Chinese War Lord Flees Peking

TWO YEAR RULE OF DICTATOR ENDS IN FLIGHT AS PEASANT ARMY REACHES GATES OF CITY

PEKING, June 3. (Sunday) (AP)—Chang Tso-Lin, northern dictator, left Peking on a special train for his stronghold, Mukden, Manchuria, at 1:15 o'clock this morning.

The Manchuria war lord thus ended his two-year rule in the historical capital of China, forced from the city by the powerful nationalist drive supported by Feng Yu-Hsiang, leader of the peasant's army and Yen Hsi-Shan, military governor of the province of Shansi.

Before leaving, Chang Tso-Lin asked Wang Shi-Chen, the elder statesman to assume responsibility for the preservation of order and asked the merchants of the city not to fear but to be loyal to Wang.

Wang is reported to have telegraphed to Yen Hsi Shan and Yen replied that no troops of the nationalist and allied forces would enter the capital.

Consequently there appeared to be a distinct prospect that Peking would change hands without serious disturbance.

HOME TOWN TALK

By B. D. D.

Gene Howe, "the Tactless Texan" of the Amarillo Globe, has created a furor because he said in his column that Col. Charles A. Lindberg had "a swelled head" and because he thought "never" was soon enough for Colonel Lindbergh to return to Amarillo. Amarillo school children are reported to have voiced a protest and there has been talk of a boycott of Mr. Howe's newspaper on account of his criticism of the air hero.

Those who don't know Gene Howe and his column in the Amarillo paper may think he has gotten himself into a bad hole by his criticism of an idol. But those who are familiar with the "Tactless Texan" look for Howe to come out of it with added prestige and popularity. Howe knows his feterita or whatever it is they grow around Amarillo, and he has some out of tight places before.

Of course nobody—not even Gene Howe himself—blames Colonel Lindbergh for dodging a reception committee when he is cruising around on private business. The mere thought of local dignitaries, badges, chicken salad and all the rest of the settings of receptions must make the colonel wonder why the Atlantic ocean was ever filled with water.

We're for Gene Howe and Colonel Lindbergh. Let the battle rage. And the Amarillo Globe's subscription list will grow.

If Colonel Lindbergh will only alight in Wichita Falls we will promise him there won't be any reception committee and he can fly around over the city all day if he wants to.

If Gene Howe will come down to

LINDBERGH WRITES TO AMBASSADOR HERRICK ON ANNIVERSARY OF FLIGHT

PARIS, June 2. (AP)—Although Col. Charles A. Lindbergh spent May 21, the anniversary of his arrival in Paris, in the utmost seclusion, he apparently thought enough of the anniversary to muse over it and to dream of the future, for on that day he wrote a letter to Ambassador Herrick in Paris, his host on his historic arrival in the French capital.

The letter, which was dated New York, May 21, and was received by Ambassador Herrick today, read:

"Dear Ambassador:

"It is a year ago tonight that I landed in Paris among a people who are now to me second only to my own.

"I wish that I might be spending this evening again in your embassy and among my friends in France.

"Paris does not seem 3600 miles away and some day it will be less than 30 hours from our shores.

"I cannot be with you tonight, but my thoughts are of Paris and France.

"As ever,

"CHARLES A. LINDBERGH."

Clouds Threaten Rain as Mercury Falls 12 Degrees

Clouded skies accompanied by a drop in temperature prevailed over the entire Wichita Falls territory Saturday night and threatened rain.

The Fort Worth and Denver reported a hard rain at Fort Worth Saturday afternoon and showers at Electra.

The Wichita Valley reported rains at Anson and Abilene. The Missouri-Kansas-Texas reported no rain at any point along the line.

The thermometer dropped 12 degrees in Wichita Falls from 5 to 8 p. m. and stood at 71 degrees at 8 o'clock.

SLAVS BOW TO ITALY'S DEMANDS FOR REPARATION

BELGRADE, Jugoslavia, June 2. (AP)—Jugoslavia has acceded to all of Italy's demands for reparation for the recent acts of violence against Italian consulates and individuals in Jugoslavia. The government, replying to an Italian note which requested moral and material reparation for the damage caused in the disorders, assured Premier Mussolini that the strongest measures will be instituted to prevent any further anti-Italian demonstrations.

MEXICAN SERVICE CAR DRIVERS ASK LICENSE

AUSTIN, June 2. (AP)—Pleas that Mexican service car drivers of South Texas are entitled to temporary permits under the state motor bus law, because they are claimed to have been operating before January 11, 1927, were injected Saturday into the state railroad commission's hearing on their applications to operate irregularly and without fixed routes, hauling Mexican laborers.

JURY STILL WORKING ON YANCY STORY CASE

SHERMAN, Texas, June 2. (INS) The jury in the case of Yancy Story, charged with robbery in connection with the holdup of a bank at Krum, Denton county, two years ago, resumed its deliberations this morning. After having the case in its hands 30 hours, the jury retired at 9:30 p. m., Friday, without reaching a verdict.

SHOWER TELEGRAMS RESENT AMARILLO ATTACK ON LINDY

AMARILLO, Texas, June 2. (AP) Telegrams are pouring in on Gene Howe, editor of the Amarillo Globe, who made editorial comment that Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh is afflicted with the "big head."

Most of the telegrams are biting in their criticism and refer to Mr. Howe as a "cheap publicity adventurer who has attacked a public idol for the purpose of attracting attention." A few commend his stand, however.

Many Amarillo people are rallying to the support of the editor, but there is some indignation here. Members of the editorial force of the Globe have asked police to keep an eye on Mr. Howe for fear that someone might attempt to do him bodily harm.

"I had no intention of stirring up this 'rookus,'" Mr. Howe said, "but now that it has started it's perfectly all right with me. I had no idea that my comment would be reprinted over the country.

"Lindbergh is only a boy, still moist behind his ears, and even if he has flown to Paris there is no reason why he should be permitted to be discourteous to those who have a natural and wholesome impulse to see him."

FIXING OF TAX RATE EXPECTED MONDAY NIGHT

EDICT REGARD HANDLING FRUITS AND VEGETABLES

All Retail Grocers and Others Interested in Matter Invited

The Wichita Falls city council will convene Monday night with two important matters scheduled for probable disposal, setting of the 1928 city tax rate and passage on first reading of an ordinance regulating the handling of fruits and vegetables in local grocery stores.

Mayor J. W. Akin said Saturday that he was desirous of having the council set the tax rate Monday as the people were entitled to know what the rate would be as soon as possible.

The charter sets forth that the tax rate for the year shall be set in one week after the appropriation ordinance, based upon the approved budget for the fiscal year, is passed. This ordinance was passed by the council last Monday night.

On the other hand it has been the custom of the council for the past several years to postpone setting of the tax rate until the equalization board finishes its work and the exact assessed valuation property in the city is known.

City officials said Saturday they had always been advised that this procedure was lawful and was in accordance with recent court rulings.

One of the six proposed amendments defeated in the city election April 3 was one that gave an extension of time for setting the tax rate after passage of the appropriation ordinance. It was explained by city officials at that time that

TWO INJURED IN FIRE DESTROYING HEADRICK HOTEL

ALTUS, Okla., June 2.—Fire of unknown origin totally destroyed the Barton hotel of Headrick and all contents at noon Saturday. Altus firemen were called and aided Headrick citizens to prevent damage to adjoining property.

The frame hotel was valued at about $5,000 and the contents at $4,000. Fire started at 11:30 a. m. and in 30 minutes the building had fallen through. A small amount of insurance was carried on the building and fixtures. C. B. Booker, filling station manager, and A. Cassity, restaurant manager, suffered burns fighting the fire to prevent it from reaching their business houses. They are not seriously injured. Mr. and Mrs. Barton sold their farm and bought the hotel about two years ago.

FARM LEGATES IN CHICAGO MAP PLAN FOR G.O.P. MEET

Iowa Leader Claims Farmers "Know Their Stuff"

CHICAGO, June 2. (AP)—Fifty men from middle-western farm states, described by M. J. Tobin, Vinton, Iowa, their leader, as "knowing their stuff in politics" took definite steps here today to make the farm belt's influence felt in the Republican national convention at Kansas City.

United States Senator James E. Watson of Indiana; Governor Adam McMullen of Nebraska, and George Peek of Moline, Ill., were named to prepare a farm relief resolution to be submitted to the party platform makers. Their suggested plank will be passed upon by another meeting of the Tobin committee in the Missouri city three days before the convention opens on June 12.

Want Equality

Tobin, a lawyer, and keynoter at the last Iowa state convention, explained that the voluntary committee which he heads is not bound to Frank O. Lowden, former Illinois governor, regarded as the most outstanding exponent of the McNary-Haugen bill, twice vetoed by President Coolidge.

"We want to make it clear to the east that we desire a candidate favorable to farm equality," said Tobin, and he enumerated Lowden, Vice President Charles G. Dawes, Senators Watson, Curtis and Norris as favorable.

His committee, which represents fourteen states and numbers 400, the Iowan continued, "is opposed to any man who is opposed to farm equality"—he hesitated before adding—"any man, whosoever he is."

Seek Action

Senator Watson is the candidate of the Indiana delegation, Curtis of Kansas and Norris of Nebraska.

If the Republican convention ignores the farm belt requests, Tobin said, "we'll be disappointed, surprised and we will have to do a lot of thinking."

Senator Gerald Nye of North Dakota was the only other United States senator at the meeting.

HEFLIN'S RANTINGS ARE "RIDICULOUS" SAYS SMITH BRAVE

WARRIORS NOT GUILTY OF DISTRIBUTING "WAMPUM"

Olvany Leaves Fishing Trip to Come Back to Al's Aid

NEW YORK, June 2. (US)—"Ridiculous!"

Thus did George W. Olvany, Tammany chieftain, characterize today the charges of United States Senator Heflin and other anti-Smith political warriors that Tammany is dispensing wampum in large quantities to win support for Governor Smith's presidential boom.

Temporarily occupying the spotlight in the senatorial probe of campaign funds, Mr. Olvany told United States Senators Stiewer, Bratton and Barkley that there is no need whatsoever to purchase popularity for New York's governor. He said with an emphatic snap in his judicial voice:

Grows Naturally

"Sentiment for Governor Smith is something that does not have to be cultivated by expenditure of large sums of money. It just grows naturally."

With equal emphasis, the Tammany chieftain denied that Tammany has held out offers of contracts to William F. Kenny or any other heavy contributors to Governor Smith's campaign fund. In fact, it appeared from his testimony, it is not customary for the big chief of the Tammany tribe to participate personally in the campaigns of his braves. He merely sits in his tepee, so to speak, and lets the committees do the work.

Star Witness

Mr. Olvany was, by a wide margin, the star of today's session of the senatorial campaign boom probers in the east ballroom of the hotel Pennsylvania. His presence had not really been expected, because Senator Stiewer, the chairman, had informed reporters Friday night he had no desire to call the Tammany chieftain back to town from his summer home at Blue Point. Still, Mr. Olvany, on

O. B. COLQUITT OPENS RACE IN SEYMOUR TALK

BUT AL'S NOMINATION IS CERTAIN, HE SAYS

Former Governor Tolerant In Religion; Favors Farm Aid

(Special to The Times)

SEYMOUR, Texas, June 2.—Conceding that Gov. Alfred E. Smith of New York will be nominated at the Democratic national convention at Houston, former Governor Oscar B. Colquitt launched into lengthy opposition of Smith's candidacy when he formally opened his campaign for the office of the United States senate here today.

The former governor centered his attack on Smith with the allegation that Smith, as a "product of Tammany," was a nullifier, that he was influenced by Wall Street and big corporate interests, and that he was in favor of unrestricted immigration. He did not, however, attack Smith on the religious issue, declaring in favor of religious tolerance.

The nomination of Smith, which the speaker regarded almost as a certainty, is to bring the voters against the twofold problem of prohibition and religion, Mr. Colquitt said, diverting to elaborate on the stand he has taken in the past in regard to the prohibition question. He explained that before the enactment of prohibition he had been an "anti," and today stuck by his guns with the assertion that "as an old anti, I say that prohibition has done more harm, than it has done good."

He added, however, that since the law is on the statute books, he believed in its strict enforcement, and that he had allied himself with the constitutional Democrats. Charging that Smith's attitude is contrary to his views, Mr. Colquitt brought applause when he exclaimed that should

REBEKAHS AND ODD FELLOWS MEMORIAL TO BE IN ELECTRA

All Odd Felows and Rebekahs of Wichita county and visiting members will join in a memorial service at the Baptist church in Electra Sunday night at the regular hour for service, about 7:45, when appropriate services will be held, followed by a sermon by the pastor.

On the following Sunday night all members of these orders in the county will again assemble at some church in Wichita Falls, the place to be announced later, for memorial services, and the other two Sundays of June will be used at Burkburnett and Iowa Park for the same purpose. This is the first time that these organizations have tried this plan. All Canton members are urged to attend in full equipment.

The various branches of these orders have been very busy of late, and many have received the degree work.

The canton will hold its regular meeting next Thursday night, and every Chevalier in the county is expected to be present, equipped and ready for work.

MOST HAZARDOUS TASK AHEAD FOUR EN ROUTE TO AUSTRALIA BIG PROBLEM LEAVING GROUND

HONOLULU, June 2. (AP)—Just before leaving for Kauai with the monoplane Southern Cross, Charles Ulm, co-pilot, announced plans to hop off for Suva at daybreak Sunday.

HONOLULU, June 2. (US)—On one task well done, four suddenly famous men turned their backs today. Toward another, biggest and most hazardous of any yet attempted, the crew of the gallant monoplane, Southern Cross, directed their attention.

They saw necessity of lifting almost eight tons from the treacherous runway of Barking Sands field. They saw that they must keep their plane in the air for some 36 hours. They saw that they must keep it headed, over 3144 miles of ocean, straight toward a mere speck in that vastness.

They saw all this, and they said: "If humanly possible, we start tomorrow."

Captain Charles Kingsford-Smith, C. T. P. Ulm, Harry W. Lyon, James Warner, every man of that crew is confident of completing this flight from the Hawaiian islands to Suva in the Fijis. They are certain that their plane will carry them over the longest ocean stretch yet braved by airmen. It is part of their itinerary on a 7800-mile flight from America to Australia and they are anxious to be away.

Said Ulm early this morning: "We are doing our utmost to keep to our schedule. We want to go to Barking Sands field today. And we want to start on the Suva hop tomorrow."

So, with the same thoroughness which marked the first jump on their itinerary, they began preparations. They checked their machine and its engines thoroughly. They studied weather conditions. They procured data on islands which they will pass on the way—and even arranged for preparation of an emergency field in the Phoenix group.

May Make Emergency Landing

Ulm explained: "If the trade winds blow as indicated in weather reports—favorable—we shall make a non-stop flight to Suva. If not, then we may make an emergency landing on the Island of Canton, in the Phoenix group."

These islands lie directly on the Hawaii-Fiji course, just south of the equator, 1744 miles from Barking Sands field. Canton, largest of the group, is about nine miles long and half as wide.

The flyers, themselves, declared their planes in fine condition after its 2400-mile cruise from the mainland. They indignantly denied reports published this morning that one motor is in need of overhauling.

"That story," Ulm said, employing a newly acquired Americanism, "is all hay-wire. If our engines need repair we are not yet aware of it. We hope to get away tomorrow for Barking Sands."

Which means, if conditions are favorable, the big Fokker will start on the second of its four hops to Australia tomorrow. If not—"not later than Monday" is the assurance given by the crew.

Kingsford-Smith and Ulm are determined to adhere to that schedule. They must do it, they said, to silence criticism aroused in Australia by their delay in starting—criticism which referred to them as "non-hop" flyers, and commented caustically upon their intentions.

"We have gone into this thing

FIRM BELIEF HELD FOR SAFETY OF DIRIGIBLE

Messengers to Begin Real Overland Search for Italia Monday

KING'S BAY, (By radio from the Citta di Milano) June 2, 7 a. m.—For the first time after 10 days of gloom it is very fine this morning and we are enjoying a mild temperature under a brilliant sky. Our enjoyment is all the keener inasmuch as this atmospheric truce ought to help our search party on its way from South Gate to Mossel Bay where they should arrive tomorrow or Monday.

Maybe they already know the fate of our comrades aboard the Italia. By order of Commander Romagna the search party will send news by special messengers to Green Harbor. These messengers will be selected from local hunters and trappers who know every inch of the ground.

To Recruit Crew

The motor whaler Braganza, therefore, should find at South Gate a fairly complete preliminary report from the search party. The Braganza carries a wireless transmitter and will forward immediately to the Citta di Milano all the items of urgent interest.

From South Gate the Braganza will attempt to reach Mossel Bay, or at least Verlegen Hook, which is the extreme point of New Friesland peninsula. The Braganza will be placed under military command and an adequate number of men recruited locally and who are specially fitted for polar reconnoissance work will be embarked with ample material supplies.

Search Begins Monday.

But the real organized search will only begin after the arrival of the Hobby, which is expected Monday. Lieut. Hertsow Holm is on board with his airplane but it is believed he will not begin his exploration flight until after the arrival of Lieut. Riiser Larsen, who has not yet left Bergen.

In the event of Lieut. Holm

Court Decision Allows Kemper and Histed $800,000 Fees for Service In Orient Railroad Receivership

KANSAS CITY, June 2. (AP)—Word was received here today that the United States court of appeals in St. Paul has handed down a decision in connection with the reorganization of the Kansas City, Mexico & Orient railroad, allowing W. T. Kemper, president and former receiver, and Clifford Histed, general counsel, $800,000 for the 10-year period the road was in receivership and the period of reorganization.

The court virtually sustained Judge John C. Pollock of the Kansas district federal court on all points relating to the reorganization of the road. Judge Pollock granted Mr. Kemper and Mr. Histed $1,068,750 as fees for their services.

The appellate court's decision allowed Mr. Kemper $40,000 a year for the period and Mr. Histed $35,000 a year, and interest.

Mr. Histed said the compensation was merely a matter of "bookkeeping." The compensation for himself and Mr. Kemper, he said, would be taken in Orient stock, as approved by the district court and the circuit court of appeals.

The action by the court, Mr. Histed said, gives a freedom of action to the Orient which had been held in check by the pending litigation and appeals taken from Judge Pollock's original findings by Frank M. Swacker, attorney for English noteholders.

Although he would not comment in detail on the decision in the absence of a formal copy of the opinion, Mr. Histed indicated the Orient now could proceed with construction and physical operation of the road.

It was learned the circuit court of appeals had disapproved of criticism of the receiver and the general counsel which had been made by English noteholders, and disposed of all objections made by these noteholders to the reorganization plan of handling the property.

Under the reorganization plans, a Kansas City group, headed by Mr. Kemper, will own a majority of the stock and control the road.

With the prompt response of some 12 or 14 Wichitans and one resident of Bellevue, the Times-Record News Milk and Ice Fund has passed the $100 mark during its first week. In addition to the money donations, Walter B. Sisk, proprietor of the Lakeside dairy, called Lester Jones, treasurer of the fund, to promise four quarts of milk each day, delivered.

One case of typhoid fever is already needing attention, with its call for ice. There are six children in the family, ranging in age from 19 years to 18 months. The father has a job now, but has been without work for a long time and is finding it hard to make ends meet. The family lives in a shanty in which there is only one bed. Such members as can not get on it sleep on the floor, and do their cooking outside. The 14-year-old girl is the one who has typhoid. While the others have all been given typhoid serum, welfare officials are anxious to keep them all in as good condition as possible, supplementing the meager family diet with milk, and supplying ice for the comfort of the sick girl.

So far, there has not been much sickness among the needy this spring and summer, according to Mrs. Effie McHam, secretary of the Family Relief association, but the lack of employment for some months past is making that organization's bill for milk and groceries unusually heavy. Unless ice and milk are supplied, however, many families will succumb to the heat and the diseases of summer.

Each person in Wichita Falls may have a part in this fund. Small donations are as necessary as the large ones, if the needs are to be supplied. If you wish to help, fill out the following blank and bring or send it to The Times office, with your donation:

Senate Committee to Investigate Misuse Patronage in P. O. Jobs in South to Start Probe on June 15

WASHINGTON, June 2. (US)—Confronted with charges of a governmental scandal of huge proportions, the special senate committee to investigate the alleged misuse of federal patronage in postoffice jobs in southern states will get down to business June 15, Senator Brookhart, Republican, of Iowa, chairman announced today.

The investigation was asked by Senators George and Harris of Georgia, who charged that under the patronage system in their state and other southern states, persons seeking federal jobs were required to contribute liberally to Republican campaign funds and continue their donations afterwards.

They further charged an alarming number of shortages in accounts of postoffice employes in southern states, and declared it could be shown that in large measure this was due to demands for Republican contributions.

"These charges are of a most serious nature and the committee will strive to sift them to the bottom," declared Brookhart. As soon as the national conventions are out of the way, so that witnesses will be available the committee will visit the states concerned, Brookhart said.

The first stop will be Atlanta, where Senators Harris and George will be asked to lay their charges before the committe in detail to establish the basis for the inquiry.

Opportunity will be given for postoffice department chiefs to present their side both at the hearings in Washington and in the south, Brookhart declared.

RESULTS

THE TIMES AND RECORD NEWS ads are famed for producing results, but here is one unusual incident we are pleased to relate that made the advertiser happy by restoring a Chevrolet roadster in record-breaking time. The Times and Record News ads have found jobs, rented houses and apartments, sold homes and used cars regularly but are not so frequently sent on the mission of recovering cars taken for their owners. Mrs. W. J. Barrett, 1813 Rose street, inserted the following ad:

$10.00 REWARD for information leading to recovery of Chevrolet roadster stolen Monday night. Late 28 model, color dark blue, license No. 974-942. Phone 9369.

No sooner had THE TIMES reached Bowie, than it brought a message from the police that the car was located, and she was immediately advised. "Money's worth in short order" is THE TIMES AND RECORD NEWS' reputation. It is being maintained.

hearing that the committee had been making inquiries for him, decided to double in his tracks and come back to town voluntarily. He presented himself before the investigators wearing a natty summer suit and a coat of bronze, quite becoming a big chief. He was called to the witness chair almost immediately upon his entrance.

Explains Tammany

One of the first things Mr. Olvany did was try to clarify in the senatorial minds the difference between Tammany Hall and the Democratic organization of which he is head. Asked if he were a member of Tammany Hall, he held a whispered confab with Senator Stiewer. The purport of this was that Tammany Hall is a building in which the Democratic county committee has its headquarters. That is why the Democratic county committee is referred to as the Tammany organization.

Tammany Hall, he told the senators, is owned by the Tammany society or Columbian order. This he explained is an old "patriotic society" including in its membership many Republicans as well as Democrats. In this society he is merely one of a number of sachems, while John R. Voorhis, the 97-year-old commissioner of elections, is grand sachem. Governor Smith is also just a sachem. He was asked:

"Do you know of any financial contribution or expenditure by Tammany to aid Governor Smith?"

He replied:

"In reference to the Tammany society, it has contributed nothing and it has received nothing. In reference to the Democratic county committee, it has received nothing and spent nothing, and it has not received any request for money. The only money it has received was a contribution of $7 in a letter, of which $5 was turned over to Mr. George R. Van Namee, (Smith compaign manager). Two dollars was expended for postage."

sighting the missing crew, a large search party with sledges drawn by dogs, and large supply tents, food, medicines, etc., will set out at once. This plan obviously cannot be executed now. A few more days must elapse before anything practical can be done. It is extremely tantalizing to have to spend all these days in apparent inaction, but on the other hand, careful preparations require time and thought.

Noblie Brave

The coolest man aboard the Citta di Milano is Anedo Noblie, the general's brother. His robust optimism is an inspiration to all of us. We are more than ever convinced that whatever has happened to the Italia, General Nobile and his crew have escaped death. Our experts feel certain that nothing worse than a forced landing has occurred, in which case the damage sustained by the airship would explain the silence, but the crew would be safe and may even be standing by the deflated hull of the Italia.

Location Unknown

Unfortunately the ground to be covered by the various search parties is little known even to the local explorers. After his return from his dash toward Nicholas the Second land. General Nobile informed us that according to observations made from the airship while flying over Svalbard an important fact was discovered which is at variance with existing maps of that region.

We have just received from Cardinal Gasparri, secretary of state at the vatican, the following radiogram in reply to a message dispatched by Father Fianfranceschi, chaplain of the Citta di Milano, to his holiness, the pope on his birthday: "Sharing your hopeful anxiety and praying assiduously for our dear missing sons, his holiness, the pope, sends his thanks as his blessing for the entire crew of the Citta di Milano."

exhaustively," Kingsford-Smith said today, "and we want 100 per cent performance all the way to our destination."

Doubt Take-Off Possible

And while the four men were confidently going ahead with preparations local aviators were expressing doubt concerning their ability to lift their heavily laden plane from the shifting surface of Barking Sands field. They pointed out that Richard Grace, stunt flier, was unable to take-off in a much lighter plane, while attempting a flight to the mainland.

No such doubts assail the crew of the Southern Cross. Ulm made this known this morning when he said: "At the take-off from Kauai, the plane may be heavier loaded than ever before. But we know she will lift it. And I know Smithy's skill well enough to have no worries."

Barking Sands, the field on Kauai, has a runway of 4500 feet. In favor of a successful take-off is the fact that the field is graded; against it is the uneven and soft nature of the surface.

In reviewing the 2400-mile hop of Thursday and yesterday, Ulm heaped praise upon the radio equipment. "That radio was a triumph," he said. "We had continuous two-way communication with dozens of shore stations and ships. How well the equipment performed was learned today in a telegram from station POA-3-V in Johannesburg, South Africa. That distant point declared it had received the plane's messages throughout the flight.

All four fliers declared themselves well rested today after a good night's sleep. By way of diversion, they swam at the famous Waikiki beach this morning with Art Goebel and Martin Jensen, successful transpacific pilots in the Dole race.

The Memphis Gold Medal band, which has won more honors than almost anything or anybody in Northwest Texas, has been selected as one of the bands to play for the Democratic national convention at Houston. We hear the band is prepared to play "The Sidewalks of New York" if called upon.

Big oil wells in Young and Wilbarger counties have started a lot of drilling in those counties. Oil refiners in this district are making money for the first time in two years. Wheat cutting has started. Farmers are busy with the biggest cotton acreage in years. Outside concerns are taking long leases on Wichita Falls business property. Draw your own obvious conclusions.

We hope that progress is being made in the drafting of a zoning ordinance for the city of Wichita Falls. As we understand it, the civic development committee of the chamber of commerce has been charged with the duty of furnishing the city council with the draft of an approved ordinance. The members of this committee are W. S. Curlee, chairman; Harry Hines, Dr. J. W. Cantwell, Mrs. P. A. Welty, Mrs. M. H. Glover, Saul Lebenson and W. E. Wightzel. Reads like a committee that will get something done.

I. C. C. APPROVES LEASE CINCINNATI RAIL LINES

WASHINGTON, June 2. (UP)—The Interstate Commerce Commission today approved modification and extension of the lease of the Cincinnati Southern railway to the Cincinnati, New Orleans and Texas Pacific railway. The road asked to change the lease because it wished to spend approximately $13,000,000 in new double trackage.

FALLS COUNTY YOUTH FACES DEATH CHARGE

MARLIN, Texas, June 2. (INS)—W. E. Frazier, 23, today was under charges of murder in connection with the slaying of his brother-in-law, R. M. Landrum, in the western part of Falls county Friday. Frazier's sister had filed suit for divorce from Landrum a few days ago.

FIXING TAX RATE EXPECTED MONDAY

the proposed amendment was only to bring the charter up to date and make it read in accordance with the practice that had been followed.

$1.50 Tax Rate Probable

Indications were Saturday that the tax rate this year will be set at $1.50 per $100 taxable valuation, instead of $1.40 as last year. This increase has been made necessary, it was explained, to bring the interest and sinking fund up to the required amount.

There is now a deficit of $98,000 in the interest and sinking fund, which has accumulated from previous years, officials said. With this increase of 10 cents about $50,000 of this delinquent amount could be paid off this year and the remainder erased next year.

The budget adopted by the council last week provides for an interest and sinking fund of $270,000.

Much interest has been shown in a proposed ordinance regulating the handling of fruits and vegetables by the public in local grocery stores. The council instructed City Attorney Thelbert Martin last week to draw up this proposed ordinance and it is to be presented for consideration at Monday night's meeting.

All grocery store owners and managers in the city, as well as all interested citizens, have been invited by the council to be present when the ordinance is discussed and make public their views upon the proposed measure.

Two ordinances repealing paving assessments on two sections of the city are to be presented at Monday night's session. One of these will repeal the assessment against property on Twenty-first street from Bluff to Burnett and the other against property on a section of King's highway.

A public hearing will be held on a proposal of B. H. Black of Dallas, to erect an ice manufacturing plant at 1307 Eleventh street.

HOUSTON RATE TRIAL POSTPONED BY COURT

AUSTIN, June 2. (AP)—Trial of the appeal of the Houston chamber of commerce and others from a state railroad commission order equalizing cotton rates to Texas ports at a flat 81 cents a hundred pounds, has been continued until next term of the Travis county district court, Assistant Attorney General Joe Brown said Saturday. The case had been set for trial Monday.

NATIONAL CONVENTIONS PROMISE LIVELY POLITICAL SCRAPS

Republican Meeting Will Be Far From Love Feast and Democrats to Face Hard Fight in Party Council

WASHINGTON, June 2. (AP)—The Republicans are moving on Kansas City, with many of their leaders about convinced that the coming national convention will be far from a love-feast.

Bitter animosities have been aroused, and unless all signs fail they will provoke more than one ruckus just before and during the balloting for a presidential nominee less than a fortnight hence. Rival campaign managers, some of them already on the battle ground, are making conflicting claims of strength on behalf of their candidates, and the whole situation has been beclouded further by factional strike over the farm relief question.

Hoover's lieutenants, with the show-down near, are refraining from predictions that the commerce secretary will go over on the first ballot. They are striving and hoping for that, but for the moment seem content to pass the word that their man has around 700 first and second choice votes all lined up. A majority, 545, will be needed to nominate.

Arrayed against Hoover, who will remain in Washington during the convention, is a field of presidential aspirants and party leaders who are determined to head off his nomination. In this group is Lowden of Illinois, who in 1920 made a losing fight for the presidential nomination and four years ago turned down a chance to be Coolidge's running mate.

This year Lowden stands second only to Hoover in the number of delegates buttoned during the pre-convention season. Among his supporters are many influential Republicans from the corn and wheat belt who are considerably wrought up over President Coolidge's veto of the McNary-Haugen bill. They look on Lowden as their champion, and a movement is on foot for a trek of farmers to Kansas City to impress on the convention delegates the contention that only a man to their liking can carry the farming states of the west in the coming election.

Those who are fostering the farmers' protest almost to a man are for Lowden. They regard Hoover with particular disfavor, insisting that he has worked against the interests of the farmer in the past and has given support to Coolidge in his rejection of the McNary-Haugen bills.

The Republicans are not the only ones who have troubles on their hands.

Still a bit scarred up by the drawn-out convention battle at Madison Square garden four years ago, the Democrats will assemble in Houston June 26. Whether their convention will be a get-together or lead to a parting of ways is one of the many political developments the future holds in store.

Smith got off to an early start in the annexing of delegates, many of them tied to him under definite instructions from the folks at home. Even his foes concede that he has a majority, or close to that, in the bag, but they are rallying their forces to keep him away from the necessary two-thirds majority.

Supporters of the New York governor insist that he is so far in the lead that he can't be headed off. Those working to stop him are looking to the south and a half dozen "favorite son" states for the votes to keep the Democratic nomination out of his hands. They say they will have the strength, at least at the outset, of balloting.

While Smith's opponents are attempting to strengthen their lines so they would hold against a strong tide toward him, his own men are directing their campaign not only to win and win early, but to avoid battle scars. A deadlock, as they see it, would stir up bad feeling that might work to the disadvantage of the party nominee in the campaign and is one of the things to be avoided.

On the other hand, Smith's foes, who say they will fight it out to the finish, see in a deadlock their only chance to block him, and are going along on the theory that if one develops, much of the strength Smith has accumulated would dissipate.

HOUSTON PROVIDES HOSPITALITY HOUSE 'DEMO' CONVENTION

HOUSTON, Texas, June 2.—Although construction of the Democratic convention hospitality house was started only last Tuesday, the structure is rapidly assuming its final form and, according to the contractors, the building will be ready fully a week before the start of the quadrennial gathering June 26.

The frame-work of the elongated building, which stretches out for an entire block rises today where almost yesterday stood rows of dwellings. The homes were removed to make room for the hospitality structure, a project which covers an entire section bounded by Walker avenue, Bagby street, McKinney avenue and Brazos street.

Located just across the street from the $175,000 Democratic coliseum, the hospitality house is situated for the convenience of those stepping out of the coliseum for rest periods and also for those who are unable to get into the coliseum. Loud speakers at the doors of the coliseum will announce to the hospitality house crowds just what is going on in the party meetings.

The hospitality house is being constructed in a shed formation, with its center double-decked as a general assemblage place. Within that space 3500 persons can congregate, while thousands more will be accommodated within the two prongs of the building. Its cost is approximately $25,000.

Furnished with a dozen desks there will be writing rooms for men and women. More than 100 fans will be installed in all of the rooms and iced drinking fountains will be conveniently located throughout the structure. Four information booths will be open 24 hours a day.

At the east end of the building a completely equipped hospital will be located. Adjoining the hospital will be headquarters for the convention housing committee, where visitors may obtain living quarters without delay or inconvenience. Nothing will be left undone for the general comfort of the visitors. Many rest rooms now are being installed. Located in the upper deck will be a band stand and promenade. On each side of the building there will be open air walks.

G. O. P. Leaders Almost Overlook Women Voters as Fair Delegates To National Convention Are Few

WASHINGTON, June 2. (AP)—The women of America, constituting 49 per cent of the eligible electorate, will be represented at the 1928 Republican convention by less than six per cent of the delegates. Final returns from all states except West Virginia show a total of 64 Republican women delegates, in a total of 1089 as compared to 120 with 111 votes at Cleveland four years ago.

Women alternates this year will number 239, exclusive of West Virginia, as compared to 279 in 1924. This brings the number of women who will have seats in the convention hall up to 303, or about 15 per cent of the total representation. Four years ago 399 women were delegates or alternates.

Although several states have certified a large number of women as alternates, Missouri having an almost wholly feminine alternate slate, fifteen states will send no women delegates, and five states, four territories and the District of Columbia will send no women at all, either delegates or alternates. This last fact does not represent a change numerically since 1924, as the same number of states and territories sent only men to Cleveland. But this year the states sending no women are predominantly western, Montana, Nevada, Oregon, South Dakota, in addition to South Carolina, whereas in 1924 they were chiefly southern, South Carolina, Louisiana, Georgia, Alabama, together with Idaho.

West Virginia, the returns from which are not yet in, is not expected to certify any women delegates but may possibly send one or two women among its alternates. In 1924 it had one woman alternate at Cleveland.

Two states, Wisconsin and Louisiana, will have women delegates at the convention but no women alternates. This happened in the cases of Arkansas, Mississippi, Nevada and Oregon in 1924.

The outstanding change at Kansas City is in the decreased proportion of women delegates from the states sending them and in the increased number of states sending women only as alternates. In 1924 there were only three in the latter category, Florida, South Dakota and West Virginia, whereas, this year there are fifteen, Alabama, Arkansas, Colorado, Florida, Georgia, Idaho, Indiana, Kansas, Mississippi, New Hampshire, New Mexico, North Carolina, Tennessee, Texas and Wyoming.

Wyoming, the first state to have a woman governor and the first to have woman suffrage, which was incorporated in the state constitution when it entered the union in 1890, will have no women official delegates at the Republican convention. It will send three women as alternates to Kansas City, however, and six women, three delegates and three alternates will represent it at Houston in the Democratic convention.

Four Dallas Men Are Found Guilty of Booze Charges

DALLAS, Texas, June 2. (AP)—Two Dallas physicians, a local drug store proprietor and his prescription clerk, charged with conspiracy to violate the national prohibition act, were found guilty today and sentenced to serve terms in the federal penitentiary by United States District Judge W. H. Atwell.

The quartet involved were Dr. Lee Robinson and Dr. Eugene J. Irvine, each sentenced to a year and a day in Leavenworth, and Robert Alexander Blaine Jr., drug store proprietor and his prescription clerk, Thomas Edwin Culwell, each sentenced to serve 15 months.

TEXAS OIL PROMOTER FACES FRAUD CHARGE

FORT WORTH, June 2. (AP)—Charged with using the mails to defraud, W. O. Holliday, oil promoter, was free today after having furnished bond in the amount of $5000 last night before U. S. commissioner here. He was arrested in Breckenridge yesterday on a warrant charging misuse of the mails in literature sent to Miss Mary Bailile of Los Angeles, officers said.

Mid-West Farm Chiefs to Visit Houston Demo Meeting If G.O.P. Fail to Give Ear at Kansas City

CHICAGO, June 2. (AP)—The farmer protest movement, crystalized by the presidential veto of the McNary-Haugen farm relief bill, concentrated its leaders here today to plan its assault June 12 upon the Republican national convention at Kansas City.

The announced objectives of the movement were two; first, the nomination by the Republicans of a middle westerner; and second, a Republican party pledge to make the tariff effective on farm products.

Chairmen of the general committee in 14 states had been called for today's meeting, which was arranged by M. J. Tobin of Vinton, Iowa, an active supporter of the presidential candidacy of Frank O. Lowden of Illinois. The movement embraces supporters of Lowden and Senators Watson, Indiana, and Curtis, Kansas.

Gov. Adam McMullen of Nebraska, who has been a leader in urging emphatic measures for carrying the farmer protest before the Republican convention, said his plan of a farmer caravan moving on the convention city has brought him thousands of letters promising support and participation.

Three circus main tops, he said, have been arranged for, and will be accommodate the farmer caravans. Parking sites have been provided, he added, both in Kansas City, Mo., and Kansas City, Kan.

While the Chicago meeting was attracting many of the leaders in the protest movement, the Corn Belt federation at Des Moines, Iowa, indicated through its chairman, William Hirth of Columbia, Mo., that the corn belt would "go to Houston" if the Republicans failed to satisfy farmer demands both as to platform and candidate.

"If we cannot get what we are entitled to at Kansas City, we feel sure we will find a welcome and a new hope at the Democratic national convention at Houston," Hirth said. "Unless the nominee at Kansas City is acceptable to the farmers, the convention will mark the breaking up of the Republican party."

TRADE COMMISSION REPLIES TO CRITICISMS

WASHINGTON, June 2. (AP)—Attacks on the fitness of Commissioner Humphrey to participate in a federal trade commission inquiry into the Royal Baking Powder company made by Mrs. Harvey W. Wiley, wife of the food specialist, and Frederick C. Fitch, vice-president of the company, caused the commissioner to retort today that the purpose of the criticism was to "delay or prevent the case against the company from coming to trial."

PRESIDENT WILL ISSUE STATEMENT BEFORE CONVENTION

WASHINGTON, June 2. (US)—President Coolidge will issue some kind of statement on his future plans in advance of the Republican convention at Kansas City, according to a rumor emanating from the White House today.

The rumor, however, could not be confirmed. Officially the president kept his peace. So far as any one could be positive of anything, he has indicated to no one whether he would accept the nomination should he receive it, or whether he will head off the unmistakable trend in that direction with a precise statement saying that he will not accept.

In the meantime he made it quite clear that should he decide to do anything in this connection, it will not be Monday. He boarded the Mayflower, the presidential yacht, this afternoon and steamed down the Potomac river toward Chesapeake bay. He is to return late Sunday night or Monday morning.

FORMER BANK PREXY GETS SIX-YEAR HITCH

KANSAS CITY, Mo., June 2. (UP) Walter Cravens, former president of the Kansas City joint stock land bank, today was sentenced to six years in the federal penitentiary on charges of misappropriating the funds of the bank and of making false entries. He also was fined $25,000.

CONTROL BOARD PROBES HOSPITAL FIRE ESCAPES

Wichitans Enroll In Texas Artists' Christoval Camp

Some of his paintings have been hung in the National academy, Philadelphia Art institute, exhibition of American artists at Chicago Art institute, Delgado Art museum, St. Louis Art museum, and Cincinnati Art museum. Miss Brunet has recently returned to Texas after maintaining a studio in New York City for 13 years. She has exhibited in New York, Philadelphia, Dallas, Austin and San Antonio.

Mr. Gonzales is a native of Spain, a student in San Carlos Art academy of Mexico City, and instructor in the San Antonio Art school and the Sam Houston school, San Antonio.

EMPLOYES OF ELECTRIC COMPANY HOLD SAFETY GATHERING AND PICNIC

Approximately 150 employes of the Texas Electric Service company attended the regular bi-monthly safety meeting of the company Friday evening when Dr. Nat F. Grafton, pastor of the First Presbyterian church, and Mayor J. W. Akin were the principal speakers.

Dr. Grafton spoke on the subject of "The Dignity of Life." Mayor Akin discussed the city's finances, pointing out that a tax rate of $1.50 would in all probability be necessary this year in order to meet the deficit in the interest and sinking fund carried over from previous years.

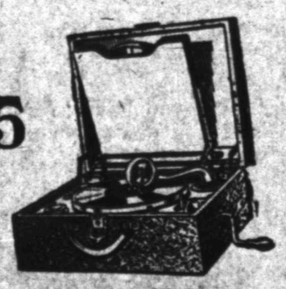

The safety meeting was held in the electric company's warehouse at the corner of Mill and Chester streets.

On Saturday afternoon members of the Tesco club, composed of employes of the electric company and their families, held a picnic at Haven park. Games and contests were enjoyed. A basket dinner was served.

MOB SHOOTS TWO NEGRO PRISONERS

Alexandria, La., Is Scene Of Lynching Attack On Suspects

ALEXANDRIA, La., June 2. (AP)—Two negroes were taken from officers by a mob near here today and shot to death.

The negroes were Lee and Dave Blackman, whom the officers were taking from the jail at Leesville to Shreveport for safe keeping. The negroes were brothers of William Blackman, who killed Deputy Sheriff J. Frank Phillips near Long Leaf three weeks ago.

Phillips had gone to the negro's home to arrest him on a charge of violating the prohibition law. The negro fatally shot the deputy, who before he died killed the negro.

Lee and Dave Blackman were arrested in connection with the affair and today officers started with them for Shreveport when the mob appeared five miles from Boyce, overpowered the officers and shot the negroes to death.

The two negroes were held at Leesville and it was decided to move them to Shreveport when Sheriff Turner learned that threats had been made to take them from the jail and lynch them.

Three deputies left Leesville early today and when they were near Boyce they encountered a large car containing a number of men parked across the road. The men demanded that the prisoners be turned over to them after which they surrounded the officers and took the negroes out of the car. They then ordered the officers to move on.

When the officers were a short distance away they heard a fusilade of shots. The mob then dispersed and nothing more was seen of the men.

The deputies returned to Boyce and notified the sheriff, who stated a vigorous inquiry would be launched. There were between 20 and 25 in the mob, officers stated.

FLOOD THREAT LEAVES KANSAS RIVER VALLEY

EMPORIA, Kan., June 2. (UP)—Flood waters in the Neosho valley were draining back into their banks today. High waters in other parts of the valley, however, were feared as the crest moved downward. Chanute, Parsons, Emporia and Burlington were points where the water was watched with some apprehension for crops.

WEATHER MAN TO AID AVIATORS ON COURSE

WASHINGTON, June 2. (UP)—Assistant Secretary of Commerce MacCracken announced today that a new meteorological service for airplane operating between San Francisco and Los Angeles will be started at once.

The service will furnish pilots with short range weather forecasts and general information on conditions along the route.

U. S. ENVOY MARRIES MISS MAUD HUNNEWELL

LONDON, June 2 (INS)—Ray Atherton of Chicago, counselor of the United States embassy, and Miss Maude Hunnewell, daughter of the late Hollis Hunnewell of New York and Boston, were married today at the Holy Trinity church, Brompton.

SLEUTHS HUNT THREE GUNMEN AFTER RAID

NEW YORK, June 2. (INS)—Through a stolen sedan abandoned by the bandits, detectives today were tracing three gunmen who snatched $16,000 cash and bonds of approximately $50,000 value from two employes of the Bank of Washington Heights.

COUZENS WILL RENEW ATTACK ON ARCH FOE

WASHINGTON, June 2. (UP)—The feud between Secretary of the Treasury Mellon and Senator Couzens of Michigan is somnolent, but not dead, it was learned here today. Undaunted by his failure to get action at the session just ended on a resolution demanding Mellon's resignation, Couzens announced he will re-introduce it when congress reconvenes next winter.

How Much Water Should Baby Get?

A Famous Authority's Rule

By Ruth Brittain

Baby specialists agree nowadays, that during the first six months, babies must have three ounces of fluid per pound of body weight daily. An eight pound baby, for instance, needs 24 ounces of fluid. Later on the rule is two ounces of fluid per pound of body weight. The amount of fluid absorbed by a breast fed baby is best determined by weighing him before and after feeding for the whole day; and it is easily calculated for the bottle fed one. Then make up any deficiency with water.

Giving baby sufficient water often relieves his feverish, crying, upset and restless spells. If it doesn't, give him a few drops of Fletcher's Castoria. For these and other ills of babies and children such as colic, cholera, diarrhea, gas on stomach and bowels, constipation, sour stomach, loss of sleep, underweight, etc., leading physicians say there's nothing so effective. It is purely vegetable—the recipe is on the wrapper—and millions of mothers have depended on it in over 30 years of ever increasing use. It regulates baby's bowels, makes him sleep and eat right, enables him to get full nourishment from his food, so he increases in weight as he should. It Was Just Too Wet for Girls To Parade on First Day Show Galveston Bathing Beauty Fete

GALVESTON, Texas, June 2. (UP)—It was too wet for bathing girls here today.

It was not too wet for bathing suits, but entrants in the annual international pageant of pulchritude and bathing girl revue were to parade at 5 p. m. along Seawall boulevard clad in afternoon frocks and sport costumes.

It was too wet for these dainty garments—a steady downpour fell all day—and the opening event of the pageant was postponed.

Sunday's program, with a parade of the beauties from nine nations arrayed in bathing suits, will be held as scheduled.

The parade that was to have been held this afternoon will be staged Monday, with judging of the American contestants that night.

JEALOUSY BLAMED FOR TRAGIC CASE

Bride, 15, and Stepson, 16 Found Slain With Father Missing

M'ALESTER, Okla., June 2. (AP)—Pittsburgh county officers today were seeking to solve the mystery of a mountain tragedy brought to light late yesterday when a prohibition enforcement agent accidentally discovered the bodies of Mrs. F. Jackson, 15-year-old bride, and her 16-year-old stepson.

Jackson, the mountaineer husband and father, and three younger children were missing, residents of Sardis, the nearest village, said.

Three Pittsburgh county officers who went to the remote spot in the Kiamichi foothills last night, had not returned this afternoon. The Jackson home is in the southeastern part of Pittsburgh county, 43 miles from McAlester, and can be reached only by a tortuous mountain road.

The girl married Jackson a year ago. Sardis' residents advanced the theory that Jackson was jealous of his son.

MOODY EXPOUNDS NEEDS OF COURTS

Governor Outlines View on Court Changes to Bar Association

DALLAS, Texas, June 2. (AP)—Resubmission of the constitutional amendment to enlarge the supreme court of Texas from three to nine members, higher salaries for district court judges, abolition of the district court "term" system, and immediate legislation to simplify court procedure were advocated by Governor Dan Moody at today's session of the Texas Bar association.

The 750 barristers present voted their approval of all four proposals.

"While there is nothing wrong with the court system of the state as a whole, there are certain minor changes necessary to rid the statutes of obsolete laws and simplify procedure which must be made," the governor declared.

Abolition of the "term" system, Moody explained, will make district court sessions continuous throughout the year. A judge then will be able to clear a small docket in one court in less time than allotted during a term and proceed to another court where there exists a large docket.

In pleading for higher salaries for district judges, Moody declared that "cheap justice after all was the most expensive."

W. M. Crook of Beaumont, vice president, was elected to the presidency of the association to succeed A. H. Britain of Wichita Falls. C. S. Bradley of Groesbeck was elected vice president. R. L. Ball of San Antonio was elevated from the directorate to chairman of the board. George C. Gaines of Houston was re-elected secretary. Henry G. Evans of Bonham was re-elected treasurer. Three directors re-elected were George E. Shelley of Austin; Harry P. Lawther of Dallas, and W. L. Cook of Houston. One new director, A. L. Buford of Texarkana, also was elected.

LOCAL SCHOOL CHILDREN MAKE WEIGHT RECORD

Thirty rooms in the Wichita Fall public schools had no children as much as 10 per cent underweight at the close of the school term, according to the announcement of Miss Mary Sutherland, Red Cross nutritionist. Miss Sutherland has supervised the study of foods and menus in the schools during the year and the teachers in the various rooms have been in charge of lessons.

So interested have the boys and girls become that one mother told Miss Sutherland that her little girl kept up a stream of questions like this, "Mother, have I had a leafy vegetable today? Have I had fresh fruit twice? Have I had two vegetables besides potatoes?" Another child in the first grade, who received a pasteboard cabbage at some school festival, took it home with an apology to her mother, saying, "I know you'd lots rather it had been a carrot."

Miss Sutherland explains that if a child is not more than 10 per cent underweight there is no cause for alarm on that score. Many of the rooms which had perfect records at the close of the year began with a large number of children underweight.

The teachers whose rooms were 100 per cent in weight tests when school closed were: Misses L. Vaughan, Betty Tribble and Pearl Crenshaw, San Jacinto school; Mrs. J. A. Smith, Bowie schbol; Miss Mazie McClure, Huey school; Miss Mamie Swenson, Carrigan school; Miss Louise Pannell, Barwise school; Misses Estelle Price and Annie Spenser, Fannin school; Misses Jettie Arrington, Ellen Fullwood and Marie Dowdy, Mrs. Burl Bryant and Mrs. S. T. Johnson, Crockett school; Misses Jessie Lou Hight and Erma Pearce, Ben Franklin school; and Misses M. M. Haynie, Boyd, Lois Woodward, Miles, Leila Heaton, Ona King, Ethel Stockard, Mary Denny, Floy Tacker, Florence Datson and Leda Bolin and Mrs. Cocke, Austin school; and Mrs. Wallace and Miss Mary Burrus, Sam Houston school.

It has been estimated that a hospital doctor walks an average of 16 miles a day in the course of his duties; a shop assistant eight miles; a waiter 12 miles and a tram conductor seven miles.

PROMPT COOLING OF MILK IS IMPERATIVE DURING HOT SUMMER

By O. K. BARNES

As the heat of summer comes on it becomes increasingly necessary to cool milk promptly and bring it down to a temperature of around 50 degrees. To do this the most efficiently and economically is the problem for each farmer and dairyman to solve.

The method most largely used is to set the can of milk in a tank of cold water. If the temperature of the water is 50 degrees and the milk as drawn from the cow, it will take about 40 minutes of constant stirring to bring the milk to the proper temperature. If it is not stirred, the temperature of the milk will not be brought down quickly enough to prevent souring before morning or before it can be delivered at the factory.

If a straight-side conical cooler (the ordinary aerator or milk cooler) is used, with this same temperature of the water it can be cooled down to about 60 degrees in in about 10 minutes or the length of time that it takes the milk to go over the cooler. To get it down in this length of time it is necessary that the water in the cooler be agitated occasionally, as the layer of water next to the sides of the cooler soon becomes as warm as the milk unless it is stirred. The cooler is provided with an agitator. The milk from the cooler should drain direct into the can in which it will be held over-night, using a strainer cloth over the top of the can. It should then be set in a tank of cold water in which the water comes up to the height of the milk in the can. Or it may be set in a shallow tank of water and covered over with a cloth, allowing the ends of the cloth to touch the water. This cools on the same principle as the iceless refrigerator. In holding milk over-night it may be necessary to use some ice.

Where there is cool well water and a water system so that a continuous stream can be run through the cooler this will be found to be a splendid plan and will reduce the time of cooling several minutes.

The proper cooling of milk is just as necessary to the dairyman who sells his milk to the city consumers as to the one who furnishes milk to the cheese factory. Improperly cooled milk is a loss to either one. The same is equally true to the one who separates. If the cream were properly cooled and held at low temperatures, the cream business would be much more profitable than it is.

Another thing that must be scrupulously watched is cleanliness of all milk vessels. This is much more necessary in the summer than the winter. If the vessels are not cleaned thoroughly, cooling the milk will not save it. But if the right precautions are taken with the sanitary conditions and the milk then properly cooled, there should be no difficulty in marketing sweet milk even in the heat of summer.

EXTENSIONS AND BIG WELLS FEATURES OF WICHITA DISTRICT

Wilbarger County Pools Add Several Big New Producers and Wildcat Well Extends Proven Area For Six Miles

By JIMMIE MAXWELL

Extensions to the producing areas, completions of many unusually big wells, the increase in new drilling under way, and a noticeable number of locations made featured the week's news in the district's most important industry.

Wilbarger county's contribution to the district's portion of development was the bringing in of several large wells in the southeast part, the best of these being the Texas company's No. E-4 W. T. Waggoner, in section 24, block 4, H. & T. C. R. R. survey, which came in flowing natural at the rate of 2000 barrels per day. The new well, which is in the productive section of the Rock Crossing pool, encountered the sand at 2394 feet and was drilled to 2403 when it blew in accompanied by an estimated flow of 2,000,000 feet of gas.

Another nice well brought in was completed by Tower-McKanna, Inc., their No. B-1 Waggoner, in section 32, block 4, H. & T. C. survey. This well, in addition to being a 300-barreler from the sand at 2292-96 feet, will be the means of linking up the production between the Rock Crossing and Greyback pools as its location is midway between those producing areas.

Simms No. 5 Sets Record With 3760 Barrels In One Hour

NEW WELLS ADDED TO PECOS AND WINKLER

Moody Corporation Buys Howard County Land For $1,400,000

(Special to The Times)

SAN ANGELO, June 2.—A new production record in Pecos county of 3760 barrels of oil in one hour by Simms Oil company's No. 5 M. A. Smith, a rate of 90,240 barrels a day; the purchase by Moody Oil corporation of Houston of 480 acres in southeastern Howard county, containing three producers and including royalty, for $1,400,000 and the addition of several wells in Winkler and Pecos counties were high lights in oil development this week in the Permian basis of West Texas.

Gibson and Johnson and others' No. 1 Leck, in the center of the southwest quarter of section 3, block 74, public school land, in Winkler county, nine miles north of the Hendricks pool, showed an increasing percentage of cut oil and a decreasing percentage of sulphur water in six-hour tests at 3168 feet. The last, before the well was shut in indefinitely on Wednesday was 1332 barrels of sulphur water and 1248 barrels of cut oil. Estimates on the amount of pipe line oil the cut oil would treat out ranged from 40 to 75 per cent.

Five miles north of the Leck and two miles across the Texas-New Mexico line, in Lea county, New Mexico, Marland Production Co. No. 1 Eaves, in the southwest corner of the northeast quarter of section 19, township 26 south, range 37 east, gauged in excess of 100 million cubic feet of wet gas at 2967 feet. In deepening from 2927 feet, where an estimated 65 million cubic feet of wet gas was mudded off, it encountered an additional 10 million cubic feet of gas that caused the mud higher up to break loose. The wildcat was to be allowed to blow open for several days to see if it would drill itself in or if the gas would diminish. If neither takes place efforts again will be made to mud the gas off.

Six miles north of the Eaves, Marland No. 1 Sholes attracted much attention by topping the lime at 2550 feet, 240 feet or more higher than the Eaves. Drilling continued to 2600 feet, where 8¼-inch casing was being run. The Sholes got the salt at 1045 feet, much higher than any other well in the region. It is in the northwest corner of the southwest quarter of section 19, township 25 south, range 37 east, six miles north and three miles west of Texas company's No. 1 Rhodes, the first well in Lea county to show oil and gas in apprizable quantities. The royalty play around both the Eaves and Sholes has been brisk, but there has been practically no leasing, as most of the acreage has been held closely for sometime by major companies. The concensus appears to be that the Winkler field will extend into New Mexico to and perhaps beyond these two Marland wells.

4000 Barrels an Hour

Simms No. 5 M. A. Smith's gauge of 3760 barrels of oil in one hour from 1280 feet not only set a new peak in Pecos county, but possibly a record for the United States for such a shallow depth. It eclipsed the hour's gauge the first week in May by California No. 15 Yates, lease 1, from which 2678 barrels was saved, although allowing for oil that was lost, its rate of flow was estimated to be around 4000 barrels an hour, or 96,000 barrels a day. On March 30, California No. 10 Yates, lease one, also in section 34, block 194, gauged 965.85 barrels in twenty minutes, a rate of 2,797.55 barrels an hour or 67,141.20 barrels a day. This surpassed the mark by Mid-Kansas and Transcontinental No. 2C Yates of 2049 barrels saved from a forty-five minutes flow, a rate of 2745 barrels hourly or 65,880 barrels a day. No. 2-C flowed through a trap under 300 pounds back pressure through two four-inch lines, while California's two wells and Simms' new record holder were less restricted. Later Mid-Kansas and Transcontinental No. 2-D Yates flowed an estimated 2500 barrels an hour with tools in the hole but no gauge was obtained.

Section 103, T. C. Ry. Co. survey, Simms' only producing lease in Pecos county, with five wells on production and one shut it, produced 690,084 barrels of oil up to May 28, despite proration in effect for several months and a daily pipe line allotment of only 3100 barrels. In Crane county Simms has 31 wells on 13 leases aggregating 1480 barrels, which up to May 28 produced 7,000,392 barrels.

Moody Oil corporation's purchase in Howard county was the biggest since deep lime production was obtained. Moody acquired Mrs. Dora Roberts' half interest in the north half of section 136 and the northwest quarter of section 137, both in block 29, Waco & Northwestern Railway company survey. The 480 acres contain three producers from different horizons and with the lease went the royalty and joint operation of the property with the F. H. E. Oil Co., owner of the other half interest. One-half the consideration of $1,400,000 was cash, the remainder to be paid in oil. This was on a basis of $6000 an acre.

Monday, May 28, was the fifth anniversary of the drilling in of the discovery Reagan county producer, which led to the present great petroleum development in West Texas. The discovery well, Texon Oil & Land Co.'s No. 1 Santa Rita, now owned by the Big Lake company, on its fifth anniversary, had produced 67,852 barrels and still pumps about 10 barrels a day. From the field with 206 producers, now held to 18,000 barrels daily to meet current demands, the University of Texas has received over $7,000,000 in royalties. Production by the Texon and Big Lake companies, which control the field, has exceeded 34,000,000 barrels. Over 100 proven locations remain to be drilled.

Second Big Producer

Matador Oil company's No. 1 Smith, with initial production of 240 barrels an hour from 1708 feet, 48 feet in the pay, became the second big producer in section 24, block 194, G. C. & S. F. Ry. Co. survey, in the southwestern corner of the Pecos county field. The first was Roxana's No. 1-B Smith, one location north of the Matador. It came in for 340 barrels an hour at 1819 feet.

In Winkler county, Atlantic No. 7-D Hendricks, in the northwest corner of the southwest quarter of the south half of the northwest quarter of section 29, block B-5, topped the pay at 2780 feet, drilled to 2828 feet and initially produced 336 barrels an hour, open. Gulf moved the tools off its No. 3-A Hendricks after deepening it from 2950 to 3060 feet had increased its flow to 100 barrels an hour, 16 per cent water. The well is in the southwest corner of the northwest quarter of section 34, block B-5, Gulf No. 4-A Hendricks was deepened from 2882 to 2912 feet and made 600 barrels an hour. It is in the southwest corner of the northwest quarter of section 34, block B5. Gulf Nos. 5, 7 and 12 Hendricks were being deepened.

Pure No. 1-B Hendricks, in the northeast corner of the southeast quarter of section 34, block B-5, which had been utilizing gas for fuel for some time, was opened at 2715 feet and made 600 barrels of oil in 24 hours. Murchison & Cranfill No. 1-H Hendricks, on a five-acre tract in the northeast quarter of section 33, block 26, which recently moved production three-quarters of a mile northeast of the former northern limit, began mudding off to run 8⅝-inch casing. Southern Crude No. T-33-M1 Hendricks in the southwest corner of the southeast quarter of section 33, block 26, flowed 225 barrels of oil the first hour without water from 2754 feet, four feet in the pay. Pure No. 9-B Hendricks, in the northwest corner of the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 34, block B-5, made 1365 barrels of oil in 24 hours from 2545 feet, production developing gradually after gas struck at 2504 feet had increased at 2545 feet on May 5 to an estimated million cubic feet daily.

Humble No. 1-B Walton, in the southeast corner of the northeast quarter of section 47, block 26, West offset to Amerada No. 1 Walton, made a million cubic feet of gas drilling at 2497 feet. Roxana No. 2-F Hendricks, in the southwest corner of section 46, block 26, made a head of oil over the derrick at 2654 feet and drilled to 2568 feet appeared a good well in the making. Humble No. 2-C Hendricks, in the southeast corner of the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 32, block 33, flowed sulphur water with a small amount of oil after deepening from 2850 to 2880 feet. It had been making around 180 barrels of oil hourly without water.

RUSH FOR PAY IN TWO PROVEN COLEMAN AREAS

4TH CONSECUTIVE WELL COMPLETED IN FRY SAND

Many New Locations Made And Extensive Drilling Campaign Started

(Special to The Times.)

COLEMAN, Texas, June 2.—New locations, a rush for the pay in two proven areas and the general prolific nature of the Jennings pool southeast of Santa Anna, in which one new producer, the fourth consecutive well, was drilled into the Fry sand, together with developments in progress on the Overall ranch, were features of the oil industry in Coleman county during the past week.

Although not within Coleman county, McLean & Jameson's No. 1 E. M. West, in section 155, northern McCulloch county, had one of the most favorable wildcat showings at 794 feet encountered in the "sweet oil" belt during the week. The No. 1 West is located one mile east of Lohn and three miles east of the shallow production near that city. The live oil bailed from the well is thought to be the first from that particular horizon. East, the showing there are several gassers supplying Brady with natural fuel, but the gas is coming from a sand approximately 140 feet below the showing horizon. Pipe is being set and the well will likely be drilled in during the forepart of the week.

In the Jennings pool the Derby Oil company completed its first producer, an east offset to E. J. Cunningham, White, Simpson & Pinkerton's discovery well. Derby's No. 1 Jennings topped the Fry sand around the expected depth of 1168 feet, but the well bridged over. Operators left the control head open for one hour, when the well flowed over the top of the mast for fully 30 minutes, according to reports reaching Coleman, cleaning itself of the bridge and leaving the impression of the best well in the pool which now embraces four producing wells.

Santa Anna District

The Derby Oil company is drilling at shallow depths on its Nos. 2 and 3 tests, which are east and north offsets to the new well. A total of 18 locations have been made in addition to the four completions, all of which will be drilled during the summer months by both the Derby interests and the Cunningham, White, Simpson and Pinkerton. Geology on the structure was worked by Hudnal & Pirtle, Coleman petroleum geologists.

In the Santa Anna district, where W. T. Daniels, D. H. Byrd and others discovered oil in the Moody No. 1, two wells were nearing the expected sand and will likely be completed during the latter part of the week or the forepart of the following week. Charter Oil company et al. No. 1 Crump is reported drilling around 1600 feet, and the Tower & McKanna No. 1 Moody is down 1400 feet, according to reports. Roy Gohlson, Brownsville operator, is reported to have purchased the D. H. Byrd interest in the No. 1 Moody producer, which is flowing around 80 barrels, on the basis of $100,000, including the interest in the well and also the 40-acre tract on which the well is located. The exact percentage of Byrd's interest or the exact cash consideration was not made public by the principals.

The company drilling the discovery well is reported to have started a second well in the district, nearly one mile southwest of the discovery.

Three wells on the structure eight miles southwest of Coleman, being drilled by Midwest Exploration company, Anzac Oil corporation, Humble Oil and Refining company, M. G. Cheney and the Continental Oil company under the unit plan of operation recently perfected, are continuing with exploration with the Overall B-2 below 2300 feet. The northwest corner of section 10, G. H. & H. survey, is drilling below 1000 feet, and the same interests' No. 7 Overall, 900 feet northeast of the F-1 Overall, which came in for 450 barrels initial production, is drilling around 960 feet.

Increase in Wilbarger Offsets Loss In Production From All Other Pools

Pipeline runs from the Wichita Falls district pools for the week ending Monday, May 28, showed an average of 85,910 barrels per day, a small gain of approximately 55 barrels when compared with the runs of the previous week.

Losses in all pools with the exception of Wilbarger county were offset to some extent by the gain from the latter pool, which averaged 14,740 barrels, an increase of 660 barrels over the preceding week's runs from the same area. Below is the output by pools:

Boy Scout News

Troop One

Troop one, Lowell Nichols, scoutmaster, opened its meeting Friday night at 7:30 with the scout oath.

The scribe called the roll and eight scouts were present.

The scoutmaster read the Scoutmasters' Bulletin and urged the scouts to go before the board of review. Points in the inter-troop contest were counted.

The troop was divided into four columns and drills were practiced until 9:30, when the meeting was dismissed with the Lord's Prayer.

Board of Review

Board of review will be held at scout headquarters Monday and Tuesday evenings at 6:30. Monday tests for first class and second class will be reviewed and Tuesday tests for merit badges will be reviewed. Many scouts are expected to attend this board of review, as passing before the board of review counts in the inter-troop efficiency contest.

Troop Twenty

Troop 20, R. E. Davis, scoutmaster, met in regular session Friday night at 7:30 with 11 boys present.

The scoutmaster urged the boys to pass more tests.

Plans were made for a hike to be taken next Friday.

Troop Four

Troop four, John Tevis, scoutmaster, met at the troop hall Friday night and hiked to Weeks park, where they held their meeting and spent the night.

The scoutmaster made an announcement concerning the vacation Bible school now being held at the First Christian church and invited all the boys to attend.

A. E. York and Bill Haggard announced that they would appear before board of review Tuesday night for merit badges.

Following the repetition of the scout oath and laws and a game of "run sheep run," the boys retired.

Saturday morning the boys arose, cooked their breakfast, and were back in town by 7 o'clock.

Troop Two

Troop two, Bill McClure, scoutmaster, met Friday night at 8 o'clock at the First Methodist church. The meeting was opened with the scout oath and laws, followed by the pledge of allegiance to the flag.

The Scoutmasters' Bulletin was read and discussed by the scoutmaster. The troop was glad to know that it ranked fourth in the inter-troop contest. It made a jump of three places over last week.

Troop two was sorry to learn that the field day had been postponed, for the boys had already made plans for winning the meet.

Summer camp was discussed and it was found that a large number of boys are planning on going to camp.

In the instruction period life saving was taken up by the assistant scoutmaster. Since so many boys will be going swimming soon, it was thought that life saving would be the most practical subject for instruction. The boys are greatly interested in the subject and at the swimming party which is planned for next Wednesday afternoon the boys will get some practical experience in the life saving methods used by Red Cross life savers.

After the meeting several games, including "bounce 'em," "hot hand," "tug-o'-war," and others, were enjoyed.

Troop Sixteen

Troop 16, Kenneth Erwin, scoutmaster, held its meeting Friday night in the form of a swimming party at Westmoreland park. Following a refreshing swim, the boys ate supper and played some games, including "capture the flag," "swat 'em," and "three deep."

Troop Three

Troop three, Lee Loeffler, scoutmaster, met at the First Methodist church Friday night.

The meeting opened with assembly, followed by a two-minute preparation period for patrol calls and yells.

The scout oath and law were repeated, dues were collected, and a report on the condition of the troop treasury was given by the scribe.

Bill Allen read the bulletin from scout headquarters and a discussion of camp and the summer camp was given by the scoutmaster.

Each patrol gave a stunt, preceded by its call and yell.

Following a business meeting, an outline of next Friday's meeting was given by the scoutmaster.

During the instruction period ice rescue was studied.

Mid-Continent Activities

WICHITA, Kan., June 2. (UP)—The wildcat well of Joe Liggett, on the S. Chrisler farm in the southwest of the northwest of the southwest quarter of section 9-11-15, four miles north of Brussell field, went on the swab Friday noon and last night was estimated good for 150 barrels daily.

CHICKASHA, Okla., June 2. (UP) No. 9 Oklahoma Gas Utilities on Farwell lease in SE NE SW 26-9n-8w made 27,000,000 feet of gas from a depth of 2400 feet.

SHAWNEE, Okla., June 2. (UP) Production in the greater Seminole field yesterday totaled 264,839 barrels from 1096 wells.

SHAWNEE, Okla., June 2. (UP) Superior Oil company's well in 2-9n-5e made 4000 barrels in 24 hours. No. 1 Roxana on Cesar lease made 305 barrels on air in 24 hours from a depth of 4370 feet.

HAMLIN, Texas, June 2. (UP)—Steel No. 1 of the Sinclair Oil company gauged 820 barrels of oil in the last 24 hours, bringing the daily production of the northeastern Fisher county field to more than 1000 barrels.

SAN ANGELO, Texas, June 2. (UP)—A new production mark for this section was set when the Simms Oil company's No. 5 M. A. Smith, located in section 103, T. C. railway survey, gauged 3760 barrels of oil in one hour. It was at a depth of 1280 feet.

FEDERATION WILL SUE ITS CRITICS

False Charges Published Against Organization Head Proclaims

SAN ANTONIO, June 2. (AP)—The executive board of the General Federation of Women's clubs was empowered by the federation here today to take any legal action available against publications casting unwarranted slurs upon the organization.

The action was unanimous, every state delegation attending the biennial convention of the federation now in progress here seconding the motion, which was made by Mrs. John D. Sherman, Estes Park, Colo., president.

The problem of providing the federation with machinery by which it can sue for libel or damages was precipitated by the recent publication of an article charging that the federation had fallen a prey to commercialism and that its leaders were using their position for their own profit. Other attacks have been made on the federation through articles asserting that the membership was dwindling.

Mrs. Sherman has denied both of these charges before the convention and today recommended, after a meeting of the policy committee, that the executive board be empowered to appoint a special committee to investigate any such article, determine the actionability of the publisher and take whatever legal steps were found necessary to obtain redress.

MAKE FIVE NEW LOCATIONS FOR TESTS IN JONES

SINCLAIR COMPANY'S WELL IN FISHER FLOWING 450

Extensive Drilling Campaign in Southwestern Jones Now Expected

(Special to The Times)

ABILENE, Texas, June 2.—Coupling with announcement of five new locations for tests in southwest Jones county in the area adjacent to Hucony Gas company-Atkinson & Sandefer's 700 barrel No. 1 Tiner, which during the week has proved existence of a profitable shallow pay in the district north of the Noodle creek field, the completion of Sinclair Oil & Gas company's No. 1 Steele in Fisher county for an initial daily production of approximately 450 barrels by natural flow; the oil development program in the "sweet-oil" belt centering on Abilene has been by far the most active and productive of the most profitable showings that have been experienced in many months.

Of the new Jones county locations, two are direct offsets to the Tiner well, which has been about the biggest surprise of the year for operators interested in this sector. The first 24-hour production of the well, gauged at 814 barrels, seemingly is due to be kept up, for each day since that time the flow has been over 700 barrels of slightly better than 40 gravity crude.

Located two miles and a half north and a little west of the proven area in the Noodle Creek field, the Hucony-Atkinson and Sandefer well is rated as the greatest find in Central West Texas since the unexpected coming in of Phillips Petroleum company's discovery well in that county in September, 1926.

Phillips Petroleum company has completed a rig for its No. 1 Sharp, in the northwest corner of the northeast quarter of section 14, block 19, T. & P. It will be a direct east offset to and 344 feet from the Tiner.

Other Locations

Roberts Oil company has made a location for its No. 1 Grayson, directly north and an offset to the Tiner. Location is due north of the producer and 192 feet from the south line of the southwest quarter of section 13, block 19, T. & P. survey.

In the southeast quarter of section 13, and less than a quarter of a mile northeast of the new strike, the Texas company has staked a location on the Barbara Carter Coates fee.

About a mile and a half northeast of the Tiner corner and in the northeast corner of the northwest 80 acres of section 50, block 18, T. & P. survey, Snowden & McSweeney are getting ready to drill a test below 2500 feet. The 80-acre tract in which this test is situated adjoins the lease on which the Hutson & Weaver No. 1 Smith, a 65-barrel pumper, is located. This is the first test to be started anywhere close to the Smith strike, which was thought to be a freak when it found pay at 2499 feet, four and a half miles north of the proven area at Noodle Creek.

However, since the Tiner found pay at practically the same depth, operators are revising their estimates of the district and are looking on the territory between the Smith and Noodle as potential producing country.

The fifth new test in the southwest Jones county sector is Pick Campbell and W. G. Clark's No. 1 Dickinson on the west side of the north 320 acres of the south 480 acres of the Henry B. Williams survey No. 273. This is about a mile and a half northeast of the 65-barrel Smith well. Rig for this test is being built and plans of the owners are to spud as soon as the outfit is ready.

Another interesting Jones county operation is Hurley Oil company No. 1 Gunter in the east 80 acres of the southwest quarter of section 34, block 7, T. & P. The same operators have already drilled two tests in that section, both of them east of the Gunter, and found promising shows of oil in them. The new test is two miles east of the Noodle pool and should it, as the Tiner and Smith wells to the north of the field, find production at the shallow depth of around 2500 feet, it will mean another important development and will bring on increased activity.

Flows 450 Daily

After most of the scouts and production men had decided that Sinclair Oil and Gas company's No. 1 Steele, south offset to Texas company's No. 1 Stephens, Fisher county's discovery well, would be doing well if it made an average production of 200 barrels, it began to flow after the thickness of the pay had been drilled from 3200 feet to 3225 feet, and during the first full 24-hour test it gauged 450 barrels.

This is practically double the flush production of the discovery well and has heightened interest in that district to a considerable extent.

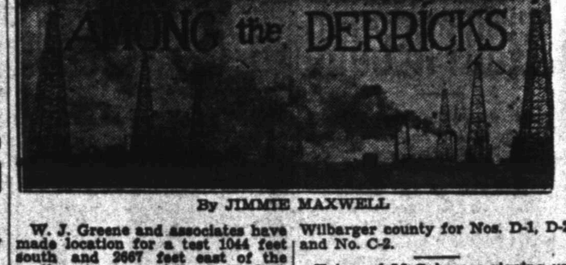

The Steele well has been connected with the pipeline from the Stephens to the loading rack on the M.-K.-T. railway near Royston, and the swab will be run into the hole during the next few days.

No new locations have been announced for the Fisher county area during the week just passed. However, several deals are on and it is the general opinion among the operators here that several new rigs will be up in that area at the end of the next 60 days.

Another generally expressed opinion being heard here is that the five new tests announced for Jones county since the Hucony, Atkinson & Sandefer completion on the Tiner, are only forerunners of a much greater number of tests that will be under way in that district in a few months.

During the 12 months immediately following the discovery of oil in the Winter pay at Noodle Creek, more than 50 wells were drilled in Jones county. Taylor, Nolan & Fisher counties, all of which corner with Jones a short distance southwest of the pool, got good pays, but they were not intensive in any district. Few of the wells went below 3000 feet, and most of them stopped short of that depth.

The indications now point to a rather intensive drilling campaign in the southwestern quarter of Jones county and in the sector surrounding the Fisher county producers, which are three, incmluding Cranfill & Reynolds' No. 1 Young, a 46-barrel well from 3100 feet, located three miles east and one mile north of the Stephens and Steele.

WACO COMPANY TO EQUIP SALESMEN WITH AIRPLANES

William McKemie Sr., vice president and general manager of the Perfection Ice Scoring Machine company, of Waco, has purchased an Eaglerock airplane through Fulcher Armstrong, local agent, to be used by his salesmen in making long jumps from one city to another.

Mr. McKemie, who opened the New Ice company, 601 Burnett street, here last year and who has been living here since that time, said that the Waco company sold ice scoring machines to plants all over the United States and had a very large territory to cover.

"One of our salesmen has just left New York for California," he said. "If he made the trip by plane instead of by train the company would be saved valuable time and money."

The airport of the Wichita Falls Air Transport company, of which Mr. Armstrong is president, will be used by the plane as headquarters when it makes trips to north Texas and Southern Oklahoma. The transport company's airport is a mile and a half out on the Henrietta road.

Main headquarters for the plane will be at the plant's offices in Waco.

The plane has a Dayton-Bear motor and has been promised for delivery within the next three weeks. It will be put into service immediately.

CHARGE SMITH IS AIDED BY POOLS

Preacher's Statement That Al Gets Baseball Money Ridiculed

NEW YORK, June 2. (INS)—Charges that Governor Alfred E. Smith was receiving financial support from baseball pool, public utility and brewery "interests" in his presidential campaign, were made this afternoon by the Rev. Oscar R. Miller, superintendent of the civic league of Albany, N. Y., appearing as a witness before the senate campaign funds investigation committee.

Members Surprised

The charges of Miller were received with open incredulity by all three members of the investigation committee, Senator Steiwer, Republican, of Oregon; Senator Bratton, Democrat, New Mexico, and Senator Barclay, Democrat, Kentucky.

The witness admitted that he was unable to produce any specific evidence to back his assertions.

Miller was recommended to the committee by Senator Heflin of Alabama, as possessing "inside information" relative to the Smith campaign.

The witness also told a story said to have been related him by a friend, ex-Governor William Sulzer of New York, that a Democratic state chairman from a dry western state had received $25,000 from the business manager of Governor Smith after a conference in the Hotel Baltimore with the governor last January.

Miller said this western Democrat had received this money in return for a promise "to deliver" his state.

Borrowed Money

Miller declared Sulzer had told him the western Democratic chairman had previously borrowed $100 from him (Sulzer) and that he had told him the story of the $25,000 later. Sulzer related the story to Miller in a chair car on a train, April 29, the witness testified.

"Who was the business manager referred to?" Miller was asked.

"I'm not sure but I believe the business manager was William F. Kenny," Miller replied.

Miller testified that the Albany baseball pool "alone received millions of dollars annually."

"No one but a numbskull would fail to understand where the financial support for Governor Smith came from in Albany," Miller read from a statement.

Statement Protested

In the middle of the statement, George Van Namee, head of New York headquarters of the Smith-for-President campaign, arose from his seat and thundered forth a protest.

"This is ridiculous," said Van Namee. "The witness has no proof of what he says and I protest against his continuing this statement."

PROSPECTS BRIGHT FOR FAIR GRAIN HARVEST IN OLNEY TERRITORY

OLNEY, Texas, June 2.—Local implement dealers have sold more than 25 combine harvesters and threshers to farmers in this territory this season. Prior to this year there were only one or two of these machines in this section.

Those pioneers who first tried out the combine have found it effects a great saving in their harvesting costs, and then too, it enables them to save their grain when droughts prevent its growing up to where an ordinary binder will save it.

Farmers are optimistic over prospects for a fair grain harvest in this section after what looked a few weeks ago like a complete failure. There are many farms which will yield an average grain crop, and most all the wheat that will do to cut will make from 7 to 12 bushels per acre.

Little River Pool Development Plan To Be Presented Monday to Oklahoma Corporation Commission for Approval

Special to The Record News.

TULSA, Okla., June 2.—The new Little River pool development program adopted early this week, is to be presented to the Oklahoma corporation commission Monday for its approval, before it is officially put into effect June 15.

It calls for the drilling of around 80 wells, and it is estimated that these wells will cost around $5,250,000 to complete. The agreement calls for the completion of these wells by August 15, when the production of all 40-acre leases is to be restricted to 1600 barrels per day.

It is understood Little River pool will make 100,000 barrels a day or better. This restriction is to continue until November 1, next.

The Seminole field made 85,286,-633 barrels in May, and is still declining, averaging 263,768 barrels Saturday, its lowest since early in 1927, when it was soaring.

Independent Oil and Gas company has discovered a new Wilcox sand pool in No. 1 Watson in 15-14-8, in the Iron Post area of Creek county, which was a Peru and Dutcher sand well, but when it exhausted these sands, it was deepened. It is making both oil and gas, but is not yet drilled in. Its nearest Wilcox production is three and one-half miles away.

The Panhandle field of northwest Texas average 65,278 barrels from 1439 wells during the week just ended. A loss of 10 wells and a gain of 931 barrels in production. The impression prevails that Panhandle crude will be advanced shortly. The demand for it continues above output.

Mr. Colquitt was introduced to the large crowd which attended the speaking by J. A. Wheat, local attorney, acting in behalf of the mayor. Mr. Wheat recited the pride felt by residents that the candidate should open his campaign here.

SPUDDERS DROP THIRD STRAIGHT TO PENNANT BOUND BUFFS

RAGGED FIELDING KICKS AWAY FINAL OF SET BY 8-5; CUBS TO OPEN SERIES HERE SUNDAY

If the Houston Buffs don't win the first half championship, it will be through no oversight on the part of the Spudders. For the second straight day, the hopefuls handed the Buffaloes a game on a silver platter, infield errors kicking in five runs to contribute the losing margin in a 3 to 8 defeat.

The Spudders tore into Bill Hallahan, the Houston southpaw, and walloped him hard—that is it was hard by comparison with their other futile efforts against this pitcher. It was Hallahan's third victory over the champs and their three runs represents just one more than as many runs as they scored off the Houston southpaw in the other two games combined.

Mike Cvengros pitched a fair game, as three earned runs for the enemy will testify, but the Buffs managed to hit him on several occasions after bobbles had gotten him in trouble, so it wasn't altogether the fault of his supporting cast.

MISSTEP CAPTURES BIG RACE AT COLLINSVILLE

COLLINSVILLE, Ill., June 2. (AP)—Misstep won the $25,000 Fairmount derby Saturday before a crowd of more than 20,000. Toro was second and Jack Higgins third.

The three horses finished in the same order as in the Kentucky derby, in which they crossed the line second, third, and fourth with Reigh Count the winner.

The time for the mile and a quarter was 2:03 4-5.

Misstep paid $5.06 on a $2 ticket to win, $3.32 to place and $3.16 to show. Toro paid $3.60 to place and $3.36 to show. Jack Higgins paid $5.40 to show.

Waco Sunday

A new menu is offered the fans Sunday when the Waco Cubs are here to open a three-game series, the first contest starting at 3 o'clock. Tom Estill or Herb Cobb is likely to draw the Spudder pitching assignment.

In contrast with the first two games of the series, that of Saturday was not such a wow of a ball game, and the Buffs had it all their way from start to finish. The particular flies in the Spudder ointment were that pair of troublesome lads, Carey Selph and Red Worthington, who, when not hitting were getting on base on errors, to score between them six of the eight runs. Jenkins, Eldred and Swenson, the latter back in the game at third, led the Spudder hitting, each with two safeties.

Both teams lost scoring opportunities in the first two innings. Selph singled with one out in the first, but was left at third when Worthington and Watkins went out. In the second Walker took second with one out on Benton's high throw, but progressed no farther. In the third it was quite different and scratch hits helped the Buffs to three runs. After Hallahan had singled and Hock sacrificed, Selph popped a single over Benton, scoring Hallahan. Worthington hit one off the handle that dribbled over first for a double, sending Selph to third. Selph scored and Worthington moved to third on a wild pitch. Schuble's single scoring Worthington after Watkins had reached first on Turgeon's bobble. Watkins was out at the plate when he tried to score as Lamb's throw-in bounced through Swenson.

PANHANDLE BAND TO TOOT THINGS UP AT SUNDAY'S CONTEST

In the way of tooting things up for the Spudders Sunday afternoon, the Panhandle Refining company's band will be present at Athletic park when the Wichita Falls and Waco clubs open their series, according to announcement Saturday of Paul Seeds, director, and Guy Airey, Spudder secretary.

The Panhandle band not only will be present, but will be decidedly active before the game and between the innings, Director Seeds promises.

Overlook Chances

The Spudders put runners on first and third in both the first two innings, but failed to get them around. Benton was safe on Schuble's error and Turgeon sacrificed. Lamb singled off Hallahan's foot, sending Benton to third. Eldred crashed into a double play. After Jenkins had fanned, Swenson doubled to center and moved up on Stanton's out. Lapan walked, but Cvengros' hard smash was easy for Watkins in center.

Only three Spudders faced the Buff lefthander in the third and Eldred was left at first after starting the fourth with a single.

Cvengros retired the Buffs in order in the fourth, but in the fifth an error paved the way for two runs. Hock reached the bag on Turgeon's boot and was forced by Selph. Worthington singled to center, sending Selph to third. Selph scored as Watkins was going out and Schuble's double high up on the left field fence counted Worthington.

Again in the fifth the home clan threatened in vain. Lapan walked and Benton singled, with Cvengros going out in between. Turgeon flied to left and Lamb popped to first for the second and third outs.

A double play helped the Spudder flinger in the next round. After Snyder started with his first hit in Wichita Falls, a single past third, Powell hit into a double play and Hallahan fanned.

Finally Score

The hopefuls finally broke through in the sixth. Eldred doubled to left as a beginner. Jenkins, who had fanned twice, caught one on the nose, but it was a drive to Powell, and Swenson whiffed. Stanton's wallop to right bounced off the fence for a triple, counting Eldred. Lapan ending it with a roller to first.

The Buffs loaded the bags in the seventh on Selph's safe bunt, a walk and an error and Swenson emptied them with a wild throw to first on Walker, bringing the score to 8 to 1.

Benton's walk was the Spudder's best in the seventh, while the Buff eighth also was unproductive when Hallahan hit into a double play after Powell had singled, and Hock hoisted out.

Hallahan unloosed a warm bit of pitching in the eighth after the Spudders had scored one on a walk to Eldred and singles by Jenkins and Swenson. Stanton, Lapan and Joe Cobb, the latter hitting for Cvengros, one by one, took his cut at the third strike.

Again in the ninth the hopefuls scored a useless run. Benton singled and after Turgeon and Lamb had gone out, Eldred walked and Jenkins singled.

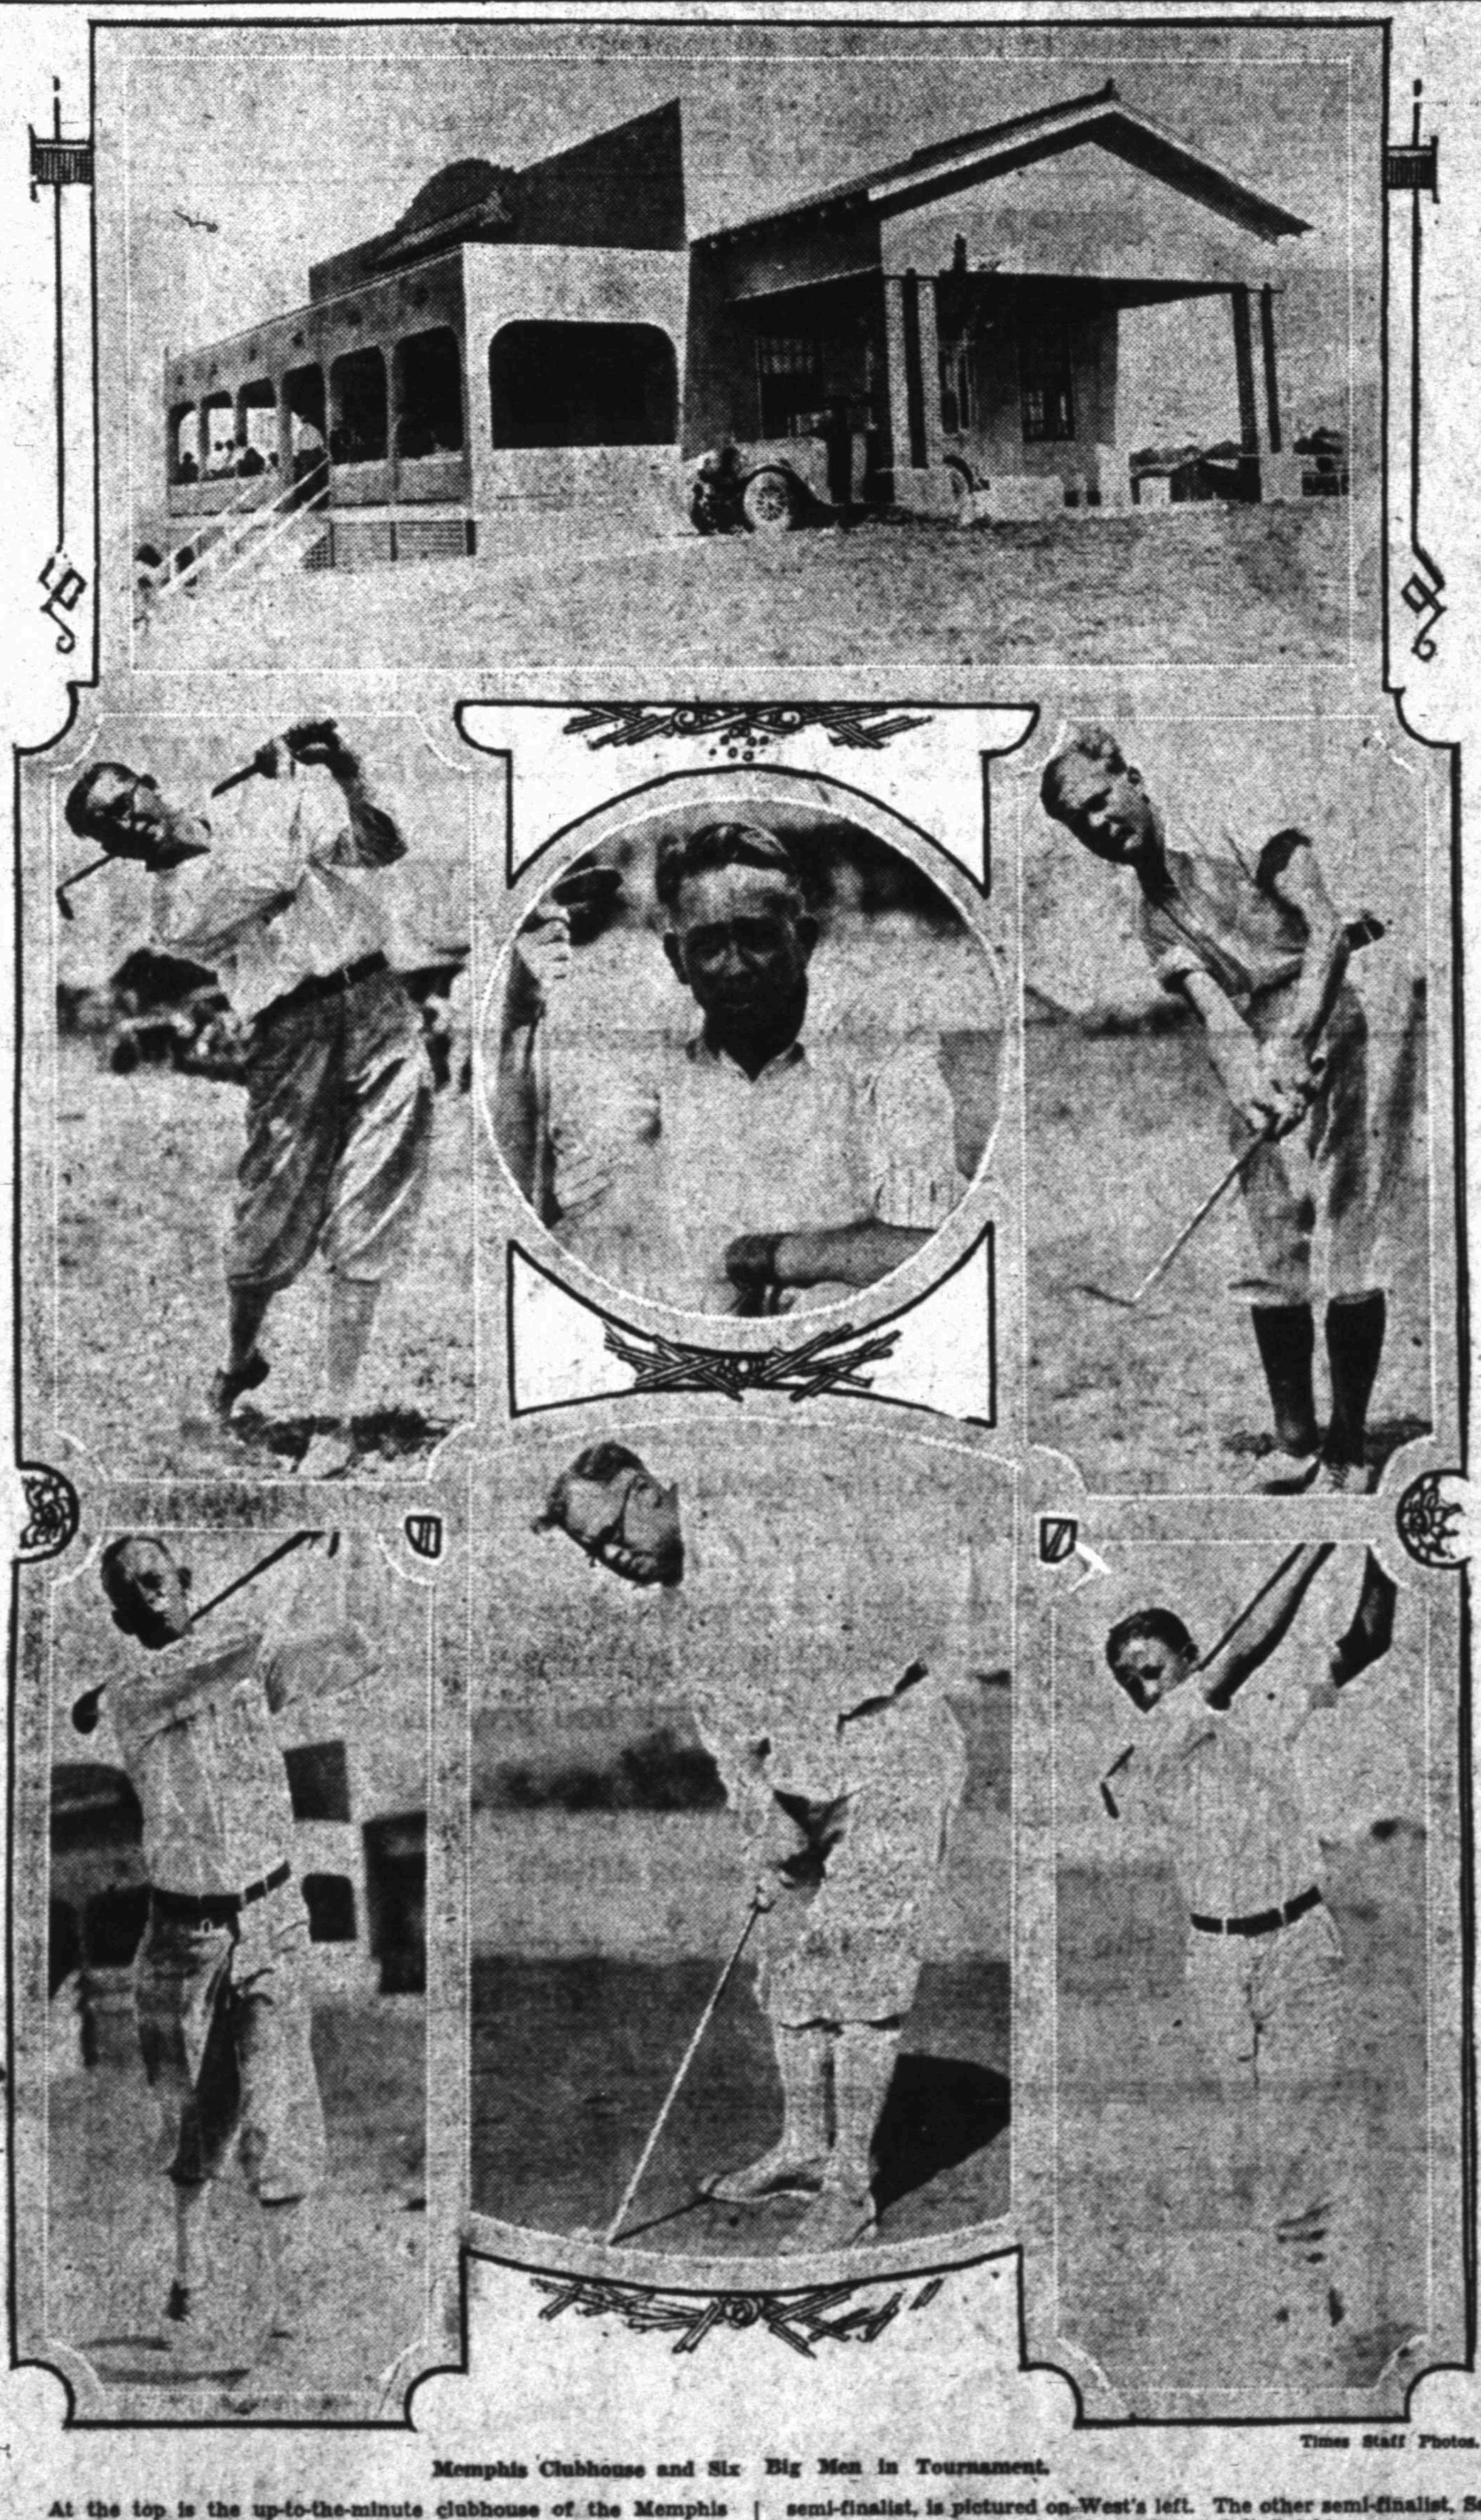

Kiefer pitched the ninth and had little difficulty with the pennant-bound Buffaloes.

At the top is the up-to-the-minute clubhouse of the Memphis Country club, scene last week of the third annual tournament of the Green Belt Golf association, composed of 10 Northwest Texas clubs and one in Oklahoma. The new champion, Raynes V. West of Memphis, is shown in the circle resting on the mashie niblic which served him so well in wading through a great starting field to the championship. At his right is shown John Marriott of Electra, who went to the final by defeating the twice former champion and the twice runnerup in the same afternoon. Jack Lebus of Electra, semi-finalist, is pictured on West's left. The other semi-finalist, Sam West of Memphis, is shown in the lower left finishing up a drive at the No. 1 tee. Lower center is R. R. Gilliland, president of the association since its organization and one of its founders. Gilliland was re-elected at the Memphis meet to serve again in 1929. One of the most popular players in the tourney was Roy Farrell of Vernon, shown in the lower right. The 14-year-old youngster won a place in the championship flight, and after being eliminated in the first round, went on to capture the flight consolation.

SHREVEPORT, La., June 2. (AP)—After the Sports had tied the game in the ninth inning by scoring two runs, San Antonio came back in the tenth to bunch hits off relief Pitcher Joe Brown and scored two tallies to win the game, 7 to 5. E. Cox and Meyers hit home runs. Score:

WILCE LEAVES OHIO STATE NEXT SEASON

COLUMBUS, Ohio, June 2. (UP) Dr. John W. Wilce, head football coach of Ohio State university, Saturday tendered his resignation to the university athletic board. The resignation becomes effective June 30, 1929.

Wilce plans to enter the practice of medicine following his cessation of activities as football coach. He is a qualified physician, having completed his medical course and served his interneship while acting as coach.

No thought has been given Wilce's successor, athletic authorities said.

The forward pass, as a major play in football, was developed by Wilce. He first stressed the importance of passing when it was little used by other schools.

The only club in the league to encounter tougher luck than the Spudders in the way of injuries Sunday invades our peaceful hamlet (Fort Worth papers will please copy last two words). The Waco Cubs during the course of a few weeks of play have lost a third baseman, second baseman and center fielder. The Cubs have done mighty well to stick as near the top as sixth place under such conditions. It is gossiped around the league that Del Pratt is not expected to return as an active player. Felix Vigare, the third baseman, may get back into the game this season and he may not. Outfielder Harry Brown probably is on the shelf for another month.

In the meantime, the Cubs have done much in the way of replacing the injured. A deal with the Chicago White Sox brought back Randy Moore for outfield duty, with the southpaw pitcher, Charley Barnabe, thrown in for good measure. Jim Battle has supplanted Vigare at third and has played good baseball. Marty Karowe, former Ohio State all around star and a coach at the University of Texas, has been used for the last several games at second base. The Cubs as now constituted are really a better ball club than they would be if the three injured were in the game. Only Pratt's hitting is missed.

The Fort Worth sports editors have been very much alarmed over what was going to happen when the Houston club played its series in Wichita Falls. The series is over, and nothing happened. One Fort Worth sport writer even made the trip to Wichita Falls for the opening game of the series. Another wired frantically every day of the series to be sure and send his paper a story if there were any "riots, fights or umpire disturbances."

We've been searching our memory in an effort to learn where, when and why Wichita Falls achieved the reputation of staging "riots, fights and umpire disturbances." Strangely, it seems that reputation holds nowhere but in Fort Worth. In Fort Worth alone was there any fear that trouble would brew in the Houston series here. This is the ninth season the Spudders have been in the Texas league. This writer has followed the Spudders for six of those nine seasons, and for the life of us, we can't figure out where this city acquired its bad name in Fort Worth. If there has ever been anything resembling a riot in Wichita Falls, we haven't heard about it. We have never known of the fans hopping on an umpire or a player, except verbally, and then to no greater extent than in any other city—not even Fort Worth. There has been an occasional player fight, but no more than elsewhere; certainly nothing bordering on a riot. If ever a mountain were made of a mole hill, the Fort Worth scribes made it over the recent scrap at Houston between a Spudder and a Buff player.

R. B. Saxe, a Burkburnett fan, takes the welcomed opportunity to disagree with comment contained in this column a week ago concerning Spudder hitting and pitching. His letter follows:

"Dear Mr. Parker:

"I notice an article in your column in The Times last Sunday morning in which you are again calling attention to the batting slump the Spudders are in, comparing their hitting this season with that of last. In the first place that is not a fair basis of comparison. It is still your contention that the pitching is OK and way ahead of the kind of batting the Spudders are getting. Allow me the privilege of any 100 per cent Spudder fan to disagree with you.

"In the first place the Wichita Falls club and the fans can't possibly expect to get the hitting they did last year, taking into consideration the better class of pitching we are contending with. They might as well get that into their heads and not be discouraged by it. Nobody can gainsay that Fort Worth, San Antonio, and Shreveport have had much better pitching, or let me say more effectual pitching this year than last. And Houston has had as good if not better. In decrying our lack of hitting don't forget to take that into consideration.

"In spite of the fact that in almost every game lost recently our batters have given the pitchers anywhere from one to an eight-run lead, the pitchers have failed to hold

Two of Lowly Sens in Scrap For Swat Lead

Goslin and Reeves Show Way in American League

CHICAGO, June 2. (AP)—Bucky Harris and his Washington Senators could well afford to study the technique of the old White Sox "hitless wonders."

With the first seven weeks of the American league race ended, the Senators have a paradoxical record, unofficial averages Saturday showed. They had the two leading batsmen of the circuit in Goslin and Reeves, they had a first division batting and fielding team, but were in the cellar of the games won and lost column.

The old White Sox collected but few hits. Yet these few were converted into winning runs and a pennant.

Adding five points to his average, "Goose" Goslin increased his lead in the race for individual honors during the seventh week of play, while Reeves added 21 to climb from sixth to second place. Barnes of the Senators dropped from second place to fourth, being displaced by Reeves and Kress of the Browns.

The 10 leading hitters and their averages:

Goslin, Washington, .420; Reeves, Washington, .391; Kress, St. Louis, .384; Barnes, Washington, .370; Fonseca, Cleveland, .367; Durocher, New York, .360; Ruth, New York, .359; Galloway, Detroit, .358; Gehrig, New York, .351, and E. Miller, Philadelphia, .349. Of the group, Galloway made the largest gain during the week, climbing from 25th to eighth place.

With George Pipgras of the Yankees dropping his first game of the season during the week, old Stanley Coveleskie, a teammate, took the lead in the pitching race. He has won four games and lost none. Among the more technical scorers, however, Pipgras still is first with eight victories and one defeat, and Herb Pennock, also of the Yankees, is second with a record of seven won and one lost.

The Yankees dropped five points in team batting during the seventh week, but still retain leadership in that department with an average of .314, or five points more than Cleveland, which climbed from third to second with a five-point gain. Boston ousted Philadelphia from first place in team fielding with a .960 average.

Other leaders:

Double plays, Cleveland 51; runs, New York 267; fewest opponents' runs, Philadelphia 147; home runs, New York 47; stolen bases, Barrett, Chicago, 8, and team stolen bases, Detroit 37.

"SWEDE" WAINSCOTT IS HONORED BY CLASSMATES ST. EDWARD'S UNIVERSITY

LOUISVILLE WINNER

LOUISVILLE, Ky., June 2. (AP)—Masterful riding by Willie Crump enabled Easter Stockings to conquer a fast field of three-year-old fillies in the Kentucky Oaks here Saturday. The winner ran the mile and a furlong in 1:51 3-5. Pink Lilly was runner-up and Reveries' Gal third. The filly out of Irish Lassie by Sir Barton paid $2.72, $2.46 and $2.14 to $2.

Hornsby Climbs To Top Position In Swat Figures

Blake Continues Leading Pitcher, With Five Victories

NEW YORK, June 2. (AP)—Rogers Hornsby, the new Boston manager, displaced George Grantham from the topmost position in the National league batting averages this week, according to figures including games of last Wednesday. The Rajah not only broke into the lead ahead of the injured Pittsburgh infielder, but also lifted his mark to .397 for 37 games.

Sheriff Fred Blake of Chicago continued to lead the pitchers by the simple process of engaging in no games and maintaining intact his perfect average of five won and none lost. He was followed closely by Clark of Brooklyn, with six and one; Rhem of St. Louis, with five and one; Lucas of Cincinnati, with eight and two, and Benton of New York with seven and two.

The Pirates remained in the lead in team batting at .293, but this clubbing was not sufficient to check the Pirate slump. St. Louis pressed the Pirates with .290, but New York had only .278 for third place.

Regular players trailing Hornsby in the individual averages were: Grantham, Pittsburgh, .394; Callaghan, Cincinnati, .394; Douthit, St. Louis, .372; Ott, New York, .371; Picinich, Cincinnati, .366; Bottomley, St. Louis, .364; P. Waner, Pittsburgh, .363; Roettger, St. Louis, .348; Lindstrom, New York, .346, and Purdy, Cincinnati, .341.

Hack Wilson of Chicago, National league home run leader with nine, has slumped almost out of the .300 class—to .301. Bissonette of Brooklyn, with eight, and Bottomley of St. Louis, with seven, were Wilson's closest home run rivals.

Frank Frisch of St. Louis again cornered a fair share of the individual crowns. He led in runs batted in with 36 and in stolen bases with 12, and tied his teammate, Bottomley, for the greatest number of doubles, 14. Taylor Douthit of St. Louis set the pace in runs scored with 25 and in base hits with 70.

Curt Walker found the reaches of Redland field convenient for three base hitting, and showed the way in triples with seven.

In team fielding, the flashy Cincinnati team shared the top with the Chicago Cubs. Each had an average of .972, but the record of the Reds was made the more impressive by their adeptness in turning up with double plays.

AGEE IS WINNER OF BALTIMORE MARATHON

BALTIMORE, June 2. (AP)—William Agee of Baltimore won the annual Baltimore marathon race here Saturday, the last of the tryouts for places on the Olympic marathon team.

Agee's time for the marathon distance, 26 miles, 385 yards, was two hours, 37 minutes, 4 2-5 seconds.

Harvey Frick, running for Milrose Athletic club, was second in three hours, no minutes, 11¼ seconds and Albert (Whitey) Michelson of Bedford Hills, N. Y., running unattached was third, finishing in three hours, one minute, 45 1-5 seconds.

Three Leading Pros Set Fast Medal Pace

Little Difference in Season's Averages of Smith, Sarazen and Johnny Farrell

Although Leo Diegel won the Massachusetts open championship he did not particularly alter his medal average for the year, losing a slight bit of ground. He remained in fifth place among the professionals of the country.

Willie Hunter and Ed Dudley, by shooting fine rounds in qualifying for the Southern California professional championship, gained in the averages. Fred Morrison about held his own.

Johnny Farrell, is again back in second place, but he, Macdonald Smith and Gene Sarazen are traveling at a gait so nearly even that they might be considered to be tied for first place.

The summer tournament season soon will be in full swing and changes in the standings may be expected then. The averages:

Keeping Tab on the Amateurs

By Gordon Fulcher

The Katy baseball team is well ahead of the other teams in the City league at present and from the showing the railroaders have made from the first of the season they are easily the fastest team in the loop. The Katy has only one loss so far and that one was made only after extra innings had been played to break a tie.

The Railroaders are headed straight for the first half championship and unless one of the other teams displays better baseball than has been shown so far they are the best bets for the championship. Whatever happens they will probably be the hardest team in the league to whip. Manager Jakie Moore has herded his team well and with the backing that he has the Katy will overlook nothing to put the team over the top.

Better teams than the DeMolays probably could have been chosen from those that petitioned entrance to the City league at the first of the season. The DeMolays would, perhaps, be a good team among players of their age, but they have not been able to play within the class of the older players in the loop.

The only hope that remains for the DeMolay team is in the next half. Several fairly good young ball players who have been attending colleges out of the city will return home for the summer months. A number of these men are ex or present DeMolays and some may join the team.

A great deal of ranzing the umpire among the players and fans of the Twilight league has taken place in the last few games. Umpire Neely Vaught has umpired many ball games for professional and amateur leagues and he should have enough experience to call the Twilight games. We do not believe he is prejudiced toward any certain team in the league. Umpiring a ball game is no easy task in any sense and calling bases as well as balls and strikes is a very difficult one. Of course, a certain amount of criticism of the umpire is to be expected, but those who have continuously disagreed with the decisions that Vaught has rendered should take into consideration the amount of work he has to do and also allow for mistakes that any human is liable to make.

James Brothers creamery still looms as a serious bidder for the Twilight flag. The Milkmen have been steadily improving in their play. Only one or two gaps remain to be filled in the lineup and the Creamery will be one of the hardest teams in the league to beat. Next half James Brothers will put up a real fight for leadership and they won't be easy to beat out.

After the walloping the Texas Electrics suffered from the Panhandle Friday afternoon it looks as if the Kilowats may come down out of first place before the season ends. The Electrics have a good ball club and Friday's game may be just what it needed. The Electric players have gotten a bit too cocky over their showing this season and their defeat last week should bring them back to earth again.

The Lookout

it. Where does the blame lie there? That is nothing else but lack of so-called 'bearing down' with men on bases. In the first game of the recent series with Fort Worth it was noticeable that Cvengros pitched excellent ball all through the game except when Fort Worth got a man in scoring position on second. Then with the exception of one time Fort Worth batters didn't fail to come through with a timely clean single. You can't blame that to the Spudders batting.

"In the final analysis every game is a battle between the pitchers and batters. If our pitchers allow men to hit with runners in scoring position they can't blame it on poor batting support from their own team. From my observation most pennants are won not by continual slugging tactics but by the kind of pitching that lets the opposition down with less hits and less runs. If that wasn't true Detroit would have won many a pennant.

"There has been so much said recently by fans and in your column about our batting slump that in my opinion our pitching staff has gotten the idea into their heads that they are to be pitied because of lack of proper support. Close observation of some of our recent games seems to bear out that statement. Our pitchers might as well get it into their heads that first of all their pitching must stand on its own legs and that they are far from being the oppressed staff one might suppose.

"I have been an ardent Spudder fan from their very inception and would be still if they were in last place so anything I have said is certainly not meant as a knock but as just criticism, and a defense of those players out there giving the pitcher a three or four-run lead just to lose out later, and later be given a gentle reminder that they are in a hitting slump. To be frank, get the pitchers out of the idea that the losses can all be blamed on poor batting support, and we'll start winning games.

"Now that I have that off I want to say something in all fairness to Cvengros and Steengrafe in that first game with Shreveport last Saturday. In my opinion and that of several other fans they were accorded some mighty poor ball and strike umpiring by Donnelly at the plate. Sitting right back of the plate, and there is nothing wrong with my eyes that I have ever found out, I noticed this: As you know, both Cvengros and Steengrafe have some mighty sharp breaking curves and time and again Donnelly would get them into a three-two hole by failing to give them the corners. Cobb would catch the ball eight to 12 inches wide of the plate after working a corner, only to have it called a ball. That kind of umpiring will ruin any pitching. Pitchers that work the corners with the control that Cvengros and Steengrafe have shown lately only to have them called balls ought to get up in their own defense. Too many players get the idea that they are poor sports if they complain. I say they are poor fighters if they don't.

"Of course, Donnelly might shrug his shoulders at criticism from so-called 'Behind-the-Plate Grandstand Umpires,' but he might as well get that old fallacy out of his head, if he ever had it, that the umpire is the only one on the field that can see anything. Donnelly's ball and strike umpiring in my opinion has shown room for much improvement.

"Yours very truly,
"A Spudder Fan.
"R. B. SAXE."

The figures given last week covered the first 40 games of the season and showed that Spudder pitchers had allowed the enemy an average of four runs—including both earned and unearned—per game. We still contend that kind of pitching is the pennant winning kind and that the Spudders would have led the league at the end of the first 40 games, if the team's hitting had been just a bit better than average. For the last 10 games or so the champs' hitting has been much improved and the pitching not so good.

Johnny Buvid, who wasn't such a bear of a pitcher in a class D league last year, is blossoming out in the fast class B South Atlantic circuit. Johnny di ndoa123456d't7890$..... Johnny didn't do a thing but win his first five games for the Spartanburg club and was beaten last week for the first time. The last averages available on the Sally circuit show Outfielder Sam Jones, also with Spartanburg on option, to be hitting at a .318 clip.

Katy Shows Way In City League Swat Statistics

Irvin of Dimock Brothers Is Individual Hitting Leader

M-K-T swatters predominate the leading names in this week's averages of the City league, giving evidence of the Katy's deserved leadership in the titular race. However, the real leader is Irvin of Dimock brothers, who has clouted the ball at a percentage of .650 in 20 times at bat. A. Martin of the railroaders leads in hits, 17, and Stone of Dimock brothers and Wininger of Katy are tied in runs scored, 11.

ANNOUNCE ALLOCATION FLOOD CONTROL FUNDS

WASHINGTON, June 2. (US)—Dwight F. Davis, secretary of war, announced today that on the recommendation of the chief of engineers and the president of the Mississippi river commission, the following allocation of funds for flood control work on the lower Mississippi has been decided upon:

Bonnet Carre spillway, $15,000,000; main line levees, $8,400,000; revetments, $9,000,000; dredging and miscellaneous, $2,000,000; surveys, $328,000.

The work will be carried on by the commission under the local supervision of the district engineers at St. Louis, Memphis, Vicksburg and New Orleans.

FARM RELIEF IS OWSLEY'S TOPIC QUANAH ADDRESS

QUANAH, June 2.—Economy in government and farm relief were the main issues discussed by Alvin Owsley, candidate for the United States senate Saturday afternoon on the courthouse lawn. "I have worked hard for my dollars," said Mr. Owsley, "and believe in the righteous expenditure of them. There has been too much waste in the operation of our government by the powers that are in control in Washington today. I am a believer in the doctrine of the Thomas Jefferson that the government should be operated for and by the people. Let us return the Democratic party to power again and do away with the unnecessary boards and commissions that have never benefited the people of Texas. I believe that public office is the grave trust and that public affairs should be administered with the most scrupulous economy consistent with the public good.

"The most important legislation before the people of this nation today is the question of farm relief. The farmers of this state are right in their demands for aid from the federal government. It is not necessary to create new boards and commissions to spend the people's monies. We have in Texas at present the necessary machinery to give the farmer direct aid from the government." Mr. Owsley then touched briefly on the tariff question. He said he favored a revision in our tariff laws whereby the farmers and the producers of the raw materials would not be discriminated against. One million bales of our low grade cotton could be utilized in the manufacture of cotton bagging if we would place a tariff on the jute grass that is shipped into this country free of duty, Mr. Owsley said.

"Foreign countries must pay their war debts to the United States," said Mr. Owsley. "I am opposed to the cancellation of any debts owed to our country. I refuse to have the enormous sum of ten billions of dollars saddled on the backs of my people and when the time comes for me to vote on this issue in the senate at Washington there will be no compromising." Mr. Owsley was introduced by Judge C. Y. Welch and was preceded by a band concert by the ladies' band of Quanah.

WOMAN RECOVERS FROM SPELL AFTER CONFESSION

SEATTLE, Wash., June 2. (UP)—Mrs. Peggy Davis, 31, who has admitted killing George Fowler, 21, son of a wealthy Brooklyn physician, was reported today to have recovered from hysterical spell suffered.

She continued to insist that the shooting was accidental and repeated her story that Fowler handed her a pistol while they were walking along a country road and told her it was loaded with blanks.

"I playfully pulled the trigger," she said, "and he fell."

ELDRED TOPS TEXAS LEAGUE HITTERS AND PROMISES REAL SCRAP FOR SEASON'S HONORS

The hard hitting of Brick Eldred continues to mark him as a potential league leader in the Texas campaign. Through Wednesday, the Spudder gardener was batting .455 in 25 games, enough to figure him as a real leader, though Worthington of Houston by getting five hits out of five times up on the final day of the average week, thrust himself over the .400 mark again to top the players in most of the games. Selph, Houston, heads the race for the first century in base hits with 80 to 78 for Blackerby, Waco, and Worthington's 72. Two Wacoans, Blackerby and Shires, with 47 and 46, lead in run scoring. Bonowitz, Fort Worth, and Blackerby, Waco, tie for the lead in home runs with nine each, to eight apiece for Shires, Waco, and Grimes, San Antonio. With 14 stolen bases, Flaskamper, San Antonio, has taken the lead from Eddie Moore, Fort Worth, who has 12.

Working once a week as steadily as an eight-day clock and never quitting the hill, the veteran spitball star, Wachtel of Fort Worth, recorded Thursday his eighth consecutive victory since the season got underway. Riviere of San Antonio, who has three defeats, is the only other pitcher to win eight games. Hallahan, Houston, has fanned 64 batters.

Houston is the only ball club batting .300. The Buffs lead in hits, Sarf Antonio in runs, and stolen bases, and Waco in home runs.

Hitters of .300, club batting, and pitchers winning half or better of their games through Thursday follow:

Bracey Is Star Olympic Trials For Southwest

Rice Institute Sprinter Ties Record in 100 Meters

OWNBY STADIUM, DALLAS, Texas, June 2. (AP)—The Southwest Saturday chose a team of record breakers as its Olympic games hopes in the final American tryouts in Harvard stadium next month.

Aided by perfect weather and a wonderful new $10,000 cinder path at Southern Methodist university's stadium, the Oklahoma, Arkansas, Louisiana and Texas athletes smashed eight old southern records, established fast time for two new distances, tied one Olympic record and approximated several others.

The meet raised high hopes for at least five men to "make" the Olympic team.

C. O. Bracey of Rice institute, Houston, Texas, stood out as the day's star. He set a new southern record of 10.6 seconds for 100 meters, equaling the Olympic record, and came back with a new southern mark of 21.7 seconds in the 200 meters, clipping 9-10 of a second off the old figure.

Cecil Bowman, Hammond, La., school boy, easily took first place in the hop, skip and jump with 49 feet 1 inch, a new southern record and only a few inches less than the Olympic record.

Bowman graduated from the ranks of the juniors only Friday.

Glenn Dawson of the Central Teachers college of Oklahoma, ran a spectacular race in the 10,000-meter contest, clipping more than three minutes off the old record. He lapped every other starter at least once and did not draw a long breath at the finish.

The last part of this contest was run in a driving rain storm which swept up just at the conclusion of the two-day track and field carnival.

Every time Douglas Graydon of Little Rock, Ark., heaved the javelin he set a new southern mark. The old figure was 191 feet 3 inches. He bettered it with a thrust of 195 feet and then got a distance of 200 feet, 2 inches, in his final effort.

The 800-meter dash was marred by a claim of foul, and the officials ordered the contest run again next Monday.

L. T. Bagwell of Texas Teachers' college, broke the tape a step in advance of Winston Hooper of S. M. U. with whom he raced in heart breaking style from the start. Less than 75 feet from the finish, Hooper aped abreast of Bagwell and seemed about to take the lead when Bagwell cut over in front of the Dallas runner.

The games served the double purpose of selecting candidates for the final Olympic tests and establishing the year's senior A. A. U. champions.

Those who placed first and second in Saturday's events became eligible for the final American tryouts.

Despite the brilliance of the track and field performances, they were witnessed by a paid attendance of only 394.

FLOYDADA, Texas, June 2.—Building permits took a jump in Floydada this week with the contract for the new city hall, three residences and 21 blocks of residence paving let by the city council.

H. E. Cannaday, local contractor, was the successful bidder on the city hall, while the L. H. Lacy company of Dallas received the contract for the paving. Both of these contracts call for work to begin immediately.

EXCAVATION STARTS ON LARGE BUILDING PROJECTS ABILENE

ABILENE, Texas, June 2.—Excavating work for both the two-story Hilton hotel annex and for the Abilene Christian college administration building is under way. Actual construction will be started on both structures within the next week.

According to records in the office of R. A. Miller, city building inspector, the permit for the hotel addition totalled $115,000 and that for the college building an even $100,000. Robert E. McKee of El Paso and Abilene, has the contract for the Hilton job and H. M. Seby is building the administration building.

The hotel building, being erected north of and adjoining the 10-story Hilton, completed in September, 1927, will cover ground space of 140 by 200 feet and be of fireproof construction. It will contain several storerooms and an automobile storage and service station on the ground floor, while the second story will be made into the sample rooms, guests' quarters and assembly halls. Total cost of the building will approximate $200,000, officials of the Abilene Improvement company builders of the structure, say. About three months will be required to complete the work.

The new Abilene Christian college administration building, to be a three-story edifice, embodying all modern college facilities, is the first of several buildings which will be erected on the new college campus in the eastern part of this city during the next 12 months. This structure will house the executive offices and the college departments of the institution. Officials of the school announce that work will begin shortly on an academy building, an auditorium, two large dormitories and a dining hall. All three will be ready for use by September, 1930, it is declared, and at that time the school will be moved to the new plant from the one now in use in the west side of the city. The college will spend approximately $750,000 in building operations during the next 12 months.

Month's Building Program Lubbock Starts Off Well

LUBBOCK, June 2.—Four building permits taken out June 1 totaled $25,000 and started the building program off for a good start in the month after the first five months of 1928 had set a record for building in Lubbock.

The total for the year now stands at $1,490,113.

Nearly as much building has already been started in Lubbock this year as in the entire year of 1927 and the building of that year outclassed any year in Lubbock's history except 1925.

Permits this year are expected to pass 1925 and set a mark for any small city of Texas to shoot at.

Lubbock has been ranking from fifth to eighth in Texas each week this year.

LUBBOCK PERMITS RANK WITH THOSE ISSUED IN LEADING TEXAS CITIES

LUBBOCK, June 2—Building permits of Lubbock have been ranking with those of the leading cities of Texas this year. A total of $469,103 was marked up in the month of May with 69 permits, bringing the total for the first five months of 1929 to $1,463,113, which is only about $300,000 under the total for the entire year of 1927.

Building by months this year follows: January, $230,455; February, $113,080; March, $243,525; April, $467,000; May, $409,103.

LAMESA, June 2.—The lower South Plains enjoyed another one-inch rain late Friday afternoon and night. Most of the cotton in the section was already planted with a good per cent of it up. The recent slow rain will aid in growing of the young cotton that is up and will help greatly in bringing up the cotton that has been recently planted. Although the rains of early May gave sufficient moisture in the section to insure good stands, the rain Friday night will serve to hasten the growth of the young cotton and feeds. The crop outlook was never brighter in this section. It is estimated of the 300,000 acres in cultivation in Dawson county 200,000 acres will be planted to cotton this year leaving 100,000 to feed.

RAIN AND COOL WEATHER SAVE WICHITA WHEAT

Recent rains, followed by cool weather, have saved the Wichita county wheat crop from being a complete failure, according to G. C. McGown, county agricultural agent.

Mr. McGown estimates that the average yield for wheat in the county will be from six to eight bushels per acre, which is about half the normal production. Some of the best fields, he said, will produce from 12 to 16 bushels, while one exceptional case has been reported to him from a farm where the yield probably will average 35 bushels. For the county as a whole, however, six to eight bushels is the expected average yield.

He is unable to estimate the approximate acreage in wheat, he said.

CONTRACT REACHED IN WATER ISSUE

Would Settle Differences Over Use of Pecan Bayou

BROWNWOOD, Texas, June 2. It is thought that the Brownwood board will sign the contract, with the possibility of a few minor changes. The contract provides for the subordination of all rights to domestic and riparian uses and is considered to have an important bearing on other water disputes in Texas.

The contract limits the use of water for hydro-electric power to 580,000 acre feet.

RURAL SCHOOLS OF WICHITA TO SEEK $800 IN TUITIONS

Applications for tuition refunds totaling about $800 will be made to the state department of education soon on behalf of nine rural schools of Wichita county, according to Burl Bryant, county school superintendent.

Under a law effective in 1927, Mr. Bryant said, scholastics residing in districts where fewer than 11 grades are taught are guaranteed an opportunity to complete a high school course. The law provides that a pupil who has completed the work offered in his own district may have his tuition paid in any other high school until he has completed 11 grades. The tuition must be paid by the school board of the pupil's residence district, which may obtain reimbursement from the state department.

Trustees in several Wichita county districts offering fewer than 11 grades of work have arranged for the transportation as well as for the tuition of graduates who attend other high schools.

SLAUGHTER LAUDS CLUB WOMEN FOR "HOME" CAMPAIGN

SAN ANTONIO, June 2. (AP)Describing the meaning of "home" as "the assemblage of things with and through which man lives," Dr. Willis Slaughter of Rice institute, Houston, Texas, congratulated the General Federation of Women's clubs here tonight for their campaign to develop and teach the fine art of living.

Dr. Slaughter, speaking before the 19th biennial convention of the federation, said that the home "is the origin and the final objective of human activity. It is that fixation of human forces and achievements which makes civilization possible, which gives to each new generation a slighter, higher and firmer foothold in the ascent of man."

Dr. George K. Burgess, director of the bureau of standards, revealed many ways in which his bureau is making it possible for Americans to practice the fine art of living.

The bureau of standards, he said, had made a careful study of materials, prices, designs, and property values in order to give home builders the best possible help in creating their homes. Zoning plans, plumbing systems, safe and efficient lighting systems, fire hazards, and many other questions have been investigated to make possible the building of the most efficient and satisfactory homes.

The work of the bureau then goes into the home, testing equipment from the automobile to the radio set, furnishing standards by which the doctor's clinical thermometer is calibrated, developing a new and better sugar for the housewife, devising schemes for reducing the cost of manufacturing, distributing and selling home equipment, setting standards of weights, measure and quality and providing dependable practices for certification and labeling of goods.

Letters From A Wichitan On Broadway

By Frank Ernest Nicholson

NEW YORK, June 2.—With the coming of spring Broadway seems to slip into a stupor. The blaze and glare of the theatrical season has waned; the summer amusement places have not opened. New Yorkers are planning their trips to Europe to avoid the heat, and the rush of tourists to New York has not not begun. During the heighth of a season Broadway is like a symphony—all things seem to function in harmony. One somehow feels the tempo. When the excitement and enthusiasm ebbs out, the tempo is broken. Then there is static. Broadway isn't so pleasant in spring.

Broadway's chief lure is its life. It lives hard, it lives gaily; but it lives. The dynamic activity of the greatest street in the United States represents the quick beating of the heart of a speeding nation. Broadway is as restless as a troubled sleep. It demands new life to feed its life, new forms to people its sidewalks, new faces for its gold and tinsel playhouses, and new guests to fill its hotels. It demands new money, new laughter, new playmates—therefore it must change its acts each season.

During the present political situation, when it is learned that one is a Texan, he is immediately asked how Smith is running. Yankees appear to be under the impression that Texas will be "the wheel." They are strong for Smith and believe Texans are. This typewriter wrecker was never one to get hot on things political, but he does say that if all the Smiths stick together, Al will soon be propping his feet on the library table of the White House living room, and the Fulton Fish market will be glorified forever. If these multitudinous Smiths paraphrase that old war cry: "All for Al and Al for one," it's going to make the Republicans be nice to the Joneses.

With a Smith in the White House and eight Smiths in the cabinet and a majority of Smiths in congress, it begins to look as if the Rpeublicans will have to get out of politics or marry into the family The Smiths argue that it's time for one of them to be leading the parade. There was a Smith on the Mayflower, there was a Smith at Valley Forge, there were Smiths shooting each other at Bull Run, and when you are looking for the boys who won the world war don't forget the Smiths. When Pocahontas stopped her old man from relieving John Smith of his head she certainly made the phone books heavy.

And while on the subject of politics; rumor has it that Edgar B. Davis, of Luling and Houston, Texas, is willing to let anyone who wants to help him to vice-presidency. Perhaps the name, Edgar B. Davis, holds something of familiarity. This pillar has got out of no little snooping for news by telling of his generosity in awarding $16,000 in prizes for paintings of Texas landscapes, in taking train loads of singers to San Antonio to warble Easter music, in donating two parks, at a cost of a million each, to Luling, Texas, and his theatrical venture, "The Ladder," which has been running on Broadway since—well, it seems ages and eons—at an admission price of nothing at all. "The Ladder" opened as a $3.50 show but no one would purchase the pasteboards so Davis started giving them away—and he's still at it. For his campaign slogan let me suggest that Mr. Davis use "Vote for the man at the bottom of the Ladder."

Francis German, a young man from Austin, Texas, who has established himself in New York musical circles as a singer of no mean ability, and who has so successfully "put over" his collection of cowboy songs and negro spirituals in concerts here and there, left last week for Austin. German will maintain a studio there for the summer, teaching voice in the studio of Victor Powell.

WEST TEXAS INTERESTS CONFER ON DAM PLAN

BROWNWOOD, June 2. (AP)—Jay Alexander of the Syndicate Power company of Dallas was here today for a conference with attorneys and members of the Brown county water improvement district in an effort to settle the dispute between the two factions over the use of waters of the Colorado river and its tributary, Pecan bayou.

SAN ANTONIO DRENCHED BY TWO-INCH DOWNPOUR

SAN ANTONIO, June 2. (AP)—San Antonio was drenched today with two inches of rain, which fell in 40 minutes, after a slow drizzle that had fallen most of the night. Twice that much water fell at Crystal City last night and a high wind storm at that place endangered many lives and did several thousand dollars worth of damage.

Seek Cop Adonis

UTICA, N. Y.—Lawbreakers of this city haven't half the chance they used to have. Talk among old-time criminals is that crime isn't what it used to be. It's all because the city policemen who are over weight are forced to use the new reducing machine recently installed in the police station and must get down to a perfect "36." Officials contend that with less weight the cops can run faster, and thus catch crooks where previously they had failed.

Sidelights FROM THE Sidewalks

There has been much agitation as to "My Most Embarrassing Moment" or "The Most Embarrassed Man I Ever Saw," but all prizes for such contests would naturally go to a man who got off the train at the local station, only to go through the most excruciatingly embarrassing experience one could imagine—his suitcase fell open, and all his collars and neckties and shirts and other wearing apparel were strewn up and down the platform.

The sandstorm that came up Friday noon caused no little disturbance among the members of a negro minstrel band that was parading up and down the business streets. How to hold on their tall silk hats and keep down their brilliantly colored coat-tails and still play on their instruments was more than a mere problem.

ONE KILLED, TEN HURT TORNADO HITS TRAIN

ST. ALBANS, Vt., June 2. (AP)—One man was killed and 10 were injured, three seriously, when a Canadian Pacific passenger train was struck by a tornado today between St. Annbridge and Bedford, Quebec, 20 miles north of here.

Three passenger coaches were thrown down an embankment but the engine remained on the rails.

U. S. COURT OKEHS FEE PAID ORIENT RECEIVER

KANSAS CITY, June 2.(AP)—Word was received here today that the United States circuit court of appeals in St. Paul has handed down a decision in connection with the reorganization of the Kansas City, Mexico & Orient railroad allowing W. T. Kemper, president and former receiver, and Clifford Histed, general counsel, $800,000 for the 10-year period the road was in receivership and the period of reorganization.

TINY CIGARETTE FIEND SETS FIRE TO HOUSE

MONTREAL, June 2. (AP)—A three-year-old cigarette addict was blamed today by his mother for a fire which damaged the home of his parents last Wednesday. Mrs. Henry Lamarche, the mother, told Fire Commissioner Quinn in court, that all efforts of herself and her husband had so far failed to keep cigarettes from the boy.

LOS ANGELES CHOSEN FOR SECOND DIVISION REUNION

ST. LOUIS, June 2. (INS)—Boston was awarded the 1929 reunion and Los Angeles the 1930 convention of the second division association, at the reunion here today.

Major General Preston Brown was elected president, succeeding Colonel Hanford McNider, now boomed for the vice presidency of the Republican ticket.

THE ILLITERATE DIGEST

By WILL ROGERS — Sunday, June 3, 1928 — (Copyright, 1928, by the McNaught Syndicate, Inc.)

What Makes the Conventions Go Round

Well, all I know is just what I read in the papers, this ought to reach you shortly before the first American Follies is held in Kansas City. We have our amusements so arranged that we have two every four years, and they draft various Cities where they are to be held. This year, K. C. and Houston, Texas, were convicted. We will speak mostly of the K. C. one, for that is the first. The Democrats watch the Comedy in this one, and then they improve on it. This one started out and looked like a grest show, but an Actor named Hoover has grabbed off all the best lines, and if they don't stop him pretty soon it looks like he will about change it into a one man show. If he gets enough to nominate before he goes there, why it will just about take all the interest out of the whole shebang. There will be nothing to decide but the Vice Presidency, and thats just about like picking the best man at a wedding, everybody knows it will be some old family friend, it wont make much difference who, and as for any excitement about the platform, or what is the issues of the race to be, why the poor Deligates will be allowed to sit and sweat and finally vote on something that he thinks is a Platform but when he gets home it will be found to be a "trick floor," one of those things that you can raise it or lower it without the audience even seeing you do it. It will have a false bottom, and when you think you are standing on it, you wont be at all, you are over it but not on it.

But the whole thing will be a great show at that, and of course if Hoover is replaced by the management and they throw the part open to anybody, why then we will have a real run for our money. Charley Curtis is on his home grounds and will be a hard man to beat among the mulatto horses. The Republican Party owe him a lot, but whether they will ever pay him or not, nobody knows. Can you imagine Kansas with a President? Why the D. A. R.'s would remove the ban on William Randolph White.

If Hoover does get away with this it will be the biggest engineering job he ever accomplished. For the Political Leaders sho tried to tare up his Blue prints. But if the Politicians defeat him, why it will be the greatest demonstration of Matter over Mind that was ever demonstrated. Kansas City will show em a great time. It's a live town. It's near enough to Oklahoma to have a lot of life, and plenty of money to spend.

It will be great to meet all the old Newspaper boys who havent met since the old siege of Madison Square garden. We will all be there, grinding out dope to the home papers, trying to make "copy" where none or no reason for any exists. They are the ones that keep it interesting. Its not the Actors themselves. Political Conventions would die standing up if it wasent for the inventive genius of the Boys that make the Actors look "colorful." They will write back to your paper and make you at home think that it is the most exciting place you ever saw, while as a matter of fact there wont be a thing in the world doing but some old long-winded Bird talking about "getting back to the early Lincoln Democracy."

There wont be an original saying, or a new passage uttered during the entire fiesta. But the old Newspaper Boys will "Smoke" it up, and Graham McNamee will tell it to you over the "Rodeo" so that you will imagine that Henry Clay, Daniel Webster, and Calhoun are there in droves. Its just as I say, one of our Follies that we have built up that no other Country in the world would understand or know for what reason it was being held. But we like it, and its distinctly ours. Its the one place where our public men can do foolish things, and due to the surroundings they kinder look plausible at the time.

It takes weeks after one is over to really start to appreciate the finer comedy points of one. The reason a thing dont look ludicrious to us is that a man at the last one did and said exactly the same thing.

The Great American Follies.

If a silk hat blows off at exactly the same place every day, why it aint near as funny as if you wasent looking for it happen, so these long winded silly nominations, and the "safe the country" speeches you don't laugh at them when they are made, for we have become so accustomed to them that its like the high Hat blowing off, we know its going to do it. But its when we get home and take one of these conventions apart and just see what was really inside it, why then is when our sense of humor asserts itself. But its too late to do anything about it then, so we just smile and wait four years, and here they are back again. The ones that failed to save the Country the last time are patriotic, they are back again for another trial. Prohibition is dragged out as another issue, lower taxes, all the old Gags are dusted off, and away they go again.

Those that are in are trying to stay in, and those that are out are trying to get in, and thats about all there is to the game. The same old flock of Deligates are back again, they even boast of not missing a Convention since Lincoln was inaugurated, and the funny part of it some of them really believe that they have got something to do with whats going on, and maybe they have, for lets not deprive them of little pleasure there is in it.

The same old Leaders are here, just Rarin for something to lead. But theres lots of them than dont take it serious, they just come for the badge and the free seat. But there is a kind of fascination about them that you wouldent miss.

They are a great bunch of fellows. But there is not a one among them that have really anymore personal feelings whether one man or the other is elected President. Its their particular job, and something that will further some scheme of theirs, that they are more vitally interested in than any president. Ben Turpin would be O. K.

The Radiator Lines of All Durant Cars Are Alike—

DURANT

Durant built products have always been distinguished for one thing—the perfect relation of weight to Power, resulting in performance that is "talked about." In the new Durant line this characteristic is more dominant than ever, while outwardly all Durants now have one common feature—a similarity in distinctive appearance.

JUST TRY IT IN TRAFFIC

SEE HOW IT PARKS

Not only does the New Oldsmobile offer the fine-car qualities of power, comfort and appearance—but it offers them in a car of convenient size, designed to meet modern-day traffic conditions.

Just try it in traffic. Mark its silent smoothness as you flash ahead when an opening appears—accelerating in high from 5 to 25 m. p. h. in a scant 8½ seconds. Note the quick response to steering. See how easily you slip into small parking places—a tapered frame enables you to turn completely around in a 36-foot circle. Then head for the open road . . . here is speed to meet every driving emergency, to answer every desire.

Only fine-car design and fine-car features could give this fine car performance. A rubber-cushioned, 55 h. p. high-compression engine . . . crankcase ventilation . . . controlled cooling and full-pressure oiling—these are typical examples of the advanced engineering that you find in the new Oldsmobile.

And matching this progressiveness in design are new Fisher bodies—created by artist-engineers to be free from rattles and drumming and to express in their bold, free beauty the whole new spirit of our times.

We want you to drive the new Oldsmobile. We want your own experience to confirm the growing judgment of America—"Here, truly, is the Fine Car of Low Price!"—the judgment that thousands are confirming by choosing Oldsmobile. We have a new Oldsmobile waiting for you . . . come take that drive today!

TWO-DOOR SEDAN f. o. b. LANSING $925

A Salesman "sells" himself on Oldsmobile

"I drive a car all day in making my calls," said Mr. T . . . , "and practically all of my driving is through heavy traffic. So I want a car of convenient size and one that handles easily. Yet I want big-car comfort and quality, too. I'd never heard of a car that combined all this—until my salesmanager suggested an Oldsmobile. But you'll have to show me! High-pressure selling won't do. I want proof!"

He was invited to take the wheel for a demonstration and he stepped into the car.

Traffic was unusually thick but he guided the car through without effort, coming to a smooth stop then accelerating swiftly ahead—always in the lead—as traffic started. He parked it without trouble in unbelievably small spaces, then was off again to try the car in some new test.

"Well!" he exclaimed finally, "I can't think of a single test that this car doesn't meet. It's got all the power in the world—remarkably smooth and silent, too. It's as comfortable as the biggest, with those Lovejoy hydraulic shock absorbers and form-fitting, deeply-cushioned seats. And it's the easiest handling car I've ever driven! But will it stand up in long service?"

He was told of the million miles of testing on the General Motors Proving Ground, as well as city and country driving, that the car was subjected to before it was put on the market. "That's enough for me," he said. "Any car that can stand those tests will stand harder use than I'll ever give it. I'm sold!"

Come take that drive today

DAILY MARKET REPORT

NEW HIGH GROUND FOR MANY ISSUES IN STOCK MARKET

NEW YORK, June 2. (AP)—Speculation for the advance was resumed with considerable violence in today's brief session of the stock market. Enormous buying operations in stocks in which William C. Durant has a large interest led many houses to characterize the session as a "Durant market." Nearly two score issues were elevated to new high ground, with the gains ranging from 1 to 8¼ points.

Trading was unusually brisk for a half holiday session, the day's sales aggregating 1,738,000 shares.

Wall Street apparently had recovered from the shock of seeing call money posted at 6% per cent, the highest price in seven years, for the second time within a week. Speculative opinion leaned to the theory that credit conditions would become easier when the month-end settlements were out of the way and the dividend and interest checks returned to the banks, but further credit restriction measures were looked for in some conservative quarters.

The rise in the Durant stocks was construed in many quarters as an indication that the outside public was still willing to buy stocks sponsored by powerful market interests. Several of the monthly bank reviews, however, call attention to the dangers of securities speculation and urged caution in the purchase of securities at current levels.

General motors was one of the day's features. Getting off to a slow start, the stock suddenly shot forward in the last half hour of trading and ran up over 6 points to 200, the final transaction being a block of 5,000 shares at the top price. Hupp reached new high ground at 65, Chrysler and Dodge Bros. preferred were heavy on profit-taking.

Coppers suddenly came to life under the leadership of American smelting, which advanced more than 5 points to a record top at 201½. Anaconda climbed more than 2 points to within a fraction of the year's high at 74. Magma, Kennecott and Cerro de Pasco each advanced about 2 points.

Unconfirmed reports that the Radio Corporation would sell its communications business to International Telephone and enter into a merger or some close working arrangement with Victor Talking Machine Co., brought about an advance in all three stocks. International Telephone soared nearly 10 points to a new peak at 197¾ and then eased to 196. Radio established a new record high at 824, closing a point below that figure for a net gain of 3 points. Victor closed 6¼ points higher at 99¾ after touching 101½. Western Union, which is reported to be meeting heavy radio competition, sold down to a new 1928 low at 150.

Rails held steady with trading quiet.

Except for a jump of 10 points in Japanese yen, foreign exchanges moved within narrow and irregular limits. Sterling cables ruled unchanged around $4.86%.

PARTIAL REACTION FOLLOWS ADVANCES IN COTTON MARKET

NEW YORK, June 2. (AP)—The cotton market was quiet today, partial reactions from an opening advance being attributed to week-end realizing. October contracts, after selling up to 20.90 at the start, reacted to 20.76, and closed at that figure, compared with 20.72 at the close of the previous day. The general market closed barely steady, at net declines of 2 to 4 points.

A flurry of buying at the opening evidently was stimulated by an unfavorable view of the weather news which indicated showery conditions in the South, with rather heavy showers or rains at some points in the Mississippi valley and Texas. These conditions were considered likely to stimulate boll weevil activities, and some traders also felt that dry weather would have been preferable considering recent complaints of greasy fields.

For a time, demand was quite active, but was supplied on advances of 15 to 17 points, and after selling up to 20.72 for July and December, prices eased under local and commission house selling. Offerings were not heavy, but there was comparatively little demand after the early buying had run its course and the close was at the lowest prices of the day on most positions.

Both the Liverpool and Alexandria markets were closed today. Trading here included further liquidation of July contracts, but it appeared to be absorbed at about the previous differences between July and December, while at the close, July was within 14 points of October, compared with a discount of 18 points at the close Friday.

The amount of cotton on shipboard awaiting clearance at the end of the week was estimated at 99,915 bales, against 124,433 last year, and 87,396 two years ago.

MANY ANSWERS DELAY AWARDS FREE VACATION

Hundreds and hundreds of answers have been filed in the Vacation Contest. It was originally planned to announce the winners today, but it is out of the question. Clerks are busy now classifying and sorting the answers, and they will be turned over to the judges who will give the contestants' answers most careful consideration and make final awards.

The judges are Dr. J. W. Cantwell, president of the junior college and superintendent of the Wichita Falls public schools; D. L. Hancock, manager and artist of the Southwestern Engraving company, and Mrs. George M. Holt, a local artist.

The answers will be judged on accuracy, neatness and attractiveness. Many contestants were very enterprising in preparing their answers.

One is a train, made up of an engine, tender and four cars, measuring some 28 feet in length. Another contestant submitted his answers in the form of a traveling bag, while another prepared his in a great beautiful fan, standing some five feet high and about eight feet long.

Still another was done in a beautiful frame made entirely of copies of The Wichita Daily Times, done in an artistic plastic effect.

All sorts of designs showing a fine imagination and much artistic ability on the part of the contestants have been submitted.

After the judges have made their awards, which will probably be by the middle of the week, the answers will be on display in the Mark Walker building, across from The Times office on Scott street. Checks will be mailed to all winners.

Camp Fire Girls Will Entertain Council at Camp

Members of the Camp Fire Girls' council will visit the Camp Fire Girls encamped at the Diversion dam on Tuesday, June 12, instead of on June 5, it was announced Saturday.

The girls, who left Wednesday, are having a wonderful camp, according to the reports sent back. On Thursday evening "Wild Nell" was enacted, with Lois Fisk as stage director. Maxine Rowland and Josephine Pinson of Stamford are contributing saxophone music. Mrs. George Hengy of Dallas, swimming councilor, is in charge of the evening programs. Mrs. J. C. Mathis is in charge of the vesper services. Lois Fisk is proving efficient as chairman of servers, or K. P. chief, and Lillie Mae Finley of Byers is chairman of camp grounds.

Projects such as making rubber moccasins, tooled leather and candle holders are under way. Miss Gladys Horn is directing the group which is catching and mounting butterflies, and Mrs. Mahood of Stamford has charge of fire-making, poncho-rolling, planning outdoor meals and so forth. Miss Winifred Elrod, camp nurse, held an interesting first aid contest Friday afternoon. Mrs. Mahood conducted a camp craft contest Saturday. Mrs. Anna Barnhill will be in charge of nature games and contests Sunday, and Mrs. Hengy will hold a water carnival Monday. The weekly council fire will be held Tuesday evening.

National Women Leaders Assert Capital Punishment Is Failure And That It Should Be Banned

SAN ANTONIO, June 2. (UP)—Capital punishment has failed as a preventive of crime and should be abolished, in the opinion of many delegates attending the General Federation of Women's clubs convention here.

Although opposed to capital punishment, Miss Julia K. Jaffray of New York, member of the federal prison board and for eight years head of the federation's department of adult delinquency, believes it should apply alike to men and women criminals as long as it is a law.

"I am opposed wholeheartedly to capital punishment," she said. "I think it has failed and there is no reason to continue a practice that is so terrible. However, as long as it is a law, I think it should apply alike to men and women criminals."

"There are some crimes that can hardly be adequately punished by less than death," Mrs. Emma Fox of Detroit avers. Mrs. William R. Alvord of Detroit, chairman of the American citizenship department declares that Michigan has found the death penalty unnecessary for curbing crime.

"Even private grief at the loss of a loved one would not justify the cry for vengeance on the criminal," stated Mrs. McNab Miller of Columbia, Mo., who opposes capital punishment.

But such crimes as the recent Hoppe case, of Toledo, Ohio, are too heinous for anything less than the death penalty, both Mrs. Francis E. Whitley of Iowa, and Mrs. John F. Sippel of Baltimore believe.

Sterilization of habitual criminals and the mentally unfit, if handled with extreme judgment, was advocated by several club women.

Shield Expert Here

R. J. Meinhardt, of Chicago, the well-known expert, will personally be at the Kemp Hotel, Wichita Falls, Texas, on Thursday, June 7th, from 10:00 a. m. to 1:00 p. m., and on Friday, June 8th, from 10:00 a. m. to 4:00 p. m. only.

Mr. Meinhardt says:

"The Meinhardt Vacuum Shield" will not only retain the Rupture perfectly, but contracts the opening in 10 days on the average case—usually giving instantaneous relief, withstanding all strain, regardless of the size or location of the Rupture.

CAUTION—Do not expose yourself to the danger of wearing old-style trusses with understraps. These trusses usually place the pad on the lump and not on the rupture opening. This often causes strangulation, which usually necessitates an immediate surgical operation, or results in sudden death.

"The Meinhardt Vacuum Shield" has no understraps. It is also perfectly sanitary and practically indestructible and can be worn while bathing.

NOTICE—Only gentlemen are invited to call at this time as special arrangements will be announced later for women and children.

Please do not write asking for literature or to be fitted by mail, as this is impossible. Every case must be seen personally. There is no charge for demonstration.

SPECIAL NOTICE—All cases that I have fitted on my previous visits here during the past years will please call for inspection. Please note time above dates and office hours carefully. Business demands prevent stopping at any other city in this section. (This visit is for white people only.)—E. J. Meinhardt, Home Office, 1851 N. Crawford Avenue, Chicago, Ill.—Adv.

MR. RODMAN WANAMAKER

PROBABLY the most heavily insured man in the world was the late Rodman Wanamaker — Philadelphia and New York merchant.

He directed in his will that the proceeds of his policies—seven and a half million dollars—be placed in a single Trust Fund for the benefit of his three children.

By means of this far-sighted arrangement the principal sum will be kept intact, his heirs will have no investment problems to worry them, and they will receive a steady flow of income as long as they live.

Few men can hope to leave an estate of Wanamaker dimensions; but the establishment of a Life Insurance Trust is open to everyone.

If steady, dependable income is what you wish your heirs to have, let us tell you how your Life Insurance policies can be made to produce that result.

It will take but a few minutes of your time to get the facts—and our time is yours.

IT IS SO EASY

to own a home and such a splendid thing to do and such a satisfying accomplishment that we often wonder why anybody at all who is permanently located should remain in a rented house or an apartment. And, too, if one has children, it seems kind of unfair to stick them in a little apartment where they have no place to play out on the ground. Give the little folks a chance to live and grow in the sun and fresh air that surrounds a home situated on its own lot. It does not have to be expensive but you will be proud of it if it is yours. This institution can certainly aid you in this great undertaking. See us about the interesting details. By the way, have you received your photo frame bank from us yet? PEGGY PIEDMONT Says

I AM just wondering, Kitty, if you will experience half the thrill in the piece of news I am giving you that I did when I learned this week that Flora Bruce Greenwood, a young Wichita Falls girl, has won so many honors in this, her first year, at the Curtis institute in Philadelphia. Well, I hear she's set the woods on fire in the musical world up there. When she first entered the school for a special study of the harp, in the early fall, she went with a feeling and hope that it was the one instrument for which she was most fitted. For Flora Bruce was not quite sure about that. The entire Greenwood family is musical, and as you very well know, her talented mother is one of the foremost violinists in Wichita Falls. But the daughter didn't take to the violin. She had some piano instruction and takes piano now with her course at the institute, but still the piano wasn't exactly what she was looking for. So she finally decided that it was the harp, and to that instrument she turned her undivided attention, and from the results of her work this year, I am sure no one can doubt that she has certainly found what she was seeking.

BEGINNING with lessons from Miss Lucille Lawrence, harpist premiere, in the Artist Ensemble, at the school, the instrubtor was so very much impressed with the wonderful talent displayed by Flora Bruce, that she arranged an audience for her with Carlos Salzedo, the greatest known harpist in the world. This master was so impressed with young musician's talent, that he accepted her as his own pupil. Her progress under him proved most marvelous. She went far beyond the hopes and dreams of her teacher, her mother, and her grandmother, Mrs. A. D. Anderson, who accompanied her to Philadelphia and has chaperoned her during her stay there. Not only were Flora Bruce's numbers arranged among the last on the program in the final student concert at the school, but she played five of her own compositions. The school, considered one of the best in the world by musicians, is a comparatively new one, having been established about four years ago by Mrs. Edward Bok, daughter of Cyrus H. K. Curtis of the Curtis Publishing company, and occupies an impressive location in one of Philadelphia's millionaire districts.

It is so well endowed that 225 pupils are accepted and these are chosen by invitation. Flora Bruce was further honored by receiving an invitation to be a pupil next year. Mrs. Greenwood, being a musician herself, of course can appreciate all these honors that has been conferred upon her daughter and admits that she is thrilled to death over her progress. I feel a little bit ashamed of myself for telling you so much, for when I heard all of this, I asked her about it and found all to be true, but she ended her conversation with, "Now, for goodness sake, don't tell all that I told you, for I don't want to seem to be bragging." Would you mind bragging a little if you were her?

AND Flora Bruce is not the only Wichita Falls' girl who has set the woods on fire in the east, musically speaking. We have another one, and that is Katherine Kilander. Katherine has recently returned home from New York city where she studied piano this season at the Juilliard school. This institute of learning, which is also rated as one of the world's best, specializes in voice instruction and three instruments, piano, violin and 'cello. From 1000 students entered in competitive contest, Katherine was awarded a fellowship which entitles her to four years of study. Fifty students in the four subjects offered, were chosen from the 1000 for scholarships and fellowships. The scholarships are awarded to the undergraduates and the fellowships to the graduates. And not only has Katherine a right to be encouraged because of what she may look forward to for herself, but she is also happy on account of the fact that her brother, James, a senior in electrical engineering at ANOTHER Wichita Falls girl in New York, who has an unusually attractive personality and appearance, and who is making a name for herself in another line of work is Leona Maricle. You remember I wrote you last year about Leona when she visiter her mother, Mrs. Emma Maricle, here, and her sister, Mrs. Fay Hardeman. She is a C. I. A. girl who has forged ahead in dramatics by hard work and determination and is now beginning to reap some of the rewards of her labor. Last year she toured the east and Pacific coast in the well-known satirical comedy, "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes," and press reports of the production were most flattering to Leona. This year she is playing in "The Trial of Mary Dugan," with Ann Harding in the leading role. The production is showing on Broadway where it has had a successful season since September.

WE have had a regular Wichita Falls colony in New York city this past fall and winter, according to Katherine Kilander. Frank Nicholson is there writing and syndicating his features; Loran Stone is there working at art advertising and I hear is doing exceedingly well; Alice Welty and Mary Frances Collier Robertson have been there studying art and will come this week, and then there are the Turners, Lesley and Lurline. Lesley has been in New York for some time and is becoming quite well known for his illustrations in the Saturday Evening Post and other well known magazines, and Lurline is studying dramatics and taking parts in some vaudeville. Alice Cargill is a Wichita Falls' business girl in the metropolis and is with the Sinclair Oil company, while still another recent addition to the colony is Alice Copeland, who is with one of the prominent law firms there, headed by Charles E. Hughes.

BUT this letter so far, has been all work and no play. Now I really didn't start out to talk so much about work, and this has been playtime for some people, and among them are Willie Mae Kell and Mrs. Lucille Brooks Huff and her sister, Mrs. Edilee Fitzhugh. For the group have had the pleasure of entertaining girlhood friends. Mrs. Elmer Woods and Mrs. Louis Campbell of Oklahoma City. Mrs. Woods will be remembered by many here as Mary Boyd, while Mrs. Campbell was formerly Frankie Snearley of Henrietta.

HAVING told you about all the girls and boys I know, who are doing things in another city about which we have not heard very much, I will now tell you to cast your eyes in the direction of one staying at home, who is none other than your friend—

IN THE evenings after the sun has set and the mosquito starts its evening "hum of hate" the buzz is so annoying. Not only are the stings annoying but they may prove dangerous. The Maricle Coal and Feed company, 804 Eleventh, has found a sure destroyer for the dangerous insects—"Flikil." Mosquitoes and other insects cannot live where "Flikil" has been sprayed, but harmless to humans and animals. In fact leaves an odor that is clean and refreshing. I can vision no spot more alluring than free from mosquitos. Visit "Maricle's" right away for a can of Flikil" and be free from danger.

THE HOME of the June bride must be equipped with every modern convenience, and the Frigidaire is, without a doubt, the personification of convenience. Through this proper refrigeration, the most perishable foods are preserved, and at the same time retain their original freshness and flavor. Thereby solving one of the many problems of warm weather.

The Frigidaires come in a few colors and add an unusual note to the kitchen or breakfast room. Make arrangements for one now. All available on easy terms The Texas Electric Service company, 804 Scott.

LUXESIC

EXQUISITE gifts for June brides—etchings and decorative glassware. Interior Arts shop, 1103 Tenth.

MAJESTIC

THIS week's Majestic attraction brings "Richard Barthelmess," in "Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come." Tol'able David has been re-incarnated—reborn under the magic touch of Richard Barthelmess, who once again has created a barefoot boy, in this First National picture.

Molly O'Day, his leading lady, who is actually only 17 years old, is a barefoot girl in the opening scenes, also. Be sure and see this picture at the Majestic, Sunday, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday.

THE ROUND of the parties for the June brides requires a lot of clothes. This summer weather simply wilts clothes with one wearing. But thanks to excellent cleaners like the Wichita Cleaners these wilted garments can be restored to their former daintiness. Scarfs, frocks, gloves, hats and sweaters cleaned to your entire satisfaction. Almost the magic of new garments for old, as it were. Phone 4377. Wichita Cleaners and Dyers.

ORCHID SHOP'S Travelling Necessities. Fresh looking negligees, tailored and decidedly nice looking for travel and the "June Bride's" wardrobe are the Jap coolie coats, Bridge coolie coats and brocaded and flowered rayon robes, at the Orchid Shop, 806 Indiana. Prices ranging from $4.95 to $15.00.

FOR COMFORT and coolness in the summer I know of no more attractive shoes than the pastel shades of kid and white for the summer frock. These unusual slippers are sold at the Orchid Shoe Shop, 806 Indiana, in either pump or strap, with color combinations. The epitome of comfort and smartness for summer costumes.

I WAS just thinking about the brides who assume the responsibility of keeping check on the family salary and bank account. It is quite an undertaking and you will need all the help you can get from your banker.

There are cancelled checks to be filled as receipts, your check stubs to fill in and balance against the statement from the bank and the whole amount to tally with the family budget that you have wrinkled your pretty forehead trying to figure out.

Goodness, what an undertaking.

Mary Ann has a silver lining to offer, however. I want to recommend a friendly bank that adds personality to the cold accuracy of banking and finance.

Try an account at the Wichita State Bank and Trust company. I believe that you would be happy doing your business there. You can appreciate their courteous, accurate service. They are right there when you need them most in your moments of financial perplexity.

If you don't have the responsibility of the family banking, why not whisper in friend husband that the Wichita State Bank and Trust company is a good place for him to do his banking business.

Money Makes For "Wedded Bliss"

BRIDES, you lovely dears, far be it from me to try to give you advice when you have already had more than plenty. But Mary Ann truly believes that there is at least a grain of truth in the old adage "when poverty comes in the door love flies out the window." So thinking of that and believing it so strongly, I urge that one of the first things you do is get your living expenses regulated so that each month you can lay by a nice sum in the savings department of the North Texas Building and Loan association, 822 Scott street. Very early in the game get the savings habit. It gives a sense of security that goes a long way toward marital happiness. Don't let the bliss of today blind you to tomorrow's needs and emergencies.

A savings account with the North Texas Building and Loan association which is growing day by day is a fine thing for newly weds to anchor their hopes to.

THEY say courtesy is the warm air of the base burner of the heart. Is it not so? But there is another kind of courtesy that is quite a bit welcome these warm days. It's the sort of courtesy the Wichita Ice company men deal out. If you don't believe they have a friendly, courteous service call 3101. A trial of this service will convince you that the Wichita Ice company maintain a friendly and efficient organization—for your benefit.

I CAN vision no place more alluring than the Palace of Flowers—the cool restfulness—the fragrance of a rose garden—the charm of an artistically arranged shop and courteous service. All these features combine to make the Wichita Floral company, 911 Indiana, where you'll find the choice of the most discriminating. They have at this time a most gorgeous assortment of "Flowers for the June Bride" and her many showers and different parties. Let them help you make your choice by phoning 3300.

ENTERTAINING at best though it be the delight of your heart, is responsibility. But summer does bring respite for there is only one thing for any one to serve and that is Ice Cream.

It is a great comfort to be able to call Colvert's Ice Cream company, for instance, for a wedding, announcement party, or shower, and say, "Mr. Colvert, do send me wedding bells in Ice Cream for 20 guests"—or cupids or hearts, or any of the other delightfully ingenious molds for which Colvert's have been famous. Their phone number is 3188.

OFF! To A Smart Vacation

W. B. McClurkan Company is the logical place to assemble your ensemble for travel, sport, afternoon or summer evenings. The woman who knows her clothes and where to wear them finds in our smart vacation costumes that intangible something which brings dormant charm to the surface. Individuality, the keynote to smartness is a never absent attribute of our frocks and accessories.

FOR TRAVEL ....

Shagmore travel coats in solid colors and small tweed patterns serve a double purpose. They are as smart for chilly evenings and after-the-party drives as for travel. 29.75 to 89.75.

Stitched and quilted hats of taffeta or satin take precedent on Pullman, steamer or motor. In dark shades and chic shapes. 10.00 to 16.50.

Travel frocks may be of georgette, canton or flat crepe, of navy they must be—for navy is ubiquitous and omnipotent in the world of travel. 29.75, 39.75, 45.00, 49.75.

Suitable bags of trout and alligator leather in blond, grey and white jade. New white washable kid bags for use with light frocks. 4.95 to 16.50.

FOR PLAY ....

The trend toward dark sportswear has established black and navy hats as close rivals of pastel straws to match the frock. Both types are well represented in our millinery department.

Tub frocks which scorn frills and furbelows top the sports list. In solid pastel shades, stripes or prints they are appropriate for informal Texas and resort wear. 19.75 and 29.75.

White footwear has come into its own once more! To complement new white and honey beige slippers we offer Gordon hose in white jade, narrow heel. 1.95 to 4.95.

Costume jewelry strikes colorful hi-lights in the sport ensemble. Sets of bracelet, necklace, pin and earscrews are smartest. In rose, green, blue and yellow. 1.50 to 2.50 piece.

BY SUMMER SANDS ....

Swim suits and accessories that reflect the fashions of continental beaches. Solid colors, bordered or striped effects and clever vestee models. 2.95, 3.95, 6.50. Rubber bandanas, diving caps and children's caps 15c up.

BEAUTY AIDS ....

Dorothy Gray's preparations enhance and preserve beauty under the summer sun. A bright new lipstick and a protecting cream from our toilet goods department will add much to the joy of vagabond days.

UNDER THE MOON ....

For dining—diaphanous frocks of chiffon and georgette molded and draped in accord with the mode. For dancing—crisp taffeta combined with tulle, a style redolent of youth. 29.75 to 49.75.

INTIMATE APPAREL ....

Chiffon jersey—so cool and light that it feels like nothing at all yet exceedingly durable—this is our suggestion for summer lingerie. Step-ins 3.50. Bloomers 3.95. Voile French panties 1.00. Pullman robes 5.95 to 22.50.

Fine linen finish stationery. Envelopes lined. Two boxes for 1.00. An important requisite for your vacation.

A LUGGAGE ENSEMBLE

Convenience—compactness—modishness—durability—all these are features that have been considered in our presentation of luggage ensembles—and all contribute to the enjoyment of the traveler.

Dorinda's Diary

THE "Road to San Antonio" started at Wichita Falls, Friday afternoon, May the 25th, when we left for the biennial, but we didn't reach the place where "Romance clings to jagged rocks" that Grace Noll Crowell so beautifully tells us about in the above poem, until Saturday afternoon.

Every mile of the way was outlined with the wild flowers for which Texas is famous and the drive out from Fort Worth early Saturday morning showed every hill "silver spun." The hills, trees and flowers and even the clouds took on a new beauty and a new glory as the morning sun bathed them in its radiance. To watch the sun rise is a wonder that is never the same and to no two people does it ever have the same meaning.

So it is with the capitol building at Austin, where we stopped for a few hours Saturday afternoon. To some its historic walls with their beautifully carved doors and its floors of mosaic like splendor, mean nothing more than a sight for the tourists eyes; to others it is a place that peoples one's thoughts with those whose feet have worn impressions in the floors, as their lives have left imprints in Texas history.

In the senate chamber a black draped chair touched anew the grief in my heart for my old friend Senator I. D. Fairchild, who passed away only a few weeks ago. The empty room, silent since the adjournment of the legislature, was filled with the sound of the eloquent voice of my old friend in the "choir invisible" of all those voices that have drifted out on the winds of history . . . . . I looked back at the statues of Stephen F. Austin and Sam Houston as we left. Silent they were, but the long avenue of trees through which we departed kept up a continual whispering, as if they were trying to tell us of the great ones who had walked beneath their branches.

AT NEW BRAUNFELS, we loitered away a delightful hour in Landa park with its beautiful springs, streams and trees and the man of our party whom I shall call "El Bravo," made a moving picture of us. I call him "El Bravo," which in Spanish means "The Brave," because he was brave enough to accompany three women to a woman's convention. And why not use the only two words of the Spanish language I know when I have a chance? . . . . . We are now approaching San Antonio, which is advertised as the city where: "guitars tinkle and castanets flash and whirr as dark-eyed sons and daughters of Spanish grandees and ancient Conquistadores whirl colorfully through the dance!

—Where the ancient Alamo bears battered witness to the struggles of Davy Crockett's noble band of whom not one escaped the oppressor's wrath to tell the bloody tale of heroic death".....so already, I was taking on the Spanish atmosphere and wanted to do a fandango which I thought would look well in the picture, but having no castanets, shawls or other stage properties, I balanced coyly on the rim of the stream and plucked a leaf from an overhanging limb, then walked very fastly towards the two leading ladies, Mrs. C. W. Snider and Mrs. J. C. A. Guest and talked still more "very fastly," as my observations of the movies have taught me to do, while Mr. C. W. Snider ("El Bravo") cranked the machine and called directions in a professional manner.

WE are in San Antonio. From the window of my room I can look down on the back of the Alamo. From the pecan and oak trees through which I look comes the song of the mocking birds rising above the roar of the traffic....once the songs of the birds that flew about the branches of these same trees were hushed by the roar of battle.... once the very leaves of the trees were stilled by the tragedy enacted beneath them....My eyes blur as I look at the scarred walls surrounding this shrine sacred to every Texan.

THE reception at the Menger hotel, Saturday night was for Texas women, but if a one of the whole 5000 delegates expected to the convention wasn't there I'm badly mistaken! The affair was a twin to the inaugural ball when Dan Moody was made governor, only there was no dancing. The only men I saw were hotel guests and a few "El Bravos." Mrs. Guy Rogers, who shares the room overlooking the Alamo, not only can tell you all about Texas history, but the history of the National Federation of Clubs as well, piloted me through the throng and told me "who was who."

Occasionally, I glimpsed a familiar face, only to have it disappear in the gabbling vortex before I could get past some portly form in my way. When I could get near enough I looked at the flowers that had come from all parts of Texas and which made of the hotel parlors the patio and back yard, a huge flower garden. Also, I admired old ladies. I never saw so many and the most of them were as beautiful as the flowers. The question, "Is it formal or informal?" that had floated up and down the hotel halls that afternoon was never answered. The crowd was too dense to know what any one wore.

SUNDAY morning while walking around with Mrs. O. T. Gorsline and Mrs. Rogers we stopped at a jewelry store window admiring some antique jewelry. The manager, who was inside, saw us and unlocked the door and invited us to come in and look at some he took from his safe. He also showed us a tray of old fans. One, of real lace and sticks of mother of pearl, has a history that goes back to Spain and a senorita who was famed for her beauty on two continents. Several had histories interwoven with that of prominent Texas families. A jeweled belt from Normandy had a reminder that ladies once fainted; suspended from a golden chain was a jeweled enclosed smelling salts bottle.

In the afternoon we visited Brackenridge park and drove out to Alamo Heights, where Crockett once lived. I wanted to be quiet and think as we drove over ground made sacred by these men who gave their lives for us, but on the seat with us was, strange to say, a woman who talked! Mrs. Rogers whispered to me, "I don't believe Santa Anna's guns could have shut her up!"

MONDAY, with thousands of other women, we went to the Memorial auditorium, where the convention is to be held, to get ourselves established. Flowers, flowers everywhere and a reluctancy to hurry through the million details that gets a big convention under way, when it was so nice to be leisurely and look at the flowers and greet old and new friends.

In company with Mary Carter Toomey, of the Dallas News, I snooped all through the basement where tons of literature were being unloaded on top of that already there. This literature, from every state in the union, and many foreign countries is a big story within itself, for it not only tells the story of woman's work, but tells the progress of every state and country represented.

At the table where I registered sat Hazel Harper Harris, well known Texas poet, who made lots of friends in Wichita Falls when she visited there. As I went out I met Mrs. Fred Barron and daughter coming in and saw several other Wichita Falls and West Texas women. Mrs. Ben G. Oneal and her sister, Mrs. Hard, were hurrying to a committee meeting; Mrs. Britton of Seymour was talking to Mrs. Graham Stewart and Mrs. W. C. Martin of Fort Worth; Mrs. Eugene Lawson of Tulsa, chairman of music for the Biennial, who gave a program on Wichita Falls at the Forum clubhouse, was greeting friends and pleased us all by remembering all our names—quite a feat for a woman with an international acquaintanceship!

Mrs. Homer D. Wade of Stamford and Mrs. O. T. Gorsline were hurrying about on state board matters and Mrs. J. C. A. Guest, who is chairman of doorkeepers, was getting her workers together for the opening of the convention.

A MOST interesting guest at our table is the Hon. Vernettie Ivy, chairman of the Arizona state welfare board and a member of the house of representatives of Arizona. She is known in her state as "Poison Ivy," because she is so persistent in her demand for reform of every nature.

WEDNESDAY, the convention is in full swing with a list of programs with speakers of world-wide fame. Pearl Bennet Braxam has charge of Drama conferences. Mrs. Ambrose Nevin Diehl, of the League of American Penwomen, one of the speakers for the Fine Arts program. Other speakers include: Margaret Schuler, internationally known newspaper correspondent; Mrs. Thomas G. Winter, Mrs. Minnie Fisher Cunningham and Governor Moody.

Grace Noll Crowell and Karle Wilson Baker, our beloved Texas poets, will both appear on programs . . . and there are too many other things to tell of the men and women we are awaiting to hear. It would take pages to tell all the things San Antonio is doing to entertain the visitors between sessions. Every building is outlined in colored lights and every man, woman and child is a committee of one to extend courtesies to the visitors.

"Dear Zoe: We are to be married this fall and are deeply in love. The young man is of irreproachable morals and character, has fine prospects and is sure to succeed. My parents, especially my mother, object to him terribly because he is a Jew. He and I are both neutral regarding religion. It means my life and happiness or permanent grief for my parents. Which path to pursue?

—DISTRACTED."

If your parents' only reason for objecting to the young man is that he is a Jew, you should certainly not spoil your life and his for a stupid prejudice.

Jews as a rule have high ideals of mortality and family life. They love, respect and care devotedly for their own. They are temperate, generous and warm-hearted. When they have had opportunity for self-improvement you will find no more cultured people anywhere.

Now the other side of the picture: Sometimes the Jews (depending altogether on their individual background and advantages) have different standards of living from Gentiles. Manners and viewpoints differ.

A girl brought up in a certain environment might have a few disappointments and heartaches if her husband's ways, family and friends jarred a bit.

This is the only important consideration. If your upbringing has been nearly enough alike so that your tastes and ways are the same, the difference in race need not matter.

If you truly love each other, nothing else matters. But I have pointed out to you the one thing that might make you unhappy together.

And lastly: Your marriage need not mean "permanent grief for your parents." Your young man will probably be able to make himself so liked and respected that they will be completely won over.

If your mother persists in disapproving merely because of his race, don't take it too seriously. For it is not to be admired. Tell her to remember that Jesus Christ was a Jew.

Punishment for a Kiss

"Dear Zoe: I have been going with a certain boy three years but lately he seems not to care. The reason is that I allowed a young man who had worked at our home three months to kiss me. He is a particularly nice boy. Now he wants me to go with other boys while he goes with other girls. But he still wants me to treat him differently from the rest. I need advice.

—BOBBY."

It seems to me he is punishing you pretty severely for a small "offense." Also that he is looking for all the best of the bargain. Have your friends and let him have his, by all means. But treat him just as you do the others.

Sweethearting, like marriage, is a fifty-fifty business. Either you are sweethearts and stick to one another with the rest shut out. Or you are just friends, and the same square deal goes for all.

That Long, Hard Climb

"Dear Zoe: My best beau says he loves me and that only I count, no matter what he does. Lately he acts strange—serious and his old self one minute, but leaving me doubtful the next. I care more for him than anybody I ever met and I want him to be the same as he was. He has two more college years before he can be serious. How can I keep his interest and respect?

—ANXIOUS LEE."

Having a college boy for a best beau always seems to me like starting out for a long, long mountain climb. It's a heavy strain. When a boy enters college he is too young to know much about girls or what sort of girl he wants. As the years go on, he changes in his tastes as his mind develops, and in time ceases to be thrilled by the girl who thrilled him at 18.

Often girls change too. But girls are more apt to "stay put" and much more apt to expect the boy to stay put too. It is a long, hard test of friendship and affection, this four or five years' college term.

The way to take it is not too seriously. Be ready to let go if you have to. Change is the order of life. In a few years you, too, will have changed. This boy will no longer interest you except as a good friend, a childhood sweetheart.

You will be more certain of his love and respect if you don't demand that he be "the same as he used to be" year after year. Don't let a man or a horse feel a tight rein, or they're apt to bolt.

THE ROAD TO SAN ANTONIO

The road to San Antonio
Is beautiful to me,
I hear a high sweet song within
Each windy mesquite tree,
A story of adventure leaps
From every stream I see.

And Romance clings to jagged rocks
Where bare red feet have run,
And there are arrows on the wind,
The sharp fire of a gun;
The echoes of the past ring out—
The hills are silver-spun.

And there the city—tipped with light,
Where brave men played their part—
Recalling it—I can not breathe,
Or see—for tears that start:
This city of a thousand shrines
Held closely to its heart.

This city of cathedral bells,
Where brown-skinned people pray,
Where Peace walks in white robes at last
Along the old scarred way;
Where races of one God may meet
To love and laugh and play.

Warm Southern waters wash it clean,
The kindly south winds blow,
The embers of old passion-fires
Still light it with their glow—
Such strange alluring loveliness
Has San Antonio.

Dearest Mom:

Florence is on her way, none too happily. She probably will see you before you receive this letter. The old home town will look rather small and seedy.

So I know you will be sweet to her, even if she lets out a bitter word now and then.

It wasn't only leaving that caused Florence's face to assume the expression of an early Christian martyr about to go forth to feed a lion—it was leaving Michello, right at the time when she had him going.

But I think it was just as well for her that she left. Michello is not so much a man as he is a type. By leaving as she did, she always can cherish the comforting illusion that if she had just stuck around and worked her feminine wiles, Michello would eventually have begged the honor of escorting her to the altar.

Naturally there wasn't a Chinaman's chance of this. She would have just become more hopelessly sunk, and he would have walked out with his characteristic grace and gallantry.

And while she nursed a broken heart, and ruined her looks weeping and emoting, he would have been sending roses to other women, looking soulfully into their eyes, and reciting the sort of poetry that makes a man of Alan's type look for the nearest exit.

I maintain Florence is the winner, as things stand now. When she marries some nice salesman, whose energies will be devoted to paying bills rather than paying compliments, she will have a nice romantic memory to play with.

Certainly every woman should have had the experience of having loved and lost an artist or a poet. It is sort of an initiation into life. Living, as I did, in a small town, where poets and artists were scarce, I missed a lot of this sort of thing.

That's the reason Pede appeals so to me now. He has all the romance and the beauty in his soul that I never had a chance to develop in mine.

I believe that women who have to go through life without diamonds and automobiles are not nearly so unfortunate and so much to be pitied as those who have never had sonnets written to their eyes, and had artists, with beautiful, slender fingers beg to immortalize them on canvas.

As I look around, it seems to me that a lot of women I see, who have all the evidences of wealth, look very hard and bitter, as though they were striving for something they never had—and the other day I met a woman at Michello's studio, who I was told has been adored by all the artists and writers of this generation. She had something, and it wasn't beauty and it wasn't clothes. I was interested.

Do write and tell me all about Florence. Lovingly, MARYE.

BRIDE OF EXPLORER DEFIES BRITISH LAW

Court Seeks to Force Wife To Pay Bills Against Spouse

LONDON, June 2. (AP)—In a luxurious 17-room mansion in Hyde Park, Mrs. Katherine Routledge, author, explorer and wealthy society woman, today held the fort against an order of court which arose out of differences with her husband, Scoresby Routledge, her companion in many adventures.

"I am doing this as a protest in behalf of women," she explained to an interviewer whom she herself admitted since she has dismissed all her servants so that they might not become involved with the law. The interviewer was admitted only after Mrs. Routledge had carefully scrutinized his card, which he passed through a panel in the door, and satisfied herself that he was not an officer of the law in disguise.

"The administration of the law seems heavily weighted against women," she continued. "All my property was sequestered by an order from a high court because I had not paid a sum of less than 100 pounds for storage in warehouses of property belonging to my husband. The order apparently empowers the forcible entry to my house, but nobody yet has attempted this."

She explained that the trouble arose from the separations of herself and her husband last summer. The house and nearly all its contents are her property. After the separation was agreed upon she sent her husband's books and personal belongings to various warehouses. Then the question arose as to who should pay the warehouse charges.

Routledge demanded his property, she said, but refused to pay the charges. She also refused and the warehouse people declined to surrender them without payment.

Litigation followed and the court ruled that she must restore her husband's goods. She still refused to pay the charges which would release them. The court then issued the order of sequestration.

Mrs. Routledge accompanied her husband on several expeditions to islands in the Pacific. The most notable of these was to Easter island where they spent three years trying to solve the mystery of the famous statues carved in the lava there, the island being of volcanic origin. They became involved in difficulties with the natives and the timely arrival of a Chilean warship in 1916 prevented serious trouble.

ABE MARTIN On Salesmen

A salesman is a feller who sells us somethin' that's never occurred t' us, somethin' we don't need, somethin' we need but hain't able t' buy, somethin' we have our doubts about, an' lots o' times somethin' we didn' know we wanted. "I'll alius have a warm spot in my heart for Ed Hanger. He sold me a washin' machine in spite o' ever'thing I could do," says Mrs. Art Smiley. So often a salesman is a blessin' in disguise. O' course, he's liable t' involve us. Hundreds o' people have buckled down an' gone t' work jest because some clever salesman 'has involved 'em an' ther wuz no other way out. O' course, we have solicitors an' agents, an' representatives an' clerks. Sometimes they make a sale or two, or pave th' way for a sale, or start somebuddy t' thinkin', but they're not what could be called real salesmen. An agent might stand around a churn display fer months an' not make a sale, an' solicitors might ring doorbells fer weeks without gittin' any-where, an' representatives jest pose around, an' are available if we want t' ask 'em any questions, an' clerks stand behind this counter or that an' wait on us if we want t' buy. They sell you this or that if you ask 'em to. Th' highest form o' salesmanship is talkin' somebuddy into buyin' a gold toothpick, or a buggy whip. A feller kin clerk in a furniture store fer half a century an' never develop into a salesman. It's when he talks somebuddy into buyin' a golden oak sideboard or handles a husban' an' wife in such a way that they agree on a gocart before th' store closes, that he becomes a salesman an' his future is secure. A salesman is a feller that sells us a pair o' $12 golf stockin's, an orchid loungin' robe, an' some two-piece pajamas, when we've only come in t' have our trousers taken up in th' seat. How many families would be secured by life insurance if it wuzin' fer clever salesmen? Eight or nine. Did anybuddy ever casually git up in th' mornin' an' wash, an' worry down five or six prunes, an' fiddle around home a while, an' start off leisurely fer his place o' business, or place where he waits fer business, an', right out of a clear sky, drop in a music store an' say, "Gimme a pianer"? Certainly not. Ownin' a pianer is not original with anybuddy. Pianners are placed in homes by salesmen who've got t' keep ther ears t' th' ground an' be on th' job. Ignorance about pianners is appallin'. Very few people know they want a pianner. Many a home has been saved by a pianner, an' ther's nobuddy t' thank but tireless, energetic salesmen. Why don't everbuddy drive th' same make o' car? Salesmen. Ther's little difference in people. Th' difference is in salesmen. Why do folks who should drive $550 cars drive $3,500 cars? Salesmen. We never know what we kin do till a salesman gits after us. Some folks would be immensely rich an' unhappy if it hadn' been fer salesmen, an' on the' other hand jest think o' th' poor souls who'd still be ploddin' along, many o' them walkin', if some real salesman hadn' developed 'em.

RADIUM SUFFERER REFUSES PENSION

Girl Says She'll Push Suit For $250,000 Damages

ORANGE, N. J., June 2. (INS)—Miss Grace Fryer, of Orange, one of the five radium poisoning victims, today flatly refused the arbitration offer made by the United States Radium corporation through the mediation of U. S. Judge Clark.

The offer promised her $10 a week pension, settlement of her present doctors' and lawyers' bills, and her funeral expenses.

"I turned it down flat," said Miss Fryer. "I believe I should get much more. The mental worry which my mother has undergone for years entitles her to thousands of dollars.

"I will go into court when they start to select a jury next Friday to fight for my dues," added Miss Fryer. "I have sued for $250,000 and to settle for this petty amount it too absurd to consider."

The five young women poison victims each have sued for $250,000, or an aggregate of $1,250,000.

OUR MODERN GRAVEYARDS

By Kathleen Norris

There is nothing in our modern scheme more completely wasted, more entirely sterile and horrible and dead, than the graveyard.

It seems to belong to the dark ages of superstition and ignorance and fear; this place in whose clean sweet earth we lay our beloved dead, first casing them in upholstery and rosewood and silver handles and satin robes, and then clamping them firmly down with several hundred dollars' worth of marble or granite.

Every time I pass a graveyard I make a mental estimate of what it has cost; 5000 stones at an average cost of $300—it comes out a million and a half dollars. And nothing to show for it!

All there is to show for that money is these foolish looking stones, pretentious ones crowded up against humble ones, neglected ones next to carefully tended ones, artistic ones neighboring atrocious effects in which angels and lambs and sometimes even actual statues of the dead are preposterously grouped.

Time has its way with the cemeteries, and the stones are stained and tipped and broken, the jealous earth creeps over them, and the grass and wild flowers do their best to devour and digest them. And some day idle visitors, on a Sunday afternoon walk, are laughing at the words we saw through tear-stained eyes.

In one cemetery that I know, over four millions of dollars have already been expended on gravestones, and the cost of upkeep runs to several thousand dollars a month. It is an ugly cemetery now, crowded with monuments and vaults, with the trees trying to wave naturally, and the birds trying to sing among all the strangeness and whiteness about them.

Four millions of dollars invested, and more than forty thousand every year for its upkeep! What fools we are—what fools we are—to try to keep alive what has returned to the sweetness and clearness of mother earth, and to put pretentious marble monuments between ourselves and the realization of the truth that the soul is not mortal.

A few old-fashioned folk still treasure the idea of burial, and still visit the graves of those they once loved. But they are very few. There is a morbidness, a stupidity in the act of winding slowly among the tombs, stopping beside a certain one, sighing deeply, running one's hand over the letters of the dear, unforgotten name, and kneeling—if the day is dry, to say a confused prayer.

We do it perhaps once a year, for eight or ten years. Then the grave is deserted, nobody cares about it any more, until there is another funeral. And then again black-clad women, and sober men occasionally glancing furtively at their wrist-watches, stand there for a few more minutes, and go their ways, and forget once more.

This love for the earth that holds our dead ties our thoughts to earth, we are conventional about it. In a time of pain and change we cling to the old ways; we want to wear the deepest possible mourning, we want to erect the most expensive monument possible.

But the time is coming when a more sensible generation will do away with graveyards, and when our fond, mournful faithfulness for the few feet of grassy earth, and the rusted tin container, and the discolored stone with its careful dates that don't matter at all—"Born Feb. 1, 1864, died March 29, 1902"—will seem as ridiculous as the love-philters, farthingales, whipping posts and witch doctors of a bygone day.

And what will we put in their place? How will we dispose of our dead? Well, I for one, hope it won't be with general cremation. My own conventional old-fashionedness appears here in full force. It is one thing to have nature, in her own gentle way, absorb into clean earth, and presently reproduce in flowers and grass, the form that was once so vital, so living and loving. It is—or it seems—quite another thing to have roaring flames blast that form into a handful of powder.

And even when you have the ashes—what to do with them?

Why wouldn't it be reasonable to do this? And is there a country town in America whose women—they have more time than men to start a crusade—will take it upon themselves to begin it?

Why not select a large tract, exactly the sort of tract that usually is put aside for a cemetery, and charge, let us say, $350 for interment therein. Bodies would be buried at once, with nothing whatsoever to mark their resting places, but their names would be inscribed imperishably upon stone—somewhere in the chapel, if the place had a chapel, or in the entrance hall, or on the side porch. Just the names, no dates or data.

When the committee had received $35,000 for a hundred graves, then it could build a playhouse for the children of the town, a big, clean, spacious, permanent playhouse, with a gym and a pool, rest rooms and library—a splendid children's club. It would have to be built large, for there must be unimproved rooms awaiting donations and fresh payments.

New sections of the grounds might be temporarily fenced off for fresh burials. But over the old graves the grass would grow smooth and green, the young trees would throw a delicious shade, and the children would play, not unconscious of the fact that this was holy ground—that in a special and significant sense this happy place was their heritage from those who had gone before, and going, had remembered them.

Such a playground would be an asset to any town. Standing in square and dignified marble beauty, with its wide rooms full of laughter and the stir of young life, it would be a single community monument that would live, instead of a thousand, or five thousand, incongruously assorted individual monuments that grow deader and deader and deader year after year.

To almost all healthy persons the thought of death is abhorrent. We came into this world without any particular apprehensions or doubts, but it seems impossible to leave it as simply—we are told that we must become as little children, and little children die very cheerfully and naturally. But the older we grow the less we like the idea.

One thing that makes it horrible, it seems to me, is all this dismal ritual of coffins and undertakers, graves and grave-stones and "plots" and mourning. Even though death ends a peculiarly meaningless and stupid life, we regard it as a calamity, and men will cling to a life in prison rather than mount the steps of a scaffold. One man I know, crippled, helpless, blind, chained to a tipped bed, unable to feed himself or to move a finger, yet will tell you eagerly that persons in his condition often reach a ripe old age.

It shows how we cling to our jungle heritage, it seems to me. If there is any scheme at all, behind the veils that blind us, any God or Supreme Force or Ultimate Mind or call it what you will, any cause and effect in the cosmic scheme, as we find it in our tiniest schemes here, then death ought to be a glorious setting forth upon new adventures, rather than an ending to them. Dying, rationally speaking, ought to be as great an adventure as being born, at least. We congratulate babies upon being born, no matter what their destiny may be. But in all the course of history I never heard of anyone going earnestly and enviously to congratulate the dying.

Because we are all as ignorant as animals. We cultivate our bodies and our minds zealously, all our lives long. But our souls we starve, and push out of sight. And as it is only through them that we can grasp a first apprehension of spiritual Being, we go all our days without that beginning of wisdom. "If it's strange, it's hostile," says Thompson-Seton's animals, as a jungle law. And that is just our attitude toward death. It's strange, it's black, it's unknown. Therefore it must be terrible. Let us not think about it.

Yet, like every other fear, if we look it squarely in the face, we find it not frightening at all. We have had our more than three score and ten years; it is hard for us even to remember, now, that slim, scatter-brained passionate little girl whose braids were pinned into a net, and whose first hoop-skirts proudly displayed her ruffled pantalettes when she ran out to a picket gate to watch the broken ranks of soldiers, marching back from Gettysburg. It is hard to remember young love, the first cottage with its "standard roses," the first baby, in his long, important robes. We have made our mistakes, shed our tears, amended our faults, forgiven those who trespassed against us; now there is light at eventide, and we are like children, tired with the long, warm, dragging school day, ready for a last bowl of bread and milk, a last drowsy kiss and a long, quiet sleep, before tomorrow—and tomorrow's lessons, begin, with more bright sunshine, and youth and hope and strength and courage again.

Why should we fear the change? We have taken the luck of the road philosophically enough, we have not feared life, that is death's twin.

We can still look with loving, pitying envy at youth—but we would not be young. We would not have all these hard steps to take, again. Youth is age—only it doesn't know it, and we are dying from the moment that we begin to live.

Some months ago a woman I loved was very ill, but in an imperceptible sort of way. A sister, and husband, a mother and daughter of 14 composed her household, and from the beginning of her illness all these four and the doctors conspired stupidly and lovingly to keep her in the dark as to the dangerous nature of her malady. The poor soul used to look at one pathetically, alarmedly, and ask nervously. "But I'm going to get well? I'm not very sick, am I?"

One day an old friend, coming from a distance to see her, innocently told her the truth. For a few hours they thought the shock would kill her. Immediately afterward she became calm and indeed happy; she began to die beautifully, as she had lived beautifully; she set the stage.

During the seven weeks that remained to her, that household was as full of light as it had been full of gloom. The invalid wrote letters, read books, discussed the change; everything seemed normal and sweet and right because she found it so. Her very last letter was to a woman who had lost a beautiful child of 11. "I'll find Jane," the dying woman promised, "and you'll know—by feeling happiness in your own soul—that we're together!"

This one letter coming, from that particular hand, has meant to the dead child's mother a consolation and a joy that in themselves are enough to justify the heroic measure of talking honestly with the dying.

And if one could feel, after an honest and courageous death, that there would be a little more joy in the world, instead of a little more sorrow, and that above our empty and discarded earthly tenement happy flowers would be blowing, and gracious trees standing, and little children running to and fro, it seems to me we would die more easily.

To leave three thousand dollars for an imposing funeral is a flat sort of satisfaction, after all. But to leave that sum to help endow a club, where the finest teachers of the city would handle free courses, or to leave it for the specific purpose of buying 1500 fine new books for the children of one's town—ah, that would be worth while!

And we can't expect this to happen unless we deliberately connect the idea of burial with the actual place of one of these new playhouses. Rich persons will continue to do what they do today, leave money for both charities and graveyards, unless the contrast between the old method and the new is strongly drawn to their attention.

We must have the beautiful new site, and we must create public sympathy for the new idea. And then, when the walls of the Playhouse begin to rise, the deadness—the uselessness of the old way will be made apparent.

We are a practical people. Can we afford cemeteries any longer? Does it matter whether or not the exact day when I came into the world, and the day you did, is cut into stone, at 50 cents the letter? Who cares? Who would be robbed, who would be poorer, if, when a visitor drove into your town, instead of that city of mixed and incongruous blocks of mineral matter, he would see a splendid modern children's club—where hundreds of little creatures who perhaps might otherwise need the sunshine and the fresh air, were rejoicing in the safety and the pleasure actually given them by the dead?

To leave three thousand dollars for an imposing funeral is a flat sort of satisfaction, after all.

Mrs. Norris Says:

QUITAQUE BUSINESS MEN CONSIDER RE-BUILDING FLOYD CO. ROAD BRIDGE

QUITAQUE, Texas, June 2.—The Quitaque Business Men's Luncheon club met Thursday with more than 30 members present. Judge McGehee of Floydada spoke briefly as to repairing the bridge, seven miles south of Quitaque over the county line in Floyd county, which was damaged some 10 days ago by high waters. Judge McGehee stated that Floyd county would cooperate with Quitaque in every way possible.

Walter Woods, road commissioner of Floyd county, stated that he was familiar with the conditions of the bridge and was sure that the precinct under his supervision would assist in the work.

Judge McGehee stated that the first bridge was built across Quitaque creek many years ago, when there were only about 50 citizens in Quitaque, and about two business houses. He says there has been something like $30,000 spent for bridges across this creek.

A census just completed of big game in the 18 national forests of California show that there are more than 250,000 specimens of larger wild life animals in these national reserves.

CADILLAC-LA SALLE DIVISION HOST FOR MONDAY EVE PARTY

The first of the summer series of General Motors family parties will be broadcast on Monday evening, June 4, at 8:30 o'clock, eastern standard time, with the Cadillac-LaSalle division as host. The length of the concerts has been reduced from one hour to one-half hour for the summer season, but the number of stations on the network will remain the same—32.

A distinctive program of French music will be given in commemoration of the exploits of Cadillac and LaSalle, the French explorers whose names are linked in the history of early colonial days with the development of the great American-Canadian territory contiguous to Detroit, the home of the two cars named for them. Instrumental music will be provided by Joe Green's novelty band, with vocalists for presentation of French folk songs and classics.

The program, to be broadcast by the National Broadcasting company, will be heard from the following stations:

WEAF, New York; WEEI, Boston; WTIC, Hartford; WJAR, Providence; WTAG, Worcester; WCSH, Portland; WLIT, Philadelphia; WRC, Washington; WGY, Schenectady; WGR, Buffalo; WCAE, Pittsburgh; WTAM, Cleveland; WWJ, Detroit; WSAI, Cincinnati; WGN, Chicago; WTMJ, Milwaukee; KSD, St. Louis; WCCO, Minneapolis; WOC, Davenport; WHO, Des Moines; WOW, Omaha; WDAF, Kansas City; KVOO, Tulsa; WFAA, Dallas; WHAS, Louisville; WSM, Nashville, WMC, Memphis; WSB, Atlanta; WBT, Charlotte; WJAX, Jacksonville, WOAI, San Antonio; KPRC, Houston.

"Sweet Spring, Full of Sweet Days and Roses"

There is something about a rose, as love, that makes the whole world kin. A few poets have chosen to sing of the lily, the violet and the daffodil; for each of these there are a dozen who sing of the rose. And a local florist is authority for the statement that more persons call for roses, the country over, than for any other flower.

No wonder then, that those who pass by the home of R. C. Dublin thrilled by the beauty of the roses which climb by the side of the house, over the fences and all over the little summer house in the back yard. The clothesline post is even covered with roses!

Most of the bushes were planted by Mrs. M. M. Adickes, who lived at the house on Collins and Clark until about three years ago.

A. A. A. WARNS OF FATIGUE AS RESULT DRIVING BLUNDERS

With the entire nation on the eve of resuming its annual touring experience, a warning is issued by James Boyle, secretary of the Wichita Valley Automobile club, Inc., to the effect that much of the fatigue experienced by the average touring driver is due to the expense of energy in overcoming driving blunders that never should have been committed in the first place.

"A deluge of evidence is available in substantiation of this point," says Mr. Boyle. "Review of but a small part of it, however, will be sufficient to reveal to the average tourist the accuracy of the assertion.

"Take the case of the curve in the strange highway, for instance. A great deal of energy is consumed, needlessly, in the rectifying of driving blunders made at such a point. The blunder, in the main, is in approaching the curve at too high a speed. To overcome it, the driver is forced to apply the brakes with a great deal of vigor and, at the same time, to put forth a great deal of physical strength to steer the car around safely. There may be literally hundreds of curves in the course of the day's drive and, unless the driver profits by the first few experiences and begins to drive more temperately around them, they will take a heavy toll in energy before he stops for the night.

"The hill offers another illustration. There is a strong temptation to assume that there is no necessity to go into second gear for the descent, in spite of the warning sign. Yielding to the impulse means that the roll of the car must be stopped with the brakes—another expense of strength.

"Driving at high speeds up to the point where it is obvious in advance that a stop must be made is another blunder that tends to leave the driver exhausted at the end of the day.

"Still other illustrations might be cited, but these should establish the fact that the commission of driving blunders is particularly designed to create fatigue."

DEATH SEALS LIPS OF BANDIT SUSPECT

Sapulpa Police Unable to Solve Mystery of Wounded Man

SAPULPA, Okla., June 2. (UP)—Death has obscured the story of Albert Berg, believed to be from Miller, Mo., who was fatally shot in his automobile near here early Monday.

Berg died at a local hospital today after making several attempts last night to escape from the hospital. It was necessary to place an officer on guard throughout the night.

A telegram from a man believed to be Berg's brother was received at the hospital last night. The message was sent from Possen, Neb., and was signed "Arthur." It stated that the sender would arrive in Sapulpa today. Police hope to learn more about the dead man when "Arthur" arrives.

Deputy Sheriff W. D. Norris, who remained on guard during the night, said Berg died without answering questions regarding himself, his family or how he was shot.

Tulsa police have been working on a theory that Berg was involved in a highway robbery near there Monday night in which a bandit victim shot his assailant after receiving fatal wounds himself.

AIRPLANE SALESMEN IN HIGH POWERED SCHEME TO BOOST THEIR GAME

LONDON, June 2. (INS)—New methods of practical salesmanship for light airplanes are now being tried by the De Haviland Aircraft company, Ltd., makers of the Moth airplane.

During the week-ends, a Moth pilot goes out and finds a main road well packed with cars. The machine flies along quite low by the side of the road, and the flier takes the numbers of the more powerful cars in the stream which are prevented by the crowds from maintaining their designed speed.

The company then gets in touch with the owners of these cars and invites them, at their convenience, to make the same journey on a future occasion in a Moth plane.

HOUSTON RAISES THE TEACHERS' PAY

Houston voters, by a decisive majority, have approved a seven-cent increase in their school taxes, for the sole purpose of providing higher salaries for school teachers. On the same day they voted $4,000,000 in bonds for school construction purposes.

That is making real provision for education. Equipment is important, but too many cities are inclined to stop there, and to be content with just average teachers. Houston taxpayers want teachers that are above the average, and are willing to foot the bill to get them. It means far more to Houston's children than the big bond issue for new buildings.

LESS DIGNITY AND MORE FIREWORKS

Congressman Blanton, judging from his speeches, is running for the senate on his record as a congressman. In some respects, it is an impressive record, but we believe Mr. Blanton will find it advisable to change his tactics if he is to get anywhere in the race. In the first place, it is almost entirely a negative record. It contains little that Mr. Blanton has done, much that he has prevented others from doing. In the second place, it doesn't get close enough to the people. It doesn't deal with matters that affect the average man very directly.

Mr. Blanton's reputation outside of his own district is that of being a fire-eater, a hell-raiser. Voters outside of his district expect him to campaign in that character. Instead, they are given a dignified, colorless recital of his work in the house. They want to hear him "pour it on" his opponents with all the vitriolic sting of which they know him to be capable. Instead, he ignores the other candidates. Dignity is an asset to some candidates. It is a liability, in our opinion, to a candidate like Mr. Blanton.

It's none of our business, of course. But we think Mr. Blanton should discard dignity and use fireworks. A stormy petrel shouldn't try to be an owl or a dove.

A MATTER OF EQUITY

One objection raised to the proposed blanket reduction in county tax valuations is that not enough revenue would be produced for the road and bridge fund, out of which interest and sinking fund payments on bonds are made. That is a matter which can be remedied. It would involve a special election, but it would be worth it, in view of the saving to the taxpayers.

The other objection is that the reduction would violate the spirit and perhaps the letter of the state law. One member of the commissioners' court voiced the fear of indictment by a Travis county grand jury, if the desired reduction were made. Probably it would not be difficult to obtain signers to a bond indemnifying members of the court against punishment. It is one of those instances where the letter of the law is a dead letter. It is unthinkable that any official would proceed against Wichita County for establishing thirty-three and a third per cent as the valuation basis, when there are, literally, hundreds of Texas counties whose basis is less than that. There are scores of counties who fix valuations at less than twenty per cent, and make no bones about it. If thirty-three and a third per cent were made the basis here, it would still be a higher basis than obtains in a majority of Texas counties.

It is a situation in which equity rather than law should prevail. Wichita county has been the soft spot, the good thing, the easy mark, the sucker, the fall guy, long enough. If the commissioners' court doesn't realize what the public temper is in this matter, the opportunity will present itself, on the last Saturday in July, to help them realize it.

DOES IT MEAN ANYTHING?

At the Texas Bar association meeting in Dallas, a report was received from the committee on remedial procedure and law reform. This committee recommended, among other things, the requirement of duplicate copies of all pleadings, orders and motions to be filed in the trial court; the selection of the judiciary by convention or by a primary election held for that purpose only, to remove as far as possible political bias, favor or prejudice in the selection of the personnel; that an indictment may charge more than one offense where the respective offenses grow out of the same transaction; that greater care be required of the sheriff in accepting appearance bonds; that a case may not be reversed for harmless error which in no way could have injured the defendant, and several other changes in technical procedure.

It is a common sense program. Fulfillment of it would strengthen law enforcement, speed up the work of the courts and reduce the cost to the public. But does the indorsement of the bar association mean anything, so far as results are concerned? We would like to think that it did, that it was something more than a gesture. But the association has adopted such reports before, and little came of them.

When these reforms are written up as bills and presented to the legislature, they will be referred to committees composed mostly, if not entirely, of lawyers, appointed by a lawyer-speaker. These committees will unostentatiously but effectively see to it that the bills are either reported unfavorably, or reported favorably so late in the session that passage becomes impossible.

At any rate, that is what has happened regularly heretofore.

The Poison of Party

By GLENN FRANK
President of University of Wisconsin and Former Editor of the Century Magazine

I have been roundly scored by several readers of this column for my assertion that, for all their value, permanent political parties do make creative and courageous statesmanship increasingly difficult, simply because as parties grow old they cease to be bodies of like-minded men and must go deeper and deeper into compromises in order to hold themselves together.

I should like to submit a supporting witness from England. Hamilton Fyfe, in a little book in the Today and Tomorrow series, Archon or the Future of Government, calls attention to the following facts:

The Party System was introduced in England in the latter part of the nineteenth century, after it was introduced in the United States. Although there had been Parties in England long before, their bonds of allegiance rested lightly on their members. It was a common custom for members of Parliament to disapprove of and vote against their Party leaders. Even as late as the middle of the nineteenth century there were many times when Ministries were turned out by their own followers' votes. From 1832 to 1874, nine Ministries were defeated by the votes of their own followers in the House of Commons.

Then the Party System, with its rigid disciplines and its demands for party regularity, came into the picture. And what has been the effect upon independence of mind in British politics? Only once between 1874 and 1927 has a Ministry been turned down by the votes of its own followers.

With Parties, but without the Machine or Party System, courageous independence triumphed nine times in 42 years.

With the Party System in control, courageous inpendence has registered a like verdict only once in 53 years.

"Members of Parliament are now parts of a machine," says Mr. Fyfe. "They are at Westminster to vote as the Party Managers decide. Measures are still debated at great length, but everyone knows beforehand what the voting will be. It is this unreality which has lowered the character of discussion. No one can argue effectively if he knows that he is beating the air.

"Speeches have no influence whatever upon Parliamentary division lists. More than 40 years have passed since voting was affected by argument. The first Home Rule Bill was the last measure that the House of Commons debated in uncertainty of what the result was to be."

It is this curse of conformity, with all its sterling effect that the Party System brings inevitably in its trail.

One of the great tasks of political invention that lie ahead of the statesmanship of the United States is the devising of workable ways and means of minimizing this standardization of political thought that the Party System imposes.

More Truth Than Poetry

IL PENSEROSO

A naturalist declares that cats cannot think.

You live on milk which I supply,
You warm yourself beside my fire,
You need not toil nor spin to buy
The comforts that you so desire.
With all that one can ask of life
Upon your chair you bask and blink
Aloof from carking care and strife
And yet they say you do not think

Well may the wisest birds that fly
For swift and instant flight prepare
When you come calmly strolling by
For fear you'll take them unaware;
You seem so innocent of guile
Your eyes half closed, as one in sleep
Yet you are plotting all the while
For that long, devastating leap.

The dog may chase you up a tree
But if you're in a fighting mood
Extremely sorry he may be
That he was indiscreet and rude.
For if you choose to stand at bay
A long staccato strident yelp
The dismal tidings will convey
That Rover needs a lot of help.

I hear your loud and pleasant purr,
I watch your sinewy shoulders shrug
The while you ruffle up your fur
And stretch yourself upon the rug.
I see you empty many a dish
Of viands, all of which are free,
And as I gaze on you I wish
My thinking got as much for me!

Your Boy —and— Your Girl

The Parent Counsellor

Dr. Dean will answer all signed letters pertaining to parents' problems with their boys and girls. Writers' names are never printed. Only questions of general interest answered in the column, but all letters will be answered by mail if written in ink and a stamped, self-addressed envelope is enclosed. Address, Arthur Dean, in care of this paper.

Are Children People?

Yes, when dealt with as this mother who writes: "I always try to treat my boys as though they were intelligent."

Great Scott, madam, do you realize what you are saying? Don't you know that small youngsters should be baby-talked? That the older ones should be told to keep quiet and some day "when they are big enough' they will be answered?

And then, readers, this mother goes on to prove her point. She tells me how she had a talk with her oldest boy just before he started to college on the rather delicate subject which we brought up in this column describing Cecil and Cyril. When she came across a newspaper account of the result of dope fiendishness she explained the evils of starting the drug habit. Then she read an item about Antioch college and the wonderful scheme of its president to establish a combination of a learning and earning education, and the splendid methods he is developing in teaching in practical and concrete form citizenship, history, current events, finances and economics. She tells me how interested the boy became in the article and how he talked it over with her and finally decided to enter this unique college.

To quote her again: "Years ago I left off being aggressive with them, except on rare occasions, and instead of trying to confine them to my experience and to my early days, I endeavored to keep myself in touch with the modern trend of things. I try to have a line on life to compete with their lines on life. My boys are not fools. They see things. They think. Why shouldn't I?

"The most constructive thing I can do now is to interpret life to them as it touches life with them or with our neighbors, and more widely with what we read of it from day to day in our newspapers. I try to place the right knowledge in their grasp before the need arises."

OUR CONVERSATION CORNER

Wants to Be Detective

I want to be a detective. I think it must be a wonderful thing to get a chance to travel all over the world and trap criminals in their dens.—BOY OF TWELVE.

Answer—Yes, I know the picture before you: Keen-eyed, capable of difficult feats of deduction, ability to pick a crook from the crowd, ready to jump at a moment's notice to China or South Africa to catch an international thief, wearing overalls to catch the foreman who is stealing the payroll to donning a dress suit and attending a grand reception to snatch the heiress from the clutches of a penniless Siberian count.

"Detective work in its simplest form is spying," says Dilnot in his book, "Great Detectives and Their Methods." "Imagination may prove a drawback. Detectives fall into three groups: The executive organizer, who knows how to get information and apply it; the thief-taker, a first-rate police officer who know thieves and their methods but rarely advances above that; the expert, who knows fingerprints, photography, records, and may not be highly educated."

Pertinent Points

This conversation corner does not concern itself with "lovelorn" nor "etiquette" except from the point of view of young people, and then only because they present real problems to parents. Anything which is a problem for a youth is indirectly a problem for parents. There are little points in "etiquette" which trouble young people and which are not treated in the average Question and Answer department. There are emotional problems of girls which cannot be classed as "lovelorn" questions since they have a far deeper significance and importance—both psychological and physical.

Today we offer the following new helplets to our readers: "Thirty-two Everyday Points on Social Behavior for Young People," and "How to Be Popular and Not Cheap." (Underscore the one desired.)

Fifteen and Eighteen Equals What?

Do you think a girl of 15 is too young to go with a boy of 18?

Answer.—A girl of 15 is too young to "go with" anybody. Girls of two years and over may have boy playmates and associates. Any girl of 15 who settles down to "go with" one boy is taking life more seriously than the situation warrants.

LITTLE JOE SAYS:

ROUGHLY SPEAKING

by John Gould

Annual Tribute to Two Noble Institutions

Come, let us make a joyful sound,
And let our hearts be filled with cheer,
For June corn brings us joy profound,
And blackberry pie time's also here.

We believe that crude oil will be worth $3.25 a barrel by July 4. We believe that President Coolidge will go on the vaudeville stage after next March. We believe that liquor will be hard to obtain at the two national conventions. We believe that Beaumont will win the pennant. No, it isn't the heat, nor is it the strain occasioned by the new son's arrival. We recently heard an umpire publicly admit he was wrong. After that—anything.

In fact, we caught ourself almost believing that Sinclair will serve his jail sentence. But that must have been the heat. Even after the severe shock our bump of credulity sustained, there are limits.

The Crusading Business

There was a time, when we were somewhat younger and new to the newspaper business, when we believed that it was a newspaperman's duty to be a champion of the downtrodden masses, a valiant defender of the public weal, a Sir Galahad out to rescue the people from the predatory interests. We have now been in newspaper work somewhat longer that we care to admit; oh well, if you just must know, it was 22 years last Tuesday, and our crusading zeal has been pretty well abated for the last 21½ years.

The yearning to be a combination of Sir Godfrey de Bouillon, Richard the Lion-hearted, General Jacob Coxey and Joan of Arc has just about completely left us. Some of it was burned out. Some of it was sweated out. Some of it was kicked out. Some of it evaporated. Some of it was surgically removed. One way or another, our system was rid of most of it.

There are times, however, when we discover that there is still some of the crusading virus in us.

One Needed Reform

The thing that frets us is the knowledge that if we were to take up the editorial cudgel in behalf of the one particular reform we have in mind, it would immediately and spontaneously catch the popular favor and go over with a bang. It wouldn't drag along for months and months as did our last crusade, which, as our grateful readers doubtless remember, was for the removal of the wooden paving blocks. That took quite a while, and the blocks aren't quite all gone yet. If it takes as long, in proportion to the amount of money involved, to get that million dollar postoffice as it is taking to get a few hundred dollars worth of decent, democratic paving, some property-owners we know are going to get mighty tired of holding those choice lots for Uncle Sam. But we are disgressing, and besides it's none of our business. We'd probably try to sell those lots ourself, if we were a Republican, and owned 'em.

The need for our reform measure would be promptly recognised, especially now that the summer touring season is under way. Our reform idea would be embodied in a bill to be introduced in Congress, entitled, An Act to Prevent the Wearing of Khaki Breeches by Women Whose Bust Measurement Is 44 Inches or More.

The wording may seem a trifle ambiguous, for the bust measurement has nothing to do, directly, with breeches, but we had to have some sort of criterion, and a woman's size is usually gauged by the bust measurement, and a woman that large is too large, in our opinion, to wear khaki breeches on the public highway.

Arbitrary

It is true that such women wear such things away from home, and that the offending costume meets the gaze of strangers only. But that does not help matters. Indeed, it makes them worse. For if we were to see any 44-inch bust ladies that we are acquainted with, trying to look like Boy Scouts, we could take it on ourself as a friend to go to them and speak a frank and kindly word of advice or caution. We do not mean to say that we would do that, necessarily. There might be circumstances that made us realize it was our turn to keep still.

In adopting 44 inches as the maximum, we perhaps are a bit arbitrary. Certainly we do not wish to convey the impression that we favor women of 42 or 43 bust disporting themselves in any such way. We had to draw the line somewhere, and 44 is where we draw it. Perhaps that figure is too high. In this connection, we recall the rather disconcerting experience of a friend of ours whose wife's figure is some distance past the svelte stage. They went touring, and she wore one of those khaki suits, breeches and all. One morning, having camped the night before, they were packing up to proceed on their way. When the husband looked around for the tarpaulin that he covered the trailer with, he couldn't find it. They looked about for it quite a little while before they discovered that the wife, in attiring herself that morning, had made a regrettable but natural error. And she was only a 41, at that.

We believe that a little observation on the reader's part will convince him of the rightness of making 44 inches the dead-line, so to speak. Less than that figure, there are degrees and grades. Several inches less, one may be described as pleasingly plump. Not quite so many inches less, and the term stylish stout is appropriate. Still fewer inches less, and one might be correctly spoken of, roughly speaking, as captivatingly corpulent. But at 44 inches, one is fat. Euphemism is futile. It is vain to seek for ameliorating adjectives. There is but one word to use.

It is a proper matter for remedial legislation. Our position is that 44's simply should not appear publicly in breeches suits. It is something for the government to regulate. So, for that matter, seems to be everything else that is wrong.

This year's prize for liberal spending, we presume, will be awarded without contest to the Ku Klux officials who paid Senator Heflin $150 for making a speech.

A Tap On the Jaw

By BRUCE BARTON

HE had fought a hundred and twenty-five battles and was champion of the world when I saw him. So he retired to take life easy on his farm.

But the promoters lured him forth to fight another man, offering him the salary of the President of the United States. I was one of the several thousand who paid their money at the gate.

The betting was two to one on the champion. He stepped into the ring with a jaunty smile, and why not? He had longer experience and a longer reach and was fighting before a friendly crowd. Surely, we thought, this will be easy for him; and we were still thinking it, when all of a sudden he was down on his knees.

There was nothing brutal about it. He seemed to have slipped. We could not believe, as the referee began his slow, measured count, that he would not jump to his feet again. Could such a little blow put a man out? Why, it was hardly more than a tap on the jaw!

I said as much to my neighbor. (Fate is always kind to me at such affairs, setting me beside some stranger who is wise in records and inside stuff.)

"He seemed in perfect condition," I exclaimed, "and he's been leading a clean, healthy life down there on his farm!"

"Clean life, sure," my neighbor answered. "But it takes a lot more than that. A man can't go away from the ring for a couple of years and expect to stand up under punishment when he comes back. You can't take them taps on the jaw, my friend, unless you're taking 'em every day."

I have been something of a listener to speeches and something of a reader of books; but nowhere have I encountered a more profound observation on life than fell from the lips of my untutored friend.

You can have just about so much from the grab-bag of life, but you can't put both hands in. You can say to yourself: "I will run away from worry. I will retire and enjoy myself." And Fate answers: "Retire if you like, but the worries that are small today, because you are in the thick of the fight, will loom very much larger when you have nothing else to think about. The price of ease is softness; make no mistake about that."

And the prayer of the wise man, I take it, is, "Lord, keep me supple," not, "Lord, keep me safe. Put some disappointments in, along with my fair share of good cheer and good luck—some losses, some hard nuts to crack."

Foreign Films Fall Far Short of High Standard Set in America Is Opinion of Noted Screen Director

By LOUELLA O. PARSONS
Motion Picture Editor Universal Service

LOS ANGELES, June 2.—Irving Thalberg may be a highly important film executive in California but in Europe he is only Norma Shearer's husband. Wherever Irving and his bride traveled he was pointed out as the lucky youth who succeeded in winning the beautiful American screen actress.

"The European public proved what we already knew about our American theater patrons," said Mr. Thalberg who has just returned from a three months' trip abroad. "The people who make the pictures aren't of interest. It is the stars who are surrounded with a halo of mystery that attract attention."

Sitting back in his comfortable office chair in front of a desk piled high with manuscripts the general manager of production at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios submitted to my cross examination. I cannot say willingly, for Irving is a diplomat and he isn't sure it's polite to tell our foreign neighbors what's wrong with their pictures.

"I did see some good foreign pictures but most of them are a long way from equaling the American films," said Irving. "They lack the right screen personalities. In England especially, I found a curious disregard for fresh young personalities. The same mature men and women are cast over and over again until people grow tired of looking at them."

Blames Great Britain

This limitation of star material and disregard of youth all simmers down to one thing, Mr. Thalberg believes, Great Britain's refusal to permit anyone but her own citizens to play, direct or write motion pictures. England is so rabid on the subject that it has made it a national issue with legislative backing to keep out American pictures and American players.

"American pictures are in demand," Mr. Thalberg went on, "because we have no such restrictions. We have Scandinavian stars, French directors, German scenario writers and English players. The door is wide open to every one with talent. If we ever put a ban on the foreign invasions, we will limit ourselves just as Europe is doing."

"What about the fear in Europe," I asked, "that our customs, our styles of dress and our mannerisms are being too widely circulated?"

"That is all nonsense," was the reply. "Look at our pictures, 50 per cent of them are laid outside of America. 'White Shadows of the South Sea,' is a story of the South Seas; 'Cossacks' is a Russian story; 'Her Cardboard Lover' is laid in Monte Carlo and different French cities; 'War in the Dark' has a European locale.

"The greatest mission of the motion picture is its preachment against international selfishness and that is what this barring of American films is amounting to."

"Ben Hur" Successful

I was somewhat surprised to hear that "Ben Hur" has been the most successful of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's pictures in Europe. Mr. Thalberg put this down to the foreigner's delight in spectacles. They do not consider any pictures without mob scenes, many buildings and massive architecture a big picture.

So many reports have come from England that the British people refuse to accept their own pictures that I asked Mr. Thalberg for an opinion.

"It's true, now," he said, "that American stars are the favorites and American pictures popular. But the atmosphere is charged with unfriendly feeling. Editorials are written against our American pictures. Few of them receive favorable criticisms in the trade papers and newspapers. The mood is psychologically antagonistic. No matter how well they may like the picture they go into the theater believing they should not like it and that makes it difficult for us and for the English theater-going public."

Says Writers Can Help

"Can this feeling be overcome?" I asked Mr. Thalberg. He says it can and should be, without delay. He believes that American writers should be guarded in what they say so that England cannot find fault and that America should show a readiness to accept foreign films.

I asked Mr. Thalberg if the drive to obtain American players and directors had not subsided? He was a little reticent about expressing an opinion on this but I gathered from his quizzical expression that he felt the urge for American players at no time had been more than propaganda. Very few of our American players and very few of our American directors have been accepted abroad.

The name and fame of Irving Thalberg must have preceded him although Irving said it was his beautiful wife, Norma Shearer, who received all the attention. Norma said Irving was known all over Europe and the he is modest when he says he was only known as her husband.

Some way we just cannot see Irving Thalberg as Mr. Shearer, especially since one of our scouts said that he was beseiged with letters, telegrams and telephone calls begging for interviews and a chance in the American movies.

SPECIAL FEATURE AT STRAND THEATER

MAJESTIC SUNDAY FOR FOUR DAYS

'Little Shepherd Of Kingdom Come' Majestic Feature

"Tol'able David" has been reincarnated—reborn under the magic touch of Richard Barthelmess, who once again has created a barefoot boy, in "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come," the idyllic filmdrama, at the Majestic Sunday for four days.

As Chad Buford, the Kentucky mountain lad, who dreamed of "the settlement's" books and grand persons, Dick Barthelmess has added another lovable and unforgettable portrait to his already brilliant gallery.

Throughout the last few years Barthelmess has grown to be more than a name or even a personality, merely incidental designations. He has become a symbol—romance to every girl and son to every mother—the man-boy. A very real Peter Pan, refusing to grow up. A mirror reflecting the boyhood days of every man.

If these United States ever decided to erect a monument to American Youth, then this self-same Tol'able David and Little Shepherd will be its model—idealistic—composite—the culmination of the great American crucible.

Dick, they call him—all of them! And that's significant. It's boyish and yet manly. Only chums and buddies call a man named Richard by the more intimate and friendly Dick. Girls, too. It's irresistible.

There may be a reason for this aura of friendliness and warm intimacy. The realists and romanticists would have various and sundry reasons, but the simple fact is that Dick is a man-boy at heart. A man-boy in his outlook on life, his philosophy and dreams.

A man-boy who steals away from his make-believe world whenever he can and loses himself on his yacht at season or traveling in strange countrysides. A man-boy who thinks young and lives young. A man-boy with man-reasoning and boy-irresponsibilities, whose moods are those of a boy of 14 still dreaming of conquering worlds and whose love of life is that of a man of 30, enjoying the full-grown fruits of experience and values.

Dick Barthelmess as Chad Buford is a revelation, startling and breath-taking. It is uncanny that a man should be able to etch a delicate character such as Chad after the six year interval since David.

"The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come" will long occupy the deepest recesses of the American heart because Dick Barthelmess has given it flesh and blood and soul; because only the screen's man-boy could have imbued it with feeling and understanding.

Strand Features Gloria Swanson 'Sadie Thompson'

Many years from now, regardless of what the future may produce in screen entertainment, picturegoers will continue to talk of "Sadie Thompson," Gloria Swanson's latest picture, now showing at the Strand. "Sadie Thompson" is that kind of picture. It will live long in the memories of all who see it and, unless all indications are meaningless, it will establish a niche for itself among the few really epochal productions in screen history. For this new picture, directed by Raoul Walsh, is not only the most sincere, most dramatic, most entertaining of all Gloria Swanson's pictures; it is one of the most compelling stories ever written and its unusual appeal has been registered on the silver-sheet with maximum effect.

Vitaphone features with Gloria Swanson in "Sadie Thompson," are George Jessel, Broadway stage star, in a comedy monologue, singing "At Peace With the World" and "The Four Aristocrats," instrumental and vocal quartet.

Primary interest is focused, naturally, on Miss Swanson's interpretation of the colorful "Sadie Thompson," the social exile of W. Somerset Maugham's story, whose struggle to mend a wayward existence becomes tragically complicated through the misguided efforts of a South Seas reformer. Certainly, Gloria never has been given an opportunity to reveal so brilliantly her remarkable artistry as in this role, and the result is her finest performance. "Sadie Thompson," to say the least, is a very unusual and most unusually interesting woman. Regardless of what she may have been in the past, she is possessed of certain innate qualities of goodness and a very concrete ambition to realize finer things in life—qualifications which at once arouse the interest of every normal human being. In Miss Swanson's hands, she becomes a creature of startling reality, tearing at the heart strings in her moments of suffering and winning the sympathetic understanding of all. And it is well, because of her grasp upon the emotions of those who watch her torment, that "Sadie Thompson's" life is not entirely one of bitterness, that she is successful in her fight for existence.

Lionel Barrymore, as the reformer, "Alfred Atkinson," is tremendously effective. If there should be any lack of agreement on individual features of this picture, the casting of Barrymore as "Atkinson" cannot be among them. The role is one of exceptional strength and Barrymore's is a most brilliant interpretation of the part.

Ken Maynard in 'The Upland Rider' Olympic Sunday

"The Upland Rider," the story of a horse, with all the ingredients of a fast-moving and hard-riding melodrama, packed with more thrills than are usually found in five pictures, is the advance advisement of Ken Maynard's latest western feature which comes to the Olympic theater Sunday and Monday.

This picture is an original story by Marion Jackson, and features Tarzan, the wonder horse, of Ken's who has been seen with Ken in all of his previous westerns. Tarzan is possibly one of the best known equine players on the screen and is actually receiving fan mail of his own, to such a degree that Charles R. Rogers, the producer of the Ken Maynard features for First National, and Ken, decided that the public would be given a picture in which Tarzan had more than his usual share of film footage.

The story is typically modern in scope and deals with two rival horse ranches in the West. One of these ranches breeds and raises the well known cow-pony of the west called "Palominos" and the efforts of an easterner to introduce a higher type of horse of Arabian strain to supplant the cow-pony.

Incidentally Tarzan happens to be a "Palomino" and according to Ken, this is a breed brought to this country by the Spaniards during the conquest of Mexico. However, the decision of the question as to which horses are best and the ultimate army contract is decided upon by a cross-country horse race in which more thrills have been packed than any previous Maynard feature.

How Conventions Will Be Heard

With the noted Graham McNamee, inset, at the helm, a choice group of NBC announcers and experts will "cover" the political conventions at Kansas City and Houston. Their words will go first to New York over private wires as shown, and then relayed to between 70 and 100 stations for broadcasting. The photo background is a scene at the 1924 Republican convention in Cleveland.

By NEA Service

NEW YORK, June 2.—Wires are being installed, mixing panels are being brought in, special booths are being built and other technical arrangements are being made for what will be a world-wide broadcast of the first of the two great national political conventions in June.

First announcement of the National Broadcasting company, which is assured the privilege of sending this important event out on the air, reports that more than 70 radio stations will rebroadcast the proceedings direct from Kansas City and Houston, but it is believed that this number will mount to the 100 mark.

In addition, the Columbia Broadcasting system, under the leadership of Major J. Andrew White, veteran announcer and broadcasting pioneer, expects to get similar permission to broadcast the Republican and Democratic affrays to some 50 stations of the country.

Independently of these, perhaps, station WGN of Chicago may have its series of microphones strewn about the floors of both meetings, its own mixing panels, its own private lines and its own announcers relaying the political excitement in its own way.

By Short Waves, Too

If both the NBC and Columbia systems, besides WGN, realize their expectations, this will be the greatest broadcasting event in the history of radio. Even with only the stations taking the NBC relays of these conventions, the event will be the most outstanding in broadcasting.

Not only will residents of the United States tune in on the conventions directly, but radio owners throughout the world will have the opportunity of listening to the proceedings at the same time through the short wave relays of such stations as WGY, Schenectady; KDKA Pittsburgh, and WJZ, New York.

In order to put the conventions on the air, special sets of private telephone wires will have to be set aside for each of the systems broadcasting. In the case of the NBC, for instance, there will be one line running from the convention hall in Kansas City and Houston all the way to Chicago by way of St. Louis and then on to New York.

At New York the special line from the convention city will be hooked up with the special NBC network, and here again another special system of private telephone wires will carry the political doings of each of the numerous stations assigned to the NBC network.

Only after this intricate relay system will each station be able to broadcast the events.

In order to assure perfect and constant transmission, the telephone company provides a reserve line paralleling the active line. And in order that no sound will be lost, telephone engineers and assistants, will be stationed along these lines at strategic points to guard the wires, boost the weakening signals and send them on their way to New York and the broadcasting stations.

This will entail the use of more than 10,000 miles of private telephone wires for the NBC alone.

The great difficulty will arise if the Columbia system and WGN are also permitted to broadcast the conventions. For these will require two private telephone lines each, and will thus make six special telephone lines out of Kansas City and Houston for the use of broadcasting alone.

What with the demands of the political parties for private wires out of the convention cities, it is doubtful whether broadcasting will be possible through stations on other than the NBC system.

The private line difficulty will be enhanced out of Houston, during the Democratic convention, for this city offers less telephone facilities than Kansas City.

Chrysler and Dodge Merger Will Work Out to Benefit of Public Is Belief Of Most Leaders in the Auto Industry

By RAY PRIEST
Universal Service Automobile Editor

DETROIT, June 2.—The Chrysler corporation's taking over the Dodge interests, forming another huge automobile manufacturing organization, will work out to the public's benefit, in the opinion of most leaders in the industry.

They point out that the combination of Chrysler and Dodge make a huge corporation that is worthy competition for both the General Motors corporation and Ford.

Both of those huge automobile interests welcome competition, knowing that vast improvements come from such rivalry.

With the three-sided competition, better motor cars will result and they will be sold to the public at lower prices, through an increase in volume.

Walter P. Chrysler's automobile experience makes him a worthy head for such a vast enterprise. His genius pooled with the financial ability of Clarence Dillon, head of the financial interests that control Dodge should make Maxwell a nigh invulnerable machine out of the new corporation.

Rumors that this is only the first amalgamation with Chrysler were given credence here. The addition of one or two more units, particularly a body division, would complete the picture for Chrysler.

It will be recalled that the Dodge plants were bought from the widows of the Dodge Brothers for $146,000,000 by Dillon, Read and company, New York bankers. It was estimated at the time that the Dodge good will was $75,000,000. Keeping in mind the ramifications of both companies the merger brings a half billion company into being.

Three Lines

This will give Chrysler the line of cars named after him, the new De Soto line that officials of his company are bringing out, and the Dodge line. It was said in Detroit that De Soto cars are now in production. The dealer and other angles of the merchandising organization are being perfected.

The prominence of the eight cylinder motor during the last week at the Indianapolis Speedway, where 29 of them lined up for the annual 500-mile race classic, gives rise to new talk about more lines of eight cylinder cars.

It is said that two prominent manufacturers of six cylinder cars will shortly produce lines of eight cylinder cars to augment their present sizes; another manufacturer of two lines of cars will change his small six to a small eight some time during the coming year if plans he is working on materialize.

Down at Indianapolis much attention was attracted to a front wheel drive five passenger sedan that was driven by one of the engineers aiding in the work on one of the race cars.

Considerable speculation arose as to what make the new car was, due to the lack of a name plate or any markings. It is known that this front wheel drive passenger car will be produced and shown first some time early next year.

Another manufacturer of high priced cars is turning his attention toward improvements on his car that have been successful in raising the horsepower of the racing cars.

The two outstanding improvements on race cars, it is known, are the super charger and the new form of carburetion action, by means of a down draft of air cooled through the carburetor.

Happy Bride of 1928

Life is going to be good to you!

Girlhood dreams come true . . Happiness so great, ah, none is so happy as you! The future . . . a shining road stretching into the distance, and now, a new dignity, a hostess in your own right, a home of your own, and at your command, such luxuries as a Princess of old might envy

WHEN your mother was married, things were different. The chances are that her home did not even have gas and electricity. Certainly there were none of the drudge-saving wonders that are going to be in your home!

The limited budgets of early married days are easier to meet now because of gas. Those first little meals you cook with such painstaking care---just turn the handle and the fuel is there. Suppose you had to chop wood for the stove first? You won't heat up the kitchen either, and spoil the sweet disposition you want to keep, for gas cooking is cool. Home preserving of fruits is sound economy, and at canning time, you will really appreciate the coolness and convenience of gas cooking.

Because you live in a clean natural gas community, your laundry bills will be much less, and that will help you in balancing that bewildering budget.

Gas is going to be a good friend to you, happy girl!

TIMES BOOK REVIEW AND LITERARY LANTERN

THE LITERARY LANTERN

The Literary Lantern burns weekly in the Sunday Times and is intended to throw light on writing around and about the South. Communications for this column should be addressed to the Editor of the Literary Lantern.

We gather from various sources that Miss Frances Newman is regarded by many as the Joan of Arc of southern letters. That brilliant Shandyan, Mr. James Branch Cabell, thought "The Hard Boiled Virgin" "the most brilliant, the most candid, the most civilized, and—within the limits of its chosen field—the most profound book yet written by any American woman." The Babelaisian Mencken allowed that he went with Cabell "all the way, and even beyond," though what lies beyond Mr. Cabell's all-embracing adjectives it is hard for the human mind to grasp. Now it seems that "Dead Lovers Are Faithful Lovers" (Boni & Liveright) will "surprise" readers (we quote from the jacket) with chapters "which gave a glow that very few love scenes have equaled." That is to say, they are as good as "Romeo and Juliet," "The Ordeal of Richard Feverel," "Tristram and Isolde," "Don Juan" and "The Love of the Three Kings." Well, well. It appears that the poor old South is waking up. Not since Barnum and Bailey visited our home town have we had anything quite so superlative.

While Mr. Cabell marshals the procession and Mr. Mencken incites the clown band, let us look at the mighty spectacle. "Dead Lovers Are Faithful Lovers" has to do with one Evelyn who marries Charlton Cunningham. After a dozen years of married life, Mr. Cunningham (who combines the attraction of Apollo, Pan, the Oscar Wilde dilettant, and a period piece of modern French furniture) fixed his wandering eye on Isabel Ramsay, a librarian, who, like Evelyn, immediately has pains in the center of her body. (Both ladies are subject to this malady—it is a feminine touch.) Charlton falls ill. The book ends. That is all.

This not very profound plot is, however, diversified by about seven baths, some 50 descriptions of female clothing, several passages on perfumes and powder, one scene at the opera, some glimpses into the conduct of the Atlanta Carnegie library, and less than 10 bits of conversation. The rest of the book is style.

Of Miss Newman's style her admirers speak in hushed and violet tones. There is, it seems, something marvelous in it. What that is, we are not told. It is simply—style. Let us look at it. Here is a paragraph from the end of the third section (Miss Newman disdains chapter numerals):

"But when she saw that her husband's eyelids were about to open on the last morning of his honeymoon, and when his brown eyes opened into her brown eyes and two forked veins waved their delicately green lines up his forehead and across to his thin sunburned temples, the heavy golden shell (of pain in her body—i. e., love) broke again. And when his lips kissed her waiting lips and his golden body kissed her waiting body, the caressing pain rushed through every one of her nerves to tell her that she could never be as near to him as she wanted to be."

The whole book is written in this laborious, tangential manner. Miss Newman never faces a situation—she always approaches it from the rear. One has in the above paragraph no single impression and no emotional reality. The situation is not seen from anybody's point of view. Part of what is said is presumably the wife's observation, and part of what is said is presumably the wife's feelings, and part of what is said is nobody's observation and nobody's feelings—it is style. It is also very clumsy writing.

The total result is that out of this paragraph, as out of the whole book, there emerges only a metallic glitter, a bloodless ballet of phrases. One never looks at the situation, at the characters, at the profound wisdom about feminine emotions which Miss Newman is presumed to possess. One looks always at Miss Newman, and perforce one applauds her precisely as one applauds a juggler who keeps 10 plates and a silk hat in the air all at once. If this is the fashion in which the literary New Jerusalem is to be constructed, it might seem that the Crystal Palace and the manner of the late Sidney Lanier had at least the virtues of being honestly ugly and sincerely wrong.

Miss Newman is presumably a clever lady. Bnt she is not clever enough to hide her cleverness. Her book is the kind of book that one can imagine coming from the pen of a writer who was the child of Ouida by George Meredith, and who was literate without being lyrical, and witty without being wise. She writes a novel which has all the accoutrements of a novel except a story, characters, probability and a philosophy of life. Her book is not dull. It is not even tedious. There is only one adjective which describes her volume, and for that we must go to the German. Her book is "langweilig."

Miss Newman has, then, very definite limitations. Neither this volume nor her previous one reveals a sense of humor, a sense of tragedy, a sense of the mystery and pathos of existence. She has neither whimsy nor kindness nor enthusiasm nor love nor hate nor zeal nor disgust for life or for her fellow beings. She has style.

Miss Newman has, we think, no desire to "save the South," but her admirers regard her, as we have said, as a kind of Joan of Arc chasing the romanticists and the dullards from the land that the king may be crowned at Rheims. And what a king!

How has she acquired this notable repute? Why, by the good old route of the southern inferiority complex. New York likes this brittle falseness, the veiled prophets of Richmond and Baltimore have spoken, and all over the South sad young men and bright young women fall upon her books as chests from which to deck themselves in the latest literary millinery. What has become of the robustious humor of Longstreet and Harris that we cannot laugh this tinsel absurdity into the inconsequence that it is? The South does not need Miss Newman. What it needs in letters is not mannerism but majesty, not witticism but wisdom, not style but sincerity. Far from being the bright incarnation of our literary future, her books are the brittle incarnation of the literary past—of the pale purple nineties, of Oscar Wilde and his faded gimcracks, of Ouida with her gingerbread romanticism, of the pallid garrulities of Walter Pater. We deny that the South needs irony. What is needs is iron. We think that Tolstoy and Thackeray and Twain and O'Neill are what we ought to go to for models, if to models we must go—writers with a sense of life and with convictions about it. So far as the South is concerned we think that DuBose Heyward, Paul Green, Julia Peterkin, Gerald Johnson, and writers like them are right, and that Frances Newman and writers like her are wrong. We think that pity and enthusiasm have their place in books, and not merely irony and exhausted emotionalism. We are sorry to see Miss Newman placed in a position which (we imagine) she does not want, and which certainly she does not deserve. Her books seem to us minor phenomena, and our interest in them is only because the clatter made over their mannerism is leading so many younger writers in this region astray.

Wonder

(By Charles L. O'Donnell, C. S. C.)

I have never been able to school my eyes
Against young April's blue surprise,
Though year by year I tell my heart
This spring our pulses shall not start
Nor beauty take us unaware,
Beauty that is the blue of air,
Blue crocus and a blue-bird's wing,
Water, blue shadows, everything
The sky can lay a finger on,
Blue twilight and the white blue dawn.
But every year in spite of this
Stern blunting of the edge of bliss,
When April first with blue-veined feet,
In any wood, down any street
Comes as I know that she must come,
My foolish heart beats like a drum,
My eyes, for all the tutoring years,
Are faithless in their truant tears.

AUTOBIOGRAPHY BENITO MUSSOLINI TO BE PUT OUT BY SCRIBNER SONS

Benito Mussolini has written his autobiography. It will be published in book form in the fall by Charles Scribner's Sons. The book is a detailed account of Mussolini's eventful life from its beginning in the ancient Italian town of Varano da Costa to his present position as leader of the Italian nation. Mussolini sketches his childhood and youth in quick, dramatic style with many notes of humor and sentiment and then plunges into a thrilling recital of his early years as a soldier, school teacher and political adventurer. Il Duce describes the birth and growth of Fascismo, its first battles against communism and its rise to power. Besides recounting the thrilling experiences of his many sided career and throwing a new light on diplomatic events in Europe before and since the world war, the manuscript reveals an original and stimulating philosophy of life and bears throughout the imprint of a powerful personality. The book abounds in vigorous verbal portraits of famous statesmen of the various powers and does much toward clarifying and defining Mussolini's position on many of the questions, both national and international, for which he has been criticized.

In eight years there has been only one unfavorable review of H. M. Tomlinson's "The Sea and the Jungle." Only one! It seems incredible. Critics usually vary, and often on the best books.

Robinson Given Pulitzer Prize For Third Time

That Edwin Arlington Robinson stands today at the summit of the hill which he began to climb in 1896 is evidenced by the award of the Pulitzer prize for 1927 to his "Tristram." This is the third time that Mr. Robinson has received the Pulitzer prize for his work, "Collected Poems" having been chosen in 1921, and "The Man Who Died Twice" in 1924.

"What makes the poem notable," writes Lloyd Morris in The Nation, "what makes it specifically distinguished in the roll of his works, is the intensity of its emotion; passion sweeps through it with a vigor and beauty that are new, in this full resonance, to Mr. Robinson's art. In 'Tristram' Mr. Robinson has recreated, in its noblest guise, the ecstacy of passion."

"It is a poem which for beauty, for technique, for dramatic skill, is the equal at least of any great narrative poem in the English language. From first to last it moves majestically and poignantly. In its course we are given some of the most exquisite love poetry America has produced." — The Bookman.

There have been 19 printings of "Tristram" since its publication a year ago.

Reading Route for Summer Tours Offered in Library Travel Clubs

The library has for several years had some special activity for children during the summer months when most of them are out of school. This year it is to sponsor these travel clubs, with the idea of taking the children on a trip by book, instead of by rail. The tours offered are the Mediterranean tour, the European tour and the tour of the Far East. There is no age limit for club membership, but it was thought probable that children in the first three grades at school would not be interested in the book traveling. Accordingly, suggestive reading lists for very young children have been posted in the children's reading room.

Each youngster who enrolls in one of the clubs will receive his book list in an envelope, in much the same way as he would receive an excursion ticket. A space for his name and address is given at the top, and under each stop are given the names of several books about the particular country to be "visited."

The tour of Europe begins with "Wichita Falls to New York," and includes the following countries, with the best available children's books on each one: England and Wales, Scotland, Ireland, France, Belgium, Switzerland, Italy and Spain. The Far East tour begins with "Wichita Falls to San Francisco," and then takes one through Hawaii, Japan, China, Philippine Islands, Dutch East Indies, Persia, Arabia, Turkey, Russia, Siberia and Korea. The Mediterranean tour is via Spain, France, Italy, Greece, Asia Minor and Africa.

Each boy's and girl's ticket will receive a punch as he reads a book. And it is extremely doubtful if many of the tourists who return in the fall will have a better idea of the places they visited than will these children, whose tours were by the reading route.

Life on the Prairies Pictured In Grew's Story of Ideal Love

Reviewed by Frank Hall

The story of a farm youth whose love for the girl of his dreams endures for three long years until her "awakening" and a picture of life on the Dakota prairies in that period of time just preceding the "flivver age" is contained in "Migration," David Grew's latest book.

The author has written a very interesting story that is not at all hard to read and there are bits of Grew's philosophy on this great drama we are prone to call "Life" mixed in to make it even more entertaining.

Grew evidently knows the Dakota prairies for there are numerous places in the book where that section of the country is clearly described and these descriptive phrases add much to the book.

Stacey Conrill is one of those lads brought up on a Dakota farm who has been forced to work practically all his life from sun up to late at night but whose vision reaches out beyond those simple things that make up prairie life.

Marcia Stoner is one of those sort of girls who want something but who are rather undecided what that something is other than the world beyond. Quite different from Stacey Conrill she fails to weigh both sides of the matter and plunges headon into a life so much different from hers that it seemed as another world.

This decision was made by Marcia when the circus made its regular visit near where the prairie folk lived. She joined the big show, taking with her, "Blossom," purchased by her father from the elder Conrill and for which action Stacey left home.

Time passes and Stacey with that longing for Marcia never leaving his heart and her vision never fading from his mind, acquires land, raises good crops and becomes a prosperous farmer.

Then Marcia's return and in a sense it was an admission of her defeat in her desire to forever leave the prairies. Then the understanding between her and Stacey all go to make a pleasant ending for the story.

Grew's book is not outstanding as an example of literary work but certainly it should be placed on a higher plane than some books very similar in nature.

"History repeats itself in the life of an individual as it does in that of a nation or the world. Life often seems but a succession of rounds, on the hard worn path of which the individual treads like the blind horse at the mill, the soul, at occasional points in the circumference, waking up, to the vague consciousness that it has been there before."

"Little by little, as one gives up the cradle, one gives up one's toys, one's romance, ones' dreams and ideals; and, finally one gives up one's land."

"Prettiness—it is like the pretty colors when the sun goes down—they last only a minute. While you are looking at them, the night closes in and they fade away. In the dark times it is the touch of the hand that holds you up, that means most to you."

"Migration," By David Grew. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons ($2).

PARTISAN PRESS TO GET OUT VOTE

"I am persuaded," says Claude G. Bowers, who will deliver the Democratic keynote address at Houston, "that if we had now the frankly partisan press, active throughout the year in the advocacy of partisan principles and policies, there would be a more general interest in politics and fewer stay-at-homes in elections." May 25 was the date set by Houghton Mifflin company for the publication of the new edition of Mr. Bower's "Party Battles of the Jackson Period."

Announce Titles Of Movies to Be Shown This Week

"Sea Raiders" and "Some Show" will be the two five-reel features to be shown. The comedies will be "The Inventor" and "Uncle's Lost Letter."

The following schedule of shows has been announced: Monday night at Bellevue park; Tuesday night at Grant street park, Wednesday night at Carrigan school ground, Thursday night at Myles O'Reilly park, Friday night at Washington school ground and North Side community house, Saturday nights at Scotland park and Bowie school ground.

GOOD DESCRIPTIONS IN "LOVE IS MASTER"

Among the excellent descriptions of the Buckinghamshire countryside to be found in "Love Is Master," by Almey St. John Adcock, is the following spring scene. "Everywhere was the miracle of spring, carpeting the woods with flowers, racing along the white lanes in whirlwinds of dust, trumpeting over the sweeping hills of Buckinghamshire. The bluebells were out, and the glory of their color trembled in the long grasses; anemones scattered their frail loveliness in the rippling shadows. The treetops were alive with the singing of birds."

AN ADVENTURE IN THRIFT

By JAMES J. MONTAGUE

When the Boat Was Finally Over She Sank at Her Mooring.

Every time I hire anything done I am impressed by the rapacity of artisans. The stones in the little wall that supports the base of the elm tree in the front yard cost me, installed, about $15 each. I could have collected the stones myself in a neighboring field without paying for them. Indeed, the owner of the field might have paid me a little something for carting them away. He had no use for them himself.

It pains me to watch a carpenter standing for 10 minutes with his hands in his pockets regarding a plank that he intends presently to saw in two. It would be easier for him and cheaper for me if he sawed it in two immediately. Instead, he studies it carefully, then takes a pouch out of his pocket and fills his pipe, then takes a match from the brim of his hat and lights it, then glances up at the sky to find out if the weather is propitious for sawing, and at last gets to work. I know I could saw that plank in 10 seconds. I might not saw it quite as straight as the carpenter does, but what's the use of being fussy about little things.

Every time I have some odd job done I look at the bill, and am disgusted to think I am too lazy to do the work myself. I need the exercise, too, for playing golf could hardly be called exercise, walking is too tedious and I am too old; my doctor says to tackle tennis. Yet for the past eight or ten years I have sat around and stewed because I was paying more than I could afford for odd jobs, and at the same time growing soft and lazy. When the bill for the boat came in I resolved to institute a change.

We've had the boat for several years. We keep it because some of the children still think that they will take a few sails in it during the summer months. It was an inexpensive boat—that is the first cost was inexpensive. But a boat isn't like an automobile, which can be left in a garage all winter if there is heavy snow without any deterioration. A boat has to be hauled out of the water before the ice forms, and stored on ways. During the winter the cracks between the boards, which I believe are technically known as seams, grow wider, and the cotton caulking drops out of them. If this caulking is not replaced before the craft is put into the water again, it sinks to the bottom and stays there.

Moreover, a boat has to be painted every year, and moorings have to be put out for it when it is launched in the spring, and the sails have to be bent on, and the spars varnished. Generally, too, after it is out on dry land you notice that a couple of planks are bent in, and you have to replace them.

The bill I got last year after the boat was put over was as follows:

Putting Over Boat for '28

Putting out moorings (two moorings)	$10
Painting boat	10
Paint for same	15
Caulking boat, four hours time	4
Cleaning sales and bending same	8
General expenses	18
Total	$65

Now the boat only cost a hundred and fifty dollars in the first place, and I felt that it was silly to pay nearly half that sum for its upkeep. So I told the boys over at the golf yard that I wouldn't be around for the next two Saturdays, bought some paint, and a hammer and a caulking iron, and set to work myself to institute a thrift campaign.

I took the paint down to the boat and started to work with an old brush I found in the garage. I might as well have tried to paint with an oak chip. The brush was solid with the paint of many years. I had to wait till Monday and buy paint remover to clean it. The paint remover came in a can and cost 50 cents.

Next evening after supper I went down to my painting job, only to discover that if I wanted the craft to look trim I would have to rub down the old paint with sandpaper. I couldn't get the sandpaper till the next day because the hardware store closes at 6 o'clock. But I got it the following morning, and went to work that night. Sandpapering isn't especially clean work, and I remembered when I had the job about half done that I had forgotten to change into old clothes. However, once I had put my hand to the sandpaper I was not one to turn back. I finished the job.

The next night I painted. That was more fun. The boat looked spruce and shiny after the paint was on. Places on my coat and trousers which the paint was also on didn't look so well. But that couldn't be helped.

When the painting was done I remembered that I hadn't caulked the planks. I did that the following two evenings, but in doing it I managed to smear up the paint so it had to be put on all over again. And the cotton stuck out of the cracks in a slovenly sort of a way, despite all the hammering I could do. If I hit it softly it still protruded. If I hit it too hard it went right through the seams, and lay in little longish waves inside the boat.

But by the end of the week the boat was ready to go over. Then I huhted around for the moorings, which were large cement blocks to which chains were fastened. I found them after two evenings' search. They were on somebody else's boat, and under water. He had taken them by mistake.

I spent Sunday persuading him that they were mine, and helping him get them up out of the water. Then I put them into a row boat and dropped them where I wanted my boat to be moored. I felt that I had done a swell job of dropping, but the next evening I was notified by the commodore of the boat club that my floats were in the ship channel, and that I would have to get the moorings up again. They were imbedded in deep mud, and eventually I had to call in the assistance of a waterman to get them up for me. At my suggestion he put them down again in the right place, and charged me ten dollars for the whole job.

I found the sails mildewed, so the next night I put them out in the back yard to air. They dried sort of splotchy, but I hoped the sun and wind would make them white again after use. This hope was not based on experience or justified by the outcome.

When I went down to launch the boat from the ways I discovered that this was a five-men job. The club attendant offered to do it for me, but I was resolved upon economy for once in my life, so I got four friends to come and help me. For four nights they argued about the way to do the job. Then we started it and in three more nights we got it done. One of them ruined a suit of clothes in the job, and another sprained his wrist. Of course I felt constrained to pay for the clothes and the doctor's bill.

When the boat was finally over she sank at her moorings, and it cost me ten dollars more to get her up again. She was a pretty bedraggled looking boat, for I had put some of the paint on while the sides were wet, and it all came off. The net cost of my adventure in thrift was as follows:

Suit of clothes ruined (my friend's)	25
Doctor's bill	15
Paint and supplies	10
Moorings	10
Damage to character (my own)	20
Loss of boat (which sank and was left where it sank)	150
Total	$245

There is probably some way to save money by doing your work yourself, but I am not going to have time to work it out in the future.

GERMAN ELECTIONS PUT REPUBLICAN PARTIES IN POWER

Great Coalition Controls Reichstag Danger Is Seen for Europe If France Refuses to Quit Ruhr

By FRANK SIMONDS

Viewed in retrospect there can be little question that the latest German election must be reckoned the most important since the first. Almost 10 years after the revolution of November 9, 1918, the people of Germany have decisively demonstrated that the monarchy is a thing of the past.

The Nationalist party has lost all popular appeal. On the face of the election returns of recent test, the party which supports the old order lost 38 seats in the Reichstag and more than 1,500,000 votes. By contrast the Socialist party, which is Republican without qualification gained 21 seats and 1,100,000 votes, while the Communist party, which represents the extreme anti-monarchial group gained nine seats and over 500,000 votes. Put concisely, there are just half as many Nationalists as Socialists. While all the Socialists are Republican not all the Nationalists are safer for restoration of the Hohenzollerns.

What makes the present election significant is the fact that the progress of the Nationalists has been decisively arrested. This is another way of saying that Germany has recovered from the consequences of the occupation of the Rhur, which narrowly escaped destroying the Republic and gave both the Nationalists and the Communists dangerous strength.

Looking back over the last four elections in the German republic the figures show the evolution. Starting with the pre-Ruhr Reichstag, the figures for the several groups are as follows:

1. Socialists and Communists, that is, anti-monarchist.

	Pre-Ruhr	1924	1924	1928
Socialists	173	100	131	152
Communists	15	62	45	54
	188	162	176	206
2. Bourgeois Parties.
Centre	65	62	69	65
Peoples	65	44	51	44
Democratic	39	25	32	25
Bav. Peoples	20	16	19	18
	193	147	171	182
3. Monarchists.
Nationalists	67	96	111	73
Misc.	3	32	17	19
	70	128	128	92

From these figures it will be manifest that following the occupation of the Ruhr there was a striking reaction. The monarchists, the supporters of the old regime had been struck down by the military defeat and the revolution. In the Reichstag which was sitting in 1923, when the Ruhr was occupied, they counted only 67 votes of their own and had but three additional.

Against them were allied the Socialists, the Centre, the Democrats, who counted 280 votes in a chamber of about 500. This was the Weimar bloc, which had made the constitution and elected Ebert as the first president of the republic. In the new Reichstag it counted only 187 members, lost control. It made a coalition with the Peoples party and aided by the Bavarian Peoples party counted 247 votes, a little less than a clear majority.

At the second election, in 1924, there was a considerable shift due to the Dawes plan. As a result the Weimar bloc and the Peoples party were able to count 251 votes out of 493. But this was a slender margin, and the machine was kept going by a non-partisan cabinet headed by Dr. Luther. It broke down, however, because the Social Democrats, ultimately refused to support it.

Combination Insecure

A new combination was formed, the Socialists and the Democrats going openly to the opposition and the Nationalists entering the government. This combination was also insecure, counting 251 votes and actually retaining office because the opposition, for various reasons, declined to throw it out and take office. It collapsed due to the quarrel between the Centre and the Peoples party over school legislation.

Abroad, the reappearance of the Nationalists in the cabinet where they held the dominating position, was disastrous. France, saw in the resurgence of the old men and ideas, a denial of Locarno and a threat for the future. All progress toward an early evacuation of the Rhineland was halted.

At home the cabinet was not more successful. To get office the Nationalists had agreed to respect Locarno and fulfill the Dawes plan. At the same time the continued to criticise the republic, which they had undertaken to support, the Dawes plan and Locarno, which they had subscribed to, and they forced through tariff legislation which materially increased the cost of living.

By accepting the Republic and Locarno, they lost strength with the extreme monarchial elements of their own party, by their personal attacks upon the republic and the foreign policy of Stresemann, they disgusted all reasonable Germans. By their tariff legislation designed to benefit the agrarian element in their own party, which is made up of the extreme Junkers, they outraged the rest of the nation. At home and abroad they failed conspicuously.

As a consequence the voters at the last election not only administered to the Nationalists a crushing blow, but just as decisively punished the Peoples and Centre parties for having consented to make a coalition with the Nationalists.

The Great Coalition

The new Reichstag will be dominated by a combination known as the great coalition which includes the Socialists, the Center, the Peoples party and the Democrats, doubtless aided by the Bavarian Peoples party.

Even without this assistance it will count 286 votes in a chamber of 489. Moreover, and the fact is significant, the Weimer bloc will count 242 votes or only three less than a clear majority for the out-and-out republican parties.

At the head of the coalition will be a Socialist chancellor, Dr. Braun, and while Dr. Stresemann will undoubtedly retain his post as foreign minister, the other positions will almost certainly be divided almost exclusively between the Socialists, the Centre and the Democrats.

A republican government, purged of the last taint of monarchial influence will now undertake to negotiate with the victors of the world war to obtain the early evacuation of German soil and the equally necessary liquidation of the Dawes plan. The new cabinet will seek to liquidate the post-war issues, to recover complete German freedom and restore the German republic to the position in the world occupied by the nation before 1914.

It is going to be excessively difficult for the allies, and this means France, to meet the arguments which can be presented by Dr. Stresemann speaking for a republican Germany. What conceivable argument can Poincare and Briand present for a further occupation of German soil? Not even the French can argue that there is now any danger to French security on the German side.

There is grave danger for the French, and for Europe, in any policy which now refuses to the republican cabinet the liberation of German soil which the whole German people demands. The failure of a republican cabinet to obtain this would play directly into the hands of the Nationalists and give them the only issue on which they might be able to recover.

Everyone in Europe knows that the occupation has ceased to be based upon any consideration of French security. Even before the latest election the French apprehension of a new German aggression was largely vanished. Occupation today represents the French guarantee of reparations.

If the new German government can find ways abroad to market a bond issue large enough to guarantee France the liquidation of her war debts to the United States and Great Britain, or can persuade the United States to cancel or reduce its debt claims, the way to evacuation is open.

The new German cabinet can only endure if it makes visible progress toward the liberation of German soil. If it can attain this end then the last conceivable opposition to the republic within Germany will be smashed. If it fails, there is patent danger of another reaction like that following the Ruhr, certainly not as serious, but calculated to postpone the consolidation of the republic which, apparently, nothing can now actually prevent.

LEADING BIRD EGG COLLECTOR NORTHWEST TEXAS CELEBRATES 40TH ANNIVERSARY OF HOBBY

By ROBERTA CLAY

To celebrate one's 40th birthday is no uncommon matter; a 40th wedding anniversary is not so unusual; but few persons have the pleasure of celebrating the 40th anniversary of their hobbies. Within 40 years most of them have had a dozen hobbies, if any. But this year marks the 40th anniversary of the egg-collecting career of R. L. More of Vernon.

"I got my first pair of eggs on March 15, 1888, and I haven't slowed down since," Mr. More said. And to prove that he meant it, he showed 26 eggs of the white-necked raven, which he had found only a few days before.

The sight of Mr. More's room, with its collection of 11,000 eggs, somehow brought to mind that phrase about "infinite riches in a little room." Certainly the number seems infinite. The eggs are of more than 600 species, and range in size from the tiny ones of the humming bird to those of the ostrich. And the collector declares that, if the room were suddenly thrown into confusion, any one could sort them out and rearrange them in their present positions.

Now Mr. More is manager of the W. T. Waggoner estate, valued at a hundred million dollars or so. The job would take most of the time of most men; but this man sees in his frequent trips through the oil fields of Texas and Oklahoma a chance to find one bird's nest here and another there, and to be always adding to his collection.

The accuracy with which he speaks of the various birds and their habits is astounding to the layman who knew there was such a thing as a humming bird, but who had no idea that there were 18 varieties of the bird in the United States, each one making his nest a little differently. Mr. More has nine of the nests, and eggs from the ruby-throat humming bird, Allen's hummer and the black-chinned hummer. All the eggs look about like medium-sized capsules, but the nests vary in finishing. The same variety in "bird architecture" is shown in two kingbirds' nests; that of a couch kingbird is roughly built, while that of an Arkansas kingbird has a lining that looks like felt.

Robin's Egg Blue

The girl who has a dress of "robin's egg blue," and who has never seen the eggs for which the shade was named, should visit the egg room, though she may be consumed with envy at the thought of how far her new gown falls short of the glorious color of the robin's eggs. The bluebird's eggs are blue, too, but of a shade which, while very becoming to the eggs, might not be so well suited to an evening dress for Miss Flapper. The catbird's eggs are a sort of Alice blue, and the snowy heron's blue eggs are much larger than those of the robin, but of an equally soft and beautiful shade. A nest of the duck hawk eggs of a dull mottled brown color is sure to attract attention, and Mr. More explains that the eggs got into some diamond dye by mistake—and then laughs as he corrects himself with the statement that the color is natural. There are several kinds of eggs, too, that look as if they had been splashed with water color.

Each case brings some new interest, with eggs from such widely separated regions as those of the whistling swan from Alaska, the flamingo from the Bahamas, the Canada goose from Bear river, Utah, the king vulture from Europe and the California condor.

The egg of the California condor is one of the most highly prized in the entire collection, its value being inestimable, for the reason that it is almost impossible to secure another. This one was taken from a pot hole in a cliff, about 400 feet from the top and 700 from the bottom.

Easy to Find—Hard to Get

Some eggs are easy to find but hard to get, Mr. More says, explaining that of such are those of the condor just mentioned, and of the Clark's Nutcracker. The latter bird makes its nest high up in the mountains above the snow line; and to secure the eggs the collector must either climb the mountain in the fall before the first snow, and stay all winter, or climb a snow-covered mountain early in the spring. In either case, his trouble may be in vain; for the bird may have chosen a mountain across the ravine for its nest that winter. It is this difficulty in reaching the nest that makes the eggs valued at $40 apiece, though the bird lays five eggs and is too gentle to fight when her nest is robbed.

There are other birds not so gentle, and to attempt to disturb their eggs is to get into a fight. The rock wren got its name from a peculiar habit. One might suppose that the name indicated a custom of laying eggs on the rocks; but no, the bird digs a hole out of a dirt wall, and lays the eggs far back in this wall. Then it lines the runway with tiny rocks. And so sensitive is the mother bird that one need only take a broomstraw and touch one of the stones, to have her flying in his face.

The baby bird that is probably the envy of all the other fledglings is the oriole; for it has a real cradle, a cup-shaped nest that hangs on the edge of a limb and swings with the wind. What could be nicer than that, for a family of baby birds? Perhaps it was a glimpse of such a nest that inspired somebody to write, "When the wind blows the cradle shall rock." Not all orioles' nests are just alike; some are much larger than others, and some are more finely woven; but all are so built that they can swing back and forth with the gentle breezes.

One feathered baby that shoudn't envy this wonderful hammock, however, is the mountain chickadee, for he has the safest, snuggest nest imaginable, built inside a tree. The mother digs out a hollow, and Mr. More has 10 little eggs taken from such a nest. The gnatcatcher, on the other hand, protects his nest by making it look like a knot of lichen on the tree. And probably the gosling wouldn't trade all sorts of cradles and sung holes in trees for the nest made out of the down of its mother's breast. The goose starts to pluck her down from her breast as soon as she lays the first egg; and by the time her family has come quack-quacking, or honk-honking, into the world she has the warmest sort of a home for them.

Proved by Corset

Mr. More tells a story about one of his oriole's nests. He spent so much time in finding it that his wife was feeling quite disdainful. His answer to her statement that he hadn't found much was that he had proved the oriole to be a migrant, for he had found a corset string woven into the nest, and he was sure there hadn't been a corset in this part of the country for 10 or 15 years.

The egg room contains much of interest besides eggs. There are the nests, many of them with the eggs replaced in them. And there are several mounted birds, a miniature of an emu, a cast of the huge egg of the moa (only three of the real eggs being in existence), the foot of a mallard duck which was killed near Vernon in 1925, but which had been banded at Cuivre Island, Mo., in January of 1925. There are pictures of all sort of birds, originals in water color and oil, and some good prints. His feather pictures, though very attractive novelties, bring a sniff of disapproval from the collector, who replied to his guests' protest that they are pretty, "But they're not true!" Too, there is a flapper with her head made of a hen's egg, there are ornithological magazines, there are book-ends with bluebirds perched on the edges and with a bird book between, there are little birds to decorate the vases, and there is even an ash tray with a little bird on the edge.

For ornithologists, the room would be a subject for study; for the every-day person who is interested in birds it will furnish many interesting hours. And Mr. More's knowledge of birds and their habits will make conversation interesting for as long as that gentleman has time to spare from his job of managing a hundred million dollar estate.

26% more Studebaker Dealers this year than ever before

FOR nine consecutive months retail deliveries of Studebaker-built automobiles have increased over those of the corresponding months of a year previous. This is in the face of a decrease in sales for the industry as a whole.

The swing toward Studebaker is the inevitable result of adding spectacular performance to One-Profit value—and then proving the stamina and speed of the cars by severe tests under American Automobile Association supervision.

Studebaker's sensational proofs of speed and endurance come from engineering genius, quality materials, precision manufacture and rigid inspections. Because of these, any Studebaker may safely be driven 40 miles an hour the day you buy it. Motor oil need be changed but once in 2500 miles. The President, Commander and Dictator require chassis lubrication only after each 2500 miles.

TIME BRINGS RECOGNITION DAVIS AS CONFEDERACY'S GENIUS

Man Destined to Lead Lost Cause After Determined Fight to Save Union Born 120 Years Ago Today

By JENNIE HOWARD BERNEY

The ancestors of Jefferson Davis, that great, good man and patriot, were of revolutionary fame. His father, Samuel, a personage of keen, sober judgment, entered the war for independence from England as a private, but later rose to be a commissioned officer. His mother, a lovely dame of great personal charm and wit, was of a poetic intellectual turn, as was consistent with her Welch, Irish and Scotch blood. These two, together with his elder brother, Joseph, constituted the first direct human influence on Jefferson Davis toward goodness, greatness and patriotism.

The future leader for preservation of the union, and the only president of a southern Confederacy, organized for rights of self-government, was born in Kentucky, June 3, 1808, 120 years ago today. He was named for Thomas Jefferson. While yet an infant, his family moved to Mississippi, and made that state a permanent home.

Young Jefferson's first education in books and in the settled democracy of family life was brief. At the age of seven years, the boy was sent with Major Hines through a vast stretch of Chickasaw and Choctaw territory to a Catholic school, a thousand miles away. This long journey, made on horseback, inured the child to privation and danger, and doubtless laid the foundation for the courage and resourcefulness which characterized the man throughout his long life; while his education in a Catholic school must have intensified his naturally religious temperament and bent of filial duty toward his ever loved parents.

JEFFERSON DAVIS

At 16, he matriculated at West Point, where Fate brought him as companions Robert E. Lee, Albert Sidney Johnson, Joseph Early Johnston, the three destined to earn with him deathless fame as leaders in a just cause of constitutional rights.

At West Point, students were then taught as an axiom—"Interposition of the federal government would not be justified, if a state determined to withdraw from the Union." This theory was earlier expressed by Thomas Jefferson as president when he said: "States may wholly withdraw their delegated power."

This construction of Jefferson, was strengthened by President Madison, who held that, "the states themselves must be the judges, whether the bargain shall be preserved or broken." It is quite reasonable to suppose that Davis and his compatriots, Lee and the two Johnstons, were fully informed of these two utterances of presidents regarding the sovereign rights of states, while all school histories contained the reservation of New York, Virginia and Rhode Island to resume their soveriegn function, should their interests be imperiled by the federal government.

We might also conclude that Jefferson Davis, like every school boy or girl of today learned of the threats made by a convention of New England states, to withdraw from the Union, unless permitted to carry on unhindered, their profitable shipping of slaves into this country. In truth, the threat of secession that Massachusetts held as a sword over the heads of federal government, when its acts failed to suit her, had become a regular political fetich of that state, a hotbed of disunion, then as later when the abolitionists gained control of state opinion.

State's Rights Theory

Thus Jefferson Davis, living from 16 to 20 in the atmosphere of West Point, could not fail to know that the federal government considered the states as sovereign units, with an unquestioned right to resume the function delegated by them to the federal government.

If all these events and northern opinions were not sufficient to inculcate the theory of states' rights, Jefferson Davis later made a study of the constitution which must have convinced him that the makers of that venerable document intended by Article VI, Section 11 to place the constitution as the supreme law of the land, while Article III vested the judicial power in a supreme court, and extended it over controversies between states. Hence, by natural selection, by state loyalty, by northern training and northern example, young Davis, when graduating at 20 from West Point, must have been thoroughly grounded in those principles which later made him a great spokesman for them in the United States senate and an honest president of the southern confederacy, who was a doughty and brave champion of states' rights. His course led to failure for his cause; put price upon his head; and precipitated him, shackled and tortured, in a federal prison, where all was lost save honor.

The main facts in his life can be briefly related. One hundred years ago, Jefferson Davis graduated from West Point and entered the service of the United States army. In 1832, he was active in the Black-Hawk war, and conducted himself with such tact and magnanimity toward Black Hawk and the defeated Indians, they bestowed on him the title of Little Chief.

Just as Slave Owner

Then love came into his life, and he courted Miss Sarah Knox Taylor, and married her despite the opposition of her father and his commander, Zachary Taylor. In 1835 he resigned from the army and returned to Mississippi, where his good brother, Joseph, gave him a small plantation, called Brierfield, and sold him 14 negroes on credit. In a short time, by working side by side with his servants, it became known as one of the best plantations in that section, and our young soldier here began to develop his administrative talents, by carrying on his affairs by a strict method of justice. He permitted no corporal punishment except by vote of negro jury.

Then his loved Sarah, stricken by virulent malaria, died within the first year of their marriage, while the young husband escaped death, but was quite ill for a time.

The death of Sarah Taylor marks the beginning of a new epoch in Davis' life. He became almost a recluse, and filled his time with superintending Brierfield and unremitting study, which included a wide range of reading, and a special and minute analysis of the Constitution in all its ramifications. This kind of life, fitted him for statesmanship, but unfitted him for the realities of everyday life, as exemplified in the man of the street. It increased his desire to pursue the ideal, and decreased his power to deal with men as they are.

After 10 years of practical seclusion, Mr. Davis re-entered the service of the United States when war broke out with Mexico. He fought with distinction at Monterrey, and is generally accredited with having achieved the victory at Buena Vista; where, although badly wounded, he remained on horseback with his men, the famous Mississippi Rifles. This wound affected his health for the remainder of his life. For years, a single misstep gave him excruciating pain that he bore in stoical silence; while his eyesight was affected and a nightmare of successive headaches pursued him until near the close of his long life.

The galliant conduct of Jefferson Davis at Buena Vista had three significant effects. Old General Taylor, until then never reconciled to his daughter's marriage, told his son-in-law that Sarah was a better judge of men than he was, and the two became friends. The second and most important result of Buena Vista victory was to throw Jefferson Davis into the political and national spotlight. Here his character as a leader made him the idol of his men, who adored him for his coolness, resourcefulness and discretion. This popularity with his men extended its influence when president of the confederacy, until the rank and file had confidence in his ability to lead them to victory in the war between the states.

Chosen to U. S. Senate

That same year he married Varina Howell, and was sent to the senate of the United States, where great attention was paid to his opinions, and he was made chairman of military affairs. This position he filled with credit, but his greatest attention was given to questions of statesmanship involving constitutional principles. Webster, Clay and Calhoun were near the end of their careers, and the new men of new ideas were coming in.

The year 1848 marked a turning point in the history of the United States. The republic, for the first time, was divided into camps, and men began to talk as well as act along sectional lines, which had been sharply drawn with the question of the annexation of Texas, and was further aggravated by the Oregon question.

In 1850, Daniel Webster's speech sounded the slogan of federal supremacy over state sovereignty. The discovery of gold in California and its subsequent request to enter the union as a free state, and the vast territory of the Mexican cession yet to be satisfactorily divided, were the two pressing problems that confronted congress and the country at large, while the fugitive slave law, guaranteed by the constitution, was a flaming firebrand all over the north. Calhoun begged for the right of the south, and urged that fraternal feeling be regarded in all these burning issues, while Daniel Webster, a strong northern partisan, declared that the abolitionist had given the south just cause for complaint.

Modernized U. S. Army

In these heated debates were heard the reasonable arguments of Jefferson Davis, maintaining equal rights of the south with the north. The result of the efforts of patriots on each side was a compromise which might have lead to peace had the fanatic abolitionists permitted.

From 1847 to 1851, Jefferson Davis served his country in the United States senate, and his influence undoubtedly postponed the time of sectional strife. During the Pierce administration, 1853-57, Jefferson Davis was a member of his cabinet as minister of war, a position that he filled with ability and energy. He was popular with the army and introduced methods that almost revolutionized warfare, viz., light infantry, rifled muskets and pistols, and use of the minie ball. He caused the seacoast and frontier defenses to be augmented; built the aqueduct which still supplies Washington with pure water; determined the best route of railroad to the Pacific, assisted in founding the Smithsonian Institution, of which he was regent. In this important position, his wise administration was lauded by all groups, regardless of section.

This position in the cabinet called forth from Jefferson Davis the energies that he thought should be devoted to the interest of his beloved Southland, so he resigned and took a seat in the senate, where historians say, "although not facile in extemporaneous debate, he held his own against all opponents." Adams describes our hero as courteous, unpretending, yet quietly dignified and not to be trifled with, although not aggressive, but ever alert to uphold constitutional rights when assailed in the senate.

The records of congress in December, 1860, and January, 1861, will show that Jefferson Davis was willing at all times to support any measure for preservation of the union, predicated upon the principles of the constitution. He spoke truly of the cause of the parting of the north and south when he said in the United States senate, "All who truly love the union should look into this question calmly . . . the true cause of our danger is that general sectional hostility which has been substituted for fraternity."

Pleaded for Union

When, in 1858, he had gone north for his health, his eloquent plea for fraternal love and regard for the constitution drew forth unanimous applause from a vast audience in Fanueil hall, but the abolitionist sentiment was too strong in Massachusetts to make his words have any permanent impression. "The Liberator," Garrison abolitionist paper, had urged disunion for 20 years, making the freedom of slaves its pretext for disloyalty.

Methinks I can see Davis, that noble student of history, that keen observer of his times and its tendencies, and that gallant upholder of our constitution, as he listened to this applause. Methinks I can follow his reflections of the empty professions of the abolitionists, whose principles did not cost a dollar, when he enumerated the many anti-slave societies that had long existed in the south, urging gradual emancipation for the protection of both whites and blacks.

I wonder did he tell that vast and enthusiastic audience that there existed in his southland between two and three hundred thousand free negroes, mainly emancipated without compensation to their owners. He might have pricked their conscience with the statement that North Carolina, between 1824-26, liberated 2000; more than the whole north had freed since the revolution.

To a limited extent, this article is an attempt to trace some causes that developed a boy, caught into the atmosphere of the north at 16, where his impressions of states' rights received full approval; to trace the effect of his service in the United States army on his military tendencies; to show that his long seclusion and study of history, past and contemporaneous, and an exhaustive contemplation of the constitution of his fathers well fitted him as a far-seeing statesman, and anxious career as spokesman for the south in the halls of congress.

Let it be repeated that Jefferson was an ardent unionist. This unconquerable bent was stiffened, over each attack of the abolitionists on the sanctity of that great instrument.

Was Ardent Unionist

We can not wonder that his law-abiding soul was sickened as Garrison called the union a lie, and burnt the document that cost America untold blood, while shouting, "I am for the overthrow of the union." We marvel over his patience when hearing on Giddings' words, "I look to the day when black men, supplied with bayonets, shall wage war or extermination against southern whites"; when Chandler advised blood-letting, else the union not worth a curse.

All these and other rabid utterances, especially that of Seward, with his demand for equality of blacks and white, that meant amalgamation, determined that gentle nature, ever loath to inflict punishment, to advocate secession, peaceful if possible, if not by force. Ask yourself, my reader, had you lived in the south at that time, would you not call his course right, even if not expedient.

Davis' last speech in the United States senate is a model of English and of true patriotism. He showed his soul in these words:

"If there be any sacrifice which I could offer on the altar of my country to heal its present evils, present and prospective, no man has a right to doubt my readiness to heal it. . . . God, who knows the hearts of all men will judge between you and us, at whose door lies the responsibility for this separation."

Later, by telegrams and letters to every Southern senator, he tried to postpone their action, and, when made president of the Confederacy he made every effort to bring about, a peaceful settlement, and even attempted a reconstruction of the Union.

So conciliatory, he was, that the South feared he had been too long among the Yankees. Yet this man, the purest patriot, was later arrested, but never tried for treason, since the decision of the supreme court must have declared him innocent, according to the constitution.

Time Answers Critics

Jefferson Davis, as president of the southern confederacy, has been subjected to bitter criticism, much of which time had proved wrong. He was charged with lack of foresight, in the first year of the war between the states. Recently, as great an authority as Major General Sir Frederick Maurice, in a leeture at Trinity college, England, stated: "All criticisms of Davis' war career must be tempered by conditions of that period at the South. He can not be proved dilatory of inefficiency. Three days after his inauguration he sent Captain Semmes north to secretly buy arms and munitions, but their delivery was blocked by northern blockade. He placed contracts in England, but the British government prevented shipment. When the war broke out, all the cotton crop of 1860-1 had been marketed and there was a cotton glut in Europe, and cotton was being reexported to Northern American ports. Before the crops of 1861-2 could be marketed, the Northern blockade was effective enough to make exportation in bulk impossible. This statement disposes of the charge that Davis neglected to make us of cotton as a factor early in the war.

The same authority pays a sincere tribute to President Davis' foresight and energy. He said: "Jefferson Davis showed great courage and foresight in his conscription draft, and in making it for 12 months instead of 60 days. His main dafficulty was to place the interest of the whole Confederacy against the interest of individual states. He had the genius to create out of several agricultural states a government, an army, a navy, a financial system, organization of munitions and war material. His course for the first year was far more vigorous and effective that of the federal government.

We might say that in addition to all other forces, Davis was fighting a war, in at in the opinion of most of the world, was waged to halt the progress of humanity. This was perhaps his strongest opponent and one that hindered European assistance. The result of my reading of many authorities has convinced the writer of this appreciation of Jefferson Davis, that his failure to win the war was due to a constitutional temperament of a scholar, statesman and idealist, who was unable to inflict rightful punishment on mal-contents, was too loyal to these friends in whom he had confidence, and was, as president of the Confederacy a statesman, instead of a shrewd politician.

All authorities, by written words and verbal praise, attest the bravery, courage, honesty, goodness and greatness of Jefferson Davis. Time has mellowed the judgment of the world. All students of men and history applaud the way that Jefferson Davis strove for the principle of independence during four long, harrowing years. Eleven agricultural states, under his leadership fought against 22 of the greatest industrial states in the world. In this war, President Davis literally made bricks without straw. Several of his most bitter opponents have paid sincere tribute to his fine character and war conduct, saying, "His courage, physical and moral, was of the highest order. He was truthful, fearless, patriotic and chivalrous. His faults were obvious, but his virtues more conspicuous. Had clearness of vision, logic, power of analysis, but he needs to have grappled with men instead of counciliating them. His faults were those of temperament, his virtues those of a kindly heart."

There, with spirit unbroken, he went into business and managed to get along until his last days were practically free from financial worry. As the years passed his hawklike features became venerable and benevolent. He did not become bitter or depressed and while not resigned, with a clear conscience he lived quietly in his beloved southland until death called him in New Orleans in 1889.

The south holds his memory dear, for his service and his martyrdom in prison. They rejoice that time had shown the justice if not expediency of his cause. Thinking people, all over the United States have now to face the problem of a white man country, or amalgamation—a problem that would never have arisen to haunt us with its terror, had the theory of the south and of its great leader, Jefferson Davis, for gradual emancipation been successful. For the war between the states of all frills, it was waged to settle the status of the negro, as ward or citizen.

More and more the intellect of the world has acclaimed the genius of the Confederacy a great leader, Jefferson Davis, who, unlike other great falle nleaders, remained sane, kind and just to the end of his life. A great, good man and an ardent pure patriot. A man of destiny, whose course and character was shaped by heredity, training, environment, conviction, a man whose body was filled with pain from a wound gained in service of his country but a man whose unconquerable will ruled that body and the armies of the southern Confederacy. Honor was his watchword. Courage and Course.

20 Years Ago TODAY

June 3, 1908.

Mrs. M. A. Boyd, who has been visiting relatives at Waco for the past three months, has returned to her home in this city.

W. E. Frieze states that he has practically completed the scholastic enumeration in the Wichita Falls independent school district and that up to date he has listed the names of 1035 children of scholastic age. He is now engaged in making a supplemental list and expects to turn in not less than 1050 names. This is an increase of about 150 over last year. The 1907 census showed an increase of 150 over the previous year.

Mr. Frieze requests that if anyone has been overlooked to please report the fact to him.

Every school child whose name is omitted means a loss of $6.00 to the Wichita Falls schools, and from this fact the importance of a full enumeration will readily be seen.

The complete figures will be published as soon as the enlistment is fully completed.

Between 500 and 1000 Boys and Girls Expected to Be in Seven Daily Vacation Bible Schools

Between 500 and 1000 boys and girls of Wichita Falls will probably be enrolled in a daily vacation Bible school during the next week or two, with three schools having just closed their first week and four others beginning Monday morning.

Nearly 300 children enrolled in the schools of the First Christian, First Methodist and Floral Heights and Floral Heights Baptist churches, during the past week. Classes in Bible and hymn study, memory work, story telling, music, dramatization and handwork are held each morning from Monday to Friday, with competent instructors in charge.

Vacation schools will open this week at the First Baptist, First Presbyterian, First Southern Presbyterian and Highland Heights Baptist churches.

Mrs. K. M. Samuels will be in charge of the school at the First Presbyterian church. Department superintendents are as follows: Mrs. W. M. Snow, junior; Miss Kate Haynes, primary; Mrs. R. P. Willis and Mrs. Stanley McGregor, beginners; Miss Daisy Slopansky, intermediate. The school will continue for three weeks, with daily sessions from 9 to 11:30 each morning, Monday through Friday. Appropriate commencement exercises and an exhibit of all work done will close the school.

Enrollment for the First Baptist school began Friday afternoon with a parade afterward, all the children carrying banners, flags and posters. The school is open to any children of the city, it was announced. Sessions will begin at 9 o'clock Monday morning and continue four weeks, meeting from Monday to Friday. The faculty and workers are planning picnics as well as classes for the children enrolled. J. W. Mason, educational director of the First Baptist church, is principal. Superintendents of departments are as follows: Mrs. E. B. Reeves, beginners; Mrs. C. R. Neal, primary; Mrs. E. C. Ray, junior; Miss Isabel Johnson, intermediate. Boys and girls from four to 16 years of age will be provided for.

The faculties for the Southern Presbyterian and Highland Heights Baptist schools were announced last Monday morning. Miss Elizabeth Harnsberger of Dallas will be in charge of the former, and the Rev. H. J. Ballew, pastor of the church, in charge of the latter.

World's greatest value by this Nationwide Verdict

In all 6-cylinder history there has never been such spectacular acceptance of any car as that which everywhere greets the new Essex Super-Six. It is outselling all other "Sixes", and its own previous records, by such outstanding margins as to leave no doubt of its leadership.

In some places its sales excel its former mark by 100%, 200% and even 300%. In Detroit, for instance, where automobile values are understood better than anywhere in the world, Essex sales have been greater than the next three "Sixes" combined.

Such success can only reflect an accurate and unmistakable public appreciation that Essex is the World's Greatest Value—Altogether or Part by Part—Please Compare.

Plenty of Trials and Tribulations Fall to Lot Muny Zoo Keeper

By FRANK O. HALL

The trials and tribulations of a zoo keeper are many and if you don't believe it just ask Boyd Vardy, keeper at the Wichita Falls Municipal zoo in Scotland park.

Besides having to take care of and please the animals, Mr. Vardy has the difficult task of performing the same functions for the public.

Being a zoo keeper looks easy to many folks as they pass the cages and see him standing there making the coyotes howl, monkeys shriek or lions roar soley for their benefit.

But his duties are many more and it is these harder tasks that the public never sees. Take for instance, cleaning out all the cages at regular intervals, keeping the pens in order, feeding the animals, and doing the general maintenance work.

And then again visitors at the zoo ask countless questions and all must be answered. Needless to say, all of them do not find ready answers.

Certainly there can be nothing more interesting about a zoo than the feeding of the animals, birds and snakes, and to this particular phase of the work the zoo keeper must pay special attention.

Feeding the snakes is probably the hardest job of all, for except in rare instances these must be given food by force. A snake will rarely feed himself after being taken into captivity.

There is, however, one consolation about feeding the snakes. They take food only once every 30 days. One day last week it was feeding time for one of the snakes in the Muny zoo. It was a bull snake and he swallowed an egg which seemed three times as big around as his mouth.

75 Pounds Meat Daily

Despite this he managed to puff and blow until his mouth and throat were large enough to engulf the hen fruit and then forced it down his throat. When the egg reached a distance of about eight inches from his mouth the snake gave a quick, strong jerk, the muscles along his body tightened, and the egg was broken.

It requires 75 pounds of meat to feed the animals in the Wichita Falls zoo every day. Among the animals and birds fed meat are the badgers, foxes, tigers, bob cats, racoons, monkeys, coyotes, bears, lions, owls, ferrets and cranes.

Such animals as the buffaloes, elk, deer, goats and sheep eat hay. It takes one bale every day. About three bushels of oats and 50 loaves of bread are also fed daily. Other articles fed are apples, bananas, onions and wheat.

The squirrels consume between two and three pounds of pecans daily. The parrot eats sun flower seeds.

People may think they alone are cursed with having to take bad tasting medicine but animals in the Muny zoo must undergo the same treatment, according to Mr. Vardy. On Sundays the animals are fed no meat, only bread and other dry food, so that on Monday they will have a good appetite to take their medicine.

It is very hard to keep crows in a zoo and all except one that have been penned there have died. Zoo officials say there is a story, that is believed by many, to the effect that some crow always brings his penned brother crow poisoned spiders or weeds in order that he may die and escape captivity.

"The monkeys attract more attention from visitors than any of the other animals," Mr. Vardy declared. "The people always get a lot of enjoyment out of watching their funny antics."

It might be said here that Mickey, the monkey, and his mate always provide plenty of amusement. But nothing makes Mickey any angrier than to have his mate take the attention of visitors from him. He attempts to protest but she always proves herself the head of the house. He generally retreats to one corner of the cage, washes his hands in a little trough and then tries to exert his authority again. But it is always in vain. She's boss, there is no question about it.

"Many of the animals are hard to please and a great number of them are very particular about the manner in which you treat them," Mr. Vardy says. "But even at that I believe that the public is harder to please."

Tales of Real Dogs

By Albert Payson Terhune

CAESAR, Hero of An Immortal Exploit

This is the story of a wonderful exploit. It happened more than three centuries ago, but its fame has never died down in Europe. Its hero was a greyhound, Caesar by name. He was owned by Baron Kollikoffer, a Swiss nobleman of the sixteenth century.

Perhaps you have seen some of the greyhound races of late years. The dogs are trained to run on a regularly laid out racetrack, with judge's stand and grandstand and paddock and stables, and, in fact, every appurtenance of a regulation track for racehorses. But the greyhound track measures only a quarter-mile in length (440 yards), instead of being a mile track such as horses run on.

These dogs run not only "flat" races, but hurdle races as well. I have seen more than one of them get a spectacular and painful tumble when his foot struck the top of one of these high hurdles in a miscalculated jump. They learn to maneuver for "the pole," too, and for every other advantage of position, etc., as cleverly as would a human jockey. They are running in pursuit of an electrically operated stuffed rabbit.

I have seen a greyhound run around a circular quarter-mile track in precisely twenty-five seconds. That is at a rate of one minute and forty seconds to the mile—not a bad rate of speed. Once in a while, of course, these dog-races are enlivened by a very vehement fight, when one runner happens to jostle another; so they are made to wear muzzles.

I have dwelt to some length on these modern greyhound races, not only because I find them most interesting, but to compare them with the historic race run by Baron Kollikoffer's wonderful greyhound, Caesar, in 1582. Caesar, however, had a far stronger inducement for his race than a mere "electric rabbit."

At that time Henry III was king of France. He was a weak and effeminate man, whose best trait seems to have been his love and understanding of dogs. Switzerland became embroiled in a diplomatic controversy with the French government, and, in the early summer of 1582, Kollikoffer was sent by the Swiss to the French king's court to smooth out the difficulty.

Kollikoffer loved and understood dogs quite as well as did King Henry III. That was one of the reasons he was chosen for so delicate a mission, since he and Henry had so strong a bond in common.

Caesar, a mighty greyhound, was Kollikoffer's favorite dog, and was utterly devoted to his master. The baron did not dare take him along on his mission to France, lest enemies might poison him in order to impede the friendly negotiations between Kollikoffer and that country. So, reluctantly, he left the dog at his castle.

Like a flash he sped over the mountain pass.

The baron gave strict orders to his servants to guard Caesar's welfare in his absence, and told them to keep the dog shut up for a week after Kollikoffer's departure. He was afraid the greyhound might otherwise make some futile effort to follow his master and might thus get lost or stolen.

Caesar seemed to know some misfortune was at hand, for he pressed close to the baron's side, as the latter was about to start on the journey, and had to be carried by force back into the kennel arranged for him. There the dog lay down and moaned and refused to touch food.

For three days he lay thus, moaning and whimpering all the time, neither eating nor sleeping. The servants feared he might grieve himself to death. They thought a part of Caesar's unhappiness might be due to his unaccustomed imprisonment. For, always, the hound had had full freedom until now.

So after three days they let him out of the kennel. Instantly Caesar's manner changed. He frisked about like a happy pup, playing gaily and then begging for food. Nor did he make any attempt to hunt for his master. The great hound was a good actor, as you shall see.

Food was brought to him. He ate heavily and greedily. He was laying up surplus strength for what he had planned to do. Presently he strolled lazily out through the castle gateway, loafing along aimlessly for a hundred yards or so, as if he had no special goal in view.

Then with one wild bound he broke into a breakneck run. The servants shouted and whistled to him, and ran after him. He paid no heed to their calls. Body close to the earth and muscular legs flying, he continued to dash westward over the road his master's traveling coach had taken three days before.

Like a flash he sped along a mountain pass of the Alps, and so out of sight. Nor could the fleetest horses of his pursuers overtake him or even catch his trail. He was gone, presumably gone forever, and the servants dreaded the wrath of the baron at their carelessness in allowing his beloved greyhound to become lost.

Baron Kollikoffer was closeted with King Henry, in earnest conference, in the king's private study at the Louvre, in Paris. There was a sound of turmoil and of scurrying in the guarded stone corridor outside. The heavy curtains of the study's doorway were pushed violently inward. A dog staggered into the room.

It was Caesar. He had made his way, by scent and by his own strange instinct, all the way from his Swiss home to Paris and into the Louvre, searching for his master. Up to the astounded Kollikoffer he reeled, and fell exhausted and panting at the baron's feet. The valiant dog was all-but dead with fatigue and wounds.

He had covered the distance of three hundred miles (and a little more) in precisely twenty-four hours! In other words, for twenty-four hours he had run at an average rate of twelve-and-a-half miles an hour, including river-swimming and mountain climbing and traversing the roughest roads.

No mere race on a smooth track was this, but an unbelievably toilsome gallop in which natural hurdles were many and difficult. More than three hundred miles in one day of twenty-four hours! Do you wonder that all Europe rang with the grand dog's name and fame?

Not only were his feet in terrible condition, but wolves had slashed his fast-galloping body as he sped over the mountain passes. He did not long survive his mighty exertion, but died soon afterward at the feet of the master he had thrown away his life for.

NO SIGN OF FOUL PLAY IN FATAL KANSAS FIRE

COVERT, Kan., June 2. (UP)—Examination of the bodies of the eight members of the Albert Kaiser family who were cremated in fire which destroyed their farm home, disclosed no signs of foul play, Osborne county officials said today.

It was believed the fire started in an oil stove explosion which set the house afire while members of the family slept.

S. Y. Ferguson Approves Veto of McNary Haugen Bill—Democrats Would Make Mistake to Support It

Editor The Times: A few years ago it would have been difficult to find a southern congressman who would not have considered a measure of the quality of the McNary-Haugen bill as an affront not only to his constituents, but as personal to himself, as their chosen representative. But in these times of government aid seeking, we find a large number of men, not only voting for this measure, but berating the president for its veto; when this sensible and reasonable action was the only thing that saved the farmers from the most foolish and obnoxious legislation attempted since the "Force bill" was attempted for supervision of southern elections by the federal government. And it would have been 10 times more obnoxious to our farmers than would the "Force bill," and would also have been administered at their costs.

No man who is willing that the farmers should be, or is unable to understand that they would be exploited and harpied to their ruin, by middle men and exporters, under the operations contemplated and provided for by this measure, is qualified to write the Democratic platform at Houston; and is too foolish or too insincere to properly represent the southern people at Washington. I have no respect much less love, for the Republican party, and while a few men of integrity, for reasons that must have seemed sufficient to them, have associated themselves with such party, this does not alter the facts of its equivocal origin, its associations and its conduct. But granting this, why should it be considered good morals, or even shrewd strategy, to charge the president unfairly? When we charge our enemies unjustly, we make ourselves, not our opponents, seem foolish.

We will not get far or accomplish anything of value for our country, running on the demerits of our opponents, or by adopting in supposed retaliation, their abandoned fallacies. We must offer something more than a promise to "throw the rascals out." A foolish program plays only second fiddle to an admittedly bad one. Men who will lie about their enemies will also lie to their friends, and men who are willing, even for temporary advantage, to lie by word or by implication, are not qualified with the judgement necessary for writing the platform of the Democratic party. When we have charged the Republican party with the truth as evidenced by their conduct, we will have written an indictment they can not satisfactorily answer. We have surely come a long way from our former conception of a government for gentlemen, and are going yet further, unless we put effectively aside these slippery, tricky politicians who have sized up the majority of voters as fanatical, peasant-minded dolts, and are conducting themselves in the manner they conceive as best adapted for catching this support and votes. To those who have minds they can think with, the situation is profoundly discouraging. The farmers have not the time to study out for themselves these questions, and the business men will not; and so we stew in the brew of our own ignorance; while the politicians sit on the fence and watch the cat; which may after all be the only occupation for which they are fitted. For what they have so far tried to do, is for intelligence on par with that of the doctor who bleeds an already depleted and exhausted patient.

It is claimed the farmer has fallen from his former high estate, when he was the aristocrat of his time, and that he is now generally uninformed and largely inarticulate, and is not now qualified to prescribe with judgment and discretion for his ills and his needs. They are also generally in interest, in location and ideas as diverse, it has been, and probably will continue to be, impossible to bring them into a coherent working body, or to assemble their products for effective control.

Any plan contemplated for the farmers' benefit must keep these facts in mind and must be so constructed that it can operate effectively independent of their co-operation, and it must leave them each and all to follow the minutiae of their individual affairs without regulation, penalization or interference of any kind.

The farmer has had small opportunity to learn wisdom, but is not more foolish concerning his own problems, than are his neighbors of other callings.

The drug-store was locked, but a night light burned in the rear. And there she was, fiddling among the shelves, with her face tear-lashed, inspecting the bottle labels marked "POISON".

THE Adelphi drug-store was a splash of white, bright light in the sombre and rather sordid section of town that bordered a district known as "Hell's Kitchen." There is something narrow and sinister and poverty-stricken about the streets thereabouts and the immediate vicinity of the Adelphi drug-store was no exception.

Beginning at dusk, the policeman's nightstick resounds with frequency in these parts and pedestrians somehow have a habit of hurrying along close to the buildings as if seeking their shadows for anonymity.

The Adelphi drug-store enjoyed a large local trade. Its proprietor, Emil Brophy, had conducted business on that corner for seventeen years. Not even the chain drug-store, which had inundated his field meanwhile, had succeeded in driving him out. He sold neither lamp-shades, umbrellas nor fireless cookers. Brophy's Adelphi remained a drug-store in the literal sense of the word. He pounded his own pills in his own mortar; filled his own prescriptions. The only clerk he employed was the white-jacketed one behind the soda-fountain.

The Brophy family lived over the store in the lean-looking, old-fashioned building that had been built probably thirty years before. An elevated train crashed by the sleeping-rooms of the Brophy apartment and there were few modern improvements. Gas light still burned in the dismal hall. The Brophys had a tin tub in their bathroom and Mrs. Brophy was obliged to lug pails of hot water down the interminable length of a long, narrow hall, in order to give the junior Brophys their baths.

The Brophys remained on in this apartment long after the children had become old enough to find the neighborhood socially embarrassing to them and uncomfortably remote from their schools. The family remained on for two reasons. It enabled Emil Brophy to be always within night call of the drug-store. It enabled Mrs. Brophy to be always within day and night call of the drug-store.

THE tale of Miss Wynn was the answer to the circumstance that nobody connected with that drug-store was permitted to sell a poisonous drug; whether it was a carbolic acid solution or a rat-poison, except Mrs. Brophy. It did not matter if the applicant presented a doctor's prescription. There was absolutely no exception to the iron-clad rule of the Adelphi drug-store that all sales of poisonous drugs must be made through Mrs. Brophy.

The case of Miss Wynn was, it is true, only one of hundreds of similar cases that drift along the sinister-looking streets of the region known as Hell's Kitchen. She had applied once at the Adelphi for a rat-poison that had been handed to her by Emil over the counter. It was only after Miss Wynn had been gone for perhaps thirty minutes, and the haunting face of this applicant kept passing and passing across the vision of Emil, that finally, with no more of a clue of his memory than that she had turned to the left, he followed her up.

Just in time, too. Because he stumbled across her . . . accidentally, crouched in a dark doorway, in the very act of tilting the contents of the rat-poison box into her mouth. Ever since then, the Adelphi had kept a strict check-up on its poison-sales.

It was the reason, even when prosperity began to smile upon them to such an extent that they could well have afforded a home of far better environment than the one over the drug-store, that the Brophys continued to dwell in the cramped little flat near Ninth Avenue. By the time Wilma, the eldest Brophy girl was seventeen and at an age when social stratifications meant a great deal to her, it was not without pricks and pangs of consciousness that Mrs. Brophy was able to withstand the importunings of her daughter for better social opportunities.

At seventeen, there was something defiant, angry and frustrated about Wilma. She came home from school each day, as if to enter the sordid portals of this dingy flat she called home was anathema to her. And so it was.

Wilma hated her home. She hated the long, smelling corridors. The bleery landings with the gas light burning on them. The smell of cooking that wafted through these hallways and the narrow, unaesthetic confines of the Brophy flat itself, once you entered it.

Even the boys, at the harum-scarum age when such things did not matter greatly, were loud in their complaints.

But it was Wilma most of all that worried Mrs. Brophy. They had the same dark beauty, Wilma and Mrs. Brophy, except that the mother had broadened and perhaps coarsened with the years until the resemblance was only a fleeting one between the middle-aged complacency of the dark-eyed older woman and the fierce, rather angry beauty of the younger.

There was something tempestuous about Wilma. It made her father sometimes regard her with eyes that were clouded with memories; memories of her mother at that same age.

It was difficult to instill in these growing children of theirs, any of the sense of duty and obligation to the humble service connected with the drug-store. Wilma knew to what extent the little business had expanded; she knew how capable her parents were of providing a wider environment for the family. She knew also, in a vague way, the countless times that the personal interception of her mother had averted the grim story of the tragedy.

She had heard long seances take place in the little living-room, between her mother and the would-be purchasers of the poison wherewith to take human life. Time and time again, Mrs. Brophy had stepped in and saved a customer from the fate of suicide. Wilma knew that; appreciated that; was proud in a vague way of this fine capacity for service which made her mother able to forego so many of the obvious rewards of their prosperity. And yet, in her young heart, Wilma was bitterly ashamed of the role her parent played at assisting her father in clerking in the drug-store.

THE Brophys had been able to provide education for their children in schools far removed from the sordid home-environment. The result was the tragedy of young hearts turning bitter. The Brophy children were ashamed of their home. They were ashamed of their mother, who dispensed drugs across the counter. They were ashamed of their father who could so well have afforded clerks, permitting his wife to act in this humble capacity.

There was canker in the Brophy home. There was canker in the Brophy children. There was canker in the hearts of the two older Brophys as they saw discontent and rebellion creeping in.

A love affair of Wilma's with a son of an eminent Park Avenue surgeon, whom she met while he was home from college on a Christmas holiday vacation, had a great deal to do with the growing unhappiness that was so apparent to Mrs. Brophy when she regarded her girl. Time and time again, in the stormy discussions that took place on the subject, Mrs. Brophy tried to assure Wilma of the grim fact that hers must be a case of unrequited love. If this boy really returned any of the passions that burned in Wilma, he would not let a matter of environment stand in the way of their ultimate happiness, Mrs. Brophy took pains to express to her daughter over and over again. But to Wilma, the sole reason of this youth's failure to capitulate to her, lay in the social chasm that divided them. She had been ashamed to bring him to her home. She had seen the wonder and disgust on his face at her surroundings. Openly and bitterly, Wilma blamed her mother.

And that almost killed Mrs. Brophy; terrified and wounded her to such an extent that deep down in her heart, there stirred the beginnings of her capitulation.

After all, Wilma must come first. When she confided that to her husband, he looked at her with pity in his eyes, but said nothing. It was a matter for Mrs. Brophy to fight out for herself. Whether she would desert the tragic procession that filed through that drug-store, wanting poisonous drugs, or whether she would fail the insistent demands of her children.

Wilma was not there. The bed-clothes had been hastily flung aside and she had apparently slid into her slippers, which were gone from the bedside. When a search of the apartment failed to reveal her, Mrs. Brophy tiptoed downstairs into the drug-store. It was locked, but a night light burned in the rear. There, fiddling among the shelves was Wilma with her face tear-lashed, inspecting the bottles that had labels marked "POISON."

There ensued between mother and daughter one of those tragic, hysterical scenes of unrestrained emotion that can seem to tear the heart out by the roots. Straining her frightened, repentant, terrified daughter to her, Mrs. Brophy reiterated again and again and again the story of Miss Wynn. Only this time, Mrs. Brophy, in the agony and the ecstacy of holding her repentant daughter to her, sobbed out one aspect of the story that had never been told before.

Mrs. Brophy had been Miss Wynn.
