A finger of fire

Appeal due on windfall tax ruling

From Staff and Wire Reports

The Justice Department Thursday said it will appeal to the Supreme Court a Wyoming federal judge's ruling that the windfall profits tax is unconstitutional.

Midland oil men, meanwhile, said today they are disappointed, but hardly surprised, by the announcement.

In announcing the action, the administration essentially rejected a request from 18 oil state congressmen — many of whom have supported President Reagan on his tax and spending proposals — to refrain from appealing the decision.

The Justice Department notified U.S. District Court Judge Ewing T. Kerr, who ruled the Crude Oil Windfall Profits Tax of 1980 unconstitutional because it excludes Alaska and thus does not uniformly apply to all states, that it will appeal his decision directly to the Supreme Court within 60 days, Justice spokesman John Wilson said.

It will not take the Justice Department 60 days to file its jurisdictional statement with the Supreme Court, however, Wilson said. The statement will outline why the Justice Department believes the high court should hear the case and why it believes Judge Kerr's Nov. 4 ruling is incorrect.

Congressmen from the oil-producing states of Texas, Oklahoma and Louisiana last week sent President Reagan a letter asking him not to appeal the tax ruling and "to fulfill a promise you made in 1980 to abolish the burdensome and unjust tax."

An aide to Rep. Kent Hance, D-Texas, whose office initiated the letter, said the congressmen had received no response from the White House prior to learning of Thursday's decision to appeal.

"We actually thought the president would not appeal it because he said while campaigning in 1980 he was against that kind of tax," said Hance's aide.

Hance, in Odessa Thursday to speak at a Chamber of Commerce dinner, said he was "extremely disappointed" in the Reagan administration.

"The president said he was against the so-called Windfall Profits Tax," Hance said. "I'm extremely disappointed that he decided to appeal. He's going to have a tough time explaining this one to the people of Texas.

"I guess we can quit calling it the Carter Windfall Profits Tax and begin calling it the Reagan Windfall Profits Tax," Hance added. "He (Reagan) had an excellent chance to kill one of the most unfair and unjust taxes ever passed by Congress, but he didn't.

"I just hope the Supreme Court upholds Judge Kerr's decision and keeps the unconstitutional label on the tax," Hance continued. "Killing this tax is an important step toward establishing a sensible energy policy in this county. Abolishing the Windfall Profits Tax would encourage domestic energy production and help us achieve our national goal of energy independence."

"The president said he was against the so-called Windfall Profits Tax. I'm extremely disappointed that he decided to appeal. He's going to have a tough time explaining this one to the people of Texas."

— Kent Hance

Solicitor General Rex E. Lee will probably ask the Supreme Court to hear and decide the case this term, even though the court's calendar is packed, Wilson said.

If upheld, Kerr's decision could make the government stop collecting the tax and refund money collected since the tax was implemented in March 1980. The tax is expected to raise more than $225 billion by 1990.

Midland oilmen said they are particularly disappointed that President Reagan did not intervene in the matter.

"We're disappointed, because we had assumed that since the Administration was opposed to it (the tax), it would not file an appeal," said Ed Thompson, executive director of the Permian Basin Petroleum Association. "We're disappointed they would drag this thing out further."

Another apartment burns

By LANA CUNNINGHAM

One apartment resident discovered how not to cook a ham early today when he awoke to flames in his apartment at Willow Bend, 2438 Whitmire No. 16-C, about 5:30 a.m.

The apartment of James Kelly Webb, 25, was gutted in the pre-dawn blaze that also damaged to some extent other units in that building. No one was injured; Webb had knocked on doors to get other tenants out.

This marks the third apartment blaze in two months within a half-mile area. The first was at Warwick Apartments at Whitmire and Garfield streets on Sept. 24 when a light airplane crashed into a building and the resulting fire gutted the structure. The second occurred Oct. 19 at Polo Park Apartments about a half-mile east on Loop 250 when three buildings were burned to the ground.

"It was a kitchen fire," Webb said as he stood in the doorway of an apartment a few feet from his burning unit. "I was boiling ham on the stove. I guess some water popped out and started the fire."

Responding to the call were three large pumpers, an aerial truck, a battalion chief's car and a rescue vehicle, said Capt. Robert White.

By the time the Fire Department arrived, flames were shooting out the window into the still night air. But they were under control within an hour and the Fire Department was rolling up its hoses.

Tony Sam, a resident in the unit on the east side of Webb's apartment, said Webb had knocked on his door and awakened him. "Right after he

'Magnet school' program approved by Big Spring board

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

BIG SPRING — During a special meeting of the Big Spring Independent School District board of trustees, and following a desegregation suit which spanned about 25 years, a consent decree allowing students to participate in a new magnet school program solely on a voluntary basis was approved.

Following a public hearing Thursday night, attended by about 30 teachers and parents, trustees met in executive session before reopening the meeting and unanimously approving the decree.

The proposal was a revision of one rejected by trustees July 9 after board members listened to a two-evening public hearing which attracted about 150 rural citizens who voiced opposition to busing their children to Bauer Elementary School, the focus of the present and previous consent decrees.

In the consent decree refused last summer, the U.S. Justice Department's proposal mandated that the 150 students from the northern rural area of the school district attend Bauer instead of Washington Elementary School. The seven buses that carry these rural students have passed within six to eight blocks of Bauer on the way to Washington since before 1977.

UNDER THE accepted plan, the proposal "has been totally eliminated," Guilford Jones III, BSISD attorney, explained, adding that rural students presently attending Washington will remain there.

"But you know the government is not going to give up something and not get something back in return," Jones continued explaining during the public hearing. The trade, he said, consists of turning Bauer into a magnet school, which offers curriculum that will enhance education for any student district-wide who voluntarily wishes to attend classes, and to implement an extended day program which will begin after school at 3:30 and end at 5:30 p.m.

While the magnet school curriculum will include "fundamental-type" courses, such as mathematics, science or language arts, the extended day program could include subjects such as fine arts, music, foreign language, science or computers, Jones said. Curriculum would be determined by public imput, he added, and would be implemented in time for fall 1983 classes.

According to Lynn Hise, BSISD superintendent, the approach to the choosing of curriculum will be instigated by a steering committee that will conduct public hearings at each school campus in the district to receive community imput. The steering committee would be in charge of putting together all information, taking care of duplicate suggestions from different schools, and coming up with a plan to get Bauer's new role as a magnet school and the extended dav program rolling.

WHILE THE PROGRAM will lead to "the enhancement of equality of education and the equality of educational opportunities for every school in the district," Jones said students at Bauer will get first choice in classes at the magnet school.

Public hearings to allow for input relating to curriculum will continue through March 15, 1983, the date a report outlining the program must be given to the attorneys handling the case for the U.S. Justice Department, he said. A final public hearing will be

Testimony continues at THFC hearing

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — A planned addition at Midland Memorial Hospital would produce a "positive cash flow" by the end of the first year, according to projections made by the hospital's finance director who testified Thursday at the Texas Health Facilities Commission.

The health commission is hearing proposals from Midland Memorial to build a 77-bed addition, and from Doctors Hospital of the Permian Basin, Inc. to build a new 110-bed facility which would replace Parkview Hospital.

Profits at the end of the 12th month would total $27,000, said Dale Miller, vice president of finance at MMH, assuming construction begins Oct. 1, 1983, and the project is completed Sept. 30, 1985.

The projected cash flows are based on 74,460 "patient days" during the first year of operation, if the total number of licensed beds have a 75 percent occupancy rate, Miller testified. The addition would increase the licensed bed capacity of the hospital from 195 to 272 beds.

In other testimony Thursday, Al Kelm, vice president of patient care services at MMH, said if Doctors Hospital is approved, "it would be a challenge for both of us (to recruit nurses)."

Though MMH presently has some openings for registered nurses, the hospital has been very successful with recruitment this year, filling 54 position in four months, according to Kelm. Still, a competing 110-bed hospital in Midland would "make it more difficult" to hire nurses, he said.

Nurses experienced in such specialty areas as nursery care and post-partum care are hard to find, Kelm said, adding recruiting any nurse is "always difficult at best."

Testimony was to continue today at the THFC, with MMH scheduled to wrap up its case. Attorneys for Doctors Hospital are expected to call some Midland Memorial witnesses back for further questioning at a later date.

AP Laserphoto Map

While the southern states should remain mild through Saturday, most areas of the nation will be colder, according to the National Weather Service. Rain is forecast from northern Florida and Georgia to the Great Lakes with scattered snow flurries predicted for the Rockies.

Warm weekend weather forecast

Pleasant weather and sunny skies will prevail through Saturday as Midlanders prepare for a long-awaited weekend of warm temperatures.

According to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport, the mercury will drop into the middle 40s tonight and is expected to climb once again into the upper 70s Saturday.

Warm, south to southwesterly winds will blow at 5-15 mph tonight, increasing to 10-20 mph Saturday.

While the temperatures actually may be reminiscent of late spring, record highs for this time of the year are more common in July. Thursday's high of 73 was 11 degrees cooler than the record high of 84, set for that date last year. The overnight low of 47 was 27 degrees warmer than 1980's frigid low of 20.

Moving is always a hassle, but when it is into a new and beautifully big library at Midland High School it must have been worth it, judging by the assistance. Sophomore Ashton Allen stacked up more than his share as students in physical education classes, volunteers and teachers formed steady lines of human moving vans between the old library, which will be converted into additional administrative offices and classrooms, and the new structure, built between two wings of the school in what used to be a courtyard.

Although reports will continue to be submitted to the U.S. Justice Department throughout the first few years, after three years the district can ask the court to give a final decree if the school district is considered to be united, Jones added.

"The main thing I want to emphasize is that we can do some really special educational things on Bauer's campus," Jones said. "We can put these dollars into enhanced education.

"The other big point in my mind is the whole thing is voluntary. The district is not forcing anything on anyone."

BEFORE THE proposal went to a vote, one teacher from Bauer raised a question concerning funding for the program. Expenses for the district will increase due to the decree stating that any student in the district who chooses to attend the magnet school or the extended school program will receive busing, as well as additional salaries which will be needed for teachers who conduct the extended program and additional funds needed for materials for the new curriculum at the magnet school. According to Hise, the funds will be generated through taxpayers' money.

The actual amount the program will cost taxpayers will depend on the curriculum selected and the teachers for the extended program, Hise pointed out. Teachers who wish to work in the extended program "certainly will receive extra pay," he said, while some programs may mandate a need for new teachers to be brought in with certain specialties.

Other teachers asked board members if they honestly expected any program to bring a sudden rush of students to Bauer from throughout the district.

"I think if we don't get a response initially from other parts of the school population, that we'll want to make (the program) so good that (the other students) will want to attend," Hise said. Meanwhile, he added, the students at Bauer that are participating in the programs will be benefiting during that time.

Trustees for the Big Spring Independent School District listen to objections and questions from the public before approving a consent decree issued by the U.S. Department of Justice during a special meeting Thursday night. The decree, unlike one rejected last summer, will satisfy a 25-year long desegregation issue by allowing BSISD students to participate in a magnet school on a voluntary basis.

ACCORDING TO Jones, the new decree is more "open-ended" than the one issued last spring. Since no specific numbers of enrolled students are required, the federal government is "trusting our good faith to put together the best program possible to attract all the different students. I don't expect the first time this is done that we'll be fighting them off at the door. It takes time for this type of program. But the whole concept of the magnet school is you do things there that will attract students from other residential areas."

"(The U.S. Justice Department) has always been willing to accept the concept of a magnet school over the years, but it's always been with mandatory busing," Hise pointed out. "This is the first time they've agreed to it without busing attached to it."

Major points in the approved decree which were similar to those in the one rejected this summer include the voluntary district-wide gifted and talented program for fourth and fifth grades will still be moved from Runnels to Bauer; transfer of Bauer students to other schools in the district, as well as other students to Bauer, still will be allowed on a voluntary basis; good efforts for fair recruitment of staff will be continued; and reports and copies relating to the decree will remain available for interested persons.

Another apartment building burns

knocked, smoke was filling my bedroom. I got everything out. I don't think my apartment burned; I think it's just smoke damaged. The guy said he was cooking a ham. Apparently, it got away from him," Sam said.

Watching the firemen in the chilly air, Sam and a friend, Ron Divine of Apt. 24-H, said they had arranged to move into an apartment in another complex next week. "There's been flames all over this place," said Divine, saying only a few of the surrounding complexes had been exempted from flames. He recalled small fires at El Paisano and Haystack Apartments during the summer.

A young woman, visibly shaken by the incident in the early stages of the fire, said she had heard banging on the apartment upstairs and she thought it was a fight between two people. "I heard a 'Why me?' and I called the 911 number to report a disturbance. The man who answered said, 'We know. It's a fire,' and hung up."

She was staying in an apartment in that building and after running outside she saw flames coming out the door of Apt. 16-C.

After knocking on residents' doors to get them out of the apartments, Webb had called his mother, Mrs. James Webb of 1417 E. Oak Ave.

"I knew he was all right," she said of the phone call. "But it just seemed like I couldn't drive fast enough to get here.

"Are you sure you didn't get any smoke?" she said, turning to her son.

Nodding that he wasn't hurt, Webb said he was embarrassed by the incident.

Charles and Ethelyn Rhodes live in an apartment directly across from Webb's, and some tenants from Building 16, including Webb and his mother, were watching the action from there.

Rhodes said someone had knocked on the door. When he opened the door, he heard a crackling sound and knew it was fire.

"I moved my car and truck to give room for the fire trucks to get in," Rhodes said.

"He did a good job of rousing people," said Mrs. Rhodes of Webb.

Among those he got out safely were Ann Williams and her 5-week-old daughter.

"He knocked on my door and kept calling, and finally he said 'Fire,' " she related.

Luckily, said Rhodes, there was hardly a breeze and that kept the fire from spreading to other buildings, such as his. After moving his vehicles, Rhodes said his next thought was to start moving out furniture if the flames started moving his way.

The Rhodes have lived in their apartment since March 1. Like Sam and Divine, Rhodes has been seeking another place to live since the fire at the Warwick Apartments.

The rash of recent fires in the half-mile area prompted one person to remark, "Looks like Suicide Alley to me."

Frightening sounds rouse Willow Bend residents

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

There's nothing like ending the week with a rude awakening, and that's how several residents of Willow Bend Apartments, 2438 Whitmire Boulevard, started their Friday.

The pounding on the door seemed to come out of nowhere in their dreams. But then came the sound of sirens. And once they stumbled to the front door to find out the problem, they could see the flames shooting out of Apt. 16-C while fire trucks and police cars were lined up in front of several buildings.

Then they felt the pounding heart, weak knees, shaking hands as they wondered how far the flames would go this time. There was the universal thought, "Will it spread to my apartment and what do I do?"

It was the third apartment complex fire in two months within a half-mile area. The first broke out Sept. 24 at Warwick Apartments, a complex within spitting distance of Willow Bend. Several residents of Willow Bend were at home that day and heard the light airplane overhead as it sputtered and then crashed into the building at Whitmire and Garfield streets. The plane had taken off from Midland Air Park across the street and west of the complexes, as thousands before it have done.

The second apartment blaze broke out on the windy evening of Oct. 19 and destroyed three buildings at Polo Park Apartments, about a half-mile west of Willow Bend on Loop 250. That night, residents of Willow Bend stood outside and watched the flames. Even then, some residents mused about the closeness of the fire and whether they should move elsewhere.

And more apartment complexes are filling up land along Loop 250. White noted that "every time they build one, it adds to the odds."

Fire extinguishers located on the outside of each building don't really help in a fire of the type that broke out in 16-C. "A fire extinguisher is just a first-aid type of deal. It's a quick shot on a very small fire. If it doesn't work, chunk it and call us. From the magnitude of the fire when we got here, a fire extinguisher wouldn't have worked. The fire was already coming out the windows."

White noted that the attics at Willow Bend are completely open, meaning there are no separations between the apartments. With a fire in the second story apartment, as was the case in this fire, it hops into the attic and spreads rapidly into all other top floor apartments.

"We went in and knocked out a roof in a foyer to get into the attic," said White.

What might reduce the chance of fires spreading throughout buildings in apartment complexes is fire walls, according to the fireman. "They need a fire wall between two upper and two lower apartments. That way, it could spread to only the four units rather than all eight. It would help us control the fire better."

White was optimistic the rash of apartment fires might be over. "There's an old story that they come in threes. This is the third."

As firemen wound hoses back on the trucks after an hour on the scene, the night sky was starting to give way to daybreak as the first twinges of pink began edging over the horizon.

MHS library makes move to light, airy new facility

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

Another change in the appearance of Midland High School was finalized Thursday as the old library was stripped of its identity by students and volunteers who collected stacks of books and equipment and carted them outside into the courtyard.

Actually, it just used to be a courtyard.

Situated between two wings of the building, Midland High School's new library stretches up to the top of the second floor of the school. Classes on both floors look down into the bright, newly constructed library through windows, which along with the original light brown bricks of the school are the only reminders of what once served as an outdoor respite from stuffy halls.

However, with the skylights in the tall ceilings and the bright, kelly green carpet underneath, the new library is spacious and open, similar to the courtyard it once was.

Thursday, students from physical education classes, teachers and volunteers lined up and down the hall between the old and the new libraries, some with stacks of a dozen books tightly gripped against their chests, while others casually swung a couple of books in their hands as they chatted while waiting to take a turn shelving the marked books in their designated places.

Their job was to place all the books, material and equipment from the old facility, into the new one, which is approximately 40 percent larger, according to Dr. James H. Mailey, consultant for school planning and construction.

"I have no idea how long it will take," Jack Stone, MHS principal, said with a grin while watching the group of students jam in a doorway. Although the first group of physical education students had filed smoothly in and out with piles of books in their arms, the second group clogged up at the entrance of the library and down the hall. Stone watched them with a laugh and explained that since there were only two physical education classes in the first period, having four or five in the second period might be the cause of the unorganized lines.

The $691,220 library will replace the outdated one, which will be renovated in order to provide more administrative offices, classrooms and two large conference rooms which also can be used as classrooms, according to Mailey. Furniture and equipment for the new library will cost about $116,187, he added.

No contract has been awarded for the renovation of the old library, although $66,000 was budgeted from the April 1982 school bond election, Mailey confirmed.

Bush answers sharp criticism

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — Vice President George Bush today answered sharp African criticism of American policy by reiterating that South-West Africa can become independent only when Cuban troops are withdrawn from neighboring Angola.

"The Namibian problem is like a knot," Bush told a luncheon given after his arrival from Zambia. "To untie it, one must work from both ends at once." South-West Africa is also called Namibia.

"We shall therefore labor on, with Kenya and others, to remove all foreign troops from the region, so that Namibia might at last be free," Bush said at the lunch, hosted by Kenyan Vice President Mwai Kibaki.

Black African countries, including Kenya, have urged that the Cuban troop question and Namibian independence be treated as separate issues. The Reagan administration has been criticized in the region for linking the two matters. The link is demanded by South Africa, which administers the mineral-rich territory.

Guerrillas fighting for control of South-West Africa use bases in southern Angola as a springboard for their raids into the territory. Marxist Angola contends the Cuban soldiers are there to help defend the country from South African incursions to hit at the guerrillas.

Reagan's decision on MX expected

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan is likely to unveil on Monday a long-awaited basing plan for the MX missile that calls for bunching the huge weapons closely together in super-hardened silos to protect them against a Soviet strike.

The announcement is expected to be made in advance of Reagan's address to the nation, at 8 p.m. EST Monday, on arms control and defense issues.

The president is expected to say the MX is necessary because of a massive Soviet arms buildup over two decades.

Guards in shooting incident exonerated by jury

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

Two U.S. Sirco security guards involved in a shooting incident with city police last week were exonerated by a grand jury this week and have returned to work, Sirco officials said at a news conference Thursday.

The guards, 26-year-old Raymond Glenn Ford of Rt. 3, Midland, and 19-year-old James Edward Alexander of Odessa, were under paid suspension after being charged with aggravated assault for allegedly firing a shotgun at detectives Jeff Haile and Bob Miller about 12:45 a.m. Nov. 10.

The plainclothes officers were in an unmarked car with out-of-state license plates and were patroling a dimly lighted construction site near the Greentree Country Club when the uniformed guards, on routine patrol for private clients, tried to block their path with a company pickup truck.

As the officers swung off the road to pass the truck, a shotgun blast split the night air. The guards were quickly subdued and the officers, both of whom are considered among the best shots in the police department, later quoted one of the guards as saying: "It was a dumb, stupid mistake."

A grand jury Wednesday, however, no-billed the guards after learning the shotgun discharged accidentally, according to Sirco President Richard L. Fought of Houston.

Fought, a 29-year-old former sheriff's deputy, said during Thursday's news conference that the guards didn't realize Haile and Miller were police officers and that Ford, the guard who fired the shot, had done so accidentally as he emerged from the pickup with a 12-gauge shotgun.

"He had it at port arms and was chambering a round when the gun discharged accidentally," said Fought. "We're very pleased that local citizens chose not to indict our employees and we're very happy that no one got hurt."

Asked why the guard called the shooting a "dumb, stupid mistake" if it had been a mere accident, Fought said: "I understand he was referring to the whole situation.

"We don't stop every vehicle, only suspicious ones. Our emphasis is high visibility deterrence. We regret that this incident occurred. It's not representative of our policy of cooperating with the local law enforcement community."

Fought said his four-year-old firm employs about 300 persons in a three-state area and does a lot of work for government installations such as federal office buildings and courthouses.

The company is licensed in Texas and complies with state guidelines regarding law enforcement procedures, the use of firearms and other private security rules and regulations, according to Fought, who said employees are required to take a 30-hour, company-provided training program within 90 days of their going to work for the firm.

Alexander was hired last summer and completed the school Oct. 17. Ford, who had been employed about a month, had not started the training program at the time of last week's shooting, said Fought, adding that most of his employees carry shotguns and rifles, and not handguns.

A handbook on company policy says: "The use of deadly force is severely restricted, (is generally) limited to cases of self-defense (and is) justifiable only as a matter of last resort."

Fought said in light of last week's incident, employees will be required to review company policy on deadly force — with special emphasis on familiarizing themselves with their weapons.

Some Republican leaders pushing jobs program

WASHINGTON (AP) — Republican leaders in Congress are telling President Reagan they will push for a jobs program in the post-election session, but warning they see little hope for moving up the income tax cut to January.

After meeting with Reagan at the White House on Thursday, Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker and House Republican Leader Robert Michel said a jobs program is one of the priorities for the lame-duck session starting Nov. 29.

The congressional leaders, conferring with Reagan for the first time since the Nov. 2 election, said they also told the president he did not have enough support to push up the date of the tax cut.

"We don't have the votes," Michel said he informed Reagan.

Deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes said later the president wanted to discuss the tax cut issue further with his economic advisers.

In addition, the GOP leaders predicted it would be difficult to make further cuts in non-defense spending, despite Reagan's assertion in New Orleans on Tuesday that that is precisely where he intended to cut.

"I think we've cut just about as much as we can cut," Baker said. "We've wrung a lot out of the non-defense side. Now we are going to have to take a look at the defense side."

The main purpose of the three-week congressional session is to pass appropriations bills for fiscal year 1983, which began Oct. 1. The government has been operating under emergency spending bills.

But on the jobs issue, Baker said he believed Reagan would propose that Congress pass a program to repair highways and bridges financed by a 5-cents-a-gallon increase in gasoline taxes.

Transportation Secretary Drew Lewis has said that proposal would create about 320,000 jobs. Reagan prefers not to call it a jobs program, since he opposed the public works approach to the unemployment dilemma during the campaign.

Baker, who is from Tennessee, left open the possibility that he may support a more extensive jobs program, though he did not give any details.

"What I'm saying is I'm going to talk to the speaker (Thomas O'Neill) and we're going to gin up a jobs bill," Baker said. O'Neill, D-Mass., is the House speaker.

With unemployment at 10.4 percent, Michel said, "The key element is jobs and putting people back to work. The question is, how do you best do that?" Unemployment was a major issue in the November elections in which the GOP lost 26 House seats.

Reagan is considering asking Congress to push up the date of the tax cut — the third installment of his 25-percent income tax reduction over three years — as a way to stimulate the economy.

Under Reagan's proposal, the 5 percent cut in tax rates due Jan. 1, 1984, and the second 10 percent reduction in the amount of tax withheld from worker paychecks, due next July 1, would instead take effect Jan. 1, 1983. The net effect would be a 15 percent cut in tax rates in 1983, rather than 10 percent, and the full reduction would be reflected in paychecks at the start of the year.

Advancing the income tax would increase the deficit by nearly $15 billion. The fiscal 1983 deficit is already projected at $170 billion.

Neither Baker nor Michel were enthusiastic about the idea, which would mean an extra $93 in 1983 for a typical family of four with an income of $20,000.

Michel said if the end result were higher interest rates, "Then I would have some serious reservations about it." A larger deficit can leader to higher interest rates as the government borrows money.

Appeal to be filed on windfall ruling son said he was surprised the oil industry didn't hear from the president or from Vice President George Bush, a former Texas oilman. "But, maybe because of the law, they didn't have a choice and couldn't intervene.

"We're not out of it yet though. The Supreme Court could still swing with us."

If the high court does uphold Wyoming Judge Ewing T. Kerr's opinion, the federal government could be liable for $40 to $50 billion in tax refunds, according to current estimates, said John H. Tompkins, of Peat Marwick Mitchell & Company.

Tompkins said perhaps the Supreme Court could decide to make the WPT constitutional by severing the exemption which Alaskan crude oil now enjoys, and placing a token tax on that oil as soon as possible, so as not to interrupt production in that state. Kerr based his decision on the fact the current WPT exempts Alaskan oil, flying in the face of laws which say federal taxes should be applied uniformly throughout the states.

The Windfall Profits Tax is called an excise tax by the oil industry, and its expense is generally passed on to consumers one way or another. Money paid for the tax is money that could have been spent to find more oil and gas reserves, said Charlie Rowton, public affairs representative for Exxon in Midland.

In 1980, the year the tax was passed, Exxon paid $592 million for the tax. In 1981, the first full year the tax was assessed, that figure jumped to $2.118 billion, Rowton said.

"It's ultimately a tax on what consumers pay."

Independent Fred M. Newman agreed with Rowton, saying when Congress taxes, it really is taxing the consumer. "Congress thinks it's taxing Big Oil, but Big Oil is nothing more than common working people who own stock in oil companies."

Newman said he didn't think the federal government could afford to do away with the Windfall Profits Tax because of the huge budget deficit it has built up. If the WPT is abolished, some other energy tax, maybe on natural gas, would no doubt be imposed, he said.

Language affects interview

WASHINGTON (AP) — Job applicants who speak "black English" may be getting shorter interviews, fewer job offers and lower pay than applicants who speak standard English, two researchers say.

Sandra L. Terrell and Francis Terrell, a husband and wife team on the faculty of North Texas State University at Denton, evaluated the reactions of 100 personnel managers to six applicants for secretarial work.

Three of the job seekers spoke standard English and three spoke so-called black English.

The researchers found that applicants speaking standard English were granted longer interviews. They were also offered 17 jobs, compared to eight for those who spoke black English.

And, there was a difference of almost 35 percent in the pay offered the two types of job applicants. The job hunters who spoke black English were offered an average of $3.52 an hour. Those who spoke standard English were hired at an average of $5.34 an hour.

The researchers concluded that "those who advocate training and encouraging blacks to speak black English may be running the risk of reducing that person's marketability.

They added: "For those who prefer to encourage blacks to speak black English, a more appropriate strategy might be to teach the child both black English and standard English."

The researchers defined black English as a social dialect spoken by many black Americans whose origins are in the languages of West Africa.

It is characterized by such grammatical features as the absence of the past tense form on verbs; absence of the "is" and "are" forms of the verb "to be"; use of double negatives; and the failure to use the possessive "s" ending on words.

There has been controversy over what role, if any, black English should have in the education system. Its adherents say black English is a cultural form which should be respected and preserved.

But opponents argue that giving recognition to black English by permitting its use in schools, teaching it in schools or encouraging students who speak it at home to continue doing so will handicap students' ability to compete.

In the Terrell study, the job seekers were black women between the ages of 20 to 22. The personnel managers were from large businesses which advertised secretarial job openings in local newspapers.

Prostitutes hold protest

LONDON (AP) — Fifteen women wearing black masks occupied a London church earlier this week to protest alleged police harassment of prostitutes.

The women, who said they hoped to meet local government officials, huddled in sleeping bags overnight in the drafty nave of the Church of the Holy Cross.

The Anglican parish church is in the King's Cross area, a notorious red-light district of northern London.

The women claimed police had been arresting them when they were not working, bullying them into guilty pleas in court and harassing their families.

"I have had 13 convictions, but not once have the police seen me soliciting anybody," said one 19-year-old. "We just want to be treated like human beings."

The parish priest, the Rev. Trevor Richardson, noted there was anci.nt precedent for usir churches for public mee.ings and protests. "I am delighted that people of this area feel they can use their parish church to do this," he said.

"Too much attention is directed to these girls and not to the evils of society which causes them to be here in the first place," the priest added.

Tokens take toll

The brass-colored Connecticut tokens are "darn near identical (to New York subway tokens) except for their value," said John Simpson, president of New York City's Metropolitan Transit Authority.

Both tokens are a little bigger around than a nickel and about as thick as a penny.

Their diameters differ by 0.005 inches, said David Kilmartin, vice president of production for the Roger Williams Mint in Attleboro, Mass., maker of both tokens.

Simpson said he didn't know if it is possible to adjust turnstiles so they could detect the difference.

"So far, the use has been minimal," Simpson said. If the problem becomes worse, he said, the New York transit authority could change back to older tokens that had a Y-shaped cutout in the middle.

'It's New York's problem," said William Keish Jr., director of communications for the Connecticut Department of Transportation.

Connecticut officials will try to help New York solve the problem, however, and have begun limiting sales to one 40-token roll per motorist to reduce the number in circulation, Keish said earlier this week.

New York's turnstiles forgive small variations in size, Keish said.

Other disks fitting the turnstiles include certain foreign coins of small value, hardware washers and slugs that are byproducts of machine-shop stampings. Even a Soviet 5-kopeck piece has been found among the thousands of bogus tokens used by riders.

New York authorities reported the problem to Connecticut on Nov. 9. They had gone on sale Oct. 18, but were not to be used in Connecticut until Nov. 15.

Jeanne Edelson, speaking for the transit authority, declined to say how many of the Connecticut tokens have turned up here. She would not give details because use of illegal slugs or tokens is a police matter.

Mayor Edward I. Koch threatened to jail anyone caught using the Connecticut tokens in subway turnstiles.

Edward Archibald, an administrator in the Connecticut Transportation Department, said he had never discussed the token plan with the city transit authority. He said he had relied on a 1980 study of token size by the Garden State Parkways Authority of New Jersey.

Keish said his state would look into ways to help New York solve the problem. He suggested one measure could be to coat the highway tokens so they could only be accepted at Connecticut toll stations.

Jobless rate hits high in Belgium

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — Belgium's unemployment rate reached a new post-war record of 11.3 percent of the working population on Nov.15, the Labor Office reported earlier this week.

The total number of registered unemployed workers was 472,170, up 1.4 percent in two weeks. The jump in a year was 59,238 or 14.3 percent.

The previous 11.2 percent record was set only a month ago.

The Labor Office said there had been a drop of employment is all sectors, but particularly in services, construction and trade.

Drug-manufacturing ring broken, federal agents say

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Federal agents say they have broken a ring that was manufacturing and distributing millions of dollars worth of methamphetamines, also known as "speed," in Texas, Louisiana and New Mexico.

U.S. Attorney Edward Prado and Chuck Carter, special agent in charge of the Drug Enforcement Administration's San Antonio office, announced that 20 people were accused in sealed indictments and were being rounded up late Thursday.

Carter said the drug traffickers called the organization DOPE and Company or "DOPEC," an anagram for Davis, Oberski, Pearson, Epperson and Co. — signifying, he said, the names of the organization's principal members.

Carter said Charles G. Davis, Michael N. Oberski and Norman Richard Epperson were among the defendants arrested Thursday. Names of the other defendants would be withheld until all the arrests were made, he said.

Carter said DOPEC operated since 1978 in Texas, New Mexico and Louisiana and "was formed solely for the purpose of trafficking in the lucrative methamphetamine business.

"It was a close-knit and highly skilled criminal organization consisting of about 50 members throughout the three-state area," Carter said. "It was a gigantic operation. It did $10 million last year."

Prado said a federal grand jury returned a 33-count indictment against the 20 defendants on Tuesday, but arrests did not begin until Thursday.

Carter said the investigation, which involved undercover activity and "legwork" by DEA agents, resulted in the seizing of illegal South Central Texas drug labs at Wimberley, San Marcos, New Braunfels and Fredericksburg.

The organization formerly ran labs in Baton Rouge, La., and Albuquerque, N.M., he said.

The ring moved throughout Texas teaching people how to manufacture the drugs in laboratories, he said.

Carter said two of the defendants, Davis and Oberski, were charged with continuing criminal ennterprise, which carries a maximum sentence of life in prison without parole. Davis was arrested Thursday in Amarillo and Oberski was taken into custody at Wimberley, he said.

Prado said it was the first continuing criminal enterprise indictment returned in the Western District of Texas since imprisoned narcotics trafficker Jamiel "Jimmy" Chagra was indicted on that charge on May 22, 1978.

Chagra will be tried later on charges that he hired convicted hitman Charles V. Harrelson to kill U.S. District Judge John H. Wood Jr. on May 29, 1979. Prosecutors contend Chagra feared Wood would invoke the maximum penalty if he was convicted.

Harrelson's attorney continues questioning FBI agents

Attorney Tom Sharpe Jr. kept questioning an FBI agent Thursday until he wound up with an answer helpful to the prosecution.

Today, Sharpe planned to call Houston FBI agent Dennis Ploeger to question him about his role in electronic eavesdropping on convicted hitman Charles V. Harrelson at the Harris County Jail.

He had said Harrelson would take the stand in his own defense this week, but the testimony has been shoved back each day.

The government alleges Harrelson shot Wood in the back in San Antonio on May 29, 1979, for a $250,000 fee. Sharpe contends Harrelson was in Dallas at the time.

Sharpe earlier this week called three witnesses who told jurors they saw Harrelson in Dallas as early as 9:30 a.m. the day of the slaying, and all of them said they saw him there before 11:30 a.m. Wood was shot about 8:30 a.m.

The only evidence the government presented on the matter during 23 days of testimony from 83 witnesses was a statement by El Paso attorney Joseph Chagra, who has pleaded guilty to murder conspiracy in the judge's slaying. Chagra told jurors that Harrelson said he shot Wood, then drove out of San Antonio.

Because it is 272 miles to Dallas, Sharpe has sought to demonstrate it would be impossible for Harrelson to have driven there in time to establish an alibi that morning.

Sharpe also has spent considerable time questioning FBI agents in an effort to show the FBI's investigation could not turn up any record or witness to place Harrelson on a commercial or private flight to Dallas that morning.

Along those lines, Sharpe spent hours Thursday attempting to get into evidence an Oct. 10, 1980, sworn statement from FBI agent Gary Hart which said, "It is possible he (Harrelson) was in Dallas as early as 10 a.m. to 10:30 a.m. on May 29, 1979."

U.S. District Judge William S. Sessions has thwarted such questions from Sharpe, saying investigators are required to testify only about their personal knowledge of the facts — and not what they are told by others.

Turned away in his attempt to introduce Hart's statement, Sharpe asked the agent's opinion on how long it would take a person to fly to Dallas.

"I was of the belief that an individual could be in San Antonio at 8:40 and then turn around and be at Dallas Love Field at 9:40," Hart testified.

Employer shows his gratitude

ST. CLOUD, Minn. (AP) — A retired department store owner wanted "a nice round number" to thank the employees who helped build his company. He came up with two — 100 checks of $1,000 each.

"What good is money if you don't spread it around and give it to people who have done something good for you?" said 78-year-old G.R. Herberger, who sent out the $100,000 to current and former employees this week.

Herberger, who now lives in Paradise Valley, Ariz., founded the St. Cloud-based clothing store bearing his name in 1927 and guided its growth until he sold it to several company executives in 1972.

The Herberger's chain grew to include stores in several cities in Minnesota and in North Dakota, South Dakota and Wisconsin.

Herberger said he thought about thanking his former workers for some time, but said the timing of the checks, mailed Monday and Tuesday, was not significant.

"I've been thinking about it for quite some time and I didn't want to make it a Christmas deal or a Thanksgiving gift or anything like that. I have been awfully close to the people in my organization since its inception," he said Thursday.

Herberger said he chose 100 as the goal for his thank-you list because "I wanted a nice, round number."

He picked the recipients himself from lists of long-time non-management employees provided by store officials.

"When I review my own personal accomplishments, growth and success over the years, I fully realize the tremendous amount of credit has to be given to people such as yourself," Herberger told one recipient in a letter accompanying the check.

Robert Sullivan, the current president of Herberger's, said more than half the recipients were retired. Although there were no specific criteria, he said none of the employees had worked for the company less than 15 years and some had 40 years of service. Financial status was not a factor, but executives and managers were not included.

"It was his gift, not a corporate gift," Sullivan said.

One recipient worked with Herberger when he founded the store in 1927 and retired about 40 years ago, Herberger recalled. Like many other employees, the woman helped him through tough times, Herberger said.

"If somebody gave you a lift way back, then it's something you should never forget," he said. "I'm trying to show how grateful I am to all of them for what they have done."

Researchers believe fused cells could be useful to treat cancer, cure diseases

By STEVE BREWER

ALBUQUERQUE (AP) — Researchers are working with disease-fighting agents too tiny to be seen with a microscope to develop substances that one day may provide a simpler treatment for cancer.

The substances, called monoclonal antibodies, are one of the hottest topics in medical research and are being studied by scientists around the globe.

"What we're seeing here is many, many years of work in different fields finally coming to fruition," researcher Teresa Coons said Friday. "If we focus especially on the medical aspects, we're looking at improved diagnostics, improved treatments and, maybe most importantly in this day and age, less cost."

The possibilities of the laboratory-produced antibodies appear endless to the researchers, who foresee the tiny agents curing diseases and diagnosing and treating tumors.

"It's going to have an impact on every field of medical diagnosis and treatment," predicted Ms. Coons.

Ms. Coons is an immunologist who is at the forefront of the antibody research. Her lab, Lovelace Medical Foundation here, recently sold the rights to a new secret method of producing them to an Albuquerque medical firm for $5 million.

Antibodies are the natural disease-fighting agents in the human body.

Monoclonal antibodies are produced by fusing a human cell capable of making antibodies to a tumor cell through a chemical process. Because tumor cells will continue to reproduce interminably, the fusion gives the original cell "immortality," Ms. Coons said.

The process itself is not new; it was discovered in 1975 by a group of English researchers. But the field has progressed so rapidly since then that Ms. Coons says the original discovery "is beginning to be ancient history."

Now, researchers say the antibodies can be isolated and injected into people who need them to fight disease. And, because antibodies' genetic programming allow them to target only certain kinds of problems, they can be used to treat specific problems without the side effects of chemicals or radiation.

The initial research was conducted on mice cells. A substance called polyethylene glycol, which Ms. Coons said is used in antifreeze, is put on the cells, causing the cell membranes to become sticky.

The two cells then are joined and the membranes form a single cell. Eventually, through a natural process, the cell nuclei attach and become one.

The result is a single, antibody-producing cell that reproduces into an never-ending cell line.

The cell is "cloned in such a way that every daughter cell has the same genetic material," Ms. Coons, 29, said. "They all produce exactly the same antibody."

But there were two problems with the technique. First, the chemical used to fuse the cells destroyed most of them.

'Spare parts' offered

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Chuck Hathaway walks into the "body shop" with a bag of spare arms.

He opens the bag and dumps the arms in a heap on the floor.

"Bowling arm," he says. "This piece on the end fits into the hole of a bowling ball."

Off comes the swimming arm. On goes the heavy-duty labor arm.

Off comes the heavy-duty labor arm. On go other arms.

While Hathaway is modeling a whole wardrobe of special-purpose artificial arms, other amputees arrive at the body shop, otherwise known as the office and workroom of Tucson prosthetist Joseph Leal.

They, too, take off their artificial arms and legs and begin tinkering with parts.

Before long, the room is littered with imitation human anatomy. And conversation involves such things as a discussion of the hydraulic running knee joint, a critique of the five-way tilt foot with swivel pivot and a good-natured argument as to whether weight or durability is most important in designing a prosthetic for mountain climbing.

Encouraged by Leal, who is recognized as one of the most innovative, sensitive artificial limb designers in the country, members of this loosely knit clique of amputees are walking-running-jumping-swimming-bowling proof that amputation is not an excuse to sit out life.

— Richard Sainz, 14, has been without one of his legs since birth. He plays Little League baseball.

— Bill Parsons, 50, had a leg amputated earlier this year because of an old injury. He swims, goes scuba diving and works as a reserve highway patrolman.

— Ann Stites, 15, lost a leg to cancer, but she loves jogging.

— Mike Ross, 31, had to have a leg amputated 19 years ago. He plays city-league basketball and softball, runs the 100-yard dash in 13 seconds and likes to climb mountains.

"What I'm geared for here," says Leal over the din in the body shop, "is trying to develop prosthetics for amputees who want to do more than just walk.

"If an amputee comes in here and says, 'I want to climb Mount St. Helens,' I want to help him do it.

"But here's the important part," Leal continues. "The vision has to come from the amputee If an amputee really wants to do something he or she will often come up with a practical idea to get the job done. We get our training in school, but we get our superior knowledge from our patients."

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Saturday, Nov. 20, 1982

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: "Family Feud" host Richard Dawson, U.S. Sen. Joseph Biden (D-Del.), "Dick Tracy" creator Chester Gould and PBS host Alistair Cooke share this birthday with you. Also born on this day: actresses Bo Derek, Gene Tierney and Kay Ballard. Curb a tendency to be overly critical or you will lose out on some golden new opportunities. Things will happen suddenly and you have to stay on your toes. Secret agreements prove beneficial so long as they are legal. Steer clear of anything shady. As family members draw closer together, romance takes on new meaning. Be patient with those who do not share your views.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Be more considerate of mate's feelings this weekend. Leave your work at the office and plan activities that will be fun for the whole family.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A chronic health problem could slow you down today. Get out in the fresh air. Although a romantic plea falls on deaf ears, you receive a cheering phone call.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): An excellent day for personal endeavors, love and marriage. A short trip helps you make up your mind on an important subject and could also rekindle romance. Follow your heart.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Your friends are wrapped up in their own projects this weekend. Find things that you can do with family members or by yourself.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Although you do not care to spend much time alone, quiet meditation could help restore your equilibrium. Take a good look at your life and make some positive changes.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Avoid being hasty about romance or anything else today. A good book captures your imagination, making you difficult to budge from your home. Share in the family fun!

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Quit trying to hide a fear. You would be much wiser to bring it out in the open. Travel opens up new horizons. Do not give up on an imaginative project.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): If you feel others are keeping secrets, ask pointed questions. You will get the answers you need. Postpone meetings until you can clear the air. Luck is on your side!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Someone in authority bends the rules to help you. Show your gratitude by keeping faith with this person. You could get a chance to expand your role in a family business.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You are hurting yourself by being so critical of others. You are out in front in the career race and need to keep your cool. Knocking a competitor is a sign of weakness.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Money is less of a problem now. Find time to pursue a new romance. The role of family peacemaker is not one you enjoy, but it is one you are good at!

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Follow up on a friend's suggestion. Reunions are wonderful. Get together with a former romantic partner. Love could be better the second time around.

There are two ways to win at bridge — never take a wrong guess, or perfect your technique. Of the two, we recommend the latter. It is less likely to backfire.

As the cards lie, East-West have a good sacrifice at four spades. However, we do not fault either of them for failing to enter the auction at this vulnerability. Not that four hearts was a laydown. But excellent declarer play thwarted some fine defense.

West led the queen of spades, and at first glance it might seem that the contract hinged solely on declarer's ability to divine the trump situation. But South was able to find a sure-trick line regardless of who held the queen of trumps.

Declarer won the first trick in dummy and immediately ruffed a spade. Next, he made the farsighted play of cashing the king of trumps from hand. Had East showed out on this trick, the finesse would have been marked and there would have been no way that declarer could have lost more than a diamond trick and two clubs.

When West showed out on this trick, declarer proved that he had not taken a wrong view. He cashed the ace of hearts and the ace-king of diamonds, then exited with a diamond. East, aware of a looming end play, did the best he could by jettisoning his two diamond honors under the ace-king, so West was able to win the third diamond with his ten.

Since a spade or diamond continuation would present declarer with his contract via a ruff-sluff, West was forced to shift to a club. Declarer played the queen from dummy. East realized that he would still be end played if he took the ace, so he ducked. Declarer countered by simply exiting with a heart. East was forced to win, and faced the choice of presenting declarer with his contract either via a ruff-sluff, or by leading a club away from the ace into dummy's king. Either way, declarer could lose only one club trick!

Appoint them, governor!

Last-minute appointments expected to be made by Gov. Bill Clements between now and when Mark White takes the oath of office in January have become a partisan political issue. That's regrettable.

One of the chief appointments at stake is the replacement for Texas Supreme Court Chief Justice Joe Greenhill, who decided to step down from the bench. But a number of senators in the Texas Senate are urging Gov. Clements to not fill that post since former Democratic Atty. Gen. John Hill, whom Clements defeated in the gubernatorial race four years ago, is said to want the job. The concern of the senators is blatant partisanship; obviously they want Gov. Clements to let White choose Greenhill's successor.

In Texas the position of governor is effectively weakened. While it's difficult at best for any governor to leave his imprint on state government, it's particularly so for Bill Clements — the first Republican governor in the Lone Star State since Reconstruction and not a bad governor on his worst days. The obstacle in the path of Clements' appointments will be the Senate where appointees must be confirmed by a two-thirds vote. With only 11 votes in the 31-member house, Clements' appointments can be blocked. Republican senators are outnumbered by Democrats 24-7 so, to say the least, the governor's chances are not good.

Ironically, if there is any entity in state government to which members should be appointed not on the basis of political party affiliation but on ability solely, it is the Supreme Court. Yet from all indications, the senators want to deprive Gov. Clements of his right to appoint Greenhill's sucessor. Wait until White is in ofice and let him make the appointment, they whisper in Gov. Clements' ear.

There is a good likelihood the governor would appoint a Republican to the post. There is a good likelihood that he would not appoint his former political adversary. But it's just November and Bill Clements is still governor of this state. He should appoint Greenhill's successor along with the other 200-odd positions yet to fill.

The Senate may override him but if it does that action will show the body's partisanship. Gov. Clements has always conducted himself in admirable fashion; for him to bow to the demands of Democratic senators would be for him to not live up to expectations.

Forget the clambake

The Reagan administration has decided on the best of grounds that the seabed mining provisions in the new Law of the Sea Treaty are not in our national interest. Having rejected the treaty, it makes no sense for the United States to help finance the big clambake in Jamaica in December at which other nations will sign it.

The United Nations is budgeting $20 million for the Jamaican affair. It will be mainly a victory celebration for Third World countries which used their majority vote in the United Nations to insist that the Law of the Sea Treaty give them a share of the profits from private enterprises engaged in mining on the ocean floor.

Inasmuch as the American taxpayer contributes one out of every four dollars the United Nations spends, there is no reason why we should pay $5 million to glorify a treaty our government doesn't want and is urging its allies not to accept.

There is ample precedent for being selective in paying our U.N. dues. The Soviet Union has withheld $191 million over the years from support of U.N. peacekeeping efforts in Africa and the Middle East that it disapproves. The United States currently is holding back money from two agencies.

There are many provisions in the Law of the Sea Treaty which the United States accepts and will honor. In refusing to accept the treaty, we are making a point about a section that would be unjust and unworkable when the time comes for recovering minerals from the ocean floor. There is no better way to reinforce that position than by telling the United Nations to send the bills elsewhere for what is shaping up as a Caribbean holiday.

Another View:

The healing process

President Reagan finally has decided to end his ill-considered and potentially disastrous policy of sanctions against Western suppliers to the Soviet natural gas pipeline project by declaring the policy a victory. The president claims this country is now in "substantial agreement" with our European allies on future trade and credit policy toward the Soviet Union. Therefore, Mr. Reagan says, sanctions no longer are necessary.

Whether such agreement exists is doubtful at best. France, still piqued at Mr. Reagan for imposing the sanctions, insists the parties are far from a final accord. Britain and West Germany, more politely and obliquely, say much the same thing. And everyone involved knows that Mr. Reagan backed down because the policy was having virtually no effect, and was threatening the Atlantic alliance's unity more than any other issue in its history.

Despite the fantasy of the president's "victory," the alliance can recover from this needless quarrel, provided the president not take his own rhetoric too seriously and plunge ahead with demands for trade, credit and technology transfer restrictions which cooler heads know to be unrealistic. So far the allies, possibly excepting the French, are sending clear signals that they are willing to put the pipeline dispute behind them.

Essentially, the Western nations are back to where they were in June, at the time of the Versailles economic summit, with respect to coordinating their economic relations with Moscow. What should have been learned during all the difficulty that followed that meeting is that any such agreement must be truly coordinated and not dictated by Washington.

Assuming Western governments are still able to reach the agreement that Mr. Reagan claims already exists, it will have to contain a flexibility that takes into account the differing attitudes toward Moscow that still divide the NATO allies. Moreover, it should be designed to reassure European business firms which by now are wary of joint commercial agreements with U.S. firms that may be subject to cancellation or sanction by presidential whim. It is this aspect of the pipeline dispute that may yet do more damage to this country's interests than the wounds to national pride.

President Reagan has the opportunity to begin the political healing process in talks that began Nov. 15 in Washington with the new West German chancellor, Helmut Kohl. As the newest head of government within the alliance, Kohl can scarcely speak officially for Europe. But as a European committed both to the Atlantic alliance and to the independence of his own country, Kohl accurately reflects an authentic European view. Part of that view is that consultation and negotiation are the accepted means of conducting relations, even among allies. If the Atlantic alliance is to survive, its members have to be treated as partners, not colonies.

CHARLEY REESE

Bankers pull strings to manipulate

Have you received any notices from the New York banks that you are going to get a check in the mail as your share of their profits on their overseas loans? No? Gee, I haven't either.

Charley Reese

Then I wonder why the Reagan administration thinks it has a right to saddle you and I with their losses? That's what it's doing. Reagan must be confused about how the Robin Hood story goes. In that story, the good guy robs the rich to help the poor; it was the bad guy who robbed the poor to help the rich.

Maybe you and I are the ones who are confused. We thought we believed in the free enterprise system. We thought that meant that when a private bank makes a private loan for private profit and suffers a loss, it absorbs its own losses. We were wrong. That only happens to your hometown banker. The New York banks play by different rules.

I'm angry about the situation, but maybe you aren't. Maybe you feel honored that your government, without informing you, made you a co-signer of notes to Mexico, Poland, and Lower Slobbovia. Maybe you believe the fairy tale that if some deadbeat foreign borrowers default, the sky will fall down.

It really won't happen. The sky will fall on a few bankers when they tell their stockholders that they lost their money, but that is what is known as justice. Forcing the American taxpayers to cover their losses is what is known as an injustice.

Just imagine, for a moment, your hometown banker going to the city council and saying, "Well, I've made some bad loans so you guys will have to levy a tax on the people and then give the money to me to cover the principal and interest on these loans." The poor man would be put in a rubber room. Yet that is precisely what the New York banks are saying at this moment.

In the case of Poland, Reagan has already paid the New York banks over $200 million of the taxpayers money. He said he did that to keep Poland from going into default in order to punish it. That is weird reasoning. That's like telling a child who ran up your charge account at the department store that you are going to punish him by paying the bill and giving him his own credit card.

In all seriousness, this business of the government guaranteeing foreign loans is nothing more than the biggest sting in the history of con artistry. If my memory is correct, J.P. Morgan originated it in World War I. He made loans to Great Britain guaranteed by the U.S. so Britain could buy war materials from Morgan-owned industries. Then he collected his money from the taxpayers and left the U.S. with the job of collecting its money from Great Britain. It hasn't been successful yet.

The new version of the sting will work this way. In the name of averting "an international financial collapse," the U.S. will hand over billions in tax dollars to the Inernational Monetary Fund which will in turn hand them over to the private banks via a foreign deadbeat.

It's a neat scheme. The foreign deadbeat will have enjoyed the benefits of the loan. The bank will get its principal plus interest back. And you and I, who received no benefits whatsoever, will pay for it.

When you protest, you will be told that you are just too simple to understand complex matters like international finance. Vague and high faluting generalities are the bushes behind which this simple scam is being hidden.

Think about this. Think about the morality of a government which would do this to its citizens. Think about what it says as to the effectiveness of democracy. Are we really governing ourselves or are we being governed by people who never run for office but manipulate those who do? Just think about it.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

President was victim of dirty-tricks forgery

Jack Anderson

Perhaps the forgery was only meant as a joke, but Laxalt and his staff aren't laughing. And the U.S. Attorney's office in Washington is looking into the matter.

The document in question is a letter on what the U.S. Attorney's office says is Laxalt's official Senate stationery, purportedly written on Sept. 9 by the senator to Richard Richards, then-chairman of the Republican National Committee. It is addressed to "Dear Dick" and signed, "Yours, Paul."

"I have thoroughly studied the plan designed to defeat the Democrats in 1982," the letter begins. "I think on the whole it is excellent but not aggressive enough." It continues:

"I conferred with the President the other day and my assessment coincides with his. The President drew attention to the urgency of taking resolute measures to prevent the election of Liberal Democrats ... including discreditation of their professional and private lives.

"The President noted in particular that the election of Governor Brown to the Senate would harm the Administration politically. Perhaps we should explain to the California electorate why the Governor doesn't marry?"

Richards told my associate Vicki Warren he never received the letter. Laxalt's staff said it is definitely a forgery. They are trying to track down the perpetrator, and so far they suspect that the letter originated in Virginia.

The District of Columbia U.S. Attorney's office is investigating the situation. Possible charges include forgery and theft of stationery.

One point remains inexplicable: If the letter was indeed concocted as a dirty trick to discredit the president, his closest political adviser and Republicans in general, why was it not judiciously leaked or otherwise made public? Though photocopies of the fake letter were circulating on a small scale around Capitol Hill, there was no competent effort made to follow through on the forgery.

Perhaps, unlike their Nixon-era predecessors, today's dirty tricksters are given to second thoughts and cold feet.

PACMAN GOES TO WAR: Evidently carried away by space-war movies and video games, the Army and Marines are wasting thousands of dollars developing real-life battlefield computer devices that either don't work or perform no discernibly useful function. The brass would do better carrying sacks of quarters to the nearest videogame arcade; this would keep them amused at far less expense to the taxpayers.

Consider the Marines' super-duper "computer navigation system" for infantry platoon leaders. As envisioned by its backers, it would read maps and compute the shortest distance from A to B — something any reasonably competent Boy Scout could accomplish with a map and a $3 compass.

But the Marines' computerized map reader will require a backpack-carried satellite relay, a centralized battlefield management computer and, of course, a full-color video display unit back at headquarters. The system is still on the drawing board, but Pentagon computer experts told my associate Ron McRae that the continued addition of expensive and useless optional equipment may mean the thing will never get built.

"We do have a genuine requirement for better battlefield computer systems," said one exasperated officer, "but someone always wants an R2-D2 instead of something that works. We've had to pay contractors to rewrite the system specifications 23 times, and they never get any more realistic."

Not to be outdone by a bunch of jarheads, the Army has spent even more on its computerized battle gadgets. The TACFIRE, for example, is a $100 million computer that's supposed to take the guesswork and human error out of laying down artillery barrages.

The central TACFIRE computer collects information by radio from smaller computers at the gun batteries, digests it and then relays aiming instructions back to the gun crews.

Artillerymen say such a system might have been helpful back in World War II. But they say the smaller computers provided to the individual batteries can tell the gunners everything they need to know. In short, there's no real need for the cumbersome and costly TACFIRE system.

Properly used, modern computers could do as much for the armed services as they already do for the average American household. But so far, the space-age gimcracks have simply gobbled up money like a super-Pacman gone wild.

One reason, according to computer specialists, is that the Pentagon is often penny-wise and pound-foolish — trying to hold down costs by hiring inexperienced personnel, skimping on worthwhile projects to plan grandiose systems, and setting unrealistic deadlines for contractors.

When inexperienced personnel botch their jobs, poor planning wastes money and impossible deadlines cause costly foulups, it's the taxpayers who get stuck with the bill.

CONFIDENTIAL FILE: The Syrians' humiliating experience with what they consider second-rate Soviet weapons in the Lebanon war has led Arab nations to be more choosy in their military purchases. As a secret State Department report notes: "The once lucrative market in the Near East for old or used equipment has declined sharply if not been virtually eliminated, and the demand now is for modern and sophisticated weaponry."

INSIDE REPORT:

Window washing signals economic change

WASHINGTON — In the most important economic shift inside the White House since Ronald Reagan was elected president, James A. Baker III is pushing for a continued expansive monetary policy by the Federal Reserve Board as the only way to invigorate the economy.

Rowland Evans

The White House chief of staff has said nothing publicly about monetary policy. But in fact he has lost patience with monetarist doctrine under which the Fed attempted to control the money supply from Oct. 6, 1979, until last month. He approves of "temporary" retreat by the central bank and is now willing to accept a little inflation as the price of recovery.

Robert Novak

This pits Baker directly against the administration's monetary experts, who grumble that the Fed must tighten up. A Houston lawyer, Baker tells everybody that he knows little about monetary policy. But he is politically astute enough to recognize that the monetarist treadmill the administration has walked is the road to oblivion.

Assuming Baker survives the shadowy power struggle now being waged in the White House, the entrance onto the monetary stage of the most powerful presidential chief of staff since Sherman Adams is a formidable development. For the first time, a political voice within the White House is asserting misgivings about the advice from the administration's economists.

Baker has enjoyed access to a nonmonetarist alternative from his friend, Lewis Lehrman. But until now, his attitude toward arcane nuances of monetary policy has reflected that of most politicians in both the White House and Congress: We don't do windows.

Thus, Baker's private attitude was that he really did not know much about either monetary policy or monetarism, the doctrine of Nobel Laureate Milton Friedman that bases economic health on controlling the money supply, and was not about to try to change it before the 1982 election. But from the start, he felt that monetarism was on trial. The state of the economy and Republican politics suggests to pragmatist Baker that the verdict is in and monetarism lost.

Jim Baker has started washing windows at a critical moment. The cagey, often inscrutable Fed chairman, Paul Volcker, last month admitted he had stopped targeting the money supply but denied it represented a major policy shift. Anti-monetarists believe a more definitive position may be needed to convince markets that monetarism is dead and buried and that interest rates will not resume their upward climb.

Baker is not now pressing for any such proclamation by Volcker. But associates at the White House say he was disappointed by the Fed's failure to lower the discount rate (the interest charged to member banks by the Fed) the last three Fridays. That may not be accurate, but there is no doubt he wants the Fed to take the step very soon.

In contrast, monetarist diehards in the administration — headed by Under Secretary Beryl Sprinkel at the Treasury and William Poole at the Council of Economic Advisers — complain that the Fed is starting to build back inflationary expectations. They consider a lowered discount rate as the worst kind of signal. But now they face a potent antagonist who sits at the president's elbow.

Baker is no born-again supply-sider. He has no interest in the bill pushed by Rep. Jack Kemp ordering the Fed to target interest rates. Unlike Kemp, Baker believes budget deficits in themselves share culpability with monetary policy for the ruinous interest rates and, therefore, is ready for another agonizing budget exercise. Nor has he shown the slightest interest in a gold-convertible dollar.

Nevertheless, the sight of Jim Baker washing windows means for the first time the Reagan White House is concentrating on an expansive economic policy. That gives some promise that the drift toward economic catastrophe and political defeat in 1982 may be avoided in 1984.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Friday, Nov. 19, the 323rd day of 1982. There are 42 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Nov. 19, 1493, Christopher Columbus discovered Puerto Rico.

On this date:

In 1942, Russian forces in World War II staged a counterattack at Stalingrad, surrounding the German troops.

In 1961, about 4,900 Algerian rebels in French prisons ended a 19-day hunger strike on the assurance they would be treated as political prisoners.

In 1970, the Vatican pledged support to a United Nations plan for narrowing the economic gap between rich and poor nations.

And, in 1980, Israeli Prime Minister Begin narrowly survived a vote of confidence, with former defense minister Ezer Weizman among those voting to bring down the government.

Ten years ago: Willy Brandt was re-elected as chancellor of West Germany in federal elections.

Much alcoholism treatment shouldn't come under Medicare

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

LOS ANGELES — A federal review of alcoholism treatment at a sampling of hospitals in three Western states concluded that 75 percent of hospital days paid for by Medicare should not have been covered by the government-funded program.

The study by the Department of Health and Human Services, summarized in a draft report obtained by the Los Angeles Times, is extremely critical of the government's own rather limited ability to monitor Medicare payments for alcohol treatment, which costs the program as much as $200 million each year.

The report also questions the justification for admitting patients to hospitals for treatment when past efforts have repeatedly failed and when less costly alternatives to hospitalization are available.

The reviewers also found evidence that the hospitals admitted patients for diseases other than alcoholism in an effort to mislead the agencies and insurance companies that must approve Medicare admissions.

"The potential fraudulent aspects of this practice," the report said, were serious enough that the inspector general of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services was asked if there were grounds for criminal investigation and prosecution.

The inspector general concluded that any prosecution for fraud was unlikely to hold up in court.

In 1981, the regional office of Health and Human Services chose six hospitals in California, Nevada and Arizona for review after a similar investigation of an alcohol treatment unit indicated that 60 percent of the alcohol admissions under Medicare were not justified by the patients' medical records.

The six hospitals were chosen as representative of treatment facilities in the three Western states.

The department's reviewers randomly pulled the records of 104 Medicare patients who stayed a total of 1,751 days in the six hospitals last year.

The detailed review of medical records by Health and Human Services and a team of medical consultants concluded that 1,315 hospitalization days should not have been paid for under Medicare rules.

The disallowed days for ineligible treatment cost the government about $325,000 — more than $3,000 per patient.

Because of the high proportion of questionable hospital days, the report calls for a national study to determine if the same problem exists throughout the nation.

But no decision has been reached on whether to expand the government investigation, according to a spokesman for the Health Care Financing Administration, the branch of Health and Human Services that administers the Medicare program.

Because the report has not been finalized, there have been no attempts to recover the $325,000 or to initiate a large-scale review in an effort to recover even more money from these and other alcohol-treatment units, the spokesman said.

The draft report is filled with detailed examples of patients who were inappropriately admitted to hospitals for treatment of their drinking problems, including:

—A 73-year-old patient who had undergone unsuccessful treatment of his alcoholism more than 50 times. Without some sign that he would benefit from another treatment, Medicare should not have paid, the report said.

—A 75-year-old man who walked into a hospital "drunk" was admitted for eye surgery. The reviewers said there was no evidence that he needed to be withdrawn from alcohol and no reason to think that the man would benefit from a rehabilitation program, but he was nonetheless treated for 19 days for alcoholism before his surgery.

—A 65-year-old woman treated for alcoholism with a vomit-inducing drug and alcohol. But her hospital record showed that she had liver disease and a bleeding problem, both of which should have ruled out the kind of treatment given to her, the report said.

—A 69-year-old man admitted for a month-long treatment for alcoholism after an earlier round of treatment at a hospital owned by the same chain. The patient's record showed no evidence that he had been reached for a continuing program of follow-up care — considered vital to the long-term success of any alcohol-treatment program.

Medicare is a government-run insurance program that pays a substantial portion of hospital costs for its mostly elderly recipients.

But the federal program is administered through a complex system that uses insurance companies and federally funded, physician-run Professional Standard Review Organizations to ensure that Medicare rules are being followed.

Anything added called 'artificial'

Solomon

Dear Dr. Solomon: Are all the colorings which are used in bakery products artificial? I don't remember seeing a single one that was listed as natural. — Edna, New York City

Dear Edna: Colorings may be obtained from vegetable sources, in which case they are considered natural, or they can be man-made. However, any color added to a product must be listed as artificial even if it comes from vegetable sources.

Dear Dr. Solomon: How successful is artificial insemination? It seems like a lot of trouble to go to if nothing is going to come of it. — Joyce, Columbia, S.C.

Dear Joyce: The amount of trouble involved in any undertaking depends on the individual's motivation. A woman who is very eager to conceive may not perceive of artificial insemination as being at all troublesome.

In any event, the results of a study by Dr. Bridgett A. Mason, of the Royal Free Hospital in London, indicate that most women who undergo artificial insemination can conceive. Some of the women in the study who persisted in efforts were successful in conceiving after one year. As might have been expected, younger women were able to conceive within a shorter period of time than did older women.

Dear Dr. Solomon: The son of very close friends of mine has come out of the closet, as the saying goes, to say that he is gay. The only reason I'm writing to you about it is that I have known the parents of this young man since before he was born, and they are the nicest people and the warmest parents that anyone could possibly hope to know. It seems impossible that they would have a homosexual child. Do you have any explanation for this? — Mr. J.J.R., Baton Rouge, La.

Dear Mr. R.: You assume that homosexuality, at least in part, is a product of a disturbed parent-child relationship. While some people who have studied the suoject maintain that an unhappy childhood gives rise to homosexuality, not everyone agrees with this explanation.

Dr. Bryan E. Robinson, of the department of human development and learning at the University of North Carolina in Charlotte, studied more than 300 homosexual men and women. He and his colleagues report the most had had fairly happy childhoods and good relationships with their parents as children, and that they continue to maintain these good relationships as adults.

Over 60 percent of the people who took part in the survey described their childhood and adolescence as usually or always pleasant; only 20 percent of those in the study were the products of broken homes.

On the basis of this study, it would appear to be simplistic to conclude that homosexuality is evidence of a disruption in the parent-child relationship.

For Mrs. N.L., Harrisburg, Pa.: Pregnancy does not appear to make the prognosis of ovarian cancer in young women any less favorable.

Zimbabwe surgeon, aide, son banned

HARARE, Zimbabwe (AP) — A Zimbabwe surgeon whose 9-year-old stepson helped amputate a patient's leg in front of an American television crew has been barred from using government health facilities, the Herald newspaper reported today.

The Health Ministry has also banned the surgeon's anaesthetist, University of Zimbabwe Prof. Ashley Duthie, from state-owned facilities, the paper said without attributing the report.

Both Duthie and the surgeon, George Patrikios, are presently out of the country. Police on Wednesday searched Patrikios's house and medical offices but found nothing unusual, police sources told The Associated Press.

Patrikios, 45, one of Zimbabwe's top surgeons, performed the operation April 30 on Julius Kwambana, a middle-aged, unemployed builder. The surgeon's stepson, Jonah, helped cut and stitch the leg for the American Broadcasting Co. show "That's Incredible."

Kwambana, in an interview with the Zimbabwe press, said the operation was a success. But he complained he had not given permission for either the boy or the camera to be in the operating theater.

The medical, dental and allied professions council has already fined Dr. Patrikios $650 for "improper conduct."

Cowboy offensive tackle Pat Donovan warms up on an exercise bench Thursday prior to start of practice in Dallas. Coach Tom Landry holds a morning meeting, a break for lunch and a full afternoon workout in pads as the Cowboys prepare to restart the season Sunday against Tampa Bay.

Chaps survive again

BARTON, Kan. — Midland College maintained its unblemished basketball record here Thursday night with a hard fought 82-76 victory over the Fort Scott Community College Greyhounds as play opened in the first round of the Barton County Classic.

It was here last year that the defending national champion Chaparrals lost two of three games, but they got off on the right track here Thursday. MC will face Lamar CC of Lamar, Colo., here at 6:30 p.m. today in the second Classic outing and will meet host Barton County at 8:30 p.m. Saturday in what is expected to be the feature game of the tournament.

The Chaps, now 3-0 on the season, trailed Fort Scott by a 2-0 count early in the contest, but captured a 4-2 lead and never trailed again. However, the Chaps could never put Fort Scott away, holding a narrow 40-37 lead at the half. The Chaps did open a 10-point lead with five minutes left for some breathing room, but the game had MC coach Jerry Stone wiping the sweat from his brow.

"Fort Scott is the best team we have played this year," noted Stone. "We had our hands full with that team. They did a great recruiting job this year. They haven't been all that great in the past, but they are good this year.

"Our defense carried us through the game. We kept switching defenses and did force a lot of turnovers."

The two teams made a lot of mistakes in the early going and only four points were scored in the first five minutes of play. Fort Scott was able to stay close to the Chaps with a 42-38 edge in rebounds.

However, three holdovers from last year's national championship team carried the Chaps to victory. Spud Webb has his best night of the season with 25 points, and yes, the 5-6 guard got his usual dunk and brought the house down.

Chester Smith pumped in 23 points and had an outstanding defensive game for the Chaps. Jerome Crowe had 14 first half points, but ended the night with 16 points after getting in foul trouble in the second half.

Chap newcomer Ervin Williams jumped in with 11 points and Justin Morett, who scored only three points, came off the bench with some good defensive play.

Brad Perry led Fort Scott with 20 points, hitting nine of 17 shots form the field while Alan Dean connected on five of seven shots for a 16-point night. Greg Lambkins hit for 13 points.

Smith led the Chap shooters in percentage with a nine of 18 night from the field. Webb still doesn't have his shooting eye in total control yet. He hit only eight of 25 shots. Crowe had a good night with eight of 14 from the field.

MC is still not hitting a good percentage from the field overall. Thursday they hit on 33 of 78 shots for a 42 percent showing. Fort Scott did a little better in that department with a 31 for 65 night.

Midland College (82): Webb, 8/25-9/10-2-25; Winbush, 0/0-0/0-0-0; Williams, 5/11-1/2-2-11; Crowe, 8/14-0/0-4-16; Buford, 2/10-0/1-1-4; Smith, 9/18-6/5-3-23; Morett, 1/1-1/2-2-3; Essary, 0/0-0/0-1-0; Harris, 0/3-0/0-1-0. Totals: 33/78-16/21-19-82.

Fort Scott (76): Lambkins, 5/11-3/4-5-13; Jackson, 4/8-0/0-4-8; Gause, 4/7-1/1-1-9; Wilson, 2/8-3/5-1-7; Lowe, 1/1-0/0-1-2; Parker, 1/5-0/0-4-2; Dean, 5/7-6/7-3-16; Perry, 9/17-2/4-2-20; Scroggins, 0/1-0/0-0-0. Totals: 31/65-14/20-21-76.

Nine teams still unbeaten

By BRUCE LOWITT
AP Sports Writer

Who would have believed there still would be seven unbeaten teams this late in the National Football League season?

The Miami Dolphins still have a chance to become the only twice-perfect team in the NFL. Of course, 9-0 isn't as attractive as 14-0, but then again, nothing this season has been very pretty.

Anyway, in the only matchup of unbeatens this weekend, the Dolphins visit Buffalo, where the Bills will quickly extinguish Miami's hopes.

And in Los Angeles Monday night, there'll be an exquisite bit or irony as the Raiders play their first game in their new home before a national television audience. You remember why Al Davis moved the franchise, don't you? Right! Future TV money.

After two weeks of games played by players and eight weeks of games played by lawyers, the fearless football forecaster's record stands at 17-10.

This week's picks (home teams in caps):

BUFFALO minus 1 vs. Miami: Bills back Joe Cribbs has had enough time to get back into shape after missing training camp. The game could swing on one swing of the leg by Buffalo's new kicker, Efren Herrera. Take the Bills.

LOS ANGELES RAIDERS minus 1½ vs. San Diego: If timing is everything, and if everybody's going to need a week or so to get his timing back, the Chargers' aerial circus could be a disaster. Take the Raiders.

Pittsburgh minus 6 vs. HOUSTON: Who will hand the ball to Earl Campbell, Gifford Nielsen or Archie Manning? It won't matter. Earl won't get many yards against his old nemesis. Take the Steelers. BEST BET.

DALLAS minus 7½ vs. Tampa Bay: Like most of the teams who depend so heavily on one super runner, the Cowboys may have a tough time coming out of the blocks. Take the Bucs.

Detroit minus 3 vs. CHICAGO: It's linebacker Stan White of the Lions against tackle Dan Jiggetts of the Bears in "The Network Battle of the Union Executive Committee Members." Take White. And take the Lions.

NEW YORK JETS minus 8½ vs. Baltimore: The Jets kept their camp closed an extra day, playing hard-nose with the union over contract technicalities. No matter. Against the Colts they could come in wearing street clothes and win. Take the Jets.

Denver minus 7½ vs. SEATTLE: Mike McCormack's belated debut as Seattle's head coach. He won't start out a winner, but this game'll be closer than most of the ones he coached in Baltimore last year. Take the Seahawks.

Kansas City minus 2½ vs. NEW ORLEANS: Just a hunch, but we think Ken Stabler will have something to say about the outcome. Take the Saints. UPSET SPECIAL.

Also take:

CLEVELAND minus 6½ over New England

ATLANTA minus 3½ over Los Angeles Rams

Cincinnati plus 1 over PHILADELPHIA

Washington plus 1 over NEW YORK GIANTS

Rob Carpenter is ready to join New York Giants

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — Fullback Rob Carpenter, a free agent embroiled in a contract dispute since traning camp, says he is ready to report to the New York Giants, but claims the NFL Players Association is stopping him.

Carpenter said Thursday that the players union has not yet approved his agent, Gary Wichard, to negotiate a contract with the Giants, according to a report in today's editions of The Star-Ledger of Newark.

It's a go for Sunday, but all is not well in NFL

By The Associated Press

Union and management representatives are continuing to squabble over details even as practices are held for the 14 games to be played this weekend following settlement of the eight-week National Football League players strike.

Distrust among the two sides was a key factor in keeping three of the 28 teams off the practice field until Thursday, while the other 25 started workouts Wednesday.

The New York Jets management didn't open camp until Thursday because union chief Ed Garvey hadn't initialed the collective bargaining agreement. After Jets President Jim Kensil was assured by NFL officials that Garvey would sign Thursday morning, he opened the team's practice facilities.

The Detroit Lions and Chicago Bears, who meet each other Sunday, had avoided practice Wednesday because they wanted to confer first with their player representatives.

On Thursday, Bears punter Bob Parsons said Chicago started practice when the Lions did. "Some guys didn't want to practice ... and at one time the vote was 20-20 whether to go out. But Detroit's decision switched it."

"Eight weeks and a total waste of time," said disgruntled Bears running back Walter Payton, who said he wouldn't bother to vote next Tuesday when all the players decide whether to accept the strike-ending agreement.

Garvey, although he initialed portions of it Thursday, expressed dissatisfaction with parts of the settlement that already has been unanimously approved by the owners.

During a meeting in Washington, D.C., involving Garvey, owners' negotiator Jack Donlan and lawyers for both sides, the union released a statement from Garvey which said, in part: "I have today initialed all aspects of the agreement where agreement has been reached, using the Management Council document presented Nov.16 at midnight. Naturally, where agreement has not been reached, the attorneys will attempt to work out the differences. Minor suggestions have been proposed to which management may respond."

Garvey said in the statement the union was "surprised to find that in the (owners') latest document given to us at 2:20 p.m. today, they have not included the severance pay agreement for Mike Kadish (of Buffalo) and Herb Orvis (of Baltimore), reps cut because of union activity, and they continue to refuse to provide specific language on the annual guarantee."

At Management Council headquarters in New York, spokesman Jim Miller said: "We did not agree to severance. We agreed to the 'money now' provision," the bonus which will pay all players up to $60,000 this year.

Miller also insisted the language on the annual guarantee was in the contract.

Garvey's statement concluded: "Prior to submitting this document to the union members for a vote, all the I's must be dotted and all the T's must be crossed. It would be foolish to send an incomplete document to the players, or one that could be misinterpreted."

"In order to make certain that all players fully understand all aspects of the proposed agreement, we will hold a player rep meeting on Monday in Washington, D.C. to go over the document with a fine-tooth comb."

Players association president Gene Upshaw told a news conference in San Francisco that the players' vote scheduled next Tuesday could be close.

"It could go either way ... There could be whole teams who vote against it," he said, citing strong signs of dissent in Chicago, Detroit, New England and Philadelphia.

If the collective bargaining agreement is defeated by the 1,500 players, they could continue playing while negotiating resumes or they could resume their strike.

Upshaw, a guard with the Los Angeles Raiders, said he wasn't particularly pleased with the agreement, but he defended it as protecting the union and gaining a wage scale. Specifically, Upshaw noted, "If they (the NFL) go to cable, pay or satellite TV, we can reopen the contract" for further bargaining.

He said he told the player reps, "That was the last dollar I could get out of them (the owners)." The reps voted to send the agreement along to the rank and file without recommendation because, as Lions player rep and union executive committee member Stan White said, the reps didn't want to prejudice the players for or against it.

New England Patriots turn down wildcat strike

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP) — New England Patriots players, following the advice of NFL Players Association Executive Director Ed Garvey, have decided against a wildcat strike that would have derailed Sunday's game with the Cleveland Browns.

Unhappy with the tentative agreement that ended the 57-day National Football League players' strike, 16 members of the team threatened to walk out of practice Thursday morning.

AFTER A lively 75-minute locker room meeting, the insurgents were convinced by player representative Don Hasselback and assistant rep Steve Grogan to remain and practice.

But the threat of some independent wildcat job action was so strong that Garvey flew to Foxboro Thursday night to meet with the players.

Garvey spoke for 3½ hours, explaining the procedure the union and management went through in neogitations and detailing the final agreement.

When he emerged from the closed-door session, Garvey told reporters, "If the rank and file in the league is like they are here, people are going to be in for a jolt."

He said there is no question the Patriot players are dissatisfied with the proposed contract, and that there are other teams in the league with the same feelings.

He said, characterizing the current developments, "We are well into overtime."

Hasselback said the meeting, although emotional, resulted in an agreement by all players to stay in camp and to play Sunday's game against the Cleveland Browns.

But he, and many of the players leaving the meeting, said they doubted the Pats players would vote next Tuesday to ratify the contract.

THE NEAR walkout occurred before morning practice began.

"The coach, Ron Meyer, gave us 15 minutes to hold a meeting and it took about an hour and 20 minutes," Hasselbeck said. "Many players are upset and asked me what they were doing here. All I could do was tell them I'm not totally sure what we're doing here."

Hasselbeck said that the Patriots took a vote on whether to stay or walk out and "it was about 50-50."

The vote was 16 to walk, 13 to stay and 27 abstentions.

"A lot wanted to go home, but everyone realized that if half of us go home and half of us stay here it just wouldn't work," said Hasselback.

Eight teams to make playoffs

All teams are alive as familiar division races clipped

By The Associated Press

The strike-fragmented National Football League season resumes Sunday with a new look for the standings.

Forget the familiar divisional breakdowns. They don't mean much in the framework of the new playoff system which will qualify 16 teams for what the NFL has termed the Super Bowl Tournament. What's significant now are the American and National Conference standings because the top eight clubs in both will advance to the postseason play.

Going into the resumed season, there are seven undefeated 2-0 teams, four in the AFC and three in the NFC. Two of them meet head-on with the Miami Dolphins traveling to Buffalo to meet the Bills in a key AFC showdown.

The remaining AFC unbeatens are Pittsburgh, which resumes against Houston, 1-1, and the Raiders, who will make their Los Angeles debut Monday night against San Diego, 1-1.

In other AFC games, Baltimore, 0-2, visits the New York Jets, 1-1, New England, 1-1, is at Cleveland, 1-1, and Seattle, 0-2, at Denver, 1-1. In the NFC, the Los Angeles Rams, 0-2, play at Atlanta, 1-1, San Francisco, 0-2, is at St. Louis, 1-1, and Tampa Bay, 0-2, goes against Dallas, 1-1. Interconference pairings have Cincinnati, 1-1, at Philadelphia, 1-1, and Kansas City, 1-1, at New Orleans, 1-1.

All of the teams will be playing on short preparation time. Most clubs resumed workouts immediately after the agreement was reached. The Super Bowl champion San Francisco 49ers had a limited practice Tuesday night, taking advantage of the three-hour time difference between New York, where the negotiations were held and their base in California. The Jets skipped Wednesday practice when the club refused to open their camp until the agreement was initialed by both sides Thursday morning. Chicago and Detroit also did not work until Thursday.

"They were loose and ready to go," said Lions' Coach Monte Clark, who sent his club through two workouts Thursday, a regimen usually reserved for the opening days of training camp.

Four teams, including the Lions, must come right back with games four days after Sunday, on Thanksgiving Day. In those contests, Cleveland plays at Dallas and the Giants will be at Detroit.

"Our depth is going to be more important than ever," said Clark. "We'll try to substitute more than normal."

The teams go into Sunday's action with expanded active rosters of 49 players instead of the 45 active and four-man reserve units they had been using. It was decided to increase the number of active players to compensate for possible injuries and fatigue caused by the eight-week layoff. In addition, for the next two weeks, teams can restore players from their injured reserve lists without risking them or the players they replace to waivers. Regular waiver rules will resume after two games have been played.

The players are scheduled to vote on the contract settlement Tuesday. But first, they will play football for the first time since the walkout began Sept. 21, interrupting an NFL regular season for the first time in 63 years.

Detroit Lions' players jog around the Silverdome Thursday during their first practice since the tentative contract that ended the 57-day NFL player's strike. The Lions refused to report to practice Wednesday because of their disapproval of the proposal. The Lions will play Sunday, however.

Lions still have bad feelings

PONTIAC, Mich. (AP) — Players who were outspoken in their opposition to the National Football League players strike will be remembered, Detroit Lions linebacker Stan White says, but there will be no retaliation — no cheap shots — on the field.

"I think there are some hard feelings toward some of the players, the New Orleans team, maybe, and some individuals like (San Francisco 49ers tight end) Russ Francis and (Dallas Cowboys quarterback) Danny White," White said after the Lions' second practice session of the day Thursday. "They have really shown that all they're interested in is their own situation and not the good of all the players."

The Lions resume the strike-shortened season against the Bears in Chicago on Sunday, despite the fact that ratification of the tentative agreement isn't scheduled until Tuesday.

"We won't really know until Tuesday if it's over yet," said White, a lawyer in the offseason and a member of the union's executive committee. "I think that's something that's still way up in the air. I know there are a lot of people around the league that are not too happy about the fact that we were in a corner and accepted something that's really too restrictive for the next five years."

If the 1,500 NFL players fail to ratify the agreement Tuesday, White said another walkout was possible. In the meantime, he said the NFLPA was trying hard to prevent any teams from staging wildcat actions.

"If we're going to do things, we should do them together," White said. "Individually, we've never been successful."

Lions defensive tackle Doug English, a lukewarm union supporter who runs a Texas oil business during the offseason, called the tentative contract a "pathetic agreement" that has generated many hard feelings.

"The owners are 28 of the superstars of the business world," English said. "They're not dependant on this game for a living.

"There are going to be bad feelings and there already are. But this won't be reflected in the games. When you've got your hand on the ground and looking across into the eyes of that 280-pound lineman, you don't think about his politics."

Mustangs shoot for Cotton

By The Associated Press

The long-anticipated Arkansas-Southern Methodist Southwest Conference football shoot-out begins at 2:50 p.m. Saturday and a Cotton Bowl berth awaits the Mustangs if they can win or tie.

No. 2 ranked SMU was rated a two-point pick over the Razorbacks in sold-out, 65,000 capacity Texas Stadium, with the regional television cameras of ABC looking on.

The defending SWC champion Mustangs already have clinched a tie for the title by virtue of their miraculous 34-27 victory over Texas Tech last week.

SMU is 10-0 and 7-0 in league play.

No. 9 rated Arkansas, which was upset 24-17 by Baylor two weeks ago, still has dreams of being in the Cotton Bowl.

The Razorbacks, bolstered by some 25,000 fans who will make the journey to Irving, Texas, for the game, can be the host team in the Cotton Bowl New Year's Day by beating SMU and then downing Texas on Dec. 4 in Austin.

Texas has only one league loss, to SMU, and will have to settle for a Sun Bowl bid.

Should Arkansas lose to SMU, the Razorbacks will be in ine for a Bluebonnet Bowl bid in Houston Dec. 31. SMU would go to the Bluebonnet if Arkansas makes it to the Cotton Bowl.

In other SWC games, Texas was a seven-point choice over Baylor in Waco Stadium, where the Longhorns haven't won since 1972; Texas A&M, which will welcome the return of Gary Kubiak to quarterback, and Texas Christian, saying goodbye to fired Coach F.A. Dry in his final game, were rated pick 'ems; and Houston was a point choice over suddenly revived Texas Tech at Lubbock.

SMU has two consecutive victories over the Razorbacks, clinching the league title last year in Fayetteville.

Tailback Craig James has rushed for almost 400 yards against Arkansas in three years, saving his best games for the Razorbacks.

"I know they'll be gunning for me," James said, "but I'll just be playing my game. I don't care if I get a yard if we win."

SMU will be missing starting right tackle Brian O'Meara because of knee ligaments strained last week in the wild SWC game at Lubbock.

"Arkansas is a talented team with lots of speed," SMU Coach Bobby Collins said. "It may be a little hard for us to come down from that last-second victory over Texas Tech, but our team has been doing a good job of keeping things in perspective.

"We know what we have to do Saturday," he said.

Cincinnati gains victory over Miami of Ohio on TV

CINCINNATI (AP) — Quarterback Danny Barrett hit two second half touchdown passes and running back Allen Harvin passed the 1,000-yard mark as the University of Cincinnati defeated Miami of Ohio 20-10 Thursday night in the oldest college football rivalry west of the Alleghenies.

Miami, 7-4, still leads the series that began in 1888 by 47-34-6. The game was telecast nationally on cable.

Cincinnati, 6-4, opened the scoring with a 38-yard field goal by Jime Fogeler. After both teams traded interceptions, Miami fullback bulled over from the 1-yard line after an 87-yard drive.

But Cincinnati roared back in the second half with two touchdowns.

Barrett, who passed for 138 yards, hit Dwayne Cyisholm for a 20-yard touchdown and Mark Crawford for a five-yard tally.

The Russians have arrived

Soviets own awesome basketball power

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent

The Russians are no longer just coming, they're already here — and Bobby Knight suggests we better batten down the hatches.

"I've been watching Russian basketball teams since 1974 and this one is the best I've seen," says the Indiana University coach, who has been vested with the job of fashioning and leading the U. S. team in the 1984 Olympic Games in Los Angeles.

"I have never seen a foreign team as fluid as these guys. They have excellent agility. Their movements are good. They have tall boys who are wonderful athletes — very quick, can jump and run.

"It will take a very good team to beat them."

THE SOVIET Union's visiting national team opened a series of games with leading U. S. college teams Sunday a week ago, testing the waters against Knight's Hoosiers and winning 87-77. They lost a double overtime game against Virginia 94-87 Wednesday night and beat Illinois 77-70 Thursday night before tackling Purdue, Iowa and Kentucky in the series of one-stop stands, ending this week.

The Russians are led by a 17-year-old, 7-foot-2 stringbean named Arvidas Sabonis, who against Indiana scored 25 points, grabbed eight rebounds, blocked three shots and generally dominated the floor.

"He is an excellent athlete," Knight said, "a big kid with great instincts. But this is not a team of individuals. It is a team with a lot of fine players who work together marvelously."

It's a young squad with only one holdover from the 1980 Moscow Olympic team, beaten out by Yugoslavia for the gold medal. That is Nicolai Deryugin, 23, five years with the USSR national team.

"Most overseas teams play a mechanical, stereotyped game, as if following instructions in a book," Knight said. "Not these fellows. They flow with the action, improvise and react instinctively — the closest thing I've seen to an American team."

ON ONE of his American stops, the veteran USSR coach, Alexandr Gomelski, was asked where Sabonis came from.

"From Kaunas," he replied.

"Where's that?" someone asked.

"Basketball country, basketball country," he said with a broad smile.

Basketball is relatively new in the Soviet Union, the first Olympic team was fielded in 1972 in Helsinki. The early teams were big, slow and awkward. All the strategy was gleaned from books by such legendary U. S. teaching masters as Claire Bee and Nat Holman.

Once they thought height and strength were the secret. They put a monster of a man named Kuminsch — 7-3 and close to 300 pounds — under the basket. But he proved a hunk of concrete. He couldn't jump. He moved sluggishly. The Yanks ran rings around him.

The Americans squeaked out a "pitcher's battle" victory.

But the game in the vast Soviet Union has come a long way since those days. There are 3.6 million registered players in the country of 280 million, 1.3 of them graded athletes, meaning they are competition worthy. Twelve hundred are Masters of Sport — the USSR's highest echelon.

The current 12-man squad touring the United States comprise the cream of this great reservoir. There is no professionalism — as such — in the Communist USSR. Everybody is beholden to the state.

Thus, to make a comparison between the true basketball strength of the two nations, one would have to include the pros in the National Basketball Association — Abdul-Kareem Jabbar, Julius Erving, Larry Bird, Magic Johnson and their big, tough, sharpshooting contemporaries..

Could the best Russian team hold its own against such an awesome American array as is true today in ice hockey?

"I don't want to discuss that," said Knight, concerned only that the colleges can produce a crop two years hence capable of avenging the bitter 1972 loss to the Russians in Munich.

"I can tell you this. This is a tall, agile and very smart team. They will be working together for two years, playing maybe a dozen tournaments. Right now, I have no idea who will be on the American team. We will have about five weeks to get ready.

"That gives the Russians a big advantage."

Steve Garvey visits with Giants

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Steve Garvey, who spent a good part of his Los Angeles Dodgers career clobbering rival San Francisco, came north Thursday to talk about joining the Giants.

In the first of five stops to look for a new home after spending 14 years in the Dodger organization, Garvey was told by the Giants that they would give him the five-year contract he's seeking.

Giants Manager Frank Robinson, who came close to delivering a pennant winner last season, made no secret of his desire for the veteran slugger. Garvey has hit .330 against the Giants in his career and 11 of his 24 homers against them have come in Candlestick Park.

"I feel good about it in the sense that he came here, but all we can do is try to make it attractive enough that he wants to play here," Robinson said. "We've done that, and now we have no control over it. It's Garvey's choice."

After a one-hour negotiating session, General Manager Tom Haller said he felt signing Garvey was "do-able." Haller would like to have Garvey signed before the winter meetings in Hawaii in two weeks.

Garvey, accompanied by agent Jerry Kapstein, is planning visits to New York, Chicago, Houston and San Diego to consider "where I want to live these next five years."

Nine teams selected Garvey in the free agent re-entry draft. Kapstein said he's had "substantive" talks with eight of them, but indicated that teams in the five cities they'll visit "have the inside track."

"Being a professional, I think I can play anywhere and find a way to help the team win," Garvey said.

World Series produces record haul

NEW YORK (AP) — Baseball's 79th World Series produced record winnings of $43,279.69 for each member of the world champion St. Louis Cardinals who was voted a full share, and $31,934.99 apiece, second highest losing share in history, for the Milwaukee Brewers, Commissioner Bowie Kuhn announced Thursday.

The Series produced a record player pool of $4,500,467.78, topping the mark of $4,143,060.63 set in 1981 by the Los Angeles Dodgers and New York Yankees. Total net receipts for postseason play topped $10 million for the first time with the two League Championship Series producing $4,371,179.18 and the World Series $6,421,055.31.

The Cardinals voted 32 full shares, 30 to uniformed personnel, with three-quarter grants of $32,459.77 going to pitchers Jeff Lahti and John Martin and half shares of $21,639.85 to six others, including three players, Jeff Keener, Mark Littell and Orlando Sanchez. Four other players, Kelly Paris, Eric Rasmussen, Andy Rincon and Gene Roof, received cash grants of $500 apiece.

The Brewers voted 35 full shares, with one-third shares of $10,644.99 to three players.

HOUSTON (AP) — University of Houston basketball Coach Guy Lewis is looking for a quarterback.

Translated, that means he's got all the inside talent he could ask for in 7-foot Akeem Olajuwon, 6-6 Clyde Drexler, 6-6 Michael Young and 6-9 Larry Micheaux.

All he needs now is a point guard to take charge and get them the ball.

"No one has come forward to take charge," said Lewis, whose Cougars advanced to the NCAA National Championship tournament last season before losing to eventual champion North Carolina in the semifinals.

"I'm just like a football coach who doesn't like to have two quarterbaeks," he said. "I want one of them to come forward."

Lewis is trying to replace starting guards Rob Williams, who passed up his senior year to become a first-round draft choice of the Denver Nuggets, and Lynden Rose.

LEWIS USES his lack of a starting guard as a beachhead for putting the favorites' role in the Southwest Conference race on Arkansas. Lewis also thinks Texas A&M and Texas Christian will be contenders.

The Razorbacks didn't make it as far in the NCAA playoffs as Houston last season, but they did win the SWC title with an 84-69 victory over the Cougars in the SWC tournament finals.

The Razorbacks will depend on mercurial Darrell Walker, a senior from Chicago, who averaged 14.8 points last season, and newcomer Joe Kleine, a 6-11 sophomore transfer from Notre Dame.

Sutton just as quickly tosses the favorites' role back to the Cougars.

"Houston should really be something," Sutton said. "No one may touch them."

TCU RETURNS four starters, including the team's two top scorers, Doug Arnold, who averaged 19.5 points last season and Darrell Browder, who hit 16.8 per game.

"Arnold and Browder are the top two returning scorers in the conference," TCU Coach Jim Killingsworth said. "We've got a lot of experience returning for us this season, so we ought to know what we are doing."

The Texas Aggies will return three starters and one part-time starter, including 6-10 Claude Riley, the team's leading scorer last season with a 16.3 average. Roy Jones, Tyren Naulls and Reggie Roberts also return.

Texas Tech, Baylor, Rice, Texas and Southern Methodist will provided improved competition.

Baylor Coach Jim Haler has returning starters Daryl Baucham, Ozell Hall and Jay Shakir, but must replace Terry Teagle, a first-round draft choice of the Houston Rockets in the National Basketball Association.

"He meant so much to us, not so just for his scoring and rebounding, but for his leadership," Haller said. "He's left a big void to fill."

Rice Coach Tommy Suitts has a similar problem in replacing Detroit first-round draft choice Ricky Pierce, the nation's No. 2 scorer last season.

But he has four returning starters to make the job easier.

"We have the confidence of coming of of our most successful season in a decade," Suitts said.

SMU RETURNS its starting lineup intact and Cach Dave Bliss is looking for improvement.

"To be successful this year we must improve in three areas — defense, rebounding and poise in close games," Bliss said.

Texas Tech suffered three key losses — Clarence Swannegan, Jeff Taylor and Steve Smith — but guard Bubba Jennings returns from an injury that wiped out his 1981-82 season.

"We have experience at point guard and small forward and we will be big inside, but we will lack experience," Tech Coach Gerald Myers said.

Sul Ross finesse faces Jewell power

ALPINE — It will be Sul Ross University's finesse against the power of William Jewell College in an NAIA Division II playoff matchup at noon Saturday at Jackson Field.

"William Jewell is a physical team," says SRU Coach Joe George of the 9-1 Cardinals from Missouri, "They rely on the run and will try to beat you with the long pass. Sul Ross is more a finesse team, relying on the high percentage pass plays, combined with a balanced running attack."

The Cardinals have rushed 443 and passed 215 times this season the Lobos are 320 passes to 313 running plays.

It will be a battle of quarterbacks Larry Hill, 6-1, 190-pound senior for Sul Ross, and Kelly Groom, 6-0, 175-senior for the Cardinals.

Hill ranks in the top 10 in total offense with 243.6 yards a game and is sixth nationally with 257.4 yards per game passing.

Groom is 14th in total offense with 210 yards and, while unranked nationally, has thrown for 1,615 yards.

SRU looks to 6-0, 210-pound Andrew Hill, a junior from Lockhart, for its tough yardage while Steve Hodges, a 5-10, 200, junior, is the runner the Lobos must short circuit. Hodges is averaging 4.9 yards per carry.

Both teams are ranked in the nation's Top 10. Sul Ross is No. 4 after winning the TIAA title with a 9-0 overall record. William Jewell won the Heart of America Conference and finished 9-1. The lone loss was to Mid-America Nazarene, 9-7.

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. (AP) — Coach Bear Bryant kicked three senior running backs off his Alabama football team Thursday, saying they did not have a winning attitude.

"I am disassociating three players from our football team — Charlie Williams, Ken Simon and Earl Collins," Bryant said. "This is a result of two things: No.1, I don't think they have a winning attitude to help the team; and, 2, now they can have all the time they need to study.

"They need to pass their work and get an education like they came here to do and if we have any more like them, the same thing will happen to them."

Asked if academics was the primary reason, Bryant said, "Academics had nothing to do with it. They just didn't have a winning attitude on or off the field. It's best for them that they spend their time studying."

Bryant, whose Crimson Tide is 7-3 this season, said the dismissals were permanent, meaning the players would miss the final regular season game against Auburn Nov.27 and the Tide's expected appearance in the Liberty Bowl against Illinois Dec.29.

Last year, Simon was involved in an incident in which he fired a shotgun but he retained his status on the team. Williams got in Bryant's doghouse in 1981 for failing to report to the training room as instructed.

Simon played in nine games this season, carrying 18 times for 101 yards. Collins had 21 yards on five carries, while the injury pmlagued Williams did not get into any games this season.

Kim's mother doesn't blame Mancini

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Sun-Yeo Yang, who came here hoping a mother's love would work a miracle, was to return to South Korea with the body of Duk Koo Kim, the son who dreamed of winning her a world boxing title.

Mrs. Yang, scheduled to fly home today, wept Thursday as she talked of Kim's childhood dream to become his nation's greatest boxer. He was declared dead Wednesday night, four days after he was knocked out by lightweight champion Ray "Boom Boom" Mancini in the 14th round of their World Boxing Association title fight.

She said she would bury him by the sea near the fishing village of Kojin, 140 miles east of Seoul, because Kim once told her "If I die, I want to sleep in my hometown."

She cried as she told of watching the fight on Korean television. Technical troubles in the 11th round spared her seeing Mancini inflict what would be the fatal blow three rounds later.

The frail, tiny woman fought back tears as she talked of Mancini.

"I would never blame Mr. Mancini," she said through interpreter Tom Byun. "I am aware that Mr. Mancini prayed for my son. Many people told me that he is a good fighter, that he prayed for my son. I know it (Kim's death) is nobody's fault.

"I hope he will continue his boxing, become an even greater boxer" she said of Mancini. "I hope nobody will blame him."

Mancini has announced postponement of his scheduled title defense next month against Robert Elizondo.

Mrs. Yang said she had been unable to sleep since giving doctors permission Wednesday to remove the life-support system. Kim never regained consciousness after falling to the canvas at Caesar's Palace. Doctors performed surgery on Kim, but said he was brain-dead.

"I killed my son," Kim's mother said of her decision to donate the comatose fighter's kidneys after a judge had declared Kim legally dead. "It was a very, very terrible night."

She said Kim, 23, had bragged to his step-brother before leaving for the United States that he would return with a championship belt "to show my mother."

The step-brother, Kun-Young Kim, listened in shock Wednesday as acupunturists flown to Las Vegas at the request of the family said the fighter "belongs to the dead."

It fell upon the step-brother to take the message to his mother.

Mrs. Yang's eyes sparkled and her tiny fists jabbed at the air as she told of a much-younger Kim's dreams.

"When he was in elementary school he took sandbags and hung them between two stakes in our backyard," she recalled. "He would jab at the bags and dance around. He trained himself."

Kim left home at the age of 14 and went to Seoul where he met Hyun Chi Kim, a former Korean boxing great who became his mentor, manager and surrogate father.

He was 17-1-1 when he was signed to fight Mancini for $20,000.

Michigan, Arkansas picked

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Sports Writer

Two college football games which often settle the Rose Bowl matchup have a different twist this year and will be played strictly for bragging rights Saturday.

Thirteenth-ranked Michigan, which visits Ohio State, is in the Rose Bowl as Big Ten Conference champion, making it the first time since 1971 this annual war won't help settle the league race.

Ironically, No. 11 UCLA and No. 15 Southern California will be playing in the Rose Bowl rather than for the Rose Bowl since the Rose Bowl became UCLA's home field this year.

Michigan is a 1½-point favorite to gain revenge against Ohio State, which prevented the Wolverines from going to Pasadena last year by beating them.

"I'm up. I hope the players will be," said Michigan Coach Bo Schembechler.

Both teams are hot, Michigan having won seven games in a row and Ohio State five. The pick is ... Michigan 20-13.

Southern Cal, on probation and ineligible for a postseason game, is a 1-point favorite over UCLA, which still has an outside shot at the Rose Bowl — if it beats the Trojans, if Washington State upsets Washington, if Arizona knocks off Arizona State next Saturday. Too many ifs ... UCLA 28-21.

Last week's score was 38 right and 10 wrong for a percentage of .792. For the season, the count is 384 right, 129 wrong and 11 ties for a .748 percentage. Against the points, last week produced an 18-13 record for a .581 mark. On the year, it's 148-150-1—.497.

No. 9 Arkansas at No. 2 Southern Methodist (favored by 2): This decides the Cotton Bowl host if SMU wins or ties. If Arkansas wins, the Razorbacks can go to the Cotton Bowl by beating Texas Dec. 4. If Texas wins, SMU backs in. The Mustangs may have run out of miracles ... Arkansas 24-21.

No. 5 Washington (18) at Washington State: The Huskies play in Pullman for the first time since 1954 and make it to the Rose Bowl for the third year in a row ... Washington 38-14.

Rutgers at No. 6 Pitt (27): The Panthers will be looking ahead to Penn State, but they have too much of everything for Rutgers ... Pitt 35-7.

No. 7 Florida State at No. 12 LSU (pick 'em): Winner to the Orange Bowl, loser to the Gator ... LSU 24-17.

South Carolina at No. 10 Clemson (21): The Tigers will be going to a bowl after all — the Mirage Bowl in Tokyo next week against Wake Forest. No domestic bowls, though, for the defending national champs ... Clemson 27-17.

Syracuse at No. 16 West Virginia (16½): The Mountaineers chewed up the Florida Gators in last year's Peach Bowl and this year they're Gator Bowl-bound ... West Virginia 28-14.

No. 17 Texas (8) at Baylor: While many teams wind up the season this weekend, the Longhorns have three games left — Baylor, Texas A&M and Arkansas ... Texas 21-17.

No. 18 Notre Dame (8½) at Air Force: The Falcons are third in rushing offense, the Irish third in rushing defense. Upset Special of the Week ... Air Force 24-21.

No. 19 Maryland (14½) at Virginia: Why is Maryland going to the fledgling Aloha Bowl? The head of Metrosports, which televises that game, is a Maryland grad ... Maryland 28-10.

No. 20 Tulsa at North Texas State (no line): SMU's Eric Dickerson and Craig James get the headlines, but Tulsa's running back tandem of Michael Gunter and Ken Lacy is among the best ... Tulsa 38-14.

Carlsbad gets playoff shot

SANTA FE (AP) — The New Mexico Board of Education has decided to let the football teams from Carlsbad and Belen high schools play each other in the opening round this weekend of the state Class AAAA prep playoffs.

The board heard four hours of testimony Thursday before overturning a Wednesday ruling by the New Mexico Activities Association that blocked the two schools' attempts to get their teams into the playoffs.

The dispute was triggered when the two squads were voted out of the playoffs after each school finished in a three-way deadlock for first place in their respective districts.

IN DISTRICT 4AAAA, Carlsbad, Clovis and Hobbs finished tied for the district title and the three teams all had 8-2 overall records. In a meeting of the five district schools in Roswell last Saturday, Clovis was designated the district champion, Hobbs was placed second and Carlsbad third. Only the top two teams from each district advance.

Belen was voted out in a similar decision in District 2AAAA. There, the district members voted Eldorado first, Del Norte second and Belen third in a telephone vote conducted last Sunday.

In the playoffs, Hobbs plays Gallup and Farmington and Clovis square off today. The Carlsbad-Belen game will be played in Belen Sunday at 1:30 p.m., as decided by a coin flip by the Carlsbad and Belen coaches after the board's decision.

The winner of the Carlsbad-Belen contest will play the winner of the Alamogordo-Del Norte playoff Nov. 26. All other playoff teams will be idle that week. The winner of that game will advance to play the winner of the Gallup-Hobbs contest and after that, the playoffs will resume as scheduled, only one week late.

The addition of Carlsbad and Belen to the playoffs sets the state Class AAAA championship game back one week, from Dec. 3 to Dec. 10.

BOTH THE Belen and Carlsbad school systems contended throughout their protest that the system used to break ties is "unfair and abusive."

Belen High School Principal Ron Hodges said the Albuquerque Public Schools system "ganged up on the youth of Belen."

Of the five teams in District 2AAAA, Belen is the only one outside Albuquerque.

Hodges testified that he and the Belen High School coach were told by an Albuquerque sports writer before the vote last Sunday took place that Gil Miranda, Albuquerque Public Schools director of athletic activities, "sent a memorandum to the five school principals and told them to vote against Belen."

"We very obviously have been discriminated against," Hodges said.

But Miranda, given a chance to comment on the allegations, denied ever sending such instructions. "If there was a memorandum from my office, I'd like to see it," he said. "There was no memo."

Hodges also contended the Albuquerque principals did not vote on team "merit" because they voted without consulting their respective coaches as to which team had the best record and thus, should be sent to the playoffs.

"Many principals never contacted their head coaches to ask them their advice," he said. "We're talking about the Albuquerque Public Schools systems family, in which Belen is the orphan."

Both principals for Del Norte and Eldorado refuted Hodges' claims, saying they had spoken with their coaches in deciding how to vote.

REPRESENTATIVES from the Carlsbad School District said their team should be in the playoffs because it had a better overall record than the Clovis and Hobbs teams.

Carlsbad School Superintendent Roger Harrell said, "We know we have been the victims of a deliberately biased system of voting."

"Those of us from the Carlsbad district say the process is inherently abusive," he said.

Harrell said, "It can be shown by statistics that the top two teams weren't chosen" to go to the playoffs.

He gave the board copies of team records for Hobbs, Clovis and Carlsbad that showed the Cavemen had the best points-scored record overall.

But NMAA attorney Byron Caton said, "A statistical basis for handling tie-breaking may not be the best way."

Caton contended that the NMAA was not trying to "keep anyone out of the playoffs." But he said, "Our obligation in this regard is to deal with the rules we have now."

Union wins strike; players are losers

An AP Sports Analysis
By BRUCE LOWITT
AP Sports Writer

The union won the National Football League strike — but the players lost it. And for the winners, it was an empty victory at best.

The union is, in fact, Ed Garvey and his court. And this was Ed Garvey's strike. He wanted it and he got it. As for the approximate 1,500 players Garvey is paid handsomely to represent, call them the Light Brigade.

What he wanted to do was prove he could stop the league in its tracks.

He did.

But the league was ready to stay stopped, for as long as it took to prove to the union that it was the stronger of the two.

Jack Donlan was ready, with the owners' blessing, to walk away from the talks, even if it meant the next NFL game the public saw would be in the exhibition season, 1983. The league was telling the players they could try to win their jobs again next year, with or without a collective bargaining agreement. There is precedent for that. They played without one for almost three years during the mid-1970s.

THE PLAYERS sensed the predicament they were facing. They nearly rebelled. The player representatives wanted more than the owners were offering, but by then they were representing only a portion of the players.

If Garvey was sending a signal to the owners, "We can do it again five years from now," the owners sent their own signal back: "We can wait you out then, too."

Garvey had a slogan for this strike: "We are the game." He also had a goal: 55 percent of the owners' gross revenues. When he couldn't get close to that, he shortened his sights to 50 percent of the owners' television money. When he couldn't get that, he had nowhere to go.

All he had left was one-lining and name-calling and posturing in front of a phalanx of players, using them as a backdrop for his news conferences and as a diversion (trips to football commissioners and elsewhere) while the negotiations stagnated.

The players never got a percentage of anything. Granted, they got their coveted wage scale — that was their big achievement — and a one-time bonus of up to $60,000 a player and severance pay and some other benefits. But they could have had much of that without a strike, and without losing 44 percent of their 1982 salaries.

GARVEY WANTED a strike eight years ago and got a touch of it then when he was able to sweet-talk the players out of training camp. But his timing was off. Veterans and marginal players saw rookies looking for jobs and the strike was over in a hurry.

The union had a slogan then, too: "No freedom, no football." That was the union's bottom-line demand, free agency. Garvey spent three years haggling with the NFL and came away with a free-agent system that the league and Norm Thompson — but nobody else — could live with.

Thompson was a journeyman defensive back and the only player in the five-year life of the last collective bargaining agreement to move from one team to another under the option compensation plan.

Baseball executives went crazy when free agency hit their sport, emptying the banks when Catfish Hunter, Reggie Jackson and the rest of the stars put themselves up for bid. In football, Walter Payton, Lynn Swann and the rest of the stars got nothing more than a blank stare.

BUT GARVEY never went after free agency this time. Instead, he went after a share of control of the game.

He must have known, even before he sat down at the bargaining table the first time, that he had no chance of getting it. None. He might have been able to use it as a bargaining chip, as a way of turning the owners' attention to vastly liberalized free agency.

Taxpayers group keeping an eye on state's purse strings

By LESLIE HAINES
Energy-Business Writer

Next year, state government will cost Texans more than $16 billion. The consequences of what the Legislature does with that money are far-reaching and affect every citizen. One statewide lobbying organization, the Texas Association of Taxpayers, has made keeping an eye on the state's business its main business.

"In the middle of our current economic downturn, it is apparent that Texas is no longer immune to the worst effects of recession," a TAT spokesman told a group of Midland businessmen Thursday.

"This is because our economic mix today more closely resembles the profile of other industrial states," said Randall Meyer, president of Exxon Company U.S.A.

At least Texas has one thing in its favor: a conservative, pay-as-you-go state government which understands the role of the private sector in maintaining a healthy economy, he added.

Since 1971, no new or additional taxes have been imposed by the Texas Legislature, and in 1978, 1979 and 1981, substantial tax reductions were passed by the same group, according to a TAT film presented. As a result, Texas ranks fifth lowest in the nation in per capita burden of state taxes.

Essentially, TAT's goals can be summed up in one objective: "the maintenance of a productive and healthy economy in Texas through sound fiscal management of state government," Meyer said.

TAT was formed in 1971 by Texas civic, business and professional leaders, and serves as a non-partisan communications vehicle between the state's business and government communities. It is the only statewide organization which lobbies full-time for fiscal responsibility in state government.

The group has about 2,000 members and 150 business leaders which sit on its governing board. Local board members include Tony Martin, chairman of the board and chief executive officer of Midland National Bank; Allen K. Trobaugh, independent oil operator; and Cyril Wagner Jr., partner in Wagner & Brown, both of Midland; Charles R. Perry Jr., chairman of the board of Perry Gas Companies; and Homer L. Stewart Jr., president and CEO of Western National Bank, both of Odessa.

TAT advocates lean government, and will work to that end in the administration of Governor-elect Mark White, Meyer told the group.

The organization has no specific goals in mind for the next legislative session, he said, but will wait to see which issues are brought forward. A TAT brochure warns of heavy state reliance on revenues from depleting natural resources, and the fact the state budget has been doubling every six years.

Meyer said TAT will continue to work for repeal of the tax on commercial utility bills, after successfully lobbying during the administration of former Gov. Dolph Briscoe for the repeal of the tax on residential utility bills.

In spite of decisions made at the Legislature's special session earlier this year, there are still tax problems to be addressed, Meyer indicated. "We have already seen a crisis in the administration of our unemployment compensation system, and there is a good prospect that we will face serious tax proposals in the Texas Legislature in 1983," Meyer said. People can augment their participation in the decision-making process through their legislators by being involved with TAT, he added.

Through the years, TAT has always stood for something, rather than being against, in an effort to continue to get broad-based support, he said. The watch-dog group was instrumental in limiting the state government work force, starting with lobbying efforts during the Briscoe administration in the mid-1970s. TAT was one of the first groups to advocate repeal of the state ad valorem tax, a move which voters approved in the general election earlier this month. In 1978, the state enacted a bill to limit spending by the government, again, with help from TAT.

Randall Meyer

"I cannot tell you that we, or any other group, have been entirely successful," Meyer said, "but TAT has provided a restraining hand which has been effective in several instances over the past few years."

Meyer told the group it is not enough to elect responsible public officials — the public must give them constructive alternatives "to the many and varied spending demands coming at them from all sides."

He said he could not predict what the Texas economy would do in 1983, since so much depends on the national and world economic picture, which affects demand for oil and gas.

Penn Square bank attracted funds with high interest rates

WASHINGTON (AP) — In its dying days, the Penn Square Bank in Oklahoma City had more than $282 million — "an extraordinary high level" — of money directed to it by money brokers looking for high interest rates, federal regulators say.

The amount of brokered money doubled in the last two months of the bank's existence so that it represented more than half of the bank's $465 million in deposits, according to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.

The FDIC turned over its information about Penn Square to Rep. Benjamin Rosenthal, D-N.Y., chairman of the House commerce, consumer and monetary affairs subcommittee.

The government agency said the bank used above-market interest rates to attract money through brokers, apparently in part to maintain liquid assets. By doing so, Penn Square did not have to raise capital or sell assets.

The shopping center bank was shut down July 5 by the comptroller of the currency.

In the Penn Square case, money brokers or investment advisers guided financial institutions seeking high interest rates to the bank, according to congressional testimony in September. Penn Square paid the brokers commissions on the money.

In trying to find out the "purpose of such an extraordinary high level of purchased funds" in Penn Square, the insurance agency said it learned the money was apparently used to keep the bank liquid and "to 'temporarily' fund large loan commitments intended for resale." Penn Square sold oil and gas loans to several of the nation's large banks.

Rather than convert some of its assets to cash or seek more capital, the bank's management "appears to have chosen a course of action which required the soliciting of out-of-area funds by bidding above market rates for certificates of deposits provided through money brokers," the insurance agency said.

The amount of the bank's brokered money climbed rapidly, growing from a "moderate level" of less than $20 million in January 1982 to $150 million by early May and $282 million by the start of July, the FDIC said.

The letter, signed by James Sexton, director of the division of bank supervision, disclosed "a number of weaknesses" in the bank's internal controls over the brokered money and the fees paid on it.

It said some transactions were made without a formal contract.

As a result, the bank reportedly paid fees above the going rate to one unidentified broker in 1981. The fees "were reportedly calculated in an unconventional manner apparently resulting in costs (to the bank) significantly in excess of industry norms," it said.

Moreover, it said, "until early 1982 broker fees were not negotiated, expenses were not consistently accounted for, and there existed no centralization of the 'bidding' function or for contacting potential fund suppliers," the letter said.

The FDIC said, however, the bank made an attempt to correct the practices early this year and did eliminate some of the deficiencies.

The insurance agency concluded there was "little evidence of impropriety" by the money brokers.

"Quite simply, if blame is to be identified in this situation, it rests squarely with bank management's imprudent policies and control procedures," it said.

Fees paid to brokers totaled about $118,000 in 1981, rising to $206,000 in the first half of this year, it said.

In an August letter to the subcommittee, Sexton said brokered money marks a "significant element in many of our so-called 'problem' institutions, a situation requiring close monitoring and continued efforts to control the risk." But he said it was not by itself the direct cause of bank failures.

He said an easy way for banks to raise temporary money when their "core deposit base" shrinks is to offer high rates for certificates of deposits.

Unemployment filings down, economists expect increase

By The Associated Press

Fewer people are filing for unemployment benefits, but many private economists still think the jobless rate will go over October's 10.4 percent in the months ahead.

The Labor Department reported Thursday that 629,000 new claims for unemployment compensation were filed in the first week of November, a drop of 23,000 from the week before.

Economists say weekly claims over 600,000 still signal a rising unemployment rate and stress that weekly figures are volatile.

The automobile business continues to be a leader in layoffs. The major car manufacturers reported Thursday that the number of workers on indefinite layoff this week rose to a record 254,914. Temporary layoffs fell to 30,450 from 41,000.

Jack Lavery, chief economist at Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith Inc., said in his latest economic report that he expected the unemployment rate to average 10.5 percent in the current business quarter ending Dec. 31. And he forecast an increase to a peak of between 10.7 percent and 10.8 percent next year.

Morgan Guaranty Trust Co.'s economics department is projecting an average unemployment rate of 10.4 percent for the current quarter, rising to a 10.5 percent average in the first quarter of 1983 and 10.6 percent in the second quarter.

Although economists note that the unemployment rate generally increases for a few months after the start of an economic recovery, the unusually high current rate of joblessness has injected a sense of extraordinary caution in consumers. The October jobless rate of 10.4 percent was the highest in 42 years.

Consumers' reluctance to spend has delayed an expected pickup in retail sales, despite recent gains in personal incomes. The government reported Thursday that Americans' incomes rose 0.7 percent in October after rising 0.2 percent the month before. Much of the October gain was due to increases in unemployment benefits, and personal spending rose just 0.1 percent.

The report said government wages and salaries rose $3.6 billion over September while wages and salaries of private workers fell $1.8 billion. The increase in unemployment benefits received in October was $5.7 billion, reflecting recent legislation that extended payment of such benefits up to an extra 10 weeks.

But Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige said he was not discouraged by the tiny spending increase in October.

"Lower interest rates and improved consumer attitudes will boost consumer spending further during the coming months," Baldrige said. "Retailers should enjoy solid sales gains during the current holiday season compared with those of a year ago."

With income rising faster than spending, more money apparently was channeled into savings. The report said personal savings rose 10 percent to an annual rate of $156.3 billion. The national savings rate — personal savings as a percentage of disposable income — rose to 7 percent from September's 6.4 percent.

In other economic developments Thursday:

—The Investment Company Institute reported that assets of the nation's 268 money market mutual funds fell $468 million to $230.5 billion in the week ended Wednesday. Donoghue's Money Fund Report, a newsletter, said the average seven-day yield on 211 funds it follows fell to 8.55 percent from 8.65 percent a week earlier.

—An Associated Press-NBC News poll said a majority of Americans think the outcome of the Nov. 2 elections was a signal for President Reagan to change his economic policies. Democrats picked up 26 congressional seats in the elections, prompting some GOP leaders to concede that some changes in Reagan's supply-side economic program might be needed to reduce unemployment.

—Automotive News, a trade journal, reported that major U.S. automobile companies will build 103,365 cars this week in the United States, up 15.2 percent from last week. This week's total would be 8.2 percent lower than in the corresponding week last year.

—The British pound edged higher in U.S. and European trading Thursday, recovering from a three-day slide that lowered its value by 4 percent. The pound finished at $1.60275, up slightly from $1.60075 on Wednesday. At the end of last week's trading it was worth $1.65.

Economy flat in third quarter, business profits up slightly

WASHINGTON (AP) — Revising its national growth figures downward, the government said today the national economy stayed flat in the July-September quarter rather than inching upward as first estimated.

The Commerce Department report also said U.S. corporations' profits rose slightly in the quarter. However, they remained at a low level.

Neither piece of news was likely to surprise government officials and private economists, who are generally agreed that the recession moved into a 16th month in October and may well be continuing yet.

The inflation-adjusted, or "real," gross national product stayed at an annual rate of $1.478 trillion, the same as in the second quarter, the new report said.

Commerce Department economists had estimated last month — before all economic data for the third quarter was in — that there had been a gain at an annual rate of 0.8 percent. Since then, officials said newer reports — especially one showing the foreign trade deficit higher than expected for the quarter — made it likely real GNP would be revised downward.

Before adjustment for inflation, GNP rose 4.7 percent to a rate of $3.081 trillion in the quarter.

The profits picture improved only slightly. In the third quarter, the report said:

— Before-tax corporate profits rose 4.8 percent to an annual rate of $179.9 billion after rising a slim 0.1 percent in the second quarter.

— After-tax profits rose 2.4 percent to a rate of $119.1 billion after a second-quarter gain of 1.3 percent.

Many companies have reported poor profits or none at all this year, with sales sluggish and production cut back. Although profits rose a bit in the third quarter, they were far below the annual rates of $233.3 billion before taxes and $150.8 billion after taxes in the same quarter last year.

On the other hand, sluggish demand has helped keep prices from rising as quickly as in recent years. Another figure included in today's report said inflation — as measured by the broad-based GNP implicit price deflator — rose at an annual rate of 4.7 percent in the third quarter rather than the 5.4 percent estimated earlier. The annual rate for the second quarter was 4.6 percent.

As a general rule, there would have to be solid gains in real GNP for two straight quarters before there would be wide agreement the recession had ended.

And that clearly hasn't happened yet, with the figure rising at a very modest annual rate of 2.1 percent in the second quarter after plunging at rates of 5.3 percent and 5.1 percent in the two previous periods.

Since the third quarter, business conditions hardly seem to have improved, with industrial production falling again in October, manufacturers' use of their factory capacity hitting the lowest level ever recorded and unemployment rising to 10.4 percent, the highest in 42 years.

Retail sales did rise 0.6 percent in October, and Americans' total personal income gained 0.7 percent.

But economists said sales will have to pick up more quickly if consumers are to spend the nation out of recession as some officials are hoping. And Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige conceded that the personal income gain was influenced not so much by wage and salary gains but by "special factors," such as a big jump in unemployment compensation to workers laid off in the recession.

President Reagan told reporters on Wednesday he is considering asking Congress to move up the effective date of next year's tax-rate cut in order to put more money in consumers' pockets and perhaps stimulate the economy.

However, congressional reaction Thursday indicated it was far from certain such legislation could be passed.

Many members of Congress seemed concerned about the likelihood that moving the tax cut up would also add to the already soaring federal deficit.

Landowner, ARCO landman going to court in Oklahoma

ENID, Okla. (AP) — A confrontation between a landowner and an oil company landman will be resolved in court Monday — and the result could spark an oil boom in northwest Oklahoma, officials say.

Marvin McNaughton drove across his field Thursday morning to the roadblock he had set up the night before. An hour later, Randy Phipps, a landman with Atlantic Richfield Co., arrived to oversee what he thought would be the first day of drilling on McNaughton's farm.

McNaughton had blocked an access rode to an ARCO drilling site with a grain-hauling truck. Phipps asked him to remove it.

"I'll have the truck moved," Phipps said.

But McNaughton wouldn't budge.

"If the courts say you have a right to be on, then you're welcome to come," McNaughton said. "But unless I see some document that says you have the right to be here, I'm not letting you on."

When Phipps threatened to call a wrecker, McNaughton and a couple of farmers chained the truck to his fence.

The same chain had been cut by oil workers Wednesday, he said.

The feud ended with McNaughton agreeing to allow equipment not owned by the drilling company to be removed from his land and Phipps planning to wait until Monday, when the case is scheduled to be heard in Garfield County District Court.

The scene at McNaughton's farm was not merely a fight between one farmer and an oil company. Instead, it was a culmination of a long, complex legal battle over the right to drill in an 88-square-mile region west of Enid.

Some 264 potential well sites west of Enid were opened recently after the courts upheld a Corporation Commission decision.

In January 1979, the commission had changed the "spacing" for the region from one well per square mile to one well per 160 acres or quarter-mile.

That decision was upheld when the U.S. Supreme Court refused to hear the case last month. But since the land has been "despaced," another legal battle has emerged: Who has the right to drill on the land?

There are now 49 cases pending in Garfield County District Court to determine whether the oil companies have the right to drill on the quarter sections surrounding the land they've already developed.

The hearing Monday will be the first court test of the lease issue which is likely to be eventually appealed to state Supreme Court.

The confrontation on McNaughton's farm was the first serious attempt to prevent the oil companies from drilling on the new well sites.

However, another battle is being fought between Union Texas and PCX Corp. Both companies are drilling wells on the same quarter section of Elmer Brune's farm one mile west of Enid. One company will lose its well, Corporation Commission attorneys say.

Whatever the courts decide, it is likely as many as 200 wells could be drilled, injecting the local economy with an estimated $100 million in drilling costs alone.

Steelworkers may cut pay

PITTSBURGH (AP) — United Steelworkers leaders from mills across the country gathered today to consider a new contract reportedly calling for pay cuts and other concessions to save jobs.

The union's Basic Steel Industry Conference, comprised of about 600 local presidents, convened at a downtown hotel as a few dozen steelworkers demonstrated outside to protest revising the current contract, which expires in August 1983.

"We want jobs!" the protesters chanted, carrying signs which read "Vote No" and "Please Don't Put Our Union In Retreat."

"It better be shot down or we'll see the death of a union today," said union dissident Ron Weisen, president of Local 1397 in Homestead, Pa., before the meeting began.

"I'm voting no," added Chuck Leonard, president of USW Local 7097 in nearby Neville Island.

The union's executive board met privately Thursday and, according to published reports, agreed on a tentative 45-month contract that would cut wages 10 percent and reduce benefits in return for help to the jobless.

Board members refused to discuss the session, but one local official said the panel had reached a tentative agreement with negotiators for eight of the nation's largest steelmakers.

The conference, which has the power to approve any changes in the union's contract, could be asked to vote on the recommendation of the executive board.

The New York Times reported the proposed contract contained a 10 percent wage and benefit cut over 45 months and a deferral of a cost-of-living raise that had been scheduled for next month.

Steelmakers agreed to a profit-sharing plan and to contribute to depleted funds that have been paying benefits to laid-off workers, according to union and company officials whom the Times did not identify.

The steel industry, which suffered losses of more than $2 billion in the first nine months of 1982, has been pressing the union for wage and benefit cuts. The union has about 130,000 furloughed workers — about a third of the total membership.

The union had set a Dec. 1 deadline to renegotiate its three-year contract.

AND GIFT GUIDE

The Midland Reporter-Telegram

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 19, 1982

Show biz isn't all that easy to break into, says agent Tina Real. The art of making television commercials is much harder than it looks, she says, and you have to have the appearance that will sell the product. The hardest part is making it look easy.

Making commercials not all that easy

Copley News Service

Have you ever found yourself watching a TV commercial and thinking, "I could do that. There's nothing to it."?

If so, you are not alone. Theatrical agents receive dozens, sometimes hundreds, of calls each day from people who want to get into TV commercials. Many TV watchers think commercials are a quick and easy way to make a buck.

Nothing could be further from the truth. It's neither quick, nor easy — or, in fact, all that cheap — to break into The Business.

"The biggest misconception there is," said agent Nancy Washburn, "is that people look at TV commercials and tell themselves, 'I can do it better.'

"They assume that the people they're watching are not actors and actresses. That's precisely why those actors and actresses are so good. They make it look real. Not everybody can do that. Commerical acting is a special gift. Many stage actors can't do it. Some film actors can't. You just don't phone in and do it."

Usually, before they'll even talk to aspiring commercial actors and actresses, agents require them to have some background and training in the performing arts.

Then, too, people will eventually have to shell out as much as $600 to professional photographers for the "right" kinds of pictures the agents will use to present their clients to producers and casting directors.

And finally, those who want to work in commercials must have the type of job or living arrangement where they can leave for filming in the middle of the day, often on as little as a day's notice.

Plus, there is a $300 initiation fee for joining the American Federation of Television and Radio Artists (AFTRA), the performer's guild for those who work in TV and radio. AFTRA officials say actors can work once, and as often as possible within a 30-day period thereafter, before being required to join the guild. Yearly fees are based on a sliding scale geared to the amount of money earned.

The initiation fee is lower if people belong to a related performers' union, such as the Screen Actors Guild (SAG). In that instance, the fee to join AFTRA would be $150.

What are the most sought-after types for commercials?

There is always a need for "spokesmen-type" men 35 to 50 years old — men, as Washburn puts it, "who can look good, chew gum and talk at the same time."

As for ethnic types, agents agree there is generally little work for them in commercials. As for children in commercials, producers often shy away from using them because tough child labor laws make it an expensive proposition.

Producers must supply a "studio teacher" on the set at all times when youngsters are employed. For children under 6 months of age, a nurse must also be on the premises.

Still, children are occasionally used, particularly those who are spontaneous and fall in the 4- to 6-year-old category.

The 12- to 18-year-old is the "gray area" for casting, often because of the physical awkwardness of youngsters that age.

If you think you have what it takes to make commercials, don't drop in on an agent unannounced. Provide a snapshot and some background information. Then wait to be contacted. Don't call them. They'll call you. Maybe.

Harmonica, no longer a toy, finds way into concert halls

Copley News Service

What musical instrument outsells all other musical instruments combined in the United States and Canada?

Hint. It is the only instrument that can imitate any other instrument (without electronics), and it frequently does so in transcriptions of classical works.

The instrument has achieved a distinguished reputation in the concert hall, with many well-known works transcribed for it (such as Mozart's Quartet for Oboe and Strings in F Minor).

Give up? It's the harmonica, officially recognized as a legitimate musical instrument since 1948. The oldest manufactured harmonicas date back some 125 years.

According to Jack Kovoikian, U.S. marketing director for Hohner harmonicas, many of the early models have been passed down as heirlooms from generation to generation.

"Those that are in top condition may be just as valuable as fine old paintings or other collectibles," he said. "They're constantly popping up at auctions, antique shops and estate sales. But not realizing their worth, many pass them by."

Chinese emperor Huangtei is credited with the invention of the harmonica about 4,000 years ago, but most of the instruments come from the Hohner factory in the little town of Trossingen, West Germany.

The town, which has a virtual monopoly on the instrument, has most of its population employed in the harmonica-making business. They assemble the harmonicas which consists of an average of 80 parts and 150 sections.

Vibrating metal reeds inside the harmonica produce its sound as the player inhales or exhales. The instrument ranges in size from the tiny "Little Lady" that has eight reeds and can fit inside your mouth, to a 48-chord model with 384 reeds and is nearly 2 feet long. Hohner makes 160 different types of harmonicas, including one with a built-in chord structure for people who want to be sure they don't hit sour notes.

Many famous people have been harmonica players, including the late King Gustaf of Sweden, Pope Pius XI and astronaut Wally Schirra. Schirra made the harmonica the first musical instrument played in outer space.

Larry Adler, a major exponent of the classical harmonica, has appeared with such distinguished orchestras as the New York Philharmonic, the Philadelphia Symphony and the NBC Symphony.

From boxcars to symphony halls — the harmonica is a versatile and popular instrument. And that's not just a lot of hot air.

Copley News Service

Scene: The typical household, circa 2025.

Father sits down at a computer video terminal, balances his business accounts and reads the latest stock reports. Mother taps into the terminal to electronically order concert tickets. She scans a video-display catalog and purchases an evening gown.

Junior switches computer discs and edits his term paper. With a command, it's printed automatically. Meanwhile, Sister checks her astrology charts. The family budget gets balanced. The bills get paid. Even the porch lights go on and off.

At least that's the viewpoint of Rob Kling, a member of a specially formed group of scholars studying the social impacts of new technologies, economics and environmental change.

Kling argues that there is more to the technology than the ease, cultural enlightenment and efficiency predicted by many industry leaders.

More realistically, he said, there will be a raft of social problems like information tie-ups, decreasing social interaction, computerized gambling and a rapidly rising incidence of computer crime.

"One of the standard predictions is that the computer revolution will multiply people's brainpower the way the industrial revolution did muscle power," Kling said. "As a researcher, I find that misleading."

One day, for example, the only practical way to buy concert tickets may be to make orders over a home video terminal. And then, Kling said, there may be no way to ensure that anyone's computer works.

"My suspicion is that there wil be jam-ups on the communication lines in much the same way there are jam-ups on the freeway," he said.

Or, it may become common for big food stores, using computerized pricing systems, to shortchange shoppers, or for bank tellers to embezzle funds by taking advantage of preprogrammed computer auditing systems.

Or, at the very least, the populace may become so enraptured with computer conveniences and the technological enticements of computer games, cable television and ultra-stereo systems that the nation never leaves its living room.

It's (already) a world of tremendous isolation," Kling said. "Life has shifted from public participation — people belonging to churches and social groups, people knowing their neighbors — to privacy. Homes are walled off. People leave their homes through garages with automatic openers.

"These automatic (computer) systems, by making it possible to do more things from your living room chairs, will help amplify that trend."

While it is nearly impossible to predict to what extent computers may eventually dominate society — let alone all the conceivable social problems — the revolution is well under way, Kling said.

But Kling said that too often the public has been given a "Boy Scout view of the world" by computer-industry spokesmen who carry middle- and upper-class values.

The vastness and complexity of computer information networks should be expected to create their own social problems in the same way that cars brought congestion and smog or that television, with its promises of cultural enrichment, brought situation comedies.

"They talk about getting stock quotes over the computer," Kling said. "But how about off-track betting? Or on-line lotteries? Services like that are not talked about very often."

Services like gambling now are being selectively ignored by the computer industry, Kling said, but in the real world gambling may be one of the computer's most popular uses.

Currently, only a few industries — banking, air traffic control and space exploration, for example — are dependent upon the computer, but as the dependence grows so, too, will vulnerability to problems like breakdowns and acts of computer crime, Kling said.

Man's videomania transforms garage

Copley News Service

Bill Brownell sure plays a mean pinball, and he's not too bad at Space Invaders, Centipede, Deluxe 3-D Asteroids, Tank II or Football either.

Turn him loose in his double garage and it's arcade games for days.

From the outside, the Brownell home doesn't look much different than the rest of the homes in the quiet neighborhood. The garage hides behind a deceptively plain white door. Open it, duck through strands of shimmering plastic beads and hold onto your senses.

Lights from 60 beer signs careen off a collection of 30,000 beer cans that line the walls and are suspended from the ceiling. Pings, bings and explosions rocket across the room from the videogames and pinball machines that line the walls. Bizarre rocker Elton John rounds out the surreal scene by belting out "Pinball Wizard." This little corner of hyper action is where Brownell and his wife, Kathy, come to relax.

"I feel like I'm in a totally different place when I'm in the garage," said Brownell. "After a hard day's work, this is the best way I know to relieve frustrations."

The room's a good ice-breaker, too. "We've had people over we didn't know very well, and it was pretty strained. Then I took them in the garage and they opened up fast. They loved it. It was party time. They said, 'Oh, my God. It's Las Vegas!'"

The Brownells bought their home four years ago, and for the first year Brownell did nothing in his spare time but work on the garage. Then his wife put on the brakes and told him no more fantasy garage until he refurbished the rest of the house. Brownell did what was needed in just a month.

Although he describes himself as an unabashed videogame addict, Brownell says he's never dropped a quarter into one of the machines at an arcade. Instead of spending the quarters on instant gratification, he saves them until he has enough to buy another game, and they don't come cheap — $3,000 a throw.

The Brownells keep about $100 worth of quarters in a belted changer so their guests can play to oblivion. The room also has an electric beer cooler-dispenser so people don't have to interrupt play to quench their thirst and Brownell has converted the side-by-side washer and dryer into a marble-topped bar that can be broken down quickly when something as mundane as the laundry has to be done. The large hot-water heater also has been camouflaged to fit into the room; the couple had a commercial billboard artist convert it into a giant Pabst beer can.

"When I got my first game (a pinball three years ago), I never dreamed it would end up like this," Brownell said. "But the more I did, the more I wanted. The garage overpowers me. I used to build cardboard forts in the back yard when I was a kid. This is my adult version of those forts. I used to retreat into them."

Fun and games never end in Bill Brownell's personal video game parlor — a converted garage complete with five video games, three pinball machines, a bumper pool game, 60 beer signs and Brownell's collection of 30,000 beer cans.

Book's tips on video games culled from players of all ages

By GREG GROSS
Copley News Service

Combat in the stratosphere, one against 13.

Even for a practiced veteran like Ray Giguette, death seemed certain. But Giguette was expressionless and calm as he worked the controls of his ship.

Electronically guided missiles were streaking down on him even before the enemy was within range of his own weapons. Giguette coolly sideslipped the incoming fire and waited for the enemy to come into range.

A white-hot blast left his nose cannon and caught the lead ship on the left wing. The entire craft exploded in a burst of red. A clean kill. Giguette kept firing.

There was a blast of fiery red. And 24-year-old Giguette of Downey, Calif., was dead.

But even in death, he was calm. He fished another token out of his pocket, fed it into the video game, and renewed the battle.

In the world of video games, latest arena in the battle of Man vs. Machine, Giguette has spent a year developing an edge for himself, collecting tips on 10 of the more favored — and frustrating — video games from electronic arcade enthusiasts as old as 22 and as young as 12.

He has compiled his findings into a small paperback book entitled simply, "How to Win! at Video Games," published by Martin Press.

Giguette, who holds a bachelor's degree in business computers from California State University, sees himself as an ally of the consumer.

He's hoping his book will enable video-game addicts like himself to play better, thus earning more free plays and thereby slowing the games' consumption of their quarters and dollar bills.

For each of the 10 games on which he writes, Giguette includes a brief description of the game, an interview with an expert — usually identified only by a first name — and a list of suggested tactics.

Those who take on Space Invaders, for example, are advised to "destroy whole columns, especially the two end columns."

Some other tips on games include:

— Space Invaders: "After the first two waves, concentrate less on the saucers and more on the aliens."

— Missile Command: "Begin your defense with a saturation line across the screen, then pick off the remaining targets."

For the dedicated video gamesman, such advice is a matter of dollars and cents, if not "life and death."

After spending a year's time — and by his own estimate, about $600 — researching his book, Giguette says a video addict like himself can expect a steady diet of more and tougher electronic opponents.

"I think Pong was about the first. It was very, very simple and people got bored," he said. "The trend now is to make them as hard as possible without frustrating people from the very beginning."

Home video game players come in all shapes, sizes

Copley News Service

What do a minister, a fighter pilot, a financial analyst and a housewife have in common?

They are all avid home video game players. Their enthusiasm is fueled by the excitement of the games, the challenge of using quick reflexes and steely eyed concentration to beat the computer. And, in the case of a recent video contest, the lure of a $25,000 cash grand prize.

The minister, the fighter pilot, the analyst and the housewife were among 73 who earned an all-expense-paid trip to Houston to compete for a total of $100,000 in cash and prizes in the National Astrosmash Shootoff, sponsored by Mattel Electronics.

The video game competition drew over 13,000 entries during a five-month promotion. The 73 individuals who earned the chance to compete in Texas had a wide variety of backgrounds, ages and interests.

An 11-year-old whose legs dangled far above the floor as he sat in the competition chair, was the youngest contestant. The oldest competitor was a 51-year-old aerospace engineer.

These avid competitors, whose scores reached above 800,000 points during one hour of timed play on the Astrosmash game, have lots of good reasons for playing home video games. Entertainment for the family is a predominant theme, and playing with video games often seems to keep family members at home. One father of two sons says he and his boys play together and get to know each other better at the same time. A busy mother of five plays at home, while her five children serve as a cheering and coaching squad in the background. Some contestants indicated that their brothers and sisters helped them "train" for the national contest.

The challenge that video games present seems to be a major part of their charm for these skilled players. One 21-year-old sees it as "man against machine," and likes the thrill of beating the computer at its own game. A father feels the challenge of the games helps his children to develop a positive competitive spirit that can be applied elsewhere.

Cassette Tape Types

	Bias	Equalization	Characteristics
Type I	Normal Standard Ferric	120 microsecond	Can be used in all machines, including portables. For voice and non-critical music recording.
Type II	CrO2 High	70 microsecond	Chromium dioxide and chrome-substitutes provide more "room" for recording. Pure chrome is the world's quietest tape. Most high quality music recording.
Type III	FeCr (or normal)	70 microsecond	Double-coated ferrichrome combines some benefits of both ferric and pure chrome. Especially suited for car stereos, where high frequencies are important.
Type IV	Metal	70 microsecond	Very expensive and still in the developmental stages, but may be worth it for extremely critical live performances.

Right choice of blank tape, proper storage essential to good recording

Copley News Service

Ease of recording, portability and the creativity involved in recording musical programs have made cassettes far more popular than their inventors ever dreamed. Improvements in recording machines, tape formulations and noise reduction systems, too, have made their quality equal to some of the best results possible with reel-to-reel recording.

Making a good recording on cassette tape is simple if three basic steps are followed: (1) choose the right tape for the recorder, (2) maintain the equipment and store cassettes properly, and (3) set recording levels properly.

Matching tape and recorder is more than just buying a good quality tape rather than a cheap, shoddy version. There are four kinds of tape available today, each of which requires a special setting on the recorder to adjust bias and equalization. According to Terry O'Kelly, technical services manager for BASF, a major international tape manufacturer, standards recently set by the IEC (International Electrotechnical Commission) have made the process simple.

Today, all new cassettes and most recording and playback machine settings are clearly labeled "Type I" through "Type IV" to automatically compensate for tape differences. It's all accomplished with the flip of a switch. The chart below lists the tape formulations now available, including some of the language used on earlier machines.

Maintenance of cassette machines is easy, but critically important. All tapes leave some residue on moving parts which, if allowed to build up, can impede the sound signals and possibly cause the tape to stick and be damaged. Commercial cassette-shaped cleaners are available, but O'Kelly recommends a less expensive method — cotton swabs dipped in denatured alcohol to wipe the residue away.

Rules for maintaining the cassettes themselves are simple: Never touch the tape itself, never leave them in an environment you would find uncomfortable (a closed car on a summer day, for example), and keep them at least a foot away from strong magnetic fields — your TV, electric motors, hi fi speakers.

Now, the last step comes into play: setting the recording levels. Most portables are meant only for Type I ferric oxide tapes and have circuits built in which automatically set recording levels. If your machine or deck has meters, levels must be adjusted by hand.

Whether you're recording off the air off a phonograph record or using a microphone, the goal in recording is to make the level high enough to get the music or voice well above the tape hiss, but not so loud as to overload the tape and cause distortion.

Most needle-pointed meters show average loudness, and should be set from about 0 to plus 5 for the loudest musical passage. Meters with lights or illuminated bars, however, are the "peak-reading" type, and can be increased to the point where it reads 0 to plus 2 on the scale or where the overload light appears.

It's always a good idea to "rehearse" before doing your actual taping. Using the same material, whether live or recorded, experiment with various settings from the lowest to the highest and listen to the difference. A little practice will give you a professional touch.

Follow these simple rules — match tape and machine setting, keep it clean and comfortable, and watch your needles — and you're on your way to all the fun and excitement of making expert-quality cassette recordings.

Television, too, getting trim

By ELAINE BENVENUTO
Copley News Service

In tune with the times, the new television sets are getting slimmer and trimmer. This is good news for families living in small homes or cramped apartments and thinking about buying a new TV.

How does a TV set reduce its waistline and improve its appearance? In most cases, according to RCA Vice President D. Joseph Donahue, it's done by using a newly developed wide-angle picture tube. The new tubes have resulted in dramatic size reductions in new televisions.

"A 25-inch set can now fit in the space of a 19-inch conventional receiver," says Donahue.

In addition to slimmer models, TV manufacturers are also offering a variety of tiny TV's for mobile viewers. Sets with screens as small as 5 inches offer everything from removable sun visors to digital clocks.

On the other end of the spectrum, the new wide-screen projection models are very popular, too. They bring the feel of an actual movie theater to home viewing.

Sets like these, with 45- or 50-inch screens, are being used by more and more families for viewing movies at home using videodisc players or video recorders. Often they form the focal point of a video home entertainment center. Both front- and rear-projection models are available with a variety of sound systems.

Prospective shoppers will discover plenty of new features in sets this year, too. For instance, most new models have electronic tuning with no moving parts to wear out. Many sets feature remote control units. And some remote control units use an infrared beam that is immune to signals from vacuum cleaners, blenders, airplanes and the like.

Whatever your family's preference in TV sets, there is bound to be a model to fit your needs.

By TERRY LEE
Copley News Service

It's 7 o'clock in Anytown, North America. As the house lights go down, the 20th Century-Fox familiar logo and trademark appears and the famous theme song sounds off. Trumpets bassi vibrantly, and suddenly the image of Paul Newman as Butch Cassidy, bigger than life, fills the screen. It's Saturday night, and everyone is caught up in the magic of the movies.

But this performance isn't taking place at the local neighborhood theater. It's happening in the family recreation room, and the schedule of the performance is controlled by Mom and Dad. Butch, Sundance and all their rascal buddies have come to life with theater-quality sound and a large, clear screen image, at home — courtesy of an amazing new group of devices that can convert any home into a mini-movie theater, and of the moviemakers themselves. It's all part of what social scientists are calling the "Home Video Revolution."

The central element, of course, is still the television set — whether it is a conventional picture tube-quipped unit or one of the new large-screen "projection televisions." But the monopoly on programming once held by local TV stations is now a thing of the past. In virtually every community in North America, prerecorded video programs in the form of both videocassettes and videodiscs are available. It's a whole new era in selectable television viewing — one in which each family can select what it wants to watch and when it wants to watch it.

The playback machines are simple to use. Both videocassette recorders and videodisc players connect to any television set through the familiar antenna terminals on the rear. Playing a videocassette is as easy as playing any music cassette: The user simply inserts the tape cartridge and pushes the play button. Videodisc players are equally straightforward. Depending on the type, the user either lifts the lid and places a videodisc on the phonograph-like platter, or slides a disc into a slot.

Both videorecorders and videodisc players produce a clear, bright picture. Prerecorded tape and disc programs are completely unaffected by poor weather, passing airplanes or antenna placement, and will keep their high-quality picture quality through hundreds of playings, too.

At present, there are two different types of tapes and two types of discs available for home use, but since most popular programs are available in all four, choosing the right tape or disc for your machine usually requires just telling the store clerk what type of recorder or disc player you have. Videorecorders are also handy for making live recordings of your family activities "home-movie" style, in conjunction with a separate video camera. Videodisc players don't record at all.

Even at this early stage of the home video revolution, the variety of programs available is staggering in its diversity. Leafing through the CBS-Fox Video catalog — one of the largest assortments of videocassette programs available — the range of entertainment offered by the home video revolution is evident. Blockbusters like "Star Wars," classic films like "Casablanca," even how-to productions on magic and dance, cartoon collections and musical concerts — all are available on videocassette.

A growing number of these films have an additional kind of appeal: the added dimension of stereo sound. By connecting a stereo videocassette recorder to a home stereo system just as you would an audio tape deck, it's possible to achieve a home movie experience that matches the impact of a theater performance both visually and sonically.

Many videodiscs and videoplayers also have stereo sound, achieved through a simple interconnection with any home stereo music system. One of the most interesting new forms of prerecorded entertainment, in fact, is the stereo "concert video" — a complete live performance by a musical artist or group, captured on a video recording with all the excitement and immediacy of the real thing.

Your VCR may be chance to make some extra money

Copley News Service

If you are like a growing number of people, one of your newest possessions is a video cassette recorder (VCR).

Not only can you have fun with your VCR, but you can make money with it as well.

Most insurance companies encourage customers to make a detailed list of their belongings. That makes it easier for victims of theft or damage to file a claim. However, words on paper are not as good as visual evidence of one's possessions. You can offer your services to home owners for either an hourly or flat rate.

More and more people are having weddings, graduations, bar mitzvahs and other important events in their lives recorded on videotape. One East Coast man does over 200 such affairs each year. He has gotten so much business, he's had to hire a crew.

Many special-interest automobile fans often find the car of their dreams is located hundreds of miles away. Often this means he or she has to make a purchasing decision based on a photo the seller sends, or travel to inspect the car in person.

Some car-buff VCR owners are now offering to send video inspections of specific cars a person would like to see before buying. You can find customers for such a service in the large circulation old-car publications. Or you can contact a company that does this and see if they need someone in your part of the country.

If you're creative, you may want to create your own original programming. Instructional cassettes are among the easiest and cheapest to make. Once the master tape is made, it's easy to produce as many (or few) copies as you like. Just hook your VCR to another. In most communities, you can rent an additional VCR for $12 a day or less. And any unsold cassettes you make can be erased and used for something else.

When TV not available, tune in your trusty radio

By BILL RAPPAPORT

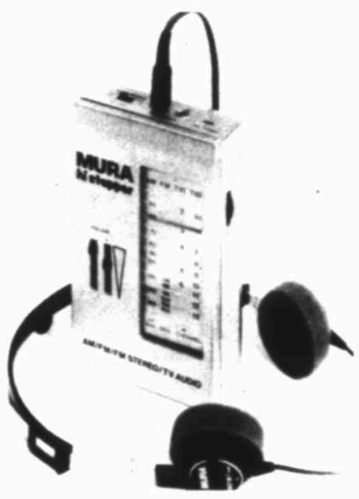
"General Hospital's" Luke and Laura are set to tie the knot. It's 3 p.m., and a television is nowhere to be found. Don't worry, "General Hospital" fans can still be part of this monumental occasion. The answer is radio.

The audio portion of popular television shows can be heard on a variety of new portable radios, such as General Electric's "Super Seven" and the Mura "HI-9 Stepper." Both radios provide the dedicated TV fan with a chance to listen when they can't watch their favorite shows.

Without ever having to miss her favorite character's dilemma being solved, the working woman can spend her 1 p.m. lunch hour leisurely listening to ABC's "All My Children." And these lightweight, inexpensive, portable radios allow people to move through their homes tending to household chores while "eavesdropping" on "Erica's telephone call to Mrs. Brandon Kingsley."

"It is evident that soap opera viewers know the characters and storylines so well, that they in fact don't need to sit down and watch the show," says General Electic Marketing Manager Bill Smith.

Daytime television is not the only beneficiary of these exceptional radios (whose other features include VHF-TV, AM-FM, CB and Instant Weather). Talk shows like the "Tonight Show" and "Phil Donahue" are perfect "listening programs."



With a portable radio that features TV audio, you can keep up with your favorite programs even if you are miles from the nearest television set.

In fact, TV sound is even offered on some digital clock radios. So, TV lovers can have Johnny Carson put them to sleep while Jane Pauley of the "Today Show" awakens them with the news of the day.

These radios allow viewers to appreciate a show without having to sit in the living room or lug around the family's 19-inch portable television.

TV, with all advancements, may beentering 'midlife crisis'

By FRANK JOSEPHS
Copley News Service

The television set is experiencing something like a mid-life crisis. That little box with the small screen that so changed our lives 30 years ago has developed such an extended family of systems, gadgets and devices that even the most astute TV watcher can hardly keep up with the new products and applications.

The change started, according to General Electric Co.'s video experts, with the advent of cable TV. No longer were TV sets limited to stations that were within the range of small rabbit ear or rooftop antennas. Cable delivered shows from stations across the country and overseas.

As cable spread across the nation, new video equipment began appearing in showrooms and living rooms. What once seemed like the stuff of science fiction, is very much a reality today.

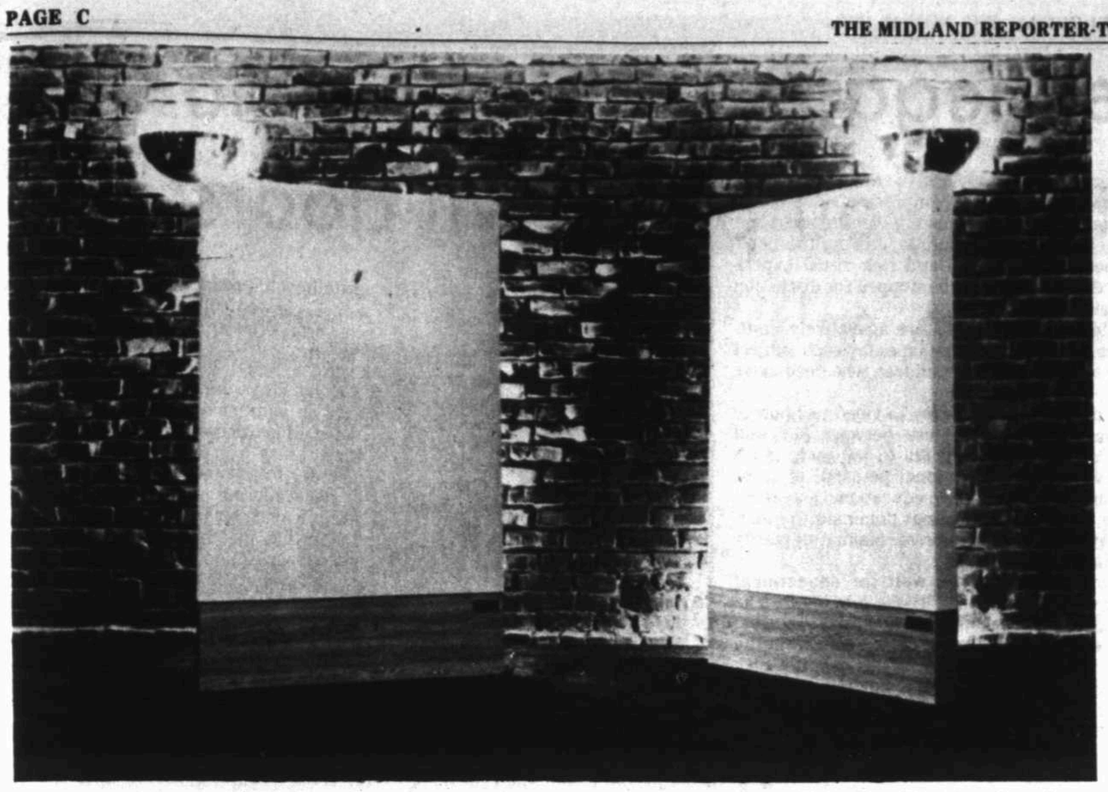
If you're slightly confused about some of the many new home electronics equipment, you'll appreciate this glossary developed by the GE video experts:

— WIDESCREEN TELEVISION. The heart of the new home video system, this TV has a screen measuring 40 or more inches diagonally. Advanced models are designed to keep pace with the "video boom" by providing additional audio and video jacks.

— VCR. This is the video cassette recorder (also called VTR, video tape recorder). The VCR plays prerecorded videotapes, or lets you record your own — either directly from the TV or with a video camera. On most VCRs you can record one television show while watching another or record a show while you are out of the house. Advanced VCRs can even be programmed to record multiple shows over a period of weeks.

— VIDEO CAMERA. The video camera is perhaps the biggest money saver of the "new electronics." For example, six hours of 8mm home movies made with a standard movie camera would cost between $1,200 and $1,400 to purchase and develop, requiring 120 cans of 50-foot film. A video camera could tape that same amount of footage for about $16 to $18, using one videotape cassette. Videotape is reusable, too. And, with videotape you can play the scene back immediately with no waiting for processing.

— PORTABLE VCR. This is the on-the-go version of the home VCR. It permits the video camera to leave the home.



Loudspeakers become sculpture in a the dreamlike setting of Lyric's new listening facility, constructed of rough brick designed to reflect sonic energy in a random pattern for sound as natural as possible.

Facility reserves two rooms for speaker demonstrations

By ROBERT JOHNS
Copley News Service

The hi-fi section of the average retail store doesn't cost half a million dollars to build or occupy four entire rooms. But there is nothing average about the Lyric facility designed by former electronics engineer Michael Kay.

Kay's clientele include such musical notables as composer Marvin Hamlisch and singer Cat Stevens, so he decided to build the "world's most elaborate and acoustically accurate demonstration facility."

Two rooms in the Lyric center in New York City are dedicated solely to demonstrations of loudspeakers which are heard one pair at a time. Kay does not believe in lining up different brands of speakers and switching from one to another. He claims that such comparisons are an insult to the customer because they "choke" the speakers and make them all sound the same — awful.

The demonstration facility's largest room, the Pure Audio Room, was designed to be "the most neutral room there is," according to Kay. And, finally, there is the Media Room which contains "the best video, the best audio and whatever technology the future will bring."

At Lyric, you won't stand in a group with several others to hear the loudspeaker of your choice demonstrated. Kay insists that each of his four rooms contains one single customer or party of customers at a time. And if those customers want to ensure their privacy, the doors can be locked.

The four rooms have no common walls. And none of the rooms contain parallel surfaces which would prevent totally accurate sound reproduction. Instead, they each feature two acoustically live walls constructed of bricks with random reflective surfaces which face wood-fiberglass walls.

And no one will hear even the slightest rumble indicating that the city subway system passes under the store. Each room has a concrete floor which rests on fiberglass to prevent vibration.

Kay's philosophy of providing only the best includes not only the audio and video equipment he sells, but also the environment in which it is displayed and stored. His four-room facility is as unique as it is acoustically accurate.

Kay admits that the project was frustrating at times, especially since he and his staff had to do business from a construction site for almost a year. But the audio expert is proud of his achievement and feels it will help his customers select the best music systems.

"Much of what you hear when hi-fi equipment is being demonstrated in so-called normal conditions is the room," Kay points out. "But at Lyric, when we put on a record and turn down the lights, the room all but disappears. It is not only invisible to the eye but to the ear as well, and what becomes apparent is a complete musical performance."

Price, size among factors to consider when choosing best stereo speakers

Copley News Service

Compare two high-fidelity receivers or amplifiers in the same price class and chances are you'll be unable to detect any sonic differences between them. Speakers, however, are another matter.

This is because every model adds at least some coloration to the musical program material played through it, and each has a voice of its own.

Just as one person's voice may be more pleasing to your ear than that of another, you are sure to prefer the vocal characteristics of some speakers to others. That makes listening the key to choosing the right loudspeaker and knowing what to listen for is of prime importance.

There are a couple of things to consider beforehand, however. "The large number of speaker brands and models makes it essential for buyers to narrow the field before listening tests begin," points out Larry Daywitt, marketing manager for ADS, a high-fidelity speaker manufacturer. "Obviously, price is a good place to start."

After your budget, consider size, advises Daywitt. This is an important factor because many listening rooms cannot easily accommodate larger floor-standing speakers. For many who occupy today's diminished living spaces, an ideal solution may be the highly compact mini-speaker.

"Once a buyer is comfortable with a price and size range, the time has come to begin listening," says Daywitt. Compare only two speaker models at a time, he advises, "and bring your own records along since you'll be familiar with the musical program material they contain.

"Always make sure the dealer has the speakers equalized, which means they play at the same volume," urges the audio specialist. "It's a quirk of human hearing that the loudest speaker always sounds best."

Listen to the tonal quality of bass, mid-range and treble separately, Daywitt recommends. "The highs should be smooth and silky, without a hint of screech. This is important because the more you listen to a pair of speakers the more exaggerated any unpleasant sonic characteristics in the high-frequency region will become."

Mid-range is the area the human voice occupies, and Daywitt advises tuning in on an FM announcer to test a loudspeaker's mid-frequency response. His or her voice should sound natural and clear.

Bass tones, according to Daywitt, should sound tight, solid, deep and musical. Inferior speakers produce an artificial-sounding, toneless thump.

Test a speaker's ability to reproduce transient, sharp sounds, by listening to snare drum beats, castanets or a plucked guitar string. These should come across clean, without any hint of fuzziness.

To test a speaker for tonal balance, Daywitt suggests listening to a full-range orchestral recording. Treble, bass and mid-range tones should be reproduced with equal emphasis, he states, adding that listeners should be able to define individual instruments and voices. "Nothing should sound muddy, but nothing should stand out in a pronounced way either."

While high frequencies tend to project in a single direction like a flashlight beam, well-designed loudspeakers disperse treble information to all points in a listening area. Walk from one side of the room to the other, noting that if the highs diminish as you move off axis from a speaker, it lacks adequate dispersion.

Mini-speakers may be the ideal solution for fitting big sound into small spaces. Experts say that size is as important a factor as price when determining the best speakers for your home.

Children could inherit big video legacy

By CLARE O'BRIEN
Copley News Service

Children could be the principal beneficiaries of the video revolution — if and when the software lives up to the grand promises of the machinery.

The fantasy that each family can do its own programming, broadcasting only those shows parents choose, remains a pipe dream for the time being. Until the cost of equipment and prerecorded tapes comes down considerably, only the well-to-do will have personal video libraries.

Home video cassette recorders(VCR), machines that will record from the TV set or play prerecorded tapes, cost anywhere from $450 to $1,500, depending on capabilities. A good machine for home use averages $700. Blank tapes for three hours of recording cost between $10 and $15. Prerecorded tapes cost between $60 and $100.

The ideal setup for families that want to select what their preschool and school-age children watch would be to own a recorder and blank tapes. Programs for preschoolers are scarce and tend to be clustered in time blocks that exceed the children's concentration span. By recording these programs, parents can play them at times of optimum interest and energy, which certainly varies with each child. Viewing along with the children, parents can interpret segments that raise questions or stimulate either curiosity or anxiety, common phenomena among preschool youngsters. Programs that teach particular things, such as "Sesame Street," or deal with special feelings, such as "Mr. Rogers Neighborhood," can be played again and again until the skill or feeling is mastered.

Parents also could build tape libraries around special needs or interests of school-age children. These youngsters watch an average of four hours of television a day. Judging by what's broadcast in the hours they are not in school, before 8 and after 4, it is not difficult to imagine how a VCR might improve viewing choices for this age group.

Commercial tapes offer a great deal for this age group. Nearly all the Disney films are available for sale or rent. So are filmed classics, such as "The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn," "Heidi" and "Black Beauty," to name just a few.

Schools have been enriching curriculums with VCRs for almost as many years as the equipment has existed. Many have recorders, cameras and playback systems (at an average cost of $2,000) that they use in a variety of creative ways.

Schools with imaginative teachers and a few thousand dollars for videotapes regularly add depth to classroom subjects. Recorded news documentaries or science programs, for example, give children the benefit of expert reporting and penetrating research. In music, art and literature classes, concerts and plays can be screened when appropriate. Among the benefits are superb performances and rich visual experiences. Also, the machine may be stopped for discussion and clarification.

Prerecorded tapes for school are a relatively undeveloped area. But skills-practice tapes for each subject are possible and desirable for children who need extra work.

The most dramatic growth area in video technology is video games. Each system costs between $125 and $200. Tapes cost an additional $20 to $30 each. Much has been made of the educational potential of these games. Advertisements push the educational aspects of the medium. But space-war games dominate the market, and they do little but improve manual dexterity and create video game junkies.

Frustrations abound as we wait for educational material to be developed for these machines. The potential is limitless. Perhaps new programs will coincide with the price reductions suppliers expect. In the meantime, the pipe dream of being our own network programming executive will have to hold us.

Teletext: How will it affect newspapers?

By RICHARD LOUV
Copley News Service

August 13, 1991 — The Daily Newspaper died yesterday after a long illness.

There was no official announcement and no services are planned.

After an illustrious career beginning shortly after the invention of the Gutenberg press, the Newspaper provided several centuries of service, usually comforting the afflicted and sometimes afflicting the comfortable.

Known as a dependable, if gray, source of news and information, it was often seen on the front steps of homes throughout the country, and will be sorely missed by newsboys, newsgirls and parakeets.

The Newspaper is survived by its next of kin, videotext, AKA Electronic Publishing.

So might go a future obituary.

But don't send flowers yet. Some experts believe the imminent death of newspapers is greatly exaggerated, that people won't want to read the morning news on their television sets.

But the possibility that videotext could weaken the financial base of newspapers is being discussed within the corporate ranks of the media. Indeed, newspapers are taking the threat seriously enough to invest millions of dollars in electronic publishing.

At its most basic, electronic publishing is the distribution of text data over television cables, telephone lines or piggyback on an ordinary TV broadcast signal.

This data is then viewed on a converted television or the screen of a home computer terminal.

On some systems you can, at any time, push a few buttons and receive an up-to-the-minute weather or stock market report. If you're shopping for a used motorboat, you can request continually updated ads for used motorboats. If you would rather ignore the latest assassination, you can just call up the sports page.

The medium is so new that the video industry has yet to sort out a confusing array of names, including videotex, viewdata, teletext, videotext, Test-TV and, in Britain, Prestel.

Committees have been formed to sort out the terminology, but videotext is generally considered a generic term for the various forms of electronic publishing.

Despite all the predictions, no one knows if the public will take to videotext. In fact, there is mounting evidence that the future of electronic publishing is limited, not by technology, but by human nature.

Videotext is not portable.

You can't stick it in your back pocket or take it on a subway or a bus, or curl up with it for a good read on a rainy afternoon. And browsing through it is time-consuming and expensive.

What videotext does well is give instant access to particular information. Videotext also fits in with the advertising industry's growing desire to eschew mass advertising in favor of targeting a campaign on small, specialized markets. Also, all those spinning electrons are potentially a lot cheaper than the wood pulp used to make newsprint.

With all the millions spent on electronic publishing, the question remains: Will people accept this new medium?

Some sociologists predict that the telecommunication revolution will be followed soon by a counterrevolution of consumers who ignore or fear the new technology.

"Nobody has ever asked me, as a consumer, if I want an electronic newspaper," says David Berkman, chairman of the telecommunications and film department of the S.I. Newhouse School of Communications at Syracuse University in New York. "If my newspaper is on my doorstep at 6 a.m., placed there by a newsboy or newsgirl who has been supplied a job in the process, why would I want it electronically delivered at 4:30 a.m.?"

Copley News Service

Auto sound hardware has undergone a miraculous transformation in recent years.

Not long ago, the term "car stereo" referred to an inexpensive eight-track tape player designed for mounting below the dashboard. Today's auto sound systems are more likely to incorporate an in-dash AM-FM radio combined with a cassette player and one or more pairs of speakers in a system costing several hundred dollars or more.

A fine auto sound system is an investment in pleasure, and buyers should choose car stereo components carefully. Experts recommend you audition a variety of systems before settling on one.

"People wouldn't dream of buying a home audio system without hearing it," comments Richard Schaar, vice president of marketing for Jensen's Car Audio Division. Schaar advises consumers to "find a dealer who has the ability to let you hear the automotive system you're going to buy."

Auto sound hardware differs from home audio components in that it must be designed to fit a specific make and model of automobile, Schaar points out. Always consult your dealer to be sure the equipment you purchase can be easily installed in your car.

About half of today's auto sound buyers do their own installing. If you plan a do-it-yourself installation, the Jensen audio expert recommends consulting your dealer first to find out how much dismantling and reassembly will be necessary. A key factor here is what kind of automobile you own.

If you want your system put in by a pro, your dealer will probably be able to recommend a qualified specialist and may even have one on his staff.

Good sound is just one of the things to look for in auto sound hardware. Since you'll be operating the equipment while driving, automation can be important for safety's sake, according to Scharr. An automatic reverse provision in the cassette player, for instance, means you won't have to take your hands off the wheel to flip the tape. And a car tape player that offers locking fast-forward and rewind means that you won't have to keep a hand on the control throughout the entire operation.

A feature that is becoming more popular is digital synthesized tuning which means that AM and FM tuning is done by using an actual digital display of radio frequency much like a digital wristwatch shows time. The use of this technology gives the consumer several important benefits, such as more precise tuning, electronic push-button tuning and the ability to have the receiver find active stations at the touch of a button.

Scharr has some sound advice on auditioning car audio equipment. "When comparing radios," he states, "always listen to a number of FM stations, including distant ones that will test the unit's sensitivity.

Store stereo components in piece of fine furniture

Copley News Service

You've finally decided which stereo components to buy, but you're not sure where to put them. They may be the finest components you can afford, but they're not exactly handsome enough to display in a formal setting. And you do want to listen to music in your living room.

Have you considered concealing them in a lovely piece of furniture that can serve as a beautiful accent piece as well? Your delicate stereo system will be protected from dust and dirt, it will be out of sight when not in use, and you will have a charming addition to your living room setting.

"We're often asked for furniture that can serve a dual purpose," says Harley F. Shuford Jr., president of Century Furniture Co. "As people adjust to living in smaller quarters today, the furniture they buy must be able to serve many needs."

"If you haven't decided yet how to incorporate your new stereo system into your home to give you maximum enjoyment from its use, you ought to give serious thought to buying an elegant piece of furniture to house the system while adding an important design note to your room," advises Shuford.

As you shop for stereo components, keep your furniture arrangements in mind, as well as the following details:

— Stereo components are adaptable. They can be tucked into a bookcase, wall unit or storage unit. A stereo cabinet is less flexible. A piece of furniture can be chosen in a style that coordinates with your furnishings.

— If music-listening is the main activity of the room, the room arrangement should center around it. If it's not, the equipment can be relegated to a corner.

— For good acoustics, position stereo speakers carefully. Seating should face the speakers and be equidistant between them to achieve balanced sound.

— You may want to keep your sounds from annoying others. If you live in an apartment building, don't place your stereo on a wall you share with a neighbor. Rugs and wall hangings will help absorb sound. Wall paneling will also provide some sound insulation.

Students to 'talk back' to television

Copley News Service

For students at Cambridge Elementary School in Orange, Calif., this fall's lineup of educational television programs will demand more than just their silence and rapt attention.

Students, for once, will be answering questions from their electronic teachers as part of an experimental program using "teletext," a new kind of technology that allows viewers to "communicate" with specialized television programs by tapping into previously unused parts of the TV signal.

The concept — expected to create a video revolution in the next decade — will be tested at Cambridge and four other schools scattered throughout Southern California. Students will be watching regular instructional programs followed by short teletext segments in which they will use special decoders to answer quiz questions as they appear on screen.

Ronald Goldman, the project director, said the success of the experiment could mean the widespread use of the new technology within five years.

"What we're trying to do is change television from a passive experience to an active one."

"The students will watch a program, then press the 'text' button (of the decoder)," Goldman said, explaining that students will then see a display that quizzes them on the program they have just seen.

"The question will then be presented as a little scenario or an exercise for them to answer," he said. "Once they feel they know the answer, they can press the 'reveal' button and the answer will appear on the screen."

The system also has the means for asking multiple-choice questions for which students can choose one answer, move to a different page of the program to find out if the answer is correct, and then read why that answer was or wasn't the right one, Goldman said.

Copley News Service

You're in the market for stereo equipment. You go to a showroom and realize that there is a vast amount of information required just to select the needle for your turntable. And that's after you've heard all the conflicting reports about whether you need a direct-drive or belt-driven turntable.

You decide that you'd better go home and think about it for three or four years before you are ready to face the prospect of spending hundreds or thousands of dollars on components. After all, stereo equipment is an investment that you can enjoy for several years, so you want to get the most for your money.

If you can't — or don't want to — face all the necessary decisions, but still want a great stereo system, you can always go the designer route. Yes, you can have your own custom-built media unit. You don't have to wear your feet out, walking from shop to shop, and you won't have to earn a degree in electronics to read the brochures about receivers.

You also won't be weighed down by too much money in your wallet because designer media units — like designer jeans — are not cheap. For example, according to Audio Designer Associates of White Plains, N.Y., a complete system featuring everything from auto reverse reel-to-reel tape deck, digital custom clock and turntable, to the designer storage unit, just like the media center, costs a few bucks. More than a few, really. For example, New York City's Von Seff will bill you around $18,000 for a designer media unit featuring a porphyry (type of rock) lacquered finish, polished copper trim and bronze glass doors.

So you see, you really don't have to spend all that time reading about and choosing stereo components and storage units. You can sit back, relax and let someone else do the work for you. For a price.

Is Pac Man eating away at jukebox?

By ROBERT P. LAURENCE
Copley News Service

Somehow, "Pac Man Saturday Night" doesn't have the same ring to it that "Juke Box Saturday Night" once did.

But even if a computerized video game doesn't conjure up romantic images — did you ever see anybody dance cheek-to-cheek to an Asteroids game? — those ubiquitous coin-eaters are making things tough on jukeboxes, once one of America's favorite ways of listening to music.

"Jukeboxes used to be 75 to 80 percent of our business," according to Dorothy Worthy, who operates Star Services, in business in San Diego, since 1954. Now, she estimated, the company operates over 700 game and vending machines, and about 80 of them are jukeboxes.

"The games have become a greater part of the entertainment world," says Worthy. The younger operators who come into the business now are into the games. The music is now a secondary thing."

Clyde Love agrees that video games have changed the tune of the jukebox song. Love is vice chairman of the board at Silco West Inc. of Los Angeles and operator of 1,500 jukeboxes.

"At one time jukeboxes accounted for 50 percent of our business," said Love, a 38-year veteran of the field. "But now the video games overshadow everything. We're limited to the same number of music locations we had 20 years ago. But the video games go into supermarkets, convenience stores, game rooms — all locations that never had jukeboxes."

Jukeboxes have been hurt, he said, by rising record prices and royalty fees, and by higher taxes imposed by city governments looking for new revenue sources. "We used to pay $900 for a jukebox," Love added. "Now they cost about $2,200, and a new Seeburg with a video display for picking records will run $3,500."

For many jukebox operators, the machines now serve primarily to "secure" a location, to satisfy a bar owner who wants the jukebox along with game and vending machines. Even Servomation, a national coin machine and food service giant, considers them primarily a tool.

"If you depended on jukeboxes alone, you'd go broke," remarked Frank O'Neill, general manager of games and music for Servomation. "I won't put a jukebox alone into a location. I need a package deal, with the game machines, the pool tables, the cigarette machines. Costs of operating the jukeboxes have gone up, but not the income."

In Oakland, Calif., Ben Murillo, president of Overland Music Inc., supplied some historical perspective. Jukeboxes, he noted, have remained a steadily productive part of his business while other areas have been subject to the vagaries of history.

"To me, it's been a steady part of my income," Murillo said. In his 37 years in the business he remembers booms in skee ball, shuffleboard, bowling and pool. Eventually their heydays passed.

Jukeboxes like this 1947 Wurlitzer model 1015 owe some of their popularity to the neighborhood gathering spots where they became permanent features. Now, it seems, video games are crowding the music machines into darker and dustier corners.

Record cleaning crucial

Copley News Service

The vast majority of hi-fi component owners spend far more on their record libraries than the hardware itself cost them. In spite of this fact, few listeners understand how to care for their records properly.

Since a damaged record cannot be repaired, maintenance procedures should begin when a disc is new. According to Dr. Bruce R. Maier, founder and president of Discwasher, a company offering high-quality record care products, it is advisable to clean a record even before playing it the first time.

"I always examine a new record for such physical contaminants as fragments of paper or vinyl slivers," says Maier. "Even if the surface appears free of them, I won't play it without any initial cleaning."

As little as half an hour's exposure to air can attract enough "microdust" to a record's surface to warrant cleaning it, Maier comments. Microdust consists of tiny particles that are only visible when concentrated.

However small, microdust can be damaging to discs. Under the enormous pressure exerted by a tracking stylus, which can be as high as 10 to 15 tons per square inch, microdust particles become fused to the record groove, eventually causing a noticeable increase in background noise.

Some record cleaners are designed to be used dry while others employ fluids. According to Maier, "A safe, wet cleaner is preferable because it increases the adherence of microdust to the pad as it brushes the record groove."

In addition to cleaning records, it is important to keep the stylus that comes in contact with them clean by using a system made specifically for that purpose. Never clean a stylus with your finger. And, when handling records, your fingers should never come in contact with the grooves. This is because lipids and other fats that seep from our pores can clot record grooves and cause audible distortion.

Cleaning records with soap or detergent and water is a mistake, according to Maier, since these substances tend to pull stabilizers from the vinyl of which discs are made. The purpose of stabilizers is to enhance record life, he points out, and their destruction results in brittleness. As a stylus tracks a brittle record, it shaves vinyl from the grooves, first eliminating the high-frequency information stored there and gradually degrading the rest of the musical program material.

Proper storage is highly important to extending the useful life of records. If you cannot store discs in a vertical position to prevent warpage, stack them flat in piles no more than 15 deep. This way, the records inside their jackets can form a perfect column and not lean like a stack of cards.

It is important to keep records out of direct sunlight, not only to minimize warpage from heat but also to prevent a breakdown in record chemistry which would result in brittleness. And avoid subjecting your discs to excessive changes in temperature.

Legislators: Issues to center on money

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

When the Texas Legislature convenes in January, all its problems, all its headaches will revolve around one issue, according to local representatives, and that is a five-letter word — money.

State Rep. Tom Craddick, R-Midland, and State Rep. Jay Gibson, D-Odessa, cited the primary issues of water, prisons, social programs, parimutuel betting and the Blue Law in speaking Thursday evening to the Permian Basin Chapter of Associated Builders and Contractors. And most of those issues, the men agreed, center on money.

Craddick, who has served in the Legislature 14 years, said, "Money will be the main topic in the next session, more so than in the last couple of sessions. In the past, we have been able to fund new programs with surpluses." But inflation and additional needs may eat away all the projected $2 billion surplus. And the legislators may still see some programs walk away hungry.

The Midlander, in two easy swoops of the ax, wiped out that surplus. He said that public employees are proposing a 6.8 percent salary increase. That alone will take an additional $1 billion. And to bring the state prison system up to federal standards will take $1.3 billion.

GIBSON SEES the surplus going out even faster. He predicted the $26 billion budget in operation for this biennium will be increased by $5 billion for the next two years. And of that $5 billion, inflation will eat $4 billion to keep the programs funded at their current level. "People wanting a little more probably won't get it."

Education takes out half the budget, according to Gibson. Craddick pointed out that with the abolition of the ad valorem tax, universities will be asking the legislature for money for their "mortar and brick" fund. That tax had been directed to fund university building programs.

Neither legislator could see a way to get additional revenues. "Comptroller (Bob) Bullock is very capable at collecting taxes...sometimes too capable," said Gibson. "He has a way of extracting revenue and coming up with $1 billion more than expected. Hopefully, Bullock can come up with a little more."

Both acknowledged the highway department takes its fair share. And while they both believe it won't go without, if the Legislature gets in a bind for money the gasoline tax could be raised.

Noting that a proposal for raising that tax is being readied, Craddick said, "But I don't think it will pass. I don't think we will need to." Gibson said if the legislature is "up against the wall" at the end of the session and running out of money "it possibly will pass. You can't sell a tax bill to the voters."

Other groups looking for additional handouts from the state include the Department of Public Safety and social programs.

"SOMEONE WHO HAS been in the DPS eight to 10 years is making less money than someone working six months in the Midland County Sheriff's Office," said Craddick. The DPS request would hack out another $400 to $600 million out of what started to be a surplus.

And under President Reagan's New Federalism proposal, states will take a lump sum from the federal government and chop it up into pieces for social programs. "That X amount of dollars won't pay for all the programs. The state will have to pick up the rest," said Craddick.

Texas is not a welfare state, added Gibson, who is a member of the Appropriations Committee. "We don't fund any welfare programs not mandated by the federal government." And Texas pays one of the lowest amounts on Aid to Families with Dependent Children.

The issue to allow parimutuel betting in the state will raise its head again, and both West Texans predicted defeat. Craddick said in the last legislature a poll presented by proponents showed 52 percent of the people in Texas wanted horse racing and betting.

When Gibson was asked about the prevailing sentiment in the legislature over the issue, the Odessan quipped, "Probably paranoia. They probably wouldn't want to deal with the issue."

The state is divided over parimutuel betting, he said, with proponents starting at El Paso and running south of a line that goes to Houston. "The mayor of Laredo said the only way he'd get beat for re-election is if he voted for

Writer suffers through cigarette-less day

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

On a normal, stress-filled day, I typically may go through about two packs of cigarettes. On a workday that continues with happy hour, which inevitably extends into some sort of late night socializing, I can easily go through more.

Thursday, I went through three packs of gum and four Tabs, a pot of coffee as well as a few randomly scattered cups, two bags of peanut M&M's, one pencil and my one semi-long fingernail — between meals. Oh, yeah — and a lot of glares from my dear city editor, who demanded that I quit smoking and write a story on "How a Heavy Smoker Goes Through Hell on American Cancer Society's Smokeout Day."

To be honest, there are quite a few events a reporter does not particularly relish covering.

I'VE NEVER CARED for pestering victims of apartment fires, chatting with witnesses at car wrecks or calling school board members at home after 10 p.m. or before 7 a.m. to ask a question.

But along with the long hours and predatory image, part of this unrealistically-referred-to-as-a-glamorous-and-exciting-job is nodding professionally at the city editor's barked order, when you'd really rather smile sweetly and say, "Thanks, but I'd prefer not to."

Quit smoking. I have never had the urge to quit, nor to even consider quitting. Looking back at my seven years of "time on tobacco," through all the late high school nights spent waiting for parents to fall back asleep after I was "safely in" before quietly raising the window and puffing into the cool, night breeze — to those hacking coughs which always adhered to the all-night cramming sessions at the sorority house with my chain-smoking roommates in college — to the present 5 a.m. work mornings, when I light a cigarette while stumbling into the kitchen to pour coffee, I have never had any desire to quit. And I will continue to laugh haughtily at my friends who sweat it out for three months, light up one night after a couple of drinks, go a pack-a-day for a week, and progress through the entire cycle about three times a year.

ANYWAY, THAT was the assignment given to me Wednesday morning, and, being the exceptionally talented and determined reporter that I am, I proceeded with my homework, which always precedes any assignment or interview.

I nervously smoked as many cigarettes as I could — and in anticipation of the full 24-hours of unsteady hands, delirious mind and possibly even fresh breath — probably set a record that will only be broken by today's number of cigarettes smoked (which I will rationalize as necessary to maintain my normal amount of nicotine and, therefore, make up for lost time.)

I'm sure that throughout the country, many of the people who flushed packs of cigarettes and refused to smoke for 24 hours woke up this morning with a confident smile, had to rinse less with mouthwash, and decided that it wasn't so bad after all. In their newfound glory and achievement, they probably opened the drawer where the carton is stashed and proceeded to squash every remaining cellophane wrapper containing those 20 corpse-making cancer sticks. More power to them.

I, for one, didn't wait until this morning. Thursday night, as the end of my 24-hour cold-turkey period neared, my eyes uncontrollably kept darting between my watch and the cigarette and 59-cent BIC lighter lovingly placed on my desk, awaiting the approach of the final tick of the second hand.

AND THEN I lit up.

As I said, I'm sure Thursday was the new beginning for many brown-teethed persons. But it was sheer agony for me.

Beginning with the taunts Wednesday — the bets that I couldn't make it

Permian Basin Regional CETA to receive $2 million

By VINCE GIORGI
Staff Writer

U.S. Labor Secretary Raymond Donovan recently announced funding that will sustain the Comprehensive Employment and Training Act until Oct. 1, 1983, when the massive job employment and training program gives way to the Job Training and Partnership Act.

The Permian Basin Regional CETA Consortium stands to receive $2,060,115 from the $222.1 million targeted for Region VI CETA programs in Texas, Arkansas, Oklahoma, Louisiana and New Mexico.

In all, 27 Texas CETA organizations, or "prime sponsors," will divide $110,186,806.

Fiscal year 1983 funding, and the pending shift from existing CETA programs to JTPA, are being described variously as "a new beginning," "a transition" and "a cutback" in U.S. job training programs.

Donovan, in a U.S. Labor Department press release, said: "This marks a new beginning in U.S. training programs. These funds will be used to transfer the programs and functions from CETA to JTPA as soon as possible so that the greatest number of jobless may be served in the months ahead.

"CETA-style programs will be phased out slowly and the provisions of the new training act phased in during the fiscal year as regulations are created, approved and applied. By Oct. 1, 1983, we will have the JTPA in full operation."

Willie Taylor, director of employment and training programs for the Permian Basin CETA Consortium, said $2,060,115 represents "a cutback, in a sense," since fiscal year 1982 funding was near $2.8 million.

Taylor said because Permian Basin CETA officials allowed for funding declines well in advance of Donovan's announcement, no drastic curtailments in the program are expected.

He said while about 385 people are already enrolled in CETA training throughout the 17 county consortium, another 200-250 are awaiting entry to the program.

Although 1,500 people may participate in local CETA programs this year, with emphasis on "quick turnover" training, some applicants could be turned away in 1983 given the present funding provisions, he said.

"Right now, it's a transition year," said Taylor, who expects funding for fiscal year 1984 could decline by an additional 25-30 percent. "As far as next year, we'll just have to sit and wait on it," he said, shrugging his shoulders.

Lynn Ligon, public information officer for the Labor Department's Dallas office, explained that JTPA transfers responsibility for administering job training programs from the federal government to state and local governments.

In addition, local private industry councils will be established to help direct and provide support — like supervision, materials and facilities — for job training programs in each particular area, Ligon said.

Taylor said preliminary meetings have already been held with area educators, union representatives and business representatives. He said a local private idustry council should be established by January 1983.

Ligon said giving local governments administrative control and replacing federal involvement with private industry assistance will increase job training efficiency.

He said Reagan administration estimates indicate that all but about 18 cents of every CETA $1 were gobbled up by overhead costs. Ligon said the administration predicts that 70 cents of every JTPA $1 will go directly to job training.

Ligon said recent declines in CETA funding are in large part attributable to elimination of the public service employment, "make work-type projects." He said JTPA will continue to shun such projects in favor of job training.

Although JTPA has been signed into law, refining and revising the act's specific rules and regulations could last until September 1983, Ligon said. He said local job training officials will be permitted to offer comments and suggestions during the fine-tuning process.

"These are the people that are going to do it, so it's obvious that they should have some sort of say about what goes into it," he said.

Side effect of aspirin may be death, doctor says

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Got a headache? Take two aspirin.

Not an uncommon reaction, but more and more people overlook that aspirin is a drug.

Although aspirin, the most commonly and widely used drug, is good if used judiciously, there are potential severe side effects for some patients. And one of the side effects could be death.

"We have seen some problems with aspirin use in our community," said Dr. William McGavran III, a Midland neurosurgeon.

People are not reporting to their physicians that they use aspirin.

"Because of the bad publicity its (aspirin) over-the-counter opponent has received" more people have switched back to aspirin, McGavran said, referring to the removal of Tylenol from the market after capsules were found tainted with cyanide in Chicago.

"It's (aspirin) a good non-narcotic drug and effective in reducing fever, as a pain reliever, and good in certain forms of arthritis," McGavran said.

"Good medicine used judiciously is just that, a good medicine," McGavran said. "Aspirin is used so frequently that it is not considered a medication by the lay public. They'll list everything else but aspirin."

Aspirin can upset the blood clotting mechanism in the body. In a news conference Thursday afternoon, McGavran and Mohr explained what people should do if they are taking aspirin.

"Tell your physician," they said.

McGavran noted that "there is no substitute for a good medical history and physical, but John Q. Public does not mention" that he takes aspirin.

"Aspirin can lead to lethal and catastrophic results for the patient going to surgery," McGavran said.

He explained that platelets, the substance in the blood which triggers the clotting process, is one of the natural defense mechanisms of the body when injury occurs. The stickiness of the platelets increases as the clotting begins.

And one aspirin can upset this process for three days, according to McGavran.

"If the patient is taking six, eight or 12 aspirin a day to relieve pain, this could massively upset the clotting process and it could lead to lethal or catastrophic results," McGavran noted.

"A patient who has just been in a car accident comes into the hospital and he won't stop bleeding," McGavran said, citing an expample. "He may be unresponsive.

"It could be a life threatening situation," he said, explaining that the surgeon could literally "put his finger in the dike to stop the bleeding" while waiting for platelets to arrive.

Mohr added that aspirin affects blood's ability to coagulate.

Recently, about three patients requiring surgery have needed large amounts of platelets for the clotting process, McGavran said.

"And platelets are very expensive," he added.

Besides the anti-platelet effect, aspirin has been cited as the leading cause of gastroenteritis, inflammation of the lining of the stomach, Mohr said.

Also, aspirin has induced asthma and is associated with Reyes Syndrome in children who have had the flu, according to Mohr.

McGavran and Mohr said they both prescribe aspirin for their patients and "it is a good medication and can be used often."

But the public must understand it is a medication that must be reported to the physician.

"The birth control pill is another one," Mohr said, explaining that many women do not consider it a medication and neglect to mention they are taking it.

Yvonne De Carlo appears at civic ballet's auction

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

Her career was in its zenith during the '40s and '50s. The possessor of a richly-endowed and darkly exotic beauty, Yvonne De Carlo was well known during that time for her numerous roles as a screen temptress. But her fiery portrayals were often blended with an offbeat humor, not always found in the type of roles for which she became famous.

That same gift for humor and laughing, not only at life's follies, but also at oneself, is still an intregal part of Miss De Carlo.

Miss De Carlo was in Midland for the opening of the Permian Civic Ballet Guild's annual fund raising auction, which opened Thursday night at Midland Center with a private dinner, auction preview and sale. Several of the pieces for sale are from Miss De Carlo's private collection. She is returning to her California ranch today.

THE AUCTION opens to the public today with sessions set for 2 and 8 p.m. today, Saturday and Sunday. Merchandise for sale may be viewed one hour before each auction.

As the saying goes in show biz, "The show must go on." Miss De Carlo came to offer her support to the ballet guild's fund raiser even through she wasn't feeling well.

As auctioneer Mark Blechman said during an interview prior to the auction, "Miss De Carlo isn't feeling well, but she insisted on coming because she had made this commitment." He went on to explain that Miss De Carlo had suffered two falls which resulted in arm and shoulder injuries during her performances in "CanCan" at Atlantic City.

When she arrived for the interview, her immediate response to the question of her injuries was, "I don't want to talk about anything negative.

"A LOT OF things happened in 'CanCan,'" Miss De Carlo began. "It was a wonderful show and we got great reviews. But I arrived there during the top of the season which is a terrible time because there was no place to stay. It finally got me down and got me very nervous. We (Miss De Carlo and the production's management) sat down one day and had a mutual agreement and I'm now back at the ranch."

When she talks of the area where she lives, her eyes sparkle. It's obvious she loves living a quieter lifestyle after the many years she spent living in North Hollywood at the top of Coldwater Canyon.

"Born Peggy (Yvonne) Middleton 1 September 1922 in Vancouver, British Columbia, she (Miss DeCarlo) had already acquired solid vaudeville and nightclub credits when she arrived in Hollywood at the age of 17," states the "Celebrity Register."

"Under the management of a farsighted mother, she studied at Vancouver School of Dance, appeared first (professionally) in a vaudeville skit entitled 'Aussie the Boxing Kangaroo.' In the film capital her mother worked as a waitress while Yvonne continued dancing lessons, playing night clubs, eventually winning a place in Earl Carroll's chorus line," states the "Register."

HER FILM DEBUT came as a bit part in Paramount's "This Gun for Hire" in 1942. But her big break came when Walter Wanger recognized her glamour potential and cast her in the lead in "Salome, Where She Danced," made in 1945.

Of the too numerous to count films that Miss De Carlo has made, including in 1943 "For Whom the Bell Tolls" and "The Deerslayer," in 1947 "Song of Scheherazade," in 1956 "The Ten Commandments," in 1957 "Band of Angels," in 1959 "Timbuctu," and the 1963 release "McLintock," she has several favorites.

"One of my favorites was with Alec Guinness which we made in London called 'The Captain's Paradise.'" Of Guinness, Miss De Carlo said, "He's the greatest actor in the world." Of the movie she said, "It was well written. I had a nice part and it turned out to be a classic." Then she added, "And I enjoyed being connected with 'The Ten Commandments' playing Moses' wife."

Miss De Carlo has performed on stage, on television and in movies. Of the mediums she said, "I like to sing very much, that's why I enjoy musicals. Before 'CanCan,' I did 'Hello, Dolly' at Anaheim. I do love to do musicals, but I suppose motion pictures would be my baby. It's the one I'm most familiar with," she said. Pausing in contemplative thought, she added, "although, I'm good on stage."

AND ANOTHER stage production looms ahead for Miss De Carlo, who has signed to do "Great Ladies of the Silver Screen" in Miami, Fla., beginning in January. She isn't certain how long she will be there, because she has an open end contract.

"It could be a long period if I want it to be," Miss De Carlo said. "I just signed up for a few weeks, but If I want to extend, I can."

Miss De Carlo said of traveling and performing away from home, "I like to travel a little bit, but I want to be a home."

Although she gets kidded by some old friends about her loving to be on the ranch, it doesn't bother her. She isn't bored there at all. In fact, she loves it.

"I live in a small town area near Santa Barbara and my swim club where I work out as often as I can. I live in the Santa Ynez Valley — it's (that area of California) just one little town after another. I like it."

The area is full of stars, Miss De Carlo said. When she mentioned one star's name, she then commented laughing, "Not that I know John Travolta, but he likes older ladies and he really gave me a big smile when I met him."

Then she casually said, "Anybody who has any cents lives up there." Leaning forward, she emphasized, rubbing her fingers together, "You know, centavos." Then, with the shake of her hand, she said, "Well, you can take it both ways."

WASHINGTON (AP) — Kevin Mulcahy, the one-time CIA analyst whose charges began the investigations of Edwin Wilson's dealings with Libya, died of natural causes, medical officials have ruled.

The death of Mulcahy, an alcoholic and a heavy smoker, was caused by bronchial pneumonia complicated by emphysema and liver problems, it was announced Thursday by James C. Beyer, the Fairfax County, Va., medical examiner.

Mulcahy was found dead Oct. 26 outside a motel cabin he had rented in Shenandoah County, Va., about 90 miles west of Washington.

The FBI began an investigation to determine if the death was linked to the trial of Wilson, the former CIA employee charged with conspiracy and arms violations in his dealings with Libya.

BUT BOTH SUPPORTED repeal of the state Blue Law, which states certain items can't be sold on Sunday.

Craddick said he sees a change in attitude from East Texas on the Blue Law and for that reason it stands a good chance of being repealed.

"I think it's ludicrous," said Gibson. "If you don't want someone to buy something on Sunday, you should say, 'Thou shalt not buy on Sunday.' The way the law is written is not sensible."

"We're not enforcing it out here," added Craddick. When he took a poll of people in his district during the last session, it revealed that 78 percent wanted the law repealed.

A water bill will flow out of the legislature in some form, according to the men. Craddick pointed out that Gov. Bill Clements' Texas 2000 Commission has been studying the issue and drawing up a plan for consideration. "I believe you might see a constitutional amendment."

One solution running ahead of others is to negotiate with Arkansas for some of the water they are allotted out of the Mississippi River but don't take. It will be an exchange of their water for Texas' energy, Craddick predicted.

Water is being termed as a crisis all over the state now, and not just in West Texas, he added. "Houston is now sinking, which may be a good deal for the state," he jested. "And San Antonio sits on top of the Edwards Aquifer and it's not being recharged."

CRADDICK RECALLED that in 1968, Texans turned down a water plan that was similar to one adopted that same year in Oklahoma. The state to the north is now finishing up its water plan. If it were to be started today, the cost would run 20 times more and federal funds no longer help the state with such projects, he said.

Gibson agreed that "we need to get moving on water. Time has a way of going by."

Stacy Dam, a proposal to add water to the Colorado River Municipal Water District which feeds into Midland and Odessa, is going through an appeals process. If approved, "this area will have ample water for 40 to 50 years," said Gibson. "The bad news is that it'll taste essentially the same way it does now, which isn't real good."

Questioned as to how the change from a Republican governor to a Democratic one will affect the legislature, both men could see few major differences.

"They took all the Republicans and ran them out of town," began Gibson, before glancing at the Midland Republican and adding, "or most of them."

Craddick said that after 100 years of Democratic governors, "you need a change. Clements was a good shakeup and I would have liked to see him in office four more years."

The strength of a governor lies in his appointments, of which there are 4,400 appointments to fill over a number of years, and ability to veto on a line-item basis, according to Craddick and Gibson.

"The legislature gets pretty offended the governor is even there," joked Gibson. When the Legislature reversed one of Clements' vetoes, it was because the governor was "messing around with a local situation" on a bill that affected only one legislator's district.

Both men said that serving in the legislature has been an educational experience. Noting that it's hard to keep up with all 5,000 bills that are introduced, they asked the association to keep in touch on issues that affect builders and contractors.

"If you get wind of something, call us..." Gibson began, while Craddick finished his thought, "before we adjourn. I got lots of calls last June after I got home."

for 24 hours and the jokes about how I could sustain my cravings, through Thursday's merciless waves of smoke that drifted through the newsroom, the interviews and board meetings and the tension of another episode of "Hill Street Blues," I suffered.

It was awful. There is no other way to put it. The packs of gum I chomped in frustration only made my jaws ache. The pens I so diligently chewed on only resulted in a blue, felt-tip tongue. The unlit cigarette I held in consolation only made me feel stupid, crazy and irrational when I realized I was unconsiously flicking imaginary ashes out the car window.

I know this day was established for the good of humanity. I know that cigarettes have caused horrendous deaths for a large number of young, cute, little white laboratory mice. I know that Thursday proved that I am addicted to a nauseating habit that makes my fingers turn yellow.

But I also know from this experience, that next year, job or no job, I will not participate in this one day — this particular day — that makes people with pearly smiles and fresh breath gloat while others who furtively strike matches and sneak a few puffs cower in corners of restaurants.

I might not have made it Thursday if it hadn't been for eight hours of smokeless sleep.

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Gov. Bill Clements says he may make one of his most important appointments today, the new chief justice of the Texas Supreme Court, after narrowing a list of would-be appointees to three people.

If the appointment is not made today, it apparently will be made next week because Clements said there would be no announcements on Saturday.

"We have a very short list and we are doing our homework with both the ones being considered as well as the leadership of the House and Senate," he said Thursday.

The Republican governor was asked if the list of three names contained that of a woman.

"There was, but there is not now," he replied.

Any blacks or Hispanics?

"There was, but not on the short list."

Clements also said the name of John Hill, Austin attorney and former state attorney general, was not on the short list. Hill has been considered a possible Democratic candidate for the position in the 1984 elections for a full six-year term.

Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby, a Democrat, said he talked with Clements Wednesday night and recommended that Clements leave the appointment of a new Supreme Court justice to Gov.-elect Mark White, a Democrat.

Clements told reporters that Hobby has approved "some" of the three names on the final list.

The appointee would replace former Chief Justice Joe Greenhill, who resigned Oct. 25 to enter private law practice with two years remaining in his term.

The lame duck governor said he had paid no attention to a letter that 14 Democratic senators, out of 31, wrote to Clements threatening to vote against any of his appointees.

The senators said the appointements, particularly the one to the Supreme Court, should be left to White, who defeated Clements in the Nov. 2 election.

"I haven't even read it," Clements said about the letter. "I'm going to do what I intend to do. I think that the Senate will cooperative...I really don't anticipate any problems in the Senate. A lot of problems have a lot worse bark than a bite. As you know, I am an optimist, and I'm also a realist."

One person dies in traffic accident

One person is dead and another is in serious condition following a traffic accident west of Midland early this morning.

Pronounced dead at the scene by Justice of the Peace Charlie Sprayberry was Mary Lou Slavens, 40, of Monahans. Her body was taken to the Ellis Funeral Home. In serious condition at Midland Memorial Hospital with head and rib injuries is Clayton D. Berryhill, 44, also of Monahans.

According to the Department of Public Safety, the Slavens woman was driving a 1978 Datsun that had stopped in the eastbound, outside lane of Highway 80 and was hit from behind by a 1978 Cadillac driven by Eddie Olgin of Midland.

Olgin, no age or street address available, was not injured in the wreck, which occurred shortly after 2 a.m. approximately 1.6 miles west of town.

'Midlife crisis' mythological

By DON CARTER
Hearst Feature Service

Has the "Midlife Crisis" got you down? Are you feeling the pangs of the "Empty Nest Syndrome?" Or is it "Falling Apart After 40" that's got you feeling so blue?

Stop suffering. Mel London says it's all a bunch of nonsense.

London, a documentary filmmaker turned writer, is the author of "Second Spring," a rhapsodic look at how aging in America can be, as contrasted with how dismal we've made it.

London's hit list includes doctors, media, corporations, families and society in general. He blames them for trying to take the fun out of growing older. "Society gives us a raw deal," he complains. "We've been programmed to have a miserable old age, but it doesn't really have to be that way."

Doctors, he says, are quick to dimiss complaints as "something that happens when you get older," instead of concerning themselves with actual symptoms; he counsels those who get that line too often to find a new doctor.

Media are on his hit-list because their preoccupation with young faces "tends to make our generation invisible." And athough more older persons are appearing in commercials, London says "that's just Madison Avenue hyping us to look young — and saying old is ugly. They say 'Grandma, you've got ugly spots on your hands,' and 'You really ought to do something about that gray hair.' "

He dislikes corporate policies which emphasize youth because younger employees usually cost less in terms of medical and retirement benefits. When corporate executives encourage "moving aside for a younger person," he points out, "they've provided themselves with golden parachutes like liberal stock options, so they can well afford to step aside. But I'm not talking about them — I'm talking about the middle class."

One of the great despoilers of enjoyable aging, London believes, "is the family telling us to 'act our age.' The family is at its worst when enforcing double standards about sex, he complains. It's OK for younger people to do their thing, but London notes that "everybody gets uptight" when Grandpa goes off for a weekend tryst.

He also takes aim at the myth that sexual enjoyment stops with age, and urges older persons to understand their physiological changes so they can enjoy sex if they choose.

The "Midlife Crisis" is another myth London says he'd like to bury. The author thinks menopause is vastly overrated, with many women suffering needless fears of "not being a woman." The proper way to look at menopause, he suggests, "is being able to enjoy sex without fear of pregnancy."

For men, he says there's no biological basis for a sudden midlife change. "The minute somebody who's 45 makes a change, people say, 'He's just going through the midlife crisis.' It doesn't happen like that.

"There are a lot of things that can happen in midlife. Your wife or husband can leave. Your teenage child can be killed. You may have to care for an elderly parent. You can lose your job. But I think we're better equipped to handle these crises than an 18-year-old. After all, the suicide rate is higher for them than it is for us."

To dispose of the "Empty Nest Syndrome" myth, London conducted a survey and found "few people were even slightly saddened" when their children grew up and left home. Far more traumatic than a child's leaving, he adds, "is the child's return — what I call the Boomerang syndrome. It creats all kinds of problems; you can't tell a 30-year-old divorced daughter that she has to be home by midnight."

London counsels seniors to disregard "all that trash" about physical and mental deterioration, midlife crises and glorious youth, and to "enjoy your freedom and the fact that we have more experience, are more interesting, tend to be more together about things and are often more affluent."

He also thinks older persons should be more assertive in filing federal age discrimination suits, correcting young people who perpetrate the myths about aging and doing whatever kind of work they like best as long as they want.

The New York author appears to be following his own advice. Two years ago he resigned after 35 years with a filmmaking partnership to become an independent filmmaker and spend more time writing books. "Second Spring" is his sixth.

Power of positive - or negative - dressing, style

By STEPHANIE MANSFIELD
Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

A week after her husband, car inventor John De Lorean, was arrested, Cristina Ferrare flew to Manhattan, bought a somber wardrobe from Albert Capraro and had trendy stylist Suga snip off her shoulder-length hair because, a spokesman for the hairdresser said, "she needed a change."

That change coincided with the court appearance last week by her husband, charged with setting up a $24 million cocaine deal. When the cameras focused on Ferrare, looking more like Joan of Arc in designer sackcloth than a Vogue fashion model with a well-publicized penchant for sables and jewels, lawyers all over the country recognized the syndrome. Cristina Ferrare was dressing for acquittal.

"I tell my clients to dress conservatively," says Joseph Ball, De Lorean's Los Angeles attorney. Ball denies that he told Ferrare to cut her hair or buy a wardrobe, but he is obviously pleased with her new look.

VETERAN WASHINGTON trial attorney Sol Rosen thinks Ferrare's new haircut will help De Lorean's case. "The jury will see a picture of very short hair, very conservative," he says.

"Particularly in the De Lorean case," says Washington attorney Peter Kinsey, whose law firm handled Rita Jenrette's divorce from her husband John, the former Democratic congressman from South Carolina who was convicted in the Abscam bribery scandal. "His whole life is on trial. His wife is somebody they're going to be looking at."

Washington attorney Kenneth Robinson thinks he might have been able to win the Jenrette case if Rita Jenrette had, in his words, toned down her "sexpot" image.

"I always felt when I defended John Jenrette that Rita Jenrette dressed totally inappropriately," Robinson says. "We had fights over it."

WHEN RITA JENRETTE accompanied her husband to his preliminary hearing in U.S. District Court here wearing a tight, low-cut blouse, Robinson was angry. "She said, 'This is the way John likes me. I dress for John.' I said, 'You have to dress for the jury now, and the jury doesn't want to see that.' "

So Rita Jenrette, according to Robinson, went to Neiman-Marcus and bought a new wardrobe, which included designer outfits by Calvin Klein. But her concessions to the lawyer were few. One outfit, had a demure white blouse tied at the neck with a schoolgirl bow but a tight skirt slit up the thigh.

"I got furious," Robinson recalls. "We're portraying John as totally broke and you show up with a $1,000 wardrobe. John wore the same suit every day, the one with a cigarette burn in it, looking totally down and out."

Did Rita Jenrette's wardrobe cost her husband an acquittal?

"She came in looking like a sexpot, and that was not good for John. Who's to say it swayed the jury?" Robinson asks. "They looked at her and saw a glamorpuss. Which meant he either had money or the motive to get money."

RITA JENRETTE strongly disagrees.

"Since he didn't win the case, it's easy to blame the wife," she said from her Los Angeles home. "I did as much as I could without wearing a full-length black Victorian dress and hiding my face behind a veil. ... Either you have a case or you don't."

Rita Jenrette says she thought enough to buy blazers and suits at Neiman-Marcus (clothes she's since given to her mother) and wore the slit skirt only one day. She got so many letters of objection that she never wore it again. She also says of her mink coat, "I wasn't going to freeze to death. Robinson said, 'The judge's wife wears a cloth coat. You have to wear a cloth coat.' Well, I didn't have a cloth coat."

Jenrette says she resents Robinson's suggestions, but isn't surprised by them. "It was just an extension of what I had gone through with John's staff for the previous five years," she says. "You can't change the way your body is. When I saw Cristina Ferrare on the news I had such empathy for her. I know what she's going through. I'm sure somebody told her the same thing they told me, 'Get your conservative wardrobe together.' "

Maybe the lawyers need more advice on what to wear, Rita Jenrette says. Kenneth Robinson's "pants were so big. He wore this big old suit. Trying to project this good ol' country boy image. That didn't get John off, either."

SOME LAWYERS are loath to get involved in the wardrobe question. Washington attorney Michael Tigar, who represented John Murphy during that former congressman's Abscam bribery trial, said, "I think the notion of a male lawyer telling the wife of a defendant to do this or that is the most incredibly sexist suggestion I've ever heard. I think it's an insult."

Marvin Mitchelson, the Los Angeles lawyer who is most famous for winning the first "palimony" suit and who recently handled jet-setter Soraya Khashoggi's $2.5 billion divorce suit, does give wardrobe advice, but says, "I don't think the jury is going to be influenced at all by the fact that she (Cristina Ferrare) stepped out of the Middle Ages, ready to do penance by chopping off her hair."

Yet Mitchelson says he told his client Michelle Triola — who was seeking "palimony" from her former lover, actor Lee Marvin — to dress "like she needed the money."

For his other celebrity clients, Mitchelson approaches the question of wardrobe with kid gloves. "I had Soraya pull back her hair," he says. "I didn't have to tell Bianca Jagger how to dress. But I made suggestions to Sarah Dylan, who was the barefoot type. I wanted her to dress up a bit. You have to do it very delicately."

He says he trys to keep women out of pantsuits, and prefers shoes with closed toes. "And I love horn-rimmed glasses," he says. "It suggests a bit of intelligence."

ONE WOMAN whose appearance definitely made a favorable impression during the Watergate hearings was Maureen Dean, who radiated a cool sense of stylish innocence with her blond bun and doe eyes.

In her 1975 autobiography, entitled, "Mo: A Woman's View of Watergate," she went into great detail discussing her color-coordinated wardrobe for the nationally televised hearings. After her husband told her to dress "like a wife," Maureen Dean writes: "I relied on my own fashion instincts, choosing a very high collared tan dress to wear the first day."

When she planned to wear a turban one day, her husband put his Gucci down. "That won't go well with Middle America," John Dean is quoted as saying.

One night, while her husband agonized over his next day's testimony, Maureen Dean could rest easy. "My own major decision — what to wear," she writes, "had been made the night before."

AND IT'S NOT only the wife, but the family and supporters as well whose image can influence a jury. "If it plays a role, it's a subconscious one," says New York attorney Joel Aurnou, who defended Jean Harris, convicted of murdering "Scarsdale Diet" Dr. Herman Tarnower. Harris' brother appeared in court wearing his naval uniform. But Aurnou says it wasn't a deliberate attempt to present his client in a conservative light. Her brother really was a naval captain.

In any event, lawyers suggest that changes, if any, be subtle. "I think it can hurt if you really change who you are and the jury recognizes it," says Kenneth Robinson.

YAG laser newest in eye surgery

By JOANN RODGERS
Science Writer, Hearst Feature Service

SAN FRANCISCO — Thousands of eye doctors at the International Congress of Opthalmology are walking around with blue plastic YAG bags. They eagerly join informal YAG raps and urgently sign up for YAG lessons.

Even at $90,000 a clip the YAG is a big seller, according to industrial exhibitors at the meeting, and there's a good chance millions of Americans with cataracts, glaucoma, corneal ulcers and other eye problems will soon have a YAG in their lives.

YAG stands for yttrium-aluminum-garnet, and is used to describe a new kind of laser that shoots invisibile light so fast it can make precise cuts deep in the eye without burning or hurting healthy tissue.

In the hands of surgeons, this "cold" laser instrument delivers a series of light pulses in a trillionth of a second without complications or the need for anesthesia.

"This is the hottest thing in ophthalmology today," says Dr. Leeds Katzen, an eye surgeon at Mercy Hospital in Baltimore,Md., who has added a YAG laser to other lasers in his practice.

Like a bloodless scalpel, the YAG, also called the neodymium YAG laser for the synthetic diamond it uses for light amplification, breaks up and loosens membranes that cloud or block the clear lens of the eye.

By contrast, conventional methods of cutting through these cloudy membranes require scissors, knives and suctioning instruments pushed through the white of the eye.

The YAG can also quickly open the front of the eye to ease removal of a cataract, or clouded lens. It can wipe out scars that form behind implanted plastic lenses or, cause the light sensitive retina to break away from the back of the eye. And it can get rid of unwanted tissue that dangerously increases pressure inside the eye, a condition called glaucoma.

Inventors of two the latest YAG lasers are attending the Congress, held jointly with the American Academy of Ophthalmology, at the Moscone Center this week, to report their latest results and developments.

Dr. Daniele Aron-Rosa of Trousseau Hospital in Paris said she has now treated more than 6,500 patients in France since 1978 with the Neodymium YAG laser she designed.

Because the laser makes no direct entry into the eye, the operations are painless, trouble-free and can be done on an outpatient basis without anesthesia.

YAG's appeal for the surgeon rests in its ability to make extremely shallow holes, or cuts, without burning. Conventional ruby, argon and other surgical lasers, widely used to repair the retina, burn so hot they can clot and fuse blood vessels.

The light energy in YAG, though intense, is only a fraction of that in other lasers. It sends a shock wave of light pulses at the point of focus that can destroy areas as smali as four one-thousandths of an inch across. Because no laser energy spreads beyond the focal point, surrounding tissue is protected around the "explosion" sight.

Dr. Aron-Rosa says treatment in most cases takes a few minutes and patients can resume normal activities immediately. She has trained many American surgeons in Paris and recently claimed that "dozens of eye doctors are "extremely eager" to treat patients with the YAG.

Unlike Aron-Rosa's YAG, which does not fuse tissue at it cuts, the YAG developed by Dr. Franz Fankhauser in Bern, Switzerland does both.

Called the Q-switched neodymium YAG, it produces pulses much like the argon laser and works with a single pulse of light lasting a billionth of a second, or with bursts of such pulses.

In a paper prepared for the meeting, Fankhauser said more than 1,500 patients have been treated with his YAG, with few side effects.

While the merits of the two lasers were debated at the weeklong meeting, other eye specialsts reported new uses for older lasers to treat glaucoma.

Dr. Irvin Pollack of Baltimore, Md., has used an argon laser beam to open drainage channels in the eyes of 30 patients by making 100's of tiny burns along their sides.

In glaucoma, these channels are blocked and in severe cases must be cut open with knives if pressure-lowering drugs fail and threaten damage to the optic nerve or blindness.

The laser, Pollack says, provides a treatment between drugs and surgery. One out of five of his cases no longer needed drugs and 50 per cent needed less drugs.

Stevenson's hut to be renovated

By STEWART TAGGART
AP Writer

But the tiny grass shack with its thatched roof was enough to lure author Robert Louis Stevenson from the "vile Honolulu" of 1889.

Termites and dry rot have since damaged much of the structure's wood, which has remained in the same spot at the Salvation Army Waioli Tea Room in Manoa for over 55 years.

But now the organization plans to restore the tiny hut used by Stevenson while he wrote "The Master of Ballantrae."

"It's amazing how much interest there is in that old house," said Bette Stillwell, manager of the Tea Room.

She said that an anonymous admirer of Princess Kaiulani, an heir to the Hawaiian throne who became close to Stevenson when he was in Hawaii, has agreed to pay for the restoration.

The princess was the daughter of a Scotch father and a Hawaiian princess. While the young princess attended school in England, her aunt, Queen Liliuokalani, was deposed. Princess Kaiulani died young, unmarried, childless and dispossessed of her throne.

Stevenson had stopped in Honolulu for seven months in 1889 during his travels in the South Seas. It was the first of two stays he made in Hawaii following such literary successes as "The Story of Doctor Jekyll and Mister Hyde."

He reportedly used the quiet thatched roof hut to write when he needed to escape, because Stevenson apparently disliked the hustle and bustle of the city, much preferring the leafy quietude of rural Waikiki where the hut then was.

"Waikiki was considered the country in those days," Ms. Stillwell said. "It was a long way from downtown Honolulu."

The hut stood on the property of fellow Scotsman Archibald Cleghorn, a close friend of Stevenson and father of Princess Kaiulani, and has been reconstructed several times.

It was first reconstructed when the land it stood on was sold. A newspaper advertisement offered the hut to anyone who would come and remove it.

Commander Rachel Payne of the Salvation Army Girls Home saved the shack from a poultryman who wanted to use it as a chicken coop. The hut was reconstructed at the Salvation Army's tea room.

Payne saw the visitor trade developing and thought the hut might pull tourists into the tea room, Ms. Stillwell said.

"Even though it might be considered humble by our standards, it might not have been all that simple by the standards of the day," Ms. Stillwell said.

Ceramics can be creative, personal gifts

SOUTH BEND, Ind. (AP) — Putting your own touch on holiday gifts by using hobby ceramic "adapation" techniques will give them a one-of-a-kind look, says Sharon Kinzie, a ceramics teacher here certified by the National Ceramics Manufacturers Association.

"Ceramic adaptation simply means making additions to the preformed hobby ceramic items," explains Mrs. Kinzie, whose works are displayed in national ceramic shows.

"If yo 're intimidated by the thought of starting from 'scratch,' but want to try your hand at more than just painting a preformed, undecorated ceramic item, then consider this as a compromise," she adds.

Among the hundreds of useful and decorative preformed ceramic items to be found in local ceramic studios are candlesticks, bud vases, Christmas tree decorations, Santa Claus cookie jars, games, toys and figurines, she points out.

"The creative advantage offered by adaptation techniques allows the hobbyist to truly customize a gift by adding on special touches," she says.

The hobbyist starts the project by choosing the greenware item — the preformed ceramic piece. Also needed are ceramic colors and brushes, and a bottle of liquid slip, the liquefied clay that will be used to create the adaptation forms. A flat, absorbent plaster surface is also required.

The greenware item should be cleaned with a ceramic tool that will remove the mold marks and seams. Since the greenware may be somewhat dry, it should be dampened with a spritzer bottle to allow for better bonding of the ceramic items.

"Making ceramic additions to the greenware item is really quite simple," Mrs. Kinzie says. "Pour the liquid slip onto the flat, absorbent plaster surface and allow it to set until it is leather-hard but still pliable.

Hairstyling salon not just for haircuts

By BEN WALKER
AP Writer

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — There are foot-long Japanese koi fish and games to play. Or one can breeze through a slide show of stylish coiffured heads, while sipping mineral water and munching gourmet delights.

"People would come in and tell me to cut their hair the same way I did it the last time," said Leonard, whose shop handles more than 100 customers a day. "That's fine, but I can't remember how I did everybody."

So he talked to engineers about concocting a taping system in his bright round cutting room.

"They told me it had never been done before and that there would be problems," he said. "So I kept picking up things from each of them and kept going to more people.

"I wanted to put this industry in step with computers," he said. "I wanted to give my clients the best of what was available. I wanted to be first, to be where it's going to be. And, I figured it would help business."

About a year ago, after modifying a camera and a Plexiglas dome-covered console, some monitors and mirrors, the $12,000 unit was ready for showtime.

"In the beginning, people were skeptical. They thought it was a gimmick," said Leonard, whose shop used to employ a harmonica player. "People couldn't grasp how we would use it."

Now, he says, it's all very logical, and simple enough so that even he can use it.

At the end of each hairstyling, Leonard or one of his six other cutters, punches a code into the multicolored swivel console that sits unobtrusively in the middle of his tel-a-cut room.

An overhead camera silently spins around and uses the room's 20 mirrors to make an eight-second color tape of the customer's hairstyle from all angles, while an audio track can record any comments from the cutter or the cuttee.

Tapes are then filed away in a back room to await the customer's return visit, when they are replayed on a personal monitor and discussed.

"They see it as a tool, not a gimmick," Leonard says. "Where some people say computers make things less personal, we use them to make things more personal.

Leonard says the videotapes have made him a better hairstylist — "I can see what I did and what mistakes I may have made" — and, he adds with a smile, his business has increased by 50 percent since the system was installed.

DEAR ABBY

More opinions about tipping

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: This is for "One Foot in the Poorhouse," the waitress who came up with the brilliant conclusion that most people don't tip 15 percent because they can't figure 15 percent of the bill.

She said she was sick of breaking her back to give excellent service for a measly 10 percent. Then she had the gall to send you a "tip table" for people to carry in their wallets for quick and easy reference!

Where it is written that a person has to tip 15 percent — or 10 percent? Or anything, for that matter?

I always thought a "tip" was optional. — MAZOOK IN NOE VALLEY, CALIF.

DEAR ABBY: Hooray for the waitress who sent you the 15 percent tipping chart. As a waitress, I serve people daily whose minds go completely blank when I present the check. Some don't know what kind of tip to leave. The chart will be useful for them. At least they will know that a 15 percent tip is the going rate for excellent service.

And please stress that we could never make it on the minimum wage paid by the employer. We do this kind of work ONLY because of the tips. — WORKING MY BUTT OFF IN BUTTE

DEAR ABBY: I have to say a few words to that waitress who wants to help us "dumbbells" figure 15 percent of the check.

Do you tip the man who helps you try on 20 pairs of shoes? Do you tip the bus driver? Or the pilot? How about the mailman? Or the garbage man? Or the milkman? And let's not forget the nurse who gives you a bath, makes your bed and empties your bedpans.

I'm a schoolteacher. Nobody ever tipped me. I am not complaining, but I'm tired of people who take a job waiting on tables and then gripe because they don't make more on tips. If they don't earn a decent salary, they should find another line of work. — FED UP IN DENVER

DEAR ABBY: Most people who depend on tips for a living (waiters, waitresses, doormen, hairdressers, manicurists, drivers, etc.) appreciate cash tips because they can be pocketed easily and not declared as taxable income.

I suppose some people are 100 percent honest about cash tips, but I never knew one who didn't cheat a little now and then. Me included. — ONLY HUMAN IN HOUSTON

DEAR ABBY: My father is a surgeon. Suppose he sent the following bill:

Surgery $3,200
15 percent tip $480
Amount due: $3,680

What would you think? — DOC'S SON, HILLSBORO, KAN.

DEAR SON: Your father would be cutting his own throat.

DEAR ABBY: "One Foot in the Poorhouse" has the other foot in her mouth. Please tell us where she works. I'd like to go there and "stiff" her. — EX-WAITRESS, PALM SPRINGS, CALIF.

DEAR ABBY: When are Americans going to get smart and take a lesson from the Swiss, the French and the Italians? They build the tip right into the bill. I, as a customer, would prefer it. I'm sorry for waiters and waitresses who must rely on the generosity of those they serve to make ends meet. It's downright degrading. — FOR HUMAN DIGNITY

Tangerine Sherbert

TANGERINE SHERBET

1½ cups milk
2-3rds cup nonfat dry milk powder

Thaw tangerine juice until it slips easily out of the can and turn it into an electric blender with milk and dry milk powder. Whirl, turning off machine once midway to scrape down the sides, until foamy and blended — a matter of minutes. Turn into 2 plastic ice cube trays with dividers. Freeze until firm; cover. At serving time, run a small spatula around each divider and remove sherbet cubes. (This sherbet never gets icy-hard.) Serve "as is" to youngsters; with chocolate liqueur to adults. Makes 6 servings.

Palette Club Art Center to hold Open House in organization's new facilities

All Midland residents are invited to attend an Open House in the Palette Club Art Center in its new facilities at 907 W. Wadley, to be held Sunday from 2 p.m. — 4 p.m.

The Palette Club Art Center grew out of an Art Club meeting held in September of 1935. Its founders were Mrs. R.M. Barron, Mrs. Mary Butler, Mrs. Mary Ray, Mrs. Myra Hale, Mrs. F.H. Lanham, Mrs. Ben Golladay, Mrs. D.E Snyder, Mrs. Bess Hix and Mrs. John Gossett. Mrs. Golladay is the only orgina. member still active and has served many terms as treasurer.

The orginal members, in a variety of projects, attained a fund of $700 and this sum, along with building plans, were submitted to a builder in 1940. A frame structure was erected at 604 N. Colorado on a lot donated by Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Barron. The original building was expanded in 1949. In 1951 the Midland Palette Club Art Center incorporated and adopted its charter. Its purpose: "The support of an educational undertaking in connection with the promotion of painting and other fine arts; to inspire interest on the part of its members and others in the community in the worthwhile utilization of leisure time through education of the kind indicated."

In 1956, the club, in conjunction with the Women's Auxiliary to Midland Memorial Hospital, instigated a plan to exhibit paintings of members in patient's rooms. Member's paintings have also hung in nursing homes and restaurants in Midland. Currently exhibits are furnished to the Midland Woman's Club, Midland Civic Center, Allison Bridge Center and local galleries.

The Tuesday Painters, meeting the second Tuesday of each month at 9:30 a.m., is the largest group in the member groups of the Palette Club. This group sponsors workshops, demonstrations and spring and fall arts and crafts shows. At each meeting a Painting of the Month is selected from the works of members to be exhibited in the Midland National Bank and one to be shown at the Hanging Tree Gallery.

The newest member group to utilize the Art Center facilities, joining in 1981, is the Easy Writers Calligraphy Guild.

In recognition of the probability that there are men and women with a desire to paint who work during the daytime, the Palette Club will initiate a group to meet evenings in the Art Center.

Recently elected officers of the Palette Club Art Center for 1982 are Mrs. Carl Earhart, president; Mrs. J.M. Nuessle, first vice-president; Miss Marie Spencer, second vice-president; Mrs. T.L. Bond, secretary; and Mrs. Don Perryman, treasurer. Officers of the Tuesday Painters are Mrs. Larry Smith, president; Mrs. J.T. Klingler, vice-president; Mrs J.L. Merrifield, secretary; and Mrs. Don Perryman, treasurer.

For information concerning the Palette Club call Mrs. Smith at 694-8289. Those interested in the evening painters' group may obtain further information from Mrs. William Price at 682-4979.

Job-hunting booklet popular

By JOHN STRACHAN
AP Writer

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) — With the market for self-improvement and "how-to" books growing as fast as the labor market is shrinking, the message is clear — someone should write a book to tell people how to get a job.

The New York state Labor Department did just that a decade ago with the initial publication of "Guide To Preparing a Resume." If it's not a best seller, it's only because the 22-page booklet has not been sold — it has been offered free to anyone who wanted a copy.

"We just printed up 170,000 copies and most of them were back-ordered by the schools," said John Harvey, director of public information for the Labor Department, as the department announced publication of the 10th edition of the guide.

Much has changed for job-seekers since the first edition came out 10 years ago.

Unemployment is up. It costs more to look for work. First-class postage for mailing resumes has jumped from 8 cents in 1972 to 20 cents.

And, inflation and divorce rates have climbed as fast as the unemployment rate.

That means more women thrust into the job market to augment a husband's paycheck or to make up for the paycheck that departed along with the divorced husband.

One of the nine sample resumes detailed in the booklet is specifically designed for women reentering the job market. There are others for job-seekers with only a high school education, recent college graduates and workers with considerable experience.

In addition to tips on how to prepare an effective resume and cover letter, the booklet dispenses advice on what to do before, during and after an interview.

The advice is often common sense in nature and aimed at the young, first-time job-seeker who learns, for instance, that you don't take anyone with you to an interview, do dress conservatively and be on time.

But those who've been down the interview road before, particularly those who haven't traveled it lately, can still pick up some tips on the do's and don'ts of job-seeking, such as:

* Carbon copies of resumes are tacky, but a good quality mimeograph or photocopy is acceptable when you're sending out the same resume to a number of potential employers.

* Don't park your car in a restricted or limited time space when you go for an interview. With any luck the interview may take a while.

X-rated home video games supported

By ROBERT KNOWLES
Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES — The makers of three X-rated video games set for release soon got some support recently from the American Civil Liberties Union director here, who warned against efforts to legislate controls on "what people can view in the confines of their own homes."

Ramona Ripston, executive director of the ACLU's Southern California chapter, said efforts by the Los Angeles County Commission on the Status of Women to seek Board of Supervisors help in banning the games was misguided.

The 13-member commission has joined various American Indian groups and community organizations in protesting plans for the sale of the $49.95 games — "Custer's Revenge," "Bachelor Party" and "Beat 'Em and Eat 'Em."

"Custer's Revenge" has particularly outraged many Indian and women's groups because it allegedly depicts a cavalry officer wearing only hat and boots involved in sexual activities with an Indian girl tied to a stake. Players score points if the officer avoids being hit by flying arrows.

Commission chairwoman Betty Rosenstein will ask the supervisors Tuesday to order county lawyers to see if an ordinance can be enacted banning what the panel called the "sexually and racially dangerous" games.

"I was invited to see the games but have not had time," said Ripston. "From what I've heard, they certainly seem to be in poor taste, but that's not the issue here."

Oklahoma history surrounds temple

It was that feather, carved to become a quill pen, that President Theodore Roosevelt used to sign the act that made Oklahoma the 46th state.

The feather was taken from the wing of a wild eagle captured near Woodward and presented to the president for the signing.

"There, that makes Oklahoma a state," said an unhappy Roosevelt, a Republican who had opposed statehood because Oklahoma was Democratic, as he signed the act.

It is in the ballroom of the temple that the Statehood Ball, which will conclude the state's 75th birthday party, was held Tuesday night.

The Scottish Rite Temple itself is tied intimately to Oklahoma history. The temple actually is two buildings connected by Solomon's Arch, a 525-foot walkway replete with Masonic symbols. The rear portion, constructed of brick, housed the Legislature before the capital was moved to Oklahoma City in 1910.

Once the capital was moved, the city of Guthrie sold the building to the Methodist Church, which used it for a girls' school for several years. But then a church official discovered what he believed to be a flaw in the deed and the building was returned to the city.

The foundation of the present imposing limestone structure that sits in front of the original "Constitution Hall" was laid in September 1920 and the structure took nearly nine years to complete. The new building is 260 feet wide and 270 feet deep. Combined with the old building, the entire structure has a depth of approximately 470 feet.

"Used in the erection of the new building were 79,000 cubic feet of stone, 42,000 sacks of cement and 425 tons of structural steel, requiring 180 freight cars to move it to Guthrie," reads a booklet put out by the temple. "Twenty-six columns surround the front of the building, each being 32 feet high, composed of seven sections weighing 11 tons each, or a total weight of 77 tons."

Hawk & Parr, an Oklahoma City architectural firm, designed the building and the construction contract was awarded to the New York firm of James Stewart Construction Co.

The husband-and-wife team of Marion and Kathryn Davidson was hired to detail the interior. Davidson was on the staff of the architectural firm, while his wife was an interior decorator who began her career as a rug designer for Marshall, Field and Co. of Chicago.

Each room in the temple proper is authentic of the period represented. The Atrium, which some suppose to be a hallway, is 190 feet long and 52 feet wide and is a replica of the room in which wealthy Romans of the time of Christ received and entertained their friends.

The keystone over the main door to the auditorium from the Atrium was brought from the quarry of King Solomon near Jerusalem by special permission of the English government.

Close by is the Egyptian Room, also called the "small auditorium," which can seat 650 on the main floor and in the balcony.

'Fame' doesn't help candidate's cause

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

LOS ANGELES — Gary Arnold gained fame (of a sort) when a fellow Republican told him: "Shut up!"

That was on Oct. 6 at the White House. The Republican who told Arnold to shut up was President Reagan.

Now fellow Republicans (but not Reagan this time) have told Arnold: "Thanks."

The remark made Arnold angry and embarrassed the Republicans involved. Arnold was running for Congress in California's 16th District, which includes Santa Cruz, and was invited to a White House meeting of GOP candidates. It was supposed to be a sort of pep rally, with the president as chief cheerleader.

But Arnold, whose political stance is somewhat more conservative than the president's, irked Reagan with aggressive questions about taxes and Taiwan. That's when the president made Arnold famous.

But fame is fleeting and, on Nov. 2, Arnold lost the election to the incumbent Democrat, Leon Panetta.

Shortly afterwards, he got a nice letter from Tirso del Junco, chairman of the California Republican Party.

Charles Jackson, convicted in Ector County Jan. 28, 1982, of credit card abuse, and in Midland County May 27, 1982, of theft of property, was released to Tarrant county after serving and earning one year and 10 months of a four-year sentence.

Joe Gustavo Rios, convicted in Howard County Jan. 12, 1982, of burglary, was released to Nueces County after serving and earning one year and eight months of a five-year sentence.

State politicos wield national power

By CHARLES RICHARDS
Associated Press Writer

If you're going to Washington and want a ticket for a tour of the White House, call your congressman. He also can untangle some of the red tape if you feel your Social Security check is lower than it should be.

But if you want laws changed — if you're an executive raving mad about unfair trade competition from abroad, excessive taxes on oil and gas production or the decline in housing construction — you need to talk with someone who "runs the place."

Someone like Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, Sen. John Tower, Vice President George Bush, House Majority Leader Jim Wright or presidential aide Jim Baker.

Those five are Texas' "movers and shakers" in Washington, according to a poll of the state's most powerful men and women.

The Associated Press asked editors and publishers of more than 90 Texas newspapers to identify the most powerful people in their areas. Assuring anonymity, the AP then asked the 168 leaders who emerged on that list to pick the 10 most powerful Texans.

"Bush could well become the most powerful person in Texas, either if he becomes the Republican nominee for president at some time or if in later years of his administration, President Reagan were to turn over considerable power to his vice president," said one respondent, an Austin attorney.

Baker, "because of his role within the president's inner staff, is a man of great influence," a noted lawyer said. Baker, who joined the Reagan administration after losing a race for Texas attorney general to Mark White in 1978, is one of a triad of Reagan's closest advisers.

Bentsen and Tower "both have loyal statewide followings, both greatly influence national issues and are respected in Congress. And both have key committee assignments that give them power over defense, economic and financial policies," another survey participant said.

Wright was named in a recent survey of House members as the most effective member and the most persuasive speaker. His colleagues say Wright fights hard, but plays by the rules.

"Jim's a fighter who goes full tilt all the time for the party, but who's never bitter in defeat," an admiring Democrat said of Wright, 60, a 28-year veteran of Congress who is next in line for speaker when Tip O'Neill steps down.

Bentsen's stock rose — not just within Texas but nationally — when he pioneered an effective get-out-the-vote mechanism that not only swept him into office again but benefited other Democratic candidates statewide earlier this month.

"Presidential candidates for 1984 are aware that historically they have to win Texas to be president, and they are aware of the muscle he demonstrated in this election," a longtime political observer noted.

"They are going to be coming to him, seeking his help. How much assistance he gives will depend upon the extent they are going to keep in mind the interests of Texans if they make it to the White House."

Bentsen's knowledge in economics and energy areas have earned respect from other senators.

"His colleagues listen. His grasp of economics is probably as good as anybody in Washington," another survey participant said. "Bentsen doesn't do wild stunts. He doesn't grandstand. They know when he advocates something, it's solidly based. His track record is good."

Bill would provide school employees group insurance

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Rep. Bob Simpson, D-Amarillo, has prefiled legislation providing for group health insurance for public school employees, including a $300 million appropriation to the Teacher Retirement System to provide a $56 per month contribution for employees and retirees covered by the act.

An aide to Simpson says the bill is similar to a compromise measure offered during the previous Legislature.

The bill, HB 105, also provides that local school districts "may contract separately with a carrier or carriers for group insurance coverage" of their employees.

The Teacher Retirement System would administer the statewide program, adopt minimum standards for coverage and benefits and would determine whether plans by local districts are in "substantial compliance" with those minimum standards.

School districts would be allowed to bring their plans into compliance within 60-180 days and the TRS would be able to terminate payment of state funds to districts not meeting the minimum standards.

The bill sets out a number of provisions regarding benefits, employee contribution, beneficiaries, etc., and continuing state contributions to the program.

State contributions would be distributed to local districts in advance "based on reasonable estimates and subject to reconciliation no later than the end of the school year..."

Payments also could be made to health maintenance organizations under HB 105.

Bill would aid victims

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Rep. Jay Gibson, D-Odessa, has prefiled HB 8, providing for restitution to crime victims through bail bond forfeitures.

The legislation would provide for crime victims to present claims in court and for a court to determine "the amount of restitution to which such a victim is reasonably entitled."

The bill amends the existing law by providing that forfeited bail bonds could be used to pay compensation to the victims.

'Daughter of the Regiment' winner for TOT, Midland

Donizetti's light-hearted, comic opera "Daughter of the Regiment" played Midland Sunday. Without a doubt, Midland and Midland Opera Theater came out the winners.

This Texas Opera Theater production was brought here by the Midland Opera Theatre; an organization which saw initial success three seasons ago in the locally produced "Die Fledermaus" production, but experienced disappointment and embarrassment the following season with "The Merry Widow."

It is to this organization's credit that it took a failed production for what it was — a learning experience.

Now Midland Opera Theater has licked its wounds, learned its les-

Nancy Anguish

Advisory Committee, brought the Texas Opera Theater's residency troupe to Midland last spring for a series of workshops and a one-hour opera presentation at Theatre Midland.

"We had a full house with standing room only at MCT. It was very well received," Mrs. Anguish said.

With two successes and one failure behind them, the organization decided to become an official entity.

"We decided it was time to get organized and become more established in the community. We want to be able to do at least one opera a year in Midland. We are already planning on bringing TOT back in the spring of 1984 to do (Giacomo Puccini's) 'Madama Butterfly.'" Pausing, she added, "Eventually we would like to have the support and resources to present a locally done opera."

BUT FOR NOW, Midland Opera Theater and Midlanders will content themselves with professional operas brought to Midland. And if Sunday's offering is characteristic of TOT's productions, when the 650-plus who saw "Daughter of the Regiment" finish telling their friends (after all, Midland is a word-of-mouth town), it may be standing room only at Midland High School Auditorium this spring.

Texas Opera Theater's production of Donizetti's comic opera "Daughter of the Regiment" played Midland Sunday. This light-hearted comedy entertained the 650-plus opera goers, leaving them looking forward to TOT's next Midland performance this spring. TOT's production was brought to town by Midland Opera Theater.

TOT has a national reputation as one of the best opera touring companies in the United States, and judging from Sunday it is a reputation that is well deserved.

Briefly, "Daughter of the Regiment" is the story of Marie, the adopted sons and, by persevering, come out a winner. Sunday it clearly demonstrated it can provide Midlanders with quality productions at a minimal cost ($10 reserved seating and $7 general admission, made possible through a substantial grant from Midland National Bank as well as about 40 local patrons).

Midland Opera Theater's guiding light has been Nancy Anguish.

"WE HAVE BEEN not organized at all. For the last three years we have been working with the college, and MCT (Midland Community Theatre). We have been operating under the auspice of Midland College," Mrs. Anguish said in an interview prior to the Sunday performance.

"'Die Fledermaus' was outstanding. It was well received by the community and everybody loved it," Mrs. Anguish said, adding, "The performers were of professional level. But our other opera ('The Merry Widow') really disappointed us and made us aware that we weren't ready to do one by ourselves."

So the organization, then referred to as the Midland College Opera

5."Heartlight" Neil Diamond (Columbia)

Costumes and set were attractively done, with the set looking, as TOT's director Jane Weaver said, "like a children's story book where you open the book and everything kind of pops out. It's very 3-dimensional, but it's like a piece of art; it's like a painting." (Whoever is handling the stick figures of the soldiers needs to take more care in moving them along — at times the figures were set too high, briefly shattering the illusion.)

An interesting note about the costumes is that all the stripes, buttons and some decorative ornamentations are actually painted on. This tidbit may be news even for those who saw the production. One of the advantages is obvious — no lost buttons.

Act II was far tighter, more lively and decidely more entertaining than Act I.

Act I felt at least 10 minutes too long. Once the audience had acquainted itself with the set and costumes, the action seemed to drag.

Although the ensemble work was well blocked, aside from the Marquise of Berkenfield and her servant Hortensius' brief appearance, Act I lacked individual characters onstage who had strong stage presences.

BUT ACT II was fast-paced and funny, keeping the audience in stitches most of the time.

As for the cast, Robert Ferrier (Hortensius), Susan Shafer (Marquise of Berkenfield), Darren Keith Woods (Son, John Luc the Duke) and Michele McBride (Duchess of Krackenthorp) were the most believable characters onstage (And what a group of characters!). All had strong stage presences,even Woods (the son) in his weakling role. He carried off the part beautifully, complete with his jerking head movement and hiding under Mother's skirt, or more correctly, attempting to hide under Mother's skirt. And when Hortensius (Ferrier) explained his rather significant error at the opera's close, he (Ferrier) almost brought the house down.

The most haunting and melodious voice onstage was that of tenor William Watson (Tonio). Miss Weaver had explained that his association with TOT came about through a review. As she said, "I was reading Opera News this past summer and saw a review for Bill Watson that said he had done 'Daughter' in Chicago. So I called the Chicago Opera Theater and they said, 'He's wonderful.'" And his voice is truly a treat to the ears.

Soprano Patricia Ernest's portrayal of Marie lacked credibility. Perhaps it was because those around her were so good (her presence didn't command the stage and therefore the audience's undivided attention), or maybe it was a lack of depth in her voice or her overplaying of the role. Then again, it may have been all three. Her portrayal wasn't bad, it was merely disappointing.

Thank you MOT for bringing this enjoyable evening at the opera to town. From this sampling, there are those of us who are eagerly awaiting "Madama Butterfly."

Gerard returns from future to play deaf cop

NEW YORK (AP) — "Longstreet" was a blind detective. "Ironside" was crippled. On Saturday, CBS invents a new twist, a deaf cop in "Hear No Evil."

The movie's humor and clever dialogue are several cuts above standard police drama. But it's not in the same league as "Hill Street Blues" for job reality and human emotion.

Dragon's police partner, played by former San Francisco 49ers football star Bernie Casey, is named Monday. (Counting Sgt. Jack Friday, played by Jack Webb —"Just the fact, ma'am, just the facts" — that leaves only five days for future tough-guy roles.) In the mold of cops Hill and Renko on "Hill Street," Dragon and Monday have a humorous, mutually needing relationship.

The two detectives are bird-dogging a band of Hell's Angel types who are suspected of manufacturing PCP, the drug known as angel dust. "We're not a gang," says one biker. "We're a club." The "club" members are ugly and nasty, except for one salvageable soul (Wings Hauser).

By that time, Dragon has lost his hearing and his badge, but not his police instincts and desires. That's when the story begins to stretch the limits of believability.

With the help of a pretty instructor (Mimi Rogers), Dragon learns to read others' speech. With a short timeout for alienation and anger, Dragon progresses very quickly over the low hurdles, but he never encounters major roadblocks.

Still, "Hear No Evil" never loses its good nature. Dragon's hearing-ear dog, Bozo, proves invaluable in pursuing the criminal bikers. Just as the audience is wondering how Bozo could have accomplished one particular act of intelligence on a stakeout with his master, Dragon speaks our mind: "You couldn't have done that."

Thirty-nine arrested on drug charges

TEMPLE (AP) — State, federal and local authorities arrested 39 people Wednesday night and searched Central Texas Thursday for 12 others named in drug trafficking indictments, a prosecutor said.

Bell County District Attorney Cappy Eads said 43 people were named in 80 indictments accusing people in Bell and Lampassas counties of selling $85,000 worth of controlled substances to undercover agents.

Department of Public Safety spokesman David Wells in Austin said 31 of the people arrested since 9 p.m. Wednesday were named in the indictments, the other eight were with some of the indicted people and arrested for possession of controlled substances.

"We still have some (people) on the ground," said Eads, who added he did not know how long it would take to arrest the remaining 12 defendants.

He said 77 of the sealed indictments were returned in Bell County and three were returned in Lampassas County.

Eads said in terms of manpower, the three-month undercover investigation code named Operation Eagle was the largest in Bell County in the 14 years he has been in office.

"I think its going to make a big dent" in illegal drug trafficking in the region, said Eads. "I would anticipate as a result of information we have uncovered that there will be additional indictments on findings we have, can pursue and develop."

He said the arrests will put other narcotics traffickers "on notice as to drug dealing in this area."

Leftists try to disrupt Salvadoran economy

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Police said leftist insurgents dynamited two trucks hauling freshly harvested coffee in an ongoing campaign to disrupt the economy of this war-ravaged Central American nation.

Guerrillas placed heavy charges of dynamite under the hoods of the two trucks a few miles south of the city of Santa Ana, 41 miles northwest of the capital, wrecking the vehicles and sending coffee beans flying across the highway earlier this week, a national police commander said.

The coffee harvest has just begun in Santa Ana province and other mountainous regions of El Salvador.

In San Miguel province, an estimated 25 to 30 guerrillas halted a pickup truck near San Jorge, 75 miles east of San Salvador, ordered the passengers out and burned the vehicle, a provincial commander said Wednesday.

Authorities said it was the ninth vehicle destroyed by rebels during the past 24 hours.

The provincial commander said army patrols had been stepped up around San Jorge and other towns on the slopes of the San Miguel volcano to prevent rebels from sabotaging the area's coffee harvest.

Guerrillas have halted traffic on the country's highways, sabotaged electrical power and the telephone system and shot down crop-dusting planes in their effort to destroy the economy.

Rebels on Wednesday burned three gasoline trucks and an automobile on the coastal highway near Usulutan, 68 miles east of San Salvador, and two trucks near Jiquilisco, 60 miles east of the capital on the same highway, police said.

They also set up roadblocks at which they harangued motorists with revolutionary rhetoric, treasury police said.

Authorities in San Miguel, capital of the province of the same name, said that water will have to be rationed soon in some areas of four eastern provinces because of a shortage of diesel fuel to run pumps used when the electrical grid is down.

Saboteurs blacked out the four eastern provinces Sunday, and power was still out Wednesday. Many cities and towns are also without running water because they are dependent on electrically operated pumps.

Diesel tankers, meanwhile, have been having trouble reaching the eastern third of the country because of guerrilla roadblocks.

Harris can't imagine life without Tarnower

NEW YORK (AP) — Jean Harris, still maintaining her innocence in the death of "Scarsdale Diet" doctor Herman Tarnower, doesn't care if she gets out of prison because she "can't imagine what it would be like out there without him."

The 59-year-old former school headmistress, serving a 15-year to life sentence at the Bedford Hills state prison, also said she was not surprised that her appeal for a new trial was turned down Tuesday by the state's highest court.

"What surprised me was that I could have been sent here in the first place, and having had that happen, I think they're going to keep me here," Mrs. Harris said in an interview broadcast Thursday on ABC's "20-20" television program.

Mrs. Harris was convicted in February 1981 of second-degree murder in the shooting death of Tarnower, author of the "Scarsdale Diet" and her lover for 15 years.

During the interview, Mrs. Harris played nervously with her eyeglass case and appeared to be fighting back tears. When asked if she still loved Tarnower, she covered her eyes and sobbed.

After a moment, she said, "I think about him constantly. One of the reasons why I don't care if I get out, actually, I can't imagine what it would be like out there without him."

LONDON (AP) — Prince Andrew, poised at a switch hooked up to Christmas lights on Regent Street, told the crowd, "I am told there are about 55,000 bulbs in the trees. I hope they work."

They did.

Prince Andrew

Andrew, 22, second son of Queen Elizabeth II, pulled the switch as he stood on the balcony of a clothing store to the cheers of the crowd below.

The prince, a Royal Navy helicopter pilot, was on leave so he could take part in Thursday's ceremony, fulfilling a family tradition.

Cher

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Cher was indeed willing to talk to us — Us magazine, that is — a federal appeals court has ruled in upholding a damage award of $269,117 against Forum magazine.

The 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruled Thursday that an interview rejected by Us before being sold to Forum was improperly promoted because Forum's advertisements said the singer "tells Forum" what she "would never tell Us."

The court said Cher, 36, had given the interview to radio talk-show host Fred Robbins with the understanding that it would be published in Us, and called the advertising "patently false."

Robbins also sold the interview to The Star magazine.

The court threw out a damage award against Robbins, saying he had no part in the promotion or publishing of the interview. The court also rejected Cher's argument that The Star falsely claimed Cher had given it an exclusive interview in a promotion that read, "Exclusive Series."

The two rejected damage awards had totaled $394,117.

King Carl XVI

CHICAGO (AP) — Sweden's King Carl XVI Gustaf and Queen Silvia, touring the United States to promote Scandinavian cultural exhibits, have received an all-American gift: a stuffed Snoopy wearing a T-shirt and baseball cap.

Thousands of students and Scandinavian-Americans greeted the royal couple Thursday at North Park College, where the 36-year-old king presented Hugo Anderson, 95, a Chicago banker and Swedish immigrant, with a plaque marking the dedication of an endowed chair for Scandinavian studies named in Anderson's honor.

The liberal arts school was founded in Minneapolis in 1891 by the Evangelical Covenant Church of the first generation of Swedish-Americans.

The royal couple received gifts for their three children at home in Sweden. Besides the stuffed "Peanuts" comic strip character, they got a school bag and a puppet.

They also were guests of honor at a luncheon with Mayor Jane M. Byrne, who said she had a "terrific conversation with the queen about what it's like for a woman to be in the public eye."

The royal couple began a 10-day tour of the United States on Nov. 8 to promote a series of traveling cultural exhibits called "Scandinavia Today."

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The California Supreme Court has agreed to review drug charges against comedian Flip Wilson, who was accused of possessing small amounts of cocaine and hashish oil last year.

Wilson, 58, who claims charges filed against him in 1981 should be thrown out, is asking the high court to review a lower court's July ruling.

The state Court of Appeal had said Wilson was legally detained at the Los Angeles International Airport on March 10, 1981, after arriving from Florida. It also held that seized evidence — small amounts of drugs found in his briefcase — should not be suppressed.

Wilson, charged with two counts of possession of an illegal substance, claims the seizure was illegal because there was no probable cause for a detective to stop and question him. Wilson said he never was informed of his right to refuse a search.

NEW YORK (AP) — Joe Kipness, 71, a veteran Broadway producer and proprietor of Joe's Pier 52 restaurant, died Wednesday of cancer.

Kipness was the creator and co-producer of the Broadway hit, "I Love My Wife." Some of his earlier productions were "Applause," starring Lauren Bacall and "I Had A Ball," with Buddy Hackett.

DUBLIN, Ireland (AP) — Hilton Edwards, an Englishman who became one of Ireland's leading actors and theater directors, died Thursday at age 79, colleagues at Dublin's Gate Theater reported.

Edwards had been in bad health for the last two years, but the nature of his illness was not reported.

Jokester parodies L.L. Bean catalog

And the ragg sweaters are Oiled Steel Wool Sweaters — in Gunmetal Gray, Steel Blue and Faux Rust. Weight — 8 pounds.

It's all part of "Items From Our Catalog," a parody of the catalog produced by L.L. Bean, whose 24-hour store in Freeport, Maine, has been embraced by outdoor lovers and sporty preppies everywhere.

The joke-teller is Alfred Gingold, a New Yorker who saw the clothing and outdoor gear retailer as a sitting duck for parody. Now even the folks in plaid flannels and chain-tread hunting boots are giggling.

"I don't know anyone who hunts moose, but I know a lot of people in New York...who want to look like moose hunters," Gingold, 35, told The Washington Post.

But a solemn Labrador retriever on the cover is wearing a "pet camping bra." And Bean's duck decoys, down vests and assorted outdoor products are missing.

Inside, there's a Penguin Decoy "to play on the insecurities of geese, ducks and other casually dressed fowl." The Downhill Hibachi "works as well shussing down the slopes as it does in your backyard." And the Lined Tuna Case "keeps tuna trim and safe."

There's the Sport Toupee, Country Dentures, the Body Odor Alarm, "Our Own False Beards," the Edible Moccasin and the Chloroform Dog Bed "for a favorite but ailing pet."

L.L. Bean, which had sales of $172 million last year, will mail 45 million of the real catalogs this year. Bean is never mentioned by name in the parody, but there's no doubt it's the target.

"We're kind of a national institution and I suppose it was inevitable that somebody would come up with a spoof," said spokesman Kilt Andrew. Andrew declines to discuss the book but he has seen it. "The publisher was kind enough to send us a couple of copies."

"Our Catalog" offers an Inflatable Cheese Slice — helium-filled processed cheese that can be used as a sun shade, kite, distress signal or for canapes on the trail. The Norwegian Bulletproof Sweater is soft and comfortable — and "16 times stronger than steel."

A sweater comes in Little Guy, Good Ol'Medium, Big Guy or Hey Fatso! sizes and Wimpy Blue, Mellow Yellow or Blase Beige. A portable tombstone assures the hiker "a recognizable grave when far from home." The Self-Motivated Jogging Suit exercises with or without someone wearing it.

"2) Include inside the package a 20-pound weight, packing slip, and a 500-word essay outlining in detail three good reasons why you need to Return or Exchange your perfectly good merchandise. Typing errors will result in forfeit of both merchandise and money.

"3) Insure package and self and drive to nearest lake. Jump in."

Pure water economical, delicious with Home Spa

Paid Advertisement

With a Home Spa water purifier in your home, you no longer have to pay inflated prices for drinking and cooking water, or water for your house plants, pets and goldfish.

The Home Spa water purifier with the activated carbon (charcoal) filter solves the bad water problem for Midland and Odessa families, as well as for families nationwide.

The Home Spa removes chlorine, sulphates, rust, algae, iron, turbidity, taste/odor and reduces hardness. You get nature's delicious water with impurities removed for less than two cents a gallon. This water is much more healthful than distilled water with a few minerals added.

READER'S DIGEST:"At present, the most promising technique for dealing with chlorine and organic chemicals is the remarkable purifier–Activated Carbon."

AMERICAN HOME:"An activated carbon filter eliminates toxic organic pollutants and is excellent for eliminating non-toxic objectional elements, such as chlorine, hydrogen sulphide, tast/odor and turbidity. No home should be without one."

THE WALL STREET JOURNAL: "Home Water Purifier Business Booming."

GOOD HOUSEKEEPING:"Many states recommend that water be filtered through activated carbon. Yet not a single health department is requiring or even urging that this improved form of filtration be installed."

THE WASHINGTON STAR: "We must intensively investigate what levels of these substances (chlorine in combination with other chemicals) may be dangerous and pursue alternatives such as filtrations of water supplies by activated carbon without delay."

Tony Rogers, Acme Marketing, 3103 East 31st, Odessa, is the national representative for the Home Spa. Income opportunities are excellent for home dealers and distributors. If interested, call Tony at 367-6977.

Although many dealers nationwide are selling the Home Spa for $29.95 to $39.95, Tony's low overhead enables him to sell the Home Spa for the low retail price of just $24.95.

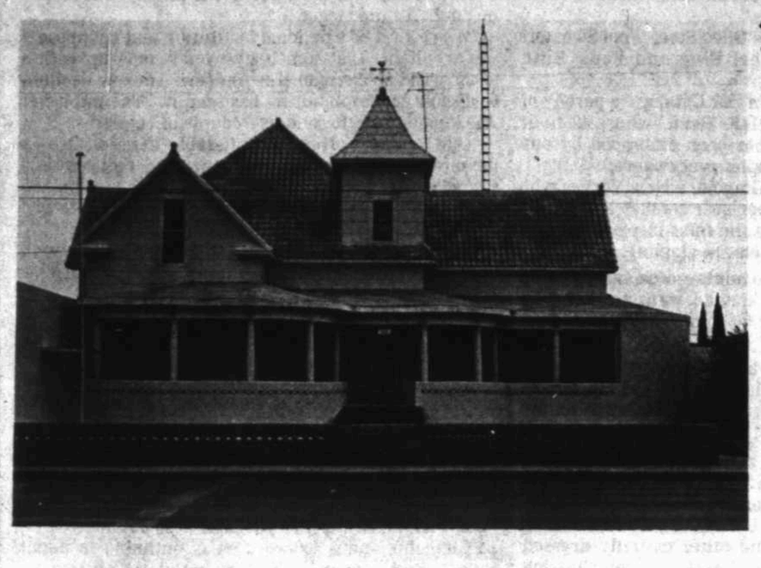
Replacement filters for the Home Spa should be changed about every 400 gallons, or six to nine months, depending on the amount of water used. These filters are usually $8.95 each, but are now on sale for three for $21.95 or six for $39.95. This is a good time to stock up at these low prices. Shelf life on these filters are forever.

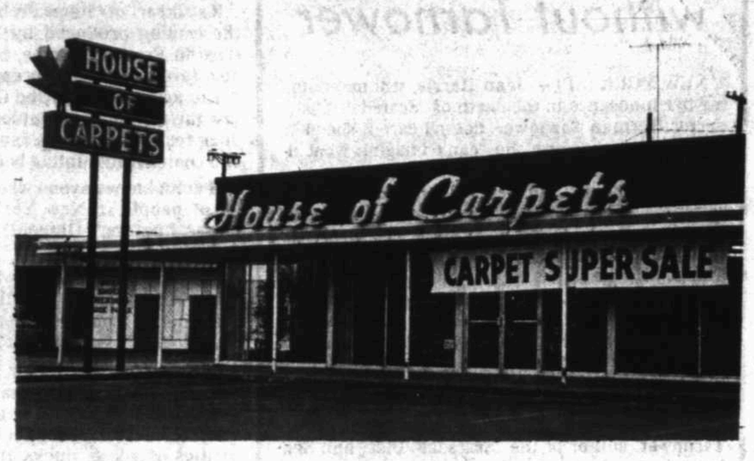
Acme Marketing also has filters for automatic ice makers on home refrigerators, ice machines and drinking fountains. The filter will not only purify ice cubes, but will keep your ice maker from clogging up, saving huge plumbing bills.

Other products sold by Acme Marketing at discount and wholesale prices are Dr. Willard Water, Aloe Vera Juice, DMSO (dimethyl sulfoxide), and Spirulina. Both Dr. Willard Water and DMSO were featured on the television show, "60 Minutes".

Call Tony at Acme Marketing, 367-6977, for further information and free local delivery. Out-of-town orders can be mailed for a handling and mailing charge of $2 per unit on any of the above products.

Tony Rogers of Acme Marketing, 3103 E. 31st, Odessa, with the Home Spa Water Purifier. Let Tony show you how simple it is to transform tap water into delightful spring quality water without electricity or plumbing, and at only two cents a gallon. Tony also has DMSO and Dr. Willard Water. Call 367-6977 for more information on these fine products.





The old Brunson mansion, built in 1908 by the ranching Brunson family was the location of the House of Carpets when it had its Grand Opening as Midland's first carpet store in 1951. The Brunson mansion, an early landmark on the old cattle trail running north out of Midland toward Lamesa, is located at what is now 1502 N. Lamesa Rd. The present location of House of Carpets is in the Village Shopping Center on W. Wall St. See future articles for more history of the House of Carpets and Midland.

House of Carpets history tale of modern Midland

Paid Advertisement

Back in early 1951, Midland was a bustling town of 25,000 and badly in need of a carpet store. In January of that year, Felix Welmaker, who was in the carpet business in Austin, came to Midland to seek a new location.

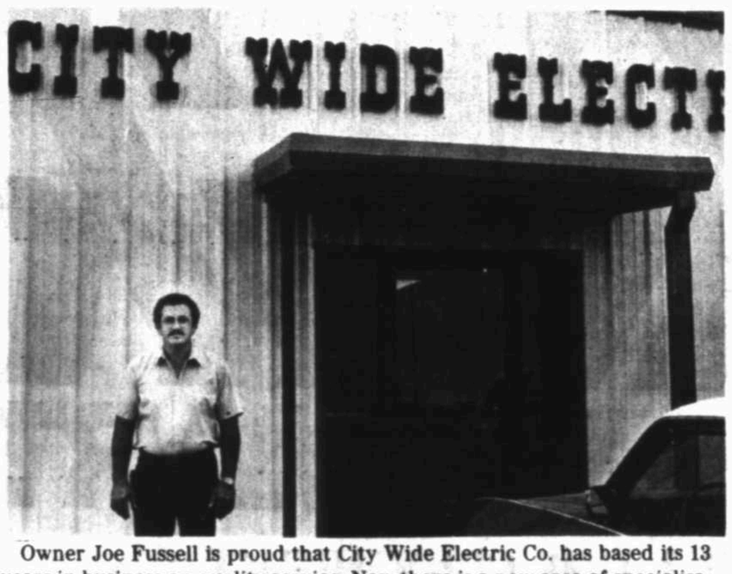
Main and Wall streets contained nearly all of Midland's prosperous businesses at that time, and there was not one location available large enough to accomodate the services Welmaker planned to offer, so his search led him away from the downtown area. Finally, he located a large 14-room "mansion" on N. Lamesa Rd., which he purchased from Henry Brunson, descendent of an early and prosperous ranching family.

Built in 1908, the Brunson mansion was a landmark on the cattle trail leading north out of Midland. This cattle trail later became N. Lamesa Rd., and the old Brunson home still stands at that very spot, 1502 N. Lamesa Rd, a remnant of early Midland which is still in excellent condition. It is now occupied by Thomas Funeral Home.

Although the name of Welmaker's carpet store was planned otherwise, when the "house" became its location, the new store was named the "House" of Carpets, and although the present location is in the Village Shopping Center, it is still fondly known as "The House" by its thousands of friends and customers. Many of Midland's well-known families became early customers of House of Carpets. Today, the "House" is still serving many of these same customers, as well as their children and grandchildren. In fact, on Grand Opening Day, May 8, 1951, the "House's" first customers were Frank and Sue Mullins, builders and developers who are today Midland West Development Corporation.

Prior to the opening of the House of Carpets, Midlanders often bought their carpets in Big Spring or San Angelo, and sometimes even from traveling merchants who set up shop in rooms at the old Scharbauer Hotel, located where the Hilton stands today. When House of Carpets opened, even though it was then on the notheast corner of town and eight blocks from the nearest paved road, it became a popular place to buy, almost overnight.

Today, the House of Carpets is still Midland's most popular carpet store. Come by the convenient location in the Village Shopping Center at W. Wall and find out why. (See future articles for more history of the "House" and Midland).



Owner Joe Fussell is proud that City Wide Electric Co. has based its 13 years in business on quality service. Now there is a new area of specialization for City Wide–complete installation of computer room systems. Of course, City Wide is still the dependable one for all your electrical repairs and maintenance. Give Fussell a call at 684-6621 for the best in electrical service.

City Wide now offers specialized installation

Paid Advertisement

Joe Fussell, owner of City Wide Electric Co., has based his business on quality customer service. This philosophy has been the cornerstone of his 13 years as an electrical contractor, enabling him to offer the finest quality service to his customers.

Although City Wide handles all types of electrical work, they specialize in electrical repair and maintenance. "We welcome calls from owners of mobile homes who need their power hooked up, and wiring tied in," says Fussell.

This year, Fussell has begun a new venture, one in which his company is fast becoming expert: computer room installation. City Wide installs three different types of computer room systems, among them the CPS power system, the UPS system and the Micropower system.

The CPS system is geared for larger computer setups, while the Micropower system is for the smaller computers. UPS is short for Uninterruptible Power System, a unique system which features automatic battery operated power if electrical power is lost to the computer. This system automatically reverts back to electricity when power is restored.

In addition to installing these specialized systems, City Wide also furnishes and installs raised flooring for computer rooms. There are usually an abundance of cables and wiring connected to computers and a raised floor can keep these out of the way, yet still be easily accessible for repair.

Another feature which Fussell and his crew service and install is computer room air conditioning. "We can install the complete package," says Fussell, "from the power system on up to the flooring and air conditioning."

This specialized service is just one of the many reasons to call City Wide Electric Co. for your electrical and computer room needs. For the finest in electrical service, give Fussell a call at 684-6621. City Wide Electric is open from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Sikhs seek Asiad protest

Longowal

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — With swords unsheathed, turbaned Sikh agitators dodging police in a far-flung game of cat-and-mouse tried to slip into New Delhi to disrupt today's opening of the Asian Games.

An electric atmosphere crackled in the capital hours before the afternoon ceremony launching the 16-day competition involving 33 countries.

Militants among the nation's 13 million-member Sikh minority threatened to use the games as an international forum to protest alleged persecution by the orthodox Hindu government of Prime Minister Indira Gandhi.

Police and security forces searched vehicles, set up roadblocks and arrested hundreds of bearded Sikhs in a sweep of potential troublemakers in three states that sprawl across hundreds of miles.

News reports said more than 700 members of the Sikh political party, Akali Dal, were detained in Punjab state during the previous 48 hours.

Police said they included 200 workers — many carrying unsheathed swords — nabbed Thursday as they headed to the railway station at the Sikh holy city of Amritsar for the 250-mile trip to New Delhi.

Lt. Gov. Jagmohan said 200 to 300 agitators were hiding out Thursday in a Sikh temple in New Delhi. Police do not enter Sikh temples.

A Cabinet representative and two moderate Akali Dal members flew from New Delhi to the Sikh holy city of Amritsar today in an apparent effort to reach a compromise with party leader Harchand Singh Longowal.

The government reportedly was willing to meet various Akali Dal religious requests but rejected demands for redrawing state and territorial boundaries to bring more Punjabi-speaking areas into Punjab state, where most Sikhs live.

Last-minute developments were not expected to change the strict security measures at the games, particularly because of the great diversity of Sikh factions and uncertainty of control over them.

Although other Sikh leaders backed away from Longowal's threat to disrupt the games, some said there would be "intense" but non-violent demonstrations.

Plans by Sikhs and some other groups to air their grievances before thousands of foreign visitors prompted the tightest security ever at the airport, 17 sports arenas and all roads and rail lines leading to New Delhi.

Dividend seen in Sino-Soviet talks

By BARRY SCHWEID

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration, while concerned about improved relations between the Soviet Union and China, foresees a possible dividend for the United States if Moscow-Peking talks lead to withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan.

Removal of the troops is one of four conditions set by the Peking government for resuming normal relations with the Soviets after a quarter-century of discord, administration officials say. Soviet withdrawal from Afghanistan is also a goal of U.S. policy.

However, if the two Communist governments patch up their differences, China could wind up siding with the Soviet Union in disputes with the United States. While this worries U.S. officials, they also would welcome a Soviet withdrawal from Afghanistan.

Administration officials detect some movement in this direction, said one who has been watching the situation closely. Specifically, officials here are impressed with the meetings held by Yuri V. Andropov, the new Communist Party general secretary, with Chinese delegates and President Mohamad Zia al-Haq of Pakistan following Soviet President Leonid I. Brezhnev's funeral Monday in Moscow.

Andropov's session with Zia went virtually unnoticed in the Western press, which concentrated on what appeared to be the new Soviet leader's unusally warm greeting for Chinese Foreign Minister Huang Hua, who also met for 90 minutes Tuesday with Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko. But an administration official, who declined to be identified, said both events indicate "there may be some movement in connection with Afghanistan."

An Analysis

He cautioned, however, that persuading the Soviets to leave Afghanistan is going to be even more difficult than getting them to withdraw troops from the Chinese border.

Pakistan, which has close ties with China, often plays a pivotal role in Asian affairs. General Zia is due in Washington for talks next month with President Reagan and Secretary of State George P. Shultz, where the Afghanistan issue presumably will be pursued.

Soviet troops entered neighboring Afghanistan in December 1979 to support a pro-Moscow government. The troops, now estimated at about 100,000, have been bogged down by Afghan rebels fighting an apparently unpopular regime.

...Now, what's the problem?

Our house was just too big after our children grew up and moved away. We wanted to find another, smaller home and sell off a few of the treasures we'd collected over the years. Classified was certainly the solution to our problem!

A simple, inexpensive ad soon had sold our special, but no-longer-used items. We sure put the profits to good use!

With the help of classified, another ad directed us to a reliable broker who sold our old home. And our new retirement cottage was listed there, too!
