Serbs take Muslim village

Bihac's mayor fears 'slaughter' if town falls

■ U.N. demands cease-fire, withdrawal from Bihac.

Associated Press

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Rebel Serbs captured a Muslim village Saturday and battled troops defending the last government stronghold in northwest Bosnia as the United Nations tried to negotiate a cease-fire.

Angry leaders of the Muslim-led government said the fate of 70,000 mostly Muslim residents of the town of Bihac was up to the United Nations. The mayor of the greater Bihac region said residents were in panic, and he anticipated a "slaughter" if the town fell to the Serbs.

The U.N. Security Council late Saturday night demanded an immediate cease-fire and a Serb withdrawal from the Bihac enclave. Its non-binding statement, adopted by consensus, didn't threaten the use of force against the Serbs.

Lotto winner?

No tickets correctly matched all six numbers drawn Saturday night for the twice-weekly Lotto Texas game, state lottery officials said. The numbers drawn Saturday night from a field of 50 were: 20, 22, 35, 38, 41, and 45. Lottery officials estimate the jackpot for Wednesday night's game will be $10 million.

A Pennsylvanian holds the winning ticket to Wednesday night's $10 million Texas Lotto drawing, but lottery officials may not pay the jackpot because of the way the ticket was purchased. A New Jersey-based firm called Pic-A-State Lottery Service announced Friday that a customer ordered the winning Texas ticket at a hardware store in Croydon, Pa./5B

Prospective jurors don't buy innocent until proven guilty

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The prospective juror scratched his head when asked if he understood that O.J. Simpson was presumed innocent.

"I really don't get it," the man confessed. "I think he should be required to prove his innocence."

He is not alone.

Judge Lance Ito has expressed concern that 95 percent of prospective Simpson jurors filling out questionnaires disagreed with two tenets of American jurisprudence: the presumption of innocence and the prosecution's burden of proof — the requirement that the state prove a defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt or set him free.

"People believe where there's smoke there's fire," said Loyola University law professor Laurie Levenson. "If someone is arrested they must have done something."

That belief collides with Americans' wariness of the power of the state, leading jurors to confusion.

"We as a people don't trust the government," defense lawyer Harland Braun said. "We put the burden of proof on the government because we are afraid they are going to convict innocent people. We want the government to prove guilt beyond a reasonable doubt."

Holiday weekend lures shoppers to kick off of Christmas season

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

Fueled from Thanksgiving, consumers packed the stores Friday and Saturday to kick off the beginning of the Christmas shopping season.

"It's like opening up the floodgates," a sales clerk at an electronics store said.

The wall-to-wall shoppers didn't seem to bother Esther Hernandez, 15, and her sisters and mother at Midland Park Mall Friday. "Shopping is what we love to do," she said.

"It just seemed like a good day to shop," Esther said. "Apparently, everyone else thought so."

In light of the crowds, some merchants who were contacted said sales were up; others said sales were down slightly from last year at this time.

Family leaves door unlocked year after daughter's death

By Tonie Miller-Uzzel
Staff Writer

It's been one year since 21-year-old Angela Perkins-Belcher was killed on her son's birthday. One year since two children lost their mother. One year since two parents lost their baby girl.

Doesn't sound like there is much to be thankful for this Thanksgiving weekend.

But, Angela's parents, Tony and Janice, don't subscribe to that line of thought.

Neither of them share the same enthusiasm for the holiday they had before, but they both said they still give thanks.

"I always think about it.

"Usually, a few days before (Thanksgiving) I have my house full of kids and grandkids. But it don't seem right," Mrs. Belcher said. "I'm not ready for it. Last year, this was our last Thanksgiving together — that's when it

In memory of Angela

EDITOR'S NOTE: Tony Belcher, father of Angela Perkins-Belcher, wrote this in memory of his daughter, who was murdered Nov. 26, 1993. He wrote it on Nov. 18 before attending a Survivors of Homicide support group meeting.

Somewhere in the distance a baby is born into the cold of the night. At the same moment, a baby leaves this world for no reason, such a shame, what a bad way to live. Time keeps moving on, but the minute hand is still.

Again, I'm lost in the countless night hours of despair, trying to travel the lonely highway of life. I cry out your name, my child, but there is no answer. In calling your name, I learned the difference between holding a hand and chaining a soul. This past year, little by little, I begin to realize that love does not always mean leaning and company does not always mean security.

After the loss of you, my child, I thought that I had suffered a defeat. After looking at your offspring that begin with me, I just grow stronger. My child, you see, I'm building my road for today. Tomorrow's ground is much too uncertain for plans.

I will endure just like the sunshine. As a child, we learned that it will burn if we got too close. My spirit is like water. It is formed, yes, it is a great force. My flowers have been planted and I will endure.

Refugees clash with troops, Rwandans die

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — At least 15 Rwandans were killed an' 65 wounded in clashes with Zairian troops near one of the largest refugee camps in eastern Zaire, a U.N. official said Saturday.

The Katale camp, home to 200,000 refugees, was calm Saturday, but tension remained high in the nearby Zairian town of Rutshuru, said Joel Boutroue, head of the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees office in Goma, Zaire.

Aid workers left during the fighting, even though it was not directed at them, but returned on Saturday, he said.

The trouble started following a spate of robberies of Zairian businessmen and thefts of motor vehicles during the week, Boutroue said.

Zairian troops set up a road block to prevent the refugees from traveling toward Rutshuru, six miles to the north.

"The refugees then erected their own road block and the situation degenerated from there," Boutroue said.

In London, the Foreign Office said it was investigating reports a British aid worker might have been kidnapped, but it was not known whether the disappearance was related to the clashes.

The man is a driver with Glasgow-based charity Assist, the British Press Association news agency reported Saturday. His truck was found with its engine running and the doors open, it said.

Presidents of Zaire, Rwanda and Burundi were to meet this weekend to discuss the problems of 1.2 million Rwandan refugees in Zaire. The U.N. Security Council was also to consider whether to send troops to restore order in the camps.

The camps are effectively controlled by leaders of the defeated Rwandan government and by tens of thousands of extremist Hutu militiamen and soldiers, including those suspected of committing the worst massacres in Rwanda.

They prevent refugees from returning home and make it difficult for relief workers to carry out their duties safely.

'Comfort women' tell their true tales of horror, misery in report

By Elizabeth Olson
Associated Press

GENEVA — Confined to tiny cubicles, fed scraps, forbidden to talk to others, repeatedly raped, often beaten and left untreated for rampant venereal disease, tens of thousands of women spent World War II as sex slaves for Japanese soldiers.

Their wartime ordeal was ignored for nearly 50 years, in part because the women, many of whom were teen-agers in the 1940s, were ashamed to speak out. Often feeling they were somehow to blame for being "comfort women," they were ostracized by family and friends and afraid to marry.

Now in their 60s and 70s, the women are telling their stories. They have little to lose. Many live on the margins of society, ill and with no families to support them.

'Many times I would hear other women in that comfort station screaming and crying out in pain. But I was never allowed to go and see or talk to any of them.'

— Gertrude Balisalisa, former 'comfort woman'

Their stories were told in a report issued last week by the International Commission of Jurists, a U.N. human-rights group based in Geneva. More than 40 victims and three former soldiers talked to the two legal experts who compiled the report.

Among those who talked was Gertrude Balisalisa of the Philippines, whose life was destroyed by her sexual servitude.

The horror began when she was grabbed by soldiers who threatened to kill her two babies. "The choice was either to do it or to die," she recalled.

She was taken to an army barracks where for the next 14 months she was raped daily, by the barracks commander and his friends, she said.

She was also beaten and kicked and suffered "severe constant pain" from the unrelenting sex, but never received medical treatment.

"Many times I would hear other women in that comfort station screaming and crying out in pain. But I was never allowed to go and see or talk to any of them. I wanted to scream myself several times but I refrained for fear that they would inflict more harm and injury on me," she said.

"I wanted to live at any cost so as to see my two little daughters."

After the war, her husband called her a "left-over." Then, "one day when I had gone out marketing, I returned to find the house empty."

Her husband sent the children to live elsewhere. "I have not seen them since the day my husband sent them away," she said.

Now Ms. Balisalisa, who once studied to be a lawyer, barely supports herself by tutoring schoolchildren, and lacks money for medical treatment.

"I had locked the secret away in the bottom of my heart," she said, but decided to speak out after seeing on television another woman tell of her suffering.

That decision cost her income because parents of some of her pupils refused to let them continue with her.

Troops leave Somalia; fear grows among aid workers

N.Y. Times News Service

UNITED NATIONS — As U.N. peacekeeping troops prepare to withdraw from Somalia with no political settlement in sight, fears are spreading among aid organizations that their departure will open the way for looting, violence and the destruction of recently established relief programs that have improved life for many Somalis.

CARE has recently pulled all its workers out of outlying towns and cities, leaving only a small contingent in Mogadishu, the capital.

U.N. refugee and relief agencies met recently in Nairobi, Kenya, to plan a strategy for their widely scattered workers, who will have no international police protection or ready access to aircraft for evacuation after the peacekeeping troops leave.

Because of concern for the safety of troops and equipment, the United Nations is not making public the timetable for the phased withdrawal of about 15,000 soldiers and experts.

But U.N. officials here and in the region say that the troops from around the country have already been consolidated in three staging areas — Mogadishu, Kismayu and Baidoa — and that they will begin leaving the country as soon as transportation is available.

India's contingent, with more than 4,700 soldiers, is due to leave first.

Under a Security Council resolution passed on Nov. 4, all troops are to be withdrawn by March 31. Officials here say that they may all be gone by February, more than two years after the U.S. military arrived to safeguard the delivery of relief supplies to Somalis suffering from famine and a civil war that erupted in 1991.

Evangelist denies promises to heal sick Cambodians

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — A Texas evangelist who fled Cambodia denied he promised to perform faith-healing miracles there, and claimed instead Saturday that he left after reports guerrillas planned to kill him.

Angry Cambodians rioted outside the Phnom Penh hotel of the Rev. Mike Evans on Friday, accusing him of swindling thousands of sick, blind and paralyzed people who came from remote areas to his prayer meetings.

Evans, of Euless, Texas, held two prayer rallies this week at Phnom Penh's Olympic Stadium. He said Cambodia's interior minister canceled a rally Friday, citing intelligence reports the Khmer Rouge planned to bomb it and kill him.

Friday night, police had to hold back a crowd trying to storm the Hotel Cambodiana, where Evans was staying. He said police drove him to the airport at 4 a.m. Saturday and put him on a flight to Bangkok.

People in the crowd told reporters they wanted compensation after Evans failed to perform faith-healing. Extensive radio and TV advertising for his five-day visit promised that "Blind eyes will open, the paralyzed will walk."

"Nothing has happened to us ... our people sold their housing materials and cattle for their trip to Phnom Penh," said Men Soryan, 20.

Evans expressed sympathy, but insisted his advertising promised no miracles. He said he stressed at a news conference before the rallies that he "could not heal a mosquito."

Staff Report

Today's forecast calls for sunny skies with a high in the mid-50s and west to northwest winds 15 to 25 mph and gusty, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Tonight will be clear and cold with a hard freeze, the low in the mid-20s.

After an overnight low of 51, Saturday's high was 78 compared with the record high for that date of 83 set in 1990. The record low for today's date was 13 in 1993.

STATE

Mostly cloudy skies prevailed over Texas on Saturday with temperatures mostly in the 70s and 80s in West and South Texas.

Widespread dense fog that blanketed North Texas Saturday had mostly dissipated by noon. By afternoon only a few patchy areas of fog remained. Nearly all of North Texas had mostly cloudy to cloudy skies.

Afternoon skies were partly cloudy across South Texas. Temperatures were mostly in the mid 80s. Winds were gusty at 15 to 20 mph.

Pacific moisture continued to flow across New Mexico into West Texas resulting in mostly cloudy to occasionally cloudy skies. About the only area with sunny skies was the Northwest Texas Panhandle and over El Paso.

The forecast for North Texas calls for decreasing cloudiness today with scattered thunderstorms early in the Central and Eastern areas. It will be cooler and windy in all areas. Lows tonight will be in the 30s. Highs will range from 53 to 63.

The forecast calls for partly cloudy skies today. Temperatures will rise to the mid 70s before falling to near 60 by late afternoon. Winds will become gusty around noon as a cold front enters South Texas.

The West Texas Panhandle forecast calls for colder temperatures through tonight. Mostly sunny across the region, then fair and cold through tonight. Highs in the low 40s to near 70. Lows tonight in the upper teens to upper 30s.

NATION

A powerful storm spread heavy snow across the Western mountains Saturday, while lighter snow fell in parts of New England and strong winds whipped across the Southwest.

In Southern California, a blustery storm spawned a mini-twister that damaged roofs on five businesses in Vernon, near Los Angeles. A boater without a life jacket was thrown into high, wind-whipped seas along the Los Angeles County coast and later died.

Powerful winds also blew across the region's mountains, deserts and coastal waters. Gusts up to 100 mph were reported at Monument Peak in eastern San Diego County, the National Weather Service said

Wind up to 40 mph blew through the deserts of southern Arizona. At higher elevations, in the White Mountains of east-central Arizona, gusts reached 63 mph at Show Low.

Farther north, storms were moving eastward, with the heaviest snowfall in eastern sections of Montana, Wyoming and Colorado.

Earlier in the day and late Friday, snow fell across parts of Oregon, Nevada, Idaho, Montana, Wyoming and Utah, and in the Sierra Nevada of California.

Salt Lake City had 6 inches of snow on the ground during the morning Saturday. In the Utah mountains, the Snowbird ski resort had 9 inches and Alta got 12.

The heaviest snow fell Friday in the Sierra Nevada, where Interstate 80 across the mountains was closed for about eight hours at Donner Pass. The highway was open Saturday, but tire chains were required in places.

A mile west of Donner Pass, at an elevation of 7,000 feet, the storm brought the month's accumulation at the town of Norden to a record 72 inches. The previous record snowfall for November at Norden was 66 inches, set in 1951, said meteorologist Mike Pechner of KCBS-TV, citing Southern Pacific Railroad records.

Up to 4 feet of snow fell at ski resorts around the Lake Tahoe area on the California-Nevada state line.

Ahead of the storm, cold wind whipped across the northern Plains as a weak arctic high pressure moved southward. Morning temperatures were between zero and 10 degrees, and wind blowing at 15 to 20 mph dropped the chill factor close to 20 below zero.

In the East, snow showers tapered off in New England after leaving accumulations of 5 to 6 inches overnight in northeastern New York and Vermont.

THANKS: Family mourns daughter's death

Following the Belcher family's Thanksgiving in 1993, Angela went to the Zodiac Club. She was shot and killed there about 1 a.m. Nov. 26 — the day after Thanksgiving — which was also her son's birthday.

"That little boy doesn't even talk about his birthday," Mrs. Belcher said.

"He knows. We don't tell him 'happy birthday,' we just tell him 'birthday,'" Belcher said.

Angela's son, Toravian, turned 5 Saturday.

For the most part, the holiday followed the family's usual pattern. Instead of hosting the family gathering, the Belchers visited other relatives.

A new tradition was added in honor of Angela — rose petals were dispersed at the Zodiac Club where she died. The family also visited her grave.

This year it would have been Angela's turn to read the Scriptures at the meal, Belcher said. Someone else took that duty.

Belcher said he gave thanks that he still had three other children and nine grandchidren.

"Since last Thanksgiving, we lost a daughter, but we were blessed with a new granddaughter in October," Belcher said.

Mrs. Belcher said she is thankful that she was able to forgive her daughter's killer.

"I was at the altar Sunday. It was hard, but I knew I had to do it," Mrs. Belcher said. "I'm also thankful for the jury that convicted her."

Although it has been a year since Angela died, there is still some things left undone.

Belcher said his family always left a door open for family members to come and go; the last person home would lock it.

Belcher said, once he locked it and when his wife asked him "why" he told her "no one was coming home."

"It took more for me to unlock it than to lock it," he said.

But, the door stays unlocked.

"I'm still trying to lock that door. It has been a year that it hasn't been locked," Mrs. Belcher said.

Some doors will be locked this holiday season — the doors that restrain Angela's killer — Sherry Henderson. She was found guilty of murder and sentenced to 50 years in prison in August.

"It makes it easier to know where she was this Thanksgiving," Belcher said.

"I still want to confront her and ask her why. When I know why I'll feel lots better," Mrs. Belcher said. "I don't want to do her no harm, I just want to know why."

During the trial, Ms. Henderson said she had the gun — which she used to kill Angela — to defend herself from an abusive ex-husband. She claimed she shot Angela for beating Ms. Henderson's sister.

The passing of a year since the murder has not lessened the pain for the family.

"I cry every night," Mrs. Belcher said. "People said it gets easier — it don't get easier. Anyone who has ever lost a child knows that . . . time is no help."

Belcher said the county's Crisis Intervention Unit and The Survivors of Homicide support group have helped the family keep its sanity through all the grief.

"It was the best thing to happen to us after the murder," Belcher said.

The Survivors of Homicide support group was organized by Lydia Frescaz, the mother of a murder victim.

"It seems like every time I was down Lydia would call. She's been a big help; the whole group has," Mrs. Belcher said.

"People say time heals; it won't heal this," Belcher said. "But, it will close the wound up. Every time I look at Toravian and Shertoria (Angela's children), she's always there."

"We talk about her every day. I don't want her kids to forget her," Mrs. Belcher said.

This memory of a dead daughter is what inspires the Belchers to keep their pain in the public light.

"I want parents out there now to know whatever they're going through with their kids — it's not that bad. You can always stop what you're doing and turn around and hug that child.

"For the parents who can't, I want them to know there is somewhere they can go," Belcher said, referring to the Survivors of Homicide group, which meets every other Thursday in the Midland County Law Enforcement Building.

"I don't want our group to grow. But, for those who need us it is comforting to know there is a mother who feels like that mother and a father who feels like that father," Belcher said.

"As long as you've got your kids in the world, no matter how rough it is, if you can reach out and touch them there is always hope," he said.

"I get tired of wearing a fake smile when I'm hurting inside," Mrs. Belcher said. "People ask me how I'm doing and I have to lie and say I'm doing OK."

"We will persevere. We will survive. We have lots to be thankful for. There was no split in our family; it got tighter. And our reunions will go on, just in a different place," Belcher said.

(From 1A)

Bosnia's U.N. ambassador, Muhamed Sacirbey, dismissed the effort, and criticized NATO and U.N. forces for their lack of action.

"There clearly seems to be a lack of political will" to defend Bihac, Sacirbey said. "The military resources are there."

Before the statement was adopted, Russia, a traditional Serb ally, had warned against "creating the impression of the United Nations force virtually taking the side of one of the parties of the conflict."

Three U.S. warships with about 3,600 U.S. sailors and Marines aboard were headed closer to the scene of Europe's worst conflict since World War II. A Pentagon official said the troops were on their way to the Adriatic Sea to provide support for rescuing any downed NATO pilots.

Western military sources, speaking on condition of anonymity, said NATO plans for more air action Saturday were vetoed by U.N. officials who feared it would scuttle attempts to reach a negotiated settlement. The sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity, wouldn't elaborate.

U.N. commanders have been loathe to flex NATO's military muscle for fear of reprisals against the 24,000 peacekeepers in Bosnia.

"There is a limit to how much force we can use in a peacekeeping mission," the U.N. commander in Bosnia, Lt. Gen. Sir Michael Rose, told the British Broadcasting Corp. "The United Nations has not said it would defend anything."

In Serb-held central Bosnia, NATO pilots said they were fired at by a surface-to-air missile Saturday while flying regular patrols. U.N. sources said the attack occurred over Donji Vakuf, 50 miles northwest of Sarajevo, as two British Tornadoes were flying overhead to enforce the "no-fly" zone over Bosnia. There was no hit, and the pilots returned safely to their base in Italy.

The Serbs refused to see Yasushi Akashi, the top U.N. official in former Yugoslavia, sending a message that there was "no reason for him to come," according to U.N. sources.

Rose himself was rebuffed when he showed up at the presidency building. The Bosnian prime minister, Haris Silajdzic, walked out saying U.N. officials were "responsible for the deaths of 70,000 people."

To ward off NATO attacks, the Serbs continued detaining or restricting the movements of more than 200 U.N. peacekeepers around Sarajevo, another U.N.-designated safe haven where Serbs have also increased sniping.

INNOCENT: Potential jurors question burden of proof

they understand Simpson is innocent until proven guilty. In their next breath, they say they'd like to hear him testify. He has pleaded innocent to murder charges in the slaying of ex-wife Nicole Brown Simpson and her friend Ronald Goldman.

"Do you understand that O.J. Simpson doesn't have to do anything in this trial?" defense lawyer Robert Shapiro has asked jury prospects. "He can sit over there and take a nap if he wants to."

So much for the idea that the defense need not present any evidence if the prosecution's case is inadequate and that the defendant needn't testify.

"We all mouth these words," Levenson said. "But the legalese doesn't mean anything to people. The term 'presumption of innocence' is overused in our society. It's like 'in God we trust.' No one stops to think what it means."

It could mean more for Simpson than for most defendants.

"People just don't want to believe in his guilt. He's probably getting more reasonable doubt than most," said Leslie Abramson, who represents Erik Menendez in another celebrated murder case.

No matter what the law says, not everyone gets that advantage.

"There's such hostility toward anyone charged with a crime these days," Abramson said. "Everything in our society tells us the important thing is to catch criminals. People don't want to spend money on trials."

Abramson said she always asks prospective jurors if they agree it is better for 10 guilty men to go free than for one innocent man to be wrongly convicted. Many don't understand, thinking it's some sort of tradeoff.

Why do people have such difficulty grasping these concepts?

"Our public education system has never tried to teach people much about the Bill of Rights and their meaning," said Peter Arenella, a law professor at the University of California at Los Angeles.

"People don't understand that 'I didn't do it' is not the only defense," Abramson said. "For them, everything is a whodunit. The whydunits are far too subtle for the public and the media."

As for the prospective juror who thought Simpson should prove his innocence, defense attorney Carl Douglas extracted from him a grudging promise to follow the law even though he insisted to the last that he disagreed with it. The man is still in the pool of potential alternate jurors.

SHOP: Consumers hit stores for Christmas

(From 1A)

The store's five-hour "blitz sale" Friday morning proved popular. "We substituted a lot of items it went so well," Holmes said.

But Wal-Mart was ready.

"We staffed it up. We were running every register by 10 a.m.," Holmes said. The store has 38 registers.

Service Merchandise manager Dusty Roach said his store also did "very good" despite national reports that consumer shopping was expected to decrease 10 percent this holiday season compared to last year.

Roach pointed out that it appeared other merchants increased advertisements to offset the anticipation of sales being down.

And indeed, sales at some stores were not quite as brisk as had been hoped, some merchants admitted.

"We had good crowds . . . but it wasn't as good as last year," said Beall's manager, Scott Zetak.

Nevertheless, local merchants have high expectations for the weeks to come.

Richard Forman, manager of the 50 OFF store — where business has been "going good since we opened this store" in February — said he anticipates a slight lull the next week or two before a Christmas shopping rush.

"Christmas Eve being on a Saturday will probably make it the biggest day of the year," he said.

The day after Thanksgiving may be the beginning of the holiday shopping season, but it's not always the busiest.

"It's a misnomer. There's a lot of Saturdays in December that are bigger," said Dillard's manager Mike Richmond. Nevertheless, Dillard's had a "very good" weekend.

Carol Hernandez and her mother-in-law, Idolina Hernandez, both from Lubbock, made it evident that the shopping season has just begun.

"We've still got a long way," said Carol, as she stood besides a stroller holding her 2½-year-old son Gabriel — and bags of purchases from Midland Park Mall.

The two hit the stores Friday "because everything's on sale."

Militants rally against self-rule government

GAZA CITY, Gaza Strip (AP) — In a show of force against Yasser Arafat's self-rule government, 20,000 Islamic activists poured into a rally Saturday to roar their support for continuing attacks against Israel.

"What road are you taking?" an announcer asked the activists on a crowded soccer field.

"Holy war! Holy war! Holy war!" they responded.

Speakers demanded the dismantling of all Gaza settlements, home to 4,000 Jews. They also demanded a halt to arrests of Islamic activists and a dialogue among all political groups.

Two Israeli helicopters that buzzed the rally brought the crowd to a fever pitch. "We want to die for the sake of our God!" the activists screamed.

The rally came eight days after Palestinian police fired on Muslim rioters outside the Palestine Mosque, leaving 14 people dead and 150 wounded.

The two-hour gathering Saturday, officially a memorial service for the founder of the Islamic armed underground shot by Israeli soldiers a year ago, was unruly but not violent.

Rally organizers said the Islamic opposition was saving its bullets for Israeli targets.

Under an agreement between the self-rule government and the Islamic opposition, Palestinian police agreed to keep a low profile if the militants avoided parading their weapons and didn't stir up the crowd against Arafat.

There were infractions on both sides, but no gunfire. Organizers accused Palestinian police of blocking buses trying to reach the rally from the southern Gaza Strip.

The battle cries against Israel gradually switched to severe attacks on Arafat, who was accused of shirking responsibility for the shootings by Palestinian police. PLO leaders say Islamic agitators had fired first, a charge prayer leaders demand they prove.

"This is your peace, Arafat. It is massacres and assassination," said Sheik Ahmed Bahr, prayer leader of the Palestine Mosque.

The rally, postponed for a day because of rain, was seen as a response by Islamic groups to a gathering of more than 10,000 Arafat supporters Monday.

During that event, Arafat allowed armed members of the Fatah Hawks, his loyalists, to parade with their arms. That was considered a threat to the Islamic opposition.

The two main Islamic opposition groups, Islamic Jihad and the Islamic Resistance Movement, or Hamas, have staged attacks on Israeli targets over the past two months in an attempt to derail the Israel-PLO self-rule accord.

Arafat's administration, seeking to spread the accord throughout the occupied West Bank, wants to crack down on the violence.

The rally marked the anniversary of the killing of Imad Akel, founder of Izzedine Al-Qassam, the armed underground of Hamas.

Akel, 23, was at the top of Israel's most-wanted list and was accused of killing 11 Israeli soldiers, an Israeli civilian and four suspected Palestinian informers.

U.S. oil giant provides hope to Arctic town

N.Y. Times News Service

NOVY PORT, Russia — It was lunchtime in this downtrodden Arctic fishing village and the sun had already begun to set. Dawn broke a few hours earlier and a huge blizzard was on the way. The temperature was 27 degrees below zero.

None of that bothered the villagers. They had other things to talk about at a meeting in the settlement's unheated culture center. Their water is polluted. They have no jobs. The annual fish catch is half what it was a decade ago. Cancer rates are soaring and the local government has had its budget cut three years in a row.

"We are sitting here without light or heat," one woman shouted, her voice muffled by the scarf she wore around her throat. "We are drinking the water we use to wash ourselves. We need a power station. Our children are sick. How do you expect us to live this way?"

Two hundred pairs of eyes focused on one man. He sat without a coat or hat in a room where everyone else was in mittens, wool and Arctic fur, and took notes on a legal pad.

Although such complaints could be heard in almost any nearby village, he was not a local politician or the representative of any national group. He was not even Russian. But these people are not stupid. If their broken lives are ever going to get patched together again, it will probably be because of Garry Howe, and the company he works for: Amoco.

The giant oil company has come here to develop the biggest untapped gas field on earth. The company wants to build a $15 billion pipeline to Europe through what may be the most hostile and ecologically sensitive environment any oil company has ever seen.

No American company can turn up in this remote place, spend billions of dollars over decades, without changing the lives of everyone around. The exhausted people of Novy Port know that. They just want to make sure it's a change for the better. Howe and his company are going to spend a lot of money in Russia, and they think its about time they got their share.

"We have come to listen to your concerns and answer your questions," Howe, a vice president who works as a negotiator, told the group through an interpreter. "The time to find out where the problems are is now, before we drill, before we sign an agreement, before we start. We can't solve all your problems. But if we don't know what they are we can't solve any of them."

Enraged by decades of Soviet geologists and oil rigs that have ripped their fragile region to shreds, people here have reason to be wary of development.

They may be isolated — 1,400 miles northeast of Moscow, on the edge of the Yamal Peninsula where the devastated Ob River flows icily toward the Kara Sea — but they know firsthand about oil spills and radiation and how to drink their own bath water.

AP Laserphoto

By Brian Murphy
Associated Press

VATICAN CITY — Clergymen who will help select the next pontiff knelt before Pope John Paul II on Saturday to receive the red hat of cardinal and hear praise for what some have endured: gulag prison camps and bloodshed in Bosnia.

"In Rome, you have the history of the early Christian martyrs. Today, you had some living martyrs," said one of the 30 new cardinals, Archbishop William Keeler of Baltimore. Another American also was elevated to cardinal, Detroit Archbishop Adam Maida.

Some of the new cardinals are struggling to rebuild their lives and the church after decades of persecution in former authoritarian regimes such as Albania and the Soviet Union. Others traveled to the Vatican from Sarajevo, Communist-ruled Cuba and the poverty of Africa and Asia.

It also broadens John Paul's imprint on the conclave. During his 16-year papacy, he has named 100 of the 120 cardinals under 80 years old and eligible to vote for pope, many of whom may share his conservative views on issues such as birth control and the ban on women priests.

"Your presence is a great sign of hope," the pope told the new cardinals. "It shows that the whole church stands beside those who suffer."

As the pope read the list of the new cardinals — first announced Oct. 30 — the 6,000 people in the main Vatican auditorium applauded. The ovation grew when he reached the names of those once jailed in the Soviet bloc, Cuba and Vietnam. Many people rose to their feet when the pope announced Vinko Puljic, the archbishop of Sarajevo, where the pope had to cancel a visit in September.

"I am thinking in particular of the Christians of Sarajevo and Bosnia-Herzegovina," the pontiff said. "The devastating roar of weapons has not yet ceased and so much innocent blood continues to be shed without any prospect for peace in sight."

The pope, who confronted the communist regime in his native Poland, took special note of others who have "had to endure the oppression of an atheistic totalitarian regime."

One new cardinal, Archbishop Kazimierz Swiatek of Minsk, Belarus, spent nearly 10 years in Soviet prisons. The archbishop of Prague, Miloslav Vlk, was harassed by secret police under the Communists and washed windows for a living. Archbishop Jaime Lucas Ortega y Alamino of Cuba spent a year in a labor camp in the mid-1960s.

Paul Joseph Pham Dinh Tung, the archbishop of Hanoi, Vietnam, was put under house arrest by communist rulers from 1963 to 1989.

Children judge Santa Claus contestants

By Doug Mellgren
Associated Press

DRAMMEN, Norway — They climbed over fences, scampered across rooftops, slid down chimneys and then, with belly-shaking chuckle, named a world champion.

The winner?

Santa Claus, of course.

Who else could win the Santa Claus World Cup on Saturday in the southern Norwegian city of Drammen? There was also a musical competition, which ended in a three-way tie — between Santa, Santa and Santa.

About 30 jolly St. Nicks in red suits, white beards and floppy red hats frolicked in the cold, clear afternoon. About 200 children watched, seeming unperturbed by the thought that there might not be just one Santa.

"There are many, but not too many," said Stephanie Lathsach, one of three 8-year-olds in elf costumes who judged the competition.

"I look at the way they move," said Martha Bjornoy-Jarlen, another 8-year-old judge.

"Skis. I want skis," she told one Santa, making sure he noted it in his book. Then, her face smeared by Christmas cookies, she moved to another Santa.

"Skis. I want skis," she repeated.

Santa Claus events are a tradition in Drammen, 25 miles south of Oslo. Last year, the town put together a choir of 1,000 Santas to promote itself.

Wivi Martinsen, one of the organizers, told the crowd what was needed in a champion Santa.

"They have to be big and round. They must be able to make people happy, and above all, they must be very, very, very fond of children," she said.

Organizers promised Santas from 10 countries, but only one foreigner, an American, showed up. And he's lived in Drammen for six years.

"I was drafted," said the Santa in the U.S. flag suit. He's also know as William Vazquez, 35 and originally from San Francisco.

It was his first time out as Santa, and he was winded after waddling through the course.

"It's tough with all this padding," he said.

"We are going to boycott any country that eats reindeer," said Martinsen.

But wouldn't that mean boycotting Norway, where people love reindeer meat?

"You're right," she admitted. "That's a problem."

Memorial services remember slain law enforcement officers

WASHINGTON (AP) — In a somber processional, hundreds of police cars, their blue lights flashing, coiled past the nation's monuments Saturday after two fallen law enforcement officers were memorialized as heroes in "the battle against evil."

The caravan rolled past the Washington Monument within sight of the White House, and circled police headquarters where a Washington homicide sergeant and two FBI agents were shot to death Tuesday afternoon.

A mile-and-a-half long, the motorcade paralyzed traffic as it accompanied the body of Police Sergeant Henry Joseph Daly to its final resting place across Memorial Bridge in Arlington National Cemetery.

Earlier, simultaneous memorial services were held in Virginia for Daly, 51, and in Maryland for slain FBI Agent Michael John Miller, 41. Also remembered on Saturday was the third slain law enforcement officer, FBI Agent Martha Dixon Martinez, 35, who will be buried near Pittsburgh on Monday.

"Thank God for Michael, Martha and Hank, who were willing to serve," FBI Director Louis Freeh said at Miller's service, which was attended also by Attorney General Janet Reno.

The three officers were shot to death when 25-year-old Bennie Lee Lawson walked into the third-floor offices used by the "cold case" homicide squad and opened fire with a compact assault-style firearm, police said. Two other people were wounded. Lawson died in the attack.

The slayings inside the supposedly safe environment of the police department shocked the city known as the nation's murder capital for the past five years and prompted an outpouring of fellow officers from numerous jurisdictions.

As the crowd grew outside St. Phillip's Church in Falls Church, where Daly's funeral mass was held, a bystander commented: "There is no single church large enough for this."

The church was filled to capacity. An honor guard of more than 100 remained outside during the ceremony. A spillover crowd of hundreds more watched a television relay at an auditorium in nearby Falls Church High School.

Inside St. Phillip's, the chaplain of the District's Metropolitan Police Department, the Rev. Salvatore Criscuolo, focused his homily on the character of the fallen officer, a 28-year veteran who for the past 13 years has been a member of the homicide division, supervising the sqaud that handles unsolved cases.

Some expect GATT vote to test bipartisan cooperation in Congress

WASHINGTON (AP) — In mid-passage to Republican rule, Congress meets this week to vote on GATT, a global trade accord ardently supported by President Clinton and depicted as a model of bipartisan cooperation with the GOP.

The lame-duck session of the expiring, 103rd Congress will be brief — a half-day in the House and two days in the Senate. But it will be spiced by selection of leaders for the new, GOP-controlled 104th Congress that convenes in January.

Passage for legislation blessing GATT is assured in the House, where departing Democratic Speaker Thomas Foley and his incoming Republican successor, Newt Gingrich, both favor the laboriously negotiated plan to reduce trade barriers around the world.

Foley, D-Wash., whose normally well-ordered suite of offices is cluttered with moving cartons, will speak on behalf of the measure in what will be his final day in office and the Democrats' final day in power following their Election Day debacle.

"He's got one objective in his last four hours and that's to pass GATT," said spokesman Jeff Biggs.

For Gingrich, R-Ga., and the House Republicans, it will be one final day in the minority before assuming power in January. "My sense is that everything is under control" for passage, said his spokesman, Tony Blankley.

For his part, Gingrich has rejected conservatives' claims that the trade accord would diminish American sovereignty by establishing a World Trade Organization to adjudicate disputes among countries. The United States would be "surrendering zero authority," he told a Heritage Foundation audience recently. Instead, he said, the country would be "entering a partnership contract from which we can withdraw at any time."

Concerns that the pact would fail in the Senate under the combined opposition of conservatives and labor-backed Democrats eased when Republican Leader Bob Dole announced his support last week at the White House.

"There should be a big, big vote — not a narrow vote, but a big margin, a bipartisan margin as we've always had when it came to votes on trade," said Dole of Kansas, who will become majority leader in the GOP-controlled Senate in January.

"It's not perfect," he said, and noted he's been receiving 2,000 calls a day on the subject. But as the pivotal senator on a subject critical to the president's prestige, Dole won concessions and assurances from the White House on issues ranging from the World Trade Organization to the future of the oilseed industry.

Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, D-N.Y., said shortly after Dole spoke that GATT would enjoy "a super majority ... thanks to this agreement which was reached in good faith and which augurs for a bipartisan moment in our capital which is really very welcome."

By James H. Rubin
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Despite rising interest rates that analysts say are a particular blow to the middle class, Linda Foflygen considers her family among the fortunate.

She and her husband refinanced the mortgage on their Frederick, Md., home seven months ago — before interest rates had climbed to their current level. Like millions of Americans, they have become more cautious spenders because of the rise in rates that the Federal Reserve has helped engineer.

Economists, citing government figures, say the higher cost of borrowing is increasing the burden on the middle class disproportionately. The average family gets hurt in two ways, analysts say.

First, middle-income Americans aren't benefiting from the higher rates being paid by bonds because they are not heavy investors in bonds. Second, average Americans accumulate debt more rapidly than the wealthy to pay for homes, appliances and cars.

"The poor, in general, don't have much access to credit, and the wealthy don't need it," said Dean Baker of the Economic Policy Institute, a liberal think tank.

"We feel very lucky that we were able to refinance when we did," said Mrs. Foflygen, a 42-year-old mother of four. "If we had waited, the savings wouldn't be worth it."

She and her husband, who has two jobs — teaching art classes at home and working as a delivery man for an engineering firm — cut their monthly spending by about $200 thanks to a new mortgage refinanced at 8.25 percent in April.

Thirty-year conventional mortgages are now at 9.25 percent, up from a 25-year low of 6.74 percent about a year ago. A 2½ percentage point increase on a $150,000 home mortgage costs more than $250 in monthly payments.

The Foflygens also replaced the family car recently, buying a 1990 sedan and paying 12.5 percent interest on the auto loan. "With the cost of cars and rates this high, we weren't going for a new one," Mrs. Foflygen said.

Private economists and the Clinton administration say such a family is typical of a middle class that is feeling a bigger pinch from rising rates.

"Rising interest rates are hitting middle-class families with higher payments on cars, mortgages, and credit cards," Labor Secretary Robert Reich said this week. "Better fiscal management cannot reverse the long-term decline of America's middle-class."

By Walter R. Mears
AP Special Correspondent

■ Analysis

WASHINGTON — Across the political generations, governors have been pounding their conference tables, venting their frustrations, demanding that Washington let them manage state governments without bonds of red tape.

"And nothing happens," lamented Republican Gov. Mike Leavitt of Utah. So Leavitt and a Democratic colleague are leading a drive to try another way, to create a force that would give the states bargaining leverage and political muscle to balance powers inside and outside the beltway.

The incoming Republican leaders of Congress promised that this time it will be different, that they will cede federal authority at the same time they cut spending.

But that also means yielding power, and that's a hurdle, for Republicans who have just gained it no less than for the Democrats who lost control.

There's always the temptation to hold onto the strings in Washington, to try to oversee what the federal Treasury cannot finance. "If they do that, their reign will be of short duration," said Gov. Ben Nelson of Nebraska. "The people don't want new rascals in place of the old rascals, they want change."

Nelson is a Democrat, re-elected with 74 percent of the vote in a GOP year. He and Leavitt are partners in campaigning for a new way to gain leverage for the governors and the states, overmatched by Congress, the White House and the federal bureaucracy because their power is dispersed across a continent.

"Even with the changed political landscape as a result of the last election, we cannot count on Congress to fix this problem by itself," they say in a proposal to be presented next month to the Council of State Governments.

No matter which party controls Congress, it is not likely to relinquish power without pressure, they said.

What they want is a new forum, short of a constitutional convention, but well beyond the standard meetings of governors and state lawmakers.

To consolidate state power, they propose a Conference of the States, to be created by resolutions in the 50 state legislatures next year. Those measures would authorize five-member, bipartisan delegations from each state, governors and legislators, to assemble in 1995, and act on specific ways "of correcting the imbalance in the federal system," and taking back some of what now is controlled by the national government.

Report reveals Susan Smith's claim of abuse

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — A mother charged with sending her two small sons to drown in a murky lake had accused her stepfather of molesting her when she was 16, The Columbia State reported Saturday.

Susan Smith told a high school guidance counselor in 1988 she had been molested by her stepfather of 10 years, the newspaper reported. The counselor alerted authorities, former Union County Sheriff William Jolly told the newspaper.

Jolly said the investigation was dropped in early 1989 because Mrs. Smith did not want to press charges.

"We investigated and weren't able to pursue it," said Jolly, now an investigator with the State Law Enforcement Division. Without a witness, there was no case, he said.

Beverly Russell, the stepfather, and Mrs. Smith's mother, Linda, did not return telephone calls Saturday to The Associated Press. The newspaper said they refused to comment on the allegation.

Russell, a stockbroker and tax consultant, is a state Republican executive committeeman and a member of the advisory board of the Christian Coalition.

Mrs. Smith, 23, faces murder charges in the deaths of her sons. She has confessed to killing 3-year-old Michael and 14-month-old Alex on Oct. 25 when she rolled her car into a lake with the boys strapped into safety seats.

According to her Nov. 3 confession, she falsely told authorities and the public for nine days that the children had been abducted by a carjacker.

Defense calls attention to testimony in retrial

By Debra West
N.Y. Times News Service

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y. — When the jury begins deliberations in the murder trial of Paul Cox next week, it will consider testimony that is sharply different from that presented at Cox's first murder trial in June, which ended in a hung jury.

Instead of having to rely on the testimony of expert psychiatric witnesses to understand his defense of temporary insanity, this jury can turn to the words of Cox himself.

Cox, 27, a carpenter who is charged with murdering Dr. Shanta Chervu, 51, and her husband, Lakshman Rao Chervu, 58, nearly six years ago, took the stand this time. He did not testify at his first trial.

Cox has calmly explained that he killed the couple during an alcoholic blackout and had only reconstructed memories of the murders. Recalling anecdotes that were often moving, he told the jury how a lifetime of criticism from his parents made him snap one night after drinking and crashing his car. At every opportunity, he has expressed remorse.

Although Cox may have been a compelling witness, legal experts wonder if that will help him in the verdict, especially considering that his defense is temporary insanity.

"The jury might ask, 'How can someone who seems so clearheaded, so rational, so nice, be crazy enough to kill two people in a very brutal fashion?' " said Bennett Gershman, a professor at the Pace University School of Law. "It may look to them like he is really contriving a story."

The prosecutor contends that the killings were deliberate and calls the insanity defense an elaborate ruse.

The Cox case attracted national attention because it came to light only years after the murders, when Cox disclosed them to a friend he knew from an Alcoholics Anonymous meeting.

Some legal experts said putting the athletic, well-spoken defendant on the stand was the only choice the defense had, considering that the jury in the first trial was split 11-1 in favor of conviction.

"When you've got that kind of vote split, it makes you think that the jury was buying the prosecution's case on the evidence and that the one juror was just a fluke," said Steven Penrod, a psychologist and law professor at the University of Minnesota. "The defense had to do something different the second time around."

In the first trial, the jury relied on testimony from the half-dozen members of Alcoholics Anonymous to whom Cox had confessed. The jury also heard three psychiatric experts who spoke in clinical phrases like "dissociative disorder" and "ego distonic."

This time, Cox, composed and articulate, testified about the rage against his parents, which grew out of feeling like a black sheep in an academically successful family.

He told the jury of a drinking life that began in the sixth grade. He described a teen-age suicide attempt and a therapist's diagnosis — based on a Rorschach test — that he had fantasies of killing his parents. He admitted drinking five or six pitchers of kamikazes — a mixture of vodka, Triple Sec and lime juice — and beer before crashing his car on the night of the murders.

"There are days when I wake up and I think, 'If I committed these murders, why was my life spared and my younger brother's taken?' " Cox said, wiping away the only tears he shed in two days of testimony. Cox's brother Brian died in January, when he fell from a hotel balcony in Hawaii.

Although Cox's testimony was moving, insanity defenses are rarely used and even more rarely successful, said Henry Steadman, a sociologist who recently wrote a book on the insanity defense, "Before and After Hinckley."

Only 3 cases in 1,000 in New York state attempt an insanity defense. Because juries are believed to be skeptical of such a defense, only 7 percent of those cases go to jury trials — with the rest either resulting in plea bargains or going before a judge.

To be found not legally responsible, Cox's lawyers must show that at the time of the murders, he had a "mental disease or defect" that prevented him from understanding the nature and consequences of his actions. But jurors often go beyond these considerations.

"Even if they are not supposed to, juries tend to look at the implications of their decision," Steadman said. "People will say, 'If we find him insane, he's going to be let out on the street, even if he's guilty.' "

In New York state, people found not criminally responsible are held for 30 days for evaluation, said Richard Miraglia, assistant director of forensic service for the state Office of Mental Health.

If found to be dangerous, they are sent to a maximum security hospital and can be released only by court order. If found mentally ill, but not dangerous, they are sent to a less secure civilian hospital and can be released based on a hospital's diagnosis along with conditions set by the court.

If they are found not mentally ill at all, they can be released immediately with a set of conditions — alcohol treatment, for example — to be set by the trial judge.

For the Chervus' two grown children, the idea of Cox's asserting a mental disorder is shocking.

"To hear him stand up there and portray himself as the victim is very frustrating," said Dr. Arun Chervu, 33. "My parents are the victims here."

Author tries to save books from destruction

By Eleanor Blau
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — "It started out as an avocation, and it became really an obsession."

Barbara Goldsmith, an author and social historian, was speaking of her 15-year crusade against acidic paper, a self-destructive menace to the written word that has caused millions of books to crumble to dust.

Ms. Goldsmith, a trustee of the New York Public Library, endowed the lab where the library preserves its wares, saving many volumes on microfilm and using scientific alchemy to slow the deterioration of a special few.

But her efforts have reached far beyond the library.

"I think she put the issue squarely on the map," said Paul LeClerc, the president of the New York Public Library. She led "a turnaround both within the publishing community and the federal government," he said, "a movement away from paper that ultimately disintegrates and toward a paper that is going to be around for hundreds of years."

Hardcover trade books are now routinely printed on acid-free paper, and federal agencies are required to use permanent paper for publications of "enduring value."

But the growing movement to recycle paper could reverse the acid-free successes, since recycling some kinds of paper requires the use of acid. So Ms. Goldsmith is still at work.

She dates her obsession to 1979, when she was doing research for "Little Gloria ... Happy at Last," her best seller about the custody struggle for Gloria Vanderbilt. "I couldn't understand why some old documents were in wonderful condition and others I couldn't even get to the Xerox machine before they turned to dust," she recalled.

The problem, she learned, was immense: millions of books and periodicals published since the 1850s — filling more than 30 miles of shelves in the New York library alone — were disintegrating. Their pages were made of wood pulp, a type of paper developed in the 1850s when paper made from cotton rag and linen rag became scarce.

Unfortunately, lignin in wood pulp oxidizes and turns brown. A chemical added to keep ink from feathering — alum-rosin sizing — also discolors the paper. And the matter grows worse over time as the alum combines with sulfur dioxide in the atmosphere.

American librarians were not generally aware that the paper was falling apart rapidly until the 1950s, when William J. Barrow, an archivist, sounded the alarm. By 1960, he had helped create a wood-pulp process using alkaline chemicals. But 20 years later, most mills were still making acidic paper.

"What had happened was that the American Library Association, every preservation department, all knew about this and it came up at every conference," Ms. Goldsmith said. "It was the converted preaching to the converted."

When she asked one library official why no one had spread the word, she recalled, he said: " 'This is not a sexy issue. It's such a dry issue.' I said, 'No, it's not!' I was just on fire with it."

She still sounds on fire with it. Ms. Goldsmith, who has degrees from Wellesley College (1953) and Columbia University (1957), and whose works include "Johnson v. Johnson" (1987), about the contested will of the heir to the pharmaceutical fortune, once said she wrote books out of a passion to "see that our society straightens out."

Her passion for the acid-free paper crusade was evident as she recounted her early efforts during an interview in her Park Avenue apartment.

"It didn't go very fast at first because I was out there sort of by myself and nobody believed it," she said.

But by 1989 she was able to gather dozens of authors and publishers at the library to declare that from now on they would use only acid-free paper, if available, "for all first printings of quality hardcover trade books in order to preserve the printed word and safeguard our cultural heritage for future generations."

Ms. Goldsmith went to Washington with writers who included Kurt Vonnegut Jr. "We were very successful in getting legislation that all governmental printing of any quality would be done on acid-free paper," she said. "Then it was sort of like a house of cards because that gave a lot of the mills enormous incentive to convert to acid-free paper."

Another incentive was the price of wood pulp, which rose in the mid-1980s, encouraging American mills to substitute calcium carbonate — something that had been done in Europe a decade earlier, Ms. Goldsmith said.

These days, about 75 percent of fine paper (not newsprint) used for printing and writing in the United States is alkaline, said Ellen McCrady, the president of Abbey Publications, which issues newsletters about paper. In 1985 the figure was about 25 percent.

Ms. Goldsmith's next goal is to educate recyclers about the acid-paper problem; in May there will be a conference at the library dedicated to that issue. Ms. Goldsmith said she thought many recyclers did not understand that the acid they sometimes add in recycling pollutes.

Interest in possible cold cure swamps researcher

N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — Microbiologist Asim Dasgupta worked last week amid the usual clutter of test tubes in his 13th-floor University of California, Los Angeles laboratory.

The only difference was that he was surrounded by news cameras amid reports that he might have found the long-sought cure for the common cold.

"Geez, I didn't expect this," Dasgupta, a native of Calcutta, India, said as he was pulled down the hall to yet another interview.

"You know we worked on this for two years, and all of a sudden in one day everybody wants to know about it," he said.

Dasgupta and a team of researchers at UCLA have discovered a tiny molecular fragment in baker's yeast that shows promise in stopping the common cold virus — and possibly the polio virus and the hepatitis A virus — dead in their tracks.

'I hope I am not half right. What if this doesn't work in humans? I would rather do the research to the end, and then I would know.'

— Asim Dasgupta, microbiologist, UCLA

Dasgupta didn't start out to find a cure for one of mankind's most common ailments — but if his research bears out, he could go down in history as the man who ended everyone's ability to call in sick with a cold.

"They used to say, 'Go home and drink a lot of soup,' when you had a cold," Dasgupta joked. "Now they will say 'Sniff this.' "

Despite the momentary euphoria, the seasoned researcher said he knows he is far from verifying that the yeast molecule will cure colds, or polio and hepatitis.

In fact, he said he is a little frightened that he might have discovered nothing more than a quirky effect that works in a test tube but has little medical value.

"I hope I am not half right," said Dasgupta, 43. "What if this doesn't work in humans? I would rather do the research to the end, and then I would know."

The cat got out of the bag this month when a reporter for The New York Times spotted a paper Dasgupta and his team published in the November issue of The Journal of Virology.

"Now I'm getting calls from all over the country," he said. "I'm getting requests from Europe to send them this material, and from the U.S. Department of Agriculture, because there is one of these viruses that infects corn."

Although it will take at least two years of experiments on animals and humans to determine if the yeast fragment has any medical value, other virologists said the discovery is very interesting and worth looking into in depth.

"I think it's actually very remarkable," said David Baltimore, the 1975 Nobel laureate virologist who was Dasgupta's mentor during his post-doctoral work at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

"It could turn out to be extremely useful," Baltimore said. "And it's a wonderful example of what happens when you just start doing new experiments and keep your eyes open."

Fellow Republicans caution Helms to watch his tongue

WASHINGTON (AP) — It's settled that arch-conservative Jesse Helms will head the Senate Foreign Relations Committee but he had best watch his tongue, a fellow Republican committee member said Saturday.

"He has to realize that as chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee ... (his) thoughts are taken into account around the world in a way that are weighed and talked about," said Sen. Nancy Kassebaum.

Kassebaum, a GOP moderate from Kansas, said she regarded as "case closed" the furor over Helms' remark last week that President Clinton was unfit to be commander-in-chief of the U.S. military.

Initially, she herself "didn't feel that President Clinton was comfortable in his role as commander-in-chief ... but I think, as President Clinton has gone on, he has gained a stronger relationship with the military and in foreign policy," Kassebaum said on the CNN "Evans and Novak" show.

"And no matter whether you agree or disagree with the president on one issue or another, there is a respect for the office that I think is important."

A Democratic congressman from Helms' state, North Carolina, disputed the senator's remark last week that Clinton was so unpopular with the military he'd need bodyguards to venture into the state.

"Fort Bragg and Camp Lejeune in my district are very respectful of their commander-in-chief," Rep. Charlie Rose said on CNN's Newsmaker Saturday show. "They may not always agree with him, but they know he's the boss."

Kassebaum said peace between Israel and Syria "could be a terrific step forward," taking issue with Helms' disparaging remarks about the Middle East peace process.

Helms earlier this month said: "This whole peace process over there is a fraud. Syria doesn't want peace. They want the Golan Heights. They want access to the pocketbooks of the American taxpayers."

While agreeing with Helms that "we can't be the policeman for the world," Kassebaum said an Israeli-Syrian settlement could be significant depending on the two countries' commitment to it. "Frankly, I think there has been much that has happened in the Middle East that I would never have thought several years ago could have occurred," she added.

EDITOR'S NOTE — The Vietnam War's decisive front turned out to be a supply route the Americans could not cut. Today the old Ho Chi Minh Trail is a lifeline of the new Vietnam. Two Associated Press journalists who covered the war, Special Correspondent Mort Rosenblum and Pulitzer Prize-winning photographer Horst Faas, returned for a look at long-hidden stretches of the trail.

By Mort Rosenblum
Associated Press

A SHAU, Vietnam — Here it's a dirt track, unmarked and unmapped, lazing through lush green like any Carolina country lane except that kids know better than to kick at odd bits of metal in the grass.

High up the mountain, it is a widened rut in the rocks and mud where drivers stop their trucks at precarious turns, night or day, to light incense at roadside shrines to the unrecovered dead.

In Hanoi, the thought of it is enough to moisten the eyes of an aged general who relives for visitors the relentless air strikes that took perhaps 30,000 souls.

The Ho Chi Minh Trail, a simple jungle footpath that grew to a 12,000-mile invisible interstate system and defeated a superpower, is now emerging as the last indelible trace of the Vietnam War.

Today, almost 20 years after the war's end, the old supply routes penetrate Vietnam's wild west, opening rich new areas to coffee and rubber planters and farmers desperate for land, as well as smugglers and timber thieves.

But to many Vietnamese, the economic benefits are a side issue. More, their trail is a military masterwork worthy of Caesar or Alexander the Great, a monument to a people's determination.

IT WAS the reason for all of those names behind America's "Vietnam Syndrome" — Ia Drang, Khe Sanh, Hamburger Hill and the rest. After every battle, the trail brought more men and arms.

In the once-famous A Shau Valley, just below Vietnam's old north-south dividing line, only an archaeologist could figure out where U.S. troops sunk their roots. But the trail remains, the original crater-pocked track paralleled by a newer paved highway.

Americans pounded away with twice the bomb tonnage used in World War II, using space-age gimmickry against a no-tech ant column. They tried everything, once considering drops of Budweiser beer so trail drivers would party instead of drive.

"It was not a road but a state of mind," said U.S. Army Maj. Robert West, who combs the dramatic Truong Son range for pilots still missing. "To get an idea of it, just study the veins on your arm."

In the end, the Ho Chi Minh Trail was four north-south routes through Laos and Cambodia and a fifth within Vietnam, all linked by 21 cross tracks and countless detours under jungle cover.

From North Vietnam, it funneled down toward Vietnam's deep south, to the tangled riverbanks of the Song Be, Apocalypse Now country near Loc Ninh, just 80 miles north of Saigon.

COL. XUAN Van Tien spent 10 years among the snakes and malarial mosquitoes, supervising various stretches of roadway.

"We built the trail in cooperation with the Americans," he recalled with a chuckle. "They bombed, and we went another way. They bombed again, and we moved again."

Two million people moved up or down the trail during the war, the Vietnamese say. Peak traffic ranged above 20,000 tons a month of arms, food and other supplies.

Freight went by six-wheel-drive truck, reinforced bicycle and elephant. But the mainstay was a steady stream of human beasts of burden, men and women humping 100-pound packs.

Nguyen Viet Sinh, a slender man with the mien of a retired schoolteacher, was a Hero of the People's Army. Over six years, he carried his weight in cargo a distance equal to the circumference of the globe.

Soldiers and porters slipped along ancient smugglers' routes and freshly cut paths, sometimes climbing ladders on trails so steep that marchers were often kicked in the face by the person ahead.

AT THE trail's start, in North Vietnam's southern panhandle, trucks lurched up three Truong Son mountain passes into Laos, over open ground exposed to bombers. During the rainy months, they stalled axle-deep in mud or slid down steep canyons.

Drivers inched along at night behind a tiny pool of light, guided by helpers perched on a fender, ready to leap for cover whenever gunships screamed out of the mists.

Where bombs and defoliants parted the triple-canopy jungle, the camouflage of tree branches could not mask the convoys. People died, cargo was lost, and yet more trucks rumbled southward.

Plenty got through. One pilot looked down to see a brilliant white, 60-foot yacht headed down the trail. It was a gift from China to Cambodian Prince Norodom Sihanouk. The pilot missed it.

North Vietnam's Group 559 not only rebuilt and restored the roadways but also defended them, claiming 2,458 U.S. aircraft kills. The Americans admit to about 400.

The unit's name stood for May 1959, the month the trail was blazed. The 559 grew from 400 hand-picked men to a force of 75,000, including the women who repaired roads and strung phone lines.

THE WATCHWORD was secrecy. No foreigners used the trail. The first motto was: move with no road, live with no roof, cook with no smoke. Messages went by field phone and whisper, seldom by radio.

In hindsight, strategists on both sides say the supply line determined the war's outcome.

"Absolutely, that was the crucial factor," said William Bundy, an assistant defense secretary in the 1960s. "We could not cut the trail."

At the Ho Chi Minh Trail cemetery, 10,330 graves near Con Thien in the Demilitarized Zone that separated North from South, words carved on an imposing stone monument say the same thing.

"The Truong Son Road was the turning point in our struggle," wrote Gen. Vo Nguyen Giap, the supreme commander, using Vietnam's name for the trail. "And it is the key to our future prosperity."

A mustard-yellow Stalinesque statue at the cemetery depicts three warriors who symbolize the spirit of the trail. Two brandish weapons. The third holds a crank for kicking over truck engines.

IN 1959, five years after defeating France and three years before U.S. advisers appeared, Ho Chi Minh ordered Col. Vo Bam to find a secret route so that North Vietnamese could infiltrate the South.

Through the mid-1960s, newly available records show, U.S. forces in Vietnam had only a sketchy idea of the supply network they faced. With the 1968 Tet offensive, Vietnamese tanks materialized out of the jungle and overran the astonished Special Forces camp at Lang Vei, near Khe Sanh, set up to watch the trail.

Vo Bam, now 82 and still sleeping in his Truong Son campaign hammock in a Hanoi tenement, laughs when he talks about how his men outwitted the overconfident Americans.

"At first, we suffered heavy losses because we had no logistics experience, but we learned fast," he said. "Once we figured out that the Americans always bombed on a schedule, it was easier."

When the subject switches to the times that B-52 bombers found their target, scattering holocaust along his hidden columns, his voice cracks.

After the 1968 offensive, bombing intensified. But it was too late. The "trail" was an impregnable fortress, with service areas, field hospitals and a fuel pipeline that stretched nearly to Saigon. On a single day in December 1970, U.S. surveillance counted 15,000 trucks and jeeps on the trail.

U.S. COMMANDERS made a last desperate stab in 1971, sending 17,000 South Vietnamese troops toward Tchepone, the trail's chokepoint just inside Laos. It was a debacle.

Now that it is over, returning American veterans shake their heads in disbelief at what went on under their noses.

Tran Van Tra, the Viet Cong chief who took Saigon, summed it up:

"For me, it was very simple. No modern weapon can defeat human will. Committed people can outwit anything devised by man. The Ho Chi Minh Trail proved this time and again."

Holidays give Jews much to celebrate

By Jennifer Steinhauer
N.Y. Times News Service

This year Hanukkah shares the limelight with a different kind of holiday, when a fruitful landing in New England by European settlers in the 1600s is commemorated with overindulgence and good cheer.

NEW YORK — Somewhere between the time she popped her turkey in the oven and the time she wiped the crumbs off the table, Suzanne Farber managed to whip up a few latkes and freeze them.

"It's annoying," she said. "But you do it."

Many Jews found themselves squeezed last week. Between Thanksgiving and Hanukkah, which begins tonight — the first time the two holidays have fallen so close together since 1918 — there were only two days to make the transition from cooking and eating to cooking and eating, with candles.

There have been Hanukkah parties to plan. There have been presents to buy. And there have been parking places to find at that fiery brimstone, the mall — all on Thanksgiving weekend.

Some people have proclaimed this a good thing.

"This is much better than being mixed up with Christmas," said Richard Hyfler, who lives on Manhattan's Upper East Side. "We get a jump on all the shopping and have no problem getting what we want."

IN FACT, there are other reasons people find the juxtaposition pleasing.

For one thing, it gives a year's hiatus to the often unintentional linking of Hanukkah to Christmas, which many say has always undermined the fact that the two celebrations have nothing to do with each other.

Hanukkah celebrates the victory more than 2,000 years ago of the Jewish Maccabees in their battle to regain Jerusalem from the Syrians. The menorah used to cast light as they rebuilt the temple there had only enough oil to burn for one night but instead lasted for eight; hence the lighting of the menorah on the first night of Hanukkah.

Jews have often complained that a perfectly nice little miracle, albeit one not even mentioned in the Old Testament, should not be compared with the Christian celebration of the birth of Jesus.

They argue that the two are usually folded together largely as an accommodation, with menorahs in holiday store-window displays and songs that give a nod to Hanukkah traditions in elementary-school pageants.

THIS YEAR Hanukkah shares the limelight with a different kind of holiday, when a fruitful landing in New England by European settlers in the 1600s is commemorated with overindulgence and good cheer. In fact, some Jews do not celebrate Thanksgiving at all because it is a secular holiday.

But Shira Dicker, a columnist for several Jewish weeklies, believes that in fact Thanksgiving and Hanukkah are close in spirit. "Hanukkah is a festival of lights," she said. "The gratitude that is awakened during Thanksgiving serves as a catalyst for us to put light in other people's lives."

Because Thanksgiving and the beginning of Hanukkah fall on the same weekend this year, families who might not otherwise be together have gathered to celebrate both holidays. Every 10 years or so, Hanukkah falls in early December, but very rarely — only once or twice a century — does it overlap with Thanksgiving weekend.

"It fits in perfectly," said Rabbi Judith Lewis of Temple Israel in Manhattan. "On Thanksgiving the family is together anyway, so they get a chance to light candles together."

(On the flip side, those who find family gatherings only slightly less stressful than, for instance, angioplasty can get two for one without feeling guilty about their lunar luck.)

And even retailers, who over the last few years have only been able to gripe and groan about a bad economy, are cheerful. They got a few extra days of gift-buying out of the bargain, they reason and can better accommodate early shoppers.

"WHEN THE two were close before, I think about seven years ago, it was very good for us," said Joseph Siegel, the vice president of retail services for the National Retail Federation in New York.

"You get a buying pattern that starts a lot earlier, and it gives us an even flow. When people have time, they will buy 12 items; when they don't, they'll settle for eight. Then we'll be out of what they wanted anyway, so they'll just give money instead."

SYLVIA WEISER got one such jump on the masses by doing all her shopping early last month. 'It puts a little pressure on you," Mrs. Weiser said. "But I learned that I just had to do it all early."

Kevorkian is present at ailing woman's death

ROYAL OAK, Mich. (AP) — Dr. Jack Kevorkian was present Saturday at the carbon monoxide death of a 72-year-old woman. It was the 21st death that the outspoken advocate of assisted suicide has attended since 1990.

Margaret Garrish died at her home in Royal Oak, the Detroit suburb where Kevorkian used to live. Authorities ruled the death a homicide.

In a statement, attorney Michael Schwartz said Kevorkian was present when Mrs. Garrish "chose to end her suffering by mercifully ending her own life at her home." It was the first death involving Kevorkian in more than a year.

A Michigan law temporarily banning assisted suicides, passed to stop Kevorkian, may have expired Friday. Interpretations of the law's expiration date differ.

Kevorkian had been counseling Mrs. Garrish for two years, Schwartz said. She suffered from rheumatoid arthritis, colonic diverticulitis, osteoporosis and other ailments. She had had both legs amputated and had lost one eye.

Attorney Michael Schwartz said Kevorkian was present when Mrs. Garrish 'chose to end her suffering by mercifully ending her own life at her home.'

Schwartz said Mrs. Garrish was the woman who appeared with Kevorkian on a videotape released eight months ago, saying her doctors had refused to give her adequate pain medication. "I'm really full of despair because the pain can't be controlled," she said on the tape that was played for reporters last March.

After that news conference, another doctor prescribed morphine patches. "However, over time, even the morphine patches were insufficient to provide Mrs. Garrish with relief," the statement said.

The Oakland County medical examiner, Dr. Ljubisa Dragovic, said Mrs. Garrish died by inhaling carbon monoxide. He said he was ruling it a homicide because he thought another person would have had to introduce the poison to her.

Schwartz said Saturday afternoon he didn't know where Kevorkian was. He said he wasn't surprised by the homicide ruling.

Michael Dennie, a neighbor of the Garrish family, said Mrs. Garrish "was in a lot of pain. She finally did get help for her pain from her doctor. She couldn't hold anything; she couldn't take care of herself."

Before she got arthritis, he said, "she was a very active person and easy to get to know."

Michigan's ban on assisted suicide may not have expired Friday, some legislative researchers said last week.

It was originally supposed to expire 21 months after going into effect, which would have been Friday. That was allowing 15 months for a special commission to study the assisted suicide issue and an additional six months for the Legislature to study the report.

However, the 22-member commission deadlocked on whether assisted suicide should be kept illegal or legalized with strict controls and standards. It sent a report mentioning both options to the Legislature.

That report was delivered after the 15-month limit, and then it was never formally accepted, according the secretary of the Senate and House clerk. Lawmakers have never held any hearings on it.

The state Supreme Court is considering several challenges that the ban was unconstitutional, all but one in cases involve Kevorkian.

The challenges include murder charges brought against Kevorkian in the Oct. 23, 1991, deaths of Marjorie Wantz and Sherry Miller. Those cases were dismissed by a lower court, then reinstated by the state Court of Appeals.

The Solution: Laser Surgery

Laser surgery can be an effective way to remove small varicosities (veins) on the nose & cheeks. These veins occur as a result of sun damage and other factors. Laser surgery offers a superior way to remove these with little to no evidence of surgery. No down time, fast healing, and excellent results are common.

President speaks of problems in address

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Clinton pledged Saturday to fight to free government from "the stranglehold of special interests" and called on Americans "to count our blessings and face our challenges."

In a weekly radio address, Clinton appeared to be trying to address the concerns of many voters who cast out Democrats in this month's rattling midterm elections.

Specifically, he said that while 5 million jobs were created in the first two years of his administration "there are still too many people who never get a pay raise and who are losing their health benefits."

And he said that while his efforts have produced a federal government that is "smaller and more effective," that is insufficient.

"There is still more to be done before we liberate our national government from the stranglehold of special interests" and make sure it works for ordinary citizens, the president said.

Responding for Republicans, Utah Gov. Mike Leavitt said the elections represented an "American style revolt," with voters demanding a far smaller and far more responsive federal government.

Leavitt said the national government needs to focus on uniquely national functions and quit imposing control on states.

"States were designed to be the government close to the people, a reflection of their own values," Leavitt said. "States also serve as a check on national power as co-equal partners in the federal system. But recently states have been relegated to subordinate status, becoming more and more like administrative units of the national government."

Clinton's broadcast originated from Camp David, where he has been since Thanksgiving Day. A golfing outing later Saturday turned into a family affair.

Voters express dissatisfaction with media in recent poll

WASHINGTON (AP) — Washington politicians weren't the only victims of voter disgust this year. The country's news media also got a less than encouraging report card for campaign coverage, exit polling showed.

In exit polls conducted for the Times Mirror Center for People and the Press, 59 percent of those surveyed gave the press a grade of 'C' or below for coverage of the midterm congressional and gubernatorial races.

Only 38 percent said the news media deserved an 'A' or 'B' for good to excellent coverage. Respondents were asked to grade the press for coverage of Senate, House and governors' races. The results were based on interviews with 20,000 people leaving their polling places.

The average in 12 states surveyed was a 'C' for coverage of the campaign that resulted in a Republican takeover of the Congress and significant GOP gains in governor's races.

None of the states surveyed reached a 'B' grade overall for the press. Eight percent of those polled gave the press an 'F' overall, while 7 percent gave the news media an 'A.'

Nevertheless, 70 percent of those surveyed said they felt they had learned enough during the campaign to make an informed choice in their vote.

White males, whose swing to the GOP this year contributed significantly to putting Congress in Republican hands, gave the press failing grades more often — 12 percent of the time — than white females or black men and women. The latter groups gave the news media an 'F' 6 percent of the time.

Whites in general were more critical, with only 28 percent giving the press good-to-excellent grades, compared with 46 percent among blacks and 62 percent among Hispanics.

Regionally, the press got somewhat better grades in the South and West than in the East and Midwest, according to the exit polling.

The only state of 12 surveyed where more than half the voters — 56 percent — said the media did a good or excellent job was Massachusetts, in covering the Senate race between Sen. Edward Kennedy and Republican challenger Mitt Romney.

In two states where attacks on the media were a staple of the Republican Senate campaigns — California and Virginia — supporters of GOP candidates Michael Huffington and Oliver North gave the press poorer grades than elsewhere.

Two other states that showed particularly low press ratings were Michigan and Pennsylvania, where supporters of GOP Senate candidates Spence Abraham and Rick Santorum were especially critical.

The poll, by Mitofsky International, focused on coverage of the gubernatorial races in Arizona, Connecticut, Florida, Maryland, New York and Texas, and the Senate races in California, Massachusetts, Michigan, Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Virginia. It also questioned voters on coverage of the House contests in those 12 states.

Youngest son keeps rights leader's legacy alive

By Ronald Smothers
N.Y. Times News Service

ATLANTA — With his steady, slow-cadenced speech, strong jaw and prominent forehead, Dexter King is very much the image of his father, the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.

But heredity is not necessarily destiny, and King, at 33 the youngest son, has struggled mightily with the question of whether he should devote his life to carrying forth the legacy of his father and, if so, how and to what extent.

Last month, when he was picked to replace his mother, Coretta Scott King, 67, as head of the nonprofit Martin Luther King Jr. Center for Nonviolent Social Change, that personal struggle appeared resolved.

But in a recent interview, there was a hint of ambivalence as King talked about the alternately inspiring and daunting example his mother had set. The issue for King was how he could shoulder the legacy without losing himself when he takes over as the center's chairman and chief executive in March.

"When my mother met my dad, she was studying to be a singer," King said, sitting beneath an oil painting of his parents in the King Center. "But from her early 20s to now, she has pretty much put her life on hold to be a wife, a mother and to be what I call a wife of a veteran of this modern day civil war called the civil rights movement."

King said he had grown up witnessing his mother's "commitment," "vision" and "excitement" in building the King Center and winning the adoption of the King birthday as a federal holiday.

"SHE WAS caught up in this whirlwind of activity from day one and had to put her dream on hold," he said of his mother's musical aspirations. "So naturally, growing up in that environment, I'm looking and watching and asking, If I am going to follow in my father's and my mother's footsteps, does that mean that I have to give up my other interests?"

But over time, he said, he learned that he was strong enough to take control of his life.

"It may sound corny, but I'm very much led in a spiritual way," King said. "I have found that my life is not always my life. I believe my father was pulled into certain situations, and I somewhat feel the same way."

In large and small ways, all the children of Dr. King shoulder his legacy. The oldest, Yolanda King, 39, an actress and teacher who lives in New York, continues to oversee the King Center's cultural programs. Martin Luther King III, 37, a consultant and a former county commissioner in Atlanta, carries the famous name and, like his sister, the Rev. Bernice King, 30, is frequently on the public speaking circuit.

Bernice King, with her divinity and law degrees and driving pulpit oratory, is often spoken of as the spiritual heir to her father. But it is Dexter King who has immersed himself in the administrative nuts and bolts.

Within the family, Mrs. King said, "it was always the consensus that Dexter would be the one" who would run the King Center, which has a budget of $5 million a year, mostly raised through private donations. He had "the vision and the energy, the interest and the commitment," she said.

BUT KING'S succession has not always been the foregone conclusion that family members have seen it to be. Five years ago, Dexter King was placed in the newly created post of president of the King Center, only to resign four months later amid rumors that the center's 36-member board was unsure about him.

There were also suggestions, now denied by King, that his mother, who had maintained the title of chairman and chief executive, was reluctant to hand over the reins.

King says only that there were "structural problems" with his post back then that kept him from acting with the authority he needed to direct the center.

This time, by most accounts, the strong support and even insistence of his mother won board members over, and they unanimously appointed King chief executive at a meeting on Oct. 21.

"This is probably the last shot at the King Center being a family treasure," said one board member who spoke on the condition of anonymity. "I support Dexter, but if this doesn't work, they can't keep playing musical chairs with the center's leadership."

Making it work, to King, means attracting a broader and younger audience to the center and its leadership-training programs. It means, he said, taking his father's words and ideas and "repackaging them" in multimedia exhibits using new technologies like interactive computer programs.

ONE VEHICLE for this, he said, would be a high-tech museum that would be built near the King Center, in the heart of a historic district surrounding the house in which his father was born. Already, the area attracts 3 million people a year — a captive audience that King said was hungry to know more about his father and civil rights.

"The words are timeless, the concept is timeless, but today you need a new spin on it, a new angle to make it fresh and exciting," King said of his proposed museum, for which he is seeking financing. "And that's where the museum comes in. But it is going to be more than a museum. It's going to be an attraction, and I don't think that is a bad word."

King said one obstacle in raising money for the museum was the public's perception that the King Center was financially "flush."

It is true, he said, that the center will benefit indirectly from the construction of an $11 million National Park Service visitors' center, which will oversee the Martin Luther King Jr. Historic District.

And it is true that the King Center receives federal money to plan and carry out the official celebration of the King holiday each year. But King says the money pays only for maintenance and some administrative overhead, not for the center's leadership, education and conflict-resolution programs.

It is a misperception that has its parallel in his personal life, King says.

"A LOT of females assume I'm already spoken for," he said with a smile that lifted reshaped his bushy, black moustache and a cunning that sought to send a message.

"They tend to go elsewhere, not even to pay attention or focus on me because they have this preconceived notion that it is a done deal. What ends up happening then is you end up by yourself."

> 'It may sound corny, but I'm very much led in a spiritual way. I have found that my life is not always my life. I believe my father was pulled into certain situations, and I somewhat feel the same way.'

Santa class teaches reporter he's not grinch after all

By Jim Herron Zamora
Hearst News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — Yes, Virginia, there really is a Santa Claus.

In fact, there are 12 Santas. And strangely enough, I'm one of them.

This all happened on Thanksgiving eve when I went to Santa School. After learning to "Ho ho ho" properly and placate crying little kids, I became an officially credentialed Santa Claus.

As a general rule, I try to stay away from them. I don't listen to them. I don't smile at them. And I never make eye contact.

But after spending a day in a red suit making little kids smile, I learned that I'm not a total grinch after all.

I feel a lot like Tim Allen's character in the movie "The Santa Clause." He had never been too big on Christmas but became a convert after reluctantly playing Santa.

My parents always taught us there was really no Santa. (I would too if I had seven kids.) For me, the holidays went downhill after Thanksgiving, except for football.

So, as I entered that Santa classroom, I thought: Why would anyone in their right mind want to be Santa? Why would they voluntarily subject themselves to legions of sweaty, stinky and noisy kids with dripping noses and running mouths?

These guys must be crazy. So I'll join them.

"Some of you have a head start on your tummies," said Jenny Zink, Santa School headmistress, glancing at my paunch as she commenced the one-hour class.

The course, offered by Western Temporary Services, is given to all prospective Santas the company hires to staff numerous malls and department stores.

Zink explained the ground rules: No smoking, no drinking, no flirting. Just get the kids on your lap and make them happy. "Never show a bad mood," Zink told the rows of nodding Santas. "All our Santas always have a twinkle in their eyes."

When he ran for president in 1992, Paul Tsongas said, "I'm not Santa Claus," and vowed not to promise anything he couldn't deliver. But if he had attended Santa School, Tsongas would have learned that no respectable Kris Kringle ever promises any goodies.

"Don't promise them anything, because if they don't receive it they'll stop believing in Santa Claus," Zink said. "It can be traumatic."

Many of Zink's admonishments involved demeanor and hygiene.

"Never be in a rush — Santa is never supposed to be in a hurry," she said. "Bathe daily, always wear a good deodorant and watch out for garlic or other food that gives you bad breath."

We were also politely told never to refer to the kid's mom or dad, just "their folks," because so many kids come from broken homes.

"They may come from a dysfunctional family and get very upset if you mention their father or mother," Zink said.

Most of the guys who work as Santas from Thanksgiving to Christmas would make more money if they stuck with their day jobs, which all seem to pay more than the $7 to $8.50 an hour that Santa makes. My class included engineers, computer programmers and managerial types.

"I lose money on this every year, but that's OK. I do it for love," said Buster Killian, 49, of Concord, Calif. A network engineer for Wells Fargo, Killian has played Santa for nine years.

Killian was the only one in our group who did not need fake whiskers. Each November he dyes his bushy brown beard snow-white. "I look forward to this all year," said Killian. "I love kids. During the off-season, I'm designated grandfather for our church."

This was the fourth Santa season for Michael O'Connor, 37, a mortician.

"All year I deal with people who are upset after losing a loved one, then for a month I get to deal with people at their happiest," he said. "It's good for me to make these kids happy."

His sentiments hit home. After four years on the crime beat, I don't see cute little boys anymore — only potential gang members. But after a few hours of taking in the world from inside a Santa uniform, your outlook can really change.

I walked around downtown. The kids always find you first. They greet you with wide smiles and eyes full of dreams. Even the shy ones, with a little coaxing, pour out their dreams.

This intangible bond occurs between Santa and the kids. Adults don't get it. And now that I'm out of the red suit, I'm not sure I get it either.

"How can I describe the glow in a child's eyes when they see me?" said my classmate Roy Nelson, 40, a Santa for 21 years. "It just touches a really deep part of you."

MISD to spotlight world cultures

Nationally acclaimed storytellers to perform during celebration

Before winter set in, cultures around the world often incorporated light into their celebrations, paying homage to the last long days of sunlight before the darker season arrived.

"In winter, the light was going to be dim, so different cultures celebrated their remembrance of light," said Lucinda Windsor, coordinator of language arts for Midland Independent School District.

"Traditionally, every group of people celebrated what was important to them," said Patty Smith, MISD social studies coordinator.

In a twist on that tradition, MISD is shedding light on cultures around the world through storytellers with the five-day festival "Celebrations of Light II."

The multicultural celebration, which will feature five nationally acclaimed storytellers, has already resulted in educators and storytellers across the country calling for tickets. It has also caught the eye of the National Endowment for the Arts, which will be sending a representative to Midland to view some of the activities.

Ms. Windsor and Ms. Smith have organized five days of storytelling performances in 24 schools, a community evening concert, and a daylong workshop, which is also open to the public.

The storytelling workshop will be offered 8 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. Saturday. An evening concert is set for 7:30-10:30 p.m. Saturday. Both events will be held at the First United Methodist Church Activities Building, 300 N. Main St.

Cost of the workshop is $15. Admission to the concert is $10 for adults and $5 for students age 5 to 20.

One of the five storytellers is Roslyn Brensnick-Perry, who was born in the former Soviet Union. The Jewish storyteller came to the United States at the age of 7. While she was safe in America, relatives and friends who were left behind did not survive the Holocaust.

"The whole town (outside of Byelorussia) was annihilated," she said. "It is the stories of my childhood that I tell, of the people who are gone."

Ms. Brensnick-Perry said she began telling stories because people know of the 6 million Jews lost in the Holocaust, but not of the individuals.

As chairwoman of a local taxpayers watchdog agency, Edna Walger recently attended the National Taxpayers Conference in Washington, D.C., to gather information to help in her grassroots taxpayer movement.

The National Taxpayers Conference meets every two years, Ms. Walger said. This year's event was sponsored by the National Taxpayers Union.

Ms. Walger, who heads the local group Citizens Against Taxpayer Abuse, said politicians were much more attentive to questions raised at this year's conference.

"They weren't listing in '92, but they sure did listen this year," she said.

"What a difference between then and now. After the results of the Nov. 8 election, the climate of the recent gathering was one of euphoria," she said.

People from as far away as Canada, Norway and Alaska were present at the conference, she said.

Texas was well represented at the conference. Republican Dick Armey of the 26th Congressional District opened the first session with his speech, "The Freedom and Fairness Restoration Act: The Next Tax Revolution."

A panel discussion followed, exploring the topic "How Washington Wastes Taxpayer Money and How to Stop It." Sitting on this panel were syndicated columnist Jack Anderson and author Martin Gross.

Also present were Don Lambro, chief political correspondent for The Washington Times and Tom Schatz, president of Citizens Against Government Waste.

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

The 1994 West Texas cotton crop — beset by summer's dry spell, hail, 100-plus-degree temperatures and windstorms — is quickly winding down and turning into a subnormal crop: less than one-half to two-thirds of the normal yield.

But while production is down, cotton prices and quality are up.

"Cotton is selling real good," said Lindell Newton, a Stanton ginner and Big Spring farmer.

"That's kind of the way farming is: feast or famine."

In Midland County, the Midland Farmers Co-Op cotton gin is into a short season. 1994 bale production is about 40 percent of the normal 17,000- to 18,000-bale average.

Chevron workers hope to dress many live dolls during holiday

Staff Report

Local Chevron employees are playing the role of "Santa's helpers" through the Salvation Army's Dress-a-Live-Doll program.

Chevron officials said it has been a company tradition since 1987, when a few Chevron employees decided to solicit donations for the program.

In the first year, enough money was collected to completely outfit three children with coat, shoes, underwear and a couple of school outfits.

Giving is as much a part of the holidays as Santa Claus and Christmas trees. With that thought in mind, the Salvation Army is seeking generous Midlanders to help make the holidays a little brighter for children in need.

Through the Dress-a-Live-Doll program, sponsored by the Salvation Army, more than 1,000 children will receive a complete outfit of clothes.

The Dress-a-Live-Doll (DALD) program is a Christmas project that provides new school clothes for children in need, according to organizers.

'A lot of these kids don't get new clothes; it's usually second-hand. So they may get a brand new outfit for the first time in their lives.'
— Lois Tracy, head of Salvation Army's Dress-a-Live-Doll program

In its 20th year, the DALD program continues to provide thousands of children with new clothes and self-esteem.

Teachers at participating schools provide the Salvation Army with the names of potential recipients. The ages range from infancy to

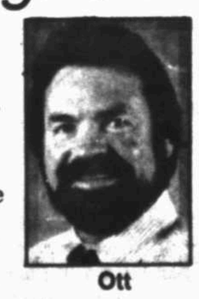
Phone calls give us chance to impress those within earshot



Ott

No matter how vigorously we might deny it, the simple truth is that all of us take a great personal delight in impressing others, especially our friends and loved ones.

This can be accomplished in a number of ways, of course, but one of the easiest is via the telephone call. Not just any call, mind you, but one that requires you to ask a lot of tough questions and, in the end, bark instructions into the receiver.

The reason the "barking of instructions" is so important is because the person, or persons, you are actually trying to impress are seated in the same room with you, and, as a result, can only hear your side of the conversation.

Thus, you are in complete control of the situation. Take advantage of it. Play it for all it is worth.

Consider, for example, the following scenario and see if it helps you better understand what I'm saying.

It is 7:15 in the evening and you, along with a couple of friends, are seated in your den pondering the great questions facing mankind, such as, "Should we order a Dominos pizza or one from Pizza Hut?"

You roll your eyes, as if to indicate "there is no rest for the weary," and make your way to the phone.

You snap a gruff "hello" into the receiver.

The call is from the office. It is a simple matter, and one that requires little or no effort on your part, but your friends don't need to know that.

So you immediately launch into your Mr. Hotshot Business Executive routine.

Continental planes clip wing s at terminal

HOUSTON (AP) — Two Continental Airlines planes clipped wings as the two taxied past each other Saturday at a Houston Intercontinental Airport terminal, a spokesman said.

No one was injured in the incident, and only one of the planes was carrying passengers, Continental spokesman Ken Kosub said.

A 737-300 jet carrying 127 passengers and five crew members on a flight to Chicago was backing out of Terminal C at the same time a maintenance crew was taxiing in a 737-200 Continental plane from another part of the airport.

"The wing tips touched," Kosub said. "What we know is there was some damage to the aircraft the maintenance crew was operating. A section of about 15 to 20 feet on one wing was damaged."

There was no visible damage to the other plane, but it was still being inspected.

If one child in a family is adopted, then all other children in the family are adopted as well.

Letters are sent to parents of children who are referred to the Salvation Army, and each family is interviewed to confirm that help is needed.

The average cost for outfitting a child is $125, but the amount varies depending upon the type of purchases and the age of the child.

The gift should be an entire outfit for the child, including coat or sweater, dress or pants and shirt, undergarments, socks and shoes.

The Salvation Army provides the child's sizes and an identification number. The first name of the child may be provided, but the last name is withheld to protect the child's identity, said Peggy Kerr, a Salvation Army volunteer.

The gift is tax-deductible, Ms. Kerr said. Individuals may sponsor a child or groups can join together to sponsor a child or an entire family of children.

Approximately 800 children are on the list this year, according to Lois Tracy, who is heading up the program for the Salvation Army. Last year, more than 1,000 children were listed to be "adopted," but only about 700 received outfits.

Mrs. Tracy said donors need to call the Salvation Army at 697-7262 and give their name and address; the caller can request an age and gender.

"Often, these children never know the fun of wearing something new," Ms. Kerr said.

"What must it be like to always wear old hand-me-down clothes that are often misfits, too small or too large? Many needy children in Midland could tell you," she said.

"A lot of these kids don't get new clothes; it's usually second-hand. So they may get a brand new outfit for the first time in their lives," Mrs. Tracy said.

"The recent cold snap is a reminder that new, warm clothing can make a Christmas merry for many of the children in Midland, some of whom have never worn new clothes," Ms. Kerr said.

"Christmas is a time of awareness, of giving and sharing with others. We invite you to be a part of the Dress-a-Live-Doll program and share in the true meaning of Christmas," Ms. Kerr said.

"Make this Christmas one that you will always remember ... Share the satisfying experience of providing school clothes for a needy child. The joy of giving highlights the Christmas season," Ms. Kerr said.

Gifts can be wrapped individually or all together and then placed in one large plastic bag with the identification number on it. The gifts need to be taken to the Salvation Army Day Care Center, 3500 Park Lane or to the Chevron Building by Dec. 15.

The following merchants will be offering various discounts on merchandise purchased for the DALD program: Beall's, Foot Locker, Sear's, J.C. Penney's, Anthony's, Kids' Country, Dunlap's, Kmart, Mervyn's and Upstairs/Downstairs.

CHEVRON: Employees hope to outfit 55 children in need contributing employees to see how their donations were spent. Then employees got together and wrapped the gifts and delivered them to the Salvation Army for distribution.

In subsequent years, Chevron employees, as well as members of the Chevron Retirees Association and the Midland Gulf Federal Credit Union, have united their efforts and dressed as many as 49 children through the program during a single holiday season.

Since Chevron adopts many children each year, teams of employees are involved in many different tasks. There are volunteer coordinators, shoppers, gift wrappers and people to deliver the gifts.

The coordinators organize volunteers, take contributions, account for receipts, publicize events and perform any other administrative functions that are required.

Shoppers coordinate their efforts so that children — especially within the same family — receive comparable gifts.

After the gifts are displayed, employees wrap them with employee-donated wrapping paper. Usually, each item of clothing or outfit is wrapped in a separate box, so that each child will have a number of presents under the tree on Christmas morning.

This year, Chevron employees have set an ambitious goal to completely outfit 55 children.

Planning and organizational meetings have been held, volunteers have been enlisted, 22 children already have been "adopted" and donations are still being received.

In addition, Chevron U.S.A. Production Co. is a corporate sponsor for the Dress-A-Live Doll program this year. The company has provided two employees as "loaned executives" to co-chair the project and organize other resources.

Also, Chevron Real Estate Management has provided an office as an "adoption" center and storage facility for incoming packages.

Man warns of gang violence consequences

FORT WORTH (AP) — On the day after Thanksgiving, when many people were eating leftovers, a combination minister-mortician was taking a blue coffin topped with a spray of red chrysanthemums to prime gang locations in Fort Worth.

The blue coffin, said the Rev. Gregory W. Spencer, symbolizes the Crips gang. The red of the mums, he said, symbolizes the rival Bloods gang.

Spencer took his "Stop the Violence Week" coffincade to numerous locations Friday. If it was a bit dramatic, that was the point, he said.

Asked where he got the idea of taking an empty coffin to gang locations, he said "God gave it to me."

Ending a rousing rendition of "I Need Thee Every Hour," he beckoned "that group of boys and young men over there" to "come join hands and let's pray." But the group he addressed dispersed quickly into some apartments.

"That's some of those reds and blues," a man on the street muttered as he joined the prayer circle.

As Spencer began a homily, a woman in a saggy sweatsuit walked over, then a man in a "Zack's Sausage" T-shirt, then a woman with a small boy. When Spencer and identical twins Dondre and Derrick Johnson broke into "Jesus, Keep Me Near the Cross," about 20 people were clasping hands and singing.

"There's blue, there's red, there's contention, there's controversy, but in the end, when there is violence, this is the scene," Spencer, pastor of The Church at Philadelphia, barked with a rhetorical rasp.

"For some families in these projects, there was not Thanksgiving Friday. There was an empty chair at the dinner table," he said.

"Violence, rage, murder and malice do not end with the pulling of the trigger," Spencer said, pointing to the bedecked casket.

"For the family, for your family, this can be the end. Some of you have children and grandchildren," Spencer said to the adults in the circle, nodding at the coffin.

"If you allow them to choose between red and blue, then you ultimately will choose between red and blue."

State high court likely to attack right-to-know civil access rule

HOUSTON (AP) — The new Republican-controlled Texas Supreme Court is expected to attack a civil rule that allows access to documents and settlements of lawsuits concerning the public's safety.

The push to pare back the right-to-know rule is part of a larger lawsuit reform campaign launched by business groups, corporate lawyers and civil defense attorneys who want tort laws tightened.

And the conservative muscle flexed in the general election has heightened the movement, the Houston Chronicle reported Saturday.

When the Democrat-controlled state Supreme Court passed the rule in 1990, it was by a one-vote majority.

Next year, Republicans will control the court for the first time since Reconstruction and both sides in the debate speculate the rule will soon be up for review and revision.

Under the rule, private information compiled in lawsuits must be revealed if the material is determined to have overriding importance for public health or safety.

It covers cases that may concern defective consumer products, malpractice by doctors and lawyers, misconduct by elected officials or medicines with harmful side effects.

Anytime attorneys want information concealed, a hearing is required and notice must be posted to give others an opportunity to join.

Until the rule, voluminous records complied in such cases were often permanently closed to the public at the request of attorneys involved.

Opponents point out the rule allows any outside person or entity to participate in the required hearing — a situation that gives a competitor the chance to learn invaluable trade secrets.

But Tom Leatherbury, a Dallas lawyer who authored the rule, said excluding competitors "or companies, or the public or any other class" would make it unconstitutional.

"This rule is balanced to protect all interests — trade secrets and the rights of the public," he said.

Plaintiff's attorney Michael Caddell said before the rule, settlements covered up dangerous products that the public needed to know about.

Critics say they are not intent on destroying the rule but insist that it is in need of refinement. They contend it is unnecessary in many cases, and that its terms are too broad and overbearing on the parties involved in the affected lawsuits.

"It always sounds good to say there should be full access," said attorney Lynne Liberato. "But almost everyone agrees this is a very poorly written law which needs modifying."

Second person dies from injuries in collision

HOUSTON (AP) — A second person died Saturday from injuries he suffered when his car was struck by a pickup that ran a red light as it tried to outrun police, authorities said.

Robert Romero, 36, died Saturday at Ben Taub hospital from injuries he suffered the day before in the accident in southeast Houston, said hospital spokeswoman Beth Branley.

Romero's sister was killed in the crash, which also injured the two others riding in the car.

The truck was being chased by a Houston police squad car and a Metropolitan Transit Authority police unit.

"This guy was running from the police," said police spokesman Alvin Wright, who added that there appeared to be no violation of the department's chase procedure.

The officers were keeping the truck in sight, Wright said, but slowed when it approached the red light. But the truck ran through it, broadsiding a Honda Accord.

Laura Romero Madrid, 32, was thro[illegible]n the car, which then fatally crushed her against the side of a building.

Her mother, Maria Torres Rome[illegible]o, 62, was in critical condition Saturday at Ben Taub Hospital. A 10-year-old girl whose id[illegible]tity had not been released by authorities was in poor condition.

The pickup driver, a 21-year-ol[illegible] man, and a 16-year-old boy passenger were arrested. Police said the case had been ref[illegible]rred to a grand jury for charges and an inve[illegible]ation into the crash continued.

The chase started when the p[illegible]up ran a stop sign. When a patrol officer tried to stop the truck, the driver took off, running several lights before the accident, police said.

They said officers, who had learned the truck was stolen, pursued it, along with a Metro police officer.

Police Lt. J.A. Buttitta said the patrol car never exceeded the speed limit, which was posted at 35 mph, and did not run the red light.

But Juan Escamilla, who works in the area and said he saw the accident, disagreed.

"The cops were right behind him," Escamilla told The Houston Post. "The officers did not stop at the light. If not for the (accident) they'd still be chasing them."

Buttitta said no witnesses have come forward with such accounts.

Pennsylvania winner of Texas Lotto jackpot may lose award

AUSTIN (AP) — A Pennsylvanian holds the winning ticket to Wednesday night's $10 million Texas Lotto drawing, but lottery officials may not pay the jackpot because of the way the ticket was purchased.

"It's up in the air," said lottery spokesman Steve Levine. As of Saturday night, Levine said no winning ticket had been turned in.

A New Jersey-based firm called Pic-A-$tate Lottery Service announced Friday that a customer ordered the winning Texas ticket at a hardware store in Croydon, Pa., five miles north of Philadelphia. The service sells the $1 tickets for $2.

Such lottery resale operations violate Texas law. So whether or not the state will make good on the numbers is undecided, Levine said.

"A decision would be made by lottery's executive director, legal counsel and, most likely, by the Texas Lottery Commission members themselves," he said.

But Ross Walton, a Pic-A-$tate officials, told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram that he is "absolutely sure that Texas will pay.

"It was purchased through their legitimate agent in Texas."

Walton compared his firm to "your Aunt Sally who gets your ticket for you. We are a courier service."

The Texas Lottery has paid jackpots to residents of other states, but those winners personally bought their tickets. This is the first case in Texas of a winning ticket being commercially bought for someone, Levine said.

In similar cases, other states have gone both ways on the question of honoring winning tickets bought out of state, he said.

"It is illegal for anyone to sell a Texas Lottery ticket who is not a licensed Texas Lottery ticket retailer, he said.

Perot's political group urges delay of vote on GATT

DALLAS (AP) — A political group that grew out of Ross Perot's run for the White House said Saturday the public is being coerced into accepting the new world trade accord.

"The public resents legislators who bind it to the terms of an agreement that the public knows little about and doesn't agree with," said Beverly Kennedy, coordinator of the Dallas office of United We Stand America. "In most endeavors, this insidious form of coercion is called fraud."

Ms. Kennedy said her group urges the delay of the GATT vote.

The 123-nation pact, negotiated under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, would reduce tariffs worldwide by about a third and offer more protection for American patents and copyrights.

The treaty is scheduled for a vote Tuesday in the House and is expected to pass easily with bipartisan support. A Dec. 1 vote in the Senate is expected to be closer.

Ms. Kennedy said the public has been told GATT is a good agreement but wonders why legislators fear delaying the vote.

"We, the people, call on the Republican leadership to adhere to its Contract With America and delay the vote," she said. "They also promised fiscal responsibility.

"Are they going to violate their own pledge only weeks after the election by voting for the GATT, implementing legislation which contains exactly the kind of spending they campaigned against?"

Specifically, Ms. Kennedy said her group doesn't like it that changes cannot be made to the agreement as it currently reads and the find the appeals process unfair for countries who "feel slighted."

Plunge in values shrivels wealth in oil-rich school districts

By Jean Pagel
Associated Press

ANDREWS — Rich isn't what it used to be for schools in the Texas oil patch.

Property values plunged this year deep as a drill bit into the dirt, forcing districts to adopt leaner budgets and higher property taxes.

"Oil has never been the horn of plenty," said Ervin Huddleston, superintendent of the Andrews Independent School District, where property values fell $463.8 million since 1993.

Even though Andrews officials raised their tax rate one nickel to $1.50 per $100 property valuation, they expect a revenue loss of almost $6 million because of the 22-percent drop in property values.

Oil-rich districts contacted by The Associated Press reported they have millions of dollars less to funnel to their property-poor counterparts across the state.

Four of those districts — Andrews, Denver City, Iraan-Sheffield and Seminole — lost so much mineral value that their contributions to other schools will total a combined $19.4 million below last year's.

"If this trend continues, we no longer will be rich," Huddleston said. "We will be average."

Andrews sent $14 million to the state last year under the mandate to reduce its property wealth to $280,000 per student.

But it will take a great deal less surrendered this time — $8 million to San Angelo — for Andrews to drop again to that limit.

Or consider Grady, a district "about 17 miles from a cup of coffee," as Superintendent/trigonometry teacher Johnny Tubb describes it.

Grady draws its students from the Martin County towns of Lenorah and Tarzan. Last year, the district complied with the wealth-cutting mandate by sending roughly $1.6 million to Stanton.

"I told our staff there's good news and bad news," Tubb said of this year's situation. "I said we're sending Stanton $469,606, and they applauded. Then I said the bad news is our values dropped 24 percent."

Of the state's top 10 mineral-wealth school districts, only gas-abundant Carthage in East Texas enjoyed an increase in property value this year.

Interviews by the AP found losses as dramatic as 35 percent in Whiteface and 29 percent in Denver City.

Those hardest hit share common elements. Most are taxing at or near the state-maximum $1.50; they feel politically voiceless; they're bitter about what they perceive as "Robin Hood" government compounding their oil troubles.

Juvenile program provides alternatives

By Linda Leavell
Associated Press

DALLAS — The 16 boys sat in a circle, shuffling their feet or staring at the floor.

Their group leader, Hartford Jackson, asked if they understood why they were spending an hour with him each week for the male development class.

Blank looks. More shuffling.

Finally, 16-year-old Henry McGee spoke up. "To empower us for the future?"

Jackson jumped up and hugged him. "Go, boy! Did you hear that word that he used? He didn't learn nothing else today (but) he learned empowerment."

These are bright moments for Jackson, a case worker at the West Dallas Community Centers Inc. Positive Directions program. The program is located in a strip shopping mall, amid crumbling storefronts and housing projects.

"Where we're located is no cake walk," said Zachary Thompson, coordinator of the West Dallas program. "This is not something that most social workers or licensed chemical dependency counselors volunteer for. . . . This is on the front line of dealing with mothers who are addicted to drugs. Kids who don't know who their fathers are. Dealing with dropouts."

On a recent evening, the young men were learning about empowerment, while the girls were practicing hair braiding, a skill that later could earn them money.

Positive Directions is a joint effort between the state and Dallas County agencies to provide alternatives for at-risk juveniles. Five sites are being developed in Dallas, selected from specific zip codes where juvenile crime rates are highest.

The $1.5 million program, which involves the Texas Youth Commission, Texas Juvenile Probation Commission, and Texas Commission on Alcohol and Drug Abuse, could be replicated statewide if it succeeds, TYC Regional Director Linda Ross said.

Dallas Challenge, a private, nonprofit assessment and referral agency, is administering all of the sites except West Dallas, which is being run by West Dallas Community Centers.

Juveniles will be referred to the program by the youth commission, Dallas County Juvenile Probation Department, community leaders and school officials. Some will be walk-ins. At each program, 100 families will be selected to participate.

that we lost to the hail, sandstorms and high winds," said Delton Stone, co-op manager.

There was no sub-surface moisture at mid-summer on which to replant a crop, he said.

Stone is predicting a 7,000-bale gin run and an early-December shutdown.

The Midland gin's most productive season was in 1979, when 22,616 bales were processed. The nadir was in 1983, when only 2,775 bales were ginned.

"That was the worst year this co-op ever had," Stone said.

In past years, the gin has been operating well into December and often into January.

"The gin will have another loss this year," Stone predicted. "I hope it doesn't. But if they (farmers) don't make a cotton crop, we don't gin it and we're all hurting."

But Stone, expressing farmers' optimism for a bumper crop next year, said: "We'll make a good one next year. We're betting on it."

"We've got to be optimistic about it," said B.J. Havlak, manager of the Glasscock County Farmers Co-op.

While the cotton price is healthy at around 70 cents a pound, cotton production is short.

St. Lawrence's irrigated cotton was so scarce that the farmers shut down their new, $4 million high-speed gin and are finishing ginning on the old No. 1 gin.

"We ran out of cotton," lamented Havlak.

The new gin closed for the season on Nov. 17 — less than two months after it was cranked up on Sept. 20.

"Normally, we are covered up with cotton" on Thanksgiving Day, Havlak said.

The co-op, which usually processes between 60,000 and 65,000 bales, this year will be turning out about 40,000 bales — more than a 30 percent decline.

"If you don't generate any funds, you can't pay out anything," Havlak said. "We ginned enough to make a little, or at least, break even."

The season's hail, dry weather and high winds made inroads into production.

"We just didn't get the rains," he said. "Really we didn't get enough to plant on; we planted it dry."

Northward toward Lamesa, Don Lewallen, manager of the cotton-classing office of the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Agricultural Marketing Services, said that dryland cotton production in the Lamesa area is "almost a complete failure."

Lamesa is primarily dryland farming.

But north of Lamesa into the Lubbock-Brownfield area, the region's economic salvation is in the dominance of irrigated cotton land.

"Their production is pretty stable from one year to the next," Lewallen said.

While cotton production may be down somewhat in the High Plains and substantially lower into the South Plains in the Midland-Stanton area, cotton quality is high, and prices, at 70 cents a pound, are encouraging.

"West Texas is producing some really good, high quality" cotton largely due to improvements in varieties by cotton researchers, Lewallen said.

West Texas upland cotton, which has "high strength" and "good staple," is used widely by textile plants in making blue denim and all-white goods, Lewallen said.

Much of it is exported to Asia, where it is made into clothes and returned to the United States.

Marc Traweek, a former Midland County farmer and ginner, is managing the Tokio Farmers Co-op cotton gin west of Brownfield.

In the Great Plains region, cotton is "definitely making a good bit more than we expected it would" despite the light rainfall, high temperatures and boll-weevil intrusions, he said.

Irrigated cotton there is making up to three bales to the acre. Dryland is making about half a bale or less to the acre.

In general, cotton south of Welch in northwest Dawson County is "pretty poor," Traweek said, and cotton north of there toward Lubbock is "doing a whole lot better.

"It's grading good and selling good," Traweek said.

At Stanton in Martin County, Lindell Newton of the Long Gin Co. figured that cotton production is about half the normal.

"We had ample moisture when we planted but very little summer rain," he said. "The cotton came up good," but the lack of rainfall and damaging sandstorms cut into production.

Newton said his gin "won't make any money" this year due to the shortfall. "The price of cotton is good. Where they (the farmers) are hurting, they are not getting enough yield per acre."

Meanwhile, "Most farmers are pretty optimistic about next year," Newton said. The cotton price should be decent in 1995, he said.

North of Stanton at the Four Way Cotton Gin at Lenorah, farmer-ginner Myrl Mitchell said he has "caught up" ginning.

"We need a freeze. We've still got some cotton (in the fields). But farmers don't need to spend money to defoliate."

The average first killing freeze in autumn is Nov. 9, according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport. Fall's latest first kill freeze on record is Dec. 6.

"Our quality of cotton is absolutely fantastic," Mitchell said, despite the damage the crops suffered from hail and high winds in May and the high winds and high temperatures in June and July.

"It's everything that the mills want. The price is good and the quality is good. It's grading real good."

SEMINAR: Walger gathers information at conference

(From 1B)

The closing session involved media techniques for grass-roots movements.

"I didn't realize I was a lobbyist until I came home from this thing," Ms. Walger said.

Keeping on top of area elected officials who spend taxpayers' money is a primary goal, Ms. Walger said.

"Sometimes after an election, we just go 'Oh well, they'll take care of it,' and they won't unless you are on them constantly," she said.

"You've got to make sure your representative knows what you want all the time — between elections," she said.

Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, attended the conference.

"We heard his wagon speech about those pulling the vehicle and those riding in it, to great applause, and of course, his often-repeated Dickie Flat narrative," she joked.

The only controversy to arise at the conference was over the GATT — General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade — treaty, she said.

One faction was lobbying for the treaty's passage during the lame-duck session, while another camp maintained the agreement is far too complex and important to be hurried through Congress.

During the next year, Ms. Walger hopes to get more CATA members appointed to various boards serving the city, hospital and other taxing entities.

Transplant recipient celebrates anniversary

By Janine Zuniga
Associated Press

DALLAS — Alyssa Smith has been given life twice by her mother.

The 6-year-old has survived five years since the University of Chicago Medical Center placed a portion of 29-year-old Teresa Smith's liver into her body.

The special anniversary of the first partial liver transplant from a living donor will be marked today in both Texas and Chicago.

Mrs. Smith says Alyssa is a very active 6-year-old. She describes the tall first-grader as a girl who likes her dolls and who can't walk down the hall without tapping her feet.

"She's perfect," said Dr. Peter Whitington, professor of pediatrics and director of pediatric transplant services at the university. "She's perfectly caught up in every way. She has no physical or emotional problems at all."

In 1989, there was never a question in the minds of Mrs. Smith and her husband, John, as to whether she would give up 40 percent of her liver to her baby girl.

Alyssa was suffering from biliary atresia, a childhood disease that causes the bile ducts to close, rendering the liver useless. The disease is almost always fatal.

The body cannot survive long with a diseased liver. The largest glandular organ in the body secretes bile; helps store and metabolize carbohydrates, fats and proteins; and helps detoxify the body.

In 1984, the university's medical center developed the technique for cutting adult cadaver livers along their natural seams for use in transplants. The divided livers were then fashioned to fit a child.

Whitington said almost 80 percent of children in need of livers are younger than age 3. The donor pool for children is much smaller than the pool for adults.

At the time Alyssa needed hers, 25 percent to 30 percent of children on liver waiting lists were dying before one could be found, Whitington said. As the pressure on the donor pool became more intense, the thought of using living donors became more compelling.

Whitington said Alyssa probably would have died within a year without a transplant.

MC provides unique holiday celebration

Coombes

Besides being a chance to join in an early holiday cheer, the Midland College's annual Merry Christmas celebration gives the Fine Arts Department a chance to show off the accomplishments of many of its students.

In doing so, Midland College offers one of the more unique community Christmas celebrations, combining presentations from four different musical groups, the lighting of the Carillon Tower, the opening of the student art show and an art sale preview.

Santa Claus and the Midland College mascot Pepe Paisano will appear for the children, and hot chocolate and Christmas cookies will be provided for those who didn't get enough to eat at Thanksgiving.

Events begin at 6:30 with Music Instructor Betty Morris playing Christmas music over the Carillon—one of the few times during the year when Carillon music is live. At 6:45 the Christmas lights on the tower will be lit, and the student singing group VocalPoint will perform. VocalPoint has gained an area-wide reputation for excellence, and listening to one of their performances is always a treat.

The celebration moves inside at 7 p.m. as a brass ensemble performs during the opening of the student art show. The show will feature the work of Midland College art students and includes watercolor, oil paintings, drawing, ceramics, sculpture and photography.

An addition to the student show this year will be a preview sale of art that will be part of a student art sale next weekend.

The music continues at 7:30 in the Fine Arts Auditorium with "Winter Wonderland Concert" featuring the Midland College Community Band and the Midland College Community Jazz Ensemble.

The Community Band concert will feature music from such categories as sea songs, symphonic suites and "Tres Danzas de Mexico." The group also will perform the DeLamont Overture and Cantilena for Winds.

The Jazz concert will feature Mancini!, Fascinating Rhythm, Mona Lisa, Count the Aces, I Got Plenty O' Nuttin', Lulu's Back in Town, Mr. Bojangles, Do Nothin' Till You Hear From Me, and Just One of Those Things.

Each year individuals preparing to go to college or graduate school face the dilemma of how to pay for tuition, room and board, text books, lab fees, and other expenses. That's because college costs have skyrocketed and continue to increase yearly, putting extra strain on family budgets and assets.

Yet, there are more than 375,000 funding sources available to assist these students. Contrary to popular belief more than 80 percent of the funds available to students do not depend on family need or high grades. Many are based on factors such as the student's interests, hobbies, academic focus, age, ethnic background or parent's work or military service.

More than $6.6 billion of this funding goes uncollected each year simply because people do not ask for it, according to a report by the National Commission on Student Financial Aid. Now a new academic funding publication, updated for 1994-95, is available to help step students through the process and to outline their options and identify sources for assistance.

For information on how to receive academic funding and scholarships, send a No. 10 self-addressed, double-stamped envelope plus $2 to cover handling to the National Academic Funding Administration, 815 Middle Street, Suite 1300, Portsmouth, NH 03801.

Prayer in school exists on campuses statewide

By Linda P. Campbell and Hollace Weiner
N.Y. Times News Service

From Haltom High School fans near Fort Worth praying for a safe football game to student prayer groups meeting in the Little Elm school district in Denton County north of Dallas-Fort Worth, religion shows up in numerous schools across the region and the state.

ENNIS — Moments after the bell rings each day, a pair of fifth-graders step up to the public-address microphone at Stephen F. Austin Elementary School here to recite a devotional they have chosen from a notebook of 85 looseleaf pages.

"The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want," 10-year-old Perry Nutt read into the loudspeaker Monday. "As Thanksgiving draws near, let us be truly thankful for our many blessings."

Tiffany Calhoun, age 11, continued: "Our dear heavenly Father, we thank thee for sending thy Son to be our Shepherd. . . . In Jesus' name, we pray."

The same selection of prayers has been used at this white-brick school since 1963, when Anne Selzer, wife of the school's first principal, typed them up.

Coincidentally, that was the year the U.S. Supreme Court barred teacher-led prayers in public-school classrooms. The year before, the high court ruled that the government could not dictate the form of prayers recited at school.

The tradition in this historic Czech railroad town south of Dallas may be the most vivid example of an often-ignored fact: Prayer never completely left Texas public schools.

From Haltom High School fans near Fort Worth praying for a safe football game to student prayer groups meeting in the Little Elm school district in Denton County north of Dallas-Fort Worth, religion shows up in numerous schools across the region and the state.

Some of the activities are legal. Some have simply never been challenged. And school administrators, civil libertarians and religious groups have different opinions on when a district crosses the constitutional line separating church and state.

"They never stopped having voluntary prayer in the Ennis public schools, and it's not been a big problem," said Rep. Joe Barton, a five-term Republican congressman whose three children have gone through the Ennis elementary schools.

Barton supports efforts by Rep. Newt Gingrich, the Georgia Republican who is expected to become the next speaker of the House, to pass a constitutional amendment allowing schoolchildren to pray in public schools. Texas Gov.-elect George W. Bush has also endorsed the idea.

But, said J. Brent Walker, general counsel for the Baptist Joint Committee, "It would be foolish to amend the First Amendment to do what they already have the right to do."

For instance, the 1984 Equal Access Act requires public schools to let Bible clubs and other religious-oriented groups meet on campus if other extracurricular organizations also use the facilities.

The First Amendment's free-speech guarantees protect participation in "See You at the Pole," an annual before-school prayer rally that started five years ago in the Fort Worth suburb of Burleson and has spread nationwide.

In addition, students can pray silently any time, and nothing would stop a group from bowing their heads over their lunch, said Walker. His committee advises 10 Baptist denominations, but not the largest, the Southern Baptist Convention, on religious liberty and church-state issues.

"I see them saying prayers every time a test is handed out," said James Monaco, superintendent in Aubrey, a Denton County district with 825 students.

A series of Supreme Court rulings from 1962 through 1992 held essentially that schools cannot sponsor prayer in any way, and that a religious activity is not voluntary if students would feel coerced to participate.

Students at many area school districts say generic prayers before football games, but Carroll High School in Southlake near Fort Worth dropped religious references at school-sponsored events after being sued last year over pep-rally prayers.

In Duncanville near Dallas, where the school district was sued over prayers at athletic events, the girls varsity basketball team still says postgame prayers. But coaches and other school employees do not participate, in accord with a court order.

The usual prayer at Stephenville High football games was dropped at a recent playoff game because rival Lubbock Estacado won the coin toss for home team and opted for no invocation. (Stephenville won the game).

Some public school districts, from urban ones such as Fort Worth to rural schools like Glen Rose 45 miles to the southwest, adhere to a strict policy that bars school prayer, school-directed graduation invocations and distribution of religious materials to students.

Those policies are based on neutrality guidelines distributed by the Texas Association of School Boards that say public schools should have no religious ceremonies. The guidelines go on to say that religious books can be shelved in the school library, the Bible can be taught as literature or history, and schools can let students choose and deliver nondenominational graduation prayers.

MISD: Storytellers to bring their tales to city's schools

(From 1B)

"When you remember someone, they live again," she said. "It's why I tell stories."

From the stories of her past, Ms. Brensnick-Perry broadened her material to include the contemporary Jewish experience.

Ms. Brensnick-Perry — who was recently named top storyteller at the National Storytelling Association convention — has appeared on the cable channel Showtime and public radio's "All Things Considered."

The New York resident has performed in numerous festivals and workshops across the nation. She has studied courses on the Talmud, folklore of the Bible and has attended Yiddish Folk schools.

She said being a featured storyteller at the recent national convention in Tennessee "was the most thrilling thing I ever saw in my life. Close to 9,000 people came ... people recognized me on the streets and fawned all over me. Then I went home and washed the dishes. Oh, well," she said, laughing.

At the workshop, Ms. Brensnick-Perry will speak on "Find the Place, Light the Fire, Tell the Story," and "The Power of the Story Through the Jewish Midrashic Tradition."

Ellis tells tales focusing on African traditions and the African American experience, and expounds on everything from runaway slaves to the African custom of placing pottery bowls directly onto hot coals.

Ellis will speak on "Using Objects to Discover Family and Community Stories" and "Tales as Tools: Using Stories to Connect and Empower Students."

Also returning to Midland is Donald Davis of Ocracoke Island, N.C. Davis, an Appalachian storyteller, is also an accomplished instructor in the art of formulating tales.

Davis said he travels approximately 300 days each year as a storyteller, lecturer and instructor.

He will speak on "People, Places, Happenings: Finding the Turning Points in Our Own Stories" and "Stories are Discovered, Not Created."

Bilingual storyteller and author Joe Hayes is making his first Midland appearance. A resident of New Mexico, Hayes is a nationally recognized teller of tales from the Hispanic, Native American and Anglo cultures. He is author of the book, "The Day It Snowed Tortillas."

Hayes will speak on "Burning at Both Ends: Stories that Lit Up My Childhood; Tales I'll Tell Till My Light Burns Out" and "Told By the Pinon Firelight: Southwestern Stories and Storytelling Traditions."

The fifth storyteller to be featured in "Celebrations of Light II" is Joseph Bruchac III. The New York resident has received numerous arts and writing fellowships and awards.

He is founder and editor of the Greenfield Review Press. His stories often feature Native Americans, and he will speak on "More Than One Thanksgiving: Special Celebrations in Abenaki and Iroquois Cultures Presented Through Traditional Stories and Songs" and "The Flame that Never Dies: Stories of Enlightenment and Light from the Native American Traditions of the Northeast."

"This event has attracted so many people. We are delighted to offer something with the potential to really meet the demands of the schools and community," Ms. Smith said. "And we are also proud to have someone from the National Endowment of the Arts paying us a site visit. We hope to make 'Celebrations of Light' an annual Midland tradition."

Both school administrators said the event has grown to such proportions that a committee will be needed to stage it next year.

For reservations to storytelling events, call 689-1007.

OTT: 'Barking of instructions' into receiver is very important

your face, as though the company's financial well-being is at stake. Next you cradle the phone between your shoulder and right cheek, freeing your hands to be waved wildly as you pace the floor and ask tough questions.

From time to time, it is important that you stop your caller in mid-sentence and then in your most impatient voice say things like, "Have you called Farnsworth about that?" and "Do I need to come down there and take care of this myself?"

All the while, you are sneaking glances at your friends. Are they noticing your actions? Do they appear impressed? Are they sitting on the edge of their chairs?

But you can't let on that you are interested.

Instead, you must continue to take charge of the situation, pacing like a caged animal and occasionally running your hand through your hair, as if to say, "It's this kind of a decision that ages a man before his time."

Finally, having played the scenario for all it is worth, you casually turn your back to the den and whisper into the receiver, "Check my top left-hand drawer." Then, whirling back to face your friends, you say in your most authoritative voice, "If you have any other problems, call me back."

Hanging up, you stroll back into the den, shrug sheepishly and say, "Sorry."

If the plan works to perfection, one of your friends will then say, "What was that all about?"

You respond by saying:

"Ah, nothing really. Just had to deal with a problem at the office."

Translated, that means:

"Ah, nothing really. They just couldn't find the key to the men's room."

Gary Ott is managing editor of the Reporter-Telegram.

Feds work to stop elaborate laundering schemes

By Josh Lemieux
Associated Press

McALLEN — Early this century, a mobster would take out loans from a bank where he deposited his ill-gotten gains. If he had to scram, he left the bank holding the bag on the loans.

The same thing happened to an American Express Co. subsidiary last week — except the crooks were international drug dealers, their schemes were elaborately high-tech, and their profits mind-boggling.

"We really cannot tolerate a situation in which the drug lords of the world own much of the stock and other important assets of our economy," said Sarah Jane Hughes, an Indiana University law professor who studies money laundering. "They will then wield so much power that they will be a threat to our democracy."

American Express Bank International announced a $50 million package Monday to settle the actions of two former officers convicted of laundering more than $30 million for a Mexican cocaine cartel.

"I think it will send shock waves through the financial industry," Hughes said. "If it doesn't, it should."

The Office of National Drug Control Policy estimated in 1993 that annual gross revenues from illegal drugs in the U.S. market alone range from $40 billion to $50 billion. The government projects that up to $33 billion of the amount must be laundered to appear as legitimate wealth.

Charts from Federal Reserve System banks show hundreds of millions of dollars beyond what can be explained for the level of business activity in Southern California, Texas and Florida — all money-laundering hubs.

"There you can surmise that it's drug money consistently driving the surplus," said Vincent Klink, resident agent in charge of enforcement at McAllen's U.S. Customs office, which houses the task force that investigated the American Express case.

By contrast, Fed districts such as New York — an end market for drugs — show consistent cash deficits.

Assistant U.S. attorneys David Novak and Charles Dause, who prosecuted the American Express case, said today's drug dealers launder their proceeds for the same reasons the early mobsters did — to keep their wealth liquid while concealing it from authorities.

"They play leap frog with regulators and prosecutors," Hughes said. "They are like chameleons. They can make themselves into something new faster than we can figure out what it is."

Assistant U.S. Attorney David Novak displays charts that the Financial Crimes Task Force used to investigate the American Express Co. case.

In the American Express case, duffel bags stuffed with $100 bills from drug deals were deposited in Texas banks, transferred by wire to New York and Switzerland, moved to offshore holding companies in the Cayman Islands, then reinvested in real estate and cash-intensive businesses such as retail outlets and car lots.

The bank had to write off nearly $19 million loans that the two convicted ex-officers, Antonio Giraldi and Lourdes Reategui, made to a cartel money man who disappeared.

Giraldi and Reategui said they never suspected that their biggest client, Ricardo Aguirre Villagomez, was handling tainted money.

But Novak said the bankers repeatedly lied on loan documents for a millionaire client with a humble education and little more than $20,000 in legitimate income as a gas station manager.

"If they (bankers) know that the funds that they are conducting are drug proceeds, they'd better be scared, and I'd like to know their names," Novak said. "An innocent banker has nothing to be concerned about."

Although many banks currently maintain "know your customer" guidelines, the Treasury Department is expected to propose new standards for all financial institutions within six months.

The Treasury proposals, which will become law after an industry comment period, will require financial institutions to develop customer profiles and report to the government any clients who are moving inexplicable amounts of money.

A bill in the U.S. House Banking Committee would require financial institutions to report all wire transfers of $10,000 or more to the Internal Revenue Service. Currently, only currency transactions of $10,000 must be reported.

Hughes also is consulting with a congressional task force on the possibility of developing a computer tracking system to detect suspicious movement of funds.

The challenge of the new regulations will be to balance an investor's right to privacy against the government's need to investigate crimes, Hughes said. "It's a balance that needs a watchful eye on it all the time," the law professor said.

Cellular firm wires tunnel for phone use

N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — Cellular phone service has begun in the Lincoln Tunnel, the Port Authority and Cellular One announced last month.

Technicians have installed more than 26,000 feet of cable through the tunnel's three tubes, said Terry Benczik, spokeswoman for the Port Authority, which operates the tunnel. She said the cost of $1.2 million would be paid by the cellular company.

Similar wiring is to be installed in the Holland Tunnel in the first quarter of next year, she said, after which the service is to be opened to all cellular telephone customers, not just those of Cellular One.

The 57-year-old Lincoln Tunnel is the first tunnel in the metropolitan area to be wired for cellular phones; it already is equipped for AM radio.

The tunnel, the nation's busiest, carries about 56,000 vehicles in each direction on weekdays. Cellular One, in an announcement, said it "can now be known as the world's longest telephone booth."

Ms. Benczik said the authority had discussed the possibility that car phones would be a distraction to drivers, increasing accidents.

"We sort of had to accept that it's the '90s and that's what people are doing," she said. "Part of the reality of the '90s is that everyone's office is with them all the time because they have beepers or phones with them. Now the tunnel is also somebody's office."

Some girls think making baby is making a future

EDITOR'S NOTE: Teen-age mothers have become the prime target of welfare reformers. The theory is that poor girls will stop having babies if they can't rely on welfare to support them. But logic seldom rules in the realm of teen-agers and sex. The story of one teen mother, whose life echoes thousands of others, shows how tangled the problem is.

By Connie Cass
Associated Press

KEARNEYSVILLE, W.Va. — She's an unemployed, unwed mother at 17, but Dawn Kowalski feels blessed when she cradles baby Justin — a warm bundle of tomorrow dozing in her arms.

Before the baby came along, Dawn had no future to hold onto.

Stroking his fine, sandy hair, she describes her former self: a school dropout from a troubled home, with no job and no plans, feeling trapped in rural West Virginia. She wasted her days at the mall, partied all night.

"I didn't care what happened to me," she said softly.

Now her world is a small apartment dotted with diapers and parenting magazines, the rent paid by a federal housing subsidy. She lives alone with 6-week-old Justin, nursing him, sleeping when he sleeps, listening to country music because MTV makes him wail.

Dawn may be an accidental mother, but she takes pride in being a good one. "This has made me a better person," she said recently. "It's really straightened my life out."

It's an odd perspective. After all, teen-age pregnancy is an avoidable hardship that robs many girls of their prospects and can doom their children to poverty.

But life unfolds haphazardly for girls like Dawn, and cause and effect aren't always clear.

Some believe making a baby is making a future. And to them, even a shaky future may seem better than none at all.

More than one million teen-agers will get pregnant this year; about a third of them will be age 17 or younger.

Compared with other teen-age girls, teen mothers are less likely to finish their education, less likely to earn a decent wage, and more likely to spend years on welfare. Families headed by current or former teen mothers receive $34 billion a year in government health and welfare benefits.

Americans worried as the teen pregnancy rate climbed over the past two decades, reflecting an increase in the number of teens having sex.

It could be worse, however. Teens who have sex today use birth control more effectively than sexually active teens of the past.

Abortion also has kept the teen birth rate down: more than a third of pregnant teens decide to abort.

Middle-class teens have become so successful at avoiding birth that teen mothers are now widely perceived to be poor, black girls living in the inner cities. But many rural areas also have high teen birth rates, and there are more than twice as many white teen-age mothers as black ones.

The common denominator is disadvantage: 83 percent of teens who have babies are from poor or low-income families, according to the Alan Guttmacher Institute, a not-for-profit research group.

These girls are only slightly more likely than middle-class teens to have sex. They are significantly more likely to get pregnant, however, and much less likely to have an abortion, Guttmacher found.

Births to single mothers are rising across society, but illegitimate babies are still more common among poor girls. Giving up a child for adoption is rare.

Poverty overlaps with all sorts of other factors: black and Hispanic girls get pregnant at twice the rate of whites; studies show girls raised by a single parent are more likely to have babies; so are the daughters of teen mothers; girls who have been sexually abused; girls who are doing poorly in school or have dropped out; and girls who drink or use drugs.

As a child, Dawn made A's in school and dreamed of being a lawyer. A favorite fifth-grade teacher joked that her "big mouth" would make her a good one. Dawn and her stepsister practiced arguing cases for fun.

But life at home was chaotic. Dawn's parents were always fighting; money was always short. Her father drank heavily and was often out of work. Dawn's mother says he beat her and hit the two girls.

Whenever he grew too abusive, "Mom would just pack us off to the women's shelter," said Dawn's stepsister, Tina Fleming, now 20.

Things got worse when Dawn's parents separated, then divorced when she was 11. For years Dawn was bounced back and forth between her father, whom she feared, and her mother, who was often broke and soon in another turbulent marriage.

"My life fell apart," Dawn said. "I just gave up. I didn't bother with school anymore. I quit caring."

By then Dawn was routinely skipping school, staying out late, drinking at parties. She tried sex for the first time at age 15, Dawn said, because "everybody was talking about it."

Soon after she turned 16, Dawn quit school. A few months later, she was pregnant.

Teen mothers have become a favorite target of welfare reformers in both political parties — they say the current system rewards teens for having illegitimate babies.

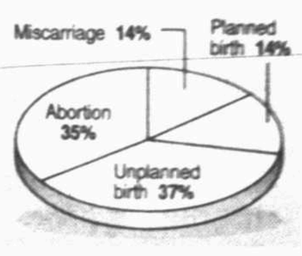
Girls like Dawn get welfare checks and other aid that lets them set up their own households and feel like instant adults, even if they are barely scraping by.

Next year, Congress will consider proposals to cut off aid to young mothers or make them work for their welfare checks.

When teens get pregnant

More than a million teen-age girls become pregnant each year. Over a third of them are 17 or younger. Most did not intend to get pregnant.

What happens:
(Aged 19 and younger, 1990: 1,040,000 girls)



Almost 60 percent of teen-age mothers come from poor families earning less than $14,800 a year, and another fourth are from families with incomes of less than $29,600.

Poor or low-income girls are:

38% of all teen-age girls

42% of sexually experienced girls

73% of teens who become pregnant

83% of teens who give birth

Midland Lee rallies 4 times for tie, marches on in playoffs

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

Welcome to the Land of the Living Dead.

Midland Lee has already risen from the dead so many times this season in the Class 5A Small School state football playoffs that the Rebels are beginning to take miracles as an expected part of the game.

But Saturday at Memorial Stadium, Lee's bag of miracles is almost beyond description as they came from behind four times to produce a 29-29 tie with Arlington Lamar (11-1-1) to advance to the quarterfinals, 5-4 on penetrations.

Lee had to come from behind 21-7 against No. 10 state ranked Amarillo High in the first round of the playoffs two weeks ago to forge a 21-21 tie, advancing 4-3 on penetrations.

Saturday, Lee had to outscore the Vikings 9-8 in the last 2:50 of the game to turn the trick. They had to do it in a roller-coaster fashion that left the Lee faithful limp with emotion and Lamar dripping in what-could-have-beens.

These two squads put points on the boards four times in the last 4:51 of the game, giving huge emotional swings from the east side of Memorial Stadium to the west side. Simply put — this was probably the best football game ever played at old Memorial with 30 fourth quarter points.

Lee's only lead of the game came with 2:50 left when mighty-mite, 137-pound Jerry Stanford, an explosion waiting to happen, returned a Quietin Spitzer punt 68 yards for a touchdown to hand Lee a 26-21 lead. Stanford shook one tackle at his own 40-yard line, found his wall, got two blocks and scored.

"I felt like I had turned the game around with the punt return," Stanford said. "But I guess that the game was just starting then."

And starting it was. The Vikings came back with an 80-yard scoring march on just six plays as Lamar quarterback David Sobezak hit Eric Gano with a 31-yard TD pass to end the drive. Sobezak then ran for two points to make the game 29-26. Gano had beaten Lee sophomore defensive back John Norman to get open and just draped his body over the goal line with Norman hanging to his feet.

"That was a turnaround big time for us," Gano said. "That gave us the lead and the momen-

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — Danny Kanell never gave up, even with his team trailing by 28 points going into the fourth quarter.

Kanell threw for 232 yards and a touchdown in the final period as seventh-ranked Florida State rallied to tie No. 4 Florida 31-31 Saturday.

"Every time we scored, I came back to the bench and said the same thing, 'It's not over yet,'" said Kanell, who completed 16 of his last 17 passes. "Things were just clicking."

Kanell found the range after the Seminoles switched to the shotgun formation in the second half. He was 34-for-40 and 349 yards after the break.

"I don't know what happened to our defense," said Florida coach Steve Spurrier. "I thought we were in good shape."

The tie, the first between the Seminoles and Gators since 1961, ended the slim national championship hopes of both teams and kept the Gators winless at Tallahassee since 1986.

"It was a big lesson we've learned," said Florida safety Michael Gilmore. "It's not over until it's over."

After Rock Preston's 4-yard touchdown run with 1:45 left cut Florida's lead to 31-30, Florida State coach Bobby Bowden went for the tying extra point instead of a 2-point conversion that could have given the Seminoles the greatest fourth-quarter comeback win in NCAA history.

"I thought we'd go for two, but coach Bowden felt we had come too far to not get something out of it," Kanell said.

"I felt like if you're behind 31-3 and you have a chance to tie it up, you'd better go ahead and do it," he said. "I wish we could've won it, but that would've really been asking too much."

Florida State got the ball back with 22 seconds left at its 29-yard line, but ran out of time as it was driving for a possible winning score. The game ended with the Seminoles at the Florida 43 following a 19-yard pass to Kez McCorvey and a 9-yard run by Kanell, who couldn't get out of bounds before time

Cooper rallies but falls short

Staff Report

ARLINGTON — Abilene Cooper came back from two 19 point deficits to put a scare into Arlington High in the team's Class 5A small school region playoff. But a late rally led by quarterback Zac Allen came up three points short in the Cougars 42-39 loss. Arlington (11-1-1) plays Midland Lee Saturday at 2 p.m. at Midland's Memorial Stadium in a state quarterfinal.

Allen threw for three touchdowns and two two-points conversions in the last period. Cooper (10-2), which trailed 35-16 entering the fourth quarter, failed to recover an onside kick with 53 seconds left to play and the Colts ran out the clock.

The teams combined for 52 first downs and 986 yards of offense. Cooper turned the ball over three times with two interceptions and a fumble.

Arlington went out to a 28-9 halftime lead with touchdown runs by Ricky Brown of one and 28 yards. Brown finished with 138 yards on 26 carries.

Colt quarterback Greg Covington threw for two touchdowns in the first half to add to Browns' tallies. Covington threw for 236 yards in the game.

Owls grab share of SWC crown

By Michael A. Lutz
AP Sports Writer

HOUSTON — The Rice Owls missed their chance to play in the Cotton Bowl, but seized a chance to be part of an unprecedented five-way tie for the Southwest Conference championship.

Freshman Chad Nelson ran 10 yards for a touchdown and surprised Houston with a 23-yard touchdown pass to Jeff Venghaus, leading Rice to a 31-13 victory Saturday.

The Owls (5-6, 4-3) got a share of the SWC crown for the first time since 1957.

"It's good to be a part of history," Rice coach Ken Hatfield. "It's the first time three losses won a championship. It's a great day to be a Rice Owl."

(From 1C)

tum. It was such a great feeling at the time. I can't believe Lee came back to win the game."

Norman said, "I knew they were going to throw to him (Gano), but he had been going inside all day and he went outside. I just made a stupid mistake, but it will never happen again. You can bet I was glad to see the field goal at the end of the game."

And yes, Lee did get the tying field goal, but the Rebels had to get to the 20-yard line first.

"We were tied on penetrations and behind in first downs, so we had to get to the 20-yard line before we could even think about kicking a field goal," said Lee offensive coordinator Mike Quimby.

Well, Lee had only 1:23 to work with after the Gano TD and no timeouts. Quarterback Dedrick Adams took over. He ran for 11 yards, passed for 14 yards to Stanford and then hit Antwan Alexander for a huge 41-yard gain to the Lamar 19-yard line, giving Lee a 5-4 advantage in penetrations. Melvin Dunson, who had 120 yards rushing in his second game back from a broken shoulder blade, got seven yards to set up Clay Boyd's 29-yard field goal. Boyd was dead solid perfect with only 25 seconds left to play.

"I was real nervous out there," Boyd said. "The season was on the line. I don't know if I really wanted to be in that position or not, but I hit it real good, right on the sweet spot. It was great to see that ball go through. I've never felt that kind of pressure before."

Lee coach Earl Miller, who has announced that this will be his last season at Lee after nine years as head coach, lives to play again. But these Rebels may have given him his finest moment as a coach.

"These kids found out what courage is all about. If you have a little courage, you can play this game," Miller said. "These kids weren't even supposed to be here, and they were playing a great team that had lost only one game. I don't know what the dictionary definition of courage is, but we saw what it was out there today.

"I've never had a game like this one," Miller added. "We've had a lot of victories in the last 16 years here at Lee and this may be the best one ever. They say we backed into the playoffs, and maybe we did, but we beat a good team out there today. These kids don't know how to quit. They just don't know they aren't very good."

"When Jerry (Stanford) scored (on the punt return), we knew Lamar wasn't going to give up, so I wasn't too surprised to see them come back and score," Adams said. "We just had to keep it going. Coach (Bill) Martin told me that we would have the lead in penetrations if we got to the 20. That was the goal for us. We had worked all week on our two-minute drill and it worked just like it was supposed to."

Lamar stung Lee with a 55-yard drive the first time the Vikings touched the ball for a 7-0 lead, making Lee use its bag of miracles early on. Lee answered in two plays when Adams hit sophomore Alexander with a 78-yard TD pass to tie the score at 7-7. Alexander was wide open when he caught the ball and only one Viking defender in the way at the 10-yard line where Stanford made a great block to spring Alexander into the end zone.

"I knew that play was a touchdown when I got to the line of scrimmage because they didn't have a safety out there," Alexander said. "Jerry (Stanford) gave me a nice block and that was it. I knew Adams' pass was perfect as soon as it got into the air."

But with 47 seconds left in the first period, Lamar struck again with a 67-yard drive in nine plays as Sobezak scored from nine yards out for a 14-7 lead. Lee had to answer again in the second period by marching 60 yards in nine plays with Alex Strambler getting the first of two touchdowns on the day from one-yard out. Dunson's 25-yard run was the key play in the drive.

Neither team scored in the third quarter, but the final period started a rush of emotion unmatched in Memorial Stadium history. Lamar took a 21-14 lead with 11:15 left when Johnny Journey busted a 73-yard scoring run. Lee came back with 4:51 left to move to within 21-20 when Strambler capped a 56-yard drive set up by a meager four-yard punt by Spitzer. Spitzer still averaged 45 yards per punt on the day even with that one effort. Adams had a 46-yard bootleg run to the Lamar nine to set up the score, but Adams was tackled by Lamar's Kevin Meachum at the 1-yard line to halt the two-point conversion, leaving Lee down by one point.

Then came Stanford's 68-yard punt return to start the real game.

"We had it in hand," said Lamar running back Journey, who led all rushers with 184 yards rushing. "We just gave up big plays at crucial times. I thought we had some big plays, too."

Lamar coach Eddy Peach, who defeated Lee at this round 17-3 in 1988, said, "Losses just don't get any tougher than this in any way."

Lee (7-3-2) now moves to the round of the Final Eight against Arlington High (11-1-1), a 42-39 winner over Abilene Cooper Saturday in Arlington. Lee got more good news as the Colts will have to travel to Midland for a 2 p.m. quarterfinal match with the Rebs next Saturday.

Lee season ticket holders will get first shot at tickets on Monday and Tuesday from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. each day, including the lunch hour. Tickets are $7 for adults and $5 for students if purchased prior to the game. All tickets on game day will be $9. Tickets for the general public go on sale at the Memorial Stadium ticket office from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Wednesday and Thursday and from 8 a.m. to 1 p.m. on Friday.

Around 6,000 fans, considered a low turnout for the third round of the playoffs, was on hand for the game against Lamar. However, that number will grow in years to come. Nobody will ever admit to missing this one. It might be a good idea to get a ticket early for the quarterfinals.

After all, it isn't often you get to see the Land of the Living Dead without going to Hollywood.

Rugby returns as Olympic sport but not until after 2004

CARDIFF, Wales (AP) — Rugby was officially accepted back into the Olympic movement Saturday, although the sport isn't expected to become a part of the Games until 2004 at the earliest.

As a non-participating member of the IOC, rugby union will be able to obtain local funding from national Olympic committees to help smaller nations develop the game.

MHS falls twice in San Antonio

SAN ANTONIO — Midland High ran into to two tough San Antonio teams Saturday in the San Antonio Northside Tournament to lose its first two games of the season, falling to Taft 65-37 and Marshall 61-47. The Bulldogs are now 4-2, finishing the tournament in fourth place.

"We coached awful and we played awful," said Bulldog coach Jack Stephenson. "I don't know whether we were just extremely tired from yesterday, but we didn't shoot the ball well."

MHS played four games in two days in the tournament. Marshall is ranked fourth in the state, Stephenson said.

In the first game Taft jumped out to a 33-13 halftime lead. Jumon Hailey led the Bulldogs with 12 points and was their only double figures scorer.

Game two saw the Bulldogs go out to a 15-13 lead at the end of the first period. But Marshall held Midland High to six points in the second quarter and led at the half 27-21. Marshall then outscored Midland High by nine in the third frame.

Stephenson said Marshall and Taft's slower style may have helped them in the stamina-testing, two-day tournament.

"The two teams we played today were very deliberate," the MHS coach said. "They had their legs and we didn't."

FLORIDA: Kanell hero for Seminoles

But Kanell still was the hero for Florida State, which beat Florida last year under the leadership of Heisman Trophy winner Charlie Ward.

"Kanell can do anything Charlie could do, except run," Preston said. "Charlie could come back and so can Danny."

■ Top 25 Roundup

The Seminoles (9-1-1) are assured a berth in a major bowl coalition game — the Sugar, Fiesta, Cotton or Orange — by virtue of their Atlantic Coast Conference championship.

Florida (9-1-1) will go to the Sugar Bowl if it beats No. 3 Alabama in next week's Southeastern Conference title game. The loser of the SEC championship game will play in the Citrus Bowl.

Florida State's Warrick Dunn ran for 46 yards to become the fifth Seminole back to gain more than 1,000 yards in a season. The sophomore also caught 10 passes for 96 yards.

Florida quarterback Danny Wuerffel threw for three touchdowns in the first half, including a pair to record-setting Jack Jackson. The Gators also took advantage of three Florida State turnovers to build a 24-3 halftime lead.

The Gators led 31-3 before Florida State scored its first touchdown on a 5-yard run by Zack Crockett 2 minutes into the fourth quarter.

At that point, Florida State's 'OMar Ellison said the Seminoles were worried about getting embarrassed.

"We just wanted to score some points to make this thing respectable so we could go to class on Monday," he said.

The game turned in Florida's favor midway through the first period when Florida State saw a possible go-ahead touchdown evaporate when Preston fumbled at the Florida 6 with the Gators leading 7-3.

No. 2 Penn St. 59, Michigan St. 31

STATE COLLEGE, Pa. — Ki-Jana Carter made a final push for the Heisman Trophy with five touchdowns and second-ranked Penn State overcame another poor defensive performance to finish the regular season undefeated with a victory over Michigan State.

Penn State's victory means at least two teams, No. 1 Nebraska and the Nittany Lions, will be undefeated going into the bowls. Penn State (11-0, 8-0 Big Ten) is headed to the Rose Bowl to face Oregon.

The loss was the last game for Michigan State coach George Perles, who was forced to resign after 12 seasons with the Spartans.

Carter gained 227 yards on 27 carries. It was his ninth 100-yard game of the season, breaking a Penn State record held by Lydell Mitchell, John Cappelletti and Blair Thomas.

Michigan State used short passes and running backs Duane Goulbourne and Scott Greene to move the ball against the banged-up Penn State defense. The Spartans also got a 100-yard kick return by Derrick Mason.

But Penn State had an answer for each Spartan score, and Carter controlled the third quarter, scoring three times in 14 minutes.

No. 11 Kansas St. 42, UNLV 3

LAS VEGAS — J.J. Smith rushed for 227 yards and two touchdowns and quarterback Chad May ran for two more scores as Kansas State routed UNLV.

May was 8-of-13 for 126 yards and a touchdown despite winds gusting to 40 mph in the regular-season finale for the Wildcats (9-2). They will play in the Aloha Bowl.

UNLV (6-5) will play Central Michigan in the Las Vegas Bowl.

After leading 21-3 at halftime, Kansas State put the game away with two quick scores early in the third period. J.J. Smith's 13-yard TD run gave the Wildcats a 28-3 lead with 12:54 remaining.

Forty seconds later, the Wildcats took advantage of a short punt against the wind to score on the first play of the series. May's 30-yard TD pass to Kevin Lockett made it 35-3.

Safety Mario Smith set up Kansas State's first touchdown by intercepting Jason Davis. The Wildcats drove 45 yards on 11 plays, with May scoring on a 1-yard run.

J.J. Smith broke loose on a 29-yard scoring run as Kansas State took a 21-0 lead with 9:37 to play.

Jared Brown replaced Davis at quarterback and led the Rebels on a 53-yard drive that culminated in a 30-yard field goal by Nick Garritano with 6:12 to play.

However, Randy Hocutt recovered a fumble to end the drive at the Rebel 6-yard line late in the half.

Linebacker Mark Byars, the Division I sack leader with 20.5, had three against the Wildcats. He broke the school record of 20 sacks set by Daryl Knox in 1985.

No. 19 Mississippi St. 21, Mississippi 17

OXFORD, Miss. — Kevin Bouie and Michael Davis each ran for over 130 yards as Mississippi State beat Mississippi, winning consecutive games over its archrival for only the second time in 50 years.

Bouie scored twice on 1-yard runs and Davis had a 4-yard TD run in the second quarter. All the game's points were scored in the second quarter when the teams traded scores on seven straight possessions.

Mississippi State (8-3 overall, 5-3 Southeastern Conference) is assured its third bowl game in four seasons under coach Jackie Sherrill. The Bulldogs are likely headed to the Peach or Gator bowls.

Ole Miss (4-7, 2-6), placed on four years' NCAA probation a week prior to the State game, lost six of its last eight games.

On the first Mississippi State drive of the second quarter, Davis took a handoff to the left, reversed to the right behind some blockers and raced 54 yards to the Ole Miss 15. Four plays later, Tim Rogers kicked a 27-yard field goal for a 3-0 lead.

State took the lead for good when Bouie scored his second TD, and the final score of the game, to cap a nine-play, 67-yard drive with 1:12 left in the first half.

Bouie finished with 27 carries for 141 yards, setting a school record with his fourth straight 100-yard game. Davis ran for 135 yards on 24 carries. Both also had 100 yards in the Bulldogs' previous game, a 29-25 loss to No. 3 Alabama two weeks earlier.

The Bulldogs, who trail the series 52-33-6, had won consecutive games over Ole Miss just once since winning four straight from 1939-42. Their 1976 and 1977 victories were later forfeited.

Josh Nelson threw two touchdown passes for Ole Miss, 30 yards to Roell Preston and 83 yards to LeMay Thomas, who caught a short pass in the right flat, cut back up the middle behind some blockers and raced to the end zone.

Two years ago in Oxford, State lost 17-10, failing to score in the last three minutes despite three first-and-goal opportunities at the south end of Vaught-Hemingway Stadium.

State had four turnovers Saturday, all while driving toward the south end zone in the first and third quarters.

In the third quarter, State had moved 31 yards to the Ole Miss 10 after a short punt when Taite, in the grasp of an Ole Miss defender on an option play, pitched behind Bouie. Stacy Wilson recovered the fumble, but Ole Miss failed to convert when Montz's 31-yard field goal attempt was wide left.

After Montz missed a 43-yard attempt wide left earlier in the third quarter, State moved to the Ole Miss 30 before Taite's pass was intercepted Alundis Brice while throwing under heavy pressure.

Brice's interception at the 24 stopped the Bulldogs' first possession of the game. State was set to score on its second possession, but Bouie, while trying for extra yards after an 8-yard gain to the 5, was stripped of the ball by Ole Miss safety Antonious Bonner.

No. 17 Southern Cal 17, Notre Dame 17

LOS ANGELES — Southern Cal, which hasn't defeated Notre Dame since 1982, scored a late touchdown after blocking a field goal to salvage a 17-17 tie against the Irish.

Both the Trojans (7-3-1) and the Irish (6-4-1) are probably bowl-bound, but Notre Dame fell one victory short of guaranteeing itself a spot in a coalition bowl.

TCU accepts bowl invitation

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Texas Christian accepted an invitation Saturday to play in the Independence Bowl in Shreveport, La., on Dec. 28. It will be the Horned Frogs' first bowl game in 10 years.

An Atlantic Coast Conference team, either North Carolina (8-3), Duke (8-3) or Virginia (8-3), will be the opponent.

"This is an ultimate reward for our football team and staff," TCU coach Pat Sullivan said. "We have worked very hard to attain some of our goals this season, and obviously playing in a bowl game was one of them."

TCU (7-4) defeated Texas Tech 24-17 on Friday to finish 4-3 in league play and tied for a share of the Southwest Conference championship.

With undefeated Texas A&M ineligible, the race ended in a five-way tie among TCU, Texas Tech (6-5), Texas (7-4), Baylor (7-4) and Rice (5-6). Tech will go to the Cotton Bowl since it's gone the longest without playing there.

Baylor is expected to go to the Alamo Bowl in San Antonio and Texas to the Sun Bowl in El Paso.

Dallas' "Ache-man" climbs back in saddle

■ Through concussions, bumps and bruises, Cowboys Troy Aikman has earned the reputation as one of the NFL's best and toughest players.

By Jaime Aron

IRVING — Rough and rugged, standing tall in the pocket and staring down stampeding 300-pounders, Troy Aikman is a cowboy in more ways than just the team he plays for.

Aikman

The Dallas quarterback takes his lumps and wins games, earning him a reputation as one of the NFL's best and toughest players. In the last 23 months, he's had as many concussions (two) as Super Bowl victories.

It's been part of a football career in which he's broken his left index finger, separated his right shoulder, strained his left hamstring, had back surgery and suffered typical NFL quarterbacks bumps and bruises like stretched ribs and loose cartilege in various places.

The latest problem is strained ligaments in his left knee. He was hurt last Sunday against Washington, almost exactly three years after he strained ligaments in his right knee against Washington.

While Aikman's knee mends, he can also let his oh-so-marketable mug get back in one piece. His nose is broken, he bit a hole in his tongue last month and not too long ago his chin was split open.

"Some people say I'm stubborn and hard-headed," said Aikman, whose head has been softened by six concussions since high school. "But if I can't help the team, I'm not going to go out and play."

Through it all, Aikman winces but doesn't whine; something about getting back in the saddle after falling off it.

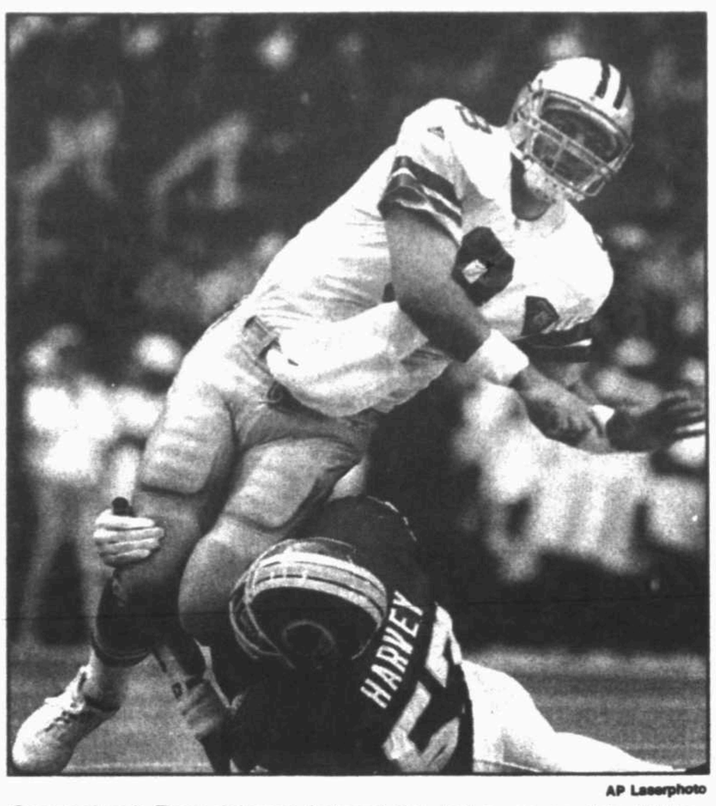
Sure, he's in the midst of a $50 million contract, but he'd also be paid if he sat on the sidelines and licked his wounds every once in a while.

But that's not his style, not even close.

Aikman got that kind of deal from tightwad Cowboys' owner Jerry Jones in part because even though he gets hurt so badly, so often, he does his best to play with the pain. When he must be sidelined, he returns as good as ever.

Aikman, who turned 28 on Monday, didn't play Thanksgiving Day against Green Bay. It was the 13th time in his six-year career that he didn't start a regular-season game because of an injury.

The broken nose and hole in his tongue came when Arizona's Wilber Marshall smacked him Oct. 24. The following Sunday, Cincinnati's James Francis put such a vicious lick on Aikman's head that the league fined him $12,500.



AP Laserphoto

A minor controversy erupted two weeks ago when the Cowboys didn't report that Aikman bruised the thumb on his throwing hand two days before playing the San Francisco 49ers.

Jones was fined $10,000 for keeping it secret, although he says there was nothing to hide because there was never a question Aikman would play.

There seldom is.

Maybe that's why Aikman got a little testy when reporters tried prodding him into saying how long the latest injury will keep him down. He even got defensive when reminded he was out five weeks with the 1991 knee strain.

"If you remember, I suited up for the second game," he snapped.

Through it all, Aikman has never been accused of being injury prone, a sure sign his high threshold for pain has become a badge of courage and an inspiration to his teammates.

There were some whispers early in his career that Aikman may not remain healthy through a full season to win a championship.

But he proved that wrong by starting every game in 1992, then winning the Super Bowl and being named the game's MVP.

He's been lucky in the sense that the most serious arm problem was the 1990 shoulder separation. During the operation to fix that, he also had bone chips removed from his throwing elbow, which some say has cost a tad bit of zip on his passes. He had plenty to give.

"The last couple of years have taken a toll," Aikman said. "It's been a long grind."

With a play falling apart, Aikman said instincts took over when he ran for the end zone. When he crossed the goal line, two defenders popped him and folded him in half, making for a gruesome, gasp-inspiring touchdown.

But to really seal Aikman's image as a throwback to the days when trainers used such high-tech techniques as spitting tobacco juice on wounds, consider two episodes from last year.

The first incident began innocently enough with Aikman lifting weights in the summer. Then, he felt something weird in his back and had it checked out by team doctors. Rest, they said, and he'll be fine.

Aikman wanted another opinion and he found it when his doctor recommended surgery to fix a herniated disk in his lower back. He didn't hesitate, even if it meant likely missing the first few weeks of the season.

He was operated on June 19, then still made it back in time for the season opener.

Aikman made it through the year with only the hamstring strain that forced him out of two games. Then a knee to his head in the third quarter of the NFC Championship knocked him so silly he thought the Super Bowl was going to be played in his hometown of Henryetta, Okla.

A week later, he led the Cowboys to their second straight NFL title.

Boise State rallies to oust Eagles

Associated Press

BOISE, Idaho — DaWuan Miller, a defensive back who has only one arm, made the key interception Saturday as Boise State rallied for a 24-20 victory over North Texas in the opening round of the Division I-AA football playoff.

Third-ranked Boise State trailed 20-17 with less than six minutes left when Miller intercepted a pass from North Texas quarterback Mitch Maher and returned it to the 6-yard-line.

Tailback Willie Bowens scored on a pass from quarterback Tony Hilde on the next play to give Boise State a school-record 11th victory this season.

The Broncos (11-1 and Big Sky Conference champions) host No. 17-ranked Appalachian State, a 17-10 victor over New Hampshire, next Saturday.

Maher completed 21-of-32 passes for 226 yards in the first half as the Eagles (7-4-1) pulled into a 20-10 lead.

The Broncos scored twice in the game's first three minutes, but were shut out until just 7:28 was left in the game when tailback K.C. Adams scored from the one after Jarret Hausske caught a 35-yard pass from Hilde.

On the next series, Miller, a junior and three-year starter for Boise State, stepped in front of a pass and returned it 25 yards.

After a North Texas punt, Hilde ran for a key first down on a bootleg play to allow the Broncos to run out the clock.

Under a fierce pass rush, Maher managed to complete just 8-of-19 passes in the second half for 37 yards.

The Eagles took the opening kickoff and drove 71 yards for a score as Maher ran 8 yards up the middle on a quarterback draw play.

Hilde connected with wide receiver Ryan Ikebe on a 40-yard scoring pass a few plays later to make it 7-7 and Greg Erickson's 29-yard field goal gave Bose a 10-7 lead before the game was three minutes old.

But Maher picked apart the Bronco defense the rest of the half, with North Texas scoring on field goals of 31 and 18 yards

Division II Playoffs
Texas A&M-Kingsville 21, Portland St. 16

KINGSVILLE — Dexter Deese ran for two touchdowns and Texas A&M-Kingsville held off Portland State in the fourth quarter, advancing to the NCAA Division II semifinals with a 21-16 victory.

The Javelinas (11-1) will host Indiana (Pa.) next weekend.

Deese scored on runs of 1 and 11 yards as A&M-Kingsville built up a 21-3 fourth-quarter lead.

The Vikings (9-3) began a comeback with fourth-quarter touchdown passes of 11 yards to Kyle Crowston and 5 yards to Kyle Holley from Kyle Allen, who was 31-of-56 for 335 yards.

It was the second time this year that A&M-Kingsville had beaten Portland State, which was ranked No. 4 in the final NCAA Division II poll. The Javelinas won in Portland 34-20 in mid-September.

A&M-Kingsville quarterback Joe Menchaca completed 14-of-18 passes for 173 yards with one interception. Wesley Whiten had a 1-yard touchdown run for the Javelinas' other touchdown.

the first half, but his 23-yard pass to Venghaus in the third quarter gave the Owls a 21-7 lead and the Cougars (1-10, 0-6-1) could never recover.

The victory put the Owls into a first-ever five-way share of the league title with Texas, Baylor Texas Christian and Cotton Bowl-bound Texas Tech. All were 4-3 in league play, although Rice was the only one with an overall losing record.

"It's been an awkward season. To end it like this is something we can build on," Nelson said. "This game and this season gives us something to look forward to for next year. It allows you to set your goals to do better."

Rice entered its finale with consecutive losses to Baylor and Navy, ending hopes of a bowl invitation or a chance at playing in its first Cotton Bowl since 1958.

The Owls got a second chance to share the 1994 SWC crown when Texas beat Baylor on Thursday and Tech lost to Texas Christian on Friday.

Rice had 196 yards of offense, all rushing, and a 14-7 lead at halftime behind touchdown runs of 2 yards by Jimmy Lee in the first quarter and 10 yards by Nelson in the second.

Nelson, starting his second game for injured Josh LaRocca, threw only three passes in the first half. With 11:38 to go in the third quarter, he tossed a 14-yard pass to Venghaus that set up the touchdown pass.

On the scoring play, Venghaus was alone waiting in the end zone with 9:45 to go.

Jets can tie AFC East with win over Dolphins

By Dave Goldberg
AP Football Writer

No team has tantalized its fans over the past two decades more than the New York Jets, who win a few big games only to lose a lot of small ones.

Today, they come off a big win into a game that's even bigger — if they beat Miami, they move into a tie for first in the AFC East with four games to go. The last time they held that position was 1986, the year they began 10-1 and finished 10-6.

They didn't the first time they played the Dolphins, losing 28-14 at Joe Robbie after opening the season by beating Buffalo and Denver. That was the first in what has become a roller-coaster season, including last week's "up," a 31-21 win in Minnesota.

The Dolphins are beginning to have bad dreams of last season, when they started 9-2, finished 9-7 and missed the playoffs. They're 7-4 to the Jets' 6-5, but they've lost 17-14 to Chicago and 16-13 to Pittsburgh the last two weeks.

That illustrates the problem — with running backs Terry Kirby, Keith Byars and Bernie Parmalee all out, the Miami offense has withered. In fact, the Dolphins haven't scored a touchdown in the first quarter since last Dec. 19.

Even Dan Marino and an improved defense haven't managed to avoid that feeling of deja vu althought there's surface optimism.

"I don't think there's any similarities between this year and last year," says Bryan Cox, the outspoken linebacker. "We were getting blown out last year. Now we have the opportunity to win. We still have a very balanced team."

Adds wide receiver Irving Fryar:

The Jets do the same thing.

They just go up and down rather than in streaks.

There were two Thanksgiving Day games, with Detroit beating Buffalo 35-21, and Dallas taking Green Bay 42-31.

San Francisco is at New Orleans Monday night.

Chicago (7-4) at Arizona (5-6): Buddy Ryan would have more incentive if Mike Ditka still coached the Bears. But he'll have his hands full with Dave Wannstedt, who's a front-runner for coach of the year for taking a team that was supposed to finish fourth in its division into a tie for first.

Ryan may find this like a road game — the Bears traditionally draw well in Tempe because of the transplanted Chicagoans who live there. He could have trouble with Steve Walsh, who ran his record as a starter to 6-0 last week and is the kind of heady quarterback who can read Buddy's blitzes.

The Cards, who will start Jay Schroeder at quarterback, still have trouble scoring — 29 points in their last three games, two of them wins.

Pittsburgh (8-3) at L.A. Raiders (6-5): Talk about a team that can't score — the Steelers's offense has scored just three touchdowns in its last five games, yet Pittsburgh has won four of them.

"We're stopping 'em and stopping 'em, you've got to wake up on that side," linebacker Greg Lloyd told the Steelers' offensive players during Sunday's 16-13 overtime win over Miami. "Get across the 50. Kick a field goal. Do something. Wake up!"

Mike Tomczak, who passed for 343 yards last week filling in for the injured Neil O'Donnell, may start this week. At least Bill Cowher didn't say Tomczak WON'T start, even if O'Donnell is healthy.

Philadelphia (7-4) at Atlanta (5-6): Like a lot of teams, the Eagles have had their offensive problems, scoring just 13 points in losses to the Browns and Cardinals that have hurt them badly in their pursuit of the Cowboys.

Atlanta's problems have been threefold.

One is defense; another is the antics of Andre Rison, who returns this week after a week's suspension by June Jones. The third is the officials: A bad call on what should have been a Denver fumble probably cost them the 32-28 loss in Denver last week.

San Francisco (9-2) at New Orleans (4-7) (Monday night): Bad news for the Saints, who played the Niners close at Candlestick (17-13 until the last play of the game).

"Everything is clicking now," says Jerry Rice, who caught 16 passes from Steve Young last week. "I think the chemistry is really coming. I think the thing about Steve is that he's just relaxed right now. He's out on the field running around like a little kid."

Houston (1-10) at Cleveland (8-3): On record, this looks like a rout.

In fact, the Browns won the first just 10-7, one of six three-point losses this year for Houston, which did it again by dropping a 13-10 decision to the Giants in Jeff Fisher's debut last week.

Cleveland, meanwhile, is playing musical quarterbacks with Vinny Testaverde and Mark Rypien, both of whom played in last week's 20-13 loss in Kansas City.

So owner Art Modell expressed his thoughts to coach Bill Belichick, who has been saying he won't decide on his starter until today.

"You can't have a two-quarterback system," Modell said. "You have to name a starter and have someone to come in in relief. We must avoid a quarterback controversy at all costs. It's a formula for losing."

Tampa Bay (2-9) at Minnesota (7-4): This could be it for the Bucs, who are one away from their 12th straight season of double-digit losses, probably the worst long-running record in any pro sport. Last week, they lost by a point and then were informed after the fact that they might have been done in by the officials.

The Vikings, who won 36-13 in Tampa, aren't likely to have much sympathy, although they could be looking ahead to next Thursday's meeting with Chicago.

New England (5-6) at Indianapolis (5-6): For the first time in years, this actually has playoff implications — these two are tied for last in the AFC East, but they're only two games out of first and the winner may have a shot at the division or a wild-card.

The Patriots gave Drew Bledsoe some help in their win over San Diego last week — a running game that actually netted 101 yards, 88 from Marion Butts.

L.A. Rams (4-7) at San Diego (8-3): The best thing for the Chargers may be getting home after three weeks, two losses, and 15,000 miles on the road. They also hope that Stan Humphries, who's been playing with a dislocated left elbow, will be better after four games in which he's thrown three touchdowns and had seven intercepted.

The Rams are a scary team — both to themselves and the opposition. They scared the 49ers Sunday night as Chris Miller demonstrated what he can do when he plays and they have enough weapons on defense to scare an essentially punchless team like the Chargers.

Kansas City (7-4) at Seattle (4-7): Despite a raft of injuries (seven starters missed last week's win over the Browns), the Chiefs remain in the AFC West race and certainly in the playoff picture. On reason: the one guy who's healthy is Joe Montana, who has started every game this year.

The Seahawks broke their six-game losing streak last week, but are playing out the string.

Cincinnati (2-9) at Denver (5-6): What miracles can John Elway perform? He pulled out last week's game against Atlanta (with the help of a dubious call by the officials) and got the Broncos back into the playoff picture after an 0-4 start.

The Bengals also are hot (2-2 is hot for them) as Jeff Blake continues to be the quarterback they hadn't had.

N.Y. Giants (4-7) at Washington (2-9): Not too long ago, this game was a twice-a-year national highlight. Now it's an afterthought game that serves as a tryout camp for quarterbacks.

New Oilers leadership brings changes, less work for Browns

By Chuck Melvin
AP Sports Writer

CLEVELAND — Tight ends. I-formations. Straight-ahead power running.

Clearly, more than just the coach has changed since the Cleveland Browns saw the Houston Oilers last month.

"They're a normal team now," said Cleveland defensive end Rob Burnett. "We used to have to change our whole defense for the run-and-shoot."

But new Houston coach Jeff Fisher, promoted from defensive coordinator when Jack Pardee was fired in mid-November, has all but scrapped the four-receiver scheme and intends to turn to it only occasionally in obvious passing situations.

Even though the Browns (8-3) were accustomed to playing the Oilers (1-10) twice a year, the run-and-shoot remained rare enough that it forced them to study a little harder whenever a game against Houston was coming up.

Their preparations for the Oilers offense this week were much simpler. They had tapes of only one game on which to base their defensive plan: Houston's 13-10 loss to the New York Giants in Fisher's head coaching debut last Monday

"It's a normal pro set. It's nothing strange," Burnett said. "Actually, the run-and-shoot was strange compared to the rest of the league."

Running back Lorenzo White was the most obvious beneficiary of the Oilers' new approach. After running for 95 yards in the second half at Cincinnati the week before, White set career highs with 27 carries for 156 yards against the Giants.

"He looked great," Burnett said. "I think he's a lot better back out of the I-formation, lining up 7 yards deep, than he was lining up 4 or 5 yards back in the run-and-shoot. He's deeper. He gets more momentum. He has better vision.

"Unlike the run-and-shoot, where they were going to throw 40 times a game, now we have to stop the run first."

Against New York, the Oilers ran 29 times and attempted just 15 passes, the first time in nearly two years that they ran more often than they passed. The 15 passes were the fewest they attempted in a game since 1981.

"If you want to win, you have to be able to run the football," Fisher said.

Not everyone in the Houston camp was happy about the change. Receiver Webster Slaughter, his opportunities slashed sharply by the new offense, was furious; his contract includes incentives based on playing time.

"You know those receivers. They want the ball every play," quarterback Billy Joe Tolliver said.

The Browns won 11-8 in Houston on Oct. 13 in the last full game for Vinny Testaverde at quarterback. He had to leave each of the next two games because of concussions, and Mark Rypien started the next three for Cleveland.

Testaverde returns as the starter this week.

Arizona holds off Cowboys

Associated Press

ANCHORAGE, Alaska — Ray Owes and Damon Stoudamire combined for 35 points Saturday as No. 5 Arizona beat No. 19 Oklahoma State 73-63 for fourth place in the Great Alaska Shootout.

The Wildcats (2-1) withstood a second-half 3-point barrage by the Cowboys' Randy Rutherford, who was 6-for-8 from beyond the arc in the final 20 minutes and finished with 23 points.

Owes paced Arizona with 18 points, while Stoudamire had 17, Joseph Blair 13 and Miles Simon 11. Blair also had 11 rebounds.

Bryant Reeves had 21 points for Oklahoma State (1-2).

Arizona was up by four at the half and quickly expanded the lead to 11. Several times the Cowboys pulled within striking distance on the strength of Rutherford's shooting, but three timely 3-pointers by Simon late in the game kept the Wildcats on top.

With 1:09 left, Arizona was ahead 69-63 when Oklahoma State put on a full-court press that immediately paid off with a steal, but the Cowboys weren't able to convert. Seconds later, Reeves missed two free throws and committed two fouls to ice the win for Arizona.

No. 4 Kentucky 124, Tenn.-Martin 50

LEXINGTON, Ky. — Jared Prickett scored 21 points to lead seven Kentucky players in double figures as the Wildcats overwhelmed error-prone Tennessee-Martin.

Kentucky scored 64 points off 42 turnovers by Tennessee-Martin in registering one of the most lopsided victories in school history. Kentucky's biggest margin of victory was 77 points over Georgia, 143-66 in 1956.

Kentucky also had a 40-24 advantage in rebounds and committed only eight turnovers. The Wildcats made 47 of 82 shots (57 percent).

After Kentucky's Andre Riddick broke a 2-2 tie on a rebound basket, the Wildcats scored 23 straight points in building a 27-4 lead with 12:18 remaining in the half. Tennessee-Martin turned the ball over 12 consecutive times during the run.

■ Men's Top 25

No. 6 UCLA 83, CS Northridge 60

LOS ANGELES — George Zidek scored 14 points and UCLA used an early 17-2 run to rout Cal State Northridge in the season opener for the teams.

Charles O'Bannon added 13 points and his brother, Ed O'Bannon, scored 11, all in the first half, including a dunk that made it 22-7 in the opening minutes.

But the Bruins outscored Northridge 14-2 to lead 65-41 with 12:52 remaining. Six Bruins scored in the spurt, including Zidek, who had a steal and layup before going to the bench with his fourth foul.

No. 8 Duke 93, Northeastern 70

DURHAM, N.C. — Cherokee Parks scored a career-high 27 points, and freshman Ricky Price sparked a Duke run late in the first half to lead the Blue Devils to a victory over Northeastern.

Parks and Erik Meek held the advantage on the inside for the Blue Devils, playing their second game in as many days. But the Huskies didn't let Duke's man-to-man pressure faze them for the opening 15 minutes as they took an early lead and tied the score five times in their season opener.

No. 20 Fla. International 109, Lynn 54

MIAMI — Albena Branzova scored 31 points and four other Golden Panthers reached double figures as No. 20 Florida International defeated Lynn.

Joy Porter hit a three-point play for Lynn (1-1) to cut an early Golden Panther lead to 8-5 with 15:03 to play in the first half. But FIU (1-1) went on a 12-1 run over the next 4:30 to take a commanding 20-6 edge.

No. 9 Kansas 83, San Diego 65

LAWRENCE, Kan. — Sean Pearson scored 16 points to lead five players in double figures as Kansas routed San Diego.

Kansas (1-0) won its 22nd consecutive opener at Allen Field House and improved to 39-1 in home openers.

The Jayhawks finished the first half with a 14-5 run for a 39-30 halftime lead. An 18-6 run to open the second half gave Kansas a 57-36 lead.

No. 21 Villanova 82, Louisville 81

ANCHORAGE, Alaska — Kerry Kittles' 27 points and a barrage of 3-pointers powered Villanova to a victory over Louisville in the third-place game of the Great Alaska Shootout.

After hitting just one of seven from 3-point range in the first half, the Wildcats buried 10 of 13 in the second half.

No. 12 Cincinnati 108, Austin Peay 73

CINCINNATI — Freshman Danny Fortson scored 25 points in his college debut and anchored a 61-point first half that carried Cincinnati to a victory over Austin Peay.

Fortson scored 12 in the first half, Cincinnati's biggest in coach Bob Huggins' six seasons, as the Bearcats ran away to a 61-34 halftime lead. The 108 points equalled the most under Huggins.

The Bearcats rattled Austin Peay with pressure defense, forcing 28 turnovers, and a relentless inside attack that put the opener for both teams out of reach quickly.

No. 15 Wisconsin 86, Wright St. 63

MADISON, Wis. — Andy Kilbride scored 16 of his 18 points in the second half as Wisconsin won Stan Van Gundy's regular-season debut as coach.

Kilbride hit all five of his 3-point shots in the second half, helping the Badgers offset sluggish games by their stars, Michael Finley and Rashard Griffith.

Finley, a preseason all-America selection, made 5 of 16 shots and finished with 15 points. Griffith, a 6-foot-11 sophomore center, had foul trouble and played just 10 minutes before fouling out early in the second half with 9 points.

No. 22 Georgia Tech 112, Florida A&M 56

ATLANTA — Travis Best scored nine consecutive points as Georgia Tech jumped to leads of 14-0 and 25-2, and the Yellow Jackets set a school record with 24 steals en route to a victory over Florida A&M in the opener for both teams.

Matt Harping had six of the steals. The Rattlers didn't score more than four points in a row until the final two minutes when they scored five unanswered points.

Best led with 20 points.

No. 24 Wake Forest 75, NC-Greensboro 55

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. — Randolph Childress scored 26 points to lead Wake Forest to a victory over North Carolina-Greensboro in the season opener for both teams.

It was only the second meeting between the schools, which are just 25 miles apart.

No. 2 Tar Heels hold off Longhorns, 96-92

Associated Press

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. — Jerry Stackhouse scored a career-high 28 points and made several key plays down the stretch Saturday as No. 2 North Carolina escaped with a 96-92 victory over Texas.

■ SWC Basketball

The Tar Heels, who won their 66th straight opener at home, trailed at halftime and through most of the second half until Stackhouse rallied his team, who could become No. 1 following top-ranked Arkansas' 104-80 loss to No. 3 Massachusetts on Friday.

Texas, with three starters back from the team that was 26-8 last season, led for the final time at 87-86 with 4:18 left. Stackhouse then blocked a shot and got a return feed from fellow sophomore Rasheed Wallace for a dunk that gave the Tar Heels the lead for good.

After Texas missed a 3-pointer, Stackhouse drove the baseline for a layup, then forced a turnover when he broke up an alley-oop pass on the Longhorns' next trip downcourt.

The Tar Heels, who shot 59 percent in the second half, almost threw the ball away twice in the final 41 seconds after Texas cut the lead to 92-90, but the final pass ended up in the arms of Wallace under the basket. He made the layup with 32.2 seconds left.

St. Mary's (Calif.) 80, A&M 68

MORAGA, Calif. — St. Mary's forced 22 turnovers and placed five players in double figures, led by 14 points each from guards Josh Unruh and Chris Johnson, in a season-opening victory over Texas A&M.

Texas A&M (1-3) went scoreless over the first six minutes and 13 seconds of the game to fall behind 13-0, then never fully recovered from a careless first half.

North Carolina's Dante Calabria (24) defends Texas' Terrence Rencher Saturday.

"Last year we sacrificed defense to get our offense going," said St. Mary's coach Ernie Kent. "But this year intensity on defense is our key to reach success. We're not this good this fast yet, but what we go tonight was a taste."

Wichita St. 78, SMU 67

WICHITA, Kan. — L.D. Swanson scored a career-high 29 points, and Jamie Arnold grabbed 21 rebounds as Wichita State defeated Southern Methodist University in the season opener for both teams.

Swanson scored 18 points in the second half when WSU made its decisive move.

He scored seven points in a 13-5 WSU run that took the Shockers (1-0) from a 40-37 lead to a 53-40 cushion with 14:57 left.

Cal gets win over Texas Southern

BERKELEY, Calif. — California proved it could win without Jason Kidd and Lamond Murray with a commanding 82-69 victory over Texas Southern Saturday night.

Freshman forward Tremaine Fowlkes led the Bears (1-0) with 18 points and eight rebounds in the season opener for both teams. Forward Anthony Jones had 18 points and seven rebounds for the Tigers (0-1).

California outscored the Tigers by as many as 26 points in the second half, but Texas Southern mounted a comeback with a 17-6 run late in the game. Jones scored six points in the run.

Monty Buckley finished with 12 points and four assists for the Bears, while freshman Sean Marks came off the bench to contribute 10 points.

The Tigers jumped out to an early lead, but Cal took over when a Marks score made it 10-9 at 14:31. Cal dominated the rest of the way, taking a 45-25 lead into the half.

The 6-foot-7 Fowlkes led Cal in the first half with 11 points, including a dramatic dunk at 1:11 to go that put the Bears up 41-24.

Last season, Cal beat Texas Southern by an almost identical score of 82-70 with the help of Kidd, now with the NBA's Dallas Mavericks, and Murray, now with the Los Angeles Clippers.

■ Texas Colleges

N. Carolina St. 104, Prairie View 56

RALEIGH, N.C. — Freshman Ishua Benjamin scored 29, including seven 3-pointers as North Carolina State opened its season by blasting Prairie View.

Benjamin made seven-of-eight long-range shots and 11 of 13 overall. He keyed a 16-0 run early in the second half with a pair of 3-pointers, a breakaway dunk and an assist. Lakista McCuller capped the spurt with a pair of free throws that put the Wolfpack up 76-30 with 11:57 left.

Dereck Hunter scored 14 to lead Prairie View.

The Wolfpack bolted to a 53-25 halftime lead behind Benjamin, who made four of five 3-pointers and finished with 16 points in the first half.

UTEP 90, Belhaven 67

EL PASO — Antoine Gillespie scored 26 points as Texas-El Paso defeated Belhaven College in its season-opener.

The Miners (1-0) used an 18-7 run midway through the second half to bury the Blazers (2-3).

Kelvin Snearl led the Blazers with 18 points and UTEP's George Banks, who injured a knee Thursday in an exhibition game against Marathon Oil, had 12 points and nine rebounds.

Texas-Arlington 93, Abilene Christian 92

Damon Johnson scored 25 and Tony Williams 21 for UTA (1-0).

Bobb led all scorers with 27 points and Corey Stone added 20 points for ACU (3-1).

UTA led by as many as 16 points in the first half and was ahead 42-17 until ACU went on a run to cut its deficit to 47-43 at halftime.

Westark hands MC first loss

Westark had lost Friday night and for that reason Midland College may have overlook it, Chap coach Pat Rafferty said. MC was led by Shedrich Franklin's 17 points. Devon Phillips and Kevin Rice had 11.

Tennessee's McCray lights up Memphis

Associated Press

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. — Nikki McCray scored 27 points Saturday night as No. 1 Tennessee tuned up for Thursday's showdown with No. 2 Stanford by beating Memphis 95-66.

Abby Conklin added 16 points for the Lady Vols (2-0). Keeta Matthews had 23 and Kitty Allen 22 for the Lady Tigers (0-1).

Tennessee scored the first 11 points and led 33-7 midway through the first half. At the time, the Lady Vols were 15 of 23 (65 percent) from the field, while Memphis managed only 2 of 11 (18 percent).

No. 3 UConn. 107, Morgan St. 27

STORRS, Conn. — Rebecca Lobo scored 18 points and grabbed 13 rebounds to lead Connecticut to a win over Morgan State in the Hartford Courant Connecticut Classic.

Lobo led four Husky players in double figures as Connecticut (1-0) racked up its highest point total and largest margin of victory ever. The previous records were set in a 103-45 win over Colgate last season.

The Huskies, who shot 56 percent from the floor (38-for-68), held the Lady Bears to just 17.1 percent accuracy. Morgan State was 12-for-70 from the field.

With the game tied at 6-6 and with 17:40 remaining in the first half, Connecticut went on a 25-0 run. The Huskies led 55-11 at the half, shooting 19-for-33 (58 percent) from the field.

■ Women's Top 25

No. 7 North Carolina 83, Hawaii 51

HONOLULU — North Carolina scored the game's first nine points and Charlotte Smith contributed eight points in what turned out to be a 30-6 run that carried the Tar Heels to a lopsided victory over Hawaii in the Rainbow Wahine Classic.

The Tar Heels completely dominated the Wahine from the outset. It was 41-22 at the midway mark and the closest Hawaii came the rest of the way was 17 points.

In the first half, North Carolina, with Smith getting 11 points, went 18 of 40 from the field, compared to 7 of 22 for Hawaii. At game's end, the Tar Heels made 33 of 75 shots against 19 of 55 for Hawaii.

No. 8 Virginia 60, Arizona 56

HONOLULU — Wendy Palmer scored 19 points and pulled down 12 rebounds as Virginia held off a late charge to post a victory over Arizona in the consolation round of the Rainbow Wahine Classic women's basketball tournament.

The Lady Cavaliers (1-1) broke a 13-13 tie with a 22-3 run midway through the first half, with Palmer leading the charge with eight points.

No. 9 Alabama 90, Grambling 70

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. — Niesa Johnson had 26 points and 12 rebounds to earn tournament MVP honors as Alabama defeated Grambling to win the Sheraton Capstone Inn Classic.

Grambling (1-1) shot just 25 percent from the field, including 0-of-15 on 3-pointers. Sha Hopson led Grambling with 16 points.

No. 14 Iowa 60, James Madison 30

IOWA CITY, Iowa — Fill-in starter Karen Clayton scored 13 points and Iowa held James Madison without a basket over the final 12 minutes in a victory in the opening round of the Hawkeye Classic.

It was the fewest points allowed by an Iowa team under coach Vivian Stringer, who has been with the Hawkeyes since 1983. James Madison's 10 second-half points were the least given up by any Iowa team in a half, the previous low being 11 by West Virginia and Illinois, both in 1992.

Iowa (1-0) will play No. 23 Southern Cal in the championship game Sunday. Southern Cal beat Marquette 87-76 behind sophomore Tina Thompson's career-high 35 points.

No. 23 Seton Hall 65, Notre Dame 60, OT

SOUTH ORANGE, N.J. — Freshman guard Sandy Mitchell hit five free throws in overtime to rally Seton Hall to a victory over Notre Dame.

Mitchell finished with 14 points and forward Dana Wynne added 12 points and 18 rebounds as the Pirates (2-1) rallied twice to spoil the season opener for Notre Dame.

After Beth Morgan's 3-pointer put Notre Dame up 54-51 with 10 seconds to play, Amanda Makarewicz was fouled on a 3-pointer.

She missed her first free throw, nailed the second and missed the third, but Rukaiyah Walker grabbed the rebound and then tied the game with a jumper with 6 seconds to play.

Notre Dame led 58-56 halfway through the extra period when Mitchell was fouled on a 3-point shot and then hit all three free throws to give the Pirates a 61-58 lead.

Carey Poor cut it to 61-60 with a layup at 1:40, but Notre Dame was held scoreless the rest of the way.

Tahnee Heins and Mitchell both converted 1-and-1s to seal the victory. The Pirates, who shot just 36.5 percent from the field, hit all seven free throws in overtime.

Morgan led Notre Dame with 18 points.

No. 25 Southern Cal 87, Marquette 76

IOWA CITY, Iowa — Tina Thompson scored a career-high 35 points, and Southern Cal held off Marquette at the end for a victory in the opening round of the Hawkeye Classic.

Thompson, expected to be the focal point of the USC offense now that player of the year Lisa Leslie is gone, filled that role admirably in the Women of Troy's opener.

The 6-foot-3 sophomore, the Pac-10 freshman of the year last season, made 14 of 27 shots in topping her previous best of 24 points against Arizona State last February. She also grabbed 12 rebounds to help Southern Cal to a 62-42 edge on the boards.

No. 15 Florida 58, No. 16 Kansas 56

HONOLULU — Carla Johnson hit a basket and two free throws and Murriel Page added a basket, all in the final 3:53, to help No. 15 Florida hold off 16th-ranked Kansas 58-56 and advance to the championship game of the Rainbow Wahine Classic.

Lady Chaps beat Paris JC for tenth win

The win was Midland's second over the Lady Dragons this season. MC won 104-101 Nov. 18 as Joahnna Kailahi scored 41 points.

This time Paris (4-6) keyed on Kailahi and Rashunda Jarmon and Pam Hicks took up the offensive slack with 21 and 19 points.

Amber Follis had 15 points for MC. She hit three three-pointers in the game as did Hicks.

B.C.-Baltimore clash offers international football

By Sheldon Spencer
N.Y. Times News Service

■ Grey Cup

VANCOUVER, B.C. — The Grey Cup is what the World Cup would be if it had real kick, what the Super Bowl should be if it replaced pomp with punch.

The 85th championship game of the Canadian Football League kicks off Sunday at 3:30 before more than 50,000 fans in B.C. Place here.

The game between the infant, nameless Baltimore squad and the newly appreciated, hometown B.C. Lions will provide truly international football — a war on the 54-40 North American borderline.

"It's amazing how the fans are wrapped up in the USA-versus-Canada thing," said Baltimore linebacker O.J. Brigance, who like his head coach Don Matthews was once a veteran Lion.

"When I came off the plane, I felt like Rocky in 'Rocky IV'," a man arriving on the Baltimore fans' charter plane told a Vancouver television station. "Everybody's giving us the stare. It was quite a scene."

This Grey Cup has everything needed to rival some of the best ever played — including the 1989 thriller in which prairie dog Saskatchewan beat favored Hamilton 43-40 in B.C. Place.

Besides having the first American team to qualify for the Cup, this game will feature a heroic Flutie.

But instead of former Heisman Trophy winner Doug Flutie, the onetime Lions quarterback who led Calgary to the 1992 Cup, the favored Flutie will be little brother Darren, a B.C. wide receiver.

Last Sunday Darren caught three touchdown passes — including the game-winning "major" with no time remaining — to help B.C. beat Doug's Stampeders 37-36 for the Western Division title in a Calgary snowstorm.

"It's nice to finally beat him and his team," Darren Flutie said. "Finally we came in here on a big game and beat them. I feel bad for him, but not that bad."

Thursday Doug consoled himself by winning the 12-team CFL's most outstanding player award for the fourth consecutive year — a league first.

This Grey Cup will also provide a unique test of the 110-yard, 12-men-a-side, three-down game's stomach for abandoning tradition to establish progress, for downplaying Canadian nationalism to curry Stateside favor.

Not only is the Baltimore team the first United States-based team to qualify to play for the CFL title, it is first modern-era league team to do so in its first year of existence.

Yet as the most successful of the CFL's four American teams — fellow expansionists Sacramento, Las Vegas and Shreveport are business failures — Baltimore owns an advantage over the 40-year-old Lions in the Grey Cup.

Baltimore is allowed to play with 37 Americans, or "imports" as they are known in the CFL; the B.C. Lions, one of the eight Canadian teams, by league decree must have at least 20 native sons on the roster, with 14 Americans and three quarterbacks of any nationality.

Even with the differences in U.S. and Canadian football, American-dominated teams are thought to have an edge in ability and experience.

Vic Stevenson, a B.C. tackle who plans to retire Sunday after 13 seasons, hopes the CFL retains its Canadian content. Stevenson, 34, was born in nearby New Westminster and attended college in Calgary.

"It's important for amateur football in the country and for the fans," he said. "It's easier for them to relate to (Lions kicker) Lui Passaglia, who's grown up in the community. We get blue-collar guys out to watch us and they relate better to people who live here and who go to the Kmart."

Baltimore quarterback Tracy Ham, a Florida native who has played for Edmonton and Toronto, says ability should prevail over citizenship.

"We have to come up with a way to keep the best product on the field, but keep Canadians involved in the game," said Ham.

"We always say Canadians are gold and Americans are silver," B.C. Lions coach Dave Ritchie said. "But when it gets to game time, it's pride that will count most."

Trouble tag follows some pro athletes

By Hal Bock
AP Sports Writer

Trouble just seems to follow some guys around. Ask Dennis Rodman. Or Andre Rison. Or Dexter Manley. Or Art Schlichter.

Rodman is in trouble with the San Antonio Spurs, something about not following team rules. Why are the Detroit Pistons not surprised?

Rodman was a migraine headache in gym shorts during his days with the Pistons. His shenanigans made the front office so nuts that player personnel boss Billy McKinney, knowing Rodman wanted out, once threatened to keep him around, just for spite.

His escape to San Antonio, went smoothly for all of one season before a new administration got these quaint ideas about following team rules. Dye your hair any color you want. Just don't throw ice at the coach.

Meanwhile, Rison got himself suspended by the Atlanta Falcons last week. Seems he was late for, oh, 20 or so team meetings. And he couldn't understand why management got so bent out of shape over that.

"I think I don't deserve being suspended," he told Fox Sports. "I feel as though I shouldn't have been suspended because of some of the things other players have done that are more detrimental to our team. Coaches know it and they still don't take action. Then I'm a minute, two minutes, late to a special team meeting and you suspend me?"

Well, yes, after the 20th time.

Now here we have two extremely talented athletes. Rodman has led the NBA in rebounding for three straight years. Nobody has caught more passes in the first five years of a career than Rison.

There are others, with more serious problems, who are part of the recidivist community.

Manley played in three Super Bowls and had 97 career sacks, fourth best in NFL history. He also had this nasty drug habit. Three years ago, he confessed to a setback and was suspended for the second time from the NFL.

"I am in trouble and I must renew my battle with this disease," he said at the time. "The battle in football is a game, the battle for my life is not. I may have lost a battle, but I will win the war."

A year later, in his autobiography, Manley wrote how he "gave up a $650,000-a-year contract for a lousy $20 worth of cocaine."

"Drugs rob you of your credibility and your morals. They make you a liar and a cheat. It takes time to get that back. I want to show recovery can work."

Schlichter came out of Ohio State as a can't-miss quarterback prospect. He missed. The problem: Gambling.

Schlichter, one observer suggested, would bet on which of two people would get across the street first. He'd love those dot races that ball parks use to amuse fans between innings.

When his addiction was diagnosed, Schlichter was treated at South Oaks Hospital in Amityville, N.Y., where Dr. Sheila B. Blume is medical director of the alcoholism, chemical dependency and compulsive gambling unit.

"Relapsing is very much a part of addictive disorders," she said. "That is why a single treatment, in-patient or out-patient, is never considered a cure. A very important part of treatment is that recovery is a lifelong endeavor.

Dwight Gooden was clean for seven years before he started fouling testing bottles — perhaps as many as 10 times — last summer. "I had an alcoholic patient who relapsed after 14 years," Blume said. "The condition can be arrested. It never is cured. The one bet, the one cocktail, the one hit of crack opens the door.

Jackson rips 50, Mavs win in OT

■ NBA Roundup

DENVER — Jim Jackson scored a career-high 50 points, including two free throws with 0.5 seconds left in overtime, and the Dallas Mavericks rallied from a 25-point first-half deficit to beat the Denver Nuggets 124-123 Saturday night.

Jackson had 39 of his points after intermission — 15 of them in the third quarter as the Mavericks clawed back to within five points, 16 more in the fourth period and, finally, eight in overtime.

Jamal Mashburn added 35 points for Dallas.

Rodney Rogers led Denver with 25 points, followed by Dale Ellis with 24 and Bryant Stith with 23. Robert Pack had a triple-double with 21 points, 17 assists and 10 rebounds.

Suns 111, Spurs 108

PHOENIX — Charles Barkley of Phoenix, activated off the injured list only hours before the game, scored 10 of his 23 points in the fourth quarter as the Suns outlasted San Antonio.

Barkley fouled out with 6.3 seconds left in his first action this season, and Sean Elliott of the Spurs made both free throws, cutting the Phoenix lead to 109-108.

But the Suns worked the ball to Danny Manning, who scored his 31st and 32nd points of the night to ice the Suns' victory.

SuperSonics 98, Rockets 94

It was Houston's third consecutive loss after opening the season with nine straight wins.

Payton's shot came after the Rockets, who trailed most of the second half and by as many as nine points, had pulled to 94-92 on a thunderous slam by Robert Horry with 35 seconds to go. After Payton's jumper, Detlef Schrempf added a pair of free throws for the Sonics with 2.9 seconds remaining.

Sam Perkins and Shawn Kemp each had 22 for Seattle, with Perkins coming off the bench to hit three 3-pointers in the second half. Payton finished with 17.

Hornets 105, Knicks 95

NEW YORK — Alonzo Mourning scored a game-high 27 points and grabbed 18 rebounds as Charlotte sent New York to their first home loss of the season.

Patrick Ewing of the Knicks was held to 11 points after the opening quarter, in which he scored 11 points to get New York off to a 13-point lead.

Mourning scored 5 points in a key 9-0 run by the Hornets in a 4:28 minute span of the fourth quarter, just after the Knicks had pulled to within one point, 84-83.

Cavaliers 101, Warriors 87

CLEVELAND — Mark Price scored a season-high 31 points and made five of Cleveland's team-record 11 3-pointers as the Cavaliers beat Golden State.

The Cavaliers set an NBA record by attempting just two free throws in the game, lowering the mark of three set by the Los Angeles Lakers against San Diego in 1980. Cleveland made both tries — one by John Williams, the other by Tony Campbell — completing a pair of three-point plays in the second quarter.

Lakers 112, Bullets 96

LANDOVER, Md. — Nick Van Exel had 22 points and 13 assists, and Cedric Ceballos added 18 points and hauled down 14 rebounds as Los Angeles beat Washington for its fourth straight win.

The victory equaled the Lakers' longest win streak last season. It also was Los Angeles' third straight road win, something the Lakers have not accomplished since last Dec. 4.

Chris Webber had 22 points and 20 rebounds for the Bullets, who have lost five straight games. Washington has yet to win in three games since adding Webber, last year's NBA Rookie of the Year with Golden State, and his ex-Michigan teammate, first-round pick Juwan Howard, on Nov. 18.

Celtics 108, 76ers 99

PHILADELPHIA — Rookie Eric Montross sank two free throws with 1:53 to play and David Wesley hit a 3-pointer 21 seconds later as Boston defeated Philadelphia.

Dee Brown scored 22 points, Dino Radja had 19 and Montross finished with 18 points and 12 rebounds — both season highs — for the Celtics, who were playing their fourth game in five nights.

Magic 113, Bucks 105

MILWAUKEE — Anfernee Hardaway scored 21 of his 35 points in the first half and had his first triple double of the season to lead Orlando over Milwaukee for its seventh straight victory.

Stewart, Azinger survive wind, split skins

■ Paul Azinger and Payne Stewart share the lead after the front nine at the Skins Game in Palm Desert, Calif.

Associated Press

PALM DESERT, Calif. — Paul Azinger and defending champion Payne Stewart each won $80,000 Saturday while fighting gale force winds in the first nine holes of the Skins Game.

The wind blew steadily at 25-30 mph and gusted as high as 50 mph. On the downwind, downhill, 505-yard, par-4 sixth hole, Fred Couples hit a driver 430 yards in the air.

■ Golf Roundup

Azinger, who was diagnosed with lymphoma two days after competing in this event a year ago, had two birdies. Tom Watson had one birdie and won $50,000. Stewart won his $80,000 with a par.

Couples, who has won three non-PGA Tour touraments so far this month, was shut out over the first half of this 18-hole, four-man, made-for-television tournament, which continues Sunday at Bighorn Golf Course.

The winds were so strong, Watson said, "gusts would move the ball on the green, start it rolling again, after it had come to a stop."

"It was awful," Azinger said.

"It's pretty hard to hit good shots or make birdies," Couples said, and looked at Watson. "I don't think anybody got the ball close to the hole until you did on the last hole."

On the sixth hole, both Azinger and Stewart played a 1-iron off the tee and a 9-iron to the green.

Watson was putting for birdie from 25-30 feet from the right fringe "and when he was over the putt, you could see the wind just lift him right up out of his stance," Stewart said.

Watson missed the putt by 7 feet. Stewart, who has won the last three Skins Games, holed a 25-footer for par on that hole, then became the winner when Azinger left a 20-foot par putt on the front lip and Couples and Watson missed from 8 and 7 feet, respectively.

Watson, who won the first skin in the first Skins Game in 1983, closed out the day with a 9-iron to 10 feet for a birdie on the ninth, worth $30,000.

Azinger, who had made only four previous starts this season after his comeback from cancer treatment, won $20,000 with a 15-foot birdie putt on the first hole.

"I was relieved," he said. "My biggest fear was that I wouldn't get a skin."

With that fear behind him, he holed a 20-yard bunker shot for birdie and won three more skins and another $60,000 on the fourth.

He also had a hand — literally — in Watson's winning par on the next hole, a 280-yard par-4.

Azinger, Couples and Stewart all attempted to drive the green, and all three drove into trouble in rocks and sand and desert. Watson played to the fairway, but failed to hold the green with his little pitch.

Couples had to take an unplayable lie, Stewart missed the green in 2 and Azinger failed to get it out of a deep bunker. He then picked it up, taking himself out of the hole and paving the way for Watson's winning 2-putt par from the front fringe.

"I thought Freddie was chipping for birdie," said Azinger, unaware of his penalty drop.

Australian Open

SYDNEY, Australia — Brett Ogle used familiarity to shoot a 2-under-par 70 and take a two-stroke lead after three rounds at the $637,500 Australian Open golf championship.

The 30-year-old Australian has a 56-hole total of 207, two shots ahead of English Ryder Cup player Peter Baker and New Zealand rookie Paul Devenport.

Ogle has been playing the par-72, 6,829-yard Royal Sydney course since he was 16, and has had only two bogeys so far.

"I feel very comfortable with my game at the moment," Ogle said. "My work to the greens this week has been my best since I won the Hawaiian Open (in January).

"From tee to green it's been fabulous, but I probably haven't made as many putts as I would have liked."

Ogle set up his round with tricky birdie putts at the third and seventh holes, and relishes the chance to control his destiny.

"Being in front doesn't worry me," he said. "When I've been in the lead in the past, I've gone on to win. I'll certainly sleep well tonight."

Baker had a round of 68 on Saturday, while Devenport had a 67.

Greg Norman, seeking his fourth Australian Open title, but his first win in his homeland in four years, improved with a 68 to be among a group of players at 212.

Norman said he was surprised to find himself still in contention.

"I am surprised no one is shooting 14 or 15-under on this course. It is really there to be had," he said.

Mark Calcavecchia, the 1988 Australian Open champion, also was at 212 after a round of 71, while defending champion Brad Faxon was at 213 after carding a 67.

Casio World

KAIMONCHO, Japan — Robert Gamez shot a 4-under-par 68 to take a two-stroke lead heading into the final round of the $1.5 million Casio World Open Golf Tournament.

Gamez, 26, winner of the Pebble Beach Invitational last week, scattered an eagle, four birdies and two bogeys over the 7,014-yard, par-72 Ibusuki Golf Club course for a three-round total of 14-under 202.

Australian Wayne Smith is second after a third-round 68, followed by Japan's Eiji Mizoguchi and Scott Hoch, who shot 67s in bogey-free rounds to share third place at 10-under 206.

Jose-Maria Olazabal of Spain shot his third consecutive 70 and was tied for 11th at 6-under 210 with seven others, including Australian Graham Marsh.

Defending champion Tom Lehman had a 69 and was in a group of nine sharing 19th at 5-under 211.

Hockey labor talks recess, size up next move

BOSTON (AP) — The slow-moving NHL labor talks hit another snag Saturday when they were recessed so players could plan their next move. One general manager said nothing was achieved the past two days.

"Sometimes more work can be dealt with and more things can be accomplished away from the table," NHL Players Association executive director Bob Goodenow said. "It's not always a function of the time we spend across from each other."

NHL commissioner Gary Bettman, wearing a grim expression as he left, said the sixth session in Boston in 10 days ended because union negotiators "needed some time to do some of their internal homework." The latest meeting lasted about two hours.

Bettman said the owners side was ready to meet whenever the union was ready. No date or site for the next meeting was immediately announced, but a management source told The Associated Press it's likely to be early in the week in Boston.

Boston Bruins general manager Harry Sinden, a management hard-liner, was unusually reticent and stern-faced as he rushed from the hotel where meetings were held Friday and Saturday after a Thanksgiving break.

"There was a sense of anticipation on our side that we'd have two big days here," he said later in a phone interview. "The fact that we didn't get anything done at all leaves us a little frustrated."

The owners lockout entered its 57th day Saturday with a total of 321 games called off. The league already has shortened the season from 84 games per team to 60.

Bettman has said that at least 50 games are needed to have a meaningful season, which would mean a startup date around the middle of December.

"I'm optimistic that the season can be saved," Sinden said. "Will it be saved? I have no idea."

Sinden acknowledged that a union representing about 650 players may have a more difficult time gauging its members' opinions than a management group of 26 owners. But Goodenow said that wasn't necessarily a problem.

"There's been lots of discussion, lots of pushing and pulling on a lot of issues," Goodenow said.

Sinden said union negotiators weren't able to decide what position to take on three of the issues in the dispute — free agency, salary arbitration and a luxury tax on teams that spend more than the league average on salaries. An agreement in principle reportedly has been reached on a rookie salary cap.

The union feels the luxury tax, which would distribute money from the big spenders to teams with smaller payrolls, amounts to the same as a salary cap. Both sides stuck to their policy of not revealing details of the talks.

Sinden did find one positive note.

"The optimism, I guess, would come from the fact that we brought it to the point where decisions have to be made," he said.

Not everyone was as downcast as Sinden.

"I walked out of there with a neutral feeling," Toronto general manager Cliff Fletcher said. "You had 18 people in that (negotiating) room. I'm sure if you locked them up into 18 different rooms, you might get 18 varying opinions on it.

"Everybody views things from a different perspective. We're at the stage that Dec. 1 is just around the corner. I think there is a genuine feeling on both sides that they want to get a deal done."

Ukrainian smashes 3 world records at championships

ISTANBUL, Turkey (AP) — Timur Taimazov of the Ukraine broke three world world records and won three gold meals at the World Weightlifting Championships on Saturday.

Competing in the men's 238-pound class, the defending champion twice broke the world record in the snatch with lifts of 436 pounds and 440 pounds.

The combined total world record of 946 pounds, which Taimazov also has, remained unchanged because of International Weightlifting Federation rules which state that combined results must be divisible by 2½.

Former world champion and 1984 Olympic Champion Nicu Vlad of Australia finished second with 930 pounds, for which he received two silver medals and a bronze — the only medals won by Australia.

China's Li Dan broke two world records and completed a clean sweep for her country by winning three gold medals.

Finland's Karolina Lundahl finished second to Dan in the snatch, clean and jerk, and combined total, to earn her country's first medals in the competition.

Dan's performance raised to 18 the number of gold medals won by Chinese women for all six weight categories in which there were Chinese entrants.

Her record-breaking lifts were the 10th and 11th times Chinese women broke world records at the championships. Each of the record-breaking lifts eclipsed marks set previously by other Chinese women, who hold 27 of the 28 world records for all nine weight categories.

Yanks reach doubles finals

JAKARTA, Indonesia (AP) — Todd Woodbridge and Mark Woodforde reached the finals of the $1.3 million ATP World Doubles Championships by eliminating the defending champion pair of Jacco Eltingh and Paul Haarhuis on Saturday.

■ Tennis Roundup

The second-seeded Australian pair came from behind to defeat the top seeds from the Netherlands through a hard-fought, rubber-set match that lasted 2:08.

After losing a tie-breaker 7-5 in the first set, the Australian pair broke serve in the second game for a 2-0 lead in the second set.

Buoyed by excellent volleys and backhands, the Australians, again, broke them in the 10th game of the third set to win 6-4 and take the match.

In Sunday's final, Woodbridge-Woodforde will take on Jan Apell and Jonas Bjorkman of Sweden, the fifth seeds, who beat the sixth-seeded Australian-Russian pair of David Adams and Andrei Olhovskiy 6-3, 6-2.

Swiss racer ends nine-year drought

PARK CITY, Utah (AP) — After nine seasons as a professional skier, Heidi Zeller-Baehler of Switzerland finally won a race.

Zeller-Baehler sped down a giant slalom course with the best second-run time, barely maintaining her balance near the top and bottom, to win the first World Cup race of the season.

■ World Cup

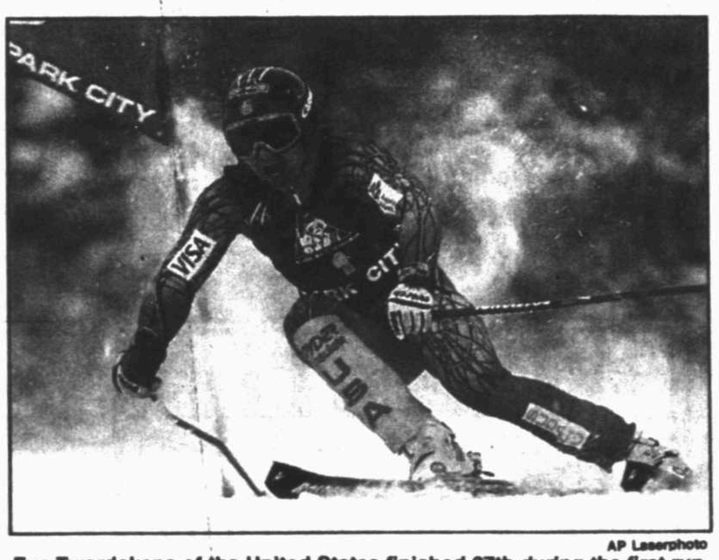
Her two-run time of 2 minutes, 22.03 seconds was four-tenths of a second faster than Sabina Panzanini of Italy. Five-time Olympic medalist Vreni Schneider of Switzerland celebrated her 30th birthday by finishing third.

Zeller-Baehler skidded and nearly crashed on a steep portion near the top of the course, and then barely avoiding falling backward as she crossed the finish line.

"I had a big fault in the finish. I didn't think I had the best time," said Zeller-Baehler, who twirled her ski pole in the air with her right arm when her time was posted.

Zeller-Baehler, 27, whose best previous results were second place in a 1989 downhill and second in a giant slalom in 1993, was tied for second after the first run. She had a second-run time of 1:07.46.

Panzanini had the best first-run time, 1:14.33. She also was seeking her first World Cup victory.



AP Laserphoto

Eva Twardokens of the United States finished 37th during the first run of the World Cup Championships at Park City, Utah, Saturday. Only the top 30 finishers advanced to the second run.

Schneider, last year's overall World Cup champion, made another of her remarkable second-run comebacks to get within the top three. She was tied for eighth after the first run.

Pernilla Wiberg of Sweden, the 1992 Olympic giant slalom champion, fell on the first run and another pre-race favorite, Anita Wachter of Austria, failed to qualify for the second run.

None of the six American racers qualified for the second run.

About 5 inches of snow fell Friday night and Saturday morning, and there was steady snow during the second run. Both of the runs were through 46 gates on the new C.B.'s Run course.

If Salt Lake City is selected to host the 2002 Winter Olympics, Park City would be the site of the men's and women's slaloms and giant slaloms.

LSU begins search for Hall replacement

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — LSU athletic director Joe Dean says he will hold his first official interview with a Division I-A college football coach today for the school's head coaching vacancy.

It will be the first of four or five interviews Dean hopes to conduct next week, although he would not reveal the candidates' identities.

Dean says he has spent many hours on the phone talking with several coaches since firing Curley Hallman on Nov. 15.

Unidentified sources from within the LSU athletic department told the Baton Rouge Advocate that former LSU star quarterback and Texas A&M offensive coordinator Steve Ensminger would be interviewed Tuesday.

Ensminger is a former prep star at Central High School in Baton Rouge. He also coached at Nicholls State, McNeese State, Louisiana Tech and Georgia before joining the Aggies.

Early shopping sets positive note

Immediately after Thanksgiving, thoughts turn to Christmas as shoppers converge on stores to begin their gift purchases. And if the shopping at Midland stores early this Christmas season is any indicator of what the approaching holidays will bring, it should be a glorious Christmas this year.

Merchants were reporting post-Thanksgiving Day crowds much larger than those experiencesd last year with strong sales being made.

An employee at J.C. Penney in Midland Park Mall said the store was seeing "wonderful" crowds and that "so far it has been great." Dillard Department Store manager Mike Richmond reported "very good" crowds that were larger than those experienced at the start of the Christmas shopping season last year and John Marshall, manager of Sears Roebuck & Co. at the mall, echoed that observation, additionally noting items that seemed to be selling particularly well included small electrical tools and casual clothing.

The indication that shoppers are turning out early in force — and making purchases, instead of merely "window shopping" — bodes well for a healthy Christmas shopping season. It's particularly noteworthy in light of the fact that the weather, although cool in recent days, hasn't really turned cold yet. Merchants have observed for years that Christmas shopping really begins to pick up once the weather gets cold, snow begins to fall occasionally, and shoppers begin greeting one another with the traditional "Merry Christmas!"

That shoppers are purchasing items apparently indicates they feel positive about the economy and want to make purchases before supplies limit their options. The mood appears to be upbeat for the holiday season.

Once Thanksgiving is past and the Christmas spirit begins to descend on a community, Christmas truly is just around the corner. The indication from early Christmas shoppers in Midland is that the joyous season is almost upon us.

Trumka brings fire to entitlements debate

WASHINGTON — There should be a "Trumka test" imposed on politicians who are inclined to make indiscriminate cuts in entitlement spending to prove they are deficit-hawks:

Anderson

"Tape your mouth shut and tape one of your nostrils shut. Then run up and down a flight of stairs 20 times and try to catch your breath with just one nostril."

That's how Richard L. Trumka describes the way his father breathes 24 hours a day. Trumka is president of the United Mine Workers of America, and a member of the politically charged Bipartisan Commission on Entitlement and Tax Reform. Like so many coal miners, Trumka's father, Frank, acquired the dreaded black lung disease in his 50s. He barely made it to 62, when he was able to retire and start collecting Social Security. Today he's tethered to an oxygen tank.

Trumka brings a heartbeat to the hubris permeating the entitlement debate. He exploded when some of his colleagues on the commission talked matter-of-factly about raising the retirement age for Social Security to age 70 or even 75.

A third-generation coal miner, Trumka's training underground has served him well on the entitlement commission. He's not afraid to get his hands dirty, and he's easy to spot at the commission's hearings. Trumka is the burly man with the bushy black mustache who squirms in the starched white collar and necktie.

Trumka's tilting-at-windmills style has given the common person a seat at the table, and has given the commission a rebel and a reality check. He was the only one of 32 members to vote against the commission's preliminary report "because of the impression they leave that entitlements are the cause of the nation's fiscal woes."

Unlike many Democrats, Trumka is proud to defend the social safety net and declare that not all entitlements are evil. "For millions of Americans, entitlements are their only source of financial security and adequate health care," he says. "You can't lump them all together."

Left out of the commission's report, meanwhile, were all of the tax breaks enjoyed by corporations and wealthy Americans. Essentially these are entitlements for the affluent, and Trumka thinks his fellow commissioners are forgetting that half of their mission is tax reform. With tax cuts for the rich on the horizon in a Republican-controlled Congress, Trumka notes that the 1982 tax cuts drained the treasury of $1.2 trillion.

"And now they come to us and say, 'We've got to get rid of these entitlement programs because they're going to kill us!'" says Trumka. "Before you talk about soaking the middle class, let's take back some of those goodies we gave the rich."

45 minutes is enough to prove constitutionality

WASHINGTON — Tuesday morning Arkansas will have 45 minutes in the Supreme Court to defend the constitutionality of state-imposed term limits of the sort it and 21 other states have applied to their U.S. senators and representatives. Forty-five minutes should suffice. Herewith a defense in fewer than 720 words:

Will

Mr. Chief Justice, may it please the court.

Although election returns are not germane to your deliberations, some opponents of term limits assert that recent electoral turbulence renders term limits unnecessary as a means of dislodging entrenched incumbents. Actually, about 90 percent of congressional incumbents on the ballot Nov. 8 won. Granted, various scandals (House bank, House post office, Rostenkowski, etc.) and generalized misgovernance have recently produced rates of turnover unusual by modern (although not by pre-1950) standards. However, Americans, by a three-to-one margin, wish to use term limits to promote good government, rather than rely on recurring disgust to produce periodic churnings of the political class.

Besides, dislodging entrenched incumbents is not the only, or even the primary, reason for term limits. The primary reason is to remove careerism as a motive for entering electoral politics, and for unsatisfactory behavior while in office. The question before the court is: Can states constitutionally achieve this by imposing term limits on their own congressional delegations?

Those who deny that states have this right say the Constitution stipulates three qualifications for membership in Congress (age, citizenship and inhabitancy in the state from which a person is elected), and that these are the only permissible qualifications. This second assertion is demonstrably false, as this court noted in Storer v. Brown (1974), "States have evolved comprehensive, and in many respects complex, election codes regulating in most substantial ways, with respect to both federal and state elections, ... (many matters, including) the selection and qualification of candidates."

A number of states require candidates for the House of Representatives to live in the district they wish to represent and states require various residency periods. Are these states acting unconstitutionally by enforcing an additional qualification for office?

Various states require candidates to present various kinds of petitions to secure access to the ballot. Most states require candidates to declare affiliations with parties. Some states prohibit candidates who have lost in primaries from running in general elections. Other states prohibit holders of certain offices from being candidates for the U.S. Senate or House.

If the court cuts down state-imposed term limits as an impermissible additional qualification, the scythe of the court's logic will mow down laws in most, perhaps in all states. But surely a reasonable reading of the plain text of the Constitution confirms what the Constitution's structure and spirit strongly imply: in our federalism of "dual sovereignty," states have broad scope for experimentation and diversity in regulating their political processes.

As Jefferson wrote, the Constitution imposes "some" qualifications for membership in the House and Senate "but it does not declare, itself, that the member shall not be a lunatic, a pauper, a convict of treason, of murder, of felony, or other infamous crime, or a non-resident of his district; nor does it prohibit to the state the power of declaring these or any other disqualifications which its particular circumstances call for; and these may be different in different states. Of course, then, by the 10th Amendment, the power is reserved to the states."

Critics of state-imposed term limits argue that the Constitution does not explicitly grant states permission to add qualifications. That is true but immaterial, given the plain text of the 10th Amendment: "The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the states, are reserved to the states respectively, or to the people."

Jefferson was surely correct that the Constitution's three qualifications are minimums, defining a floor above which states, acting as laboratories of liberty, are free to rise with additional qualifications reasonably related to legitimate state goals.

Jefferson's understanding accords with historic practices, including those of the Founders' era. For example, James Madison, "the father of the Constitution," was elected under a Virginia law that went beyond the three minimum qualifications: Virginia required congressional candidates to be property owners.

Clinton, Congress ought to enact welfare reform

No issue did more to define Bill Clinton as a New Democrat and help him get elected than his campaign promise to "end welfare as we know it."

That promise resonated with the voters. Everyone agrees that the current welfare system is broken and arguably promotes the conditions it is supposed to cure.

Clinton should have put his popular welfare reforms ahead of his complicated health care reforms. Had Clinton put his efforts into passing a comprehensive welfare reform plan ahead of his health care plan, it's likely he could have prevented the Republican sweep in the recent mid-term election.

In their Contract with America, the Republicans also promised welfare reform. The GOP welfare reform promises differ little from those made by President Clinton. Again the voters showed their approval of the concept.

Both Clinton and the Republicans in Congress should finally get on the same page and actually pass a comprehensive welfare reform package. It is something the American voters have repeatedly supported.

Clinton said that after two years of government support, job training and child care, "anyone who can work must — in the private sector if possible, in community service if necessary." Welfare, he said, is supposed to be a second chance "not a way of life." The Clinton plan tells welfare recipients that they've got to work. Everyone else does.

The Republican plan also calls for cutting off benefits after two years. It is accompanied by strong work requirements.

The agreement between Clinton and the GOP's Contract with America plank on welfare should finally get the administration pulling in tandem with the majority in Congress. This is good.

New state jail initiatives to be adequately funded

Dotting the plains, the gulf shores, the arid west and the timbered east sections of this state are concrete walls, bars, guards and prisoners.

Tonight some 92,000 people will bed down in state prison cells. Another 21,000 state prisoners will sleep in county jails, where they are waiting until Texas builds more cells. By 2000, the projection is that there will be 206,000 prisoners — twice the population of Waco — behind bars ...

The criminal justice system spends massive amounts of money. During the next two years, it will absorb more than $4 billion of the state's $70 billion budget.

While no one knows the outcome of the new penal code and the new state jail beds, it is important that the initiatives be sufficiently funded, effectively administered and fairly evaluated before the programs are branded useful or useless.

It would be a shame — and a taxpayer boondoggle — if careless oversight, political expediency or preconceived opinions prevent careful expenditures and factual determination of results.

Wake me if raising rates makes economic sense

Reading an article on popular music the other day, I was halfway through before realizing I was asleep. This was not the article's fault.

Baker

A primitive conviction that anything can be learned if you have the patience to read about it remains with me despite long experience to the contrary. Another primitive impulse, however, has lately been sending me into dreamland whenever I delve into difficult subjects. As a result, I now spend a lot of time sleeping in prose which I have entered in search of knowledge.

Computer manuals, for example. I will never need sleeping pills as long as there's a computer manual. A page or two on RAM and ROM and I'm the sandman's most peaceful baby. A recent tract on what caused the First World War gave me the best night's sleep in a month, and on a straight-back kitchen chair too.

Only last week while writing one of these columns I had reached just about this point when I paused to read it from the top, hoping to discover what I was talking about. I might have slept past the deadline but for a panicked editor's telephoned reminder that an uncertain America awaited my guidance.

What anesthetized me in the pop-music article was a reference to punk rock and macho rock. Mere tots are totally knowledgeable on these subjects, but to me they are as remote as the moons of Uranus. To me there is only one kind of rock; namely, loud rock.

It's wonderful that anybody has ears subtle enough to tell punk rock from macho rock, nerd rock or rock-'em-sock-'em rock. I am ashamed that I can't do it, and would like to learn, but an ancient inner voice whispers, "Nobody can master everything, pal, so why not settle for a little nap?"

"Well," you may ask if you are Alan Greenspan, "if you're not qualified to dilate on simple rocks, how can you dare talk about economics, as you obviously intend to do?"

The answer is I'm not going to talk about economics, but merely ask a few simpleton's questions. These have occurred to me over the past few weeks just before falling into deep slumber from opening paragraphs of economics news stories.

For instance, about the Federal Reserve people constantly raising interest rates: I know they do it for our own good. To prevent inflation. And I understand that inflation would be a terrible disaster.

I also understand that whether we're hit by the inflation catastrophe depends on people who buy and sell bonds. If they think we are inflation bound, it's "So long, sweetheart!"

They start buying or maybe selling bonds — I'm not sure which — at a prodigious rate, and the whole country is kaput. So obviously, having us at their mercy, they must be kept happy. Meaning, assured that inflation is not in the cards.

That's why Greenspan and company have to keep raising rates. And bless them in this good work, say I. There's a drawback though. Raising rates keeps the economy hissing and knocking like a car with a missing cylinder.

Thanks to all helpers at Midland fund-raiser

Members of the Altrusa International Club of Midland wish to express their thanks and appreciation for the support given by Midlanders and Midland businesses to their recent fund-raiser, their 10th Annual Spaghetti Luncheon.

It is truly heart-warming and encouraging to know that whatever the event planned for community, or an individual's benefit, Midlanders will be there to help, physically and financially. If this were not true the community services provided by the many Tall City civic clubs could not be accomplished.

It is not possible to name all who helped, in so many ways (some would surely be inadvertently missed); but special thanks go the the "Altrusa Slaves" — Danny Shock and Mike Porter from Houck's Jewelry, who lugged hot kettles of sauce and spaghetti and gallons of iced tea and coffee from the kitchen to the serving tables; Johnny Carter for the colorful baloons that added a festive atmosphere; and the businessmen who made generous contributions toward expenses. A big, big "Thank You" to one and all! This year we had some food left over, and it was taken to the Permian Basin Center For Battered Women and Their Children.

If you read the fliers on the tables you learned about Altrusa, and the things we do with monies raised by these events. We hope to see all of you, and a friend, next year — same time, same place!

Volunteers should support immigrants

I am glad the Republican Party came to power on their libertarian contract and have since followed with a libertarian dialogue of less government, lower taxes, more recognized liberty for individuals, more freedom from regulation and the end of oppressive welfare policies. Proposition 187 in California is a good example.

Proposition 187 is constitutional because U.S. citizens are protected by the Fifth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution from government taking their property for public use without just compensation. Taking property from a citizen and forcing them to support illegal immigrants against their will without just compensation is against the law and unconstitutional. Robbery by individuals or governments is still wrong, even if it is for a cause you believe in.

Government is not the answer anyway. Government causes too much money and effort to be wasted; not directed at solving the situation. Everyone who is concerned about the fate of the illegal immigrant should organize, not to protest but to support. Teachers, doctors and nurses who are concerned must donate their time and equipment; citizens their time, buildings and money. Church committees could have carnivals or bake sales or crusades for canned goods, they could find shelter among their members, also, the teachers and doctors. How dare they pay someone to do their charity, anyway? If it has become a secular world, whose fault is it? Government is not empowered with this task.

So, before you volunteer to boycott or march or riot for the illegal immigrant, volunteer to solve the problem without the stupid government and its even dumber bureaucracies and organize the help that's needed now and if you care, volunteer.

Trade organization assumes sovereignty

It is important that this lame-duck Congress vote to postpone a vote on GATT (General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade) and its creation WTO (World Trade Organization).

Presently this proposed legislation is on a "fast track," or rule that prevents removal of the many offensive sections and disallows amendments. "Fast track" ruling expires at the end of the year.

WTO is a budget breaker, adding $31 billion dollars to the federal debt as a result of lost revenues from tariff cuts.

Why does WTO give a subsidy worth $2 billion dollars to the Washington Post, the Atlanta Constitution and others?

Why does WTO want to change the U.S. patent laws?

Why does WTO want to eliminate the guaranteed minimum interest rate on U.S. bonds?

Time and wisdom are needed to iron out this attempted intrusion into our sovereignty. The vote must be postponed until the "fast track" expires.

Tell congressmen to vote against WTO

Have we not just expressed on Nov. 8 our displeasure with too much government in our lives?

So why do we want the U.S. Congress to join the World Trade Organization, which would put American jobs, trade and economy under the control of a foreign legislature, a foreign unelected bureaucracy in Geneva and a foreign trade tribunal empowered to decide disputes in secret?

TeleVote your congressman and senator at once. The vote is Nov. 29 for the House, Dec. 1 for the Senate. TeleVote 1-900-825-7882.

Students are free to pray in schools

Newt Gingrich talks about returning voluntary prayer to the schools, but the fact is that students who want to pray already can, each according to his or her faith. They also have complete freedom to carry a Bible to school and read from it when time permits.

To have teachers leading their classrooms in group prayer would make the experience less "voluntary" than it is now and open up a can of worms. Whose prayers are to be said? Will the Christian advocates of school prayer object to having their children led in prayers of other religions by teachers who may be Jewish, Buddhist, Hindu, Scientologists or followers of the Rev. Moon? Or will we end up with an official watered-down generic prayer which, in order to be acceptable to all groups, is so inoffensive and bland as to be meaningless?

It would be nice if Gingrich gave the schools the right to up-to-date books, smaller classroom sizes and computers instead of self-righteously and ceremoniously offering up a right that is already there.

Readers' views on: Smith, abortion

Repeat customers mean more to clinic

What is the difference between taking the life of an unborn child by abortion, and driving the Smith boys off into a lake to drown? Both are helpless; both are unwanted by their mothers.

Was there no one who would take the little Smith boys and love them? I believe there are 100 childless couples in the Permian Basin who would love to have the 100 babies that have been aborted since Planned Parenthood began offering their services. Could it be that a dead baby and a repeat customer is more profitable to Planned Parenthood than a live one?

Everyone with empty arms who is wanting a child should call Planned Parenthood and offer to pay them the $300 to save one of these little ones for them.

My heart aches to read the ads in the Reporter-Telegram by people wanting children and unable to have any. People who would even pay all expenses in having a child born. Does something seem wrong here?

It's time to rethink our responsibility

I don't know how the Pro-Life people have managed to turn the murders of Alex and Michael Smith into an abortion issue. The message I received from this tragic event was that as long as we continue to have a breakdown of the "family unit" and one parent is left with the majority of the responsibility and the well-being of the children, we will continue to have awful things like this happen. The growing statistics of single-parent families are staggering. It's time we rethink the responsibility, dedication and commitment it takes when we decide to bring children into this world by both parents.

Weather was perfect for Vietnam memorial

The weather was prefect, for West Texas, on Nov. 12. At 1500 (3 p.m.) parents, sisters and relatives, old sweethearts, fatherless sons and daughters, children of the children, friends, and the curious gathered at The Permian Basin Vietnam Veterans Memorial. A prayer was offered, speeches were read, memories were awakened and peace was found at last.

Two hundred twenty-five names were called for roll call and each was answered for and 23 names were unaccounted for. Peace had come at last within our hearts and the questions were, at last, answered.

Yes the weather was perfect on Nov. 12. Dark clouds, stiff winds and little rain fell as the tears of remembrance fell. The pink granite memorial is and was on Nov.12 warm, like sunshine, with the love of those who remembered and knew. I blew the dust of the past off the old yearbooks and looked at their young faces once again and read what they had written so long ago on these pages.

Yeah — I knew him.

Arabs are obstacle to peace with Israel

I refer to Charley Reese's column of Tuesday, Nov. 15, headlined, "Israel, not Hamas, is obstacle to peace." Did someone at the Reporter-Telegram write that inflammatory and misleading headline? I am not Jewish but a Christian very interested not only in what the Bible has to say about Israel, but what has actually happened in Middle East history. Not only has Reese disqualified himself as a reliable journalist by his article, but the local editorial page editor Bill Modisett was negligent in not spotting a sad piece of propaganda.

The words "obstacle to peace" recall the phrase used on several occasions by former President Bush and Secretary of State James Baker. Those men erroneously and perhaps maliciously referred to the Jewish settlements in the West Bank as being the main "obstacle to peace" in the Middle East. (The correct name is Judea and Samaria, the area where most of the events chronicled in the Bible happened.)

The Israeli citizens ("settlers") who have bought and developed land in Judea and Samaria have as much right as anyone else to make their homes in that area. They are not illegal squatters. They have not displaced Arabs. A modern-day myth is that Israel took that land area away from the rightful owners, the Arabs. Not true! In 1947 the United Nations partitioned the land area (not a country) known as Palestine since A.D. 135 at the end of the Second Jewish Revolt. Please note that date — it was not "from time immemorial" as Yasser Arafat and many Arabs claim. Part was given to the Jews for a tiny Jewish state and part to the Arabs for a second Arab state. Jordan was the first Arab state carved out of Palestine. However, the infuriated Arabs refused to accept the U.N. partition, and five Arab nations went to war against the fledging nation of Israel to try to get all of Palestine. It didn't happen the way they planned. The land was up for grabs during the ensuing conflict and Jordan grabbed Judea and Samaria and called it the West Bank (of the Jordan River). Only Britain and Pakistan recognized their annexation (not even Jordan's Arab brothers). For 19 years the area was under the brutal occupation of Jordan, and in 1967, provoked into war by the Arabs again, the Israelis captured the areas, hoping to put an end to the terrorist attacks from the high mountains of Samaria upon the state of Israel.

I submit that the main obstacle to peace in the Middle East is the Arabs who do not recognize Israel as a nation, even after 46 years, and who are attempting to totally annihilate the Jewish state.

Park needs lighting, police protection

My favorite place to walk for exercise is the Par Course at Windlands Park here in Midland. Let's face it, just plain walking within the city limits is pretty boring, and Windlands Park features ground squirrels, jackrabbits, burrowing owls, hawks, other birds in abundance, and a loyal group of walkers/joggers who greet each other regularly as we go 'round and 'round and 'round.

But something is amiss at the Par Course. Several times lately I have found a teen-age boy or two just "hanging out" in the parking lot by the jogging trail. Just there, not speaking to anybody and not doing anything. In broad daylight, with the trail full of walkers, I am not too concerned. Once I moved my car to the other side of the lot because the kids were leaning against it and my purse was inside. I am a trusting person, but this bothered me.

But two nights ago I finished my five miles in the dark. It was early, but it gets dark early. This night, there was one teen-age boy in the parking lot, just hanging out. He carried an enormous (yes, I know what enormous is) stick or piece of lumber, and he was violently beating on one of the struggling young trees there. I looked around, and there were no other people close by. It was very dark. And so, with my heart breaking because (a) even trees have a spirit as far as I am concerned and this one was being beat to a pulp before my eyes and (b) a young person with that much anger needs help and compassion. I chose to drive away because I was afraid of a teen-age boy about my own size who carried a big stick and swung it angrily.

So my questions are: Do I have to quit walking at Par Course? Could we have a drive-by police officer after dark at Windlands Park? How about a drive-by psychologist? Could we have much, much better lighting out there? It's really dark in the parking lot and along the trails. Is Midland not a safe town anymore? Are we turning into a not-so-nice place? What happens to angry teen-aged boys with big sticks who beat up trees? Are people the next step in that rage? Do we need a joggers vigilante group?

I moved to Midland from Houston years ago so I would feel safe. I do lots of things alone and I have never been afraid. Until now. It is not my favorite feeling. It's also probably too late in my life to grow big muscles or carry a bigger stick than my angry young friend.

SPEAKING OUT

GATT bill controls economic future

By Dorothy Wyvell

GATT (the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade) is our present existing legislation passed by Congress in 1948, that regulates trade by mutual agreement between the United States and six other nations signatory to the Agreement. WTO (the World Trade Organization) is a proposed international governmental bureaucracy consisting of over 120 dissimilar polyglot nations, tied to the United Nations and designed to control the economic future of the world. It was originally introduced internationally in Uruguay about eight years ago and is now presented to the United States Congress as an extension of GATT.

This proposed bill has been placed on a "fast track" procedure in Congress, which means no changes can be made in it by our Congress. There can be only 20 hours of debate in Congress, then it has to be voted on "Yes" or "No" with no reservations added. It is scheduled to be voted on in the House of Representatives on Nov. 29 and in the Senate on Dec. 1. This new enlarged GATT bill, with all its subsidiaries is 2,600 pages full of rules and regulations. A small section of it sets up the formation and details of WTO.

The proposed WTO would:

1. Establish an international governmental economic bureaucracy consisting of over 120 nations, including Haiti and Cuba, in which each nation, including the United States, has one vote. The United States would be forced to obey it, have no power of veto, have no appeal except to the body itself and would be unable to withdraw until after a period of five years.

2. Destroy the sovereignty of the United States by overriding the U.S. Constitution which specifies (Article I, Section 8): "Congress shall have power...to regulate commerce with foreign nations..." and thus set up a government body with supremacy over our own government.

3. Conduct all its affairs in secrecy.

4. Direct that any interpretation of the rules and regulations would be "the exclusive authority" of the WTO (Article IX, Section 2). This is awesome power.

5. Include rules and regulations which are not uniform for all member nations.

6. Involve control in other areas additional to and unconnected with trade, i.e., agriculture and the environment.

7. Also include the proverbial pork such as millions of dollars to The Washington Post newspaper which, incidentally, has been pressing for the passage of the bill.

8. Require the United States to pay huge amounts of money for its organizing and operational expenses, an amount set by the WTO itself and completely unrelated to its one vote in 120 or to its population.

These are just a few of the many provisions that are against the interests of the people of the United States. Who is pushing for its passage now — in its present form?

1. The international bankers to establish credit in the undeveloped nations.

2. The international business organizations in order to move their factories to areas of cheap labor.

3. The One Worlders who are grasping for power to control all the nations and all the people.

What should the United States Congress do in this forced vote during a lame-duck session? The members should be statesmen, not politicians, and act to preserve the sovereignty of our nation. They should postpone the vote until after Jan. 3, 1995, to remove the "fast track" provision which expires December 1994. Then, next year, consider the bill removing all of the objectionable and restraining requirements, since the final vote is not due until June 1995.

Our policy on letters

The Reporter-Telegram recognizes the "Letters to the Editor" format as an important forum for citizen opinion and encourages participation of all readers. To that end, we have set as few rules as possible. However, we must have some, and they are:

■ Letters must be signed and include a street address and daytime phone number for verification. Letters not including this information will not be considered for publication.

■ They should be no more than 350 words in length. While some lengthy letters are published, we reserve the right to edit when necessary due to space limitations. The briefer the letter, the better its chance of publication.

■ Only one letter per month per writer can be published.

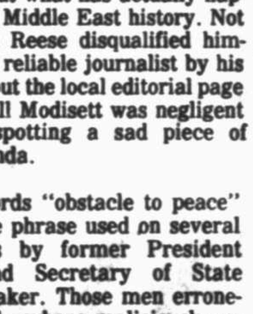
DAVE BARRY

Mollusks need long stint in cooler

If you're one of the millions of Americans who are afraid to walk the streets because of crime, you will be pleased to learn that federal law-enforcement authorities have finally decided to take stern action against a shipment of frozen scallops.



Barry

Really. According to an Associated Press story sent in by many alert readers, these scallops have been named by the U.S. attorney's office as the defendant in a lawsuit entitled "U.S.A. vs 268 Cases, More Or Less, Of An Article Of Food."

The lawsuit charges that the scallops contain more water than federal regulations permit. The story quotes a spokesperson as saying that, for technical reasons, the government could not bring charges against the corporation that owns the scallops, and therefore "in essence you have arrested a food product."

The frozen scallops were apprehended after a low-speed chase on a Los Angeles freeway during which they held little guns to what passes for their heads.

No, seriously, the frozen scallops made no attempt to flee, and under our system of justice they are entitled to a fair trial with a properly sworn-in jury of their peers ("Please raise what passes for your right hand"). But if they're found guilty, I hope they go to the cooler for a long time, because like most Americans I'm sick and tired of seeing overwatered frozen scallops getting just a slap on what passes for their wrists and then being set free to roam the streets, although in all fairness we should note that, as members of the deceased mollusk family, they roam quite slowly.

Speaking of cold seafood getting tangled up with the law, I have here an article from the Peoria (Ill.) Journal Star, written by Sarah Okeson and alertly sent in by Karen Fyke, concerning a young man who opened his grandmother's refrigerator late one night and discovered that a bag of leftover imitation lobster — which is made from processed fish — was glowing. He alerted the grandmother, who took the leftovers at 2 a.m. to (Why not?) the Peoria Police Department, where an officer, following standard law-enforcement procedure for this type of situation, took them into a dark room and verified that they were, indeed, giving off a greenish light.

The officer then released the imitation lobster back into the custody of the grandmother, who is quoted as saying, "My light bulb can go out in the refrigerator now. All I need is the artificial lobster." The story also quotes a government microbiologist as saying that the glow could have been caused by bacteria, which by the way are being represented in this case by Robert Shapiro.

No, I'm kidding again; Mr. Shapiro is a respected attorney who would not represent bacteria unless they were very wealthy. But the point is that, for safety's sake, you should never eat any kind of imitation crustacean without first having a police officer examine it in a dark room. Also, I assume it goes without saying that you should never eat REAL lobsters, which are clearly nothing more than giant insects. "Never eat anything with eyeballs on stalks and more legs than a standard cow" is a good rule of thumb.

Luxury!

Step Up To...

If the ideal home is a sanctuary; somewhere to escape to, away from prying eyes and the hustle and bustle of daily life; then this ranch is perfect.

Only a few minutes from downtown, but sightly 'off the beaten track', the property is situated on 8-acres of wooded, landscaped grounds, just south of the interstate.

The scale of the house and grounds is obvious as soon as one rounds the bend of the driveway: mature trees flank the drive which leads in a gentle curve up to the split level ranch house and neighbors are kept out of sight by the huge lawns which stretch to the edge of the property.

Apart from the sheer scale of the grounds, there are a large number of features which add greatly to the appeal of the ranch.

The rear of the property is geared towards horses: 2 barns (one with 6 stalls and a tack room), 2 fenced corrals, walkers and a birthing stall make this ranch ideal for equestrians.

For those with other interests, the large, stocked fish pond should prove to be irresistible.

The actual house itself certainly vies with its surroundings in terms of features and elegance. Impressively laid out on three tiers, this split level home boasts a whole host of impressive features.

Beautifully decorated throughout, with touches of elegance not usually found in the area; such as a wrought iron spiral staircase leading to the family room from the tiled entry way, this home is truly something out of the ordinary.

Aspects of the house, such as the master bedroom which opens out via French doors to the private swimming pool, are testimony to the levels of luxury to be found.

The formal and family rooms are good examples of how well thought out the house is, with lots of wood burning fireplaces, large windows overlooking the grounds and interesting ceiling treatments.

Entertaining is made easier by a large, second floor deck, a wet bar in the study that takes up an entire wall and a dining room capable of very large dinner parties.

The property is available for view by appointment only, and interested parties should call Joel Oldham of ReMax of Midland, at 682-8820.

Inexpensive tips turn new house into "Home"

Peggy Strong, CRS, GRI
Chaparral Realtors

Moving is a monumental event and can be a financial setback. The following tips were designed to make that transition smoother with inexpensive decorating tips to make that new house a place to call HOME!

1. Paint the entrance to the new house in the deepest tone of the family's favorite color which will immediately give the new place that special homey feeling! Consider painting the front door, make it your own!

2. Paint at least two walls and the ceiling of the living room in a strong color and then place the largest piece of furniture against one of the colored walls, thus creating an instant focal point. Create a strong feeling of warmth and personal pizazz.

3. Paint or cover ugly wallpaper. The whole family can participate and create a Family Wall! Choose a room or wall to hang collections, pictures of every size and all types of frames. Be sure to personalize with photographs, memorabilia, children's artwork, cross-stitch, and interesting fabric scraps. Plates, antique advertising signs and architectural elements can be hung without frames. Check out the decor in the movies and create your own theme . . . this can be done from approximately 6 inches from wall to baseboards or eyelevel if you prefer. Place the largest item in the center and work out. If the room is large, it will be warmed up considerably; if it is small it will be dramatized.

4. Gain a fresh perspective in the new place by moving the furniture and accessories around so that they are in different rooms from the last home. Chests, mirrors and tables can be moved to entry ways, den, or dining. Be creative and enjoy new surroundings with familiar family treasures.

5. Give furniture a whole new look with fabrics or paint. Children's furniture can be sponge painted, drape tables for coordinating bedside nightstands.

6. Make the entry a pleasant place with a welcome first impression. Avoid harsh lighting in favor of soft lamps and potpourri scents, and attractive floral arrangement.

7. Bring the holidays into every room. Decorations over doorways, centerpieces, changing of candles, or special pieces decorated for the season.

Your family will love you for these simple money-saving techniques that minimize the coldness of a new place into a neon "WELCOME HOME"!

CHILD'S ROCKING CHAIR

Children love this chair because it's kid-size, but you'll love it for its design simplicity, low material cost and easy assembly. Each side is made from one piece of plywood, eliminating difficult joints. Trace the full-size pattern onto plywood, cut out and assemble. It's so sturdy, it will still be rocking when it's passed along to others. Paint the chair in a bright color and delight the child of your choice.

OIL REPORT

SUNDAY, November 27, 1994 SERVING 54 COUNTIES IN WEST TEXAS AND NEW MEXICO

BRIEFING

Prices got off to a positive start early in the week as members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries met in Bali, Indonesia, and agreed to maintain production quotas at current levels through 1995. Prices then got a strong boost from several areas, including an announcement by Russian officials that they will consult with OPEC on how to raise their prices, and reports of a strike by refinery workers in Brazil. Cold weather in parts of the U.S. also provided a boost, especially for heating oil prices.

January crude futures closed the week at $18.15 a barrel, with the posted price at $16.50 a barrel. Natural gas closed at $1.87 per thousand cubic feet.

East Texas field

Legal wrangling continues over the legendary East Texas oil field as the Texas Railroad Commission continues to try to limit production in the field to 86 percent, while others want to produce at 100 percent.

The disagreement has pitted major oil companies against smaller producers and towns located near the field, who rely on tax revenues generated by the field to fill their treasuries.

Also at issue is the fate of the oilfield, discovered by "Dad" Joiner in 1930 and largest in the nation behind Alaska's Prudhoe Bay. Experts say the field should play out in the next 10 years.

Drilling gains

Drilling activity increased during the week ended November 18, according to Baker Hughes Inc.

In the Permian Basin, the rig count rose two to 111 for the week. A year ago the count was 130.

Lea County, N.M. was the most active in the Basin with 14 rigs, followed by Eddy County, N.M. with 13 rigs and Gaines County with eight rigs.

The national rig count rose six to 839; a year ago the count was 857.

Among major producing states, Texas posted the sharpest gain, 19 rigs, while New Mexico reported the sharpest decline, five rigs.

Chemical purchase

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Huntsman Chemical Corp. has concluded its purchase of Eastman Chemical Co.'s worldwide polypropylene business, including state-of-the-art facilities in Longview, Texas.

Chairman Jon M. Huntsman said the purchase price was in the $130 million range, and the company expects annual revenues from the newly acquired operations to yield $200 million a year.

The added facilities, in addition to Huntsman Chemical's current Woodbury, N.J. plant, will give the company an annual polypropylene production capacity of about 950 million pounds.

Oil supplies to tighten

■ Growing demand and shrinking Middle East facilities pose concerns

By AGIS SALPUKAS
N.Y. Times News Service

In the big picture of energy supply, today's mishaps with oil spills and idle refineries, are mere blemishes, say experts.

Of far greater concern, say experts, is that by the end of the decade billions of dollars will be needed to improve the oilfields, pipelines and ports in the Middle East to provide oil consuming nations with increased supplies.

And it is far from certain who will provide that money, raising the possibilities that production will not meet growing demand and prices will increase worldwide.

The demand for oil is expected to grow 11.7 percent by 2000, from the current estimate of 68 million barrels a day to up to 76 million barrels a day. The Middle East, with two-thirds of the world's oil reserves, should be able to notch up production to meet increasing demand for the next few years, but analysts say the region will not have the billions of dollars needed for structural improvements.

No one is suggesting that the Middle East will lose its position as the world's most important oil supplier. If anything, the region is likely to become more dominant, and around the turn of the century, analysts predict, Middle Eastern countries will be pumping at full capacity.

Yet years of reduced income brought on by weak oil prices and a need to spend more on increasing social needs have left the oil producers without the deep pockets they need to expand production, the experts say.

"There are now increasing demands for social justice and more political participation," said James A. Bill, director of international studies at

Tanker threat hits U.S. oil supply

■ Storm of controversy over tanker liability could create oil shortages, cause higher prices.

By John Paul Pitts
Business/Oil Editor

The price of imported crude oil and petroleum products could soar early next year because of new financial liabilities being placed on tankers.

"The issue has the potential to disrupt the flow of oil to U.S. industry and put whole segments of the U.S. economy at risk," said Jerry Aspland, president of Arco Marine, and an API spokesman.

He said it could lead to a "train wreck" effect, leading to massive increases of oil prices.

Bob Sullivan, Marine Coordinator for the American Petroleum Institute, said the issue would definitely constrain supply and would likely impact the price of crude oil. But even if it does not have that impact, Sullivan said it will cause the cost of transportation from the Persian Gulf to go up.

According to European newspapers, which have reported the tanker problem extensively, America's rigid environmental policy enacted in the wake of the Exxon Valdez spill is behind the liability problem, and unless the Clinton administration backs off Coast Guard regulations that require foreign tankers to carry large certificates of financial responsibility the U.S. could be facing a serious supply shortfall, industry officials have warned.

The problem, they contend is: Insurance through conventional vehicles is not available, and the deadline for attaining certificates of financial responsibility (COFR) is Dec. 28. Many tankers now on the high seas are headed toward the U.S. without the certificates, said Sullivan. Others have not yet loaded waiting for resolution of the problem.

At last count only 296 of the 1,600 tankers that bring crude oil and products to the United States have been able to attain the COFRs, which amount to $1,200 per gross ton, according to API. The Norway-based International Association of Independent Tanker Owners said the COFRs impose huge collateral outlay beyond the reach of all but the largest tanker companies.

Two large Norweigian tanker companies — Knock Tankers and Moavold — have vowed to stop trading with U.S. by the end of the year. Concordia, a Swedish tanker company, has also threatened to withdraw from the U.S.

If enough tankers withdraw from the U.S. market it could cause a crisis of oil supply, according to the American Petroleum Institute, which estimates that as many as two-thirds of the tankers trading with the U.S. will not be able to afford the certificates of responsibility.

"Approximately 47 percent of the tankers that bring oil and petroleum products to the United States belong to small independent tanker companies that do not have the capital resources for self-insurance," said Sullivan.

Like the bureaucratic entanglement of Title V of the Clean Air Act of 1990, the certificates of responsibility are part of the U.S. Oil Pollution Act of 1990, and were enacted following the Exxon Valdez spill. Under the rules of the Act, a spill liability trust fund would pay third parties injured by a spill.

Oil industry needs to get GATT gone

Pitts

The next few weeks could mark a turning point for the domestic oil industry.

When Congress returns from Thanksgiving holiday this week, leaders of both parties will engage in some serious head counting to see whether or not the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) can pass. Congress is expected to vote on the bill on Dec. 28; the Senate on Dec. 30.

If the votes are there to pass the agreement, some feel it could sound the death knell of the U.S. domestic energy industry by gutting it of all possible incentives.

Donald Hodel, former secretary of Energy during the Reagan administration, said the agreement would probably prohibit tax credits and all other incentives to the oil industry.

"GATT would not only endanger marginal production in this country by depriving it of economic incentives, but it would also terminate efforts to foster renewables such as solar, wind and geothermal," Hodel said.

He said one test of the legality of a subsidy in the trade and tariff agreement is whether the subsidy de facto tends to curb imports. If so, it would be deemed illegal.

"Since many subsidies for alternative and renewable energy sources are designed purely to promote homegrown energy and discourage imports, it would put U.S. energy policy at serious risk," he said.

Rep. Larry Combest, who has not yet committed on the agreement, said he was hearing concerns similar to Hodel's from other industries, and that some aspects of GATT definitely needed to be cleared up if it passed.

"Some have tended to put this agreement in the same ball game with NAFTA, but it may not be in the same game at all," Combest said. "It's good that the energy industry is getting involved with this issue, because GATT may not be the answer, and it could be harmful to the energy industry."

Billed as one of the most important treaties in the history of the United States, both Democrats and Republicans have expressed alarm at the speed with which the treaty is being pushed by a lame-duck Congress. They said it is "scary."

There is also concern that the vote by a lame-duck Democratic Congress will be up or down, with no opportunity to amend the agreement.

At this point, House Speaker Tom Foley has denied requests for delays to study the 2,200 page document, even though Sen. Bob Dole has said we need to take a second look at the important trade treaty.

One of the things that will be studied thoroughly is the power and jurisdiction of the World Trade Organization, which would be dominated by small developing countries that have historically voted against the United States. Important trade and tariff decisions would be made by tribunal, at which the nation in dispute would not be allowed to have a representative.

In effect, that means U.S. energy policy could be dictated by a handful of Third-World countries. The United

Oilman's bass tournament is scheduled

Staff Report

A first ever oilman's bass fishing tournament to benefit the Make-A-Wish-Foundation has been set for Februatry 24-25 at Lake O.H. Ivie.

The tournament is sponsored by the Permian Basin Oilman's Bass Invitational, and is patterned after other highly successful oil industry bass tournaments — the Texas Oilman's Bass Invitational and Louisiana Oilman's Bass Invitational. Only those individuals whose income is derived from employment in the exploration, production or service of oil and gas wells will be elgible to compete.

Mike Mundy, chairman of the event, said the tournaments stress safety, sportsmanship, keen competiton and fellowship.

"This will be a catch and release tournament," said Munday. "Freshwater bass are very durable. They can be caught, held captive for the day, weighed and released," Munday said.

He noted that companies would be able to support the Make-A-Wish-Foundation by sponsoring a team or by advertising. For more information call O.D.I. at 682-7611.

BLM sets new record sale

A record $6.4 million was bid from the sale of oil and gas leases on lands managed by the Bureau of Land Management (BLM) in New Mexico, Kansas, Oklahoma and Texas.

A total of 101 parcels equaling 47,881 acres were offered at the oral auction held on October 19, 1994 at the BLM office in Santa Fe. Bids were received for 96 parcels totaling 44,535 acres. The majority of the parcels are located in New Mexico.

The cumulative high bid of $6,322,975 is the highest in five years and third highest since oral bidding was initiated in April 1988. The average bid per acre, $141.98, is the highest since oral bidding was initiated. The percentage of parcels bid on, 95 percent, is the second highest since oral bidding was initiated in April 1988.

The highest per-acre bid was received from Meridian Oil, Inc., of Midland, Texas, who bid $2,400 per acre for 80 acres in Lea County, N.M., for a total of $192,000.

The highest bid per parcel was received from Enron Oil and Gas Co., also of Midland, Texas, who bid $480 per acre for 1,28- acres in Lea County, N.M., for a total of $614,400.

The leases are awarded for a period of 10 years and as long after that as oil and gas is producing in paying quantities. The federal government receives 12.5 percent royalty on production on these leases. One half of the revenues from federal oil and gas lease sales go to the State of New Mexico for public schools. The parcels not receiving a oral bid are available for non-competitive filings at the BLM's Santa Fe office.

The next oil and gas lease sale auction is scheduled for January 18, 1995, in Santa Fe, N.M.

Hodel, an advocate of a sustainable U.S. energy policy, has warned that if the U.S. energy industry does not speak up and make its case to Congress on GATT, it may never have another chance.

William and Mary College in Williamsburg, Va.

He said repercussions from the Iranian revolution in the late 1970s were still being felt in the Middle East.

In Saudi Arabia, for example, revenue from oil totaled about $19,000 a person in 1980, but has dropped to about $3,000. "There is very little left to invest to increase oil production," Bill said. "You can't understand anything about oil or its production unless you understand the social and political context in which all this is taking place."

No one foresees a repeat of 1973, when the embargo imposed by Arab nations caused a quadrupling of oil prices and long lines at gas stations. Still, analysts believe that just because the latest Middle East confrontation was shrugged off by the energy markets, the consuming nations should not become complacent. A series of long-term trends are expected to continue to force most of the world to buy more of its oil from the Middle East.

Since 1985 the demand for oil has gone up by about seven million barrels a day, with almost all of it being fulfilled by a rise in production by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries. Production in the United States, including Alaska, has been declining, and fields in the North Sea have matured and production growth has slowed.

And there are too many unknowns to predict when large supplies from Russia and its former states will begin flowing onto world markets. Exports from Russia are expected to decline by about 12 percent this year.

Keith Welham, economist for the International Energy Agency, a group that tracks energy trends for the world's consuming nations, recently predicted that the price of oil was expected to rise steadily, to about $28 a barrel by 2005. Even at those prices, few analysts predict that Middle Eastern countries will be able to steer the extra revenue to increasing production.

"Although there is currently some idle production capacity in Iraq and a few other OPEC countries, it is very small compared with the required expansion" he said.

A big unknown, said John H. Lichtblau, chairman of the Petroleum Research Foundation, is when Iraq, which could produce up to four million barrels a day, will come back into the world market. If its oil starts to flow in the next few years and it pushes up production, the supply squeeze could be delaye[illegible]

The[illegible] are also no other big sources of capital available to the Middle East. The world's big oil companies are spending heavily to improve their own refineries and plants to meet more stringent air pollution laws.

Cyrus R. Tahmassebi, chief economist of Ashland Oil, said it would be difficult for the Middle East to attract the oil companies to make big investments because in the 1970s the production rights of the oil companies were severely curtailed.

"They may want to work in that direction, but its going to be a very slow process," he said. "The oil companies are not going to come rushing back."

The United States has also become more dependent on imports.

There are some projections that by 2000 the United States will import about 56 percent of its oil, with about one-quarter coming from the Persian Gulf.

This year the United States will import about 45 percent of its oil, compared with 30 percent in 1984.

OIL: Shortage seen

But for claims in excess of set limits, the fund could break the shipowners limit of liability and exhaust insurance and assets to obtain full recovery.

Shipowners claim the certificates burden them with unlimited liability and that no insurance company will cover them.

"Unless the United States backs off its Dec. 28 deadline, it will be a question of whether or not the U.S. can receive sufficient oil supplies to meet its needs." said Miles Kulukundis, chairman of the independent tanker organization.

Six congressmen, including U.S. Rep. Bill Tauzin, chairman of the Coast Guard Sub-Committee, have sent a letter to Clinton urging him to postpone the Dec. 28 deadline, but at press time no decision had been made.

The Coast Guard has said it will not back off the Dec. 28 deadline, because the tanker companies are making a mountain out of a molehill. But according to API records, problems in the crude oil transportation sector have already stated to develop with a shortfall of crude oil spot shipments.

In July shipments from the Persian Gulf amounted to 4.1 million tons. In August it dropped to 2.9, increased to 6.1 in September and so far from October through November has averaged only 2.2 million tons.

"We don't know the real reason for the shortfall, but it is well outside the comfort zone for getting adequate oil supplies to the United States," Sullivan said. He called crude oil transportation the number one problem in the industry today and said many oil companies were watching it closely, especially the independent refiners who do not own their own tankers.

Gene Kelly, Amoco vice president for transportation, said even the big refiners were concerned about supply, because they too count on independent tankers for delivery of crude oil stocks. On average Amoco receives 100,000 barrels per day into its refineries.

Kelly said the industry had been working on a number of schemes to help tanker fleets attain COFRs, but as yet none of them, including a plan for an insurance pool, had materialized.

He said the Coast Guard hard line on the certificates was difficult to understand, because under the provisions of the law there was some room to work. "Now we are up against an impossible deadline. We need more time."

But so far the Coast Guard has not bowed to pressure.

It may, however, eventually bow to political pressure. At this point pressure is being put on President Clinton and the Secretary of Transportation by some members of Congress and oil companies. Since 80 percent of the imported oil enters through Texas ports, Gov. Ann Richards has sent letters urging the Coast Guard to back off its December 28 deadline.

If no solution to the liability problem is found by Dec. 28, industry experts say the U.S. may be forced to lighter much of the crude oil cargo from huge tankers to smaller vessels, thereby avoiding COFRs that do not apply to smaller vessels. Only problem is: the lightering would have to be conducted 205 miles out in the ocean — just outside the U.S. economic zone.

Apache buys reserves

HOUSTON (AP) — Apache Corp. has agreed to pay $101 million to buy nearly all of Crystal Oil's domestic oil and gas reserves.

The deal announced Monday will be the largest acquisition so far this year for Apache, which has made several smaller purchases through the end of the third quarter for a total of $71 million.

The Shreveport, La., company's reserves are mostly natural gas, located in southern Louisiana and along the Louisiana-Arkansas border. The two biggest fields are Southeast Pass, south of New Orleans, and the Vernon Field southeast of Shreveport.

The properties hold net proven reserves of 91.6 billion cubic feet of natural gas and 5 million barrels of oil. They will raise Apache's oil and gas reserves by 8.5 percent from the end of 1993, said Suzanne Best, Apache spokeswoman.

Current production from the properties is 20 million cubic feet per day of natural gas and 2,700 barrels of oil per day. The oil production will likely remain around that level, but Apache should be able to boost gas production to 30 million or 35 million cubic feet, Best said.

Crystal Oil is excluding from the sale those exploration prospects it is pursuing with partners, oil and gas properties held in drilling funds, and its Russian project.

The acquisition includes approximately 40,000 net acres of undeveloped mineral lease, located in southern Louisiana.

The announcement did not bear a large impact on either's stock.

PITTS: Nix to GATT

States would not have the power to defend itself against predatory pricing and investors would be discouraged from putting money into energy ventures.

Hodel said that scenario could damage the U.S. domestic energy industry to the point that it could not even respond to U.S. needs.

Hodel, an advocate of a sustainable U.S. energy policy, has warned that if the U.S. energy industry does not speak up and make its case to Congress on GATT, it may never have another chance.

East Texas Oil Field issues still rankle

■ Differences remain over pumping the dwindling East Texas oil field.

By Katie Fairbank
Associated Press Writer

LONGVIEW, Texas (AP) — Days are numbered for the legendary East Texas Oil Field and no matter how it's pumped, everyone knows there's no hope of reprieve for the dwindling giant.

But its life could be extended with production limitations, say opponents to 100 percent pumping at the mammoth field, largest in the nation for decades and now second after Alaska's Prudhoe Bay.

This summer, the 3rd Court of Appeals in Austin refused the Texas Railroad Commission's attempt to reinstate a two-decades-old rule restricting production to 86 percent. An appeal is currently filed with the Texas Supreme Court and various oil companies also have filed briefs.

The court has not yet issued a decision and is not legally required to act.

Some staff and petroleum engineering studies have shown that the increase to 100 percent pumping will result in lower recovery from the field over time, said Brian Schiable, spokesman for the Texas Railroad Commission, which oversees oil production in the state.

"It's best to be cautious and not run the risk of losing some oil that would never be recovered again," Schiable said.

Any loss would ultimately affect school districts and other governmental entities that receive oil tax revenue, along with royalty owners.

Since the 45-mile-long, eight-mile-wide field was discovered in 1930 by wildcatter Columbus "Dad" Joiner, people have predicted its demise.

"When it's depleted, I don't know what will happen," said I.J. Patterson, mayor of Longview, a city of 80,000 which grew atop the oil, leaving working pumps drilling in school and church yards and dotting the edges of baseball fields.

That day is coming even though the field is still the largest reserve in Texas. Producers, geologists and experts say it will be about a decade before the giant oil field plays out. After that, there will probably be some natural gas production, experts say.

The predictions started nearly as soon as the production.

Patterson reminisces that when he was in the eighth grade in 1943 his teacher said "it would only last 20 years."

The field, located in Upshur, Gregg, Rusk and Smith Counties near the Texas-Louisiana border, has produced more than 5.173 billion barrels of oil. Now in its twilight years, only 500 million barrels remain in reserve and the worry about the future remains.

Property values in the cities and school districts on the field have plummeted, tax rates have regularly increased and cities are scrambling to bring in other types of business.

"It's depleting. That causes me real concern," Patterson said.

"So goes oil, so goes Longview," he said, adding that just recently petroleum tax revenues dropped below 50 percent of the total tax yield for his city.

The East Texas Equity Alliance, a group composed of large oil producers who pushed to pump at 100 percent, says the whole issue is a farce.

"The sky is not falling," said Greg Hardin of Oxy USA Inc. and spokesman for the East Texas Equity Alliance, made up of such petroleum giants as Amoco, Arco, Exxon, Mobil, Shell and Texaco, among others.

The difference between 86 percent and 100 percent production is about 6,000 barrels a day, out of about 80,000 barrels in current production, Hardin said, and even with the court decision many of the producers still don't pump at full production.

He said the alliance wants the bickering over.

"It's been waged. My hope would be that the waste of the taxpayers' money would end," he said.

"We think the battle is over. We feel we've won a victory."

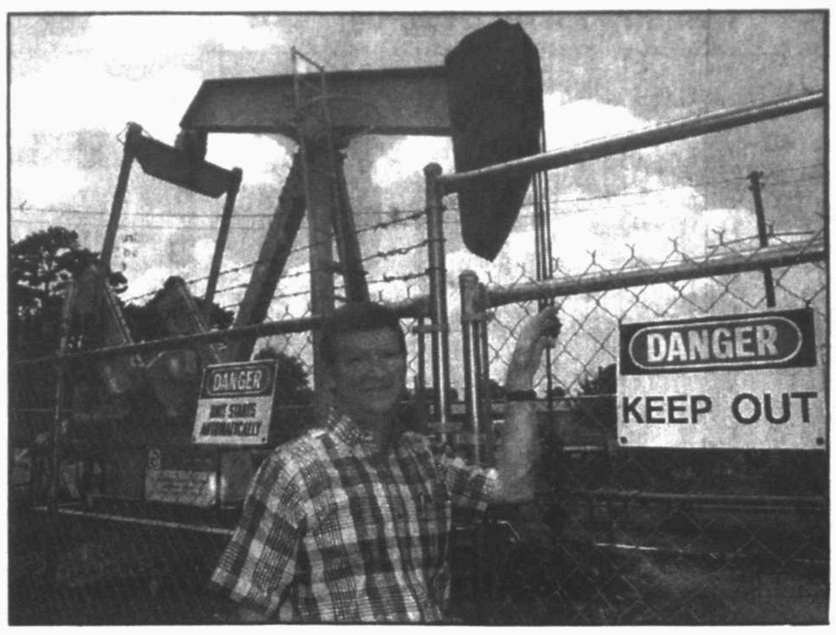
Mickey Smith, a spokesman for East Texas Producers and Royalty Owners Association, a group that represents independent producers, says the damage of 100 percent pumping has been done.

"They're not concerned with what the courts say, as long as they can keep it before the courts they can pump at 100 percent," he said.

"They can gut it and go. The quicker they can get it out of the ground the faster they can get out of here. They can go offshore or overseas."

Smith says pumping can extend the life of the field, also extending jobs for local residents and a tax base for the cities and counties. But he doesn't think the big producers care.

"They're more concerned with the almighty dollar than they are about the people here. They'll tell you they are, but that's a bunch of hogwash," he said.



Greg Hardin, spokesman for East Texas Equity Alliance, poses by an oil rig in Longview, Texas. He says the difference between 86 percent and 100 percent production in the East Texas Oil Field is about 6,000 barrels a day.

East Texas Oil Field facts

Associated Press

Notable facts about the East Texas Oil Field:

■ The East Texas Oil Field was discovered by a fluke in 1930 by Columbus "Dad" Joiner and Doc Lloyd, part geologist, part con artist.

■ In March 1937, 294 children, teachers and visitors died when a school in New London, in the southwest part of the field, exploded after a buildup of natural gas piped directly from the ground. The trag dy prompted new safety regulations, including a requirement that odor be added to gas to make it detectable.

■ The "Big Inch" pipeline was built in 1942 from the field to refineries in Pennsylvania and New Jersey. Winston CHurchill credited the pipeline for helping the Allies win World War II.

■ The field, located in Upshur, Gregg, Rusk and Smith Counties near the Texas-Louisiana border, had produced more than 5.173 billion barrels of oil by the end of 1993. There are only 500 million barrels remaining in reserve.

■ There are 7,300 producing wells.

Offshore drilling firms sign merger agreement

HOUSTON (AP) — Falcon Drilling Co. of Houston and Sugar Land's Marine Drilling Cos. have agreed to merge, creating the largest fleet of jack-up rigs operating in the Gulf of Mexico.

Falcon is the dominant operator of barge drilling rigs on inland waters in Louisiana and Venezuela but has a much smaller presence in the offshore market of the Gulf, where it operates 12 jack-up drilling rigs and one submersible rig.

Together, Falcon and Marine Drilling will control a fifth of the offshore jack-up market in the Gulf, said Joe Agular, an analyst with Johnson Rice & Co. in New Orleans.

Under the terms of the deal, Falcon shareholders will receive two-thirds of the stock in the merged company, dubbed Falcon Marine. Marine Drilling's shareholders will get the rest.

Falcon had annual revenues of $62 million last year, while Marine Drilling had sales of $83 million. But Falcon has been on a buying spree this year, acquiring several new inland barge drilling rigs. On a pro forma basis, Falcon would have had revenues of $133 million last year.

Falcon employs 2,000, while Marine Drilling has 700. The parties do not expect any significant layoffs in the Houston area, although there may be some reductions elsewhere, said William Flores, Marine Drilling's chief financial officer.

Falcon is privately held, with financier George Soros holding a majority of the company's stock. Marine Drilling is publicly traded. The new company's stock will trade on Nasdaq.

"I think consolidation is good for our industry," said Falcon Chief Executive Steven Webster. "We will be a dominant player in the Gulf of Mexico. I think it's a win-win for both sides."

Coastal unit enters natural gas sales agreement

HOUSTON — The Coastal Corporation's Coastal Gas Marketing Company (CGM) and Midland Cogeneration Venture (MCV) have entered into a unique long-term natural gas sales agreement.

Under the agreement, CGM will sell 55 billion cubic feet (Bcf) of natural gas at fixed prices during the period 2002 through 2006. CGM also entered into a separate agreement with an outside party to fix the purchase price of the gas that it will supply to MCV.

"This agreement is representative of Coastal's commitment to meet the needs of the growing electric generation market by providing reliable, long-term gas supply services," said Clark Smith, president of Coastal Gas Marketing Co.

"Agreements of this nature are indicative of an industry trend, which is to tailor contracts in such a way that power generation customers can budget their energy costs well into the future," Mr. Smith added. Coastal's ANR Pipeline Company subsidiary also will play a role in the arrangement by providing gas transportation services.

Mobil, partners to invest in Oklahoma field

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Mobil and two partners plan to invest more than $100 million in an aging oil field in the Oklahoma Panhandle.

Their goal is to boost production in Texas County's Postle Field and to keep the field active for at least 15 more years.

At its peak more than two decades ago, production was about 23,000 barrels a day. Now the oilfield yields about 2,000 barrels a day.

Mobil officials announced the joint venture with Transpetco Transport of Shreveport, La., and Williams Field Services Group of Tulsa.

With the new investment, Mobil expects the field to produce about 13,000 barrels a day by 1999 or the year 2000.

What does fuel really cost?

The GASCARD System virtually eliminates those losses to put fuel costs under control and save you money. Here's how:

THE TOTAL FUEL MANAGEMENT PROGRAM

A coded access card is assigned to each of your fleet vehicles. A Personal Identification Number (PIN) is issued to each driver. Used together, they authorize (or deny) access to fuel at any GASCARD fuel site before a purchase may take place.

Communication lines from fuel sites to GASCARD's non-stop Tandem computer are direct and always open. So authorization takes only seconds. And unauthorized purchases are nearly impossible, because the computer controls the purchase and you control the computer.

You have complete control over who pumps fuel into which vehicle. You can also specify fuel type, purchase limits, and locations. And you can change these specifications immediately simply by calling your GASCARD Personal Fuel Manager.

How much time do you spend tracking fuel costs?

Even if you try to control fuel costs by accounting for every gallon, you're still losing money. Because GASCARD does all that for you – automatically.

GASCARD's Fuel Management Report gives you detailed, understandable accounts of each purchase, all on one statement. Plus, tax information on both federal and state taxes (for every state) is clearly spelled out. The report also helps you check vehicle and driver efficiency and schedule maintenance to make your management job easier. You save time. And that means you save money.

Fueling America's Fleets

Across town. Across the state. Across the country. We're fueling America's fleets. Already GASCARD is the largest network of fleet fuel sites in the country. And we add new locations daily.

Many fuel sites are fully automated for faster service and improved vehicle/driver productivity. And nearly every location is ready to serve you 24 hours a day, every day of the year.

Most important, your GASCARD access card gives you approved credit across the nation. GASCARD is able to accept MasterCard and VISA credit cards, too!

More than automated fueling

GASCARD gives you something ordinary automated fueling cannot: your own Personal Fuel Manager. With his/her help, your fleet can virtually eliminate fuel losses, put fuel costs under control, and save money. New services and enhancements are coming on line too.

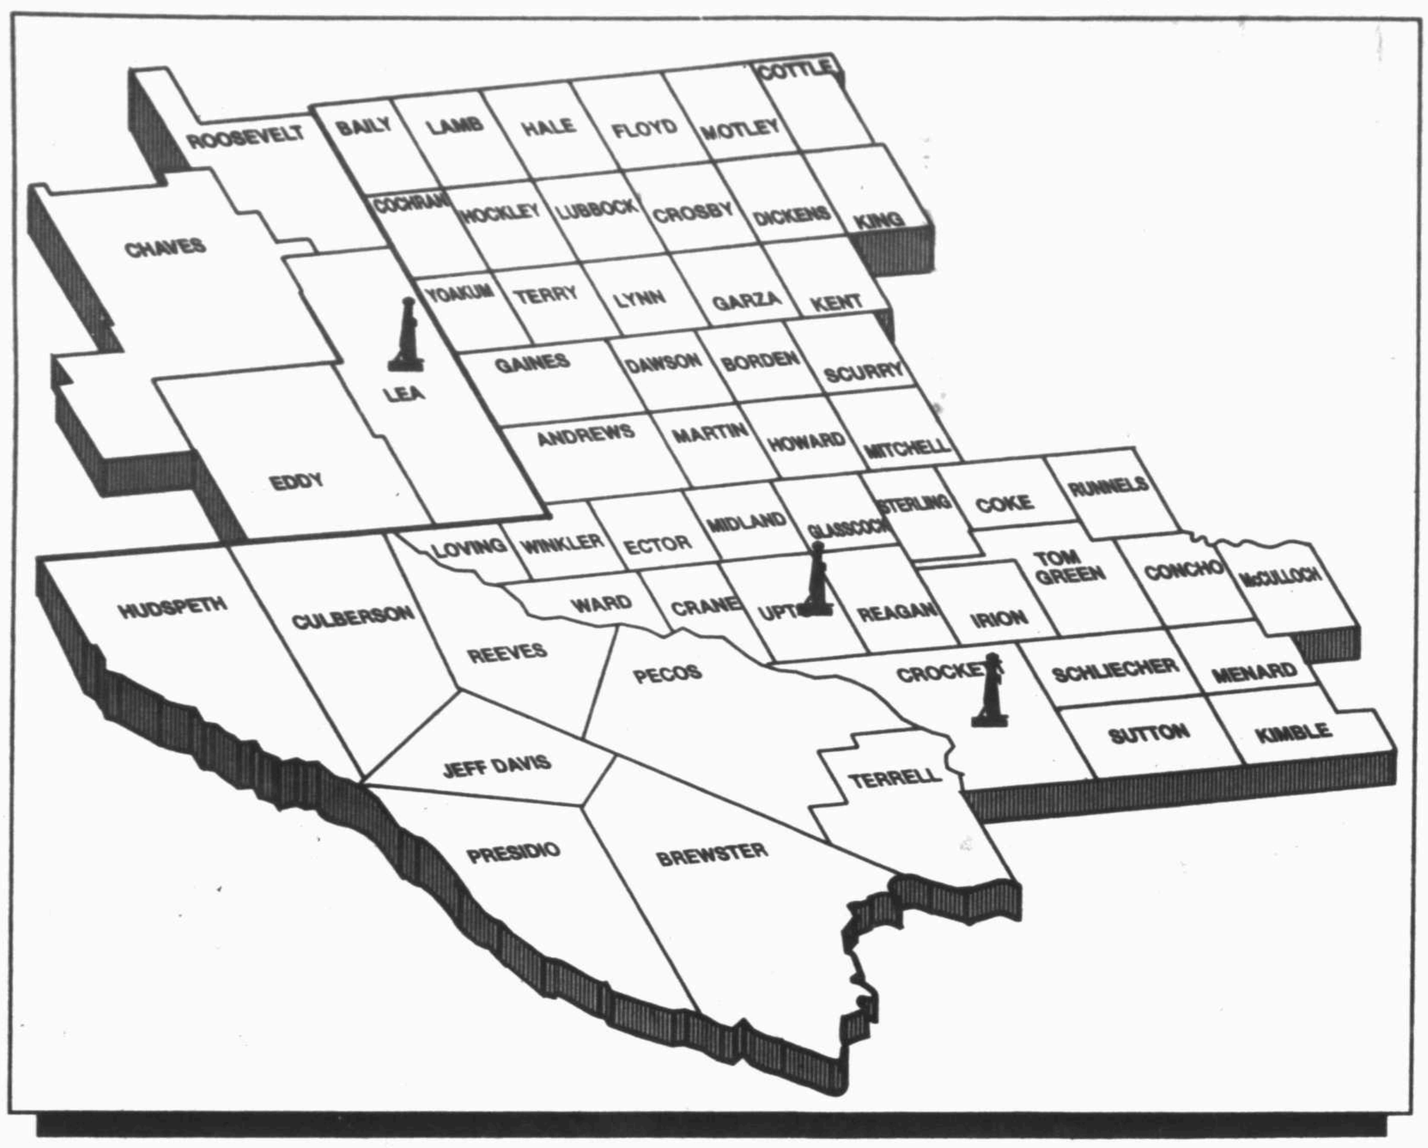
ACTIVITY HIGHLIGHTS



Lea yields modest Wolfcamp discovery

Staff Report

An apparent Wolfcamp discovery has been made in Lea County, N.M., surrounded by production in the Townsend field.

JFG ENTERPRISES reentered the No. 5 Hulda Townsend "A", testing it to pump three barrels of crude, 15 Mcfd and 15 barrels of water from an unidentified interval.

Original depth is 10,300 ft.

Crockett gains dual gas producer

J. CLEO THOMPSON has completed a dual gas producer in the Ozona (Canyon Sandstone) and University 31 (Strawn Detrital) fields of Crockett County, 14 miles southwest of Ozona.

From Canyon Sandstone perforations 8,285 to 8,288 ft., the No. 2C Henderson "M-13" was tested for a calculated absolute open flow of 1,500 Mcfd. The interval was acidized with 500 gallons of 15 percent NeFe acid.

The No. 2T was tested from Strawn Detrital perforations 9,189 to 9,402 ft. for a calculated absolute open flow of 9,200 Mcfd. The interval was acidized with 1,500 gallons of 15 percent HCL acid and fractured with 48,000 gallons of gel.

Total depth is 9,550 ft., where 4 1/2 inch casing is set, and the well was plugged back to 9,460 ft.

Formation tops, on ground elevation of 2,491 ft., include the Dean at 4,722 ft., Wolfcamp at 4,827, Base Middle Wolfcamp at 5,929, Upper Canyon at 6,401, Lower Canyon at 7,023, Strawn at 9,175, Strawn Detrital at 9,362, and Devonian at 9,485 ft.

Upton plugback nets Devonian producer

A former Fusselman producer in Upton County's Benedum field has been recompleted to produce from the Devonian formation, 10 miles northeast of Rankin.

M.L. ROGERS reentered the No. 1 Fowler-Neal, testing it to flow 34 barrels of 48 gravity crude and 301 Mcfd on a 16/64 inch choke with flowing tubing pressure of 160 psi. The well flowed from perforations 11,148 to 11,335 ft., which had been acidized with 5,000 gallons of 15 percent NeFe acid.

Originally drilled to 11,719 ft., the well was plugged back to 11,380 ft. A 4 1/2 inch casing liner was hung from 8,945 to 11,719 ft.

On elevation of 2,699 ft. formation tops include the Permian Redbeds at 464 ft., San Andres at 4,400 ft., Spraberry at 4,900, Devonian at 10,850 and Fusselman at 11,440 ft.

Oilfield Divers to sell corrosion unit

BELLE CHASSE, La. (AP) — American Oilfield Divers has agreed to sell its manufacturing plant, American Corrosion Services Inc., to Corrpro Cos. Inc. for $5.4 million.

American Corrosion, a subsidiary of American Oilfield, operated a foundry and company that produced anodes — corrosion protection devices for pipelines, vessel hulls and other structures. American Corrosion is based in Belle Chasse.

George Yax, American Oilfield's chairman and chief executive, said the two companies have entered a long-term supply agreement under which Medina, Ohio-based Corrpro will supply anodes to American Oilfield.

Yax said the sale will allow American Oilfield to focus more on the company's diving services in the Gulf and other opportunities in the United States and overseas.

Following the sale, American Corrosion Services Inc. will cease operating as a subsidiary of American Oilfield, said Steve Weems, chief financial officer for the Lafayette-based company.

"It was a side business to us that consumed a lot of management time and company resources," Weems said.

The companies have signed an agreement in principle for the sale, which could be completed within 30 days. The transaction will be retroactive to Oct. 31. The sale also is contingent on an environmental evaluation and financial review of the plant and the signing of final purchase agreements.

American Oilfield expects to record an after-tax loss of $500,000 to $750,000 on the sale of its subsidiaries' anodes facility and corrosion services businesses.

BJ Services, Western Co. to merge

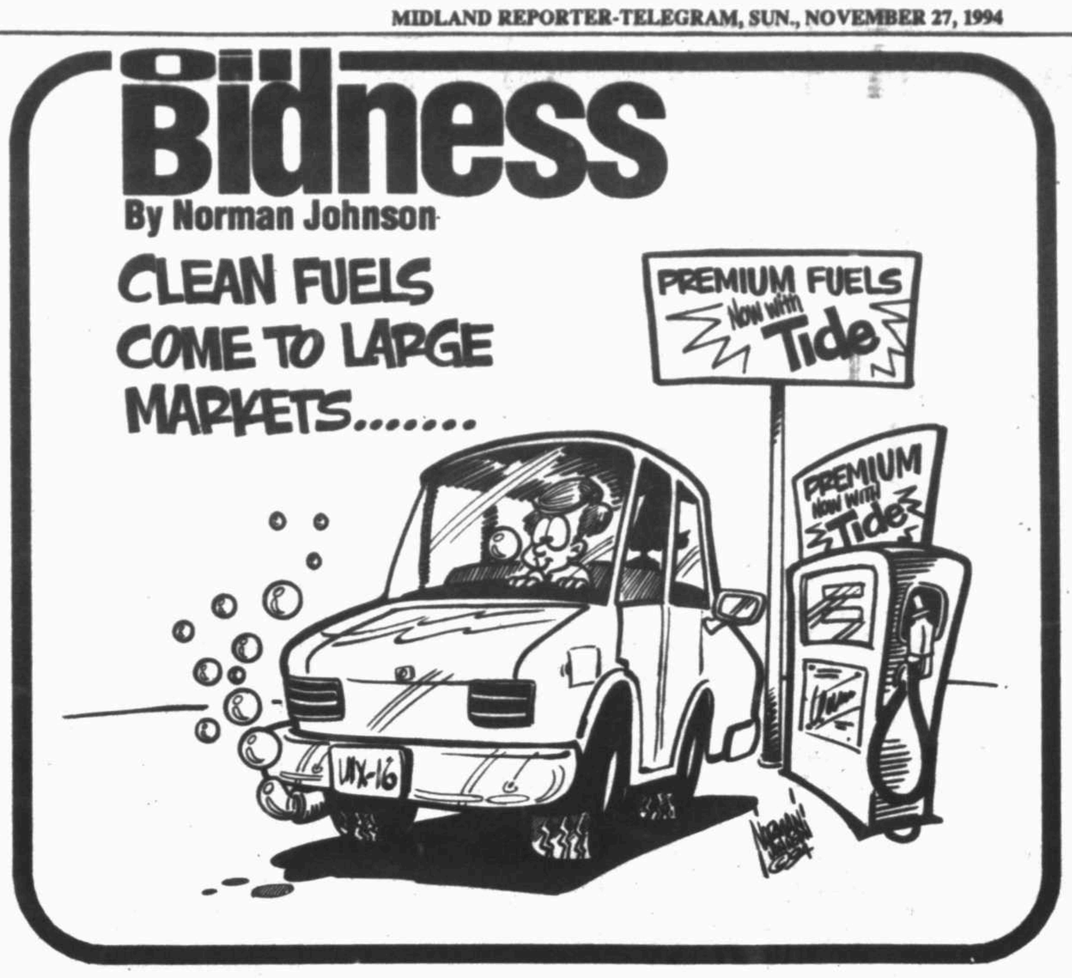
HOUSTON (AP) — BJ Services Co. and The Western Co. of North America announced that the two oil-field services companies have signed a definitive merger agreement valued at about $500 million.

Under the agreement, Western stockholders will receive $20 per Western common share in cash or BJ common stock. In addition, for each share they hold, they will get two-tenths of a five-year warrant to purchase one share of BJ common stock at $30 per share.

The companies' boards of directors approved the merger agreement at meetings. Including the warrant consideration, the transaction is valued at about $500 million.

Western stockholders will be able to elect to receive cash or BJ common stock plus the warrant consideration in either case.

The transaction is subject to the approval of both companies' stockholders, antitrust approval, and other customary closing conditions.



Halliburton selling unit

DALLAS (AP) — Halliburton Co. said it will sell its industrial services business unit for an undisclosed amount to HydroChem Industrial Services Inc.

The industrial services business unit had revenues of about $45 million in 1993. It provides chemical cleaning, hydrojetting and vacuum removal services to U.S. petrochemical and refining, pulp and paper, and power industries.

Thomas Cruikshank, Halliburton chairman of the board and chief executive officer, said the move is part of the Dallas-based company's desire to sell peripheral businesses and "refocus resources on Halliburton's core energy services and engineering and construction activities."

HydroChem, with headquarters in Houston, is a privately held industrial cleaning business.

Parties honor Minuet Debs

By Marilyn McKnight Harrison

The 1994 Minuet Club debutantes have been honored at a series of parties over the Thanksgiving holidays.

McKnight-Harrison

The party at LaBodega Restaurant was hosted by the 1993 debs, Bayard Bell, Shelley Betton, Jennifer Black, Danielle Brune, Lisa Evans, Kate Fullinwider, Sally Gibson, Molly Hyde, Allison Isbell, Kirstin McMillan, Andrea Munzer, Kate Taylor and Amy Williamson. Additional guests were parents and friends of the 1994 debs.

A luncheon honored Charlotte Friday in Midland Country Club's Garden Room. Hosting were Sallie (Mrs. Don) Kidwell and her daughter, Amy.

Also on Friday, Katherine was feted with a Comida Mexicana Cena at Odessa Country Club, given by her grandmother, Monette Hicks, and her aunts and unlces, Linda and Jim Hicks and Gloria and LaDoyce Lambert.

A "creative" lunch honored the girls Saturday at Barker's Gifts. Hostesses were Laura (Mrs. Jim) Brown, Sharla (Mrs. Bart) Hotchkiss and Marion (Mrs. Sikes) Johnson.

Charlotte was honored with a barbecue dinner Saturday evening at Prescott's Cafe given by her grandparents, Dorothy and Clarence Scharbauer Jr., and her aunt and uncle, Karen and Douglas Scharbauer.

The young women will make their debuts at the Minuet Club's annual Presentation Ball Dec. 22 at the Petroleum Club. The party whirl will continue upon their arrival home for the Christmas holidays.

THE TRADITIONAL CHRISTMAS Tree Lighting at the White House, the Easter Egg Roll on the East Lawn, a garden party for the Queen of England, and a weekend visit to Camp David. Not to mention her husband's swearing-in ceremony in the Oval Office.

All are a part of former Midlander Patricia Allday's memories of the four years she and her husband, Martin, spent in Washington, D.C., while he served as chairman of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission for former President George Bush.

Patricia shared her experiences and observations of the Washington scene for the Midland Country Club's Ladies Association's November luncheon meeting recently.

Patricia also kept busy in her own right during those years. She served as one of seven liaisons for wives of Presidential Appointees and a president of the Episcopal Church Women of Immanuel Church on the Hill.

Before moving to Washington, Patricia lived in Midland for most of her life and is a past president of the Ladies Association. She and Martin now reside in Austin.

The luncheon featured Pork Roast with Natural Sauce, Mixed Greens with Honey Mustard Dressing and Carrot Cake. Hostesses for the social hour preceding lunch were Betsy Swyer and Jean (Mrs. George) Donnelly.

Among those seen at the event were Kaye (Mrs. Bill) Franklin, Linda (Mrs. Rodney) Satterwhite, Wilda (Mrs. Maurice) Bullock, Janet (Mrs. Bob) Pollard and Karen (Mrs. Tim) Thompson.

HATS OFF to sponsors of the Community and Senior Services' Texas Size Garage Sale. Without them, the agency's largest fundraiser would not be possible.

To honor the sponsors, Helen and Bob Shelton hosted a party in their home on Nov. 17, the eve of the sale's opening. Cece and A.J. Brune cooked up delicious appetizers, including a wonderful pork tenderloin. Paula and Gary Douglas also assisted with the event.

Guests included honorary sponsor chairman Elizabeth Locker, Carolyn Roden, Nancy (Mrs. Buddy) Anguish and Marianne and Will Green. CSS board members Eileen Piwetz and Jack Sherman also enjoyed themselves at the party.

Guest Bill Schammel could be seen listening to the music of pianist Jack Hauke and also enjoying the Silent Auction. The auction included fantastic vacations, the Texas Size Collection, which consisted of special items donated to the garage sale, and the Midland Collection, which included packages donated by Midland merchants.

Antique Department chairman, Peggy (Mrs. Bill) Thorsen, was seen with her son, Dan Thorsen, taking a break from her volunteer duties to enjoy the party.

The Texas Size Garage Sale began on Nov. 18 with a preview sale, open to the public for $3 admission, and continued on Nov. 19 at no charge. It was held in a huge warehouse on East Scharbauer Drive and North Lamesa Road.

SOS: Members share losses

(From 1F)

Members offer each other suggestions, such as how to celebrate the holidays. "We knew we had to plan something different for Christmas that year," Kate said. "If I hadn't talked to Alan, I wouldn't have known that.

"Not everything is going to work, but it doesn't hurt to try when you're hurting."

Jim said he has learned to rely on the group to help him with his loss, "to learn to handle the grief and to express my thoughts about the situation before it happened and the feelings I experienced."

One of the most common feelings members have is anger, they said. "I experienced a lot of anger about this," Jim said — anger at the authorities who would not or could not help, anger at his sister and anger at himself.

"After the anger, (I felt) a lot of guilt that I should have done something anyway," he said.

But above all, he said, is a sense of loss.

Kate agreed. "You feel anger and guilt, especially in suicide. Shock came first. I tried to figure out why — what went wrong, why didn't I see it" and other questions she asked herself.

She felt anger toward her son "because he deprived me of grandchildren, of his presence."

THESE FEELINGS are common and to be expected. According to a brochure, "After Suicide," distributed by the group, "There are basically three stages of a suicide bereavement. The first is numbness or shock. In the first stage, people will generally function almost mechanically, keeping their emotional distance from others in order to protect themselves from feeling the impact of the loss.

"The second stage is disorganization. People may feel lonely, depressed and tearful. They may have problems sleeping or eating and may feel sorry for themselves. They may even hallucinate. It is during this period when bereaved people will acknowledge the impact of the loss and will need someone to express their intimate feelings to.

"The final stage is reorganization. The bereaved will feel more comfortable with themselves and their feelings will not be as intense. In this third stage, people need encouragement to re-enter life's mainstream."

Different people recover at different speeds. Friends and loved ones often are at a loss as to what to say to someone who has had a suicide in the family. The brochure advises: "Understand and be patient with your friend. Do not ignore or overwhelm a person who has suffered a suicide in the family. NEVER BLAME ANYONE and do not make judgments about the family. Suicide was a decision made by the individual.

"Some people heal relatively quickly. Others do not..."

Kate added, "One of the things I learned from Alan is, don't give cliches — 'It's God's will' or 'I know how you feel.' Someone else can never know how you feel.

"A hug is all people normally need. I'm not a talker, I'm just there. (If) people need to talk, I'm a listener."

"Don't tell someone to 'get over it,'" Williams stressed. And "don't beat on yourself."

THE RECOVERY process takes some time, members said. The brochure from Survivors of Suicide promises: "But remember — there is hope ... and help. You may never get over the death itself, but you will overcome the grief. Proof of that can be witnessed in the Survivors of Suicide Support group where people who have suffered a loss by suicide now work to help others work out their grief."

Forgiveness and acceptance come with time, members said.

Jim said he attends group meetings "to work through my grief and accept the reality of what happened — to give validity to my loss, to ach me to accept it as fact.

"To accept the whole thing about all this. I'm not sure I'm fully there yet. I think there will always be a part of me not really accepting it all yet.

"I don't dwell on it but I attend this group to see if I can be of help to myself and someone just now going through what I did in the past."

Forgiveness and acceptance are a part of recovery from grief, no matter what the cause of the grief, Kate said. "People don't realize there are all kinds of grief," from death, divorce, retiring, children leaving home and many other reasons.

Her son, she said, "is always in my heart, kind of a part of me. He was my baby."

Survivors of Suicide support group meets at 7:30 p.m. the third Monday of each month at Memorial Hospital and Medical Center. For more information call 685-1566 or 694-3416.

Tasty selections can be on appetizer tray

Associated Press

To celebrate the holiday season, the California Milk Advisory Board has put together a selection of recipes for the appetizer tray.

Cheddar shortbread is prepared in just 30 minutes. A cookie cutter can quickly tailor the shortbread to any party theme. Use leaf-shaped cutouts, Christmas-tree or snowman-shaped cookie cutters. The shortbread is seasoned with cayenne pepper. This festive shortbread is excellent served warm or at room temperature with wine or Champagne.

Apple and brie fondue takes a minimal amount of preparation and results in a beautifully functional centerpiece warming over a small flame. Serve with baguette slices, crackers and green or red peppers. Pair with a beverage like Champagne or sparking apple cider.

Finally, cheese and potato bites offers a number of creative options. Besides a grainy mustard or pesto, try filling the potatoes with sun-dried tomatoes or a Greek olive paste. Mixing your cheeses is another way to subtly spice up the variety; a smoky gouda, mellow Swiss or dry Monterey Jack all work well. The potatoes can be prepared partially ahead of time by boiling and cutting them in half and storing them in the refrigerator.

CHEDDAR SHORTBREAD
2 cups shredded sharp Cheddar cheese (8 ounces shredded)
1½ cups all-purpose flour
¾ teaspoon dry mustard
¼ teaspoon ground cayenne pepper
½ cup (1 stick) butter, melted

Heat oven to 375 degrees. Toss together cheese, flour, mustard and cayenne. Mix in butter. Work mixture with your hands to form a dough. Add 1 tablespoon of water if dough feels dry.

On a floured surface, roll out half the dough to a thickness between ⅛- and ¼-inch. Cut out with cookie cutters. Place on ungreased baking sheets. Repeat with remaining dough. Bake in a 375-degree oven for 10 to 12 minutes until lightly browned on bottom. Remove to a rack to cool. Makes about 3 dozen.

Nutrition facts per serving (without variations): 67 cal., 2.1 g pro., 4.1 g carbo., 0.1 g dietary fiber, 4.7 g fat, 65 mg sodium, 13 mg chol.

APPLE AND BRIE FONDUE
2 pounds brie
⅓ cup apple juice plus ⅓ cup apple brandy (such as Calvados) or 1 cup apple juice
Ground nutmeg
Baguette slices or crackers
Apple slices

Remove the white rind from the edge of the cheese. Do not remove the crust that covers the bottom and top of the cheese. Cut up the cheese into small bits. In the top of a double boiler set over simmering water, combine cheese and apple liquid. Heat, stirring frequently, until cheese melts and is creamy. Pour into a chafing dish or fondue pot. Keep warm over low heat. Dust surface with nutmeg. Serve with baguette slices, crackers or apple slices. Makes 40 servings.

Nutrition facts per serving: 79 cal., 4.7 g pro., 0.8 g carbo., 0 g dietary fiber, 6.3 g fat, 143 mg sodium, 23 mg chol.

CHEESE AND POTATO BITES
16 small (1½- to 2-inch diameter) new potatoes
Salt and pepper
Grainy mustard or pesto
4 ounces gouda, Swiss or dry Monterey Jack cheese, cut into 32 small cubes

Cook potatoes in boiling water or cook in a microwave oven on high (100 percent power) until tender. Cool to room temperature.

Heat oven to 375 degrees. Slice potatoes in half. With a small melon baller or the tip of a spoon, scoop out a slight indentation from the center of each half. Cut a small slice off the bottom of potatoes so they'll stand upright on a baking sheet. Place potatoes on baking sheets. Season surface with salt and pepper. Place a small dab of mustard or pesto in indent; top with cheese cube. Heat in a 375-degree oven for 15 to 20 minutes, until cheese is bubbly and browned in spots. Serve warm. Makes 32 potatoes or 16 servings.

Nutrition facts per serving (two potatoes): 136 cal., 4.9 g pro., 25.3 g carbo., 2.7 g dietary fiber, 2.1 g fat, 122 mg sodium, 6 mg chol.

Healthy poinsettias can bloom throughout holidays

By James E. Walters

PHOENIX (AP) — To select the best poinsettias and keep them blooming through the holidays, concentrate on healthy-appearing plants with lush, green foliage, a balanced look and fully colored, expanded bracts.

Since the colorful bracts really aren't flowers but modified leaves, seeing green around their edges means they won't color much more in a home environment.

ALTHOUGH POINSETTIAS have for years been the country's best-selling potted plant, most are purchased in the six weeks before Christmas.

That factor puts a premium on the selection process this time of year. As a general rule, the larger and more developed the plant, the higher the cost. But since the estimated 50 million annual sales are so concentrated in time, bargains will be there if you select wisely.

The true flowers are the little yellow or green berries, called cyathia, found in the center of the colored bracts. Be certain a tight, fresh-looking cyathia is in each center.

The plant also should not appear damaged. If it looks wilted, this is a possible sign of irreversible root rot.

If the growing medium seems overwet, it's safer to make a different selection.

Stems should be strong and stiff.

Look also for an abundance of dark, rich-green foliage that is dense, plentiful and unmarred to the soil line. This is a good indication of healthy root systems.

Be careful of plants displayed in paper, plastic or mesh sleeves. Plants left too long in shipping sleeves develop a disorder characterized by contorted and droopy stems, leaves and bracts.

ABOUT 90 PERCENT of the world's poinsettias get their start as cuttings inside the 35 acres of greenhouses at the Paul Ecke Ranch in Encinatas, Calif. Paul Ecke Sr. is credited with developing the first indoor poinsettia in the 1920s; grandson Paul Ecke III now heads the operation. The care and selection recommendations are those of Ecke experts.

Eckespoint Freedom Red is by far the best-selling red, according to Ecke. It has deep-red bracts, dark-green foliage and is long lasting.

Nonred colors have gained in popularity in recent years. But a lot depends on where you live, and Ecke says most are sold on the East or West coasts.

Pink Peppermint, a speckled pink; Lemon Drop, a bright yellow, and Freedom Jingle Bells, with light pink flecks on dark red bracts, are among the nonred favorites.

New for this season, but in limited supply, is Eckespoint Monet, named for the French impressionist painter. It has multicolored bracts and received the Society of American Florists' highest honor for a new variety. Ecke says greater quantities will be available next year.

PROTECT ANY POINSETTIA when bringing it home. Chilling winds or temperatures below 50 degrees Fahrenheit are potential killers. A large paper bag is enough protection for a short trip in a car.

Then start with a thorough watering. Saturate the growing area until water seeps through the drain hole into a saucer. Discard the excess water. Thereafter, check daily and water only when the growing medium feels dry to the touch.

Poinsettias need about six hours of bright, indirect light daily. A good gauge is when the room's natural light is sufficient to read fine print.

A sunny spot near a window is great. Avoid hot afternoon sun directly on bracts. Keep plants away from drafts, radiators and hot air registers.

It's best if temperatures do not exceed 72 degrees in the day and 60 degrees at night. In mild climates, such as Phoenix, they often stay outside on a sheltered patio during the day.

The common name honors Joel R. Poinsett, U.S. ambassador to Mexico in the 1820s who found them growing in the countryside there. The botanical name is Euphorbia pulcherrima.

DON'T BE CONCERNED about them being poisonous. That was disproved years ago. But the sap of all euphorbias is irritating to some people.

Like fruitcake and eggnog, poinsettias seem to disappear after the holidays. But with proper care it's simple to keep them thriving year after year.

In March or April, when the colorful bracts turn to muddy green, cut the plant back to about eight inches. New growth appears in late May and they can go outside in a protected area after night temperatures warm. Or keep inside near a sunny window. Repot as needed. Fertilize every two to three weeks. Water as usual.

They will color again only after being sheltered from all light for about 14 hours a day (long-night conditions). So place them in a warm, dark closet for about 40 days starting in October.

Plant height and pot size are not significant in themselves, say Ecke experts. However, they suggest looking for plants that are balanced and attractive from all angles and describe the relationship between plant height and pot size as critical.

"A plant that is 18 inches in height in a 4-inch pot will appear too tall and rangy, but in a 6-inch pot will look just right," suggests Ecke. "In general, the best height range for a good quality 6-inch, branched-plant pot will be approximately 15 to 19 inches."

Chestnuts are part of holidays

By Nancy Byal
Associated Press

"Chestnuts roasting on an open fire." The lyrics of this popular yuletide carol evoke visions of crackling fires, stockings hung by the hearthside, good food and good friends. Yet, even though the song is almost as familiar as the Christmas story itself, few people today have actually tried roasting chestnuts.

Missing out on toasty warm chestnuts means passing on a perennial holiday favorite. Fresh, unshelled chestnuts, long a Christmas tradition in Europe, largely became associated wfth the holidays out of practicality. This was the only time they were available. Their mellow, buttery flavor came to signify the coming festivities.

Today, many large supermarkets stock fresh chestnuts during the holiday season. Italian and Oriental markets also are likely sources. Select heavy, solid nuts with smooth, leathery, mahogany-colored shells. Avoid those that are shriveled or too light for their size, indicating nuts that are dry.

To store fresh chestnuts, keep the unshelled nuts in the refrigerator in a paper bag for up to two weeks. You can also store them in your freezer for several months. Discard any moldy chestnuts and wash fresh chestnuts before roasting and using them in recipes.

When roasted, the meat of fresh chestnuts has a sweet, starchy flavor and a moist, crumbly texture. Roasting chestnuts over an open fire is romanticized in the song, but roasting them in the oven is probably a little easier for most cooks. To oven-roast fresh chestnuts, cut an X on the flat side of each chestnut. Place them in a shallow baking pan and roast in a 400-degree oven for 15 minutes, tossing occasionally. Peel the chestnuts while they're still warm. The shells become hard and brittle as they cool, making them difficult to peel.

Because fresh chestnuts have a short season, you may find yourself looking for alternatives when you're using chestnuts in recipes. You can purchase canned chestnuts year-round, either whole or pureed. Chestnut puree makes an easy filling for cookies or cakes. Also available are dried chestnuts and marrons glaces (whole candied chestnuts from France). Dried chestnuts will keep indefinitely in an airtight container in the refrigerator or freezer.

Canned whole chestnuts can be substituted for an equal amount of roasted chestnuts in recipes. Dried chestnuts must be boiled first. To get the equivalent of 1 cup of fresh chestnuts, start with about 3 ounces of the dried form. Cover with water and simmer for 1½ to 2 hours, or until the nuts are completely rehydrated. Drain well and use as directed for fresh chestnuts.

Cajun deep-fried turkey is moist, juicy

By Ann Criswell
Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — Cajun Deep-Fried Turkey is fast becoming a holiday tradition here. Despite the potential danger in lowering an unwieldy turkey into a small vat of boiling oil, fans of the method say it's worth the risk, because the turkey comes out moist and juicy, and deep-frying cuts hours off the cooking time.

The turkeys are injected with a spicy marinade, then plunged into a boiling pot of oil and deep-fried.

Use water to measure the capacity of your deep fryer, if you are unsure how much oil will be needed.

A heavy wire coat hanger, hooked to the wire band that secures the turkey legs, will help when lowering and lifting the turkey from the fryer. Use a sturdy cooking spoon, tongs or a large fork for extra support; don't depend on the wire band alone, as it can loosen during frying.

You can inject strained, bottled Italian salad dressing for the marinade or use the Cajun Injector, a kit that includes a 16-ounce jar of marinade and a syringe-type injector. The kit is available at some supermarkets and food specialty shops.

Most experts suggest choosing a turkey that is no larger than 12 pounds. Reece Williams, who helped develop the Cajun Injector, said it's better to buy a fresh turkey than the prebasted type, because prebasted turkeys are saltier.

Sprinkle Cajun seasonings over the entire bird and inside the cavity. Inject the marinade into the turkey thighs, legs and breast. Use about 1 ounce of marinade per pound of turkey.

Heat the oil to 350 degrees in a 40-quart cooker, such as a propane or butane cooker with a steamer basket and cover.

Carefully lower the turkey into the oil and deep-fry 3½ minutes per pound, maintaining oil at 350 degrees. Remove the turkey carefully. Makes 12 to 15 servings.

Before removing the pot from the burner, let the oil cool 1 hour after the turkey has been removed and the burner is turned off.

New camcorders easier to use, sophisticated

By Rick Sammon
Associated Press

I fondly remember my first video camcorder, which was purchased back in 1976. This full-size VHS model, the only one available at the time, took pretty good home videos, which I've shared time and time again with my family and friends.

This state-of-the-art (for 1976) camcorder, however, had a few drawbacks.

First of all, it was big, bulky and weighed about 4 pounds. Videotaping required me to balance the camcorder on my shoulder, which felt sore after recording a day of fun in the sun.

Secondly, the picture quality was acceptable, but paled in comparison to the broadcast and cable images received on my television set.

Third, the focus system didn't work well in low light. And, finally, the sound quality was acceptable at best.

Today, I have nothing to complain about, thanks to advancements in optics and electronics.

Camcorders are palm-size and weigh about a pound. The picture quality with the two leading formats — VHS-C and Hi-8 — is near broadcast quality. Autofocusing is faster and more accurate in dimly lit areas. And, stereo sound adds a lifelike dimension to home videos.

If you have shied away from shooting home videos because you don't feel you have the technical expertise to operate a camcorder, fear not. Most models are fully automatic (with manual override) and offer point-and-shoot convenience.

For special situations, there are a few accessories that can expand the capabilities of your camcorder.

For low-light situations, a video light will bring out the true color of your subject. A polarizing filter can make a sky a deeper blue and highlight white clouds. Accessory lenses can extend the wide-angle and telephoto range of your zoom lens. And a tripod will steady your camera when shooting at the telephoto zoom setting. It will also let you get into your own videos.

For the advanced amateur videographer, there are also some unique accessories.

Videotape editors let you edit your tapes, add sound, and even titles like "Our Summer Vacation." Accessory microphones provide even a higher quality sound. And video transfer units let you transfer your snapshots and slides to videotape without any noticeable loss in quality.

Among the newest accessories introduced for the Consumer Electronics Show, is the Sharp Viewc mteleport, a table-top device for the Sharp Viewcam that enables transmission of both recorded and real-time full-color still video images over ordinary phone lines.

With this accessory, important events can be shared with loved ones hundreds or thousands of miles away — immediately.

You probably can see the accessories at your local camera store. If not, your dealer can order them for you.

Associated Press

Escape post-Thanksgiving doldrums with these delicate, yet savory, recipes. Leftover turkey is used as an ingredient in turkey tea sandwiches and chopped turkey salad. Serve the tea sandwiches with bowls of roasted butternut squash and shiitake mushroom soup. Oven-roasting the butternut squash so intensifies its buttery flavor that no enriching cream needs to be added.

The chopped turkey salad is made with a blend of dried prosciutto, tomatoes, olives, scallions, garbanzo beans and slivered iceberg lettuce and fresh basil. The recipes were developed for the Butterball Turkey Talk-Line (800)-323-4848.

For further inspiration, Kevin Crafts' "The Little Book of Leftovers" (Crown Trade Paperbacks, $10) suggests ways to reinvent leftover Thanksgiving turkey, day-old bread, overripe bananas — and much more. His recipe for "The Inevitable Tetrazzini" features leftover turkey in a pasta and wild mushroom extravaganza. Leftover mashed potatoes are transformed into mashed potato pancakes; mashed sweet potatoes become an ingredient in muffins flavored with red peppers, onion and bacon.

Crafts has worked as a food stylist for House Beautiful, Elle and Glamour magazines. He is the author of "Desperate Measures: 90 Unintimidating Recipes for the Domestically Inept," published by Clarkson Potter (1993).

TURKEY TEA SANDWICHES

6 tablespoons unsalted butter, softened
1½-inch piece fresh ginger, peeled and finely minced
12 slices fresh white sandwich bread, trimmed of crusts
¼ cup pine nuts, lightly toasted
¼ cup dried cranberries
½ pound cooked turkey breast meat, thinly sliced
Lettuce leaves or sprigs of watercress

Spread about 1½ teaspoons of the ginger butter on one side of each of the 12 pieces of bread. Sprinkle the buttered sides with a scattering of the pine nuts and dried cranberries. Arrange the sliced turkey on top of the six of the bread slices. Top with a lettuce leaf or sprigs of watercress. Sandwich together by topping with the remaining six slices of bread. Cut each sandwich into four triangles; serve at once. Makes 6 servings.

CHOPPED TURKEY SALAD WITH BALSAMIC VINAIGRETTE

FOR THE BALSAMIC VINEGAR:
2 cloves garlic, minced
1 tablespoon Dijon-style mustard
3 tablespoons balsamic vinegar
⅓ cup olive oil
1 tablespoon dried, mixed Italian herbs
Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste

FOR THE CHOPPED SALAD:
3 cups diced leftover roast turkey, ½-inch
½ pound thinly sliced prosciutto, cut into ½-inch pieces
½ pound thinly sliced Swiss cheese, cut into ½-inch pieces
1 cup pitted black olives, sliced
15-ounce can garbanzo beans, rinsed and drained
1 bunch scallions, trimmed and minced
6 plum tomatoes, seeded and diced
½ cup shredded fresh basil
6 cups shredded iceberg lettuce

TO PREPARE THE VINAIGRETTE: Combine the garlic, mustard and vinegar in a small bowl. Gradually whisk in the olive oil, then season the dressing with Italian herbs, salt and pepper.

TO PREPARE THE SALAD: Combine and toss all of the ingredients in a large mixing bowl. Toss with enough balsamic vinagriette to coat evenly. The salad may be served at once or refrigerated and served within 24 hours of preparing. Makes 10 servings.

Nutrition information per serving: 383 cal., 26 g pro., 27 g fat, 10 g carbo., 617 mg sodium, 68 mg chol.

ROASTED BUTTERNUT SQUASH AND SHIITAKE MUSHROOM SOUP

4 tablespoons olive oil
1 butternut squash, 2½- to 3-pounds
1 tablespoon unsalted butter
1 medium onion, minced
2 fat leeks, trimmed and minced
6 cups chicken stock
Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste

FOR THE GARNISH:
2 tablespoons olive oil
½ pound shiitake mushrooms, stemmed and caps thinly sliced

Preheat oven to 350 degrees. Drizzle 2 tablespoons of the olive oil over the bottom of a 13x9-inch roasting pan. Slice the squash in half lengthwise; remove the seeds and any stringy pulp with a spoon. Place the squash halves, cut sides down, in the roasting pan. Roast until the squash is tender, 50 minutes to 1 hour.

Meanwhile, heat the remaining 2 tablespoons olive oil with the butter in a soup pot over medium-high heat. Add the onion and leeks. Saute until quite soft, 12 to 15 minutes. Pour in the chicken stock. Scoop out the roasted squash pulp, discard the skins and add the pulp to the soup. Let all simmer together for 15 to 20 minutes. Puree the soup in batches in a blender or food processor. Return to a clean pot; season to taste with salt and pepper. Keep warm over low heat.

For the mushroom garnish, heat the oil in a medium skillet over medium-high heat. Add the mushrooms; saute until tender, 7 to 10 minutes. Stir the mushrooms into the soup; serve hot. Makes 6 servings.

Nutrition facts per serving: 285 cal., 6 g pro., 17 g fat, 31 g carbo., 1,004 mg sodium, 5 mg chol.

Celebrate Hanukkah with homemade Rugelach

Associated Press

Homemade rugelach adds a sweet taste to Hanukkah festivities. Kids can help roll the rugelach into shape. For a special touch, sprinkle sugar and cinnamon over the top.

RUGELACH

1 cup (2 sticks) butter or margarine, softened
1 package (8 ounces) cream cheese, softened
2¼ cups all-purpose flour
Cocoa and Nut Filling (recipe follows)
1 tablespoon butter or margarine, melted
2 tablespoons sugar
¼ teaspoon ground cinnamon

Prepare Cocoa and Nut Filling. Set aside.

In a large mixer bowl, beat softened butter and cream cheese until blended and smooth. Gradually add flour, beating on low speed of electric mixer until well blended.

Divide dough into three equal parts; wrap each in plastic wrap, pressing lightly to form small circle. Refrigerate 3 to 4 hours or until firm enough to roll.

On lightly floured surface, roll one piece of dough into a 9-inch circle (keeping remaining dough in the refrigerator). Cut circle into 12 wedges.

Place about 1 teaspoonful of the filling at wide end of each wedge; spread about three-fourths of the way up the wedge. Starting at wide end, roll toward the point. Place cookies, point sides down, on ungreased cookie sheet. Brush with melted butter. Stir together sugar and cinnamon; sprinkle over the top of cookies. Bake in a 375-degree oven for 15 to 20 minutes or until golden. Remove from cookie sheet to wire rack. Cool completely. Repeat procedure with remaining dough and filling. Makes 3 dozen cookies.

By Nancy Byal
Associated Press

Another challenge is making a crust that isn't soggy. Solve both problems by baking the cheesecake in a crumb-coated ring mold.

CREAMY CHEESECAKE RING

2 tablespoons finely crushed graham crackers (1 or 2 squares)
1 cup milk
½ teaspoon ground ginger
3 8-ounce packages cream cheese, cut up
4½-ounce package custard dessert mix
1½ teaspoons finely shredded lemon peel

Generously butter a 6-cup microwave-safe ring mold. Coat the mold with crushed graham crackers. Set aside. In a 2-cup glass measure combine milk and ginger. Cook, uncovered, on 100 percent power (high) for 2½ to 3½ minutes or until steaming and foamy but not boiling (about 180 degrees), stirring once. Set aside.

In a 2-quart casserole soften cream cheese, uncovered, on high for 1½ to 3 minutes, stirring once. Stir in custard mix, sugar and lemon peel. Gradually stir in milk mixture. Cook, uncovered, on high for 5 minutes, stirring after every minute.

Spoon the mixture into the prepared mold. Cover the surface with clear plastic wrap. Chill in the refrigerator for 4 hours or overnight. To serve, unmold onto a serving platter. Makes 12 servings.

Nutrition facts per serving: 271 cal., 21 g total fat, 215 mg sodium, 18 g carbo., 5 g pro. Daily values: 17 percent vit. A, 1 percent vit. C, 7 percent calcium, 4 percent iron.

Stress doesn't have to ruin the holiday season

By Cathy Spaulding
Associated Press

PLANO, Texas — As halls get decked with boughs of holly and other decorations, the time around Thanksgiving, Hanukkah and Christmas is getting to be more than a season to be jolly. 'Tis also a season to be broke, stressed-out, hung-over, depressed, hacked-off at relatives, dazed and confused.

But people can take the daze out of the holidays, financial and mental health experts say.

Setting priorities on the holiday budget can not only save money, but also some sanity, said Sherry Watson of Consumer Credit Counseling of McKinney.

"Most people wait until the last minute," Watson said. "They don't set a holiday budget, they just wait and go."

"On the list, put down who you want to buy for, how much you want to spend, how much cash you have to pay for it and will the person given the gift really use or appreciate it," she said.

Watson said a gift-giver also should not equate expense with quality. The focus should be "not on the cost of the gift, but that someone thought enough of you to give something," Watson said. "You have to look at the sincerity of the gift, not the price tag."

Watson acknowledged this list could change from year to year. For example, a newlywed couple might consider who to add or remove from their gift list.

"New couples especially need to set priorities," she said. "Cousins usually are not priorities."

"You should ask why you are giving," she said. "Are you giving something because it is expected? It is because someone started a tradition? A lot of people really don't need anything, but no one is willing to break the (tradition) mold."

Instead of spending money for a gift, "maybe we should consider the quality of time rather than the cost of the present," she said.

Watson also advised against relying on credit during the holiday season. That way a person can avoid the temptations of spending too much money, she said.

Family and social gatherings are no longer as simple as going "over the river and through the woods to grandmother's house."

"Family gatherings are important as long as they are not overdone," said Dr. Betty Muns of the American Association for Marriage and Family Therapy.

Muns said that in a mobile society, time with the family is hard to work into a holiday schedule. Newlywed couples especially can face a quandary of who goes where, she said.

One way young families can work this out would be to visit one set of relatives on Christmas Eve and another on Christmas Day, Muns said. Of course, families also want to set aside time for themselves, she said.

"The hope is that they can make a fair arrangement," Muns said. "The young families could change (patterns) each year if they can arrange Christmas celebrations at different times."

Sometimes loosening family ties can be hard, though, she said. The adage "A son is your son 'til he takes a wife, a daughter is your daughter the rest of your life" could still have a ring of truth, she said.

"Typically, yes, it is the woman's family" who hosts the family get-togethers, and not just during the holidays, Muns said.

"And usually Mama will try to have holidays as long as possible at her house," she said.

For couples with families far away, "there needs to be communication between them," especially when children are involved, she said.

"There are an awful lot of things to buy and things to do," she said. "The calendar is on overdrive."

Muns said that when she counsels families on holiday stress, she asks them: 'What do you want to do?"

"You're obviously going to have to make priorities," she said. "Make your decision in line of family size and what you feel you can do."

Muns stressed the benefit of planning ahead and talking to family members about what they want and what they can do.

For example, one way to ease the emotional and economic strain of buying something for everybody would be for each family member to draw a name and give a gift just to that person, she said.

"Take three or four important things and build around them: your family, your job, your loved ones, for example," he said. "Look at the big picture, what is really important?"

Also, "when it is a temporary situation, like the turkey burning, remember these things will pass. Think of how you will remember it a year from now," Koeningsberg said.

Finally, "learn when to say no gracefully," he said.

The psychiatrist compared holidays to running a race. He advised that instead of gunning it 100 percent like a 100-yard dash, pace yourself for the long run, as in a marathon.

Baby sitters now called nannies

By Erma Bombeck

They used to be called baby sitters or child watchers. (I called them wardens for high-risk inmates.) Now they're called nannies.

Bombeck

Baby boomers wouldn't think of having a "woman who sits with the kids." They have a nanny, which conjures up visions of a woman with a white starched cap, a cape and sturdy English shoes. (A Mrs. Doubtfire who is a Jenny Craig graduate.)

In reality, they wear sandals without hose, jeans and T-shirts, and speak not one word of English.

I don't know what the difference is between a "sitter" and a "nanny" except one knows how to turn on the washer and the other one is a great way to pick up a new language.

If nannies are illegal, they can kill you politically. Ask Zoe Baird, who was nominated for attorney general when it was discovered she had a nanny working for her without legal papers. It was one of Janet Reno's first qualifications, "I do not have a nanny."

In California, candidate Michael Huffington said his wife did the hiring of an illegal nanny, but he had to take the responsibility for it. Within hours, Dianne Feinstein came forward and said she had a nanny, but she was satisfied her papers were in order when she hired her.

Suddenly, hiring an illegal has become the crime of the century. You can smoke pot, fool around, cash checks at a Washington bank for which you have no funds, sell arms to the enemy or spy for the Russians, but if you have a nanny who doesn't have a green card serving your kid oatmeal, you're dead in the water.

It's semantics. I can remember when we hired a cleaning woman to scrub the bathroom. Then she was called a maid, but she did the same thing. She's worked her way up to domestic engineer, but she still works for minimum wage. If a child enters the picture, she is elevated to nanny.

In an effort to class up the job of raising children, there is now the au pair. This is French for a woman who spends the summer in America sitting with children. If she overstays her visa, hiring an au pair may become the new crime of the '90s.

It's hard to find someone who will do for minimum wage what American women have been doing free all their lives. The cost of a sitter often exceeds what the mother is getting paid in the workplace.

Hiring an illegal is lawfully wrong. The law should be enforced. But isn't it ironic that you can store an arsenal of guns on the shelf in the bedroom closet, but you can't have a nanny tending your child without a green card? Which one presents the greatest danger?

By Deborah A. Benge

Benge

The pecan tree is the area's most popular nut tree and a very important landscape tree with home owners. In fact, you would be hard pressed to find one residential block that didn't have at least one pecan tree on it. Since it is such a popular tree, let's take a look at some of the questions concerning pecans this time of year.

Question? My pecans are sprouting while still in the tree. Why is this happening and what can I do?

Answer: Pre-harvest germination or sprouting in the shuck is a disorder often seen in highly vigorous tress. This premature sprouting can occur anytime after the kernel is formed and moisture levels are high inside the tree. The higher the moisture is inside the tree, the more likely pre-harvest sprouting is. Watering pecan trees up to the point of shuck split rather than later in the season can help reduce the amount of sprouting seen.

Question? What is shuck split and why is it so important?

Answer: Shuck split is when the green shucks surrounding the pecan begin to split open at the suture lines. Start checking for shuck split in early October by pressing near the end of several pecans and looking for signs of opening or splitting.

For the grower, shuck split can be used to indicate when to stop watering. Late summer and early fall are critical times for pecan trees. A water stress occurring at this time can cause problems with nut filling and shucks opening. It is very important to water trees right up to shuck split so pecan kernels fill and shucks will mature and open properly.

Question? While harvesting pecans, I've noticed that several nuts have black patches of shuck sticking to them. The shuck looks hollowed out and I have seen a small white worm with a brown head. What is this?

Answer: You are seeing the damage caused by the hickory shuckworm, a moth whose immature form feeds in pecan shucks. There are several generations per summer, but it is the last generation that causes problems. Eggs laid in August hatch and larva feed inside the shucks. This last generations of the summer injures the shucks so that filling of the pecan kernel is impaired and the shuck sticks to the pecan shell. So, yields are affected and harvest is made more difficult by the insect.

Reduce next year's population by making sure you clean up or disk under any shucks remaining after harvest. The worm overwinters in the shucks, so by destroying the remaining shuck you reduce next year's population of hickory shuckworm. In severe cases, treat trees with a recommended cover spray in mid-August or at half shell hardening.

Question? I have two pecan trees and don't know what variety they are. How can I find out the variety names?

Answer: A real easy way is to mark your calendar for Dec. 5 and 6 for the Tri-County Pecan Show to be at the King's Way Center Mall, on the corner of Midkiff and Illinois. During the Tri-County Pecan and Foods Show there will be several "pecan experts" on hand to help you identify your pecan variety and answer any questions you might have about pecan culture. Bring nuts, leaves, branches or other samples to get help and advice from knowledgeable pecan growers.

Question? What is the purpose of a pecan show and how can I find out more about one?

Answer: Pecan shows have been a strong tradition in Texas with many county shows. Shows give people an opportunity to see how their pecans measure up with other local pecan production. Winning samples go on to compete with regional and state pecans. Comparison of yields is helpful to growers in identifying possible shortcomings in their pecan care practices.

Evaluating pecan varieties is a long and involved process, but the pecan show system of Texas provides valuable data to Texas Agricultural Extension Service pecan specialists. This information is in turn given to commercial and home growers to improve decision making. Regional yields, bearing habits, pest problems and other factors can be revealed by this method of data collection as well. So, the benefits of the local pecan show are much more than what meets the eye.

If you are from Midland, Ector, Glasscock or Upton county, make plans to enter your pecan varieties in the Tri-County Pecan and Foods Show Dec. 4-6. Bring a sample of 40 nuts per variety by the County Extension office of the counties listed. Entries must be received by 4 p.m. Dec. 2. For more information on how and where to get pecans entered, call Boyd Reece at 684-7188.

The foods show is an important part of many pecans shows. If you cook using pecans, be sure to enter your favorite foods made with pecans. You don't have to grow your own to be eligible. For more information, call 684-7188.

Question? When I crack my pecans they look almost white in color and they aren't crisp. What has gone wrong?

Answer: Actually, nothing. Early harvested pecans — pecans picked right out of the shucks — are still green. They merely need time to cure in a dry, airy location up off the ground. Meanwhile, the internal moisture levels will drop, color will turn a golden brown (hopefully) and pecans will become crisp.

Freezes help with this curing process by drying shucks out and facilitating pecan drop. At the time of this answer, our fall weather hasn't provided these conditions.

As soon as possible, harvest should begin. Limbs should be shaken to assist in the nut drop. Gather pecans ASAP so you can preserve the quality of your pecans. Allow them to dry for a couple of weeks in an open but protected area. After pecans have dried and cured, use or store in refrigerator or freezer.

If you have a question about pecans or other horticulture plants, contact the Midland County Extension Service for help and information.

Deborah Benge is the extension horticulture agent for the Texas Agricultural Extension Service in Midland and Ector counties.

DEAR ABBY

Ties to son's family are cut because they loosely bind

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: My wife and I have just made the heartbreaking decision to sever all ties with our adult son (I'll call him Mike). This was done with much regret, but we could see no other way.

Van Buren

Mike went through a bitter divorce years ago. There were accusations of infidelity on both sides. His wife was not interested in having a family. As a result, he is very sour on marriage and has vowed never to wed again.

Mike has been living with a woman with whom he has fathered two children, and she has just announced that she is pregnant again. Mike's mother is in poor health, and this is putting her in her grave.

We asked him to please stop coming by or calling our home. We also made it plain that we do not wish to be informed when the new baby arrives.

We respect his decision not to repeat the pain of a failed marriage; however, we think it is wrong for him to continue having babies with a woman who is not his wife. We feel it is also wrong for her to continue to get pregnant, knowing how he feels about commitment.

I have known people who have had ONE child out of wedlock and made the best of it — but for two adults to bring THREE illegitimate children into the world is cruel, selfish and irresponsible. How much effort does it take to slip on a condom, or swallow a birth control pill?

I have told Mike that his children will be excluded from our will and family tree.

Also, I am worried about the state of these illegitimate children's souls. After all, they were conceived in sin. — THROUGH WITH MIKE

DEAR THROUGH: How sad that you could not express your disappointment and disapproval without writing off your son and his family. If they have formed a stable unit, and the children are provided for, they qualify as "family," whether their union is blessed by church and state or not.

You may not approve of the circumstances of their birth, but his children ARE your grandchildren. And to exclude them from your will and your family tree is cold and heartless. They have done nothing wrong.

Worry not about their blessed little souls; come Judgment Day, you will have to account for your own.

DEAR ABBY: As a former infantryman, I enjoyed the letter about the GI who, while washing himself in the field (naked as a jaybird), was surprised by two truckloads of Army nurses. When one of them shouted, "Look at the tan on that blond kid," the GI covered his FACE with a washcloth.

After chuckling for a few minutes, I was a bit dismayed by the present state of affairs.

If the above scenario were to take place today, the "blond kid" would probably claim sexual harassment, whereupon the nurse would face a court-martial, and everyone who laughed would be required to undergo sensitivity training. — R.B. McM., VISTA, CALIF.

DEAR ABBY: I have read your column for many years, often starting my day with you. You have always been a wonderful source of information. I hope that you will find this a worthy topic to share with your readers:

Every day we receive telephone calls from frightened, sad and desperate people who are dealing with the terminal illness of a friend or loved one. We are able to help.

We are Hospice. Contrary to what many believe, Hospice is not a destination. We are a service, provided by more than 1,800 affiliated Medicare-licensed agencies dedicated to the care of dying people and their families. When all avenues of cure have been exhausted, the terminally ill, their families and physicians turn to us. Hospice doctors, nurses, counselors, aides and volunteers work to ensure that patients live comfortably at home until death. Professional and skilled caregivers attend to the physical, psychological and spiritual needs of both the patient and the family.

So what's the problem? Not everyone knows that Hospice exists. Both the public and the medical community deserve to know what Hospice offers. Some important features:

1. We work with the patient's doctor, taking orders and directions from him or her.

2. All available and appropriate techniques to control pain and other symptoms are applied.

3. Most Hospice care is done at home. (The great majority of our patients live and die in their own homes.)

4. The cost is covered by Medicare and many private insurance companies.

5. Hospice provides care without regard to age, diagnosis or ability to pay during the final months of life.

6. Hospice specializes exclusively in the care of dying people.

By facilitating at-home care, Hospice saves money and keeps the patient in the environment of his or her choice. The care is both cost-effective and compassionate.

As the National Hospice Organization puts it, "Hospice is a special kind of caring." And as one Hospice patient puts it, "While Hospice cannot add days to your life — they can absolutely add life to your days."

DEAR JANE: While Hospice is, indeed, a special kind of caring, it is also a very worthwhile concept and one about which everyone should be familiar. I'm delighted to help spread the word.

Readers request recipes for Lunch Box's Mango Curried Chicken Salad, Taco Bell's hot sauce

By Beverly Bundy
N.Y. Times News Service

Janet Y. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas, has misplaced her recipe for Almond Joy cake. That recipe follows, but first a word of warning.

This cake is the only recipe I've ever tested that wasn't completely devoured by our copy editors at the "Star-Telegram" (well, there was that cheesecake from the Biosphere 2 cookbook). That says something, because no one has an appetite like a newspaper copy editor; it must be in the job description.

"Must know the fine points of grammar and write sharp, factual headlines. Must also love to eat."

ALMOND JOY CAKE

1 (18-ounce) box chocolate cake mix with pudding

Prepare cake according to package instructions. Bake in 11½x17½-inch or 13x17-inch pan according to package instructions.

FILLING:
1 cup evaporated milk
1 cup sugar
1 (10-ounce) package large marshmallows
1 (14-ounce) package flaked coconut

TOPPING:
1½ cups sugar
½ cup evaporated milk
1 (12-ounce) package chocolate chips
1 stick margarine
1½ cups toasted almonds, chopped

FROM SWEET TO SAVORY

LUNCH BOX'S MANGO CURRIED CHICKEN SALAD

5 to 6 cups fresh broccoli florets
4 to 5 pounds (including bones) chicken breasts, poached and chilled
1 large red bell pepper, seeded, deveined and chopped

MANGO CURRY SAUCE:
1 8½-ounce) jar mango chutney
1½ tablespoons curry powder
1½ cups mayonnaise

Chop chutney in food processor 15 to 20 seconds using on/off switch. Combine with remaining sauce ingredients in a bowl and blend well. Cover and chill.

Bring large pot of salted water to a rapid boil. Add broccoli and cook until crisp tender (about 1 minute). Drain, then place in cold water to prevent further cooking. Drain again and pat dry.

Serves 6-8.

FROM THE CHAIN GANG

Over the years, I've gotten phone calls from readers wanting the recipe for the taco sauce served at Taco Bell. Those calls have always puzzled me a bit, because we have such wonderful salsas in the grocery stores. At any rate, in the new "More Top Secret Recipes" by Todd Wilbur (Plume, $9.95), the recipe cloner comes up with a recipe for Taco Bell's creation. Note that this is not Taco Bell's recipe but one that Wilbur developed to taste like it.

TACO BELL-LIKE-HOT TACO SAUCE

1 (6-ounce) can tomato paste
3 cups water
2 teaspoons cayenne pepper
1½ tablespoons chili powder
2½ teaspoons salt
2 teaspoons cornstarch
2 teaspoons distilled white vinegar
1 tablespoon minced dried onion
2 tablespoons canned jalapeno slices, chopped fine

Combine tomato paste with water in saucepan and place over medium heat. Stir until smooth.

Add all remaining ingredients. Heat mixture to boiling. Continue to stir about 3 minutes and remove from heat. Let stand until cool, then put in tightly sealed container and refrigerate. This will last for 1 to 2 months.

Yields 3½ cups.

REQUESTS

■ A Fort Worth reader requests the recipe for the molasses pie that was served in the old Fair department store in downtown Fort Worth.

■ Another reader would like the recipe for ambrosia cake. She remembers that the cake used a white cake mix, orange gelatin, crushed pineapple, powdered sugar and gelatin.

Napkins lend an aura to dining

Hearst News Service

Napkins lend an aura to a meal and are as essential to a fine holiday table as candlelight and crystal.

For centuries the charm of a well-laid table has captivated writers, Mary Forsell wrote in an article in the current issue of Victoria, and she quotes Guillaume de Rebreviettes, who in the 17th century marveled at a table with "napkins disguised as several types of fruit and birds."

"I use my napkins whenever possible — not just during the holidays and on special occasions," said Pennsylvania collector Marlene Harris, who is determined to keep the fine art of napkin presentation alive.

"Perfectly folded, they send a message to guests that you took the time to extend a gracious welcome."

With some pride, Francoise de Bonneville, author of "The Book of Fine Linen," reports that her French homeland was one of the first countries to adopt the table napkin.

In fact, napkins as we know them today date back to 15th century Reims, a city lgendary for its luxurious cloth. The court of Charles VII instituted a royal linen office to ensure that only the most glorious touailles — or serviettes, as they were later called — graced the infant monarch's table.

Until at least the mid-18th century, table napkins were much larger than we now use, in part because they often covered the entire body. They were knotted about the neck, and in some households were even shared by adjacent diners.

Christopher Lehmann-Haupt
N.Y. Times News Service

You might not think an 11½-inch vinyl doll would be worth a 326-page book. But as M.G. Lord, a former columnist and present book reviewer for Newsday, makes clear in "Forever Barbie: The Unauthorized Biography of a Real Doll," her subject inspires passion.

Just consider the "Sandusky Slasher," who, Ms. Lord reports, "within six months between 1992 and 1993 cut the breasts and mutilated the crotches of two dozen Barbie dolls at three stores in Sandusky, Ohio."

The unknown perpetrator inspired an FBI profile describing him as "an organized and controlled individual who is probably dominated in a relationship with a woman, possibly his mother," although Ms. Lord herself, based on the considerable psychological expertise she acquired while researching "Forever Barbie," suspects that the slasher was a woman.

Or consider Ms. Lord's own assessment of her doll: "Barbie is also a space-age fertility icon, a totem of an ancient matriarchal power. In the dark, primal part of our brains where we process primitive archetypes, she is Ur-woman.

AS AN ICON, she has come to represent not merely 'American' women or consumer capitalist women, but a female principle that defies national, ethnic and regional boundaries."

Where did this mythic creature originate? Like so many post-World War II products, in Germany and Japan. As Ms. Lord reports, Barbie was born in the mid-1950s as a knockoff of Bild Lilli, a German cartoon manikin sold principally in tobacco stores as "a sort of three-dimensional pinup."

Almost immediately, Ms. Lord observes, Barbie became a Rorschach test of attitudes toward femininity. People saw a message in what the author calls her "drag queen's body: broad shoulders and narrow hips, which are quintessentially male, and exaggerated breasts, which aren't."

EVEN DRAG queens adopted Barbie as a model. But the practical explanation for her figure was that to keep her in human proportion with clothes on, her waist had to be slim enough to accommodate multiple layers of fabric.

Once the Handlers had their doll, they turned to a pioneer of motivational research, Ernest Dichter — a hero of Vance Packard's 1957 best seller, "The Hidden Persuaders" — who devised a clever sales strategy based on young girls' yearning for what their mothers disliked. Barbie was on her way to becoming an artifact that today, her manufacturer says, sells globally at the rate of two a second.

And the manufacturer, Mattel — a fusion of Elliot Handler's first name with the surname of a cofounder, Harold Matson — was on its way to membership in the Fortune 500.

IN TRACING Barbie's life and plastic times, Ms. Lord stoutly defends her subject and finds the bright side of every slur.

To those who have criticized Barbie as demeaning women, Ms. Lord points out that from the outset Barbie resembled a paradigm of the protofeminists in Helen Gurley Brown's 1962 best seller "Sex and the Single Girl": she worked; she lived alone (at least until Ken came along); she kept fit; she spent money on herself; she read books on self-improvement like "How to Lose Weight: Don't Eat."

And to those who have suggested that Barbie is asexual, the author argues that the wildly successful toy possesses some attributes of a fertility goddess.

Given her "itty-bitty arched feet," for Barbie to stand up she must be plunged into the earth, an attribute that unites her with the famous Venus of Willendorf as "a representation of the Great Mother."

Ms. Lord also goes on to point out that Barbie has no navel. "Just as the goddess-based religions antedated Judeo-Christian monotheism, Barbie came before Ken."

She concludes: "Critics who ignore Barbie's mythic dimension often find fault with her lifestyle. But it is mythologically imperative that she live the way she does. Of course Barbie inhabits a prelapsarian paradise of consumer goods; she has never been exiled from the garden."

'Critics who ignore Barbie's mythic dimension often find fault with her lifestyle. But it is mythologically imperative that she live the way she does.

— M.G. Lord
columnist/book reviewer for NEWSDAY

"FOREVER BARBIE" may have more to say about its subject than anyone could possibly want to hear, except someone obsessed with the subject. But there are legions of such people around, and Ms. Lord seems to have interviewed all of them, including Cindy Jackson, who has undergone more than 20 operations and spent $55,000 to turn herself into a living Barbie doll.

Still, the author's enthusiasm is infectious, and she writes with considerable wit. As she remarks of her own childhood experience with Barbie, which was not without its darker side:

"To first-generation Barbie owners, of which I was one, Barbie was a revelation. . . . She was all that we could be and — if you calculate what at human scale would translate into a 39-inch bust — more than we could be. And certainly more than we were . . . at 6 and 7 and 8 when she appeared and sank her jungle-red talons into our inner lives."

Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram

Sarah Laroche waits for a cue to start the Toy Doll Dance from "The Nutcracker."

By Georgia Todd Temple
Staff Writer

Holiday favorites will be seen and heard when the Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale presents its annual Christmas Pops concert during the organization's Mistletoe & Music weekend.

"People always tell me they like to hear familiar things at Christmas," said Rob Hunt, MOSC associate conductor. "So, I really take that advice to heart when I program this concert — although I'm always on the lookout for arrangements that are fresh and creative.

"This year, for instance, we are performing several arrangements of Christmas songs by Chip Davis, who is best known for his involvement with the Mannheim Steamroller.

"And I know the audiences will love these selections because I have seen hundreds of copies of the CD from which these songs come in area record stores."

Hunt said the arrangements feature "unusual instruments and combinations of instruments. They have a mellow contemporary feel that often harkens back to medieval textures and attitudes so they will be a real different addition to our holiday programming."

"He's a talented guy," said Hunt, adding that the audience also will hear a synthesizer and guitar in the arrangements.

The performances, set for 8 p.m. Dec. 1 at Midland Center and 8 p.m. Dec. 4 at Odessa's Holiday Inn Convention Center, include another Christmas favorite — "The Nutcracker."

Selections from the ballet will be danced by Midland Festival Ballet, directed by Judy Coleman.

Ms. Coleman has "vast professional experience not only in Midland but in New York and is a marvelous choreographer and educator," Hunt said. "I'm delighted to get a chance to work with her, and to offer the dancers a chance to perform with a live orchestra."

The selections being performed during the pops concert will be Mother Ginger and Mirlitons (Marzipan). In addition, Midland Festival Ballet will present the entire ballet at 10:30 a.m. and 2:30 p.m. Dec. 3 and at 2:30 p.m. Dec. 4 at the Allison Fine Arts Auditorium.

Also on the program for the Holiday Pops Concert is "O Holy Night," sung by Janet Menzie.

"Janet has been in our community for about a year now," Hunt said. "She is a master's graduate of the great music school at the University of Southern California and has already delighted many audiences in our community.

"She was a real favorite of the audience that was present at the MasterWorks Two concert where we did the Haydn program, and it will certainly be a thrill to hear her sing 'O Holy Night.' "

Tickets to both performances range in price from $8 to $30. For reservations, call 563-0921.

This year, the MOSC is joining the Permian Basin Food Bank in bringing the spirit of Christmas to Midland and Odessa by asking concert-goers to bring a nonperishable food item for distribution by the food bank. All those bringing food will be entered in a drawing that will take place at the concert.

"This concert has become a tradition in the Permian Basin as a part of the fantastic weekend put together by our Midland Symphony Guild," Hunt said.

The Midland Symphony Guild's seventh annual Mistletoe & Music events include a ball featuring entertainment by Le Masquerade. The ball is set for 7 p.m. Dec. 2 at Clay-Desta Atrium and includes

The magic of Charles Dickens' "A Christmas Carol" lights the Theatre Midland stage this December when Midland Community Theatre again presents this Christmas classic.

"We try to keep the show similar from year to year, with a few minor changes in scenery and costumes. But, it is the traditional Dickens Christmas Carol with traditional English carols," said Jeff Fentem, musical director.

"I think it's a good family event people can see from year to year, and I don't think they will grow tired of it."

Production dates are Dec. 2-23. Tickets are $12 for the public, $10 for MCT members and $7 for children 10 and younger. For reservations call the box office at 682-4111.

By Evelyn Nieves
N.Y. Times News Service

HOBOKEN, N.J. — It was supposed to change, but Frank Sinatra is still this town's great unrequited love, the one that got away, got famous, came back, but won't commit. He doesn't call, he doesn't write. He just hangs there, high-cheekboned and dewy-eyed, an icon on the walls of Hoboken's restaurants and barber shops.

A year and four days has passed since Nancy Sinatra Lambert came to town raising hopes that a forever thing between Frank Sinatra and Hoboken was possible. Squired by the mayor, she toured possible sites for a Frank Sinatra music library and museum and said prospects looked promising.

The Old Trust Co. of New Jersey, a three-story building on cobblestoned Hudson Place, already looked like a museum. Ms. Lambert said she liked the stained-glass windows and three fireplaces. And she couldn't ask for a better location, across from the PATH station.

A Frank Sinatra museum in Hoboken. It seemed only natural, even if Washington, and New York, New York, were also in the running. Hobokenites were already popping champagne corks when Ms. Sinatra said the family would issue its decision in three months. That was taken seriously in a city that welcomes visitors from the Lincoln Tunnel with a big sign proclaiming itself the birthplace of baseball (another heartbreak story) and Frank Sinatra.

But the Frank Sinatra music library, conceived by Sinatra's three children to house his collection of music memorabilia, is is still a maybe. That's better than a no to some people, worse to others.

"What's it taking to make a choice?" said Rose Arguenta, standing on Washington Street, the main thoroughfare, hands indignantly on her hips. "There's only one choice to make."

"It is kind of an insult to take so long," said Ida Martinez.

"It couldn't be anywhere else," said Nelson Gigante, Ms. Martinez's son. "Me and my friends used to joke about all the Frank Sinatra songs they'd be playing in the pizza places," he said. "Now, the man's pretty cool."

People can't help wondering if the Sinatras can't get past Hoboken's past, when it was Ho-Ho-Hoboken, butt of many jokes. When Frank Sinatra was born on the west side of town 78 years ago ("It'll be 79 in December," Ms. Arguenta remembered), the rents were dirt cheap, the people poor working stiffs, the streets filled with one tavern after another. (Some things haven't changed.) He wanted out, and when he left he said he wouldn't come back. The visits since have been brief.

Mayor Anthony Russo has been courting the Sinatras gently. A call here, a letter there. "I sent Frank a letter last Friday when he was at the Sands in Atlantic City," he said. He tried not to sound desperate. "I just reiterated the commitment and the love and the loyalty that the people of Hoboken have for him," he said. "And I just reminded him that we were still very interested in hosting his music museum."

The last time he spoke to the Sinatras was about five months ago. Tina Sinatra said then that no decision had been reached, Russo said.

He hasn't called her since because he is hoping that plans for a baseball museum in Hoboken will make it look better for a Sinatra Museum. The baseball museum, a plan conceived by a baseball memorabilia collector, is still in the talking stages.

"The reason why I'm hesitant to call now is that I'd like to get the ball rolling," Mr. Russo said. "I'd like to say here's the opportunity we have."

The museum would go next to the baseball museum, at the old Maxwell House building. "It would be on the site where the first baseball game was played," Russo said.

That's on Frank Sinatra Drive. Hoboken has carried a torch for Frank so long that it's part of the city lore. Not long ago, the Hoboken Gallery managed to bridge the cataclysmic gap between the artsy newcomers who have made Hoboken expensive and the born-and-bred Hobokenites who know Sinatra stories. It launched an exhibit on Ol' Blue Eyes, with 14 artists.

"Hoboken and Sinatra — peanut and butter," said Charlotte Conklin, who moved to Hoboken three years ago, astonished to find the city still dazzled by the Sinatra charm. "He is a legend, but Hoboken's no slouch. Somebody should just ask the Sinatras if there's a problem. Why doesn't somebody ask them?"

The Sinatras did not respond to several calls to their team of publicists. A spokeswoman said they were in Toronto, where Tina Sinatra is producing a television pilot called "Hoboken."

Seating begins at 10:45 a.m. for the luncheon, which is catered by Murry and the Frenchman and includes the introduction of the Freshmen Belles. Proceeds raised from the weekend benefit the MOSC.

'This concert has become a tradition.'
— Rob Hunt, MOSC associate conductor

"The symphony ball has become a very exciting event sparked by the participation of the New York-based group Le Masquerade," Hunt said. "And we are all looking forward to having a marvelous time this year."

DICKENS: Cast includes MCT veterans, newcomers

"I'd say probably 30 to 40 percent of the cast members are returns," Fentem said. "Many of the lead roles are returns, which makes it easier to put the show together from year to year when there's familiarity as far as cast members remembering parts."

Cast members include Michael Trost and Glen Thomason as Scrooge; Sara Spector as Nell the mitten lady; Gary Hall as the soup peddler; newcomer Pepper Jay as the ghost of Jacob Marley; Jane Burgess, the Ghost of Christmas Past; Bill Kersh, the Ghost of Christmas Present; Ronnie Williams as Bob Cratchit; newcomer Karen Cresswell as Mrs. Cratchit; Justin Tate and Will Faudree as Tiny Tim; and Afton Hales, Jeremy Woods, Anna Avakian, Kristin Loftis, Amber Liftis and Sarah Williams, as the Cratchit children.

Also in the cast are newcomers Lauren Lary and Ellen Williams as Scrooge's sister Fan; Jerrod Moore as the young Ebby; Martha Fentem and Drew Anderson as the Fezziwigs; Shane Manley as Scrooge's nephew, Fred; Charlotte Martin, Fred's wife, Millie; Delanna Fryer and Blake Spraggins, as Fred and Millie's friends, Lucy and Topper, respectively; and Nancy Daugherty and Ms. Burgess as charwomen looting Scrooge's bedchamber following his death in Christmas future.

The youngest member of the cast, making her stage debut, is Emily Fentem. She is 7 months old and will be joining her mother on stage in the opening scene.

"We again this year will have our special group of carolers that will carol in the lobby from 15 minutes before each performance," Fentem said. "This is a group of about 15 singers from the chorus. They have prepared a group of a capella Christmas carols to entertain our audiences."

"It is actually an adaptation of the original 'Christmas Carol' that has traditional English carols added to it," Fentem said of the production being presented by MCT.

"It's not the rewritten version where they wrote original music and there was no traditional music to it. Ours is a version that comes from the Omaha Community Theatre in Nebraska — a version that their executive director wrote, and it includes the traditional Christmas carols."

Audiences can expect to hear such songs as "God Rest Ye Merry Gentlemen," "Good King Wenceslas, 'Good Christian Men Rejoice," "Deck the Halls," "The Holly and the Ivy" and "Greensleeves."

MCT's production, co-produced by Texaco and Midland Certified, is being directed by Don Bachmann, MCT executive director. Choreography is by Jan Collerd.

During the holiday season, finding the time to make a commitment to be in a stage production is a challenge for most people. Fentem, who teaches private lessons and is director of music for First Christian Church, is no exception.

"It is a very busy time of year," Fentem said. "I really enjoy doing it from year to year and seeing the different people who come out for auditions and who enjoy being a part of this commitment during the season."

Yet, despite how busy Fentem is at this time of year, he is drawn again and again to serving as the musical director of what is becoming a MCT holiday tradition.

"I love it," Fentem said of the show and the opportunity to serve as musical director. "Christmas is my favorite time of the year. 'Christmas Carol' is a wonderful opportunity to do some community work at Christmastime, and be a part of creating a Christmas present for the community."

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) New developments favor your efforts to make home life more harmonious. Friends will seek your support. Offer the kind of help that will not deplete your bank account or resources. Lend a sympathetic ear.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Resist the urge to rest on your laurels. Those who stop striving could forfeit hard-won gains. While you need not exert yourself unduly, maintain a steady pace. Romance looks sublime for older couples.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Have things been going awry? Start over and you will probably make up for lost time. Your mate or partner is your staunchest supporter now. Do not take your frustrations out on loved ones.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Not a good day to confront family members head-on. An older relative may have a health problem you know nothing about. Learn more about your family history.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): An aggressive friend could pose a problem. Refuse to be pushed into making a hasty decision. Hold the line on spending until your cash flow improves. A busy week lies ahead. Turn in early.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): The long holiday ends. Too much pent-up emotion can cause you to lose your cool at inappropriate times. Try to take things easier for the next few days. Get some extra rest tonight.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Your dedication to family and home is a wonderful virtue. Although selfless service to others is an admirable goal, do not forget your own personal needs. An unexpected telephone call cheers you.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Continue to look for subtle clues to another person's motives. Even on weekends, you find it difficult to forget about work! Certain procedures need to be revised. Resolve to get an early start tomorrow.

TODAY'S CHILDREN are independent, creative and certain to garner their fair share of honors and wealth. They know how to organize their time and will turn in their school assignments promptly. Sometimes these Sagittarians leave their parents' home because they cannot deal with the pressures or pretensions they find there. Although they are interested in marriage, it will have to wait until later in life. These Sagittarians have many trips to take and people to meet.

Opening lead: Ace of ♠

One of the first maxims we were taught is: "When in doubt, lead trumps." That is probably the worst reason in the world for a trump lead. Unless you have a specific target in mind, almost any other lead is better.

South's two-club opening bid was artificial and forcing, and North's first two bids were negative. Thereafter, the auction was natural, with South describing a powerful two-suiter and North promising no more than a preference for spades.

The normal opening lead might seem to be the queen of clubs, but West had a valid reason for choosing a trump. When opener has shown a two-suited hand and you have one of the suits controlled and the other becomes trumps, it is a good idea to prevent declarer from ruffing losers on the table.

Had West led a club, declarer would have won and banged down the ace of hearts, followed by a low heart. Even a belated shift to ace and another trump would permit declarer to ruff a heart in dummy, and the only losers would be two hearts and the ace of trumps.

With the heart suit well under control, West set out to limit dummy's ability to ruff. After the lead of ace of trumps and another, declarer had no play. West won the second heart and persisted with a trump and, in the fullness of time, the defenders raked in three heart tricks and the ace of trumps for a one-trick set.

Prague gallery solves prevalent problem of no where to house new museum ideas

By John Russell
N.Y. Times News Service

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia — In almost every great city in the Western world, subliminal hunting horns have lately been heard.

They are the sound of a museum idea in search of a museum space. In London, the Tate Gallery has found such a space on the south bank of the Thames, just across from St. Paul's Cathedral.

In New York, the Museum of Modern Art is scouting for an additional new space. In Paris, the Musee National d'Art Moderne is distinctly underhoused in the Pompidou Center. In St. Petersburg, since the downfall of the Soviet regime, the Russian Museum has been allotted new spaces all over town.

And what exactly would those new spaces do? For one thing, they would allow the museums to have new ideas and act upon them. For another, they could provide the kind of free, open and versatile spaces that recent art often calls for. Traditional museums were not built with such spaces in mind.

In the ever glorious city of Prague, this situation is reversed. It has been whispered all over Prague that the long-awaited relocation of the late-19th- and 20th-century collections of the Czech National Gallery to the Veletrzni Palace is slated for next fall.

It was also whispered that negotiations had begun for the Czech National Gallery to play host in September 1995 to the forthcoming Whitney Biennial, which opens on March 15 and runs for about three months.

To date nothing has been said by the Whitney, but a detailed announcement is expected on Dec. 14. Nor have we any indication of what will be in the exhibition. But the Whitney's guest curator, Klaus Kertess, is a very good and thoroughly experienced judge of new art.

Meanwhile, and where the Czech National Gallery is concerned, this is distinctly a case of a museum space that has found the right museum idea. The Veletrzni Palace is a classic of 1920s architecture in Prague that has stood empty for lack of the idea that will best suit it.

Built between 1925 and 1928, the Veletrzni Palace was the masterpiece of constructivist architecture in Prague at that time. Two men were responsible for it. Oldrich Tyl saw to the technical side, and Josef Fuchs saw to the high-soaring poetical spaces.

Library issues cards to hundreds of non-county residents

Sandra Wegner

In the past two years Midland County Public libraries, downtown and in Midland Park Mall, issued 825 library cards to non-county residents.

As you might guess, the bulk of these patrons were from our neighboring counties, Ector and Martin, followed in number by Howard, Glasscock and Andrews.

Cards were issued to people from 25 Texas counties and two New Mexico counties. This isn't too many considering that the library has issued nearly 33,000 cards in the same time period.

Some of these card holders are petroleum materials users. Often, these patrons are members of organizations or companies that support the petroleum collection with donations.

Since Midland likes to think of itself as the center of the Permian Basin, it is assumed folks come to Midland to shop and to do business as well as to use the library. A day seldom goes by without some out-of-town researcher using the Redfern Genealogical Research Center of the library.

No survey has been done to determine how many Midlanders hold library cards of other area libraries. This is the time of library cooperation and networks. Area libraries do receive some state and federal funds to boost library collections and services, so libraries are not totally funded locally.

Of our library patrons, more library cards were issued to 11- to 20-year-olds than any other age group. Close behind are the 31-40-year-olds. The 0-10-year-olds outnumber the 41-to-50 age group. Just to prove that one is never too young or too old to benefit from the library, several cards have been issued to the 90-plus age group.

• • •

In the past Midland County Public Library cards were good for four years. At that time, the old patron application was updated and old sins, unpaid fines and books not returned, were reconciled. It is understandable that some people would not even remember the overdue notices or problems after so long.

With the convenience of the computer, the library is now updating patron information annually. As for old problem fines, etc., these are always visible on the computer every time anyone tries to check out materials.

December's storytime in the Children's Department of the downtown library, 301 W. Missouri, is titled, "It's Winter." It will be Dec. 10, at 2:30 p.m. for 3- to 6-year-olds. No pre-registration is necessary.

The following week, on Dec. 17, at 2:30 p.m., 6- to 9-year-olds are invited to make holiday cards. Children have their choice of holiday greetings: Christmas, Chanukah and Kwanzaa symbols.

• • •

The libraries, downtown and at Midland Park Mall, will be closed Dec. 24-26 and Dec. 31-Jan. 2, 1995. You are invited to come enjoy our holiday decorations. The Friends of the Library purchased them for the libraries. Shirley Gist, Louise Beazley, Friends and staff have worked to make the library pretty.

• • •

These funds are used for the sole purpose of buying materials for the downtown library's petroleum collection. Sad to say, contributions in recent years have reflected the condition of the oil industry. It has been a struggle to keep the collection up-to-date with limited resources.

Traditionally, the library's operating budget does not include funds for the petroleum collection. The county provides housing and staff. Money to buy books, maps, computer resources, etc. comes from donation of materials and money and special advertised sales of duplicate journals, such as the AAPG Bulletin. Very important is the loyal fiscal support of professional groups like the West Texas Geological Society.

In past years, the focus of the collection has been exploration and production; it has now been broadened to include more environmental-related materials.

The Petroleum Collection has its own card catalog. As descriptions of this collection of more than 55,000 items are gradually being added to the larger library computer catalog, the petroleum department is getting use from people who have never used that department before.

New show puts MTV twist on classical music

By Johan Rapp
Associated Press

STOCKHOLM, Sweden — The video shows a musician, clad in leather, performing feverishly as a mob of teen-age girls swoons and screams.

But all is not what it seems. The star is playing a violin, not a guitar; the music is Brahms, not Pearl Jam.

And no, this is not MTV — it is "Bach and Co.," a prime-time experiment on Swedish TV that tries to use the garish excess of music videos to kindle interest in classical music.

Not everyone is a fan. Producer Paul Wesenlund says he has faced "bloodthirsty" criticism from "classical music police" in the form of calls and letters from angry viewers jolted out of their couches by his show.

"It was as if I had desecrated a grave or something," he says.

But Wesenlund doesn't really care. Kids and even some critics generally have responded well to his weekly, 30-minute program.

The idea to make hip, fast-paced, well-edited videos of classical numbers was born last year at a conference of 500 music teachers.

The teachers were worried that classical music faced extinction, thanks to rock 'n' roll. They said students are bored by the typical, hour-long videos of orchestra concerts in which the most exciting shots may be a closeup of the oboe soloist.

Officials at the state channel TV1 bought the idea and commissioned the eight-part pilot program.

"We live in a mass media world of three minutes. That is the competition classical music is confronted with," says Goran Criborn, a composer and a co-creator of the program.

Although it's unclear how the program has ranked in TV ratings, there have been plenty of personal testaments.

"It is not like in school where facts are piled on facts. This is more fun," she said, though she makes it clear Beethoven still has his work cut out for him: "'Melrose Place' is even better."

City waits to see if conductor will be next Bernstein or Boulez

By Alex Ross
N.Y. Times News Service

At 36, Esa-Pekka Salonen holds the most important musical post in the most media-intense city in the world. And he has made his task more difficult by maintaining a commitment to 20th-century repertory.

LOS ANGELES — Esa-Pekka Salonen is in the belly of the beast. The brilliant young Finnish conductor has begun his third season as music director of the Los Angeles Philharmonic, and the city of eternal celebrity is making its ominous presence felt.

A few blocks away, at the Los Angeles County Superior Court, the self-styled "trial of the century" creeps forward; endless banks of satellite dishes beam the epic trivialities of Judge Ito's courtroom into space.

The orchestra's home is the Dorothy Chandler Pavilion, better known to billions as the historic arena of the Oscars. Where Sally Field shrieked and Jack Nicholson smirked, where John Williams accepted an Oscar for his score to "Star Wars," Salonen spent a day recently rehearsing Witold Lutoslawski's intricate, ambivalent Piano Concerto.

A decade ago, Salonen was organizing sparsely attended avant-garde concerts in Finland. Now, at 36, he holds the most important musical post in the most media-intense city in the world. And he has made his task more difficult by maintaining a commitment to 20th-century repertory.

Rather than vanishing in the middle of the season, the Lutoslawski concerto appeared defiantly in the orchestra's gala opening concert, flanked by Prokofiev's "Classical" Symphony and Stravinsky's "Sacre du Printemps."

A bias toward the modern also infuses the Los Angeles Philharmonic programs Salonen will conduct this afternoon and Monday evening at Avery Fisher Hall, with music of Lutoslawski, Ravel, Schoenberg, Bartok, Sibelius and, the odd man out, Beethoven.

A RECIPE FOR disaster? Strange to say, Salonen's tenure has been an unqualified success. Subscriptions are up, while the average age of the audience has declined, showing an incursion of younger listeners. One can credit the canny long-range planning of Ernest Fleischmann, the orchestra's managing director, or the aggressive marketing campaign that has plastered the maestro's boyish good looks around town.

But the essential factors are Salonen's conducting, which has a graceful dynamism about it, and his programming, which puts forward a very distinct musical world-view.

Salonen appears to be making headway against the toughest problem facing the American orchestra: the aging of the established audience and the deepening indifference of younger generations. Is he the next Leonard Bernstein, the ardently awaited savior figure, able to explain the unfamiliar and build audiences over time? Or is he the next Pierre Boulez, first enticing but eventually exhausting listeners with a severe contemporary diet?

It's too early to say, but Salonen is most likely neither. He does not possess Bernstein's demagogic glamour or Boulez's didactic focus. He does, however, provide the kind of decisive regional leadership that American orchestras most need right now, more than any across-the-board miracle cure. Audiences take notice when an orchestra acquires a vision overnight.

SALONEN BEGAN AS a composer, not a conductor, and he still pursues composing when time allows. He grew up in an aberrant musical culture that treats composers with respect. Like other Scandinavian countries, Finland gives generous support to the arts, and composers are lavished with commissions and grants.

"It was like a bloody greenhouse," Salonen said between rehearsals, speaking impeccable British-accented English. "Until I was about 25, I never gave any thought to the pragmatic aspects of music-making, such as having an audience. Sometimes we had contemporary-music concerts, and maybe four people would come, including my mother."

His base was the Finnish avant-garde collective Ears Open, which he formed with the composers Magnus Lindberg, Jouni Kaipainen and Kaija Saariaho. Their works deployed a full range of post-Serialist devices, although they avoided the major pitfalls of European esotericism.

Even the most teemingly complex music from this group had an overall lucidity of structure, a kind of landscape wholeness characteristic of Scandinavian music in all periods. Salonen's music, which has been collected on a Finlandia disk, is extrovert and eclectic, scampering through minutely detailed motifs and timbres.

More or less by default, Salonen conducted Ears Open concerts. "I never planned a career as a conductor," he said. "When I was studying composition, I looked at conductors as the main enemies of music. The image of Karajan conducting 'Heldenleben' and riding a motorbike in his leather jacket was very far removed from the things we were trying to do. It happened very gradually, but I started feeling the pull of Bruckner and Beethoven, not to mention the 20th-century classics, and they just gradually took over."

IN STORYBOOK FASHION, he burst on the international scene in 1983, summoned at the last minute to conduct the London Philharmonia in Mahler's Third Symphony. His overnight triumph led to a full-time appointment with the Swedish Radio Symphony and an American debut with the Los Angeles Philharmonic in 1984.

A subsequent contract with Sony Classical has produced dozens of recordings, among them definitive accounts of major works by Messiaen and Lutoslawski, an excellent Stravinsky series and one of the best modern versions of Mahler's Fourth Symphony. After a stint as principal guest conductor, Salonen replaced Andre Previn as the orchestra's music director in 1992.

From the evidence of two recent rehearsals, he has established an easy rapport with The orchestra. He takes a cool, understated approach, not at all dictatorial. Indeed, he has a tendency to mumble. Rehearsing "Le Sacre du Printemps," he made brief remarks that were inaudible from the front seats in the auditorium and possibly to many of the players as well.

But his wishes are conveyed all the same; on a second try, the passage in question came into sharper focus. Balancing on the balls of his feet in a gymnastic stance, nervously gesticulating toward his ears when something displeases him, he is unmistakably in command. The orchestra sounds better than ever, clearly in the front rank of American ensembles.

Any conductor in Los Angeles must also establish a good rapport with Fleischmann, renowned for his sometimes domineering treatment of conductors and his controversial ideas about the role of the modern orchestra. Serving as music director in the Fleischmann regime entails any number of tasks outside the regular subscription schedule: leading contemporary-music and chamber-orchestra ensembles, delivering preconcert lectures, conducting youth concerts, and traveling with the orchestra to Los Angeles neighborhoods and schools that have no easy access to orchestral music.

PRONOUNCING THE TRADITIONAL orchestra an outdated institution, Fleischmann has called for a more flexible "community of musicians" to take its place. Yet he is severely critical of the 1993 American Symphony Orchestra League report, "Americanizing the American Orchestra," which proposed that orchestras abandon an elite stance and literally dress themselves down for different audiences.

"All that has nothing to do with what we're here for," Fleischmann said. "No matter what the origin or background of the audience, it still recognizes quality, and it still recognizes integrity. If we pursue a clear artistic direction, people will become more passionate about what we do."

Salonen is of the same mind. "I don't think anything drastic is needed," he said, "because obviously we are acting on the basic hypothesis that classical music is good, that classical music has to exist.
