Congress' freshmen quickly find Washington money-trail

WASHINGTON (AP) — Members of Congress' largest freshman class in decades, swept into office on a wave of public anger at Washington, didn't take long to find the Capital's money trail.

The newcomers — especially those who landed assignments on the most influential House committees — tapped lobbyists, lawyers, consultants and political action committees for campaign funds, a review of more than a dozen 1993 campaign finance reports showed.

"Their campaign finance profiles represent literally business as usual," said Ellen Miller of the Center for Responsive Politics, a nonprofit group that monitors political money.

Lynn Schenk, a California Democrat on the House Energy and Commerce Committee, which will consider health care reform this year, raised nearly $400,000 in 1993. More than half,

Prosecutors dropped the case against Mrs. Hutchison, citing an adverse ruling from Judge John F. Onion Jr.

Items from Hutchison case files range from political to personal

AUSTIN (AP) — Former state Treasury employees who worked under Kay Bailey Hutchison performed personal and political work on state time and deleted state computer records, according to sworn statements released Sunday.

Mrs. Hutchison, now a U.S. senator, was acquitted last week of criminal ethics charges stemming from her tenure as state treasurer from January 1991 to June 1993.

She had been charged with running a campaign out of the Treasury and tampering with computer records as part of a cover-up.

The sworn statements, in the form of depositions and interviews under oath, were released by prosecutors.

Prosecutors dropped the case against Mrs. Hutchison, a Republican, citing an adverse ruling from Judge John F. Onion Jr.

No tickets win

No tickets correctly matched all six numbers drawn Saturday night for the twice-weekly Lotto Texas game, state lottery officials said. The numbers drawn Saturday night from a field of 50 were: 13, 24, 27, 31, 32 and 49. Lottery officials estimate the jackpot for Wednesday night's game will be $15 million.

SURFSIDE BEACH — While nearby Galveston has put away the red carpet normally laid out for spring break revelers, town officials here are planning activities to lure the college crowd. "The Galveston spring break business will disperse, and we hope to add to our numbers," said Charles Schulte, mayor of this Brazoria County community about 45 miles west of Galveston./8A

■ Bosnians express concern that Serbs are just buying time; U.N. reports intense fighting.

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Bosnian Serbs besieging Sarajevo resumed turning in their big guns on Sunday after the United Nations accepted a compromise plan.

The Muslim-dominated Bosnian government expressed concern that the Serbs were just buying time to prevent NATO air strikes that could begin Feb. 21 if the guns ringing Sarajevo are not pulled back.

Bosnian leaders also called for U.N. action help against Serb attacks on another besieged Muslim enclave, Bihac in northwestern Bosnia, one of six U.N.-designated "safe areas."

Study clears chocolate on cholesterol

DALLAS (AP) — Bring on those bonbons. Pour on that chocolate syrup and go ahead and buy that box of Valentine's candies because chocolate, even when consumed daily, does not raise blood cholesterol levels, a new study says.

Not that the study affects the eating habits of a true chocolate lover.

"We just love chocolate," said Susan Pingleton of Dallas, a hospice nurse, as she sipped a cup of steaming cappuccino. "It doesn't make a difference to us about studies."

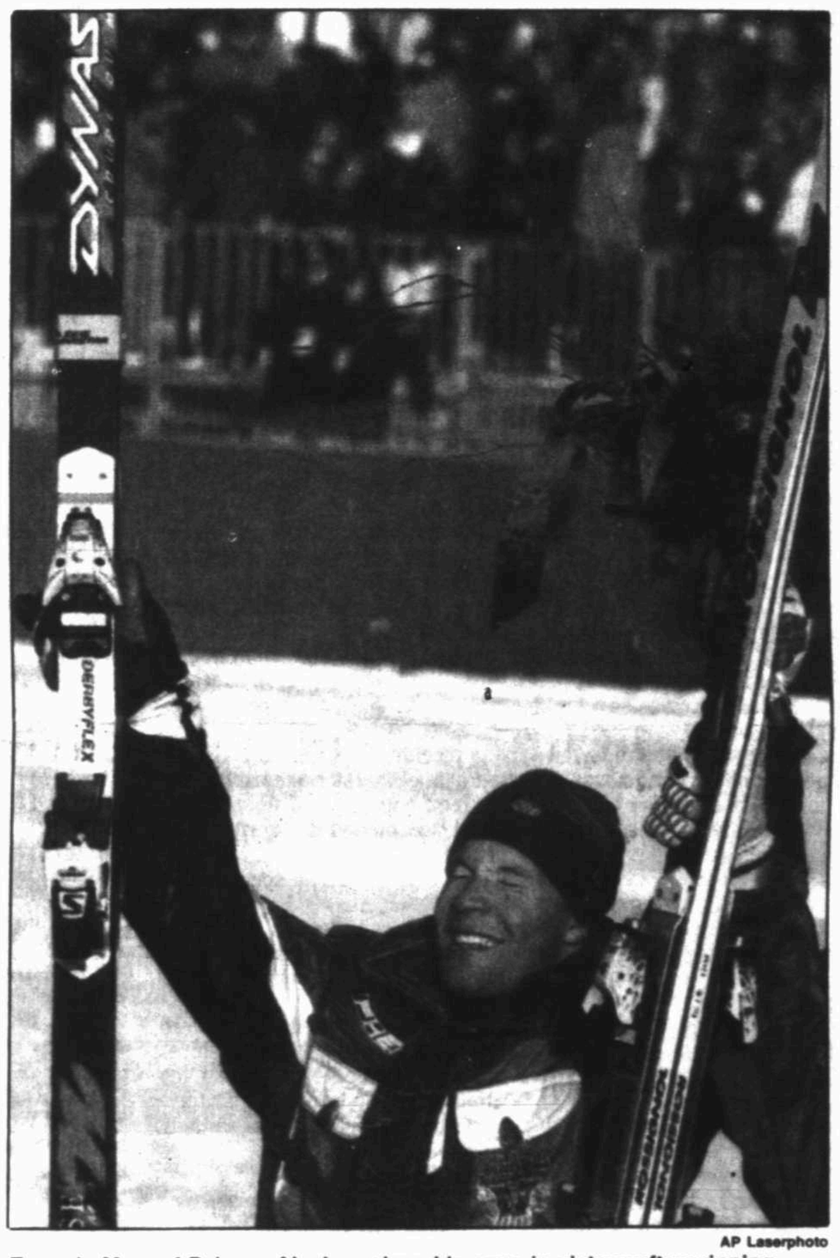

Fellow chocaholic Ruby Marrero, also a nurse, agreed.

"I come here whenever I'm in the area — and that's a lot," Ms. Marrero said while downing a piece of chocolate-covered cheesecake at Neuhaus Chocolate Shop.

Dr. Penny Kris-Etherton of Pennsylvania State University and principal researcher of the study says it sheds new light on an unusual fatty acid.

"This finding is exciting, because it confirms past studies that stearic acid, the predominant saturated fat in milk chocolate, is a unique fatty acid," Kris-

Jurors to begin deliberations in Harrell capital-murder trial

Jurors will begin deliberations today in the capital-murder trial of Ramsey Blake Harrell, who is accused of killing a Midland hairdresser April 14.

Harrell, 18, was indicted along with Michael Scott Thomas on capital-murder charges in the shooting death of Tommy Edward Musick, 48.

Testimony in Harrell's trial started Tuesday, with jury selection taking the entire previous day. The jury elected to quit early Friday and return today instead of deliberating into the evening Friday.

Harrell testified on his own behalf that he shot Musick as a result of homosexual advances Musick was making toward Thomas. Har-

Emotional love-it-or-leave debate embroils Southern Californians

By Keith Stone
N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — The riots. The brush fires. The Northridge Earthquake. The landslides last week.

For many people in Southern California, those natural and man-made disasters are reason enough to pull up stakes and move out of the state.

"These are signs: Wake up California. It is no longer the Golden State," said Linda Eisenberg, who fled to Dallas just two weeks after the quake and just five months after moving to Los Angeles.

Others say there's no place they'd rather be.

Sid Jacobson, for example, traded in Ohio winters 17 years ago for California sun. During last week's mudslide, the 73-year-old widower had to be pulled out of waist-deep muck that broke loose from Malibu's fire-blackened hillsides.

But Jacobson is not budging from California.

"Hell no! What's there not to like?" he said. "What's the difference — mud or snow?"

Like many Californians, Jacobson and Eisenberg are embroiled in an emotional love-it-or-leave-it debate — one that intensifies with every natural disaster and with every job shed by the region's curdled economy.

A Field Poll released last week shows that increasingly more Californians no longer believe they live in the Golden State and more would leave if they could.

Just 41 percent of Californians said the state is the "one of the best places to live," as compared with 78 percent who rated it so in 1985.

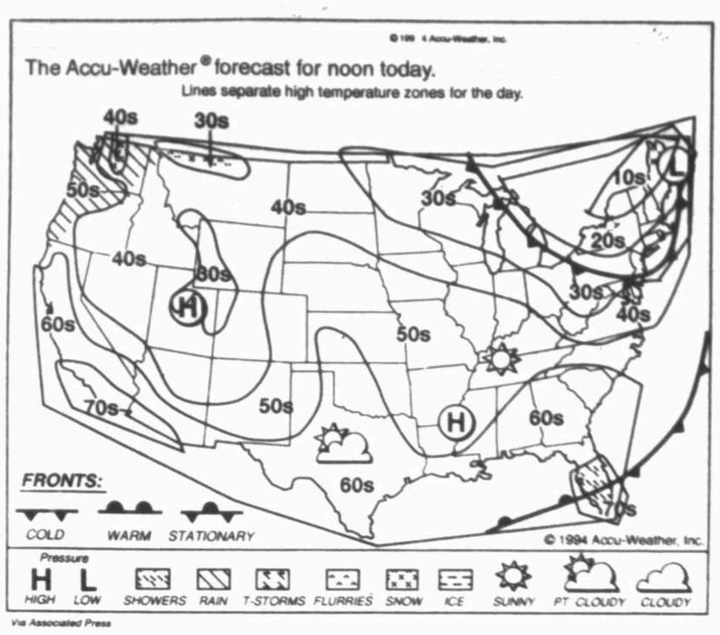

And now 33 percent of Californians surveyed said they would leave the state if they could, up from the 25 percent who said that in 1985.

Longtime Californians like Jacobson were more likely to be in love with the state than the newest arrivals, like Eisenberg, for whom the dream had dimmed, the poll showed.

California was rated as one of best

FALTERS: U.S. diplomats leave Belgrade

(From 1A)

Bihac.

"They (the Serbs) currently want to take it over, to run over Bihac," Bosnian Prime Minister Haris Silajdzic told CNN. "... And we hope that the United Nations will act as quickly as they did in Sarajevo after the massacre in Sarajevo," he said, referring to the Feb. 5 shelling of the city's market that killed 68 people.

In Sarajevo, the weapons compromise allows Serbs to turn in their heavy weapons at U.N.-monitored Serb bases, rather than at Sarajevo airport as originally planned, said Maj. Jose Labandeira, a U.N. spokesman.

The Bosnian army objected. "Those weapons can be returned to combat positions very fast," said Bosnian army Gen. Fikret Muslimovic.

"I am afraid that such an approach and an attempt to appease the aggression further would bring a hardening of the Serbian position," Silajdzic said.

The Serbs earlier insisted they would surrender their guns only if the Bosnian infantry abandoned its front-line positions. But after heavy lobbying by U.N. officials the Serbs turned over 13 heavy weapons on Sunday, bringing the total to 36 guns: 26 Serbian and 10 Bosnian.

Late Sunday, Silajdzic told CNN the Bosnian army turned in about 20 more weapons Sunday, including mortars and anti-tank guns. He said the Bosnian army would turn in all its weapons by the NATO deadline.

The Bosnian Serbs are estimated to have at least 500 heavy weapons. The Bosnian army has perhaps a tenth of that.

With the four-day Sarajevo truce still shaky, the U.S. Embassy packed the families of 35 diplomats out of Belgrade, Yugoslavia. Dutch, British and German officials also have urged their citizens to leave Yugoslavia.

The pullout of dependents was a precaution against Serb reprisals in the event of air strikes. Many in the Serb-dominated Yugoslav government and army support the Bosnian Serbs.

NATO has threatened to start air strikes against the Serb guns if they are not withdrawn at least 12 miles from downtown Sarajevo by midnight Sunday.

But the U.N. commander for Bosnia, Lt. Gen. Sir Michael Rose, seems to be pursuing whatever strategy will work to get control over the guns and enforce peace in the capital.

"The 10-day ultimatum is a NATO ultimatum, it is not our ultimatum," said U.N. spokesman Lt. Col. Bill Aikman.

Gen. Jean Cot, Rose's boss, met Saturday with Gen. Ratko Mladic, the Bosnian Serb commander, in northwest Bosnia near the besieged Muslim enclave of Bihac.

Cot said later that Mladic, the most powerful military man on the Bosnian Serb side, seemed to understand the necessity for the Serbs to take an initiative for peace in Sarajevo.

Vitaly Churkin, the Russian envoy for former Yugoslavia, said after meeting Serbian President Slobodan Milosevic in Belgrade that the powerful Serbian politician also supported peace moves.

The exact mechanism of how any air strikes might occur seems to be deliberately vague, in part because Russia — the Serbs' closest backer — wants to avoid endorsing them directly through the U.N. Security Council.

While the Bosnian Serbs have rejected NATO's ultimatum, their guns have been almost silent since Thursday. One artillery round was fired Sunday, and there were no injuries.

Staff Report

Today's forecast calls for partly cloudy skies with a high near 60 and south winds at 10-15 mph. Tonight should have high clouds with a low between 30-35, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Tuesday should be mostly sunny with a high in the mid-60s.

After an overnight low of 19, Sunday's high reached 55, compared to the record high for that date of 83 set in 1962. The record low was 15 set in 1951.

STATE

Sunny skies were the norm across the state Sunday.

Dry air and sunny skies helped temperatures rise into the 50s in North Texas Sunday afternoon. High level clouds were noted over the region. Winds were from the north generally around 10 mph.

Today's forecast for North Texas calls for mostly clear skies. Highs will be in the upper 50s and 60s. Lows will be in the 30s tonight.

In West Texas, sunny to mostly sunny skies prevailed Sunday with temperatures mainly in the 50s. Winds were variable at 5 to 15 mph.

Fair to partly cloudy skies are forecast for West Texas today. Highs will be in the 50s and 60s, except for 70s in the Big Bend lowlands. Lows will be mainly in the 20s and 30s.

The South Texas area was mostly sunny Sunday except in the deep south where it was cloudy. As a large chilly high pressure system moved into the region, winds slowly decreased and blew out of the north at 10 to 25 mph. Temperatures reached into the 60s.

Today's forecast for South Texas calls for fair skies with highs in the 50s. Lows tonight will be near 30 in the Hill Country to near 40 South Central.

NATION

A powerful storm system with wind gusts up to 80 mph brought heavy snow to the Pacific Northwest on Sunday, while a developing storm off the north Atlantic coast dropped lighter snow on New England.

Quiet weather prevailed across the rest of the nation, much of which was still digging itself out from last week's storms.

A vigorous cold front accompanied by strong winds battered Oregon and Washington early Sunday. Rain fell at the lower elevations, while snowfall was as heavy as 2 to 3 inches an hour in the Washington Olympics and Cascades.

A foot of new snow was reported Sunday morning at Snoqualmie Pass, and 27 inches of new snow was reported at the Mount Baker ski area. Storm totals are expected to reach 2 to 5 feet, with considerable drifts.

Snow was lighter across the mountains of Oregon and northern Idaho.

Strong winds developed out ahead of this storm system, across portions of the northern Rockies, where winds with sustained speeds of 40 mph and gusts up to 61 mph were reported.

Meanwhile, an upper-level weather system raced into the northeastern United States, producing a light mixture of freezing drizzle, sleet and snow across portions of the mid-Atlantic and southern New England.

The heaviest snow fell on northern New England. Three inches were recorded at several sites in Maine, and up to 2 inches in New Hampshire.

In Delaware, a light freezing drizzle compounded last week's ice storm. Trees and utility poles continued to topple. Thousands of customers remained without power, and some weren't expected to have their electricity restored until Tuesday.

Numerous showers and thunderstorms pelted Hawaii, causing flash flooding in parts. More than 6 inches of rain fell Sunday morning at Princeville on the island of Kauai, and up to 5 inches fell elsewhere.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

TRAIL: Newcomers tap lobbyists, consultants

(From 1A)

$234,000, came from special interest groups, while substantial amounts came in individual donations from lobbyists.

Labor invested heavily in Schenk's re-election. The United Auto Workers provided $13,500; the Federal, State, County and Municipal Employees union g $12,000; the Machinists donated $5,000; and the electrical workers and seafarers gave $4,000 each.

Schenk, D-Calif., also got $10,000 from the trial lawyers, who are fighting efforts at malpractice reform in the health bill. Dentists, Merck pharmaceuticals and Blue Cross-Blue Shield gave $1,000 apiece. Energy and financial interests, whose issues also go before Schenk's committee, were major givers as well.

She also won important support from Washington insiders. Superlobbyist Tommy Boggs; Andrew Athy, a lobbyist and former counsel to the Energy and Commerce Committee; and Fred Hatfield, a lobbyist for a hazardous waste coalition, each donated $500 to her.

The 115 freshman House members were elected by a public angry over congressional scandals and the influence of special interests. Polls showed voters believed Congress had lost touch with average Americans, and many non-incumbents ran on anti-Washington platforms.

Usually, challengers attract few donations from PACs, the donating arms of special interest lobbies. But once they're elected, Washington insiders line up to win their attention and favor, especially after committee assignments are handed out, Miller said.

In an interview, Schenk said she has been a strong proponent of reforming the campaign finance system and of putting curbs on lobbyists' gift giving.

But in the meantime, she said, "contributions will continue to be solicited and made." To do otherwise would be foolhardy in a San Diego district that leans Republican, aides said.

"The key question is, How much influence does it have?" Schenk said. "In this office, very little."

The freshman who won the rarest assignment, a seat on the tax-writing Ways and Means Committee, did well with financial and health interests. Rep. Mel Reynolds, D-Ill., took in $220,000 for the year, including $5,000 from the ophthalmologists, $4,000 from commodity futures brokers and $2,500 from the dentists' PAC.

Fund raising went so well that Reynolds was able to pay himself back in a little over two months for most of a $30,000 loan he made to his campaign.

The money chase was even better for Marjorie Margolies-Mezvinsky, a Pennsylvania Democrat who pulled in $519,000 last year, a little over half of it from PACs.

Labor unions gave heavily to Margolies-Mezvinsky, including $9,500 from the machinists, $3,500 from the electrical workers and $4,000 from the Teamsters.

just moments into her trial Friday.

Following her acquittal, Mrs. Hutchison called on Travis County District Attorney Ronnie Earle to release evidence in the case. Over the weekend, Earle has released thousands of pages of documents to reporters.

The evidence indicates extensive political work was performed at the Treasury while Mrs. Hutchison was there.

It is illegal to perform non-state work on state time, including campaign business.

Several of the depositions also provide in-depth testimony over an incident in which a former aide alleges Mrs. Hutchison hit her with a book binder.

Mrs. Hutchison has maintained that any time spent on political and personal work at the Treasury was supposed to be made up to the state. And she has denied the alleged hitting incident.

Sharon Ammann, a former aide to Mrs. Hutchison, said she left the Treasury, "Because in my estimation, there was too much, too many political things going on in the office and I just thought it would be best to get out."

Mrs. Ammann said she frequently performed personal chores for Mrs. Hutchison, helping her purchase a home and working with contractors to have the house painted.

One time in the office, Mrs. Ammann said Mrs. Hutchison hit her with a book binder eight or 10 times on the shoulder after Mrs. Ammann could not find a telephone number Mrs. Hutchison wanted.

"'I told you to look in that file cabinet until you found the number and I meant it,'" Mrs. Ammann quoted Mrs. Hutchison as saying. Mrs. Ammann said she was shocked by the incident.

"She never said, 'I'm sorry.'" places to live by 49 percent those who had lived in the state for more than 20 years.

By comparison, California was endorsed as one of the best for only 27 percent of people who had resided in the state for 10 years or less.

Some longtimers, among them Los Angeles Mayor Richard Riordan, have rushed to defend the City of Angels.

"ABC World News compared us to, of all places, hell," Riordan said in a speech last week to the California Newspaper Publishers Association.

"There's no doubt we've had our fair share of natural and man-made disasters," he said. "But, here's the real part of the story — Los Angeles has never looked more beautiful than it did in its response to the earthquake."

That was not the Los Angeles Claire O'Garro saw when she moved with her husband and nine children in October from St. Croix, Virgin Islands.

Since then, brush fire smoke coupled with smog worsened her children's asthma, said O'Garro, 42. Her husband's car repair business went bankrupt because of Los Angeles' soured economy.

On Jan. 17, the quake hit and their decision to move became an easy one.

"I've been through hurricanes. I've been through tornadoes. I've been through typhoons. But this earthquake is the worst," O'Garro said.

Now the O'Garros are looking at Idaho or Colorado.

They are working with the Greener Pastures Institute, a business that helps relocate people to smaller towns in Utah, Nevada, Colorado and other states.

Greener Pastures tries to woo potential customers through a postcard campaign that asks the leading question: "When will (begin ital) you (end ital) move out of California? Have you been asking yourself that question a lot lately?"

Racial tensions. Crime. Smog. And now earthquakes.

"Southern California is the most dangerous urban area in the United States," said Bill Seavey, director of Greener Pastures, which charges $25 a year for its anti-California newsletter and $60 an hour for counseling.

Most people whom Seavey has been counseling are longtime California residents, but he said he believes short-timers are most likely to leave first.

And he added, "This earthquake does seem to be a threshhold point or a trigger point for moving on."

CLEARS: Chocolate doesn't raise cholesterol

(From 1A)

Etherton said.

Cocoa butter, which makes up 55 percent to 60 percent of chocolate, is rich in stearic acid.

The study included a group of 15 male students from Penn State, all of whom were given foods high in saturated fat over a nine-week period. Some were given one candy bar a day.

Those participants consuming the candy showed no significant increase in their blood cholesterol level.

"I believe that Dr. Kris-Etherton was trying to show that there is some flexibility in a cholesterol-oriented diet," said Dr. Margo Denke, of the University of Texas Southwestern Medical Center's Human Nutrition Center in Dallas. "Her study shows that you can make minor adjustments in your diet and fit in fun foods."

But a nutrition expert with the American Dietetic Association says it still may be soon to take off on a chocolate binge.

"You must consider that this study was done on only 15 men," said Dr. Wahida Karmally, director of nutrition at Irving Center for Clinical Research Columbia Presbyterian Medical Center in New York. "That cannot be acceptable, because there is no indication on how different segments of the population would respond."

Karmally says the food industry is waiting to hear good things about stearic acid, which can prolong the shelf life of some foods.

"We don't really know enough about the properties of stearic acid and small studies cannot really be conclusive," she added.

Karmally says men probably were used in the study because they don't experience the hormonal changes that women do.

She also said that tests like Kris-Etherton's don't show how stearic acid intake may have affected other body parts.

All three nutritionists agree that chocolate should be eaten in moderation.

"You must keep fat intake down," Karmally said. "Remember, 1 ounce of chocolate is about 9 grams and that equals about 2 pounds of butter."

TRIAL: Case to resume today

(From 1A)

rell said he couldn't remember pulling the trigger.

Defense attorneys Jim Eubank and Vern Martin have told the jury Harrell was insane at the time of the shooting.

However, Midland County District Attorney Al Schorre contends the shooting was part of an intended robbery of Musick.

In opening remarks, the defense attorneys told the jury there was no robbery and the most they could find Harrell guilty of would be murder or voluntary manslaughter.

The jury has the option to find Harrell innocent or guilty of capital murder, murder or voluntary manslaughter.

Schorre chose not to seek the death penalty in this case.

If the jury finds Harrell guilty of capital murder, he is automatically assessed a life sentence. But, if the jury finds him guilty of a lesser charge, they will have the opportunity to hear more testimony then deliberate on what sentence should be imposed.

Murder can carry a sentence of life in prison or anything from five to 99 years in prison. If the jury finds Harrell guilty of voluntary manslaughter the sentence could be anything from two to 20 years.

The case will resume this morning with closing arguments.

UPSET: American wins downhill gold

(From 1A)

step of the victory stand Sunday night. For one sunny morning Moe knocked Tonya Harding and Nancy Kerrigan right off the charts in this Winter Olympics.

Vandenburg, who considers herself part of Tommy's extended family in Alaska, said it best when asked why she was wearing a headband with the letters "MOE" across the forehead.

"We were hoping for 'Moe or a Miracle,'" she said. "We got them both."

This was no fluke, however. Clattering over what many veterans considered the first "real" downhill course since Franz Klammer careened down the Innsbruck course for the 1976 gold medal, Moe had to contend with flame-treated turns that he said were polished "like a hockey rink."

He was clipping along so fast that on the final bump he mis-timed his pre-jump and nearly sailed all the way to the flat ground.

"I guess," said Moe, who has the look of a skiing Lenny Dykstra, "that means you're going fast, when you land at the bottom of the hill."

Moe's stunning finish abruptly snuffed a building Norwegian victory party. When favorite son Kjetil Andre Aamodt, the seventh down the course, posted the fastest time of the day, about 30,000 skiing fans, most of them waving red and blue Norwegian flags, erupted in cheers.

As Aamondt crossed the finish line, however, Moe was kicking off for the start. Another roar went up when the timers showed that Moe was behind Aamondt's time at the top, but the intermediate timing silenced the crowd instantly.

"When I came to the finish line, I was really enjoying life," said Aamondt, the 1992 gold medalist in Super G. "There were 30,000 cheering. It was a great experience. But it only lasted for two minutes."

That was when Moe crossed the line and skidded to a stop. When he looked at the scoreboard, even he couldn't believe it.

"I heard the crowd cheering," he said, "and I looked up and saw number one, and I was just really shocked. Usually when the crowd cheers for me it's for number two or number three, even number 10."

A surprise? You might say that. An American hadn't even won a World Cup downhill since 1992. It had been 10 years since Bill Johnson won the Olympic gold in Sarajevo. Before Johnson, no American had ever won a medal of any hue in the history of the downhill.

So inept were the skiing Americans that Sports Illustrated, in a story appearing the week before the Games, called the team "Uncle Sam's lead-footed snowplow brigade."

Palestinian ambush leaves 1 Israeli dead, 2 wounded

BEITUNIYA, Occupied West Bank (AP) — Palestinian gunmen sprayed automatic gun fire at a car carrying Israeli security agents in the occupied West Bank on Sunday, killing one and injuring two, officials said.

The ambush occurred as agents of the Shin Bet, Israel's internal security service, drove by the village of Beituniya, six miles north of Jerusalem, said Maj. Gen. Shaul Mufaz, commander of the occupied West Bank forces.

Three agents were wounded but returned fire, Mufaz said, adding he did not know how many gunmen were involved.

One Israeli died en route to Hadassah hospital in Ein Kerem, spokeswoman Jennifer Basu told The Associated Press. She said all three were in civilian clothing.

The army clamped a curfew on Beituniya and nearby Ramallah, and cut off electricity in El Amari refugee camp. Soldiers reportedly detained two suspects during searches for the gunmen.

The agents' white Mercedes car was wrapped in canvas and then towed away to conceal it from photographers. Security sources said more than 40 bullets were fired.

Army radio reported that the attack was claimed by Izzedine el Qassam, the military arm of Hamas, a radical Muslim group opposed to the Israel-PLO peace accord. Hamas has been blamed for most of the attacks on Israelis since the accord was signed Sept. 13.

Violence against the peace agreement has escalated since Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization agreed Wednesday on security arrangements for the proposed Palestinian autonomy.

Palestinian opponents to the Israel-PLO accord have said the autonomy is too limited, and have vowed to sabotage the peace process through anti-Israel violence.

Somali gunmen kill Egyptian, kidnap Italians

MOGADISHU, Somalia (AP) — Somali gunmen kidnapped two Italian aid workers Sunday, and an Egyptian peacekeeper was killed and another wounded in an ambush of their military convoy.

Maj. Chris Budge, a United Nations spokesman, said aid workers Sergio Passatore and Gianfranco Stefan were kidnapped at Jowhar, about 50 miles north of Mogadishu. They were believed to be working for the Italian charity CEFA.

Budge said he had no further details on the abductions.

The Egyptians were attacked on the bypass road linking U.N. headquarters in Mogadishu with the airport and port, both U.N. military and supply bases. The road was built by U.S. Army engineers so U.N. vehicles could avoid routes through Mogadishu that are more vulnerable to attack.

No details of the ambush were available from Budge, Egyptian troops or the Pakistani U.N. contingent, which provides security along the bypass road. It was not known if troops in the convoy exchanged fire with the attackers.

The attack raised the casualty toll for U.N. peacekeepers to 81 dead and 329 wounded since the United Nations took over the humanitarian mission from an American-led military coalition last May.

The U.S.-led force arrived in December 1992 to save the Horn of Africa nation from famine and clan warfare. More than 350,000 Somalis died of hunger, disease and fighting that year.

Sunday's incidents were part of a pattern of escalating violence that has accompanied the gradual withdrawal of American and other Western troops from the U.N. peacekeeping force in Somalia.

This has included attacks on offices and warehouses.

Papers hail Japanese leader for rejecting U.S.

TOKYO (AP) — Prime Minister Morihiro Hosokawa returned home Sunday from Washington to unanimous praise from Japan's major national newspapers for his rejection of U.S. trade demands.

But editorials commenting on the breakdown of U.S.-Japan trade talks at Hosokawa's summit with President Clinton said the prime minister should quickly move on his own to open Japan's markets to prevent a trade war.

All five major national dailies called on Tokyo to move ahead with reforms such as reducing government regulations and boosting government purchases of foreign goods.

"Japan needs to prove that it has changed. We urge Hosokawa to take the initiative in persuading those forces that resist reform," said the Yomiuri newspaper, Japan's largest.

Hosokawa, who arrived back in Tokyo Sunday night, told reporters traveling with him that he planned to assemble officials early this week to study what Japan can do to break the trade impasse, Kyodo News Service reported.

Hosokawa's coalition ousted the corruption-plagued Liberal Democrats for the first time in 38 years last August, and has already implemented some long-delayed reforms such as opening Japan's rice market to imports.

But dissension in the ruling coalition has slowed down the prime minister in other areas, such as cutting taxes to stimulate the economy.

Editorials said the Clinton administration should be patient with Hosokawa and refrain from carrying out threats of punitive sanctions against Japan for its $60 billion trade surplus with the United States.

"The best medicine for the surplus would be a Japanese economic recovery," said the centrist Mainichi daily. "Levying sanctions will further worsen Japan's economy."

The talks on Friday ended in deadlock because Hosokawa rebuffed U.S. calls.

Mexicans march, demand clean elections

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Small children released doves into the blue sky over the capital's main Zocalo plaza as tens of thousands of opposition party members completed a 100-hour march to demand clean presidential elections.

Led by presidential candidate Cuauhtemoc Cardenas of the left-leaning Democratic Revolution Party, the demonstrators began their march 10 a.m. Wednesday and ended at 2 p.m. Sunday.

Cardenas said the march was designed to draw attention to his proposed electoral reforms, which call for equal time for all candidates on television and radio and for independent election officials.

Election officials currently are part of the government, which is controlled by the ruling Institutional Revolutionary Party, or PRI.

"The peace and stability of the country is only possible with democracy," Cuauhtemoc told thousands gathered in the afternoon heat. "All must walk carefully so the upcoming elections aren't trampled on."

Cardenas has called on all other opposition parties to support the proposal, which he plans to submit to federal lawmakers on Tuesday.

"The country's future is in the government's hands," he said.

In 1988, Cardenas ran the strongest opposition campaign of this century in the presidential race PRI candidate Carlos Salinas de Gortari won by a whisker. The race was marred by opposition charges of electoral fraud.

The PRI candidate for the Aug. 21 elections is Luis Donald Colosio, the former chief of social services and Salinas' former campaign manager.

The party has long been criticized for maintaining its 64-year stranglehold on power through patronage, repression and electoral fraud. The PRI has won every presidential election since it was formed in 1929.

The march for clean elections totalled 760 trips around the Zocalo, or a total of 416 kilometers, organizers said. Marchers took turns over the 4½-day period, continuing the demonstration around the clock.

The demonstration transformed the Zocalo into a kind of street fair, with marchers, singing dancing and shouting as they made their way around and around the plaza.

Vendors sold everything from tacos and quesadillas to kites, hats and balloons for the thousands of children who traveled with their parents to the plaza.

It also was a kind of informal celebration of the newly emerged Zapatista National Liberation Army and its leader, Subcommandante Marcos, who is becoming a popular folk hero.

Hawkers sold T-shirts reading "I'm a Zapatista," as well as black ski masks, like those Marcos and his rebel fighters wore when they declared war on the government and seized town halls throughout the southern state of Chiapas on Jan. 1.

"Electoral Revolution or the Country Will Rise Up," read one sign, quoting a saying Marcos used in one of his clandestine communiques from his rebel base deep in Chiapas' Lacandon jungle.

"Yes to Democracy, to the Cemetery with the PRI," another sign read.

A cease-fire in the uprising was declared by both sides last month, pending talks between rebels and government officials.

Thieves steal Roman coins from museum

ST. PETERSBURG, Russia (AP) — Three Roman coins were stolen from a glass case at the Hermitage Museum, and the chief curator said Sunday he did not have enough money for proper security.

Vladimir Matveyev said the coins were discovered missing Friday morning.

Russian Television had described the coins as of "great value," but Matveyev said they were worth a total of about 850,000 rubles ($540). He said more valuable coins displayed in the same case were not touched.

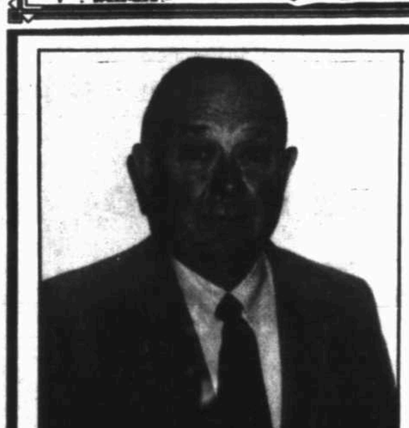

"For me the cost is not the primary concern. Much more important is the fact that there was a robbery," he said.

Matveyev said the museum's security staff was drastically cut two years ago because of a lack of funds.

A group of Palestinian women wearing traditional clothes are seen in East Jerusalem over the weekend. Palestinian women in Israel and the occupied lands are among the pioneers in the Arab world in confronting violence against women. While in most of the Middle East the problem is still hushed up, Palestinian women have established two shelters for battered women and several rape hotlines in recent months.

Arab feminists set up 1st shelter for battered

By Karin Laub
Associated Press

JERUSALEM — At age 11, Reem was raped at knifepoint by a teen-age cousin. When her family found out five years later, they punished her for shaming them and a brother broke her right foot with a cinder block.

"My mother cursed me and told me, 'You are dirt and people are gossiping about you,'" recalled Reem, a 16-year-old Bedouin with a cherubic face framed by a pageboy haircut.

Still, Reem is lucky. Unlike many, she had a place to escape from her family's abuse and death threats: a shelter set up last fall by Arab feminists. They say it is the first such sanctuary in the Arab world, where violence against women is often hushed up.

Since September, 50 teen-agers have found temporary refuge in the five-room apartment. Its location is kept secret.

Reem, not her real name, has a chronic infection in her right foot and wears orthopedic sneakers. When police brought her to the shelter four months ago, she refused to speak.

"I didn't trust anyone," she said. "I dreamt all the time that my parents were chasing after me with a knife and I woke up screaming."

She proudly showed her drawings of flowers and a scrapbook of photos of soccer players. Starved for affection, she idolizes her counselor Hanan and called her "my good mother" in a poem.

Rima Assy, director of the center, said she has space for 10 girls, but receives 30 placement requests a week and has to refuse most of them.

While the shelter is a good start, she said, there is no follow-up. Several girls had to return home with no protection beyond pledges signed by their families in the presence of police that they would not be harmed.

The shelter's founders are pioneers in a region where violence against women is often condoned and victims are discouraged from seeking help.

"It is accepted as a private matter that concerns only the family," said Hadiya Jarrad of the Democratic Women's Association in Tunisia. "The reigning mentality is that a woman can be corrected when she is on the wrong path."

Information is sketchy, but there is enough to suggest the depth of the problem:

■ In Jordan, a country of 3.9 million people, about 60 women a year die in "honor killings," said Zuhra Sharabati, a criminal lawyer. About 500 women a year file assault complaints against their husbands, she added, but the vast majority of cases are not reported.

■ In Tunisia, 85 percent of the 480 female assault victims admitted in 1992 at Rabita Hospital in Tunis were beaten by their husbands, said the Tunisian Democratic Women's Association.

■ In the occupied territories, nearly all of the 107 Palestinian women reported slain by fellow Arabs as alleged collaborators during the uprising against Israel were in fact victims of honor killings, the Israeli human rights group Betselem said last month.

Nadera Kevorkian, a sociologist at Bethlehem University in the West Bank, cited the case of a Palestinian woman who was raped by a brother-in-law, got pregnant, gave birth last May and was critically beaten by relatives while in the maternity ward.

She was moved to another hospital. Kevorkian pleaded with officials not to release the woman to her family, but was ignored. The day after her release, the woman's body was found, hacked to pieces, in a plastic bag on the steps of the hospital, Kevorkian said.

In recent months, Palestinian women's groups have begun trying to help.

Mystique builds around Mexican guerrilla leader

By Joseph B. Frazier
Associated Press

MEXICO CITY — Say — who IS that masked man, anyway?

Not the Lone Ranger or Zorro. But Subcomandante Marcos, a leader and spokesman for Mexico's Zapatista rebels, is building up a similar mystique.

Seen by some as a romantic, anonymous righter of wrongs, by others as a killer and troublemaker, the image of the unidentified ski-masked guerrilla has outgrown his role in last month's uprising in the southern state of Chiapas.

In the Las Galarias Bar in San Cristobal de las Casas, in Chiapas, the rock videos have been replaced by an interview with Marcos videotaped in the jungle. It plays nightly to good crowds, their attention riveted to the screen.

Some of the cheap dolls in indigenous costumes hawked by hundreds of Indian women — also in indigenous garb — now sport black ski masks.

When the Chiapas state legislature met in Tuxtla Gutierrez to replace Chiapas Gov. Elmar Setzer, who was pressured out because of the uprising, one of the sealed votes was for Marcos.

College students in protest marches are replacing their usual bandanas with the black ski masks of Marcos and the Zapatista National Liberation Army.

Although Marcos' face is hidden, it has become one of the best-known in Mexico.

His eyes — green, some say, not the black of the indigenous Maya — peer from newspaper photos and political cartoons, often without identification. Marcos is one of a handful of Mexicans who doesn't need it.

In one political cartoon, a television newscaster turns to news of the conflict of Chiapas. Everyone in the family watching the program, even the dog, wears a ski mask.

The uprising was in the name of the poor of Chiapas, who have suffered exploitation and poverty for centuries.

"We are present at the first post-Communist rebellion, in which the language is no longer petrified, dogmatic, heavy, but much fresher," wrote novelist Carlos Fuentes.

The government news agency Notimex said Marcos' communiques "oscillate between humor and drama, jokes and seriousness, illusion and brutal realism."

No songs extol his virtues, but it's early. Newspaper ads are soliciting musical groups to perform at a pro-Zapatista rally scheduled March 5-6 in Mexico City's main plaza.

Official Mexico takes Marcos and his cohorts very seriously as a political threat and urges Mexicans not to glorify the movement.

But novelist Guadalupe Loaeza, who writes a column for the Mexico City newspaper Reforma, may sum up a broader opinion.

In an imaginary interview with upper-class women she quotes one as saying:

"I like him a lot. He is a powerful writer and poet. I like his humor and the way he signs his communiques "From the mountains of southeast Mexico."

"It wouldn't surprise me to see him on the cover of Time magazine soon. I assure you that many bourgeois ladies would happily go into the jungle with him . . . including me."

President Clinton motions to reporters in Hot Springs, Ark., Sunday, saying he spoke by telephone to first lady Hillary Rodham Clinton who is in Norway with Chelsea and also to U.S. gold medalist downhill skier Tommy Moe. Clinton spent the weekend in his childhood home visiting friends and family.

Clinton congratulates gold medalist, visits hometown

HOT SPRINGS, Ark. (AP) — Calling from his limousine on the way to a golf outing Sunday, President Clinton congratulated skier Tommy Moe for winning the United States' first gold medal in the 1994 Winter Olympics.

"I told him America is proud of him," the president said. Clinton said he had not witnessed Moe's award-winning performance in the downhill ski race, but planned to "watch it on the news."

Calling out to reporters after lunch at a friend's house, Clinton said the call was arranged when his wife called from Norway with the news.

Hillary Rodham Clinton is heading the U.S. delegation to the games in Lillehammer, Norway. A traffic jam caused her to miss Moe's effort, which gave the United States its first Alpine skiing gold medal in 10 years.

The president's trip to Hot Springs was his first to his home state since the Jan. 6 funeral for his mother, Virginia Kelley.

Clinton spent Saturday evening at the home of his stepfather, Dick Kelley, and spent Sunday morning going through his mother's mementoes and talking with his brother, Roger, and Kelley.

Later in the day, Clinton jogged through a nearby park, ignoring reporters' questions on policy issues.

Then, Clinton teed off at the Belvedere Golf Club. He was joined by his stepfather and longtime friend Webb Hubble, who is now an associate attorney general.

Although Clinton did not let serious issues interfere with a weekend of reminiscence and relaxation, others in the presidential entourage kept working.

White House spokesman Don Steinberg denied speculation that the president has decided to retaliate against Japan because of failed trade talks.

After the talks broke off Friday, Clinton said a period of reflection was needed. Steinberg said no decisions have been made.

Report: Woman cites arsons at abortion clinics

WICHITA, Kan. (AP) — A woman accused of trying to kill an abortion doctor has provided details linking herself to abortion clinic arsons around the country over the past three years, The Wichita Eagle reported Sunday.

In a series of letters and interviews with the newspaper, Shelley Shannon provided details that suggest she was involved in several arsons or knows who was.

Her activities are under investigation by the FBI and the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms.

"This could go on for some time . . . I figure at least six different states, several places in some states," she wrote in a letter to the newspaper. "That's what I get for traveling hither and yon, doing this, that and the other thing."

Shannon, 37, of Grants Pass, Ore., was charged with attempted first-degree murder in the Aug. 19 shooting of George Tiller outside his clinic, Women's Health Care Services. Tiller was slightly wounded in both arms and returned to work the next day.

Shannon is being held in lieu of $1 million bond awaiting a March 21 trial.

In one telephone interview, Shannon said she decided in 1990 that violence against clinics was justified.

"In fact, I think one baby's life is worth more than all the buildings in the world," she said. "So as far as somebody bombing a place, I came to the conclusion then that there was nothing wrong with that, especially when you see the results like we've had down in Redding, Calif., where the place was closed for eight months." The reference was to a June 1992 fire at a clinic there.

In one telephone interview, Shannon declined to tell the newspaper if she committed the arsons and said she was not worried about a conspiracy investigation.

In December, Shannon's 20-year-old daughter, Angi, was subpoenaed to testify before a federal grand jury in Portland. At the time, Oregon authorities said Shelley Shannon was a prime suspect in an April 1992 arson at an Ashland, Ore., clinic.

Federal authorities have kept quiet about their investigation, much of which has focused on diaries and letters found buried in Shannon's back yard in September.

"It's a very high priority for us right now, for obvious reasons," said John McMahon, group supervisor in the Portland ATF office.

Shannon told the newspaper that two confiscated diaries provide "detailed accounts" of clinic violence.

She said that, based on her diaries, she believed federal authorities are looking to see if she was involved in clinic fires at Helena, Mont., and Boise, Idaho.

Shannon's letters also mentioned the Redding fire and clinic fires in January 1992 in Beaumont, Texas, and April 1992 in Fargo, N.D.

She said authorities do not have her diaries from before 1992. Those diaries, she said, are "not any place where they'll ever find them. Those are taken care of for me."

Study: Health-care plan to save states $8 billion

WASHINGTON (AP) — States would spend $8 billion less on medical aid to the poor under President Clinton's health reforms, but there would still be wide disparities in federal help for those patients, an Urban Institute study concludes.

The savings might not materialize for states already accustomed to getting extra federal Medicaid money through provider taxes and donations, the researchers said.

But overall, the states that now contribute $61 billion toward the $140 billion Medicaid program would wind up spending about $53 billion under Clinton's plan, the report states. The president's proposal would subsidize insurance for low-income families and some small businesses.

Officials in some states have expressed concern that the Clinton reforms might hurt them by eliminating most federal subsidies for the uninsured and leaving illegal immigrants uncovered.

A task force set up by New York Gov. Mario Cuomo recently claimed the state would lose $342 million in 1997, but would gain money in later years.

The Clinton administration, by contrast, claims its radical changes in Medicaid would save states $47 billion from 1996 to 2000, including $24 billion in the year 2000 alone.

Under Clinton's plan, most of the 31 million people on Medicaid would get subsidies to buy regular health insurance through the same new alliances that would be used by much of the rest of the population.

The federal and state governments would still pay for Medicaid for welfare recipients, and states would be required to pay the alliances what they now spend on non-welfare Medicaid recipients.

Also, the states and Washington would still split Medicaid costs of nursing home care for the poor and some other services. But some payments to hospitals that care for the poor and uninsured in large numbers would be largely eliminated.

"Most states will spend less from their own revenues under the Health Security Act than they do currently, despite the spending that will still be required of them," said the Urban Institute's John Holahan and David Liska.

"In general, the distribution of federal spending after reform tends to benefit lower-income states," they said.

The study estimated the federal government spends $327 per state resident.

U.S. should seek nuke-site access

The Clinton administration insists it will never subcontract its foreign policy to any international institution. Yet it is doing just that in its nuclear diplomacy with North Korea. It is letting the International Atomic Energy Agency decide how to carry out a deal Washington reached with Pyongyang. By changing the terms of that deal, the IAEA could embroil the United States in a dangerous confrontation on the Korean Peninsula.

The IAEA is supposed to be negotiating detailed arrangements for inspections at all North Korea's declared nuclear sites. These inspections are designed to insure that nuclear safeguards are in place. More thorough regular inspections, which could impede the diversion of nuclear material to bomb-making, would not resume until the United States holds a new round of high-level talks with the North. Inspections of suspected nuclear waste sites to determine whether such diversion has already occurred have yet to be negotiated.

But the IAEA, which does not like to see member states trifle with its procedures, is asking for more intrusive access to a reactor site than the North agreed to with Washington, according to Pyongyang. The United States now needs to try to break the deadlock between North Korea and the IAEA before the IAEA refers the matter to the U.N. Security Council, which has the power to impose economic sanctions on Pyongyang.

The danger is that the drumbeat of war may drown out diplomacy. The administration is considering the dispatch of Patriot missiles and other military forces to shore up the South. And members of Congress have, perversely, called for putting nuclear arms back into South Korea. Ratcheting up the threats may appease the hawks at home, but it bolsters hardliners in North Korea, who could use such threats to justify proceeding with the development of nuclear weapons.

Reinforcing the South makes sense if and when the United States decides to abandon diplomacy and press for economic sanctions. Such sanctions would likely end all hope of inspecting North Korea's nuclear sites and could lead to the resumption of confrontation in Korea. Given Pyongyang's unpredictability, reinforcements would then be prudent.

But it is premature to be taking such steps now. The United States should be doing what it can diplomatically to gain unimpeded access to North Korea's nuclear sites, step by grudging step. And it should not leave it up to the IAEA to overreach and thereby trigger a confrontation with North Korea.

Defense funds give PACs another outlet

WASHINGTON — Three days after a federal judge threw out an indictment of Sen. Dave Durenberger, R-Minn., his supporters gathered to show their respect for the man who had been charged with billing rent to the taxpayers for an apartment he already owned.

Anderson

But the "Tribute to Durenberger," as the evening was billed, was less about reverence than the $250,000 raised. Even if he avoids re-indictment this spring, Durenberger's legal defense fund will owe most of that money to his Washington lawyers.

Durenberger enjoys what might be called the spoils of scandal, Washington-style. Legal defense funds can be another form of influence-buying, according to various government and private experts.

Only four senators launched legal defense funds during the 1980s, but in the last four years, 10 senators — six this session of Congress alone — have tapped contributors to help defray legal bills that often run to $400 an hour in Washington.

"There is the question of whether this is just another way to shake down special interests," an aide to Durenberger told us. He defended the senator's fund-raising practices by adding, "I would challenge someone to come in and show where they think there has been improper influence if that's the implication which is given."

This is a corner of campaign finance that goes unaddressed by any of the current reform proposals. Unlike campaign contributions, which are limited to $1,000 for individuals and $5,000 for political action committees per election, annual donations to legal defense funds may be as high as $10,000 in the Senate and $5,000 in the House. When a supporter or special interest has "maxed" out on the amount allowed for campaign contributions, they can still pay into a member's defense fund.

"Legal defense funds offer another opportunity for interest groups to insert themselves between a member and the people who they are representing," a spokesperson for the Center for Responsible Politics told us. "No doubt people who are supporting a member in a time of need will be remembered even more."

As a ranking member of the House Armed Services committee, former Rep. Nicholas Mavroules, D-Mass., profited from having both campaign and legal coffers two years ago. When defense contractor Raytheon Co. had given the maximum allowed to Mavroules' campaign fund, he opened up a legal defense fund, allowing Raytheon to give another $5,000.

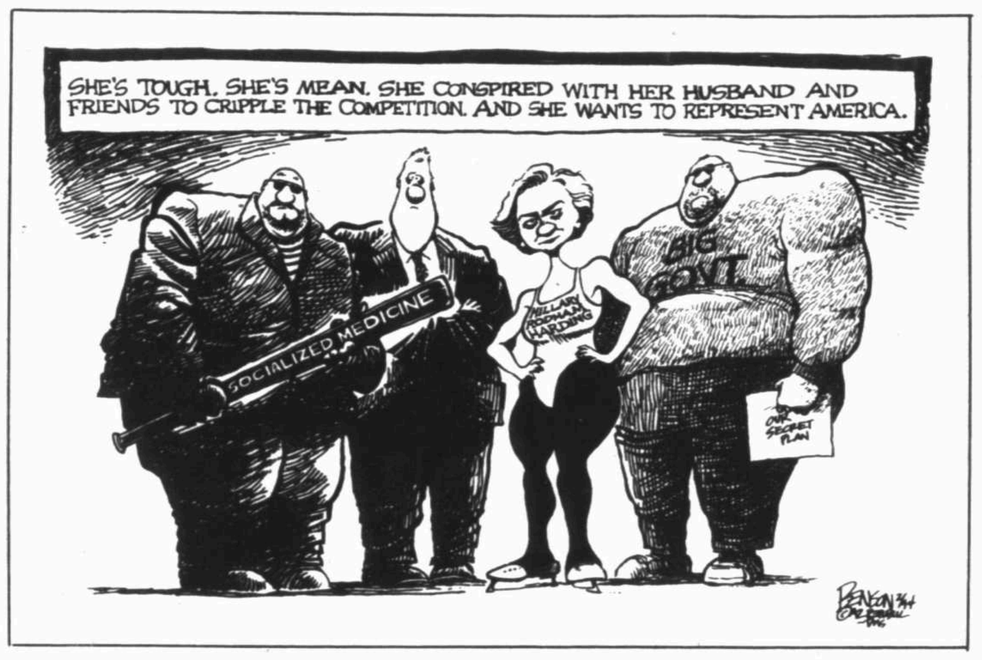

The case of Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., who is toughing it out in the Senate despite allegations of sexual harassment, is another example of how disgrace doesn't dry up fund raising. As the ranking minority member of the Senate Finance Committee, Packwood continues to make his presence felt for a variety of special interests.

The Packwood legal defense fund has generated more than $240,000, much of that coming from big business. According to public record, the Airline Pilots PAC, the Lumber Dealers PAC and the Turner Broadcasting PAC.

In an informal poll of 50 people who have given to legal defense funds in the past four years, we found that while many told us they were old friends and supporters of the members, a select few admitted they were not so much motivated by the cause, but by the opportunity to help a powerful politician when he was down.

A guest at Durenberger's celebration, however, told us he didn't expect to win any favor by writing a fat check to the senator. But no one should fault him for trying. "I've given a lot of money (to Durenberger)," he said. "And he never listens to me. I expected him to, but he never did. . . . Durenberger's the hardest guy to buy influence with."

Bargain-basement flights make you wonder

The more I think about it, the less certain I am that I really want to take one of those cut-rate flights.

I saw where you could fly from Atlanta to Jacksonville, Fla., for $39. That is exactly what Grevhound charges for the same trip on a bus.

Grizzard

Some airline is always cutting fares. If you book two weeks in advance and your last name starts with R and you say the magic words "engine failure" you often can fly across the country and back on what it can cost in some towns to get to the airport.

What I want to know: Were the airlines simply gouging us all those years they didn't have cheap fares, or what have they cut back on to allow us to fly so inexpensively?

I figure they've cut back somewhere. No airline can stay in business if it sells its product — a ride in one of its airplanes — for less than what it costs to transport you.

I've heard there's a new airline that offers cheap fares, and one thing it has done away with is the boarding pass.

How much could a boarding pass cost an airline?

There have to be cutbacks somewhere else. I'm certain there's no food. Maybe they do that thing where they give all the passengers a pocketknife and pass around an apple.

But, still, how can you charge somebody just $39 to fly all the way from Atlanta to Jacksonville on a jet airplane?

How about the fuel? Do the pilots pump their own and get a discount? Is there one of those "fill it up and get a new set of dishes" deals involved here? Have they found a way to operate a 727 on regular instead of hi-test?

Do the seat cushions in those planes not float? If you have to throw up, do you do it in your shoes instead of one of those little bags the airlines used to provide?

In the unlikely event of cabin depressurization, do the little oxygen masks still come down, or does everybody have to hold their breath until the pilot can find a place to land?

And the pilots. They've got to be willing to work pretty cheaply if the airline is practically giving away the seats.

Are those guys real pilots? "Private Studdleheimer is in charge of your flight today. Welcome aboard."

Private?

Maintenance. That bothers me. That bothers me a lot.

I don't want two guys who were repairing lawn mowers this time last week to be the ones trying to get my flight off the ground.

"Try it now, Harvey."

"Still won't crank, Earl. Must be grass in the gas line."

I really want the best when I fly, and I guess what I'm saying here is I'm willing to pay for it.

And didn't a wise person once say, "You get what you pay for"?

That's all I'm saying here. How can an airplane that charges less than a family of four can eat out for be trusted to get me to 35,000 feet and back down again?

It might take all day for Greyhound to get me from Atlanta to Jacksonville. But Greyhound can still offer me one thing no airline — no matter what it charges — cannot:

In case there is grass in the gas line, Greyhound offers road service.

CHARLEY REESE

Americans should first help those at home

Let's start with an expression of our humanity: We wish every living being on Earth health, happiness and a long productive life.

Reese

But now that we've stated our benign position, which of course doesn't put a peanut in a hungry child's mouth, we're forced to confront reality. The world is large. Billions of people aren't healthy or happy. And we have very limited resources.

By that I mean that relative to the problems of the global community, all of us, regardless of our situation, have terribly limited resources in terms of time and money. Whenever we have an imbalance between resources and needs, we are forced to prioritize. That means somebody is going to get help and somebody else isn't. That means some problem is going to get our attention and other problems aren't.

May I suggest that logically we begin with our families, then our neighbors, then our communities, then our state, then our region, then our nation. The point is let us work with those who are within reach. It strikes me as absurd to leapfrog over the people close to us to help somebody in a distant place.

We are constantly barraged with pleas from organizations with highly paid staffs to help people and solve problems in distant countries.

I say that's not only nonsense, it's immoral. It's shameful to send money overseas when our own children are suffering, when our own problems grow worse instead of better, when our own people — people in our own neighborhoods and communities — are suffering.

Remember, our resources are limited. What we send to A, we don't have to help B. Rather than "adopt" a kid in Somalia or Brazil, why not "adopt" one in your own community — some kid who wants to join the Scouts but can't afford it; some kid who is capable of a higher education but can't afford it. There are more needs in our own communities than we can satisfy, and it's time we came to our senses.

The same limitation of resources applies to governments, too. It's axiomatic that resources are finite while desires and wishes are limitless. There is only so much money for Pell Grants, for example, so if you give them to convicts in prison — the government is actually doing this — then that means some honest kids are going to be denied Pell Grants. If you send $15 billion to foreign countries, that's $15 billion you can't invest in America.

Midland has some of most dedicated teachers in stae

Midland and its surrounding communities are fortunate to have some of the most dedicated teachers and professional engineers in the state. As statewide sponsor of the National Engineering Design Challenge (NEDC), the Texas Society of Professional Engineers would like to thank the many volunteers who participated in the 1994 design competition for high-school students.

This was, without a doubt, the most difficult problem in the history of the NEDC. Students were asked to develop a device that would safely lift, hold, and move heavy, bulky objects, and move them from a car to a house, over ramps, steps and wood-chip-covered surfaces.

Students from the following schools are to be commended for completing solutions and competing in the Midland-Odessa contest: Frenship High School, Wolfforth, coached by Patty McGaughey, advised by Ron Baker, P.E.; Lee High School, Midland, coached by Andrew Franks, advised by Martin Busy, P.E.; Midland High School, coached by Charles Bell, advised by Larry Hansen; and Ysleta High School, El Paso, coached by Brent Prim. Frenship and Lee advanced to the State NEDC Competition in Austin Feb. 5. Don Lawrence, P.E., and Lynda Lawrence did an outstanding job coordinating the Midland-Odessa Competition.

Don Cates proves to be true student's advocate

I would like to publicly thank Dr. Don Cates, associate dean of Student Services and Registrar at Midland College, for his assistance in representing our son, Ira Freeman, before MC's Board of Enrollment. Ira, a high school junior, was wanting to take Engineering Drafting at MC. Dr. Cates was willing and eager to try to help Ira get an exception to the rule of having to be a high school senior before being allowed to enroll at MC. Dr. Cates' interest and actions proved to me that he truly is a student's advocate, and MC and the students are fortunate to have him on staff.

KMID ignores viewer's constitutional rights

I finally had to write after I saw that campaign commercial of Stephen Hopkins on the TV yesterday. While I realize federal regulations require that KMID must run the commercial, I simply cannot understand how KMID can air that commercial when it won't air "N.Y.P.D. Blue."

Well, I got to watch "N.Y.P.D. Blue" when we went to Missouri for Christmas vacation, and believe me when I say it's not that bad.

"N.Y.P.D. Blue" is slightly stronger than "Hill Street Blues." Remember "Hill Street Blues?" They showed us the tamer side of our streets. "N.Y.P.D. Blue" does the same thing only they're better at it. They don't try and show us that it's safe out there. They show us what's wrong with the police, gangs and all criminals that run our streets.

Yes, I have a child at home. He's 14 years old. And yes, I would allow him to watch "N.Y.P.D. Blue." However, I will not allow him to watch anything Stephen Hopkins puts on the air.

Because of these commercials and KMID's blatant disregard of my constitutional rights, I have now deleted Channel 3, ABC, on my cable box with my remove control. We can no longer watch Channel 3 in our home.

Fame, flattery fumbles when they forget name

By Erma Bombeck

There's a story about the successful businessman who had a small box on his desk with a little red button. A curious visitor one day asked, "What's that box for?" The executive said, "When I push that button, absolutely nothing happens. It keeps me humble."

Bombeck

Writers don't need boxes on their desks. Every day they are reminded by someone how they could brighten up a room by leaving it.

Example: Recently I received a letter from a guy suggesting that if I turned out to be the most famous person to call a Rochester radio DJ before a certain date, I could win $1,000. He went on to say that if I actually won, it would be nice if I helped his friend pay for his last term in graduate school at George Washington.

The letter would have been both tempting and flattering had I not noted that it was addressed to "Emma Bombeck." If HE didn't know who I was, how could I possibly expect to be the most famous person to call in? Unless, of course — it was Helen Clinton.

It happens every day. A kid desperate to get a term paper written by you will tell you how you have been the center of his universe ever since he can remember. You have given purpose and substance to his life. He has laughed with you since clinging to his mother's knees. On Page 2 will be one terse sentence, "If you don't answer back in two days, I'm writing Ellen Goodman."

We are used to put-downs from our families. When my husband says he went to the library and all my books are in, that is something I expect. Or when a good friend calls and asks, "Did you call me?" and you say, "Yes, didn't you get my message?" and she says, "It says here, 'Irma Domfeck called,'" it's OK.

It's the brickbats from strangers that hurt. A few years ago I was in New York outside my hotel, awaiting a cab. A man and a small mongrel-type dog were standing beside me. A photographer came up and asked if I minded stepping behind a potted evergreen and out of his shot. It seems the dog was just in a movie with Bette Midler and the photographer was doing a "spread" on him.

You want to talk humble: I was standing behind a bush that minutes before the "star" had wet on.

The only point in bringing all this up is that I just read a letter from a reader who said, "Lady, don't give up your day job!"

This IS my day job.

DEAR ABBY

Wills should not be kept secret, some say

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: This former Iowan takes strong exception to your response to "Another Iowan," who thought his son was out of line for wanting to know what was in his parents' will. You replied, "The contents of one's will are usually not disclosed until it's time to deliver the inheritance." That can have disastrous consequences.

Van Buren

Abby, those of us who are involved in estate planning believe it is necessary for clients to discuss their estate planning with family members. This is especially true when the family assets include farming property and family businesses.

With a federal estate tax that can exceed 50 percent of the value of the estate assets, plus state death taxes, plus legal costs, it is essential to instruct your children of your intentions.

You usually consult your experts, which is what you should have done in this case. That son needs a road map. — JERRY A. KASNER, PROFESSOR OF LAW, SANTA CLARA UNIVERSITY, SANTA CLARA, CALIF.

DEAR PROFESSOR KASNER: Thank you — and the many others who wrote to point out my error. Read on:

DEAR ABBY: I strongly disagree that parents should keep the contents of their wills a secret from their children. My opinion is based on numerous cases, several of which are summarized as follows:

(1) Fifty-year-old son spends $7,500 on father's funeral without realizing the net worth of his parents was $8,000, thereby leaving his mother destitute.

(2) Daughter takes senile mother into her home and lovingly cares for her for the last three years of mother's life. Mother's will, written 10 years earlier, gives entire $40,000 estate to an old boyfriend who had not been seen for the past five years.

(3) Father's will leaves everything to son, but father had all intangible property in Joint and Survivorship accounts with daughter. Assets consisted of $600,000 farm and $350,000 in the J. and S. accounts. Daughter died before father, who was then senile. At father's funeral, son informs daughter's six children that he will keep all $950,000. (And he did.)

(4) Elderly couple places all assets ($2 million) in trust with an unscrupulous individual, resulting in poverty for couple.

(5) Spinster leaves farm worth $200,000 to farmhand who had looked after her for free for last 20 years of her life, thereby permitting her to stay on family farm for her entire life. Nephews who had not seen aunt in 20 years contested the will. Result: $100,000 settlement with nephews.

All of the above could have been avoided by keeping relatives informed as to respective wills, trusts and assets of the parties. — OHIO ATTORNEY AT LAW

DEAR ABBY: You obviously believe that the contents of one's will should not be disclosed to the heirs until after death. That's what my parents believe: They have their life savings hidden in shoe boxes and coffee cans around the house. I have no idea how much is hidden, except for the $15,000 I stumbled across in a shoe box behind the cat litter bag. — STEAMED IN PITTSBURGH

Some plan to steer clear of Cowboys' victory parade

DALLAS (AP) — Most cities look forward to celebrations for their pro sports champions. Dallas, however, still has a hangover from last year's Super Bowl parade, which quickly disintegrated into violence and chaos.

Despite beefed-up security for this year's event, many are planning to steer clear of downtown Dallas during Friday's parade.

Last year's 52 major crimes, 70 minor property crimes and more than 20 injuries are still a bit fresh in the memories of some North Texans.

Earlier this month, even Super Bowl Most Valuable Player Emmitt Smith said he wouldn't show up if there aren't major safety upgrades over last year's fiasco.

Dallas police have taken several steps to instill confidence in people. Officials have proposed nearly tripling the number of officers who worked last year, from 460 to more than 1,300.

The Police Department also has planned a series of news conferences this week to discuss public safety and transportation and to let people know which marching bands and Cowboys' players will be in the parade, said police spokesman Jim Chandler.

Shannon Smith, 24, said she won't be there regardless of the upgrades.

"There ain't no way I'm going," Ms. Smith said. "You couldn't pay me money to go."

Ms. Smith went to the parade last year with a friend's three children, 11-year-old twin girls and a 7-year-old boy.

The parade was a disappointment from the start because the large crowd prevented them from seeing anything. So the group ate lunch, then went to Main Street and played in the confetti, Ms. Smith said.

As the children frolicked amid the shreds of paper, a group of teens approached Ms. Smith and began cursing at her. One grabbed her wallet. Another took her radio. Others knocked her to the ground and kicked her as the children watched in shock.

Ms. Smith wasn't seriously injured, although she still suffers psychological wounds.

"When I get in a crowd with a whole bunch of people, I still get a little bit skittish," she said. "But you gotta go on . . . you can't keep worrying about what's going to happen."

Bud Wis, band director at McCulloch Middle School in Highland Park, had similarly rosy expectations last year. It didn't take long for his hopes to turn sour.

The band couldn't even finish the parade because of the swarms of people bursting through police barricades, he said.

"It was pretty obvious as soon as we came out of the underpass, where the parade formed up, that there just weren't enough police there," Wis said.

But Charles Simon is still interested, and he's going downtown. Simon, 63, of suburban Garland, had a necklace, watch and ring stolen as he returned to his car after last year's parade.

He believes that the city learned from its mistakes and will provide a safer environment for parade-goers Friday.

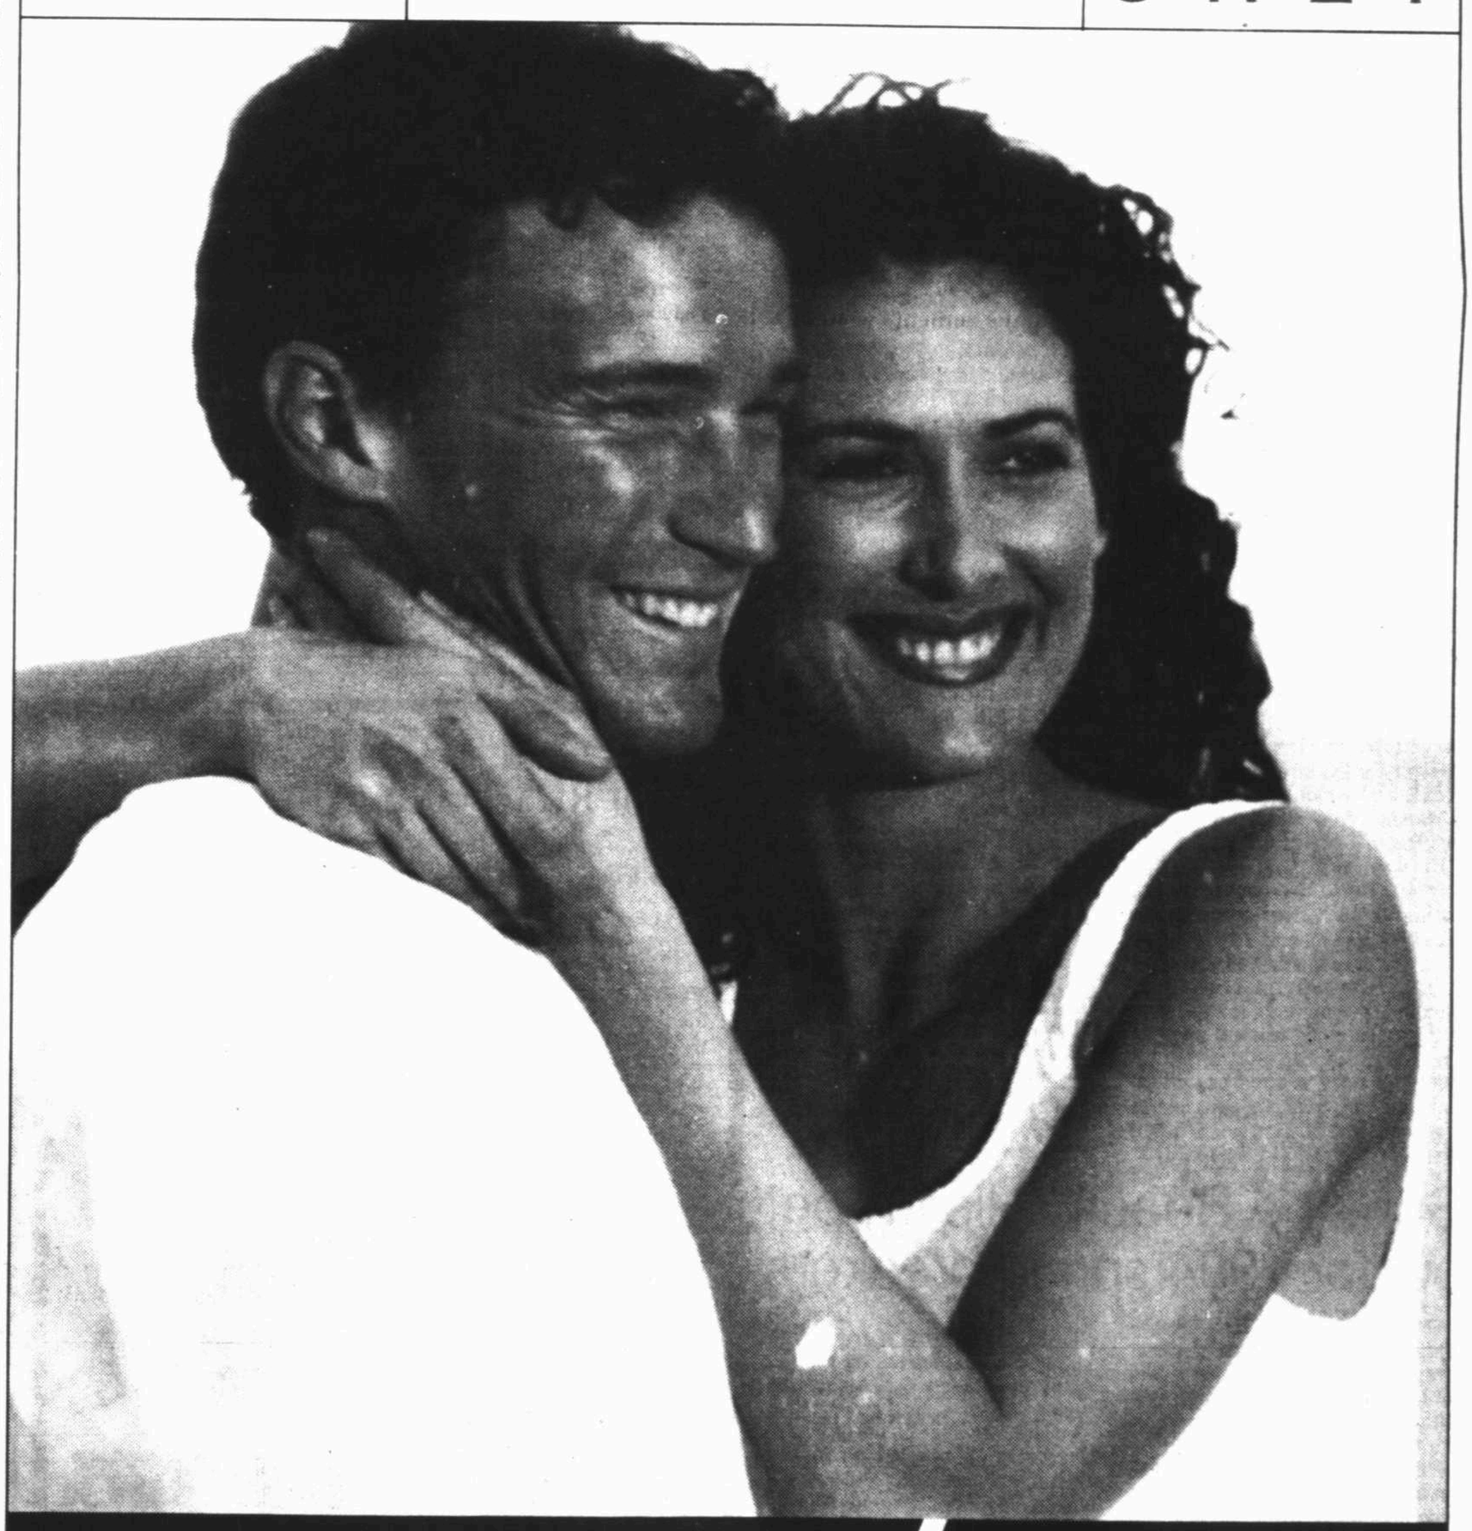

Besides, he's a big fan.

"Oh, gosh, yeah," he said. "I want to be there. Let's just say I'm interested in seeing what's going to happen."

Surfside Beach rolls carpet out for 1994 spring breakers

SURFSIDE BEACH (AP) — While nearby Galveston has put away the red carpet normally laid out for spring break revelers, town officials here are planning activities to lure the college crowd.

"The Galveston spring break business will disperse, and we hope to add to our numbers," said Charles Schulte, mayor of this Brazoria County community about 45 miles west of Galveston.

Galveston has prohibited alcohol consumption on its beaches and this year the city's businesses have decided against promoting the island as a spring-break haven.

Schulte said Galveston's move toward more family-oriented tourists could be a golden opportunity for other seaside towns.

"There is no reason why they can't come down here and have a good time. We'll enforce the law, but they can still have a good time."

Surfside, a city of about 500 year-round residents, is one of many Houston-area alternatives where alcohol consumption is still allowed. Authorities warn, however, that underage drinking will not be tolerated, nor will drinking and driving.

Surfside Beach businesses are advertising in several university newspapers across the state, and a full slate of student-oriented activities is planned for March 12-20.

POLICE REPORTS

Police seek suspect

Midland police are searching for a subject in connection with an aggravated robbery that occurred Sunday.

According to a report, officers responded to Shaun Michael's restaurant, 700 E. Florida Ave., at 4:09 p.m. in reference to the robbery. Officers were told that a male entered the restaurant, displayed a handgun and then demanded money, the reported stated. After about $400 was given to him, the man left on foot.

A police canine unit tracked the man, but lost him in an alley east of the store, the report stated.

The subject was described as black, wearing a red ski mask, dark green overalls and black leather gloves.

Hutchison trial judge wonders why prosecutor gave up case

AUSTIN (AP) — The judge in U.S. Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison's case says he is baffled as to why Travis County District Attorney Ronnie Earle decided to give up the case.

"I expected to go forward," Judge John F. Onion Jr., 68, of Austin, said Sunday. "I expected to be there three or four weeks."

Earle decided Friday in Fort Worth not to prosecute Mrs. Hutchison on criminal ethics charges moments before Onion seated a jury.

Onion then instructed jurors to find Mrs. Hutchison innocent, which they did, and eight months of legal and political turmoil ended in a flash.

Earle said he dropped the case because Onion had refused to rule on whether evidence gained in a June 10 raid of the state Treasury could be used.

Onion said prosecutors had no right to get a preview ruling, and it wouldn't have been unusual for each side to fight during the trial over whether evidence from the raid could be admitted.

On Saturday, Earle added that he also feared if Onion ruled to suppress the evidence, he also would have ordered the records sealed.

"That's off the wall as far as I'm concerned," said Onion, former presiding judge of the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals. "I have no earthly idea why he would say that."

Mrs. Hutchison's defense team filed the motion to suppress evidence, claiming the raid was illegal because no search warrants were used.

Jurassic Park dinosaurs invade Fort Worth museum

By Stefani G. Kopenec
Associated Press

FORT WORTH — Museum officials are calling the new Dinosaurs of Jurassic Park exhibit the G-rated version of the blockbuster movie that many parents wouldn't let their kids see.

Several of the life-size creatures used to make movie magic are featured at the 13,000-square-foot exhibit, which took eight 46-foot moving vans to bring to town.

To help put some of Hollywood's exaggeration into perspective, the exhibit shows actual dinosaur fossils alongside the prehistoric props. It also explains how artists and filmmakers mixed science with a dash of imagination to mold the movie's stars.

Among the attractions that greet visitors, who first view a 10-minute film, are full-size skeletal casts of a 40-foot-long Tyrannosaurus rex poised in battle with the giant, plant-eating Alamosaurus. The pair were displayed in the movie's fictitious visitor's center.

The ferocious Velociraptor and a Dilophosaurus — the movie's spitting dinosaur — are also showcased at the exhibit, which runs though May 30.

"It's a G-rated exhibit, unlike the movie," said Don Otto, the museum's executive director. "Lots of these kids weren't allowed to see the movie, so they're excited to see it."

Director Steven Spielberg has said the movie creatures are so menacing he considered releasing "Jurassic Park" with an R rating, instead of the PG-13 it carried. The film is set inside a modern-day, tropical amusement park where genetic engineering brought dinosaurs back from extinction. The dinosaurs eventually rampage, turning the park into a terrifying experiment gone wrong.

Throughout the exhibit, movie scenes are shown on video next to their prop counterparts.

As visitors peer at the various displays, museum volunteers work the crowd, handing over a rubbery piece of Tyrannosaurus rex movie "skin" to feel.

Other hands-on exhibits are scattered about, and children can get a sense of discovery at a mock "Dino Dig" laced with fossil treasures.

"We like the idea of dinosaurs being used for attracting kids to science," Otto said. "They're almost monsters kids can relate to."

Five-year-old Austin Williams was among those clamoring to see the exhibit. His mom, Kristin Williams, said the boy had seen "Jurassic Park" five times and even wrote Spielberg.

"He's a dinosaur fanatic ever since the movie, so we drove all the way from Oklahoma City to see this," she said.

The exhibit is open from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. Monday through Saturday and noon to 9 p.m. Sunday. Tickets are $6 and $4.50 for seniors and children 3 to 12.

Report: Colonel with no clearance sees secrets

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — A Texas National Guard colonel was promoted and given access to classified military information after his security clearance was suspended, documents show.

In addition, an investigation has been ordered into the actions of top Guard officers who allowed the promotion and who at first denied that Col. Richard Brito no longer had security clearance, The Corpus Christi Caller-Times reported Sunday.

Documents obtained by the Caller-Times show that top officials later admitted Brito's security clearance had been suspended.

Brito is the former head of the Guard's anti-narcotics task force and was involved in counterdrug activities, according to the documents.

Brito faces perjury charges in Grimes County relating to statements he made during a trial involving the alleged drug-smuggling activities of his two fugitive brothers.

The information obtained by the newspaper includes recommendations and findings of an internal Guard investigation.

Brito said he could not comment on the report's findings, which he said were preliminary because they still are subject to a legal review.

The Caller-Times reported that investigators concluded Brito was involved in drug-smuggling activities and Guard officials did not take appropriate measures to discipline him after his security clearance was suspended in March 1992.

In fact, Maj. Gen William Wilson, now a former adjutant general, and Col. Robert D. Kohler, former chief of staff, allowed Brito to be promoted on Aug. 23, 1992, "which indicated nothing was wrong," the investigation concluded.

The investigators recommended that Maj. Gen. Sam Turk re-evaluate Brito's promotion and the procedures that allowed it to occur.

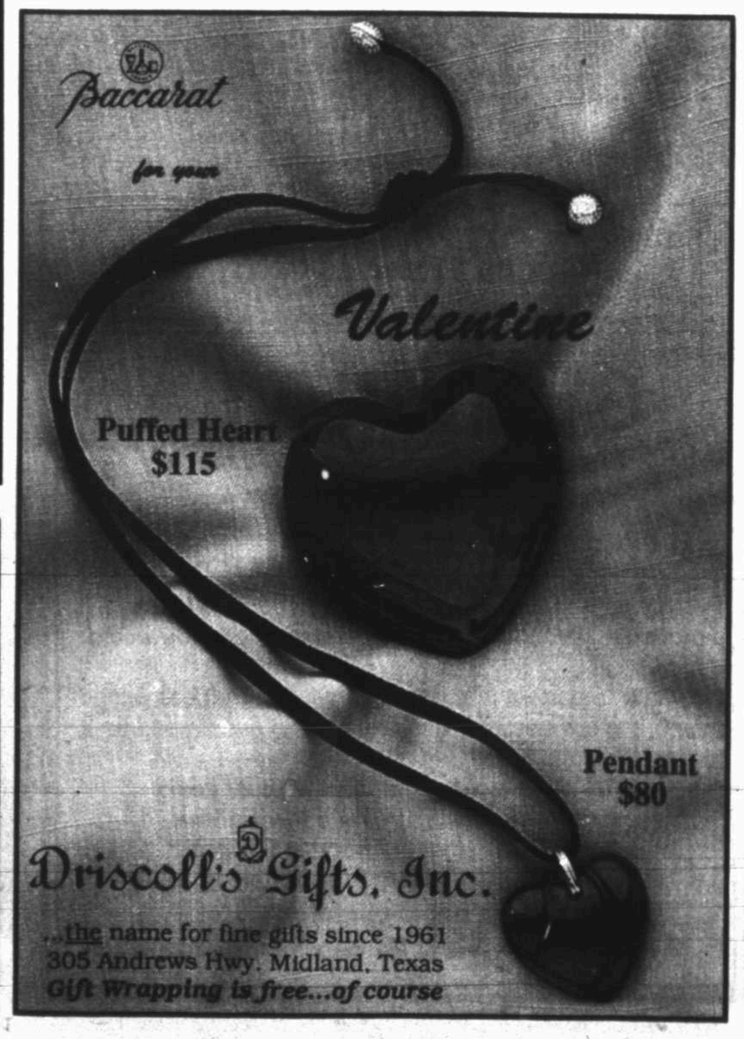

They also recommended a military investigation, similar to a grand jury probe, of Brito; Kohler; Col. Dwain James, former director of personnel; and Lt. Col. Bennie Cottle, director of plans, operations and training.

IRS tattletales can receive (taxable) reward

By Nick Ravo
N.Y. Times News Service

You won't find federal tax form 211 at the local post office. After all, filers do not use the document to report income or expenses. They use it to report tax cheats — and claim a share of any taxes recovered as a result of their efforts.

During the fiscal year that ended Sept. 30, Americans filed 11,393 of these simple, one-page claims. About 7 percent of them led to financial rewards. Rewards are paid only when the information is not previously known or available in public records.

"You just can't say that so-and-so didn't file their taxes, because we know that," said Donald Roberts, an IRS spokesman. "But if you tell us that someone keeps a second set of books for their business, and they are located in a safe in a wall, and where it's located, then . . . ."

The average reward paid last year was $6,340; the minimum is $25. According to a 1985 General Accounting Office report, which called for enhancing the little-known program, 38 percent of the rewards were for less than $100, and claimants had to wait five or more years to be paid.

The size of a reward depends on the importance of the information provided and the amount of taxes collected. Rewards range from 0.05 to 10 percent of the first $75,000 recovered (not including interest), up to 5 percent of the next $25,000 and 1 percent of any additional recovery, with the total not exceeding $100,000.

Though the number of claims rose only somewhat in 1993, the amount of taxes recovered more than doubled, to $172 million from $84 million in 1992. And the amount of money paid as rewards quadrupled to a record $5.2 million.

The IRS said it was at a loss to explain the increase. The agency, however, is unusually reticent about the 25-year-old program, in part because it fears being likened to the KGB.

"We are not looking to set up a network of people looking over each other's shoulders," Roberts said.

Another concern is that promotion of the program would lead to a deluge of groundless claims — and expensive and time-consuming audits — filed by disgruntled employees, ex-spouses and jealous

Jewelry industry glitters

After years of lackluster sales, baubles and bangles are in again

Associated Press

NEW YORK — The sparkle has returned to the jewelry industry after years of, well, lusterless sales.

An improved economy, repeal of the luxury tax and new marketing options, such as home-shopping television, are behind the turnaround, which began a year ago.

"I think the confidence in wearing jewelry is coming back," said Simon Teakle, who heads the U.S. jewelry division of Christie's auction house, where 1993 sales rose 25 percent over the previous year.

"In recessionary times it wasn't socially correct to wear a tremendous amount of jewelry," he said.

Teakle says consumers not only are buying more baubles and bangles but have become savvier about what's available. Many may know, for instance, that the finest red rubies come from Burma, that Mexican opals are fiery orange and that diamonds occur naturally in nearly every color of the rainbow.

Yet distinguishing a ruby from a red spinel, an emerald from a tsavorite garnet, or even 10 karat gold from 14 karat gold can be extremely difficult.

This lack of expertise — along with the availability of lab-grown synthetics and imitations resembling the real thing but usually worth less — can leave the average buyer vulnerable to unscrupulous dealers or suppliers.

"For every color you like, there are probably five or six gemstones in that color," noted Antoinette L. Matlins, co-author of "Jewelry & Gems, The Buying Guide." "What you see with the naked eye may not be reality when you buy gems and jewelry."

What makes jewelry buying especially difficult is the fact that such purchases are often anchored with emotions, particularly during holidays like Valentine's Day, among the busiest time for the industry.

Madison Avenue is largely responsible. Advertising campaigns portray diamonds and gems as the ultimate gift of eternal love.

The most successful of these campaigns comes from the De Beer's cartel, which markets 80 percent of the world's diamonds. De Beers has successfully perpetuated the illusion of the diamond as a rare and valuable stone. In reality, diamonds are plentiful but tightly distributed.

"There's a tremendous exploitation of consumers based on the allure of gemstones and the mythology of them," Matlins said.

"Someone on the TV shopping network may mention diamonds or rubies or sapphires or emeralds and a certain image instantly comes to mind ... of having a highly valuable jewel. But in fact, it doesn't escape the fact that it could be garbage."

Steffan Aletti, president of the Jewelry Industry Council in New York, said he's received few complaints about the discounted jewelry sold on home shopping programs. But he acknowledged there are some dealers that do misrepresent what they sell.

"There are some emeralds that are more appropriate to grace the bottom of a fish bowl than a ring," he said. "The more desperate people are looking for a deal the most likely they are to get stung."

One way to avoid getting stung is to deal with reputable dealers, who have trade-group affiliations and experts on the payroll.

"You don't need to be a gemologist to buy a ring," Aletti said. "just as you

Strategies for rising interest rates

By Carole Gould
N.Y. Times News Service

If the Federal Reserve thought it was being clear about the future of interest rates when it said on Feb. 4 that it was lifting the federal funds rate by a quarter-point — well, the markets bought the idea for a day.

On the Friday the rate rise was announced, stock prices dropped (wouldn't money be hightailing it to grab those higher yields?) and long-term Treasury funds lost a little over half a point (wouldn't they have to, to match the higher yields?).

But with the stock market bouncing back last week, the question became: Is the Fed's move really a long-awaited signal that the era of falling interest rates is over? If so, now what?

While the Fed's action was widely perceived as preventive, not a reaction to rising inflation, "If the economy continues to strengthen, this will be the first of many blows to come," said John Rekenthaler, editor of Morningstar Mutual Funds, in Chicago.

That's why many investment advisers say now is a good time for income investors to review their strategies.

Most advisers recommend that those in short-term bond funds stay put. "We haven't moved clients out of short- or short-intermediate funds, because we're still operating under the premise that rates won't be rising that quickly," said Steven B. Enright, an investment adviser in Rivervale, N.J.

That doesn't mean investors in short-term bond funds will escape unscathed should rates rise more. "You'll have some price pressure on net asset value, but total return should be positive because there's only so much that you can lose in short-term funds," Rekenthaler said.

MONEY WATCH

Jewelry investments

Some tips for buying and investing in jewelry:

■ Select A Reputable Dealer. Suggestions from family or friends may be helpful. Otherwise, visit several stores and compare the quality of products, prices and services. Is there a gemologist on staff? Have there been any complaints to the Better Business Bureau?

■ Beware of Bogus Sales. Some dealers constantly hold "70 percent off" sales, but you don't know what their discounting from if the promotions don't end. A sale is a true sale if the merchandise is discounted for a period of time, then returned to the higher, regular price.

■ Put It In Writing. Purchases should be described in a bill of sale just as it was explained by the salesperson. For diamonds, the carat weight, color and flaw grades should be noted. For colored gemstones, it should be stated whether the stone is genuine or synthetic, among other things. Some dealers may make a sale contingent on verification by a gem-testing lab.

■ Get An Independent Appraisal. Besides verifying facts about the piece, an appraisal is needed for insurance. Trade groups like the American Gem Society in Los Angeles can provide lists of appraisers. Auction houses like Christie's in New York also offer free verbal appraisals.

Sales pitch

Infomercials, maligned by highbrows but loved by insomniacs, really can help you sell a product, according to Entrepreneur magazine. But infomercials aren't cheap, costing at least $200,000 to produce.

Entrepreneur says one way to get your gadget or idea on an infomercial is to license or sell it to a marketer, who then pays the production costs. But trying to get someone to take your product is just as hard.

Paperwork

For extra-curricular bathroom activity, a recent survey says two-thirds of Americans read. Usually, it's the daily newspaper.

The condensed novels in Reader's Digest came in second. Sports Illustrated, Time, People and Better Homes and Gardens are also popular behind closed doors, the survey says. Other popular activities include talking on the phone and homework. So who would be so interested in what people are doing in the bathroom? Toilet paper maker James River Corp. commissioned the survey.

Hartford, not Harvard

Job applicants are increasingly lying about the degrees they've earned, warns Edward Andler, whose company, Certified Reference Checking Co., does background checks.

One out of 12 job candidates lies about a college degree, compared with one in 15 three years ago, Andler says. Many liars get away with it, but others trip themselves up. Andler recalls one applicant was caught claiming he went to the University of Colorado in Denver. The school is actually in Boulder.

Mutual fund returns

Q: How are annualized total returns for mutual funds figured?
— Elaine Edelman, New York, N.Y.

A: To do the calculation, you first assume an initial investment is made at the net asset value of the fund at the beginning of a period of, say, one, three or five years.

Then you assume that all dividends and distributions are reinvested in additional shares at the net asset value on the reinvestment date. To determine the value of your investment at the end of the period, you apply the net asset value to the number of shares from the initial investment and all reinvestments. The annualized return is the average annual compounded rate of return.

"To compute the annualized total return after deduction of a front-end sales load, the number of theoretical shares received in the initial investment is determined based on the net amount invested — the total amount invested less initial sales charge," said Mari Ferris, a partner in McGladrey & Pullen, an accounting firm in New York.

"Alternatively, if a back-end load is applicable, the ending value would reflect deduction of such back-end sales charge."

Custodian bank failures

Q: What happens to a mutual fund investor's shares if the bank that serves as custodian fails?
— Dorothy Kaplan, New York, N.Y.

A: Nothing happens to the assets in case of the failure of a custodian bank, because the mutual fund assets have to be segregated from the rest of the bank's assets. The directors of the mutual fund would just select another bank to protect the stockholders' assets.

"Mutual fund assets held by a custodian bank are separated from the bank's assets, as required by the Investment Company Act of 1940," said Richard Graber, senior vice president of Jones & Babson, a mutual fund management company in Kansas City, Mo.

"They can't be used as collateral by the bank, nor can they be attached by the bank's creditors."

Margin account borrowing

Q: If money is borrowed from a margin account at a brokerage firm, is the interest deductible?
— Peter Gaviglia, New York, N.Y.

A: Securities brokers charge interest to customers who have margin accounts and who borrow money using their stocks or bonds as collateral.

Under certain circumstances, this interest will become tax-deductible as you repay your broker for the money borrowed.

Repayment occurs when you are credited by the broker for amounts received in your account, like interest, dividends or proceeds from the sale of securities.

"Generally the customer's interest expense deduction will be limited to the amount of his or her net investment income, with any excess being carried forward to future years," said Michael Saxman, director of taxes for the Securities Industry Association. "And no interest deduction can be taken for margin interest incurred to carry tax-exempt securities, like municipal bonds."

GLITTER: Jewelry shouldn't be thought of as investment need to study a schematic to buy a Sony or a Panasonic" TV.

(From 1B)

Still, there are some basic rules to keep in mind when buying jewelry.

For diamonds, size isn't the most important factor. Diamonds are graded and priced based on cut, color, clarity and carat weight, with a flawless, colorless stone considered the most valuable.

A half-carat, round-cut diamond that's nearly flawless and with excellent color can cost far more than a 3-carat diamond with poor color and noticeable imperfections — about $13,400 vs. $7,200, Matlins' book says. Fancy shapes usually sell for about 5 percent to 15 percent less.

Matlins says the four Cs for gemstones are "color, color, color, and color!"

If the color is good, she says, the presence of flaws usually won't detract from the stone's value as significantly as with diamonds. Keep in mind, however, many stones are treated with heat or oils to enhance their color, a process that is legal so long as the dealer discloses that to the customer.

The availability of the stone is also crucial. A chrome tourmaline may have a color similar to a green zircon, but because there's less supply the tourmaline costs more — about $300 to $1,400 for 1 to 3 carats vs. $240 to $680, says "Jewelry & Gems."

Precious metals vary in price based on their purity. Sterling silver costs more than silver plate. An 18 karat setting is more valuable than 14 karat or 10 karat because it contains more gold — 75 percent, vs. 58 percent and 41 percent. Platinum leads the pack because it's rarer and heavier than the others. By law, each piece of jewelry must be properly weighed and stamped with a trademark that tells the consumer who designed or manufactured it.

The standard mark up for retail jewelers is around 100 percent above wholesale prices, said Aletti, though it can go higher.

"Some are willing to sell more and make less ... Some want more per sale. It depends on the overhead the jeweler has," Aletti said. "Tiffany and Cartier have a higher mark up because of their enormous overhead. But they sell only the very best of materials."

Because of the huge mark ups, along with the difficulty most individuals have in reselling their pieces, jewelry shouldn't be thought of as an investment.

"The material from which it's made has to go up a great deal for you to realize any kind of profit," said Aletti.

That's especially true with diamonds.

"There are thousands of categories of diamonds. Some are more easily sold than others," said Lloyd Jaffe, chairman of the American Diamond Industry Association. "(And) no stone will have the same emotional value for one person as the next."

Take advantage of the carve-out plan

N.Y. Times News Service

In addition to changes in 401(k) plans, consultants are looking at how companies can supplement contributions to traditional defined benefit plans, which guarantee specific payments to retirees.

Norman Newman, a partner in the New York law office of Winston & Strawn, has suggested what he calls "qualified plan carve-outs" to several clients.

These plans allow employers to provide an additional benefit to employees who exceed the $150,000 limit on salary that can be considered for retirement plans, but who do not qualify for a "top-hat" plan because they are not top management.

Because a carve-out plan is a qualified, funded plan, it must meet discrimination tests. The percentage of lower-paid workers covered has to be at least 70 percent of the highly compensated employees.

In other words, if the plan covers 5 percent of the highly compensated, it must cover 3.5 percent of the nonhighly compensated.

"You have a lot of flexibility," Newman said. "You can pick the people with the lowest pay who may not be getting enough of a benefit. For many employers, this is the cheapest way to fix the plan."

Another option is providing additional benefits in the guise of a severance plan. "You can tell the employee that when he or she leaves the company, you will give a week's pay or two days' pay for every year of service," Newman said. "It's an alternative that many companies should look at."

Acquiring and enhancing the production of oil and gas properties has been the primary business of Robert Garst, Jr. and Phillip Robinson since they formed Las Colinas Energy in 1990. They had worked together for years, and both were experienced in the oil and gas business. But when they came to Texas National Bank to help finance their first major acquisition in 1991, their banker introduced them to hedging. Using options to hedge oil and gas prices gives Bob and Phillip a sense of security in spite of constant price changes in the market. "In 1991, hedging was somewhat exotic to us," says Phillip, "but now it is an integral part of every acquisition we make - and so is Texas National Bank." INVESTORS' GUIDE

Suggestions on new IRA sponsors

By Bill Doyle

Q: I am now past age 59 1/2 and have approximately $26,000 in individual retirement accounts paying 3 percent with our local bank. Is there is a better investment I can make with this money, still keeping it tax-deferred, without any cost or risk to me?

Doyle

Any suggestion you have would be appreciated.

A: You can maintain that money's tax-deferred status by keeping it in an IRA, either maintaining it at your bank or moving it elsewhere. IRAs can be set up at banks, savings and loan associations, credit unions, insurance companies, brokerage firms and mutual funds.

You could move your IRA to a different sponsor through either a rollover or a trustee-to-trustee transfer.

When you go the rollover route, you withdraw the money from your present IRA and, within 60 days, put it in the place where you want to set up your new IRA.

With a trustee-to-trustee transfer, the money goes directly from your present IRA to the new one. Everything is handled by the new IRA trustee.

We live in a competitive world. You should shop around for a better deal, while keeping an eye out for cost and risk.

Assuming your present IRAs are in certificates of deposit, as is usually the case with bank IRAs, move the money only as each CD matures. If you do it earlier, you would be hit with early-withdrawal penalties.

Also, check what fees and other expenses -- if any -- are levied by the new IRA trustee. Those costs vary widely -- from zero to substantial.

If you want to avoid all risk, you will have to fund your new IRA with either CDs or U.S. Treasury securities you intend to keep until they mature. All other investments have varying degrees of risk, but generally have greater profit potential.

Here is the suggestion you requested: Pick a mutual fund with a good track record. Just remember that a fund's past performance is no guarantee of future results, and that mutual fund share values do fall from time to time. Carefully read the prospectus of any fund you consider.

Q: I'm a widow, 73, with annual IRA withdrawals of approximately $5,000 and Social Security benefits for retirement income.

I recently transferred the $99,000 IRA from an S&L to my stockbroker's firm. He invested the money in U.S. Treasury notes and a money market mutual fund.

My first statement lists a $322 quarterly fee. Annually, that would be $1,288, which sounds like a lot to me. The bank did not charge me a fee. Did I do the right thing?

A: Your big mistake was failing to obtain information -- before opening the brokerage IRA -- about the costs of having the account there.

And I suspect you are mixed up about fees.

An annual expense of $1,288 on a $99,000 account works out to 1.3 percent. Indeed, that is high, but not unheard of. Brokerage firms and other financial organizations are free to set any fees they please.

Your next move should be to get a breakdown of the total fee from your broker and an explanation of exactly what services the fee covers. You might find out that part of the fee was a one-time charge and will not be four times larger on an annual basis.

Treasury notes pay interest no higher than most CDs with similar maturities. The interest on a money market mutual fund is about equal to the interest on bank money market accounts. So, it is unlikely you gained anything by switching your IRA to the brokerage firm.

Q: Can an IRA be pledged as security for a loan?

A: No! That's a "prohibited transaction." The amount of money involved would be counted as a distribution from your IRA and would lose its tax-deferred status.

RATES: International bonds lower overall risk

(From 1B)

As for long-term bonds, the case is less clear. Some economists say inflation is licked; others say inflation will pick up as the economy recovers. That leaves one thing sure: The uncertainty will produce volatility in the long-term bond markets.

Investors who plan to hold shares 10 years or more and can handle the risk can reap higher yields, Rekenthaler said. He likes the Vanguard Long-Term Corporate Bond Fund, which yielded an annualized 6.4 percent in January.

But most investors would be better off in funds that have shorter maturities and would not be hit as hard by rising rates. Enright likes the Stein Roe Income Fund and Pimco Total Return.

Many advisers are turning away from United States bonds and looking for income elsewhere. "We don't see domestic investment-grade bonds as a good place to be in 1994," given their extraordinary returns over the last five years, said Craig Litman, an investment adviser in San Francisco.

Instead, he recommends junk bond funds. "We believe the economy will be stable and slow-growing, and inflation won't be a threat over the next year," he said. Even so, "a blip up in rates will have a greater impact on domestic investment-grade bonds."

Litman expects junk bond funds to yield at least 8 percent. His two favorites: Pimco High-Yield Fund and Financial Bond Shares.

Because of their relative insensitivity to interest rates, junk bonds are also the choice of Eric M. Kobren, who edits Fidelity Insight, an independent newsletter for Fidelity funds. He recommends Fidelity Spartan High-Income for investors who can meet the $10,000 minimum investment.

Bob Markham, an Edina, Minn., investment adviser, calls junk bonds "the best bet for income investors." When the Fed announced its rate increase, "stocks, bonds and utilities got trashed, but junk bonds stayed steady," he said. "It's the same scenario I expect to be repeated throughout 1994." Markham likes Northeast Investors Trust and Federated High-Yield.

The year is also shaping up as a good one for Ginnie Mae funds, Rekenthaler said, if rates keep rising moderately. He likes the Benham GNMA Income Fund, which yielded an annualized 6 percent in January.

Real estate investment trust funds are another good source of income, Litman said, with yields of 6 percent to 8 percent and capital gains potential. "Even assuming no appreciation in the underlying properties," he said, "higher cash flow from rising rents will help earnings and prices." His favorites are the Cohen and Steers REIT Fund and the Fidelity REIT Fund.

On one point the advisers are nearly unanimous: Income investors should diversify their portfolios overseas, where rates have fallen, but remain above domestic rates. But it is important to find funds that can hedge currency risk, and managers who can do so effectively, Enright said. He recommends Scudder International Bond and T. Rowe Price International Bond.

Because international bonds behave differently from domestic bonds, they lower overall portfolio risk. Nonetheless, he advises capping the foreign fixed-income portion at 10 percent to 15 percent of the total portfolio.

Markham would go as high as 20 percent, because "We don't want the entire portfolio subject to what Greenspan says," he said, referring to Alan Greenspan, the Fed chairman. Because of the risks of overseas investing, he likes SoGen Overseas, an equity fund with large cash holdings and very cautious management.

Even income investors should own equities as a hedge against inflation. Utility funds may not be a good idea anymore, the advisers say, but try conservative, high-dividend stock funds. Markham recommends Lindner Dividend and Wellesley Income.

HOUSING: White males number one-third of new workers

(From 1B)

According to pundits, here's what's on the horizon:

- The working class poor — African Americans in particular — increasingly will receive fatter paychecks that will enable them to move out of government-subsidized rentals and into private housing.
- One third of the growth in U.S. households will come from immigrants from Latin America and Pacific Rim countries, increasing the multiculturalization of America.
- Senior citizens represent one of the fastest growing segments of the U.S. population. One of their must-haves is housing that offers them a sense of security from violence.

These dramatic changes won't occur overnight. "It's going to be a slow process rather than a big jolt," said Todd Zimmerman of Zimmerman Associates, a Clinton, N.J., housing research and planning firm.

Zimmerman and other housing specialists offered insights into the future of multifamily housing at a discussion during last month's convention of the National Association of Home Builders.

This may be an opportune time for strategic planning. That's because this year signals a crossroad for multifamily housing, an industry term that embraces both rental apartments and condominiums.

Multifamily construction has been on the skids since the 1986 tax reform act wiped out most investment incentives. Last year was the worst on record for multifamily construction, with only 162,000 units going up across the country.

Multifamily housing construction housing has been down so long there's no place for it to go but up. Michael Carliner, NAHB's chief economist, forecasts a 25 percent jump in construction as early as this year and another 25 percent in 1995.

Carliner told convention delegates that the 1994 increase will be pushed by significant tax breaks for developers who build rentals for poor people using low-income housing tax credits, a temporary program made permanent by Congress last year. Condo construction will fuel the 1995 increase, he said.

The changing demographics of minorities will play a major role in tomorrow's renter profile, said Zimmerman, who cut his teeth on housing affairs as an urban policy specialist in the administration of former New York Mayor John Lindsay.

He predicts that low-income families — single moms in particular — increasingly will be able to escape the worst of subsidized housing in the inner city for either moderately-priced private housing or subsidized housing in better locations and with better schools.

These are "the traditionally disadvantaged minorities who had trouble getting gainful employment for decades," Zimmerman said. But "the most qualified from that group are going to find it less challenging over the next decade, because fewer white males are moving into the work force."

Zimmerman said one third of the people entering the work force today are white men, one third are white females and one third are minorities. But thanks to the baby bust, those figures will change to 50 percent minority, 33 percent white female and only 17 percent white male by the end of the century.

With single moms moving to better neighborhoods, Zimmerman said landlords will need to develop proactive management plans for keeping children occupied after school and on weekends. One example: setting up a basketball team.

Zimmerman said today's black middle class is another overlooked segment of the rental market. These are "black boomers ... who've hit their stride and are doing quite well. Some of them remain committed to urban living instead of moving into the suburbs."

Zimmerman said one investor recognized that the black middle class was one of Philadelphia's "fastest growing, under-served markets." The investor bought three apartment buildings to serve that market and claimed "it was the best thing he'd done" in terms of profits.

Owners and developers would be wise to try to understand the rental markets for immigrants, Zimmerman said. For example, Feng shui, a Chinese tradition that seeks to create spiritual as well as physical harmony between a building and its surroundings, may be important to a Chinese immigrant seeking housing but it would likely not be a factor for Koreans, although both come from Pacific Rim countries.

Dreaming, snoring, dreaming and snoring again...keeping themselves and their spouses from getting the good nights rest they need.

NOW, THERE IS A CURE FOR SNORING.

Through a series of three to five 15-minute laser treatments, performed under local anesthesia, snoring is being cured approximately 85% of the time. A laser is used to reshape with precision the back of the throat to allow more room for air passage thus alleviating the cause of snoring.
It sounds easy... and it is.

BYU in SWC ?

HOUSTON — Brigham Young University officials have talked with Southwest and Big Eight conference officials about the possibility of leaving the Western Athletic Conference, according to a published report.
BYU Vice President R.J. Snow told the Houston Chronicle in Saturday's editions his school had preliminary discussions with SWC and Big Eight officials.
The discussions were sparked by the Southeastern Conference's defection from the College Football Association television package for a deal with CBS.
Should the SWC, Big Eight and Atlantic Coast conferences respond to the SEC move by negotiating television contracts outside the CFA, the WAC — thus, BYU — would be left without national network television exposure.
SWC and Big Eight presidents have discussed a merger of the leagues, and sources told the Chronicle there have been extensive discussions about forming a new league with former SWC and Big Eight members and BYU.
The SWC and Big Eight are negotiating together a contract with ABC.

Chaps vie for playoff berth

■ Sixth-ranked Midland College can earn a berth in the Region V Tournament with a win over South Plains College tonight.

By Bill Petitt
Staff Writer

Coaches normally hate to put too much emphasis on any one game in a schedule. But even Midland College coach Steve Green realized the impact of tonight's Western Junior College Athletic Conference showdown with South Plains College.

"Yeah, I think is important because you are vying for positions in the playoffs," said Green. "We got a lot of pride in ourselves. This is a team that beat us the first time we met and we feel like payback would be just reward."

A win would send the Chaps back to the Region V Tournament in Waco, March 4-8, after a one year absence. It would give MC a two-game lead in the loss column as the Chaps battle Odessa College for the conference championship, but maybe as important, a high seed position in the regional tourney.

All of that and pride is on the line tonight as the sixth-ranked Chaps face the Texans at 7:30 p.m. at the Chaparral Center.

"Both teams need to win to hold serve in the conference," said South Plains coach Larry Brown. "We had won six straight until our loss to Odessa and now we must go on the road and get one from Midland.

"I'm sure they are not taking us lightly like they did last time."

Midland College enters the game on a roll, winner's of its last five games. The Chaps shrugged off a 1-2 league start and have fought their way back into title contention, thanks in part to South Plains College.

■ Radio: South Plains College at Midand College, 7:30 p.m., KCRS (AM 550).

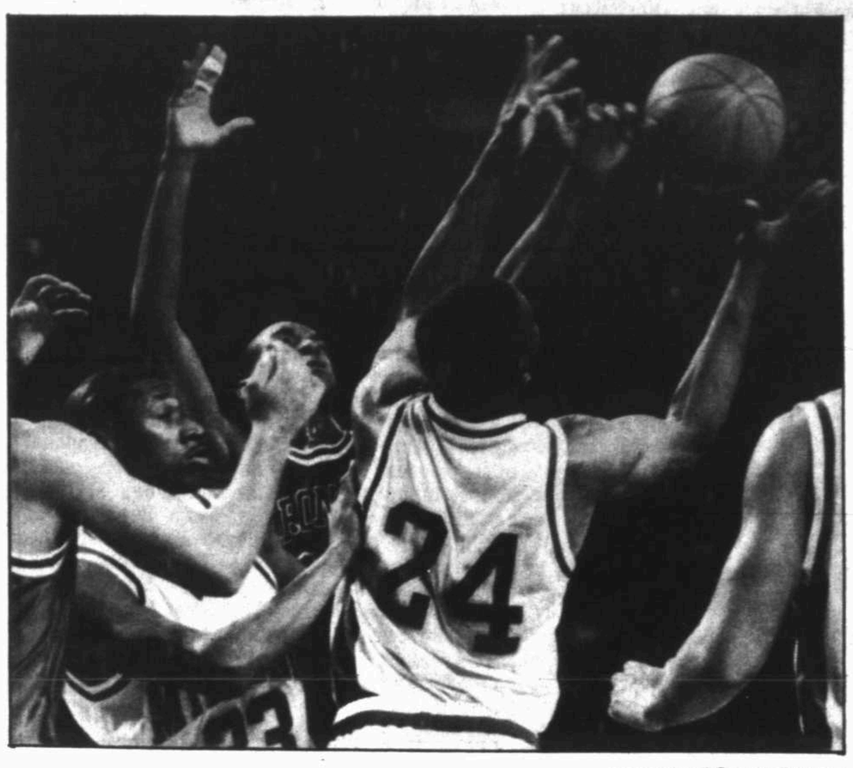

"That was our worst outing as a team, period," Green said of the 92-86 loss to SPC in Levelland, Jan. 20. "We didn't compete, we weren't in it, we didn't play smart and there was nothing redeeming about that game whatsoever other than it served as a wakeup call. Ever since then we have gotten back on the same page together."

It has been a week since the Chaps wrote their own page in school history, knocking off then No.1-ranked Odessa College at the OC Sports Center, 78-70.

Sophomore forward Kirk Ford led Midland with 24 points, however, the play of big men John Brown and Steve Walston were the deciding factor.

Americans get off to flying start at Games

LILLEHAMMER, Norway — Tommy Moe succeeded Sunday where Olympic officials had failed: He brought everyone's attention back to the Games. The U.S. hockey team — somewhat shakily — kept it focused there.

Moe, an underdog American skiing just hours after resolution of the Tonya Harding debacle, left thousands of Norwegians in stunned silence when he won the men's downhill gold over local hero Kjetil Andre Aamodt.

The American hockey team, looking for its first gold medal in 14 years, made up a two-goal third period deficit to salvage a 4-4 tie with France. A pair of flukey scores saved the Americans from defeat as first lady Hillary Clinton, waving an American flag, looked on with daughter Chelsea.

Moe's victory, by .04 seconds, was the closest Alpine race in Olympic history. He collected the first U.S. men's Alpine gold in a decade and only the second ever.

COLUMBUS, Ohio — Jalen Rose scored 18 points, and 11th-ranked Michigan almost fumbled away a seven-point lead in the last 90 seconds before holding off Ohio State 72-70 Sunday.

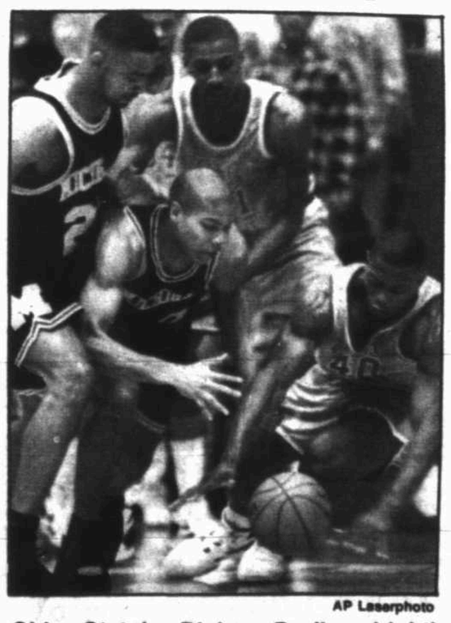

The Wolverines, who won their sixth straight game, missed four straight free throws in the last 36.4 seconds to give the Buckeyes two shots at tying or winning the game down the stretch.

The victory enabled Michigan (17-4, 9-2 Big Ten) to retain sole possession of the conference lead. Ohio State (10-12, 3-8), now 2-6 in Big Ten games it has led at halftime, got 23 points from Lawrence Funderburke and 17 from Jamie Skelton.

Rose added eight assists. Ray Jackson and Juwan Howard scored 15 points apiece, and Dugan Fife added 11 for Michigan.

Scottie beams among 'stars'

■ Bulls forward Scottie Pippen earns MVP honors with 29-point performance; East wins classic.

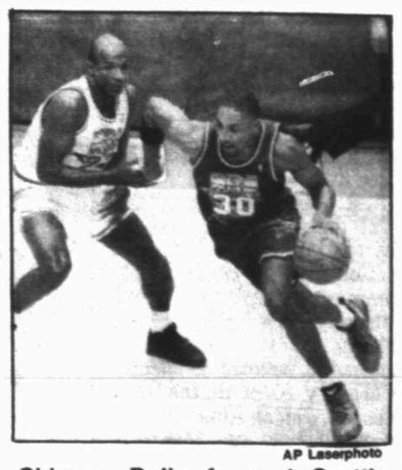

By Bill Barnard
AP Basketball Writer

MINNEAPOLIS — Scottie Pippen, in the shadow of Michael Jordan's spotlight for the first six years of his career, grabbed it for himself in the NBA All-Star Game.

Pippen, making his fourth All-Star appearance but his first since his superstar teammate on the Chicago Bulls retired last October, scored 29 points on 9-for-15 shooting and grabbed 11 rebounds to win MVP honors in the East's 127-118 victory.

The East took its largest lead, 103-90, in the first minutes of the fourth quarter, but the West rallied with a 17-5 run, closing to 108-107 with 7:17 left. Gary Payton's six points and David Robinson's five keyed the comeback.

David Robinson and Hakeem Olajuwon shared scoring honors with 19 points each for the West, which trails the All-Star series 28-16.

OLYMPICS: American hockey team ties France

From 1C

ski the best I can.'"

He did, grabbing the gold just four days short of his 24th birthday. Canadian Ed Podivinsky took the bronze.

While Moe's upset win canceled the party on the slopes, Norwegians at the Viking Hall celebrated a world record-setting gold medal performance by one of their own, speedskater Johann Olav Koss. The Slovakian hockey team made its Olympic debut with a 4-4 tie against medal favorite Sweden. And at the luge, Duncan Kennedy kept hope alive for the first U.S. medal ever in the event.

Koss, one of many 1992 Olympians expected to excel in these Games with the one-time-only two-year turnaround, smashed his own world record in the 5,000 meters. The silver went to teammate Kjell Storelid, whose Olympic-record run was buried by Koss's time of 6 minutes, 34.96 seconds. Koss broke his own record, set two months ago, by more than half a second.

"Johann! Johann!" screamed the crowd of 12,000 as Koss nabbed the first Norwegian gold of the 17th Winter Games.

By day's end, Norway had three medals — more than any other nation — and Koss was a national hero.

Moe's fine performance was the first American men's downhill gold since 1984. Billy Johnson — who, like Moe, had never won even a World Cup race — captured the first gold in Sarajevo.

As for Aamodt, he now has a silver to go with the gold and bronze he won two years ago at Albertville, France.

If Aamodt couldn't win, there was a certain justice in Moe's victory. The skier has a dozen relatives in the Oslo area and plans to visit an 82-year-old uncle, Olvar Anderson, before heading home.

That mattered little to the 40,000 folks at the downhill, where Moe turned a mountain full of clanging cowbells and howling fans into an Alpine wake.

They weren't the only ones left disappointed. Mrs. Clinton was late getting to the slopes and missed Moe's medal-winning run. Her husband tried to make up for it by calling Moe to congratulate the skier on his medal.

There were no compliments for the American hockey team, which parlayed a pair of miscues by French goalie Petri Ylonen into a 4-4 tie. Ylonen, who turned long shots by Peter Laviolette and Brian Rolston into goals, slammed his stick to the ice in anger when the game ended.

The United States grabbed an early 2-1 lead, but three American miscues near the net allowed France to move ahead in the final period.

In other hockey action, Slovakia scored an impressive 4-4 tie with second-seeded Sweden in its first Olympic hockey game. The Slovaks, who received a goal from ex-NHL great Peter Stastny, hugged on the bench and celebrated on the ice after the win.

The country gained its independence just 13 months ago. Four of its players are from the 1992 bronze-medal Czechoslovakian team. The Canadian team, silver medal winners in 1992, whipped Italy 7-2 in its first game here.

The Moe medal and the Sunday debut of the U.S. hockey team provided a welcome break from the Harding-Nancy Kerrigan flap, which ended with American officials agreeing to let Harding skate.

"The matter has been resolved," Kerrigan said in a Sunday statement that pointedly omitted Harding's name. "Regardless of my opinion on the ruling, the Olympics have begun and it's time to skate."

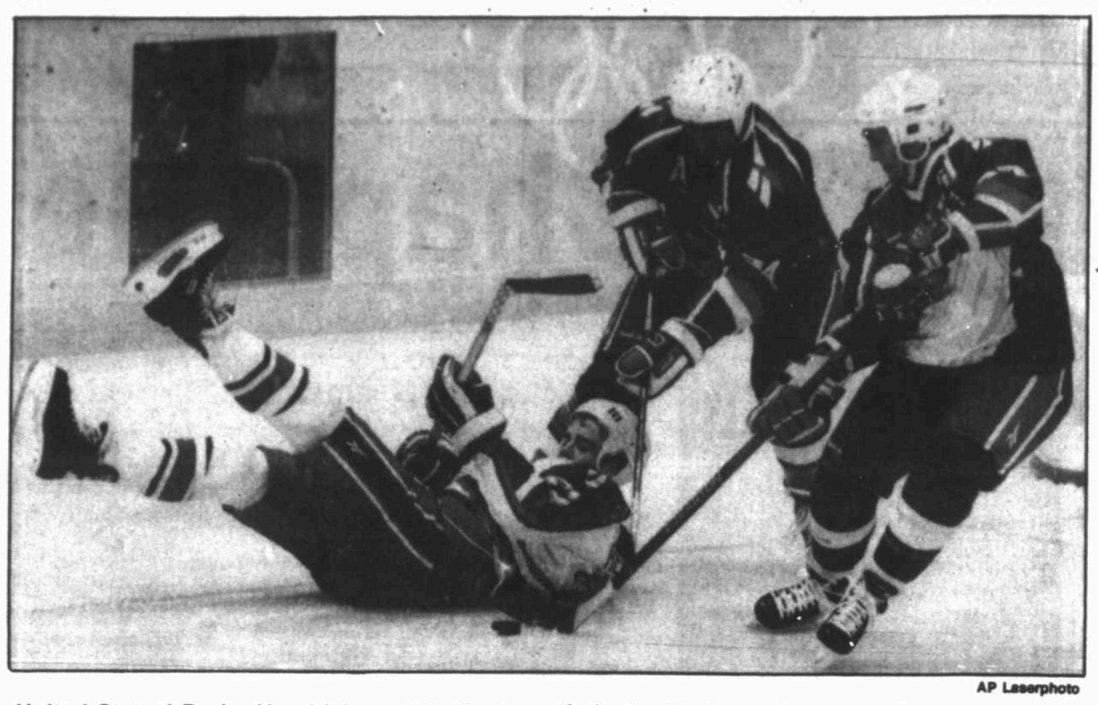

Or ski.

The first medal of the Games went to Manuela Di Centa of Italy in the women's 15-kilometer freestyle cross-country ski race. Like Moe, Di Centa was an underdog. She held off silver medalist Lyubov Egorova of Russia, who won three gold and two silver medals in Albertville.

The best American showing came from Laura McCabe of Park City, Utah, who finished 34th out of 53 entrants.

The Americans enjoyed a better day at the luge, where Duncan Kennedy was within striking distance of a medal after the first half of the competition, which was to wrap up Monday. The United States has never captured any luge medal.

Kennedy of Lake Placid, N.Y., was in fourth place after two runs, trailing defending gold medalist Georg Hackl of Germany, defending silver medalist Markus Prock of Austria and Arnold Zoggeler of Italy.

United States' Darby Hendrickson hits the ice as France's Denis Perez (center) and Serge Poudrier (right) chase the puck during the 4-all tie in the first round game of the hockey competition in Lillehammer, Norway Sunday.

"I've got a lot of room to move right now," Kennedy said. "The people who are in the first positions have got to hold it together tomorrow, whereas I can come from an attacking position, hopefully."

His teammates — particularly defending world champion Wendel Suckow — had a disappointing day. Suckow wound up in eighth place overall and Robert Pipkins was 17th.

The same held true at the pairs figure skating, where U.S. champions Jenni Meno and Todd Sand skated one of their strongest programs and still finished just sixth in the tecnhical program. Two other U.S. teams placed 13th and 15th.

The leaders after Sunday night's skating: the Russian teams of Ekaterina Gordeeva and Sergei Grinkov, the 1988 gold medalists, and 1992 Olympic champions Natalia Mishkutienok and Artur Dmitriev.

Harding's medal hopes in judges hands

By Steve Wilstein
AP Sports Writer

HAMAR, Norway — Tonya Harding's curious life in this tiny Olympic village will be uncomfortable, practices will be awkward, and some judges suggest winning may be impossible.

And that's the good news. It could get worse if she's treated like a pariah by athletes and fans at the Winter Games.

"It would be hard to separate the external activities from the judges' minds," Czech judge Olga Zakova said Sunday in an unusually candid assessment of how Harding will be viewed and scored.

Those external activities — Harding's alleged involvement in plotting the attack on Nancy Kerrigan — will be heavy baggage for Harding to carry when she lands Wednesday.

Another Czech judge, Vera Spurna, called Harding's admitted role in the coverup of the attack "a disgrace for the sport." Comments from several judges in this most subjective event indicated the only way Harding could win the gold she craves is by skating perfectly — and even then her competitors probably would have to all fall down.

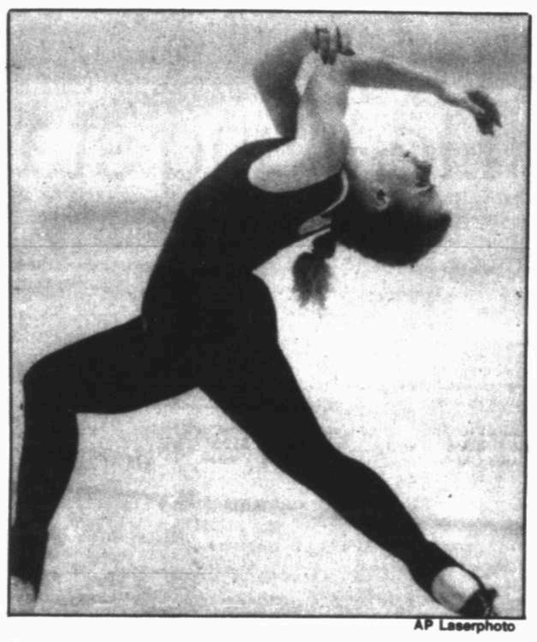

Kerrigan may score some sympathy points, but she won't have an easy time getting through the Games. She woke up Sunday to the news that Harding made the U.S. Olympic Committee cave in and grant her a berth on the team without a disciplinary hearing. Kerrigan then flopped through a miserable practice, the opposite of her superb workout two days earlier.

The plan is to keep Harding and Kerrigan apart, sort of pretend they're not on the same team, living in the same house, sharing the same rink. Yet, there are so many places for chance meetings and furtive glances, so many times when circumstances will force them to look into each other's eyes.

And what will they say when they meet? What can they say? Harding said she wanted to give Kerrigan a hug. Kerrigan curtly dismissed that notion, and offered a brief, icy statement about Harding's acceptance on the team, never mentioning her name.

"It seems now that for the moment, and as it relates to the Olympic competition, the matter has been resolved," Kerrigan said. "Regardless of my opinion on the ruling, the Olympics have begun and it is time to skate."

Kerrigan and Harding will be housemates in a two-story, red-brick, dormitory on the snow-covered little campus of the Toneheim Music School, converted to an Olympic village for 500 athletes, coaches and team officials. Kerrigan has a room on the first floor, a co-ed arrangement with male skaters in other rooms. Harding will live on the second floor. Everyone shares a communal living room that has a television.

Tonya Harding

Can they really avoid seeing each other in that small house? Will Kerrigan be able to sleep knowing that Harding is right upstairs? And what about the cafeteria? Will they wait on line together for smoked salmon?

Certainly they'll have a hard time keeping their distance at practice, since they've been assigned to the same sessions.

"Both skaters were offered the opportunity to work in Oslo, but both indicated they want to stay in the village," team leader Gail Tanger said. "We will look at alternate plans, but we will try to make everyone as comfortable as possible with the situation."

Mrs. Clinton arrives late, congrats Moe

LILLEHAMMER, Norway (AP) — Hillary was late for the ski run but shook the winner's hand later, and Bill telephoned from Arkansas, so Olympic gold-medalist Tommy Moe had full measure of attention from the Clintons Sunday.

"It's a thrill," Hillary Rodham Clinton said of Moe's narrow victory over Norway's Kjetil Andre Aamodt in the downhill. But she didn't see it.

The first lady climbed into the stands at the Kvitfjell course 40 minutes too late to see Moe ski. Blame it on Olympic traffic along Lillehammer's narrow roads and on a leisurely start by Mrs. Clinton's party.

There hadn't seemed a special reason to hurry. After all, the United States last won an Alpine skiing gold medal 10 years ago. Moe said he hadn't thought he had a chance to win.

Mrs. Clinton got the word about Moe's gold during the drive from her mountainside hotel, from aides with cellular phones at the downhill course.

After the event, she congratulated Moe at the track and called President Clinton to tell him the news.

Corey Pavin overcame putting problems to win L.A., Open over Fred Couples.

LOS ANGELES — Corey Pavin spotted Fred Couples up to 60 yards off the tee, but beat him on the greens and scoreboard Sunday in their match play-like showdown in the Los Angeles Open.

Pavin scored his first U.S. PGA Tour victory in almost two years with a 3-under-par 68 over the final 18 holes at Riviera and a 271 total.

■ Golf Roundup

Couples, one shot ahead when the final round started, could do no better than a closing 71 — much to the dismay of a large, vocal pro-Couples gallery — and finished at 273.

Pavin immediately dedicated the victory to Paul Azinger, the current PGA champion and a Ryder Cup teammate who is undergoing treatment for cancer.

Seniors-Suncoast

LUTZ, Fla. — Rocky Thompson had 10 birdies in a record-tying 61 Sunday to post the biggest comeback in Senior PGA Tour history, a one-stroke victory over Raymond Floyd in the GTE Suncoast Classic.

Thompson started the final round seven strokes behind second-round leader Mike Hill at the Tournament Players Club of Tampa Bay. He had five birdies on each side to equal the lowest round ever shot on the Senior PGA Tour.

Thompson's 12-under-par 201 total was one better than Floyd, who closed with a 66, and two in front of Lee Trevino, who also finished with a 66. Hill struggled home with a 73 and also fell behind Orville Moody, who finished with a 70.

Australian Skins

TURTLE POINT, Australia — David Graham, in semi-retirement for five years, had a birdie and an eagle on consecutive holes, and finished the two-day Australian Skins game with $69,840.

The 47-year-old former U.S. Open and PGA champion entered the four-man field with only 12 hours of notice after Nick Price withdrew Friday night with a wrist injury.

Graham, who co-designed the picturesque 6,961-yard course, beat Greg Norman, Ian Baker-Finch and Craig Parry. British Open champion Norman earned $25,920 from a purse of $108,000, Baker-Finch got $8,640 and Parry $3,600.

Becker wins Milan title

Associated Press

MILAN, Italy — Defending champion Boris Becker used his greatest weapon — a hard serve — to break a one-year drought with a victory Sunday over Petr Korda that gave the German the Muratti Time indoor title.

Becker, who won the tournament for the fourth time, served 13 aces in a 6-2, 3-6, 6-3 victory. It was worth $112,500 from a purse of $800,000.

Asia Open

AMAGASAKI, Japan — Top seed Manuela Maleeva-Fragniere of Switzerland rallied to take the final match of her pro career and win the Asian Women's Open.

Maleeva-Fragniere, ranked 10th in the world, beat the fifth seed, Iva Majoli of Croatia, 6-1, 4-6, 7-5. Trailing 2-5 in the final set, Maleeva-Fragniere won the last five games and collected $27,000.

■ Tennis Roundup

International

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — Todd Martin finished what he started Sunday, winning the Kroger-St. Jude International tennis championship.

"This year has started off better than I ever could have imagined," Martin said after beating Brad Gilbert 6-4, 7-5, in his first tournament after losing in the finals of last month's Australian Open.

Chicago Slims

CHICAGO — Natalia Zvereva used a steady serve and variety of speeds and shots to counter the aggressive but error-filled backcourt play of 17-year-old Chanda Rubin and win the Virginia Slims of Chicago 6-3, 7-5.

The 22-year-old Zvereva, ranked second in the world in doubles and 19th in singles, won her first singles title since 1990.

Wallace wins acccident-filled Daytona ARCA 200 event

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Mike Wallace fought off a late challenge by Tim Steele to win the crash-marred ARCA Daytona 500 stock car race Sunday at Daytona International Speedway.

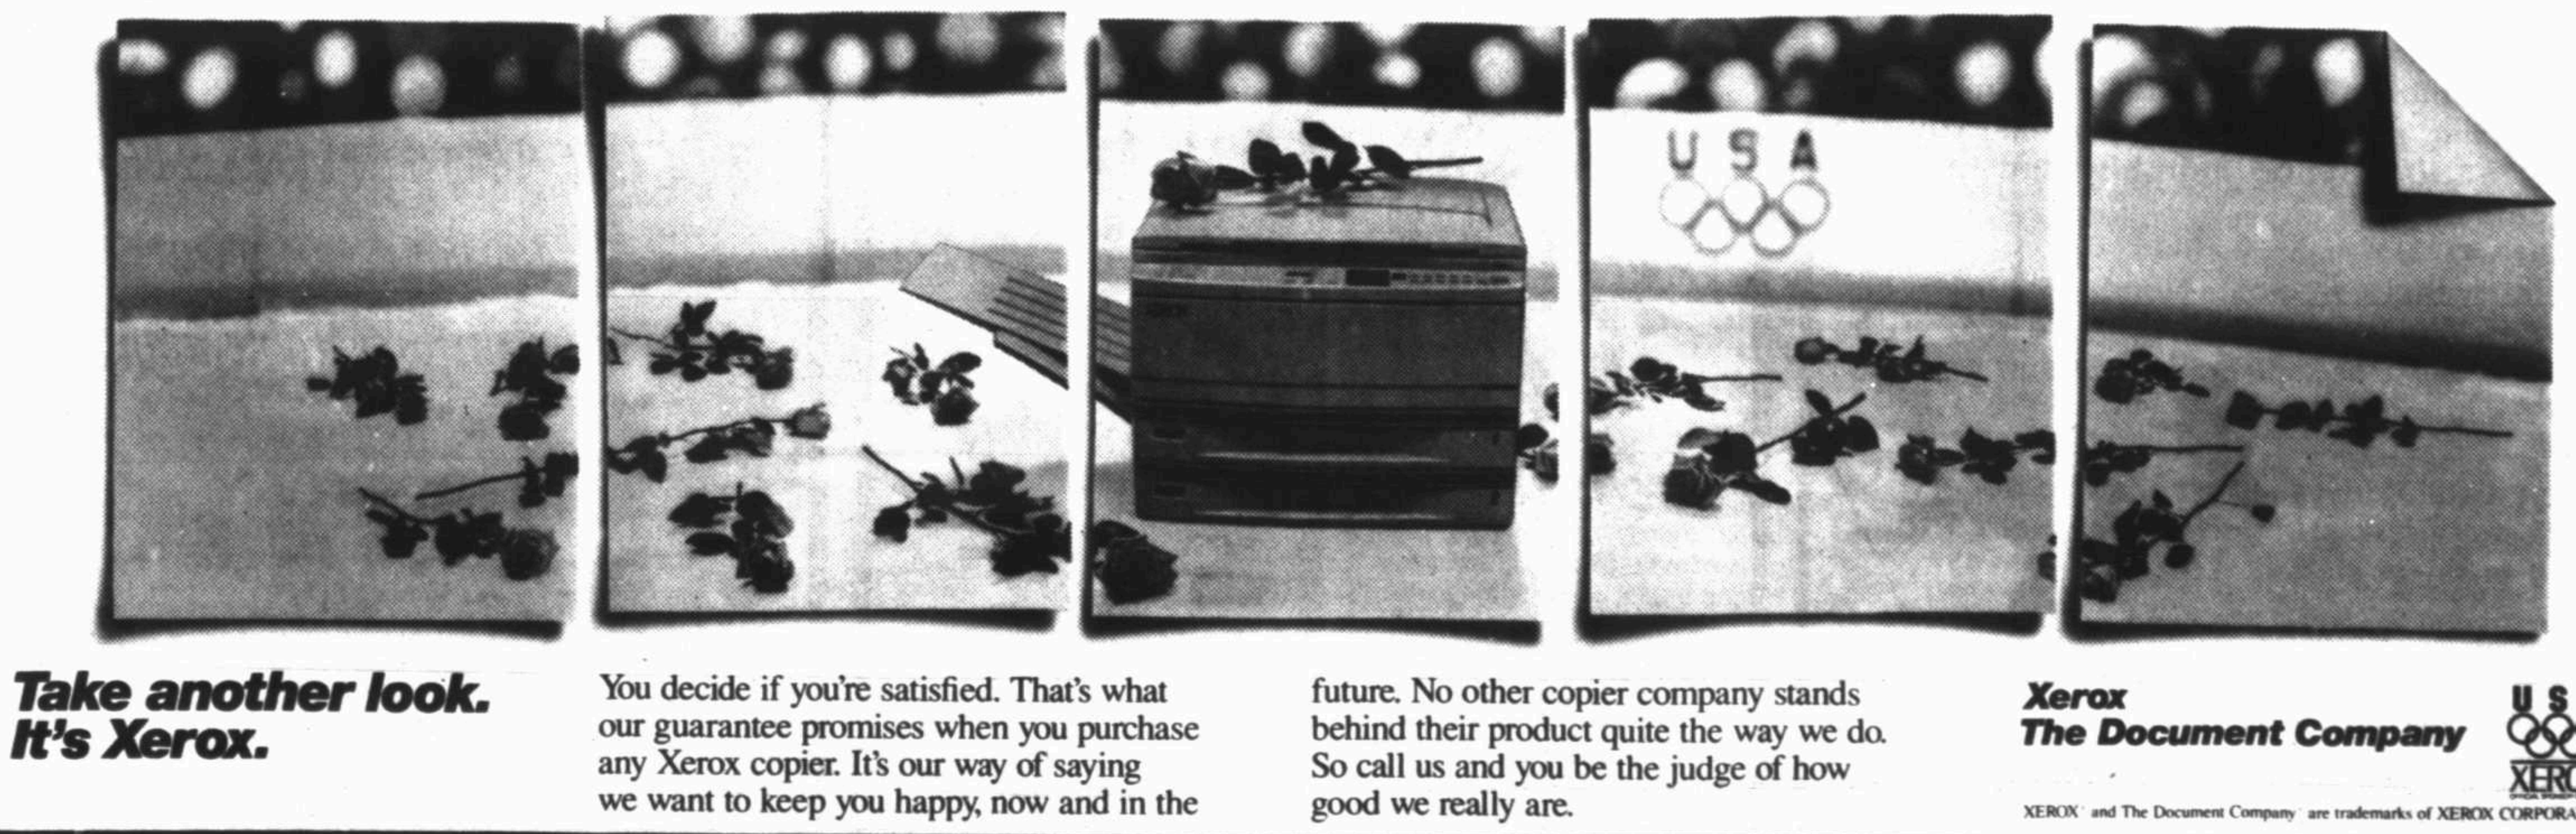

Wallace, one of Winston Cup star Rusty Wallace's younger brothers, came up with his first superspeedway victory, driving his Chevrolet Lumina across the finish line two car-lengths ahead of Steele's Ford Thunderbird.

Among the accidents in the 80-lap race on the 2.5-mile oval was a spectacular, flipping wreck that sent Mark Thompson to nearby Halifax Medical Center with a concussion, three fractured ribs and bruises from his safety harness. Thompson was reported to be awake and alert, and was listed in serious but stable condition.

There were no other injuries, but the race was slowed by a total of eight caution flags for 40 laps.

CHAPS: MC tries to stop Texan guards

From 1C

Wranglers 52-33 in the first meeting against OC, Midland won the battle of the boards 49-27. Brown grabbed a career-high 15 rebounds and Walston had eight before fouling out with seven minutes to play.

South Plains enters today's game 19-6 and 6-3 in the league after a 72-69 setback to OC Thursday.

Freshman guard Anthony Pope, who ranks second in the conference in scoring with 19.2 points per game and leads in three-point shooting 3.7 treys per game, paced SPC in the first meeting against MC with 24 points.

Three-point specialist Mike Dillard scored 19 as the Texans made 7-of-15 from long range.

"I think they have got three very good offensive players," said Green. They can spot up on either wing with Dillard and Pope and with the big guy Heredia in the middle they have got the floor pretty well covered.

"I think offensively, they're as good a team as there is in our conference because they stretch you out because you have to go out and guard all three. Pope leads the league in three's and he's probably shot more than anyone in the league which is alarming. Dillard can also shoot. You leave him open it's like a free throw. Heredia, is still one of the best offensive posts in the conference. You have got to give him a lot of attention."

The Chaps will counter with an offense that is scoring 105 points per game. Green's stable of guards includes sophomore Andre Owens. Owens played against Odessa with walking pneumonia last Monday, but hit 4-of-5 field goals and 4-of-4 from the free throw line for 14 points and just one turnover in over 30 minutes of play.

Reserve guard Tellas Lampley came off the bench to score 13 points for MC.

CHAP NOTES: A large crowd is expected for the next-to-last home game of the season for the Chaps. The final home game will be Feb. 21 against New Mexico Junior College... MC leads the series with South Plains 30-13 and the Chaps are 14-3 at home against the Texans although SPC has won three of the past five meetings at the Chap Center.

Chap center learns lesson from Texans

By Bill Petitt
Staff Writer

Incoming college freshman often find the learning curve steep, in the classroom and on the basketball floor.

Brown

Midland College freshman center John Brown learned a hard lesson tne last time the Chaps played South Plains College.

With 5:05 to play in the first half and Midland trailing 36-22, Brown, who leads the team in rebounding with six caroms per game, was assessed a technical foul for throwing the ball in an officials' face after an offensive foul.

"I just tossed the ball up in the air after the foul, I didn't throw it at him, but I didn't see where the ball went either."

As a result, Midland coach Steve Green sat Brown on the bench to cool off. Brown soon realized that the cooling off period would last the entire game. Six points, one rebound and plenty of pine time for the Miami Senior High School product.

"We had a long conversation the next day in practice and coach told me I had to control my actions," said Brown. "I've learned not to say anything to the refs and concentrate on my game. I just leave the refs alone and leave that up to coach Green. It has really helped because I think I have played better the last four games."

Since then Brown has been averaging 16.6 points and 7.2 rebounds, both averages up from his numbers prior to the Jan. 20 game and he is connecting on a staggering 68.5 (37-of-54) percent from the field.

"I think John has come a long way," said Green. "He is playing smarter and has picked his game up because he has been more under control and has channeled his emotions positively instead of picking silly technicals which hurt us."

Brown will be able to show how far he has come with a solid performance against South Plains College.

"I think we have something to prove," he said. "The last time we played them it wasn't our night. I think we have a good game plan and if we play well eveything will be alright."

UPSETS: Four ranked teams fall on Sunday

From 1C

The Wolverines, who have won five in a row from Ohio State, turned an eight-point deficit late in the first half into an eight-point lead with 11:12 left in the game while holding Ohio State to just two baskets over a period of 12:18.

With 37.8 seconds remaining, Simpson again drove the lane and fed Tony Watson, who scored inside and was fouled. His free throw made it 72-70.

Ohio State's leading scorer, Derek Anderson, sprained his left knee with 7:53 left, and Michigan ahead 60-51. He was helped off the court, did not return and will miss Tuesday night's game at Illinois.

Michigan starters Jimmy King and Jackson, along with walk-on Chris Fields, were playing their second game since serving a one-game suspension for allegedly stealing beer from an Ann Arbor convenience store.

Wake Forest 78, No. 2 Duke 69

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. — Randolph Childress scored 22 second-half points and Wake Forest spoiled Duke's shot at the No. 1 ranking with an upset of the second-ranked Blue Devils.

Childress, who finished with 28 points, almost single-handedly helped Wake Forest take its first season-series sweep of Duke since 1983.

■ Top 25 Roundup

Duke (17-3 overall, 8-3 in the ACC) was poised to overtake archrival North Carolina as the top team in the country after the top-ranked Tar Heels were upset by Georgia Tech in Chapel Hill on Saturday. Instead, Wake Forest's top gun got going in the last 20 minutes and the Demon Deacons pulled the upset.

No. 13 Massachusetts 56, No. 8 Temple 55

AMHERST, Mass. — Mike Williams' driving jumper with three seconds left gave No. 13 Massachusetts a victory over No. 8 Temple on in the junior guard's second game back after collapsing on the court.

The Owls had a final chance at the win, but Aaron McKie's jumper at the buzzer bounced off the rim.

Williams, who finished with 17 points, collapsed against Cincinnati on Jan. 27 and underwent a battery of heart tests. He was cleared to play earlier in the week and made his return against Rhode Island with nine points in 21 minutes.

McKie had 20 points and Eddie Jones added 19 for Temple (17-4, 10-3 Atlantic 10), which led 47-39 with 7:47 to go.

Massachusetts (18-4, 10-0) rallied within 49-48 with 3:24 to go on a run highlighted by a dunk by freshman Marcus Camby and a 3-pointer by Williams. Lou Roe's two free throws with 39 seconds left had the Minutemen within 53-52.

Donta Bright stole a long pass and put the Minutemen ahead 54-53 with 11 seconds left with two free throws. It was the first time Massachusetts led in the second half.

Jones made two free throws to get the Owls the lead, but Williams ducked under and finally rose above the crowd to the left of the key.

No. 16 Arizona 96, No. 18 California 77

BERKELEY, Calif. — Arizona won twice, beating California on the court and in a running war of words.

The 16th-ranked Wildcats emerged with a 96-77 victory over No. 18 Cal in a bitter game that pitted trash-talking players against each other. Even the coaches got into the act.

Khalid Reeves' 26 points led Arizona, but the most important player may have been Reggie Geary, the Wildcats' best trash-talker.

Lamond Murray's 28 points led Cal, while Buckley had 19 and Kidd 18.

Dayton 82, No. 17 Saint Louis 77, OT

DAYTON, Ohio — Alex Robertson scored six points in overtime and Shawn Haughn tied the NCAA record for 3-point accuracy as Dayton snapped an 11-game losing streak, beating No. 17 Saint Louis.

The Flyers (5-14, 1-6) rallied from a 12-point halftime deficit for their first Great Midwest Conference victory since joining the league this season.

Haughn finished with 30 points and was 8-for-8 from 3-point range to match the mark set by Tomas Thompson of San Francisco in 1992.

Cincinnati 89, No. 22 Marquette 82, 2 OT

MILWAUKEE — Dontonio Wingfield scored 29 points and Damon Flint added 20, and both freshman hit two big baskets in double overtime as Cincinnati beat No. 22 Marquette.

Haile dem shape an

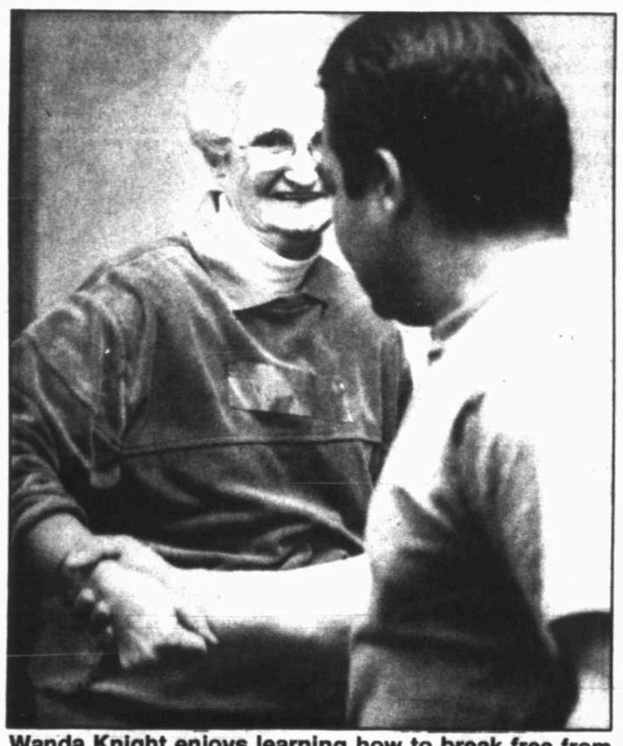

Dell Hoover yells a warning at Midland Police Department Sgt. Jeff Haile. Some of her classmates in the MPD self-defense class for women laugh at the incongruity of her conservative appearance and the street language officers encourage their students to use.

Student Laurie Schwab struggles to break Haile's grip. Students are taught that technique is more important than strength alone.

Haile demonstrates the use of the elbow as a weapon--perfect because of its shape and relative lack of sensitivity.

GETTING A GRIP

About 8:30 p.m. Thursday, I was in a position no woman wants to be in in the real world.

I was on my back — my heart pounding and sweat trickling into my eyes — as I fought a man who was aiming for my throat with his bare hands. After intially breaking his hold on me, I spent several minutes — which stretched out like days — trying to get away from the man. However, everything I tried with my legs or arms only resulted in an iron grip clamping down on me, moving me closer to my "attacker."

Finally, amid frustration and noise, I spotted an opening. Turning a little to the right, I placed two hard kicks into the knee of Sgt. Jeff Haile, who released me.

"Good, good — did you see what she did? She didn't give up and she went for a vunerable area," Haile said to the class.

"Two more hits like that and you would have broken his knee," said Officer Billy Byrd, who watched the whole episode. "That was good."

I rolled onto my side, got up very slowly and made my way to a chair next to Haile's wife Holly. I was beginning to feel the aftershocks of fighting with a man, who by some genetic glitch, felt virtually no pain and who was built like a tank. I was breathing hard, I had a nasty rug burn on my elbow and my legs no longer supported me.

I was in the second of two evenings on the third floor of the Midland Police Department learning self-defense under the guidance of Haile and Byrd. It was not a course to teach us how to be guerilla soldiers, but how all of us could keep from being a victim of a violent crime, both on a mental and physical level.

Being alert to your surroundings, looking people in the eye, having a confident attitude and the element of surprise were basic mental strategies Haile drilled into our heads, admittedly with a small amount of embarassment.

Instead of yelling "help" or "fire" if you are grabbed by someone — which Haile said would normally make those around you think you were joking — we were taught to yell "No, stop," and then an obscenity that would curl your mother's hair.

We all got the giggles at the last word. However, by the time Haile went around the room, piercing each one of us individually with that unblinking, hard stare of his, we could all yell the three words without so much as a snicker.

"I know your mother taught you that this is a bad word never to use," he said. "But, if a man grabs you and you turn and yell this at him, he is not going to expect it. You have surprised him, you have turned the situation in your favor. And, you have definately got the attention of those around you."

We learned how to break out of different grips, how to use a stick, how to break a chokehold and how to flip someone. We had our hair pulled, our legs pinched and learned where important pressure points were.

"I believe in teaching reality," Haile said. "You won't have any confidence or respect for these techniques if you don't know what it can do. And, I fight longer with you in here than you expect because the attacker on the street is just not going to give up because you get a good hit on him. You have to know how it feels in order to know and prepare for how you will react."

Reality also included receiving a distant, air-spray dose of cayenne pepper, which drove most of us into coughing fits. Two women got heavier hits and had to flush their eyes.

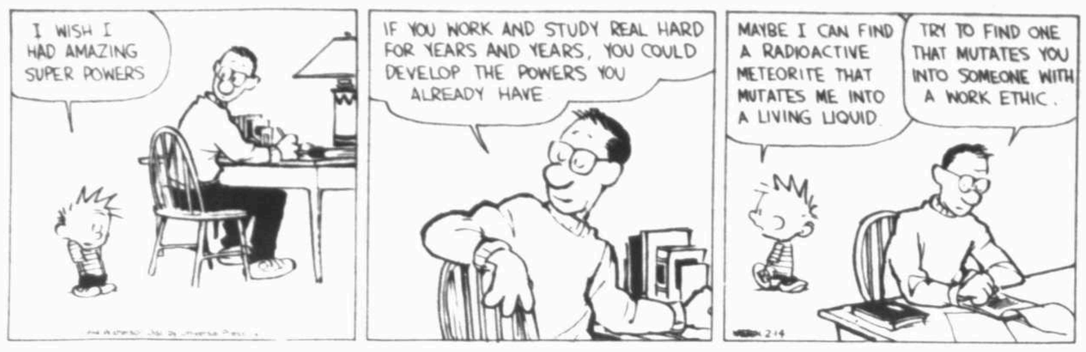

It wasn't exactly a fun way to spend two evenings - my out-of-shape muscles are stilling paying the price — but I would have gone through every minute again.

Because in exchange for some minor embarassement and pain, 13 women, including myself, learned that we don't have to be victims.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠Q53 ♡KJ10 ◇98732 ♣43
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♣	Pass	1 ◇	Pass
1 ♠	Pass	?

What action do you take?
A.—This one is too close to call. Our slight preference is to pass—we have a ruffing value and partner could have an unbalanced hand. However, anyone who elects to bid one no trump cannot be faulted, since most of the hand's values are in the unbid suit.

Q.2—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠76 ♡93 ◇A8754 ♣Q942
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♣	1 ♡	?

What action do you take?
A.—While you don't have much, you do have an ace and reasonable four-card support for partner's suit. Bid two clubs. What if partner opened a prepared club with only three cards in the suit? So what! The 4-3 fit could be your best spot.

Q.3—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠75 ♡J1063 ◇K9 ♣87632
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♡	Pass	?

What action do you take?
A.—A poor collection, to be sure, but your hand does revalue to some seven points in support of hearts. Raise to two hearts, even if only for its preemptive value. Experience shows it is poor tactics to pass with four-card support for opener's major.

Q.4—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠QJ72 ♡84 ◇K76 ♣AQ105
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	1 ♠	2 ♡

What action do you take?
A.—Do not make an unforced rebid with a minimum opener, unless you have something important to tell partner. Here your four-card support for North's suit is a considerable asset, so raise to two spades.

Q.5—Both vulnerabnle, as South you hold:
♠AQ94 ♡75 ◇A852 ♣743
The bidding has proceeded:

West	North	East	South
1 ♡	Pass	2 ♡	Pass
Pass	2 ♠	Pass	?

What action do you take?
A.—Remember, partner couldn't overcall the one-heart opening bid with one spade and doesn't deserve to be hanged for not letting the enemy buy the hand at two hearts. Pass—North has already bid all of your values.

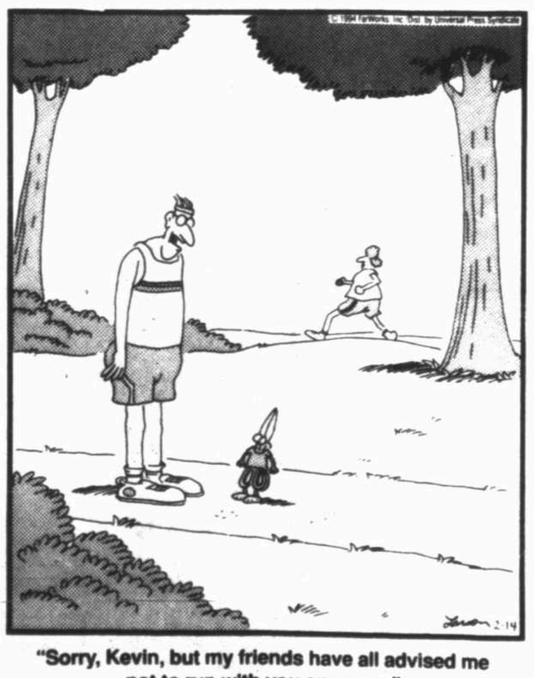

Q.6—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠74 ♡KJ74 ◇A865 ♣A103
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♡	2 ♠*	?

*—Weak
What do you bid now?
A.—You must tell partner you have a strong hand in support of hearts. The textbook way to do that is to cue-bid the enemy suit and there's no reason for you to choose another course. Bid three spades.

Grateful Dead's Jerry Garcia to marry on Valentine's Day

SAN FRANCISCO — Jerry Garcia, the 51-year-old lead guitarist and spiritual leader of the Grateful Dead, plans to wed a moviemaker on Valentine's Day, the San Francisco Examiner reported.

Silver-haired rock legend Garcia to marry today.

The silver-haired rock legend will marry independent filmmaker Deborah Koons of Mill Valley today in a secret location in Marin County, north of San Francisco.

"If you were invited, you have to call up on the day of the wedding and you'll be told where to go," a friend of Koons who wished to remain anonymous told the newspaper.

A Mill Valley restaurant owner who confirmed to the Examiner that the wedding was to take place said of the secrecy: "How would you feel if thousands of screaming Deadheads showed up for your wedding?"

Grateful Dead publicist Dennis McNally would neither confirm nor deny the nuptials. Asked to say how he planned to spend Valentine's Day, he responded, "Call me back Tuesday and I'll have lots to say."

Garcia has been married twice and has four daughters.

NEW YORK — A London newspaper report that the three surviving Beatles are planning a concert in Central Park is an "out and out lie," an aide to Paul McCartney said Sunday. A spokesman for John Lennon's family said he knew nothing about the concert either.

Jeff Baker, McCartney's personal assistant, told ABC Radio News that 'there's not a shred of truth" to the report in The Mail on Sunday.

The newspaper said McCartney, George Harrison and Ringo Starr would perform in Central Park later this year, and would be joined onstage by Lennon's sons, Julian and Sean.

The newspaper did not identify its source.

It said each of the former Beatles would be paid $30 million for the concert, which would be televised worldwide, and said McCartney chose New York as a tribute to Lennon, who was gunned down in front of his Manhattan home in 1980.

Baker told ABC that the report is an "out and out lie put around by optimistic promoters" trying to persuade the trio to perform.

NEW YORK — Why would a promising young screen beauty pile on hot latex make-up every day to play the mother of a woman only a few years younger than herself?

For Joan Chen, 31, the meaty supporting role in Oliver Stone's "Heaven and Earth" offered a chance to prove she's more than just another pretty face.

"It was a pure opportunity to showcase my acting skills, because it's not about looks at all," Chen says in US magazine's March issue.

She plays the mother of protagonist Le Ly Hayslip in Stone's Vietnam War story told from the viewpoint of a Vietnamese woman victimized by combatants on all sides.

Chen, best known in the United States for her roles in Bernardo Bertolucci's "The Last Emperor" and David Lynch's "Twin Peaks," has been working steadily since she left China at age 19.

The actress who suffered many hardships as a child under communist rule nevertheless traces her cinematic selflessness to early school lessons.

"The training was to think about something much grander and outside of yourself," she said. "It's a boring and banal existence if you only pursue your own self-interest."

LOS ANGELES — Michael Jackson headed to Las Vegas early while his celebrity siblings rehearsed in Hollywood for a family benefit show honoring Elizabeth Taylor and Motown founder Berry Gordy.

Jackson will keep his pledge to perform in the Feb. 19 "Jackson Family Honors" show at the MGM Grand despite ongoing criminal investigations into child molestation allegations, family spokesman John McLaughlin said.

Jackson flew to Las Vegas Saturday, the same day brothers Jermaine, Tito, Randy, Marlon and Jackie, along with sister Rebbie and several nieces and nephews, rehearsed at Alley Kat Studios in Hollywood.

They'll join Jackson Tuesday, McLaughlin said.

Jackson denies ever molesting the boy, now 14. He settled a civil lawsuit filed by the boy last month for an undisclosed amount. Sources have put the amount at $15 million.

NEW YORK — Tipper Gore has a master's degree in child psychology and experience as a news photographer. But she's glad she never pursued her own career.

"If I had pursued a career, we would have had two separate lives, and I don't even know that we would have stayed married," the vice president's wife says in Redbook's March issue. "I know people can do it and my hat's off to them. But I think everybody has to do what works for them, and that's what I'm doing in my life."

Distributorships Now Available

PART-TIME INCOME OPPORTUNITY

The Midland Reporter-Telegram has early morning routes which need to be filled with dependable individuals with reliable transportation. Often asked questions:

➥ Is it worthwhile for adults also?

YES! 95% of our Distributors ARE adults! Morning Routes are attractive for:
- ★ ADULTS who have fulltime jobs, yet want to supplement their income with a steady part-time job!
- ★ MOTHERS who can't justify a small job AND daycare, because as a Distributor, you don not need daycare!
- ★ COLLEGE STUDENTS needing a part-time job which will work with classes!
- ★ SENIOR CITIZENS wanting regular exercise, added retirement income, or just want to work with people, neighbors, and friends!

➥ How much money can I make as a Distributor?

Depending on the size of the route(s), from $350 to $800 monthly, in some cases...even more!

➥ OK...but how long does it take?

The actual delivery takes 1-2 hours Monday-Saturday, and 2-3 hours on Sunday, depending on the size of the route(s). Also some time is needed each month to collect from subscribers. Many Distributors choose to handle some of this by putting envelopes in the subscribers' papers and having payments mailed to them. Some collecting in person will be necessary though, particularly on some routes more than others.

➥ When do the papers have to be delivered by?

Papers must be on the yards by 6 am Monday-Friday, and 7 am on weekend mornings.

➥ Do I ever get a day off?

The job requires a 7-day a week commitment. However, most Distributors do take days off by finding a friend, family member, or another Distributor to substitute for them!

➥ What else?

An initial $100 refundable deposit is required.
