'Battle Of Peace' To Maintain Good Government Says Francis

ARMISTICE DAY RITES HELD AT CHURCH HERE

Armies of Vicious And Lawless Challenge Nation Today

FESTIVITIES TONIGHT

Banquet and Dance To Conclude Program Of Local Post

Challenged on every hand by those seeking special privileges, by the ignorant and the vicious, and the lawless, the nation's government today is in the throes of the battle of peace, seeking to feel its own strength and then to maintain leadership among other nations.

And 10 years after the world war finds the battle of peace raging in just such a fashion as the last charges of the Americans, which resulted in the signing of the Armistice on Nov. 11, 1918.

Services at Church

Such was the thought stressed Sunday morning by Charles L. Francis, president of the chamber of commerce, in an Armistice day address delivered at special services for the Pat Carrigan post of the American legion at the First Presbyterian church. The church was crowded with legion members, who marched into the auditorium in a body, and with church members and visitors.

The address was the high point in a program especially arranged for the ocasion, which included a vocal solo, "There Is No Death," by Fitzhugh Crain, and several numbers by the church choir.

Leaving historians to tell of deeds of valor performed by American soldiers, Mr. Francis challenged this generation to "fight the enemies within the nation," that the doughboy shall not have died in vain."

Battle of Peace

At the present time, he said, "armies from without call not forth defenders of the flag, but enemies from within challenge the very citadel of our government. Are we content to lie still, to serve not in the battle of peace, when the destiny of our nation calls for service from those trained to serve? War fitted us for action, and action never ceases.

"The ideals and purposes of the nation," he continued, "are challenged on every hand by the forces of those who seek special privileges; by the ignorant and the vicious; by the lawless and irresponsible forces of crime; and by those unwilling to bear the common burdens and restraints that must

The courts will not be open tomorrow because of Armistice day and those arrested will enter their pleas Tuesday. Indications were tonight that dockets will be heavy and plans were made to run the courts until long after the usual hour Tuesday.

SHOOTING ENDS VICTORY REVEL

Gangsters Wound Grid Star After Collision

CHICAGO, Nov. 11 (US)—A gangster's bullets climaxed a night of celebration for John C. Archer, 21, fullback on Northwestern University's football team and he lay at the point of death in St. Luke's hospital today.

One of the bullets lodged in his spine, paralyzing his lower limbs. The other pierced his right leg. If he lives, he will be crippled for life.

Boy Gives Story

Only an incoherent tale could be gleaned of the shooting from Archer's young brother, Chester, 16, who is being held at the detective bureau.

The two brothers had met in Evanstown, where Northwestern had defeated Purdue university in a hard-fought game.

Chester, who is a member of the Missouri Military Academy football team, had helped his fellows to defeat the Morgan Park Military academy here. A celebration was in order.

Borrowing the automobile of a fraternity brother of John's they drove back into Chicago, and according to Chester's story, made merry at various night clubs until the small hours of the morning.

Gang Car Scraped

About 3 o'clock this morning, their small car happened to scrape the fenders of a big sedan. The boys paid no attention, and continued to drive. Then, according to Chester, they found they were being followed. The big sedan caught up with them. One man on the running board of the pursuing car, waving a revolver, began firing. His bullets struck John Archer, at the wheel, and he crumpled in his seat.

Authorities are convinced it was a crew of gangsters, showing their characteristic form of resentment over a mere scraping of cars on the boulevard.

BUSINESS GOOD

NEW YORK, Nov. 11. (AP)—Business and trade continued the steady advance of recent months along a broad front last week. While the result of the national balloting brought no such violent spurt as it did on the securities markets, confidence became firmer with the election uncertainities lifted, although their influence had been reduced to a minimum.

HOWLING LAVA OCTOPUS RUINS ANOTHER TOWN

Horrible Noise Tells Of Dread Approach Of Boiling Mass

FLOW JUST STARTED

Peasants Supplicate Saints For Miracle to Stop Etna's Plunder

RIPOSTO, Nov. 11. (US)—Implacably spreading in all directions over the fertile plains about Mascali, and pushing onwards toward the sea, Mount Etna's river of lava has completely destroyed the Nunziata temple and the remaining houses of the village, and made the railroad, the railway and highway bridges entirely useless.

With a strange howling noise the river of lava advances creepingly upon building after building in its path, and after a single crash the walls disappear beneath the molten flood.

Fears of Gas

A new fear now begins to grip the countryside as the lava nears the sea. It has been noted that when the lava pours into the wells of the region, quantities of gas arise, and there are said to be extremely poisonous. It is now feared that when the hot lava reaches and pours into the sea such tremendous quantities of these gases will arise and spread over the land that life will not be safe in the vicinity.

Professor Ponte of the Mount Etna observatory again today expressed his belief that the tragic flood is only beginning, and that at least two-thirds of the eruptive matter congested in the craters of the mountain is still to be disgorged.

New Eruption

During last night on the northeast slope of Mount Etna there were signs of a new eruption in a red glow that spread over the sky. Soon afterward there was a thunderous roar and enormous quantities of incandescent material were violently ejected and a number of new mouths opened in the mountain sides.

Before the lava enveloped the doomed temple at Nunziata, crushing it like feathers, the bells in the tower of the church began to ring mysteriously. It is believed that a missing priest may have been inside the church when it was swallowed up.

PEASANTS' PRAYERS BEG FOR MIRACLE

CATANIA, Sicily, Nov. 11. (UP)—Thousands of peasants filled the churches of this stricken region tonight and prayed to the saints for aid as a river of molten lava gathered new impetus and devoured the entire village of Carrabba.

More than 200 persons were made homeless when the lava flow swept over Carrabba. At that time the craters of Mount Etna were steadily increasing in intensity of eruption and the stream of molten rock had gained overpowering force.

While the peasants swarmed to their churches and prayers were said throughout the whole region, Cardinal Francica-Nava issued a pastoral letter urging the faithful to invoke the saints of miraculous powers. The natives remained in the churches throughout the afternoon and night, kneeling in supplication.

Hidden Chest Of Facts in Aimee's Case Now Sought

LOS ANGELES, Nov. 11. (AP)—A hidden chest, not filled with treasures, but containing documentary evidence which grand jury investigators believe will help to prove that thousands of dollars were involved in the dismissal of the Aimee Semple McPherson case by District Attorney Asa Keyes, two years ago, was being sought here today.

Evidence concerning transactions of at least $100,000, was said to already be in hands of the investigators. The evidence was reported to include both telegrams and letters exchanged between persons interested in the evangelist's case.

RADIO REVISION PUZZLES FANS

Familiar Stations Found At 'Strange' Places

Wichita Falls radio fans who chased wave lengths and kilocycles over the dials Sunday found cause for little rejoicing in the new allocation of wave bands by the federal radio commission, according to scattered reports to The Record News.

Radio owners found familiar and easily located stations had "disappeared" from the air, although several reported picking up Oklahoma stations with unusual clarity. KGKO, local broadcasting station, was off the air Sunday, and received no reports from the Wichita Falls territory.

Exclusive Assignment

The new band for KGKO, 570 kilocycles, is expected to materially increase the range and power of the Wichita Falls station, as only 10 other stations in the nation have the same band. The change in the band, however, will not be given a test until the station returns to the air early Monday morning.

The reallocation of wave bands by the federal commission is designed to eliminate interference between stations, and should improve the reception and the number of stations available to radio owners, according to those familiar with the principles of operation. Roy Coffee, owner of the Phonograph Shop, pointed out Sunday night that the real test of the allocation will come Monday when all stations return to the air. Sunday was a poor day for reception in Wichita Falls, he pointed out, while comparatively few stations were on the air. Failure of local fans to tune in familiar stations was attributed by Mr. Coffee to the lack of knowledge of new wave bands, the stations no longer being found at the old "spots" on the dials.

Texas Stationos Report
(By The Associated Press)

DALLAS—KRLD, the Dallas Times-Herald station, reported tonight it was receiving numerous calls complimenting it on improved reception on its new wave length under the radio reallocation. The station recently moved its broadcasting unit 10 miles from the city limits of Dallas.

GALVESTON — Reallocation of radio lineups in the country apparently has improved conditions for two local stations, according to managers of KFLU and KFIX of Galveston.

HOUSTON—Radio station KPRC, Houston, operating on 1,000 watts started transmission on a frequency of 920 kilocycles today.

Reports from neighboring towns this evening said that the channel was unusually clear of interference.

DALLAS—The Dallas Municipal Radio station, WRR, reported today its broadcast under the reallocation which went into effect at 3 a. m. was being interfered with by station KFQB of Fort Worth.

WASHINGTON — Armistice day meant also a lull of hostilities between the federal radio commission and that part of the listening public which has opposed the reallocation plan which went into effect today.

In common with "radiotics" throughout the country, members of the commission spun their dials and blunted their pencils marking new log sheets made necessary by the new broadcasting assignments for almost all of the nation's 600 odd transmitters. Tomorrow they anticipate finding a flood of telegrams and letters from listeners who have been unable to receive favorite stations or have been interrupted in program reception by heterodyne squawks and squeals.

Courts in Session Today, Says Judge

Due to the heavy criminal docket, business will be transacted as usual Monday in district court, according to an announcement repeated Sunday night by Judge P. A. Martin of the 89th district court.

"I wish to correct a statement which appeared in the Sunday morning Times regarding Monday closing," Judge Martin said.

"A heavy criminal docket for the week makes it necessary to hold sessions in my court. I talked with Judge W. W. Cook of the 78th district court, and I believe that he, too, is holding court. It will be necessary also for the district clerk's office to be open at least a portion of the day."

COOLIDGE HITS EUROPE'S TALK OF AMERICA

President Forcefully Answers Criticism Of Great Rivals

PLEADS LARGE NAVY

Executive Discards Usual Caution in Armistice Day Address

WASHINGTON, Nov. 11 (AP)—Ten years to a day after the close of the world war President Coolidge tonight replied in spirited language to criticisms of American isolation from the old world and at the same time reiterated the necessity of a more adequate naval defense for the United States and its possessions.

The president spoke at a meeting sponsored by the American Legion, and before delivering his address he had gone to Arlington national cemetery with Mrs. Coolidge to place a wreath on the tomb of the Unknown Soldier.

UP TO PEOPLE

NEW YORK, Nov. 11. (AP)—Advocating the settlement of international disputes by arbitration, Secretary Kellogg declared today that universal peace can be attained if the people of the world come to the belief "that there shall be no war."

Mentions Individuals

In a manner unusual for him, after paying tribute to those who contributed to American success, he went into the personalities which loomed large in the great conflict, singling out Admiral Sims for his work with the navy, and General Pershing, for his services as head of the American expeditionary forces, saying of the general that for the outstanding accomplishments of the army America was indebted to his genius.

The president dwelt at length on American accomplishments and sacrifices in the past and its necessities for the future, condemning claims that the United States had profited out of the war, and asserting strongly the needs of the nation for security in the future.

Urges More Cruisers

He declared that the construction of more cruisers was needed and emphasized that the United States in view of its geographical characteristics, treaty engagements and economic importance and in view of its lack of fueling stations and merchant ships capable of mounting six inch guns was entitled "to a larger number of warships than a nation having these advatnages."

Comparing British and American naval construction proposals the chief executive said that "when their present legislation is carried out they would have 68 cruisers. When ours is carried out, we would have 40. It is obvious that, eliminating all competition, world standards of defense requires us to have more cruisers."

Duties Are Mutual

"Europe itself has expressed very definite ideas on this subject."

OUTRAGES STIR RESIDENTS OF RICH SUBURB

Town Where Knaak Woman Was Burned Scene Of Night Assault

TEACHER IS BEATEN

Kindergarten Instructor Found in Yard; Rich Girl Escapes

LAKE FOREST, Ill., Nov. 11. (UP)—Lake county authorities and the fashionable North Shore district, approximately 40 miles north of Chicago, were aroused today over attacks on three young women Saturday night.

The attacks, coming so closely behind the Lake Bluff "furnace mystery" in which Miss Elfrieda Knaak, school teacher was burned to death in the furnace at the police station, struck terror in the homes of the wealthy and brought a demand that authorities take immediate action.

Teacher Beaten

Miss Edna Mary Kelley, school teacher and daughter of a wealthy Lake Forest contractor, was in a serious condition today at the Alice Home hospital here suffering from a blow on the skull delivered by an unknown assailant. This is the same hospital in which Miss Knaak died.

Surgeons who performed an operation on Miss Kelley's skull today, said she had a good chance for recovery. Miss Kelley, rendered unconscious by the blow, was found by another woman lying on the spacious lawn of the home of William J. Quigley.

Girl Escapes Assailant

Miss Genevieve Cook, 17, daughter of a wealthy lumberman of Highland Park, near here, returning to her home from a football dance, was able to fight herself free from a man, and escaped to a home in the neighborhood.

Rosebud Axt, third victim, also fought off an assailant and escaped. She gave authorities the name of a suspect but refused to sign a complaint.

Miss Kelley regained consciousness at the hospital today following removal of a piece of her skull, but could give police no description of her assailant.

Struck From Behind

"I was struck on the head from behind," she said. "I lost consciousness and do not remember anything until I awoke in the hospital. I didn't see any one along the road and don't know what hit me."

Mrs. Frieda Richmond, who found the girl on the lawn, said Miss Kelley was mumbling incoherently of nursery rhymes and repeating the alphabet as though talking to her pupils. She teaches a kindergarten class.

Relatives of the girl, including four brothers, joined a posse of civilians and a special muster of police in a search of the North Shore district for the attackers.

Estates of wealthy Chicago business men are located in the district, Evanston, a few miles south of here, was aroused several weeks ago when Miss Jennie Meta Constance, teacher at Bradley college, Peoria, Ill., was beaten to death by a negro assailant.

INVESTIGATION PUSHED

LAKE BLUFF, Ill., Nov. 11. (UP)—Refusing to accept as final the verdict of a coroner's jury that Elfrieda Knaak "apparently died of self-inflicted burns," relatives of the girl and authorities said today the investigation would be continued until the "furnace mystery" is cleared.

Sudden Anger, Not Plot, Blamed For Gambler's Death by Detectives

NEW YORK, Nov. 11. (US)—Police Inspector John D. Coughlin, commanding the detective division of the police department, today broke the official silence of a week on the deepening mystery of Arnold Rothstein's murder.

Coughlin asserted emphatically there was no plot that culminated in the killing of the master gambler in room 349 of the Park Central hotel last Sunday night.

The crime was an act of sudden anger, the inspector insisted. The revolver was wrested away from the assassin by a companion, who flung the weapon out of the window so violently that it tore through the screen and fell in the middle of Seventh avenue.

Coughlin revealed that the .38 calibre revolver found in the street had been proved to be the pistol with which Rothstein was shot. He said further that it had been traced from the manufacturer to the jobbing house and was expected to be followed to the purchaser shortly.

FRANCIS TALKS ON ARMISTICE

'Good Government' Called Battle of Peace

rest upon all alike in the interest of maintaining here a government of the people for the people, and by the people."

The American legion, he charged, is still enlisted for service under the flag of America. "Our constitution, state and federal," he said, "are the articles of enlistment. The orders of the day are the laws upon our statute books. The recruits are the children of this nation. The quartermasters' stores are in the mines, the forests, fields, shops, factories, and farms. Every day something must be done to push the campaign forward, here, holding our ground against hostile assault, there, pushing forward to capture some definite objective—all done by plan, and with an eye to some great destiny."

World Responsibility

With the battle of peace won, there still is another goal, Mr. Francis declared, stating that this "loftier mission is a responsibility for world leadership that we cannot shirk and that we will not dodge."

Following the legion program, the morning church services were held, with Dr. Nat F. Grafton delivering his regular sermon.

Armistice day played a part in another sermon delivered Sunday evening by Dr. Floyd Allen Bash, pastor of the First Christian church. Dr. Bash spoke on the subject, "Lest We Forget."

The celebration will continue Monday, when several county and all federal offices, as well as all banks in the city, will remain closed. City offices, however, will be open as usual, and the city council will hold its regular meeting Monday night.

All stores in the city will be open for business as usual, Jack Barnard, head of the Retail Merchants' association, announced.

Legion Banquet Tonight

The Pat Carrigan post will conclude its program in observance of Armistice day with a banquet and dance at 8 o'clock Monday night at the Wichita club. Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Duke, Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Langford, and Mr. and Mrs A. H. Carrigan will be honor guests at the banquet. Mr. Carrigan will make the chief address of the evening, while short talks also will be made by Mr. Duke and Mr. Langford, representing the Spanish war veterans, and by Sam Spence, legion member recently elected district attorney.

An attendance of approximately 100 is expected at the banquet and 150 at the dance, according to W. E. George, post commander, who will preside at the festivities Monday night.

Observance of Armistice day was noted in many of the store windows of Wichita Falls Sunday. Mute evidence of the happenings in 1917 and 1918 was displayed.

Among the most striking of these were shells, helmets or tin hats, pictures of the transport ship "Finland," a picture of one of the companies of the 143rd infantry, gas masks, a corporal's uniform, an old army carbine and other similar souvenirs. They are in the large front window of the Gate City grocery at Tenth and Van Buren.

Events preceding the war, and major events at its close are graphically told in black newspaper headlines of copies of newspapers which decorate one of the Perkins-Timberlake windows.

A Red Cross nurse, in full uniform, is the central figure of this window. Copies of "Le Petit Parisien," a Paris daily newspaper, the Dallas News, The Wichita Times and the Fort Worth Star-Telegram tell the story.

"U. S. steamer sunk by German U-boat" is the big, black banner headline of a paper of Feb. 4, 1917.

"Austria Quits" is the still blacker head of a newspaper dated Nov. 4, 1918. "Kaiser Has Abdicated," is another head over the front page of The Times of Nov. 9, 1918.

"War Over" was the happy head of a paper dated Nov. 11, and the big news events of the two-year period closed with the issue of Nov. 12 which was bannered with the words "Terms Are Accepted."

Coolidge Pleads For More Ships

Mr. Coolidge said. "We do have such duties. They are not all on one side, however. They are mutual.

"We have sometimes been reproached for lecturing Europe, but probably ours are not the only people who sometimes engage in gratuitous criticism and advice. We are not the only people, either, who desire to give their attention to their own affairs. It is quite evident that both of these claims can not be true. I think no informed person at home or abroad would blame us for not intervening in affairs which are peculiarly the concern of others to adjust, or when we are asked for help for stating clearly the terms on which we are willing to respond.

"It is always plain that Europe and the United States are lacking in understanding. We are prone to think that they can do as we can do. We are not interested in their age old animosities, we have not suffered from centuries of violent hostilities. We do not see how difficult it is for them to displace distrust in each other with faith in each other.

Cites Our History

"On the other hand, they appear to think that we are going to do exactly what they would do if they had our chance. If they would give a little more attention to our history and judge us a little more closely by our own record, and especially find out in what directions we believe our real interests to lie, much which they now find obscure would be quite apparent."

Mr. Coolidge said that he did not believe that military preparation was the only remedy against war, but added that "to be ready for defense is not to be guilty of aggression. We can have military preparation without assuming a military spirit."

The present land forces and organization of the United States are sufficient for American defense needs, Mr. Coolidge declared.

"When we turn to the sea the situation is different," he continued. "We have not only a long coast line, distant outlying possessions, a foreign commerce unsurpassed in importance, and foreign investments unsurpassed in amount, the number of our people and value of our treasure to be protected, but we are also bound by international treaty to defend the Panama Canal. Having few fueling stations, we require ships of large tonnage, and having scarcely any merchant vessels capable of mounting 5 or 6-inch guns, it is obvious that, based on needs, we are entitled to a larger number of warships than a nation having these advantages."

The United States urged the limitation of armaments, Mr. Coolidge said, calling the Washington conference at which capital ships only were restricted.

Heavy Sacrifice Made

"It no doubt has some significance," he added, "that foreign governments made agreements limiting that class of combat vessels in which we were superior, but refused limitation in the class in which they were superior. We made altogether the heaviest sacrifice in scrapping work which was already in existance. That should forever remain not only a satisfaction to ourselves, but a demonstration to others of our good faith in advocating the principle of limitations. At that time we had 23 cruisers and 10 more nearly completed. One of these has since been lost, and 22 are nearly obsolete. To replace these, we have started building eight. The British have since begun and completed seven, are building eight, and have five more authorized. When their present legislation is carried out they would have 68 cruisers. When ours is carried out, we would have 40. It is obvious that, eliminating all competition, world standards of defense require us to have more cruisers."

Following the abortive three power naval limitation conference in Geneva in the summer of 1927 "no progress seems to have been made," Mr. Coolidge said. "In fact, the movements have been discouraging. During last summer France and England made a tentative offer which would limit the kind of cruisers and submarines adapted to the use of the United States, but left without limit the kind adapted to their use. The United States of course refused to accept this offer. Had not done so, the French army and the English navy would be so near unlimited that the principle of limitations would be virtually abandoned."

Rebuking charges of American indifference to European troubles, the chief executive pointed to American relief expeditions to Europe immediately following the war, American participation in the Dawes commission, and to the $110,000,000 subscribed from the United States to put the plan into effect.

President Coolidge concluded his address with a strong plea for peace and a disclaimer that American policies were dictated by either aggressive or imperialistic motives.

'I FEEL LIKE I HAVE A NEW LIFE BEFORE ME'

Wichita Woman Says She Suffered From Gall-Stones and Kidney Troubles Before She Began Taking Orgatone

"I am simply a new woman and feel that I have a new life before me since I started taking Orgatone," said Mrs. A. L. Washington, residing at 1807 Ardath street, Wichita Falls, Texas, in her statement to the Orgatone representative a few days ago.

"Yes, sir, I feel like a new woman and I want everybody to know it," continued Mrs. Washington. "For several years I have been a constant sufferer from what the doctor said was gall-stones and kidney disorders and since I have started taking this Orgatone I am feeling much better than I have in years.

"I also suffered with severe headaches and was so nervous I couldn't sleep and the least noise would upset me. My side was so sore I could not bear to touch it or bend over without terrible pains, and there was a dull ache in my side all the time. I sufered agony with pains in my back around my kidneys.

"I tried most every kind of medicine and did every thing I knew how to do trying to get relief, but I kept getting worse and finally I got so weak and sick and nervous that I had about given up hope of ever finding anything to relieve my troubles.

"Orgatone has completely changed life around me and I just can't find words to express my gratitude for it. I am being relieved of my nervousness and my sleep is sound and restful. My appetite is splendid now and I can eat as much as I ever could and I relish my meals. Those dreadful pains are leaving my back and side and my headaches have practically disappeared. I think Orgatone is the most wonderful medicine I ever heard of and believe it is doing a lot of good for suffering humanity."

Genuine Orgatone is sold in Wichita Falls exclusively by the Allison's Drug Co., 716 Indiana avenue, under the personal direction of a special Orgatone representative who is meeting the public daily and charges nothing to explain his theories on health and hygiene.—Adv.

Pampa Couple Wed Here In Event of Sunday Morning

The wedding of Miss Annie Farley and John L. Peake, both of Pampa and well known among a large number of friends in Wichita Falls where they have often visited, was solemnized Sunday morning in the parsonage of the Sacred Heart church with Rev. Patrick O'Beirne officiating.

The bride wore a handsome dress of black transparent velvet and a Ben Dreshell all-black coat of pappe trimmed with baby caracul. A black antelope bag, black suede slippers and a black Emmett Joyce transparent velvet hat with rhinestone trim completed the beautiful costume. She carried a boquet of brides' roses and lilies of the valley.

The couple was attended by Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Knox of Holliday. Mr. and Mrs. Peake left immediately following the ceremony for Dallas for a brief honeymoon before returning to Pampa to make their home.

Mrs. Peake has made her home in Memphis, Tenn., and Pampa for a number of years. Mr. Peake is the oldest son of Mrs. Eustacia Peake of Bradford, Pa. He has made his home in Pampa for a short time and is a building contractor there.

Dorinda's Diary

Texas Autumn

Now autumn beats like music at my breast;
The color down the land is like a cry;
The winding roadways will not let me rest,
And distance is a call against the sky.
The haze runs shouting out across the hills,
Where autumn follows with its smoke and flame;
Upon a day like this the landscape spills
A glory that has never had a name.

Who has not seen a Texas field grown old
With clinging cotton, waiting some dark hand—
Who has not seen long miles of Texas gold
Where flowers of a late sun light the land—
Or seen blurred fields where purple thistles glow—
Has missed too much of beauty—this I know.
—Grace Noll Crowell, in Southwest Review.

I had the above poem pinned on a curtain in my bedroom, where I could look up and read a line, occasionally, as I worked plaiting rags for a rug. . . . Just a day made to order to make rag rugs and read poetry and let my thoughts drift back to East Texas, to where a rainy day always takes them. Autumn has never been a melancholy time for me and there it was the season for quiet adventure. For the "winding roadways" would not let me rest and rainy days held a lure unlike any other time. . . . Roadways, along which sumacs run with red blankets 'round their shoulders, like Indians and where the rain had washed the leaves of the sweet-gum tree and their brightened colors rang out like the laughter of a rowdy boy.

. . . The pine trees stand sifting the rain through their slender, green fingers . . . rabbits scurry through the grass and leaves, stirring up woody odors. . . . The wet cotton fields outlined with "purple thistles, glow," blur through the falling rain. Every wet bush and bramble glows like a smoldering fire, and like a happy thought of the departed summer, comes the song of a bird, flying through the silver rain or, snug in some warm, dry retreat.

Gray moss, hanging from the chins of the grandfather oaks, brushes my face as I pass and I think of little red handles, as I look at the red berries on the holly trees shining through the rain. . . . Of Christmas Eve night and a big family in a warm room with a holly tree in the center and stockings being hung at a fireplace where the coals from a wood fire, glow . . . . Dolls, sleds . . . tea-sets . . . gay knitted scarfs . . . red apples . . . golden oranges . . . the smell of firecrackers a little boy is shooting in the front yard . . . green light from an opal on the finger of a proud little girl who turns it about in the firelight.

Back in the woods I stoop to pick up nuts under a hickory tree. The voice of a little stream that will be choked with ice in a few weeks, comes musically to my ear. . . . I gather a spray of red berries that grow close to the ground. A chinquapin tree, its branches drooping under the weight of wet prickly burrs takes me back to the warm room and a group of children sitting around the fireplace playing "hull-gull" with the dark little nuts from the green burrs. . . . The slam of the front door brought me out of the warm room and the wet woods in which it was my delight to wander as a child, and a middle-aged woman closed softly, Memory, the door between Yesterday and Today and sat plaiting rags, as Jezica entered.

"I POUNDED your front door until I gave out and then I just walked in," she greeted me. "A day like this gives me the 'all-overs' and I thought I'd come by and get you and we would go to the show." I hunted quickly for an excuse that wouldn't offend her; she is so touchy. Then, lamely, "Oh, Jezica, I just can't. This is . . . 'er . . . such a good day to work on rag rugs . . . and . . . ." She gave the rug on my lap a scornful look, the rags I had cut into strips and rolled into balls, rolled off the bed to the floor, the biggest one playfully bouncing over her foot. She gave it a kick that sent it under the bed and the others quickly followed it.

She walked over to the mirror and started powdering her nose and said over her shoulder, to me, "Anybody who would sit in a back room and work on rag rugs a day like this, has a screw loose." . . . And added: "I bet I don't get my back turned, though, before you have on that old moth-eaten brown hat, that old green raincoat and those disgraceful shoes and go slopping some place I wouldn't wipe my foot on." . . . I didn't answer her, for, as all words do, her words had suggested something to me and mentally, I was already on my way to a place I had been to many times, but never on a rain day . . . and that's where I would go when. . . .

Jezica interrupted my thought line. "Did you vote yesterday?" she asked. . . . "Why . . . yes," I answered, slowly feeling my way, for I didn't know where that answer would lead me. "Why?" I asked. "Well, I didn't," she answered, "and it makes me so mad I could die every time I think of the way I was treated at the polls!" . . . "Why Jezica, I can't imagine how you were treated that you got mad." I answered and rolled my rug and placed it in the suit box, in which I keep it.

Jezica left the mirror and flung herself on the bed, as if she had changed her mind about going to the show, and sighing, I took my rug out and started sewing and plaiting again. She leaned on her elbow as she talked: "Why the first place I went, they actually, wouldn't let me vote there. . . . Looked at my poll tax and told me I was at the wrong place—as if it made any difference just so I voted! . . . When I got where they told me to go, I had to get behind a lot of other people and wait until I was good and sore and when I did get in and they handed me a long sheet of paper with a lot of other names, but not a sign of either Mr. Hoover's or Governor Smith's name on it, I just blew up. I just knew there was something crooked, when they sent me to another place."

"But Jezica," I said, "don't you know in a presidential election only the names of the electors of each party. . . . " She went right on, as if I had not spoken. Her words quick and fast like machine gun bullets and each one a little louder than the other, "I just told them, a name might not mean anything to them but it had to appear in black and white to me, before I put a single scratch on that paper!"

"Didn't you see the sample tickets in the newspapers, Jezica?" I asked, as she paused for breath, "nearly all the papers had them, so voters could acquaint themselves with the proper procedure . . ." . . . "Newspapers," she answered. "Who reads newspapers? . . . nobody but . . but," . . she looked at the rug in my lap and seemed to get an inspiration. "Nobody, but women who make rag rugs, and they oughtn't be allowed to vote!" And she bounced out and the house shook as the front door slammed.

As soon as I heard her car start I got out what my family calls my "gad rags" the ones Jezica had alluded to, and by the time she was at the picture show, I was walking over wet, shiny walks to a place I could hardly wait to see on a rainy day. . . . Leaving as much of my attire as possible, on the porch. I entered and instantly I knew, next to being in one's own cheerful bedroom, working on a rag rug, or walking in wet woods, the next best place to be in is a home full of furniture, rugs, silver and glass that combines enough of the new and the old to make just such a place as I was looking into.

The rose, candle-wick curtains and the cheerful fires made an atmosphere that the rain on the roof only accentuated. My hostess, Mrs. Anna Owem, busy on a patch work quilt, for which she is noted, smiled as I stood in front of a chest of drawers, for she knew I was seeking, again, a girlish figure in bridal white passing her hands over the satiny finish and opening the drawers and exclaiming over the hand woven linens that went with the chest as a vedding gift.

The old Seth Thomas clock that had told the time of birth, marriage and death in a well known Texas family, from one generation to another, kept up its ceaseless tick-tock . . . I wondered how many anxious faces had gazed into that placid face, while they longed to hold the fast moving hands that were marking off the minutes of one they loved . . . And I could see impatient, young faces looking into that placid one, while they waited for some happy event and wished they might hurry the slow moving hands. . . Ah, old clock, if you could only talk and tell the times your face has been so anxiously scanned or, the times when the hour you recorded was too crucial for any one in the family to look at your face!

I stood on a hooked rug, found not long ago in the attic of an old home that was being torn down to make room for a modern building. It was sewed up in a sack or pillow case, that dropped away at the touch, but age had not marred the strength or beauty of the rug, which had never been used. The material is coarse woolen yarn, derived from material carded and spun in the home. The dyes that make the pattern as colorful as a Persian design, were vegetable dyes mixed in kettles that hung on a crane swung over a fireplace. The rug, when found, lacked a few inches of being finished, but the yarn was enclosed in the bag and an expert finished it.

A Hepplewhite sideboard that has held silver and crystal piled high with fruit, cakes, nuts and other "side dishes," the long ago claimed. A beautiful old chair just made to fit the form of a young mother rocking her first born. Candlesticks, that held the candles that lighted the rooms of a historical old home in South Texas. A pewter lamp, by the light of which one of the brilliant men of the nation got his school lessons. An old sofa still wearing its old brocaded damask, like an old lady clinging to old styles.

A little chair touched me timidly, as I passed: I knelt in front of it and could see two rosy feet outstretched and hear a woman's voice:

"This little pig says, 'I'm going to steal some corn,'
This little pig says, 'Where you going to get it?
This little pig says, 'Marssa's barn.'
This little pig says, 'I'm going to tell'
This little pig says, 'Wee! Wee! Cant get over the door sill!"

The music of a baby's laugh . . . the room grew almost dark, as night fell, quickly and I got up and turned to the doorway. . . . The firelight flickered on the form of my hostess, as she stood in the door way with the white and rose quilt clasped in her arms like a bunch of white and deep pink roses. Stood in the doorway of her "Happy House" to say goodnight . . . Surely no house could be called anything else, the roof of which shelters so many inanimate things that speak interestingly and knowingly of intimate things!—DORINDA.

Hearts of Most 'Good Women' Are Generally of Alabaster Whiteness

The Good Woman Is Not Necessarily the One Who Has the Greatest Appearance of Virtue—She Is the One Who Makes Allowances for Others' Weaknesses and Who Is Strong and Tender and Helpful.

What is a good woman? What qualities must a woman possess before she is worthy to wear the title that shines like a visible halo about the head of the one to whom it is applied?

Between what is known as a "good woman" and a "bad woman" society has made a chasm that is almost as deep and wide and dark and unbridgable as death itself yet, after all, what IS a good woman?

The conventional definition of a good woman is one who is prim, puritanical and pure. When the majority of people speak of a good woman, they mean a woman who goes to church three times of a Sunday, leads the prayer meeting, belongs to the W. C. T. U., keeps her house clean, her children's stockings darned at the knee, never looks at any man except her husband and wears a black silk dress that isn't quite up to date.

Undoubtedly, such a woman is admirable in many respects. If she isn't the backbone of society, she is a considerable number of the vertebrae, but only too often such a woman is narrow and selfish and bigoted to the last degree.

She is religious—but she demands that everybody else shall be saved according to her creed, and she takes a mournful pleasure in believing that they will be damned if they don't. She would work her fingers to the bone for her children—but it is because they are hers, and she would sacrifice any other children on earth to her own if there were a conflict between them.

She is as true as steel to her husband, but no other man has ever sent her voilets or looked unutterable things into her eyes as he helped her on with her opera cloak.

No other women in the world are so hard in their judgment as the conventionally "good woman." The foolish young girl who has made one fatal misstep in life, and the women in whose veins run fire and quicksilver, who have recklessly followed where their hearts led them, look in vain to such "good women" for sympathy and pity. Never having been tempted themselves, they cannot make allowance for the temptation of others. Their hearts are like their morals, of alabaster whiteness, and a particularly rocky hardness.

Certainly the narrow, self-centered woman who is good because she never had a chance to be anything else is a good woman. BUT—

On the other hand, there is the woman who, in the words of the prayer book, "has done these things which she ought not to have done, and left undone those things which she ought to have done," but whose heart is big enough to take in the whole world, whose hand is as open as the day, and whose sympathy and compassion form an inexhaustible fountain of pity that never fails.

Perhaps such a woman has a dark page in her own history. If so, it has made her a little sister to all the weak and erring. Perhaps she is still lured by the flowers, a step or two now and then from the straight and narrow path, but she will strip the cloak off her back to give to a beggar and stoop to lift up the man or woman who has fallen by the wayside. We don't habitually refer to such women as "good women," BUT—

Then there are the ladies, and their name is Mrs. Legion, who are reforming everything on earth but themselves, and who are always spoken of in the newspapers as the "good women" who are trying to get laws passed against such and such a thing. Their children are neglected, their homes unkept, their husbands uncared for, and yet, because these women are devoting themselves to church work or social settlement work, or the promulgation of social purity, or suppressing polygamy among the Zulus, they haven't a doubt that they are patterns of goodness, and perhaps they are.

In my own limited circle of acquaintances the one woman who is always spoken of as a perfect angel is one who devotes her entire time to the poor, while her forlorn old mother takes in boarders to support her.

It would seem to me that it was just as good to be good to your mother as to an object of charity, but I have old-fashioned ideas on many subjects, and it is a continual marvel to me that when a woman has a "mission" it is seldom a mission to do the duty that lies to her hand at home.

But what is a "good woman"? My ideal of a good woman is a woman who is strong, true and generous in thought and deed. She has her creed, but she respects yours, for she knows that there are many roads that lead to the mountain top. She knows the worst of life, and believes the best of it. She has looked into the face of temptation and seen there all her heart's desire, and then she has had the courage to turn her back upon it and walk the hard path of duty.

She is gentle in her judgment and compassionate to the weak, because she knows that the power to strive and resist has not been given alike to all. She is tender to children, not because they are hers, but because in her is the great spirit of universal motherhood. She carries sunshine and cheer with her wherever she goes. She is competent and helpful, for it isn't enough for a woman to be negatively good. She must be good for something if she is good.

That is my idea of a "good woman." What is yours?—DOROTHY DIX.

O' These Women

By LEOLA ALLARD

NEW YORK, Nov. 11. (US)—On New York's Fifth avenue, a fancy food place where smartly dressed people lunch. Smallest waitresses I ever saw and the youngest. They wear ruffled organdy caps on the side of their saucy heads and tiny organdy aprons.

A brunette waitress slides up to the soda fountain and places her orders. Then a blonde, even smaller, slides in ahead of her, gently pushing her back as she remarks: "Pardon you! I am first."

I wondered if gentlemen really prefer blondes, or if this blonde bambino was indicating how it is that blondes get preferred.

Two girls looking at gowns in a smart shop window.

"I don't like such bright colors," said one of them. "I like the—oh you know—short o' ashes of roses, and pastel and—"

"Yah, I know," said the snappy brunette, "you mean the coax me colors."

A woman tecaher from Columbia university tries to register. She shows a Columbia catalogue to prove that she won't need a literacy test. It won't do she must take it just the same.

Then the teacher's daughter steps up, unrolls her high school diploma and beats ma into the registration book.

A Chicago physician says that if you laugh much you will live long. He cites the case of a "hopeless" invalid of 37 who laughed her way back to good health and lived to be 103.

I wish we knew if she was married! And if she laughed at or with.

A health lecturer praises the modern girl and says: "She washes all her own clothes!"

My word, and shouldn't that break her back; One bowl of suds, one sozzle, one wring and one clothes pin! And they would dry while she is combing her hair.

Two ladies in the basement of a big store, waiting for the elevator. It comes down and of course stops. It must. It can't go any further down. The ladies chirp up to the pilot: "Is this car going up?"

The pilot gives her a chilling look and yelps "up."

Speaking of a bachelor, a deb remarks: "He's one of those gentlemen who prefer bonds."

"My daughter will be worrying about me," said a dear old lady, who sat beside me in a bus, caught in a 5 o'clock traffic jam. "She ought to know that when I go to see my friend at Ninth street I can't get back at this hour, but she doesn't like it a bit." Her voice was wavey, and a bit weak, and she was mightily concerned about what this married daughter would think. She didn't want to be scolded—again.

She must have been 80, and I was sorry I couldn't sneak up behind that daughter and shake her till her teeth rattled.

Sowing and reaping are as inseparable as cause and effect; in fact, sowing and reaping are cause and effect. "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap!"

The Day Book of a New Yorker

By GRANT DIXON

NEW YORK, Nov. 11. —That Marx Brothers' opening recently ranked as one of the really exciting first nights of the year. Several times each season such a premiere comes along. Seats for the festivities brought most anything but nobody wanted to sell. The Forty-Fourth, of course, was packed to its rafters, but there was a bigger crowd in the street, the crowd that assembled to watch the ticket holders swarm in.

The month of November should account for at least two more super-premieres. The opening of the Noel Coward revue, "This Year of Grace," and the opening of Ethel Barrymore's theater.

The Marx Brothers' show, "Animal Crackers," is authorized by George S. Kaufman, Morrie Ryskind and the team of Malmar and Ruby.

The business girl strained a practiced ear to catch the first sound of the approach of the elevated train. Only the previous morning the boss had warned her she must be on time or else—There it was. The train was coming fast and it certainly seemed unusually speedy to the anxious girl. The only thing to do was to sprint, and with a mad rush, which displayed athletic training, the girl took a few long leaps and bounded up the steps two at a time.

Then the change booth. Of course, it just had to happen that the girl didn't have a nickel handy and had to wait for change. Bless the station clerk! The change was all ready, stacked in a neat pile. Now just one more flight of stairs!

Two at a time and pretty well winded by this time, the girl somehow reached the last step. An obliging gentleman, who had passed the girl on the stairs, held open the automatic door.

A few feet more and her job was still safe. If she missed that train her future was seriously in doubt, and then one of her slippers came off. In a flash the problem whether her job was worth the mirth of her fellow-passengers if she appeared with "one shoe on and one shoe off" presented itself. The decision was as quick as the thought. She grabbed her shoe and jumped into the car just as the door closed. Then she hobbled down the aisle, carrying her shoe in her hand, until she found a vacant seat, one at the far end of the car, where the shoe was replaced more or less securely on her foot, and the other passengers started their day with a broad grin.

Continentals are expected to tell stories of bourgeois Americans touring their land for the first time—and seldom disappoint.

This one, though, comes from a New Yorker who interviewed a couple of such tourists as they rested ashore in this city before continuing to the western city that is their headquarters.

"And where did you go?" the New Yorker inquired politely.

"Oh, we went here and there and everywhere all over Europe," replied the rapid talking wife.

"How long were you in Paris?"

"Paris?" And then, turning to the husband, "Did we go to Paris Paul?"

"Sure!" responded Paul, promptly. "Don't you remember that place where they charged us eighty cents for peaches?"

Our Unburied Dead

TEN years can seem like a long, long time.

There are in America today hundreds of thousands of young men, married, holding responsible jobs, finished with their schooling, who were too young to be in service when the armistice ended the World war. The World war, to them, is a distant memory. Even to the rest of us, who were older then and knew something about it, it seems far away, blurred by time.

Yet, in the bramble-grown gullies and ravines of the Meuse-Argonne region, in the over-grown dugouts and machine gun nests of Belleau Wood, and in the tangled region about Chateau Thierry, there are still lying, undiscovered, the bodies of more than 1300 American soldiers who were killed in action.

This is something in the nature of a reminder for all of us.

We tend to put unpleasant experiences out of mind. Whether we gained or lost by them—whether they were closed episodes or left us with new problems to solve—we resolutely go to work to forget them. We tell ourselves, "Well, anyhow, it's OVER."

We have been doing that with the World war.

It is not only the pain and suffering of the war that we must put behind us. We put behind us, also, the vast hopes and high ideals with which we entered the war. We were keyed up, then, to a higher point than we have been able to reach since. We were ready for sacrifices. We had our eyes on an ideal.

And today? Well, we don't like to think about those things. We know that we have somehow missed the ideals and the hopes. We have come down to earth again, and it is uncomfortable to remind ourselves of it. So we try to forget.

But—there are still 1300 unidentified of our soldier dead lying where they fell, on the battlefields that our ideals and our hopes brought into being. And they will not let us forget.

Those 1300 boys, who have lain for 10 years in snow and rain with bits of lead and steel in the dust of their hearts, died for something. They had a dim, possibly confused notion that the world would somehow be a better place because they died. They surrendered themselves to a force that moved the hearts of their country. They paid with their lives for a belief that a new day could be made to dawn on earth.

The rest of us were spared. We lived on, to taste the joys and ecstasies and victories of daily life that those lads missed forever. We were permitted to go on with our work and our play as before.

But with this privilege went a responsibility. To see it "that these heroic dead shall not have died in vain" is our greatest task. Somewhere between 1918 and 1928 we have lost the great vision that sustained these young men on their last march. Nothing—nothing that you can imagine—is more important than that we regain that vision and act on it.

A new dawn was to come. It is up to us. We can, of course, pursue our present course of materialism and do our best to forget all about it. But will it be easy, while 1300 of our dead lie yet unburied?

Graft, and a Duty Every Citizen Owes

IN LOS ANGELES the district attorney has been indicted by a special grand jury on charges of accepting money to "ease up" on the prosecution of wealthy swindlers. In Cleveland the entire election board has been fired for permitting gross vote frauds. In Philadelphia a third of the high police officers have been dismissed for graft. In Chicago new revelations come every day of thuggery and chicanery at last spring's primary election.

Thus does the American democracy continue to demonstrate, day by day, that some kind of drastic medicine is needed pretty badly.

An isolated case of crookedness in public office is easy to understand. Nothing ever will prevent some lone public servant, now and then, from yielding to temptation. But at present we have no isolated cases. We have something that looks very much like an epidemic.

Our first impulse, naturally, is to look for new laws. We must provide extra safeguards at the polls. We must get a better system of checks and balances that will make it harder for district attorneys and policemen to graft. We must do this, that and the other thing, so that we can make a fool-proof system that will let our consciences rest.

Unfortunately, however, reliance on new laws won't do us a particle of good. We have relied on them altogether too much in recent years. That is one reason for the present mess.

We get fine uprisings of civic responsibility every so often; and when we get them we insist on jamming through a new law to remedy matters. This done, we settle back and forget the whole matter, confident that everything will be rosy.

But everything isn't. When respectability goes to sleep, rascality gets busy. And one of the best things American respectability does is sleep.

Why can't we open our eyes and face the truth? Why can't we recognize the fact that as long as we refuse to bother ourselves with our civic and political responsibilities we shall have district attorneys indicted, election boards fired and police officers dismissed for grafting? Why can't we understand that our lofty disdain to take an active, energetic interest in governmental affairs provides the best possible breeding ground for crookedness?

The machinery of our city, state and national governments is all right. We don't need to tinker with it any more. We have nothing and no one to blame for the present scandals except ourselves.

No dishonest man could ever slip into public office, or last a day after he got there, if the honest citizens didn't permit it.

CITY NEEDS MEN OF VISION

The future of a young town is very much like a boy's: almost anything can be made of it, if one tries hard enough.

If the boy be bright, he has a decided advantage over a duller fellow, but if the dull fellow works constantly and the bright one loafs, the dullard eventually will forge ahead. The same thing with the natural advantages that one town possesses over another. What avail natural advantages in they are not put to use?

CARELESS SMOKERS BURDEN TO RAILROADS

Lighted cigars or cigarettes, dropped or carelessly flipped by riders into an obscure corner of street cars, are an outstanding fire menace to the electric railway industry, causing it to carry policies totaling almost $750,000,000.

Efforts by the industry in recent years to induce smokers to be more careful in tossing away their smokes and the vigilance of employes in detecting discarded "butts" have combined to reduce the losses.

Tales of Real Dogs

By Albert Payson Terhune

MIKE, "The Houdini of Dogdom"

I am giving him the title, "The Houdini of Dogdom," which the newspapers of that time accorded to him. But to me there is nothing comic or other than pathetic in his dramatic little story.

His name was Mike. He was a friendly-faced spaniel, whose expression seemed always to hint at a placating smile. He was eager to be friends with the whole wide world of humans. He was genfle, and a splendid chum and pet.

He was owned by George Urbanski of 31 Cliff street, Buffalo, N. Y. Urbanski does not seem to have been an ideal owner for such a dog, but Mike did not know that. If his master was not always kind or even humane in his actions toward the dog, Mike had not the wit to resent it. The man was his god, whether a good or a bad god.

Then, for reasons best known to himself, Urbanski decided he didn't want Mike any longer, and that he would get rid of the loving spaniel in the quickest and least troublesome way.

So Urbanski hunted up a stout bag—which, luckily was not quite stout enough—and slung it over his shoulder and whistled to Mike. Delighted at this prospect of a walk, the spaniel frisked along ahead of the man until they came to a pond in the suburbs of Buffalo.

There, Urbanski opened the bag, picked up Mike and dropped him into it. After which he tied the neck of the bag. To Mike this was all a part of a jolly game. His master was not in the habit of playing games with him, and Mike entered into the spirit of this new pastime.

Naturally, there was not much fun in being stuffed into a smelly sack and having its drawstring tied above his head. But evidently it was the master's idea of humor, so the spaniel did not make any objection to it.

Next, Urbanski whirled the heavy bag twice around, to give it impetus, and tossed it far out into the pond. Into the ice- chill water splashed the laden sack, and sank beneath the surface.

Urbanski's work was done. With almost no trouble at all he had gotten rid of the friendly little dog that loved him. (It is usually horribly easy to get rid of the things that love one.) Urbanski turned away and went home alone.

But Mike was not ready to give up life so meekly. He had permitted the man to put him into the sack and to tie him up in it. He had even permitted him to toss the bag into the pond. But when the bag sank and the cold water rushed in and began to strangle him, that was quite another matter.

Friendly and gentle though he was, Mike had plenty of spirit and plenty of wit and plenty of strength. Instead of resigning himself to death or struggling wildly, he set to work to get out of the death-bag.

Frantically, yet with shrewd method, he ripped at the sacking and rent it with his keen teeth. He tore a hole in the side of the bag and then he kept tearing further at it until it was big enough for him to wriggle through.

Remember, please, that all this time Mike was at the bottom of the pond, not only fastened tight in the sack but with water gushing down his throat and nostrils, strangling him. It takes a cool head and a staunch courage to work calmly under such terrible conditions.

The boy rescued him.

Yet Mike did not falter, nor lose his head. He worked himself out of the sack, at the pond-bottom (Do you wonder the newspapers called him "The Houdini of Dogdom"?) and at last, half-drowned, he fought his way to the surface and swam ashore.

Barely waiting to shake the water out of his coat he scampered homeward in search of the dear master he loved. He reached the house almost as soon as did Urbanski. The dog either did not connect the man with the attempted drowning or else he loved him well enough to risk another such experience for the sake of being with him.

Urbanski was disgusted at his own failure. He resolved he would not fail a second time. He got another bag and went once more to the pool, taking Mike along. There the man chose two big and heavy rocks from the shore and weighted the sack with them.

Then he dropped Mike again into the sack, tying the drawstring and hurling the bag out into the deepest water. Satisfied that he had made a successful job of the drowning, this time, Urbanski returned home. Down at the bottom of the pond-mud, Mike fought heroically to get himself out of the murder trap.

How he succeeded in ripping and rending his way out of the stone-weighted sack, down there in the depths, is still a mystery. But it called for almost more endurance and strength than the brave dog possessed.

Finally, he wriggled out of the sack and reached the surface. But the effort had been too much for him. He had not strength enough left to swim ashore. He was sinking when a 14-year-old boy, Dionysius Hojnacki, waded out and rescued him.

Hojnacki carried the exhausted dog to the local Humane society, where Mike was sheltered and fed and allowed to rest until he was well once more. But the strain had been so great that the dog was not on his feet again for 10 days.

Meanwhile, several things had been happening. The newspapers printed his story, and the law got after his inhuman master. Judge Standart fined Urbanski $50 for cruelty to animals. This in the city court to which Urbanski had been haled and where he was received with no enthusiasm at all by the onlookers.

Miss Elsie Watsort of Woodward avenue, Springfield, N. Y., had read of Mike's sufferings, and she applied to the Erie county S. P. C. A. for permission to adopt the spaniel. Before she had had him for a day she declared he was a perfect chum and that she wanted to keep him always.

Thus, after experiences that would have killed nine dogs out of ten, Mike came into his reward and to safety and happiness. The S. P. C. A. also thanked and rewarded the Hojnacki boy who had saved the spaniel's life and who had brought Urbanski to justice.

MORAN AND MACK

Moran: Well, I guess youse glad the ELECTION'S over.

Mack: WHAT election?

Moran: For president.

Mack: Have they started THAT again?

Moran: Do you mean to say you didn't know they was voting for president of this country?

Mack: What country?

Moran: THIS country. This UNITED country. Don't you know they means AMERICA when they talks about us being united?

Mack: Is THAT what it was? I thought they meant the CIGAR stores.

Moran: Well, what is we going to eat for Thanksgivin'?

Mack: I don't want to SCARE you none, but it looks like the BIGGEST is goin' to eat the LITTLEST. Who started this Thanksgivin' business, anyway?

Moran: Well, Ambrose, the president appoints th' day.

Mack: I knows a better idea than THAT.

Moran: What's the idea, Oscar?

Moran: They should let us pick our OWN day and let the PRESIDENT appoint the TURKEY.

(Big Boy bobs up with a good idea. For a while it looked as if he was going to turn cannibal and eat Ferdinand all up. When you stop to think of it, it ain't a bad scheme for the president to appoint the turkey. But if the president changes his mind and nominates a sardine it looks as if Ferdinand will be America's Good Will Ambassador to the nearest bread line.)

THRIFT

The squirrel stores his food away
Against the bleak and icy day;
He doesn't trust a bit to chance,
But hoards his victuals like the ants.

Were I a squirrel, I could be
As thrifty and as close as he;
His food is free, but you can bet
I have to pay for all I get!
Proving that mortals have to buck
The odds of chance, and trust to luck. —John Self Elliott.

The INN of the HAWK and RAVEN

By George Barr McCutcheon

COPYRIGHT, GEORGE BARR MCCUTCHEON, NEWSPAPER SERVICE, NEW YORK.

CHARACTERS

GERANE, only daughter of JONIFER THE HAWK, a robber chieftain who is planning a raid on a rich merchant who is to pass along the King's highway, begs to be allowed to accompany the bandits. Her father commands her to remain at home.

She catches up with the rear guard and proceeds with it.

Julius Broadaxe, one of her father's trusted lieutenants, takes her to him. He is so delighted to know that she is safe that he forgets to punish her.

The COUNTESS KATRANE JABASSY, her husband and a small band of confederates, all of whom live quietly in Edelweiss. Least of all does any one suspect the relationship between the countess and the bandit chief, who were separated as children, after a political upheaval involving their family. The Countess Katrane, learning that a rich merchant, Leopold Mathias, is to pass through the forest with a fortune in gems that are destined for sale in the capitals of Europe, sends the information to her brother.

INSTALLMENT VII.

Mr. Leopold Mathias felt himself suddenly turn to ice. The robbers! The robbers! Where—where were those dragoons and that supercilious English—

The voice continued, cold, calm, diabolically distinct.

"Your are covered by two score guns. Look about you. Turn your eyes, but do not move your bodies. Behold death on every side. If you would like to live to go back and tell your comrades that you have had the pleasure of meeting Jonifer Davos and his robbers of Droon and found them to be peaceable gentlemen, make no attempt to draw weapons."

Mr. Mathias groaned.

"A single move, a single command, and there will be dead men lying where you are now standing. In the wink of an eye—puff! It will be all over. Now, then, Captain, a few words with the occupant of yon coach and you may proceed with your preparations for the morning meal. You will not be disturbed again. Ho! What is this? By all the saints, does Mr. Leopold Mathias still lie abed? Hallos! Mr. Mathias! Arouse yourself. You have customers."

It should go without saying that Mr. Mathias failed to appreciate the robber chieftain's wit. He was not asleep. As a matter of fact, after popping up his night-capped head for a peep through the window, he now had it buried under a pile of garments, from which issued a series of muffled moans.

Now what Mr. Mathias beheld in the pale, dull gray of dawn was this: Men in the colorful garb of royal soldiers, stationed here and there in close proximity to the coach, their hands on high, their bodies as stiff as ramrods; his own clerk on his knees, his servant standing half-way across the glen, a pail of water in one hand, the other aloft; the handsome Captain Starcourt, coatless and bareheaded, standing very straight and rigid beside the coach, one hand unlifted, while the other reached toward his hip, where his pistol would have been, were it not reposing with his coat and cap and saber on a stump a few feet away; and on every side, completely dominating the picture, a thousand or more appalling figures in cloaks and masks, pointing guns at him (Leopold Mathias) and not at the cowardly wretches who were pledged to suffer a glorious death in his defense. He took it all in at a glance and then ducked his head.

His moans redoubled in volume as the coach-door swung open.

"Come out!" was the command that reached his ears.

An iron hand gripped one of his ankles so tightly that he squealed. He felt himself being yanked through the door, scattering parcels, bags, and raiment as he went. Expecting to land on the ground with a thump, he squeezed his eyes tight and momentarily ceased his moaning. But, to his surprise, other hands caught him in midair, it seemed, and he was deposited on his feet.

"Oh," he quaked, without opening his eyes. "Do not shoot! I surrender! I have them up!" His hands flew up above his night-capped head. An instant later ruthless hands were going through his pockets, feeling his waist-band and trouser legs. Ordinarily Mr. Mathias was ticklish. But he was not ticklish now. He did not twist and squirm and howl with laughter.

Gradually he became aware of the fact that conversation was going on about him. He opened his eyes. Two masked individuals were searching him. His gaze finally fixed itself upon Captain Starcourt and a tall person who stood in front of the young man. In one of his hands were the most enormous pistols Mr. Mathias had ever seen. This person was speaking.

Mr. Mathias was conscious of bags and chests and bundles being tossed to the ground behind him, but he did not turn his head. He was fascinated by the scene before him. The dozen troopers still had their hands above their heads; motionless, fantastically garbed phantoms were still sighting over long rifle-barrels; but, strange to say, their numbers had dwindled from a thousand-odd to a paltry score or so. Mr. Mathias felt wratful. Only a score or so! A mere handful of—

But the tall fellow, evidently the leader, was saying:

"True enough, my young friend—true enough. But, even so, who can say the fault is yours? I daresay you would prefer death to—well, I would not call it disgrace, if I were you. What chance had you? Suddenly, from every tree in the glen, spring men with guns. You are surrounded. Of what avail is valor when it can end only in death? And without gain. No, my gallant Captain, I cannot shoot you. We are not assassins. We are gentlemen. That is to say, in times of peace we are gentlemen, and never have I known a more peaceful occasion than this."

"I am everlastingly dishonored," groaned the young officer. "How can I return to my chief and confess my—confess that this—"

"What is there to confess? Once a great general led his troops into a carefully-laid ambush. Three-fourths of his men were killed. He and a few others escaped. Did he go back to his kind and confess that he had done a dishonorable thing? He went back with his head up, his jaw set and his eyes full of purpose. And, in due time, he led another force into the land of the enemy and brought him to his knees. That, sir, is how a great general swallowed his pill. You ask me to shoot you. You think that would be a brave way out of your trouble? On the contrary, it would be the most cowardlily. Would you have these men of yours think of you as a coward?"

Starcourt's face brightened. A happy thought had struck him.

"There is a way to prove to my men that I am not a coward," he cried. With the quickness of a cat he whirled and sprang toward his weapons.

The suddenness of the act took Jonifer Davos by surprise. Uttering a shout of warning, he fired. To his astonishment, he missed! The next instant Starcourt had recovered his pistol and had pointed it full at the breast of the robber chief.

"I'll rid the world of you before I die," he shouted.

Jonifer threw up his hands, dropping his pistol.

"Stop!" he cried.

"If you fire," went on Jonifer, "it will mean the death of every man in your command. Don't be a fool!" Turning his head, he called: "If this man shoots, kill every one of them!"

For ten—fifteen—twenty seconds, there was a sound, not a move. Jonifer folded his rams across his breast. The men engaged in stripping the coach had ceased their hurried labors to stare; even Leopold Mathias, startled by the shot, gazed wide-eyed. The captain of the dragoons lowered his weapon.

"I give in," said he, slowly. "Do what you please with me, but—spare these men of mine."

Jonifer was silent for a moment. Then he said: "You must have been born under a lucky star. I never missed the mark before. It is fate that you should live, I suppose."

"To return, as the general did, to bring my conqueror to his knees," said Starcourt.

"Even so," responded the robber chieftain gruffly. "Keep your pistol, Captain. You may have been coward enough, for a moment or two, to want me to shoot you, but you are cowardly enough to shoot yourself."

He strode toward the merchant, who began to curse the Captain of the Duke's Dragoons.

"What am I paying you for?" he was sputtering. "Dragoons? Bah! You are cowards. And as for you, you English dog—you—you have not the backbone of a worm. Why do you not turn upon these rascals and do your duty? What are you here for? Why—"

"Shut up!" commanded Starcourt. "Ha! You—you tell me to shut up, eh? You—you young upstart! If I were not about to lose—to lose a fortune—I should laugh—yes, I should roar with laughter. See! Look! All of my diamonds and pearls and—"

"Shut up!" roared Jonifer Davos, standing over him. "Would you have your gullet slit?"

"No! No!" squeaked Leopold Mathias.

"Then do as your captain orders—shut up! Come, men! Search that coach. Leave nothing behind. On with it!" Whirling he called out sharply to the men who still had their guns leveled at the helpless troppers. "Disarm them. Bring the thongs. Make haste."

His gaze went suddenly towards the glen. Then he smiled, his white teeth gleaming. He was vastly pleased and relieved.

His daughter Gerane, safe among the trees, had seen the most bloodless, unsanguinary entertainment ever staged by the robbers of Droon Forest—and over there, in a heap on the ground, were her birthday presents, the richest haul the net had yielded in a score of years.

Jonifer was happy.

Health And Diet Advice

By DR. FRANK McCOY

Author of "The Fast Way to Health"

Questions in regard to health and diet will be answered by Dr. McCoy who can be addressed in care of this paper

Some Thoughts on Cooking

Even in the earliest historical and mythological records, we find cookery mentioned. Through the course of these many hundreds of generations the digestive system of man has undoubtedly accustomed itself to cooked foods. In fact, most civilized human beings, upon attempting to live entirely upon raw foods, notice pronounced gastric disturbances because of the increased difficulty in digesting vegetable foods not previously softened or sterilized by heat. Some foods, such as string beans, peas, wheat, artichokes and brussels sprouts, may be eaten raw, but their flavor and digestibility are improved by cooking.

The purpose of cooking food is not only to increase its digestibility and improve its flavor, but to kill dangerous organisms, which can be destroyed even at a low temperature at 150 degress Fahrenheit—a temperature far below the boiling point.

It is unfortunate that the entire development of the art of cookery in the past has been more influenced by flavor than by nutritional value. Many of the complicated modern dishes are indigestible abominations. Fortunately, many chefs are now making a study of dietetics, and a few dietitians are making a study of the art of cookery so that some day we may look forward to restaurant food which is not only appetizing but wholesome as well.

An untrained cook can spoil perfectly wholesome food and render it either valueless or actually harmful by improper preparation, whereas, a scientifically trained chef increases the nutritive elements of almost every food by breaking up the tougher particles and dissolving the cellular portions so that they can be more readily acted upon by the chemicals within the digestive tract.

The evils of bad cooking are far-reaching and may lead to disease, a craving for drink and stimulants, indigestion, headaches, and mental melancholia which may so interfere with the life and personality of an individual as to result in financial failure and early death. It is not surprising then that the victims of poor cooking turn to stimulants, such as alcohhol, coffee, tobacco, drink and candy.

Under-nourished people are over fed, but are still starving for the right foods out of which they can secure the proper elements to build and repair their bodily tissues. Craving something else, their appetites try to secure satisfaction by the use of sweets. This is particularly true of the earnest student of dietetics who in his experimental years may attempt to live on an exclusive uncooked diet. The craving for sweets seems to be always present and is never satisfied, and in place of deliberately choosing a good steak he will invariably fill up between meals on ice cream, candy and soda drinks.

To cook properly it is necessary to have a clear understanding of the effects of heat on various foods. For instance, vegetable and animal proteins are coagulated at a temperature of 178 degrees Fahrenheit, far below the boiling point, which is 212 degress Fahrenheit. When a piece of meat is heated far above this point it is hardened and shriveled and its digestibility proportionately lessened.

Heat applied to dry starchy food will convert into soluble form of dextrin, and when applied to wet starch cause it to swell and burst the cellulose coverings which surround the starch granules so that the digestive juices of the saliva and pancreas may more readily penetrate. Even this process of breaking down cellulose may occur at temperature points below the boiling. 190 degrees Fahrenheit is sufficient to break down any starchy structure.

Fats are less affected by heat than the proteins and starches, but it is true that when they are subjected to an excessively high degree of temperature, some portions of fatty acids are liberated which make them more irritating to the stomach than cold or uncooked fats.

FAVORITE JOKES OF FAMOUS FOLK

As Told by Them to FRANK E. NICHOLSON

By ALFRED C. JOHNSTON

Ten years ago Alfred Cheney Johnston, now acclaimed one of the world's foremost portrait photographers, chucked his career as a painter just at a time when critics were speaking of him in terms of Gainsborough, Ramsey and Reynolds and traded his brushes and paint for a camera. His first big assignment was for a study of Clara Kimball Young. That landed an avalanche of commissions for stage and society work, which led to the present Johnston-Ziegfeld combination—by which the American girl is photographically reproduced in all her glory.

A. C. Johnston

"I like the story," Johnston told me, "of a little old lady in lavender who dispensed sweetness and goodness on her missions of mercy in the state of Indiana.

"She had a habit of walking through the streets, stopping at a corner where some urchin seemed to be in trouble. She would question him, and attempt to straighten out his difficulties.

"One day she happened upon a little boy who sat upon a curbstone crying as if his little heart would break. The lady stooped down and took his hand in hers. 'There, there, sonny, don't cry,' she said. 'Tell mammy what the trouble is.'

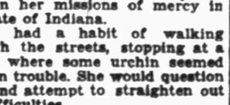

"'Boooo-oo-oo,' wailed the youngster. 'My daddy is in jail!'

"'Well, don't cry,' soothed the kind woman. 'I can fix that up!'

"A smile shown through the youngsters tears. 'How?' he beamed.

"'Well, I'll use my influence with the governor and everything'll be fine—he's a particular friend of mine.'

"'Booo-oo-oo,' the little boy was off again. 'It won't do no good—my papa is the governor!'"

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Pot Bellied

Question: Mrs. G. F. P. writes: "My baby took ultraviolet ray treatments all last winter for rickets and seems to be cured, but her abdomen extends out and she is sort of "pot bellied." Should a support be worn to correct this, and if so what kind? She also has flat feet. How can that be cured? She is 18 months old.

Answer: Your child should have a diet of pure Holstein milk, each feeding to be preceded by a plentiful amount of orange juice. In six months or so some non-starchy vegetables, such as spinach and carrots should be added to the diet. Keep up the ultra violet treatments occasionally but you must depend upon correct dieting for a permanent cure. An abdominal support will not help any, but the abdominal distention can be corrected when your child is old enough to take the proper exercises. This is also true about flat feet. Send your full name and address on a large stamped envelope, and I will send you special articles on developing a flat abdomen, and also for curing fallen arches.

Orange Juice as Blood Purifier

Question: R. B. asks: "Is orange juice good for the blood?"

Answer: An exclusive orange juice fast is a valuable blood purifier. Oranges are best used by themselves rather than with other foods.

Twitching of Eyelids

Question: C. A. S. writes: "Be kind enough to advise what you would recommend for spasm of the eyelids. Have had this for over a year, but the last few months it has shown a marked improvement, in fact, disappeared almost entirely, but now seems to be about as bad as when it started."

Answer: First, go to an optometrist and wear glasses if he advises you to. If the fault is not with eye strain, it is caused by nervousness and enervation which can be cured through strict abherence to the hygenic rules for healthful living which I recommend in this column each day.

VERNON AND AMARILLO PLAY TODAY FOR DISTRICT GRID TITLE

SANDIES' FIELD SCENE OF TILT

Olney At Archer City In Championship Affair

The championship of class A, district No. 1, of the state prep football league, will be at stake today. Coach Weir's Vernon Lion "wonder team" will invade Amarillo to meet the Golden Sandstorm of the Panhandle town in the most important day contest in this section.

Amarillo and Vernon are sole undefeated leaders of the district class A elevens and their battle should be a corker. A special train will carry several hundred followers of the Lions from Vernon and they are making preparations for a crowd of 8,000 at Amarillo.

Another important game in this section will be played today at Archer City, with Olney the visiting team. This affair will decide the class B title in the southern half of district No. 3.

Other Important Games

There are other games of titular bearing to be played this afternoon by schoolboy gridders. The Lamesa Tornadoes, unbeaten in class B in its district, meet the Slaton Tigers on their home field. Stamford plays as Anson, the winner to meet Sweetwater for the class B honors in district No. 9.

Burkburnett's excellent team plays Henrietta's fast club at Burkburnett. Strawn plays at Graham. Ralls at Crosbyton and Hamlin at Haskell in other games in this area.

Amarillo will be a strong favorite to defeat Vernon. The Sandies have an unbroken string of easy victories to date while two of the Lions triumphs were gained by close scores. Amarillo defeated Plainview, 95-0; Quanah, 102-0 and Lubbock 32-6. Vernon beat Plainview, 25-0; Wichita Falls 12-7 and Electra, 7-6.

Vernon Ready for Game

Vernon, which started the season with only two lettermen, has shown fighting spirit and alertness, however and the Lions are expected to give the Sandies somewhat a surprise in a very close game.

The Archer City-Olney game involves two of the foremost elevens of class B in the state. Both teams have won their previous games impressively. Pre-game calculations rate them about even and a gruelling, sensational contest is in prospect in this affair.

The complete schedule of games for today as announced by Roy B. Henderson, athletic director of the University of Texas League bureau, follows:

Vernon at Amarillo, Ranger at Cisco, Sherman at Faris, Texarkana at Marshall, Nacogdoches at Lufkin, Port Arthur at Beaumont, Austin at Brackenridge (San Antonio), Corpus Christi at Laredo, Spearman at Dalhart, Slaton at Lamesa, Ralls at Crosbyton, Commerce at Farmerville, Celeste at Bonham, Rockwall, at Royce City, Grand Saline at Mineola, Stamford at Anson, Colorado at Big Spring, Hamlin at Haskell.

(By The Associated Press)

Although he has not added a point to his total for two weeks, Redman Hume of S. M. U. still leads his nearest competitor in the race for conference scoring honors by more than 100 per cent. Hume's total of 84 is more than double Griffith's of T. C. U., which is 38.

Saturday's games made little change in the first ten positions. Zarafonetis of A. and M. and Conover of the same school climbed back among the first ten by their work Saturday against S. M. U.

To date, conference teams have scored 147 touchdowns, one field goal and 75 points after touchdown. Hume leads among the touchdown scores with 13, Zarafonetis, with 10 points after touchdown leads that division and Potter of Baylor is the only man in the conference who has negotiated a field goal.

Team scoring records did not increase greatly Saturday. Twice as many touchdowns were scored in the S. M. U.-Aggies game as were scored in the rest of the conference. Team scoring records of the Southwest conference rated on basis of total points:

School—	W.	L.	T.	P.	O.P.
S. M. U.	6	1	1	221	61

DAILY DOPE

By LARRY DAILEY

THE MORNING AFTER the night before yesterday found a flock of football teams wondering what and how it happened. While there had been upsets previous to Saturday, there was nothing to compare with the overthrow of favored teams last week. In all sections, mighty and unbeaten teams bowed to adversaries of inferior rating and today there is hardly a team in the country that stands out with an impressive claim to the mythical national title.

The reversal of form was marked right here in the Southwestern conference. The S. M. U. Mustangs, sole unbeaten and untied leaders of the conference, were fought to a 19-19 tie by a determined and inspired Texas Aggie team. It was evident that the absence of Hume, their brilliant back, was felt by the Ponies. But great credit must be accorded the Farmers for playing the Mustangs to a standstill.

TEXAS FINALLY got an even share of the breaks of the game and defeated a young Baylor club, 6 to 0, by about the margin anticipated. The Longhorns outplayed the Bears decisively but not overwhelmingly and the touchdown was just about an indication of the superiority of the Steers. T. C. U. defeated Rice as was expected, but the holding of the Frogs to a 7-0 count was a lower score than anticipated.

THEY PLAYED true to form down South. Georgia Tech defeated Vanderbilt in a manner to leave no doubt as to their superiority, by 19 to 7, and if there is a team with any claim to top ranking nationally it is the Tornado. Florida's powerful team, which like Georgia Tech is unbeaten and untied, defeated Georgia, 26 to 6 and remains to contest the Tornadoes' claims to the southern title. Tennessee ran a crusher over poor Sewanee, which has lost every important game by big scores, 38-0. Tulane bested Auburn by one point, 13-12. Virginia Poly won a somewhat surprising victory over Virginia, 20-0.

Nebraska, one of the few remaining teams with clean slates, showed its power to the chagrin of Oklahoma supporters. The powerful Cornhuskers romped to a 44-6 triumph at Norman to further demonstrate their right to rate as one of the country's foremost elevens. Marquette defeated Kansas, 7 to 0. Missouri outplayed Kansas Aggies for a 19-6 win.

IOWA MAINTAINED its unsmirched escutcheon, and is sole unbeaten and untied leader of the Western conference, with a 14-7 triumph over Ohio State. Wisconsin, which hasn't been defeated but has a 19-19 tie with Purdue that it can't laugh off, trounced Chicago, 25 to 0, the Maroons thus again failing to win or tie a conference game this season. Northwestern and Purdue fought evenly, as anticipated, the Purple winning by the margin of a point after touchdown, 7 to 6. Minnesota beat Indiana, 21 to 12. Illinois bested Butler, 14-0, in a non-conference game.

GREATEST UPSETS of the day and one that was the most astounding overthrow of the dope this season occurred on Eastern gridirons. Army's hitherto undefeated and seemingly invincible veterans, led by Red Cagle, ranked as an outstanding backfield star of several seasons, went to defeat before the fighting and resourceful Notre Dame eleven, 12 to 6. Notre Dame, defeated this season by Wisconsin and Georgia Tech, achieved the heights of greatness in turning back the team that had been rated as strongest of them all. Although Cagle ran wild in waning minutes of the game, the desperate assault of the Cadets was launched too late. The wizardry of that master mind of football, Knute Rockne, was ever apparent in the play of the Irish, who bewildered the Army with its slashing smashes and aerial attack. The Army lost when a 35-yard forward pass was carried over for the decisive touchdown. Recalling that S. M. U. fought the Cadets to a standstill by use of the overhead game it is apparent that the Army is NOT a great team and that inability to combat a forward passing attack in the hands of masters is its weakness. And it is significant that the two teams which played the Army even or better were NOT of the East but one from the Southwest and the other from the Middle West. And that those two teams based their attack on open football and mainly, the forward pass.

PENNSYLVANIA flashed unexpected power in defeating a highly-rated Harvard team, 7 to 0. Maryland, regarded as hardly more than a setup, vanquished a strong Yale eleven, 6 to 0. Dartmouth, fading away rapidly from its once high estate, lost its third game of the year, this to Brown, by 14 to 0. Little Ohio Wesleyan, which had beaten Michigan earlier in the year, overthrew another favorite in its defeat of Syracuse. Lafayette beat Rutgers. New York ran up 71-0 against Alfred. West Virginia buried Oklahoma Aggies under a 32-6 count. Williams beat Wesleyan 16-13 in a "little three' engagement. Holy Cross beat Boston university, 15-0. Penn State crushed George Washington, 50-0. George Washington has not scored a single point all season. Bucknell whaled Lehigh, 40-0. Princeton defeated Washington and Lee, 25-12. Columbia eked out a 14-13 win over Johns Hopkins. Navy and Michigan, which have had disappointing seasons, played a 6 to 6 tie that was of interest in its intersectional angle. Another double header proved disastrous to the team, or teams, attempting to play two games, Cornell losing to Knox college from Illinois, 14-7 and playing a scoreless tie with St. Bonaventure.

There was no upset in the far West. But Washington rated far inferior to California, flashed unexpected power in holding the Bears to 6-0. Stanford ran up a 31-0 count on Santa Clara and Southern California piled up a heavy count on Arizona. Utah, unbeaten leaders of the Rocky Mountain conference, played a 7-7 tie with Creighton at Omaha.

CARNEGIE TECH, one of the half dozen major clubs which hasn't been defeated or tied, advances a claim to the Eastern championship, and with no little right. The Skibos beat Georgetown Saturday, 13 to 0. Georgetown had not been beaten or tied until that game.

Henry Williams, One-Armed Driver Of Wichita Falls, Wins Auto Race

Pilots Whippet to Victory in 100-Mile Grind Here, George Barringer Hurt When Car Overturns

Henry Williams of Wichita Falls, a one-armed driver, piloted his Whippet roadster to victory yesterday in the 100-mile stock car auto race at the Texas-Oklahoma fair grounds track. More than 4,000 spectators saw the thrilling and interesting race, which was marked by fast time and near-serious accidents to several drivers.

The only mishap of any serious consequence was sustained by George Barringer of Wichita Falls, driving No. 21, model A Ford. On the 137th lap of the 200-lap grind, the front right wire wheel of Barringer's machine collapsed and the car rolled over twice. Barringer was rushed to a hospital and several stitches were required to close a gash over an eye. He escaped other injuries.

Four cars left the track and ployed through the fences during the course of the race but none of the drivers was hurt and the cars were damaged but little.

Williams, known as "Wingy" to his fellow-drivers, negotiated the 100 miles on the half-mile oval in the excellent time of two hours and 13 minutes. He drove the entire distance without relief and stopped at the pits but twice.

J. Y. Davis of Duncan, Okla., driving a Hudson roadster, was second. Other drivers to finish in the money were Leo Rice, Duncan, Okla., Oldsmobile coupe, third; Earl Hovington, Oklahoma City, Chevrolet roadster, fourth; J. F. Jones, Hydro, Okla., model A Ford, fifth.

Sam Jewell of Duncan led for the first 30 laps of the race when his car left the track due to a broken connecting tie rod. Earl Hovington, who has been pushing Jewell hard, then took the lead, which he held to the 154th lap, when he was forced to the pits with a broken wheel. He reentered the race and finished fourth.

Williams kept within striking distance of Jewell and Hovington and when the latter was forced out was in a position to move up in the van and to stay there.

It was said by officials of the race that about 90 per cent of the spectators were from out of town and about 50 per cent of those from Oklahoma. The success of yesterday's race presages other speed events to be held here next summer, opening with the first race Decoration day.

Stock car races, under the same management and with practically the same drivers who competed yesterday, will be held today at Duncan.

Cr-r-rack! a split cylinder block

Will that happen to your motor while you sleep tonight?

IT may come any time—cold that swoops down in the night to ruin expensive motors.

Every year the story is the same. Owners put off getting Denatured Alcohol until it's too late—because they don't want to bother, or feel optimistic, or forget. Cars unprotected—left overnight in unheated garages, allowed to stand outside theatres, parked for an hour or so somewhere, until the mercury drops—and drops.

Next day repair shops buzz with activity, soldering broken radiators, welding split cylinder blocks. And hundreds of owners dig down into aching pocket-books to pay bills that range as high as $400. An unexpected cost—the kind that hurts. The price of a foolish, thoughtless gamble.

Will you be faced by such a repair bill?

It's so simple to avoid it. Stop at your dealer's today and get him to put Denatured Alcohol in your radiator. Don't wait—tonight may be the night.

Use Denatured Alcohol early enough, use it often enough,* use it late enough. It's the one sure way to play safe.

Why every car manufacturer approves DENATURED ALCOHOL

Denatured Alcohol is the only anti-freeze approved by every manufacturer of water-cooled cars. Most manufacturers approve it exclusively. There are five very definite reasons for that.

1. Denatured Alcohol is more economical. An entire winter's supply costs considerably less than any other anti-freeze.

2. Denatured Alcohol is more convenient to buy. You don't have to shop for it. Any dealer can supply you.

3. Denatured Alcohol does not seep out as other preparations have a marked tendency to do.

4. Denatured Alcohol will not harm your motor. It does not corrode or eat the metal and rubber of the cooling system as many chemical preparations do.

5. Denatured Alcohol is simpler to use than any other anti-freeze. It does not require the special adjustment and tightening of the motor needed with most other anti-freeze preparations.

Let your dealer put Denatured Alcohol in your radiator today (he knows the correct amount), and get from him an additional supply to keep in your garage for emergency use.

W. T. C. C. PLANS NEW TERRACING

Conference With Colleges Is Proposed

Special to The Record News.

STAMFORD, Texas, Nov. 11.—The practicability of terracing agricultural and grazing lands in West Texas is receiving serious consideration at the hands of the agricultural committee of the West Texas Chamber of Commerce. Col. R. L. Penick of Stamford, chairman of the committee, as well as the executive officers of the organization, are giving this important subject most careful study with a view of outlining a program that will advance the interest in soil conservation.

In line with this idea, negotiations are pending for a conference of chamber of commerce workers, and the extension department of the A. and M. college, as well as the Texas Technological college, which will seek co-ordinated efforts of all possible agencies.

"I believe," said Col. Penick, in discussing this subject, "that if there had been anything like a practical program of terracing this year, the loss to crops by reason of drouth in Central Texas counties this year would have been minimized 50 per cent. No man can view the experiments in soil conservation that have been conducted at Spur for the past few years by the A. and M. college without being a thorough convert upon this line of endeavor. It is an inexpensive procedure, and no better investment could be made.

Men Students Become More Interested in Art

FORT WORTH, Nov. 11. (INS)—Men students are becoming more and more interested in art, in the opinion of Prof. S. P. Ziegler, head of the art department at Texas Christian university here.

"Several years ago a boy in an art class was a rarity," Prof Zeigler said. "Now we have a number of boys enrolled and they are taking their work seriously as a profession."

One of Prof. Ziegler's students, Quinn Buck of Crosbyton, recently received first prize for a painting which he exhibited at the Panhandle-South Plains fair at Lubbock. Buck has accumulated considerable original work and recently held a private exhibit in his home town.

WOMEN BOOST USE OF PLANES

Lady Heath Says Fair Sex Hallmark of Aviation

NEW YORK, Nov. 11. (UP)—"The entry of woman is the sterling hall-mark on aviation," Lady Heath, one of the leading women aviators of the world, said today in giving her opinion on the future of the airplane.

"Women," she said, "do not enter a field unless there is evidence of stability and development. The entry of women into the field of flying is their vote of confidence and, as such, is of no small importance in the progress of aviation."

Her First Visit

Lady Heath, a tall slender woman athletic, yet ultra-graceful figure, furnishes the background for a personality that sparkles, is on her first visit to the United States.

In three years of experience as an airplane pilot she has covered the European continent, and flown, from Capetown, South Africa, to London in a tiny Moth plane powered with only a four cylinder, 90 horsepower motor. In all she has spent more than 1,200 hours at the controls of a plane in three years.

Today she came to America, planning to "learn" from American pilots, "gain familiarity with the country and interest the women of the United States in flying."

Several days ago her plane, a tiny De Haviland Gypsy Moth, sister plane to the one in which she made her African flight, was shipped from England to Hadley field, N. J., where it now awaits her.

In this plane she plans to fly from city to city throughout the country, spreading the "gospel" of aviation and trying to interest women in flying.

Appeals to Women

"I am here to learn what I can of American methods in aviation," she said. "But more than that I am here to attempt to arouse in the women of the United States that interest in flying which is so essential to the success of aviation.

"On my flights I hope always to carry a passenger. Preferably some one who has shown no great interest in flying. In this way I hope to interest many Americans in the practicability of aviation, and to accomplish some good through my visit."

Lady Heath, whose soft brogue speaks of county Limerick, Ireland, where she has born 31 years ago, spoke highly of the women fliers America has produced in the past few years. She cited especially Amelia Earhart and Phoebe Fairgraves Omlie.

"I am looking forward to meeting Mrs. Omelie," she said. "I consider her one of the best of the women pilots and have followed her activities with great interest. Her feat of flying a Monocoupe around the western rim of the United States, alone, was second to none."

100 SHRINERS GO ON TREK

Wichitans Visit Vernon And Childress

Wichita Falls Shriners and their families who journeyed to Childress and Vernon Friday and Saturday, returned to Wichita Falls Sunday afternoon.

About 100 were in the party which included the working units of Maskat temple. The Wichitans had the honor of being the first party of guests to occupy the new Hotel Childress.

In Childress Saturday the Maskat band gave a concert which was followed by work by the drill team. A barbecue at fair park and a concert by the Maskat chanters in fair park auditorium followed. Later in the evening a Shrine dance was given in the Elks lodge rooms.

The top floor of the Childress hotel was informally opened in order to take care of the overflow from the Nave hotel.

The Wichitans stopped at Vernon on the return trip to enjoy dinner at the Wilbarger hotel and to give a sacred concert on the street Sunday afternoon. This was followed by a drill by the patrol.

While at Vernon, the following on the trip signed the registration sheet: Lee Haney, Chick Nolen, Eli Morgan, Mr. and Mrs. Lee Faught, C. M. Miller, J. C. Philo, T. S. Thomson, H. C. Donahoo, O. M. Services Held For William Feildschmidt

Funeral services for William Feilschmidt, 31, who died Saturday afternoon in a local hospital, were held Sunday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock from the home of Mrs. Feilschmidt's father, J. Lipsky, 1633 Collins.

Services at the house were conducted by Rabbi S. J. Schwab, while Rabbi Aaron Rabinowitz officiated at the interment in the Jewish rest in Rosemont. A large number of relatives and friends, including many from out of town, attended the services.

Wichita Men Held On Borger Indictments

Phlete Martin Jr., and W. E. Millican, both of Wichita Falls, were arrested Sunday by Sheriff W. G. Bralley on gambling indictments just returned by the Hutchinson county grand jury at Borger.

The arrests, according to Sheriff Bralley, were made at the request of Sheriff Joe Owenby of Borger.

After conferring with the young men, Sheriff Bralley released them on $1,500 bonds to appear at Borger when called there by the Hutchinson county district court.

200,000 to Eat Wichita Falls Turkey on Thanksgiving Day

Plant Here Serves Wide Area in Shipment of Birds to East

When Thanksgiving tables are spread on Nov. 29 with delicious viands assembled from the world over for these home-coming feasts, approximately 200,000 people in and near New York, Boston and Philadelphia will carve their drumsticks and white meat from brown and basted turkeys which are now being assembled in Wichita Falls for the big Thanksgiving pack.

Many of those who will pass back their plates for more Wichita Falls turkey would recognize the gobbler's home town if the sacrificed bird could speak up and name his last address, but there are probably many people in the vicinity of Wichita Falls who have been unaware of the extent of the poultry packing industry at this point.

Since being organized seven years ago, the Wichita Falls Poultry and Egg company has experienced a remarkable increase in output of dressed poultry. Drawing from territory surrounding this city with a radius of 100 miles, and with the most modern equipment for feeding, dressing and cold packing, the local plant has a capacity of from 2,000 to 2,500 turkeys a day. The approach of Thanksgiving is bringing in thousands of these birds, 900 having been the pack on the first day of preparation for eastern shipments last week.

According to Matt A. Noble, manager, the local market will ship more than 300,000 pounds, or approximately 20,000 dressed turkeys, in solid cars, to New York and vicinity for the annual feast day, besides several cars of dressed chickens, each car containing more than 5,000 birds.

The successful transfer of such commodities has been made possible through the use of modern refrigeration. The first car was shipped Sunday night.

World Trade Rapidly Nears Level Maintained Before Crush of War

By MERRYLE STANLEY RUKEYSER

NEW YORK, Nov. 11.—A decade after the armistice, the former belligerents are exerting their major energies in the realm of trade. President-Elect Hoover's projected visit to Latin America will probably not only be a healthy diplomatic gesture, but will no doubt also give increasing impetus to the trade gains of the United States exporters in the republics of the South.

Though growing rapidly at present, international trade for the world as a whole has not yet fully recovered from the retardation caused by the war. The present rate of export growth throughout the world is only one-half of the pre-war rate of increase.

Germany's comeback is the most striking aspect of the foreign trade situation in the last two years, during which time Germany's exports have grown more rapidly than ours. The trade of eight other European contries is expanding almost as rapidly as are Aemircan exports. The allies immediately after the war held the mutually exclusive aims of keeping Germany economically weak and at the same time collecting huge reparations. In the recent years, after the adoption of the Dawes plan, the allies have acquiesced in Germany's economic recovery.

Volume Gains Daily

Two years ago, world trade at length reached the 1.13 proportions. Each year three per cent in volume is being added, compared with 6 per cent in 1913.

The latest figures for 82 nations conducting 95 per cent of the world's trade, according to the National Foreign Trade council, reveal 1927 exports reached $22,664,000,000 at the 1913 value of the dollar. This means that the aggregate trade last year was half what it would have been if its pre-war rate of increase had been uninterrupted. War and post-armistice unsettelment has in 14 years made world exports $145,000,000,000 in 1913 dollars (or more than $200,000,000,000 in present dollars) short of normal progress. Accordingly it is evident that much deferred buying is still to be made up, although some is no doubt lost forever.

The export trade of the 82 nations is now 11 per cent above the 1913 level, whereas that of the United States is 38 per cent higher. the gains in physical volume of exports is even greater than indicated, because there has been a downward trend in prices.

Germany Near Normalcy

Between 1925 and 1927, Germany increased its exports by $317,000,000 or 22 per cent. She is now back to 72 per cent of pre-war trade, and having passed France, is the third largest exporting nation. England's foreign trade, retarded by the coal depression, is now about 95 per cent of the pre-war basis.

France has made the greatest relative strides among the European belligerents. In 1925 her trade was 8 per cent above the 1913 basis, and has susbsequently gained another $86,000,000, bringing 1927 exports about $201,000,000 above the 1913 figures.

Italy raised her exports between 1925 and 1927 by about $80,000,000 at 1913 values, a gain above 1913 of 16 per cent. Sweden shows large percentage gains, but Belgium and Holland are still below the pre-war basis. Russia, despite increases in the two years, is still doing only 60 per cent of the exports carried on in the same territory in 1913.

Like North American, South America has gone steadily forward. Latin American exports in 1927 were 29 per cent in excess of 1913. These figures indicate a shifting of economic world power to the new world.

The largest gross gain for 1927 over 1913 was made by this country—$901,000,000 or 38 per cent. Other nations made greater relative gains. Canada revealed an increase of $364,000,000 or 79 per cent in the Orient, Japan showed an advance of $353,000,000 or 112 per cent.

Socialists Heartened

The Socialist party takes heart from the crushing defeat in the electoral college of the Democratic party, whose funeral dirge it seems ready and happy to sing. Norman Thomas, Socialist candidate for president, quotes with approval a telegram from a supporter saying: "The Socialist party is now the official opposition. Let us go forward." As a matter of fact, however the Socialist party in the United States has not been going forward. The vote in 1928 was little more than half of that received in 1920. Busines leaders have been unwittingly effectively fighting socialism by heightening prosperity, diffusing higher real wages, and encouraging a rise in the standard of living. A party, based on discontent, finds it difficult to thrive when ecnomic conditions are growing better rather than worse. There is a moral in this for responsible leaders of American business.

CHILDREN BURN IN FIRE TRAP

Russian Theater Blaze Claims Many Tots

VORONESH, Russia, Nov. 11. (AP)—Many children lost their lives in a fire which destroyed a moving picture theatre at Khodynetz last night, the exact number being unknown pending a checkup by the authorities. Specially organized crews worked all night extricating charred bodies from the debris.

The fire started in the film room during the performance and spread rapidly, rendering the children's escape exceedingly difficult because exits quickly became clogged with frenzied grownups. Firemen arrived too late to minimize the catastrophe.

The film operator and his assistant escaped by jumping through a window. Authorities have started an investigation to fix responsibility.

Knickerbocker, formerly pastor of the First Methodist church here, and at present pastor of the First Methodist church at Little Rock, Ark., has been appointed presiding elder of the Oklahoma City district of the Methodist church, according to word received by friends here. MEMPHIS GIRL HURT IN CRASH

Mother and Five Others Barely Miss Injury

Special to The Record News.

MEMPHIS, Texas, Nov. 11.—Mrs. W. C. Doster and six children narrowly escaped death Saturday afternoon when the Ford roadster in which they were riding overturned in a deep ditch just outside of Memphis on the Wellington road.

Mrs. Doster's brother, Armel Ford, about 15, was driving and an airplane attracted his attention from his driving, and when he noticed the road again he was headed for the ditch. He turned too quickly, throwing the car into the ditch on its top, pinning Mrs. Doster and four of the children under the car, and two children who were riding on the back of the roadster were thrown clear of the car.

Virginia Ford, 11, sustained a broken arm, all the others escaping uninjured. The car caught fire, but was put out before any damage was done.

The Rev. C. E. Jameson happened along just as the party was releasing themselves from the wreck, and took the child with the broken arm to the hospital.

Mrs. Doster and the Ford children live 18 miles northeast of Memphis on the S. M. Reed farm. They were on their way to Turkey. The top of the car was completely demolished and the right fore wheel was crushed.

Appeals Court Decision Ends Squabble Over Trustee's Post

Rocky Point's board of school trustees and actions of the trustees from now on will be on a definite basis wherein there will be no doubt as to the legal membership of any member of the board or the legality of board actions, according to a decision at Fort Worth by the court of civil appeals for the second supreme judicial district.

The decision, now effective, was handed down Saturday and upholds the decision made here in the 89th district court by Judge P. A. Martin to the effect that A. F. Sealy, against whom the case was brought by P. J. Scott, A. Randolph and others, is no longer a member of the board of trustees at Rocky Point.

Mr. Randolph was appointed trustee to fill the unexpired term when Mr. Sealy left the district. Teaching and truck driver contracts were entered into by the trustees. Then Mr. Sealey returned to the district, claiming his absence had been only temporary and that as he represented the balance of power in a divided board of trustees, the contracts made during his absence should be voided and new contracts made.

The suit was brought by Mr. Sealy in Judge Martin's court and he lost the verdict. He then appealed, and Saturday's ruling against his appeal confirmed the lower court's action.

Council to Consider Ordinances Tonight

A minor appropriation ordinance will be presented to the city council in the Memorial auditorium Monday evening for first reading, and an ordinance on the construction of terms used in other city ordinances will come up for second reading. The session probably will be brief, according to city officials.

The appropriation ordinance provides for funds to cover the cost of proceedings in connection with the recent $250,000 bond issue.
