NOVELIZED BY
ARLINE DE HAAS

Copyright 1928, Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc.
"GLORIOUS BETSY," starring Dolores Costello, is a Warner Bros. production of this novel. Based on the play by Rida Johnson Young.

SYNOPSIS
Sweet Springs Inn is the scene of an early morning duel over a miniature of Betsy Patterson. Her French tutor, La Vert, wins the duel and the miniature from Preston, who boasted that Betsy had given it to him. Strolling in the woods, La Vert meets Betsy, who has been reading in the stream on a log. She chides him for his unwillingness and lack of ambition. He says nothing of the duel, but, in return, mocks the worthlessness of her cavaliers. When he returns to the inn he is discharged by Betsy's mother for insolence. At that moment Betsy returns barefoot from an arboral adventure.

"Some man! Some man, Mademoiselle," Monsieur La Vert cried petulantly. But he moved toward the front of the portico, chin sunk on his stock; his hand across his breast and hidden within his vest. "I said to the corner of Bache's Row," Betsy was laughing, "not another step further! Oh! that's a rough bit! Sir Harry, let me my slippers." Betsy reached out her hand to the black-tied Irishman with the laughing eyes, who had been tenderly holding her slippers and hose. He took the slippers and hastily thrust her feet into them, and then ran up to the porch and soundly and they all encouraged me." Miss Massenbird on both cheeks. "You look as blooming this morning, Auntie, dear," Betsy laughed. "Just have you done to yourself?" "I am blooming, it is a bluish name for you," Miss Massenbird answered sharply. "Oh, dear, you're not angry with me?" Betsy pointed most becomingly and brought a look of pleasure to the eyes of her aunt. "I've always wanted Mary and to rise early in the morning. I thought you'd be pleased." "You must have a very erroneous conception of my moral character," Miss Massenbird returned. "Oh, Auntie Ellen! your character is dear, but—do look!" Betsy pointed a finger in the direction of her tutor, whom she noticed for the first time. "Don't move, Monsieur! Just as you are. There, now, wasn't he look the image of Napoleon Bonaparte? Doesn't he?" The others stared, and then nodded assent. For Betsy was indeed right. The man had unconsciously fallen into a pose typical of the famous French general, and his position made the likeness doubly striking. "Umph!" Miss Massenbird sniffed. "I wish there was some of the great man's blood in Mr. La Vert's veins that he might conquer your evil, scandalous ways. Mr. John Calhoun," she turned sharply to the tall young man who was gazing enraptured at the slightest movement of her niece, "if you know how supremely ridiculous you look dangling those—those—articles about, you would desist." Calhoun looked down at the articles in his hand, and then hastily attempted to thrust them into his pocket. Betsy giggled irrepressibly.

"In my days, if a girl had gone barefooted, she would have been out in stocks," Miss Massenbird began. "Stocks, you mean, don't you, Aunt Ellen?" Betty returned innocently. "Stocks," I said; "wooden stocks." "Oh, well, if that's all you're displeased about, don't scold me," Betsy coaxed, patting her aunt's hand. "It's all Sir Harry Blake's fault. He dared and boasted about his indecent Irish girls, and you dear Aunt Ellen, I simply believe a dare. And they all laughed me—every one of them." "Well, you know, Betty," Henry began diffidently, and lowering his eyes, "I told you—you might take cold."

Clay. You'd better wrap yourself up in that shawl you have bundled under your arm," Miss Massenbird announced with some asperity. "At your age, the early morning dews are dangerous." Clay, looking somewhat chagrined, attempted to hide the shawl, but succeeded only in entangling the fringe with the buttons on his coat, and tried to move from out of the way of his accuser's eagle eyes. "Oh, don't scold Mr. Clay," Betsy took up the cause of her admirer. "He's been so good to me, Auntie. He added a pair of gold garter buckles to Sir Harry's stockings." Betsy ran on, not heeding Clay's attempts to forestall her story. "If I'd walk barefooted, didn't he, Mary?" "Indeed he did, Auntie," Mary asserted vigorously. "And they all kept betting and egging her on." She took Betsy's hand and looked around at the men, disregarding their negative noddings that asked of her to say nothing more. "It's just as much their fault as Betty's."

"That does not matter," Miss Massenbird retorted. "You go home today, Mary, and you, too, Betty Patterson, if my word has any weight with your father." "Oh, please—please," Miss Massenbird—not today—"The men gathered closer, disappointed at the thought of losing "Glorious Betsy" so soon. La Vert, only, stood apart from the others, watching silently the by-play, that same faint smile on his lips, as though he kept some important secret. "Ah, now, dear Aunt Ellen," Betsy pleaded, "don't tell father. Please, don't. I'll be good right from now on. I won't do it again. Dear, handsome, Aunt Ellen, I'll try to be like you; I will now—" "Not one word will I hear in defense of that!" Miss Massenbird pointed a scornful finger toward Betsy's bare feet that peeped out from beneath her skirt. You're an outrageous girl, and your father shall know it." With a swish and a flourish Miss Massenbird turned and hurried into the hotel. The three men watched the departing figure with a great show of relief. Indeed, Clay took a deep breath and sent up a prayer of thanks that the genteel lady had mentioned nothing further concerning his age. Sir Harry whistled softly, and Henry Blake, who had been digging his toe into the ground, looked up and smiled. La Vert remained leaning quietly against the pillar, looking on as though he were the veriest outsider. Betsy considered the group for a few minutes, her head cocked perkily on one side, and then she laughed. "Well, say something," she challenged, running her eyes over the group. "You do look a pretty picture," she giggled. "Really, dreadfully—dreadfully foolish, all of you." "I didn't break the storm much by running ahead, did I, Betty?" Mary turned soberly to her cousin, shaking her head. "Storm, dear? Why, that wasn't a storm," Betsy sighed. "That was only a gentle breeze before the tornado. Wait until you hear papa—O, why there's Mr. Preston!" Betsy turned as that gentleman emerged from the hotel. "Mary, did you know Mr. Preston had come back to the Springs?" Mary blushed slightly as George Preston bent low over her hand. "Why, when did you arrive?" she questioned. "I came late last night," the gentleman of the card game nodded and saluted the remaining guests. La Vert only he passed over with a slight bow, but the tutor merely lowered his head in return. "But then, I knew you'd return—so I'm not surprised," Betsy turned to Preston. "You knew I'd return?" Preston bowed. "How?" "Why, isn't Mary here?" "Oh! Oh! Betty!" Mary stamped her foot and turned a vivid scarlet. "I—I really think I'd better go and do up my hair." She escaped into the comforting solitude of the hotel. Betsy laughed. "I think you'd all better go now," Betsy turned to the men again. "But don't run off with my articles." She retrieved her belongings and waved her followers away.

CHAPTER IV
Betsy, watching the retreat of the three cavaliers, laughed softly to herself, and looked about as though expecting to see some one. But La Vert, as the others left, had stepped over the low casement of the hotel window, leading into the parlor. So she picked up her various belongings and patted her hair into place and sighed. If Aunt Ellen told her father of this escapade—and Aunt Ellen was certain to do that very thing—there'd be another storm. But, after all, she reflected, shrugging her shoulders, her father was much easier to handle than Aunt Ellen. She always succeeded in getting "round him with her blackaments." She turned towards the doorway, but as she turned she heard voices. (To be continued)

It costs very little to recondition a Model T Ford

FOR nearly twenty years, the Model T Ford led the motor industry and it still is used by more people than any other automobile.

More than eight million Model T Fords are in active service today — an indication of their sturdy worth, reliability and economy.

The cost of reconditioning the Model T Ford is small because of the low cost of Ford parts and the established Ford policy of charging all labor at a standard flat rate.

For a labor charge of $20 to $25 you can have your motor and transmission completely overhauled. This price includes new bearings, reboring cylinders and any other work necessary. Parts are extra.

Valves can be ground and carbon removed for $3 to $4. The cost of tightening all main bearings is only $6. The labor charge for overhauling the front axle is $4.50 to $5—rear axle assembly, $5.75 to $7.

New universal joint will be installed for a labor charge of $3. Brake shoes relined for $1.50. Rear spring and perches rebushed for $1.75. The cost of overhauling the starting motor is $3. A labor charge of approximately $2.50 covers the overhauling of the generator.

Repainting runs from $10 to $25. Taking dents out of body panels and doors runs from $3 to $16 for labor. A fender can be replaced for a labor charge of $1 to $2.50. The cost of fender runs from $3.50 to $5.

It will pay you, therefore, to see your Ford dealer and have him put your Model T in good running order. By doing so you will protect and maintain the investment you have in your car and get months and years of pleasant, reliable transportation at a very low cost per mile.

Black, Cla Thomas L. Blanton in Limelight

WASHINGTON, Aug. 1. — Defeat of Eugene Black of Arkansas, representative from the first district of Texas for 14 years, will result from congress one of those for his independence, a devoted and a member highly regarded for his conservatism. These qualities have been responsible for his having to battle at the polls every two years to retain his seat in the house of representatives.

A year after Black came to congress, as successor of the late Horace Vaughn of Texas, he took a position that caused the old timers in the congressional atmosphere to contemplate him with interest. He was one of two Democrats in the Adams law in 1915, presented by President Wilson as a means of preventing a nation-wide railroad strike. This legislation was referred to in the congressional debate as "the government's surrender to the railroad brotherhoods."

A newspaper recently reviewing Black's legislative career said that he was more distinguished for the measure he stood against than for the one to which he has given support. The same publication called attention that at the various stages of his opposition there was nothing indicating him an obstructer.

Charged as foe to labor Black's district embraces one of the important railroad terminals in Texas, yet many of his votes in congress have been contrary to the wishes of railroad workers. Charges that Black is a foe to union labor were denied by him in speeches supporting the bill for reorganization of government operation of railroads.

Other members of the Texas delegation supported the legislation, but Black had the consolation of pointing to the use of his remarks upon the bill wherein he dealt with the creation of the railroad labor board by the railroad brotherhoods in their brief to congress upon the question of the board's jurisdiction. In that he declared that the first legitimate charge upon any industry is a fair and just wage to its employees, and that he would not support any bill which he thought would impair the rights of labor in securing this fair and just wage. He maintained that establishment of the railroad labor board would be a long step in the solving of labor difficulties. The law has since been superseded by another dealing with the settlement of wage disputes.

As a member of the house banking and currency committee, Mr. Black has had a part in formulating the changes in the country's fiscal system, and, particularly, the farm loan law, under which the land banks were better enabled to function, notably the rural credit legislation.

Black was born at Bloomington, Lamar county 49 years ago. He was educated in the Bloomington public school and obtained his law degree at Cumberland University.

Blanton Well Known

Thomas L. Blanton of Abilene is another self-made Texan whose prestige and voice will be missed in the halls of congress after March 4 next, due to his failure to achieve the senatorial nomination in the recent primary election. Washington newspapers paid considerable attention to the race Blanton made for the senate and have commented highly upon his defeat. By his membership on the district committee in the house, which has to do with all of the legislation for the city of Washington and the District of Columbia, Blanton is almost as well known here as in his Texas district.

Blanton always occupies the second seat from the center aisle in the second row on the Democratic side of the house and has near the record for constant attendance. Few opportunities to speak on legislation have passed him during his twelve years as a member of the house. He has offered more objections to legislation and appropriations than any other man in either house of congress, and in that way has been responsible for killing millions of dollars in unauthorized appropriations. People who had special legislation to get through gave as much consideration to the one-man objection by Blanton as they did to the favor or disfavor of the house leaders. As the Washington Post recently said, after March 4 Blanton will be missed.

Blanton was born in Houston and is a graduate of the Texas University, other members of his class being Senator Sheppard, former Governor Pat Neff and former Attorney General W. A. Keeling. In those days Blanton also worked for a relative who conducted a grocery store in Austin and has delivered groceries to some of the capital's oldest and best families. Blanton's ancestry reaches back to the Texas army in the War of Independence.

BETTER RURAL SCHOOL URGED BY DR. BLANTON

COLLEGE STATION, Aug. 1. — Dr. Annie Webb Blanton, head of the department of rural education of the University of Texas, in an address before adults at the nineteenth annual farmers' short course here Tuesday declared that the pressing need in Texas today is more attention to public schools.

"The rural school of today often still is in the ex cathedra stage," he declared. "Experts say Texas has as good city schools as any state in the Union, but the rural schools have been neglected."

The speaker urged the county unit plan for rural schools with the appointment of a superintendent by the county board rather than a high selection by popular vote.

"If we have the right kind of rural schools we must have better methods of financing and administration," Dr. Blanton said.

All group meetings at the short course are being well attended. The program of talks on agricultural and live stock subjects and home demonstration work started Tuesday. Much interest and keen competition was reported in the various judging contests at which state winners will be selected. The clothing contest brought out 128 county winners.

J. J. Thornton of the State community, Lubbock county, was elected president of the United Boys of Texas and will preside at the boys' congress during the short course.

Mrs. C. E. Taylor, president of ed States senators from Georgia are squarely on record in support of Governor Alfred E. Smith five days after Senator Walter E. George emphasized the need of Democratic solidarity of the south. Senator William J. Harris, has pledged himself to support Governor Smith in a statement declaring the prohibition laws would not be endangered by his election.

Senator Harris said acceptance of the Democratic platform by Governor Smith "eliminates any danger that the prohibition laws be repealed."

"A larce" was the way he termed Republican prohibition enforcement.

Since President Wilson's administration there has been no serious effort on the part of the Republicans to enforce the prohibition law," Harris said. "President Harding placed in charge of its enforcement Secretary Mellon, the greatest whisky distiller in the world—how could anyone expect him to enforce it?"

Senator Harris said he considered the "dry" plank amendment adopted at Houston "the strongest enforcement plank ever placed in any party platform."

An automobile hit a freight train at Cincinnati and derailed two boxcars. Now that that's happened, your chance of doing it during the next 100 years is zero.—Akron Beacon Journal.

The Barwise Home Demonstration club and Miss Ethel Louise Webb, Wichita county home demonstration agent, are here. Mrs. Taylor is winner of the Putnamville district, "improved living room" contest, and will enter the competition for first place in the state contest in that division against winners from four other districts.

25TH YEAR OF BUICK BRINGS OUT NEW CAR

Buick swings into its 25th year of operation, this week, with the introduction of the Silver Anniversary Buick, its new car for 1929. Tremendous advances in beauty, style and comfort, as well as in every item affecting performance, combine to make the Silver Anniversary Buick an automobile new and totally different from anything the public has known.

Taking as a nucleus Buick's famous six-cylinder valve-in-head engine, torque tube drive, sealed chassis, cantilever springs, double drop frame and mechanical four-wheel brakes, Buick engineers have refined and improved these units, and created around them a motor car of radiant beauty and dashing style, a car which is easy to operate and comfortable to ride
in, and finally, one which is said to out-perform, under all conditions, not only its own predecessors but any other car within hundreds of dollars of its price.

Outstanding departures from convention will be found in the new daring treatment of body lines, the dazzling new colors in lustrous Duco, and the lavish use of enduring chromium, which serves to differentiate the car sharply, even at first glance, from other automobiles of today. Less apparent to the casual eye, but no less vital, is the enlarged, and improved power plant which provides an unbounded reservoir of energy for any and all needs.

WEST TEXANS WILL VOTE ON ROAD PROGRAM

FORT WORTH, Aug. 1. — A referendum vote will be taken from the directorate of the West Texas chamber of commerce in order to determine the attitude of this body toward the highway program and policy formulated in Austin last week by three committees representing West, East and South Texas chambers of commerce. Although ballots have been sent only to the directors, the opinions of other members of the West Texas body are desired. E. H. Whithead, publicity manager of the organization, said.

Among the suggestions made during the Austin meeting one was that the practice of counties and districts holding to build state highways through county bond issues should be discontinued, also that taxes on fuels and lubricants and registration fees should be equitably adjusted to tonnage and use.

SALAD SAVERS

The secret of appetizing salads is mostly having the vegetables fresh and crisp. As soon as they are delivered, lettuce, celery, radishes, parsley and the like are allowed to freshen. Then remove any withered leaves and cut out imperfections. Put them in refrigerator bags such as are shown here and set them on the ice. When you are ready to make the salad, they will be delightfully crisp but not dripping wet as they would be if you waited till then to prepare them.

A single used flour bag will make a set of four refrigerator bags. Remove the stamping by covering the places with lard or kerosene. Let it stay overnight and then wash in lukewarm water. Sew the bags up the side and turn down an inch and a half hem. Stitch this around again half an inch from the edge to form a casing for the tape. The lettuce bag should measure about 19x13 inches when finished, the celery bag, 15x13 inches and the parsley or radish bag 7x10.

They may be made more attractive by some simple design work in outline stitch, or with the name of the article worked in cross-stitch.

The bags should be thoroughly washed after each time of using but ironing is superfluous.
