Latest budget action creates controversy

By CLIFF HAAS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — Some of President Reagan's Republican allies are bitterly questioning his leadership after he sent the latest congressional budget effort into a tailspin by rejecting a proposal for higher taxes and a delay in Social Security increases.

"We made the offer, the president said no. That's over," said Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole, R-Kan. "I think for a while, at least...there'll not be too many Republican senators listening to pleas from the White House on anything."

Dole said some GOP senators expressed disbelief Monday when the president torpedoed the Senate's three-year, $338 billion deficit-reduction package without offering Congress any new plan for reviving stalled budget negotiations or stopping the flow of government red ink.

It was the second time this year the president has walked away from a politically sensitive deficit-reduction package pushed by GOP senators.

The president's problems with majority Republicans in the Senate were sure to come up today in a White House meeting between Reagan and GOP leaders from the House and Senate.

In addition, the president planned a luncheon meeting at the White House with Sen. Pete V. Domenici, R-N.M., chairman of the Senate Budget Committee, and Rep. William H. Gray III, D-Pa., chairman of the House Budget Committee.

"No process of Congress is any better than the will and the leadership that is forthcoming," Domenici said. "In this case, there is not a will to address this huge deficit, and the White House has indicated that the significant portions of real deficit reduction are off the table."

Nonetheless, it appeared all but certain that Congress will begin a month-long recess Friday with no more than a modest package of domestic spending cuts in place to combat the deficit. Some legislators said even that may not be possible.

"Any chance for this year getting a real, significant, reliable, credible deficit-reduction package is gone," Domenici said.

"I don't know that we really care in the Senate anymore," Dole said.

Reagan rejected the centerpiece provisions of the Senate's package, which included:

—Imposing a $5-a-barrel fee on imported crude oil and a $10 fee on refined products. This would have raised an estimated $25 billion over three years.

—Making inflation adjustments in Social Security and other benefit programs every two years, instead of annually. This would have saved $12 billion through 1988.

—Adjusting personal income tax rates to account for inflation every two years instead of annually. This would have saved $7 billion over three years.

The plan was projected to trim next year's expected $230 billion deficit by $65 billion.

"The president will not support a tax increase in the form of an oil import fee; he will not support a change in Social Security COLAs (cost-of-living adjustments); nor will he support a change in tax indexing that protects working Americans from inflation-generated tax increases," presidential spokesman Larry Speakes announced Monday.

The president instead admonished Congress to agree on further domestic spending cuts, action that Dole said would lead to only "a rather weak budget resolution."

Reagan's action Monday deepened the frustration of GOP senators who had cast votes in May in favor of a budget plan that included a one-year freeze on Social Security cost-of-living increases to trim deficits. Reagan had embraced that budget but then backed away under House pressure.

Conferees from the House and Senate, seeking to draft a compromise version of fiscal 1986 budgets passed by each chamber, have been deadlocked for weeks.

Reagan rejects oil fee package like '83 request

WASHINGTON (AP) — The tax on imported oil that President Reagan has rejected is similar to a proposal he asked Congress to approve in 1983.

A Senate deficit-reduction package Reagan shot down Monday included a provision to raise $25 billion over the next three years by imposing a $5-a-barrel fee on imported crude oil and a $10 fee on refined products.

In the president's fiscal 1984 budget, submitted to Congress Jan. 31, 1983, Reagan proposed a "contingency tax plan" to begin in fiscal 1986 only if Congress first approved a package of spending cuts.

The plan included "an excise tax on oil, both domestically produced and imported, that will raise revenues of about $5 per barrel."

"You could say that this is an insurance policy for the future — a remedy that will be at hand if needed, but resorted to only if absolutely necessary," Reagan said in submitting his budget to Congress that year.

But since then, the president went through a re-election campaign during which he promised repeatedly he would consider tax increases only as "a last resort" to shrink budget deficits.

Senators backing the new deficit-reduction plan said government red ink has reached staggering proportions and drastic action was necessary.

Meanwhile, Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole, R-Kan., said senators had proposed the imported oil levy because Reagan once had embraced it.

"We felt that...perhaps the administration might be willing to go along with something they went along with just a few years ago," Dole said.

"But the president feels that he made certain commitments in the campaign.... I'm not going to quarrel with his decision, but it seems to me we have to quarrel about the deficit," Dole added.

A senior White House official, explaining Reagan's decision, said, "The oil import fee is dead for a quite simple reason: it is a tax. There is no sense trying to disguise it as anything other than that."

"For the president to sign an oil import fee — legislation raising the price of gasoline 12 cents a gallon — would be perceived as a violation of the commitment he made in November" not to raise taxes, said the official who spoke on condition he not be quoted by name.

"It would really have begun to transfer to taxpayers and consumers a responsibility that belongs with politicians to cut federal spending," the official said.

Dole had argued that modifying the administration's original proposal and limiting it only to imported oil would help spur domestic production and add to U.S. independence from foreign sources.

Trouble still trailing Challenger's crew

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Spacelab scientists, working at low altitude after the harrowing shutdown of one of Challenger's main engines, were faced with the loss of their major experiment today when they were unable to properly operate a $60 million device intended to point telescopes precisely at the sun.

They also had trouble with two of the three solar telescopes on the pointing device. One lost power and the other was periodically overheating. Specialists at Mission Control were troubleshooting, hopeful they would find solutions to all three problems.

Officials said before the mission that testing the German-made pointing system was the most important goal of the mission. It is to be used on several flights in the future, including a shuttle mission which is to study Halley's comet next March.

Lee Briscoe, one of the flight directors, said a number of computer software and procedure approaches will be attempted in an effort to repair the system.

Most of the 13 experiments switched on as planned, including a generator that shot brilliant electron beams out of the shuttle's cargo bay in a study of properties of the ionosphere, the atmospheric layer that transmits radio signals around the globe.

Odessan ready to hit highways

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Long-time Odessa attorney Ray C. Stoker Jr., named to the three-member State Highway Commission by Gov. Mark White last week, said, "I'm looking forward to this job, if you can call it a job, and I believe I will feel a sense of accomplishment when it's over."

The 46-year-old Stoker, who is associated with the law firm of Shafer, Gilliland, Davis, McCollum & Ashley, attended his first commission meeting Thursday in Austin, beginning work "within five minutes of when I went in the building" and finished around 6 p.m., just in time for him to catch a plane home.

During that first meeting, he said, the highway commissioners heard nine delegations, each from a different part of the state, with the three-member commission approving expenditures amounting to about $195 million for a variety of projects.

As to the expenditure of state highway funds, Stoker said, "There is a logical order of things, which is in existence now, and I can tell you it does not ignore West Texas."

As to how his membership on the highway commission may impact on West Texas, the Odessa attorney said his primary job "will be to see to it that the highway department does the best it can possibly do for the entire State of Texas and I'm committed to that."

New highway commissioner will "see to it that the highway department does the best it can possibly do for the entire State of Texas and I'm committed to that."

Likening himself to the Briar Patch-born and bred Brer Rabbit, Stoker said, "I've lived in Odessa all my life, married a West Texas girl and practiced law here for 20 years. Hopefully, my presence down there will help us in areas where we need help."

Stoker indicated he doesn't believe the Midland-Odessa area has been short-changed from the standpoint of highway dollars over the years, pointing to the construction of Highway 191 as the latest example.

"From an Odessan's point of view, Highway 191 is quite important and I hope the people in Midland feel the same way," he said. "Its existence now indicates the cooperative effort between the two cities in years past, which I hope will continue into the future."

Scene already tense as talks open in Helsinki

HELSINKI, Finland (AP) — With the superpowers already sparring over arms control, a 35-nation conference marking the 10th anniversary of the controversial Helsinki human rights and security accords got under way today.

Both Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze and U.S. Secretary of State George P. Shultz are scheduled to address the conference.

Shevardnadze, named July 2 to replace Andrei A. Gromyko as foreign minister, is making his international debut at the meeting. Gromyko is the new Soviet president.

The president of neutral Finland, Mauno Koivisto, opened the conference today by telling the delegates they all should expect criticism, but that, "This approach works best when it is combined with a willingness to consult with other participating states."

On Monday, the Soviets offered to halt unilaterally all nuclear test explosions between Aug. 6, the 40th anniversary of the atomic bombing of Hiroshima, Japan, and Jan. 1.

Shultz arrived in the Finnish capital Monday night after telling reporters on his plane that Washington considered Moscow's moratorium idea an unverifiable publicity ploy.

"We don't believe it is in our best interest to stop our testing program under these circumstances," he said.

He said that without monitoring Soviet tests there was no way to know for certain if the moratorium announced in Moscow was being observed.

"History shows when they feel they need to test, they'll break out with a bang," he said.

In an arrival statement, Shultz stressed the offer President Reagan made before the United Nations last September to tighten verification procedures to make sure limits already in effect were being honored.

In Moscow, the Soviet Union said a U.S. invitation to send observers to a nuclear test in Nevada was an attempt to divert attention from Soviet calls for a test ban treaty.

White House reveals, rejects Soviet offer on test ban

By TERENCE HUNT
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — The White House beat the Kremlin to the punch by first revealing — and then immediately rejecting — a Soviet proposal for a ban on nuclear weapons testing by the two superpowers.

At the same time, while deriding the Soviet offer, the White House announced it had invited Moscow to send a team of experts to the United States to monitor an underground nuclear test in Nevada.

Trying to undercut the propaganda value of the Soviet offer, the Reagan administration said Monday that the last time the United States agreed to such a moratorium — in the early 1960s — the Soviets followed a three-year test ban "with the largest series of high-yield explosions in history, including the largest single nuclear test ever conducted."

The White House said the Soviets appeared ready to do the same thing again.

Describing the U.S. invitation to the nuclear test the as a "far reaching offer," presidential spokesman Larry Speakes said it was an unconditional proposal and did not require the Soviet Union to reciprocate by allowing an American team to visit Russia.

The Soviet Union did not flatly reject the U.S. offer but called it a ploy to divert attention from Moscow's test ban proposal.

The sudden flurry of initiatives came in the midst of a recess in the stalemated nuclear arms control talks and appeared aimed at scoring public relations points for each side.

At the White House, a senior administration official charged that there had been "a significant acceleration in the number of nuclear tests by the Soviet Union" over the past month.

"Clearly this was designed to put the Soviet Union in a position not to need to test over the next five months and to break out on an accelerated schedule as they did in 1961 ... without real costs to Soviet programs," said the official, briefing reporters on the condition he not be identified.

On Capitol Hill, Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., introduced a resolution in the Senate calling for renewed U.S.-Soviet talks.

Shevardnadze did not mention the moratorium idea on his arrival in Helsinki on Monday.

But the Soviet news agency Tass later reported that he had reviewed the proposal with other Warsaw Pact ministers gathered in Helsinki.

He and the ministers also held "comradely" discussions on other bilateral issues, Tass reported.

The Helsinki conference commemorates the signing 10 years ago of the Final Act of the two-year Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe.

The conference involved the United States, Canada and every European country except Albania, and produced a wide range of pledges on human rights while cementing post World War II borders.

On his arrival in Helsinki, Shultz called the 1975 agreement a "beacon of hope." But in an apparent reference to the Soviet bloc, he said: "Not all participating states have fulfilled their commitments to human rights."

Shultz was scheduled to meet Shevardnadze on Wednesday. Shultz said he would take up the subject of human rights with Shevardnadze and make a point of it in his speech today.

Since 1975, the United States and other Western signers of the Helsinki Accords have accused the Soviet bloc of violating human rights promises in its treatment of dissidents.

Moscow and its allies contend that the Western amount to interference in their internal affairs, which they say violates the Helsinki agreement.

Soviet and American officials said the two leaders also would discuss armaments and the summit scheduled for November between Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

"I welcome the opportunity to meet with Mr. Shevardnadze and I will look forward to getting acquainted with him," Shultz said.

Shevardnadze did not comment on the planned meeting.

Shultz was to meet with the foreign minister of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization on Thursday, the final day of the three-day Helsinki gathering.

In other gatherings made possible by the celebration, Common Market foreign ministers planned to meet to discuss South Africa.

Both Shevardnadze and Shultz were to have meetings with other ministers.

SHUTTLE

"Brightness...beautiful," exclaimed astronaut Loren Acton, a solar physicist, as he photographed the beams.

"Sorry it's taking us so long to get on the sun," said crew member Karl Henize, an astronomer operating the pointing system. He said he had made some "rough tracks" on the sun and a star, but was having trouble locking firmly on the targets.

The shuttle's systems worked smoothly after Monday's dangerous and unprecedented "abort to orbit" and the astronauts — including five scientists — settled into a round-the-clock, two-shift routine.

"We're still going to get a lot of science out of this flight," said flight director Cleon Lacefield, who guided the ship through its engine cutoff.

During the tense first minutes after launch, the crew also disconnected a temperature sensor to prevent a second engine from shutting down before Challenger could reach orbit, Lacefield said.

If that second engine had failed or been cut off, Challenger would have faced a risky emergency landing on the Mediterranean island of Crete, or, more likely, Lacefield said, "We would have been in the water."

It was not known whether the engines actually overheated or the gauges showing 200 degrees over the normal 1,720 degrees were malfunctioning, he said. In 18 previous shuttle missions, "we have never had an engine overheat."

After the crisis had passed, the $1.2 billion spaceship, cruising at 17,400 miles per hour, took up an orbit ranging from 124 miles to 165 miles above the Earth — far below the 241-mile orbit in the Spacelab flight plan.

Three engine firings today boosted the orbit to 195 miles, and Briscoe said that would be as high as the ship would get. Lacefield said earlier the the $78 million Spacelab mission would be "full duration."

The lower altitudes were sure to curtail some experiments, but more troublesome to the scientific planners was the reduction in fuel available for the shuttle's Orbital Maneuvering System.

The main engines propel the shuttle to orbit and are not used again. The two smaller OMS engines are used during the flight to steer Challenger into the proper alignment for the Spacelab experiments.

During the crisis Monday, 4,400 pounds of OMS fuel were dumped to shed weight during the final boost and 750 pounds were burned to steer the ship into its new orbit. About 16,800 pounds of fuel had been earmarked for experiments and 11,300 of that remained.

"We're looking at allocating the fuel to give science as much as we can," said National Aeronautics and Space Administration shuttle director Jesse Moore.

NASA can't play it too tight with the OMS fuel, since Commander Gordon Fullerton needs those engines to slow the shuttle for its descent to Earth.

While experts at the Johnson Space Center in Houston refined the schedule, other NASA technicians analyzed data that might explain the crisis that began 3 minutes and 30 seconds after the 5 p.m. liftoff.

In the midst of the shuttle's climb, instruments at Mission Control said engine No. 1 was overheating. Heat sensors often fail, so controllers looked at a backup. Five minutes and 45 seconds after liftoff, the second sensor showed overheating and computers cut the engine off.

"We show a center engine failure," Fullerton said, without emotion.

"Roger," said Mission Control. "We copy. Stand by."

There was silence, then Mission Control said, "Abort ATO (abort to orbit). Abort ATO."

Abort to orbit is an often-rehearsed, never-tested procedure for using reduced power to boost the spaceship beyond the atmosphere. The message to Fullerton, going 8,800 mph, was to continue toward orbit with two engines.

Cauble named in prison guard's indictment

ABILENE (AP) — The name of convicted millionaire drug smuggler Rex Cauble has surfaced again, this time in a four-count indictment against a former federal prison guard.

Eddie Joe Roybal, a former correctional officer at the Big Spring federal prison camp, was indicted Monday on charges of allegedly accepting $11,500 in bribes from Cauble when the cigar-puffing rancher was an inmate at the minimum security facility.

In June, Cauble was transferred to the medium-security La Tuna prison near El Paso, but officials would say only that the transfer was for "security reasons."

Cauble, 71, was convicted in 1982 on charges of masterminding one of Texas' largest drug smuggling operations. He began serving a five-year sentence in Big Spring in June 1984.

In Monday's indictment, a federal grand jury alleged that Roybal accepted two cashiers checks from Cauble before the transfer. The grand jury also alleged that Roybal accepted $1,000 from another inmate and that the officer provided pills to the inmate on two separate occasions.

Cauble, a Denton County businessman whose interests include oil, ranching and real estate, recently forfeited about $20 million in properties, including the famous Cutter Bill Western World stores, as part of his conviction.

Cauble was convicted of directing a drug-smuggling network that ferried more than 150,000 pounds of marijuana between Colombia and Texas in 1977 and 1978.

Roybal was indicted on two counts of bribery and two counts of providing contraband in prison, according to a statement issued by the FBI and U.S. Attorney's office.

The first count alleged that on May 31, Roybal accepted two cashier's checks totaling $11,550 from Cauble, which were purchased May 28 from Western State Bank in Denton, "for and because of official acts performed and to be performed by him."

U.S. Attorney Marvin Collins of Fort Worth declined to speculate about the meaning of "official acts."

Count two alleged that on June 11, Roybal provided a controlled substance, two capsules of Darvocet, for an inmate identified as Gary Marcus Gunter.

STOKER

Stoker noted he has many friends in Midland and says he's happy to be able to make an effort to continue the cooperative effort between the two cities, not only in the area of highways, but in other areas also.

Stoker said he has talked to Midland Chamber of Commerce president Jim Alsup and indicated he "would be more than happy to meet with him or the Midland chamber's transportation committee in an effort to see that the right hand knows what the left is doing in so far as highways and transportation in West Texas is concerned."

Stoker noted the Midland-Odessa area is operating under a 10-year highway (master) plan right now and he's satisfied Highway 191 was and is a part of that plan. He noted Highway 191 construction included the building of ramps at places where overpasses will be built in the future. He isn't familiar with the exact timetable, but believes the cities' highway master plan is sufficiently flexible that overpasses will be constructed when traffic studies show they are needed.

Concerning other area highway needs, Stoker said the highway from Midland to Garden City "should be examined with the idea in mind of widening or dividing it. It's a dangerous stretch of road. There's a lot of oilfield traffic, as well as travel trailers, boat and normal traffic.

"We have the best highway system in the United States, probably in the world," Stoker said, "and the highway commission is dedicated to maintaining it in that fashion."

Referring to the White's efforts, Stoker added, "It appears the highway department will be funded in an adequate manner to maintain, rehabilitate and build new roads as necessary, not only in our area, but throughout Texas."

The new commissioner said "a fairly sizeable amount of money has been earmarked for discretionary maintenance and rehabilitation projects."

Discretionary projects are those "which will be left largely to the discretion of district engineers." He described local district engineer Bill Lancaster as "a very competent individual."

Stoker said he was impressed, from top to bottom, with the staff people he's met in the highway department.

Concerning the recent increase in fees for such things as drivers licenses, vehicle inspections and registration, Stoker explained that a majority of highway funds come from these funds. The highway fund receives only a small portion of its budget from the state's general revenue fund.

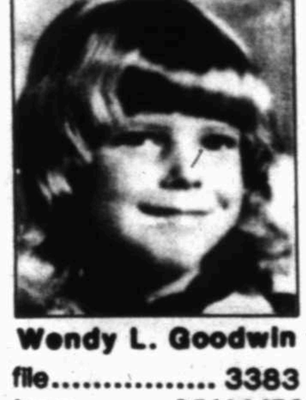

The amount of highway funds raised from such fees, he added, has to be balanced against how much it costs individual motorists in terms of wear-and-tear on their vehicles from having to use overcrowded freeways and to repair vehicles damaged during trips over roads with chug holes.

As to how efficiently Texas highway funds are utilized, Stoker said it takes about seven years to complete a federal interstate highway project. In Texas, people can be driving on a new highway in about two years and nine months. "This produces significant savings," he said.

With his position on the commission, Stoker said, "I think the people in Austin, hopefully, are going to pay a little bit more attention to those of us who have felt like stepchildren in recent years and years past. I hope we will have not one, but a number of voices down there that will be heard.

"We pay a lot of taxes from this area," said Stoker, "about second in the state in terms of geographical regions and I think some people, in particular Jim Rudd (D-Brownfield) of the appropriations committee, are mindful of this."

Justice appeals decision giving Polovchaks right to reclaim son

WASHINGTON (AP) — Maintaining that young Walter Polovchak faces a "severe form of persecution" if forced to return to the Soviet Union, the Reagan administration appealed a federal court order giving his parents authority to try to get him back.

The Justice Department argued Monday for a stay of the federal district court's decision affirming the right of the 17-year-old youth's parents to reclaim his custody. In its appeal, the department said the issue was not "plaintiffs' right to bring up their children as communists or atheists ... but rather their asserted right to force Walter to return unwillingly to a country where it was duly found he would be subjected to a religious persecution."

The Justice filing was made in the 7th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Chicago in response to an order Monday by U.S. District Court Judge Thomas R. McMillen. McMillen's order had lifted a 1980 Immigration and Naturalization ruling that barred the Soviet teen-ager's return to his homeland.

Polovchak's attorney, Julian Kulas, said Monday he would ask the 7th Circuit Court today to stay McMillen's injunction pending appeal. At the same time, Kulas pointed out that Polovchak's 18th birthday in October, making him legally responsible for himself, could come prior to an appeals court ruling.

Toni Schlesinger, a spokeswoman for the American Civil Liberties Union of Illinois, which had challenged the INS order, said a lawyer would contact Polovchak's parents about McMillen's decision. She said she did not know if they would come to the United States before October.

In an interview Monday, the boy said he misses his parents, but does not regret his decision to stay here.

Shuttle 'would have been in the water'

STATE

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — Space shuttle Challenger, with one engine off and an on-board computer set to shut down another, "would have been in the water" without the quick action of Mission Control, which ordered the crew to override the computer, the flight director said.

Cleon Lacefield said Monday's launch was the most dangerous moment yet of the space shuttle program. Asked if he was frightened, he said, "Oh, yes."

But Challenger's rockets fired long enough for the $1.2 billion craft and its seven-man crew to reach orbit safely and officials believe the shuttle will be able to complete its week-long mission.

Here is a blow-by-blow account of what happened:

Powered by two solid rocket boosters and the thrust of its three main engines, Challenger lifted away from the Kennedy Space Center in Florida at 5 p.m., 97 minutes later than planned.

Two minutes later, the spent solid rocket engines fell away to the ocean and Challenger continued to climb on the boost of its main engines.

Three minutes, 40 seconds after launch, a temperature sensor on the fuel pump turbine of main engine No. 1 rose to 1,960 degrees and turned off. A back-up sensor came on and also began show overheating. The sensor rose to 1,850 degrees and caused Challenger's computers to shut down No. 1.

"We show a center engine failure," said mission commander Gordon Fullerton.

"Roger," said Mission Control. "We copy. Stand by."

Moments later, the astronauts were told: "Abort ATO (abort to orbit). Abort ATO."

This told the astronauts that Challenger was going fast enough by then to reach orbit if both of the remaining engines continued to fire at maximum thrust. It also told the astronauts to fire another rocket system, the Orbital Manuevering System, to lighten the spacecraft. The OMS dumped 4,400 pounds of propellant by burning it off.

Lacefield said the spacecraft already had passed the point where it could have aborted to an emergency landing site in Spain, a maneuver called Transatlantic Abort Landing, or TAL.

"We were 33 seconds past a TAL abort," he said, but the spacecraft was not yet moving fast enough to reach orbit.

At 8 minutes, 12 seconds after launch, with Challenger still below orbital speed of 17,400 mph, a temperature sensor on the right engine rose suddenly and shut itself off. A second sensor switched on and also began heating, threatening to cause a second automatic engine shutdown.

Quickly, Mission Control told the astronauts to instruct the computer to ignore the temperature sensors.

"Main engines limits to inhibit," said ground control.

"OK. Inhibit," responded Fullerton. He touched a switch that told the computers to leave the engine on.

If this had not been done, and if the single remaining sensor on the right engine had reached its limits, Lacefield said, the computer automatically would have shut down the second engine, causing Challenger to fall toward the Earth.

"If the right engine failed...we would have been in the water," he said in a talk with reporters after a formal briefing. "The transducer (sensor) never got to its limit, but it sure scared us."

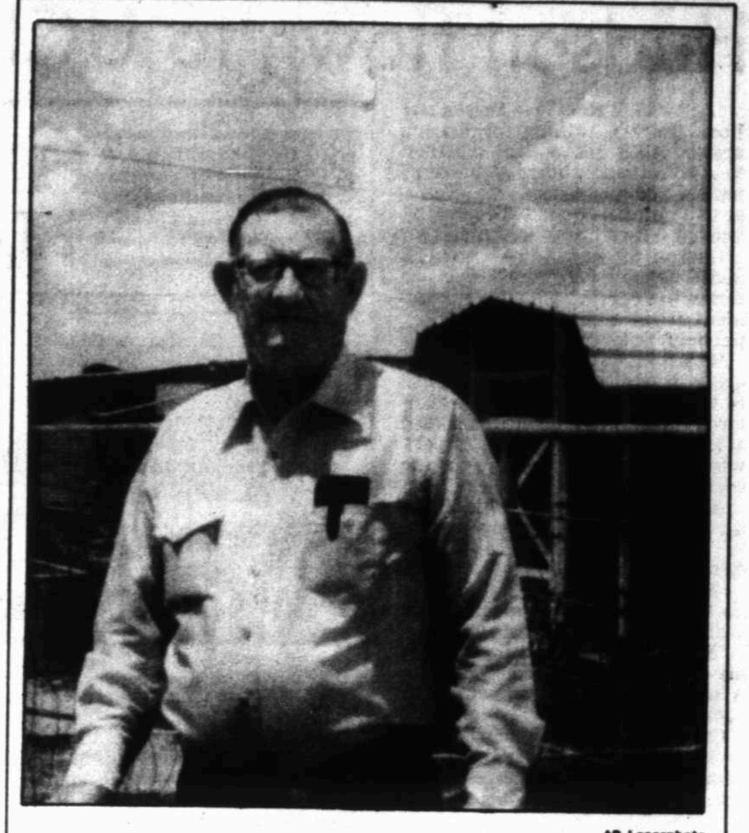

There was a chance that Challenger would have been able to land on a runway on the Greek island of Crete, Lacefield said.

Both engines fired for another 17 seconds, 86 seconds longer than normal, and Challenger reached the speed necessary for orbit, although it was 46 miles lower than planned.

"As soon as we knew the other engines were OK, then we felt better because we knew we could press uphill," Lacefield said in the briefing. "It's always a relief to get into orbit."

The shuttle's orbit, ranging from 124 miles to 165 miles above the Earth, will be increased gradually to 194 miles, using the OMS rockets. The planned orbit had been 241 miles, but officials said Challenger would be high enough to complete its seven-day mission.

But the expenditure of more than 5,000 pounds of OMS fuel, including 750 pounds used to steer the ship into its new orbit, means some scientific experiments will have to be abbreviated.

LCRA finds water rights request halved

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Water Commission has guaranteed the City of Austin free water to accommodate a population twice its current size in 35 years, but guaranteed only half the amount of water sought by the Lower Colorado River Authority.

A city representative said the decision will save the city $10 million a year from what it would have cost the city to buy the water from the river authority.

The state commission began reviewing water rights on the Colorado River in 1976 and considered the decision Monday one of the most complicated it has made, the Austin American Statesman reported today.

An LCRA official said the authority would return to the commission to appeal the unanimous decision and then go to district court if it fails to win a reversal. Bill West, LCRA water director, said a final decision on water rights to the Colorado is three to five years off.

Commissioner Lee Biggart also alluded to future court fights. "I don't think there's enough water in the state of Texas to keep us out of the courthouse," he said.

The decision came a day after City Manager Jorge Carrasco said residents could be ticketed by police for a misdemeanor and fined up to $200 beginning Wednesday for violating mandatory water use rules.

"The voluntary program that we have been involved in since May 1 will now be required. The major effect is that citizens will be asked to water (lawns) once every five days," Carrasco said after three straight days of water use above 150 million gallons.

Austin currently has ample water supplies because of the Colorado but the treatment capacity has failed to keep pace with growth.

Maximum total capacity for the city's three water treatment plants is 165 million gallons daily, which Carrasco said is not enough in case of failure.

The commission decision confirms city rights to a portion of the water flowing into the Highland Lakes. At times, the city uses more than its portion of the inflow to the seven-lake system and, under a contract with the river authority, takes water stored in the lakes. In return for releasing the water for Austin, the authority uses Tom Miller Dam between Town Lake and Lake Austin to generate hydroelectric power that it sells to customers.

The city claim to water originates from a 1913 document in which Austin first filed a state water rights claim, said Roger Nevola, a lawyer hired to represent the city. He said the decision, based on the seniority of water claims among users along the Colorado, was worth $10 million a year to Austin based on rates the river authority charges for water.

Nevola said the decision will give the city enough water to serve 886,000 people.

The city is designing a new treatment plant, which officials say could draw from Lake Austin and Lake Travis and will double treatment capacity.

Conway found Lucas, then lost sheriff's job

FORESTBURG (AP) — The former sheriff who chased and eventually caught Henry Lee Lucas just like an "old bloodhound" says he is no longer bitter about losing his job.

Former Montague County Sheriff W.F. Conway says he is just proud of the fact that his persistence took Lucas off the street.

Montague, named Texas Lawmen of the Year in 1984, told the Houston Chronicle in a story published Monday that he lost his sheriff's post because some voters blamed his pursuit of Lucas for a tax increase.

"It hurts, but I'm not sorry about what I did," said Conway, a lawman for 27 years.

"I miss law work, and I guess I was bitter for a while, but I don't think I am anymore," he said. "I'm just proud he's off the street."

He said he spent nine months bird-dogging Lucas.

Conway says he became suspicious of Lucas after 80-year-old Kate Rich disappeared in September 1982. Lucas and his 15-year-old girlfriend, Becky Powell, had lived with Mrs. Rich.

"Mrs. Rich's daughters had thrown him out, and I just figured there might be some bad blood over it," he says.

After learning that Lucas had been convicted and later paroled for killing his mother, Conway picked up the trail.

"He was playing games with me, and that's exactly what I wanted him to do. I figured if we kept playing long enough, I'd win," Conway says.

When Lucas was traced to California, Conway went to California. When Lucas went to Oklahoma, Conway followed.

"He was just like a damned old bloodhound. I'll bet he didn't sleep four hours a night. He was either on the phone or in his car," said Bob Finoglio, former justice of peace.

Between September 1982 and May 1983, Conway was twice hospitalized for exhaustion. He admits he was starting to wonder if he would ever find the evidence.

Within days Lucas purchased a pistol, a crime for a felon. Conway arrested Lucas and Lucas eventually confessed to killing Mrs. Rich and Ms. Powell.

Lucas later confessed to hundreds of slayings nationwide and rapidly became known as one of the country's most notorious serial killers.

But in May 1984, Conway lost the Democratic primary to former Deputy Harry Walker.

Possible result of 1st District election debated

Associated Press

Even before it has taken place, Republicans and Democrats are debating just what the results of Saturday's 1st Congressional District special election might mean.

Republicans say a victory by their man, Edd Hargett, will prove the new Republican strength in rural Texas. Hardly, counter many Democrats who note that Hargett seldom mentions his GOP ties while campaigning.

Should Hargett defeat Democrat Jim Chapman in Saturday's election, he would become the first GOP congressman to represent the northeast Texas district since a Reconstruction Republican won in 1870.

Hargett, 38, was the only Republican in the June 29 special election, and he bested the eight-candidate field with 42 percent of the vote.

Chapman, 40, a conservative Democrat and former prosecutor who says East Texas "does not agree with the national Democratic platform," finished second with 30 percent and defeated five other Democrats.

Hargett, a one-time Texas A&M quarterback who many describe as the hand-picked candidate of Sen. Phil Gramm, is spending a bundle — more than $800,000 at latest count. Campaign finance reports through mid-July showed Hargett outspending Chapman 3-to-1.

Republicans want to prove that 1984's sweeping victories were no fluke.

Since winning the presidential race, the U.S. Senate race, and gaining four U.S. House seats last year, Republican officials have said a realignment is taking place — conservative Democrats defecting to the GOP.

"Let's make realignment an absolute certainty. Let's send Edd Hargett to Congress," Treasury Secretary James Baker told a Marshall audience. He was one of several Reagan administration officials to campaign for Hargett.

George Strake, Texas Republican Party chairman, says there is no doubt a Hargett victory would demonstrate the new GOP clout.

"I don't think there is any other way you can surmise it. If we can get conservatives up there to make that monumental switch from the Democratic to the Republican side, if they vote for Hargett, that means a pretty significant political realignment," Strake said.

Ecstasy tablets seized

DALLAS (AP) — A federal official says three men and a woman have been arrested in connection with the seizure of 31,200 tablets of the "designer drug" known as Ecstasy.

A U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration agent said the tablets seized Monday had an estimated value of between $390,000 and $936,000.

Phillip E. Jordan, special agent in charge of the DEA office in Dallas, told The Dallas Morning News a 39-year-old man and 29-year-old woman were arrested at a hotel.

He said two other men were arrested in the nearby parking lot of the Dallas Apparel Mart.

Jordan said undercover DEA and FBI agents and police from Dallas and Irving had been investigating the four suspects since July 1 and had previously purchased the tablets from the suspects.

Federal officials said charges would be filed today with a Dallas federal magistrate against the four people arrested Monday.

Cockatiel missing

DALLAS (AP) — The way police see it, a rare palm cockatoo missing from the Dallas Zoo had no reason to leave home.

"It was a bird in paradise. It had plenty of food and water and a mate. Why would it want to escape?" said park police Sgt. Jimmy Billingsley.

Foul play is what authorities suspect lies behind the weekend disappearance of the $10,000 bird.

Early Saturday, about 90 minutes before the zoo opened, a bird-keeper found a hole in the wire cage that held a pair of the rare creatures.

Missing was the female half of the couple, a 2-foot-tall, 5-pound bird with smoky black feathers, a long crest, rosy cheeks and a band on her right leg.

Human bones found

HEREFORD (AP) — A forensic pathologist today was attempting to identify bones found in the basement of a house in this Panhandle city, while authorities sifted through dirt taken from the dwelling for clues.

"We have a duty to assume they are human until proven otherwise," said Peace Justice O.K. Neal.

The bones were discovered Monday after a 16-year-old girl told authorities she was held by a man inside the home and saw human skeletal remains in the basement.

The girl, who also told authorities the man allegedly threatened to bury her beneath the home, was treated at Deaf Smith Memorial Hospital and released on Monday.

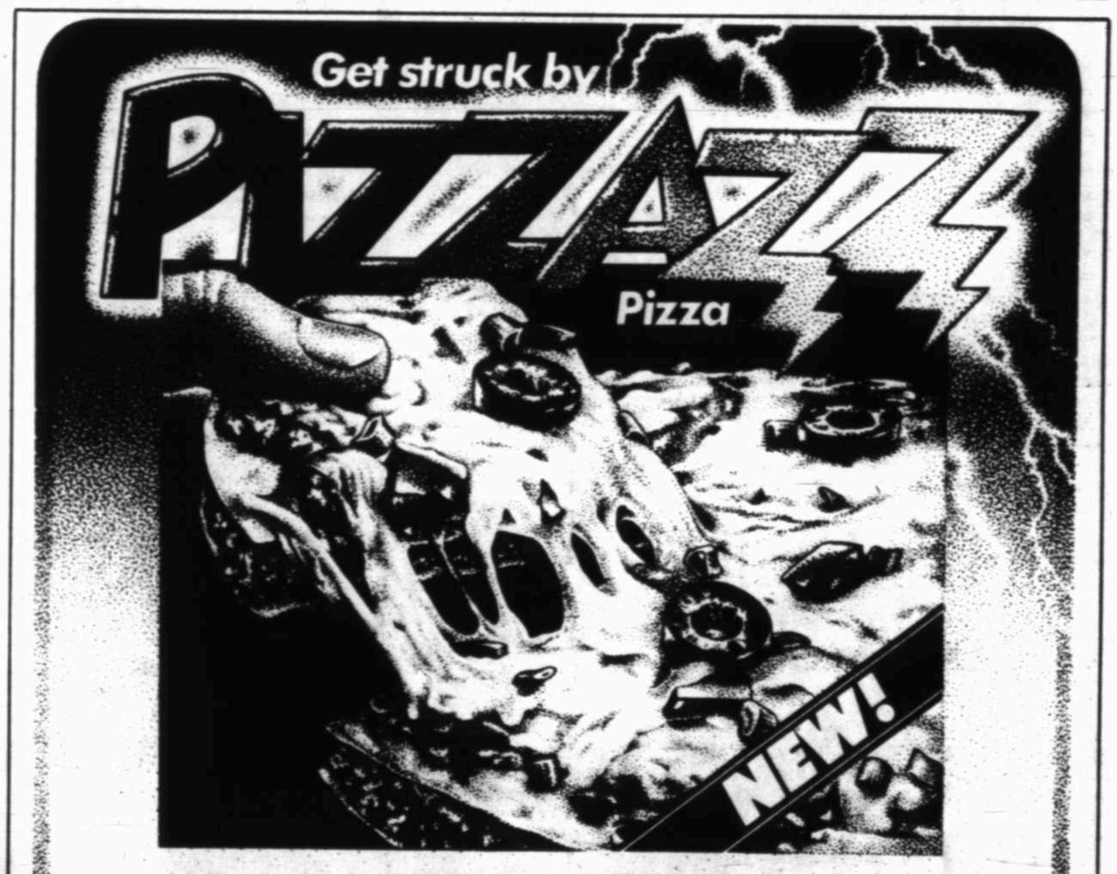

Gays denied school

DALLAS (AP) — A request by the Dallas Gay Alliance to join the Adopt-a-School program, which helps fund educational institutions, has been rejected by school Superintendent Linus Wright.

"The adopt-a-school portion is out of the question because of the publicity it attracted and the concern," Wright said Monday. "We have received more letters from parents protesting that than any other issue."

One of the group's goals was "adopting" Sam Houston Elementary School in Oak Lawn, officials said.

Wright said he has received about 74 letters opposing the alliance's request and one supporting it.

Hudson flown to UCLA Medical Center

Screen star Rock Hudson is escorted from a chartered jetliner which brought him from Paris to Los Angeles, to a waiting UCLA Medical Center helicopter today.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Screen star Rock Hudson, battling for his life against AIDS and a liver disorder, flew home today aboard a chartered jetliner and was carried on a stretcher to a hospital-bound helicopter, officials said.

Hudson, 59, star of the "McMillan and Wife" and "Dynasty" television series, was returning home for treatment at the UCLA Medical Center, publicist Dale Olson said Monday.

He left Paris, where he was undergoing treatment at the American Hospital, late Monday aboard a chartered Air France jetliner that landed at Los Angeles International Airport, where he was transfered to a waiting copter.

Airport workers said Hudson was moved between aircraft on a stretcher. Reporters were kept at a distance.

"Here's a man who's fighting for his life, and a press event could jeopardize his life," Olson said Monday.

"My major concern at this point is his condition and his comfort. That is the reason he is being brought back here."

Cathy Dunn, a medical center spokeswoman, said Hudson would be admitted today "for further evaluation and treatment for his present illness."

Initially, Olson reported last week that Hudson had inoperable liver cancer, but Monday he said that diagnosis was superseded by the diagnosis of acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

"They are still saying that there is a liver problem," Olson said, but he added that now they are no longer certain whether it is cancer.

There is no known cure for AIDS, which weakens and eventually destroys the body's immune system.

AIDS clinical research centers have been established at UCLA and University of California-San Francisco, UC spokeswoman Valerie Sullivan said in Berkeley.

Researchers at UC this month were awarded nearly $4.7 million in state funds to study AIDS, with nearly $1 million going to UCLA. That is in addition to previous grants totaling $6 million.

Hudson had been in an isolation unit at the American Hospital in the Paris suburb of Neuilly but had not been treated for AIDS since he was admitted July 21, said spokeswoman Yanou Collart, countering reports that the actor was given HPA 23, an experimental drug not available in the United States.

The most common victims of AIDS are homosexuals, intravenous drug users and hemophiliacs. The disease is believed to be spread through sexual contact, contaminated needles and blood transfusions.

Sources in Paris said Hudson fell ill last September while attending the Deauville film festival in France and was put in touch with a military doctor, the same physician believed to have seen Hudson this past week.

Hudson came to Paris to see an AIDS specialist, but became ill the day after arriving and was admitted to the American Hospital.

Last Thursday, Ms. Collart disclosed that Hudson was diagnosed more than a year ago as having AIDS and that doctors at the American Hospital had discovered liver abnormalities. By Monday, it remained unclear if the liver ailment was linked to AIDS.

Ms. Collart said Hudson remained in stable condition, the same term used to describe him since Thursday.

AIDS contamination closes cancer clinic

NEW YORK (AP) — Patients of a controversial cancer clinic which dispensed drugs that may be tainted with AIDS virus remain fiercely loyal to the clinic and its director despite the threat of contamination.

The Immunology Researching Center Ltd., in Freeport, Grand Bahama Island, was ordered closed July 17 by the Bahamian government.

The clinic's director, Lawrence Burton, dispenses a cancer treatment he calls immuno-augmentative therapy, and many patients believe he has cured them of cancer even though U.S. specialists say the treatment is unproven.

"I am a patient of Dr. Burton's, and if they close his clinic, I will die," said Rosie Arbogast of Tacoma, Wash., in an interview. She said Burton was treating her for advanced liver cancer. "I'm in my third year of remission, I have no symptoms, I lead a very beautiful life."

Asked about the risk of contamination with AIDS and hepatitis — evidence of which has also been found in Burton's drugs — Mrs. Arbogast said, "It happens in the States, too, that people get hepatitis or AIDS from somebody's blood.

"If Dr. Burton's clinic is closed because of that, hundreds of people will lose their lives."

In June, Dr. Samuel Insalaco and Dr. Gale Katterhagen of Tacoma General Hospital found that eight of 18 samples of blood-derived drugs Insalaco got from a patient of Burton's showed evidence of the acquired immune deficiency syndrome virus.

Officials in Alabama and Florida subsequently found evidence of the virus in samples obtained from Burton's patients. On Monday, Florida health officials warned that patients who continue treatment with the drugs are at risk of AIDS. "These patients are very, very attached to their treatment," said Insalaco. "They're very upset it's closed now. To them, I've given them a death sentence. They believe their tumor was under control and now it's going to disseminate."

Interviews with about a dozen of Burton's patients substantiate Insalaco's assessment. Glenn Austin, of Border, Texas, said he takes shots every day for a serious form of cancer called mesothelioma, which he says is under control. "My doctor here (in Texas) says I'm his miracle child," Austin said.

Dorothy Welsch of Sebastian, Fla., has been treated by Burton for breast cancer for 2½ years. "It's evidently controlled," she said. "My doctors here can't find anything."

Dr. Gregory Curt, assistant director of the National Cancer Institute's division of cancer treatment, said Monday that up to 1,000 people have been treated by Burton since 1983, according to Burton's own publications.

Curt said Burton has not produced any scientific evidence to demonstrate whether the treatment is effective.

Former Georgia Gov. Lester Maddox, another of Burton's patients, said Monday he's more afraid of AIDS than of the cancer that has plagued him since 1979.

"I'd rather go with straight cancer than AIDS. There's more dignity with cancer. There's no hope with AIDS," Maddox told the Macon (Ga.) Telegraph and News. "The cancer hasn't gone into my bones or my blood. Going down there maybe has a lot to do with my being better. I don't feel better; I'm just hopeful. And there's the fact that the cancer hasn't spread."

Genetic control mechanism in AIDS virus discovered

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
Associated Press

BOSTON — Scientists unraveling the innermost workings of the AIDS virus have found that it contains a unique control mechanism that allows its genes to work 1,000 times faster than those of other germs.

They say this genetic apparatus helps explain why AIDS is such a devastating disease — it allows the virus to reproduce at a fierce rate.

The research advances scientists' understanding of how this insidious germ destroys its victims' immune systems, leaving them vulnerable to infection.

Scientists conductiong the research speculated that this material might someday be used as a vaccine against the disease.

Legionnaires disease strikes New York Times employees

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — An outbreak of 29 cases of respiratory illness has been diagnosed among employees of The New York Times Co. since mid-June and at least six of the cases are presumed due to Legionnaires' disease, officials of the company said Monday.

"It appears that the cutbreak is over," said Dr. Howard R. Brown, The New York Times's medical director.

Brown said that upon recognition of the outbreak at the Times Building at 229 West 43d Street, between Broadway and Eighth Avenue, epidemiologists from the New York City Health Department, the National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health and a private industrial-hygiene company were called by Dr. Sarah M. Johnson, assistant medical director of The Times, to determine its cause.

Blood samples were obtained from 14 ill employees after they returned to work and 6 of them showed evidence of past infection with Legionella pneumophilia, the bacterium that causes Legionnaires' disease, according to Dr. David J. Sencer, the city's Health Commissioner.

Unpredictable vaccine supplies threaten nation's health

WASHINGTON (AP) — Uncertainties about vaccine supplies in the United States constitute a "threat to the public's health," and require a national policy as well as a compensation system for serious vaccine injuries, a National Academy of Sciences report said Monday.

A committee of the academy's Institute of Medicine said supplies of present and future vaccines against diseases are in a "precarious" situation primarily because of manufacturers' fears of costly liability suits.

The panel suggested creation of a national vaccine commission to report to the president and Congress on what new vaccines are needed, supply problems, policies needed to avert shortages and other issues regarding immunization.

The report said this policy group should be a permanent, non-partisan body that would cost about $1 million a year to set up and operate.

The study committee also recommended creation of a national system of "reasonable compensation in a rapid and equitable manner" for people injured from properly made and labeled vaccines. The group estimated there were about 60 vaccine liability cases annually, mostly dealing with alleged permanent afflictions resulting from innoculations.

The group stressed that the compensation policy should not shield manufacturers and others suspected of misconduct or negligence, but should end erratic, unpredictable and inequitable judgments it said are being rendered in some courts.

Dr. Jay P. Sanford, dean of medicine at the Uniformed Services University of the Health Sciences in Bethesda, Md., and chairman of the panel, said manufacturers are unwilling to produce needed vaccines because of liability uncertainties.

"Under the laws of this country, a vaccine manufacturer is not liable for injuries caused by a properly manufactured and labeled vaccine," Sanford told a news briefing. "In recent years, however, a few courts have acted contrary to these principles and have found manufacturers liable for such injuries."

The study committee also recommended creation of a national system of "reasonable compensation in a rapid and equitable manner" for people injured from properly made and labeled vaccines. The group estimated there were about 60 vaccine liability cases annually, mostly dealing with alleged permanent afflictions resulting from innoculations.

The committee did not detail an ideal compensation system, but it listed a number of options the nation might consider, including putting some restrictions of laws applying to vaccine injury, federal assumption of liability or even a public insurance program to take care of victims.

These proposals are not designed so much to protect vaccine makers from liability, but to assure that the public has adequate supplies of vaccines to prevent illness, Sanford said.

Only three firms currently make vaccines against seven childhood diseases for which immunization is recommended: polio, measles, mumps, rubella, diphtheria, tetanus and whooping cough.

These supplies are not always certain, committee members said, pointing to last year's temporary shortage of the diphtheria, pertussis (whooping cough) and tetanus combined vaccine, known as DPT.

When two of three firms making the DPT vaccine stopped distributing it and the third ran into technical production problems, physicians postponed booster shots for older children so there would be enough vaccine for more vulnerable infants.

"This particular shortage was relieved recently when one of the firms decided to return to the market," Sanford said. "But it brought home just how precarious our vaccine supply is."

The two-year, $307,000 study was sponsored by the federal Centers for Disease Control, the Food and Drug Administration, the U.S. Army, three pharmaceutical companies and the academy.

The 17-member panel, drawn primarily from academia, government agencies and private industry, said the government maintains a small stockpile of essential vaccines, but that it is inadequate for protecting the public.

"During our study we were not able to find any contingency plan for dealing with a situation in which no American manufacturer was willing to produce a pediatric vaccine," it said. "We consider this a grave situation."

Farm-aid bill expected to go to Senate today

WASHINGTON (AP) — Armed with an agreement worked out privately, key farm-state senators are hoping to win quick committee approval of a farm bill package and begin consideration of the issue on the Senate floor before Congress adjourns for its August recess.

The compromise, on the issue of how to handle farm income supports in the new legislation, was expected to come before the Senate Agriculture Committee today and could be taken up by the full Senate if it wins approval.

Last week, the panel narrowly voted to freeze "target prices" — the amount farmers are guaranteed for their crops — for the four-year life of the new bill. The freeze on wheat and corn subsidies was later extended to cover rice and cotton as well, bringing objections from committee chairman Jesse Helms, R-N.C., and Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole, R-Kan., that the bill was getting too expensive.

Monday's agreement would scale back that freeze to two years, with up to 5 percent of the second year's subsidy level payable in surplus government commodities instead of cash. The proposal also contained assurances that Dole and Helms would not personally try to cut the $50,000 limit on subsidy payments to each farmer.

The idea was agreed to by Dole, Helms and Sens. David Boren, D-Okla., and Edward Zorinsky, D-Neb.

The Senate bill, much like a measure evolving in the House Agriculture Committee, would enable the Agriculture Department to substantially drop price-support commodity loan rates, which are blamed for artificially propping up prices on U.S. commodities and making them uncompetitive on world markets. It would make up for that in increased government income-support payments.

The House Agriculture Committee, meanwhile, was preparing to reconsider a proposal it narrowly rejected last week, the idea of "marketing loans." Under the concept, farmers could borrow money from the government as they do now, using their crops as collateral.

Endangered species bill flies in Congress

WASHINGTON (AP) — Not so long ago, when the snail darter was halting construction of a dam, a mere mention of the Endangered Species Act would incite hot debate in Congress.

But things have changed since the contentious battles of the 1970s. The snail darter — an itty-bitty fish — is off the endangered list, and a three-year renewal of the 12-year-old conservation law has cleared the House with barely a ripple.

It took the House all of three minutes Monday to start and complete work on the measure and send it to the Senate, where a similar bill is moving along without echoes of the old argument of whether plants and animals are more important than dams and fur coats.

There were two principal reasons why the House bill sailed through with no debate or recorded vote: the U.S. law has grown to be recognized as a world model, and the House measure sidestepped some possible pitfalls.

By setting spending for plant and wildlife protection in fiscal 1986 at $39.25 million, the same amount as fiscal 1985, an immediate money battle with the Reagan administration was avoided.

However, the measure produced by the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee would increase resources for the Interior and Commerce department down the road — $45.75 million in fiscal 1987, $54.2 million in fiscal 1988.

The money supports programs that are designed to encourage renewal of species that are endangered or threatened and to use federal muscle against projects — both governmental and private — that would harm the habitat of vanishing flora and fauna.

A new section of the House bill would allow the establishment of a second colony of sea otters off the California coast as insurance against the first colony being wiped out by an oil spill.

The second colony had been opposed by oil interests fearing a further limit on exploration and by commercial fishermen fearing the otters' voracious appetites would further deplete shellfish stocks.

Zookeepers spying on escaping orangutan

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Keepers at the San Diego Zoo are putting the heat on Ken Allen and may even go undercover to learn how the sneaky, 15-year-old orangutan has been breaking out of his pen to wander among zoo visitors.

Ken Allen, named for one of the zoo's senior keepers, has taken it on the lam twice in the past six weeks.

"It's a minor concern for visitor safety because orangutans are generally very passive animals," said spokesman Jeff Jouett. "It's not like having a carnivore on the loose. It's more of a concern for Ken Allen's safety."

Jouett said keepers studying Ken Allen's pen have some ideas about the auburn-haired, 220-pounder's escape route, but they're not certain. One theory is that the orangutan is leaping over the back wall of the enclosure, where he has been seen sitting for hours at a time, peering into the distance.

The pen is a pit-like enclosure about 50 feet in diameter, surrounded by a moat. It has a climbing area and is designed to look like natural habitat.

The zoo is reinforcing parts of the enclosure, and on a more clandestine front, is laying plans to spy on Ken Allen.

"We think he won't really feel at liberty if he sees a keeper or a veterinarian," Jouett said. "So we plan to dress one of our people as a tourist — shorts, camera around the neck, the whole bit — and assign them to watch his every move."

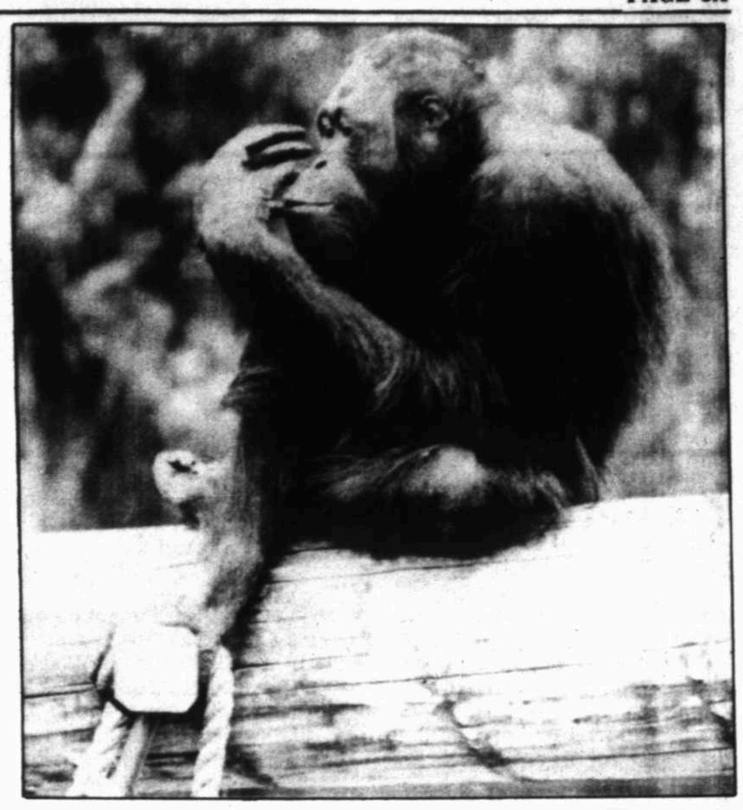

Ken Allen had been living in the enclosure for a week when he leaped over moat and wall to freedom on June 13.

On Wednesday, Ken Allen took off after picking a fight with his neighbor, Otis the oranguntan. The two heaved rocks at each other and keepers feared for a time that Ken Allen might jump into Otis' enclosure for closer contact.

While obviously not escape-proof, keepers had thought the enclosure would hold Ken Allen. Three years ago, the zoo hired Hollywood orangutan C.J. to test it. C.J. broke out, but keepers reinforced the weak spots before putting the zoo's orangutans inside.

"We were testing (C.J.'s) strength and agility rather than his mental power," Jouett said of the orangutan who co-starred with Clint Eastwood in the movie "Every Which Way But Loose."

Ken Allen is using brains and brawn in his escapes.

Tigers kill zookeeper

NEW YORK (NYT) — A pair of Siberian tigers at the Bronx Zoo attacked and killed one of their keepers Monday in an enclosure that is part of the Wild Asia exhibit.

According to Dr. William Conway, the director of both the Bronx Zoo and the New York Zoological Society, 24-year-old Robin Silverman, violated the "cardinal rule of animal care" by entering the two-acre enclosure without knowing where the tigers were.

"It's one of those terrible human tragedies, an accident," Conway said. "She was considered a very bright and competent person, very highly regarded by her colleagues here at the zoo. But when you're working with dangerous animals, you must be certain you know where they all are, and you don't go into the enclosure with the big cats."

Conway said that the zoo did not intend to destroy the tigers, both 4½-year-old females weighing 200 to 300 pounds.

Son taken to Jordan

NEW YORK (LAT) — A 6-year-old boy and his mother, lured from their Virginia home by his Jordanian father with promises of a weekend vacation, were taken to a Roslyn, N.Y., motel, where the mother was tied up while the boy was taken by his father on a flight to Jordan, police said.

A State Department spokesman said Monday that there is little hope that diplomatic efforts will reunite Khalid Mubaydin with his mother, Susan Ray Mubaydin, 29, of Springfield, Va.

"What we are doing is cabling the embassy in Amman to check on the welfare of the child, but, unfortunately, there is little else that we can do," said James Callahan, a State Department spokesman, who characterized the case as "an international domestic dispute."

Runways hazardous

WASHINGTON (AP) — Concerned about the increasing number of hazardous incidents on the nation's airstrips, the Federal Aviation Administration is telling air traffic controllers to maintain a sharper lookout and closer communication.

The agency said Monday the number of incidents causing potentially hazardous conditions at airports increased by nearly one-third during the first six months of the year to 54, compared with 41 during the same period in 1984.

FAA Administrator Donald Engen voiced concern about the rising number of runway and taxiway incidents in a telephone hookup to more than 400 airport towers last week and cautioned controllers to maintain "proper vigilance" and pay closer attention to scanning the runways.

Paraquat may return

WASHINGTON (AP) — Paraquat spraying, a marijuana-eradication method that withered in the face of court action and public protest, could make a comeback this year, the Drug Enforcement Administration says.

The agency expects to file an environmental impact statement next month detailing the weapons in its war on marijuana cultivation — both those in current use and and those being considered to become part of the arsenal, DEA spokesman Robert Feldkamp said Monday.

Growing threat

Texas has a lot going for it — wide open spaces free of dense populations, rugged terrain, comparatively mild climate, areas of land so remote that an individual can virtually disappear for days on end.

That's good; in fact, it's wonderful in a lot of respects. It gives people so inclined the golden opportunity to enjoy nature's wilderness areas at their best, and to see large portions of the state in virtually pristine conditions. Unfortunately, those conditions also give drug traffickers what they need — the solitude to carry out their illicit business far from the eyes of authorities. And that, of course, is exactly what has been happening over the past few years.

For a number of years West Texas has been renowned as one of the heaviest drug-smuggling corridors into the United States. That's understandable, to a degree, with the area's remoteness and proximity to Mexico. Now comes word from the U.S. Customs Services that cocaine smuggling will increase by 50 percent across the Texas border this year as compared to last year — jumping from 6,250 pounds to 9,750. That's a 3,500-pound increase in the "drug of choice," which compares to the 5,000-pound jump expected to come nationally. And the bulk of it will be flowing right through Texas' fields, cities, highways and airways.

That's frightening because of what it portends for the war against drugs being waged by parents, police officers, school teachers and others. It's frightening because it indicates the war is not only still going on but actually increasing in scope.

U.S. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, speaking over the weekend, said, "Now, we still won't be up to Florida, which has the highest concentration. You have a situation where you've got a TV show called 'Miami Vice.' I just don't want to see it turn into a 'Texas Vice.' "

The senator isn't the only one who doesn't want to see the drug problem any worse in Texas than it already is; most Texans will be glad to let Florida retain that title. It's been said many times in the past but drugs constitute a very real threat to American society that must be suppressed.

In recent years, we've read numerous stories detailing how children of increasingly younger ages were being drawn into the web of deceit by drug dealers. Once in, those young lives are battered and mauled for years before they can escape the grasp of the dealers and the addictive drugs — if they ever actually can escape. All too often, only death frees the "captives" of the drug industry.

That's a sad, sad story. But a true one. That's why this alert from the U.S. Customs Services should signal to all responsible Texans the urgent need to ask federal officials for concerted effort to bring the drug traffic in the Lone Star State to a halt through greater emphasis on border patrols, tougher prison sentences and greater public awareness of the drug threat.

It's the lives of our young people and our society that we're fighting to protect.

Another View: Lack of intelligence

There are undoubtedly far more spies and trouble-making agents working successfully against the United States today than there once were for the same reason that one cat does not catch as many mice as two cats.

For security reasons the total number of U.S. intelligence personnel is supposed to be a secret but during the 1970s when Congress was reducing the U.S. intelligence community to a shambles, several members let it slip that intelligence agency manpower had been cut from 142,000 to 80,000, a reduction of 43 percent, in seven years.

There were further drastic cuts. In 1983 the Senate Intelligence Committee reported that the cuts had seriously limited and degraded the intelligence community's capacity to meet the nation's intelligence needs.

This ability was damaged further by the three presidential executive orders governing all U.S. intelligence activities since 1976 which have given attorneys general — amateurs in intelligence — control over all aspects of U.S. intelligence and counterintelligence activities.

The childish guidelines issued as a result further crippled U.S. intelligence operations.

The ratio of FBI agents to communist bloc known or suspected spies fell from one-on-one in the early 1960s to one-on-four-or-five in the late 1970s.

James Angleton, CIA chief of counterintelligence from the late 1940s, when Soviet espionage and "active measures" were expanding, was forced by CIA Director William Colby to resign in 1974. The entire CIA top command quit in protest. Colby then broke up the counterintelligence division and its responsibilities, scattered throughout the agency, were often handled by inexperienced personnel.

CIA Director Stansfield Turner fired more than 800 officers, mostly older, experienced ones, in the "Halloween Massacre" of October 1977. The CIA lost more than 1,200 officers to retirement in 1977-79 and the FBI lost about 1,000 agents through budget cuts in 1972-78.

Francis J. McNamara, in his book, "U.S. Counterintelligence Today," an analysis of the decline of the nation's counterintelligence community and capacity, says the loss of "institutional memory," the combined experience and knowledge of these senior officers, is beyond accounting.

Did this immense personnel and quality loss and the corresponding multiplication of crippling guidelines and restrictions have anything to do with the rise of successful anti-U.S. espionage and opinion-twisting "disinformation campaigns" and the rash of successful terrorist actions against U.S. embassies, civilians, diplomats and servicemen?

Of course it did. The damage done by the spies, covert operations agents and terrorists cannot be undone. But with determination, sagacity, education, understanding and action, including the restoration of many of its best former officers, the U.S. intelligence community may eventually be made strong and sound enough to carry out its function of protecting the nation and its citizens — if we have learned our lesson.

JACK ANDERSON
Forests alive — with thievery!

WASHINGTON — Many of the dollars that campers paid in the last few years to pitch their tents in national forests were pocketed by Forest Service employees or spent to gussy up luxurious cabins for the use of agency officials and other VIPs, according to inspector general's reports.

Jack Anderson

The inspector general's auditors followed a trail of theft, fraud and extravagance through 12 national forests from Florida to Alaska. They blamed the abuses on lax accounting procedures.

The inspector general's reports were obtained by our reporter Stewart Harris. Here are the highlights of the auditors' investigations:

— A clerk in Marion-Sumter National Forest in North Carolina stole $1,128 in cash that hikers paid for $1 trail maps. The clerk also ripped up checks worth $759,117, which weren't missed until a timber buyer asked why his checks hadn't been cashed. The clerk was eventually convicted for theft, but officials still don't know why the checks were torn up.

— The auditors turned up $100,000 worth of fraudulent payments in two Oregon national forests, including the case of two purchasing agents at Willamette National Forest near Eugene who went "on a shopping expedition" with government purchase orders. The two were convicted after they spent $2,770 on lawnmowers for their own use.

— At several forests, the auditors found cases of double billing by suppliers.

— A favorite hideaway for VIPs is the Sweetwater cabin in Ocala National Forest near Silver Springs, Fla. Top forestry officials, a former secretary of Agriculture and members of Congress are among the insiders who used the plush retreat, with its private swimming hole, cedar decks and canoe access to Lake George — all for $12 a day. In three years, the Forest Service took in only $8,824 in rent for the cabin, while laying out $27,000 for improvements on it. Less favored campers subsidized the cabin and four others like it by paying $5 a night for a patch of ground to put a tent on.

— Another cabin the public isn't told about — Lake Meade Lodge in Nantahala National Forest, N.C. — has 3,000 square feet of living space, two bedrooms and chestnut paneling. It was appraised at $100,000 even before the Forest Service spent $31,000 on improvements.

— Even the IG's investigators had trouble finding the Koenigsberger cabin in George Washington National Forest, Va. Forestry officials had neglected to include the 1,500-square-foot cedar-and-stone cabin on their list of agency property, though they had spent $3,000 to spruce it up.

— Sloppy bookkeeping, poor security and lax inspections "permitted embezzlements and other irregularities to proliferate," the IG reported. For example, a cashier in the Willamette forest told the auditors she often borrowed from the funds at her disposal, and knew when to repay it — because officials always gave advance notice of an inspection.

— A widespread abuse the IG found was the practice of unapproved reimbursement for claimed expenses. One worker in the Tongass National Forest in Alaska got away with $6,950 in fraudulent claims, the IG reported.

Forest Service officials in Washington deny that the IG's report has given Smokey the Bear a black eye. Four recent convictions for fraud were "isolated cases" involving a few "dishonest people here and there," the officials said.

But Forest Service employees out in the field concede that graft and fraud may be spreading like poison ivy through the agency. Although only four workers were brought to trial, they said, many more were fired or reprimanded.

Washington officials say that measures have been taken to tighten up the service's money-handling procedures.

FUDDLE FACTORY: The evidence of mismanagement in the Pentagon's costly computer programs keep rolling in. The Army's "Viable" computer system was designed to be "the primary data processing resource at the installation level." But after two years, it is far behind schedule and it's doubtful that "any benefits will accrue" from the money spent on it, according to an internal Army document. One big program that damages Viable's viability is that local commanders "had no control over the total automation efforts at their installations." For example, at one base, "medical activities had 51 separate automation offices" and 70 different data systems.

UNDER THE DOME: In the Old South, gentlemen would never refer to a woman's legs, much less what she put on them. But the New South's most rock-ribbed conservative, Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., whose state manufactures more than half the hosiery made in the United States, thought nothing of calling the Senate's attention to National Hosiery Week, Aug. 11-17. The industry is suffering from competitive imports and "deserves the support of all Americans at this difficult time," Helms said.

FLORA LEWIS
S. Africa headed for disaster

PARIS — The slow burning fuse of racism in South Africa is getting shorter. It is hard to determine whether the Reagan administration's policy of "constructive engagement" made the deteriorating situation worse. Certainly, it hasn't made anything better.

Flora Lewis

The state of emergency proclaimed in black townships may be a crossroad. Oliver Tambo, the exiled acting head of the African National Congress, has called for "a general offensive to make apartheid impracticable and South Africa ungovernable."

Yet, even he still speaks of a day when blacks and whites can both live in their huge, generously endowed country in common peace and dignity. Militant blacks accept South Africans of European descent as a "white tribe," people who belong to the land as much as they do. It may still be not too late to reverse direction and begin the long, hard process of reconciliation, though explosive pressures are clearly mounting.

The sorry state in the rest of Africa can neither justify nor mitigate South Africa's attempt to maintain a nation of two societies, not really separate as apartheid implies, but one atop the other, a crust of democracy and well-being supported by rank servitude and misery.

President Pieter Botha echoes the familiar African lament that what is wrong is the fault of outsiders. In his case, he blames Communists, not of course imperialists and multinationals who are the usual butt in other parts of the continent.

But it was South Africa's aggressive policy to drive the ANC out of bordering states that provoked greater challenge within the country.

The tone of desperation in the appeals of Bishop Desmond Tutu to end violence should be taken as a serious signal. He threatened to emigrate if blacks continue to murder blacks considered to be collaborators, almost an admission that modern leadership is losing its base and the voice of reason and tolerance is losing its audience.

White South Africans risk being caught between their own extremists and rising black fury. The police measures have destroyed the last shreds of pretence that the system aimed for independent development for blacks. The whites have the guns. The blacks' only power is their numbers. But if confrontation is allowed to escalate, there won't be much room for accustomed security and comfort in between.

Just because it is a Western country, because it has a capacity to produce well and has the infrastructure of a modern society, South Africa has a responsibility to a continent that is foundering in tragedy. But it seems to be scurrying lemming-style into its own abyss.

"Constructive engagement" was advanced by Washington on the premise that the regime really did want to find a way out of its self-made dilemma. There was no historic inevitability about apartheid. It was imposed in steps of increasing severity after World War II. South Africa could have evolved in another way.

But it didn't. The recent steps to modify the system have been too wide of the realities of everyday life, too reluctant to address the central issue of legal equality, to be taken as a sign of regret and a desire to correct the terrible mistake.

So Washington, and the democratic West, now have the unhappy task of making clear to South Africa's leaders what they don't want to see for themselves. They are on a path of disaster.

Sanctions are a poor tool of international relations as a general rule. Their effect is seldom more than symbolic. But symbolism remains of critical importance in the South African case. There is nothing beyond it but force, so the symbols should be given a chance.

The United States should support the resolution sponsored by France against South Africa in the United Nations Security Council. It does not go very far, suspending new investment, export credits, purchase of gold coins and the like. But American endorsement would be a powerful message that Western patience is also running out. An American veto would be a shameful admission that South African cynics are right when they say the United States' protests against apartheid are only lipservice.

Black militants have noted wryly that the democracies only seem to get worked up about South Africa when there is violence. They don't really want violence; blacks would hurt most. But they haven't been given much evidence of consistent interest in the cause of justice without upheaval. They, too, need to hear the United States speak up firmly.

This is said in much sympathy and awareness of the dreadful dangers ahead of South Africa. Willy-nilly the United States is involved. It must act to head off the worst.

Tax plan bad idea

In 1980 candidate Reagan campaigned on the promise that he would miraculously balance the national debt while cutting taxes in his first term of office. Candidate Bush coined one of the few terms that has ever stuck to Reagan's teflon administration: "Voodoo economics."

This same, now incumbent, Reagan was re-elected while carrying the burden of the debt he quadrupled, campaigning on the promise this time that he will not "over my dead body" raise taxes. This town helped re-elect the man who made those very unwise statements. The fact is that this town and the nation did not have the choice a traditional election usually allows the voters. Walter Mondale honestly announced — for better or worse — his plan to balance the budget (which included a tax increase) as all Reagan said was, "I will not raise your taxes."

The public finally was informed a week after the election of a plan to simplify the tax code. The final plan was introduced in late May. Special interests connected with Midland (oil and gas) have begun lobbying Washington along with just about every other interest group from the realtors to restauranteurs joining in the fray. Now I ask you, were we given the facts concerning the Reagan plan prior to the election? Why not? Politically damaging, perhaps?

I look now at the Reagan plan and note one thing: He wants to tax your life insurance (pro-family?). Doesn't that raise a question in your mind about raising taxes when life insurance has never been taxed in this country? Isn't that raising taxes? The current situation reminds me of noted poet Barbara Bush when she described a certain candidate for Vice President. While intending no disrespect for the presidency, the liberal (look it up) Reagan Tax Plan points to a president whose qualities as an honest man might best rhyme with something like "fire" or "sire." There still is no such thing as a free lunch.

Seriously, now is not the time to reform (all reform is liberal) the tax code upon which every facet of our economy is based. Any tax reform should put emphasis on balancing the budget. Our country can't withstand any longer the credit card defense posture that this administration has undertaken. What do $600 toilet seat covers in the B-1 bomber have to do with that sacred cow national security?

The biggest threat to this nation is from within in the form of a collapsed economy and resulting loss of civil liberties. This publication should develop a little backbone and editorialize against the plan of the man you endorsed for president. His tax reform would have a severe impact locally as well as endanger our national security (B-1 bombers gotta have gas, right?). Just ask anyone in the exploration business.

Flying flags not a crime

After reading the letter from Winston Sosebee, owner of Sonic #2, on July 18th, I felt compelled to write.

I quote from the flag code, as amended by P.L. 344, 94th Congress, approved July 7, 1976, under Section 2, item (c): "No other Flag or pennant should be placed above or, if on the same level, to the right of the Flag of the United States of America, etc." The key words here being "if on the same level."

I talked to Mr. Sosebee and according to him, he tried every possible arrangement of the flags to please the group of ladies that was harassing him. He assured me that his center pole was indeed higher than the other poles, which meets the above mentioned requirements quoted.

I truly hope Mr. Sosebee and the employees of Sonic Drive-In #2 will once again fly the American Flag along with the Texas Flag and their Sonic Pennant. I have searched every record possible and can find nothing in writing that says there is a specific height above other flags that must be maintained — only that the American Flag must be higher.

Go for it, Mr. Sosebee, and fly the American Flag, Texas Flag and your Sonic Pennant with pride.

Personalizing Yellow Pages?

I personally don't understand all this fuss about these Christian Yellow Pages. It seems like a fine idea to me.

Me and a couple of friends are thinking of following up on this great money-making scheme. We plan to have the Atheist Yellow Pages and charge businesses not to be listed in it.

If this works, we could also start the Buddhist, Animalist or Shiite Moslem Yellow Pages and charge people not to be in those, too.

The grounded TWA Boeing 727, a pawn in the recent hostage crisis, sits unguarded and unclaimed at Beirut International Airport.

Hijacked jet still sitting in Beirut

By JOHN EDLIN
Associated Press Writer

BEIRUT, Lebanon — A month after Shiite Moslem gunmen freed the last hostages from a hijacked TWA jetliner, the red-and-white Boeing 727 that figured in the 17-day drama is still sitting on the apron at Beirut International Airport, unclaimed and unguarded.

"We really don't know what to do with it," said a Civil Aviation Directorate spokesman at the airport. "The owners haven't come to collect it, and it just stays here."

In New York, TWA spokesman David Venz said, "...nothing bad has happened to the airplane. The worst thing we've heard is that the inside was pretty well decorated.... We are certainly holding out every expectation that we will get the airplane back."

The hijackers of Flight 847 from Athens spray-painted graffiti in the cockpit and the cabin saying "All our problems come from the USA,""We will not bow down in front of our enemies" and "(President) Reagan is Number 1 Terrorist."

The slogans have since been scrubbed off by maintenance workers from Middle East Airlines, Lebanon's national carrier which was barred by the U.S. government from flying to the United States in retaliation for the hijacking.

Airport security police said they have thoroughly inspected the Boeing 727 for possible booby-trap bombs and declared it safe.

Maintenance engineers have checked the plane, ruling it's in good condition to fly, but say Lebanon's mid-summer humidity and salt air from the Mediterranean Sea a few hundred yards away could damage sensitive equipment.

Airport and MEA officials said they believe TWA has not sent a crew to fly the plane home because of fears they may be kidnapped — or worse. And they contended that the plane could be blown up by Lebanese extremists angered by U.S. threats of retaliation against the sky pirates.

The Boeing was seized on June 14 on a routine flight out of Athens and was forced to fly an 8,500-mile odyssey around the Mediterranean before landing for a third and final time in Beirut. Most of the original 153 passengers and crew, mainly American, were freed.

Between eight and 14 extra gunmen, Amal Shiite Moslem militiamen, joined the three hijackers, kept the three remaining crewmen aboard under guard and scattered the others in hideouts in Moslem West Beirut until their release on June 30.

The hijackers shot dead U.S. Navy diver Robert Stethem and dumped his body onto the tarmac, pistol-whipped and rabbit-punched many of the passengers and played a deadly game of Russian roulette with others.

The hostages were freed and flown home after President Reagan appealed to Syrian President Hafez Assad to use his influence with Amal to release the Americans.

By Lebanese and Syrian accounts a deal was struck to swap the Americans for 735 Lebanese Shiites held by Israel. Although 400 Shiites have since been freed, both Washington and Jerusalem insisted there was no linkage.

The Boeing 727, featured on newspaper front pages, magazine covers and television screens around the world, remained behind.

"I can tell you that when the crew left the airplane...they felt it was in a flyable condition and they would have been willing to fly it out," TWA spokesman Venz said. "In fact, they were all prepared to do that, except the (International) Red Cross...insisted that all of the hostages including the crew leave for Damascus together."

Venz stressed that he was reluctant to say much about the plane or efforts by TWA to recover it, directly or through third parties he declined to identify.

"...We just aren't sure what we might say that might upset something. We've been close in the past and it just hasn't worked out."

But he said that "the most likely scenario" following the retrieval of the Boeing would be to fly it to Athens for a preliminary check before it goes on to Kansas City, where TWA has its main maintenance facility.

Asked who was in control of the plane, he said, "That's very difficult to say because it's kind of difficult to say who's in charge in Lebanon."

After the hijacking, one of 12 involving Beirut Airport in the last year, a Syrian-sponsored peace plan for west Beirut called for the expulsion of rival militiamen from the terminal.

Golf has its own hazards in Lebanon

By JUAN-CARLOS GUMUCIO
Associated Press Writer

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — To tee up at the Golf Club of Lebanon, on the southern edge of Beirut, is to risk death.

"But it's worth it," says Salim Salam, club president and head of Middle East Airlines, the national airline.

Artillery shells, rockets, stray bullets and marauding gunmen compound the normal sand and water hazards most golfers face, but Salam said the game is a rare diversion in the war-torn country.

"Golf's about the only recreation that's left here," he said in an interview.

The 10-year civil war has wrought many changes at the carefully manicured 18-hole course near the bomb-shattered Sabra and Chatilla Palestinian refugee camps where more than 500 people died in recent fighting.

However, the game is picking up and the club plans to send a team of two physicians and the club champion, Bilal Gandour, to represent Lebanon in the Pan-Arab games in Rabat, Morocco, later this month.

The Pan-Arab organizers included golf in this year's events only at the request of Lebanon's players, Salam said.

Some 350 members flock to the course to tee-off behind huge red earthen mounds thrown up to stop bullets and shrapnel from the fighting that has raged around the course for years and forced players to take various precautions.

Veterans still talk of an American diplomat who, in the early stages of the war, played the 18 holes clad in a bullet-proof flak jacket and was followed by three armed bodyguards.

However, such precautions aren't always successful. Six months ago a golfer was paralyzed after machine-gun fire shattered his neck as he was chipping onto the seventh green.

Play was stopped briefly two months ago during the war in the refugee camps between Shiite Moslem militiamen and Palestinian guerrillas.

Officials said it took a lot of money and imagination to bring the club back to its feet.

"Four days after that war started we collected about one kilogram (2.2 pounds) of bullets from the swimming pool alone," said Salam, displaying the club's war scars.

And they are everywhere. In the clubhouse foyer, championship plaques with the inscription "not played" mark the years when tournaments were cancelled during the most violent cycles of the civil war.

The air-conditioned dining room overlooking Beirut's sprawling shantytowns is adorned with photographs of the bomb-battered clubhouse and the scorched greens criss-crossed by tank tracks.

Israeli planes raid Syrian-held Bekaa Valley

By SAMIR F. GHATTAS
Associated Press Writer

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Israeli warplanes streaked into the Syrian-controlled Bekaa Valley on Monday, dropping hot air balloons to deflect heat-seeking missiles, and blasted a Palestinian guerrilla headquarters.

Neither Lebanese officials nor Israel made a casualty report. A Syrian army communique issued in Damascus said "a number of inhabitants, mostly women, children and old men were killed or wounded" in the 10-minute raid.

Lebanese authorities said six Israeli Kfir jets took part — two bombing the two-story concrete building and four flying top cover, apparently to protect against Syrian interceptors.

The base near Barr Elias, 31 miles east of Beirut and 10 miles west of the Syrian border, belonged to the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine-General Command, a radical faction backed by Syria and led by former Syrian army officer Ahmed Jibrul.

It was Israel's eighth air strike on Lebanese targets this year.

Police said all six planes dropped hot air balloons to foil heat-seeking SAM-7 and SAM-9 anti-aircraft missiles.

Israel's military command said in Tel Aviv the planes hit their target and returned safely.

The Syrian communique said the raiders were driven off "by anti-aircraft fire when they tried to bomb targets in the Barr Elias area at 6:50 a.m. local time."

Several Syrian-supported radical Palestinian factions have bases in the area. It has been a frequent Israeli target since Israel invaded Lebanon in June 1982. Nearly all Israeli troops were withdrawn from south Lebanon early last month after occupying it for three years.

Israel last hit the Barr Elias area April 17. The most recent Israeli air strike in Lebanon was July 10 on guerrilla bases in the Palestinian refugee camps of Nahr el-Bared and Baddawi near the northern port of Tripoli, with 24 people reported killed, 87 wounded and 12 missing.

Monday's raid came a day after Syria's defense minister, Gen. Mustafa Tlass, inspected Syrian forces in the Bekaa.

Basque gunman likely suspect in shooting

Escrigas

MADRID — A gunman thought to be a Basque terrorist Monday assassinated a vice admiral here who was one of the most senior officials in the Defense Ministry.

In a second attack, suspected Basque terrorists also shot and killed an off-duty policeman as he was walking in the Basque city of Vitoria.

In the Madrid attack, the police said a vehicle carrying three men and a woman cut off a car carrying Vice Adm. Fausto Escrigas Estrada to work this morning and riddled it with submachine-gun fire.

Escrigas, 59, the director of policy in the Defense Ministry, was pronounced dead on arrival at a nearby hospital. His chauffeur was listed in critical condition.

The attack took place as Attorney General Edwin Meese 3d was holding talks here with the government of Prime Minister Felipe Gonzalez on improving United States-Spain cooperation against drugs and terrorism.

"I've extended the sorrow of our own country," Meese said of the killing in a joint news conference with Interior Minister Jos'e Barrionuevo.

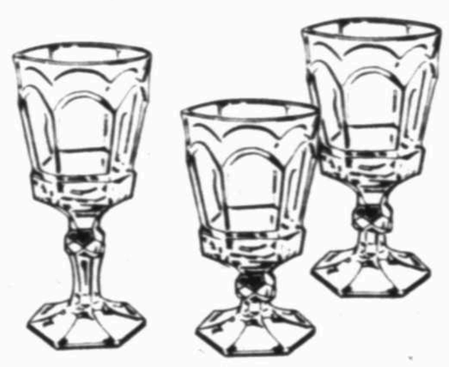

Meese and Barrionuevo said intelligence cooperation between their countries on terrorists was lacking. The Reagan administration said recently that Basque terrorists had been training in Nicaragua, but Spanish officials have said they doubted that.

Escrigas Estrada was the 25th person killed in political violence this year in Spain and the 50th military officer since the Basque terrorist group E.T.A. killed Adm. Luis Carrero Blanco, the prime minister under Franco, in 1973.

The killing Monday was condemned by unions and political parties from the Communists to the rightist Popular Alliance. The rightists called for harsher government countermeasures.

Scores of Spain's senior officers passed through a chapel here to pay their last respects to the admiral. Adm. Angel Liberal Lucini, head of the joint chiefs of staff, said the killing was "such a tough blow" to the military.

Conditions forecast for 8 a.m. Wednesday

In North Texas, no rain is expected. Highs 90s. Lows 70s.

In West Texas, sunny days and fair nights with seasonal temperatures. Lows 60s and 70s. Highs 90s except near 90 mountains to 102 to 106 Big Bend.

In South Texas, sunny and hot days, fair and mild nights Thursday through Saturday. Isolated afternoon showers along the coast. Lows 70s except near 80 coast. Highs 90s, except upper 80s along the coast and near 100 southwest.

Highs near 100 may continue

From Staff and Wire Reports

Hot temperatures are expected to continue in the Permian Basin area through Wednesday, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

Forecasters are calling for fair skies with a low near 70 tonight, warming to a high near 100 Wednesday. Winds will be from the south at five to 10 mph tonight, increasing Wednesday to less than 15 mph.

Monday's high of 98 was seven degrees below the record set in 1960. This morning's low was nine degrees above the 1971 record of 59.

STATE

Most of Texas baked under a relentless sun Monday as the mercury moved past the 100-degree mark in many areas and moisture remained scarce.

The National Weather Service called for more of the same at least through Wednesday.

Some partly cloudy skies prevailed in northwestern and southeastern sections of the state Monday, and scattered heavy thunderstorms were reported along the upper coast. The rains helped keep temperatures in the upper 90s in many areas in extreme southern areas.

But more substantial moisture patterns that moved through New Mexico and Oklahoma managed to avoid Texas.

NATION

Rain dampened broad sections of the nation today and prompted flood warnings in sections of the West after blustery thunderstorms forced road closings and ripped roofs from houses.

Scattered showers and thunderstorms ranged from Kansas across the Rockies to the central Pacific Coast and across the Southeast to the central Gulf Coast region.

Rain spread from the northern Plains to Nebraska and western Iowa and scattered showers and thunderstorms dotted northern New England.

Thunderstorm winds tore roofs off some houses in Phoenix, Ariz., and a flash flood warning was issued for the Camp Verde area of Arizona's Yavapai County, where heavy rain closed some roads, the National Weather Service said.

Flash flood warnings also were posted in southwest Idaho and thunderstorm winds were measured at 51 mph at Burns, Ore.

Midland statistics

Tonight: Fair with a low near 70. Winds from the south at five to 10 mph. Wednesday: Fair with a high near 100. Southerly winds at 10 to 15 mph.

Midlander rows for USA crew

When Blake Davenport took the rowing test at Yale, they couldn't believe he was from Midland, Texas. He had the best score of those tested, prompting one examiner to wonder, "Where'd you learn to row like that in West Texas, in the sand?"

Davenport was one of 40 qualifiers for the Junior Olympic Rowing camp at Princeton and he was still there when the 40 was trimmed in to 14. In fact, he'll be No. 7 in the boat of eight that will compete in the World Championships at Brandenburg, East Germany, August 9-11.

Davenport will be on the crew representing the United States in the World Championships in which 35 countries will compete.

However, this isn't Davenport's first competition abroad, although, admittedly, the Royal Henley Regatta was never quite like this.

The tester at Yale had good reason to wonder how Davenport came by his skill with an oar. This is all relatively new to him.

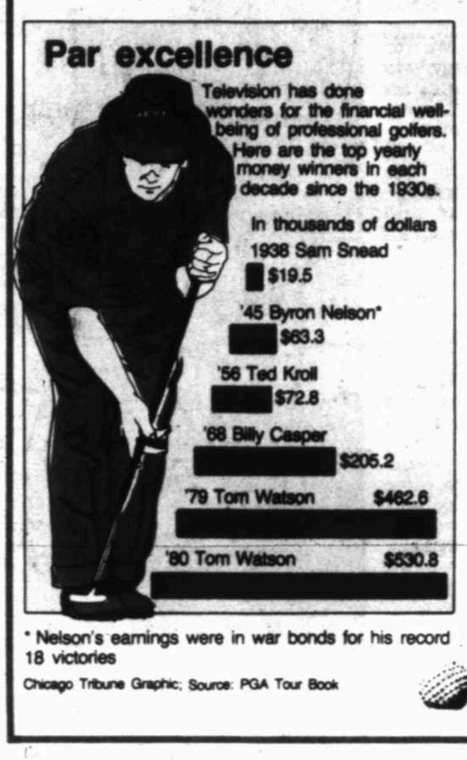

He grew up in Midland and played quarterback for Goddard Junior High. Then, he entered high school at 15 at Kent, Conn., Prep. His brother, Robert, Sr., was a senior at Kent at the time and a member of the crew.

"He saw what it meant to his brother and decided that he wanted to be a part of it," explains Mrs. Robert Davenport, Blake's mother.

The young freshman took to the shell like a fish to water. He made the crew his first year. Twice he has been to Henley and this year, in addition to being the stroke on the school crew, captained-quarterbacked Kent to the league football championship.

When it came time to for the school crew to go to the world-famed Henley this year, Davenport passed it up for a chance to make the team that would represent the USA in the world championships.

When Mom worried over possible regrets about passing up Henley, there was no hestitation in his response, "Mom, you don't know what it's like to row with 'USA' on your back."

Duncan switch whips Giants

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Inasmuch as Mariano Duncan, the rookie shortstop of the Los Angeles Dodgers, is hitting nearly 100 points higher batting right-handed, it has been suggested he might be better off abandoning his switch-hitting experiment.

But Duncan is working tediously with batting coach and fellow countryman Manny Mota.

"Every day I work at it," said a smiling Duncan, a native of the Dominican Republic. "Manny pitches — and he's got a good breaking pitch — and I hit, and hit and hit."

And his work is paying off.

Take Monday night, for instance. Batting right-handed against San Francisco starter Vida Blue, Duncan knocked in the tying run with a double in the fifth inning. Then, with the bases loaded in the sixth and facing ace reliever Scott Garrelts, he tripled batting from the left side as the Dodgers erupted for seven runs en route to a 10-5 victory over the Giants, snapping their four-game win streak.

The New York Mets edged the Montreal Expos 3-2 in the only other National League game Monday night.

It was Duncan's first triple in the major leagues.

"I led the Texas League in triples and I led the Florida State League in triples," said Duncan. "But that's my first one here. It must be harder to hit triples in the major leagues."

The Dodgers pounded out 15 hits, including four by right fielder Mike Marshall and three by veteran catcher Steve Yeager, his first three-hit game in two years.

"The confidence is starting to roll," said Marshall. "Everyone feels they can contribute, even when we're down a couple of runs. We're not overconfident and we're not cocky. We're just going out and playing hard."

Mets 3, Expos 2

New York rookie Rick Aguilera wanted to give away half of his victory because he showed up at Shea Stadium with a "50-50 chance" of pitching.

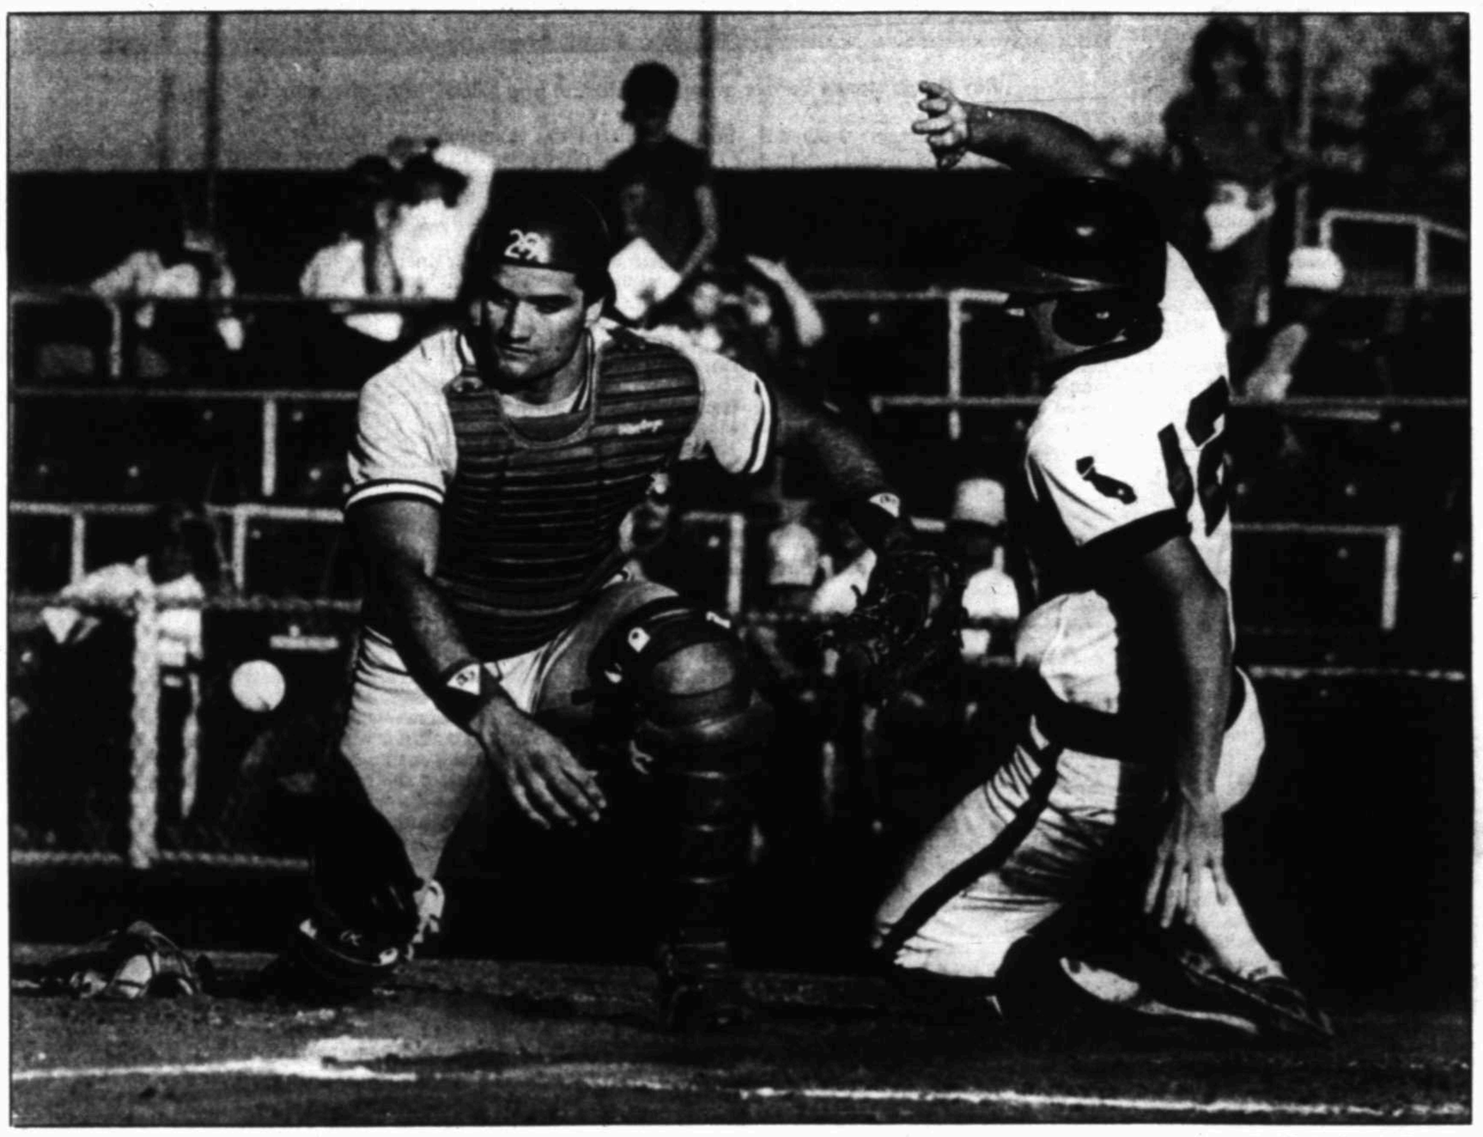

"My right shoulder was very stiff and the trainer (Steve Garland) did a tremendous job," said Aguilera. "Once I got loose, I was fine. I would have liked to finish the game, but I can't argue . . . we won."

Keith Hernandez doubled home two runs — he leads the major leagues with 16 game-winning RBIs — and Aguilera, 4-3, and Jesse Orosco, who got his 11th save, combined on a five-hitter. Tim Wallach's ninth homer, a two-run shot off Orosco, accounted for Montreal's runs in the ninth.

Aguilera drew considerable praise from Manager Davey Johnson.

"He's at least a year ahead of schedule," Johnson said. "His development is sensational. Rick has more command of his pitches and better consistency than (Ron) Darling and (Sid) Fernandez."

Aguilera walked two and struck out four. He retired 11 batters in a row at one point.

Poll shows fans back owners

An AP Sports Analysis
By JOHN NELSON

While baseball fans implore and protest, negotiations go on virtually uneffected. It seems to mean little, as the process of collective bargaining continues, whether fans back players or owners, whether they sign petitions or stage walkouts at games.

"I think the players will do what they have to do, whether it's what the fans want them to do or not," says Lee MacPhail, baseball's top negotiator.

He probably is right. At least on this point, MacPhail and his union counterpart, Don Fehr, agree.

Responding to a recent New York Times-CBS News poll that showed fans backed management over the players, Fehr said:

"If the survey came out that the players were right and it was 100 percent-to-nothing, or if it was the other way around, it's not going to affect the way we negotiate," Fehr says, "if we're acting on accurate information in a fair and reasonable manner."

Breaking with a precedent set in 1981, when a players' strike rent 51 days from the middle of the season, 43 percent of the fans interviewed in the Times-CBS poll backed the owners, while 25 percent backed players. The rest hadn't formed an opinion. Four years ago, 28 percent of the public sided with players and 27 percent with owners.

In labor talks, where issues are paramount, it probably is not unusual for the favored side to react gratefully and the other to react skeptically with neither side expecting much impact. At least that's what seems to be happening now.

— "Naturally, we like to see that," MacPhail says on behalf of baseball owners. "But I don't necessarily think that it's going to be a major factor in negotiations."

— "As I've said before, this has been a circumstance in which there's been a lot of propaganda brought out," Fehr says. Unless a survey determines whether respondents "have sufficient factual base to make a judgement," the poll won't "necessarily reflect in any regard what informed opinion would be."

Both sides, of course, believe their stance is proper and just. Fehr has said, "Give me 45 minutes with each baseball fan in America, and I have no doubt I could convince them we are right."

With this sort of philosophy, it's not difficult to understand why fan opinion has so little influence on the process. Each side has constituents it considers of primary importance, and fans are in the position of having no representation in these matters.

In an atypical management-labor soutsiders. If air traffic controllers go on strike, planes still fly. If General Motors workers walk out, the Ford dealers' showrooms are still full. If New York's newspapers are shut down, people watch television news.

But if baseball players go on strike, the game is gone altogether, along with the jobs of thousands of baseball-related workers who, like fans, have no representation.

But facts are facts. Owners and players both care about fan reaction, but it doesn't mean much when the two sides sit across from each other atnd Adv Tue PMs July 30

Merrifield touches all the bases

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

With the Midland Angels running away with a 15-4 victory over the Arkansas Travelers at Angel Stadium Monday night, thoughts quickly turned to the batting quests of Angel hitters Billie Merrifield and Brian Hartsock, who were gunning for cycle nights, a rarity in Midland's Texas League history.

Hitting for the cycle — single, double, triple and homer in one game — is a neat trick at best. Hartsock seemed to have the best shot, but it was Merrifield who came away with the honor.

Merrifield singled in the first, homered in the second and doubled in the fifth to get his rare shot at the cycle. He got his triple, the hardest of the lot, in his final at-bat in the seventh off Arkansas reliever Mike Rhodes.

But it was Hartsock who looked to have the best shot. Hartsock singled in the first, homered in the second and tripled in the third, leaving himself just a double shy of the cycle performance. He grounded to short in the fifth and hit a lazy single to left in the seventh with no chance to stretch it into the needed double.

Merrifield admitted after the game that he knew he needed a triple for the cycle in his last at-bat, saying, "We were joking and talking about it in the dugout. We were talking about what I had to do to get it, but it was really a joking matter. The triple is the hardest to get. Mike Madril kept saying that the only way for me to get a triple was to hit it down the right field line.

"BUT when I got to the plate, I got two strikes on me and I was just thinking about hitting it to right field to get the ball in play. You see, I had something else to think about because this was the first time as a professional that I've had four hits in a game. I wanted that, too."

Merrifield lined Rhodes' pitch down the right field line and the ball got past Arkansas' Jeff Ledbetter to the wall. Merrifield never slowed down on his way to third and made it easily.

"With the lead we had, I knew that if I had half a chance at making third, I wasn't going to stop," said Merrifield.

Angel manager Joe Madden, who was in the third base box, admitted, "I really didn't know Billie needed a triple for the cycle. I knew about Hartsock's chance because he needed only a double after his first three at-bats, but Billie came around second, running harder than I've ever seen him run. He was coming to third."

So, with his first four-hit night as a pro, Merrifield also became only the second player in Midland Texas League history to hit for the cycle. Gary Krug hit for the cycle on July 7, 1980, for the Midland Cubs in another home game.

Dorsett not only 'agent' victim

By DENNE H. FREEMAN

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. (AP) — Dallas Cowboys defensive tackle Randy White says Tony Dorsett isn't the only National Football League player who has had bad experience with agents.

"There are a lot of players who have been the victims of bad agents," White said. "Some of 'em just take the money and run.

"They are not concerned about players after they get the signing bonus. You hate to see a guy like Tony get ripped off," he said.

Dorsett was to meet with the Internal Revenue Service in Dallas on Monday to discuss his financial problems. Dorsett's new agent is Howard Slusher, who also represents White.

"Slusher is a good man," White said. "He'll help Tony. You have to feel bad for Tony. He's certainly had his share of adversity."

Dorsett was subject to $1,000-per-day fines while he missed training camp but Coach Tom Landry says he wants to talk to Dorsett before he makes any decision whether to fine him.

"I can't tell what I'm going to do until I talk to a player," said Landry. "I don't want to hear anything second hand. I need to know it from the horse's mouth."

"I've got to know the facts," said Landry. "I'll talk to Tony this week."

Dorsett called club President Tex Schramm Saturday night and said he wasn't reporting to training camp despite the possible fine.

Slusher convinced White to hold out all of training camp last year.

"Tony's situation is different from mine and I really don't have any insight into what he will do," White said. "I just did what I felt like I had to do under the circumstances to get a fair settlement."

Dorsett would like to renegotiate his seven-year contract that brings him some $400,000 per year. He is in the fourth year of the pact. At one time, he had a 15-year deferred contract at $100,000 per year, but decided he wanted the money up front.

Dorsett was hit in Dallas with a $400,000 back tax notice by the IRS. The agency, which seized two of his houses in north Dallas, also has attached his paychecks since last October.

Brawler from Big Thicket

Roy Harris made Cut And Shoot famous

CUT AND SHOOT, Texas — The Big Thicket is full of mysteries, deep and dark. Tales that border on the impossible. Tales of brawling and survival, of people so wild and uninhibited they belong in literature.

Now, Cut And Shoot has its convenience stores. Up the two-lane strip on Farm Road 105 is a modern school, welding shops and two dancehalls. But perhaps its bit unusual, Satellite dishes sold right in the middle of Cut And Shoot.

"A few years ago, this was all timber," said lifelong resident Roy Harris, as he looked at the industrial plants from nearby Conroe crowding Cut And Shoot's outskirts.

Harris has seen the area's growth, and in many ways, he has been part of it. He has a successful real estate business in Conroe, and is a lawyer and the county clerk to boot. But Harris still prefers to live in Cut And Shoot, the town he put on the nationwide map.

TWENTY-SEVEN years ago, America found there really was a Cut And Shoot. They found stories straight from the backwoods that everyone swore were true. But the most unlikely tale of all was unfolding before them: Roy Harris was fighting Floyd Patterson for the world heavyweight title.

No kidding. Patterson against Harris. City skill and polish against country brawling and instinct. Even though it was happening, it was almost too unreasonable to believe this unknown from the backwoods was fighting the country's biggest fight.

Of course, Patterson defended his title. Harris dragged it out for 12 rounds before he couldn't go any longer. His face was a mess and blood was spewing so badly that Patterson later said he was afraid to hit Harris in an open wound. But if it was Patterson's fight to win, it was Harris' moment in the spotlight.

EN MASSE, the media swooped down on Cut And Shoot weeks before the August 1958 fight. Quite likely, they had never seen anything like Roy Harris. This was a time of budding suburbia, two-car families and television. What they saw in Cut And Shoot was straight from Davy Crockett's era.

Roy was pictured in front of his family's log cabin with his long-barreled rifle, flanked by two hounds. A powder horn hung on the wall. In another shot, Roy sat on the porch with his guitar, while his family rocked away.

But if Roy was strange to them, imagine how the media looked to the Harris clan.

"We had people over for breakfast, lunch and dinner," said Jean Harris, Roy's wife of 30 years. "And in-between."

"I don't think I realized the importance of it," Harris said. "People in other states recognized me quicker than they did here."

THERE WAS enough in Roy's background to fill Louis L'Amour's next series of paperbacks. His life in the wild only began with his birth in a log cabin. When he was young, he began boxing in an outdoor dirt ring against his older brother, Tobe. For fun, he caught alligators.

"We'd rope 'em," Roy said. "They moved like lightning. We also caught snakes. I tried to take three or four moccasins to school once, but they made us get rid of them."

But compared with his father's genration, Roy was mild. The Harris family had already been living in the Big Thicket for some time when the oil boom of 1929 hit. With it came outsiders who didn't mind running over the natives to make big money. Conroe's population boomed from 2,000 to 15,000.

"All kinds of people drifted in," Roy said. "Everyone saw an opportunity to get rich. They tried to steal the poor farmers' land legally."

The Harris family objected to these invaders who laid roads, cut timber and scared off the animals. All over the area, the Harrises led gangs who tore down fences and pulled out the oil rigs. It got so bad, the Texas Rangers had to be called in.

A friend of the Harris family was Roy Tipton of Machine Gun Kelly's gang.

"The Texas Rangers surrounded the house," Harris said. "But Roy shot his way out. He was a pretty mean fellow."

Roy's ancestors were known for fighting. His father, Big Henry, was a big man who was quick with his fists. Brothers Bob and Jack were just as feared.

"Once my dad was taken to jail, where he was put in a cell with nine other men," Roy said. "First, he sized the two toughest up and knocked them out. Then he went after the other seven.

"He whupped all nine," Roy added.

ROY WAS born in the middle of all the turmoil in 1933. But it wasn't just fighting that Roy learned from his dad. He was well-disciplined and took his studies as seriously as his fighting.

When the national media descended upon Cut And Shoot in 1958, some might have been surprised by how intelligent and well-mannered Roy was. He already had a degree from Sam Houston State, had taught shcool and had already been an officer in the Army. He was also 22-0 in the ring.

"I didn't ever think I'd fight professionally," Roy said. "I needed the money in college. I didn't realize I had as much skill as I did. My dad and his brothers were much better athletes than the children."

Until the Patterson bout, Roy had concentrated his matches in the Southwest. When he beat highly-ranked Willie Pastrano and Bob Baker, he shot into the limelight. At 6-0, 192 pounds, he had an imposing left jab and a strong uppercut. For any chance against Patterson, most experts agreed the uppercut would have to be his weapon.

Harris began his training at a makeshift ring near the house in Cut And Shoot. Then he moved to California, but something was wrong. Not only did Roy feel out of place, he wasn't getting enough starches and carbohydrates.

"Since I had such a long training period, I thought it would be the thing to do," Roy said. "But the loss of starches left me weak. I was zapped of my strength. I had trouble against sparring partners I should have handled easily."

Roy Harris stands before a log cabin in Cut and Shoot and discusses the past.

THE FIGHT was set at Wrigley Field in Los Angeles. In the crowd, Harris' Texas followers waved 10-gallon hats. The bout was also shown on theater television by promoters who paid nearly $1 million for rights.

Amazingly, Harris got the upper hand early. In the second round, he landed a right uppercut and followed with a left hook. Patterson fell to the ground for a four-count. Seconds later, Harris connected a hook that dazed the champion.

With two solid blows, Patterson finished it off in the 12th. He landed a right smash, knocking Harris to the canvas. Somehow he got up, but not for long.

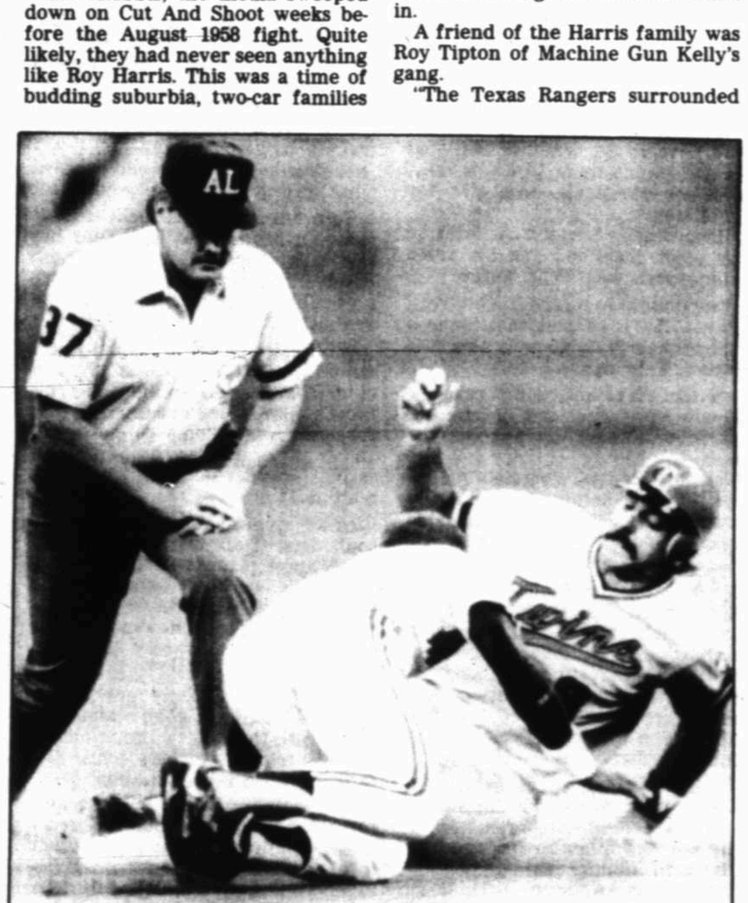

To open the 13th round trainer Bill Gore signaled that his fighter had had enough. Harris' face was covered with blood gushing from his left eyelid, temple and nose. Patterson retained his title.

"I coulda, shoulda whupped him," Harris said. "I was the better fighter. I was faster and stronger. But I hadn't traveled much. I was out of place."

There was much talk about a rematch with Patterson. But things went wrong for both fighters. Patterson was knocked out by Ingemar Johansson in 1959. Meanwhile, Harris lost to Henry Cooper at London's Wembley Stadium.

"He was a big hero there," Harris said. "I knew I got a raw deal."

Although there were some wins, Harris wasn't consistent. He lost to Sonny Liston and then lost two more fights. While Patterson regained his title by beating Johansson in 1960, Harris drifted away from boxing

Minnesota's Gary Gaetti slides into second with double against Seattle in Monday American League action.

Royals make race of it in AL West

Associated Press

American League

The Kansas City Royals are making a race of it in the American League West just eight days after the California Angels looked like runaway winners.

The Royals won their seventh consecutive game, 4-2 over the Detroit Tigers Monday night, to pull within 2½ games of the idle Angels, losers of four straight to the AL East-leading Toronto Blue Jays.

"We're getting some breaks right now. That's what it takes," Royals Manager Dick Howser said. "That's what happens when you win. You make good plays and you look good winning."

Against the defending World Series champion Tigers, Steve Balboni hit a two-run homer and Hal McRae had a two-run single while the Royals got another strong pitching performance from Bret Saberhagen, who allowed just seven hits in 8 1-3 innings. Saberhagen is now 12-5 for the season and 5-1 in July.

The Royals, who were 7½ games behind California before starting their winning streakverage of .253 but we must be averaging about .280 or .290 right now, through this little roll."

"Our offense has been more consistent," said Balboni, who has four homers in the last five games. "Before, it was inconsistent and we weren't scoring runs when we needed to. Now, we've turned it around and we're scoring lots of runs.

Saberhagen took a six-hit shutout into the ninth, but he gave up a one-out homer to Lance Farrish and was replaced by Dan Quisenberry, who gave up two more hits, including a run-scoring single by Chet Lemon.

"We have a great attitude," Saberhagen said. "We've been loose. I don't want to call it 'playtime' but we don't look on it as work, either."

McRae's two-run single off Dan Petry, 11-10, who allowed only seven hits in nine innings, gave the Royals a 2-0 lead in the third and Balboni made it 4-0 with his 19th homer in the ninth.

Blue Jays 4, Orioles 3

Damaso Garcia, who has 52 runs batted in from the leadoff spot, hit a one-out homer off Baltimore's Mike Boddicker in the 10th inning to extend Toronto's club-record winning streak to nine and its extra-inning record to 10-1.

Willie Upshaw and Ernie Whitt also homered for the Blue Jays, who maintained their seven-game lead over New York in the East. Upshaw gave Toronto a 2-0 lead in the second inning with his 10th homer and Whitt followed with his 13th.

"I don't think I'll ever be a home-run hitter, so I'm not going to try," said Garcia, who now has four homers this season. "I can't lift the ball, that's my problem. I'm a free swinger. I just try to hit the ball. I don't know how to drive the ball out of the ballpark."

Tom Henke, making his first appearance of the season for Toronto after being called up from Syracuse Monday, got the victory with two innings in relief of Jimmy Key.

Fred Lynn and Floyd Rayford homered for the Orioles, now 1-7 in extra-inning games.

Yankees 8, Indians 2

Dave Winfield hit his 14th homer for New York in the ninth inning to make the game a rout, but it was his cue-shot grounder in the seventh that led to the tie-breaking run against Cleveland.

With the score tied 2-2, the Yankees had the bases loaded and two outs when Indians shortstop Julio Franco booted Winfield's soft ground ball, and Dan Pasqua followed with a two-run single for a 5-2 lead.

"I always want a hit in that situation, but I'm glad the run scored. We'll take a win any way we can get it," Winfield said. "Under normal circumstances, the inning is over, but the error sprung a leak."

Winfield said the pitch was "a big curveball that I hit off the end of the bat."

Ed Whitsof the season when Winfield homered with two outs in the ninth.

The Yankees played the game without Manager Billy Martin, who was in Arlington, Texas, recovering from a punctured lung he suffered Sunday while receiving an injection for back spasms.

Mariners 8, Twins 6

Seattle had 15 hits, including two homers from Gorman Thomas and one from Dave Henderson, to outlast Minnesota.

Henderson's three-run blast off Frank Eufemia, 3-1, his ninth of the season, broke a 5-5 tie in the seventh after Alvin Davis led off with a double and Jim Presley was walked intentionally.

Brewers 3, Rangers 2

Milwaukee, held to two hits through seven innings by knuckleballer Charlie Hough, rallied with two runs on consecutive RBI singles by Cecil Cooper and Ted Simmons with two outs in the eighth to beat Texas.

Ted Higuera, 8-6, a rookie lefthander, pitched a five-hitter for the Brewers, allowing only one walk and game-tying and game-winning singles.

Pete O'Brien had given Texas a 2-1 lead in the seventh with his 12th homer.

Ueberroth losing halo

By DAVE ANDERSON

Comment

NEW YORK — At the Baseball Hall of Fame induction ceremonies on Sunday, Peter Ueberroth promised "to take all appropriate action to reaching a successful conclusion" in the baseball labor negotiations that have now begun a day-by-day countdown to next Tuesday's strike deadline. But pending his "appropriate action," the influence of the new commissioner thus far in the strike talks has been pure Cooperstown — a bust.

In warning that "we cannot allow these negotiations to fail," Ueberroth has put himself on a spot that will polish or tarnish his image for the remainder of his reign.

IF THE new commissioner were to mediate a settlement without a strike, he again would emerge as a folk hero, as he did after the artistic and financial success of his Los Angeles Olympics last year. But if a long strike occurs, he would be considered as hollow and helpless as his predecessor, Bowie Kuhn, was during the 1981 baseball strike.

Ueberroth is learning that he is really only one of three baseball commissioners. And at the moment he ranks third in authority.

During this labor crisis, the two commissioners with the most authority are Donald Fehr, the players' man as the executive director of their union, and Lee MacPhail, the owners' man as the chairman of their Player Relations Committee.

Ueberroth remains only the fans' commissioner. As romantic as that notion is, the fans aren't organized. Ueberroth has no clout. Neither do the fans.

In reacting to the commissioner's promise of "appropriate action," neither Fehr nor MacPhail sounded eager for him to try to take any. Fehr spoke of Ueberroth's "constituents," meaning the owners who hired him and who pay him. MacPhail mentioned that Ueberroth would be "operating independently" of the owners in any labor talks.

"HE," SAID MacPhail of the commissioner, "certainly hasn't been on our side in a lot of areas."

To some cynics, MacPhail sounded as if he were using a negotiating ploy — establishing the owners' current dispute with the commissioner to increase Ueberroth's credibility as a neutral. But to those familiar with the current labor negotiations, as well as with MacPhail's integrity, the chill between the former American League president and the commissioner is hardly new.

MacPhail has been annoyed at Ueberroth's criticism of the owners' suggestion of a salary cap, similar to that used by National Basketball Association teams. But with both union and management displeased with Ueberroth, perhaps they will accept him as a neutral this weekend when the talks move into the late innings. Another possibility is that the talks will go into extra innings beyond the Tuesday deadline, although Fehr has rejedted that idea.

Any agreement, of course, will be determined by the three primary money issues — the owners' contribution to the players' pension and benefit plan, salary arbitration, and the owners' wish to slow the escalation of player salaries. Ironically, the owners have only themselves to blame for that escalation, notably the signing by the St. Louis Cardinals earlier this season of the shortstop Ozzie Smith to an $8.7 million four-year contract.

MILLIONS for defense is understandable. But for one glove, no matter how golden!

Even so, according to a nationwide New York Times-CBS News Poll of 759 people who said they were "very" or "somewhat" interested in baseball, 43 percent thought the owners now were "more in the right," while 25 percent favored the players. The other 32 percent did not take sides. This poll reflected the apparent change in the public posture from the time of the 1981 strike. In a similar poll taken after that strike began, 28 percent favored the players, 27 percent the owners.

Four years ago, in the countdown to the June 12 strike date, both the owners and the players appeared to want a strike. The owners were hoping to break the union, the players were desperate to maintain free agency. This time, to someone who has witnessed more than half a dozen New York newspaper strikes in 30 years, the baseball climate does not appear to be quite so severe. Still antagonistic, but negotiable.

If a strike were to occur, pessimists warn that the public would not be so quick to return to the ticket booths as it was four years ago.

True, most people don't sympathize with a strike by ballplayers with annual salaries in the hundreds of thousands of dollars, in some cases a million or two. Samuel Gompers did not have Dave Winfield and Gary Carter in mind, or Wally Backman and Mike Pagliarulo, when he organized the American Federation of Labor a century ago. But baseball is too much a part of the American way of life for people to boycott it for long.

Eastern LL wins, 3-2, over Pecos

BIG SPRING—Raymond Ramos knocked in the winning run in the last inning to give Midland Eastern a 3-2 victory over Pecos in the best-of-three Regional Little League baseball playoffs here Monday night and send the series back to Pecos for a final game tonight.

With the scored tied 2-2, Joe Dominquez singled for Midland and Abel Rodriquez doubled him to third before Ramos came through with his game winner.

J.J. Johnson gave Midland an early lead, scoring on a single by Manuel Galilndol.

Pecos tied it in the third, but Midland came back to go ahead again in the home third when Paul Zarate came home on Johnson's single.

James Sanchez homered in the fourth to tie the game for Pecos and Johnson then held the Pecos team in check until the final inning run which tied the series at 1-1.

Tonight's game will decide which team advances to state play in Waco.

El Paso clubs Caps; Tulsa whips Dodgers

Texas League

El Paso edged Shreveport 7-4, Tulsa defeated San Antonio 8-5 in 10 innings and Beaumont split a doubleheader with Jackson in Texas League action Monday. The Golden Gators took the opener 2-0 and lost the nightcap 3-2.

Billy Joe Robidoux had a two-run homer in a five-run fifth inning to put the game away for the Diablos.

Joey Meyer hit his 31st homer for the year with a man aboard in the second. Shreveport tied the game with solo homers by Alan Cockrell in the second and Mike Aldrete in the fourth.

Winner Scott Roberts, 3-1, pitched the first seven innings. Doug Norton grabbed the save. Randy Bockus, 11-9, was saddled with the loss.

Tulsa's Jeff Mace hit a three-run homer in the bottom of the tenth on San Antonio reliever Dave Eichhorn's first pitch.

Mace's home run followed a walk to Willie Darkis that opened the inning, a balk by loser Adrian Meagher, 7-5, and an intentional walk to George Foussianes.

Tulsa reliever Dwaine Henry, 6-6, was the winner, striking out five in two innings of relief.

Mike Stanley and Otto Gonzalez had two RBIs for Tulsa.

Joe Bitker threw a two-hitter in seven innings of Beaumont's opener to raise his record to 5-0. Bitker allowed just two hits while walking three and striking out three.

Jackson's Jason Felice reached base on an infield hit to spoil a no-hitter in the fifth inning. Jackson's only other hit was in the top of the seventh on Randy Milligan's single to left field.

DeWayne Vaughn, 6-5, was the loser.

The Mets grabbed the nightcap with a two-run sixth inning. Dave Nagadan, Felice and Keith Miller singled and Kevin Elster smashed an RBI grounder, allowing one of the runs to score. The other Jackson run in the inning scored on a throwing error by Beaumont catcher Benito Santiago.

Craig Weissmann, 6-5, gained the victory for Jackson in a two-hitter.

Ed Vosberg, 6-9, was the loser.

Chicago's Sutcliffe back on DL

CHICAGO (AP) — Rick Sutcliffe has been placed on the disabled list for the third time, and the Chicago Cubs' right-hander may be out for the entire season, the club says.

Cubs President and General Manager Dallas Green said Monday that Sutcliffe had been placed on the 21-day disabled list and indicated it is likely last year's National League Cy Young Award winner is out for the rest of the season.

"It's unfair to continually ask Sutcliffe to come back and try. Sometimes he's got more heart than sense," Green said.

"We know that the leg is not going to heal properly until the end of the year, until he gets a winter's rest."

Sutcliffe, 8-7, was pulled from the game against the Los Angeles Dodgers on Sunday after pitching only two-thirds of an inning.

A team spokesman said a formal announcement on Sutcliffe would be made before today's game against the St. Louis Cardinals.

NEW YORK — Dodger Outfielder Pedro Guerrero, who batted .579, was named National League's Player of the Week for the period of July 22-28. Included in Guerrero's 11-for-19 production last week were four doubles and two homers. At one point, the Dodger outfielder reached base 14 straight times to set a club record, and was two shy of Ted Williams' major league record...

COOPERSTOWN, N.Y. — Successive home runs by Phil Garner and Harry Spilman in the 10th inning lifted Houston to a 5-3 exhibition victory over Boston in the annual Hall of Fame game Monday. Garner drove Tom McCarthy's first pitch of the inning into the right field stands and Spilman homered on McCarthy's next toss. The game attracted a capacity crowd of 9,791 that included Vice President George Bush and New York Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan...

NEW YORK — More than eight months after negotiations began, the two sides in major league baseball's labor negotiations said Monday they finally are ready to move on to the major issues one week before the strike deadline. "Subject to working out the final contract language, I think what we have done today is to reach agreement on the overwhelming majority of the less significant issues," the player union's chief negotiator, Don Fehr, said following a two-hour meeting with management. "We will try over the next 12 to 18 hours to get them down on paper and, beginning tomorrow afternoon, we'll go back to the remaining issues."...

MONTREAL — Jacques Lemaire was replaced as Montreal Canadiens by assistant Jean Perron. Serge Savard, managing director of the Canadiens, said Lemaire would stay with the team as director of hockey personnel. Lemaire said at a hastily called news conference Monday he never had intended to take on the job many consider to be the toughest in hockey on a long-term basis...

Angels—

"That's strange that this has happened only twice in this park," noted Maddon. "And to think that we almost did it twice in one game."

"After those first three hits by Hartsock, I thought he was the shoe-in for the cycle the way he is hitting the ball. He singled in the seventh and I was surprised that he pulled up," said Merrifield.

Hartsock, who was 2-for-3 with three RBI on Sunday, ended up with a 4-for-5 and four RBI on Monday. He, too, had thoughts of going for the cycle.

"I was thinking about it after the first three hits, but I guess that's what you get when you think about something like that. The single in the seventh was really no chance to stretch into a double. Still, I can't complain. I feel real comfortable at the plate right now and I'm seeing the ball good and being selective," said Hartsock.

Merrifield said that he had never hit for the cycle before, "not even in high school." Hartsock said he hit for the cycle at Norte Vista High School in Riverside, Calif.

With cycle shooting going at a heavy pace, the other heroes of Midland's awesome 19-hit attack almost went unnoticed. Reggie Montgomery clubbed his 18th homer of the year and drove in four runs with three hits. Mark McLemore drove in two runs with a second inning double that put Midland in the lead for good at 3-2. Phil Stephenson, Madril and Greg Steen all had two hits each. The only Angel who failed to get a hit in the game was No. 9 hitter Greg Key, who took on 0-for-5 collar with four strikeouts.

Despite the offensive fireworks, Maddon was just as pleased with the route-going performance of Midland starter Doug McKenzie, who could sue his teammates this year for non-support.

"I'm sure the early lead helped Doug relax out there on the mound, but anytime you pitch a complete game in this park with the wind blowing out like it was, you've pitched a fine game," said Maddon.

McKenzie gave up back-to-back solo homers to Dave Kable and Bob Geren in the second, but went on to retire 10 batters in a row. He gave up four consecutive singles and two more runs in the sixth, but other than that, he had a great outing. He didn't walk a batter and KOed eight.

The Angels jumped on Arkansas starter Rich Bouantony for nine hits and eight runs in 1⅔ innings. Bouantony, now 8-8 on the year, is a former Midland Cub.

A large number of the 1,194 fans on hand for the game were from Andrews for Andrews Community Night. A second Andrews night will be held tonight, and after the way the Angels exploded on Monday, that sits just fine with the Angels.

Option holders have until Aug. 9 to renew options. Beginning Aug. 12, all remaining tickets will be sold to the general public on a first come, first serve basis. Tickets are now being sold from the available list to non-option holders as long as they last.

Tickets are $20 for the five home games of each school...

Incoming seventh and eighth graders at Tall City junior high schools are reminded to have physical examinations completed before the start of summer practice sessions when school lets back in.

Without a physical, players aren't allowed to participate in practice, and making an appointment now can avoid delays in the fall...

Soccer

The Permian Basin Soccer Association of Midland, in conjunction with Midland College, will hold a free Soccer Day Camp for children ages 6-13 on Saturday, Aug. 3, from 8 a.m.-4 p.m. and on Sunday, Aug. 4, from 1 p.m.-5 p.m.

The camp will be held at the Midland College Soccer Field (north of Chaparral Center).

Players should bring their own lunch on Saturday and supply their own soccer balls. Beginners to advanced players are welcomed. Consultant for the camp will by Ralph Lundy, a staffer for the U.S. Soccer Foundation.

BOWLING BEAT

Blake, 14, paces Fairmont bowlers

BY RANDY ISENBERG

Keith Blake, 14, rolled a 256-214-224—694 in the Wednesday Youth Program at Fairmont Park. Blake has been bowling a year and a half, according to coach Mike Velasco.

Mike Reed's 268—674 paced the men at Fairmont, edging Vern Williams, 234—662. Linda Williams led the women with 220—568. At Dellwood, Leo Rodriquez, 278—866 in four games, led the men and Leta Brown, 232, 80 pins above her average, led the women. Her 593 series was 137 pins over her three-game average....

Elvis Barrington not only became a grandfather, but paced the seniors in the Rock N Roll League with a 210—575....

World Class Bowling Centers will conduct a handicap tournament Aug. 9-10-11 at Fairmont. The Rolling Thunder singles is open to all bowlers who have an established average. Those without an established average will bowl scratch...

From Aug. 5-11, league bowlers at Dellwood and Fairmont will compete for a chance to win free bowling for a year during league play. WCBC will, also conduct a Labor Day weekend tournament...

Fall Youth roundup days are Aug. 17, 24 and 31 at Dellwood and Fairmont Park. Bowlers ages five to 18 will bowl from 10 a.m. until 2 p.m. Roundup days are pre-registration times for the fall youth program beginning Sept. 7.

The Labor Day Special weekend, Aug. 30-Sept. 2, will be held at Dellwood and Fairmont Park with King and Queen of the Hill, Scratch Doubles and colored pin bowling scheduled.

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Wednesday, July 31, 1985

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Make the most of a special opportunity that comes your way. Your ability to handle pressure determines how much money you will make. Consult mate before making a big decision and your relationship will become more rewarding. Look to outsiders, not relatives, for financial backing. Romance could put you on a collision course with an old friend. Consider the consequences. Someone influential wants to be sure of your loyalty. Keep secrets. CELEBRITY BIRTHDATES: actress Geraldine Chaplin, Pittsburgh Pirates pitcher Mike Bielecki, tennis' Evonne Goolagong Cawley, Kansas City A's manager Hank Bauer, actor Don Murray, game show producer William Todman, merchant S.S. Kresge.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Practical solutions work best now. Rely on your own efforts and good sense, rather than leaning on other people. You will be judged by your actions, not your promises.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A work situation becomes less stable. Look for ways to foster office harmony while advancing your career. A romantic mismatch gives you second thoughts. Hold off on making a proposal.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Those with innovative ideas and practical know-how will always be in great demand. Prepare yourself before tackling something new. Family responsibilities deserve top priority. Consult mate before accepting invitations.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Look for new outlets for your managerial skills. You need more time to sort out a financial matter. Be kinder to yourself. You have what it takes to be a winner.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): New developments could lead to a change in curriculum or career goals. Get more rest and you will be able to accomplish more. A trip is part of the picture. Travel in style.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Try to figure out what someone is thinking and you will know what to do next. New research could lead to an important, time-saving discovery. A child fulfills your expectations. Be supportive.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A happy, productive day lies ahead for those who get an early start. Make the most of an unusual business or financial opportunity. There is plenty of time for both work and romance.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): The love and affection you lavish on a parent will be richly repaid. There is a special feeling between the two of you that makes all the struggles of the past worthwhile.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Happiness comes in a small package today. This is not a good time to take risks. Avoid all forms of gambling. Only hard work and dedication will get you what you want.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Some of your generosity rubs off on others now. A pet project attracts widespread financial backing. Your good deeds endear you to people have not yet met!

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Look at a problem from every conceivable angle and you will suddenly hit on the solution. A period of meditation helps you find the right path to success. Romance is a top priority.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Try to look at a problem from a sibling's point of view. Common sense helps you solve a business dispute. Refuse to be drawn into taking sides. Your impartiality pays big dividends.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
4 ♠	Pass	6 ♠	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: King of ♣.

Spot cards can be of critical importance. Because dummy had the seven of diamonds rather than the four, after a club lead declarer's chances for his contract were virtually cast-iron.

At this vulnerability, the opening four spade preempt promised seven playing tricks. North knew that a slam could be no worse than on a finesse, so he wasted no time in bidding what he hoped he could make.

West led the top of his club sequence, and most declarers would have been satisfied to draw trumps and try a diamond finesse first. If that failed, they would go for a 3-3 diamond split. And if that suit did not break favorably, they could still fall back on a heart finesse. The combined odds of these various chances is almost 85 percent, but as the cards lie, the contract would be doomed to failure.

As an alternative, declarer could strip clubs while drawing trumps, then try for a throw-in by cashing the ace of hearts and exiting with the queen. That is a sure-fire line if East has the king of hearts, but if West had the king the fate of the contract would hinge on the diamond finesse. And declarer would then be a laughing stock for not simply taking a heart finesse.

Declarer found a way to exploit dummy's seven of diamonds. He won the ace of clubs and ruffed a club high. He crossed back to dummy twice with the 9-8 of trumps to ruff two more clubs. Since both opponents were now reduced to nothing but red cards, the contract was secure.

Declarer led a diamond, intending to end play East by inserting the seven had West followed with a low diamond. When West produced the eight, he merely delayed South's plan for a moment. Declarer won the king, came back to hand with a trump and led another diamond. West produced the ten and declarer finessed the jack. East won the queen, but he was left with a choice of unhappy returns in the red suits. Whichever suit he chose would be into one of dummy's tenaces, and would present declarer with the fulfilling trick.

North Dallas model wins pageant

Fichtner

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — A 22-year-old North Dallas model has won the Miss Texas USA title and $90,000 in prizes.

Christy Fichtner, 22, Miss Dallas County, was crowned Monday night during ceremonies hosted by television personality Bob Eubanks.

The blonde-haired, green-eyed beauty recently completed her freshman year at Southern Methodist University. At 5-foot-8 and 118 pounds, she described herself as a professional model who works for agencies in Dallas and New York.

The 112 contestants were judged according to swimsuit and evening gown competitions and an interview with a panel of nine judges.

Miss Fichtner's prizes included an $18,000 cash scholarship and a white Subaru.

Laura Martinez-Herring of El Paso, the current Miss USA, surrendered her crown to the new Miss Texas USA.

Miss Martinez-Herring, 21, was awarded the Yellow of Rose of Texas governor's award for her contribution to the state of Texas during Monday night's ceremonies.

First runner up was Kim Acker, 23, of Fort Worth. Others were Kay Hicks, 24, 2nd runnerup of Clear Lake City; Angel Hightower, 23, 3rd runnerup, of Dallas; and Tonya Beddingfield, 22, 4th runnerup, of Houston.

Miss Fichtner will compete in the Miss USA pageant next year in Miami.

White

PLANO, Texas (AP) — Gov. Mark White went before the cameras to play his favorite character for an upcoming episode of the television series, "Dallas."

"I'm happy to be here with you all today," White said, playing himself and waving to a pretend rodeo audience as the cameras rolled.

But the governor said Monday after filming his one-liner that he's not ready to relinquish the keys to the statehouse for a job in Hollywood.

Asked what he would do just in case he's not re-elected next year, White said, "I don't think I have to worry about that part. I don't think that's going to be a problem we'll have to deal with."

JASPER, Ind. (AP) — William Schroeder may visit this community this weekend in his first trip home since receiving an artificial heart eight months ago, his son said Monday.

Heart surgeon William C. DeVries has given permission for the 90-mile trip from Humana Hospital Audubon in Louisville, Ky., if Schroeder feels strong enough, said Mel Schroeder.

"It all depends on how he's doing then," said Mel Schroeder.

The main purpose of the trip is to attend Jasper's annual summer festival, Mel Schroeder said.

The decision probably will be made Thursday, the first day of the annual Strassenfest to commemorate Jasper's German heritage. Schroeder, 53, probably won't go to the southern Indiana town until the weekend.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actor Seatman Crothers will undergo four to six weeks of outpatient radiation therapy near his Van Nuys home to treat an inoperable tumor doctors found behind his left lung, his publicist says.

Crothers, 75, was scheduled to leave Beverly Hills Medical Center today, said publicist Jerry Zelenka. Doctors found the tumor July 22 during surgery. "He's feeling fine and his spirit's great," Zelenka said. "He's looking forward after treatments to playing golf."

Crothers, whose real first name is Sherman, began his 60-year show business career as a musician and is best known as Louis the garbageman in the TV series "Chico and the Man," and as a telepath in "The Shining."

Reagan

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Michael Reagan says favorable reaction to his previous broadcast assignments has led him to sign for a full-time job on a syndicated daily television news program.

President Reagan's eldest son, 40, will narrate and report on "All About Us," a news show beginning Oct. 7 on about 100 stations, spokesman Gene Shefrin said Monday.

The show, produced by Dan Enright and Associates, will present "human interest stories that cover a wide range of topics," said Shefrin.

In the past few years Reagan has appeared as a substitute host on radio and television talk shows in Los Angeles.

Earlier this month, Ron Reagan Jr., the president's other son, said he would become an on-camera reporter for ABC Entertainment, while actress Patti Davis, Reagan's younger daughter, said Monday she will appear in a television commercial for a Japanese florists' association.

Castro

NEW YORK (AP) — Cuban leader Fidel Castro is negotiating a book contract with Simon & Schuster, a company spokesman says.

The negotiations have been going on for a few months between Castro and Alice Mayhew, Simon & Schuster associate publisher and executive editor, Peter Minichiello, a vice president for corporate communications, said Monday.

MONTREAL (AP) — Actor Jean-Paul Belmondo, famed for his tough-guy film roles, shrugged off a weekend movie stunt accident that left him with a three-inch-long gash across his forehead.

"I'm fine," the actor said Sunday after resting up from the accident. "And my knock on the head is finished, finished, finished."

Belmondo received 12 stitches to close the wound Saturday after he lost his balance on the back of a tow truck while filming the final sequences of the movie "Hold Up."

"We were really frightened when the accident happened," said Denis Heroux, Belmondo's co-producer on the $8-million film. "When he hit the crane, Jean-Paul put his hand over his eye, his face was bloody. We thought he had been hurt in the eye, which would have been even more serious."

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Eight artworks valued at more than $500,000, including two pieces by Pablo Picasso, were stolen from the Museum of Modern Art, officials discovered on Monday.

Police sealed off the fourth-floor gallery after a security guard reported the theft, which investigators believe happened sometime Sunday night, said museum spokeswoman Sarah Moulton.

Two Picasso ink drawings were stolen, as were four pieces by Paul Klee; a 1931 photograph of Joan Crawford taken by Edward Steichen; and a photograph by Man Ray.

TREASURY BILLS

Yields rise

WASHINGTON (AP) — Yields on six-month Treasury bills rose in Monday's auctions for the third consecutive week, while rates on three-month bills remained unchanged.

The Treasury Department sold $7.2 billion in three-month bills at an average discount rate of 7.23 percent, the same as last week. Another $7.2 billion was sold in six-month bills at an average discount rate of 7.4 percent, up from 7.35 percent last week.

The rates were the highest since May 20, when three-month bills averaged 7.28 percent and six-month bills sold for 7.43 percent.

The new Treasury bill discount rates understate the actual return to investors — 7.47 percent for three-month bills and 7.79 percent for six-month bills.

MONEY

Dollar up

LONDON (AP) — The dollar rebounded on foreign exchange markets early today in thin trading. Gold bullion prices drifted lower.

Midmorning dollar rates compared with levels in Europe late Monday included:

—2.8330 West German marks, up from 2.8300.

—2.30625 Swiss francs, up from 2.2975.

—8.6265 French francs, up from 8.6100.

—3.1860 Dutch guilders, up from 3.1835.

—1,900.00 Italian lire, up from 1,896.00.

—1.35045 Canadian dollars, up from 1.3488.

Gold bullion prices fell in Europe in response to the dollar's rise.

London's five main bullion houses fixed a recommended midmorning gold price of $323.25 an ounce, down from $325.60 late Monday.

DeltaUS to sell oil properties, close its Odessa office

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

DeltaUS has announced an agreement in principal to sell all the firm's oil and gas properties and interest in two gas processing plants to Kerr-McGee Corp., the Oklahoma City based firm, for $140 million, which will be used principally to reduce debt, according to Linda Kerr, Corporate Secretary and Manager of Investor Relations in DeltaUS's Tyler office.

At the same time, the company announced that it will shut down the Odessa office of Delta Drilling Co., a subsidiary of DeltaUS, putting about 150 people in the unemployment ranks by August.

The reason is pure economics, according to Kerr. "Based on the soft drilling contractor market in West Texas, we are shutting down the Odessa office. The West Texas market is not as good as our other markets," Kerr said.

The company has 10 rigs currently working, and as those rigs finish, they will be brought into the yard and stacked. Some division personnel will be transferred, Kerr said, but since most of the workers worked on the rigs, and weren't vested, they can't be offered early retirement or transfers, and thus will be out of jobs.

An effective date of August31 has been set for corporate employees to tie up loose ends and paperwork in order to shut down.

She emphasized that the company sees this as a temporary move. The rigs will be left intact, and some employees will be retained to keep the rigs in working order, in case they're needed.

"If the market improves to the point we could begin realizing a profit, we will reopen the office," Kerr stated, adding "there are so many variables in the industry, such as OPEC, the price of oil, the gas bubble. We just can't tell what's going to happen."

She expressed surprise at the amount of interest in the shut down, saying so many of the rigs have been stacked for so long.

She added that the company, active in West Texas since 1949, will concentrate on stronger markets in East Texas, the northeastern U.S., South Louisiana, and South Texas.

The DeltaUS Exploration and Production office, Kerr said, has been consolidated with the main office in Tyler, which now handles matters regarding the area.

Tennessee Gov. Lamar Alexander, at microphone, is joined by members of the Tennessee State Legislature as he comments on tentative plans announced Monday by General Motors Corp. to build its Saturn carmaking plant in Spring Hill, Tenn.

It's official: Tennessee wins Saturn

Eight-month, 36-state scramble completed

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Gov. Lamar Alexander knew the eight-month, 36-state scramble for industrial America's top prize — the General Motors Corp. Saturn car complex — was over when he got a call from GM Chairman Roger Smith.

Smith called the statehouse Monday and said, "Congratulations."

"The largest company in the world, after the biggest and most extensive search that anybody can remember, is putting in Tennessee the largest one-time investment in American history," Alexander said, beaming.

The official announcement, printed on General Motors stationery and given to reporters at a meeting room near the statehouse, was anticlimactic. The U.S. senators from Tennessee, both Democrats, announced last week that Spring Hill, 30 miles south of here, was the choice.

The jubilant Republican governor joined other state officials at a news conference, where they were photographed in front of a blue banner that read, "Tennesee Welcomes Saturn."

The show was Tennessee's alone. GM officials, who called the selection of Spring Hill tentative, didn't take part, saying they would meet with reporters here today.

Alexander said even he wasn't sure what drew to GM to Spring Hill, population 1,100, but said there was no doubt the state had landed the plant and that GM didn't call the decision final because no negotiations had been held with state, local and utility officials on a long list of items.

Saturn Corp. President William Hoglund, in a statement, identified those items as roads, sewers, education and training for employees, environmental matters and the cost of taxes, water, electricity and natural gas.

"They'll tell us their needs," Alexander said. "We'll try to meet them. We have no doubt that we can."

Talks with officials of Saturn Corp. begin on Wednesday, he said.

Five years ago, Japan's Nissan Motor Co. Ltd. decided to build pickup trucks in Smyrna, southeast of Nashville. Last spring, Nissan began building Sentra subcompact cars there as well.

"In the Nissan case, we spent a long time negotiating with them before the decision was announced," Alexander said. "In this case, Saturn has made a tentative decision. We've had no negotiations. We've made no commitments. We've offered them nothing except an environment in which to build the highest quality car at the lowest possible cost."

Alexander wasn't one of the two dozen governors who went to Detroit to make a pitch for the Saturn plant. He said Smith told him that personal visits weren't necessary, that GM was looking for information.

"We spent a lot of time every week for the last six months providing the facts to the computers," he said.

Saturn will provide 6,000 jobs directly and could create as many as 20,000 jobs in related industries. GM has committed $5 billion to the project, aimed at beating the Japanese in the manufacture of subcompact cars.

Along with the Spring Hill announcement came the disclosure, also expected, that Saturn's headquarters, providing 1,200 engineering-related jobs, would be in surburban Detroit.

Hoglund said GM had sought to avoid a bidding war for Saturn and that details of the more than 1,000 Saturn site proposals from around the country wouldn't be discussed.

Former bank president charged in indictment

ABILENE, Texas (AP) — A former vice president of Abilene National Bank has been charged in a 28-count federal indictment of alleged embezzlement, false entry and income tax violations, authorities said.

Craig H. Thomson was accused in a 30-page indictment Monday of making loans totaling $225,650 and accepting kickbacks of $105,900, in 1980 and 1981 at ANB.

Thomson's attorney, Lynn Ingalsbe, said, "We'll plead not guilty to all counts at the proper time and place and will have no other comment at this time."

Assistant U.S. Attorney Bill Alexander of Dallas said the case is separate from, but similar to, indictments against three other former ANB officers — Don Earney, James L. Kington and Eddie Dunn.

Alexander said the bank embezzlement trial of Earney and Kington has been postponed to Oct. 22. It had been set for trial on Aug. 5 in Abilene federal court.

"The investigation is continuing," Alexander said. The prosecution also plans to pursue indictments against clients of the bank, he said.

Alexander said that Thomson made loans for bank clients, used part of the loan proceeds for pay for stock in ANB, and kept part of the money for himself, the Abilene Reporter-News said.

"You are not supposed to take part of the loan proceeds without advising the (board of) directors," Alexander said.

The indictment charged that Thomson made 13 loans and 13 false entries — a total of 26 counts. The final two counts alleged that he omitted some of the transactions from his income tax returns for the years 1980 and 1981.

Legislative battle over offshore revenues begins

WASHINGTON (AP) — The seven-year, $6 billion battle over offshore oil and natural gas revenues between the federal government and seven coastal states has moved to the halls of Congress.

If they agreed on nothing else, the parties to the dispute did agree in testimony before the House Interior Committee on Monday that Congress should legislate the answer.

"I'm afraid without comprehensive and permanent legislative solution, this issue will remain in litigation for years to come," testified Rep. John Breaux, D-La.

Since 1978, when Congress decided that revenues from shared offshore leases should divided between the federal government and the states in a "fair and equitable" manner, the Interior Department and the states of Alaska, California, Texas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama and Florida have been arguing about what is "fair and equitable." In the meantime, about $6 billion has accumulated in an escrow account.

Louisiana and Texas have sued over the money.

William D. Bettenberg, director of the Minerals Management Service in the Interior Department, testified it is "clear that negotiated agreements under the current law are exceedingly difficult to obtain."

"We hope all parties will joiit together and support a legislative settlement which resolves all existing claims and prevents new disputes from developing," Bettenberg said.

After beginning last year with an offer to the states of 16-2/3 percent of a portion of the revenues from shared offshore lands, the Reagan administration now favors a House Budget Committee recommendation that it give the states 27 percent of a portion of the revenues.

Texas Gov. Mark White, who testified Monday, and the governors of Alaska and California in written statements, said they are sticking with the states' demand for 37.5 percent of the revenues — including royalties on the oil and gas produced, not just rents on the leases and the "bonuses' paid to get a lease.

"The House proposal notably lacks the inclusion of royalties," complained California Gov. George Deukmejian. "Royalties are potentially the largest source of Outer Continental Shelf revenues and would provide funds over a number of years."

"The fair and equitable share for Alaska should be at least 37.5 percent," wrote Alaska Gov. Bill Sheffield.

"I think there's no chance unless we try, and I was certainly dismayed to see reluctance on the part of some of our congressmen to seek that 37½ percent," White said after the hearing.

(Rep. Jack Fields, R-Houston, had testified in favor of the Budget Committee proposal.)

Louisiana Gov. Edwin Edwards wrote the committee that he would favor the 27 percent proposal if royalties were addressed as well.

Marathon pays $20 million to settle charges

WASHINGTON (AP) — Marathon Petroleum Co. has agreed to pay the government $20 million to settle charges that it overpriced oil products from 1973 to 1981, the Energy Department has announced.

Jane Register, an official in the department's Economic Regulatory Administration, said the money will be put into an account to be distributed to victims of the alleged overpricing.

In agreeing to the settlement, she said, Marathon, a major refining company headquartered in Findlay, Ohio, did not admit any violation or non-compliance

Group predicts oil industry mergers to continue in 1980s

By Alan Towbin
Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON – Restructuring of the U.S. oil industry through mergers and acquisitions is expected to continue into the late 1980s, as companies scramble to acquire oil reserves in a weak market, according to a report issued Monday by an energy research group.

"Oil is becoming more like other commodities, subject to continuing price fluctuations. In response, companies are making massive shifts in strategy and investment, away from high-risk and high-cost projects toward 'deintegration' and downsizing,'" said Dr. Daniel Yergin, Cambridge Energy Research Associates president and co-editor of the CERA report.

An oil surplus of about 10 million barrels a day, reduced consumption and slowed worldwide ecomomic growth has increased pressure to lower oil prices. However, oil markets are expected to be stronger in the 1990s, according to the report.

But with lower prices now, companies are weighing the costs of acquisition against those of exploration as they jockey for the best position in the future.

T. Boone Pickins, Jr., chairman of Mesa Petroleum and one of the authors included in the report said, "consolidation and restructuring of the industry is going to happen regardless of attempts to stop it because it is based on forces too powerful to change."

Pickins said the U.S. petroleum industry has money available for drilling but the quality of these prospects is decreasing, and replacing domestic reserves is crucial for the large oil companies because these reserves are the shareholders' primary asset.

Major oil companies began to reassess their ability to replace reserves through exploration, as is usually done, after the so-called Mukluk disaster. That was an exploratory well drilled by a group of large producers at a cost of $1.7 billion off the coast of Alaska. The well turned out to be dry.

After Mukluk, the major producers began to look at acquiring oil reserves simply by buying companies with them, according to Pickins.

"That $1.7 billion dry hole in the Alaskan frontier forced oil companies to look for reserves on Wall Street in an attempt to bring value back to their shareholders," Pickens said.

"This excess ability to process crude, along with the surplus of crude on the market, will simply add to price instability in the future. And until prices stabilize and rise, exploration will not be agressive – regardless of merger and acquisition activity. Economics is depressing oilfield activity, not consolidation within industry," he said.

Pickins defended corporate buyups, saying: "There are tremendous opportunities to make money in the oil and gas industry, not all in historically conventional ways. We feel it is paramount to obtain the best return for our shareholders, and we may operate unconventionally in order to do that."

OIL & GAS REPORT

EXPLORATION HIGHLIGHTS

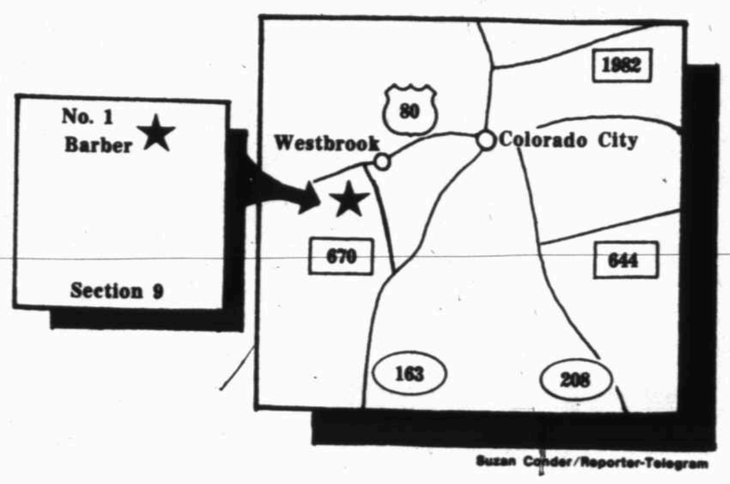

Producer added to Mitchell field

From Staff Reports

NRM PETROLEUM CORP., Midland, has added to Clearfork production in the Dockrey field of Mitchell County with completion of the No. 1 Barber to pump 160 barrels of 34 gravity crude, no gas and 75 barrels of water through Clearfork perforations 2,860 to 3,342 ft. The interval was acidized with 3,325 gallons of 15 percent HCL, 61,000 gallons of gel and 108,000 lbs. 12/20 sand.

Scheduled as a 8,200 ft. wildcat, the well was drilled to a total depth of 8,056 ft. and plugged back to 3,429 ft. with 4 1/2 inch casing set at 3,473 ft.

Formation tops, on ground elevation of 2,184 ft., include the Yates at 588 ft., Seven Rivers at 676, San Andres at 1,393, Clearfork at 2,590, Strawn at 7,574, Mississippian at 7,735, and the Ellenburger at 7,992 ft.Pay was topped at 2,860 ft.

Suzan Conder/Reporter-Telegram

The well potentialed to pump 134 barrels of 32.6 gravity crude, 35.8 Mcfd and no water through perforations 4,926 to 4,936 ft., which had been acidized with 500 gallons of 15 percent acid. Gas-oil ratio is 267:1.

Drilled to 4,980 ft., where 5 1/2 inch casing is set, the operator plugged the well back to 4,961 ft.

On ground elevation of 2,984 ft., formation tops include the Santa Rosa at 1,200 ft., Rustler at 1,953, Yates at 3,069, and the Grayburg at 4,565 ft. Pay was topped at 4,852 ft.

Andrews County field gains ninth producer

The Midland Farms East field of Andrews County gained a ninth Upper Grayburg producer with completion of DAVID & INEZ FASKEN, Midland, No. 1 Fee "AE".

Dallas firm re-opens Runnels County fields

A Runnels County recompletion has yielded a Gardner gas discovery located slightly south of a Gardner Lime strike.

JAMES K. ANDERSON, INC., Dallas, potentialed the No. 2 Parramore, former Palo Pinto 3750 producer in the Chayo field, for a calculated absolute open flow of 1.3 Mmcfd through perforations 4,373 to 4,377 ft. The interval was acidized with 250 gallons and fractured with 2,500 gallons gel and 1,500 lbs. sand.

Originally drilled to 4,535 ft., the well was plugged back to 4,395 ft. with 4 1/2 inch casing set at 4,533 ft.

The well topped the Palo Pinto at 3,741 ft., Capps at 3,974, and Gardner Sand at 4,370 ft. on ground elevation of 1,854 ft.

Location is 650 ft. from south and 1,750 ft. from east lines of Section 47, Block 63, H&TB survey, Abstract 294, five miles northwest of Hatchell.

Anderson also re-opened Palo Pito 3750 production in the Chayo field with recompletion of the No. 3 Parramore, potentialed to pump 10 barrels of 41 gravity crude, and no water through perforations 3,734 go 3,738 ft. The interval was acidized with 2,500 gallons of acid.

The well was plugged back to 3,870 ft. from the Capps 4000 formation.

Formation tops, on ground elevation of 1,822 ft., include the Palo Pinto at 3,727 ft., Capps at 3,964, Gardner Lime at 4,366, Gardner Sand at 4,460 ft.

Location is 1,850 ft. from south and 550 ft. from east lines of Section 47, Block 63, H&TB survey, Abstract 294, five miles northwest of Hatchell.

Houston firm awarded lease

HOUSTON–(SWN)–Roberts Oil & Gas, Inc., of Houston, has announced that it has been awarded the Vermilion 98 Block, offshore Louisiana, as a result of the May 1985 Federal offshore lease sale.

The 5,000-acre tract offsets the major discovery in the Vermilion 97 block that was announced on July 11. Block 98 has the potential for a significant new field extension to the reserves found in the Vermilion 97 block.

The Vermilion 97 well, in which Roberts Oil & Gas has a 10 percent interest before payout and a 14 percent interest after payout, found seven productive zones, only four of which were tested. The four sands tested have a combined flow of 26.5 MMCFPD on a 16/64-inch choke with 107 barrels of condensate per day. The well will be a dual completion.

Roberts Oil & Gas is the operator of the Vermilion 98 block and owns a 35 percent interest. Paragon Petroleum has 35 percent; Seahawk International 15 percent; and Grigsby Petroleum 12-1/2 percent. The balance is owned by individuals.

FTC approves divestiture

WASHINGHTON— (AP) The Federal Trade Commission has approved the proposed divestiture by Texaco of its interest in a pipeline carrying refined petroleum products from Wyoming to Colorado.

Mobil Pipeline Co. of Dallas, a subsidiary of Mobil Oil, is acquiring Texaco's 40 percent share of Wyco Pipeline Co.

The FTC required Texaco to divest itself of its interest in Wyco or another pipeline because of antitrust concerns with the company's takeover of Getty Oil Co. last year. The divestiture was approved Wednesday, according to Susan Ticknor, a FTC spokeswoman.

WILDCATS

TRC DISTRICT 8

Wildcat planned in Crane

ARCO Oil & Gas Co., Midland, has scheduled the No. 2 Hardwicke "N" (No. 1), a 11,050 ft. wildcat in Crane County, located 6.2 miles northeast of Crane.

The well is located 504 ft. from north and 1,985 ft. from east lines of Section 35, Block 30, ULS survey.

Glasscock test staked

Diamond Shamrock Exploration Co. will test in Glasscock County with the drilling of the No. 6-23 Caiverley (No. 2), a 8,100 ft. wildcat 18 miles southeast of Garden City.

The well is staked 2,120 ft. from north and 1,800 ft. from west lines of Section 23, Block 35, T&P survey.

Martin prospect set

A wildcat location has been chosen in Martin County for the drilling of a 11,500 ft. prospect by EP Operating Co., Dallas.

The No. 1 Bailey (No. 3) will be drilled 1,980 ft. from south and 660 ft. from east lines of Section 31, Block 35, T-2-N, T&P survey. The location is 5 miles east of Lenorah.

Loving test scheduled

A Lafayette, Louisiana firm has staked a wildcat in Loving County, to be drilled to a depth of 17,500 ft.

The Stone Petroleum Corp. will drill the No. 1 Barnett (No. 4) 3 miles north of Mentone at a location 1,980 ft. from northwest and southwest lines of Section 4, Block 2, W&NW survey.

Pecos wildcat set

Boot Drilling Co., Inc., San Angelo, has staked the No. B-1 N.M. Mitchell (No. 5), a wildcat in Pecos County, located 24 miles south of Fort Stockton.

Location is 467 ft. from north and 2,186 ft. from west lines of Section 103, Block 3, CCSD&RGNG survey.

Reeves prospects set

Two wildcat locations have been chosen in Reeves County.

The first, a location 5.5 miles east of Orla is the site of a 5,200 ft. explorer to be drilled by Christopher P. Renaud, Midland.

The No. 1 HNG-Camp (No. 6) is staked 1,980 ft. from north and west lines of Section 25, Block 56, T-2, T&P survey.

The second location was chosen by Orla Oil & Gas, Inc., Midland, for a 4,600 ft. wildcat 2 miles north of Orla.

The No. 1 Long Shot (No. 7) will be drilled 467 ft. from south and west lines of Section 12, Block 57, T-2, T&P survey. Ground elevation is 2,847 ft.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

CDs are protected by FSLIC insurance

By BILL DOYLE

Q. The savings and loan association at which I have my money in certificates of deposit is changing from "mutual" form and is offering to sell stock to its depositors. I am not going to buy any of the stock. But I am greatly concerned about this whole thing.

Suppose the S&L goes broke and into bankruptcy. Can it assess its losses against the holders of CDs?

A. No. You have nothing to worry about. Assuming the S&L is a member of the Federal Savings & Loan Insurance Corp., the money you have in CDs and any other accounts there is rock-solid safe up to the FSLIC limit of $100,000 per depositor. If the S&L goes bust, there can be no assessment against you.

Doyle

FSLIC will protect your deposits, whether the S&L is in mutual form or in stock form.

When a S&L is in mutual form it is owned by its "members" — depositors and people who have loans there. By selling stock, the S&L is switching to stock form and will be owned by stockholders.

Even the stockholders won't be liable for the S&L's debts, if that institution goes bankrupt. That's because the stock will be "fully paid and nonassessable."

• • •

Q. The S&L in which I have $180,000 is a member of FSLIC. The money is in a number of CDs. Each one is in my name "in trust for" a different niece or nephew.

The S&L claims that all my money is covered by FSLIC and gave me a pamphlet, which I am enclosing, showing how it is possible to have $100,000 of FSLIC coverage on each of many trust accounts.

I say, because the money is mine until I die, FSLIC insurance is limited to $100,000. I realize, if I am right, people might start withdrawing deposits over $100,000 and cause a panic. Am I right?

A. No. The pamphlet you sent along provides accurate information about how it is possible for a family to have scads of money covered by FSLIC.

For example, a family can have deposits in the husband's name, the wife's name and in joint names. Each is counted as a separate deposit, for a total of $300,000 insurance. Then, the husband can have a trust account for the wife and the wife a trust account for the husband, for another $200,000 insurance.

With children, grandchildren, nieces and nephews, these individual, joint and trust account arrangements can go on and on. The total amount of FSLIC coverage is limited only by your total dollars and how many relatives or other people you want to name in joint and trust accounts.

The same rules apply to banks with Federal Deposit Insurance coverage and credit unions with National Credit Union Administration membership.

• • •

Q. Our teachers' credit union says, "All accounts are fully insured up to $100,000 by the National Credit Union Administration (NCUA) an agency of the federal government."

Does this mean my money is 100 percent safe, as it would be in an account covered by FDIC or FSLIC?

A. Yes. NCUA's National Credit Union Share Insurance Fund provides the same protection as FDIC and FSLIC. All federally chartered credit unions and many state chartered are NCUA members. Some states require credit unions chartered within the state to have NCUA membership.

• • •

Q. I filed for bankruptcy more than 10 years ago. Recently, I applied for loans at two places, including a bank. Both applications asked if I had gone bankrupt within the last 14 years. Are they allowed to do that?

A. Yes, indeed! If the lenders didn't ask that question on the applications you filled out, they almost certainly would learn that you went the bankruptcy route.

Banks and other lenders normally check you out with a credit bureau, which keeps the bankruptcy blemish on your record for a full 14 years.

Bankruptcy doesn't automatically disqualify you from getting a bank loan or other credit. Just makes it more difficult. With the black mark of bankruptcy against you, you'll probably have to put up collateral in order to get a loan.

But, even 14 years after your bankruptcy, you can't be certain of being able to borrow money. A lender can always say "no."

STOCKQUOTE HOTLINE

HOW TO USE STOCKQUOTE HOTLINE

1. Call the StockQuote Hotline number listed below. A computer voice will answer and ask you for the Account Code.
2. Enter the Account Code, then depress the star key (*) on your telephone. The computer will then ask you to enter your Stock Code.
3. Enter the Stock Code for the stock you wish quoted, the computer will quote the Ticker Symbol, Current Price and Net Change from the previous day's close.
4. After the stock is quoted, the computer will ask you to enter another Stock Code. You have two options:

A. You may request the quote for another stock simply by repeating Step 3, or...

B. You may request additional information on the stock just quoted by once more depressing the star key (*), in which case the computer will respond with the Price, Net Change, Volume, High and Low. The computer will then ask you to enter another Stock Code (repeat Step 3).

You may enter up to 10 requests per call.

STOCK CODES

All Stock Codes are based on industry standard Ticker Symbols provided by your broker or available from any Standard & Poor's Stock Ticker Guide. Codes are made up of a series of two-digit numbers, each representing one of the letters in the Ticker Symbol.

To determine the two-digit code for any letter of a Ticker Symbol, remember: The first key to be depressed is always the one on which the letter appears. The second key is always a "1," "2" or "3" indicating that letter's position on its own key (first, second or third position). EXAMPLE: "IBM" = "43 22 61"; "BX" = "22 92." Remember to depress the star key (*) after entering each code.

ADDITIONAL ASSISTANCE

Call the StockQuote customer service number (915) 682-5311 (Monday thru Friday 8 a.m. - 5 p.m.) for additional information or to report any problem with the service.

Wild River Canyon owner says he'll appeal FDIC suit

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The federal lawsuit which Austin architectural engineer and housing developer, T. June Melton III, had brought against the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. (FDIC) is being appealed to the U.S. Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals.

The jury's verdict had favored Melton, but U.S. District Judge Lucius D. Bunton overturned the jury's verdict, found in favor of FDIC and ordered Melton to pay FDIC $1.6 million.

The jury in the lawsuit, tried earlier this year in Midland, had awarded the 42-year-old Melton $10.4 million in damages after the jury determined The First National Bank of Midland had breached a loan agreement, made "fraudulent" representations and imposed "economic duress" on Melton.

Melton had secured financing from the bank in 1980 to develop Wild River Canyon, a water-oriented amusement park in northwest Midland, and to build duplexes in the adjoining Westgate Acres.

The jury's verdict was against the FDIC as receiver and liquidator of the bank, which failed on Oct. 14, 1983.

"It's too bad we had some poor financing," Melton said after the jury found in his favor. At that time, he said the 17-acre amusement park "would be operating today" were it not for the bank's interference. "I was going through hell at First National," he said. "It didn't let up....They tried to shut us down." He said "harassment" by the bank had contributed to the downfall of the park, which predated Water Wonderland, an amusement park between Midland and Odessa.

Though the jury's verdict had indicated a $10.4 million judgment, Melton's attorney, Marshal Dooley of Dallas, said damages possibly would be about $5 million due to duplicity in the verdict form.

Wild River Canyon had closed in 1982, the year Melton had filed for bankruptcy to keep the bank from foreclosing on the park and the adjoining duplex housing development in Westgate Acres.

Initially, Melton had sought $1.5 million from the bank to build the amusement park, but FNB Vice President Bill Gilluly indicated the bank was "not interested in loaning money on a venture as speculative as an amusement park," according to the order issued by Bunton. "And that was why the eventual loan covered the park property and the surrounding commercial property" for commercial and duplex development.

In February 1980, the bank and Melton entered into a loan agreement by which the bank was to loan Melton $400,000 on a development note and almost $3 million on a construction note.

At the time he signed the agreement, Melton testified he believed Gilluly had "lied" to him, that "there was conspiracy" by the bank to "ruin him" and "to run him out of town," Bunton noted.

The amusement park cost $2.25 million to build and not the $1.5 million which Melton had projected.

Contrary to the jury's finding, Bunton ruled that Melton was not placed under "economic duress" by the bank or its president, Charles Fraser. Fraser had told Melton of the proposed loan in January of 1980 that he could "take it or leave it," Bunton noted. Melton took it.

"There was no testimony that plaintiff (Melton) suffered any damages as a result of the alleged fraud, breach of verbal agreement, economic duress or breach of contract," Bunton ruled.

Melton had filed for bankruptcy to prevent the bank from selling Westgate Acres after he had failed to obtain a temporary restraining order to block foreclosure. Melton had defaulted on loan payments to the bank.

The park construction was to be financed by funds raised in the sale of duplexes.

Basin getting Tech nursing school

From Staff Reports

The Permian Basin campus of the Texas Tech University Health Sciences Center School of Nursing has received final approval by the Coordinating Board, Texas College and University System. The final approval was based on documentation of appropriate funding.

Dr. Teddy Langford, dean of the School of Nursing, said, "A three-year federal grant, which includes $166,000 for the first year, has provided us with assurance of financial ability to implement this program. That, coupled with the efforts of local hospitals, has made this program a reality." Local efforts included Midland Memorial Hostpital securing a large donation from an anonymous source. Odessa's Medical Center Hospital provided programmatic funding. The sizeable anonymous donation will be used for student stipends and scholarships, facilities, renovation and other programmatic support.

"We are pleased to meet the need of a group of people who would be otherwise limited in obtaining a bachelor of science in nursing degree," Dr. Langford said.

Ella Herriage, assistant dean of the Permian Basin campus, said "We will have classroom activities in Midland and clinical coursework in Odessa, Midland and other cities." Clinical affiliations for the program will be in a variety of health care agencies in and around the Permian Basin area. Applications are being distributed through the Odessa Regional Academic Center Office. The deadline for application is August 15.

Midland bicyclers join state-wide anti-nuke protest

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Two Midlanders — and possibly up to 12 — are joining a band of bicycling anti-nuke citizens pedaling to the Texas Panhandle to wage a "symbolic civil disobedience" demonstration at the gates of the Pantex Nuclear Weapons Plant 17 miles northeast of Amarillo.

The "disobedience" is designed to commemorate the 40th anniversary of the atomic bombing of Hiroshima and Nagasaki, Japan, in August 1945.

The United States bombed Hiroshima on Aug. 6 and three days later, on Aug. 9, bombed Nagasaki. Japan surrendered to the Allied Forces on Aug. 14, 1945, bringing World War II to conclusion. The blast destroyed 4.7 square miles of Hiroshima and killed 70,000 people. The blast over Nagasaki destroyed 1.8 square miles in heart of that city and killed 40,000.

Pilgrimages to Pantex — the final assembly site for nuclear warheards produced in the United States — began Saturday when a group of about 30 cyclists began their trek from Comanche Peak nuclear power plant at Glen Rose in Central Texas. They are to be joined by several hundred pacifists and other demonstrators at the gates to the Pantex plant.

Among Midlanders making the trip will be Michael "Mike" Gray, 33, and Kathryn Bowers, 40. They said they expect 10 to 12 other Midlanders to join them.

Purpose of the pilgrimage is to raise public consciousness of the stockpiles of nuclear warheads, the threat of nuclear war, and the connection between the nuclear arms and nuclear-power plants and nuclear waste, said Gray.

The Midland area cyclists are to embark on their trip at 9 a.m. Wednesday from the George Mahon Federal Building and Courthouse in downtown Midland.

"They (power companies) have promised us cheap, safe electricity" through nuclear energy, Gray said. "It's anything but cheap and safe....It's all part of the nuclear-fuel cycle. The plants themselves are unsafe. The waste generated by the plants is part of the problem."

Gray advocated a reduction of nuclear arms and, ideally, he said, a worldwide ban on nuclear arms.

"And even if we don't eliminate nuclear arms," he said, "can't we just stop building them? Isn't 30,000 (warheads) enough? What constitutes deterrence? Where are we going to quit?"

He noted that Midland area industries, including Texas Instruments and OIME, have military contracts.

"Private industry is just like a bureaucracy," he said. "It's got itself going, and it's not going to let itself quit." He said Texas rapidly is becoming a nuclear-arms manufacturing and storage site.

Russia has offered to negotiate an arms-reduction plan, "and we (the United States) won't," he contended. "If we can risk nuclear war, can't we risk disarmament?"

Ms. Bowers said her "personal reasons" for participating in the Pantex demonstration is make "some kind of powerful statement" about the threats of nuclear war, the dangers of radioactivity and the "reckless way in which all phases of nuclear energy are being handled, especially in the arms race."

Notables to be at the Pantex "peace camp" include Daniel Ellsberg, political activist; John Stockwell, former Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) official; the Rev. George Zabelka, former military chaplain to the crew of the Enola Gay, the B-29 Superfortress which dropped the atomic bomb over Hiroshima; Ed Asner, actor; Gloria Emerson, Princeton University professor; Bishop Leroy Matthiesen of the Roman Catholic Church; Fred Millar, radioactive waste expert with the Environmental Protection Institute; James Douglass of Ground Zero, and survivors of the atomic bombings in Japan.

The Pantex Pilgrimage 1985 is sponsored by the Red River Peace Network, a faith-based network of groups from Texas, Oklahoma and New Mexico. It is affiliated with the Fellowship of Reconciliation and War Resisters League.

Vandals cause damage at Midland's Lamplighter Inn

From Staff Reports

Vandals caused extensive damage to several windows at the Lamplighter Inn, 3005 W. Wall, according to reports from the Midland Police Department.

Damage to five glass panes and several floor tiles totaled $3,500, police said. The incident, which occurred sometime between 2:30 p.m. Friday and 5 p.m. Monday, was reported Monday.

Several residential thefts were reported also.

A satellite dish, valued at $988, was stolen from property belonging to Sammie Broach, 100 S. Carver, sometime between midnight and 3 a.m. today, police said.

A house at 709 S. Weatherford was burglarized between 7:40 a.m. and 6:10 p.m. Monday, said reports.

Stacy W. Vines reported that a shotgun, silver bracelet, cash and a rifle, valued at $560, was stolen.

Two business thefts were reported, as well.

S & H Southwest Investment Inc. told police that sometime between 3 p.m. July 4 and 3 p.m. Thursday, a refrigerator/freezer and an air conditioning unit, total value of $300, were removed from the premises at 240½ College.

M.G.B. Joint Venture, 4411 Crockett, reported the theft of several mainline breaker boxes and switches and electrical plugs and switches to police Monday.

The items were believed stolen sometime between 3 p.m. Thursday and 8 p.m. Monday.

Two bicycles were reported stolen from outside Alamo YMCA late Monday afternoon, said reports.

The bikes, belonging to Cody Lee Bartlett, 3403 Humble, were taken between 4:25 p.m. and 4:30 p.m. and were valued at $500.

The Midland County Sheriff's office reported an auto burglary which resulted in the theft of a cassette stereo.

Rafael Hernandez, County Village Mobile Home Park, Space 59, told officers that sometime between Thursday and Monday, a cassette stereo was removed from his pickup truck, which was left unlocked.

Fingerprints were taken, resports said, and a neighbor reported seeing several area youths near the truck within that time period.

Doll doctor mends 'babies' with love

BEAUMONT (AP) — When Pam Kennaugh comes to town, she dons her white lab coat, pulls out her doctor's bag and offers free check-ups to all comers.

In her bag, instead of a stethoscope, hypodermic needles and medicine bottles, Kennaugh carries hog-ring pliers, elastic cord and $10-an-ounce glue. At her improvised clinic, doll owners line up with their "babies" to ask anxious questions such as: "Is she worth fixing?"

As a doll doctor, Mrs. Kennaugh feels qualified to answer.

Often, this experienced 24-year-old must preface the answer with another question: "Are you keeping it or selling it?"

About 75 percent of her customers want to keep the doll for sentimental reasons. The other 25 percent are professional collectors.

"It makes a difference," she said. "If the doll is to be handed down, it may have more sentimental value than it will ever have a price tag."

Repairing 49 fire-damaged dolls is the biggest job she's tackled so far. That project will cost the owner $2,000.

Mrs. Kennaugh, who prides herself on what she terms "invisible restoration," studies her patients with a practiced eye.

"This one has been loved to death. Its nose and mouth have been kissed off," she said looking closely at the features of a very needy Effanbee baby doll.

Then she begins listing aloud in quick succession all of the things she will have to do to restore it. Nearby is the doll's "twin sister." Looking almost as good as new, the twin is ready for release to its owner.

The two Effanbee babies are a perfect example of dolls with sentimental value, Mrs. Kennaugh said. Their owners are twin sisters who received the dolls together one Chrismas back in the 1930s. Now both sisters have teen-age daughters they want to inherit the dolls.

Doll doctor Pam Kennaugh sits at an improvised clinic for broken dolls in Beaumont, Texas.

AP Laserphoto

Clients such as the twin sisters send their dolls to Mrs. Kennaugh fron all over the country. Mrs. Kennaugh has met most of her clients personally at one of the more than 50 dolls shows she has done.

"If Tommy (her husband) gets transferred to Timbuktu, I'd still have a business by mail," Mrs. Kennaugh said.

The Denver-based doll doctor is the former Pam Lee, Miss Port Arthur of 1979. She also worked for her mother, Patsy McDonald, at Patsy's Bridals and Formals in Groves.

Mrs. McDonald said she always has known her younger daughter would grow up to do something with her hands.

Early dry goods store was heart of Midland retail business

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Assistant City Editor

A handmade leather saddle and a Stetson hat were a cowboy's most prized possessions. And Midland in the early 1900s was the place to come in West Texas to find both.

Mrs. T.R. Wilson moved to Midland as a child with her family about 1908. Her father, Robert Dennis Heatly, owned a saddle shop and went into ranching. But she never strayed from the business side of life. She married Tom Wilson, who operated dry goods stores all his working life.

Like most Midlanders of that day, he had migrated here, starting in Pilot Point.

Coming from a family of five boys being raised alone by his mother after his father died, Wilson bought a railroad ticket to take him as far west as he could go. He stopped in Big Spring and worked a while in a dry goods store there, then came on to Midland, according to Mrs. Wilson.

Eventually, he went into business with Addison Wadley to form the Wadley-Wilson Dry Goods Store. The two men proegressed to have three stores — one each in Midland, Odessa and Pecos. The partnership dissolved and Wilson opened his own store in Midland, sold it to his sons, who operated it fefore selling out in 1967.

Midland was a small town, but a busy one, in those early years. Mrs. Wilson remembers most of the business section being located on Baird Street, and the three fires that destroyed much of Midland each time — in 1908, 1909 and 1910. There was no water system designed for fighting fires, she said.

But after each fire Midland rebuilt, and sometimes the stores changed hands.

Paintings of two downtown street scenes hanging in her house show an early Midland. Dirt streets. Wooden buildings. A water well in the middle of Baird Street. Her father's saddle shop. Open prairie in the background and maybe a house with a windmill.

"Midland has always been a very progressive little town," she said. "People would phone from as far away as Tatum, N.M., for windmill parts. It was rumored then there were 25 millionaire families in 1910 here. I know there were some very wealthy families here."

With the railroad connections, Midland also was central point for shipping goods in and out of West Texas. At first, it was the point for shipping out cattle and cotton. Later, Midland got the tank farm that serves as a collection point.

And from its beginnings, Midland was the commercial center for the Permian Basin with people driving wagons over from New Mexico to stock up goods for the ranches.

Before telephone lines were installed, people had to hitch up the wagons and spend several days on the road to get their goods. Later, they would phone and have whatever was needed shipped to them. The item was put on the charge list, which would be paid the next time that customer came to town.

"Tom Linebery would send us a postcard that read, 'Send me some longhandles,' and he'd get them," recalled Mrs. Wilson's son, Robert.

"You'd just charge it to them and they'd come in and pay you or mail a check," said Mrs. Wilson. "People would phone from as far away as Tatum, N.M., for windmill parts."

Sandstorms and high winds were a big problem in those days. "The sand was very, very deep," she said. "The sandhills would shift during a sandstorm. You'd be on a road coming into town and then when you went back, it'd be covered over with a sandhill. The sandstorms were worse back then. I remember one old sandstorm that was so dark the chickens went to roost." That was the time the Heatly family was living across the street from where the Wilco Building is now and near the O.B. Holt house.

"Mrs. Holt called over to my mother to batten down everything. We were greenhorns. It was a terrifying thing to someone not used to it," she said.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

CDs are protected by FSLIC insurance

By BILL DOYLE

Q. The savings and loan association at which I have my money in certificates of deposit is changing from "mutual" form and is offering to sell stock to its depositors. I am not going to buy any of the stock. But I am greatly concerned about this whole thing.

Suppose the S&L goes broke and into bankruptcy. Can it assess its losses against the holders of CDs?

Doyle

A. No. You have nothing to worry about. Assuming the S&L is a member of the Federal Savings & Loan Insurance Corp., the money you have in CDs and any other accounts there is rock-solid safe up to the FSLIC limit of $100,000 per depositor. If the S&L goes bust, there can be no assessment against you.

FSLIC will protect your deposits, whether the S&L is in mutual form or in stock form.

When a S&L is in mutual form it is owned by its "members" — depositors and people who have loans there. By selling stock, the S&L is switching to stock form and will be owned by stockholders.

Even the stockholders won't be liable for the S&L's debts, if that institution goes bankrupt. That's because the stock will be "fully paid and nonassessable."

Q. The S&L in which I have $180,000 is a member of FSLIC. The money is in a number of CDs. Each one is in my name "in trust for" a different niece or nephew.

The S&L claims that all my money is covered by FSLIC and gave me a pamphlet, which I am enclosing, showing how it is possible to have $100,000 of FSLIC coverage on each of many trust accounts.

I say, because the money is mine until I die, FSLIC insurance is limited to $100,000. I realize, if I am right, people might start withdrawing deposits over $100,000 and cause a panic. Am I right?

A. No. The pamphlet you sent along provides accurate information about how it is possible for a family to have scads of money covered by FSLIC.

For example, a family can have deposits in the husband's name, the wife's name and in joint names. Each is counted as a separate deposit, for a total of $300,000 insurance. Then, the husband can have a trust account for the wife and the wife a trust account for the husband, for another $200,000 insurance.

With children, grandchildren, nieces and nephews, these individual, joint and trust account arrangements can go on and on. The total amount of FSLIC coverage is limited only by your total dollars and how many relatives or other people you want to name in joint and trust accounts.

The same rules apply to banks with Federal Deposit Insurance coverage and credit unions with National Credit Union Administration membership.

• • •

Q. Our teachers' credit union says, "All accounts are fully insured up to $100,000 by the National Credit Union Administration (NCUA) an agency of the federal government."

Does this mean my money is 100 percent safe, as it would be in an account covered by FDIC or FSLIC?

A. Yes. NCUA's National Credit Union Share Insurance Fund provides the same protection as FDIC and FSLIC. All federally chartered credit unions and many state chartered are NCUA members. Some states require credit unions chartered within the state to have NCUA membership.

• • •

Q. I filed for bankruptcy more than 10 years ago. Recently, I applied for loans at two places, including a bank. Both applications asked if I had gone bankrupt within the last 14 years. Are they allowed to do that?

A. Yes, indeed! If the lenders didn't ask that question on the applications you filled out, they almost certainly would learn that you went the bankruptcy route.

Banks and other lenders normally check you out with a credit bureau, which keeps the bankruptcy blemish on your record for a full 14 years.

Bankruptcy doesn't automatically disqualify you from getting a bank loan or other credit. Just makes it more difficult. With the black mark of bankruptcy against you, you'll probably have to put up collateral in order to get a loan.

But, even 14 years after your bankruptcy, you can't be certain of being able to borrow money. A lender can always say "no."

STOCKQUOTE HOTLINE℠

HOW TO USE STOCKQUOTE HOTLINE

1. Call the StockQuote Hotline number listed below. A computer voice will answer and ask you for the Account Code.
2. Enter the Account Code, then depress the star key (*) on your telephone. The computer will then ask you to enter your Stock Code.
3. Enter the Stock Code for the stock you wish quoted, the computer will quote the Ticker Symbol, Current Price and Net Change from the previous day's close.
4. After the stock is quoted, the computer will ask you to enter another Stock Code. You have two options:

A. You may request the quote for another stock simply by repeating Step 3, or...
B. You may request additional information on the stock just quoted by once more depressing the star key (*), in which case the computer will respond with the Price, Net Change, Volume, High and Low. The computer will then ask you to enter another Stock Code (repeat Step 3).

You may enter up to 10 requests per call.

STOCK CODES

All Stock Codes are based on industry standard Ticker Symbols provided by your broker or available from any Standard & Poor's Stock Ticker Guide. Codes are made up of a series of two-digit numbers, each representing one of the letters in the Ticker Symbol.

To determine the two-digit code for any letter of a Ticker Symbol, remember: The first key to be depressed is always the one on which the letter appears. The second key is always a "1," "2" or "3" indicating that letter's position on its own key (first, second or third position). EXAMPLE: "IBM" = "43 22 61"; "BX" = "22 92." Remember to depress the star key (*) after entering each code.

ADDITIONAL ASSISTANCE

Call the StockQuote customer service number (915) 682-5311 (Monday thru Friday 8 a.m. - 5 p.m.) for additional information or to report any problem with the service.

Wild River Canyon owner says he'll appeal FDIC suit

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The federal lawsuit which Austin architectural engineer and housing developer, T. June Melton III, had brought against the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. (FDIC) is being appealed to the U.S. Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals.

The jury's verdict had favored Melton, but U.S. District Judge Lucius D. Bunton overturned the jury's verdict, found in favor of FDIC and ordered Melton to pay FDIC $1.6 million.

The jury in the lawsuit, tried earlier this year in Midland, had awarded the 42-year-old Melton $10.4 million in damages after the jury determined The First National Bank of Midland had breached a loan agreement, made "fraudulent" representations and imposed "economic duress" on Melton.

Melton had secured financing from the bank in 1980 to develop Wild River Canyon, a water-oriented amusement park in northwest Midland, and to build duplexes in the adjoining Westgate Acres.

The jury's verdict was against the FDIC as receiver and liquidator of the bank, which failed on Oct. 14, 1983.

"It's too bad we had some poor financing," Melton said after the jury found in his favor. At that time, he said the 17-acre amusement park "would be operating today" were it not for the bank's interference. "I was going through hell at First National," he said. "It didn't let up....They tried to shut us down." He said "harassment" by the bank had contributed to the downfall of the park, which predated Water Wonderland, an amusement park between Midland and Odessa.

Though the jury's verdict had indicated a $10.4 million judgment, Melton's attorney, Marshal Dooley of Dallas, said damages possibly would be about $5 million due to duplicity in the verdict form.

Wild River Canyon had closed in 1982, the year Melton had filed for bankruptcy to keep the bank from foreclosing on the park and the adjoining duplex housing development in Westgate Acres.

Initially, Melton had sought $1.5 million from the bank to build the amusement park, but FNB Vice President Bill Gilluly indicated the bank was "not interested in loaning money on a venture as speculative as an amusement park," according to the order issued by Bunton. "And that was why the eventual loan covered the park property and the surrounding commercial property" for commercial and duplex development.

In February 1980, the bank and Melton entered into a loan agreement by which the bank was to loan Melton $400,000 on a development note and almost $3 million on a construction note.

At the time he signed the agreement, Melton testified he believed Gilluly had "lied" to him, that "there was conspiracy" by the bank to "ruin him" and "to run him out of town," Bunton noted.

The amusement park cost $2.25 million to build and not the $1.5 million which Melton had projected.

Contrary to the jury's finding, Bunton ruled that Melton was not placed under "economic duress" by the bank or its president, Charles Fraser. Fraser had told Melton of the proposed loan in January of 1980 that he could "take it or leave it," Bunton noted. Melton took it.

"There was no testimony that plaintiff (Melton) suffered any damages as a result of the alleged fraud, breach of verbal agreement, economic duress or breach of contract," Bunton ruled.

Melton had filed for bankruptcy to prevent the bank from selling Westgate Acres after he had failed to obtain a temporary restraining order to block foreclosure. Melton had defaulted on loan payments to the bank.

The park construction was to be financed by funds raised in the sale of duplexes.

Basin getting Tech nursing school

From Staff Reports

The Permian Basin campus of the Texas Tech University Health Sciences Center School of Nursing has received final approval by the Coordinating Board, Texas College and University System. The final approval was based on documentation of appropriate funding.

Dr. Teddy Langford, dean of the School of Nursing, said, "A three-year federal grant, which includes $166,000 for the first year, has provided us with assurance of financial ability to implement this program. That, coupled with the efforts of local hospitals, has made this program a reality." Local efforts included Midland Memorial Hostpital securing a large donation from an anonymous source. Odessa's Medical Center Hospital provided programmatic funding. The sizeable anonymous donation will be used for student stipends and scholarships, facilities, renovation and other programmatic support.

"We are pleased to meet the need of a group of people who would be otherwise limited in obtaining a bachelor of science in nursing degree," Dr. Langford said.

Ella Herriage, assistant dean of the Permian Basin campus, said "We will have classroom activities in Midland and clinical coursework in Odessa, Midland and other cities." Clinical affiliations for the program will be in a variety of health care agencies in and around the Permian Basin area. Applications are being distributed through the Odessa Regional Academic Center Office. The deadline for application is August 15.

Midland bicyclers join state-wide anti-nuke protest

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Two Midlanders — and possibly up to 12 — are joining a band of bicycling anti-nuke citizens pedaling to the Texas Panhandle to wage a "symbolic civil disobedience" demonstration at the gates of the Pantex Nuclear Weapons Plant 17 miles northeast of Amarillo.

The "disobedience" is designed to commemorate the 40th anniversary of the atomic bombing of Hiroshima and Nagasaki, Japan, in August 1945.

The United States bombed Hiroshima on Aug. 6 and three days later, on Aug. 9, bombed Nagasaki. Japan surrendered to the Allied Forces on Aug. 14, 1945, bringing World War II to conclusion. The blast destroyed 4.7 square miles of Hiroshima and killed 70,000 people. The blast over Nagasaki destroyed 1.8 square miles in heart of that city and killed 40,000.

Pilgrimages to Pantex — the final assembly site for nuclear warheards produced in the United States — began Saturday when a group of about 30 cyclists began their trek from Comanche Peak nuclear power plant at Glen Rose in Central Texas. They are to be joined by several hundred pacifists and other demonstrators at the gates to the Pantex plant.

Among Midlanders making the trip will be Michael "Mike" Gray, 33, and Kathryn Bowers, 40. They said they expect 10 to 12 other Midlanders to join them.

Purpose of the pilgrimage is to raise public consciousness of the stockpiles of nuclear warheads, the threat of nuclear war, and the connection between the nuclear arms and nuclear-power plants and nuclear waste, said Gray.

The Midland area cyclists are to embark on their trip at 9 a.m. Wednesday from the George Mahon Federal Building and Courthouse in downtown Midland.

"They (power companies) have promised us cheap, safe electricity" through nuclear energy, Gray said. "It's anything but cheap and safe....It's all part of the nuclear-fuel cycle. The plants themselves are unsafe. The waste generated by the plants is part of the problem."

Gray advocated a reduction of nuclear arms and, ideally, he said, a worldwide ban on nuclear arms.

"And even if we don't eliminate nuclear arms," he said, "can't we just stop building them? Isn't 30,000 (warheads) enough? What constitutes deterrence? Where are we going to quit?"

He noted that Midland area industries, including Texas Instruments and OIME, have military contracts.

"Private industry is just like a bureaucracy," he said. "It's got itself going, and it's not going to let itself quit." He said Texas rapidly is becoming a nuclear-arms manufacturing and storage site.

Russia has offered to negotiate an arms-reduction plan, "and we (the United States) won't," he contended. "If we can risk nuclear war, can't we risk disarmament?"

Ms. Bowers said her "personal reasons" for participating in the Pantex demonstration is make "some kind of powerful statement" about the threats of nuclear war, the dangers of radioactivity and the "reckless way in which all phases of nuclear energy are being handled, especially in the arms race."

Notables to be at the Pantex "peace camp" include Daniel Ellsberg, political activist; John Stockwell, former Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) official; the Rev. George Zabelka, former military chaplain to the crew of the Enola Gay, the B-29 Superfortress which dropped the atomic bomb over Hiroshima; Ed Asner, actor; Gloria Emerson, Princeton University professor; Bishop Leroy Matthiesen of the Roman Catholic Church; Fred Millar, radioactive waste expert with the Environmental Protection Institute; James Douglass of Ground Zero, and survivors of the atomic bombings in Japan.

The Pantex Pilgrimage 1985 is sponsored by the Red River Peace Network, a faith-based network of groups from Texas, Oklahoma and New Mexico. It is affiliated with the Fellowship of Reconciliation and War Resisters League.

Vandals cause damage at Midland's Lamplighter Inn

From Staff Reports

Vandals caused extensive damage to several windows at the Lamplighter Inn, 3005 W. Wall, according to reports from the Midland Police Department.

Damage to five glass panes and several floor tiles totaled $3,500, police said. The incident, which occurred sometime between 2:30 p.m. Friday and 5 p.m. Monday, was reported Monday.

Several residential thefts were reported also.

A satellite dish, valued at $988, was stolen from property belonging to Sammie Broach, 100 S. Carver, sometime between midnight and 3 a.m. today, police said.

A house at 709 S. Weatherford was burglarized between 7:40 a.m. and 6:10 p.m. Monday, said reports.

Stacy W. Vines reported that a shotgun, silver bracelet, cash and a rifle, valued at $560, was stolen.

Two business thefts were reported, as well.

S & H Southwest Investment Inc. told police that sometime between 3 p.m. July 4 and 3 p.m. Thursday, a refrigerator/freezer and an air conditioning unit, total value of $300, were removed from the premises at 240½ College.

M.G.B. Joint Venture, 4411 Crockett, reported the theft of several mainline breaker boxes and switches and electrical plugs and switches to police Monday.

The items were believed stolen sometime between 3 p.m. Thursday and 8 p.m. Monday.

Two bicycles were reported stolen from outside Alamo YMCA late Monday afternoon, said reports.

The bikes, belonging to Cody Lee Bartlett, 3403 Humble, were taken between 4:25 p.m. and 4:30 p.m. and were valued at $500.

The Midland County Sheriff's office reported an auto burglary which resulted in the theft of a cassette stereo.

Rafael Hernandez, County Village Mobile Home Park, Space 59, told officers that sometime between Thursday and Monday, a cassette stereo was removed from his pickup truck, which was left unlocked.

Fingerprints were taken, resports said, and a neighbor reported seeing several area youths near the truck within that time period.

Doll doctor mends 'babies' with love

BEAUMONT (AP) — When Pam Kennaugh comes to town, she dons her white lab coat, pulls out her doctor's bag and offers free check-ups to all comers.

In her bag, instead of a stethoscope, hypodermic needles and medicine bottles, Kennaugh carries hog-ring pliers, elastic cord and $10-an-ounce glue. At her improvised clinic, doll owners line up with their "babies" to ask anxious questions such as: "Is she worth fixing?"

As a doll doctor, Mrs. Kennaugh feels qualified to answer.

Often, this experienced 24-year-old must preface the answer with another question: "Are you keeping it or selling it?"

About 75 percent of her customers want to keep the doll for sentimental reasons. The other 25 percent are professional collectors.

"It makes a difference," she said. "If the doll is to be handed down, it may have more sentimental value than it will ever have a price tag."

Repairing 49 fire-damaged dolls is the biggest job she's tackled so far. That project will cost the owner $2,000.

Mrs. Kennaugh, who prides herself on what she terms "invisible restoration," studies her patients with a practiced eye.

"This one has been loved to death. Its nose and mouth have been kissed off," she said looking closely at the features of a very needy Effanbee baby doll.

Then she begins listing aloud in quick succession all of the things she will have to do to restore it. Nearby is the doll's "twin sister." Looking almost as good as new, the twin is ready for release to its owner.

The two Effanbee babies are a perfect example of dolls with sentimental value, Mrs. Kennaugh said. Their owners are twin sisters who received the dolls together one Chrismas back in the 1930s. Now both sisters have teen-age daughters they want to inherit the dolls.

Doll doctor Pam Kennaugh sits at an improvised clinic for broken dolls in Beaumont, Texas.

Clients such as the twin sisters send their dolls to Mrs. Kennaugh fron all over the country. Mrs. Kennaugh has met most of her clients personally at one of the more than 50 dolls shows she has done.

"If Tommy (her husband) gets transferred to Timbuktu, I'd still have a business by mail," Mrs. Kennaugh said.

The Denver-based doll doctor is the former Pam Lee, Miss Port Arthur of 1979. She also worked for her mother, Patsy McDonald, at Patsy's Bridals and Formals in Groves.

Mrs. McDonald said she always has known her younger daughter would grow up to do something with her hands.

Early dry goods store was heart of Midland retail business

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Assistant City Editor

A handmade leather saddle and a Stetson hat were a cowboy's most prized possessions. And Midland in the early 1900s was the place to come in West Texas to find both.

Mrs. T.R. Wilson moved to Midland as a child with her family about 1908. Her father, Robert Dennis Heatly, owned a saddle shop and went into ranching. But she never strayed from the business side of life. She married Tom Wilson, who operated dry goods stores all his working life.

Like most Midlanders of that day, he had migrated here, starting in Pilot Point.

Coming from a family of five boys being raised alone by his mother after his father died, Wilson bought a railroad ticket to take him as far west as he could go. He stopped in Big Spring and worked a while in a dry goods store there, then came on to Midland, according to Mrs. Wilson.

Eventually, he went into business with Addison Wadley to form the Wadley-Wilson Dry Goods Store. The two men proegressed to have three stores — one each in Midland, Odessa and Pecos. The partnership dissolved and Wilson opened his own store in Midland, sold it to his sons, who operated it fefore selling out in 1967.

Midland was a small town, but a busy one, in those early years. Mrs. Wilson remembers most of the business section being located on Baird Street, and the three fires that destroyed much of Midland each time — in 1908, 1909 and 1910. There was no water system designed for fighting fires, she said.

But after each fire Midland rebuilt, and sometimes the stores changed hands.

Paintings of two downtown street scenes hanging in her house show an early Midland. Dirt streets. Wooden buildings. A water well in the middle of Baird Street. Her father's saddle shop. Open prairie in the background and maybe a house with a windmill.

"Midland has always been a very progressive little town," she said. "People would phone from as far away as Tatum, N.M., for windmill parts. It was rumored then there were 25 millionaire families in 1910 here. I know there were some very wealthy families here."

With the railroad connections, Midland also was central point for shipping goods in and out of West Texas. At first, it was the point for shipping out cattle and cotton. Later, Midland got the tank farm that serves as a collection point.

And from its beginnings, Midland was the commercial center for the Permian Basin with people driving wagons over from New Mexico to stock up goods for the ranches.

Before telephone lines were installed, people had to hitch up the wagons and spend several days on the road to get their goods. Later, they would phone and have whatever was needed shipped to them. The item was put on the charge list, which would be paid the next time that customer came to town.

"Tom Linebery would send us a postcard that read, 'Send me some longhandles,' and he'd get them," recalled Mrs. Wilson's son, Robert.

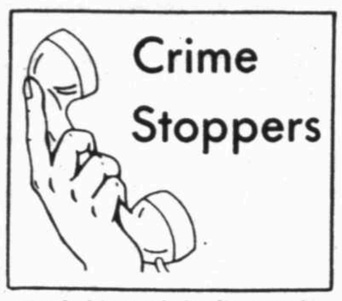

"You'd just charge it to them and they'd come in and pay you or mail a check," said Mrs. Wilson. "People would phone from as far away as Tatum, N.M., for windmill parts."

Sandstorms and high winds were a big problem in those days. "The sand was very, very deep," she said. "The sandhills would shift during a sandstorm. You'd be on a road coming into town and then when you went back, it'd be covered over with a sandhill. The sandstorms were worse back then. I remember one old sandstorm that was so dark the chickens went to roost." That was the time the Heatly family was living across the street from where the Wilco Building is now and near the O.B. Holt house.

"Mrs. Holt called over to my mother to batten down everything. We were greenhorns. It was a terrifying thing to someone not used to it," she said.

Crime Stoppers seeks suspect in burglaries

This week Crime Stoppers is focusing on residential burglaries in the west side of Midland.

About 5:30 p.m. July 19, police responding to an alarm at 1600 N. Graham found a broken window in a bedroom on the south side of the home. The victim, Mrs. James Fowler, reported several jewelry pieces missing.

Several other burglaries have occurred in the same area, and police believe the same person may be involved. The suspect, a Mexican male about 18 years old, five feet 10 inches tall, weighing about 145 pounds, was seen riding a brown bicycle south toward 15th Street. He was apparently wearing a tan muscle shirt, khaki pants and a baseball cap.

Crime Stoppers will pay $1,000 cash for any information received this week leading to the arrest and indictment of the person responsible for this crime. Crime Stoppers will also pay cash rewards for information on other felony crimes. Call 694-TIPS in Midland or 333-TIPS in Odessa. Callers need not reveal their names to receive a reward.

Bonds to be set on 99 Ector indictments

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Bonds were to be set this morning on 99 indictments handed down Monday by the Ector County grand jury which met for the first time in more than a month.

The district attorney's office submitted a total of 101 cases, with grand jurors returning no bills in two of the cases, according to a spokesperson in the district clerk's office.

Two of the criminal cases submitted to the grand jury sought reindictment of two men on charges of murder in the October 1984 stabbing death of 39-year-old Gayle Stifflemire, owner of the Tally Ho Lounge, 3114 W. 2nd Street.

Donny Lee Bretz, 25, and his 19-year-old stepbrother, Gary Lynn Waqua, were first indicted Jan. 10 by the grand jury on charges of capital murder.

The capital murder indictments accused Bretz and Waqua of stabbing Ms. Stifflemire to death and robbing her of about $300.

A number of the criminal cases submitted to the grand jury Monday had exceeded the 120 days required by the Texas Speedy Trial Act, but District Attorney Eric Augesen said last Friday he did not expect to dismiss any of the cases.

According to Augesen, a section of the law relating to the Speedy Trial Act indicates the 120 period allowed in which to bring a criminal suspect to trial can be waived if the delay involves extenuating circumstances.

Augesen contends circumstances prevailed that prevented grand jurors from meeting.

DEATHS

Ira Carmack

Services for Ira Carmack, 71, of Midland, will be at 9:30 a.m. Thursday in Ellis Funeral Home chapel, with the Rev. Wilma McCurdy of Church of God officiating. Burial will be in Sunset Memorial Gardens in Odessa.

Open, closed campus hearing set

From Staff Reports

A public hearing to air views on "closed" or "open" campuses at Midland High School and Robert E. Lee High School will be held at 7 p.m. today in the auditorium of Midland High School at 906 W. Illinois Ave.

The Midland Independent School District board of trustees will conduct the hearing, which will be broadcast live via Radio Station KCRS beginning at 7 p.m.

The MISD trustees are considering benefits and liabilities of closing or leaving open the campuses during the noon hour. A committee of students, parents, teachers, administrators and trustees has made a study of the issue.

Statue of Virgin Mary draws crowd of 15,000 in San Antonio

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A statue of the Virgin Mary that attracted 300,000 people to a small church last year has drawn much smaller crowds for a return visit this year, church leaders say.

The tiny statue, known as the Virgen de San Juan de los Lagos, arrived from Jalisco, Mexico, on Friday. Church officials said 15,000 worshippers visited the church this past weekend.

The statue of the Virgin Mary, believed to provide intercessory powers for those seeking miracles, is on a nine-day visit at the San Juan de los Lagos Church.

"Last year was the first for the statue of Our Lady to come here and a lot of people came out of curiosity," said Sister Marie Grazie Smith, a Catholic nun and producer of Catholic Television in San Antonio.

"But this year, her true friends are here — there is more devotion," she said.

The church's pastor, the Rev. Hugo Vanden Bussche, said bigger crowds may still appear during the icon's nine-day visit.

The statue is a replica of a much-older icon that has been associated with many miracles since 1623, the year a dead 6-year-old girl supposedly was brought back to life in San Juan Mezquititlan, in Jalisco after relatives prayed before the icon.

Maria Cobos of Dallas said visiting the shrine lifted a burden she had felt for years.

"Three years ago, my daughter had a kidney transplant. My husband gave her one of his kidneys, I made a promise to the Blessed Mother that if both of them came through it fine, I would visit the shrine of Our Lady in Mexico to give thanks." Mrs. Cobos said.

"They made it through and I have been wanting to visit the shrine, but it takes a lot of money to go," she said.

"God works in mysterious ways and I just learned the statue was here when I was passing through town so I wanted to come," Mrs. Cobos said Sunday. "I still hope to visit the shrine in Mexico."

'Keep Kathy Mayor' campaign opens with hefty Houston hoopla

HOUSTON (AP) — Vowing to continue building the nation's fourth largest city, Mayor Kathy Whitmire announced she wants to reign at the top spot for a third term.

Mrs. Whitmire, standing in front of a "Keep Kathy Mayor" backdrop, told about 500 supporters at a $25-per person fundraiser Monday that the efforts to build the city during her administration added to her seeking re-election.

"We've come way too far to turn back now. Tonight, I'm announcing my candidacy for mayor of Houston for the third time," Mrs. Whitmire said to the supporters gathered at the red, white and blue decorated Shamrock Hilton grand ballroom.

Her announcement brought an immediate chant of "We want Kathy."

Mrs. Whitmire's main opponent in the nonpartisan Nov. 5 election is former five-term Mayor Louie Welch, who announced May 30 he would run for the position he held from 1964 to 1974.

Mrs. Whitmire became the first woman elected to city office in Houston when she won the post of city controller in 1977.

In 1981, she defeated incumbent Mayor Jim McConn and former Harris County Sheriff Jack Heard and was easily re-elected in 1983.

Each time, Mrs. Whitmire has campaigned on businesslike approaches to city government. Now she's doing away with her "Tootsie" image of curly hair and business suits with bow ties.

Monday during her announcement, she sported a feathery new haircut and a V-neck suit adorned with a pearl necklace.

"This is a very special occasion and I did get a new hairstyle for it. I got rid of my bow tie," she said.

Mrs. Whitmire said her adminstration has brought about a well-respected police force which she says is responsible for the 27 consecutive months of lower crime rates. She cites as her accomplishment highlights an inner-city redevelopment, a well-run transit system, improvements in sewage treatment and a convention center scheduled for completion in 1987.

Her current term, however, has been clouded with a sudden resignation of Fire Chief Robert Swartout, a federal probe into alleged mismanagement of a summer lunch program and a defeated gay rights referendum.

Earlier this month, Mrs. Whitmire reported she has $280,000 on hand for her campaign.

Welch, 66, resigned as president of the Houston Chamber of Commerce on June 15 but said he would not begin campaigning until September because of prior commitments, including a six-week teaching assignment at Abilene Christian University.

Sterling Cornelius, Welch's campaign manager, said the Welch campaign has less than $100,000, but a group called Friends of Louie Welch have said they have more than $1 million in pledges.

Two other mayoral candidates are motivational speaker Dick Dimond and financial consultant John Lee Hudson.

Robbers strike at Austin golf course

AUSTIN (AP) — A weekend armed robbery of four golfers at Morris Williams Golf Course has caused police to urge that golfers be cautious of strangers in isolated areas on the course near Robert Mueller Municipal Airport.

Four robbers — one with a sawed-off shotgun — held up four golfers from the Austin area about 9 a.m. Sunday, police said. Officers said the robbers forced the four to lie face-down on the course, and took their money and jewelry.

Police Lt. John Stewart said the robbers were described as 18 to 24 years old. The one who appeared oldest carried a sawed-off, pump shotgun.

"We were forced to lie down on the ground execution-style," said Ted Allen Williams, one of the victims. "We really thought we were going to die. It was very traumatic.

TV reporter's taped interview subpoenaed by Dallas attorney

DALLAS (AP) — The district attorney's office has subpoenaed a Dallas television reporter's taped interview with the man accused of killing another motorist on North Central Expressway.

But his station, WFAA-TV, said it will fight attempts to force the release of reporter John Criswell's tape.

Prosecutors said Monday they need the tape and "any type of video film, as well as notes, summaries, memorandum, reports or files" from Criswell before they begin trying Deno Victor Loredo this week.

A hearing was scheduled today to determine whether State District Judge Gerry Meier will order Criswell and the station to turn over the tapes. Ms. Meier could have Criswell jailed if he refuses to comply with her order.

Loredo, 27, is charged with the February shooting death of Jack Vaughn, 38, who was killed when a bullet fired from another car struck him as he and his stepson drove on the highway.

Loredo's attorney, Bill Rice, said Monday that he will argue the shooting was accidental and in self-defense.

The interview, conducted by Criswell shortly after the shooting, was never aired, said Mary Haag, WFAA executive news editor and vice president.

He said the station decided not to broadcast it because of "certain statements" Loredo made that Criswell couldn't corroborate.

For many years, the dry goods stores were visited by a set of "drummers," she said. These drummers were traveling salesmen who brought their wares in trunks. "You bought everything right there for your store. One would sell lace; another dry goods.

Dallas wasn't the market center it is today. The Wilsons had to go to Chicago or New York to buy their stock. "If you didn't have a good credit rating at the markets, you didn't get the goods. We had the highest credit rating of anyone in West Texas," she said.

Retailing has changed today. Back then, stores didn't necessarily close at 5 or 6, the mother and son recalled. "Saturday was butter and egg day. You stayed at the store until midnight," he said. And when the Wilsons operated the Wadley-Wilson store in Odessa, it was during the first oil boom when the Crane field was opening up. It, too, meant staying open until midnight several times during the week while the oilmen came in from the fields to buy supplies.

Unlike the early days when the Wilsons knew everyone in town, when they knew they could put something on a charge list and eventually get paid for it, when running a store was much simpler, the retail business has grown more complicated with its computer cash registers and charge cards and unfamiliar faces. The Wilsons decided to sell out in 1967.

But Mrs. Wilson looked back fondly to those earliest days when her father had the saddle shop.

"For a handmade saddle, the cowboys would pay up to $400. It'd cost $1,500 today to buy a saddle my daddie produced. It would take months to make, was all hand-tooled and of the highest grade leather."

And no cowboy worth his salt wore anything but a Stetson hat. "They were the best made hats," she said.

While most children are better at breaking things than repairing them, Pam had a special touch as young as age 5.

"Even as a very small child, she knew how to fix things that broke,..." Mrs. McDonald says.

A gift of a small porcelain doll from her mother started Mrs. Kennaugh collecting dolls at age 16. Soon her interest diversified to dollmaking.

Mrs. Kennaugh's first creations were hand-painted, porcelain baby dolls. But because the hobby was expensive, she decided to sell some of the dolls.

At a doll show in Houston, Mrs. Kennaugh discovered many of her customers were interested in repairing the dolls they already owned.

At age 20, she married and moved to Houston where she decided to give up a secretarial job to go into the doll restoration business.

"Everybody says,'you've come a long way in a short time,' " Mrs. Kennaugh said. In the basement of her Denver home, she employs three assistants to work on a backlog of some 100 dolls.

In just 3½ years Mrs. Kennaugh has gained extensive how-to knowledge and skill doing everything from minor surgery to intensive care with hard plastic, vinyl, composition and porcelain dolls. Although the work comes naturally to this artistic Texan, she said her knowledge did not come easily or cheaply.

"You have to be serious to get into this business," she said. "There are very few doll doctors in the country. I really had to dig."

To refine what she had learned on her own and from two instructors in Houston, Mrs. Kennaugh traveled to Leesburg, Va., in November 1984. There she gained knowledge of the trade secrets of two internationally known doll restorationists, Karin and Robert MacDowell. The knowledge cost $1,200 plus expenses for three days of intensive one-on-one training.

Super-Stone® offers natural stone surface tougher than concrete

Is your concrete cracked or freeze damaged? Has your pools cool deck worn thin? Are you planning a new pool, patio, driveway or walkway? Stop...think Super-Stone®, a decorative natural stone surface of unexcelled beauty with stronger than concrete roughness at a fair price. E.O. "Gene" Duke, president of Super-Stone of the Permian Basin, Inc., explains that this durable surface is a unique, porous surfacing material designed for patios, pool decks, pool coping, walkways, steps, driveways and any other outdoor area. It is also used on indoor areas in stores, lobbies, restaurants, banks or offices where its slip-proof qualities are especially important. It can even be appied vertically on walls.

This durable surface is applied over concrete - what a beautiful way to rid your walkway of those unsightly cracks and stains. Super-Stone® is composed entirely of the world's most beautiful natural stones, pebbles, or crushed marble, granite and quartz- with over 30 colors available. It is completely natural - a surface created by nature itself - so much in keeping with today's indoor-outdoor natural look.

Super-Stone of the Permian Basin, Inc. Manager Jeff Duke says that each individual stone is coated with an "invisible shield" of Super-Stone's® crystal clear epoxy resin system. This resin system bonds each stone to the stone next to it and bonds all the stones to the subsurface below them to form a permanent locked-in-place surface that is considerably stronger than concrete.

In fact, Super-Stone® is beautiful on driveways and is so strong that is is even used in parking areas for tractor trailer trucks.

Super-Stone® surfaces are unaffected by ice, snow, sleet, freeze or thaw. The West Texas heat - that's no problem either. Super-Stone has been installed in saunas where temperatures reach 200 F degrees, with absolutely no effect. The Super-Stone® epoxy coating does not get tacky or soft.l It's hard and solid at all times. And the stone and epoxy surface is fire proof.

Moreover, each individual stone is coated with a transparent film of Super-Stone® Resin, forever preserving the natural beauty of the stone and completely protecting the stone from the effects of salt, chemicals, gasoline, oil, other petroleum products, fertilizers, moisture and poisons.

No surface is totally maintenance free. But a Super-Stone® surface is about as close as you can get. Outdoors (or indoors with proper drains) just hose it down. That's about all you'll ever have to do.

Jeff reports that you can walk on your beautiful new surface just eight hours after installation and within 48 hours you can drive your car on it.

Superstone® of the Permian Basin, Inc. gives you a beautiful and natural surface resistent to cracking, chipping and staining for years. Call the Super-Stone experts at 683-6063 or333-6198 and let them show you how this remarkable surface can enhance the beauty of your home.

Warning! Before having any carpet cleaned get the facts

WARNING! Before you have your carpet cleaned on the premises know this: So-called "steam" cleaning methods can be injurious to your fine carpet. If steam (212 F) were used it would be ruinous! Actually, what is used is just hot water, sometimes with added detergent. And water left in carpert is often harmful -causing mildew, shrinkage and browning injuring carpet fibers, backing, under pad and flooring. Tests show up to six gallons of liquid left in a 9'x12' area. That's a whale of a lot of liquid! Such soggy carpet can take as much as nine hours for even the surface to dry! And that still leaves the backing, under pad and floor damp!

So, you would be well advised to play it safe by using the method recommended by leading carpet manufacturers - the Von Schrader Shampoo method used by B & J Carpet and Upholstery Cleaners. This method has been proven by more than 40 years of experience. Carpet cleaning experts Betty and Jerry Massey begin by with BeFORE Prespary in heavy traffic areas (no extra charge). Then their Von Schrader equipment deposits dry (not liquid) foam with anti resoil characteristics, brushes it deep into the pile and vacuums the soiled foam back into the machine. The dirt, engulfed in foam, is removed simultaneously before it can sink back down into the carpet. Result: your carpet is cleaned thoroughly, not superficially. Since only foam is used, carpet is ready for use in about an hour. Shrinkage, mildew and browning (often resulting from "steam" or other hot water extraction methods) are eliminated. Von Schrader is the only single unit that both shampoos and vacuums in just one pass. It's patented.

In addition, this Von Schrader Associate can get rid of smoke odors with the Smoke-X product. They also feature Du Pont Carpet Protector which will protect your carpet from future spills.

So - for a safe method with beautiful results - you'll be wise to call B & J Carpet and Upholstery Cleaners at 697-0444 for further information and free estimate. They are bonded and insured and offer senior citizens discounts.

Remember "steam" is just a lot of water. "Rota-ry brushes" just take dirt for a joy ride. "Hand application" only does superficial cleaning. ONLY B & J Carpet and Upholstery's Von Schrader Carpet Extractor shampoos deeply with a dry foam and then gets rid of the foam along with the dirt!

Perms for just $25 at Hair Works during August

Hair Works Salon in San Miguel Square offers the best looks of the '80's for men, women and children, Monday - Friday 8 a.m.-6 p.m. and Saturday 8 a.m.-3 p.m. Owners Linda Jetton and Nonie Frasier invite you to make an appointment at this modern salon during their August Back-to-School Perm Special.

Throughout the month of August most perms are just $25 (perms for long hair may be slightly more). (Offer is good with participating stylists.) Joico, Redkin, Paul Mitchell, Zotos, and Matrix perms are all available.

Eucalyptus Tree has sale to make room for new gifts, accessories

Eucalyptus Tree, conveniently located in the Courtyard at Midland Park next to Gardskis, is Midland's one stop gift and home accessory shop. This shop, which offers unique items, has a full array of recycled-paper cards, silk and dried flowers (which they will custom arrange), unusual baskets, Indian and Dhurri rugs, brass items, bath accessories, and more.

Not only does the Eucalyptus Tree stock unique items, but they also can provide many custom-made items for decorating or gift-giving. These experts will go to your home to help you decide on a special floral arrangement. Custom silk and dried arrangements, as well as Ficus and Eucalyptus trees, will even be delivered at no extra charge.

Custom ceramics are also available at this unique store. Cannisters, cookie jars, candle sticks, and other items can be hand-made to match any decor.

Gift items can also be hand picked and arranged in a custom gift basket.

Managers Cathie Broten and Theresa Wight just returned from market. Cathie said, "We have lots of stuff that's kind of different because many people have trouble shopping in Midland, especially finding things in a moderate price range. That's what we looked for at market."

Many new things, including items from Fitz and Floyd, a completely new style of basket, Palecek baskets with the white-washed look, prints, and more, are starting to arrive.

To make room for all the new items, Cathie and Theresa have announced a store-wide sale for Thursday, Friday and Saturday. Everything in the store will be marked down 10 to 50 percent! It's the perfect time to start early Christmas shopping and get acquainted with Midland's most unique store - Eucalyptus Tree.

Unusual gift items like adorable little puppets, stained glass, wall weavings, Avanti stuffed animals and ducks and chickens with wood fibre overlay fill the shelves. Wreaths, baskets, potpourri of many scents and perfume rings for lights along with Eucalyptus candles are always favorites.

Discover Midland's most unique store in the Courtyard, Monday - Saturday, 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. - Eucalyptus Tree.

Barrow joins Exterior Designs

Part-owner Steve Tillman welcomes Johnny Barrow as new part owner of Midland Exterior Designs. Johnny grew up in Midland and worked during his college years as a construction supervisor for Gilbert Bates Construction. He is well versed in all phases of construction and excited about joining Midland Exterior Design's tradition of quality work.

"I think it's great that Midland finally gets to do business with local owners. We're gonna build this company on a reputation of quality workmanship and satisfied homeowners," Johnny said.

"Midland is a fast-paced town. People don't have time to paint every two years. Our product solves that problem. In fact, this is not low maintenance - it's NO maintenance," Johnny continued. "We're geared up to satisfy every need of Midland, commercial, residential or even second homes on the lake or at Ruidoso. We can go anywhere to take care of our customers' needs."

Midland Exterior Designs is a company of local people that Midlanders know they can trust for quality work. That's why the Billy Gilbert family of Midland has called on Midland Exterior Designs to install siding, soffit, fascia, replacement windows and doors on a home in Paducah, Texas which holds great sentimental value for them. The home was owned at one time by Mr. and Mrs. Hart, Mr. Gilbert's mother and step father. As a child, Mr. Hart was a chore boy for Quannah Parker. Later, Mr. Hart became foreman of the Triangle Ranch.

As on all of their jobs, Midland Exterior Designs will use only quality products on this special house.

Steve said, "This product looks good on any house, whether it is a half million dollar home or a $10,000 home."

Steve said that now is the time to invest in a maintenance-free exterior.

While homeowners should be prepared to spend several thousand dollars to have their homes resided, the real cost can be as little as 17 percent of one's cash outlay. A recent joint study conducted by Alcan Building Products and The American Institute of Real Estate Appraisers shows that the true cost of a $5,000 initial investment in new siding, soffit, facia and rainware is actually onlt $865. The resale value of an average house is increased $2135 and $2000 is saved in the first year by not having the painting expense. Subtraact these amounts from the initial investment and find that it actually costs only $865. The investment should continue to pay dividends by eliminating painting expenses for many years.

Whether you are considering maintenance-free siding, soffit and fascia, windows, or remodelling, the Midland Exterior Design professionals are commited to giving you the information you want and the quality products you need.

Steve and remodeling expert Gary Mitchell want to thank Midlanders for their overwhelming response. Along with Johnny, they are looking forward to serving other Midlanders for many years to come. If you want to do business with a local company that you can count on for years to come, call 684-7456 or go by Midland Exterior Designs at 1111-A W. Wall 8:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m., Monday-Friday. Midland Exterior Designs is a participant in the customer concern program of the Better Business Bureau, the Midland Chamber of Commerce and a member of the Midland Home Builder's Association.

Dan Lynde Concrete is currently working on the foundation for a new building at Kelview Heights Baptist Church. Call 699-0952 to find out more about the company which many major Midland contractors call for concrete work.

Dan Lynde Concrete is quality

Dan Lynde Concrete does outstanding commercial and residential concrete work including slabs, foundations, driveways and exposed aggregate.

Lynde has been in the concrete business for eight years and in Midland for three years. His company is recognized by many of Midland's major contractors as a company that does quality work.

Lynde says "When I work for a builder I stand behind my work totally." That's why Dan Lynde Concrete has jobs such as Red Lobster, Crestview Baptist Church Educational/Activities Building, Fairmont Park Shopping Center and Midland Baptist Temple to its credit.

Right now, Lynde is doing the concrete work for a new building at Kelview Heights Baptist Church.

It is important to note that Dan Lynde Concrete serves home owners as well as major contractors. Residential patios, driveways and sidewalks are only a portion of the services which are available to home owners. Dan points out that exposed aggregate, like that his company did on The Midlander Health Club, can make your home especially attractive.

Dan Lynde Concrete is ready to serve your residential and commercial needs. Call 699-0952 to find out more about the quality work of Dan Lynde Concrete.

Permian Sign makes neon signs start to finish in Midland shop

Derek Dutton and Doug Sharp melt paint pigment into a flex material on their state-of-the-art heat transfer machine.

The Permian Sign Company, which is well known for quality electric, neon, plastic and hand painted signs, continues to help businesses make a good first impression.

Permian Sign Company began in 1953 in a little shop on Cotton Flat Road. Since that time, the company has remained one of the leaders in the industry by constantly updating their methods and keeping high standards for quality.

Owner Jack Brady is commited to producing top quality signs, as quickly as possible. That's why his shop is equipped to handle neon signs from start to finish. Customers don't have to what for their sign to be completed in some out of town shop.

Jack points out that Permian Sign utilizes state-of-the-art equipment like the SIGNMAKER computer and the Sign Tech heat transfer machine. The SIGNMAKER is versatile, allowing these experts to draw, cut and perforate sign patterns, prespaced letters and company logos on adhesive backed vinyl. This saves prep time and reduces waste and makeovers. Ultimately it means less waiting time for a reasonably-priced, high quality sign.

Likewise, the Sign Tech heat transfer machine reveals Jack's commitment to quality, state-of-the-art work. This incredible sign making machine acutally melts the paint into a flex material.That means no more time-consuming masking and remasking even for those high quality multi-colored signs. More incredible than the timely production is the unheard of FIVE YEAR warranty.

Even with all of this fine equipment, Jack knows that a quality sign is the product of skillful signmakers. That's why his staff is highly trained and dedicated to quality.

Permian Signs, located at 1400 Cotton Flat Road, is open Monday through Friday, 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

An innovative, high quality product in next to no time - that's the sign of Permian Sign Company.

Basin 2-Way Radio, Inc.committed to customer sales and service

Basin 2-Way Radio, Inc., dealer for Uniden Force and Johnson communications systems, is commited to sales and SERVICE. Service manager George Scarpa says, "Anything the sales force sells, this department services."

Basin 2-Way Radio is equipped to handle warranty work on Johnson and Uniden equipment."Our primary interest is servicing equipment we sell. We do maintain the ability to service other brands for our customers," Scarpa continues.

It doesn't matter wether a customer has one Petro-Phone or a fleet of 50 cars with 2-way radios, Scarpa says his department is commited to giving top quality, fast service.

The service department keeps an inventory of most commonly needed parts, so that same day service can be granted in many cases. Scarpa says that sometimes it takes as little as ten to fifteen minutes for repair.

If a part does have to ordered, the service department keeps the customer well informed, allowing the client to decide whether to expedite the delivery or request standard delivery.

Basin 2-Way looks out for their customers' best interest. "We are in business to make money, but at the same time we try to keep an eye on what our customers are spending and hlep them get a better value for their dollars," says Scarpa.

"The key word is value," Scarpa continues. "We're not as large as some of the other companies. By that virtue, we may not be as costly, but the service we provide has just as much technical expertise."

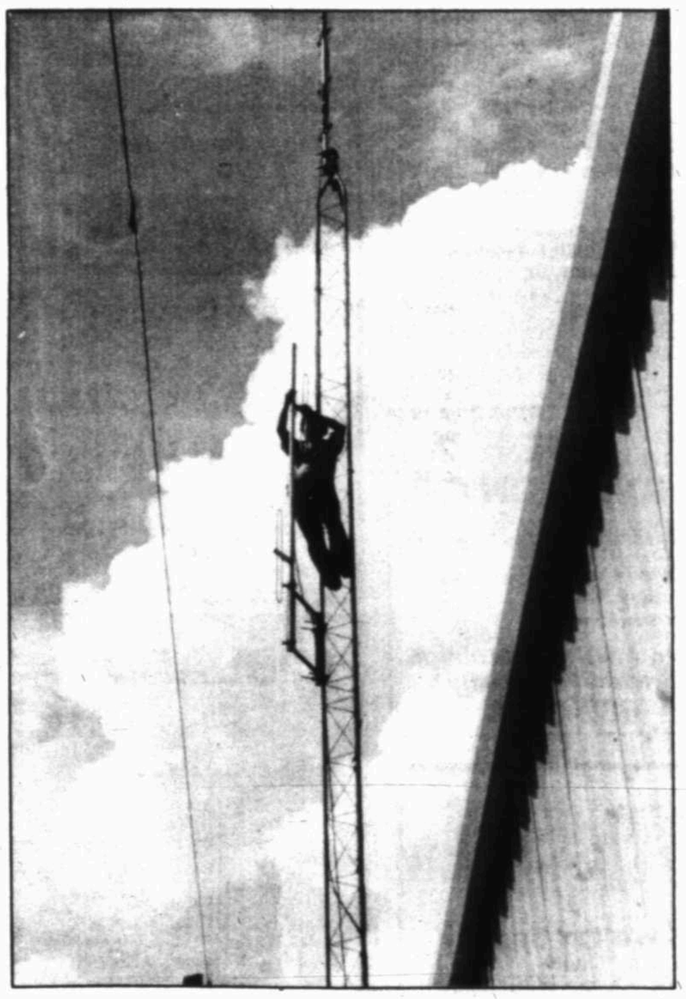

That technical expertise comes through individuals like Service Technician Tim Proctor. Proctor, who has been with the company almost since its inception, is the primary technicial. "The thing I like to say about Tim is if they don't make it - he'll build it, which he's done on a number of occassions," says Scarpa.

James Mendoza is the primary outsidse technician, handling most of the field repair work.

Installer Craig Jumper specializes in getting equipment ready to go, whether radio equipment is needed for a base station or in a Mercedes Benz or a golf cart.

Two service vans are constantly stocked with parts and equipment to do field service work.

Basin 2-Way Radio's service department is available 24 hours a day. "In the Permian Basin you're not only dealing with 8 to 5 people, but you're also dealing with the oil business which requires around the clock consideration," Scarpa explains.

Sylvester Stallone, in his role as a Vietnam vet in "Rambo: First Blood II," has provoked protests from real Vietnam vets.

Stallone's one-man war angers Vietnam vets

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Sylvester Stallone's box office hit "Rambo: First Blood II" presents a twisted glorification of combat that neglects the real horrors of war, according to Vietnam vets on a movie-theater picket line.

Members of Veteran's Speakers Alliance on Wednesday conducted informational picketing to protest the film they say exploits the sacrifices made by Vietnam veterans, glorifies war and misrepresents the horror of Vietnam.

"To see Stallone take on the entire enemy and not get a scratch on his body is totally ludicrous," complained alliance member Kim Scipes. "The film is totally unrealistic."

In "Rambo," Stallone plays a decorated Vietnam veteran searching for American prisoners of war in Southeast Asia. He finds the POWs and is forced to single-handedly take on their captors, commandeer a helicopter and return the prisoners to an American base near Vietnam.

At the end, Rambo gives an impassioned speech to his commander, telling him he loves his country and would die for it, but that he just wants to be acknowledged for what he and other vets did in Vietnam.

After the TWA hostage crisis in June, President Reagan joked that "after seeing 'Rambo' last night, I know what to do the next time this happens."

Veterans picketing a popular movie theater called the film propaganda that aims to prepare America's youth for another Vietnam-like war.

"We, too, were brainwashed with similar propaganda before the Vietnam war," said alliance spokesman Eduardo Cohen. "But, when we got to Vietnam, we found that it wasn't like the John Wayne movies.

"We didn't find democracy. We were fooled into sacrificing our lives or part of our lives. Rambo does the same thing."

The film also is "advertently or inadvertently psychologically preparing youths for war," Cohen said.

The alliance complained that Stallone appointed himself to speak on behalf of all Vietnam vets.

"We are offended that Stallone is presenting himself as a Vietnam vet. He apparently feels that he can represent all vets, but we don't like that," Cohen said. "He was never involved in the war. He doesn't know what we went through."

The film is the most popular movie of the summer, earning more than $130 million since its release nine weeks ago.

It received mixed reviews, and columnists and others criticized it for opening old wounds and fueling the public's hopes that POWs are still alive in Southeast Asia.

George Burns, 89, takes new TV host job

ENTERTAINMENT

By Gus Stevens
Copley News Service

George Burns

If George Burns gets any smaller, he's going to have to get up on a chair to play opposite Danny DeVito. Every time he comes before the press for an interview he seems to have shrunken another inch or two.

It would be easy to say that perhaps that's what 80 years in show business can do to a man. But the fact is that — shrinking or not — the venerable vaudevillian, stand-up comic, actor and iffy singer is thriving at age 89 before appreciative audiences.

Now Burns is preparing to go before television cameras again as the keystone player in a weekly comedy series called, appropriately, "George Burns Comedy Week." The show will be seen Wednesdays on CBS this fall as another in a collection of anthologies spotted throughout the fall networks' schedules.

Burns will not be spending long nights memorizing dialogue. He's a stand-up host — sort of a Rod Serling grandfather type who's in it for laughs — before the camera at the beginning and end of each show for perhaps three minutes overall.

Just enough time to tell a joke or two and set the theme of that evening's episode.

The TV press was shown one of the programs and, if they are all as good as that episode, CBS has itself a hit. The sample stars Catherine O'Hara as a young woman who is a victim of complete autosuggestion, a mental quirk that propels her into one bizarre situation after another.

Playing opposite her is Tim Matheson as a cop who's trying to understand her ways. The rest of the world, including a pack of her greedy relatives, does not understand at all. It's done in refreshing style, without a laugh track, with Steve Martin as one of the writers.

It's a concept and a cast good enough to be spun off into a comfortable little series all its own — a notion that doubtless has not gone unnoticed at the network.

Burns has a first-class producer for his series — enter Steve Martin again, a man not known as a giant, except in his own brand of comedy, but who loomed like a Celtics center when he came to the interview at the side of the tiny Burns.

"I got the idea for a comedy series from reading that Steven Spielberg was doing 'Amazing Stories,'" Martin said. "The network said, 'Oh, you're proposing an anthology.'

"I didn't know what an anthology was, but I said, 'Sure, it's an anthology.'"

Martin, a partner in 40 Share Productions, which is making the series, was mostly serious at the interview. He's got a lot of money and a chunk of his comedy reputation at stake. "I hope we don't have to rename it 20 Share," Martin said.

Martin was content to sit back and let Burns do most of the talking, something the veteran performer is good at and quite willing to do.

"These (segments) will be easy for me to do," Burns said. "I do only three minutes of comedy, like I did with Gracie. They can do me in five shows in one day, if they try.

"I said to them, 'What if the show is no good?' They said, 'It never stopped you before.'

"Before this show came up, I didn't know Steve Martin. I danced with Mary Martin. I sang with Tony Martin. I drank with Dean Martin."

By now Martin is laughing.

Everyone knows about Burns and Allen, stars of stage, screen, radio and television, but not everyone knows that Burns was born Nathan Birnbaum, the ninth of 12 children, on New York's lower East Side, Jan. 20, 1896.

His father died when he was 7, so Burns went to work, shining shoes, running errands and selling newspapers. He organized "The Peewee Quartet," kids who sang wherever there was a crowd with a little money to spend.

Burns quit school in the fourth grade and by age 14 he was a trick roller skater, a dance teacher and vaudevillian. He took up cigars as a prop.

In 1923 Burns teamed with Gracie Allen and three years later they married in Cleveland. Vast and enduring success in show business and in their private lives followed, until Gracie's death in 1964.

Burns carried on, making records, TV specials, nationwide appearances and movies — winning an Oscar for "The Sunshine Boys." He's written four books, the most recent being "Dr. Burns' Prescription for Happiness."

Even after 21 years, Burns said he still feels close to his wife.

"I go talk to Gracie every month. If she listens, fine. If she doesn't....With her, I always knew which way the wind was blowing because I had to keep my cigar smoke out of her face."

As Burns and Martin rose to leave, the little old man said, "I'll tell her I was here and talked to some very nice people."

Independent stations face tough times

By DAVID COOK
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. — What happened to Channel 23? When KNAT-TV, an independent television station here, went off the air at the end of April, few people outside of New Mexico noticed.

Like scores of other independent stations around the country — stations not affiliated with any of the Big Three commercial networks — KNAT had a relatively weak signal and an undistinguished program schedule that had attracted few viewers and fewer advertisers in its brief three-year life.

Then, a TV industry trade paper reported who owned the station: Johnny Carson, Neil Simon, Paul Anka, David Letterman, Joan Rivers and others.

With such well-known names attached to it, the demise of tiny KNAT attracted the attention throughout the television industry, and the station has become practically a textbook example of what can go wrong in the volatile business world of local TV.

AT A TIME when some independent TV stations are commanding astronomical sales prices and revenues surpassing network-affiliated stations, KNAT failed miserably. Its celebrity owners have lost an estimated $8 million in a business that, until now, has been thought to be just about the closest thing there is to a guaranteed money maker.

Behind KNAT's failure are all too common mistakes, miscalculations and missed opportunities that, TV industry officials say, promise to force other independent stations like KNAT out of business in the coming months and years.

"There are going to be more independents going under or broke in the next five years than in the history of independent television," Greg Nathanson, vice president for programming of Los Angeles-based Golden West Television, told a recent luncheon audience of the Hollywood Radio and Television Society.

Across the country, the number of independent stations has grown from 121 in 1980 to more than 214 today. The Washington-based Association of Independent Television Stations estimates that another 25 may go on the air within the next 12 months. The association expects about 300 independent stations on the air by 1990.

Like Albuquerque's darkened KNAT, 181 of these new stations are on the traditionally less desirable UHF (ultra-high frequency, channels 14-83) television frequencies. UHF stations have neither the signal quality nor the extended coverage area of VHF (very high frequency, channels 2-13) stations.

IN THE VERY largest cities, independent TV stations remain hot entertainment properties.

But outside of the very largest cities the ratings often aren't so hot. Advertising rates haven't kept pace with the cost of programming.

"You're going to find a lot of these new independent stations go bust. Advertisers look at the ratings and say, 'Well, this is all I'm going to pay you,' " insisted Max Sklower, vice president and general manager of ABC-affiliated KOAT-TV.

That is what happened to KNAT and what industry officials say is about to happen everywhere else.

If more independent stations fail in the coming years, the financial impact on Hollywood studios and syndication companies could be devastating, possibly ending the prolonged boom in the syndication business that has become a financial mainstay to producers and distribution companies.

Hollywood has grown financially fat as those new independent stations aggressively compete for the rights to air reruns of hit network series such as "Three's Company," "MASH" and "Magnum P.I." Last year, for example, MCA-TV (Universal) sold "Magnum" for $120,000 an episode in Los Angeles and $98,000 a program in New York. According to industry reports, sales of "The A-Team" have already topped the records set by "Magnum."

SUCH PROGRAMS are commanding as much as $7,000 an episode in Albuquerque, where commercial time often can be bought for less than $100 a minute.

"I think we'll see a lot of KNAT's around the country go dark," said Jerry Danziger, general manager of KOB-TV, Albuquerque's 31-year-old NBC affiliated station. "The advertiser isn't going to pay more for commercials just because you paid more for programming. They're still going to buy by the numbers (ratings)."

The specifics of KNAT's demise are disputed.

In the weeks since the station went off the air, charges and countercharges have flown like tumbleweeds across desert highways.

Sesquicentennial hoopla gathers steam

By SUZANNE GAMBOA
Associated Press

DALLAS — From a rattlesnake round-up to an across-the-state wagon-trail ride, the Texas 1986 Sesquicentennial Commission is organizing a celebration they hope will rival any world's fair.

"Our attitude is we want it as big as Texas," said Richard Frank, organization director. "In other words there's no limit."

With 10,000 events planned thus far for the 150th anniversary of Texas' independence from Mexico, Frank said the state "has the potential of having a more exciting and more complete celebration than even the Bicentennial."

For the past five years the commission, sanctioned during the 1979 state Legislature, has been organizing events for the Sesquicentennial.

In that time, it has registered 1,700 groups that intend to host some type of event, Frank said.

"Sometimes you dread coming in on Monday because you never know who is going to call," he said. "We are all about six inches shorter, balder and grayer."

Frank estimates $20 million will be spent on major statewide events and guesses total of about $1.5 billion to $3 billion will be spent when community-sponsored events are added in. The only state funds used are operation funds by the commission and funds used to get communities started on their projects.

"The Sesquicentennial has already made more for the state of Texas than than it has cost the state of Texas."
— Richard Frank
Texas 1986 Sesquicentennial Commission

THE SPENDING, Frank said, has already been offset by contributions and donations.

"The Sesquicentennial has already made more for the state of Texas than than it has cost the state of Texas," Frank said.

The commission expects 10,000 tourism events to be held next year and a total of 30,000 programs in recognition of the Sesquicentennial.

Officials also hope to capture a large portion of the tourism industry next year. The state is third in the nation in tourism, annually hosting at least 27 million tourists who spend about $14 billion.

Frank said the commission wants those figures to increase to about 40 million tourists and $17 billion.

But Texas must compete with a highly publicized world's fair in Vancouver, British Columbia, a Sesquicentennial celebration in Arkansas and the unveiling of the restored Statue of Liberty.

Working in favor of the state are several highly visible projects. In Dallas, the Texas Independence Express Inc. just launched a $3 million fund-raising campaign to set in motion a 1910 steam locomotive, said Robert Finklea, a representative for the non-profit group.

Carrying about 20 restored rail cars, the locomotive will make two round trips totaling 5,000 miles and stop in almost 7,100 towns, Finklea said.

"PEOPLE THAT have a love of steam engines and railways will really enjoy this," he said.

Retired and active railroaders will commandeer the antique locomotive that also will carry historical exhibits, performances and passengers.

"Right now we have thousands of people who want tickets on the train," Finklea said.

The restored engine has served as incentive for many towns to restore old depots that operated in the late 1800s and early 1900s, including a mission-style depot in Sugar Land, Texas.

A six-month wagon train trail ride has received equal interest, said Jan France, Texas Wagon Train Association executive director.

The convoy of wagon trains will circle around Texas stopping at various towns and camping in primitive conditions.

Wagon train enthusiasts and hobbyists from Texas and other states will be participating in the ride. The wagon train also will be open to the public to take a one day ride or to spend as much as a month with the association.

If land travel isn't enough, Frank said the commission is planning a 20,000 all-ship sail in the Gulf as well as a balloon lift featuring hot air balloons bearing the Sesquicentennial symbol.

COMMISSIONERS ALSO are organizing a 1,836-mile state bicycle rally and a 183.6-mile wheelchair race.

Numerous stage performances are planned, ranging from plays by community theater groups to a reunion performance by former stars of "Texas!"

On the money-raising end, Frank said the commission is aggressively arranging sponsorships for the many events.

Just in time for the Christmas wholesale buying season, the commission's marketing division has opened a showroom at the World Trade Center in Dallas. From promotional bumper stickers to commemorative watches, the commission hopes the curios will bring in additional revenue.

Souvenir creators leave no idea undeveloped

DALLAS (AP) — On the eighth floor of the World Trade Center, between toys and towels, glass showcases are filled and walls are decorated with official souvenirs of the Texas Sesquicentennial.

In one corner is a long dusty brown overcoat that looks like it could be a trenchcoat. But the heavy cotton wrap is a "duster," the official coat of the Texas Sesquicentennial.

According to its maker, the Broken Spear Cattle Company based in Colorado, the cowboys of the Old West converted a fisherman's overcoat to one that would accommodate their dusty trail rides.

Unlike the dusters of the old West, this one bears the Sesquicentennial logo and it should sell for about $120. But it still has the authentic split back that can be buttoned around the legs for horseback riding and the shortened collar to allow cowboy hats to be worn with it.

Makers of Sequicentennial curios have left no stone unturned and no ground unshoveled. For those who want a home-grown product there is a six-ounce plastic barrel of genuine Texas crude oil.

The barrel contains actual Texas oil that Marilyn Hart, owner of Barrels Plus, the company that makes the novelty, said she gets from the oil fields.

The oil comes with an official oilman's handbook which "teaches you to walk, talk and dress like a Texas oilman," Hart said

At the bottom of the price scale is a 50-cent aluminum coin bearing the Sesquicentennial logo while at the other end is a $10,000 bronze sculpture of a mockingbird in a pecan tree surrounded by bluebonnets.

No celebration is complete without an official mascot, and the commission is offering a gray armadillo wearing a white hat, white boots and a wide grin that makes him look a little like a Dallas Cowboy cheerleader.

Dorrie Kelley, who works with the commission's marketing division, estimated a total of $11 million to $12 million would be gained from sales of the items.

All money from sales of commemorative products will be used by the state to set up events for the Sesquicentennial, and money from promotional products such as bumper stickers and T-shirts will be used as fundraisers for Texas communities, she said.

One artist seems to have the same independence attitude as did the first citizens of the Republic of Texas.

She has painted a design for ceramic ware that contains the Alamo centered in two stems of bluebonnets. Over the Alamo flies the Space Shuttle bearing the name "Texas" on its side.

UT's Hans boosts 'future' oil

AUSTIN (AP) — Chancellor Hans Mark of the University of Texas thinks higher education can take the place of dwindling oil and gas money in Texas.

"Economic prosperity is the result of new knowledge that comes from research," said Mark, who heads the 14 UT components.

Mark likes to quote Gov. Mark White as saying, "Educated minds are the oil and gas of our future."

"That is a very important statement," Mark said. "The economic prosperity — which oil and gas has been to this state for 30 years — was the result of trained people and educated minds."

Now, says Mark, with the decline of the oil and gas economy, Texas must do what other states were forced to do many years ago, "Go and grow with less wealth."

"What is happening here today happened in California after the gold ran out," Mark said. "So California began to build their university system into a research operation years ago, which we really didn't begin to do until after World War II."

In less than a year, Mark, 56, former deputy administrator of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration and former secretary of the U.S. Air Force, has become one of Texas' top salesmen. Taking the chancellor's job on Sept. 1, 1984, he quickly began boosting high technology research as a necessity for the state's future.

Schmucker's fertile mind highlights farm broadcasts

BEAUMONT, Texas (AP) — Charlie Schmucker used to get up at 4 a.m. to milk 16 cows. That's why going on the radio at 5:09 a.m. comes easy to him.

He hits the airwaves Monday through Friday, doing what comes naturally, giving the farm news and advice from the Farmer's Almanac. "A little bit of corn pone," Schmucker says, deprecatingly.

But it must be good. He's in his 37th year of early morning broadcasting.

After his radio stint is over for the day, he heads home for breakfast, but he's at work at his second job at Modern Inc., a farm implement company, by 7:30.

"It's no problem for me to get up," Schmucker said. "On the farm, we got up close to 4 o'clock in the morning, and my dad and I milked the cows seven days a week." They did the milking early to have the milk ready for a milk truck by 6 a.m.

Schmucker's two jobs are the only ones he is doing these days, after "retiring" from three other jobs. He's 75, but he doesn't act or look it.

Schumucker isn't the retiring kind when it comes to his radio broadcasts, which began in 1949 over Beaumont's KTRM. Later, he moved to Beaumont's KLVI. His is the longest continuous farm show in East Texas, possibly in the entire state. His broadcasts are a mixture of local, area, state and national farm news.

He speaks of his love of agriculture and the people it attracts in explaining his long stint as an agricultural radio broadcaster.

"I love agriculture and the things connected to it," he said. "I feel deeply its importance to our country. I like the animals, and I like the smell of plowed dirt. I like to see the birds and the animals doing well and being treated well."

Although he said he plants vegetables in his garden when the ground is ready, he gives his listeners the advice in the Farmers' Almanac about planting by the phases of the moon.

"I plant when my ground is ready, but my dear mother always planted by the moon, and she was a good gardener. I give them their choice."

Schmucker's love for farming and the people who till the soil is what keeps him doing the broadcasts.

He was born in Indiana but his family moved to Hamshire when he was 8 years old. His father farmed rice, figs and watermelon.

He graduated from Winnie High School and furthered his education at Lamar Junior College and Texas A&M, where he received a bachelor's degree in agricultural education.

In 1935 he married Nola Mae Jowell, who was teaching school at Hamshire but is now retired. He and his wife have a daughter, Linda, who teaches at Pasadena public schools and Houston Community College.

Schmucker began 17 years of teaching vocational agriculture in 1973 when he joined the faculty of Bellville High School. He returned to A&M in 1946 to pursue a master's degree, which he received in 1947.

He became Beaumont High School's vocational agriculture teacher in 1948, a year before he started his radio broadcasts. He stayed at the high school until 1952. Then he "retired" at the age of 42.

"I thought I was getting too old," Schmucker said. "I was 42. My idea of teaching agriculture was seven days a week, 24 hours a day and going all the time. I just didn't want to be an old ag teacher. Anybody that was a good ag teacher was closely involved with the boys."

Schmucker's next job wasn't far removed from agriculture. He managed and operated the Beaumont Ford Tractor dealership of Oil City Tractors for five years, until 1957.

Karan's separates draw praise

By NINA HYDE
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — About a year ago Donna Karan, then the designer for the successful Anne Klein collection, stood in front of her closet and shrugged that she really didn't have a thing to wear. It confounded her. "I said, 'Okay, what's wrong? How come my wardrobe is not functioning for me anymore?' "

It's not that she didn't have plenty of clothes, but that "they weren't the right pieces."

She had been working on the Anne Klein II line, and realized that the clothing she was creating for this lower-price division was essentially the way she wanted to dress. "I wanted items to put on as I felt like it — just like I was making for Anne Klein II. But I wanted items with quality and the feel of luxury."

So eight months ago, after crying as she took her final bows with codesigner Louis Dell'Olio at the spring Anne Klein show, Karan started working on her own line. In April she presented her collection of "clothes and accessories that I myself would wear, the best of everything" to buyers and press.

THE SHOW OPENED with eight models dressed only in black bodysuits and tights, sitting on platforms in Karan's new, unfinished Seventh Avenue showroom. Then the models began adding items: a wrap skirt, pull-on pants, short and long pull-on skirts, a man-tailored jacket, sweaters, gray cashmere pants, scarves (wrapped around the hips), sexy cashmere dresses, chunky matte gold jewelry and more.

All the things that had been missing from Karan's closet.

It was a pure collection of fundamental pieces in the best fabrics. And it was clear from the overwhelming applause at show's end that not only Donna Karan but a lot of women want to dress this way.

Two days before the show, an ebullient Karan, 36, sat on a window sill in the freshly painted offices that once belonged to Halston, a designer she always admired and whose clothes at their best were in the same spirit as hers today. She had removed Halston's mirrored decor and cleared the windows of shades to get as much natural light as possible. "Where I worked at Anne Klein," she said, "it was so dark that when I would take clothing out on the street, nothing matched."

THE COLLECTION, she says, is designed for a very specific, very sophisticated woman who doesn't have time to shop. "In fact, she hates stores. She must wear clothes. She has to be dressed at all times. She needs them for work, she needs them for theater, she needs them to entertain at home, she needs them to travel — she's on the go constantly — and what is a better way of traveling than separate pieces that you just throw on? It offers endless possibilities.

"They are separate pieces that just work. I mean, you could do almost anything you want to them. They're not about fashion, they're not about what is new this year. It's the foundation of a company — from this plateau we're going to build."

Karan starts with black, "the epitome for me of elegance and sophistication."

"Black is the foundation of every woman's wardrobe, because she can go from day to evening. Besides, I don't believe a woman ever has enough good black pieces in her wardrobe. And I think she's much more apt to try a new silhouette in black before she'll try it in any color. If it's a color, she'll say, 'Oh, I want that color.' If it's black, she'll look at it as a silhouette."

AND BLACK GOES easily with everything. "I think the way women live today, she has to be prepared to make the fastest change, to feel totally different, and I think that's the whole key in modern dressing."

When Karan says "fast," she's not kidding. Over a black crepe jersey bodysuit she'll add a black knit skirt or pants that pull on in an instant, or a skirt that wraps around the body as easily as a scarf — in fact, sometimes it is a scarf.

She shows both long and short skirts, preferring long ones with boots in the winter, "then when I go out in the evening I put on heels and wear short ... it's sexier."

Everything she's done for daytime wear she also does for evening. The wrap skirt, for example, in wool for day, is dipped in sequins for night. And while her designs appear lean, solely for the rail-thin, Karan insists they are not. "I make all the clothes on my own body first to make sure that they work," she says, "even with my size 12-14 hips."

THERE ARE SWEATERS and shirts for those who don't like the bodysuit, but Karan is sold on it. "Everything comes out of what works for me — at home, I live in a leotard. I have a problem when something is too leggy, too revealing, too anything. I like to feel that my body is secure, and then from there I can add everything."

In addition to pantyhose, belts, gloves, bags, scarves, even hats, she offers chunky but simple 24-carat-plated jewelry made to complement the clothes. (She can't wear her own jewelry — she's allergic to everything but solid gold.) And she is insisting that retailers sell all of her designs in one location, a "shop within a shop."

"All the pieces a woman needs will be there," she says. "She won't have to worry about running upstairs and downstairs to find what she needs."

The stores seem to be going along with her "shop" concept, but are less receptive to another innovation — women's jackets sold in varying lengths like men's. "I don't believe a woman can fit properly into a jacket sized only by the shoulders. Every woman's waistline is in a different place," says Karan, who is grading her jackets not only in regular sizes but in proportions, every size available in both long and short. "If you are spending that kind of money on a jacket, it should fit."

SOME PIECES, SUCH as a jersey pull-on skirt, will be priced at under $100, but others will go way up. The superb jackets in fine menswear fabrics, for example, one with a fly front and cardigan neckline, another with flange details, will be tagged at $400 and $500.

When she decided she needed gray items in the collection, Karan asked herself, "Why would anyone need my gray flannel?" and chose gray cashmere instead. And when she was offered two qualities of cashmere for a boy coat, another item she dreamed of owning herself, she asked what the difference would be and was told $1,200 versus $1,600 a coat. "I figured at that point price didn't matter," she says, "and went for the best."

And it works. Says Mara Urshel, a senior vice president of Saks Fifth Avenue in the audience at Karan's show, "It was the most refreshing thing I've seen in sportswear for a long, long time. Almost bordering on the verge of couture. Very directional. And now I'm looking for a place with (exercise) machines."

Adds Saks' fashion director Ellin Saltzman, "It was spectacular, understated, elegant, perfection. Not easy to wear, but well worth the effort."

DONNA KARAN GREW UP in the garment business. Her father, Gaby Faske, who died when she was 3, made custom suits for men. She remembers watching the Macy's Thanksgiving Day parade from his office. And she remembers too that her mother, who worked in designer Chester Weinberg's showroom, had impeccably cut blazers in every color made for her by her husband. "It may be why I love blazers so much," Karan says.

She was a terrible student. "I never went to school. I preferred fashion, making my own clothes. I would hang out in the art department, and never went to my academic classes." From age 14 she worked in a shop near her home in Cedarhurst, Long Island. "I grew up in retail," she says.

With Weinberg's help she got into the prestigious Parsons School of Design, but on probation. She never missed a day of class. She worked after school for young designer Chuck Howard and made sketches for Liz Claiborne, then a dress designer.

IT WAS HOWARD WHO in 1968 pushed the teen-ager to go see sportswear designer Anne Klein. She remembers wearing her best John Anthony pin-stripe suit and a white fedora and carrying her portfolio. "Walk for me," Klein ordered. "Why should I walk for you?" Karan asked. "Your hips are too big for a model," Klein said, dismissing her. "I know my hips are big, but I'm here for a design job," Karan insisted.

Klein hired her and urged her to quit school and work full time, which she did — until Klein fired her a short time later. "I just couldn't get it together," she says, pushing her hands through her black hair. "I was 18 years old, and I don't think anyone lasts on their first job. The shock of school and then reality."

She worked briefly for designer Patti Cappalli, who "got me thinking as a businesswoman," Karan says. But after traveling to Europe to see the fashion markets, she realized that "fashion was not going to be the only thing in life that would be important to me. I quickly got married, got my act together and a year later called Anne (Klein) and asked if I could come back to work. I was 19. I felt very badly when Anne fired me. I had to complete it with her."

SHE WORKED IN THE design studio with Klein, then began scouting fabrics in Europe with Julie Stern, now president of her company. She was still on the road when she was eight months pregnant, and she was back at work a week after the baby was born.

Upon Klein's death Karan was appointed designer for the Anne Klein collection, and she asked her Parsons chum Louis Dell'Olio to help her. "We were the suburban commuters at Parsons," she says. "One day we would have lasagna at his house, the next day he would have matzo-ball soup at mine. I would sew his clothes and he would draw mine — he is an incredible illustrator. We grew up as friends always wanting to work together."

Chi Omega style show scheduled

"Statement of the Season," Chi Omega sorority's fifth annual style show and brunch, is scheduled for 11:30 a.m. Saturday at the Holiday Inn Country Villa, 4300 W. Highway 80 in Midland.

The show will benefit Hearthstone, an emergency home for children. Hearthstone is currently under construction.

Fashions in the show will be from J.E. Borron, The Gazebo, The Canopy, Grigsby's Rag Doll, Janee's Evening Wear, La Mere Maternity, Pappagallo, Szor-Diener and Jim Ward's Tennis Shop at Midland Country Club. Jewelry will be from Corrigan's-Kruger.

Tickets are $10 each and may be purchased from any participating merchant.

Use care when soaking wool garments

Copley News Service

Soaking at low temperature is a very effective way of dealing with protein-content type stains, i.e., tea or coffee with milk, gravy, blood, etc.

Normally, soaking is not recommended for woolen garments as it risks fading the color, but it can be used as a last-resort procedure for badly stained garments that otherwise would be unwearable. Using proper care will minimize risks.

DEAR ABBY

Mother-in-law overstays her welcome before visit begins

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I've been married for two years to a man who never got along very well with his family. (I've never met any of them.)

His mother wrote to us saying she would like to visit us toward the end of the summer, so we invited her to come for four or five days. She wrote back saying she was coming for a two-week visit and was bringing her sister and her sister's daughter with her!

We wrote her saying we had a very small house and were not able to have guests for two weeks, but the three of them could come for one week only. Well, she wrote back and said she had to stay for two weeks to get a reduced air fare!

Dear Abby, are we stuck with three people for two weeks? We just can't handle it! His mother is not elderly, poor or disabled, if that makes a difference. Help! — NO NAME, OF COURSE

DEAR NO NAME: Even though this woman is your husband's mother, it doesn't give her the right to stretch a four- to five-day invitation to two weeks and bring two additional guests to boot.

Tell her that if they stay two weeks, you will be glad to make reservations at a nearby motel for the second week. And if you can't pick up the tab, send her the motel rates and ask for her preference.

DEAR ABBY: You missed the boat in your answer to "Bewildered," the couple who were sure that if they left their considerable estate to their only daughter, she would spend it all on her "no-good" husband.

You said, "There is no way you can control the way your daughter spends her inheritance." This is not so.

You should have suggested that they consult a lawyer experienced in wills and trusts, and consider leaving the inheritance in a trust for the benefit of their daughter for her lifetime. The trustee (probably a bank) could be directed to distribute the money, from the income or principal, only for the daughter's benefit, as the trustee decides is appropriate.

While the son-in-law would probably benefit indirectly from this arrangement, the daughter would get the primary benefit, and the principal of the trust would give her financial security for the rest of her life. — DONALD R. WAISEL, ATTORNEY AT LAW, HARRISBURG, PA.

DEAR MR. WAISEL: You are right, of course. And judging from the number of letters I received from lawyers and trust officers, I not only missed the boat, I missed the entire fleet.

DEAR ABBY: Two weeks ago I might have felt the same as "Disappointed Mom," but I hope that she will be thankful for her daughter's good qualities as you advised.

My daughter is nearly 20. She graduated No. 1 in her class and had her pick of the top colleges. She was beautiful and talented, but never seemed interested in boys the way most girls were.

After her freshman year of college, she told me she had fallen in love with another woman! My world fell apart, Abby. If she had had a normal heterosexual relationship, I would have overlooked everything else.

I still pray that some wonderful man will come along and sweep her off her feet. I love her with all my heart, but don't think I will ever be able to accept her lifestyle. — STILL HOPEFUL

DEAR STILL: If you love her, you will learn more about her "lifestyle." Do yourself — and your daughter — a favor, and write to PARENTS FLAG, P.O. Box 24565, Los Angeles, Calif. 90024.

The information is comforting, enlightening and free, but please enclose a long, stamped (39 cents), self-addressed envelope.

(Getting married? Send for Abby's new, updated, expanded booklet, "How to Have a Lovely Wedding." Send your name and address clearly printed with a check or money order for $2.50 and a long, stamped (39 cents) self-addressed envelope to: Dear Abby, Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

Furs, feathers, jewelry highlight fashion shows

By SUZY PATTERSON

PARIS (AP) — Furs, ostrich boas and elaborate jewels jazzed up runways in a spate of recent haute couture openings.

As Balmain, Cardin and Scherrer paraded their creations, it was clear that lengths can be anywhere but the close-body cut is important.

Smooth broadcloth, velvet, satin and taffeta dominate many outfits. While Erik Mortensen, the Balmain designer, went all out for an hourglass figure and a waspy waist in short daytime clothes, Pierre Cardin opted for a pencil-slim and long look.

Cardin brought in nine lovely models from China, where he now makes some of his clothes and, even more surprisingly, hopes to sell them. The outfits were just barely Chinese.

With narrow skirts to mid-calf slit for walking, and cropped pants, they nevertheless had the Cardin signatures: Amusing sleeves, such as the stiffened shoulders and elbows with points or a new invention of a big oval sleeve belted at the upper arm.

Fringed hems looking like loops, stovepipe hats and collars, bold jet buttons and other details gave these daytime and evening clothes the true ring of Cardin's style and humor.

Colors are autumnal or bright red and blue in soft cashmere and mohair fabrics. Shoulders are shapely and rounded. Cardin's sharp cut and welt seaming are prominent as always.

Some memorable gadgets include a lame and black evening bag in a shopping-bag shape and jewel-tipped earrings and pom-poms looking like sea anemones.

Jean-Louis Scherrer took inspiration from India and the Renaissance, and his swirling, ankle-length clothes never looked more elegant. The early numbers in ivory were firmly belted at the waist and topped with fox and lynx in big toque hats and stoles. The look of these was East Indian, as were some of the shimmering paisley fabrics in dressy jackets.

A winner should be the super cable-knit sweaters dotted with big rhinestones. His sober show, which never bared a knee — except for some saucy cocktail dresses — make a point. Keep the themes straight and simple.

There was a lot of black velvet, sometimes panne or combined with lace, sometimes very sober.

Scherrer brought the house down with his elaborately jeweled Renaissance gowns in combinations of irridescent taffeta, re-embroidred silk and lame.

The Balmain short clothes with their pleated ruffles or fur trims also had appeal, although there was as a somewhat stylized and 1940s air in the close fit.

Sesquicentennial hoopla gathers steam

By SUZANNE GAMBOA
Associated Press

DALLAS — From a rattlesnake round-up to an across-the-state wagon-trail ride, the Texas 1986 Sesquicentennial Commission is organizing a celebration they hope will rival any world's fair.

"Our attitude is we want it as big as Texas," said Richard Frank, organization director. "In other words there's no limit."

With 10,000 events planned thus far for the 150th anniversary of Texas' independence from Mexico, Frank said the state "has the potential of having a more exciting and more complete celebration than even the Bicentennial."

For the past five years the commission, sanctioned during the 1979 state Legislature, has been organizing events for the Sesquicentennial.

In that time, it has registered 1,700 groups that intend to host some type of event, Frank said.

"Sometimes you dread coming in on Monday because you never know who is going to call," he said. "We are all about six inches shorter, balder and grayer."

Frank estimates $20 million will be spent on major statewide events and guesses total of about $1.5 billion to $3 billion will be spent when community-sponsored events are added in. The only state funds used are operation funds by the commission and funds used to get communities started on their projects.

"The Sesquicentennial has already made more for the state of Texas than than it has cost the state of Texas."
— Richard Frank
Texas 1986 Sesquicentennial Commission

THE SPENDING, Frank said, has already been offset by contributions and donations.

"The Sesquicentennial has already made more for the state of Texas than than it has cost the state of Texas," Frank said.

The commission expects 10,000 tourism events to be held next year and a total of 30,000 programs in recognition of the Sesquicentennial.

Officials also hope to capture a large portion of the tourism industry next year. The state is third in the nation in tourism, annually hosting at least 27 million tourists who spend about $14 billion.

Frank said the commission wants those figures to increase to about 40 million tourists and $17 billion.

But Texas must compete with a highly publicized world's fair in Vancouver, British Columbia, a Sesquicentennial celebration in Arkansas and the unveiling of the restored Statue of Liberty.

Working in favor of the state are several highly visible projects. In Dallas, the Texas Independence Express Inc. just launched a $3 million fund-raising campaign to set in motion a 1910 steam locomotive, said Robert Finklea, a representative for the non-profit group.

Carrying about 20 restored rail cars, the locomotive will make two round trips totaling 5,000 miles and stop in almost 7,100 towns, Finklea said.

"PEOPLE THAT have a love of steam engines and railways will really enjoy this," he said.

Retired and active railroaders will commandeer the antique locomotive that also will carry historical exhibits, performances and passengers.

"Right now we have thousands of people who want tickets on the train," Finklea said.

The restored engine has served as incentive for many towns to restore old depots that operated in the late 1800s and early 1900s, including a mission-style depot in Sugar Land, Texas.

A six-month wagon train trail ride has received equal interest, said Jan France, Texas Wagon Train Association executive director.

The convoy of wagon trains will circle around Texas stopping at various towns and camping in primitive conditions.

Wagon train enthusiasts and hobbyists from Texas and other states will be participating in the ride. The wagon train also will be open to the public to take a one day ride or to spend as much as a month with the association.

If land travel isn't enough, Frank said the commission is planning a 20,000 all-ship sail in the Gulf as well as a balloon lift featuring hot air balloons bearing the Sesquicentennial symbol.

COMMISSIONERS ALSO are organizing a 1,836-mile state bicycle rally and a 183.6-mile wheelchair race.

Numerous stage performances are planned, ranging from plays by community theater groups to a reunion performance by former stars of "Texas!"

On the money-raising end, Frank said the commission is aggressively arranging sponsorships for the many events.

Just in time for the Christmas wholesale buying season, the commission's marketing division has opened a showroom at the World Trade Center in Dallas. From promotional bumper stickers to commemorative watches, the commission hopes the curios will bring in additional revenue.

Souvenir creators leave no idea undeveloped

DALLAS (AP) — On the eighth floor of the World Trade Center, between toys and towels, glass showcases are filled and walls are decorated with official souvenirs of the Texas Sesquicentennial.

In one corner is a long dusty brown overcoat that looks like it could be a trenchcoat. But the heavy cotton wrap is a "duster," the official coat of the Texas Sesquicentennial.

According to its maker, the Broken Spear Cattle Company based in Colorado, the cowboys of the Old West converted a fisherman's overcoat to one that would accommodate their dusty trail rides.

Unlike the dusters of the old West, this one bears the Sesquicentennial logo and it should sell for about $120. But it still has the authentic split back that can be buttoned around the legs for horseback riding and the shortened collar to allow cowboy hats to be worn with it.

Makers of Sequicentennial curios have left no stone unturned and no ground unshoveled. For those who want a home-grown product there is a six-ounce plastic barrel of genuine Texas crude oil.

The barrel contains actual Texas oil that Marilyn Hart, owner of Barrels Plus, the company that makes the novelty, said she gets from the oil fields.

The oil comes with an official oilman's handbook which "teaches you to walk, talk and dress like a Texas oilman," Hart said

At the bottom of the price scale is a 50-cent aluminum coin bearing the Sesquicentennial logo while at the other end is a $10,000 bronze sculpture of a mockingbird in a pecan tree surrounded by bluebonnets.

No celebration is complete without an official mascot, and the commission is offering a gray armadillo wearing a white hat, white boots and a wide grin that makes him look a little like a Dallas Cowboy cheerleader.

Dorrie Kelley, who works with the commission's marketing division, estimated a total of $11 million to $12 million would be gained from sales of the items.

All money from sales of commemorative products will be used by the state to set up events for the Sesquicentennial, and money from promotional products such as bumper stickers and T-shirts will be used as fundraisers for Texas communities, she said.

One artist seems to have the same independence attitude as did the first citizens of the Republic of Texas.

She has painted a design for ceramic ware that contains the Alamo centered in two stems of bluebonnets. Over the Alamo flies the Space Shuttle bearing the name "Texas" on its side.

UT's Hans boosts 'future' oil

AUSTIN (AP) — Chancellor Hans Mark of the University of Texas thinks higher education can take the place of dwindling oil and gas money in Texas.

"Economic prosperity is the result of new knowledge that comes from research," said Mark, who heads the 14 UT components.

Mark likes to quote Gov. Mark White as saying, "Educated minds are the oil and gas of our future."

"That is a very important statement," Mark said. "The economic prosperity — which oil and gas has been to this state for 30 years — was the result of trained people and educated minds."

Now, says Mark, with the decline of the oil and gas economy, Texas must do what other states were forced to do many years ago, "Go and grow with less wealth."

"What is happening here today happened in California after the gold ran out," Mark said. "So California began to build their university system into a research operation years ago, which we really didn't begin to do until after World War II."

In less than a year, Mark, 56, former deputy administrator of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration and former secretary of the U.S. Air Force, has become one of Texas' top salesmen. Taking the chancellor's job on Sept. 1, 1984, he quickly began boosting high technology research as a necessity for the state's future.

Schmucker's fertile mind highlights farm broadcasts

BEAUMONT, Texas (AP) — Charlie Schmucker used to get up at 4 a.m. to milk 16 cows. That's why going on the radio at 5:09 a.m. comes easy to him.

He hits the airwaves Monday through Friday, doing what comes naturally, giving the farm news and advice from the Farmer's Almanac. "A little bit of corn pone," Schmucker says, deprecatingly.

But it must be good. He's in his 37th year of early morning broadcasting.

After his radio stint is over for the day, he heads home for breakfast, but he's at work at his second job at Modern Inc., a farm implement company, by 7:30.

"It's no problem for me to get up," Schmucker said. "On the farm, we got up close to 4 o'clock in the morning, and my dad and I milked the cows seven days a week." They did the milking early to have the milk ready for a milk truck by 6 a.m.

Schmucker's two jobs are the only ones he is doing these days, after "retiring" from three other jobs. He's 75, but he doesn't act or look it.

Schumucker isn't the retiring kind when it comes to his radio broadcasts, which began in 1949 over Beaumont's KTRM. Later, he moved to Beaumont's KLVI. His is the longest continuous farm show in East Texas, possibly in the entire state. His broadcasts are a mixture of local, area, state and national farm news.

He speaks of his love of agriculture and the people it attracts in explaining his long stint as an agricultural radio broadcaster.

"I love agriculture and the things connected to it," he said. "I feel deeply its importance to our country. I like the animals, and I like the smell of plowed dirt. I like to see the birds and the animals doing well and being treated well."

Although he said he plants vegetables in his garden when the ground is ready, he gives his listeners the advice in the Farmers' Almanac about planting by the phases of the moon.

"I plant when my ground is ready, but my dear mother always planted by the moon, and she was a good gardener. I give them their choice."

Schmucker's love for farming and the people who till the soil is what keeps him doing the broadcasts.

He was born in Indiana but his family moved to Hamshire when he was 8 years old. His father farmed rice, figs and watermelon.

He graduated from Winnie High School and furthered his education at Lamar Junior College and Texas A&M, where he received a bachelor's degree in agricultural education.

In 1935 he married Nola Mae Jowell, who was teaching school at Hamshire but is now retired. He and his wife have a daughter, Linda, who teaches at Pasadena public schools and Houston Community College.

Schmucker began 17 years of teaching vocational agriculture in 1973 when he joined the faculty of Bellville High School. He returned to A&M in 1946 to pursue a master's degree, which he received in 1947.

He became Beaumont High School's vocational agriculture teacher in 1948, a year before he started his radio broadcasts. He stayed at the high school until 1952. Then he "retired" at the age of 42.

"I thought I was getting too old," Schmucker said. "I was 42. My idea of teaching agriculture was seven days a week, 24 hours a day and going all the time. I just didn't want to be an old ag teacher. Anybody that was a good ag teacher was closely involved with the boys."

Schmucker's next job wasn't far removed from agriculture. He managed and operated the Beaumont Ford Tractor dealership of Oil City Tractors for five years, until 1957.

Karan's separates draw praise

By NINA HYDE
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — About a year ago Donna Karan, then the designer for the successful Anne Klein collection, stood in front of her closet and shrugged that she really didn't have a thing to wear. It confounded her. "I said, 'Okay, what's wrong? How come my wardrobe is not functioning for me anymore?' "

It's not that she didn't have plenty of clothes, but that "they weren't the right pieces."

She had been working on the Anne Klein II line, and realized that the clothing she was creating for this lower-price division was essentially the way she wanted to dress. "I wanted items to put on as I felt like it — just like I was making for Anne Klein II. But I wanted items with quality and the feel of luxury."

So eight months ago, after crying as she took her final bows with codesigner Louis Dell'Olio at the spring Anne Klein show, Karan started working on her own line. In April she presented her collection of "clothes and accessories that I myself would wear, the best of everything" to buyers and press.

THE SHOW OPENED with eight models dressed only in black bodysuits and tights, sitting on platforms in Karan's new, unfinished Seventh Avenue showroom. Then the models began adding items: a wrap skirt, pull-on pants, short and long pull-on skirts, a man-tailored jacket, sweaters, gray cashmere pants, scarves (wrapped around the hips), sexy cashmere dresses, chunky matte gold jewelry and more.

All the things that had been missing from Karan's closet.

It was a pure collection of fundamental pieces in the best fabrics. And it was clear from the overwhelming applause at show's end that not only Donna Karan but a lot of women want to dress this way.

Two days before the show, an ebullient Karan, 36, sat on a window sill in the freshly painted offices that once belonged to Halston, a designer she always admired and whose clothes at their best were in the same spirit as hers today. She had removed Halston's mirrored decor and cleared the windows of shades to get as much natural light as possible. "Where I worked at Anne Klein," she said, "it was so dark that when I would take clothing out on the street, nothing matched."

THE COLLECTION, she says, is designed for a very specific, very sophisticated woman who doesn't have time to shop. "In fact, she hates stores. She must wear clothes. She has to be dressed at all times. She needs them for work, she needs them for theater, she needs them to entertain at home, she needs them to travel — she's on the go constantly — and what is a better way of traveling than separate pieces that you just throw on? It offers endless possibilities.

"They are separate pieces that just work. I mean, you could do almost anything you want to them. They're not about fashion, they're not about what is new this year. It's the foundation of a company — from this plateau we're going to build."

Karan starts with black, "the epitome for me of elegance and sophistication."

"Black is the foundation of every woman's wardrobe, because she can go from day to evening. Besides, I don't believe a woman ever has enough good black pieces in her wardrobe. And I think she's much more apt to try a new silhouette in black before she'll try it in any color. If it's a color, she'll say, 'Oh, I want that color.' If it's black, she'll look at it as a silhouette."

AND BLACK GOES easily with everything. "I think the way women live today, she has to be prepared to make the fastest change, to feel totally different, and I think that's the whole key in modern dressing."

When Karan says "fast," she's not kidding. Over a black crepe jersey bodysuit she'll add a black knit skirt or pants that pull on in an instant, or a skirt that wraps around the body as easily as a scarf — in fact, sometimes it is a scarf.

She shows both long and short skirts, preferring long ones with boots in the winter, "then when I go out in the evening I put on heels and wear short ... it's sexier."

Everything she's done for daytime wear she also does for evening. The wrap skirt, for example, in wool for day, is dipped in sequins for night. And while her designs appear lean, solely for the rail-thin, Karan insists they are not. "I make all the clothes on my own body first to make sure that they work," she says, "even with my size 12-14 hips."

THERE ARE SWEATERS and shirts for those who don't like the bodysuit, but Karan is sold on it. "Everything comes out of what works for me — at home, I live in a leotard. I have a problem when something is too leggy, too revealing, too anything. I like to feel that my body is secure, and then from there I can add everything."

In addition to pantyhose, belts, gloves, bags, scarves, even hats, she offers chunky but simple 24-carat-plated jewelry made to complement the clothes. (She can't wear her own jewelry — she's allergic to everything but solid gold.) And she is insisting that retailers sell all of her designs in one location, a "shop within a shop."

"All the pieces a woman needs will be there," she says. "She won't have to worry about running upstairs and downstairs to find what she needs."

The stores seem to be going along with her "shop" concept, but are less receptive to another innovation — women's jackets sold in varying lengths like men's. "I don't believe a woman can fit properly into a jacket sized only by the shoulders. Every woman's waistline is in a different place," says Karan, who is grading her jackets not only in regular sizes but in proportions, every size available in both long and short. "If you are spending that kind of money on a jacket, it should fit."

SOME PIECES, SUCH as a jersey pull-on skirt, will be priced at under $100, but others will go way up. The superb jackets in fine menswear fabrics, for example, one with a fly front and cardigan neckline, another with flange details, will be tagged at $400 and $500.

When she decided she needed gray items in the collection, Karan asked herself, "Why would anyone need my gray flannel?" and chose gray cashmere instead. And when she was offered two qualities of cashmere for a boy coat, another item she dreamed of owning herself, she asked what the difference would be and was told $1,200 versus $1,600 a coat. "I figured at that point price didn't matter," she says, "and went for the best."

And it works. Says Mara Urshel, a senior vice president of Saks Fifth Avenue in the audience at Karan's show, "It was the most refreshing thing I've seen in sportswear for a long, long time. Almost bordering on the verge of couture. Very directional. And now I'm looking for a place with (exercise) machines."

Adds Saks' fashion director Ellin Saltzman, "It was spectacular, understated, elegant, perfection. Not easy to wear, but well worth the effort."

DONNA KARAN GREW UP in the garment business. Her father, Gaby Faske, who died when she was 3, made custom suits for men. She remembers watching the Macy's Thanksgiving Day parade from his office. And she remembers too that her mother, who worked in designer Chester Weinberg's showroom, had impeccably cut blazers in every color made for her by her husband. "It may be why I love blazers so much," Karan says.

She was a terrible student. "I never went to school. I preferred fashion, making my own clothes. I would hang out in the art department, and never went to my academic classes." From age 14 she worked in a shop near her home in Cedarhurst, Long Island. "I grew up in retail," she says.

With Weinberg's help she got into the prestigious Parsons School of Design, but on probation. She never missed a day of class. She worked after school for young designer Chuck Howard and made sketches for Liz Claiborne, then a dress designer.

IT WAS HOWARD WHO in 1968 pushed the teen-ager to go see sportswear designer Anne Klein. She remembers wearing her best John Anthony pin-stripe suit and a white fedora and carrying her portfolio. "Walk for me," Klein ordered. "Why should I walk for you?" Karan asked. "Your hips are too big for a model," Klein said, dismissing her. "I know my hips are big, but I'm here for a design job," Karan insisted.

Klein hired her and urged her to quit school and work full time, which she did — until Klein fired her a short time later. "I just couldn't get it together," she says, pushing her hands through her black hair. "I was 18 years old, and I don't think anyone lasts on their first job. The shock of school and then reality."

She worked briefly for designer Patti Cappalli, who "got me thinking as a businesswoman," Karan says. But after traveling to Europe to see the fashion markets, she realized that "fashion was not going to be the only thing in life that would be important to me. I quickly got married, got my act together and a year later called Anne (Klein) and asked if I could come back to work. I was 19. I felt very badly when Anne fired me. I had to complete it with her."

SHE WORKED IN THE design studio with Klein, then began scouting fabrics in Europe with Julie Stern, now president of her company. She was still on the road when she was eight months pregnant, and she was back at work a week after the baby was born.

Upon Klein's death Karan was appointed designer for the Anne Klein collection, and she asked her Parsons chum Louis Dell'Olio to help her. "We were the suburban commuters at Parsons," she says. "One day we would have lasagna at his house, the next day he would have matzo-ball soup at mine. I would sew his clothes and he would draw mine — he is an incredible illustrator. We grew up as friends always wanting to work together."

Chi Omega style show scheduled

"Statement of the Season," Chi Omega sorority's fifth annual style show and brunch, is scheduled for 11:30 a.m. Saturday at the Holiday Inn Country Villa, 4300 W. Highway 80 in Midland.

The show will benefit Hearthstone, an emergency home for children. Hearthstone is currently under construction.

Fashions in the show will be from J.E. Borron, The Gazebo, The Canopy, Grigsby's Rag Doll, Janee's Evening Wear, La Mere Maternity, Pappagallo, Szor-Diener and Jim Ward's Tennis Shop at Midland Country Club. Jewelry will be from Corrigan's-Kruger.

Tickets are $10 each and may be purchased from any participating merchant.

Use care when soaking wool garments

Copley News Service

Soaking at low temperature is a very effective way of dealing with protein-content type stains, i.e., tea or coffee with milk, gravy, blood, etc.

Normally, soaking is not recommended for woolen garments as it risks fading the color, but it can be used as a last-resort procedure for badly stained garments that otherwise would be unwearable. Using proper care will minimize risks.

DEAR ABBY

Mother-in-law overstays her welcome before visit begins

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I've been married for two years to a man who never got along very well with his family. (I've never met any of them.)

His mother wrote to us saying she would like to visit us toward the end of the summer, so we invited her to come for four or five days. She wrote back saying she was coming for a two-week visit and was bringing her sister and her sister's daughter with her!

We wrote her saying we had a very small house and were not able to have guests for two weeks, but the three of them could come for one week only. Well, she wrote back and said she had to stay for two weeks to get a reduced air fare!

Dear Abby, are we stuck with three people for two weeks? We just can't handle it! His mother is not elderly, poor or disabled, if that makes a difference. Help! — NO NAME, OF COURSE

DEAR NO NAME: Even though this woman is your husband's mother, it doesn't give her the right to stretch a four- to five-day invitation to two weeks and bring two additional guests to boot.

Tell her that if they stay two weeks, you will be glad to make reservations at a nearby motel for the second week. And if you can't pick up the tab, send her the motel rates and ask for her preference.

DEAR ABBY: You missed the boat in your answer to "Bewildered," the couple who were sure that if they left their considerable estate to their only daughter, she would spend it all on her "no-good" husband.

You said, "There is no way you can control the way your daughter spends her inheritance." This is not so.

You should have suggested that they consult a lawyer experienced in wills and trusts, and consider leaving the inheritance in a trust for the benefit of their daughter for her lifetime. The trustee (probably a bank) could be directed to distribute the money, from the income or principal, only for the daughter's benefit, as the trustee decides is appropriate.

While the son-in-law would probably benefit indirectly from this arrangement, the daughter would get the primary benefit, and the principal of the trust would give her financial security for the rest of her life. — DONALD R. WAISEL, ATTORNEY AT LAW, HARRISBURG, PA.

DEAR MR. WAISEL: You are right, of course. And judging from the number of letters I received from lawyers and trust officers, I not only missed the boat, I missed the entire fleet.

DEAR ABBY: Two weeks ago I might have felt the same as "Disappointed Mom," but I hope that she will be thankful for her daughter's good qualities as you advised.

My daughter is nearly 20. She graduated No. 1 in her class and had her pick of the top colleges. She was beautiful and talented, but never seemed interested in boys the way most girls were.

After her freshman year of college, she told me she had fallen in love with another woman! My world fell apart, Abby. If she had had a normal heterosexual relationship, I would have overlooked everything else.

I still pray that some wonderful man will come along and sweep her off her feet. I love her with all my heart, but don't think I will ever be able to accept her lifestyle. — STILL HOPEFUL

DEAR STILL: If you love her, you will learn more about her "lifestyle." Do yourself — and your daughter — a favor, and write to PARENTS FLAG, P.O. Box 24565, Los Angeles, Calif. 90024.

The information is comforting, enlightening and free, but please enclose a long, stamped (39 cents), self-addressed envelope.

(Getting married? Send for Abby's new, updated, expanded booklet, "How to Have a Lovely Wedding." Send your name and address clearly printed with a check or money order for $2.50 and a long, stamped (39 cents) self-addressed envelope to: Dear Abby, Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

Furs, feathers, jewelry highlight fashion shows

By SUZY PATTERSON

PARIS (AP) — Furs, ostrich boas and elaborate jewels jazzed up runways in a spate of recent haute couture openings.

As Balmain, Cardin and Scherrer paraded their creations, it was clear that lengths can be anywhere but the close-body cut is important.

Smooth broadcloth, velvet, satin and taffeta dominate many outfits. While Erik Mortensen, the Balmain designer, went all out for an hourglass figure and a waspy waist in short daytime clothes, Pierre Cardin opted for a pencil-slim and long look.

Cardin brought in nine lovely models from China, where he now makes some of his clothes and, even more surprisingly, hopes to sell them. The outfits were just barely Chinese.

With narrow skirts to mid-calf slit for walking, and cropped pants, they nevertheless had the Cardin signatures: Amusing sleeves, such as the stiffened shoulders and elbows with points or a new invention of a big oval sleeve belted at the upper arm.

Fringed hems looking like loops, stovepipe hats and collars, bold jet buttons and other details gave these daytime and evening clothes the true ring of Cardin's style and humor.

Colors are autumnal or bright red and blue in soft cashmere and mohair fabrics. Shoulders are shapely and rounded. Cardin's sharp cut and welt seaming are prominent as always.

Some memorable gadgets include a lame and black evening bag in a shopping-bag shape and jewel-tipped earrings and pom-poms looking like sea anemones.

Jean-Louis Scherrer took inspiration from India and the Renaissance, and his swirling, ankle-length clothes never looked more elegant. The early numbers in ivory were firmly belted at the waist and topped with fox and lynx in big toque hats and stoles. The look of these was East Indian, as were some of the shimmering paisley fabrics in dressy jackets.

A winner should be the super cable-knit sweaters dotted with big rhinestones. His sober show, which never bared a knee — except for some saucy cocktail dresses — make a point. Keep the themes straight and simple.

There was a lot of black velvet, sometimes panne or combined with lace, sometimes very sober.

Scherrer brought the house down with his elaborately jeweled Renaissance gowns in combinations of irridescent taffeta, re-embroidred silk and lame.

The Balmain short clothes with their pleated ruffles or fur trims also had appeal, although there was as a somewhat stylized and 1940s air in the close fit.

Spiders shipped from Mexico create stir at American plant

By CAM ROSSIE
Associated Press Writer

MONTERREY, Mexico — Poisonous black widow spiders that hitched a ride to Michigan from an automobile parts plant near this northern industrial city have cost the company $50,000 so far, spokesmen said.

"We call them gold spiders," said Jorge de la Maza, general director of Carplastic, a Ford Motor Co. joint venture with the Mexican conglomerate Visa.

At least two dozen black widows have been found since June 25 in dashboard parts sent to a Ford plastics plant in Saline, Mich., Ford officials in Detroit reported.

The last spider was sighted more than a week ago, but authorities at the 3-year-old plant here said they are taking no chances.

The black widows, which have frightened but not bitten workers in Saline, hid in metal shipping racks that had been stored in a company warehouse, de la Maza said.

He said the spiders have been sighted occasionally on the outdoor patios at the Monterrey plant but that none of the plant's 820 workers has been bitten.

The problem, which surfaced after the Nuevo Leon state government began clearing a 240-acre brushy area near the plant for low income housing, has forced Carplastic to "take some drastic measures," de la Maza said.

The square metal basket-type racks holding the backplates — a part attached behind the dashboard — have been dipped in an insecticide to kill the spiders.

The company also has fumigated its entire plant and circled the area around the 175,000-square-foot plant with a "very strong insecticide," de la Maza said.

The baskets are fumigated again once they reach a customs broker in Laredo, Texas, before they go on to Saline by truck, he said.

A consultant hired for advice on the eradication program has discovered a few dead spiders and some egg sacs, de la Maza said. But, he said, company officials who check the plant daily have not seen any spiders, dead or alive, for at least a week.

De la Maza estimated the company has spent $50,000 so far on efforts to solve the problem.

Black widows are about the size of a grape and are characterized by a red hourglass shape on their bellies.

The bites usually aren't deadly, but symptoms include chills, fever, sweating, abdominal cramps, vomiting and pain, according to H.D. Cameron, arachnid curator at the University of Michigan's zoology museum in Ann Arbor.

Carplastic officials say they ship about 200 different types of plastic car parts to 13 plants in the United States, but the Saline plant is the only one to have reported seeing the unwelcome visitors.

"The problem is small," de la Maza said. "Of the 24 spiders found at the (Saline) plant, only three have been found inside the building. Others have been found outside."

Because of vacation scheduling in Saline, the parts sent there had been sitting in the warehouse for a couple of months before they were shipped, an unusual practice for the plant.

Company officials said late last week that fumigation efforts will continue for several more months to assure the problem has been solved.

Botha rejects Tutu's plea to talk

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — President Pieter W. Botha rejected a request Monday from Bishop Desmond M. Tutu, the Nobel Peace Prize laureate, for an urgent meeting to discuss South Africa's continuing civil unrest and the near-absolute powers Botha has given the police and army to deal with it.

In an equally tough reaction to the widespread international criticism of the state-of-emergency he declared 10 days ago, Botha threatened severe economic reprisals against South Africa's black neighbors if further sanctions are imposed on his country.

"Retaliation can be expected for every move against South Africa," Botha told a youth rally at Potchefstroom, 75 miles west of here.

Botha said that he had instructed state departments to draw up plans for the expulsion of the 1.5 million workers here from neighboring, black-ruled states, to prepare to close South Africa's ports, air space and railway network to those countries and to be ready to break off other economic and technical cooperation with them in the event of sanctions.

Ruling out conciliation, either at home or abroad, Botha declared that he, his government and all white South Africans were determined to hold on to what they have and "refuse to hand over our country to the forces of darkness."

Tutu, the Anglican bishop of Johannesburg, warned that Botha's refusal to open a dialogue with the country's 25 million black people would heighten the present crisis, which has left nearly 500 dead over the past year, and could foreclose a peaceful resolution of South Africa's problems.

"I've tried and I've failed," a dejected Tutu said of his effort to see Botha this week, adding that "only those unserious about the situation" could put off a meeting until Aug. 19, when the president will receive a delegation of church leaders.

Botha, in reply to Tutu's request for a meeting as quickly as possible, said that he was too busy to see him for the next three weeks and suggested that he join the other delegation, which will be led by Archbishop Phillip Russell, head of the Anglican church in South Africa.

Bishop Desmond Tutu conducts a news conferene following the failure of his attempt to bring South African President Pieter W. Botha to the bargaining table.

"I'm scared and frightened," Tutu said, explaining that black youths were becoming increasingly militant, rejecting negotiations and non-violence as ways to solve the country's problems and pushing moderate leaders like himself aside. "If he is unable to talk to someone like myself, it is highly unlikely he will talk to people who are, as they say, radical. ... "

Tutu, the 1984 Nobel Peace Prize winner, was rebuffed when he called Botha and asked for an immediate meeting. Botha issued a statement that said his schedule was too heavy. It noted that Tutu was a part of a delegation of Anglicans scheduled to meet with the president on Aug. 19.

A senior State Department official said the administration's statement was meant to encourage conciliation between whites and blacks in South Africa. "This is a very dangerous period," he said. "What we're trying to say is now is the time to get into bargaining with the black leadership."

The official would not respond to Botha's threat, made at a youth rally, that he would expel hundreds of thousands of black contract workers if further sanctions were imposed. "We're not going to get into a war of words," he said. "This is not the time for us to go around lighting a lot of matches."

Rep. Howard Wolpe, D-Mich., a frequent critic of the administration, said the State Department response was "pablum."

"It has no bite," he said.

Wolpe said that without some form of punitive sanctions, the administration's rhetorical heat would not frighten the South African government.

United States criticizes Botha's refusal

New York Times News Service

WASHINGTON — The State Department criticized President P.W. Botha of South Africa on Monday for refusing to meet with Bishop Desmond M. Tutu. It said the crisis faced by South Africa's white minority could be solved only through talks with black leaders.

The remarks were the first time the Reagan administration has directly criticized Botha's handling of the state of emergency declared in South Africa.

In urging that the government meet with Tutu, the administration also went beyond previous statements that did not identify any particular black leaders as being appropriate for talks.

"We are disappointed that Bishop Tutu's request for a meeting has not been favorably acted upon," said Charles Redman, a State Department spokesman.

"We believe South Africa's internal situation is such that a meeting between the state president and important black leaders is imperative," he said. "Dialogue between the government and the nation's black leaders is the only way out of the crisis South Africa faces."

WORLD IN BRIEF

Mexican security officer, others slain

DURANGO, Mexico (AP) — The governor's security chief and three other people, including the wife of the state supreme court president, were killed early Monday in a burst of machine-gun fire aimed at their car from a passing pickup truck, police said.

Authorities said they did not immediately know who committed the killings or why. The attack occurred at about 4 a.m. as the victims were returning from a cockfight in the capital city of the northwestern state of Durango, about 550 miles from Mexico City.

Jose Duran Valenzuela, chief of the judicial police, identified the victims as Fidel Arteaga Valdez, who as coordinator of police in Durango also served as the goveror's security chief; his 15-year-old son; his driver; and Magdalena Moreno de Hernandez, wife of the president of the Supreme Justice Tribunal of Durango.

Arteaga Valdez's wife was also in the car but was unhurt, Duran said.

Taiwan crime sweep collects 2,115

TAIPEI, Taiwan (AP) — Police say they have arrested 2,115 underworld figures in an anti-crime sweep that began in November.

A spokesman for the National Police Administration said Monday that 433 of the arrests took place in Taipei, 372 in Kuohsiung, Taiwan's largest port; and the remainder in other cities.

He said those arrested have been charged variously with murder, extortion, promiting prostitution, or with being members of underworld groups.

Among those arrested in the sweep were Chen Chi-li, 41, reputed leader of Taiwan's powerful Bamboo Gang and his deputy Wu Tun, 35.

Bigamy continues in parts of China

PEKING (AP) — More than 100 cases of bigamy and concubinage have been reported in a southern Chinese county despite national laws banning the feudal practices, the Peking Evening News said Monday.

The newspaper quoted legal reports as saying courts prosecuted 10 people in 1984 and five people this year in Puning county, Guangdong province, but 61 bigamy cases and 37 concubinage cases remain unresolved.

"The lax attitude by local officials toward bigamy and concubinage, failure to publicize the marriage law and ineffective suppression measures have contributed to a rise in bigamy and concubinage," the paper said.

Taking multiple wives and mistresses was common in imperial China, especially among wealthy landowners and government officials. The communists prohibited these practices after taking power in 1949.

Angolan rebels make capture claims

LISBON, Portugal (AP) — Angolan rebels said Monday they killed 112 government troops and 10 Cubans in combat July 18-25 in eight of the nation's 17 provinces. They said 11 rebels were killed, 27 were wounded and three were missing.

In its statement issued in Lisbon, the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola — UNITA — said it shot down a Mi-25 helicopter last Tuesday six miles east of Luso in Moxico province; captured the town of Lovua, close to the border with Zaire, on Wednesday, and attacked military convoys.

UNITA has fought to topple the Marxist government since shortly after Angola's 1975 independence from Portugal.

Military communiques issued in the Portuguese capital by both sides are rarely verifiable by independent observers.

Quake hits Afghanistan, Pakistan

PESHAWAR, Pakistan (AP) An earthquake capable of causing severe damage rumbled through rugged northern mountains in Afghanistan and Pakistan this morning, and two people were reported killed, authorities and seismological institutes said.

The quake jolted the Pakistani city of Peshawar, on the Afghan border, and also was felt in the Pakistani capital of Islamabad, 110 miles east, and in northern India.

The quake sent hundreds of frightened people into the streets in Peshawar as the movement rocked homes and buildings for about a minute, Pakistani officials said.

An official at Chitral, Pakistan, near the Afghan border, said he had received information from surrounding villages that two people were killed and two others injured. He spoke on condition he was not identified.

Authorities said communications had been disrupted in many areas and the death toll could be higher.

Newspaper says Sakharov released

HAMBURG, West Germany (AP) — A West German newspaper said Monday that Soviet dissident Andrei Sakharov was released from a hospital in good health and reunited with his wife in the Soviet city of Gorky.

The mass-circulation daily Bild said Sakharov left Gorky's Semashko Hospital on July 11, "obviously in good health." The newspaper said Sakharov was placed in the hospital in mid-April after starting a hunger strike.

Bild said its information was based on a 10-minute color videotape.
