TV 'trial' for Oswald on docket

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The trial of Lee Harvey Oswald begins next week in London, England.

And United States District Court Judge Lucius D. Bunton will preside over the lawsuit — a televised trial — to determine if Oswald did indeed assassinate President John F. Kennedy, 46, on Nov. 22, 1963, in Dallas.

It will be a mock trial produced by London Weekend Television. About 30 "live" witnesses, who would have testified in the real trial had Oswald not been killed two days later by Jack Ruby, will testify. And the guilt or innocence of Oswald, then 24, will be determined by 12 Dallas County jurors.

The filmed trial will be aired simultaneously in England, the United States, Canada, Australia and New Zealand on Nov. 22. In the U.S., it will be broadcast via ShowTime, a television-cable service, Bunton said. The version to be aired in the United States will be edited down to four hours. The Great Britain version will be six hours.

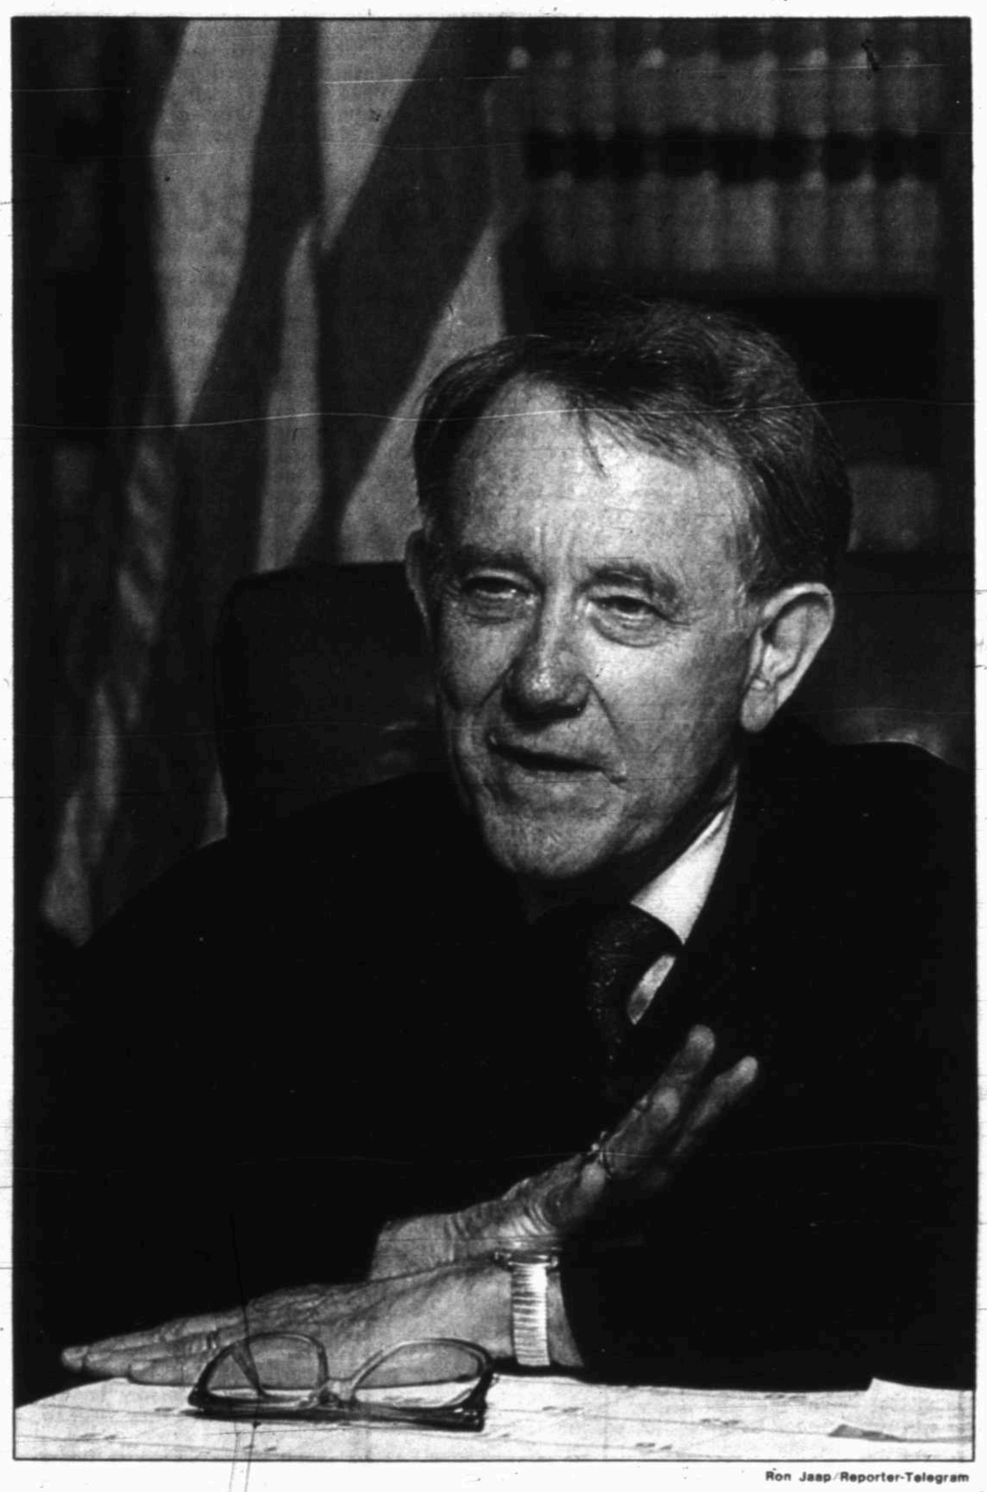

"This is a semi-documentary," Bunton said. "It is going to be just as true to life as we can get it — as they can get it — with live witnesses from Dallas. All of the witnesses are going to be actual witnesses — the ones that are alive. And it's going to record a lot of about what would have developed if Lee Harvey Oswald had been tried. There will be no coached actors."

Among possible witnesses who will not be at the mock trial will be Kennedy widow's, Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis, 56; Oswald's Russian-born wife, Marina; and former Texas Gov. and Mrs. John Connally. The former first lady was riding with her husband in the Dallas caravan when Oswald allegedly shot the president with an Italian-made rifle from the sixth floor of the Texas School Book Depository. Connally, 69, who was in Kennedy's car, was injured by rifle fire.

"ACTUALLY, THEY (the Connallys and Mrs. Onassis) couldn't add a whole lot to it anyway," said the 61-year-old Bunton, who has been a federal judge since 1979. Bunton presides over the Midland-Odessa Division and Pecos Division of the federal court system's Western District of Texas.

Bunton was selected to preside over the mock trial after his friend, federal appellate court Judge Bob Hill of Dallas, had declined the initial offer to "star" in the production. Hill, who had a previous commitment, had asked Bunton if he could do it.

Test ban talks will resume

LONDON (AP) — Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze said today the United States and Soviet Union have agreed to resume talks on a nuclear test ban that were broken off six years ago.

He told a news conference Moscow had "fundamentally an agreement from the United States to resume negotiations, to resume talks in Geneva on banning nuclear tests."

A U.S. official in London confirmed "we have agreed to resume talks without pre-conditions on a nuclear test ban treaty."

The official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the talks would be held in the framework of regular U.S.-Soviet arms control negotiations scheduled to resume Sept. 18 in Geneva.

The Soviet Union unilaterally halted nuclear weapons tests last August, but its moratorium — which has been extended several times — is due to expire Aug. 6. The United States has conducted several nuclear tests during the period.

Shevardnadze, who is winding up an official visit to Britain, also reiterated the Kremlin position that it is ready for a second summit with the United States, but only if such a meeting produces concrete results in arms control.

He refused to predict when a summit might be held.

Asked when he might meet with U.S. Secretary of State George P. Shultz to make summit preparations, Shevardnadze replied, "Soon," but declined to elaborate.

President Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev agreed at their summit last November in Geneva to meet again this year in the United States. However, no date has been set.

Shevardnadze said he and British officials agreed that a second superpower summit must produce "concrete results, particularly in the security (arms control) area."

He said, "We do have an interest in a summit. We are ready to have that meeting," but added: "An empty summit we cannot accept."

Shevardnadze had been scheduled to meet with Shultz in May to make arrangements for the summit but Moscow canceled the meeting after the U.S. air raid on Libya in April.

Rain won't last through drought-damaged Dixie

Associated Press

Storms carried drenching rains and cooler temperatures to parts of Dixie, where weeks of hot, dry weather have withered crops, forced restrictions on water use and killed 10 people, but forecasters say the relief won't last.

Severe thunderstorms Tuesday evening dropped hail and more than 3 inches of rain on Wilmington, N.C., within 90 minutes and nearly 1½ inches on Savannah, Ga., in six hours, the National Weather Service said.

"That'll help in the short term," said Bill Barlow of the National Severe Storms Forecast Center in Kansas City, Mo. But since the rain was localized, "it's not going to make that much difference."

The 63 mph winds in the Wilmington storm flipped over one small plane, damaged others and ripped off the corrugated metal roof of a hangar at New Hanover County Airport, said Tom Oswald, a weather service specialist at the airport. Up to 5,000 Wilmington residences lost power, said David Hester of the Carolina Power & Light Co.

The Savannah storm also carried 63 mph winds through the northeast Georgia city, and by early today the temperature dipped to 78, 20 degrees cooler than Tuesday's high.

Tuesday was the first day since July 7 that no high-temperature records were set in the Southeast, Barlow said. Temperatures were mostly in the 90s and high 80s in Georgia, southeastern Tennessee and the Carolinas, although Hunter Air Force Base near Savannah had a 100-degree reading, the official high in the 48 contiguous states.

Oil price: Temporary turnaround or market trend?

NEW YORK (AP) — A series of events caused oil prices to rebound strongly Tuesday, erasing recent declines, but analysts are uncertain if the turnaround is temporary or signals new upward pressure on the market.

Saudi Arabian King Fahd's public plea for OPEC production restraints, is being listed as one reason for the upturn in oil prices, as is Ecuador's announced aggreement to reduce production by 5 percent as a show of support for the Saudi's move to curtail production, but others are predicting the price will go even lower, perhaps to $8.

Crude oil trading on the New York Mercantile Tuesday was characterized as confused and erratic as traders tried to read the contradictory signals.

"I would say this was a technical correction that doesn't have any strong underpinnings," said William Randol, oil-industry analyst at the New York investment firm First Boston Corp.

John Hill, a trader at Merrill Lynch Energy Futures in New York, said: "I have to say that most people are still a little skeptical over whether or not we've seen the lows."

The price for Britain's benchmark North Sea Brent Crude, which hit a record low of $8.75 per 42-gallon barrel in Europe on Monday because of fears about a market glut, was trading in the $9.30-$9.40 range by late Tuesday.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, the price of West Texas Intermediate, the best-known U.S. crude, soared more than $1 a barrel to $12.12 in heavy trading, then closed at $12.11. Unleaded gasoline jumped more than 2 cents a gallon to 34.10 cents, closing at 34.11 cents, and home-heating oil rose more than 2 cents a gallon to 33.45 cents, closing at 32.92 cents.

"This is a very strong rally, but the jury is still out on what it means," said Peter C. Beutel, assistant director of Elders Futures Inc. in New York. "Everybody's asking why is it going higher, then they turn around and buy because they think, 'Maybe there's something we don't know.'"

Many analysts said the market rallied because traders bought oil to repay borrowed oil they had sold earlier at higher prices, known as short-covering, which can create temporary supply shortages and drive the price up.

Others attributed the rally to Fahd, who on Monday exhorted his oil minister Ahmed Zaki Yamani to seek stability in world oil markets when the 13-nation Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries convenes an emergency session July 28 aimed at reaching a pact to restrain output.

The Saudi ruler expressed strong anxiety over the collapse in world oil prices, which were about $30 a barrel late last year, and traders interpreted this as a signal to buy.

Although world demand for OPEC oil is about 16 million barrels a day, members of the Praying cartel pumped 19.5 million barrels a day in the first half of July, the highest level in more than four years, according to industry estimates.

Saudi Arabia, the world's largest exporter, has doubled its output from last year's level to about 5.5 million barrels a day in an attempt to capture a greater share of the market from competitors in and out of OPEC.

'Relieved' UTPB now considering merger question

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

ODESSA — University of Texas of the Permian Basin officials, relieved that the Select Committee on Higher Education decided not to recommend the school be closed, have turned their attention to suggestions that it be merged with four other state universities.

"I don't think there will be another (university) system created," UTPB President Dr. Duane Leach said Tuesday.

In unanimous votes, the panel last week recommended the 1987 Legislature preserve UTPB and three other institutions listed as possible candidates for closure: East Texas State University at Commerce, Texas A&M University at Galveston and Sul Ross State University at Alpine.

After voting on the four schools, the panel heard staff presentations on possible mergers that would pair the University of Houston and Texas Southern University; North Texas State University and Texas Woman's University; Sul Ross State and Angelo State; Texas Tech, UTPB, West Texas State, Midwestern State and Sul Ross; UT-Arlington and UT-Dallas.

The study of possible mergers included a look at keeping the merged schools open, but combining administrative functions.

But Leach said the UT System would not relinquish control of the institution without a fight because of its location in oil-rich West Texas — a chief contributor to the Permanent University Fund.

"The University of Texas System realizes the importance of having a university in the region," he said.

Leach also responded to charges by committee members that the university should have more Hispanic students.

Retired U.S. District Judge Reynaldo Garza of Brownsville said the school, with about 130 Hispanics among its 1,900 students, should do something about recruiting Hispanics who are not going to college.

State Rep. Al Luna, D-Houston and a committee member, said universities see their role as educating anglos, not Hispanics and blacks.

"These institutions are in a changing environment. When you find yourself in a changing environment, you adapt or you die," he said.

Leach dismissed the comments saying "I don't think we're doing a bad job of recruiting minority students when you consider the resources available to us."

Because UTPB is an upper-level institution, it does not recruit freshman and sophomore students, Leach said.

U.S. army troops, equipment join Bolivian war on drugs

LA PAZ, Bolivia (AP) — About 140 U.S. Army troops, along with helicopters and transport planes, have begun arriving in Bolivia to aid the country's drug agents in a campaign to wipe out dozens of clandestine jungle-based cocaine labs, officials said.

U.S. officials who spoke Tuesday on condition of anonymity said the narcotics raids will be staged with the help of six U.S. Army Black Hawk assault copters, which were airlifted with their pilots to Santa Cruz, about 200 miles east of La Paz, on Monday.

The operation is being conducted at the invitation of the Bolivian government, said Mark Jacobs, press attache for the U.S. Embassy. He confirmed late Tuesday the arrival of the U.S. helicopters, four transport planes, and an unspecified number of "support personnel."

A U.S. Embassy source said about 140 American military personnel scheduled to provide support in the anti-drug campaig have been provided with diplomatic immunity, and that the operation has been authorized by Vice President George Bush.

The raids will be coordinated by the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration, the American officials said. About 15 DEA officers are in Bolivia, and are expected to fly aboard the copters to coordinate the actions of Bolivian drug agents once the raids begin.

The operation comes one month after President Reagan signed a directive declaring drug trafficking a threat to U.S. national security.

Bolivia, an impoverished landlocked country of 6.4 million, produces half the cocaine that reaches U.S. and European markets, according to the Drug Enforcement Administration. Only Peru produces more, authorities say.

President Victor Paz Estenssoro told The Associated Press recently that cocaine brings in $[illegible] million a year illegally to his South American country, compared to $500 million for all legal exports.

"If we do not address this problem decisively," said Paz Estenssoro, "the day could come when the economic power (that traffickers) wield could result in their governing the country, including via democratic means."

Panel says Flight 191 shouldn't have tried to land

WASHINGTON (AP) — The crewmembers of a Delta Air Lines jumbo jet which crashed and killed 137 people at Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport last Aug. 2 should not have attempted to land, even though they had no knowledge that the thunderstorm in their path contained brutal winds, federal investigators ruled.

The National Transportation Safety Board said Tuesday the Lockheed L-1011 jumbo jet had flown into wind shears created by a microburst — a complex, severe downdraft — and was unable to recover before plunging to the ground 6,000 feet short of the runway.

The board acknowledged that neither the crew nor flight controllers on the ground knew of the severity of the storm, and expected the plane would break into fair weather, as forecast, before actually touching down. But it said the crew's decision to stick to the glide path rather than play safe and turn away after encountering lightning was a principal "probable cause" of the crash.

The agency also faulted crew training for handling wind shears, or sudden changes of wind direction, and the lack of "definitive" weather information as contributing reasons for the accident.

Delta, based in Atlanta, called the board's findings "incomplete, inaccurate and most painfully flawed."

Hollis Harris, senior vice president for operations, said "Delta categorically rejects in great part the board's views of this tragic accident. We are convinced the flight crew operated the aircraft in full accordance with all the appropriate and recommended Delta and Federal Aviation Administration procedures and regulations."

The aircraft's flight data recorder and cockpit voice recorder, said Harris, both "affirmatively confirmed the crew's aggressive and correct application of the proper and accepted technique of escaping the lethal effect of downburst vortices by applying maximum engine power, attempting to raise the aircraft nose to the highest safe pitch angle."

Bill Melvin, an Air Line Pilots Association official and a Delta pilot, said he was disappointed that the board "hasn't recognized the real reason that these guys got trapped — a multiple microburst. They thought they were flying into a condition that thousands of guys have flown into."

Melvin said that "one of the reasons that pilots are not as fearful" as they should be of storms, "is that in cases like this before, the government told us a good pilot would have flown through it."

Medical personnel cover the bodies of victims of last August's Delta Airlines jet crash at Dallas-Fort Worth Regional Airport.

After a day-long debate, the board rejected one member's suggestion that primary blame be fixed on the storm itself, which apparently triggered several microbursts and associated wind shears, and cropped up without warning south of the airport.

The panel also passed over recommendations that would have assigned more specific responsibility to the crew's handling of the emergency, the weather service and the failure of other pilots to relay to the Dallas-Ft. Worth tower the fact they had observed unusual weather just minutes before the crash.

The crew was headed by Capt. Edward N. Connors, who had 29,300 hours of flight experience, 3,000 of them in the L-1011. He and his co-pilot and flight engineer died in the crash, as did a motorist who was struck by the plane on a highway near the airport. There were 27 survivors.

The board said "the probable causes of this accident were the flight's crew decision to initiate and continue the approach into a cumulonimbus cloud which they observed to contain visible lightning, the lack of specific guidelines, procedures and training for avoiding and escape from low altitude wind shear, and the lack of definitive wind shear hazard information."

Safety board member Joseph Nall argued that "this is a microburst case, not a pilot competence case. Nobody on the day of the accident foresaw a microburst."

The board's compromise language, approved 4-0, was fashioned by acting chairwoman Patricia A. Goldman, who argued against fixing primary responsibility on the storm because "the clues were there, and people failed to recognize them."

The independent safety agency heard testimony that the crew, which already had made one detour on its flight from Fort Lauderdale, Fla., to avoid a thunderstorm, had received virtually no information from the ground to indicate that what one air traffic controller had called a "little rainshower" near the airport was potentially destructive.

However, the captain elected to stay on his glide path after his own co-pilot, Rudolph P. Price, told him more than a minute before the crash that "lightning's coming out of that one, right ahead of us."

Moreover, after the plane's first encounter with a wind shear — which Connors successfully fought through after suddenly losing altitude and 44 knots of airspeed — he still returned to the glide path rather than pulling up to go around the airport, they said.

Crash victim's wife led from courtroom in tears

FORT WORTH (AP) — A woman suing Delta Air Lines because her husband was killed in the crash of Delta Air Lines Flight 191 broke into tears and was helped from the courtroom during graphic testimony.

In the first trial among dozens of civil suits resulting from the Aug. 2 crash, attorneys on both sides have focused on the Reynolds family.

A psychologist testified Tuesday, the second day of the trial, that Kathy Ann Reynolds was totally dependent on her husband, and turned to cocaine to ease the pain after his death.

Paul Reynolds, 32, of Fort Lauderdale, Fla., was one of 137 killed in the crash at Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport.

"She was very much in love with her husband," Miami psychologist Mary Haber said. "She was not able to deal with his death at all. She was using drugs, trying to escape, trying to deal with it any way she could."

Ms. Haber also testified that a few days after the crash, while Ms. Reynolds was giving birth to the couple's second child, her dead husband's jewelry with unburned skin still attached was brought to her in the hospital.

"The skin wasn't burned. She had been told that he was burned," Haber said, adding that Kathy Reynolds wanted to see her husband's autopsy pictures to "see if he had suffered."

"Also, a part of her hoped that he wasn't dead," Ms. Haber said. "(In the pictures) she saw that he wasn't burned, that he died from massive head trauma. You could see that from the pictures. The head was smashed in."

Ms. Reynolds, who was seated with her lawyers while Haber testified, turned in her chair and wept, then had to be helped from the courtroom.

Ms. Haber said Ms. Reynolds gave up cocaine after almost daily counseling sessions and has shown significant improvement in recent months.

Ms. Reynolds, 29, has waived punitive damages against Delta in return for a quick trial.

She instead is seeking compensation for her husband's lost financial support of her and her two children. She also will seek damages for mental pain and suffering caused by her husband's death.

Her attorney, Bill Hoppe of Miami, said Monday in opening arguments that he would ask jurors to assess against Delta "substantially more" than the estimated $1.6 million Reynolds would have contributed to his children over the next 40 years had he lived.

But Delta attorney Frank Finn offered a negative portrayal of Reynolds and his wife, telling jurors that Delta considered a $300,000 settlement "fair under the facts."

Ms. Haber testified that when she began treating Ms. Reynolds in January, she had been using cocaine heavily for several months and had let her life slip into disrepair because of her husband's death.

Ms. Reynolds would break into tears when she saw an airplane, once followed a motorist who resembled her dead husband for 30 miles, and wouldn't sleep in the bed she had shared with Reynolds.

"She did not have her husband to depend on," Ms. Haber said. "He took care of everything around the house. They had a truly idyllic marriage from her point of view because he handled everything. I call it a fairy tale. After he died, she lost everything."

Judge denies call for mistrial in slavery case

KERRVILLE (AP) — A judge denied a mistrial motion made after jurors deliberating an organized crime case inadvertently were given documents that had not been admitted into evidence.

State District Judge Tom Blackwell made the ruling Tuesday, the second day of deliberations, after lawyers discovered the documents had been given to the jury along with 440 other exhibits.

The jury is deciding the fate of rancher Walter Wesley Ellebracht Sr., 54, his son Walter Wesley Ellebracht Jr., 33, and ex-ranch worker Carlton Robert Caldwell, 21. Deliberations resumed today.

The three are charged with violating the state's organized crime law by conspiring to commit aggravated kidnapping and murder. The state claimed the Ellebrachts lured drifters to their sprawling Hill Country ranch and then forced them to work as slaves.

The three are accused in the alleged abduction and torture death of Anthony Bates.

The state claims Bates, a one-eyed drifter from Huntsville, Ala., was tortured to death with an electric cattle prod.

His body was allegedly drenched in gasoline and torched.

The seven-woman, five-man jury began deliberation late Monday after nine weeks of testimony.

After court officials determined the unadmitted documents had been turned over to the jury, Blackwell called the panel into the courtroom and told jurors to disregard the evidence.

BUNTON

"And I answered quickly, 'yes,'" Bunton said.

Bunton said London Weekend Television wanted a Texas federal judge who "is familiar with federal rules of criminal procedure and criminal evidence. British rules won't have anything to do with it."

The federal indictment which accuses Oswald of shooting Kennedy was drafted by Paul Hutson, one of Bunton's law clerks. However, Bunton noted that in 1963, there was no federal offense against killing a President. "Since that time, the law has been changed." The "real" murder trial then would have been tried in state court.

The courtroom setting will be a studio designed after the likeness of a U.S. federal courtroom.

"I don't think it hurts us to look at events that created big changes in our history and try to make that determination (about the presidential assassination) in our minds," Bunton said. "I don't think it hurts to discuss items like that at all."

Bunton is leaving for London on Thursday. The production of the trial begins Monday and will run through Thursday or, possibly, Friday, Bunton said.

The "real trial" of Oswald, however, would have taken "weeks" to try.

TWO OF THE NATION'S foremost trial lawyers will prosecute and defend Oswald, who will be represented by an empty chair. "Obviously, he's not going to testify," Bunton said.

Prosecuting the case will be Vincent Bugliosi, 51, who successfully prosecuted cult leader Charles Manson for the 1969 Sharon Tate-LaBianca murders in Los Angeles and who authored the best-selling book "Helter-Skelter: The True Story of the Manson Murders." Bugliosi offices in Beverly Hills, Calif.

Defending Oswald will be "Cowboy Attorney" Gerry Spence, 57, of Jackson, Wyo. Spence authored such books as "Trial by Fire," "Of Murder and Madness," and "Gunning for Justice." Spence represented Karen Silkwood in the Kerr-McGee energy conglomerate lawsuit.

Bunton said Spence told him that he may "prop a picture" of Oswald up in the defendant's chair.

"Any judge would tell you it is a pleasure to try a case with good lawyers," Bunton said. "The trial goes smoothly; you don't have that nit-picking stuff that doesn't amount to a hill of beans. He gets in and gets to the point."

From his perspective, Bunton said the trial would be "no more challenging than it would be for any other trial."

"You've got to realize that it's easier for a judge to try a case where good lawyers are involved than it is to try a case where poor lawyers are involved. And I'm looking forward to it. They are two nationally known lawyers. They are in court, and they want to win."

Spence's and Bugliosi's questions on direct and cross examinations "can be quite penetrating, and I think it (the trial) will be good," the judge said.

BUNTON SAID he was unaware just "what questions the lawyers are going to ask."

"I'm not sure they don't know at this time what questions they are going to ask. It will depend on the witnesses."

Bunton said whether or not Marina Oswald's testimony before the Congressional Committee or the Warren Commission in probing into Kennedy's assassination would be admissible in the mock trial would be determined on the basis of whether or not she would have testified in a real trial had Oswald lived.

"If she opted to testify for either the prosecution or defense, anything she said before the Warren Commission or anything she said before the Congressional Committee would be admissible.

"I don't know whether Marina Oswald would have testified during the trial," Bunton said. "She would have spousal immunity. She could not be compelled to testify."

Currently, there are "arguments right now" over what is and what is not admissible in the trial. Bunton will make those determinations. "I've talked with both of them (Bugliosi and Spence), and I've talked with the producer-director."

Bunton noted that the Oswald trial would not be the first televised mock trial.

The televised trial of King Richard III, accused of murdering two of his young nephews, Edward V and his brother, in the Tower of London in 1483, became a popular television show in Great Britain.

"They had an actual trial by jury determination," Bunton said, "and Richard was acquitted based on the evidence that they had."

Bunton said that the Oswald trial "will be informative to the public."

"You've got to realize that this event occurred almost 23 years ago," the judge said. "There are people who are married and have children who weren't even alive at the time of the assassination."

"I just think it's good for history buffs."

Santa Cruz dailies reported Tuesday that the U.S. helicopters will fly American support personnel to a secret jungle base in the Beni region northeast of La Paz.

From there, Bolivian authorities say, Bolivia's special anti-drug squad will begin its raids on cocaine-processing plants in the Beni, an area the size of New Jersey, and Chapare, where in January a group of the U.S.-trained anti-narcotics police escaped after being surrounded by armed coca farmers.

About 80 of the police officers, known as Leopards, are expected to take part in the operation, which could last up to two months, said a U.S. Embassy official.

A top official in Washington, who spoke on condition he not be identified, said, "The copters will serve as chauffeurs. The Army isn't conducting the operation. They've been told to fly the Bolivians."

The pilots have been ordered to shoot back if fired upon, said one U.S. official in Bolivia, also speaking on condition of anonymity.

Most of the U.S. military personnel are based in Panama with the Southern Command and are expected to arrive within days to assist in the campaign that police and the Drug Enforcement Administration hope will disrupt Bolivia's giant cocaine industry.

Three U.S. Air Force C5-A transport planes delivered the helicopters, which are armed with .30-mm machine guns and carry up to 11 passengers, to Santa Cruz.

A giant C-130 Hercules transport carrier also brought provisions into La Paz, U.S. officials said.

According to Jane's All The World's Aircraft, the Sikorsky Black Hawks also are equipped with bullet-proof fuel tanks, can cruise at 184 mph and are especially well-suited for landing in adverse conditions.

Most of Bolivia's pure cocaine, derived from the coca plant, is shipped to Colombia where it is then distributed to the United States and Europe.

Bolivia, with the lowest per capital gross national product in South America, has had more than 100 coups, mainly by the military, since it became independent from Spain in 1825.

HEAT

Temperatures today were expected to range from 90 to 95 degrees, but should reach triple digits again Thursday, the weather service said.

The weekend heat-stroke deaths of three elderly people raised the number of heat-related fatalities in Georgia to five. Two heat-related deaths have been reported in North Carolina and one each in South Carolina, Virginia and Louisiana.

The heat and the months-long drought also have killed hundreds of thousands of chickens, forced water-use restrictions in 73 towns in Georgia and many communities in the Carolinas and Tennessee, and withered crops.

Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., Tuesday urged the federal Department of Agriculture to expedite action to declare parts of South Carolina natural disaster areas to enable farmers to qualify for low-interest loans.

In Tennessee, reduced water levels on lakes are spawning a bumper crop of algae and weeds that could taint water supplies, officials said.

Areas of middle Tennessee that draw water from Old Hickory Lake have reported problems with water quality, said Elmo Lunn, water management director for the state Health and Environment Department.

"People are saying it's got a strong, musty smell and it tastes grassy," Lunn said. "But it's not harmful or risky."

The heat wave has resulted in unusual ways of keeping cool.

Officials in De Kalb County near Atlanta opened an air-conditioned shelter for elderly people to cool off, and a Tifton, Ga., radio station is playing 30 minutes of Christmas music a day.

"It's just a beat-the-heat thing," said WTIF secretary Dorris Yancy. "The phones ring solid when we take requests."

UTPB

"Sometimes people want to stay in the region and we hope we can entice them to do so," he said. "Students who go on to earn advanced degrees often have more of a choice of where they go than when they got their bachelor degree."

Leach said UTPB recruits most minorities through the available pool of education students and the Texas Association of Minority Engineers.

Scholarships also are available to both Hispanics and blacks, he said.

Edia Hernandez, president of the Midland League of United Latin American Citizens, declined comment to Leach's response. She said she wasn't familiar with minority enrollment statistics at UTPB.

South African judges rule part of emergency decree void

DURBAN, South Africa (AP) — A three-judge panel today declared void all or parts of five of the six definitions of "subversive statements" banned under the national emergency decree on grounds of vagueness.

However, the Natal province Supreme Court rejected a black union's argument that the entire state of emergency was illegal.

Justice John Didcott told a crowded courtroom that several aspects of the definitions under the law were "hopelessly uncertain."

In his two-hour-long opinion on the case brought by the mainly black Metal and Allied Workers Union, Didcott said just one of the six clauses defining a subversive statement was precise enough to be considered lawful.

That clause forbids incitement of people to participate in unlawful strikes, boycotts, processions, civil disobedience or to oppose compulsory military service.

WORLD

He said two of the clauses were far too broad to be understandable.

One bars any statement that advances the object of any unlawful organization.

"I consider that paragraph (a) is hopelessly uncertain, and that no ascertainable meaning can be derived from it," Didcott said.

The other provision considered too broad prohibited any statement that engenders hostility between one person or group and another.

"It is unintelligible," Didcott said.

Didcott's ruling means most aspects of the nationwide state of emergency decree remain in force. The union had contended the regulations were void because President P.W. Botha announced them simultaneously with the emergency decree, rather than proclaiming the emergency decree first.

Emergency powers still in force are detention without charge, curfews, sealing off areas and the power to shut down publications.

The ruling came a day after the three-member high court in this Indian Ocean port heard final arguments in the case.

Hussein fears Israel may expel West Bank Arabs

AMMAN, Jordan (AP) — King Hussein says he fears Israel could eventually expel the growing Arab population of the occupied West Bank, victimizing the people and jeopardizing the stability of his kingdom.

In a wide-ranging luncheon session with reporters at his Al Nadwa palace, the king said Tuesday he hopes to organize financial assistance to help West Bankers remain on their land, and shrugged off criticism of his break with Palestinian Liberation Organization chief Yasser Arafat.

Referring to Israeli studies of population trends in Israel and the Arab lands it occupies, Hussein asked, "What happens in the year 2000 when you have an Arab population equal or more than the Israelis?"

One study, carried out by Meron Benvinisti, the former deputy mayor of Jerusalem who heads the West Bank Data Project, forecast the percentage of Jews in Israel and the occupied territories will drop from 65 percent in 1969 to under 55 percent by 2005.

Hussein said Palestinians in their native land might then become "second-class citizens or worse" or that their growing numbers might threaten to overwhelm the Jewish character of Israel, forcing action by Israeli leaders.

"Will there be a serious attempt to expel these people?" Hussein asked. "That is what concerns me the most.

"In the worst possible case, if they lose hope, if they are pushed out, we have our problem here," he said. "National security is at stake."

Jordan already has a majority population of Palestinian refugees due to massive flights in the 1947 and 1967 Arab-Israeli wars, in which Israel first won its existence and later captured the West Bank from Jordan.

Hussein said a five-year plan is being drawn up by his government aimed at helping the 850,000 West Bankers, nearly all of whom are Jordanian citizens. Jordan has said the West Bankers need housing and jobs to prevent Israeli pressure and economic hardship from driving them into Jordan.

Prime Minister Zaid Rifai, who attended the Tuesday session, said the Jordanian plan calls for spending about $150 million a year on programs to be selected by West Bankers.

Some of the money would be routed through Arab mayors the king hopes will replace Israeli officials in the occupied lands.

But Rifai said the government had not yet obtained any funds for the plan from Arab or Western donors, and Jordan's plans have been challenged by the PLO, which opposes the idea of accepting Israeli-appointed mayors.

"We can't siphon help to villages and towns which are essentially administered by Israeli officers," Hussein said.

However, three potential West Bank mayors recently backed away from Jordanian suggestions that they accept appointment by the Israelis. Syrian-based PLO factions have warned that people accepting such posts might risk their lives.

The king gave little hope Tuesday of any immediate peace initiative to replace the one that died on Feb. 19, when he broke a year-long effort alongside Arafat toward peace with Israel.

Hussein said last week's closure of all offices of Al Fatah, Arafat's dominant PLO guerrilla group, was due in part to the group's alleged interference in a Jordanian parliamentary election and in a student demonstration at Yarmouk University.

The government previously said the closure action was due only to criticism of Jordan's government by Al Fatah's Revolutionary Council.

Hussein said the government had "conclusive evidence" that the PLO faction had given a "large sum" to an Islamic fundamentalist, who claimed he lost the election due to government fraud. Hussein said he believe the recent election, in the northern city of Irbid, was fair.

Asked if that had prompted the office closures, Hussein said, "That was part of it. And I think they were involved also in the Yarmouk situation," referring to a May clash between students and police in which three people died.

Hussein has called for Palestinians to reconsider their leadership, but his split with Arafat and crackdown on Fatah have roused West Bank demonstrations backing the PLO chief.

Hussein again accused Arafat of reneging on commitments to help advance peace efforts, and said his own credibility had been harmed.

But he refused to rule out an eventual reconciliation with the PLO chief, saying with a laugh, "It's a strange world. Who knows?"

Gemayel wants forces to remain

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — President Amin Gemayel on Tuesday asked for a six-month extension of the U.N. peacekeeping force in south Lebanon rather than three months and won support from three of the five big powers in the Security Council.

The mandate of the U.N. Interim Force in Lebanon expires on Saturday. The U.N. Security Council is expected to meet soon to vote for an extension.

French Ambassador Christian Graeff told reporters after meeting with Gemayel at the presidential palace that France "backs Lebanon's request for a six-month extension of UNIFIL's mandate."

The ambassadors from China and the Soviet Union also said their governments would support the request.

A presidential statement said Gemayel would meet with the chief diplomats of the United States and Britain on Wednesday.

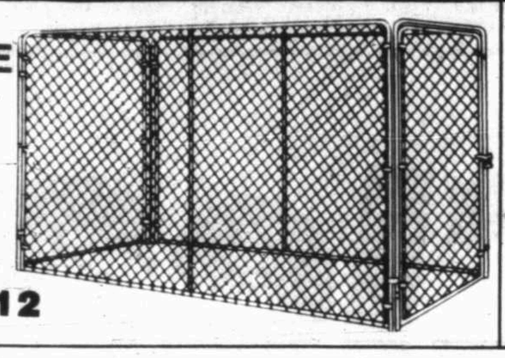

Those five nations are the permanent members of the 15-member Security Council.

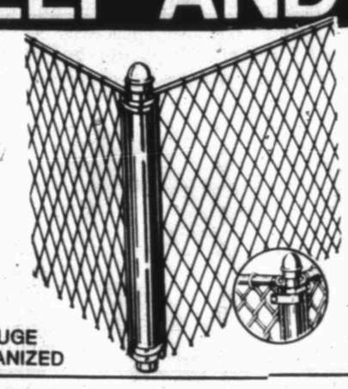

The 5,800-strong UNIFIL has troopers from nine nations and has been stationed in south Lebanon since 1978. Its mandate had been renewed every six months until last May, when the latest mandate was trimmed to three months at France's insistence.

France said at that time the shortened mandate was meant to pressure all parties concerned into allowing UNIFIL to fulfill its mission of deploying throughout southern Lebanon up to the Israeli border.

Garbage, traffic snarls mark protests' second day

CIUDAD JUAREZ, Mexico (AP) — Garbage dumped on the doorstep of a store and a five-minute halt of traffic in this border city marked the second day of protests by opposition party supporters who claim their opponents won state elections by fraud.

About 100 people marching from the headquarters of the National Action Party, or PAN, Tuesday night through a main downtown street paused at the store and dumped bags of trash against the front door.

The store, closed at the time, is suspected of being a storage place for ballots used to rig the July 6 state elections, said Jose Luis Orduno, a PAN member.

"Our people saw them bringing in boxes full of ballots here the week before election," said Orduno.

The march ended at a plaza in front of the cathedral where nine members of the City Council were wrapping up a 24-hour fast, also to protest alleged electoral fraud.

PAN demands nullification of the elections in the states of Chihuahua and Durango, its southern neighbor. It claims Mexico's ruling Institutional Revolutionary Party, or PRI, stuffed ballot boxes, slowed down the vote in opposition strongholds and resorted to other tricks of "alchemy," as election fraud is known in Mexico.

PRI has not lost a presidential election or the governorship of any of Mexico's 31 states since it was founded in 1929.

Earlier Tuesday, traffic in Juarez was halted for five minutes but failed to develop into a nightmare jam as PAN members again protested.

Drivers stopped their vehicles, lifted the hoods and honked their horns. The honking continued for 25 minutes after traffic flow had resumed.

A government helicopter circled overhead briefly during the 2 p.m. MDT traffic stop throughout Juarez, the largest city in Chihuahua, with a population of 1.2 million.

Many motorists, however, were aware of plans for the protest and stayed off the streets, preventing what could have become a massive traffic snarl.

PAN members said such tactics would be repeated indefinitely.

"This is to protest the fraud by the state government of which we were made victims," said Gustavo Munoz, 36, who stood by his brown pickup truck in the middle of the intersection. "We're going to do this every day at 2 o'clock until they respect our vote. Besides, it's fun."

Because of PAN protests, riot squads were mobilized on both sides of the Rio Grande Monday night. U.S. officials blocked off streets near river crossings in El Paso, Texas, after thousands of protesters swarmed to international bridges in Juarez and blocked them.

Mexican army units were put in charge of the Juarez police department last Thursday and kept watch over weekend rallies by PAN and PRI supporters.

Monday night's bridge takeovers began after PAN's losing mayoral candidate, Gustavo Elizondo, spoke to a rally in front of city hall.

About 1,000 PAN supporters took over the city hall earlier Monday in Durango, which is the neighboring state's capital and 440 miles south of the border. They vowed to occupy it until the election is annulled.

Nicaraguan lawmaker seeks political asylum

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — An opposition lawmaker sought political asylum in the Venezuelan Embassy on Tuesday just hours before the National Assembly was to begin proceedings against him in an arson case, an assemblyman said.

Felix Pedro Espinoza Briones, of the Conservative Democratic Party, went to the embassy early Tuesday because he feared the Sandinista government was trying to have him removed from his assembly seat and jailed, said Sergio Torres, another of the party's five assemblyman.

An embassy official said Espinoza Briones climbed a chain-link fence at the back of the embassy grounds and hid until embassy personnel began arriving for work about 8 a.m. The official spoke on condition his name not be used.

"Apparently the Sandinista guard outside the embassy and our own guard inside the embassy grounds were both asleep when it happened and didn't know a thing," the official said.

He said the embassy told the Nicaraguan Foreign Ministry about the case and has begun proceedings to determine whether Espinoza Briones can be granted asylum.

Nicaragua's Justice Ministry has accused Espinoza Briones of being involved in the May 10 burning of his ranch house in northern Nicaragua. The pro-government newspaper El Nuevo Diario said Tuesday that two men who allegedly burned down the house had implicated Espinoza Briones.

But Torres said the house was not insured and Espinoza Briones would have had no motive for burning it. Torres charged that the government was trying to remove Espinoza Briones from the assembly to "weaken our party's representation."

The 10-member justice commission of the National Assembly was to begin hearing the case on Tuesday and can recommend that Espinoza Briones be tried in court or expelled from the assembly, Torres said. Six members of the commission are Sandinistas.

Its decision is subject to approval by the full 96-member assembly, where the Sandinistas have a 61-member majority.

The Justice Ministry sent the case to the assembly because as a legislator, Espinoza Briones has immunity from prosecution.

He is the first national assemblyman to seek political asylum in an embassy in Managua since the Sandinistas came to power in 1979.

Espinoza Briones is a representative from the northern provinces of Neva Segovia, Madriz and Esteli.

Because the area is a war zone, where U.S.-backed Contra rebels battle government troops, Espinoza Briones' widespread support there "is a problem for the government," Torres said.

Evacuees to be moved farther away from plant

MOSCOW (AP) — The newspaper Izvestia, contradicting previous reports that the radiation danger from the Chernobyl accident had lessened, said thousands of families evacuated from the area of the power plant will be moved farther away.

The Ukrainian atomic power station's No. 4 reactor exploded and burned April 26, releasing radiation that spread over Europe and eventually around the world.

According to the most recent official report, issued early last month, 26 people died in the accident and its aftermath.

Izvestia, the Soviet government daily, said Tuesday that new houses for evacuees will not be built in areas just north of the evacuation zone, where the people now live, but in regions farther from the power plant.

"At this time, perhaps the main problem is living space," Izvestia said, adding that some evacuees were unhappy about the decision to move them. "Every family that was evacuated from the 30-kilometer (18-mile) zone should receive an individual house or apartment by winter."

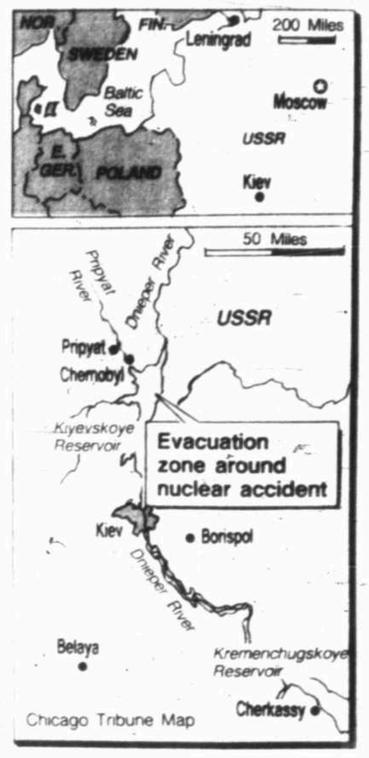

Izvestia did not say how long the evacuees would be in their new homes, but suggested the relocation would be lengthy, if not permanent.

It quoted Yuri A. Puplikov, a spokesman for the state construction agency, as saying: "We are not just building houses, we are building people's lives.

"The kind of life this will be depends to a large extent on us. We would like it if people would forget quickly the unhappy events connected with the accident."

Officials said after the disaster that more than 100,000 people were evacuated from the 18-mile zone around the plant 80 miles north of Kiev, a city of 2.4 million that is the Ukraine's capital.

Subsequent reports indicated many were sent to new homes and jobs in distant regions of the Soviet Union, but many remained in temporary housing near the zone.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Greece working to release U.S. hostages, official says

ATHENS, Greece (AP) — A Foreign Ministry official today told the sister of an American reporter kidnapped in Lebanon that Greece is encouraging Syria to intervene for the release of the reporter and four other American hostages.

"Because of its close ties with Syria and the personal link between (Greek) Premier (Andreas) Papandreou and (Syrian) President (Hafez) Assad, the government is trying to do its best so that Syria intervenes for the release of the hostages," said Constantine Georgiou, secretary general of the ministry.

Georgiou met for 25 minutes with Peggy Say, whose brother, Terry Anderson, was kidnapped in Beirut, Lebanon, in March 1985. Anderson, 38, is chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press.

Mrs. Say, 45, of Batavia, N.Y., was in Athens at the invitation of Margaret Papandreou, the U.S.-born wife of the Greek premier. Mrs. Papandreou visited Syria last week and discussed the hostages with Assad.

Papandreou's governing party, the Panhellenic Socialist Movement, maintains close ties with Assad's Syrian Ba'ath socialists, and Georgiou said Papandreou also discussed the hostages with Assad when the Syrian president visited Greece in May.

Sikh gunmen storm jail

AMRITSAR, India (AP) — Sikh gunmen stormed the Kapurthala jail Tuesday night, shooting two guards to death before freeing two Sikh terrorists and escaping in a taxi, police in that city reported.

They identified one of the Sikhs freed by the four gunmen as Balwinder Singh and they described him as one of the most dangerous terrorist leaders in Punjab state. The other escapee was not identified.

Kapurthala is 40 miles southeast of the Sikh holy city of Amritsar.

It was the second time in four months that Sikh terrorists have freed prisoners. On April 5, gunmen shot their way into a courthouse in Jalandhar near Kapurthala, killing six policemen and freeing three Sikhs charged with murder.

Duarte: Proposal isn't new

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — A new rebel proposal to end the country's civil war is no different from a plan the government rejected two years ago, according to President Jose Napoleon Duarte.

He said Monday night the guerrillas' offer "maintains the same thesis...that they did not recognize the constitution, nor the government, nor the armed forces, nor the elections, nor democracy. That is what the document basically says in different language, but the same concept."

Duarte spoke with reporters after opening Engineers' Week, organized by the Salvadoran Association of Engineers and Architects.

The latest proposal, read Friday on the guerrillas' clandestine Radio Venceremos, said rebel forces must remain armed until a peace plan is fully implemented, with the country divided into guerrilla and government zones.

But unlike earlier rebel proposals, it did not insist on reforming the constitution.

Priests' exile protested

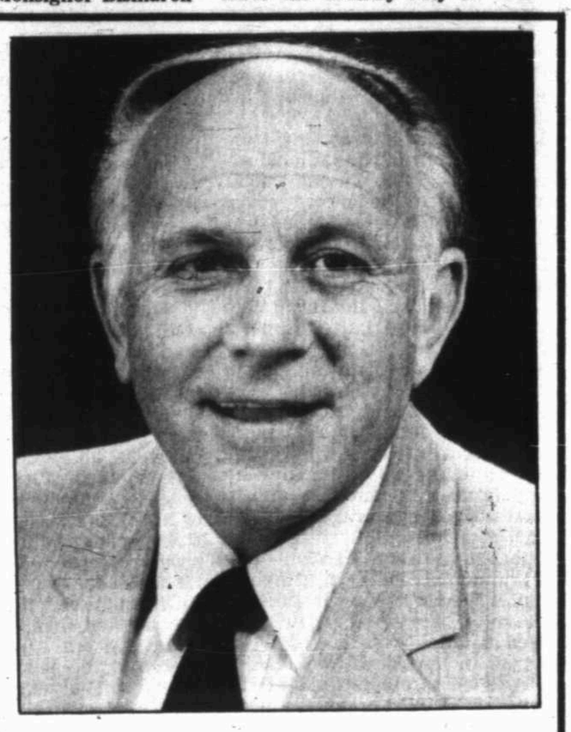

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — The Roman Catholic Church in Nicaragua said Tuesday the forced exile of two priests violates religious freedom, but the government replied the two had illegally supported U.S.-backed rebels.

The exchange appeared in the government newspaper Barricada, which published a letter from the Bishops' Conference, signed by its secretary, Monsignor Bosco Vivas Robelo, and a response from Rene Nunez Tellez, an aide to President Daniel Ortega.

The bishops said they "protest most energetically" the expulsion of Bishop Pablo Antonio Vega and the forced exile of Monsignor Bismarck Carballo, both Nicaraguans.

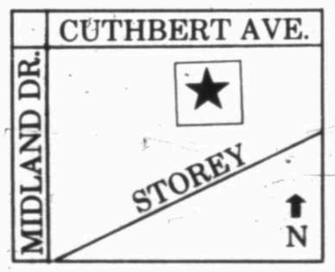

Vega, the second-ranking church official in Nicaragua, was forced to leave the country July 3.

...meeting the challenge

Jill Heith of Midland was very pleased with the results she received from her classified ad. On one of Midland's windier days the tent her son received for his 7th birthday blew out of their backyard. Jill called the Reporter-Telegram classified dept. and placed an ad describing the lost tent. The very next day she received a call from a gracious lady who had found the tent and taken the time to disassemble it and found her ad in the Lost and Found.

Possible naming of first black ambassador gains support

NATION

Robert Brown

WASHINGTON (AP) — The potential appointment of Robert J. Brown as the first black to represent America as ambassador to South Africa is drawing support from a spectrum ranging from Jesse Helms to Jesse Jackson.

The broadness of that support matches the wide experience of Brown, a 51-year-old public relations executive, whose career bridges the gap from civil rights sit-ins to the Nixon White House.

Brown was an associate of the Rev. Martin Luther King, and he maintains close ties to liberal Democrats and the civil rights movement.

Yet he is a staunch Republican who served as a minority affairs liaison for President Nixon and more recently participated in a State Department working group helping to shape the Reagan administration's South African policy.

If nominated by President Reagan, confirmed by the Senate and accepted by the white-ruled government of South Africa, Brown would become the first black U.S. ambassador to that nation. Another black, John Burroughs, is the U.S. consul general in Cape Town. The current ambassador, Herman W. Nickel, has served for four years and is on home leave.

The conservative Helms, R-N.C., a senior member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, "is favorably impressed with the man," according to his spokeswoman, Barbara Lukens.

Jackson, a Democratic candidate for president in 1984, said Brown "is an individual who can find common ground with extremes and that is obviously a skill that lends itself to diplomacy."

"I met Bob Brown...during the sit-in strike period (of the early 1960s). He was a supporter of direct action to change the South. He was also a close friend and supporter of Dr. King," Jackson said Tuesday.

Brown has also picked up support from Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., and Atlanta Mayor Andrew Young, an early follower of King and the Carter administration's ambassador to the United Nations.

Dole, who spoke with reporters after conferring with President Reagan on Tuesday, said, "I know Bob Brown to be an outstanding person."

Young, in a statement, said, "Bob Brown has my highest endorsement. In fact, he is probably the only person that Jesse Helms and I could both endorse."

But not everyone sees Brown's ability to please conservatives and liberals alike as an asset.

"He's a wheeler-dealer. He's the kind that can play both sides of the fence," said Herman Gist, a black Democratic legislator from North Carolina. "I just can't see with him the ability to go to South Africa and solve the problems over there."

The administration's consideration of Brown, who has no diplomatic experience, comes at a time of a growing movement in Congress to impose economic sanctions against South Africa.

One critic of the administration charged that Brown's appointment would be an attempt to deflect that movement.

"I think Robert J. Brown is a good man...and I think he would make a good ambassador, but that is really not the point," said Randall Robinson, executive director of TransAfrica, a Washington group that opposes racial segregation in South Africa. "Ambassadors do not make policy. They convey it."

"I think the president is trying to put a black face on an anti-black policy, cynically believing that will deflect public criticism of his South African policy," Robinson said.

Jackson agreed that "in South Africa we need a new message and a new messenger to make a difference."

"Still you can only hope this is a signal of a shift in South African policy. ...(That) it reflects in Reagan's mind some concession to the emergent reality in South Africa," Jackson said.

A note of criticism was sounded Monday by the office of Sen. Lawton Chiles, D-Fla. An aide to Chiles, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said that when Brown was a White House aide, he and a partner received an $860,000 Small Business Administration contract that was intended for disadvantaged minority firms.

The incident was discussed during 1977 hearings. Brown was not accused of wrongdoing, but questions were raised about whether he had used his position to get preferential treatment, the aide said. Chiles declined to comment Tuesday.

SOME PEOPLE BUY AIR CONDITIONERS LIKE THERE'S NO TOMORROW.

When it's time to replace your old air conditioner, it'll probably only take you a little while to find a new one that looks pretty good and doesn't cost much. But it'll take a lot longer to realize a quick bargain is likely to cause a slow burn on your wallet every month.

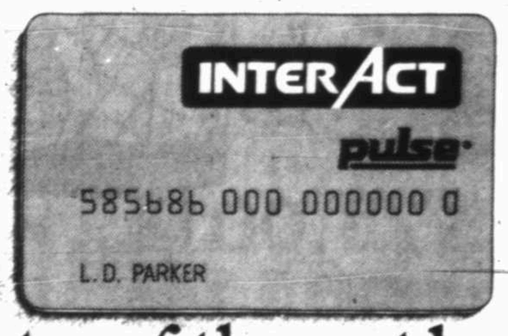

A high-efficiency air conditioner could make a difference in your cooling costs this summer and every summer. A high-efficiency choice means steady savings because you're getting the same amount of cooling using less electricity than with a low-efficiency unit. On top of this, you'll get a valuable rebate from your electric company if your central air conditioner or window unit meets our Energy Action standards.

See your recognized Energy Action air conditioning contractor or dealer for help in choosing a high-efficiency air conditioner or heat pump. Tomorrow, you'll be way ahead of the game.

It pays to choose an Energy Action Unit.

Proposed cost-of-living hikes supported by Reagan

By JAMES ROWLEY

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate proponents of a bill to give the nation's 37 million Social Security recipients cost-of-living increases say President Reagan's support lends momentum to the measure.

Formally endorsing a concept he informally endorsed several months ago, Reagan lent support Tuesday to legislation to abolish the longstanding requirement that annual inflation of 3 percent is needed to trigger cost-of-living hikes.

"We're very happy about it," said Richard Bryers, spokesman for Sen. John Heinz, R-Pa., who introduced the legislation that is also supported by eight Republican senators seeking re-election this year.

The president had said he liked the idea of the legislation when Heinz first mentioned it several months ago, Bryers said.

Bryers said Reagan's support will provide momentum to attach the bill to budget reconciliation legislation on which the Senate Finance Committee is scheduled to begin work next week.

Word of Reagan's support came Tuesday from Sen. Paula Hawkins, R-Fla., who is in a tough re-election fight with Democratic Gov. Bob Graham.

"The president said he agrees with me, that he will approve this concept," she told reporters following a White House meeting with the president.

White House spokesman Albert R. Brashear confirmed that Reagan endorsed the proposal.

Even though the budget resolutions passed by the House and Senate provide for 2 percent COLAs this year, the 3 percent threshold would have to be waived or abolished by Congress because inflation is projected to be less than 2 percent.

Even though the budget resolutions passed by the House and Senate provide for 2 percent COLAs this year, the 3 percent threshold would have to be waived or abolished by Congress because inflation is projected to be less than 2 percent.

Budget Director James Miller III provided key impetus when he recommended to Reagan that he support the bill because it would not hurt his budget projections, Bryers said.

"One of the problems with this bill, in the past people looked at the short-term for budgetary impact and that stops them from looking at the long-term" implications of the COLA trigger, Bryers said.

Ed Dale, spokesman for the Office of Management and Budget, said abolishing the trigger would have negligible impact on the 1987 fiscal year budget.

Proponents, including Social Security Administration actuaries, argue that the 3 percent trigger would actually end up being more costly because in years when there is no COLA, the government cannot raise Medicare premiums or payroll taxes for Social Security.

Heinz, chairman of the Senate's Special Committee on Aging, argues that the government would save $1.8 billion over five years by abolishing the trigger.

Heinz, who also chairs the National Republican Senatorial Campaign Committee, picked Mrs. Hawkins to deliver the president's announcement, according to a Republican aide who spoke on condition of anonymity.

"Heinz had gotten a couple of calls from OMB, they had indicated a willingness to make a formal announcement," the aide said. The senator "has been putting pressure on them to make a formal announcement since May."

Mrs. Hawkins is considered one of the most vulnerable Republican senators up for re-election this year. Her home state has a large number of Social Security recipients.

Bryers denied Mrs. Hawkins was picked to give a boost to her campaign.

"Actually, Senator Hawkins for a long time had been involved in this particular issue," Bryers said.

"He didn't pick her to get credit for this. And in fact, lately, she had been one of the prime persons as far as dealing with the White House.

Tobacco ads target for ban

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress, which banned cigarette advertising from the airwaves 15 years ago and prohibited the broadcast of ads for smokeless tobacco products this year, is considering a major escalation.

If Rep. Mike Synar, D-Okla., has his way, all promotion and advertising of tobacco products — in newspapers and magazines, on billboards and even as part of sales displays — will be outlawed.

The advertising and tobacco industries are girding for a battle, but Synar contends a recent Supreme Court decision stole most of their ammunition.

Synar last month introduced a bill, recommended by the American Medical Association, to silence advertising he said promotes "the leading cause of death in America."

Would such a ban violate constitutionally protected free-speech rights? Synar says the nation's highest court already has answered "no." But others disagree.

An Aug. 1 showdown is likely when Synar and advertising industry representatives are scheduled to appear before a House subcommittee on health and the environment chaired by Rep. Henry Waxman, D-Calif.

The Supreme Court on July 1 allowed Puerto Rico's government to forbid gambling casinos from advertising among the island's residents.

Rehnquist added: "Legislative regulation of products and activities deemed harmful, such as cigarettes, alcoholic beverages and prostitution, has varied from outright prohibition on the one hand...to legalization of the product or activity with restrictions on stimulation of its demand on the other hand.

The court said Puerto Rico's ban passed a three-part test established by previous rulings in cases involving restrictions on truthful commercial speech:

— It served a substantial governmental purpose.

— It directly advanced that interest.

— And it was no more extensive than necessary to serve that interest.

Congress to revitalize deficit reductions

WASHINGTON (AP) — With federal debt payments eating up nearly one out of every five tax dollars and a lagging economy deepening the ocean of red ink, congressional leaders are faced with revitalizing their lagging deficit-reduction efforts.

Lawmakers held private talks Tuesday on how to reaffirm the $11.7 billion across-the-board spending cut that was imposed on March 1 — but thrown into doubt when the Supreme Court last week struck down part of the Gramm-Rudman budget-balancing law.

Legislation to maintain those cuts could see House floor action by the end of the week.

House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., said the package of cuts made earlier should remain intact. "The $11.7 billion (cut) has already been acted upon and we shouldn't touch it," O'Neill said.

However, lawmakers were being lobbied to make changes to protect some of those affected, including civil service and military pensioners who lost their cost-of-living increases.

House Budget Committee Chairman William H. Gray III, D-Pa., expressed confidence the House would stick by the cutback, which he said was needed to meet future deficit-reduction targets. He said different methods of affirming the cut were being discussed, with an eye toward making the task easier in the Senate, where a single lawmaker can more easily force amendments.

If Congress succeeds in that task, it would be just a prelude to politically tougher tasks ahead, which include:

— Raising the limit on the national debt to accommodate another year of more than $200 billion in deficit spending. The Senate Finance Committee approved Tuesday a new debt ceiling of $2.323 trillion, up from $2.079 trillion.

— Passing spending cuts to meet the Gramm-Rudman law's deficit ceiling of $144 billion for fiscal 1987, which begins Oct. 1. Congress has yet to approve any of the 13 regular appropriations bills or the other savings envisioned in the budget.

— Deciding how to enforce Gramm-Rudman targets if Congress and the president fail to do the job. The Supreme Court ruled unconstitutional the original scheme of having the Comptroller General, an officer of Congress, order the executive branch to make the cuts.

Congress could leave the Gramm-Rudman law essentially unchanged. Under that scenario, spending cuts required to meet deficit targets would no longer be automatic; Congress would have to vote for them.

Nation of savers?

Ronald Reagan said at the beginning of this term that he wanted taxation reform to be the major accomplishment. Undisputedly, that is an admirable goal that could mean more financial freedom for most Americans and a stronger economy for the nation. Now, as conferees are preparing to begin hammering out details of the legislation, they should keep in mind what tax reform really is all about.

Just as "taxation without representation" was a rebellious cry in the days leading up to the revolution that marked this nation's birth, today's battle cry can be summed up in the words "taxation without savings." The bill passed by the Senate, notably, significantly lowered individual and corporate tax rates, but it also killed the deductibility of sales taxes along with deductions for some contributors to individual retirement accounts (IRAs).

Although those in the Congress who have expressed deep concern for the necessity of avoiding massive revision of the legislation have a justifiable point in that too much tampering could lead to a wholesale assault by special interest groups, there has been enough interest shown in tax reform nationwide in the last few weeks to assure that Americans want lower tax rates and a simpler system of figuring their tax obligation come April 15th. They're certainly not getting either under the present system.

Yet, if the purpose of reforming the tax code is to not only leave more money in taxpayers' pockets and to encourage them to save a large part of that money to stimulate private borrowing and thus stimulate the economy, it makes absolutely no sense to wipe away the tax advantage 40 million Americans already have discovered in IRAs and their deductions for sales taxes. Those provisions, if not reinstated by the conferees,will undercut the primary purposes of the tax reform.

Writing a report for the Heritage Foundation, a Washington-based public policy review organization, Peter J. Ferrara, a Washington attorney who is a former member of the White House Office of Policy Development, asserted that the popular IRA contribution "is not a loophole, not a special interest tax shelter, and not a tax avoidance scam. It is a way that 40 million Americans have begun saving for their retirement needs ... the Senate Finance Committee would ... penalize all these Americans."

In the topsy, turvy world of Washington politics where congressional representatives and senators come and go, and programs are regularly changed, not much in the form of financial security can be promised the average American. Forty million of them thought they had found that security in IRAs.

Congress should not now wipe away that financial security.

LETTERS

Which salaries get cut?

So Mr. Jennings (letter, July 9) wants to cut my pay by 20%. Why not just cut unnecessary spending? Let's see what I, as a paramedic-equipment operator with the Midland Fire Department, can do to cut expenses.

I can drive to an emergency 20% slower using 20% less fuel and reducing future repair costs. If I weren't a professional, who loves my job, I could cut my pleasantness by 20% or maybe my skilled treatment. To help save 20% on costs, we'll use less water on your fire, less oxygen in your deprived lungs, less nitrous oxide for your pain, and turn off the patient compartment air-conditioning during 90 degree-plus weather.

Maybe if you like we can never leave the station at all and help reduce the $77,000 bill that you, as a member of the public, owe the Emergency Medical Services in past due accounts for 1985.

For Mr. Jennings' information, I work 56 hours per week in 24-hour shifts for $2,000 per month. Besides being away from home during that time, I have to deal with people that can be rude beyond belief and still keep a smile on my face and in my voice. I sometimes have to pick up someone's brains from the pavement and try to eat and sleep at night. We do all of this while working in the most dangerous occupation in the world (119 firefighters died in the line of duty in 1985 in the U.S. alone). Why don't you try removing the charred body of a once-happy 2-year-old from a burned mattress and then carry on in a normal and professional manner.

My salary now just covers monthly expenses. The 2% cut I'm expecting in October will throw me backwards a little, but it will cut my death benefits to my daughter by $25,000.

I risk my life, limbs and sanity in a thankless job every day for people I don't even know. I'm not griping, but it upsets me when an outsider does. Maybe you should cut the pay of those making 3½ times more than me for sitting on their duffs. The people that plan and spend our tax dollars are at fault. Don't blame us hard-working grunts for wasting money.

Now, are you sure you want to cut my pay?

Shriners really care

I noted reports recently in the national news that allegedly came from the Orlando, Fla. newspaper concerning contributions to the Shriners Hospital system. It was stated that only one-third of the monies donated to the Shriners actually went to the support of their crippled children's and burned children's hospital units.

The Shriners have refuted this fact and have felt like an error has been made in the compilation of the facts and figures. As an orthopedic surgeon in Midland, I have been privileged over the last five years to see the vast majority of children sent to the Shriners hospitals from this area of the United States. I personally do not know how much of the Shriners' budgets go to support their hospitals, but I can freely and irrevocably state that the Shriners provide the finest level of care in the world for the pediatric orthopedic or burned patient.

In my experience with them, they have freely and eagerly accepted the responsibility for the care of each and every child I have sought to send them and never has any child or family ever been charged for the care that the child has received.

I think that is the bottom line. The Shriners are a lot more than a bunch of guys who wear funny hats and run around on motorcycles. They are a group of individuals from all walks of life who really care about children. They take this care far beyond lip service and, indeed, work very hard to finance and run what has to be the finest system of pediatric care in the world today. I admire the Shriners and appreciate their fine work.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Wednesday, July 16, the 197th day of 1986. There are 168 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On July 16, 1945, the United States exploded its first experimental atomic bomb over the desert in Alamogordo, N.M.

On this date:

In 1918, Russia's Czar Nicholas II, his empress and their five children were executed by the Bolsheviks.

In 1935, the era of the parking meter began as the first of the coin-operated devices was installed in Oklahoma City.

'Environmentalist' spreading confusion

WASHINGTON — A billboard industry lobbyist who claims to be an environmentalist is trying to recruit state officials in the fight against a Senate bill that would toughen federal regulations of billboards.

Jack Anderson

Supporters of the tougher billboard rules believe George F. McInturff III is masquerading as an environmentalist in an effort to confuse state officials about the merits of the bill.

McInturff sent out a letter on June 2 to state highway officials, warning them about "extremely restrictive and punitive provisions" of the Senate bill. It would deny federal highway funds to states that fail to remove non-conforming billboards along federal roads.

"I suggest that you advise your senators as to your department's recommendations concerning this bill," McInturff wrote. The letterhead identifies him only as a "consultant on environmental affairs."

Although he admits to working for billboard interests, McInturff assured our associate Stewart Harris that his credentials as an environmentalist are solid: He belongs to five environmental groups and lives on the Chesapeake Bay. "I have a mallard mother on nine eggs under my porch," he said.

McInturff also spent eight years in charge of the Federal Highway Administration's controversial billboard removal project, which has not exactly denuded the landscape of outdoor advertising.

Nowadays, McInturff is better known for his work on behalf of the billboard industry. He describes himself as a "longtime consultant to the outdoor advertising industry" in a Jan. 13 memo advising industry lawyers how to challenge testimony offered by University of Georgia Professor Dr. Charles F. Floyd. McInturff described Floyd as "the most active and vocal critic of the outdoor advertising industry."

And, in a Feb. 19 report to billboard company executives, chief industry lobbyist Vernon A. Clark said McInturff devotes a large part of his time "to state and local legislative issues where there are also matters of great concern" to the outdoor advertising industry.

"Maybe I shouldn't call myself an environmentalist," McInturff conceded. "I don't know. But I think I'm as much an environmentalist as anyone."

In an angry June 27 letter to highway officials of all 50 states, Sen. Slade Gorton, R-Wash., author of the billboard bill, defended the legislation — which has the support of environmental groups and Transportation Secretary Elizabeth Dole — and added: "I would also like to set the record straight as to Mr. McInturff's identity. ... Mr. McInturff does not represent the views of the environmental community."

Sens. Steve Symms, R-Idaho, and Quentin Burdick, D-N.D., have put an informal "hold" on Gorton's bill. Both have collected modest campaign contributions from the industry, and Symms was paid $2,000 for a speech to Gannett billboard executives.

In addition to rewarding its friends, the billboard industry tries to punish its enemies. Gorton's challenger this fall, Democrat Brock Adams, transportation secretary in the Carter administration, received $6,000 in billboard donations in the first three months of this year, including $5,000 from billboard baron Barry Ackerley of Seattle, and his associates.

Gorton said he also suspects that the billboard industry pressured cosponsors of the bill, Sens. Paula Hawkins, R-Fla., and Daniel Inouye, D-Hawaii, to remove their names from the proposed legislation.

Footnote: The billboard industry paid out $100,664 in speaking fees to members of Congress last year. Only the top 10 defense contractors and the tobacco industry paid out more in honoraria, according to a recent study by Common Cause.

MARIO MIFFED: Political bigwigs in New York for the Statue of Liberty celebration found Gov. Mario Cuomo moody and distant, even ignoring some of the fund-raisers and power brokers who could help him get the Democratic presidential nomination in 1988. Friends said Cuomo's nose was out of joint because the attention being lavished on President Reagan, Lee Iacocca (a longshot potential rival) and Big Apple Mayor Ed Koch kept the governor from what he had hoped would be a shot at the national spotlight. "The statue IS part of New York state," griped one Cuomo loyalist.

CONFIDENTIAL FILE: After a quarter-century, the Castro regime's official discouragement of religion is having a noticeable effect. Once overwhelmingly Roman Catholic, the Cuban population of about 10 million is now less than half Catholic. There are only about 200 priests, compared to more than 700 before the revolution. Fewer than half the children are baptized, attendance at church services is closely monitored by the police and permits to build new churches are difficult to get.

MINI-EDITORIAL: If the reports we get are true, Navy Secretary John Lehman has stepped far beyond the bounds of propriety, not to say decency, in pressuring a defense contractor to fire a top executive who had the temerity to disagree with Pentagon policy. The executive, Lawrence Korb of Raytheon, was a former Pentagon official, which lent weight to his statement that a budget freeze wouldn't threaten the military's readiness. So Lehman reportedly asked Raytheon management to sack Korb. Government officials have no business passing judgment on the opinions of private citizens, much less using their influence to get someone fired.

JAMES RESTON

Republicans need Reagan as never before

In their campaign to retain control of the U.S. Senate in November, the Republicans are relying not on President Reagan's policies but mainly on his personal popularity.

James Reston

Four years ago in the mid-term congressional elections, the country was in the midst of the worst economic recession in almost half a century, and the Republican candidates were not counting on the president but running away from him.

Now with a slim 53-47 majority in the Senate, and with 34 seats at stake (12 now held by Democrats and 22 by Republicans) the Republicans are turning to their two major advantages, money and Reagan.

There is very little talk now about a "conservative Reagan revolution" that will establish the GOP as the major party in the next decade. The news from the 14 so-called battleground states is that the Democrats are ahead in enough of them to threaten the president with loss of the Senate in his last two years in office.

Accordingly, he is planning a well-financed tour of these 14 states between Labor Day and Election Day, and he has an appealing message.

"Don't handcuff me in my last days in the White House," he says. "With the Senate in Republican hands, I'll have at least a chance to negotiate compromises with the Democratic-controlled House on both domestic and foreign policy. Without the Senate, we'll have two years of bitter partisan conflict."

The Democrats don't underestimate the force of this argument. Eleven of them in the Senate went along with Reagan's $100 million aid to the Nicaraguan rebels not because they believed he was right, but because they knew he was popular. His strong support for tax reform is another indication of his influence when he focuses his powers of patronage and television on the critical areas of public debate.

Traditionally, these Senate races are usually decided by local issues and personalities. For example, the farm states are now in serious economic difficulty, and this, plus ideological differences in North Carolina and indifferent candidates in Florida, Alabama and Idaho are giving the GOP some anxiety.

But this year Reagan could make a big difference. Not since the days of Franklin Roosevelt has a president been so popular with the voters in the middle of a second term, and Reagan's last-chance appeal could be decisive.

But there is no consolation in the GOP as it looks forward to the presidential campaign of 1988. Reagan will not be able to choose his party's presidential nominee, who will have to run on the Reagan record and not on the Reagan personality.

What Reagan has been able to do is to make both parties, in their search for a standard-bearer in 1988, consider the qualities that have made him so popular. He may not have created a policy revolution, but he has created a tactical political revolution.

He has demonstrated what can be done by an attractive personality who has mastered the arts of television, and both parties are now looking around for somebody who can copy his techniques if not his policies.

This is one reason why, perhaps with the president's private support, his friend Sen. Paul Laxalt of Nevada is being put forward as the new engaging challenger to Vice President Bush, Rep. Jack Kemp of New York and the Republican Senate majority leader, Bob Dole of Kansas.

There is a growing feeling in Washington that neither of the two major-party front-runners in the polls at the present time, Bush and Sen. Gary Hart of Colorado, will be nominated, and that Dole and Gov. Mario Cuomo of New York will probably come forward as formidable candidates in late '87 and 1988.

In Dole's case, much will depend on the outcome of the Senate elections this November. For if the Republicans retain control of the Senate, he will have the prominent platform as majority leader, which he has used so effectively in the last couple of years.

Meanwhile, the president will be concentrating on the key Senate races. It is for this reason that he has made clear that he would prefer to discuss arms control with Mikhail Gorbachev of the Soviet Union after the elections.

This will be one other argument the president will be making in behalf of the Republican senators, namely, that it would weaken his efforts for arms control at the summit if his party loses control of the Senate in November.

The Democrats, of course, think this is a weak argument, considering Reagan's mystifying record on arms control over the last six years, but the people may just side with the president in the end, as they have done on so many other major controversies since 1980.

ART BUCHWALD

It may not cost much, but it's our only war!

Now that it looks as if the contras are going to get their U.S. military aid, the question is what kind of war can you buy for $100 million? No matter what the White House says, you don't get much bang for that.

Art Buchwald

"It used to be," said Desmond, a broker who underwrites small wars, "that you could keep a police action going for 12 months on $100 million. Now if there is any shooting at all you can use it up in two."

"Where does it go?"

"If you're sending the money to any place in Central America, you have to pay 'transit' fees. Some money goes to the commanding officer of an adjoining country — some to customs officials for their children's education, and it is only fair that we donate funds to leaders of the freedom fighters for their relatives in Miami. Once that money has been dispensed, we can then deal with supplies for the troops."

"How much for the officials and how much for the troops?"

"If we can keep 50 percent of it for the fighters, we're very happy. But it is not for us to say to those below the border how much it takes to fight Communists. The U.S. is willing to supply the people in the field with anti-aircraft weapons, guns, rockets and other military equipment so they can go into Nicaragua and give the Marxists a thrashing they will never forget."

"Can we expect the contras to take over the Sandinista government?"

"Not on a lousy $100 million. That is what we in the war business call ante money. It makes Congress stay in the game to see the first card that is dealt out. The importance of the $100 million is not the size as much as the commitment that the U.S. has made. Let's say it's Ronald Reagan's Gulf of Tonkin resolution."

"So what happens after the first $100 million is turned over to the contras?"

"We wait and see. If they're winning big, the President will go back to Congress and ask for the money to finish the job. If the contras are doing badly the President will ask Congress to vote additional money so they won't lose the war."

"Then in both cases Congress will be asked to vote money for the contra war."

"Is Castro Cuban?"

"Who came up with the $100 million figure?"

"A think tank at Georgetown. The President didn't want to buy a big war, and at the same time he was afraid he would be accused of not wanting any war at all. So the Georgetown people arrived at the $100 million figure on the assumption that the President could always get more later on. When you're buying a war the first $100 million is the toughest, because you really don't know how it is going to cost out. That's why anyone who thinks the $100 million is the bottom line should get a job baking fruitcakes."

"Will Congress have to give more money to the freedom fighters?"

"I'm afraid so. It may be a dirty little war from where we sit in Washington, but, at the same time, it is the only dirty little war we've got."

Shuttle pilot's widow files claim over mishap

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL

Jane Smith

WASHINGTON (AP) — The first damage claim filed by a family of one of the seven Challenger astronauts alleges NASA ignored advice of engineers "that the space shuttle would likely blow up with the loss of all persons aboard."

And at least one other astronaut family is negotiating through a lawyer with Morton Thiokol, the manufacturer of the shuttle's booster rockets, for compensation as a result of the Jan. 28 explosion.

The damage claim, filed by the widow of pilot Michael J. Smith, asks $15 million for wrongful death and $100,000 for personal injury. It also raises an issue the National Aeronautics and Space Administration has never publicly addressed, alleging that Smith "was thrown about in the spacecraft and in the few seconds preceding his death, knew of his impending death."

"It alleges, as it must under the federal tort claims act, that we were negligent and as a result an accident occurred during which Smith died," Edward Frankle, deputy general counsel for the space agency, said Tuesday.

NASA has six months to act on the claim. After that — or if the claim is rejected — Smith's widow can sue in federal court, Frankle said.

Federal law bars government employees or their estates from bringing immediate suit against the United States. That would apply to five of the Challenger crew but not schoolteacher Christa McAuliffe or industry engineer Gregory Jarvis.

Jane Smith claims her husband was killed through the negligence of NASA through its employees, including former shuttle boss Jesse Moore, and Lawrence Mulloy, who has since been transferred from his post as manager of the booster rocket program.

She claims they "directed, allowed and participated in the launch of Challenger when they knew or should have known that the segments of the righthand solid rocket booster would not properly seal and that a catastrophic accident would likely occur as a result thereof."

She says also they should have known cold weather made it impossible or unlikely for the rocket joint seals to work properly, that the seals were inadequate and totally failed to meet acceptable standards.

She also claims NASA "disregarded and ignored the advice of competent and knowledgeable engineers to the effect that the space shuttle would likely blow up with the loss of all persons on board should the shuttle be launched under all the conditions which were obtained at the time."

The claim was dated July 2, soon after the Challenger investigating commission reported that cold overnight weather contributed to a leak on the shuttle's right booster rocket, which triggered a sequence that resulted in the explosion.

Mrs. Smith is represented by William F. Maready, an attorney in Winston-Salem, N.C., who specializes in aviation and space law.

Three other claims have been filed with NASA. The latest, on Tuesday, is from a man who said his $550 cigarette lighter was being carried by astronaut Judy Resnik and wants reimbursement. An earlier claim was by a Brazilian fisherman who asked $100 million, saying his son was killed and his boat sunk by falling debris. The third is by a woman who claims $35,000 because her fishing business was hurt by salvage operations.

In response to an inquiry, Houston lawyer Ronald D. Krist said he opted to file an astronaut family claim against Morton Thiokol and that "we have been actively and candidly negotiating this matter." He said he represents one group of survivors whom he would not identify and has been contacted by others.

Krist sued Rockwell International, builder of the Apollo spacecraft, on behalf of Betty Grissom after her husband, Virgil I. Grissom, died in a 1967 launchpad fire. The widow received $100,000 and her two sons $125,000 each.

The lawyer said his claim against Morton Thiokol is based upon negligence and product liability.

Thomas B. Russell, a vice president of the firm, said it is company policy not to discuss such matters unless a lawsuit is filed. He would neither confirm nor deny negotiations were taking place.

NATION IN BRIEF

Air Force allowing bad engine blades installed

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Air Force is allowing defective engine blades to be installed in fighter airplanes even though the problem could cause the jets to crash, the chairman of the House Energy and Commerce Committee said.

In a letter to Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger Tuesday, Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich., said the service had delayed plans for a recall of all the engine blades, built for the F-100 engine, which goes into the F-15 and F-16, the two chief Air Force fighters.

Dingell said the General Accounting Office, the investigative arm of Congress, found that the Chromalloy Corp. of St. Louis, Mo., had removed and repaired more than 30,000 of the blades in the F-100. But Dingell warned that "about 30 percent of the suppoesdly repaired blades are now found to be defective."

Spokemen for the Air Force and Chromalloy said they had no immediate comment on the GAO findings.

Vice chairman spared

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sentencing of the former vice chairman of the U.S. Postal Service Board of Governors has been delayed two months so that he can assist in a continuing criminal investigation of the postal service, the U.S. Attorney's office said.

U.S. District Judge George H. Revercomb postponed sentencing of Peter Voss from July 24 to Sept. 22 at the request of U.S. Attorney Joseph diGenova.

Voss pleaded guilty May 30 to expense account padding and accepting illegal payoffs. The payoffs were in connection with his efforts to steer a contract for mail-sorting equipment worth at least $250 million to a Texas company.

Voss, who faces a maximum of seven years in prison and $21,000 in fines, pleaded guilty to two counts of accepting illegal gratuities and one count of embezzlement in connection with his expense accounts.

Phone companies want hike

WASHINGTON (AP) — Local telephone companies across the country have asked for $449 million in rate increases in the second quarter of 1986, according to Federal Communications Commission figures, about half the amount requested during the first three months of the year.

About a quarter of the second quarter requests were granted, the compilation showed, although $519.9 million in rate requests were pending before state public utility commissions when the quarter ended, another record low.

The FCC began gathering the figures in 1983 to chart the effects of the breakup of the Bell System, which occured Jan. 1, 1984.

The figures, reflecting business and residential rate increases, show in some cases, the greater burden of rate increases fell on residential customers.

As of June 30, rate changes were pending in Colorado, Georgia, Indiana, Kansas, Missouri, Nebraska, New Mexico, New York, North Carolina and Texas.

Bad doctors under scrutiny

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federation of State Medical Boards has joined a group of professional and hospital associations in endorsing legislation intended to make it easier to find and discipline incompetent doctors.

The bill, sponsored by Rep. Ron Wyden, D-Ore., is aimed at what Health and Human Services Secretary Otis R. Bowen has called the "brotherhood of silence" among doctors that discourages them from reporting incompetent colleagues.

In many cases, witnesses told the panel, the silence does not stem from an attempt by physicians to bury their mistakes, but from a real fear that they will be sued for slander if they question another's competence. Malpractice insurance may protect a doctor who botches an operation, they said, but insurance doesn't protect the competent doctor who reports it.

Wyden's bill, however, would grant immunity from lawsuits for doctors who, in good faith, report another doctor to a state licensing board or hospital peer review committee.

Oil, gas overhaul saught

WASHINGTON (AP) — Leaders of the House Interior Committee joined environmentalists in calling for the overhaul of the federal oil and gas leasing program to raise more money for the Treasury and to protect the environment.

Committee Chairman Morris Udall, D-Ariz., who called the current lease system "essentially unworkable," was joined in his call by Rep. Nick Joe Rahall, D-W.Va., chairman of the committee's mining and natural resources subcommittee, and Interior public lands subcommittee chairman John Seibering, D-Ohio.

Seiberling and Udall are among the sponsors of legislation — opposed by the Reagan administration — that would end the lottery system under which leases are awarded for developing oil and gas beneath lands administered by the U.S. Forest Service and the Bureau of Land Management.

FDA bungled drug probe

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Food and Drug Administration bungled investigations into schemes to divert prescription drugs to a shadowy market that is a source of misbranded, adulterated and counterfeit medicines, a House panel contends.

Members of the House Energy and Commerce investigations subcommittee asked FDA officials on Tuesday to explain why a $600,000 shipment of imported drugs was refused entry in Miami, but later allowed into the country by federal officials in Boston.

Committee Chairman Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich., also questioned FDA officials about their investigation into the diversion of 58,500 vials of an antibiotic powder ordered for shipment to Honduras, but later diverted for sale in the United States.

Lederle Laboratories, charging that Spanish labels were replaced with counterfeit English labels after the drug was diverted, contended in a civil suit that two of its employees in Honduras were bribed by a Miami importer to order the drugs, which were then diverted to other points.

Fair skies continue

From Staff and Wire Reports

Fair skies will continue over the Midland area, according to forecasters at the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport. The weather picture, through Thursday, looks much the same as the first half of the week.

The high on Thursday is expected to reach into the lower 90s. Tonight's low should be in the upper 60s. Southerly winds will prevail, blowing from 10-15 mph tonight, increasing to 10-20 mph on Thursday.

Tuesday's high was 91 degrees — 11 degrees below the record high set for the date in 1984. The record low of 63 set for this date in 1975 was four degrees below this morning's low.

STATE

Skies were generally clear over most of Texas this morning, but the National Weather Service said chances were good for afternoon and evening thunderstorms over South Texas, far West Texas and the southeastern portion of North Texas.

Winds were gusty in the Panhandle early today, with winds from the south at 20 mph and more. Winds were southerly at 5 to 15 mph elsewhere.

Overnight temperatures were mainly in the 70s. Extremes ranged from 64 degrees at Marfa in the Big Bend to 80 degrees at the Naval Air Station in Corpus Christi.

NATION

Severe thunderstorms struck the northern Plains and Midwest today, while showers were scattered in parts of the Southeast.

A severe thunderstorm watch was in effect this morning in portions of northern and central South Dakota and much of central North Dakota.

Heavy thunderstorms struck the area and western Nebraska and eastern Montana. Winds gusted over 50 mph at Murdo, S.D., while 60 mph winds were clocked at Lavina, Mont.

A storm system over the Pacific Northwest, meanwhile, prompted gale warnings along the northern California coast.

Elsewhere, showers and thunderstorms were scattered across the Rockies, the Southwest, eastern North Carolina and Florida. Fair weather was reported from the mid-Atlantic states across the Tennessee and the middle Mississippi valleys into the central and southern Plains.

On Tuesday evening, severe thunderstorms moved rapidly across parts of southern lower Michigan, resulting in considerable wind damage in some areas.

Winds gusted at 68 mph at Marshall, Mich., knocking down trees across the area. A tornado near Onstead, Mich., knocked down trees, but no injuries were reported.

USFL Trial

NEW YORK — An NFL-hired economist says, in effect, that the USFL owes the older league money and not the other way around. The allegations were made Tuesday by Dr. Bruce Owen, called by the NFL to counter testimony by the USFL's expert, Dr. Nina Cornell.

Cornell had testified that NFL actions had allegedly cost the USFL between $301 million and $565 million in past and future earnings — which trebled, as is the rule in antitrust cases, would come to the $1.69 billion the USFL is seeking.

MADISON, Wis. — An all-white jury of seven men and seven women was selected Tuesday night for the trial of three former University of Minnesota basketball players charged with sexually assaulting an 18-year-old Madison woman. Northrup and attorneys for both sides expressed satisfaction with the jury selection, although one defense attorney, Stanley Woodard, said he wished the panel included some blacks...

COLLEGE PARK, Md. — University of Maryland Athletic Director Dick Dull was preparing a new policy cracking down on athletes who skip classes and mandatory study halls just two days after Len Bias died. Dull had been trying since 1981 to make some coaches more attentive to their players' academic performance, according to a series of memos obtained by The Baltimore Sun. The memos began in 1981, when Dull wrote "the day of the marginal academic student-athlete being admitted to Maryland has come to an end."...

Clemens just perfect as AL wins

By MICHAEL MARTINEZ
N.Y. Times News Service

HOUSTON — The pregame build-up had been about pitching, about Dwight Gooden and Roger Clemens and their memorable achievements as the two dominant pitchers in baseball. But Gooden was merely a footnote Tuesday night, his work reduced to three innings and a home run that he permitted in the second inning. Clemens became the leading character in a game that came down to pitching and helped the American League to a 3-2 victory over the Nationals in the 57th All-Star Game.

Clemens — performing in the Astrodome, not far from where he grew up — was the winning pitcher and the most valuable player. Gooden, whose season has been marked by similar struggles, was the loser.

The Boston Red Sox right-hander started and retired all nine batters he faced, and the American League held on after Charlie Hough gave up two runs in the bottom of the eighth.

And the evening included a climactic finish: Don Aase got Chris Brown to hit into a game-ending double play after the National League had runners at first and second with no outs.

It did not necessarily end the lengthy slump that the A.L. has endured in this series, but it was a start. They had lost two games in a row, 13 of 14 and and 21 of 23. The Americans had not won in an National League park since 1962, at Wrigley Field.

"I know I took this game for real," said Dick Howser, the American League manager. "We've been in the back seat for so long."

Clemens threw 25 pitches — 21 of them for strikes — and then Ted Higuera retired the first four batters he faced before Darryl Strawberry lined a single to right in the fifth.

But the night was not theirs alone. Fernando Valenzuela of Los Angeles followed Gooden in the fourth and struck out the first five batters he faced. It was a feat that had been accomplished only once before in an All-Star Game: Carl Hubbell did it in 1934 when he struck out, in order, Babe Ruth, Lou Gehrig, Jimmie Foxx, Al Simmons and Joe Cronin. All five are in the Hall of Fame.

Valenzuela's victims were less formidable: Don Mattingly, Cal Ripken and Jesse Barfield in the fourth, then Lou Whitaker and Higuera to open the fifth. Higuera, who pitches for Milwaukee, had never gone to bat in a big league game before.

"After I was removed for a pinch-hitter," Valenzuela said later, "I looked at the scoreboard and saw that I had tied the record. But I don't know about Carl Hubbell. I was born in 1960."

The National League finished with 12 strikeouts, tying an All-Star Game record, and the American League had seven. Gooden had two strikeouts, but they were his only worthy moments.

The Met right-hander, who was selected to start the game against Clemens, worked a scoreless first and had two outs in the second before Dave Winfield doubled to right and Whitaker hit an 0-and-2 pitch over the fence in right.

"That's been the problem all year," Gooden said later. "One mistake pitch and I get hurt. I hope I can work on eliminating that in the second half of the season."

Asked about the pitch later, Whitaker said: "It was a curve that didn't break, and I just managed to get it out. No, I didn't have any illusions. I'm not a home-run hitter."

Nor is Frank White, but he added a bases-empty homer as a pinch-hitter for Whitaker in the seventh, and it was decisive. It came off Mike Scott, the Astros' pitcher.

"You come into this game and see all the great players," White said, "and you have an idea in your mind about who the stars might be. But in this game, you never really know what might happen."

The evening fell out of its orderly fashion, however. Charlie Hough, the Texas knuckleball specialist, replaced Higuera in the seventh and the Nationals made a belated rally in the eighth.

Hough was working with Rich Gedman, the Boston catcher, who had never before worked with a knuckleball pitcher. Hough gave Gedman an oversized glove, but their eighth inning was unpredictable.

Hough struck out three batters, but one of them, Hubie Brooks, reached base on a passed ball. Another, Chris Brown, went from second to third on a wild pitch and scored on the passed ball to Brooks. Dave Righetti, the Yankee reliever, came in and got Glenn Davis to hit a pop fly.

"The balls he missed didn't really get away from him," Hough said of Gedman. "He just missed them with his glove."

When someone wondered whether Gedman preferred to catch Hough or Clemens, he replied in serious tones: "I'd say Roger. At least I know where the ball is going to be."

But he conceded that the night was "a little embarrassing for me."

It might have been the same for Righetti, who lost a chance for the save when he gave up one-out singles to Jody Davis and Dave Parker in the ninth. Howser pulled him for Aase.

"Sure, I go through that almost every time I'm out there," said Righetti, who has failed in nine save chances this season for the Yanks. "I'm used to them, believe me."

Aase threw two pitches, the second a slider. Brown tried to check his swing, but it was a routine bouncer to second. White stepped on the bag, then threw to Mattingly to end the game.

"I didn't know anything about Brown when I got in," Aase said. "I figured he knew more about me than I knew about him — that I was a fastball pitcher. So I figured I could fool him with a slider."

And he did. Clemens was gone by then, but he was not forgotten.

"With all the home folks here," he said in the aftermath, "I was really jumping. The best part was when I walked in the dugout and saw all those great players in there with me. I thought we had made a major trade."

Angels fall, 7-6

Jackson wins amidst controversy

By ERIC SCHURER
Sports Writer

There were homers, rallies, ejections and controversial calls, but there was still no victory celebration for the Midland Angels.

The skidding Angels dropped their fourth straight, this time 7-6 to the Jackson Mets, chartering new depths in the Texas League standings and helping the Mets end a three-game losing streak of their own.

The pitching was again the culprit Tuesday night, falling behind 3-0 in the first inning and forcing the hitters to play catch up — a game they should be very familiar with by now.

Scoring 36 runs in the past four games, an average of nine per game, Midland has come up empty each time and fallen to 9-13, 3½ games behind El Paso in the second half race.

"I'm getting fed up with the way things are going," said manager Joe Maddon, cooling down after an eighth-inning ejection. "We're in a mental slump in our pitching staff. They've got to learn to control the mental aspects of the game."

"Pitchers get in a slump just like the hitters," added pitching coach Aurelio Monteagudo.

SO DESPITE a two-run, game-tying homer in the seventh by Kevin King and Maddon's plea for inspiration with his ejection in the top of the eighth for disputing a play at the plate, the Angels stumbled for the 11th time in 13 tries.

The fall from grace was epitomized in the ninth inning when pinch runner John Hotchkiss was called for runner's interference while breaking up a double play at second base. As a result, Jeff Schaefer was called out at first completing the double play and sending fill-in manager, minor league hitting instructor Rick Downs into a frenzy.

"The rules say I have to be able to reach out and touch the base — and I could do that," Hotchkiss said. "I was within the rules, and I told him so."

"It was an obvious force play at second, these guys just seem to be looking for something when there isn't anything there," Downs said.

The normally diplomatic Maddon also had a few choice words about the umpiring, specifically the rotation system the Texas League employs.

"The way the umpiring schedule is set up is wrong," Maddon said flatly. "The fact that we have to see this crew for 21 straight games is not right. Natural animosities arise when you see each other day after day, it's the nature of the beast. You set up a situation like that and you're looking for trouble. It should be changed."

TURNING HIS thoughts back to his ballclub, which is in the midst of its worst slump of Maddon's second season in Midland, Maddon could only shake his head.

"We're doing a lot of things right, unfortunately, the one thing we cannot do is hold a lead. We're constantly playing catch up."

That was certainly the case Tuesday, when starter Sherman Corbett was nicked for three runs before the Angels had come to bat. Though Corbett settled down to allow just two more runs before leaving in the seventh, Midland was already on the outside looking in at the Mets.

But the Angels were slowly breaking Jackson's shell, pushing across solo runs in the fourth, fifth and sixth innings to pull within 5-3. Then in the seventh, King's moon-shot over the wall in left covered the final step, pulling the Angels even at 5-5.

But it wouldn't last.

Even while the hitters were catching their breath in the field, no doubt plotting a late-inning rally to take the lead, the bullpen let it slip away once again.

Doug Banning, who began the year a starter but has was sent to the pen in hopes it would ease his chronic back problem, allowed singles to the first two Mets' hitters in the eighth and a sacrifice moved them to second and third.

THEN IT was DeWayne Buice time again. But the overworked late inning ace yielded a broken bat single to Rick Lockwood, breaking the deadlock. A sacrifice fly made it 7-5, and the play at the plate brought Maddon out to argue the call.

The argument did little but rile up the crowd of 1,549, though Midland did score one more time in the eighth to close it to the final margin of 7-6.

Banning, 4-4, took the loss while Jackson starter Kyle Hartshorn, 7-3, was credited with the win. Tim Innis earned his 15th save.

Royals' White just following orders on homer

By DENNE H. FREEMAN

HOUSTON (AP) — Frank White of the Kansas City Royals said he was just following orders when he hit a home run during Tuesday night's All-Star Game.

White said Royals' hitting instructor Lee May told him that if he got into the game, "I don't want you trying to hit a single to right. Hit it out of there."

So he did, sending an 0-2 pitch from Mike Scott into left-center field and giving the AL a 3-0 lead in the seventh inning.

But White said the double play he turned to end the game, preserving the American League's 3-2 victory, was a more difficult feat.

"That double play was tougher than the homer at that particular time," said White, who fielded a check-swing grounder from Chris Brown, stepped on second base and threw to first to beat Brown and preserve the AL's first victory in an NL park since 1962.

AL Locker

"The ball just floated to me and I was praying that I would get a good bounce," he said. "But what made it really difficult was that Dave Parker, coming down from first, wouldn't slide and I had to find a way to throw the ball around him."

White came into the game as a pinch hitter for Lou Whitaker, who delivered a two-run homer in the second inning off Dwight Gooden, also on an 0-2 pitch.

"I was fortunate," White said. "He had two quick strikes on me and I figured he would come at me again with the fastball. I think that might be my first All-Star hit. All I know, it was a great moment for me."

Whitaker said he wasn't afraid Gooden would walk him to get to the pitcher.

"I knew he would pitch to me and not give me anything good to hit," Whitaker said. "In the All-Star game, you don't get any free passes.

"I hit a curveball and it was satisfaction plus," he said.

Don Aase, who has 23 saves for the Baltimore Orioles, got Brown to hit the game-ending double-play grounder on a slider.

"I guess I was a little lucky that it was a check swing because if he had gone through with it (the swing), it probably would have been a base hit. Frank made a great play," Aase said.

"This caps a pretty good comeback for me. Two and a half years ago, I was rehabilitating and I never thought it would turn out like this."

Catcher Rich Gedman of the Boston Red Sox said he had a nightmare trying to catch the knuckleballs of Texas' Charlie Hough in the eighth inning, when the NL got its two runs.

"Trying to catch Charlie for the first time is very difficult. What an inning," said Gedman, who had a passed ball that allowed a run to score. "I did the best I could to try and keep the ball in front of me. All I could do is try."

Hough said, "I had a very lively knuckler. I wasn't sure where it was going. It was a dull game until I came in there."

Manager Dick Howser of Kansas City, asked if he was surprised the NL pitched to Whitaker in the second inning, said with a smile, "I'd rather not comment on that. It's just a good feeling for the American League to win one. But who would have thought we would have won the game with two second basemen batting in the eighth position hitting 0-2 counts for homers."

George Brett, who did not play in the game because of injury, savored the AL's third victory in the last 24 games against the NL.

"I didn't play, but it's still a great feeling," Brett said. Then he added with a laugh, "Maybe the reason we beat them was because I didn't play."

TED BATTLES

Can it be the NHL blushing?

Since Jeff Schaefer played in some pretty fast amateur hockey competition on the east coast and lives in Maryland during the off season, curiosity won out.

Was he familiar, it was asked, with the NNHA, the Novice National Hockey Association? A younger member of the family, it was explained, participated in such a league.?

"Sure, I play in it," the Midland Angels' shortstop replied. "Of course, because of my baseball career, I participate in the non-violent division. That's the division where there is less contact.

"I couldn't risk injury," he said, the cube of butter on his tongue showing no evidence of trickling down his chin.

Alarmed, the revelation was posed long distance. Schaefer's team was identified and some apprehension was expressed concerning kind of league the family's Slap Shot practioner might be involved in.

"Light contact? In our league, we refer to that bunch as the head hunter's league. They're mad men," he assured, "We are all working stiffs and can't afford to risk injury. We seldom draw penalties." More unmelted butter.

It sounded reasonable. Schaefer is almost a pro on ice. The nearest thing to a pro on the second year novice team Slap Shot is involved with is the Georgetown University football coach.

ROCKET BATTELLE isn't exactly a polished hockey player. In one game, they put him in the final minute of play to see if he could get his third goal for a hat trick. He was slapped with a tripping penalty on the face off and spent the rest of the game in the penalty box.

"Serves you right," I consoled, remembering last winter on the ski slopes when I'd finally catch up with him resting at the top of the next downhill run to be greeted by his impatient, "Ready to go?"

I think the display of sadism was a result of his brother's knee surgery, which kept him off the slopes. As a result, he had to ski with the Old Man for a week. Usually, I get a couple of courtesy runs from this dynamic duo early in the day and then they disappear until late afternoon.

But back to the subject. The purpose of the NNHA is to recreate the NHL for the Wayne Gretzkys, Jean Beliveaus, Phil Espositos who never were. Instead of emulating the NHL, it is an embarrassment to the NHL.

The NHL began its season in October and ended in May. The NNHA also began in October and is still going. Fear is mounting that it won't be over in time to start next season.

By winning its league and then beating the champions from Washington, D.C., Virginia and another Maryland league in the playoffs, Rocket's team qualified for the eastern regionals in Philadelphia against teams from the City of Brotherly Love, Hartford and Boston.

I suggested his team forfeit. "The way they grow up playing hockey in New England, you guys don't stand a chance. Boston will have a couple of ringers, guys who have been playing all their lives, and wipe up the ice with you. And if they don't, Hartford will." I tried to repress the laughter at the thought.

THEY WENT any way and Philadelphia immediately broke the team's 18-game winning streak, in overtime. However, since it was double elimination, the Blazers hung around anyway and somehow lucked out on Hartford, 3-0, and beat Boston, 6-0, and came back to knock off Philadelphia, 8-5.

With a 1:30 left the Blazers went ahead in the championship final. With seven seconds left, Philadelphia tied it up when the Blazers, playing shorthanded again (122 minutes in penalties to 70 in the tournament, including four players banished from games four collecting four minor penalties), raced into the corner for the puck instead of setting up a protective box around the goalie and Philly scored. What the goalie told his mates should have resulted in a penalty.

That should have ended it, but it didn't. The guys from Maryland won in overtime, their fifth game in less than 48 hours.

So now, after two weeks of midnight practices—ice time this time of year is hard to come by— they fly Los Angeles this weekend for the double elimination tournament against teams from St. Louis and Los Angeles.

I'd like be there, but as I told him before he went to Philly, "No way you can beat Boston, so we're going to Colorado." However, I encouraged, "A lot of Canadians live in the Los Angeles area and you probably stand less chance against LA than you did against Boston...."

So I'll have to get a long distance phone report. Besides, I'd rather see the wedding this fall...this groom has proven so elusive it's going to take two men of the cloth to perform the ceremony. This I've got to see.

This Day in Baseball

July 16

1909 — Ed Summers of the Detroit Tigers allowed only seven hits and pitched all 18 innings of a 0-0 tie with the Washington Senators, the longest scoreless game in American League history.

1920 — Babe Ruth of the New York Yankees broke his own season record of 29 homers with his 30th as the Yanks beat the St. Louis Browns, 5-2. Ruth would end the season with 54.

1948 — After 8½ tumultuous years as Brooklyn Dodger manager, Leo Durocher stunned baseball by becoming manager of the arch-rival New York Giants in mid-season.

1970 — The Cincinnati Reds beat the Pittsburgh Pirates 3-2 before 48,846 in the first game played at Three Rivers Stadium.

Dodgers win in 12th

Associated Press

Tracy Woodson's 12th-inning double, his fifth hit in his last six appearances at the plate, helped lift the San Antonio Dodgers to a 7-5 win over Arkansas in a Texas League baseball game Tuesday night.

San Antonio collected 16 hits in the game, while Arkansas got nine. Phillip Torres was the winner, his third in four decisions. Jeff Keener, now 2-5, was the loser for the Travelers.

In other league action, Tulsa edged Beaumont 6-5, Eastern Division leader Shreveport defeated Western Division leader El Paso 9-2, and Jackson got by Midland 7-6.

San Antonio and Arkansas were tied 4-4 after nine innings. But in the top of the 12th, Mike Ramsey singled for San Antonio, moved to third on an error and a fielder's choice, and scored on John Pequignot's single. Mike Devereaux scored on a wild pitch, and Pequignot scored on Woodson's double.

Arkansas got a run in the bottom of the 12th when Mark Pevey singled in Eddie Tanner, who had reached on a single, but then San Antonio turned a double play to end the rally and the game.

The Travelers got two runs in the third when pitcher Kurt Kepshire reached on a fielder's choice and scored on Mark Dougherty's third home run of the year. San Antonio tied it in the fourth on Woodson's two-run homer.

Arkansas got a run in the fifth when Dougherty doubled home Jose Rodriquez, but San Antonio went up with two runs in the sixth. Arkansas tied it in the seventh when Tim Jones doubled and went home on another double by Dougherty.

A solo homer in bottom of ninth inning by designated hitter Mark Poole broke a 5-5 tie to give Tulsa its win over Beaumont.

Tulsa got a three-run homer in the first from leftfielder Bob Gergen. Beaumont got a solo homer in the fourth from rightfielder Scott Parsons. Tulsa added runs in fourth and sixth innings.

Beaumont got a solo run in the sixth, and a three-run triple in the eighth from DH Frank Castro to tie the game.

Rick Raether, 1-0, got the victory over Joe Lynch, 0-1.

U.S. lightheavyweight booted for low blow

By BERT ROSENTHAL

MOSCOW (AP) - American light heavyweight fighter Harvey Richards was disqualified by a Soviet referee under confusing circumstances and Soviet gymnasts swept all the gold medals at the Goodwill Games today.

Richards, of Springfield, Ill., appeared to be leading Nils Hausgaard Madsen of Denmark when referee Yuri Frolov stopped their quarterfinal bout at 2:09 of the second round and disqualified the U.S. fighter.

The American team protested the disqualification to the games' three-man boxing jury, consisting of Omar Greene, a manager for the U.S. team; Vladimir Engelbarian of the Soviet Union; and Felix Joyce of Ireland.

Later, Pat Duffy, the other U.S. team manager, said the jury had ruled that the referee incorrectly stopped the fight and told him that Frolov would not officiate again in the tournament.

Duffy said the jury then sent the case to the Executive Committee of the International Amateur Boxing Association for review.

In the ring, one American fighter won and three lost in night semifinal bouts.

The only winner was flyweight Arthur Johnson of St. Louis, who outpointed David Griman of Venezuela 3-2.

The losers were welterweight Ricky Royal of Washington, D.C., stopped at 1:17 of the third round by Alexander Ostrowski of the Soviet Union; heavyweight Ike Padilla of Yonkers, N.Y., stopped at 1:57 of the first round by Ramdan Sibiev of the Soviet Union; and heavyweight Michael Bent of New York City, outpointed 4-1 by another Soviet, Vladimir Belai.

In gymnastics, Velentin Mogilny and Yuri Korolyov led the Soviet onslaught of golds. Mogilny collected individual golds in the pommel horse, parallel bars and side horse, and shared the gold with Korolyov in the rings. Korolyov also won the floor exercises and took silvers in the pommel horse and side horse.

The other gold went to the Soviet's Valeri Lyukin in the vault.

While Richards was eliminated in the 81-kilogram (178-pound) class, his teammate, Michael Simon of Washington, D.C., advanced to Thursday's semifinals with a 4-1 decision over Nikolai Lapkov of Bulgaria.

Light welterwerweight Roy Jones of Pensacola, Fla., also reached the semifinals, outpointing Gordon Joyce of Ireland 5-0 in the 63.5-kilogram (139) class.

In tennis, Caroline Kuhlman of Lakeside Park, Ky., and Beverly Bowes of Lubbock, Texas, reached the women's singles final. Kuhlman, a junior at the University of Southern California, outlasted the Soviet's top player, Larisa Savchencko, 6-2, 3-6, 6-4, and Bowes, a senior at the University of Texas, trounced the Soviet's Svetlana Parkhomenko 6-1, 6-1 in the semifinals.

Clemens makes imprint on Met

By MICHAEL A. LUTZ

HOUSTON (AP) — National League outfielder Darryl Strawberry filed Tuesday night's All-Star confrontation against Boston pitcher Roger Clemens away for possible future reference.

Strawberry's New York Mets and Clemens' Boston Red Sox could be headed for a World Series showdown. They have commanding leads of 13 and seven games in the National League East and American League East, respectively.

"He's a polished young pitcher," said Strawberry, who struck out swinging on a fastball from the Red Sox' star in the second inning. "I hope he stays healthy and we get to see him again."

Clemens, the American League's starting pitcher, hurled three perfect innings and led the Americans to a 3-2 victory in Tuesday night's 57th All-Star Game.

Strawberry, who who had the NL's first hit of the game, a one-out, fifth-inning single off Ted Higuera, was joined by his National League teammates in praising the American League's pitching staff that held the Nationals to five hits.

"He throws as hard as any pitcher I've seen, and I've seen some hard throwers," Atlanta's Dale Murphy, who grounded out to start the third inning, said of Clemens. "He's obviously right up there among the elite."

CINCINNATI'S Dave Parker, whose ninth-inning single gave the Nationals a chance to rally, said the Nationals couldn't match up with the American League pitchers.

"It was just one of those things. We weren't hitting today," Parker said. "Those guys (AL pitchers) get paid, too. It got interesting at the end, but we just got beat."

National League outfielder Tony Gwynn of San Diego, the NL's leading hitter, also praised Clemens' performance.

"The way he throws his fastball shows you he knows how to pitch," Gwynn said. "He'll throw it in a spot (location) that makes a hitter want to go for hit, but you have to hit it real good to get a hit."

The National League bats didn't warm up until Texas knuckleballer Charlie Hough came on in the seventh inning. The Nationals scored both their runs in the eighth, one of which was unearned. Hough struck out three batters in the inning but one third strike was a wild pitch and another was a passed ball.

"Hough was a breath of fresh air for us," Gwynn said. "After seeing all that gas and hard stuff, we looked forward to something slower."

Dwight Gooden of the Mets, the NL's starting and losing pitcher, yielded a two-out double to Dave Winfield of the New York Yankees in the second inning before a home run Detroit's Lou Whitaker's gave the Americans a 2-0 lead.

"That's been my problem all year," Gooden said. "One pitch cost me two runs. One mistake pitch and I get hurt. I hope I can work on eliminating that in the second half of the season."

HOUSTON'S Mike Scott, the major-league strikeout leader, yielded a seventh-inning home run to Kansas City's Frank White, also on an 0-2 pitch. White was pinch-hitting for Whitaker after Scott fanned Baltimore's Cal Ripken and Toronto's Jesse Barfield.

"I got it out over the plate too much," Scott said. "I decided to go fastball and it just didn't work out."

Cowboys' Danny White loosens up with a few passes at Thousand Oaks, Calif.

Clinkscale missing

Dallas Cowboys

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. (AP) — Veteran strong safety Dextor Clinkscale was still missing from the Dallas Cowboys training camp Tuesday, with Cowboys management saying they did not know why he had failed to show.

The Cowboys said Clinkscale had yet to notify them of the reason for his absence. Veterans were to report to camp Sunday.

Clinkscale's attorney, Paul Schoonover of Dallas, told the Dallas Times Herald that Clinkscale was not a contract holdout.

"At this time, we're just choosing not to say anything about what Dextor is doing," Schoonover said.

The collective bargaining agreement between management and the players association said players are to report 15 days before the first preseason game. Cowboy veterans were asked to report Sunday — 21 days before the London game against Chicago.

But Coach Tom Landry said he agreed to hold only one workout per day in London if the team would report early. The Cowboys normally hold two practices a day.

Clinkscale is the club's player representative to the NFL Players Association.

Tight end Doug Cosbie, assistant player representative, said he was notified last week by the players association that the team shouldn't report Sunday.

"But they really didn't make any big deal out of it, so I can't imagine that would be the reason that he didn't show up," Cosbie said.

The Cowboys released two rookie free agents Tuesday, cutting their training camp roster to 101 players, including 51 rookies and first-year players.

Placed on waivers were safety David Carter of California and offensive lineman Greg Rea of Nevada-Reno.

Sid Fernandez gem to Met fans

By MALCOLM MORAN
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — Sid Fernandez has come within sight of a place few athletes reach, that place where performance at last meets promise. In the two and a half years since the Los Angeles Dodgers made a trade they must now regret, Fernandez has lost weight and gained self-assurance. There is always room for some more.

Fernandez has led many of the customers at Shea Stadium to believe that the first no-hitter in the history of the Met franchise will come from him. It is too easy to watch a 6-foot-1-inch, 205-pound pitcher and forget that he is 23 years old.

On Sunday he became the first 11-game winner in the National League this season.

"I'm happy about that," Fernandez said.

He was not so happy about something else.

"I'm a big guy," he said later. "I'm a strong guy. It was hot, but I got tired in the sixth inning and I can't understand it. I'm a big guy. It wasn't that I was taken out. I'm not lasting. I should be lasting longer. A complete game is one thing, but I should get past the seventh or eighth. I should get better longevity."

HE WAS bothered by one of the very few flaws his performance this year has revealed. Fernandez has won his last six starts and seven of his last eight. He has allowed an average of 5.94 hits per nine innings, slightly above the 5.71 average last year that led the major leagues.

But then there are those statistics: 16 games started, one complete game.

"I was heavier before, and I went nine innings, so it can't be I'm not in shape," he said. "I never had trouble going nine before. I don't know. I've just got to work on it, I guess."

He allowed one run and six hits in 6⅔ innings against Houston. When the time came to discuss the latest victory, when the door to the Met clubhouse was opened and the questioners rushed inside, Fernandez was gone, having left word that he had been unhappy with the way he pitched. Silent Sid, he was called. His departure in disappointment was portrayed as a disappearance.

The fact is that pitching has always come more easily than talking.

"It's true," he said quietly. "They ask me to go to clinics, and I can't. I can tell them about the windup and stuff, that's basic. I don't know how to start off with a pitcher, or what to do. It's easier done than said, put it that way."

He feels equally uneasy when the discussion turns to an evaluation of his own performance, even as a league leader in victories.

"I don't think we're as surprised as Joe Fan is," Mel Stottlemyre, the pitching coach, said of his success. "After last year, several people thought he had a chance to win 20. Maybe we're surprised with the consistency of the stuff he's had, but we're not surprised he's won 11 ball games."

"It has just been a gradual improvement," said Manager Dave Johnson. "We didn't score him many runs last year, but he was better last year. His stuff is more consistent. He doesn't back off to get it over, like he used to. Sometimes you don't throw it as hard, to get it over. He goes after them.

"Most pitchers should be concerned with consistency. He's got that now," Johnson said. "He'll get better on his pickoff move to first. He'll get quicker to home plate. Other than that, he doesn't have much further to go, when you're 11-2."

He is not the same pitcher the manager saw in the spring of 1984. "I thought he was very young," Johnson remembered. "I think he was probably rushed by the Dodgers, and because he was rushed, they got a little disenchanted with him and as a result he was traded."

FERNANDES WAS advanced from Class A to Class AAA in his first year as a professional. He struck out 13 batters in his first game with Albuquerque, and finished the season with 86 strikeouts in 88 innings. "Physically, I wasn't rushed," Fernandez said. "Mentally, I was a little over my head in triple-A."

He was one year out of high school. Already, the demands were steep and Fernandez was struggling to catch up. Even now, the growing pains have not been left behind. "He's a young pitcher," Johnson said. "Somebody probably said, 'You should finish more ball games. Maybe he just feels he doesn't deserve to win unless he finishes. I don't know. I don't read minds. That's not a real mature attitude."

Fortunately, the maturing process does not require four days of rest between each advance. This year, for the first time, Fernandez feels he has begun to consistently fulfill the requirement baseball has demanded for years — to treat each game as a separate experience, avoid the highs and lows, separate constructive criticism from failure and eliminate the lingering doubt.

"I'm a firm believer in taking things day by day, game by game," Fernandez said. "I'm still working on it. Sometimes you get that doubt, that fear in your mind. Like, this guy hit me hard a couple of times. But, see, that was last game. This is this game. When those thoughts get into your mind, you're not concentrating on what you're doing. You have to block out those negative things. Not just in baseball. In real life, too."

"It's not something you learn," he said. "Your mom tells you, take things one at a time."

First base runneth over

Back in the days when the Dodgers were in Brooklyn, the gag was that it was the only town in the big leagues without a newspaper, a railroad station — or a left fielder, of its own.

The team moved clear to Los Angeles to solve the problem. They got a newspaper, a railroad station, and Wally Moon. What they now didn't have was a subway — and a third baseman.

Actually, the Dodgers had plenty of third basemen, something like 57 in all. There were so many of them they were thinking of incorporating. If so, their corporate logo should be "E-5."

When you have 57 of something, of course, you have none of something. As the guy said of the firm that had seven vice presidents, "That's an awful lot of bottom for one chair."

They were consistent. They couldn't field or hit. Fresco Thompson used to curl his lip and say the only times they got to third base was with a glove. They were turning third into the cold corner.

But, then, Ron Cey came along — and the problem moved 120 feet east.

FIRST BASE had never been a Dodger problem since the days of the mustache cup and the horse trolley. "Who's on first?" was not a tough question for a Dodger fan. There was a Jake Daubert, a Jacques Fournier (he used to hit .350 with the best of them), Del Bissonette, Sam Leslie, Buddy Hassett, Dolph Camilli and finally the incomparable Gil Hodges, who practically retired the position.

Then, Wes Parker was probably as pretty a performer around the bag as the franchise had seen, but it was Steve Garvey who became the prototypical L.A. Dodger first baseman.

The trouble with Steve was that he was monotonous. He never missed a game, a curve, a throw. He got 200 hits a year, 20-30 home runs and 100 RBIs. He was as dependable as a butler and as reverent as an altar boy.

You could see where this kind of every day perfection would eat at you and, anyway, the Dodgers were convinced Garvey was holding up a pipeline of Hall of Fame first basemen they had down in the minor leagues. Or, in the case of Albuquerque, up in the minor leagues. They were all batting .600 or so and, in the thin air of New Mexico, hitting home runs that stayed up for days like satellites.

No one stopped to think how many Garvey might have hit in an atmosphere where the balls don't curve and the hits don't come down, but, the facts of the matter were, the Dodgers could have signed Garvey if they wanted to. All he wanted was money. And they were paying that to guys who were sitting around Las Vegas swimming pools.

THE DODGERS now had a team that consisted entirely of first basemen — except for third base. They had a left fielder (Pedro Guerrero) playing there.

They gave first base to Greg Brock on the basis he had more Albuquerque home runs than anyone and they scattered the rest of the first basemen through the lineup like confetti.

They told Mike Marshall to learn to play right field — or learn to drive a bus. They told Franklin Stubbs he was a left fielder no matter what anyone told him. They traded for Enos Cabell and Bill Madlock, both of whom could, and had, played first base.

They hauled Sid Bream back and forth from Albuquerque so much he was as eligible for the frequent flyer program as an eagle.

Then, they gave the job to Len Matuszek, a reserve outfielder and a career pinch-hitter.

APPARENTLY, GENERAL Manager Al Campanis, a year or so ago, was finally able to put his finger on what was wrong with the Dodger team — it had too many Sids. So, he got rid of Sid Fernandez for Bob Bailor and Carlos Diaz. And he got rid of Sid Bream for Bill Madlock.

Sidney Eugene Bream is a man who never batted below .300 in the minor leagues in his life. He could hit a line drive off a machine gun was the word coming out of the batting cages. At 6-foot-4, 218 pounds and left-handed, he was as natural at first base as the second coming of Lou Gehrig.

In 1985, he hit .409 in spring training with the Dodgers. He went 8 for 10 in the Freeway Series against the Angels. He opened the season hitting three home runs to lead the Dodgers. So, the parent club optioned him back to Albuquerque on April 25.

He promptly batted .323 and was recalled again on May 18. He got in a few more games, then was optioned back to Albuquerque in June with a suggestion he learn to play outfield. He was recalled on June 23, then re-optioned to Albuquerque on July 10.

He hit .370 in Albuquerque.

In 1984, Sid Bream was batting .362 in Albuquerque in June when the Dodgers recalled him on July 3. They sent him back on July 31.

This human yo-yo still managed to lead the Pacific Coast League in RBIs and homers and assists. His lifetime minor league batting mark was .329. His Albuquerque mark was .336.

HE WONDERED what the Dodgers wanted — chimes? Him to sing the national anthem? Drive the team bus? Do the laundry?

"I decided I'd had enough," Sid Bream was recalling as he sat in a dugout at Dodger Stadium the other night. "They were using me as some kind of insurance. I was either on an airplane or on a bench.

"I went to Tommy Lasorda and he said it was Al Campanis' decision. I went to Al Campanis and he said it was Tommy Lasorda's decision. They had me in a rundown. I decided it was my decision. I asked to be traded."

As Sid Bream came into Dodger Stadium with the Pittsburgh Pirates over the weekend, he was batting .271 with 10 home runs and 35 RBIs. He was also playing first base.

Over on the Dodgers, first basemen were playing everywhere but.

Franklin Stubbs was holding down left field and he has 15 home runs and 36 RBIs and a .266 average. Mike Marshall, injured but holding down right field when not, has 17 home runs, a .266 average and 46 RBIs. Greg Brock, also injured, is batting .213 with 8 home runs and 24 RBIs.

"Who's on first?" has become a very big problem for the Dodgers. "Who's not on first" may be the even bigger one. It may be a bigger problem than not having a railroad station, a daily paper or a left fielder. You can win a pennant without one of those.

JEANE DIXON'S your horoscope

© 1986, Los Angeles Times Syndicate

By Jeane Dixon
Thursday, July 17, 1986

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Your ability to deal with all kinds of people will be a major test, but you will emerge from such situations stronger and more respected. Students get the support they need to be a big success. A more objective approach to problem-solving enables you to out-distance the competition.

CELEBRITY BIRTHDATES: The late, multi-talented star James Cagney, beautiful Diahann Carroll, comedian Phyllis Diller, TV host Art Linkletter, actor Donald Sutherland, Hall of Famer Lou Boudreau and actress Lucie Arnaz.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Cooperation makes work go better. In general all confidential activities will go well. Word letters and memos very carefully. Others, especially family members, respond well to your suggestions.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Keep your business and social lives completely separate. Maintain the status quo on the job for the time being as new projects are in the works. Keep up social and community contacts.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Knowledge of high technology puts you way ahead of your competition. Rejection in personal areas forces you to face certain truths. Devote more time to self-improvement.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Favorable agreement can be finalized. Influences are positive later in the day for important business or financial negotiations. Undisclosed action is advantageous now. Working in small groups is more productive.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): By working behind the scenes you will observe and accomplish more. A new diet and exercise regime gives you increased energy. Romance could develop at work; be discreet but have a great time!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A business venture that looks promising could break down. Funds earned jointly may be subject to dispute. Home improvements increase the value of your real estate. Postpone romance until the weekend.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Make the maximum use of your talents and contacts to gain new business opportunities. Being in the right place at the right time brings great luck.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A change of lifestyle makes you feel more relaxed. A new romance will surprise and delight you. Explore values and philosophies with this person and you will make some fascinating, new discoveries.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Responsibilities at home and at work could be in direct conflict. Accept invitations and answer challenges. Someone who seemed uninterested now pays you dancing attention. Be alert; he/she may have ulterior motives.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Behind-the-scene activities aid you financially. Do not be afraid to make a presentation before a skeptical group. You will be a great success! A new relationship emerges from the shadows.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Changes made at this time will be very beneficial. An active romance may be draining your energy and putting you behind the eight ball at work or school.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): The practical side of a question must be considered. A genuine romantic interest is developing between you and an old friend. Do not ignore the possibilities it offers you.

Opening lead: Three of ♡

How you tackle this hand will tell a lot about the standard of your dummy-play. Cover the East-West cards and see how you would proceed in your attempt to land 12 tricks at your slam in spades.

The simple way is to draw trumps and try to guess which way to take the two-way diamond finesse. If you are an average guesser, you will be right half of the time.

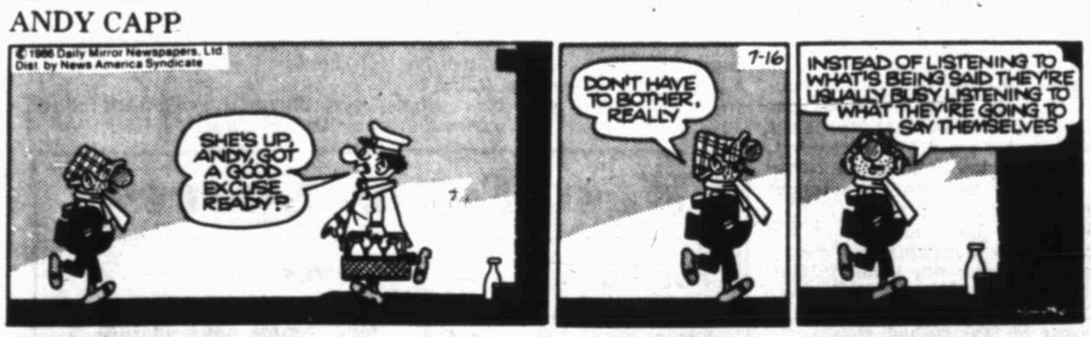

A more sophisticated line is to draw trumps and then cash four heart tricks. From that you learn that East started with only four cards in the major suits, and, therefore, rates to have longer diamonds than West. If you tackled the hand that way and played East for the queen of diamonds, you can congratulate yourself on better technique even though you went down one trick.

If you are a sly fellow, you would win the opening lead in dummy and lead the jack of clubs as if you intend taking a finesse. Every now and then you will fool East into ducking the ace of clubs, and you are then playing for an overtrick.

If you are a good technician, you will see that, if trumps are 3-2, you do not need any finesses—you can make the hand on a dummy reversal as long as hearts are no worse than 4-2. It does no harm to win the first trick on the table and try to steal a trick with the king of clubs.

But suppose that East is wise to you and rises with the ace of clubs and then reverts to a trump. Win on the board and ruff a club. Cross back to the ten of spades and, if both defenders follow, you can claim your contract. Ruff another club, then use the ace of hearts as the entry to ruff dummy's last club. Now all you need do is cross to the ace of diamonds to pull the last trump, discarding your remaining diamond, and your two high hearts take the last tricks.

Trott nominated to Justice's No. 3 post

WASHINGTON (AP) — Stephen S. Trott, a former member of the folk group "The Highwaymen" best known for the early 1960s hit "Michael Row The Boat Ashore," has been nominated as No. 3 man in the Justice Department.

Trott is a former deputy district attorney in Los Angeles and U.S. attorney and has been an assistant attorney general since 1983.

He was a member of the folk group before he entered Harvard Law School, the White House said Tuesday. Trott will succeed Arnold I. Burns, who is moving up to be deputy attorney general.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actress Catherine Oxenberg has been dropped as Amanda Carrington on ABC's "Dynasty," the producers said.

No reason was given for the termination, but it was said to involve a dispute over money.

Karen Cellini, a New York actress, will take over the role in the prime-time soap opera's seventh season this fall, executive producers Aaron Spelling, Douglas S. Cramer and Richard and Esther Shapiro said Tuesday.

Miss Oxenberg joined the show in 1984.

Rogers

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Oscar-winning actress and dancer Ginger Rogers is spending her 75th birthday today traveling to her Oregon ranch.

"The trip takes her three days by car, so she'll be out of reach on her birthday," said her agent, Barry Freed.

"Ginger is in terrific shape and plays tennis and golf every day. She does a lot of traveling and many television interviews, including a recent one for BBC on the history of the RKO studio," Freed said.

Miss Rogers is considering an offer to star in "On Golden Pond" on stage in London, he said.

Her film career has included a wide range of dramas and comedies, but her greatest fame came dancing with Fred Astaire in such musical classics as "Top Hat" and "Gay Divorcee."

PALM SPRINGS, Calif. (AP) — Singer Keely Smith was out of jail only seven hours when she was accosted at her home by thieves who pistol-whipped her brother and stole a $250,000 diamond ring off her finger, police said.

Two suspects were arrested and booked for investigation of invasion robbery, officers said.

The 54-year-old singer and her brother Norman Alonzo Smith were released from the Palm Springs Jail on Friday after posting $1,500 bail each. They were arrested earlier that day for investigation of failing to withhold employees' personal income taxes and pay disability insurance taxes.

That evening, they were tied up and robbed by four intruders at Miss Smith's home, said Palm Springs police Sgt. Fred Donnell.

Miss Smith, who recorded "That Old Black Magic" in the early 1950s with the late Louis Prima, was wearing the 18-carat diamond ring valued at $250,000, police said. The men also took a $50,000 diamond necklace and $1,100 in cash.

Miss Smith, her brother and two others face felony and misdemeanor charges of failing to pay income and disability taxes withheld from employees' paychecks.

• • •

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Benny Rubin, a vaudeville comedian who tap-danced his way into film and television and helped launch the careers of such comic greats as Milton Berle, George Burns and Gracie Allen, died Tuesday. He was 87.

Rubin had been admitted June 23 to Cedars-Sinai Medical Center, where he died, said hospital spokesman Ron Wise.

Schwarzenegger

WHITTIER, Calif. (AP) — Although Arnold Schwarzenegger's summer film "Raw Deal" has drawn fewer moviegoers than expected, the body-building champion won top reviews from a captive audience of inmates at a California Youth Authority Camp.

"He was outrageous," one youth said after the actor and former Mr. Universe demonstrated weightlifting exercises for about 300 juveniles.

"As soon as I get out of here I'm going to a gym to work out," said another.

Schwarzenegger has been speaking to prison and Youth Authority groups throughout California since 1975.

"When you're educating people about fitness in life, these are the people you're going to leave out," he said. "They can't go out and buy a book or get a video."

Schwarzenegger was assisted in his demonstration Friday by Sven-Ole Thorsen of Denmark, holder of the world record in power lifting, 520 pounds.

• • •

CHICAGO (AP) — Jerry Butler, whose 1969 album "The Iceman Cometh," yielded a million-selling single, now returneth in an unfamiliar incarnation — as a politician.

Butler, who won three Grammys, had three Billboard Top Ten singles and sold more than 30 million albums in the 1960s, said his campaign for the Cook County Board of Comissioners is rooted in his long-time commitment to civil rights.

"I've always been involved in politics," Butler said in a recent telephone interview from his South Side beverage distributing company, Iceman Beverage Co. Inc. "Most of my songs have a political meaning, even though they're love songs."

"Only The Strong Survive," Butler's 1969 hit, "is a love song, but it has a civil-rights message, too," he said.

The singer-songwriter, appearing on the ballot as Jerry "Iceman" Butler, received 215,292 votes in the March 18 Democratic primary.

Halop

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Florence Halop, the raspy-voiced actress who played the impertinent bailiff on "Night Court" and every doctor's nightmare on "St. Elsewhere," died at Cedars-Sinai Medical Center. She was 63.

"The cause of death was listed as complications arising from advanced cancer," said Maggie Begley, spokeswoman for Warner Bros. Inc. The actress died about 7 a.m. Tuesday.

Miss Halop entered the hospital June 19 after suffering a stroke that impaired her left side, said Cedars-Sinai spokesman Ron Wise. Doctors discovered she had advanced cancer, and she was placed in one of the hospital's hospice units.

The actress, who began her career in radio at the age of 4, succeeded Selma Diamond as bailiff Florence Kleinerin on NBC-TV's "Night Court" last year. Miss Diamond, who played bailiff Selma Hacker in the courtroom comedy, also died of cancer. Both women were heavy smokers.

Miss Halop, who was born on Jan. 23, 1923, in Jamaica Estates, N.Y., had met her predecessor on "Night Court" many years before, when Miss Diamond was a struggling radio comedy writer.

Miss Diamond, whose voice also sounded like gravel sliding down a tin roof, asked Miss Halop, "Do you think I talk funny?"

"Of course not," Miss Halop replied.

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. — Several Dallas Cowboys say they approve of random drug testing in the NFL, provided the tests have backing of the players' union. A poll of 30 players at the club's training camp showed 23 favored random testing. However, most of the players said they disagreed with NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle's mandate for drug testing without approval of the NFLPA....

Tour de France

PAU, France - France's Bernard Hinault, aiming for a sixth victory in the Tour de France cycling classic, displayed his power in the first mountain stage Tuesday, outpacing the field to take the overall lead with a margin of more than five minutes. The day's biggest loser was French rival, Laurent Fignon, who dropped some nine minutes behind and seemed to have lost his chance of winning the Tour, although there still are a long series of tough mountain stages to come...

FORT WORTH — Marc Houston, 6-8 forward from Detroit, has been suspended from Texas Christian University for disciplinary reasons. Houston's suspension, which covers both the second summer session and the fall semester, will prevent him from regaining his academic eligibility under university guidelines in time for his senior season...

Atlanta's Chuck Tanner benches publicist for negative statistics

ATLANTA (AP) — Atlanta Braves Manager Chuck Tanner has benched a member of the team's public relations staff for issuing what he called negative statistics.

Tanner has told Robin Monsky that she will no longer be allowed on the field or on road trips with the team.

Al Thornwell, executive vice president for the National League team, said Tanner was upset with statistics Monsky handed out to reporters.

For example, she has given out statistics on Dale Murphy's failure to hit in the clutch and on the early-inning pitching problems of David Palmer.

Monsky, 29, joined the Braves last year. She said she will continue to do the same job, with the exception of Tanner's restrictions.

Wayne Minshew, Braves public relations director, will replace her on road trips.

"They're asking me to do basically the same thing," Monsky said. "And I will give the same effort that I gave before. But I'm not very happy with the situation."

Thornwell said her status could change before the season is over, saying the move "is not set in stone."

Crimestoppers golf tournament slated July 28

Super Bowl Chi Bears open camp

PLATTEVILLE, Wis. (AP) — The National Football Champion League champion Chicago Bears were greeted by "The Super Bowl Shuffle" song when they arrived at training camp Tuesday, while quarterback Jim McMahon went out for some cool brews on a hot, muggy day in Wisconsin beer country.

While McMahon and his teammates were straggling into the University of Wisconsin-Platteville training camp, defensive end Richard Dent, the Most Valuable Player in the Super Bowl, agreed to report to camp while negotiations continued on a new contract, Bears spokesman Bryan Harlan said.

Dent, who had threatened to sit out the 1985 playoffs and 1986 season, is close to terms with the Bears, Harlan said. Last year was the final season of a contract that paid Dent $90,000 annually, making him one of the NFL's most underpaid players.

Coach Mike Ditka arrived to a waiting crowd of reporters and a handful of autograph seekers.

"I'm doing great," Ditka said. "I just hope you're all back here next year."

Ditka apparently was referring to the rarity of teams repeating as Super Bowl champs.

McMahon checked into George R. Dobson Hall, where the players are staying, and a few minutes later left in a car with teammates Kevin Butler and Ken Margerum. McMahon returned with a case of beer that he lugged into the dormitory.

With "Super Bowl Shuffle" playing on their portable music box, three young girls from Dubuque, Iowa, did a dance routine on the dorm lawn for the arriving Bears.

"We've come here to see the Bears," said Meredith Prochaska, 7.

McMahon had his usual "spiked" hair — unlike when he came to camp last year after wide receiver Willie Gault had given him a Mohawk haircut.

The quarterback, who had nothing to say to reporters except "thanks" to one who wished him "good luck," has threatened to given them the silent treatment all season.

Defensive tackle Steve McMichael said he expected a "fighting, scratching and clawing camp — same training camp as usual. We are going to find out what works and what doesn't."

McMichael will be working under new defensive coordinator Vince Tobin, who is taking over from Buddy Ryan, now the Philadelphia Eagles head coach.

"We'll be trying all different kinds of defenses all training camp," McMichael said.

Dollar tumbles

LONDON (AP) — The U.S. dollar tumbled to a new post-World War II low against the Japanese yen and a five-year low against the West German mark in nervous, hectic trading today. Gold rose.

In Tokyo, where trading ends before Europe's business day begins, the dollar fell to a closing 158.30 yen, losing 1.55 yen amid small-scale Japanese central bank intervention.

The dollar hovered around 2.15 West German marks, its lowest since early 1981, and was substantially down against other European currencies. Even the British pound was up against the dollar despite being weakened by the latest fall in oil prices.

Traders said the dollar was hit by U.S. economic indicators for June pointing to a slowdown, Wall Street's slump and a gloomy forecast by Solomon Brothers analysts Henry Kaufman and Jeffrey Hanna.

Other dollar rates at midmorning, compared with late Tuesday:

—2.1520 West German marks, down from 2.1640

—1.7455 Swiss francs, down from 1.7643

—6.9550 French francs, down from 6.9850

—2.4230 Dutch guilders, down from 2.4420

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $348.90 a troy ounce, compared with late Tuesday's $347.30. At midmorning today, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $348.35.

In Zurich, the bid price was $348.50, up from $346.50 late Tuesday.

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold rose $2.61 to close at a bid $347.91.

Silver was quoted in London today at a bid price of $5.08 a troy ounce, up from Tuesday's $5.05.

Exxon realignment brings 25 to Midland

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Business/Oil Writer

Effective August 1, Midland will be the headquarters of Exxon Co. USA's new Western Exploration Division, which will have responsibility for the company's oil and gas exploration activities in all or part of 15 western states.

The Bright Side

In association with establishment of the new office, approximately 25 employees will be transferred to Midland from offices in Denver and Oklahoma City.

According to an Exxon spokesman in Houston, the transfers are expected to be complete by the first of the month. The company has yet to decide which current Midland location will house the new division offices.

The new division was created by combining the former Western and Central Exploration Divisions, headquartered in Denver and Midland, respectively. The company will retain an exploration office in Denver with responsibility for portions of the Rocky Mountain states.

"Midland will now oversee not only the substantial exploration potential in the Permian Basin, but also the undrilled potential of all the western states with the exception of Alaska and offshore California," says L. Bryant Williams Jr., newly appointed manager of the Western Exploration Division.

Williams was operations manager of the company's exploration department in Houston. A San Angelo native, Williams holds a B.S. in geology from Texas Tech University, and is a 24-year Exxon veteran.

Also in conjunction with the realignment of the division, the company has promoted E.L. Fennell from operations manager for the Central Exploration Division in Midland to manger of geology and geophysics for the new Western Division.

S.W. Kothmann, planning manager for Exxon's Houston-based exploration department, moves to Denver to supervise the remaining exploration office.

"The new Midland office will be responsible for an expanded range of the company's interests," notes Williams. "The region includes established plays in the Rockies and numerous frontier plays in the western U.S."

The entire states of Arizona, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, North Dakota, Oregon, South Dakota, Utah, Washington and Wyoming are included in the Division as well as West Texas, onshore California, northwestern Nebraska and most of Colorado.

Treasury bill yields drop to nine year low

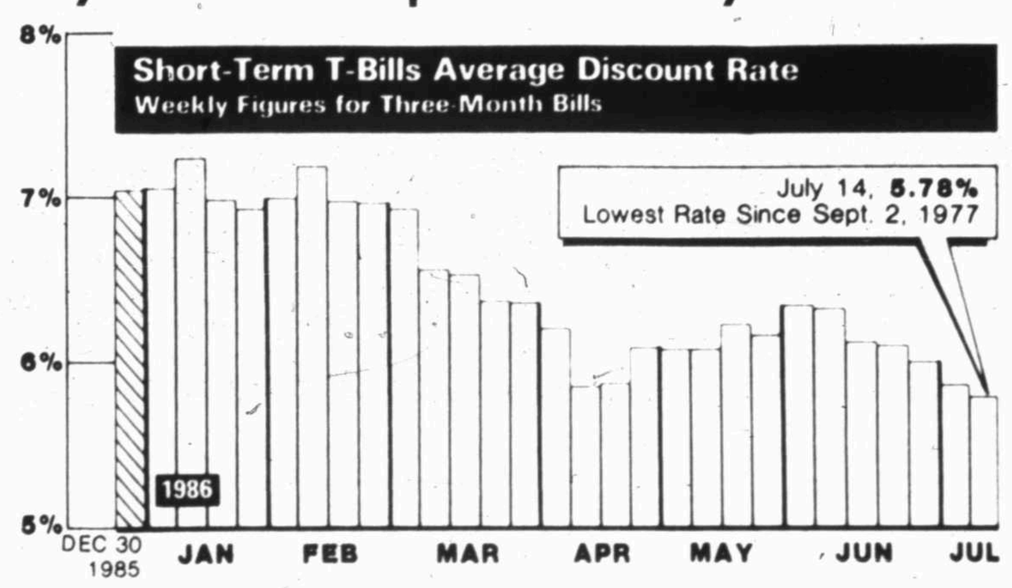

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Yields on short-term Treasury bills were moderately lower Monday at the regular weekly auction, but the dip from the previous week was enough to drop the rates to their lowest levels in nearly 9 years.

The government sold $7.412 billion of three-month bills at an average discount rate of 5.78 percent, down from 5.85 percent last week.

The Treasury auctioned $7.418 billion in six-month bills at an average discount rate of 5.8 percent, also down from 5.85 percent last week.

The 13-week rate was the lowest since Sept. 2, 1977, when it was 5.554 percent. It fell below the recent record low of 5.84 percent set on April 14 of this year.

The 26-week rate as the lowest since Aug. 8, 1977, when it was 5.679 percent. The rate fell to 5.87 percent on April 21 of this year.

Forum on economy scheduled

From Staff Reports

A public forum to call attention to, challenge and utilize Midland's unused resource has been scheduled for Thursday, July 24 at Midland College.

E.W. Matthews, Jr., a member of an ad hoc committee sponsoring the event said the forum was designed to stimulate discussion and action toward tackling Midland's diversification problem. "There are more educated people in Midland per capita than any other city in Texas, and it is time we began to capitalize upon that brain power in solving our diversification problem," said Matthews. He said Midland's brain trust was a vast unused resource.

Panelists for the forum include: Viola Coleman, M.D., Steve Hardin, industrial development director Midland Chamber of Commerce; Russell Ramsland, Jr., a Midland oilman involved in the space industry; Roger Dameron, another Midland oilman seeking to create a diversified manufacturing business in Midland; David Thayer, director Permian Basin Bid Center; David Holland, president OIME, an Odessa concern which has attracted several defense contracts and Duane M. Leach, president University of Texas Permian Basin. A high school student, yet unnamed, will also be asked to serve on the panel which will be moderated by Deanna Lusk, PhD. of Midland College.

The goals of the forum which will get underway at 7 p.m. in the Health Science Lecture Hall will be to define the problems, invite area involvement with the problems and organize follow-up groups of interested citizens.

Hispanic chamber establishes contacts with Mexican businesses

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

While the country was celebrating the July 4 weekend, 10 Midlanders were touring Chihuahua City and Parral, Mexico, investigating that country's industrial capabilities.

"The purpose of this trip was to establish initial contacts in order to establish trade with Mexico," said Roger Robles, president of the Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce, which sponsored the trip. "We didn't know what was available or how to work with Mexico."

The group was hosted by the Promotora de la Industria Chihuahuense, who had visited Midland-Odessa in May. The industrial development agency is working to develop the state of Chihuahua's six industrial parks. "We found the people in Mexico are anxious to work with the United States. They want individual investors, or to work with joint ventures," Robles said.

"There's an ample labor pool down there," he continued. "We found out that the average labor worker there earns in one day what a minimum wage earner here earns in an hour. Labor is an inexpensive commodity."

He said one way Midlanders could work with Mexico is to establish maquilladoras, or twin plants, such as one operated by Zenith. The Mexican plant manufactures and assembles some parts, which are shipped to the U.S. to be integrated with parts assembled at the American plant.

American businesses can also buy land in an industrial park and set up a plant, a fact Robles said he didn't know before the trip.

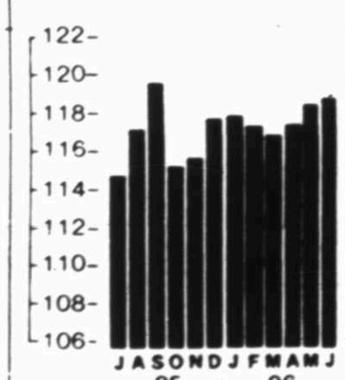

Chihuahua City, capital of the state of Chihuahua, has a population of 600,000 and lies 235 miles south of El Paso. The city boasts an excellent highway system, an international airport, and 20 banks.

Parral has a population of approximately 100,000 and lies 415 miles south of El Paso. It also boasts an excellent highway system and has three small airports for light aircraft.

'Right now nothing has come out of the trip but contacts," Robles said. "It's up to the individual who's interested to contact these people."

"We need to think: what does Midland need that could be made in Mexico. We have businesses with plants in Hong Kong, places like that. If we start manufacturing in Mexico, we could create jobs both there and here."

Texas banks report lower earnings

DALLAS (AP) — As company officials predicted, Interfirst Corp. of Dallas reported a $281.1 million net loss for the year's second quarter as the worsening Texas economy cut into net earnings for Interfirst and three other bank holding companies in Texas.

The loss reported Tuesday by Interfirst, an umbrella for 67 banks in Texas, came as it and other banks wrestle with lower oil and gas prices, a soft real estate market and a generally sluggish state economy.

Oil prices have dropped more than 50 percent since December.

The Interfirst loss is $4.18 per share for the three months ended June 30. The figures compare with net income of $16.1 million, or 24 cents per share, for the same quarter last year.

The company increased its provision for loan losses to $328.2 million, up from $32.9 million in the same quarter a year ago and $52.2 million for this year's first quarter. Such additions to reserves come directly from earnings.

Houston-based Texas Commerce Bancshares also reported a loss, with net income for the quarter at $10.5 million (31 cents a share) — down 66 percent compared with its $31.1 million (95 cents per share) during the same quarter last year.

The company increased its loan losses to $320 million from $184 million in last year's second quarter to guard against potential defaults.

In San Antonio, National Bancshares Corp. of Texas also released its second quarter report Tuesday, with a net income of $1 million compared with $6.9 million earned during last year's second quarter.

In another Tuesday release, Texas American Bancshares Inc. in Fort Worth reported only a marginal increase in earnings. Net income for the second quarter of 1986 was $526,000 compared with $8.85 million a year ago.

Chairman Joseph M. Grant attributed the current quarter decrease to a 69 percent jump in the provision for loan losses and a decline in net interest yield at the company.

"These are challenging times for Texas bankers," said National Bancshares Chairman Richard W. Calvert, "and few are immune from pressures imposed by current economic conditions in the state."

At Interfirst, the decrease in earnings was predicted in June when Chairman Robert H. Stewart said the depressed Texas economy would force large increases in loan loss provisions.

"Basically, it's the result of the Texas economy," said Mike Cinelli, vice president of communications.

For the six months ending June 30, Interfirst's net loss was $279 million. In the first six months last year, it had net income of $31.2 million.

The increase in the reserve for loan losses put it at 3.56 percent of loans outstanding compared to 1.81 percent in 1985 at Interfirst.

Still, Stewart pointed to a strong capital position for the company. Interfirst's period-end primary capital was $1.4 billion, with total capital — primary capital plus long-term debt — at $1.8 billion.

Retail sales edge up during June

WASHINGTON (AP) — Retail sales edged up a slight 0.2 percent in June, the weakest gain in three months, the government reported today.

The Commerce Department said that sales totaled $118.7 billion last month following a 0.7 percent gain in May and a 0.9 percent advance in April.

The weakness in June stemmed from sluggish auto sales, which rose just 0.8 percent, the poorest showing since a 3.9 percent decline in March.

Without the slight gain in auto sales, however, total sales would have shown no improvement at all last month, the government said.

For the first six months of the year, retail sales have risen by 4.3 percent compared to the same peri-

Cities Service cuts 90 jobs

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — Cities Service Oil & Gas Corp. has eliminated 90 company jobs, including employees in Houston and Midland, Texas, officials said.

Linda Hauser, spokeswoman for the company, said Tuesday those receiving termination notices were mainly employed in the company's exploration and production units. Cities Service is a subsidiary of Occidental Petroleum Co.

In addition to 30 jobs eliminated at the company's Tulsa headquarters, an unspecified number of employees were cut in Oklahoma City, Houston, Denver, Midland and Bakersfield, Calif.

She indicated there could be more layoffs, but said that most of those would not be in Tulsa.

Ms. Hauser said the cutbacks were a result of declining oil and gas prices and a reduction in Cities Service's capital expenditures in exploration and production.

Ms. Hauser said some of those terminated may be eligible for Cities Service's early retirement program. Some also may be rehired for other positions within the Occidental structure.

New bookstore opens in Midland Plaza

By MELLA McEWEN

A new tenant has joined Mervyn's and Service Merchandise in Midland Plaza.

THE LIGHTHOUSE, owned by Midlanders Larry and Sue Scoggins, opened July 1 catty-corner from Mervyn's. It's a Christian bookstore that carries books, bibles of all kinds, and music - albums, cassettes, sheet music, songbooks, and music accompaniment tapes. The store is also very strong on gift items, according to Larry Scoggins. His wife added that that the store carries some antiques, and will carry more as the ones they have sell.

Also available are video rentals such as Christian concerts, programs, and the Scoggins hope to add G-rated movies soon.

This is the first retail endeavor for the Scoggins. Larry is a former sales representative for IBM and worked in the personnel department of a local oil company, and Sue is a Realtor.

Sale of new cars improves

DETROIT (AP) — Sales of new cars by domestic companies rose 8.9 percent in early July compared with a year ago on the continued strength of incentive sales compaigns, giving Detroit its second-best showing for the July 1-10 period this decade.

"The sales were really very strong, considering the weakness in the other sectors of the economy," said auto industry analyst Scott Merlis at Morgan Stanley & Co. in New York.

He cited higher prices of Japanese cars due to the strengthening yen, lower gasoline prices and lower interest rates.

"The sales have been holding very steady here for the past several months. It looks like the automakers have been successful in fine-tuning their incentives to keep sales at a pretty steady pace," said Harvey Heinbach, automotive industry analyst at Merrill Lynch in New York.

"Unlike last year, when incentives caused all kinds of gyrations, now they seem to be holding a fairly even keel," Heinbach said. "I wouldn't say things are terrific, but they're not too bad, either."

For the period, the seven domestic automakers sold 189,521 cars, up 8.9 percent from 174,019 a year ago, according to figures released Tuesday.

That came to an average 23,690 sales per day in eight official selling days. Only the 25,575 a day in the July 1-10 period of 1984 was better during the 1980s.

The magic of incentives was particularly apparent at Chrysler Corp., which enjoyed a 25.6 percent sales gain compared with last year by more than doubling the sales of two dated car lines: the Dodge Omni-Plymouth Horizon subcompacts and the rear-drive Fifth Avenue luxury car.

The two car lines have been around for nearly a decade with relatively few refinements. Chrysler has cut the suggested base price of the Omni-Horizon to $5,499 while adding options.

Chrysler, the No. 3 automaker, increased its share of the domestic market from 13.6 percent last year to 15.7 percent in the July 1-10 period.

No. 2 Ford Motor Co. reported an 8.8 percent sales gain over a year ago and had the same market share, 26.3 percent.

General Motors Corp., which has been trying unsuccessfully for nearly two years to re-establish a market share around 60 percent, appeared to suffer at Chrysler's and Ford's hands.

GM enjoyed a sales gain of 7.8 percent over a year ago. But its market share fell from 55.4 percent last year to an even more disappointing 54.8 percent this time.

Among the smaller carmakers, American Honda Motor Co. Inc. sales of Ohio-assembled cars were down 1.1 percent, Volkswagen of America Inc. sales from its Pennsylvania plant were up 50 percent and American Motors Corp. car sales were down 55.9 percent.

NL rejects investor's stock bid

NEW YORK (UPI) — NL Industries Inc.'s board of directors Monday unanimously rejected as inadequate a $15.125-a-share tender offer, worth about $746 million, by an affiliate of Dallas investor Harold G. Simmons.

NL said its board's actions were based on the belief that the unsolicited Simmons offer "substantially undervalues" the oil services and chemicals company.

The NL board recommend that its shareholders not tender any of their holdings to Simmons, who already owns 17.7 percent of NL's 60 million outstanding shares.

The directors also voted to spin off NL Chemicals to NL stockholders on a pro rata basis in an action designed to give shareholders a better market valuation than the Simmons offer.

NL Industries stock closed up 37.50 cents to $15 a share on the New York Stock Exchange Monday.

Under the tax-free spin-off plan, NL is issuing shares of Series C preferred stock. All NL stockholders of record on July 24 will receive one Series C depositary receipt for each share of NL Industries common stock. the Series C depositary receipt will be redeemable at any time — at NL's option — for either one common share of NL Chemicals or $14 in cash plus accrued dividends and the per-share increase in the net worth of NL Chemicals as of June 30, 1986.

Each Series C depositary receipt will have a quarterly cash dividend of 9 cents per share but will not have ordinary voting power.

NL has applied to list the Series C Depositary receipts on the New York Stock Exchange.

In late June, NL's board rejected a $15-a-share takeover offer from Simmons, who is chairman of Amalgamated Sugar Co., and announced it had terminated its self-tender offer for 7.5 million shares to avoid more than $100 million in financing costs in an era of weak oil prices.

Most problem nuclear plant shut down

WASHINGTON (AP) — All but one of the nation's 10 "problem" nuclear power plants are shut down, and Nuclear Regulatory Commission officials say most will not be allowed to resume operations until the agency is satisfied that improvements have been made.

The commission formally identified the 10 plants in testimony prepared for a hearing today before a House subcommittee on management problems at various atomic power facilities.

Three of the four NRC commissioners informally identified nine of the plants at a hearing in May before the same panel, the House Energy Committee's subcommittee on energy conservation and power.

"After careful review and discussion by senior staff management, it was determined that Peach Bottom should have been on the list," the commission said in written testimony prepared for a hearing today by the same subcommittee on management problems at U.S. nuclear power plants.

Of the 10 "problem plants," only the twin-reactor Peach Bottom facility near Lancaster, Pa., owned by Philadelphia Electric Co., is operating, NRC officials said Tuesday.

The subcommittee's chairman, Rep. Edward J. Markey, D-Mass., released the NRC's report on the 10 plants Tuesday, saying it "represents a stinging indictment of the nuclear industry's ability to safely operate nuclear reactors."

Ecuador says it will cut production rates

QUITO, Ecuador (UPI) — OPEC member Ecuador announced Tuesday it was cutting its oil production by 15,000 barrels per day, lowering the nation's daily output to 285,000 barrels.

Javier Espinosa, minister of energy and mines, said the change comes as part of an effort by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries to jointly cut production and thus "allow Ecuador to continue counting on hydrocarbons as its principal source of income."

Under the change, the Shushufund-Aquarico field will cut production by 10,000 barrels and the Coronaco field's production will fall by 5,000 barrels. Both are run by a consortium created by Texaco and the Ecuadoran State Petroleum Corp.

Previously, Ecuador had been producing 300,000 barrels a day even though OPEC had assigned it a production limit of just 183,000 barrels.

OPEC failed to reach a concrete accord on production curbs at its summer meeting that ended June 30 in Brioni, Yugoslavia. The 13-nation group is producing at a 4-½-year high of 19.5 million barrels a day and intensifying pressure on sagging oil prices.

But at the Brioni summit the bitterly divided OPEC oil ministers endorsed a gentleman's agreement to voluntarily restrain production in a bid to prop up prices.

FTC says Coke merger limits trade

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Trade Commission formally issued a complaint Tuesday challenging Coca-Cola's proposed takeover of Dr Pepper Co., saying the acquisition would reduce competition in the distribution and sale of soft drinks in the United States.

In its complaint, the commission charges that the acquisition would substantially lessen competition in the market by increasing the likelihood of collusion and by making it more difficult for new firms to enter and more costly for current firms to compete in the market.

The commission alleges that these factors would likely lead to increases in prices and restricted output of carbonated soft drinks, said Dee Ellison, an FTC spokeswoman.

Last month, the commission asked the U.S. District Court here to issue a preliminary injunction preventing Coca-Cola's acquisition of DP Holding Inc., Dr Pepper's parent company, pending completion of the administrative proceedings that the FTC began Tuesday.

The commission voted 4-0, with Commissioner Mary Azcuenaga absent, to seek the injunction. A hearing on the request is scheduled to begin Wednesday.

On Feb. 20, Coca-Cola announced that it would spend $470 million to buy Dr Pepper, the No. 4 maker is size.

The combination of Coca-Cola, with brands that account for about 39 percent of the market, and Dr Pepper with 7 percent — primarily in the South — would help Coke retain its firm grip on the top spot in soft drinks.

Coca-Cola's plan to buy Dr Pepper comes just as Pepper's sales are rebounding, with sales said to have grown 8 percent last year.

Dr Pepper was purchased by a group of investors for $650 million in 1984, but the buyers then sold off the company's Canada Dry division, nine bottling plants and some other assets.

Coke has been struggling for years to retain its top ranking against the aggressive challenger of Pepisco. And indeed, for 1985, industry analysts say Pepsi finally managed to capture first place with its name brand, Pepsi-Cola.

Pepsi-Cola captured 18.6 percent of soft drink sales last year, according to Beverage Digest.

The commission issues an administrative complaint when it has reason to believe that the law has been or is being violated and where it appears that a proceeding is in the public interest.

Such action marks the beginning of a proceeding in which the allegations will be ruled upon after a formal hearing.

If the commission's allegations are upheld, Coca-Cola could be required to divest itself of any interest in DP Holding Inc. The company also could be required to seek prior FTC approval if it wishes to acquire any carbonated soft drink assets within a specified period of time.

Coca-Cola Co., based in Atlanta, produces Coca-Cola Classic, Coke, Caffeine Free Coke, Diet Coke, Caffeine Free Diet Coke, Cherry Coke, Tab, Caffeine Free Tab, Sprite, Diet Sprite, Fanta flavors, Fresca, Mello Yello, Mr. Pibb, Minute Maid and Diet Minute Maid brands.

Oklahoma approves temporary plugging for stripper wells

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — The Oklahoma Corporation Commission voted Tuesday to allow the temporary plugging of stripper wells for up to two years.

A stripper oil well has an average daily production that does not exceed 10 barrels during a 12-month period. A stripper gas well is a well averaging less than 60,000 cubic feet of gas per day.

Corporation Commission rules now let a well operator temporarily plug a stripper well for up to one year.

Wells may be temporarily plugged during a period when it is uneconomical to operate it. The well may be reopened in the future when higher oil and gas prices may justify production again.

Steep penalty assessed against military contractor

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — A subsidiary of Litton Industries Inc. faces what a prosecutor said is one of the largest penalties ever assessed against a military contractor after agreeing to plead guilty to charges of defrauding the government of $6.3 million.

Clifton Precision, Special Devices Division, of Springfield, Delaware County, Pa., agreed to plead guilty to all 321 counts on which it was indicted and to pay $15 million in criminal and civil fines and restitution, U.S. Attorney Edward S.G. Dennis Jr. said.

Dennis said he believed the sum would be one of the largest settlements ever paid by a military contractor accused of wrongdoing.

Named in the federal grand jury indictment besides the Litton division were Michael J. Millspaugh, former vice president of finance and administration, and Joseph DiLiberto, former purchasing manager.

The indictment accuses the suburban Philadelphia company of defrauding the government on contracts to make instruments for aircraft and other military hardware.

Dennis said the company had "grossly inflated prices intentionally" on about 45 contracts from 1975 to 1984.

Authorities said the company would plead guilty within the next two weeks to 300 counts of making false claims, 20 of mail fraud and one count of concealing material facts from a U.S. agent.

Gary Glazer, chief of the fraud division of the U.S. Attorney's Office, said the company, in agreeing to pay $6.3 million in restitution and fines of about $8.7 million, was accepting the maximum penalty that it could have received.

Millspaugh, who faces a possible 125-year prison term if convicted on all charges, and DiLiberto, who could face 15 years in prison, are scheduled for arraignment next week.

Specifically, the indictment alleged the Litton unit defrauded the Pentagon on contracts for radar equipment and other instruments for the F-16, F-106, F-4 and B-52 aircraft, Cobra jet helicopters, Navy destroyers and other warships.

Litton

The company inflated costs and pricing data and sought to conceal the scheme from government auditors and investigators, said Assistant U.S. Attorney Nicholas Harbist. The inflated figures were known inside the unit as "chicken fat," authorities said.

Harbist said the investigation was continuing.

Litton, in a statement from its Beverly Hills, Calif., headquarters, said it "will take whatever specific additional actions are necessary to reassure the Defense Department that it is a responsible company fully qualified to do business with the U.S. government."

The Special Devices Division produces a variety of electronic products, primarily for the Pentagon.

Litton said the division's annual sales amounted to about $25 million — or about one half of 1 percent of Litton sales companywide. The unit has about 400 workers.

"Only a handful of employees were engaged in the illegal activities," said Litton Chairman Fred O'Green. "New people have been put into key positions and a program is in place to strengthen cost accounting and bid and proposal practices at the division to be in full compliance with corporate and government requirements."

The Pentagon declined comment Tuesday on whether Litton's indictment and guilty plea would result in its suspension from new defense contracts. The Pentagon has increasingly ordered such suspensions in recent years in a crackdown on errant contractors, using the procedure to demand improvements to accounting procedures and the development of corporate codes of ethics.

Texas Commerce ready to comeback with turnaround

HOUSTON (AP) — Despite second-quarter earnings that were down two-thirds from the same period last year, Texas Commerce Bancshares will be able to stage a comeback when the Texas economy improves, company officials said.

The Houston-based holding company of 70 Texas banks earned a net income of $10.5 million or 31 cents a share in the second quarter, compared to $31.1 million or 95 cents per share during the same period last year, officials announced Tuesday.

However, the company remains strong in the long run, they said.

"Texas Commerce has maintained its capital base as one of the strongest in the nation," said Ben F. Love, chairman and chief executive officer.

"As a percentage of total assets, Texas Commerce's common equity — its net worth — was 6.6 percent and its primary capital was 8.4 percent in the second quarter of 1986, both ratios ranking as the highest of the nation's 25 largest banking organizations," he added.

The holding company's officials increased their reserve for possible loan losses to $320 million, or 2.5 percent of total loans, in the second quarter, compared to $184 million or 1.4 percent of loans in 1985's second period.

Bad real estate loans accounted for $13 million in net loan losses, while $3 million were lost in bad energy loans, officials said. Some $12 million in loans to other commercial sectors were written off as were $1 million in the consumer sector.

Industrial production down .5 percent in June

WASHINGTON (AP) — Production at the nation's factories, mines and utilities plunged 0.5 percent in June, the fourth decline in the past five months, the government said today.

The Federal Reserve Board blamed one-half of the June decline on strikes which affected output of communications equipment, construction supplies and other durable materials. The June decline followed a 0.4 percent drop in May and left industrial output 2.1 percent below where it was in January.

The continued weakness in industrial America has been the primary reason economic growth has been so sluggish this year.

The Reagan administration had hoped that a weaker dollar would alleviate the country's ballooning foreign trade deficit and boost sales of domestic products. But in the first half of the year, the trade deficit has continued to deteriorate.

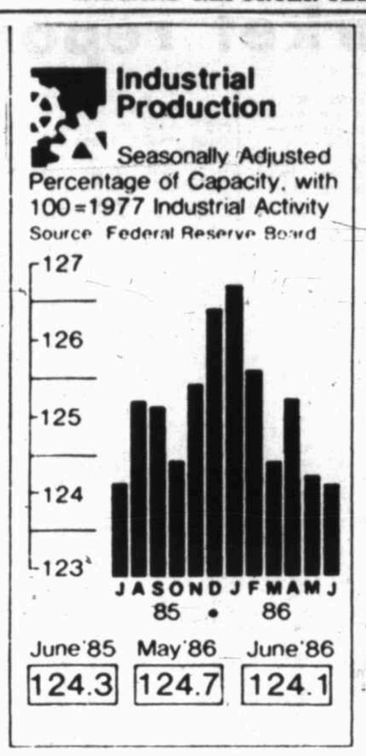

The June decline left industrial production below the level of a year ago, with the mining industry suffering the biggest drop last month.

Output in mining sagged 1.5 percent, the fifth consecutive decline, as oil and gas drilling slumped further because of the worldwide drop in oil prices. Utility production rose 0.3 percent in June after a sharp 1.1 percent May decline.

Manufacturing fell 0.5 percent in June, more than double the 0.2 percent May decline. The weakness came from a big drop in production of durable goods, items expected to last three or more years, which fell 0.8 percent. Prodution of non-durable goods was unchanged in June.

Autos were assembled at an annual rate of 8 million units in June, up from May when cars were producted at a rate of 7.6 million units.

Production of business equipment fell 1.1 percent in June with a large part of the weakness related to the strike at American Telephone & Telegraph Co.

Business sales post large decline

WASHINGTON (AP) — Business sales slumped 1.8 percent in May, the biggest decline in 11 years, the government reported today.

The Commerce Department said that sales amounted to $420.7 billion in May, $7.7 billion below the April sales total. It was the largest one-month decline since a record 2.8 percent plunge in March 1975.

With sales slumping, businesses also cut back drastically on inventory building, pushing inventories down by 0.3 percent, the biggest fall since a 0.6 percent drop in March 1983. The drop left inventories at $586.6 billion at the end of May.

In another report today, the Federal Reserve Board said the nation's industry operated at just 78.3 percent of capacity in June, a sharp plunge that was partially accounted for by strikes in the aluminum, lumber and communications industries.

The reserve board said the operating rate fell 0.6 percentage points in June and now stands 2.5 percentage points below where it was at the beginning of the year.

The information on sales, inventories and industrial capacity provided further evidence of how sluggish the economy has become.

Reagan administration officials have said they will have to cut their projection for economic growth this year although they still contend that a substantial rebound will occur in the last half of 1986.

But private analysts are beginning to have their doubts after a string of anemic statistics. Many are now forecasting the economy, which has been mired in a sluggish growth pattern for two years, will show little if any pickup in coming months.

The 1.8 percent decline in business sales was the second in the past three months. Sales had fallen 1.6 percent in March and rose 2 percent in April.

The decline was led by a 5.1 percent drop in sales by wholesalers. Sales by manufacturers were down 1.4 percent, while retailers enjoyed a 0.7 percent sales advance. The government reported Tuesday that retail sales rose in June by only 0.2 percent.

The decline in inventories was led by a 0.8 percent fall in stockpiles held by retailers. Inventories at the manufacturing level were down 0.3 percent, while wholesalers boosted inventories by 0.2 percent.

The changes left the ratio of inventories to sales at 1.39 in May, up from 1.37 in April. This means it would take 1.39 months to exhaust May inventories at the May sales pace.

Firm to mine Texas for uraniaum

BROOMFIELD, Colo. (AP) — Rocky Mountain Energy will sign an $18 million contract with Taiwan today to explore for uranium in Texas and three other states, a company spokeswoman said.

"We think this is important, especially with the status of the uranium industry being so depressed," said Dorothy Reid, the spokeswoman. "It's our only exploration contract at this time."

Over the next five years, Rocky Mountain Energy will search for uranium on land it owns or leases in Arizona, Washington, Texas and Nebraska, she said.

The agreement calls for Rocky Mountain Energy to retain two-thirds interest in any uranium recovered, while Taiwan Power Co. keeps one-third ownership, she said. Taiwan Power, which is government-owned, also has the option to buy all the uranium, she said.

The uranium will be used for the four nuclear reactors in Taiwan that generate electricity for the 19 million area residents, she said.

Rocky Mountain Energy has been talking with Taiwan for the past 2 years and although the contract will be signed today, it will be effective last Jan. 1, she said.

Subaru offers special VISA card

PENNSAUKEN, N.J. (AP) — Subaru of America will offer a special Subaru VISA card in a new marketing program, making the Japanese subsidiary the first automaker to tie itself in with a particular credit card.

The card, emblazoned with full-color pictures of Subaru car models, will be marketed in August to the owners of the roughly 1 million Subarus now on the roads, the company said Monday.

The card also will be available to members of the general public, according to Subaru spokesman Fred Heyler.

It will be marketed through a subsidiary of Banc One Corp. of Columbus, Ohio, will be free the first year and will carry an annual interest rate of 19.8 percent on unpaid balances, Heyler said. The annual fee — free during the first year — will be $20.

Pennsauken-based Subaru of America said it expects between 100,000 and 500,000 car owners to sign up for its VISA.

John Fisher, a Banc One senior vice president, said his company had similar credit card programs with Nationwide Insurance of Columbus, Ohio, and Pioneer Insurance of Rockport, Ill., he said.

The company is finding organizations, such as Subaru, "who want to build an ongoing loyalty of their customer base and get information to their customers of the servicing that cars require," he said.

Fisher said the impetus behind such marketing arrangements was a change in rules for VISA and Mastercard.

Previously, a company had to be a member of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. to have its name stamped on the plastic. Now, he said, with the loosening of the rules, groups ranging from the AFL-CIO to Ducks Unlimited, a Chicago-based duck hunters organization, have provided members with cards.

Fisher said hotel chains and major retailers will soon try to use credit cards in marketing.

June building permits off $1 million from May totals

Building permits gave their weakest showing so far this year as 121 permits valued at $2.7 million issued in June. This is down almost $1 million from the year's strongest showing, 98 permits valued at $3.6 million in May.

The month saw 11 permits for new residences issued, and one for new commercial construction.

For the week of June 16-20, the city issued 32 permits valued at $823,644, including permits for three new homes and one new commercial construction. A permit for commercial alteration valued at $300,000 was also issued. The city issued 24 permits valued at $344,416 during the week of June 23-30, including a permit for one new residence.

For the first week of July, the city issued 13 permits valued at $427,437, including permits for four new residences.

Permits for new homes were issued to C. Goss, 3012 Fredna, $66,800; Robert Graham, 3409 Woodhaven, $95,000; Gilbert Bates, 5003 Polo Parkway, $105,000; Hector Ramirez, 1201 E. od in 1985. While this represented moderate growth, it was down from a 5.8 percent rise in the first half of 1985.

Economists have said that weaker-than-expected consumer spending is one of the factors holding back overall economic growth.

The government is due to release next week its estimate of growth for the April-June quarter. Many analysts are predicting growth will come in around 2 percent, half of what the Reagan administration has been predicting.

High levels of consumer debt and weak income growth have been blamed for the sales slowdown.

The 0.2 percent rise in June was the weakest performance since a 0.4 percent decline in March.

Sales of durable goods, items expected to last three or more years, rose 0.2 percent in June. Leading durable goods sales was the 0.8 percent gain in auto sales, which followed a 2.3 percent May increase.

Sales at hardware stores were down a sharp 1.2 percent in May while sales at furniture stores fell 0.7 percent.

Sales of nondurable goods were up a slight 0.2 percent in June following a 0.5 percent advance in May.

The increase included a 0.3 percent gain at department stores, a 0.4 percent increase at food stores and a sharp 1.2 percent advance at service stations.

Sales at restaurants and bars fell 0.9 percent, the biggest decline in the non-durable category, while sales at clothing stores were unchanged in June following a 0.8 percent May decline.

Comanche Peak startup pushed back to 1988

GLEN ROSE, Texas (AP) — Beginning of operations at Comanche Peak nuclear power plant has been pushed back to late summer of 1988 — a year later than previously estimated — because of continuing design problems, Texas Utilities officials say.

Interest and insurance costs for the plant will add about $35 million to the plant's price tag for every month of delay, utility officials said.

A number of problems contributed to the most recent delay, company spokesman Dick Ramsey said.

"A large part of what we're talking about involves inadequate documentation and the incompatibility of the design with our original commitments," Ramsey told the Dallas Morning News.

He said more specific information on new problem areas found at the plant will be released in a report at the end of July.

The utility estimated last November that the plant would be complete in mid-1987 and cost $5.46 billion. But Texas Utilities scrapped that projection in April, saying they could not estimate how much more the plant would cost or when it would go into operation.

Nothing Beats A Traditional Summer Barbecue

It's backyard barbecue time! Now that the days are longer and the weather is warmer, barbecuing is bringing people together — whether it's a Sunday afternoon family gathering or neighbors sharing a relaxed meal.

Foods cooked over sizzling charcoal briquets have that smoky, rich flavor that everyone loves. Grilled steak lavished with mushroom butter, herb-scented mushroom kabobs and a colorful walnut salad with "haystacks" of shredded vegetables make a quick, festive summer menu.

Almost any food can be grilled, but for sheer elegance and simplicity, nothing beats barbecued steak. Barbecued-steaks, crispy on the outside and juicy on the inside, are one of America's favorite foods.

For a flavorful meat topping, spread mouth-watering mushroom butter on steak right before serving. Steak and mushrooms are a classic flavor combination. The rich flavor of chopped fresh mushrooms and fragrant herbs transform ordinary butter into a delectable seasoning for grilled meat. The sauce can be kept warm right on the cooking grid.

Zesty mushroom kabobs are an excellent complement to beef entrees. Here, they are marinated and basted in an herb-scented olive oil and grilled to juicy perfection. Easy to prepare, fresh mushrooms add flavor, texture and glamour to a delightful warm-weather meal.

Crisp California walnut salad with garden-fresh vegetables adds interesting flavor and texture contrast to your barbecued meal. This combination of carrots, zucchini and radishes surrounded by toasted walnuts and tomatoes is as delectable as it is colorful. When ready to serve, top with the tangy lemon-walnut dressing. This seasonal delight is sure to have everyone clamoring for seconds!

Cooking outdoors during the summer season adds fun and flavor to every festive occasion. So, partake in the summer spirit and invite family and friends over for some fun-in-the-sun — with charcoal barbecuing!

BARBECUE TIPS

For successful barbecuing, follow these simple barbecuing tips from the Barbecue Industry Association:

- For faster lighting, stack charcoal briquets in a pyramid; they'll light faster since air can circulate around them.
- Be sure to use a chimney-type starter or a high quality liquid starter.
- Let the fluid soak into briquets for a minute or two before lighting. Never add more fluid once the fire is going.
- The charcoal is ready when it's ashy grey by day or glowing red at night.

MUSHROOM TIPS

For the best grilled mushrooms, follow these hints from the National Mushroom Growers Association:

- When shopping for fresh mushrooms, select smooth, firm caps.
- Store mushrooms unwashed in the refrigerator. Once the package has been opened or if you've purchased mushrooms loose, keep them in a paper bag in the refrigerator.
- To clean, wipe mushrooms with a damp cloth. A quick rinse in cool water is also fine as long as you're careful not to soak them.
- To grill sliced mushrooms, toss with melted butter and wrap in a foil pouch. Cook on the grill just a few minutes until tender.

WALNUT TIPS

For the crispiest walnut salads, follow these guidelines from the Walnut Marketing Board:

- Shelled walnuts packaged in airtight, moisture-proof bags or vacuum cans will stay fresh until opened. Once opened, refrigerate in tightly closed containers.
- Keep in-the-shell walnuts in a cool, dry place. After shelling, store in a tightly closed container in the refrigerator.
- To toast walnuts, spread kernels in shallow pan. Bake in a 350-degree oven, stirring often, for 10 to 12 minutes, or until golden. Cool.
- To freeze, store in airtight plastic bags or freezer jars. Thaw by keeping kernels in sealed container until they reach room temperature.

Charcoal-Grilled Steak With Mushroom Butter

- 2 tablespoons plus 1/2 cup butter or margarine, softened
- 4 ounces fresh mushrooms, finely chopped
- 1 medium shallot, finely chopped
- 1/4 cup dry vermouth (or white wine)
- 2 teaspoons chopped fresh thyme (or 1 teaspoon dried thyme)
- 1/4 cup finely chopped parsley
- 1 green onion, finely chopped
- 1 tablespoon cognac (or brandy)
- salt and pepper, to taste
- 2 to 2-1/2 pounds sirloin steak, cut 1-1/2 inches thick

Prepare mushroom butter: In skillet over moderately high heat melt the 2 tablespoons butter. Add mushrooms and shallots; saute 6 to 8 minutes, stirring constantly until liquid has evaporated. Add vermouth and thyme; cook to evaporate. Remove from heat; cool completely, about 20 minutes. Place the 1/2 cup butter in bowl. Add cooled mushroom mixture, parsley, green onion and cognac; mix well. Season with salt and pepper. Store in covered container in refrigerator. Remove from refrigerator 1/2 hour before serving. Prepare outdoor barbecue. When coals are ready, place steak on cooking grid over hot charcoal briquets. Sear well on both sides. Continue cooking, turning often, until done — 10 to 12 minutes for rare, 13 to 15 minutes for medium, 15 to 20 minutes for well done. Slice steak across grain; serve with mushroom butter.

Makes 4 servings.

Walnut Salad With Vegetable Haystacks

- 1/2 cup olive oil
- 2 tablespoons each lemon juice and water
- 2-1/2 tablespoons grainy or smooth prepared mustard
- 1 tablespoon grated lemon peel
- salt and pepper, to taste
- 1 cup toasted walnut halves and pieces
- 1 cup halved cherry tomatoes
- butter lettuce leaves
- watercress or parsley sprigs
- 3/4 cup each shredded carrots, zucchini, yellow squash and radishes*

Prepare dressing: Combine oil, lemon juice, water, mustard and lemon peel. Whisk to blend; season with salt and pepper. Prepare salad: Toss walnuts and tomatoes with 1/4 cup of the dressing. Line serving platter with lettuce leaves and watercress. Arrange individual mounds of carrots, zucchini, yellow squash and radishes over greens. Spoon walnuts and tomatoes over vegetables. Pass remaining dressing separately.

Makes 4 servings.

NOTE:* Other fresh vegetables in season may be substituted for those listed.

Country Mushroom And Garlic Kabobs

- 2 heads fresh garlic
- 1/2 cup olive oil
- 2 cloves garlic, pressed
- 2 teaspoons chopped fresh rosemary (or 1 teaspoon dried rosemary)
- 1/2 teaspoon pepper
- 12 large whole fresh mushrooms (about 12 ounces)
- fresh rosemary sprigs (optional)

Peel away papery layers from garlic heads, taking care not to pierce or expose cloves. Drop heads into pan of boiling water. Simmer until just tender, 8 to 10 minutes. Drain and reserve. Combine oil, garlic cloves, chopped rosemary and pepper. Pour over mushrooms, tossing to coat. Let stand 10 minutes, tossing occasionally. Thread mushrooms and garlic heads onto 2 long, wooden-handled skewers. Tuck a few sprigs fresh rosemary in between, if desired. Prepare outdoor barbecue. When coals are ready, place skewered mushrooms and garlic on cooking grid over hot charcoal briquets. Turn occasionally, until mushrooms are just tender and golden, about 10 mintues.

Makes 4 servings.

Larry King may be best known as the author of "The Best Little Whorehouse in Texas," but the former Midlander is also a self-proclaimed chili connoisseur and chef.

Writer reveals 'sacred' recipe

While former Midlander Larry King is best known for his humorous works, such as "The Best Little Whorehouse in Texas" and "Warning: Writer at Work," the native Texan turns serious when it comes to the hot stuff he adores: chili.

King, a self-proclaimed chili connoisseur and chef, revealed his sacred "Better 'N Sex Chili" recipe in the recently published 1986 Spring issue of "Philip Morris Magazine."

Scoffing at ridiculous myths that Texans or Russians conjured up chili, King calmly points out that "Chili began in Heaven. God made it as soon as he had enough light to see to mix it and heat enough to grow chili peppers."

Because King believes the quality of a bowl of chili is best judged by how much it makes your head sweat — and the best chili should produce roughly one pint of sweat per serving" — he thinks only natural ingredients such as chili peppers should ever be used. To King, anything artificial, canned or store-bought is taboo.

Sissies who complain about fiery chili should try cornflakes instead, suggests King. "Mild chili is as useless as fat sprinters. To paraphrase Harry Truman, if they can't stand the heat, let 'em eat quiche."

For those who can take the heat, here are the secrets of King's chili:

BETTER 'N SEX CHILI

2 pounds beef round steak
¼ cup bacon drippings
6 dry red chili pods
1 teaspoon ground cumin
1 teaspoon oregano
2 chopped onions
3 teaspoons flour
6 ounces tomato paste
Juice of 1 lime
6 minced garlic cloves
2 to 3 cups hot water
Pinch of salt
Beef stock
Louisiana Red Devil pepper sauce (liberally applied)
¼ cup chopped Longhorn cheese
Dash of black pepper
One chopped jalapeno pepper
6 sprinkles Worcestershire sauce

"First dice beef round steak and sear lightly in bacon drippings, until a healthy brown (this is the only meat ingredient to be used; under no circumstances are ground beef, venison or other alternatives acceptable).

"Clean chili pods in cold water, remove seeds. Cover chilis with fresh water and bring to a boil. After 20-25 minutes peel the peppers and scrap pulp away from the skins. Then mash the pulp into a potent paste.

"Add sauteed meat and mix together in water used to boil the pods. Cover with beef stock. Add water as needed to bring total water to 2 or 3 cups. Dump in lime juice, ground cumin, chopped onions, garlic, salt and black pepper to taste.

"Also add chopped jalapeno pepper, tomato paste, oregano, flour and initial dashes of Worcestershire sauce and Louisiana Red Devil pepper (Tabasco will do in a pinch).

"Swoggle everything around in the pot until your soul tells you the mix has attained perfect harmony.

"Let simmer 2 to 2½ hours, depending on patience, hunger pangs and desired thickness. Every half hour, chunk into the simmering pot handfuls of finely chopped Longhorn cheese for texture improvement and a bonus of surprisingly exotic flavors. That added touch will make your chili taste like the rainbow looks."

King's Better 'N Sex Chili recipe serves eight, unless, he said, "King is one of them. Then it serves only two."

King suggests that in the "unlikely event" any of the chili is left over, "permit it to mature in the refrigerator overnight. Then heat and pour it across your eggs at breakfast. You may, indeed, wish to let the chili mature for several days before employing it for breakfast. Like certain authors, the older it gets the better it becomes."

Microwave chili non-traditional

By DESIREE VIVEA
Copley News Service

Flavorful and spicy, chili is one of the traditional foods of the American Southwest. With or without beans, its popularity rivals that of pizza — especially among those with daring taste buds.

Part of the fun in making chili is that you always can adjust the recipe to suit yourself. Make it as hot or as mild as you like, adding more chili powder or minced jalapeno peppers for a really hot variation, or even red wine for gourmet-style.

Why settle for the canned variety when you can whip up a quick batch a la microwave?

CHILI IS usually simmered for hours over a low flame, and when you have the time, this is really the best method. But when time is short, and the urge for chili strikes, there's nothing like the magic of microwave to satisfy hungry chili-lovers.

Because the microwave is a cool-cooking appliance, you won't heat up your kitchen on those hot summer days.

Almost any conventional chili recipe adapts well to microwave cooking, but remember to reduce the amount of liquid called for. The quicker microwave method eliminates much of the evaporation which would take place during the conventional cooking process.

SERVE CHILI in bowls with corn bread or tortillas on the side, or ladle over hamburger patties or hot dogs for an easy summer meal. I even like chili over hot cooked rice.

A bit of diced onion is a favorite garnish while shredded Cheddar or jack cheese, melted in seconds in your microwave, adds a delicious tang.

If you've made more chili than you can use in one meal, never fear. It freezes well, and can be defrosted and ready to serve in just minutes.

If you're a real chili lover, you might want to plan ahead and make a large batch to be frozen in portions. With the help of your microwave oven, a steaming bowlful will never be more than a few minutes away.

CHEDDAR CHILI 'N BEANS

2 cloves garlic, minced
1 medium onion, minced
1 lb. lean ground beef, crumbled
1 tbsp. chili powder (or to taste)
½ tsp. ground cumin
½ tsp. salt
1 (1-lb.) can tomatoes with liquid, cut up
1 (1-lb.) can red kidney beans, drained
1 cup shredded cheddar or Monterey jack cheese

Oven Setting: HIGH (10 percent power)

Place garlic, onion and crumbled 'round beef in a 2-quart glass casserole. Microwave, uncovered, four minutes, after stirring two minutes.

Stir in chili powder, cumin, salt and tomatoes. Cover and microwave three minutes. Add beans, stir, and microwave two minutes.

Top with cheese and microwave, uncovered, two minutes longer, until heated through and cheese is melted.

PARTY CHILI FOR A CROWD

¾ cup olive or vegetable oil
3 large onions, chopped
3 green peppers, chopped
8 cloves garlic, minced
5 lbs. lean ground beef, crumbled
2 cans (1 lb., 13 ozs. each) tomatoes with liquid, cut up
3 cans (1 lb. each) red kidney beans, drained
2 bay leaves
3 tbsps. chili powder (or to taste)
1 tbsp. dried ground cumin
2 tsps. celery seed
2 tsps. freshly ground black pepper
2 tsps. salt

Oven Setting: HIH (100 percent power)

Combine oil, onions, peppers and garlic in 1-quart glass casserole. Microwave 10 minutes, stirring every three minutes, until vegetables are soft. Set aside.

Place beef in 4-quart glass casserole and microwave 10 minutes, turning and stirring every two minutes.

Blend onion mixture and beef with remaining ingredients and divide mixture into two 4-quart glass baking dishes. Microwave, one dish at a time, 20 minutes, rotating dish and stirring every five minutes.

Makes enough chili for 15 to 20 servings.

NO-BEAN CHILI

2 lbs. lean ground beef, crumbled
1 medium onion, chopped
2 cloves garlic, minced
1 (16-oz.) can tomatoes with liquid, cut up
2 (8-oz.) cans tomato sauce
2 tbsps. chili powder
1 tbsp. brown sugar
2 tsps. cumin seed
1 tsp. dried oregano
¼ tsp. hot pepper sauce
Salt and pepper to taste

Oven Setting: HIGH (100 percent power); MEDIUM-HIGH (75 percent power)

Combine meat, onion, and garlic in 3-quart glass casserole. Cover and microwave 10 minutes on HIGH, stirring every three minutes, until meat is no longer pink.

Add all remaining ingredients, mixing thoroughly. Cover and microwave on HIGH until mixture comes to a boil, five to 10 minutes.

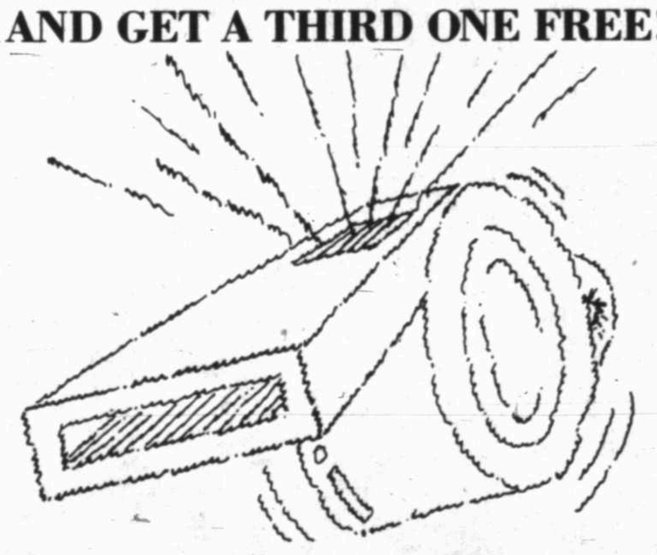

Reduce setting to MEDIUM-HIGH and microwave, covered, 15 to 20 minutes longer. Let stand, covered, five minutes before serving.

Serves 6.

New barbecuing ideas for old American tradition

By BRYAN MILLER
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Outdoor barbecues were once among life's ingenuous summer pleasures, requiring neither forethought nor fashion consciousness. Steaks, burgers, hot dogs or maybe chicken breasts were all that were expected, and indeed they could be sublime. Today, like many once-simple commodities such as television (three networks), sneakers (high or low) and pizzas (thick and chewy or thin and crispy), grilling has become frightfully upscale and potentially confusing.

Inspired by California-style grill restaurants that have swept across the country like a brush fire, grill cooks now consider anything that can be held down without falling through the grates suitable for charcoal cooking — tiny quails, leeks, fennel bulbs, radicchio, lobsters, clams, mussels, wild mushrooms. In Italy last year, I even tasted a dish described as grilled pasta; it was as delicious as it was inscrutable.

Amateur grill cooks can have a great deal of fun this summer experimenting with these new notions. Some of the most delectable results can be achieved with game birds — squabs, quails and guinea hens in particular. Once luxury foods available only in season, these succulent birds have now become available year-round in many supermarkets and butcher shops in the area. Large-scale commercial breeding farms in the United States and Canada have expanded the market from the restaurant trade to the home consumer.

SQUABS, QUAILS and guinea hens are diverting alternatives to barbecued chicken. They have distinctive flavors and textures ideal for grilling, without being too gamy. Squabs, which weigh about a pound each, are the mildest tasting, somewhere between chicken and pheasant, with dark meaty breasts and legs that withstand open-fire cooking better than chickens, which can dry out quickly. Quails have pinkish meat that absorbs smoky nuances from charcoal more than that of other game birds. The most assertive meat is guinea hen, which is dark, rich and moist, with just a hint of gaminess in the aftertaste.

All three birds can be delectable crowd pleasers for summer celebrations and parties to come. While they are less vulnerable to dryness than commercially raised chickens, care must still be exercised in their preparation. As some of the following recipes — devised with Pierre Franey — demonstrate, judicious use of marinades and basting sauces can yield spectacular results.

A marinade of white wine, mustard, thyme and lemon will permeate and moisten squab meat, while the tanginess of the mustard and lemon seems to bring out the bird's subtle flavor. In using oil-based marinades, the point is to flavor the meat, not to cause flare-ups that char it.

The quail recipe was devised by Edward Gorman, a former retail business executive and longtime resident of East Hampton, L.I., who is renowned locally for his sumptuous summer clambakes. Quail, he says, is comparatively new to his cooking repertory; his recipe has been a resounding success nonetheless. The tiny quails — a portion of two weighs slightly less than a pound — are combined wih dry sherry, fresh ginger and soy sauce in a Chinese-inspired marinade that adds vibrancy to the meat. Cooked slowly on a rotisserie, guinea hens are simply basted with melted butter accented with garlic, thyme, bay leaves and olive oil.

TOO LONG a time marinating can be as detrimental as too short a time. In testing these recipes half the quails were cooked after marinating less than two hours; they were excellent — crisp-skinned, firm and perfumed with ginger. Five hours later, the remaining quails were cooked; they were disappointingly soft and mealy.

Another trick when grilling small game birds, or any small poultry such as poussins (baby chickens) and Cornish game hens, is to split them down the middle and pound them slightly so that they lie flat on the grill. The French call this technique "crapaudine" from the word crapaud, or toad, because a halved and flattened squab or quail is toad-shaped. The technique is the same for all birds and poultry. Split the body down one side of the backbone (or with very small birds such as quail, directly through the backbone) and pull the body apart. Place it on a flat surface, skin side up, and pound with a heavy cleaver or flat frying pan.

To enhance flavor and moisture of the birds, make a sauce with leftover marinade. When setting the birds over the fire, reserve the marinade. As they are cooking, add soft butter and fresh herbs to the marinade and warm the combination gently. Return the cooked birds to the marinade, coating them well with the mixture. Let them rest several minutes before serving, so their juices mingle with the sauce. Serve birds with the sauce poured over them.

Of course, some occasions demand the ever-popular barbecued steak. To give it a slight twist, the recipe for steak au poivre, usually prepared in a red-hot saute pan and served with a deglazed sauce, has been adapted to the grill. The rousing result should keep the beer flowing for hours. Fish fanciers will find a straightforward and delicious technique for grilled swordfish. Both recipes use similar marinating and basting methods.

An alternative to the traditional American barbecue is Barbecue Brugers with Cheddar Biscuit Buns.

A word about equipment. Whether using a small, charcoal-fired hibachi or deluxe gas grill with triple heat controls and a rotisserie, the rules for barbecuing are fundamentally the same. It is not the charcoal that imparts that characteristic woody flavor to food, but the smoke that envelops it. The smoke can be flavored with chips of apple, cherry, mesquite or other aromatic woods. The beneficial effects of wood chips, particularly trendy mesquite, have been inflated. At best they can impart a palpable sweet and smoky nuance to mild and delicate foods. When it comes to steaks and full-flavored meats, however, the extra expense and effort of using wood chips are questionable.

ANOTHER ESSENTIAL for successful grilling is a hot fire. Conventional barbecue grills offer three options: shards of charcoal that have not been chemically treated (these are best, but sometimes difficult to find); charcoal briquettes (essentially regular charcoal that has been pressured into a convenient shape), and chemically treated quick-lighting briquettes. This last category can give off unpleasant odors that taint food.

For the same reason, try to avoid lighting cooking fires with kerosene or other chemicals. Dry newspaper and a little patience work wonders. A good alternative is the plug-in electric rod that ignites charcoal. Another is a wide metal tube about a foot-and-a-half long with a handle that holds dry paper in the bottom and charcoal in the top. The tube directs the flames from the burning paper directly at the charcoal to expedite ignition. When the coals are lit, pour them over the remaining charcoal in the grill.

Many barbecue grills come with lids, which when secured create an oven that can exceed 450 degrees. This can cut cooking time almost in half. Cooking game birds or chicken this way may not yield as crispy a skin as desired; this can be corrected, however, by removing the lid during the final 10 to 15 minutes of cooking to let cooler air circulate.

BECAUSE THERE are so many variables when it comes to barbecue cooking — the grill's heat output, cool spots in the fire, the foods' thickness and so on — consider suggested grilling times to be rules of thumb. Test the food when you feel it is just approaching rare; you can put something back on the grill to cook further, but desiccated meat or fish is beyond repair.

GRILLED QUAILS WITH GINGER AND SHERRY

The quail:
12 fresh quails
Salt and freshly ground pepper
4 tablespoons hoisin sauce
2 tablespoons chopped fresh coriander
2 tablespoons unsalted butter
The marinade:
½ cup dry sherry
2 tablespoons grated ginger
2 tablespoons dark soy sauce
2 tablespoons sesame oil
½ teaspoon freshly ground black pepper
1 teaspoon sugar

Split the quails in half lengthwise through the backbone, using a heavy chef's knife. Lay each half on a sturdy flat surface and pound gently with the side of the knife to flatten. Place the quails in a high-sided heatproof baking dish large enough to hold them in one layer. Salt and pepper.

Mix together marinade ingredients in a bowl. Pour the marinade over the quails evenly, covering them. Seal the dish with plastic wrap and refrigerate for 1 to 2 hours.

Lay the quails over the grill, skin side down, and grill for 5 minutes. Reserve the marinade. Flip and grill for 5 minutes more. Meanwhile, add hoisin sauce, coriander and butter to the marinade. Mix well. Brush some of this over the quails during the final minutes of cooking.

When the quails are cooked, return them to the marinade dish and place the dish over the grill to melt the butter and heat the sauce. Coat quails with sauce and serve.

Yield: 6 servings.

Red sauce rich, thick for barbecue

Associated Press

Whatever your favorite cut of beef for grilling, it will taste better when served with this sauce. Don't brush it on the meat during grilling — the sauce is so thick and rich it will scorch. Pass with the sliced meat.

5-ALARM RED SAUCE
1 cup ketchup
1 large tomato, peeled, seeded and chopped
1 green pepper, chopped
2 tablespoons chopped onion
2 tablespoons brown sugar
2 tablespoons Worcestershire sauce
2 tablespoons steak sauce
½ teaspoon garlic powder
¼ teaspoon ground nutmeg
¼ teaspoon ground cloves
¼ teaspoon ground cinnamon
⅛ teaspoon ground ginger
⅛ teaspoon pepper

In a small saucepan stir together ketchup, tomato, green pepper, onion, brown sugar, Worcestershire, steak sauce, garlic powder, nutmeg, cloves, cinnamon, ginger and pepper. Bring to boiling; reduce heat. Simmer, covered, about 5 minutes or until green pepper is crisp-tender. Serve warm or at room temperature with grilled beef. Makes about 2½ cups.

Pinto beans can pep-up barbecue

PEPPED-UP PINTO BEANS
2 cups dry pinto beans
1 4-ounce can chopped green chili peppers, drained
2 teaspoons chili powder
1 teaspoon salt
2 cloves garlic, minced
1 6-ounce package shredded Monterey Jack cheese or Monterey Jack cheese with jalapeno peppers

Rinse beans. In a large saucepan or Dutch oven combine beans and 6 cups water. Cover and soak overnight. (Or, bring to boiling; reduce heat and cover. Simmer 2 minutes. Remove from heat. Cover; let stand 1 hour.) Drain beans.

In the same pan combine the drained beans, chili peppers, chili powder, salt, garlic and 4¾ cups water. Bring to boiling; reduce heat. Cover and simmer 2 to 2¼ hours or until beans are slightly mushy. Top with shredded cheese. Makes 8 to 10 servings.

To serve at a barbecue, keep beans warm for second helpings in a cast-iron pan on the grill.

Cooking with fire, smoke

AMAGANSETT, N.Y. (UPI) — Barbecuing — or more precisely roasting over fire and flavoring with smoke — is an art, according to Philip Stephen Schultz, a cook and author.

In "Cooking With Fire and Smoke" (Simon and Schuster, $17.95), Schultz provides more than 250 recipes for every type of grill-worthy food, such as Amagansett Pork Roast.

AMAGANSETT PORK ROAST
1 loin of pork, about 4 pounds
1 clove garlic, bruised
Salt and freshly ground black pepper
3 tablespoon Dijon mustard
¼ cup unsalted butter, melted
1 small onion, finely chopped
1 medium carrot, chopped
2 tablespoon caraway seeds
2 sprigs fresh thyme

Rub the pork well with garlic. Sprinkle with salt and pepper. Spread the mustard over the top and let stand for 1 hour. Preheat grill.

Place 3 tablespoons melted butter in small skillet and cook onion and carrot over medium heat for 5 minutes. Place pork flat (bones down) on roasting rack.

Spoon onion and carrots over top. Pat down with the back of a spoon. Sprinkle with caraway seeds. Lay thyme over top.

If using a charcoal grill, spread coals apart and place drip pan in center. If using presoaked wood chips or chunks, sprinkle them over hot coals. If using a gas grill, place drip pan on one side of grill directly on lava rocks and add any presoaked chips to pan.

Carefully place rack with pork directly over drip pan. Cover-cook with vents about halfway open over medium-hot heat, basting occasionally with melted butter, about 22 minutes per pound or until internal temperature reads 170 degrees on a meat thermometer.

Add more heated coals after 45 minutes if using charcoal grill. Let roast stand 15 minutes before carving.

WHAT'S COOKING

Teen cook active in FHA

By LINDA ANDERSON
Lifestyle Writer

Dava Hammond, soon-to-be senior at Midland High School, has dreams of a medical career. After she graduates next spring, she hopes to attend Texas A&M University and pursue her goal. Even though she faces many more years of schooling, she said the long training period "will be worth it."

Dava also thinks home cooking is worth it. She's a very good cook, according to both her mother and to one of her teachers at MHS. Dava has been in Future Homemakers of America for three years, and this year holds the FHA state office of vice president of recreation.

"At all the state and national meetings I lead the energizers and the ice breakers," she said.

At the end of this month, Dava will attend the 1986 Future Homemakers of American National Youth Leadership Meeting in Orlando, Fla., as one of 200 Texas delegates.

At home, Dava not only does much of the cooking for her family, but she does a lot of the grocery shopping, too, "at least 25 percent, maybe more," said her mother.

When it comes to food preparation, family members' busy schedules mean "we all cook together — nobody really cooks by himself," Dava said, with one person beginning meal preparation and perhaps someone else finishing.

Dava Hammond

TEA RING

1 package active dry yeast
¼ cup warm water
2 cups milk, scalded
2 tablespoons sugar
2 teaspoons salt
1 tablespoon shortening
6 cups sifted all-purpose flour

Soften active dry yeast in warm (110-degree) water. Combine hot milk, sugar, salt and shortening. Cool to lukewarm.

Stir in 2 cups flour; beat well. Add softened yeast; mix. Add enough of remaining flour to make moderately stiff dough.

Turn out on lightly-floured surface; knead until smooth and satiny, about eight to 10 minutes. Shape into ball; place in lightly-greased bowl, turning once to grease dough's surface. Cover; let rise in warm place until double in bulk, about one hour.

Punch down. Let rise, covered, for 10 minutes. Punch down. Cover and let rise 45 minutes.

On lightly-floured surface roll dough to ½-inch thickness. Blend softened margarine with cinnamon and sugar. Spread margarine-sugar mixture onto dough. Sprinkle with raisins as desired. Roll dough lengthwise; join ends.

Cut partially through dough ring at intervals. Bake at about 350° F until tea ring is golden brown.

Fire up coals: It's barbecue time

By JOHN DeMERS
UPI Food Editor

You know it's upon you when the scents of hickory and mesquite fight through those of new-mown grass, sweltering streets and backyard pool chlorine. It's time to fire up the grill and christen another barbecue season.

Few people can remember life before cooking outdoors became an American institution, though historians can recall when it was more out of necessity than recreation.

Whatever its roots in pioneer austerity, the barbecue is austere no more.

An entire industry has grown up around it, turning out a wide variety of grills and smokers, flavored woods of a dozen kinds, sauces like no one's Momma used to make and even a handful of cookbooks.

"You might say I was born and raised around a barbecue pit," said former baseball star John "Boog" Powell, who not only owns and operates a marina in Key West, Fla., but has just penned a cookbook devoted to mesquite.

In his book, Powell reveals that his early life in the small Florida community of Lakeland included more than a little cooking over things like buttonwood, mangrove and seagrape. But it was a later introduction to mesquite that really turned his head.

Now, in addition to the marina and those incessant beer commercials, he spends his time trying out grilling techniques and a wide range of recipes for shellfish, vegetables and fruit as well as the more usual meats, fish and fowl.

Spicy marinades provide a rich area for innovation, as long as they are simple enough to let the flavor of mesquite shine through.

"I've tried charcoals from all over the world," said Powell, "even eucalyptus from Australia and charcoal from Thailand, and nothing makes a better barbecue than mesquite charcoal."

"Mesquite Cookery" (McGraw-Hill $7.95) includes plenty of tips on the fine art and 150 of Powell's globe-trotting recipes.

Despite his pronouncements, however, and a fair amount of lasting chic, mesquite is hardly the only taste to weave into your barbecues this summer. With an extended period to work in, even in the northern reaches, there should be time for a couple of innovations spun off by the wine and spirit industries. A New Jersey-based company called Connoisseur Brands Ltd. has come up with Chateau Vignes du Cuisener French Vine Cuttings — a mouthful to say but no small boon to the backyard cook with upscale aspirations.

The wine cuttings are cultivated from vines that have yielded grapes for some of the world's finest wines.

Sam Aaron, the president of Connoisseur Brands, said his product reflects a coming of age among men and women who cook outdoors.

Pure sugar maple charcoal results from the distillery's charcoal-mellowing methods, while the white oak barrels used only once to age the whiskey are pulverized and combined with hard sugar maple to make the barrel chunks.

According to Aaron, the vines are harvested after they have been picked clean of fruit yet still contain a fragrant, moist pulp that produces a heavy smoke when over hot coals.

The resulting flavor, he said, is reminiscent of a rich, quality wine with undertones of a sweet, tangy wood.

From another sector of the spirits world comes Jack Daniel's Charcoal Briquets With Barrel Chunks, made in Tennessee from two by-products of slow distillation.

Although the product does not impart a whiskey flavor to grilled food, it does give barbecued meats and poultry a distinctive taste that reminds many of an open-wood fire.

Recipes spice up summertime barbecues

UPI Food Editor

Here are three recipes sure to spice up your summertime barbecues, showing the distance this art has traveled since it was a simple matter of putting meat on the grill.

The Pork Chops With Chili Sauce come from a new book called "Mesquite Cookery" by John "Boog" Powell (McGraw-Hill, $7.95). The recipe for Martinique Tangy Creole Chicken comes from Connoisseur Brands Ltd., packagers of vine cuttings from the great vineyards of Bordeaux.

The third recipe, for a marinade, was developed by the folks at Jack Daniel's distillery in Tennessee. It uses their time-honored product in an innovative way.

PORK CHOPS WITH CHILI SAUCE

8 pork chops, 1 inch thick
Marinade:
3 tablespoon chili powder
3 tablespoon tomato juice
4 garlic cloves, crushed
1 teaspoon salt
⅓ teaspoon dried oregano leaves
Cold Green Chili Sauce:
¼ cup fresh green chilies, finely chopped
2 canned jalapeno chilies, finely chopped
3 tomatoes, peeled, seeded and finely chopped
½ cup chopped scallions
1 garlic clove, crushed
2 tablespoon fresh parsley, finely chopped
1 teaspoon dried coriander, soaked in 1 tablespoon hot water and drained
½ teaspoon salt
Pinch of black pepper
Pinch of salt

Combine marinade ingredients into a paste and spread over both sides of the chops. Cover the chops and marinate them overnight in the refrigerator. Combine all of the sauce ingredients and refrigerate at least 1 hour to chill thoroughly.

Remove excess fat from the chops and grill over hot mesquite until tender and browned — about 15 minutes. Serve the chops with Gold Green Chili Sauce. Serves 4.

MARTINIQUE TANGY CREOLE CHICKEN

2 frying chickens
½ pound butter
2 cloves garlic, minced
2 shallots, minced
3 tablespoon tomato paste
½ cup dry white wine
¼ cup wine vinegar
1 large green bell pepper, finely chopped
1 small onion, finely chopped
1 teaspoon thyme
1 teaspoon cayenne pepper
1 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce
4 dashes Tabasco pepper sauce
2 teaspoon ketchup

Cut the chicken into serving pieces. In a saucepan, melt the butter and saute the garlic with the shallots until lightly brown. Stir in the tomato paste, followed by the wine and vinegar.

Add the pepper, onion, thyme, cayenne, Worcestershire, Tabasco and ketchup. Bring to a boil, reduce heat and simmer for 5 minutes. Place the chicken in a large shallow pan and pour the sauce on top. Marinate 2 to 3 hours in the refrigerator.

Place the chicken on the grill and cook, turning often, for 10 to 15 minutes. Baste with the sauce. Five minutes before the chicken is done, add the vine cuttings to the coals to smoke in the flavor.

JACK DANIEL'S MARINADE

½ cup pineapple juice
3 tablespoon soy sauce
1½ teaspoon ground ginger
½ teaspoon garlic powder
½ cup Jack Daniel's whiskey

Combine all ingredients and mix well. Dip steaks, chicken or pork chops into the sauce and place on grill over hot coals. When meat is turned, brush with the marinade.

Grill to desired doneness. Just before meat is removed from grill, brush again with the marinade.

Dressed-up 'haute dogs' help beat heat

By DESIREE VIVEA
Copley News Service

Franks, wieners, hot dogs — whatever you call them, they're an all-time American favorite. Especially in the good old summertime, when everyone lives by the "3-B's": beach, barbecue and baseball.

When you're all set to do some outdoor cookin', wieners are great on the grill. But if you're too lazy to get a bed of coals going, it's nice to know a microwaved wiener is only minutes away.

Two franks will microwave in 1 to 2 minutes on HIGH (100 percent power) setting. When heating only a few, just place on a plate and cover with wax paper or paper towel. To heat six or more, place in glass casserole with ½ cup of water and cover. Microwave 4 to 7 minutes, rearranging halfway through cooking time, until heated through.

Franks may explode during cooking from pressure buildup. It's a good idea to prick skins with a fork, or make shallow diagonal slashes down length of frank to let steam escape.

There are lots of ways to dress up a dawg. Traditional favorites are mustard, ketchup, pickle relish, chopped onions, chili, sauerkraut and shredded cheddar cheese.

If you're feeling particularly adventurous, try "putting on the dog" with one of the following "fancy frank" recipes for microwave. Sweet and Sour Party Franks make an inexpensive yet elegant hors d'oeuvre that easily feeds a crowd, and Wieners in Brew and Corn Dog Chowder are sure to please any guests. Haute Dawg!

SWEET & SOUR PARTY FRANKS

1 (6 ounce) jar currant jelly
1 (10 ounce) jar prepared mustard
2 pounds (16 to 20) franks, cut into 1-inch diagonal slices

Oven Setting: HIGH (100 percent power)

Combine jelly and mustard in 3-quart glass casserole. Stir well to blend. Microwave 1 to 2 minutes, or until mixture can be stirred smooth.

Add sliced franks, stirring gently to coat. Cover and microwave 5 to 7 minutes, stirring every 2 minutes, until heated through. Serve hot.

WIENERS IN BREW

1 pound (8 to 10) franks
1 (12-ounce) can beer, at room temperature
½ cup minced onion

Oven Setting: HIGH (100 percent power)

Arrange franks in 13x9x2-inch glass baking dish. Pour beer over franks, sprinkle with onions. (Franks may be marinated in beer 3 to 4 hours or overnight for fuller flavor.)

Cover loosely with plastic wrap and microwave 7 to 9 minutes, rearranging after 4½ minutes, until heated through. Let stand, covered, 5 minutes before serving.

CORN DAWG CHOWDER

3 slices bacon, diced
6 franks, sliced diagonally into ½-inch slices
1¼ cup chopped onion
4 medium potatoes, peeled and diced
1 cup water
¼ teaspoon each salt, pepper, basil
Dash oregano
1 (1-pound) can cream-style corn
1 (15½-ounce) can evaporated milk
1 cup shredded cheddar cheese

Oven Setting: HIGH (100 percent power)

Place bacon in 2½-quart glass casserole dish. Cover and microwave 2½ minutes, stirring once.

Add frank slices and onion. Microwave, uncovered, 4 minutes, stirring after 2 minutes.

Add potatoes and water, cover and microwave 10 to 12 minutes, stirring after 5 minutes. Stir in seasonings, corn and evaporated milk. Microwave, uncovered, 3 to 5 minutes longer, to heat to serving temperature. Do not boil. Serve hot, with garnish of shredded cheddar cheese.

Chilled wine coolers accent barbecue picnic

By HOWARD G. GOLDBERG
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — If an American asked for a wine cooler at a picnic on the lawn of an English manor, the hostess, raising an eyebrow, might bring out her wooden wine-service furniture designed by Robert Adam in 1780 for the Duke of Cumberland. Ask for a wine cooler at a backyard barbecue in this country and you get a fizzy drink.

Only five years ago, chilled, low-alcohol wine coolers entered the market. Today, coolers — blends of white wine, carbonated water and fruit juice, concentrate and sometimes free-floating pulp — are perhaps the hottest alcoholic beverage around: 1986 sales may approach $1 billion. Unlike table wine, many coolers are advertised as casual drinks, rather than as accompaniments for food.

How good are wine coolers? In a personal tasting of 40 obtained in Manhattan, I rated only 4 excellent, 6 good, 13 fair and 17 poor. Fruity white wine coolers with a citric personality were by far the most interesting and quenched thirst the best. Coolers with a red-wine base were the least successful.

WHAT ACCOUNTS for the popularity of coolers? To begin with, the alcohol content is low: 4 to 6 percent by volume (table wines average 12 percent). In a 12-ounce cooler containing 5 percent alcohol by volume, the alcohol content is 0.6 fluid ounces in a wine portion of about 5 fluid ounces.

Further, at about 8 cents an ounce, coolers are cheaper and more convenient than table wine. They can be bought singly or in four-pack bottles with twist-off caps, and occasionally in a can and quart bottle. There are no complications like vintage dates, corks and appellations. They appeal to drinkers who want an alternative to beer and soft drinks. In New York State, coolers, like beer, can be purchased on Sundays, when liquor stores are closed.

According to Michael Bellas, president of the Beverage Marketing Corp., a research and consulting company, the "spectacular rise" of coolers is partly explained by other consumer trends. Aimed at young adults, he says, the "easily gulpable" cooler is a "sophisticated product" with an "upscale image" as a "beverage of moderation" that suggests a healthy "California life style." Take, for example, Wineberry Sausalito Sling (which, despite its name, is made with "100 percent New York State grapes").

WHILE VINTNERS and distillers still wonder if coolers are a fad like cold duck, they are betting that the new beverages are here to stay. Bellas says that in 1981 his company estimated cooler shipments at 50,000 gallons; in 1985, they soared to roughly 75 million gallons, and this year shipments "should exceed 100 million," he said.

Impact, a trade publication, reports that the 4.7 percent overall growth of the total American wine market last year was fueled by coolers, which it said constituted "the country's second most popular" wine beverage after table wine. If cooler sales were excluded from year-end data, Impact said, overall wine sales were actually down 5.9 percent from 1984.

According to the trade publication, table-wine shipments decreased by 6.5 percent last year, and those wines took a 65 percent share of the market, down from 72.7 percent in 1984. By contrast, cooler shipments increased by 163.3 percent and coolers constituted 15.8 percent of the market, up from 6.3 percent in 1984. Coolers also helped cut into the consumption of 13 of the top 20 brands of imported table wines.

BELLAS ESTIMATES that, overall, 125 to 130 brands are being sold, a few nationally, many regionally. But with "the big players" now in the market, he expects a shakeout as less-competitive brands start losing ground. Major players include Bartles & Jaymes, California Cooler, Calvin Cooler, Seagram's Cooler (and perhaps the new Seagram's Golden Wine Cooler), Sun Country, 20-20 Wine Cooler and the nonwine malt-based White Mountain.

While most coolers are made with white wine, some use red, rose and sparkling wine from a spectrum of grapes. They may contain water, sugar, high fructose corn syrup, citric acid, artificial coloring, undefined natural flavors and a variety of preservatives, though not necessarily in one product.

Yet coolers' lightness can be deceptive, "particularly to young people and women, two groups highly vulnerable to the effects of alcohol," warns George A. Hacker, director for alcohol policies at the Center for Science in the Public Interest, a health advocacy organization in Washington.

Hacker says: "Coolers' 'drinkability' disguises an alcohol content greater than that in regular beer, which is typically 4.5 to 5 percent by volume."

"On top of that, coolers contain more than double the 100 calories found in average light beers," Hacker said.

A DIFFERENT view is held by Eric Wente, president of Wente Brothers, a winery that does not make coolers, and chairman of the health and social issues committee of the California Wine Institute, a trade association. "Cooler calories are no different from soft drink calories," Wente says. As for alcohol content, the institute and "the whole California wine industry have always advocated responsible, moderate consumption of our products," he says.

Summer salads dressed up

By DIANE SAVAGE
Copley News Service

Who appreciates a good salad better than a vegetarian? Crunchy greens topped with a garland of garden goodies can be a delightful meal in itself — especially in the summer, with so many fresh vegetables to choose from.

What we DON'T appreciate are the additives and preservatives found in so many of the commercial bottled dressings. The answer, of course, is to make your own.

A salad dressing can be a simple blend of oil and vinegar or a more elaborate concoction, depending on your tastes. Oil and vinegar may be served plain from separate cruets for a classic dressing created on the spot. Or blend with a dash of herbs, freshly ground black pepper, and maybe a bit of minced garlic. Shake in a jar before serving.

When blending a vinaigrette, use two or three parts oil to one part vinegar. Herb, wine or cider vinegars are fine, but avoid distilled white vinegar. The flavor is too harsh for a salad. Olive, sunflower, safflower, corn and peanut oils are all suitable for salads.

The Sweet Poppy Dressing (recipe follows) is one of my favorites. Here, oil and vinegar meet tahini and honey, with delicious results. The poppy seeds add a surprising dimension of flavor and texture.

Orange Vinaigrette Dressing is perfect for a salad of fresh spinach leaves. Top with any one (or all) of the following: orange and grapefruit sections, sliced mushrooms, bean sprouts, sweet red onion, cherry tomatoes, avocado chunks. Drizzle with dressing and sprinkle with lightly toasted sunflower seeds. This is especially refreshing on a warm summer evening.

Creamy Honey and Fresh Ranch Dressing are heartier mixtures, based on buttermilk, mayonnaise and yogurt. For these dressings, it's best to combine ingredients and chill at least several hours (preferably overnight), so flavors can blend to their full-bodied best.

SWEET POPPY DRESSING

¾ cup light vegetable oil
¾ cup cider vinegar
¾ cup tahini
¼ cup water
¼ cup honey
1½ tsps. poppy seed
Dash salt

Combine all ingredients in mixing bowl and beat with wire whisk until blened, or shake in covered jar.

Cover and refrigerate until ready to use. If too thick, add a little more water and stir to blend before serving. Makes about two cups.

ORANGE VINAIGRETTE DRESSING

½ cup light vegetable oil
¼ cup cider vinegar
¼ cup fresh orange juice
1 tbsp. minced fresh parsley
1 small clove garlic, minced
1 tsp. sugar
1 tsp. grated orange peel
½ tsp. each curry powder, ground ginger, paprika and pepper

Combine all ingredients in jar. Cover and shake well to blend thoroughly. se at once, or cover and refrigerate until ready to use. Makes about one cup.

CREAMY HONEY DRESSING

2 cups mayonnaise
1 cup sour cream or plain yogurt
1 cup buttermilk
¼ cup plus 2 Tbsps. honey
2 tbsps. fresh lemon juice
3 tbsps. minced fresh watercress
1 tbsp. paprika
1 tbsp. minced pimiento
Dash ground black pepper

In large mixing bowl combine mayonnaise, sour cream or yogurt, buttermilk,honey and lemon juice. Beat with wire whisk until well blended.

Stir in remaining ingredients and blend well. Refrigerate at least several hours before serving over fresh greens. Makes about 1 quart.

FRESH RANCH DRESSING

1 cup buttermilk
½ cup plain yogurt
½ cup mayonnaise
2 tbsps. minced green onion
2 tbsps. minced fresh parsley
1 tsp. prepared Dijon-style mustard
Generous ¼ tsp. each garlic powder, onion powder, ground dried cumin, paprika and dried dill weed
⅛ tsp. cayenne pepper
Salt and freshly ground black pepper, to taste

Combine all ingredients and blend thoroughly. Chill several hours (or overight) before serving, to let flavors blend. Makes about two and one-half cups.

DEAR ABBY

Vivisection may be useful but it's also 'barbarous'

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I ran across something you wrote some time ago, and I must say God bless you for your stand on vivisection. It took great courage to speak out against inflicting endless torture experimenting on living creatures.

Continued success in your work and in your life. My family and I thank you. Please run the item enclosed. — ALICE PIEL, NEW YORK

DEAR ALICE: I think it's worth repeating:

DEAR ABBY: How do you feel about vivisection, which is defined as "the cutting of or operation on a living animal, usually for physiological or pathological investigation; animal experimentation, especially if considered to cause distress to the subject"? — FOR ANIMAL RIGHTS IN NEW YORK

DEAR FOR: The late George Bernard Shaw expressed my feelings perfectly when he said: "You do not settle whether an experiment is justified or not by merely showing that it is of some use. The distinction is not between useful and useless experiments, but between barbarous and civilized behavior. Vivisection is a social evil because if it advances human knowledge, it does so at the expense of human character."

DEAR ABBY: Re the meaning of "No calling hours" when someone dies:

I work for a newspaper and write the obituaries, and when I get a call from a funeral home concerning a funeral, everything has already been decided by the family. If they say "No calling hours," they mean they do not want to have anyone visiting the funeral home.

Sometimes, it is changed to "No visitation will be observed," but it means the same thing — the family does not wish to have people come to the funeral home.

This might have been the deceased person's wishes. I know that I do not want to be viewed when I die. And I hope my family will carry out my last wishes. — NO VIEWING, THANK YOU

DEAR NO VIEWING: And if they don't, there's no forgiving, so better tell them while you're living.

DEAR ABBY: In a recent column you suggested a portable cordless telephone for people who work in their yards a lot and rush back into the house to answer the phone but seem to get there too late.

As one with 13 years of professional experience in electronics, I believe the public should be warned about the lack of privacy when using these devices. Cordless telephones transmit conversations using short-wave radio signals. Many users are under the false impression that because the unit operates only within a limited range, the signal travels no farther. Not so. With a very cheap receiver, I have overheard conversations from cordless telephones from over a mile away, and this experience is not uncommon.

Another warning: Certain types of cordless telephones are vulnerable to "hackers" who could electronically break into your telephone line and charge their toll calls to your bill.

The public has a short memory. In 1972; the Watergate burglars were caught trying to place a transmitter in the telephone of the political opposition. Had cordless telephones been available at that time, they could have merely presented their target with one as a "gift," and listened to their heart's content. — RAYMOND F. GAWRYLA, SCRANTON, PA.

CONFIDENTIAL TO YOU: Tune into "Hour Magazine" tomorrow and watch me co-host the show with Gary Collins. I make a chocolate mousse, work out and talk a lot. See you Thursday.

Substitute veggies in barbecuing

By NINA KILLHAM
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Barbecues are not for carnivores only. Meat-munchers do not have a monopoly on the sun, beer and the cheer of springtime gatherings while vegetarians sit inside moping over their millet-tofu-carrot patties.

Grilled eggplant, corn in the husk and jacketed potatoes can make delicious and substantial meals if prepared with imagination. So move over, burger breath, here come some new ideas for a meatless BBQ with all the trimmings.

Grilling marinated vegetables is a colorful choice. "The Silver Palate Good Times Cookbook" (by Julee Rosso and Sheila Lukins, Workman Publishing, 1984) offers this recipe:

To serve 8, splash 2 cups of olive oil, 1 cup white wine, 8 crushed garlic cloves, 1 cup coarsely chopped fresh basil leaves, ¼ cup fresh rosemary, salt and pepper together and immerse about 8 pounds of vegetables, including new red potatoes, baby artichokes, shallots, Italian eggplants, plum tomatoes, small green, red, and yellow peppers in the marinade for an hour.

Remove the vegetables from the marinade, reserving the marinade, and roast at 400 degrees for 35 minutes before grilling.

STRING FRESH herbs such as rosemary, basil, parsley in between vegetables as you string them on skewers for grilling. Grill the vegetables about 6 inches from the heat, basting frequently with the marinade about 6 minutes on each side.

Serve grilled vegetables with flavored butters. Corn on the cob is delicious with Jalapeno Pepper Butter. To make, blend ½ cup unsalted butter with 2 jalapeno peppers, seeded and finely minced, and ½ teaspoon ground cumin.

Top vegetables with homemade olivada by pitting 3 cups of imported black olives and processing to a pure'e in food processor. Add about 2 tablespoons olive oil to bind and process to a thick smooth paste. Add more oil if needed. Season with freshly ground black pepper.

Double your output and grill stuffed vegetables. Cut the tops off tomatoes and squeeze out the seeds. Fill the cavity with pepper or caraway seasoned melting cheeses and sprinkle with salt and pepper. Wrap in aluminum foil and cook about 5 minutes until the tomatoes soften and the cheese melts.

TRY STUFFED potatoes; bake the potatoes, scoop out the flesh and mash with your favorite fillings, stuff the potato shell with the filling, wrap each potato in aluminum foil and grill 5 to 10 minutes on each side until the potato is heated through.

But if you just have to have that BBQ feeling of chomping down on an oozing, gooey, charcoal-crusted burger, try meatless hot dogs and vegetable burgers. They are available at health-food stores.

Some stores sell Lightlife Meatless Tofu Pups and Light Foods' Tofu Light Links, which are both cholesterol-free and low-calorie, as well as tempeh burgers, already in patties, and tofu burger mixes.

Top your sizzling treats with natural ketchups and barbecue sauces, low in sugar and without artificial additives.

So the next time those muscle-y meat odors waft over the fence and into your back yard, charge up your own charcoal fires and create a barbecue feast that's fresh and filling. The two recipes below require only sugar, oil, salt and pepper before you dash through the express lane.

Remember to oil the grid before cooking vegetables if they are not wrapped in foil.

EXPRESS LANE: potatoes, mustard, red-wine vinegar, onions, yellow peppers, goat cheese, basil, tomatoes

MUSTARD ROASTED POTATOES
1½ pounds red new potatoes
½ cup dijon mustard
2 tablespoons red-wine vinegar
1 teaspoon sugar
2 large yellow onions, cut into ½-inch-thick rounds
Freshly ground pepper to taste

Cook the potatoes in boiling, salted water 5 minutes. Rinse under cold running water; drain. Cut into ½-inch thick slices. Coat the slices well with mustard.

Combine the red wine vinegar and sugar and sprinkle over the onions. Combine the potatoes and onions. Season with pepper and toss lightly to mix.

Place the potato and onion mixture in a hinged grill basket and grill over medium-hot, direct heat until tender, about 10 minutes per side. Or wrap the mixture up in aluminum foil and and set on grill for 20 to 25 minutes, turning the package over after 10 minutes. Serves 4-6.

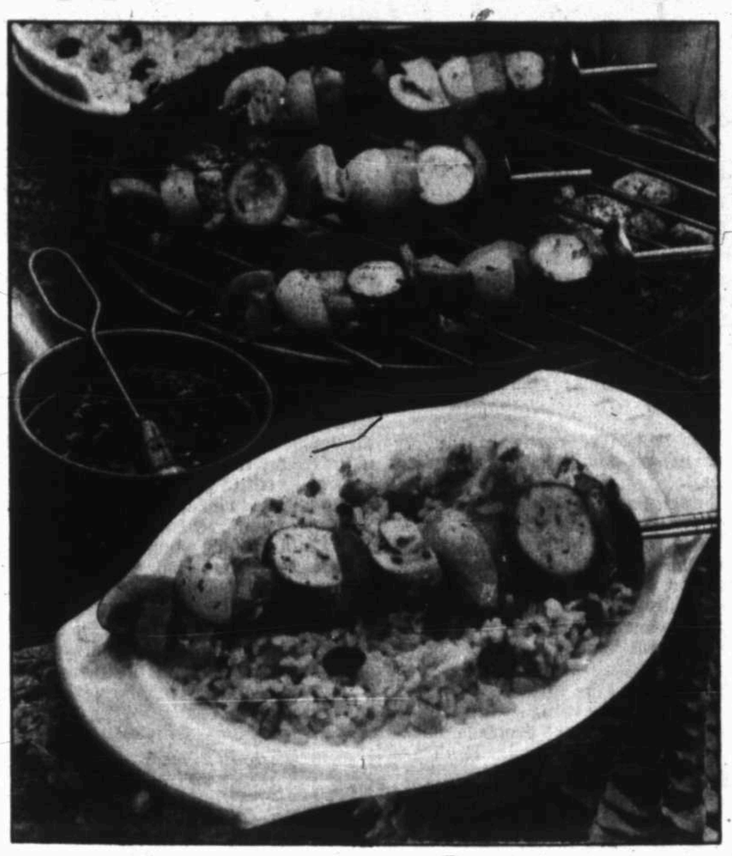

GRILLED STUFFED YELLOW PEPPERS
4 large yellow bell peppers
12 ounces soft mild goat cheese, cut into 5 equal pieces
Salt and pepper for sprinkling
1 bunch fresh basil
2 ripe large plum tomatoes, sliced
1 tablespoon oil, preferably olive oil

Cut the tops from the peppers and reserve. Core and seed peppers. Press 1 piece of goat cheese in the bottom of each pepper, sprinkle the inside of each pepper with salt and pepper and place 2 basil leaves in the bottom.

Divide the tomato slices evenly over the basil. Season again to taste. Layer 2 more basil leaves in each pepper and drizzle ½ teaspoon oil over the basil in each pepper.

Crumble the last piece of goat cheese on top of the peppers, and season again. Replace the tops.

Rub the outside of the peppers with the remaining 1 teaspoon oil and wrap in foil. Grill over medium heat for 15 to 20 minutes, turning it every 5 minutes. Serves 4.

Mushrooms, onions, tomatoes and zucchini make a smart alternative to the traditional barbecue.

Grilled quail fixed with Southwestern flair

NEW YORK (UPI) — The past two decades of American cooking have been characterized by a search for light fresh foods, quick dishes not built on convenience, and by an interest in exotica.

By combining nouvelle California and Mexican-Indian cuisines, a new book called "New Southwestern Cooking" by Carolyn Dille and Susan Belsinger (Macmillan, $19.95) melds all these elements in an innovative way.

The authors, both professional food consultants, present fresh interpretations of more than 200 traditional and modern specialties from Arizona, Colorado, New Mexico, southern California and Mexico.

The following recipe, for Grilled Quail With Kumquat Jalapeno Marmalade, illustrates how delicious the blend of old and new can be.

GRILLED QUAIL WITH KUMQUAT JALAPENO MARMALADE
½ cup Kumquat Jalapeno Marmalade (see recipe below)
2 cups strong red wine
2 jalapeno peppers, stemmed and sliced
2 garlic cloves, sliced
1 small onion, sliced
6-8 fresh oregano sprigs, bruised
2 bay leaves, broken
1 teaspoon whole black peppercorns, cracked
12 quail, split along the backbone
Salt and freshly ground black pepper

Melt the marmalade with the wine over very low heat for 3 to 4 minutes. Pour the mixture into a dish just large enough to hold the quail. Stir in the jalapenos, garlic, onion, oregano, bay leaves and peppercorns. Toss the quail in the marinade.

Cover and marinate for 24 hours in the refrigerator, turning the quail three or four times. Remove the quail from the refrigerator 1 to 2 hours before grilling. Season lightly with salt and pepper.

Grill over a medium-hot wood or wood-charcoal fire for 12 to 16 minutes, turning the quail and basting them.

The quail will be juicy and rare.

Serve hot.

Marmalade:
1 pound kumquats, trimmed and sliced (about 3 cups)
3 cups water
3 cups sugar
3 ounces jalapeno peppers, steemed, seeded and cut into strips

In a large enameled or stainless heavy-bottomed pot, soak the sliced kumquats in the water with 1 cup of the sugar for 24 hours. Then add the rest of the sugar and the jalapenos to the pot and stir well.

Place the pot over medium-high heat and bring to a boil, stirring occasionally.

Keep the marmalade simmering, stirring occasionally, for about 30 minutes. When the marmalade reaches the setting stage, or 220 degrees on a candy thermometer, ladle into hot sterilized jars and seal.

Berries afloat in 'cloud'

Associated Press

Like a cloud with a raspberry lining, this dessert piles a puff of whipped cream between layers of raspberries and tops it all with airy meringue. A brief trip under the broiler browns the meringue without heating the filling.

Raspberries are fragile, so use them within three days of purchase. Rinse them with cold water just before serving but do not allow them to stand in water.

RASPBERRY TART
¾ cup sugar
1 tablespoon quick-cooking tapioca
1½ cups fresh or frozen unsweetened raspberries, crushed
One 9-inch baked pastry shell
1 cup whipping cream
2 tablespoons sugar
2 cups fresh raspberries, halved
3 egg whites
½ cup sifted powdered sugar

In a saucepan combine the ¾ cup sugar and tapioca; stir in crushed berries. Let stand 15 minutes. Cook and stir until mixture boils. Remove from heat; let stand 20 minutes. Cover and chill. Turn chilled berry mixture into cool pastry shell. Beat cream with the 2 tablespoons sugar until soft peaks form. Spread over berry mixture. Arrange fresh berries over cream layer.

For meringue, beat egg whites until frothy; gradually add powdered sugar, beating until stiff peaks form. Spread atop pie, sealing to edge of pastry. Broil 3 to 4 inches from the heat for 1 to 2 minutes. Serve at once so filling is cold, meringue is warm.

Makes 8 servings.

Mini vegetables available in supermarkets

Associated Press

Prized for their tender, delicate taste and appearance, tiny vegetables have been dished up in fashionable restaurants for some time, but they're only now becoming available in supermarkets, according to Better Homes and Gardens.

This summer, growers and grocers are going far beyond mini carrots in cellophane packages. Now you can get baby golden beets with edible tops, tiny turnips, and even baby kohlrabi. Expect more variety and more competitive prices.

You can put the tender delights on your table by harvesting from your garden crop as well. Pluck ordinary vegetable, zucchini, parsnips, turnips, from the vine before they reach full growth. Or try some of the new dwarf varieties.

Both plants and seeds of miniature vegetables are readily available and especially suited to container gardening. Choose among mini corn, eggplant, cabbage, cauliflower and more, or try them all.

Barbecuing easier with simple, practical equipment

By ANTONIA ALLEGRA
Copley News Service

Ask some backyard chefs which tools are indispensable for their grill cookery and you'll get a list of gear that would stop a buffalo.

Ask experts the same question and you're bound to get responses of elementary simplicity.

According to the noted barbecue and cookware specialists to whom we posed the question of grill gear, cooking that steak, chicken or fish is a snap on the grill when using the right tools. It's an inviting and quick way to prepare meals for anytime that sizzling smoky flavor of barbecued food lures you.

Tumble baskets, elegant skewers, potato racks and weatherproof coal chests are all fine in their place, but Chuck Williams, Phillip Schulz, Barbara Grunes, Phyllis Magida and Mark Miller agree that a natural-bristle brush, a sturdy fork, tongs (some prefer the flat "grab" style; others, the scissors type) a sharp knife and a spatula are the basics.

Here's what they had to say, followed by barbecue recipes worth their weight in mesquite.

Despite the fact that he has sold every imaginable type of kitchenware since 1961, Chuck Williams is not a devotee of gadgets. And he says his favorite foods are those without gimmicks.

The owner of Williams-Sonoma kitchenware source shops and catalog company is extremely down-to-earth about life in general. In an interview, the 70-year-old cookware equipment specialist explained that he has always loved cooking, sparked by childhood fun in his grandmother's kitchen.

"I LIKE THE process of cooking and seeing things happen to the ingredients," he said as he described his work in writing the recently released "Williams-Sonoma Cookbook and Guide to Kitchenware" (Random House, $19.95, hardcover).

The first half of the book is a completely illustrated guide to cooking equipment, including coverage of barbecue tools and grills. Part two of the book offers recipes from Williams, 30 percent of which has been included over the years in the detailed catalogs from the company.

"I used to barbecue," said Williams. "Frankly, of all the requirements for barbecue tools, I think they should be well made. I've seen tools too long with handles that fall off; they're just not a good investment.", He added that his choice would be stainless-steel tools — tongs, fork, pokers — because they have less small parts, clean easily and "they are so long that the heat doesn't travel all the way to the handle."

In his "Cooking With Fire and Smoke," (Simon & Schuster, $17.95, hardcover), Phillip Schulz provides a complete guide to equipment and accessories for the barbecue, along with how-to's covering the gamut of questions on the art of outdoor cookery.

In his list of basic equipment, Schulz lists an extra-long fork, spatula, tongs and a basting brush as the tools one should not be without at the outdoor stove. He notes that, "These utensils, equipped with heat-resistant handles made of wood or thermoplastic, can make the difference between a 'trial by fire' cookout and a safe-and-sane bout at the grill."

THE BARBECUE CHEF will appreciate his idea of having a second set of tongs just for the purpose of working with the coals, a pair of insulated kitchen gloves, a water spritzer (plastic spray bottle) for use in case of flare-up, aluminum foil drip pans to catch meat juices and a long-stemmed meat thermometer for large cuts of meat.

Barbara Grunes and Phyllis Magida, authors of "Fish on the Grill" (Contemporary Books, $7.95, paperback), offer their "foolproof method for fish steaks, thick fillets, whole stuffed fish or kebabs to be cooked on the barbecue.

"Measure the fish at the thickest point and allow 10 minutes for direct heat and 15 to 18 minutes for indirect heat for each inch of thickness."

The tools they recommend are flat tongs, a good scraper to keep the grill clean at all times and a sharp knife.

Their hints mirror those of noted grilling artist Mark Miller of the Coyote Cafe in Santa Fe, N.M. Miller said he advocates a clean grill above all, suggesting the use of "one of those $2 wire brushes with a long handle from the hardware store." Cleaning the grill during and immediately after cooking overcomes the greatest problem of grilling: food sticking to the rungs of the grill.

Barbecue cooking can be just as uncomplicated as the tools needed for the task. Above all, when preparing these and other barbecue recipes, be sure to start with a clean, hot grill for best results.

This is a very simple grilled chicken recipe. Be careful not to place the chicken too close to the heat, or the yogurt coating will burn. If you like, you can line the broiler pan with aluminum foil, which makes cleanup easier. The chicken can also be done in the top section of a hot oven.

GRILLED CHICKEN WITH PAPRIKA

2½ to 3 lbs. chicken
½ cup unflavored yogurt
3 tsps. paprika
1 clove garlic, finely chopped
Salt
Freshly ground black pepper

Heat broiler and oil grid or rack of broiler pan.

Wash and dry chicken. Cut into eight serving pieces, discarding back and neck, or cut into four quarters. Trim off any fat. Combine yogurt, paprika and garlic in bowl and mix well.

CNS Graphic

Season chicken pieces with salt and pepper and place on broiler rack, skin-side-down. Brush with a coating of the yogurt mixture. Place under broiler about 2 to 3 inches below heat and cook 10 minutes, basting once or twice. Turn chicken pieces over and brush with yogurt mixture. Cook 10 minutes more, basting twice with yogurt mixture. Turn again, baste and cook for another five to six minutes. Check for doneness by piercing thigh with a sharp knife: Juice should run slightly pink or clear. Be sure chicken is done, but do not overcook. Serve at once.

Serves 4.

— Recipe from "The Williams-Sonoma Cookbook," by Chuck Williams, Random House, $19.95.

APPLE-DAPPLED PORK CHOPS

This recipe is dependent on a thick, rough-textured apple sauce. Best if homemade, the apple sauce not only adds savor, but actually sears to the flesh as it cooks. Serve with more apple sauce on the side.

Homemade Applesauce (recipe follows)
4 pork chops, 1-inch thick
1 large clove garlic, bruised
Vegetable oil

Make applesauce. Trim all but ¼- to ½-inch fat from edges of pork chops. Slash remaining fat with knife at 1-inch intervals. Rub chops well with garlic. Spread apple sauce over each chop, about 1 tablespoon per side. Let stand one hour.

Preheat grill. If using presoaked wood chips, or other flavorings, sprinkle them over the hot coals or lava rocks. Brush grid lightly with oil. Sear chops over hot or high heat for one minute on the fatty edge only. Then cover, cooking with vents open, over medium-hot heat 10 minutes per side. Serve remaining apple sauce on side.

Homemade Applesauce:
4 tart green apples, peeled, cored and sliced
Juice of ½ lemon
Finely slivered peel of ½ lemon
½ cup light brown sugar

Combine ingredients in medium saucepan. Cook over medium heat, mashing freuently, until thick, but not too smooth.

— Recipe from "Cooking with Fire and Smoke," by Phillip Stephen Schulz, Simon & Schuster, $17.98.

TRADITIONAL ARMENIAN SHISH KEBAB

Shish is the Arabic term for a skewer, and kebab means meat. Somehow, the term got turned around, and the word kebab implies anything on a skewer. The concept of skewered, fire-roasted meat developed back in the time of Alexander the Great — when hungry foot soldiers, gathered around a blazing fire, cooked dinner at swords' point.

Juice of 1 large lemon
Juice of 1 lime
¼ cup olive oil
2 tbsps. grated onion
1 clove garlic, crushed
1 tsp. crushed, dried hot red peppers
2 tsps. salt
2 tsps. turmeric
1 tsp. ground coriander
1 tsp. ground ginger
1½ lbs. lamb, cut into 1¼-inch cubes
8 small white onions
8 cherry tomatoes
Vegetable oil

Combine all ingredients from lemon juice through ginger in a large glass or ceramic bowl. Mix well. Stir in lamb cubes. Cover and let stand two hours. Meanwhile, peel onions and cut a cross in each root end to keep them from falling apart. Cook in boiling water three minutes. Rinse under cold running water; drain. Pat dry.

Preheat grill. Divide meat equally in fours. There should be about five pieces per portion. On each skewer, place a piece of meat, then onion, meat, tomato, meat, onion, meat, tomato, ending with meat. Brush lightly with marinade.

If using presoaked wood chips, or other flavorings, sprinkle them over hot coals or lava rocks. Brush grid lightly with vegetable oil. Grill kebabs over hot or high heat three minutes per side.

Makes 2 to 4 servings.

GRILLED TURKEY FILETS OR STEAKS IN CRANBERRY MUSTARD

Combined with country-style Dijon mustard (with seeds), this turkey-cranberry combination seems like Thanksgiving in July. Use either fresh filets or pounded drumstick steaks.

6 turkey filets, or drumstick steaks, pounded thin
4 tsps. country-style Dijon mustard (with seeds)
2 tbsps. cranberry juice
Salt and freshly ground pepper
Vegetable oil

Lay filets or steaks on large sheet of wax paper. Combine mustard and cranberry juice. Brush over top side of turkey. Spinkle with salt and pepper. Turn turkey pieces over and brush with remaining mustard mixture. Sprinkle with salt and pepper. Cover with another sheet of wax paper. Let stand one hour.

Preheat grill. If using presoaked wood chips or chunks (chips of gas), or other flavorings, sprinkle them over hot coals or lava rocks. Brush grid lightly with oil. Grill turkey pieces over hot or high heat one minute per side for filets, about two minutes per side for steaks.

LEMON-BASTED FISH STEAKS

Marinating fish steaks in a lemon-based marinade is a classic method for preparing fish steaks to be grilled. Use swordfish, tuna or bluefish.

¼ cup lemon juice
½ cup olive oil
1 small clove garlic, minced
Pinch of dried oregano, crushed
½ tsp. finely grated lemon peel
Salt and freshly ground pepper
4 fish steaks, 1 inch thick
Vegetable oil

Preheat grill.

Place lemon juice in a small bowl. Slowly whisk in olive oil. Whisk in garlic, oregano, lemon peel and salt and pepper to taste. Pour over fish steaks. Let stand covered 30 minutes.

If using presoaked wood chips or other flavorings, sprinkle them over hot coals or lava rocks. Brush grid lightly with vegetable oil.

Grill fish steaks over hot or high heat, basting with remaining marinade, five minutes per side.

— Recipe from "Cooking with Fire and Smoke," by Phillip Stephen Schulz, Simon & Schuster, $17.98.

GRILLED BROCCOLI PARMA STYLE

3 large uniform stems broccoli, about 1½ lbs.
⅓ cup olive oil
Juice of large lemon
¼ tsp. salt
⅛ tsp. freshly ground pepper
¾ cup freshly grated Parmesan cheese

Using sharp knife, trim any leafy stems from broccoli and peel stalks, smoothing bumps as you peel. Trim all but 3½ inches of stalk from broccoli. Hold each stalk with flowerets down vertically on a cutting board and cut each stalk in half, slicing right through flowerets.

Place broccoli in large glass or ceramic dish. Combine oil, lemon juice, salt and pepper in a bowl. Mix well and pour over broccoli. Toss to coat. Let stand covered 30 minutes. Just before grilling, toss broccoli once more and sprinkle cheese evenly over both sides.

Cover and cook with vents open over medium, direct heat (use the outer edges of the grid) 10 minutes per side.

Roast barbecued

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

BEEF AND VEGETABLE GRILL

3 pound beef chuck roast
1 teaspoon salt
1 cup barbecue sauce
6 small onions, peeled
6 medium carrots, pared
6 medium-small potatoes, peeled

Sprinkle roast with salt; place on a large double sheet of heavy foil. Pour barbecue sauce over meat. Place onions and carrots on top of roast and potatoes around edges. Wrap securely using double folds. Place on grill, meat side down; roast over hot coals 1¼ hours. Replenish coals if necessary. Turn package over and cook 45 minutes or until meat is tender and vegetables cooked through. Makes 6 servings.

Calcium lowers chances of bone disease

Copley News Service

CNS Graphic

The information, once spare as a skeleton, has turned into a healthy body of knowledge: Calcium is preventive medicine.

In the 1960s, and on into the '70s, the loss of bone mass leading to the disease osteoporosis was considered inevitable — a normal part of aging.

Now, with adequate calcium in our diets and attention to other environmental factors, we know the debilitating disease that often results in compression of the spine and broken bones can be prevented.

"There are things that should be, and can be done about it," said Dr. Charles H. Chesnut, professor of medicine and radiology at the University of Washington, where his research has focused on osteoporosis.

Chesnut points out that calcium is our first line of defense. And calcium in the diet is the most efficient and easily absorbed source.

"If you increase calcium intake, you decrease bone resorption (deterioration)," he said. "This translates into a decrease in bone loss over a period of time."

The usual daily intake of calcium in the United States — 450-500 milligrams — falls well below the Recommended Dietary Allowance of 800 milligrams, which is designed to meet the needs of approximately 95 percent of the population.

Metabolic studies, moreover, indicate a daily requirement of about 1,000 milligrams for pre-menopausal and estrogen-treated women. Post-menopausal women who are not treated with estrogen require about 1,500 milligrams daily for calcium balance.

WHY AREN'T WOMEN — the primary victims of osteoporosis — getting enough calcium?

"Concern about weight is one reason," said Chesnut. "Individuals on diets tend to cut their consumption of milk and dairy products first. They don't have to; they certainly can consume low-fat and non-fat dairy products if they are concerned about fat."

Another reason, he said, may be gastrointestinal problems preventing them from efficiently digesting lactose-containing products such as milk.

"Smaller amounts of milk, say two or three ounces, consumed several times a day, will frequently alleviate some of the gastrointestinal problems that occur," said Chesnut. "Preparations such as Lact-Aid can be purchased from a drugstore and added to milk to make it easier to digest. Cultured dairy products, such as cheese and yogurt, can also be tolerated because they contain little or no lactose."

An eight-ounce cup of milk contains about 300 milligrams of calcium. So do eight ounces of tofu, two cups of cottage cheese, one cup of yogurt or 1½ ounces of cheddar cheese. Non-dairy sources of dietary calcium that would equal the 300-milligram dose include broccoli (two cups), collard or turnip greens (1 cup), kale or mustard greens (1½ cups), oysters (1½ cups), salmon with edible bones (4 ounces) and sardines with edible bones (2½ ounces).

However, according to the University of Texas Health Science Center in Dallas, calcium from vegetable sources is not as easily absorbed by the small intestine and is not as effective in fulfilling calcium requirements.

ABSORPTION ALSO is restricted among those indulging in excessive alcohol, which blocks both calcium absorption and new bone formation. Alcohol and other environmental factors such as smoking, excessive coffee intake (12-16 cups per day) and excessive protein contribute to osteoporosis, said Chesnut.

"We are not entirely sure how smoking contributes to bone loss," he said. "Presumably it may increase the loss of estrogens in the urine so that one is somewhat estrogen deficient."

The problem of osteoporosis is most acute in post-menopausal women, said Chesnut, because their bodies no longer are producing the hormone estrogen, which prevents bone deterioration. This, he said, is the No. 1 risk factor in osteoporosis.

The second risk factor? Calcium deficiency.

"Individuals who are estrogen deficient," said Chesnut, "apparently do not absorb as much calcium as others. So it appears that there are many factors contributing to calcium deficiency.

"Normal individuals at age 65 absorb 40 percent of the calcium in their diet. Individuals with fractures of the spine or the hip, osteoporotic individuals, absorb about 20 percent.

"A third factor that probably contributes to osteoporosis is the quantity of bone mass at skeletal maturity." This, he said, suggests the possibility that building bone mass through sound nutrition between the ages of 12 and 25 can act as a preventive measure.

"Can we build a bigger skeleton at that particular time by increasing calcium intake so that we have a larger skeleton at menopause, and consequently prevent osteoporosis? We don't know, but our laboratory is particularly interested in this."

OSTEOPOROSIS — which has been known to cause height reductions of as much as 9 inches — is said to affect 15 million Caucasian females in the United States. One-quarter of all Caucasian females over 60 experience some symptoms of the disease.

"It appears that blacks have more bone mass at any specific age and in both sexes than do Caucasians," said Chesnut. "We rarely see osteoporosis in blacks because they simply have more bone."

When too little calcium is consumed in the diet, the body draws it from calcium reserves. Over a period of time, the bones become weaker with each calcium withdrawal and eventually become porous. The result: osteoporosis.

It is eight times more common in women than men because:

- Women are generally smaller than men and have less bone mass.
- Women are much more likely to follow weight-reducing diets, restricting their calcium and caloric intakes.
- Women tend to be less physically active than men, performing less bone-strengthening exercise.
- Women's ability to absorb dietary calcium decreases during menopause, and their calcium needs rise dramatically during pregnancy and lactation.

"Decreased bone density," said Chesnut, "also has been found in menstruating white female athletes. It may be calcium deficiency that exists in many of these athletes, who frequently diet to keep their weight down.

"New studies suggest that their calcium deficiency may be even a greater risk factor for bone loss than the estrogen loss they have from amenorrhea."

IN THE AMERICAN food supply, dairy foods give us over 72 percent of available calcium. The rest of our calcium comes from the other food groups. Higher-calorie, whole milk products are not the only source of calcium; lower-calorie, low-fat dairy foods are also an excellent source of calcium.

Here are some easy, calcium-rich dishes for breakfast, lunch and dinner that the whole family can enjoy and feel great about.

PINEAPPLE-MINT GELATO

1 pineapple, cored, peeled, chopped
½ cup chopped mint leaves
2 cups milk
1¼ cups sugar
1 egg white

Puree pineapple and other ingredients in blender or food processor. Freeze overnight. Process again, then refreeze in a bowl for easy scooping.

Makes 8 servings.

BANANA GELATO

2 bananas, chopped
2 tbsps. EACH orange and lemon zest (strips of fruit skin exterior)
2 cups milk
1¼ cups sugar

Process banana and other ingredients in blender or food processor. Freeze overnight. Process again, then refreeze in a bowl for easy scooping.

Makes 8 servings.

STRAWBERRY-RHUBARB GELATO

2 cups chopped rhubarb
2 cups sugar
2½ cups chopped strawberries
2 cups milk
2 egg whites

Boil rhubarb and sugar with ½ cup water for 5 to 8 minutes until rhubarb is soft; cool. Process in food processor with remaining ingredients, then freeze overnight. Process again and transfer to a bowl for easy scooping before refreezing.

YOGURT FRUIT MORNING SHAKE

1 pkg. (10 ozs.) frozen strawberries
1 container (8 ozs.) plain low-fat yogurt
1 cup low-fat milk
1 cup orange juice
1 tsp. cinnamon

In blender container, combine frozen strawberries, yogurt, milk, orange juice and cinnamon. Blend at high speed until frothy smooth. Serve in chilled glasses. Garnish with fresh strawberry, as desired.

Makes 4 servings.

THE BUTCHER
Menu for 'Mountain Men'

By MERLE ELLIS

Every once in a while, if you're lucky in life, you'll run across somebody for whom no other term fits quite so well as "fascinating!" I met a person like that not long ago in Denver, a man by the name of Sam Arnold.

Sam is a man of so many talents it's hard to know where to begin to tell you of him. He's an historian. Few people know more about life in the Old West than Sam Arnold.

He has been a speaker at the national conferences of the Western History Association, the National Wildlife Federation, and the Smithsonian Institution. He has been cited by the American Association for State and Local History; and has authored many articles and books on Western history.

Sam is also an accomplished photographer and musician. Folk and classical music are his favorites. He is gifted on the mandolin and plays a mean musical saw.

Many of you may know Sam through his PBS-TV series "Fryingpans West" a series of half-hour shows on early Western food and drink. Some of you may even have dined at his restaurant. Yes, he's a restaurateur as well and his restaurant, "The Fort," is one of the most unusual I have ever been in.

In 1986, Sam bought some land in the foothills southwest of Denver and using the red clay on the site to make adobe bricks, built a full-sized replica of an old fur traders' fort.

Recreations of frontier food are the specialties of the house at "The Fort" and to dine there is to take a big step back in time. To the time when buffalo roamed the prairie and fur traders were just beginning to open the frontier. "Back in those days," Sam told me lifting a pint jar full of "Hailstorm" (that's another story) high over his head, "men lifted their cup in the Mountain Man's Toast — Here's to the childs what's come afor',

An here's to the pilgrims what comes after
May yer trails be free of Grizzlies
Yer packs filled with plews
And fat buffler in yer pot!"

Then, sounding something like a grizzly bear himself, Sam roared the mountain man's greeting — "Waugh!"

"Buffler" (translation "Buffalo") was the mainstay of the diet in the days of the Mountain Men, and it is the featured item on the menu at "The Fort." About 35 percent of the meat served at the restaurant is buffalo. But there is also beef, game and fish along with some old-fashioned frontier specials like "Hoppin' John", "Rocky Mountain Oysters" and "Hangtown Fry."

Sam Arnold is indeed a fascinating man. I would urge you to get to know him. I hope to!

Here are a couple of recipes from his book "Fryingpan West" (Arnold & Co., 2221 South Fillmore, Denver, Colorado 80210. $6.95 plus $1.00 shipping/handling) Waugh! Sam Arnold.

BUFFALO TONGUE FORT STYLE

1 buffalo tongue (if you can't get a buffalo tongue, a beef tongue will do)
1 teaspoon whole peppercorns
¼ teaspoon salt
½ cup onion, chopped
2 bay leaves
Water to cover

Simmer the tongue with the peppercorns, salt, onion and bay leaves in water for two hours until tender. Allow to cool in its liquid until cool enough to handle, but still warm. Peel the skin off the tongue and trim off any excess fat. It's much easier to peel the tongue while it is still warm.

Slice the tongue thin and serve, either hot or cold, with Sam's "Caper Sauce for Buffalo Tongue."

CAPER SAUCE FOR BUFFALO TONGUE

1 cup mayonnaise
2 tablespoons capers
1 tablespoons horseradish (hot)
Pinch each of oregano and black pepper

Combine all ingredients and mix well. Serve over the sliced tongue.

One of the frontier specials at "The Fort" is called the "K.C. Bowl." It is a superb "dry-soup." Its proper name, according to Sam, is "caldo Tlalpeno," but Kit Carson's granddaughter, Miss Leona Wood, once told Sam that she remembers eating it as a youngster, so Sam dubbed it "Bowl of the wife of Kit Carson" — "K.C. Bowl" for short!

"BOWL OF THE WIFE OF KIT CARSON"

1 cup cooked chicken or turkey meat, cut into bite-sized pieces
1 cup cooked rice
4 cups of rich chicken broth
1 cup cooked garbanzos
1 teaspoon oregano
1 cup chopped chipotle pepper (a special smoked chile pepper available in cans at stores that carry Mexican specialties)
1 avocado, sliced
1 cup cubed Monterey Jack or Meunster cheese

Heat broth to boiling, then add chicken, rice, garbanzos, chipotle pepper and oregano. Heat through. Serve in large individual bowls. Add the slices of avocado and cubes of cheese to each bowl just before serving. Serves 4.

Air Life Line is life-saving transportation

By JANE DEES
Staff Writer

Christopher Holbrook pressed his nose against the window and watched in awe as the airplanes took off and landed, much like any other 5-year-old would have done.

Unlike most children his age, though, Holbrook needs open-heart surgery to stay alive.

And, the green and yellow-striped Piper Cherokee he saw down the runway was the means to that end.

Air Life Line of Texas, Inc., a non-profit group of airplane owners and pilots, provides transportation services that help save lives for many like Christopher.

Air Life is flying Christopher and his parents, Odessa residents, to a Fort Worth cardiologist today for the child's final check-up.

He leaves Thursday for Birmingham and open heart surgery.

"He has an erratic heart rate that skips beats and also one of the chambers in his heart is too small," said Linda Holbrook, his mother.

Curtis Pool, president of the West Texas chapter of Air Life Line, said the group transfers medical personnel or patients, geographically bound or in desperate situations to a hospital or other medical facility.

The group will also transport organs, tissue, plasma or blood serums to people in dire need, he said.

"We can provide dramatically needed services to the public whether it be a mercy mission or emergency run," Pool said.

"This is so touching, I couldn't believe they were doing all this for us," Ms. Holbrook said.

"We were planning to drive 20 hours to get to Birmingham because we couldn't afford to fly. This has saved us so much, including possibly, Christopher's life," she added.

"He's supposed to start kindergarten in the fall, but I don't think we'll be back from Birmingham until the first week of August, so I don't know if he'll be able," Ms. Holbrook said.

Christopher's brothers, aged 6 years and 18 months, were born completely normal.

"When they flew Christopher to Fort Worth Children's Hospital the day after he was born, I knew something was really the matter with him," Ms. Holbrook said.

Pool said Air Life Line of Texas, only organized since May 12, has chapters in Houston, Austin, Dallas, Fort Worth, Lubbock, San Antonio, Odessa and Midland.

He said the West Texas Chapter has about 25 pilots.

Woman pleads no contest, fined after newspaper stakeout

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

Larry Johnson — who wants to be in the sheriff's reserve — says it was his first real stakeout.

Judy Morrell, a 44-year-old Midland woman who saves coupons, says she was framed.

In the end, Mrs. Morrell was fined $145 in a Midland Municipal Court for the June 1 theft of six Sunday newspapers.

And she may lose her coupon club membership.

"I paid for the papers," says Mrs. Morrell, who pleaded no contest to the theft. "My quarters were in that machine."

But Johnson, a 27-year-old electronic salesman and an independent newspaper distributor, told the authorities a different story.

Angry at the loss of newspapers from one vendor box for six straight weeks, he devised what he thought would be a foolproof plan.

He emptied the money from one of the boxes and placed three newspapers in it.

Johnson then spent nearly three hours staking out the box, waiting for the culprit to arrive.

At about 7:35 a.m., Johnson told authorities a black pickup truck pulled up near the box, a woman got out, put 75 cents in the machine and took out three Sunday papers.

The woman, who he identified as Mrs. Morrell, then went to a competing newspaper's box, dropped in the price of a single issue and then took five papers from that box, Johnson says.

By following the woman home, Johnson found out where the woman lived and then immediately notified the authorities.

A Midland police officer accompanied Johnson to Ms. Morrell's home and questioned her.

Johnson and the officer then went back to the newspaper box and counted only 75 cents in one of the machines.

That was evidence enough to get Mrs. Morrell fined by a Municipal Court judge, says assistant city attorney David Clyde.

"This is the first time I can remember that we've ever caught somebody doing this," Clyde says.

Johnson prepared a "solid" case, Clyde said.

Mrs. Morrell, who belongs to the Dimes to Dollars Swap Shop Club, disagreed.

"He wanted to use me as an example," she said.

The club, 35 Midlanders who meet to exchange coupons, was to vote on Mrs. Morrell's status as a member, said Kim Kennedy, a club leader.

Meanwhile, Johnson said he will continue to stake out his newspaper boxes.

"It doesn't matter how much they steal — it's the principle. It's not right to steal anything."

Heck outlines proposed budget cuts

By DOUG DRUMMOND
Assistant City Editor

In a press conference today, Mayor Pro-Tem Katie Heck outlined the accomplishments of the City Council's recent budget hearings.

The council cut $5 million from the city budget for next fiscal year — an 8 percent decrease in spending from this year.

The total budget is some $57 million.

The Council issued a brief report in the press conference about the budget.

Ms. Heck said the detailed version of the preliminary budget will be filed next week in City Secretary Bill Clanton's office.

The budget will be discussed again in August when formal approval will take place.

"These spending reductions will not mean a decrease in any city services for the coming year. I must stress, however, that this is strictly a maintenance budget — it makes very little allowance for capital replacement..."
— Katie Heck

Included in those cuts are a decrease of some $1.2 million from the general fund due to salary reductions and not filling positions when they become vacant.

Overall, City Council members said they expect to save about $684,000 from salary reductions.

The council has agreed to cut 2 percent from employees making $35,000 or less.

Those making more will receive a 5 percent decrease.

Other reductions are for Water and Airport Fund expenses, the report showed.

"These spending reductions will not mean a decrease in any city services for the coming year," Ms. Heck said.

"I must stress, however, that this is strictly a maintenance budget — it makes very little allowance for capital replacement...

"There is no allowance for any expansion."

Ms. Heck also said many people in the city of Midland will pay less property tax because the council did not raise taxes this year.

She attributed this to lower property values.

Ms. Heck also praised citizen participation in the budget process this year.

A local tax awareness group has monitored some of the city's budget sessions. It was scheduled to meet with city officials tonight.

"We are delighted and encouraged by the increased interest and awareness of Midlanders in the fiscal responsibility of our various local government entities," she said.

"We felt that it would be used for the citizens to know what their city government has been and is doing in response to our current economic climate."

Houston lawmaker plans to introduce state lottery bill

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — A majority of Texas lawmakers favor a state lottery to help solve a $2.3 billion-plus budget shortfall, the chief sponsor of lottery legislation said Tuesday.

If Gov. Mark White calls a special legislative session next month to deal with the budget, Rep. Ron Wilson, D-Houston, said he will introduce a bill to create a state-run lottery. The state's hard economic times, he said, make a lottery a very appealing idea to legislators now.

"The timing has never been better," Wilson told reporters. "It may come down to a personal income tax or a lottery, a corporate income tax or a lottery, a sales tax increase or a lottery."

Wilson said his plan could annually bring the Treasury $500 million to $600 million.

"If we go into session in August, we can have a constitutional amendment creating a lottery on the ballot in November," he said. "The lottery can be instituted in a few months, and more than likely we'd be taking in revenue before the regular session was completed (in May)."

Only the governor can call a special session and lawmakers may consider items that he approves. The governor opposes a state lottery and has said he wants to solve the budget problem this summer without raising taxes.

Wilson said that if White allows the Legislature to consider any revenue-raising measures, he will introduce the lottery bill. If White maintains his position, Wilson said he will ask the governor to allow him to propose legislation that would place a non-binding lottery referendum on the November ballot.

"This would allow the voters an opportunity to express their views on the creation of a state run lottery before we go into session in January," he said.

Police: $100 bills found near where body found

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

Midland police said today several torn, blood-stained $100 bills, a pair of men's pants, and a walking cane were found Tuesday in another search of the field in northeast Midland where a man's nude body was found July 11.

Detective Sgt. B.G. Johnson said about 10 officers searched the area of rugged terrain for several hours Tuesday where the partially decomposed body of Perry Raymond Guthrie, 29, was found by two girls on horseback.

Johnson said the officers, several on horseback, concentrated their search in the same area "but in a different direction" from where the initial search took place after the body was found.

Johnson said the items were found several hundred yards from where the body and signs of a possible struggle were discovered. He said the $100 bills, which were found scattered over a wide area, were torn in half and were stained with blood.

Police said they believed the pants and cane belonged to Guthrie, who was partially crippled.

Guthrie lived at the Elm Grove Mobile Home Park, just south of the field where his body was found. Johnson said police have talked to several of his friends who may have been with him or known his whereabouts before he was killed, and said several more witnesses have yet to be interviewed.

Johnson said pending results of the autopsy, the cause of death is unknown.

Roustabout recalls working lease in Panhandle Field

KELLERVILLE (AP) — Ollie McPherson lived through an oil boom in this Wheeler County community, surviving its rewards and dangers, its give and take, its hellos and goodbyes.

Known as "Mack," McPherson came to the eastern Texas Panhandle 60 years ago to farm near Kelton, just before oil was discovered in these parts atop what is known today as the Panhandle Field.

These were high-producing wells at one time. Some still produce today in what are termed stripper wells. But profits from black crude came through hard work and sacrifice. No one better than McPherson could tell you that.

It was 1933, when a quart of milk cost a dime and when McPherson, an oilfield pumper, sold cream and eggs to supplement his salary. He had the first and possibly only milk route in Kellerville.

"Imagine, 40 cents a gallon for milk," he remarks. "That's what we got. And we made a living."

McPherson worked a lease for Royal Oil and Gas Co., one of the many smaller companies that shared the drilling here with major companies such as Phillips Petroleum, Skelly, Texaco and Shell, he says.

"For about the first four years, the formation produced enough to fill a 500-barrel tank in 30 minutes," says 78-year-old McPherson, able to recall specifics of the time like it was yesterday. "When I first went to work there, we were pumping 70,000 barrels in 30 days."

Like many towns in the oil patch, Kellerville pinned its existence on the steady flow of oil. It grew from "the sandiest place I'd ever seen" in 1933, to producing upwards of 850 barrels of oil a day in wells 2,700 to 3,000 feet deep, he says.

Originally, McPherson came to make his life on the land as a farmer. He and his wife, Vesta, made their living from cotton when it sold for $10 to $15 a bale in the 1930s. The money wasn't there.

"Me and my wife pulled up a bale, paid the rent and ginner and had $9.75 when we were done. That was during the Depression. That was rough stuff."

The boom moved into western Wheeler County near what was called the Gracie community. Thirty-two wells were drilled on the Kellerville camp, and 30 rigs are standing on wells, many of which still produce for Royal Oil and Gas.

The makeshift community had three churches, five lumber yards and four grocery stores. About 2,000 people lived on an 80-acre area during the peak of the Kellerville boom, he says. Six homes remain on the lease. "They had a school there," he says. "I could go out there and show you where all the houses were. But they're not their anymore. None of the old-timers are there. None of them."

On the lease, two engines pumped oil from the deep wells, he says. One powered 14 rigs, the other 16. They ran non-stop. And the noise? "You don't have any idea how much racket that was," he says.

McPherson worked an eight-hour night shift, ensuring the gas-powered pumps and generators ran 24 hours a day. When they shut down for some reason, he had to manually run the rig or repair it as quickly as possible, he says.

Staying awake at night and sleeping during the day was the secret to making it as an oilfield worker.

"I saw two guys die (on the lease) and that (working nights) killed them," asserts McPherson, who lost much of his hearing from an accident near his home in Kellerville. "The reason it killed them was because they couldn't get to sleep. I could. I'll always believe that's what killed them."

McPherson, who lived near the lease, was able to sleep "by blasting a radio" to drown out any noise from the pumps. "I'd relax and be able to go to sleep...and the other guys would say, 'I can't sleep at all.'"

He recalls the night one of them died. The man, whom he didn't name, was in his 60s and complained of an illness. McPherson says he offered to work the shift, but the man declined.

"At 5 a.m., he saw that he couldn't make it and went to the boss's house and fell over dead on the front step," McPherson says. "Yessum, that really happened."

The other worker, McPherson's neighbor and fishing and hunting friend, died of a heart attack one afternoon as he was helped his wife with chores around the house.

"I was able to sleep. I did it different than they did."

The only roustabout to assist on the wells, McPherson was able to get two deferments from serving in World War II, he says.

To this day, he might still be there had not an accident convinced him to retire and move to Shamrock, 15 miles east of Kellerville. It was a dynamite explosion in the early 1960s that took the lives of two buddies and nearly killed McPherson.

It was a hot day as the threesome dug a cellar for a Kellerville home, with the help of 95 caps and 80 sticks of dynamite, he explains. McPherson is convinced that the explosion was caused by the hot Texas Panhandle sun beating down on an uncovered box of caps.

"It killed the two guys standing next to me...and I lost most of the calf in my right leg and left hip and tore my left thigh," he says, pulling up his pant leg and exposing his calfless left leg and the scar from the explosion.

"That's the reason I can't hear."

Then he points to the contraption on his eyeglasses that, coupled with a volume switch, helps him hear through a bell-tone system. A hearing aid is fixed to the glasses and responds to the finely tuned adjustment of the volume control on the glasses' temple.

The explosion left a piece of metal in his calf, forcing it at times to swell twice its size, he says.

Through those years, oil prices began their rise from 40 cents to 90 cents a barrel. By the time McPherson left the business in 1965, oil had climbed to $3.20 a barrel, plenty for that time, he says.

Oil prices were important. But they weren't daily front page news, nor did they pique the interest of analysts eyeing Wall Street or the futures market. Words like hedging and paper-barrel trading were to arrive later.

Lufkin McDonald's owner develops idea for McD.L.T.

LUFKIN (AP) — Listening to Will May talk, you'd think his 45 years were spent preparing for life in the fast-food lane.

A hardscrabble youth in East Texas taught him the value of hard work. Military service provided the organizational skills needed as a McDonald's franchisee. And the competitive world of fast food gave him the drive to push an idea up McDonald's corporate chain of command.

May is the creator of the McD.L.T., the uniquely packaged lettuce-and-tomato hamburger that is McDonald's latest weapon in the burger wars.

Lest you laugh at his accomplishment, the McD.L.T is expected to bring McDonald's $300 million this year.

But May has not shared in the hefty profits. Fame has largely eluded him.

He defers questions about this with a slight smile. "McDonald's has been good to me. It's given me a life where I don't have to worry about things I used to have to worry about," he said in an office adorned with his "Bachelor of Hamburgerology" diploma.

Raised poor by sharecropper grandparents who taught "the old values," May enlisted in the Air Force after high school, serving for eight years.

"McDONALD'S REMINDS me of the dos and don'ts and the regulations of a military unit," he said.

In 1968, Staff Sgt. May mustered out to become a grillman at a McDonald's in Shreveport, La. In 1975, he opened his own franchise in Lufkin, followed three years later by a McDonald's 20 miles north in Nacogdoches. He opens a second Lufkin outlet this fall.

May's McDonald's was Lufkin's first fast-food eatery. Today in this manufacturing city of 30,000, he is surrounded by competition: Burger King, Wendy's, Long John Silver's, Grandy's, four Dairy Queens, three pizza parlors and four steak houses.

"You have to take them all seriously," he said. "There's only so many eat-out dollars out there."

William Trainer, an industry analyst for Merrill Lynch, said May was typical of the chain's 1,800 owner-operators.

"They are very driven," he said. "They are very smart, creative people dedicated to McDonald's."

Dedicated, in part, because of the annual $125,000 an average McDonald's owner clears after paying service fees, rent and percentage of sales.

"They make more money per unit than in other franchises," said F. Hardy Bowen, an analyst for Arnhold & S. Bleichroeder. "That makes them more motivated and more competitive."

BUT FOR years Southern franchisees like May felt at a competitive disadvantage because they didn't have a lettuce-and-tomato hamburger, a norm for Southern palates.

"It's traditional, I guess, in the South that when you spoke of a hamburger it would automatically have lettuce and tomato," he said.

May remembers his first New York burger. "It wasn't what I thought a hamburger was," he said.

McDonald's turned down pleas for a lettuce-and-tomato product because the hot burger stewed the tomato and wilted the lettuce.

"We tried different ways of preparing it, different ways of assembling it. But nothing met our quality standards," said McDonald's spokeswoman Lana Ehrsam.

McDonald's "spec book," the chain's telephone-book-thick bible on food preparation, says a hamburger patty must leave the grill at 350 degrees — the right temperature for meat, but too hot for tender tomato slices and lettuce leaves.

Franchisees like May persisted. "If you hear over and over again from people that you should have this or that, it tells you, 'Hey, we have a need out here,' " he said.

Similar frustrations led other McDonald's owners to create some of the chain's more successful products.

A PITTSBURGH owner-operator, competing with restaurants selling doubledecker hamburgers, developed the Big Mac, McDonald's signature sandwich. Fillet O' Fish came from a Cincinnati franchisee; Egg McMuffin came from a Santa Barbara, Calif., operator.

McDonald's research department also produces winners, most notably Chicken McNuggets. But its failures include McRib, a barbecue pork sandwich, and a beefsteak sandwich.

"The individual franchisee comes up with ideas in response to local competition," said Bowen, the analyst. "They are going to be right at least 10 times as often as the guys in the front office."

In June 1984, May joined other operators from Louisiana and Texas to travel to McDonald's Oak Brook, Ill., headquarters to talk lettuce and tomato with chairman Fred Turner.

The session was predictable. Turner repeated McDonald's concerns about the runny tomatoes and soggy lettuce.

"But he did say he would like to see a product that was uniquely McDonald's," May recalled.

It was then May had his epiphany.

"It kind of flashed into my mind — the open-faced packaging and everything," he said.

After the meeting, May demonstrated his idea to the other franchisees. He placed two square glass ashtrays side by side. One would hold the heel, the bottom bun with its burger. The other would hold the top bun, with its chilled lettuce and tomato.

IF MAY'S inspiration seems insignificant to the layman, it was genius to his peers. "They got really excited about it," he said.

May and friends developed a modified styrofoam package for the sandwich. Eager to test the product, the operators gave away the new burgers to sidestep McDonald's ban on sales of unauthorized products.

"A majority of the customers thought it was great, especially the ladies," said May. "They liked it because they could see the quality of the sandwich."

Two representatives from product development were called. They looked at the sandwiches, looked at the test results, looked at each other and returned to Oak Brook.

But, said May, "They kind of grinned and asked if they could take some of the packaging back with them."

Three months later, McDonald's was testing a modified package. A year later the McD.L.T. went national.

The product was an immediate hit. Analysts believe the sandwich now accounts for 7 percent to 10 percent of non-breakfast sales. Ultimately it is believed the McD.L.T. will add $300 million in revenue a year.

May is proud of his contribution.

"Everytime you see a commercial, there's that little voice that says you had something to do with something that is being sold throughout the United States," he said.

"The pilots pay for everything, but people must be referred to us through an agency and are primarily indigent or emergency cases," he said.

Christopher's parents were referred to Air Life Line through the Odessa Downtown Lion's Club and STEP (Support to Enduring Parents of High Risk Children).

"The average person doesn't have access to this sort of transportation; we just want to do a good service for our community," Pool said.

LOTTERY

Wilson said he would like to distribute half of the lottery's revenues for prizes, use 10 percent to run the program, let those who sell the tickets keep 3 percent and give the remaining 37 percent to the state's general revenue.

In 1983 and again in 1985, Wilson introduced lottery legislation in the House. Both times, the bills died in committee.

"Now it's not so funny anymore," he said.

City employee's burglary charge under review

From Staff Reports

A burglary charge against an ex-city employee for the theft of city tires is under review by the Midland County District Attorney's office.

Jesus Manuel Marquez, 30, was charged last week for the theft of approximately $500 worth of tires, authorities said.

The case stems from a June 22 incident where Marquez, then a city of Midland employee, allegedly took tires from a city warehouse, said Deputy City Manager Fred Poe.

Poe said the suspect, who worked in the city's fleet services, apparently left his work shift and returned later in the night to the warehouse.

Poe said Marquez allegedly used his key to get into the warehouse.

Marquez was arrested when Midland police — acting on a tip — caught him trying to sell the tires to another individual, Poe said.

Marquez was later dismissed from his job, Poe said.

The case was investigated by Midland police and the charge was filed with the Municipal Judge July 7.

The case was recently transferred to the district attorney's office.

Marquez was charged with burglary of a building, said assistant District Attorney Wayne Frost.

The charge will be reviewed by the office to determine whether the case should go to the grand jury, Frost said.

Poe said the case was second that allegedly involved city employees stealing tires.

He said some nine months ago two men from fleet services were dismissed from their jobs for a similar incident.

Big Spring residents asked to voluntarily conserve water

From Staff Reports

BIG SPRING — Big Spring officials have asked residents to voluntarily conserve water this month until it can complete repairs to the city's water pumps.

Tom Decell, director of public works, said "We don't have rationing per se. What we've done is gone to an odd-even outside watering concept."

Decell said residences that end in an even number, water on even days. Residences that end in an odd number water on odd days.

"We have adequate water for the city," said Decell. "Our resevoirs are about three quarters full, our clear water wells are full and all of the water we need is being supplied by the water district.

"The problem we have is that some old valves in the pumping system need replacing," he said.

Officials also are installing an alternate pumping system and working with the engineering firms and contractors to get the problem corrected," Decell said.

Decell said the order went into effect Tuesday after officials requested residents refrain from watering over the weekend.

"We asked citizens not to water over the weekend and it had a significant impact on the reservoir," he said.

Decell said he anticipates the repairs will take about 20 days to complete.

The order is "strictly voluntary, but if we find somebody out of compliance, we will stop by and ask them to bring themselves into compliance," Decell said.

Two VCRs, TV reportedly taken from rental store

From Staff Reports

The Midland Police Department today reported the burglary of two videocassette recorders and a console television set valued at $2,000 from a local business. According to reports, police responded to an alarm at ColorTyme TV Rental, 4366 W. Illinois. Upon arrival the front door of the building was found forced open.

In other reports, police reported the theft of two rings valued at $1,500 from thbe Ranchland Hills Country Club, Wadley at Fairgrounds Ave. Bruce Madison, who reported the theft, told police the items were taken from a locker at the club's pro shop.

The Midland Sheriff's Department reported the burglary of a body shop which apparently occurred early Monday.

Randall Manning of Manning's Pro Body Works told authorities two impact wrenches valued at $230, the front end of a 1986 Dodge Charger valued at $200, and a ⅜-inch drill valued at $40 were taken from the business at County Road 60 and CR 1130 North. Entry to the building was apparently gained through an overhead door on the west side of the building. The suspect vehicle was described as a 1976 or 1977 Chevrolet pickup truck.

Education reforms improving business climate, study says

STATE

FORT WORTH (AP) — As southern states move to improve their public schools, they find that the education reforms are helping improve the climate for business, experts say.

Education reform and economic development go hand in hand, according to studies presented Tuesday to the Southern Legislative Conference.

"As the economy shifts gears and moves into the information age, the quality of public education is becoming as important to businesses making location and investment decisions as traditional factors such as transportation, waste treatment and taxes," according to a report authored by Stuart Rosenfeld, research director for the Southern Growth Policies Board.

South Carolina Sen. Ed Garrison said that with hard times hitting his state's agriculture and textile industries, lawmakers considered educational improvements essential.

"We've got to prepare these people for high technology and to be prepared to work in an industry that requires higher education levels," he said.

Almost without exception, southern states have adopted sweeping public school reforms in recent years, with higher teacher pay and tougher courses of study the most popular, according to one new legislative conference study.

"I think it indicates that Southern states want to see substantial improvement in the product of the school system, which is the student," said Joseph P. Albright, speaker of the West Virgnia House.

The report said a total of 185 major education reform measures were enacted in the 15 states from 1980 to 1986.

Two measures were enacted by 14 of the 15 Southern Legislative Conference member states — teacher salary hikes and more stringent curriculum requirements, said C. Gilmore Dutton of the Kentucky Legislative Research Commission, who compiled the report.

Dutton said two other improvements also proved very popular, being enacted by 12 states. Those were tests which measure the progress being made by students and actions to reduce the size of classes.

Other much-favored reforms included requirements that teachers pass competency tests, career ladder bonus systems for teachers and more stringent high school graduation requirements.

Every state in the organization enacted at least seven of 20 major reforms, Dutton said.

Dutton said the large number and scope of the reforms, and the additional tax money to pay for them, indicates the South is moving quickly to dispel the notion that its schools lag behind those elsewhere in the country. "Probably a significant part of the money was a catch-up process," he said. "But the variety of reform measures were reflective of the southern states doing something new and not necessarily catching up to what other states have been doing," he said. Karen Palmer, a researcher for the legislative conference who looked at initatives the states are taking to improve their economies, said education reform is a key in those efforts.

She said the states also are concentrating on finding new overseas markets for their goods, nourishing expansion of businesses already located in each state and making more efforts to link research institutions and private enterprise.

Sen. T.W. Edwards of South Carolina, chairman of the conference's committee on economic development, said the South also needs to become aggressive in diversifying its economy. "We just cannot be complacement and sit back any longer," Edwards said.

"We've got to get aggressive. I'll tell you, the other people out there are going after it," he said. "We've got to diversify. We've got to look at other areas."

Bush: Deregulating oil industry would help Texas economy

Bush

BEAUMONT (AP) — Vice President George Bush, speaking in the shadow of an old boarded-up building that had many broken windows, says one way to spread the nation's prosperity to Southeast Texas is to deregulate the depressed oil industry.

"We know people are hurting in this Southeast Texas area," Bush said Tuesday in the birthplace of Texas' oil industry. "We want to spread the recovery around."

Beaumont is home of Spindletop, which in 1901 became the first of the great Texas oil well gushers.

Now, however, the Southeast Texas area is suffering double-digit employment because of the decline in the price of oil and the subsequent decrease in drilling.

Bush, who noted that 10 million jobs have been created during the Reagan administration, said the way to cure the energy business' ills was to get the government off its back.

"That means repealing once and for all the windfall profits tax," he said. "That means deregulating — immediately — natural gas. That means getting rid of the needless Fuel Use Act. And that means taking the steps today so that our stripper wells won't be capped forever and lost forever."

Bush, in a campaign appearance for 9th District Congressional candidate Lisa DuPerier, touted the Reagan administration for lowering interest rates, bolstering the nation's armed forces, restoring pride in America and creating jobs.

He called Republicans in Texas the party of hope, saying the GOP had a good opportunity to capture the governor's race, plus statewide and legislative seats.

"The Republican Party is growing because it shares something very basic with the people of Texas: values," Bush said. "Values like opportunity and hard work. Values like family and community. And yes, values like pride in the United States of America."

Ms. DuPerier, 30, is a big underdog, however, in seeking the seat held by veteran Democratic Rep. Jack Brooks.

"I realize the odds are tough sometimes when you run under our banner," Bush said.

Ms. DuPerier, in her remarks preceding Bush, referred to the vice president's earlier work with Zapata, a Houston-based energy firm that does a great deal of its work offshore.

"I'm sure he wishes more (rigs) were in use now," she said.

About 400 people gathered outdoors with temperatures in the mid 90s to hear Bush speak in a grassy outdoor area in the Beaumont City Hall complex. Bush, who quickly shed his coat and delivered his remarks wearing a short-sleeve shirt, said he didn't mind the heat.

"I've got to warm up my arm," he said, explaining that he was going to throw out the ceremonial first pitch in Tuesday night's baseball All-Star Game in Houston, about 90 miles to the west.

Man charged with murder in stepbrother's death

DEKALB (AP) — A 21-year-old De Kalb man has been charged with murder in connection with the death of his 6-year-old stepbrother, who was killed by a rifle bullet that went through a wall and struck him as he slept.

Justice of the Peace John Carson set bond at $50,000 for Jeffrey Wayne Hornbuckle, who was taken to the Bi-State Justice Building Jail in Texarkana.

Jacob Samuel Hudson was killed about 2 a.m. Tuesday by a single gunshot wound to the head, said Raymond Calhoun, chief deputy of the Bowie County sheriff's office.

Family members said that after a quarrel, Hornbuckle was ordered off the residence by his stepfather and was denied use of a late-model pickup truck. Hornbuckle returned to the residence with a 30-30 rifle early Tuesday and fired three shots, authorities were told.

Calhoun said one shot pierced the pickup and two others entered the residence. One shot went through a window, and another went through a wall and struck Hornbuckle's stepbrother, Calhoun said.

Hornbuckle was arrested near the residence a short time after the shooting, officials said.

Elderly pair cancels wedding since they're having fun dating

DALLAS (AP) — A 78-year-old woman and an 81-year-old man say they decided love and marriage don't necessarily mix and canceled their wedding plans because they were having too much fun dating.

The two, known as "Lovey" and "Dovey" at their nursing home, called off their wedding Sunday, the day before it was to have taken place.

Betty Berry and Warren Gilson had lined up a preacher and the chilled champagne, flowers, food and limousine were ordered. The wedding was set for Monday and was the talk of the moment at the north Dallas nursing home.

But on Sunday night the couple decided they were having plenty of fun dating and neither wanted to risk being widowed again.

"I finally said, 'Warren do we really want to do this?' " Ms. Berry said. "He said, 'Whatever you like.' "

"I think maybe all along we thought the quickest way to kill any older relationship is to marry," she said.

"He was already getting tired of my saying, 'Warren, do this. Warren, do that.' "

The two had been engaged for a month and friends credited their yearlong romance with putting more zest into the couple's lives. Friends said Ms. Berry was able to get along without a walker that she had used for a year.

"There definitely was more of a spring in his (Gilson's) step," said Kathleen Bolin, accommodations manager at the Retirement Inn.

Betty Barry and Warren Gilson called off their wedding the day before it was scheduled because they decided they were having too much fun dating and neither wanted to risk being widowed again.

When the couple decided to marry several weeks ago, they asked for and received the approval of their children and grandchildren from previous marriages.

But even their children said they felt some relief after the wedding was called off.

Evolution controversy erupts again

AUSTIN (AP) — The State Textbook Committee has been told its decision on evolution in school science books could affect a controversy that exists throughout the nation.

The long-time controversy over how much to tell Texas public school students about evolution erupted again Tuesday before the 15-member committee that is selecting $114 million in textbooks for 1987.

A spokesman for People for the American Way reminded the committee that the U.S. Supreme Court will consider next term arguments against a court ruling that Louisiana's creationism law was unconstitutional.

"Whether you know it or not, what you do here could influence that case," said Mike Hudson, Texas director of the nonpartisan organization to uphold constitutional guarantees. "Should you be co-opted by this pseudoscience and recommend the books be rewritten, your action will surely be cited as support for the existence of 'creation science' before the court."

"We can no longer hold Texas science education hostage to know-nothings and religious zealots," Dr. Steven D. Schafersman, president of the Texas Council for Science Education, told the committee.

"Fundamentalist pressure on teachers, school administrators and boards of education for the past 20 years have resulted in the topic being compromised in classrooms throughout the country, especially in the South," he said.

Schafersman, a Houston college professor, said the only way to break the cycle "starts with textbook selection committees. I ask you to ignore creationist pressure and adopt only those books that treat the topic of evolution in a responsible and scientifically accurate fashion and not adopt books that omit or distort the topic."

But Mel Gabler, a Longview textbook consultant who has been a critic of evolution passages, said that "scientific evidence against evolution is consistently censored."

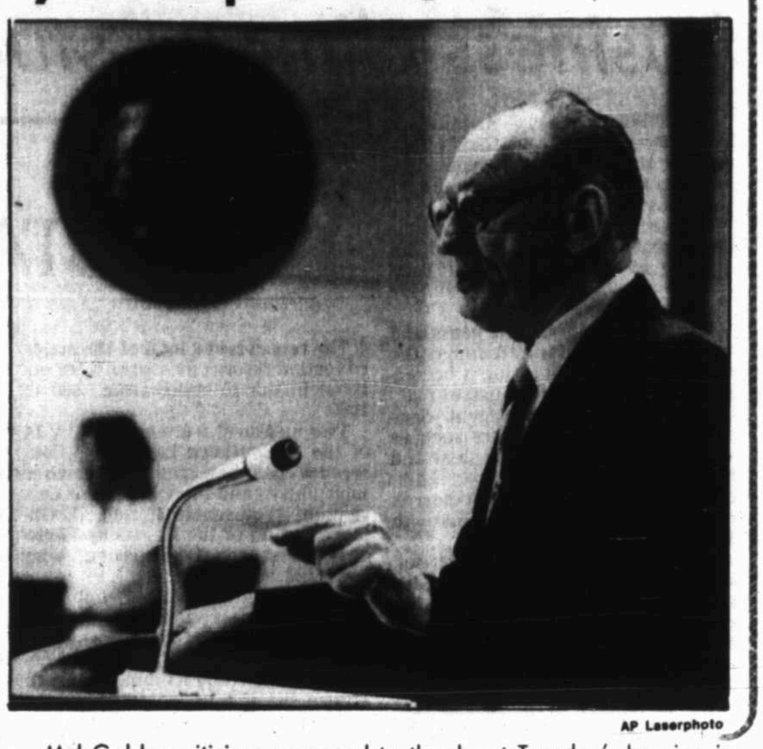

"We are not asking that creation-science be taught," Gabler said. "We merely ask that textbooks be intellectually honest and observe the scientific practice of providing both... the 'for' and 'against' whenever evolutionary arguments are presented."

The committee completes three days of hearings today on a list of textbooks proposed for use in Texas schools the next six years.

The final selections will be made Nov. 8 by the State Board of Education.

Many publishers use the Texas hearings as a guide in offering textbooks to other states.

Hudson said that Texas "has been plagued by this anti-science movement" since 1974 when the Board of Education adopted the so-called "anti-evolution textbook rule."

Group has 200,000 names on anti-parole petition

HAWKINS (AP) — A two-day manhunt to capture escaped murder suspect Jerry Walter McFadden has also snared 20,000 signatures on a petition to keep convicted felons behind bars longer.

We The People, a group started after the slayings of three Hawkins residents, secured the signatures in two weeks, said organizer Janie Wilson.

The anti-parole drive had just 3,000 signatures when McFadden, who calls himself "Animal," broke out of the Upshur County Jail July 9, Mrs. Wilson said.

McFadden, who has been convicted three times of sex offenses, most recently was paroled July 17, 1985, after serving five years of a 15-year prison term for an aggravated sexual abuse conviction.

He is now charged with murder in the death of one of three Hawkins youths who vanished during a weekend lake outing in early May. Authorities said the victim, Suzanne Harrison, 18, had been sexually assaulted, beaten and strangled.

"(The escape) brought the issue to the forefront again," Mrs. Wilson said. "We realize that McFadden is only a suspect and was not convicted. But these were random murders that made us recognize our own vulnerability."

McFadden, 38, took Upshur County Deputy Rosalie Williams hostage, but she managed to escape unharmed Thursday night. He surrendered to law officers in Big Sandy on Friday night.

The prisoner and his hostage walked by a copy of the anti-crime group's petition on a desk in the Upshur County Courthouse the night of the escape.

The petition calls for people convicted of violent crimes to be denied parole and objects to mandatory release laws in Texas, Mrs. Wilson said.

Testimony may show Kyle planned murder

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A prosecutor said witnesses in the retrial of Henry Harrison "Ricky" Kyle Jr. will testify that the 23-year-old Texan planned the murder of his millionaire father for several months before carrying out the crime on July 22, 1983.

Kyle, who remains free on $100,000 bond, faces 27 years to life in prison if convicted of first-degree murder in the slaying of Harrison Kyle Sr., who was 60. A first trial ended in April with jurors deadlocked 10-2 for conviction.

The defense was to present its opening arguments in Superior Court Judge Robert T. Altman's courtroom this morning, followed by the beginning of testimony, which attorneys estimate will take three to four months.

The retrial opened Tuesday with the prosecution saying that Kyle killed his father because he was worth more dead than alive to the defendant. The shooting occurred at the elder Kyle's estate in Bel-Air, Calif.

The elder Kyle had moved from Dallas to Los Angeles several months before the shooting when he bought Four Star International, a Los Angeles television production company.

"This was a deliberate killing in which the basic human emotions of greed and hatred on the part of the defendant led to the killing of Harrison Kyle Sr.," Deputy District Attorney Stan Weisberg said.

During the first trial, Kyle admitted shooting his father, but claimed he did so in self-defense as the two searched for prowlers around the house in pre-dawn darkness.

He also said his father had beat him and for years had threatened to disinherit him from a $100 million empire that included restaurants, apartments, dairy farms, coal mines, a bank and a television studio.

Police found a copy of Kyle's will in his briefcase the night he was killed, which left half his estate to Ricky Kyle and half to his brother, Scott, one year younger, Weisberg told jurors.

Weisberg told jurors that several days before Kyle's death, Ricky Kyle was overheard telling his girlfriend over the phone, "Dad's doing so well that if we liquidate his holdings we'll have $40 million to $50 million."

" 'We'll be able to start Kyle Brothers, Inc. I don't want to just be rich, I want to be famous,' " Weisberg quoted Ricky Kyle as saying to his girlfriend, Kelly, whom he later married.

Weisberg told jurors the senior Kyle was "a tough and rigid man... (whose) love for his two sons was returned to him as greed and hatred on their part."

Farm workers electrocuted when auger hits power line

ROSEBUD (AP) — Three men were killed when a piece of farm equipment they were moving struck a 72,000-volt power line, authorities said.

Keith Shook of Marlin and Jesus Chavez and Martin Vega, both of Rosebud, were pronounced dead at the scene about 8:30 a.m. Tuesday by Justice of the Peace E.R. Hardy. Hardy said the men died of electrical shock.

A fourth man, Filimon Ponce, was taken to Rosebud Community Hospital where he was listed in stable condition Tuesday night.

The four men were moving a grain auger from one bin to another, on a farm near Rosebud, when the upper end of the auger, a tall device for moving grain from the ground to storage bins, struck the utility, according to the Falls County sheriff's department.

Ponce apparently did not have his hands on the auger at the time, but was close enough to be burned, officials said.

Statements to be allowed

ANAHUAC (AP) — A judge Tuesday ruled oral and written statements from a man admitting he shot and killed a High Island woman last October are admissible in his capital murder trial.

District Judge Carroll Wilborn ruled Johnny James, of Winnie, understood and voluntarily waived his constitutional rights to remain silent or consult a lawyer before making the statements to detectives investigating the Oct. 22, 1985, slaying of Barbara Harrington Mayfield, 47.

Prosecutors are expected to use the statements as the foundation of their case against the 31-year-old, who is charged with killing Ms. Mayfield after kidnapping her from a lounge in High Island. He also is charged with robbing, kidnapping and shooting Agnes Marie Harmon, a 23-year-old Winnie convenience store clerk, in connection with the slaying of Ms. Mayfield.

James testified that Chambers County lawmen had used intimidation and prevented him from consulting a lawyer to force him to make the statements, but testimony showed that James signed documents indicating he understood and voluntarily waived his rights to make his confessions.

Jury reaches quick verdict

WICHITA FALLS (AP) — A state district judge said the jury came back so fast with a verdict in a burglary case that he didn't even get to sit down.

The panel in 78th District Court Judge Arthur Tipps' courtroom deliberated for only three minutes, 50 seconds on Tuesday before deciding on a guilty plea for Tony Lynn Moore.

"The fastest I've ever heard of is six minutes in Houston," Tipps said. "I've had them in six minutes, but nothing like this. I didn't even get to sit down."

According to court records, police arrested Moore Nov. 8 as he exited a liquor store shortly after midnight. Moore testified Tuesday that property found in his pockets by officers during his arrest belonged to the store owner.

PTA against budget cuts

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas PTA directors adopted a resolution Tuesday against legislative cuts in funds for public education.

"This is no time for educational reform to stop," said PTA President Mary Tippin of El Paso. "This is not the time to retreat. We have begun to move forward in a very positive way, and we must not fail our children."
