HAMBONE MEDITATION

Prohibition Cost To U. S. More Than Navy Expense

By Universal Service.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 6.—Prohibition costs Uncle Sam more each year than he pays out for the entire United States navy.

To feed the navy "bulldog"—$322,000,000 a year; to feed the dry "camel"—$527,500,000 a year, Captain Harvey L. Miller, U. S. navy, retired, declared today.

Captain Miller gave out the figures, not as a wet argument, but in a plea for adequate naval "peace enforcement."

"Three hundred and twenty-two millions of dollars a year, for the sea power that defends the constitution with lives, ships and service," said Captain Miller.

"Now how much for the camel? Appropriated directly or indirectly for prohibition enforcement, $30,000,000. Coast guard rum fleet, $14,500,000. Loss of revenue on government control of liquor, $483,000,000, as revealed in the liquor taxes of 1919.

"To enforce prohibition as it has been 'enforced,' and add to the figure the amount Uncle Sam lost in pre-prohibition liquor revenue, I say to enforce prohibition for one year takes an appropriation of your money and mine, such as no law ever passed has needed for its enforcement.

"Bear in mind that a navy that averts the horrors of war is worth ten times the amount it costs when the counter-price is blood, lives and cold steel through proud fighting hearts.

"The navy at least delivers the goods with what it has to work on. There is no doubt about the navy enforcing its business. There is a lot of doubt about prohibition being enforced.

"Requests for adequate appropriations for national defense meet with opposition on the part of peace prattlers, senators, congressmen and even the president.

"Prohibition appropriations have not such a hard row to hoe. The outfit represented on Capitol Hill by Wayne B. Wheeler, greatest of all lobyists, represents votes and organization."

NICARAGUA REBELS TO CALL UPON U. S. FOR REPARATIONS

By Universal Service.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 6.—Demand for reparations for alleged "outrages" committed by American marines in Nicaragua will be lodged with the state department by the liberal or rebel faction of Dr. Juan B. Sacasa.

Dr. T. S. Vaca, Sacasa's agent here tonight, said the demand has already been filed with the American consul at Bluefields and will be forwarded to the state department within the next few days, signed by Foreign Minister Espinosa of the so-called "constitutional" government.

Vaca has charged that marines, by order of Admiral Latimer, seized ammunition belonging to the liberals and disarmed the garrison of Wawa, outside of neutral territory. He said:

"In the face of a sworn affidavit establishing the outrages perpetrated by Admiral Latimer's forces and the official protest and demand for reparations by the constitutional government a mere denial by the head of departments in Washington is without value.

"The landing of American forces at Rio Grande and Puerto Cabezas is an illegal act under the principles of international law, the justification of which has been attempted on half a dozen different grounds, none of which has been proved to be correct or even plausible."

Famous Shah Emerald Worth $250,000 Brought To United States By Indian

PALM BEACH, Fla., Feb. 6.—Ganeshi Lall, the wealthy Oriental collector of jewels and often called the Tiffany of India, has arrived in Palm Beach carrying the precious Shah Japan emerald which weighs 93 carats and is valued at $250,000.

Lall has taken a suite at the Hotel Alba and will display his precious jewels as well as valuable brocades, tapestires, shawls, etc. He made the trip to Palm Beach with only one bodygurd who carried a stiletto. When he came to America last autumn he carried over a million dollars worth of rare stones in his vest pocket and has five men guarding his exhibition which won the gold medal at the sesquicentennial exposition in Philadelphia.

A number of appointments to view the rare stones have been made by northern people who are wintering in Palm Beach.

Germany Takes Rich Finance Plum Out Of Hands Of Wall Street Banks

By Universal Service.

BERLIN, Feb. 6.—Germany has become independent of Wall Street.

The business of floating German loans which was so profitable last year has gone to pot. Big fortunes made in the floating of German loans are now rare.

The loan business was ruined by the rapid drop in the German interest rates. German concerns are now floating domestic loans to pay off their previous foreign loans taken up at much higher interest.

The final demonstration of German independence is seen in the new government loan which was floated at 5 per cent. The success of this loan was not overwhelming but according to contradictory claims it is believed to have been sufficient to demonstrate the practicability of the 5 per cent rate which offers but scant attraction to foreign capital.

BIG HAUL IN DRY RAID HERE

Big Distillery and Supplies Found in House

A complete distillery, containing coils, tanks and all apparatus necessary in the manufacture of whisky, about 25 gallons of liquor and some 1200 gallons of mash were found by deputies of the sheriff's department late Sunday night in a raid on a house in the Hillcrest addition.

Officers are of the opinion that the still has furnished the city with hundreds of gallons of whisky and was said to have been operating up to the time of its discovery.

It is estimated to have a capacity of more than 200 gallons, while the 12 huge metal tanks, also found in the house, have a capacity of approximately 200 gallons each.

Six of these were filled with the mash and were sealed. A 50-gallon barrel, half full of whisky, was also found in the room.

All of the tanks were of metal, except one large barrel, apparently used for the purpose of tempering the whisky after it had come from the still.

The distillery was in one side of a duplex residence and occupied three rooms, one of which was filled with bottles and accessories for the manufacture of the liquor. In the two rear rooms were the tanks and coils of the still.

A woman residing in the other side of the duplex told the officers that her husband had been operating the still, but declined to reveal the names of other men, suspected of being connected with the place.

Late last night Sheriff W. G. Brailey declared that he believed several others would be under arrest before morning.

Mrs. W. B. Rayburn Taken Into Custody By Sheriff As She Visits His Office

Ten-Year-Old Girl, State Witness in John Herring Criminal Assault Case, Is Located

Mrs. W. B. Rayborn was arrested on a charge of kidnapping when she walked into the office of Sheriff W. G. Bralley Sunday morning.

With her was the 10-year-old girl, the state's principal witness in the case of John Herring, charged with a statutory offense, who was to have gone to trial last Wednesday morning in the 89th district court. Police and deputies of the sheriff's department had been searching for the girl since her disappearance from school on January 27.

A warrant for the arrest of Mrs. Rayborn was served when she called at the sheriff's office shortly before 9 o'clock Sunday morning in an effort to obtain a release for her husband, W. B. Rayborn, being held on the same charge. Rayborn, as yet, has been unable to make the $500 bond set by Justice of the Peace R. V. Guinn in the preliminary hearing last Tuesday afternoon.

The woman told Sheriff Bralley Sunday morning that she had taken the girl to the home of a sister in Duncan, Okla., and this story was corroborated by the girl who declared that she had been in Duncan.

The girl is being held in the Wichita county juvenile jail as a witness in the Herring case.

At 8 o'clock Sunday evening Judge P. A. Martin had not set a new date for Herring's trial.

Four Bowie Motorists Hurt When Car Flips Into Ditch Near Here

Two men and two women, all residents of Bowie, narrowly escaped death about 10 o'clock Sunday night when their automobile failed to make the dangerous curve at the Denver tank, two miles east of the city, and plunged over a steep embankment, overturning in the ditch.

Hinds Clark, the most seriously injured of the party, is suffering a broken ankle, and his brother, F. L. Clark, is likely to lose an ear. His head was badly gashed by flying glass.

Miss Bennie Barnett and Miss Waldine Smith, the two women in the car, received cuts about the head. None of them are in a serious condition, according to reports from the Wichita Falls Clinic hospital where they were taken.

The Studebaker touring car in which they were riding was wrecked.

The party was coming from Bowie to visit friends here, according to the story told police.

At the point where the accident occurred the highway curves sharply to the south, crossing the Ford Worth and Denver railroad tracks, and the driver apparently did not see the curve in time to check the speed of the automobile.

UGLY RUMORS NAME SOLONS

Austin Agog On Eve of Vote In Bribe Hearing

By Universal Service.

AUSTIN, Feb. 6.—Dame Rumor, that noisy old wag, who is a twin sister to ugly gossip, had the time of her life in Austin today. Her first joy came with the intimation that two members of the Texas house of representatives had resigned and that neither were H. H. Moore of Cooper, or F. A. Dale of Bonhamn, principals of an investigation by a house committee Friday and Saturday after they were charged with accepting a bribe.

R. L. Bobitt, speaker of the house, who was the star witness in the Moore-Dale investigation, said he knew of no resignations. The resignations would have to be handed to him before being placed before the body as a whole, he said.

Another report was that the committee which now is considering the evidence in the Moore-Dale case and which is to go into executive session Monday to make recommendations, will also recommend that the investigation be continued and Speaker Bobitt said he knew nothing of this report but it was recalled that he testified the governor had told him the house must be purged of members who might be guilty of bribe taking or soliciting a bribe.

Willis Chamberlin, the man who accused Dale and Moore of receiving $1000 in marked bill for which amount he said the two representatives had agreed to report unfavorably an optometrist bill, intimated tonight that if the committee wants to take up other cases he will welcome he opportunity of going on the stand and furnishing more choice testimony.

"I have the numbers of qquite a few people," he said.

In case the house does not care to go on with its probing of the conduct of its members, the senate will be the big show Monday.

The Love bill to repeal the Ferguson amnesty act, which was on the senate calendar Friday, but did not get on the floor before adjournment will be up Monday. Ferguson supporters in the senate of whom there are seevral, were massing late today for an attack on the repeal bill when it comes up. A bitter fight is certain.

Just AMONG US GIRLS by Kathryn Kenney

A DOG'S LIFE

"THE PET IN THE HOME"

The best way to keep a dog is with a two-inch rope. You can feed a dog on a bone a day, and it takes several "bones" to keep a child. And a dog can't take after you, unless he's chasing you! What is home without the little ones; even if you do have to feed them dog biscuit?

The fancy dog not only has his day, but his daybed! With the cramped living conditions even the dogs have to be smaller than they used to be, and they have to be taught not to wag their tails. A dog's bark may be worse than his bite and it gets him put out of an apartment more quickly.

This is the day of strange pets, if you don't believe it, look at some of the husbands. Some women like little dogs and little husbands, because it makes them feel more important when they walk out. It may be easier to lead them, but it's harder to find them! Some women lead a simple life and a simpler dog, if expression counts for anything.

A dog that won't jump when you whistle is as bad as a husband that does. Hair all over a man's coat doesn't mean a thing, since "love my dog" has replaced "bless our home." And many a man has a chip on his shoulder because he's been loving a blockhead.

One thing about having goldfish as pets, if you give them water, they don't have to take the air. And they are very quiet unless the cat upsets them. In regards to that, a person should be very careful about pet combinations, one of each kind is liable to result in none at all.

People are so fond of saying, "What is as nice as a cat?" It springs at you out of the jardiniere when you least expect it and the hostess says how playful he is while you wonder whether or not you can match the vest.

There is so little room in the new apartments that it's impossible to raise children; in fact you can't raise plants without stunting their growth. But if the kiddie kar is lacking and you fall over something, just know it's the cat's basket!

Many a man who thought he was going to have a home finds that he's enrolled to a circus. He has to come home and walk the dog and turn day into night for the canary bird. A dog used to be a dog, now he's a design on the carpet and you have to have a megaphone and a microscope to find him!

Dogs and cats may come back, but after all the nicest pet of all is the canary bird; when you open the door of the cage it leaves at once — never comes back to drop seed in your hair! This is the age of petting and the smaller the pets, the better.

MAKING MODERN MENUS

Among the winter deserts which combine nutrition, delicacy of flavoring and popularity are the various sort of steamed puddings, none of which is more popular than the one with dates.

Date Steamed Pudding.

One and one-eighths cups of flour, three-eighths teaspoons salt, one-fourth cup of sugar, five-eighths teaspoons of soda, one-half teaspoon of cinnamon, one-fourth cup of dates, cut in pieces; three-fourths cup sour milk, one-fourth cup of molasses, two tablespoons of nuts, cut in pieces, and one tablespoon of vanilla. Mix and sift the dry ingredients, add the dates, milk and other ingredients in order. Steam one and one-half to two hours in greased molds and serve hot with orange sauce.

Rice Butterscotch.

One-third cup rice, two cups milk, one-fourth teaspoon of salt, one cup of brown sugar and two tablespoons of butter. Wash the rice, cook until tender in milk which has been salted. Prepare the rice in a double boiler. Cook sugar and butter in a pan until the mixture becomes very dark. Add to rice, cook a few minutes until rice is very tender and caramel mixture has melted. Serve the dessert cold.

Woman's Day Of Work and Play

Better Than Utopia.

Modern women apparently aim simply at perfect equality with men. An existence which would make women superior to men in every way doesn't appear to be sought. However, one more-than-Utopia for women has been an established fact for thousands of years in India. A self-governing principality is called Stri Rajyo, or Rule of Women.

The people are a mild race, guiding their lives by a different set of rules from those applying to the Hindus in general. Property descends, not from father to son, but from mother to daughter. A son is a nobody in the family; the husband but a "necessary evil;" the management of the estate belonging to the woman of the household.

The woman lives with a husband so long as it suits her, and so long as he behaves himself. Divorce is a simple matter. She informs her husband that he has to leave immediately, and then she informs her friends of the divorce. Her children remain with her always and her husband has no claim to them. Naturally, the education of the girls comes first and the literacy among women in Malayalan is very high.

Under the stress of modern conditions a great deal of the administrative machinery is in the hands of the men, but formerly it was not so. Here man was put in his proper place as a servant or a chattel. The Malayalan women take credit for the neatness and cleanliness much in evidence all over the land. They dress in spotless white, the only ornament being a flower behind the ear. If they are rich they add great earrings of gold.

Sound good to you? Well, it's true!

The Mother at 50.

Mrs. Nathalie Colby, wife of Bainbridge Colby, distinguished lawyer and former secretary of state, puts herself in the class of "abandoned mothers aged 50." With little previous experience as a writer she has just succeeded in publishing a novel, "Green Forest," and received favorable comment from the critics.

Instead of feeling that with her children reared she is "through," Mrs. Colby believes that she is just beginning life as an individual. She contends that the woman of 50, looking back over a life filled with the intricate problems of rearing a family, has a wide reservoir of information on which to draw for whatever vocation she chooses for the last stretch.

"To my mind the mother who never forgets that she is primarily a mother is the most tiresome person in the world," Mrs. Colby says. "And furthermore, she is likely to have far less influence on the children who have grown to be fully developed individuals than the mother who can become a friend and companion.

The children do not need the modern mother, they want to live their own lives in their own way, which is perfectly right and normal. The result is that the woman of 50 is often the most unhappy and disgruntled person in the world. Never having built up any interests of her own, instead of living a richer, fuller life when the opportunity presents itself, she seeks to escape from life and it is then she begins to die."

Warning!

Everyone knows of the modern tendency to eat and drink ourselves to death. Physicians are agreed that the woman about the house eats too much unless she happens to be on a diet, in which case she eats too little. Dr. James Fenton, medical officer in England, blames nibbling during the day for many of women's bodily irregularities.

"The woman who indulges in over-eating and over-drinking risks a muddy, shiny or spotty complexion, as well as obesity," he points out.

Victory For Women.

"A great victory for a short session" is the way that Mrs. Maud Wood Park, counselor on legislation for the National League of Woman Voters, characterizes senate passage of the maternity and infancy extension bill. The act extends for two years the Sheppard-Towner law under which aid is granted to the states to carry on infant hygiene educational work.

Real progress in child welfare work is reported, especially in the rural sections where homes are widely scattered and unsanitary conditions are often found. Educational campaigns have been conducted, with nurses traveling long distances over roads to reach mothers. Birth registration is being enforced and maternity and infancy centers organized.

One out of every 30. That is the percentage of educated Indians, who expect to find an educated wife, it was declared by Sir William M. Hailey, governor of the Punjab, India, at the opening of the Kinnaird College for Women at Lahore. He voiced the opinion that half the education given to men was thus wasted since they met an atmosphere at home which was unsympathetic and contemptuous toward education.

Cream of Pea and Tomato Soup.

One cup of canned peas, two cups milk, one tablespoon of flour, one tablespoon of butter, one can tomato soup, pinch of soda, salt and pepper. Heat peas and force through a strainer. Add hot milk and thicken with mixture of butter and flour. Heat tomato soup, adding seasonings and soda. Add to first mixture just before serving.

Dorothy Dix Tells Mrs. Wife To Make Hero Out Of Mr. Husband To Win Joy

"Keep Your Hook Baited, Serve Generous Quantities of Home-Brewed Flattery, Pin A Few Medals On Your Hero Husband. And Don't Try to Cut Him Over to Suit Your Pattern," Advises Dorothy Dix.

BY DOROTHY DIX.

DON'T THROW AWAY YOUR BAIT

Most women think after they have captured a man and led him to the altar that they can sit pretty and take things easily for the remainder of their lives. This is a mistake.

Any flapper can capture a husband, but it takes a wise dame to keep one eating out of her hand.

Therefore, after marriage continue to practice assiduously the arts and wiles with which you baited your hook when you landed your poor fish.

Keep yourself dolled up as much as possible. Many a man ceases to look at his wife because she has let herself become hard on the eyes. Be pleasant and amiable. Don't argue. No man would marry a woman if he knew before hand that she was going to be his storm and strife.

Keep the little petty worries and cares of your day to yourself. Your husband has plenty of his own, and for a tired man to be met at the door when he returns home of an evening with a detailed account of how naughty the children have been and how high butchers' meat is and that the faucet in the bathroom is leaking again is adding the straw that breaks the camel's back.

DON'T SPARE THE SLAVE

Before you married you led your husband to believe that he was the handsomest, the wisest and the wittiest man in the world and the one you admired most. When he spoke you listened to him as if he were an oracle. You laughed at his jokes and begged him to repeat his good stories. Keep on giving him the glad hand.

Out in the world your husband gets so many bumps that his vanity is kept sore and bruised and aching all the time. It is your cue to pour over it the healing ointment of your admiration and make him feel that you are the one person in all the universe who really appreciates him at his true worth. Let him see that in your eyes he is better looking than any movie star, and a fascinator and a spellbinder to boot. Homebrewed flattery is peculiarly intoxicating, and no wife is in danger of losing her husband so long as her jolly makes that of the vamp's taste as flat as skimmed milk after a cocktail.

DON'T FORGET TO SAY THANK YOUU

It's pretty discouraging to a man to spend his life toiling to support his family and have them take it just as a matter of course and no more than they had a right to expect, and never mention anything she does except to knock him for not making more money.

So don't wait until husband is dead to tell the world what a wonderful man he was. Pin a few medals on him as he goes along.

Tell him over and over again that you think no hero ever does a braver thing than the man who offers himself up every day of his life as a living sacrifice to his wife and children; who toils in a hot office in the summer that they may go to cool places in the country; who goes shabby that his daughters may have finery, and denies himself the little luxuries he craves to give his sons the edueation he never had.

Shower on him your appreciation and gratitude for all that he does for you and it will make matrimony worth while for him and keep him from being one of those husbands who spend all of their spare time wondering what made them do it, anyway.

DON'T MARRY A MAN TO REFORM HIM

If you don't like him as he stands, with all his faults thick upon him, don't take him. Leave him alone. If you don't like a man who drinks or smokes or plays the races or who has low-browed musical comedy tastes, let him be. If you don't like the way a man has his hair cut or the sort of collars he wears or the way he eats or the church he goes to or the friends he has, let him go his way in peace.

Don't marry a poor trusting, unsuspecting man and then set yourself to change all his habits and alter his viewpoint of life. By the time a man has reached a marriageable age and is capable of supporting a wife he has worked out the manner of living that gives him the most individual pleasure and comfort, and you interfere with this at your peril.

The man who can't do as he pleases in his own house, who can't smoke in the parlor or eat a dinner without being told how bad everything he likes is for his stomach, soon hunts up a place where he has more liberty.

So if you want to keep your husband don't feel that it is your sacred duty to correct his grammar or his pronounciation or his table etiquette and generally to cut him over according to your own little perforated patern of a husband.

Men get married to get a claque, not to acquire a permanent critic on the hearth or a schoolmistress.

But more of these commandments on Wednesday.

Afternoon Hats For Southern Wear Feature Wide, Drooping Brims And Self-Tone Trimmings

If you are planning a trip to any one of the smart southern resorts, you will need a number of sports hats as sports clothes are now worn throughout the day. These will be felt, or the new angora felt, in pastel shades to correspond with the frock. Gowns are high and creased at irregular intervals. Brims are narrow and turned down.

The sports shape sketched today is a small affair of pale green angora felt—a new lightweight material with a slightly hairy surface, it is trimmed with a band around the crown of green and silver ribbon. This ends in a tailored tab on one side.

In addition to small felt models, you will need a wide-brimmed hat for afternoon wear, such a shape, for instance, as is sketched today. This is of black visca straw, featuring a broad dropping brim considerably narrower in the back than at the front and sides. The trimming consists of large chiffon and velvet flowers on one side of the brim.

Sports hats for southern wear are simple in both line and trimming. Angora felt is the smart material. For more formal afternoon wear, large hats of visca straw are featured.

MODISH MITZI — Polly's Turtle Won't Have a Chance. — By JAY V. JAY

Here's something new in fashion accessories—tortoise shell pins, frames for hand bags and monograms. Tortoise shell hasn't been used for several seasons and makes a delightfully spotty note to add to the stripes, zigzags and plaids that fashion is using this year. Mitzi thinks she will buy these pins that look like old fashioned ornamental hair pins, but are really decorative trimming for tailored hats.

Or perhaps this insect with the extremely long wings would look better when poised on the front of a new spring hat. Mitzi can't decide; you are asked to admire the hat itself of corded felt.

Polly thought she really couldn't afford any of these new tortoise shell ornaments, but we wouldn't give much for the longevity chance of the turtle in Polly's goldfish bowl. "A buckle or something?" muses polly.

BREAD AND 'LASSES

Molasses cookies, gingerbread,
Molasses fudge, molasses cake—
Small tongues are always hanging out,
When I bring "'lasses" out, to bake.

They want "a taste," they want a spoon
They're under foot all baking day.
I give them "bread and 'lasses" then,
To make them take themselves away!

I see them underneath the tree,
With sticky hands and blissful smiles,
To get "more 'lasses" they employ
The most amazing arts and wiles!

Molasses, to their eager taste,
Should flow from an unending font.

FABLES OF EVERYDAY FOLKS

The Man "On the Job"

Once upon a time there was a man. He was seeking a job. In fact, he never stopped. He was always looking for one. For he was never on the job.

He began his job-seeking habit when he was quite young. If asked to do a chore he would begin; and, perhaps right in the midst of its accomplishment he would start something.

It is a very good thing to start something. But "if you want to know who is boss start something"—often.

This boy always started so many things that he never came to be the starter himself. That is, he was always bossed rather than being the boss.

So later, when he came to take a job—a real one—there continually seemed to be something wrong with it. He never stopped to turn the question around.

Now, of all things, a man and his job are easily parted; since men may come and men may go, but jobs go on forever. He did not endeavor to cultivate holding-on proclivities.

One of the attributes of the job seeker is the everlasting belief that he is poorly paid, and so is ever seeking an increase. And rarely does the increase seek him. Another attribute is continually running down the concern for which he works.

Now it happened that the continuous job-seeker found a job with a truly worth-while firm, who had no hesitancy in making it known that if their workers proved worth while to them they would prove worth while to the workers, which is no unusual kind of a firm these days, contrary to the cynic's cry.

After going through the motions of his work for a little while here he began his little squeal against the concern, the wanderlust again seized him, and he went to his employer with his everlasting complaint.

This man "higher up" was a real human, who, unlike the others, did not hand him his pay envelope with the usual air of good riddance. But as man to man he spoke thus to him:

"We bought your talent, your industry and your loyalty. When you give us but the first and withhold the last you are cheating us. We do not employ dishonest men, therefore we should discharge you. The intense loyalty we require from you is the keynote of what modest success we have already achieved and what we may achieve in the future.

"We are not firing good men—we are hiring them. If you are a good man you will either remain with us or be called higher. If you are not a good man you will automatically discharge yourself.

"No employee has up to the present time been put to the embarassing necessity of asking an increase in wages. We have invariably beat him to it. We flatter ourselves that we shall know first when you deserve a thicker pay-envelope. It may be that some time we shall prove fallible in this regard. In such a case you will undoubtedly not hesitate to put a bug in our ear, which we always keep near the ground listening to what we are doing.

"On the other hand, it may be that you have overlooked some of the covenants and forgotten that loyalty is to us, in estimating the value of your services, what promptness is to a banker in making a credit rating.

"Therefore, be loyal. If you can't, be honest. Don't cheat us. Get out!"

The continuous job-seeker listened and learned and profited. For once he realized the job's a job for a' that and a that, and also that blessed is the man who has a job, for he shall inherit a pay envelope, even though it be a lightweight.

Moral: A job in hand is worth two in the future!

BANKER WALSH IS OPTIMISTIC

COLONEL C. C. Walsh is the chairman of the federal reserve board and federal reserve agent for this district. He has been given some figures that should cause the timid to cheer up a bit.

He said that Texas could disregard cotton and still be in good condition.

Last year receipts from the cotton crop of Texas amounted to only about 20 per cent of total agricultural receipts. Total agricultural receipts for 1926 he said, in Texas was $1,200,000,000. Of this amount, cotton was responsible for only $305,000,000.

Banker Walsh has been in Texas a long time. He is the only banker in Texas who has written poetry that broke into form, that is, in recent years. A banker who is a stockman, a farmer and poet, all at once, couldn't be anything but an optimist away down here in Texas.

ANOTHER SLAP FOR THE PRESIDENT

AN adverse report on the nomination of William J. Tilson of Georgia to be federal judge of the middle district of Georgia was voted by the senate judiciary committee. Tilson is now serving under a recess appointment and is a brother of Rep. John Q. Tilson of Connecticut, republican house leader.

William J. is a native of Connecticut.

Two democratic senators from Georgia opposed his confirmation. Tilson did not look good to them. He had no business to be born in Connecticut. He should have selected a spot in Georgia.

President Coolidge has been given many rebukes by a republican senate and now the smashing of Tilson must be given its place in political history.

First a president walks on roses. Later along his term he is forced to walk upon thorns. This is history. It began with George Washington, the first president. He was glad to return to private life, notwithstanding that he was "first in the hearts of his countrymen" then and now.

COLONEL CREAGER AS A PROPHET

COLONEL RENE B. CREAGER of Texas called at the White House to let the distinguished son of New England know that Texas would land in the republican column in 1928 if the republicans nominated Calvin Coolidge for president an. the democrats named Governor Alfred E. Smith of New York. Colonel Creager is the national committeeman of his party of and for and from Texas. Is this the Colonel Creager that predicted in 1926 Harry M. Wurzbach would be drowned in Salt river on primary election day? If so, has the body of Wurzbach been recovered up to date?

FORD AND HIS PARTY

HENRY FORD was offered a billion dollars for his auto works and rejected the proposal with all the scorn that a wizard is capable of exhibiting. A quarter of a century ago Henry wasn't worth a hundred dollars either in cash or possessions.

There is no land like this.

Now it goes into the record that a man who said that history is bunk has greater wealth in his possession than all the highbrow historians that have illuminated the earth since Noah was driven from the lowland by the high water.

SLAYERS OF BIG GAME

HUNTERS are slaying bears in the mountains of New York, elk and moose in the wild woods of Maine and 60 wolves have been put away in San Saba county, Texas. There may be wolves in Texas but the pot hunters are bent upon killing all the feathered tribe with the exception of the English sparrow. Now that the mocking bird has been selected as the queen bird of Texas, the finish of the triller in the treetops is in sight.

BIG BILL HAS A WIFE

IT IS only fair that the punishment should fit the crime. William D. Haywood was for years the head of the Industrial Workers of the World, and in 1921 he fled to Russia to avoid a jail sentence in America. Now he has married a Russian woman. She spoke no English and he speaks no Russian. There should be eternal peace in the Haywood family.

IN THE PUBLIC EYE

GEORGE YOUNG of Canada is in the public eye. He is said to be the greatest swimmer that Canada ever produced. Fame came to him when he won the Santa Catalina swim. Now his heels are in the clouds and his upturned face has a place in the mammoth picture gallery of the world.

CHRISTMAS GIFT FOR RAILMEN

FOURTEEN and one-half million dollars were added to the annual wages of virtually 91,000 employes of 50 eastern railroads by a railroad arbitration decision. It was a Christmas gift for the rail workers. According to farm leaders a Christmas gift is about due the growers and shippers of the country in the shape of reduced freight rates.

PRODUCTION OF GASOLINE

ACCORDING to Washington advices the production of raw natural gas gasoline in the United States in 1925 amounted to 1,127,470 gallons. Now it is predicted that the output of automobiles this year will reach the 5,000,000 mark. Furthermore, it is announced that 6,000,000 American farmers own their own cars.

The HOLLYWOOD GIRL

By Beatrice Burton

"Love Bound," "Her Man," "Honey Lou," Etc.

READ THIS FIRST:

BOBBIE RANSOM, a little blond school teacher, is movie struck, and wildly eager to go to Hollywood to break into pictures. Failing to borrow the money she needs from her widowed father and her Aunt Gertrude, she asks ANDY JERROLD to lend it to her. But Andy, who wants her to stay at home and marry him, refuses to do it. Bobbie returns his engagement ring to him, borrows the money from the WIDOW PARKINS, who is to marry her father, and goes to Hollywood.

There, at MRS. MANGAN'S boarding house, she meets Stella Delroy, an extra in the movies. Through Stella she gets a few days' work at the Magnifica Studios, where ROY SCHULTZ, a famous director, and his wife, LOTTIE, take great interest in her—more as a person than an actress, however. GUS MACCLOUD, the assistant director, falls in love with her and she with him. He keeps promising her a part in a picture when he makes one, but never makes good his promise.

She learns that he's married but that his wife is divorcing him, and so she drops him. Stella kills herself and leaves behind her a letter that tells about her unhappy love affair with Gus, and then Bobbie hears that he has been running around with MONICA MONT, a rather disreputable vamp of the films. She is disgusted with him, but remains infatuated with him somehow; and when she happens upon him in the street one day, promises to see him as often as ever.

Lottie gives her an opportunity to make some extra money by tutoring her little daughter, JOLLY, for a time. And it is from Lottie that Bobbie hears that Gus is free from his wife. So when he makes violent love to her without mentioning the word "marriage," Bobbie repulses him and refuses to drive with him to a movie "location." Monica, however, goes with him. Their car is wrecked on the way and she tells newspaper reporters that they were on their way to be married. Gus denies the newspaper story to Bobbie when he returns, and offers to give her all the help he can in the future. She tells him she will sell him a bracelet that Andy Jerrold sent her for Christmas and some dull diamonds, left her by Aunt Gertrude, who has recently died. When she looks for the diamonds, they are gone.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY.

CHAPTER XLIII.

"Would you mind stopping at Monica's for a jiffy on the way up to your house?" Bobbie asked as Gus sprang ahead of her into the dark green car.

Like a flash of lightning, it had come to her that she must go straight to Monica with the story of the stolen brooch. Not to bluntly accuse her of taking it, but to ask her if she knew anything about it.

"No, you needn't come up with me. I won't be a second," she said to Gus as he stopped before the imposing apartment building with its shining glass doors and trimly-clipped bay trees.

"Gus must have come over this road dozens of times," she thought as she went up the thickly-carpeted stairs to Monica's flat. How swiftly and surely his car had come, taking two short cuts on the way! Now as it was, the dark green car seemed to know the road already! The road that ended at the paneled door of Monica's rooms.

It opened as Bobbie reached the head of the stairs, and Monica stuck her head out.

It was not a pretty head, seen at this time of day, when Monica wasn't expecting visitors. The red hair, that was beginning to look too red from too many trips to the hair-dyeing shop, was done up in curl papers.

The face beneath it was pasty white and covered with cold cream. Her blue eyes were the least bit bloodshot, and without mascara, Monica's eyelashes were almost white. Her lips were pinched and bloodless.

She led the way to the cozy, untidy sitting-room, her soiled satin mules flapping on the floor. She picked up a half-burned cigarette from a little tabue before the fire, and sat down, pulling her American beauty kimono around her.

"What's under you hat?" she asked, which was her way of asking Bobbie what was on her mind.

Bobbie drew a long breath. She was not lion-hearted by nature, and she knew that Monica would be a pretty tough customer in a real battle.

She spoke gently, and not as firmly as she would have liked to.

"Monica," she began. "You remember those diamonds that my Dad sent me?"

Monica shook her head. "No," she said calmly, and Bobbie gasped. Why, how could Monica pretend that she hadn't seen the diamonds? She had even advised

SHE JOTTED DOWN THE DATE ON THE WALL PAPER

Bobbie to sell them, and had called them "dirty diamonds!"

"Why, sure you remember them!" Bobbie told her with a flash of her big eyes. She wasn't going to let Monica put a thing like that over on her! "Don't you remember the night I asked you for the $20 you owed me for our room rent, and you told me to sell a 'dirty diamond' if I needed money?"

Monica shook her vivid head again, and spat into the fire with the sure aim of a country-store loafer.

"I never owed you $20. Don't be a sil," said she. But her blue eyes did not meet Bobbie's steadfast brown ones. They stayed on the dancing flames in the grate.

Bobbie shrugged her shoulders. "Why, Monica, how can you SAY such a thing!" she cried in disgust and fury. "You know you owe me $20, just as well as I know it!" Her cheeks were scarlet, and her voice shook.

"Aw, that's a lot of string beans. You know I don't owe you a nickel." Monica's voice was suddenly coarse and common. A back-alley voice. A gutter voice. "You just think because Ive made a little money you can come 'round here and badger it out of me! You low-down little sneak!"

Her eyes eyes were on Bobbie's face now, fixed on a point just above Bobbie's eyebrows. It seemed as if Monica was trying to meet her eyes squarely, and just couldn't do it!

"Me, a sneak?" Bobbie repeated her word faintly. "Why how can you call me that, Monica Mont? When I've been as good to you as I've been, and let you get away with all my silk socks and my perfume, and even my gold evening slippers without saying a word! It's you, who've been a sneak, if anybody has!"

Monica finally managed to look her straight in the eye. But it was not an open and honest look.

"Well, if you're such straight goods, why didn't you come right out and say what was in your mind a minute ago, when you came in?" she asked acidly. "Why didn't you accuse me of stealing your rotten little pin and be done with it, instead of hedging around?"

Bobbie laughed suddenly.

"Monica, you just gave yourself away!" she cried. "If you never saw my diamonds, how did you know they were set in a pin? A 'rotten little pin' is what you said just now!"

Monica gave a little start, and then managed a tight smile that she tried to make clever and sly. She shook her head, and began to take off the curl papers.

"Oh, no, I didn't say anything of the kind! Don't try to trap me!" She denied the whole thing flatly. "I never mentioned the word 'pin'!"

She got up, went into the dressing room and came back with a towel in her hands. Serenely she began to wipe the cold cream grease from her white face.

Bobbie looked at her with admiration that was two-thirds scorn and disgust. What a wonderful prevaricator she was! An artist, really!

"Well," she said, with a little gasp. "I've always heard that you can lock up from a thief, but you can't lock up from a liar! However, you seem to be both, Monica. So, naturally I didn't stand much chance of keeping my brooch, with you around, did I? And it didn't do me much good to come here today and ask you about it, either!"

"None at all," Monica came back at her easily, as she slipped off her scarlet kimono and got into a black satin dress that came just to her knees. "And while you're talking about stealing, I suppose you think it's all right to try to take a girl's sweetie away from her, don't you, Miss Morals?"

Bobbie stared at her. "What are you talking about?"

"Gus MacCloud!" answered Monica, widening her eyes until they looked like China-blue marbles, set in their sockets. "You walk away with Gus and you think that's a nice Christian thing to do —to come between me and him. To break up a friendship that meant a lot to both of us. To both Gus and me."

Bobbie didn't know whether to laugh or to cry. Why, Gus and Monica hadn't been on speaking terms when she had first known them! And then, for Monica to say they'd been dear friends and that Bobbie had wrecked their friendship!

She'd probably convinced Gus of it, too, by this time! Men are always so ready to believe that two women are fighting between themselves for his love and affection.

Bobbie turned suddenly on her heel and went out of the flat, knowing that she was leaving the two "dirty" diamonds behind her, probably. But she knew, also, that she might just as well go as try to get them from Monica, if they were there. Monica wasn't the kind of tiger-cat who would give up a thing once she had fastened her paws upon it.

She went down the stairs, and as she reached the bottom of them a man passed her on the way up. She turned to watch him. Where had she seen him before? Where? Then, all at once, she remembered. He had been one of the guests at Gus MacCloud's New Year's party! She remembered something else about him, too; he had had a little blond wife who had watched him like a hawk all evening.

She, herself, turned and watched him now. He had reached the head of the stairs, and was knocking upon the door of Suite 204. Suite 204 was Monica's suite!

"Ho-hum!" said Bobbie to herself, and a twinkle of pure enjoyment came into her eye. There is no woman so noble that she is not tickled by finding out some dreadful secret about her enemies. And Bobbie certainly counted Monica as one of her enemies—one of her bitter ones!

* * *

Hollywood is not such a broad-minded little town as we are led to believe. Like all little towns, it is a hotbed of gossip.

Stories start at Dolores Dawson's beauty shop near Franklin Circle, and travel all over the United States. Stories of the movie people, their parties and their love affairs—their troubles and their scandals.

And as the dark green flashed past Dolores Dawson's shop that February afternoon, a bit of gossip that had started there came into Bobbie's mind. It had to do with herself and Gus MacCloud.

"By the way, Gus," she said, turning to him and nestling against the dark green leather curtains, "Lottie heard some gossip about you and me in Dolores Dawson's shop the other day."

She waited for him to ask what kind of gossip it was. But he only raised one of his thick eyebrows and grunted. Contempt for woman-kind was in that grunt.

"Yes, they say that you're entirely too thick with a little blond extra girl from Magnifica," she went on, watching him as she spoke. "And Lottie says that the little blond extra girl is, I. Somebody has seen me going into your house—and coming out. And because you're the handsomest bachelor in Hollywood, people talk about you—and me."

He gave her a quick glance. "Lottie told you that story?"

She nodded.

"Take it with a little salt, then," he said gruffly. "She probably never heard a whisper of gossip. But she knows you go up to my house, and she wants to frighten you so you won't do it any more. She thinks I'm some kind of a were-wolf and not to be trusted with a nice little girl like you. Well, you tell the Honorable Mrs. Lottie Schultz for me to mind her own business and keep her eyes on her own side of the hedge!" The angry, childish words came from him sullenly, sulkily. And as the car turned in at the driveway between the two houses he cast an angry eye upon Lottie's innocent pink stucco house.

That night Bobbie locked Angus's check for two hundred and twenty-five dollars into the bottom drawer of her dresser, where Andy Jerrold's sparkling bracelet had lain the night before.

"With what I have in the bank," she thought, holding up the empty white silk box that had held the bracelet and looking at it with wistful eyes, "with what I have, that $225 will keep me going for a few months longer. And I'll be sure to get some work, too, to help out, in the mean time."

Gus had made her promise to stay in town for six more months. He had told her no one ever made good in less than that time.

"Besides, when I make that picture of mine, I'm going to put you in it, as sure as sunrise!" he had promised her that afternoon.

The sound of his voice, making that promise, still rang in her ears as she locked the door of the dresser. And she could still see the eager, hungry light in his blue eyes as he had tried to make her take the money and keep the bracelet.

"Only don't be such a little chestnut burr," he had said to her, half-lightly, half in deadly earnest, as he had tried to take her in his arms. "Trust me a little more, Bobbie. There's nothing I wouldn't do for you if you'd only meet me half way. I'm crazy for you."

"Then why don't you ask me to marry you?" she had said, in her heart. "If you're so wild about me?" But aloud she had only looked at him, and said nothing at all. Just like a woman in love!

Nevertheless, the remembrance of the way he had looked and the way his voice had trembled, still thrilled her as she stood there alone in the blue-green bedroom above Mrs. Mangan's sitting room.

She kept thinking about him while she tried to count up six months. Finally she did it, and she jotted the date down on the wall-paper, inwardly praying that Mrs. Mangan, that "poison neat" woman, would never discover it there.

"Six months! That will bring me to the eighth of August!" she told herself. "I'll either be in the movies for good and forever then —or it's back to Locust Street school and Andy Jerrold for me!"

The thought of Locust Street school left her cold. But the thought of Andy brought a surge of hot jealousy to her heart—the thought of Andy, the nice, good-looking thing, and that new secretary of his.

"I wonder if she's pretty," she thought dreamily, as she dropped off to sleep. "She probably is—but I hope she isn't. I hope she has a face like a doughnut!"

And with that sweet and charitable thought, she closed her eyes.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Andy tells Bobbie all about his new secretary in the next chapter of this story of Hollywood.

TO SCOUT ARCTIC.

NEWPORT NEWS, Va., Feb. 5. (A.P.)—Destined for service in the Arctic reaches of the Pacific ocean, the coast guard cutter Northland was launched today at the plant of the Newport News Shipbuilding and Dry Dock company.

The merciful man doeth good to his own soul; but he that is cruel troubleth his own flesh.

The wicked worketh a deceitful work: but to him that soweth righteousness shall be a sure reward.

As righteousness tendeth to life: so he that pursueth evil pursueth it to his own death.

They that are of a forward heart are abomination to the Lord: but such as are upright in their way are his delight.—Proverbs 11:7-120.

BO BROADWAY ..... By Joseph Van Raalte

NEW YORK. (EFS).—More than $500,000,000 is lost annually in this country through purchase of fraudulent securities. Most of this "guilt" edge stock emanates from New York where it's perfectly all right to break the law with a pen but not a pistol.

The wise crooks in the town of Queer Percentages realise that the average man is on the lookout to get something for nothing, and he capitalizes on this cupidity.

Fully half the $500,000,000 lost annually in the brokerage come-on game is taken from men and women whose hearts aren't one bit purer than the dealers in Golden Fleece.

* * *

A boob goes up against a wire-tapping game. The crooks tell him that by intercepting messages across the wires they can give him sure-thing advice. If the boob were an honest boob he'd scorn to take part in such a deal, knowing that he was to profit by questionable methods. But he readily falls in with the plan and when he is finally left holding the bag he rushes to the police and squawks. I've never had any sympathy with the victims of "gold brick" and allied swindles. It's clearly a case of "cheating cheaters"—a game where the best man is entitled to all he can get.

A New York dramatic critic remarked the other day in the course of a review, that "nothing could astonish him any more."

Which is tantamount to admitting that his value as a critic is nil. Nothing is ever stale, worn or humdrum to the legitimate commentator. His true worth lies in the fact that he can bring to a thousandth rehearsal a point of view as fresh as if he were witnessing it for the first time.

When they pass the age of astonishment they're through.

* * *

There's Alan Dale for example. He's been reviewing plays for more than 30 years and gets just as excited over a snappy little musical comedy today as he did back in the days of Floradora.

He took in a show the other night and next day wrote as follows:

"I'll admit that I laughed till the tears ran down my honest, reviewsome cheeks as I listened to Lulu McConnell in that Fifth avenue shop scene selling combinations to an acidulated feminine. And when the cladulated one complained of the color, the retort that no one would ever see it but herself—the whole house giggled."

The big point there is that Brother Dale, who has "covered" thousands of musical shows, "laughed till the tears ran down his honest, reviewsome cheeks," while the audience merely giggled.

It is only the dilletante who curls up and dies of ennui.

Jack Sheridan, the oyster man at the Waldorf, has been wrecking from 340 to 360 bivalves an hour, eight hours a day, six days a week, eight and a half months a year for 37 years, and figuring days off, holidays and time out to wash his hands, estimates that Monday morning of last week he opened his twenty-five millionth oyster.

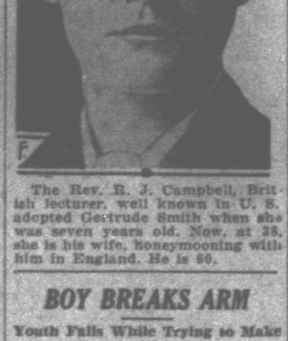

In all the 37 years of holding the light up to 25,000,000 oysters he says he never found a single pearl of any value. Just a little incomplete formation in the shell, but nothing worth while. Once in his youth he and his assistants found four pearls about the size of the small end of a collar button. A jeweler told him the pearls were worth nothing.

"We have all found pearls about the size of the small end of a collar button," remarked the newspaper man who was interviewing Oysterman Jack.

"Yes," he replied with a sigh, "life is just a jeweler."

There was more to the interview but it never got very much above that level.

The Man Nobody Knows

INSTALMENT II.

Jesus the Boy.

Theology has spoiled the thrill of Jesus' life by assuming that he knew everything from the beginning—that his three years of public work were a kind of dress rehearsal, with no real problems or crises. What interest would there be in such a life? What inspiration? You who read these pages have your own creed concerning him; I have mine. Let us forget all creed for the time being, and take the story just as the simple narratives give it—a poor boy, growing up in a peasant family, working in a carpenter shop; gradually feeling his powers expanding, beginning to have an influence over his neighbors, requiring a few followers, suffering disappointments and reverses, finally death. Yet building so solidly and well that death was only the beginning of his influence! Stripped of all dogma this is the grandest achievement story of all! In the pages of this little book let us treat it as such. If, in so doing, we are criticized for overemphasizing the human side of his character we shall have the satisfaction of knowing that our overemphasis tends a little to offset the very great overemphasis which has been exerted on the other side. Books and books and books have been written about him as the Son of God; surely we have a reverent right to remember that his favorite title for himself was the Son of Man.

Nazareth, where he grew up, was a little town in an outlying province. In the fashionable circles of Jerusalem it was quite the thing to make fun of Nazareth—its crudities of custom and speech, its simplicity of manner. "Can any good thing come out of Nazareth?" they asked derisively when the report spread that a new prophet had arisen in that country town. The question was regarded as a complete rebuttal of his pretensions.

The Galileans were quite conscious of the city folks' contempt, but they bore it lightly. Life was a cheerful and easy-going affair with them. The sun shone almost every day; the land was fruitful; to make a living was nothing much to worry about. There was plenty of time to visit. Families went on picnics in Nazareth, as elsewhere in the world: young people walked together in the moonlight and fell in love in the spring. Boys laughed boisterously at their games and got into trouble with their pranks. And Jesus, the boy who worked in the carpenter shop, was a leader among them.

Later on we shall refer again to those boyhood experiences, noting how they contributed to the vigorous physique which carried him triumphantly through his work. We are quite unmindful of chronology in writing this little book. We are not bound by the familiar outline which begins with the song of the angels at Bathlehem and ends with the weeping of the women at the cross. We shall thread our way back and forth through the rich variety of his life, picking up this incident and that bit of conversation, this dramatic contact and that audacious decision, and bringing them together as best to illustrate our purpose. For that purpose is not to write a biography but to paint a portrait. So in this first chapter we pass quickly over thirty years of his life, noting only that somewhere, somewhere there occurred in those years the eternal miracle—the awakening of the inner consciousness of power.

The eternal miracle! In New York one day a luncheon was tendered by a gathering of distinguished gentlemen to David Lloyd George. There were perhaps two hundred at the tables. The food was good and the speeches were impressive. But what stirred one's imagination was a study of the men at the speakers' table. There they were—some of the most influential citizens of the present-day world; and who were they? At one end an international financier—the son of a poor country parson. Beside him a great newspaper proprietor—he came from a tiny town in Maine and landed in New York with less than a hundred dollars. A little farther along the president of a world-wide press association—a copy boy in a country newspaper office. And, in the center, the boy who grew up in the poverty of an obscure Welsh village, and became the commanding statesman of the British Empire in the greatest crisis of history.

When and how and where did the eternal miracle occur in the lives of those men? At what hour, in the morning, in the afternoon, in the long quiet evenings, did the audacious thought enter the mind of each of them that he was larger than the limits of a country town, that his life might be bigger than his father's? When did the thought come to Jesus? Was it one morning when he stood at the carpenter's bench, the sun streaming in across the hills? Was it late in the night, after the family had retired, and he had slipped out to walk and wonder under the stars? Nobody knows. All we can be sure of is this—that the consciousness of his divinity must have come to him in a time of solitude, of awe in the presence of Nature. The western hemisphere has been fertile in material progress, but the great religions have all come out of the East. The deserts are a symbol of the infinite; the vast spaces that divide men from the stars fill the human soul with wonder. Somewhere, at some unforgettable hour, the daring filled his heart. He knew that he was bigger than Nazareth.

WUXTRE! WUXTRE!

Largest news note of the week: Tobasco Tom has tagged his Jawn Brown on a 1927 Spudder contract. Old King Tut Jenkins is rearing for action, according to advices from baseball headquarters.

* * *

ALL'S JAKE NOW.

Spud officials may relax now and sit back in peace. No need to worry about the rest of the club. Petey Turgeon, Pete Lapan and Lyman Lamb held up their share of the slugging last summer. Tobasco Tom came along and did the willow-wielding for the rest of the gang. In other words, the two Petes and Lucy pounded the pill like three good men tried and true, and all that sort of bunk, ought to do. And Tobasco whammed the apple for himself and the other five in the batting order.

* * *

Strife With the Gallery Gods.

With return of the fistic sport come no-decision bouts in Wichita Falls, urgles Alec Ross. Which means the ring bugs will lay off the referee and yawp at the sports writers who, of course, will be foolish enough to express their opinion the next day after each set of scraps.

* * *

CALM DOWN, DAUGHTER

Speaking of the rawspberries, I understand a number of girlish athletes took high and airish umbrage at something or other anent the cage game, as is carried in this col. Irate females are said to have upped and penned acrimonious article belaboring this unassuming writer, and chased over to Al Parker with the plea he publish it (the whatever-it-was) as a sort of chastisement or whatnot. We are told conservative Al refused the favor, if any. That's a shame. Now if the young ladies insist that it get into the public prints, I'll be glad to handle their article—in more ways than one.

* * *

MANY ATHLETICS.

Fandom's interest is divided several ways this week. The hot stovers are busily buzzing over Spudder prospects. Interest has become greater than ever before in basket ball, the Commercial league race and the new flapper loop. The ringworms are climbing up in the front row again what with return of Tommy White and Clyde Hull Thursday night in the first all-boxing program carded here in several months. And sharp attention veers toward the horse croqueteers. Hefty gathering at ringside yesterday when the Wichita Falls polo club took a workout against the Army players. And sharper attention turns to the quartet as it swings down to San Antonio in defense of its title next Sunday.

* * *

Yesterday's game didn't serve much as a conditioner. The terrain had been sogged too much by Jupe's opening of the tear ducts the night before. There were times the ball sank so deep in the mud the contestants almost had to haul out telescopes and shovels to hunt it with. Robbins gave 'em a few thrills, however. Dick Goodman liked to have got off several times for long runs. Goodman, by the way, they say, is developing real class as a poloist. Give him the right kind of mount and he'll show many of the boys a few.

* * *

Jim Minnick wasn't on hand. He's to join the club this week, teaming with Robbins, Featherston and Whyte. Wichita Falls holds the southwestern circuit championship, won in 1926. The circuit has placed a trophy in competition that if copped three times by one team goes to that team permanently.

COOPER DOWNS HAGEN HANDILY

Texas Star Trims Leading Pro 10 and 9

DALLAS, Feb. 6.(AP)—Playing the greatest golf of his career, Harry Cooper brought his scheduled 72-hole match with Walter Hagen, national professional champion, to an abrupt end at the 63rd hole with a 10-9 victory over his seasoned opponent.

After finishing the first round Sunday morning five up on the redoutable Walter, Cooper in the afternoon figuratively burned up the course to gain five more holes in the first nine. He plucked three birdies and an eagle on this leg of the match, amazing even the veteran Hagen with his uncanny skill.

"The lad was hot today and his golf would have beaten anyone," Hagen said after the match. "I played as good golf as I ever played but Cooper's was the better game."

Hagen's fine sportsmanship under the defeat, the worst he has ever taken in his 15 years as a champion among champions, won for him the admiration of the thousand or more in the gallery.

Cooper and Hagen had played 36 holes Saturday winding up that phase of the match with Cooper holding a four up advantage.

In the 27 holes played Sunday, Cooper speared nine birdies and an eagle, and being a record for having played more than one-third of the holes of a 27-hole match in sub-par figures.

Hagen played steadily and even brilliantly at times. He took advantage of every slight misplay of his younger rival, though these were rare.

Buffs' Pitchers Warm Up Early

Two Houston Flingers Will Train With Cards

HOUSTON, Feb. 6. (AP)—Edgar Clough and Arnold Crandall, Houston southpaws, will get a week's advantage in training over the other members of the Buffalo squad, President Fred Ankenman announced Saturday. These will report to the St. Louis Cardinals' training camp in Florida on March 1 and will be with the Red Birds until March 15, when they will come to the Bisons.

When the Buffs have their first workout on March 5 or 7, three southpaw pitchers probably will be in camp including Gerald Myres, the youngster acquired from Fort Smith; Lefty Irvin, the youngster who was bought from Ottumwa of the Mississippi Valley league on the recommendation of Johnny Kane, and Lefty Harlan, a former member of the herd, who, however, has been ineligible for the past five seasons.

Harlan has not yet applied for reinstatement, Ankenman declared Saturday. Lefty is in Houston, having come here from Mexico last year.

No contracts have been received at the Buffalo office. Tuesday and Wednesday these documents were mailed to the men now on the Houston roster, and this week acceptances and rejections should be reported at baseball headquarters.

TENTH STRAIGHT WIN

BRYAN, Texas, Feb. 6. (AP)—Allen academy rang up its tenth straight victory here Saturday night by nosing out the Sam Houston State Teachers' college reserves 22 to 19. Allen defeated noon, 39 to 24.

There could be nothing more fitting than to have Tris Speaker go to Washington and get all these investigations first hand.

What this country needs is more ball clubs like Washington to go to.

Organized baseball ought to put all these accussed guys on one team so we'd know where they are when something crises again like a "Scandal of 1927."

* * * * *

Q. What is Jack Dempsey's profession?
A. Jack Dempsey is a sparring partner to Gene Tunney.

* * * * *

Now we hear of another heavyweight jumping the rope. There was a day when Mr. Stribling was considered a coming and very dangerous man in the heavyweight division.

That was before he met Berlenbach and so greatly disappointed the crew.

Stribling went home after that bout and decided to grow and build which he has done very successfully.

With Stribling's natural speed and his extraordinary strength and ring craft, it should only take a short time to mold him into one of the greatest fighting machines of the age.

Just past 22 years, he has steadily taken on weight and is just coming into his full strength now. He is a fraction over 6 feet, weighs over 180 in shape, neck 16 3-4 inches, chest 39 3-4 inches (expanded 43 inches), waist 30 inches, wrist 7 1-2 inches, reach 74 1-2 inches, thigh 20 3-4 inches, calf 14 inches, ankle 9 inches, forearm 13 3-4 inches, biceps 14 inches.

Strib has a wonderful pair of hands, thick, strong, and has never had any serious trouble with them, like Delaney, Tunney and others. One reason bging because he has been in the habit of boxing so often, going to all parts of the country, taking all comers and with only a few days between on some of them. He has become so accustomed to being cautious in protecting them for future use that he consequently drifted out of the habit of trying to scort a K. O., at every start.

Now, however, his bouts will be fewer and with only the best that can be obtained for him and under the watchful eye of his new starters, Miller and Studor, nothing will be left undone to bring him to the best physical and mental condition. Boxers are sometimes like ball players, a change of management and team revives them from the rut they at times get in.

George Burns Faces Hoodoo of "Valuable" Prize Winners

George Burns, star first baseman of the Cleveland Indians, enjoyed the biggest year of his diamond career last season. In addition to playing a great game at first and proving virtually the mainspring of the team, he set a new world's record for two-base hits. His worth to the club and his greatness as a player were attested to by the committee of baseball writers which, at the close of the season, elected him the most valuable player to his team in the league and awarded him the trophy which has gone with the honor each year since 1922.

But—

What about next year?

George has every reason to believe that he will have another big year in 1927. Counted on it under Tris Speaker and most certainly wants to back up Happy Jack McCallister the new pilot.

But if George has been reading his baseball he no doubt recalls the jinx which has seemed to hover over winners of the prized honor.

George Sisler was the man selected to receive it the first year the reward was made. That was in 1922. Everyone knows that shortly afterward Sisler suffered a sinus infection that not only affected his batting eye but altered his entire style—killed the dashing bold manner of play he had. Sisler found the handicap of playing with impaired vision and managing the team at the same time too great a task. He is no longer a manager.

Babe Ruth weathered the jinx temporarily, but the second year after the recognition was accorded him suffered a serious illness and almost passed from the game.

Walter Johnson defied the jinx although, after receiving it, he did not reap any great honors afield.

Everyone knows what happened to Roger Peckinpaugh, selected as the recipient of the honor in 1925. Before the ink had dried on the proclamation of the committee Roger went out and booted about eight chances in the world's series. The next year found him warming the bench much of the time with the Washington Senators.

Now we have Mr. Burns.

Here's hoping that George carries a toy cannon or hat pin or something with which to chase the jinx should the old boy start messing up the first baseman's happiness.

Triple Header At Gym Tonight

Coyotes Play Two Games, Fems in One

With a good day's rest behind them Wichita Falls high school cagers, all except Captain Coyal Francis who is sick, stand ready to defend the fort tonight against advances of the speedy Clara Greyhounds and Metzger's Draughon business college quintet at the Junior college.

Coach McCallum has been whipping his squad along at a hard pace and a warm reception more than likely is in store for the invading teams. The Coyotes, however, are hardly expected to come away victorious on both ends of the double header offering.

An added attraction, a game between the Whippets and Conocos, girls' teams, has been rigged up. Both sextets have been training diligently and each expects to end high in the women's league race.

First game is to start at 7 o'clock.

Women's Athletics

By Mary Isabel Caldwell

A up to the forward who is guarded and trying for a basket is this: Stand with one foot a step back of the other, and incline your body so that most of your weight rests upon the rear foot. In this manner you automatically create for your protection a "zone of safety" shown in the sketch, for the guard must remain in the vertical plane when guarding you. She may come inside of your advanced foot, but this practice is dangerous as she is liable to commit the foul of overguarding, so you may feel reasonably sure of your "zone of safety." Should you stand straight the guard has a much greater chance of blocking your toss.

Burk Girls Receive Volley Ball Awards

Sweaters will be awarded to the Burkburnett girls senior volley ball team in the chapel exercises this morning.

The Junior team will be given gold volley balls this year instead of sweaters.

Those to receive sweaters are: Captain Addie East, Pauline Patterson, Thelma Mitchell, Ylets Foster, Ethel Hamilton, Ruby Burcalow, Mildred Kleth, Ruth Bryarly. Those getting gold volley balls are: Captain Louise Wood, Wynona Gregg, Viola Crittendon, Ina Faye Norvell and Mabel Duke.

This senior team defeated every team in the county until the finals of the county meet and closed the most successful season they ever had. They had defeated the Electra team twice before the tournament but lost to Electra in the finals.

Niblick Ties With Bow and Arrow

By Universal Service.

SAN ANTONIO, Feb. 6.—Archie Loeffler, Willow Springs golf professional, had to shoot a birdie three on the eighteenth hole of his home course this afternoon to finish all square with Jack Carothers, of Houston, expert archer, in the first golf-archery match ever held in San Antonio. The archer shot 38-36-75 for the difficult course over which the Texas open championship was played 36-40-76. A large gallery followed the players. They will play the tie probably next Sunday.

Delaney Showed Mr. McTigue How

"Had it All Time But Never Knew It," Says Mike

By ROY GROVE
EFS Sports Editor.

NEW YORK, Feb. 6.—"I never knew how to fight until I met Jack Delaney," says Mike McTigue, the K-O conqueror of Paul Berlenbach; "that Frenchman taught me more about the game than any punch I ever took or gave in my long career.

"When we met, I had it poked into me, that the idea of the game was WIN your fight with a punch, and I saw that punch coming from Delaney's shoulder and took the lesson in full.

"That's my only alibi for knocking out Paul Berlenbach, and I could do it again, maybe, in quicker time. I knew what Paul was going to get and he would have counteracted it if he had learned as much from Delaney as I did. He probably wasn't looking when Jack knocked him down for the count.

"I realized I was boxing a very clever boxer when I met Delaney and my only wish was that I could have fought him many years ago.

"It doesn't matter how much a professional fighter works, he always learns something with every match.

"Gene Tunney's greatest worry was Harry Greb and he used his head in meeting the Pittsburgher time and again. Tunney often told me he regarded Harry the cleverest man in the game and would have fought him a thousand times to learn the "Windmill's" way of doing things.

"I have spent the greater part of my boxing career as a boxer and have decided rather late in life to put over the punch. I always knew I could outgeneral my opponent, but really was surprised when I began to develop a knockout blow.

"These things come to a fellow rather unexpectedly, but only when he is filled with the confidence to let fly with caution. Paul was a chance opponent on which to try out such matters as a knockout punch. He has a reputation that is not to be fooled with."

Mike McTigue is one of the marvels of the modern ring. He is a man close to 40 years old and steps out at this late hour of his life to knock out a man, in the early rounds, who is reputed to have possession of one of the most murderous punches in the game.

Mike McTigue has never, until recently, been rated a dangerous man in the ring, although one of the cleverest of boxers.

He won the light-heavyweight title when he outpointed Battling Siki, who knocked the invincible Georges Carpentier all over the ring and out of the title.

Mike, in beating Siki, out-generaled one of the hardest and merciless men in the game.

PHELAN NOT SOUGHT

AUSTIN, Feb. 6. (AP)—James H. Hart, chairman of the football committee of the Texas university athletic council, stated here today that James A. Phelan, Purdue university coach, was not among those being considered for the position of football coach at Texas university. Hart gave out the statement after reading a dispatch from Indianapolis, Ind., to the effect that Phelan was coming to Austin to consider an offer made him here.

BLUE WINS IN PRACTICE TILT

Fletcher Clipped On Dome With Mallet

Wichita Falls poloists put the final touches Sunday to limbering-up exercises in preparation for defense of their southwestern circuit championship at San Antonio this week-end. Playing shy one member of the team, Jim Minnick, the Blue edged out on the Army Red, a combination of Wichita Falls and Fort Sill players, 8 to 5, on the Call field.

Horses and men were heavily handicapped by a muddy going and play only at stages was of the speedy variety.

Toward the end of the contest J. H. (Doc) Fletcher took the count from a clip on the dome by Horace Robbins, who swung a pretty wicked mallet throughout the afternoon. The blow cut the scalp in three places.

The Wichita Falls scoring honors were hogged by Whyte and Robbins, who sank three goals each. Featherston and Fastnow pecked one apiece.

Goodman of the Army tabulated a pair. Fletcher, Hogan and Prendergrast each scored one.

Dempsey's Arm Badly Infected

Former Champion Suffering From Blood Poison

By Universal Service.

LOS ANGELES, Feb. 6.—With his wife, Estelle Taylor, at his bedside day and night, and nurses in constant attendance, Jack Dempsey, former heavyweight champion, was battling a serious case of blood poisoning in his left arm today.

The illness may postpone indefinitely Dempsey's attempt to regain his lost fistic crown. He had planned to leave Tuesday for his mountain training camp to begin the long grind toward another meeting, but the trip has been called off.

Dr. Warren Clark, the pugilist's physician, attended the ex-champion for an hour this morning and was optimistic over his patient's condition. But he admitted that all danger of a spread of the infection was not past.

Dempsey's arm and hand are swollen to twice their normal size and his physician is making every effort to diminish the infected area. If it spreads, a very serious condition might follow, it was admitted. The fighter's splendid physical condition is expected, however, to stand him in good stead.

Four minor operations were performed on the arm late last night. The member was lanced and drained and is being soaked in a strong hot epsom salt solution. The operations were performed at the Dempsey home on Los Feliz boulevard, the boxer having refused to go to the hospital.

The poison came from a small scratch on Dempsey's middle finger while he and his wife were on a motor trip to San Francisco several days ago. The finger became swollen and painful, but Dempsey paid little heed to it and continued driving the car. Last Thursday he was compelled to stop at Del Monte for treatment, but insisted on resuming the journey to Los Angeles Friday. It is believed that this driving aggravated the condition.

Plans for a celebration of the couple's second wedding anniversary were called off on account of his illness.

Benny Returns To Ring This Summer

NEW YORK, Feb. 6. — Benny Leonard, retired undefeated lightweight king, has announced his return to the ring the coming summer. He seems sincere in his plans, too. Doesn't offer the alibi that he is tired of the stage or hears the "lure" of the ring game. Simply sees a chance to add to the Leonard fortune.

Leonard has been on the stage ever since he quit the ring two years ago. He claims to have kept in good physical condition. He is wise enough, however, to refrain from kidding himself that he can recover his old fighting form in a hurry simply because he has watched his body—has indulged in daily exercising, including a bit of shadow boxing.

If his plans materialize he will take on two or three minor opponents before he goes gunning for Mickey Walker or Pete Latzo, his main objectives.

Grip's Antagonist

THEO (SWEDE) JENSEN

Twice conqueror of Dutch Mantell and who drubbed Cal Farley in Cal's own home town, mixes with Charley Grip in the feature match of the boys' band wrestling card Tuesday night at the Palace theater.

Jensen is the man who broke Farley's foot, causing the Amarillo grappler to go into retirement a couple of years ago, which may or may not mean something to followers of bullet head Charley.

One J. Bentley Turns Specialist

No More Will Portsider Try Hand at Everything

NEW YORK, Feb. 6.—This is the age of specialization in everything—including sports. John McGraw and Jack Bentley have come to a mutual agreement on the subject, which definitely establishes the fact, if it was not accepted before.

* * *

McGraw has been a specialist for some years—specializing on managing the Giants and owning interests in race tracks. But "up to yet" Bentley has been an all around sort of person, physically and by vocation.

He has been, at various times, a lefthanded pitcher, a mediocre first baseman, a tenor singer, carnival king and pinch hitter. He has filled all of the roles, with the exception of the first base one, in fair fashion. His first basing was nothing to write home about.

But this coming season he is going to be a pitcher. Still a lefthander but a pitcher only. He has been so informed by the Giant leader.

Bentley joined the Giants in 1923 from the Baltimore Orioles, where he had won a rep as a pitcher and slugger. McGraw proceeded to take advantage of both assets.

The spring of 1925 found him with the rest of the Giant squad at Sarasota, Fla. Jack was looking for a thrill and the town fathers were looking for a handsome male being to play the part of King Lobo or something in their city pageant. Beauty was asked to fill the bill—and the trick suit that went along with it.

The ride through the crowded streets that day must have been too much. For Jack failed to get going that year. Won 11 games all told and while his pinch hitting was o. k. his all around value to the club wasn't enough to give him an argument for another year's salary. So the Giants traded him to the Phillies.

* * *

Having plenty of lefthanded pitchers and tenor singers Art Fletcher sent Jack to first base. Before the season ended McGraw regained Bentley's services—silver tones, soup bone, et al.

FROM TEE TO GREEN

This column, Tee to Green, will answer any question the golfer would like to know.

These answers will come through various and the best golfing professionals in the game today, according to your question. Your answer may be the views of three or four professionals on the same question.

Professional, Highland Country Club

What is there in the professional teaching of golf?
Can golf be taught?
How long does the beginner take to be a fair player?

* * *

These are the questions I am asked many times daily.

The professional system varies in many ways. The teacher understands the many phases of golf and he adopts the best methods to the particular build of the student.

For instance, it is not advisable for the pro to teach the long rangy starter to use a flat swing. His proportions are better fitted for the upright style of drive.

The short stocky fellow can use the flat sweeping swing to equal the upright swing of the long rangy golfer.

The short stocky golfer is the boy with whom the professional has the most trouble. He tries to adopt the style of the tall golfer, that is to say, the average golfer who is about 5 feet 10 inches. He loses power behind his drive and long iron shots.

Golf can be taught and it should be taught. The fellow going out into the fairway must have some foundation on which to play his game. He should practice many weeks before ever attempting to start from the tee. By practice, we mean to get the swing and the feel of the stick.

With the proper kind of training I have seen good golfers made from beginners before the finish of the first season. Of course, these fellows will be good the following year. It takes two years to get into the rhythm of the game. It cannot be picked up over night. The golfer who does not become discouraged is the golfer who comes along the fastest.

3-TEAM TRACK MEET APRIL 16

Texas, Baylor and Smu To Match Ability

Special to The Record News.

AUSTIN, Feb. 6.—University of Texas cinderpath stars will meet Baylor university and Southern Methodist university stars in a triangular meet at the Texas memorial stadium on April 16, according to Clyde Littlefield, Texas track coach.

This meet is the first of its kind ever to be held at the University of Texas, Littlefield said, and the men are looking forward to the event.

Besides this triangular meet with Baylor and Southern Methodist university, the track men will participate in the third annual Texas relays which will be held at the stadium on March 25. That event is clearly the outstanding athletic meet of the year, according to coaches and the men. Athletes from all over the United States will be at the stadium that day to show Texas and the people of Austin just what is possible in track events.

On April 2 and 7, Texas cinder stars will meet athletes from the Agricultural and Mechanical college in two dual meets. There will be a dual meet with Rice Institute on April 30 which is probably the hardest meet on the schedule this season, according to Littlefield.

The annual conference meet will be held at Rice institute on May 13 and 14.

With participation of his men in this series of meets, Coach Clyde Littlefield is hoping to develop some stars to take to the Kansas university meet in the spring.

BAN ON HUDKINS

California Commish Investigates Kansas Charges.

By Universal Service.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 6.—Boxing Commissioner Charles Traung, announces that Ace Hudkins, "Nebraska Wildcat," has been barred temporarily from appearing in a proposed bout at Fresno.

Traung says he feels Hudkins should not be permitted to fight again in California until the state commission has had opportunity to investigate charges brought against the Los Angeles welterweight by the Kansas boxing commission.

Yep, You Have To Pack The Punch

Flashy Tie Draws Attention But So Does "Sock"

Ever since Mike McTigue left his arm chair in the old men's home for the squared arena long enough to put Paul Berlenbach in the proper pose for a night of slumber, the old men of this, that and every other sport, have taken heart. For, "What Mike has done man can do," is their motto.

Those who follow the sport doings religiously, know that Mike, after ranking as the world's worst heavyweight and the champion long distance sprinter of the ring for years, suddenly turned, planted both feet under him instead of ahead of him, and delivered such prodigious blows on the cheek, chin, chest and chuck wagon of Mr. Berlenbach that that gentleman fell to the floor happy in the delirium that he was the first martyr in a new world war.

He's Not First.

This change, after the many lone years Mike had been tapping his opponents and then apologizing, was startling, but Mike is by no means the first athlete to find the "wallop" at the tail end of his career.

It took Cy Williams, veteran Philly player, a dozen years to find out that he could hit the ball. He now ranks as one of the sluggers of the game.

Babe Ruth, the acme of swatting, ambled along through the first five years of his big league career unaware of the fact that he could sock home runs.

Harry Vardon, grand old man of the British golf links, at the ripe age of sixty-odd, bought himself a pair of spectacles the other day and found that his driving, sadly lacking of recent years, was due to poor sight, rather than lack of power and co-ordination. His recent appearances have been marked by some prodigious driving exhibitions.

Ditto in Business World.

In the business world thousands of men have wandered around until 40 years of age without finding themselves and then have suddenly come upon the "wallop," have found their spheres and applied themselves with the result that a few years of effort have left them well fixed.

If you haven't found the "sock" yet, don't dispair. It may be just around the corner if it isn't in your right—or left.

Stribling Will Meet Huffman

NEW YORK, Feb. 6. (AP)—Young Stribling, husky youngster from Macon, Ga., will bring his heavyweight credentials to Tex Rickard's elimination tournament in Madison Square Garden tomorrow night. Stribling is scheduled to meet Sailor Eddie Huffman, of the Pacific coast for 10 rounds in the first of four matches within a month to weed out the challengers for Gene Tunney's title.

Minus the chaperonage of his parents, "Ma" and "Pa" Stribling, who recently turned over their son's pugilistic welfare to Walk Miller, Young Stribling will make his premier bow as a heavyweight before New York fight fans. In his last appearance here the Georgian was soundly trounced by Paul Berlenbach.

KAY CALLS WICHITA OIL POOL A TRUST FUND CREATED BY GOD

BIBLE PARABLE TOLD TO CLASS

Kay Takes Moral From Old Story For Modern Day

One of the largest classes of the last two years Sunda yat the Palace theater heard Judge John C. Kay retell the parable of the talents in terms of modern wealth and blessings, heard the moral of an old story applied to men and monies of America and of Wichita Falls.

Referring to Wichita's oil wealth, Judge Kay declared oil is "God's great trust fund," and added that "when this oil was laid down in Wichita county, the stone lilies were waving in the deep sea waves that beat upon the shores of this community. Calamite trees were growing in the swamp lands, and there were no flowers on the shrubbery or the trees."

"So that when you go out and discover oil," Judge Kay added, "you have come upon a trust fund that was created when the morning stars sang together."

The Kay Bible class Sunday was attended by 509 persons, almost double the attendance of last Sunday which reached 267. Leaders of the class are seeking an attendance of 1,000 at the class, and reached within halfway of the mark Sunday. One of the features of the meeting, in addition to Judge Kay's powerful lecture, was the singing of E. E. Shepherd.

Judge Kay's complete lecture follows:

"My friends, the Sunday school lesson this morning is the parable of the talents. It is a parable that was given by our Lord in the shadow of the cross, just before the crucifixion. It is a powerful parable, as are all His parables. Have you ever stop to think how busy the Savior was on earth? How much vital energy was poured into His three years' ministry among men? Never a vacation. Never a sick spell. Never a complaint. Continually on the move. So, He comes to His followers with this parable, that unto one man was given five talents, and to another two, and to another, one. This man with the five talents, when the Master returned, had worked it into ten talents. And the man with two talents had made four, and the fellow with the one talent had took that and buried it, and brought it back again, just as it was. The story is familiar to all of you. But, there are some things about this story up inside of this, as in all the parables.

"You know, I think that man is a newcomer in the world. That he is a parvenu in creation. Of all creatures in God's world he is the last to arrive, and yet, he is the most ambitious, the most dominant and the strongest animal on the earth, if he be an animal.

Nature's Trust Fund.

"Here is a man goes out here and finds some oil. 'My oil well. My rig. My lease. My division order.' My check. My money.' Ah, man, child of the newcomer, the parvenu among God's creatures, when was that oil put down there? God's great trust fund. When was that oil laid down in Wichita county, the stone lilies were waving in the deep sea waves that beat upon the shores of this community. Calamite trees were growing in the swamp lands, and there were no flowers on the shrubbery or the trees. There were no bees flitting from tree to tree and vine to vine.

"There was no hum of insects, no voice of bird. So that when you go out and discover oil, you have come upon a trust fund that was created when the morning stars sang together.

"Now, I refuse to believe, and I do not believe, that God Almighty created that great trust fund or any of the other great trust funds of nature for one little man to squander and waste and throw away. That is one of the questions that Job asked, or is asked, in the Book of Job: 'Where was thou man, when the morning stars sang together?' Was the North star? Was not the North star. God, the astronomers tell us that this old world of ours is slowing up in its revolution every 24 hours. It don't slow up much at this point; not much in this century; not much in this generation; not much in this year; not much in a century; not much in a thousand years, and, yet, all mathematic show that one day it will stop and then, in the heavens, as always, to the sun, and there will be an end of earthly things.

Never a Cow.

"Man thinks that he is too important. Here's God with a universe that rolls on as far as our finite minds know for countless ages, and man strutting around here, as Shakespeare says, puffed up with a little brief authority."

"You know, I think I have got just as far as I deserve to get. That sounds all right to you, but I am going to add something else to that. I think you are right where you belong, every one of you. I think that it is the law of nature, and of nature's God, that each man takes his own place. Now, that sounds like a harsh doctrine, it sounds like a strong statement, but isn't it true?

"I want to say here this morning, while I am on that, I want you to think about the blessings you have had, the talents that you have been given you.

"Now, there is something curious about the way this man gave these other men these talents. It bears on my doctrine that every man takes his own place.

"When he gave them the talents, he went off and left them alone. He didn't stay there and supervise them and say 'Bill, that won't do. Don't monkey over here and put this in that kind of stock, and this in a piece of land, and here's a town lot up here that you can make some money.' He didn't say that or help them at all, but went off and left in a far country, out of the way, and left them to work out their own business and their own salvation. Isn't that the way you are left in the world? We ought not to try about the fellow who got five talents. You know, I think Rockefeller has got too much money, and Henry Ford, and Andrew Mellon and those fellows, but, to tell you the truth, I haven't got a dime that belongs to me. I don't know whose money they got, but I'll tell you, to make this confession in the presence of this congregation that I have never took it from me. It isn't yours, is it?

Generous Men.

"You know, I think we have come upon an age when the rich men are doing much. You hear Mr. Rockefeller criticised a great deal, not so much in his old age, but in his prime. I see a statement where he has given away six hundred million dollars for the benefit of humanity. How does that square with this present fad, unto one was given five talents, and he has brought forth yet onther five talents. He knows that that oil was put down in the ground before men ever came on earth. He knows that God put it there, but God's and that great lesson has been burned into his heart. And, I want to say that I live among some rich men right in Wichita Falls, and I'll hold any brief for them —but I want to say to you right here in Wichita Falls, among our men that are considered wealthy, we have got the most generous bunch that I ever saw together in any community.

"Did you know it was good luck to give away a little money? Even the gamblers know that. I knew an old professional gambler once, I have known more than one, but this one—he used to told me whenever he got in a lot of hard luck, and everything kept going against him, that he just simply took what was left of his roll, just broke it in halaf in two, and gave one-half of it out to charity, then he commenced doing better.

Don't Be Stingy.

"Young men, don't be too stingy with youth money. It is written in the Bible that the liberal soul shall be made fat. And, it is written in the Bible that 'There is that that scattereth and yet increaseth.' You know, I think God Almighty don't mind trusting a man with money if the man has got courage enough to divvy away, and risk getting some more. You know, I would dislike to get up here in Wichita Falls and say that I had eighty cents of the first dollar I ever made. A man mustn't think too scaredy of his money. A man ought to have more confidence. God expects man to have more confidence in himself that to try to keep all his money. You know, I don't worry much about that. I always feel like I can get some more money. Don't you? If you don't feel that way, I want you to get to feeling that way. That we will just split this roll, and we will give to God, to charity, and that church, and this poor, and that organization, because God is in his Heaven, and we know how to work, and we can get some more. I would dislike to have my pocket full of money and feel like if I don't keep that, I was never going to get any more.

"Now, I say to you people, don't get like that one-talent man and bury the talent. Now, there is another curious thing about it, and then I shall have done. I have been talking about money here, because the Savior used that as an illustration, a simile, but, He didn't have money in His mind at all, I think, when He was talking about this. There are a thousand talents better than money. A man might have a talent to work for his government, or for the law, or to do a lot of things other than to make money; all these talents are not to be wasted, but are to be cultivated, cultured, so that it can belong to the increase that is described in this lesson."

Today { At the Theaters

By Ruth Morrison

Majestic: Ronald Colman and Vilma Banky in "The Winning of Barbara Worth," comedy, Topics of the Day and Pathe News.

Olympic: "The Magician" starring Alice Terry; special vaudeville attraction, "Elizabeth King's Dancers," comedy, Fox News.

Strand: "Exit Smiling" with Jack Pickford, comedy and news.

Mission: "The Cactus Trail" with Bob Custer; newlywed comedy.

Gem: Elsie Ferguson in "The Unknown Lover" and western picture.

Garden: Buffalo Bill, Jr., in "Rawhide" and "Twelve Smiles Out," comedy.

Along theatre row this week we see three of the choicest stars of the screen—Vilma Banky, Ronald Colman, at the Majestic playing together in "The Winning of Barbara Worth," and Alice Terry in her fifth part as a French girl, in "The Magician" at the Olmypic.

Have you seen Ronald and Vilma? Our hero of movie ballrooms plays an unusual though entirely becoming part as the ideal outdoor man. Vilma is a Barbara well worth winning and adapts herself to desert life in her usual versatile way.

Over at the Olympic, Alice Terry, star of the "Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" "Scaramouche," and "Mare Norstrum" wins fresh honors in "The Magician."

The story is that of a girl caught between the forces of a magician whom she is unable to resist, and the love for a young surgeon who has saved her from being a helpless cripple by performing a delicate operation on her spine, which startled the surgical world. It is an interesting picture.

Parables Give Cue For Lecture Text At Highland Christian By Baldridge

In his address before the Baldridge Bible class at the Highland Heights Christian church, William Baldridge selected his subject from two or tie most famous parables, that of the "Talents," and of the "Ten Virgins."

His address, in part, follows:

"Some of the most beautiful lessons in the Bible come to us through the Masters' parables. His teachings of what constitute the kingdom was largely by this method.

"The parable was different from the ordinary fable which it may resembles in some respects. The fable represents things that were impossible as occurring, but in the parable the mind was directed to an occurance that was possible and might have belonged to the experience of the hearer. The application of it brought out the truth intended.

"The last week of the Master's life was spent in and around Jerusalem. During that time he discoursed at length on his second coming, and also on the living again, upon the duties of those who claimed to be his followers and would become members of His Kingdom. This was largely by this parable method. In the 25th chapter of Acts, only a day or two before the tragedy of His betrayal, he talked with his own about his coming again and about what will be expected of his followers in the interim that time and when he returned.

Parable of Talents.

"The parable of the talents represents a man going into a far country, calling unto him on the eve of his journey into a far country to be gone a long time. He gave to each according to his ability to serve him while he was away. To one he gave five talents, to another two, and to another one, with the instructions that they were to trade in these in his absence. After a long time he returned and called for a report from each to account for his faithfulness in his absence. The one who had been given five talents laid at his Master's feet the five that he had been given and five more that he had earned. His Master pronounced his blessings on him and told him since he had been faithful over these few things, he would set him ruler over many. The servant to had given two talents brought his two and two additional ones that he had earned. He received the same blessings and commendations from his Master. Every one had increased his talents 100 per cent. The one who had increased it five did no more than he who had increased it two. Each rendered service according to his ability and received the same joy and blessings and praise. But what of the servant that received one talent? He exhibited cowardice. He came and laid that talent at the Master's feet and said, 'Master here is thy talent. I knew you were an exacting man and I took no chances but buried it in the earth until you returned, that I preserve for you that which is yours.' His Master turned and instead of blessing him called him a wicked and slothful servant—wicked because of the thoughts he entertained and slothful because of his inactivity.

"The first two were not blessed because they had been successful in handling their Master's property, but to me the lesson is because they had been faithful over a few things"—faithful in service to him to whom they owed service.

"Now, let's make the application. This Master who went into a far country and was gone a long time is our Lord. The servants that he left in charge of his interests are you and me and the other fellow who claims to be followers of the Son of Man and servants in His kingdom here on earth. We are gifted with different abilities to render service in the cause, but everyone has the ability to at least be faithful in our efforts and it was being faithful that brought about the reward.

Man Owes Service.

"I have always been of the opinion that rewards from our Savior are purely gratuitous for we owe him the service. There is another lesson that may be drawn from this and that is this: Whatever we do thatis to our credit must be done before he returns. So far as we are individually concerned, he returns to us at death, and whatever record we have made, whatever use we have made of our talents it is made before that hour and on that record like the servant with the one talent, we must stand.

"This point is emphasized in the parable of the ten Virgins. There was a great marriage festival. The bridegroom was returning to his home with his bride. The ten Virgins with their lamps were waiting for the bridegroom and his party. For some reason who was delayed in arriving and in the meantime, the waiting Virgins grew weary and slumbered. Five of them were wise and took oil in their vessels that they might keep their lamps burning. Five of them took no oil. At midnight there was a cry made that the bridegroom cometh, go out and meet him. The five that had not an extra supply of oil asked the five that were wise to give them of their oil for their lamps had gone out, but the wise Virgins answered saying "No," and while they went out to buy, the bridegroom came and they that were ready went with him to the marriage and the doors was shut.

"In this story the bridegroom represents our Lord. The time of marriage is the coming to judgment. I think the tarrying represents the long unknown period between his ascension and his return. The virgins represent the waiting church. The wise virgins represent those church members who are always ready, whose lights are shining—the foolish ones the members who have become cold and lifeless in the service of his cause, the midnight cry that the bridegroom cometh is the summons of death or the trumpet of judgment. The cry for oil was purely death-bed repentance, or an attempt for preparation in the face of judgment. The shut door is a declaration that such repentance is too late to be of avail.

"Then the great lesson from these two stories is to be ever faithful and to be always in the state of readiness. Readiness means more than to be merely a servant of the master such as the one that received one talent or the five foolish virgins. These are the ones that the world take note of. Pity it is that they do not notice the man with five talents who doubled it or the five virgins who had their lamps trimmed and burning when the bridegroom came, but to the man on the outside of the kingdom he sees only those who preach and make claims and do not do.

"Dr. Frank Crane tells us a story that is intended only for the professed Christians. The gist of it is that there is a town called Ubique. This word means everywhere or anywhere. His friend, a business man, had occasion to go one time to the town of Ubique on business. He arrived at the railway station on a blustering, bleak December day. There was a cold wind and a flurry of snow and sleet. As he walked along the street going from the depot to the hotel, he saw women dressed in costly furs and gentlemen in fur coats, but all having bare feet. The population seemed resigned to it, however, and went about without shoes. They limped along and apparently suffered great pain in getting over the ice and snow. When he arrived at the hotel he noticed that at the desk, the bell boys and other attendants all barefoot. When he passed into the dining room, he sat at a table next to a gentleman looking at his feet and fell into conversation. As this new acquaintance seem so kindly and open minded our friend said to him, "Pardon me, if I seem inquisitive, but I notice the inobody in this town seems to wear shoes, yet everyone appears to suffer from cold and bruised feet. Would you mind telling me why?" "Ah," said the old gentleman, raising his eyes piously, 'why indeed?' He talked further with his companion, but could never get past this point. The old gentleman by was perfectly willing to admit shoes were desirable beyond all things. He admitted everybody ought to wear them, but failed to see why they did not do so. In the afternoon the traveler took a walk through the town and found here and there beautiful buildings more elaborate and larger than the ordinary buildings. The janitor was sweeping the snow from the steps of one of these structures and he stopped and talked to him. "What is this building, I am a stranger in the town and notice there are many buildings like this," the janitor replied. "This is a shoe factory." "Oh, then they make shoes here?" "No, not at all," was the reply, "they just talk about making shoes and sing about making shoes and pray about making shoes." He was employed by the janitor that once every seven days every other business in town was required by law to close that nothing was permitted to be done but the shoe factories, and the people all gathered in them to sing, pray and hear lectures about the origin of shoes, the history of shoes and how fine it would be for everyone to possess shoes, but no shoes were produced and nobody wore them.

He Declines Gift

"On his way back to his hotel, he passed an old German cobbler making a pair of shoes. He bought a pair and took it back to his hotel to present to the old gentleman with who he had had the conversation at the dining table. To his surprise the old gentleman declined the gift, assuring him that none of the best people ever wore shoes, in fact it was considered a sign of ignorance, superstition, fanaticism and hypocracy to wear them.

"I am sure that the point in this story is only too well taken. It seems a pity that the religion of our Lord, the very best and most usable force in the world for developing character, for making men fit to live among, for making happiness should have been perverted into such a position that a story like this could be applied to a considerable per cent of the professed followers of our Master."

Andrews Will Lecture Here

Roy Chapman Andrews, head of the Third Asiatic Expedition to the Mongol plains, will lecture to members of the Knife and Fork club next Monday night at the Wichita club. The lecture will be preceded by a dinner beginning at 7 p. m., it has been announced.

Mr. Andrews is an internationally known explorer and scientist. The Asiatic expedition, which has been under way for four years, took him into ports of Mongol that had never been penetrated by white man before.

It was this expedition that discovered the dinosaur eggs and the fossilized bones of pre-historic monsters, establishing the fact that early mammalian beasts of Asia and America were kin and roamed across the two continents on the land bridge that joined them.

The Knife and Fork club, recently organized, meets only when prominent speakers can be brought to this city, and its functions are formal. According to officials of the club, the organization plans to meet at least 12 times each year.

Woman Swims Catalina Span

By Universal Service.

LOS ANGELES, Feb. 6.—Love for her 11-year-old son sustained her courage and strength and enabled her to be the first woman to swim the Catalina channel, Mrs. Myrtle Huddleston, of Long Beach, Calif., declared this afternoon after recovering from her 21-hour battle with the sea.

Mrs. Huddleston, a comely young matron, crossed the 23 miles of choppy water in 20 hours and 42 minutes, an hour and 3 minutes faster than Henry Sullivan, of Massachusetts, but five hours slower than the time made by George Young, the first conqueror.

She touched shore near Point Vicente at 11:14 a .m. today and was immediately taken to a Long Beach hospital. She was on the verge of collapse.

"I was only able to make it because I want to give my little son an education and the comforts of life," the sturdy young mother said.

"As the first woman to swim the Catalina channel, I think my earning capacity will be greatly increased. I will now be able to put my boy through school and give him a good start in life, I hope."

Three other swimmers who plunged into the surf from Catalina island yesterday were forced to give up the struggle.
