Gray cuts library funding in half

By PAUL PINKHAM
Senior Staff Writer

A "disturbed" Gray County Judge Carl Kennedy offered Lovett Library supporters a bit of fund-raising advice Friday.

"Why not ask the court-appointed attorneys for a little contribution," Kennedy told Librarian Dan Snider of Pampa and library supporter Ruth Magee of McLean.

Snider and Magee were on hand to ask for continued county help in funding the two libraries. Eventually commissioners agreed to fund the two libraries at $5,600 — half of what county contributed from revenue sharing funds last year.

But the library request came immediately after commissioners deferred action on yet another demand for payment from attorney John Warner, appointed to represent Kevin Kirkham, currently serving 10 years in prison for burglary.

Warner has sued the county twice in 223rd District Court for failing to pay him in another court-appointed case involving Richard Schreckhise, who is serving a life sentence for murder. He claims the county owed him $13,000 for Schreckhise's original case and $7,000 for handling the killer's appeal.

The $13,000 claim is currently pending before the Seventh Court of Appeals in Amarillo, and District Judge Don Cain on Wednesday ordered the county to pay Warner's $7,000 claim.

Warner's bill for defending Kirkham, who did not go to trial, was about $2,000. Kennedy recommended that commissioners defer action until they can determine the bill's "reasonableness."

Kennedy attended Wednesday's hearing before Judge Cain and told commissioners Friday that Warner's argument was "sad to listen to.

"I wish you could have been there to hear the pathetic arguments that man made to the judge" to justify a $7,000 fee, Kennedy said. "It's just one absurd statement after another."

Warner has argued that the district judge has discretion to set attorneys fees, not the Commissioners Court, unless the fees are blatantly unreasonable. His bills reflect a rate of $75 per hour, $25 less than his $100 rate for private clients, Warner maintains.

"If (the judge) had awarded me $500 an hour, that would have been unreasonable," the attorney had argued in district court.

Kennedy said he is "disturbed" by the amounts of court-appointed attorneys' fees submitted in recent months. The commissioners have refused to pay several attorneys for their court-appointed work.

The only protection taxpayers have if district judges have sole discretion over attorney fees is to

Pampans awarded Silver Beaver

Two longtime Pampa-area Boy Scouters were honored with Silver Beaver Awards Friday for their years of service during the first-ever recognition banquet of the Golden Spread Council of the Boy Scouts of America.

The banquet, held at M.K. Brown Auditorium, was the first since the merger last fall between the Adobe Walls Council of Pampa and the Llano Estacado Council of Amarillo.

Pampans Gordon Fore and David Holt and six others received Silver Beaver awards, scouting's highest honor.

Fore, assistant scoutmaster for Pampa Troop 416, works with the Kiowa District and is involved with Boy Scout leader training. He has served as Order of the Arrow adviser and district advancement chairman and is a vigil member of the Order of the Arrow, holds the Scouters Training Award and has been awarded the district award of merit from the Kiowa District.

He is an elder at First Presbyterian Church in Pampa, a Mason and teaches first aid, multi-media and CPR with the Pampa chapter of the American Red Cross. He is also active in projects at Camp M.K. Brown, near Mobeetie.

Holt, a member of Troop 480 and Webelos leader in Pack 410, has served as vice president of the Adobe Walls Council and has been the council's legal counsel for the past six years. He is on the executive committee of the new Golden Spread Council.

County officials decline to discuss claimed damages

By PAUL PINKHAM
Senior Staff Writer

After meeting for more than an hour behind closed doors, Gray County commissioners voted Friday to wait until March 12 before taking action on a Pampa salvage lot owner's demand for $170,000 in damages.

Commissioners met with District Attorney Guy Hardin and Sheriff Rufe Jordan in executive session for about 75 minutes Friday before deciding to wait a month to take any action on a letter from attorneys for Woody and Andrea Mitchell, owners of Crossroads Auto Salvage, 120 S. Hobart.

Neither Hardin nor Jordan had any comment following the closed-door pow-wow.

Mitchell, of 1105 Christine, was arrested late in 1985 in connection with an alleged auto theft ring that authorities said stretched from Amarillo to the Dallas-Fort Worth area. Vehicle identification numbers were allegedly being transferred from wrecked vehicles at Mitchell's yard to vehicles reported stolen from Garland, a Dallas suburb, according to officers who raided the salvage lot.

Former Assistant District Attorney David Hamilton, whom Hardin fired Dec. 3, seized the salvage lot early last year, claiming it was being used as a "criminal instrument." The property was returned to the Mitchells in December after Hardin dismissed all charges in the case, saying he had insufficient evidence to prosecute.

Mitchell's letter, signed by Amarillo attorney Robert Garner, lists 111 items that the Mitchells say have disappeared from their property "due to theft, misappropriation or confiscation." It accuses Hamilton of being overzealous in conspiring "with others to bring about his fiasco" and claims the county was responsible for Hamilton's actions.

Hamilton, now a prosecutor in Lubbock, has said the case involving Crossroads was solid.

The letter demands payment of $170,000 in damages or, it says, the county will be sued in federal court for $1.25 million.

County Judge Carl Kennedy told commissioners Friday that Mitchell's letter is a formal demand for settlement, required by law before a public body can be sued. Kennedy said he turned a copy of the letter over to Duncan Insurance Agency, the county's liability insurance carrier.

Kennedy said he does not feel the county is liable for Hamilton's actions.

"But that's just my opinion," he warned. "It's not worth two cents."

Although District Attorney Hardin is paid by the state, his employees, including his assistant, are paid by the county.

Commissioners agreed to decide March 12 whether to hire a lawyer to advise them on the letter. Kennedy said the potential suit is beyond the scope of County Attorney Robert McPherson's duties.

Garner also says in the letter that he feels the county could begin good-faith bargaining by "admitting liability for the acts and conduct of David Hamilton" and making "apologies to Mr. and Mrs. Mitchell for permitting his improprieties to run rampant."

City races get crowded as deadline nears

Reed seeks re-election

By LARRY HOLLIS
News Editor

Ward 3 City Commissioner Joe Reed, who filed for election to a second term last week, said he decided to run again "to maintain the integrity of our five-year program."

Reed, 27, who has lived in Pampa all his life except for two years in Lubbock, said he wants to see the economic development goals set by the commission implemented over the next several years.

He said the main economic development goals include the Main Street Program, Texas Cities for Economic Leadership (TEXCEL), search for quality water resources and completing repairs to city services.

"These goals, I feel, must be seen through," Reed said. "They've been started; they must be finished or it's been a waste of money."

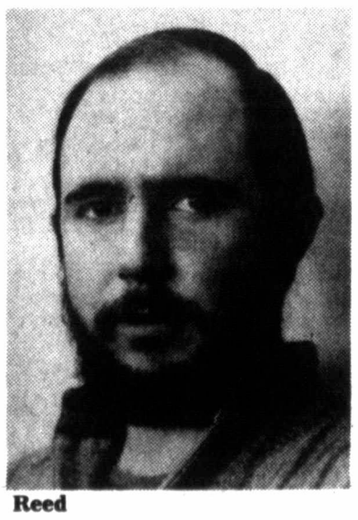

Reed added that he would be "very disappointed to see these programs go down the drain."

He said the programs have long-range benefits that would make Pampa more attractive to business and industry in aiding the economic climate. He said the Main Street and TEXCEL programs "will bring diversity so that we won't be so dependent" on the variable petroleum industry.

"Our search for good, quality water" and completing repairs to city services — streets, water, sewer systems, the wastewater plant — are also a part of the economic development goals, he said, since they make the city a better place for residents and business.

Reed disputed claims that the current City Commission has not been responsive to citizens.

"We've had a lot of hollering lately that citizens don't have a voice in city government," he said.

Reed said that under the city charter, the commission sets policies and hires a city manager to implement the policies and run

Elliott files in Ward 1

By LARRY HOLLIS

With the deadline for filing for city elections only four days away, the list of candidates continued to swell last week.

Joining the rank of office-seekers Friday was Elliott's Glass and Home Center owner Ken Elliott, who has filed for the Ward 1 city commissioner post.

He is the second candidate to file for that post. Ray Hupp, an IRI International vice president, also has made a bid for the Ward 1 post.

Three candidates are seeking the mayor's job being vacated by incumbent Mayor Sherman Cowan. Those who filed for post so far are Gene Finney, Paul Cadena and David McDaniel. McDaniel resigned from his Ward 2 commission seat to seek the mayoral post.

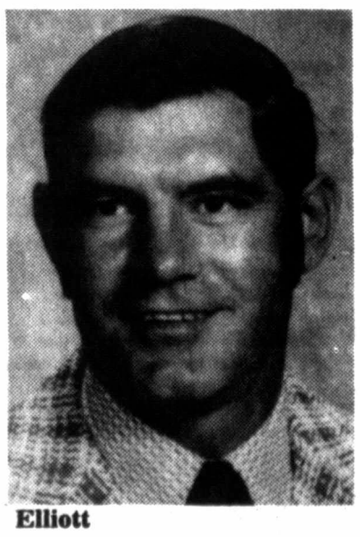

Elliott, who grew up in the Broken Arrow, Okla., area, where he graduated from high school, has been a resident of Pampa for 20 years.

"We are currently in a seriously depressed economic situation," Elliott said, "and once again we must all begin working together to get Pampa back on the right track."

Elliott said he does not believe that "unnecessary spending of hard-earned tax dollars on just any and all problems is necessarily the magic cure-all."

He said he feels some "belt-tightening" is needed in city government in view of the depressed local economy. "As each one of us has been required to make living adjustments, so must our city government, too."

He also expressed reservations about the current city commissioners' policy of issuing certificates of obligation, "thereby placing us taxpayers further in debt by circumventing a bond issue election and eliminating the opportunity of the taxpayers to speak out."

"The voice of the taxpayer is the one that should be heard and followed," Elliott contended.

Elliott also said he feels "too many of our local tax dollars have left our community in the form of out-of-town contracts and expenses," adding that he firmly believes local government should "shop Pampa first" for all available contracts and services.

He said that if an occasion arises when a study is needed by the local governing body, then local citizens should be used more. "Pampa is blessed with an abundance of well-informed, well-educated citizens that would make their time and energy available to help our community," Elliott said.

Elliott supports more citizen involvment as being "essential to any governing body." Without that involvement, city government "will be more accessible to make unnecessary and sometimes foolish errors," he claimed.

He said as a commissioner he intends to urge all citizens to become more involved in local government, to contact their commissioners or mayor, and to "make their feelings known."

Elliott said he recommends that citizens form committees "and put forth their recommendations to the local government, for this will be of great assistance to the city commissioners and will not cost the taxpayers one dollar."

The candidate said he was also "seriously concerned" about the present commission's attitude "concerning not only taxpayers and citizens' rights but those of our city employees."

"All people should be subjected to the same rules, and we are protected by our Constitution concerning many of these," Elliott said. "Let's not forget that the elected officials are servants of the people, and not the reverse."

Elliott said he feels everyday management of the city should be carried out "with the utmost courtesy and respect to everyone it touches." He added that he also believes all records not protected by law should be made available to the public "in an accurate, expedient and pleasant manner."

He said he will enter into every city issue with an open mind and will solicit the thoughts and suggestions of the taxpayers "and then make my decision pertaining to city business."

Elliott said, "I fear we are seeing the beginning of some very serious city tax increases, and I will oppose these and any other tax increase until I am totally convinced that there are absolutely no areas left to cut in city government spending."

He said he would use his years of business and management experience "to be a servant of Pampa and to give every individual that same courtesy and respect that I desire in return."

Elliott said no one decision is always right for all the people all the time. "To refuse to admit errors in judgment is an admission of arrogance," he said. "I pledge not to bring this flaw to the City Commission, and I will admit errors when they are made."

For the past 10 years Elliott and his wife Carolyn have owned and operated Elliott's Glass and Home Center in Pampa. Their daughter Kim is a Pampa High School graduate, and their son Mike is a sophomore at the high school.

Elliott graduated from the University of Topeka in Kansas and then gained employment with Skelly Oil Co. in Pampa, where he worked in engineering, supervisory and management fields before opening Elliott's Glass.

Reed

the administrative end of city government.

Reed supported City Manager Bob Hart's implementation of city policies.

"He's doing what he's told to do," carrying out policy set by the commission, Reed said.

"The commission makes decisions and policy rules based on recommendations from citizens' public input groups," Reed said, noting that the present commission has expanded the number of citizen advisory boards to bring more citizen involvement into city decisions.

These advisory boards include the Planning and Zoning Commission, the Board of Adjustments, the Traffic Commission, the Plumbing and Mechanical Board, the M.K. Brown Auditorium Board, the Board of Adjustments, the Electrical Board and the Parks and Recreation Advisory Board, he explained.

Reed said he prefers to call these advisory boards "citizen input boards." He said citizens wanting to serve on any of the boards are invited to request a board position when a vacancy occurs. And even if a citizen is not a member of the board, "anyone can make recommendations before them," he said.

"The present open-door policy allows citizens to bring up non-agenda items" at City Commission meetings, too, Reed said. He added that despite what some have claimed, the commissioners do consider those comments.

"If a citizen has a problem, he is more than welcome to come to our evening commission meetings and speak on any issue at hand," Reed said.

He said he also wants residents "to feel free to call the mayor, any commissioner or any other city official "any time." He said that applies to him. "If available, I'm always free to talk," Reed said. "If I'm by the phone, I've always got time to talk."

"It has always been my belief that the benefit of the city can only be achieved with the active involvement of the citizens," Reed added.

The advisory boards have been established "in an attempt to get that citizen input," he said.

"If anyone has something to say, we'll listen," Reed said, noting that decisions cannot always satisfy every citizen because of the diversities of opinions that exist. It's the commission's responsibility to receive the input and then make the decision based on its judgments and analyses of what is best for the city as a whole, he said.

Reed is the owner of Sir Plus, a surplus store in downtown Pampa. He also is in the oilfield equipment business, leasing through Tex-O-Kan Transportation Co.

He and his wife Toni have two children, P.J., 4, and Teresa, 3.

Officer suspended for threats

DALLAS (AP) — A police officer was suspended because he threatened to arrest a ticket scalper who tried to charge him $50 for a $16.50 ticket to a sold-out basketball game, officials said.

The officer was suspended for 16 days, which equates to 20 eight-hour working days. The officer was off-duty when the incident occurred before a November game between the Dallas Mavericks and the Los Angeles Lakers.

Michael A. Hackbarth, 29, who joined the force three years ago, was suspended without pay for violating a city policy that prohibits an officer from using his position to secure special privileges, according to police Internal Affairs administrative officer Jim Chandler.

Middle school students garnering top honors Feb. 7 were Misty Caviness, Leslie Forister, Wendy Jenkins, Gina Barnett, Ladonna Sumpter and Connie Rutledge, flutes; basoonist Martha Ledford; clarinets: Becky Whitley, Terrina Anderson, Monica Hokit and Michelle Luster; bass clarinets: Anthony Gilbreath and Carmen Nowka.

And Alto saxophone: Steven Menkhoff, Adam Theis, Andy Utzman and John Hollingsworth; tenor saxophone: Ryan Parnell and Ginter Meers; baritone saxophone: Shannon Harper and Steve Hawkins; French horn: Tamara Lane and Shannon Harper; cornet: Troy Avendanio, Matt Hawkins, Kurt Krause, Tarin Peet, Aaron Rainey, Jeremy Stone and Brandon Wood; trombone: Jason Sellers and Richie Thompson; baritone: Troy Black; tuba: Larry Anderson; percussion: Regina Caldwell, Donnie Medley and Doug Williams.

Ensembles garnering superior ratings were the trumpet trio of Stephen Winton, Kelly Hickman and Kevin Hunt and the trombone trio of Jeff Lane, John McGrath and John Sturgil. Brass and woodwind choirs also got top ratings.

PHS choral students earned 36 Division 1 honors. The contest is divided into three groups, with Class 1 being the most difficult.

Class 1 winners were Benita Rogers, Kathy Smith, Ricky Chapman, Joanna Hagerman, Donnie Berry, Chris Wilson, Cyndi Epperly, Anissa Bradsher, Kenny Steward and Brian Hogan.

Class 2 winners were Valerie Anderson, Julie Enloe, John Hazle, Ronnie Berry, Sherry Raines, Leslie McQueen, Sheryl Williamson, Grant Peurifoy.

Class 3 winners were Denyse Doss, Chris Hite, Tracy Cochran, Jennifer Follis, Corey Coon, Tracy Baumgardner, Krystal Keys, Angie Harvey, Greg Wilson and Dawn Parrish.

Class 1 ensemble winners were Cyndi Epperly, Marla Jett and Kathy Smith, trio; Anissa Bradsher, Julie Enloe, and Leslie McQueen, trio; Benita Rogers, Lori Helton and MaLori Davis, trio; Brian Hogan, Kenny Steward, Chris Wilson and Chris Gustin, quartet; Cyndi Epperly, Anissa Bradsher, Marla Jett, Leslie McQueen, Joanna Hagerman, Kathy Smith; Leslie Knox, Dina Olsen, Grant Peurifoy, Ricky Chapman, Chris Gustin, Kenny Steward, Brian Hogan, Cannon Allen, Chris Wilson and Donnie Berry, madrigal.

Top Class 1 ensembles were Mark Wood, Mark Bridges, Greg Wilson and Corey Coon, quartet; Angie Harvey, Krystal Keyes, Dawn Parrish, Tracy Cochran and Jana Kitchens, quintet.

Top Class 3 ensemble was Tracy Baumgardner, Jennifer Follis, Diana Campbell, Geneva Villareal, Mary Farrington and Sherry Raines, sextet.

The Division 1 winners will compete at the regional level in the spring. Winners there will compete in the UIL state solo and ensemble contest in June.

Pampa High School senior Dustin Parks won a bronze medal in science while the PHS Academic Decathlon team took third in the Super Quiz at the Regional Academic decathalon meet recently at Lubbock Estacado High School.

The Academic Decathlon features competition in six categories: math, science, fine arts, social studies, grammar, literature and economics. Contestants must show their muster through six tests, an essay, two speeches and an interview.

Six members made up the PHS Superquiz team. They are Parks, Kambra Winningham, Jay Taparia, Todd McElrath, Albert Hernandez and David Bressler.

PHS chemistry teacher Janelle Bohon explained that Superquiz participants must answer questions on a score sheet in front of an audience.

"You have to go on a gym floor with an audience in the stands," she said. "You're under a lot of pressure."

"But we were very happy with the results because we were a 4A school competing against 5A schools," Bohon said.

Three students, Gail Lynch, Brook McNeely and Amanda Coleman made the alternate Academic Decathlon team.

Jurors indict twelve

Two men arrested on burglary charges last month after police reportedly traced footprints from the Catfish Junction restaurant to a duplex on South Barnes were among 12 people indicted by a 31st District grand jury Friday.

Grand jurors also handed down one sealed indictment. District Clerk Vickie Walls said she could release no information about the sealed indictment Friday night.

Johnny Gaines, 22, of 825 S. Barnes, was indicted six times on charges of burglary of a building and once for burglary of a motor vehicle. 223rd District Judge Don Cain set bond on each charge at $5,000.

Cain sat in for 31st District Judge Grainger McIlhany who was hospitalized at Wheeler's Parkview Hospital after collapsing at his home in Wheeler earlier in the week.

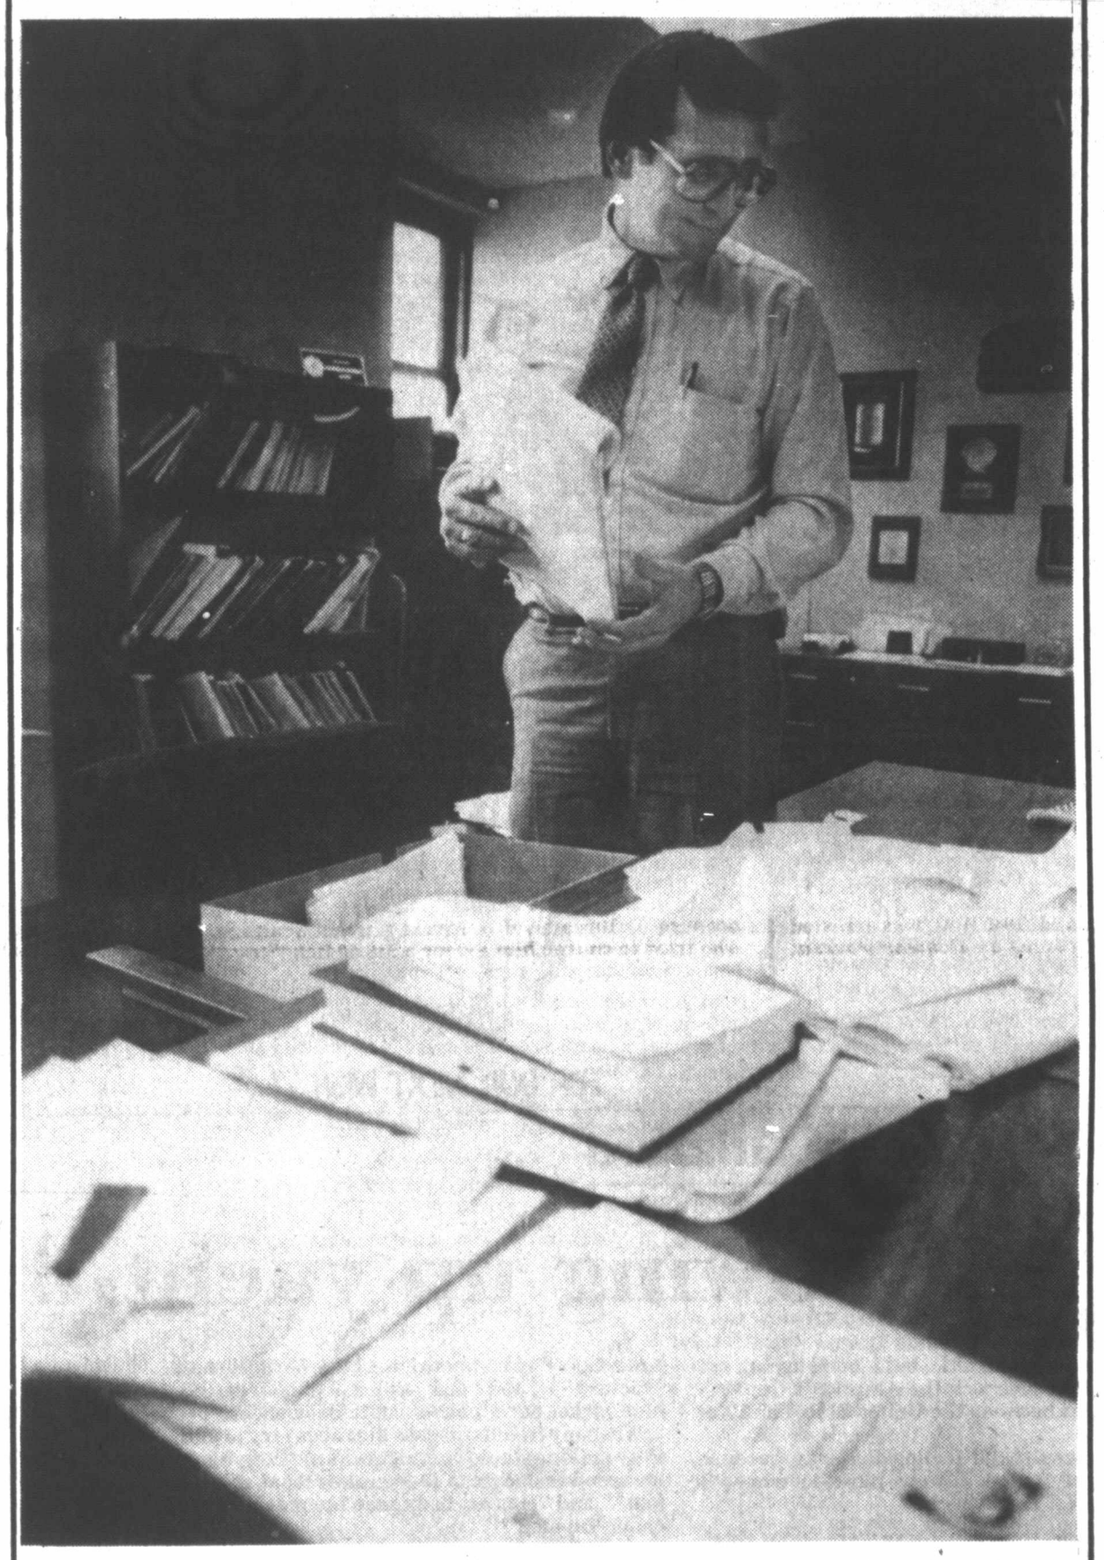

Richard Gaines, 23, of Clarendon, also was indicted twice on burglary of a building charges and had his bond set at $5,000 on each charge.

Police arrested the pair Jan. 13 after officers said they tracked footprints from the ransacked Catfish Junction restaurant, 723 E. Frederic, to Johnny Gaines' South Barnes apartment. Police said they recovered more than $13,000 worth of merchandise from various county and city burglaries.

Also indicted Friday were:

- Dimetri Coursey, unauthorized use of a motor vehicle, $1,000 bond.
- Jerry Ingram, burglary of a building, $1,500 bond.
- Albert Gormany, criminal trespass, $2,000 bond.
- Anthony Santa Cruz, burglary of a building, $5,000 bond.
- Kenneth Dean, forgery by passing, $1,500 bond.
- Lloyd Kenneth French, possession of marijuana, $5,000 bond.
- Sammy Doyle, burglary of a building, $2,500 bond.
- David Ray Fricks, driving while intoxicated-third offense, $2,000 bond.
- Patrick Gibson, burglary of a building, $500 bond.

Ryzman departs

Police Chief J.J. Ryzman cleans out his office Friday, his last day on the job. Ryzman resigned to take the chief's job in Corsicana near Dallas. He had served with the Pampa Police Department 17 years. Lt. Jesse Wallace was named interim chief until a permanent replacement is hired. City Manager Bob Hart has said he hopes to hire a new chief by April 15.

Lefors keeps $75 fee for driver's education

By LARRY HOLLIS
News Editor

LEFORS — Students taking driver's education in Lefors this summer will be able to do so without a fee increase.

The Lefors Independent School District board of trustees Thursday night decided to keep the fee at $75, the same as last year.

The district had raised the fee two years ago after the state eliminated its funding to support driver's education programs in secondary schools.

Superintendent Earl Ross made the recommendation to keep the fee at the same rate, saying that amount should be enough to cover instructor's pay and gasoline purchases. He said he expects about 15 students to enroll for the course.

Ross said he is still trying to line up an instructor and arrange leasing of a car for the program.

In other matters, Business Manager Rodney Howard presented a report on property tax collections to date.

Howard said that as of Jan. 31 about $944,000 had been received, accounting for 89 percent of the assessed property taxes. He noted tax payments are now considered to be delinquent after Jan. 31.

Tax payments have been coming in slowly since that date, but he expected most would be collected by the end of the school year.

Howard said the revenue collected to date is keeping the district's finances in good shape in relation to the budget. He noted other revenue has come from state funds, fees and other sources.

Principal Bill Crockett said he had received a request from the Student Council to sponsor a "powderpuff" football game for high school girls as a fund-raising project. He said the game, to be held some night later in the spring, would require the use of the football field.

The school board gave their permission for the game.

Ross said he had received a letter from an Amarillo law firm offering a school law seminar that would provide credit toward the 20 hours of training required for school board members by the state. The cost would be $40, he noted.

The board also extended Principal Crockett's contract for a year at a salary of $40,000.

vote the judges out of office but "we haven't seen any opponents in many years," Kennedy said.

"I just don't really understand why we're getting these kind of billings," he said. "Whether you win or lose, the taxpayers are going to lose and that disturbs me."

Commissioners received letters Friday from two attorneys who recently had their bills turned down or deferred.

Shamrock attorney Jim Fling formally demanded payment of his $4,950 bill plus $24.75 interest from Nov. 24 or, he said, the county "may become liable for additional attorneys' fees for collection."

Fling represented Deborah Etheredge, wife of Bethany Trust and Co. founder Thomas Etheredge. Mrs. Etheredge's cases were eventually dismissed.

Etheredge's attorney, John Mann of Amarillo, wrote to request a copy of any specific policy the county has on paying court-appointed fees. His $8,800 bill also was not paid by commissioners.

Mann said he has been appointed to represent another criminal defendant in Gray County but wants to find out the county policy before going any further with the case.

Commissioners agreed to send him a copy of the statute detailing payment of attorney fees.

In agreeing to funding totaling half of what libraries in Pampa and McLean have received previously, commissioners left open the possibility of giving the libraries more at the end of the year, if funds are available.

County Clerk Wanda Carter said she anticipates some savings in her budget as a result of computerization in her office. She said she does not know how much it will be "but I'd be happy to have it go there (to the libraries)."

Snider said following the decision that the county funding will help allay 8 percent cuts the city of Pampa is making in all budgets, including the library's.

Magee said she would have liked to have received the full amount but would accept what the county offered.

Under the agreement, the Pampa library will receive $3,350, while the McLean library will get $1,250.

Magee said negotiations are continuing with the McLean Independent School District to determine if the school and city can run the library jointly. She said she doesn't know if regulations will permit such an arrangement.

"That's going to be a long process," she said. "It makes sense but that doesn't always mean you can make it happen."

Southern Baptists could split

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Southern Baptists could split over friction between fundamentalists and moderates unless they accept recommendations by a committee seeking to resolve tensions, the president of the North Carolina Baptist State Convention says.

Bill Poe, a Charlotte lawyer and a member of the Southern Baptist Convention's Peace Committee, said the strife could come to a head at the convention's annual meeting in June.

"I think the St. Louis meeting is going to be the crisis point in the convention," he told The Charlotte Observer. "If the Peace Committee report gets shot down and nothing comes out that is harmonious, I think there will clearly be some splinter groups coming out of St. Louis."

EVER STRIVING FOR TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Meese loses grip on basic freedoms

On June 13, 1966, in Miranda vs. Arizona, the Supreme Court barred the use of evidence of any statements stemming from the interrogation of persons in custody unless those persons had been told of their rights to remain silent and to have assistance of counsel and had been allowed to exercise those rights if they wished to do so.

Law enforcement agencies long ago accommodated themselves to those requirements; any 6-year-old who has ever watched a TV cop show probably can recite: "You have the right to remain silent. . ." Though the Miranda rule is now established as a basic American right, many law enforcement officials oppose it, arguing that it hinders criminal investigations.

Attorney General Edwin Meese agrees. He has attacked the ruling in a long law-review article, which is expected to be published this year, and he probably will seek a Supreme Court review if an appropriate case comes before the court.

Meese and other opponents of the ruling argue that criminals are less likely to confess their crimes and provide other critical information when informed that they have the right to remain silent and to have counsel and that their statements may be used against them in court.

They are absolutely right. The rules fixed by the court for in-custody interrogation make the work of the police more difficult. The same can be said of the rule that forbids searching a house without a warrant. Or the rule that forbids use of the thumbscrew. Constraints upon the police are constraints upon enforcement of the law.

And that is as it should be. The men who wrote the Constitution were prepared to accept a measure of risk to public safety for the sake of protecting the rights of the individual. They did not, as Justice Brandeis once remarked, exalt order at the cost of liberty.

It's a notion that Attorney General Meese seems to have trouble accepting.

The Miranda ruling has been misused on occasion, though it hardly seems likely that American cops, because of Miranda, are in full-scale retreat from their ongoing battle with the robbers. Effective law enforcement does not depend on sweating out a confession from a defendant ignorant of his rights and without the assistance of counsel promised him by the Constitution.

The police can live with Miranda, as they have for more than two decades. They can rely on good and thorough police work to suppress crime. And the attorney general surely can find better things to do than seek the repeal of what has been accepted as a basic American right.

Firms' pullout hurts blacks

Last summer, taking a position opposing U.S. economic sanctions against and disinvestment from South Africa began to be seen as a pro-government, pro-apartheid position. That's stupid. It's like labeling a physician who is against chemotherapy, pro-cancer.

Many congressmen, pandering for the black vote, voted to prohibit new investment in South Africa and new loans to its government, and to impose bans on the importation of its coal, iron, steel, textiles, uranium and agricultural products. We speculate that congressional concern with human rights violations in South Africa and indifference to the violations in places like Cambodia and Afghanistan, derives from the insignificance of the Cambodian and Afghan vote in America.

Crusaders never look back; they just move on to their next act of goodness, but I'm going to ask them to look back. Several major U.S. firms have pulled out of South Africa, citing sanctions and economics as the reasons. Of course, these and other firms did not remove their buildings and other assets. They were sold to white South Africans at bargain basement prices. According to a Philadelphia Inquirer story, white investors have made millions buying the assets of 75 U.S. firms that pulled out. One South African said, "You can double your money overnight."

While sanctions and disinvestment have produced a short-term boom for whites, blacks are suffering. The social and educational programs provided for blacks by U.S. firms are drying up. Black unemployment, already estimated at 3 million, is rising. When some of these effects of economic sanctions are mentioned, some sanctions supporters say, "Losing a job is a small price to pay for freedom!" I've asked those people, "Are you willing to give up your job until South African blacks are free?" I don't have to tell you the answer. Furthermore, if South African blacks didn't think working for Kodak or IBM was an attractive alternative, they wouldn't show up for work.

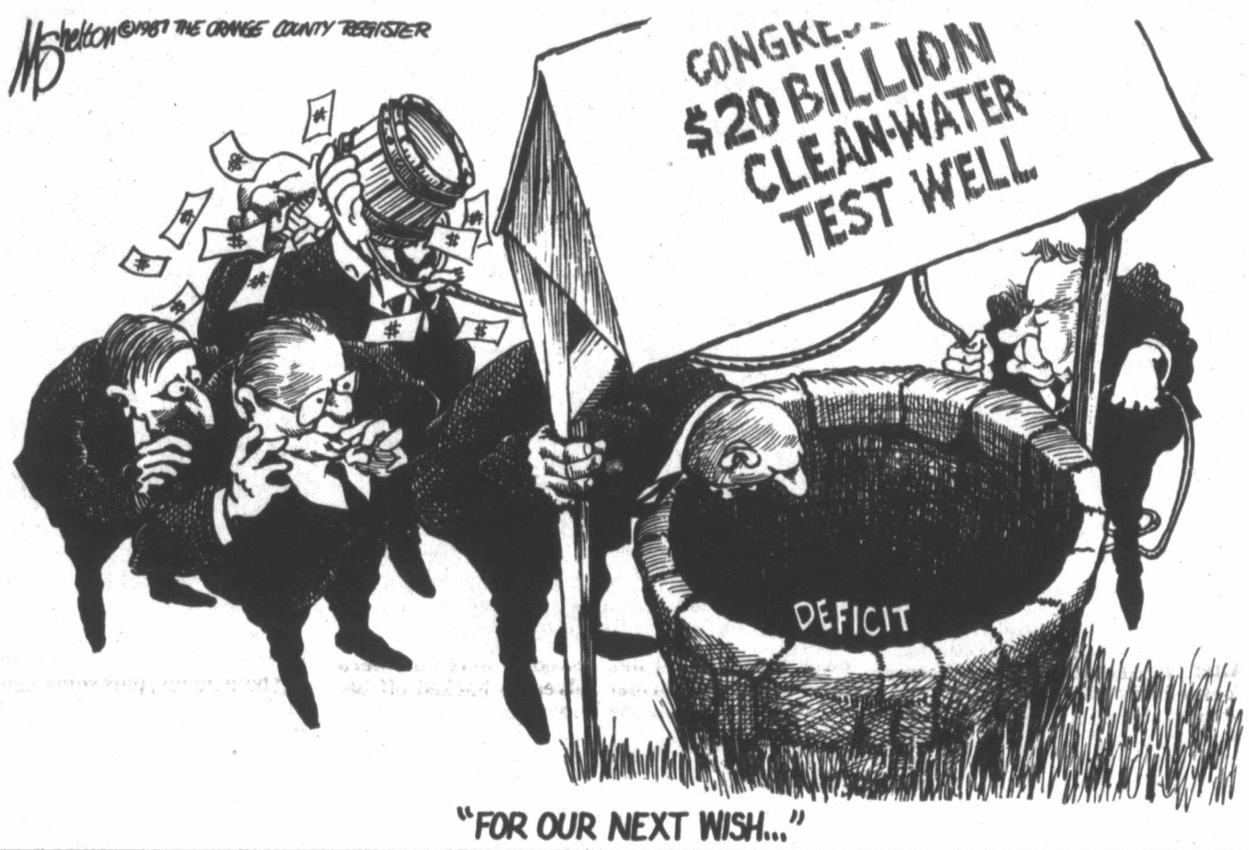

Another effect of sanctions has been a reduction in the pace of reforms and talk of reforms (such as repeal of the Group Areas Act). Kenneth Mason, executive director of the American Chamber of Commerce in South Africa, said, "Why should the government push ahead for change? There's no U.S. leverage anymore." Many white government opponents are less vocal in their opposition after the U.S. imposition of sanctions. That's always the case. If we were under siege, Reagan would find less vocal opposition.

Early evidence shows that sanctions have not helped South African blacks. Government intransigence and power have grown as a result. This may be the hidden agenda behind the sanctions and disinvestment movement. These people would like to see destabilization leading to a one-man dictatorship controlled by Moscow. The call for one-man, one-vote in a unitary state would turn out to be: one-man, one-vote, one-time, like most other states on the continent.

An attempt to violently overthrow the South African government would be suicidal. While the government might go down in revolution, it is militarily strong enough to make it a decades-long process costing millions upon millions of lives — black and white.

To promote any hope of a peaceful resolution, we must repeal economic sanctions against South Africa so Americans can invest as much as possible in South Africa. American actions that promote robust market forces are a far more formidable enemy of apartheid than sanctions and disinvestment.

Growing up yacht-deprived

It was a bit unpatriotic, but I found myself not giving a hoot who won the America's Cup, the yacht races between the United States and Australia.

It has been tough feeling this way because many of my fellow citizens have developed a keen interest in the event.

Just a short time ago, there were Super Bowl parties all over the country. Then suddenly, people were giving America's Cup parties and standing around in front of television sets actually watching reruns of the races.

They were saying things like. "What marvelous tacking!" and chanting, "USA! USA! USA!" as they lifted their glasses of champagne.

Not only were the races televised, but I picked up my morning newspaper and the America's Cup was the lead story in the sports section.

I got complete coverage of a yacht race going on 6,000 miles away, but I could find not one word on the results of the wrestling matches the evening before.

Frankly, I felt like an outcast throughout the America's Cup competition. I have no idea what "tacking" is, and I don't own a double-breasted blue jacket nor a pair of white deck shoes.

When my friends discuss the races I try to join in by making stupid comments like, "How much horsepower does it take to make a boat go that fast?" and "Has anybody seen the movie, 'Crocodile Dundee'?"

I've even tried to learn to say, "G'day, mate," but my Australian is terrible.

The truth be known, I think the main reason I have no interest in the America's Cup is I come from a yact-deprived background. We didn't have yachts when I was growing up and neither did anybody else in the community.

The Wardlaws had a flatbottom for fishing for mudcats on Stickweed Pond, but that was about it, boatwise.

As I grew older I began to realize that growing up yacht-deprived could hurt me in later life.

I said to my mother, "Do you realize I'm 15 years old, and we still don't have a yacht?"

I could sense my mother realized how such a thing could set me back socially, but what could she do on a first-grade teacher's salary?

"Son," she said to me, "why don't you go over to the Wardlaws and paddle around in Stickweed Pond?"

Although I grew up yachtless, I still can look back on my youth and count the many blessings I actually did have.

We may not have had a yacht, but my grandfather had a mule and I could ride her any time I pleased.

My mother bought a 1948 Chevrolet in 1955, which she traded in 1960 for a 1955 Chevy. It was green and had four doors and no radio.

In 1962, I turned 16 and got my driver's license. I asked Kathy Sue Loudermilk, the community sex symbol, for a date.

We drove the green '55 over to Stickweed Pond after the movie and parked.

Kathy Sue taught me things that night I did not know existed nor would have believed physically possible.

After that, I lost all interest in yachts and to this day, believe it or not, I still don't own one.

In the meantime, when does baseball season start again?

Immigration law shows its true colors

By Vincent Carroll

Right on schedule, America's new immigration law is throwing off its friendly mask. Among the victims: businesses, which are about to be saddled with still more pointless regulations.

In New York State (and no doubt elsewhere, too), productive workers already have been fired by skittish employers who are unsure about their origins. Meanwhile, the Immigration and Naturalization Service has proposed giving companies all of 24 hours to determine the citizenship of newly hired workers.

Enjoy paperwork? The INS has just the thing. It's called I-9, a government form all job applicants will have to fill out from now on. To complete this inconvenience — and to heighten the atmosphere of suspicion of applicants who look or sound foreign — everyone will also be required to submit two IDs or a passport for inspection.

These meddlesome rules might be forgiven if they actually addressed a serious problem. In fact they don't. They flail at a myth, namely that the current wave of immigrants (by which is really meant Hispanic immigrants) threatens to become socially indigestible.

According to our neo-nativists, we've got to stop this dusky invasion, or else a second society will grow up within our midst, one permanently poor, alienated and speaking a different tongue. If this were true, it would be worth worrying about. It would also call for beefing up our southern border patrol to choke off the influx of illegal aliens, a tactic that should have been employed anyway before forcing business to function as a surrogate agent for the INS.

Happily, the evidence suggests a different outcome for Hispanic immigrants. Like every group before them, Hispanics are making progress.

To appreciate this fact, it's necessary first to put the Hispanic community in perspective. Between 1950 and 1980, while the total U.S. population expanded by about 50 percent, the Hispanic population was increasing by 265 percent. Moreover, as many as one-third of Hispanics in national surveys say they were born abroad.

Should anyone really be alarmed that a booming population reinforced by impoverished newcomers tends to lag a bit?

Even so, many individual Hispanics are indeed advancing — and in cities with large immigrant enclaves, too. The experience of Denver is fairly typical. According to the Census Bureau, the Hispanic population of Denver's more prosperous suburbs roughly doubled during the 1970s, while the core city's Hispanic community grew by just 6.5 percent.

Nationally, Hispanic poverty declined during the 1970s, and during the previous two decades as well. Only in the past few years has this poverty been on a slight upswing. And as any social scientist will tell you, generalizing from a few years' experience is a high-risk proposition.

Anyway, it's misleading to talk of "Hispanics" as a group. Just as there has been no identical experience for various European immigrant groups, so too with Hispanics. Cubans have done quite well in the United States, in part because they tend to have more education. Hispanics from Central and South America have progressed nicely, too.

Then there are those of Puerto Rican and Mexican ancestry whose rise has been slower. Slow progress is not the same as no progress, however. There have been other ethnic groups who didn't exactly bolt to the top of the social ladder: The Irish and southern Italians come immediately to mind.

Give today's immigrants time. They'll make it. Already the Hispanic population, including those of Mexican origin, is becoming less regionally concentrated, and thus less easily ghettoized. In addition, Hispanic female fertility has dropped in concert with the falling fertility rate of other American women since the 1950s. It's still higher than the norm, but that's to be expected given the rate of immigration.

In education, too, there is hope. When Hispanics were asked a few years ago in a national poll, "What is the highest grade ... your father finished and got credit for?" over three-fourths indicated that their fathers had never graduated from high school. Yet only 45 percent said the same depressing thing about themselves.

Given the growing fear of immigration, you'd think those figures were exactly their reverse. Clearly, the proposed rules of the INS — and the immigration law that prompted them — amount to regulation without reason.

Those complainers often aren't paying

To the editor:

How far do your taxes go? Not far. City taxes pay for only two services: police and fire protection. School taxes pay only half the cost of educating Pampa children.

The annual cost of educating each child in Pampa is $3,000. The annual cost per person for police and fire protection is $100. The obvious conclusion is that public services enjoyed by many are mostly paid by other taxpayers.

As Paul Harvey would say, this is strange!

Those Pampa citizens who complain of high taxes and free spending often are tax delinquent by many years.

Talk about a free lunch.

Take it from me: Prison is poison

To the editor:

I've been reading about the Texas Department of Corrections in the paper for months and the problems it's having. I didn't have to read about it in the paper. I've been getting my news first-hand for a while now.

I was really shocked when I read that Pampa wanted a TDC unit there. To create new jobs?

A prison is a place where they keep criminals. There are all kinds, and when you put a couple thousand together you have an institute of higher learning. Ninety-nine percent of the people who come to prison are lawbreakers for the first time. They don't become criminals until after they "graduate" from one of these fine schools.

The people who will fill the prison staff will be exposed to these fine folks I'm talking about and will carry stories home to tell the family (wife and kids). The kids pass the stories on to their friends at school, who will pass them on to their folks who don't work at the prison.

The poison spreads.

Will the new jobs created be worth the price the whole area will pay?

I can't openly tell you what life inside prison is like — you couldn't publish it in your column.

If anyone up there wants a first-hand account of what goes on in one of these cesspools, just drop me a line, and I'll answer any questions.

Hope for the future

To the editor:

I attended a funeral, and upon leaving the funeral home, I was driving in the funeral procession down Hobart, en route to the Fairview Cemetery.

While driving I had the chance to observe numerous people show their respect by pulling over and stopping for the procession. I also had the chance to observe several folks who apparently did not care to show such respect.

Therefore, when the procession turned east on Decatur Avenue in order to get to the cemetery, I was a little more than concerned about what we might encounter at the high school. I was deeply moved to see not one, but three different groups of our young people — the baseball team, the tennis team and the track team — show their respect by quietly standing in their respective places until the procession of cars passed them.

I know that a lot of the time we think our youth are headed straight for trouble, but let me assure you, with the group of kids I saw today handling our future, we are very, very lucky indeed.

Stop crucifying the saviors of morality

To the editor:

It seems to be fashionable for people to idolize notorious characters and crucify saviors.

Many years ago a mob was asked to choose between an unsavory criminal and a preacher who went about healing the sick and exorcising demons. Swayed by its leaders, the crowd favored Bar-Abbas and crucified Jesus.

People have not changed. They are still influenced by their leaders and the media. When given a choice between (1) a Hollywood or Broadway personage who is a drug addict, homosexual and worse or (2) an upright and godly person, the newspapers and TV stations will often give good press to the person of ill-repute but ridicule the preacher or saint. They seem to think it is sophisticated. Or maybe they think that's what the public wants.

Beginning about 1920, the newspapers started a smear campaign of half-truths and falsehoods against a lady evangelist, Aimee Semple McPherson. Her only fault was that she was a woman in public when women were supposed to stay at home and keep quiet. Because of her life and her preaching, millions of people all over the world have turned from a life of sin to serve God in a meaningful life. Before she died in 1944, "Sister Aimee" had won the admiration of kings, presidents and the world. Incidentally, those same newspapers that had previously poked fun at her, praised her lavishly — after she was dead.

Although they are human and make mistakes and although I do not always agree with them, I believe Oral Roberts, Pat Robertson, Jimmy Swaggart, Jerry Falwell and others like them will be honored and remembered long after their detractors are forgotten.

Our greatest enemy is not communism. Our real enemy is sin and such people as these aforementioned preachers are fighting on the front lines, holding the enemy at bay. Without them and others like them our society would, long ago, have fallen into total depravity. We need to recognize who is holding things together — who is the preserving salt that keeps us from going rotten.

Let's stop crucifying our saviors!

Just one big mess

To the editor:

I have followed the local "mess" of the district attorney who does not serve and the city manager who everyone seems to dislike and the City Commission that does as it pleases. Then there is also the opening for the police chief's job.

Since we don't seem to be able to handle one small town, it's no wonder our federal government is such a mess.

I never have bothered with politics until now.

I lost one son in Vietnam. From what he told me before he died, the war was political and senseless!

I received a letter from the "Reagan Memorial Library." Naturally, the letter asked for more hard-earned money for a memorial to the president. Of course, the federal government would run it later on, when we would all kick in on a $40 million bill.

Well, my slow steam reached a boil.

I sat down and told the letter's sender, Jimmy Stewart, that we wanted no more inquiries seeking money for any purpose. (We have given to the Republicans before.) I told him that if Reagan wanted a memorial, then why didn't he just use the money the Pentagon spends for tools, such as $4,000 for a $1.99 wrench.

If our country is so bad off, why not expose the ripoffs and kick out those who love power and money? But then, that might clear all of them out.

Next to an article in the paper about the "public servants" voting themselves a raise after such "great dedication to the people," I saw a picture of homeless street people in California. I made copies of the picture and story and mailed them to our "public servants," with an extra one for Jesse Helms.

I think people in Pampa should band together and do something. Words are cheap, and we are losing America bit by bit.

'Toto, I don't think we're in Kansas anymore'

Texas guest columnist

By DONNA FIELDER
Denton Record-Chronicle

DENTON (AP) — And here I sit, I thought, bubbling and frothing in this tub like a turnip in a pot. Isn't it amazing the torture people put themselves through in the name of self-improvement?

Now, the hot tub was the best part of this particular masochistic undertaking. Before that came an hour of aerobics, led by a nubile nymphet named Raney. If you've ever been in a health club, you know the type. After two-and-a-half hours of continuous step-kick-step-ball-change, the pony, the swim, chasse and "now doubles!" her hair hasn't moved, her makeup is undisturbed and she still has breath to sing along with the music and yell "whoo!" a lot.

I, in the meantime, was doing the shin splints roll across the carpet, and my friend Cheryl was into the stumble kick half-time to "Crocodile Rock." Our hair had moved. In fact it had migrated down to stick to our teeth. Our makeup looked as though it had been applied during the cyclone scene in "The Wizard of Oz."

"Toto, I don't think we're in Kansas anymore," I muttered, wiping eyeliner off my chin. I cursed under my breath, when I could find breath.

Even before that, we'd spent an hour attached to various shiny machines we think will eventually make us look like Cher in our leotards. Karen, who owns the club and has vowed to make us mere shadows of our former selves, is hacked off because we're not wasting away to nothingness. "No one doesn't lose weight in my club," she informed us and promptly tripled our torture time on the shiny machines. Then she took us off everything that's good to eat. Even Diet Coke.

Is there life without sauces, red meat and The Real Thing? I doubt it, but I just signed a check for another healthy year, despite the fact I just signed healthy checks to enroll my husband in college and my dog in remedial obedience school. "No pain, no gain" is no truer than when you're pushing to get that last lap out of an overexercised bank account.

And this is only one example of the self-torment I call self-improvement.

"Whatever happened to painless dentistry?" I recall asking my gum specialist the other day as I lay in drugged semi-consciousness in his reclinochair. "It's an urban myth," he replied, plunging both hands, plus some knives, needles, a small air hammer and what felt like the Hoover Dam into my mouth.

This little venture into oral self-flagellation had something to do with a receding gumline. Far be it from me to have bald roots. So I allowed part of the roof of my mouth to be transplanted to the lower front and the entire left half of my mouth to be sheared and quilted.

"Toto, I don't think we're in Kansas anymore," I groaned groggily as I staggered from his office with a cast in my mouth and a checkbook that looks likes Cher in a leotard.

People do lots of other really awful things to their bodies in order to make them better. Take the permanent wave. The last one I got was called a Uniperm. It involved having a young woman with spikes on one side of her head drizzle odoriferous liquids into my ears to fry. When the curlers came out, I looked at my poodled head in the mirror.

"Toto," I said to my reflection. "Which way to the wizard?"

Commander discusses unit's economic impact

Lt. Col. Deryl Mowery of Electra, Texas National Guard 142nd Infantry Battalion commander, spoke of the economic impact of the local guard unit during the Sunrise Rotary Club meeting Friday morning.

Col. Mowery said full-time employees with the local Company B National Guard unit receive salaries of more than $124,000 annually. Part-time guard members have income supplements of about $350,000 a year, he said.

In addition to the salaries of guard members, the National Guard Armory east of the city pays $1,200 a month in utility bills, Mowery noted.

Also having an economic impact on the Pampa area was the remodeling of the armory in 1981. The guard spent approximately $250,000 on the project, using local contractors, Mowery said.

Mowery, who works for Bell Helicopter at Hurst, said the local unit now has 78 men, including enlisted men and officers from Pampa and surrounding areas. Fifty percent of the unit lives within 10 miles of the armory, with others living within 40 miles or so.

The local unit is under strength now, Mowery said, adding that efforts are under way to have 25 more men enlisted in the guard here by the end of the year.

Mowery also discussed briefly the history of the National Guard and the local unit, which is part of the "Lost Platoon" from World War II. The local unit's heritage goes back to 1917, he said.

Church topic covers development of leadership

Today has been designated Leadership Emphasis Day at the Mary Ellen and Harvester Church of Christ, with Truman Scott of the Sunset School of Preaching in Lubbock being the guest speaker.

The mid-school through adult classes will meet in the auditorium at 9:30 a.m. for a lesson by Scott on "Preconditions for Developing Leaders."

At the 10:30 a.m. worship service Scott will present a lesson on "Atmosphere for Developing Leaders."

A special class is planned at 4:30 p.m. today with a lesson on "Building Relationships in the Local Church." The day will conclude with a lesson on "The Qualities of Biblical Leadership" at the 6 p.m. evening worship service.

Scott is an instructor in the Sunset School of Biblical Leadership and teaches at the Sunset School of Preaching. He spent 11 years as a missionary in Italy and has served as a Church of Christ elder.

Scott also teaches seminars on parenting, marriage and leadership. He received his bachelor of arts degree from Freed Hardeman and his master's degree at Harding Graduate School.

Gene Glaeser, minister of the local congregation, invited the public to attend the special leadership sessions today.

The youth group of the church was involved in several activities this weekend. Friday evening the teens went to Amarillo for a Sweetheart Night Out and attended the Country Squire Dinner Theater's presentation of Dirty Work at the Crossroads. Saturday the mid-teens went to Amarillo for a movie, eating out and a day of fun, Glaeser said.

A refugee camp mother comforts her wounded baby.

Palestinians eat dogs

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — A British doctor inside a besieged Palestinian refugee camp appealed for international help Saturday to get food into the camp to keep people from starving to death.

"I've eaten dogs," said Dr. Pauline Cutting. "In the past week, people have been so hungry that many have been eating cats and dogs."

Miss Cutting, 35, is one of four Western medical professionals who has remained in Bourj el-Barajneh camp during an 11-week-old siege by Shiite Moslem militiamen.

"Five boys have been seen cooking a rat over a fire," she told The Associated Press in a 15-minute interview conducted by radio.

She said a woman was shot while she was picking wild grass at the edge of the sprawling, shell-battered shantytown "because she has seven children and no food." It was unclear if the woman died, but Miss Cutting said an 11-year-old boy was killed the same way.

"We appeal to international organizations and to the United Nations to intervene to prevent these people dying of starvation," she said, speaking on behalf of the medical team.

She works with a six-member team which includes a Scottish nurse, a Dutch male nurse and one Western member who refused to be identified by nationality.

Militiamen of Justice Minister Nabih Berri's Shiite Amal movement blockaded Bourj el-Barajneh on Beirut's southern flank and nearby Chatilla camp Nov. 24.

Early Saturday, Amal militiamen allowed the first food into Bourj el-Barajneh since the blockade began, but only after an equal amount was delivered to Shiite slums around the camp.

The food convoy, escorted by Syrian and Iranian observers, carried 15 tons of flour and two tons of powdered milk.

"But the food they sent to the camp would only hold each family for one day," said a Palestinian official, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Bourj el-Barajneh, Beirut's largest shantytown, originally housed 35,000 Palestinian refugees. It is made up of battered, multistory buildings crowded together and separated by dim, narrow alleys.

Miss Cutting said only 20,000 refugees now live in the camp, most of them in basements or on the ground floor after the upper stories were weakened or destroyed by Shiite shelling.

Gunmen foiled a mercy mission Friday, killing an Iranian envoy when they fired on two United Nations trucks carrying food.

Since late November, when the latest round of Shiite-Palestinian fighting broke out, more than 550 people have been killed and 1,470 wounded.

The Shiites are determined to prevent Palestinian guerrillas from rebuilding the power base they lost as a result of Israel's 1982 invasion.

Chatilla was "not far away" from the same kind of desperate hunger suffered by residents of Bourj el-Barajneh, according to a Canadian doctor. About 5,000 people live in Chatilla.

"The situation, although it hasn't become yet as catastrophic as in the other camp, will become so," Dr. Chris Giannou, 37, of Toronto, told reporters by radio from Chatilla.

Rebels declare war

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Communist rebels declared renewed war Saturday on the government of President Corazon Aquino.

They accused her of "capitulating to militarists" and of going along with the "bellicose attitude" of the United States.

The rebels stopped fighting during a 60-day cease-fire in their 18-year-old insurrection, though the military accused them of violations. The truce between rebels and government expired last Sunday.

Kidnappers end deal

By MOHAMMED SALAM
Associated Press Writer

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Islamic Jihad on Saturday released another photograph of American hostage Terry Anderson along with a claim it had nothing to do with the abduction of a prominent Lebanese politician last week.

An American Moslem leader, meanwhile, arrived in Beirut on a mission to win freedom for foreign and Lebanese hostages. He defied a U.S. order declaring Lebanon off-limits to U.S. citizens after a surge of kidnappings last month.

Earlier Saturday, another Moslem organization holding three American teachers and an Indian professor hostage released a statement saying it has withdrawn an offer to trade them for 400 Arab prisoners held by Israel.

The statement said the United States had failed to respond to "just demands." However, the group did not renew death threats against the captives.

Islamic Jihad, believed made up of pro-Iranian, Shiite Moslem zealots, denied in statement delivered to a Western news agency that it was involved in the kidnapping of Jean Obeid, a pro-Syrian Lebanese Christian politician.

Obeid, 55, a former adviser to President Amin Gemayel, was abducted from his chauffeured limousine in west Beirut on Thursday. A caller to the Christian Voice of Lebanon later claimed responsibility on behalf of Islamic Jihad.

The group said in the statement it would "mete out the just punishment" to whoever made the claim.

The statement was accompanied by a photograph of Anderson, 39, chief Middle East correspondent of The Associated Press. Islamic Jihad has said in the past it would authenticate statements by enclosing a picture of a hostage.

The black-and-white photograph appeared to be one of a series Islamic Jihad started releasing Nov. 15. It showed Anderson looking straight into the camera, clean-shaven and wearing a dark striped shirt.

The American Moslem, Mohammed Mehdi, told reporters he was seeking the release of 26 foreigners missing and presumed kidnapped in Lebanon and of about 2,000 Lebanese kidnapped by rival militias since the civil war began in 1975.

Israel tries American

JERUSALEM (AP) — Retired U.S. autoworker John Demjanjuk returns to court Monday to face charges he was "Ivan the Terrible," a sadistic guard at a Nazi death camp where 850,000 Jews were killed in gas chambers during World War II.

Demjanjuk

Demjanjuk, 66, extradited from the United States a year ago, has denied the charges, saying he was never at Treblinka death camp in Nazi-occupied Poland and is a victim of mistaken identity.

He is the first person to be tried in Israel on war crimes charges since 1962, when Adolf Eichmann, who oversaw Nazi Germany's systematic extermination of 6 million Jews, was tried, convicted and hanged.

Demjanjuk, born in the Soviet Ukraine, became a U.S. citizen in 1952 and lived in Cleveland.

Demjanjuk's trial opened Nov. 26 before a special three-judge panel headed by Supreme Court Justice Dov Levine, but was immediately recessed.

A 26-page indictment filed against Demjanjuk in September contains a gruesome account of tortures and killings at Treblinka, which was built and operated by the Nazis in 1942 and 1943.

The indictment accuses Demjanjuk of committing "crimes against the Jewish people, crimes against humanity, war crimes and crimes against persecuted persons." If convicted, Demjanjuk could face the death penalty.

Fifty-three witnesses from three continents are expected to testify. Among those summoned are some from the handful of Treblinka survivors and convicted Nazi war criminals from West Germany.

Hassin said proving the charges against Demjanjuk "will not be easy. The defense will make it tough, even though our prosecutors are convinced he is 'Ivan.'"

Congress must search for fat, sacred cows

By STEVEN KOMAROW
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — Capitol Hill Democrats, robust after taking control of the Senate, remain frustrated in their desire to counter President Reagan's power over budget and fiscal priorities.

The lawmakers find that instead of handing them an ace, the Iran arms scandal has deflected the pressure that might have forced the White House to compromise on spending cuts and taxes.

"I think the basic problem is there's too much else that's going on that draws attention away from the budget issue, namely 'Irangate' and all the issues surrounding that," said Rep. Leon Panetta, D-Calif.

"I think the Congress probably is very distressed that this has all come up," said Rep. Marvin Leath, D-Texas, a conservative member of the House Budget Committee. "The cold, hard fact is that we're not going to be able to write responsible budgets or establish responsible fiscal policy in the absence of the president."

With or without White House help, Congress is confronting the Gramm-Rudman budget-balancing law that says the president must submit and Congress must pass a budget producing a deficit of no more than $108 billion next year.

President Reagan says he's done his part with a budget that meets the goals without a major tax increase, although congressional estimates say he actually missed the budget target by about $30 billion.

Democrats have taken the administration to task for what they call phony budgeting, but that does little to ease their problems. Since Democrats oppose many of Reagan's priorities, they must find $61 billion in budget savings of their own, according to the estimates by the non-partisan Congressional Budget Office.

Looking for answers, lawmakers find the administration has left them little room to run before they hit a political land mine.

House Speaker Jim Wright, D-Texas, has proposed fighting the deficit by delaying tax breaks for the wealthy that were included in the new federal income tax law.

Scientists say they've found gene that causes Alzheimer's

WASHINGTON (AP) — Researchers said Friday they have isolated a gene largely responsible for the abnormal deposits that clog the brains of people with Alzheimer's disease.

The gene, a piece of genetic material that triggers protein production, has been sought by researchers worldwide because its byproducts appear to be key to making the nerve fiber tangles and scaly plaques that impair the brains of Alzheimer's sufferers.

In a letter published in the Feb. 13 issue of the British journal The Lancet, a group of New York researchers said they had confirmed the gene's location.

Alzheimer's disease is a degenerative condition of unknown origin. The condition, which normally strikes older people and robs them of memory and physical mobility, is largely responsible for behavior formerly known as senility. An estimated 2.5 million Americans have the illness.

The latest work was reported by Drs. Nikolaos Robakis, Henry Wisniewski, Edmund Jenkins and others at the Institute for Basic Research of the New York State Office of Mental Retardation and Developmental Disabilities, on Staten Island.

Scientists say finding the gene will help researchers discover which cells are making the protein that eventually ends up in the brain deposits.

Last November, scientists from the National Institutes of Health, in an unscheduled presentation at a meeting of the Society for Neuroscience, said they had located what appeared to be the same gene.

Fertilizer linked to disease

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Sixty years ago, Milwaukee transformed a sewage disposal problem into a bonanza by pioneering a process that uses human and industrial wastes to make a nitrogen-rich fertilizer for commercial sale.

Now there are fears that heavy metal in the fertilizer, which earns the Metropolitan Sewerage District $6 million a year, may be linked to the fatal illness known as Lou Gehrig's disease.

Researchers caution, however, that there is as yet no evidence of a definite connection, that reports of a link are so far anecdotal, and that clusters of Gehrig's disease cases are not unusual.

The fertilizer, called Milorganite, has been produced since 1926 and was applied to fields used by professional football's San Francisco 49ers in the 1960s.

Three members of the 1964 team contracted the neuromuscular disease, and two of them, Gary Lewis and Matt Hazeltine, have died. The third, Western Carolina University football Coach Bob Waters, 48, is battling the disease, formally called amyotrophic lateral sclerosis, or ALS.

The Milwaukee Sentinel reported recently that other ALS patients have told of some contact with Milorganite, and that of 155 sewer district employees who died since 1961, two died of ALS.

The normal incidence of ALS is two cases per 100,000 people.

Tom Kaczkowski, president of the union local representing the workers, said people who work with Milorganite should be concerned.

"It could be a very serious thing, but there's no concrete information yet," said Kaczkowski, who has worked occasionally with the fertilizer.

Medical researchers and producers of Milorganite agree there is no evidence of a definite connection with the disease. Part of the problem is the elusive nature of ALS, which causes a gradual breakdown of nerve cells that control muscles of the limbs and throat.

Among its well-known victims were Lou Gehrig, the New York Yankees' first baseman who was stricken and died in 1941, and former Sen. Jacob Javits of New York, who died in March 1986.

Woman makes AIDS victim her Valentine

NEW YORK (AP) — A man dying of AIDS and his wife had their Valentine's Day wish come true Saturday when they exchanged marital vows in St. Patrick's Cathedral.

"I don't have the words to say how I'm feeling," a tearful Maria Hefner said after the service. They married in a civil ceremony three years ago.

David Hefner, 38, wearing a grey pin-striped suit, appeared pale and emaciated as he went through the ceremony. His wife, wearing a gold wedding dress with a gold bow in her hair, wiped away tears after the service before a large crowd.

The couple kissed for a crowd of reporters and cameramen before climbing into a limousine outside the church and leaving.

The wedding became controversial in January when church officials who had approved the wedding denied the couple's request for a ceremony in the Manhattan cathedral.

After several days of discussion, the wedding was approved pending the couple's completion of counseling at their parish church. The Hefners completed the counseling and the wedding was OK'd.

Hefner, a Protestant, described himself as a former homosexual. He was diagnosed nine months ago as having acquired immune deficiency syndrome. Mrs. Hefner, 33, is a Catholic who called St. Patrick's her "dream church."

"WHERE THERE IS NO VISION"

"Where there is no vision, the people perish: but he that keepeth the law, happy is he." (Proverbs 29:18.) This proverb is speaking of the guidance of the law, or Word of God. When there is no such guidance, the people are apt to go in any and every direction. The prophet Jeremiah worded it this way: "O Lord, I know that the way of man is not in himself: it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps" (Jeremiah 10:23.) Man's inability to direct himself is emphasized as well in Proverbs 14:12: "There is a way which seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death."

The illustration of such fruitless effort is given by our Lord in Matthew 7:21-23: "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father who is in heaven. Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, did we not prophesy by thy name, and by thy name cast out demons, and by thy name do many mighty works? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you: depart from me, ye that work iniquity." Their efforts, even though well-intended, were misdirected, hence, works of iniquity, or lawlessness. Matthew 7:24-25 shows the kind of effort that abounds unto eternal life.

The gospel of Christ is a complete revelation (2 Timothy 3:16-17; Jude 3; Psalms 19:7-10.) It not only shows the way that is right and cannot be wrong but it also shows the way of transgression and error (Romans 1:15-17; Mark 16:16; Luke 6:49.) Just because a "way" looks right and good to us doesn't mean that it is good. The "fruit" looked "good" to Eve but it was evil in spite of how "good" it looked and how "good" it tasted.

If it weren't for the "vision" and guidance of God's revealed Word, the doctrines and theology of mankind not only would look "good" but they would be as good as we could do. But since we have the guidance of God then we know of the best and only way to be saved. There is no way to be saved but the Lord's way (John 14:6.) There is no doctrine but the doctrine of Jesus Christ which has the approval of Almighty God. (2 John 9.)

Board bolsters reforms, defends permanent fund

By SUZANNE GAMBOA
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN — Legislation must be passed to prevent raids on the Permanent School Fund and enough money must be provided to ensure continued gains in education, the State Board of Education said Saturday.

In its monthly meeting, the board unanimously passed a resolution bolstering education reforms passed in a 1984 special legislative session.

The resolution follows Gov. Bill Clements' call for "fine tuning" of the 1984 reforms.

"I think that the board is obligated to tell the Legislature that in our opinion, reform is working," said Jon Brumley, education board chairman. "We want to influence (legislators) to stand behind it. We've got some momentum and we want to keep it going."

Those gains could be hindered, however, if lawmakers raid the Permanent School Fund to help the state out of its fiscal crisis, Brumley said.

In his Feb. 4 State of the State adress, Clements proposed using capital gains from the Permanent School Fund to pay the cost of reviewing and redesigning the teacher evaluation system.

"I think the Permanent School Fund is important for a lot of reasons and one reason is it's a symbol, and it's been a symbol for a long time," Brumley said.

"It guarantees school bond projects throughout the state and that is such a valuable purpose," Brumley added. "To say that we should give up the capital gains now or in the future, to me, is wrong. We need to protect the capital gains."

Brumley said the 133-year-old Permanent School Fund has only been raided once in its history.

"That was back during the Confederate War and they raided it to acquire railroad bonds," he said. "They lost the war and the bonds were worthless."

The fund is now worth about $8 billion, Brumley said.

Millionaire Texan's daughter marries Thatcher's only son

LONDON (AP) — Mark Thatcher, the only son of Britain's prime minister, married Texas millionaire's daughter Diane Burgdorf Saturday in a private Valentine's Day wedding.

It was a rainy 38 degrees, the bride was a few minutes late and forgot her bouquet, but a beaming Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher said: "It was lovely."

Polite applause from about 70 well-wishers greeted the newlyweds as they emerged from the tiny Queen's Chapel of the Savoy after the doublering Church of England ceremony. No one tossed rice.

The couple kissed for photographers, then got into a maroon Rolls-Royce and were chauffeured to the reception at the nearby Savoy Hotel.

The bride, 26, wore a traditional white satin gown, studded with sequins with a high, round neck and V-shaped lace inset.

Thatcher, 33, wore a morning suit with tails, top hat — and in an apparent salute to Texas — a yellow rose in his lapel.

The prime minister, wearing a hyacinth blue silk dress and matching hat, left the church with her husband, Denis. Asked how it went, she said: "It was lovely. It was a lovely ceremony."

The groom's twin sister, Carol, a journalist, told reporters, "It was wonderful service." Referring to the wedding vows, she added, "I don't think she promised to obey."

The couple had arrived at the church in separate limousines. He was 35 minutes early but she was three minutes late.

Tiny Air Force tool costs $465

FORT WORTH (AP) — Prosecutors say that drawings of military equipment made by teenagers were used by a defense subcontractor in a scheme to overcharge the Air Force.

The drawings were submitted this week as evidence in a federal conspiracy trial in Fort Worth. Charged are Greer Industries Inc., a tool company; Greer President Robert Greer; and General Dynamics engineer Harry Brand.

The teen-agers, the graphics company they worked for and General Dynamics were not charged with any wrongdoing in the case.

Prosecutors said the drawings were used in a scheme to overcharge the Air Force for drills, cutting tools and other equipment to repair the F-16 fighter aircraft.

Testimony this week in the trial focused on a tiny tool that looks like a drill bit. Assistant U.S. Attorney Ron Eddins said the bit cost $3.45 but was sold to General Dynamics for $465.

The prosecutor said the drawings were essential to the overcharging conspiracy. The Air Force requires potential vendors of tools and other support equipment to supply a drawing of the tool.

Eddins said Brand obtained copies of tool drawings from General Dynamics and then gave them to Greer. Eddins said Greer took the drawings to a drafting company to get copies.

The key issue in the conspiracy charge are false pricing statements prosecutors allege Robert Greer and Greer Industries made to the government, Eddins said.

Partner convicted

AUSTIN (AP) — An Austin jury has convicted a man of murder for the death of his business partner during an outing on a boat last summer.

Rolland Lawson, 47, first contended that Elvin Leroy Pollock drowned accidentally last June 6 in Lake Travis. Pollock's body, weighted with an anchor and a rock, was recovered 17 days later in the lake.

Lawson admitted shooting Pollock, but told police he killed him in self defense. The two were partners in Austin Honda.

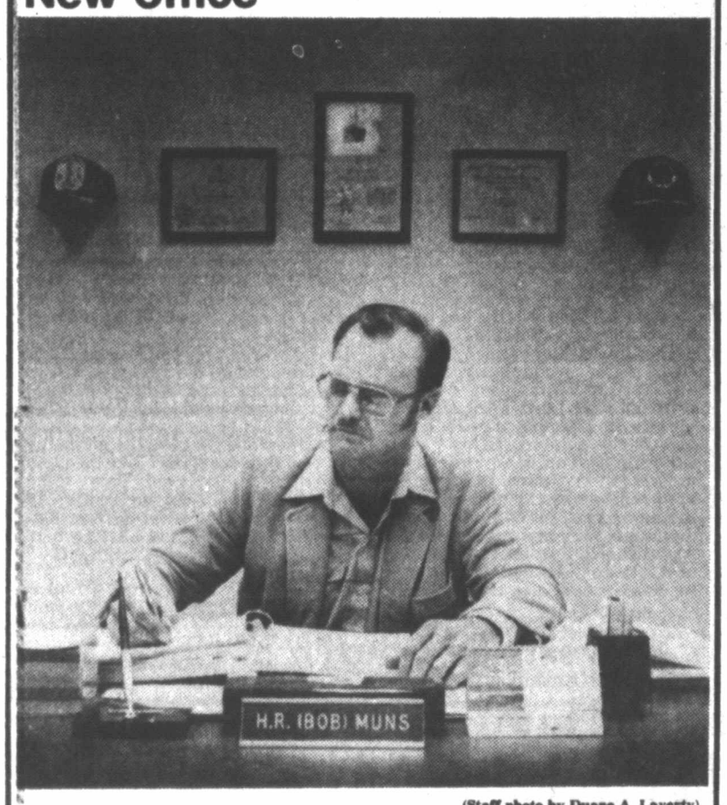

Lawson testified that after he shot Pollock, he decided to sink the body in the lake to keep from hurting Pollock's family, avoid the embarrassment of a trial and keep from being ostracized by his friends at the Austin Yacht Club.

Lawson faces up to life in prison or as little as a 5-year probated sentence. State District Judge Carl Anderson ordered the punishment hearing to begin Monday. Lawson was allowed to remain free on $35,000 bond he posted last year.

Terry Keel, the lead prosecutor in the case, told jurors Friday not to consider convicting Lawson of a lesser charge of voluntary or involuntary manslaughter.

"I submit to you that if he is not guilty of murder you should set him free and go sailboating with him," Keel said.

Officers cleared in trooper's death

HORSESHOE BAY (AP) — A Llano County grand jury cleared officers in the Jan. 22 shootout that killed a kidnapper and a Texas Ranger, but found there was a lack of communication between law enforcement agencies in the county.

Llano County law agencies failed to pass on information concerning a December incident in which the kidnapper was questioned for carrying a pistol, grand jurors said.

Texas Ranger Stan Guffey, a Canadian native, was killed while trying to rescue 2-year-old Kara Leigh Whitehead from a kidnapper, who was shot to death by another ranger.

The grand jury met for 7½ hours Thursday for a routine investigation of the shootings.

The grand jury concluded the killing of Brent Beeler, the kidnapper, by Texas Ranger Johnnie Aycock was justifiable homicide.

Also under investigation was why Beeler was questioned, but not charged, when he was found carrying a pistol while walking along a Horseshoe Bay street in December.

Oilmen say sudden rise in drilling unlikely

FORT WORTH (AP) — Despite the steep rise in crude prices in recent weeks, most oil industry observers forecast little, if any, increase in drilling this year.

Although some Texas oilmen say they will drill more wells, others are shifting their focus — and money — to buying already established oil and gas production.

"This year we're probably going to put 80 percent of our would-be drilling budget into acquisition of producing properties," said Fort Worth oilman Ray Richey, 31, a college accounting graduate who formed his own oil company at age 23.

In 1983, Ray Richey & Co. drilled 50 oil and gas wells. It drilled only 20 in 1986, when oil prices made a record drop.

This year, Richey expects to drill but "five or 10" wells, and that will be done in part to keep leases that would otherwise expire.

"Frankly, it's a heckuva lot easier to raise money (from outside investors) to buy producing properties than it is to raise money for a drilling deal right now," Richey said.

Drilling, fraught with often unpredictable costs and the potential for dry holes, poses a much higher risk than buying exisiting oil and gas reserves, Richey said.

His company, which raises much of its money from a stable of 80 to 100 regular investors, expects to spend at least $4 million this year buying producing wells. Richey hopes to close a deal March 2 for the purchase of 46 wells in Eastland County in west central Texas.

In many cases, investors can realize just as good a "payout" from buying producing oil and gas properties as they can from a drilling venture, and they can minimize risk, Richey said.

He is seeking reserves with a producing life of 15 to 20 years and a full payout within only three years.

"In other words, whatever amount of money you give the guy (for the reserves), you'll have it back in three years (from production income)," Richey explained.

Veteran Fort Worth oil investor Jack Fikes, 51, said he and two other investors are attempting to put together a joint venture to spend $5 million to $10 million on reserves.

He is hoping to buy "some real quality production" in West Texas, with a reserve life of 30 to 50 years.

Investors holding long-life reserves can ride out disastrous downturns in oil prices and realize greatly increased production income when prices rebound, Fikes said.

"If you own oil that's going to be around for 30 to 40 to 50 years, you can put out of your mind what's going to happen in the next year or two," he said. "You're going to come out all right."

A barrel of West Texas Intermediate crude brought $30 in late 1985. But a world oil glut sent prices plunging to $10 a barrel in early 1986.

Prices have jumped to between $17.50 and $19 since the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries agreed Dec. 20 to cut production 7 percent and seek an average $18 price for six grades of OPEC crude.

But most oil analysts expect prices to stay below $20 this year. Many say that price level offers little incentive for any substantial increase in drilling, which sank to a record low of 663 active rigs in the United States in July of 1986.

The present U.S. count is only 802, compared with 1,496 active rigs of a year ago, according to the Hughes Tool Co. count this week.

"If oil prices stay where they are right now, I really don't expect to see much of an increase in drilling in Texas," said Doug Von Gonten, head of petroleum engineering at Texas A&M University. "Prices are going to have to get to at least $22 to $25 to produce much of an increase."

Others see an upturn in the oil industry, but only a modest one.

"We're going to see some improvement, no doubt about it ... but we don't see any large improvement, particularly in the drilling and service categories, until the price gets to at least $24," said Gene Fiedoreck, head of the energy banking group at RepublicBank Corp. of Dallas.

The Tulsa-based Oil and Gas Journal forecasts that overall drilling activity will decline further this year in the United States, largely because of declining activity by by smaller independent companies that focus on domestic exploration.

Salomon Brothers Inc., a New York-based investment banking firm, said its annual survey of the petroleum industry reveals that, in the aggregate, companies are planning a "moderate" reduction in expenditures for oil and gas exploration and production this year.

The 18 major companies in the survey are budgeting an average reduction of 6.2 percent in domestic expenditures, while 105 smaller independents surveyed plan a reduction of 10.3 percent. International expenditures are expected to decline 2 percent.

With the recent rise in prices, "The mood in the industry is a little more upbeat," said New York-based analyst Peter Beutel of Elders Futures Inc. "But in the corporate boardrooms, you don't have any movement to go out and increase drilling and exploration."

"While the recent price increases are a relief from the $10 levels of last summer, $18 crude certainly doesn't mean any picnic in the oil patch," said analyst William Randol of the First Boston Corp. "The better-capitalized companies can survive and even make a little money. But it's going to be rough on the independents."

"There hasn't been a rush of hirings and a rush of new rigs going to work," said Dan Jones of Longview.

The Point is Pets

by Ron Hendrick, D.V.M.

Q. My cat is about ready to deliver her kittens. Should she have difficulty, how will I know when, or if, I need to call for help?

A: Most cats (and dogs) deliver their offspring without much difficulty. If there is a problem, don't wait more than an hour of labor (contractions) before calling your veterinarian. Poor nutrition, especially low levels of calcium in the blood, may lead to slow delivery, and possibly infant death. A pre-partum check by the veterinarian will include counseling, vitamins, calcium, possibly a film on the delivering process and instructions on how to assist in the birth as well as how to know just when to call for help. Above all, don't hesitate to call if you suspect a problem. Be sure to bring her and her kittens (or puppies in the case of dogs) into the hospital for a post-partum exam and injection. This will help avoid infection of the uterus. Sometimes we find still another little critter inside who just seemed to refuse to come out with the rest of his litter! When they're ready to sell or give away you should call the veterinarian's office so he can list them on his bulletin board, as a matter of fact, I'd call all of them.

Market ignores scandal

NEW YORK (AP) — The latest charges in Wall Street's insider-trading scandal caught the stock market taking a breather this past week from its powerful early 1987 rally.

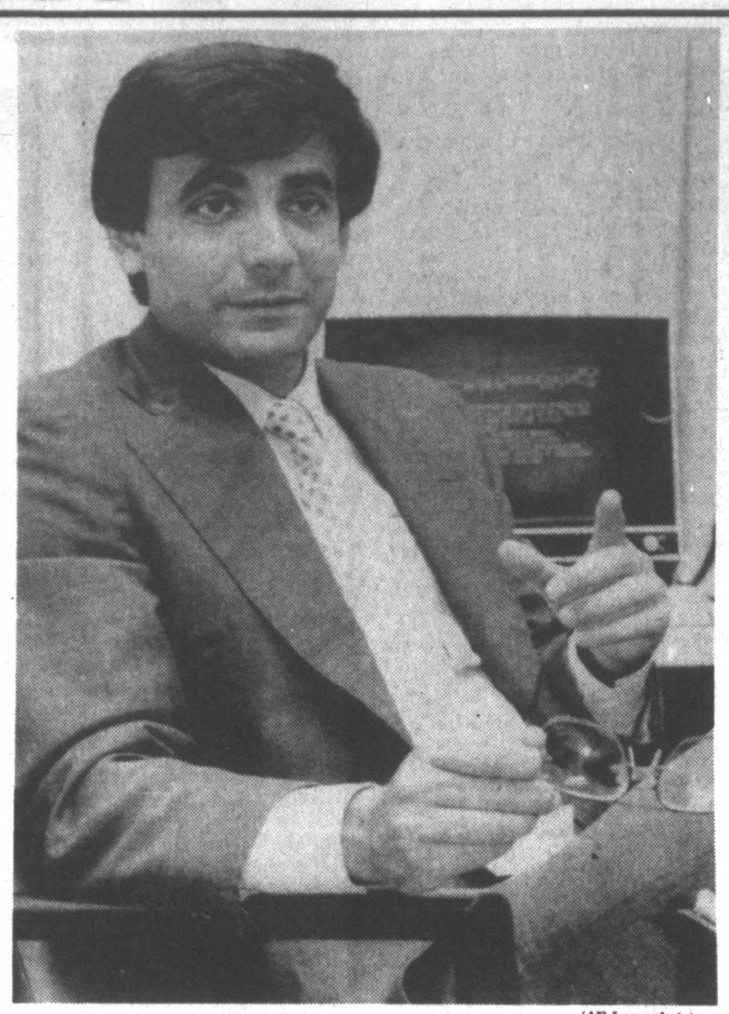

But those looking for a distinctly sour reaction to news Thursday and Friday that four more Wall Street professionals were charged with illegally trading on confidential corporate information were surprised.

The stock market swept ahead in the week's final session.

"If you were a man from Mars and landed on this planet, you might conclude that insider trading scandals are bullish for the market," said Robert Colby of the investment firm Smith Barney, Harris, Upham & Co.

While that conclusion may be stretching the point, Colby noted that some Wall Streeters argue that the government's investigation of inside trading is actually good for the market by "making the public feel they have a better chance" against the professionals.

For the week, the Dow Jones industrial average slipped 3.52 to finish at 2,183.35. Volume on the Big Board averaged 173.74 million shares a day this past week, compared with a daily average of 207.72 million shares the previous week.

(AP Laserphoto)

Martin A. Siegel — a high-level Wall Street investment banker who admitted conspiring to trade stock illegally — discusses the inside-trader scandal that has rocked the securities world. Siegel, 38, has agreed to give prosecutors information about others in the government's widening investigation.

Snitch penetrates . insiders' whispers

By PETER COY
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK — Behind the splash of headlines accompanying the mushrooming investigation into insider trading on Wall Street is a simple truth of detective work: Usually, it takes a tip to crack a case.

Multimillion-dollar computer banks scan daily for cheaters by flagging sudden, unexplained movements in stock prices, but they can only generate suspicion, not proof, experts say.

In fact, it was an unsigned letter mailed in May 1985 from a tipster in Venezuela who charged that there were shady dealings at a Caracas brokerage office that gave authorities their major break in what has turned into the insider-trading scandal of the century.

Last week, the scandal hit two of Wall Street's most prestigious houses, Goldman, Sachs & Co. and Kidder, Peabody & Co., and prosecutors made it clear that more major figures would be implicated.

Snared were four high-level executives, the biggest figures since insider trader Ivan Boesky himself was caught in November. One the four was picked up at his apartment and spent a night in jail; another was led weeping from his office in handcuffs as stunned associates looked on.

Charged were Martin A. Siegel, former head of Kidder, Peabody's mergers and acquisitions department; Richard B. Wigton, head of Kidder's risk arbitrage office; Timothy L. Tabor, formerly the second-ranking executive in Kidder's risk arbitrage office; and Robert M. Freeman, head of arbitrage trading at Goldman, Sachs.

The SEC alleges Siegel, a highly respected 38-year-old dealmaker, accepted $700,000 in bribes from Boesky in return for tipping Boesky about corporate deals Kidder was helping arrange.

Siegel pleaded guilty Friday to charges of illegal insider trading and tax law violations, punishable by up to 10 years in prison. He also agreed to pay more than $9 million in cash and stocks for civil penalties. The other men, whom he fingered, were charged with insider-trading violations but have denied wrong-doing.

"I'm sure the person who wrote that letter thought it was just a couple people down there involved in a few isolated stocks," said Paul Fischer, a former government lawyer who led the Securities and Exchange Commission investigation.

Insider trading is hard to catch without an informant because it can be passed on with merely a whisper. Information is the investor's most valuable commodity, but someone who obtains it by being privy to a company's internal affairs may not use it for profit until it becomes known to the public.

Someone who gets early word of news that can affect a stock's price, such as a takeover offer, can make millions of dollars in a few hours.

"To me, it's a case of human greed overruling law, reason and morality," said John Stoppelman, a law partner of Fischer who also worked on the SEC probe. "This kind of thing goes at the heart of the American capital-raising system, and I think it's a serious blow."

The typewritten letter that started it all was mailed May 22, 1985, in a plain white envelope to the enforcement office of Merrill Lynch & Co., the company for which the two brokers in Caracas worked.

Merrill Lynch investigators found a link between Caracas and a broker in New York, who in turn was handling trades for a subsidiary of Switzerland's Bank Leu International in the Bahamas.

Strength of economy surprises observers

NEW YORK (AP) — A string of key indicators published by the federal government since the beginning of the year points to strength in the country's economy that has surprised observers.

The good news has lessened the chances of the Federal Reserve Board cutting interest rates to stimulate investment and growth, some economists believe.

The economic barometers, notably including the most recent trade figures, the leading indicators on future economic activity, unemployment figures and orders to factories for "big-ticket" items, demonstrate a robustness that exceeded many observers' expectations.

The figures "show that the economy did not fall out of bed on January 1st as some people had feared," said Irwin Kellner, chief economist for Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co. in New York. "Most of the numbers are really pointing to much more strength in the economy than people had thought would be the case."

The latest series of statistics released this past week offered few exceptions. The Federal Reserve reported Friday, for example, that production at U.S. factories, mines and utility companies rose a solid 0.4 percent in January, the fourth consecutive monthly increase.

The U.S. central bank said last month's increase stemmed from moderate gains in most sectors of the economy, with the exception of companies producing consumer goods and energy products.

The increase in industrial activity in recent months has encouraged many economists, who believe that U.S. manufacturers are finally beginning to see improvements after being battered for more than two years by stiff foreign competition.

Tax credits available

Local employers may be overlooking hiring opportunities that can gain them tax credits, local Texas Employment Commission Director Charles Vance said.

Vance said federal regulations provide for various tax credits to employers who hire low-income people from targeted job categories of the disadvantaged or handicapped.

The targeted job tax credit program allows for a 40 percent tax credit on a targeted job worker's first year's wages up to $6,000, Vance said.

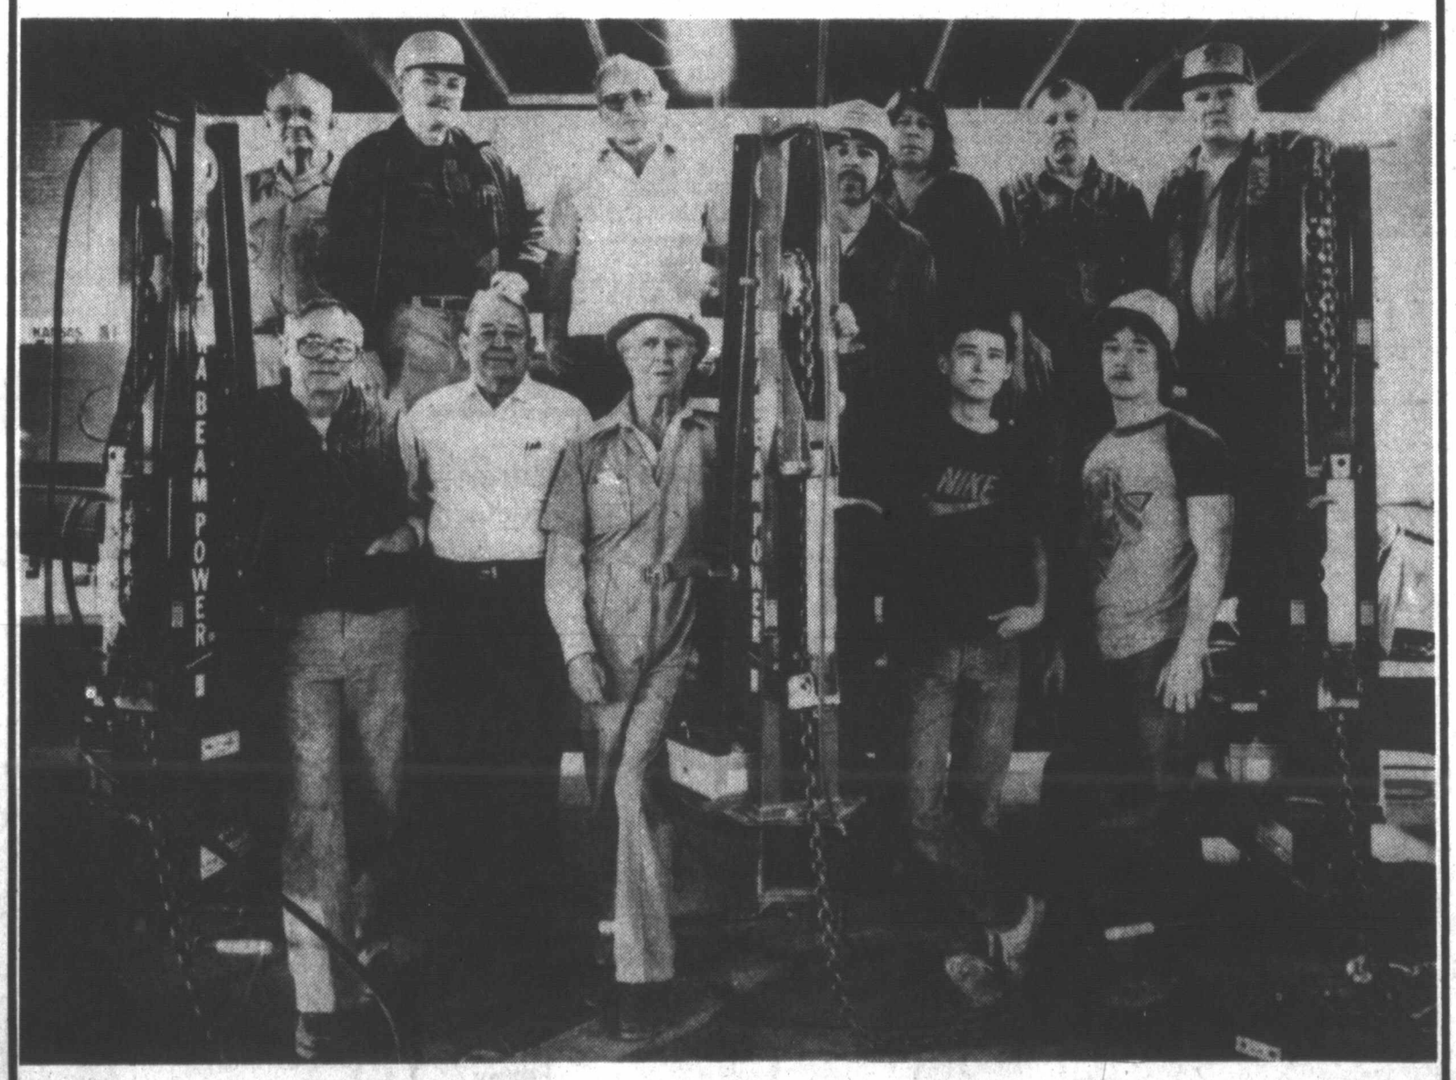

The four most common categories under the targeted job program are disadvantaged youth ages 18-24, disadvantaged Vietnam era veterans, disadvantaged ex-law offenders and handicapped workers that are referred through a local rehabilitation program, he explained.

Any local employer who might hire a worker from one of these categories can contact the TEC office on or before hiring to see if he qualifies for a tax credit, Vance said.

Anyone having questions about the program can see Vance at the TEC office in Coronado Center or call 665-0938.

Pampa cowboy now riding in land down under

By L.D. STRATE
Sports Editor

Buddy Cockrell, his monolithic body still sturdy after numerous collisions with swift running backs and mean-tempered bulls, may have packed in his football gear two decades ago, but he's still riding tall in the saddle. Nowadays, however, the ex-Harvester is riding fence at his 600,000 acre cattle ranch in western Australia.

How did an ol' country boy from Pampa end up in the land down under?

"Well, it all started six years ago when I went to Australia looking to buy some airplanes from the government," said Cockrell, who is now back at his east Gray County ranch for a six-month stay. "A friend of mine, now living in Houston, told me about land he owned over there, so I went and looked it over. I liked what I saw and decided to buy 600,000 acres that was for sale."

Cockrell pointed out that his ranch, known as "Bliana," is small compared to others in the region.

"Australia is about the same size as the U.S., but where we've got 250 million people, there's only about 16 million over there," he explained. "My nearest neighbor is 40 miles away. Most of what is produced is exported, and 90 percent of our beef is shipped to the United States."

Cockrell said ranches over there are called "stations" and the original family name traditionally stays with the land forever.

"The weather over there is beautiful, just beautiful," Cockrell said. "The coldest it gets there is around 50 degrees and the hottest is 75 to 80 degrees. The wind hardly ever blows and there's an average of about 21 inches of rainfall yearly."

Cockrell, who played in the National Football League for four years with the Cleveland Browns and New York Titans (now the New York Jets), raises around 15,000 head of cattle (Sant-Gertrutis Samora shorthorn cross) and between 200 and 400 head of horses. Because of the vast acreage, helicopters are used to round up the cattle for shipment to the nearest feed lot, which can be as far as 1,400 miles away, Cockrell said.

"Cattle are transported in what they call "road trains," which are two or three-double decked trailers pulled by a single tractor. When the cattle start weighing in at 1,000 pounds or more, that's when we start shipping them," Cockrell said.

Station owners use Australian natives, known as aborigines, to work their cattle, and they are excellent cowboys, according to Cockrell.

"They're not very good at fixing fences or windwills, but they're very good on horseback. And they taught me how to use a stock whip (or bullwhip) to move the cattle," Cockrell said.

Cockrell said the aborigines are also experts at throwing the boomerang, a flat, curved stick that returns to the thrower if released properly.

"I'm not very good with it. It you throw it and it doesn't come back, it's known as a stick then," laughed Cockrell.

(Staff Photo by Duane A. Laverty)

Buddy Cockrell with the tools of his trade.

Cockrell said the aborigines use the boomerang primarily to kill wild game, particularly the goanna, a giant lizard that generally grows to five feet in length.

"It's good eating. It tastes a lot like chicken," added Cockrell.

Cockrell said most of the Australian ranchers use aborigines as stockmen.

"The aborigines are a very easy-going people. Nothing seems to bother them." Cockrell said.

When one thinks of Australia, visions of kangeroos hopping across the countryside are conjured up. But Cockrell said the leaping mammals are sparse around his station.

"There's a lot of wallaby (similar to kangeroos, but smaller), but hardly any kangeroos. Further south there's tons of them. They get on the highways and are run over every day," Cockrell said.

Cockrell graduated from Pampa High School in 1953 with many athletic honors. He was an all-state football player and voted the state's top lineman as a senior. He won the state high school bulldogging and all-around championship in rodeo and was a member of the state chamionship basketball teams.

Cockrell played football at Oklahoma University and Hardin-Simmons before going into the Canadian and National Football Leagues. He played alongside pro greats Jim Brown, Lou Groza and Don Maynard.

"I roomed with Maynard when I was with New York and I was glad to see he was finally installed in the hall of fame this year. He had been nominated four times," Cockrell said.

Cockrell jumped from the gridiron to the rodeo circuit and won the Professional Rodeo Cowboys Association steer roping title in 1973.

Cockrell is still rodeoing and plans to enter the Living Legends Rodeo in Abilene this weekend and the National Steer Tripping Championship in Guthrie, Okla. later this year.

Cockrell is also a dominant figure in rodeo circles around Derby, Australia, 100 miles away and the closest city to Bliana Station. He won four calf roping titles last year and was awarded buckles and saddles for his efforts.

Australia is also home to Dan Cockrell, Buddy's youngest son, who joined his father and now owns 200,000 acres adjacent to Bliana Station. Cockrell is also joined during the summer months by his wife Joyce and daughter Amy. Amy, a college student, competes frequently in the Derby rodeos, and won all-around honors at her last outing.

"She's a good one," added Cockrell.

Cockrell was reluctant to say his daughter was a chip off the old block, but one couldn't help notice the twinkle in his eyes when he talked about her.

Rodeo stops, however, are few and far between in Australia for Cockrell, who spends most his waking hours supervising the rounding up and shipping of his cattle.

"It's a seven day a week job and sometimes there's just not enough hours in a day," he said.

For Cockrell though, he wouldn't have it any other way. Any place is home for the hard-riding Pampan turned Aussie wrangler as long as there's a horse and saddle around.

Mustangs' fate still uncertain

CORONADO, Calif. (AP) — The future of Southern Methodist University's troubled football program is in the hands of the NCAA Infractions Committee, which must decide whether to impose the "death penalty."

On Friday, SMU officials spent 4½ hours meeting with the six-member committee, discussing latest allegations of irregularities in a program that has been on probation four times in the last 11 years.

"The point of this is to try and identify the problems and discuss our penalties and propose what can be done for the future," said Lonnie Kliever, SMU's faculty representative to the NCAA.

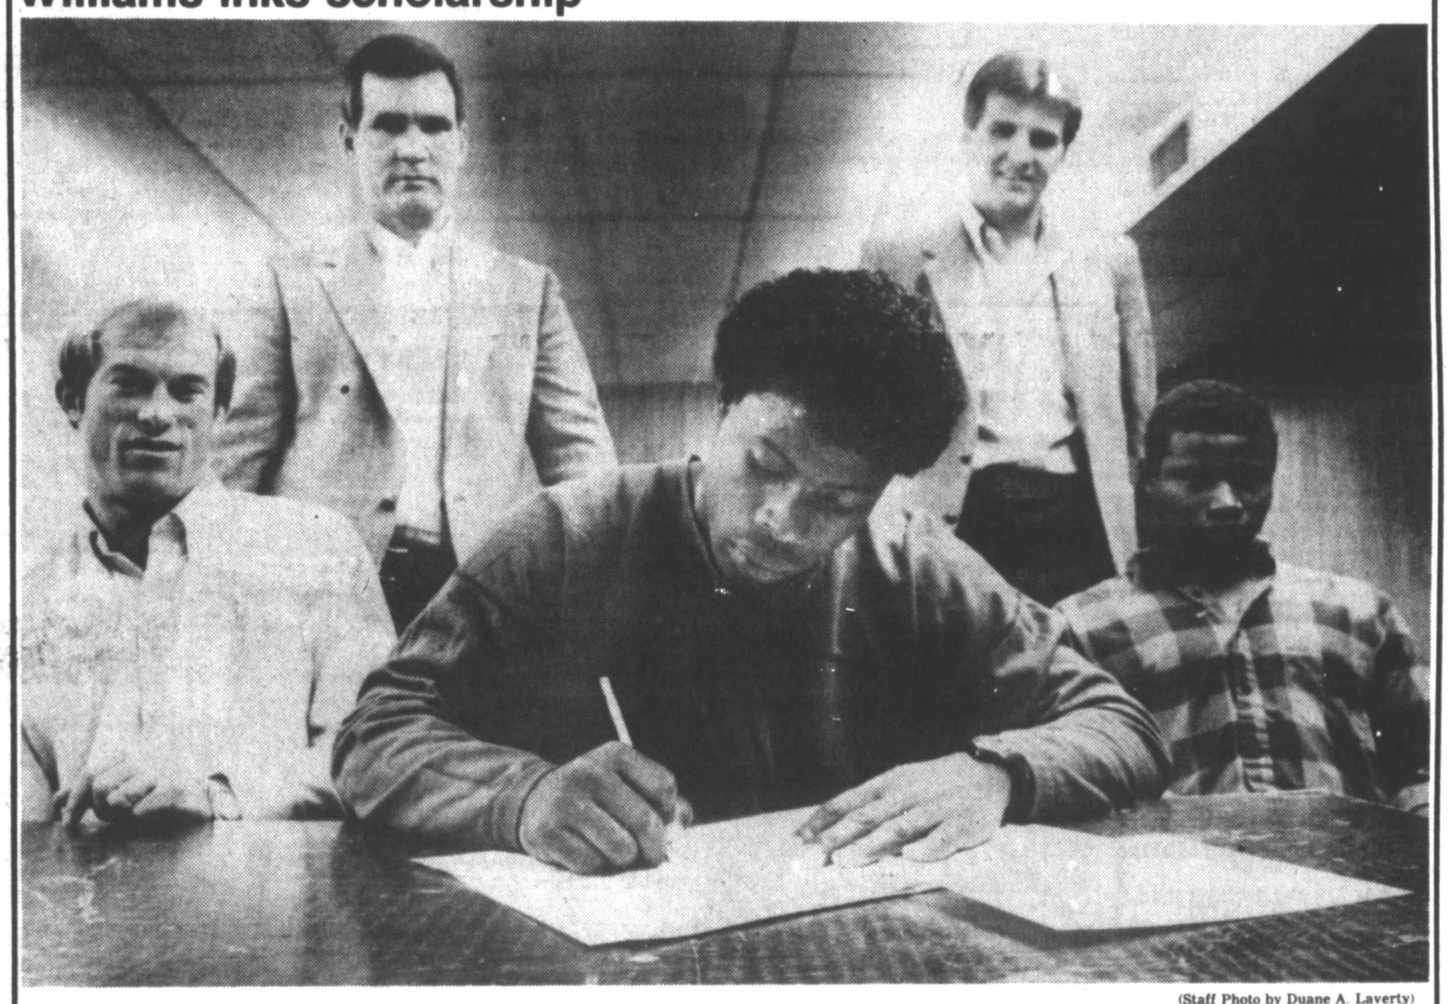

William Stallcup, interim president of SMU, said the private meeting with the committee was cordial.

"We hope that from the beginning we got our point across, and we had every indication of that," he said. "In this hearing, we were able to get all the facts brought out."

Neither Stallcup nor Kliever would comment on specifics discussed during the meeting at the Hotel del Coronado, located across the bay from San Diego. NCAA officials also declined comment.

Earlier this week, Stallcup said he would ask the panel to let the school levy its own sanctions on SMU's football program. He said, however, that he would neither appeal nor contest any rulings or findings by the committee, which is expected to decide the school's punishment within 10 days.

Williams inks scholarship

Floyd, Snead tied

LA JOLLA, Calif. (AP) — Ray Floyd's last-hole eagle lifted him into a share of the third-round lead Saturday with J.C. Snead in a day of remarkable shooting at the $500,000 Andy Williams Open golf tournament.

Floyd's eagle finished off a 6-under-par 66. He was tied at 199 with Snead, who also shot 66 on the South course at Torrey Pines.

Their 17-under-par totals for three rounds matched the greatest subpar total for 54 holes on the PGA Tour last year.

Their accomplishments, however, were only two of a variety of scoring exploits.

"I shoot 66 and I lost ground," Tom Watson said. It was an overstatement, but only a mild one.

"There's a lot of low scores," Watson said. "If you want an explanation, there's no wind, the pins are relatively easy, and the greens are softer because of the (overnight) rains and you can fly the ball right at the pin."

That's what David Edwards did. And he produced one of golf's greatest rarities — a double eagle.

Edwards, 241 yards from the pin, hit a driver from a slightly uphill lie in the fairway on the 499-yard 18th hole, and watched the ball hit short of the green, bounce onto the putting surface — and then disappear.

"I couldn't really see it, but when everybody around the green went crazy, I figured it went in the hole," Edwards said.

Lady Harvesters end season with romp over Lubbock Dunbar

LUBBOCK — The Pampa Lady Harvesters closed out the 1986-87 basketball season with a flourish, thumping Lubbock Dunbar 81-42 Friday night.

The Lady Harvesters closed with a 19-7 record, the best ever in PHS girls' basketball history, according to Coach Albert Nichols. They finished District 1-4A play in third place behind the state's top two Class 4A teams, Canyon and Levelland.

Pampa's Yolanda Brown and Jackie Reed combined for 44 points and overwhelmed the Pantherettes inside.

In the boys' game, Pampa suffered through a dismal shooting night to lose a 60-55 decision to Lubbock Dunbar.

The Lady Harvesters withstood a Dunbar rally in the first quarter of the girls game to finish 12-4 in district. Pampa jumped out to a 6-0 lead, but Dunbar used the foul line to help catch up and go ahead 11-10 midway in the first quarter. The Pantherettes hit 5 of 7 shots from the foul stripe in the first quarter, but the Lady Harvesters had too much firepower. By halftime, the Lady Harvesters had forged ahead, 37-27, and by the end of the third quarter they were up 56-31.

Brown fired in 24 points and claimed a dozen rebounds while Reed added 20 points and a whopping 23 boards to close out her high school career with a bang.

Tacy Stoddard and Camillia Brown each had 8 points while Landee Cummings and Schivone Parker each canned 7 points for Pampa. Also scoring were Holly Hoganson with 5 and Keitha Clark 2.

Cummings, Hoganson and Camillia Brown joined Reed in closing out their high school careers.

Pampa boys rallied in the fourth quarter against Dunbar, but the distance was just too far to travel as the Panthers avenged an earlier 38-24 loss to the Harvesters.

Pampa only scored six field goals in the first half and trailed Dunbar 28-15 at intermission.

Pampa was still trailing 44-32 after three quarters, but Greg Wolcott, who was moved up from the junior varsity, sparked the Harvesters in a comeback effort.

After the Harvesters cut the gap to eight (51-43), Wolcott scored the next eight points to pull within four, 55-51. But Pampa never got any closer. The two traded baskets before Dunbar's Steve Guiterrez tossed in a pair of free shots to make it 59-53 with only 41 seconds to go.

Mills, who didn't score a field goal the first quarter, finished as Pampa's high scorer with 18 points.

James Young poured in 27 points for the winners and Kevin Andrews contributed 10.

Dustin Miller added 12 points for the Harvesters, followed by Wolcott with 8, Chris Evans 7, Troy Owens 4, David Doke, Mark Spain and Derrick Ryan 2 points each.

Pampa dropped to 5-8 in district play and 9-18 overall while Dunbar is 4-10 and 6-22.

Tickets are now on sale at the PHS athletic office for the Pampa-Borger game Tuesday night at Borger. Tickets are 2 dollars for adults and one dollar for students. Borger has clinched a playoff spot going into the 7:30 p.m. game.

TALKIN' BASEBALL...with pitchers and catchers for most major league clubs reporting to spring training this week, it's time for a little Hot Stove League action. The Cubs first exhibition game is March 4, with pre-season game telecasts March 8, 14, 22, 28.

Could it be that Steve Carlton and Tom Seaver will be missing when the season officially opens? And so will many of the free agents, who are prohibited from further negotiations until May 1.

The most miraculous basic rule in all sports is the one which established 90 feet as the distance between bases. While football, basketball, baseball, golf etc., have varied playing surface sizes, baseball has met the challenge of time, bigger, stronger, faster athletes and player-improved talents and techniques.

If the Cubs should trade Leon Durham to the Reds, as he has suggested, Cincinnati would have an all-Cincy born infield with Durham at first, Ron Oester at second, Barry Larkin at short, and Buddy Bell at third.

Redleg pitcher Carl Willis wanted to keep his bat when he got his first big league hit. However, owner Mage Schott told him he'd have to buy it.

Mickey Mantle was named after Mickey Cochrane, Hall of Fame catcher who was deeply admired by the former Yankee star's father, Mutt. "My first hero was Stan Musial," says The Mick.

Keven McReynolds, who joins the Mets' zoo and could clinch their repeating as NL champs, finished the 1982 season at Amarillo in the Texas League, hitting .352 in 40 games. Another former Amarillo star, the late Bob Crues, never played in a major league game, but in 843 minor league contests the pitcher-outfielder-first baseman hit .337 with 214 doubles, 35 triples, 232 home runs and 905 runs batted in.

If you want to see Ed Correa pitch for the Rangers, don't go to Friday night or Saturday games. The team has given him permission to practice his Seventh Day Adventist beliefs by not pitching those days.

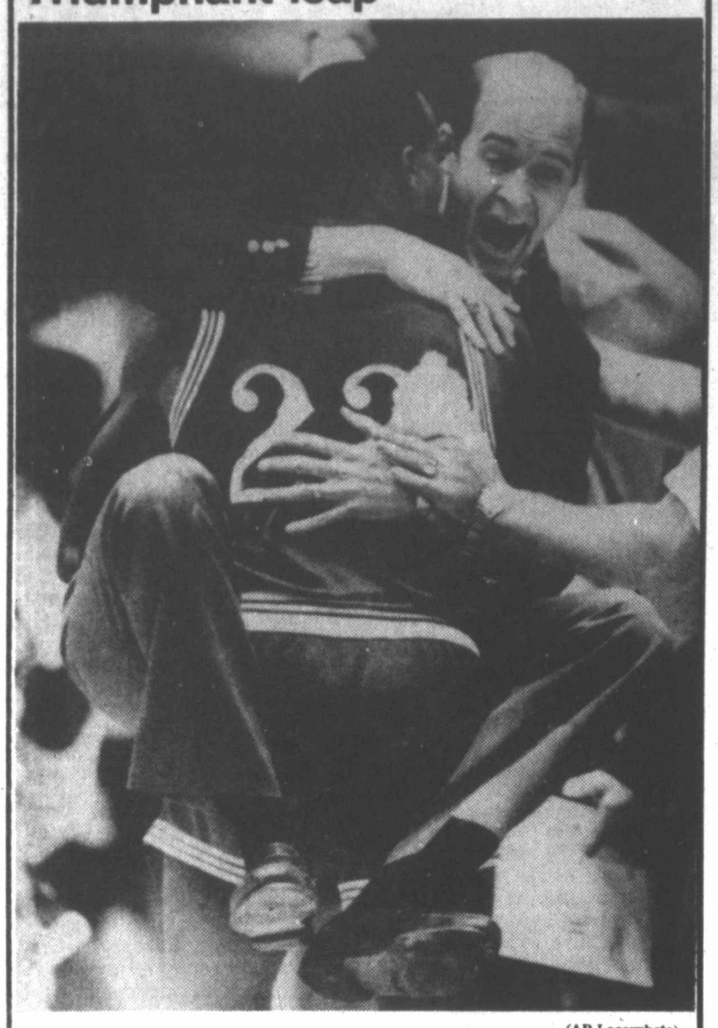

Did you know that Fred Wilpon, president of the Mets, played on the same Brooklyn high school baseball team as Hall of Famer Sandy Koufax. And, Wilpon was a left-handed pitcher and Koufax was the first baseman!

Cleveland Stadium, Chicago's Wrigley Field and Comiskey Park and Boston's Fenway Park are under consideration by the National Parks Service to be declared national historic landmarks.

Did you know that Babe Ruth hit his first professional home run outside the United States, at Toronto in 1914?

When Ruth retired from the Yankees, a Canadian, the late George Selkirk, took his place in right field.

Test scores may stop top gridders

By MICHAEL A. LUTZ
AP Sports Writer

Before signing college scholarship agreements last week, Texas schoolboy football players were judged on their 40-yard dash times and rushing and passing statistics.

Now they must measure up to 2.0 and 700.

Rules passed by the NCAA last year require entering freshmen to post at least a 2.0 grade point average and score 700 on the Scholastic Aptitude Test or forfeit one year of eligibility.

The state's two top running backs, McKinney's Randy Simmons and Dallas Carter's Darren Lewis, signed with the Texas Aggies but have not made the 700 minimum SAT score.

The Aggies signed Columbus blue chip receiver Percy Waddle last season although Waddle did not score high enough on his SAT. Waddle lost his freshman season at A&M but is expected to play next fall.

A&M Coach Jackie Sherrill said the SAT scores of Simmons and Lewis didn't change the Aggies recruiting strategy.

"I can tell if a young man is going to be able to make it," Sherrill said.

Sherrill said he judged an athlete's progress from junior high through high school to determine if he could make the adjustment to college.

"I can look at a kid and evaluate where he's going to be in four years," Sherrill said.

Sherrill and other college coaches are willing to take a risk with top blue chip prospects.

But the academic standards mean some players of slightly less than blue chip status will be denied a chance to play.

"There are a lot of really good players that weren't recruited this year," Houston Coach Jack Pardee said. "There are still some players on hold, people waiting to see if they get their core curriculum up or make the 700 SAT."

Is the 700 minimum too severe?

Dallas Carter Coach Freddie James says yes.

"I think they put the SAT out of reach for some athletes, and it's unfair," James said. "Some of them just aren't prepared to take the test."

Lewis scored a 470 on his SAT but James sees no problems ahead.

"He's got two more chances to take it and I think he'll pass it."

If Lewis is eligible and unhurt, he'll be a starter, James said.

"He can start for any school in the country," James said. "He'd have been a starter there last year."

Simmons has a 670 SAT score and is within reach of the 700 mark if he retakes the exam.

Port Arthur Lincoln Coach Joe Washington has seen the evolution of recruiting under the new guidelines.

"It's obvious, and it's not by choice," Washington said. "They've (recruiters) got to do it. Once they check a player's grades, if he can't qualify, they drop him like a hot potato."

Rice's academic standards are far above the rest of the SWC so Rice Coach Jerry Berndt doesn't feel threatened by a 700 SAT score.

But Berndt doesn't think scoring below 700 ends a player's chance to play college football.

"There are a number that won't be able to get in but I think it'll help the junior college system," Berndt said. "Maybe that's where they should be.

There's less pressure and they have a chance to adjust."

Ickles places second in motorcycle enduro

Seven members of the Top O' Texas Dirt Riders Association placed in the Concho Motorcycle Enduro held recently at San Angelo.

Kevin Ickles placed second in the 16 & under small wheel class for the best finish among the Pampa riders.

Brandon Strawn was third, Chris Ickles fourth and Tracy Bezner fifth in the 16 and under large wheel class. Dwight Chase was fourth in the 40 and over A class and Clint Deeds was fourth in the open A class. Keith Stowers was eighth in the open C class.

The terrain was rocky and recent rainfall made the course extremely slick. Out of 17 Pampa riders, only eight finished the course.

Also participating from Pampa were Danny Strawn, Jerod Cambern, Raney Bradley, Jackie Curtis, Lynn Bezner, G.M. Walls, Trey Walls, Mike Murray and Gerry Metts.

The next outing is Sunday at the Hackberry Enduro in Carlsbad, New Mexico.

The association is currently accepting applications for family memberships. The association has leased a 6,000 acre ranch near Turkey, which is available to members for motorcycle or ATV riding, camping and hunting. Anyone interested can contact Clint Deeds at 665-6950 or Lynn Bezner at 665-6539.

Bucks shock Stinnett

WHITE DEER — Boys in District 1-2A know by now that anything goes.

Scott Murray's Bucks, ranked fourth, certainly found that out Friday when they defeated the undefeated Stinnett Rattlers 55-50.

The Does had a "barn burner" against the Lady Rattlers, coming from a 21-15 halftime deficit to a 42-40 overtime win.

The Buck's upset came too late in the season to include them in the unpredictable world of the playoffs.

But Murray said it was an important game for his players' self esteem.

"We had a great night shooting and a great night defensively," Murray said.

Todd Haynes especially had a strong shooting game with 14 of his 16 game points coming from the field.

Still Stinnett led throughout the first three quarters until they ran into foul trouble in the fourth. This allowed Mike Bradley to make seven successful shots from the free throw line. Bradley had 13 points in all. Bart Thomas added 14 for the Bucks.

Kevin Thompson led the Rattlers with 23.

The Does pulled themselves from a dismal three-point first quarter and gathered steam through the third and fourth quarters to tie Stinnett at 36 at the end of play."

"It was nip and tuck by then," said Coach Derryl Friday.

The Doe's fourth-quarter rally was boosted by six points from Monica Vigil, who gathered 10 points altogether. Sophomore Jill Immell was the Doe scoring leader with 11.

Glenda Barker led Stinnett with 12.

Canadian girls make playoffs

SHAMROCK — Irish luck almost overcame unlucky Friday 13 in a tight turnover-ridden battle with Canadian. But after trailing by three at the half, the Cats stopped Shamrock 58-55

To District 2-2A champion Canadian, the Lady Wildcats 78-44 win over Shamrock Friday was about as necessary as a caffeine pill for a cheetah. But it was still a treat as Canadian rolls into post-district playoffs with an unbeaten record. They meet the Spearman Lynxettes 7 p.m. Friday in Perryton.

The Wildcats, undefeated in the first half of district play, clinched second place Saturday with a flip of a coin. At a meeting in Quanah Saturday morning, Memphis won the toss and took first. The Wildcats meet Class 1-2A Champion Stinnett Rattlers later this month.

Canadian and Shamrock often found themselves tied up, ending the first quarter with an 11-point tie and the third quarter with a 44 point tie.

Canadian Coach Greg Nichols said the match was a "pretty close game," but not necessarily a good one.

"It was a hard game to win," Nichols said. "But it really wasn't much of a game. It was just a matter of pride for whoever won it.

Canadian's top scorer, Ross Poyner was held to 24 while Robert Cervantes added 15. Chuck Daugherty gave Shamrock another good one with 23.

In girls' action, Canadian dominated all the way, thanks to a trio of 14 point rolls by Wendi Burns, Lucinda Dunham and Stephanie Harris. Canadian Coach Jackie Burns was especially pleased with Harris' comeback.

Groom girls advance to playoffs

By CATHY SPAULDING
Staff Writer

Friday the 13th and a full moon — not the best night for a basketball playoff game.

But the Groom Tigerettes and the Miami Warriors managed to rise above superstition and sweep themselves further toward the playoffs.

The Tigerettes held back the Warriorettes, 46-42, for a much-needed comeback to the District 2-1A playoffs. They will face Vega at 7 p.m. Tuesday at West Texas University Fieldhouse.

But for the Warriors, who survived a 68 to 64 rumble with the Claude Mustangs — the journey to the playoffs won't be over until they meet the Groom Tigers at 7 p.m. Monday in Pampa's McNeeley Fieldhouse.

The Warriorettes yearned for the win. It was the closest they've come to the playoffs since 1981. And, after threatening undefeated Claude Tuesday, they could almost touch the runner-up prize.

Groom's girls needed the win, however. It was three losses in their latest matches with Claude, Lefors and last-ranked Phillips that got them into Friday's predicament, and they counted on a win to regain their respect.

In the midst of the noise that filled McNeeley Fieldhouse were two seniors — one Tigerette, one Warriorette — whose careers were to come to a climax.

For Suni Barnett, Groom's 5'8" forward who has averaged 15.5 points per game, it was a rebirth after suffering through her three latest losses. By breaking far from the madding crowd and shooting from the outside corners of the court, she managed to pitch in 23 points.

For Robin Daugherty, Miami's 5'7" post, the game was her swan song, the end of a high school career in which she averaged 22 points a game her final year. Daugherty pulled through three aggravating quarters to a 15-point fourth period run. Racking up 27 for the game.

Groom hit the PHS gym floor running and ready to roll, snatching the ball and scoring two within the first 30 seconds of play. Barnett contributed four first-quarter points. But then, so did 5'6" senior Jowannah Ruthhardt, who is usually the team's most intimidating and noisiest defender. The duo managed to push the Tigerettes to a 14-8 lead at the end of the first quarter and 23-14 at the half.

The second half saw some revived Warriorettes make a 13-point third-quarter run, bringing themselves within a 33-27 spread.

By the fourth quarter, Daugherty forgot the date and connected on eight points from the field and seven from the line. This enabled Miami to twice move within two points of Groom, but the foul calls came too late to change the outcome. And Barnett's nine points didn't help Miami's situation either.

Daugherty and Barnett were the only players to hit double digits. Ruthardt was the closest Tigerette with six. Kristi Klaeverweiden and Alaine Dinsmore each added four for Miami.

Ironically, after opposing them in the girls' game, most Groom players and fans defected to Miami's side to cheer the Warriors in their Mustang overhaul. But that support will be short-lived when Groom meets Miami for the fourth time this year on Monday.

The first half was a tight squeeze for the Warriors and the Mustangs as Claude struggled to a 16-13 first quarter lead. An 11-point run by Miami's 6-1 senior John Locke — eight of those from the field — contributed to a 19-point rally that put Miami on top, 32-30, at the half.

During the third quarter, the Warriors broke away and turned the PHS gym into Fort Apache with a 20-point run, holding Claude to 12.

This brought the Warriors to a 10-point third quarter lead. Again, it was Locke's inside shooting — this time adding eight — that pulled it off.

And Miami Coach Currie McWilliams wondered what took them so long.

"That third quarter was what the first three minutes of the first quarter of our last game was like," McWilliams said.

Locke took it easy at the end, allowing Shane Bridwell to dominate the fourth quarter with 10 points.

Locke and Bridwell led Miami with 24 each. Jeff Bass added four. Lance Wood was Claude's leader with 18.

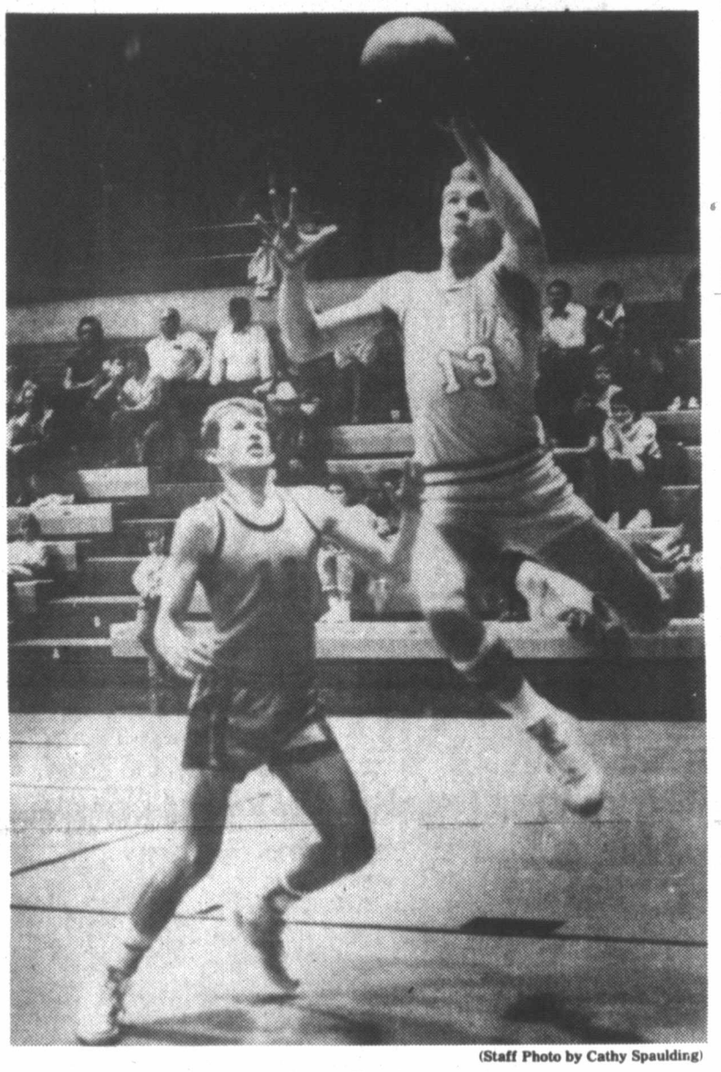

Despite the win, McWilliams wasn't pleased with the number of turnovers the Warriors allowed Claude.

"I know they turned over more times than we did. But when you press, you gamble," McWilliams said.

The Miami coach, who may just bring the Warriors to their first playoff visit in six years, said the Groom game will be a gamble. But it's a gamble that can be won with improved shooting, he believes.

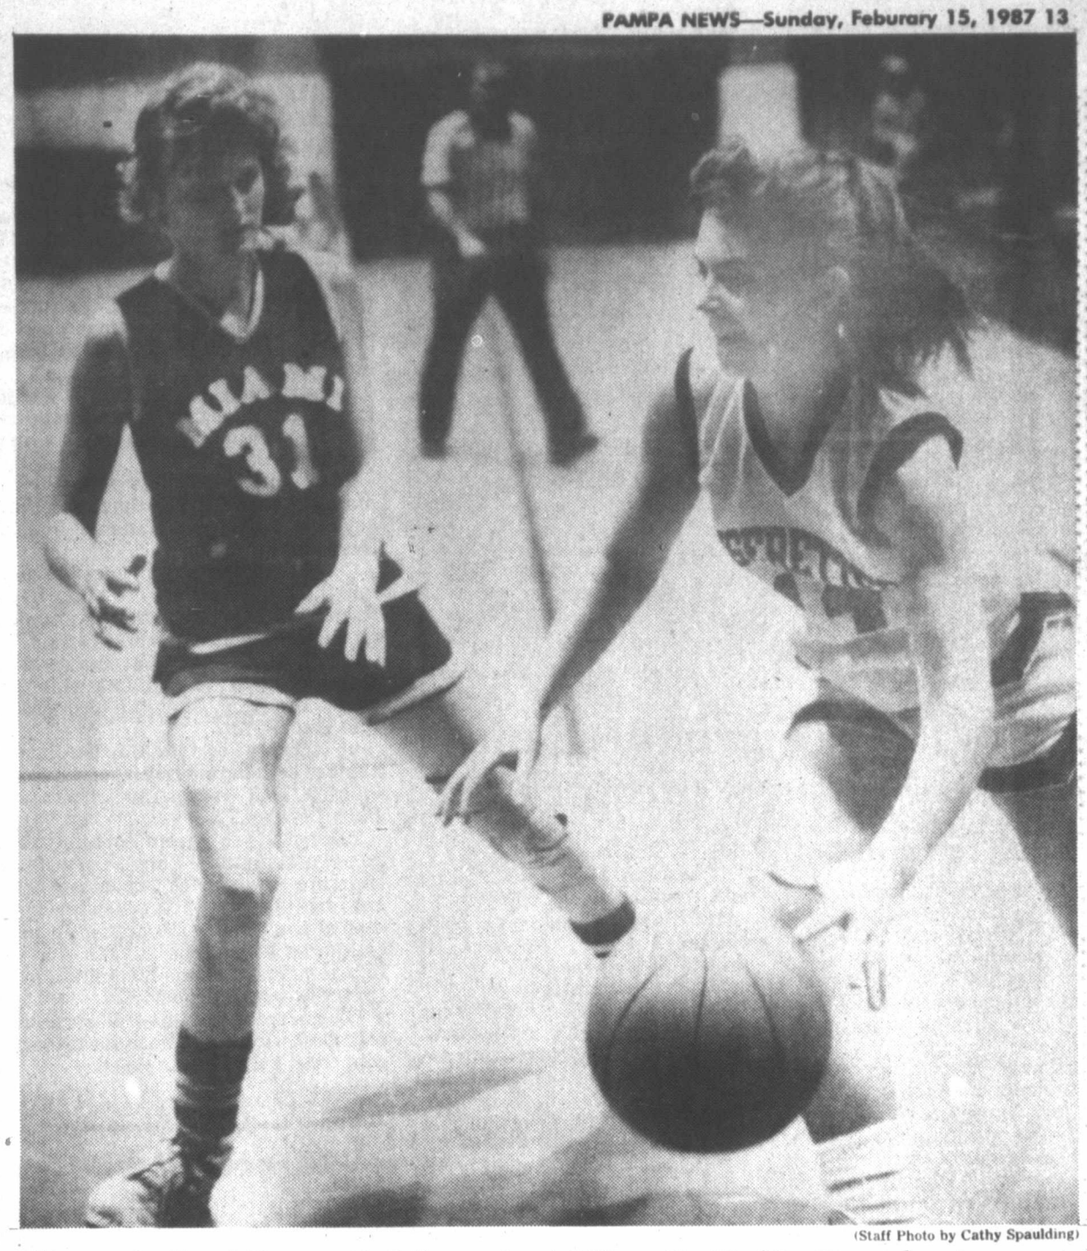

"We'll need to shoot 60 percent from the field," he said.

Groom Coach Gary Rambo acknowledged "we'll have to play awfully good ball and play good defense."

Valley View's grande dame is ready to pass the torch

By MARY DOCLAR
Gainesville Daily Register

VALLEY VIEW, Texas (AP) — It's not often that a mother of nine, grandmother of 40 and great-randmother of 25 is also a head cook and bottle washer at a senior citizen center, chief advocate of a clean-up campaign — and a city mayor.

But at 76, Valley View's Mary Bierschenk has managed to juggle that loaded schedule, which includes serving up meals at the local communtiy center, pushing to have the city's numerous deteriorating structures either fixed or demolished and presiding over city council meetings.

This is the sixth year Mrs. Bierschenk has been chief administrator of Valley View, and she seems to have made an impact on a small town that has been slowly gaining the attention of its bigger Cooke County counterparts.

Mrs. Bierschenk said she never has considered herself very civic-minded, but made a spur-of-the-moment decision to run for the mayoral position when she was working on the town's incorporation.

"This lawyer in Denton who I was working with on getting Valley View incorporated told me, 'Why don't you throw your hat in the ring for mayor?' " she said. "He said, 'When you want to get something across, you do it.' "

So Mrs. Bierschenk took the advice, and the gamble, and ended up head of a city — at 70 years old. Her age and the fact that she is a woman was "at first, a little bit of a problem," she admitted. But she said that her first all-male council quickly learned to live with the supervision of an older woman.

Building a center where senior citizens could gather for meals, activities and friendship had long been one of Mrs. Bierschenk's top priorities, even before she was elected mayor. With some help from the Texoma Area Council on Aging and many donations, the Valley View Community Center, a plain metal structure located off Farm Road 922, opened its doors to the town's seniors in 1979.

It was Mrs. Bierschenk's first and biggest accomplishment.

"For the ones that come, it's a blessing to them," she said. "If they didn't come here, they'd never get out anywhere."

Today, Mrs. Bierschenk runs the senior citizen's program at the center, preparing meals on Tuesdays and Thursdays and playing cards with the people that come here for the fun and fellowship.

Proceeds from the monthly covered-dish luncheons, as well as rent collected from groups using the facility for special events, keep the center financially afloat.

But Mrs. Bierschenk's labors haven't stopped with that. She has worked to clean up Valley View, urging residents to pick up their trash and trying to straighten up some of the city's older buildings.

Although the city does not own any of its own utilities, Mrs. Bierschenk and city council members have been discussing the possibility of Valley View's gaining control over its own sewage system, a step that would give the city some much-needed revenue.

Also under Mrs. Bierschenk's leadership, the city has hired a deputy. Although the crime rate is fairly low in the city, Mrs. Bierschenk said, "It's nice for people to know they have a little protection here."

The mayor was born and reared in nearby Lindsay, where she also married her husband, Bill Bierschenk.

The couple began farming their own land near Lindsay, on a spot located, unfortunately, right where the U.S Army had chosen to build a World War II training facility: Camp Howze.

When the Bierschenks had to move out of the way of the Army, they went to Pilot Point. Eighteen months and one bad land deal later, they ended up in a shanty in Valley View, where the family once again took up farming grain and cotton.

Prospective owner maps out Greyhound plans

By WENDY E. LANE
Associated Press Writer

DALLAS (AP) — Talk to Fred Currey about the bus business and you might as well be discussing the U.S. Constitution.

"I have a very deep belief that transportation is right up there with the fundamental rights that Americans demand and come to expect in their lives," says the prospective owner of Greyhound Lines Inc.

It may sound idealistic, but it was just that kind of approach that convinced the bus line's union leaders to come to terms with Currey on a new contract.

The pact, which cuts wages by an estimated 20 percent, puts Currey on the road to hurdling his second obstacle: resurrecting Greyhound.

Competition among airlines has cut deeply into the bus industry's customer base, leading to cutbacks in bus routes, and deregulation also has caused profits to skid.

At Greyhound, for which Currey's investor group will pay $350 million when the deal closes March 19, ridership has fallen 48 percent since 1980.

In recent years, the bus line has cut the number of communities it serves from 14,000 to 2,000, said Greyhound Corp. spokesman Herb Doherty.

The bus line's parent company, Phoenix-based Greyhound Corp., does not report separate earnings for Greyhound Lines. But earnings in the transportation services group dipped from about $50 million in 1981 to an estimated $47 million in 1985. And the 1985 figure included about $26 million in income from the sale of property.

The company said its 1986 earnings in the transportation group were down about 12 percent from the previous year.

Analysts agree that the new Greyhound labor contract gives Currey, 54, more flexibility in steering Greyhound down the road to increased profitability, but they say Currey still may be facing an uphill battle.

"You can't save your way to prosperity," said Dudley Heer, an analyst with Duff & Phelps in Chicago.

Armed with a plan that includes targeting specific markets and reconnecting Greyhound's route network with rural areas cut off by industry deregulation, Currey said he first will focus on rebuilding Greyhound's core business.

"I want to restore the fundamental building block of quality inter-city transportation on our existing buses and using our existing drivers," he said, adding that service will be stressed.

Chairman of a Dallas charter bus leasing company, Currey will bring to Greyhound his expertise in the burgeoning charter business. The attitude of the bus line's present owners and the union's work rules have combined to wipe out Greyhound's markets in that segment, he said.

"We have to treat package express as the precious commodity that it is," said Currey of the bus line's parcel business.

He plans to increase ridership by linking passengers in both suburban and rural areas with Greyhound's trunk routes.

Using retired Greyhound drivers in rural areas and vans paid for largely by the towns served, passengers would be taken to urban bus stations and hospitals, he said.

Because some passengers, particularly senior citizens, are unable or reluctant to travel from their suburban homes to downtown bus terminals, Greyhound vans will run to and from suburban areas, promoted by special senior citizens' days, Currey said.

He also hopes to beef up contract service with city transit authorities, airports and airlines.

Currey's affiliation with the bus industry began in 1974 and includes a stint at the helm of Greyhound's chief competitor, Trailways Inc., and the chairmanship of the Dallas Transit System.

He also has been associated with several aviation ventures and currently heads Storehouse Inc., a furniture retailer, and EngineTech Inc., an importer and distributor of engine parts.

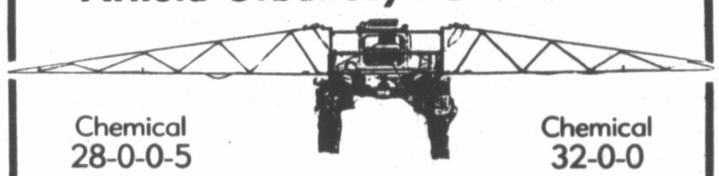

Although the rank-and-file members have until Feb. 23 to ratify the new three-year contract — and could reject it altogether — Currey credits the leaders of the Amalgamated Transit Union, which represents about 7,500 Greyhound workers, with paving the way for what he sees as Greyhound's rejuvenation.

The proposed contract includes provisions for incentive pay based on increases in passenger loads, rates per mile that are an estimated 20 percent lower than current levels, and guaranteed job security for drivers and mechanics with more than five years experience. Also included are work rules changes that permit drivers to accumulate more miles.

"These were the most unusual labor discussions I have participated in because Currey, rather than coming to the table to see how much he could squeeze from the employees, came to ask the employees to work with him in rebuilding the company and to share the benefits of the results," said union president Domenic Sirignano.

The union had rejected concessions to the company in November, before Currey became involved.

GREG HARDEN greases a backhoe during an afternoon of work at Miami Roustabout Service. Harden is one of the DECA students employed in fields showing the variety of careers covered in marketing education courses.

DECA Week honors students in marketing

National DECA Week honors students in marketing education, the vocational instructional program designed to prepare motivated young people for marketing related careers.

At Pampa High School, 22 students are enrolled in the marketing and distributive education classes with Leta Olson as coordinator. The students also are members of Distributive Education Clubs of America, an organization provided to generate and offer activities to stimulate healthy competition among marketing students.

In addition to classroom work and club activities, students also have the opportunity to gain employment by which they can put their knowledge to use in gaining experience along with a paycheck.

In their classwork, students study the economic system and the theory and principles of marketing. Then, through their jobs and DECA events, they practice what they've learned. Students also train part-time in a cooperating business by running a concession in the vocational building.

Students thus combine classroom instruction with on-the-job training, earning academic credit for supervised training. DECA serves as a tool for further enhancement of classroom training, offering training conferences and competitive events on regional, state and national levels.

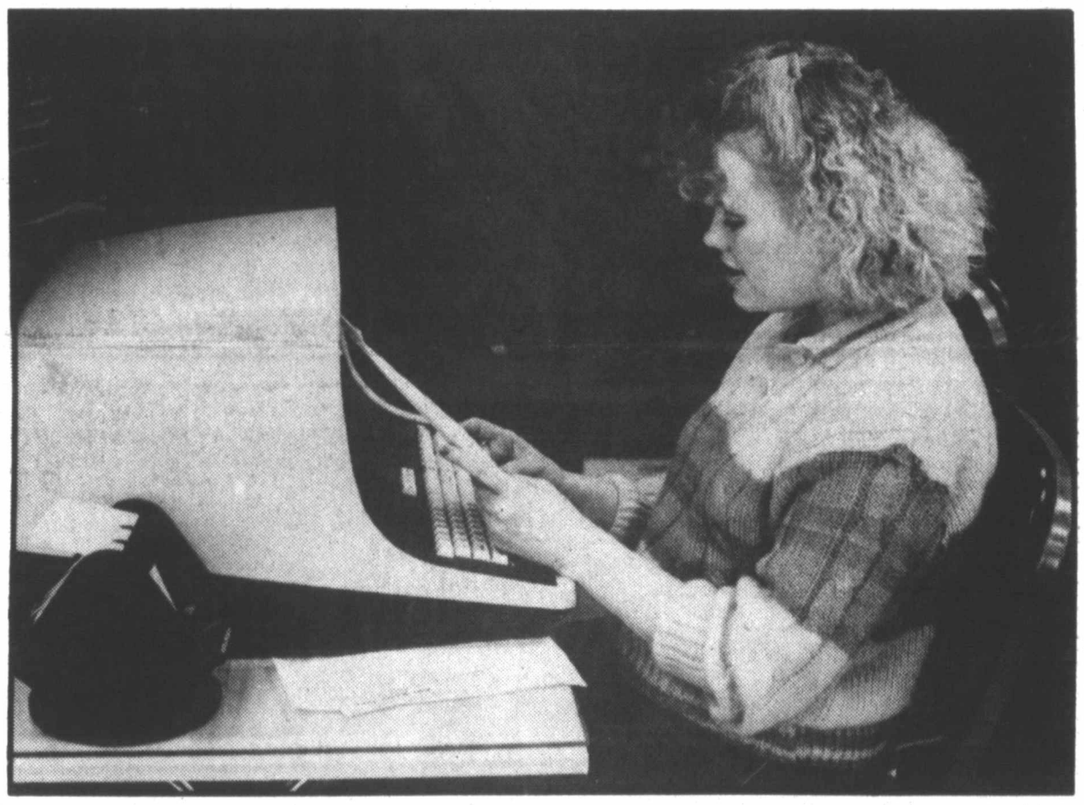

Marketing education gives students exposure to a variety of marketing careers and allows them to make a more positive selection of a vocation. More than one-third of all occupations are related to the field of marketing.

The classwork and club activities also give students a way to secure entry-level, midmanagement and entrepreneurial positions in marketing positions in keeping with their individual goals.

Marketing education is more than retail store occupations. It also includes such fields as advertising and display, automotive and petroleum marketing, fashion merchandising, finance and credit services, floristry, farm and garden supplies, hardware and building materials, food services, hotel and motel management, insurance, real estate, transportation and even recreation, tourism and travel services.

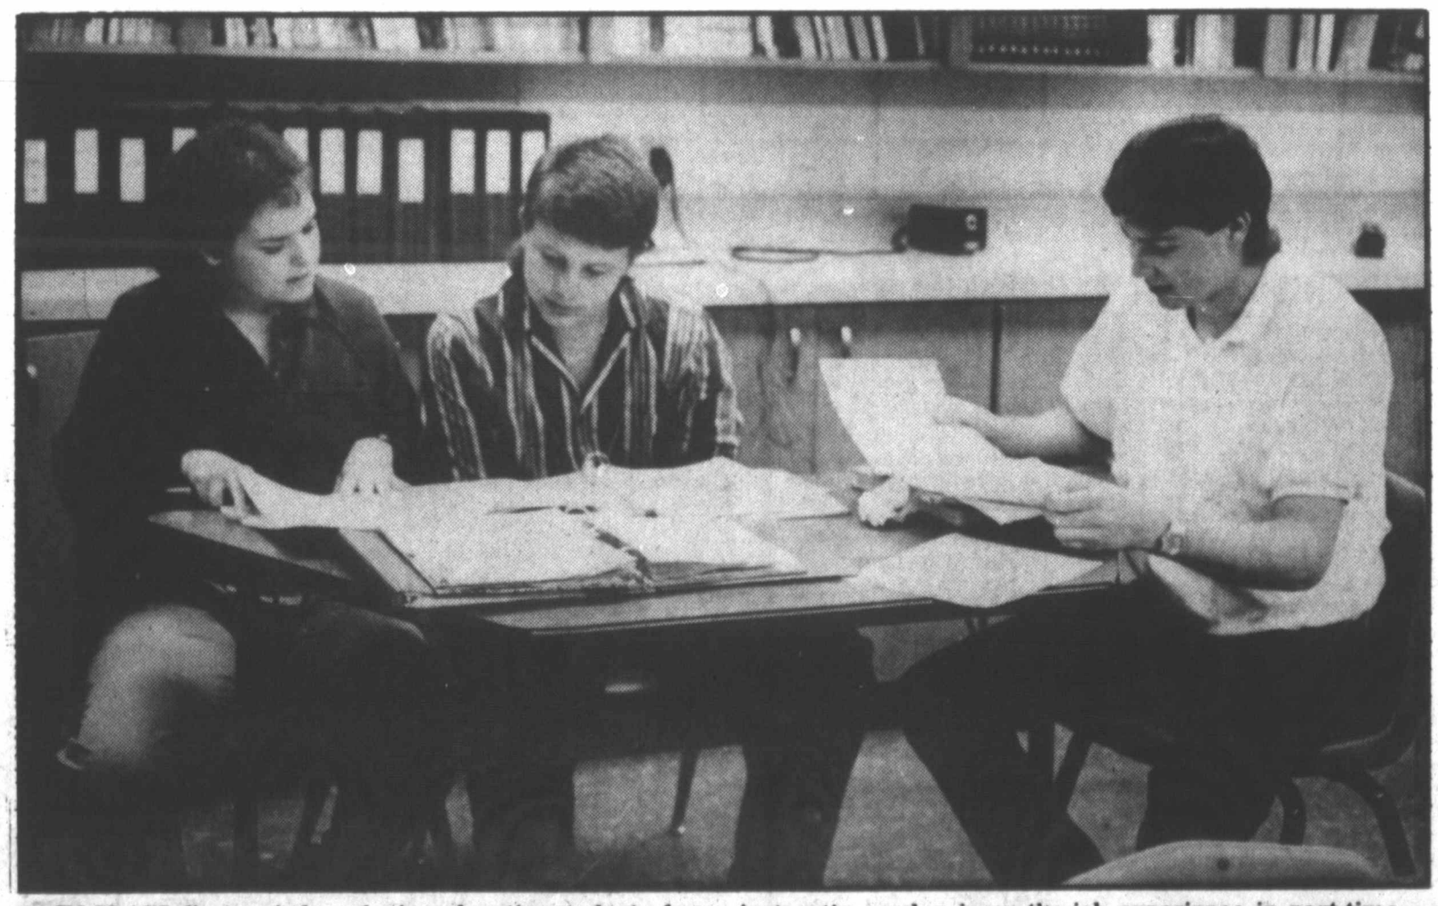

Current students and their employers include Jimmy Duvall, Rheams Jewelry; Roy Koontz and Debra Banks, Pampa Hardware; Kim Loveless, Total Entertainment; Shelly Stout, Waldenbooks; David Aud, Pampa Country Club Pro Shop; Lisa Campbell, J&M Family Shoes; Cindy Cowan, Taco Villa; Kim Estes, The Pampa News; Tonette Murry, Maurice's; and Marc Reed, Pampa Country Club.

Others are Vance Vanderburg, T's Carpet; Stephen Winton, Wal Mart; Tiffany Bynum, Food Emporium; Melanie Drake, Zales Jewelry; Greg Harden, Miami Roustabout; Wade Helton, Pat Helton Well Service; Sheri Jones, Wal Mart Shoe Department; Victor Jones, John Lee Bell Inc.; Karla Stout and Michele Wallace, Dunlap's; and Ricky Smiley.

Handicap doesn't stop young soccer player

MADERA, Calif. (AP) — Seven-year-old Zachary Williams walks on two wooden legs, but he still plays soccer with the rest of his schoolmates.

That's probably because his parents have encouraged him not to think of himself as different from other children.

Zachary, who has a genetic defect that left him with no knees or lower legs, learned to get around on artificial limbs at a young age.

When people commented on his disability, "we'd answer as briefly as we could," said his mother, Barbara. "Eventually, Zachary started asking us why people were asking."

The Williams "always tried to downplay any problems with Zachary's legs," Mrs. Williams explained. "We just told him it was no big deal. We emphasize the positive and let him try anything he wants.

"And we've tried to build his self-esteem so he can handle it if he gets knocked down."

Glow-in-dark lamp created as reminder of Chernobyl

By JOHN NOLAN
Associated Press Writer

CINCINNATI (AP) — Toy designer Gary Piaget says he has received good and bad reactions to the glow-in-the-dark lamp he helped create to keep attention focused on the Soviet Union's Chernobyl nuclear plant accident.

Piaget, 41, a Cincinnati native who created the lamp with two partners, said he intended it as a reminder to Americans about the need to safely use nuclear power.

"It's not that we're perpetuating something. Actually, we're trying to raise consciousness," Piaget said in an interview. "I think no product that I've worked on has raised people's concerns in such ways."

The polyethylene plastic lamp stands 14½ inches tall and is molded in the shape of the mushroom-shaped cloud associated with the aftermath of an atomic bomb blast.

The semitranslucent plastic lamp can house a white or colored bulb, allowing its owner to determine its tint. It also glows in the dark.

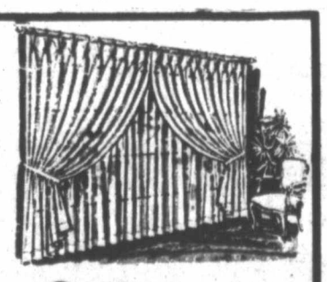

"After you turn it off, it glows in the dark, to give it what we call a nuclear half-life," Piaget said.

He said he had encountered various reactions to the lamp.

"Some people who see it find it to be fantastic," he said. "But other people, whom you would expect to be more liberal, think it's in poor taste."

The lamp has been marketed nationally for about six months through Piaget's company, ICM Industries of Cincinnati. He estimated that about 5,000 of the lamps have been sold, but he has no target sales figure.

Piaget hopes to eventually market the lamp in other countries.

BRINGING NEAR AND DEAR TOGETHER

In this day and age, when family and friends scatter far and wide, a wedding is an occasion for bringing all your "near and dear" back together. Here are some thoughts on entertaining and accommodating the "out-of-towners".

If you're going to have a substantial out-of-town contingent, contact your local hotels and see what discounts they might offer. Many will give you a better rate if you can promise them 10 or more people.

* * *

When you've invited people you haven't seen in a long time, you may not want to wait until the wedding to see them. Consider an informal get-together when they arrive. If you're too busy with last-minute wedding details, provide your out-of-towners with some tips on local entertainment.

* * *

Put together a "memories" tour for your bridegroom's family: the house you grew up in, schools you went to, etc. It will help them feel closer to you.

Happiness is made, not found

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

DEAR READERS: Hello, young lovers. And older lovers, too. Some years ago, I wrote a column on how to keep your man happy. As soon as that hit print, I was asked to write another column on how to keep your woman happy.

As a valentine to both men and women, here's an updated version on how to keep each other happy:

FOR WOMEN

Tell him often that you love him. (If you're married, don't ask him if he loves you, or he's liable to say, "I married you, didn't I?")

Never criticize him in public. If you do have a criticism, be sure it's constructive and offered in the spirit of love and helpfulness — never in anger as a put-down.

Clip newspaper and magazine articles that might be helpful to him in his work. Also pass along cartoons or an amusing article you think he'll enjoy. Sharing means caring.

Don't bad-mouth his friends — or worse yet, his relatives.

Never keep him waiting. If he has a tendency to be late, when you're meeting him somewhere, always have something in your purse to read. It makes the waiting more tolerable, and you'll be less apt to chew him out when he finally shows up.

Don't call him at work unless it's absolutely necessary. Every man needs a desk, a closet or a cupboard to call his own. Don't try to tidy it up for him even though it's a cluttered mess and an eyesore.

If he eats — or drinks — a little too much, don't nag him about it. But do remind him in a loving way that you wish he'd take better care of himself because you'd like to have him around to grow old and gray with.

Never quiz him about where he's been (or with whom) when you weren't with him.

Don't sulk. If something's bugging you, talk it out and clear the air.

Never lie to him. If there's something you prefer not to tell him, reserve the right to remain silent. But if you tell him something, be sure it's the truth.

Keep yourself kissing clean from head to toe.

Develop some interests other than him. The more interests you have, the more interesting you'll be.

Surprise him occasionally. A little love note left on his pillow, in his lunch pail or briefcase will warm his heart.

FOR MEN

Tell her you love her. She can't hear it too often.

If you like the way she looks, dresses, talks, smells — let her know it. You can't compliment a woman too much.

Never try to make her jealous.

Treat her with the same respect and courtesy you show women you don't know as well.

In addition to remembering her on all the usual gift-giving occasions — birthdays, anniversaries, Christmas or Hanukkah and St. Valentine's Day — surprise her with a little gift for no reason at all.

If you've had an especially wonderful evening, the next morning send her flowers or a single rose. If she's a working woman, send it to her place of employment. She'll appreciate it twice as much.

If you use her car, bring it back washed, with a full tank.

Walk up behind her and plant a kiss on the back of her neck.

Remember, cleanliness is next to godliness, so when you feel turned on, turn on the shower and jump in.

When you're at a party together, never leave her alone while you're off dancing — or being charming — with someone else. (Most women are not as resourceful and aggressive as men in social situations.)

Tell her she is absolutely the most wonderful person in the world, and she'll believe that you are.

If you want to be loved, be loving.

Be nice to her relatives and they'll tell her how lucky she is to have you.

Food labels help dieters lose weight

Homemakers' News

Donna Brauchi

With the number of overweight adults and children, it is not surprising that many are looking for lower calorie foods, and cutting calories begins with selecting nutritious foods. Next comes preparing those nutritious foods with a minimum of added calories from fats and sugars. Finally, serving sizes must be reasonable. Little is accomplished if foods are prepared to be low calorie, but then consumed in large amounts.

Food labeling can provide background information necessary for making substantial calorie reductions. Many processed foods have nutrition labels. This information is required for foods that make a nutritional claim, but can be found on many foods which make no nutritional claim. Read the label to cut calories. Many products are labeled "light", "lite", or a variety of other terms to indicate that the product is low in calories.

DIABETIC FOODS may be appropriate for people with diabetes. The label must state "Diabetics: This product may be useful in your diet on the advice of a physician." If the food is not low-calorie or reduced calorie, the label must also state "This food is not a reduced-calorie food."

DIET OR DIETETIC foods must comply with either the "low-calorie" or "reduced-calorie" food regulations, or regulations for foods used for dietary purposes other than weight control such as formulated meal replacements and foods for low sodium diets.

FOODS USEFUL IN WEIGHT CONTROL that contain a non-nutritive sweetener must declare that fact and the percentage by weight of the non-nutritive ingredient on the label. (FDA considers aspartame to be a nutritive sweetener.)

FORMULATED MEAL REPLACEMENTS are useful in calorie control programs, but are not necessarily low in calories. For exmple, many diet plan meals contain "regular foods" at controlled portions which intrinsically limit calories. Also, a variety of "meal replacements" are intended to be consumed in lieu of a meal, helping to control caloric intake.

LIGHT (LITE) FOODS contain less of such substances as fat, sugar or alcohol, and they are usually lower in calories. When "light" represents a claim for weight control, these foods are expected to conform with regulations for low or reduced-calorie foods.

LOW-CALORIE FOODS can claim to be "low calorie" only if a serving has not more than 40 calories. These foods also must have no more than 0.4 calories per gram (except for sugar substitutes). The principal display panel which almost always bears the product's trademark or trade name, must also bear the words "low calorie", "low in calories," or "a low calorie food."

REDUCED-CALORIE FOODS contain at least one-third fewer calories than an equivalent serving of the food for which they substitue. The label must list the calorie content of a serving of the "reduced-calorie" food and the caloric content of a serving of the food for which it substitutes. The information must appear on the same panel with nutrition and ingredient information. Also, reduced-calorie food must be similar in all sensory properties (taste, smell, mouth feel, etc.) to the food for which it substitutes, and must not be nutritionally inferior.

SUGAR-FREE OR SUGAR-LESS foods may be labeled "low calorie" or "reduced calorie" if they meet the requirements for those foods. If not low in calories, they must be accompanied by a phrase such as "not a low or reduced calorie food", or a more specific statement of non-diet functions such as "only helps avoid tooth decay". Sugar-free foods may contain sugar alchohols (such as sorbutol, rylitol, or mannitol) which have the same calories as sugar, but may not cause a rapid rise in blood sugar. These foods must state that the product is not for weight control.

Get in the habit of being a nutrition label reader. It will be a great help as you cook and eat light! For more information on low calorie food planning and preparation, contact your Gray County Extension Service.

Pampan designs quilt for Sesquicentennial

A Texas Sesquicentennial quilt designed and made by Jil Branan of Pampa is on temporary display during February and part of March at White Deer Land Museum, 116 S. Cuyler.

The quilt is part of a special display which includes historic quilts, friendship quilts and campaign quilts.

"Tribute to the Cowhand" is an original quilt design that portrays the ranching industry and especially the cowhands. Some of the quilt squares depict cowboy boots arranged in a circle with a star in the middle. The boots are embroidered to simulate the elaborate stitchery often found on cowboy boots. The star represents Texas, the Lone Star State, which leads the country in the production of cattle.

Branan also used bandanas and plaid cloth in the quilt. The bandana is used by cowhands as a filter against dust and as protection against the sun and the cold. The plaid is a traditional fabric for Western shirts.

Outline quilting was used in the blocks to ehphasize the boots and lone star. Barbed wire is shown in the red borders and latticework by a quilting design. Quilting is also used to emphasize the plaid and bandana designs in the borders.

The quilt is bound with a bias binding of bandana fabric. Fabrics, thread and batting used in the quilt are representative of the cotton and chemical industries found in Texas, which leads the nation in cotton production. Polyester, produced by chemical companies, is used in blended fabrics, threads and batting. Dyes, also produced by chemical companies, are used in fabric designs.

The back of the quilt is embroidered with this message: In honor of the Sesquicentennial of Texas, (c) Jil G. Branan, Pampa, Texas, September 20, 1985.

"I'm from Georgia. We came here a little over two years ago. One of my images of Texas has always been the cowboy. When we were driving up here, about five miles south of town some cowboys drove up and pulled off the road in a pickup. They had a trailer with horses and unloaded the horses to work cattle. That gave me the idea for the quilt," Mrs. Branan said.

It took 200 hours to design and make the quilt. The embroidery on the boots and other details was the most time-consuming part, Mrs. Branan said.

The quilt was photographed as a pre-entry to publicize "The Great Texas Quilt Roundup," a contest sponsored by the Texas Sesquicentennial Quilt Association, Melvin Simon and Associates, and The Rouse Company, with $5,000 in prizes for comtemporary quilters to honor the Texas Sesquicentennial. Entrants created quilts about Texas in six different theme categories: Texas history and symbols; cultural influences in Texas; nature in Texas; traditional Texas patterns; Texas industry; and Texas myths and heroes.

"Tribute to the Cowhand" has already been on display in Austin as part of a show for Texas Quilt Appreciation Week. It was displayed with the 100 contest winners in a state tour, and was included in the International Quilt Festival in Houston.

RABBIT PROJECT NEWS

Due to some problems we faced in our rabbit breeding projects, we have made some changes in rules for our Gray County Rabbit Show. Instead of Meat Pens, we will have a class of single fryers which are rabbits less than 10 weeks old and less than 5 pounds in weight. In the breeding classes, we currently have Buck and Doe classes for New Zealands, Californians and Satins. As a change in the breeding classes, we will add two classes of all other breeds of bucks and does and we will also make the ownership deadline for Breeding Classes Feb. 27.

Entry deadlines for the Gray County Rabbit Show will be Friday, Feb. 27, at 5 p.m.

We will also have a work day to build rabbit pens for the county stock show on Saturday, Feb. 28, at 8 a.m. until whenever at the Clyde Carruth Livestock Pavillion.

The next regular rabbit meeting will be at 7 p.m. Monday, Feb. 16 at the Courthouse Annex.

Entries can be made at the Monday rabbit meeting.

MEAT JUDGING PRACTICE

The next Meat Judging Team practice will be at 5 p.m. Monday, Feb. 16 at the Courthouse Annex. We will meet for a couple of hours and anyone is welcome to attend.

Pampans entertain, show appreciation

Peeking at Pampa

By Katie

If your schedule upsets you, children interrupt you, the wind chills you, simply pour a cup of hot brew, find a comfortable spot and together we'll peek around town.

Odessa East knows what it's like to be completely surprised several times in one day. When she drove up to Coronado Nursing Center one morning last week, she discovered that what she thought to be a "For Sale" sign proved to read "Greatest Activities Director — Odessa East." Staff members worked frantically to prepare for a "This Is Your Life" program, narrated by Rev. Norman Rushing while Cheryl Albus, director of nursing, took Odessa downtown to seek her advice on selecting wedding dress fabric. There were gifts, cards, a corsage to express appreciation from residents, staff, volunteers and family for Odessa's 12 years of dedicated, unselfish service to appreciative residents of the nursing center. Congratulations, Odessa, on a job well done.

Wedding congratulations to Cheryl Albus and Gary McFall, who were married yesterday. The Valentine's Day theme was used, even to Cheryl's soft red wedding dress.

Burger King hosted an early Valentine party, a community outreach program, for residents at Coronado Nursing Center, complete with refreshments, prizes, wheelchair races, games, music.

Another new business has opened way out north on Highway 70. Bob Dawson is the owner of the Fish Net Restaurant, where the Barbed Wire used to be.

It's especially nice to have Trinity Jones and her husband back in our midst. Spied her, sparkly and always helpful, working at Texas Furniture. A penny says her folks, Donna and Wayne Acker, are pleased to have them close to home.

Stella Arrington chose a beautiful afternoon to do a little shopping and visiting around town. Maybe she had a bad case of cabin fever.

Norma Jean Healy entertained cosmetologists from L & R Beauty Shop with dinner at the Pampa Country Club. Guests, still talking about the elegant evening, were Leona Rhodes, Yong Menkhoff, C.J. Jackson, Brenda Rohrbacher. Ken McGuire missed the fun because of illness.

A warm business welcome to Sharon Haynes and Edward Patman, both CPAs. Sharon, certified in 1976, lives a few miles out of McLean with her husband Thacker and 14-year-old son J.T. and not far from Linda and Sam Haynes, Thacker's parents. Sharon had worked in Pampa part of the time before opening her office here recently. Edward moved to Pampa from McLean with the opening of the office.

Dori Kidwell made her TWIRP dinner date with Dustin Miller an evening to remember, and, as an added bonus, one that caused quite a stir among on-lookers. For a beginning a friend took pictures as they entered the restaurant. The "RESERVED" table was all dolled up with a red rose and a bouquet of balloons. Dori and Dustin, two cute young people, had a blast of a date. By the way, just what does "TWIRP" stand for, anyway?

When Melba Jo Riddle was an eighth grader, she began corresponding with a pen pal, Stig Daun of Stockholm, Sweden. Thirty-seven years later, Stig and his wife Eva came to Pampa to visit Melba Jo and Don and to conduct business in Austin, Kansas City and New York. He is a personnel director for a publishing house. They loved eating Coney Islands with Ted and Johnnie Gikas, a first-time-ever taste treat. Another evening it was rib-eye steaks, tender and juicy, not tough as in Sweden. Because Eva's luggage was lost, there was a shopping spree, netting comfortable shoes from Hub Homer. They loved the gospel music with its lilting tunes at Lamar Full Gospel Assembly with Rev. Gene Allen as minister, quite a contrast to the more solemn music of their Swedish Protestant Lutheran Church. Sunday evening there was a gathering of friends to meet and visit at Melba Jo's house. Eva and Stig returned to Sweden with great impressions and memories of the warmth and friendliness of Pampa, rather than the braggarts with loud voices they had expected, wide open spaces without even a dip in the road, and the absence of forests of trees. They do want to return for more good ole Texas hospitality!

Klahr (Mrs. Bob) Jewell's reputation as a top pickle maker extends as far away as Fort Worth. When Mayor Bob Bolen and his wife Fran of Fort Worth tasted Klahr's pickles she had given a relative, Bob was smitten. Sooooo, Klahr sent the Mayor a jar for his very own, which brought a nice thank you note back to the pickle maker-giver.

Complimentary comments trailed far into the week following Lohnie Shelton's solo last Sunday morning at Central Baptist Church.

Sad news: Noel Domango and Luna and children Michael and Dustin, Rocky and Fedes Garrido, four nurses at Coronado Community Hospital, soon will be relocating in the Los Angeles area to be near family. Noel and Rocky, lifelong friends, came to Pampa six years ago. Susie Smith, R.N., will replace Noel as head nurse of ICU. Rocky's replacement as head nurse of surgery floor hasn't been announced. Both families will leave countless friends and appreciative patients. "Good wishes!!" "Good luck!!"

Jane and John Gattis spent last week visiting former Pampans the Rev. Dick and Helen Whitwam in Carlsbad.

Ernest and Dorothy Barnett has a welcome visitor from Lubbock, their daughter Jana Barnhill.

New residents at Coronado Nursing Center are Gladys Osborne, Gladys Jaynes, Eula Cooper, and Mr. and Mrs. James King. Golden Kiwanis donated an ice cream machine to CNC residents. They also provide small TV sets to residents unable to purchase their own. When there is a need, they are ready to help.

Wanda Watson visited her mother Aulsie Scott in Plainview.

Did you know that Anna Mae Tripplehorn stays in tip top physical condition by jogging THREE miles every day?!!!

Elise and R.J. Sailor usually and frequently fly to vacation spots around the country. Their latest trip, however, was a bus tour to California.

"Bud" Adair gets a nice vote of thanks and appreciation for delivering the mail and always with a cheery smile and warm "Hello!"

Beverly Clark, administrator of CNC, attended continuing education courses in Austin.

Dorothy Buzzard looked warm and cheerful in a furry red had.

See you next week. Katie.

Vineyard course Saturday

By JOE VanZANDT
County Extension Agent

VINEYARD SHORT COURSE

A West Texas Vineyard Management Short Course will be held on Saturday, Feb. 21 in Lubbock. It will be held at the Texas A&M Research and Extension Center located on the east side of Highway 87, north of Lubbock.

Registration begins at 7:30 a.m. while the program runs from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. Discussion topics include: history, soil, sites, soil nutrition, varieties, trellis and vine training, pruning, insects, disease and weed control, rootstocks, irrigation, harvest and sampling and economics.

Registration fees are $35 for individuals and $45 for couples. The program is sponsored by the Extension Service, Experiment Station and Texas Grape Growers Association.

FARMERS MARKET

There is some interest around the area in starting a Farmers Market here in Pampa. A meeting has been scheduled for 7 p.m. Thursday, Feb. 19 in the Courthouse Annex meeting room. The main purpose of this meeting will be to determine the full extent of interest in the Farmers Market idea among area producers.

The general time frame for operation of the market would be August, September and possibly October.

The start-up of this farmers market will depend largely on having enough producers interested in bringing produce to the market on a regular basis.

TREES AND SHRUBS NEED ANNUAL "LUBE" JOB

Have you given your fruit trees and landscape plants their annual "lube" job? This refers, of course, to an application of dormant oil to control scale insects.

Why control scale insects?

The answer is simply to save the tree or shrub. If a scale insect such as the San Jose scale, white peach or euonymus gets started, it could kill your plants.

Dormant oil can be purchased at many different stores where garden supplies are sold. Be sure to follow all label directions and apply the mixture when the temperature is between 40-70 degrees F. Do not apply if a freeze is likely within 48 hours after application, and do not apply after the tree has budded out. Dormant oil is applied when the tree is dormant. Spraying flowers and leaves could cause leaf burn and flower drop.

Scale insects are difficult for most people to detect, so dormant oil should be applied once each year. Sooner or later your tree will probably be attacked by scale insects, so be ready by guarding against them with an application of dormant oil. Euonymus shrubs are very susceptible and should definitely receive an application of dormant oil.

In addition to dormant oils, there are other types of petroleum oils available — summer and superior. Oils on the market today are greatly improved over the earlier formulated oils. They are lighter, more highly refined, well standardized and consistent. These petroleum oils can be used with few problems if the user reads and follows label directions.

We have a new leaflet, L-2090, that discusses the use of the various oils. Also, it discusses mixing other pesticides with the oils. Come by the County Extension Office for your copy of L-2090, Petroleum Oil Spray.

What amazing piece of machinery pumps 2,100 gallons through 70,000 miles at the rate of 100,000 times per day? Over a lifetime, this machine fills 13 (1 million barrel capacity) supertankers. It never wears out, yet is only the size of a man's fist.

This incredible machine is your HEART! Even though the heart is one of the most durable body organs, over one third of all deaths are heart related.

What destroys your heart? Diet Center believes that a major cause is FAT. Those bulges of fatty tissue have an adverse effect upon the heart. Every extra pound above ideal weight adds 200 to 1,000 miles of blood vessels that your heart must utilize. Fatty tissue also requires more blood than lean tissue, forcing the heart to pump faster as well as harder.

February is National Heart Month. Respect your heart! Don't abuse it by becoming overweight. If you are overweight, your Diet Center Counselor has an effective weight-loss program for you!

Phoebe (Brantley) isn't sure how to react to Leo's (Langley) advances.

ACT I to present 'Romantic Comedy'

Valentine's Day may have already come and gone, but that won't keep Pampa's Area Community Theater Inc. from exploring the comical affairs of the heart in its production of Bernard Slade's Romantic Comedy.

The adult comedy will be one of ACT I's popular dinner theater productions, 6:30 p.m. Friday and Saturday at the M.K. Brown Heritage Room. Cost with meal is $7 for season ticket holders and $13 for others.

The community theater will add an extra treat this year with a Sunday dessert matinee at 2 p.m. Feb. 22. The matinee — $3 for season ticket holders and $9 for others — will feature an international variety of desserts.

Romantic Comedy follows the 10-year collaboratin of the suave playwright Jason Carmichael and Phoebe Craddock, a mousy New England schoolmarm seeking her big break in play writing.

They meet on the day Jason is to marry classy Allison St. James.

Oh, the marriage does take place. But for the next 10 years, Jason's life is consumed with his relationship with Craddock.

Through Slade's intricate and somewhat risque storytelling, the audience meets other characters. There is Blanche Dailey, Jason's brassy, flamboyant agent and guide. There's Leo Janowitz, a somewhat scruffy journalist who sweeps Phoebe off her feet. Then there's Kate Malone, a gold-digging actress who snares Jason in a brief but "memorable" affair.

Director Rochelle Lacy mixes new faces with Pampa theater veterans in this fourth season highlight, and she's delighted with the results.

"The new cast is very good," Lacy said. "The audience is very definitely in for a suprise when Kate Mallory walks in."

She stressed that Romantic Comedy is adult entertainment, not a performance to bring the kids to.

The cast is anchored by longtimers Frank "Bud" Behannon as Jason and JoDalene Brantley as Phoebe.

Behannon, a chemist at Texaco, boasts a variety of ACT I roles, ranging from Santa Claus in ACT I's recent Christmas skit to one of the tormentors in Wait Until Dark to a sympathetic French doctor in Appointment with Death. He was also in one of ACT I's other romantic comedies, Mary, Mary.

Brantley has seen similar variety, ranging from the comical in the Christmas skits to the tormented in Wait Until Dark and Appointement with Death. The romantic lead in Romantic Comedy role gives Brantley a change of pace. Brantley is a seamstress and an employee at Sirloin Stockade.

Jeff Langley, managing editor of The Pampa News, may be accused of being typecast as the assertive Leo. But Langley, in his first ACT I role, boasts an extensive stage career, beginning under the instruction of Neil Hess at Tascosa High School, through such roles as Amnon on a West Texas State University production of Psalm of Two Davids and Lord Throgmorton in Mary of Scotland to musical comedies at a community theater in Blythe, Calif.

His personna is enhanced through experience as an anchor-reporter-weatherman for Amarillo's KFDA in the late 70s. He has been managing editor in Pampa since September.

Gus Shaver brings extensive ACT I experience to her role as Allison. She has been on the ACT I board, serving one year as president and has seen such roles as Ruth in Blythe Spirit to a glamorous Italian in Appointment with Death. She sells advertising for The Pampa News.

The cast is rounded out by stage newcomers Betty Gann as Blanche and Bonita "Dink" Miller McRae as Kate. Gann is the payroll clerk for the city of Pampa. "Dink" is a Pampa native who enjoys reading, crafts and riding horses.

New book 'Whirlwind' lacks force

WHIRLWIND. By James Clavell. Morrow. 1,147 Pages. $22.95.

"Whirlwind" is the new novel by James Clavell, the author of such popular books as "King Rat," "Taipan," "Shogun" and "Noble House."

This latest story is set in revolutionary Iran between Feb. 9 and March 4, 1979. A multinational group of pilots must get themselves, their families and their helicopters safely out of a country that is undergoing great political and social change.

Given these ingredients — Clavell, revolution, Iran, and a time frame that spans days, not centuries — readers might expect a whirlwind of a story; tight, action-packed drama with scarcely a moment to catch one's breath. Unfortunately, this is not the case.

The book sputters, like a fire that refuses to catch. Just as the reader gets involved with one character the action shifts to another. The story moves back and forth from one character and locale to the next, and then back again. Another problem is the novel's size — 1,147 pages. There is an overabundance of everything — including characters and subplots. It isn't until the final chapters — when Operation Whirlwind is finally in motion — that the fuse is lit, and the story moves with some of the style and pace readers have come to expect from Clavell.

All of this isn't to say that "Whirlwind" won't be a best seller. Yes, the story is tedious at times. Yes, some of the characters are stereotyped and some of the plot devices are thin and obvious. But for fans of Clavell — and he has many — the simple fact that "Whirlwind" is the fifth novel in his "Asian Saga" is reason enough to read the book.

After all, "Whirlwind" is an adventure story. And Clavell's cast of characters are all heroes — skilled, brave and daring. They are loyal to their employer; loved by their women; friends to the end. They fight their way out of one predicament after another.

Actor enjoys Shakespeare's stage

By PAUL PINKHAM
Senior Staff Writer

In a way, says actor Ken Enright, one has to be crazy to sign up for the National Shakespeare Company's grueling annual tour of the United States.

Not as crazy as King Lear or Hamlet's scorned Ophelia, mind you.

But crazy enough to travel 35,000 miles to 110 cities in eight months inside a bus filled with nearly seven tons of sets, lights and costumes.

The troupe's travels this year will bring Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet to the M.K. Brown Auditorium stage at 8 p.m. Tuesday.

Speaking from his hotel room in Galveston, Enright said this week that the company takes literally Shakespeare's declaration that "all the world's a stage."

"Sometimes we come into a theater and sometimes we come into a gymnasium," Enright explained. "It's exciting because we play a wide range of theatrical settings. We can perform just about anywhere."

Enright, who will portray Lord Montague and two minor characters in Tuesday's performance, said playing to a gym has its special challenges. Because each of the 12 cast members takes on technical and set-up responsibilities upon arriving in a new community, a room not designed for the theater requires additional work.

But, Enright said, he and the other actors don't mind a bit.

"It helps bring our theater company to areas that don't have facilities, as well as places that do," he said. "We're out here to perform and bring the theater to people wherever they may be."

Enright said rehearsals for this year's two productions — the cast is scheduled to perform The Taming of the Shrew for five nights at Odessa's Globe Theater after leaving Pampa — began in mid-July on the shores of western New York's Lake Chautauqua.

From September to December, the company toured the northeastern corner of the United States, he said. Then, in January, the 24th annual tour's second leg — through the South, across the Rockies and on to the Pacific — got underway, running through May.

This is the first year that Enright, a San Diego native, has toured with the group. He auditioned in New York after moving there a year earlier in the hopes of beginning a career in the theater.

He said he feels closer to that goal than if he had stayed in the Big Apple and accepted weekend work on or off Broadway.

"It's a real good opportunity for people to continue their craft and do a lot of work," he said of the tour. "You're still working and there are moments that are very fulfilling to you.

"It's exciting to be in a group where you feel that everyone is working toward a common goal. When there are two people on stage that are working together, it's electric."

Enright said he also enjoys the challenge of constant change that the to provides.

Going on the road with two shows also has its challenges but Enright said those who have leading roles in one play usually have minor roles in the other. Because one of this year's plays is a comedy and the other a tragedy, Enright said the cast has been able to find elements of Shakespeare's sense of humor, even in the tragic Romeo and Juliet.

Although the two plays contain completely different styles of acting and language, Enright said they complement each other.

"It's a great deal of fun," he said. "You find it's possible to laugh at times during a tragedy and feel more serious during a comedy."

Tickets for the National Shakespeare Company's production of* Romeo and Juliet *are available at Lovett Memorial Library, the Chamber of Commerce or from any Pampa Fine Arts Association board member. For more information call 665-3981.

Romeo (Christopher Todd) and Juliet (Carol Dearman) are attracted to each other in the production of Shakespeare's 'Romeo and Juliet' scheduled for 8 p.m. Tuesday at M.K. Brown Auditorium.

Government farm supports add woes to world economy

By DON KENDALL
AP Farm Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Government farm price supports and subsidies are important in many countries, including the United States, but they also are adding to some of the problems in the global economy, says a new study by the Agriculture Department.

"This intervention has been costly for taxpayers and consumers, has contributed to serious imbalances in world supply and demand, has limited world trade opportunities, and has contributed to depressed world commodity prices," the department's Economic Research Service said.

The report was prepared by the agency's international and national economics divisions "for limited distribution to the research community" outside the department as part of a trade liberalization project.

Information in the report was said to be important in negotiations affecting global trade since it offers "a possible framework for multilateral exchange of concessions on agricultural policies."

Analysts looked at government intervention in the agricultural sectors of market-oriented countries most active in world trade as either exporters or importers. Those included 10 less-developed countries and six developed countries during the 1982-84 period.

"Findings reveal a tendency for less-developed nations to assist consumers and for developed nations to assist producers," the report said. "Food grain, dairy product and sugar producer assistance tended to be higher than assistance to other producers."

The six developed countries or regions included: Australia, Canada, the European Common Market, New Zealand, Japan and the United States. Less-developed countries included: Argentina, Brazil, India, Mexico, Nigeria, South Africa, South Korea, Sudan, Taiwan and Thailand.

In order to make comparisons, analysts calculated equivalent numbers to measure subsidies benefiting producers and consumers. Those measured "the levels of subsidies which would be required to compensate producers and consumers for removing government programs."

Allowances were made for tariff and non-tariff policies, and other government policies that enhance or subsidize in one way or another.

No U.S. dollar amounts were attached to the comparisons, since all benefits were converted to numerical ratios or indicators. The higher the indicator on a scale of zero to 1.0 or higher, the heavier the subsidy.

The ratios are called "producer subsidy equivalents" and "consumer subsidy equivalents," depending on how the various countries skewed their programs.

"For example, India and Argentina taxed their wheat producers while Japan and Brazil heavily subsidized theirs," the report said. "Australia provided little assistance to producers of most commodities considered, except dairy products. Japan, on the other hand, heavily subsidized producers of most products, except citrus and nonruminant meat products."

The report added: "Consumer subsidy equivalent calculations suggest that the effect of government intervention in developed agricultural sectors has been to tax consumers through higher-than-world domestic prices. Taxpayers also assumed the costs of government intervention through government expenditures."

European Common Market and Japanese consumers bore most of the cost of their governments' farm supports for all commodities except oilseeds, the study found.

TOP O' TEXAS FARMERS MARKET

Pampa and Eastern Panhandle area farmers interested in fruit and vegetable production are invited to discuss plans for an area Farmers Market. The meeting will be at 7 p.m. Thursday in the Courthouse Annex meeting room in Pampa, located on East Highway 60-152.

The purpose of meeting is to see how many area fruit and vegetable producers would participate in a retail farmers market. It takes around twenty-five sellers to support a successful two or three day-a-week market.

This project is a joint effort of the Gray County Commissioners Court, the Texas Department of Agriculture and the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

Farmers who would like more information about this effort are urged to call the Gray County Extension office, 669-7429.

CRP SIGN-UP UNDERWAY

The next sign-up period for putting cropland into the government's Conservation Reserve Program is underway.

The current sign-up period began Monday, Feb. 9, and runs through Feb. 27.

A new "wrinkle" in the program this year is that a bonus is being offered on a one-time basis for corn land. The bonus is $2 times the farm program payment yield for corn times the number of acres of corn base designated for enrollment in the CRP. This bonus will be paid by generic commodity certificates.

Another new provision classifies land planted to alfalfa and other multi-year grasses and legumes in rotation during the years 1981-85 as cropland and thus makes it eligible for the CRP.

Also, there has been a slight revision in land eligibility classifications. That may allow additional land to qualify for the program, so landowners need to check with their local SCS office.

Almost nine million acres of highly erodible cropland acres across the nation were committed to the program during three sign-up periods last year.

So far, Texas farmers have put more than a million acres in the program, which is aimed at curbing soil erosion while at the same time improving water quality and wildlife habitats.

Land accepted into the CRP must be kept out of production for 10 years and prescribed conservation practices must be followed. This includes planting the land to grass or trees to prevent wind and water erosion, with costs shared by the government.

Landowners must submit a bid on eligible land to their local Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service office during the sign-up period. Land eligibility is determined by the Soil Conservation Service. If the bid is accepted, landowners will be paid that price annually over the 10-year period provided they follow the prescribed conservation plan. The maximum acceptable bid in Gray County was $40 an acre during the sign-up period.

Because several new phases of the CRP are being enacted this year, including sodbuster, swampbuster and conservation compliance, interest in the CRP should increase. Details on the total program are available at any local ASCS office.

The CRP is part of the 1985 farm bill and was initiated last spring as a five-year effort to take some 45 million acres of erodible cropland out of production across the U.S.

Locally, this will likely be the last opportunity to enroll pullman and olton soils in the CRP. These are the two predominate soil types in the High Plains area of Gray County. Therefore, if you have High Plains country and if you are thinking about the CRP, then you need to make up your mind before Feb. 27.

WHEAT INSECTS

The Russians are back again. Dr. Carl Patrick, Extension entomologist, Amarillo, reports Russian Wheat aphids infestations are being reported in Hale, Lubbock, Parmer, Floyd and Deaf Smith counties.

Infestations are light and are not of economic concern at this time. As you will recall in 1986, most of the damaging infestations developed in March.

Russian wheat aphids have also been reported in the Oklahoma Panhandle, near Boise City; five counties in New Mexico and in eastern Colorado.

Farmers need to start inspecting wheat, barley and oat fields for the presence of insects. We are approaching the time of the year when insect populations start to increase.

If you find any Russian aphids, please give me a call.

EXTENSION SERVICE PLANS FARM COMPUTER TRAINING

Farmers and ranchers wanting to learn more about using computers as management tools can select from a wide range of comuter short courses being conducted by the Texas Agricultural Extension Service in the coming months.

Three-day short courses are being conducted throughout the year at the Stiles Farm Computer Training Center in Thrall, about 6 miles east of Taylor on U.S. 79. Cooperating with the Extension Service in this training are the Texas Agricultural Experiment Station and the Department of Agricultural Economics at Texas A&M University.

The short courses are designed to provide in-depth subject matter training and hands-on microcomputer use of software available from the private sector and Texas A&M. Participants also have an opportunity to see ongoing computer applications in a commercial agricultural environment, so this presents a unique learning situation.

Dates and topics of the upcoming short courses are as follows:

- March 5-7 — Records and Management Decision Aids for Range Livestock Producers (Low Rainfall Areas)
- March 24-26 — Electronic Spreadsheets and Their Use in Agriculture
- April 7-9 — Beef Cattle Performance and Health Management Records and Analysis, Nutrition and Economic Decision Aids
- May 12-14 — Advanced Electronic Spreadsheeet Development and Applications in Agriculture
- July 14-16 — Farm and Ranch Accounting

To register for the short courses, contact Jim McGrann with the Department of Agricultural Economics, Texas A&M University, College Station, Texas 77843-2124 or call 409-845-1861 or call Jeff Johnson at the Stiles Farm (512-898-2214).

STILL TIME TO SOIL TEST

It's not too late to collect soil samples and getting them tested can help farmers get a jump on the spring rush at soil testing labs.

Once fertilizer needs are determined, farmers can place their orders. Again, by ordering early, they can avoid the spring rush. Also, fertilizers usually cost more in the spring when demand is greater and supplies tighter.

With fetilizer at hand, farmers can begin application when field conditions permit. This minimizes spring planting delays because of tight dealer schedules and reduces the potential for moisture loss just prior to planting.

For more information concerning soil testing, contact the Gray County Extension office.

Cattlemen's association to meet USDA officials over errors in cattle inventory

WASHINGTON (AP) — The National Cattlemen's Association has been invited to meet with Agriculture Department officials to discuss complaints that USDA cattle inventory figures may have contained serious errors.

Association officials on Thursday asked the department to recheck the figures and "provide satisfactory explanations of the report's discrepancies." The complaint was outlined by NCA president Jack Dahl and Cattle-Fax president Gordon Rasmussen in a letter to Ewen Wilson, deputy assistant secretary for economics.

Wilson said he stood by the USDA's cattle inventory figures, which were released on Feb. 4. The report showed the Jan. 1 cattle inventory dropped 3 percent last year to a 25-year low of 102 million head. Many private analysts had predicted a decline of up to 5 percent.

The association's complaint was made known the day after the report was released, and the figures were reviewed by experts in the department's National Agricultural Statistics Service to see if the numbers were within the agency's normal tolerance for error, Wilson said in an interview.

"We couldn't find any evidence that this survey ... was more than average in its sampling error," he said.

Some of the figures, including cattle numbers for Texas, down only 1 percent from a year ago, and Oklahoma, unchanged, sort of "jump out at you," Wilson said. But the figures "are still confirmed, so far," he added.

Wilson said the department's statistical reporting programs need the support of the industry but that all users must have confidence that the methods are correct.

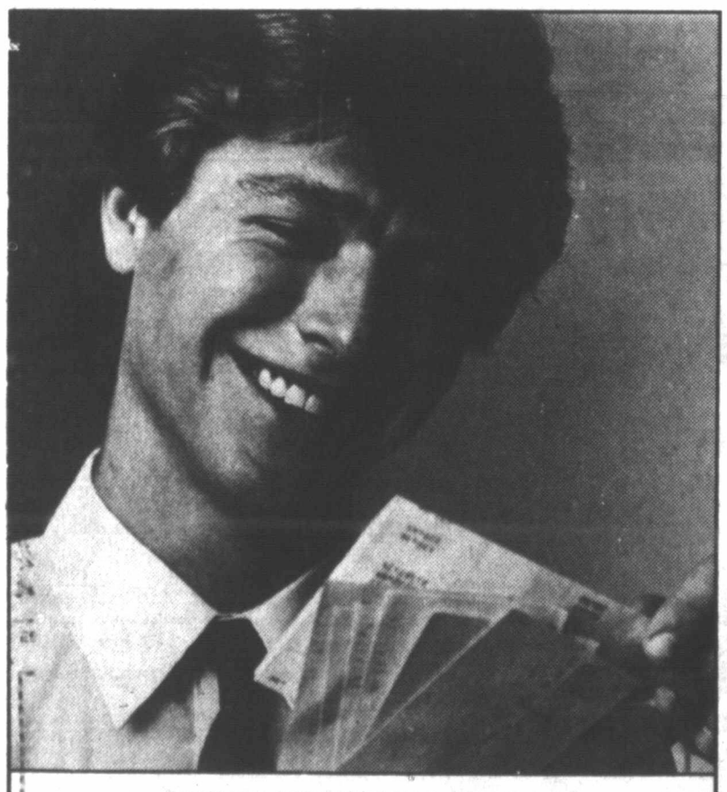

The association's representatives will be invited to go over the inventory numbers and procedures with USDA officials, he said.

Dahl and Rasmussen said in their letter that some of the figures in USDA's Jan. 1 inventory suggest that cattle herd liquidation has ended and that herd expansion is now under way. But other USDA data, including slaughter figures, contradict an expansion in the nation's cattle herd.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Subdue inclinations to feel sorry for yourself today. It's a futile attitude because friends will have their own troubles and you'll get little sympathy. Major changes are ahead for Aquarius in the coming year. Send for your Astro-Graph predictions today. Mail $1 to Astro-Graph, c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 91428, Cleveland, OH 44101-3428. Be sure to state your zodiac sign.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Keep your curiosity in check today regarding a matter about which a friend is reluctant to speak. He or she may be trying to spare your feelings.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Associates will not be very tolerant of your behavior today if they feel you are too inconsistent. Follow through on your original commitment.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Don't be indifferent regarding logical health habits today. Remember, it's the ounce of prevention that's worth the pound of cure.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) In your commercial dealings today, be careful that you are not too gullible. Don't believe everything you're told if you have to deal with unproven entities.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) It's best not to make commitments today about which you intuitively feel uncomfortable. Your hunches could be more accurate than your overt assessments.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Ignoring a task today and hoping you'll get around to it tomorrow is not a wise course of action. Postponement contributes to complications down the line.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) When shopping today, guard against tendencies to buy merchandise that you may never use. Make your list out in advance and restrict it to essentials.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Don't anticipate disappointment today before you enter the fray. Look at the bright side; you have at least as much a chance of winning as you do of losing.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) You're basically a very compassionate person, but today you might subdue this noble instinct and later feel guilty about someone you could have helped.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Keep everything on an even plane in your involvements with friends today. Don't make unreasonable requests of them or let them make unreasonable requests of you.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) An objective may not be achieved today through no one's fault but your own. You'll know what's required to succeed, but you might not be willing to pay the price.

Wildlife is a very important natural resource. Animals, fish and birds should be protected from hazards such as chemical poisoning. Do what you can to help to protect the wildlife all around you.

A Little Bit Of HUMOR

Doctor: What's the matter?
Kangaroo: I've been feeling jumpy lately.

Ann: Our school has two talking parakeets.
Sue: That's nothing.
Our school has lots of spelling bees!

Larry: Our dog is just like one of the family.
Barry: Really! Which one?

Jill: What kind of fish do you find in a bird cage?
Bill: A perch.

Jim: Do fish sing?
Tim: Only when they have musical scales.

Suzy Snake: I'm glad I'm not poisonous.
Stan Snake: Why?
Suzy Snake: Because I just bit my tongue.

Fun Facts

1. Adult chimpanzees poke long grass blades into ant or termite hills. When the blades are pulled out, they are coated with clinging insects. Chimpanzees suck these blades like lollipops.

2. Elephant herds are made up of related females who share the work of rearing the young. The oldest female is the leader. When moving from place to place, the young elephants always travel in the midst of the adults for protection.

3. Bats are the only mammals that truly fly. All other "flying" mammals are actually gliders.

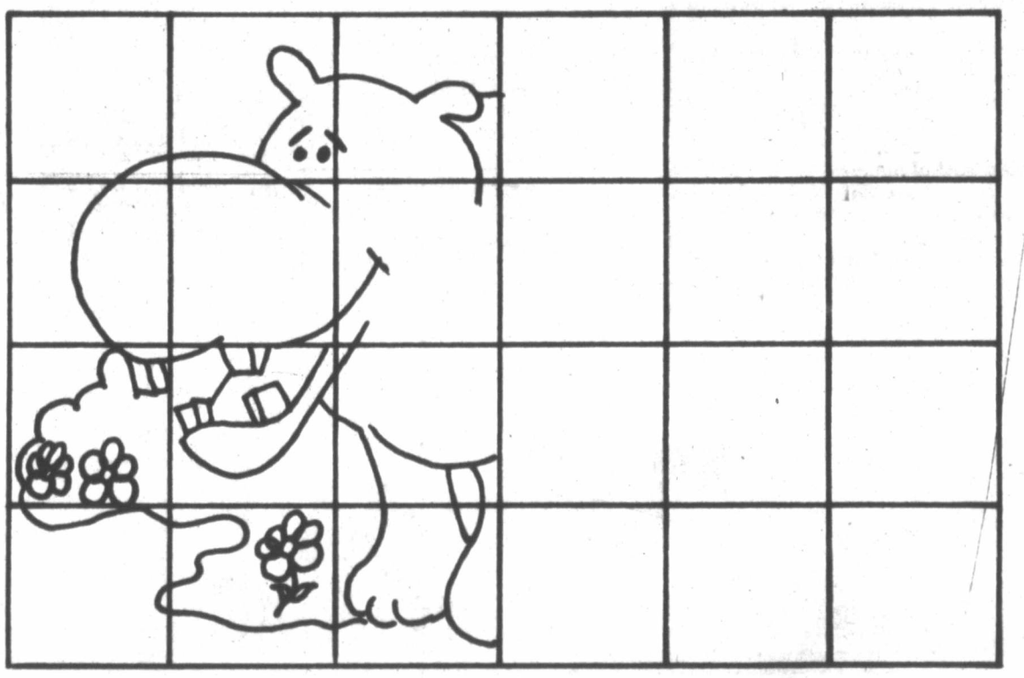

4. Insects outnumber all other types of animals combined. Insects are eaten by humans in many areas of the world and have been found to be a source of protein.

5. A grasshopper has about 900 different muscles; humans have 792.

6. The groundhog does not drink water. It obtains necessary moisture from the food it eats.

HARRY HIPPO

Harry Hippo, like other hippopotamuses, has an excellent sense of smell but rather poor eyesight. Baby hippos are born underwater, swim before they can walk and nurse underwater. Only part of Harry Hippo's body has been drawn. You can draw in the rest and color him.

Names in the News

NEW YORK (AP) — Actress-producer Goldie Hawn says she discovered pride in her Jewish heritage during a recent trip to Israel.

"For the first time in my life, I really felt Jewish," said Ms. Hawn, 41, whose mother was Jewish.

"To think that I ever classified myself as half-and-half for the sake of others," she said in an interview to be published in Sunday's Parade magazine. "The one thing I've learned here is that I would never do that again, because I am very proud now."

Ms. Hawn, who got her start as a ditzy blonde on TV's "Rowan & Martin's Laugh In," made a successful switch to movies, starring in and producing "Private Benjamin" and "Wildcats."

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP) — Sally Jessy Raphael says she will move her nationally syndicated television talk show to New Haven from St. Louis in June so she can be closer to her family.

"I could no longer do the long-distance parenting and there isn't a mother who doesn't know what I'm talking about," Ms. Raphael said Thursday.

She has commuted for more than three years to St. Louis from her home and three children in New York.

The show is broadcast by about 90 U.S. stations, said executive producer Burt Dubrow.

NEW YORK (AP) — Comedian Milton Berle has published his first short story.

"Closing Night at the Zebra Lounge," in the March issue of Redbook, tells the story of Freddy Maxwell, a failing standup comic who encounters surprises when he climbs the stage of the sleazy Zebra Lounge.

Next month, Berle, 79, will be the host of a one-hour syndicated special of his favorite "Texaco Star Theater" skits from the 1940s and '50s. His memoir, "B.S., I Love You," will be published this fall.

NOTICE OF PUBLIC HEARING ON AN APPLICATION FOR HAZARDOUS WATE DISPOSAL WELLS PERMITS

CELANESE CHEMICAL COMPANY, INC., P.O. BOX 937, PAMPA, TEXAS 79065 has applied to the Texas Water Commission for three permits (Proposed Permits Nos. WDW-244, WDW-245, and WDW-246) to complete and operate three disposal wells with authorization to handle hazardous wastes at its Pampa Plant. The disposal wells will be used to dispose of the company's process wastewater from the manufacture of synthetic organic chemicals, and assorted wastestreams which may include: process wastewater, demineralizer acid waste (DAW), retrieved contaminated perched ground water, existing pond inventory, contaminated stormwater runoff, spills of products or expressly authorized wastes, cooling tower blowndown, wastes generated during drilling, workovers, or closure of the well and associated facilities that are compatible with permitted wastes and the reservoir. Disposal of waste water for all wells is to be into the Pennsylvanian Granite Wash, the Ellenberger Group, and the Reagan Sandstone in the approximate subsurface interval between 5,130 and 10,200 feet. The proposed permit will require that a performance bond or other form of security be secured and maintained in full force and effect all all times, in a form acceptable to the Executive Director of the Texas Water Commission, to provide for proper plugging and abandonment of the permitted waste disposal wells.
Disposal of wastewater by injection would be at a rate not to exceed 1,100 gallons per minute, cumulative for all three injection wells. The volume of injected wasteweater would not exceed 449.388 million gallons per year (equivalent to 855 gallons per minute over 365 days), cumulative for all three proposed injection wells. The authorized surface injection pressure for each individual well would not exceed 1000 psig.
The waste disposal wells are to be located on Celanese property in Gray County, approximately 3 miles east of the City of Pampa (Section 53, Block 3). Waste disposal well No. WDW-244 will be located at a point 2,430.6 feet east of the west line, and 2,441.6 feet north of the south line of the Illinois & Great Northern Railroad Survey, Abstract 366. Waste disposal well No. WDW-245 will be located at a point 2,830.6 feet east of the west line and 2,441.6 feet north of the south line of the Illinois & Great Northern Railroad Survey, Abstract 366. Waste disposal well No. WDW-246 will be located at a point 2,830.6 feet east of the west line, and 2,841.6 feet north of the south line of the Illinois & Great Northern Railroad Survey, Abstract 366. The center of the disposal well tract is located at latitude 35°33'21" north, and longitude 100°53'30" west. A 13-mile pipeline will convey wastewater from the Celanese plant southwest of Pampa to the injection wells.
Waste disposal well WDW-244 has been drilled to a total depth of approximately 9,965 feet for the purpose of testing the subsurface formations. Waste disposal well WDW-245 will be drilled to a total depth of approximately 10,000 feet.
The Executive Director of the Texas Water Commission has prepared three draft permits which, if approved by the Commission, would authorize the activities and facilities described in this notice.
A Hearings Examiner of the Texas Water Commission will conduct a public hearing at 9:00 a.m.-Wednesday, April 8, 1987 and Thursday, April 9, 1987, Pampa Community Building, 200 North Ballard Pampa, Texas to receive evidence on the conditions, if any under which the permit may be issued.
Legal Authority: Section 26.028 and 27.018 of the Texas Water Code, as amended, Section 4(e) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act (Article 4477-7, Texas Revised Civil Statutes); 31 TAC Chapters 305,331 and 335 of the Rules of the Texas Water Commission.
The Texas Air Control Board (TACB) may appear at the public hearing and participate as a party to address air quality aspects of the application, pursuant to the Texas Solid Waste Disposal Act, (Article 4477-7, Texas Revised Civil Statutes). The TACB will regulate air emissions from the facility through special provisions in any permit which is issued.
The record of this proceeding will include evidence and testimony taken at the public hearing. The hearing may be continued from time to time and place to place, if necessary, to develop all relevant evidence bearing on the subject of the hearing.
The Texas Water Commission reserves the right to schedule or reschedule hearings as it deems necessary. Further information concerning any aspect of the application, if available, may be obtained by writing Ann R. Bjork, Staff Attorney, P.O. Box 13087, Capitol Station, Austin, Texas 78711, telephone (512) 463-8069. Information concerning any procedures of the hearing may be obtained by contacting Duncan Norton, Hearings Examiner, P.O. Box 13087, Capitol Station, Austin, Texas 78711, telephone (512) 463-7875. Written comments on the application should be submitted to Mr. Norton within 45 days of the date of publication of this notice of application.
Issued this 20th day of Fabruary, 1987.
