Dole suggests tax cut changes

WASHINGTON (AP) — Despite President Reagan's refusal to "sound retreat" on his embattled economic program, one of his key congressional allies says it "must be assumed" Reagan knows he will have to accept changes.

Hinting at one possible change, Bob Dole, R-Kan., said Sunday that "we can do a lot with the 3-year tax cut" Congress enacted last year for individuals.

For example, Dole suggested that one way to increase tax revenues would be to forgo the 10 percent rate cut scheduled for next year and instead begin "indexing," or tying personal tax rate changes to inflation. Under the current law, indexing is not scheduled to begin until 1985.

"We'd pick up $3 billion in '83 and about $15 billion in '84 just with that (indexing) change," Dole said.

Dole, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, was interviewed on CBS' "Face the Nation."

Reagan has strongly resisted suggestions that major changes be made in the tax reductions Congress passed last year. But many legislators have argued that revenues must be raised in order to trim deficits.

The president told the Conservative Political Conference Friday night, "We are standing by our program, we will not turn back, or sound retreat, just as we near victory."

But Dole, asked whether Reagan would accept changes, said, "I think that must be assumed."

Dole — who along with other GOP members of the Finance Committee was meeting with Reagan at the White House this afternoon — added: "It would seem to me ... that he (Reagan) knows that sooner or later there's going to be an arrangement or an accommodation."

Dole also predicted that Congress may reduce cost-of-living increases for some benefit programs, such as Social Security, to trim the huge deficits projected in Reagan's budget recommendations.

Opponents of Reagan's economic program got fresh ammunition over the weekend with release of a Congressional Budget Office study that concluded families with incomes below $20,000 suffer almost two-thirds of the social program cutbacks while getting only 15 percent of the tax savings under Reagan's economic plan.

ADMINISTRATION OFFICIALS have contended their program of cutting both taxes and non-defense spending will spur investment and a sizable upturn in economic growth.

Dole acknowledged Sunday that Reagan's budget often is seen as unfair to the poor while giving breaks to the wealthy.

"It would seem to me that he (Reagan) knows that sooner or later there's going to be an arrangement or accommodation."

— Sen. Robert Dole

"I find the perception is fairly widespread and I think to some degree it's accurate because we are looking at a number of social programs" and benefit programs as targets for additional cuts in the president's budget.

In addition, Dole indicated that a bill raising the $1.079 trillion limit on federal debt is a likely vehicle for carrying most of the economic program to be passed this year by Congress.

Administration officials have predicted the debt ceiling will be reached in mid-May, meaning Congress will have to raise the figure to keep the government operating.

"It would seem to me that the debt ceiling must be passed, and if we really work at it, we can bring enough Republicans and Democrats together to put a package on the debt ceiling," Dole said.

Reagan's budget proposals are due to receive continued critical scrutiny in a series of hearings before the House and Senate budget committees this week.

Sharing the spotlight with budget deliberations this week in the Senate is the issue of whether to make Harrison A. Williams Jr., the first senator to be expelled since 1862.

Also Tuesday, the Senate will vote on legislation providing penalties for journalists who publish the names of American intelligence agents overseas.

City to get lower interest rate on bonds

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Mayor G. Thane Akins announced today that Midland will be able to use alternative methods of bond financing for the city's $48 million capital expenditures because of recent changes in the Texas laws.

These capital expenditures include financing for water works and sewer system, airport and general purpose projects.

But, Midlanders will vote only on $7 million of the needed improvements in a bond issue April 3, he noted.

Tax impact for this $7 million bond issue will be about 4 cents per $100 of valuation, related Akins. And if federal aid for airport improvements isn't available, that means another 6.5 cents per $100 valuation. Therefore, on a $100,000 house taxes would go up a maximum of $105 for the year, he noted, adding that if federal funding for the airport comes through, the tax rate would be reduced.

Akins said changes in the state law bring an alternative that provide a lower interest cost on a major part of the financing and "may even permit less debt to be incurred in the case of the airport than would have previously been allowed."

He added that Midland is in excellent financial condition and "our tax bond credit rating according to Moody's is AA-1." However, according to Akins, since interest rates historically have been high in the bond market, the city must implement financing at the lowest possible cost.

Previously, the city has financed water and sewer system capital improvements through revenue bonds. However, the state law has been amended to permit the city to contract with the Colorado River Municipal Water District to issue bonds on behalf of the city.

The $23 million for water and sewer improvements through bonds issued by the CRMWD would mean a savings of 1 percent interest over financing through water works and sewer system revenue bonds, Akins said.

"This 1 percent interest on $23 million is $230,000 in one year and the savings could approach $2 million over the life of issue. The lower interest simply means lower rates to the consumer," he said.

Akins added another advantage is the "coverage requirements are lower than if the city issued revenue bonds."

Moreover, he said the most important advantage would be the quickness in securing the financing.

In the area of airport financing, Akins said under current bond market conditions, the city is limited to the issuance of about $3 million in Airport System Revenue Bonds. But, $15 million is needed for improving the parking lot, streets, drainage and runways at Midland Regional Airport.

Akins said state law now permits a method of financing airports with certificates of obligation. He explained through this method, revenues of the airport are pledged together with the ad valorem tax if needed, and has a credit standing in the bond market equivalent to the city's tax bonds.

"The advantages of issuing the certificates are that they can be sized in an amount to the exact construction funding required and the city will also enjoy an interest savings of 1 percent of $3 million on these funds," Akins said.

He added that Airport Development Assistance Program funds may be released by Congress this year for additional financing, which could reduce the city's need for financing by several million dollars.

Reports of probe halt upset Williams

ATLANTA (AP) — Wayne B. Williams fears he could lose his chance to be cleared of his two murder convictions if the books are closed on most of the slayings of young blacks that horrified Atlanta for nearly two years, his lawyer says.

Alvin Binder, the Mississippi lawyer who headed Williams' defense during a sensational nine-week trial, said Sunday that Williams was upset over reports that authorities now plan to close the books on 27 slayings. Binder said Williams hoped the investigation would continue so he would be exonerated.

A Superior Court jury deliberated 12 hours Friday and Saturday before finding the 23-year-old free-lance photographer and aspiring talent scout guilty of murder in the deaths of Nathaniel Cater, 27, and Jimmy Ray Payne, 21.

Judge Clarence Cooper sentenced Williams to two consecutive life terms in prison. Under Georgia law, Williams would be eligible for a parole review in seven years.

Cater and Payne were among 28 young blacks whose deaths during a 22-month period were investigated by a special police task force.

A source close to that investigation said Sunday that authorities have evidence linking Williams to as many as 24 slayings on the task force list, in addition to the two he was convicted of committing.

And the Atlanta Journal reported Sunday police also intend to close the books on the slaying of John Howard Porter, whose death was investigated by the task force but was not added to its official list.

Prosecutors at Williams' trial introduced evidence in the slaying of Porter and nine youths on the task force list in an effort to show a pattern of killings that included Cater and Payne.

District Attorney Lewis Slaton denied Sunday police have linked Williams to 27 killings, saying that number is "too high." He refused to say how many cases would be closed due to the convictions.

Robbie Hamrick, who headed the Georgia Bureau of Investigation's role in the task force, said Sunday officials from seven police jurisdictions would meet this week to decide the status of the remaining cases on the task force list.

The Journal report said the task force likely will be disbanded, and Williams probably would not be charged in any other killings.

Binder, who met with Williams at the Fulton County Jail Sunday, said his client "is not disheartened unduly" over his conviction, but "he's very disappointed."

"All of a sudden we're hearing that all the cases are being closed and that's upsetting to Wayne," Binder said. "He had hoped that the investigation would continue ..."

Binder said he understands that in one of the task force cases, authorities have eyewitnesses to the murder and "that would seem to me to warrant further investigation."

Williams, who "definitely wants the case appealed," is "holding up pretty well," Binder said. "He was very coherent."

After District Attorney Lewis Slaton read the verdict in court Saturday night, Williams insisted he was innocent.

"I maintained all along through this trial my innocence, and I still say so today," Williams said just before he was sentenced. "I don't have any malice towards the jury, the prosecutors or the court.

"I just hope the person who committed these crimes can be brought to justice ... I more than anyone wanted to see this thing ended, but I did not do it."

Williams' parents reacted angrily to the verdict, with his mother, Faye Williams, labeling Cooper "an Uncle Tom," and calling Slaton and his assistants "a conniving team."

Homer Williams, the defendant's 68-year-old father, told Cooper before sentencing the verdict was "an error in justice. I don't see how anybody anywhere could find my son guilty of anything.

Israel consul says PLO presents biggest roadblock to peace

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Depicting Israel as a country anxious for peace, David M. Zohar focused on the difficulty of doing just that during his talk Sunday afternoon at Temple Beth-el here.

Zohar, consul at the Consulate General of Israel based in Houston, gave a small group of area Christian leaders an update on the Middle East.

He began by giving a slide presentation that showed Jerusalem as "the bulwark of theism," concentrating on historical sites of early Christianity before going on to Moslem places of worship and Jewish holy sites, such as the Western Wall.

Despite its neighbors' ill feelings toward that country, Israel has opened its borders to tourists who want to come and pray at their respective holy plaes, according to Zohar, who has been in the Israeli diplomatic service since 1964.

Despite a cease-fire with Jordan and Lebanon, tourists are allowed in from those countries. But they must go through a checkpoint at the borders, which are delineated by wire fences and soldiers.

Switching to the political scenario, Zohar said Israel is preparing to meet the last requirements of the Camp David Peace Accord by the April 26

Midlander killed in auto wreck

A 29-year-old Midland man was killed early Sunday morning when his vehicle left the roadway on which it was traveling and overturned, pinning the driver underneath the wreckage.

Blas R. Gamboa was pronounced dead at the scene of the accident near the intersection of Interstate 20's north service road and North Loop 250 at 1:45 a.m. Sunday by Justice of the Peace Charlie Sprayberry. Gamboa's body was taken to Ellis Funeral Home.

Midland Police Department reports indicated Gamboa was eastbound on the service road, his vehicle left the right side of the roadway, crossed a dirt median, went across Interstate 20 on the ramp and then rolled one time. Gamboa's body was pinned beneath the vehicle, reports indicated.

Search for family abandoned

LAKE DALLAS, Texas (AP) — The mystery of a missing North Texas family remained unsolved Sunday, and authorities called off the two-week search in and near Lake Lewisville.

"We have thoroughly covered the lake, and we cannot continue the search indefinitely," said Lt. Jim Wilson of the Denton County Sheriff's Department.

The body of six-year-old Kayleen Merillat was found floating in the lake Feb. 21. Medical examiners said she had drowned, but could not tell why.

However, searchers were unable to find any sign of her parents, Kenneth Merillat, 32, his wife, Alice, 27, or her younger sister, Kendra Lee, 5.

Midland weather will remain mild

The windy month of March came quietly today with southerly winds only expected to blow at a mild 5-10 mph today through Tuesday, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

It should remain fair through Tuesday with warmer afternoons. The mercury will drop into the lower 40s tonight and climb into the upper 70s on Tuesday.

Sunday's pleasant high of 70 was 17 degrees cooler than the record high of 87, set for that date in 1940. The overnight low of 32 was 18 degrees warmer than the record low of 14, set in 1962.

Chamber announces cultural awards

Four recipients of the West Texas Chamber of Commerce Cultural Achievement Awards have been announced by the WTCC Cultural Affairs Committee chairman, Joe Collyns of San Angelo. The awards ceremony will take place during the WTCC annual meeting April 21-23 in Midland.

Recipients and their area of achievement are:

—Sixth Van Cliburn International Quadrennial Piano Competition, Fort Worth, international musical event.

—The Old Jail Foundation and Art Research Center, Albany, art and architectural preservation.

—The fine arts department of Cisco Junior College, Roof Garden Theatre.

—Post Mayor Giles Connell McCrary, O.S. Ranch Western Art Show.

Each year the WTCC honors one or more individuals or organizations for outstanding contributions to West Texas culture. Past recipients of the award have included artists, musicians, authors, craftsmen, cartoonists, corporations, organizations and other individuals who made outstanding contributions to West Texas culture.

The awards banquet will be held April 22 in the Midland Hilton.

Police investigate tire-slashing incident

Midland police are investigating an incident that occurred at 200 E. Kentucky Ave. Sunday evening in which tires were slashed on 10 vehicles with damages estimated at more than $700.

The incident was reported to police by Francis Porras of 402 N. Dallas St. about 8:45 p.m. Sunday. Porras reported seeing a young man at the Kentucky Avenue address slash two tires on his vehicle then run from the scene. Further investigation by police revealed nine other vehicles in that area also had been the targets of tire slashings with damages on those nine amounting to $564.

Porras estimated damage to his two tires at $200.

William Ray of 2402 W. Kentucky Ave. reported the theft of a bank bag containing $250 cash. Ray said the bag was taken from his residence between 8:30 p.m. and 10 p.m. Sunday.

The Rev. Glenn Shoemake of 1500 S. Mineola St. reported a break-in at Calvary Baptist Church, 1001 S. Main St. The only item listed as taken was a money bag, but damage to a window and a door in the church reportedly amounted to $120.

Midland firemen reponded to a number of vehicle and grass fires Sunday, including a fire which caused heavy damage to the cab of a truck belonging to Domingo Garcia. That fire, which occurred at 917 N. Fort Worth St. just after 3 p.m. Sunday, was extinguished with 100 gallons of water. That fire may have been started by children, fire department reports indicated.

Firemen responded to another vehicle fire at 7:45 p.m. Sunday at the intersection of Illinois Avenue and Tyler Street. A fire at that location caused heavy damage to the wiring and front two tires on a vehicle belonging to Ed Hall of 1711 E. Willeys Ave., fire reports indicated.

Police say armed robberies likely related

ODESSA — Police officials say two armed robberies at conveniences stores here early today are likely related.

The first robbery occurred at 12:54 a.m. at the 7-Eleven store at 31st and Golder. Store clerk Twila Lewis told Odessa police two men entered the store, one of them produced a pistol and they demanded money. After they got the money, the two fled the store to the north on foot, she told officers.

One of the robbers was described as about 24 years of age, 5 feet 4 inches or 5 feet 5 inches tall and wearing a white zippered jacket. The other was described as 23 or 24 years old, 5 feet 6 inches tall with short hair and a mustache.

The second robbery occurred at 1:10 a.m. at the 7-Eleven store at 800 W. County Road. Clerk Scott Mason told police two men came into the store, one of them produced a pistol and they demanded cash. They took the cash, a 12-pack of beer and fled the store on foot, the clerk told police.

Mason said one of the robbers was about 5 feet 5 inches tall and weighed about 120 pounds. He had black hair and was wearing a brown and red plaid V-neck sweater. The second robber was said to be about 21 years of age, 5 feet tall and weighing 140 pounds. He was wearing gold-colored dress pants.

Police say they are investigating the two robberies.

Brown still formidable political force

By DOUG WILLIS
Associated Press Writer

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — Seven years as governor and two unsuccessful presidential campaigns have taken their toll on Jerry Brown's once-phenomenal popularity in California.

But the enigmatic prophet of the era of limits, who carries the nickname "Gov. Moonbeam," is still a formidable political force in California, with a good chance of succeeding retiring Republican S.I. Hayakawa in the U.S. Senate.

Seven Republican candidates in the June 8 primary are all running against Brown's record as governor. So far, he is ignoring them, as well as his little-known Democratic challengers, attempting instead to turn his race into a referendum on President Reagan's economic policies.

An articulate and aggressive campaigner, Brown in 1982 has returned — both in campaign tactics and political philosophy — to the mainstream of the Democratic Party.

Brown's talk about the "existential edge" of politics at the collapse of his presidential campaign two years ago now is replaced by talk of winning "the competitive edge" in foreign trade.

Today Brown is courting labor, liberals and minorities, preaching party unity and attending to the political rituals he once shunned. His speeches emphasize bread-and-butter Democratic issues and partisan attacks on Reagan's Republican administration.

"We've had the New Deal. We've had the fair deal. We've had the square deal. And now we have the raw deal," Brown says. "You don't restore prosperity to America by taking from those who can least afford it...and giving it to those who already have tremendous sums of money and tremendous tax breaks."

Brown says he has not abandoned goals such as encouraging conservation instead of consumption through the state Office of Appropriate Technology, which he created, or encouraging new high technology industries.

But Brown no longer uses terms such as "era of limits," "lower your expectations" or "small is beautiful," because he says they have been "stigmatized" by critics, an acknowledgement of the sting Brown still suffers from the "Gov. Moonbeam" satire of the comic strip "Doonesbury," that plagued his 1980 presidential campaign.

At the end of Brown's first year as governor, pollster Mervin Field reported he was the most popular chief executive in modern California history, with seven times as many voters giving him positive ratings as those rating him negatively.

Now, as Brown struggles through his eighth and final year as governor that 7-1 positive ratio has turned to nearly 2-1 against him. Only 23 percent of the voters in Field's poll last month said they approved of Brown's performance as governor while 41 percent disapproved.

But Brown is an effective campaigner, and his $1.6 million war chest is more than the combined funds of all 11 challengers in both major parties.

However, his political problems stem from both his image, and his record.

To many voters, Brown represents a Zen Buddhism approach to government which they don't understand. Cartoonists picture him in the lotus position presiding over the state. He has a negative image, mostly of his own making, of flitting from one trendy idea to another.

One day Brown advocates using wood chips and windmills as alternative energy sources, talking about rediscovering a simpler life. The next day, it is high technology — satellites, robotics and computers — that are "the cutting edge" of an economic rebirth for the nation.

But Brown also has a detailed record of accomplishments as governor, and it is often his achievements that are issues today.

As governor, he appointed the first woman, the first black and the first Hispanic to the California Supreme Court, appointees who have been lightning rods for criticism from conservatives who consider them too liberal.

He has also appointed more women and minorities to top state posts than any previous governor, with four women today among the nine members of his cabinet.

Brown also personally negotiated compromises between growers and farm workers to create the precedent-setting state Agricultural Labor Relations Board, giving farm workers the right to unionize in state-supervised organizing elections.

Growers feel betrayed by Brown's farm labor board, which they say is biased to favor his longtime ally, Cesar Chavez. They also blame Brown for being slow to order aerial spraying last year to fight the Mediterranean fruit fly.

After initially opposing Proposition 13 tax cuts, Brown embraced them as his own and pushed through still more tax cuts. To the chagrin of liberals, he turned out to be a penny-pincher as governor, blocking all general tax increases except a two-cent increase in the gasoline tax.

But the same voters who give Brown heavily negative ratings as governor also strongly favor him in the upcoming Democratic primary, which he leads by 51 percent to 13 percent against his strongest rival.

Part of that is the competition in the Democratic primary, an assortment of politically inexperienced challengers.

On the right, Brown faces state Sen. Paul Carpenter of Orange County, Fresno Mayor Dan Whitehurst and California Ku Klux Klan leader Tom Metzger. On the left, there is novelist Gore Vidal, whose biting wit pleases liberal crowds but attracts relatively few serious followers.

Even if Brown wins the Democratic primary, he is the underdog against any of the leading Republican contenders in the fall general election.

Israeli consul gives Middle East update

deadline.

"WE SUGGESTED SOME minor border changes involving some exchange of land to avoid cutting towns into two pieces," but the Egyptians are being difficult in agreeing to the modifications, he claimed.

Because of the Camp David treaty, Israel already has given up its "oilfields in the Sinai. Consequently, we have no oil in Israel today. We buy it from Egypt from the wells we drilled; it's imported to us. We can't pay for it so we borrow the money from the U.S. Congress at 14 percent interest," he said.

David M. Zohar

Egypt's new president, Hosni Mubarak, isn't following his predecessor's lead, Zohar said in comparing Mubarak to the slain Anwar Sadat. While Sadat took a pro-Western stance, Mubarak is coming back to dead center, Zohar said.

This means that Egypt will look equally to the Soviet Union and the U.S. for help, he explained.

Israel today enjoys a cease-fire situation with Lebanon, Jordan and Syria, but Zohar acknowledged it is a fragile situation. With soldiers of both sides patroling the borders, "the situation could break down quickly."

Israel's biggest stumbling block to peace today comes from the Palestine Liberation Army, related Zohar, who also presented a slide show on the PLO's activities throughout the world.

The narrator of the taped show claimed the PLO's leader, Yasser Arafat, has contended the organization's sole purpose is to eliminate the state of Israel. Split into eight factions, the PLO has been responsible for most of the terrorist activities in the world since the 1970s. The narrator cited several examples, including the Black September group which killed 11 Israeli atheletes at the 1972 Olympics.

ZOHAR POINTED OUT the PLO is building up troops and supplies on the mountains of south Lebanon. The group is "subsidized to the tune of $1 million a day from Saudi Arabian countries." He likened the situation to one of the PLO threatening to turn its forces on Saudi Arabia if the countries didn't hand over the money.

"The petro dollars Saudi Arabia gets from selling its oil to the U.S. winds up in the hands of PLO. And weapons sold by the U.S. to other countries wind up in the hands of the PLO," said Zohar.

Israel, he noted, is adamantly opposed to the U.S. sale of AWACs planes to Saudi Arabia, claiming the aircraft "could be used to coordinate a massive onslaught against Israel. It's a very small country and it's hard to defend ourselves against them."

He claimed the worldwide inflation was started by the Arabs with their oil embargo in 1973, which he contended was a "big snow job." That embargo pushed up not only the price of oil, but also sprouted inflation around the world and increased the interest rates.

He also noted that Arab money is flowing into the U.S. as Arabians buy up American real estate. Zohar pointed to the Galleria shopping center in Houston, which is owned by Kuwait, as an example.

AND ARABIANS are so heavily tied in with the University of Southern California, he said, that people joke that the name should be changed to University of Saudi California.

With the worldwide oil glut today, Israel is hoping it will put Saudi Arabia in a bind. "It's welcomed by the Israelis. The Arabs are no longer dominant in OPEC (Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries), and prices are dropping," he said.

A major concern of Israel today is "we can't figure out what American policy is aiming at," he said, explaining that the U.S. sends out a definite policy one day and then changes its mind the next.

The two countries — Israel and the U.S. — hold much in common, said Zohar, citing democratic forms of government, a desire for peace, an aspiration to continue freedom of the seas and a vested interest in stopping terrorism in the world.

"We're your friends, but we want the friendship reciprocated. We're not sure if it is. There's a lot of waffling going on. Who makes the policy; whom are we to believe in the government?" he said.

Israel disagrees with the American philosophy and practice of equipping Saudi Arabia and Jordan on the hopes they won't seek help from the Soviet Union. "We know Jordan and the Arabians are still going to the Russians," Zohar said.

Public hearing begins on Air Florida accident

WASHINGTON (AP) — The public portion of the federal investigation into the crash of Air Florida Flight 90 gets under way today, but it may be months before an official cause of the accident is determined.

The five people who survived the Jan. 13 crash, workers who de-iced the plane and pilots who observed ice on the aircraft as it awaited takeoff were scheduled to be among the first of 46 witnesses to appear before a board of inquiry.

Officials on the National Transportation Safety Board panel estimate the public hearings will last at least five days. The group's findings will be presented to the full board, which will determine a probable cause for the crash.

Seventy-eight people were killed when the Boeing 737 stalled seconds after taking off from National Airport, struck a busy commuter bridge and slammed into the ice-filled Potomac River. Among the dead were 74 aboard the plane and five motorists on the bridge.

The safety board started its investigation hours after the crash and has released transcripts of the cockpit voice recorder as well as raw data from a recorder that monitored aircraft engines and flight instruments.

Midlanders participate in annual Chamber of Commerce reception, dinner

WASHINGTON — Three Midland, Texas, couples are in Washinton, D.C. today to participate in the 16th annual West Texas Chamber of Commerce Reception and Dinner here.

Attending are Mr. and Mrs. Joe Kloesel, Mr. and Mrs. Guy McCrary and Mr. and Mrs. Dan Mendell. They are among 125 persons expected to attend the event tonight on Capitol Hill.

The day was to begin with a breakfast briefing on current national affairs given by Morton Blackwell, special assistant to the president, and Michael Pate, legislative director for Sen. Lloyd Bentsen.

Next, the WTCC group was to meet with key congresional office staff members communicating information concerning the WTCC's National Affairs program. Tonight, WTCC members and guests will meet with their respective legislators at a dinner honoring the Texas delegation.

"Purpose of the trip is to establish lines of communication with the Texas delegation," said Richard F. Bacon of Abilene, chairman of the WTCC National Affairs Committee, which sponsors the event.

City gets interest break on bonds

posed improvements for streets, new fire substations and expanding city hall is required through general obligation bonds and can't come from other methods, Akins said. Therefore, the city is asking the voters in the April 3 election to approve these projects.

Street improvements will require $3 million, city hall remodeling and expansion will require $1 million and building two fire substations will take $2 million. In addition, the bond issue will include $500,000 to renovate the police station and another $500,000 for the expansion of the vehicle maintenance building.

Former Midlander heads Tower's staff

WASHINGTON — U.S. Sen. John Tower has appointed former Midlander Linden Theresa Heck Kettlewell as his new legislative director, replacing Philip A. Charles, who recently moved to Texas to become Tower's Dallas office director.

Ms. Kettlewell, 29, most recently was employed by U.S. Sen. Paul Laxalt as majority counsel for the Senate Judiciary Committee's subcommittee on regulatory reform. She is the former executive director of the Nevada State Republican Committee.

Ms. Kettlewell also has served as executive director of the Texas Republican County Chairman's Association and as special projects director of the Republican party of Texas.

A native of Texas, she is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William A. Heck of Midland. She is married to Larry G. Kettlewell, confidential assistant to Secretary of Agriculture John R. Block. She received her doctor of jurisprudence degree from The University of Texas School of Law in 1979 and was a member of the Texas and Nevada state bars.

Her appointment to Tower's staff became effective Feb. 24.

As legislative director, she will oversee Tower's entire legislative staff.

Williams' parents 'trying to get it back together'

ATLANTA (AP) — Their anger having subsided, Homer and Faye Williams are "just trying to get it back together" in the wake of their son's conviction on two murder charges.

The retired school teachers spent most of Sunday in quiet seclusion with family and friends at their modest brick-faced home in the western portion of the city.

"We're taking it easy today," said the 68-year-old father of Wayne B. Williams, who was convicted Saturday of murdering two young black men after a nine-week trial.

"We don't feel like talking much to anybody. We're just trying to get it back together," the elder Williams said during a brief interview on his front steps Sunday afternoon.

The elder Williams said he felt "much better" than he had the night before and was optimistic about the outcome of his son's appeal.

After the jury returned the verdicts, Homer Williams told Superior Court Judge Clarence Cooper he didn't "see how any party anywhere could find my son guilty of anything. I will say this anywhere in the world — I just don't see it."

After his son was sentenced to mandatory life imprisonment, Williams slammed his raincoat down on a courtroom pew and complained that the prosecution had been "a railroad job."

As his son was returned to the local jail, Williams returned home to join his wife, who also was angered. About an hour later both were interviewed on local television.

Mrs. Williams called prosecutors "a conniving team" and characterized Cooper, who is black, as "an Uncle Tom." She said her son was innocent and that the real killer was "not a black person."

"I feel like there's no justice in America," she said, adding that the real killer had probably attended the trial and "is still laughing."

"He's made a fool of the federal government, the state government and the city government ... and he has ruined the Williams family," Mrs. Williams said.

Although the Williamses did not attend Sunday services at the Warren Memorial United Methodist Church, they were a topic of discussion.

The Rev. J.D. Grier Jr., who went to the couple's home after the verdict, told the congregation that all mankind could be redeemed, no matter how downtrodden.

"Let us bow our heads and open our hearts. God, we can't do it alone," Grier said. "We pray, we invite you to be with us, to be with the Williams family and all the families of the church."

Several "amens" rose from the congregation.

Before the service, Grier said he thought the couple was holding up well under the strain. "They'll get through it. It'll be a struggle. That's their son. They are hurt."

Grier said the couple spoke so bitterly after the verdict because "it is a personal hurt. They feel the whole system struck at them."

Wayne Williams: From a whiz kid at 15 to convicted murderer at 23

ATLANTA (AP) — At 16, he was a whiz kid, vice president and general manager of a small radio station. At 23, he is a convicted murderer, described by prosecutors as a "mad dog killer" who was frustrated by his own failures.

The great things expected from Wayne Bertram Williams had not materialized when he became the central figure in one of the most sensational murder trials in recent criminal history. The lack of success was used against him.

On Saturday night, after a jury found him guilty of killing two young black men, Williams repeated his assertions of innocence, saying "I still say I didn't do this and that comes from the bottom of my heart."

Prosecutors paraded Williams' failures through the Fulton County courtroom, contending his frustration drove him to murder young blacks.

But defense lawyers said the aspiring talent promoter was "young, gifted and black" and would have lived up to expectations had he not been arrested at the brink of success.

Now, after months of publicity and a lengthy trial, Williams "is just as recognizable as the president of the United States," defense lawyer Alvin Binder said.

"I think my client is the most misunderstood man I have ever met," the Mississippi attorney said.

THE STARK CONTRAST BETWEEN Williams' early successes and his recent failures made it easy for prosecutors to portray him as a "Jekyll and Hyde" with a split personality.

But defense lawyer Mary Welcome called the contention absurd, saying, "The prosecution wants you to believe that Wayne Williams, 23 years of age, is a failure. His life has just begun."

Williams, an only child who always lived with his parents, displayed an aptitude for electronics while quite young. As a 12-year-old, he and two schoolmates built a small, limited-range radio station in the basement of the Williams' home.

The station became a commercial station in 1973, when Williams was 15. The enterprise brought him local media attention, and soon politicians were flocking to the modest brick home. Williams said he interviewed Atlanta Mayor Andrew Young, who was a U.S. congressman at the time; Benjamin Hooks, head of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People; former Atlanta Mayor Sam Massell; and several state representatives.

The radio station soon outgrew the house and was moved to a suite of offices, where Williams, according to his resume, worked as program director and news director. At 16, he became vice president and general manager.

But the station soon went bankrupt and the Williamses, who had invested heavily, went broke. Wayne began working at a series of media-related jobs, never staying at any one more than a couple of months.

He entered Georgia State University but flunked out during his sophomore year. He fancied himself a musical talent promoter, and spent thousands of dollars of his parents' money without any return.

Williams' music interest centered on the group he managed called "Gemini." He searched the city for young black males he felt would fit into the group. He passed out hundreds of flyers soliciting talent at areas were black teen-agers would gather.

Williams claims he was about to win the success he had dreamed about when he was arrested, but prosecutors saw things differently.

"I'm not quite sure about this music business," District Attorney Lewis Slaton said. "I don't know where you find all the young singing talent cruising the street late at night."

"He hasn't made enough to buy a hamburger," Assistant District Attorney Jack Mallard said. "This man is living in a dream world. He's a non-achiever, he's failed at everything."

BUT MS. WELCOME SAID, "Mr. Mallard said he was a dreamer. Martin Luther King was a dreamer."

Williams, who sat through nine weeks of testimony before getting the chance to tell his story, talked about those dreams.

"I've got several goals in life," he said. "One of them, of course, it to make the music business a success, I guess as a main income ... I've also got the need to do some type of social work or community work. I don't know how you phrase it, but just to promote people and help people.

"I think I am — I was — a limited success, but I want to be bigger."

Jurors at odds at first

ATLANTA (AP) — The jury that convicted Wayne B. Williams of murder in the deaths of two young blacks started its deliberations at odds on both murder counts, one member of the panel says.

The juror, who asked not to be identified, said Sunday that at least one-fourth of the 12-member jury initially was against finding Williams guilty in the death of 27-year-old Nathaniel Cater, the first of the two cases the jury decided.

But after 9½ hours of deliberations, the jury agreed unanimously on Williams' guilt in the Cater case. It then met for another 2½ hours before finding Williams guilty of murdering Jimmy Ray Payne, 21.

The eight blacks and four whites on the jury were kept under guard in a motel for nearly eight weeks and were prohibited from reading newspapers, watching television news and police shows and discussing the case with anyone, including each other.

After spending their first night at home Saturday, most of the jurors contacted Sunday were reluctant to talk about the case. Instead, they talked of how the trial had left them physically and emotionally drained.

"I woke up with my head hurting so badly I have to go to the doctor," said one juror, who asked not to be identified. "I'm really exhausted from it, really tired. It's been a tremendous strain."

Sandra W. Lane, the 34-year-old jury forewoman, could not be reached Sunday for comment.

Q.1—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠1072 ♡A8 ◇KJ93 ♣AQ95
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ◇	Pass	1 ♡	Pass
1 NT	Pass	2 ♣	Pass

What action do you take?
A.—Partner's rebid was not forcing, and you have little more than a minimum opening bid. Nevertheless, we suggest a raise to three clubs. Your excellent fit for partner's second suit and ace in his first suit make your hand worth more than it appears.

Q.2—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠K6 ♡852 ◇A10976 ♣Q93
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
Pass	1 NT	Pass	Pass
Dble	Pass	?

What action do you take?
A.—Even though partner passed originally, he cannot have much less than an opening bid for his reopening double. That gives your side the balance of power, and since you have a good suit to lead, you can expect to defeat one no trump easily. Pass.

Q.3—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠A9 ♡AQ107 ◇K98 ♣AJ106
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♣	Dble	Pass	1 ◇

What do you bid now?
A.—Your plethora of tens and nines made your hand a trifle too strong for a one no trump opening bid. Now, you can express the full value of your hand by simply rebidding one no trump. In this type of sequence, that shows a hand that was too strong to open one no trump originally.

Q.4—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AK6 ♡95 ◇KQ7 ♣AQJ54
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♣	Pass	3 ♣	Pass
3 ♣	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—Your main concern is the heart suit—partner can have a sound opening bid without either of the two top heart honors. Bid four diamonds. If partner does not bid four hearts in response, you can show your excellent spades and concern about hearts by bidding five spades next. That should clear up any doubts about what you need for slam.

Q.5—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠KJ754 ♡KQJ7 ◇A5 ♣Q9
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♣	Pass	2 ◇	Pass
2 ♡	Pass	3 ♣	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—For your auction to this point, you have a slightly better hand than you have announced, but that does not mean that you should now commit the hand to slam. However, you should advise partner of that possibility. The simplest way to do so is to tell partner of your diamond value—cue-bid four diamonds.

Q.6—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠KJ763 ♡J8 ◇KJ954 ♣5
The bidding has proceeded:

West	North	East	South
1 ♡	2 ♣	Pass	?

What action do you take?
A.—It is true that, in all probability, you have a better spot in either diamonds or spades, but there is no safe way to explore the possibilities. When it looks as if your side has a potential misfit, get out of the auction as quickly as possible—pass.

Haig, Weinberger still debating over Soviet gas pipeline

By JIM KLURFELD
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Of all the national-security issues that divide President Reagan's advisers, none so clearly illustrates the basic difference in approach as the debate over whether to try to block the natural-gas pipeline from the Soviet Union to Western Europe.

For months Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. and Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger and their lieutenants nave battled to a stalemate. Haig is not in favor of the pipeline, but he argues that trying to stop it now, after contracts have already been signed, would terribly damage the Atlantic alliance. Weinberger argues that the consequences of building the pipeline are so negative, involving such a great European dependence on the Soviets, that it must be stopped no matter what the immediate diplomatic fallout.

The stalemate continued during the weekend after a Friday afternoon National Security Council meeting with the president failed to resolve the matter.

At the heart of what has become a bitter and tense dispute is the basic approach the United States should be taking toward its allies and toward the Soviet Union. It has to do with whether detente — the economic and cultural relationships developed with the Soviets over the last decade — should be entirely abandoned.

Each side feels very strongly about its position. One high-level State Department official said Friday night, "The basis for the whole alliance is at stake here; that is what this all comes down to."

Weinberger and the conservatives who support his position want to cut off all trade with the Soviets,—to pursue what a recent congressional report says would amount to "a policy of economic warfare against the Soviets." To them the policy of detente has worked solely to the Soviets' advantage.

In a highly unusual excursion into foreign policy, Weinberger argued in his annual report to the Congress that Western trade has allowed the Soviets to divert more of its resources to its military buildup. "I must remind you that whatever strengthens the Soviet Union now, weakens the cause of freedom in the world," Weinberger said. He believes strongly, aides said, that the pipeline will strengthen the Soviet economy. And he believes that during what he considers a Soviet-led crackdown in Poland, it would be wrong to allow a project so important to the Soviets to proceed.

Haig is not so quick to abandon all the economic ties that have been built up with the Soviets. His is a more pragmatic approach. He is aware, aides say, that the Europeans still consider detente a viable and important policy with concrete benefits to their economies. And he is also aware that the Europeans, especially the West Germans and the French, feel that any U.S. attempt to stop the pipeline is a blatant intervention in their own affairs. Haig argues that it would be a mistake of tragic proportions to split the alliance now, when world attention should be focused on fissures in the Soviet empire.

The pipeline itself is not just of symbolic importance. The congressional report, issued by the Office of Technology Assessment, says, "Gas is the key to the Soviet energy future in this decade." The Soviets need Western technology to build pipelines to transport their gas to both domestic and foreign markets. And they need Western European markets for the gas to earn the foreign currency to buy non-energy products for their population — including American grain. It could be the key to their economic growth in the next two decades, according to the congressional report.

The Europeans also consider the pipeline extremely important. It is a way for these nations, which are largely energy-dependent, to diversify their supplies. The Europeans argue that it is in their interest, and that of America, for them to be less dependent on Persian Gulf oil. And they say that the Soviets are far more stable suppliers than the volatile Persian Gulf countries.

But the conservatives in the Reagan administration say that once the pipeline is completed, nations such as West Germany, France and Italy will be dependent for up to 30 or 40 percent of their natural gas on the Soviet Union. The Europeans counter, saying that Soviet gas will represent less than 10 percent of their total energy needs. But the Americans say that the figure will be higher.

Conservative politicans in the United States say that such dependency on the Soviets is certain to influence policies of the European nations. Recently Sen. Jake Garn, R-Utah, and Reps. John LeBoutillier, R-N.Y., and James Nelligan, R-Pa., sent a letter to President Reagan saying it would be " a clear and present danger" to Western security to go ahead with the pipeline project. The legislators said the pipeline would give the Soviets tremendous economic and political leverage over NATO, "leading to the potential 'Finlandization' of Western Europe."

The specific issue now before the president is whether to block subsidiaries of American companies, operating overseas, from selling pipeline equipment to the Soviets. After the Polish crackdown the administration barred American-made equipment from being sold. The majority of pipeline equipment, however, is not made in the United States. To effectively stop or even slow the project, there will have to be European cooperation, at the very least from the subsidiary companies.

No matter what the Americans do, the Europeans say the pipeline will be built.

Weinberger says that everything must be done to prevent that.

Haig says it is not worth the effort.

The president will make the decision.

RRC sets Texas production rate for March at 100 percent

AUSTIN — The Railroad Commission has set the Texas oil production rate for March 1982 at the market demand factor of 100 percent for the 61st month in a row and the 117th time since the Commission first went to the ceiling level in April 1972.

Chairman Jim Nugent and Commissioner Mack Wallace directed the continuance of the maximum statewide allowable after receiving and reviewing purchaser nominations for Texas oil in March totaling 2,449,402 barrels per day, and increase of 3,082 barrels daily when compared with February 1982 buyer requests. March 1981 nominations totaled 2,581,546 barrels daily.

Next Month's permissible rate of output is calculated to average 2,948,882 barrels per day with actual production estimated at 2.42 million barrels per day. The maximum allowable applies to all but 10 fields in Texas that are assigned lower legal rates of flow for conservation purposes. Actual production in March 1981 was 2,496,798 daily.

Nugent reported that March 1982 nominations for the purchase of Texas gas totaled 24,369,916 thousand cubic feet per day. Gas nominations for February amounted to 25,205 thousand cubic feet per day. March 1981 gas nominations totaled 24,279,163 thousand cubic feet per day.

The next statewide oil and gas hearing will be held Thursday, March 18, at 9 a.m. in Dallas at the Doubletree Inn.

Major purchasers filed these floor nominations for Texas oil in March:

Amoco Production, 208,000 barrels daily, down 2,000 from the previous month; Cities Service, 74,000, unchanged; Conoco, 56,000, unchanged; Exxon, 295,100, down 700; Gulf, 108,000, down 1,000; Marathon, 67,570, up 110; Mobil, 195,700, down 100; Phillips Petrolum, 73,500, up 1,500; Shell Oil, 170,500, unchanged; Sun Oil, 82,700, unchanged; Texaco, 95,000, down 1,000; Union Oil, 27,350, unchanged.

Significant changes in March nominations were submitted in writing by these purchasers of Texas crude oil:

Charter Crude Oil, 15,705; Clayco, 28,810, up 5,215; Diamond Shamrock, 10,150, up 1,403; Pride Pipeline, 18,828, up 1,148; Santa Fe Energy, 8,400, up 2,373; Western Crude Oil, 34,092, down 1,623.

Commissioner Nugent reported that crude oil and petroleum products imported into the U. S. averaged 5,118,000 barrels daily for the four weeks ending Feb. 5, down 1.9 million barrels per day from the same period a year earlier.

••••

Texas oil and gas wells produced 569,505,628 thousand cubic feet of gas in October 1981, down .34 percent from field runs a year earlier.

Marketed gas production totaled 478,917,542 thousand cubic feet and reflected a 1.6 percent decrease from the October 1980 volume. Marketed production is the totl gas to transmission lines, carbon black and plant fuel and lease use.

Gas exported from Texas in October totaled 275,918,123 thousand cubic feet. Natural Gas Pipeline Company of America was the month's largest exporter, moving 68,196,406 thousand cubic feet of gas of which 30,725,823 thousand cubic feet was Texas-produced gas.

Exports of Texas-produced gas in October totaled 199,100,811 thousand cubic feet, and reflected a 4.39 percent increase from the year earlier month.

Texas gas production in October came from 220,202 oil and gas wells.

In September 1981, Texas wells produced 537,717,923 thousand cubic feet of gas. Marketed gas production in September totaled 442,448,632 thousand cubic feet. September exports of Texas-produced gas totaled 238,135,537 thousand cubic feet.

State leases in bays, inlets and the Gulf of Mexico produced 89,616 barrels of crude oil during December 1981, in contrast to 51,019 barrels in the same month of 1980 and 79,852 barrels in November 1981, according to Railroad Commission Chairman Jim Nugent.

Gas well gas production from state leases amounted to 17,181,836 thousand cubic feet in December against 21,662,272 thousand cubic feet a year earlier and 16,610,767 thousand cubic feet in November.

Casinghead gas production totaled 233,916 thousand cubic feet in December against 190,145 thousand cubic feet in the same month of 1980 and 233,323 thousand cubic feet in November.

Environmental groups counter Reagan's budget cuts

By PHILIP J. HILTS
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Eleven environmental groups have banded together to counter the "destruction of environmental programs" they see in President Reagan's budget with a detailed budget proposal of their own.

"The president is using his budget to gut the environmental programs," said Larry Williams, lobbyist for the Sierra Club. "We feel that, given the searching that Congress is doing for alternate proposals, we need very much to put a better balance back into the environmental budget ... keeping the administration from cutting EPA (the Environmental Protection Agency) in half, for example."

In the alternative budget released over the weekend, the groups claimed their spending plan would reduce the proposed $91 billion federal deficit by about $8.5 billion.

The plan would add $1.7 billion to 1983 budget authority for programs in energy, environment and transportation, and would use new taxes and fees on business to raise about $9.1 billion in extra revenues.

Budget specialists for congressional committees said that several of the proposals have a good chance of success, whether or not they are contained in an environamental package.

"There is a lot of feeling for putting back some money into EPA," said a senior staff member on the Republican side of a congressional committee. He said the proposals could also be a rallying point for environmentally minded congressmen.

"This budget is a philosophical alternative. ... It gives members who are sympathetic a tool to work with," said Ken Murphy, staff director of the Environmental Study Conference.

The alternative budget would cut $290 million from nuclear programs and increase spending on energy conservation programs, such as tax breaks for insulating homes, by $650 million. Solar energy programs would go up by $200 million.

In the natural resources category, the environmental groups would cut spending in such areas as dam building by $600 million, and increase the EPA's pollution-control programs by $1.7 billion.

The alternative budget would cut $1.8 billion from highway construction and put $1.5 billion into mass transit programs and $190 million into railroad support.

According to the Sierra Club's Williams, the two most important items in the proposal are the restoration of EPA's funds and the boost for energy conservation.

To balance the greater spending, the alternative budget proposes to gain $3.5 billion by eliminating the tax break that allows oil companies to write off labor, supply and testing costs incurred in exploring for oil.

Another $2 billion would be retrieved by collecting a 17 percent royalty from those who mine copper, gold, and other hard-rock minerals from federal land.

The groups sponsoring the budget package are the Environmental Policy Center, Friends of the Earth, the Izaak Walton League, the National Audubon Society, the National Parks and Conservation Association, the National Wildlife Federation, the Natural Resources Defense Council, the Preservation Action group, the Sierra Club, the Solar Lobby and the Wilderness Society.

Study reveals television failed to give all the facts

ASHINGTON (AP) — Television coverage of the oil shocks of the 1970s gave scant attention to the law of supply and demand and depended too heavily on government sources of information, a media watchdog group says.

In a new study, the Media Institute said the three major networks failed to give the public sufficient information to make informed judgments about the oil shortages of 1973-74 and 1978-79.

"We must conclude that television taught us very little about the causes and solutions to the crises — in fact, it may have contributed to the public's confusion," said Leonard J. Theberge, president of the institute, which monitors media coverage of business and economic issues.

Among the institute's 300 sponsors are Mobil Oil Corp., Exxon Corp., ABC-TV and Allstate Insurance Co.

The study analyzed 1,462 stories on the two oil crises broadcast on NBC, CBS and ABC.

It found that non-market solutions, such as rationing, price controls and government-imposed conservation, received three times the coverage that free market solutions did.

Only 15 percent of solution stories dealt with the major policy question of whether government price controls on oil should be removed — the position eventually adopted by the Carter and Reagan administrations.

"With near single-mindedness, television covered a narrow set of solutions that featured the government and ignored the price mechanism," the study said. "It is ironic that many economists and other experts contend the government solved the oil crises only by withdrawing from, and deferring to, the market."

The study said one of the reasons government played such a leading role in the solutions discussed was that the networks depended heavily on government officials as their sources of information.

The government was the source of information for 56 percent of the stories, the study said, followed by the oil industry at 17 percent. One-fourth of the petroleum sources were service station operators.

According to the study, the stories listed government actions as possible causes of the crises 18 percent of the time, while implying 25 percent of the time that the oil industry was perpetrating a hoax, profiteering, withholding supplies or other devious actions.

Gas prices down nine cents since March 1981

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The drop in gasoline prices in the past 12 months is chiefly attributable to the fierce competition in marketing, according to the Lundberg Letter.

The weekly oil industry newsletter, written by analyst Dan Lundberg, said Saturday that gas prices have declined steadily since March, 1981, when they were at a record high. The slide has come despite efforts by the oil companies to increase consumption, it said.

Marketing techniques and oil company rebates to dealers who sell more gasoline have not generally increased motorist consumption, the report added.

Retail prices fell about 8.46 cents per gallon over the past 12 months, Lundberg said.

Gas prices were cut 3 cents to 6 cents in some Western states by one major wholesaler during the past six weeks, while another announced price cuts of up to 8 cents per gallon after today, the newsletter said.

Overturned engine ruptures, leaks 2,000 gallons diesel fuel

MORGANTOWN, Md. (AP) — About 2,000 gallons of fuel were spilled into a stream here early today when a diesel railroad engine overturned and ruptured its tanks, officials said.

Maryland Natural Resources Police said the accident occurred at about 1:30 a.m. on the property of an energy plant belonging to the Potomac Electric Power Co. in southwestern Maryland.

The fuel spilled into a Charles County stream that leads to a nearby marsh, said police communications officer John Harbold.

The extent of the environmental damage was not immediately known but there were no reports of injuries, Harbold said.

He said the state Water Resources Administration and other environmental agencies had been called in to clean up the spill.

Averting 'new Cubas'

A Marshall Plan it is not, but President Reagan's Caribbean Basin Initiative has the same desirable objective of the $13 billion postwar European Recovery Program: Stop the spread of communism in an area crucial to U.S. interests.

In a long-awaited speech on Central America, Mr. Reagan announced a package of aid, trade and investment assistance to impoverished countries vulnerable to the development of "new Cubas," as the president called them. It is an ambitious plan, but the obstacles to its success are many.

The two dozen countries of the Caribbean and adjacent Central America mainland are marked by poverty, overpopulation, limited resources, a feudal attitude among the rich toward the poor, and some regimes ignorant of social justice.

All of this region is fertile soil for Castro-type guerrilla movements, which are growing in El Salvador, Guatemala and Honduras, and encouraged and supported by Marxists now governing Nicaragua.

To help these countries prosper, Mr. Reagan would let them send their goods to the U.S. market duty free and would give tax breaks to Americans investing there. Also, with Congress' approval, he would send a quick $350 million in economic support to the area, with $105 million going to war-stricken El Salvador and $100 million to credit-short, democratic Costa Rica.

The aim is to alleviate poverty, promote private enterprise in contrast to state government planning and thwart Castroite takeovers. But this is hard to do in the midst of warfare by guerrillas dedicated to achieving power. Further, there may be establishment resistance if the program recalls fears of the past when host countries sometimes regarded U.S. business people as exploiters.

Nevertheless, the president's Caribbean program is constructive because it shows Americans and foreigners alike that the Reagan administration's foreign policy isn't all arms sales and missile deployments. We want to help these nations help themselves.

At the same time, Mr. Reagan cautioned Cuba against trying to destabilize its neighbors: "Let our friends and our adversaries understand that we will do whatever is prudent and necessary to ensure the peace and security of the Caribbean area."

It will be interesting to see what effect, if any, those words of advice and Mr. Reagan's economic initiative have on Fidel Castro.

Ireland's shaky election

Ireland's second general election in eight months appears to have been an exercise in futility. There was no decisive party winner and formation of the next government will depend on the support of fickle independents who are now negotiating for offices and policy pledges.

Though Charles Haughey's Fianna Fail Party has claimed victory and Haughey is expected to be elected prime minister on March 9, the chances of a deadlocked parliament early in the game are very high.

Ireland shares the common problems of Common Market countries — high inflation, high unemployment and growing government deficits that threaten future credit. The present government, headed by Prime Minister Garret FitzGerald, fell in January when it was defeated in a crucial vote on a belt-tightening budget calling for new taxes and an end to dairy subsidies.

Ireland's economy is basically sound, resting as it does on agriculture and high-tech industries, rather than the heavy manufacturing which bears the brunt of the current European recession. But experts have warned repeatedly in the past two years that unless Ireland gets its economic house in order it will have the same mess now plaguing Britain.

One aspect of the election was encouraging. The Republic of Ireland permits citizens of Northern Ireland to vote and run for office in the republic. Under that provision, seven militant supporters of the Provisional Irish Republican Army, the terrorist organization in Northern Ireland, ran as candidates in republican constituencies. All were badly beaten.

That morsel of good news, however, doesn't count for much given the present outlook of another stalemated parliament and an economic emergency threatening to slip from manageable to chaotic.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

CIA snoopers studying health of leaders

WASHINGTON — Medical snooping has long been an accepted form of espionage — possibly dating back to the disclosure that Napoleon was suffering from an intestinal disorder at Waterloo.

Jack Anderson

Accordingly, the Central Intelligence Agency has developed an abiding curiosity about the ailments of foreign leaders — with seeming emphasis on their heart conditions, kidney functions and bowel movements.

The spy agency has its own medical analysts, as well as consulting specialists under contract, who scrutinize every tidbit of medical information that might help diagnose a foreign leader's physical well-being or deterioration.

No possibility is overlooked. The CIA went to elaborate lengths, for example, to obtain samples of the late Nikita Khrushchev's excrement when he visited the United States in 1959. A similar exercise was directed at Egyptian King Farouk during his last, dissolute years of exile in Monte Carlo.

The trouble with long-range prognosis is that a head of state is not likely to submit to a physical exam by the CIA and is more than likely to take every precaution to cover up signs of debilitation.

But the CIA has its methods; it can even examine the back of a man's head halfway around the world. Take the case of Kim Il-sung, the North Korean dictator, who will be 70 in April. For years, the CIA had received reports from its various sources that Kim had a "large, cancerous growth on the back of his neck." At one point, the raw data even had the Korean leader "terminally ill because of his cancer."

The mystery of Kim Il-sung's neck is detailed in a "Top Secret Ruff Umbra" CIA report shown to my associate Dale Van Atta.

For a long time, Kim seemed determined to keep the CIA from diagnosing the growth, which was characterized as "a tremendous tumor" and "the size of a small fist." It was first spotted in 1969, but Kim let his hair grow long enough to cover it pretty well, and evidently took pains to avoid being photographed from the rear.

But then Kim threw the CIA a curveball: He commented on the tumor himself, and said it "may be a type of cancer."

The CIA analysts weren't fooled, though. They dismissed Kim's offhand diagnosis as a "medically disingenuous comment," and proceeded to reach their own conclusions from the few photos and films available to them.

"These pictures and descriptions have been reviewed by a number of medical analysts, including consulting specialists in dermatology and pathology," the CIA reported. "The unanimous opinion is that the growth is benign and is almost certainly a harmless fat tumor, a lipoma. The chances that it will become cancerous are extremely small, and surgical excision usually is indicated only for cosmetic reasons ... The possibility remains that Kim will elect at some time to have the growth removed; this will not be significant evidence that it has become malignant."

CIA medical experts say Kim's long-range prognosis, however, isn't good and point out he has a history of cardiovascular and kidney problems that could recur anytime.

COLD SHOULDER: Hypothermia — a rapid lowering of the body's heat that can be fatal if not caught in time — is an especially pernicious problem for the nation's elderly trying to save money by keeping the thermostat low. Like the blizzard-caught hiker who just wants to lie down and sleep, elderly victims of hypothermia don't realize the danger they're in. The condition sneaks up on them.

To remedy this, the Energy Department, ACTION and the Administration on Aging agreed on a joint educational campaign to alert the nation's old folks to the threat of hypothermia. The three agencies agreed to split the modest $15,000 cost.

But the Energy Department reneged on the deal, refusing to put up its $5,000. As a result, the program was delayed for three bitter-cold weeks.

The bureaucrat who decided the life-saving advice wasn't worth $5,000 was Assistant Energy Secretary Robert Odle Jr. You may recall I reported on a junket he made recently to Berlin and Vienna to address a conference of Jaycees. That trip cost the Energy Department $1,662.

WATCH ON WASTE: The Western Hemispheric Radio Conference, a seven-week meeting in Rio de Janeiro, was held late last year to resolve technical problems of radio interference. The United States sent an 18-member delegation representing the Federal Communications Commission, the State and Defense Departments and private industry. But Rep. Charles Rose, D-N.C., felt that his presence was necessary as well — for awhile at least. So he and an aide, Joan Teague, flew down for a week in Rio-by-the-Sea-O. The junket to sunny Brazil cost the taxpayers $5,680.

— The administration's war on welfare chiselers could save the government anywhere from $867 million to $1 billion in overpayments if there were a uniform system of verifying the income and assets of claimants. But many of the government's welfare programs do not use wage data collected by state agencies, and they're not permitted to use information gathered by the Internal Revenue Service, because of privacy restrictions. Every dollar that goes to an ineligible recipient, of course, is a dollar less that's available for someone who is entitled to it.

CHARLEY REESE

Government hypocrisy gets 'tiring'

This is my week to be cranky so while I'm in the mood, let me tell you why I am considering breaking the social contract with my own government.

Charley Reese

I could sum up all my gripes by saying I'm tired of inconsistencies, contradictions, and hypocrisy.

I'm tired of complicated income tax forms. I don't mind paying a fair share of the cost of government but the present system is neither fair nor simple. The responsibility for that lies with the Congress.

I'm tired of a government that cannot or will not spell out what it thinks our national objectives ought to be. What are the real goals of our foreign policy? Don't say peace because that's vague, meaningless hokum. Poland has peace.

I'm tired of a government which out of one side of its mouth says the Soviet Union may incinerate us if we don't spend billions on defense and at the same time encourages trade, extends credit and transfers technology to the Soviet Union. Ronnie baby had better make up his mind whether the Soviet Union is an enemy or a customer.

I'm tired of a government which says it is going to make combatting terrorism the cornerstone of its foreign policy and cannot bring itself to brand the Palestine Liberation Organization, the king of terrorists groups, a terrorist organization. The PLO operates information offices and conducts fund-raising and propaganda in the United States. Furthermore, its chief supplier is Saudi Arabia and the Reagan Administration hasn't said beans to the Saudis about their support of terrorism.

I'm tired of a government which shoots off its mouth about communism in the Western Hemisphere while it does nothing concrete to eliminate it.

I'm tired of a government which tolerates a Pentagon and private corporations that together take years and years to produce weapons which are over-priced and unreliable.

I'm tired of a government which pretends to be concerned about inflation while refusing to face up to the fact that the money supply and control of credit are in private hands (the Feds) over which the people of the United States have no control. I'm tired of a government which lacks the courage to abolish the Federal Reserve.

I am tired of a government which pretends to be interested in the social and political welfare of the people of El Salvador. To hell with the people of El Salvador. What kind of government they have is none of our business. Our only concern is that El Salvador not become a satellite of the Soviet Union. Except as an instrument of the Soviet Union, El Salvador is no threat to us even if it had a Communist government. But if the Soviet Union is really the problem then why do we continue to trade with it, prop up its economy, and tolerate its presence in Cuba?

I am tired of a government which continues to support a United Nations designed and controlled by the enemies of the United States.

I am tired of a government which puts greed and commerce ahead of honor and national interests in its dealings with Taiwan and Israel (and the rest of the world, for that matter).

In short, if the government is not serious about protecting the national interests of this country, if it is not serious about thwarting the Soviet Union's expansionism, then I'm opting out. My loyalty is to the Constitution, not to a bunch of politicians and bureaucrats who are dishonest, dishonorable and inept.

INSIDE REPORT:

Tax-cut tactics are revealing 'same old Republicans'

WASHINGTON — Capitol Hill budget panic is reviving the Republican Party's itch for self-destruction in a drive to attack the deficit by stealing tax cuts from individuals while preserving them for big business.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

Delaying or even repealing Reagan's 10 percent third-year individual tax cut is favored by prominent Republican senators with the urgent prompting of forceful business lobbyists and covert support within the White House staff. Once again, the president must defend the heart of his economic policy against his own political allies, while Democrats stay quietly, sardonically mirthful.

Mirth stems from the fact that, not withstanding Reagan's right-wing populistic drive for the blue-collar vote, these are the same old Republicans who have been losing congressional elections for a half century. While prospects are poor that the Reagan tax cuts will be repealed or delayed, the big-business Republican image is fortified.

Republican reversion to form is the natural product of fixation on budget deficits. Cuts in either defense or domestic spending can only slightly dent the deficit; tax "loophole closers" are even less productive. The only way to drop the deficit dramatically is to increase income tax rates (though, as Franklin D. Roosevelt proved over 13 years, that does not balance the budget).

This explains Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker's call for a surtax on individual incomes, which startled administration officials who thought themselves inured to Senate Republican gaucherie. Knowing that Lyndon B. Johnson's 1968 surtax was the most hated tax provision of a generation, business lobbyists are plotting a more tactful approach.

Their formula: the least painful new taxes on the fewest possible corporations, while hitting hard at ordinary Americans. Thus, one of Washington's most productive Republican lobbyists, Dr. Charls E. Walker, testified before Congress for a severance tax on deregulated natural gas; an oil import fee, and ("if additional revenues are needed to narrow future deficits") as much as a one-year delay in the third-year tax cut (yield: $37 billion).

"Outrageous!" snapped one Treasury assistant secretary. The Treasury said as much to Walker, a member of Reagan's economic policy advisory board, and threatened to cease support of tax-leasing provisions that Walker favors. Nor was the Treasury assuaged by Walker's argument that news accounts did not make clear the conditional nature of his third-year tax delay.

Other business lobbyists also were upset, not because they disagree with Walker but because they want a clandestine approach. "Charly should not have gone public," a fellow super-lobbyist told us. His prescription would attack tax-leasing and single out the insurance industry for higher taxes, while delaying — or better still, repealing — the third-year tax cut.

Such a formula draws wide support from congressional Republicans. That is why the Treasury fears what Sen. Pete Domenici, chairman of the Senate Budget Committee, has in mind in calling for $122 billion in unspecified revenue increases over three years. Indeed, one staff paper studied by Domenici specifically dumps the third-year tax cut.

Assaulting Reagan's 1981 relief for the individual taxpayer even has adherents next door to the Oval Office. The Feb. 18 Baltimore Sun quotes a "senior White House official" as saying, "The administration would consider doing away with indexing the tax system for inflation." That came one month after the president's State of the Union address cited tax indexing as one of his great accomplishments.

The White House aide's rationale for repealing tax indexing is that it was not in Reagan's original tax plan. But it was promised in Reagan's 1980 campaign and is integral to supply-side economics. If Reagan's own senior aides do not appreciate individual tax incentives, traditional Republicans in Congress cannot be expected to do better.

Meanwhile, most Democrats are lying low, ready either to add corporate increases to a new tax package or, more likely, to attack the whole package as Republican incompetency. Savvy Democrats who last fall proposed repeal of the third-year tax cut now say they cannot even vote for it in the midst of a recession.

Prudent Rep. Barber Conable, senior Republican on the House Ways and Means Committee, is urging colleagues to keep cool and ask themselves whether Reagan's deficits are not the least unattractive of the chaotic, incohate mix of alternatives. But congressional Republican leaders so far have ignored Conable's counsel, spurred by lobbyist friends and even a clandestine ally or two inside the administration. They seem determined to embellish the Republican recession with a Republican tax increase.

Bill Irwin assisting. Burial was to follow at Evergreen Cemetery under the direction of Gilbreath Funeral Home in Stanton.

He died Sunday in a Stanton hospital as a result of an automobile/pedestrian accident.

Stewart was born Oct. 26, 1897, in Scranton. He moved to Martin County in 1914. He was a veteran of World War II. He was a member of the American Legion and the First Baptist Church of Stanton.

Survivors include two brothers, T.B. Stewart Jr. and Ted Stewart, both of Stanton.

Thomas Kornegay

Thomas H. "Tom" Kornegay, 74, 1605 N. Midkiff Road, died Saturday in a Midland hospital after suffering a heart attack.

Services will be at 2 p.m. Tuesday in the sanctuary of the First United Methodist Church with Dr. Charles Lutrick officiating. Burial will follow at Resthaven Memorial Park under the direction of Newnie W. Ellis Funeral Home.

Kornegay was born July 28, 1907, in Miles. He grew up in Runnels County and graduated with a degree in pharmacy from Danforth College of Pharmacy in Fort Worth. He entered the service in World War II, serving in the U.S. Army in France and Germany. Upon discharge in 1949, he moved to Midland where he began his career as a pharmacist. He was associated with a number of pharmacies over the years. He married Sarah V. Stanley of Midland June 28, 1952. At one time, he operated his own business in Midland and Big Spring.

He was a member of the First United Methodist Church, the Texas Pharmaceutical Association, Midland VFW Club and the Antique Car Club of Midland.

Survivors include his wife, Sarah Korengay of Midland; two brothers, Bryan B. Kornegay of Selma, Calif., and Chester Kornegay of San Angelo; two sisters, Virginia Farmer of San Angelo and Ruth Anderson of Eola; and four grandchildren.

The family requests that memorials be directed to the Meditation Garden of the First United Methodist Church of Midland and/or the Midland Heart Association.

Palestinian shot in Spain

MADRID (AP) — A gunman today shot and killed a Palestinian man as he left his Madrid apartment, police said.

Police identified the victim as 36-year-old Nevil Aranki Wadi, and said he was a member of a Palestinian liberation movement.

Wadi died shortly after arrival at a Madrid hospital, doctors said.

Police said he had been shot twice in the neck by a man who appeared to be of Arab origin.

John Przybylski

Services for John H. Przybylski, 28, of 4407 Roosevelt Ave., will be at 10 a.m. Wednesday at the First Christian Church with the Rev. Steve Edwards officiating. Burial will follow at Resthaven Memorial Park under the direction of Newnie W. Ellis Funeral Home.

Przybylski died Sunday at an Odessa hospital.

Survivors include a son, John Clinton Przybylski of Midland; his father, Anthony Przybylski of Midland; and a brother, Fred Przybylski of Fort Worth.

Catarino D. Ortiz

CRANE — Rosary will be recited tonight for Catarino Dominquez Ortiz, 24, of Crane at the Richard W. Box Funeral Home chapel in Crane. Mass will be said at 2 p.m. Thursday at the Good Shepherd Catholic Church with the Rev. Joseph Cain officiating. Burial will follow in Crane County Cemetery.

He died Sunday in an Odessa hospital following an automobile accident.

Ortiz was born April 29, 1957, in Mexico. He married Lorina Heredia March 18, 1977, in Odessa. He was employed by T&K Oil Field Services in Crane. He was a member of the Catholic Church.

Disfigured girl completes last of 15 operations

WICHITA FALLS, Texas (AP) — Kathryn Keith is a petite, brown-haired high school senior with big, sparkling blue eyes and a peaches-and-cream complexion.

Some of her happiest times are spent with 35 other young girls dancing to the snappy routines of the Rider High School Wranglers Drill Team.

But the greatest moment of her life came in December 1981, when she completed a series of plastic surgeries.

Kathryn Keith, you see, has overcome a birth defect that at one time disfigured her face and on occasion saddened her courageous heart.

The last of 15 operations that started when she was only 4 months old to correct the defect known as a unilateral cleft lip and palate was completed in Dallas Dec. 2.

Now, with an undetectable rebuilding of her midface and other repair having been done on her mouth and throat, she looks forward to high school graduation in June. She also looks forward to marriage and having a family some day.

But as she pondered observance of her 19th birthday last month, Kathryn said she wants to give "a good part of my life" to helping others. These, she said, are the people who must go through the same reconstructive plastic surgery she did as a result of birth defects, or for whatever reason.

KATHRYN plans to become a certified medical assistant so that she may work in a plastic surgeon's office. She will enroll this July in the Texas College of Medical and Dental Assistants at Dallas.

Kathryn's story — and that of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. George R. Keith of Wichita Falls — is a story of "sheer courage," said Elouise Daily, executive director of the Wichita Falls Area March of Dimes.

There are an estimated 250,000 babies who are born with birth defects each year in the United States. The type of birth defect Kathryn had is common in one out of every 750 births, Mrs. Daily said.

As a tribute to Kathryn, she has been named "Sweetheart of the March of Dimes" for a campaign in a nine-county area of North Texas. But the honor is also a tribute to her parents, who from the beginning to set out to rear their daughter in a normal environment, Mrs. Daily said.

They sent her to public schools, took her with them wherever they went, and gave her the understanding she needed when other children would sometimes taunt her.

Kathryn's mother acknowledges that Kathryn's birth defect at first frightened them "because we didn't know where to go to get help."

"But," she said, "we were very fortunate. George and I were both raised here and when Kathryn was born in Bethania Hospital, 12 doctors — all friends of ours — came in to see me, just to talk to me, tell me what they thought the best thing for her would be, where the best doctors were, and we eventually ended up taking Kathryn to John Sealy Hospital in Galveston."

AP Laserphoto

Kathryn Keith plays with her dog outside her parents home in Witchita Falls. Kathryn has undergone 15 operations to correct a birth defect which disfigured her face.

"THEY TOLD us when we first went down to John Sealy: 'This child has a birth defect. It will take a long time to get the defect corrected, but a child with a birth defect compensates in other ways and you will find this child to be the most beautiful, loving, giving person you will meet.'"

She said she has found this to be true "without a question." Children with birth defects, she explained, "are always beautiful people if they are given a chance and treated as normal human beings.

"The thing we would like to get through to people," said Mrs. Keith, "is that birth defects are nothing to be ashamed of."

When Kathryn had her first plastic surgery at 4 months old, she "lacked one-half ounce weighing 10 pounds," her mother said.

The first operation was to form the upper lip and the second to close the gum, Mrs. Keith said, and then surgeons began a series of surgeries grafting across the roof of the mouth to close the palate.

"They took a rib and grafted it into the palate to make the roof of her mouth solid when she was 14 months old," Mrs. Keith said.

Skin was grafted from the larynx to make the uvula. This is the small conical fleshy mass of tissue suspended from the center of the soft palate above the back of the tongue, which, Mrs. Keith explained, "helps your speech."

For 12 years, the Keiths used the facilities at John Sealy Hospital and subsequently sought the help of other specialists in Fort Worth and Dallas.

Rib grafts were used for facial reconstruction.

"LAST SUMMER at Baylor Hospital they went in and took two ribs and broke her upper jaw, and they moved her midface forward 7 millimeters and down 4 millimeters because the midface had not grown forward with the rest of the face. They took these ribs and extended the jawbone," and the rib graft also was used to give curve and form to the cheek bones, Mrs. Keith said.

On Dec. 2, they rebuilt Kathryn's nose.

Kissinger says Nixon 'deeply insecure'

NEW YORK (AP) — Henry Kissinger says former President Richard Nixon isolated himself in the White House because he was a "painfully shy" man afraid of meeting strangers.

In the second volume of his memoirs, which are being excerpted for a second week in Time magazine, Kissinger describes the man who appointed him national security adviser and secretary of state as "fearful of rejection" and "deeply insecure."

"...No modern president could have been less equipped for political life" than Nixon, he wrote. But Kissinger also said no one working for Nixon "really knew the inner man."

Kissinger also discusses Watergate, saying there was "no excuse for the extralegal methods" used by Nixon and his associates during the coverup of the scandal.

He criticizes Nixon himself, saying that "a president cannot justify his own misdeeds by the excesses of his opponents." The former secretary says Nixon operated in a kind of vicious circle, noting that "the animosities of the president and his opposition fed on each other."

Indictments near in Wood murder case

NEW YORK (AP) — The Justice Department is about to seek indictments aagainst several suspects in the shooting death of a federal judge in Texas, according to The New York Times.

The newspaper quoted anonymous officials on Sunday as saying that within 30 days, prosecutors plan to ask a federal grand jury in San Antonio, Texas, to return indictments against Jamiel A. Chagra, a 36-year-old professional gambler and narcotics smuggler, and Charles Voyde Harrelson, 43, who previously was convicted of committing murder for money.

Federal agents say the two have been considered key suspects in the killing of Judge John H. Wood since last year. Wood, the first federal judge slain in more than a century, was shot to death May 29, 1979, as he left his San Antonio home.

Wood was scheduled to preside at the trial of Chagra, an El Paso drug smuggler who has been described as a Southwest drug kingpin.

At the time of Wood's death, Chagra was charged with smuggling millions of dollars worth of marijuana and cocaine into the United States from Colombia. He subsequently was convicted of those charges and is serving a 30-year jail term.

Harrelson was convicted in 1968 of killing a Texas grain dealer for $2,000. Harrelson was sentenced to 40 years in prison last December for possession of cocaine.

HINTS FROM HELOISE

Which comes first...?

DEAR HELOISE:

Could you please settle an argument? Does one dust and then vacuum or visa-versa? I would love to have your answer. — A.M.M.

+++

Well... that depends on your floors...

If they are carpeted, it doesn't make a great deal of difference which you do first, especially if you use a dust magnet spray on your cloth.

Some folks, though, like to dust first so the vacuum cleaner can pick up any lint, crumbs, or whatever, that might inadvertently fall onto the floor when dusting.

However, if your floors are hardwood, vinyl covered, etc., and you dust-mop or sweep them, it's preferable to dust last.

The reason for this is that when you're pushing a broom or mop over the floor, dust, which seems to cover every square inch of your house from top to bottom, flies around as if it had wings, so you usually are merely moving it from one place to another. Or some of it at least.

In this case, by dusting last you can pick up what has settled back onto your furniture. Hope this also settles the argument! — Hugs, Heloise

PICKLE JUICE USE

Dear Heloise: I use sweet pickle slices. When the pickles are eaten, I save the juice and keep adding different things to it such as hard-boiled eggs, canned beets, fresh cucumbers. I find this juice is also excellent added to potato salad and coleslaw.

No doubt you have received this hint from others for I have never been first in anything! — C.P. Hauch

+++

You're first on my list!... Thanks for that handy hint. — Hugs, Heloise

BOBBIN FILLING

Dear Heloise: When I purchase sewing thread, I buy two spools of the same color so that, when I run out of bobbin thread, I don't have to unthread my machine to refill it.

I just use the extra spool for this purpose. — Grace Brown

GRINDER CLEANING

Dear Heloise: To help clean the meat grinder after grinding meat, cheese, onion, etc., finish with a bread crust. — Louise Lamoree

PAINTING POINTER

Dear Heloise: When a friend of mine was going to do some painting this week, I found out that not everyone knows this hint:

For easy paint clean-up, line your roller pan with aluminum foil. The wider rolls of foil work best. No roller pan to clean after painting. — Kathy Jawby

+++

A neat idea! Cleaning up is the worst job of all and your hint will make it easier. — Heloise

COOKIE BAKING

Dear Heloise: This tip was told to me by a professional baker...

When baking cookies, don't fuss with greasing that cookie sheet. Line it with a sheet of waxed paper instead.

No grease is needed and I find the paper can be re-used a time or two with good results.

This is especially helpful when baking large amounts of cookies. — Joyce Brown

EASY REFERENCE

Dear Heloise: When I buy a new refrigerator, washer, TV, or other large appliance, I put the date, serial and model numbers on the back of it or wherever it doesn't show.

Handier than trying to find the manual that came with the appliance when this information is needed. — Mrs. Dolores Barkkume

Doctor uses helicopter to make calls to patients

ATLANTA (AP) - A big-city ophthalmologist is reviving the days of horse-and-buggy house calls. But instead of old-fashioned transportation, this eye doctor travels by helicopter.

Dr. Joseph Citron, 36, began his practice in Atlanta in the fall of 1975. Two years later he began making calls to the small town of West Point in east-central Georgia.

"When I was in medical school, a dcotor I respected — a pioneer in children's surgery — told me to do something original with medicine, something I could be comfortable with," said Citron.

Town calls, by land or air, he said, "are my constructive way of being unique."

His first patients included a textile worker, Georgia Smith, who after a 25-minute cataract operation soon returned to her job grading textiles.

"They wanted to have a full-time ophthalmologist," Citron said. "But then they figured that someone coming one day a week was better than none at all."

The demand for a part-time eye doctor grew, and for the past three years Citron has also been seeing patients every month in eight other communities within 100 miles of Atlanta - Macon, Warner Robins, Perry, Calhoun, Gainesville, West Point, Carrollton and Rome.

To drive patients between their towns and Atlanta for surgery, Citron hired a chauffeur familiar with the state.

At first, Citron himself traveled by car, but to reduce his travel time, Citron began flying by helicopter to serve his patients. He normally travels with a pilot, an optometrist, and his sister, Marla, a medical student who keeps his records.

He says he doesn't pass along his flight expenses to his patients, but instead gathers additional income from being able to see more patients.

"I don't think anything about it now," said Citron. "It's like driving a car. We don't run out of gas and I use a very reputable company. I showed everybody how smart I was by hiring a pilot."

DEAR ABBY

Encounter threatens marriage

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I am a middle-aged, married professional woman with a problem that is beginning to affect my sanity. Three years ago I foolishly started an affair with a man of a different race. He's attractive, intelligent and very talented, but he can't hold a job because he's an alcoholic.

When he's sober, he's a decent, gentle man who wouldn't harm a fly, but when he's drunk he is unpredictable! He gets mean and violent, and he's even threatened to kill me if I stop seeing him. I've paid his rent, bought him clothes, given him money and begged him to leve me alone, but I can't get rid of him.

I've been wanting to drop him for two years, but I'm terrified that he may expose me, or maybe kill me!

Lately when he gets drunk he's started calling me at home. Every time my phone rings, I tremble. I am a total wreck. I can't go on giving him money to keep him quiet. I have a fine husband and nearly grown children who would die if they knew about this.

Please help me. I am desperate. I trust you to...KEEP ME ANONYMOUS

DEAR KEEP: You must tell your husband that three years ago you foolishly became involved with another man (his race is irrelevant), and you are now being blackmailed. Then tell your former friend that if he ever comes near you, or phones you, drunk or sober, you will have the police pick him up and he will be charged with harrassment, blackmail and threat of bodily harm.

It is the only way to free yourself from this terrible nightmare.

DEAR ABBY: I don't care for dirty jokes, especially in mixed company, but I never know how to act when I hear one. (I'm a young married woman.)

Should I keep my face straight and pretend I don't understand? (That would seem rather foolish.) Or should I politely laugh along with everyone else?

I'm afraid if I make an issue of it and bluntly say I don't care for dirty jokes, people will think I'm a poor sport or a prude. — SUZIE

DEAR SUZIE: Don't allow what offends you to be said in your presence without challenging it. (Silence implies approval.) Respectable people will respect you, and you needn't worry about the others.

DEAR ABBY: Here are the facts: A friend of mine plans to marry a Korean woman with the understanding that they will not live together — it will just be a marriage of convenience. The Korean woman wants to come to this country and set up a business, and for the opportunity to do this, she is willing to pay my friend (an American citizen) $2,500 to marry her.

The woman has agreed to divorce my friend after she accomplishes her objective. What is your opinion of such a marriage? — WONDERING IN ARIZONA

DEAR WONDERING: Never mind my opinion, your friend should consult a lawyer. I am advised that the law frowns on such marriages.

Blind shoeshine man inspires teen helpers to be successful

By CHARLES NEALE
Associated Press Writer

EAST ST. LOUIS, Ill. (AP) — "Do right and live right and things will come your way," the blind shoeshine man tells his teenage helpers every weekend.

Kermit Haynes, 70, has been handing out that advice since he opened his shoeshine stand on the east side of town more than 35 years ago and became a friend to generations of teen-agers.

"They come in around high school and stay until they finish high or get a job," says Haynes. "The bunch of kids now is about the sixth generation."

Haynes, who has hundreds of customers, employs two reguar shoeshine boys who earn half the $1.50 price for every pair of shoes they shine. The other youths are "hustlers" who hang around hoping to swipe some of the overflow business.

Many of his former shoeshine boys have graduated to become politicians, elergymen and civic leaders. And most of them now return as customers.

Haynes, as a result, keeps up-to-date on the town's gossip, and he is often asked for advice on matters ranging from business to politics.

"We learned a lot from him," says Clyde Jordan, who has known Haynes since he first opened his shop. "He was like an older brother. He gave us inspiration."

Jordan, 53, now school superintendent and township supervisor, credits his old friend with boosting the careers of many black youngsters of the city's east end.

"Kermit gave us the feeling that we could still make something of ourselves even though we were going to segregated schools and thought we were deprived," he said.

A former big-band musician, Haynes decided to open up the shoeshine stand to insure his livelihood when his vision began failing due to cataracts.

He lost his vision completely after a cataract operation 25 years ago but continued playing the bass violin in bands until the early 1970s.

"I knew I could still shine shoes," Haynes says. "I can shine shoes as good as anybody. You just feel them. You do what you're supposed to do and they come out right."

More women questioning Caesarean birth practice

By MAUREEN McTAGUE DANA
Hearst Feature Service

Nancy Wainer (cq) Cohen wasn't even off the operating table when she decided the Caesarean section to deliver her son "was totally unnecessary."

The same doctor who insisted on a section after eight hours of labor told her she'd never be able to deliver another child vaginally. But two days after the operation, from her hospital bed, Mrs. Cohen was making plans for her next baby — who, she was determined, would not be delivered surgically. That was 10 years ago.

Mrs. Cohen, a Boston childbirth counselor, was right. She found a doctor willing to agree with her then-revolutionary plan to defy the accepted medical practice of "once a Caesarean, always a Caesarean."

Two years later, her daughter was born in an uneventful vaginal delivery, and three years ago, another daughter.

"I was given all the pat responses to why I shouldn't try it, like, 'Do you want to die?' and 'Don't you love your baby?' " recalled Mrs. Cohen.

The picture has changed somewhat since then, with doctors in some parts of the country, notably the Northeast, encouraging patients who have given birth by Caesarean (also referred to as a C-section) to try a vaginal delivery.

Cohen and other advocates of VBAC (vaginal birth after Caesarean) are fighting against the traditional obstetrician's defense of repeat Caesareans — that the old incision in the uterus may rupture during labor, endangering the health, and possibly the lives, of mother and child.

Particularly with the smaller, lower incisions made in recent years for C-sections, there have been few problems with rupture, Cohen said, noting that even the National Institutes of Health recently issued a report suggesting VBAC as a good alternative for some women.

An increasing number of physicians would agree. Dr. W. Bruce Clark, a obstetrician-gynecologist and assistant professor of obstetrics and gynecology at Albany Medical Center, N.Y., said vaginal births are being done increasingly at local hospitals for women who have had Caesareans.

"I'll do it if the circumstances warrant it and the patient requests it, but I don't know if I would recommend it. There is still not enough evidence to determine how safe it is," he said, adding he has never had problems with the few such deliveries he has done.

Clark's lukewarm acceptance of VBAC is representative of what Mrs. Cohen sees as the beginning of a change in the attitude of physicians. "It's beginning to turn, but it's going to take several more years, and it's not going to come from physicians but from consumers who refuse to be sectioned unnecessarily."

Women like herself prefer a vaginal delivery over a C-section for a variety of reasons, Mrs. Cohen said – surgery is expensive, risky, requires a longer recovery period and absence from the family, and leaves a new mother feeling she has little control over her own body or the birth process.

"Women don't like not being able to experience birth," she said. "They want to be active participants in their babies' births. And it's frightening to go under the knife."

The nationwide Caesarean rate of about 25 percent is an indication that C-sections — both first and repeats — are done too routinely, she maintained.

Although more hospitals are permitting VBACs, Mrs. Cohen said she and other advocates are concerned about the limitations doctors place on the laboring women.

Most insist that the laboring women, like many who have not had a C-section, use an electronic fetal monitor and intravenous tube, in addition to putting a limit on the number of hours they may be in labor before having to undergo a Caesarean.

Such restrictions create a stressful atmosphere, and make it unlikely the women will be able to relax enough to progress in labor, Cohen maintained.

But Dr. Clark argues that a fetal monitor and an IV are even more necessary in such cases than for women who have not had a previous section, because of the need to be prepared for an emergency Caesarean.

"There is definitely some risk of uterine rupture, and the procedure is only safe with persistent monitoring of the baby's heart and an IV," he said. And rather than causing stress for the laboring woman, Clark maintains those forms of medical intervention "tend to reassure women that the appropriate precautions are being taken."

While only 3 to 4 percent of women who have had sections request vaginal delivery today, Cohen predicts that, with the help of women's consumer groups, "in another few years, 80 to 90 percent will seek one."

Brady's memory almost back to normal

Brady

NEW YORK (AP) — Presidential Press Secretary James Brady, 41, who suffered brain damage after being shot during an attempt on President Reagan's life, retains his near-photographic memory, his wife says.

In an interview with People magazine, Sarah Brady said her husband did, for a time, have trouble recalling recent events following the shooting, which occurred nearly a year ago.

"He was forgetful about who came to visit him or the date, but that has improved and is almost back to normal," Mrs. Brady said.

She said the drugs Brady takes to prevent seizures, Tegretol and phenobarbital, can make him groggy, and sometimes he finds it difficult to control his emotions and his voice.

Every day, a White House van takes Brady to George Washington University Hospital for 4½ hours of physical, occupational and speech therapy.

LONDON (AP) — Princess Diana, looking tanned after a 10-day vacation in the Bahamas, joined her husband Prince Charles at Westminster Abbey for a service marking the 100th anniversary of the Royal College of Music.

The 20-year-old princess expects the couple's first child in June.

The Sunday service was their first engagement since returning Saturday from their holiday on the island of Eleuthera.

The Prince of Wales, heir to the throne, heads a $7.3 million rebuilding fund for the Royal College of Music in London.

Carson

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — "Tonight" show host Johnny Carson, stopped for an out-of-date car license plate after dining out with his wife, was booked for investigation of drunk driving, police say.

He was arrested about 1:30 a.m. Saturday on La Cienega Boulevard in an chic area known as "Restaurant Row," Lt. David Griffey said.

Carson — who has one of the nation's most famous faces — was released on his own recognizance, Griffey said.

The late-night talk show emcee had a blood-alcohol level above 0.10 percent, the state measure for drunk driving, said Sgt. Tom Van Arsdale.

Carson's publicist, James Mahoney, said Carson had just left a restaurant with his wife Joanna. Usually an abstainer, Carson had been drinking wine, Mahoney said.

"Carson can't recall receiving as much as a parking violation in the past and he sincerely regrets the incident," Mahoney said.

"He was not driving irregularly," Mahoney said, adding that Carson willingly submitted to a field sobriety test.

Mrs. Reagan gets new chief of staff

By MAUREEN SANTINI
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — If anyone can help Nancy Reagan overcome her image of extravagance, White House aides are hoping it will be 32-year-old James S. Rosebush.

He was named Mrs. Reagan's chief of staff because he pays attention to political consequences and knows how to avoid controversy.

"I am always saying to myself, 'What's the consequence of this decision?'" he said in a recent interview. "I am an external relations person. I am a constituency relations person. I am concerned about what different constituencies think."

That trait was noticed when Rosebush was hired on at the White House seven months ago to promote President Reagan's program to get the private sector to support social programs.

Craig Fuller, assistant to the president for cabinet affairs and Rosebush's patron, says Rosebush "paid enormous attention to detail and was always looking at how things were going to be perceived — was there a chance for misperception that might be damaging?"

He also managed to get the job done without much of a staff.

Those qualities impressed Michael Deaver, the deputy chief of staff who oversees Mrs. Reagan's operation. As a result, Rosebush became the first lady's chief of staff on Feb. 1. His salary rose from $50,000 to $58,000.

During his first month, Rosebush has made it clear he intends to keep a low profile.

"I just want to do my job and fade into the woodwork," he said. "I don't want my name in lights." Although he agreed to answer several questions for The Associated Press, he has refused to grant general interviews.

A native of Flint, Mich., Rosebush said he wants Mrs. Reagan "to be perceived by the American people as truly what she is: which is an absolutely outstanding person who's contributing a great deal to the country."

Rosebush, who did not know the first lady before he took the job, traveled with her two weeks ago to Texas and Florida, where she visited drug treatment centers.

En route to Florida, he walked through the Air Force jet, introducing himself to the reporters accompanying Mrs. Reagan. After landing, the first lady's other staff members scattered to various cars in the motorcade but Rosebush got into her limousine.

While he has not yet held her handbag — a traditional duty of her chief of staff — Rosebush let it slip that he had brought tissue to one of the drug programs, fearful that Mrs. Reagan would burst into tears.

During her first year in the White house, Mrs. Reagan has generated controversy for what some perceive as an extravagant lifestyle at a time many Americans are suffering from the recession.

Specifically, there was expensive new china, although it was donated; free designer clothes and a redecoration of the White House, especially the residence.

One knowledgeable source, who did not wish to be identified, said the worst of the negative publicity probably was behind the first lady. However, he maintained that since she generally does as she pleases without necessarily informing her staff, her aides will have little effect on the kind of publicity she gets.

Rosebush's job consists mainly of coordinating Mrs. Reagan's appointments, travel and social arrangements and serving as a sort of companion when she is on the road without her husband.

Members of guild seek removal of Ed Asner

By JACKIE HYMAN
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A drive to recall Ed Asner as president of the Screen Actors Guild because of his statements on El Salvador will continue without the support of influential guild members, including Charlton Heston and Robert Conrad, the drive's founder says.

Independent stuntman Tony Cecere, who launched a petition drive against Asner, said Sunday the recall effort has not been stopped by Asner's admission that he should have made it clear he was speaking as a private citizen when he announced he and several other actors were sending $25,000 to leftist guerrillas in El Salvador.

On Thursday, Asner said he would make it known from now on when he is not representing the guild.

According to Cecere, Asner's statement "invalidated a small portion of the recall petition. However, the main issue of wanting to lead the guild into the national political arena, namely endorsing political candidates or legislation that does not deal directly with the guild, is still valid."

Cecere met privately Friday night with a small group of guild members who have criticized Asner for his handling of the El Salvador matter and for his proposal to merge the Screen Actors Guild with the Screen Extras Guild.

Present at the meeting were Heston, Conrad, Anthony Caruso and SAG board members Renee Wedel, Morgan Paul and Marie Windsor. Heston is a former president and lifetime member of the guild.

The group declined to back the recall. "President Asner's apology for his unfortunate handling of his recent statements on El Salvador cancels one of the major charges of the recall petition now circulating," the group said in a statement.

In admitting he made "a slight goof" in speaking out, Asner had said, "I now have a button identifying me as a private citizen that I will wear on such occasions. I will make an attempt to minimize such controversial appearances."

Asner, the star of CBS-TV's "Lou Grant," also has stirred bitter controversy over the proposal to merge the two guilds. Backers of the merger say it would increase the power of the union. Opponents contend it would prevent union actors from working in non-union productions and would result in prohibitive labor costs for low-budget producers.

Cecere said Sunday he has gathered more than 800 signatures "in a very short amount of time with virtually no funds and very little organized backing."

The campaign needs the signatures of 10 percent of the guild's 50,000 members before the union's board would consider action. For Asner to be recalled, two-thirds of the members would have to approve a recall in a written ballot.

Paul said the group's decision not to back the recall does not mean the individuals cease to disagree with Asner on other issues.

"We will...continue to resist any effort to alter the guild's historic policy against adopting official 'guild positions' on issues unrelated to the wages, welfare and working conditions of our membership," he said.

Woman in coma gives birth to healthy girl

ROSEBURG, Ore. (AP) — A 23-year-old woman who has been in a coma for four months, kept alive by a life-support system, has given birth to a healthy baby girl, officials said.

Jennifer Ann Evans, 7 pounds, 13 ounces, was delivered by Caesarean section at Douglas Community Hospital.

Her mother, Julie Ann Evans, has been in the intensive care unit at the hospital since suffering a cerebral hemorrhage Oct. 26.

"The main miracle of this has been that we've been able to maintain her (Mrs. Evans) this long," said Dr. Sergio Cervi-Skinner, an internist.

Mrs. Evans, a nurse at the hospital, cannot breathe without the aid of a respirator. Doctors say her chances for recovery are uncertain.

Charles Evans, 25, a truck driver for Hanna Nickel Smelting in nearby Riddle, held his daughter and fed her shortly after the birth Thursday.

"That was quite a feeling, I'll tell you," Evans said. "One I thought I'd never have."

"She looks like a Jennifer," Evans said of the red-haired infant.

Mrs. Evans was healthy before she awoke on Oct. 26 with a severe headache. About 20 minutes later she lost consciousness.

Doctors said her brain stem was damaged from birth defect called arterial venus malformation, which is similar to an aneurysm, a weakness in the wall of an artery that causes it to balloon.

It's Bean beyond any lingering doubt

Andy Bean

MIAMI (AP) — The question of a possible penalty — which could have deprived him of the title in the Doral-Eastern Open golf tournament — had been resolved in his favor and Andy Bean obviously was growing testy under intense press questioning about the incident.

"If there was any doubt among the players, any doubt among the officials, I'd rather have the penalty," Bean said Sunday of the incident which involved the possibility he had improved his lie on the 14th hole.

THERE WAS no penalty. There was no doubt on the part of officials. And there were no questions from the other players.

The victory stands.

And that resolved another lingering doubt.

"There's always a doubt in your mind that you'll be able to do it until you do win again," said Bean, whose spectacular career was sidetracked last season when he spent most of the year sidelined with a severe hand injury.

This one, the eighth of his career, came by a one-stroke margin with a closing 3-under-par 69 and a 278 total, 10 shots under par on the Blue Monster course at the Doral Country Club.

It marked the sixth consecutive year that Bean has won at least once and it was worth $54,000 from the total purse of $300,000. Perhaps more importantly, however, the victory put him in the Masters and the Tournament of Champions and re-established the big, hulking guy with the delicate putting touch as one of the game's top young players.

FOR A MOMENT, however, after regulation play was concluded with a winning, 3-foot par putt by Bean, there was a question about this one. It was resolved in a brief discussion in the scorer's tent involving an incident on the 14th hole.

Bean hit his tee shot under a tree. He said he went under a limb, "about two feet from where I'd make the shot," to see if he could make an unrestricted swing. He could not and decided to punch the ball back to the fairway with a half-swing.

It was about that time that the telephone switchboard lit up with calls from television viewers who said Bean, on the backswing of his practice swing, had dislodged some leaves, thereby improving his lie, a violation of the rules calling for a two-shot penalty.

"Fortunately, there was an official sitting in a cart not 15 feet away," Bean said. After he'd played his shot, "I heard something from a spectator and went back and asked the official about it. I said, 'If there's any question, penalize me. I don't want any doubt about it.'

"He said, 'Don't worry about it. There's no penalty'."

JACK TUTHILL, Tournament Director for the Tournament Players Association, said Bean's practice swing did not improve the lie for his actual swing and was not on the same line, so no infraction occurred.

"I think the camera angle showed something that really wasn't," Bean said. "I think the camera angle made it look like I was doing something I wasn't doing."

Pate, who played with Bean, said there was no question about the situation. "He didn't do anything wrong," Pate said.

But Jerry did.

He missed a 12-footer for birdie on the final hole that would have tied him for the top. He had to settle for a par on the hole and a closing 70 that left him in a three-way tie for second at 279 with Scott Hoch and Mike Nicolette, who had the best tournament of his four-year career. Hoch had a 69 and Nicolette 70. Each won $22,400. For Nicolette, that compares with previous career winnings of $22,848.

Curtis Strange, with a 67, Cal Peete with a 71 including a double bogey on the 18th, and Craig Stadler tied for fifth at 281. Stadler, the leader through the first three rounds, had a closing 73.

Rangers face Robert Lee in bidistrict

SNYDER—Greenwood's Rangers will begin their drive for another trip to state when they face Robert Lee at 7:30 p.m. in a Class A bidistrict basketball game.

Greenwood compiled a 27-3 record to win the 14-A title while Lee came through the 13-A campaign with an overall 21-8 mark.

Greenwood won its title virtually unchallenged while Robert Lee was forced to beat Sterling City in a playoff to take.

Stuart Burleson, 25 points and 11 rebounds a game, leads the Rangers while Scot Long and Darren Williams, a couple of 6-0 seniors, ramrod the Lee attack with 12 points each.

Pack sees action

Midland High's Bulldogs open their 1982 baseball season against Pecos High at 4 p.m. today in Memorial Stadium.

Midland Lee swings into action for the first time Tuesday with a 4 p.m. game against Coronado at Lubbock.

Action heats up this weekend in Odessa when District 5-5A conducts its first sneak-preview tournament, a Friday and Saturday meet involving all eight members of the district.

The Texas Longhorns return tonight to the location where their season started unraveling in the first round of the seventh annual Southwest Conference postseason basketball tournament.

Heart O' Texas Coliseum in Waco is where the Longhorns lost 6-9 forward Mike Wacker to a knee injury, and then proceeded to lose 10 of its last 12 games.

TEXAS ALSO lost to the Baylor Bears twice this year.

"I predicted this would happen," said Texas Coach Abe Lemons who has seen his team spiral from No. 5 in the country to eighth in the SWC. "Everything goes back to the scene of the crime ... it's in the stars."

He added, "It's merciful that this is coming to an end. There will be better days."

Lemons wasn't present in Waco when Baylor beat Texas the first time because of his brother's illness in Oklahoma.

The survivor of the Baylor-Texas clash plays third-seeded Texas A&M Thursday night in Reunion Arena in the quarterfinals.

RICE, WHICH beat Texas Tech twice, is at Lubbock tonight and the winner of that game plays the Southern Methodist-Texas Christian winner in the other Thursday night quarterfinal.

SMU, the cellar-dwellers, travel to Fort Worth. The Mustangs lost twice to TCU during the regular season.

Arkansas won the undisputed title Saturday with a hard-earned 67-61 victory over Texas Tech in Fayetteville. It was Coach Eddie Sutton's fifth championship in six years.

The Hogs drew the No. 1 seed in the post-season tournament in Reunion Arena and will not play until Friday night from a bracket which includes the survivor of Southern Methodist, Texas Christian, Rice or Texas Tech.

Houston, which had a big turnaround by beating every team in the second half of the season, was 20-6 and 11-5 — followed by Texas A&M, 17-9 and 10-6, Baylor 16-10 and 9-7, TCU 14-12 and 9-7, Texas Tech 16-10 and 8-8, Texas 16-10 and 6-10, Rice 15-14 and 6-10, and SMU 6-20 and 1-15.

Sutton said this championship just might mean the most.

"This might be the most meaningful because we had all the adversity with the Texas situation. Plus, this is the best the league has ever been," said Sutton. "I felt before the season started four losses would win it.

"We're the only team that was undefeated at home plus we were able to split on the road."

The post-season tournment in Reunion, which will not be televised, was a near sellout.

Upsets leave leaders gory

In view of what befell them in the first round of the NCAA basketball tournament the last two years — and perhaps after digesting the results of an upset-filled weekend — the DePaul Blue Demons aren't setting any lofty goals.

"Our ambition is to get by the first round of the NCAA Tournament, not to win the national championship," Coach Ray Meyer said Sunday after third-ranked DePaul trimmed Notre Dame 81-69.

Looking too far ahead has resulted in the Blue Demons being eliminated in the opening round of the last two NCAA tourneys. This time, Meyer says his "biggest concern heading into the tournament is to get our boys to blend together and play as a team."

THE WEEKEND disaster list began at the top with No.1-ranked Virginia bowing to Maryland 47-46 in overtime. It also included sixth-ranked West Virginia, whose 23-game winning streak, longest in the nation, was snapped by Rutgers 74-64.

Other casualties among The Associated Press Top Twenty included No.7 Kentucky, No.8 Tulsa, No.11 Iowa, No.16 San Francisco, No.17 Alabama and No.19 Tennessee.

Iowa was the only one to lose to another ranked team — the Hawkeyes dropped a 57-55 three-overtime thriller to No.13 Minnesota — but the pressure may be starting to build for all concerned with the numerous conference postseason tournaments — the qualifying rounds for the NCAA event — coming up this week.

Three teams qualified over the weekend for the NCAA Tournament as fourth-ranked Oregon State clinched its third consecutive Pacific-10 crown by defeating Southern Cal 45-36, Pepperdine won the West Coast Athletic Conference title with a 106-100 triumph over San Francisco and Alabama-Birmingham defeated Virginia Commonwealth 94-83 Sunday behind Oliver Robinson's 24 points to capture the Sun Belt Conference playoffs.

"I don't think we ever played as a team," said Coach Gene Bartow, who inaugurated UAB's basketball program just four seasons ago and took the Blazers to the NCAA tourney last year.

WITH WEST Virginia falling to Rutgers, DePaul owns the longest winning streak at 21 games. Sunday's victory over Notre Dame enabled the Blue Demons to wind up the regular season with a 26-1 record.

MHS, Lee gym teams suffer losses

Both Midland High and Midland Lee dropped dual match competitions this weekend in gymnastics as the Lady Bulldogs fell to Odessa High despite taking first and second in all events and the Lady Rebels lost to Odessa Permian.

With only two competitors on the team, MHS was able to win the top two spots but couldn't quite overcome the OHS numbers as the Bronchos outscored the Bulldogs, 47.4 to 45.55.

Tracy Hunt was the All-Around winner for MHS with a 23.05 score and also claimed first in vaulting, uneven bars and floor exercises and second on the balance beam.

Teammate Becky Russell was No. 2 in All-Around at 22.8 with a first place finish in balance beam and seconds in vaulting, uneven bars and floor exercise.

"With only two kids I think we did pretty well," said Mark Townzen who coaches both schools' gymnastics teams. "But, they realize there is a lot of room for improvement. I'm very pleases with Becky Russell's performance even though she's only been in the program for a few weeks."

Frank Phillips claims WJCC 3rd in stretch

With Saturday night's final game, the Region V playoff representatives from the Western Junior College Conference were finally established.

Frank Phillips College closed the regular season with a 62-49 win over Odessa College, which vaulted the Borger team into third place ahead of Howard College. FPC finished 12-6 and Howard, which had been battling Amarillo College for second, suffered two defeats in the final week to finish in fourth at 11-7. The fifth spot went to Clarendon with a 9-9 record.

Midland College, of course, had long since clinched a playoff spot, winding up 17-1, while Amarillo College limped to the wire with a 14-4 record after reeling off a 20-0 overall record to open the year.

The Regional matching the top five WJCC teams and top five Northern Conference teams will begin Wednesday at Big Spring's Dorothy Garrett Coliseum and continue through Saturday.

By virtue of its loss, host Howard will have to play one of Wednesday's qualifying games against the NC fifth place team. The same night, fifth place Clarendon meets the NC fourth place team. MC will meet one of the winners, the bracket has not been announced, at 7 p.m. Thursday with Northern Conference champion McLennan of Waco playing the other winner at 9 p.m. The tournament will tip off with 2 and 4 p.m. games Thursday.

Friday's semifinals will be at 7 and 9 p.m. with Midland, if it advances, playing the later game.

Is this really training camp?

By WILL GRIMSLEY

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (AP) — A stranger visiting the New York Yankees' spring training camp might be confused about whether they're at the Olympics, a football game or a TV studio.

There's Harrison Dillard, the old sprinter and hurdler from Cleveland, a gold medalist in the 1948 and 1952 Games, telling the pin-stripers to keep their feet straight and arms raised.

A short distance away is Howard "Hopalong" Cassady, Ohio State's football-toting demon of the mid-1950s and a Heisman Trophy winner, helping synchronize everybody's muscles.

Back in one of the trailers you might find Lou Saban, remembered as a former football coach at Army and a half-dozen other universities plus a four-year stint with the Cleveland Browns, putting in his two cents' worth on discipline and "how to win for the Gipper."

WHEN LOU talks, the Yankees had better listen. He's the president of the club.

And, all the while, out there on the mound is this funny looking movie gadget recording every hitter in the batting cage and every pitcher going through his routine motions.

The films are processed and then sent to a projector room where the Yankee ballplayers are invited to drop in and examine their errors.

It's all a part of George M. Steinbrenner's "new look" Yankees, with accent on speed, base-running and defense.

Whatever became of the long ball — a trademark of the Yankees from the days of Babe Ruth right on through Joe DiMaggio, Mickey Mantle, Roger Maris and more recently, Reggie Jackson?

Forget it.

LEAN AND mean — that's the new rallying cry for Steinbrenner's 1982 whiz bangers. But also keen? Who knows?

Slick, spick and quick. But what about the big stick? Time will tell.

Steinbrenner hit upon the new formula after seeing his Yankees lose ingloriously to the Los Angeles Dodgers in the 1981 World Series.

At times, the fielding was embarrassing, the base-running atrocious and, as pitcher Tommy John acknowledged, "We were so slow sometimes on the bases it took us three hits to get all the way around."

"We're going to have an aggressive, hard-running, base-stealing club," promised Steinbrenner.

Dillard, a graying, 58-year-old sprinter and hurdler, was imported from Cleveland to impart running basics for Yankees who might get on base.

"There are just a few little things," Dillard said. "A lot of ballplayers run

Billy Olson...another record.

Weary-of-flying Olson ends x-country travels

(Compiled from R-T wires)

Billy Olson, who began his cross-country pole vault odessay Jan. 16 with an American indoor mark of 18 feet, 6 1/2 inches at East Rutherford, N.J., ended it by winning the NAIA indoor title with a world record 18-10 Saturday night. In between, the 23-year-old athlete from Abilene Christian set, then bettered, world indoor bests of 18-3¾ Jan. 29 in Toronto, 18-9¼ Feb. 6 in Louisville, Ky., and 18-9½ Feb. 19 in San Diego. "I'm so tired I can't stand up," he said with a smile. "And my hamstring is real sore and I didn't want to take a chance on getting it hurt... "This is the end of it for me. Next, I'm going to be concntrating on outdoor meets."...

Abdul-Jabbar rescues Lakers

By WILLIAM R. BARNARD
AP Sports Writer

The former student nearly played as well as his teacher, but it wasn't enough for the Cleveland Cavaliers.

James Edwards, who was a rookie backup center for Los Angeles in 1977 behind Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, had 25 points and 14 rebounds Sunday as the lowly Cavs gave the Lakers a tough battle before losing 102-101.

The Cavs, whose 12-43 record is the worst in the National Basketball Association, had the game won until Abdul-Jabbar, who scored 32 points, canned a 15-foot hook shot with two seconds left.

The victory by Los Angeles was its seventh in a row, but the Lakers had to fight back from a 19-point deficit late in the second quarter.

Celtics 106, Bucks 102

Larry Bird, who missed the entire third quarter after getting hit in the head, returned for the fourth period and scored 11 points to carry Boston past Milwaukee. Bird, who scored 16 points, was left the game with 41 seconds left in the second quarter after a collision with Harvey Catchings.

Suns 103, Sonics 98

Dennis Johnson scored 12 of his 28 points in the fourth quarter to rally Phoenix past Seattle, dropping the SuperSonics 3½ games behind Los Angeles in the Pacific Division.

Bulls 118, Spurs 104

Backup guard Ricky Sobers scored 18 of his game-high 28 points in the final period to give Chicago its third straight victory for acting Coach Rod Thorn.

Warriors 105, Hawks 77

Bernard King scored 28 points and World Free added 23 as Golden State routed Atlanta. John Drew and Dan Roundfield, who together average 37 points for the Hawks, were held to two points apiece.

Bullets 113, Knicks 109

Kevin Grevey scored the last seven points of overtime as Washington came from behind to beat New York. The Knicks led 109-106 in the final minute, but Grevey hit two free throws with 47 seconds left, a layup with 16 seconds remaining and a three-point play at the buzzer.

Pacers 112, Pistons 101

Johnny Davis scored 14 of his 25 points in the fourth quarter to lead Indiana after Detroit had whittled down a 14-point lead in the third period.

Nets 110, Clippers 95

New Jersey got 23 points from Ray Williams while beating San Diego.

Minnesota's Neal Broten and Dino Ciccarelli are finding out exactly what they hoped they would — that they belong in the National Hockey League.

Broten had a goal and two assists Sunday night to set a team record for points by a rookie and Ciccarelli tied the North Stars' club mark for goals with his 48th as Minnesota rallied for a 5-4 triumph over the Detroit Red Wings. Defenseman Craig Hartsburg, who had two goals and an assist, got his second of the night to make it 4-4 with 1:26 left and Ciccarelli won it with 11 seconds remaining.

"Everything is coming up roses," said Broten, who has 75 points, one more than Bobby Smith scored to set the team record for freshman three years ago. "I got a great lift by playing in the playoffs last year all the way to the finals. Playing in the Canada Cup helped, too. I got into shape, found out how good I was and that I could play in the National Hockey League."

North Stars Coach Glen Sonmor certainly has been impressed with the center from the gold medalist 1980 United States Olympic hockey team.

"He's 17th in the NHL in scoring," said Sonmor. "That's remarkable. He missed seven games with an injury.

"I think he's the rookie of the year. In my opinion, and I'm prejudiced, it's hard to imagine anyone having done more for the team than he's done for us."

Elsewhere, Wayne Gretzky scored his 81st and 82nd goals of the season to boost Edmonton over Washington 4-1.

Oilers 4, Capitals 1

Gretzky increased his record points total to 181 with 14 games remaining as he pursues 100 goals and 200 points. The Oilers have won six straight and are unbeaten in their last 10 contests, outscoring the opposition 54-26.

"I am getting a little excited now that it's getting close," Gretzky said of the 200-point plateau. "Basically, it's because no one else has ever done it."

"But I'll be here a few more years. Hopefully, I'll be able to break it."

Canadiens 5, Whalers 0

Denis Herron recorded his second shutout of the season and sixth of his career, stopping 28 shots, and Guy Lafleur notched his 456th career goal, tying Alex Delvecchio for 12th on the NHL's all-time list. The Canadiens are 15-1-4 in their last 20 games.

Penguins 4, Rangers 2

Gary Edwards, making his first start in the Pittsburgh goal since being acquired from St. Louis, stopped 36 shots to pace the Penguins, who snapped a 12-game road winless string that included losses in their last seven away games.

Jets 5, Blues 2

Willy Lindstrom scored twice and set up another goal for Winnipeg to hand St. Louis its eighth straight road loss. The Jets climbed within two points of second place St. Louis in the Norris Division.

Canucks 3, Flyers 3

Gary Lupul's third-period goal knotted the game. Rookie defenseman Neil Belland had three assists for the Canucks, while Brian Propp registered a goal and two assists for Philadelphia.

Rockies 5, Black Hawks 3

Colorado snapped a six-game winless slide with Brent Ashton scoring twice and Merlin Malinowski setting up two goals.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Endowment policy worst insurance buy

By BILL DOYLE

Q. My endowment insurance policy will come due soon. I will be able to either take the cash value of close to $3,500 or leave the money with the insurance company. The company has some very good options, which pay 7.25 percent interest on money left in while I receive monthly installments. Would it be advisable to take the lump sum and buy a savings certificate?

I am retired and really need help, when it comes to money matters.

A. Take the money and run. Put the lump sum from that endowment policy into a savings certificate, a money market mutual fund or some other safe place where it will earn a good deal more than 7.25 percent.

Years ago, 7.25 percent interest was, to use your words, "very good." These days, it's low. You can get about twice that from 30-month savings certificates. Yields from money market mutual funds are now about 12 percent. However, you can make withdrawals from money funds at any time, without any charges.

Although it's too late to make any difference, the hard truth is that you never should have bought an endowment policy in the first place. Premium costs on endowment policies are very high, making them just about the worst insurance buy.

Any time that statement appears in print, some insurance industry noses get out of joint. But even hard-driving insurance salespeople have just about given up trying to sell endowment policies. Some insurance companies have stopped selling them entirely.

Q. I have a $10,000 ordinary life insurance policy, which now has a loan value of approximately $7,000. I can borrow that money at 5 percent. I want to do this and put the money in either a savings certificate or buy utility stock.

My wife disagrees. But, as I see it, she would have the same protection when I die. Meanwhile, we would be getting a much higher return on our money. And, if we buy utility stock, there would be a possibility of an increase or decrease in value. What are your thoughts on this subject?

A. The same as yours. More and more people are doing what you propose to do. It makes sense. When you can borrow money at a low interest rate and put it to work at a higher yield, you come out ahead.

Ordinary life insurance, also called "whole" or "permanent" insurance has a loan value, basically a saving feature building up at a low interest rate.

If you borrow $7,000 on your $10,000 policy, when you die your wife as beneficiary will collect $3,000 from the insurance company. She will get the policy's death benefit, minus the loan.

But, if you put the $7,000 someplace where it's safe, she'll inherit that money. You'll leave her as much as you would by not touching the insurance.

By putting the borrowed money in a savings certificate at a bank or savings and loan association, there will be no risk of leaving less to your wife — providing you don't withdraw any of the $7,000 from the certificate.

With utility stock, like any other stock, the value might go up or down. Chances are, it will go up over the long run. But, if your wife insists on safety, go the certificate route.

• • •

Q. A few months after I opened an 182-day savings certificate at 14.3 percent interest, at the savings and loan association where I also have a savings account. The S & L transferred part of the principal from the certificate to my savings account, which pays lower interest.

What can I do to get this corrected?

A. There's something wrong, here, probably a misunderstanding by you. A bank or S & L won't transfer principal — the amount you put in — from a certificate to another account, without instructions from the depositor.

I suspect the S & L transferred the interest from your certificate to your savings account. Banks and S & Ls are prohibited from compounding interest on 182-day certificates. By shifting the interest from the certificate to the savings account, where interest can be compounded, you have a better deal.

Different budget estimates due to different expectations

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — Which estimate of the 1983 budget deficit is correct? The Reagan administration's $91.5 billion, or the Congressional Budget Office's figure of $121 billion? Who is right: Reagan or Rivlin?

To suggest that neither is right might be correct, but verification awaits the passage of time. Meanwhile, the disparity can be accounted for by an old a peristent theme: Differences in expectations.

Those differences, many so subjective they cannot be measured, demonstrated or proven by any scientific technique, pervade today's economic analyses, and in fact the direction of the economy itself.

In the budget dispute, the president assumes that the economy will improve more sharply and provide more revenues than does Alice Rivlin, director of the budget office. On the spending side, Reagan feels he can operate more efficiently than Mrs. Rivlin and staff assumes he can.

To say that the administration's view of things includes a good deal of hope might be close to the truth. It assumes, for example, that leases of federal lands will be at maximum rates, recession or not.

The budget office, however, is no less guilty, assuming as it does that the country will enjoy bumper crops, thus adding to the cost of price supports, an assumption that no farmer would take for granted.

Equally subjective expectations and assumptions are found throughout the economic world, even among those econometric model builders who reduce economic activity to piles of numbers and then seek to make the numbers interact in what they think is a manner similar to the economy.

The result of their activity is, of course, more numbers, some drawn out to hundredths of a unit of whatever it is they are measuring or projecting, giving the impression of great accuracy and objectivity.

Some of this activity is nonsense. Some of the numbers that go into the recipe are guesses. Many are rounded estimates. And some of the hardest looking numbers used are, for practical purposes, inaccurate.

National income as provided by the Commerce Department, for example, measures only domestic activity, though the U.S. economy operates extensively overseas. Corporate profits as reported to the Internal Revenue Service differ from profits as reported to shareholders because of accounting procedures. Still, they are sometimes interchanged.

Inevitably, and especially when a forecaster has a choice between using one or the other of two differing measures of the same economic activity, his own subjective expectations are likely to intrude.

Consider what expectations are currently doing to the economy.

Although they have now become more realistic, administration officials had hoped that the private sector would more quickly pick up economic slack left by the alleged reduction in federal activity. Since expectations were overly optimistic, projections became skewed.

The private sector in recent months has held to its own expectations, which obviously have been different from those of the Reagan people. And for once these expectations can be measured with some objectivity.

Largest employment decline reported

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Small businesses in the United States reported the largest decline in employment in eight years during the fourth quarter of 1981, but the percentage of small firms planning to increase employment in the first quarter of 1982 is on the rise.

Those are two of the conclusions of the Quarterly Economic Report (QER) of the National Federation of Independent Business (NFIB) released today. A random sample of 2,322 member firms indicated that average employment per firm declined by .76 employees through the fourth quarter of 1981. Employment declined at 22 percent for firms averaging five employees.

The fourth quarter declines represent the eighth quarterly drop in employment in the last nine quarters. The report says, "Because small business is the source of most long-term employment growth (more than 80 percent of the new jobs created during the period 1969-76 were created by firms with 100 employees or less), it is clear that major improvement in job opportunities is dependent on recovery in this important sector of our economy."

One of the hostages who had been held aboard a Tanzanian Airlines Boeing 737 at Stansted Airport, London, waves joyously upon his release Saturday. The hijackers surrendered to British police late Saturday.

Britons come through on threat to hijackers

By MAUREEN JOHNSON
Associated Press Writer

STANSTED, England (AP) — "Don't come to Britain," the British government warned hijackers today after the takeover of a Tanzanian airliner ended peacefully with the surrender of the four hijackers and the release of their 82 remaining hostages.

"The message is that hijackers coming to this country will not be permitted to leave," said Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher as her government prepared hijacking charges against the four Tanzanians who seized the Air Tanzania jetliner during a domestic flight over their East African homeland Friday.

They could get life imprisonment but probably won't. The only reported casualty was the Tanzanian co-pilot, who was shot in the lower back Saturday. A Greek doctor who treated him in Athens said the wound was not serious.

The 76 freed passengers and five other crew members were "safe and well," police said, although four passengers were treated for shock. All were reported to be Tanzanians.

The four foes of Tanzanian President Julius Nyerere gave themselves up Sunday afternoon after freeing most of their prisoners in groups and then sending two small children out to the police with their weapons — a loaded .38-caliber revolver, a fake pistol, a wooden grenade and an empty package labeled "explosives."

Security men found small amounts of explosives placed at two emergency exits and at the lavatory doors in the rear of the plane, the police reported.

Police said another foe of Nyerere, exiled former Foreign Minister Oscar Kambona, helped convince the men British justice would deal fairly with them and they should surrender.

"We decided it had gone on long enough, and it was up to us to end it," said Chief Constable Robert Bunyard of Essex County. "We had no intention of making any concessions to encourage people to hijack aircraft."

"We made it perfectly clear from the outset that they were not going to be allowed to go off in the aircraft, and they realized the game was up," said Home Secretary William Whitelaw.

Air Tanzania sent a relief crew to Britain to return the blue-and-gold Boeing 737 and the freed passengers and crew to Africa. But the hijackers reportedly had their families aboard, and Whitelaw said any who shared the hijackers' opposition to Nyerere might be allowed to stay, at least temporarily.

The plane, named Kilimanjaro after the East African nation's famed mountain, was flown to Kenya, Saudi Arabia and Greece before it landed Saturday at Stansted's little-used airport in the English countryside 30 miles northeast of London.

Eight other hostages were released in Nairobi, Kenya, and Athens, Greece.

The hijackers claimed to be members of the Tanzanian "Revolutionary Youth Movement" and demanded the ouster of Nyerere, their country's president for the past 20 years. They threatened to blow up the plane Saturday night, but police negotiators succeeded in calming them down.

Israelis ask for no-confidence vote in Begin

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Right-wing nationalists called today for a vote of no-confidence in Prime Minister Menachem Begin's government to protest the sealing off of the Sinai Desert against opponents of Israel's withdrawal.

The no-confidence motion was sponsored by the three-member Tehiya (Renaissance) Party, which called on Begin to remove army roadblocks put up Friday night by the military and stop the pullback from Sinai.

Egypt, which lost the territory in the 1967 Arab-Israeli war, is to regain the last third of the desert wilderness on April 25 under terms of the U.S.-sponsored Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty.

Tehiya's motion, scheduled for a vote Tuesday, stood little chance of passage, observers said. Begin's coalition has a narrow parliamentary majority with 61 of the 120 seats in the Knesset, or Parliament.

While the no-confidence motion did not appear to present much of a threat to Begin, a deputy minister from the National Religious Party threatened to leave the coalition because of the Sinai closure.

Haim Druckman, deputy minister of Religious Affairs and a supporter of the anti-withdrawal movement, deplored the military action on the Jewish sabbath.

Druckman's defection would put Begin under greater pressure in negotiations with several other small parties on their joining the coalition.

In Sinai, police and troops dispersed about 50 withdrawal opponents who tried to break into vacant houses in Moshav Priel, an agricultural settlement southeast of Yamit, the military said.

Sources in Yamit, the main Israeli settlement in northern Sinai, said about 20 of the protesters were arrested.

Defense Minister Ariel Sharon ordered roads into Sinai closed Friday to all but permanent residents to block a threatened massive influx of members of the Movement to Stop the Withdrawal.

Begin's Cabinet, which approved Sharon's action at its regular Sunday meeting, also said Israel might refuse to host Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak on an official visit unless he includes Jerusalem in his travel plans.

Cabinet Secretary Arieh Naor said if Mubarak "insists that Jerusalem will not be included in his visit, Israel should forego this important visit."

There was no immediate reaction in Cairo to the announcement.

Mubarak is reluctant to go to Jerusalem because it may be interpreted as a recognition of Israel's annexation of the Arab sector of the city.

In Beirut, Lebanon, the Palestine Liberation Organization issued a new pledge to abide by a July 24 cease-fire that halted fighting with Israel in southern Lebanon, but asserted it would continue guerrilla warfare within Israeli-occupied territory.

"We commit ourselves not to stage any operations from Lebanese territory as long as the enemy refrains from such operations," Khalil Wazir, PLO military commander in chief, said in a speech Sunday and reported today by Lebanese newspapers. "But we declare that our struggle will not stop within the occupied territories."

U.S. special envoy Philip C. Habib, who helped negotiate the Lebanese cease-fire, arrived in Israel from Beirut on Sunday for talks on stabilizing the truce. He was scheduled to hold talks with Begin, Sharon and other Israeli officials.

Pope appears to compromise with Jesuits

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Pope John Paul II tempered strong criticism of some Jesuit priests' liberal policies with a promise to let the Society of Jesus elect its own leader to replace his appointed chief of the powerful order.

"There is no longer any place for deviations that have certainly been harmful to the vitality of communities and of the entire church," John Paul told 110 Jesuit leaders Saturday.

They were summoned to Rome for an unprecedented week-long secret conclave to hear the pope's views from his appointed leader of the order, the Rev. Paolo Dezza. The conclave is expected to end Tuesday.

The 61-year-old pontiff, holding his own talks with the Jesuits Saturday, condemned the order's political activism and called on them to strictly follow his orders and Roman Catholic traditions.

But John Paul also praised the order as the "vanguard of renewal" within the church and urged "pastoral activity for the poor, the oppressed, the outcasts."

In an apparent conciliatory gesture, the pontiff said a general congregation of the order would be called before the end of the year to elect a new superior general.

John Paul angered some Jesuits last October by appointing Dezza to run the order, effectively supplanting their ailing superior general, the Rev. Pedro Arrupe.

Jesuits traditionally have named their own superior general, and members in West Germany, Canada and France publicly complained about the unprecedented appointment.

John Paul acknowledged Saturday that Dezza's appointment was unusual, but said it was necessary because of Arrupe's poor health.

In an 18-page speech divided into four parts in Italian, French, English and Spanish, the pope said "the necessary concern for justice must be exercised in conformity with your vocation as priests and brothers."

He said the rules of Roman Catholicism must be followed as the church defines them, "and not according to personal criteria or psycho-sociological theories."

Vatican and Jesuit sources say the pope is upset that many members of the Society of Jesus, the largest and most powerful order in the Roman Catholic Church, have turned to political activism and support leftist movements in Latin America.

They said the pontiff also is angry that some Jesuits in the United States have been prominent opponents of the church ban on artificial birth control and divorce.

Defeated party members pledge to form new faction

CAPE TOWN, South Africa (AP) — Right-wing members of the National Party, defeated in a party showdown over sharing power with non-whites, will quit the ruling party and form a new opposition faction, South African newspapers reported today.

"I am finished with the National Party," Andries Treurnicht, suspended chief of the National Party's Transvaal province branch, was quoted as saying.

Treurnicht and 35 ultra-conservative followers lost a showdown Saturday when the Transvaal chapter, the most powerful of the party's four provincial organizations, voted to support Prime Minister P.W. Botha's proposal for some form of "power sharing" with the nation's mixed-race and Asian-descent minorities.

At present, people of mixed-race (known here as coloreds), Asians and blacks have no vote and no role in the white-minority government.

The ultra-conservatives opposed the change, but Botha won a 172-36 vote of confidence from the Transvaal branch. The chapter also suspended Treurnicht and three of his followers from the committee of provincial leaders.

"I made it quite clear at Saturday's meeting that if they insisted on retaining their unqualified support for the prime minister's interpretation of policy, I was finished and there would be no turning back," local newspapers quoted Treurnicht as saying.

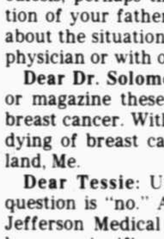
DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Exercise benefits anyone, anytime

Dear Dr. Solomon: I am 68 years old. I have never smoked and my weight is only a few pounds above what the life insurance companies say it should be. However, I've never been very active. Is it possible for me to do something at this stage of the game to improve my health and get into better physical condition, or should I stick to chess and checkers? — Maurice, St. Petersburg, Fla.

Dear Maurice: Beginning to exercise should not be a question of either/or. It is not necessary to give up chess and checkers to take part in an exercise program, and you are not too old to start. My latest book, "Stop Smoking, Lose Weight," explains in detail how such a program could be started and describes several exercises, with illustrations.



As for the value of such a program for someone your age, physicians at the Downstate Medical Center in Brooklyn, New York, have reported on a group of men, 65 to 74 years old, who completed a six-month conditioning program with very positive results. I assume you are in good health and that you will have a complete physical examination before you start.

Furthermore, if you will check my book, you will see that it is possible to start exercising without having to invest in a lot of fancy equipment.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My father is in a nursing home. The last time we visited him, he told us that his roommate was found to have tuberculosis. I don't think my father has had an X-ray since he was admitted. Aren't X-rays important for patients in nursing homes? — Stella, Wilmington, Del.

Dear Stella: I assume you are referring to chest X-rays as a screening device for tuberculosis. I would agree that screening of some type is indicated, but whether X-rays are the best method can be questioned.

Dr. B. Lynn Beattie of the University of British Columbia Faculty of Medicine discussed this issue at a meeting in Canada. She indicated that screening with X-rays is difficult in nursing homes because a number of patients are in wheelchairs, many have to be supported and some don't understand instructions. For these reasons, extra personnel are required, making the process relatively expensive.

It may be that the nursing home in which your father is a patient uses skin testing to screen for tuberculosis; perhaps that is how they detected the condition of your father's roommate. If you are concerned about the situation, why not discuss it with the home's physician or with one of the social workers?

Dear Dr. Solomon: You can hardly pick up a paper or magazine these days without seeing an article on breast cancer. With all this publicity, are fewer people dying of breast cancer than used to? — Tessie, Portland, Me.

Dear Tessie: Unfortunately, the answer to your question is "no." According to Dr. Alfred B. Kurtz of Jefferson Medical College in Philadelphia, there has been no significant reduction in the death rate from breast cancer in the last 50 years.

Beirut hit by 16th bomb

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Two bombs exploded overnight in separate neighborhoods of mostly Moslem West Beirut, raising to 16 the number of bombings in the Lebanese capital in the past 18 days, police reported today.

A police spokesman, who declined to be named in keeping with Lebanese government regulations, said there were no fatalities in the latest blasts, although an 18-year-old woman was slightly injured in one of them.

The explosions caused extensive damages to a Persian rug store and a Lebanese bank, according to the spokesman.

He said no one claimed responsibility.

The latest bombing wave, which began Feb. 11, underscored the lawless chaos still reigning in Lebanon since the 1975-76 civil war between the nation's rightist Christian forces and an alliance of leftist Moslems and Palestinian guerrillas.

The spokesman said 14 of the 16 recent bombings were against business enterprises in the Moslem sector of the capital.

PIRG finds itself coming of age

By JOEL STASHENKO
Associated Press Writer

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) — Born of restlessness as the Vietnam War faded, New York's Public Interest Research Group has successfully made the transition from campus crusader to consumer activist.

It's one of about two dozen similar organizations around the country that have survived the last decade.

Today, public interest and other similarly inspired lobbying groups concentrate mainly on environmental and consumer issues. California's chapter is fighting against a plan to channel state water from the northern part of the state to thirsty Southern California, while members in Massachusetts helped get a returnable bottle law.

"The real power we have is the ability to organize people on the grass-roots level," said the New York group's chief lobbyist at the state Capitol in Albany, 27-year-old Arthur Malkin. "We can offer state legislators the merits of our arguments and the fact that there are people in the districts and communities supporting our position."

State public interest research groups had little such clout in 1973, when Ralph Nader and a friend, Donald Ross, wrote "Action For A Change" — a how-to guide on forming and nurturing their brainchild, a "PIRG."

In those days, chapters were created to "express views of college students in regard to decisions which affect social change." While that was an energetic formula at the time, New York leaders soon discovered that a membership based on transient college students had its drawbacks — both in getting effective local projects started from campus chapters in Syracuse, Albany and Buffalo, and in influencing state legislators.

Although 17 New York college chapters still provide the bulk of its funding through a portion of student activity fees, 40 "neighborhood" spinoff organizations have been created to give the group older members and more year-to-year stability.

However, a 38-member executive board drawn from member college chapters still dictates statewide policies and tells executive director Ross and Malkin what non-partisan issues to tackle and which to avoid.

"There are inherent difficulties with a group whose membership changes so much," said state Consumer Protection Board executive director Karen Burstein, a frequent ally of the public interest group. "But I think they have become more effective in the past few years, and on some issues, very valuable."

University chapters, with a dozen or so active members each, concentrate on local projects such as tax assessment studies. The Binghamton chapter helps run a successful food cooperative for senior citizens.

The state group, which has an annual budget of about $1 million, has shifted from projects in Albany like 1974's six-volume, 4,000-page guide to New York's 210 state legislators to addressing a dozen or so major topics a year, and pushing hard for passage or defeat of two or three major issues each legislative session.

The group has also begun to concentrate on producing major reports, prepared by staff members over months or even years and designed to get maximum publicity. Recent reports have included such topics as toxic wastes in the Niagara River and student voting rights.

"We try to back up what we do in a written product," said Ross. "After all, we are a research group. It gives us a far better base to build our cases from. I think for the amount of paper we put out, we've had remarkably few problems."

But critics charge that errors in some reports undercut the group's effectiveness.

"Of course there are problems — there's no way with the great variety of people participating that there wouldn't be," Ms. Burstein said, "I've read some NYPIRG reports that struck me as simply meaningless and some I thought were just wrong."

The group has tried to improve its image by hiring qualified experts to plead its case on certain issues at the state Capitol.

Last year, it took lead roles in bills on the state's property tax assessment methods and on giving New York a returnable bottle law. Both attempts failed.

Malkin attributes many legislative defeats to strong industry and utility lobbying. He said he and his supporters are often outnumbered 20-to-1 by business lobbyists in the halls of the Capitol before a big vote.

Still, the group's officials admit they found themselves allied with industry on several legislative issues last year, such as the property tax fight and a series of measures to strengthen the state's toxic waste regulations.

Occasional alliances with organizations like the Business Council — the state's largest business lobbying group — show the acceptance the public interest group has gained among some special interest forces.

Most credit Ross for the stability and current strength of the group. At 38, he retains his enthusiasm, even though he's payed only $10,000 annually plus traveling expenses.

"I obviously don't do it for the money," said Ross, a former grammar school teacher in Harlem and once a member of the Peace Corps. "I guess I like the teaching and training."

"Donald Ross is the reason for NYPIRG's success," said David Langdon, a top aide to state Assembly Speaker Stanley Fink. "Few of the 'goo-goo' (good government) groups have the continuity of NYPIRG. Donald knows the Albany game and how to play it. And they've been able to come up with qualified experts on many issues — sometimes the most qualified experts there are."

Blasting quickens building demolition

SEATTLE (AP) — A 12-story building collapsed into a pile of rubble in about six seconds early Sunday when a series of explosions were used to demolish the structure to make way for a new skyscraper.

"Wasn't that fantastic!" said one of the hundreds of spectators who watched as explosives were set off to make the Olympic National Life Building collapse inward.

Neighboring buildings were shielded by plywood barricades and a row of large dump trucks, but two windows were broken and some pieces of plywood went sailing.

Chris Raftery, project superintendent for the Howard S. Wright Construction Co., the general contractor, estimated the firm saved $150,000 and at least six weeks of work by blasting instead of using the traditional wrecking ball and crane.

The site was cleared to make way for the 48-story First Interstate Center.

Crews were expected to take about a month to haul away the rubble.

The blasting began 40 minutes behind schedule because of a last-minute search of the building prompted by the discovery of footprints, said Harleigh Farwell, senior vice president of Wright.

But the crew determined the footprints were made by one of the contractor's workers, he added.

Raul Gutierrez with brush between his teeth, puts finishing touches on a seascape as his daughters, Norma, 2, left, and Sara, 4, look on.

Handicapped artist

By ROBERT MONTEMAYOR
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

VISTA, Calif. — It has been more than three years since Raul Gutierrez last hugged his wife, Ruth, and his 4-year-old daughter, Sara. He never has and never will have the opportunity to embrace his 2-year-old daughter, Norma.

At 28, his days are a series of demanding exercises — sitting up in a chair, eating, going to the bathroom or opening a door.

He looks at his family and longs for those days not too long ago when he could touch them, cradle them and he wonders to himself why it was his misfortune to lose both his arms in an agricultural accident in November 1978.

"I couldn't understand it. I would ask, 'Why me? Why me?' It was just my bad luck," Gutierrez said.

There were times, he said, when he wished he were dead, wished his wife and Sara had never had to see him in his debilitated condition.

He was deeply remorseful and depressed for months after his accident. "I was not a complete man," he said, "I couldn't believe I would never touch anything again."

His wife, who was 20 at the time of the accident, was so upset that she at first refused to see her armless husband.

The couple had had visions of a blissful marriage. They had planned to settle in a nice house in a small town south of Oaxaca, in southern Mexico. There they would be surrounded by relatives and friends. It all seemed so promising.

Today, Ruth has to help her husband out of bed, wash him, clothe him, feed him — generally be there throughout the day to assist him with activities that normally would be taken for granted.

"I still can't get used to the idea that my husband has no arms. I don't think I will ever get used to it," she said.

Doctors who helped with Gutierrez's rehabilitation said losses such as his are usually the most excruciating to come back from because of the obvious physical readjustments and, more importantly, the severe psychological trauma of accepting the fact they are crippled forever.

But Gutierrez's comeback has been remarkable, according to doctors and friends.

Before his accident, he had never held a paint brush in his hand. Today, Gutierrez paints beautiful landscape scenes of his native country and Southern California by clenching a paint brush between his teeth.

In the past year, Gutierrez has painted about 25 landscapes and sold about 10 for $60-$80 each.

"His whole countenance and attitude have just been miraculous," said Dr. Jay Fair, whose rehabilitation counseling firm helped Gutierrez learn to paint. "The kid is a cheerful lad now. He has a skill that he never expected that he would ever have. He's making some money selling paintings and he's pretty good."

Fair said Gutierrez's art has come along so well in such a short time that he is being pushed for membership in the International Association of Mouth and Foot Painting Artists, which provides the Christmas card covers for the United Nations International Children's fund, or UNICEF.

His craft still needs improvement, Fair said, but if he can gain admittance into the international art group, Gutierrez will be relatively assured of some steady income through his paintings.

Gutierrez undoubtedly would trade his prospective art shows for the agricultural field work he once did if he could have his arms back. But the field days are forever behind him now.

He and his family live in a modest frame-home north of Vista. When a reporter went to interview him, Gutierrez motioned his guest inside with his head and then walked over to the edge of the living room couch and balanced himself on the couch arm.

Gutierrez said he first came to the United States in 1975 when he was 22. He quickly found work in the avocado fields that blanket the hills around this city north of San Diego.

For three years he came, working for about eight months each year — then returning to Oaxaca with the money he had earned.

In November 1978 he was picking avocados from a tall tree and thinking about going home to his wife and playing with his 8-month-old daughter, Sara, when he almost lost his life.

He said he and five other workers, including his brother, Floriberto, were picking avocados at the time. He said he was standing atop a ladder and was using 10-foot "pullers" — an aluminum tool with snips on the end used to cut down avocados.

Unknown to him, Gutierrez said, there was a 12,000-volt electrical line running through the tree, camouflaged by the thick foliage.

All Gutierrez remembers is staring straight up into the tree, watching his pullers approach an avocado before he blacked out.

Gutierrez's aluminum snips touched the deadly wire, shooting a massive current of electricity through his body. His brother and the other workers stared in helpless horror as Gutierrez's hands were welded to the pullers and he dangled about eight feet off the ground, crackling with electricity.

Somehow the current was broken, he said, and he fell to the ground. His arms and shoulders were charred. His back was severely burned, and his left leg was left gnarled.

Four days later, Gutierrez said, he awoke in a hospital feeling numb and woozy. As he opened his eyes, he said, he was unable to feel the absence of his arms, which the doctors had amputated.

"I never saw the wire. I never knew what hit me," he recalled. "It was my brother, Floriberto, who told me that my arms had been taken off. It was strange. I couldn't feel anything there."

He sank into a deep state of depression as he began to realize all the simple things he had once done and would never do again.

"I was sad, I was frustrated. I couldn't hold anything again. I thought, 'I won't be able to help my kids with school.'"

He spent nine months in three hospitals. His wife and only daughter at the time came to San Diego to be with him as he began the painful process of making do with what he had left.

His right arm and collar bone are completely gone. A portion of his left collar bone remains, and he uses it to anchor a prosthetic arm that he uses to eat with and for other purposes.

The first difficulty he noticed was his lack of balance. "I couldn't walk without falling down. I would take one or two steps and fall over," he said.

But slowly and surely, he progressed. His mental fortitude and his youth, according to Fair, were elements that greatly aided his rehabilitation.

"He was more receptive and a better candidate than other catastrophic-type injury cases," he said. "It usually takes longer, sometimes years, for catastrophic cases to be functional again."

Gutierrez's resiliency and drive continued to impress his counselors, Fair said.

"He was away from his family, he was in a foreign country and he was injured in a way that he didn't understand how or why. Nobody to this date knows why he is still alive. It should have killed him."

The rehabilitation program involved his wife as much as it did Gutierrez, Fair said.

Mrs. Gutierrez said she first fought it, refusing to accept the fact that in the prime of her life she was destined to take care of a man who would be greately dependent on her.

"I felt terrible when I went to the hospital," she said. "He wasn't what he used to be. He would tell me that he would prefer to die than stay what he was. He would ask me, 'How am I going to work?'

"I kept thinking why it had to be him. Why was he the one with the bad luck? I was sad. We both realized he would never embrace his daughters," she said.

She has settled into her new role now, she said, despite an occasional bad dream about the accident. "Whatever he wants, I will get it for him."

The injury also did not keep the couple from having another child, Norma, two years ago.

Said Fair: "The relationship began to improve considerably. She and he have both matured far behond their years."

Gutierrez admits he is lucky to be alive. A devout Catholic, he said he prays that he will always have the strength to provide for his family. His art has helped.

"There were people who told me I could do it, and I did."

WILD RIVER CANYON IS FOR SALE

Bids are being sought for over 14 acres of C-3 zoned land, appraised at over $2,000,000, located near the southeast corner of Andrews Highway and Loop 250 and which contains Wild River Canyon theme park. Approximately 10 building are included in the sale, along with numerous water structures. Personal property and equipment are not included unless bids specifically state.

The property is ideal for continued use as a theme park, or for conversion to apartments, condominiums, townhouses or office and commercial use.

Plans are available for conversion of the park land and adjacent 30 acres, also zoned C-3 into an office complex. In addition the numerous landscaping improvements, waterways, and existing buildings make the site ideal for an architecturally pleasing apartment, condominium or townhouse development.

Separate bids are being solicited for personal property and equipment, arcade equipment, architecutural specialties and ride equipment. Minimum bid on any grouping of these items is $5000. Items will not be sold on a piecemeal basis.

Bids and inquries from serious parties may be directed to:
