Teen's murder trial

BATH, N.Y. — The defense attorney for a 14-year-old boy standing trial for the murder of a 4-year-old told a Steuben County jury Monday that the defendant was in an uncontrollable rage when he choked and bludgeoned the child. The baby-faced teen-ager, Eric Smith, his aviator glasses perched on a freckled nose, listened without expression as the attorney, Kevin Bradley, said in his opening remarks that an unprovoked urge to hurt the little boy had quickly escalated into a vicious series of death-dealing blows./5A

Top Treasury lawyer contradicts bosses on Whitewater, draws stinging rebukes

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Breaking months of silence, the Treasury Department's top lawyer on Monday contradicted elements of her bosses' official story on Whitewater and then drew stinging rebukes from Democrats and Republicans alike for her own conduct.

Focusing on a key discrepancy, Treasury general counsel Jean Hanson testified she revealed information about a savings and loan investigation involving President Clinton to the White House last September at the instruction of Deputy Treasury Secretary Roger Altman.

Altman, whose veracity has been challenged by Republicans, has said he does not recall giving Hanson such an instruction and does not believe he did so.

In testimony before the Senate Banking Committee, Hanson also disputed other elements of the Whitewater affair that Altman and Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen have offered.

U.S. deploys clinic guards as deterrents

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Federal marshals were stationed Monday outside dozens of abortion clinics around the nation and guarded some abortion doctors in an effort to head off further violence by anti-abortion protesters.

"We're trying to take all prudent steps, using all the federal tools, including the clinic access legislation, to appropriately address an issue of deep concern to this nation," Attorney General Janet Reno said.

Violence at clinics "has now occurred twice in one city," Reno told reporters before meeting law enforcement executives. "It is a problem throughout the nation."

She was referring to the killing in Pensacola, Fla., of Dr. David Gunn as he arrived to work at an abortion clinic in March 1993 and the killing there last Friday of Dr. John B. Britton and his escort, James H. Barrett, as they arrived at another abortion clinic.

Defenders of abortion rights, including two dozen who picketed the Justice Department, renewed pressure Monday for an aggressive federal investigation of links between those three killings and other clinic worker shootings they believe are the work of a conspiracy.

They want Reno to use the Freedom of Access to Clinic Entrances Act of 1994, which makes it a crime to obstruct, intentionally injure or intimidate anyone trying to obtain an abortion. In death cases, it carries a top penalty of life in prison.

'We're trying to take all prudent steps, using all the federal tools, including the clinic-access legislation, to appropriately address an issue of deep concern to this nation.'

— Attorney General Janet Reno,

Anti-abortion activist Randall Terry, whose "Impeach Clinton" bus pulled up at the Justice Department during the abortion rights picketing, condemned the clinic murder but called it "ludicrous to have marshals out because of two or three murders when there are hundreds of thousands of crack houses."

"Their call for a full federal investigation ... is ... designed to terrorize average Americans in the pro-life movement," Terry said.

Reno refused to say how many clinics and marshals are involved, but a federal law enforcement source, who de-

Mitchell irons out health-reform plan details, lashes into critics

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell labored over the details of his eagerly awaited health reform plan Monday and said "those who don't want change" had waged an expensive effort to torpedo the top item on President Clinton's agenda.

After meeting with Clinton, Mitchell said the legislation he will unveil today would eventually provide "insurance for all Americans." He predicted the Democratic-controlled Congress will approve a health reform bill this year, despite vast differences between his measure and the one outlined Friday by House Democratic leaders.

Clinton, too, attacked those who attack his program. Speaking in Jersey City, N.J., with the Statue of Liberty as a backdrop, the president said: "Don't let the fear mongers, don't let the dividers, don't let the people who dis-

Housing sales patterns recover from record-low-rates gyrations

Midland housing sales during the traditionally busy summer selling season are not as robust as a year ago.

But, Midland remains "a strong housing market," said Pat Orseth, president of the Midland Association of Realtors.

She said activity has been picking up during the aummer season — traditionally the busiest as families try to locate between school terms.

She pointed out that the overall inventory of houses on the market remains low, although it is up from the historic low seen earlier this year, when buyers took advantage of interest rates that had fallen to near 30-year lows.

She said houses are selling faster and for higher prices this year.

In June, there were a total of 708 houses listed with the associa-

Woodstock woes: Promoter pulls plug on 1 of two 25th-anniversary concerts

By David Bauder

Associated Press

ALBANY, N.Y. — The Woodstock Nation apparently has little interest in reclaiming its youth — at least the part about sitting in a field for a weekend in upstate New York. Generation X isn't crazy about the idea either.

The promoter of a nostalgia show planned for the same Bethel, N.Y., farm where the historic Woodstock rock concert took place 25 years ago pulled the plug Monday, forced to face the reality that almost no one was buying the $94.69 tickets.

"We quickly determined that people are just not interested in this event," said promoter Harry Rhulen of Shea Entertainment Inc. "If that was the case, why should we bother to put it on?"

'I'm not surprised that the concept of doing a nostalgia festival geared to 40- to 50-year-olds didn't work. But it's sad.'

Clouds to mess with the sun

Staff Report

Today's forecast calls for mostly cloudy skies, becoming partly cloudy by afternoon, with a high in the lower 90s and southeast winds at 10-20 mph. Tonight should be mostly cloudy with a high around 70, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Wednesday should be mostly cloudy, becoming partly cloudy by afternoon, with a high in the lower 90s.

After an overnight low of 69, Monday's high reached 93, compared to the record high for that date of 105 set in 1944. The record low was 61 set in 1973.

STATE

Showers and thunderstorms brought relief from the heat in parts of West Texas and coastal areas Monday.

Rain roamed over parts of the Panhandle and drifted onshore with the Gulf Coast sea breeze during the afternoon. Brownsville reported 0.65 inch of rain, while Victoria had 0.12 inch.

However, partly to mostly sunny skies prevailed elsewhere.

South winds from 10 to 15 mph kept temperatures in the 80s and 90s elsewhere.

Afternoon temperatures ranged from 100 in El Paso to 84 in Marfa.

Skies over North Texas today are expected to be partly cloudy with a slight chance of thunderstorms over East Texas and nighttime thunderstorms near the Red River. Highs will range from 89 to 96. Lows will be between 69 and 74.

South Texas should see scattered afternoon and evening showers and thunderstorms moving inland again. Highs will range from the 80s along the coast to the 90s inland. Lows will be in the 70s.

In West Texas, partly to mostly cloudy should prevail through tonight. The Panhandle and far west could see a chance of showers and thunderstorms through tonight.

West Texas Highs will range from the 80s in the north to near 100 in the Big Bend valleys. Lows will be in the 60s and 70s, except for a few 50s in the mountains.

NATION

Thunderstorms brought heavy rain to parts of the Midwest and South on Monday, and more than 2 inches fell in parts of Texas, Georgia and Nebraska.

Thunderstorms developed along a nearly stationary front extending from the eastern slopes of the Rockies across the central Plains to parts of the Great Lakes.

The storms produced enough cloud cover to keep temperatures mostly in the 80s across much of the area.

In the South, showers and thunderstorms were generated in hot, humid air hanging over the region.

During the six hours ending at 1 p.m. CDT, 1.5 inches fell at Greensboro, N.C.; and 1.04 inches of rain fell at Belton, Mo., south of Kansas City, and .51 inches fell in Miami, the National Weather Service said.

In the 24 hours up to 7 a.m. CDT, Athens, Ga., got 2.55 inches of rain while 2.10 inches fell at Victoria, Texas; Atlanta got 2.05 inches; 2.02 inches fell at Norfolk, Neb.; 1.56 inches fell at Rochester, Minn.; 1.02 inches fell at Omaha, Neb.; and 1.01 inches fell at Wausau, Wis.

Early Monday, about one inch of rain fell in 30 minutes at Des Moines, Iowa, the weather service said.

During the night, 1.65 inches of rain fell in less than 30 minutes at Richmond, Va., and Castle Creek, N.Y., got 1.25 inches in less than an hour, the weather service said.

High pressure was anchored across much of the West but enough moisture was working its way into the region through the desert Southwest to fuel scattered thunderstorms.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

tion, down 6 percent from June 1993, when there were 752 listed.

The average listing price is $104,545, up from last year's average of $94,442.

Houses are listed an average of 107 days, down 8.5 percent from 117 last year.

In June, Realtors sold 107 new and existing homes, down 46 percent from the 198 sold a year ago.

For the first six months of 1994, there have been 661 homes sold, down 9 percent from the 725 sold in the first half of 1993.

The average sale price in June was $84,108, down 10 percent from $93,605 in June 1993.

Year-to-date, however, the average sale price is $83,872, up 4 percent from $80,670 for the first half of 1993.

Of the houses sold, nine were new homes, which is 53 percent fewer than the 19 sold in June 1993.

Year-to-date, 35 new homes have been sold, down 34 percent from the 53 sold last year.

The average sale price in June was $122,537, down 8 percent from $133,477 a year ago.

For the first six months of 1994, however, the average sale price was $151,711, up 10 percent from an average of $137,999 for the first half of 1993.

There were 98 existing homes sold in June, down 43 percent from 179 in June 1993.

Year-to-date, 626 existing homes have been sold, down nearly 7 percent from 671 last year.

The average sale price for an existing home in June was $80,579, down 9.5 percent from $88,948 in June last year.

Year-to-date, the average sale price is $80,079, up 5 percent from $76,142 for the same period last year.

Ms. Orseth attributed the decline in sales to higher interest rates, although the effect likely won't be measured until the slower winter and end-of-year season.

"We experienced such low rates at the end of 1993. . . . Since then they've increased some and that has had some impact on the market."

She noted that the low interest rates last year allowed first-time buyers to enter the housing market. Owners of existing homes were able to move up to bigger, more expensive homes.

Another factor that could have dampen housing sales — layoffs announced by Exxon, Texaco, Amoco and Arco — have not affected sales, according to local Realtors.

WOES: Time we got to Woodstock — they canceled who bought tickets would receive refunds. A crowd of 50,000 had been hoped for, and Rhulen, a local insurance executive, said he expects to lose $2 million.

Meanwhile, promoters of the larger Woodstock '94 concert 60 miles away in Saugerties still had about 100,000 unsold tickets on Monday, the day sales were supposed to end. They planned to extend sales until at least Aug. 11 and relax parking rules to try to attract a crowd closer to the 250,000 they had hoped for.

The Saugerties show is scheduled for the weekend of Aug. 13-14, the same dates as the now-defunct Bethel show.

The first Woodstock festival in 1969 became famous in part because tens of thousands showed up unexpectedly, swarmed the gates and got in free.

But that sort of thing doesn't appeal to everyone born after Woodstock.

"Everything I heard about it, it has just scared me away from it," said Daniel Walsh, a 24-year-old Albany, N.Y., resident who performs in a heavy metal rock band.

Walsh said the ticket prices, restrictions on what fans can bring to the concert and a lineup of performers he considers lackluster are keeping him and his friends away.

The show, organized by the original Woodstock promoters and PolyGram Diversified Entertainment, is going with a lineup designed to attract both young and old. It includes: Bob Dylan, Spin Doctors, Aerosmith, the Allman Brothers and Red Hot Chili Peppers.

Tickets will no longer be sold only in blocks of four with one parking pass, said John Scher of PolyGram. Fans may now buy two tickets at $135 apiece and get one parking pass.

The Bethel show was to have brought back many of the original Woodstock performers, including Melanie, Sha Na Na, Canned Heat, Iron Butterfly and Richie Havens.

It had been troubled from the start, with Rhulen bailing out original promoter Sid Bernstein when it became apparent Bernstein didn't have the money to pull it off.

With the cancellation, county officials now fear a repeat of what has become a tradition is recent years — thousands of fans showing up for a Woodstock commemoration with no organized event. An emergency meeting of the Sullivan County Board of Supervisors will be held Wednesday.

"I just don't know what we're going to do," said Linda Green, county administrator.

DEPLOY: U.S. stations marshals by clinics

clined to be identified by name, put the number of protected sites in the dozens.

Over the weekend, pairs of deputy U.S. marshals began sitting in marked vehicles outside the clinics. They were spotted at two Pensacola clinics; a Melbourne, Fla., clinic involved in a Supreme Court decision limiting anti-abortion picketing; the Fargo, N.D., clinic that performs the only abortions in the state; a clinic in Falls Church, Va.; and a clinic in Wichita, Kan., site of massive protests in 1991 and the wounding of a doctor last year.

Eleanor Smeal, president of the Feminist Majority Foundation, an Arlington, Va., group that supplied the government with a list of threats, said, "In one case, marshals are traveling with a threatened doctor, and some other clinic staff workers are being protected outside the clinics."

Justice Department spokesman Carl Stern said, "Marshals were sent to those clinics subject to violence in the past or which we have reason to believe might be subject to attack," including clinics that have been threatened. "We expect the presence of federal marshals will deter violence."

Federal officials also intensified and reorganized work on a year-old investigation, begun after Gunn's killing, to determine whether there are links between anti-abortion violence in various cities that might violate civil rights laws or the Racketeer-Influenced Corrupt Organizations Act, a law aimed at mobsters but given wider use in recent years.

The latest Pensacola shooting was wrapped into that effort. Paul J. Hill, 40, a former minister and anti-abortion activist, has been arrested by local police in that case.

A task force including the FBI, the Marshals Service, the Treasury's Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, and Justice's criminal and civil rights divisions met Monday afternoon to review the protective steps, Stern said.

A federal law enforcement official said Reno established the task force Saturday because she was dissatisfied with the progress of the year-old investigation and wanted it to have day-to-day leadership in Washington. Assistant Attorney General Jo Ann Harris of the criminal division heads it.

In Tallahassee, Florida Gov. Lawton Chiles said a computer seized from Hill's home may help investigators track down any others who may have been involved. The FBI is analyzing the computer, said Florida Department of Law Enforcement spokesman John Joyce.

Colleen Dermody of Smeal's foundation said her group and three others gave the Justice Department on Friday and Saturday a list of 30 clinics and 20 doctors or clinic directors in 16 cities who had received "the most specific, strongest threats." Planned Parenthood, the National Abortion Federation and National Women's Health Organization helped compile the list.

Smeal said her foundation was relaying new "trouble spots" as they heard of new threats.

Stern confirmed that list was "one source of our information." He said the criminal division also has been compiling information on attacks on clinics for more than a year.

Reps. Charles E. Schumer, D-N.Y., and Nita Lowey, D-N.Y., asked Reno to use the clinic access law in Pensacola. But a federal law enforcement official said Justice lawyers want Hill to be prosecuted under Florida laws that carry the death penalty "because that's a better hammer to get him to discuss any help he may have had."

DETAILS: Mitchell to unveil reform plan today

(From 1A)

seminate false information frighten the United States Congress into walking away from the opportunity of a lifetime."

The Republicans followed with their own appeal to patriotism. During a televised forum on health care organized by the Republican National Committee, committee Chairman Haley Barbour dubbed the health plan of Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole — which features no employer mandate — "the American option."

In one segment of the show Monday night, Herman Cain, CEO of Godfather's Pizza, attacked Mitchell's bill in advance, saying of the triggered approach to mandates, "It doesn't matter whether you kill me now or whether you phase in death over a period of time."

Despite indications that the timetable in the House may be slipping slightly, votes are expected in both houses of Congress over the next two to three weeks on health reform, climaxing one of the most fiercely fought battles in recent memory. For his part, Clinton scheduled a Wednesday night prime time news conference at which he is expected to appeal for support.

Mitchell has been working for weeks to craft legislation that can satisfy Clinton's demand for universal coverage and still win majority support in the Senate. The task is made more complicated by strong opposition to Clinton's proposal, contained in the House measure, to require businesses to pay 80 percent of the cost of insuring workers and families.

Mitchell's bill is expected to rely on insurance reforms and subsidies for low-income pregnant women, children, people between jobs, small businesses and perhaps others in an attempt to spread coverage. He's expected to hold mandatory employer requirements in reserve until 2001, and employ them only if coverage hasn't reached 95 percent of the population.

Even then, businesses and employees would be called on to split the cost of insurance 50-50, and small businesses would be exempt. States where 95 percent coverage had been reached would be exempt.

In a CNN interview Monday night, Mitchell said his plan relies heavily on savings from Medicare and Medicaid and tobacco tax increases to pay the costs. Senate sources said he also is considering a tax on insurance plans that are rising rapidly in cost.

REBUKES: Lawyer contradicts bosses' story

(From 1A)

She then drew a barrage of bipartisan criticism — both for her reasons for contacting the White House about the Resolution Trust Corp. probe and her failure to quickly correct Altman's prior Senate testimony that she suspected was wrong.

"I think that is a tortured answer," Democratic Sen Barbara Boxer of California snapped, when Hanson tried to explain why it took so long to correct the testimony. The committee chairman, Donald Riegle, offered a similar rebuke.

His voice rising in anger, Sen. Alfonse D'Amato, R-N.Y., said Hanson's explanation for how much information about the probe was passed to presidential aides "is so distorted it is not worthy of belief."

In testimony that stretched to near midnight, Hanson repeatedly defended her decisions and her honor.

"I really resent your statements about my professionalism," Hanson said in response to a line of questioning by Republican Chris Bond.

She said she had hoped to give a "careful, thoughtful" review of the facts before correcting the testimony but then was taken over by other developments. As for contacting the White House, she said in the end she believes it was "entirely appropriate" because no one ever used the information to interfere in the probe.

The exchanges came as Whitewater hearings entered a second week, with members of both parties exposing through questions the politically charged origins of the investigation.

"The RTC has been a political football since day one," William Roelle, a 25-year government regulators, told lawmakers as he described efforts by both the Bush and Clinton White Houses to learn about the investigation.

Roelle testified he first provided information to Hanson about the probe on Sept. 27, 1993 with a plea that it go no further. But within three days, the Clinton White House had obtained the confidential information.

"I believe it would have been better if no one had known about these criminal referrals," Roelle said.

Roelle also disclosed that the Bush administration had sought information about the RTC investigation six weeks before the 1992 election.

He said he was disturbed to find out that then-White House Counsel C. Boyden Gray had been asking then-RTC Chairman Albert Casey about the Madison case and the Clinton connection in September 1992.

When Casey, a Bush appointee, asked what he could tell Gray, Roelle said he told Casey that "it would be inappropriate to discuss it with the White House."

"Mr. Casey said 'OK, I'll tell them that,'" Roelle said.

Gray told AP on Monday "I have no recollection of it at all. It's a puzzle."

Clinton officials — through 40 contacts with regulators — ultimately were more successful at getting information about the probe of Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan.

Roelle and other RTC officials asserted that too much confidential information reached political appointees.

"It was supposed to be confidential ... and the RTC breached that responsibility," said John Ryan, acting head of the agency.

Madison, which failed in 1989 at a cost to taxpayers of at least $47 million, was owned by the Clintons' Whitewater business partner, James McDougal. Criminal referrals — recommendations for possible prosecution — written by RTC investigators allege President and Mrs. Clinton may have benefited from possible wrongdoing at the S&L.

In an unrelated development, The Washington Post reported in Tuesday editions that when Whitewater-related documents were removed from deputy White House counsel's office Vince Foster's office immediately after his death last year, they were taken by Mrs. Clinton's chief of staff to the first family's personal residence.

The Post said the documents were transferred to the Clintons' private lawyer five days later. It quoted their lawyer, David Kendall, as saying neither the president nor Mrs. Clinton reviewed the documents.

Hanson was sitting behind Altman in February when he gave the Senate inaccurate information about the number and content of White House-Treasury contacts over Whitewater.

103D CONGRESS 2D SESSION

S. 1822

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

February 3 (legislative day, January 25), 1994

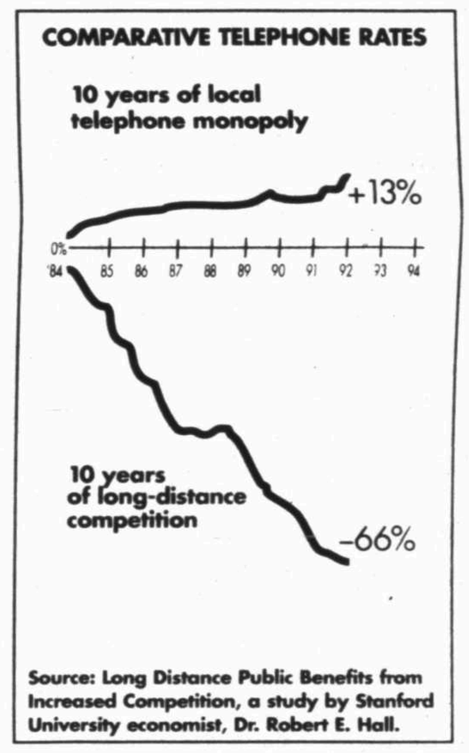

Mr. Hollings (for himself, Mr. Danforth, Mr. Inouye, Mr. Stevens, Mr. Exon, Mr. Pressler, Mr. Rockefeller, Mr. Burns, Mr. Robb, Mr. Gorton, Mr. Dorgan, Mr. Grassley, and Mr. Kerry) introduced the following bill; which was read twice and referred to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and

Here's one phone bill you'll really like!

Competition in the long distance market has more than 500 companies vying for your business and offering consumers unprecedented levels of choice, service and savings. In fact, long distance rates have dropped 66% in the last ten years – all thanks to competition.

But there is NO competition in local telephone service. The regional Bell Phone companies are still monopolies, consumers have no choice, and local rates have gone up!

A bill now before the U.S. Senate, S. 1822, would make sure the Bells face real local telephone competition. Consumers would get the kind of savings and choices in local telephone service they now have in long distance. Local competition will bring new jobs and economic growth for our country.

Visitors light candles in front of wooden crosses for young victims who died during the 1944 Warsaw uprising.

■ Poland marks Warsaw Uprising's 50th

WARSAW, Poland — A nation free for only five years marked the 50th anniversary Monday of the Warsaw Uprising, a valiant struggle against the Nazis that might have succeeded had Stalin not held back the advancing Red Army.

Sirens sounded across the city at 5 p.m., the hour the order to attack came down on Aug. 1, 1944. Veterans all across the city stood silent, many from the very spots where they had fought and watched friends die.

With German President Roman Herzog at his side, President Lech Walesa said Germany, Russia and Poland must strive to overcome their bitter past.

"History has bound us. We have to overcome our past. We have to learn lessons from history," he said before lunch with dignitaries including Vice President Al Gore and Prime Minister John Major of Britain.

■ Widow of Dylan Thomas dies at 81

LONDON — Caitlin Thomas, a boozing, brawling partner in marriage to the Welsh poet Dylan Thomas, has died at age 81.

Thomas

She once described their lives together as "raw, red bleeding meat," a torment of mutual infidelity climaxed by her violent tantrum at the bedside of the dying poet.

Caitlin Thomas died Sunday in Catania, Italy, said her daughter, Aeronwy Thomas-Ellis. The cause of her death was not announced.

"I was surprised when I heard she wanted to be buried with my father. I felt that she had been in Italy so long that she would want to stay there," Mrs. Thomas-Ellis said. Thomas is buried in Laugharne, Wales.

The former Caitlin MacNamara, free-spirited daughter of a bohemian family, married Thomas in 1937. They had three children — Llewelyn, Aeronwy and Colm, all of whom survive.

"Ours was not a love story proper. It was more of a drink story. Predominantly a drink story because without the first-aid of drink it could never have got on to its rocking feet," she wrote in a memoir published in 1982.

■ Hoodlums riot; oil companies feel pinch

LAGOS, Nigeria — Police battled rioters for several hours after thugs looted shops and chased officers with machetes Monday, the start of the fifth week of an oil strike aimed at toppling the military government.

Police initially fled from the rampage in the main business district, but returned with tear gas to take on the rioters. There were no figures available on injuries or arrests.

Oil workers went on strike July 4 to protest the jailing of Moshood K.O. Abiola, the apparent winner of the annulled June 1993 presidential elections. Abiola was charged with treason after declaring himself president on the first anniversary of the ballot.

■ Nationalist Serbs again reject plan

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Nationalist Serb leaders on Monday rejected for the third time an international plan to settle the war in Bosnia, despite a fresh warning from Russia that refusal might lead to a serious increase in the fighting.

After meeting with President Slobodan Milosevic of Serbia on Sunday, Foreign Minister Andrei Kozyrev of Russia said on Monday that a final rejection of the peace plan by the Bosnian Serbs could result in "an escalation of the war, a huge confrontation, and the possibility of air strikes."

Military's defiant cry: 'Battle of Haiti under way'

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — Supporters of Haiti's military rulers declared their intention Monday to fight back — even if it means death — in the face of a U.N. resolution that paves the way for a U.S.-led invasion.

"To those who are preparing to invade, the Haitian people declare that they will fight them in the cities and in the countryside, they will fight them in the shacks and in the palaces, they will fight them day and night," said presidential aide Carl Denis.

"The blood will flow," said Frantz Robert Monde, president of the lower house of Parliament. "I know I am going to die."

"The foreigners who arrive will land on scorched earth. The world will see what the U.S. is responsible for," Monde said, alluding to the burning by Haitian insurgents of Cap Haitien, the second-largest city, during the war for independence against France in the early 19th century.

A resolution approved Sunday by the U.N. Security Council lays the legal groundwork for a U.S.-led invasion to oust the military and restore deposed President Jean-Bertrand Aristide.

In a radio and television address Monday, Haiti's de facto president, Emile Jonassaint, declared a state of siege and began preparing the population for "the battle of Haiti."

The mood was grim at the presidential palace Monday afternoon. Jonassaint canceled a scheduled interview with The Associated Press. Conversations with Jonassaint's aides and other officials disclosed a sense of resignation about eventual military intervention in this Caribbean nation.

A man carries a load of salt to shore from a boat in Port-au-Prince, Haiti. Streets appeared normal despite a state of siege being called.

"We waited for the sentence," said Gilles Hendrick, a politician. "It has been pronounced. It's the electric chair, with no appeal. Haiti is on death row."

Jonassaint, 81, was installed as president in May by a minority of army-backed lawmakers. He assumed the prime minister's post and named a group of extreme rightists and nationalists to the Cabinet.

"The battle of Haiti is under way," he said in his 3 a.m. address. "We will fight it with all our might and means. It will be hard and implacable."

Despite the official stance, many Haitians, particularly the poor, would welcome a foreign invasion. Some diplomats feel that talk of resistance is bravado and that in a showdown, the average soldier would throw down his weapon and melt into the population.

Sen. Thomas Edy Dupiton, who was at Jonassaint's side during the early morning broadcast, was one of the few who thought violence could still be avoided.

"It's never too late," he said at the presidential palace. "We can bring our case before the International Court of Justice in the Hague. The letter Aristide sent is not clear."

Aristide wrote to the Security Council calling on the international community to "take prompt and decisive action" in Haiti, taken to mean approval of an invasion.

Madeleine Albright, the U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, has said 14 countries have offered troops, but has not named them. Argentina's president said Monday he was requesting 600 troops for the force.

According to the 1987 Constitution, a state of siege can be declared in case of civil war or invasion. The executive order must be signed by the president and the prime minister, followed by an immediate convening of the National Assembly. Jonassaint did not call the National Assembly into session.

It was not immediately known what measures the government might take. Possibilities include curfews, revoking habeas corpus, press censorship, and declaring certain diplomats personae non grata.

"Let no one doubt our determination," Jonassaint told the nation. "The threat of invasion and occupation is on the way to becoming a reality."

In Zaire's worst camp, refugees struggle daily for water

GOMA, Zaire (AP) — Patrice Nyirazuba squats beside the evil-smelling pool with a tin can that in better times held powdered milk. She scoops up fetid water to drink and cook her meager rations of beans and rice.

Down the road, another Rwandan teen-ager, Angeline Nyirampozayo, staggers out of the forest with a 5-gallon jerrycan of water balanced on her head. She has walked 10 hours to a brackish jungle spring to get enough water to supply her family for one day.

"It's not good water, it's swamp water, but it's all we have. All the camp goes there," said Angeline. "I've made this trip five times. Tomorrow one of the other children will go, I get to rest."

Water is the most precious commodity in Kibumba, a sprawling jumble of tents and huts 20 miles north of Goma that has become home to some 250,000 hungry and disease-ridden refugees.

The lack of clean water forces Patrice and hundreds more to drink from the filthy pond that is used as a toilet by other refugees. Close to where she sits in her rags, Zairian herdsman lead their long-horned cattle into the pool.

"When we're thirsty we have to drink it," she says, convinced that by digging a little pit for the water to seep into, impurities are filtered out.

"That's nonsense," exclaims Gilles Cimetiere of the French aid agency Doctors Without Borders. "That pool is disgusting. It's a cholera pit."

Cholera and dysentery, both spread through infected water, are the biggest killers decimating the camps around Goma. The U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees estimates more than 20,000 people have died in the past two weeks; UNICEF puts the figure at 50,000.

Getting clean water to the refugees at Kibumba and other camps has become a top priority in the international operation to ease the suffering of the million Rwandans encamped around Goma.

American troops are pumping water out of Lake Kivu, purifying it and trucking it to Kibumba. Giant Air Force transport planes are airlifting purification equipment and tanker trucks from Europe.

"It's bad here. We're hoping to get as much water as we can up here as soon as we can," said Spc. Joe Tomes, a military police officer from Maria, Ky., riding shotgun for a U.S. Army engineering unit digging a track through the iron-hard volcanic rock for the water trucks.

Rwandan Hutu refugees gather water from a polluted pond near a Goma, Zaire, camp on Monday.

On Sunday the U.S. troops chlorinated 150,000 gallons from Lake Kivu to be transported to Kibumba and other camps. On Tuesday three Army trucks able to hold 3,000 gallons each are due to join the operation.

White plastic tanks for holding clean water are springing up like mushrooms around Kibumba, ready to take the inflow.

But, so far, there is just not enough to go around.

"I'm so exhausted and I'm hungry," moaned Angeline after her hike from the spring on the slopes of Mount Mikeno, the volcano that looms to the north of the camp.

Trial begins for teen-ager accused of killing 4-year-old

■ Defense attorney for 14-year-old Eric Smith asked jurors to interpret evidence as proof of 'extreme emotional disturbance' that gripped his client.

N.Y. Times News Service

BATH, N.Y. — The defense attorney for a 14-year-old boy standing trial for the murder of a 4-year-old last summer told a Steuben County jury Monday that the defendant was in an uncontrollable rage when he choked and bludgeoned the child.

The baby-faced teen-ager, Eric Smith, his aviator glasses perched on a freckled nose, listened without expression as the attorney, Kevin Bradley, said in his opening remarks that an unprovoked urge to hurt the little boy had quickly escalated into a vicious series of death-dealing blows the defendant was powerless to stop.

"The things Eric Smith did to Derrick Robie are going to be horrible," Bradley said in advance of testimony on the brutal beating that will be introduced by the prosecution as the trial progresses. "When you hear them you, are going to be sick."

But he asked the jurors to interpret the evidence as proof of "the extreme emotional disturbance" that he said gripped his client at the time of the killing in Savona, N.Y., a community of 970, about 80 miles south of Rochester.

District Attorney John Tunney told the jury that the defendant led Derrick, who had been walking two blocks from his home last Aug. 2 to a day camp in a nearby park, to the rear of an empty lot on a promise to show him a shortcut. Eric was also a participant in the day camp, but he had been sent home earlier that day for disobeying rules.

Once inside a wooded area, Eric grabbed the boy in a headlock, choked him and smashed his head three times with a 26-pound rock, Tunney said.

The prosecutor also said that Eric took the smaller boy's lunch bag and stuffed a napkin and a plastic sandwich bag into Derrick's mouth when he still appeared to be breathing.

Eric then hurled another rock into the boy's chest several times, lowered his pants and shoved a stick up his rectum, and splashed Kool Aid from the lunch bagonto his body, Tunney said.

Derrick's body was discovered several hours later by searchers organized when he didn't show up for camp. Eric confessed to the crime a week later, after inconsistencies were found in the story he told state police investigators.

Eric was indicted for second-degree murder under a law passed by the Legislature that allows a defendant as young as 13 to be tried as an adult on a murder charge.

He has pleaded not guilty on the basis of what psychiatrists who interviewed him said was a diminished capacity brought on by "pathological anger" and the urge to commit sadistic acts.

The defense has said evidence will be presented that shows that the boy was a seething cauldron of emotions brought on by developmental abnormalities.

His mother's use of the prescription drug trimethadione to control epileptic seizures during her pregnancy with Eric has been cited as a possible cause of behavioral problems.

Marines get on-job training to help fight wildfires

ENTIAT, Wash. (AP) — Marines traded their camouflage for flame-retardant uniforms Monday and marched into the smoldering forest with rakes, shovels and other firefighting tools.

"We're the nation's 911 force. Someone dialed 911 and off we went," said Lt. Col. Forrest Lindsey, commander of the first of two 550-member battalions being brought in to help fight the biggest of the scores of fires in the West.

The Marines' camp on a borrowed ranch in the Entiat River valley was filled with smoke from the so-called Tyee cluster of fires that have burned across 94,200 acres. Flames danced in the woods surrounding their tents.

Grimy, sweating Marines in firefighters' green pants and brilliant yellow shirts walked a few yards into the forest for safety training before getting to work in earnest today.

"Any time they put us to work helping people in our own country I'm all for it," said Pfc. Brian Nisbet, raising a cloud of dust as he raked a 4-foot-wide path clear of flammable pine needles.

Lindsey's battalion was to start pitching in today with full 12-hour shifts, easing the burden on 2,775 exhausted firefighters at this blaze on the eastern flank of the Cascade Range. More troops were arriving Monday and today.

AP Laserphoto

Joe Kelly finds his socket wrench set while looking through rubble of his barn on Saturday. His barn was one of two structures destroyed by wildfires in Entiat, Wash.

The Marines will do the grunt work, mopping up behind civilian fire crews, tramping across burned-over ground to shovel dirt on embers and raking out fire lines.

Their efforts will help free more experienced civilian firefighters for rest or other assignments.

"We're all getting pretty burned out," said Bob Walker, a U.S. Forest Service fire-behavior analyst. He has been putting in nearly 20 hours a day since lightning sparked the first fires July 24.

His goal is to get six hours of sleep. But he doesn't expect that any time soon since he and forecasters predict 30 more days of hot, dry weather.

A temperature inversion offered a respite Monday, keeping the wind down and slowing the flames' spread but also holding smoke near the ground.

Visibility was about a half-mile at the Bavarian-theme tourist town of Leavenworth, about 35 miles to the southwest near the 20,700-acre Hatchery Creek fire. Streets were nearly deserted and the only strangers in town were fire crews, trudging off single-file, lugging axes, shovels and rakes.

Several people suffering from breathing problems because of the smoke were evacuated.

The Hatchery Creek fire had destroyed 14 homes and damaged Leavenworth's water treatment plant. The bigger Tyee blaze has wiped out at least 19 homes and 75 outbuildings.

It's the seventh summer in a decade that the military has been called in to help.

More than 14,000 civilian firefighters were battling 26 major fires in eight Western states.

Administration hopes threat of Haitian invasion is enough

WASHINGTON (AP) — Given a U.N. green light to invade Haiti, the Clinton administration expressed hope Monday the threat alone will drive out the country's military leaders. A decision on invasion is unlikely for at least a few weeks, an official said.

The United States will use the time to tap other countries to participate in a potential invasion and in any post-invasion peacekeeping force. The Clinton administration also is trying to overcome congressional opposition.

As the United Nations offered its blessing Sunday for a military action to oust the coup leaders — it authorized "all necessary means" — U.S. Marines who have been waiting off Haiti's coast went to Puerto Rico to practice amphibious landings.

But a State Department official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said a decision on invading is still a few weeks off.

Publicly, U.S. officials are refraining from a timetable, insisting only that the Haitian military relinquish power soon and permit the return of elected President Jean-Bertrand Aristide.

"We have not set a deadline because we believe that they are now going to have to get this message. We have not said what "soon" means specifically, because we want the pressure here to work," United Nations Ambassador Madeleine Albright said Monday.

She added, in an ABC interview, "There is real value in some doubt in their minds about the timing, but no doubts in their minds about the resolve to solve this situation."

State Department spokesman Michael McCurry said the U.N. action puts Haiti's rulers "on notice of what action the world community is prepared to take."

"It's probably best at this point for us not to telegraph any punch that might be delivered," he added when asked how soon a U.S. move might come.

He also branded illegal the declaration of a state of siege by "the illegal government" in Haiti, saying the Haitian constitution mandates only the National Assembly can take that action.

McCurry condemned as a "provocative incident" the assault Monday on some 40 Haitians waiting in line to seek U.S. asylum at an embassy facility in Port-Au-Prince. About 50 members of a "semi-official" anti-gang unit beat up the asylum seekers at about 5 a.m. as they waited for the center to open at 6:30 a.m., McCurry said.

Three were arrested, the spokesman said, adding it could not be learned immediately if the incident was related to the U.N. resolution.

The U.N. resolution provides another pressure tactic to try and force out Lt. Gen. Raoul Cedras and his colleagues.

It also gives the administration new fuel for its bid to enlist other potential invasion participants as well as countries to join a post-invasion peacekeeping force.

Argentina has announced its troops would join an invasion. U.S. officials say about 15 countries would send peacekeeping troops.

Study estimates 47,000 nonsmokers will die in '94 from heart disease caused by second-hand smoke

NEW YORK (AP) — Secondhand cigarette smoke will cause an estimated 47,000 deaths and about 150,000 non-fatal heart attacks in U.S. nonsmokers this year, a study says. That's as much as 50 percent higher than previous estimates.

The figures are projected from an analysis of 1985 data that showed that heart disease caused by other people's smoke killed 62,000 people that year and caused as many as 200,000 heart attacks.

The reduction since then is due to a decline in smoking and an increase in restrictions on smoking in public places, the study said.

The findings, to be published this week in the Journal of the American College of Cardiology, appear amid a public relations campaign by the tobacco industry. In a series of full-page newspaper ads, Philip Morris and R.J. Reynolds have raised questions about links between secondhand smoke and lung cancer.

The new study focuses on heart disease, which it said is a more serious problem.

"Heart disease appears to be by far the major mortality risk from passive smoking," the study concluded. "Practicing physicians would do well to warn their at-risk heart patients to avoid smoky rooms."

The study was conducted by A. Judson Wells, a consultant to the U.S. Occupational Safety and Health Administration and a volunteer with the American Lung Association.

Earlier calculations, including one by Wells himself, had estimated that secondhand smoke was responsible for 32,000 to 37,000 heart disease deaths a year in nonsmokers.

Brennan Dawson of the Tobacco Institute in Washington noted that a 1986 U.S. Surgeon General's report on smoking failed to find a link between secondhand smoke and heart disease.

"Nothing that's been published since then would cause a change in that," Dawson said.

Researchers studying the problem, however, argue that a wealth of data on such a link has been produced since the surgeon general's report.

Wells said that in his new study, he used 1985 figures to allow comparison with an Environmental Protection Agency study that used the same data to show that secondhand smoke causes about 3,000 lung cancer deaths a year in nonsmokers.

Wells' figures were based on a mathematical analysis of previous studies showing the risks of secondhand smoke. He said his study employed a new method devised by the EPA for its lung cancer report. He is the first to apply the method to heart disease.

After calculating the number of heart-disease deaths blamed on secondhand smoke, he arrived at the number of heart attacks by simple multiplication. "There are three times as many heart attacks as there are heart deaths," he said.

No figures are available yet to confirm Wells' 1994 projections.

"This is a much more sophisticated analysis than anybody's ever done before," said Stanton Glantz of the University of California at San Francisco, who had done one of the earlier estimates.

"This very large number of non-fatal events means you could be having a very important effect on medical care costs," he said.

Fleiss, her father plead innocent to federal charges

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Reputed Hollywood madam Heidi Fleiss and her father pleaded innocent Monday to federal tax and money laundering charges in a case that could expose sexual peccadilloes of the rich and famous.

A 14-count federal indictment against Ms. Fleiss and her pediatrician father, Paul Fleiss, refers to a series of checks for as much as $8,000 each that allegedly were paid to her by prostitution clients from around the globe.

The checks were said to be made out to cash but signed by the clients and endorsed by Ms. Fleiss before being deposited in bank accounts belonging to her father and a sister. The sister's status in the case was not disclosed.

Ms. Fleiss' clients reportedly included some of Hollywood's most famous and powerful men.

Defense attorney Anthony Brooklier said he had not seen the checks or any other evidence in the case.

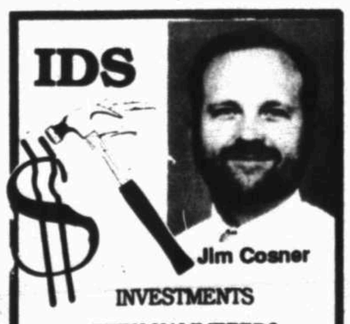

"The grand jury proceedings have been secret and at this point you know as much as we know," he told reporters after the hearing.

U.S. District Judge Consuelo B. Marshall set an Oct. 11 trial date.

Ms. Fleiss, 28, already is scheduled to begin trial in state court Aug. 22 on pandering and cocaine charges.

She made no comments outside court Monday. She and her father did not speak to each other and stood apart with their separate lawyers.

Caution needed in Rwandan effort

U.S. troops sent to Rwanda Saturday to provide humanitarian support for refugees are not expected to join U.N. peacekeeping forces there. In fact, their mission, according to Defense Secretary William Perry, involves purification of drinking water and ferrying in supplies.

In that regard, they should not face as much danger as did the U.S. troops sent to Somalia on a humanitarian mission in December 1992 by President George Bush. Of course, those troops became mired in the middle of a tribal shooting war, and a number of American lives were lost. Due to that fact, along with the entangling nature of situations like the one that exists in Rwanda, Americans should be understandably concerned that U.S. troops have been committed there.

Although Maj. Gen. Romeo Dallaire, Canadian commander of the U.N. peacekeeping force in Kigali, has indicated that total U.S. troop strength in Rwanda could reach 2,000, past experience confirms that peacekeeping operations tend to grow in size and scope. President Clinton has indicated that this nation's commitment to the humanitarian effort in Rwanda is open-ended, but at some point American taxpayers are going to want a better timetable on the Rwandan commitment.

After a whirlwind visit to Rwanda over the weekend, Perry said, "My heart was torn by the human tragedy that is unfolding here in Goma. But I was inspired by the evidence here of the power of the human spirit to rise above tragedy."

No doubt Americans agree with Perry and are willing to take part in attempting to relieve the suffering of the refugees in Rwanda. But they want that commitment made cautiously so that this nation's interests are protected.

Scientists 'preach' about demon foods

The assorted snobs, busybodies and killjoys who make careers out of running other people's lives have struck again. The target this time is Mexican food, which, according to the Center for Science in the Public Interest, is a mass of fat and sodium waiting to rise up and slay us all.

Murchison

The center, a Washington, D.C., outfit, is best known for its recent assault on Killer Popcorn, which, in movie theater versions, was deemed unacceptably high in fat. Chinese and Italian restaurants have also tasted the center's wrath.

Among the Mexican food findings:

1. An order of chile rellenos gives the diner a day and a half's worth of fat.

2. Cheese quesadillas with sour cream, pico de gallo and guacamole are laden with 900 calories, 59 grams of fat and 1,628 milligrams of sodium.

3. A half day's worth of salt comes with every savory basket of hot tortilla chips — not counting the sauce.

The center's researchers waggle their fingers like Puritans in the pulpit. Sinners, repent! Leave off from fat! Henceforth eat low-salt, low-fat, low-calorie enchiladas!

Is the center's fat-sodium analysis wrong? Probably not. A scientist presumably can count calories. What rankles is when the scientist puts down his test tube and starts telling the rest of us what to do with our lives. Modern Americans rarely permit clergymen to do any such thing. Why do they take it from scientists?

It isn't enough for the killjoys to publish their findings and invite professional agreement. They have to hold preachy press conferences, instructing us with white-coated solemnity that the things we like, we really shouldn't like. They appear to enjoy scaring the bejabbers out of us, these Lugosis of the lab.

If they were right, that might be one thing; but hardly do they form a consensus before it shifts and buckles. Thus eggs, a few years back, were said to be our ruination; millions quit, or cut back, on eating them. This was until Further Research revealed that eggs are in various ways good for us. The same with whole milk, a onetime menace now enjoying restoration to favor. Butter, for all the bad PR it has received, now is seen as more useful in some ways than that awful stuff, margarine.

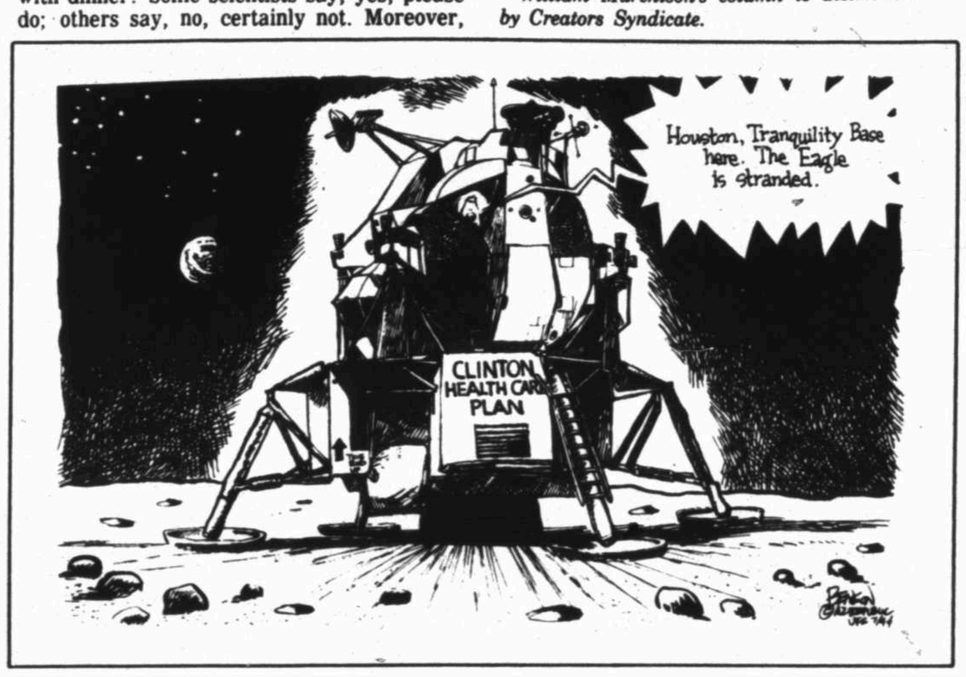

Not the least problem here is taste. Fat makes things taste good. The experts don't worry about sensuous enjoyment. They'd rather we wrinkled our noses at the table than smiled with delight over a buttered baked potato.

The killjoys seem to believe in a single rule for everybody: this dish good, that one bad in all circumstances, for all people. Yet even in the scientific community there is not just one school of thought on food. For instance, can you salutarily knock off a couple of glasses of wine with dinner? Some scientists say, yes, please do; others say, no, certainly not. Moreover, (fortunately!) we're not all made the same internally. What one diner can't accommodate, another tucks into rapaciously. Every consumer of food is entitled to judge his own needs, heedless of persnickety experts.

You can of course thumb your nose — and fork — at the experts, but thereupon they encourage you to feel guilty. They would have you know that, when you insist on the immemorial culinary preferences of your ancestors, such as butter, whole milk, salted popcorn, enchiladas, you're digging your grave. Well, think of it — aren't your ancestors dead?

We're an odd people in some ways, we Americans. Liberty we profess to prize; but then we cede large portions of that very freedom to experts who lecture and browbeat us.

Anti-war period may eclipse moon landing

The landing on the moon that most people just remembered with little celebrations was a marvelous engineering feat — and not much else.

For $70 billion — in today's dollars — we got 841 pounds of moon rocks. We were able to say to the Soviet Union, in the manner of schoolyard braggarts, "Yah, yah, we went to the moon and you didn't."

Reese

In the meantime, back at the ranch called Earth, the country was going to hell. Cities were burning, the drug culture was taking root, national consensus on many issues was being torn to shreds, and physical force — in the form of demonstrations, occupation of buildings, riots and assassinations — was replacing civil discussion as a means of settling political differences.

The corruption of the political process has had far more lasting effects, none good, than Neil Armstrong's short stroll on the moon's surface, which turned out to be pretty much what scientists expected. Not even the question of the moon's origin was settled by the Apollo missions. The moon shots ended, interest petered out and NASA sailed into the doldrums.

The mean edge to American politics, which some now claim to be disturbed by, came from the 1960s and the political left — those who organized and led the anti-war movement and in doing so revealed an inclination toward totalitarian-style politics. I believe that never before in American history were soldiers returning from a foreign war spat upon and insulted. Never before had wives and children of American servicemen been harassed while they endured the anxiety of a loved one in battle. And the vicious treatment of American political leaders — and the readiness to break the law, to shout down opponents, to disrupt campuses and classrooms, and to openly aid and praise a foreign enemy — was never in the American tradition of loyal dissent.

These organizers, if they are not dead, are now in Wall Street, in the government, on university faculties and in newsrooms. Many have mellowed as well as grayed. Some have suffered the karma of putting up with children as obnoxiously self-righteous as they had been. Some have seen the drug culture they helped create come back and bite them.

But mellowed or unmellowed, they have the distinction of having put a wound into the American body politic that is far from healed, and far more consequential than Neil Armstrong's short stroll on the moon's surface.

Eric Hoffer, the waterfront philosopher and author, wrote in one of his books that he was not at all sure America could survive the damage done by the '60s generation.

I'm not sure it can either. Some things, once lost, cannot be recovered. A lot of traditions, values, trust, goodwill and willingness to respect others were all trashed. Liberalism was exposed as an empty shell, for when the young totalitarians started trashing liberal values, the old liberals caved in. They didn't have the backbone to put where their mouth had been all those years. Many university campuses, to their shame, became the least free places in the country.

The old American leftists in the 1930s felt equally passionate, but they retained their liberal values. They never tried to destroy American universities. The new left was perfectly willing to destroy them and the concept of academic freedom. The political correctness movement today is just a hatchling of the reptilian intolerance of the 1960s new left.

So historians will probably see the anti-war movement as far more significant in American history than the moon landings. The Apollo program was, after all, a political public relations stunt. After it was completed, nothing significant came of it — not even technological. The rockets were tossed aside. The engineers laid off. That's because its creators never intended it as more than a stunt.

ANOTHER VIEW

House Banking hearings were 'damage control'

Last week's Whitewater hearings before the House Banking Committee numbed the senses. That was the way committee Democrats and the White House planned it. Restricted by rules imposed by the chairman and frustrated by a well-drilled White House defense, Republicans gained very little traction with their charge that the White House and the Treasury Department had conspired to shape a federal investigation into the collapse of an Arkansas savings and loan.

But the administration's own self-portrait was an alarming one. Its main line of defense was to blame the media for all those meetings about what was supposed to be an arm's-length federal investigation into whether funds from Madison Guaranty were illegally funneled into the Whitewater Development Corp. and Clinton's 1984 gubernatorial campaign.

"Almost everything that's involved here . . . results from our efforts to respond to queries from the press," said Lloyd Cutler, the White House counsel. But this sudden solicitude for the press, echoed by other witnesses, rings hollow. From early in Clinton's campaign, inquiries about the Whitewater investment have been met with stonewalling and evasion. What was portrayed last week as an exercise in enlightenment was in fact yet another exercise in political damage control.

This is a terrible way to govern. What was driving the exercise was the question of the president's political health. The motive was not to inform the public but to restrict information and limit exposure. Deputy Treasury Secretary Roger Altman, who is expected to be the focus of Senate hearings this week, provided a telling glimpse of the White House attitude in a diary entry describing a discussion with Mrs. Clinton's chief of staff about the appointment of a special counsel. He quoted Margaret Williams as saying that "HRC 'doesn't want (the counsel) poking into 20 years of public life in Arkansas.'"

Last week, House Democrats cooperated with Mrs. Clinton's desire to draw the veil over the Arkansas years. But they could not prevent the public from getting a glimpse of this administration's unhealthy approach to governance. Even Cutler conceded that there were too many meetings. No matter how innocuously it is portrayed, a process that brings departmental and regulatory officials together with the White House political team has historically been an arena for abuse and an invitation to trouble.

Prince sues Chicago over bus ride gone bad

Prince Jaiyesimi is a member of the Ijede ruling family in Lagos, Nigeria. That's what Gerry Gross, a Chicago Transit Authority bus driver who is not of royal birth, will soon be finding out.

Gross is one of the alleged villains in a $120 million federal lawsuit that Prince Jaiyesimi brought against the city of Chicago, the CTA and the Police Department because they hurt his royal feelings real bad.

Royko

In a media release distributed by Bayo Adeyemo, executive director of the Council on African Relations, the abuse to Prince Jaiyesimi is described:

"On Jan. 27, 1994, Prince Jaiyesimi tried to board a CTA bus at the corner of Berwyn and Broadway. After allowing two elderly white passengers to board ahead of him, Prince Jaiyesimi attempted to board the bus, but the driver, Gerald Gross, shut the door in his face and proceeded."

The prince chased the bus and got on at the next stop.

"He presented his transfer to the driver who informed him that the transfer had expired. Prince Jaiyesimi paid another fare of $1.50 and requested to know why the driver had refused to pick him up.

"The driver refused to explain and requested Prince Jaiyesimi to disembark from the bus. The prince refused, citing correctly his right to ride on the bus, having paid his fare.

"The driver threatened to call the police to 'arrest the prince and make sure that his black ass went to jail.' Other passengers pleaded with the bus driver to continue with the journey and let the prince ride. The bus driver called the police. Then the police asked questions, arrested, handcuffed and jailed Prince Jaiyesimi for several hours before releasing him on his personal recognizance. A disorderly conduct charge filed against him was dismissed for non-suit on April 12, 1994.

"Prince Jaiyesimi suffered injuries and damages, including, but not limited to, a severe nervous shock, physical and emotional injuries, great distress of body and mind, pain and suffering and post-traumatic syndrome.

"'The bus driver falsely and maliciously, without any probable or reasonable cause whatsoever, but with intent to injure the prince in his good reputation, and to bring him into public disgrace and scandal, and to cause him to be imprisoned and deprived of his liberty, accused and charged him with having committed disorderly conduct,' said Attorney Paul Otubusin, Prince Jaiyesimi's attorney.'

Well, if the prince suffered these indignities, I can understand his hurt feelings. It's no lark to endure severe nervous shock, physical and emotional injuries, great distress of body and mind, pain and suffering and post-traumatic syndrome. That sounds worse than corns on your little toes.

But $120 million seems a bit steep, considering that the bus didn't even run over his foot and nobody hit him on the head.

Not to defend driver Gross, but there is nothing in the lawsuit to indicate that he knew the prince was a prince.

That could be a mitigating factor, since it has become almost a tradition in Chicago for bus drivers to be rude to passengers, passengers to drivers, drivers to motorists, passengers to passengers, whites to blacks, blacks to whites and any other abusive combination you can think of.

I don't know for sure, but it's possible that had the prince said to driver Gross, "Aha, you rude feilow, you toad, you clod, you happen to be speaking disrespectfully to his royal highness, Prince Jaiyesimi, a member of the Ijede ruling family in Lagos, Nigeria," Gross might have curtsied. Or at least accepted the aged transfer.

Besides, what is a prince doing on a CTA bus anyway? You would think his royal family would have taught him better.

Army OKs women for combat jobs

WASHINGTON (NYT) — The Army is planning to open to women more than 32,000 combat positions that are now closed to them, but strong protests from senior generals forced the civilian Army secretary to retreat from a much more ambitious plan.

The new plan will allow women into some units that were previously off limits, but will keep them in rear headquarters in many units and restrict their ability to compete for assignments that are necessary to rise to the Army's top ranks.

Army Secretary Togo D. West Jr. and Gen. Gordon R. Sullivan, the Army chief of staff, clashed last month over how widely to expand opportunities for women on the battlefield. West wanted to open virtually all positions not considered to involve direct combat, like the infantry, armor and much of field artillery. Under West's original plan positions would have been opened in units like the helicopter groups that lift special operations troops into combat. But many generals argued that women were not physically fit for such units and would cause morale problems.

Under the compromise plan, women will be assigned to air defense artillery battalions, helicopters that fly cover for tanks and battalion headquarters of combat engineers and special operations forces, Army officials said. But women will still be barred from more than a quarter of the Army's jobs, including operating an advanced field artillery weapon, called the Multiple Launch Rocket System, or from flying helicopters carrying special operations troops. The plan was first reported by The Associated Press.

If approved by Defense Secretary William J. Perry, the plan would effectively block women from advancing along the three main routes to the Army's senior leadership: armor, infantry and field artillery.

"What this basically says is that people who will make up the future leadership of the Army will be all guys," said one senior male officer.

The highly charged issue has led customarily collegial Army leaders to criticize each other for the way the matter has been handled. Senior generals have challenged their civilian leaders, arguing that civilians with little or no combat experience have let their idealistic goals interfere with military effectiveness.

Many generals believe that women fail to meet the physical requirements to serve in infantry, armor and artillery units, the forces most likely to engage in direct combat and bear the brunt of casualties. And they believe that women would introduce morale and privacy problems in those units.

In addition, senior Army officers contend that women have made enough progress for now, and the military should be given time to digest the changes. "We need to pause and let this sort out for a while," Gen. J.H. Binford Peay III, the former vice chief of staff who will becomes head of the U.S. Central Command told senators last month.

Copter to the rescue

Saturday at the First Baptist Church in St. Cloud, Minn. Jarnot wasn't sure that he could make it to his sister's wedding, so he chartered a helicopter. Jarnot had a noon interview in Minneapolis for a commissioned officer position with the reserves, so he hired a pilot to fly him to the church.

Teens of True Love Waits pledge no sex until after marriage

By Kim I. Mills
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Keith Hartsell, 17, has dated the same "young lady" for more than a year. Recently, they both pledged not to have sex until marriage, and Keith says he couldn't be happier.

"It's been amazing what that commitment has done for our relationship," said Hartsell, one of thousands of teen-agers joining a growing sexual abstinence movement.

On July 29, a Christian movement called True Love Waits came to Washington to spread its message. On the National Mall, youths hammered in little stakes holding signed cards pledging abstinence.

Forswearing sex has eased the sexual pressure between Hartsell and his girlfriend, inspired the trust of their parents and garnered the support of their friends, said the Springfield, Va., teen.

"God has written in the Bible that he wanted us to stay sexually pure 'til we got married," he said. "But God didn't do that just because he wanted to take away our fun. He did it because he knew it would keep us safe, that it was the best way and that we could enjoy all the things that go along with sex in marriage."

True Love Waits was born a little more than a year ago when 59 teens took vows of chastity at a Southern Baptist church in Nashville, Tenn. Friday, adult leaders said some 20,000 abstinent teens had come to Washington for a "SuperConference on Youth Evangelism."

'It's been amazing what that (True Love Waits) commitment has done for our relationship.'

— Keith Hartsell, 17

"True Love Waits is a positive challenge to teen-agers to make a promise to be sexually abstinent from this day forward until their wedding day," said campaign spokesman Richard Ross, head of the Baptist Sunday School Board.

The abstinence movement has spread to hundreds of thousands of youngsters in Christian 26 denominations and organizations, he said, predicting more than 200,000 pledge cards would dot the National Mall alone before day's end.

Each card said: "Believing that true love waits, I make a commitment to God, myself, my family, those I date, my future mate and my future children to be sexually pure until the day I enter a covenant marriage relationship."

"We have the sense that we're riding on the crest of a wave," said Dave Scherrer of Youth for Christ, host of the Washington meeting.

Last month, True Love Waits planted 100,000 pledge cards at the Southern Baptist Convention in Orlando, Fla. Next month, the group will hold a youth evangelism conference in Anaheim, Calif. And organizers are looking ahead to an international rally in Buenos Aires, Argentina, in 1995.

Susan Fitzgerald, 19, who belongs to Tulip Grove Baptist Church in Nashville, said she signed the pledge "because that's what God wants me to do with my life."

Monica McIntyre, 16, of Hyattsville, Md., attended a news conference "to say I'm not the only one."

"We have zillions of kids out here that want to do it, too," she said.

Firms beef up security after worker violence

By Marcia Stepanek
Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — Attorneys in San Francisco's Pettit & Martin law firm, where a disgruntled client killed eight employees and then himself a year ago this month, now work in offices protected by a locked door at the front of their suites.

The firm uses escorts to accompany visitors to appointments inside the building, and in an emergency its receptionists can press hidden red or yellow panic buttons.

Bosses at other businesses around the country are sending receptionists to self-defense seminars on the company tab. And some executives are wearing bulletproof vests to work.

Behind these tactics is the growing fear of violence in the workplace.

One in six violent crimes occurs at work, according to a Justice Department study released last week. That's about 15 percent of the 6.5 million acts of violence against Americans over the age of 12 each year.

Assaults on staffers at work have more than doubled in a decade, according to government and private agencies, and the severity of the attacks is rising.

Jack Levin, Northeastern University professor of sociology and criminology, says the number of bosses killed at work has doubled over the past 10 years, with three to four a month slain by a disgruntled worker or ex-worker.

Overall, 1,004 Americans were murdered on the job in 1992, federal Labor Department statistics show — 32 percent more than the annual average in the 1980s. Homicide is the No. 2 cause of death in the workplace, second only to transportation accidents among workers who must travel in performing their jobs.

In addition, 16 percent of all assaults, 8 percent of all rapes and 7 percent of all robberies occur at work, the Justice Department says.

Job losses trigger much of the violence. But increasingly, says Dennis Johnson, a Florida-based workplace consultant, violence is committed by the "working wounded," people who have been demoted, passed over for promotion or pushed ever harder to boost their productivity.

"Workplace violence is the new poison of corporate America," says Johnson, a clinical psychologist and the president of Behavior Analysts & Consultants, of Stuart, Fla., which tracks workplace violence.

"It's not just a reflection of a violent society but of that violent society interacting with a workplace that is changing quickly and stressing out workers or displacing workers to inferior jobs," he says.

Infamous Soviet 'people's car' comes to end of long, bumpy road

By Liam McDowall
Associated Press

ZAPORIZHZHIA, Ukraine — It's the end of the road for the Zaporozhets, the "tin can on wheels" that made car ownership possible for millions of Soviet citizens.

The last one rolled off the assembly line recently, closing 34 years of proletarian automotive history.

Its makers called their squat, noisy, cheap machine the "people's car." Nikita Khrushchev gave it the "tin can" label when he ordered its production in 1960.

Viktor Suzalenko, chief of research at the plant, said the Zaporozhets "will be remembered as a vehicle of its time."

"It is a no-frills car," he said. "Basic, yes basic. Style or how much fuel it drank wasn't an issue when it was designed. The key question was whether it could cope with the rotten roads in the Soviet Union."

Andrei Petrovich, a local motorist, described it as "the only car I know that makes the Lada look sexy." Petrovich owns a Lada, just one boxy step up from the Zaporozhets.

The Z68, with its tiny engine tucked under the rear trunk, became the basic Zaporozhets model. It was introduced in 1968 and has remained virtually unchanged. Efforts to export it under the name Yalta failed.

What did change was the market. The collapse of the Soviet Union brought both soaring production costs and a wondrous new element: choice. Status-symbol foreign cars and new Russian and Ukrainian models vied for public favor.

War veterans on small pensions stuck with the Z68, as did disabled people who found it easier to maneuver than heavier cars, but they were not enough.

Like many Soviet innovations, the sturdy Zaporozhets suspension was a spinoff of military technology. Until 1967, the auto plant in southeastern Ukraine doubled as a research and production center for an amphibious jeep designed for trench warfare.

'Style or how much fuel it drank wasn't an issue when it was designed. The key question was whether it could cope with the rotten roads in the Soviet Union.'

— Viktor Suzalenko

While ruggedness was important, the major selling point of the Zaporozhets was its price, which the Soviet planned economy strictly controlled before Ukraine became independent in 1991.

In those days, a Z68 cost 20 times average monthly pay or about 1,000 bottles of vodka. The price today is 39 million karbovantsy, the temporary Ukrainian currency — 87 times average monthly pay, equivalent to $870.

Ukraine and Russia took 80 percent of the plant's production until last year, but heavy tariffs imposed between the two former Soviet republics have caused Russia to cancel orders. The Ukrainian government, short on cash, has defaulted on payments to the factory.

Managers and workers at the plant pin their hopes for keeping it open on the Tavria 1105, an aerodynamic 5-door car with an engine built by Italian robots. A prototype of the Tavria is proudly displayed in a rotating glass showcase outside the neoclassical Stalinist facade of the main entrance.

Promotional plans for the Tavria 1105, now being made, are unlikely to include the slogan: "From the makers of the Zaporozhets."

America becomes boot camp for Salvadoran gang members

By Mike O'Connor
N.Y. Times News Service

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador — As trucks loaded with the day's unsold fruit pulled away from San Salvador's central market on a recent evening, a group of young people began to gather in the parking lot.

Their tattoos, baggy pants and shirts several sizes too big marked them as different from other young people living in the surrounding slums.

But it was the way they walked, a slouching, belligerent gait learned as members of street gangs in the United States, that made them unmistakable and drew stares of fear and admiration from other youths.

While Salvadorans try to remake a society left in shreds by civil war, they are finding that some of the children of families who fled to the United States are coming back and spreading a kind of violence once unknown here.

As a result of a crackdown begun by U.S. immigration authorities 18 months ago, young Salvadorans who joined street gangs while living in tough immigrant neighborhoods in the United States are being picked up and deported.

On returning to El Salvador, some recreate their gangs, which are now terrorizing even parts of the country that escaped the civil war.

"These are our children," said Rufina Granados, 56, packing up her mangoes and looking furtively at the group in the parking lot. "They left to escape the war here, but in the United States they learned to be criminals. Now the young people who stayed here think joining these gangs is good."

In the United States, many young immigrants banded together because they felt alone in a new society. Now, deported to a homeland they had nearly forgotten, they once again feel isolated, and join other deportees to form gangs.

Also, by maintaining contacts with U.S. colleagues, some Salvadoran gang members claim to have quickly expanded into international crime.

One of the men who gathered at the market was Ernesto Carbajal, 23, who was deported after serving time in a California prison for attempted murder and drug sales.

"The first day I got back, the only person I had here was my grandmother, but I couldn't find her house," he said. "I just started walking the streets, and I spotted other guys who I could tell were like me. Now we got our gang, and we do what we are used to doing."

In the 11 months since he arrived, matters have changed quickly. Now there is a substantial network of deportees, and new ones often arrive with contacts already established.

The dozen men in their late teens and early 20s who accompanied Mr. Carbajal began to discuss a threat to their widening turf from a gang with which they had developed a murderous rivalry in California. Now members of that gang who have been deported are showing up at the market.

"That's going to stop tonight," said a youth nicknamed Caspar. "They ain't showing us no respect. They're trying to see if we're strong, or what." He spoke in bursts of English and Spanish laced with slang from the immigrant slums of Los Angeles, where he grew up, and the even poorer slums of San Salvador, where he lives now.

To show their strength, Caspar said, they must shoot the next rival sighted. The others agreed.

El Salvador's civil war, in which more civilians than soldiers were killed, and the underdeveloped justice system provide a framework in which violence comes easily and is often left unpunished. The war left 70,000 dead and a society fractured. Several hundred thousand Salvadorans fled to the United States.

Officials now estimate that the number of gang members in El Salvador has grown to several thousand, most of whom have never been to the United States but joined gangs started by deportees.

And by maintaining contacts with their colleagues in the United States, some Salvadoran gang members claim to have quickly expanded into international crime.

Alvaro Espinoza, who is proud enough of his gang to have its name — 18th Street — tattooed across his forehead, said the most successful venture so far was fencing cars stolen in the United States and driven down through Mexico and Guatemala.

He also spoke with optimism of an expanding business in buying black market assault rifles and hand grenades left over from the war, then selling them in California.

Senior Salvadoran police officers, as well as gang members in Los Angeles, corroborated Mr. Espinoza's account of the gang's businesses.

Deported gang members also claim to have formed alliances with crime syndicates here controlled by former or current officials of the military and the police.

Proposed park begins to take shape

■ Firm authorized by City Council starts design plans for park north of Wadley Avenue, west of Holiday Hill Road.

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

Initial design plans are under way for the proposed park in northwest Midland that is to begin serving the public by next spring.

Last week, the City Council authorized a contract with Carter and Burgess Inc. for design and engineering services for the proposed park.

The firm will design specifications for water lines, sewer lines and grading of baseball fields, according to Assistant City Manager Rick Menchaca. The estimated cost for the services is $50,000.

The park — to be located just north of Wadley Avenue, south of the Jal draw and west of Holiday Hill Road — is part of the city's master plan to have a major park in each quadrant of Midland.

The 57.8-acre site was a gift of the Scharbauer family interest for use as a park.

Among the facilities planned at the park will be a site for the relocated North Central Little League. The league currently uses fields off A Street and at the Rusk Annex adjacent to Lee High School. Future growth needs of the school and the county cemetery near A Street have forced the relocation of the league by 1995.

The city hopes to help finance the park with a $500,000 grant from the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department. "It would accelerate the completion of the park," Menchaca said.

The city expects to be notified about the grant request this month.

Grant or no grant, the city will move ahead with the baseball fields.

With the grant, the public should also be able to enjoy nature trails, concession stands, more parking and other amenities at the park following the completion of the baseball fields.

Other plans for the park include a pond, possibly with a fishing pier. The pond will serve as a retention basin, which is critical to future drainage for the city.

Long-term plans call for two competitive soccer fields and a T-ball complex.

Mike Sherrod, a piano tuner and Summer Mummers pit-band piano player learned everything he needed to know in life by taking piano lessons.

Theater strikes right chord with Midlander

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff Writer

Piano lessons taught Michael "Mike" Sherrod everything he needed to know in life. Well, almost everything. An appreciative ear for music, intense discipline and patience were all required at the piano keyboard from age 7 on. A love for playing ragtime and a career as a piano tuner came later.

Many Midlanders will recognize Sherrod as the man wearing the umbrella hat — the better to deflect flying popcorn from zealous members of the audience — in the band pit at Summer Mummers melodrama and olio.

By day, Sherrod operates his own piano-tuning service in Midland. On Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights during the summer, he dodges popcorn, plays the theme song from the television game show Jeopardy! when cast members forget their lines and the theme from "Hill Street Blues" when Midland County Sheriff Gary Painter appears on screen during the movieola (black-and-white talkies).

"When the villains come on screen, I play a certain melody of minor chords. The hero gets major chords."

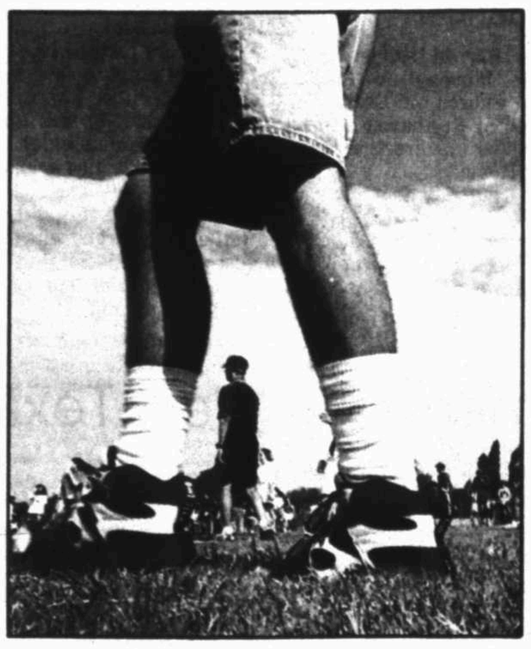

Because he often plays in the dark, "It's like the keys are Braille," Sherrod said.

Did piano lessons prepare him for the mayhem of Mummers?

"That's the beauty of life. It's very

Native of China feels comfortable with two cultures

By Elise Coombes

The eight members of the delegation from Midland's sister city, Dongying, China, were so caught up in the activity of Kids' College that they ignored the Midland College classes they were supposed to visit. Instead, they stopped in every classroom to examine pictures still wet with paint, stepped over art projects scattered across the floor and stroked the great horned owl flapping its wings in "Birds and Things."

None of the delegation members spoke English, and none of the Americans spoke Chinese. Finally, an American voice pleaded "Where is Wei Wei, someone please find Wei Wei."

In a few moments Wei Wei Liu, a native of China who is now an American businesswoman, found herself exactly where she likes to be — right in the middle of two cultures.

'I really want to be able to use my knowledge and also my language skills in business or cultural exchange.'
— Wei Wei Liu

She explained each class to her curious countrymen and answered questions of children puzzled about the sudden invasion of their classroom.

Order and the schedule were soon restored, and Wei Wei and her delegation were out the door and on to the next stop on their tour of Midland.

Wei Wei, who left her native China to study at Midland College and the University of Texas at the Permian Basin more than seven years ago, served as translator for the Chinese delegation that visited Midland last week. It is a job that demands more than her bilingual skills — she is the bridge between two diverse cultures. It is a role she trained for and embraced, and she knows the consequences of not doing her job well.

"You may cause misunderstandings," she said.

She said her biggest challenge is not just translating words but communicating the ideas and the story behind the words.

Idioms, especially those that are part of the West Texas culture, add to her task. Phrases that mean one thing in one language may mean nothing in another, she said.

Her task involves grasping the important part of the message and reforming the idea in Chinese.

Wei Wei learned English when she studied for her bachelor's degree at the Peking Foreign Language Institute in Beijing. She continued to develop her language skills at her job with the Chinese People's Association for Friendship with Foreign Countries.

By the time she made her first contact with Midlanders — when she served as interpreter for a group touring with the Midland-Odessa Symphony in 1985 — she had already decided she wanted to study in the United States.

After that visit, opportunities for Wei Wei came rapidly. The Sister City Association between Dongying and Midland was formed in 1986, and Midlanders such as Barry Beck and Dick Dunbar encouraged her to come to Midland.

But even with their help — the prom-

Area chronic-fatigue support group to sponsor seminar

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

By choice, an exhausted but resilient Kay Kinsey has developed into a walking experimental laboratory in her battle against chronic fatigue and immune dysfunction syndrome (CFIDS).

"The name stinks," Ms. Kinsey said. "You tell somebody, 'I've got chronic fatigue syndrome,'" and the person's reply often will be: "'Oh? Are you just tired all of the time?'"

And answer is: yes, sometimes more than others.

Chronic fatigue syndrome (CFS) is known as chronic Epstein-Barr virus and myalgic encephalomyelitis.

"We can all try to fight it together, or accept it together, or whatever," (and) be a support for each other," said Ms. Kinsey, a 39-year-old former pediatric nurse.

The state Senate has declared this week as "Chronic Fatigue and Immune Dysfunction Syndrome Week." In an effort to help educate people about the disease, the Midland-based chronic-fatigue group — West Texans Living with Chronic Fatigue and Immune Dysfunction Syndrome and Fibromyalgia Syndrome — is sponsoring a seminar on Friday.

The seminar — scheduled from 6 p.m. to 8 p.m. Friday at the Family Center of Golf Course Road Church of Christ — will feature Dr. Alex De Jesus, a San Antonio rheumatologist and clinical immunologist.

"It's very frustrating," Ms. Kinsey said. "I keep looking. I keep trying things. I will be my own guinea pig on this stuff."

Three years ago in Chattanooga, Tenn., Ms. Kinsey became ill with a flu-like illness.

"Something was wrong. As it went on, I started losing balance.

"It's like I came down with the flu, and the flu never went away," she said. "It's like . . . getting run over by a Mack truck."

She found herself "running into walls. And your unpredictable. There are lots of rewards after working hard when you are young," Sherrod said. "Summer Mummers brings out the kid in you."

Sherrod revels in the vaudeville spirit of Mummers. "And where else can you play the fast-paced ragtime?" he said. "There's never a dull moment in any Summer Mummers show. It's live theater, and every night is a new show."

Sherrod was born in Snyder and has lived in Midland since he was 3. He played the trumpet in the Lee High School band.

He also plays trombone, and when someone told him a trombone player was needed in the Mummers band, he went forth with trombone in hand during his senior year of high school. The theater bug bit.

Three years later, the Mummers' piano player left, and Sherrod stepped in. Now, he is an 18-year Mummers pit-band veteran. Between summers, he majored in music education at Texas Tech University and studied music therapy at West Texas A&M before attending a piano-tuning school in Grayson County.

"I learned to distinguish between beats and waves. When listening to two strings, beats or waves means one of two strings is out of tune," he said. "The object is to get the strings to sound in unison."

Tuning pianos, Sherrod said, has resulted in meeting "some of the nicest people in Midland."

Musicians are generally a cordial bunch," he said. "And helping out the owner of a piano is very rewarding."

Sherrod usually makes house calls to repair pianos, or brings them back to his household shop and practice room to tinker with them.

A diehard Midlander, Sherrod said he doesn't like the stress of big city living. "I like the slower pace of Midland and the wide open spaces," he said.

But no life is completely stress-free, and the musician said performing in Mummers is a form of therapy for actors and musicians.

He said throwing the popcorn for the audience is symbolic of letting the emotions fly. Likewise, performers "let out all their emotions on stage."

He said performer Mary Lou Cassidy, a Midland attorney, "probably really feels good clobbering guys with her purse" (in the movieola).

"Clobbering men with a purse certainly is good therapy," Ms. Cassidy said. "Beating on my idiot stick (in her one-woman band act) also helps."

She noted that the "idiot stick," equipped with cymbols and horns, is not a solo instrument. "Mike does a good job of following me, in whatever tempo I'm setting that night," she said.

Sherrod said the volunteer Mummers band has a repertoire of about 25 pieces, many reminiscent of Scott Joplin jazz tunes. As audience members file out, the band may play some requests.

He said banging on the ivories never gets boring.

"It's called 'show time,'" Sherrod said. "It's sparks, fireworks and excitement. Everybody improvises, and no matter what happens, the show goes on."

And when there is a call for a piano man, to offer tuning or playing skills, Sherrod is quick to answer the call.

Sometimes the Mummers spirit takes over after he has tuned a client's piano, and Sherrod has caught himself saying, "Put a quarter in," before breaking out into a ragtime melody. "And I give a small ragtime concert. Ragtime is much more appreciated now than when it came out. Times have changed, for the better."

brain's not working when you want it to . . . It's scary as all get-out."

Subsequently, doctors misdiagnosed her condition as Lyme disease and fibromyalgia before they decided it was chronic fatigue syndrome.

"A lot of doctors aren't familiar with it," Ms. Kinsey said. "They go by the trigger points, the muscle spasms and the pain. They instantly think you have fibromyalgia."

The year after she became ill, she returned to her hometown of Midland to recover from the illness. Ms. Kinsey was on a diet of whole foods, focused on herbal medicine and homeopathy, and "stayed pretty healthy."

When she returned to the demands and stains of her nursing career, she fell off her healthy-eating habits.

"I got off of it when I went back to work as a nurse. I was wrapped up with work.

"I could drink that Coke, and I could have that coffee and keep going. Everybody else was eating the stuff (junk foods). I'd take my blue corn chips up there, and everybody would laugh at me . . . It's really hard when you're working and (somebody brings junk-food) around."

After she finally accepted her illness, Ms. Kinsey found she had joined the ranks of other young professionals who had pushed themselves too hard and came down with chronic fatigue syndrome.

"This could be a personality trait that we have," she said. "I loved my job" even though it exposed her to many diseases.

In her earlier treatment for chronic fatigue, Ms. Kinsey had consulted many physicians, including specialists. They prescribed mild anti-depressants and cortisone.

Eventually she stopped taking the medication, which — particularly the anti-depressant drugs — made her feel like a zombie.

"I got off of everything. I'm better off," she said.

Today, Ms. Kinsey, who has quit smoking, is returning to a whole-food diet.

"It's hard to change your habits," she said. "I've had to change a lot of my habits. I need to get back . . . into the whole foods.

"A good diet of whole foods helps, but there's also a lot of (vitamin and mineral) supplements I've got to throw in there," Ms. Kinsey said.

"I'm on some enzyme products right now and an aloe-vera drink. It's amazing how it helps me. I'm a walking guinea pig. I try all this (health-food) stuff."

Park ranger drowns during police chase

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Two San Antonio men have been charged with causing a law enforcer's death after a park ranger drowned while chasing them, an officer said Monday.

Ranger Paul Pytel, 29, drowned Sunday while assisting San Antonio police in pursuing two shooting suspects through Martin Luther King Park, authorities said.

San Antonio police Sgt. David Ramos said 18-year-old Terry Battle and 19-year-old Frederick Burks were charged under the Calderon law, which was enacted Sept. 1, 1989. It was named for San Antonio officer Patricia Calderon, who in 1988 was chasing a suspect and drowned in the same creek as Pytel, Ramos said.

Ramos said Battle was charged with shooting at a 1981 Cadillac carrying four passengers, then fleeing on foot with Burks into the park. No one in the vehicle was injured, but an 83-year-old bystander, Lucas Dukes, was hit in the leg.

Dukes was treated at University Hospital and released, said hospital spokeswoman Doris Neugebauer.

Pytel and another ranger heard the shots and began pursuing the suspects. San Antonio police officers were called to the scene, Ramos said.

As a San Antonio officer was holding the suspects on one side of the creek, he saw Pytel on the other side. Then he heard a splash, but continued to handcuff the two men, Ramos said.

Six officers jumped into the water in an attempt to save the park ranger, who either jumped or fell into the water. He was found on the creek bottom in water about 6 feet deep, authorities said.

He was pronounced dead at Southeast Baptist Hospital.

Battle was charged with evading arrest with the special provision of causing death and four counts of aggravated assault.

CHINA: Liu enjoys her life in West Texas

ise of a scholarship and a place to live — it took Wei Wei two years to get permission from the Chinese government to leave China.

Wei Wei's biggest challenge was still ahead. "Thinking back, I couldn't believe I did it," she said of her decision to come to the United States. "But I was pretty adventurous in that sense."

Coming from Beijing — a city with a population of nearly 10 million people — to Midland was an adjustment. She remembers thinking, "Where are all the people?"

In China, people are shoulder to shoulder on the street with bicycles the primary mode of transportation. In West Texas, often it's hard to find anyone on the street, much less riding a bicycle, she said.

Language, too, was an adjustment. "In China, most of the English teachers are British, and we learned English with a British accent. Then, the first place I went in the United States was West Texas," she said.

Despite a certain amount of culture shock, she quickly began her studies.

At Midland College she took business law, computer classes and economics. She then attended UTPB where she received her master's in business adminstration in 1990. After graduating, she worked for three years for a computer firm in Los Angeles. Last year she opened her own business, which she describes as an import/export business.

"I like to be with people," she said. The business allows her the flexibility to seize whatever opportunity comes up, as long as the job is challenging. "I really want to be able to use my knowledge and also my language skills in business or cultural exchange," she said.

Her goal now is to use those skills to help companies set up businesses in China.

Her West Texas connection continues to be an important part of her life.

"It has been so rewarding for me — this whole experience," she said. She accompanied the Midland delegation to China in 1992, and she remains close to the people in the Sister City Association.

She is committed to the association's goals of economic and cultural exchange. After all, she said, China has one quarter of the world's population.

Another part of her stay in West Texas continues to follow her. When she moved to Los Angeles, people hearing her speak would say, you must be from West Texas.

Report: Loss of homestead exemption costs taxpayers

■ Texas homeowners paid extra $398 million last year, according to Texas Research League analysis.

Associated Press

AUSTIN — The loss of generous school property tax exemptions cost Texas homeowners $398 million last year, with the tax on an $80,000 homestead jumping an average $108, or 12.6 percent, according to a report released Monday.

Statewide, school tax rates increased by an average of 1 cent per $100 property valuation last year, and property values were up 1 percent. School tax revenues rose by $500 million, the report said.

The Texas Research League analysis of school funding for 1993-94 shows how much extra homeowners paid after the state Supreme Court threw out the county education district school funding system.

Under that system, in place for the 1991-92 and 1992-93 school years, taxpayers in most school districts voted themselves a 20 percent homestead exemption that applied to about two-thirds of their property tax bills.

But the Supreme Court found the county education districts unconstitutional. Voters rejected a proposed constitutional amendment that would have allowed the state to keep the system.

That forced lawmakers to find another way to meet a 1989 Supreme Court order to even out funding available to school districts of varying property wealth. Schools rely on state aid, local taxes and some federal money.

The new law — which, like the education districts, shifts property wealth — eliminated the 20 percent homestead exemption for the 1993-94 school year unless school boards acted to keep it by April 30, 1993.

The problem: The law wasn't approved until after that deadline. According to the Texas Association of School Boards, only 272 of the state's 1,000-plus school districts offered 1993-94 homestead exemptions over the state minimum $5,000.

GOP gubernatorial candidate George W. Bush's campaign has blamed Democratic Gov. Ann Richards for the loss of property tax exemptions, since she signed the bill into law.

Richards' campaign has noted that Republicans led opposition to the ballot proposal that would have allowed the system, with exemptions, to stay in place.

School boards this year had another chance to enact larger property tax exemptions for the 1994-95 school year.

A number of school districts are concerned because they are approaching the state property tax cap of $1.50 per $100 valuation for maintenance and operations, Casey said. That would leave them dependent on state aid or rising local property values to cover additional operating expenses, he said.

Trial begins in case of homosexual's slaying

KERRVILLE (AP) — The capital murder trial of Donald Aldrich began Monday with graphic descriptions of how an East Texas man was robbed, stripped and marched to his execution-style death because he was a homosexual.

"This is about as senseless a killing as you're going to find," prosecutor David Dobbs told jurors.

Aldrich, 29, is charged with the murder last Nov. 30 of Nicholus West, a 23-year-old medical records clerk whose bullet-riddled, half-naked body was found in the red clay countryside outside Tyler.

"Nicholus West, who is dead and gone, was selected as a victim by Mr. Aldrich and his buddies because he was a homosexual," said Dobbs, a Smith County prosecutor.

The slaying was the subject of widespread publicity after homosexual rights groups held demonstrations to call attention to the killing. Aldrich's trial was moved to Kerrville because of publicity in the Tyler area.

Dobbs urged jurors not to let their personal opinions about homosexuality affect their verdict.

"What this case is not is a referendum on homosexuality. That's not what it is," he said.

Defense attorney Bill Wright, left, watches his client Donald Aldrich, 29, as he gestures to other defense attorneys, Monday, before the start of Aldrich's trial in Kerrville.

Aldrich, a former fast-food restaurant manager, could face the death penalty if convicted.

Defense attorney Bill Wright in his opening statement acknowledged Aldrich was involved in the robbery of West, but said he never intended to kill him.

"I'm not going to come up here and tell you Donald Aldrich is an angel — that's just not true," Wright said. But he noted that Aldrich told investigators, "I'm a robber, not a murderer."

"He never intended to execute anybody," Wright said. "Mr. Aldrich never intended to cause the death of this individual — and did not."

Wright indicated he would try to shift blame to Henry Dunn Jr., 19. Dunn and another co-defendant, David Ray McMillan, 17, will be tried separately on capital murder charges.

In a videotaped confession, Aldrich told investigators he and his friends abducted West from Bergfeld Park in Tyler and took him to a dirt pit near the town of Noonday intending to steal cash and his truck. Aldrich said he panicked and fired two shots

State District Judge Joe D. Clayton has ruled jurors may hear parts of the confession.

"I've got a cousin that's a homosexual and he raped me when I was 9 years old. I've got a friend that had a daughter raped by some homosexuals," Aldrich said in the statement.

"I've got a lot against them. And a lot of times homosexuals are known for carrying quite a bit of money on them. So, that's where it comes in, with hitting them — kind of more or less like a vengeful-type thing," Aldrich said.

Woman killed for money, not love, prosecutors say

DALLAS (AP) — A woman accused of arranging and paying for the murder of her husband's mistress conceived the plan not out of love or jealousy, but for financial stability, prosecutors said Monday.

"I promise you love and honor didn't have anything to do with this murder. This killing was about money," prosecutor Kevin Chapman said in opening statements of the capital murder trial of Joy Davis Aylor.

Ms. Aylor, 44, is accused of masterminding the Oct. 4, 1983, murder of Rozanne Gailiunas, who was having an affair with Ms. Aylor's estranged husband, Larry Aylor.

Testimony began Monday in the trial, delayed since Ms. Aylor jumped bail in 1990 and led investigators on an international manhunt. The trial is expected to last about two weeks.

Earlier, state District Judge Pat McDowell struck down a motion to dismiss the case. Defense attorney Doug Mulder had argued that the recent discovery that the chief police investigator was paid about $100,000 in a book deal tainted his testimony and that of other witnesses.

Prosecutors allege that Ms. Aylor arranged the murder because she was financially dependent on her husband, a custom home builder in Dallas. She faces separate charges of planning an unsuccessful sniper attack on Larry Aylor in 1986, two months before their divorce.

Ms. Aylor has pleaded innocent to all charges. The defense did not present opening statements.

Using a slide presentation, Chapman chronicled the murder and described the major players, which include at least seven alleged accomplices.

He described how the gunman, George Anderson Hopper, went to Mrs. Gailiunas' suburban Dallas home on Oct. 4, 1983, under the guise of a flower delivery man. Once inside, he ordered Mrs. Gailiunas into her bedroom, told her to lie face-down on her bed and tied her arms and legs to the bed posts. He then attempted to rape her, strangled her with pantyhose and shot her twice in the head.

Commission approves settlement on collider with Energy Department

DALLAS (AP) — Faced with the alternative of expensive, protracted litigation, members of a commission that oversees Texas' investment in the super collider approved on Monday a settlement with the Department of Energy.

Shelton Smith, chairman of the Texas Natural Research Laboratory Commission, called the settlement a "good deal" for the state of Texas and the federal government.

"As a result of Congress' decision to terminate the collider, it appeared almost inevitable that the state of Texas and the United States Department of Energy were about to get into a legal war of massive proportions. As this commission ... knows, that would have been a war with no winners, only survivors," Smith said.

Congress killed the super collider in October. But dismantling the project has been delayed as the commission and Energy Department discussed dividing the project's assets.

Texas contributed $539 million of the more than $2 billion spent on the atom smasher before it was canceled. The state wanted to ensure it recouped its losses.

The settlement would give Texas up to $210 million in cash as well as title to the buildings and land on the super collider's sprawling campus — a total estimated value of $720 million.

In addition to $145 million in cash outright, Texas could receive another $65 million if the state's plan for a cancer treatment facility is approved under peer review. The state wants to take the collider's partially completed linear accelerator and use it to build a proton-beam cancer therapy center.

Smith said the commission could reject the entire settlement if the $65 million grant does not materialize.

The federal government, meanwhile, would retain ownership of the 14 miles of underground tunnel already drilled of the atom smasher's planned 54-mile oval. It would also keep half of the collider's equipment, ranging from supercomputers to cryogenics, with Texas able to purchase the other half at favorable rates.

Smith and commission director Phil Stafford outlined the settlement and the proposed alternative uses for the collider's assets. The state of Texas is studying an applied superconductivity and cryogenics technology center; a regional center for high-performance computers; medical uses of the collider's linear accelerator; and restoring the Blackland Prairie.

Jess Hay, chairman of the Governor's SSC Advisory Committee, said participants should celebrate the approval of the settlement, but they also must continue to be vigilant in protecting the state's interests in developing alternative uses for the assets.

"Let's not forget the importance of trying to find a way to utilize these assets, which are of tremendous value (and) which are state of the art in many ways. It would be a tragedy not to use them," he said.

Washington, D.C., attorney Daniel Joseph, who served as counsel to the commission, gave the settlement his stamp of approval.

A legal battle between the state and federal government would last "10 years minimum," he said.

Convicted killer from Vermont faces lethal injection today

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — Convicted killer Robert Drew insisted he was innocent of killing an Alabama teen-ager 11 years ago near Houston and did not deserve to be executed early today.

"The state refuses to admit they made a mistake," Drew said in an interview last week. "I am a little nervous. I'm pretty confident in my lawyers. I know they'll do everything.

"I'm ready if it comes to it. As I've said before, I love Jesus Christ, but I'm in no hurry to meet him."

Drew's attorneys, Ronald Kuby and William Kunstler, appealed to the federal courts Monday contending Drew was innocent of capital murder. They also were challenging the selection of his trial jury. In addition, they asked Gov. Ann Richards to grant a 30-day reprieve.

"We don't expect any federal court to give Drew a stay of execution," said Sonya Sanchez, a spokeswoman in the Texas attorney general's office.

The U.S. Supreme Court denied Drew a stay Monday with only Associate Justice Harry A. Blackmun dissenting. Blackmun is a death penalty opponent and routinely votes to grant stays of execution.

The ruling came after the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals, the state's highest criminal court, earlier rejected Drew's arguments.

The lethal injection would be the eighth this year and the 79th since Texas resumed the death penalty in 1982. The totals are the nation's highest.

Drew, 35, of West Pawlet, Vt., was convicted of the 1983 beating and stabbing death of 17-year-old Jeffrey Mays, of Birmingham, Ala., who had given hitchhiker Drew a lift toward Houston from Lake Charles, La.

Drew said another man in the car, Ernest Puralewski, was responsible for the slaying. Puralewski, now serving a 60-year prison term after pleading guilty, changed his earlier story that Drew also participated.

Official: Test scores of students show improvement in schools

AUSTIN (AP) — The number of schools ranked as low-performing by the state based on student test results has fallen from 326 last year to 55, a source close to Gov. Ann Richards said Monday.

A new standard for rating school performance is being used this year, prompting charges from Republican gubernatorial candidate George W. Bush that the rules have been changed to help the Democratic governor win re-election.

The Education Agency planned a news conference today to announce the new school rankings, but state leaders were briefed Monday on the results. The AP learned the number of low-performing schools from a source who spoke on condition of anonymity.

According to the source, even if the old standard had been maintained, the number of low-performing schools still would have dropped to 60. There are more than 6,000 Texas campuses.

The drop was due in part to a law requiring more grades to be tested on the Texas Assessment of Academic Skills, the reading, writing and math test that forms the basis for the rankings, the source said.

But the number of low-performing schools still would have decreased significantly without that change, the source said.

Education Commissioner Lionel "Skip" Meno has the power to close low-performing schools that don't improve.

"The numbers you have read to me show what we've been saying, that teachers and students in this state deserve a lot of credit, because they've worked real hard, and we're all proud of them," said Richards campaign spokeswoman Cindy Rugeley.

Bush's campaign lashed out at Richards and education officials over the figures.

"They changed the tests. They changed the grades which take the test. They changed the standards. They changed the yardstick by which they measure performance," said Karen Hughes, Bush spokeswoman.

"They are playing politics with the school children of Texas. They are saying that failure is acceptable in our Texas public schools," she said. "George Bush believes it's unacceptable, and it's time to change the governor and those in charge of our education system in Texas."

Responding, Ms. Rugeley said, "I think it's very unfortunate that George W. Bush can't give our schools the credit they deserve for doing better."

Last year, in order for a school's performance to be considered acceptable, 20 percent of the students had to pass all the TAAS exams they took.

This year, the state looked individually at the exams.

Judge postpones health-spa tycoon's hearing on passport fraud in Houston

HOUSTON (AP) — Former health-spa tycoon Richard Minns appeared without counsel Monday at his arraignment for passport fraud, prompting a federal judge to postpone the hearing until Friday.

Despite a swarm of attorneys huddled around the 64-year-old defendant, Minns told U.S. Magistrate Judge Maryrose Milloy he was still without legal representation 13 days after his arrest.

"No, your honor," Minns said, when asked if he had hired an attorney.

Federal rules prohibit an arraignment hearing if a defendant is without counsel. At an arraignment, charges are read to the defendant and he or she enters a plea.

Ms. Milloy rescheduled the hearing for Friday.

"What it is, is some breathing room so he can finalize some arrangements to hire an attorney," said attorney Richard "Racehorse" Haynes, Minns' former neighbor during the 1960s.

Minns, founder of the President and First Lady health clubs, left the country more than 12 years ago after two hired gunmen shot his former girlfriend, Barbara Piotrowski, outside a Houston doughnut shop.

An eight-count indictment says Minns used phony U.S. passports in his travels. It also says Minns, a citizen of Ireland and Israel, falsely claimed U.S. citizenship.

The millionaire was arrested July 19 at Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport during a layover on an international flight.

"What we're trying to do is put together a team of lawyers to work effectively together to bring about a speedy resolution to the man's problems," Haynes said about the delay in securing counsel.

Whether Haynes will be before the judge on Minns' behalf Friday is uncertain. However, Haynes' name already appears on court documents.

Minns, who is being held without bond, left the country about two years after the Piotrowski shooting. She later sued, accusing him of arranging the attack, and won a $32 million judgment that is now on appeal.

Opening lead: Two of ◇

For the past few weeks we have been railing against those who blindly accept maxims as writ rather than think logically about the situation. Here's another case.

Although nine tricks at no trump could be claimed, North-South reached a normal, if slightly aggressive, four-heart contract. It might seem that there are two losers in each black suit, but watch what happened after a diamond lead.

Declarer played the seven from dummy and East, obeying the precept of "third hand high," contributed the jack. That was taken in the closed hand, trumps were drawn and the South finessed the ten of diamonds. When that held, declarer was able to discard a loser on the king of diamonds and romped home with 10 tricks—six hearts, three diamonds and the ace of spades.

Had East applied reason rather than rote to the play at trick one, the winning defense would have been found. The only cards missing higher than dummy's seven of diamonds were the ace, queen and nine. Since it was most unlikely West was leading away from the ace of diamonds against a suit contract, that card can be assigned to declarer. Similarly, if South holds the queen as well, there's nothing to be done. Everything, therefore, hinges on who holds the nine of diamonds.

Let's assume that declarer has that card as well. What East does is immaterial. We've seen what happens if East plays the jack, and if East covers with the eight, the nine will win and declarer still comes to three tricks in the suit.

If West has the nine, though, the eight will force the ace. That holds declarer to two tricks in the suit and nine tricks in all.

Michael Jackson, Lisa Marie end rumor, confirm marriage

LOS ANGELES — Michael Jackson and Lisa Marie Presley confirmed Monday that they were married 11 weeks ago, ending months of rumors about a romance between the reclusive pair.

The union of Jackson, 35, and the 26-year-old daughter of Elvis Presley was announced in a statement issued by Jackson's MJJ Productions.

Michael Jackson, Lisa Marie Presley confirm marriage.

Tabloid reports last month said the two had wed secretly in the Dominican Republic.

"My married name is Mrs. Lisa Marie Presley-Jackson. My marriage to Michael Jackson took place in a private ceremony outside the United States weeks ago," the statement from Miss Presley read.

"It was not formally announced until now for several reasons; foremost being that we are both very private people living in the glare of the public media. We both wanted a private marriage ceremony without the distraction of a media circus.

"I am very much in love with Michael, I dedicate my life to being his wife. I understand and support him, we both look forward to raising a family and living a happy, healthy life together. We hope friends and fans will understand and respect our privacy."

BOSTON — Lady Bird Johnson said she was transported to another era Monday when she spent more than two hours at the John F. Kennedy Museum.

Lady Bird Johnson visited the John F. Kennedy Museum.

"What was especially dear, of course, were the pictures of Mrs. Kennedy with the children and her statements about the children. It's just a warm human moment and that has a great appeal," said the 81-year-old widow of President Lyndon Johnson. Johnson was JFK's vice president.

It was Mrs. Johnson's first visit to the museum since 1979, when it was dedicated. The exhibits were revamped last October to focus on Kennedy's White House years.

NEW YORK — What's it like working with director Oliver Stone? Torture, according to Robert Downey Jr.

"What's bearable to Oliver is excruciating to most," the actor told The New Yorker in its Aug. 8 issue. "I mean, it was like psychological warfare — loud music, these very hot sets, and certain phrases from Oliver like, 'What are you doing? You're going to ruin my movie!' "

In "Natural Born Killers," Downey is a TV tabloid journalist pursuing a serial-slayer couple played by Woody Harrelson and Juliette Lewis. The film comes out Friday.

ATLANTA — Jane Fonda, feminist icon, has this advice for tourists — when in trouble, cry.

"If you're ever in a situation where you're not getting served or you can't get what you need, just cry," said Fonda, who was at the Goodwill Games in Russia with her husband, Ted Turner. Turner founded the games.

The two-time Oscar winner told The Atlanta Journal-Constitution she came to this conclusion in 1962, during her first visit to Russia. She had stepped into a Moscow elevator, but the operator was reading a letter. She waited, but the operator wouldn't take her upstairs.

"I burst into tears," the 56-year-old actress said, "and the minute I started crying, he was all, 'Can I do anything for you?' I think that's what he was saying."

Fonda said she tried crying again a week later in a restaurant when she couldn't get served, and it worked.

OJAI, Calif. — Mary Steenburgen helped raise $15,000 for AIDS at a premiere of her movie "It Runs in the Family."

"Here's a disease where you know you are going to die," Miss Steenburgen said Sunday at the Ojai Playhouse Theater. "I think it is important for AIDS patients to die with dignity."

The money will benefit Christopher House, a home for people with AIDS.

Last year, Miss Steenburgen had a role in "Philadelphia" as a lawyer for a firm that fires a man with AIDS.

In "It Runs in the Family," which opens on Friday, Miss Steenburgen is wife to actor Charles Grodin. The film, set in the 1940s, is about a boy's passage into manhood. It is directed by Bob Clark.

DEAR ABBY

Children provide bright colors in rich tapestry of our lives

DEAR ABBY: Regarding bringing children to graduation ceremonies: About 30 years ago, when my youngest sister was planning her wedding, her three older sisters expressed concern about bringing our children — who numbered eight in all.

Van Buren

She not only insisted that all family members share in her moment of joy, all of her five nieces dressed alike and were her attendants. The babies fussed, the girls squirmed, and we did our best to maintain some level of calm and dignity. But even the minister took note of the children's activities and commented on the richness of the wedding.

He reminded everyone that weddings were family affairs and children were an important part of the family — a wise reminder in this day of putting children last, or omitting them altogether.

Many years later, when I graduated from college (I was the last of five children to do so), this same crowd of kids, plus a couple more who had been born in the interim, came to my graduation. They were the greatest cheering section in the auditorium. — PAT

DEAR ABBY: Speaking about graduation ceremonies, when I attended my sister's graduation from college, the entire audience stood up and applauded when a 24-year-old woman was handed her diploma — she was holding her 2-month-old baby in her arms! Sign me . . . PROUD IN NEW JERSEY

DEAR ABBY: It seems to me a graduation is a family affair, so I bring my children and try to keep them as quiet and well-behaved as possible. But there will always be a baby crying or cooing somewhere, moms and dads whispering, flashbulbs going off, or a dad with his video camera walking back and forth — and a grandfather snoring. — BRENDA P. IN PHOENIX

DEAR ABBY: I am 37 years old, and this is my first letter to you. I have a question: When did "Here you go" replace "Thank you" in our vernacular? I think I might scream the next time I make a purchase and the cashier hands me my product, and instead of saying "Thank you," says, "Here you go!" I usually will look at the cashier and say, "You're welcome." Most of the time I do this, I get a puzzled look from the cashier.

Please tell me that this is happening only in California. I would hate to think that this also goes on in the Midwest. Where are the managers of these stores? Aren't they training their clerks? Where's the appreciation for having shopped at their store?

This has happened to me in discount chains, grocery stores, Wal-Mart, J.C. Penney, Macy's, etc. In short, this happens everywhere.

Am I the only person driven crazy by this lack of courtesy and appreciation? Am I the only person ready to quit shopping where the cashier doesn't know how to say "Thank you"?

Thank you, Abby, for listening. — JENNIFER IN ROCKLIN, CALIF.

DEAR JENNIFER: If this is your biggest problem, you take the prize for being the luckiest person who ever wrote a "Dear Abby" letter. It's possible that clerks at Wal-Mart, J.C. Penney and Macy's want a little respite from the routine "Thank you" — or "Have a nice day."

To order "How to Write Letters for All Occasions," send a business-sized, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Letter Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054-0447. (Postage is included.)

Florida town where Hemingway once lived cashes in, lures visitors

N.Y. Times News Service

KEY WEST, Fla. — Taking a cue from the folks at Disney World, this tiny resort island has finally come up with a mascot it can plaster on everything in sight, and it is not a rodent. It's Ernest Hemingway.

"The mouse is to Orlando what Hemingway is to Key West," said Gerry Tinlin, a resort manager who has been president of the Key West hotel and motel association. "Would Key West have the same lure, the same mystique, the same image without Ernest Hemingway? I think not."

Like Mickey Mouse, Papa Hemingway, who once lived here, lures visitors. His likeness beams from T-shirts, baseball caps, coffee mugs and bar coasters, all part of a marketing frenzy of the past few years. It peaks each July with the Hemingway Days Festival, a weeklong celebration of drinking, fishing and writing.

This year's festival ended Saturday night with a Hemingway look-alike contest at Sloppy Joe's Bar, a tourist spot that calls itself "Hemingway's favorite." It is best known for its T-shirt featuring Hemingway.

Beer flowed, men in safari gear talked tough and the few Hemingway wannabes who showed up in cable-knit sweaters suffered in the subtropical heat.

But, purists wondered, had anyone here actually read a Hemingway book?

"They've probably read 'The Old Man and the Sea' in high school," said Kim Alexander, a saleswoman at Key West Island Books, one of several bookshops selling Hemingway T-shirts alongside paperback editions of his work, which she said vacationers gobbled up for beach reading.

"You slap Ernie's face on anything, and people will buy it," Ms. Alexander said. "We're more than happy to take their money."

But other Key West businesses often take the Hemingway marketing too far, she said, citing a recent newspaper advertisement for a new fitness club. "It said it was Ernest Hemingway's favorite place to work out," Ms. Alexander said, raising an eyebrow because the writer died in 1961.

In Europe, the "Hemingway drank here" label might be a cliche; but here in Key West, it is a running joke. New bars and restaurants have opened bearing his name. A fishing yacht, named Pilar after Hemingway's famous boat, runs nostalgia cruises. And Hemingway fishing tournaments give anglers a chance to chase marlin in the Gulf Stream.

But the biggest crowds flock to the Hemingway Home and Museum, which, aside from Key West's daily celebration of sunset, is the island's top attraction, Tinlin said. The tour features six-toed cats, alleged to be descendants of the writer's pets, which roam the grounds of the walled compound.

AT WIT'S END

Rattling sound comes from rocks in their heads

This is the time of year in Arizona when people look where they're going and walk on the sunny side of the rocks. It's stinking hot, and it's snake time.

Bombeck

We hear relatively few stories about snakebites, but Peter Aleshire reported an incredible story in The Arizona Republic. A man was bitten on the tongue while kissing a rattlesnake.

Now here's the weird part. He decided to try a non-scientific, quack-type remedy he heard about to counteract a snakebite. A word of caution: Do not try this in your own home. He heard that if you ran an electrical current through the wound, it is supposed to break down the venom. So, after he was bitten, he wired his mouth to a pickup truck battery and tried to jump-start his tongue. It knocked him out cold, and he ended up in the hospital, where he lost part of his tongue and one lip.

My views on snakes are well-known. I do not for a single minute believe they're as afraid of me as I am of them. They are not trying to get out of my way when they see me coming, and people who keep them around to keep the rodent population down should be heavily sedated.

When my husband and I first moved to this state, we were invited one night to the town of Prescott to witness a festival celebrating Indian lore. It featured a group of men with a snake tattooed on their arms who performed the famous "Smoki Snake Dance." Our host was a "Smoki."

As a couple of dozen men danced around a circle to the beat of a tom-tom, each dancer was given a snake (non-poisonous). He was to clench the snake between his teeth closely behind the head and just out of striking distance while he held the tail in his hand and waved it around as he kept the beat.

When the dance was over, we went down to the field to say good night to our host. There was blood streaming down his face as he said, "Shoot, I got bit last year too. Next year, I've got to get a better grip on him closer to the head."

When I asked him where all the snakes had gone, he looked around him on the ground and said, "We just release 'em when we're finished. They're probably halfway to the parking lot by this time."

The University of Arizona Poison Control Center was quoted as saying that most snakebites come from people kissing snakes, playing with them and handling them on a routine basis.

Do you see a personality profile developing here anywhere?

America's worst boss is modern-day Scrooge

By Larry McShane
Associated Press

NEW YORK — The nation's worst boss is a modern-day Scrooge — never a kind word and firing employees on Christmas Eve.

A Top 10 list of why she's the worst stretched out to 21 items. The employee who submitted the list won a much-needed Hawaiian vacation, courtesy of Jim Miller, author of the how-to management book "The Corporate Coach."

For the second year, Miller encouraged America's workers to nominate their bosses for the distinction of worst in the United States.

They did, with 1,028 people citing their leader as the lowest of the management low. The winning entry came from an employee who remains an underling of the worst boss and is understandably writing anonymously.

Ripken reaches milestone 2,000

AP Laserphoto

Baltimore's Cal Ripkin ...plays 2,000th consecutive game.

■ Cal Ripken has just another day on the job as Orioles top Minnesota 1-0.

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — To Cal Ripken, it was just another day on the job. To everyone else, it was so much more.

Ripken played his 2,000th straight game Monday night, marching closer toward one of sports' most remarkable and respected records.

He became only the second major leaguer to make it that far when he again went all nine innings in the Baltimore Orioles' 1-0 win over Minnesota. He now trails Lou Gehrig, who played 2,130 in a row, and like the great Iron Horse himself, was humble about his accomplishment.

"I know somebody wants me to stand up and say, 'I'm here!' but I can't do that," Ripken said. "I'm here because I like to play."

"Yeah, it's a big, round number," he said. "But to me, 2,000 is another game."

Ripken went 0-for-4, stranding three runners in scoring position. He made two strong plays at shortstop, one from behind second base and the other from deep in the hole.

"I wish I could've gotten a hit or two, but I didn't," he said. "Maybe in some small way, I contributed to a win."

The crowd of 27,712 gave Ripken a standing ovation when he came to bat in the first inning, increasing its applause after the public-address announcer said he was playing his 2,000th straight game.

Ripken, ever the reluctant hero, waved to the fans, then took off his helmet.

Ripken was originally supposed to reach the mark at home Saturday night, but two games in Seattle two weeks ago were postponed because of falling ceiling tiles at the Kingdome.

The big games will come next year when Ripken closes in on Gehrig's record. The Orioles asked that they be home for the occasion, and the tentative 1995 schedule has accommodated them.

Barring complications from a strike, Ripken will match the mark on June 20 against the New York Yankees — fittingly, Gehrig's old team — and break it the next day with game No. 2,131 against the Yankees at Camden Yards.

"I've never been obssessed with Mr. Gehrig or tried to erase his record," Ripken said. "I just wanted to play."

It started on May 30, 1982, when Ripken was a fresh-faced, rookie third baseman for the Orioles.

Along the way, Ripken has hit the most home runs of any shortstop and also set a single-season record for fewest errors at the position. He's also turned a bit gray around the temples, and his hair on top is now thin, three weeks before his 34th birthday.

"The luck of staying away from injuries . . . all of a sudden, there was a streak," he said.

There have been close calls — he twisted his right knee during a brawl between the Orioles and Seattle in June 1993 and almost had to sit. But he has managed to start every LUBBOCK — Former Texas Tech assistant basketball coach Phil Wallace has filed a racial discrimination lawsuit against the school and head coach James Dickey.

The lawsuit, filed May 31 in federal court in Fort Worth, recently was transferred to Lubbock.

Wallace, who is black, alleges he was the victim of racial harassment, discrimination and retaliation. His lawsuit says the use of racial slurs is pervasive by members of Tech's coaching staff.

"I think this is a totally false complaint without merit," Dickey was quoted in the Lubbock Avalanche-Journal last week.

Wallace played for Texas Tech in 1984 and 1985. He lives in Hurst.

He started working at Tech in August 1991. His contract was not renewed the following June.

"That was a decision I made based on the evaluation process we all go through," Dickey said. "I stand by it."

Bowl alliance

DALLAS — Athletic conference commissioners may be considering a plan in which two bowls could split a bid, allowing for four Tier 1 bowls in the alliance, according to a published report.

Sources close to the NCAA Division I-A commissioners told The Dallas Morning News in Monday's editions that commissioners still were considering which bowls will begin play in the exclusive three-bowl lineup after the 1995 regular season. Commissioners heard bid proposals from nine bowls Thursday, but said Friday they needed another week to make a decision on the three winners.

But a consideration by the commissioners this week, because the bids are so close financially, would be to allow two bowls to split a bid and alternate years in which they were in Tier 1, The News reported.

The commissioners are expected to make an announcement by this Friday.

Dallas City Councilman Glenn Box, a member of the Cotton Bowl's alliance committee, said he believes the commissioners are considering seriously the Fiesta, Gator, Sugar, Orange and Cotton bowls.

Sources told The News that there is a "geographical preference" against having two bowls — the Fiesta and Cotton — in the West in a single year. By alternating them, there would never be more than one in the West per year.

No...the other Kenny Rogers

■ Ranger hurler Kenny Rogers prepares to pitch again after becoming the most famous person with his name.

By Jaime Aron
Associated Press

ARLINGTON — Texas Rangers pitcher Kenny Rogers has watched replays of his perfect game over and over, yet he still gets nervous every time.

"I'm still waiting for that guy to get a hit," Rogers said with some seriousness behind his grin. "I keep thinking he's going to get one every single time I look at it. I think it's going to change while I'm watching it.

"I already know the outcome, but it seems like it still can't be true. It's unbelievable."

Less than a week after joining the likes of Cy Young and Sandy Koufax among only a dozen pitchers with perfect games, Rogers must get over the shock in time to pitch tonight against the Chicago White Sox.

He thinks he can, but there's a lot to get over.

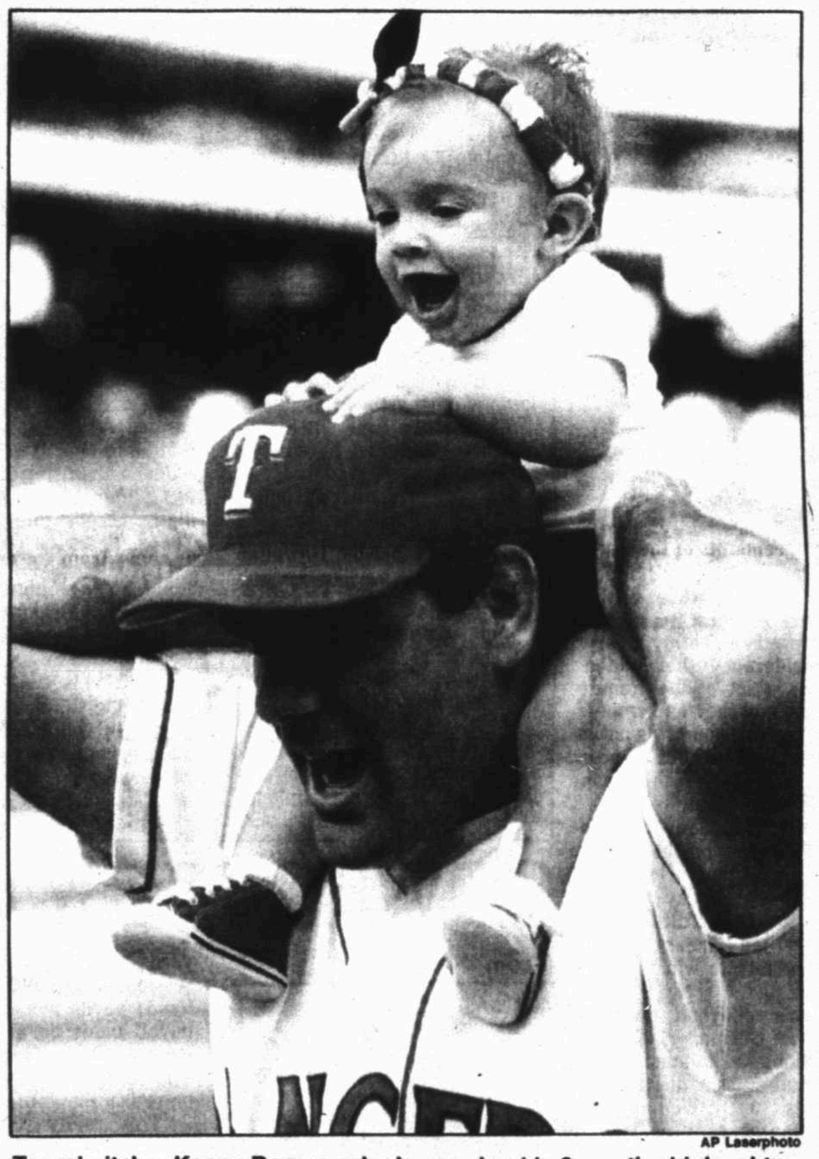

Since the 4-0 gem Thursday against California, Rogers has temporarily become the most famous person with his name.

That "other" Kenny Rogers even sent the pitcher a congratulatory telegram, as did Koufax, who occasionally has worked with Rangers pitchers.

"I'll frame them both," Rogers said. "When you get something from Koufax, even acknowledging you're alive, that's great."

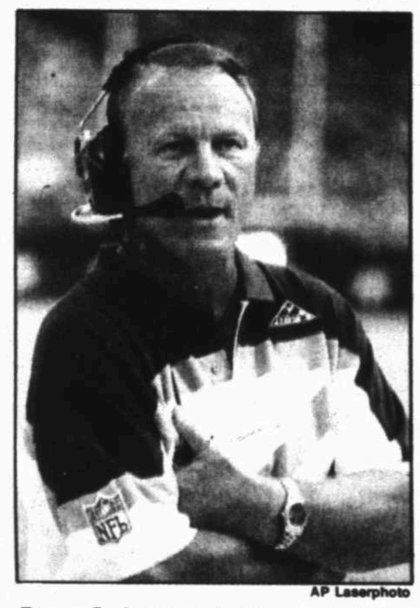

The Hall of Fame has called, too.

Barry Switzer got his first taste of coaching in the NFL Sunday night.

Switzer enjoys first outing on Dallas sideline

IRVING (AP) — Barry Switzer's first big decision came at 13:40 of the second quarter.

It was fourth and one on the Minnesota 33-yard line.

How now, Barry, a field goal try? A pooch punt? Go for the first down?

Switzer opted for option No. 3, sending 250-pound tailback Lincoln Coleman up the middle for the first down.

"I enjoyed it out there," said a sweating Switzer after the Dallas Cowboys' 17-9 NFL preseason victory over the Minnesota Vikings. "It was hot and humid. But it was fun and exciting. I wasn't nervous or concerned."

Then he quickly added, "I suppose that may change when the regular sea-

Angels halt losing streak with 9-7 win

By Bill Petitt
Staff Writer

As the summer turns to fall in West Texas when the name Emmitt is spoke of in sports terms, the Floridian with the silver star on his helmet immediately comes to mind.

But, on this night the Emmitt referred to is name that has been forgotten on the Midland Angels roster for much of the summer. Emmitt Cohick, mired in a .173 slump for much of the summer, hit a one-out two-run home run in the top of the first that ignited the Angels to a 9-7 win over Wichita at Christensen Stadium Monday night.

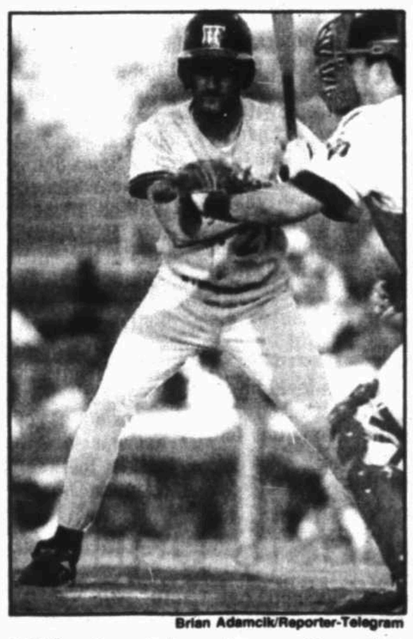

With the win, Midland moves into a second-place tie with San Antonio in the Texas League West, and while a parting of the red sea seems more likely than the Angels catching the division-leading El Paso Diablos, it does provide some consolation to a team that is still smarting for a team-wide suspension that continues throughout the series.

The suspensions are in response to a bench-clearing incident against Shreveport on July 28. Monday night, pitcher Kyle Sebach, outfielder Mike Wolff and catcher Jose Monzon were supposed to be serving their fines. But Midland manager Mario Mendoza spoke with Texas League President Tom Kyser and was able to adjust the fine rotation to allow one position player and one pitcher to serve each day.

"We were able to move Sebach's suspension to Aug. 4-5, which will keep him from missing a start," said Mendoza. "(The suspensions) would have disrupted our pitching rotation and we would have put our guys in the position of suffering an injury.

"We do not have enough position players to have two sit out a day. There was a big possibility of us having to forfeit a game if we would not have worked out this suspension. It's not fair, it's a stu-

Oilers' Slaughter anxious after surgery

By Michael A. Lutz
AP Sports Writer

SAN ANTONIO — The doctors have their timetable and Webster Slaughter has his.

Slaughter snapped two ligaments in his left knee last Dec. 19 and was told after reconstructive surgery on Dec. 28 it would be nine months before he could resume playing, if then.

Less than seven months later, Slaughter was back at the Oilers training camp, begging to get into an exhibition game. Slaughter insists he can play during the preseason. Doctors tell him to wait for the regular season.

The coaches have resisted his demands so far but they can't stop him from running routes on the side lines, making cuts that cause trainers to cringe, hoping the knee holds.

"I think I should be able to do it but I don't think they'll let me do it," Slaughter said. "Right now I'm just doing individual stuff. But in a couple of weeks I'll get more involved.

And the regular season?

"I don't think I'll 100 percent but I feel I'll be back in September," Slaughter said. "I feel about 85 percent right now and if I keep getting this leg stronger I'll be ready."

After signing with the Oilers in 1992, Slaughter took most of the season to fit himself into the Oilers run-and-shoot offense but he was ready for the 1993 season.

He caught 39 passes with the Oilers in his first season, playing in 12 games and starting nine.

Then, he gave the Oilers what they expected in 1993. He led the AFC in receiving most of the season, starting 14 games and making 77 catches, a career high.

But it ended as Slaughter tried to throw a block for running back Gary Brown against the Pittsburgh Steelers, the same day the Oilers clinched the AFC Central Division title.

When the incident occurred, Slaughter tried to deny the feeling. He pushed trainers aside and tried to get up. It didn't work. Then he refused to admit that his career was in jeopardy.

He still hasn't.

"I don't think there's any question, based on what I've done so far," Slaughter said. "I was worried if I could cut again the same way with the same amount of pressure that I used to do.

"So far, I think I can."

With Slaughter's return uncertain, the Oilers faced a serious decision whether to resign the injured Pro Bowler. They decided Slaughter was worth it.

"I advocated that we do it, because I believe in him," Gilbride said. "If there is a guy who can come back from that

Miller picks up pace in Goodwill gymnastics

ST. PETERSBURG, Russia (AP) — Shannon Miller wouldn't settle for second best this time.

A day after finishing second in the all-around competition, the U.S. gymnast reasserted her dominance Monday by winning two gold medals and two silvers in the individual apparatus finals.

"I like a challenge," the 17-year-old Miller, of Edmond, Okla., said. "I like to rise to the challenge. I did at this competition and I feel really good about that."

Miller, the most decorated U.S. gymnast in history, won gold in the balance beam and floor exercise and silver in the vault and uneven bars. That brought her medal total for the Games to five — two golds and three silvers.

Miller finished ahead of Russia's Dina Kochetkova, who had beaten her by .057 points for the all-around title Sunday. It was Miller's first loss in two years.

"Shannon Miller proved she is the best gymnast in the world," her coach Steve Nunno said. "After yesterday, we had a little discussion and I told her, 'You have another chance. You can prove it by showing you are better in every event. You have the opportunity to redeem yourself.' She did and she walked away with a fistful of medals."

Miller scored 9.824 in the vault to finish behind Liliya Podkopyeva of Ukraine with 9.831. On the uneven bars, Svetlana Khorkina of Russia won with 9.862 points, while Miller had 9.850.

Miller won the beam finals with 9.875 points. She started with a front somersault to the bar and ended with a full twisting back double somersault. In between, she added a pair of reverse splits and had a series of a back handsprings followed by two back aerials.

Miller capped her day with an outstanding floor routine, earning a 9.937.

"I knew I had to come in and hit my routines," she said. "I tried to do my best in both competitions. And it seems I got better as the days went by. I got more used to the equipment. I knew it was going to be a challenge."

Miller said she had gotten over the disappointment of finishing second Sunday in the all-around, her first loss since taking the silver at the 1992 Olympics.

"It doesn't help to look back and think: What if?" she said. "It was so close. I don't look at it as a loss. I won a silver."

There was another medal for the United States, but this one was a surprise. Marianna Webster, 15, who trains with Miller at the Dynamo Academy in Oklahoma, won a bronze in the beam. It was Webster's first medal in major international competition.

"It really means a lot to me," she said. "I think that this kind of makes a name for me in the international scene."

Webster was originally listed in fifth place with a score of 9.625. But Nunno appealed to the judges, arguing that they had not awarded her enough points based on the difficulty of her routine. The judges revised Webster's score to 9.725, moving her up to third.

"The judges were absolutely wrong," Nunno said. "They admitted it and they changed it."

It was one in a series of scoring errors and computer glitches during the three days of women's gymnastics.

American Shannon Miller won one of her two gold medals in the floor exercise Monday.

But there were also problems Monday at the Yubileiny Palace of Sports, venue for the short-track and figure skating competitions.

Workers were still pouring water on the concrete floor to make the ice, but unseasonably hot weather was slowing the freezing process. Practices were moved to an adjacent rink, where the ice was soft and brown.

"I can't imagine having a competition as big as this one and having preparations like this happen," American skater Elaine Zayak said.

Organizers insisted the ice would be ready for Tuesday's short-track events and Wednesday's figure skating, although not everyone was so sure.

"Ice will be ready, don't worry," Deputy Mayor Vitaly Mutko said. "This is a very serious matter for us — half of Russia's national team comes from St. Petersburg and we don't want to let the city down."

Ten days ago, the swimming competition was put off for a day because a faulty filtration system left the water in the pool a dark, murky color.

Ted Turner, founder of the games, said the event had experienced only a few minor "glitches."

"There's glitches everywhere," he said. "There's glitches at the Olympics, too. ... When you put on an event of this magnitude, you're going to have glitches."

"It's run pretty smoothly, everything considered," he added. "There was a lot of last-minute preparations and they had trouble funding it, but this country's not in the greatest financial situation in the world. I think everything considered it's been great."

In other events Monday, Olga Sedakova of Russia won the gold in the solo competition of synchronized swimming. Becky Dyroen-Lancer of the United States was second. Dyroen-Lancer teamed with Jill Sudduth to win the duet competition.

In women's volleyball, the United States beat Germany 3-0, China defeated Cuba 3-1, Japan swept Peru 3-0 and Russia downed the Netherlands 3-0. Wednesday's semifinal matchups are: United States vs. China, and Russia vs. Japan.

Reds win 4th straight over Giants

Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — The Cincinnati Reds hit three solo homers and used a passed ball in the ninth inning for the go-ahead run to win their fourth straight game Monday, 4-3 over the San Francisco Giants.

■ NL Roundup

Pinch-runner Jacob Brumfield, in for Brian Hunter, who had walked, came home when reliever Steve Frey's pitch bounced off the glove of Giants catcher Kirt Manwaring.

Dave Burba (2-6) started the ninth for the Giants and retired one batter before walking Hunter. After Brumfield stole second, Tony Fernandez walked and Bret Boone, who homered earlier, grounded out to advance the runners.

Frey relieved and walked pinch-hitter Brian Dorsett, as Brumfield came home on ball four.

Johnny Ruffin (7-2) got the win with two innings of scoreless relief. Jeff Brantley pitched the ninth for his 13th save.

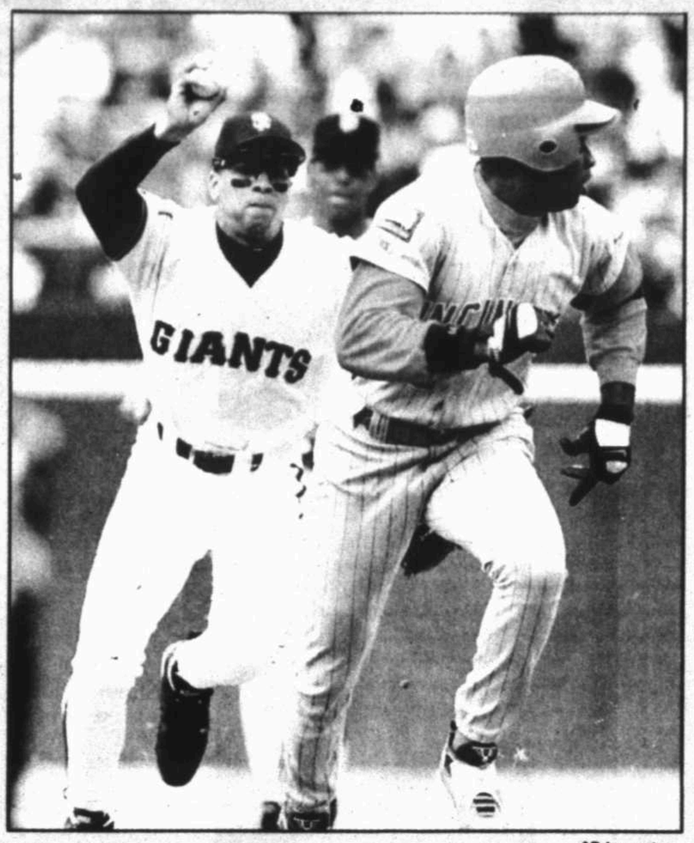

Matt Williams hit his major league-leading 41st home run for the Giants in the fifth to cut it to 2-1.

Rockies 8, Astros 3

HOUSTON — Lance Painter pitched four-hit ball over five innings and Mike Kingery had four hits as Colorado continued its mastery over Houston.

It was Houston's fourth straight loss as the Astros dropped 3½ games behind the Cincinnati Reds in the NL Central Division. The Astros led the division by a half game five days ago.

The Rockies are now 17-4 over the last two seasons against Houston, 5-2 this year.

Cincinnati's Deion Sanders is chased by Giants' Royce Clayton before Sanders is eventually tagged out in the rundown.

Jeff Bagwell hit his 37th homer for the Astros, a two-run shot in the fourth that tied Jimmy Wynn's club record. Bagwell pushed his major league-leading RBI total to 107.

Braves 4, Mets 2

NEW YORK — Greg Maddux pitched an eight-hitter for his major-league leading ninth complete game as Atlanta defeated New York.

Maddux (14-6) struck out eight and walked one as the Braves won for the fourth time in five games.

Fred McGriff hit his 28th homer of the season on an 0-1 pitch off loser Jason Jacome (4-2) in the second.

Jacome, in his sixth major-league start, accounted for New York's first run with an infield single in the second inning. He gave up two runs on five hits while striking out three and walking one in seven innings.

Bobby Bonilla hit a two-out homer in the eighth, his 20th of the season, to cut it to 3-2.

Expos 3, Cardinals 2, (10)

MONTREAL — Marquis Grissom hit an inside-the-park homer off Rich Rodriguez in the bottom of the 10th inning to give Montreal a victory over St. Louis.

Grissom led off the inning with his 10th homer, a shot off the glove of center fielder Gerald Young in deep center field.

Young tried to make an over-the-shoulder catch, but the ball glanced off his glove and caromed along the wall towards left field as Grissom, who never hesitated, raced around the bases and beat shortstop Ozzie Smith's relay to the plate.

The NL East-leading Expos have won 12 of their last 13 games, while St. Louis lost for the eighth time in nine outings.

Cubs 8, Marlins 5

CHICAGO — Chuck Crim was victorious in his first start in seven years, leading Chicago to a victory over Florida, who lost its seventh straight game.

Rick Wilkins and Rey Sanchez each drove in two runs in a five-run first inning as the Cubs won for the 10th game in their last 14 games.

Crim (5-4), a last-minute replacement for the injured Mike Morgan, gave up six hits and two runs over 5 1-3 innings. He did not walk a batter and struck out four.

It was Crim's sixth major-league start and first since 1987 when he pitched for Milwaukee. His only other win as a starter was June 2, 1987, over Kansas City, in his first major-league start.

game during the streak, including two games in which he was ejected in the first inning, and played more than 99 percent of innings during that time.

All that at a time when players miss games for all sorts of reasons.

Ken Griffey Jr. sat out a day last week because he was in a slump. Dave Winfield missed a day because he was facing a tough pitcher. Andres Galarraga had his hand fractured by a pitch. Rick Sutcliffe was suspended for throwing at a hitter and Albert Belle was benched for using a corked bat.

In all, approximately 75 players were on the disabled list last week, about one-tenth of all major leaguers. During Ripken's streak, more than 3,100 players have gone on the disabled list.

Indians 6, Tigers 2

CLEVELAND — Paul Sorrento, Carlos Baerga and Manny Ramirez homered Monday night as Cleveland, playing without suspended Albert Belle, came from behind to beat Detroit.

Jason Grimsley struck out eight in 7 2-3 innings to help stop the Indians' three-game losing streak. They pulled within 1½ games of the AL Central-leading Chicago White Sox, who were idle.

Lou Whitaker homered, doubled and scored twice for the Tigers, who are 0-4 at Jacobs Field.

Royals 4, Athletics 2

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Mark Gubicza allowed three hits in eight shutout innings as Kansas City beat Oakland and extended its winning streak to 10 games.

Gubicza (7-8) struck out three and walked one as the Royals stretched their winning streak to the club's longest in 16 years. Jeff Montgomery got his 24th save after making a two-run throwing error with the bases loaded in the ninth.

Yankees 8, Brewers 3

MILWAUKEE — Melido Perez gave up five hits in eight innings and Mike Gallego hit a two-run homer as New York beat Milwaukee.

Perez (9-3) overcame a wild third inning, when he hit Kevin Seitzer just below the left eye with a pitch. Seitzer left under his own power and was taken to a hospital. The Brewers said he sustained a sinus fracture.

Perez, who hasn't lost since June 8, won his fourth consecutive decision and for the sixth time in nine starts, striking out seven — including Greg Vaughn three times. Perez walked one and threw two wild pitches.

Blue Jays 6, Red Sox 2
Red Sox 4, Blue Jays 3

BOSTON — Mo Vaughn homered to cap a four-run first inning as Boston defeated Toronto 4-3 Monday and gained a split of their twi-night doubleheader.

Toronto won the first game 6-2 as Joe Carter hit his 300th career homer and Pat Hentgen pitched a six-hitter for his sixth complete game.

In the second game, Nate Minchey — called up from the minors between games of the doubleheader — was helped by three double plays. Minchey (2-3) allowed eight hits in seven innings and lowered his ERA from 11.25 to 8.61.

COWBOYS: Switzer gets A-plus in debut

(From 1C)

comes."

Switzer got an A-plus in his coaching debut with the Cowboys. Switzer found out just how easy his job can be Sunday night.

He simply turned things over to quarterback Troy Aikman, just like Jimmy Johnson did.

"Judging by the performance we had from our first team Sunday night it doesn't matter who the coach is," Aikman said. "Our offensive line did just a super job. We were sharp the short time we were in there."

Owner Jerry Jones hired Switzer on March 30 to replace Johnson. Switzer won two national titles in 16 years at Oklahoma and hadn't coached football for five years when he got the call.

Jones was on the sidelines at the end of the game to give Switzer a handshake.

"I thought Barry did an excellent job," Jones said. "But I knew he would."

Said Switzer: "I don't feel I have anything to prove to anybody. I was happy for the team, not for myself."

Aikman took the Cowboys 65 yards in 11 plays on their first possession, hitting all six of his passes for 52 yards along the way. The payoff came on a 2-yard scoring pass to fullback Daryl Johnston. It was the only possession Aikman played in the game.

"Troy really seemed to be in control," Switzer said. "He was impressive."

Rodney Peete, Aikman's backup who was a starter last year for Detroit, hit rookie Willie Jackson, a fourth-round draft pick from Florida, with a 26-yard touchdown pass in the second quarter.

The only points for the Vikings came on a 46-yard Cary Blanchard field goal with 7:44 left in the game and a Brad Johnson to Qadry Ismail 5-yard touchdown pass.

Warren Moon, who played 10 years for Houston, made his Minnesota debut, hitting four of seven passes for 45 yards as he played only the first period.

Switzer said Aikman's performance is the main thing he will remember from the game.

"Troy's performance just kind of jumps out at you," Switzer said. "That was something."

Dallas lost second-string running back Derrick Lassic with a knee injury in the first period. He will be scheduled for surgery this week to repair a torn quadriceps tendon in his right knee.

The second-year back from Alabama likely will be out three to four months, and because of roster ramifications likely will be placed on injured reserve, which would mean he would be ineligible to play any at all this season.

"Losing Lassic was the big downer of the night," Aikman said. "It's a shame for Derrick. He had gained 25 pounds and was having as good a camp as anybody on the team."

"It just makes you sick to think you've lost a quality player like him, not only a quality player, but a good player," Cowboys head coach Barry Switzer said Monday. "Here you're losing a player who can win ball games for you."

Switzer said: "Not only is he a good player, he's a good kid, someone who always has a smile on his face that the players like and respond to."

Cowboys trainer Kevin O'Neill initially termed the injury a "partial tear," but Monday's magnetic resonance imaging test revealed enough of a tear to require surgery.

The Cowboys also take a hit on the salary cap. Lassic will count $172,000 against the Cowboys salary cap even though he might not play a down. He also will count against the Cowboys' maximum of 53 players on the roster.

"We're going to have to go with what we've got because of the cap situation," Switzer said. "Makes you play (the preseason games) with a scared stick."

The Cowboys will search the abundant free-agent field, possibly looking for a young running back whose salary would be able to fit under the salary cap. Among the unsigned running backs are Heath Sherman, Russell White, Dalton Hilliard, James Rouse and Darrin Lewis.

type of injury, it's him, just because of his mindset.

"He refuses to accept the fact that he is injured. He won't use it as a crutch to explain away any fallout in his play."

Oilers receiver Reggie Brown came back from snapping four ligaments in his knee. It cost him speed but he's proof that it can happen.

"I can definitely sympathize with what he's going through," said fellow wide receiver Reggie Brown, who several all four ligaments in his left knee in 1989 and came back to play.

"His isn't as bad as mine was but it's a difficult thing to overcome. I'm sure he can do it."

Gilbride hopes Slaughter's optimism pays off.

"People have come back and done it," Gilbride said. "But in many instances, it's two years later, not the first year back."

ROGERS: Hall of Fame requests perfect game hat, ball

(From 1C)

They're interested in the hat he wore and a ball, maybe even his glove.

"Whatever they want, I don't care," said Rogers, who is saving the ball from the final out and his jersey for his personal collection.

At The Ballpark in Arlington, T-shirts commemorating the perfect game — the first in the majors in exactly three years and the first ever by an AL left-hander — were snapped up within a few hours Saturday. Both major local newspapers also had full-page posters of him.

On Monday, Rogers was named the AL's player of the week. At the time of the announcement, he was in New York yukking it up with David Letterman.

And tonight, he'll be back on the mound.

"I'm busier than I've ever been in my life," Rogers said Sunday after working out and just before catching his flight to New York. "It's kind of nice. I don't know if it'll keep up like this, but for this little while it's great."

It may get even better in the off-season when Rogers, who will be a free agent, can really cash in.

He insists he isn't thinking about what kind of financial impact the perfect game will have. Instead, Rogers prefers to consider how the gem will make him a better pitcher.

"I really don't know what it does for my free agency, but it can't hurt," he said. "What I've thought about is what it does to me as a pitcher for my confidence. My confidence was good before, but now it's even better.

"I know I'm a good pitcher. I knew it before, but I feel even stronger about it now. It's not conceited, it's just really great to know you're capable of going out there and winning every game."

The key for Rogers was the mental frame of mind he was able to maintain over 27 straight batters.

ANGELS: Losses stop

pid rule, but we have to live with it."

The Angels took out their frustration with the Texas League front office on the Wranglers as three Angels connected deep, including Cohick's seventh home run of the season.

"I have been working with (hitting coach John) Morris. I have been lazy with my hands," said Cohick. "It's hard to stay focused when you don't play. I tried to concentrate on the ball and slow down. I'm just trying to keep it simple.

"We are just trying to get through this suspension thing. The other day during a game I was the only guy on the bench. (During the suspensions) If someone was to get hurt we would not have anyone to put in for them."

Brian Grebeck went from zero to hero on Monday. After going 0-for-5 with four strikeouts during Sunday's 8-4 loss to Wichita, Grebeck went 4-for-5 with three doubles and three runs scored.

With Angel Bo Ortiz on first after drawing a walk from Wrangler reliever Steve Renke, J.D. Ramirez hit his second home run in as many nights in the seventh inning to break a 7-all tie.

Ron Watson came on in the ninth to pick up his 15th save of the season.

Korey Keling (8-8) will start for Midland tonight with Fernando Hernandez (5-8, 4.24) the scheduled starter for Wichita.

ANGEL NOTES: Wichita center fielder Randy Curtis, who had gone without a home run in 262 at-bats this season, hit his second home run in seven at-bats Monday night, a shot over center field to open the game... Jose Monzon and outfielder Wolff are set to complete their suspensions today with pitcher Dom Johnson on the shelf Wednesday-Friday...Ty Boykin is questionable for tonight's game with a pulled left hamstring.

QB Shuler, Washington near eight-year contract

Associated Press

■ NFL Roundup

Though the Washington Redskins appear close to signing first-round draft pick Heath Shuler, rookie coach Norv Turner doesn't yet have the quarterback from Tennessee penciled into the starting lineup.

The Washington Post reported today that the two sides had agreed on most of the details of an eight-year contract worth more than $19 million.

"We've all been through these deals where close doesn't end up happening, so I'm just kind of holding my breath, and we'll just see what happens over the next 24 hours, or couple of days or, who knows?" Turner said.

Turner has said Shuler must be in camp early this week in order to compete for the starting job.

Bears

Second-year tight end Chris Gedney has recovered sufficiently from last year's broken collarbone and injured heel to be named the starter for Chicago's exhibition opener Friday against the Eagles.

Gedney caught 10 passes for 98 yards as a rookie last season but missed nine games.

Eagles

The Philadelphia Eagles, the last NFL team to bar the media from weekday practices, will allow reporters to watch the team's practices this season.

"With the type of team we have, it's the right thing to do," said coach Rich Kotite said.

Penske hopes Indy luck rubs off in Brickyard 400

Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS — Since 1972, when Mark Donohue gave Roger Penske the first of his team's 10 victories in the Indianapolis 500, the Penske name has become synonymous with success at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway.

No other team has dominated the historic 2½-mile track the way Penske's has. But now there's a new challenge at Indy — the Brickyard 400 NASCAR stock car race.

It's obvious how important Saturday's inaugural race is to the stock car community, with more than 80 entries for what is expected to be a 44-car field.

But Penske, the head of a multibillion dollar business empire, says he isn't putting any extra pressure on Rusty Wallace, his Winston Cup driver, to win the 400-mile race.

"I don't put pressure on the team or the drivers," Penske said. "That's not my style. In fact, I would rather relieve some pressure because the guys know how to do it ... I feel good about our chances."

Penske, who first saw the sprawling Indianapolis speedway as a 14-year-old racing fan in 1951 and first brought his Indy-car team here in 1969, says the new event — expected by many to be the biggest in NASCAR's history — will not be a disappointment.

"I don't think anybody realizes what it's going to be like when they say 'Gentlemen, start your engines,' and the whole place is filled with people," Penske said.

"Typically, at a normal Winston Cup track, the stands are way away from the track. At Indy, everybody sits on top of each other. The notoriety from the press, the electronic media, is so outstanding that the drivers and sponsors will realize that this will take NASCAR another step toward the top of overall racing.

"Winning is going to be a great credential to have as a team owner and driver. We weren't at the first Masters or the first Super Bowl, but, to go to the first Indy for stock cars, it's going to be unique for everybody that goes, even if you don't do well."

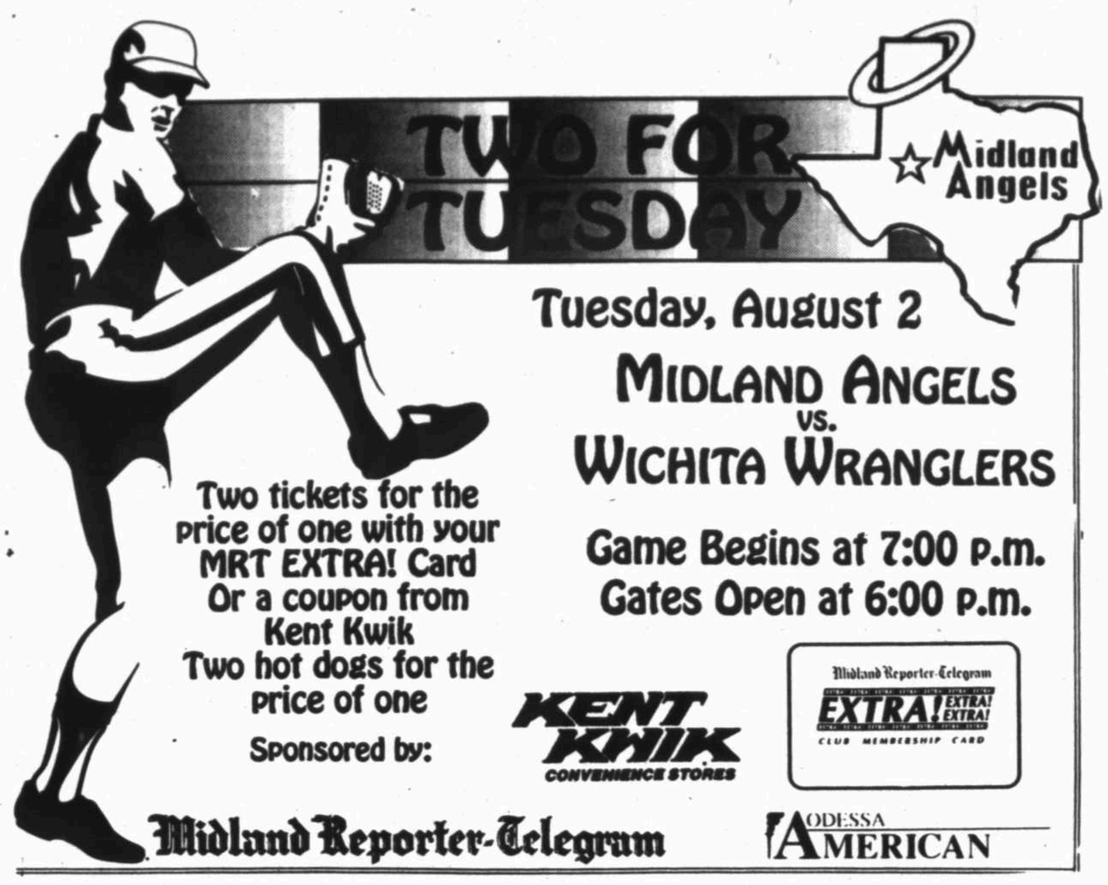

Penske admits his Indy-car team's success at the speedway has been a major catalyst in his overall success.

"I think when you can say you've won the Indianapolis 500 — and we did that the fourth year we went there — it really helps," Penske said. "It puts you in a class apart from others because not everyody's won that race."

Asked if his Indy-car team's success at the speedway will translate to an advantage in the stock cars, Penske smiled and shook his head.

"It would be nice if that was the case, but it isn't," he said. "It's a whole new game. The only thing that is the same is that preparation and attention to detail can make a difference, and our teams have always been known for those things.

"It's going to be a new experience for everybody."

Autopsy: Eagles died of heart virus

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (AP) — There was nothing to indicate that Tommy Joe Eagles was about to die. He didn't smoke or drink alcohol. He was an avid jogger. He went to the doctor every year for a physical.

So how could such a robust, energetic man be stricken down by heart failure at age 45?

In a sense, the former Auburn basketball coach, who had been named to the same post at New Orleans just two months ago, may have been a victim partly of his own good habits, a prominent heart specialist said Monday.

Autopsy results indicated that Eagles died Saturday in Salt Lake City from an enlarged heart, probably caused by a virus. This is a rather obscure disorder that strikes quickly and seems to infect younger, healthy people, said Dr. Gerald Pohost, director of cardiovascular disease at the University of Alabama at Birmingham.

"It happens more frequently to people in good physical condition," he said. "A heart that's sick and ill is just not a good candidate for it."

Since the virus is nourished by the heart muscle, Pohost explained, it tends to thrive — and grow more deadly — when that organ is healthy.

"Strictly speaking, it's not a heart attack," he said. "The muscle is infected and doesn't contract as well as it should, and ultimately it may not contract at all. Actually, the heart is attacked."

Unlike most heart diseases, which are nurtured over a long period of time, the apparent ailment which ended Eagles' life probably struck with scant warning. Pohost said there appeared to be little connection to the heart ailments which killed other prominent sports figures, like basketball stars Reggie Lewis, Hank Gathers and Pete Maravich.

Most viruses are preceded by flu-like symptoms, such as diarrhea or perhaps a severe cold, and may be followed by a shortness of breath, heart palpitations and swollen ankles. Even if the symptoms are taken seriously, however, the stricken person might have only a few days to react.

"Most people don't even think about it," Pohost said. "Not everyone dies of it. Sometimes there's a long time for the virus to process beforehand, which lets them know that they need to see a doctor."

But even in cases where the virus progresses more gradually, a quick diagnosis is essential when dealing with an infected heart, a condition known as mysocarditis.

"Within a period of a couple of weeks, on the long side, the patient will go from normal to dying," Pohost said.

Eagles, a native of Louisiana, coached at Auburn for five years, posting only one winning record. He resigned in March following an 11-17 season, and was named coach at New Orleans on May 31 after Tim Floyd moved to Iowa State.

"He was one of those people who had his physical every year. He never drank, he never smoked and he ate fairly healthy," Eagles' sister, Anita Darbonne of Doyline, La., told the Columbus (Ga.) Ledger-Enquirer. "I realize he was under an extreme amount of stress at Auburn, but I don't think that was a contributing factor. God was just ready for my baby brother to go."

Pohost agreed that there were no definitive links between stress and Eagles' fatal virus.

"I'm sure stress has something do with virtually every disease," he said. "And I'm sure stress after infection can lead to worse problems."

White House says it would assist with baseball talks

More Sports/ 1D

NEW YORK (AP) — Labor Secretary Robert Reich met separately last week with the lead negotiators for baseball players and owners, and the Clinton Administration said Monday it is willing to assist in the stalled talks.

Atlanta Braves owner Ted Turner said Monday the government should become involved in the salary-cap dispute, which is threatening baseball's eighth work stoppage in 22 years. The sides said they will meet next on Wednesday, a day later than originally scheduled. The union has set an Aug. 12 deadline for a walkout.

"If a strike occurs, sometime over the winter or next spring, Clinton will have to step in and there will have to be government arbitration," Turner said in St. Petersburg, Russia, where he is attending the Goodwill Games. "Why not do it now, if you're going to do it then?

Steve Rosenthal, an associate deputy secretary of labor, said Reich had met with union head Donald Fehr and management negotiator Richard Ravitch last week in New York.

Eugene Orza, the associate general counsel of the Major League Baseball Players Association, said the union was willing to talk with the Labor Department but not let any outside party impose a settlement.

LMP Homes and Construction:

Taking care of business, and customers

Long-time Midland and LMP Homes and Construction owner, Leo M. Proctor, desires to give customers the best in quality remodeling services at the lowest possible price.

Proctor has lived in Midland since 1953, when his parents moved here, and he has been in the construction business for over 30 years.

Although his business, located at 400 W. Stoneybrook, includes all aspects of remodeling, LMP now includes roofing in the list of services the home-owned and operated company offers.

Proctor said that he began focusing on roofing when customers who had hired other companies called "with complaints". So, now he simply completes entire remodeling jobs himself.

"Other companies would put an addition on a home and it would leak. The problem was that nobody would come back to repair the mistakes," Proctor said.

At this time LMP Homes has a crew of 14 local workers all of who's work is covered by a two year labor guarantee. Proctor personally oversees the work of his crews and if there is a problem: he takes care of it.

Proctor is fully bonded and insured and all of his products are under warrantee.

LMP uses quality Georgia Pacific shingling which they purchase from Midland's Triangle Lumber Company. This shingling has 20 and 30 year warranties.

Proctor suggests that customers take advantage of these guarantees as well as LMP Homes and Construction's many services. Besides the roofing he said, "they (customers) can take care of painting and other storm damage with one call". Proctor said that he will work with customers on insurance claims.

One customer, J.C. Small, hired LMP Homes and Construction to build his new home in 1976. A few years later when it was time to add on to his home on Wedgwood St., he called LMP again.

The result of this long association is that Small says that "Proctor will treat his customers right and he will stand behind his work".

Another customer, Mrs Miller, was very impressed with the quality and price of Proctor's work. "His prices were absolutely reasonable, he told me exactly what I was getting for my money," she said. "I would recommend him to anyone. He is honest and capable--that's what one really needs today".

Anybody with remodeling or roofing needs should call Proctor at 520-0703, or stop by his home and LMP Homes and Construction's office at 400 West Stoneybrook.

Leo Proctor, the owner of LMP Homes and Construction with Mrs Small, one of his earliest customers, in front of her Midland home. LMP built the house and later, Proctor was asked to the remodeling. The Small family has been very pleased with the quality of Proctors work. For roofing and remodeling, call Proctor at 520-0703.

Prices gain

NEW YORK — The price of oil rose to its highest close in six weeks on Monday amid concerns that the oil worker strike in Nigeria will crimp world supplies. The market briefly flirted with $21 per barrel.

West Texas Intermediate for delivery in September finished at $20.55 per barrel, up 25 cents, on the New York Mercantile Exchange. Oil hit its daily high at $20.98.

Local crude purchasers raised their posted price 25 cents to $19.25 a barrel.

Unleaded gasoline futures reached their highest levels since May 12, 1993.

The market recently has been driven largely by Nigerian strike. Traders initially bid oil higher, then sold when it appeared exports weren't affected. Currently, they have resumed pushing the price up on reports of hampered output.

Royal Dutch-Shell, Nigeria's largest oil producer, said in a letter to the military government in Nigeria that its operations have been cut 40 percent by the strike that started four weeks ago.

Monday's final price was the highest close since crude finished at $20.75 June 20.

Natural gas prices fell 1.5 cents per 1,000 cubic feet to $1.878 for September delivery.

Dollar gains

NEW YORK — The dollar ended modestly lower Monday, partly recovering from a sell-off overseas after the Clinton administration reassured the market it wouldn't advocate a lower currency to cut America's trade deficit.

Gold prices ended slightly higher. On New York's Commodity Exchange, gold for current delivery rose 20 cents to settle at $383.20 per troy ounce.

In late New York trading, the dollar was quoted at 99.45 yen, down from 99.95 late Friday.

The dollar also was quoted in New York at 1.5800 German marks, down from 1.5830.

Other late dollar rates in New York compared with late Friday: 1.3210 Swiss francs, down from 1.3405; 5.4000 French francs, down from 5.4075; 1,589 Italian lire, up from 1,585; and 1.3893 Canadian dollars, up from 1.3866.

The British pound fell to $1.5335 from $1.5440.

Silver prices were mixed. On New York's Comex, silver for current delivery settled at $5.308 per troy ounce, down 0.9 cent.

Stocks advance

NEW YORK — Stocks extended their advance Monday amid optimism about the economy and corporate profits.

The Dow Jones industrial average rallied for a second straight session, posting an increase that matched Friday's of 33.67 points. By finishing at 3,798.17, the popular blue-chip indicator now has returned near to where it stood in mid-June.

Manufacturing index hits 6-year high

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A key barometer of manufacturing activity edged up to its highest level in six years, but other economic indicators including income growth, consumer spending and construction outlays were weaker than expected.

The National Association of Purchasing Managers said Monday its industrial index hit 57.8 in July, the highest since July 1988. Still, analysts noted the increase, based on a nationwide survey of 300 industrial companies, was only marginally changed from 57.5 in June.

"The purchasing managers index continues to indicate that industrial activity is rising at a healthy pace but not accelerating," said economist Bruce Steinberg of Merrill Lynch & Co. in New York.

The Commerce Department reported Monday that personal income growth slowed to 0.1 percent in June, although it was the fifth straight advance including a 0.4 percent increase in May. Many analysts had predicted a 0.2 percent gain.

And although the department said consumer spending rose 0.4 percent for a second consecutive month, analysts attributed much of the growth to the blast of air conditioners. They had expected spending to advance 0.5 percent.

"This morning's statistics on personal income and consumer spending were weaker than anticipated and confirmed the slowdown in income and spending that took place during the second quarter," said economist Marilyn Schaja of Donaldson, Lufkin & Jenrette Securities Corp.

In another report, the department said construction spending inched up 0.2 percent, held in check by the first decline in single-family outlays in 14 months. The consensus forecast had suggested a 0.5 percent increase.

"The principal point (of the economic reports) is more of the same: economic moderation," Steinberg contended.

In its report on incomes and spending, the government said personal income rose to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of $5.664 trillion in June from $5.659 trillion.

Consumer spending, two-thirds of the nation's economic activity, totaled $4.602 trillion, up from $4.586 billion in May.

Disposable income — income after taxes — rose 0.1 percent in June after a 1 percent increase in May.

The combination of incomes and spending meant that Americans' savings rate — savings as a percentage of disposable income — was 4 percent in June, down from a revised 4.3 percent the previous month. The original estimate for May was 4.7 percent.

Wages and salaries increased $3.2 billion in June, much less than the May gain of $19.1 billion.

Spending on long-lasting items such as cars and appliances slipped 0.3 percent in June to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of $578.6 billion. Spending on non-durable goods such as food and fuel inched up 0.2 percent to $1.379 trillion.

But spending on services, including electricity for air conditioning, was up 0.6 percent to $2.645 trillion.

The income and spending figures were not adjusted for inflation. When adjusted, disposable incomes declined 0.1 percent in June, while spending rose 0.1 percent.

In its other report, the department said spending on residential, non-residential and government construction totaled $508 billion at a seasonally adjusted annual rate in June, up from $507.2 billion in May. It was the fourth straight advance.

Residential spending was down 0.2 percent in June, to a $240.7 billion rate, including a 0.5 percent drop in outlays for single-family houses. It was the first decline in single-family construction since a 1.3 percent plunge in April 1993.

Apartment outlays fell even farther, dropping 2.3 percent.

Gerber's home savors windfall by Sandoz bid

N.Y. Times News Service

FREMONT, Mich. — If all goes as planned, the $3.7 billion takeover of Gerber Products Inc. by Sandoz Ltd. of Switzerland, announced two months ago, will be a done deal by the end of August.

Normally a town whose main employer is being acquired by a foreign company might dread the future. But not Fremont. The sale is proving a windfall and an assurance of job security for this close-knit community of 3,900, where Gerber grew from a local canning cooperative to an American icon, the giant of the baby food industry.

Hundreds of residents — including descendants of those farmers who first invested in the cooperative that became Gerber Products — are figuring out how to reinvest anywhere from the hundreds to tens of millions of dollars they will receive from their Gerber stock.

The farmers include Henry Roosinck, a 70-year-old apple grower whose father joined the co-op in 1910. He said that his one-seventh share of that investment today amounted to 1,800 Gerber shares, or more than $95,000, based on Sandoz's purchase price.

Investment counselors have descended on Fremont since the takeover was announced on May 23. Brokerage firms with offices in Grand Rapids, the nearest city, have flown in experts from as far away as St. Louis and Chicago. "For a while, it seemed like there was a seminar going every night," said Richard Wheater, editor of The Times Indicator, a local weekly newspaper.

Gerber offered its employees counseling with Merrill Lynch's Grand Rapids office. Many workers have large amounts of Gerber stock in their retirement plans and will have to choose among the reinvestment options the company is setting up to avoid paying taxes on the gain.

Hundreds of Gerber executives have significant holdings of valuable stock options, thanks to the push in recent years by Alfred Piergallini, Gerber's chairman and chief executive, to broaden the ranks of those getting some compensation in Gerber options.

Piergallini himself stands to receive about $12.8 million for his 241,557 shares, before taxes.

Jury: Nintendo must pay $208 million for infringing on patent

Associated Press

NEW YORK — A federal jury Monday ordered Nintendo of America to pay $208 million to a now-defunct company for infringing on the patent for an invention that helps video game characters move and interact.

The jury found Nintendo of America Inc. intentionally violated the patent held by Alpex Computer Corp. but said Nintendo's parent, Nintendo Co. Limited of Kyoto, Japan, did not.

The verdict stunned Nintendo of America, which dominates the multi-billion-dollar domestic home-video game industry, with 80 percent of the U.S. market. Nintendo machines are in one of every three American homes.

Howard Lincoln, chairman of Nintendo of America of Redmond, Wash., called the verdict "preposterous" and added, "It's going to be tossed out on its ear."

He said the verdict would have no effect on Nintendo products because the patents in question have expired.

John Kirby, a Nintendo lawyer, said the verdict will shake high-tech companies' faith in the American jury system.

Alpex, a Danbury, Conn., company that filed for bankruptcy in 1983, sued Nintendo in the late 1980s over a patent registered by two of its engineers in 1977.

Nintendo was one of 73 companies that received a letter from Alpex in 1983 accusing them of infringing on its patent. Some of the companies settled with Alpex.

Kirby said that Nintendo's systems do not use Alpex technology, so Nintendo did not pay the $400,000 demanded by Alpex.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Investor seeks lessons on basics of CDs

By Bill Doyle

Q: I have $1,000 I would like to put into a CD. What are the advantages of investing in a CD? What is the future of CDs? Over a year's time, what kind of earnings can I expect?

Doyle

A: OK, let's get back to basics. The initials "CD" stand for "certificate of deposit." You turn money over to a bank and agree to leave it on deposit for a certain length of time. The bank agrees to pay you interest on your money at a certain rate for that agreed-upon timespan.

Most CDs pay interest at fixed rates, which do not change. The exceptions are variable-rate CDs, on which rates move up and down in line with overall interest in the marketplace.

Money in a CD has Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. coverage, up to the $100,000 FDIC limit per institution per depositor. So, if you put your $1,000 into a CD, it will be rock-solid safe.

CD rates vary. The earnings you get depend on the CD's rate of interest and how frequently interest is compounded.

For example, after one year at 5.25 percent, your $1,000 would be worth $1,052.50 with annual compounding, $1,053.54 with quarterly compounding or $1,054.67 with daily compounding.

Q: Enclosed is a brokerage firm's advertisement offering CDs with unusually high interest. It says the CDs are insured by the FDIC. Is this for real?

A phone call to a savings bank with a name similar to the brokerage's did not elicit adequate information.

A: That's because the brokerage firm is not affiliated with that savings bank in any way, shape or form. The brokerage conducts a "deposit brokerage" business, through which it places customers' money in CDs and other accounts at banks and savings and loan associations around the country.

There is nothing unusual about that. Brokerage houses large and small engage in deposit brokerage. Everything works out exceptionally well unless banks that sold high-interest CDs go belly up.

When that happens, the FDIC makes the depositors whole. But those depositors then need to scramble to get high interest elsewhere. And that's not always easy.

Q: My wife and I are getting urgent offers from American Telephone & Telegraph Co. to apply for an AT&T Universal Visa Card, which has a nice interest rate — currently 13.9 percent — and other attractive features, such as being free from annual fees forever. That sounds good.

However, it is not clear if we could use it as charge card every place we go. If we can't, why would we need a new AT&T Universal card? We can charge phone calls with the AT&T card we already have.

A: I can only suggest that you — and a number of readers who sent similar letters — read the AT&T Universal Visa Card literature more carefully.

That card combines the features of a Visa charge card with those of a telephone calling card. You can use it to charge purchases anywhere Visa cards are accepted and also charge phone calls on it.

Q: I thought Visa cards and MasterCards were issued only through banks. AT&T is many things. But, to the best of my knowledge, it isn't a bank. How did it get into the credit card act?

A: Through its ownership of Universal Bank in Columbus, Ga. That bank issues both Visa cards and MasterCards for its parent, AT&T.

Minor League hurler pitches nine perfect

BILLINGS, Mont. (AP) — Jason Robbins of the Billings Mustangs threw a perfect game Monday night, beating the Medicine Hat Blue Jays 5-0 in the Pioneer League.

Robbins (8-1) struck out 12, including three straight in the ninth. He threw 70 strikes and 33 balls.

Center fielder Donald Broach made diving catches in the fourth and fifth innings to help preserve what was believed to be the first perfect game in Pioneer League history.

Robbins, a 6-foot-3, 210-pound right-hander from South Bend, Ind., signed with the Cincinnati Reds organization as a free agent last year. He went to college in Wake Forest and was 1-5 last year with the Princeton Reds in Princeton, W.Va.

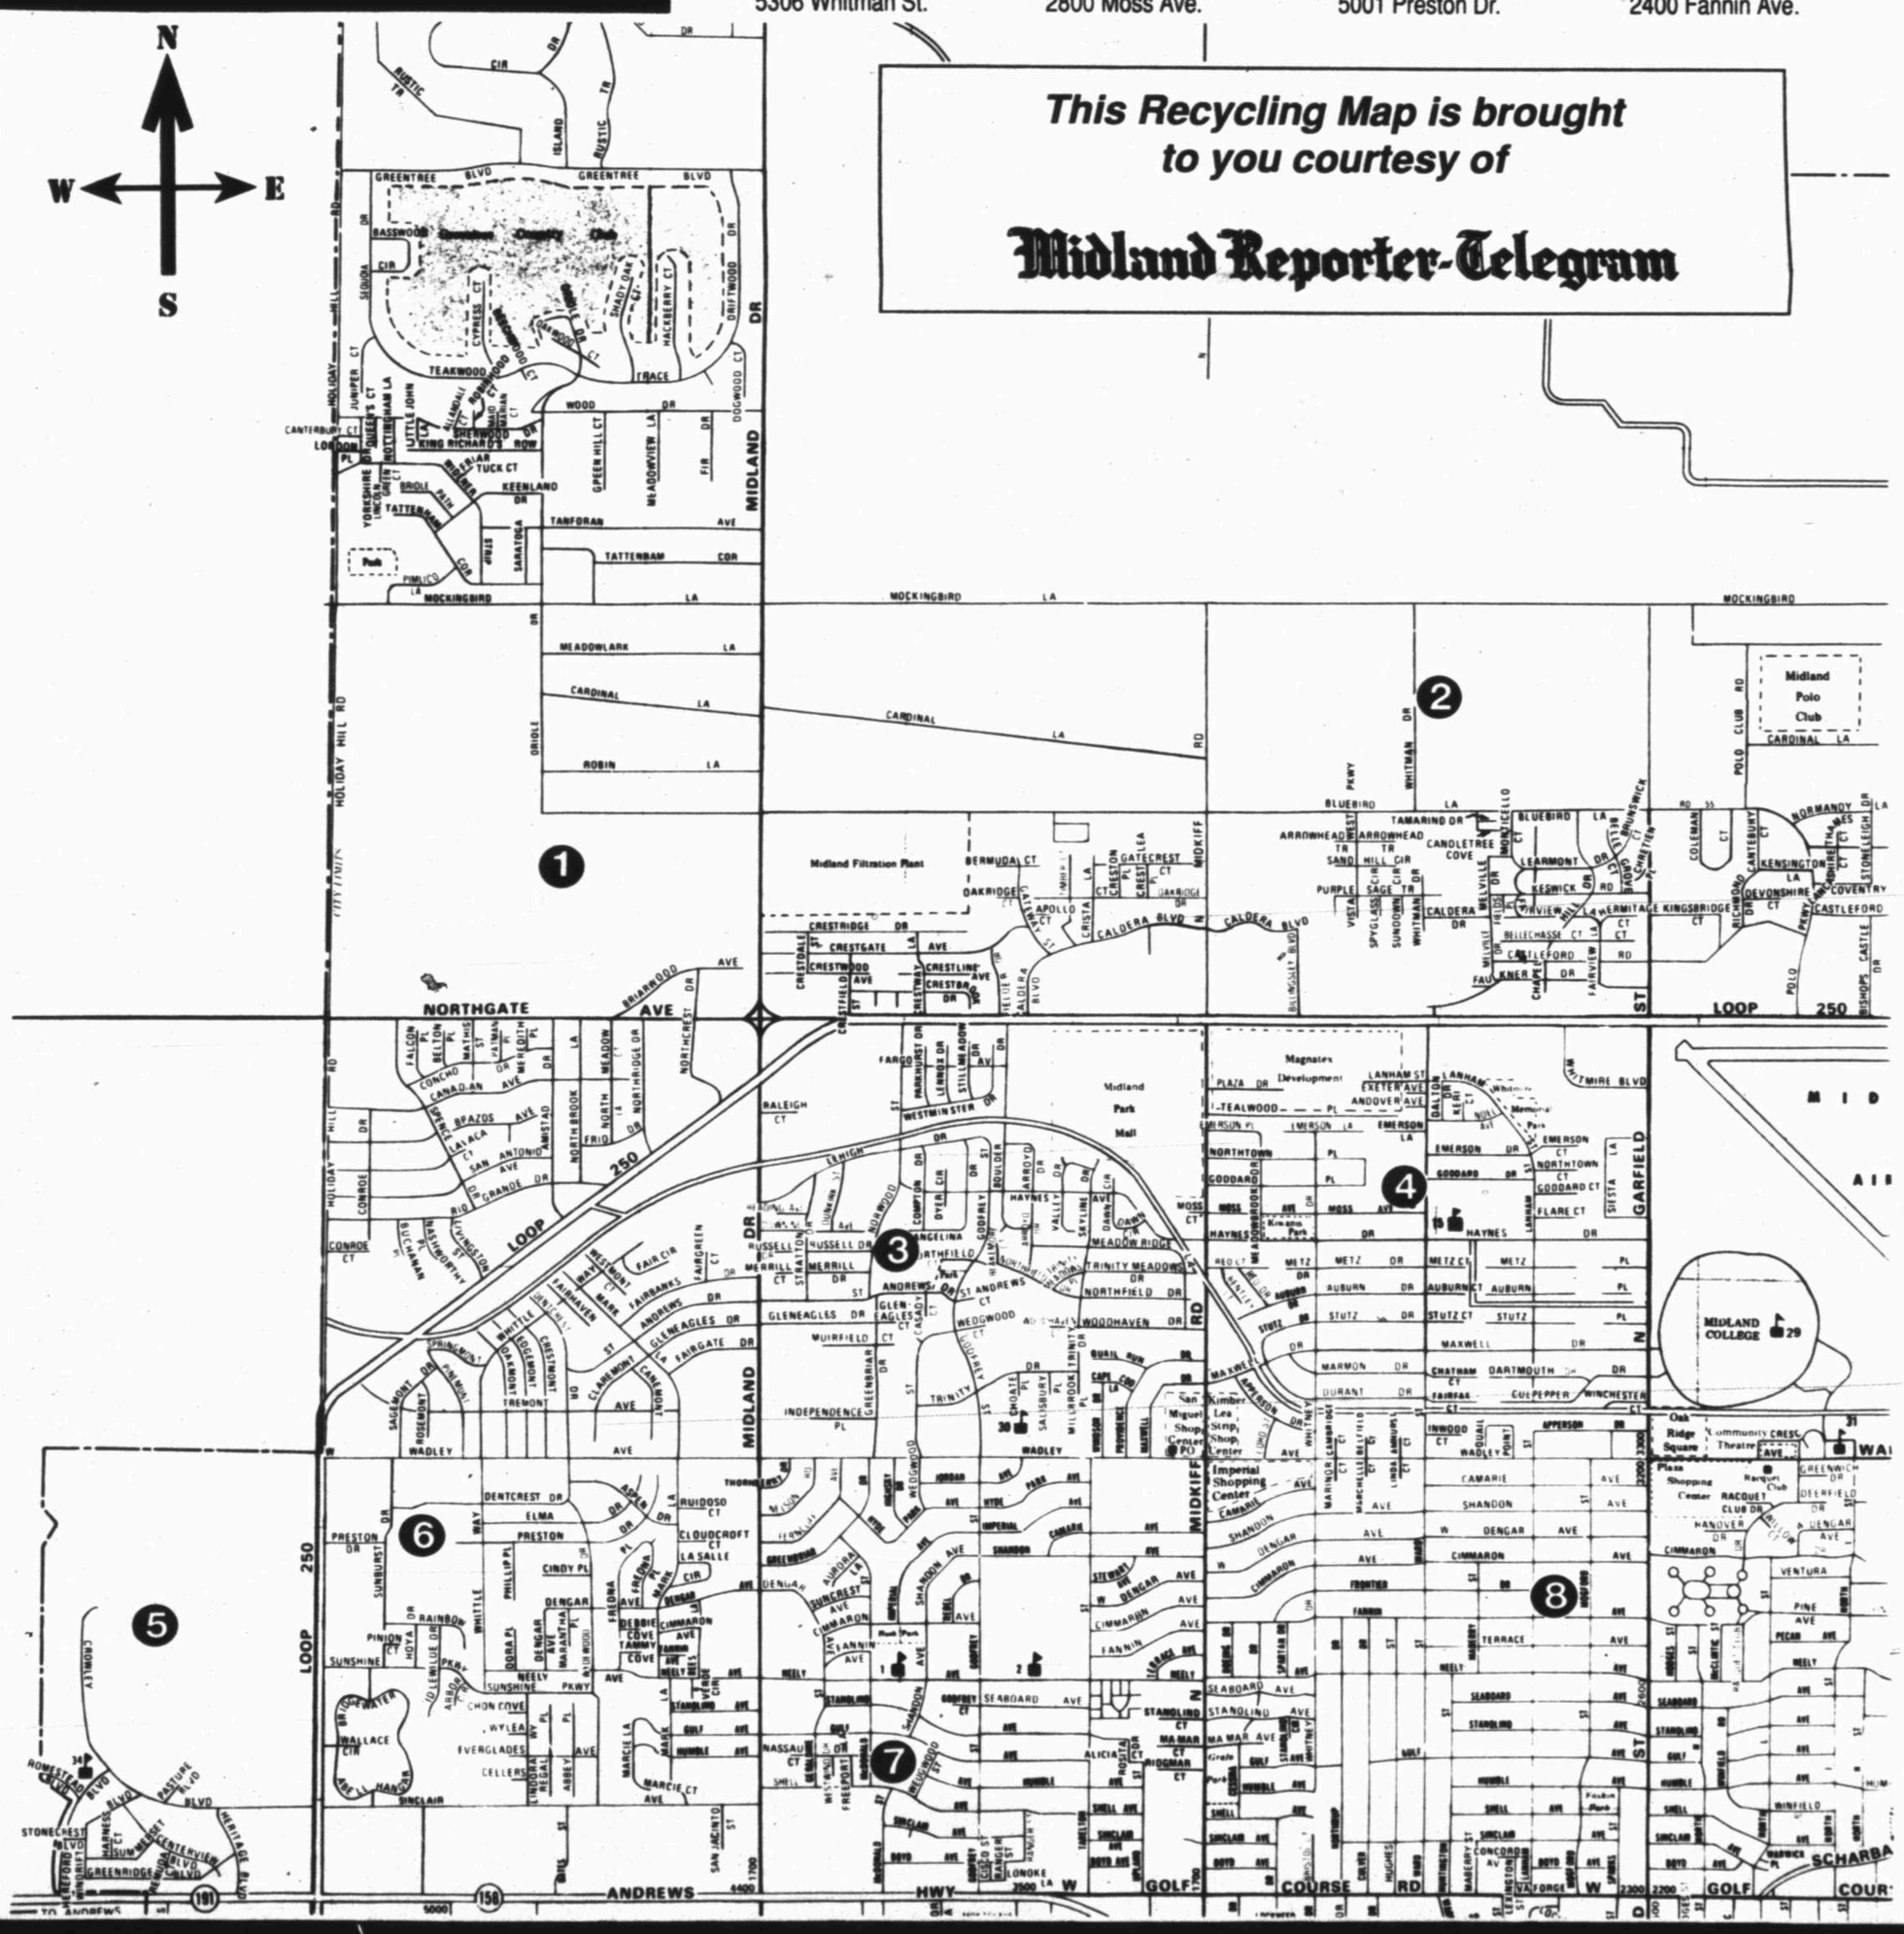

Billings is 26-15 and has a 4½-game lead over the Great Falls Dodgers in the league's Northern Division. The Mustangs play a 72-game schedule against rookie league teams from Montana, Idaho, Utah and Alberta.

Distributorships Now Available

PART-TIME INCOME OPPORTUNITY

The Midland Reporter-Telegram has early morning routes which need to be filled with dependable individuals with reliable transportation. Often asked questions:

➥ Is it worthwhile for adults also?
YES! 95% of our Distributors ARE adults! Morning Routes are attractive for:
★ ADULTS who have fulltime jobs, yet want to supplement their income with a steady part-time job!
★ MOTHERS who can't justify a small job AND daycare, because as a Distributor, you don not need daycare!
★ COLLEGE STUDENTS needing a part-time job which will work with classes!
★ SENIOR CITIZENS wanting regular exercise, added retirement income, or just want to work with people, neighbors, and friends!

➥ How much money can I make as a Distributor?
Depending on the size of the route(s), from $350 to $800 monthly, in some cases...even more!

➥ OK...but how long does it take?
The actual delivery takes 1-2 hours Monday-Saturday, and 2-3 hours on Sunday, depending on the size of the route(s). Also some time is needed each month to collect from subscribers. Many Distributors choose to handle some of this by putting envelopes in the subscribers' papers and having payments mailed to them. Some collecting in person will be necessary though, particularly on some routes more than others.

➥ When do the papers have to be delivered by?
Papers must be on the yards by 6 am Monday-Friday, and 7 am on weekend mornings.

➥ Do I ever get a day off?
The job requires a 7-day a week commitment. However, most Distributors do take days off by finding a friend, family member, or another Distributor to substitute for them!

➥ What else?
A small deposit is required.
