Midland-based Department of Public Safety Troopers Tony Matos and Awilda Cartagena Thursday announced a local effort to encourage more women and minorities to apply for jobs at the agency. Matos, who is of Cuban ancestry, and Ms. Cartagena, who is of Puerto Rican ancestry, say opportunities abound at DPS.

DPS issues 'all-points bulletin' for female, minority applicants

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

The Department of Public Safety is looking for a few good women...and blacks, Hispanics, Asians and American Indians.

The agency, citing anemic figures for employment of women and minorities in their traffic law enforcement division, is kicking off a statewide information campaign to attract new applicants.

"We just don't have enough women and minorities," DPS Trooper Tony Matos, 30, said Thursday. "And we felt it was time we did something about it."

Matos, one of six DPS recruiting officers in the state, and Trooper Awilda Cartagena, 32 — who is one of only two women assigned to the safety education service — are trying to get the word out.

"We are an equal opportunity employer," Ms. Cartagena said. "But for some reason, we haven't been able to get the people in. They just won't come in. We're not sure why."

The agency has 2,248 commissioned officers in the traffic law enforcement division, according to statistics. Of those, 525 are minorities, and only 52 are women. There are 26 minority women in TLE, including Ms. Cartagena.

For years, twice yearly DPS distributed routine public service announcements inviting job applicants. But the invitation has never been for any particular group — until now.

"The idea was to do something besides the same old PSA," five-year DPS veteran Matos said.

"The opportunity to advance yourself is there," Ms. Cartagena said. "If you can get in here and test, you can advance. You can have it if you want it."

Polls suggest Jackson would disappoint party

From Staff and Wire Reports

Republican George Bush launched one of his harshest attacks to date on Democrat Michael Dukakis, denouncing his opponent for a "flawed world view" and "old-style '60s liberalism." The Dukakis camp suggested the vice president's weakness in the polls prompted the "mudslinging."

Meanwhile, a pair of polls published today indicated the Democratic ticket would be hurt if Jesse Jackson were Dukakis' running mate. A USA Today-CNN survey indicated Dukakis has a clear lead over Bush — unless he picks Jackson as his running mate. And an ABC-Washington Post poll suggested Jackson's presence on the ticket would hurt Dukakis among key groups whose backing he needs to win in November.

Both Bush and Dukakis looked ready for a long hot summer leading up to their respective parties' conventions. Although the post-primary, pre-convention period traditionally marks a lull in campaign activity, the two rivals are indicating they won't wait for formal nominee status to begin their battle.

"There's no reason to wait till the World Series to start swinging," said Bush, in Texas to address delegates at the state GOP convention on Thursday. "This is a new ball game — spring training is over."

The vice president criticized Dukakis' positions on a variety of topics, saying the Massachusetts governor would raise taxes, plague innocent taxpayers with IRS audits, weaken national defense, be soft on crime and put forth an isolationist foreign policy.

"My opponent is an articulate defender of a flawed world view," said Bush. "His views and values are too often ... out of the mainstream."

Dukakis campaign spokesman Leslie Dach said "it's clear that the vice president doesn't think his own record or vision can bring him the votes he needs in November."

"Given where George Bush is in the polls, I think it's no surprise that he's chosen to spend his time mudslinging and tearing down," Dach said.

Temperatures equal all-time record levels

By JULIE HILLRICH
Staff Writer

Boy, it's hot.

No other phrase can best describe the weather these past few days since the mercury began to escalate beyond the 100-degree mark, surpassing most annual high temperatures in its path.

Thursday's high came close to erasing the all-time high of 105 degrees, set on that date in 1961. However, the best it could do was tie that record.

On Wednesday, the high of 103 fell one degree short of breaking the record of 104, set on that date in 1964.

Gary Woodall, a meteorologist with the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport, described the conditions, which have dominated the Permian Basin forecast this week as "somewhat unusual, but not totally unexpected."

High temperatures for the month of June commonly range from the upper 80s to the lower 90s, he said, but the mercury can break the century mark when conditions are right.

Bush swings into attack on Dukakis' 'world view'

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

HOUSTON — Vice President George Bush Thursday launched a strong attack on Michael Dukakis' record, accusing his probable Democratic opponent of holding "a flawed world view."

Bush told the Texas Republican Party Convention he had been waiting for the Massachusetts governor to sew up the Democratic presidential nomination before beginning his attack.

"Today it's a whole new ball game," the vice president said to a cheering crowd of about 11,000 in the George R. Brown Convention Center.

"Spring training is over, the season's just begun, and there's no reason to wait 'till the World Series to start swinging."

Bush's national campaign manager swung for the fences himself this morning at a breakfast rally for Republican U.S. Senate candidate Beau Boulter.

"We've got this guy Dukakis," Lee Atwater said, "whose a regular Teddy Kennedy, George McGovern type liberal."

"This is going to be a classic liberal vs. conservative campaign."

Texas Republicans warmly welcomed Bush, himself a delegate to the convention from Houston, by singing "Happy Birthday" the day before he turned 64.

Saying the fall campaign will feature "two completely different visions of our great country and where it's going," Bush tried to link Dukakis to the closing years of the Carter administration. He cited soaring unemployment, inflation and interest rates and the Ayatollah Khomeini's capture of the U.S. embassy in Iran.

"We were like a patient in intensive care — flat on our back, wired up, tubes all over — and not too confident in the physician in charge," Bush said in a speech interrupted 15 times by applause.

Vaccine may limit skin cancer's return

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. (AP) — A promising vaccine to prevent recurrence of melanoma is being tested in nationwide clinical trials involving at least 200 patients suffering from the deadliest form of skin cancer, its developer says.

"What it means is there is potential for some hope, and perhaps we're going to be able to immunize a patient against potential recurrence," said Marc Wallack, a cancer specialist and chairman of general surgery of Mount Sinai Medical Center.

Wallack on Thursday announced the beginning of the three-year trial of the vaccine he has been testing for 15 years.

Melanoma, which strikes about 27,000 Americans each year, is easily treated by removing the tumor if the disease is discovered before cancer cells spread. But death rates can climb as high as 70 percent if it spreads to lymph nodes.

The disease resists traditional chemical and radiation treatments, making it the hardest skin cancer to treat, said Wallack.

Cancer vaccines aren't a new idea, and vaccines for various cancers are being studied around the nation. Like others, Wallack's aims to prevent the disease from recurring by energizing the body's immune system to seek out and destroy stray malignant cells that may have broken off tumors.

"We specifically activate the immune system against the patient's melanoma," said Wallack, who will oversee the trials involving at least 200 patients whose tumors have been recently removed and whose lymph nodes have been invaded.

It will be a double-blind study, meaning neither doctors nor patients will know who gets the vaccine and who gets a placebo.

The trials are beginning at the University of Florida; Duke University in Durham, N.C.; the M.D. Anderson cancer institute in Houston; the University of Alabama; and Emory University in Atlanta, Wallack said.

The vaccine is created by infecting four types of melanoma cells with smallpox vaccine viruses.

Jessica McClure to wrestle friend's fund-raising effort

LANCASTER (AP) — First it was baseball, now wrestling for Midland toddler Jessica McClure as she tumbles around to raise funds for an ill young friend.

Jessica will go into the ring Saturday night with World Class Wrestling star Kevin Von Erich to raise money for Brennan Bolin, who awaits a heart-lung transplant, said fund-raiser organizer Bonnie Arnold.

Jessica, whose 58 hours trapped in a Midland well last October drew international attention, also took part in a fund-raising balloon release for Brennan on March 31.

A few days later, she threw out the first pitch for the American League home opener of the Texas Rangers.

"At the beginning of the event for fun he (Von Erich) will be tumbling around with Jessica," Mrs. Arnold said Thursday.

Livestock group rounding up 4-H, FFA benefit

By CHRIS VAN WAGENEN
Staff Writer

Charlie Green credits the 4-H Club and Future Farmers of America for shaping the ideals that would later drive him to seek a college degree — the first in his family.

Green, a graduate of Texas A&M and president of the Midland County Livestock Association, says those experiences are one reason he remains directly involved with the area's youth.

Three weeks from now, the association will hold what it hopes will become a yearly fund-raising event when its hosts its first ranch rodeo and chuckwagon cookoff.

The event — which will be held at the Midland County Exhibit Building at 10 a.m. July 4 — will feature teams from ranches headquartered in the city as well as chuckwagon organizations from around West Texas.

"We're just a co-sponsor, but we hope this thing will raise some money down the road," said Green. "We've always worked with the youngsters."

Green gave Charlie Welch credit for the idea. Welch, who serves as an association board member, said the day-long event is being held to "preserve some of the heritage" that Midland and West Texas is famous for.

Unlike other events of its type, Welch said the July 4 celebration will feature a chuckwagon-style cookoff. "We've had chili and brisket cookoffs for a long time now, but the chuckwagon is relatively new," he said.

While there is no charge to the public, Welch said it's the association's intent to turn the rodeo and cookoff into an annual fundraiser for both the 4-H and Future Farmers clubs.

North to be tried first in Iran-Contra conspiracy cases

WASHINGTON (AP) — Fired National Security Council aide Oliver L. North is first on the prosecution's lineup of defendants to be tried individually in four separate Iran-Contra conspiracy trials ordered by the judge in the case.

But independent counsel Lawrence E. Walsh is trying to minimize the tactical setback imposed by U.S. District Judge Gerhard A. Gesell's decision to hold separate trials of North, former national security adviser John M. Poindexter and arms dealers Albert Hakim and Richard V. Secord.

Walsh on Thursday proposed trying North and his former boss, Poindexter, simultaneously before two juries and then holding a similar proceeding for Hakim and Secord, former business partners who brokered the U.S.-Iran arms deals and the diversion of profits to the Nicaraguan rebels.

Gesell said four separate trials are needed to allow the defendants to use each others' immunized congressional testimony to defend the charges. A joint trial would compromise an individual defendant's right not to have what he told Congress last year used against him as evidence, the judge said.

All the defendants except Secord received limited immunity from prosecution for their testimony before last year's congressional hearings. The law bars Walsh from using a defendant's immunized congressional testimony against him.

But Walsh said conducting two dual-jury trials "would meet the court's interest in protecting the rights of the defendants while alleviating the enormous burdens on the government of trying each defendant sequentially."

WEATHER SUMMARY

HIGHS

Midland recorded its first 100-degree day of the year on May 15 when the mercury climbed to 102 degrees.

More hot, summerlike weather was in store for Midland-Odessa today although thunderstorms were forecast across the area late tonight. That could bring some relief from the record hot weather offering cloudy skies and slightly cooler temperatures.

The increased chance of thundershowers is the result of a "back-door" cold front moving into the area and combining with an upper level system over the Northeastern portion of the United States, Woodall explained.

The frontal system, which is moving from the northeast to southwest, is "fairly strong for this time of year," he said, adding that the direction of the flow is "most unusual" since most systems travel from the southwest to northeast.

The forecast tonight calls for partly cloudy skies and a 20 percent chance of mainly evening thunderstorms.

The low will be in the mid-60s and winds will be from the southeast at 5-10 mph.

On Saturday, skies will be partly cloudy with a 20 percent chance of late evening thunderstorms.

The high will be in near 90 degrees, with winds from the west to southeast at 10 to 20 mph.

The overnight low of 69 degrees was 18 degrees warmer than the record of 51, set on this date in 1975.

STATE

Widely scattered thunderstorms are possible through Saturday across the Panhandle, Lower Pecos Valley and along the Rio Grande plains.

But the rest of the state will have more of the same with forecasts calling for slightly cooler temperatures and mostly clear skies through Saturday.

Lows tonight will be in the 60s and 70s.

Highs Saturday will be mostly in the 80s and 90s except in the Big Bend area of Southwest Texas where the mercury should hit about 105.

A few scattered showers and thunderstorms developed early today, along the middle Rio Grande plains, but they only lasted a short time.

Skies were mostly clear over the state early today except for some high level clouds that have drifted over the High Plains of West Texas.

A weak cold front was located across the southern half of the state, extending from Southeast Texas westward to the Rio Grande plains near Del Rio.

Early morning temperatures were mostly in the 70s, ranging from the upper 50s in Northwest Texas to the lower 80s along the Rio Grande plains in South Texas. Extremes ranged from 58 at Amarillo to 80 at San Antonio.

Other early morning temperatures around the state included 62 at Wichita Falls, 73 at Fort Worth, 72 at Waco, 79 at Austin, 76 at Corpus Christi, 77 at Brownsville, 70 at San Angelo, 65 at Lubbock, 71 at Midland and 79 at El Paso.

NATION

A high-pressure system caused the mercury to plunge in parts of the Northeast and upper Midwest today, while fierce winds ripped off roofs, downed power lines and toppled a 75-foot-tall pine tree in the South.

Frost and freeze warnings were posted this morning from southern New York into Pennsylvania's northern mountains. Frost and freeze advisories covered parts of central and northeast Wisconsin and northern Michigan.

Meanwhile, thunderstorms drenched parts of the Southeast. The storms extended from eastern North Carolina through much of South Carolina into the central Gulf Coast region.

In Georgia, strong winds ripped a roof off a house and a barn Thursday night in Bullard, while trees and power lines were downed in parts of Macon, Irwinton and Toombsboro. The winds toppled a 75-foot pine tree as the storms moved through an area near Charlotte, N.C.

The storm system brought rain to some drought-stricken areas, along with crop-damaging hail. "It was not a lot of rain, but every little bit helps," said Joe M. Peliffier, a meteorologist with the National Weather Service at North Carolina's Raleigh-Durham International Airport.

New Orleans was inundated by 3 1/2 inches of rain within an hour early this morning.

Thunderstorms also moved across parts of eastern Colorado and extreme northwest Kansas into north-central New Mexico late Thursday and early today.

Today's forecast called for showers and thunderstorms along the coast of the Carolinas, Georgia and across Florida; showers in the Pacific Northwest into northwest Montana; and sunny skies over much of the rest of the nation.

RACE

Late Thursday night on ABC-TV, Bush engaged "Nightline" anchor Ted Koppel in a combative debate, occasionally calling him "Dan" in slips harking back to the vice president's 9-minute faceoff last January with CBS' Dan Rather.

As Rather had, Koppel questioned Bush closely on his knowledge of the clandestine sales of U.S. arms to Iran. Bush said, as he has repeatedly, that he knew little of the arms dealing while it was going on.

In the midst of one pointed exchange, Koppel said to Bush that "I find your answer ... inconsistent."

"Well, that's your opinion," Bush said. "You ask the questions but you don't like the answer. What do you want me to say?"

A series of recent nationwide polls suggested Dukakis had the edge in a faceoff with Bush, with some surveys putting the lead in double digits.

The latest such survey, the CNN-USA Today poll, gave Dukakis a 6-point lead over Bush, 45 to 39 percent.

Dukakis became the certain Democratic nominee on Tuesday, when the final four primaries of the season gave him the delegates he needs for a first-ballot victory in Atlanta. Bush put away his GOP rivals months ago.

Three of those former opponents — Kansas Sen. Bob Dole, television evangelist Pat Robertson and Rep. Jack Kemp — were joining Bush at a Republican "unity conference" today in Denver.

And the Atlanta Constitution reported in today's editions that former Dukakis rival Tennessee Sen. Albert Gore Jr. is planning to endorse Dukakis, possibly during a Dukakis campaign trip through the South next week.

Also on the Democratic side, party chief Paul Kirk was on hand as a panel gathered at Mackinac Island, Mich., to begin working on the party platform.

Asked if he expected bickering over the platform draft, Kirk replied: "I'd be shocked if we didn't have some discussion."

The platform-drafting committee is headed by a Jackson backer, Rep. William Gray of Pennsylvania.

Jackson himself was out of public view on Thursday, resting up at the posh La Costa resort outside San Diego. He held strategy meetings with about a dozen top aides to map out his next moves.

The ABC-Washington Post survey, published in today's editions of the Post, said Jackson was the top choice of Democrats as a Dukakis running mate, but that his presence on the ticket would badly erode Dukakis' support among Southern Democrats, Reagan Democrats and independent voters.

And Dukakis' lead over Bush in the USA Today-CNN survey was reversed when Jackson was added on as a running mate. With Jackson on the ticket, Dukakis' 6-point lead changed to a 7-point deficit.

The Post's poll of 656 Democrats, conducted May 19-25, had a 4-point margin of error. The USA Today survey of 1,253 registered voters, was conducted June 6-9 and had a margin of error of 3 percentage points.

The Massachusetts governor attended a victory bash Thursday night in Boston. He said he expected a "tough and competitive" campaign.

In other campaign developments: — California video magnate Stuart Karl was charged Thursday with illegally funneling money to the campaigns of Gary Hart and other political candidates. A federal grand jury indictment accuses Karl of conspiracy, false statement-concealment in a matter before a government agency, making an illegal corporate contribution to a federal candidate, making excessive contributions to a candidate and making a campaign contribution in the name of another.

Dukakis' wife Kitty was released from Massachusetts General Hospital on Thursday, six days after undergoing spinal surgery. Mrs. Dukakis, 51, had two bone fragments taken from her hip and fused to a pair of ruptured discs. The ruptured discs had been putting dangerous pressure on her spinal cord.

GOP

capital gains taxes and accused Dukakis of fighting plans to reduce taxes in Massachusetts.

Foreign policy. Bush said he is pleased with but remains skeptical about improved U.S.-Soviet relations. "My feeling is: encourage 'em but watch 'em close," he said. He criticized his opponent's faith in organizations such as the United Nations.

His foreign policy views, born in Harvard Yard's boutique, would cut the muscle of our defense," he said. "I will never do that."

Crime. Pointing to Dukakis' opposition to the death penalty, Bush accused him of subscribing to "standard old-style '60s liberalism." He called for strong action against "the drug millionaires, the drug machinery and the drug murders" and said he supports the death penalty for drug kingpins.

Some conservative delegates, however, complained that Bush blew a perfect opportunity to heal some party rifts by not discussing social issues such as abortion and school prayer. Atwater dismissed such talk, saying, "I hadn't noticed any wounds, I thought everyone was pretty receptive."

Others said the vice president's speech lacked pizzazz. "If he doesn't get any better than this, Dukakis will eat him up," one GOP House member said privately.

At a press conference before the speech, Bush said he is not concerned about polls that show him running behind Dukakis nationally and barely beating him in his adopted home state of Texas. "I am an underdog," he said. "I don't mind that."

He attributed Dukakis' lead to the press coverage given the Democratic primaries long after he had clinched the GOP nomination. "I disappeared off the radar screen," Bush said.

"I feel relaxed, I'm not play-acting," he said. "We've got time to turn these polls around."

Teams signing up for the ranch rodeo will compete in five events: cow milking, calf branding, team pinning, team roping and ranch horse cutting. Each competing team will be allowed five members. A maximum of 12 teams will compete, according to Welch.

In the chuckwagon cookoff, Welch said teams will be given a menu to prepare that will include a meat, vegetable, bread, dessert and coffee. They also will be judged on the appearance of their camp and wagon.

"We're going to sell a little bit of West Texas to the public and a little bit of history as well," said Welch.

Green, who retired as a county agent six years ago, said the local association is backing the event for the benefit of both youth organizations.

"If it hadn't been for them, I might have made a wrong career turn," he said, adding that 4-H, Future Farmers and the annual Midland County Livestock Show instilled in youth good work habits and moral discipline.

"I've seen it from every side as a member, a supervisor, a parent and a member of a sponsoring group... that's the reason I stay active. I know what it can do for kids," he said.

Scientists get first peek at Pluto's atmosphere

MOUNTAIN VIEW, Calif. (AP) — Scientists flying over the southern Pacific Ocean directly observed the atmosphere of Pluto for the first time, NASA has announced.

While scientists previously had strong indirect evidence for the existence of an atmosphere on the solar system's ninth planet, the astronomers who viewed Pluto from a telescope aboard NASA's Kuiper Airborne Observatory on Thursday got the first direct look at it, said space agency spokeswoman Diane Stanley.

"The opportunities are there. There is no one holding you back."

In 1983, Miami, Fla., native Matos was in the Air Force, stationed at Laughlin Air Force Base in Del Rio. He says he had always thought about applying for a job as a trooper, and one day did it.

Ms. Cartagena had never thought about it — until she went to apply for a drivers' license renewal and ran into her high school government teacher, who had stopped teaching to join the agency.

Successful applicants must be 20 to 35 years old, have 60 college hours or equivalent military experience, be in shape, have height proportionate to weight, and be willing to accept assignment anywhere in the state. Then the fun starts.

Applicants attend an 18-week training academy in Austin, which Ms. Cartagena claims is tough for everyone.

"They aren't going to pamper you there just because you are a woman," she said. "The physical agility (drills) tend to scare some women away. There is a lot of running, sit ups, pushups. A lot of the things are out of the ordinary for women to do."

While in the academy, students are paid $1,545 a month. At graduation, the pay jumps to $1,704 monthly.

After a year with the agency, troopers can expect to make a salary of about $24,000, according to Matos.

Ms. Cartagena says many young people interested in law enforcement pass up the DPS in favor of local agencies because of the duty requirements.

"You have to take an assignment anywhere," she said. "That has a bearing on the fact that the numbers (of women and minorities) are too low."

The first minority and first female trooper were commissioned in the early 1970s, according to Ms. Cartagena, who is of Puerto Rican ancestry.

"We will talk to anybody," Ms. Cartagena said. "We want women and minorities not to shy away. The chance is here."

NORTH

One jury would leave the courtroom when information prejudicial to the defendant whose case it was hearing was introduced in court.

"Four separate and sequential trials will result in at least some of the defendants living under the cloud of an indictment for several months," Walsh said in a court filing Thursday.

Legal experts say it would also force Walsh to disclose the heart of his case to the other defendants long before they go to trial. Trying each defendant separately could also have the effect of diluting evidence that they participated in a conspiracy, according to former federal prosecutors.

Walsh said it was logical to try North and Poindexter together because they were both charged with "causing their positions of trust and power to facilitate and protect an illegal financial and logistical network" set up to help the Nicaraguan rebels after Congress banned U.S. military aid to the Contras.

Both are accused of "numerous acts of obstruction and false statements intended to cover up the activities of the 'Enterprise,'" Walsh said.

Although evidence against the defendants would overlap, two dual jury trials would offer "clear advantages in terms of judicial efficiency, conservation of the government's resources and speedy adjudication of the cases," Walsh said.

Legal experts said North was a logical choice as the leadoff defendant.

"You pick North first because he is the top banana in terms of expansiveness" of the evidence, said former U.S. Attorney Joseph DiGenova.

"It gives you the chance, if you are only to have one trial, to get most of your evidence in and tell your story about the conspiracy," he said, referring to the possibility of presidential pardons that might avert subsequent trials.

"Normally you lead with strength," said E. Lawrence Barcella, a former federal prosecutor here. "If you get a conviction you therefore may likely get a succeeding defendant to cave in and plead guilty."

The strategy could backfire if "you lose the strongest case and the evidence against the other defendants is the same," Barcella said.

"You have a bit of a dilemma as to whether or not you can go forward with succeeding prosecutions."

Gesell had given Walsh until today to decide whether he wanted to proceed first with North or Poindexter.

The judge said they should be tried first because the independent counsel law deals with prosecution of high government officials.

CANCER

Membranes from the infected cells are injected into patients weekly for 13 weeks, then biweekly for the rest of a year.

Wallack believes the smallpox "wakes up" the immune system, prompting it to act against the cancer.

Wallack plans to compare in follow-ups the cancer recurrence and survival rates of the two groups of patients. He hopes to repeat the results of early experiments, which helped at least 15 percent of smaller numbers of patients.

"Surgery is very important to remove the primary lesion, and also any (lymph) nodes that are positive. After this, that's when this approach, specific immunotherapy, comes into play," he said.

A different type of melanoma vaccine is being developed by Dr. Philip Livingston of Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center in New York.

"I'm not saying one is better than the other, but it's a different approach," said Livingston, whose work uses purified chemicals taken from cancer cells.

Researchers wonder if extracts from the melanoma cells used in Wallack's study will trigger immune systems for the dozens of types of melanoma, Livingston said.

"It's a little bit of a shot in the dark in that regard," he said.

Wallack said the four cell types he's using should prove effective on all melanomas.

Skin cancers are diagnosed in about 500,000 Americans each year and are readily cured by surgical removal, except for advanced melanoma, recent American Cancer Society figures show. Of about 7,800 annual skin cancer deaths, 5,800 were melanoma victims.

Dukakis strategy: Touting own record, questioning Bush's

BOSTON (AP) — Michael Dukakis plans a positive fall campaign touting his own record as Massachusetts governor while questioning whether George Bush has any real accomplishments of his own.

At the same time, aides say, Dukakis is prepared to fend off attacks from Bush on foreign policy issues by reminding voters of Bush's ties to controversial Reagan administration actions including the Iran-Contra affair.

Dukakis, who clinched the Democratic nomination with a sweep of the final four primaries Tuesday, says he is eager to debate the Republican nominee-to-be.

Dukakis will promote his management of the booming Massachusetts economy and support of universal health care. He also will point to the Reagan administration's failure to promote affordable-housing programs, and to the president's veto of a trade bill that required advance notice of plant closings, Dukakis aides say.

NATION

On the international front, Bush has tried to depict Dukakis as a novice whose views pose a threat to national security. Aides say Dukakis will try to keep pressure on Bush by criticizing Reagan's policies in Central America. Dukakis also will continue to demand that Bush fully disclose his roles in the Iran-Contra affair and administration dealings with Panamanian strongman Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega, aides say.

Campaign aides are working on speeches and ads that list Dukakis' major campaign themes — competent management and new leadership for the 1990s — while seeking to portray Bush as a career politician without a true legacy.

"If we're talking about our record, it will remind people that he doesn't have one," Dukakis campaign spokesman Leslie Dach said in an interview. He suggested that Dukakis will avoid direct attacks on Bush but force voters to question the vice president's positions.

"If we talk about the tough stands Dukakis has taken, it will remind people that Bush hasn't taken any positions," Dach said.

Vital to any Dukakis fall strategy is a relatively smooth resolution of differences with Jesse Jackson and adoption of a strong but general platform that does not create the appearance that Dukakis is beholden to special interests, the Dukakis camp said.

Planning for the fall campaign is still in the early stages, but Dach said Dukakis may use an approach used by Kansas Sen. Bob Dole, who sought the GOP nomination. The Dole campaign came up with an ad that showed a man walking across a field of snow, but leaving no footprints.

In speeches, Dole questioned the vice president's record, saying Bush had an impressive resume but few actual accomplishments.

Some Dukakis aides already have adopted Dole's message in their rhetoric.

"He can't tell us or won't tell us what his role in this administration has been," said Dukakis issues adviser Christopher Edley, a former Carter White House aide. "He doesn't seem to leave any footprints."

Dukakis also plans to counter Bush's effort to portray the Massachusetts governor as a member of the "liberal elite" by pointing to Bush's privileged background. Dukais is the son of Greek immigrants. "I think it is very important to the American people that the next president be someone who understands their problems and their concerns," said Dukakis campaign manager Susan Estrich.

While the Dukakis camp is uneasy over the prospect of convention fights with rival Democrat Jackson, most Dukakis aides concede those battles should help dispel Bush's characterization of Dukakis as an ultra-liberal in the mold of Jimmy Carter or George McGovern.

"Bush's strategy seems to be to go out and attack somebody who isn't even in the race," said Edley.

One issue that could put Dukakis on the defensive is taxes.

Dukakis has refused to rule out new federal taxes as a means of reducing the federal deficit.

Survey says education on AIDS pays off

CHICAGO (AP) — AIDS education is paying off, with more than two-thirds of adults recently surveyed saying children with AIDS should be allowed to attend school with other youngsters, the American Medical Association said today.

In addition, 80 percent of 1,500 adults surveyed in February said they knew "a lot" about AIDS, compared with only 69 percent who said they knew "a lot" or "a fair amount" in a similar survey last year.

"It is gratifying to see that the AIDS education efforts of the past year have helped," said Dr. James H. Sammons, AMA executive vice president, in a statement accompanying results of the survey.

"Although we are encouraged by the progress, the AMA will continue to work toward having 100 percent of the public confident in their knowledge about AIDS," he added in the statement in the organization's weekly newspaper, American Medical News.

The February survey found that 68 percent of adults said children with AIDS should be allowed to attend regular class; 18 percent said they should not; and 14 percent were unsure.

That compares with a 1987 survey in which 57 percent of adults favored regular school attendance for youngsters with AIDS, 23 percent opposed it and 20 percent were unsure.

The AMA said two years ago that no valid reason exists to bar most children with AIDS from classes, and the American Academy of Pediatrics has since expressed a similar view.

Surgeon General C. Everett Koop said in his report on AIDS a year ago that children could be allowed to attend classes with a physician's approval.

More than 1,000 children under age 13 have been diagnosed with acquired immune deficiency syndrome since the national Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta began tracking cases in 1981, the CDC said Thursday.

Most children with AIDS have gotten the deadly disease from their mothers, with the rest contracting it through transfusions of contaminated blood or blood products or from undetermined causes.

The survey, commissioned by the AMA, was conducted by Tarrance-SRI of Houston, and involved interviews with 1,500 adults, using a random sample of all residential telephones in the United States, the AMA said. Its margin of error was plus or minus 2.5 percentage points.

Former Eagle Scout executed for murders

POINT OF THE MOUNTAIN, Utah (AP) — A former Eagle Scout who sought his own execution for the sex-related murders of five boys went calmly to his death today, saying, "I am doing the right thing now."

Arthur Gary Bishop, a 36-year-old former bookkeeper and excommunicated Mormon, was pronounced dead by injection at Utah State Prison at 12:16 a.m., said Myron March, Department of Corrections director of field operations.

"He went peacefully to the execution chamber," March said. Three drugs in succession — sodium pentothal, the muscle relaxant Pavulon and potassium chloride — were dripped intravenously into Bishop's right arm.

Bishop, who strangled, shot or bludgeoned and drowned his victims, told police he got sexual pleasure out of seeing their bodies naked afterwards. He said he relished his first murder by buying and killing as many as 20 puppies.

He was the 99th person to be executed in this country and the third in Utah since a 1976 U.S. Supreme Court ruling ended a nationwide moratorium on capital punishment. The first to die was convicted killer Gary Gilmore, who was executed by a firing squad at the same prison in early 1977.

Bishop decided earlier this year to shun further appeals and be executed, an act of contrition he hoped would bring peace to his victims' families.

"With great sadness and remorse, I realize that I allowed myself to be misled by Satan, and as a result, my life has been marked by wicked, perverse and depraved actions," he wrote in a final statement released after his execution.

"At this time I want to offer again my most profound and heartfelt apologies to my victims' families," he wrote. "I am truly sorry."

Bishop wrote that he hoped "my death may help others to find relief and forgiveness... Though perhaps too little too late, I am doing the right thing now."

White House budget covers new floor, paint stripping

WASHINGTON (AP) — It takes more than presidents and painters to keep the White House going.

It also takes five calligraphers, one accountant, four florists, two shifts of electricians and 39 domestic employees who serve meals, greet visitors and keep house.

The $5.7 million budget for the executive residence is now working its way through Congress, and details are disclosed in hearing records published by the House Appropriations Committee.

They show a staff of 94 people working in a 132-room rabbit warren of a building with floors badly damaged by 37 million people who have walked on them.

They also show that in the White House, as in many other houses, things tend to accumulate and not get disposed of.

Manus J. Fish Jr., director of the National Capital Region of the National Park Service, outlined the budget before the appropriations subcommittee on the Treasury, Postal Service and general government appropriations.

The budget request covers fiscal 1989, which begins October 1. It is down $1.7 million from the amount appropriated for this fiscal year.

That amount, however, included $2.4 million for a major project to remove between 30 and 50 layers of paint from the Pennsylvania Avenue side of the building, and repaint it.

After you subtract this amount, the new budget request is a 13 percent increase.

A major share of the increase is requested to replace floors in the State Dining Room and a private dining room next to it.

"An estimated 37 million visitors had walked on the floors since they were installed during the 1948-1952 renovation," Fish told the subcommittee.

He brought along a piece of the floor which had been removed to show how it had been worn almost to nothing at one end.

"High heels, that type of thing, you can see cause some indentations in the wood," he told the lawmakers.

Fish said the Park Service is asking for $65,000 to make the position of curator full-time, bringing the full-time staff to 94.

Fish outlined the staff as follows:

"A staff of 39 domestic employees accomplishes general housekeeping, prepares and serves meals, greets visitors, and provides services as required in support of official ceremonies and functions. A staff of 33 tradespersons, including plumbers, carpenters, painters, on a single shift; electricians on a double shift; and operating engineers on a 24-hour basis, maintains and makes repairs, minor modifications, and improvements to the 132 rooms and the mechanical systems, and provides support for official and ceremonial functions."

Senate to vote today on drug bill permitting death penalty

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate is moving toward approval of a bill permitting the death penalty for drug dealers who kill police, a proposal derided by opponents as election-year grandstanding.

The Senate planned to vote on the bill today. The action was set up Thursday when the chamber voted 69-27 to shut off debate, ending a filibuster by opponents who had stalled a vote.

Senate approval would send the measure to the House, where its fate is less certain. The bill would be referred to the House Judiciary Committee, whose leaders oppose the death penalty provision.

"I'm not saying the death penalty will eliminate the drug problem, but I do think it will serve as a deterrent," said Sen. Alfonse D'Amato, R-N.Y., chief author of the Senate bill. But opponents derided the bill as election-year politics, saying it would do nothing to deter drug dealing and represented a cynical response to public demands to do something about illegal drugs.

Sen. Dan Evans, R-Wash., referred to a similar bill proposed in 1986 and said: "Once again, we're going for an election-year slam dunk on drugs. We're taking precipitous steps to

Expert forced out of job in herbicide dispute

WASHINGTON (AP) — A veteran Agriculture Department narcotics expert says he was forced out of his job because he declined to recommend use of a powerful herbicide on cocaine-producing areas in South America.

Walter Gentner, 66, former national technical advisor on narcotics, said Thursday he refused to be pressured into recommending use of the herbicide "Spike" because of concerns over its potential environmental impact.

Eli Lilly & Co., based in Indianapolis, touched off a controversy two weeks ago when it decided not to sell Spike, known formally as Tebuthiuron, to the U.S. government for use in an anti-cocaine campaign in Peru and other Andean countries.

The State Department said last week the "safety and effectiveness" of Spike has been confirmed and that the short-term impact of Lilly's decision will be serious.

But Gentner defended Lilly's position in a telephone interview Thursday, saying, "We need the facts before we go and do something irreversible."

Gentner's former boss, Thomas Army, deputy administrator of the agricultural research service, could not be reached for comment Thursday. But he told The Washington Times that Gentner wasn't aggressive enough in the war on drugs.

"You got to get after it with a sense of urgency," Army was quoted as saying.

Gentner, who said he visited 43 countries on drug control assignments during his long government career, decided to retire rather than accept a demotion.

He said Spike is manufactured in the form of pellets and is ideal for use along railroads and highways. But he said the herbicide might not be safe if it is applied to wet soils which are later drenched by heavy rains. In that case, the pellets could roll downhill and affect plants outside the target zone, he said.

innocent people. He cited a Stanford University study which said 350 people have been convicted of capital offenses in this century and then later found to be innocent.

Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, responded that there are enough safeguards in the legal system to protect innocent persons.

"Nobody should be able to kill our policemen without paying the ultimate price," he said.

Also Thursday, the House Banking Committee approved legislation to make it more difficult for drug dealers and other criminals to hide their profits. The bill would require banks to file transaction reports with the government for all cashiers' checks, money orders and travelers' checks of $3,000 or more. Now, banks need to file such reports on transactions of $10,000 or more.

New York Mayor Edward I. Koch, meanwhile, was proposing the creation of "tent jails" in Nevada to incarcerate convicted drug offenders and relieve prison overcrowding elsewhere.

In an appearance before two House Armed Services subcommittees, Koch conceded that Nevada probably wouldn't think much of his idea.

Panel has second session on Wright

By STEVEN KOMAROW

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House ethics committee, trying to decide how to handle the politically-sensitive charges against Speaker Jim Wright, is working long hours while trying to keep mum.

The panel, asked to investigate the speaker's financial dealings, met privately for nearly 8½ hours on Thursday in its second session on the topic. Chairman Julian Dixon, D-Calif., was still working past midnight.

When the committee broke its meeting at 11:25 p.m. Thursday, the lawmakers refused to say if any decisions had been made. The committee has been weighing whether to launch a formal inquiry, what the scope of it should be, and whether to hire an outside counsel to handle the case.

Dixon told reporters he planned to make a public statement at midday today on the case.

Wright, D-Texas, has been publicly urging the committee to act quickly.

"I am supremely confident, when all of it is seen out on the table in the sunlight it will be absolutely clear to everyone" that no House rules were violated, Wright told reporters on Thursday. He had written and planned to publicly release a "narrative account" explaining his actions, he said.

The complaint against Wright was filed by a political enemy, Rep. Newt Gingrich, R-Ga. Common Cause, a non-profit group which pushes for tighter government ethics standards, also called for an investigation. Gingrich's complaint accused Wright of improperly lobbying U.S. officials and the late Egyptian President Anwar Sadat on behalf of oilmen with whom he had financial relationships.

He also questioned the propriety of Wright's receiving royalties at several times the standard rate for his book, "Reflections of a Public Man," which was published by a friend and campaign contractor.

News reports this week revealed that Wright used one of his Capitol Hill staffers to help compile the book, which earned him about $55,000. Wright is using a current staffer to work on a new book project, and Gingrich has conceded that one of his aides worked on a book he wrote.

Wright's supporters have called the charges a Republican effort to deflect criticism of ethical lapses in the Reagan administration and the current controversy surrounding Attorney General Edwin Meese III.

Some Democrats were known to oppose the Republican request for an outside counsel to probe the speaker, fearing it would aid the GOP drive to equate the Wright and Meese cases in the public eye.

The ethics committee, officially called the Committee on Standards of Official Conduct, is the only House panel with equal representation of the two parties — six Democrats and six Republicans.

Mighty Mouse accused of sniffing cocaine

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — A media watchdog group says Mighty Mouse is teaching the nation's children to sniff cocaine, but CBS says such accusations against its longtime cartoon hero are ridiculous.

"Mighty Mouse is down in the dumps and he reaches in his cape, pulls out a substance and sniffs it through his nostrils, and from that point on in the cartoon he is his normal self," said The Rev. Donald Wildmon, who heads the Tupelo-based American Family Association.

Wildmon claimed Thursday that Mighty Mouse used cocaine during the cartoon's April 23 episode. CBS and the cartoon's producer, Ralph Bakshi, says that's hogwash.

The whole affair "smacks of burning books and the Third Reich. It smacks of McCarthyism. I'm not going to get into who sniffs what," Bakshi said. "This is lunacy."

Wildmon's organization has sponsored boycotts and other activities against businesses that sponsor what it sees as too much sex and violence on television and in magazines.

Wildmon is seeking the resignations of Bakshi, an animator best known for the risqué "Fritz the Cat" cartoons in the 1970s, and Judy Parker, CBS television's vice president for children's programming. He said they attempted to cover up what was aired on April 23.

"Mr. Bakshi told reporters from Detroit, after calling me all kinds of names, that Mighty Mouse was sniffing crushed flowers," he said.

"We had a state narcotics officer and a university professor, both experts, to view the scene in question and they were convinced it was cocaine," Wildmon said.

CBS on Thursday released a two-page letter to Wildmon from George Dessard, the network's vice president of program practices, in which he accused the Methodist minister of taking "three seconds of air time...out of context and made (it) the subject of a fanciful and irresponsible misrepresentation."

Dessard said the substance was clearly crushed flowers. He said that in the episode in question, "The Littlest Tramp," the principal story line revolves around Mighty Mouse's efforts to assist Polly, "a poor but industrious flower seller."

In the cartoon, the villain repeatedly destroys Polly's flowers and she is forced to make substitute flowers using fallen leaves, strawberries and "even wedges of over-ripened tomatoes."

He said Mighty Mouse is shown collecting and saving the fake flowers and "later, when a speaker at a service-oriented lodge meeting of ants talks of wanting to help 'those less fortunate,' Mighty Mouse announces that phrase reminds him of 'someone else' and pulls out a pink mass of crushed stems, tomatoes and flowers, which he holds out as if to show them."

"We see the aroma reach his nose in typical cartoon fashion as the scene changes to another story event," Dessard said. "There is no 'powder.' He is neither shown to be nor described as 'rejected or down in the dumps' before he brings out the remains of the flowers."

Former Mechem aide testifies loan 'common knowledge'

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — The $350,000 campaign loan that former Gov. Evan Mechem is accused of concealing was well known among his inner circle, a former top aide has testified at his criminal trial.

Edith Richardson said Thursday that she learned, probably early in 1987, that developer Barry Wolfson had provided Mechem with the money.

"It was just common knowledge that there was a loan," Mrs. Richardson, former special assistant to Mechem, told the Maricopa County Superior Court jury.

Mechem and his brother Willard, his 1986 campaign treasurer, face felony charges of concealing the loan on financial statements required by the state.

Other witnesses in the trial have testified that they may have had some general knowledge of a loan, but that they did not know Wolfson was involved.

Meanwhile, attorneys took a formal deposition Thursday from Gov.

Rose Mofford during a closed session at her home, but defense lawyers later decided it will not be introduced as evidence. The deposition was to be used in lieu of Mrs. Mofford's testimony in court, because she still has been suffering ill effects from a mild concussion she received in a recent fall.

According to a tape recording of the deposition session, Mrs. Mofford said she knew nothing about the Wolfson loan, about Mechem's campaign and personal financial disclosure statements or about the criminal case.

Mechem is on trial on six felony counts of perjury, willful concealment and filing false documents, and faces up to 22 years in prison if convicted on all counts. His co-defendant and brother, who served as campaign manager, is charged with three similar counts and faces up to 9½ years in prison if convicted.

The defense has contended that the $350,000 loan was properly reported.

Congress bans most uses of polygraph tests

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress has approved and sent to the White House legislation to ban most uses by private employers of lie detectors, described by one senator as "inaccurate instruments of intimidation."

The Senate voted 68-24 on Thursday to approve a compromise version of a House-passed bill that would prohibit most polygraph tests. Labor Secretary Ann Dore McLaughlin has said she will ask President Reagan to sign the bill.

The final version of the legislation, approved by House-Senate negotiators last month, would prohibit most private sector employers from requiring their workers or job applicants to take lie detector tests. Exceptions would be made for drug companies and those providing security services.

The bill would prohibit an employee from being discharged, dismissed, disciplined, discriminated against, or denied employment or promotion solely on the basis of the test — or solely because of refusal to take the test. To take action against the worker, an employer would have to have additional supporting evidence.

The Congressional Office of Technology Assessment estimated that 2 million polygraph tests were administered in 1987, with 90 percent given by private employers. Most of those were job applicants, although they also were given to workers under investigation.

The accuracy of test results has been questioned. Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., chairman of the Senate Labor Committee, called the legislation "long overdue."

Judy Goldberg of the American Civil Liberties Union said the law will affect 28 states which have no regulation of polygraph examinations or only regulate the examiners.

States with no regulation of examinations include Colorado, Indiana, Kansas, Missouri, New Hampshire, New York, North Dakota, Ohio and Wyoming.

States regulating polygraph examinations only include Alabama, Arizona, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Illinois, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, Nevada, New Mexico, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas, Utah and Virginia.

Texas socialite sentenced to life in prison for husband's murder

BROWNSVILLE (AP) — South Texas socialite Fredda Sue Mowbray has been sentenced to life in prison in the 1987 shooting death of her husband.

Ms. Mowbray cried after the sentence was read. Her mother, Faye Wright, fainted outside the courtroom after the proceeding.

Jurors convicted Ms. Mowbray, 40, of fatally shooting her husband, Jay William Mowbray Jr., a prominent Lower Rio Grande Valley automobile dealer. He was shot to death Sept. 16, 1987, at their home in nearby Los Fresnos.

Arguments during the punishment phase concerning a defense request that she be given probation generated a great deal of emotion.

"This is not a probation case," prosecutor Ed Cyganiewicz told the jury during sentencing arguments. "Let's be fair. A life for a life."

"Let's send a message to the community. Just because you're wealthy, doesn't mean you can get away with murder," Cyganiewicz said.

"She acted as jury, judge and executioner for Bill," the prosecutor said. "Probation is nothing but a slap on the wrist. If you grant that, it sends a message that justice in Cameron County is for sale."

Fred Wright holds onto his daughter, Fredda Sue "Susie" Mowbray Thursday morning after she was found guilty of murdering her husband, William Jay Mowbray. Looking on is one of her attorneys, Abel Toscano. She was given a life sentence and a $10,000 fine.

"If you want to feel sorry for someone, feel sorry for Bill," he continued.

Ms. Mowbray, who never testified in her defense, appeared confused as she took the stand during the punishment phase.

"No sir, I'm innocent," she replied in a whisper when asked if she agreed with the verdict.

Ms. Mowbray's attorneys said they will appeal the verdict.

Firm fails to make payments to Beaumont retirees

EL PASO (AP) — Paychecks for retired Beaumont city retirees have been put on hold because an El Paso insurance company can't make its payments on their annuity investments, officials said.

The problems have caused a small run on a savings and loan owned by the same corporation that owns the insurance company.

Knickerbocker Insurance Co. of El Paso is working with the State Board of Insurance to resolve the problems, board officials said Wednesday. The company also has stopped making payments on health and accident insurance claims.

Despite the moratorium on Knickerbocker's annuity payments and withdrawals, investors' money is not at risk, said insurance board spokesman Lee Jones.

Marvin Kelly, Beaumont's risk manager, said he was shocked when informed that the annuity payments had been halted. "There's nothing we can do," he said. "We're concerned about our retirees."

Beaumont city employees are being advised to stop making payments into the Knickerbocker investment plan until the problems are resolved, Kelly said.

Knickerbocker annuity investors were notified in a letter dated May 24 that payments and annuity fund withdrawals were being frozen indefinitely.

Knickerbocker is owned by First Financial Enterprises Inc., which also owns First Financial Savings of El Paso. Knickerbocker and the S&L are separate subsidiaries of the parent company, but two of the savings and loan's large depositors withdrew their accounts Wednesday, officials said.

The withdrawals of two certificates of deposit accounts — one totaling $300,000 and another totaling $700,000 — were made in the erroneous belief that Knickerbocker and the S&L are connected financially, said the S&L's president, Duane Jeter.

"The relationship is like that between brother and sister," Jeter said. "The only thing we have in common is parents."

Knickerbocker's problems apparently started last year. The company reported a $6.6 million surplus in its claims fund at the end of 1986. By June of 1987, its surplus had fallen to $666,000, prompting A.M. Best Co. to lower Knickerbocker's rating from a favorable B-plus to an unfavorable NA7.

New Jersey-based A.M. Best rates insurance companies. Knickerbocker's lowered rating reflected doubts that it could meet financial obligations, Best Vice President Paul Wish said.

Comptroller holds eight truck stops' assets

AUSTIN (AP) — The state comptroller is holding assets at eight truck stops that were seized in an attempt to recover nearly $2 million in unpaid state motor fuel taxes.

The Wednesday seizure of the truck stops by a 70-member task force resulted from an ongoing investigation of diesel suppliers by the state with the aid of the FBI and IRS, Tony Proffitt, spokesman for Comptroller Bob Bullock, said Thursday. If the taxes owed are not paid, the state can sell the assets seized to collect the money, Proffitt said.

An audit showed no taxes had been paid to the state on about 11 million gallons of diesel fuel bought through BB Fuels Inc. and sold at the Easy Flow stations, Proffitt said.

Taxes were being collected at the stations but not submitted to the state, Proffitt asserted.

Proffitt said BB Fuels was based in Houston and the Easy Flow Holding Co. in Van Horn, but there were no telephone listings for the companies in those cities. The truck stops were in Van Horn, Penwell, Colorado City, Santo, Lufkin, Sealy and Waeider, he said.

Patricia Ann Morris of Houston was listed as Easy Flow Holding's president, Proffitt said, but she told The Houston Post she no longer worked for the company.

Ms. Morris said Joseph Henry of Covina, Calif., who is listed as the company's director, was president.

THANK YOU MIDLAND FOR A GREAT SPRING

Firm paid panel members $2,000 before crucial vote

DALLAS (AP) — Seven House Armed Services Committee members were paid $2,000 each for attending a Wisconsin company's breakfast hours before a vote ordering the Army to buy 500 of the company's trucks, according to a published report.

Rep. Marvin Leath, D-Texas, was among those who received a $2,000 honorarium for attending the breakfast hosted by the Oshkosh Truck Corp. on April 1, 1987, according to 1987 financial disclosure statements that House members had to file by May 15 of this year, the Dallas Morning News reported in today's editions.

Leath sponsored an amendment, adopted later that day by an Armed Services subcommittee, ordering the Army to boost its purchases of Oshkosh's $130,000 10-ton trucks and drop a plan that would have jeopardized company sales, the newspaper said.

"It looks kind of funny, doesn't it?" said V.P. "Pres" Grove, Oshkosh's vice president for government affairs, referring to the scheduling of the breakfast. "But it really was a sheer coincidence."

Grove said the honorariums weren't designed to preserve Oshkosh's 10-ton truck program and are just "sort of the way business is done" in Washington.

Leath told the newspaper he believes Oshkosh's 10-ton trucks are an excellent product and the Army "wanted to spend an enormous amount of money to invent a new truck" to supplant the Oshkosh vehicle in hauling ammunition.

A telephone message left at Leath's Washington home by The Associated Press was not immediately returned Thursday night.

Leath and five of the other House members who attended the breakfast are among the 19 members of the House Armed Services Procurement Subcommittee, which adopted Leath's Oshkosh truck amendment. The other subcommittee members at the breakfast were Reps. Ike Skelton, D-Mo., Roy Dyson, D-Md., Norman Sisisky, D-Va., Larry Hopkins, R-Ky., and Robert Badham, R-Calif.

Leath's amendment was approved by voice vote, meaning no record was kept of the voters, but Badham confirmed through an aide that he voted for the measure. Despite repeated requests by The News, aides to the other four members said they were unable to ascertain whether their bosses attended the subcommittee meeting or voted for Leath's amendment.

House records show that Skelton, Dyson and Hopkins voted at an April 22 procurement subcommittee meeting for another amendment by Leath to restore $75 million that had been cut from the Army budget for Oshkosh trucks. Les Aspin, the Wisconsin Democrat who chairs the full Armed Services Committee, had proposed the cut to meet a defense spending target.

Sisisky opposed Leath's April 22 amendment, an aide said. The News did not say how Badham voted on it. Rep. Bill Dickinson of Alabama, the seventh member who received $2,000 for the Oshkosh breakfast, does not sit on the procurement subcommittee but is the senior Republican on the full Armed Services panel.

In that capacity, Dickinson played a key role later in 1987 in negotiating a compromise with the Senate that required the Army to buy even more Oshkosh trucks than Leath's amendment stipulated, the newspaper said.

STATE IN BRIEF

Regents to claim Hardesty big spender, paper reports

AUSTIN (AP) — Regents who voted to fire Southwest Texas State University President Robert Hardesty have compiled a list of charges alleging that he spent lavishly and was away from campus too long, a newspaper reported Thursday.

The case against Hardesty, much of which was compiled after his May 19 firing, will be made when the Texas State University System regents board meets Monday to reconsider the action, sources told the San Antonio Light.

Hardesty said Wednesday every one of his activities cited by his foes on the board is appropriate, that he was not told otherwise and the underlying reason for his firing remains political.

"These are charges that have been trumped up since they fired me," Hardesty said Wednesday. "Five days after they fired me, they called for my expense vouchers and travel vouchers. They're looking for after-the-fact reasons."

Among the allegations against Hardesty, who traveled frequently, was that he was absent from campus 78 of 251 work days last year. He was told in November by some regents to stay at home more, but has been absent 34 of 85 work days this year.

Hardesty said his trips were for college and state business.

F-111D crash to be probed

CLOVIS, N.M. (AP) — Air Force officers will investigate the crash of an F-111D fighter airplane that killed both people aboard the craft, Cannon Air Force Base officials say.

Officials said the pilot, Capt. Glenn Troster of San Antonio, Texas, and Capt. Michael Barrett, a weapons systems officer from Varna, Ill., were killed in the crash Wednesday.

Both men were part of Cannon's 523rd tactical squadron. Cannon did not release the victims' ages.

The airplane from Cannon burst into flames when it crashed at 9:35 p.m. about one mile west of the Melrose Bombing Range near the base, said Airman Nancy Reynolds of the base's public affairs division.

Publisher arrested for drugs

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A magazine publisher critical of Bexar County's tough drug enforcement policy was arrested at his office Thursday after officials recovered a half-pound of methamphetamine and a revolver, authorities said.

Sam Kindrick, 53, publisher and editor of the monthly entertainment magazine "Action," was arrested Thursday afternoon after a three-month investigation, Sheriff Harlon Copeland said.

Copeland denied, however, that the arrest was in retaliation for Kindrick's criticism of the county's tough drug enforcement policy.

Kindrick, who also was arrested in 1982 on charges of delivery of methamphetamine, is a former columnist with the San Antonio Express-News and San Antonio Light.

City by the bay

Construction workers check a new trolley car as it is suspended above the tracks by cranes Thursday in Galveston. The trolley system is replacing a one that has been defunct for 50 years.

Ramses II exhibit will come to San Antonio

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Egyptian officials have agreed in principle to bring the Ramses II exhibit to San Antonio next year, former U.S. Rep. Bob Krueger says.

Krueger, who was selected to negotiate for exhibit by Mayor Henry Cisneros, returned to San Antonio from Cairo late Wednesday and made the announcement Thursday during the City Council meeting.

The 72-piece, 4,000-year-old collection will be displayed by the San Antonio Museum Association between April 1 and Aug. 31, 1989.

The collection includes religious objects and other items from the reign of Pharaoh Ramses II, who ruled Egypt for 67 years during the 13th century B.C. and is believed to have been the pharaoh during the Exodus.

He is credited with building as many as half of Egypt's temples and monuments.

The exhibit currently is in Boston and was to have left this country next March, but lobbying efforts by SAMA and Krueger convinced Egyptian museum authorities to agree to let the collection remain in the United States for another four months.

Krueger said San Antonio had been competing with Dallas for the exhibit's extended stay and that a personal one-week effort he made with project consultant Deborah Alves swung the decision.

"We feel very fortunate to have gotten it," said Krueger, a former ambassador at-large to Mexico.

Cisneros praised Krueger's "diplomatic touch" in securing the exhibit. "I cannot tell you how big this is," Cisneros said. "It's an impressive stimulating exhibit."

Radical students fight police to reach North Korean border

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Radical students attacked riot police with firebombs and clubs today as they battled to reach the North Korean border for reunification talks with students from the communist north.

Police in the center of Seoul chased thousands of screaming students trying to reach the main train station to take trains to the border. About 5,000 bottled up by police in Yonsei University tried to force their way out.

"We fight for unification," students chanted as they tried to break through police lines to make their way to the border 30 miles north of Seoul for talks with North Korean students.

Police hit by firebombs screamed with pain as they were covered in orange flames in the fighting around Yonsei. Students wielding wooden and iron clubs beat troopers trying to ward off blows with shields. Both sides pelted each other with rocks and bricks.

Black police armored cars fired volley after volley of choking tear gas into the ranks of the charging students, and police martial arts squads counterattacked. Students tried to immobilize the vans with firebombs and clubs.

Protesters at one point dragged a 20-foot baseball backstop to the main gate at Yonsei to deflect exploding gas bombs fired by police. But riot troopers attacked and dragged it away.

Dozens were injured at the university, but authorities had no overall figures. Police officers and students with burns or blood pouring from cuts were carried away or staggered to safety.

Radical students called for the march to force reunification of the communist north and the pro-Western south. Radicals claim the United States enforces partition of the Korean peninsula to rule the south, and the protests were vehemently anti-American.

"Yankee go home" and "Skin the Yankees," screamed the students.

About 60,000 riot police in green combat fatigues and helmets were deployed in Seoul and on roads leading to the border to block the march, banned by the government as a national security risk.

Police guarded train and bus stations to stop students from slipping through to the border. Riot squads ringed government buildings and U.S. diplomatic facilities to prevent attacks.

Riot squads seized dozens of students in clashes around the railway station. Some students hurled rocks, but most did not fight back as charging police roughly scattered marchers.

Officers were seen brutally punching and kicking students as they dragged them away. Blood poured from faces of beaten students.

Pedestrians ran for cover or choked and coughed from swirling tear gas. The running clashes repeatedly brought traffic to a standstill on many main streets.

Fighting erupted around Yonsei today when students attempted to march out after a rally at which speakers called for reunification and denounced the United States. A giant picture of an enraged student slashing a U.S. flag was used as a backdrop.

"We call for struggle of the masses for unification and against dictatorship," a speaker shouted as cheering students waved red, blue and black anti-government and anti-U.S. banners.

Students attacked riot police with firebombs as they marched out of the sprawling campus in the west of Seoul ringed by about 8,000 troopers. Other students in nearby sidestreets tried to attack police from the rear and seized several high rooftops.

The students held an overnight vigil at the school after fierce fighting Thursday. Many students appeared to have slipped away overnight, apparently to try and reach the border.

Nicaraguan negotiations broken off

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — The leftist Sandinista government and the U.S.-backed rebels have broken off peace talks that the insurgents called the final attempt at negotiating an end to the 6-year-old war.

After the negotiations ended Thursday, both sides said a temporary truce would remain in effect for an undetermined amount of time.

No new date was announced for resuming the talks, aimed at fashioning a permanent halt to the fighting that has claimed more than 26,000 lives.

Despite the breakdown, rebel leader Alfredo Cesar told journalists Thursday night: "We have reiterated our deep conviction to look for solutions to the conflict in our motherland in a civilized way."

Each side blamed the other for the discussions' failure.

The nation's defense minister, Gen. Humberto Ortega, head of the Sandinista delegation, said the Contra rebels held "irrational positions" and maintained an "anti-negotiation attitude against the peace."

In a statement released in Washington, rebel leader Adolfo Calero countered that the government "demonstrated its hostility toward any meaningful solution to the oppression in Nicaragua."

The goal of the fourth round of negotiations, which began on Tuesday, was to end the war and install democratic reforms, in accordance with a preliminary peace plan signed on March 23 in the village of Sapoa on the Costa Rican border.

Thursday morning, the government put forth its most liberal proposal to date and granted a key rebel demand to institute democratic reforms before the rebels put down their weapons.

The Contras rejected the proposal, saying the Sandinistas did not guarantee that the measures would be enacted before they disarmed.

The Sandinista proposal included freedom of expression, reform of electoral laws, separation of the ruling Sandinista party from the state and the right to strike.

The government proposal also would have granted political amnesty in steps, with the first 200 prisoners freed after the signing of an agreement and the last freed on Sept. 28.

The Contras offered a proposal calling for total amnesty for all political prisoners within five days of signing.

The rebels said there are 4,207 political prisoners, while the International Red Cross, seen here as sympathetic to the government, put the figure at 3,324.

The Contras also demanded separating the armed forces from the ruling Sandinista National Liberation Front in name as well as actions. The government agreed to the "separation and independence of the powers of the state."

More journalists held in Israel

JERUSALEM (AP) — Israel arrested two Palestinian reporters and a writer in a continuing crackdown on Arab journalists, Arab newspapers reported today. An Israeli report said the government may shut down West Bank schools again.

The Hebrew daily newspaper Haretz quoted army sources as saying schools could close again if students follow orders given in underground leaflets to leave classes at noon.

Authorities have extended classroom time to 12:30 or 1 p.m. to make up for the four months schools were closed during the height of the Palestinian uprising against Israeli occupation of the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

A spokesman for the West Bank's military government could not be reached for comment on the Haretz report. A day earlier, spokesman Olivier Rafowicz said the army had no immediate plans to close schools again because of increased violence.

The Haretz story came a day after protests and a general strike marked six months of the "intifadeh," or uprising. Students and young people played a major role in clashes with the army Thursday in the West Bank.

Ahmed Hassan Hawari, 17, was killed when he was shot in the head by an Israeli officer in the village of Sebastiya near Nabulus. The army said he was about to throw a cement block at troops from a terrace when he was shot.

An 18-year-old youth and a 12-year-old girl were wounded in the legs during a protest in the West Bank town of Tulkarem, hospital officials said.

Presidential choices still leave questions

What had been obvious in recent weeks is now fact: George Bush will be the Republican nominee for president this year and Michael Dukakis will be the Democrat.

Both men say they're ready for the race. No doubt, the voting public is ready to get past all the verbal wrestling and backbiting that a primary election necessarily entails.

But neither man is "out of the woods" from the standpoint of making important choices that could determine the success or failure of his individual campaign for what has been called the most important job in the world.

For Dukakis, the turning point could be selection of a running-mate. Jesse Jackson, who most would concede was the Democrats' obvious No. 2 choice, presents a real dilemma for Dukakis. Does he pick Jackson as his vice president, thus solidifying his hold on the black vote, but likely alienating and sending to the Republican Party a number of voters who feel the Democratic Party already is too liberal?

Dukakis put Jackson's claim to the No. 2 spot on hold when he said that "no one is due an offer." But it's a readily known fact that he will have to offer Jackson some post in the administration to keep him happy and to avoid problems down the road.

Of course, Dukakis might circumvent the issue by choosing another, more conservative, running-mate such as Sen. Sam Nunn of Georgia and offering Jackson a cabinet post or ambassadorship.

On the other side of the fence, there are problems too. But problems of a different kind. For months now, Vice President Bush has been attempting to walk the delicate line between explaining how he differs from Ronald Reagan and is his "own man," and at the same time, not appear to be a turncoat to the conservative cause.

It hasn't been easy, but the choice of a running-mate could give Bush just the opportunity he needs. He will want to choose someone who will solidify his hold on conservative ranks while appearing far enough removed from the current administration to not be affected by its "negatives."

Individuals rumored to be prospective choices include Rep. Jack Kemp, and former United Nations Ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick. But there probably are many more being considered.

So even now this presidential election isn't a foregone conclusion. In coming months, we expect to see a number of developments that will help determine which way both camps are proceeding.

Contractors shop on military's tab

WASHINGTON — Military contractors have fleeced the taxpayer with double billings and $649 toilet seats for years. An alert auditor can catch those scams and slap the hands of the contractors.

But a more discriminating contractor can rip off the government with perfectly legal schemes. A favorite tactic is to use the government warehouse as a shopping mall. Contractors have access to the warehouses for supplies necessary to carry out their contractual work with the government. Or they simply do their own shopping on the private market and bill Uncle Sam for the equipment.

The present system would work if the government could count better. But the military often loses track of goods checked out of its warehouses and is so bad at keeping inventory that it even asks many contractors to do their own accounting.

An ongoing investigation by Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio, and his Governmental Affairs Committee discovered that $51 billion worth of government equipment is currently in the hands of private contractors.

The military has resisted this practice of giving away government property since 1970. As recently as 1985, Defense Department officials decreed that private companies had to provide everything they needed to fulfill their service contracts. But Glenn's investigators, working with the General Accounting Office, discovered that the military was still giving away paint, lumber, hardware, car wax, office supplies and video tapes.

In many cases, the contractors acquire equipment that they don't need. A 1980 GAO investigation found that a $65,000 Navy computer sat unused at a contractor's plant for three years before it was returned. Thirteen Army communications shacks worth $76,000 gathered dust in a contractor's warehouse for four years while the Army scrambled elsewhere for new shacks. An Air Force contractor took $120,000 worth of telecommunications modems, even though they were not needed and never used.

When contractors don't check out government property directly from a warehouse, they can avoid the cost of materials by doing their own shopping, and then billing the government. The military was supposed to eliminate the practice of paying for so-called "other plant equipment" by 1975. But those orders were essentially ignored, according to a report issued in May by the Defense Department Inspector General.

Directly billing the government for this equipment is a sham. It forces the government to pay for items that can be used by the contractor long after the contract work is done. The contractors are supposed to bill the government only for the amount of time the equipment was used to fulfill the contract. But the Inspector General's review of 15 military consulting firms around the Washington area confirmed that many of these contractors bill the government for the full cost of the equipment, and some do it even when their contract specifies otherwise. One Virginia company charged the government for $135,000 worth of equipment, even though the contract said, "All other material required in the performance of the contract shall be furnished by the contractor."

Eight of the 15 contractors even made a profit on the material they bought with government funds.

CUBA OVERSTAYS ITS WELCOME — There are signs of growing disenchantment between Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev and Cuban premier Fidel Castro. Castro may have gone to the trough one time too many.

Simply put, Gorbachev is weary of financing Castro's economic failures. After nearly 30 years of abundant Soviet assistance, Cuba still cannot feed itself, although it was a net exporter of food before Castro took over. Cuba continues to fall short of its sugar export quotas to the Soviet Union. The goal to produce 10 million tons by 1990 (the original target year for that amount was 1970) seems unreachable. Moreover, the Soviets think that Castro's economic pipe dreams are costly failures. That includes his sudden enthusiasm for dubious ventures, such as biogenetic engineering.

Castro and Gorbachev concluded a new economic agreement under the cloak of secrecy several months ago. No details were announced, but U.S. intelligence officials have learned that it doesn't look good for Castro. Gorbachev simply agreed to maintain the current annual Soviet subsidy of the Cuban economy, amounting to $3.5 billion.

Castro's recurring speeches about ongoing economic problems are the clue to U.S. analysts that the Soviets have not offered anything new.

There are other signs that Gorbachev is quietly directing a slow, anti-Castro campaign from Moscow. For the first time, the Soviet press is openly critical of Castro's erratic and personalized approach to economic development.

For all the grumbling on both sides, no one expects the Soviets to set Cuba adrift. It is too important as a strategic asset. And there is always hope in Gorbachev's mind that Castro, who turns 62 in August, will someday step aside for someone with better economic sense.

Reagan, others slighted nation's war dead

It cost us 4,435 battle deaths and 6,188 wounded, not counting those who died of disease or other causes, to win our independence from Great Britain. Another 2,260 would die and 4,505 would be wounded to insure our independence in the War of 1812, again not counting deaths from disease and other causes which in those days inflicted heavy casualties on armies.

To win the Southwest from Mexico, the cost was 1,733 lives and 4,152 wounded; to free slaves and to hold the union together, 364,511 deaths (not counting Confederate dead) and 281,881 wounded. Liberating Cuba, Puerto Rico and the Philippines from Spain was comparatively cheaper, 2,446 dead and 1,662 wounded. To make the world safe for democracy or perhaps to fight the war to end all wars — I forget which slogan went with which war — 116,516 Americans died in Europe in one sad year from 1917 to 1918. Another 204,002 were wounded.

Defeating Japanese fascists and Nazi Germany required 406,399 lives and 670,846 wounded Americans. To prevent communists from over-running the Korean peninsula in a valiant war which Hollywood mocked in M.A.S.H. 54,246 Americans gave their lives and another 203,284 suffered wounds. We might remember those men as a few leftist snots in South Korea today demonstrate against U.S. interference in South Korea's affairs. We might remember, too, that a great many of them were killed, wounded, and abused in prison by Chinese communists whom current politicians and other assorted idiots are so assiduously wooing.

In a vain but valiant and honorable attempt to prevent the North Vietnamese from crushing South Vietnam, 57,002 Americans gave their lives and another 303,704 suffered wounds.

You might remember them the next time you see Jane Fonda, any of her products, any people who sell her products, and any people who patronize her movies. This despicable person posed for pictures at North Vietnamese anti-aircraft guns, ridiculed American POWs, called them liars and criminals, and did all in her power to aid the vile totalitarian who were killing and torturing them.

There has been no greater disgrace in American public life than the public acceptance of this woman who, had there been a formal declaration of war would have been tried for treason, and who remains unrepentant and a leftist.

Nothing in America has been cheap, not our independence, not our freedom, not our living space, not living up to our ideals. All of those things have been purchased with blood and pain, with the destruction of lives and families, with the bitter tears of widows and children without fathers, with the anguish of economic losses caused by the loss of a breadwinner, with the years of pain and melancholy of the permanently disabled, with the starvation and torture of prisoners of war.

To be frank, I stay permanently angry with those Americans who fail to appreciate our freedom, our country, our history, and the sacrifices that made it all possible. Perhaps that's one reason I'm drawn to Cubans, Vietnamese and others who have come here to escape tyranny. They appreciate this country. Many native-born Americans don't.

If you can't appreciate those who performed the act of ultimate love, sacrificing their lives, then you are a pretty sorry, no-good (expletive deleted).

Those are my post-Memorial Day thoughts after watching a few poorly attended ceremonies and a lot of holiday outings.

The fact is the day is not properly observed because our leaders don't set a good example. Think what effect it would have had if President Reagan had said he could not attend the summit if it were going to be scheduled on Memorial Day because he had a more pressing duty to pay his respects to the nation's war dead.

Indeed he has, but he chose not to fulfill it.

Another View:

Radical right on rise

Disturbing signs have surfaced to hint that the radical right and even neo-fascism may be on the rise in Western Europe.

The surprisingly strong showing by Jean Marie Le Pen in the first round of the French presidential elections on April 24 worries many. The leader of the radical National Front had campaigned on a platform of drumbeating nationalism and racist remarks about throwing Arabs out of France. His 15 percent of the popular vote, while small, was five points higher than the pre-election polls had predicted. He also expanded his political base from southern France to northern industrial areas.

Meanwhile, Italy — a nation long known for its tolerance — has been struck by a series of racist and anti-Semitic incidents. These events include a crowd of Italians driving an African-born woman and her child from a

Rome bus, demonstrations against Gypsies and a rising number of anti-Semitic articles in Italian newspapers, as well as the bombing of a Jewish bookstore in Turin.

Norway, Denmark, Belgium and Greece have seen a similar rise in hostility toward African, Arab and Turkish guest workers on the grounds that they take local jobs and allegedly increase crime. This hostility also is seen in the rising strength of minor far-right and neo-fascist parties.

At present, these political parties — like Le Pen's — are small, drawing only 10 percent or 15 percent of the vote. Also, much of their support is in the form of protest voting rather than a sign of real political commitment.

But a serious economic downturn could turn these radical right groups into major political players — much to the danger of European democracy.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Friday, June 10, the 162nd day of 1988. There are 204 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History: On June 10, 1935, Alcoholics Anonymous was founded in Akron, Ohio, by William G. Wilson and Dr. Robert Smith.

On this date: In 1801, the North African state of Tripoli declared war on the United States in a dispute over safe passage of merchant vessels through the Mediterranean.

In 1865, the opera "Tristan und Isolde" by Richard Wagner premiered in Munich, Germany.

In 1922, singer-actress Judy Garland was born Frances Gumm in Grand Rapids, Minn.

In 1940, Italy declared war on France and Britain.

In 1942, the Gestapo massacred 173 male residents of Lidice, Czechoslovakia, in retaliation for the killing of a Nazi official.

In 1946, Italy replaced its abolished monarchy with a republic.

In 1964, the U.S. Senate voted to limit further debate on a proposed civil rights bill, shutting off a filibuster by Southern states.

In 1967, the Six-Day War ended as Israel and Syria agreed to observe a United Nations-mediated cease-fire.

In 1977, James Earl Ray, the convicted assassin of civil rights leader Martin Luther King Jr., escaped from Brushy Mountain State Prison in Tennessee with six other convicts. (Ray was recaptured June 13.)

In 1985, socialist Claus von Bulow was acquitted in his retrial of charges he'd tried to murder his heirress wife.

Ten years ago: Affirmed, ridden by Steve Cauthen, won the Belmont Stakes and, with it, horse racing's Triple Crown, one year after Seattle Slew's triumph, resulting in the first consecutive Triple Crown sweep.

Five years ago: Basking in the glow of her re-election victory, British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher told supporters she approached her second term of office "with a very great sense of responsibility and humility."

One year ago: The leaders of seven major industrial nations ended a three-day summit in Venice, proposing no new major economic initiatives, but calling for closer coordination of their economies and a stabilizing of foreign currency rates.

Bush passed chance to woo California Right

LOS ANGELES — On the eve of his unopposed run in Tuesday's primary, George Bush missed another chance to identify with the California Right when he passed up a 10th anniversary celebration of Proposition 13 and instead attended a humdrum party function in San Bernardino County.

State Sen. William Campbell, Bush's state co-chairman, had urged that the vice president turn up at the Biltmore Hotel birthday party for the property-tax slash that triggered a national tax revolt. But Campbell, a conservative and supply-sider, is on the way out in the Bush campaign. His fellow right-wing co-chairman, Rep. Robert Dornan, is also downgraded here as Gov. George Deukmejian's office takes over.

Neither Campbell nor Dornan was present Monday as national campaign manager Lee Atwater presided over a secret meeting to determine who will run the Bush effort here. The prospect of running a presidential campaign without conservative activists on board has led prominent Republicans to put the disaster label on the current state of Bush's operations in the Golden State.

They not only take seriously Gov. Michael Dukakis' 16-point lead in state polls but cannot swallow the notion propagated at national Bush headquarters of a Democrat losing the presidency while winning California. Nor has Bush made progress toward remedying his lack of California connections enjoyed by Richard Nixon and Ronald Reagan.

Bush's hopes for using the unopposed primary election to develop his following in the state went flat. Unwillingness to spend money here now meant not only rejecting local pleas for a $750,000 to $1 million state television buy before the primary but limiting campaign days here.

So far, there is no sense of any happ Dornan and neglecting the Proposition 13 crowd were viewed as bearing the signature of vice presidential chief of staff Craig Fuller. A Californian and protégé of Michael K. Deaver, Fuller is making tactical decisions here.

Atwater lately has been moving into the action. He is giving himself a crash course in the wondrous ways of this state, meeting in Washington with California veterans Ed Rollins and Lyn Nofziger and jet hopping between Washington and Los Angeles.

But the craftiest of the state's politicos, Stu Spencer, has been consulted only sporadically and was not on hand for Monday's meeting. While no conservative, Spencer is ready to offer Bush names of operatives who could build a bridge to the Right.

Bush is relying on the governor's team at a time the governor's prestige has dropped. Having marched up the hill and back down with a tax increase, Deukmejian is now inviting even more trouble by implying he might accept the nomination after all, even if it runs the risk of turning the governorship over to a Democrat. For distressed Republicans, that is the last straw.

Louisiana war dead honored

By ALAN SAYRE

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — John Jackson Shaffer III graduated from the U.S. Naval Academy in 1930 and survived the Japanese attack on the battleship Arizona at Pearl Harbor, only to be the lone American killed during an engagement with a German U-boat in 1944.

More than four decades later, a black granite wall honors Shaffer and about 7,000 other Louisiana residents killed in battle from the Revolutionary War through the 1963 attack on the U.S. Embassy in Beirut. The wall is part of a complex that includes a nautical museum and the USS Kidd, a restored World War II-era battleship housed along the Mississippi River.

"It was a labor of love," said Stan Nahill, treasurer of the Louisiana Naval War Memorial Commission and a retired master petty officer in the U.S. Navy.

"It means something to have someone come up and say 'my uncle or my grandfather was killed in that war and see a person come up to the wall and look for that name,'" Nahill said.

Not included in the list of combat fatalities from Louisiana are those who died in the Civil War. The monument, which was opened to the public on July 4, 1986, notes an estimated 13,000 state residents died fighting for the Confederacy.

NAHILL SAID CIVIL WAR fatalities were not included because of a lack of accurate records, the economic limitations of etching thousands of more names in granite and the decision to limit the list to those killed in combat against foreign countries.

As far as the rest of the names are concerned, Nahill said it is an accurate reflection of Louisiana residents who died in war.

Former U.S. Rep. Henson Moore was the driving force behind the wall, which was funded through a $2.5 million grant to build the museum center.

"That was one of his first goals — to have something for the Louisiana veteran," said Nahill.

"As time developed, our first objective was the ship. Then we wanted something to compliment the ship and that was the nautical center. Then we wanted to put something in to bring this whole thing together. Henson said we should have something that said 'thank you' to the veterans of the state of Louisiana."

Moore was inspired by the national memorial in Washington to those who died in the Vietnam War, Nahill said.

Records were sent from the Department of War and the Department of Defense to Baton Rouge. From there, the real work began, mostly through the supervision of the late John McGovern, then head of the state Department of Veterans Affairs, Nahill said.

ONE PROBLEM DEALT with the spelling of names.

"Especially with the Cajun names," Nahill said. "Back years ago, they were not very accurate in reporting the names."

Veterans listed as killed in combat were checked and double-checked through contacts with relatives and then sent back to Washington to be re-verified, Nahill said.

The fact that the list is limited to those who were killed as the result of enemy action — and does not include those who died in such instances as training accidents — has led to a sensitive situation with relatives, said Nahill.

"We offended many individuals. Looking at it from their standpoint, we can certainly understand it," he said.

Although none of those listed as killed have turned up alive — as happened in one case with the Vietnam War memorial — museum officials receive one to two inquiries per week from relatives who say their loved ones are not included, said Tim Rizzuto, the museum's acting director.

"We just had a call...from a woman who said her son was killed in the Java campaign in World War II and was awarded a Silver Star," he said. "All we can do now is take the name and, hopefully, the process will be reopened to verify that they were a combat death."

Additions to the wall will have to wait until additional funding becomes available, Rizzuto said.

The wall was designed by John Desmond, a Baton Rouge architect, and the names were etched under the supervision of Leslie Lavigne, the owner of a memorial company in Walker.

CURRENTLY, THE MUSEUM has about 50,000 paid visitors annually. Since the wall does not have an admission charge, Nahill and Rizzuto estimate a minimum of 100,000 people see it annually.

"I don't think the wall itself has been publicized throughout the state of Louisiana," said Nahill. "I would say that 70 or 80 percent of the people of the state don't know that this wall exists."

Adults big eaters of peanut butter

The secret is out. According to the Peanut Advisory Board, adults consume almost 50 percent of the peanut butter eaten each year. In fact, 95 percent of all households — whether children are present or not — have peanut butter in the cupboards.

WORLD in brief

China terrorism warning issued

BEIJING (AP) — Western hotels heightened security today and children were told not to talk to strangers because of a warning from the U.S. Embassy that Americans may become targets of terrorist attacks.

"We are on the alert for all unusual occurrences and have added a few more people to our security staff," said Max Wilhelm, manager of the Sheraton Great Wall Hotel. "But it's hard to say where to look and what to look for."

The embassy sent out an "urgent notice to American citizens" Thursday, saying Chinese authorities told the embassy "nationals of a third country may be planning a terrorist attack on Americans in Beijing."

Land reform approved

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — President Corason Aquino signed a land reform bill today and said she hoped the measure would uplift millions of rural Filipinos from their ancient poverty.

She congratulated Congress for enacting the legislation after nearly a year of debate and said the measure would contribute to the true independence of the Filipino people.

The bill, approved by Congress last Wednesday, gives landowners the choice of dividing their property among tenants or sharing profits with them.

It is expected to benefit two million landless farmers in this largely agricultural nation of 7,100 islands. Land reform is considered essential to defeating the 19-year Communist insurgency, which draws its support primarily from rural areas.

Emergency extended

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — President P.W. Botha today extended the two-year nationwide state of emergency for another year and said ordinary laws were inadequate to control unrest.

His proclamation, which means hundreds of prominent activists will remain in jail without charge, was assailed by anti-apartheid leaders. White women from the Black Sash civil rights group stood along highways in Johannesburg during the morning rush hour with posters saying: "Apartheid is the emergency."

The Rev. Frank Chikane, general secretary of the South African Council of Churches, said activists must "intensify our call for comprehensive economic sanctions against this apartheid regime."

Botha's announcement came two days after blacks ended their biggest and longest general strike against the white-controlled government. Black labor federations said about 1,000 workers who joined the protest have been fired.

Arab support assured

ALGIERS, Algeria (AP) — Yasser Arafat and the PLO emerged from the Arab summit meeting greatly strengthened for their confrontation with Israel by the unqualified material and moral support of the Arab leaders.

Saudi Arabia and the other oil-rich Persian Gulf states for the first time agreed to pay the Palestine Liberation Organization a substantial subsidy to intensify the 6-month-old Palestinian uprising in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip.

The amount of the subsidy officially was kept secret to avoid showing the Arab hand to the Israelis. But delegates said it was set at $118 million for the first year.

This fell short of the $600 million a year Arafat said he needed to keep the full heat of the revolt on the Israelis, but it meant a solid boost to what the Palestinian leader has described as the "stone-throwing revolution."

Space effort continues

MOSCOW (AP) — A Bulgarian helped two Soviet cosmonauts guide their capsule toward a docking with the Soviet space station Mir and prepared for the busiest program of experiments of any Soviet space flight involving a foreigner.

Alexander Alexandrov, a 36-year-old cosmonaut from the Bulgarian town of Omurtag, will help the Soviets perform more than 40 medical, metallurgical, astronomical and geological studies on Mir, Russian for "peace."

Today's schedule calls for the crew to conduct vision experiments in the weightlessness of space, activate a Bulgarian-made device to study the stars and other distant objects, try mixing metals and look for natural resources in Bulgaria.

Live black-and-white video broadcast on state-run Soviet and Bulgarian television Thursday showed the Mir complex — with its three solar battery panels shaped like an upside-down letter "T" — getting bigger and bigger as the Soyuz TM-5 capsule approached. Docking occurred shortly before 8 p.m.

Price trend still easing

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Consumer prices, restrained by a novel inflation-fighting campaign, rose 1.9 percent in May to register the smallest increase since November 1981, the government has reported.

It was the fourth consecutive month that the inflation rate had eased.

The Bank of Mexico, the nation's central bank, attributed the brighter price picture to the government program unveiled by President Miguel de la Madrid in mid-December.

Series of sex scandals shaking up staid British society

By MARCUS ELIASON

LONDON (AP) — Sex for sale at Harrods? Prince Charles' polo manager in a massage parlor? Sex frolics in a parliamentary shower room? England's cricket captain fired for having female company in his hotel room?

Recent weeks have yielded an unusually rich harvest of lurid tales for London's anything-goes tabloid newspapers. With the firing of captain Michael Gattling on Thursday, it seems that not even the genteel world of cricket is being spared.

Gattling, 31, was summoned by the team selectors to answer newspaper allegations that two of his players had sex on a lawn outside their hotel Sunday night, and that he took a woman to his room for sex.

The alleged offense, as far as the selectors were concerned, was that it happened while a five-day game, or test, was in progress against the West Indies in Nottinghamshire.

"Warnings had previously been issued to all England players concerning the standard of behavior expected of them at all times, both on and off the field, and these had been ignored," said a statement by the Test and County Cricket Board, the game's governing body.

Gattling, who is married and has two children, issued a statement saying: "I categorically deny allegations of sexual impropriety which have been made against me by certain newspapers," and said he would sue them. The allegations appeared

Wednesday and Thursday in the Sun, Today and the Daily Mirror.

The cricket board said the selectors believed Gattling's account. So why fire him?

Because, the statement said, "Gattling behaved irresponsibly during a test match by inviting female company to his room for a drink in the late evening."

Therefore, it added, in the genteel language that still governs the cricketing world, "the invitation to Mike Gattling to captain the England team...has been withdrawn," and Gattling "did not wish to be considered for selection" for the team for the second game, starting June 16.

The other three scheduled games were not mentioned, and Gattling brushed reporters aside as he left.

But although Gattling was decorated by Queen Elizabeth II for his cricketing prowess, his captaincy has been lackluster. He has won only two of his 23 international games as captain, and the West Indies match ended Tuesday in a draw. Last year he was officially censured for having a foul-mouthed shouting match with a Pakistani umpire during a match in Faisalabad.

Gattling got into further trouble for writing a book giving his version of the Faisalabad incident, and had to promise the cricket board he would withdraw the relevant chapter.

Cricket is not the only English institution to take a tarnishing in recent weeks.

Ronald Ferguson, father of Sarah, the Duchess of York and polo manager of Prince Charles, narrowly escaped expulsion from his polo club last month after the tabloid Sunday People photographed him leaving a London massage parlor.

Two weeks ago a lawmaker for the opposition Labor Party publicly denied newspaper allegations that he frolicked with a secretary in a House of Commons shower room, and on Wednesday the Mirror claimed saleswomen at the Harrods department store were selling sexual favors to customers.

Harrods said the women worked for perfume sellers using space in the department store, and were not Harrods employees, but added an investigation was under way.

Probation chief wants study of changes

By RICK BROWN
Assistant City Editor

Midland's assistant probation chief hopes adequate study will be given to any safety-related changes for her office similar to those proposed for state parole officers in the wake of a Dallas probation officer's slaying.

"There's just too many unanswered questions," said Jalene Jones, Midland County assistant probation officer. "We can't just do it on an emotional level and make sweeping changes without looking at the consequences."

Following the slaying and a May 10 rape of a Beaumont state parole officer, some parole officers reportedly have refused to make home visits and have asked to carry weapons.

In addition, the State Board of Pardons and Paroles has proposed a number of safety-related administrative changes, including more training, sending two officers on some home visits and providing devices that would send distress signals either to a state office or local police.

A Beaumont state representative, Democrat Mark Stiles, has pledged to introduce a bill in the next Legislature to allow parole officers to carry guns and make arrests.

State parole and probation duties are handled under different administrative systems, with parole officers serving the state directly while probation officers come under county jurisdiction.

Local parole administrators traveled to Austin this week to learn about the changes in detail.

Ms. Jones, a 17-year probation officer veteran, felt allowing probation officers to carry guns could "change the complexion of the game," she said. "We've never carried guns, so we don't know — that's an unknown area."

"Of course, right now probationers know that probation officers are not armed," a situation that tends to offer a degree of protection, she said.

"They know that if they shoot us, they're shooting an unarmed person," and could therefore face greater penalties, she said.

"If I felt I was at risk, I would get a deputy to go with me," she added. "I've done that before."

A proposal that officers carry an electronic signaling device could be the answer to the safety problem,

Ms. Jones said, adding that currently probation officers travel in unmarked cars without communication radios.

The changes for parole officers came after Glenn Heckmann, state parole board director, met with a dozen officers from around the state May 19 and heard their recommendations, according to Associated Press reports.

He said last week most of the changes won't require board approval, although some may if the costs are high enough. No estimate of the costs has been made.

Heckmann also proposed to "re-search the feasibility of parole officers carrying firearms during the course of their duties and/or being commissioned peace officers." He said he opposes arming parole officers, but also said the agency would "look at the pros and cons of it. We're not saying we endorse it."

The agency also will examine creating a parole enforcement division for peace officers authorized to arrest parolees. Parolees who violate conditions of their release now are arrested by sheriff's deputies or police.

Heckmann said he hoped all officers would receive some new training before the end of summer.

Crane's indigent obstetric patients will go to Odessa

By CHRIS VAN WAGENEN
Staff Writer

Child's play. That would about sum up an agreement between two West Texas health care facilities, which will provide obstetric care for indigent patients.

"It's no big deal really. We just have to have this in place for licensing purposes," said Charles Butts, administrator for Crane Memorial Hospital in Crane County.

The hospital — which delivered its last baby in May — has asked Odessa's Medical Center Hospital to provide obstetric and neonatal care for those unable to pay.

However, Butts downplayed the situation, noting that Crane Memorial has fewer than four such patients a year who would qualify under standards set by the Texas Indigent Health Care Act of 1985.

Toby Tripp, an MCH board member, said the hospital's finance committee already has approved the contract and the board is expected to do the same next Tuesday.

Crane Memorial's two physicians — Drs. B.J. Maynard and D.J. Stafford — decided nine months ago to phase out its obstetric service because of the high cost of malpractice premiums.

Butts said there also was a liability question. He said physicians that deliver babies can face litigation up to age 18, if it's determined the child was injured at birth.

Rather than face that, the two physicians elected to discontinue delivering babies, thus forcing the hospital to find another facility willing to take over the service.

Butts said the county will foot the bill for mothers who fall under the state's indigent care standards. "But it's not like hundreds qualify for this," he said.

MCH spokesman Frank Beaman said the hospital still must determine what rates will be charged Crane County.

Tripp said he expected MCH would approve the agreement without a hitch at its next regularly scheduled meeting.

Crane Memorial is a 28-bed county facility located about 31 miles south of Odessa.

New local Rotary Club caters to early risers

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

New members of the Midland Daybreak Rotary Club have all but one thing in common with their fellow Rotarians in the city's two other chapters.

The "Daybreak" club meets at 7 a.m. for breakfast — hence its name — while the downtown and west Midland chapters meet for lunch, said Henry Herman, a Merrill Lynch financial consultant and charter member of the new group.

Formation of a third club was necessary, Herman said, because membership in the city's other two chapters was full. Rotary Clubs usually have no more than one member from each professional area, Herman explained.

The Daybreak chapter received its charter in May and was sponsored for membership by the Midland Downtown Rotary Club, he said.

There were 25 charter members, Herman said.

The Daybreak chapter's goals include recognizing students at Midland College for their academic achievement, said Gary Pierce, president-elect and tennis pro at the Ranchland Hills Country Club.

"We hope to recognize their (MC students) achievements through a student recognition program...for instance, recognizing an average student who turned it around and became a very good student," Pierce said today.

The city's two other chapters have a similar "student of the month" program for Midland Independent School District high schoolers, and the MC recognition program would be similar to that, Pierce said.

Internationally, Rotary Clubs have worked to immunize several million youths against the polio virus and that endeavor is duplicated by the Texas chapters as well, Pierce said.

New officers of the Daybreak chapter include Herman, treasurer; Jim Brown, secretary; Pierce, president-elect; and Roger Hyatt, president.

Veterans Peace Convoy continues wait at border

Hearst News Service

LAREDO — A road-weary, frustrated band of would-be Good Samaritans — many of them Vietnam veterans — sought refuge in the shade of spindly trees at an infested campground and plotted strategy in its battle against the U.S. Treasury Department.

Temper occasionally flared as the group, the Veterans Peace Convoy to Nicaragua — turned back by U.S. Customs Service officers Tuesday night — attempted to find a way to take food, medicine and other humanitarian aid to the people of war-torn Nicaragua.

Thursday, a member of the organizing delegation confirmed that a California man was expelled from the convoy after he attempted to drive his blue bus loaded with school supplies across the International Bridge.

The man, identified as Brad Goans, acted without authorization of the group, which, to this point, has sought to avoid direct confrontations with authorities.

Sean Gullette, a member of the Boston delegation, instrumental in organizing the convoy, said Goans was intercepted by Mexican customs officials, who retained custody of the bus Thursday night.

Gullette said Goans was stopped because he was unable to pay for an official escort through Mexico. The convoy has collected approximately $800 for that purpose, Gullette said.

By Thursday night, the 106 members of the Veterans Peace Convoy, should have pushed their 37-vehicle caravan to the Mexican city of Monterrey.

Instead, they sat at the KOA campground 10 miles from the Rio Grande, blocked by a government trade embargo from transporting their vehicles across the border. The Treasury Department has insisted upon a $100,000 bond to ensure return of the vehicles to this country.

As temperatures at the campsite topped 100 degrees Thursday afternoon, convoy members clustered beneath trees or in the shade of their heavily loaded vehicles to consider their options. Occasionally voices rose in anger.

Members of the group said direct confrontation with authorities would be avoided unless such action was approved by the entire group.

The group met to plan strategy Thursday night, said Raul Valdez, a group coordinator in Austin.

Duncan Murphy, a 68-year-old California tree trimmer, said direct confrontations are being actively considered.

"We are kind of holding our place here today, waiting for the pressure to build," Gerry Condon, one of the convoy's organizers, told The Associated Press. "We are hoping it won't be long, because there are people here who want very bad to make this trip to Nicaragua."

Thursday, U.S. Rep. Albert Bustamante, D-San Antonio, wrote Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III urging him to allow the convoy to cross the border.

"The International Emergency Economic Powers Act, with its accompanying report language, makes clear that Congress, in giving (Reagan) the broad economic powers, did not intend to authorize the president to interdict effort by U.S. citizens to relieve human suffering," the letter from Bustamante said.

A Treasury Department spokesman in Washington said that the department's Office of Foreign Assets Control told convoy supporters last month that the vehicles would violate the Nicaraguan Trade Control Regulations in effect since 1985.

"They were notified in late May what the law was and what the facts were on what can be exported to Nicaragua," said the Treasury spokesman, speaking on condition of anonymity. "I mean there's no surprise here."

More than half of Texas households have guns, poll reveals

Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — More than half the households in Texas have a gun, and Texans are divided over whether the state needs to pass gun control laws, according to the Texas Poll.

The poll asked 1,006 Texans whether limits on sales of guns should be "increased, decreased or kept the same."

Forty-two percent said restrictions should be increased, 16 percent said restrictions should be decreased and 37 percent said they should stay the same.

The poll was conducted May 13-23 by the Public Policy Resources Laboratory of Texas A&M University. The results may vary by 3 percent age points for the entire sample and 10 percentage points for small subgroups.

Of those polled, 78 percent said they agree with a proposal in Congress to ban guns made of plastic because they can't be detected by security systems, while 15 percent do not.

Texasans polled were split over whether to increase restrictions on most gun sales. But the issue of gun control doesn't affect the way most Texans vote, the results suggest.

The poll asked, "Could the position a candidate for political office took on this issue change your decision to vote for a person, or is it the kind of issue that really doesn't matter that much to you?"

Of registered voters polled, 56 percent said a candidate's position on the issue wouldn't change their vote, 37 percent said it would and 7 percent didn't know. More than half of Texans in previous polls said a legislator's vote on tax issues would change their vote.

Houston Police Chief Lee P. Brown, an advocate of gun control measures, said Thursday the poll's results are not "inconsistent with what the attitude has been among Americans for years and years."

Brown, who supports gun control, favors legislation requiring a "cooling-off period" of 15 days between the time one applies to buy a gun and the time of its purchase.

"Homicides and suicides are often the result of things that happen at that time," he said. "Under Texas law, a person just released from an institution for the criminally insane can go into a store and have a gun in five minutes if he can prove he's who he says he is. He can provide a false name and identification card. All he has to do is lie."

Brown, who favors permanently banning plastic guns, said he found the high number of respondents favoring such a ban "encouraging."

"It is reasonable, if we look at the possibility of somebody going through the metal detector at an airport, with one," he said.

New early registration system at MC

From Staff Reports

A new early registration system begins Monday when Midland College starts enrolling students for its second summer session.

Under the new system, students currently enrolled for classes in the first summer session will be signed up according to an alphabetical system, followed after the first week by others wishing to take Summer II classes.

The second summer term begins July 11.

"For many students, this will eliminate a second trip to the campus for the traditional registration," said Dee Windsor, associate dean of students and registrar.

"Students may take care of their registration paperwork, sign up for specific classes, and pay fees during their initial visit. Those who do not pay fees at that time may pay them anytime prior to the close of early registration. If they don't pay fees by that deadline, they will be dropped from the class rolls and would have to come to the official registration to sign up for their classes."

Three-alarm fire forces evacuation of hospital patients in San Antonio

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — An estimated 40 patients were hurriedly evacuated from their rooms when a three-alarm fire damaged a second-floor room and spread smoke into two floors of the 12-story Santa Rosa Hospital, authorities said.

No injuries were reported, and officials said patients would be returned to their rooms after the smoke was cleared.

Officials dispatched 21 firefighting units and 10 ambulances to the hospital in downtown San Antonio, fire officials said.

It took more than 80 firefighters about 20-25 minutes to bring the fire under control Thursday night, but smoke and water damage appeared extensive, officials said.

Janitors joined doctors and hospital visitors, using sheets as litters to ferry patients to the first floor and sidewalks, where the patients were laid out on mattresses or whatever could be found.

Patients wound up in corridors and on sidewalks, some moaning from pain. Many patients had IVs still inserted, and some were breathing through oxygen masks.

Patient Carmen Velasco said she had taken a sleeping pill before she was ordered to leave her room because of the fire.

"I didn't panic till I smelled smoke," she said. "Then I started to run. I had to carry my own IV unit. One of the firemen stepped on it."

Ms. Velasco wound up in a yellow plastic chair on a sidewalk outside the hospital, her IV on the sidewalk in front of her.

In his left hand he held an IV unit inserted in the wrist of a patient who had buried her head in her lap.

"I don't know her," Rodgers said looking down at the second woman, "but she was coming down the stairs and looked like she was in pain."

"It took us about 20 to 25 minutes to get the blaze under control," said Assistant Fire Chief Eugene Garza.

The blaze went to three alarms because "we were afraid we would start to have to evacuate all patients from the hospital," Garza said.

Lt. Benito DeLeon, the first firefighter to arrive, said he was led to the fire in a pantry room on the second floor by a hospital security guard.

"It was real dark and real hot. We got a house line (fire hose) and put the fire out," DeLeon said.

"I asked the nurse to get the patients out," DeLeon said. "She said they were in the process of doing that."

The fire was contained to the one room, but extensive smoke and water damage resulted, Garza said. A water pipe of copper tubing that burst from the heat contributed to the damage, fire officials said.

There were no sprinklers on the second floor, District Chief George Christiansen said.

"The only sprinklers were in the basement," Christiansen said.

The cause of the fire was not immediately determined and arson investigators were called to the scene early today.

Hospital employees said more than 40 patients and staff on the second and third floors of the 482-bed general hospital were evacuated. The entire medical center, including the Children's Hospital, was not evacuated.

Son of zoo keeper files $6 million lawsuit against city of Houston

HOUSTON (AP) — A $6 million suit alleging the city of Houston ignored safety deficiencies at the Houston zoo has been filed by the son of a zoo keeper fatally mauled by a lion.

"The city in this case was grossly negligent. The city owes this man some money, and we're going to get it," said Fred Hofheinz, attorney for Jack Tovar, 35.

On May 12, a Siberian tiger broke through a glass security window, dragged Tovar's father, 58-year-old Ricardo, into the exhibit and mauled him, crushing his chest and breaking his neck.

The elder Tovar was performing his morning duties at the zoo when the attack occurred.

Named as defendants were the city, Mayor Kathy Whitmire, Parks Department Director Donald Olson and Houston Zoo Director John Werler, as well as CRS Sirmine Inc., the firm that designed the large cat exhibit and W.J. Hessert Construction Co. Inc., which built it.

Paul Mabry, a spokesman for the mayor, said he could not comment on the lawsuit. There was no answer at CRS Sirmine offices Thursday.

Bill Hessert, chairman of Houston-based W.J. Hessert Construction Co., said he had not seen the lawsuit and could not comment.

Tovar's lawsuit claims the city and other parties were "grossly negligent" in his father's death in several respects.

After zoo employees arrived at the scene, they refused to shoot the tiger even when the animal attacked the zoo keeper again as he lay in the exhibit.

The window the tiger broke was made of thin glass that was not standard in most zoos, where specially strengthened glass or plastic commonly are used.

Tovar was required to work alone around dangerous animals because of staff shortages.

City officials, specifically Mrs. Whitmire, Olson and Werler, supported cost-cutting measures at the zoo even though the cuts were known to be imprudent and resulted in unsafe conditions.

Hofheinz, who served two terms as mayor from 1974 to 1978, said he intends to prove city officials knew of these hazards but ignored them.

Tovar said he became upset when he read published reports describing how zoo employees, one of them carrying a rifle, watched as the tiger grabbed his father by the head and lifted him after he had been dragged through the window.

"The tiger grabbed him by the neck and they didn't shoot him. They thought the tiger was more important than my father," Tovar said. Zoo employees could not have been certain Tovar was dead when they refused to shoot, he said.

As the litigation begins, city officials are continuing their reassessment of the zoo's new naturalistic cat facility, which has been plagued with design problems since its construction began in 1962.

East Texas site on 'preferred' list for agreed destruction of Pershing missiles

PUEBLO, Colo. (AP) — The U.S. Army announced Thursday that the Pueblo Depot Activity and the Longhorn Army Ammunition Plant near Marshall, Texas, are its preferred sites for destroying Pershing missiles under the INF treaty.

The Army advised the governors of both states of its choices for handling the missiles destined for deactivation under the Intermediate-range Nuclear Forces treaty ratified recently by governing bodies of the United States and the Soviet Union.

President Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev exchanged copies of the ratified treaty during a recent summit meeting in Moscow.

The Army already has received permission from the Texas Environmental Regulatory Agency to eliminate rocket motors at Longhorn.

Morton-Thiokol in Marshall won a $1.1 million first-phase contract to destroy 74 Pershing I-A and Pershing II projectiles at Longhorn, U.S. Rep. Jim Chapman, D-Sulphur Springs, said Thursday.

Assistant Secretary of the Army John Shannon has recommended that the rest of the phases, worth $6 million, be awarded to Morton-Thiokol, Chapman said.

About 800 missiles would be destroyed at Longhorn and 800 in Colorado, he said.

Soviet observers will observe the destruction of some of the missiles in Marshall as part of the INF treaty, Chapman said.

"A defense contract to bring a Soviet inspection team to East Texas certainly is a first," Chapman said.

The award to Morton-Thiokol is "part of the good news of the INF treaty, in addition to the fact that we may be one step closer to peace in the free world," Chapman said.

Colorado officials are awaiting the results of a recent test motor elimination before making a decision on the Army's request for a permit to burn motors at Pueblo, according to PDA spokeswoman Mary Wilson.

EARLY

Schedule for those students currently enrolled for Summer I classes to early register for Summer Session II is: A-E on June 13, F-L on June 14; M-R on June 15, and S-Z on June 16. Hours will be 7 a.m.-5 p.m.

Those persons not currently enrolled, but wishing to enroll for Summer II classes, will early register according to the following schedule: A-E June 20 or June 27, F-L June 21 or 28, M-R June 22 or 29, and S-Z June 23 or 30.

A similar schedule will be used for the 1968 fall semester, with students returning from the spring semester enrolling during the first week and others for the following three weeks.

"After the fall semester, we will be rotating the alphabetical system each semester in order to be as equitable as possible," Windsor noted.

He also pointed out that the official registration system in the Physical Education Building would be used for those who don't pay fees in advance as well as those who do not early register. That day for the second summer term will be July 7.

GUNS

Dave Edmondson, director of the Texas State Rifle Association, a National Rifle Association affiliate, dismissed the question of plastic hand guns as "misleading."

"We have guns with plastic parts, but current law makes it illegal to manufacture an entirely plastic gun," he said. "We don't even have the technology to invent one."

Edmondson said the fact 53 percent of those surveyed do not want an increase in gun controls shows that people are being realistic that gun controls are not the answer to our criminal problem. Criminals are not obtaining their guns through the legal, papered means. "People who do get licenses are law-abiding citizens."

In the poll, 54 percent said they or a member of their household own a gun, while 45 percent said they do not.

Fifty-one percent of the latter group supported increased gun sale restrictions, compared with 34 percent of those with a gun owner in the household.

Seventy-five percent of those in East Texas said someone in their household owns a gun, while only 43 percent of West Texans said so.

WEST TEXAS IN BRIEF

Ector County JP calls deaths 'murder-suicide'

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Ector County Peace Justice Julian Pressly says he had no official report on the result of an autopsy on a 42-year-old man found dead with his wife early Wednesday, but there's "no question in my mind it was murder-suicide," he said.

Pressly said the woman, Mariama Renteria, 35, was found on a sofa in the living room with a gunshot wound to the head.

"The gun couldn't have been a foot from where her head was on the couch...and he was on the floor with a foot of her, with the gun in his hand," he stated and noted that the couple's 13-year-old daughter had "heard them arguing and heard the shots and all that."

The Precinct 2 peace justice said, "I hate to spend tax dollars on autopsies when what happened is apparent." He said investigating officers wanted autopsies performed on both bodies, but Pressly told them he'd only order an autopsy on the man, Uriel C. Renteria, 42.

Renteria and his wife were found by police officers responding to a "shots fired" call at the 2105 W. 16th St. residence about 12:25 a.m. Wednesday.

Renteria was pronounced dead at the scene as the result of a single gunshot wound to the head. Investigating officers found a .38 caliber revolver at the scene.

Mrs. Renteria was "still breathing," according to Pressly, and was transported to Medical Center Hospital. She was treated in the emergency room, then admitted to the hospital's intensive care unit where she died about 3:15 a.m.

"I think all the evidence was there" to conclude a murder-suicide had occurred, he said. He observed, however, it sometimes takes pathologist Dr. Robert Bright as long as six weeks to make a final report on a cause of death when he does a post mortem examination.

Police seek assault suspect

From Staff Reports

Midland police are searching for a man who sexually assaulted a 30-year-old woman early today after he forced his way into her west Midland apartment.

According to preliminary reports, someone knocked on the woman's door at the Sierra Paseo Apartments, 3417 N. Midland Dr., about 1:45 a.m. A man then forced his way into the apartment, and raped the woman at least twice, reports said.

The man also threatened to kill the woman if she reported the attack.

The attacker was described as a black man, with black hair and brown eyes. He was last seen wearing black shorts, a black sleeveless T-shirt and white tennis shoes, according to reports.

Police and fire officials are also investigating what may be a case of attempted arson and burglary at a local business.

According to reports, Midland firefighters were called to Midland 66, 1612 Garden City Hwy., about 4 a.m. this morning to extinguish a fire that had apparently been started in a trash can near gasoline storage tanks.

About 45 minutes later, police received a report of a burglary at the same location. At the scene, police found a pickup truck that had been broken into. Missing was an AM-FM stereo system valued at $2,000, reports said.

According to the report, officers think the fire was started deliberately and is connected to the burglary.

MHS pupil wins scholarship

AUSTIN — Ginny L. Graham of Midland High School will receive a $1,500 Robert C. Byrd Honors Scholarship to help her through college next year.

The scholarship program, administered by the Texas Higher Education Coordinating Board, recognizes students who show promise of outstanding academic achievement in college.

Miss Graham was among 360 scholarship winners across the state. Selection was based on high school grade point average, graduating class rank and college entrance exam scores. More than 1,500 students applied for the awards.

Students who applied but did not get a scholarship will receive a certificate from the Governor's Recognition Award Program.

FAMILY MATTERS

Mother concerned about daughter's relationship

By JIM MAY

DEAR FAMILY: My daughter is home for the summer from a university and she mentioned to me that her boyfriend of the last two years has become physically violent with her several times.

She didn't seem to be especially concerned about it. I was appalled and got very upset when she told me. Of course she didn't talk about it anymore. Now I don't know what to do.

We have never had any hitting in our family other than an occasional spanking of one of the boys. I can't imagine anyone putting up with being hit.

I think there is something very wrong with someone who hits a woman. I want her to break up with this person immediately, but right now we are barely speaking.

Am I wrong? If I am, please tell me. If you think I am right, please tell me what I should do.—WORRIED

May

DEAR WORRIED: Unfortunately, physical violence in a dating relationship even in high school is becoming more common. It is wrong and should not be tolerated under any conditions, but it happens.

One study found that 12 percent of the high school students studied had experienced violence in his/her dating relationship.

Another study found that over 22 percent of the college students polled had experienced some form of courtship violence. So as many as 2-3 out of 10 college students have been involved in a violent relationship. This is about the same proportion for adults experiencing violence in marriage.

The less severe forms of violence — pushing, shoving, kicking, biting — appear to be evenly distributed among men and women. Various studies have found that between 1/4 and 1/2 of the individuals involved in a violent dating relationship felt that they were both responsible for starting the violence.

Since courtship can be viewed as a training ground for the marital relationship, we certainly don't want a relationship to begin this way. We don't want to rehearse unacceptable and inappropriate behavior.

I encourage you to discuss this subject again with your daughter. Try to express your concerns quietly, and then listen.

If possible, call the Permian Basin Center for Battered Women (683-1300) and arrange for you and your daughter to go for a visit.

The accepting response to relationship violence is a learned behavior — one we want to stop.

DEAR FAMILY: You are always talking about the "Time Out Chair" and how well it works. Well it may work for some kids but it doesn't work on my three year old. It hasn't even slowed him down. What do you do next? FAILED

DEAR FAILED: The time out approach is certainly not the end all to discipline. However, I really believe in it and have found it to be a wonderfully non-violent way to discipline most children. Let me share some of the problems that some parents have had making the system work:

■ Waiting until they are quite angry and frustrated with the child before sending the child to the chair.

■ Repeating their commands many times before sending the child to the chair.

■ Letting the child control the length of time he/she stays in the chair — for example, until the child believes he can behave.

■ Using a standard length of time in the chair no matter what the infraction.

■ Using the child's bedroom for time out.

■ Inconsistently using the Time Out chair.

Our "rules" for successful use of time out with children include always attempting to send the child to the chair with our "Mr. Rogers" voice — "I am sorry that you have chosen to disobey, please go to the time out chair until the timer goes off."

We only make one request for action and repeat it once. If the child does not respond, the child goes to the chair.

The length of time in the chair should be varied as a function of the offense. Some experts suggest using one to two minutes for each year of age of the child. I personally prefer to use the minimum amount of time that achieves your purpose. You control the amount of time that the child is to remain in the chair. I always try to avoid using the child's bedroom for time out. You have no control over what they do while they are in the room unless you constantly monitor. Ten minutes of playing in their room is hardly discipline. Further, I think that it is important for a child's room always be a positive place — a safe harbor that they like to go to for play and sleep.

Consistency is very important no matter what technique we use. The child must always believe and experience a consistent response to a given behavior. While these techniques do need to be modified for the "strong willed" or defiant child, they work in most cases.

I encourage you to try again. If it still doesn't work, please write again and be a little more specific about what is not working.

DEAR ABBY

Girl brokenhearted over dad's broken promise

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: When I was a teen-ager, I got pregnant. I didn't tell (or marry) the baby's natural father. I married my high school sweetheart when my daughter was a year old. My husband adopted her, and has been a wonderful father to her ever since.

I never kept anything from "Libby" — she has known about her natural father for years. When she turned 18, she wanted to meet him, so I reluctantly contacted him. ("Steve" is now married, a family man and very well-to-do.)

Steve was a little leery at first, but when he saw Libby, he could not deny that he was her father. They got to know each other, and Libby grew to love him very much. Steve said he wanted to make up for lost time and pay for Libby's college education, and wanted her to have his name, so he asked for her birth certificate, adoption papers, etc., which we gladly gave him.

After Libby enrolled in college, they sent Steve a bill for tuition. He called the college, denied being her father and refused to pay it!

Libby was heartbroken — not because of the money, but because he had built her hopes up, then rejected her. Steve said his wife was jealous and gave him an ultimatum — and he had to choose his wife. I have wanted to write to him and his wife and tell them what I think of them, but my better judgment prevailed. However, I want the legal papers he took and never returned. Some can be duplicated and some cannot. What should I do? — CONFUSED IN THE MIDWEST

Van Buren

DEAR CONFUSED: You should advise this poor excuse for a man that if he does not return the legal papers at once, you will turn the matter over to an attorney. Then follow through.

DEAR ABBY: Recently, I was barred from a local establishment that I've been going to for years (12). This pub has been a meeting place for myself and friends for such a long time. It has a "Cheers" atmosphere — you know, "a place to go where everybody knows your name." It hurt me when I was asked not to enter simply because a guy who entertains there is an old boyfriend. He told the manager (who is his brother) that he feels uncomfortable when I'm there. He left me 1 1/2 years ago. I never even talk to this guy, let alone hassle him. So why are 1 1/2 years is he having me barred?

I can't seem to get a straight answer and I really don't understand, but it's very embarrassing to know all my friends know I'm an "undesirable." — BARRED AND HUMILIATED

DEAR BARRED: If your presence at the pub makes your former boyfriend uncomfortable, it's HIS problem, and he's very unfair to have you barred from the establishment for that reason. However, since his brother is the manager, where the manager calls the shots — unfair as it is — there is nothing you can do about it.

DEAR ABBY: I have a brother who lives in Connecticut. For the last several years (I've lost count), this brother has called me up to remind me (as if I needed to be reminded) to send flowers to our mother for Mother's Day and put his name on the card. He always says he'll send a check — but he never does. This year, he called again to remind me to put his name on the card. I did as he asked, and so far, no check.

This tightwad has more money than I have. Any suggestions? — SOFT TOUCH IN ARIZONA

DEAR SOFT TOUCH: Drop your brother a line and tell him that you put his name on the card, and now you'd like to see it on a check. (P.S. And make it retroactive.)

DEAR ABBY: As information desk receptionists in a large medical center, our hearts go out daily to people who arrive here only to learn that their friends and loved ones are not in this hospital but in another one — sometimes miles away. (Even in smaller cities where there are only two hospitals, this happens.)

People are understandably upset when they learn that someone has been hospitalized, but they could save themselves a lot of time if they would carefully listen to the name of the hospital and if possible write it down. Then before they go there to visit, they should phone to confirm that the person is still a patient. (In many cases, the patient has already been released.)

We told our boss that there should be some way to let folks know that a simple phone call could save a lot of time and hassle, and she said, "Good idea; write to Dear Abby." So here's our letter. We hope you'll think it's worth sharing. — BIDDY STOUGH, FOR ALL RECEPTIONISTS, BAYSHORE MEDICAL CENTER, PASADENA, TEXAS

DEAR BIDDY: It is. Readers, before you head for the hospital, pick up a phone.

CONFIDENTIAL TO 'WRONG SIDE OF THE TRACKS' IN SACRAMENTO: If after all these years her parents refuse to accept you, quit trying. It would be easier to move the tracks.

What teen-agers need to know about sex, drugs, AIDS, getting along with their peers and parents is now in Abby's updated, expanded booklet, "What Every Teen Should Know." To order, send your name and address, clearly printed, plus check or money order for $3.50 ($4 in Canada) to: Dear Abby's Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. ## Two senior Midland girls receive special Girl Scout Gold Award

From Staff Reports

Pamela Beth Rhamey and Elizabeth A. Reisinger, both of Midland, recently received the Girl Scout Gold Award recognizing senior Girl Scouts for special commitment to their community. The girls were honored at a special Gold Award ceremony hosted by the Permian Basin Girl Scout Council.

The Gold Award project requires a minimum of four months of active involvement and reflects what a candidate has learned during her Scouting years.

Miss Rhamey, 16, daughter of Jean Rhamey and Don Rhamey, worked with the Permian Basin Center for Battered Women and Their Children to fulfill her requirements for the award. She attends Midland High School where she is a member of the varsity diving team, Packbackers and All-Stars. She is an outstanding German student and is listed in Who's Who Among American High School Students.

Miss Reisinger, 17, captured her award by designing a program to introduce Girl Scouting to young girls and increase parent participation in the Girl Scout program. She is the daughter of Michael and Teresa Reisinger. She attends Lee High School and participates in the Lee Honor Band, Rifle Line, German Club and National Honor Society. She was selected Outstanding Junior Science Student and received the Stan Cobb Mathematics Award.

Miss Reisinger also is listed in Who's Who Among American High School Students and is a member of St. Ann's Catholic Church.

The Gold Awards were presented by Sue Roberts, president of the PBGSC, and Susan Rutherford, executive director for the PBGSC.

If you are considering the Ericsson gender selection technique:

■ There are 55 clinics in the U.S. offering the Ericsson gender selection technique.

■ The cost varies by clinic. Most charge an initial consultation fee of $125, plus $200 to $300 for each sperm separation and insemination.

■ Only about 40% of the couples who try gender selection achieve pregnancy—and then generally only after two or three individual sperm separations and inseminations.

■ About 20% of the conceptions produce a baby the sex of which is opposite what the parents had sought.

Gender-selection method not considered scientific

By LEIGH FENLY
Copley News Service

Make love in a south wind to beget a girl, in the north wind for a boy, advised Aristotle.

Today, sex-selection techniques often sound just as silly. They range from high-salt diets to vinegar douches to claims that the timing of conception is all-important.

But now interest appears to be growing for a prenatal gender-selection technique being sold worldwide by its developer, Wyoming's Dr. Ronald Ericsson.

Fifty-five clinics in the United States now offer Ericsson's sperm-separation techniques for boy babies, including 18 new centers that opened last year.

Ericsson, who holds a doctoral degree in reproductive physiology, founded Gametrics Ltd. in 1974 to capitalize on his patented method of tilting the odds in favor of male conception. But physician acceptance has lagged.

"Sex selection," Ericsson said, "has been viewed a little like snake oil being sold from the back of a pickup truck."

MANY RESEARCHERS are put off by the commercialism surrounding the Ericsson method, as well as the lack of controlled scientific studies.

"I'm personally just not convinced" that it works, explained Dr. Sandra Carson, a fertility investigator at the University of Tennessee College of Medicine.

Neither the American Fertility Society nor the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists endorses as reliable any gender-selection method.

Nonetheless, in the last two years, interest in the Ericsson technique has grown. Gametrics programs have been started at New York City's Bellevue Hospital, Chicago's Rush-Presbyterian-St. Luke's Medical Center and the University of Minnesota Medical School. Some former skeptics have converted, including Dr. Ronald K. Burke, a reproductive endocrinologist at the University of Massachusetts Medical School, who did a recent about-face and became licensed to operate a Gametrics Center.

"I think there is now a place for gender preselection. I think that concern about the scientific validity is beginning to fall by the wayside. A large number of very respected individuals have now accumulated a significant number of total births," Burke said.

ERICSSON'S TECHNIQUE uses a swim race to separate sperm-bearing Y-chromosomes (boy-makers) from those with X-chromosomes (girl-makers).

Y-containing sperm swim slightly faster under certain conditions than the X's. If sperm from a semen sample, placed in a test tube, are required to swim down through a dense liquid protein, the Y's are likely to beat the X's to the bottom. The mother-to-be is then inseminated with Y-rich semen, and voila — about a 75 percent chance it will be a boy. Ericsson says that of 248 hoped-for boys at his clinics in the last decade, 186 actually were boys.

For girls, Ericsson is testing the effect of the fertility drug Clomid, which appears to favor girls. Of 15 women treated with Clomid — a drug used to aid ovulation in women who don't ovulate — 12 gave birth to girls. Critics, however, are not sure whether it's the Clomid or another factor that's responsible.

Another method for conceiving girls is a variation on the sperm race. This time, sperm are filtered through a starch gel, which allows the X's to reach the bottom first. According to Ericsson, the chances of successfully selecting a female with either method is about 65 to 70 percent.

But success is not the only question asked in gender selection — ethics is also a concern among those who argue that sex should be determined by fate. The American Fertility Society noted in a recent report on new reproductive technologies that artificial insemination, required in the Ericsson method, "may make reproduction excessively technologically by separating procreation from sexual expression."

Dr. John Fletcher, professor of biomedical ethics at the University of Virginia, argues that gender selection violates the principle of male-female equality. "Imagine," he wrote in a recent editorial, "explaining to your 'selected' child why he or she ought to be fair to the opposite sex. Feel hypocritical?"

BUT ERICSSON counters that as many couples want girls as boys and that the technique is unlikely to alter the sex balance of the population. In most cases, he said, parents opt for the procedure because they have children of one sex and want one child of the other.

"Fifty-two percent of couples want a girl. That's hardly in danger of upsetting the balance of nature," Ericsson said.

Some Gametrics clinics ask couples to sign a contract stating that they will not abort if the sex desired is not produced by the selection procedure. Some will not allow sex selection to be used in the case of the firstborn child.

Ericsson further argues that the technique aids in family planning: "Many children are the result of parents seeking a child of one sex. To eliminate unwanted children would be effective family planning and, in part, sex selection serves this end. It should be the right of a couple to have a sex-selected child."

Sex selection gets the least argument when applied in cases of genetic disease. At least 200 sex-linked genetic diseases have been identified. In the United States alone these are responsible for several thousand deaths of newborn babies every year.

The technique could be valuable in such cases. For example, a couple, in which one spouse had a family history of hemophilia might opt to have only female children because women, while they may be carriers of the gene, are not usually afflicted. Males are far more likely to be afflicted with sex-linked genetic disease than females.

Researchers want answers to birth defects

By Sheila S. Moramarco
Copley News Service

Every year between 2.5 percent and 5 percent of American babies are born with abnormalities that range from minor to major. That's some 250,000 infants a year.

"We can account for approximately 40 percent of these cases," says Kenneth Lyons Jones, M.D., of the University of California at San Diego School of Medicine.

"Fifteen percent are due to chromosomal defects, 15 percent to genetic defects and 10 percent to known teratogens (substances that cause malformations in developing fetuses), such as chemicals, environmental agents and viruses. That leaves 60 percent with no known cause."

Increasingly, parents of that remaining 60 percent are asking why. They want to know whether their babies' birth defects are what we used to call "acts of God." Or, were there real, possibly preventable causes, such as toxic dumps, tainted drinking water or pollutants in the air we breathe and the food we eat?

THEY THINK about places such as Love Canal, Shiprock and Woburn, all scenes of clusters (unexpectedly high concentrations of birth defects), and want to know more. Most significantly they ask whether babies born today have an increased risk of developing congenital abnormalities.

"It would be hard to find a teratologist (a specialist in the causes of birth abnormalities) who is convinced that there has been an increase in birth defects from any cause over the last five to 10 years," said Jones.

"These reports, while alarming, must be balanced with the facts of improved reporting and detection. Not long ago, a baby with an abnormality such as a congenital heart defect usually died of infection or secondary complications before the problem was ever spotted. But today, a malformation such as this is diagnosed shortly after birth and reported as a birth-defect statistic."

Jones is director of the California Teratogen Registry, which collects and disseminates any information about suspected causes of birth defects. Each month the registry receives about 1,000 calls from pregnant women frightened by reports of a dramatic increase in the incidence of such problems.

Is there cause for their alarm? The Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta reports "very little change in the overall rate of birth defects." However, it acknowledges that fluctuations do occur within many categories.

According to the CDC, the frequency of the 33 major defects has been increasing more than 2 percent a year, and the incidence of two defects (ventricular septal defect — a hole between the heart's chambers — and congenital hip deformities) has risen 11 percent.

On the other hand, seven other major birth defects have declined by at least 2 percent annually.

"No teratogen is implicated in generating any of these trends," says the CDC's Lee James. "But the story is different for each type of birth defect. Since our resources for investigation are limited, we can't rule out a real increase in birth-defect trends."

But official explanations aren't being bought by some parents, especially those living in places such as Love Canal, Shiprock and Woburn. They are convinced that the rate is escalating and that not enough is being done to pinpoint possible new teratogens and to give parents the information they need. They are demanding more studies, medical help and counseling.

Nevertheless, we do know enough to inform women of certain steps they can take to minimize the risks:

Prior to conception, abstain from alcohol, smoking and non-essential medications.

Once pregnant, check with your obstetrician before taking any medication. Even harmless drugs may be dangerous when they interact with others.

Avoid cleaning with products containing hydrocarbons and using pesticides and aerosol paints and sprays. Use standard detergents on dishes and floors.

If you're concerned about possible exposure to a teratogen, contact one of the six teratogen registries. They are located at the University of Vermont, Burlington; the University of Texas, Houston; the University of Utah, Salt Lake City; Southwestern Medical School, Dallas; Tufts New England Medical Center, Boston and the University of California at San Diego School of Medicine. Your own physician and the birth-defects branch of the CDC in Atlanta can also help.

"Women must be educated consumers when it comes to influencing pregnancy outcome," says obstetrician Martin Pernoll, M.D. "But we should take heart of pregnancy as early as the sixth or eighth week, and to visualize the position, development and condition of the fetus."

Determining the age of the fetus is often important in evaluating the extent of development and essential if a Cesarean section is required.

After about the 20th week of pregnancy, ultrasound can detect gross physical abnormalities that occur in more than three of every 100 births in this country. In high-risk pregnancies, with the assistance of ultrasound, physicians can be especially watchful of the mother's condition and fetal development and growth.

Like other radiation devices, diagnostic ultrasound equipment comes under the purview of the National Center for Devices and Radiological Health of the Food and Drug Administration. The FDA estimates that 97 percent of the hospitals in the United States with more than 300 beds have ultrasound facilities for gestational dating (determining the stage of pregnancy) and for fetal visualization.

The total ultrasound obstetric examinations performed annually is estimated at 1.4 million. Roughly one-third of the women who become pregnant each year receive at least one — and likely more than one — ultrasound examination.

The FDA acknowledges that ultrasound has been used for some years with no obvious detrimental effects.

Panelists at a meeting on obstetric ultrasound, convened by the March of Dimes, concluded that the technique has no obvious short-term effects on the fetus.

"So far," said the participants, "there are apparently not even anecdotal reports of harmful effects in children exposed to ultrasound in utero. Preliminary results from a study in Canada are equally reassuring."

Since 1975 researchers at the University of Manitoba have compared the health of 10,000 children who received prenatal diagnostic ultrasound with control groups not exposed to ultrasound, and have found no differences in the number of birth defects.

A sensible approach for physicians and their pregnant patients is to assume that the benefits of a needed diagnostic ultrasound examination are likely to far outweigh the possible risks. But it's too early to assume that ultrasound should be used routinely on all pregnant women.

Pregnancy, abortion rates high in U.S.

NEW YORK (AP) — U.S. women have higher rates of unplanned pregnancies and abortions than women in many other industrialized countries, according to a study.

The study by the Alan Guttmacher Institute, a New York-based organization that examines fertility issues, also found that U.S. women relied more on abortion and less on contraception to limit births than women in most other Western nations.

U.S. women of reproductive age averaged 2.56 pregnancies and 0.76 abortions, according to the study. Only Greece and Ireland showed higher pregnancy rates, at 4.33 and 3.23, respectively, among the nations studied.

Greece also had a higher abortion rate, 2.24, as did Italy, 0.80. The study, of all countries in Western Europe plus Australia, New Zealand, Canada and the United States, appears in the current issue of the Institute's Family Planning Perspectives.

The lowest pregnancy rates were in West Germany, with 1.64, and the Netherlands, with 1.68. The lowest abortion rates were in Ireland, with 0.15, and the Netherlands, with 0.18.

Abortion is outlawed in Ireland and Belgium, although abortions are still relatively easy to obtain in Belgium, the researchers said.

The study found that 51.2 percent of pregnancies in the United States in 1983 were unplanned, compared with 31.8 percent in Great Britain and 17 percent in the Netherlands.

Many contraceptives used in Europe and elsewhere are not approved for use in the United States, said Dr. Jacqueline D. Forrest, vice president for research of the institute. The more contraceptive choices available, the more likely a woman will find one that she will use consistently, she said.

In addition, the study found that U.S. women are less likely to use birth control pills or intrauterine devices than women in other developed countries, Ms. Forrest said. These are the most effective forms of birth control.

'China Beach' first television show to portray U.S. women in Vietnam

By GEORGE ESPER
AP Special Correspondent

BOSTON — As a 22-year-old Army nurse, Jacque Navarra Rhoads tended the casualties of war amid the monsoons, mud and gunfire of Vietnam, seeing both death and the enemy face-to-face.

Though she defied the odds to save the wounded and held the hands of the dying who clung to her, alone and frightened, no trumpets sounded for her or the 10,000 other women who served in Vietnam, eight of whom gave their lives.

"I just don't think people really understand what we did there," said Mrs. Rhoads, 39.

Of the dozens of Vietnam movies and television shows, none was about women until this spring, when ABC launched "China Beach," a Vietnam War series centered on combat nurse Colleen McMurphy, played by Dana Delany, and four other women with representative roles in the war.

The final episode of the season airs tonight. The show has been renewed for the fall after a seven-week run that brought good ratings and critical praise.

Mrs. Rhoads, who co-edited the book, "Nurses in Vietnam: The Forgotten Veterans," believes the show is realistic.

Scenes in which McMurphy's hootch is blown up and she has to care for a Viet Cong woman who killed an American soldier with a grenade bring back all too familiar memories.

"I feel what that nurse was doing was what I was doing. That was me," she said.

But some female veterans complain the show stereotypes women in Vietnam as prostitutes, bimbos and manhunters, among other things. At the same time, they do agree it has redeeming value in making mass audiences aware that women served in Vietnam.

Peggy Perri, 42, a Vietnam combat nurse who now works for the William Joiner Center for the Study of War and Social Consequences at the University of Massachusetts-Boston, finds the show demeaning.

Ms. Perri was one of 75 women who signed a recent petition protesting the way China Beach portrays women. The petition, circulated at the second National Conference on Women and the Military held at the Joiner Center, was sent to ABC.

"I feel insulted," Ms. Perri said, objecting in particular to a scene in which McMurphy dons a sequined miniskirt and joins singer Laurette Barber, played by Chloe Webb, on-stage at a USO club. Another sore spot for Ms. Perri and other veterans is the character of K.C., a prostitute. Ms. Perri was unable to talk about her experiences in Vietnam until three years ago, even though she had left 20 years ago.

"I was unable to deal with the stereotypes that people had about women who were in Vietnam," she said. "This show validates those stereotypes. The thing that is unrealistic is all this emphasis, these women characters as sexual beings."

Cherie Rankin, a 41-year-old Norwood, Mass., social worker who was with the American Red Cross in Vietnam, says her counterpart in "China Beach" is so naive she never seems able to understand what is going on. "I remember," Ms. Rankin said, "being overwhelmed by the numbers of men and what was happening to them, the deaths and injuries, the thousand-yard stares, the guys who after a short period of time looked like there was nobody at home when you looked into their eyes. They were very old men in young bodies."

Tired of having to smile and be friendly on the job, tired of being gawked at, she isolated herself in her hootch in the few off-duty hours she had.

"It's not a documentary, so we will from time to time bend things to fit dramatic purpose," said William Broyles Jr., co-creator of the show and himself a Vietnam veteran. Broyles said female vets serve as consultants on the show and the producers have gone to great pains to make the characters, costumes and stories realistic.

But was the Vietnam War itself real, given the contradictions and the contrasts? Where else could you have a front row seat to the drama of war, sitting on rooftop terraces, sipping scotch and water, watching flares light up the night skies and listening to the rumble of bombs and the rat-a-tat of machine-gun fire?

"I never had a sexual relationship over there," Rhoads writes in her book. "Dating, well, you'd walk around bunkers and talk about home...You'd bring a bottle of wine and he'd bring the glasses...You'd sit and watch the B52s bomb across the DMZ...The sky would light up in different colors and you'd sit and watch the fireworks...It sounds strange, watching somebody's village get blown up. We didn't want to think about the lives being lost."

George Esper covered the Vietnam War for The Associated Press for 10 years.

Science fiction film shorts out Tony Awards

NEW YORK (AP) — It's been a boffo year for Broadway ticket sales, but television viewers were apparently unimpressed, giving the annual Tony Awards show its lowest TV rating yet, according to the A.C. Nielsen Co.

NBC put "Short Circuit," a sci-fi comedy movie, opposite Sunday night's two-hour live Tonys show and racked up a top-10 performance. The Tonys ranked 42nd.

Last year, the Tonys had a rating of 11.9 and a 23 share, barely above the 1977 all-time-low of 11.3. But this year's show had only a 9.5 rating and a 17 share.

The rating is a percentage of the nation's estimated 88.6 million households with televisions. The share is a percentage of sets in use.

Other first-run specials also failed to draw big ratings even though viewers had little original programming to choose from.

The only other non-repeat in the top 20, except for "60 Minutes," was the National Basketball Association playoff game between Boston and Detroit on CBS. It tied for 20th. The Los Angeles-Dallas game tied for 36th.

CBS also had the American Film Institute salute to Jack Lemmon, with a 10.5 rating and 19 share. It ranked 31st. "Liza Minnelli: A Triple Play" on ABC ranked 44th with a rating of 9.2 and a 16 share.

NBC, which had the top seven shows, won the week that ended Sunday with a 12.9 average rating; CBS rated 9.8; ABC 9.3. The three-network share was only 59, compared with the season-to-date average of 70, typical of the summer months. NBC's season-to-date average rating is 15.7, ABC 13.2, and CBS 13.1.

In news, ABC's "World News Tonight" extended its winning streak to six weeks. Its average rating last week was 9.2 and earned a 20 share. The "CBS Evening News" remained in second, at 8.5 and 19. "NBC Nightly News," which has trailed since the fall, had 8.3 and 18.

The week's top 10 prime-time shows were: "Night Court," "The Cosby Show," "Cheers," "A Different World," "Short Circuit," "L.A. Law," and "Stranded," all on NBC, followed by "Who's the Boss?" ABC, "The High Price of Passion" NBC and "Perfect Strangers Special," ABC.

Jack Tanner candidate 'For Real' television

By JERRY BUCK
AP Television Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Going into the California primary, the Democratic presidential candidates still running include Gov. Michael Dukakis, Jesse Jackson and Jack Tanner.

Murphy

Jack who? You remember Jack Tanner, that up-and-coming dark horse, the former congressman. The baby boomer candidate whose slogan is "For Real."

You won't find Tanner on the ballot, but he's listed in newspaper television schedules: Tanner is running only on Home Box Office.

Michael Murphy stars in "Tanner '88," an HBO series filmed on the campaign trail and occasionally mixing fiction with reality. It is a collaboration between "Doonesbury" cartoonist Garry Trudeau, who is writing it, and director Robert Altman ("M*A*S*H," "Nashville").

A new episode has premiered once a month since the series made its debut the eve of the New Hampshire primary. HBO recently ran all five episodes in a Tanner marathon.

The first of two episodes shot in California ran on HBO Monday, the day before the California primary.

A post-California primary show will premiere Monday, June 20.

The first California show included a candidates debate, moderated by Ellerbee. Footage was taken from an earlier real-life debate, and the other candidates cut out and Tanner edited in.

"You see me getting ready for it," said Murphy, who plays the attractive if somewhat hapless candidate. "You see me talking to two people sitting on stage. The way they cut the tape together it looks like the real thing. Then Linda Ellerbee comes backstage and we play a scene together. It's so unbelievably well-shot that it appears realistic."

Tanner, who is divorced, has a girlfriend who had been a secret until it was discovered that she worked for the Dukakis campaign.

"We do get found out in California, so as the second episode ends the press is madly on my tail because they think a scandal is about to break," he said. "I keep defending myself. I say I'm not Gary Hart. I don't want to be compared with him. I say I'm going to marry the girl. A wedding is planned but it looks like it might fall through."

Murphy talked by telephone from Maine, where he had gone for a few weeks' rest after filming the California episodes.

"We film two weeks and then take two weeks off," he said, "so it's not as brutal as working every day. It's set up very much like a real campaign. We have advance men who go in and set things up. Garry writes the scripts, although we do adapt things as we see them. It's like found art."

Murphy describes Tanner as "an idealistic, decent person who's a kind of amiable goofus." He said, "He's gotten stronger. He's taken lessons from the same people who worked with Dole and Babbitt. The one thing I safeguard is to see that Tanner stays a decent guy."

"The drift of the show is that you see a guy being pushed and pulled by his people and the media and other politicians. And how he reacts to it."

He called it a "dream job" with "absolutely no interference from anyone."

Altman said on a recent visit to New York that he would like Tanner to keep running even after the Democratic convention by becoming an independent candidate.

A two-hour movie based on the life of Liberace is planned for CBS. The script was written by Gavin Lambert, who also wrote "Second Serve," the story of transsexual tennis star Renee Richards. The movie is scheduled to go into production next month, but casting for the title role has not yet been announced.

Aaron Spelling's first TV movie for CBS will tell the true story of the events of the first atomic bomb dropped on Hiroshima in World War II. David Rintels has written a screenplay based on the book "Day One" by Peter Wyden. Joseph Sargent will direct.

Singer recalls first meeting with Cole Porter

By MICHAEL KUCHWARA
AP Drama Writer

NEW YORK — When Patricia Morison first met Cole Porter in 1947, she sang a Rodgers and Hammerstein song for him. "I thought it was safer," she says with a laugh. Porter must have liked what he heard from the young actress who at the time was not known as a singer.

"He gave me the score for something called 'Kiss Me, Kate' and told me to learn it," Miss Morison recalls. "He was having a difficult time raising the money for the show. It took over a year."

The wait was worth it. "Kiss Me, Kate" turned out to be Porter's biggest musical success and gave Miss Morison the opportunity to play the temperamental Lili Vanessi and sing such songs as "Wonderbar" and "So in Love."

Forty years later, she will sing those songs again in New York at "A Cabaret for Cole," one of the opening attractions of the First New York International Festival of the Arts. The one-night concert will be held Sunday at Town Hall.

"Broadway has always been my first love," says Miss Morison who now lives in California. "You never lose that once you've tasted it."

One of the women who turned down a role in "Kiss Me, Kate" will also be on hand for the Sunday songfest. Mary Martin will sing another Porter song, "My Heart Belongs to Daddy" from "Leave It to Me," a number she first sang on Broadway 50 years ago. The show was Miss Martin's Broadway debut and the song, a coy striptease number, made her a star.

These two legendary women are not the only attractions at "A Cabaret for Cole." The other singers doing the songs of Cole Porter also have impeccable credentials. They include Karen Akers, Kaye Ballard, Barbara Cook, Michael Feinstein, Hildegarde, Sylvia Syms, Margaret Whiting and Julie Wilson.

The concert is a benefit for the Mabel Mercer Foundation which was founded after Miss Mercer's death in 1984 to widen the audience for cabaret. The singer was generally considered to be the supreme cabaret artist, known for her ability to interpret a song's emotional sense.

From the late 1930s until the late 1970s, she sang in several New York nightclubs including Le Ruban Bleu and Tony's, as well as at the St. Regis Hotel.

Porter was a great friend of Miss Mercer. He thought her rendition of "Just One of Those Things" was the best version ever done.

For Miss Morison, the chance to appear in "Kiss Me, Kate" 40 years ago was a dream come true. To do it, she needed to get out of a commitment to appear in what was a new line of work for actors in 1947 — a TV series.

"I think it was called 'The Cases of Eddie Drake,'" Miss Morison says. "I played a lady psychiatrist to whom the detective came and told his stories, lying on the couch."

Miss Morison did get to New York after the producer shot all her 13 segments on the television show in a quick two-week period and she agreed to publicize the series.

Regional group moves from station wagon to center stage

By ALJEAN HARMETZ
New York Times News Service

COSTA MESA, Calif. — A theater company that gave its first performances from the back of a Studebaker station wagon in 1964 is now recognized as one of the top dozen regional theaters in the country.

South Coast Repertory, which is to receive this year's Tony Award for excellence in regional theater Sunday night, has made its reputation as a haven for new plays and playwrights.

World premieres staged at the rep include Beth Henley's "Debutante Ball," Keith Reddin's "Life and Limb" and "Rum and Coke," Craig Lucas' "Blue Window" and "Three Postcards," and Romulus Linney's "April Snow." The theater even built a special office for playwrights.

The cigar box in which the first ticket money was collected has been replaced by a computerized box of office, and the annual budget is now $4.7 million.

But the South Coast Repertory still has the same two artistic directors who started Orange County's first professional theater 24 years ago — down the road from Disneyland amid the orange groves of southern California.

"It's a left brain-right brain sort of thing," Martin Benson said recently, explaining how he and David Emmes had managed to weather the quarter of a century. "David is logical and organized. If I'd been alone, we'd be doing theater in a warehouse."

Benson, a 51-year-old widower, was wearing blue jeans and tennis shoes, a rumpled blue jacket, shaggy bangs and a tangled beard.

Emmes, 49, sported an impeccably trimmed beard and mustache, and wore a necktie. He sat up straight. Benson slouched.

"More than anything, what kept us together is that we have similar critical taste but we haven't been attracted to directing the same plays," Emmes said. "If I'd been alone we might not have a theater. Martin's skills with people helped us through the dark days."

"We have a line item in our budget for supporting playwrights, and it's as important to us as paying the phone bill. We commission four or five writers a year and give them $6,000 to $10,000 apiece. Sad to say, those are high commissions."

— David Emmes, artistic director

"We put our money where our mouth is," Emmes continued. "We try to support writers to keep them writing for the theater. If they get lured off to Hollywood, they may never come back. We have a line item in our budget for supporting playwrights, and it's as important to us as paying the phone bill. We commission four or five writers a year and give them $6,000 to $10,000 apiece. Sad to say, those are high commissions."

South Coast Repertory draws most of its audience from Orange County. Los Angeles is up the freeway one hour north. San Diego is an hour and a half south.

Emmes, who describes his philosophy as "artistically liberal but fiscally conservative," grew up in Orange County. He shrewdly decided to create the county's first professional theater about the time the California Angels began to think about moving there.

Both theater and professional baseball were indications that the population of sleepy and conservative Orange County was going to explode.

Now, the University of California's Irvine campus is nearby, and 2.3 million people live within 15 miles of the rep. And now San Diego is the more conservative county of the two, according to Emmes.

dime store to an elegant new building on donated land across from the huge South Coast Plaza shopping mall in 1978.

Among southern California's best-known resident theaters, Jack O'Brien's Old Globe in San Diego stresses Shakespeare and more mainstream modern plays; Gordon Davidson's Mark Taper in Los Angeles is a forum for social and political ideas, and Des McAnuff's La Jolla Playhouse reflects the eclectic choices of such directors as Peter Sellars and Robert Woodruff. Both the Old Globe and the Mark Taper have won the regional Tony.

On the stage of South Coast Rep's smaller theater, a man sits in front of a garage filled with junk and stares out at a 40-acre pet cemetery. Thomas Strellich's "Dog Logic" has been called eccentrically funny by critics.

"After a while I sort of drifted away from Jesus and got into real estate," one character says. "It's a little premature to start acting superior to a species because they're extinct and you're not — yet," says another. "Dog Logic" has also been deemed rough and not quite focused.

"Strellich has tremendous talent, but he's brand new to it," Benson said. "He has only written three plays. He didn't read Sam Shepard until recently and was flummoxed to find Shepard dealing with his desert experience. Yet he's good enough already to make a lot of money in Hollywood."

The current production on the rep's larger stage is Sheridan's "School for Scandal," made contemporary by use of such props as copies of People magazine and the National Enquirer.

However, the main stage season also includes the world premiere of

Craig Lucas' "Prelude to a Kiss" and the American premiere of Louise Page's "Golden Girls."

"We've always been a theater of literature," Benson said. "Shaw, Synge, Wilde and new playwrights."

Group seeks recognition for first battle site of Mexican War

BROWNSVILLE, Texas (AP)—Near the site where in 1846 the first major battle of the Mexican-American War took place, a real estate company's sign reads: "Own a piece of historic Palo Alto battle field. Soon to be subdivided."

That is a worst-case scenario for a group of people in the Brownsville area who think the Battle of Palo Alto and the Mexican-American war for too long have been ignored or given short shrift in American history books.

"We feel like enough time has gone by now, and enough dust has settled, and we feel like its time to give it the proper commemoration it deserves," said Walter Plitt III.

Plitt is working with others to preserve the Palo Alto battlefield as a park before the developers' bulldozers move in.

The Mexican-American War resulted in the defeat of Mexico in 1848 and the signing of the Treaty of Guadalupe-Hidalgo, in which Mexico lost territory that became New Mexico, Arizona, California, Nevada, Colorado and Utah, and the disputed Texas border was firmly established at the Rio Grande instead of farther north. Plitt said the Civil War, which began in 1861, overshadowed the Mexican-American War in the historical record.

The Mexican-American War, known in Mexico as the "American Intervention," is still a sore point with many Mexicans, and a rallying point for Mexican politicians. "It is not a source of pride for either country," said Andres Cuellar, a Matamoros, Mexico, resident and former president of the Society of History, Geography and Statistics of the State of Tamaulipas.

Cuellar and other historians in Matamoros, however, support the idea of commemorating the battle site, because it represents a significant piece of Mexican history.

"We were completely defeated," Cuellar said.

A historical marker and a cannon were at the intersection of Paredes Line Road and Farm Road 511 near the Port of Brownsville for years before Congress recognized the Palo Alto Battlefield as a National Historic Site in 1978. But they have remained on private property and overgrown with brush behind a barbed-wire fence.

As part of an effort to elevate the site's status, the Brownsville Kiwanis Club obtained the right to move the fence behind the markers, giving access to the public, and have begun renovating the corner.

Plans include landscaping with native plants, paving, lighting, an educational historic display, and poles for the flags of the United States, Mexico and Texas.

"It's very possible that a large part of the United States would be part of Mexico, or a separate country would have developed" had the Mexican-American War not taken place, said Henry Krause, a member of the Cameron County Historical Commission and special advisor to the project.

"It did change the history of the United States, and possibly the history of the world," Krause said. "Can you imagine the United States becoming the power it became without that territory?"

Krause, Plitt and others said their goal is for the state or federal government, or both, to purchase the land and establish a park.

"We would like to see it marked off very much like the Gettysburg battlefield of the Yorktown battlefield," Krause said.

About 6,000 acres are needed to preserve the battle area, Plitt said, as possibly a combination of national park, state park and wildlife refuge.

He said he thinks the name Palo Alto means "place where the trees stop," while some others say it means "tall tree."

"There aren't any tall trees around here," Plitt said. Victory at the four-hour Palo Alto Battle on May 8, 1846, brought fame to Gen. Zachary Taylor, who later became U.S. president.

Another future president, Ulysses S. Grant, also gained military experience at Palo Alto.

Defeated Mexican Gen. Mariano Arista eventually regained his reputation enough to become president of the Republic of Mexico.

Another Mexican defeat took place at Resaca de la Palma, also near Brownsville, shortly after Palo Alto, followed by a full-fledged invasion of Mexico that forced the Mexican government to negotiate for peace.

Lakers even series with 108-96 victory

By BILL BARNARD

INGLEWOOD, Calif. (AP) — The Los Angeles Lakers took a page from the Detroit Pistons' defensive handbook Thursday night and avoided being written off in the NBA Championship Series.

"Everybody got closer to their man," Magic Johnson said after the defending champion Lakers' 108-96 victory that evened the best-of-seven series 1-1. "We doubled and rotated. We didn't let Vinnie (Johnson) and A.D. (Adrian Dantley) get into their rhythm like they did in the first game."

"We were a lot more active on the defensive end," Lakers coach Pat Riley said. "The team is mystifying to me. Even after being together all these years, it seems they really have to be humbled to be at their best."

The Pistons, who held opponents under 100 points in 11 of their previous 13 games, including Game 1, had a chance to become the first team to win the first two games of the finals on the road. But they couldn't overcome 32.5 percent shooting in the first half.

"They were aggressive all night on defense," Pistons coach Chuck Daly said. "They knew they had to do it. They were so active. We were one step slow and did not make our open shots."

"They did what they had to do to win and that was the bottom line," Pistons center Bill Laimbeer said.

"We shot horrendously in the first half and we weren't as aggressive," James Worthy scored 26 points for the Lakers, including two key rebound baskets during a decisive 11-2 spurt in the fourth quarter.

The Pistons, who upset the Lakers with a first-half blitz in Game 1, rallied from a 12-point deficit in the third quarter to tie it 80-80 early in the fourth period.

After two free throws by Johnson, Worthy sandwiched a rebound basket and a tip-in around a dunk by Detroit's John Salley, giving the Lakers an 86-82 lead with 6:17 left. Worthy, who grabbed 10 rebounds, later made it 91-82 with a layup.

Dennis Rodman, who scored 10 of his 12 points in the fourth quarter, led a rally that got no closer than three points.

Byron Scott added 24 points for the Lakers, while Johnson, who missed practice with the flu on Wednesday, had 23 points and 11 assists and Kareem Abdul-Jabbar had 15 points for Los Angeles. Dantley, who scored 34 points in the opener, led Detroit with 19.

With the victory, the Lakers rekindled their hopes of becoming the first team to repeat as NBA champions since the Boston Celtics won consecutive titles in 1968-69.

But they must win at least one of the next three games at the Pontiac Silverdome to force a sixth game at the Forum. Games 3, 4 and 5 are scheduled for Sunday, Tuesday night and Thursday night.

Los Angeles handed the Pistons only their second defeat in their last seven road games. Detroit won twice at Chicago, defeated the Celtics in two of three games at Boston Garden and upset the Lakers 105-93 in Game 1 of the finals at the Forum.

A defeat Thursday would have made the Lakers the first team ever to lose the first two games of the championship series at home.

Los Angeles held the Pistons to 13 field goals in 40 attempts, 32.5 percent, and took a 49-39 halftime lead.

The Pistons, who led by 17 at half-time of Game 1, closed the gap to 58-55 with 7:32 left in the third period on consecutive baskets by Rick Mahorn and Joe Dumars.

The Lakers quickly built the margin to 12 with a 17-8 spurt during which Scott had six points, including a steal and dunk that made it 75-63 with 1:22 remaining in the quarter.

Three straight baskets by Detroit cut into the deficit again before the Lakers took a 76-69 advantage into the final 12 minutes.

Mahorn, who started the first game but played only 10 minutes because of a lower back strain, scored six points as the Pistons started the fourth period with an 11-4 run, tying the score 80-80 with 8:26 left.

3-day WT swim meet goes off high board

From Staff Reports

Several national class swimmers will be in town starting today for the 41st annual West Texas Invitational Swim Meet at Doug Russell Pool.

The meet begins with diving competition at 6 p.m. today. Swim competition will begin at 9 a.m. both Saturday and Sunday.

The Dad's Club of northwest Houston should be the favorite, COM coach Brad Swendig said. The Dad's Club includes Texas A&M swimmers Ginger Hurley and Craig Wakefield, along with former Stanford star Ricky Bodor and SMU standout Hector Narvaez.

"You basically have to look at the experience of their team," Swendig said. "We have some kids with some national experience, but they have kids with extensive experience."

"We have real high-quality kids in the senior division, but without the depth that they have. In relays, our kids will up against the best they've ever seen."

COM expects to fight with the El Paso Aqua Posse for second place. Other teams entered include the El Paso Water Ranch, and First Colony and ATEX from the Houston area. Odessa, Pecos, Plainview, Lubbock and Abilene will also have representatives at the meet.

Texas A&M swimmers Alan Reed and Mike Koen will compete for COM, along with high school All-American backstroke Michaela Hasek; junior national qualifier Matt Seay in the breaststroke; Matt Houston, who is among the top 16 in several freestyle and butterfly races for the 13-14 age group; and Robin Hill, who leads the state in the 50 and 100 yard freestyle races.

The West Texas Invitational has again been billed as one of the best meets in Texas. Swimmers from past meets have gone on to set American, World and Olympic records. Competitors from the 1987 meet won several state titles and achieved several national rankings.

Oakland tailspin reaches 5

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — Steve Buechele hit a two-run homer in the eighth inning Thursday night as unbeaten Jeff Russell and the Texas Rangers defeated Oakland 5-2, the Athletics' fifth straight loss.

The losing streak is the longest of the season for the American League West-leading Athletics.

Russell, 5-0, gave up one earned run on six hits in first complete game for Texas. He struck out four and walked two. Storm Davis, 5-3, lost for the first time in 11 career decisions against the Rangers.

With two outs in the Texas eighth, Geno Petralli walked and Buechele followed with his ninth home run. Curtis Wilkerson then doubled and scored on Scott Fletcher's single.

Jose Canseco hit a 457-foot home run in the Oakland first. He tied Montreal's Andres Galarraga for the major league lead with the longest homer at Arlington Stadium in the two years the Rangers have used a computerized system to measure home runs.

Ruben Sierra hit a two-run homer in the Texas first.

CLEVELAND — Pinch hitter Luis Salazar singled home the tiebreaking run, sparking a four-run ninth inning that led the Detroit Tigers.

Diablos batter Angels

From Staff Reports

EL PASO — Gary Sheffield, Joe Mitchell and Roy Anderson all homered to help the El Paso Diablos take a 10-3 Texas League victory over the Midland Angels.

Run-scoring singles by Joe Mitchell, Matias Carrillo and Mario Monico gave El Paso a 3-1 lead in the second inning.

Sheffield's homer in the third inning extended the lead to 4-1.

Mitchell had a three-run homer in the seventh inning when the Diablos scored four runs and Anderson had a solo homer in the eighth inning.

Jeff Manto had a two-run double for Midland to move his RBI total to 51.

The winning pitcher was Dan Scarpetta.

Chad Kreuter walked with the bases loaded in the 11th inning to give the Tulsa Drillers the game-winning run in a 3-2 victory over the Arkansas Travelers.

In other Texas League action, Jackson defeated Shreveport, 3-1. Wichita beat San Antonio, 5-2.

Arkansas tied the game in the bottom of the ninth after relief pitcher Rick Raether hit Mike Hocutt to force in a run and then gave up a walk to Jim Puzey.

Tulsa's other runs came in the first inning on an RBI single by Jose Vargas and a home run by Mike Scanlin in the sixth inning.

Steve Lankard, 4-0, was the winning pitcher. Jeff Fassero, 3-1, was the loser.

Angelo Cuevas had a two-run double to power the Jackson Mets to a 3-1 victory over the Shreveport Captains.

Shreveport's other run came on a squeeze bunt by Felix Perdomo in the sixth inning.

The winning pitcher was Mickey Weston, 3-2. The loser was Paul McClelland, 6-4.

Billy Wrona doubled with the bases loaded to drive in two runs and Bill Stevenson hit a two-run single as the Wichita Pilots rallied for four runs in the seventh inning to beat the San Antonio Missions, 5-2.

Lakers' Byron Scott goes up over the crowd for two-pointer as Los Angeles evens series with the Detroit Pistons.

Stanford stays alive in Series

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — Lee Plemel scattered eight hits for his second College World Series victory as defending champion Stanford stayed alive with a 4-1 victory over Fullerton State Thursday night.

Plemel, 12-8, struck out seven in pitching his second complete-game victory of the tournament. He allowed nine hits in his 10-3 opening-round win over Fresno State on Saturday.

Stanford's victory set up a return meeting with the Titans Friday night, with the winner advancing to the championship game Saturday against the winner of an afternoon game between Wichita State, 56-14-1, and Arizona State, 59-12.

The Cardinal, 44-23, got only four hits off Longo Garcia, but gave Plemel an early cushion with three unearned runs in the second inning.

Paul Carey started the rally by reaching first on a fielding error by first baseman Ralph Ramirez. Ron Wittmeyer singled and Brian Johnson walked to load the bases and Tim Griffin drew another walk to force in the first run.

Wittmeyer scored when Eric DeGraw hit into a fielder's choice and Johnson scored when DeGraw started to steal second, was caught in a rundown and scrambled safely back into first.

Wittmeyer homered in the fourth for Stanford's other run.

Fullerton State broke up Plemel's shutout bid in the eighth when Mark Razook doubled with one out. He went to third on Bobby Jones' single and scored on a hit by Greg Mannion.

Shane Flores followed with a single to load the bases but Brent Mayne grounded into a double play to end the threat.

Mike Ross singled and Jim Osborn walked to give the Titans another chance in the ninth, but Plemel got Ramirez to fly out and struck out Razook to end the game.

Garcia, 10-6, who pitched a six-hitter in Fullerton State's 9-3 first-round victory over Miami Saturday, walked eight and struck out six.

Stanford lost two of three regular-season meetings with the Titans, as well as a 5-3 decision Monday night.

TED BATTLES

Indians' flip-flop no surprise to Midland fans

Last year soothsayers labeled the Cleveland Indians as the team of the future. Future? Shucks they were the team to beat for the 1987 American League pennant.

How prophetic. Not only were the Indians the team to beat, but that's precisely what everybody did.

The team that was supposed to revive memories of 1948 and 1954 pennant winners, instead revived those old Cleveland jokes.

Well, actually, they were the old Newark jokes adapted to Cleveland, the same way Aggie and Polish jokes are used interchangeably, depending on location.

NOW THE Indians are chasing the New York Yankees in a race that promises to make the American League race worthwhile, despite the Oakland A's to the contrary.

Cleveland's startling flip flop should come as no surprise to fans who remember Howard "Doc" Edwards from his Midland Texas League days.

It was Edwards who guided the Cubs to a co-pennant shared with the Lafayette Giants when drenching rains over in Louisiana prevented completion of the 1975 championship series.

The only question regarding Edwards was what took the majors so long to give him a chance.

SURE, EDWARDS had talent on that club...Mike Krukow, Donnie Moore, Bruce Sutter, Dennis Lamp, pitchers who not only made it to the major leagues, but are still active today.

The rest of the club didn't have that many future major league fixtures, but Wayne Tyrone, Joe Wallis, and Mike Sember had memorable seasons.

In fact, Sember, a former quarterback from Tulsa University, was both the goat and hero in the playoff series. His errors at shortstop were instrumental in Midland's losses in the first two games of the playoff series at Midland. His home run bingle in Lafayette tied the series before the rains came at Lafayette.

Still, the tale of that season was not the playoffs, but how Midland got there and therein lies the story of a superior job of managing.

In June, Midland was 14 to 16 games behind the West Division leading Shreveport Pirates, presumably hopelessly out of it. There were no first and second halves then.

Yet the Cubs kept nibbling away, a little each week, and finally caught and passed the Pirates in the final week of the season in El Paso.

IT WAS a series that soon won't be forgotten. First, the Cubs dedicated the game that would clinch the pennant to minor league pitching coach Fred Martin, whom, they learned before the game, had been fired by Chicago that afternoon.

Then, in the post game celebration, the writer covering the celebration made the mistake of visiting the dressing room while there were still some spirits left and took a clothes-drenching shower in champagne, beer and whatever else might have been handy.

Back at the motel, the alcohol-wreaking pants were hung in the closet to dry...and forgotten. Upon arrival home, the Mrs. demanded to know what happened to the trousers.

The circumstances were explained, whereupon she called the motel and explained, "My husband had to leave the motel in a hurry and forgot his pants. Can you forward them?"

Since that season, Edwards has been managing in the minors until he got his chance last season.

Carl Lewis bucks the tides in Seoul

In 1984, he did what only one other track-and-field athlete has ever done: He won four gold medals in a single Olympics.

Next September, he'd like to do what no other Olympic track-and-field athlete has ever done.

Win four more gold medals?

Well, possibly. But, if Carl Lewis just repeats as winner in any of the four events he won in '84, he will have made history. Nobody has ever won back-to-back gold medals four years apart in the 100 or 200 meters, the long jump or the 400-meter relay.

Some great runners and jumpers have tried it. Russia's Valery Borzov swept the gold in the 100 and 200 at Munich in 1972 but the best he could do at Montreal four years later was a bronze in the 100. Andy Stanfield won the 200 at Helsinki in 1952 and was second at Melbourne in 1956.

But speed kills. Or, at least, dies. The long jump would seem less ephemeral. A skill that depends not solely on speed or strength but on craft would seem less likely to erode quickly.

RALPH BOSTON, as graceful a competitor as ever came down a runway, made the event an art form, and made the best charge at a repeat with a gold in Rome in '60, a silver at Tokyo in '64 and a bronze at Mexico in '68. Ralph was like Sam Snead in golf. The rhythm remained long after the music had stopped.

So, Carl Lewis is bucking the tides of history at Seoul this September. But, he's bucking more than that. He's bucking the talents of a man who clipped an entire 10th of a second off the world record in the 100 meters at the World Games at Rome last fall.

Now, that, for track and field, is a little like hitting 70 home runs in a season, throwing in 110 points in a game in the NBA, shooting a 57 in the Open, or throwing or catching 10 touchdowns in a Super Bowl. World records in the 100 are supposed to come down by milliseconds a decade, not a 10th overnight.

To give you an idea, the Olympic 100-meter record of 10.8 in 1900 had come down to only 9.9 in 1968 (at 8,000 feet). It had come down less than a 10th of a second in 68 years.

Ben Johnson took it down to 9.93 in one afternoon from 9.93 to 9.83 in one stunning run on the banks of the Tiber.

You would think this would set the competition to singing "Arrivederci, Roma," waving goodbye to the event and wondering if it was too late to turn to shotputting or the decathlon. Why play cards with a guy with a checked vest and a gold watch? Why bet into a hand with two aces showing?

Carl Lewis seems ready to buck the house. It would seem to be a neat problem for Carl.

He is in this position: It is likely that, at Seoul, it will not be possible, because of the times and number of heats, for him to go for his quadruple. He will have to pass on one of his events—the 100, 200, the relay or the long jump.

The answer would seem to be evident. Ask him something hard.

CARL LEWIS skips the 100, right? Carl Lewis doesn't need any silver medals. Carl Lewis does not enter races to finish second. Carl Lewis tied the world record for the 100—he really broke it, because it had been set at high altitude—when he ran a 9.93 at Rome. Except he finished daylight behind Ben Johnson's 9.83.

Now, anything that can run a 9.83 hundred—and talk—is not something you'd want to run up against with your reputation at stake in the Olympics.

Unless you're Carl Lewis. And you want to be known as the greatest track man in Olympic annals.

If Lewis passes up anything at the Seoul Olympics, it will be the 200, an event he could very likely win. He made his sentiments known after he had won last Sunday's Pepsi meet 100 with a brilliant time of 10.13

WHY IS HE skipping an event he could win to challenge the blur from Canada? Well, first the likelihood is that the 200 will conflict seriously with the long jump.

"The long jump is my favorite event," says Lewis. "It's more intricate, it provides more of a challenge."

Well, why not give up the 100, then? Surely he must concede something to a man who runs 9.83?"

Lewis smiles. "I don't concede anything to him. He ran a perfect race under perfect conditions at Rome. I didn't run my best race at Rome. And I had a 9.93."

Lewis is so unconvinced that Ben Johnson is any 10ths of a second better than he is that he is trying to lure the Canadian into a pre-Olympic series of races, in Paris, Lausanne, Zurich—or a street corner in Calistoga. They will not meet there. But they will meet in Seoul later this summer. In the 100. At least, Carl Lewis will be there. He has a date with history. Jesse Owens couldn't keep because of World War II.

"I want them to know Carl Lewis is here and it's Carl Lewis they'll have to beat," he says.

Ben Johnson may find he has to clip another whole 10th of a second in Korea or finish where he did in the '84 Olympics—two places behind Carl Lewis.

Jim Tatum started the rally with a bunt single. Mike Basso walked and Jimmy Lester singled ahead of Wrona's hit. Stevenson then followed with a single.

Mike Huff was 3-5 for San Antonio and has had seven hits in his last nine trips over two games.

Matt Maysey, 3-6, was the winning pitcher. Phil Torrez, 0-3, was the loser.

HALO HOOPS—El Paso has hit 29 homers against Midland. Jeff Manto is 9-for-18 in the series with two homers and seven RBI. Jim McCollum missed Thursday's games for Midland with a pulled groin muscle. He should be back tonight when Ramon Serna, 0-1, goes for El Paso against Midland's Steve McGuire, 1-7. El Paso leads the series 3-2 with games tonight and Saturday before Midland returns home for six games against San Antonio to wind up the first half race.

Mike Henneman, 1-1, got the final four outs for the victory.

Chaps make cut

From Staff Reports

SCOTTSDALE, Arizona—Midland College made the cut here Thursday to play in the final day of the 1988 National Junior College Athletic Association men's golf championship.

Fifteen teams play the last round of the 1988 72-hole tournament at McCormick Ranch Resorts, which began Tuesday with 50 teams. However, the Chaps dropped a spot Thursday and are 13th.

Conference champion New Mexico Junior College is tied for second and Odessa College, the Region V title, dropped to sixth. Host Scottsdale has a comfortable 15-stroke edge on NMJC and Alexander City, Alabama.

"We just haven't been able to find the consistency you need for a tournament," said Delnor Poss, MC coach. "Each day we've had some decent rounds, but have had to use one high score. But the experience has been good and finishing somewhere in the top 15 in the nation isn't too bad."

For Alexander City, it seems like another year of frustration. The college has had a team in all 14 NJCAA golf tournaments, but has never won the title.

Records fall at Lake Spence

From Staff Reports

Lake Spence has been on a record setting binge of late.

First Midland's Nelda Arceneaux reeled in a 12 3/4 pound drum to set a new lake record.

The previous record was 10 1/4 by D. Day of Seminole in Oct. 1986. The biggest drum in the area was 25 pounds by L.F. Elders, Snyder, in Lake Thomas.

Sonny Barnes came within a fraction of a second of a new small mouth bass mark with a 4 1/2 pounder.

That was just after Gary Pyle, San Angelo, succeeded in breaking the small mouth record. His catch a 4.65 pounder, 20 inches in length and 14 in girth. This topped the 4.50 small mouth caught in March 1987 by George Trevino of Andrews.

AT LAKE THOMAS, the action was described as fair, but Justin Donelson, Ira, did catch a 5 1/2 pound black bass. Crappie fishing, meanwhile, continued good at 15-20 feet depth. White bass results were fair to good for trollers along the dam and in the sandy areas. Spence catches included: Tommy and Beverly Pritchard, Midland, 17 whites and 23 crappie; Don and Nolan Farrington, Midland, nine cats and a black bass; John and Nelda Arceneaux 96 white bass in three days; Nolan Stanley, Big Spring, a 10-pound striper.

Brandon Dobbs, Midland, took a 1 1/2 pound black at Paint Creek Marina on Spence and Robert Dean had a 5-11 black. Vidal Franco and Daniel Martinez, Midland, took a 10 1/2 yellow catfish. W.J. Deeds, Wade Deeds and Odys Bryum, Odessa, took a 26-pound yellow, 40 channel cats to 5 1/2 pounds and 15 crappie out of Hillside Grocery.

THE TALL CITY Fishing Club will hold a Father-Son tournament June 24-25-26 at Oak Creek Lake. Trophies and awards will be given to Youth winners, 13 and under. J.R. Perales (682 5074) is tournament chairman. Others to contact are Alfredo Sanchez (684 6663) and Jesse Guzman (689 9515).

The next meeting for the TCFC will be 7 p.m. July 11 at the Tampico Restaurant and on July 4 is the big drawing for the Hawlian trip for two 7 p.m. at the Tampico Restaurant. Money raised is designated for next December for needy people in Midland.

THE HIGH Sky Bass Club will hold its June tournament June 11-12 at Lake Coleman. Terry Denton is the tournament director and the weigh-in will be at the City Park.

In the HSBC's 13th tournament, D.R. Burke beat out Richard Agee, 27.74 to 26.60 pounds, for first place while Michele Triesch's 17.12 beat out Guadalupe Robles' 16.76 for the women's title. Chris Ramsey came up with the Big Bass at 8.01 pounds. Ray Hanselman won the Youth division with 23.69.

The local tournament in conjunction with the HSBC event was won by Bud Baker, who took 10 fish weighing 20.13 pounds. John Nobles was second with 12.10. In the women's division, Margaret Kleinhaus took first with three fish for 5.57 pounds. In the Teen division, Matthews Nobles was first with one fish for 4.96 pounds, which also was the big bass.

An engineering study looking toward further diversion of the Colorado River as a quality enhancement project will analyze possibilities of a large-scale evaporation pond in Mitchell County. Such a facility could reduce present Lake Spence chlorides up to 22 ppm.

AP Laserphoto

Greg Johnson shows off a 20-pound chinook salmon landed on a piece of orange and gold yarn in the Lester River, near Duluth, Minn.

If put in place, the proposed evaporation pond would become the fourth diversion works installed to enhance Lake Spence quality. One is located above Colorado City, another west of Big Spring between Three and Four mile lakes and a diversion from Red Beals Creek, east of Big Spring into Red Draw reservoir.

Belmont attracts 6-horse field

By STEVEN CRIST
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — Four colts, a filly and a gelding were the only 3-year-olds entered Thursday for the 120th running of the Belmont Stakes at Belmont Park Saturday.

The field of six, led by Winning Colors, the filly who won the Kentucky Derby on May 7, and Risen Star, the son of Secretariat who won the Preakness two weeks later, is the smallest since Affirmed and Alydar scared off all but three opponents in 1978. The number of colts in Saturday's race is the lowest since Count Fleet completed his 1943 Triple Crown sweep against just two rivals.

THE ONLY surprise was the absence of Dynafactor from the entries. Dynafactor, who skipped the Derby and the Preakness but won the Jersey Derby 11 days ago, would have been coupled in the betting with Winning Colors as a D. Wayne Lukas-trained entry. Officially, Dynafactor was not entered because the Lukas team did not think him capable of beating the filly, they chose not to run their colts Tejaso and Jazzying Around in the Derby and the Preakness for the same reason.

Another factor in his not being entered may be the $1 million bonus that will be awarded to the horse with the best record in the Triple Crown races, based on a 5-3-1 point system for the top finishers in each race. Under several scenarios, Dynafactor could have deprived Winning Colors of all or part of the bonus by finishing in front of her, a possibility that Lukas did not want to tempt.

THE FIELD of six appears to have two tiers of talent. Risen Star, Brian's Time and Winning Colors, who crossed the wire in the Preakness in that order, are far more accomplished than Cefis, Granacus and Kingpost. Those three finished eighth, 11th and 14th, respectively, in the Derby and none has won since.

Risen Star is the 8-5 morning line favorite over Winning Colors at 9-5, with Brian's Time listed at 5-2 and the others 8-1 or higher.

Post positions appear insignificant in a mile-and-a-half race with so small a field. Winning Colors drew post 3 with Risen Star in post 5 and Brian's Time on the outside.

THE KEYS to the race are Risen Star's physical condition, and Winning Colors' early fractions.

Risen Star, rumored to have leg troubles throughout the Triple Crown season, kicked himself in the right ankle when he ran off during a gallop 12 days ago. Two scheduled workouts were subsequently canceled and four veterinarians have been attending the colt this week, but he has been galloping strongly. Louie Roussel III, his trainer and co-owner, pronounced the colt "95 percent likely" to start and will make a final decision after a three-furlong workout this morning.

Winning Colors, who led all the way in the Derby and weakened in the Preakness after a rough early duel with Forty Niner, appears likely to get an easy lead Saturday. If she can slow down the pace, she might gallop to an unchallenged victory, a frequent winning scenario in the Belmont. Risen Star appears to be her only opponent with the tactical speed to stay close early.

Harry Miller ends career

534 wins at six colleges

By KEVIN GORE

NACOGDOCHES (AP) — After compiling 534 wins at six different schools over a 36-year coaching career, Harry Miller has finished his career as head basketball coach at Stephen F. Austin State University.

Miller's coaching stops included Western State College, Fresno State, Eastern New Mexico, North Texas State, Wichita State and Stephen F. Austin.

His final tenure was a 10-year Lumberjack reign consisting of a 170-112 record, three league titles, three post-season tournament berths and four coach of the year awards.

Miller said the decision to officially retire from coaching was made only last month. The 61-year old missed the last eight games of the Lumberjacks' 10-18 season this past year with an ulcer, but returned to help in the recruiting process for next season. Miller however, decided it would be in his best interest to retire.

"I had some pretty good advice on it. I was advised by the doctor that I would be better off to not continue," Miller said.

AT THE beginning of his final season, Miller was ranked fourth on the all-time career win list of active college coaches.

"He's a great coach and a good man," said SFA Athletic Director Jim Hess. "I learned a lot from him. I wish I could be half as successful as he has been. He's had a great 10 years here."

Miller began his coaching career virtually by accident. After graduating from East New Mexico, he failed in a tryout with the Syracuse National basketball team in 1951. He then returned to New Mexico, where he took the head coaching job at House High School.

"School had already started, the job was open and I needed to work," Miller said.

Miller stayed one year at House before heading to Western State College in Colorado to work on his master's degree in administration. It wasn't long before he was the head coach there.

"Because the guy had resigned after school started, the athletic director needed someone to coach the team," Miller said. "He knew I had coached at a high school, and he didn't have anyone else to do it. It was all by accident."

MILLER SAID the hardest part about retiring was leaving the players who are now at SFA. The Lumberjacks suffered through a long year last season due to injuries and academic difficulties.

The season came one year after the Lumberjacks had turned in a remarkable 22-8 campaign in their first year of competing on the Division I level. The season included winning the Gulf Star conference with a 10-0 record and advancing to the National Invitation Tournament.

"It was the first time any college team in America had gone from Division II to Division I and received a post-season bid of any type in their first year," Miller said. "That season was brought about by a lot of different people. The chemistry was really good on that team. The chemistry was good between the coaches and the players."

One of the first highlights of Miller's career came at Fresno State. "We won four straight conference championships," Miller said. "I was the young guy back then in a tough conference."

A HIGHLIGHT at Eastern New Mexico was compiling a 104-37 record and winning the NAIA Championship in the 1980-81 season.

One of the most depressing seasons was during his eight-year stay at Wichita State.

"One of the most depressing defeats came to Michigan by one point in the (NCAA) regional tournament," Miller said. "Their first lead in the ballgame came when time ran out when Ricky Green hit a shot out of the corner. There were only 32 teams in it (the tournament) in those days."

Now that the school year has ended, and he is officially retired, Miller said he plans to go into business with one of his three sons, Tom, who has a local striping and asphalt business. "I've been toying with the idea of working with my son," Miller said.

TV beer commercials and real life not quite same

By GEORGE VECSEY
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — The absolute best thing on television for the past year has not been a sitcom or a news special or a talk show. The best thing on television has been a commercial for one of the beer companies.

Surely you've seen it — "Gone With the Wind," "Rocky," "Roots," "Dr. Zhivago," "Guess Who's Coming to Dinner" and "Mr. Smith Goes to Washington," every epic ever created, distilled into one heartwarming 60-second saga.

This perfect little minute begins in a bush-league ball park with a black umpire and a Hispanic catcher smiling at the antics of a dog on the field. Then the elderly white clubhouse man (named Pop, of course) delivers a message: The umpire has been called up to the big leagues. He calls his wife from a phone booth.

In the next segment, the umpire steps onto the field (obviously Busch Stadium; this is a beer commercial) and pauses to look around him. His wife holds up a sign saying, "I Love the Ump"; the fans boo, but good-naturedly.

On the bench, the manager — from the Central Casting supply of somewhat burly, faintly menacing, vaguely redneck, perpetually recycled white managers — sizes up the rookie umpire. The game starts. The umpire correctly calls a runner out at third base on a play that is not all that close. The manager comes out to argue, shoving his grizzled old coach out of the way. The umpire turns his back and walks away with quiet dignity, signaling an end to the debate.

THEN COMES, you should pardon the expression, the kicker. The umpire and his wife go out for a bite after the game. The waitress delivers two bottles of the sponsor's beer, compliments of the gentleman over there. A few tables away, the burly manager, no longer looking quite so rednecked in a sport jacket, smiles in a controlled way and raises his own bottle. See you next time.

The viewer knows the two men will tangle again, but always in good taste, always with the same script, the same prompters, the same sponsor, the same moral outlook, the same vision of life. They both know there are limits to what umpires and managers can do to each other. And I sit there in my darkened den pretending a tear has not formed in the corner of my eye. Darn, if only life could be like that.

The beer commercials are wonderful at creating this ideal world. How envious we are watching sports bars where all the men are handsome and witty, where all the women are beautiful and engrossing, where nobody ever gets hammered and goes out and wrecks his car.

A FEW WEEKS ago in Boston, I happened to visit a sports bar because my hotel did not carry the Celtics' game on TBS. As exciting as it was to watch the Red Sox, the Bruins and the Celtics at once, the bar did not remind me of any of the glittering palaces in the beer commercials: It was difficult to watch the three flickering screens because patrons regularly lurched from bar to bathroom to street. While I know many knowledgeable female fans, the women in this bar seemed grimly purposeful, as if thinking, "If this is where men hide from the world, this is where I've got to be." Also, patrons in the beer commercials never blow cigarette smoke in your face.

THE GAP between life and art never seemed so great than during this baseball season. First we had Dave Pallone wagging his finger near Pete Rose's eyes and Rose shoving him back, inexcusably. Then we had Billy Martin kicking dirt on an umpire in Texas.

In the most recent episode, we have had Martin heaving dirt at the chest of the umpire Dale Scott after — Martin says — Scott egged him on. And now we have had the umpires threatening to "SEND HIM TO HIS ROOM," capital letters supplied by multisyllabic Richie Phillips, a recent graduate of the Improve Your Word Power in 60 Easy Seconds School of Publicity Releases.

ON TUESDAY, Peter Ueberroth

knocked everybody's heads together, including the two league presidents, and told them to get their standards straight. You can't kick dirt on umpires. You can't treat one manager differently from another. You can't give one manager 30 days for shoving and another only three for throwing dirt.

Just when things seemed calm, the king came out of his counting house and issued yet another press release. The funniest phrase was "Steinbrenner quietly said ..."

Nothing grubby like this ever happens in the beer commercials, in which even Martin, by a shamelessly exploitative twist, has appeared. One of his classics was the western bar where Martin kept insisting, "I didn't punch no doggie."

In the real world, one is never quite sure whether Martin will punch any doggies. I was in an elevator with him in Yankee Stadium last summer when he tried to provoke a colleague from another paper. We all held our breath for the 100 years it took for the elevator to descend.

Maturely, my colleague did not shoot from the lip. It was a bit scary. Television does have its moments. Last Saturday, Bob Costas of NBC watched the Mets stage yet another incredible comeback and blurted, "The Mets are as hard to kill as Rasputin."

How perfect. As Robert K. Massie points out in his classic book, "Nicholas and Alexandra," the Russian nobles tried to kill the powerful monk with poisoned wine, poisoned cakes, at least two bullets, a kicking and a clubbing, then finally tossing the trussed body into the Neva River.

"Three days later," Massie writes, "when the body was found, the lungs were filled with water. Gregory Rasputin, his bloodstream filled with poison, his body punctured by bullets, had died by drowning."

Costas freely admits that his knowledge of Rasputin "probably comes from some old movie I watched when I was 12 years old. All I knew was that he kept coming off the deck." Costas seldom strikes a false note. Maybe he, too, is a commercial and not real life.

Twitty, Roberts tie for 1st

By GORDON S. WHITE JR.
N.Y. Times News Service

HARRISON, N.Y. — Howard Twitty believes that some golfers do well on certain courses time after time. The 6-foot-5-inch Twitty, who finished second in the 1979 Manufacturers Hanover Westchester Classic and has usually fared well here, backed up his contention Thursday by taking a share of the lead in the first round.

But J.C. Snead, the defending champion, said: "I don't buy that thing about playing well on certain courses as much as people say. Heck, I've seen guys come back a year after winning and fail to make the cut."

Snead didn't back up his contention as well as Twitty did his. Snead, who opened his round with two long-putt birdies, finished his round only two strokes off the lead held by Twitty and Loren Roberts.

Twitty and Roberts, who played together during ideal conditions Thursday afternoon, each shot West-under-par 66's on the soggy West course of the Westchester Country Club. The morning's rain had stopped and the wind had died, leaving the greens soft and vulnerable, although it was still extremely difficult to extricate a ball from the wet and very deep rough.

Snead, on the other hand, started in a chilly, rain and wind with Greg Norman of Australia, and Bernhard Langer of West Germany.

Snead, who has been suffering from a touch of flu for three days, carved out a three-under 68 to tie Don Pooley and a couple of former roommates at the University of Houston — Steve Elkington of Australia and Billy Ray Brown of Sugarland, Texas.

"Here I am in the rain and cold this morning with a bad throat, hardly able to talk, 47 years old and playing with two big heroes," Snead said. "I just thought I'd be in the way today."

Joey Sindelar, who also had the advantage of the soft afternoon conditions, finished a shot off the lead with four-under 67.

Twitty may not be doing well solely because he expects to do well at Westchester Country Club each year. The 39-year-old golfer from Phoenix has been playing well lately. He was tied for the first-round lead a week ago at the Kemper Open, but he faded to a tie for 21st.

Gowan leads LPGA

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — Caroline Gowan holed a 95-yard shot for an eagle and chipped in to save par Thursday on the way to a 5-under-par 67 and the first-round lead at the $300,000 Rochester International LPGA tournament.

Rookie Danielle Ammaccapane and Sherri Steinhauer were tied for second at 68, one shot back.

Gowan, of Greenville, S.C., had the eagle, five birdies and two bogeys on the 6,182-yard Locust Hill Country Club course.

Goalby takes lead

PONTE VEDRA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Bob Goalby overcame a slow start to shoot a 66 Thursday and take a one-stroke lead over Bob Charles after the opening round of the Senior Tournament Players Championship.

Goalby, more successful as a television analyst than a golfer in recent years, climbed the leaderboard with four birdies and an eagle after he matched par for the first seven holes on the 6,646-yard TPC Valley Course at Sawgrass Country Club.

His 6-under-par total is a personal best since returning from a 1982 back injury that forced him off the Senior PGA Tour for six months. More recently, his job as a golf commentator for NBC-TV has kept him out of tournament competition.

Charles, of New Zealand, played a steady round that included five birdies and no bogeys. His 67 left him one shot ahead of Dave Hill, Bob Rawlins and Ken Still, who was 3-over after six holes.

Chicago Cubs outfielder Andre Dawson hits the dirt after an inside pitch during game against Pittsburgh Pirates.

TV director has vivid memories of College Series

By RICK WARNER
AP Sports Writer

George Bush isn't the only former college baseball player who has made it big in another field. Joe Aceti, who will direct CBS' coverage of the College World Series championship game Saturday, played for Colgate in the 1955 CWS.

Aceti still has vivid memories of Colgate's opening-round game against Wake Forest in Omaha, Neb.

"We played at 10 a.m. in a hailstorm," he said. "Our pitcher threw a two-hitter, but we lost 1-0."

Aceti was the catcher. The pitcher, Lawrence Bossidy, is now vice chairman of General Electric Co.

In those days, major league umpires were used at the CWS. Before the game, Aceti asked National League umpire Art Gore if he preferred to be called Mr. Gore or Mr. Umpire.

"He said, 'Just call me horse-face like everyone else does,'" Colgate upset top-seeded Southern California in the second round before being eliminated by Oklahoma A&M.

"It was Colgate's first time in the College World Series and they haven't been back since," Aceti said.

parently was an arch-conservative on the tennis court.

NBC commentator Bud Collins, who was Hoffman's tennis coach at Brandeis University in 1959, said the "Chicago Seven" defendant was "an extremely right-wing" player.

"He was very conservative. He never came to the net. He was strictly a baseliner, a retriever," Collins said. "And he didn't complain about wearing all-white costumes for tennis. In fact, it was the one thing he didn't complain about."

Collins said Hoffman was a "very difficult person" who didn't like authority figures.

"He didn't like me," he said. "I was a very strict coach — coats and ties on road trips, cleanly shaven. He thought I was a real right-wing conservative. Brandeis in those days was a particularly radical place, but I didn't care. I didn't know any better."

After Hoffman left Brandeis, Collins didn't talk to him again until 1980.

"He called me in the press box in Flushing (at the U.S. Open) and asked if I could get him two tickets for the final," Collins said. "I did, and saw him that day. It was quite stunning, and we had a very pleasant reunion. I've seen him once or twice since."

TBS slam-dunked the cable competition with its NBA play-off coverage.

Playoff ratings on the superstation jumped 19 percent over last year and reached 32 percent more homes.

This year's 31-game playoff package averaged a 4.4 rating and 2 million homes. Last year's 24-game schedule averaged a 3.7 rating and 1.5 million homes.

Game 5 of the Boston-Detroit series was the highest-rated and most-watched basketball telecast ever on cable television. The 8.8 rating and 3.98 million homes also made it the highest-rated and most-watched sports event in TBS history.

Peters, Cooper playoff winners

AUSTIN (AP) — Brenham pitcher Jon Peters kept his consecutive win streak alive and a reserve outfielder from Apple Springs made history in the semifinals of the University Interscholastic League state baseball semifinals.

Abilene Cooper, meanwhile, advanced to the 5A finals against Westwood after beating Eagle Pass, 4-3, Thursday.

Peters needed some late-inning and extra-inning heroics to keep his consecutive wins streak alive Thursday as the Class 4A Brenham Cubs took a 6-4 victory in eight innings over Canyon. He is 14-0 for the season and won his 42nd straight decision in three years.

Reserve outfielder Karla Spencer of Apple Springs became the first girl to play in a Texas high school state tournament baseball game.

Spencer, a senior who also plays basketball and runs track, struck out in her only at bat as she fouled off a bunt attempt to the screen on a 2-2 pitch.

Spencer's average for the season is .267, or four for 15.

The Brenham victory put the Cubs, 30-3, into the finals today against Waxahachie, 9-3 winners over Robstown in other Class 4A semifinals.

BUT IT wasn't easy for Brenham. The Cubs, trailed 4-0 in the sixth inning and tied the game in the seventh when Sean Cooper belted an inside-the-park home run with a man aboard.

Peters led the team's extra inning rally, hitting a single to left and scored the winning run on Tadd Maass' fielder's choice. Brenham added a final run when Cooper grounded out to score Casey Acker, who had walked.

Sammy Ojeda had a two-run triple to lead Waxahachie to the victory over Robstown.

Waxahachie struck for five runs in the fifth inning, helped by three Robstown errors.

Apple Springs advanced to the Class A finals today against Maud, which defeated Follett 10-6 as pitcher Joey Missildine set a Class A tournament record with 15 strikeouts.

Travis Williams went the distance on the mound and drove in three runs to lead the Westwood Warriors into the Class 5A title game with a 3-2 victory over League City Clear Lake.

WESTWOOD faces Abilene Cooper in the championship game. Abilene Cooper edged Eagle Pass, 4-3.

Jason Satre, 17-2, struck out 10 batters and had a RBI single in the third inning as Abilene Cooper advanced.

The score was tied at 1-1 when Cooper erupted for three runs on two doubles and two singles.

Scotty Pugh and Blaine Frazier

Robstown's Sammy Olmeda is caught between third and home as Waxahachie's Jeff Turner applies tag during UIL baseball playoffs at Austin.

had run scoring doubles in the inning. Pugh also had a triple in the fourth.

Jaime Sepeda gave up only two hits in pitching Sinton to a 7-2 Class 3A victory over Wylie.

Sinton advances to the championship game against Waco LaVega, 5-4 winners over Bellville.

Sepeda gave up only a pair of singles and struck out six and walked seven.

Richard Salinas, Willie Medlock and Davy Conn all had two hits.

Shelbyville, 24-7, advanced to the Class 2A title game with a 4-1 victory over Pottsville.

The victory puts Shelbyville against Blanco, 23-5, after Blanco took a 6-4 victory over Holliday in an eight-inning contest.

Production pact eludes OPEC's Arab members

ALGIERS, Algeria (AP) — Meetings among the oil ministers of six Arab members of OPEC have failed to produce any agreement on production quotas, delegation sources said Thursday.

The meetings, taking place on the sidelines of a three-day Arab summit, involve discussions between the two opposing wings of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

The six oil ministers from Algeria, Libya, Iraq, Saudi Arabia, Qatar and the United Arab Emirates met in advance of the scheduled June 11 meeting of OPEC in Vienna, hoping to resolve their differences in informal talks.

Algeria and Libya advocate production cuts while Saudi Arabia and the Gulf emirates have defended their production levels. The split between the two camps led to the failure of an April meeting between OPEC and a number of non-OPEC oil exporters.

The non-OPEC countries had offered to reduce their overall output by 5 percent, or 183,000 barrels per day, on condition the OPEC group made a matching 5 percent cut.

The OPEC countries, which have a current overall production ceiling of 15.06 million barrels per day, offered to match the proposed non-OPEC cut barrel-per-barrel, but could not agree on an overall 5 percent cut, which would have lowered their ceiling by about 750,000 barrels per day.

Indonesia's oil minister, Ginanjar Kartasasmita, earlier this week called on the Arab OPEC members to resolve their differences at the Algiers summit to help stabilize prices.

The sources, participants in the talks who spoke on condition they not be identified, said the informal discussions in Algiers had disclosed three factions among the Arab OPEC members.

The Saudi-led group was demanding that current production levels be left unchanged, while the Algeria group called for a sharp production cut for the third quarter of 1988, with a possibility of renewed increases in the fourth quarter to take account of higher winter demand. A third group advocated simple alignment with world prices and demand, the sources said.

The sources said they doubted the differences would be resolved before the Arab ministers traveled to Vienna next week.

Iraq, which has refused to be bound by its OPEC-fixed production ceiling, also took part in the talks, the sources said. Iraq has demanded a production quota equal to that of its Gulf war enemy, Iran.

Midlanders end offer for USG

NEW YORK (AP) — Desert Partners L.P., which recently lost a proxy battle for six seats on USG Corp.'s board, on Thursday formally terminated its $2.2 billion tender offer for the Chicago-based building materials concern.

Despite the move, Desert Partners, headed by Midland, Texas, oilmen Cyril Wagner, Jr. and Jack E. Brown, said it "continues to believe that it would be desirable for it to acquire control of USG."

The partnership had offered $42 a share in cash for up to 39 million of USG's 45.7 million common shares it did not already own.

USG, which had resisted all takeover overtures, bounced back with its own restructuring plan that includes paying shareholders $37 a share in a cash dividend and notes valued at $5 per USG share.

Icahn seeks to boost takeover bid for Texaco

NEW YORK (AP) — Financialer Carl C. Icahn sought to bolster his takeover offer for Texaco Inc. on Thursday by raising to $300 million the money he would forfeit if he failed to raise the necessary financing.

Icahn also added a new twist, pledging that the guarantee money would be divided among all Texaco stockholders rather than go into the general treasury of the White Plains, N.Y.-based oil company.

Texaco's board previously rejected Icahn's bid for the 85.2 percent of the company's shares he does not already own and it refused to put the matter up for a vote by stockholders at the annual meeting June 17.

Responding to Icahn's move Thursday, the company said it "changes exactly nothing. And nothing is exactly what he is offering the Texaco shareholder."

"Because he has attached such a jungle of strings conditions and red tape to his so-called guarantee, it doesn't matter what number he attaches to it — he's never put up a dime and we are convinced he would never have to."

Texaco was referring to provisions in Icahn's proposal that the money would not be forfeited if another bid in excess of $60 per share materialized, or if the Internal Revenue Service failed to approve his proposal.

Those provisions were contained in his original bid, except that in that case, Icahn only offered to put $100 million into escrow, and said it would be forfeited to the company if he could not finance the bid.

Icahn

Taco Villa, founder celebrate 20 years

From Staff Reports

West Texan Bobby Cox, founder of the Taco Villa restaurant chain, was recently honored during the chain's 20th anniversary celebration.

Cox built the first Taco Villa in Odessa in 1968. Before selling the chain to W.R. Grace in 1985, he had expanded the chain throughout West Texas and New Mexico. He currently is a Taco Villa franchisee, with six restaurants in Lubbock.

Taco Villa president and chief executive officer William Hyde presented Cox with a plaque recognizing his contributions to West Texas. Cox is a director for the Texas Restaurant Association, Major Video Corp., Mid-America Indemnity Insurance Co., and Texas National Bank of Odessa. He has been a long-time supporter of the March of Dimes, Permian Basin Rehabilitation Center, American Diabetes Association, Globe Theater, Art Institute for the Permian Basin, United Way, Texas Tech Regional Academic Health Center and the Sandhills Herford and Quarterhorse Show and Rodeo.

API survey: Oil patch still feeling downturn

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Assistant Business/Oil Editor

The reverberations of the oil price crash of 1986 are continuing to be felt in the economies of oil patch states, according to a report by the American Petroleum Institute.

The API's study of the latest available government and industry data on the 10 largest oil-producing states revealed some continuing impact on national economic indicators caused by the magnitude and ripple effects of the energy industry downturn.

The most prominent effects of oil industry woes are shown in the number of business and bank failures during 1987 in oil-producing states.

The lag time from a major economic turning point, up or down, until it is felt by the banking community can be anywhere from 12 to 24 months, according to Marvin Schiebout, president of First Republic Bank Midland.

"It takes some time before the bank portfolios begin to show the strain as borrowers' cash flow is cut back," he said.

Since 1986, Texas has borne the brunt of increases in the number of bank failures. After 26 bank closings in 1986 and another 50 last year, the state is on a pace to surpass last year's total with 33 failures in the first 23 weeks of 1988.

A small decline in the nation's number of business failures last year was largely the result of a leveling off of closings in the West South Central region, which encompasses the heart of the oil patch — Texas, Oklahoma, Louisiana and Arkansas.

Although the count for the region was up last year, the increase was less than half a percent after giant jumps in 1986.

The level of failures — defined by Dun & Bradstreet as business closings with losses to creditors — remains inordinately high compared to the rest of the nation, the API reported.

The four-state region accounted for more than one-fifth of the country's business failures. Houston alone had more business closings last year, 1,451, than the entire six-state New England region, 1,033.

Wholesale prices boosted by food costs

WASHINGTON (AP) — Wholesale prices, led by the steepest increase in food costs since January, rose a moderate 0.5 percent in May, the government said today.

If the May increase held steady for 12 straight months, inflation at the wholesale level would be 5.8 percent, nearly triple the modest 2 percent increase of the past 12 months.

The May increase differed little from the 0.4 percent rise in April and a 0.6 percent hike in March, except for the fact that food replaced energy as the main propellant of inflation.

Energy prices, which had surged 3.1 percent in April, rose only 0.2 percent in May, largely because of a 3.8 percent drop in natural gas prices.

The Labor Department's index for wholesale prices at the finished goods level minus energy and food was up 0.3 percent. Analysts consider this a more reliable indicator of underlying inflation because of the month-to-month volatility of food and energy costs.

Lorenzo: Eastern Airlines not for sale

NEW YORK (AP) — Texas Air Corp. Chairman Frank Lorenzo said Thursday that the company is studying ways to restructure its troubled Eastern Airlines subsidiary but has no plans to sell the operation.

He did not offer any specifics of what changes might be in store for Eastern, which is saddled with bitter labor relations and recently passed a two-month government safety investigation.

Speaking at the company's annual meeting, Lorenzo told shareholders that despite the persistent labor agitation and financial troubles at the Miami-based airline, "Eastern Airlines is not for sale."

But he placed a price tag of sorts on the airline by disclosing that a recent study by Texas Air found Eastern had a net-asset value of $2 billion, or nearly $50 for each Texas Air share.

Net-asset value takes into account debts and liabilities, and includes items such as aircraft and airport terminals.

Several analysts declined to put their own estimates on Eastern's value, but Timothy Petree, at the investment firm Bear Stearns & Co., estimated Eastern's net-asset value at closer to $500 million.

Stock in Texas Air, which also owns Houston-based Continental Airlines, was up 12 1/2 cents to $12 a share on the American Stock Exchange.

Lorenzo, who controls 34 percent of the voting power of Texas Air shares, said management was looking at ways to improve shareholder values but declined to specify any actions under study.

MARKETS

Apathetic market loses ground

From Staff and Wire Reports

Oil futures prices slipped lower in early morning trading, as the market remained apathetic, devoid of any price-supporting news.

In trading on the New York Mercantile Exchange, the July contract for West Texas Intermediate opened 4 cents lower than Thursday's $17.07 close. WTI fell 26 cents per barrel Thursday.

Among refined products, contracts for July delivery of whole-sale unleaded gasoline settled down 0.64 cent at 49.70 cents a gallon, and wholesale heating oil closed at 44.90 cents a gallon, down 1.03 cents.

"Most of the declines have been on relatively light volume," said John O'Connell of the commodities firm Refco Inc. "There's just no buyers."

Bob Baker of Prudential-Bache Securities Inc. said the selloff in crude accelerated late in the session when prices dipped below technical support levels, and speculators began liquidating positions.

Prices were depressed by a lack of developments deemed supportive of prices, and by perceptions that OPEC producers still had not unified over production controls that could help boost prices, according to market analysts. Oil ministers of the 13-member Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries will begin talks in Vienna, Austria, on Saturday.

They are expected to discuss possible production cuts to defend the official price target of $18 a barrel.

Deepening the underlying bearish sentiment was the lack of any agreement about production quotas during meetings of six Arab members of OPEC oil-producing nations in Algiers. The meetings, which took place during a three-day Arab summit, broke up Thursday.

Dollar down in quiet foreign trade

LONDON (AP) — The dollar fell slightly against major currencies in quiet European trading early today, and gold prices rose.

Mid-morning rates in Europe, compared with late Thursday:

—1.4305 Swiss francs, down from 1.4370

—5.7905 French francs, down from 5.8155

—1.9259 Dutch guilders, down from 1.9330

—1.2755 Italian lire, down from 1.2805

—1.2175 Canadian dollars, down from 1.2211

The British pound rose to $1.82 from $1.81.

The dollar closed in Tokyo at 124.85 Japanese yen, down from 125.43 yen.

London's main bullion houses fixed a recommended gold price at mid-morning of $457.10 a troy ounce, up from $455.25 late Thursday.

In Zurich, gold traded at a bid of $456.90, up from $455.50.

Earlier, the metal closed in Hong Kong at a bid of $457.99, up from $456.59.

Silver bullion traded in London at a bid of $7.14 a troy ounce, up from $7.08.

Dow takes a break near year's high

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market turned in an inconclusive showing Thursday, pausing to test the winds near its highest levels of the year.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks, up 48.36 on Wednesday, slipped back 9.60 to 2,093.35.

At mid-session the average flirted with its 1988 closing high of 2,110.08, reached on April 12. Then it pulled back near the close.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines by about 9 to 8 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 815 up, 720 down and 448 unchanged.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board came to 235.16 million shares, down from 310.03 million in the previous session.

As measured by Wilshire Associates' index of more than 5,000 actively traded stocks, the market lost $7.22 billion, or 0.27 percent, in value.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks dropped .51 to 152.36.

Standard & Poor's industrial index fell 1.44 to 312.47, and S&P's 500-stock composite index was down 1.32 at 270.20.

The NASDAQ composite index for the over-the-counter market rose 1.19 to 384.60. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index closed at 308.82, up 2.39.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Deficit improvement slower than thought

WASHINGTON (AP) — The country's huge trade deficits are improving but not as quickly as previously believed, the government says.

The Commerce Department released new statistics Thursday that adjust the monthly trade numbers for normal seasonal changes in shipping patterns.

With seasonal adjustment, the trade deficit for March turned out to be $11.9 billion, 22 percent higher than the previously reported $9.7 billion.

Capital spending plans up 11.9 percent

WASHINGTON (AP) — Businesses enjoying a boom in export sales plan to modernize and expand at the fastest rate in four years, the government said. The Commerce Department said Thursday a survey completed in May showed U.S. companies plan to spend $435.2 billion on capital projects, an 11.9 percent increase over last year's spending of $388.8 billion.

If realized, it would be the biggest gain in plant and equipment spending since 1984, when spending shot up 16.6 percent as businesses recovered from the 1981-82 recession.

Japanese trade surplus shrinks further

TOKYO (AP) — Japan's trade surplus fell 21 percent to $5.05 billion in May, the 13th straight month the surplus has decreased from its level of a year earlier, the Finance Ministry said.

Japan's trade surplus with the United States fell 25.6 percent to $3.30 billion from $4.44 billion in May 1987. It was also down from $4.13 billion the previous month, the agency said Thursday.

Bass, Macmillan judge delays ruling

NEW YORK (AP) — A state judge in Delaware has deferred until today a ruling on Texas investor Robert M. Bass's attempt to block a financial restructuring by Macmillan Inc., the publishing giant Bass offered to acquire for $1.9 billion.

Jack B. Jacobs, a judge in Chancery Court in Wilmington, presided over the eleventh-hour hearing Thursday, one day before Macmillan was scheduled to implement the first stage of its controversial restructuring — the payment of a $52.35-a-share special dividend to shareholders.

ACTIVITY HIGHLIGHTS

Meridian tests 68 barrel discovery

From Staff Reports

A Howard County explorer has yielded a high-gravity Mississippi discovery for MERIDIAN OIL, INC., Midland.

On potential test, the No. 1 C.F. Umphress et al flowed 68 barrels of 46.2 gravity crude, 253 Mcfd and 17 barrels of water on an 18/64 inch choke with a flowing tubing pressure of 250 psi. The well flowed from perforations 9,067 to 9,265 ft., no treatment reported. Gas-oil ratio was 3,270:1.

Permitted as a 9,500 ft. wildcat, the well was drilled to 9,500 ft., where 5 1/2 inch casing was set, and plugged back to 9,412 ft.

Formation tops, on ground elevation of 2,487 ft., include the Yates at 1,460 ft., San Andres at 2,650, Wolfcamp at 6,540, Strawn Lime at 8,710, Mississippian at 9,060, and Fusselman at 9,240 ft. Pay was topped at 9,067 ft. Pay was topped at 9,067 ft.

Location is 2,030 ft. from west and 1,980 ft. from south lines of Section 34, Block 31, T-1-N, T&P survey, three miles west of Coahoma.

Mississippian discovery

Meridian Oil, Inc., Midland, has completed a 68 barrel Mississippi discovery in Howard County, converting a previous Fusselman discovery into a dual producer.

Dollarhide producer flows 200 barrels oil

Strong producers continue to be reported in the Dollarhide (Devonian) field of Andrews County, with OXY U.S.A., INC., Midland, adding a new one to the field.

On potential test, the No. 203 North Dollarhide Unit flowed 300 barrels of 39.8 gravity crude, 169 Mcfd, and 183 barrels of water on a two-inch choke with a flowing tubing pressure of 70 psi. The well flowed from perforations 6,254 to 7,552 ft., which had been acidized with 32,000 gallons of 20 percent NeFeHCL acid. Gas-oil ratio was 847:1.

Total depth was 7,750 ft., where 5 1/2 inch casing was set, and the well was plugged back to 7,710 ft.

Location is 100 ft. from south and 2,640 ft. from east lines of Section 14, Block A-52, PSL survey, 30 miles northeast of Andrews.

Tom Green field gets 24 barrel reopener

MIDDLETON-COVERT, INC., San Angelo, reopened the Eliza Baker field of Tom Green County with completion of a Strawn producer, north of the original opener.

The No. 1 Pate-Hale was finished to pump 24 barrels of 46 gravity crude and 36 barrels of water from perforations 6,402 to 6,406 ft., no treatment reported. Gas-oil ratio was 3,457:1.

Drilled to 6,434 ft., the well was plugged back to 6,423 ft. with 4 1/2 inch casing set at 6,433 ft.

Location is 2,055 ft. from south and 1,843 ft. from west lines of W.J. Skinner survey 2, Abst. 8,359, 11 miles north of San Angelo.

Highlands gets North Sea contract

DALLAS (SWN) — Halliburton Co. has announced that Highlands Fabricators Ltd., which is 50 percent owned by Halliburton's Brown & Root (U.K.) Ltd. and 50 percent by George Wimpey PLC, has been awarded a turnkey contract to develop the Sole Pit gas field in the southern sector of the North Sea for Shell U.K. Exploration and Production.

The contract, valued at approximately $180 million, is the largest single contract to be awarded for United Kingdom Continental Shelf development. The turnkey contract includes the design, materials procurement, fabrication, load-out, installation, hook-up and pre-commissioning of three platforms which consist of jackets, decks and piles. Fabrication will begin September, 1988 and the project is scheduled for completion in the third quarter of 1990.

However, the company says that the board's plan aimed at making the stock more actively expensive. Under the plan, shareholders would be able to acquire more of Texas Air's common stock by exchanging shares of Texas Air, which trades at $54.50, for shares of Texas Air, which trades at $54.50, or earnings power.

Together, the Texas Air deal and the record $5.4-billion offering would set a record for a single day's trading volume.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE:

Get in step with influential, bright people and you will be able to scale new heights. Teamwork enables you to grow and expand your horizons. Put money management in the hands of experts you trust. Do not go off half-cocked about a clever idea or product. Wait for trends to develop before committing yourself to a specific course of action. The more flexibility you have, the better your chances of landing a promotion or new job. Be loving with family members.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: quarterback Joe Montana, actress Adrienne Barbeau, explorer Jacques Cousteau, coach Vince Lombardi.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Work on improving family relationships before something precious is lost. A partnership will produce handsome dividends soon. Seize an opportunity to improve your mind. Travel enjoys highly favorable influences.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): New trends appear that you can capitalize on. If you want quick results, start something new. Do not predict your future based on the recent past. Be sensitive to a child's needs.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You are breaking new ground, so go slow. Outside forces favor a new relationship. Pay attention to details and you will save the boss money. A bonus is possible. Tread lightly in love.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Stay three steps ahead of the crowd and success will be yours! Your winning personality and quick wit make you popular with members of the opposite sex. You feel optimistic about the future.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You are in the center of the action at work. New insights result from a candid discussion with someone you trust. A political choice is nobody else's business. Tell an opponent so!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A weekend job could be the best answer to a temporary financial crunch. Your plans for the afternoon or evening could suddenly change. Compromise, keeping in mind the wishes of mate, partner.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Morning travel is not advised. An important telephone call changes your plans for the day. A decision you make about a close relationship will pave the way for a happy union. Family approves. SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Let mate or a close ally take the lead today. Things are apt to get lively! Share secrets with that special person who will be supportive and understanding. Revise a budget if necessary.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Differences of opinion can be averted by a positive attitude this morning. Compromise after hearing from each family member. Your romantic yearnings will be fulfilled. Play a waiting game.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You see a neighbor in a new light now. Travel should be highly successful. A great time for anyone engaged in sales. Return telephone calls promptly; some opportunities come only once.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): An out-of-town visitor could alter your plans for the day. Welcome the change of pace. Later today, a financial disclosure could cause some resentment.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A great time to go shopping with a cheerful companion. The day gets better and better. Enjoy meeting new people in a unique setting. A friend or relative decides to play Cupid.

Opening lead: ?
Listen to the bidding. If it tells you that the opponents have just about enough tricks to make their contract, avoid making an opening lead that might present them with a trick.

North's takeout double followed by a jump in a new suit at the three-level showed a hand that expected to take almost nine tricks on its own. While it was not 100 percent forcing, South decided to convert to three no trump on the strength of his stopper in opener's suit.

Sitting West was one of the most popular lecturers on Royal Viking Line bridge cruises, internationalist Ron Von der Porten. He feared, correctly, that a low diamond lead would present declarer with his game-going trick, so he chose to look elsewhere for his opening salvo. He decided that the card least likely to cost a trick was the king of spades!

Declarer won the ace and ran six hearts, discarding three spades and a club from hand. East echoed in clubs and also discarded a spade and a diamond while West let go three diamonds. South could still have made the contract by leading a spade, since the opposing spades were now 1-1 but, convinced that West had started with K-Q-10, that didn't even cross his mind. Instead, he led a diamond to the queen. Von der Porten took his king and continued his fine defense by exiting with the king of clubs. That assured the defenders of five tricks—one in each black suit and three diamonds when East was able to push a diamond through declarer's J-9.

While we admire West's handiwork, let's not forget to pat East on the back for his thoughtfulness in signalling in clubs to show possession of a high card.

Traditional farming village sows seeds of high technology

AGRICULTURE

CUGES-LES-PINS, France (AP) — In the hills where Jean de Florette struggled to raise rabbit food, farming is now small potatoes. The major local asset is a theme park called "O.K. Corral."

This cobbled town in Provence, where people still remember what Victor Hugo had for lunch on a stagecoach stop, is where Claude Berry made two films about peasants from the pages of Marcel Pagnol.

But the sort of taciturn, hardscrabble peasants portrayed in "Jean de Florette" and "Manon des Sources" are already history.

"Of the thousand or so residents in Cuges, two, maybe three peasants remain," says Vice Mayor Giles Aicardi, who defines a peasant as one who survives only by what he grows and sells.

Cuges reflects a crisis in Western Europe, and especially France. There is too much food. And big producers, who track their subsidies on computers, are pushing small farms out of existence.

Seven percent of French workers are farmers, three times the level of West Germany or Britain. But more than half are over 50. And 50 percent of that group has no heirs expected to stay on the land.

The problem is partly social. Spurred by television, with good roads into town, many young Frenchmen reject country life. It is a matter of keeping them down on the farm after they've seen Paris.

But few of those who want to stay have the choice.

"My kids are not in this business," says Yves Cornille, 50, one of Cuges' last peasants. "That was my decision. It is a wonderful life, independent, not too hard. You just can't survive."

Cornille, with pressed slacks and a new Renault, is no Pagnol peasant. "Oh, life has changed since then," he laughs.

"Once you could make it with 250 acres," he says. "Now you need 2,500. If I were 25 or 30, I'd quit tomorrow."

Many, like Cornille, fault the European Economic Community for opening borders among its 12 members and applying complex subsidies and quotas. In 1992, borders are to open yet wider.

The Common Market, set up first for iron and steel, threatens to collapse over beef and butter. Two-thirds of its budget goes to subsidize or store food and wine, much of which goes to waste. European governments reject American urgings to end farm subsidies, citing a duty to preserve ways of life dating back 2,000 years. But they also discourage production they cannot sell.

Cornille grows wine grapes, more lucrative than food crops. Modern farmers stick with a single crop, or just a few. Their wives, instead of churning butter or putting up jam, look for jobs.

At the O.K. Corral, a version of Le Far West done with ample poetic license, a son of peasants swaggered down a dusty street. Asked his name, he replied in Maurice-Chevalier English, "Bronco."

Far to the west, the town of Ampus plans to use 500 acres of farmland for a space research center and country club, with laboratories and an old-style bistro set inside giant golf balls.

"Like so many places, we can no longer live by agriculture," says Mayor Roger Casanova, a geology professor in Nice, an hour away. "We must find other ways to make our community viable."

Casanova has found Norwegian-Lebanese interests to invest part of the $40 million needed for a 27-hole golf course around a futuristic campus, designed to attract a range of thinkers.

Young people will learn the techniques of space research, aeronautics, a advanced computer sciences and environmental science, he says. "Half the town thinks I'm loony," he says.

Rene Aicard, 32, is sticking to farming. He squeaks by on his 150 acres, raising strawberries, potatoes, lettuce and rapeseed for oil. His wife, Denise, hauls it to market in a battered little van.

"It's so sad," says Denise, shaking her head. "Farming is the most beautiful profession in the world, and you work the hardest. But it just doesn't pay anymore."

In Paris, Yves Van Haecke, chief adviser to the Ministry of Agriculture, acknowledged that the government had an uphill fight to encourage young people to hold onto family farms. "The drop has become dramatic in the last 10 years," he says. "Farms disappear now at a rate of 3 percent a year, and the rate is increasing. No question, they're on their way out."

As small farms go, hundreds of rural communities alter their centuries-old character.

Ampus is not changing fast. The cubbyhole newspaper-dry goods store displays a tattered advertising poster on the door: "Canadian Rat Poison. Their Last Supper."

A clutch of old men in cloth caps by the fountain seem not to have moved since the last king clattered by in a carriage.

In Cuges, on a wide road to Marseille, stylish hairdressers and shops full of electronic gadgets have replaced blacksmiths and cracker-barrel grocers.

"There is plenty of the closed peasant mentality left," says Andree Chikou, who decided against putting up a sign in her restaurant saying, "The Jean de Florette cast ate here."

With only three years in residence, she found parking tickets on her car if she left it on the little plaza outside. Hometown people parked with impunity.

Still, she says, it was better than the last small French town she lived in. She recalls: "One day the butcher woman said, 'Well, you've been here 10 years, you sort of belong. I'll tell you what happened this morning.'"

But Martin Santoro, the aging town priest who played the priest in the films, sees Pagnol's France as having evaporated. "They're not interested in that way any more," he says. "Kids are leaving."

Berry wanted to film around Pagnol's hometown of Aubagne, but he found that to be a semi-urban sprawl.

Outdoor scenes were no problem. He located an old farm in the hilltop municipality and commune of Riboud, which has a restaurant, a post office, a town hall and a total population of five.

The village scenes for "Manon des Sources" were not so easy.

Rene Aicard, 32, continues to farm his 150 acres in Aubagne, France, where he raises strawberries and potatoes amid high-tech world that's approaching on rural France

Time is near to spray mesquite

The time is fast approaching for the aerial application of herbicides to control mesquite on rangeland. Due to generally dry conditions across most of West Texas, it is important to understand how rainfall, temperature and general plant condition interact to determine the control levels achieved.

From one year to the next, root kill of mesquite can vary from 10 to 90 percent following treatment with foliar applied herbicides. This variability is common despite the herbicide, rate or formulations used. Environmental conditions before and during application as well as the physiological condition of the mesquite are the primary factors that most influence the final root kill obtained.

All herbicides used for aerial treatment of mesquite must enter the plant through the foliage. Damaged leaves prevent maximum intake of the herbicide. For this reason, plant leaves should be in good condition and not damaged by frost, hail, insects or other environmental problems. If leaf damage is significant, delay treatment until plants have healthy regrowth.

The optimum soil temperature for aerial treatment of mesquite is 78 to 83 degrees at a depth of 12 to 18 inches. Some sources recommend that spraying be postponed if the soil temperature is below 75 degrees at this depth. Please remember that heavy-textured, shaded, low-lying areas or very damp soils take longer to become warm and should be treated at a later date compared to other areas.

Kiker

It is general knowledge that optimum control is achieved when adequate soil moisture is present to promote active growth of the mesquite. As such, drought years are not the time to treat.

On the other hand, spraying should also be postponed immediately following heavy rainfall that stimulates new mesquite growth. This new terminal growth means the carbohydrates are moving from the root system to the new foliage, not to the bud zone. As such, root kill will be reduced.

As far as proper time to aerially spray mesquite, it is generally recommended to treat 45 to 90 days following bud break. This time period is identified by the foliage of mesquite changing from a light pea green color to a dark green color. Recent work by Texas Tech has identified an additional time period where spraying should be postponed. This period occurs approximately 60 days following bud break and lasts for up to two weeks. During this time the mesquite is shunting carbohydrates to the fruits and can be identified by elongation of the pods.

In summary, it is important to spray mesquite at not only the right time of the year, but also when the plant and its foliage are in good condition. Dry weather, unexpected late rains, insects or cool temperatures can all interact to reduce the level of control achieved. While it is not possible to exactly predict control of mesquite following aerial spraying, knowledge of how environmental factors affect the plant and its foliage will result in more consistent and desirable results following the aerial application of herbicides.

Export forecast raised by $1 billion

WASHINGTON (AP) — Agriculture Department economists are forecasting an additional $1 billion in farm exports over February's estimate for the current year, raising the total amount to $33.5 billion.

The volume of exports also should increase by 3 million tons to 145.5 million, USDA said Wednesday in a report on the outlook for farm exports.

It said the rise in value chiefly reflects greater shipments of animal and horticultural products as well as soybeans.

Tonnage increased was primarily attributed to additional shipments of wheat, feed ingredients and soybeans.

The forecast was for an increase of 16 million tons and $5.6 billion over the export levels for last year.

Animal products, in this case mainly those derived from livestock, were estimated to be in for a $600 million increase to a record $5.6 billion, an increase of 12 percent. Stronger demand overseas is bringing higher prices for red meats, animal fats, hides and skins, the report said.

Meanwhile, USDA economists said imports would climb $500 million from February's estimate to $21 billion. They said the nation's surplus in agricultural trade most likely would reach $12.5 billion.

Wheat and flour exports are being estimated at 40.2 million tons, an increase of 1.2 million tons or 3 percent from the previous forecast, the report said. It attributed a significant amount of the gain to Export Enhancement Program payments to grain companies to subsidize sales.

Much of the increase was due to purchases by the Soviet Union and China, the report said. It said India also is buying more wheat this year.

Reduced Brazilian soybean production was cited by the economists as the reason for prospective $300 million increase in oilseed and oilseed products exports to $7.7 billion. Most of the increase was expected to be in soybeans.

The increase also was expected to more than offset by a prospective reduction in soybean meal exports.

Exports of sunflower seed oil should reach 300,000 tons, the report said, from a previous forecast of 200,000 tons.

Competitive prices stemming from the lower dollar plus a substantial boost in U.S. almond sales in Western Europe and the Soviet Union are contributing to improved prospects for horticultural products, the economists said. They put the forecast at $3.7 billion, an increase of $200 million from the previous forecast.

Coarse grain, rice, cotton and tobacco exports were expected to remain at the levels forecast in February, according to the document.

WASHINGTON (AP) — An 18-year-old rule that bars husbands and their wives from each collecting federal farm payments is being eased.

Responding to a federal court order, Agriculture Secretary Richard E. Lyng said the Agriculture Department would no longer consider husbands and wives engaged in separate farming operations before and after their marriage as "one person" when federal payments are being figured.

Under the rule, when husband and wife are viewed as "one person" they are eligible for only one payment.

The announcement Wednesday came after a U.S. District Court here ordered the department to halt the practice with respect to husbands and wives who contribute equally to farming operations.

The court acted in a lawsuit filed by Women Involved in Farm Economics (WIFE), a nationwide organization of farm women. It called the rule unfair.

Lyng said the new rule would apply to the 1988 crop year and was subject to revocation if USDA wins its appeal of the lower court ruling.

The payments would have to be refunded with interest if the appeals court overturns the ruling, Lyng added.

WASHINGTON (AP) — USDA scientists said Wednesday they are fighting an $800,000 war against the Russian wheat aphid, a newly imported pest that caused an estimated $36 million in damage to wheat and feed grains last year.

"We will look for methods that will work even if the pests are protected under curled leaves," said Richard S. Soper, an official of USDA's Agricultural Research Service.

The wind-borne pest native to the Soviet Union, Iran and Afghanistan injects disease and toxins into leaves as it feeds on them.

It was first detected in the Texas Panhandle in 1986 and has since spread to 13 western states, the department said. It said the pest was believed to have arrived in Texas from Mexico.

Some 60 million acres are considered susceptible to the creature's attack, the department added.

"It Doesn't Cost Me A Penny!"

Here's what Doug Leggett, manager of Modern Appliance, said about the benefits of working with the Midland Reporter-Telegram's co-op advertising department:

"I can't stress enough how the Reporter-Telegram's co-op advertising service is an invaluable timesaver for me! From the day Modern Appliance opened last year, co-op advertising has been the backbone of my marketing campaigns."

"The best thing about the co-op department is that it doesn't cost me a penny! Most of my advertising costs are reimbursed by the manufacturer, so it is important to have accurate and timely claims. Thanks to the co-op service, in just a few months, many thousands of dollars have been claimed! Also, I'm kept up to date on manufacturers' policies and advertising programs."

"Co-op services are just one of the many reasons that I consistently choose to advertise in the Reporter-Telegram!"

New playground opens world for disabled children

OAK PARK, Ill. (AP) — He used to sit forlornly in his wheelchair while other children were swinging and sliding. But 11-year-old David Hyde won't be an outsider in the new "Playground for All Children."

The 75-by-140 foot playground, to be dedicated today at Holmes Elementary School in this Chicago suburb, is designed to be fully accessible to children confined to wheelchairs — as well as to kids who aren't disabled.

"I'm excited to play in it because it looks fun and interesting," said David, a 6th-grader who suffers from muscular dystrophy. "Before, I would just sit around and watch. There was nothing else to do."

The new playground features an extensive ramp system that leads to its centerpiece — a large platform from which children have access to four slides and a large sandbox.

The ramp is designed to be therapeutic, to help kids develop upper body strength, and is the same grade as access ramps for public buildings.

The playground's sandbox is raised to lap height so children can wheel right up and stick their hands in. They can also slide into it.

And the swings have specially adapted mesh hammock seats that can be slipped under a child in a wheelchair.

The playground also has a herb garden for blind children to develop their senses of touch and smell, and plantboxes for students to cultivate.

"I usually have some friends push me around, but now I can go on the equipment ... and do some of the things that they're doing for the first time," David said eagerly.

About 10 percent of the approximately 500 students at Holmes are wheelchair-bound, said Myra LaRoue, president of the local Parent-Teacher Organization. The school offers special programs for physically disabled children from Oak Park and neighboring western Chicago suburbs.

"These children are 100 percent integrated in the classroom, but notable differences appear when they go outside to play," said Mrs. LaRoue.

To meet that concern, the PTO decided about 2½ years ago to develop a playground that would meet the needs of kids who are disabled as well as those who aren't.

"We wanted them to be accepted as individuals, not ostracized or put aside as would happen in normal life," said Elaine Sherman, the Playground Committee co-chairperson.

But committee members had a hard time finding a model for such a playground. They also discovered it was difficult to buy playground equipment designed for handicapped children.

So they turned to a local architect, Richard Katz, who had some experience designing playgrounds. But even he found the project "a great challenge."

"We looked around the Chicago area, but were disappointed," said Katz. "We did find some honest attempts, but none of them were a 100 percent effort. They satisfy the requirements of disabled children only on a peripheral basis."

So Katz adapted some standard equipment, and used his imagination.

"I would consider ours to be quite unique," he said.

Brandon LaRoue pushes David Hyde on a special swing at a new playground at the Holmes Elementary School in Oak Park, Ill. on Thursday. The Park for All Children is believed to be one of the only playgrounds in the state designed to be fully accessible to wheelchair-bound children.

NATION IN BRIEF

Florida senator listed as possible running mate

MIAMI (AP) — They differ on why, but friends and foes of Florida Sen. Bob Graham agree on one thing — he's a political winner.

"Graham's a phenomenon," said Charles Black, a Republican consultant who helped run then-Sen. Paula Hawkins' unsuccessful 1986 re-election bid against Graham. "He is not what you call a charismatic personality, but he's a public relations genius."

The first-term senator is on most lists of potential Democratic running mates for Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis, although Graham's brief Washington tenure could work against him. Conventional wisdom would point the governor in the direction of someone with long experience in the nation's capital.

Graham also has some serious policy disagreements with Dukakis. For example, he is known for vigorous enforcement of the death penalty, signing more than 150 death warrants while 16 executions were carried out, and for support of military aid to the Nicaraguan Contras. Dukakis opposes both.

Report urges recreation

WASHINGTON (AP) — A new Reagan administration report urges state and local governments to do more to provide outdoor recreation, a recommendation that a Democratic lawmaker quickly criticized as reflecting "the administration's policy of no spending for parkland or facilities."

The report Thursday by the Task Force on Outdoor Recreation Resources and Opportunities also suggests that higher fees be charged to cover the cost of operating and maintaining recreation facilities in the national parks.

But the report stops short of endorsing recommendations made more than a year ago by a presidential commission to establish a trust fund of recreation money to aid states and communities and to create a network of "greenways" to tie together existing and new trails, waterways and bike paths.

Rep. Bruce Vento, D-Minn., who heads the House Interior subcommittee on national parks and recreation, contended that the new report "just reflects the administration's policy of no spending for parkland or facilities."

The report, he said, is "an example of this administration not taking care to pass on these resources to future generations."

Railroad bill passed

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government would have more muscle when it seeks penalties against railroad workers who commit safety violations, under legislation on its way to the White House for President Reagan's signature.

The Senate passed the measure on a voice vote Thursday, giving final congressional approval to legislation sparked by a railroad disaster that occurred 17 months ago.

The legislation was developed after 16 people were killed and 175 hurt Jan. 4, 1987, when three connected Conrail locomotives passed a stop signal and collided with an Amtrak passenger train in Chase, Md.

The measure, approved Thursday and having the support of administration officials, would make it illegal for train workers to tamper with safety devices. The Conrail crew was found to have placed tape over a device that whistles if a train passes a stop signal.

The bill also would increase federal civil penalties levied for safety violations. The maximum fine would increase from $2,500 to $20,000.

Under the measure, the government would acquire the right to penalize individual workers for safety violations. Currently, federal authorities only have the power to penalize railroad companies if rules are broken.

Court to reconsider ruling

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A federal appeals court decision to reconsider a landmark ruling striking down the Army's ban on homosexual soldiers was a setback but not a reason to despair, says a homosexual-rights group's lawyer.

"The struggle for equal rights for lesbians and gay men is a long-term struggle," Leonard Graff, legal director of National Gay Rights Advocates, said following Thursday's decision. "Realistically we have to expect some setbacks. That doesn't mean we give up."

The 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals agreed to reconsider a Feb. 10 ruling in the case of a discharged soldier from the Seattle area.

A panel of the court ruled 2-1 at the time that 1981 Army regulations providing for discharge on the grounds of homosexual orientation were unconstitutional.

Man was awaiting orders

DENVER (AP) — Federal court records show an informant told authorities a Colorado man charged last month with threatening the life of Jesse Jackson was awaiting orders to kill the Democratic presidential candidate.

The informant alleged in federal court records that Leland Bowden, 33, has "a strong hatred for blacks and Jews," and was expecting the orders from a group called the Christian Patriots Defense League.

Bowden, a stockyard worker in La Junta, Colo., was arrested May 14 and charged with making a "threat against a person protected by the Secret Service." He was released two days later on $5,000 unsecured bond.

The complaint against Bowden was sealed May 13 at the request of Assistant U.S. Attorney Joe Mackey, who said he feared Bowden might flee if the warrant against him were made public before he was arrested.

Mackey filed a motion to unseal the complaint June 2, and it was made public this week.

Court upholds injunction

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court has upheld an injunction barring Japanese fleets in an area off the Alaska Coast from salmon fishing with huge gillnets, a technique that traps porpoises and other marine mammals.

The move Thursday was hailed by environmentalists and a native Alaskan fishermen's organization. It was a defeat for the Reagan administration and the Commerce Department, which had issued the permits for fishing with the gillnets.

"We know at least we're not going to have this ecological disaster played out in our waters this summer, and we're hopeful it is going to be stopped for good," said Alan Reichman, a Seattle-based spokesman for the Greenpeace environmental group.

The Federation of Japan Fisheries Cooperative Association and the Reagan administration had asked the high court to overturn the injunction and permit fishing to resume pending the high court's consideration of a formal appeal.

Society speaks out against pet peeve — surfing animals

HONOLULU (AP) — Professional surfer Rell Kapoliokaehukal Sunn figured she and her dog, Shane, had the "Wet Pet" division of a recent surfing contest all wrapped up. Then the pig with the sunscreen showed up.

Brian Keaulana, another pro surfer, and his 4-month-old pig "Chop Chop" sent the 2,000 spectators and five judges at Makaha Beach on Leeward Oahu hog wild, beating a dozen other human competitors who rode their boards tandem with everything from a baby goose to salt-water fish in a bowl.

"Shane is the surfing dog of Makaha, the kids love him," Sunn said of her 2-year-old mutt. "But Brian really did some moves on the board with that pig. Chop Chop. Shane just sort of sits there."

But Sunn, who is 37 and works as a lifeguard, said winning was not important. She was happy that the first "Wet Pet" contest, part of the 11th Annual Rell Sunn Menehune Surfing Championships, was a hit.

"The kids out there were going crazy. Everybody just loved it," she said.

Not everybody. The Hawaiian Humane Society received numerous phone calls protesting the event and wants to prevent similar contests in the future, according to Bob Spencer, public relations and fund development director.

The society is not impressed by surfing animals.

"We are against putting animals in unnatural or dangerous situations," Spencer said. "And there is nothing more unnatural than a pig on a surfboard."

Further, Spencer said, delicate pink pig skin is prone to sunburn, and not all owners are as considerate as Keaulana, who covered Chop Chop's ears and snout with multicolored zinc oxide.

"People thought the pig was in distress because it was green," Spencer said. "They didn't know it was covered with colored suntan lotion."

Sunn's "Wet Pet" contest is the first one Spencer has heard of in the islands, but he's worried the idea might catch on.

"It might look fun, but whose entertainment is it?" he asked. "It's certainly not entertaining or fun for the animals."

Sunn disagreed, but acknowledged Spencer had a point.

"Shane loves being in the water. He loves to surf and he loves the attention," she said. "But some animals might not like it, and their owners shouldn't push them just to show off."

Sunn said she refused to let one inexperienced surfer enter the "Wet Pet" competition after she saw the woman practicing with her dog.

"She wiped out and had attached the dog's leash to the board so it really got knocked around in the waves. That dog could have drowned or broken its neck," Sunn said.

Spencer said the Humane Society "isn't declaring war on these people, we just want to educate them," noting that animals are prohibited on state beaches, and that regulation could be more strictly enforced.

Sunn said she plans to hold the competition again next year, but will regulate who can enter.

"We're only going to have people who we know surf with their animals, who've seen out before," she said. Meanwhile, she says she'll keep surfing with Shane.

"He loves it and I don't think anybody should tell me what to do with my dog," she said. "I don't force him. I just put the board on the beach, he jumps on the nose and we paddle out together."

"I only take him out in gentle surf. He likes small waves, nothing bigger than 5 feet."

New York reduces intern work hours

NEW YORK (AP) — New hospital rules curtailing the long hours that dull the reactions of interns and residents mean they will ultimately become better doctors, the state health commissioner says.

Under the rules adopted Thursday, doctors training at hospitals in the state will no longer be scheduled for 36-hour shifts and 100-hour-plus work weeks.

The action curbs a training system for doctors that some considered a rite of passage but that critics have condemned as part hazing, part labor exploitation and dangerous to patients.

The commissioner, Dr. David Axelrod, a champion of the reforms, said he expected the state's action to spearhead a national trend.

New York, with 13,000 residents and interns, has 16 percent of the nation's doctors in training, while an additional 6 percent are to be found in teaching hospitals in neighboring Massachusetts, where similar rules are about to be adopted, Axelrod said.

"Ultimately, these regulations will mean that we have better trained physicians and a higher quality of care," he said.

A review of doctor training began in the wake of a grand jury report citing faulty hospital care in the 1984 death of Libby Zion, 18-year-old daughter of writer Sidney Zion.

The new rules put a 12-hour limit on emergency room shifts for interns, residents and attending physicians.

In other services, young doctors will not be required to put in more than 24 hours a shift and their work week may not average more than 80 hours during any four consecutive weeks. They will have at least eight free hours between work shifts, at least one full day off every week, and will be barred from moonlighting at other hospitals.

The 32-member State Hospital Review and Planning Council adopted the code revisions without dissent.

Axelrod said the 12-hour emergency room shift, which is to take effect Oct. 1, already is being followed in 95 percent of the state's teaching hospitals. Most of the other new rules will go into effect July 1, 1989.

Ellis Island to provide family histories

NEW YORK (AP) — With the help of a new computer, millions of Americans will be able to "learn for the first time how they became Americans," says the president of the Ellis Island Restoration Commission.

"Never before has such an extensive pool of genealogical information been so readily available to the public," Philip Lax said as he launched a new computerized family history center project on Thursday.

By using a simplified computer for 10 to 12 minutes, visitors to Ellis Island will be able to glean information from original ship manifests: where relatives came from, how old they were, who traveled with them, where they were going and what possessions they carried.

A special program is being developed to track immigrants whose names were changed or spelled phonetically by immigration officials.

"It's like Plymouth Rock. It marks the entrance between the old and new worlds," said Alan C. Nelson, commissioner of the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service. "It will bring a living use and an ongoing use."

The officials estimated that 100 million Americans whose relatives passed through Ellis Island on their way to the New World will be able to trace their roots through the computer.

The plan is to feed 5 million names a year into the computer, for a total of 17 million, said Lax. The goal is to open the Ellis Island Family History Center during the monument's June 1992 centennial. The island's renovated Great Hall is to be reopened in the fall of 1989.

On hand to help launch the project were 105-year-old Mary Kelly Stevenson of Manchester, Conn., the oldest living American to immigrate through Ellis Island, and Margaret O'Connell Middleton, 72, of Tucson, Ariz., whose mother, Annie Moore of Cork County, Ireland, was the first immigrant processed there.

"I always loved America," said Mrs. Stevenson, whose sprightliness earned gasps of appreciation from the crowd. She passed through Ellis Island from Belfast, Ireland, in 1920.

Mrs. Middleton presented a $10 bill to the commission, symbolizing the $10 gold piece her mother — then 15 years old — received on Jan. 1, 1893, to commemorate the opening of Ellis Island.

"You gave my mother $10. So this will help you," said Mrs. Middleton. The gift marked the beginning of a $25 million fund-raising campaign to finance the family history center.
