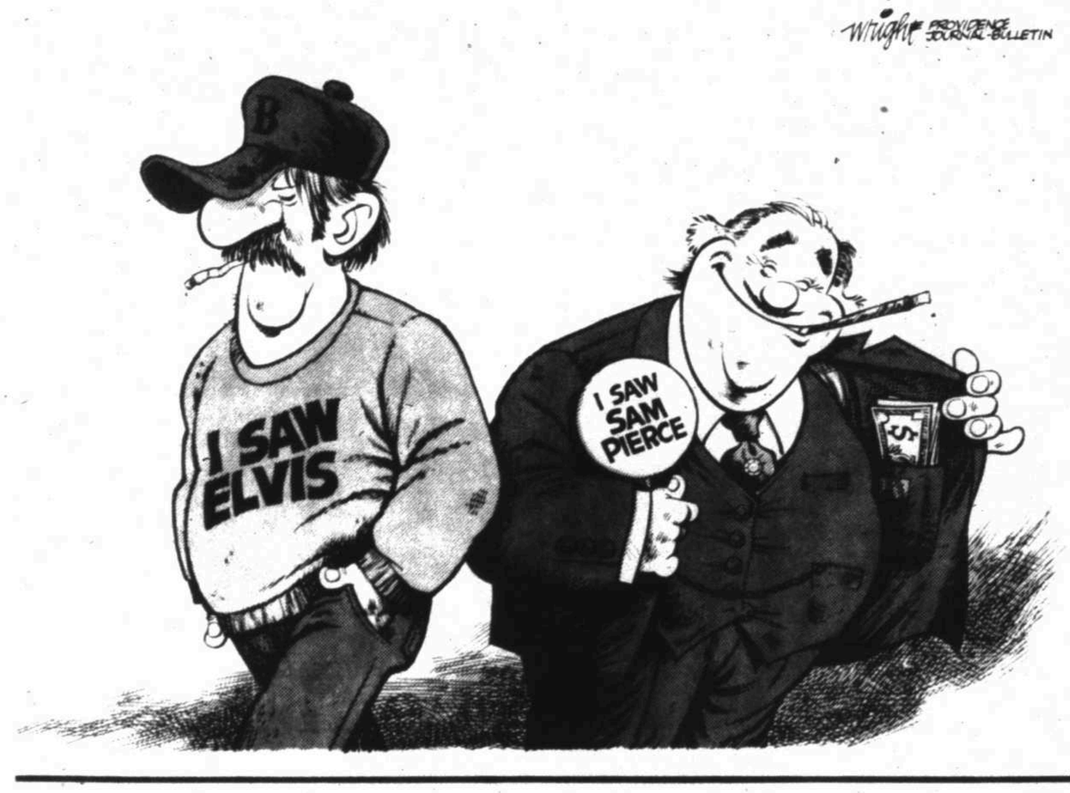

But our tradition of personal freedom has turned to personal anarchy in some schools, and there is a desperate need for discipline, respect and order. It is time to bounce the serious offenders who threaten the learning environment for all and to remind the rest who's in charge.

Photo opportunity No. 6: A school textbook that teaches values, or as former education czar, now drug czar, William Bennett calls it, "moral literacy." The 1960s and 1970s left us value-neutral in our haste not to step on anyone's toes. Educators bought the nonsense that our society can't agree on values so we had best not teach any.

Bennett has a simple list of character traits that should pass anyone's test — honesty, courage, kindness, compassion, loyalty to country, faithfulness to family and friends, persistence in the face of adversity, hard work and respect for the rights of others.

Hance's 'low profile' may indicate approach

AUSTIN — For those wondering what Kent Hance has been up to, the GOP gubernatorial frontrunner is keeping a relatively low profile while holding informal one-on-ones with the Capitol press.

Rick Brown

The candidate since his announcement in mid-August has run a fairly low-key campaign.

A policy announcement on drugs, de rigeur for Republican office-seekers, and a mild imbroglio over a fellow candidate's stand on taxes has really been it for Hance.

It's a far cry from the multi-million-dollar television blitz that another hopeful, Clayton Williams, is conducting, but then, the two are coming at the electorate in different ways.

Williams, who recently hit double-digit status in statewide polls, needs the exposure, while most everyone has come across Hance in one of his past runs as a Republican or Democrat.

Aside from fundraising, Hance is better spending his resources — meaning himself — working behind the scenes with the press, apparently trying to repair an image that has gotten somewhat tattered.

One reason he feels the need could be the barage of "voter beware" columns that hit state newspaper editorial pages after he announced for office.

"Add another glad-handing blowhard to the gubernatorial pack who promises to solve problems that cost money without raising any," wrote the Austin American-Statesman's Dave McNeely.

"Given Hance's track record, folks should think twice about having him hold their coat if they're in a fight," McNeely wrote. "He may be gone when they turn back around, and maybe the coat, too."

Jim Davis of the Corpus Christi Caller-Times, in a jibe at Hance's campaign theme, wrote that " 'New vision' is a catchy phrase, but the overall package sounds more like 'Old Pipe Dream.'"

Later, another round of head-shaking came when the Hance team pounced on Williams for the "heresy" of saying the state may need an income tax.

Included in that exchange was a slick pamphlet put out by the Hance people with a picture on it that manages to make Williams' boy-howdy smile look inane — kind of a laughing Mr. Ed effect. The Hance folks swear the photo is one that the Williams campaign itself is using.

(That's not all that seems to be coming out of the Williams campaign. A Hance staffer on Wednesday was brandishing a detailed list of dollar amounts Williams is spending in about 10 of the state's largest television markets.)

For Hance's exploitation of the tax issue, Kay Northcut writing in the Fort Worth Star-Telegram accused him of "the kind of sound-bite politics that trivialized (this past) presidential campaign and left the electorate feeling slightly nauseated."

If Hance is fearful of what might be called creeping Mattoxization, in which the candidate's gibes become so incessant and incredible that the electorate finally stops listening, he isn't showing it.

In fact, Hance took the high road on the latest episode of bad taste emanating from Jim Mattox, the state attorney general who is a Democratic gubernatorial hopeful.

As you remember, Mattox in a Dallas Morning News story relayed his intention to make alcoholism an issue in the race, an apparent slap at fellow candidate and Treasurer Anne Richards, who is a recoverd alcoholic.

Mattox, through a spokesman, has said that was never his intention.

Hance said Wednesday that Richards' victory over the disease "is to her credit," and while he demured at supplying details, he mentioned that alcoholism had touched his own family, too.

In a moment of reflection, Hance acknowledged playing the campaign game "for keeps," but he added a pledge to confine his rhetoric to the issues.

These are fine words in September — six months before the primary and more than a year before the general election — but I'm reserving judgement on Hance until things heat up.

GOP races seem to be getting more crowded — and more contentious. Given the right information at a particulary sticky point in the campaign, could Hance and his staff really refrain? I wonder.

Should grown-ups play so much 'let's pretend'?

NEW YORK — Long ago when radio mattered, "Let's Pretend" was a good entertainment show for children. Now it's the sport of grown-ups, and not the kind of grown-ups you expect to find clowning around either, but grown-ups who become testy when asked why they play "Let's Pretend" instead of tending to business.

Russell Baker

Testy, for instance, is what President Bush became when reporters asked him about playing "Let's Pretend" in his televised speech on drug policy.

Even if you missed the speech you probably saw the scene when he held up some crack cocaine, saying it had been "seized" in Lafayette Square across the street from the White House. "It could easily have been heroin or PCP," he added.

This was one of those sound-bite moments irresistible to television, like Michael Dukakis looking silly in a tank and Lloyd Bentsen telling Dan Quayle, "You're no Jack Kennedy," so naturally it became television's news summary of Bush's speech. As we now know, it was just another game of "Let's Pretend."

As The Washington Post discovered, Bush's picture of Lafayette Square as an open-air drug market — "It could easily have been heroin or PCP" — was false.

So false, in fact, that to set up the president's big TV moment, the federal drug agents had had to entice a suspected dealer from another part of town to come there to make the sale. "We had to manipulate him to get him down there," a drug agent told The Post. "It wasn't easy."

Told to come to the park at the White House, the dealer replied, "Where the (expletive) is the White House?"

Shall we pretend there is a thriving drug market pressing against the White House fence? The answer seems to be: yes, if it's good television. White House connivance in the deception probably won't leave millions dismayed.

Everybody is too cynical about government now, too hardened to presidents playing "Let's Pretend," too confused by a television industry that constantly muddles news and fairy tales.

Something rotten is in the air: a growing acceptance of the proposition that if it's good TV it doesn't really matter that it didn't happen quite like that, maybe didn't happen at all.

Recently, for example, we had a network news outfit showing film of a man pretending to be an American diplomat handing material to a man pretending to be a Soviet agent.

Well, somebody reliable had told a reporter such an incident actually happened. There being, regrettably, no authentic film record of it, why not shoot a little and say, "Let's Pretend"?

The other night a CBS News show presented James Earl Jones as the late Rev. Vernon Johns, whose early influence on the black civil rights movement is expertly told in Taylor Branch's "Parting the Waters."

Biography as television entertainment is a staple curse of the modern age, but why is CBS News playing "Let's Pretend" with the audience by putting them under the powerful theatrical authority of actors like James Earl Jones? Are we learning about Reverend Johns or seeing an acting performance?

Somewhere along the way we all agreed to conspire in "Let's Pretend" for grown-ups and big shots. Radio's "Let's Pretend" was a story-telling show, and enjoyment of stories of course requires suspension of disbelief.

Suspending disbelief seems crazy, however, when practiced by people directing huge, rich, heavily armed nations. People like the president and Congress of the United States, for instance. So consider the big bailout of savings and loan institutions.

By conservative estimates this program will cost well over $100 billion and the cost must be borne by the same citizenry that finances the rest of the budget. This staggering cost item does not, however, raise the size of the president's budget.

No, such a thing cannot be permitted. Counting the bailout price as a budget cost would put the government in violation of the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Act, another "Let's Pretend" creation that limits budget deficits.

To avoid a Gramm-Rudman violation ("Horrors!") the accountant has been told to put the bailout "off-budget." In English, "Don't count it."

In effect the whole Washington grown-up gang is saying, "Let's pretend nobody will have to pay for this bailout."

"Off budget" is as "Let's Pretend" as the president's big drug market in Lafayette Square and news turned into good television by actors. One feels half ashamed, like a common scold, objecting to these frauds since, to borrow the Nixon White House's old slander on a nice town, they seem to "play in Peoria."

WILLIAM SAFIRE

Country language taking over whole country

The whole country has gone country. Dolly Parton and Ralph Lauren have won.

Consider the support you reach for when climbing a flight of stairs. In standard English, or citispeak, that is called the banister, a corruption of baluster, from the Italian word meaning "the calyx of the pomegranate flower" because that is the way the supports for the railing were originally shaped.

William Safire

City folks usually think of the banister as the whole contraption: the railing, the balusters or balustrade and the posts at top and bottom. ("If you slide down the banister, dear, you may hurt yourself on the post.")

When you are talkin' country, however, the terminology changes: the handrail is supported by the spindles and end — top and bottom of the staircase — at the newels. According to Eben Conner, of Master's Woodshop in Hagerstown, Md., baluster is a word he seldom hears; "the turned piece from the handrail to the step is almost always called the spindle." ("If you slide down the handrail, li'l feller, playin' a tune on the spindles, you'll tangle your tail in the newel and scuff up my stenciled floor.")

Country antiques are the hottest collectibles. (That word is country for "junk," derided in citispeak as dust collectors. Speakers of country rarely include furniture in the collectible category, limiting that word to a description of small items like cowbells.) If the object is beat-up enough, or weathered, it is a primitive, a word borrowed from painting. If the chair or table is old, original and in good shape, it becomes folk art and is avidly sought.

"The main term that we use in describing country antiques," says Thomas G. Kreuz of Bobbie's Antiques in Kensington, Md., "is handcrafted. A handcrafted item is uniquely decorative, the product of the one person who crafted it — more primitive, down-to-earth, utilitarian, durable."

Artist is citispeak; artisan, less presumptuous, is country. City folks see a stream or a brook; country people see a creek or crick, a run or a kill. "In real-estate advertising," reports Nancy McBride, a real-estate agent in Harper's Ferry, W. Va., "the preferred term for a creek is stream."

Country people who are liberals, as some are, may be horrified to learn that country is derived from contra, the word recently applied to Nicaragua's rebels. Where's the connection? Contra, Latin for "against," was the basis of the Vulgar Latin contrata, used for "region lying opposite" or "land spread out before one."

The first use of country as an attributive noun (a noun acting like an adjective, as in killer rabbit) was in the latter part of the 14th century: "To make songes and ditee in the contre longage," or songs and ditties in the country language. Then came country house, in the late 1500s, followed in 1632 by country gentleman as opposed to city dweller. Country life appeared in 1669.

In the United States, country store and country cousin of pre-Revolutionary times were followed by country club and country road, launched in the mid-19th century (and the latter immortalized in a 1971 song by John Denver after a happy day in West Virginia). In the 1950s, along came country music and country singer, a Southern and Western cultural explosion that changed rustic from faintly pejorative to assertively proud.

City pay raises going to the wrong people

Who's "biting the bullet?"

As I read the article on the city management pay raise in a recent Sunday paper, I first thought it was the biggest joke I had read in a long time. Then I felt (as a taxpayer in Midland for the past 10 years) like we taxpayers have been made a joke of!

So the city management thinks they need another pay raise? Let's ask them a few questions:

1. Do they place their lives on the line every day?

2. Do they fight fires or go on drug raids not knowing if this might be the last day of their lives?

3. Do they save lives every day by being a paramedic, fireman or policeman?

The answers to all of these questions would have to be NO!

This pay raise seems to be going to the wrong people.

Why is it that the ones that sacrifice their lives every day are so underpaid? If anything, they all deserve the pay raise, not the city management. I am sure the city management can make it on their present salaries for the next few years.

If anything the police, fire and sheriff departments should be making $3,000 plus a month. Then perhaps they would not need part-time jobs, etc.

Is city management money-hungry? Let's put our money to work for us! Give the raise to those who really deserve — those who protect our lives! It's time we taxpayers stand up for what is right!

Merchants overreact to teens 'hangin' out'

I am writing concerning a situation I feel has gotten quite out of hand. Maybe we've all forgotten the time of our life when just "hangin' out" was top priority and something to look forward to every weekend. A time when we'd ride around, laugh, play our stereos (probably too loud) and do "teen-age stuff."

It has come to my attention of late that there have been numerous young people stopped, harassed and even put in jail over something as simple as driving across a parking lot.

I was born in Midland in 1954, grew up here, work here, go to church here, and am now raising my family here. I shop exclusively in Midland and plan to continue to do so. That is unless more merchants ban their parking lots as did the merchants at Imperial Shopping Center. These people will not see my round, smiling face in their shops and stores for this very reason.

Think about what you would do if your son, or better yet, your daughter was crossing this "sacred ground" of Imperial Shopping Center and out of the night appear several police units to "protect and serve" by ordering your daughter (or son) out of the vehicle, up against the car, hands behind your back then, click click — handcuffs. Then they get a ride downtown, booking, fingerprinting and charged with criminal trespassing, which goes on their record. Then you can cough up bond money; in one case it was $500 plus impound charges.

Why can't we stop drugs and other major crimes on the streets of Midland? Maybe it's because Midland's finest are out guarding the precious parking lots from these criminals. I don't feel the police are to blame. Instead, the blame falls on the merchants of Imperial Shopping Center. As for me, I won't patronize the shops in that shopping center or in any others where kids can be treated like criminals for the major crime we call "hangin' out." Maybe they'd be better off to stop and visit in the middle of the street; maybe that's not criminal trespassing. The very same kids who are being thrown in jail are then expected to go to the football field the next Friday and represent all of Midland as state competitors (both Midland and Lee High), by which time Midland is very proud of them and proud of where they are. It sounds like a double standard!

I'm not stupid enough to think there is not ever a reason for teenagers to be placed in jail, but when I was a kid you went to jail for committing a crime. I never considered driving across a parking lot, talking, or just "hangin' out" to be a crime.

Consider your children's view, and before you shop, be sure to read the signs in the parking lot. You might go to jail!

EDITOR'S NOTE: We are told Midland police have been carrying out a stricter criminal trespass policy at Imperial Shopping Center because of the degree of the problem experienced there. Scattered problems have been encountered at other shopping centers, but have not resulted in the stricter enforcement. Unfortunately, the situation is not as simplistic as you infer, according to our information from the police department.

MARC uses 88% of funds for services

In an article which appeared in the Sept. 4, 1989, issue of Newsweek entitled "Fed Up With Charity" the author, Joseph Bourque, decries the inefficiency of many soliciting organizations. Bourque indicates that some charities spend as much as 95% of the money given by contributors on administrative expenses.

The Midland Association for Retarded Citizens (MARC) is one of the Midland charities which has enjoyed excellent support from individuals, businesses, and locally-based foundations. We have an annual budget of nearly $2 million. By working cooperatively with Permian Basin Community Center for MH/MR, we have been able to provide comprehensive programs for people with retardation second to none in the state.

MARC pays no salaries to fundraisers, has no one hired to do public relations, and board members volunteer their time. We spend 12% of our annual budget on administrative expenses. That means 88% of the contributions to MARC go to pay direct costs of the services the contributions are intended to support.

SPEAKING OUT

UW allows citizens to show caring spirit

By MICHAEL G. COOK

Michael G. Cook of Midland is campaign chairman for this year's United Way of Midland campaign.

The 1989-90 United Way campaign has been organized and trained and began with the General Campaign Kickoff Luncheon last Wednesday at the Midland Civic Center. The seven-week campaign will conclude with the finale dinner Nov. 9.

This year's goal of $2,260,000 is even with the record amount achieved in last year's campaign. Max Holman and his team raised more money than has ever been raised in Midland and we hope this great accomplishment can be repeated.

Even though the energy business continues to be depressed, there is a spirit of caring and sharing in Midland that is stronger than ever in all segments of our community. The challenge this year for the United Way campaign is to go out and find those people who haven't participated in the campaign before and get them involved.

There are now 18 member agencies in the United Way family with the recent addition of Freewill Foster Home, which is a state-certified home providing shelter for abused, neglected and hard-to-adopt children referred by the Department of Human Services.

The budget requests of all the agencies are up 20 percent across the board at a total request of over $2,400,000. We need to raise more than our goal. Our community has greater needs than ever before.

Midland Introspective, a 1988 report of community needs, has confirmed alarming increases in our societal problems, including substance abuse, spouse and child abuse, marital problems and the breakdown of the family unit, the need for more and better child care, homelessness, hunger, lack of medical attention and the inability to pay for medical care — to mention the more critical ones.

Obviously, the local economic strain has had a very disastrous effect on our society. But United Way agencies can be effective in treating many of these needs through their services. They just need more help.

However, there are some real bright spots in the United Way in Midland. Project Blueprint has been implemented to increase minority participation in United Way and its agencies by recruiting, training and placing minorities on decision-making boards, committees and in other volunteer positions.

The Abell-Hanger Foundation has recently announced a one-time matching challenge grant for up to $100,000 offering to match new contributions or money donated by contributors in excess of their last year's contributions. Hopefully, the challenge will provide an incentive to reach new sources of funds.

The preliminary results of the recently concluded Pilot Campaign are very encouraging. Of the 17 participating companies nearly all the corporate and employee accounts have exceeded last year's performance. Hopefully, this momentum and spirit of giving will carry over to the General Campaign.

This does illustrate that even in the face of economic pessimism, there exists a strong desire to reach out and offer a helping hand to those less fortunate than ourselves. The generosity in Midland serves as a bright star in the flag of this great country.

The theme for this year's campaign is "YOU ARE MY HERO." The theme embodies that which makes the United Way a success — people who care about other people.

There are many who feel that real heroes no longer exist. All one needs to do is examine what constitutes the United Way to see that this simply isn't true. The United Way is an amazingly complex but effective organization of heroes lending a helping hand.

The Big Brother being there for his little brother is a hero. The drug abuse counselor providing help for a teen is a hero. The Family Services counselor putting a family back together is a hero. The Rape Crisis volunteer comforting a victim is a hero.

The Community and Senior Services volunteer feeding the elderly shut-in is a hero. The Salvation Army restoring dignity to a human being is a hero. The Scoutmaster developing a youth into a leader is a hero. The campaign volunteers donating their time, the Midlanders contributing their money — all these people who go largely unrecognized are truly heroes.

Our goal for the 1989-90 campaign is $2,260,000. We need more! The needs of Midland are increasing. I am asking you to again take a leadership role in giving a helping hand — as both contributor and supporter of United Way.

YOU ARE MY HERO!

Readers' views on: Prayer meetings on campuses

Ruling's implications need to be addressed

There is a motion before the Midland Independent School District board which would permit prayer meetings of a specific group of children on the campus of one of our local high schools. I understand further that those children and/or parties supporting their motion have rejected rational, uncontroversial alternatives such as the use of the facilities of nearby churches for their prayer meetings.

Between this and listening to a tape of the last board meeting, many parts of which could have been taken for a tent revival, I am driven to the conclusion that we are not dealing here with a simple matter relating to the exercise of religious freedom; that the debate has yet to fully explore the more practical problems.

First, what happens when and if other children demand equal access to facilities or the specific group covered by the motion splinters, pursuant to trends in Christian history, into several sects or groups with doctrinal differences? Will each group have to get board approval to conduct ceremonies or gatherings? Or will some administrative procedure need be implemented? What criteria will have to be developed to approve and assign facilities to each group? For example, will the community expect the board to rule on issues like whether gatherings of secular humanists will be permitted? What happens if some kid has an inspiration and decides to create the divine order of the casaba melon? Who will supervise such meetings if behavior becomes unruly? Do we really want paid board members and staff dealing with such matters?

Second, as a non-Christian parent, I must be concerned about what actions need to be taken to minimize any incremental peer pressures which could be exerted by the majority comprising various Christian sects or groups populating the parking lots when my child goes to school. I think experts will need to be retained by the board to study this question if it passes the motion.

Third, the motion would almost certainly be challenged in court on constitutional grounds. We must ask: Is it a good use of tax money to defend such an action when we live in a community that has a church on every other corner?

There are many questions which need to be addressed if this 18th century form of missionary zeal is allowed into our schools. And there's one parting point: I am surprised that parents would consider delegating even the smallest authority to public institutions and officials relative to the religious, moral and philosophical upbringing of their children. If there are children who need such prayer meetings, it follows that their parents should, at their own expense and effort, provide facilities and opportunities for them to pray, and leave the rest of us alone.

Private prayer needs no meeting

Last Sunday's editorial pointed out that there never has been a restriction against a student praying silently and in private, without disrupting other students, at some point in the school day. That also seems true and quite acceptable.

Next you say that it seems especially appropriate if the meetings are student-initiated. What meetings? Since when does silent and private prayer require a meeting? In Matthew 6:06 Jesus advises that one should go into a room by oneself to pray. We are among many in our society who regard prayer as an action that should be personal and private.

We do not see any need for prayer meetings at public schools. Given the number and variety of religious groups and services in Midland, there could hardly be any local resident who lacks the opportunity for religious activity.

These students want to promote their religion at school and claim that their meetings would be nondenominational — that anyone is welcome to attend. Whoa! The fact that a church welcomes anyone to its services does not make the church nondenominational if it tries to meet the needs of all denominations, which is very likely an impossibility.

Their narrow viewpoint is obvious. They cheered for a minister who implied that if school board members do not support the students the board members do not believe in God.

Some students have taken to praying in the hallways between classes, laying hands on those who oppose their actions, and ordering, "Satan, out!" We believe such religious fervor in our public schools is not only disruptive, but highly unconstitutional.

Obviously, these students' concept of religion is not everyone's cup of tea. As parents, we would not want other students putting religious pressures on our children at school because we think parents have a right to bring up their children in the religion of their choice, or even without religion, if they so choose. Coercive student religious groups would interfere with this process.

Since a Nebraska case based on the Equal Access Act of 1984 will be heard soon by the U.S. Supreme Court, it would seem most prudent at this time for the school board to refuse the prayer groups' request.

If these pupils truly want to be a good influence on their peers, they can best do so by setting the example of being honest, hard-working students who don't use drugs and are still joyous, confident, and friendly as well as religious. Leadership by example will win more like-minded friends than coercion.

Groups seek to erode constitutional rights

I am deeply concerned about the Fundamentalist Christian movement most recently represented in Midland by the 7:14 and Power Connection groups to "get prayer back into the schools." Regardless of their stated intent to exert "positive peer pressure" into the schools, their ultimate purpose is to eliminate separation of church and state and "Christianize" the nation. This highly-organized, well-funded group of adults and attorneys will utilize whatever means are necessary (i.e. the Equal Access Act) to avoid the constitutional issue and achieve their goal.

Previous efforts to "Christianize" nations resulted in atrocities being committed against humanity, which were perpetrated by people who, like the Fundamentalist Christians, had "God on their side," could not tolerate opposing religious views, and persecuted all "heretics." Our founding fathers were well aware of this phenomenon when they drafted the Constitution. Apparently, those who oppose the Fundamentalist Christians and fail to speak out and those who don't care one way or the other are unaware of the ramifications of eliminating separation of church and state, and the true motives of the people involved in this movement.

So, what is their motive for "Christianizing" the nation? What do these people really want? They really want, and desperately need, complete validation of their belief system — one that presumes God can/will "fix" our problems if we only pray to him, but neglects to examine a God who would allow such problems to exist in the first place. Such a belief system cannot abide any conflicting religious views which might shake the foundations of its "faith" and must, of necessity, destroy the opposition (i.e. "evil").

Why? It's quite simple, really. Their twisted logic goes like this: 1) I am right because I have "God on my side." 2) If you disagree, one of us must be wrong (they live in a very black and white world). 3) I can't be wrong because my salvation depends on my being right. 4) To insure my salvation I must prove you wrong by converting you, suppressing your views, or, if necessary, destroying you. Forget the cost to your liberty, your dignity, or your humanity — anything goes in the war to defend our position or, in their terms, the war against "evil."

I am appalled by the lack of opposition to and apathy toward these people. Those of us who silently sit idle and allow them their way will deserve exactly what we get — which very easily could include burning at the stake for heresy.

Separation of church, state allows freedom

I am a parent in Midland and my children attend the public schools during the week. I am confident that their teachers will not betray my trust in them by promoting any sectarian ideas in their classes before, during or after school.

I believe in religious freedom. I believe that I as a parent have the right to worship freely in the manner in which I choose. I believe that the Establishment Clause of our Constitution was written to protect my right to worship freely without the intervention of the state (including the Midland Independent School District) and I believe that our forefathers intentionally included the idea of separation of church and state to protect religious minorities. I do not want my children to be subjected to any form of religious creed before, after or during their school day. I will provide for their religious education without the intervention of the state.

Fellow citizens, freedom of religion does not mean that any group can impose its value system on the rest of society. It means that Presbyterians, Mormons, Jews, Disciples, Quakers, Methodists, Mennonites, Unitarians, Hindus, Buddhists, Baptists, Ba'hais and Bigots have the right to worship as they please. The children of all groups attend our public schools. My kids should have the freedom to be free of religious intolerance, coercion or conversion. I fear that some members of our community are truly not "loving one another" when they impose their values on the children of Midland.

I can only hope that my family and my children in particular are secure in the guarantees afforded in our beloved Constitution.

Bush's diplomacy cools fear of nuclear, chemical warfare

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor in Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

NEW YORK — Hopes that the world may be spared the horrors of nuclear or chemical warfare in the foreseeable future were given an encouraging boost this month by President Bush's cool, constructive, mostly secret diplomacy with Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev.

Hearst

By taking a bum rap for appearing to be unresponsive to opportunities for major advances with President Gorbachev in arms control and other sensitive areas, the president's cautious but conciliatory approach won a remarkable series of concessions from Gorbachev. He achieved what the White House described as good progress on an array of arms control issues and secured agreement for a summit meeting with the Soviet leader in Washington next spring or summer.

One of President Gorbachev's most important concessions was a dramatic reversal of the long-held Soviet insistence there could be no large-scale mutual reduction in intercontinental strategic nuclear weapons unless the United States abandoned plans for space development of the SDI (Strategic Defense Initiative) program to protect America against nuclear attack. As a result, President Bush said there was a "good likelihood" that a treaty reducing long-range nuclear missiles will be ready for signing when he meets with Gorbachev next year.

During last weekend's meetings in Wyoming between Secretary of State James Baker and Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze, the latter not only dropped linkage of SDI with conclusion of a strategic arms reduction treaty (START).

He even agreed to permit SDI tests in space providing they were held within the framework of the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile (ABM) Treaty. Shevardnadze proposed "a pragmatic discussion" with the United States on which tests and other actions could be permitted. The Soviets have never before agreed to any SDI space testing. Gorbachev's willingness to do so was hailed by U.S. arms control analysts as a milestone breakthrough.

However, the Soviets said there would have to be a written agreement that violation of the ABM treaty would trigger the right of the other side to abrogate the treaty, a condition which already exists in the treaty concluded in 1972 and to which the United States has adhered although it was never ratified by the Senate.

If the United States reaffirms in writing the validity of the abrogation clause, the Soviets promise to join in a mutual reduction of strategic nuclear arsenals by 30 to 50 percent.

Because of the virtual certainty of congressional cutbacks in funding for SDI, coupled with scientific estimates that it will take at least 10 years to develope a deployable strategic defense system in space, the prospects for a compromise on this issue are considered good in Washington.

Both Baker and Shevardnadze hailed the results of their wide-ranging negotiations in Wyoming as opening a new stage in closer cooperation between Washington and Moscow. The two ministers approved seven accords on topics ranging from chemical weapons to free transit for Alaskan and Soviet Eskimos living near the Arctic.

Baker also reported they "broke a 15-year deadlock" by agreeing on details for monitoring underground nuclear tests, thereby clearing the way for possible Senate ratification of the 1974 and 1976 U.S.-Soviet treaties on this subject.

Results of other important agreements reached by Baker and Shevardnadze included:

- Soviet support for President Bush's proposal to allow unarmed aircraft from NATO and Warsaw Pact countries to conduct surveillance flights over one another's territory. They will seek to get all other member governments of NATO and the Warsaw Pact to adhere to such an agreement. When President Eisenhower proposed a similar "Open Skies" plan to Khrushchev in Geneva, it was angrily rejected as a "spy" trick.
- Agreement on broad principles of verifying limits on nuclear weapons treaties.
- A promise by the Soviets to modify their demand for a ban or strict limitation on U.S.-launched cruise missiles in the European area. This issue has been a principal barrier to a conventional forces reduction pact.
- A Soviet pledge to dismantle the Krasnoyarsk radar in Siberia which the United States considers a violation of the ABM treaty.

On the virtual eve of these remarkable developments, President Bush was being accused in Congress and the media of not wanting a summit meeting; of preferring a continuation of the cold war, and not being sufficiently supportive of Gorbachev's reform programs.

Mounting Democratic congressional concern about the president's consistently high ratings in the polls led Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell to accuse the Bush administration of failing to encourage changes away from Communism in Eastern Europe. He must have missed the president's visit to Poland and his repeated support of the western-oriented freedom movement in Eastern Europe as well as his frequent endorsement of Gorbachev's dangerously daring reform movement.

President Bush also made a stirring address to the United Nations General Assembly this past week in which he called for complete elimination of chemical weapons in 10 years.

He promised that if the 20 nations that now possess or seek to acquire CW capability would sign such a treaty, the United States would destroy more than 80 percent of its chemical weapons stockpile in eight years.

This is the man who is accused of lacking vision and world leadership.

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

Jazz up your week with concert

By H.A. TUCK

For those who love the ever-changing patterns of jazz, this week is very special. The 13th annual Midland Jazz Classic is going on the latter part of the week ... and you can get a a taste of the unique American music form at Midland College.

Tuck

A number of the musicians annually come to the Allison Fine Arts Building auditorium for about an hour of performance and conversation. Along with their presentations, the musicians share something of the history of jazz, answer students' questions, and generally enjoy themselves. The 2:30 p.m. performance Friday is free and sponsored by the MC Student Activities Office.

The presentation won't replace attendance at the regular Jazz Party, but it's a very nice gesture toward the college and the community. We hope you'll come out early, since seating is a bit limited.

While in the Allison Building, pass through the McCormick Gallery and the annual Midland Arts Association Fall Show.

The MAA show opens tomorrow, but the reception and presentation of awards is scheduled for Thursday at 7:30 p.m.

Juror for this year's show was Betsy Dillard Stroud, M.A. and A.B.D. (that's academic talk for a person who has done all the work for a doctorate except for the dissertation). Ms. Dillard is a teaching fellow at the University of Virginia and also is an art instructor at Francis Marion College in Florence, S.C.

The MAA show remains on display through Nov. 3. Gallery hours are 1-5 p.m. Sunday, 8 a.m.-10 p.m. Monday through Thursday, 8 a.m.-5 pm. Friday, and 10 a.m.-5 p.m. Saturday. Admission is free.

Golf and tennis teams are on the road this week, but the 20-mile jaunt to Odessa is nothing compared with the treks taken in recent weeks.

The golf teams began play today in a three-day junior college invitational at Mission Country Club. For the first two days, the junior college players will be paired with local amateurs. They'll play the final day of the 54-hole event with junior college golfers only. It should be an interesting format and nothing which inter-collegiate golfers normally do.

Both men's and women's tennis teams will be at the National Western Regional Junior College Tournament at Odessa College Friday through Sunday. This is another big event, which should include some of the top teams in the country — most of which are in Texas. For example, the men's team won the 1989 national championship and Tyler was second. In the women's tournament, Tyler was the winner, with Odessa second and Midland third.

On a couple of people notes: Dr. Pamela Howell, immediate past president of the Faculty Council, has been accepted for the 1989-90 class of Leadership Midland. And former MC golfer Gordon Wessels, now a student-athlete at UT-San Antonio, has been named to the GTE Second Team Academic All-American. Wessels was chosen for the perfect 4.0 grade point average last year in accounting. He's a fine golfer and you can bet he knows how to add up the score!

College Classics' Session I started last week, with another session beginning Oct. 23. All the instructors are volunteers, some of them recruited from the college faculty/staff. We'd like to especially salute Dr. Stan Jacobs, Johnny Moore, Tom Vannaman, Don Mullins, Jerry Watson, Betty Murrah, and Dr. Will Morris who volunteered to teach in the first session of College Classics. These classes are four weeks long and are only for those who are at least 55 years of age. A single fee of $25 pays for as many classes as a person can schedule during both sessions.

Oh yes, registration is underway now for those who want to sign up for some of the College Classics that are planned for the second session. You can visit the Continuing Education Offices or call 685-4518.

Preliminary site work began last week for the Student Center expansion and renovation. After the area was staked out, bulldozers started pushing dirt around and breaking up sidewalks.

During the next 11 months we ask your indulgence from the small inconveniences which make occur because of the construction. There will be fewer parking places near the Student Center and delivery trucks are being required to park along the sidewalks to make deliveries into the Student Center.

Terry Clemmer joined the staff last week as Disadvantaged Guidance Counselor Coordinator for the Center for Reassessment. The center works with single parents, mature people re-entering the job market, those with handicaps, and those wishing to change occupations. Clemmer previously had been a counselor at Glenwood Hospital.

The services of the center are free. Those who want to know more about the services should call 685-4568.

Lee students honored for legislative roles

From Staff Reports

Five Lee students were presented with plaques for serving as members of the House of Representatives or Senate at the Texas Lorenzo de Zavala Youth Legislative Program.

Lee Principal Jack Fryar and former Lee Instructional Services Director Jane Carrens presented the awards, Tuesday, to Becky Duran, Abel Rodriquez, Patrick Carrasco, David Sotelo and Mike Castillo.

According to LDZ Program Manager Diana Hernandez, the program is designed to help hispanic students become "young leaders."

The program took place July 30-August 6 during which time participants ran for various offices.

Duran, Rodriquez, Carrasco and Sotelo were named House of Representative members while Castillo was named as a Senate member.

The program, which is sponsored by the National Hispanic Institute, is for sophomore and junior hispanic students who maintain an 88 average and are involved in extracurricular activities.

"The program allows for a bonding to take place. It helps the students learn more about themselves and it helps to build their self-esteem. But, at the same time they are learning about leadership," said Hernandez.

Students who are selected must pay a $325 tuition fee, but according to Hernandez, most of the money comes from sponsors.

About 13,000 Texas bridges face replacement

By JENNIFER DIXON

WASHINGTON (AP) — More than one-third of Texas' rural bridges are structurally deficient or functionally obsolete, and officials say many eventually will need to be replaced.

A U.S. Department of Agriculture study said Texas has 5,143 structurally deficient rural bridges and another 7,672 classified as functionally obsolete — more than any other state — out of a total of 32,846 rural bridges.

Rural bridges at least 20 feet long account for 73.5 percent of all bridges in Texas, said the USDA study, which was based on December 1988 statistics from the National Bridge Inventory.

Rural bridges tend to be older than urban bridges and a higher percentage have functional or structural inadequacies, USDA said. And rural bridges on the Federal-Aid Highway System are in generally better condition than those off the system.

In Texas, the study said, 56.8 percent of the state's rural bridges are on the federal system and 43.2 percent are off the federal-aid system.

According to Allen Steves, bridge administrative engineer for the Texas Department of Highways and Public Transportation, the state has 14,500 off-system bridges, 11,000 of them on county roads.

Out of the 11,000, 8,500 are structurally deficient or functionally obsolete and most eventually will have to be replaced, Steves said. The USDA, however, estimated even more off-system rural bridges in Texas are deficient or obsolete — putting its total at 9,266.

USDA said 8,696 of Texas' rural bridges, however, are eligible for federal funds for rehabilitation and another 7,604 are eligible for replacement money.

The USDA study also found that in counties where agriculture contributes more than 10 percent to the county's economy, rural bridges, on average, are older with a higher percentage having structural or functional inadequacies.

In Texas, there are slightly more than 9,000 rural bridges in agriculturally significant counties, USDA said.

Federal and state officials caution that a bridge is not necessarily unsafe although it has been classified as functionally obsolete or structurally deficient, yet in some cases loads have to be limited because of the bridge's problems.

"Bridges which pose a significant threat are closed to traffic," Steves said.

A bridge is considered deficient if it is restricted to light traffic, is closed or needs immediate repairs to remain open. An obsolete bridge has an inadequate deck, is improperly aligned with the road that leads to it, has inadequate load-carrying capacity or insufficient underclearance.

Nationwide, 46 percent of all rural bridges are deficient or obsolete, while 31 percent of urban bridges have such deficiencies, the report said.

In Texas, Steves said there isn't enough money to take care of all current needs, while the state is "accumulating needs with each passing year. It's difficult to make inroads with the limited funds available while we're accruing needs from year to year."

Under the current bridge repair program for 1987 through 1991, 498 Texas bridges need replacing at an estimated cost of just under $91 million, Steves said.

Nine taken from parents reunited after 22 years

By RICHARD BENKE
Associated Press Writer

A Las Cruces, N.M., woman and eight siblings have found each other after a 22-year separation that began when she and a sister were taken from their parents by Texas authorities and placed with foster parents.

Cathy Mullen, 26, of Las Cruces said a reunion with one of her sisters last month on television's syndicated "Phil Donahue Show" answered more than two decades of doubts in her mind. The show is scheduled to be telecast in New Mexico on Monday.

When she was 4 years old, Mrs. Mullen said, she and her sister, Susan, were separated from their five other brothers and sisters after their parents left the two in a house where the family was living in the Galveston, Texas, area. She said she also has a half-brother and half-sister who are children of her father.

Raised by foster parents in Houston, Mrs. Mullen said that after years of fruitless searching for her siblings, she finally resorted last July to calling information for Rotan, Texas, where she recalled her father, Ray Spivey, had met her mother.

"There was only one listmg for Spivey, Raymond Spivey. I called the number, and this real old man answered. He said, 'I'm your granddaddy,' and I almost fell out of my chair."

She said her grandparents didn't know how to find Cathy and Susan after the state took them from their mother.

"He said he wondered if he'd ever see us again. He's 83," she said.

Of the reunion, she said: "It's all thanks to him. If it weren't for him, I wouldn't have found all my family. I'd give anything to see my granddad."

But she said he's too old to travel, and she has four children, ranging in age from 10 months to 6 years.

Donahue's producers attempted to reunite seven of the siblings, but only Mrs. Mullen and her sister, Jackie Topham, 30, of Santa Cruz, Calif., agreed to be on television. They got together Sept. 12.

Since "Donahue," Mrs. Mullen also has seen her brothers, Richard Bross, 36, of Abilene, Texas, and Guy Campbell, 39, of Westbrook, Texas, and talked with sisters Susan Potts, 29, in Oklahoma and Mary Sue Cate, 38, in Elgin, Ore. She also has found her brother, Eddie Bross, 34, in Shepherd, Mich., and her half-brother Billy Ray Spivey, 36, in Fort Worth, Texas, and half-sister Dorinda Powell, 35, of Phoenix. The nine children have four different fathers.

Until 22 years ago, the children had always ended up in grandparents' custody until their parents returned for them. But when social workers found Cathy and Susan the last time, they gave them new parents.

They were afraid the grandparents would return them to the parents, Mrs. Topham said in a telephone interview Friday from Mrs. Mullen's Las Cruces home, where she is visiting for the first time.

Mrs. Topham said she, too, had long tried to find her siblings, "and I couldn't find out anything. I gave up and said, 'It's in your hands, God.' I was always hoping that one day they'd find us, 'cause we couldn't find them."

She said several of the children were often left unattended by their mother when they were small.

"My mom is an alcoholic, and she's a very, very sick person, mentally," Mrs. Topham said. "She left them in a house by themselves when she went drinking, and of course the state came in and took them."

She said her grandmother raised her along with her half-brother and half-sister but wasn't allowed to take Susan and Cathy.

And she said she has experienced her share of emotional problems as the daughter of troubled parents.

"I myself had problems. I'm on my fourth marriage now. I have three children that I lost through marriages," Mrs. Topham said.

Campbell is coming to visit Mrs. Mullen and Mrs. Topham through next week, and "we would very much like to have a reunion of everybody at one time," Mrs. Mullen said.

"It's hard to believe that 22 years later, without seeing each other, it's incredible that we could all be so much alike," she said. "We're all the same. It's eerie, because the things I like to eat, Guy likes to eat, and the things I don't like, Guy doesn't like."

'Credit doctor' scam uncovered

EDINBURG, Texas (AP) — With the arrest of a man nicknamed the "credit doctor," local and federal investigators say they uncovered one of the biggest credit card fraud schemes by one person in Texas history.

When the U.S. Secret Service arrested Juan Andres Guerra, 25, on Wednesday, they found in his Edinburg home about $200,000 in merchandise they say he bought illegally with 100 credit cards, the Edinburg Daily Review reported.

Another $100,000 in alleged illegal purchases was unaccounted for, the newspaper said.

Investigators also found a cabinet full of information about credit card companies and credit card holders in Guerra's home. They said he had computerized the scheme.

The confiscated items included fax machines, televisions, video cameras and recorders, phones, typewriters, stereos, computer printers and hundreds of video tapes.

The Secret Service charged Guerra with at least six counts of credit card fraud. Each count is punishable by 10 years in prison and fines. Guerra is being held without bond.

"It's the biggest credit card fraud case by a single person from south of Dallas that we've ever handled," said Secret Service agent Peter Rico.

Guerra's arrest followed a three-month investigation by Edinburg police, said Chief Alfredo Gonzalez, who said officers first noticed Guerra's activities in 1986.

The breakthrough came about a month ago when police got several calls from local residents who complained about overdrawn payments on their credit cards.

TODAY'S METALLIC FRAMES

Metal frames have undergone a gradual transformation over the past few years. It was not too many years ago that the emphasis was on metal eyeglass frames with shiny solid colors. Next came a step toward muted metallic colors. Now, the current fashion in metal frames features variegated color. One such treatment involves inlaying three separate iridescent colors to achieve a three-dimensional effect. Colors also may be swirled on thin metal frames to achieve the look of cloisonne (the design found on antique book endpapers). Today's metal frames also feature hand-enameled color with matte finishes, or combinations of matte and polished metal. Antique-style finishes are also available. All are intended to give a flourish to today's classic frame styles.

TEXAS STATE OPTICAL, 4511 N. Midkiff, understands the importance of cosmetic considerations in corrective eyewear. After a complete and thorough eye exam, your corrective prescription needs will be discussed and your options outlined. We are concerned that your optimum visual health needs be achieved and maintained. Follow this column as we discuss other visual concerns. Tel. 699-1300 or 697-7963. VISA, MasterCard, AMEX and Discover accepted.
P.S.
Today's metal frames are given to a higher degree handtooling or filigree.

Filmmaker likely won't show controversial documentary

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — A filmmaker said Friday he may never show his controversial documentary "Titicut Follies," which depicts brutality in a mental hospital, despite a judge's ruling allowing it to be shown.

After a 22-year ban on public viewing of "Titicut Follies," which shows atrocities at Bridgewater State Hospital in 1966, Suffolk Superior Judge Andrew Gill Meyer ruled Thursday the film could be shown if the inmates' faces were blurred.

But filmmaker Frederick Wiseman, 59, said Friday that will never happen.

"Technically, there's no way the faces could be blurred," he said in an interview at Zipporah Films. "But even if it were possible, I wouldn't do it. It wouldn't be a film. It would look terrible."

Wiseman said he plans to appeal the judge's decision and said he blames politics for the controversy originally surrounding the film, showing conditions at the state hospital that houses prisoners deemed criminally insane.

"I was disappointed," he said. "I thought after 22 years, why can't people be allowed to see a film about a prison that's been poorly run. It seems to me taxpayers should see the kind of institution their state is running."

Wiseman said that after the film was first made, state officials such as then-Lt. Gov. Elliot Richardson "chickened out" and didn't support the public's right to see it.

"All of sudden they became concerned about the inmates right to privacy, which was at odds with any concern over the conditions the inmates lived in at Bridgewater," said Wiseman. "The state used the issue of the individual's right to privacy to cover up the snakepit that Bridgewater was."

Richardson was not immediately available for comment.

The 85-minute, black and white film shows often horrifying conditions at the hospital, originally built in 1852.

Some scenes depict nude men in bare cells being mocked by sadistic guards. At least one inmate shown in the film was kept naked in a cell for 17 years. One man is shown being force fed as he lies on a table and a liquid is poured down a rubber hose shoved into his nose. The film has no narrator.

It was ordered withheld from the public six weeks after its New York debut on grounds it violated the privacy of the 62 inmates featured.

But in recent years, state officials have backed Wiseman's right to show the film.

Though the film cannot be shown in public forums, it has been shown to "hundreds of thousands" of people over the years, Wiseman said. College instructors can order a print of the film for $150, as long as they sign affidavits that the people who are viewing the film are within the range of those allowed to see it in the original court order.

In that decision, the only people allowed to see the film were doctors, lawyers, legislators, people interested in custodial care and students in related fields — but not the public.

Filmmaker Frederick Wiseman sits at a film editing machine in his Cambridge, Mass., office Friday. Wiseman made the controversial film "Titicut Follies," documenting conditions at a state hospital for the criminally insane, 22 years ago. A judge recently ruled the movied, banned from general circulation shortly after it was made, could be show if the faces of inmates are blurred.

PEOPLE

Woman to be tried for threatening Fox

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A woman charged with sending more than 5,000 threatening letters to actor Michael J. Fox was ordered to stand trial Oct. 12 on five felony counts of making terrorist threats.

Tina Marie Ledbetter, 27, of Camarillo, pleaded innocent Friday to the charges. If convicted, she faces up to four years in state prison.

Her letters to Fox, star of the television series "Family Ties" and the motion pictures "Back to the Future" and "Casualties of War," began arriving at Paramount Studios in February 1988, prosecutors said.

The actor received nearly all of the letters over the course of a year, with 800 arriving in July 1988, the month he married actress Tracy Pollan.

Usually signed, "Your No. 1 Fan," the tone of the letters became increasingly angry as Fox broke up with actress Nancy McKeon and became engaged to Miss Pollan.

"You are a total (expletive) for marrying Tracy," one letter said.

Fox called the letters "very frightening," at a preliminary hearing, and said he feared for the safety of himself, his wife and their baby.

Ms. Ledbetter is being held without bail in the psychiatric unit of the Sybil Brand Institute for Women.

• • •

LAS VEGAS (AP) — Hometown entertainer Wayne Newton went on with his show at the Las Vegas Hilton despite the resumption of picketing by musicians engaged in a contract dispute since summer.

Leaders of Musicians Local 369 said Newton would be "piercing the picket line" if he performed Friday night, but the show went on as scheduled. Three pickets were placed at one of the entrances to the resort.

Meanwhile, Bally's Hotel and Casino said Conway Twitty and George Jones would play at that resort Oct. 3-8.

Newton, who gave up $500,000 in performance fees while observing the line the first two weeks of his current three-week engagement, performed two shows Friday night and was scheduled to play through the weekend.

Musicians have been without a contract since June 1 in a dispute over taped music in production shows — shows with stable ensemble casts rather than visiting stars — and guaranteed work for musicians playing for headliners.

• • •

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — NBC "Today" show personality Willard Scott unleashed a new flood on the state when he announced on the air a toll-free telephone number for those wanting to help Hurricane Hugo victims.

Some 10,000 calls had come in within about an hour of the announcement Friday, said Peggy Evans, public information director for the agency charged with fielding calls to help coordinate assistance.

One of the calls was from Southern Bell to say the backed-up lines were threatening shutdown of the state government's telephone system.

"We have a little room upstairs with four operators, and when thousands of calls began to pour in, we weren't ready for it," Ms. Evans said.

Telecom USA finally stepped in and had calls switched over to its larger systems with some 30 operators assigned to the deluge. A spokesman said they had no way of keeping track of how many thousands of calls were handled.

• • •

CHARLESTON, W.Va. (AP) — Actor Leslie Nielsen is endorsing games for students to play saying they stimulate group thinking and help educational development.

Nielsen said the academic tournaments being introduced into state schools encourage students to work together to find multiple solutions to problems.

"I believe in them," Nielsen said after speaking to schoolchildren Friday at a Charleston junior high school.

Nielsen, the star of such comedy movies as "Airplane!" and "The Naked Gun," is doing double duty in Charleston, both endorsing the state educational games program and making a documentary film to help promote West Virginia.

About 550 West Virginia educators are expected to attend a weekend conference to study the games and play them. They then will teach the games at their schools.

• • •

HUNTINGTON, W.Va. (AP) — Dee Caperton, the estranged wife of Gov. Gaston Caperton, says she's thinking about re-entering politics and might run for Charleston mayor.

Mrs. Caperton, who has filed for divorce from the governor and is suing him in a separate federal action for $12 million she says she lost to him in securities fraud, said she'll make her political decision within a year.

A former Miss West Virginia and runner-up Miss America, Mrs. Caperton, 46, was elected to the House of Delegates from Kanawha County in 1986. She stepped down after one term to help her husband, a millionaire insurance executive, campaign for governor.

The would-be candidate made her comments Friday before speaking at the annual convention of the West Virginia Federation of Democratic Women.

• • •

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Former ambassador and publisher Walter H. Annenberg has donated $25 million to art museums in Philadelphia, New York and Washington.

"Whatever I do philanthropically, I regard as a citizenship responsibility," Annenberg said. "Support in behalf of others should be in keeping with your own good fortune, and if you don't understand that, you're really not much of a citizen."

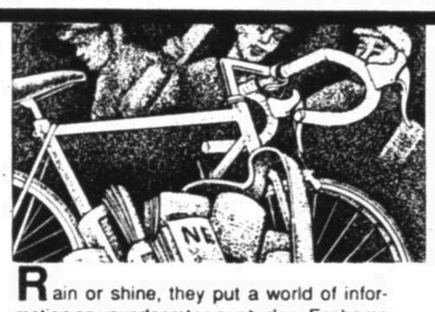

Annenberg donated $15 million to New York's Metropolitan Museum of Art and $5 million each to the Philadelphia Museum of Art and the National Gallery of Art in Washington.

Philadelphia museum director Anne d'Harnoncourt, whom Annenberg called Thursday to announce his plans, described the gift as "a fabulous bolt from the blue."

"This is something we not only weren't expecting, we weren't even asking for," said museum president Robert Montgomery Scott, who said he was "absolutely bowled over" by the donation.

The Annenberg gifts to all three museums are earmarked for acquisitions. The donation to the Philadelphia museum is in addition to a $5 million gift in June to the museum's five-year capital campaign by Annenberg, former ambassador to Great Britain.

J. Carter Brown, director of the National Gallery, said Annenberg's gift was "a tremendous shot in the arm, because acquisitions are increasingly elusive these days, given the prices in the art world."

School, community still recovering from deaths of students

ALTON (AP) — A blue ballpoint pen floats on the surface of a water-filled pit. Two canvas sneakers rest among remnants of notebook paper at the stagnant pool's edge.

More than a week after a school bus careened over the unguarded lip of the caliche pit, killing 21 students, the accident is still too horrible for some to believe.

Forty feet above, visitors stop throughout the day at the intersection of Bryan Road and Farm Road 676. Some just stare, others pray. Some light candles.

Ernestina Garcia brought 20 candles, each in a paper sack that glowed at the edge of the cliff.

"We usually do this at Christmas, and I thought it would be a nice thing to do for the kids," she said one evening last week.

Her friend Rose Mary Rios was back again the next morning, exactly a week after the Sept. 21 crash, happy to see the candles had burned all night.

STATE

Neither woman had children on the bus, but both knew victims in the small South Texas community of Alton that still is suffering.

"It's going to take some time," said Alton Mayor San Juanita Zamora. "It will take time."

Activities at Mission Junior High and Mission High School, where the victims and 59 survivors attended, were returning to normal by the end of the week. The school district canceled last weekend's activities in the wake of the disaster, but this week's football schedule went off as planned, beginning with the junior high's Thursday afternoon game.

But then Friday, the community was shaken again when 15-year-old Elizabeth Flores died at Mission Hospital. She had been in a coma and on life-support systems since the accident.

But Friday night's football games went on.

"It's a terrible thing it had to happen, but at least it happened during football season," said head football coach Sonny Detmer of Mission High School. "If it had happened any other time of the year it would have been depression until football season started again."

Keeping the students busy and moving ahead with life are the best remedies, the coach said, although he expects a gloom to hover over the school all year.

"You can't tell them to forget it, because there's no way they're ever going to forget it," Detmer said. "You just tell them to go on."

Area counselors mobilized and will continue to help the students, their teachers and families and others in the grieving community, officials said.

"We've had several teachers who I would say took it harder than the kids," said John Abbenante, junior high principal.

He started the week with an emotional talk over the school's public address system, while tearful teachers and counselors embraced shaken survivors and their friends.

More and more survivors came back to school, some by bus, as the week progressed, he said, but a few found it impossible to stay all day.

Juan V. Granados, 12, who escaped through a window in the bus, has started going to school in his father's car, and didn't know if he would become a bus rider again.

"Maybe," he said.

Some of the scores of rescuers also have had trouble coping with the sight of so many young people dying. A group counseling session with the Charter Palms Hospital of McAllen helped, said Shawn Snider, an emergency medical technician with the Alamo Fire Department who cannot remember any of the dead children's faces.

A dramatic Associated Press picture transmitted around the world showed a paramedic performing CPR on a student pulled from the murky waters that Thursday morning as Snider looked on from the back of a rescue boat. Snider said the boy died.

"When I looked over that cliff and saw all that yellow (the submerged bus), it was like somebody hit me with a two-by-four, and I started shaking," said Snider, who thought he was used to seeing trauma victims. "Everybody's dealing with it. Everybody's having a hard time."

Red Cross volunteer Anna Rubio said the organization would be around for a long time helping victims' families.

"Like this parent here who has not worked for a week and will need gas money," she said in a trailer the Red Cross is using at Alton Elementary.

Daniel Rodriguez, father of 16-year-old victim Ana Delia Rodriguez, said his main concern was obtaining a headstone for his daughter's grave.

Valley Coca-Cola Bottling Co., owner of the truck that went through a stop sign and knocked the bus into the pit, offered to pay funeral and medical costs for victims and survivors.

At least one lawsuit has been filed against the company, with others in the works, according to lawyers.

Four Dallas-area 'skinheads' arrested in crackdown

DALLAS (AP) — U.S. Justice Department officials say indictments of five reputed members of a Dallas-based neo-Nazi "skinhead" group called the Confederate Hammerskins are a warning that lawmen are giving highest priority to crushing crimes of hatred.

The indictments were announced Friday by James P. Turner, acting assistant attorney general in the Justice Department's civil rights division in Washington. Four of the five men are in custody, federal authorities said.

The crackdown was called the first major assault nationally against "skinhead" groups, whose members usually shave their heads and espouse the white supremacist philosophy of intolerance of Blacks, Jews, Hispanics and homosexuals.

The indictments bring to 16 the number of Confederate Hammerskins associates charged in a grand jury investigation that began in February following months of hate crimes in North Texas and surrounding areas. Seven have pleaded guilty to charges in connection with violence last summer and fall.

The Justice Department investigation was announced in May as a showcase effort to spotlight criminal activity and civil rights violations by the Dallas skinheads.

The indictments underscore the department's intention to give prosecution of hate crimes the highest priority, Turner said.

"These indictments involve interference with basic civil rights because of a person's race, religion, national origin or ethnic background," he said. "Racial hate crimes are crimes against the very idea of American freedom and democracy."

Lowe returns as voice of Big Tex at State Fair

DALLAS (AP) — Many of the 75,000 those attending the opening day at the State Fair of Texas undoubtedly had been before, but no one returned with the impact of Jim Lowe.

After a seven-year absence, Lowe once again is greeting fair visitors as the booming voice of towering Big Tex, the 52-foot-tall cowpoke who guards the state fair midway.

But while Lowe's voice makes a thundering impact, he keeps a low profile.

Lowe sits out of sight in cramped quarters and talks in slow motion for 12 hours a day — conditions that he says prompted him to quit the job in 1982. Two other men filled in as Big Tex's voice in his absence, but many fairgoers missed Lowe's deep-pitched drawl.

Spending the day in a tiny hut that he says resembles "two of those outdoor port-a-potties shoved together," he gives Big Tex broadcasts every 20 minutes. Each announcement tells visitors of new shows and events, and asks them to come back soon.

Asked why he chose to return for another fair spell, Lowe merely said: "I didn't have anything else to do."

Fair spokeswoman Nancy Wiley hailed the return of Lowe, a retired radio disc jockey.

"It really sounded good to hear Big Tex talk like Big Tex did when I first heard him," she said. "It was good to hear Jim Lowe. He is Big Tex."

Although Lowe is glad to be back, but he isn't ready yet to commit to 1990.

"I think it's just on a year-to-year basis," he said. "Who knows what next year will bring."

The fair will run through Oct. 22, and a number of special events are planned including the annual football tussle between Texas and Oklahoma on Oct. 14 and a gridiron matchup between Gambling and Prairie View on Sept. 30.

The best marching band in Texas will be crowned at the fair's Oct. 21 Parade of Champions.

Tyne Daly will star in Oct. 3-22 performances of "Gypsy" at the Music Hall.

There are daily laser shows, ice skating performances and pig races, along with the regular run of livestock, crafts and homemaking exhibitions and competitions.

The syndicated TV show "Wheel of Fortune" also plans a contestant search at this year's fair. Although Pat Sajak and Vanna White will not be on hand, officials from the TV show will be auditioning some prescreened hopefuls who want to take a spin for fame and fortune. The auditions are Oct. 11-13.

Suspended principal defends boxing match

DALLAS (AP) — A middle school principal who says he put boxing gloves on two brawling students to quell their journey to suspension has himself been kicked out of school.

Frank Romero said last week's boxing match following a rash of fights was a "healthy and therapeutic" release of aggression that kept the students from being suspended from Stockard Middle School in Dallas.

But his superiors in the Dallas Independent School District disagreed and suspended the 27-year educator for six days with pay, saying he had used poor judgment and violated discipline policies in allowing the fight.

"It wasn't poor judgment," said Romero. "There's nothing in the policy books that says you can't have the kids box. I'm not trying to hurt kids. I'm trying to save kids. It's easy to expel them. But it's difficult to keep them in school after that."

Romero, 56, who feared the recent rash of fights would escalate into a gang war, said both 14-year-olds displayed a changed attitude immediately after the boxing match.

"When those boys got through boxing, they were happy," said Romero, who will return to work Monday. "They shook hands. They hugged. Their dignity was not marred. To this day, none of the parents have filed complaints. It's the people downtown (school district administrators) who are after me."

Romero said two assistant principals and a teacher witnessed the after-school match between two eighth-grade boys.

Parks officials reassigned

AUSTIN (AP) — The state's veteran big game director — who questioned the stocking at taxpayer expense of wild game on land owned by Texas House Speaker Gib Lewis — and two other Parks & Wildlife administrators have been reassigned.

Charles Winkler, who was in his 16th year as big game director, will become director of facilities, overseeing wildlife management areas.

Ted Clark, director of the mule deer and antelope program, and Horace Gore, who spent 10 years managing the white-tailed deer program hailed as one of the nation's best, are also being moved.

None of the men had requested transfers, they said. The transfers are effective Nov. 1, and the men's salaries will remain unchanged.

No replacements have been named for the men.

A fourth employee, Bruce Thompson, the non-game and endangered-species program director, won't be reassigned but will have his duties overseeing the state's alligator program taken away in the move.

Earlier this year, Winkler confirmed that Lewis and some of the other influential Texans who had received wildlife from the department had not entered into formal game management contracts with the department, as is normally required.

Agency officials denied the transfers were in retaliation for Winkler's remarks about the controversy, and Winkler said he considered it merely "a change in assignments."

Winkler said he was considering asking for a change in assignment because of the pressures of the job.

Woman dies after stabbing

FORT WORTH (AP) — A 39-year-old woman died after she was stabbed, doused with gasoline and set on fire in the garage of her home, police said. The woman's husband was being held, pending the filing of charges.

Fire Lt. Mike Price said Janice Stovall, a registered nurse, suffered burns on 90 percent of her body in the attack Friday.

The woman's estranged husband, Martin Stovall, 38, was being held without bond in the Tarrant County Jail. Homicide Sgt. Paul Kratz said police expect to file charges against him.

Kratz said the man made a statement to police about the death. The couple had been separated three weeks. Kratz said Mrs. Stovall had been stabbed in the back with a drill bit.

Police officer cleared

HOUSTON (AP) — A Harris County grand jury again declined to indict a police officer in the fatal shooting of a drug suspect who was shot six times, including three times in the back.

For the second time this month, grand jurors no-billed narcotics officer Sam Ferrell in the February shooting.

Harris County District Attorney John B. Holmes Jr. said he asked the case be brought back before the grand jury after learning that a prosecutor failed to tell jurors how many times the suspect, Linda Garcia Quintero, had been shot.

Grand jury hands down capital murder indictment

WACO (AP) — A McLennan County grand jury returned a capital murder indictment against a Waco man for the August shooting deaths of three relatives.

The indictment Friday against Billie Wayne Coble alleges he killed his wife's parents, Robert and Zelda Vicha, and her brother, Waco Police Sgt. John Robert Vicha, all of Axtell.

District Attorney Paul Gartner said he indicted Coble on the basis of a multiple murder allegation. A case can become a capital offense, punishable by death, if more than one person is killed in a single incident, Gartner said.

Coble, 41, also is charged with kidnapping his estranged wife, Karen Vicha Coble, after the Vichas were killed Aug. 29. Coble and his wife were injured in a traffic accident in Bosque County later that night.

But Gartner said he decided against seeking an indictment on the kidnapping charge since the capital case will take precedence over any other charges.

Capitol closing hurts would-be visitors' plans

AUSTIN (AP) — A wedding party and a Boy Scout troop were among would-be Capitol visitors whose plans were thwarted Saturday, when the historic state building remained closed because of asbestos contamination after a fire.

Capitol Architect Allen McCree said he hoped most of the building would be re-opened by Monday, but the House chamber may remain closed until Wednesday.

As McCree pondered asbestos cleanup in the wake of Thursday's fire, Boy Scout Patrick Courtade was on the Capitol's front lawn with the rest of the High Adventure Troop from Garland.

"I've never seen the inside, but I'd like to," said Courtade, 14. "I've been around it, been peeking in the windows, but that's about as close as we got."

DeAnna and Paul Phillips of Austin had a wedding ceremony under an oak tree, rather than the nuptials they planned in the 101-year-old building's rotunda.

But the newlyweds pronounced the service on the Capitol grounds a satisfactory substitute, as they enjoyed a "tailgate reception" complete with mimosas poured from a large thermos.

On Friday, a businessman from Osaka, Japan, told the Austin American-Statesman that he had looked forward to visiting the Capitol during a one-day trip to the city.

However, Kenzo Hatada said through an interpreter, he planned to buy a Texas flag elsewhere.

The Capitol has been closed since the fire because of the threat of asbestos, a fire retardant that once was widely used but has been linked to serious respiratory problems.

The House chamber was the only place found to have an asbestos level that exceeded minimum standards in air tests conducted after the fire, McCree said. The reading was just slightly above those standards, he said.

The fire was confined to an air-handling unit in the basement, but smoke traveled through air vents and filled the House chamber. Contamination occurred after firefighters chopped into some asbestos insulation to make sure the fire had not spread, officials said.

Before starting an asbestos cleanup effort, McCree said he was waiting for a second set of air and dust samples.

Houston health department limits condom giveaway

HOUSTON (AP) — The city health department is limiting the number of condoms given away to people who receive AIDS counseling and treatment for venereal diseases because its condom supply is extremely low, a spokeswoman said.

"We used to give out 5,000 each month," department spokeswoman Ann Schachtel said. "Anyone who walked in and asked for them got a handful."

But supplies are running low and that policy will end, she said Friday.

Giving condoms away to anyone who asked for them and giving away large quantities violated the original intent of the program, she added.

"We meant them to be a sample" to encourage people to use condoms to prevent disease transmission.

The department now will give condom samples only for educational purposes, and that policy will continue in the indefinite future, she said.

Ms. Schachtel didn't know why the department ran out of condoms, but the Houston Chronicle reported Saturday that sources said the problem probably arose when the state health department ended its practice of providing the city with condoms on Sept. 1.

New supplies have been ordered, but Ms. Schachtel does not know how many or when they will arrive.

When the new supplies do arrive, the department plans to limit the numbers given away, she said. They will only be given to people seeking counseling or VD treatment and then only two or three at a time.

Joyce Yost, director of education for the AIDS Foundation of Houston Inc., said her group had expected to receive supplies of condoms from the city after the state stopped providing them Sept. 1.

"We thought we would be getting about 3,000," she said. "I knew we had not established a clear pattern of when we would be receiving them."

Ms. Yost said her group has always given condoms freely to people who asked for them.

"We wouldn't want to limit it," she said.

Jays clinch East

Associated Press

TORONTO (AP) — The Toronto Blue Jays won the American League East, overcoming their own history of disapointment and the Orioles by stinging Baltimore 4-3 Saturday with a three-run rally in the eighth inning.

The Blue Jays ended their September duel with the Orioles, winning for the second straight day with an eighth-inning comeback. This time, Mookie Wilson and Fred McGriff tied the score with with run-scoring singles before George Bell hit a sacrifice fly.

AL

Toronto won its second division championship in five seasons and will open the playoffs Tuesday night in Oakland. The Blue Jays went 5-7 against the Athletics this season.

Tech stopped cold

Goebel racks up 347 yards in Baylor win

Associated Press

Baylor wanted retribution for a 1988 humiliation by the Texas Tech Red Raiders. They got it on Saturday with junior quarterback Brad Goebel's career performance.

Goebel winged touchdown passes of 75 and 65 yards and totaled 347 yards passing as Baylor got revenge for a 36-6 whipping by Tech last year with a 29-15 victory.

"Five hundred and twenty-four yards was a surprise against that defense," Teaff said. "Brad did a great job. He was very poised and stayed in the pocket and made some very accurate throws. We came into the game wanting to test them deep."

Teaff had said the game was for the league "championship" and didn't back away from it.

"This game was for the championship," he reiterated. "If you lose a game in this league this early you are backed up to the wall all year."

"We thought coming into the game that we could throw on Tech," Goebel said. "Everything clicked for us in the passing game. My receivers were great. This makes up for what Tech did to us last year."

Tech coach Spike Dykes said the Red Raiders were "manhandled" by Baylor, which totaled 524 yards offense.

"Baylor played a physical football game and crammed it down our throat and then Goebel passed well," he said. "We had a our chances but couldn't take advantage of them."

Baylor intercepted three passes and recovered two fumbles. The Bears held the Raiders' ace running back James Gray to 78 yards on 15 carries in the Southwest Conference opener for both teams.

No. 14 Houston 65, Temple 7

Houston quarterback Andre Ware, directing college football's highest scoring offense, threw Saturday for a Southwest Conference record seven touchdowns — three to Emmanuel Hazard — as the 14th-ranked Cougars crushed winless Temple.

Houston (3-0) scored the first six times it had the ball, with Ware connecting on TD passes of 4 yards to Tracy Good, 2 yards to Paul Smith and 79 and 2 yards to Hazard.

Roman Anderson added field goals of 28 and 43 yards.

Ware, who completed 30 of 45 passes for 413 yards, also hit Good with a 5-yard touchdown pass midway through the second quarter, making the score 41-0.

His sixth scoring pass, a 21-yarder to Hazard on Houston's first possession of the second half, tied the Southwest Conference record set by Texas A&M's Gary Kubiak in 1981 against Rice. On the following possession, he broke the SWC mark with a 17-yarder to Smith.

Anderson chipped in with a 27-yard field goal and Kimble Anders had a 1-yard touchdown run in the fourth quarter to complete the rout.

What ails Houston? Defense

By MICHAEL A. LUTZ
AP Sports Writer

HOUSTON (AP) — The Houston Oilers picked a bad week to try to heal their ailing defense.

The Oilers' defensive line has been through disruptive injuries dating back to early training camp.

The secondary has suffered through a nauseating progression of big play losses.

The eroding effect after three games has left Houston's defense ranked 26th among the 28 NFL teams in total offense and 27th against the pass.

The Oilers must try to cure all these ills against Miami quarterback Dan Marino, who may not remember how it feels to be sacked.

For the record, Marino has successfully launched 618 passes over an NFL record 15 games since he was sacked by Indianapolis' Duane Bickett on Sept. 25, 1988.

Despite their rough start, the Oiler defenders say they have resisted the urge to panic.

"We can't get alarmed and let our confidence waiver," cornerback Patrick Allen said. "A guy caught a couple of nice little balls on me, I tackled him and now we start over."

San Diego's Jim McMahon completed a career high 389 yards against the Oilers two weeks ago and Buffalo's Jim Kelly threw five touchdown passes in a 47-41 overtime victory a week ago.

Marino passed for 427 yards in a 40-33 loss to the New York Jets on Sunday.

Rookie third round draft choice Bubba McDowell and second year player Tracy Eaton have been starting at safeties for the Oilers.

Free safety Jeff Donaldson has been sidelined since the season opener with an ankle injury but is expected to start on Sunday.

Oiler coach Jerry Glanville is the leading lecturer on remaining calm amid the storm. "The worst thing we could do now is turn this place upside down and make wholesale changes," Glanville said.

Andrew Coltart, right, watches the tee shot of Midland College teammate Felix Martinez in opening round action of the National Intercollegiate Invitational golf tournament at Mission Country Club Saturday.

Wells progressing as MC linkster

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

Despite an 81 in the first round of the Intercollegiate Invitational golf tournament Saturday at Mission Country Club, Midland College sophomore Brad Wells has come a long way from the guy who couldn't even get out of his high school regional tournament in Graham.

Wells credits his improvement to the opportunity that he has to play with some of the top junior golfers in the world — many of whom choose to continue their education at junior colleges in the United States.

"Playing with better players makes you a better player," Wells said. "You watch how they handle situations on the course."

Wells has been playing No. 2 for MC, but dropped to fifth Saturday, behind Andrew Coltart, Dean Robertson, Mike Johnson and Mark Kochan. MC fired a nine-over par 297 for fourth place. Wells said the fluctuation in team placing isn't unusual.

"It comes down to who shoots the best on a particular day," Wells said.

Scottish import Coltart, an MC sophomore, led all individuals with a four-under par 68. MC teammate and countryman Robertson was tied for third at 71.

The host teams from Odessa College dominated the first day of play. The OC Blue and White teams both shot 294 to tie for the lead with Central Alabama Community College. Central Alabama was runnerup in last year's NJCAA tournament.

Other teams entered in the tournament include Brevard (Fla.) C.C. and Abraham Baldwin Agricultural College (Ga.), third and seventh in last year's NJCAA's.

Freeman, 'Dogs roll by Broncs

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

ODESSA — Effie Freeman is a setter for the Midland High volleyball team — most of the time.

But to the Odessa High Bronchos, Freeman might as well be an Olympic hitter. Freeman helped Midland High maintain its District 4-5A lead with repeated deception in a 15-6, 15-11 romp here Saturday.

The Bulldogs remained one game ahead of Odessa Permian with their fifth straight district win. Permian took over sole possession of second place with a 15-4, 15-0 blowout over Midland Lee, coupled with San Angelo's 3-15, 15-13, 15-7 upset over Abilene High. Fourth-place Abilene Cooper did not see district action Saturday.

Freeman gave OHS fits by going into a setting position — hands up, forefingers and thumbs curved into sort of a triangle.

If only they knew what she was really up to. More often than not Saturday, the senior would place a soft shot out of the OHS defenders' reach.

She helped MHS put away the first set with an unofficial total of four kills, and continued to give the Bronchos fits in the second set, especially late.

The OHS triumvirate of Amy Moore, Sjanna Swinney and Jennifer Atherton staked the Bronchos to an 11-9 lead. But Freeman broke OHS service with a killer dink, and Cindy Robertson served a ball that Atherton couldn't handle to cut OHS' lead to 11-10. Midland High's Cindy Offield then tied it up with a scoring spike.

The teams traded serves for awhile, but Freeman set up Offield with the go-ahead and the former added another phantom set for good measure.

The Bulldogs pulled out the second set despite Freeman said several variables go into her decision to either set or dink.

"I might dink when we have a long rally, if I'm tired, or in trouble," she said. By trouble, she means not in a good position to make a proper set.

Trivia questions are just too difficult

Somewhere in the recent annals of sports writing history, trivia took a wrong turn.

Used to be, trivia questions were fun and challenging.

Patterson

Nowhere — including any dictionary you pick up — does it say that trivia questions have to be impossible to answer.

Webster's definition of trivia is "unimportant matters." Webster does not say anything about these unimportant matters having to be difficult, too.

Case No. 1: A trivia question which appeared in Midland Reporter-Telegram on Oct. 31, 1988: "In the 1959 Major League All-Star game No. 2, five homers were hit but my single won it. Five years later, six homers were hit in the All-Star game, but I again dinked a single to win it. Who am I?"

Answer: I don't care who you are.

Case No. 2 appeared Nov. 20, 1988: The University of Oregon is located at a) Corvallis; b) Portland; c) Eugene; d) Klamath Falls.

Answer: Only people who attend the University of Oregon should really care about this one.

Case No. 3 appeared June 18, 1989: Who was known as the Mechanical Man?

Answer: If you said Mr. Goodwrench or Robocop, you're wrong. It was Charlie Gehringer, and don't you feel better now that you know?

Case No. 4 appeared September 14, 1989: Name the first San Pedro de Macoris resident to play in the major leagues.

Answer: The question should read, what is San Pedro de Macoris and if such an animal or country exists, where is it? Establish that SPdM is a country and then we can move on to who the first player was from there, which happens to be Rico Carty, everyone's favorite ex-Texas Ranger.

Anyway, you get the idea. We all know now that trivia questions have become needlessly difficult and make people who once thought they were sports-knowledgeable feel like absolute idiots. Like me.

Trivia questions need to be more user-friendly.

We need open-ended trivia questions ... questions that are open for debate but at the same time ones that have no wrong answers, such as: Don't the Texas Longhorns really stink this year?

We need more trivia questions with answers that are:

■ Easy For Beginners: Is Mike Tyson more proficient at a) beating up on people in the ring, b) beating up on people in his living room or, c) driving into oak trees?

■ Not Open For Debate: Who is the only winning head coach the Dallas Cowboys have ever had?

■ Not Really Answerable: Why has Ralph Sampson turned out to be such a wimp?

■ Deserving Of An Answer: Do Brent Musberger and Jim Bakker use the same hairdresser and/or manicurist?

■ Interesting: Why is that one section of artificial turf at Texas Stadium greener than all the other sections?

■ Tough And To The Point: Should Lou Holtz feel really proud that his Notre Dame team defeated that college football powerhouse, Purdue, 40-7, and will soon look forward to a home date against SMU?

■ Deserve Straight Answers: Why does the Associated Press rank Miami No. 2 when it plays teams like Cincinnati Univ., East Carolina and Wisconsin? And further, why is Nebraska ranked No. 3 when it plays Northern Illinois, Minnesota and Oregon State?

And finally, we need more questions that will get people to gossiping amongst themselves, like:

Will Jerry Jones next invite Roseanne Barr to be his guest at Texas Stadium and if so, will she, too handle the opening coin flip, or will she just handle the captains for the visiting football team?

Lady Panthers shut down Lee spikers, 15-4, 15-0

By BILL PRICE
Sports Writer

Odessa Permian showed why it remains in second place in the District 4-5A volleyball race Saturday with a 15-4, 15-0 thumping of Midland Lee at the Lee gymnasium.

The win gives the Lady Panthers a 10-4 overall record and a 4-1 district slate, one match off the pace of 5-0 Midland High. Lee continues to dwell in last place in 4-5A with marks of 5-12 and 0-5.

Permian relied on the power hitting of Stephanie James, a 6-1 senior who recorded 12 kills, while the Lady Rebels were never able to get into an offensive groove.

"I don't know what happened. We had a good week of practice but just didn't play. She (James) is a good hitter but our kids know how to read her. I would guess we played only about five to 10 percent serve receive and you can't do anything without good passes," said Elise Wheat, Lee head coach.

The first game of the match started off as a close affair, with the Lady Rebs drawing first blood at 1-0. But that was the the only moment in the contest when Lee held the edge, even though it tied the score at 2-2 and 4-4.

Then the Lady Panthers opened up a can of Mojo on the Lady Rebel offense and methodically reeled off 11 straight points for the first-game win.

In game two, Lee had service, and a chance to score, once as Permian's front line effectively shut blocked and spiked its way to victory.

"Stephanie had a good match but Lee had a problem with their passes," said Linda Mazurek. "They just passed the ball too high on our side and gave her (James) the chance to make some points."

"Permian has got a good team, though, and she (Mazurek) has done a fantastic job with them," Wheat said of the Lady Panthers, who were 0-12 in 4-5A a year ago.

"We are just trying to stay in there and keep winning, hoping somebody upsets Midland High," Mazurek said. "If that happens maybe we will have a chance to win the district championship. But right now we're just hoping to make the playoffs. We didn't win a district game last year, so being in second right now is quite an accomplishment."

In other 4-5A action, San Angelo downed Abilene High 15-13, 15-17 while Abilene Cooper was idle.

Midland Lee next plays when it travels to Abilene to face Cooper at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday. Permian's next match will be against San Angelo Tuesday.

She takes the opposition into account, too.

"Sometimes we know when somebody on the other team isn't a good back row player and we'll dink it to them."

The Bulldogs started the non-district portion of their schedule 0-4, while trying an offense with two setters. MHS is 10-1 since Coach Sonja Pittman switched to a 5-1 offensive formation with Freeman as the one — the only setter.

Both coach and player like the 5-1 better. Pittman likes it especially with Freeman at the controls.

"Effie's very smart and very athletic," Pittman said. "She's our quarterback, and she's really good at changing the offense to meet our needs."

Freeman likes the 5-1, even though it places more physical demands on the setter.

"I'm surprised how well I took to it," she said. "I'm really more comfortable in this offense."

Pittman's comfortable with how her team's playing, though she warns that MHS fans should not make any bi-district plans yet.

"It's thrilling to be 5-0, but certainly we have the toughest part of our schedule yet to come."

The Bulldogs wrap up the first half of district play with a home match against Abilene High Tuesday night. Midland Lee travels to Abilene Cooper, while Odessa Permian faces San Angelo.

In the second six district games, the Bulldogs must travel to Abilene High and San Angelo. MHS does host Permian, however.

Lee netters fall to Abilene

Midland Lee dropped a District 4-5A dual tennis match to Abilene High Saturday at the Lee courts.

Antwine Smith and Jason Gooch paced the Rebels in the early going. Smith downed Colin Witt 6-4, 6-1 while Gooch was having a more difficult time with Slade Sullivan, eventually winning 7-6, 1-6, 6-2.

Ben Bacon and Raymond Streeter picked up the pair of Lee wins. Bacon downed Brian Huff 6-1, 7-6 and Streeter defeated Tom White 6-3, 6-1. The final four boys matches played were extra competitions and do not count as district play.

An all too familiar sight in Dallas ... Troy Aikman receives another pounding from opposing defenses, in this case, last week against Washington.

Giants fear overconfidence in Dallas

By FRANK LITSKY
New York Times News Service

DALLAS — The biggest danger the Giants will face Sunday against the Dallas Cowboys is not Troy Aikman or Herschel Walker or Jimmy Johnson or Elizabeth Taylor's coin flip.

The main thing the Giants must contend with is overconfidence.

The Giants are favorites and there is potential for a one-sided game. After all, the Giants are 3-0 and the Cowboys 0-3.

In a sport in which time of possession is so important, the Cowboys have had the ball only a third of the time, an incredibly small amount.

They have played 12 quarters and have scored in only 2. They have yet to score in the second half.

Aikman and Steve Walsh, their rookie quarterbacks, have thrown eight interceptions and their defense has made none. No running back in the National Football League is more dangerous than Walker, yet he has averaged only 3 yards a carry and 14 carries a game.

"I hope we're not the team they wake up on," said Carl Banks, the Giants' outside linebacker. "Things don't stay bad."

Whether they stay bad for one more week will be determined in Texas Stadium. The game will be carried in Midland on CBS, Channel 7 and KCRS (550 AM) radio starting at 3 p.m. (CDT).

In the past, the Giants and the Cowboys have waged a bitter division rivalry.

This time, the Cowboys are different. They have a new owner, Jerry Jones, a new head coach, Johnson, a new starting quarterback Aikman, and many other new players, some on the roster because of injuries.

As an all-conquering college coach at Miami, Johnson had good players on offense at all the skill positions.

In the NFL, he is finding that most teams also have good players on defense and, so far, more good players than he has.

Johnson would like to control the ball with passing, as he did at Miami. But Aikman, as good as he may become, is still an unsophisticated rookie.

He has impressed the Giants' coach, Bill Parcells, who likens him to a young Archie Manning.

Because the Cowboys have fallen behind early, Walker has usually become a spare wheel. Johnson said he would like to involve Walker as a runner and receiver in 30 plays a game. If he does, Walker could be the threat of old. He is dangerous once he catches the ball.

"If the game is close," Parcells said, "I think you'll see more of him in the running game."

The Giants' offense will face a more attack-oriented 4-3 defense than the old Cowboys used.

Though the Giants have gained much more yardage than the Cowboys, the Cowboys rank higher than the Giants in total defense.

The Giants got an injury scare in the area where they could least afford an injury: the defensive line.

Erik Howard, the nose tackle, said that in Wednesday's practice he suffered a partial tear of a ligament in his right knee. However, on Thursday, he taped the knee, put on his knee brace and took part in practice. He said he could play Sunday, and Parcells agreed.

At first, Howard accused Frank Winters, a reserve center and guard, of a cheap-shot block on the knee.

After viewing a tape of the practice, Howard said Winters and Eric Moore had blocked him on the play and he said he thought his knee had collided with Moore's hip.

Howard also said he was not wearing a knee brace when he was hurt. Because he did not wear a brace, he would have been fined had an injury kept him out of a subsequent practice.

Bonham, Alamo junior highs victorious

From Staff Reports

Saturday was a busy day throughout the city for junior high football action.

In eighth grade play, Bonham coasted to a 40-2 win over San Jacinto, Goddard downed Odessa Crockett 36-0 and Odessa Hood rapped Alamo 26-13 in the Midland-Odessa League. The City League eighth grade game featured a 16-14 win by Alamo over San Jacinto and a 26-14 win by Trinity over Goddard.

In National Conference seventh grade games, Goddard Red downed San Jacinto White 21-0 and San Jacinto Green defeated Alamo Scarlet 28-6. On the American Conference side of seventh grade play, San Jacinto White won over Goddard Red 24-14 and San Jacinto Green whipped Alamo Scarlet 28-0.

Each week's games at the freshman and junior high levels may be reported to the Reporter-Telegram between 4 and 6 p.m. on Saturdays.

OILERS

"We've made mistakes. The past two weeks we've handed people 14 points. If it's baseball, you call that unearned runs. We just weren't in the right spots.

"All we can do is keeping trying and continue packing in the experience to the young people."

With two young players in the secondary, it's been difficult to use the entire defense.

"It's nothing against the younger kids, but you just can't do everything you want to do," Glanville said. "J.D.'s (Donaldson) back now and that allows you to do some other things."

Oiler nose guard Doug Smith suffered a knee injury early in training camp that resulted in him missing training camp and the season opener against Minnesota.

His backup, Richard Byrd, also had knee surgery before the season started.

Defensive end Ray Childress was forced to move to nose guard and a end William Fuller filled in for Childress.

"It's been an adjustment when you've got people moving around out of position," Fuller said. "There will be some blown assignments, some lapses.

"If we can just get everyone healthy and get everyone back in their positions, we'll be fine. You can't blame all our problems on that but you can make an argument that it's had some effect."

Marino needs 236 passing yards to become the 25th quarterback to pass for 25,000 yards in a career.

Marino needs one more 4-touchdown performance to tie Johnny Unitas, who holds the record of 17 four or more touchdown games.

The Oilers' offense has played well the past two weeks behind quarterback Warren Moon, who completed a career high 28 of 42 passes for 338 yards against the Bills.

While the Dolphins offense has kept sackers away from Marino, Miami's defense has taken the lead in NFL sacks with 15, an early season turnaround from 1988 when the Dolphins ranked 25th in the league.

Kickoff is at noon CDT. The game will be telecast on NBC, Channel 9, and on KCRS (550 AM) radio.

Rozelle spends days in reflection, relaxation

By DAVE GOLDBERG
AP Football Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Every morning, Pete Rozelle leaves his temporary home in a deluxe hotel and walks 10 blocks through the thick of Manhattan to his NFL office. By now he had hoped to be walking along a California beach, losing some of the weight he's gained since he quit smoking.

On those same mornings, one newspaper faithfully updated a box on its sports page. This morning it says: "192 Days, Commissioner Held Hostage."

It was on March 22 that Rozelle stunned the sports world by announcing he was stepping down after 29 years as commissioner, a period in which the NFL expanded from a mom-and-pop operation to a nationwide chain on the verge of adding international markets.

And even while he pledged to stay on as long as possible, he figured that by this week — the fourth of the regular season — he'd be at his new home near San Diego.

No such luck.

While his wife, Carrie, was dealing with decorators, Rozelle was still dealing with some of the same problems that led him to quit — listening to Buffalo coach Marv Levy complain about officiating, one day; suspending Freddie Joe Nunn of the Cardinals for violating the league's substance abuse policies, on another.

"I'm anxious to get out," he acknowledged during an interview Friday, one of the few he has given since stepping down.

"I want to start a new life. I want to get into a new routine that will help me lose the 25 pounds I've put on since I quit smoking. I want to walk, exercise, organize what I'll be doing.

"On the other hand, I'm not crying "poor baby" and saying they're holding up my retirement," added Rozelle, who sold his house in the New York suburbs this summer. "Roughing it in a suite in a New York hotel room isn't exactly a tough life."

Still, when Carrie left for San Diego in August, Rozelle wanted to be with her, taking in the races at Del Mar and working as a consultant — his main job probably will be on the television contract to be negotiated after the season.

But on July 6, a group of 11 dissident owners, upset because they had been excluded from the selection process, blocked the election of Jim Finks, president of the New Orleans Saints. Finks was left three votes short of the 19 needed for election even though he was the sole candidate of a six-person search committee.

Two weeks later, a new selection committee was named and the whole process started anew. This time the committee included some of the dissidents — most of the league's new members — who felt the high prices they paid for their teams merited their inclusion in the process.

Ego impaired deserve our pity, and each other

"I think the rich and famous should be treated a little differently. They bring money to Beverly Hills."

— Zsa Zsa Gabor's eighth husband

"I'm tired of being blamed for everything that goes wrong."

— Darryl Strawberry

By RON RAPOPORT
New York Times News Service

I am so ashamed.

It is all I can do to keep from breaking out in tears.

How could I have been so misguided, so shortsighted, so indifferent to the plight of my fellow man?

All this time I've spent worrying about hurricane victims. All this concern I've felt for Dave Dravecky. All this anguish I've had about what will happen to those poor students in China who only wanted to read an honest newspaper.

All this anxiety I've had over how children who are born with a drug addiction will survive. All these nightmares I've had about that quarterback at the University of Colorado who had his whole life ahead of him but died of stomach cancer.

How could I have been so insensitive? So unfeeling? So lacking in compassion?

I mean, are rich, famous, talented, attractive people that different from the rest of us? If we prick them, do they not bleed? Don't they have troubles, too?

How awful it must be to walk into a court of law and have to listen to people say nasty things about you simply because every word that comes out of your mouth is ignorant enough and offensive enough to peel wallpaper.

Isn't having to play baseball for $1.4 million a season bad enough without being expected to hit more than .225, too?

But even indignities such as these aren't bad enough. The real problem with being a celebrity — although people like Zsa Zsa and Darryl are too shy to point it out — is that there's no escape.

If you or I hit a cop, for instance, we could reasonably enough expect to suffer a sudden loss of consciousness and awaken behind bars with a serious headache. But at least we would lick our wounds in private. Surely, the humiliating public spectacle La Gabor was so unwillingly forced to endure was far worse than mere physical pain.

If you or I were paid big bucks to do an important job and then had to be dragged out of the whirlpool the day the fate of the entire company was on the line, we would be quietly fired and no one would know anything about it.

Poor Strawberry, however, must continue to suffer. He's history in New York, of course, but some other team will pick up his option, predict he will benefit from a change of scenery and give him a raise. The minute he hits .225, however, or hides in the clubhouse when the bases are loaded, you can be sure that everybody will start picking on him again.

Well, this is a terrible state of affairs and I for one think we should do something about it. I think we should admit how insensitive we have been to people afflicted with the handicap of fame and fortune and take a solemn oath to be more understanding in the future.

I think we should encourage the formation of a National Association for the Protection of the Ego Impaired. This organization would lobby Congress, disseminate educational materials and try to raise the public consciousness generally about the perils of being well known and well off in today's society.

It shouldn't be hard to elect a slate of officers from among the legions of people who are suffering from this affliction. Richard Nixon has lived with it for years. Cyndi Garvey has turned it into a career. Then there is the tragic case of Christina Onassis.

As for sports, well, just thinking about how mean everybody was to Howard Cosell makes me weepy. Pete Rose has certainly taken his knocks lately. And Mike Tyson. And Jose Canseco.

The way I see it the first meeting of the society could be held on a yacht off the southern coast of France. It would feature fine food and great music and cost would be no object. Anything to keep this unhappy group's spirits up.

The highlight of the occasion would be the surprise wedding that saw Darryl Strawberry become Zsa Zsa Gabor's ninth husband. After all they have been through, I think those two finally deserve some happiness. Not to mention each other.

Ware's performance flirted with the NCAA mark of nine TD passes set by Dennis Shaw of San Diego State in 1969. Ware left with 2:05 remaining in the third quarter. He also did not play the last 2:54 of the first half.

Houston's defense, meanwhile, throttled Temple, holding the 0-4 Owls to 177 yards in total offense and forcing 10 fumbles, three of them recovered by Cougars tackle Tray Hooper. Temple lost six fumbles.

Temple fullback Efrain Cabrera broke off a 52-yard scoring run with 3:43 left for the Owls' only score.

In the first quarter alone, the Cougars outgained Temple 262 yards to 27 as Ware, commanding Houston's run-and-shoot offense, mixed quick short passes to his small, speedy receivers with an occasional bomb that kept the outmanned Owls off balance.

Houston, at times going without a huddle, led 17-0 by the time Temple had run just seven offensive plays.

No. 8 Arkansas 39, UTEP 7

Tailback James Rouse, making his first start in almost at year, scored two first-quarter touchdowns and kicker Todd Wright helped Arkansas tie an NCAA record as the eighth-ranked Razorbacks beat Texas-El Paso.

Rouse, who had 48 yards on eight carries in the first quarter, scored on runs of 11 and 1 yards as the Razorbacks opened a 14-0 lead.

Wright added field goals of 37, 47, 22 and 37 yards — giving Arkansas kickers 30 straight since early in 1988. Kendall Trainor made 23 in a row last year. The 30 straight ties a record set by Washington's Chuck Nelson in 1981 and 1982.

Arkansas, 3-0, had 302 yards in the first half but lost three fumbles — their first lost fumbles of the year — all in UTEP territory. The Razorbacks' defensive front overpowered the Miners and handed UTEP, 1-4, 46 yards in losses in the first half. Arkansas wound up with 11 sacks of quarterback Howard Gasser for 81 yards, including four by Scott Long.

UTEP made 108 yards in the first half, including 65 on a touchdown drive and 40 on a last-second pass when Arkansas was protecting deep.

No. 14 Texas A&M 31, S. Mississippi

Robert Wilson scored two touchdowns and No. 22 Texas A&M held off Southern Mississippi's big play offense.

The Aggies (3-1) took a 17-0 halftime lead on Wilson's runs of 8 and 5 yards and a 34-yard field goal by Layne Talbot.

Southern Mississippi's Dwayne Nelson broke 63 yards for a touchdown in the third quarter and with 5:10 to go in the same period Brett Favre completed an 80-yard touchdown pass to Ron Baham.

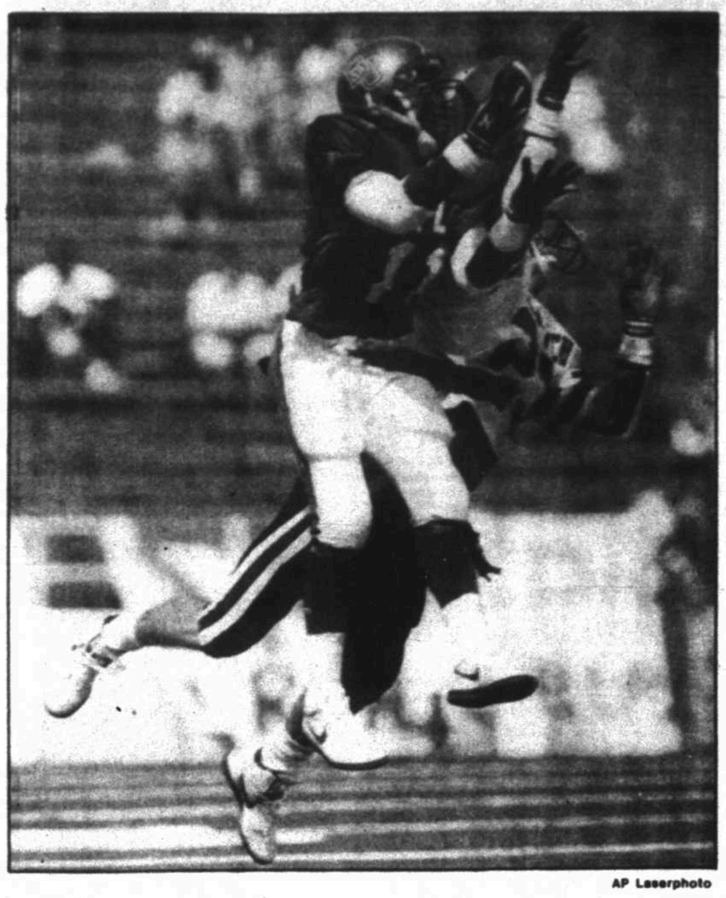

Favre passed for a career-high 303 yards and completed 21 of 42 passes.

The Aggies also struck in the third quarter with a 2-yard run by Darren Lewis, who gained 126 yards on 21 carries for his first 100-yard performance of the season.

A&M linebacker Aaron Wallace made back-to-back tackles, and Favre threw two incomplete passes to end the drive.

The Golden Eagles also reached A&M's 27- and 29-yard lines in the second quarter but could not score.

Chuck Davis missed a 45-yard field goal attempt and Larry Horton intercepted a Favre pass to stop the drives.

Penn St. 16, Texas 12

Penn State's Leonard Humphries returned a blocked punt 4 yards for a touchdown, giving the Nittany Lions a victory over Texas.

Texas (1-2) was leading 12-9 when linebacker Andre Collins swatted down Bobby Lilljedahl's punt. Humphries grabbed the ball on the bounce and scored with 6:52 left in the game.

Penn State (3-1) had trailed since late in the second quarter, when Texas' Wayne Clements kicked a 31-yard field goal.

The Longhorns added a safety in the third quarter when cornerback Stanley Richard tackled Gerry Collins in the end zone.

Penn State scored first, moving 80 yards in four plays with quarterback Tony Sacca throwing 33 yards to David Daniels for the score with 9:07 left in the first quarter.

Ray Tarasi's extra point attempt was blocked, breaking a string of 134 consecutive successful extra points by Penn State.

Texas responded with a 68-yard scoring drive, capped by quarterback Peter Gardere's 30-yard scoring pass to split end Johnny Walker, who made a diving catch in the end zone.

Tarasi's 45-yard field goal gave Penn State a 9-7 lead with 12:39 left in the half.

Texas used 14 plays to set up Clements' field goal for a 10-9 Texas halftime lead.

K-State downs UNT on last-second pass

Carl Straw, with no time remaining, hit Frank Hernandez with a 12-yard touchdown pass to lift Kansas State past North Texas and end the Wildcats' 30-game winless skid.

North Texas had taken a 17-14 lead with 1:35 to play when Scott Davis, on fourth-and-19, fired a 47-yard touchdown bomb to Carl Brewer.

Jubilant Wildcat fans who had not experienced a victory since Oct. 18, 1986, swarmed onto the field and mobbed the players after Hernandez' touchdown capped a nine-play, 85-yard drive. They ripped down both goalposts and the extra point was not even attempted.

After the Eagles stunned them with Brewer's touchdown catch, the Wildcats needed every tick that was left on the clock. Straw fueled the drive with consecutive 20-yard strikes to Michael Smith and overcame a quarterback sack.

On first-and-10 from the 22, Straw found Smith for 10 yards to the 12, then two more passes fell incomplete.

With :04 showing, the Wildcats decided against the tying field goal and Hernandez worked free in the corner of the end zone.

Kansas State's 30-game non-winning streak and 16 straight losses were the longest current skids in the NCAA.

Before the final frantic two minutes, Sonny Ray Jones had scored the go-ahead touchdown for K-State on a 1-yard run in the third period.

With Straw coming off the bench to hit several key passes and the Maurice Henry recording three quarterback sacks, the Wildcats (1-3) won for the first time since beating Kansas 29-12 in 1986.

North Texas, tied with Eastern Kentucky for the No. 1 ranking in the Division I-AA poll, took a 7-0 lead in the first period on Darrin Collins' 32-yard run.

But the much-maligned K-State defense dominated the line of scrimmage most of the game and Davis played a miserable game. He simply fell down three times while attempting to pass and twice threw wild pitchouts, including one that K-State's Ekwensi Griffith recovered on the Eagle 2-yard line with the score tied 7-7 late in the third period.

The Wildcats, who had just given up the ball themselves on a fumble, took the lead two plays later on Jones' run. The Wildcats had pulled even at 7-7 with 48 seconds left in the second quarter on Curtis Madden's 1-yard run run.

North Texas' Keith Chapman kicked a 51-yard field goal against the wind to make it 14-10 with 11:56 left in the game, but later missed a 44-yarder.

The Wildcats had a chance to seize the momentum early in the first quarter but squandered it on a fourth-and-one play from the Eagles' 29. Chris Cobb, who started at quarterback, tried to go up the middle but was stopped for no gain.

However, three plays later, Davis fumbled and K-State's Erick Harper fell on the ball on the 31. Stymied again, K-State tried a 47-yard field goal but David Kruger's kick was wide right.

The Eagles went 70 yards in 10 plays for their first touchdown, their only sustained drive of the half. North Texas converted on fourth-and-one in the drive, with Charles White picking up three yards to the Wildcat 47. On third-and-11, Davis hit Erric Pegram for 16 yards to the 32, and Collins scored on the next play.

Abilene Christian 23
Eastern New Mexico 13

Fullback Jimmie Hays ran for two touchdowns and quarterback Stan Stephens passed for another as Abilene Christian knocked off Eastern New Mexico in the Lone Star Conference opener for both teams.

Hays scored on one-yard runs in the second and fourth quarter, and Stephens passed 25 yards to Sean Grady in the third quarter for the Wildcats (1-3, 1-0).

ENMU (2-2, 0-1) got field goals of 34 and 45 yards from Bob Gilbreath and a two-yard TD run from Wayne Perkins.

Hays led all runners with 58 yards, and Stephens passed for 144 yards for ACU. Mike Scott of ENMU threw for 250 yards.

Sul Ross St. 28, Austin Col. 6

Frank Gutierrez and Andrew Jackson each intercepted a pass from Austin College quarterback Dale Trompler and returned them for touchdowns in the final minute to seal Sul Ross State's victory over AC.

Each team is 2-2 overall and 2-2 in the Texas Intercollegiate Athletic Conference.

Jackson picked off three Trompler passes as Austin College committed seven turnovers.

TCU 28, SMU 10

Veteran running back Tommy Palmer and freshman Curtis Modkins breathed new life in Texas Christian's triple shoot offense and the Horned Frogs cruised over long-time Southwest Conference rival Southern Methodist.

Palmer sped six yards for one touchdown and took a screen pass from Ron Jiles 36 yards for another as the Frogs, 2-2, beat the born-again Mustangs for the first time since 1971.

TCU severed the string at 15 losses in a row and squared its SWC ledger at 1-1.

SMU, battling back from the NCAA "death penalty," dropped to 1-3, with all three losses coming in SWC games.

The Frogs never trailed but they needed some defensive heroics and a sparkling second half performance by Modkins, who rushed for 84 yards and caught three passes for 59 more — all in the third quarter.

He wound up the evening with 116 yards on 18 carries and scored on a 2-yard run as TCU secured the victory with an 80-yard touchdown drive culminating in the final quarter.

Jiles lofted an 8-yard scoring pass to Mike Noack as TCU took a 21-10 lead in the third quarter.

The Mustangs got their only touchdown just before halftime on a wild play that saw quarterback Mike Romo rifle a 23-yard pass to wide receiver Korey Beard, who was hit and fumbled at the TCU 24. Andy Bergfeld, another wide receiver, scooped up the ball on first bounce and raced across the goal.

Despite four turnovers, including a pass interception that killed a drive at the SMU 5, the Frogs limped into the intermission with a 14-10 lead.

Pony specialist Matt Lomenick, who kicked a 43-yard field goal in the first period, missed a 43-yarder in the second quarter as SMU struggled unsuccessfully to capitalize on the TCU miscues.

Angelo St. 49, W. Texas St. 14

Split end Darron Johnson caught three first-half touchdown passes, paving the way as unbeaten Angelo State beat West Texas State University 49-14 in both team's Lone Star Conference opener Saturday night.

Angelo State, ranked No. 4 in Division II, ran its record to 5-0. WTSU fell to 1-4.

WTSU's quarterback Dan Buesing connected with receiver Keith Miller for both Buffaloes' scores.

Colorado dedicates win to Aunese

Associated Press

Fifth-ranked Colorado honored the memory of a fallen teammate, then defeated No. 21 Washington, scoring the most points allowed a visitor at Husky Stadium in 60 years.

Before the game, the Buffaloes players knelt in honor of quarterback Sal Aunese, who died of stomach cancer last Saturday.

Against Washington, the Buffaloes played like a team possessed to capture a national championship in Aunese's memory. Not since the Huskies were beaten 48-0 by Southern Cal in 1929 had a team scored this many points in Seattle.

After failing to get a first down in their first two possessions, Colorado scored the first of six touchdowns on the ground on a 35-yard run by Eric Bieniemy at 11:53 and the rout was on.

The 17-point margin of victory by the Buffaloes (4-0) was deceiving. Colorado outclassed the Huskies both on offense and defense. Washington (2-2) trailed 38-6 after three quarters and scored three touchdowns against Colorado reserves in the fourth quarter.

With sophomore Darian Hagan directing Colorado's run-oriented wishbone offense, the Buffaloes rolled up 420 yards on the ground and 485 total yards. On defense, the Buffaloes intercepted Washington quarterback Cary Conklin three times, two by strong safety Bruce Young.

Bieniemy scored two touchdowns, the second on a 1-yard run in the second quarter. Then, in order, Bieniemy's backup, J.J. Flannigan scored on a 3-yard run in the second quarter, Hagan scored on a 3-yard run in the third quarter, wide receiver Jeff Campbell scored on a 56-yard reverse in the third quarter, and backup quarterback Charles Johnson scored on a 16-yard run in the fourth quarter.

Ken Culbertson kicked a 43-yard field goal for the Buffaloes in the third quarter.

Colorado led 21-6 at halftime, scoring two touchdowns in the last 1:41 of the first half.

The ball-control Buffaloes drove 76 yards in 11 plays for their second touchdown at 13:19 of the second quarter. Bieniemy leaped into the end zone from 1 yard out for the score as Colorado took a 14-6 lead.

The Buffaloes got the ball back just 19 seconds later when Young cut in front of Andre Riley and intercepted a Conklin pass. He ran it back 8 yards to the Washington 47.

Miami 26, Michigan St. 20

Second-ranked Miami survived the loss of its starting quarterback when Carlos Huerta kicked two of his four field goals in the fourth quarter, and the Hurricanes beat Michigan State.

Miami (4-0) struggled against a rugged Michigan State defense after starting quarterback Craig Erickson was injured in the second quarter. Erickson broke a knuckle on his throwing hand and will be in a cast for four weeks.

Huerta kicked his third field goal after Michigan State safety Harlon Barnett intercepted a pass by Erickson's backup, Gino Torretta, and returned it 35 yards for a touchdown, tying the score 20-20.

Huerta added a 52-yarder late in the game.

Michigan State (1-2) now has lost close games to the No. 1 and No. 2 teams in the nation on consecutive weekends. Last Saturday, the Spartans were beaten 21-13 by top-ranked Notre Dame.

Defensive end Greg Mark sacked Michigan State quarterback Dan Enos to snuff one Spartan attempt to recover, and Enos fumbled in Michigan State's last effort.

A Miami spokesman said Erickson, key to the team's hopes of a national championship, will resume practicing after the East Carolina game on Nov. 4.

Ironically, the last time Miami lost a starting quarterback to injury was in November 1986, when Vinny Testaverde was replaced by Geoff Torretta, Gino's older brother.

Miami broke a 10-10 tie in the third quarter, with Alex Johnson rambling 38 yards for a touchdown off left guard.

Notre Dame 40, Purdue 7

Anthony Johnson rushed for two touchdowns, and Tony Rice passed for a career-high 270 yards, leading top-ranked Notre Dame to its 16th straight victory.

The Irish (4-0) met little resistance in building a 34-0 halftime lead behind runs of 6 and 2 yards by Johnson, a senior fullback. Rice's running and passing carried the Irish to scores on four of the five first-half possessions he directed. The other ended on a fumble.

Purdue had eight turnovers in dropping to 1-2. Notre Dame rolled up 530 yards total offense to just 219 for the Boilermakers.

Rice, a senior, also threw for a career-high 12 completions in 15 attempts and carried 12 times for 67 yards, including a 4-yard run around left end for a first-quarter touchdown. His previous career high of 213 yards came last year against West Virginia in the Fiesta Bowl and his earlier best of 11 completions came last year against Stanford.

Rice's domination over the Purdue defense was most apparent on a 97-yard drive with 3:13 left in the opening half. After Ricky Watters' fair catch of a punt at his own 3, Johnson ran 3 yards, then Rice passed 48 yards to a leaping Rocket Ismail, who made a finger-tip catch at the Purdue 46.

Nebraska 35, Oregon St. 7

Gerry Gdowski ran for one touchdown and passed for another as he led third-ranked Nebraska over Oregon State.

The Cornhuskers (4-0) struggled through three quarters against Oregon State (2-2), picking up three scores following Beaver turnovers.

Gdowski ran 7 yards for Nebraska's first score as he capped the opening 42-yard drive. Bryan Carpenter added an 8-yard touchdown run early in the second quarter after a fumble recovery by Nebraska's Mike Petko at the Oregon State 35.

Bruce Pickens picked off a Nick Schichtle pass to end an Oregon State drive in the third period. Nebraska's Richard Bell then went 48 yards to help set up a 2-yard Ken Clark touchdown for a 21-0 lead.

Michigan 41, Maryland 21

Elvis Grbac completed his first five passes, two of them for touchdowns, launching sixth-ranked Michigan over Maryland.

Grbac finished with 10 completions in 20 attempts for 187 yards as Michigan improved to 2-1.

Neal O'Donnell, playing despite a bruised right hand, hit 15-of-26 for 197 yards and one touchdown for Maryland (1-4).

Barry Johnson caught a 28-yard TD pass from O'Donnell and a 14-yard scoring toss from backup Scott Zolak.

The Terrapins also scored on a 97-yard interception return by Eddie Tomlin.

Duke 21, Clemson 17

Billy Ray passed for two touchdowns, including a 7-yarder to Chris Brown with 3:18 left, lifting Duke to a 21-17 victory over seventh-ranked and previously unbeaten Clemson on Saturday.

The last time Duke defeated Clemson was 1980's 2-9 season, when the Blue Devils won 34-17.

Duke (2-3) is 1-1 in the Atlantic Coast Conference, while Clemson lost for the first time in five games. The Tigers are 1-1 in the ACC.

No. 9 West Virginia 31, No. 10 Pittsburgh 31

Ed Frazier kicked a 42-yard field goal as time expired to cap a 22-point comeback in the last 9:09 as No. 10 Pittsburgh tied No. 9 West Virginia.

Major Harris threw a career-high four touchdown passes and West Virginia capitalized on six Pitt turnovers to take a 31-9 lead late in the third quarter before the Panthers rallied.

Sooners open league play in high fashion

Associated Press

Mike Gaddis ran for 172 yards and three touchdowns, and freshman quarterback Tink Collins threw a 51-yard touchdown pass as No. 16 Oklahoma overpowered Kansas, 45-6.

Collins, the fifth quarterback for Oklahoma in six games, had another pass dropped at the goal line, and the Sooners had three touchdowns called back because of penalties.

Kansas (2-3) scored in the closing minutes of the first half to stay within 17-6 on a 17-yard pass from Kelly Donohoe to John Baker, but the Sooners (3-1) stung the Jayhawks with two third-quarter scores to put the game away.

Kansas tried an on-sides kick at the start of the second half, but it was recovered by Oklahoma's Tracy Gordon. The Sooners drove 48 yards on seven plays with Kenyon Rasheed going the final yard for a 24-6 lead.

After the Jayhawks punted, Oklahoma went 66 yards on eight plays. Gaddis scored on a 33-yard run, making a sharp cutback in the Kansas secondary to get away for the score.

Oklahoma drove 55 yards on 11 plays to score again in the fourth quarter, with Gaddis going the final four yards for a 38-6 lead with 14:03 to play.

Gaddis scored on a 2-yard run in the first quarter before Collins hooked up with Arthur Guess for Oklahoma.

R.D. Lashar kicked a 29-yard field goal with 9:04 to play in the second quarter for the Sooners.

The Sooners finished the scoring on a 51-yard touchdown pass from Chris Melson to Eric Bross with 3:39 left in the game.

Donohoe engineered a nine-play drive for the Kansas score with 18 seconds left in the first half. Brad Fleeman missed the try for the extra point.

No. 13 Alabama 20, Vanderbilt 14

Alabama cornerback John Mangum halted a frantic Vanderbilt rally with a pass interception at the 16-yard line as the 13th-ranked Crimson Tide held off the Commodores.

Mangum's interception with 13 seconds remaining brought an end to a furious fourth quarter that had seen the Commodores (1-2, 0-2) rally from a 20-0 deficit behind the passing of John Gromos.

Despite playing in a steady rain, Alabama (3-0, 2-0) had few problems with Vandy in the first half as they built a 17-0 lead on a 24-yard field goal by Philip Doyle, a 9-yard scoring run by Siran Stacy and a 17-yard touchdown pass from first-time starter Gary Hollingsworth to Lamonde Russell.

After a 39-yard field goal by Doyle pushed the margin to 20-0, Alabama seemed content to allow its defense to carry the load against the Commodores.

Vanderbilt free safety Chris Connelly turned the momentum in the Commodores' favor with 32 seconds left in the third quarter when he intercepted a pass from Hollingsworth at the Tide 25 and returned the ball to the 11.

The Commodores got the football two more times, having one drive stalled on downs at the Alabama 22 and then seeing Mangum come up with his key interception.

Alabama appeared to be in control of the game at the half after scoring 14 second-quarter points on drives of 84 and 68 yards.

The Commodores were unable to register a first down until midway through the second quarter.

Hollingsworth finished with 227 yards passing as he hit 16 of his 30 attempts, while Alabama's Murray Hill led all rushers with 73 yards on 19 carries.

South Carolina 24
No. 23 Georgia 20

Todd Ellis threw a 22-yard touchdown pass to Carl Platt late in the third period, triggering South Carolina over No. 23 Georgia.

The Gamecocks (3-1-1) turned a pair of third-period Georgia turnovers into 10 points, overcoming the Bulldogs' 17-14 halftime lead. Georgia fell to 2-1.

South Carolina tied it 17-17 on a 40-yard field goal by Colli Mackie early in the third period after the first of three Georgia turnovers in the quarter.

A fumble by Georgia's Rodney Hampton was recovered by Corey Miller on the Georgia 31, setting up the field goal.

The Gamecocks' Joe Reaves then intercepted a Greg Talley pass and returned it 15 yards to the Bulldogs' 21. Two plays later, Ellis found Platt alone in the end zone, giving South Carolina the lead with 2:09 left in the third period.

Georgia added a field goal of 27 yards by John Kasay to get within 24-20 with 9:55 left to play.

The Gamecocks went ahead 14-0 in the first quarter as Mike Dingle scored on a 5-yard run to cap an 11-play, 71-yard drive with the opening kickoff. It was the first TD Georgia had allowed this season.

No. 24 Air Force 46, Colorado St. 21

Quarterback Dee Dowis rushed for 147 yards, including scoring runs of 38 and 41 yards, and led unbeaten and 24th-ranked Air Force to a rout of Western Athletic Conference rival Colorado State.

Dowis, who entered the game as the nation's leading rusher with a per-game average of 145.5 yards, gained all but three of his rushing yards in the first half, helping stake the Falcons to a 24-13 halftime lead.

The Falcons, beating Colorado State for the seventh straight time, raised their overall record to 5-0 and WAC mark to 4-0. Colorado State fell to 1-3-1 and 0-1.

No. 11 Southern Cal 18
No. 19 Washington St. 17

Todd Marinovich passed to Gary Wellman for a 2-point conversion with four seconds left, giving No. 11 Southern Cal a Pacific-10 Conference victory over No. 19 Washington State.

The Trojans, 3-1 after winning their conference opener, mounted an 18-play, 91-yard scoring drive in the last 3:31, capped by Marinovich's 2-yard touchdown pass to tailback Ricky Ervins. Washington State (4-1, 1-1) had a nine-game winning streak snapped that dated back to last season.

Ervins rushed for 138 yards on 23 carries and powered the Trojans to their only other touchdown. Ervins' 49-yard burst off left tackle set up his 8-yard halfback pass to split end John Jackson, tying the score 10-10 just before halftime.

Marinovich completed 27 of 41 passes for 268 yards with one interception. Jackson has a career-high 11 catches for 102 yards.

Oregon 16, No. 17 Arizona 10

Gregg McCallum kicked three field goals and Oregon's defense stifled Arizona as the Ducks held on to beat the 17th-ranked Wildcats in a mistake-filled Pacific 10 Conference game.

Oregon, 2-1 in the Pac-10 and 3-1 overall, bolted to a 13-0 lead in the first quarter and weathered a disastrous second period, when quarterback Bill Musgrave threw three interceptions and fumbled the ball away once.

Arizona fell to 2-1 in the conference and 3-2 overall.

Fans come through for Hugo victims

Associated Press

South Carolina's 24-20 upset of 23rd-ranked Georgia was of considerably less importance to many than the amount of money collected Saturday during the game at Athens, Ga., for victims of hurricane Hugo.

University of Georgia spokesman Tom Jackson said cash and checks totaled $53,000 from the sellout crowd of 84,000. He also said there was a pile of coins that would have to be machine counted tomorrow.

"But we feel in round figures it will be $54,000," Jackson said.

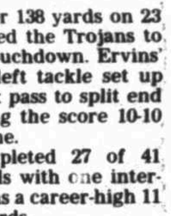

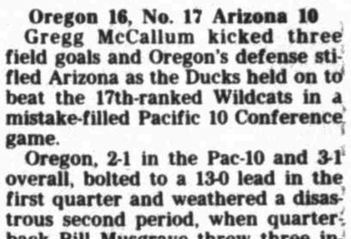

"We won't be holding onto this money long," said Frank Pfennig, executive director of the East Georgia chapter of the American Red Cross, headquartered in Athens. "It'll be going to the South Carolina relief effort.

"In my experience, I've never seen this much cash come in at one time in any day to any charity."

Toronto's Mookie Wilson gets a high five from teammate Tony Fernandez after scoring the eventual winning run Saturday against the Baltimore Orioles.

The 'gut feelings' of Zimmer, Frey and America

By DAVE ANDERSON
New York Times News Service

The year before, the Chicago Cubs had finished last in the National League East. But now, the day before the Cubs would open their 1988 spring training workouts, their new manager, Don Zimmer, and his coaches were meeting with Jim Frey, the new general manager.

With a straight face Frey pointed to the names of the pitchers, catchers, infielders and outfielders on the big board in Zimmer's office.

"I put this juggernaut together," Frey said. "And you better not mess it up."

That juggernaut finished a gasping fourth a year ago with a 77-85 record, only one victory better than the 1987 team had. And during spring training this year, Zimmer was hoping that "if this kid comes through and if that kid comes through," the Cubs might be somewhat improved. Just before the Cubs' opener, Zimmer and Frey realistically appraised their chances.

"We both figured," Zimmer recalled, "if we could win 81 and lose 81, it'd be a good year."

When the Cubs ascended to 21 games over .500, it was Zimmer's turn to put on a straight face.

"Well," he told Frey, "I now got 21 games to work with to get to the 81-81 we figured on."

By then the Cubs were the juggernaut that Frey had once joked about. And on Wednesday night in Wrigley Field they will open the National League Championship Series against the San Francisco Giants.

If the Cubs prevail, they will qualify for the World Series for the first time since 1945 with the opportunity to win it for the first time since 1908.

"You don't win 90 games by mistake," Zimmer was saying now. "It's a team nobody picked, but it's a pretty good ballclub."

Except for the loyalists to the other teams in the playoffs, the Cubs are being hugged as America's ballclub. America doesn't always hug a baseball team.

Some franchises have won too often or too haughtily to be loved outside their own precinct, as the Yankees and now the Mets have discovered. But the downtrodden and the frustrated are always cherished.

Twenty years ago America's team was the downtrodden Mets. In 1955 it was the frustrated Brooklyn Dodgers finally winning their first World Series. And as long as it's possible for the downtrodden and frustrated Cubs to win this World Series, they will be America's ballclub.

Through the years, a team usually emerged as America's ballclub on gut feelings. And with these Cubs, maybe it's a reflection to why they won this season. Perhaps more than any other manager in recent years, Zimmer's dugout decisions turned on his gut feelings.

Some managers disdain the squeeze play, but Zimmer flashed the sign that squeezed home 11 runs. Some managers never consider using the hit-and-run play with the bases loaded, but Zimmer often had all three runners moving.

Some managers don't risk a pitchout on a 2-and-2 count because it's an automatic third ball, but the first seven times Zimmer ordered a pitchout on a 2-and-2 count, the base-stealer was thrown out.

Over the final weeks in any pennant race, a team needs an established rotation of starting pitchers. But the joke among the Cubs is that their recent rotation has consisted of "Sutcliffe, Maddux, Bielecki, Undecided and Undecided."

Against the Mets one night, Les Lancaster, who was scheduled to start the next night, was sitting in the dugout charting pitches when Zimmer turned to him and said, "Go warm up."

Lancaster preserved a Cubs' victory. Now that's a gut feeling. And if proper Bostonians wonder where Zimmer's gut feelings were as the Red Sox manager in 1978 when the Yankees overcame a 14½-game lead and won the American League East in a one-game playoff, he has an answer.

"I didn't have so many things to do there because that Red Sox team could score runs," Zimmer said. "I never had to pinch-hit. I never had to bunt, squeeze or steal. The only decisions I had to make were on the pitching."

More often than not, Zimmer's gut feelings worked. It happens like that every so often. And it usually occurs over a year. Next year it might be another team's year but this was the Cubs' year.

This year everything worked out for the Cubs, for Zimmer and for Frey, who was castigated in Chicago during the off season for having traded Rafael Palmeiro, the young outfielder who had batted .307 last year, to the Texas Rangers in a nine-player deal.

Not long after that trade, Harry Carey, the Cubs' popular broadcaster, asked Frey the most controversial question in Chicago at the time: Why did you trade Palmeiro?

"Three reasons why," Frey said. "First, we lost too many games in the late innings last season because we didn't have a good closer, but we think the relief pitcher we got, Mitch Williams, can do the job.

"Second, even though Palmeiro hit .307, he only knocked in 53 runs. And the third reason, Harry," the general manager continued with a straight face, "I got tired of listening to you mispronounce Palmeiro's name. One day it was Palmyra, the next day Palermo, the day after that Palmora. With him gone, I won't have to listen to that anymore."

Ryan reaches 301 Ks, flirts with perfection

Associated Press

Nolan Ryan, pitching what could be the final game of his career, flirted with a no-hitter for the fifth time this season, pitching 7 1-3 perfect innings and reaching 300 strikeouts as Texas beat California 2-0.

Ryan, whose bid for his first perfect game ended with solid single to right-center by former Angel teammate Brian Downing, struck out 13 batters and finished the season with 301. Ryan raised his all-time major-league record for strikeouts to 5,076.

Ryan got No. 300 by striking out Dick Schofield leading off the ninth. It was the sixth time Ryan has struck out 300 or more in a season and the first time since 1977.

Dante Bichette followed Downing with a single, and Ryan settled for a three-hitter when Mark MacLemore singled with one out in the ninth.

Ryan, who has an option year remaining on his Ranger contract, has not said if he plans to return for a 24th season. He has scheduled a news conference for Monday in Arlington, Texas, to announce his plans. Ryan has said he is considering running for office in Texas.

He struck out the side in the sixth inning, marking the 304th time he had accomplished that.

It was the 90th time he has pitched a complete game allowing four hits or less. It was the 18th time this season he struck 10 or more — a Texas record.

Royals 6, Athletics 1

Bret Saberhagen set a club record with his 23rd victory and clinched the American League earned-run average title as the Kansas City Royals beat the Oakland Athletics.

White Sox 8, Indians 2

Ivan Calderon's triple keyed a two-run first inning and Carlton Fisk hit his 336th career homer, leading the Chicago White Sox past the Cleveland Indians.

Yankees 9, Tigers 2

Alvaro Espinoza drove in three runs and Don Mattingly hit a solo homer and a sacrifice fly, as the New York Yankees clinched fifth place in the American League East with a victory over the Detroit Tigers.

The Orioles' hopes of becoming the first team to go from worst-to-first ended in the din of 49,553 screaming fans at the SkyDome. Baltimore made the fourth-greatest improvement in one season in history, but it wasn't enough.

Emergency starter Dave Johnson took a two-hitter and 3-1 lead into the eighth, but left after a leadoff walk to Nelson Liriano. Kevin Hickey walked Manny Lee and Mark Williamson relieved. Lloyd Moseby, who singled home the winning run Friday night against Williamson, 10-5, sacrificed and then the Blue Jays' bats took over.

Frank Wills, 3-1, pitched four scoreless innings and Tom Henke got his 20th save with a perfect ninth.

"People always criticized us because of the past, and they probably had a vaild reason for that," Moseby said. "The only way to change that is by winning."

Two umpires' decisions helped Baltimore score twice in the second inning for a 2-1 lead and the Orioles got another run in the fourth on Phil Bradley's infield single. Manager Frank Robinson helped, too, causing a delay that might have thrown off starter Jimmy Key's rhythm and then successfully arguing a ground rules call.

ROZELLE

When the owners meet in Dallas on Oct. 10 to try again, they'll be looking at a list of five or six candidates that includes four of the six finalists chosen by the first selection committee — Finks; Paul Tagliabue, the league's Washington counsel; Robert Mulcahy, chairman of the New Jersey Sports and Exposition Authority and former Green Bay Packer star Willie Davis.

To most people, it looks as though the NFL spent three months spinning its wheels.

But to Rozelle, who admits he dislikes being left in limbo, the wait was valuable in that it gave new owners and those outside his inner circle a chance to be included in the selection process.

"I think it was good, because I think it placated a lot of the clubs that weren't satisfied with the way the selection process was going," he said. "I'm hoping we'll come out of this more unified and if we do, it won't matter much that I was kept waiting."

Davis homer leads 'Stros by Reds, 9-2

Associated Press

Glenn Davis hit a two-run homer and Jose Cano scattered seven hits for his first major league victory as the Houston Astros beat the Cincinnati Reds 9-2.

Cano, 1-1, a 27-year-old right-hander, also pitched his first complete game, striking out two and walking two.

The Reds opened the scoring in the second when Reds starting pitcher Scott Scudder, 4-9, drove in his first major league run with a single.

The Astros scored twice in the fourth when Ken Caminiti walked and scored on Davis' 34th homer. Jimmy Wynn has the team record with 37 in 1967, but Davis' total is the second-highest in team history.

The Reds tied the game 2-2 on Scudder's second RBI single.

The Astros took the lead for good in the fifth when Alex Trevino led off with a single and scored as Steve Lombardozzi tripled into the left field corner. Eric Yelding then drove in Lombardozzi with a single, moved to second on Caminiti's single, to third on Davis' single and scored on Glenn Wilson's grounder.

Houston added three more in the seventh on doubles by Yelding, Craig Biggio and Caminiti, two walks and an RBI grounder by Mark Davidson.

Cubs 6, Cardinals 4

Doug Dascenzo's ninth-inning RBI single broke a tie as the National League East champion Chicago Cubs beat the St. Louis Cardinals.

Joe Girardi, hitting .500 this year against St. Louis, led off the ninth with his second double of the game. Luis Salazar singled him to third and chased reliever John Costello, 5-4. Dascenzo followed with a single off Ken Dayley to drive in the go-ahead run.

NL Roundup

Two outs later, Lloyd McClendon beat out an infield hit against Pat Perry, and Salazar scored from second when third baseman Craig Wilson's throw to first was wild.

Cub second baseman Ryne Sandberg tied the major-league record with his 89th consecutive errorless game, equaling the mark set by Philadelphia's Manny Trillo in 1982. Manager Don Zimmer has allowed Sandberg to play only one inning per game in each of the last three games in order to ensure the record.

Mets 7, Pirates 2

Kevin McReynolds' bases-loaded single scored the go-ahead run and the New York Mets scored five times in the 11th inning to beat the Pittsburgh Pirates.

McReynolds grounded an 0-2 pitch just out of the reach of shortstop Jay Bell off Bill Landrum, 2-3, to score Gregg Jefferies.

Jefferies doubled with one out and moved to third on Dave Magadan's pinch single. Howard Johnson was intentionally walked ahead of McReynolds.

Pinch-hitter Tom O'Malley lined a two-run double to chase Landrum. O'Malley is 6-for-9 with eight RBIs in his last seven games.

Phillies 6, Expos 3

Bruce Ruffin allowed three runs in seven innings and Dickie Thon's two-run triple sparked a three-run fourth as the Philadelphia Phillies defeated the Montreal Expos.

Ruffin, 6-10, allowed eight hits and struck out seven. Todd Frohwirth pitched one inning and Roger McDowell finished for his 22nd save.

Wait'll next year... if there'll be one

By RONALD BLUM
AP Sports Writer

Baseball 1990

For most teams, bats and balls get put away on Sunday. No one really knows when they'll be used again.

For three years, owners and the Major League Baseball Players Association have been talking about the possibility of a strike or a lockout. The Basic Agreement expires at midnight on Dec. 31 and the owners may lock out the players if a new agreement is not reached by either spring training or opening day.

The cry of "Wait 'Til Next Year!" has been replaced by the question: "Will there be a next year?"

"It doesn't look good right now," Atlanta's Dale Murphy said. "Past history shows that negotiations don't get going until it's too late."

"I don't know what to expect," said Danny Cox, the player representative on the St. Louis Cardinals. "I know the players will be united behind our negotiating committee. We won't be giving up anything like free agency or giving up anything on arbitration. Those things are too important and we've worked too hard to get them.

"It's always possible to make compromises in some areas, but I expect us to keep the basic things we've got now. The owners might want to raise the number of years you have to wait for arbitration or free agency, but that's not going to happen."

Free agency and salary arbitration. They are the Glimmer Twins of the players' association. Players with six years service can become free agents and, if they'e good enough, cause bidding wars. Those with at least three years can have an arbitrator determine their pay.

"If we didn't have free-agency or arbitration, you wouldn't make the kind of money you deserve," San Diego's Tony Gwynn said.

But would Gwynn be willing to strike for it?

"There's no question, no question at all," he said. "The reason I'm making the kind of money I'm making is that other guys sacrificed for me."

Salary arbitration for all players with at least two years service was agreed to in 1973. Free agency began in 1976. The average salary in the majors rose from $36,566 in 1973 to about $512,000 on opening day this year.

"Right now it's just a power struggle," Houston's Glenn Davis said. "The owners want total control. What's going on in baseball today is there's a lot of money and everybody can have a share. The owners are making a tremendous amount of money. Just look at the sale of the Seattle ballclub (approximately $76 million) to see what a baseball franchise is worth today. Hopefully, the problem won't be only on the players' side, because we want to play. Look at it realistically. You don't want to kill the goose that laid the golden egg. A strike will severely hurt baseball and that includes the fans."

The owners in the past have proposed a salary cap and seem ready to do it again. The NBA Players Association agreed to a salary cap, $9.8 million this year, in exchange for 53 percent of the sport's revenue. But the baseball union has fought for, successfully, a free-market system.

"As for the owners' proposals regarding the salary cap and free agency, I disagree with everything they're trying to do," Pittsburgh's John Cangelosi said. "It just doesn't make any sense in today's world. It's totally unrealistic. But that's why I'm going to winter ball, in case we get locked out or go on strike. I'll make enough to support my family."

Cangelosi's teammate, John Smiley, has a different viewpoint.

"I don't take exception to the salary cap proposal," he said. "But to my way of thinking, owners still have to pay players what they deserve. I'm not prepared to walk personally over the two issues, but, you can't go against the players' union, and if that's what we have to do, I'll stay home."

The second issue he was referring to is a management plan to link the salaries for second- to sixth-year players with their statistics. The idea, not yet given to the union in detail, is to eliminate salary arbitration, which many owners believes is the primary cause of salary escalation.

" I don't see how that could work, there are just too many variables," said Todd Zeile, a rookie catcher on the Cardinals. "How do you compare a pitcher who pitches at Wrigley Field all year to one who has a ballpark like the one in St. Louis. I don't see how you can compare what players in one league do against what players do in another league. I don't see the players' association going along with idea."

A few players, however, think the owners' plan has merit.

"I have to say it's a pretty good idea," Mark Grace of the Cubs said. "If I have a lousy year, I should get paid what I deserve."

AP Laserphoto

With a lockout in 1990, players will be unable to enjoy the simple pleasures, such as blowing bubbles while perched on the edge of the dugout, something Toronto's Junior Felix enjoys.

For some, it's not a philosophical issue. They want to know how it would change their pay.

"You take team play out of it, what am I going to make: three dollars and fifty cents?" said San Diego's Mark Parent, batting under .200 most of the year.

The decisions will be made by the bargaining committee, which has players. However, the influence of the lawyers who run the union will be strong. Barry Larkin, the assistant player representative on the Cincinnati Reds, said that the players' position will be unified, something that didn't happen in the NFL strike of 1988.

"Whatever the players association agrees to, I think every player will be willing to stand behind," he said. "Our union is very strong and we have planned for things that may happen. We're very unified, and I'm very proud of that. You see things that happened like the football strike when guys crossed the picket line, and I think we learned something from that.

"I think the people we have, Donald Fehr and Mark Belanger, are very good leaders. We've talked quite often this year and have prepared like I said. Hopefully we won't have to strike or the owners won't lock us out, but if either happens, we'll have to deal with it. We're at the point where we can make our stand."

Richard Dotson of the White Sox has been in the majors since 1979. He thinks he has a good perspective.

"Whether the players win or the owners win, you're are still going to make money. What we're going to try and do is ask for a lot. It's just like if the players came in and asked for something outrageous. Just like the owners are. I think what they're asking is kind of in a way, outrageous, and I don't think they're serious. But, that's the way you negotiate."

Frank and Cito share a common bond

Oriole, Blue Jay managers true precedent setters

By GEORGE VECSEY
New York Times News Service

TORONTO — Baseball has had its share of thrilling races over the years, but never before have two black managers met on the final weekend, with one of them about to become the first black manager in a league championship series.

Frank Robinson and Cito Gaston did not plan on any heart-to-heart talks or friendly dinners on this last weekend of the regular baseball season.

Their bond was far less important than their teams' battle for the Eastern Division title in the American League .

"I don't think Frank would be interested," Gaston said with a straight face Friday night as his Toronto Blue Jays prepared to defend their one-game lead over Robinson's Baltimore Orioles.

Both Robinson and Gaston have been named to their jobs since Al Campanis, then an executive with the Los Angeles Dodgers, said in a television interview in 1987 that blacks lacked "some of the necessities" for non-playing jobs.

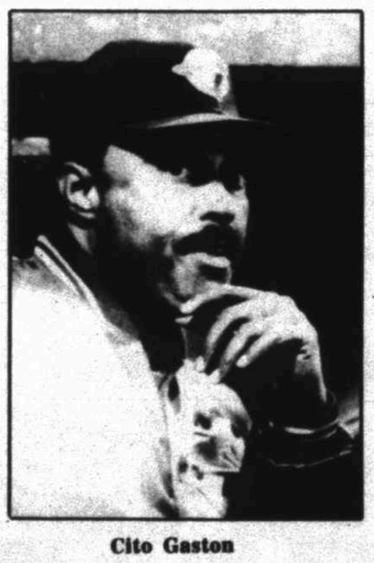

Both Robinson and Gaston have tried to play down the social significance of their meeting this weekend, but they have both been given credit for stabilizing their teams.

The sport has had only four black managers since the major leagues were opened for Jackie Robinson in 1947. Frank Robinson, no relation to Jackie Robinson, had managed the Cleveland Indians and the San Francisco Giants.

Larry Doby had a brief chance with the Chicago White Sox in 1978, and Maury Wills had a short run with the Seattle Mariners in 1980 and 1981.

ASKED ABOUT the impending series against Robinson, Gaston told reporters the other day: "I don't get too emotional about it, To me, it doesn't matter what color you are. I only think about it when you guys bring it up."

"It's going to be us who win it, but if Frank did win it, all it proves is that there are a lot of good people out there," Gaston said. "I know there are a lot more in the minor leagues just looking for their chance."

Cito Gaston

Frank Robinson

The players say Gaston has helped them by letting them know it is all right to relax after a loss, as long as they come back and play hard the next day.

Robinson, a Hall of Fame slugger as a player, and Gaston, a journeyman who had one All-Star season, were coaches for their current respective teams going into the 1987 season.

Baseball quickly began a heavily publicized search for black off-the-field officials after a study showed that of 879 administrative jobs in baseball, only 17 were held by blacks and 13 by Hispanic and Asian employees.

"I was not at all surprised to read those figures," Robinson said in a 1988 book, "Extra Innings," written with Berry Stainback and published by McGraw-Hill Books.

"Normally, the more people who know you are looking for work, the better your chances of being hired. Unless you happen to be black."

In 1988, baseball found that 9 percent of its club administrative officials in 1988 were black, Hispanic or Asian. This year the figure was 15 percent of 1,854 jobs, the commissioner's office said.

THREE DISTINGUISHED black former stars have taken on new posts in the past year. Bill White is the National League president and Bob Watson and Don Baylor have taken front-office roles with the Houston Astros and the Milwaukee Brewers, respectively.

Frank Robinson had the "necessities" in 1987. He had returned as a coach to Baltimore, where he had helped win two World Series as a player, and in October 1987 he was named a special assistant to the president by the club's owner, Edward Bennett Williams.

After the Orioles lost their first six games in 1988, Robinson was named to replace Cal Ripken Sr. as manager, and endured 15 consecutive losses before the Orioles won their first game of the season, on April 29.

The club finished with the worst record in baseball that year, 54 victories and 107 losses, but nobody thought it was Robinson's fault.

This year, the Orioles have stunned baseball by winning 86 games and losing 73, and remaining in contention into the final weekend.

As a player, Robinson was an awesome mixture of power, speed and determination, willing to slide hard, undaunted by knockdown pitches, a caustic presence in the clubhouse.

He readily conceded that in his first two terms as a manager he expected his players to have the same drive, knowledge and skill he had. Now he is gentler, more tolerant.

ROBINSON'S COACHING staff includes three blacks: Alvin Jackson, the pitching coach; Tommy McCraw, the hitting instructor, and Elrod Hendricks, the bullpen coach and a longtime favorite in Baltimore.

"I didn't know Frank very well," Jackson said.

"But Mac knew him," he added, referring to McCraw. "He heard Frank was looking for a pitching coach and he recommended me.

"I don't think Frank hired us because we're black, but you've got to be comfortable with your coaches. That's the way it's always been."

Jackson recalled that after one bad loss, Robinson was urged to yell at the players, but the manager said: "Naw, they're busting their tails. It won't help to yell."

That approach is also followed by Clarence Edwin Gaston. Now 45, Gaston was the Blue Jays' hitting instructor when the "necessities" furor struck in 1987.

He was an adviser to George Bell, a temperamental player from the Dominican Republic, and many other Blue Jays during the tense final weeks of a race the Jays would lose.

After the Jays lost 24 of their first 36 games this year, Jimy Williams was dismissed as manager. The Toronto management did not want to promote a coach who might be too friendly with the players.

But after Lou Piniella was unable to secure his release from a contract as a broadcaster with the Yankees, the Toronto officials turned to Gaston as interim manager.

Gaston has been patient with the frequent questions about two black men managing against each other for a division title.

"Whether I'm comfortable with it or not, it's going to come up," Gaston said. "It's part of history."

Lieberman-Cline making news off the court

By BARRY WILNER

NEW YORK (AP) — Making history on the court has come second nature to Nancy Lieberman-Cline, the most prominent women's basketball player this country has produced.

She is at it again. Lieberman-Cline, whose deadeye shooting made her a star on the college, international and professional level, has her sights set on the 1992 Olympics. Does anyone doubt she'll be accurate in her latest chase?

"I'm back after nine years, playing for the U.S. team again," says the 31-year-old Lieberman-Cline, whose amateur status has been restored by FIBA, the world governing body for the sport. "I went to Brazil when we had to qualify for the world championships. All my teammates were 19, 20, 21 and I'm 31. It shocked a lot of people that I could come back."

Lieberman-Cline has come back because she felt "there still is plenty of basketball left in me." But she makes it clear she is not one of those athletes who tries a comeback because retirement has been too difficult.

"I've had a fairly smooth transition into seeing what retirement might be like," she says. "At the height of my career, my league (the Women's Basketball League) folded. It was really scary. I kind of feel like I have a second chance in life.

"But I can see the importance of counseling for people to make the transition. If you can get the qualified people to hold seminars on retirement and talk to athletes about what they aspire to be or do after their careers, which are very short, it's important."

That is one area she sees the Women's Sports Foundation playing a major role as it enters its second decade of helping female athletes.

> "I've had a fairly smooth transition into seeing what retirement might be like. At the height of my career, the league folded. It was really scary. I kind of feel like I have a second chance in life.
>
> — Nancy Lieberman

Lieberman-Cline is an old-new athlete. She has had a Hall of Fame career — the youngest player on the 1976 Olympic team that won a silver medal; a member of the 1980 squad that boycotted the Moscow Games; the first woman to play in a men's pro league, the USBL, in 1986; the top draft choice of the Women Basketball League in 1980. And she is back for more.

"I think I'm a special case," she says. "I grew up playing like a little boy in schoolyards. I played on boys basketball teams because I always was as good as the guys.

"How can I gripe? The Lakers let me play for them in the California summer league, the USBL opened its doors for me. Yeah, maybe I could give them exposure and credibility, but the other side was if I was not able to play at a certain level, they would have said, 'Forget this, let's quit the sideshow.'

"I've played in charity games with Spud and Magic — it's just a fantasy for me. I've been able to overcome a lot of situations where girls do not have equality of opportunity."

And she's been able to serve as an example for young women trying to beat those odds.

"If there is a role for me to help the foundation — I'm still competing and can't devote the time I would like to — I see myself once I finish with my sport being able to help different movements progress further. Right now, my help is to compete at the best of my abilities.

"Here we are, representing the United States around the world and it's nice to have the Women's Sports Foundation to help the different women achieve their goals. What they try to do is focus in on a lot of different areas, but most important is trying to fund athletes to pursue their goals. As far as being recognized for women to do sports and be accepted; people must realize sports are not just for boys and this is a way to get that recognition."

Britton takes four-shot lead at Centel

By BRENT KALLESTAD

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — Bill Britton enjoyed a number of career firsts in Saturday's third round of the Centel Classic. He'd like one more on Sunday — his first PGA Tour victory.

"I'm a good sleeper and that helps," Britton said after shooting a 9-under 63 to take a four-shot lead over Ronnie Black.

It was the best round in Britton's nine seasons on the PGA Tour and gave him the lead entering the final round for the first time.

"I'm going to just try and play one shot at a time," he said. "I won't look at it as a cushion."

Britton was at 16-under 200 after 54 holes, within range of Jeff Sluman's 1985 tournament record of 269, after shooting nine birdies in a bogey-free round over the 7,098-yard Killearn Country Club course.

"Any time you do anything good in this game, it's a big confidence builder," he said.

He ranks 87th in winnings this season with $150,178. The closest he's come to a PGA Tour victory was in 1982, when he lost a playoff at the Walt Disney Classic.

Britton began his pro career in 1980 and got as high as 57th on the earnings list two years later. But he began to struggle in 1983, lost his playing card in 1986 and had to go to qualifying school to get back on the Tour.

Black, who started the day one shot off the lead after back-to-back 67s, had a 70 and was second at 204. Gary Hallberg, a former Wake Forest star, shot a 66 and was third at 205.

"I need to get straightened out to put early pressure on Bill," Black said. "Bill controls his own destiny."

Second-round leader Tom Pernice Jr., Mike Reid and Bill Buttner were six shots back at 206. Pernice shot a 1-over-par 73.

Seven players were at 207, including hometown favorite Kenny Knox, who grew up in Tallahassee and played college golf at Florida State.

Also at 207 were Tom Byrum, Tim Simpson, Tim Norris, Peter Jacobsen, Hale Irwin and Leonard Thompson, who shot a 65 Saturday.

SWC's Jacoby undergoes heart transplant

DALLAS (AP) — Southwest Conference commissioner Fred Jacoby was listed in critical condition at a hospital Saturday after undergoing a heart transplant, officials said.

The surgery was performed Friday night at St. Paul Medical Center by cardiologist W. Steves Ring.

Jacoby, 61, was admitted to the hospital's intensive care unit Aug. 27. Officials said Jacoby had suffered congestive heart failure in late April.

SWC president James Vick said was told Jacoby might return to work part-time in two or three months, if his recovery goes well.

"I think if you asked Fred, he'd plan to return faster than that," Vick said.

Jacoby became the conference's fourth commissioner in 1982, succeeding retiring Cliff Speegle. Before joining the SWC, Jacoby was Mid-American Conference commissioner. He is a past president of the Collegiate Commissioners Association.

JIM & HELEN WELSCH

We want the people of Midland to know what wonderful people we have living on the 3600 and 3700 blocks of Gulf Avenue.

We understand that hey held an inter-denomination prayer circle in our front yard as the ambulance pulled away taking Jim to the hospital.

Also thanks to all our friends for their prayers, keeping our yard, garden, flowers, picking up our mail, bringing food, feeding the cat and the cards and phone calls both here and in Houston.

God Bless each one of you. We love all of you.

CAR TALK!

BY TOM AND RAY MAGLIOZZI

WHY DO NEW CARS NEED BREAK-IN PERIODS

Dear Tom and Ray:

Is it true that driving a new car fast from the very beginning, instead of slowly as the book tells you to, will "set" the engine in some way so that it gets better mileage later on? A mechanic told me that. — Nancy

TOM: I think this guy's trying to "set" it so that he'll have plenty of business later on. Break-in periods are necessary for most cars. During break-in, when you are instructed to drive at moderate and varied speeds, the piston rings get a chance to "seat" — that is to conform to the exact shape of the cylinder. If they don't seat correctly, the cylinder wall can get scratched and scored, and the engine will burn oil. More importantly, if spaces develop between the pistons and cylinder walls, compression will be poor and power will be diminished.

RAY: Cars used to have elaborate break-in periods. You had to use special oil, you had to park the car facing east in the morning. Now the break-in period is inversely proportional to the quality of workmanship. The average car needs to be driven gently for the first thousand miles or so. A car like a BMW 535i, with its superior workmanship, requires no break-in period — the book just cautions you to keep it under 150 MPH for a few weeks. On the other end of the scale, my brother is still trying to break in his four-year-old Yugo.

Dear Tom and Ray:

One cold winter night I pulled into a parking lot with my 1973 Pontiac LeMans. Before I shut down the engine, somebody asked for a jump start. Me being the nice guy that I am, and she being of the opposite sex, I jump started her car. Then I disconnected the cables and shut off my car. Three hours later, my car started right up, but I had no lights, no heater, no radio, nothing electrical! I followed a friend home, since I had no lights, and about 10 minutes down the road, everything came back on. What happened? — Frank

TOM: There are two cables attached to the negative battery terminal of your LeMans. One goes to the engine block and acts as a ground for the starter motor. The other grounds everything else. In your distracted euphoria, you accidentally disturbed that second wire and loosened the connection. Some benevolent bump on your drive home was enough to jar the connection back into place. If the connection is that precarious, get it fixed. Next time you may not be so lucky.

RAY: And in the future, Frank, pay closer attention to what's really important...get her phone number.

Dear Tom and Ray:

Please comment on whether I should buy a preowned Porsche and give my '85 Ford Tempo to my son for a graduation present (let me mention that we are not that close). My other idea is to buy a preowned RX-7 to give him and keep my Tempo since it seems to be running OK now and since I took your advice and bought four new tires. — Alice

RAY: If you're happy with an '85 Tempo, you have no business driving a Porsche. If you're not that close to your son, you shouldn't buy him something as wonderful as an RX-7.

TOM: But since you would consider giving an RX-7 to an offspring you're not even that close to, we think you deserve a new car. The obvious solution is to give him your '85 Tempo, and buy yourself a brand new Tempo.

Only a Window Away . . .

A bright, spacious, open home can make one feel there is room to grow and make a homeowner proud to live there. Light, bright rooms are seen throughout this week's feature home, which boasts four bedrooms and three baths and is located in Saddle Club South.

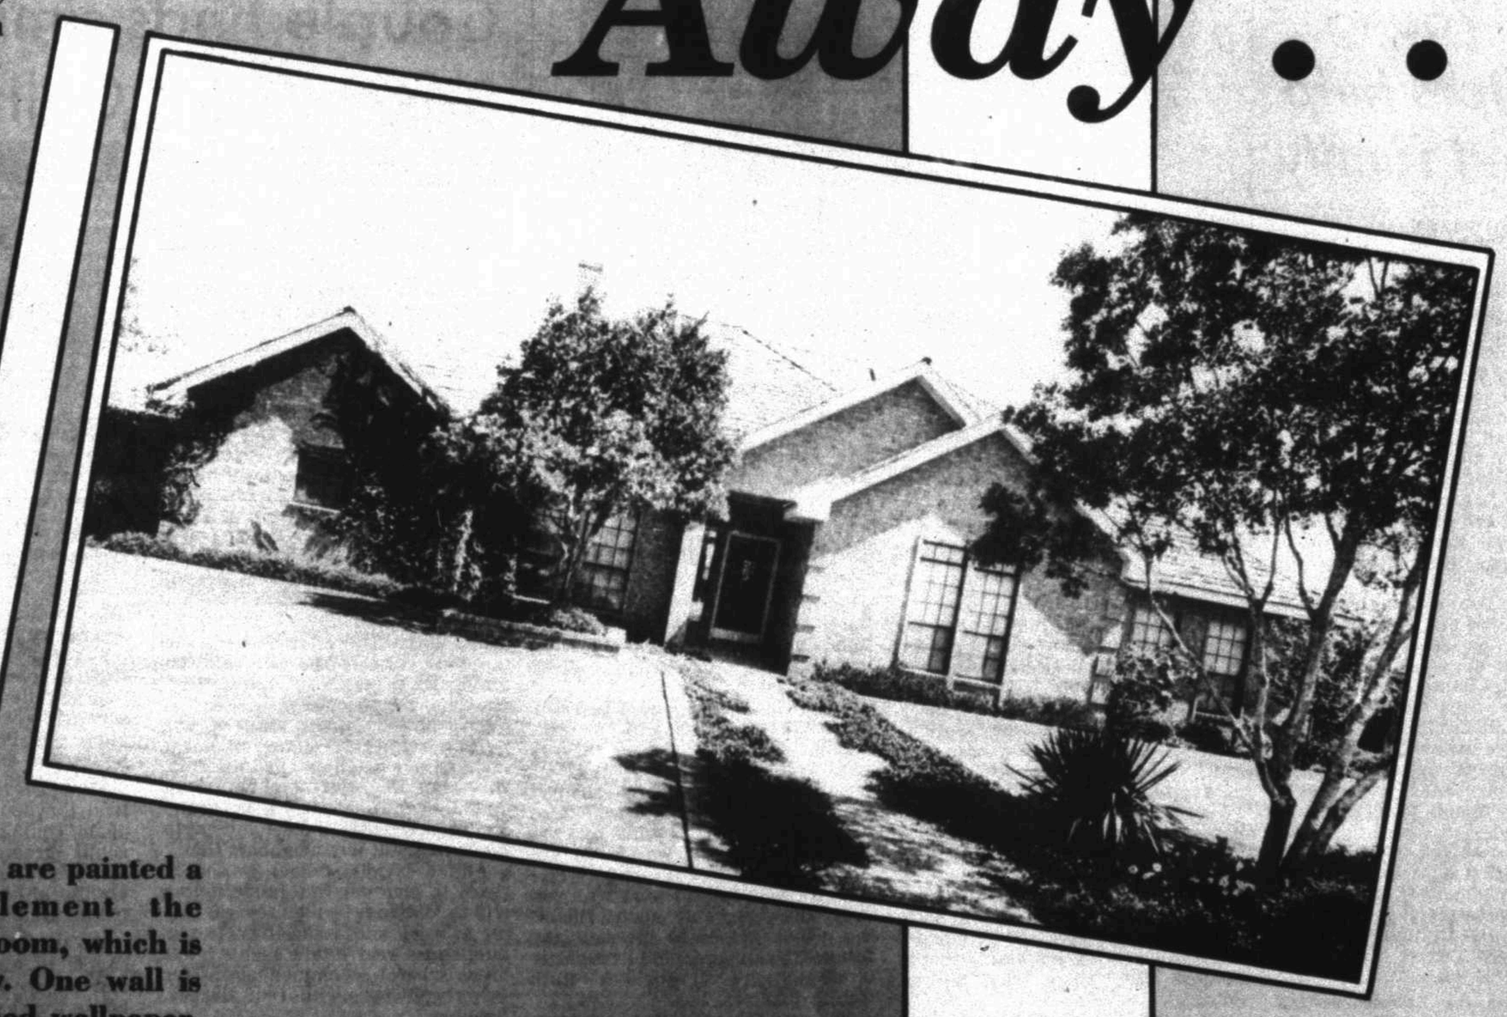

STEPPING over the threshold and into the entryway a person immediately notices the open spaces, that encompass the formal living and dining rooms. White tiles with oak wood framing decorate the entry floor. Light pours into this bright space through a dominant wall of windows, which views the backyard.

THE STUCCO walls in this area are painted a bright raspberry and complement the wallcovering in the formal dining room, which is located to the left of the entryway. One wall is adorned with a flame stitch patterned wallpaper. Burgundy, mauve, navy and dark green colors brighten the dining area. A large window views the front yard.

A glass chandelier hangs over the dining table. The dining room, livingroom and entryway is visually separated by a white brick pillar.

ACROSS from the dining area lies the formal living room.

Top right, the charming kitchen is a great place for the family to gather. It is illuminated by an oak framed light fixture while oak cabinets follow three walls. White tile covers the floor and a glass door leads to the side patio.

Bottom photo, the children's room has a border which is decorated in primary colored kites. It is hung midway around the room. A door leads into a full bath and a customized closet is located in the room.

A brick fireplace centers an interior wall and is flanked by built in oak bookcases. The beautiful oak mantel is positioned over a brass screened fireplace. A fan extends from the ceiling to cool a homeowner on hot Texas days while recessed lighting add a soft tone to this comfortable room.

At one end of the living room lies an atrium, which is overflowing with greenery and is illuminated by a skylight. The openness of the living room is reflected on a mirrored wall in the atrium.

A small corner bar is positioned beside the atrium and is equipped with a sink and below the counter cabinets for storage of glassware. The bar is open to the atrium and formal living room for quick pass throughs of food or drink.

To the left of the formal dining room a white tile floor leads into the rectangular shaped kitchen and breakfast area. Oak cabinets are positioned along three walls and add to the kitchens fresh look. The front yard can be seen through a window above the sink, which also adds to the charm of the kitchen.

An island stove is centered below an oak framed checkerboard style light fixture. Kitchen appliances include reverse osmosis water, a G.E. dishwasher, oven and a G.E. cooktop with grill.

Above the cabinets baskets or pots can be arranged for visual beauty. A built in desk and shelves for cookbook storage is perfect for planning weekly shopping or copying favorite recipes. Pastel colored wallcoverings in various complementary patterns add soft color overall to the kitchen. A pantry is located in the kitchen for additional storage.

The utility room, positioned through the kitchen, has built in cabinets and is large enough to accommodate an ironing board. The side yard is framed through a small window in this room.

The opposite end of the kitchen features a breakfast area. A built in oak china cabinet is situated along one wall. Cabinets and drawers conceal dishes and silverware while glass doors display beautiful china and glassware. Opposite the hutch a wall of windows, centered by a patio door, provides access to the side covered patio. This area is perfect for a quiet fall breakfast, where a homeowner can grab a chance to read. Another door in the kitchen opens into a two-car garage with automatic door openers.

Following the white oak framed tile floor back through the formal living area a hall leads to the children's sleeping quarters. The first room to the right is cheerfully decorated in bright primary colors. A border is positioned midway along the wall and displays red, green, blue and yellow kites. A window overlooks the front yard. A walk in customized closet is located within the room.

A door opens into a full bath, which adjoins a second bedroom. The bath houses white cabinets and a large mirror is centered over a double sink vanity. A sliding door conceals a tub and shower area, which adds privacy for the children. Tulips splashed with primary colors decorate the walls.

Located conveniently through the bath is a second bedroom. Two windows frame the front yard. A border is hung halfway along the wall and displays red, green, blue and yellow trains.

A linen closet is situated in the hall for additional storage of towels and sheets.

Following the hall back to the living room a family room is located next to the atrium. This room is perfect for the children's playroom, a guest room, study or a family room. A built in desk with plenty of shelving for books or pottery stretches along one wall while the opposite wall features a patio door accessing an additional side patio. Mauve colored paint covers the stucco walls and extend to the vaulted ceiling. A closet with built ins is also located within the room.

A full bath is conveniently situated off this room and also adjoins the living area. Pastel colored wallpaper decorates the walls in this bath. A matching border lines itself along two walls.

Through the living room a door opens into the master bedroom. The walls, which are painted a mint green, surround this large room. A large window views the backyard. A french door opens onto the backyard patio.

Stepping into the master bath, his and her vanities are positioned back-to-back and are divided by large mirrors. Next to the vanities a long walk through customized closet is located for his and her private dressing. Along one wall white built-in cabinets and drawers store linens and towels or can house clothing. Other amenities in the bathroom include a vanity dressing table and recessed lighting.

Stepping outside through the patio door in the master bedroom, one notices the lush landscaping, which follows along the fence line. The covered patio is a perfect spot for outside fall entertaining. The backyard is large enough to accommodate a playset and a chained link fence houses the dog.

Other amenities include a sprinkler system, compressed stone patios and walkways, and exterior landscape lighting.

RE/MAX of Midland is offering this fabulous family home for $139,900.

Ruth Young Realtors help Atwell family

By SUE GUTIERREZ
Advertising Feature Writer

Ruth Young helps Jeff and Debra Atwell find home after a year long search. On left, Ruth Young discusses sale of home with Jeff Atwell, on right.

Being patient, shopping around and finding just the right house was what Jeff and Debra Atwell had in mind for more than a year. With the help of Ruth Young of Ruth Young Realtors, Inc. they were able to locate their ideal home.

"We looked for a long time at what seemed like a million houses before finding this one," explains Jeff Atwell. "We were looking to upgrade from the cramped space of our townhouse, but couldn't seem to find the home that met all of our needs."

Strangely enough their dream house was listed just down the street from them for more than seven months, but it never dawned on them that this house might work. "I drove by it every day, but didn't even think about taking a look inside." Finding a house right across the street that meets your needs doesn't usually happen, but it happened to the Atwell's thanks to Ruth Young Realtors, Inc.

"When we walked in the door, it was love at first sight, especially for Debra," explains Jeff. "The floor plan was perfect and it was a lot bigger than the townhouse. I think our Yorkshire Terrier, Fifi, is still lost in all this space."

Young met the Atwell's several years ago through Jeff's financial planning business, Atwell & Associates. He has been in business since 1984 along with his wife and partner, Debra. Financial planning is the Atwell's business, focusing mainly on retirement plans, employee benefits, investment plans and tax consulting. Debra also finds time to be involved in the American Cancer Society and Act IX, a Midland Community Theatre group.

Jeff and Debra Atwell grew up in Tahoka, Texas, just 30 miles south of Lubbock. Although they attended high school together, they didn't date until after Jeff graduated from Texas Tech University. The Atwell's have been married for eight and a half years and moved to Midland in 1986.

"We chose Ruth Young because she has a good reputation and she's successful," explains Jeff. "I like doing business with successful people because they know what they're doing."

"We are happy to have chosen Ruth Young and stuck with her all the way, even though it took quite a while to find a home," continued Jeff. "We were able to upgrade to a larger house and still lower our monthly payments. Ann Lovett, a mortgage loan officer from Team Bank was also very helpful with the financing. She was easy to work with and our loan was approved in just 10 days."

"We're glad we found a house in our neighborhood because we have friends next door and we're very comfortable here."

Ruth Young revealed that she was glad to have helped the Atwell's find their ideal home. "I felt like this was it, the minute we walked in the door," explains Young. "The Atwell's were easy to work with and very knowledgeable about financing, which helped to speed up the process. Making people's lives easier is what we're all about at Ruth Young Realtors, Inc."

The road to a new house was long, but well worth the time and patience it took to find it. The Atwell's are another Ruth Young Realtors success story. They upgraded to a larger home, stayed within their comfortable neighborhood and still have lower monthly payments.

Couple finds similarities between Bakersfield, California and Midland

George and Becky Nilsen and their two and a half year old daughter Jessica, were recently transferred by his employer from Bakersfield, Calif. to Midland. When asked to compare the two cities, Nilsen commented, "Bakersfield is somewhat larger than Midland, but otherwise the two towns are similar in respects."

"For instance, the downtown areas are comparable and we've found relatively the same number of shopping centers, theaters and restaurants here. Midland also appears to be very much a family town, much like Bakersfield. We don't anticipate any great changes in our lifestyle here, other than not having the ocean and mountains nearby."

"We were especially impressed with the fact that Midland is such a family oriented town," continued Mrs. Nilsen. "There are a lot of families here our own age with children for Jessica to play with. And the people here are so cordial."

"We already know most of our neighbors better than we knew many of our neighbors in California. On Labor Day, our neighbors Jean and Jim Oldfield had a barbeque and we were able to meet and get to know many of our neighbors then."

Added Nilsen, "Once we were ready to plan our first homefinding trip to Midland, I called several people at work and asked them to recommend a real estate agent. I was given several recommendations for Beverly Dwyer, with Don Harvey, Realtors."

"We told Beverly we did not know Midland at all," explained Mrs. Nilsen, "so we wanted to see all areas that might fit our needs and just get a feeling for prices and types of areas. In our minds, we at first hoped to find an older home in a more established neighborhood. Beverly was very good about getting to know our tastes and our price range. By the second day we like almost all of the homes we looked at."

But the couple did not find an older home they could agree on completely and began looking at new construction. "I took them to a new home on Polo Parkway that was built by Kelly Young, a Midland homebuilder," recalled Ms. Dwyer. "The minute we walked in, George and Becky got very quiet and I could tell it was love at first sight. When they arrived back in California, George called and said he and Becky wanted to write a contract on the house on Polo Parkway, but the house had already sold."

When the Nilsens returned to Midland, they looked at other homes but again couldn't find anything they could agree on. "We had fallen in love with Kelly Young's house and nothing else measured up to it," Mrs. Nilsen added.

Ms. Dwyer then arranged for the couple to meet with Kelly Young and discuss building the same basic house for them. "We went through his inventory of lots and selected one in Polo Estates. We chose a corner lot so we could have a side entry garage. We also have a bay window on the side and wanted an open view from it."

"We changed our minds on a number of things as the house was being built," said Nilsen. "I would tell Kelly our general ideas and he was always able to find a way to implement necessary changes and make them work."

Now that the Nilsens are moved into their new home, they are beginning to direct their attentions a little more toward activities outside the home. They have already attended Summer Mummers and Becky confided that she enjoyed throwing popcorn as much as she enjoyed the performance.

They are also looking forward to attending the ballet, symphonies and the Museum of the Southwest. And when the snow begins to fall, the Nilsens plan to make a few ski trips to such places as Ruidoso, Taos and Santa Fe, New Mexico.

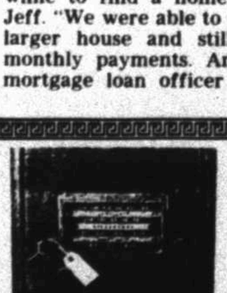

Nilsen was born and raised in Merrick, New York. He later attended Bucknell University in Pennsylvania, where he obtained his degree in chemical engineering. Following graduation, Nilsen accepted a position with Gulf Oil in Bakersfield, Calif. as a production engineer. In 1981, he left Gulf to join Petro-Lewis as a production and reservoir engineer. Santa Fe Energy Company purchased some Petro-Lewis properties in 1987. It was Santa Fe Energy that recently transferred Nilsen to Midland.

Mrs. Nilsen was born in Durant, Okla., but moved with her family to Bakersfield when she was only two-years-old. She had utilized her background as a legal secretary to begin her own secretarial service in Bakersfield before their transfer.

Since arriving in Midland, Mrs. Nilsen has been involved in volunteer work with Casa de Amigos. She is also considering continuing her college work in the area of nutrition and possibly pursuing a new career in that area.

She just knew someone would want it. Finally, she got on the right wavelength and called classifieds.

You're Looking At Some Of The Most Valuable Retail Space In Midland.

State fair requires year-round effort

Q&A. From C14

firms for big jobs Gemstar the old Harry T Campbell Co does all of our racetrack work Degarmo Constructors & Associates does all of our maintenance work We use several roofing companies that are all local American Totalisator [the company that provides and maintains the computerized odds machines use at the track] which is just up the street, still comes in and does our 10 days of racing Everything of that type which is year-round is strictly local

Q. When do you begin work on the fair?

A. We've already started next year's One of my standing jokes to people who ask what I do the other 50 weeks a year is to say absolutely nothing It couldn't be farther from the truth By the first of November we'll have a lot of stuff completed for next year

Q. Suppose a local caterer wants to have a stand for the fair"

A. That's possible Probably the biggest eating stand out there is La Fontaine Bleu The owner wanted to get in the fair so I got him together with Deggeller and they talked it out and Deggeller agreed The Deggeller people tell me that the demand to have food operations here is by far greater than at any other fair they play

Q. How well in advance are booths, rides and such booked"

A. We have a standing contract with Deggeller They close in Manassas [Va] the 20th and they will immediately tear down and start rolling in here Some will probably start arriving the night of the 20th and most will arrive Saturday the 21st By Sunday the 22nd you will probably see things taking form

Q. Are the midway games examined for fairness"

A. Constantly and completely throughout the fair We have a list of games that are absolutely no-nos ones that I know are bad The problems you can have with midway games are the operators A few years ago this happened It was an innocent-looking game It involved two coke bottles on a six-foot bowling alley-type set-up They put the two bottles together and the customer rolled a softball at them — knock them both down and win a prize The vice squad observed one guy that they thought was setting up the bottles badly When done properly the vice squad had no problems with the game What this guy was doing was cocking one of the bottles ahead of the other The vice squad watched him and came to me and I said "If you are convinced, let's lock him up " The vice squad lost the case because he wasn't the owner of the game and had nothing to gain That's an example of how closely they are watched There are games out there that are stealing more than a guy with a gun or knife I know what they are, and they aren't here

Q. Who checks the rides for safety"

A. The state of Maryland Maryland probably has the best inspection program in the entire United States There's not a meeting I go to, and I go to a lot of industry meetings, where some one doesn't ask for a copy of our law, or a contact person at the Department of Licensing and Regulation, to pattern a law after or answer a question about a specific thing Maryland's head inspector is a man named Dan Dudley and if there is a problem in another state he is often called as an expert witness He's that good That's not to say that something is not going to happen We had a child come off a ride last year But what it going to prevent is something being neglected or something broken or something being put up improperly One thing that inspection does if there is a marginal ride operator he won't even come to Maryland

Q. It is probably cheaper to take the family to an Orioles game than to the State Fair for the night Do you think the fair is reasonably priced"

A. I think we are and I base that judgment on the success the fair has shown the last few years I very much believe that if the price structure is wrong the public will let you know It would be wonderful to sell 25-cent hot dogs and rides for a nickel But consider that some of these pieces of equipment cost well up in six figures I understand that if you come out with two kids and wife you can go through some serious money quickly But if you look for specials we run you can save money We have one where you can come out and for $7 ride all the rides all day long So it's something we're concerned about

Q. Along those lines, have you seen attendance at the exhibition halls, with the 4-H, handicraft, and cooking displays, increasing as the price of food, rides and games goes up and up"

A. I think the people that ride the rides are still going to ride the rides There are many different kinds of people that come to the fair Some fairs have been very successful with $5 00 per-the price which includes all the rides The Ohio State fair does that Our midway is not big enough to do that We put about 40 rides out there The State Fair of Virginia puts 85 to 90 rides We're doing that $7 special on Labor Day I certainly wouldn't do it the day before Labor Day because traditionally that is our biggest day

Q. Has the focus of the fair's importance changed since racing was limited to the 10-day run of the fair"

A. I've been here since 1965 At that point in time the fair was secondary to the racetrack I felt the fair was where the potential was As things changed we were able to make some improvements and do some things We've built a lot of new buildings But the biggest change once we got those new buildings is the amount of off-season events we have I would guess there are at least 150 event days this year It's a shame this place isn't bigger because the people need more I can't tell you the number of events I have to turn down I wish we had 250 acres here and a half dozen buildings I could keep them busy

Dollar firm in early European trading

C11

Reuter

LONDON The dollar firmed and the West German mark was especially weak in early European trading today, suggesting that central banks may again feel they have to intervene to try to stabilize exchange rates this week

The dollar rose to 1 9130 marks at the opening in Frankfurt from 1 8935 at the London close on Friday It was trading around 134 yen, only a little up against Japan's currency The mark slipped sharply against the yen and other currencies

In Tokyo the dollar closed at 133 88 yen and 1 9123 West German marks

Dealers saw a risk of dollar sales by the West German Bundesbank, perhaps aided by other central banks to defend the mark and there was speculation of further increases in Bundesbank interest rates to attract funds back into marks

"The main focus is still on the dollar" said Eckhart Hager currency analyst at Chase Bank AG in Frankfurt who believes the dollar could rise as high as 1 95 marks

London stocks were mostly easier in thin early trading today Nervousness over the possibility of higher world and British interest rates continued to weigh on the market

Tokyo stock prices opened the week lower in quiet trading with most traders seemingly taking a summer siesta brokers said

Those trying Teens

The angry boy screamed at his younger sister, grabbing her cupcake and pushing her away. "Mine," he shrieked. "No, mine," she shrieked back, with all the belligerence of a two-year-old.

This would not be an unusual scene between toddlers, but these siblings weren't experiencing their "terrible twos." Instead, the brother and sister were experiencing their "terrible teens."

Is there some strange biological change which occurs in the two-year-old mind and the 13-year-old psyche which links these emotions? Is there a chemical imbalance which induces toddlers and teenagers to throw temper tantrums and embarrass their parents in public?

There is a connection, according to Jim May, director of the Family Wellness Center. "The developmental stages of an infant (1-3) and an adolescent (12-20) are similar. Both stages focus on the ego," he said. "Infants are learning self-control, and teenagers are trying to develop their self-identity. Typically, teenagers are trying to separate and differentiate themselves from their parents."

When developing their sense of independence, teenagers have a tendency to go back and forth, from parent to peer group, according to Ed Rowley, pastoral counselor of Samaritan Counseling Center. At certain times, teens will demand more freedom, but at other times they will seek closeness with a parent, Rowley said. "Teenagers may try to get close to the parent by asking a question. They may have a need to talk," he said.

PARENTS CAN expect their teenagers to go through behavioral changes and to assert themselves. These teens may even have sudden outbursts, but parents should know that this is normal behavior. It's not unusual for teenagers to suddenly become embarrassed to be seen with their parents in public, according to Rowley.

"It's natural for teenagers to want to separate themselves from their family at times," Rowley said, especially if the teen-ager rejects some activity with their parent because they are afraid of appearing childish.

TEENS

"What other people — especially their peers — think of them, becomes crucial," May said. "Teenagers become totally involved in their ego. Their whole world revolves around 'I.' "

May said that although stages between infants and teenagers are similar, "teenagers are more dangerous to handle. They have more negative behavior options; joy riding, drinking."

The second part of finding a self identity involves teenagers' relationships to their peers, May said. "A teenager will try to match himself up with his peer group. Having the right clothes and the right music for that peer group takes on importance," he said.

"If the persons with leadership roles in that peer group indulge in destructive behavior with drugs or alcohol, then the teenager — who wants to fit in — will take up that behavior, too," May said.

Teenagers who are trying to find a sense of identity may make fun of those who don't fit into their peer groups. "They are highly critical of parents and everyone else not in the peer group," May said, adding that the best way for parents to combat that behavior is to tell the teenager that they don't want to hear negative stories about someone else.

Rowley said problems arise when parents don't see their teenagers for their "personhood, who they are other than a brilliant student or football hero. The parent should try to relate to the teenager in a personal way."

Although it's normal for teenagers to disagree with their parents somewhat, parents should know when behavior is getting out of hand.

By asserting themselves, teenagers may begin to rebel, according to Rowley. "Identity is a very important issue to the teenager," Rowley said. "Teenagers may argue with their parents saying, 'I'm not you.' They may take the opposite viewpoint of their parents ideas and values."

MAY SAID parents should realize that rebellion may be a cry for attention. And teenagers often feel, "Negative attention is better than no attention," he said.

Rebellion becomes a problem when teenagers' completely change their behavior, according to both counselors. "Teenagers can become a danger to themselves," Rowley said, "especially when they won't eat, sleep or act responsible."

Rowley said involving teenagers in setting up rules, such as curfew times, can motivate a teenager to stick to the rules. "Having the teenager name the consequence for coming home late gives them some empowerment, that way all the rules aren't just coming from the parent," he said.

The greatest motivation for a teenager to cooperate for the teen to be willing to be part of the family. "You can't help the teenager, otherwise," Rowley said.

Emotional outbursts, playing loud music, insisting on dressing like everyone else, and avoiding parents is normal behavior for teenagers. Trouble arises when either the parent or the teenager refuses to talk to each other. "When either the parent or the teenager tries to open up a conversation and the other party refuses to speak, then you are in trouble," Rowley said. "Depression — which can lead to suicide — is also serious. Signs of depression include withdrawal from friends, a change in sleeping and eating patterns, low energy levels and an inability to take care of things."

MAY SUGGESTED having family meetings to keep the lines of communication open between parent and teenager. "Once the teenager shuts the parent out, the parent doesn't know what's happening," May said. "The home environment is a laboratory for experiment. Children learn to argue, share their feelings and defend their opinions. Just saying 'no' will not get them out of negative situations with their peers. They need to be able to argue their points effectively. Children who aren't allowed to defend their opinions at home won't develop effective communication skills."

Rowley said parents should try to speak frankly and honestly with teenagers. "Show concern, rather than trying to manipulate the teenager. Teenagers can sense when the parent is trying to help," he said.

May said parents should be vigilant in observing their teenagers behavior, but not intrusive. "Teenagers have the right to protect their space, and the boundaries of their space usually increases as they get older," he said. "Teenagers should have the right to say 'no' to their parents," May added. "They may have to suffer consequences for doing so. But, it will alleviate problems with co-dependency, where the person's happiness depends on the happiness of someone else. It's important to allow teenagers to make a choice. 'You choose' are important words."

May said that the most important purpose parents have it to "launch teenagers into life."

SOME WARNING signs that teenagers' behavior is getting out of hand are:

■ POOR GRADES in school. Teenagers in trouble lose their ability to concentrate. Their grades may fluctuate or plummet.

■ DEPRESSION. Teenagers who keep to themselves, ignore their friends, stay in their room or leave the house at every opportunity, may be experiencing depression.

■ INCREASING HOSTILITY. Some hostility and emotional outbursts can be expected as normal part of teenage rebellion. When teenagers argue or yell at the slightest provocation, it's time to get help. Verbal or physical abuse also spells trouble.

■ SOCIAL BEHAVIOR changes. Teenagers who suddenly break off friendships, especially long-standing friendships, may be depressed. Those who suddenly make new sets of friends, may be choosing friends in similar distress, or be getting involved with drugs.

■ SECRETIVE BEHAVIOR. Teenagers who suddenly begin lying, or acting like they have something to hide, may have something to hide, such as drug use.

College freshman face high health risks

By DONNA KATO
New York Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — As the fall semester winds down, first time freshman will be thinking of registering for the spring semester. In the rush to register for classes, find a place to live and make new friends, college freshmen often are very careless when it comes to maintaining their health. And their negligence usually gets worse as the semester wears on, according to campus health experts.

"Students today have stresses and social pressures their parents may not even be aware of," explained Anne Higley of the American College Health Association, a Maryland-based support and educational organization of schools and individuals in health-related fields.

Campus health centers, once jokingly referred to as "student death centers," now are modeled after health maintenance organizations (HMOs) with a team of physicians and health practitioners available to meet a variety of student needs, she said. What's more, in the last five years, there has been a noticeable increase in the number of students utilizing the centers.

NATIONALLY, THE most common reasons college students seek medical attention are for upper respiratory tract infections, problems related to sex, and accidents, said Paula Swinford, director of health education for the University of Southern California (USC) Student Health Center.

"Alcohol and other drugs play an important role in all three of these health problems," she said. "Stress is also a factor; everything is interrelated with a student's overall lifestyle."

For most young adults, college is the first time they must make decisions previously handled by a parent — such as calling a physician, said Dr. Carol L. Otis, staff physician of the Student Health Service at the University of California, Los Angeles, (UCLA) and an adjunct assistant professor of medicine at the university's medical center.

"Most kids fall into two categories: those who worry excessively about every little health problem and those who feel immortal and may take risks (that may affect their health) with the attitude that nothing will harm them."

In her book, "Campus Health Guide" (The College Board; $14.95), Otis breaks down the most common student health problems into 12 chapters, including one on environmental health. The most important, as she sees it, is the chapter on prevention.

"We're talking about everyday health habits, really," Otis said. "If a child grew up in a health-conscious home, parents will be relieved to know that, by and large, family values do transfer to a new environment."

Her book is among those written as reference guides specifically for the college student. It not only answers straightforward questions such as, "Do greasy foods cause acne?" (they don't) but provides answers to questions a young adult may be too embarrassed to ask face to face.

"COLLEGE STUDENTS are smart; they know what causes AIDS and how to avoid getting a sexually transmitted disease," Otis said. "What they lack are the communication skills to relate that to a partner. They're afraid of rejection, and asking about someone's sexual history is very difficult. I wanted to give them some skills for communicating the personal issues that confront them."

Two health-related ailments that seem to strike a number of freshmen sometime within the first semester are stress and weight gain.

"There's stress that comes from life changes (in college) and weight gain that comes from life changes. Then there's also a relationship between stress and eating habits," explained Anita Siegman, a Brentwood psychologist and former director of the counseling services for USC. For instance, a nervous student studying for his first big exam may snack away on potato chips and cookies in an effort to relieve the tension. Instead, the extra pounds add to the stress.

'Pushing' preschoolers harmful

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Parents who rush preschoolers into academically enriched activities do not appreciably help their youngsters and may even do some harm, a new study suggests.

Hurrying children, the study shows, may deprive them of some childhood pleasures, while leaving them with no lasting academic advantage.

"It's not worth it to give a child early academic enrichment in preschool if your home is enriched already," said Dr. Kathryn Hirsh-Pasek, a psychologist at Temple University.

"Children who just played and had a good time did as well as those whose parents pushed them. Our results suggest that children in preschool may as well just enjoy themselves."

Dr. Hirsh-Pasek did the study with two other psychologists, Dr. Marion Hyson at the University of Delaware and Dr. Leslie Rescorla at Bryn Mawr College.

The results, which were presented last month at the annual meeting of the American Pyschological Association in New Orleans, will be published in part in the journal Early Education and Development.

THE RESEARCHERS said the study was the first to assess the emotional toll, as well as the academic effect, of high-pressure preschool programs. But the psychologists said the results would have to be confirmed by other researchers before strong conclusions can be drawn.

For the toddlers, a critical element is the amount of control and pressure a parent exerts.

"So much of learning in the preschool years comes from children's spontaneous curiosity and their thirst for mastery for its own sake," Dr. Rescorla said.

"When adults impose their standards and tasks, it stifles the child's natural propensity to explore, to learn because they are motivated from within. Preschool is the time in life when playing and curiosity can flourish."

The study compared 85 children who had gone to academically enriched preschools with those who went to preschools where they simply played.

The enriched preschools offered children accelerated activities like learning numbers and letters, computer instruction and even foreign languages.

"The children in one of the accelerated preschools had work sheets that were graded and put on the wall," Dr. Hirsh-Pasek said. "Children in another rotated classrooms for subjects like social studies and language."

WHILE CHILDREN who went to such programs showed a slight advantage over those in less academic preschools on ability tests when tested at age 4, that advantage disappeared a year later after the children went on to kindergarten.

Although the children who had been in enriched programs knew their numbers and letters better than did the others by the time they entered kindergarten, there was no difference between the groups in the cognitive skills that underlie academic success, the tests showed.

Emotionally, the enriched programs seemed to have a somewhat adverse effect. The children whose parents pushed them into accelerated classes, Dr. Hirsh-Pasek found, were more anxious, less creative and less positive toward school, compared with those who went to ordinary preschools.

On the other hand, those who had gone through the accelerated classes were more sociable at kindergarten age. This may be because they have been exposed to more children while participating in the various activities, Dr. Hirsh-Pasek said.

The mothers of those who went to the enriched schools tended to have higher academic expectations for their children, the researchers found.

When research teams observed these mothers playing with their children, they found the mothers to be more controlling, more critical, and more emotionally negative than mothers who took the attitude that "kids should be kids."

FOR INSTANCE, when the mothers with high expectations played Etch-A-Sketch with their child, with the mother at one control and the child at the other, the mothers took control, urging their children to be accurate and sometimes trying to redo the child's first attempt.

All the children in the study were from middle-class families. The researchers said the findings did not apply to programs like Project Head Start, which are intended to help children from disadvantaged homes.

Such programs have been found to help the children overcome any disparity in backgrounds.

"If your home is filled with books and you talk to your kids about what interests them and take them to exciting places like zoos, you don't need to give them any more of an enriched environment," Dr. Hirsh-Pasek said.

But she added that if a child came from a home that was empty most of the time, where there were no books and no stimulating activity, the enriched preschool programs might be valuable.

The results of the preschool study do not mean that parents necessarily harm their children by having high academic expectations for them or by encouraging them in their school work.

A separate study that followed children for several years into grade school found that those whose parents held higher expectations did better in school than their peers. That study was done by Adele Gottfried, a psychologist at California State University at Northridge.

ONE IMPORTANT distinction, Dr. Hirsh-Pasek said, is in the amount of control and pressure a parent exerts. In her study, the mothers who had high expectations went further than simply having high hopes.

These mothers were more critical and demanding and showed less affection, than did the other mothers.

Nonchalant teenagers infuriate worrywarts

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

The kid's plane left at 11:30 a.m. Hold that number in your mind. The airport is 30 minutes away.

At 10:15, he was playing tennis. At 10:30, he put a load of his clothes in the dryer. At 10:40, he was in the shower washing his hair. At 10:55, he was on the phone talking to a friend with the relaxation of a man just after surgery. At 11:05, he was going through every room in the house looking for his airline ticket and sunglasses. He left at 11:08, confident that all the traffic lights would be green and the plane would be 30 minutes late in leaving.

He is youth, a part of society that never suffers from an anxiety attack. He is a carrier who spreads the condition to everyone within a radius of 10 miles.

I must have had a time in my life when I honestly believed I would never have a flat tire on the way to the airport. I would never need a raincoat on a vacation. I would never need a safety pin at my wedding. If there was, I can't remember.

Just being around kids who never plan, never anticipate and never sweat drives me crazy. Don't ask me why, but I freak out when I hear one of them on the phone at 9 o'clock at night ask, "What do you want to do?" When I am tired and want to go to bed and sleep, they have some nerve flaunting the energy to do anything.

My children accuse me of planning my next headache. It's true. I'm an organized person. I read movie reviews to see if I should take extra nose tissue along to mop up. I never enter a taxicab without remembering the driver only carries under $10 worth of change. Whenever I have to make a left-hand turn, I leave the house early.

I sometimes wonder how I gave birth to kids who lived by the philosophy, "If God had meant for you to wait at the curb for a schoolbus, how come he gave them horns?"

It's a punishment for something I did, but I can't figure out what.

I had to catch a plane last week. I arrived one hour early. There was no one at the counter to give me a seat assignment. I watched a small child throw a temper tantrum and another lick the window with his tongue. I read a newspaper and got my hands dirty. Fifteen minutes before we were to take off, the gate was changed to the other end of the terminal. When I got there, all the people who arrived late were ahead of me in line. At my destination, my luggage was lost. As I filed a claim, a kid went by with wet hair, carrying a duffel bag.

Maybe youth knows something we don't know.

College students given suggestions

By DONNA KATO

LOS ANGELES — Dr. Spock no longer has the answers for anxious parents when their child is college-bound, but there are a few health hints and precautions Mom and Dad can pass along to Junior, according to campus medical experts. These include:

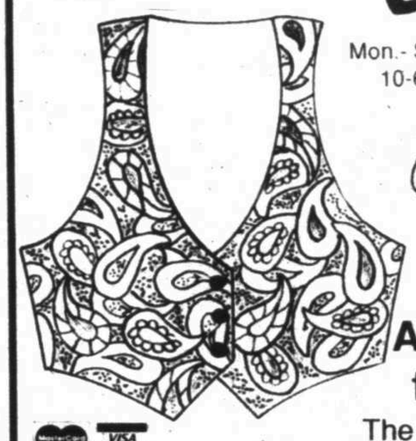

- Check out the university's student health center. Find out what kind of care it provides. Is it a 24-hour facility with specialists or is minimal care provided? Some colleges may even have dental care and therapists available.
- Investigate what your family's insurance policy covers for a member away at school.
- Talk to your child about emergency procedures, and check the school's community for an appropriate hospital.
- Teach your child how to use a thermometer and over-the-counter drugs. Stress the importance of getting a professional opinion and not self-medicating. Bring up professional counseling as a possibility when stress or other problems become overwhelming.
- It may be too late if your child doesn't already know, but go over the importance of proper nutrition and exercise to maintain health.

Collection of urban legends compiled into book

By GORDON MONSON
New York Times News Service

The following stories are true.

Honest.

In each case, they happened to a friend of a friend, or a friend of a sister's husband's friend's hairdresser.

■ A COUPLE found a cute stray kitten and decided to keep it as a pet.

One day, though, it climbed to the top branch of a birch tree in their back yard and refused to come down. After a lot of fruitless coaxing, the couple looped a rope over the branch, hoping to pull the branch low enough for them to reach the stranded pet.

As they pulled, the rope broke and the kitten was launched into orbit. They were unable to find it.

A week later, while grocery shopping, they met one of their neighbors in the checkout line. The neighbor was carrying a bag of cat food.

"We didn't know you had a cat," one of them said.

"I didn't until last week," said the neighbor. "But Joe and I were sitting out on the patio the other day when this kitten dropped out of the sky, just like that. Fell right into Joe's lap."

■ A WOMAN was taking a shower when the doorbell rang.

"Who is it?" she yelled.

"Blind man," shouted the visitor standing on her porch.

Thinking of a local charity, the woman stepped out of the shower, pulled some money out of her purse and, seeing no need to cover herself, swung open the door.

The man, looking a little surprised, said to her, "OK, lady, where do you want me to hang these blinds?"

■ A MAN, who earlier had had more than a few drinks, was driving home late one night when a police officer spotted him meandering from lane to lane and pulled him over to investigate.

As the officer walked toward the car, an accident took place on the other side of the highway. The cop told the man to stay put until he returned. The officer then crossed the median to see if he could help out.

The drunk, meanwhile, waited for a few minutes, then decided to get out of there. He jumped in the car and sped off toward his home. Upon arriving, he told his wife to tell the police, if they showed up, that he had been home all night.

The next morning, two state police officers knocked on the door, and when the man opened it, he explained that he hadn't left home all night. His wife would back him on the claim.

His wife went along with it, but the state troopers asked if they could look in the garage. Not knowing exactly what was going on, the man told them they could.

When they opened the garage door, there was a police cruiser, its lights still flashing.

ADMIT IT.

You hear them, spread them and love them.

Sometimes, you believe them.

They make you laugh, they gross you out.

Urban legends have sunk deep enough into America's consciousness for folklorist Jan Harold Brunvand, a professor of English at the University of Utah, to write his fourth collection of the tales.

His latest book, "Curses! Broiled Again!" (Norton; $18.95) was recently released.

Besides the preceding stories, the work includes more than 70 others, divided into categories such as "Horrors," "Accidents and Mishaps" and "Sex and Scandal."

For the uninitiated, urban legends are apocryphal tales of the unexpected, bizarre or horrible that often — but not always — include a dead or exploding animal (usually something adorable and fluffy, like a cat or bunny rabbit), a microwave oven, a dead human, a naked woman, a surprised repairman, a jilted lover, a hitchhiker or a car.

Some are funny, some pathetically disgusting.

And all are told as being the gospel truth, but few of them are.

Brunvand defines an urban legend as "a true story that's too good to be true. They are incidents that are too well-formed. They have varying versions from place to place. The details change, but the core remains.

"There's no set format for them, except that they usually have a bizarre twist and they are funny in a black humor sort of way," he said.

FOR INSTANCE, remember the belly-jiggling one about the carpet layer who could not find his pack of cigarettes?

He had just finished putting a customer's carpet down when he reached for his pack of Marlboros. They were gone.

He then notices a small mound under the carpet in the middle of the room. Darn, his pack must have slipped out of his pocket. Rather than rip up his day's work, the carpet layer hammers the lump flat and walks out to his van.

To his amazement, there, on the dash, are his cigarettes.

Confused, he re-enters the house only to have the lady of the house ask if he has seen her precious pet parakeet that minutes ago crawled out of its cage.

"Usually, the stories are unfinished," Brunvand said. "You don't know what went on before and you don't find out what happens next."

One of the hottest urban legends Brunvand has collected recently is another animal-meets-its-destiny incident, a sorry episode — included in his book — called "The Hare Drier."

The basic story line goes like this: A woman is horrified when she notices her dog chewing on a dead rabbit. She recognizes the bunny as the neighbor's pet, normally kept in a cage in their back yard.

She takes the rabbit from her pup, cleans it up with Woolite, hangs it by its ears in the shower and lets it drip dry. Or, in some versions, she blow-dries the bunny's fur.

She then places it back in the neighbor's cage.

At a point shortly thereafter, the neighbor, aghast, discovers the blow- or drip-dried bunny. Turns out the bunny had died shortly before, and the neighbor had buried it in the back yard.

"The stories come and go," Brunvand said. "But, recently, I haven't heard any other (legend) as consistently as the Hare Drier. It's probably the hottest story going."

THE PROFESSOR, who has kept his ear out for urban legends for more than 20 years, collects them from the 1,500 folklorists around the country, many of whom are professors of English, anthropology or history.

More important, he solicits them by listing an address to which his readers can send their favorites in each of his books, and as a part of his syndicated column, "Urban Legends."

Brunvand has run across thousands of legends, hundreds of which he files, studies and attempts to trace their origin and, sometimes, discover whether they really happened.

"Occasionally, I get back to an incident that really happened," he said.

But to become a legend in its purest form, the incident has to have enough spinoff to make it so.

Brunvand was able to trace two legends in his current book to actual events.

One legend involved a student who arrived late for a math test.

Upon settling in at his desk, he saw three math problems on the board. The student rushes to finish the first two and does so easily. But the third stumps him.

After numerous computations, the student solves the problem just as time runs out.

Later that night, he receives a phone call from his professor, who informs him that he was required to complete only the first two equations. The third was a problem that mathematicians since Einstein had been trying to solve without success.

"You just solved it," the professor tells the student.

BRUNVAND DISCOVERED that a similar incident actually happened to a student at the University of California at Berkeley, who solved two statistics problems thought to be unsolvable.

Truthful origin notwithstanding, there are enough versions of the story flying around for the versions to be considered urban legends.

Most legends, though, have little to do with truth. Even the news media gets duped by them upon occasion.

A story from 1986 that Brunvand calls "The Ice Cream Cone Caper" appeared in some newspapers as being factual.

The story, depending on the version, had Paul Newman, Jack Nicholson, Robert Redford or Tom Brokaw in an ice cream store. A woman entered the store, recognized the celebrity. Although she was excited, she was determined to remain cool and not invade the person's privacy. She bought a cone and left, presumably without making a scene. But, once outside, she realized she had her change, but the cone wasn't in sight. She marched back into the store to find her treat, when Redford, Newman, Nicholson or Brokaw — supposedly licking his own cone — said, "You'll find it in your purse, ma'am, right where you put it."

No one, including Brunvand, has been able to establish the tale's validity. It is a class-A urban legend.

One of the more popular stories in Brunvand's book is the title urban legend, "Curses! Broiled Again!" — the tale of a woman who overzealously exposes herself to tanning rays in various tanning salons.

She's looking fine, tanned and trim when she notices a distinct, odd odor coming from her own body.

She goes to a doctor, who determines she cooked her insides and prognosticates certain death.

SUCH A thing never happened, as far as Brunvand knows.

Like most urban legends, the above stories have been passed by word of mouth across state and international borders.

Once the legends get rolling, according to Brunvand, who has an undergraduate degree in journalism and a master's degree in English from Michigan State University and a doctorate in folklore from Indiana University, they gain momentum and, eventually, lives of their own.

Laughing betters people's health

Associated Press

Most people readily agree that a good laugh makes them feel better. Now, evidence shows that humor's benefits may be more powerful and long-lasting than once believed.

Better Homes and Gardens offers the following light-hearted ideas on laughing to better one's health:

■ Look for humor. Try to see the amusing side of every situation.

■ Keep a humor first-aid kit. Stock it with things that are always funny — cartoons, jokes, greeting cards, comedy tapes. Apply it for emotional scrapes and bruises.

■ Brighten up a room. Paper a wall with cheerful posters, wacky bumper stickers and zany signs.

■ Make time for fun. Schedule a 10-minute "humor break" every day.

■ Be playful. Spend time with a child to help rediscover a sense of delight. Don't be afraid to be silly.

■ Laugh when low. Psychologist William James said, "We don't laugh because we're happy — we're happy because we laugh."

■ Encourage laughter in others. Humor is contagious. Tell a funny story and request one in return.

■ Avoid self-degrading or put-down humor. Laugh with people, not at them.

Dirt is the key to 'gold smudge'

NEW YORK (AP) — If you're one of those people who can't wear gold jewelry because it marks your skin, take heart. You can wear it if it is squeaky clean.

It seems that "dermographia" is created by a chemical mix of tiny particles of dirt on the gold and on the skin. When the two collide, "gold smudge" is left.

Stephen Aletti, president of the Jewelry Industry Council, says metals or alloys capable of leaving skin marks include gold of less than 18K, silver, copper, aluminum, nickel, zinc, tin, lead and brass.

Skin contaminants, says Aletti, include make-up, particularly that which contains titanium dioxide and calcium carbonate, and airborn particles such as dust, cement and stucco.

Dry skin also is a factor, according to Aletti, because it increases the abrasive action.

Abrasion can occur either from friction between jewelry parts (chain, strap, etc.), or as a result of friction with hard substances in cosmetics.

Ultrasonic cleaning, says Aletti, is the best way to eliminate "gold smudge." If the jewelry continues to stain, he says, have it gold plated.

Baby Boomers learn to set example for children

By BARBARA FITZSIMMONS
Copley News Service

Carl started smoking marijuana at age 14 and enjoyed getting high three or four times a month for 18 years.

Five years ago, he stopped cold turkey. His reasons: He thought it was time to get serious about his career — and he was worried about the example he was setting for his three children.

"One time my son picked up a beer can and was using it like you would use a water pipe," said Carl, a government auditor. "I didn't want that for any of my kids."

It's an issue facing many baby boomers today.

Coming of age in the 1960s and '70s, they believed that drugs were cool — a recent Gallup Poll showed that 42 percent of those aged 30 to 49 have smoked marijuana. Many started using pot and other controlled substances years ago and continued over the years.

In a recent nationally televised address, President Bush told schoolchildren that his proposed $7.9 billion drug plan will help end the crime surrounding the drug trade.

Even the "dabblers in drugs," Bush said, "bear the responsibility for the blood being spilled."

Some of those "dabblers" are the fathers and mothers of the very children Bush addressed. For these parents, distressing questions loom:

Do they want their children to know they use drugs?

How does drug use affect their parenting?

And, perhaps most important, do they want their children to use drugs, too?

"I never wanted them to get into it," said Carl, 37, whose children range from age 4 to 16. "I knew I had to set an example."

Sharon, a 34-year-old mother of two, agrees. A nurse, she used marijuana and cocaine several times a week until two years ago, when she stopped because of her children.

"I realized that they were learning their morals from me and about goals in life from me," said Sharon. "I knew, too, that I wasn't being a very good mom when I was high."

The National Institute on Drug Abuse cites figures showing that children whose parents use alcohol or other drugs are more likely to use drugs themselves. It's unclear if heredity is a factor — the statistics are the same for natural and adopted children.

Another study indicates that children of alcoholics are four times more likely to become alcoholics.

"Alcohol can be the worst killer of all," said Sandra, 37, a businesswoman, recovering alcoholic and mother of two. "People keep talking about street drugs, but booze is the insidious killer. I hope my kids never touch it."

Those who work with young people say that many children who use drugs discover them at home.

"We often find that young people in crisis-intervention situations say they acquired their drugs from their parents," said Doug Hall, spokesman for Parents' Resource Institute for Drug Education in Atlanta. "If you come from a household that's lax about drug use, there is a greater chance that you will abuse drugs."

Margot Kopley, a psychologist who works with teen-agers who have substance-abuse problems, said many teens know exactly where their parents keep their own drugs.

"They use their parents' stash, whether it be marijuana, cocaine or crystal (methamphetamine)."

Kopley said at least half of the troubled teens she sees have parents who use drugs.

"Some of the parents who began using drugs in the '60s and '70s as a lark didn't realize how it would affect their kids," she said. "Now we're seeing some very adverse effects."

Not everyone agrees that parental drug use can be detrimental to children.

Dale Gieringer, a spokesman for the National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws, said some NORML supporters make a kind of ceremony out of introducing their children to marijuana.

"They sincerely believe in introducing their children when they are about 16 or 18," he said. "It's the same type of thing parents do with alcohol."

Such an idea appalls Cheryl, 43. She has raised two daughters — one while Cheryl was regularly using alcohol, marijuana and amphetamines, and the other since she stopped using drugs entirely eight years ago.

The oldest daughter, now 24, "went through 17 years of my using and drinking and now has her own problems. She's already had three DUI (arrests for driving under the influence)."

She anticipates the younger daughter, now 11, will have a brighter future.

"She's got a far better attitude," Cheryl said. "Whenever she hears of someone using, she says, 'We don't need that.' Children look to the only example they've got, and that's their parents."

As far as being a good parent, Cheryl said, "You can't be one when you're using. You're too busy worrying about yourself."

Astronomy books offer children avenue to stars

Copley News Service

It is possible for urban youngsters to grow up without ever seeing a starry sky. Not the scattered handful of stars visible through the reflected glow of the city, but the blaze of millions of twinkling pinpoints in and beyond our galaxy's milky haze.

When children do discover the real light show in the heavens, from a remote campground or on a cross-country trip after dark, it is a revelation. Suddenly, the kids want to know some astronomy.

Grosset and Dunlap has put out a cleverly conceived "field guide for the young stargazers." "Glow-in-the-Dark Constellations" duplicates the changing night sky in each season, so that even a beginner can locate the Big Dipper at any time of year (32 pages; $11.95; ages 6-10).

Author C.E. Thompson chooses 10 well-known constellations, those sailors have used for centuries of navigation. He heads the stargazer in the right direction, tells how many stars are involved in Taurus or Leo, what bright stars surround the constellation and which months are best for viewing the pattern in North America. He also offers a capsule history of the ancients naming the constellation.

Randy Chewning's colorful paintings of a family involved in nighttime activities also are careful drawings of a segment of the sky. The child beams a flashlight on the picture as he studies the pattern of its stars, then switches off the light, and the constellation in question glows on the page to make it easy to find in the big sky.

THE TEACHING concept works. This novice finally found the scorpion this way. (Next we'll strain for Andromeda.) The ingenious field guide can be turned into a family activity on any trip away from the city lights.

To believers, the stars aren't the only celestial bodies out there. "UFOs, ETs & Visitors From Space" have been debated for at least 2,000 years. Science writer Melvin Berger explores the facts and fiction in a thoroughly documented, yet easy-to-understand text (G.P. Putnam's Sons; 77 pages; $10.99; ages 9-12).

He begins with two silly fables that point out the fallacy of drawing hasty conclusions. He then launches into the intriguing stories of eight publicized UFO sightings by respected sources, including a crew of astronauts. It would appear the UFOs irrefutably exist.

In the next chapter he quickly disposes of six of the sightings with explanations from the Air Force and other experts. The astronauts' vision was just one of those overblown rumors.

ETs are another matter. Many scientists believe that in a trillion trillion stars there must be other life. The government has launched a spacecraft with an aluminum plaque describing Earth; at 21,600 miles per second, it will take 100,000 years to reach its destination in space.

Near Boston, a sophisticated radio telescope is searching for signals from distant life 24 hours a day. So far, no luck in finding any.

Berger's book is a fascinating capsule of the ongoing searching and "sightings" of extraterrestrial life, even if its logic could be a letdown to the imagination. Drawings and photographs are unusual selections from scientists and sighters.

LIKE MANY of the better texts for children, it is just as interesting and informative for grown-ups and more readable than most adult publications on the subject.

Astronaut Sally Ride's firsthand descriptions of traveling "To Space and Back" would intrigue any adult, even though her narrative is intended for elementary school children (Lothrop, Lee & Shepard; 96 pages; now in $9.95 paperback).

She lingers longest on the fun of floating in weightlessness. The dedicated astronauts are not above playing with their packaged food: "We set a cookie floating and then 'flew' an astronaut, with his mouth wide open, across the cabin to capture it."

With the reportorial help of Susan Okie, Ride satisfies all the obvious queries about a crew existing in outer space for a week, including the bathroom and sleeping arrangements.

Profuse color photographs accent the human element of space exploration rather than the cold skies. The lively crew is captured on camera by off-duty astronauts in the cabin. Ride's exuberant approach brings the scientific space shoots down to Earth.

For-kids-only is Byron Barton's winsome and wistful picture book "I Want to Be an Astronaut" (Thomas Y. Crowell; 32 pages; $7.95; ages 4-6). In the year since its publication, it already has picked up several awards, including an ALA "Notable Book" designation.

Barton's double-page illustrations are vivid in primary colors. His primitively stylized astronauts look like youngsters, always an enticement for preschoolers. The crew has so much fun sleeping upside down and every which way in zero gravity that a child longs to play with them.

Barton's vision of space exploration is a trip through Disney's Space Mountain without white knuckles. His brief and romanticized explanation of an astronaut's career is fine for 4-year-olds. By next week Junior will want to be a fireman.

MEDICATION

Generic vs. Brand-Name:

Continuing controversy is generating consumer confusion and fear about the safety of using generic drugs in place of brand-name medications.

Text by ELIZABETH EDWIN

As costs for medical care continue to increase, many patients are searching for less expensive alternatives while still maintaining the quality of their health care. And while not much can be done to lower fees charged for a trip to the doctor or the hospital, a trip to the pharmacy could prove to have a few money-savings options.

As more and more brand-name drug patents are expiring, their generic counterparts are becoming available, and often at a substantially lower price. Generic drugs — drugs that are labeled by their active ingredient rather than by a name and are not protected by a trademark — are said to be biologically equivalent to brand-name drugs, yet can cost up to 70 percent less.

However, this alternative is causing a lot of public debate. Questions are being raised about the government's system of approving generic drugs and some doctors are questioning whether these generic drugs are as effective as they are said to be, if they are in fact of the same quality and efficacy as brand-name drugs.

THE MAIN SOURCE of the controversy seems to stem from the test used by the Federal Drug Administration (FDA) to approve the no-name medications.

By FDA requirements, a generic drug must contain the same active ingredient as the brand-name product and the ingredient must be absorbed by the body in the same way. This is determined by comparing the rate and extent of absorption of the brand-name drug and the generic formulation. The FDA allows the generic medication to vary by up to 20 percent in comparison with the brand-name version.

However, the Pharmaceutical Manufactures Association (PMA), the trade association for brand-name manufacturers, has voiced concerns that this test has too wide a margin, that it "does not ensure that two versions of the drug deemed equivalent will be equally safe and effective when used interchangeably by patients."

Many health professionals also believe the 20-percent margin to be too high, particularly in such life-threatening cases as asthma, epilepsy, diabetes and heart conditions. In these instances, blood levels of the drug must remain constant to ensure the treatment's success.

"In cases of critical illnesses, doctors tend to prescribe brand names because they feel it's harder to control consistency with generics," according to Robert Mancini, Ph.D., D.O., clinical professor and chairman of the department of pharmacology and toxicology at the New York College of Osteopathic Medicine in Old Westbury, New York, in an article published in the October Mademoiselle.

HOWEVER, THE FDA maintains that the 20-percent rule is just a guideline, and, that according to an agency study, the average difference since 1962 has been only 3.5 percent. This 3.5 percent margin, according to the magazine, is the same variation found between two different batches of a brand-name drug.

One key to purchasing safe generic medications is a rating given to tested drugs, according to Midland pharmacist John Davis. A generic drug given an AB rating is considered the bioequivalent of the brand-name medication. The Mosby Medical Encyclopedia defines bioequivalent as, "referring to a drug that has the same effect to the body as another drug, usually one nearly identical in its chemical structure."

However, the FDA has received some reports of falacies in the testing procedures of generic drugs.

"The main issue is whether the public is getting the product which, in fact, the FDA approved," said Dr. Leroy L. Schwartz, president of the Health Policy International, a non-profit foundation in Princeton, N.J., that studies health-policy issues from a scientific point of view. "The FDA has not assured the public that there will be the same therapeutic effect once substitution takes place. And the elderly and the poor are the ones most affected."

DUE TO SOME highly publicized cases submitted to the FDA, consumers have begun to question the safety of using generic drugs in place of the brand-name versions. For example, a report by Leonard Sloane from the New York Times News Service said, "In recent months, three employees of the Food and Drug Administration who reviewed applications from manufacturers seeking approval for new generic drugs have pleaded guilty to accepting money and favors from some manufacturers.

"One company, Vitarine Pharmaceuticals Inc. of New York City, has admitted substituting the patented drug for its own when making its application. A report by the inspector general of the Department of Health and Human Services has found weaknesses in the FDA's drug-review procedures," the story continued.

Because of the false information included in these companies' applications, the FDA is considering withdrawing its approval for two dozen or so generic drugs made by Vitarine and Par Phamaceutical Inc. of Spring Valley, N.Y. The FDA also started inspecting 20 other major manufacturing plants last month in a effort to assure consumers that there is no danger in using generic drugs.

These inspections and testings are particularly important to the consumer whose insurance company or government health care program requires pharmacies to use a lower-cost generic if it is available. By a closer maintenance of the quality of generics, this group of people who, in essence, are forced to use generics, can be assured of a higher quality product.

None of these happenings are doing anything to instill consumer confidence in generic drugs. However, there is no evidence to substantiate the claims that generic drugs are not safe.

So, if generics cannot be proven unsound, then where is all this controversy coming from?

KEEP IN MIND that while generics may be saving the consumer money, it is costing the manufacturers of the brand-name medications in terms of lost sales. Therefore, it makes sense that some of these manufacturers have attempted to focus media attention on the potential problems of taking generic drugs.

"When the brand-name companies declare one thing and the FDA claims another, the end result is confusion and fear," said Jay Molishever, a spokesperson for the Generic Pharmaceutical Industry Association.

So, with all the conflicting information about generic versus brand-name medications, how can consumers safeguard themselves and their families?

AIDS drug 'ddI' to be distributed

By LISA M. KRIEGER
Hearst News Service

In an unprecedented move, the government says it will distribute the AIDS drug ddI to thousands of patients.

It's the first drug to be so widely and quickly distributed after only toxicity tests in a handful of patients. It has been rushed through a so-called parallel track system, newly designed by U.S. Food and Drug Administration officials to speed up the availability of promising new AIDS drugs.

Although ddI hasn't yet been proved effective in treating AIDS, it's promising because it improves immune system function and slows growth of the HIV virus, which causes AIDS.

It could be a boon to the estimated 40 to 80 percent of people with AIDS who develop severe anemia during treatment with AZT, the only approved anti-HIV medication.

It could also help countless others whose systems resist that AZT's effects after a year or two of high-dose treatment.

"We believe it is important to offer the drug now to people with AIDS for whom the standard treatment of AZT is not an option, even though there are some potentially serious side effects," FDA Commissioner Frank E. Young said.

The drug will be offered to three groups of people: those in clinical trials sponsored by the National Institutes of Health, those with AIDS or advanced AIDS-related complex who can't take the anti-viral drug AZt, and those whose disease has progressed despite AZT and who have no other options.

"We're seeing a number of patients who fit into these groups and would be good candidates for this agent," said Dr. Bill Owen, a San Francisco doctor who specializes in AIDS care.

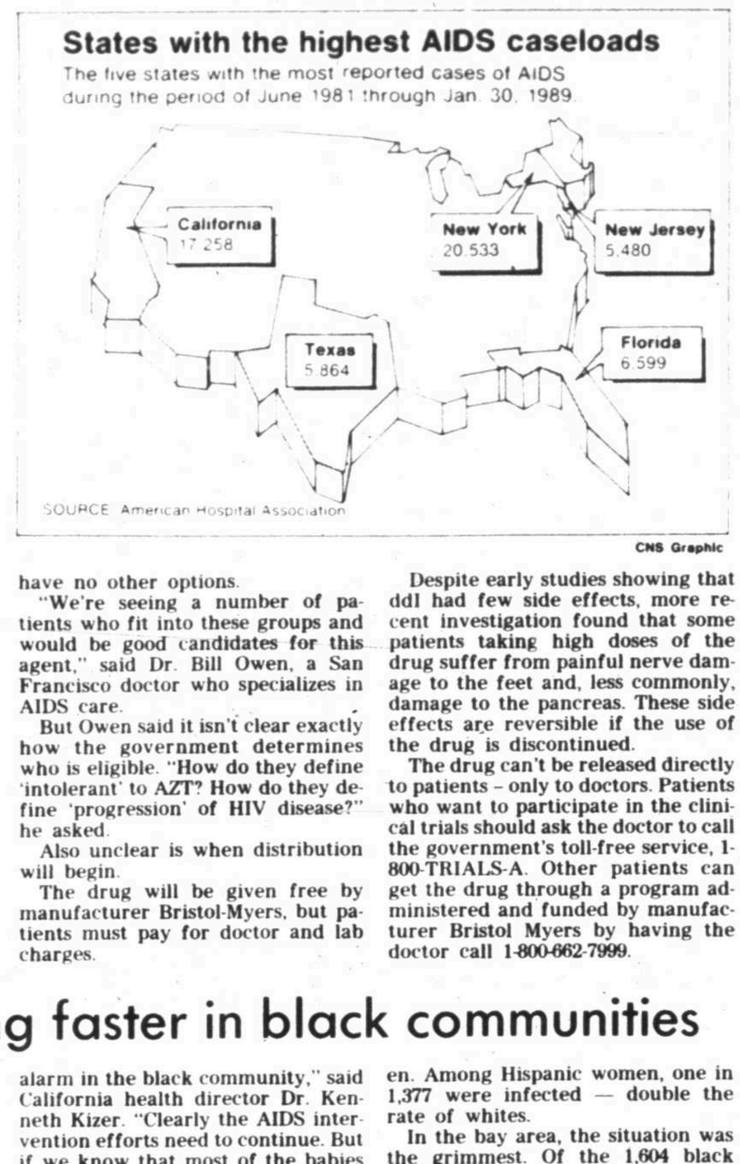

But Owen said it isn't clear exactly how the government determines who is eligible. "How do they define 'intolerant' to AZT? How do they define 'progression' of HIV disease?" he asked.

Also unclear is when distribution will begin.

The drug will be given free by manufacturer Bristol-Myers, but patients must pay for doctor and lab charges.

Despite early studies showing that ddI had few side effects, more recent investigation found that some patients taking high doses of the drug suffer from painful nerve damage to the feet and, less commonly, damage to the pancreas. These side effects are reversible if the use of the drug is discontinued.

The drug can't be released directly to patients – only to doctors. Patients who want to participate in the clinical trials should ask the doctor to call the government's toll-free service, 1-800-TRIALS-A. Other patients can get the drug through a program administered and funded by manufacturer Bristol Myers by having the doctor call 1-800-662-7999.

Success may be spoiling academic medicine's role as public benefactor

By ROBERT P. STUDER
Copley News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — Quantum advances in biomedical research, in the developoment of new medical technologies, in the sophisticated treatment of all kinds of diseases have brought both honor and success to academic medicine in recent years. But has this very success tended to spoil academic medicine's role as a public benefactor?

The aging of the nation's population, the increased prevalence of chonic illnesses, and changes in the financing and delivery of medical care "call into question whether academic medicine continues to fullfill its public responsibilities," point out researchers at the University of California at San Francisco in an article published in the Aug. 11 issue of the Journal of the American Medical Association.

The research was conducted as part of a program funded by the Pew Charitable Trusts and the Rockefeller Foundation, "Health of the Public: An Academic Challenge."

The intent of the study, it was explained, is "to assist academic medicine in the United States and Canada to respond to the rapidly changing health care and social environment."

While conceding that academic medicine has made many outstanding contributions in the areas of biomedical research, technology development and diffusion, progress against illnesses such as heart disease and stroke, disease prevention, health services research, and innovations in health care delivery such as the development of health maintenance organizations (HMOs), the UC California researchers point to other areas of weak performance:

"The United States spends more than any other country on health care, some $540 billion in 1988, yet lags far behind most other developed countries in key indicators of health status such as life expectancy and infant mortality. With health care expanding more than any other sector of the economy, sometimes at the expense of other important social needs," it may be beneficial to restrain further growth in the resources devoted to the medical care sector.

"Whether measured by variations among hospitals in fatality rates or by the appropriateness of many commonly performed procedures and operations, the quality of medical care in the United States is often substandard or inefficient.

"There is a poor distribution in both the proportion of physicians trained in specialized care as well as in the number who practice in urban areas.

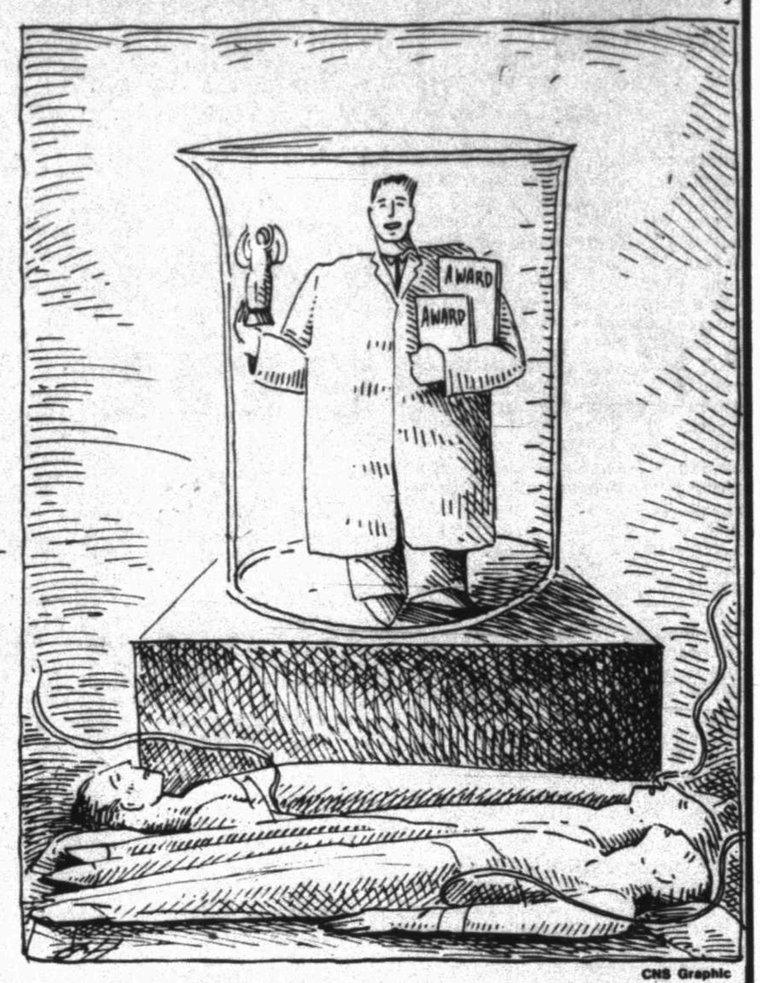

"Although there is a growing proportion of older persons in the United States, many of whom have a chronic illness, academic medicine continues to devote little effort to train health professionals in caring for persons with chronic illnesses and disabilities.

"The technology — intensive patterns of care in most academic medical centers — provides a poor model of care for less-developed countries."

The bottom line, the researchers warn, is that the nation's academic medical centers are confronting major challenges to their ability to carry out their primary missions of educating health professionals, caring for patients and conducting research.

"To the degree that academic medicine does not meet the needs of society," the study warns, "resources might have to be diverted to support other institutions that are able and willing to fulfill those needs."

Research also, they say, should be expanded "to include areas such as preventive medicine and care of persons with chronic conditions, education should include more instruction in quantitative skills, in social and behavioral sciences, and graduates should receive increased training in outpatient settings."

AIDS spreading faster in black communities

Hearst News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — Black mothers in the San Francisco Bay area are almost 30 times more likely to give birth to a baby infected with the human immunodeficiency virus that causes AIDS than are white women, according to a state study of newborns.

The comprehensive study shows that the deadly virus is spreading among black heterosexuals faster and more widely than in any other racial group, while white heterosexuals remain among the least affected.

AIDS specialists say the epidemic of drug use in the black community is largely responsible for the difference. The virus is spread through blood-to-blood contact when addicts share needles to inject drugs, as well as through sex.

"This has to be viewed with great alarm in the black community," said California health director Dr. Kenneth Kizer. "Clearly the AIDS intervention efforts need to continue. But if we know that most of the babies are really getting infected from drug abuse, it calls for a combination of anti-AIDS and anti-drug use education."

Blood from 135,762 delivering mothers throughout California was tested anonymously for HIV in July, August and September of 1988 as part of a national effort to trace trends in the AIDS epidemic. Researchers found 101 women who carried the virus — and history shows about a third of their babies will have been infected in the womb.

Black women statewide had a stunningly disproportionate rate of infecton — 12 times higher than the white women. Overall, one in 275 black women tested positive for HIV, compared to one in 3,332 white women. Among Hispanic women, one in 1,377 were infected — double the rate of whites.

In the bay area, the situation was the grimmest. Of the 1,604 black women tested, 12 were positive — a rate of one in 134, the highest rate found in the state.

By comparison, one in 3,889 white women in Alameda, Contra Costa, Marin, San Mateo, San Francisco, Santa Clara, Sonoma and Solano counties were infected — generally the same as the state average. Locally, the rate among Hispanic women was one in 871; among Asians, it was one in 2,422.

"The issue should be raised and discussed with every pregnant woman," Kizer said. "Women should be asking about their risk and doctors should be asking about it so people can make informed choices (about whether to continue the pregnancy)."

MEDICATION

"There are a few bad manufacturers that are in it (making generic drugs) just for the money, but there are several manufacturers that make a good product," John Davis, local pharmacist, said. "The best way for consumers to safeguard themselves is communication. It is up to the patients to ask a lot of questions.

"Today, with doctors taking care of so many patients, they don't always get to spend as much time with each one as they would like. But here in the Permian Basin there are a lot of good doctors and if you ask them questions, I'm sure they would take the time to answer them," Davis said.

Davis also recommends that patients use one pharmacist, particularly if they are seeing several doctors or taking several medications. By using one pharmacist, it is easier to keep a complete record of a patients' medications and medical history, therefore making it easier to spot a potential problem of drug interactions.

"People should also remember that doctors and pharmacists are human, they can make mistakes, so they should question them about anything they are concerned about," Davis said, whether the concern is about taking a generic or about a drug's side effects or about drug interaction.

"Use a little common sense and don't get alarmed about a situation, just ask questions and get advice from your health care professionals," Davis said.

Part of this communication should included asking a doctor if a generic drug can be substituted for the brand-name drug prescribed. According to Davis, the manufacturer of the generic makes a difference. Therefore, some doctors will approve a generic substitution by certain manufacturers, but not by others.

The answer to the question, "Do generic drugs really work and are they safe?" really has no clear-cut answer. However, no one has been able to document that generics aren't just as good as brand-names, and with all the debate and publicity about the concerns over generic drugs, they are likely to be closely monitored, and all that scrutiny can only work to the consumer's advantage.

Some elderly receive wrong drug prescriptions

Hearst News Service

Thousands of elderly Americans have become drug addicts because of carelessly prescribed drugs or over-sedation used to quiet troublesome patients, according to a growing number of medical educators, doctors and pharmacists.

These experts question drug companies and physicians who sometimes do not know how certain drugs affect the fragile elderly population.

The medical profession acknowledges the problem. More physicians are being trained in geriatrics. Self-monitoring and education programs are being established.

But, doctors say, many elderly people want too many prescriptions and expect their doctors to give them drugs automatically.

Dr. Tom Cole, a Houston specialist in humanistic gerontology, knows firsthand how a careless physician can addict an elderly patient. On a recent trip to visit his family, he found his grandmother, who suffers from Alzheimer's disease, was dependent on the drug Melloril.

"There is a real tendency to use drugs as a form of social control," he said.

"My grandmother is being taken care of in Connecticut. She is a frail, 87-year-old woman. They had her on 100 milligrams of Melloril," he said. "She's no trouble. She's unconscious sometimes. Sometimes she's drooling. There is a long lag time for her to answer questions.

"I talked to a geriatric psychologist and told him what she was on," he said. He went through the roof about the dosage."

Cole's grandmother is typical of patients who are not watched closely enough by their physicians and are over-medicated.

"We reduced the dosage to 50 milligrams, then 25, then nothing," he said. "Now she's able to feel her own feelings. She's alive again."

Outspoken pharmacologist Joe Graedon puts part of the blame for addicted senior citizens on physicians who are too busy to keep up with the ever-changing universe of the drugs they prescribe.

His latest book is "50+: The Graedon's People's Pharmacy for Older Adults" (Bantam, $13.95), co-authored with his wife, Teresa.

"They are so vulnerable to pharmaceutical manufacturers' promotions. They are busy people. They see sometimes 20 to 60 patients a day, depending on their practice and how greedy they are," he said.

"If the sales rep comes by and says, 'Here, doc, I've got a brand-new, wonderful zippity-doo-dah anti-inflammatory drug for your arthritis patients or a wonderful new anti-depressant or something for high blood pressure,' you might listen to him for a couple of minutes and say: 'Hey, what the heck, I've got some free samples. I'll go ahead and give it to my patients,'" Graedon said.

"If the sales rep comes by and says, 'Here, doc, I've got a brand-new, wonderful zippity-doo-dah anti-inflammatory drug for your arthritis patients or a wonderful new anti-depressant or something for high blood pressure,' you might listen to him for a couple of minutes and say: 'Hey, what the heck, I've got some free samples. I'll go ahead and give it to my patients.'"

—Joe Graedon, pharmacologist

The medical profession has not kept up with the pharmaceutical industry, he said, and "the end result is that older people are guinea pigs."

Graedon believes that some doctors aren't aware of how drugs affect people of different ages.

As an example, he says: "Older people's brains change. As you get older, you can no longer tolerate the same amount of alcohol you might have when you were 20 or 30. The same thing is true with these drugs. The brain is more susceptible to their effects. They can linger longer, because the body does not metabolize them as well.

"The big danger, and not just the addiction, is that older people become unsteady on their feet. If you are unsteady on your feet, and you take a drug like this and fall and fracture your hip, it could be a death sentence," Graedon said.

He also believes that some physicians don't worry about addicting an elderly patient as much as they would a younger one. Cole agrees that doctors should be more aware of the drugs they prescribe.

"You hear this over and over again in geriatric education. The average doctor does not know enough about how drugs affect people of different ages and therefore may make mistakes," he said.

DEAR ABBY

Husband, wife disagree on style of dressing

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I have been married for eight years. We are both 32 years old. For most of our married years, we have had one recurring argument.

Bill (not his real name) wants me to dress a certain way when we go out. He likes to see me in tight-fitting mini-skirts, tops with no bra, and no underwear.

I feel very uncomfortable dressed this way in public because I look like a hooker. Bill says it turns him on. He doesn't have me dress that way around our friends, only when we go out, but I'm always worried that we'll run into someone we know.

He says that if I loved him, I would do it just to please him. I wouldn't mind dressing that way at home, but that's not what he wants.

Bill keeps trying to mold me into his Playboy image, and I keep resisting. This problem is causing a lot of resentment between us. Is there any way we can resolve this problem besides counseling? — NO PLAYBOY GIRL

DEAR NO PLAYBOY GIRL: You took the words right out of my typewriter. The solution to your problem is counseling. Your husband needs to find out why seeing you dressed like a hooker in public turns him on. He also must learn that he has no right to ask you to do something you find repugnant. ("If you love me, you will do it just to please me.") Tell him, "If you love me, you wouldn't ask me to do anything I don't really want to do."

Stick to your guns and insist that your husband get counseling, because therein lies the solution to your problem.

DEAR ABBY: While my husband and I were having dinner in a Hollywood restaurant recently, I recognized a rather famous movie actress dining with four or five other people.

I wanted to go over and tell her I was a fan of hers and how much I enjoyed her work. My husband discouraged me, saying celebrities do not want to be bothered by people coming up to them in a restaurant.

As a celebrity, you must be recognized in public places. How do you feel about people who come over to you to say hello? — MADELINE FROM MODESTO

DEAR MADELINE: I am pleased when someone comes over to say hello, but some celebrities prefer to be left alone.

I am reminded of Fred Allen's witty line: "A celebrity is a person who works a lifetime to become well-known, then wears dark glasses to avoid being recognized."

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I love to attend the theatre, ball games and musical events, but he always has to be the first one back to the car afterward. We watch the last few minutes standing in the back, or listening, as we dash for the parking lot. There is no reason for the rush, and I am sick of missing the last song, the last inning or the last act. And never mind that we miss the encore or the chance to applaud. What can I do? — MISSING OUT IN ST. LOUIS

DEAR MISSING OUT: Tell "Speedy Gonzales" that leaving ahead of the crowd may save a little time, but the time saved isn't worth missing the end of the performance.

It's been my experience that the last song, the last inning or the last act is often better than the first, and well worth waiting for. (And, like the last laugh, it's often the best.)

Law may protect desert tortoise

Copley News Service

Reptile lovers in California are hoping that new protection for the desert tortoise will cause an upswing in population for the large land animal, whose numbers have dropped 50 percent in the last seven years.

The California Fish and Game Commission just added the desert tortoise to the state's "threatened species" list, which means more funds for protection and recovery.

Sheep and cattle graze on the same vegetation as the tortoise, while fencing off highways in sensitive areas to protect tortoises from being run over also will fence out off-road vehicles.

Fish and Game biologist Jim St. Amant says tortoise decline also can be traced to poachers who grab the reptiles either for pets or the dinner table, and an increase in predators like the raven, which eats young thin-shelled baby tortoises.

Taos is Southwestern cultural, historical treasure

By SUSAN KAYE
Copley News Service

TAOS, N.M. — The annual restoration of St. Francisco de Asis, one of America's most painted and photographed missions, was under way.

Inside, women scrubbed and whitewashed the parish walls while men repaired the adobe exterior.

One man threw shovefuls of clay, dug from a favored locale many miles away, against a wire mesh; a second worker scooped the sieved dirt into a wooden trough, added hay and water, and mixed everything with a hoe. The resulting adobe, the building material of the Southwest, was ready to be smoothed over the 3-foot-thick church walls.

"It's a good fellowship," the volunteers assured me, breaking off from speaking Spanish to explain the procedure that would consume the next two weeks. "We've been repairing our church this way for over 150 years."

Traditions such as this are taken seriously throughout Taos, an art colony 90 minutes north of Santa Fe. The American flag flies day and night, as it has since it was successfully raised during the Confederate War, in a plaza laid out by Spanish settlers in 1790.

Some Tiwa-speaking Indians still occupy the 500-year-old Taos Pueblo on the outskirts of town where they choose to live without electricity or running water, faithfully preserving their heritage.

TAOS ITSELF, despite narrow streets that clog with summer traffic, retains the charm, pace and much of the adobe-style architecture of the Spanish colonial era. Most visitors see it as a one-day trip from Santa Fe; those who allow more time may glimpse the magnetism that has drawn, and continues to draw, so many artists.

Not unlike a frontier town, wooden sidewalks lead past secretive adobe walls interrupted by sun-bleached hand-carved doors and hand-hewn timbers.

Big-name motels line the highway into town, but hidden on the side streets are over 20 bed-and-breakfasts, many of which are in 200-year-old adobes where rooms are heated by corner fireplaces and open to patios ablaze with geraniums.

The Martinez Hacienda was truly the end of the road in the 1700s, as it marked the final stop of the 1,200-mile trade route from Mexico City. Now open as a museum, the fortress-like building with no exterior windows may be the only Spanish hacienda left in the United States.

"Everything the residents needed, they produced or brought up from Mexico," said my guide, Bertha Quintana. "With all the hacienda's storage room, it was like a department store, only bigger, since they also kept a corral full of animals."

Predating even the Spanish colonists were the Indians. The town's most famous Indian, and most famous artist, is R.C. Gorman, internationally known for portraits of graceful, ample women. Although he is a Navajo from western New Mexico, his home and studio have been in Taos for over two decades. Visitors will see the largest selection of his work at The Navajo Gallery on Ledoux Street.

THE NAVAJO is one of 80 galleries fanning out from the plaza, on streets such as Ledoux, Kit Carson (where the frontiersman lived with his wife for 25 years) and Bent (where the territorial governor was scalped). Another center of galleries recently has grown up in Ranchos de Taos, a few miles south of town.

And although many residents are artists, potters and weavers, visitors rarely have a chance to meet them or see them at work. But through the Taos Inn's free, sixth annual Meet the Artists series, artists and their public come face-to-face.

Every Tuesday and Thursday evening, mid-May through June and mid-October through mid-December, well-known local artists such as flamboyant Gorman, avant-garde Larry Bell and master engraver Ed Morgan share their creative processes through slide shows, discussions and demonstrations.

A mile north of town is Taos Pueblo, the best-preserved ancestral home of the various Pueblo tribes living throughout New Mexico's Rio Grande Valley. Like piles of children's building blocks, the two large community houses rise several stories.

Each home is a toasted-brown cube of adobe, stacked haphazardly, with narrow rectangles cut out for windows and doors. Hand-hewn ladders that once were the only access to the upper floors still lean against the sunburned walls. Visitors may enter the village's plaza from 8 to 5 after paying a $2 admission fee, plus $5 extra for each camera.

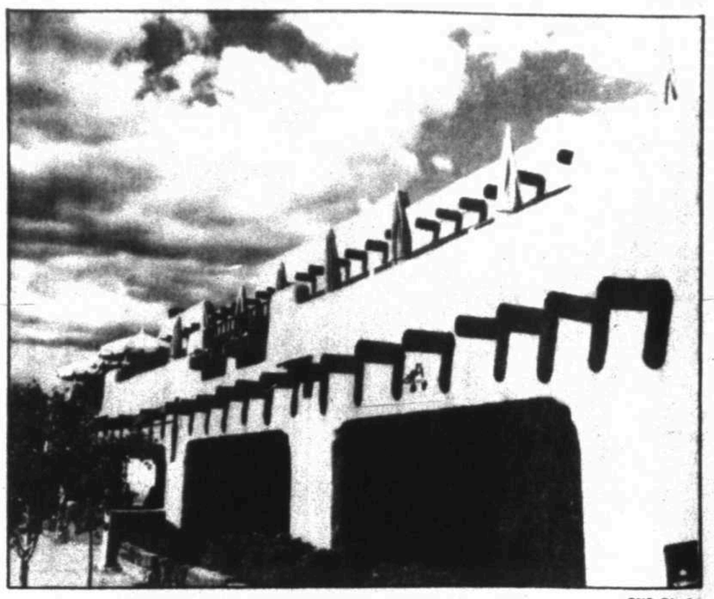

Art and tourism provide the economic lifeblood of Taos, but it is the unique blend of artists, Indians, Spanish mission churches, turquoise-blue skies, the pungent smell of sage, and the looming Sangre de Cristo Mountains that make Taos a magical place, steeped in traditions that predate recorded history.

ASK A Taoseno his favorite season and he'll reply, "Autumn." During the last week of September and the first two weeks of October, fall colors are in their prime; Indians invite visitors to their San Geronimo trade fair, races, and pole climb in late September, and the art world buzzes with a showing of the early Taos artists, an arts festival and jewelry show on the plaza.

While in Taos, the Taos Inn, (505) 758-2233, is a favorite place to stay, but tightly booked. There is also adobe ambience at Sagebrush Inn, (505) 758-2254, and in many of the bed-and-breakfasts (Old Taos B&B Inns, (800) 448-4667).

The nearest commercial airport is in Albuquerque. Rental cars are available as are two van services from the airport to Taos, as well as a daily Greyhound bus. Once in Taos, a car is a plus to explore the outlying region. But it isn't a necessity, as the town can easily be walked and a trolley makes an hourly circuit between major motels and the plaza.

Concierge provides assistance

New York Times News Service

Even the most prepared travelers have questions when they get into a new city. "Where's a good place to eat Italian food?" "Where can I get theater tickets?" "What's the fastest route to the next city?" are just some of the questions newly arrived visitors might ask.

But one of the joys of staying at a luxury hotel is finding someone on the staff who can answer those and other questions or fill requests.

Many guests put in special requests at the time they make their room reservations. Julie Simon, owner of a Miami-based public relations firm, said she asked the staff at the Intercontinental hotel in London to obtain theater tickets for her and make her restaurant reservations for her visit this fall.

Some guest requests are much more complicated than that, from helping guests plan their weddings to locating lost laundry.

Prospective guests who think they might need help planning activities or events or making reservations are advised to ask in advance about a hotel's services, because who does what varies from one hotel to another.

Chances are a hotel guest with a special request or a question will get assistance from the concierge, the guest-services staff or the assistant manager. (Many of these people who assist guests appreciate a tip, but it's not considered mandatory.)

"A concierge is supposed to be able to answer 99 percent of the questions asked at the hotel," said Ed Kaylin, head concierge of the Beverly Hilton Hotel in Beverly Hills.

"A good concierge should be just like a walking almanac of the city. Every four- or five-star hotel should have a good concierge," Kaylin said. For example, the concierge should know what's playing at local theaters, how to get good tickets and then should be able to direct guests to the theater, Kaylin said.

Many hotels designate a manager on duty who will take time away from his or her normal duties to assist hotel guests.

Grand Canyon train trips resume

New York Times News Service

Steam locomotive trips are scheduled to resume from Williams, Ariz., to the the South Rim of the Grand Canyon in mid-September.

From 1901 to 1968, the Grand Canyon Railway made regular runs from Williams to the famous national park. The train service was canceled because visitors preferred to travel to the park by car.

Train service is resuming because the park is suffering from an excess of cars, resulting in declining air quality and traffic gridlock. During 1988, approximately 4 million people visited the Grand Canyon.

The new passenger-train service kicked off with a VIP run on Sept. 17; on Sept. 18, it became available to the public. Weekend-only service is scheduled through Nov. 5. Holiday trains are scheduled to run during Thanksgiving and New Year's weekends.

The round-trip fare is $37 for adults and $21 for children under age 12. Passengers must also pay the national park entry fee of $2. For more information, call (800) 843-8724.

ROAMING AROUND ROME

Rome is romantic, historic, exciting--but it's also a big city. Here are hints for finding your way around.

* * *

To really see any place, of course, walking is the best option. But Rome's buses are a good alternative. They're frequent and inexpensive. If you'll be in Rome for any length of time, you can buy a bargain commuter pass at tobacco shops or in front of the main railroad station.

* * *

Most important is to get a detailed map of the city, one that shows bus routes by number. Buses are easy to use once you have the map; street signs list the buses that make each stop.

* * *

You save a lot of money by taking a bus from the airport into town. You can wheel your airport baggage cart right off the bus; departures are every 15 minutes.

* * *

If you're driving, use the via Flaminia or the via Salaria to get from town to the major road. Avoid the via Cassia and the via Tiburtino, which are narrow and heavily trafficked. And from in town, don't try to follow the green Autostrada signs to get out; they're inconsistent and you'll get lost. Instead, find the most direct way to the ring road--it's longer, but less confusing.

Morocco: Ancient country seen from back of motorcycle

By PHILIP SOUSA
Copley News Service

RABAT, Morocco — Najib Benchakouk is a slim, tall and handsome man in his 20s. Equally at ease in the formal black tailcoat and bow tie he wears at work and the jeans and sport shirt he favors when he's off, he is unable to face life with anything but a smile.

That calm and happy disposition prevails even when he is negotiating the often crowded central streets of this strikingly clean and graceful royal capital, his hometown.

"Hang on," he said with a big grin, "this can be dangerous."

Thus warned, I straddled the tiny passenger seat of his rather underpowered French motorcycle and set out one recent afternoon to explore Rabat, Morocco's urban showcase on the shores of the Atlantic.

I wasn't about to pass up an opportunity to turn mere sightseeing into discovery with the aid of a thoughtful and knowledgeable native.

Najib had dismissed my concern about his being away from his young family by explaining that his wife would not be home until later in the day. Politely and with his trademark smile, he also declined my offer to pay for the tour — a noteworthy departure in this country in the northwest corner of Africa, where men of every age often hustle tourists as self-styled guides.

NOT ONE of the latter, nor one of the bona fide guides certified by the national tourist office, Najib is a concierge in the Regency Club lounge at the Rabat Hyatt Regency, my favorite among several fine hotels in town.

Like other urban Moroccans, he was very familiar with modern developments in everything from computers to politics. But he also was well-versed in the history and traditions of his 3,000-year-old homeland. As we made our way around the city, he became a window on the country at large and Rabat in particular.

Like Najib himself, this city is comfortable with Morocco's long-established customs as well as its mostly imported modern technology and trends.

Images of the country held by foreigners — among them donkey carts and snake charmers, and noisy crowds of robed men and veiled women in flowing caftans — seldom materialize here, except perhaps during a festival.

The overall flavor of this mostly white city full of trees and flowers is more European than Arabian, especially in the central business district, with its modern office buildings, fashionable stores, broad avenues and locals wearing mostly Western-style clothes.

Yet, ancient fortifications, stately mosques topped with slender minarets, the medina or Old Town and historic landmarks are distinctive features, similar to those found in greater numbers in Marrakech, Fez and other Moroccan towns.

Frequent visitors and foreign diplomats stationed here usually ascribe two of the city's attributes — neatness and the nearly total absence of street hustlers — to its role as the official residence of the country's strong but popular ruler, King Hassan II.

THE CHAIN-SMOKING and golf-loving monarch is a sophisticated man with a well-known wish to keep his capital clean and running efficiently.

That it is, even in the colorful Old Town quarter.

A few steps from the beaches on the Atlantic and the Bou Regreg River that separates Rabat from the medieval town of Sale, the medina is unlike any other in the country.

Like other medinas in Morocco, this lively area is a collection of carpet, leather, vegetable and other souks or markets. As in other towns, these usually bustling enterprises share space with all sorts of mostly tiny shops and fragrant food stalls. Above them, equally small dwellings serve as homes for merchants and other residents.

What is startlingly different is that this medina would pass a Marine Corps barracks inspection with flying colors. Also notable: It's unlikely that anybody will accost you trying to sell you something.

Since a mosque, the Islamic house of worship, is open only to members of the Moslem religion, I could glance at the neighborhood's ancient Grande Mosque only from the outside.

More accessible is the Mausoleum of Mohammed V, which ranks as a masterpiece of traditional Arabian-Moslem architecture.

A large, yet graceful square structure with off-white walls faced with marble and a green pyramid-shaped roof crowned by a trio of traditional golden globes, it houses the tomb of the present king's father.

MOHAMMED V was the sultan who in the 1950s led Morocco to independence from France and Spain. Large stained-glass windows under a gold-leaf dome filter the nearly constant sunlight that bathes the opulent chamber where the tomb rests on a polished black marble floor. As eye-catching as the mausoleum, with its red-caped royal guards, is the large plaza linking it with another landmark, Hassan Tower, the 165-foot unfinished minaret of a 12th century mosque.

Nearby, just outside the old city walls, a massive stone archway flanked by two matching turrets leads into the ruins of the Chellah, a fortified royal cemetery dating back more than eight centuries. It is now a park where well-kept gardens provide color around rust-brown ruins that include those of a Roman settlement. A serene setting well worth a stroll, it is inhabited only by a flock of graceful storks atop the tiled minaret of a former mosque, along with other birds and a couple of stray cats.

Another notable sight faces the river and the sea on a bluff adjacent to the medina: the massive Kasbah des Oudaias. It was the garrison of an Arab tribe 10 centuries ago. Much of the original fortress, or kasbah in Arabic, still stands. Inside the huge ramparts are tiered Andalusian-style gardens, a mosque, a number of fine private homes and a popular Moorish cafe that offers great views of Sale across the slender river. Also here is a 17th century palace, portions of which house the Museum of Moroccan Arts' superb collection of handicrafts.

AROUND THE corner, another equally majestic gate leads down to the rather modern official residence of King Hassan, the Dar el-Makhzen. The royal quarters are not open to the public, but you can visit the courtyards if you are accompanied by an official guide.

Across the street from the four marble pillars with a high arch serving as the main entrance to the palace, the modern Ahl Fas Mosque is the royal house of worship.

A different kind of attraction — but also one with a royal connection — lies at the edge of a splendid forest of oaks and cork trees about seven miles southeast of Rabat: The 45-hole Dar es Salam Golf Course where the king plays frequently.

Najib Benchakouk's keen eye for aesthetic values revealed itself at day's end when he asked if I'd like to see his favorite building in town.

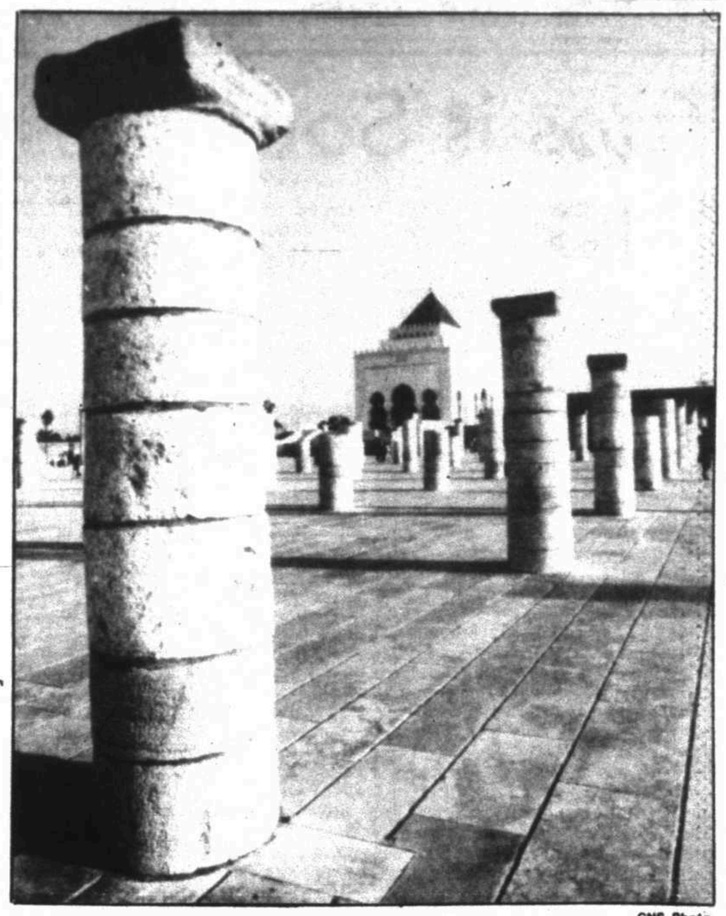

It took a while to reach the site, and en route I wondered more than once if we would survive the heavy rush-hour traffic. We did, with only a couple of near-misses, and with me feeling a bit shaky and Najib never losing his smile.

Several utterly quiet minutes passed as we viewed a low-rise mosque from a distance, both of us seated atop his little bike.

"It's not finished yet," he said, "but it already feels so peaceful."

The magnificent pale green building shimmered in the dusk like a carefully crafted jewel box about to take off into the heavens.

It was a moment as special as Morocco's sparkling capital.

Prepare for Morocco trip

By PHILIP SOUSA
Copley News Service

Entry requirements: U.S. and Canadian citizens must have valid passports, but no visa or vaccination certificates are required for stays of up to three months.

Best time to visit: Since Morocco covers an area larger than Texas and its natural features range from the dunes of the Sahara Desert to the snow-topped peaks of the Atlas Mountains and sandy shores on both the Atlantic Ocean and the Mediterranean Sea, your sporting interest may dictate when to visit the kingdom. Generally, though, fall, winter and spring are the best seasons.

Getting there: Several Moroccan cities — including Rabat, Marrakech and Agadir — have direct air service from London, Paris, Madrid and other European cities. The country's main international gateway, however, is Casablanca. Royal Air Maroc flies nonstop from New York to Casa, as most residents call their city, in less than seven hours several times a week.

I flew to and out of Morocco via Paris with Air France; both flights were full, but I found the service in economy class as good or better than first class within the United States.

There also is ferryboat service from Spain and France to Tangiers and Casablanca.

Currency: The monetary unit is the dirham (dh), which comes in 5, 10, 50 and 100 bills and coins of 1 to 5. A the time of this writing, the exchange was 8 dh to $1.

Since regulations forbid the import or export of dirhams, all exchange transactions must be done in Morocco. Exchange rates usually are the same throughout the country, with banks offering the best rates.

Language: Arabic is the official language, with French widely spoken in the larger centers and English in the main tourist hubs.

Religion: Islam is the official religion, but freedom of worship is widespread and respected. All large towns have synagogues and churches.

Accommodations: There is a wide range of options, from youth hostels and modest pensions to five-star luxury properties. Several hotels, notably the Mamounia in Marrakech and the Hyatt Regency in Rabat, are among Africa's best.

Getting around: Moroccan highways are considered Africa's best. Rental cars are readily available in the major towns, but it is a good idea to reserve them in advance.

Train service, especially in first class, is excellent, but familiarity with French or the services of a travel agency may be needed to purchase tickets and reserve seats.

Buses are reasonable but often crowded.

Guides: If traveling on your own and in need of a guide, politely but firmly refuse sightseeing help offered on the streets. Instead, visit the local branch of the national tourist office or the syndicat d'initiative, which are semiprivate tourism organizations located in all major towns.

Best deals: For best value and convenience, consider a package holiday through Royal Air Maroc or Air France.

On my most recent visit I used the latter and was delighted with the quality of the service.

Photography: Film in this otherwise quite reasonable country is one of the few items that costs more than in America, so bring an adequate supply.

Except for military installations, there are no restrictions on photo-taking. However, as is the case in other Arabian countries, some Moroccans object to being photographed for religious reasons, while others pose gladly for a small fee. Best rule: Ask first.

World Crude Oil Price

Weak oil prices?

Oil prices could weaken — but only slightly — now that OPEC has decided on a modest increase in its output cap in the next few months, analysts say.

"It may portend slightly lower prices," said Michael Rothman, an analyst at Merrill Lynch Capital Markets in New York.

At a final meeting, OPEC agreed to raise their collective supply ceiling from 19.5 million barrels a day to 20.5 million barrels in the final three months of the year. The extra amount would be shared by the OPEC countries.

However, the cartel has been pumping about 22 million barrels a day, well in excess of the current output limit.

Despite OPEC's recent surge in production, oil prices have held fairly steady. Even so, the average price of a basket of crudes monitored by the cartel was quoted recently at about a dollar under its target of $18 a barrel.

The ministers believe demand for their oil is strong enough to absorb any increase in production without sending prices tumbling.

Some analysts predicted OPEC's decision would translate into much more oil on the market, dampening both crude and gasoline prices at the pump.

Cheap Apples

Apple Computer Inc., which has been bringing out more powerful and expensive personal computers, is working on a much lower-cost version of its flagship Macintosh line.

The computer, which would be Apple's lowest-priced Macintosh, is tentatively scheduled for introduction some time next year, according to several people familiar with the project. They say that Apple wants to price its new product at about $1,000 and that the computer would be an essential piece of the company's attempt to extend its share of the desktop computer market.

Apple won't comment on products in development, but the company clearly believes the market for personal computers has barely been tapped.

ROUGHNECKS

Where did they all go?

By JULIE JEROME
Business/Oil Writer

A shortage of qualified, experienced roughnecks in the oilfield has prevented some Permian Basin drilling companies from operating at capacity. And the shortage will not let up until there is sustained, increased drilling activity, say drilling contractors.

"I can see it coming," Ray Peterson said of the low supply of qualified roughnecks. "I know the Permian Basin, or the United States for that matter, could not sustain much increased activity without experiencing a serious shortage."

Peterson of Peterson Drilling Co., is vice president of the International Association of Drilling Contractors for the West Texas-New Mexico region. His firm has not "turned down work" because of the supply shortfall, but Peterson knows it's inevitable.

"We've (the oil industry) starved them out and they left the area," he said. "And it's hard to attract them back."

Gene Grimes with Grace Drilling noticed a tightening of the supply of roughnecks about one month ago. He said the shortage is not critical yet, but admitted his company could be working one or two more rigs if it could recruit qualified roughnecks.

Cactus Drilling Co., has 22 rigs to operate, but is working only nine now, partially because of the shortage of qualified roughnecks, according to Mac McGee.

Technical shortage may stall local job market

Declining Texas Jobs

Above are the Texas jobs that will decline as demand for technical skills grows in the Permian Basin and elsewhere. Mining includes oil extraction.

By JULIE JEROME
Business/Oil Writer

While there is high demand for qualified roughnecks, there is also an overwhelming need on the local, state and national level for technical competence and training through the year 2000, according to local experts.

Midland College's Business and Economic Development Center recently released a study on labor demand in the Permian Basin through the year 2000. The study was funded by the Permian Basin Private Industry Council (PBPIC). Nolan M. McCarty, a student at Midland College, conducted the survey.

It found that electricians, telephone operators, photographic process workers, upholsterers, insulation workers, EEG technicians, protective services, counter and rental sales workers, millwrights, and legal assistants are the 10 fastest growing occupations in the 17-county area covered by the Private Industry Council.

General managers and top executives, and communications occupations are the two slowest growing occupations, according to the study.

The study consisted of a survey of 750 businesses representing the 17 counties drawn at a random sample from the Texas Employment Commission mailing list for the area, and some other sources. Of the sample, 130 businesses returned usable questionnaires. This represents 6.1 percent of the total number of employees in the area.

"For the past two to three years transitions have been taking place all over the United States," according to Willie Taylor, director of employment and training for the PBPIC. "All businesses are looking for technology to run their businesses more efficiently."

And that translates into the need for a labor force that is capable of operating this technology, he said.

"Their qualified employees are going to require high intensity training," he said.

And the job titles with the highest growth patterns in this study don't require a four-year education, according to Dr. Jerry Jones, chairman of the division of business studies at Midland College.

"Many of these do not even require an associate degree," he noted. "Some of the fastest growing segments require specialized technical training. We see that these top demand areas are technical."

And state and national reports say the shift in occupational composition will be changes in skill requirements for existing jobs.

"For example, secretaries will be required to use word processors rather than typewriters and clerks might need to know how to use computers rather than calculators," according to a future job demand report by the Texas Employment Commission.

Dallas oilman adds pounds to rig count

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

A former Midlander and now Dallas oilman is impacting the rig count in the Permian Basin by drilling with British pounds.

Michael Hogue, who was raised in Midland, is now president of Richmond Oil & Gas, a British-backed firm with ambitious plans to become a major player among independent energy producers in the United States.

"Those plans will translated into about 330 wells in two years," said Hogue, who has raised over 21 million pounds or $32 million on the London Stock Exchange for U.S. drilling.

He says the company has already drilled five wells on the Johnson Ranch in Loving County and has plans to drill a total of 36 wells before year end. They will be 6,500 ft. Cherry canyon infill and step-out wells. He also plans to drill at least one and possibly two 16,500 ft. Atoka wells in the area.

Overall, Richmond has pumped more than $3 million into the Midland-area economy, and has plans to spend another $13 million.

Overseeing drilling operations in the Permian Basin are Mark Mladenka, petroleum engineer, and James Ryan, geologist. The company recently opened an office at Clay-Desta Bank.

Additionally, the first of 36 drilling sites has been completed in the San Juan Basin, near Farmington, New Mexico and the company has received permits to drill on 15 sites near Amarillo.

Other U.S. areas targeted by Richmond include the Panhandle and the San Juan Basin.

"We'll be getting into the coal seam play," said Hogue. "We have slated 28 wells for the Basin."

Hogue, 34, says he became acquainted socially with some British investors and later joined a private British oil company, after a partnership on several drilling ventures proved successful. Richmond Petroleum, was formed in 1987 and went on the London Stock Exchange in July. He expects the company to fare well in the British investment community. "Most of the independent oil companies listed on the Exchange do well." he noted.

Part of the Richmond asset has come from the acquisition of proven reserves purchased from bankruptcy.

With the holdings and with the $32 million in capital generated by the recent public offering on the London Stock Exchange, Richmond Oil & Gas is set to drill its way into the marketplace.

Hogue

But Hogue notes the new venture will avoid the mistakes made by companies that came unglued when prices fell to their current low levels. "We've built ourselves so that we can make a profit with the market at its current conditions. We are a new energy company that is going to survive in the new energy market," Hogue said.

Born and raised in the oil business, Hogue's father was in the diamond drill bit business at Odessa, and Hogue later worked with his father selling bits.

Today, Hogue spends his time between Dallas and London, taking care of the affairs of the company, but he once logged 110,000 miles in a used 1973 Thunderbird, criss-crossing the country selling oilfield equipment — even sleeping in his car during the boom.

The equipment salesman also worked for a time as a land man for Mitchell Energy Corp., before launching out on his own, to buy leases and participate in drilling deals.

Hogue says he appreciates the British way of investing that takes a long term view of projects. Still he and his British investors are confident that now is the time to launch out in he oil business and profits will not be so long in coming.

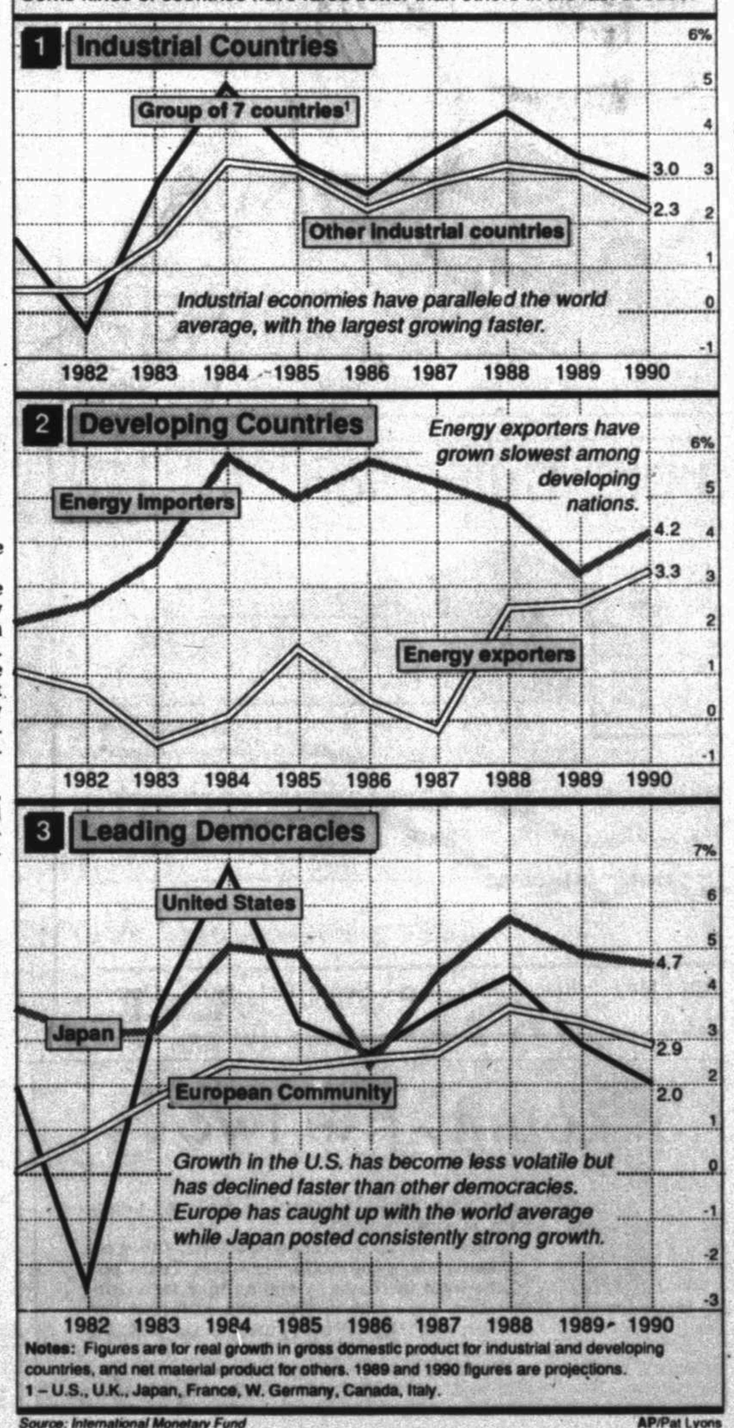

Company officials are confident they'll be pumping 500 barrels of oil and 2 million cubic feet of natural gas per day by Nov. 1.

ECONOMY

A Soft Landing for the World Economy

Growth of the world economy (the grey background in each panel) is gently slowing down to an estimated 2.9% in 1990, according to new IMF projections. Economic policymakers hope that such a "soft landing" can avoid severe inflation without triggering a recession (below-zero growth). Some kinds of countries have fared better than others in the last decade.

Notes: Figures are for real growth in gross domestic product for industrial and developing countries, and net material product for others. 1989 and 1990 figures are projections.

Economic expansion to slow

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States and other rich industrial countries will experience a healthy cooling of business growth this year and next, the International Monetary Fund predicted Sunday.

"Projections point to a gradual moderation in the pace of expansion during 1989 and 1990, following two years of rapid growth," the fund said in its semiannual "World Economic Outlook."

For this year it sees the United States and 20 other non-Communist industrial countries increasing their total output by 3.5 percent. That is 0.2 percent higher than its prediction of last April. Though the fraction seems in percentage terms, the difference amounts to tens of billions of dollars worth of additional goods and services for the group.

In 1990, growth is predicted to be 2.9 percent for the 21 countries.

For the United States alone, the world's biggest economy, the slowdown is seen as much greater: 4.4 percent last year, 2.9 percent this year and only 2.1 percent in 1990.

The most growth is predicted for Japan: 4.9 percent this year and 4.7 percent in 1990; for West Germany 4 percent and 3 percent; for France 3.4 and 3; for Italy 3.2 and 2.9 and for Britain 3 and 2.7.

"There is no sign of recession — we do not see it in the current projections," Jacob Frenkel, the fund's research chief, told reporters.

He called the slowdown healthy and said he was especially cheered by the growth of investment in new plants and equipment. These create additional jobs and production for the future.

But the report warned that there is still a danger of inflation if the slowdown it foresees in demand for goods does not appear. Frenkel urged governments to take care to prevent it.

"When you see inflation in the figures, you have lost the battle," he said.

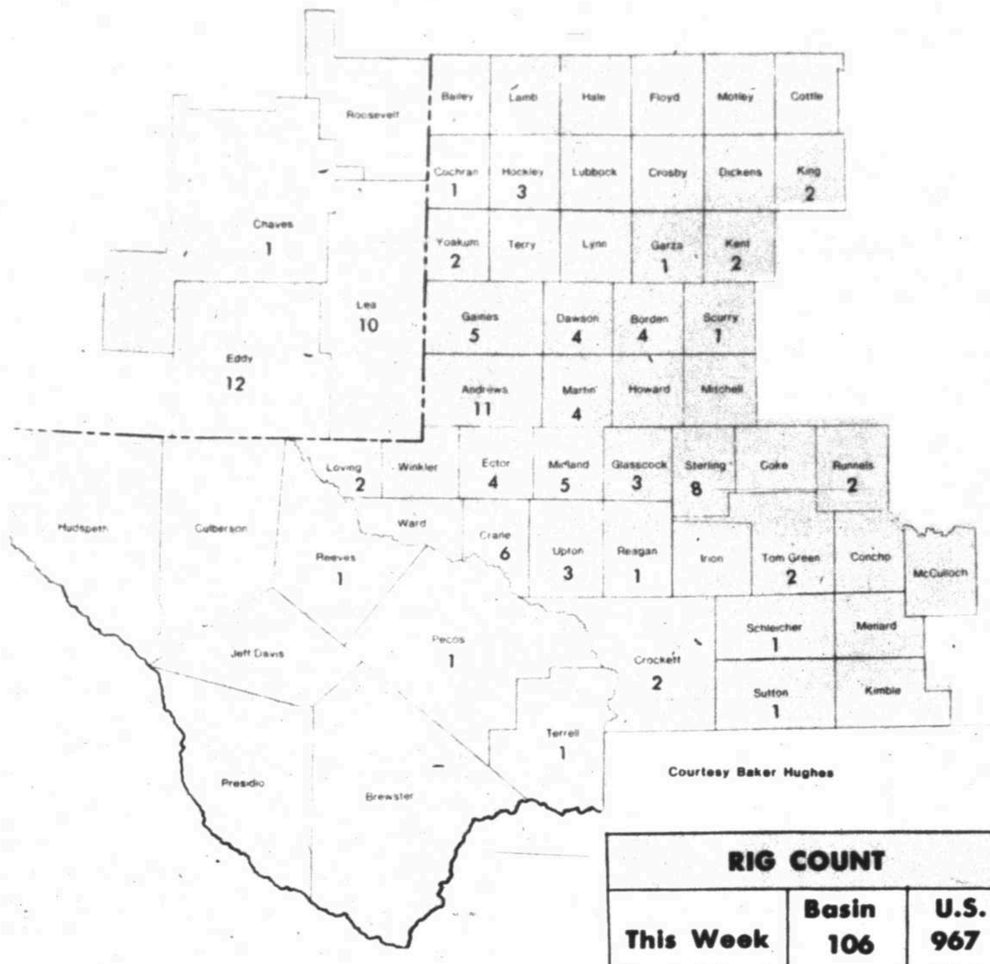

Frenkel said he is also worried by the imbalances in world trade — the huge excess of imports over exports in the United states, and the reverse situation in Japan and West Germany. The report said Japan and West Germany should not try to expand right now, but should be ready if necessary.

Basin, U.S. counts rise two

From Staff Reports

Both the U.S. and Permian Basin rig counts rose two from the previous week.

Baker Hughes Inc. reports that the U.S. tally rose from 965 to 967, continuing a slow but steady rise and remaining above year-ago levels for the fourth straight week, Baker Hughes Inc. reported today.

The Permian Basin tally rose from 104 to 106, just one below year-ago levels.

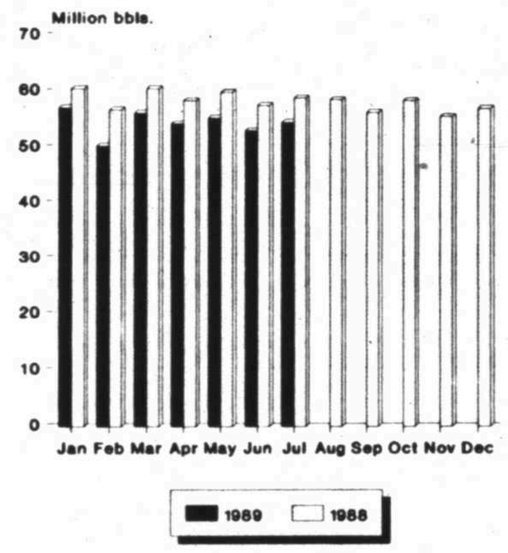

Eddy County, N.M. was the most active in the Basin with 12 rigs, followed by Andrews County with 11 rigs.

Reagan County saw renewed activity this week.

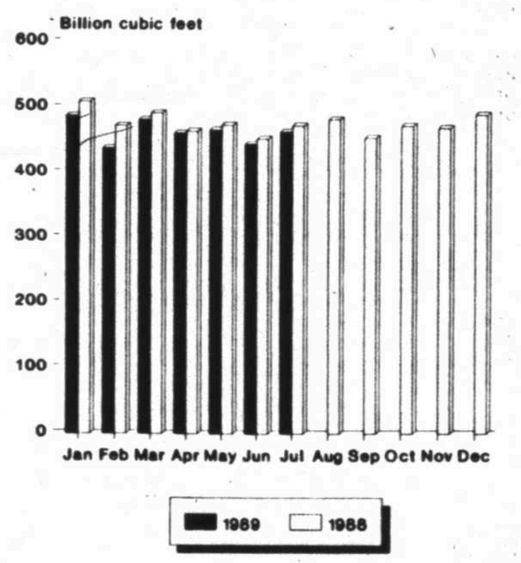

Among major oil producing states, Texas posted the most increases by adding nine rigs. Other increases were seen in Oklahoma with five; New Mexico, two; Ohio, two; Pennsylvania, two; and Michigan, one.

Wyoming showed the most decreases with five, followed by California, Colorado and Kansas, which each lost one rig.

Oil production falls as gas rises

The Texas Railroad Commission reports that crude oil production averaged 1,756,249 barrels daily in July, compared to 1,765,657 barrels daily produced in June. The preliminary oil production figure for July is 54,443,731 barrels, up from 52,969,72 barrels in June. Final June reports put production at 1,777,795 barrels daily. Natural gas production from Texas oil and gas wells was 462,213,400 Mcf in July, up from 443,694,391 Mcf in June. However, July production was down 0.72 percent when compared to July 1988 production of 465,592,739 Mcf.

The above graphic from the Texas Railroad Commission shows the Texas rig count has been unpredictable. According to Baker Hughes Inc., the state rig count was 234 in July, down from 241 in June. The average rig count to date in 1989 has been 236, with the low being 226, in February, and the high 246, in January. The state tally has fallen from 992 in 1982 to 277 in 1988.

U.S. rig fleet falls for seventh year

By BARBARA SHOOK
Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — The size of the U.S. drilling rig fleet dropped for the seventh consecutive year as contractors cannibalized old units for parts and equipment or moved them overseas, industry executives say.

"Once again we have little good news concerning the health of the drilling contractor business," said Reed Tool Co. President Roy Caldwell. "It is bad news because drilling currently remains an unprofitable venture."

Reed's annual census showed 2,542 drilling rigs are available for work in the United States, down 210 from 1988. The rate of decline did slow from the year-ago level, Caldwell said. The domestic fleet lost 579 rigs between 1987 and 1988.

The number of rigs working was down by almost as much as the total fleet size. Consequently, the utilization rate improved only 1 percentage point to 57 percent this year, Caldwell added.

"Although rig activity has been increasing in the past few weeks, and it appears it will continue to do so through the end of the year, there still remains a substantial gap between supply and demand for rigs in the United States," he said. "This is not good news for the contracting industry."

Reed foresees little improvement in rig utilization in 1990. Caldwell said fewer rigs will be taken out of service in the coming year and contractors are showing greater ability to bring older rigs back into working condition.

For next year, Reed predicts a rig fleet of 2,300 units, with 1,400 active. The utilization rate will be 61 percent.

The company defines an available rig as one owned and operated by either a drilling contractor or oil and gas company that has been active within the past three years, located in the continental United States, Alaska or offshore waters.

If the rig is not currently operating, it must be able to go back into service within 30 days at a cost of less than $50,000, Caldwell said.

Caldwell pointed out that the United States is the only major Western nation that has not established a policy to encourage domestic oil and gas exploration. The current lack of drilling will affect the country for years to come through increasing dependence on foreign suppliers, particularly for crude oil, he said.

The Resolution Trust Corp. alleges Emerald Coast Joint Venture has failed to keep up payments on two mortgages on the property in southern Walton County and owes $95.87 million in principal, interest and deferred loan placement fees.

The suit was filed Sept. 13 in U.S. District Court here. Resolution is the federal agency that took over the original lender, insolvent Hill Financial Savings Association of Red Hill, Pa.

Also named as defendants are the joint venture's two partners, FSD Group Inc. and Nationwide Lending Group Inc., a subsidiary of Hill Financial. Hill was taken over by the Federal Savings & Loan Insurance Corp. last February and by Resolution on Aug. 9.

Lease bids show exploration interest

AUSTIN (SWN) — Energy exploration is still on the rise, Texas Land Commissioner Garry Mauro said on Wednesday, citing a 14 percent jump in the number of state energy leases up for bid in the October 3 Oil & Gas Lease Sale.

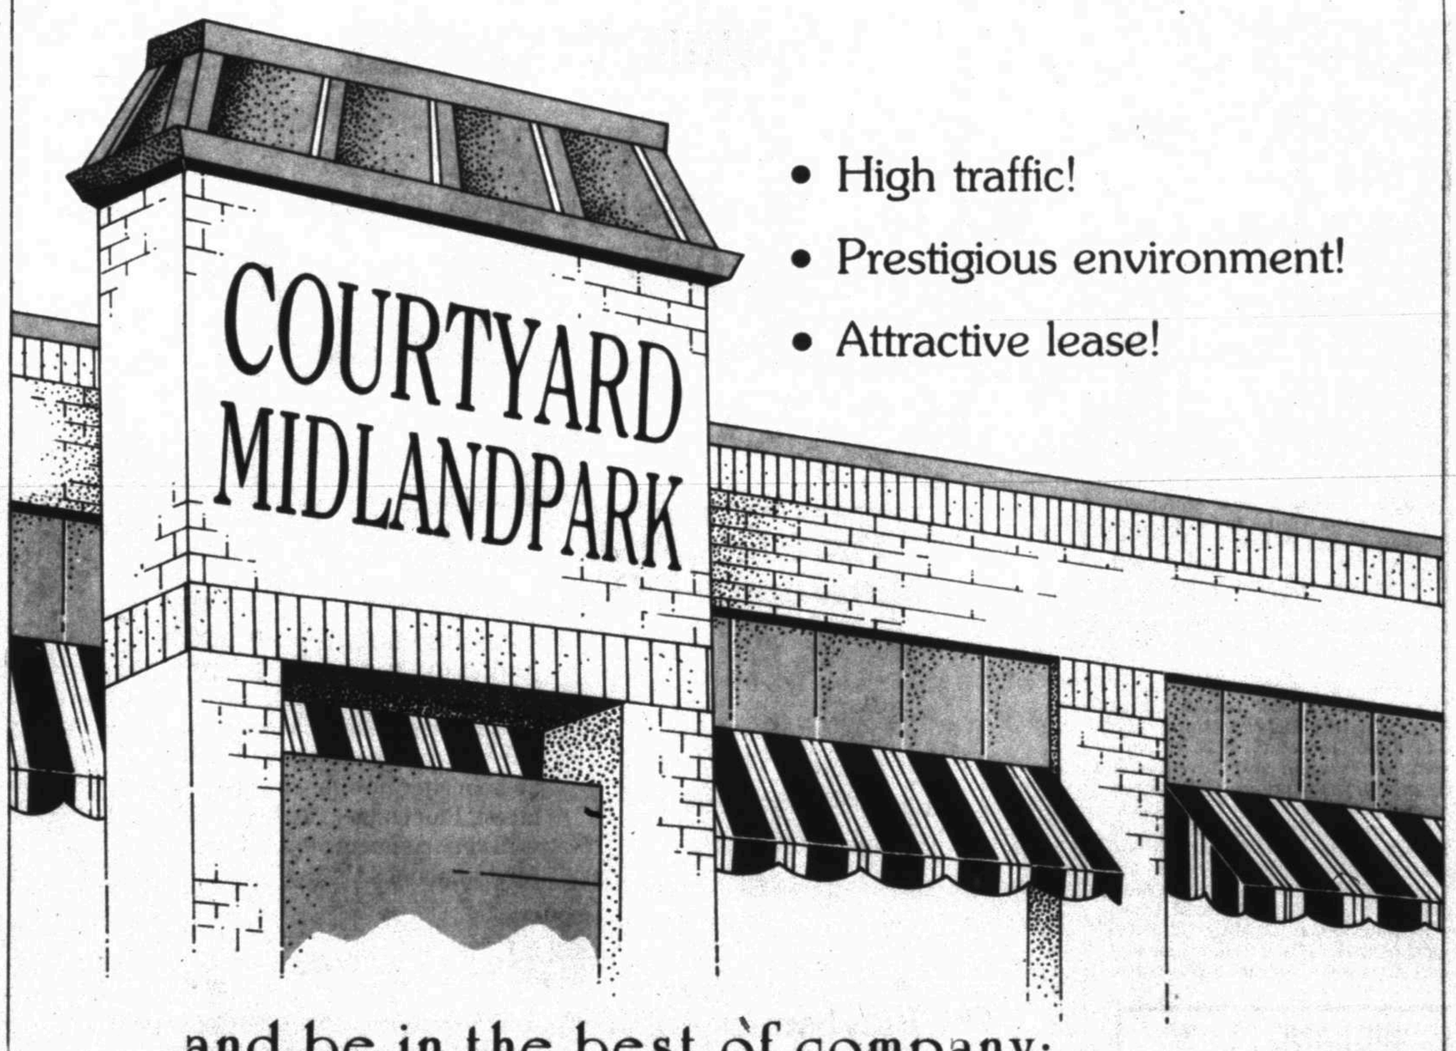

"Energy industry interest in exploration continues to climb, especially for state tracts likely to produce natural gas," Mauro said. "At last April's semi-annual lease sale, 351 tracts totaling 256,165 acres were nominated to be bid on. This sale has shown heightened interest with 397 tracts picked for a total of 267,075 acres offered."

El Paso Electric going back to basics

By SUZANNE GAMBOA

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — A little less than two years ago, the key word at El Paso Electric Co. was "diversify" as the utility, flush with $91 million in cash left over from the sale of its interest in a nuclear plant, looked to plug into profits from other industries.

But the rules changed and profits from thrifts and various manufacturing companies didn't materialize, changing El Paso Electric from a cash-rich buyer to a money-losing seller.

"We're taking our losses this year, so when we go again next year, we can begin to report better earnings and a better financial picture for our customers," said David Wiggs, elevated to chairman this year.

The utility took a $24.42 million writedown earlier this year because of losses in its investment subsidiary. Dividend payments have been suspended, possibly through 1991.

El Paso Electric, which serves about 236,000 customers in El Paso, the Rio Grande Valley in West Texas and southern New Mexico, reported a net loss for the 12 months ending June 30 of $59.03 million on revenues of $404.32 million.

Critics are concerned ratepayers will be hurt by the investments gone bad because El Paso had planned to use profits from the investments to pay $11 million of the $66 million annual lease payment on Unit 2 of Palo Verde Nuclear Generating Station.

Without those profits, the utility must find another way to pay that bill, but Wiggs promises shareholders, not ratepayers, will bear the cost.

El Paso Electric already had made some non-utility investments before it got about $120 million for Unit 2 at the three-unit nuclear station near Phoenix in 1987.

After paying off some debt, officials were left with about $91 million.

With that money, El Paso bought stock in two savings and loans, lured a New Jersey lamp manufacturer to the border city and bought a Houston oil drilling supplies company, a California furniture manufacturer and a local steel manufacturer.

Returning to the utility-only business began in February, when the utility began shopping two downtown buildings it had bought and renovated through its Franklin Land and Resources subsidiary.

The purchases were supposed to help revitalize downtown, but the company took a $36 million loss this year on its $70 million investment, saying 1986 tax law changes severely reduced the amount of losses the company could apply against taxes.

Also up for sale:

—Westwood Lighting Group Inc., a Patterson, N.J. lamp manufacturer that moved to El Paso when the utility bought half ownership.

—EnerServ Products Inc., a Houston oil drilling supplies manufacturer.

—B.P. John, a Santa Ana, Calif. furniture manufacturer that was supposed to move to Las Cruces, N.M., but didn't because of the cost.

The utility also is selling its stock in Commercial Federal Savings of Omaha, Neb. at a $28 million loss. In June 1988, the utility reported losses of $20 million in insurance annuities bought from a company with no licenses.

El Paso Electric, which won't reveal the asking prices, said it hopes to be able to recover its investment, but analysts expect the company to lose money on the deals.

The only holding the utility has retained is Border Steel Mills Inc. in nearby Vinton, which it bought in 1987.

"Financially, they're on shaky ground right now," said Nathan Partain, analyst for Duff & Phelps Inc. of Chicago. "There're a lot of things on their plate that they've got to do something with."

The investments were supposed to help build El Paso Electric's rate base and lower rates to customers, he said. "But when you have start up businesses, businesses in their infancy or relocation, you need seed money to get them going and (El Paso Electric) doesn't have the funds available to make the investment work out in the longer term," Partain said.

Norman Gordon, who represents the city in rate cases before the state Public Utility Commission, said sour investments likely will mean higher rates for customers.

"The utility isn't making any dividend payments. The question is, where is the money going to come from?" Gordon said.

WTGS schedules fall symposium

From Staff Reports

Fisher

Langdon

William L. Fisher, director of the Bureau of Economic Geology, University of Texas, will be a keynote speaker at the West Texas Geological Society's fall symposium Oct. 19-20 at the Midland Center.

Fisher will be one of 30 speakers to address the conference. Other speakers include Federal Energy Regulatory Commissioner Jerry Langdon and Grover Murray, a distinguished geologist and former president of Texas Tech University.

The symposium's theme is "Search for the Subtle Trap: Hydrocarbon Exploration in Mature Basins." Symposium chairman Ron Johnson says the subtle trap is a key oil-finding strategy for the 1990s.

"A lot of the big structural plays have been made," he explains. "The only thing left in many areas are subtle traps — stratigraphic, small structures and combinations of the two."

An estimated 300 to 400 geologists, landmen, engineers and operators are expected to attend the event, about half from out of town.

Over 25 papers are to be presented, ranging from "Subtle Traps in Ordovician to Permian Carbonate Petroleum Reservoirs" by Sal Mazzullo to raising capital with or without incentives from Washington by Mark Edmunds.

Papers on specific fields include presentations on the Mescalero Escarpe of southeast New Mexico, the South Empire field of Eddy County, N.M., West Texas' Ford-Geraldine Ford field, and West Smyer field of Hockley County, among others.

Other papers will address hidden Permian Basin structures, Morrow sandstones, submarine fans, high-resolution seismic and new north Midland Basin targets. Other topics to be addressed include paleostructure, satellite imagery, exploration strategy development, CSMAT: a new tool for exploration, and porosity beneath unconformities.

Registration is $85 until Oct. 18, $95 after that date. The fee includes a 400-page publication summarizing the presentations. Discount hotel accomodations are available through the Midland Hilton. Those preregistering can pick up their symposium packets in the Midland Center lobby Oct. 18 from 1 to 5 p.m.

For registration or further information, call the WTGS office at 683-1573.

ECONOMY

The picture it gave for indebted Third World countries was much gloomier.

"Seven years after the onset of the debt crisis, the prospects for a sustained improvement in growth remained in doubt for many developing countries — in contrast to the more favorable outlook for those developing countries that have avoided debt-servicing difficulties and for the industrial nations," the report said.

It calculated that production in countries having trouble with their debt grew by only 2 percent last year. Since population in those countries grows as fast or faster, that meant no meaningful increase in average income and in many an actual decline.

The report gave little attention to Treasury Secretary Nicholas F. Brady's proposal for reducing the Third World's $1.3 trillion debt, though it said the growing importance of debt reduction — along with new lending — should promote growth.

"It is important to realize that debt reduction is no panacea and that strong adjustment measures remain the key to fundamental improvements in economic performance," it said.

Frenkel said debt reduction is justified only by improved policies on the part of debtor governments. He emphasized the importance of new lending. Major U.S. banks have recently been increasing their reserves to cushion losses from Third World debt, a move widely interpreted as indicating their unwillingness to make new loans.

"There is no way you can forget new lending," Frenkel said. "It must be part of future packages."

RIGS

"There is a lack of qualified people right now," he said. "There just aren't any roughnecks out there. If they didn't stay in the oil business, they're out of the country."

And many of the individuals who have remained with the oil business are in well servicing, he said.

"It began in 1988, but this is the worst year in history for the drilling industry," he said."

McGee doesn't want to hire additional crews just for the fourth quarter of this year, a temporary amount of time.

"You can't hire people just for the fourth quarter and when it goes back to low activity levels expect to keep experienced help," he said.

Jim Singleton with TMBR-Sharp Drilling Inc., said his firm has come "close" to limiting its drilling activity because of a shortage of roughnecks. He said there are not as many "qualified and experienced hands, who are interested in the oil business as a livelihood" as there used to be.

"We've (the industry) put a lot of people out of the oilfield," he said. "Many of them have taken less wages for steady work."

Singleton said if a "quick" increase in drilling activity was to occur, the oil patch would experience a critical shortage of roughnecks.

All drilling contractors interviewed agreed that more stringent drug testing requirements could be part of the filtering out of roughnecks. But they are emphatic that drug testing is good for the oilfield and saves them money in the long run.

"Drug testing is the best thing to happen to the oilfield," Grimes said. "Accidents have come down."

"Drug testing is a necessary proponet of the roughneck shortage," Peterson said. "I suppose we have fewer available hands because of it. But I'm not going to discontinue drug testing just to get the hands back."

Singleton agreed, saying TMBR/Sharp Drilling has been conducting drug testing for nearly two years.

If an employee cannot pass a drug test, he said, "We don't want him."

Sustained activity is the "real answer," to attracting the qualified, experienced roughnecks, Peterson said. "Money is not the only answer."

McGee said, "It's going to take a coordinated effort between the service companies and the oil producers to train (qualified roughnecks). It's going to take time and a sustained increase in drilling activity."

Singleton said the oil industry must offer roughnecks incentive to get back into the oilfield.

"Wages or benefits might be considered," he said. "But the main thing is full-time work."

Hogue sees modest improvements in gas and oil prices through the end of the year. "I expect that there will be isolated shortages of gas later this year and that should keep the price up," he said.

Hogue says oil demand is up and the gas bubble is broken, but he doesn't see a rush on the part of Texans to re-invest in the oil industry, because of lingering "shell shock."

JOBS

The Permian Basin study projected that by the year 2000, there will be 5,247 new jobs in the oil patch, which was by far the sector with the greatest number of new jobs. Food and beverage service was projected to offer 3,579 new jobs by the 21st Century, according to the survey. Chefs, cooks and kitchen workers was the occupation third in line of job creation with 3,527. Secretaries should see 2,610 new job opportunities in the Permian Basin by the year 2000, according to the survey.

Likewise, on the state level, business and repair services is projected to expand by an estimated 197,000 jobs by the year 2000, a 52 percent growth rate. Most of the increase in this sector will be in business services, which will advance to accommodate the larger number of employers in the state, according to the Texas Employment Commission.

Computer and data processing services is one of the fastest-growing business services, both nationally and in Texas. Personnel services is projected to increase significantly by the year 2000, due primarily to personnel supply services, the state study found. Employers are realizing the benefits of using temporary help rather than permanent workers in many instances.

However, the state report found that because emphasis is being placed on diversification away from the dependence on oil and gas, the mining sector is projected to lose an additional 20,900 jobs, 8 percent, between 1985 and 2000.

One industry that stands out as a high demand area on local, state and national levels is medicine.

Locally, the number of positions for EEG technicians are projected to grow 160 percent between now and the year 2000; dental assistants and hygienists are projected to grow 100 percent; dental laboratory technicians are projected to grow 97.87 percent; and EKG technicians are projected to grow 62.50 percent.

Taylor emphasized the need for incentives to draw young professionals entering the medical field.

"We have to start offering incentives for the young people to come back to the Permian Basin to work in the medical field," he said.

According to the the Texas Employment Commission study on job demands through the year 2000, the most significant industry projected to show advances is health services, which is expected to add 200,000 jobs, for a 48 percent increase.

"This sector includes hospitals, physicians' offices and nursing homes," the study stated. "An increasingly older population will require more health care services — particularly nursing homes and home care workers. This industry contains employment in all hospitals, including those owned by cities, counties, Texas and the United States."

Jones noted that the population of the Permian Basin is slightly younger than national and state averages.

However, efforts of the Midland-Odessa Health and Retirement Endeavor (MOHRE) to bring retired residents to the Permian Basin should change local population age trends by the year 2000, he said.

"The efforts of MOHRE should bring aging population to our area," he said. As a result, demands for jobs in industries that cater to the older population should show changes locally, he said.

And according to a special report in U.S.News & World Report, medicine is targeted as the "hottest" profession to meet the needs of the 1990s.

"Medical professionals in the 1990s will find their options shaped by an aging population and new technologies," the magazine reported.

Dennis Klejna keeps futures traders honest

WASHINGTON (AP) — The federal agency that polices the commodity markets has been called a snoozing watchdog since scores of Chicago traders were indicted for fraud this summer, but its top cop says the charges show the system works.

"You wouldn't have had the results you had without our involvement in this," said Dennis Klejna, enforcement chief of the Commodity Futures Trading Commission.

Klejna reluctantly agreed to an interview to talk aobut the work of the commission, which is under congressional review for reauthorization of its authority. It faces extraordinary scrutiny partly because of a major fraud scandal in the freewheeling commodity pits of Chicago.

More than 40 traders and brokers at the Chicago Board of Trade and the Chicago Mercantile Exchange were indicted in August, the result of a 2½-year undercover investigation in which FBI agents posing as traders taped conversations.

To congressional critics, the scope of the indictments suggested that the defendants had used the commodity pits as their personal profiteering club and that the commodity commission had been lax in detecting and stopping it.

"Yes, a lot of people were indicted," Klejna said. "I guess people can say that's a large number and there may be more — potentially — we don't know that yet, or at least we're not going to comment on it."

But Klejna (pronounced CLAY-neh) said the Chicago indictments "should not be seen as a sign of weakness but rather as a sign of strength."

The commodity commission is an independent agency that oversees 13 futures markets in Chicago, New York and other cities, much like its sister agency, the Securities and Exchange Commission, which oversees the stock and bond markets.

While it considers the exchanges and their rules as the first line of defense against fraud, the commodity commission is responsible for keeping the futures markets fair.

Klejna, a 42-year-old lawyer with prematurely gray hair, knows about that strength first hand. He has been with the commission almost from its creation by Congress in 1974.

He was an officer with the Army's Judge Advocate General Corps when he read about a new federal agency seeking lawyers.

A 1971 law school graduate from Fordham University in his native New York, Klejna joined the commission as a staff attorney in August 1976 and rose to special counsel in 1978, deputy director of enforcement in 1981 and director since April 1983.

This past week, he was one of several senior federal agency executives who received the presidential award for distinguished service.

"Fiscal year 1989 was one of the most challenging and active years in the history of the commission," the agency's 1991 budget proposal for Congress says. But to Klejna, "they're always busy years."

To get to his sixth floor office in downtown Washington, visitors must thread through a maze of receptionist desks and crowded computer work stations that suggest the commission is outgrowing its space.

Klejna's corner office reveals little of the man who oversees the commodity police force. There is a large desk and table, some chairs and an American flag in one corner. Two works of art decorate a wall, both of them framed posters — one from the American Ballet Theater.

Among the many undisclosed details of the Chicago probe is whether the commission uncovered the wrongdoing first and alerted the FBI or vice versa. The commission has no criminal authority and can seek only civil sanctions for trading violations, tapping its enforcement staff of 140, half of them lawyers.

"I do think you could say they are attempting an enormous job with inadequate resources and that there is no question of the integrity and concientiousness of that division," said Alton Harris, a prominent Chicago lawyer and expert on securities and commodities regulation.

"Having said that, however, I think there are substantial questions as to whether they have their priorities properly aligned," Harris said. A number of market problems, he said, "are best left to rule-making procedures and interpretative guidance rather than enforcement or disciplinary actions."

That sentiment seems to be shared by several commodities lawyers.

Just a few weeks before the indictments were announced, Klejna was a panelist at an American Bar Association function in Chicago.

"And not one, but two defense lawyers that were on that panel talked about how trading abuses had gone on all the time and what's the big deal," Klejna said.

He said the lawyers also questioned the appropriateness of prosecuting traders for what had been seen in the past as essentially "parking ticket" violations.

But to Klejna, they are still illegal.

In July, Klejna announced that a New York-based commodity futures trading concern and three affiliates had agreed to pay a record $4 million to settle allegations of fraud in cocoa contracts.

This year Klejna also concluded what he called the largest anti-fraud sales solicitation case the commission ever brought, with lawsuits against two commodity options firms.

They were accused of misleading customers on investment risks that ran up millions of dollars in losses over five years while the firms took hefty sales commissions.

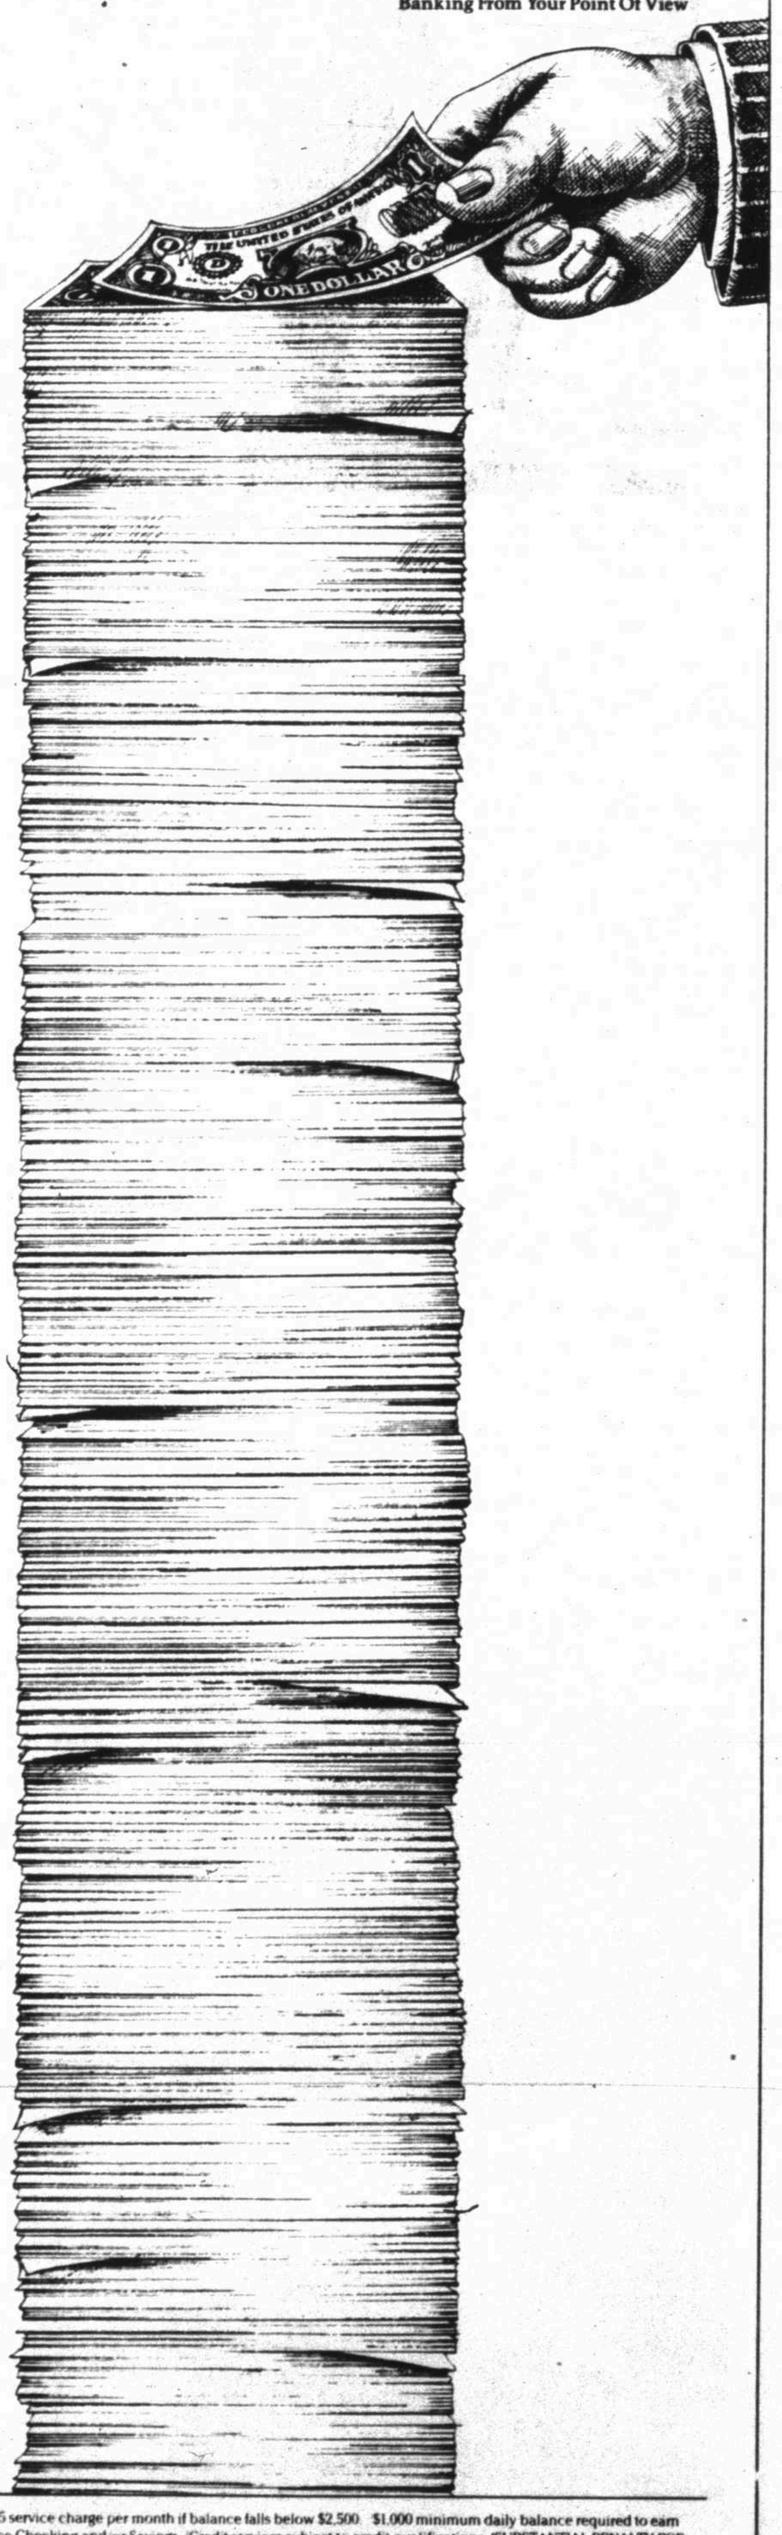

Klejna has appeared uncomfortable in the glare of television lights. His voice trails off behind a thicket of microphones and he masks emotion with a stern face.

Aspenfest draws off-season crowd

By GEORGIA TODD TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

What does a community whose economy is based on seasonal tourist trade do to generate money between seasons? For Ruidoso, N.M., the answer was obvious.

"Create an off-season tourist season," says Bill Hirschfeld, former president of the Ruidoso Valley Chamber of Commerce and a member of the chamber's advertizing and promotions committee. A realtor in Ruidoso, Hirschfeld moved there from Midland 18 years ago.

"Between racing season and ski season it used to be kind of quiet up here. It's so perfect up here in the fall: the leaves are turning, the apples are ripe, the fishing's good and the weather's great for golf."

Back in the 1940s, this mountain community started an annual event called Pioneer Days, which featured demonstrations like blacksmithing. In the past three years, this event has been expanded to aid a sluggish economy.

"Between the summer racing and the winter skiing we used to die," says Tracy Moran, executive director of the Ruidoso Convention & Visitors Bureau. "Business would take a major decline. In order to avoid that and to keep business consistent, we have developed Aspenfest into an umbrella term for many, many events through the September-October period. Aspenfest weekend, the 6th through the 8th of October, is always the main weekend."

Events this coming weekend begin with a parade followed by a street fair, the eighth annual New Mexico State Open Chili Cookoff, the Tri Cities Rod Run car show, live entertainment, demonstrations and an arts and crafts fair featuring works by 85 artists from the Southwest, including four from the West Texas area — Alice Powell and Barbara Henry of Andrews, Joyce Newbrough of Lamesa and Daymond Brock of Brownfield. In addition, one of the judges for the chili cookoff, which is the largest in New Mexico with 85 entrants from a four-state area, is Andrews County Judge Gary Gaston.

"There's going to be Luscious Music, a band from Santa Fe," Ms. Moran says. "They play an electro-acoustic concert harp, pan flutes and other instruments. Their music is just wonderful to listen to. We will also have a storyteller who specializes in legend and folklore."

This year, the area chamber of commerce and the visitors and convention bureau have concentrated more heavily on the street fair, Ms. Moran says. Those attending Aspenfest this coming weekend will discover the event is bigger than it has been in the past.

"The street festival begins at the arts and crafts fair and runs all the way up our main street," she says. "It is interspersed within our shops so people can walk, eat and watch the entertainment all at the same time."

The street festival will be open Saturday and the arts and crafts fair will be open Saturday and Oct. 8.

Following this weekend's activities, the Ruidoso Wurstfest, now called Bavarian Bash, is set for Oct. 20 and 21. For this weekend, Carrizo Lodge will be transformed into a Bavarian Wurst Halle for the 1989 Bash. This historic landmark is located on Carrizo Canyon Road, halfway between the Inn of the Mountain Gods and Ruidoso's main street.

In addition to the music and dancing in the Wurst Halle, the Teen Halle will feature snacks, movies and video games for ages 7 to 13. Also, there will be baby-sitting for children through age 6 in the Kinder Halle.

"My favorite part of Aspenfest is the parade and the chili cookoff which is coming up," Hirschfeld says. "That day of the Aspenfest, the time of the year, there's a little bit of chill, it feels fall but it's still beautiful weather. People come from all over the place to make chili, and I enjoy the entertainment. A parade's a parade as far as I'm concerned, but it's fun."

For Hirschfeld, whose family moved to Midland when he was a child, Ruidoso has become home. A 1969 graduate of Lee High School, Hirschfeld was a member of the Dean's Committee at Midland College during its first year. This committee chose "all sorts of stuff you have to do when you start a new school," such as the school's mascot and colors.

As is true of many Midlanders, Hirschfeld and his family had been going to Ruidoso since he was 5 years old. He enjoys being able to see people who come on a regular basis every year. In fact, that's how he's kept his Midland ties.

"It's a place you don't come to succeed; you just come here to survive," Hirschfeld says. "It's a hard place to make a living, but it's worth it. The lifestyle is the payback."

PUMP BOYS & DINETTES

By GEORGIA TODD TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

When the curtain rises Friday night at the Globe Theatre, the sound of country music will fill the hall.

This year's opening Odessa College production, "Pump Boys and Dinettes," which was nominated for a Tony Award for Best Musical of 1982, features a musical tribute to life by the roadside.

"This is a country pop musical, and it's a little bit different from the other things we've done over the past few years," says Paula Thompson, chairman of the OC theater department and director for this production. "It has a small cast, and the music sounds like it came out of Nashville. It's a blend of all the kinds of music that come under the title of country pop music."

The play features four gas station attendants who operate a station on Highway 57 in Grand Ole Opry country and waitresses Prudie and Rhetta Cupp who run the Double Cupp diner next door, Ms. Thompson says. The four guys do some auto repair but only when aided by quantities of time and beer. The Cupp sisters celebrate their home cooking with the same zeal they bring to being neighborly with the boys.

"The stage is divided between the service station and the diner, and the activity flows between the two," Ms. Thompson says. "The play is almost entirely music."

Together, the pump boys and the waitresses sing about life by the roadside in such songs as "Be Good or Be Gone," "The Night Dolly Parton Was Almost Mine" and "Drinkin' Shoes." The play opens at 8 p.m. Friday and runs at the same time Saturday, Oct. 12, 13 and 14 and at 2:30 p.m. Oct. 8.

"Pump Boys and Dinettes" was described by one critic as, Ms. Thompson says, "a singular mixture of country-pop concert and musical theater...(that) doesn't merely celebrate the value of friendship and life's simple pleasures, it embodies them."

Members of the OC cast are Patsy Allen, Marty Connally, Leosha Fuller, Midlander Jim Huddleston, Dana Ritter, Paul Taggert and Johnny Thomason. Midlander Charlotte Whitaker is musical director and Toni Stice is choreographer.

In conjunction with the theme of the musical, all gas station attendants and waitresses/waiters wearing their uniforms will be admitted for $5 to the 2:30 p.m. matinee performance Oct. 8.

Tickets are $10 for adults and $7 for senior citizens and students. Odessa College staff and students are admitted free with a current identification card.

OC's drama department presents four shows a year, two in the fall and two in the spring. The choice of plays, Ms. Thompson says, evolves from "several different things." In a junior college, a department faces student turnover every two years.

"I think what you normally do is chose one show you definitely want to do and it becomes the centerpiece. Working from that, you decide what compliments that production."

In addition, Ms. Thompson says she has to "look at the size of her department and what's coming in and what's leaving." She takes into consideration such elements as the number of male and female students and whether they are experienced or not.

Then when she is looking at specific material, Ms. Thompson looks for plays which will offer her students challenges and variety.

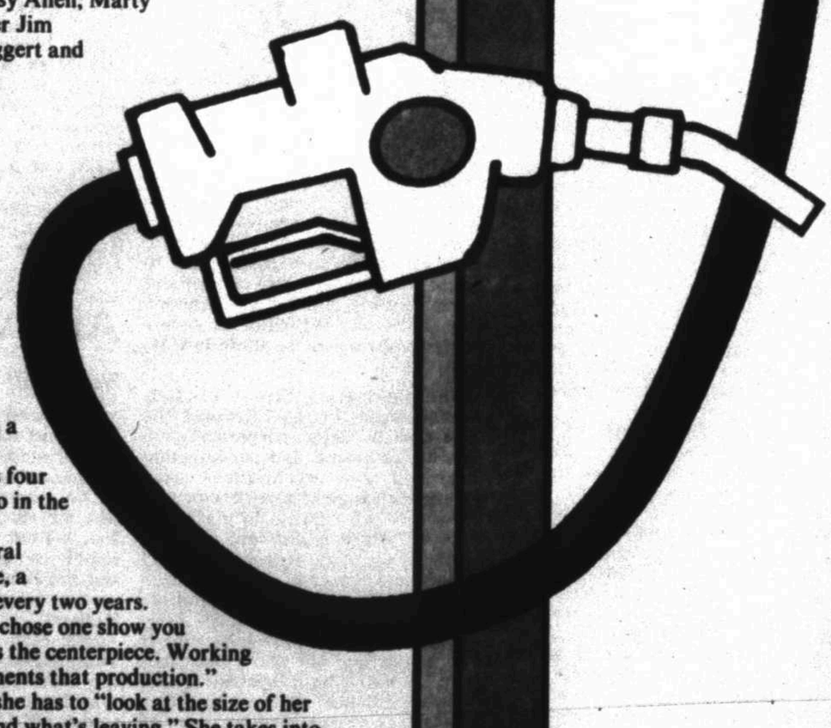

Since the department has presented several classics in recent seasons, one isn't being done this year.

"We've done them before; we don't ignore them. This is educational theater so it's very important that we don't ignore them. We've done two different Gilbert and Sullivan productions. We've done 'Antigone.' We did an expressionistic classic called 'The Firebugs' by Max Frisch. And we've done 'She Stoops to Conquer.' "

In addition to "Pump Boys and Dinettes," which Ms. Thompson describes as "a small musical country sound with amplified sound," OC will be presenting a farce, a large complex Broadway musical and a contemporary drama.

"In December, we'll be doing a farce called 'See How They Run' by Philip King," Ms. Thompson says. "It's an old-fashioned farce with everybody running out of the wrong doors, wearing the wrong clothes and a lot of cases of mistaken identity.

"Then, in February, we'll be doing our large musical — Stephen Sondheim's 'Sweeney Todd.' First of all, it's Sondheim so it's a very complex and involved kind of musical musically, and it's a musical thriller, it's about revenge and a man taking care of his family. It has a lot of comedy, but it also has a very dark side, a menacing side. 'Sweeney Todd,' I believe, won something like eight Academy Awards in 1979.

"Then, our final production will be 'The Road to Mecca' by South African playwright Athol Fugard. 'The Road to Mecca' was on Broadway in the spring of '88 with Fugard and Amy Irving. Fugard is one of the most important playwrights working today, his works are getting some of the most critical acclaim on an international scale. He's one of the five or six most interesting playwrights working. His plays deal with the freedom of the individual, and they also deal with individual creativity and human compassion.

"We have a small musical country sound with amplified sound, we have a farce, we have a large complex Broadway musical, and then we have a contemporary drama,' Ms. Thompson says.

Reservations for tickets to any of the OC productions are made by calling the OC theater box office, 1-335-6618, from 1-5 p.m. Mondays through Fridays.

Tickets may be picked up at the box office, located at Stage II in Dedrick Hall, during the same hours. The Globe Theatre box office will open one hour before each performance for ticket sales.

This season marks Ms. Thompson's sixth at OC. Prior to coming to Midland, she was working on her doctorate in theater history and theory, which she recently completed, at Louisiana State University. Before returning to school, she was manager of a large community theater in Springfield, Mo.

"Over the years, I've done a lot of kinds of theater. I've done professional theater, professional touring theater, academic theater, community theater and I've even started a couple of community theaters in other places. I missed academic theater. I wanted to get back to it because I like teaching."

In her one person department, Ms. Thompson teach three types of students, those who are interested in professional theater, those who are interested in teaching and those who are interested in theater as a hobby.

Open auditions are offered for all productions because OC is a small community college and such auditions provide "community people another outlet for their creativity.

"Since we're academic theater, I think students learn more by watching and working with good people rather than by struggling through things they are not ready to do on their own. By bringing in more experienced, more mature people to work with the students, students grow faster and learn from observing as well as acting. They also learn about different techniques."

Ms. Thompson considers "the rehearsal as much of a classroom as the classroom."

Sometimes OC brings in specialists to work with students during a production.

"When we did 'Man of La Mancha,' we brought in John Raitt, a well established Broadway actor who brought all kinds of experience with him. By working with a man of this caliber and experience, the kids learned a lot."

Originally from Stockton, Mo., Ms. Thompson is a long way from the Ozarks living in West Texas.

"It's is very different. I'm very used to mountains and lakes and lots of greenery and four seasons, and of course out here you don't have any of that. But, I like Odessa College, and I like the people I work with, and I think that counts for a lot."

Celebration to mark Post's Founder's Day

POST — The City of Post will honor its founder, C.W. Post, with its third annual Founder's Day Celebration Oct. 11 through 14.

In 1906, cereal-magnate Charles William Post, a Battle Creek, Mich., multi-millionaire, turned his energies toward developing Texas.

"Post's dream was to establish a model community in Texas where families could acquire a home with a low down payment, easy monthly payments and where the bread-winner of the family would be in a position to earn a living," says a release from the organizers of the Founder's Day Celebration.

Before the year of 1906 was out, Post had acquired between 225,000 and 250,000 acres of land on the dividing line of the Panhandle and Staked Plains region, where the Caprock escarpment falls into the canyon and mesa country, around the headwaters of the Brazos.

Here was built Post City.

"By 1907, a thriving city was set up, activities buzzed forward in every direction, streets were laid out and street lighting set in. A machine shop, stone quarry, hotel, school, churches, a department store and shops were constructed, some of them of native sandstone. Landscaping was an important part of Post's plan and trees — catalpas, black locusts, chinaberry and Carolina poplars — were set out in the very beginning to shade the wide streets of the barren, shadeless areas."

Now, some 82 years later, many of the original trees that once lined the city streets are gone.

"But C.W. Post's vision and determination are still alive in this progressive Texas Main Street City," the release says.

Under a joint Main Street Landscaping effort of the Main Street Project, the City of Post, and the Texas Highway Department, shade trees will return to renovated downtown areas in the near future.

To celebrate the dream and to honor the man, the City of Post and Garza County host this Founder's Day, a five-day sechedule of events preceded by a special salute to C.W. Post Oct. 8.

The Post Main Street Project, Kraft-General Foods, USA, and the Post Cereals Corp., corporate sponsors of the event, and participating local and area organizations, have planned a range of activities including a C.W. Post Battle fo teh Bands Competition; two museum exhibits, "C.W. Post: A Retrospective" and "The Llano Estacado Experience;" a Founder's Day ranch Competition; Bob Cennault in a one-man art show; the La Rueda de Post bike ride; a Founder's Day Art Show featuring 35 of the nation's top western artists; "The Rainmaker" at the Garza Theatre Oct. 11-15; a celebration dance at the Two Bit Ranch; and other activities throughout the week and all day Saturday, Oct. 14.

Tickets for "The Rainmaker" are priced at $6 for adults and $3 for children 12 years old and younger. Group rates are available.

For more information on any of the events listed above, call Melissa Cunningham, Main Street Project Manager, 1-806-495-4157.

REVIEWS

'Sex, lies' thought-provoking

By MYRA LEE SALCEDO

"Sex, lies and videotape" is not the Rob Lowe story. But it's not far removed. The critically acclaimed film focuses on the three subjects in the title, and on the character Graham, (James Spader) a somewhat impotent video voyeur.

Saicedo

Graham, (a drifter) returns to Baton Rouge after a long absence. He stays with his friend, John (Peter Gallagher) and his wife Ann (Andie MacDowell). Graham's sensitivity and honesty appeals to Andie, but appalls John, partly because the callous John is having a deceitful affair with Ann's "extrovert" sister Cynthia (Laura San Giacomo).

Ann thinks sex is "overrated" and focuses her concern on the mounting garbage in the United States, leading her analyst to ask: "Have you noticed that the object of your obsessions are always something you have no control over?"

Ann senses that her husband is having an affair, and finds Graham non-threatening until she discovers his penchant for videotaping women talking about their sex lives. She soon turns the tables on Graham and makes him the subject of his own discussions.

Those who are uncomfortable hearing sex discussed will probably be offended by "sex, lies and videotape." But for the most part, the film is a finely acted light drama. It doesn't quite live up to the hype (what does?), but is a thought-provoking film nonetheless.

Spader, Diane Keaton's ruthless office cohort in "Baby Boom," displays a whole range of emotions in "sex, lies." He manages to remain wonderfully, painfully mysterious. Spader won the best-actor award at Cannes for his portrayal of Graham, and definitely will be an actor to watch at Oscar time.

Ms. MacDowell also gives a sensitive — somewhat quirky — performance, which has most critics yelling "Oscar," much in the same way they yelled for Geena Davis. She really has come a long way since her voice was dubbed in by Glenn Close in "Greystoke, the Legend of Tarzan," but I don't think her role in "sex, lies" is Oscar material.

Ms. San Giacomo, as the sensual sister, steals scenes at every opportunity. Gallagher (last seen in the totally reprehensible "High Spirits") is awfully cute to be such a rake, but pulls it off, nonetheless.

The shrewd script is fresh, the direction uncluttered and the subject matter is strong. Camera angels reveal character truths, and actors sometimes exhibit surprising emotions, such as Ann laughing off her accusation about Peter's adultery.

The best thing about "sex, lies" is that is it yet another non-mainstream intelligent film playing in Midland, and it is definitely worth seeing.

"Sex, lies and videotape" rates 3½ rigs.

"Sex, lies and videotape," rated R for sex, adult situations and profanity, is playing at North Park Mall Cinemas.

'Black Rain' has stunning action, imagery

"Black Rain" is an international thriller starring Michael Douglas as Nick Conklin, a New York City detective assigned to deliver a brutal killer to Japanese police in Osaka. Shortly after landing in Japan, the killer escapes, and Nick and his partner (Andy Garcia), are teamed with a Japanese detective (Ken Takakura) to recapture him. The case leads the Americans into the city's exotic underworld, where rival Yakuza crime factions battle for supremacy. Tensions mount when the Americans insist on playing by their own rules, which don't always involve honesty.

Nick, accused of accepting bribes, is a detective who has lost a sense of purpose in life. He is living on the edge. Why he has come to this point is anybody's guess. He clashes with Matsumoto (Takakura), the Osaka detective assigned to help him. Matsumoto still believes in honor, no matter what the circumstances.

Takakura is a Japanese award-winning actor famous for his portrayals of Yakuza anti-heroes. He brings some humanity to the film, but his motivations are as vague as Nick's. His fellow Japanese actor, Yusaku Matsuda, as Sato, the ruthless Yakuza leader, manages to rivet attention to himself merely by squinting his eyes.

The actors are less important than the action and scenery of "Black Rain," however. The film was directed by Ridley Scott, who also directed "Alien" and "Bladerunner." His films are known for their dazzling visual imagery and exciting action sequences and "Black Rain" is another stunning achievement in this sense. Osaka appears to be a near-future science fiction world in "Black Rain."

One character who is really wasted is Kate Capshaw, as an Osaka bar hostess who hobnobs with the Japanese crime element. She pops up whenever Nick needs some tidbit of information, and disappears soon after.

The film, which opens with a New York City murder, is action-packed from beginning to end. Ridley's cold, steel-edged world is intriguing to watch and there are some touches of humor in the film. But there isn't one scene which is truly memorable, since so many scenes have been done before with less trappings.

Action fans won't be disappointed, however. The pacing is good and the camerawork is slick. The characters work well off of each other, but they just don't have much depth.

"Black Rain" rates 3 rigs.

Ceramics, drawings at gallery

Gallery 1114's new show, on display through Nov. 2, features the ceramics of Carol Bailey and the drawings and paintings of Cristi Branum.

Most of Ms. Bailey's work in this show is high-fire salt-glazed porcelain and stoneware.

"In my clay work I seek the dynamic of living forms caught in mid-movement as in the spiraling growth of seashells, plant life and galaxies. the work in this was inspired by Voyager II's recent grand tour of the planets, with images both real and imaginary; volcanic moons, planetary rings and crated surface textures."

Ms. Bailey holds a bachelor of arts degree in art from Texas Tech and has done graduate work at the University of New Mexico. One of her watercolors was selected to tour with the Texas Watercolor Society's 40th annual exhibition organized by the McNay Art Museum, San Antonio.

Ms. Branum sees her non-representational shaped and formed canvases as "an arena for physical and visual balance, harmony and an expressive spirit. The only real adventure remaining for each individual, given today's multi-media overexposure is the exploration of his or her own unconscious. It's my desire to create visuals which will stimulate the positive unconscious: a colorful and optimistic search for order out of chaos."

Ms. Branum received her masters of fine art from the University of Dallas. Her recent group exhibitions include those at Edith Baker Gallery, Dallas, and Mostra 1989 at Loggia Gallery, Assisi, Italy.

Gallery 1114, 1114 Big Spring St., is a cooperative gallery of contemporary artists.

Mac Frampton Trio opens MCC season

The Mac Frampton Trio opens Midland Community Concerts' 1989-90 season Friday at Midland High School Auditorium.

Frampton

Born in South Carolina, the son of a Presbyterian minister and a songstress mother, Mac Frampton started playing the piano when he was 3. His formal training began at age 5, and he was 8 when he made his professional debut.

After his musical studies at Erskine College, he did graduate work at the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music, where he recently received a degree of doctorate of musical arts. While a student, Frampton gained national prominence as a medal-winning semi-finalist in the Van Cliburn International Piano Competition.

Frampton was influenced by the impact of rock music. In an effort to relate more directly to contemporary audiences, he began to search beyond the confines of his strictly classical repertoire. Including popluar-based music in his concerts proved so successful that he began devoting more time to the development of his talents for arranging, orchestrating and composing.

"The unique style that Mr. Frampton evolved during that period has proved extremely durable," says a release from Columbia artists. "based on classical technique, drawing liberally from jazz and rock idioms, the 'rock-alternative' sound of Mac frampton continues to build a wider audience with every concert."

Over the past 15 years, he and his group have played over 1,600 concerts in the United States, Canada, Europe and the Middle East. He holds the record for return engagements at many locations, having appeared as many as eight times on a single stage.

He has teamed with Bill Cosby, Roberta Flack, Victor Borge, Louis Nye and Metropolitan Opera star Roberta Peters, among others. He collaborated with the legendary Ray Charles in the re-recording of "Georgia On My Mind" for a special Georgia tourism campaign.

Symphonic engagements all over the country have included appearances with the orchestras of Atlanta, Boston, Cincinnati, Milwaikee, New Orleans, Oakland, Oklahoma City, St. Louis and most recently the Mantivani Orchestra in a year-long cross-country tour.

In addition, Frampton has written the score for two original musicals and the arrangements for three musical revues which have toured nationally. He has 10 albums and a motion picture sound track to his credit.

Admission to Friday's 8 p.m. performance is by season membership only.

Other concerts in the season are Hector Olivera: "From Bach to Broadway," the organ of the 21st century, Nov. 10; Mona Golabek: "The Outrageous Romantics," March 2; and the Swingle Singers, March 27.

For more information call 684-4557. Season memberships run $20 for adults and $10 for student through high school.

Band director assumes music position at OC

ODESSA — Lonnie Clark, former band director of Nimitz Junior High School, recently joined Odessa College as its director of instrumental music. Clark replaces Dr. Bernard Rose, who left OC to join the faculty at Gonzaga University in Spokane, Wash.

As director of instrumental music, Clark is responsible for the OC Concert Band and the Jazz Band in addition to music classes.

The native Odessan said the OC Concert Band, formerly known as the OC Community Band, is taking a different direction than in previous years. The size and make-up of the band has changed, Clark said. The band now consists of 72 members, including OC students, local band directors and Midland-Odessa Symphony members.

"The band has more professional musicians in it than before, which will be an excellent teaching tool for the college students," said Clark, who occasionally plays trumpet for the Lone Star Brass Quintet and the symphony. The band also will play "music that is more difficult and at a higher degree of proficiency."

Clark said he wants to give these students a chance to play without the time commitment of the marching band.

Clark still is accepting new members in the Concert Band and interested musicians need to call him at 1-335-6623.

The first concert for the OC Concert Band is Dec. 5 at Bonham Junior High School. The Jazz band, composed of OC students, will give a concert Nov. 19 at the Globe Theatre.

State Fair of Texas to run until Oct. 22

From Staff Reports

DALLAS — The State Fair of Texas boasts so much to see and do that visitors can get a full day's value even at night.

The Fair's exhibit buildings are open until 10 p.m. each day through Oct. 22, and fairgrounds are open until 11:30 p.m.

Each of the major special attrations at the fair have at least one performance at night, and some events, such as the Lights fantastic Parade and the Cotton Bowl Laser Show, take place only after the sun goes down.

The parade, popular with fair goers for many years, has added lights to its floats for the first time this year. With floats, equestrian units and bands, the parade winds through the fairgrounds at 7 p.m. nightly.

The laser show, sponsored by NCNB Texas, is presented at 8 and 9:30 p.m. nightly in the Cotton Bowl. The show features brilliant special effects choreographed to music.

Other crowd-pleasing attractions, offered both in daytime and evening slots, include the All-American Ice Revue, presented on the Esplanade; the pig races, taking place in Park Chop Downs; and the popular musical comedy "Gypsy" in the Music Hall.

"Gypsy," which will be presented, except Mondays through Oct. 22, stars Tyne Daly, who won four Emmy Awards for her role as policewoman Mary Beth Lacey on TV's "Cagney & Lacey."

Four special attractions are new to the fair this year.

The "Air Circus," with four performances daily, including 7:30 and 9 p.m., features a combination of tumbling, trampoline acrobatics and trapeze artistry. The show is near Gate 7 of the Cotton Bowl.

"Kings of the Wind" is a unique demonstration of birds of prey, such as eagles, hawks, condors and falcons, trained to perform spectacular stunts. The show is presented in the Band Shell four times daily, including 6 p.m.

Bringing laughter to young fairgoers and their parents will be John P. Roadman, an inter-active puppet show. Roadman, a Texas-styled armadillo, will converse with audience members from hsi covered wagon on the lawn of the Hall of State six times daily, with the last show at 6:30 p.m.

"The Globe of Thrills" offers the heart-pounding excitement of daredevils on motorcycles. A pair of cyclists will careen wildly around the inside of a 14-foot sphere of steel lattice-work. The riders crisscross each other's paths horizontally, vertically, upside-down and sideways, sometimes avoiding collision by no more than three inches. This show can be seen four times daily, including 6, 7:30 and 8:30 p.m. in a special arena behind the Centennial Building.

This year's expanded 24-day exposition has a theme of "Wheeels!" The automobile show, long a favorite with fair visitors, has been expanded to twice its usual size. Domestic and foreign cars of the 1990s will be spotlighted as well as classic cars, trucks, vans and motorcycles.

Transportation to the fair also has been expanded this year. Both DART's Big Tex Express and Fort Worth's "T" will run buses to and from the fair daily from park-and-ride locations throughout the metroplex.

Fair admission is $6 for adults, $3 for children under 48 inches and free for children 3 and younger. Senior citizens 60 and older will be admitted for $3.

OC plans Kodak videoconference

ODESSA — Odessa College's photography department will sponsor an Eastman Kodak "Techniques of the Masters" videoconference at 6 p.m. Thursday.

The conference is open to the public.

The free conference, to air in OC's Electronics Technology Building, Room 119, features Jay Maisel, an advertising, editorial and corporate photographer and teacher.

According to Kodak literature, Maisel "captures his subjects with vibrant color and rich clarity. He makes the ordinary seem glamorous; the glamorous, extraordinary."

At the end of the videoconference, participants may call direct to ask Maisel questions.

A second "Techniques of the Masters" videoconference is planned for Nov. 9 and will feature Duane Michaels, a fine art and commercial photographer; and Bill Greene, a Boston Glove photographer.

These Kodak videoconferences are non-commercial, educational programs available to anyone interested in participating. For more information, call Steve Goff, OC's assistant professor of photography, 1-335-6497.

Author relates experiences while she was in coma

By KILEY ARMSTRONG
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Author Mary Kay Blakely learned a lot about life during the nine days she hovered, near death, in a coma.

With the help of her friends and family, she revived. And with their assistance and with her own vivid recollections, she has pieced together a travelogue of her journey through the dream state, commencing on March 23, 1984.

When her lover, Larry, tried to wake her that morning, she discovered she had no contact with her eyelids. "Further experiments proved that I couldn't swallow or move my limbs, clear my throat or clasp my hand.

"When he spoke or touched me, I heard and felt him, but couldn't speak or touch in return. ... But in the benevolent atmosphere of my dream, I felt more curiosity than alarm, if I could claim any feelings at all," Blakely writes in her new book, "Wake Me When It's Over" (Times Books, $17.95).

"It was as though I were sitting alone in the back of a huge auditorium for a private, unedited screening of my life. It was strange to watch familiar scenes without feeling the attendant embarrassment or anger or joy they usually inspired."

Doctors said her coma was caused by diabetes, surgery and other medical problems. But Blakely — a freelance writer whose work appeared among The New York Times' "Hers" columns and in national magazines — says it was triggered by divorce; severe financial strain; her brother's suicide — and the hectic lifestyle of the 1980s.

"I cannot recommend a coma as a cure for depression and stress," she said. "In my case, it did solve a lot of problems. But I like to think that there are other, less damaging routes to the same information."

The warning signals were there. "Everybody in my life could see that I was exhausted. But I think we start to look at women as if being exhausted is a normal state for them," she said. "We have forgotten what normal looks like and feels like."

The coma jolted her loved ones into action. She says her bubbly, eccentric sister, Gina, literally talked her into living; her feminist friends united in an "energy circle" to bring her out of orbit.

Later, they helped fill in the details as she reconstructed the experience. And perhaps because there was no brain damage, she awoke with "a clear recollection of my dreams, the almost hallucinatory moments of the coma. As in all dreams, you feel certain stimulation and your mind kind of spins out."

She wrote about the hallucinations and the things she heard.

"I knew I was in a hospital because I heard two of the staff members talking over my head about how hard it was to live in New York City on a resident's income. But I didn't always interpret what was going on rationally," she said.

"Sounds and voices I identified as real actions, real people, would suddenly melt into the bizarre plots and characters of surreal dreams," she wrote. "It was as though my brain were leaking badly, bleeding fact into fiction until reality was as unreliable as a melting Dali timepiece.

"Far in the distance, I heard the light chatter of female voices conversing, coffee-break style, above the low broadcast of a radio. A four o'clock traffic report warned commuters about delays in the Holland and Lincoln tunnels, and I made a mental note to avoid those routes on the way home."

She recalled hospital workers parting her hair and applying a paste before a brain activity test. It was "the most amazing thing," she remembered thinking. "This was the weirdest goddamn prison! After they suctioned your lungs, they frizzed your hair!"

"I suppose the favorite part of it was, once I was able to comprehend this material, that's when my sense of humor returned," she said in an interview.

As she awoke, she was confused to see an incongruous assortment of family and friends, including one from Alaska, at her bedside.

"Maybe we were all in Juneau, Alaska, reaching the end of an all-night pig roast," she thought. "Everyone looked slightly intoxicated, smiling with nonsensical joy but showing visible signs of wear. It must have been some wild party — I wasn't feeling all that hot myself."

She has since reflected on the feelings of love and well-being, the mysterious light that beckoned her through the coma.

"Here I am, an agnostic, having what is the equivalent of a spiritual experience," she said.

Was it the drugs? She and her doctors don't know, and "my feeling now is, that is the state we reach near death.

"It's completely altered my feelings about death. I don't regard it any more as a terrifying alternative to life," she said. "Without any contact with my body, I still existed as thought. It's a very comforting notion that whatever is uniquely human about us continues to exist."

The experience helped her deal with her brother's death. Gripped by manic depression, Frank Blakely had killed himself, leaving behind his writings.

"The reason we have suffering," he wrote, "is that progress can only be achieved at a price, because goodness has to be made out of badness, and the raw material has to be refined by fire and mixed with alloys before it can become strong."

Those words inspired his sister in her own odyssey. "His experience with that illness and his real heroism in dealing with it — he had this admirable courage and he was so able to articulate what his experience with madness was like — was always valuable to me," the author said.

Southerners' Civil War story told

"The Illustrated Confederate Reader," edited by Rod Gragg. Harper & Row. 291 Pages. $27.50.

By PHIL THOMAS
AP Books Editor

So many books have been written about the Civil War that yet another hardly seems necessary. But, pleasant surprise: Rod Gragg's "The Illustrated Confederate Reader" is a worthy addition to the bulging shelf. Gragg has gone through "aged and yellowed letters, hastily scribbled diaries, century-old and dog-eared memoirs, and crisply formal official records" to assemble a most interesting volume.

Review

The book differs from others in that it tells "the story of the Southern people during the War Between the States." The voices Gragg has culled from those old papers are those of "a generation of Southerners come forth to tell in evocative language the intimate details of a people at war."

The men who flocked to the standards of the Confederate States of America were, typically, 18-to-29-year-olds and most of them had been small farmers before shouldering arms.

At the beginning, they had little but enthusiasm to bring to the cause. As Gen. John B. Gordon wrote at the time: "Totally undisciplined and undrilled, no two of these men marched abreast; no two kept the same step; no two wore the same colored coats or trousers."

They learned the skills of war quickly, however, although at great cost. These men won the Battle of First Manassas in 1861 but at a cost of 2,000 Confederate troops dead or wounded.

In addition to detailing the important battles of the conflict, Gragg also includes eyewitness reports on what life was like on the home front as well as bitter descriptions of prison camp life

Survey finds choice setting for romance

STAMFORD, Conn. (AP) — During the days of World War II, a popular song was "I Left My Heart at the Stage Door Canteen."

If it were recycled for current consumption it might be titled, "I Left My Heart on the 'A' Train."

The Waldenbooks' Romance Club said that in a recent survey of 1,000 of its members, 38 percent picked "the subway as the setting of choice for a romantic encounter."

Waldenbooks said an analysis of survey results produced "an interesting, though not always logical, composite of the perfect romantic encounter. Hero and heroine meet on a subway train (38 percent). He is dressed in a business suit (24 percent). She is dressed in a bathing suit (37 percent), or perhaps wet jogging clothes, having just been caught in the rain (24 percent)."

Clark once worried about bills; Now money rolls in

By KAROL STONGER

NEW YORK (AP) — She was a widow with five children and as many unopened tuition envelopes on the table.

"I just want you characters to know that I have no idea where this is coming from," she told the kids. "I'm going to have to second-mortgage the house, and that's the one thing that really scares me."

With that, the telephone rang. Dell had just paid $100,000 for paperback rights to "Where Are the Children."

That was in August 1974, three months after Simon & Schuster bought the hard cover for $3,000.

As Mary Higgins Clark recalls, the $100,000 didn't go far toward schools, what with her agent's cut and payments spread over three years. "But I was still working. Reader's Digest bought it, the Literary Guild bought it, and I got a movie sale on it. So the money started to come in."

But it wasn't until "A Stranger is Watching," (1978) she says, "that the big bucks started."

Now there seems to be no stopping the cash flow to the prolific author of suspense who came by her craft via radio scripts and magazine short stories. Her seventh and latest book, "While My Pretty One Sleeps," is a best seller. It is also the first under an $11.4 million, five-book contract with Simon & Schuster.

And there are no more second mortgages. After years of renting a summer place on Cape Cod, she owns one. She has a pied-a-terre in New York City and recently moved into a rambling house in Saddle River, N.J., with a huge circular driveway her grandchildren adore. It isn't far from where she and her husband moved their growing family years earlier.

The Saddle River house had been vacant for several years and was, Clark says, in dreadful shape. Her children advised her not to buy it. "Trust me," she told them, "it's going to be great. In fact, I'm even thinking of a name for it."

"How about 'long, flat roof?' " asked son Warren.

Her optimism and faith and her family's sense of humor helped keep the brood together after her husband's death in 1964.

"I'm Catholic, and I really think that you must accept certain things and accept them with grace," she says. "And my husband, Warren, was a very funny man. I just thought it an insult to his memory to turn the house into misery."

The Clarks, married in 1950, spent the first few years in Stuyvesant Town, a middle-income project in Manhattan. She recalls their decision to move to New Jersey.

"Marilyn had her doll carriage, Warren (Jr.) had a golf set. She was 3, he was 2. David was a baby in a carriage. I had a shopping cart — and was pregnant with No. 4. I just couldn't get it all in the elevator.. "

Young Mary Higgins' writing talent was praised early. "My mother kept telling everyone I was a wonderful writer, and I got a lot of encouragement from teachers," she recalls.

Though she didn't get around to college until her children were teen-agers, she was a voracious reader and was determined to write. "In the playground I always had a pad with me," she says. "I wrote in the dentist's chair...pushing a carriage."

The short story market, her bread and butter, dried up in the late 1960s. Either the magazines folded or changed their format. She wrote radio shows, "but I missed the printed word." She wrote a historically accurate novel about George Washington, which bombed.

"Now, I wanted to write a book that would sell."

She liked suspense, so she would write a mystery — in a universal setting. "Because of President Kennedy the whole world probably knew about Cape Cod." She decided a missing child captures a big audience. "I cut my teeth on the Lindbergh case.

"I can remember very well being 3, literally, and my mother and father talking about it. The ransom note was left at St. Raymond's Cemetery in the Bronx which we passed on our way to our summer house."

Every time they passed, she says, her father would say, "now there, my dear, is where the note was left for that poor baby."

Thus, "Where Are the Children," was first of her many winners.

"I keep a journal, and the entry for the day I finished the book was: 'I have finished with the book and it is good.' "

Because the violence is "off camera," and because her victims are nice people — "trouble invades their lives" — she has children among her fans.

"One kid wrote to me and said, 'Dear Mrs. Clark: You're my favorite suspense writer. I love your book so much I don't even mind the boring parts.' "

Warning from Lehrer's mother evolve into novel 'Kick the Can'

By PHIL THOMAS

NEW YORK (AP) — Before television, kids amused themselves by playing games like Kick the Can.

Jim Lehrer did. Even though his mother kept telling him he could lose an eye kicking that empty tin can about.

Lehrer didn't. But his mother's warning stuck in his mind over the years.

"It's kind of crazy," says Lehrer, 55, "but a few years ago, for no reason at all, I got to thinking about what a person's life would be like after having an eye put out by a kicked can. It grew from there."

"It" was "Kick the Can," the first of Lehrer's novels to detail the adventures of the One-Eyed Mack, a good-hearted, somewhat bumbling character who takes to the open road — mostly by riding buses — when the loss of an eye at 16 ruins his plans to be a Kansas highway patrolman like his father. The novel closes with Mack settled in Oklahoma and married to the widow of Pepper, his best friend who was killed while fighting with the Marines in the Korean War.

Lehrer, an easygoing man with a ready smile who is readily familiar to those who watch television's "The MacNeil-Lehrer NewsHour," continues Mack's adventures in a new novel, "Crown Oklahoma."

Mack now is lieutenant governor of Oklahoma. His chief duty is watching television. As he says:

"One of my duties as lieutenant governor of Oklahoma was to watch the news on national television. The governor asked me to do it for the good of the state. 'We need to know how we're doing out there, Mack,' he said. 'Keep that good right eye of yours looking at the television for the sights and sounds of our Sooner State.'"

Not the thankless job it seems to be. One evening, Mack is tuned in when a network newsman reports that a crime organization, rivaling the Mafia, has surfaced in Oklahoma. The group, he says, is known as the Okies and is headed by a sinister thug called Boomer. Mack tells the governor and the governor tells him to track down the bad guys and drive them out of the state. It takes Mack a while and the result is a most entertaining read.

Lehrer, who grew up in Kansas, then lived in Texas and Missouri before settling down in Washington, D.C., where he lives with his wife, says:

"I picked Oklahoma for Mack because I spent a lot of time there when I was a kid. My mother was born in Oklahoma and we often visited relatives there. I have a real affection for it. Since not much has been written about the state and its people, I felt I should do it."

His interest in writing fiction, Lehrer says, goes back to his beginning days in journalism.

"When I decided to be a newsman, I also decided to be a writer of fiction. I've had four novels published (the first was "Viva Max" in 1966) and two plays produced. Now, I've got 30 years in journalism (newspaper and television) behind me, and I've got all these stories and characters in my head and they're all coming out. Also, I've been present at all the things that mattered for 30 years."

Lehrer's television work occupies the hours from 10 a.m. to 8 p.m. That doesn't leave him much time for fiction, but he says he works on his books before heading for the office, when he returns home at night and on weekends.

"I've just finished another Mack novel," Lehrer says. "It's due to be published next year. It's titled 'The Sooner Spy' and is about a Russian spy in Oklahoma.

"That's not the end of Mack, though. I plan to write about Mack forever — or as long as he's fun to write about."

YOUR HOROSCOPE

MONDAY, OCTOBER 2, 1989

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: A policy of understatement will serve you well in your career and business dealings now. A longtime wish will come true during the holidays. Key people may not always be cooperative, but when the chips are down, they rise to the occasion. A second job could be the answer to a temporary cash shortage in February. Your intuition helps you find the best solution to a family dilemma next summer. The harmony you enjoy with close associates is a big business asset.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: designer Donna Karan, songwriter Don McLean, rock star Sting, India's Mahatma Gandhi, comedians Groucho Marx and Bud Abbott.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Do not allow yourself to be undermined by the past. Financial negotiations can be successfully finalized. Take higher-ups' orders in stride; you will be royally rewarded.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Make last-minute changes in your business plans with complete confidence. Keep in close contact with overseas clients. Unwind a little so that others get to know the real you.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A change of heart could alter your mood by noon. You are entering a busy social or romantic cycle. Do not waver in your loyalty. Avoid anything that smacks of intrigue.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): The emphasis now is on your home and property interests. Do not force a showdown with a temperamental partner. Keep a close eye on any children in your care. Ask for more cooperation.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Curb a tendency to put too many irons in the fire. Otherwise you could run into opposition from close associates. Charm and gentle persuasion will win your mate and others to your side.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): An important business project finds financial support. Make certain your partner is behind you. Those to whom you are legally bound could cause problems if not consulted.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Be ready for a frustrating experience and monetary losses if you gamble. Your career hopes could be realized through an old school friend. Acts of kindness will be richly rewarded. Do favors.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Depend on your hard work to bring new rewards. Certain emotional ties need to be re-evaluated. Pay more attention to the questions that affect your physical well-being and employment status.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Cooperation and pooled resources are the key to increased productivity and worthwhile achievements. Incessant striving will bring rich rewards. Listen to the suggestions of trusted friends.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Look forward to a day of action. You gain one of your heart's desires and advance your creative interests. Hold back if you risk marital discord. Singles should plan now for future travel.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Any lessons you learn now will have great value. Be cautious and thrifty. Things go smoothly at work when everyone pitches in. Romance continues to occupy your thoughts. Privacy is essential.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Things seem quiet on the surface. Look for signs of confusion or unexpected developments. Watch over your possessions and resources. Be on your guard if you must engage in secret adventures.

When experts clash, anything can happen. Watch the play and defense on this hand from a strong duplicate event.

South's sequence showed a balanced hand of 23-24 points. North's six-card diamond suit headed by a high honor more than warranted a raise to game.

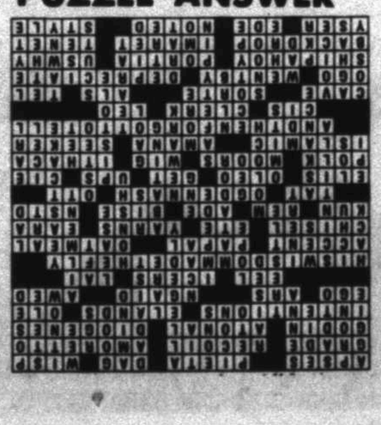

Loath to lead from an honor, West attacked with the ten of spades. East showed appreciation by covering with the jack, taken by declarer's king. The diamond suit had to be established, and declarer knew how to go about that—cash the ace and duck a diamond to guard against a 3-1 split.

When declarer played the ace, West dropped the nine. Declarer followed with the jack and, without a moment's hesitation, West followed with the ten. West knew that, if declarer ran the jack, the play would blow a trick, but obviously one trick would not make or break the contract.

Look at the hand from declarer's point of view. If West held Q 10 9 of diamonds, the defender could have guaranteed a diamond trick by covering the jack. He decided, therefore, that East surely had the queen, and it was going to drop when dummy's king was played. So, in an effort to make a critical overtrick, up went the monarch and down went the contract. When East showed out on the diamond, declarer was held to two diamond tricks rather than five. As a result of wily defense, declarer had to be satisfied with six tricks rather than the 10 which were his due had he followed through with his original plan.

Shore to return to TV with her style of talk show

By JOE EDWARDS

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Dinah Shore, a television darling in the 1950s and '60s and '70s, has returned to the tube with her own cable-TV show.

Shore

On The Nashville Network's 30-minute show, "A Conversation With Dinah," she talks with such guests as former first lady Nancy Reagan, former President Ford, comedian Bob Hope and actor Jack Lemmon.

"I really am excited," Shore said in a telephone interview from her Los Angeles office a few hours after she had played a round of golf.

"At first I wondered, 'Why am I doing this?' How can you have a different kind of talk show? But this is not really a talk show. It's more of a conversation.

"The feeling is just right," she said. "We don't have a studio audience. We only have each other. We react and interact."

It's been five years since her daytime talk show, "Dinah and Friends," went off the air after beginning in 1979. From 1974-79 she was in "Dinah." From 1970-74 it was "Dinah's Place."

A much older generation remembers her from "The Dinah Shore Chevy Show," a variety program that aired from 1956-63. Even earlier, she was on "The Dinah Shore Show" which lasted from 1951-57.

At various times in her life, she's also been known as a singer, cookbook author, Burt Reynolds' companion and golf tournament host.

When her current program airs in 1990, it will be her fifth decade on TV.

Reflecting on her enduring career that's sent her into millions of American living rooms, she said one key factor has been that she's not felt intimidated.

"I don't know how to be afraid of that old red eye," she said about the camera and its crimson beacon. "It's one person to me. I don't visualize large numbers of people out there. I'm comfortable with it."

She said people will always identify her with the long-running slogan from her variety show, "See the USA in Your Chevrolet," which she sang with gusto on every program as her right arm punched the air for emphasis.

"They all remember that and the commercials," Shore said. "They associate me with the variety show more than with anything else."

She recalled that the one moment she cherishes most on TV was when her daughter, Missy, brought a puppy onto the set in the early '60s. The playful dog wandered into camera range and wound its leash around the performer as she sang a romantic ballad live.

"I'll never forget that," she said. "It was precious. Jack Benny said it was the funniest moment he'd seen on television."

Her age is anywhere from 68 to 72, depending on which reference book you believe. One of her cookbooks lists her birth date as 1920. Other books list it as 1917 or 1921. These days, besides playing plenty of golf, she performs an average of one concert a month and watches television as much as she can.

"I'm a TV junkie," she said. "I watch all the time. I laugh out loud at 'Cheers.' It really is good. I stay up to see 'Saturday Night Live.' I love 'In the Heat of the Night.' How can Carroll O'Connor do anything wrong? And Angela Lansbury."

She said her specialty, the variety show, has been replaced by award programs. "They have huge budgets and scope. There just isn't room for variety shows and they don't draw enough to compete with others. The awards shows are great and glamorous and draw a great number of people."

Some highlights of conversations on her new show:

■ Nancy Reagan: "There's no rule that says just because your husband becomes president of the United States, you no longer have a right to express yourself or give your opinion. I was criticized for that, but I still believe I had the right to say what I thought."

■Former President Ford, about pardoning former President Richard Nixon: "I was spending about 25 percent of my time with lawyers and counselors asking for my decision on Mr. Nixon's tapes and papers. I finally decided the only way to get that problem off my desk in the Oval Office was to sign the pardon so I could concentrate 100 percent on the problems of 230 million Americans."

"The conversations we have are revealing without being hurtful," Shore said. "I don't want people going away saying, 'I wish I hadn't said that.' We do no editing."

She is hesitant to analyze her place in TV history.

"I couldn't make that judgment. I have no idea. I'm not sure I'll have one. Time and the people will judge that. I guess it will be pleasant and I hope it will be exciting. It won't be terribly controversial. I don't do that type show on TV."
