Senate swap creates chaos in committees

GOP senators bracing themselves for historic surrender of majority in Senate

By Lara Jakes
Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — Senate leaders, in an attempt to prevent a legislation slowdown, will sit down today to negotiate a reorganization plan that puts Democrats firmly in control of the chamber.

Incoming Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle will be the lone Democrat to meet with GOP senators Phil Gramm of Texas, Mitch McConnell of Kentucky, Orrin Hatch of Utah, Arlen Specter of Pennsylvania and Pete Domenici of New Mexico in a bargaining session that will be closely watched for clues about when an agreement might be reached. Without a reorganization plan, Senate business will be at a standstill.

Republican Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss., will not participate. He called the five Republican negotiators "a dream team. . . the toughest negotiators the GOP can field."

On Tuesday night, Senate workers will unbolt the desk of Sen. James Jeffords, I-Vt., and move it from the Republican side of the Senate floor over to the Democrats' side in time for the Wednesday morning power switch. Jeffords' announcement last month that he was leaving the Republican Party meant an end to the 50-50 Democratic-Republican split in the Senate and the start of a 50-49-1 Democratic majority. Jeffords said he would vote with the Democrats to organize the Senate and make Daschle the majority leader.

A lengthy delay in hammering out a reorganization plan would slow down the Senate's pace in passing legislation and thwart the Democrats' agenda.

"If Republicans stand firm or take a hard line toward these (reorganization) negotiations, they could prevent the Senate from finishing the education bill," said James Manley, spokesman for Health, Education, Labor and Pensions Committee Chair Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass.

New mayor takes oath, gets down to business

By Stewart Doreen
Staff Writer

Midland's new mayor took the oath of office Monday and didn't take too long to get right down to business.

"Economic development is pivotal," Mayor Mike Canon told a packed audience in City Council chambers at City Hall. "We need more Cingular events in the city of Midland."

Canon joined Scott Dufford — the new councilman of District 3 — and Berry Simpson, District 4, taking the oath of office. They join LuAnn Morgan (District 1), James Bradford (District 2) and Bill Dingus (at-large) on the 2001-2002 City Council.

It has been a day that was one month in the making. Canon, who served the past year as an at-large councilman, earned a decisive victory in May's mayoral election. In doing so, he earned the distinction as being the man who would replace Bobby Burns as Midland's 27th mayor.

After a ceremony — that honored Burns and former District 3 Councilman Lee Wood for their time on Midland's City Council — Canon got down to business, saying there was work to be done.

"Midland needs to work to ensure City Hall does its part in creating an environment which provides new and challenging job opportunities and investment opportunities for our citizens," Canon said. "In Midland, our cup is brimming with resources."

Canon again put economic development first, just like he did during his victorious mayoral campaign. He said it would take a cooperative effort from all governmental entities — the city, county, school district, Midland College and the hospital district.

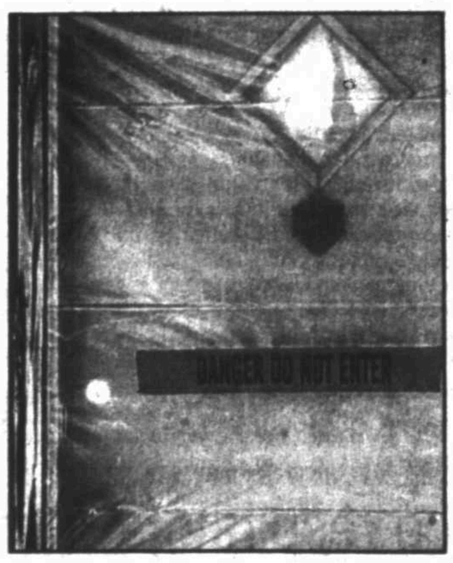

He also said he would continue to focus on improving relations with Odessa.

"We have friends outside the city limits, especially 20 miles to the west," Canon said. "We can enjoy some friendly rivalry on Friday night, but Monday morning we need to address the economic realities in our area and work together to deal with these issues."

One of the best examples of this is the Midland-Odessa Transportation Alliance (MOTRAN) and Monday, it was in full effect, hosting Patricio Martinez, governor of the state of Chihuahua, Mexico and Jose Reyes, mayor of the city of Chihuahua. Both men, along with a delegation from Chihuahua, were at City Hall as Canon, Simpson and Dufford took the oath from State District Judge Willie B. Dubose.

Keeping homes, offices dry and clean can prevent mold infestations

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

Mold that had infested a southeast Midland medical clinic cost more than $40,000 to treat and has brought a blight to a westside Midland house. It may have been avoided by effective drainage, fixing water leaks and preventing water from settling around or under the building or house.

That advice came from Kay Soper, an indoor air-quality specialist with the Texas Department of Health in Austin.

"Mold spores are all around us," Ms. Soper noted. "Mold in the outdoors is what is breaking down vegetative material. It's just part of the natural environment outdoors."

The most prominent mold problem in Midland has been with the Family Services Community Health Care Clinic, at 801 E. Florida St., that is operated by Midland Memorial Hospital.

The clinic, which became infested with interior mold due to the lack of effective drainage to prevent water from settling around the building's walls, has been closed for about three months — since early March.

Since then, the hospital has spent more than $40,000 in testing, mold abatement, a drainage system and building repairs to damaged walls, according to Rick Yeates, the hospital's director of engineering.

The mold got into the building's walls after standing rainwater became trapped at the foundation and, like fuel in a wick, moved into the walls, Yeates said. The mold was identified by an industrial hygienist.

Since the close of the clinic, functions of the Family Services Community Health Care Clinic have been performed north of the hospital at the Medical & Surgical Building at 2201 W. Tennessee Ave.

Yeates said the Florida Avenue clinic would be reopened later this month.

Repeated tests by a Houston microbiology company of air samples from the Florida Avenue clinic found the clinic to be freer of mold than the outside air, Yeates said.

The air samples "turned up clean" as checked in the Houston laboratory to detect mold growth in cultures.

"There was a little bit (of mold)," Yeates said. "Actually, there was less inside than there was outside."

Grocers demand steps be taken to ensure produce is safe

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

Recent scares involving food poisoning with fruits and vegetables are prompting grocery stores nationwide and two local chains to demand produce suppliers to hire inspectors to check farms and packing operations.

Local grocery chains Albertson's and Wal-Mart are among several different suppliers nationwide that demanded an audit of produce suppliers. The results of this audit are to be released later this month.

Recent scares including a case of salmonella-contaminated cantaloupes last month were linked to two deaths and illnesses in 14 states from Massachusetts to California.

This, along with other scares, such as the hepatitis-contaminated strawberries and bacteria-poisoned sprouts and raspberries, have started the demand that suppliers' farms and packing operations be audited.

"The industry doesn't want the government to come in and lay out regulations," said Eric Engbeck, director of agricultural certification programs for Scientific Certification Systems, an Oakland, Calif., auditing firm. "If they can voluntarily solve the problem and reduce the risk, they can possibly get rid of the reason for the government coming in."

Albertson's, which has three stores in Midland, was the first to ask for the audits by suppliers. In 1999, the chain gave its suppliers until

Canon, Council settle into new city duties

By Stewart Doreen
Staff Writer

After taking the oath of office, new Midland Mayor Mike Canon and the rest of the City Council didn't take long to begin the transition process from one mayor to another.

Canon started the process taking center seat along with the City Council. It was a seat former Mayor Bobby Burns enjoyed and thrived in for seven years.

"It was obviously different to sit down there and look at the Council from that point of view," said Burns of looking at the new Council from the chamber's audience seating. "I was anxious to be out there (in the audience) and change seats quite frankly. It is different once you go down there and realize Mike Canon is mayor, it hit me for a moment — I am no longer the mayor."

The rest of the Council, one member short of the normal seven, followed Canon's lead. Members moved around, and new seats were claimed. From left to right the Council will appear as — the open seat, LuAnn Morgan (from District 1), Bill Dingus (at-large), Canon, Berry Simpson (District 4), James Bradford (District 2) and Scott Dufford (District 3).

While the game of musical chairs was a symbolic gesture of the change to come, there is a certain transition on the way. Challenges facing Midland in the next 30 to 60 days include the annual budget, public transportation and the Council retreat.

"There will be a difference (between Burns and Canon), but not differences that will be detrimental to Midland," Dingus said. "Mike will be a superior leader just like Bobby was. Bobby was very hands on. Mike will let (City Manager) Rick (Menchaca) take more of the responsibilities."

Ms. Morgan, like Bradford and Dingus, is one of the three candidates to become Canon's first mayor pro-tem. She said Canon's tenure as mayor will include "defined roles in that we will know what we are responsible for."

She also added, "I think when you see the transition you will see the Burns legacy in that we will have a positive image and we will want to do what is best for Midland. You will see a continuation of that."

For Simpson, the transition does mean a "fresh start" for the Council. It also means he loses a close ally. Simpson had fought battles alongside Burns since 1995. Both Burns and Lee Wood, former District 3 councilman, passed the baton to Canon and Dufford respectively.

"It will be hard, because I am losing closest confidants," Simpson said. "Bobby has been my closest confidant, and (former Deputy City Manager) Glen Hackler was a very close friend of mine and helped me. Probably of the three people I have spent the most time talking to, I have lost two of them. The other one is (City Attorney) Keith Stretcher. I hope he is not going anywhere."

Communication is expected to be a big part in the new Council getting to business and completing the mayoral transition.

"We will be on a united front to do the things that Midland needs to have done for the betterment of our concerns," Bradford said. "There is a very discernible spirit of togetherness. Change always brings a sense of new visions, a sense of moving forward for the betterment of all. That sense of change is present and I think it is a good feeling."

Mexican governor, new mayor try to forge 'friendship' between West Texas, Mexico

By Luis Garcia and Stewart Doreen
Staff Writers

Patricio Martinez, governor of the state of Chihuahua, Mexico is not interested in making La Entrada Al Pacífico a long-term project.

Martinez and Jose Reyes — the mayor of Chihuahua City — were in town Monday speaking with officials from Midland and Odessa and the Midland-Odessa Transportation Alliance (MOTRAN).

Martinez said the highway — which will connect Chihuahua City and Presidio in West Texas — could be finished by 2003 and possibly as early as late 2002.

"I don't like long-term projects," Martinez said. "We're all dead in the long run ... After my term expires, I cannot be re-elected (Mexican law allows only one six-year term for top executives), so I wish to move quickly on this project."

This was welcomed with resounding applause Monday at a MOTRAN luncheon. Officials hope this move will open eyes to many around the region and state.

"When you deal with Mexico, many people think you have to take a wait-and-see attitude to see what Mexico will do and see that they are going to do it," said Bob Barnes, a current member and former president of MOTRAN.

"We learned the first time we met Patricio when he was mayor (of Chihuahua City) that is not the way he is. He is not for long range planning. He is for getting it done now.

"That road will be finished in 2003. I guarantee you," Barnes added. "I am not a betting man, but I bet you he is right."

The La Entrada gateway will connect Chihuahua City with the major highways and interstate in Texas, and across the southwest part of the nation.

Martinez spoke with a clear vision about the project, stressing action over planning.

"This year we have invested $400 million pesos (approximately $40 million U.S. dollars) for construction of the road between Laredo and Chihuahua," Martinez said. "The original road between Chihuahua and Laredo was built 30 years ago, and was designed for a low volume of traffic traveling a at slow speed.

"Barring any budgetary difficulties, we plan to finish the road by 2002," he said. "It will be possible for a truck to move from Chihuahua City and into Texas in two hours."

The increase in public spending reflects that economic integration is a real goal for his administration, he said.

"It is not only symbolic, it is real," Midland Mayor Mike Canon said. "They want to work with us and create stronger ties and stronger economic inner-workings between the two areas."

Martinez and Reyes also announced that cultural exchange programs are in the works.

"We want to set up programs where students from Chihuahua can come to Midland to study English and students from Midland-Odessa can study Spanish in Chihuahua," the governor said.

Martinez came to Midland in 1994, when he was Mayor of Chihuahua City.

"The economic environment has changed, and it has changed for the better ... we planted many seeds, and now, we are reaping the harvest," Martinez said

Coming to see Canon take the oath of office Monday was a way of showing that the state was interested in the development in their neighbors.

"It's more than just seeing a change in administration," Martinez said. "It gives us a nexus for a relationship and a genuine friendship.

"We are not working together because of some accident of geography," Martinez said. "Rather, we are working to get here because both of the sides are and the future development of the area.

"This friendship is critical for the success of projects like La Entrada Al Pacífico," Martinez said.

SWAP: Jeffords' desk to be moved

(From 1A)

"We've worked very hard, in a bipartisan basis, on this bill," Manley added, noting that the legislation is a top priority for President Bush.

"So that would be a mistake."

Among other things, the education bill requires schools to test the reading and math skills of students in grades three through eight. Schools that do not sufficiently improve test scores after one year would qualify for extra federal aid, but they could be forced to replace some staff.

Democrats also plan to bring up managed care legislation — known as the patient's bill of rights — and legislation that would increase the minimum wage.

The sticking point, according to Sen. Rick Santorum, R-Pa., is the GOP's demand for an assurance that presidential nominees for appointed executive and judicial posts would be brought to the Senate floor for a vote — even if is not approved first in committee, as is customary.

"If we don't get that assurance, or some assurance similar in this vein, then I think we're going to have some hard times organizing," Santorum said Sunday on "Fox News Sunday." Asked if the Senate might simply shut down without that assurance, Santorum said: "Yeah, that's right."

Democrats appeared to be hoarding their chips.

A spokeswoman for Sen. Harry Reid, D-Nev., who will become majority whip in the new leadership structure: "We're not going to give a lot of ground there."

SAFE: H-E-B has no plans for audit

(From 1A)

April last year to comply — a deadline many suppliers were unable to meet.

San Antonio-based H-E-B, which also has a store in Midland, has no plans to demand such audits, said spokesman Greg Flores.

"We have no plans to ask for any federally-assisted audits," he said. "We are comfortable with our own in-house quality assurance measures."

Despite recent food-related outbreaks, he said, "We have had no reason to have any elevated concerns of late."

Justin Trejo, owner of Imperial Produce Market, said his produce comes from the same major suppliers that supply the local supermarkets.

He plans to begin carrying locally and organically-grown produce soon. He hopes to lower the risk of tainted produce for his business.

For Robert Gonzalez, manager of Quick Salad, which distributes produce to local restaurants, ensuring the produce is safe is good business.

He said he makes sure the produce he receives from a broker is clean.

"I even double check the produce anyway," he said, throwing out any produce that looks dirty or rotten.

Not only is it good business, he pointed out, it can be personal.

"If I don't watch the produce, I could go out to eat and be served the same thing," he said. "I have my own family and we could go out to eat and be served bad produce "supplied by another company."

Midland has not been immune to food-borne illnesses. A shipment of tainted lettuce caused an outbreak of shigellosis in the Permian Basin in the late 1980s.

Produce is responsible for an estimated 10 percent of all outbreaks of food borne illnesses, yet the government has no mandatory rules for the safe growing and packing of fruits and vegetables — only voluntary guidelines.

The new standards that produce suppliers have worked out with the supermarket and restaurant industries will follow the voluntary guidelines released by the FDA in 1998.

Among the FDA recommendations: treat manure to kill bacteria before it's used as fertilizer; keep contaminated irrigation water away from produce; train workers to wash their hands properly and make sure they have access to toilets; keep packing facilities clean and free of pests.

Consumer advocates say the inspections are no substitute for government regulation, and inspectors themselves say there is no guarantee that produce suppliers will fix the problems found in the audits.

Auditing is "a good step, but it's voluntary, so it doesn't guarantee that a consumer knows the safety or quality of the produce," said Caroline Smith DeWaal, food-safety director for the Center for Science in the Public Interest, an advocacy group.

Over the past decade, 82 food-poisoning outbreaks have been linked to tainted sprouts, lettuce and other produce, almost as many as beef, according to data compiled by CSPI.

MOLD: Workers wore full-face respirators

(From 1A)

Once an environmental engineer at Johns Hopkins University in Maryland declares the clinic safe, "Then we can plan our move" to the Florida Avenue clinic, Yeates said.

"I think we are about ready to move back," said Dr. Harold Rubin, president of Midland Memorial Hospital. "It's been a long process. We wanted to be sure that we had taken care of any mold issue that we had ... to ensure the safety of our employees and patients."

Currently, a work crew, now working for a different company, that had performed the mold abatement at the Midland clinic, is doing mold abatement at the westside Midland house at 4400 Leddy Drive at Illinois Avenue and Midland.

The 1,941-square-foot house, built in 1957 and appraised at $36,100 including the lot, is owned by Bill Morgan of Kemp near Houston, according to the Midland Central Appraisal District.

Windows to the house and vents are sealed in plastic, and red plastic ribbons proclaim in black "DANGER DO NOT ENTER."

The top opening to the large steel module for debris next to the house is sealed in plastic to contain the mold.

"We are completely gutting the house, removing the Sheetrock, carpet, and wood floors, according to a man who only identified himself as a superintendent for Advanced Environmental Services of Odessa.

Workers in the sealed house were donned in full-face respirators and protective clothing, the man said.

Ms. Soper of the Texas Department of Health noted that if building material gets wet and stays wet for a time, "mold has just a perfect place to start growing in.

"Even areas that are more arid, like West Texas or desert areas, can still have mold problems in a building," Ms. Soper said. "But, generally, it has to be from some sort of plumbing leak or something that goes for a long time and doesn't get fixed."

Once attracted to damp or waterlogged building materials, such as plasterboard and wood, or carpet, the mold could cause problems, possibly medical problems, and damage to the house or building.

"Water leaks in the house where the wood or Sheetrock gets wet ... creates a perfect environment for mold to start growing," Ms. Soper said. "Sheetrock is a perfect food for mold."

Mold spores are "already around us to some degree," she noted. "It doesn't take much to get mold going. If you want to prevent it from being a problem," Ms. Soper suggested, "you have got to aggressively do some prevention before it gets out of hand.

"If a house is kept dry, the mold doesn't start growing in the house," she said.

Tax cuts expiration date sets stage for future political fights

By Curt Anderson
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The tax cuts that Congress sent to the White House on Monday carry an expiration date of December 2010, setting the stage for political fights on Capitol Hill and during the 2008 presidential campaign about whether to make them permanent.

"Congresses change and demands for revenue change," said former Rep. Bill Archer, a Texas Republican who was chairman of the tax-writing House Ways and Means Committee from 1994-2000. "It basically hangs in the balance of who controls the Congress and who controls the White House."

The $1.35 trillion package of tax cuts, which President Bush is tentatively scheduled to sign into law on Thursday, was passed under congressional budget rules requiring them to end, or "sunset," at the end of 10 years.

This bill's expiration day falls on New Year's Eve of 2010.

Some provisions are set to sunset even sooner: the college tuition deduction begins in 2002 and ends in 2005. Odder still is the estate tax, which is set for repeal at the beginning of 2010, only to be automatically reinstated at year's end.

A future Congress and president will have to decide whether to extend the tax cuts, either temporarily or permanently, at a cost estimated by Democrats to reach $4 trillion over the second decade.

"Some people are going to say this is a political gimmick and they're not going to make that tax go away," said Steve Parrish, second vice president for individual markets at The Principal Financial Group in Des Moines, Iowa.

Aside from the broad sunset date, the bill is a collection of delayed starts and gradual phase-ins:

■ The new 10 percent income tax rate is retroactive to Jan. 1, generating those soon-to-be mailed refund checks for millions of taxpayers. Cuts in other income tax rates start July 1 but are not fully in effect until 2006. And the 15 percent tax rate stays in place.

■ Relief from the marriage penalty paid by many two-income couples, in the form of a bigger standard deduction and enlarged 15 percent income tax bracket, doesn't begin until 2005.

■ Increasing the tax-favored retirement contribution limits for traditional and Roth IRAs from $2,000 to $5,000 takes until 2008. Raising the limit for 401(k) plans from $10,500 to $15,000 phases in by 2006.

■ Raising the $500 child tax credit to $1,000 takes until 2010.

■ Little was done to stop the complex alternative minimum tax from affecting more and more people as their incomes rise. This relatively unknown tax, which struck only 1.4 million taxpayers this year, is projected to hit 35.5 million in 2010.

A future Congress and president will have to decide whether to extend the tax cuts, either temporarily or permanently, at a cost estimated by Democrats to reach $4 trillion over the second decade. The landscape could be dramatically changed if projected budget surpluses don't materialize or programs such as Medicare and Social Security become strained by retiring baby boomers.

"The bill creates the equivalent of a huge mortgage with a balloon payment in 2010 and later years," said Rep. Charles Rangel of New York, ranking Democrat on the Ways and Means Committee.

That could become a major issue in the 2008 presidential and congressional campaigns. Yet Bush, whose 2000 campaign for the presidency centered on cutting taxes, fully expects each of the tax cuts to become permanent, spokesman Ari Fleischer said.

"To do anything other than that is to raise taxes on the American people, and he does not support that," Fleischer said.

Republicans have relentlessly pushed tax cuts since winning control of Congress in 1994. Should Democrats control Congress and the White House in 2010, it isn't certain these tax cuts would continue beyond their expiration date.

"If the Democrats were swept into power in five or 10 years, they can do what they want," said Grover Norquist, president of Americans for Tax Reform. "But they'd have to change the whole debate."

Most members of Congress take a dim view of reversing tax cuts. But lawmakers will almost certainly continue to pass tax legislation year after year, providing ample opportunity to tinker with the current plan.

"The nature of the income tax creates an environment that pushes you toward wanting to make changes," Archer said. "Every time you make a change, you create an imbalance somewhere else. If you fix one problem, you end up creating other problems."

Critics of WWII Memorial go back to federal court

WASHINGTON (AP) — Opponents of a planned World War II Memorial on the National Mall asked a federal judge on Monday to prevent planners from signing construction contracts until the court hears a lawsuit to stop the project.

President Bush signed legislation last week that places planning for the memorial outside the normal regulatory process, an effort to end lawsuits and procedural delays.

The National Coalition to Save Our Mall said in its request for a restraining order that the new law violates the Constitution by overriding the review process in the courts.

"Congress and the president have dictated that the World War II Memorial is now above the law," said Judy Scott Feldman, co-chair of the coalition. "We are now going to the third branch of government to ask the court's intercession."

The government could begin authorizing construction contracts with builders as early as Wednesday, according to the coalition's request, which was filed with the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia. The group wants time to have a hearing on the lawsuit it filed in February to block the project.

The government wouldn't comment on the request for a restraining order, but will respond in court once a hearing is scheduled, Justice Department spokeswoman Christine Romano said.

The memorial, to be located between the Lincoln Memorial and the Washington Monument, is to be built around the existing Rainbow Pool, with a circle of granite pillars representing the states and two four-story arches to signify victory in Europe and Asia.

Critics, including some veterans, have said the design is too grandiose and would clutter the Mall and obstruct the sweeping views.

Whether you are a conservative or aggressive investor, A. G. Edwards can help you with your investment strategy. Front: Bhupen K. Agrawal, Kaye Horchler, Don Cheaney. Back row, Rhonda Murphree, Forrest A. Wester, Joe B. Fortner, Charles Jeffus.

Do you know your own investment personality?

Are you a risk taker or do you tend to be more conservative? While these personality characteristics might make interesting dinner conversation, they are vital when it comes to creating your investment portfolio. Unfortunately, many investors don't take the time or are uncertain on how to determine how much risk they are willing to assume in exchange for the potential returns on their investments.

To help you get a better idea of how much risk you can tolerate when investing, take this quiz. Then share the results with your financial consultant, who can help you design a portfolio that matches your risk profile in addition to your other investment objectives.

Which best describes your attitude toward portfolio ups and downs?

1. I am uncomfortable with significant upswings and downswings in my portfolio and prefer its value to remain relatively stable.
2. I am comfortable with some variances in my portfolio value, although I would not describe myself as a significant risk-taker.
3. I can withstand some up and down movement in my portfolio to achieve long-term goals.
4. I understand that I must take some risk to benefit from the long-term rewards and am prepared to be patient, even in market downturns.
5. I think of myself as a risk-taker and do not mind volatile investments.

Which best describes your overall investment personality?

1. Very Conservative—I am willing to forego potentially large returns for stability.
2. Conservative—I would like to minimize declines in my portfolio.
3. Moderate—I can withstand some fluctuation in my portfolio over time.
4. Aggressive—I want my portfolio to significantly outpace inflation and am willing to accept wide swings in my portfolio value.
5. Speculative—I am willing to take chances on potential opportunities, which may yield large returns or large declines.*

To calculate your risk tolerance, add the numbers to the left side of the responses you chose. The lower the score, the more conservative you may be—the higher the score, the more aggressive you may be.

If you find that you're more conservative than you thought, you may want to choose investments with less volatility, such as bonds or large-company stocks that pay dividends. Then, as you gain comfort with market action and your portfolio, you may feel the urge to venture into more aggressive investments, such as small-company stocks.

Your financial advisor can help you further understand your investment personality and help you choose investments that match your risk tolerance, investment objectives and time horizon.

'I was very pleased with Lifetime's work'

Judy Pederson says her old windows looked terrible. Her new windows (and siding), from Lifetime Siding are "fabulous—I'm very pleased."

Judy was impressed that the workers arrived at the same time every day, worked hard, and cleaned up the job site. Plus, "They were very precise at making sure the trim around the windows looked right," she says.

She used Lifetime because three of her neighbors had previously used them, and were very satisfied.

To introduce more people to their workmanship, Lifetime owner Neil Letkeman is offering a free upgrade to low-e, argon gas-filled windows in the month of June. This is usually an $80 value per window.

These windows tilt in for easy cleaning and they come with the same lifetime guarantee as does the siding the company installs.

The real test for Judy's new windows was in the dust storm on a recent Sunday. "The dust stayed outside," she said. "That was wonderful!"

Homeowner Judy Pederson was thrilled with the siding and windows Lifetime Siding installed on her home.

Window film makes good business sense

If your building has large windows, or if it has lots of small windows, especially on the west side, the West Texas sun can be merciless.

Windows let in light, but they also let in too much heat and too much of the sun's damaging ultraviolet rays. Closing off windows with dark drapes may not be a good answer.

Window film from Mid West Glass can be the perfect solution because it lets you decide what to let in and what to keep out. Film can eliminate up to 100 percent of the UV rays that fade furniture, carpet and other furnishings. It can cut the sun's heat by as much as 80 percent (think of the savings in air conditioning you can realize from that). It can also soften the glare of the sun.

Reflective film makes it harder to see inside, giving more protection from theft where you keep merchandise or office equipment or machinery. Security protects glass from shattering when broken—the toughest film is almost impossible to break with a hammer and very difficult to cut with a knife—reducing "smash and grab" thefts, which account for 64 percent of all burglaries.

Because window film comes in a wide variety of attractive architectural colors, you won't sacrifice beauty—you can really improve the appearance of your building.

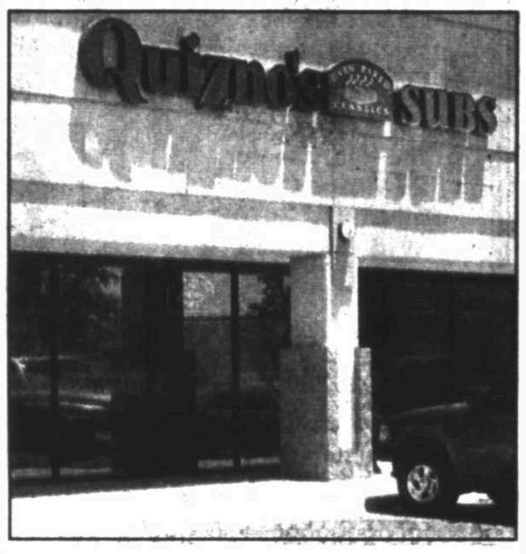

Film is one of the most economical window solutions there is. Its heat reduction features alone can help pay for the installation.

No matter what kind of windows you have—if they take up a whole wall or are wallet-sized—if they are double pane or single pane, decorative, oddly shaped, on sliding doors or anything—Mid West can cut window film to fit perfectly.

All these benefits are true of home windows as well. Residential films come with a lifetime warranty on the color and against peeling, cracking or bubbling.

Fight back against the harsh West Texas sun. Window film lets in the light you want while curbing the sun's heat and the damaging UV rays.

Mid-West Glass offers glass and windows for any use, as well as patio enclosures. Located at 906 W. Front, for a free estimate call 682-7373.

There are lots of west-facing windows at Quizno's. When Mid West Glass installed attractive window film there, it made a noticeable difference.

A woman's typical American Home Improvement story

Open up your windows and let the sun shine in

Replacement windows from American Home Improvement tilt in for easy cleaning—and keep out most of the dust and dirt.

Springtime in West Texas—my favorite time of the year, really. We all know the saying about the weather in Texas, don't we? "If you don't like the weather, stick around, it'll change." This time of year means one of two things: (A) The weather is just right for you to open up your windows to let that fresh air and bright sunshine fill your home, OR (B) You need to shut your windows as quickly as possible because a dust devil the size of a small tornado is headed straight into your living room.

I love to turn off the a/c and leave the windows open—which, of course, means I have to be ready to close them in a New York minute should that dust storm blow in.

Maybe I am of the weaker gender, but nothing makes my temperature rise faster than being ready to open up the windows—my heart is set on that cool breeze on my face—only to discover I can't do it. I mean, I literally can't open the window. It won't budge.

I don't know if it's because of the sand caked two inches deep in the window sill, or if it's just because my windows were the cheap aluminum variety my builder put in 20 years ago, but the point is; I CAN'T OPEN THE WINDOW!! I have to wait for my husband to come home to open or SHUT the windows. I hate that.

So what did I do about it? I called American Home Improvement. After all, they call themselves "Your window store." Okay, you window experts, come show me how to solve my problem. And they did!

A representative from American Home Improvement came out and gave me a free estimate on the cost of replacing my worn-out aluminum windows with new vinyl ones. So I had them do the job.

Now, not only am I able to open and close my windows, I can also CLEAN them from the inside of my home! That's right—I don't have to go outside and drag out the garden hose and step all over my flowerbeds. With my new windows, I can tilt the glass to the inside and clean to my heart's content.

Oh, and because these windows are so air tight—they are guaranteed NEVER to have moisture or dirt between the two panes of glass—there will be no more sand in my window sills!! I have to think that if the sand is no longer in my window sill, then it's no longer blowing into my home, either.

But what I like most is that, whether my husband is home or not, I can open and shut my windows.

I like that a lot.

Do yourself a favor. Call American Home Improvement today for a free estimate on replacing your windows. You'll be glad you did.

Tax reform will soon be a reality

Many of us have grown too skeptical to buy the old, "the check is in the mail" refrain.

We won't really believe it until we've got the money in our hands.

Perhaps it is that well-worn cynicism that prevented many Americans from getting visibly excited about President Bush's $1.35 trillion tax cut plan. Congress will soon put the finishing touches on the bill and send it to the president for his signature.

What this means is that we will see significant tax relief phased in over the next decade.

President Bush used his weekly radio address this past Saturday to remind us of the immediate impact the tax cut will have on 98 million American taxpayers. Soon, most single taxpayers will receive "tax rebate" checks for $300; single-parent taxpayers will receive up to $500; and married couples will receive a check for up to $600.

Here are a few of the other improvements we will see in the tax code over the next 10 years thanks to the persistence of President Bush:

- The per-child tax credit will double, from $500 to $1,000.
- The marriage penalty will be reduced.
- The death tax will be abolished.
- Americans will be able to tuck away more money for their retirement years as the limits on 401(k) and Individual Retirement Account contributions will be raised.
- The new law will double the maximum adoption tax credit to $10,000, and make the credit permanent. "Adoptive parents have a special calling, giving a loving home to children who otherwise would have none," President Bush said.

When he was still in office, President Clinton proudly pointed to huge government surpluses created thanks to the robust economy we enjoyed the past several years. But during his campaign, candidate George W. Bush accurately reminded us that those surpluses really belong to the American taxpayers — and they are entitled to have that money returned to them.

Still we Americans are a skeptical lot. It's hard to believe the government is actually going to start sending our money back.

When the checks arrive in our mailboxes, some Americans will spend the money and others will save it.

But we all will feel better about our government and feel reassured we are heading in the right direction.

Today in History

Today is Tuesday, June 5, the 156th day of 2001. There are 209 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On June 5, 1968, Sen. Robert F. Kennedy was assassinated after claiming victory in California's Democratic presidential primary. Gunman Sirhan Bishara Sirhan was immediately arrested.

On this date:

In 1783, Joseph and Jacques Montgolfier publicly demonstrated their hot-air balloon in a 10-minute flight over Annonay, France.

In 1794, Congress passed the Neutrality Act, which prohibited Americans from enlisting in the service of a foreign power.

In 1917, about 10 million American men began registering for the draft in World War I.

In 1933, the United States went off the gold standard.

In 1940, the Battle of France began during World War II.

In 1947, Secretary of State George C. Marshall gave a speech at Harvard University in which he outlined an aid program for Europe that came to be known as the Marshall Plan.

In 1967, war erupted in the Mideast. Six days of fighting with Egypt, Jordan, Syria and Iraq left Israel in control of the West Bank, Gaza Strip, Sinai Desert and Golan Heights.

In 1975, Egypt reopened the Suez Canal to international shipping, eight years after it was closed because of the 1967 war with Israel.

In 1976, 11 people were killed when the Teton Dam in Idaho burst.

In 1999, jazz and pop singer Mel Torme died in Los Angeles at age 73.

Ten years ago: Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev delivered his delayed Nobel Peace lecture in Oslo, Norway, warning that Western failure to heed his call for economic aid could dash hopes for a peaceful new world order. The space shuttle Columbia blasted off with seven astronauts on a nine-day mission.

Five years ago: Joseph Waldholtz, the ex-husband of U.S. Rep. Enid Greene, R-Utah, pleaded guilty to providing his wife false information for her taxes and to falsifying spending reports from her congressional campaign.

Naval aviation museum is visit worth making

At the western tip of the Florida Panhandle, you will find the old city of Pensacola and one of the finest aviation museums in the world. It's the National Museum of Naval Aviation. Its huge collection of airplanes and other displays tells you the history of this most important and difficult branch of military flying.

Reese

The museum is there because Pensacola is where naval aviation began. It's still where young men and women who aspire to be Navy or Marine Corps pilots begin their difficult training. The Chamber of Commerce used to call Pensacola the "Cradle of Naval Aviation," but most local folks called it the "mother-in-law of naval aviation" for obvious reasons.

As someone who came of age in Pensacola, I can tell you there was tough competition for the ladies with all of those dashing Navy guys who were called, at least in those days, NavCads. That's the Navy's way of saying Naval cadet.

I'm telling you this because I think every American family owes one pilgrimage to the museum, where you can see airplanes like those that fought and won the battle of Midway in June 1942. It was the decisive turning point in the war in the Pacific.

That June began as a bleak month. Aside from the attack on Pearl Harbor, the Japanese had taken Wake Island, Guam and the Philippines. A battle in the Coral Sea, the first in which the ships of both fleets never saw each other, had cost America three ships — including the carrier Lexington — and 69 airplanes. The Yorktown was damaged but managed to hobble back to Pearl Harbor.

The Japanese commander, Adm. Isoroku Yamamoto, was determined to finish off the Pacific Fleet. He had prepared plans for a massive attack against Midway, an island about 1,100 miles northwest of Hawaii. He knew the Americans would have to defend their last outpost and thus planned to lure the fleet into a decisive battle with his far-larger force. What he didn't know, however, was that an irascible cryptoanalyst named Joseph Rochefort was reading about 75 percent of his communications. Thus Adms. Ernest King and Chester Nimitz knew the Japanese intention.

They dispatched two task forces under the command of Adm. Frank Jack Fletcher and Adm. Raymond Spruance. The outcome would be determined by which fleet spotted the other one first. A lone amphibious patrol plane cruising the vast Pacific 700 miles west of Midway spotted the Japanese transports on the morning of June 3, 1942.

Airmen from the aircraft carriers Hornet and Enterprise launched the first attack. Torpedo Squadron 8 spotted the Japanese carriers. Lt. Cmdr. John C. Waldron had told his pilots: "I want each of us to do his utmost to destroy our enemies. If there is only one plane left to make a final run in, I want that man to go in and get a hit. May God be with us all."

In fact, only one man survived from the squadron. The slow torpedo planes were picked off by Japanese fighter cover and by heavy antiaircraft fire. Only six of the 41 torpedo planes returned from the mission, and not a single Japanese ship had been hit.

But their gallant attacks distracted the Japanese, and when the dive bombers arrived, they attacked initially unopposed by the fighters. The American pilots inflicted the first decisive defeat on the Imperial Japanese Navy since 1592. The Japanese lost four of their carriers, a heavy cruiser, 322 aircraft and 3,500 men. Our losses included a carrier (the Yorktown), a destroyer, 147 planes and 307 men. It was the beginning of the end. From that day onward, American forces would be on the offensive in the Pacific.

This account of the battle was gleaned from the excellent book "War at Sea: A Naval History of World War II" by Nathan Miller. It's the best short history of the sea war I've come across. It reads like a novel. The publisher is Oxford University Press.

I always visit the museum when I'm in Pensacola, and it's always a moving experience. It's one of the most modern museums around but is not as well-known as it should be to people not connected with the Navy.

Navy pilots are, in my opinion, the best in the world. Flying off and landing on a carrier is difficult and in wartime can be even more so. Just imagine coming back to your carrier at night in a storm with your plane shot up and low on fuel. You have one chance at landing.

Even in the age of missiles and satellites, the carrier task force remains the country's best bet for projecting our power if any legitimate need to do so arises. I hope President Bush's re-evaluation of the nation's forces will not short-change the Navy. The Navy and the Marine Corps should be our rapid-response team.

WWII vets will get monument they deserve

WASHINGTON — At last, a Washington memorial to the 16 million men and women who served in uniform during World War II is going to be built on the National Mall.

It's long overdue.

The Mall already has poignant, heart-rending memorials to the veterans of the Korean War, which ended in a stand off, and to the unpopular Vietnam War, which we lost. Now, there will be a memorial for those who fought in the bloodiest war of the 20th century.

Thomas

Mike Conley, spokesman for the proposed World War II Memorial, said the U.S. Veterans Administration estimates there are only 5 million American veterans of that global conflict still living and "we're losing 1,100 a day."

With the 60th anniversary of the end of the war approaching, there is no time to lose to pay a profound tribute to those who served on the European, North African battlefields and in the Pacific.

Unlike the Vietnam War that divided the country, World War II united the United States. This was a job that we had to do, a decision made for us when Japan attacked Pearl Harbor on Dec. 7, 1941.

The World War II memorial will be constructed on the Mall just west of the Washington Monument, at the eastern end of the reflecting pool leading up to the Lincoln Memorial.

Although it was officially dedicated last Veterans Day, Nov. 11, 2000, by President Bill Clinton in a ceremony attended by more than 12,000 persons, a bureaucratic controversy had brought the project to a standstill. Fortunately, Congress and President Bush stepped in to cut the red tape and put the project back on track.

Former Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kans., headed the campaign that has raised more than $170 million to construct the memorial. It will take 30 months to build.

Corporations, foundations, 48 state legislatures, 1,100 schools and veterans organizations representing 11 million veterans donated funds for the project. The federal government contributed some $40 million.

Every monument in Washington had to pass muster with the all-powerful Commission on Fine Arts, the secretary of the Interior Department and the planning commission.

The World War II monument's classic blueprint befits the Washington landscape. Critics objected to the design, claiming it closes off the open space of the Mall between the Lincoln Memorial, the Washington Monument and the Capitol. The design defenders deny that open spaces on the Mall will be blocked off and contend the historic vistas will not be destroyed by the monument.

Other dissenters ripped into the original design by Friedrich St. Florian, an Austrian-born Rhode Island architect, as too large, too grandiose. St. Florian won the national competition for the memorial six years ago. Since its unveiling, the design has been severely modified. A double row of elm trees, which would have been cut down under St. Florian's original plan, will remain. Congress authorized the memorial in 1993 and the site was selected in 1995. Work on the monument will start in July.

Conley said the Mall is a fitting place for the World War II monument because that war was the "most significant event of the 20th century." He explained it would be located between the monument honoring George Washington, founding father of the country, and Abraham Lincoln, who preserved the union.

Some rightfully point out that there are two living monuments to that war — Europe, saved by the courage of the fighters against Nazism, and the GI Bill of Rights, which gave returning servicemen and women the passport to the education they missed when they went off to war.

The nation's gratitude now will be permanently expressed when the memorial is built. The design is properly elegant and the Mall is the proper place for it.

Time and the world are running out for the veterans of World War II whose valor should have been commemorated a long time ago.

Is Freedom Caucus just a parallel U.N. ?

WASHINGTON — Before the Jeffords Jump, the biggest surprise to hit the Bush administration was the decision by 53 nations in the United Nations to throw the bothersome United States off the Human Rights Commission.

We had 43 written commitments, insisted Secretary of State Colin Powell, but got only 29 votes on the secret balloting, which for the first time in 50 years denied us membership. Thus, 14 nations double-crossed us. Which were they?

Safire

Don't ask, was the blindsided Powell's reaction. He professed not to want to know. Counterproductive and all that. And nobody pressed.

But of course we do know; $30 billion spent yearly on intelligence buys a few intercepts. The list of the "faithless 14" begins with Angola and Burkina Faso and ends with Syria and Venezuela.

The nations in between remain shrouded in Seventh Floor mystery at State because China and France, which conspired against the United States, should have voted for us: There is an unwritten rule that permanent Security Council members must vote for each other's candidacy on such groups. If it became public that the rule was broken, the faithless member would lose much diplomatic leverage.

In preventing the United States from again daring to question the human rights abuses in China, France had to persuade its neighbors not to agree on a "lean slate" of three nations to be elected from the "Western European and other" grouping, which includes us. Accordingly, four nations competed; when our European allies delightedly chose Austria over the United States, we were out on our ear.

The blame-America set here promptly suggested we deserved payback for opposing the treaty to allow dictators to haul Americans into a global court. And on Wednesday — even as Chinese and Cuban Communists moved to strip human rights groups like Freedom House of accreditation — Amnesty International celebrated the United Nations' silencing of the United States by equating our use of land mines to protect our troops in Korea with China's torture of its dissidents.

Our House of Representatives reacted in a measured way, not withholding our arrears but signaling a hard look at next year's dues: No play, no pay. Most Americans who care are disgusted with Western Europe's craven cave-in on human rights after China's threat to "smash a rock" on brave Danes who dared a few years ago to criticize its repression.

A more creative reaction to the domination of the United Nations by dictatorships, oligarchies, kakistocracies and rogue nations would be to breathe life into a parallel structure created with some fanfare but largely forgotten: the Community of Democracies.

Of the 191 independent states in the world, over 100 can now be said to be democracies, if you define the word loosely. An interim meeting is scheduled in Washington next month, with a big whingding in Seoul next year. A parallel United Nations? No; it called for a "democracy caucus" within the United Nations to promote human rights, transparency and the rule of law.

A worry: Who needs another multinational bureaucracy, with officials in limousines tearing up local parking tickets? Maybe the CD (as it will be called) could be financed on a shoestring, its annual meetings bouncing from free capital to free capital, with a minimal secretariat. That would set an example to the bloated United Nations.

Perhaps the CD's Freedom Caucus, with power to vote a repeat offender out of the group, would be an international antidote to the U.N. commission now poisoned by the world's hypocrites, despots and slave traders.

Meningitis-related outbreak scares Ohio town

By Paul Singer
Associated Press

ALLIANCE, Ohio — Softball games, a dance recital, even final exams were canceled. Graduation went on, but without the usual rounds of hugs and kisses.

People in and around the town of Alliance have armed themselves with surgical masks and disinfectant wipes because of a meningitis-related outbreak that has killed two teen-agers and left a third student critically ill.

"They aren't allowed to touch anything," Melissa Gentry said of her two children as they shopped Monday at a Wal-Mart. The children, ages 8 and 10, were not in school because the Marlington district canceled classes and exams for the rest of the school year.

Two Beloit West Branch High School students, Jonathan Stauffer, 15, and Kelly Coblentz, 16, died about a week ago after contracting a blood infection caused by a strain of the bacteria Neisseria meningitidis. They may have shared a water bottle at a school picnic on May 25.

Christin Van Camp, a student at Marlington High, about 15 miles away, was diagnosed Saturday with the bacteria.

The bacteria causes both meningitis, a disease of the brain, and meningococcemia, a blood infection.

Officials from the local health department and the federal Centers for Disease Control and Prevention awaited test results Monday to see if Van Camp had the same strain of the bacteria as the other teen-agers.

If so, thousands of people in and around Alliance may have to get vaccination shots.

Over the weekend, thousands of people in this town of 23,000 lined up to get antibiotics, and about 37,000 doses were given out. But the pills protect people for one to two days; a shot lasts three to five years.

The disease is spread by saliva by such means as drinking out of someone else's glass or sharing a fork or spoon. Symptoms include high fever, headache, stiff neck, confusion, nausea, vomiting and exhaustion.

About 3,000 cases of meningitis occur annually in the United States, said Tom Skinner, spokesman for the CDC. Ten percent to 15 percent die from the disease.

Nick Baird, director of the Ohio Department of Health, said officials are erring on the side of caution. "The antibiotic, in my view, probably was cast more broadly than it needed to be," he said.

The disease has spread confusion and fear in Alliance, a blue-collar city that is home to Mount Union College. Parents carried around disinfecting wipes. Some residents carried surgical masks when they got their antibiotics at hospitals in Alliance and nearby Salem.

Some of those who lined up for the antibiotics refused to use pens being offered to fill out the forms, because they had been handled by others.

AP Photo
People line up outside of Alliance Community Hospital to receive preventive antibiotics for the treatment of meningitis, Saturday in Alliance, Ohio. Residents have armed themselves with surgical masks and disinfectant wipes after a meningitis outbreak claimed the lives of two high school students.

"The town has always been safe, but we've had to deal with a very high intensity of emotion," Mayor Toni Middleton said, adding that one of the difficulties is "trying to get people in a panic situation to listen to reason."

Alliance schools were open Monday, but about half of the 3,500 students were absent. Some residents tried unsuccessfully to have Alliance cancel Sunday's high school graduation, as Marlington did. Only nine graduates were absent from Alliance's graduation, said school Superintendent Arthur Garnes.

Gentry said she is not letting other children come over to the house until the 10- to 14-day incubation period is over. "We're very, very concerned," she said. "Unfortunately, you can't trust anybody out of your immediate family for 14 days."

Cindy King said she repeatedly warned her 16-year-old son not to share food, drinks or even combs with friends.

"The rumors have really hurt everything. Some people don't believe that everything is being disclosed. Maybe some things are being hidden," Rick Wilt said as he swept the sidewalk outside his Alliance antiques shop.

Bush praises Florida's Everglades, says he won't ignore restoration

EVERGLADES NATIONAL PARK, Fla. (AP) — As an alligator slithered through murky waters behind him, President Bush celebrated Florida's Everglades on Monday and said he hoped the reconfigured Congress would take a lesson from this "beautiful slice of Heaven."

The Republican president, who is tending his image as both environmentalist and bipartisan, pledged to state activists gathered canalside that he would not abandon the massive, 40-year ecosystem restoration under way here.

"Our job here is to be good stewards of the Everglades, to restore what has been damaged and to reduce the risk of harm," said Bush, whose budget for 2002 proposes $219 million for the Everglades project, a $58-million increase over current funding.

Even as Bush talked of wading birds and panthers freshly trying to make a home here, Washington was clearly on his mind.

Today, he confronts the reality of Sen. Jim Jeffords' defection from the Republican Party: Congress returns from its Memorial Day recess with Democrats poised to take control of the Senate.

With his brother, Florida Gov. Jeb Bush, at his side, the president noted that the Everglades is home to 68 endangered species "and the only place on earth where crocodiles and alligators live side by side."

"We're kind of hoping that's the way it gets to be in the United States Congress one of these days," he quipped.

Bush made the Everglades announcement at the same time a new ABC News-Washington Post poll found that Democrats have a 20-point advantage over him on public trust in handling the environment. After Jeffords' move and a weekend meeting between GOP Sen. John McCain and Tom Daschle, the Senate's Democratic leader, Bush is redoubling efforts to court Democrats and moderate Republicans.

The president and Daschle planned to have dinner at the White House on Thursday, said a senior White House official and a Daschle aide speaking on condition of anonymity.

White House operatives were also working to arrange get-togethers for Bush this week with McCain and another moderate Republican, Sen. Lincoln Chafee of Rhode Island.

Sens. Bob Graham and Bill Nelson, Florida's Democratic U.S. senators, both applauded Bush for his unequivocal statement of support Monday for Everglades restoration. But Nelson said it didn't quite jibe with Bush's call to open some waters off the Florida coast for oil drilling.

Prosecutors oppose delay in McVeigh execution

By Steven K. Paulson
Associated Press

DENVER — Federal prosecutors urged a judge Monday not to delay Timothy McVeigh's execution, saying that he admitted the crime and is "undeniably guilty" despite thousands of newly released FBI documents on the Oklahoma City bombing.

"Rather than answer for his own proven and admitted murderous conduct, McVeigh would like to put the federal government on trial," prosecutor Sean Connelly said in court papers.

U.S. District Judge Richard Matsch will hear arguments Wednesday on McVeigh's request to postpone his June 11 execution. The judge sealed a portion of the government's filing.

McVeigh has claimed the government committed a "fraud upon the court" by failing to turn over nearly 4,500 pages of FBI material on the bombing before his 1997 trial. McVeigh asked for a postponement to see if the documents offer grounds for seeking a new trial and to force the government to explain its failure to turn over the material.

In a strongly worded response, Connelly argued that the material has no bearing on McVeigh's conviction and death sentence because he confessed in a book and said he and co-conspirator Terry Nichols acted alone.

"Timothy McVeigh does not and could not suggest he is actually innocent of the charges of which the jury convicted him," Connelly said. "He does not and could not suggest the death penalty is unwarranted for his exceptionally aggravated crimes."

McVeigh has identified nine items he claims could have helped his defense, but none prove his innocence, Connelly said. Under the anti-terrorism law under which McVeigh was convicted, he cannot receive a new trial unless he has strong evidence of his innocence, the prosecutor said.

"McVeigh is undeniably guilty and there is no case in which the death sentence can be more appropriate than this one," Connelly said.

McVeigh was convicted of murder and sentenced to die for the April 19, 1995, bombing of the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building, which killed 168 people and injured hundreds more.

McVeigh, who is at the federal prison in Terre Haute, Ind., had dropped all appeals and was set for lethal injection May 16. But six days before, the Justice Department began turning over more than 4,400 pages and 11 CDs of FBI material that should have been given to McVeigh's defense.

Defense attorney Richard Burr said last week that McVeigh decided to seek a stay because he "has been deeply concerned about the overreaching of federal law enforcement authorities" and thought the last-minute disclosure of the documents overrode his earlier decision not to fight execution.

In a related development Monday, the U.S. Supreme Court delayed a ruling in Nichols' request for a new trial, saying the government must first respond to his assertion that mishandled evidence in McVeigh's case adversely affected him.

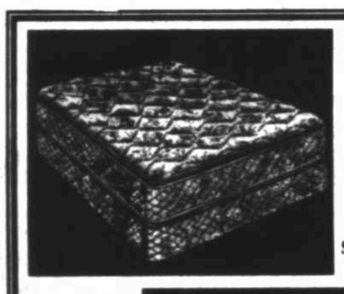

The court's decision raised the possibility that the justices would reopen the case involving Nichols.

Nichols, 46, was sentenced to life in prison after being convicted in federal court of involuntary manslaughter and conspiracy. Prosecutors in Oklahoma have brought state murder charges against Nichols in hopes of winning a death sentence.

Nepal gets new king amid demand for explanation of palace slayings

By Dirk Beveridge
Associated Press

KATMANDU, Nepal — Hoping to move Nepal past its royal massacre, a new king took the throne Monday and ordered an investigation and public explanation, even as furious citizens staged riots that police stopped with guns, clubs and a curfew.

Two men were killed, apparently by police gunfire, according to doctors at Katmandu hospitals who said they treated 19 other people for minor injuries.

King Gyanendra went on national television to pledge a full investigation of the royal tragedy that shook this impoverished Himalayan nation. But he has already lost credibility by saying Sunday that the previous king and most of Nepal's royal family were killed by "accidental" automatic gunfire.

"We don't want Gyanendra," said businessman Rajeev Tamrakar. "We don't believe him."

Gyanendra's ascension to the throne gives him little power — Nepalese monarchs are heads of state, but do not govern — and he will likely have a tough task gaining the support of many Nepalese.

The succession followed the death early Monday of his nephew, King Dipendra, the former crown prince whom officials have privately identified as the gunman who killed his family at a dinner Friday, then shot himself. Another royal also died of his wounds Monday, bringing the death toll to 10.

Many Nepalese refused to believe Dipendra was the killer. Amid a dearth of official information, they gathered on street corners, exchanging gossip and conspiracy theories that may have helped fuel public anger.

Some noted that Gyanendra and his son, Paras Shah, who might become crown prince, were absent from the dinner that ended in bloodshed, while Gyanendra's wife, whom he crowned Monday as queen, was wounded but survived.

Thousands of angry people took to the streets Monday, some throwing rocks in demonstrations that police first broke up using tear gas. More crowds gathered, with people chanting "Dipendra is innocent" and "punish the real murderers." Others yelled: "We don't want Gyanendra."

State-run radio finally ordered citizens to remain indoors from 4 p.m. until 5 a.m. Tuesday.

"Do not go out of your houses or you can be shot," warned a radio bulletin, although police and soldiers were supposed to first warn violators to get inside. Armed riot patrols surrounded the royal palace and eyewitnesses saw soldiers fire warning shots into the air and beat demonstrators with batons.

Soldiers pointed guns at people and shouted at them to rush home as they scurried through streets and alleyways.

Some people were injured by flying rocks and tear gas shells, but the highly secretive authorities provided little official information.

After police and soldiers cleared people off streets littered with rocks and smashed bricks, officials staged an evening funeral procession for Dipendra and cremated him with Hindu rites. Soldiers fired cannon volleys in a salute after nightfall.

Meanwhile, the State Department warned Americans in Nepal to remain indoors until Tuesday because of the disturbances. Spokesman Richard Boucher said the department was preparing an announcement that would urge Americans to defer travel to Nepal.

Earlier, thousands lined the path of a royal procession as King Gyanendra rode in a horse-drawn carriage from the old palace, where he was enthroned, to the new palace that will be his official residence — the scene of the killings.

There was little applause and few people clasped their hands in the traditional Hindu greeting of respect as their new monarch passed. A lone supporter shouted "long live the king," but nobody joined in.

Gyanendra's slain elder brother, King Birendra, was a beloved monarch regarded by many as an incarnation of the Hindu god Vishnu. King Birendra's youngest brother, Dhirendra Shah, died Monday of his wounds, the official National News Agency said, quoting doctors in the military hospital.

Gyanendra appeared emotionless as he addressed Nepal on Monday night, which by custom any new king must do.

"We need to be united at this hour so that no one can take undue advantage of the situation and harm the independence and democracy of the nation," he said.

He ordered an investigation of the shootings, headed by Supreme Court Chief Justice Keshav Prasad Upadhaya and two committee members: House Speaker Taranath Ranabhat and opposition leader Madhav Kumar Nepal.

Gyanendra appeared earlier at a palace enthronement ceremony, his head shaven in a traditional show of respect for the dead. He wore a crown topped with a large cream-color plume.

In a written statement, Gyanendra appeared to acknowledge problems with his claim that the palace killings were accidental.

"The facts could not be made public in yesterday's statement due to legal and constitutional hurdles," Gyanendra said. "I will make the facts of the incident public after an investigation."

Since Dipendra was technically the king over the weekend, he was above reproach under Nepal's constitution and by tradition — so accusing him of murder would have been out of the question. At the time, Gyanendra was regent, or acting king.

Some blame a political or military conspiracy for the deaths.

Maoist rebels, who launched an insurgency in 1996 and are seeking to eliminate the monarchy, pointed to a "grave political conspiracy" in a statement signed by Prachanda, the president of the underground Maoist party. Prachanda, who goes by one name, called the shootings a "pre-planned massacre" that would end Nepal's present political system.

MACS fires three for 'seatbelting' students

By Hillary S. Condon
Staff Writer

After an incident that involved confining children to their chairs using belts, two teachers and one teacher's assistant at Midland Academy Charter School were terminated.

On May 31, after school administrators discovered teachers used belts to restrain students in their chairs, the instructors involved were immediately fired. In a press statement issued by the school, director Irene Mason stated corporal punishment and the restraint of children is expressly prohibited by school policy.

"This has nothing to do with the way we run our discipline programs," Ms. Mason said. "There's a sadness that this even took place."

The names of the terminated staff members were not released.

Although Ms. Mason said they did not know the teachers were using this method of restraint, she said she learned the incident has occurred several times before and students were aware of the process of "seat-belting," which was used in the classes with the two terminated teachers. Students who would not remain seated were restrained with belts belonging to the staff members.

MACS school board member Paul St. Hilaire said the school dealt with the situation swiftly.

"There was a meeting called for all teachers and staff and a more distinct policy of no tolerance for this kind of thing was put out," he said. "But it is an isolated incident. We don't allow that to happen without repercussions. All people involved were identified and it was dealt with swiftly."

MACS's parent company, Advantage Schools, developed the school's "Code of Civility," which is required reading for all students, parents and teachers. It identifies the 10 keys to success for students — responsibility, perseverance, respect, kindness, truth, citizenship, courage, self-discipline, fairness and true friendship.

Although the code stresses character development and individual responsibilities of students, it also details the procedures for teachers and other staff members to take when discipline problems arise. For minor infractions, the code requires students repair or restore the damage and make restitutions.

For larger problems, parent conferences, suspensions and interventions are recommended. In the case of physical altercations, the code states a staff member should use professional judgment about whether he or she should become involved physically. There is no mention of physical punishments or corporal punishment.

These codes are reinforced to all staff members in monthly staff development sessions. Even teacher's assistants and substitute teachers must complete behavior management training and techniques in order to work at the charter school. St. Hilaire said the school does not plan to reevaluate or repeat training and policies, but action to that effect may be taken by Advantage Schools.

Spare the rod, spoil the child?

Midland Independent School District has a corporal punishment policy that is limited to spanking or paddling and only under certain circumstances. MISD policy states a district employee may use physical restraint to protect a person or property, obtain a weapon, remove an unwilling student or restrain an irrational student.

Hillcrest School is a private school for children with dyslexia and attention deficit disorder and has a policy of no corporal punishment. Executive Director Betty Starnes said any kind of disciplinary incident is solved by giving students what is called a challenge-solving sheet which encourages the students to assume the responsibility and gain ownership of the problems. The school also tries to circumvent problems with very few students per teacher.

Midland Christian School's handbook lists corporal punishment as a last resort, only used when detention, communication with parents and other counseling does not work. Superintendent Eddie Lee said because the school is private and Bible-based, most of the parents are very supportive and work with their children to solve any discipline problems. The school's 1120 students, of all grades from preschool through 12th grade, are also counseled using religious teachings.

Magnet teachers prepare for changes ahead

By Hillary S. Condon
Staff Writer

A nurturing attitude. Dependability. Responsibility. Friendship. Brotherhood. High expectations. Courage. Hope.

These ideals, adapted from author Clifton Taulbert's "Eight Habits of the Heart," are now being used as instructional material for teachers, who magnet school administrators hope will develop effective ways to encourage and nurture children's development.

Maurer

As Midland Independent School District prepares for its first magnet schools, teachers use their summer in-service days to tailor their craft to the specific needs of students at the new Elisha M. Pease Communications and Technology Magnet. The program began Monday, and about 35 teachers began early in the morning to start team-building, brainstorming and creating effective programs.

MISD Director of Gifted, Talented and Magnet Schools Patricia Maurer was the presenter during the start of the teacher in-service Monday. As the date for the opening of the newest magnet school nears, she is educating the teachers about the new and old programs such as Project Think, the K/12 program and the IMPACT Program.

"We're getting incredible outcome," she said.

Ms. Maurer also stressed to the teachers the development of a school community is as important as the advanced programs.

"We need to make sure we do things in a positive way in all of our actions," she told the group of teachers.

As the sounds of minor construction and moving furniture waved in from the future production and computer labs across the hall, the teachers were brainstorming about how they can develop those habits of the heart in their students.

Teachers Michele Southerland, Melissa Johnson, Cynthia Blair and Lisa Dominguez were in a discussion group together and came up with several ways to nurture high expectations in their students.

"We have to remember to be flexible, too," Ms. Blair said. "You may find that something that worked at the beginning of the school year my not work anymore."

Other suggestions the group brought to the rest of their colleagues included using activities in self-esteem and brainstorming with the students about rules, expectations and boundaries through team meetings.

"One of the things we discussed was making students feel successful," said MISD teacher Eduardo Loera. "To start the students with what they know and then reinforce those successes."

Teacher Lisa Kilbourn also contributed an idea to increase the high expectations from students — to increase what Ms. Maurer calls "the participatory ownership."

"These kids need to have a sense of ownership, so they feel like the school is their place," Ms. Kilbourn said. "They need to feel involved in every aspect of school life."

Pease's physical renovations include classes added to existing wings and the renovation of the wings and rooms to allow for production labs and computer centers. Phase I of the construction, will include the labs and all renovations to existing buildings and classrooms. That phase will be complete by the time school starts this fall.

Builders estimate Phase II will be completed in the fall of 2002.

Lone Star SPCA can't find home for pot-belly pig

By Kristine Aleman
MRT Correspondent

This little piggy went to the market, this little piggy went home. This little piggy had roast beef, this little piggy had none ... but this big piggy needs a good, good, good home. This pot-belly pig is Petunia, who temporarily lives at Lone Star SPCA, and is searching for someone to give her a home.

Tim Fischer/Reporter-Telegram
Petunia the potbelly pig poses for a photograph at Lone Star SPCA recently.

"This is the first pot-belly pig we've ever had," said Wade Kneupper, kennel technician. "A gentleman found her and asked if we could take her in, so we said 'sure, why not.'"

When Petunia was brought into Lone Star, her excessive weight prohibited her from walking, said Susan Cronin, Lone Star SPCA director. The veterinarian who performs regular check-ups on all the animals ordered her to literally stop eating for four days. Petunia today tips the scale 300 pounds. She's still a bit overweight.

Recently, Lone Star took in a small wild pig. Petunia warmed up to the smaller pig.

"She thought the little pig was her offspring, and the pig thought Petunia was his mom. They used to walk around together all the time," Kneupper said. "But we found a home for the little pig, and since he's been gone, Petunia's fallen in a deep depression."

Good 'neighbors' work to improve homes of the needy

By Kristine Aleman
MRT Correspondent

Midland Neighborhood Housing Services kicked off its sixth annual NeighborWorks Week Monday.

NeighborWorks Week is a nationwide effort of the Neighborhood Reinvestment Corporation to provide grants to neighborhood housing services for the construction and revitalization of homes.

"We're starting to get our name back into the community and let people know what products and services we offer," said J. Arenivas, NHS executive director. "Our goal is to revitalize the community and this is our first step in reaching it."

Each year, housing services across the nation participate in different service activities in their neighborhoods to earn grants that fund the building and improvement of their homes.

This week, NHS staff members and volunteers will start construction on six new homes. The homes, which are located in the east and south sides of Midland, are owned by eight Midland senior citizens and are included in NHS target zones

NHS will work with two houses per day planting plants and flowers, all donated by area businesses.

Exploding insect population keeps exterminators busy

By Kasey Kelly
MRT Correspondent

There's been a explosion in the populations of black ground beetles, cut worm moths, false chinch bugs and scorpions recently, and many areas in West Texas have fallen to the insectile invasion.

Many experts attribute this to recent wet weather.

Russell Baker with the Agricultural Extension Office credits the increased bug population to the wet winter weather and the weeds.

"Beetles are opportunistic," Baker said. "They have more to eat right now so they are coming out to take advantage of it."

There are a great number of species of ground beetles and some are rather ferocious looking, resulting in some very worried homeowners. These shiny, blackish brown beetles are predators to other insects and enter houses in the spring looking for other insects on which to feed. Ground beetles have well-developed mandibles, but are not known to bite people. They use their strong mouth parts to devour other insects, such as moths.

There are somewhere between 150,000 and 200,000 known species of moths that live wherever vegetation exists. Since West Texas has more vegetation than usual, moths are flourishing.

Tim Fischer/Reporter-Telegram
This is a black ground beetle.

Moths in general have a fairly short life span and Baker believes many moths in this area will not be able to complete their life cycles because the resources they need to survive are also dying.

"Many will simply die from dehydration," Baker said.

Baker does not recommend any extensive controls for these "pests," but does recommend that homeowners seal up cracks around their homes to make it more difficult for bugs to enter.

Nancy Witten, owner of Boydstun Pest Control, said her business always picks up this time of year. She recommends a control program to eliminate pesky bugs.

"It's like any other thing you undertake. There are prescribed rules of doing things right and then there

Program offers assortment of knowledge

By Andrea Fryrear
MRT Correspondent

"To quote Robert Louis Stevenson, 'The world is so full of a number of things, I'm sure we should all be as happy as kings,'" said Enid Davis with a smile as she explained why she is again volunteering to coordinate the Midland County Public Library's Summer Brown Bag Lunch Program.

Whether it's a hunt for your elusive ancestors or a look at prehistoric graffiti is what you crave, Midland County Library's Brown Bag Lunch Program can satisfy your appetite for knowledge.

For the past three of its four years, Ms. Davis has organized the Brown Bag Lunch Program and each year she attempts to fill it with a varied arrangement of all the world has to offer.

Ms. Davis said she hopes this program will help people realize "the classroom is not the only place to learn. The library is a treasure trove of knowledge, and learning keeps us young."

Joann Merritt, who will speak on the butterflies of Midland County, will be the first of many speakers to address the lunch assembly. Ms. Merritt's presentation will kick off a series of speakers and topics, which range from "Boom and Bust: Water and West Texas Ghost Towns," presented by Brandon Young of the Sibley Nature Center, to an explanation of digital television from Jim Blischke of KOCV TV.

"People are interested in all manner of topics," Ms. Davis said. "And Midland has a wide variety of people with various interests who are eager to share their knowledge."

Two such people are Connie and Gene Hardy, co-directors of the Blakemore Planetarium who will speak on July 24. Their topic will be "Nighttime Glitter: The Stars of West Texas."

Through a computer generated show, the Hardys will guide their audience through Midland's night sky. Ms. Hardy said this will include anything relevant to space at the time of their presentation, including an examination of the space station, which is currently visible from Midland during the evening hours.

This will be the Hardys' second year to participate in the Summer Brown Bag Lunch Program. Ms. Hardy said she has found it to be "a great way for people to learn about what's going on."

The program's also a great way to get free access to the Blakemore Planetarium; the Hardys plan to raffle off free passes to planetarium shows during their presentation.

PETUNIA: Depressed pig needs good home

(From 1B)

The barking of dogs and the daily business of Lone Star employees don't seem to bother Petunia. She lies in the corner of her pen under the shade of a small roof, munches on corn and occasionally relaxes in her well-maintained mud pit.

Although Petunia is not yet docile with humans, many potbelly pigs are as clean as dogs and are good pets, some even good enough to keep in the house, Kneupper said. Petunia is looking for a home outside city limits and maybe even a home with other pigs like herself. There is no adoption fee at Lone Star, but a donation is requested.

"She's an oversized, enormous pet," Ms. Cronin said. "But when the flowers are in bloom, she'll do anything to eat them. She's a very willful animal."

LIBRARY: Program offers diverse knowledge, lunch

(From 1B)

"I think of current interest topics, or I think about what I am curious about that I think other people would be curious about as well," Ms. Davis said. Then she undertakes the task of finding people who are able and willing to relate what they know about these topics to an audience.

Ms. Davis says finding speakers who are willing to spend their lunch hour in the library's upstairs meeting room has never presented a problem for her. The only problem is scheduling her eager lecturers in a way that allows them all to share their knowledge with her equally eager listeners.

Whatever their age or interest, Ms. Davis hopes each person who attends the Brown Bag Lunch takes away "a new bit of information, a new interest and a realization that there is a lot at the library for them to enjoy."

Summer Brown Bag Lunch Program opens on Wednesday June 13 and continues each Wednesday until August 15. The program begins at noon in the Library's upstairs meeting room at 301 W. Missouri. Tea, coffee and water are provided, and the public is encouraged to attend. The meeting room will open at 11:45 a.m.

OBITUARIES

John William Ruwwe

John was born June 14, 1914 in St. Louis, Missouri to Clara Niemeier and Harry Francis Ruwwe. He was reared in St. Louis attending Cleveland High School. He graduated in 1936 from the University of Missouri, School of Mines with a B.S. degrees in Mining Engineering and Geology. Working his way through school during the Great Depression, instilled the value of hard work, responsibility and stewardship, which he, in turn, passed on to his family.

A memorial service has been scheduled for 2 p.m., Wednesday, June 6, 2001 at the First Presbyterian Church with Dr. Jerry Hilton officiating. Arrangements are under the direction of Ellis Funeral Home.

Following college, he was employed by Phillips Petroleum Company where he performed well site geology in various parts of Oklahoma. After Pearl Harbor, he volunteered to serve his country by joining the Navy where he enrolled in the Officers Training Program. Upon completion, he was commissioned to the U.S.S. Intrepid, a newly built aircraft carrier. John served proudly and courageously in the Pacific Theatre including numerous kamikaze attacks near Truk and Luzon. He received an honorable discharge after four years of service achieving the rank of Lieutenant.

John returned from the War and resumed his geologic career with Phillips in Oklahoma and was subsequently transferred to Midland, Texas. After a brief period in Midland, Phillips proposed John move back to Oklahoma. John decided Midland was to be his home and he left Phillips to join Lario Oil & Gas as a geologist. John joined the ranks of the Independent Geologist in 1953.

John pursued his love for carbonate geology exploring the Horseshoe Atoll of Scurry, Howard and Borden Counties Texas where he worked with Trice Production Company. John was instrumental in the discovery of numerous prolific Canyon pinnacle reefs, many of which are still producing today. John Ruwwe knew that trend better than anyone in the Permian Basin!

John continued to explore the reef trend with his son beginning in the late 1980's where they were some of the earliest explorationists to begin using three-dimensional seismic. In 1995, John was recognized as a "Pioneer" by the Permian Basin Petroleum Pioneers.

John Ruwwe met Mary Adele in Midland, Texas and were married in 1952 in the First Presbyterian Church. He was a dedicated and loving father, helping raise three daughters and a son. He loved being with his family, playing tennis and enjoying the great outdoors. John was a 32nd Degree Mason and a member of the Scottish Rite for over 55 years. He also was a member of the West Texas Geologic Society, SIPES, a 50-year member of the A.A.P.G., and a deacon of the First Presbyterian Church of Midland.

John is preceded in death by his mother and father, Harry and Clara Ruwwe, and his younger brother, Ralph Ruwwe.

John is survived by his wife of 48 years, Mary Adele; daughters, Nancy Thomas of Fort Worth, Elizabeth Barnett of Dallas, Kay Rembert and her husband, Cam of Dallas, and John, Jr. and his wife, Lacy of Austin; his 11 grandchildren, Caroline and Elaine Thomas, Amy and Emily Rembert, Sarah, Allison, and Ben Barnett, and Claire, John III, Michael, and David Ruwwe.

The family expresses their gratitude to caregivers and friends.

Memorial contributions may be directed to the First Presbyterian Church, Hospice of Midland, the West Texas Geologic Scholarship Fund Society, or the charity of one's choice.

is the easy way out," Ms. Witten said. "The best thing to do is spray the inside, the outside and treat the attic."

Ms. Witten said false chinch bugs are new this year and any general purpose insecticide will kill them.

Red Dot Pest and Weed Control representatives said they have had a dramatic increase in calls recently, mainly about chinch bugs.

Owner Gary Marshall said using a granular insecticide on lawn areas is the best control for many of these pests.

"You can find products that contain Diazinon or Dursban at places like Home Depot," Marshall said.

However, he did add a word of caution saying "people can spend a great amount of money at the hardware store without getting lasting effects."

He added that sometimes its best to call a professional exterminator to treat the inside of the home.

Novel eases author's pain from loss of mom

By Mary Dearen
Lifestyle Editor

One day Ginnie Siena Bivona had a blank computer screen. Then she sat down in front of it and began to write. Three years later she had a novel, "Ida Mae Tutweiler and the Traveling Tea Party."

"I had no plan — no outline. I just started writing," said Ms. Bivona, 70, acquisitions editor of Republic of Texas Press and executive director of Book Publishers of Texas.

"Ida Mae Tutweiler and the Traveling Tea Party" is about Ida Mae and her best friend, Jane Tetley, who has terminal breast cancer.

Ms. Bivona said her novel is "about saying goodbye to those women who didn't make it ... We talk about the survivors. We don't talk about those who don't survive."

Her mother, Virginia Johnson Siena, died from breast cancer when she was 48.

"Her cancer was first discovered when I was only 15, and she had her first mastectomy then. The second breast was removed five years later. She died on March 4, 1954. I had been married a month," said Ms. Bivona, who was born and raised in Cleveland Heights, Ohio.

"My father told me when I was 19 that she was going to die, but she hung on (just like a mother) until she saw me married. She went into the hospital two weeks after the wedding."

Ms. Bivona, who was 24 when her mother died, also lost two close friends to the disease. But she was raised in an era when cancer and dying were not often discussed.

But she thought about it. "I thought about it a lot ... Breast cancer has impacted my life."

And then she began to write about it. She said initially her character Jane "had another type of cancer, but I called my doctor and he told me about one of his patients, who went for a year and a half with a lump in her breast, and he suggested I make it breast cancer.

"I cried a lot when I was writing it. I think I dealt with a lot of the feelings I had managed to stuff away for years and years and really probably would have avoided forever if I hadn't been pushed into changing what Jane had.

"And I also wanted to honor my friends Sigrid and B.J., both of whom died of breast cancer. I know I did not deal well with their deaths either, in that I tried to pretend that everything was going to be fine, and recovery was right around the corner."

After "Ida Mae" was published last year, "I really thought it would sell and I'd make a lot of money."

She hasn't yet. But she became rich in another way. She said she has met women who have gone through what she has: losing loved ones to breast cancer.

Ms. Bivona said her characters are based on family members and people she has known. Jane is based on her cousin Ann, who is an actress. Ida Mae "is a little bit of me; a little bit of my mother."

She said many of the incidents in the novel are based on things that have happened to her, including her close relationship with her daughters, Stephanie and Elizabeth. "You write what you know."

Ms. Bivona, who also has three sons, Mark, Matt and Larry, and six grandchildren, said her career as a writer began in 1988 with "Dallas Cooks," a newsletter she self-published for two years. With subscribers from all across the country, "Dallas Cooks" included interviews with area chefs and where to go for gourmet dining.

If was after that venture that she discovered she liked to write and began writing in earnest in 1993. "I was a late bloomer," quipped the first-time novelist. "Writing is such a joy. When you get a good sentence, you say, 'Whoa. Where did that come from?'"

'Tutweiler' is a great read for anyone who's loved a friend

Ida Mae Tutweiler and the Traveling Tea Party
By Ginnie Siena Bivona
(AuthorLink Press, 2000, $12.95, 144 pages)

Review by Mary Dearen
Lifestyle Editor

"Ida Mae Tutweiler and the Traveling Tea Party" is the touching story of two women, Ida Mae, and her best friend, Jane Tetley, and what happens when one of them is diagnosed with breast cancer.

Ida Mae is afraid to leave the town where they were born and raised, and her life is centered around the people most important to her: daughter Kate, granddaughter Jenny and Jane. Embellishing on the tradition established by her mother, Ida Mae takes afternoon tea to new heights. She serves tea in different rooms of the house, depending on her mood — thus the title.

Jane is a much-married, much-divorced actress who couldn't wait to leave the town of Walton Falls after high school graduation and hardly ever looked back except for brief visits to see Ida Mae and "our Kate." She keeps their relationship going strong with phone calls for which she pays all the bills.

Ginnie Siena Bivona, acquisitions editor of Republic of Texas Press and executive director of Book Publishers of Texas, has crafted a short, easy-to-read novel in an unusual style.

It is written in first person from Ida Mae's point of view, in present tense, but Ida Mae also reminisces about her past. To help tell the story of Ida Mae and Jane, Ms. Bivona has woven entries of the diary that Ida Mae has kept since she was 10 when her beloved Mum gave her the diary as a birthday present.

Through these entries we learn about Ida Mae's life. She had an unhappy marriage to Tom Tutweiler, but it produced a wonderful daughter — "I see so much of me in her, her dark hair and ready smile ... And yet, so much of her is totally unique that I wonder where this marvelous stranger came from." We also learn that Ida Mae had a love affair "that most women only dream about."

After high school she went to work at a print shop that she bought when the owner retired. She eventually sold the business and opened up a tea room called Ladyfingers. In this endeavor she was assisted by Kate, Jenny and Ida Mae's cousin, Bernadette.

Another element that sets this novel apart from many others is that after the last chapter, Ms. Bivona, who has written two cookbooks, includes recipes for Kate's and Jenny's favorite cookies and dishes that are specialties of Ladyfingers.

"Ida Mae Tutweiler and the Traveling Tea Party" is a delightful book that will bring both laughter and tears and is a must read for anyone who has known the love of a close friend.

DEAR ABBY

Girl with eating disorder asks teens to seek help

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Your column about teen fitness caught my attention. I am a high school sophomore who is involved in sports activities such as swimming, track/cross country and kickboxing. I have been struggling with anorexia and bulimia since my freshman year. It's a serious problem that society needs to address.

My purpose in writing is to thank you and Terrie, the woman whose letter you printed. It meant the world to me, and I'm sure it did to hundreds of other teens. Just knowing someone cared brought tears to my eyes.

If I could offer advice to teens suffering from this disease, it would be this: GET HELP. You are living in a dark, cold world that you shouldn't have to be in. If you can't talk to your parents, then reach out to someone else -- a teacher or school counselor. They're there to help.

Also, don't give up. When things seem at their worst, they can only get better. It helps to remember that there really are people who care and that you're not alone.

After coming to terms with my problem, I went to my mother, who put me into counseling right away. I was also taken to a nutritionist to learn about how to eat healthy. Only then did my recovery begin.

Thank you, Abby. Your column will be displayed in my room for a long time. It's given me strength to get through this. — NEW JERSEY TEEN ON THE ROAD TO RECOVERY

DEAR N.J. TEEN: I'm pleased you're recovering. Your letter is sure to raise awareness among other teen-agers. That's important, because our culture -- with help from the media — tends to glamorize extreme thinness. It's a dangerous goal.

According to the Department of Health and Human Services, one-third of all girls in grades 9 through 12 think that they are overweight, and 60 percent of them say they are trying to lose weight. Nearly half of all teen-age girls skip a meal to control their weight — and between 3.6 percent and 12.9 percent of young women suffer from one of the three main eating disorders: anorexia nervosa, bulimia or binge-eating. Of all psychiatric disorders, eating disorders have the highest mortality rate — 10 percent.

Starving is not a proper or effective way to lose weight. Teens who fail to get enough vitamins and minerals in their diet are setting themselves up for osteoporosis in their later years. The most effective way to practice sensible weight control is to talk to your physician or a registered dietitian about what constitutes a healthy, balanced diet; to realize that weight is not put on overnight and it's not lost overnight; and to establish a routine that includes moderate physical activity.

Angelina Jolie's dad says she can handle 'Tomb Raider' moves

LOS ANGELES — It's no surprise Angelina Jolie has chosen physically demanding movie roles, said her father, Jon Voight.

"Angie was very gifted athletically as a kid," Voight told AP Radio. "She played on this little soccer team and she was one of the youngest. She was one of the best."

Now 26, Jolie is putting those childhood skills to use as the adventurous Lara Croft in "Tomb Raider," a movie based on the video game.

"Now she's doing 'Tomb Raider' where she's doing all these athletics and climbing, you know, mountain climbing and karate and kickboxing and stuff like that. And she loves it, she just loves it," the 62-year-old actor said. "And that's because she always was an athlete, you know, she always had that athletic stuff in her."

"Tomb Raider" opens in theaters June 15.

HARTFORD, Conn. — After spending more than three decades dealing with the business that is rock 'n' roll, Aerosmith co-founder Joe Perry dreams of a time when he can focus on nothing but playing his guitar. Dream on.

With the release of a new album and summer-long U.S. tour that starts Wednesday in Hartford, Perry and the Boston-based quintet have been dizzied by a flurry of videos, movie soundtracks, award ceremonies, sporting event appearances and collaborations with other artists.

"It seems like Aerosmith has turned into a full-time job, which is kind of a drag because I got into this business so I wouldn't have to work," Perry said after a recent recording session at his home in Cohasset, Mass.

"We just want to play our guitars, get out there, get a little instant energy, adrenaline rush and move on to the next show," he said. "But it seems there's so much other stuff that goes along with it now."

He admits the band members — including co-founder Steven Tyler — have changed, and with them, the music. They still kick out ear-bleeding, riff-based hits, but have found more success in melodic power ballads like "Jaded" that receive widespread radio play.

"There's only a couple of us that have long hair anymore. You can't stay the same. I think it's boring," said Perry, 50. "But I still like leather pants, I don't think that's going to change anytime soon ... they're just not as tight as they used to be, but they're still leather."

NEW YORK — John Travolta says the key to surviving his rollercoaster 26-year career has been not caring exclusively about success.

"I love my career," Travolta said in an interview in Sunday's Daily News. "I love the bravado of it. Sometimes it works great, sometimes it works good and sometimes it doesn't work."

Travolta's star dimmed dramatically after his 1970s idol-making role in "Saturday Night Fever." The New Jersey-born actor went into free-fall with a series of flops including "Staying Alive," "Two of a Kind" and "Moment by Moment."

But Travolta, 47, says he has no regrets over those roles, or turning down the leads in "American Gigolo," "An Officer and a Gentleman" and "Splash."

When Travolta was hailed as the comeback kid after starring in Quentin Tarantino's "Pulp Fiction" he was tempted to point out he'd been working steadily for the last two decades.

"I kept saying, 'Well, you know, I've actually been around.' But Quentin told me, 'Leave it alone. Don't you get it? They're doing you a favor.'"

NEW YORK — Reba McEntire says her biggest challenge has been confronting the domineering men in her life.

McEntire, 43, said in Sunday's Parade magazine that her father was a strict disciplinarian and her first husband, Charles Battles, dominated her.

"I married a rodeo cowboy very much like daddy. I don't know why I stayed with him. Charlie tried to control me. With Charlie it was, 'Do what I say you need to do,'" McEntire said.

Battles told McEntire she'd have to quit singing if she wanted children because he had no intention of changing diapers. In 1986, after she was voted Entertainer of the Year, Battles told her she'd "pretty much peaked" and wouldn't be able to do much more.

After that, McEntire said she decided to leave her childless marriage and start a new life in Nashville. She married musician Narvel Blackstock in 1989 and the two have a son, 11-year-old Shelby.

"Some men try to brainwash their women into thinking that no other man would ever want them," McEntire said. "Men treat women that way out of insecurity, so they'll stay with them. It's getting into those relationships that makes your life such a living hell."

JACQUELINE BIGAR'S STARS

The Stars Show the Kind of Day You'll Have: 5-Dynamic; 4-Positive; 3-Average; 2-So-so; 1-Difficult

HAPPY BIRTHDAY for Tuesday, June 5, 2001:

Expect many areas of your life to be different a year from now. The intensity with which you approach life will heighten, too. Though you are usually willing to jump in with both feet, holding back a little keeps the lines of communication open, especially with those close to you. By November, communication moves forward if you have played your cards right. January brings important relationship issues to the forefront. Whether single or attached, you're like to gain insight for improvement. New interests and new friends keep your life from being dull. You might rekindle old friendships that surprise you. Enjoy the abundance of SAGITTARIUS.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) ★★★ Your mental and physical energy could be at cross-purposes now. Taking two steps forward and three steps backward can be frustrating. Review what you have learned recently, and make plans to expand that knowledge soon. Tonight: Dream a little.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) ★★★★ Live in the moment. Relationships thrive early in the day. Adjust your schedule to take advantage of opportunities when they appear. Some days, you just have to try something new. Expand your comfort zone. Tomorrow will be soon enough to re-establish routine. Tonight: Reach out socially.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) ★★★★ Think before speaking. Don't force your opinion, even if you believe you have a better idea than someone else. Any change that you think you have brought about has a high probability of being dismissed once the person thinks about it. Instead, work on the idea in your mind to make it more appealing. Tonight: Keep romance lighthearted.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) ★★★★ Information that enlightens or provides a solution could come your way. Be prepared to put your all into the work ahead. Someone in authority can help if you are willing to ask. Two heads are better than one, as the saying goes. Tonight: Romance takes a back seat.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) ★★★★ Success comes easily when you know how to deal with those in charge. Friends can be helpful, too. Stay connected to supportive people around you. Sharing the spotlight is not such a bad idea. Tonight: Relax and see what the universe has in store for you.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) ★★★ Avoid arguments, no matter what, so that you don't have to retract your words. Taking a laissez-faire attitude will get you through the day peacefully. Put your analytical skills to use privately on debatable issues. You can record your thoughts on paper, but keep them from your lips. Tonight: Something you really enjoy.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) ★★★★ A day trip can provide enjoyment as well as a pleasant surprise. Take someone along. Learn something new and relish the experience. Slight delays won't bother you if you have cleared your calendar of other commitments. Tonight: You could talk all night.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) ★★★★ If things get a little tense, you might feel like giving up. Try breaking a project down into manageable pieces. Focusing on the details can alleviate restlessness and maintain productivity. Recognize the importance of education for you or someone else. Tonight: Put worries aside.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) ★★★★ Emotions rise to the surface easily. Relax and allow events to unfold without your help. Pushing too hard does not work. If you can, visualize the outcome that you want. Trying too hard can upset others who want to move more slowly. Tonight: Ask for a back rub.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) ★★★★ You probably know what you want to say, but not quite how to say it. Or you might not be able to get in touch with the person you want to talk with. Work privately on what occupies your mind. Strategy becomes important to your success. Tonight: The great outdoors can clear your head.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) ★★★★★ Don't second-guess something that turns out well. Everyone deserves a break now and then. Relationships might surprise you. Give this day a high rating. Tonight: Count your blessings.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) ★★★★ Your imagination pays off in a big way — and it seems to happen without much effort on your part. You can accomplish quite a bit. As long as you feel good about what is occurring, pay no attention to those who doubt you. Tonight: Don't worry; be happy!

Opening lead: King of ♣

All too often a declarer will plan the play based on his side's combined assets without taking the defenders' hands into consideration, or working out what is needed to land the contract — a deadly combination. If you regard yourself a capable declarer, cover the East-West cards and decide how you would play this spade partscore after West cashes the ace and king of clubs, East following with the six and nine, and continues with the seven, East producing the jack.

Even at adverse vulnerability, East-West should have been more aggressive in the auction. As the cards lie, they can make 11 tricks at a heart contract, yet neither was prepared to venture to the three-level. You have won the first battle by buying the hand at two spades. See if you can clinch the victory by bringing home eight tricks.

Since the early play has made it likely that East has one of the high heart honors and that defender has already shown up with the jack of clubs, crossing to dummy in trumps to take the diamond finesse is a waste of time — West must hold the king for the one-no-trump opening bid. The only way to avoid losing two diamond tricks is to find West with a doubleton king in the suit.

Now that you have reached that conclusion, how should you tackle trumps? West must have four clubs; otherwise, continuing the suit in view of East's discouraging six risks setting up the queen in the South hand. West is also marked with exactly three hearts, and you need the defender to have just two diamonds if you are to have any chance. Therefore, West must hold four spades!

Since the odds of West holding the jack of trumps is 4-to-1 in favor, the play becomes an open book. At trick four, run the 10 of spades! When that wins, continue with a spade to the king, return to hand with the ace of diamonds and draw the outstanding trumps. Now lead a low diamond from hand, and when West produces the king, the contract sneaks in under the wire.

If the cards are not as in the diagram, you have no play for the contract. And should the spade finesse lose, it will cost you a trick — but that is a small price to pay for giving it your best shot.

Quality child care positively effects child's development

By T. Berry Brazelton, M.D., and Joshua Sparrow, M.D.
N.Y. Times News Service

There has been a flurry of controversy over some recently released findings from a study by the National Institute of Child Health and Human Development on the effects of child care on young children's development.

Unfortunately, most of the attention has gone to a single finding: According to the sound bites, child care causes behavior problems. But what the preliminary report really shows is that 30 or more hours per week of child care were associated with higher rates of "problem" behaviors than fewer hours of child care.

Seventeen percent of young children in child care for more than 30 hours per week were rated as "aggressive" — yet a similar percentage of children the same ages in the general population show the same kind of behavior.

The fact that more than 80 percent of the children in child care were not labeled with problem behavior was neglected. And the developmental benefits identified with high-quality child care — such as better cognitive and language performance — have been largely ignored.

The NICHD report itself emphasized that while children who spent more time in care during the infancy, toddler and preschool years were more likely to show assertiveness, disobedience, defiance and aggression than those who spent less time in care, it was by no means the case that most children often behaved this way.

The cost of the confusing media attention is enormous. There are 13 million young children in child care in this country — including 6 million infants and toddlers, according to the National Center for Education Statistics. One in three are poor — or would be if their mothers did not work.

Quality child care means well-trained caregivers, and lots of them. It also means family care — care that welcomes and supports parents. Such care is expensive, though, and therefore unavailable to most families. So a good number of working parents are forced to leave their children in substandard care.

The quality of child care is — and should be — a major political issue today. Our country needs to invest in our most valuable resources — our children and our families — with such steps as paid parental leave and quality child care centers available to all families.

Many working parents are frightened about what poor-quality care may mean to their children's development. Even when a parent is able to afford high-quality care, he or she struggles with the grief over separating from the child and over missing important events in the child's life.

The stress these parents live with is bound to reflect itself in their children's development. Could this be a factor contributing to problem behavior? Perhaps 30 or more hours of child care is not the cause of problem behavior but simply a marker for the stresses on families that must use full-time child care.

The study's findings on the positive effects of quality care should not be overlooked. Instead, they should spark a national outcry for quality care for all children. Perhaps we can follow the lead of our nation's police chiefs and law enforcers, who face daily the results of our society's inattention to families and children. Many of them have joined together to form a national organization, "Fight Crime: Invest in Kids," because they are convinced that improving child care in the first few years is the most important step we can take toward preventing crime later in life.

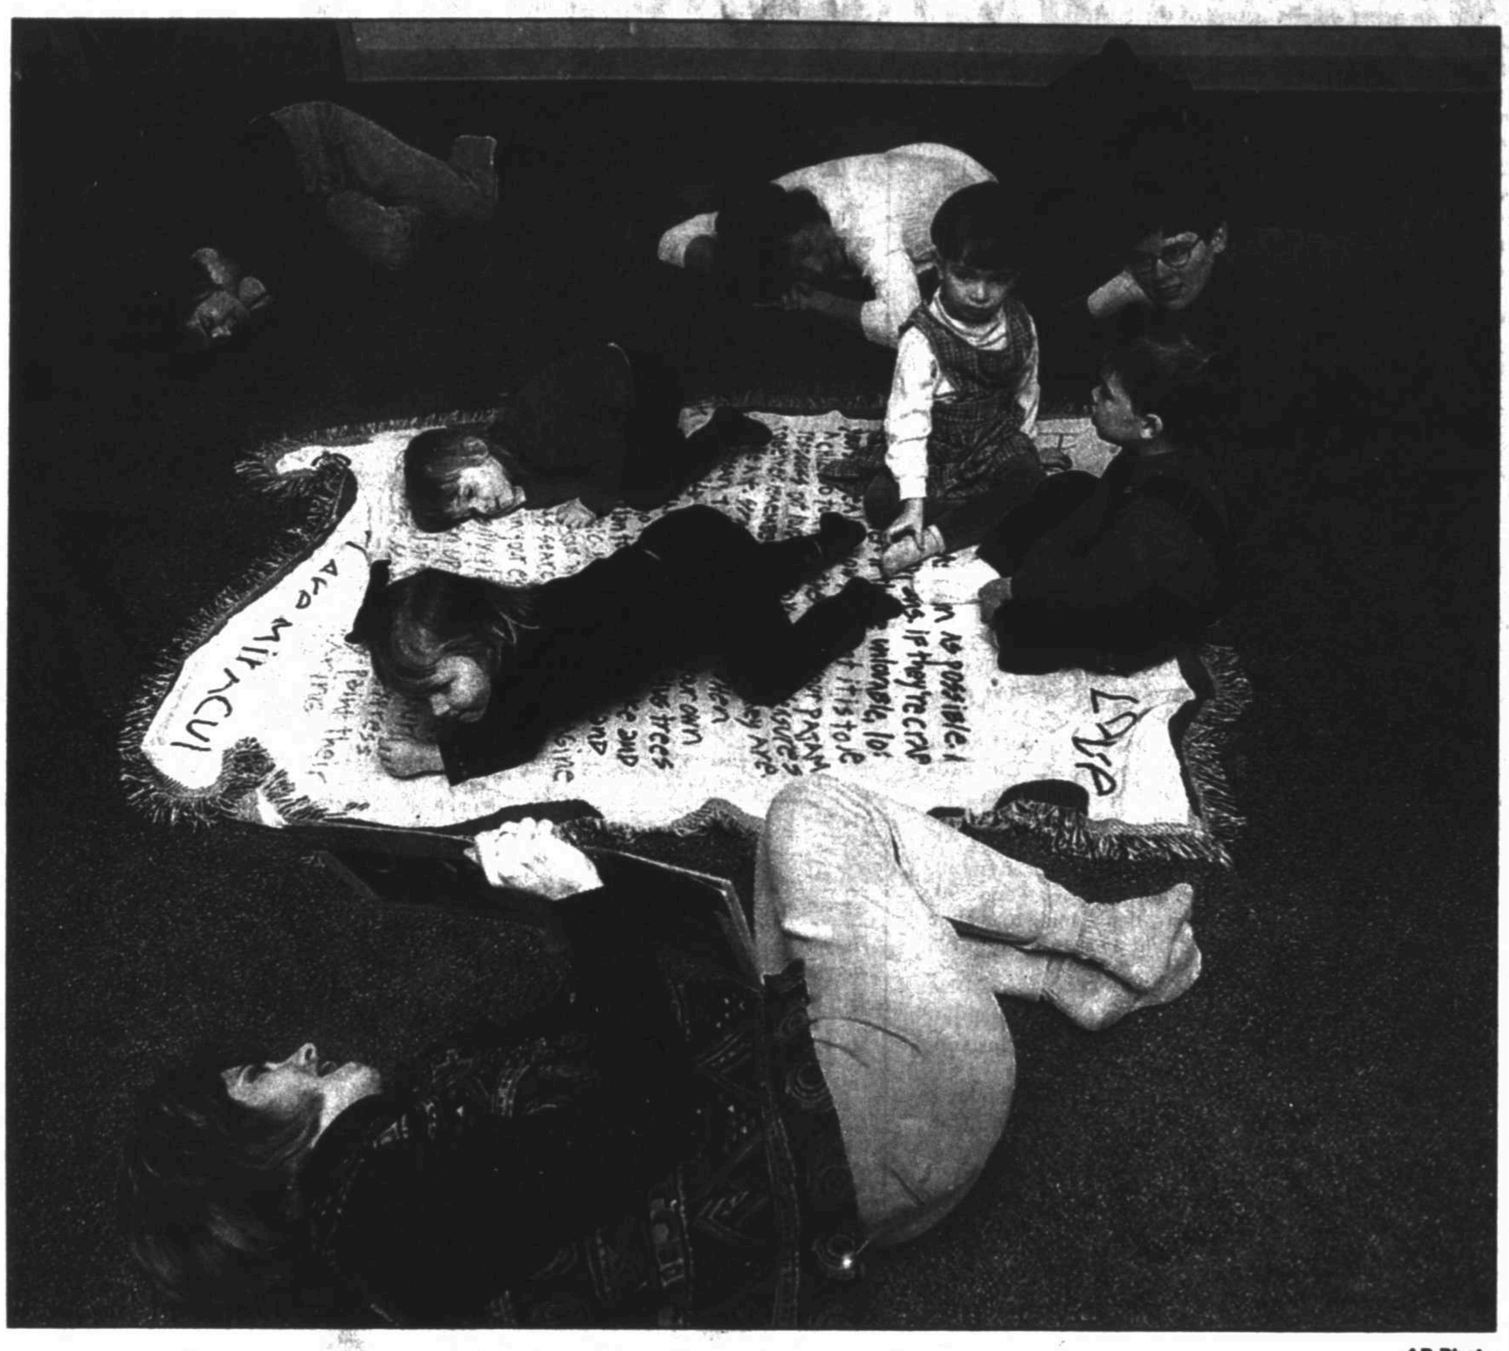

In my experience, 3-, 4- and 5-year olds are often seen as problematic as they develop normal aggressive, independent behaviors. Children who exhibit true behavior problems are likely to lack three qualities: self-esteem, altruism and a motivation for learning. We know that the foundations for these can most effectively be laid during a child's first three years. Instilling these qualities in our children should be our goal. Quality child care — which supplements the efforts of parents — can help us achieve it.

Katie Henderson, foreground, leads children at the close of a Kindermusik class in Bloomington Ill., where both children and parents serenaded animals to sleep during a story sung by Ms. Henderson. Children ages18 months to 3 years participate in the class. The early childhood music class is based on the belief that every child is musical and the parent is the most important teacher.

Parents are important part of program

By Kate Arthur
Associated Press

BLOOMINGTON, Ill. — When Katie Henderson was living in the Chicago suburbs, she got a call from Wheaton College asking if she'd be interested in teaching Kindermusik.

"I said, 'Sure, what's Kindermusik?'" she recalled.

That was her prelude to the early childhood music program that's based on the belief that every child is musical and the parent is the most important teacher.

When Ms. Henderson's husband, Scott, was transferred to Bloomington in 1994, the Illinois State University piano performance graduate started offering Kindermusik classes in her home, beginning with 28 students. Now that she has nearly 400, she's hired seven teachers and offers the weekly program for infants through age 7 at the Evangelical Free Church in Bloomington.

The emphasis in Kindermusik, an international program, is on the learning process, not performance, so there's no pressure to perform. And no recitals.

"It's not that they're going to come in and sit and play the instrument and perform," Ms. Henderson said. "It's more about, 'What are they going to think about? What can we engage them in?'"

On a recent morning, parents, grandparents and nannies walked in and dropped their diaper bags and took a seat in a row of chairs outside the classroom just long enough to pull off tiny jackets and sweaters. When the child is age 3 or younger, a parent or caregiver participates in the class, which averages $8 a week.

"What's key to our program is parental involvement," Ms. Henderson said. "We know from research the child learns best when he's secure. He can reach out a bit, but he can turn around and Mom's still there."

What distinguishes Kindermusik from other programs, Ms. Henderson said, is that it includes home activity books and CD recordings. Suggested activities might be as simple as asking the child to listen for loud and quiet sounds in the kitchen.

"It's something that needs to be incorporated into everyday life, and I think it's easy to do. Kids do it very naturally. Sometimes the parents are the ones who need a little training in how to do it," she said.

Initially, parents may be skeptical their child will prefer a CD recording of an opera singer or string quartet over a popular music video.

"A lot of parents will say, 'This isn't Barney,' but then they'll play it for a few weeks and they'll say, 'Why is this all they want to listen to?'"

Exposing children to strings and jazz and choir not only challenges their attention span but lays the foundation for an appreciation of those music genres later in life, she explained.

As the child ages, more specific goals are set. From 3 to 5, they develop their voice and work on fine-motor skills and basic concepts such as rhythm. When they graduate at 7, they're reading music and starting to compose, which gives them a jump start on piano or other private lessons.

Not only is the program designed to enhance musical development but cognitive, physical, social, emotional and language development as well.

"Speech development is a big one," Ms. Henderson said. "Music is such a motivator. They're motivated to sing where they might not be motivated to speak."

Kathy and Jim Fangman said they noticed an improvement in the language skills of 3-year-old Mikaela, who was born premature.

"She really developed: You could just see the change in her," Ms. Fangman said. "At her 6-month checkup, we were concerned about her verbal skills. Since Kindermusik, she's been talking like crazy."

Sarah Breeden, a stay-at-home mother with a new baby, said the class gives her one-on-one time with 3-year-old Amanda. And it provides her daughter with her first social interaction with peers.

One would expect a lot of interaction with as many as 10 toddlers in a room filled with musical instruments. But it is quiet, so quiet that the simple melodies from the next class drift in.

Focusing on listening is what it's all about, Ms. Henderson said. Rather than flipping on a CD, she started out singing a cappella.

"Think of the music," she said. "You really should resist the urge to speak almost."

After singing "hello" to each other, they clapped and tapped and rolled over. They almost whispered a song in Japanese. And they found their running feet, when they were supposed to.

After a fast 45 minutes, it was time to put the instruments away. The teacher sang a song about gently and carefully placing them in the box. Teaching them to respect the instruments is just another life skill, she explained.

"Everything we do is tied to development in some way."

Family workshop teaches defense against bullies

By Maria Coder
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK — Five-year-old Sarina Kirpalani is trained in self-defense following a "Keeping Kids Safe" family workshop in Roswell, Ga. Her newly acquired skills may never be put to use, but her mother feels much better about Sarina's safety.

"You hear a lot of horror stories out there, I just wanted her to have whatever tools I could make available to her," said Joy Kirpalani.

The Kirpalanis are among parents looking to better protect themselves — and especially their children — from dangerous scenarios.

"As an adult who has been around people and seen a lot more than any child, you would think we'd know how to behave, and if we don't know what to do we certainly can't expect our children just to know. There are many kinds of bully situations that can arise in school," Ms. Kirpalani adds.

Statistically, she's right.

A recent study on childhood health and behavior by the World Health Organization that appeared in the Journal of the American Medical Association found nearly one of every three U.S. children in sixth through 10th grades is affected by bullying.

"We think of a bully as someone who shoves you in a locker, steals your lunch money; to a kid it's a form of terrorism, and it shouldn't be taken lightly by a school or a parent or anyone who has responsibility with a student," said Kerry Kollmar, founder of Martial Hearts, an Atlanta-area martial arts/self-defense organization that created the "Keeping Kids Safe" program the Kirpalanis took.

Martial Hearts is geared for women and children and has classes tailored for the blind and the physically disabled.

"Keeping Kids Safe" requires at least one parent or guardian to accompany a child to the self-defense class and to participate in it so that critical issues are learned as a family unit. The course, which runs about two hours, teaches how to recognize, avoid and deal with sexual assault, bullying and abduction. Ms. Kollmar said the most important thing is for both adults and children to pay attention to their instincts, often a telltale sign something might be happening, so that incidents can be caught at the earliest possible time.

Kevin Dwyer, a school psychologist in Alexandria, Va., and adviser for the National Mental Health Association, is strongly opposed to self-defense from a physical standpoint.

"Fighting escalates into much more serious behavior today than maybe it has in the past. If you physically hit someone who bullied you and that person is ashamed and embarrassed, that person may come back at you with a weapon or such."

He says it's confusing to tell children it's OK to fight in some situations but not others.

Dwyer said addressing bullying — and how to avoid it — is actually a relatively easy thing to do — although it's not being done enough.

He praises schools that are implementing puppet programs or role-playing skits to tackle the problem. Such experiences make kids more confident in how to respond to a bully, Dwyer said.

"It's not just telling a kid stick up for yourself; the practice gives a person more self-confidence because they're trying it out."

Self-defense instructors, like Ms. Kollmar, said the point of self-defense is simply to empower children. "If prevention works as it is designed, you don't have to do that fighting."

Bulldogs are new kids in 5A state tourney

By Lee Passmore
Sports Writer

Predictions and rankings which appear on paper or via the information superhighway have about as much significance as calling Miss Cleo in determining who's going to win a championship at the end of an athletic season.

So as far as the Midland High baseball team is concerned, all track records, past and present, are to be ignored and the Bulldogs have to consider themselves on even footing with the other three regional champions at this weekend's Class 5A state tournament. What reputations or current rankings say matters not a whit.

Never mind that in the Class 5A Texas High School Baseball Coaches Association poll released Sunday, Midland High was ranked No. 1 in the state. That might make the 32-7 Bulldogs something of a favorite to win the whole thing when they face Klein (30-7) in the state semifinals at noon Friday at Round Rock's Dell Diamond.

M
State Baseball Tournament

But Midland High coach Barry Russell doesn't consider his team — or anybody else — a clear favorite to win the title.

"You've got to understand that South Texas and East Texas people don't think West Texas can play baseball," said Russell. "If anything, we might be going in as an underdog considering who's in the field."

Certainly, Midland High is isolated from the rest of the state semifinalists, at least geographically. Klein is a Houston suburb which won the state tournament in 1998, defeating Sugarland Elkins, a team hailing from another Houston suburb.

As fate would have it, Elkins is also back in the tournament this year, and will face a local favorite, Austin High, in the second semifinal at Dell at 3 p.m. The winners of the semifinals will meet Saturday at noon at Dell.

While Klein and Elkins are products of booming metropolitan growth, MHS and Austin High are older schools, yet they don't have much of a history, at least recently, in the state tournament.

"We're the babies on the block," said Russell. "We're just happy to be getting in the dance."

Yet, Midland High hasn't been playing like a team which is just happy to still be playing. The Bulldogs have crushed their last two playoff opponents over the last four games by a combined total of 40-9. They completed their run through Region I last Saturday by beating El Paso Franklin 10-4, finishing a series sweep of the regional final.

In preparing for the state tournament over the next three days, Russell doesn't plan on intensifying his routine, only on perfecting it.

"We're not going to do anything different from what we've done the last five weeks," said Russell. "We're going to practice a little earlier but we're going to try to have fun too. There's not a lot you can teach at this point."

What most teams in the state tournament do share is not knowing a whole lot about each other. Scouting reports are limited, yet Russell says using the Internet is a good way to get at least some information on your upcoming opponent.

For example, it's well known that Klein's top hit-

Finally, The Waiting's Over

Lakers prepare for Philadelphia on Wednesday

By Chris Sheridan
AP Basketball Writer

LOS ANGELES — For the first time in a long time, the Los Angeles Lakers showed up at practice Monday and had something to focus on — the Philadelphia 76ers.

After more than a week of waiting, the Lakers finally know exactly who stands in the way of them becoming repeat champions — and perhaps the first team in NBA history to go undefeated through the postseason.

"We've been off for what, 20 years?" forward Robert Horry said. "So it's going to be hard for us to get our rhythm."

While the vast majority of the NBA universe expects the Lakers to roll over the 76ers in a mismatch, the players themselves were taking a much more piecemeal approach to getting ready. Monday was a day for studying their opponent, Tuesday will be a day for shaking off some rust, Wednesday will be the day when the talking stops and the basketball begins with Game 1 at the Staples Center at 9 p.m. EDT.

"If you asked the players who are going to play whether they believe we're an overwhelming favorite, right now we have too much respect for the Philadelphia 76ers and what they've accomplished to think we're that big of a favorite," forward Rick Fox said. "That's a dangerous mindset to have."

Still, there are plenty of legitimate reasons why the Lakers are expected to win fairly easily.

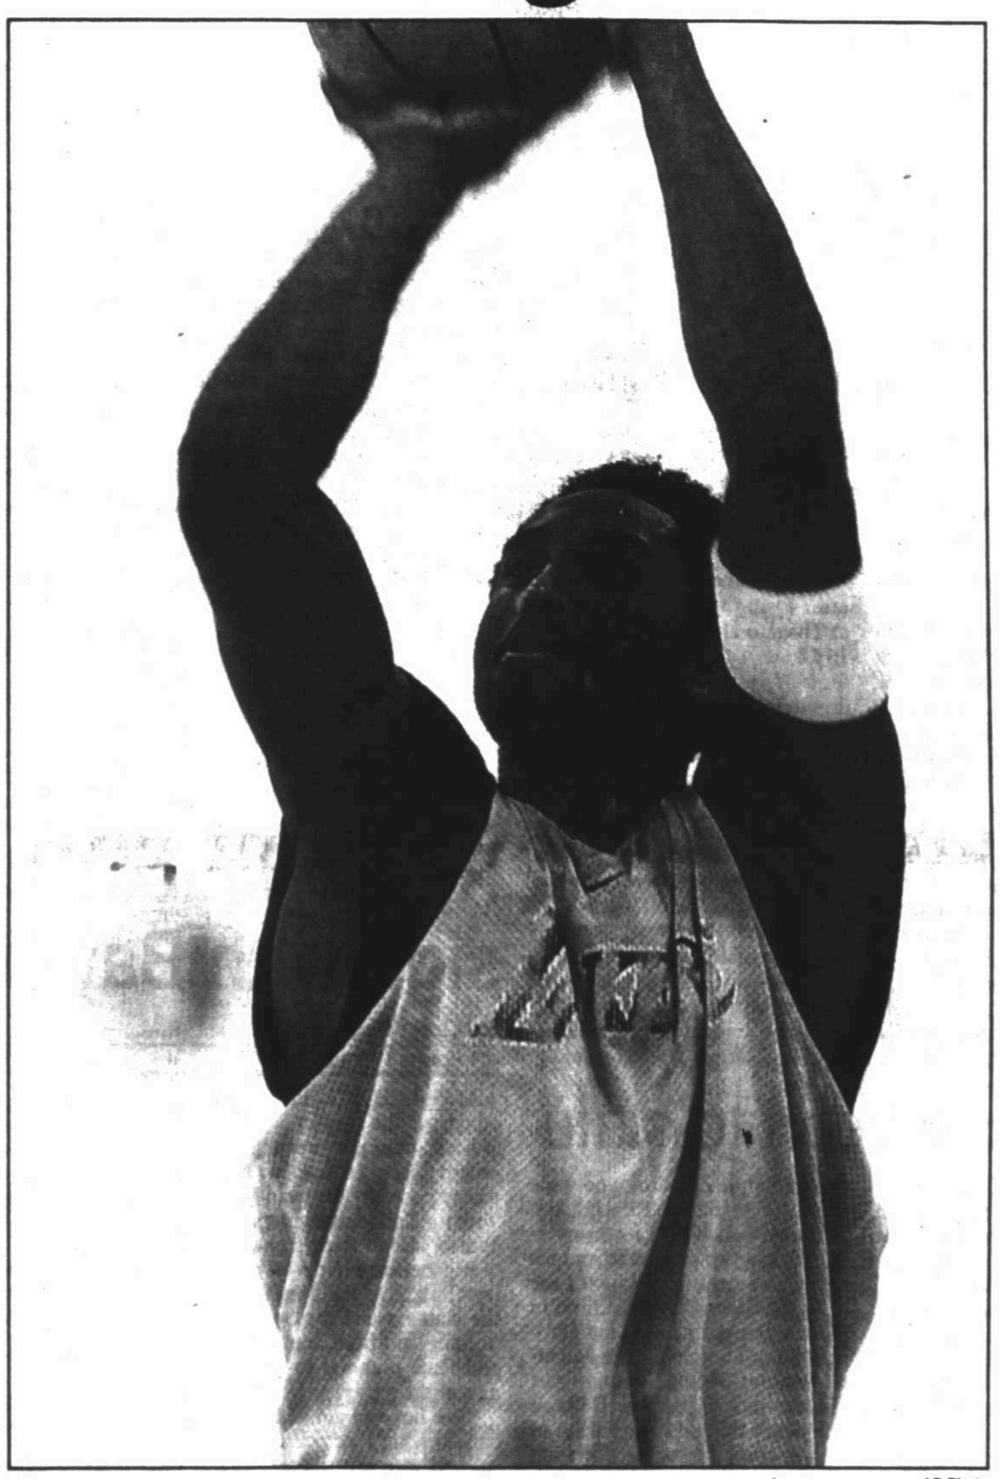

They have a 19-game winning streak, including 11 straight in the postseason. They have Shaquille O'Neal, the most dominant big man in the game, and Kobe Bryant, who is considered in most NBA cities to be the pre-eminent shooting guard in the league.

Of course, the folks in Philadelphia would take issue with that assessment, arguing that Allen Iverson proved this season that he is the better player. After all, he didn't win the MVP award for nothing.

Lakers coach Phil Jackson used the words "little rascal" and "monster" in discussing Iverson after the Lakers practiced for about two hours at their training facility in El Segundo, Calif.

While praising Iverson and his teammates for their resilience and talent, Jackson also said that the Iverson-Bryant matchup will not be the key one in this series. In his opinion, the marquee matchup is O'Neal vs. Dikembe Mutombo.

"Obviously Iverson vs. Kobe brings a lot of attention, but the matchup is going to be Dikembe and Shaquille, and if they choose to double-team (O'Neal) that will open up the game for us," he said.

DENVER — The New Jersey Devils seem to have a Mission 16W, too — and it could end at Exit 16W of the New Jersey Turnpike on Thursday.

The Devils, who won the Stanley Cup on the road last season, moved within a victory of winning it again Monday night by beating the Colorado Avalanche on their own ice for the second straight time, a 4-1 victory secured by Alexander Mogilny's first goal in 15 games. Sergei Brylin also ended a long streak with his first goal in 12 games and Patrick Elias, playing without injured A-Line center Jason Arnott, scored his second in as many games as New Jersey won for the third time in the last four games to seize a 3-2 series lead.

IRVING — Linebacker Darren Hambrick returned to practice with the Dallas Cowboys on Monday wondering why such a fuss was made over his absence from a minicamp last week.

"I missed a voluntary camp," Hambrick said. "What do voluntary mean?"

Hambrick was among several veterans who missed part or all of a four-day quarterback school last week. He was the only one without a reason, drawing speculation that he was protesting his recently signed contract.

In mid-May, Hambrick reluctantly accepted a $512,000, one-year deal because it was all he could get. He thought he deserved more because he led the team in tackles last season.

Other teams weren't too interested in trying to pry Hambrick from Dallas because he was a restricted free agent, which meant the Cowboys could've matched any offer or gotten a draft pick for losing him. Had he not accepted Dallas' offer by June 15, the bid could've been trimmed to $418,000.

Hambrick missed the first voluntary minicamp of the summer because he had yet to sign, then showed up for the second one and lashed out at the $512,000 offer. His absence from last week's workouts angered coach Dave Campo.

Campo said after practice Monday that Hambrick had yet to give a reason "and I really don't care." He said he had not spoken with Hambrick and would do so only in passing.

"Hambrick will be fine," Campo said. "He's a

Agassi overcomes noise, advances in French

By Steven Wine
AP Sports Writer

PARIS — Andre Agassi's day was already off to an annoying start when several young spectators shrieked throughout a rally he lost with a missed backhand.

Agassi glared toward the noisy section in the upper deck, where some fans were oblivious to tennis etiquette and overcome with joie de vivre.

"Come on!" he shouted. "Shut up!"

The kids did, aside from perhaps joining the cheers for Agassi as he beat Franco Squillari 4-6, 6-2, 6-4, 1-6, 6-0 in the fourth round at the French Open.

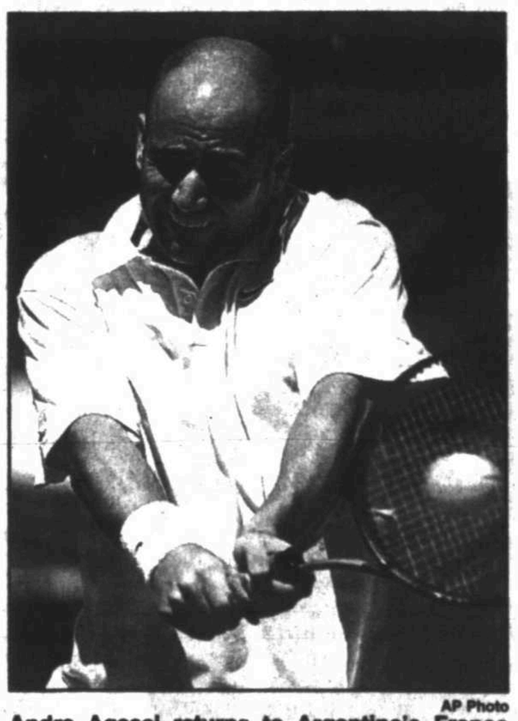

In the midst of a typically grueling clay-court duel, Agassi could be forgiven his uncharacteristic outburst. For three hours both players wore tracks behind the baseline. But because Agassi is in the best shape of his life at 31, he found a higher gear in the final set just as his 25-year-old opponent faded.

That made the victory encouraging for the third-seeded Agassi, seeking his second consecutive Grand Slam title. He won the Australian Open in January and believes he's finding his footing on clay at just the right time.

"I feel like I'm dancing out there, and it's nice," he said. "For me, this was an opportunity to bring out my game and step it up. I've got to really let my game fly to have a chance, and today I had to."

Agassi remains favored to reach his fourth French final. In Wednesday's quarterfinals he'll play No. 10 Frenchman Sebastien Grosjean, who advanced by beating Galo Blanco 6-3, 6-4, 6-1.

Swiss 19-year-old Roger Federer, touted as a potential Grand Slam champion, earned his first quarterfinal berth at a major event by beating Wayne Arthurs 3-6, 6-3, 6-4, 6-2. Federer's opponent Wednesday will be No. 13 Alex Corretja, who eliminated France's Fabrice Santoro 6-2, 6-3, 6-4.

Andre Agassi returns to Argentina's Franco Squillari during their fourth round match of the French Tennis Open at Roland Garros stadium Monday in Paris.

No. 6 Lleyton Hewitt completed a 3-6, 6-7 (3), 6-2, 6-3, 6-3 comeback victory over Guillermo Canas that took 4 hours, 12 minutes over two days. The final three games were played Monday after darkness forced the match to be suspended Sunday.

"It's like a 100-meter sprint to the finish," Hewitt said. "That's a tough situation."

Hewitt plays No. 4 Juan Carlos Ferrero on Tuesday, and No. 1 Gustavo Kuerten faces No. 7 Yevgeny Kafelnikov. That foursome will provide one finalist, with Agassi in the other half of the draw.

All four women's quarterfinals are Tuesday, highlighted by an all-American showdown between No. 4 Jennifer Capriati and No. 6 Serena Williams.

Monday's sunny, mild weather was the best of the tournament, but Agassi got off to a dismal start. In the opening game he failed to convert seven break-point chances, and midway through the second set he was 1-for-14.

Squillari, a left-hander who scrambles trying to hit his powerful forehand on every shot, did more running than Agassi but also belted more winners. The 16th-seeded Argentine was at his best in the fourth set, slamming aces on the final three points to even the match.

"He played some incredible tennis and left me rather concerned," said Agassi, who didn't let it show.

"His strength is mental," Squillari said. "He always feels he's going to win, and that's the impression he gives — that he's never going to crumble. Even after the fourth set, which I won easily, he was-

CUP: Devils win another big road game

(From 1C)

of a great player," Devils coach Larry Robinson said. "Sometimes it brings a team together and brings out best in other players."

However, playing at home sometimes brings out the worst in the Devils. They're 5-1 on the road in the finals against Dallas and Colorado the last two years and 8-3 on the road in these playoffs, but 7-5 at home as they go back to the Meadowlands for Game 6 on Thursday night.

"These opportunities don't come very often, in front of our fans," Devils goalie Martin Brodeur said. "We don't want to bring it back here for a Game 7."

Continental Airlines Arena, the Devils' home, is located at the turnpike's Exit 16W.

Now, Colorado defenseman Ray Bourque's Mission 16W — his attempt to win his first Stanley Cup in 22 seasons — may end two victories short. The 16W represented how many wins are needed to get the cup.

"This is where we are. We're down 3-2, but we have every intention of bringing it back to Denver for Game 7," Bourque said. "There's no frustration here."

Bourque had a testy exchange with reporters after the game when he was repeatedly asked about the frustration he felt, and he kept repeating he wasn't. He also said the Los Angeles and St. Louis series were more physical than this one and, "I've got a lot of gas left in the tank. ... There's no frustration here."

There is some hope for the Avalanche. Last year, the Devils held a 3-1 lead and could have closed out Dallas at home, only to lose 1-0 in triple overtime. New Jersey bounced back to win the cup at Dallas in Game 6.

"We got one more to go, and it's going to be the toughest one," Devils forward Scott Gomez said.

This series of ever-shifting momentum may have swung when Avalanche goaltender Patrick Roy abandoned the net in Game 4 and let in the tying goal just when Colorado seemed ready to take a 3-1 series lead. Roy's problem Monday was he was anchored in the net.

The Devils took advantage of Colorado's repeated attempts to force the offense after being limited to 12 shots in Game 4. However, the Avalanche not only couldn't get to Brodeur, who played his best game of the series with 22 saves, they often were trapped in the Devils' zone, creating a succession of odd-man breaks that led to the goals by Elias and Mogilny.

History certainly is on the Devils' side as they try to become the third team in the last 10 years to win consecutive cups, joining the 1991-92 Pittsburgh Penguins and 1997-98 Detroit Red Wings. Only three of the 16 teams that previously won Game 5 in a series tied 2-2 didn't win the cup, and it hasn't happened since 1971.

After losing to Dallas last two seasons on the road in Game 7 of the Western Conference finals, the Avalanche made it a season-long goal to have home ice this time. However, they may not make it to Game 7 this time.

"We'll find out who wants to come out and play the next game," Colorado defenseman Greg de Vries said. "We've got to want it more than they do."

The Avalanche had scored the opening goal in three of the first four games, but the Devils got it this time with one of their five odd-man rushes in the first period — more than they had in any previous game. The 'A' may have been missing from the Devils A-Line, but his linemates got the opening goal as Elias scored his second in as many games on a 2-on-1 break with Petr Sykora at 3:09 of the first.

Avalanche defenseman Adam Foote was caught between the two on the break, and Roy gambled Foote could break up the pass. But Foote couldn't and, with Roy shifted to his left, Elias flipped the puck in an open left side of the net.

"You can't give guys like Mogilny and Elias 2-on-1s, because they're going to score every time they have those chances," Tanguay said.

With Arnott out with an apparent concussion, Robinson moved defensive forward Bobby Holik up to the Elias-Sykora line so Holik and defenseman Scott Stevens would always be on the ice against Joe Sakic's line. It worked, too, as Sakic had a quiet game, even though Colorado had 23 shots, 11 more than Saturday.

However, Holik was called for tripping Sakic in front of the net, and the Avalanche — 0-for-5 on the power play in their 3-2 loss in Game 4 — took advantage as Alex Tanguay powered a slap shot past Brodeur at 10:09 of the first on a sequence that started when Bourque broke up a 3-on-1 rush.

What proved the winning goal came on another rush after Colorado forward Chris Drury tried to force the puck to de Vries in a crowded neutral zone. Devils defenseman Brian Rafalski deflected it to Gomez, who made a drop pass that Mogilny wristed by Roy to the stick side from the right circle — ending a 14-game streak without a goal.

Mohammed. Mutombo and O'Neal did not face each other this season, although they have played each other in the past during then playoffs.

"Anybody can guard Shaq, it's a question of whether anybody can stop him," Horry said.

In 1996, O'Neal's Orlando Magic defeated Mutombo's Atlanta Hawks 4-1 in the Eastern Conference semifinals before Jackson's team at the time, the Chicago Bulls, swept the Magic in the conference finals.

Mutombo and O'Neal have faced each other 12 times in regular season games, with O'Neal's teams going 10-2. O'Neal outscored Mutombo 22.0 to 10.9 in those games, although Mutombo averaged 12.7 rebounds to O'Neal's 10.5.

Coming off their Game 7 victory over the Milwaukee Bucks on Sunday night, the 76ers gathered at their practice facility in Philadelphia before flying cross-country.

They have been playing exhilarating and exhausting games every other night since then, going through the types of highs and lows that the Lakers haven't experienced since late March when the Shaq-Kobe feud had not yet died down and no one was quite sure whether they had even earned homecourt advantage for the first round of the playoffs.

"The (76ers) are prepared to handle the type of pressure that this situation demands," Jackson said. "The one thing you know is that they will come in here with an extreme amount of intensity that was generated in that series, so that is to their advantage."

The Lakers have never lost a Game 1 since Jackson became their coach last season, posting double-digit victories in all but one of their seven series-opening games.

Philadelphia is 1-2 in Game 1s this postseason, but the 76ers have shown a tremendous ability to shake off tough losses and win the games they absolutely needed to win — Game 2 against Indiana after losing the opener, Game 4 at Toronto after falling behind 2-1, Game 4 at Milwaukee when they were in danger of going down 3-1 to the Bucks.

"It seems like a month of Sundays since we played, but it's only been one," Jackson said. "So we think we can regenerate where we're at, but it's not something you just turn on and off. In the first game we may be a little rusty and our rhythm may be off, but we can use it to get ourselves in sync.

"These first games are a getting-to-know-you session where we make adjustments as we go along and bring some type of real rivalry to this series," Jackson said.

MHS: Opponents have been to state

(From 1C)

ter is Josh Barfield, son of former major leaguer Jesse Barfield.

"Everybody says don't pitch to him unless you have to," said Russell of the younger Barfield.

While Region II champ Klein and Region III titlist Elkins have been frequent participants in the state tournament, this is the first time Midland High has been there in 28 years. That 1973 team came back home with a state championship.

Over the last four years, the Bulldogs established themselves as solid contenders in District 4-5A, and in 1998 and 2000 they reached the regional quarterfinals. But for this year's team, being on the verge wasn't good enough.

With three Division I signees in Jayson Nix, Matt Bose and Madison Edwards (who have combined for seven home runs and 41 RBIs in the playoffs) as well as the emergence of junior James Gripp (.455 postseason average) and the addition of sophomore Daniel Stovall (3 HR, 12 RBI in the playoffs), this year's MHS team has shown it can score runs in clutch situations. But perhaps it's the experience of the past which convinced the Bulldogs they could make it this far.

"The last couple of years we talked about making the playoffs but this year's team didn't say that," said Russell. "This year's team wanted to go to Austin. Everything we did to get ready for the season has been to get to this point."

The Bulldogs are here, but perhaps a couple of teams who were expected to be aren't. Houston Bellaire, which had been undefeated, lost two players to injuries and was swept by Elkins in the regional finals (the third time in the last four years Elkins has eliminated Bellaire) and Klein defeated Round Rock (which was ranked second behind Bellaire and beat Midland High earlier in the season), throwing the state title up for grabs.

"I've been (coaching) for 16 years and there's so many things that have to happen," said Russell. "You have to have some luck and you've got to be injury free."

PEP RALLY SCHEDULED: A pep rally is scheduled to honor the MHS baseball team Wednesday at 8 p.m. at Zachery Field. The public is welcome to attend.

competitor. He'll come in and do what he has to do. We'll see where it ends up."

It's starting on the second team. Hambrick was there Monday, just as he was after his previous no-show.

Wearing his trademark workout attire that features a full left pant leg but the right one cut off at the upper thigh, Hambrick was joined on the second team by veteran Joe Bowden, who missed time last week while closing on a house in Houston.

"We're going to play the guys who practice," Campo said. "Joe was excused, but that means he still wasn't here."

While Hambrick is likely to be a starter again by the start of the season, the malcontent image he's building could hurt him when he becomes an unrestricted free agent after this season.

"All I can say is I'm a good football player, I make good plays, I'm young, I'm healthy," Hambrick said, slapping the back of one hand into the palm of the other to emphasize each point.

"I got all the things in my corner for me. I come to play football, I play from my heart and that's all I bring to the table. You talk about bad attitude and all that other mess, that don't matter. The only thing that matters is making a play on Sunday. When I stop making plays on Sunday, that's when I'm in trouble."

Campo said Hambrick will have the chance to earn his way back onto the first team — as long as he shows up.

n't fazed."

Agassi hasn't always been that way. On the same center court 13 years ago, he played a semifinal against Mats Wilander that was also decided by a 6-0 fifth set.

Agassi lost.

"That day I had four break points in the first game of the fifth set," he recalled. "I spent everything I had. I was dead. I was starting to cramp. I had no more energy left.

"I knew 5-11, 145 pounds wasn't going to win a Slam. That match taught me I really needed to get stronger."

Now he's a muscular 170 pounds. Stamina has helped him win four of the past eight Grand Slam titles, dating to the 1999 French Open, and it helped him beat Squillari.

Agassi slammed three big serves to win the opening game of the final set. Then Squillari made a rare trip to the net, and Agassi put so much sizzle on his passing shot that his opponent whiffed. That sent Squillari into full retreat, and he stood frozen 12 feet behind the baseline when Agassi angled a forehand winner on break point for a 2-0 lead.

The weary Argentine hung his head, and even those oblivious youngsters in the upper deck knew the match was over. Agassi made it official four games later, then threw a roundhouse punch at the air to celebrate his latest knockout.

Rice released by 49ers, could sign with Bay nemesis Raiders

By Greg Beacham
AP Sports Writer

LOS ALTOS, Calif. — Jerry Rice could be headed across the Bay.

Rice, who set every significant NFL receiving record during 16 years with the San Francisco 49ers, was released by the team Monday. He soon will sign with the Oakland Raiders, 49ers vice president Bill Walsh said at Rice's charity golf tournament.

But before teeing off at Los Altos Hills Country Club, Rice said he was still deciding between the Raiders and the Seattle Seahawks. Agent Jim Steiner said both teams submitted contract offers, and Rice planned to make his final choice Monday night.

"We hope to get something done real soon, so I can do what I've been doing over the years," Rice said. "I'm pretty close, and I'm excited about that, because this has been a long, long offseason. I'm ready to bring it to a close right now."

Steiner said Rice's new deal would include a "two-year commitment on both sides' part," though the actual contract may be longer because of salary cap machinations.

The 38-year-old Rice, who has a record 1,281 receptions and 187 touchdowns, had spent his entire career with the 49ers, but was cut because of the team's salary cap problems. Rice anticipated his release since early last season, when he said he planned to play at least two more years.

"The closure of this is great, and I'm glad it's the Raiders," Walsh said. "I'm glad it's close, and that he doesn't feel he's being shipped to Devil's Island somewhere in the Midwest. I think he'll do very well over there."

Raiders spokesman Craig Long wouldn't comment "at the present time."

Although he lists his team triumphs — three Super Bowl titles and 14 winning seasons — as his greatest achievements, Rice has had an unparalleled career with the 49ers.

Also among his NFL records are his 176 touchdowns on pass receptions; 12 seasons with more than 1,000 yards receiving; 1,848 yards receiving in a single season; and 22 touchdown receptions in a single season.

The 12-time Pro Bowl selection was the NFL Offensive Player of the Year in 1987 and 1993 and the Super Bowl MVP in 1989. He has 19,247 yards receiving, including at least one catch in his last 225 games, another record.

"I think I've had time to prepare for it, and I'm at peace right now," Rice said. "I've had so many great years with the 49ers. I have so many friendships. I can always go back to that."

Rice is the final link to the 49ers' two decades of excellence. Joe Montana, Ronnie Lott, Steve Young and countless others already have retired, and Walsh recently stepped down as general manager.

Rice would become the latest San Francisco great to spend the twilight years of his career with the Raiders and owner Al Davis. In addition to the teams' geographical rivalry, Davis frequently clashed with the 49ers during the tenure of former San Francisco GM Carmen Policy.

Over the years, the Raiders have lured Lott, Roger Craig, Tom Rathman, Marquez Pope and others into the silver and black. Oakland signed Charlie Garner, the 49ers' leading rusher the past two seasons, to a four-year contract in April.

The 49ers offered Rice a $1 million bonus to retire. His release gave San Francisco approximately $2.5 million in cap room, which GM Terry Donahue will use to sign backup quarterback Rick Mirer and several rookies.

Rangers conceding to rebuilding team

By Stephen Hawkins
AP Sports Writer

ARLINGTON — When the Texas Rangers finished an offseason spending spree that included signing the most expensive free agent ever, they expected a quick return to prominence.

Soon after gulping while announcing the $252 million, 10-year contract for Alex Rodriguez, Rangers owner Tom Hicks even mentioned World Series for his team.

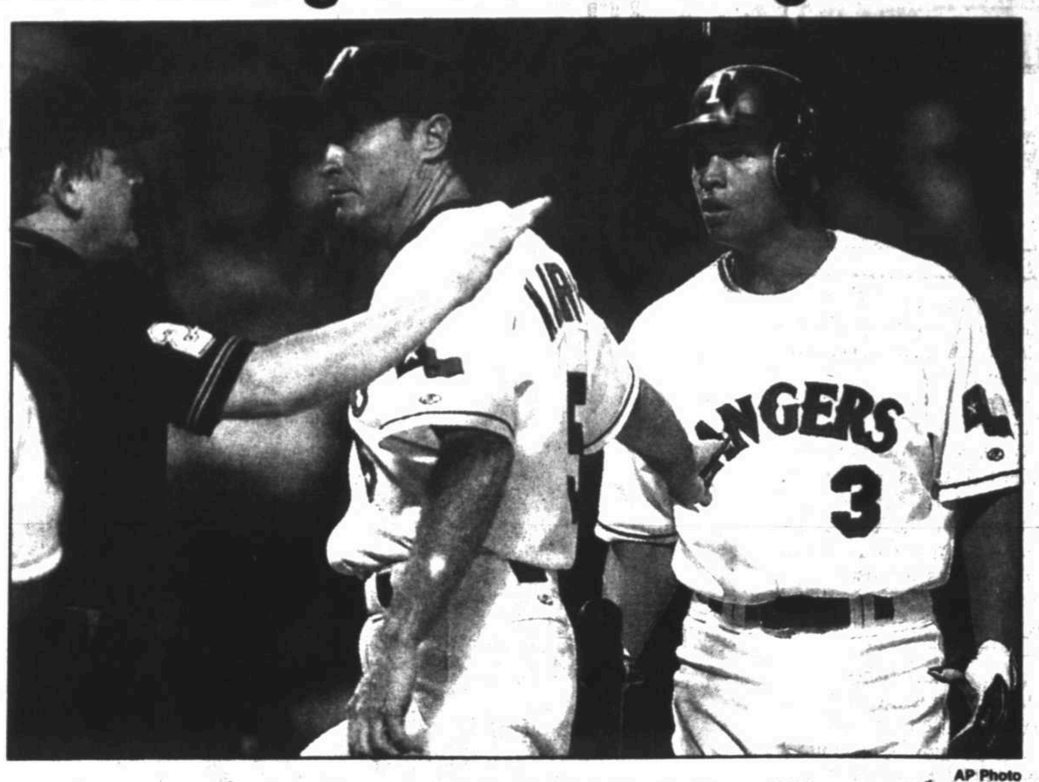

Two months into the season, however, that optimism is gone and the rebuilding is about to begin. Texas (20-35) is in last place in the AL West, 23 games behind Seattle — A-Rod's former team — going into a three-game series Monday night.

The Rangers changed managers May 4 when Johnny Oates resigned after an 11-17 start. Third base coach Jerry Narron was given the job for the rest of the season, then this past weekend received an extension through 2003.

While announcing the extra two seasons for Narron, Hicks also publicly changed his immediate expectations.

"We are confident that over the next few years, the Texas Rangers will once again be competing for division titles and postseason appearances," said Hicks, whose club won the AL West in 1996, '98 and '99 but failed to win a series.

"Obviously, we are all very disappointed in this club's performance. However, we feel strongly that we have a number of young talented players that will be nucleus of this team over the next few years. We plan to continue adding to this group with players from our minor league system."

AP Photo

Texas Rangers manager Jerry Narron, center, holds back Alex Rodriguez (3) from arguing a strike out call with home plate umpire Jerry Crawford (2) against the Kansas City Royals in Arlington,. Even with Rodriguez, the most expensive free agent ever, the Rangers are still in last place.

While this certainly wasn't what Rodriguez had in mind when he signed with Texas, he insists that he has no regrets.

"Any time you are in a situation to try to win, you're rebuilding," Rodriguez said. "I'm excited about the opportunity to be part of that rebuilding process. At the same time, it doesn't mean that while you rebuild, you can't win."

But even if the Rangers start winning, they realize they're not likely to win enough to match the Mariners. The primary focus is on developing young pitchers such as starters Doug Davis (2-5, 6.92 ERA), Ryan Glynn (1-5, 7.12) and Aaron Myette, who spent some time in the majors this season and likely will be back from the minor leagues before the year is over.

Texas also is taking a look at youngsters J.D. Smart and Juan Moreno. Mike Judd was claimed from Tampa Bay last week and after three relief outings in four days he may get a chance to start.

The Rangers already are getting an extended look at second baseman Mike Young with Midland Lee grad Randy Velarde on the disabled list. Ruben Mateo, a promising outfielder sent back to Triple-A Oklahoma last week, is also considered a big part of the future, as are minor leaguers Carlos Pena, a first baseman, and second baseman Jason Romano.

In addition to A-Rod, the Rangers would like to build around All-Star catcher Ivan Rodriguez — assuming he stays when he becomes eligible for free agency after 2002 — slugging first baseman Rafael Palmeiro and center fielder Gabe Kapler.

"We have a wonderful core, the same core is here that won the division three times," Alex Rodriguez said. "It's just a matter of going out and performing better and getting a little bit of help. I think that's obvious."

Meanwhile, the time is likely limited for veterans Velarde, Andres Galarraga and Ken Caminiti, all of whom also signed over the winter. If they make it past the July 31 trade deadline, Caminiti isn't likely to stay longer than Aug. 15, when the Rangers would have to guarantee the final $3 million of his $6.3 million deal.

Texas also get a chance to add stock its minor-league system with the amateur draft Tuesday. The Rangers have the fifth overall pick.

Twins have options for No. 1 draft pick

By Dennis Waszak Jr.
AP Sports Writer

NEW YORK — The Minnesota Twins have a difficult decision to make with the No. 1 pick in this year's baseball draft.

Minnesota, which selects first in Tuesday's draft for just the second time in franchise history, has a number of bona fide major league prospects from which to choose. Southern California junior right-hander Mark Prior, high school catcher Joe Mauer and Georgia Tech junior third baseman Mark Teixeira top the list.

"I think most everybody has the names. They're not secrets," Minnesota scouting director Mike Radcliff said. "We're down to three guys who we feel are viable candidates to be the first selection out of this crop of talent. There is no clear-cut, absolute consensus guy, but we feel very fortunate to be picking at the top this year."

Minnesota had three of the first 42 picks last year. It signed the second overall selection, Cal State-Fullerton right-hander Adam Johnson, but was unable to agree to terms with Notre Dame righty Aaron Heilman (No. 31) or San Francisco third baseman Taggert Bozied (No. 42).

Now the Twins have the franchise's first No. 1 overall pick since 1983, when they took right-hander Tim Belcher — and couldn't sign him.

"Obviously the final piece in any draft is factoring the signability, particularly when you have one of the top picks," Radcliff said. "It's the last thing that happens, but sometimes it's the most publicized and most controversial. It's certainly become an integral part of the process the last few years as the money has exponentially gone up. You balance out their abilities with what it is going to cost you, and you figure out what is best for your team."

The Chicago Cubs, Tampa Bay, Philadelphia and Texas follow Minnesota to round out the first five picks. Baltimore, Cleveland, San Francisco, Atlanta and Oakland all have two first-round picks, while Seattle, Colorado, Boston and Florida don't pick until the second round. Los Angeles' first selection is in the third round with the 68th pick.

Prior is considered by some to be one of the greatest college pitchers ever, and some think he could be in a major league rotation right now. He is 14-1 with a 1.50 ERA, and had 189 strikeouts and just 17 walks in 189 innings for the College World Series-bound Trojans.

Guzman's four infield hits pace Twins

Associated Press

■ Pro Baseball

MINNEAPOLIS — Cristian Guzman chopped his fourth infield single of the game, driving home the winning run in the ninth inning as the Minnesota Twins beat the Cleveland Indians 11-10 Monday night.

In the first of 19 meetings between the teams this year, the Twins took a 1 1/2-game lead over Cleveland in the AL Central. Juan Gonzalez hit two of the Indians' five home runs.

With one out in the Twins' ninth, Luis Rivas singled and took third on a single by Jacque Jones off Paul Shuey (4-2).

Guzman hit a high bouncer and third baseman Travis Fryman jumped up and tried to barehand it. The ball bounced out of his hand, though it's doubtful Fryman would have had a play at the plate.

Yankees 7, Red Sox 6

NEW YORK — Luis Sojo's RBI single in the ninth inning bailed out Yankees closer Mariano Rivera and gave New York yet another win in a game started by Boston ace Pedro Martinez.

The Yankees scored four runs off Boston's bullpen to win for the sixth time in their last seven games when baseball's most dominating pitcher faced them. Boston tied it in the top of the ninth on Manny Ramirez's two-run homer against Rivera (2-3).

Cardinals 5, Reds 2

ST. LOUIS — Andy Benes rebounded from an awful outing, allowing two runs in 6 1/3 innings as the Cardinals beat the Reds.

The Cardinals took three of four from the Reds to salvage a 4-4 homestand and won the finale even though Jim Edmonds, rookie Albert Pujols and Mark McGwire didn't start. The Reds are 7-25 since May 1 and have lost 10 of their last 14 on the road.

Dodgers 8, Diamondbacks 4

PHOENIX — Five Dodgers hit home runs to back Chan Ho Park, and Los Angeles snapped the Diamondbacks' nine-game winning streak.

Shawn Green, Adrian Beltre and Marquis Grissom homered off Arizona starter Armando Reynoso to give the Dodgers a 5-0 lead after three innings.

Giants 3, Padres 1

SAN FRANCISCO — Barry Bonds hit his 30th home run, reaching the mark faster than anyone in major league history, and the Giants beat San Diego for the Padres' sixth straight loss.

Bonds hit No. 30 in a record 57 games. Babe Ruth reached 30 homers in 63 games in 1928.

Mild forearm strain lands Wagner on disabled list

HOUSTON — Astros closer Billy Wagner landed on the 15-day disabled list Monday with a mild forearm strain team officials said probably was not related to the torn elbow tendon that prematurely ended his 2000 season.

The left-hander left Sunday's game against the Dodgers after facing just two batters in the ninth inning when he felt pain in his throwing arm.

'Hounds' big start leads way by Tulsa

Staff Report

TULSA, Okla. — The Midland RockHounds scored five runs in the first inning and went on to drill the Tulsa Drillers 11-3 at Drillers Stadium in a rare Monday afternoon Texas League game.

Midland leaves Tulsa with having won three of four from the Drillers and heads to Wichita for today's game, which is the start of a four-game series that will end this 16-game road trip, the longest of the season.

Oscar Salazar, who also doubled in the game, hit a solo home run, his 14th fence clearing blast this season. Josh Hochgesang doubled twice in his three-hit game.

The game was a bit odd in the fact that Tulsa actually outhit the 'Hounds by a 10-9 margin, but it was the five-run first by Midland that set the tone for this game.

Jon Adkins (4-5) went five innings to get the win. Kevin Gregg and Eric Thompson combined for four innings of shutout relief for Midland.

Midland second baseman Esteban German, drove in a run with a double, walked twice, scored twice and was hit by a pitch, reaching base four times with only one hit.

Despite the fact that this game was played early Monday in the hottest part of the day, the Drillers drew 3,566 fans.

Baseball, not football talk lives at Nebraska

By Kevin O'Hanlon
Associated Press Writer

LINCOLN, Neb. — The billboard downtown is clear: "Welcome to the Center of the Football Universe." Now the town is teeming with fans worked into a frenzy about — of all things — baseball.

The Nebraska Cornhuskers clinched their first College World Series berth by sweeping Rice over the weekend in a best-of-three super regional. Husker fans set attendance records both Friday and Saturday at the expanded Buck Beltzer Stadium.

"I took a day off work just to come down and watch," said Tim Ekhart of Omaha, sporting a "Husker Baseball" T-shirt.

Summer is normally a time when this college town of 200,000 people slips into laid-back mode for three months until Nebraska football players report for fall camp.

Not this year. Baseball is enjoying a renaissance in Lincoln.

The Cornhuskers have never been to the College World Series, which since 1950 has been played just 50 miles up Interstate 80 in Omaha. In fact, it's just the second time the CWS will have a team from Nebraska. In 1991, Creighton, a private Jesuit school in Omaha, made it.

All of this seemed quite unlikely just four years ago, when longtime coach John Sanders was fired after a 27-35 season and Nebraska baseball seemed destined for mediocrity — or worse. Dave Van Horn, coach at Northwestern State University in Natchitoches, La., was hired as Nebraska's new coach and the Huskers soon found themselves flying with collegiate baseball's elite.

Nebraska baseball memorabilia and apparel have enjoyed soaring sales, but not all fans have gotten on the sartorial bandwagon. Todd Ringwald of Lincoln, a truck driver, showed up for Friday's game wearing a T-shirt touting Nebraska's five national championships in football.

"I just haven't updated my wardrobe yet," he said.

Fans lined up hours before Friday's game at Nebraska's 5,000-seat Buck Beltzer Stadium, a 23-year-old dinosaur in today's world of top-drawer venues with skyboxes and state-of-the-art instant replay screens.

Still, "The Buck" was home and with additional bleachers set up in the oufield, Friday's game drew a crowd of 5,353, breaking the record of 4,936 set the weekend before in the regionals. Saturday's attendance was 5,484.

The stadium sits in the shadow of Memorial Stadium, where every home game since 1962 has been sold out. Lately, some Husker fans have been found in the football stadium, standing on the nose-bleed seats in its northern end-zone section, peeking in on the baseball games below in The Buck.

The baseball stadium's outfield doubles as a practice area for the football team. Its press box isn't even on par with some high school facilities.

Van Horn admits that he has been embarrassed to show the field to recruits. Starting next year, the Huskers will share a sparkling new stadium with Lincoln's new Northern League team, the Saltdogs.

Energy mixed

NEW YORK — Saddam Hussein's second attempt in six months to roil the energy markets failed Monday, as OPEC expressed its readiness to fill any supply shortfall caused by Iraq's suspension of its oil exports.

The Iraqi move didn't appear to have weakened the Organization of the Petroleum Exporting Countries' consensus to leave its output quotas unchanged when it meets today on production policy, but the promise of more oil should the disruption persist took the steam out of an early run-up in oil prices.

"Given the fact that OPEC has a lot of slack spare capacity at ready, it's hard to a take the threat seriously or worry about it," said John Kilduff, senior vice president for risk management at Fimat Futures in New York.

Front-month July crude futures at the New York Mercantile Exchange rose 81 cents to an early high of $28.74 a barrel, after Iraq said it had halted its 2.1 million barrels a day in oil exports to protest the U.N. Security Council's decision to extend the oil-for-food program for one month instead of the usual six. The temporary extension was backed by the United States and United Kingdom, which are seeking to buy time for talks on an overhaul of sanctions that Iraq opposes.

But July crude futures shed most of those gains after OPEC ministers, gathering in Vienna, Austria for a production meeting, reaffirmed their commitment to keep the market supplied. The contract closed at $28.13 a barrel, up a modest 20 cents.

Earlier, Brent crude from the North Sea rose 19 cents to $29.26 on London's International Petroleum Exchange.

In other energy futures trading, July unleaded gasoline was down 2.53 cents 90.77 a gallon Thursday on the Nymex, while heating oil was unchanged at 75.92 cents a gallon. Natural gas rose 13.9 cents to $4.069 per 1,000 cubic feet.

Dollar mixed

LONDON — The U.S. dollar was mixed Monday against other major currencies in European trading. Gold prices were also mixed.

The euro was quoted at 84.76 cents in late European trading, unchanged from Friday. Later, in midday trading in New York, the euro traded at 84.54 cents.

Other dollar rates in Europe, compared with late Friday, include 119.67 Japanese yen, up from 118.82; 1.7918 Swiss francs, down from 1.7949, and 1.5314 Canadian dollars, up from 1.5308.

The British pound was quoted at $1.4157, down from $1.4162.

In midday trading in New York, the dollar bought 119.52 yen, and the pound was worth $1.4130.

Based on euro rates in Europe, the dollar was worth 2.3056 German marks, down from 2.3064; 7.7326 French francs, down from 7.7353; 2.5978 Dutch guilders, down from 2.5987, and 2,282.53 Italian lire, down from 2,283.34.

London gold falls

Gold closed in London at $266.20 bid per troy ounce, down from $267.05 on Friday. In Zurich the bid price was $265.80, up from $265.30. Gold fell 50 cents in Hong Kong to $266.35.

Stock market

The Dow Jones industrial average closed up 71.11 at 11,061.52.

Broader indicators had more modest advances. The Standard & Poor's 500 index rose 6.44 to 1,267.11, and the Nasdaq composite index advanced 6.49 to 2,155.93.

F-150, Ram get poor crash test rating

By Nedra Pickler
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The popular Ford F-150 and Dodge Ram pickups got poor marks after their cabs were smashed in and air bags deployed late in insurance industry crash tests released Monday.

In its first crash tests of large pickups more than 3,500 pounds, the Insurance Institute for Highway Safety said the F-150 was by far the worst performer among the four 2001 models tested. The F-150 has been the top-selling vehicle in North America for 19 years.

The institute gave its best rating to the Toyota Tundra. The Tundra's structure was strong and the cab remained intact to protect the occupants, the institute said.

Photos of the trucks after the crashes showed that the F-150 cab was destroyed, while the Tundra's doors still worked.

"A key aspect of protecting people in crashes is keeping the space around occupants intact," said Brian O'Neill, president of the institute. "Then the safety belts and air bags can prevent significant injuries, even in very serious crashes. This is what happened in the Tundra, but not in the F-150."

There was also significant intrusion into the Ram cab, although not as dramatic as in the F-150, resulting in high head and neck injury measurements to the test dummy.

Ford Motor Co. and DaimlerChrysler AG said their vehicles are safe and noted they got high marks in government tests. They said they do not design the trucks to pass the institute's tests, but to protect occupants in highway crashes.

"No single test can measure a vehicle's overall safety performance and they don't necessarily reflect a vehicle's real-world safety," DaimlerChrysler said in a statement.

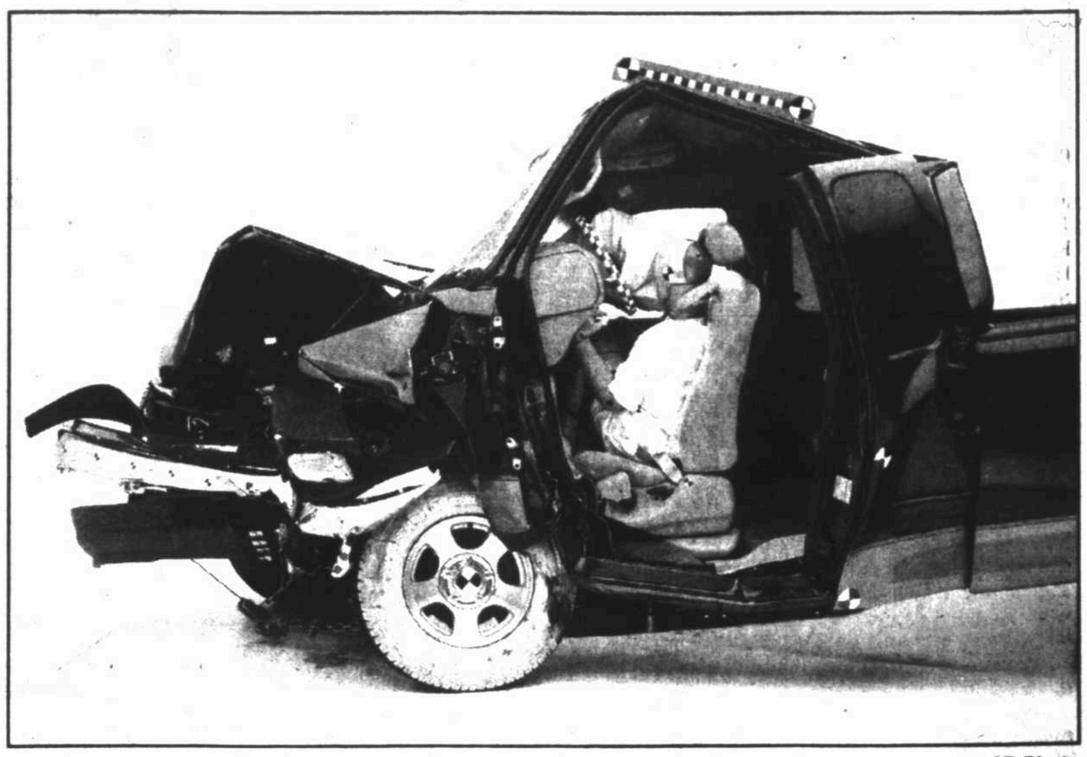

The fourth truck tested by the institute, the Chevrolet Silverado, got a marginal rating because while there was significant intrusion into the cab, the dummy did not measure injuries to the head, neck or chest. The rating also applies to the GMC Sierra because it is the same vehicle sold under a different name.

The institute tested the trucks by running them into a barrier at 40 miles per hour. It is called an offset test because 40 percent of the vehicle's front end hits the barrier.

In government tests, the entire front of a vehicle is run into a barrier at 35 miles per hour.

The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration gave the Ram five out of five stars for protecting the driver and passenger in the frontal crash tests. It has not yet released test results for the F-150, but Ford said it also got five stars for both positions.

NHTSA did not test the Tundra's standard cab version, but the extended cab version got three stars for both positions. The Silverado got three stars for drivers side protection and four stars for passenger protection.

OPEC seeks to allay oil market fears after Iraq halts crude oil exports

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — OPEC oil ministers tried to reassure nervous energy markets Monday that the producers' cartel would make up for any shortage of crude after Iraq halted most of its oil exports.

Crude prices shot higher initially on the Iraqi announcement, but then lost those gains as it became apparent that OPEC will not allow a shortfall to occur.

"We're going to make sure that demand is met. ... I'm not worried," OPEC president Chakib Khelil said in Vienna, where the group's representatives will meet today to assess market conditions and set output targets. Khelil gave no details of how the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries planned to replace the Iraqi crude.

Iraqi Deputy Oil Minister Taha Hmoud Mousa later dispelled some of the uncertainty about Iraq's intentions, telling reporters his government has suspended exports for only one month. The halt was made as a protest against the U.N. Security Council's decision to extend by one month instead of the usual six months the program under which Iraq can sell oil.

The Iraqi maneuverings initially sent July contracts of North Sea Brent crude up to a six-month high of $29.71 on the International Petroleum Exchange in London, before they fell back to $29.12, up 5 cents on the day. On the New York Mercantile Exchange, contracts of light sweet crude for July delivery peaked at $28.74 in early trading before slipping back to $28.34 in afternoon trading, up 41 cents.

Iraq's move cast an element of doubt on this week's meeting, during which OPEC officials are expected to maintain oil production at current levels.

OPEC is meeting as motorists in the United States are paying stiff prices for gasoline, with motorists in some places paying more than $2 a gallon. OPEC says bottlenecks at U.S. refineries are the cause of the high prices.

Even though Iraq removed some 2 million barrels a day from world oil supplies, the cartel hastened to allay fears of possible shortages and a spike in energy prices.

"OPEC will manage the market, and I'm not concerned (about) any shortage," Iran's Oil Minister Bijan Namdar Zangeneh told reporters. Iran is OPEC's second-largest producer, while Iraq ranks third.

Analysts expect the oil ministers to keep production at current levels.

Leo Drollas, chief economist of the Center for Global Energy Studies in London, envisioned OPEC's talking a "wait and see" approach toward Iraq, which doesn't participate in production agreements reached by the group's other 10 members.

OPEC decided in March to trim its official output by 4 percent in an effort to buoy prices. That cut followed an agreement in January to reduce output by 5 percent.

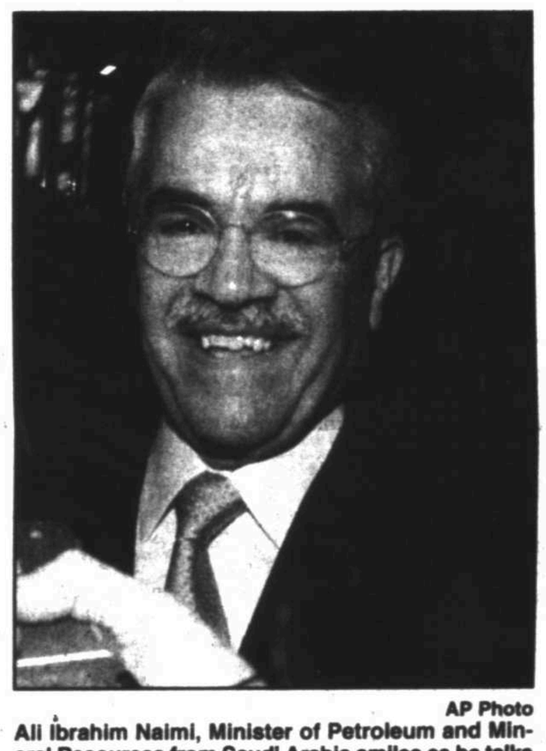

Drollas said these combined cuts of 2.5 million barrels a day could lead to a shortage later this year of heating oil. But for the immediate future, he predicted that crude prices are not likely to go much higher.

Gasoline prices have already peaked, he said, noting that U.S. refineries were operating at 96 percent of capacity and that gasoline imports were flooding into the United States.

By making good on its threat to halt exports, Iraq played a new card in its game of political brinksmanship with the United Nations, which regulates Iraq's oil trade. The indefinite halt was meant to protest the U.N. Security Council's decision to extend by one month — instead of the usual six — the program under which Iraq can sell oil.

The Iraqi government is desperate to shake off economic controls imposed by the United Nations after Iraq's 1990 invasion of Kuwait. It has disrupted crude exports before, and its shipments have been somewhat sporadic since December.

OPEC's No. 1 producer, Saudi Arabia, is the only cartel member that is able to quickly make up for the loss of Iraq's oil, as most of the group's other members are pumping at or near their limits.

Iraq follows up threat to halt its oil exports

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — Iraq followed up on its threat to halt most oil exports, stopping the flow Monday to all but neighboring Turkey and Jordan.

The indefinite halt was meant to protest a U.N. Security Council decision to extend by one month instead of the usual six months the program under which Iraq can sell oil. Baghdad has chafed at U.N. controls over its oil exports — its sole foreign exchange earner — that stem from sanctions imposed for Iraq's 1990 invasion of Kuwait.

War and sanctions have crippled the Iraqi economy, leaving many Iraqis dependent on government rations financed by the U.N.-supervised oil exports. Iraq needs the oil revenue to buy food. It has cash reserves, but it was unclear how long it could survive without further sales. It had been pumping about 3 million barrels a day.

Iraqis see the U.N. oil-for-food program as an attempt to control what the government can buy, including food. The United Nations set up the program to allow Iraq to buy humanitarian goods, but not weapons.

Iraqi Oil Minister Amer Mohammed Rashid said pumping oil through an Iraqi-Turkish pipeline to Turkey's Mediterranean port terminal at Ceyhan stopped on Monday morning. Rashid made a statement in Kirkuk, Iraq's northern oil field and the pipeline's starting point, according to Iraqi TV. Exports through Iraq's southern al-Bakr oil terminal were also shut off, sources close to the Oil Ministry said on condition of anonymity.

The sources said oil exports by road tankers to Turkey and Jordan were not affected.

In New York, U.N. oil-for-food spokeswoman Hasmik Egian confirmed Iraq had stopped pumping oil. As of May 29, Iraq had $2 billion and $2.2 billion in the U.N. escrow accounts that can be used for humanitarian goods.

In addition, $10.4 billion worth of humanitarian supplies are on order, plus $800 million worth of oil spare parts and equipment, Egian said.

She said similar moves by Iraq in December led to a $2.6 billion loss in revenue and resulted in "erratic oil exports."

Saudi Arabian Oil Minister Ali Naimi said Saturday that the Organization of the Petroleum Exporting Countries was ready to cover any shortfall in world oil production following Iraq's halt. Other OPEC nations are pumping at top capacity, but Naimi said Saudi Arabia alone is capable of covering any shortage.

A delegation headed by the Iraqi Oil Ministry's senior undersecretary, Taha Humud Musa, was dispatched to Vienna, Austria, for a regular OPEC meeting that starts today.

Vast majority of people should carry term life insurance

By Eric Tyson

Q: I am 34, married (my wife is also 34) and have a 2-year-old daughter. I own my primary home, valued at $245,000 ($160,000 left on mortgage), and I own half of a beach property valued at $350,000 ($135,000 left on mortgage). We have $75,000 in various retirement accounts and $33,000 in CDs earning 4.5 percent. We owe only one car payment per month and have no debts, such as credit cards, student loans, etc. I have a variable life insurance policy ($300 per month) and a term life on me ($25 per month) that total $750,000 in the event of my death. Do I have enough life insurance? How am I doing overall in my financial health? Our long-term goals are to upgrade our primary home and to retire comfortably.

Tyson

A: Without knowing more about your financial situation, including your income(s), I can only give you some general observations and guidelines. First, you should use your savings (when your CDs mature) to pay off your auto loan. Also, you'll earn more and have daily access to that money by keeping it in a money market fund.

The amount of life insurance you should have generally depends upon the level of income you're trying to protect and for how many years. With a 2-year-old, you probably should provide enough life-insurance benefits to replace 20 years' worth of your income to get your family through the time your daughter would graduate college. To do that, multiply your annual after-tax income by 15 to determine approximately how much life insurance you should carry. Thus, if you take home $40,000 per year, you'd need $600,000 of life-insurance coverage. Computations vary for different time periods; as an example, to replace 10 years' worth of income, multiply your annual after-tax income by 8.5.

The vast majority of people should carry term life insurance. The variable life insurance that you also have includes a savings-type account along with life-insurance coverage. Buying life insurance through such policies is generally costlier, and the investment returns on the savings part of the policy are generally mediocre due to high fees. Secure a low-cost term life insurance policy for the total amount of life coverage you desire.

To get a sense of where you stand for retirement planning, you've got to do some analysis. Visit www.troweprice.com or www.vanguard.com for those companies' online retirement tools.

Q: Can you explain the difference between having an IRA invested in mutual funds in a variable annuity with an insurance company, and mutual funds invested in something like Vanguard or other companies offering mutual funds?

A: With money already inside a tax-sheltered IRA account, you should never ever then invest in an annuity. The reason: You're paying extra costs for the tax shelter of an annuity that is not needed and is redundant with an IRA account.

Why, then, do investors sometimes put IRA funds into an annuity? In my experience, the answer almost always is because an insurance representative pitches the annuity to gain a commission.

With money already inside an IRA, find a good mutual-fund company, like Vanguard, and invest in that company's funds, saving yourself the extra costs and hassles that come with an annuity.

You should only consider putting money into an annuity after you've exhausted contributions to all of the retirement accounts to which you have access, including IRAs, and you have at least 15 to 20 years to leave the money in the annuity. You'll need at least that long a time period for the tax-deferred compounding of the annuity to make up for an annuity's extra expenses.

Nicklaus (Gary) qualifies for Open again

By Rusty Miller
AP Sports Writer

For the 45th consecutive year, at least one Nicklaus will be in the field for the U.S. Open.

Jack Nicklaus, a winner of four Opens, will not compete this year, breaking a streak of 44 straight appearances. His son Gary, however, had two 66s for the lowest 36-hole score Monday during sectional qualifying at The Lakes Golf and Country Club and Double Eagle Club.

"He's been working with me on my game," Gary said of his father. "He's just working with me on my game, trying to improve everything."

The elder Nicklaus watched his son play during his round at Double Eagle Club. Asked what his father said to him after his round, Gary said, "He said, 'Nice playing.'"

Twenty-six players from a field of 117 in Westerville, Ohio, qualified for the U.S. Open, to be held June 14-17 at Southern Hills in Tulsa, Okla. There was sectional qualifying at eight other sites Monday.

Among the others qualifying at Westerville, not far from where the Memorial Tournament ended Sunday, were prominent PGA Tour players Fred Couples, Dudley Hart, Bob Tway, Brett Quigley, Tim Herron, Glen Day, Harrison Frazar, Carl Paulson, Robert Gamez, Steve Stricker, Fred Funk and Steve Lowery.

Nine players competed for the final two spots after all finished at 4-under 140. Esteban Toledo, John Maginnes and Bill Glasson each birdied the first hole and moved on in the playoff. Toledo and Maginnes each parred the second hole, but Glasson lipped out a 4 1/2-foot par putt. He will be the first alternate from Ohio qualifying.

Nicklaus, 32, tied for 17th at 4-under 284 last weekend at his father's tournament, which is played at nearby Muirfield Village Golf Club. Nicklaus, who will be appearing in his second Open after missing the cut in 1997, had 14 birdies and two bogeys in the 36 holes at the two courses.

Hart, Quigley and Couples all were at 135, with Todd Fischer, Sweden's Jarmo Sandelin, Mike Sposa and Chris Smith had 136s. Those not qualifying included Joey Sindelar, Frank Nobilo, Aaron Baddeley of Australia, Billy Mayfair, John Cook, Ted Tryba and Len Mattiace.

At Atlanta

Bryce Molder, a quarterfinalist in last year's U.S. Amateur, led the four qualifiers from East Lake Golf Club with rounds of 64 and 69. Billy Andrade, a four-time winner on the PGA Tour, was second after a 70 and 65.

At Dallas

Chris Wall and Clark Dennis both had 3-under 139 totals and qualified at Northwood Club along with Baylor student Jimmy Walker, who had a 141. Wall qualified despite having his driver accidentally broken when his caddie hoisted the bag over his shoulder. For the last seven holes, Wall was forced to use a 3-wood.

Ben Crenshaw, a two-time Masters champion and the captain of the 1999 U.S. Ryder Cup team, failed to qualify with a 36-hole total of 149.

At Rockville, Md.

Joel Kribel, who broke Tiger Woods' stroke average record at Stanford, and Olin Browne, who finished tied for fifth in the 1997 Open, both had 135 totals to qualify from Woodmont Country Club.

At Denver

John Douma had a 135 and Kyle Blackman a 137 to qualify from Columbine Country Club, but Craig Stadler missed by four strokes.

At Chicago

John Harris, the 1993 U.S. Amateur champion, had a 140 and was among three qualifiers from Cantigny Golf Club.

At Cleveland

Bradley Klaprott had a 137 and Chad Campbell had a 139 to qualify from Kirtland Country Club.

At Los Angeles

Thongchi Jaidee of Thailand, the No. 2 money-winner this year on the Asian tour, shot a 4-under 138 to lead four qualifiers at the El Caballero Country Club. Charles Kang, one of the three who finished at 139, had seven consecutive 3s in his second round.

At Kansas City, Mo.

PGA Tour players Tom Pernice, Jr. (137) and Matt Gogel (138) were the qualifiers from Blue Hills Country Club, where played was delayed for 2 1/2 hours by rain.

Manager says dancers asked to 'serve' athletes in strip club racketeering trial

By Mitch Stacy
Associated Press Writer

ATLANTA — The owner of a top Atlanta strip club regularly set up sex shows and paid dancers to have sex with professional athletes, a former club manager testified Monday at a federal racketeering trial.

Gold Club owner Steve Kaplan played host to members of the New York Knicks, Charlotte Hornets and Indiana Pacers when the basketball teams were in town, Thomas "Ziggy" Sicignano testified. Sicignano said Kaplan paid dancers to have sex with former Knicks Patrick Ewing and John Starks, Reggie Miller and Antonio Davis of the Pacers and Atlanta Braves outfielder Andruw Jones.

Sicignano dropped the names late in the day during the trial of Kaplan and six others. All face racketeering charges, including accusations of credit card fraud, prostitution, loansharking and funneling money to the Gambino crime family.

Ewing and other Knicks visited the club for a private party in 1997, much to the delight of Kaplan, a New York native whose support for the team bordered on obsessive, Sicignano said. The law — as well as club rules — prohibits dancers from having physical contact with patrons, he said.

"We were saying, 'There are no rules tonight. The owner's in the room,'" he said.

Sicignano said Kaplan paid dancers to put on a sex show and then have sex with Starks and three Knicks players in hotel rooms in Atlanta, and later did the same for Miller, Davis and other Pacers in 1997. Spokesmen for the Knicks, the NBA and individual athletes all declined to comment when the allegations were raised earlier this year.

The club grosses about $20 million a year. Prosecutors have said Kaplan bilked customers with "outrageous" credit card bills.

Defense attorneys said their clients were simply smart businessmen who made millions of honest dollars by catering to high-profile guests.

Sicignano said dancers were trained to press customers to order expensive bottles of champagne and then spill it to sell more. They also were taught to tell customers they were hungry or cold to encourage them to order pricey meals or shell out $600 to buy a leather jacket from the club.

Kaplan justified scamming customers by saying it was his way of getting back at men who tried to use his dancers for sex, Sicignano said.

"He had no problem taking their money," he said. "He'll do whatever it takes to get the club where it is going to make money, where it's going to be beneficial to him and then everyone else."
