Coahoma school among top 10

Coahoma Elementary students have been named among the top 10 in the state.

Superintendent Gary Rotan said he received a letter recently announcing the school's commendation by the Governor's Educational Excellence Board.

"It says we're in the top 10 percent across the state," Rotan said. The board bases its choice on the school's achievements for the past three years.

Rotan said the award is considered a "nomination" for an excellence award.

"We'll hear later if we've been selected," he said. "But everybody here was pretty excited."

Aggies buy most college license tags

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — Texas A&M University supporters buying up collegiate license plates have earned the university top honors as the first school to surpass the total each participating institution guaranteed would be purchased.

More than 1,500 students, graduates and other Texas A&M supporters have bought the special plates. That total exceeds the number purchased so far by supporters of the 12 other schools participating in the statewide program.

Other schools participating include Baylor, Incarnate Word, Richland College, Southern Methodist, Southwest Texas State, Texas Southern, Texas Tech, Houston, North Texas, University of Texas, UT-Arlington and UT-El Paso.

"Texas A&M has sold more than three times the number of all the other schools combined," said Robert Smith, A&M's vice president for finance and administration.

U.N. sanctions hit home in Iraq

President confers with Cabinet

By RITA BEAMISH
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — President Bush met with his Cabinet for a post-vacation briefing on the Persian Gulf crisis today while two congressional teams ended a first-hand look at the situation in the region.

The president, returning to the capital just five days before he holds his third summit with Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev, also was dispatching two top aides to solicit donations from wealthy allies to cover expenses of the massive U.S. military operation in the gulf region.

Bush refused reporters questions about the gulf crisis during a brief photo session with Cabinet members.

"We are going to have to expect more cooperation from the 22 countries that are participating in this effort," Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., the chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, said today.

Rostenkowski, who returned from Saudi Arabia Monday night, also said on "CBS This Morning" that Americans are "just going to have to recognize the fact that sacrifice is going to be

NEUTRAL ZONE BETWEEN IRAQ AND JORDAN — Some 40,000 refugees are presently stranded in a transient camp in the neutral zone between Iraq and Jordan after fleeing Kuwait and Iraq. The refugees are grouped in the camp before being able to cross over the border into Jordan. As the numbers of refugees continue to grow, the time spent in the camp is increasing.

Saddam stalls on hostage departures

By SIDNEY S. FEINGOLD
Associated Press Writer

Iraq has asked Western countries whose citizens it holds to urgently send food for them, increasing concern that Saddam Hussein may not intend to free all remaining women and children hostages as promised.

The request was yet another sign that Iraq is feeling the crunch from the trade embargo ordered by the United Nations after Iraq's Aug. 2 invasion of Kuwait. Iraq also suspended payments on its foreign debt on Monday.

In the Persian Gulf waters, meanwhile, U.S. Coast Guardsmen boarded the Iraqi-flagged freighter Zanoobia in the Gulf of Oman today in line with the tightening embargo on Iraqi trade, naval and shipping sources said.

It would be the first reported case of U.S. forces boarding an Iraqi-flagged vessel since the U.N. embargo was imposed on Iraq last month.

Also today, Jordan's crown prince criticized the international

City cracks down on code violators

By MICHAEL DUFFY
Staff Writer

City Attorney Mike Thomas will instruct Big Spring's code enforcement officer to file a complaint in municipal court against Midland businessman Larry Moffatt for failing to comply with an order to demolish his burned carpet building.

Thomas said this morning he is reviewing the situation, however, he believes Moffatt's signing of a quick-claim deed to Leslie Lloyd last week does not alter the fact he still is the building's owner.

Contacted this morning, Moffett still maintains that he doesn't own the building.

When informed about the action the city of Big Spring plans to initiate against him, Moffatt replied:

"I guess they will do what they feel they have to do."

He said it was his understanding that he gave the building to the city last April when he signed numerous legal documents in Big Spring.

Attempts to contact Lloyd have been unsuccessful.

Moffatt did say last week that he didn't have the funds available to pay for the demolition.

Big Spring Main Street, Inc. officials have repeatedly tried to contact the owners of three downtown buildings located on the west side of Main Street between Second and Third streets.

Main Street Chairman Richard Atkins initiated a 45-minute discussion with the city council about the course of action that should be taken to force the owners to demolish the downtown buildings.

The council instructed Thomas to take legal action against the owners of the buildings at last Tuesday's meeting.

When contacted this morning, Thomas was reviewing the files on the three buildings in question at city hall.

The owner of another building is

College classes still undergoing changes

By DEBBIE LINCECUM
Staff Writer

Howard College is doing the "first-week-of-classes shuffle." Courses are being closed, combined and expanded to match student demand.

Mike Evans, college registrar, said all courses must have "about eight" students signed up by Friday's deadline, or they will be closed. There is some flexibility allowed, however, he said.

"At this point, if some have only two or three (students), we doubt they could come up to eight so quickly," he said. "Others we're letting go a little bit to see what happens."

Several auto mechanics and repair courses, though low in enrollment, are tentatively still open, he said.

Some of those courses with low enrollment can be combined with others, such as two sections of one subject, Evans said. That involves time changes in some cases, and instructor changes in others.

Latest reports show about 15 classes have been closed.

Other courses are still teetering on the edge of open, while students and teachers wait to see if those last few students join the enrollment list.

Many of the art classes fall into that category, as do some drafting classes, Evans said.

"We have so many computer-aided classes of different subjects — architectural drawing, map drawing, computer-aided design," Evans said, "that may be one reason some have a hard time finding students."

Evening courses usually have a difficult time meeting enrollment requirements, Evans said. Such offerings as racquetball, speed writing, retail management, principals of management and shorthand, all planned in the evening hours, have already been closed due to lack of students.

A welding course brought no student interest at all, he said.

Some part-time instructors' employment may hinge on whether their class makes the required enrollment, Evans said.

"You can pretty much count on our full-time instructors having their hands full, though," he said.

In fact, some courses, because of extremely high enrollment, must be divided.

A nutrition course has peaked at double its expected enrollment, he said, while agricultural courses appear to be more popular this year

Teens found dead near tracks

LAMPASAS (AP) — Three Bell County teen-agers found dead along a railroad line apparently were fatally stabbed before being hit by a train, authorities said.

A preliminary autopsy report showed the two boys and a girl had been repeatedly stabbed and were dead prior to being struck by the Santa Fe Railroad train.

Complete autopsy results were expected later today, authorities said.

The victims were 15-year-old Christopher Kelsey Hagerman, of rural Bell County, and two 16-year-olds from Copperas Cove, Joshua Post and Manessa Fawn Cartwright.

The investigation is centering on the Kempner area, where the three were last seen alive, around 4 p.m. Saturday, said Lampasas County Sheriff's Office spokeswoman Alma Van Winkle.

Santa Fe engineers noticed the bodies about 12:35 p.m. Sunday, eight miles east of Lampasas.

Authorities said the three were hit by a train that passed through the area traveling west around 4:30 a.m. Sunday. The bodies had been hurled a considerable distance from the tracks.

The engineers on the 4:30 a.m. train had no indication the train had struck the three teens, said Santa Fe spokesman Robert Gehrt in Chicago.

32 killed on Texas highways

By The Associated Press

At least 32 people lost their lives on Texas roadways during the 78-hour Labor Day weekend, the state Department of Public Safety reported.

The tally included figures through 8 p.m. Monday, and DPS was scheduled to release its final figures at 10 a.m. today.

The DPS estimated that 40 people would die over the holiday counting period, which extended from 6 p.m. Friday to midnight Monday.

Fifty-two people died in traffic accidents last Labor Day weekend. Most were involved in accidents related to drunken drivers or speeding, and more than three-fourths of the victims weren't wearing seatbelts.

The DPS said it put all available troopers on the highways for the holiday.

Pair lose everything due to clerical error

AUSTIN (AP) — An Austin couple is suing an asset management company that says it threw away 35 years worth of their possessions and memories — because of a clerical error.

According to a lawsuit filed by Kenneth and Marjorie Glaser in state district court in Austin, workers from J.B. Goodwin Asset Management Corp. threw away five rooms of their possessions when they went to the wrong house to pick up property foreclosed by HUD.

The workers took the Glasers' belongings to a dump "where they were bulldozed, covered and summarily destroyed."

The Glasers lost antique furniture, family photographs and silver they got for their 25th anniversary — items they say are worth more than $60,000.

"At first it was such a shock," Marjorie Glaser, 53, told the Austin American-Statesman. "We had our things there, our memories and stuff. That's why it was so upsetting."

J.B. Goodwin has a contract with the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development to take possession of homes that HUD has foreclosed because the owners failed to make their house payments.

In the lawsuit, the Glasers are seeking $60,000 to replace their belongings and $3 million in punitive damages.

Randy Allen, president of the asset management company, said he could not comment on the suit except to say that the company's insurance carrier is dealing with the problem.

"The contractor went to the wrong house," said Ralph Hernandez, supervisor of property disposition for the 57-county HUD district office in San Antonio.

HUD notified J.B. Goodwin last year that a house at 5319 Harmon Ave. had been foreclosed and needed to be secured, according to the suit and HUD officials. Instead, J.B. Goodwin took down the address as 5311 Harmon, HUD officials said, and the Glasers' nightmare began.

On Dec. 8, 1989, Kenneth Glaser found an FBI sign on the house he and his wife had lived in for 35 years telling him that it belonged to the U.S. government and he could not enter.

Glaser said he knew something was wrong because he had paid off the loan on his house about 25 years ago.

The Glasers had been living for several months at a family ranch near Georgetown, and did not know how long the sign had been on the window.

Glaser called the FBI, which referred him to the HUD office in San Antonio, where he was told an error had been made. Three days later, according to the lawsuit, the sign remained and the locks on the front door had been changed.

Profits in forgotten bond money

DALLAS (AP) — There's more than $8 million in forgotten money in the hands of Dallas County, and Richard Eason has found a way to cash in on it.

But some are questioning his fledgling business.

Eason's company, called UCM, has earned thousands of dollars since April by finding money posted as bonds in now-closed criminal cases and retrieving it for a fee.

"I would estimate we've claimed about $100,000 for about 500 clients since April," when the company began operating, said Eason, 48, of Hurst. He said he employs 10 workers in the Dallas office.

The company asks 50 percent of the amount as its finder's fee. Eason said his commission varies, averaging about $82, or 41 percent, on a typical $200 misdemeanor county court-at-law bond.

The company primarily works in Dallas County and has limited operations elsewhere in Texas, he said.

"I discovered through my research that there is a large body of unclaimed money in public funds," he said.

A March audit of the district and county clerks' cash bond funds showed a balance of $8.8 million.

But, some people don't like giving a 50 percent kickback for money that's already theirs. And a few county officials are trying to curtail such financial opportunities, however legal.

County Clerk Earl Bullock said he is concerned that companies such as UCM could exploit people. He said 50 percent is an unfair commission.

Bullock said UCM could lay claim to a bond that already had been pledged to a defense attorney to cover his fees, and claims to the money could be disputed.

In June, County Criminal Court-at-Law Judge Marshall Gandy issued an order calling for the county to issue checks automatically for unclaimed misdemeanor bonds and mail those checks to the people who posted the bonds. His court's policy took effect Saturday.

"The aim of the new policy is to get money entirely into the hands of the people that posted," Bullock said.

But, District Clerk Bill Long says he doesn't mind.

"It's free enterprise and I don't have a problem with that," Long said of UCM's activities.

Renetta Wilson of Dallas said she received a postcard in which UCM offered to help her recover money it said was hers. When she contacted UCM, employees urged her to sign a contract without disclosing where the potential windfall might be coming from, she said.

After several calls, UCM officials told her the money was a $200 cash bond she had posted to get a relative out of jail on a March 1988 drunken-driving charge that later was dismissed, she said.

When she found out UCM wanted half of the money as a finder's fee, she refused to pay and reclaimed the bond herself.

"I had no idea I could get that money back," Ms. Wilson told The Dallas Morning News. "A lot of people who post bonds can't afford to give up a chunk of their money as a finder's fee."

The information on unclaimed bonds, isn't available in one place. Finding the data requires research in various public files and computer records kept by the sheriff, the county clerk and district clerk.

When a cash bond is posted in a criminal case, the money goes into a trust fund at the district clerk's office for felony cases, or in misdemeanor cases, the county clerk's office.

When the case is disposed of, the person who posted the bond is eligible to get it back, minus any unpaid fines and court costs.

AIDS total in Texas surpasses 10,000 cases

DALLAS (AP) — The number of AIDS cases in Texas has surpassed 10,000 during the past two months and health department officials warn the total could double in 1991.

Recent statistics by the Texas Department of Health show there have been 10,493 case of AIDS reported since records were first kept in 1981.

That figure doesn't surprise local health officials, who projected that the 10,000 mark would be reached in 1990. They also estimate that 20,000 cases could be recorded by the end of 1991.

"We see no evidence that the numbers are falling off," Christie Reed, director of the AIDS-HIV division of the Health Department, told The Dallas Morning News.

Texas is fourth in the country in reported AIDS cases, behind New York, California and Florida. New Jersey, which has the fifth highest incidence of AIDS, probably will surpass 10,000 reported cases in a few months, the newspaper said.

Because the incubation period for the virus that causes acquired immune deficiency syndrome can range from six to 10 years, new cases transmitted before 1985 will continue to surface for several years, officials say.

But the growth of AIDS in Texas also can be attributed to trends that already have been seen in other parts of the country.

Ms. Reed, the state AIDS coordinator, said there has been a leveling off of cases from male-to-male contact. But there have been increases in transmission by sharing of needles and sex with intravenous drug users, in both rural and urban areas.

Minorities, particularly blacks and Hispanics, continue to be affected by the disease at higher rates than in the early 1980s.

In Harris County, for example, a greater percentage of Hispanics have been affected by AIDS throughout the county than in inner-city Houston. Through the end of May, 14 percent of the county's AIDS cases were Hispanic, compared with 10 percent of the total cases for Houston.

"People wait a lot longer to be seen (by a doctor) out in the county," said Catherine Cooksley, AIDS surveillance coordinator for Harris County. "Patients aren't being seen by doctors until they are late in the stages of AIDS."

Journalist researches womens' contributions

DALLAS (AP) — A pioneering Dallas journalist is working on a book intended to "round out the Dallas story" by documenting the contributions women have made to the area's development.

Vivian Castleberry, who in 1956 became the first woman to hold an editor's post at the Dallas Times Herald, said few other historians have recorded the "enormous" contributions women have made to the region.

Her book, which she hopes to complete in 1992, begins with Charity Gilbert, who in 1842 became Dallas' first woman landowner, and continues to the present.

Among the more than 300 women Ms. Castleberry has profiled in the first 700 pages of her book is Sarah Horton Cockrell.

Ms. Cockrell was soft-spoken, serious, and shy — an unlikely person to wield such power. But Ms. Castleberry said that by the time Ms. Cockrell died in April 1862, "her holdings were so extensive ... that her will was printed in pamphlet form."

Ms. Castleberry said the second half of her book will include profiles of such modern-day leaders as Dallas Mayor Annette Strauss, state Sen. Eddie Bernice Johnson, D-Dallas, and Lillian Bradshaw, director of the Dallas Public Library from 1962 to 1984.

"It is very difficult because women — through all of the years of Dallas history until the last two decades — have lost their personal identity when they married."

Ms. Castleberry's search for "women in the cracks of history" also has led her to compile 11 oral biographies of older women.

One of the more enigmatic characters Ms. Castleberry has found during her search of court records is Jane Elkins, who became the first person legally executed in Dallas shortly after it became a county.

"I'd give anything to know more about her. I have searched and searched," Ms. Castleberry said. "Elkins was a slave and had no legal rights. She had no attorney. She was indicted of killing her master on May 10, 1853. She was convicted on May 11, 1853, and she was hanged on May 27, 1853."

Jupiter's Great Red Spot fading

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Jupiter's Great Red Spot may soon lose some of its red because of a change in the weather on the largest planet in the solar system.

A 6,200-mile-wide belt of clouds on the planet is starting to change to its typical dark brown smoggy color, 13½ months after it turned white, astronomers say. When the belt turns brown, its winds start feeding ammonia ice crystals into the Great Red Spot, washing out some of the color.

The Great Red Spot is a hurricane almost twice the size of Earth. The cloud belt, or Southern Equatorial Belt, sits just north of the Great Red Spot.

Several astronomers from NASA's Infrared Telescope Facility on Hawaii's Mauna Kea volcano and from other observatories around the world reported the change to the International Astronomical Union's Central Bureau for Astronomical Telegrams, an astronomy reporting agency in Cambridge, Mass.

Scientists study weather on other planets to understand rules governing weather on all planets, including Earth.

In July 1989, British astronomer G.M. Hurst first noticed that the Southern Equatorial Belt was changing from brown to white and growing colder.

But during the past two weeks, astronomers observed the cloud belt starting to turn brown and get warmer, according to telegrams sent by the Central Bureau on Aug. 22 and on Wednesday.

Protesters may disrupt Pageant

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — Hundreds of blacks protesting alleged discrimination blocked a highway into this casino city and threatened to disrupt Saturday's Miss America Pageant. Twenty-three people were arrested.

The demonstration Monday on the Atlantic City Expressway delayed thousands of Labor Day travelers on one of the city's busiest days.

In meetings with Mayor Jim Whelan last week, the activists had demanded more recreational sites and an end to alleged police brutality. Talks broke off Friday.

Among those arrested were the New York City activist the Rev. Al Sharpton and Steve Young, who said they represent The Forgotten Youth of Atlantic City.

They promised to shut down the pageant for the first time since it began on the Boardwalk in 1921.

"They might as well close it down," said Young, who with Sharpton was charged with inciting to riot.

Pageant director Leonard Horn said, "We intend to proceed as scheduled with all of the events that we have been planning for the past year." He cited past protests against the pageant by feminists and striking NBC technicians.

Activists hamper pigeon shooters

PIGEON SHOOT PROTESTER

HEGINS, Pa. (AP) — An annual Labor Day pigeon shoot involving birds released from cages was "American as apple pie," one advocate said, but dozens of animal-rights activists didn't agree and clashed with shooters.

Three state troopers suffered minor injuries and 25 people were arrested during the 57th Annual Fred Coleman Memorial Shoot at Hegins, 40 miles northeast of Harrisburg.

Several fistfights broke out, a skunk was thrown at protesters and a demonstrator kicked out the windshield of a car.

Animal-rights activists from Pennsylvania, California, Maryland, Kansas, Illinois, New Jersey, West Virginia, Virginia, Texas and Florida picketed the all-day community fund-raiser, billed as the largest live pigeon shoot in the world.

Souter's free-speech views encouraging

WASHINGTON (AP) — Defenders of First Amendment rights lament the retirement of Supreme Court Justice William J. Brennan but say the views of his prospective replacement, David H. Souter, on freedom of speech and the press are somewhat encouraging.

"No one could conclude he has an ax to grind against the media or against First Amendment claims," Henry Kaufman of the pro-media Libel Defense Resource Center said of Souter. "Arguably, we will get a fair hearing. But he's no Brennan."

Brennan retired in July after a 34-year career as the high court's leading voice of liberalism. He wrote a 1964 landmark opinion giving the news media broad protection against libel suits by public figures and recently authored opinions barring criminal prosecution of those who burn the American flag in protest.

The Senate Judiciary Committee is scheduled to begin hearings on Souter's nomination Sept. 13. Most of what is known of his views have come from his writings as a New Hampshire state judge.

President Bush named Souter to the 1st U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Boston this year.

Some who have studied the handful of opinions Souter wrote on First Amendment issues during his seven years on the New Hampshire Supreme Court say they are heartened that Bush didn't choose someone with apparent rigid ideas that could limit free expression.

"I think he's been very balanced on free-press issues," said Claudia Haskell of the First Amendment Congress. "He's in the mainstream."

However, the advocates said they don't expect Souter to be an ardent defender of free expression.

Kaufman said Souter's opinions seem to reflect more interest "in the complexity of the law ... than a passion for the underlying rights at issue."

Souter's "decisions seem to reflect a cautious craftsman whose views are not expansive in protecting First Amendment rights," said Floyd Abrams, a New York lawyer whose clients include the news media.

"There are so many areas of the law in which someone would want to know Judge Souter's philosophic views that, I think in his case more than most, the exploration of his general orientation may indeed tell more than could be learned from particular cases," Abrams said. He added that his conclusions could change after Souter testifies to the Judiciary Committee.

Some commentators said they were encouraged that Souter had expressed — in cases unrelated to the First Amendment — strong support for Supreme Court precedent.

Jane Kirtley, head of the Reporters Committee for Freedom of The Press, said she was pleased that Souter appears to have little inclination to topple key rulings.

Pope criticizes witchcraft in Africa

MWANZA, Tanzania (AP) — Pope John Paul II today urged Africa's Roman Catholics to abandon the "unspeakable crime" of witchcraft, a practice that threatens the church's foundations on the continent.

In his homily at an outdoor Mass on the shores of Lake Victoria, the pope also spoke out against abortion, saying the "dignity of every human person from the moment of conception until natural death" must be respected.

His sermon came on the fourth day of his seventh visit to Africa, a vast continent with a declining economy and a soaring birth rate that is expected to double its population of 500 million within 20 years.

Tanzania's average per capita annual income is only about $200, making it one of the world's poorest countries. Few of sub-Saharan Africa's 48 other nations fare much better.

The pope also condemned artificial birth control, calling it "contrary to the 'truth' of married love by which husband and wife become cooperators with god in giving life."

He also criticized the traditional African custom of mahari, or a dowry payment by a husband to the family of his bride. In the past, these payments usually took the form of cattle, sheep and goats. Increasingly, they involve substantial cash payments.

France calls for aid to poor nations

PARIS (AP) — At a U.N.-sponsored conference, France has called on industrialized nations to increase aid to the 42 poorest nations and cancel their foreign debt.

President Francois Mitterrand, who opened the two-week meeting on Monday, said France would devote 0.2 percent of its gross domestic product to aid the fragile economies of developing nations.

He also told the second United Nations Conference on Least Developed Countries that he would seek parliamentary approval to cancel all debt owed France by the 42 poorest nations.

He urged other industrialized nations to follow France on both measures.

Mitterrand said the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank should study any moves that might help poor nations cope with higher oil prices following the U.N. trade embargo on Iraq for its Aug. 2 invasion of Kuwait.

The French president said he would seek legislation mandating that all further aid to the world's poorest nations be in grants, not loans.

If parliamentary approval is given to Mitterrand's debt proposal, the move would extend France's June decision to forgive official debt owed by the 28 least-developed African countries.

To date, France has canceled public debt owed by 35 African countries.

North and South Korea begin talks

HONG SUNG-CHUL

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — The prime ministers of North and South Korea met today and prepared for historic talks intended to ease four decades of military and political tensions. Both expressed hopes for a new era in their relations.

It is the highest-level contact between the rivals since the division of the Korean peninsula in 1945, although the prime ministers hold largely ceremonial posts and their roles in policy-making are limited.

"People expect to reap much from the talks," South Korean President Roh Tae-woo said today. "But the task of national unification should take a step-by-step approach, just like eating a bowl of rice one spoonful at a time."

Detroit's death wish

How many times can the domestic automobile industry keep making the same stupid marketing decisions before it finally goes the way of the dinosaur? Consumers will be asking themselves that question on car lots across the nation this fall as they experience yet another attack of sticker-shock.

Confronted with a steadily weakening economy and record market shares by Japanese automakers, General Motors Corp. and Ford Motor Co. are raising prices by 4 upwards of 5 percent on most of their popular 1991 models. This is suicidal, given the fact that sales of U.S cars plummeted 21 percent in early August. It plays right into the hands of foreign competitors, particularly the Japanese, by giving them an opening to reclaim the price advantage they enjoyed during the early 1980s.

In fact, this simple-minded strategy proved to be a bust during the last two years as domestic automakers aggressively raised the prices of their new models only to offer the inevitable rebates and similar sales gimmicks when disgusted consumers refused to bite. Small wonder the Big Three of GM, Ford and Chrysler continue to close auto plants and to scale back production at existing ones in response to slumping sales.

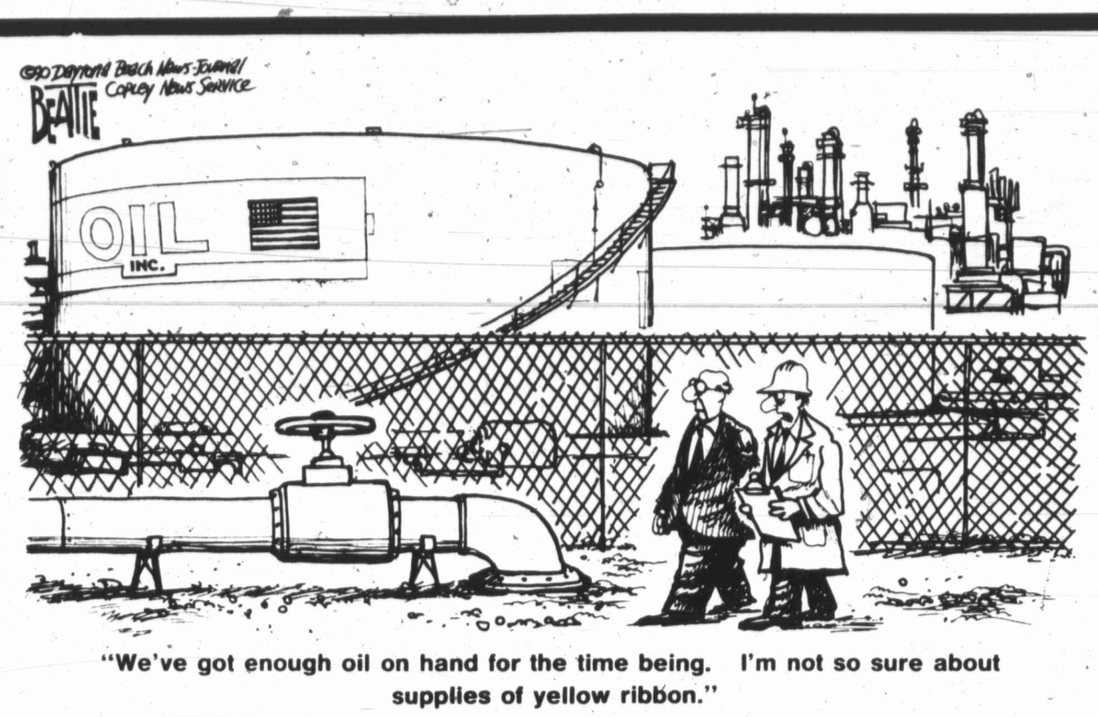

It doesn't require a rocket scientist to predict that consumers are not going to be any less resistant to Detroit's latest marketing folly than they have been during recent years. The 1980s, it should be noted, have seen a steady decline in market share for the domestics. (Last year's casualty figures can be seen in the accompanying chart.) In fact, last October and November saw GM's slipping market share dip below 32 percent, the lowest level since the Great Depression.

If Japanese automakers are smart and hold the line on prices, domestic car sales could go into free fall. For example the cheapest and hottest-selling Honda Accord currently sells for $12,345 and the least expensive Toyota Camry is $11,558. A bare-bones 1991 Ford Taurus will be priced at $13,717 and have a less powerful standard engine than either the Accord or the Camry. Japanese models, which already command 28 percent of the U.S. car market, are almost certain to crack the 30 percent barrier this year if they are moderately priced.

Detroit's woes are compounded still further by the lingering perception among consumers that American cars are inferior to their foreign counterparts. Surveys conducted by J.D. Power Co. and Consumer Reports consistently show that car buyers prefer imports. This stems largely from the fact that the frequency-of-repair rate of foreign cars is far superior to that of domestic models.

So resigned are U.S. automakers to being viewed in a negative light that Buick proclaims with pride in a full-page advertisement that it is, "The only American carline to rank in the top 10 in quality." What cold comfort for a once-proud industry that used to dominate both the domestic and world markets to settle for one of its products making the consumer-preference cut. And what chutzpah of that discredited industry to expect consumers to pay more for its cars than the competition's.

If U.S. automakers were smart they would be lowering the prices of their new models. What they lost in unit profit could be made up in total volume. More important, it might enable the domestics to regain a competitive edge in market share. Absent such a turnaround, the Big Three are headed for the scrap heap of automotive history.

Middle East crisis awakens capital to U.S. vulnerability

By RANDY WYNN
Herald Washington Bureau

Capitol report

WASHINGTON — The capital generally has a short attention span, with "major national issues" coming and going like summer thunderstorms.

Part of the game played here, after all, is diverting public attention from difficult problems by moving the spotlight to new issues.

A national crisis such as a threat of war is a potent attention-getter and the ultimate diversion. Iraq's invasion of Kuwait and the U.S. response has in effect swept the table, leaving Congress and the Bush administration with a new agenda when lawmakers return to town after Labor Day.

With the United States sending its armed forces into the Middle East and large-scale combat still a possibility, yesterday's issues seem petty although the problems are just as serious as they were before Saddam Hussein became a household word.

Hardly a syllable has been uttered about savings and loans since President Bush ordered the military deployment on Aug. 6. The president briefly tried to renew the budget debate as he mobilized the armed forces, but even Republicans called the remarks ill-timed.

The new issue this fall will be how to kick the nation's imported oil habit, and in the meantime — what price the U.S. should pay to support it.

The U.S. now faces the possibility of having to go to war because of its thirst for a natural resource available in sufficient quantities only beneath the most volatile spot on earth. Dependence on anything from the Middle East is a crisis waiting to happen, and Iraq's forceful settlement of the OPEC equivalent of a bar fight has the U.S. finger near the panic button.

Congress and the last two administrations set up the current U.S. predicament by scrapping efforts begun during the 1970s to make the nation less dependent on imported oil. With the exception of creation of the Strategic Petroleum Reserve (crude oil stored in Louisiana caverns), U.S. policy has recklessly assumed unrestricted ability to buy the Middle East's oil at low prices.

Oil imports, which accounted for 48 percent of the U.S. oil supply in 1977 but fell to 28 percent in 1983, were up to 46 percent last year and are expected to hit the 50 percent mark this year.

Automobile fuel economy increases have been shelved, and with larger cars regaining popularity the average gas mileage of cars sold last year was below the 1988 figure. Energy conservation programs have been slashed, while subsidies for wind, solar and other alternative energy sources have been phased out.

Environmentalists, who have scored breakthroughs in curbing nuclear power, coal burning and oil drilling offshore, have been much less successful in their advocacy of energy conservation.

Energy policy is typically neglected between crises, although conservation makes sense regardless of the temperature in the Middle East. Besides reducing a foreign policy threat, cutting oil imports would shrink the nation's trade deficit, reduce air pollution and save money. Lower highway speed limits imposed in the 1970s to save gasoline also apparently reduced traffic fatalities.

Environmental groups will be in the middle of the fight this fall, taking the offensive in support of increased automobile gas mileage standards and working to defend progress made earlier on air pollution standards and oil exploration in sensitive areas.

The current crisis, however, also presents the U.S. oil industry with a new opportunity to lobby for offshore oil exploration and drilling in Alaska's Arctic National Wildlife Refuge.

Nuclear power enthusiasts have an uphill battle, but already are pressing their case that the vulnerability of the nation's oil supply warrants dusting off plans for more nuclear plants.

Energy policy is an important issue that has taken a back seat since the last time Middle East oil imports were threatened. There will be new declarations by lawmakers of the need to end the nation's reliance on oil imports, and perhaps some minor conservation steps.

But politicians have learned over the years how unpopular mandatory conservation can be. No election year rush is likely to lower the speed limit or tell voters where to set their thermostats.

Fat genes are not your fault

By ART BUCHWALD

The best news of the year was when scientists recently announced that body fat could be produced by genes. This was counter to all the conventional wisdom that overweight people were no good.

I received the news while eating a dandelion salad sandwich and a diet cola at the lunch counter.

J. David Emge was the one who gave me the information. "The latest research says that if you get fat you have no one but your grandparents to blame," he said. "It's all in your body makeup. One person can eat an apple pie and not put on weight. Others can put four poppy seeds in their mouths and balloon. It's not food but your chromosomes that make all the decisions."

"I knew that science would finally find a cure for large suit sizes."

Emge was pleased that he could bring me such glad tidings. "Some time back in antiquity, possibly even before man invented french-fried potatoes, it was decreed that people like yourselves would have a slightly pudgy, though not unattractive girth. Our mistake was to believe that being heavy was a character flaw, when in fact it was Darwin's choice all along."

"How did this happen?"

"Stunkard at the University of Pennsylvania worked with twins. He found that environment and diet had little impact compared with that of their genes. He concluded that since genes were so important, those lacking in willpower were blaming themselves needlessly for not being able to see their toes when they bent over."

"How does Stunkard feel about buttered garlic bread?"

"I'm sure he's not against it. It's quite possible a person's genes tell him when he should or should not eat bread. Bouchard of Laval University in Quebec worked with twins as well and came to the same conclusion."

"Which is?"

"When you're fat, relax and enjoy it."

"Overeaters owe a lot to Stunkard and Bouchard," I said. "I wonder what it would mean to them if I ate this piece of chocolate layer cake instead of these string beans with lemon juice on them."

"They'd probably have a hard time telling you what it meant unless you had a twin brother in a diner across town."

"I think it would be wonderful if everyone in the world had genes that could burn up all their calories instead of turning them into fat."

"It will be done," Emge said. "That's why we have genetic engineering. In the meantime I'd say that since it isn't your fault when you gain weight, you might as well eat what you want."

"That seems to be the best solution," I agreed.

"If my genes are programmed for bread pudding, it makes no sense to feed them raw carrots."

Emge nodded; "The importance of this study is that it changes the way people look at each other. Maybe they'll stop being critical of others now that they know it's not their hips, but their heredity that makes it so difficult to fit into a new bathing suit."

Lobbyists and Congress make strange bedfellows

By JACK ANDERSON
and DALE VAN ATTA

Jack Anderson

WASHINGTON — Two-career marriages mean members of Congress have a new ethics problem — their spouses.

No longer does the congressional wife sit at home pouring tea for other wives. The congressional "wife" may now be a congressional husband, and spouses of both sexes come to Washington with political savvy — in some cases professional backgrounds — that propel them into the city's second most prominent profession — lobbying.

Most of the spouses who make a living as lobbyists claim they dutifully steer clear of professional pillow talk, but it's hard to imagine dinner table conversation that doesn't mention either spouse's workday.

Take Sen. Tom Harkin, D-Iowa. He is a leading advocate for farmers and has considerable clout on agricultural issues through the Senate committees on which he sits. His wife, Ruth Harkin, is a lawyer specializing in agriculture. She does some lobbying and represents clients in the farming business.

Mrs. Harkin told our associate Scott Sleek that nobody in her law firm — Akin, Gump, Straus, Hauer and Feld — lobbies her husband. Maybe not, but they have done him a whopper of a favor. The law firm represented Sen. Harkin in a libel suit. He still owes the firm $162,000, and the firm doesn't seem to be in any hurry to collect.

Akin Gump defended Harkin in the suit arising from his 1984 campaign. An aide to his opponent sued Harkin for libel when Harkin issued a press release accusing the aide of improper campaign activities. Harkin won the suit.

The senator insists he'll pay the legal fees, but the way he plans to do it is raising eyebrows on Capitol Hill. Harkin opened a trust fund and is soliciting contributions to pay the bill. As a bow in the direction of propriety, Harkin says he won't take any of the money until after the November election.

Harkin said he consulted the Senate Ethics Committee all along the way and got approval, but the question still remains: Should a senator be in hock to a lobbying group, especially one that employs his wife and whose attorneys have given him generous campaign contributions?

Harkin isn't the only lawmaker with a working spouse, but some are more careful to avoid the appearance of influence peddling. Anne Bingaman, wife of Sen. Jeff Bingaman, D-N.M., is a lawyer with a big law firm that also lobbies. But Mrs. Bingaman sticks to the legal work and doesn't lobby.

The firm handles issues that lap over into Bingaman's committee work in the Senate, but so far the couple has been able to avoid questionable entanglements.

That isn't easy. The temptation to cash in on family ties is strong. Pam Kostmayer, who is legally separated from her husband Rep. Peter Kostmayer, D-Pa., says she has experienced it first hand. Her communications firm helps clients who have an issue to push before Congress. But instead of directly lobbying Congress, the firm stirs up grassroots support in a congressional district and gets voters to pressure their representative. She said he has rejected potential clients who have come to her hoping for inroads with her husband.

PEACE OVERTURES — Intelligence reports from Iran claim that Iraq's Saddam Hussein made a peace overture to Iran before he invaded Kuwait. The offer was contained in a confidential letter from Saddam to Iran's President Hashemi Rafsanjani on April 29. That was followed by a meeting between the foreign ministers of the two nations on July 3 in Geneva. The Iraqi foreign minister castigated Kuwait for over-producing oil. Then both foreign ministers agreed that Kuwait's oil policy was an obstacle to the post-war reconstruction of Iran and Iraq who benefit from higher oil prices. There was no advance hint in the meeting that Iraq planned to remedy the problem by seizing Kuwait.

MINI-EDITORIAL — It doesn't seem like too much to ask that the people of the United States get a good Interior secretary once in an eon. The nation has suffered at the hands of Republican presidents who for nearly 10 years have let the Interior Department be run by politicos. The latest, Manuel Lujan, appears to be a confused politico. He recently toured Yellowstone Park and pronounced it to be "devastated" from the 1988 forest fires. This after his own Park Service has spent two years explaining that while the fires were traumatic, they were simply nature's way of starting over. Yellowstone is doing a fine job of rebuilding itself from the ashes. If Lujan had read his own publicity on the rebuilding, he wouldn't come off looking like a greenhorn.

Fabulous fajitas

Members of the FUBAR fajita cooking team, from left, Tony Sneed, Steve Newton, Jimmy Combs, Pat Combs, Debbie Sneed and Kevin Sneed, celebrate after learning their fajitas were judged number one at the second annual fajita cookoff sponsored Sunday by the Brass Nail II. Second place went to Martha's Hideaway; and Winn Dixie placed third. The three judges, Frank Salazar, John Hart and Shelton Castle, agree it wasn't easy choosing a winner. "We had a hard time judging," Salazar explained. "But, there was a certain flavor in number five (winning team number). It has a different flavor I've never tasted before. . . . I've eaten fajitas everywhere, and these are the best. . . . These people know how to cook fajitas." Although winning team members wouldn't share the complete list of "secret" ingredients they use to prepare their prize-winning fajitas, they did offer one suggestion. "It's different seasonings. . . . The major difference is the lime juice we marinate it in," explained Kevin Sneed.

Woman cries on ex-boyfriend's shoulder

Dear Abby

DEAR ABBY: Four years ago, my wife of 22 years divorced me without explanation. I have dated half a dozen women since. The first five were as self-centered as my wife, but I really fell for the sixth. We dated for eight months, then she decided I wasn't the one, so she dumped me.

She has dated and slept with five guys since she dumped me. How do I know? She calls every week to confide her problems and ask my advice, sometimes crying and carrying on for an hour or more. (The latest is that she fears she might be pregnant.) How do I tell her that it really hurts when she does this because I still care for her?

Also, where do I go to meet women who care about something besides themselves? Please don't tell me churches, social clubs, dancing classes and all the other "nice" places you advise women to go to meet "decent men." Those are the very places where I met not only my ex-wife 29 years ago, but also the women I've dated since the divorce. The bar scene leaves me cold, too.

Please do not publish my name or location. I'm a fairly well-known professional in this community. Everyone seems sympathetic when women have problems with men, but men who have problems with women are laughed at. I'm not in a laughing mood right now. I hurt, and don't want to hurt in return. — HURTING

DEAR HURTING: The next time "No. 6" calls to dump on you, tell her that you are unable to be objective about her problems because you still care for her. As long as you permit yourself to be used as a trouble dump, this woman will continue to dump on you, which will only add to your depression.

If you want to meet "selfless" women, start looking where selfless women go. You will find them volunteering their extra time to good causes: feeding and sheltering the homeless, caring for disadvantaged youth or the elderly, or working for victims' rights, AIDS support groups or battered women.

A final thought: A divorce (with or without explanation) after 22 years must have been devastating. Since you are obviously still hurting, please consider professional counseling.

DEAR ABBY: I hope this letter makes your column because I'm sure I'm not the only one with this complaint.

With each passing year, older family members break up their homes to move to smaller quarters. And what do they do with their family heirlooms? They hand them down to their children, grandchildren, nieces, nephews, etc.

I never receive any of these things. Why? Because I have no children to pass them along to. Consequently, I am deprived of the pleasure of enjoying family heirlooms while I'm alive. If I were to receive any of these treasures, I would give them to family members who were graduating from high school, college, getting married — or even celebrating a 16th birthday.

Every time I hear an older family member say, "I'm giving my fine china (or good silver or linens) to so and so because she has children," I want to scream!

Please print this, Abby. I'll buy a dozen newspapers, cut the column out and mail it to my relatives. Thank you. — LEFT OUT

DEAR LEFT OUT: Here's your letter. It's a first. Let's hope it changes a mind or two.

DEAR ABBY: Many years ago, you had a letter in your column from someone who asked, "Which is hardest, growing up as the youngest in the family, the oldest or the middle child?"

I am the baby of the family, and my mother always used to read that article to me and my two older brothers.

If you can find it among your columns, would you please run it again? My wedding is coming up soon, and I would like to frame it and give it to my mother. Thank you. — DANA W., LAKE WORTH, FLA.

DEAR DANA: It wasn't hard to find, and here it is:

If you ask the eldest, he'll say, "It's hardest to be the firstborn because you're expected to set a good example for the younger ones. And if a fight breaks out, you get blamed because you're the oldest and should know better."

Ask the middle child, and he'll say, "Being the middle child is the hardest because you get none of the advantages of being the youngest or the oldest."

Ask the youngest child, and he'll tell you that being the youngest is hardest because "your parents try to keep you 'a baby' as long as possible, and you have to wear all the hand-me-downs."

Tulip tips from the master

(AP) — Fall is tulip-planting time in the Midwest.

Midwest Living magazine provides Michigan tulip master Jim Veldheer's simple planting and care tips to ensure springtime beauties the first season:

- Selecting bulbs: "Beware of Christmastime bargains," Veldheer warns. "These bulbs usually are dried out and of poor quality." The bigger the bulbs, the bigger the blossoms. (For the biggest blooms, buy 11- or 12-centimeter bulbs. Veldheer's smallest are 10-centimeters.)
- Planting timetable: Plant bulbs when the ground temperature is around 50 degrees, usually in October or November after a couple of killing frosts. Store bulbs in a cool (under 65 degrees), dry place until planting.
- Choosing the site: Plant tulips in partial shade and in loose soil that drains well. To loosen clay soil, mix it with up to 50 percent sand, peat moss, leaves, grass or ground corn cobs.
- Planting: Spade the planting area to a depth of one foot. Return 6 inches of soil, mixed with slow-release fertilizer, to the hole. Plant bulbs 6 inches deep and cover with 3 to 4 inches of soil. The second year, sprinkle fertilizer over the bulb bed in the fall.
- Care: Water newly planted bulbs if they haven't received a good, soaking rain in two to three weeks. Mulch the beds with ½-inch of leaves, grass or straw in late December.

After flowers bloom and petals fall in spring, snip off the seed pods. "That helps bulbs grow bigger," Veldheer says.

Leave plants alone another four weeks, until they turn brown. Then, dig the bulbs if dividing them. Otherwise, leave them in the ground.

Q. Who was the inventor of the plastic soda bottle?

A. Nathaniel C. Wyeth, who died recently at the age of 78, invented the plastic soda bottle in the late 1960s. The Du Pont engineer, who was the son of the illustrator N.C. Wyeth and the brother of the painter Andrew Wyeth, developed a bottle made of polyethylene terephthalate, or PET, which became a standard material for drink containers, according to Time magazine.

Waste facility hot issue this election

By PATRICK DRISCOLL
Staff Writer

COLORADO CITY — The candidate for Mitchell County precinct 2 commissioner said Monday he has indications that the majority of people in that precinct may be opposed to a proposed hazardous waste facility which would be located in the area.

If they are, said Carl Guelker, who is running unopposed, then he will oppose it too. Guelker, who defeated incumbent Johnny Shackelford in the April Democratic runoff, made his first public comments on the issue last week when he addressed a meeting of Texans Against Pollution, a local group opposed to the proposed hazardous waste incinerator and landfill.

Of the the other candidates running for Commissioners Court, the Pct. 3 commissioner supports the proposed facility while his opponent opposes it. The candidate for county judge said he will also abide by the wishes of the majority of the people and suggested that a survey be taken during the Nov. 6 general election.

Only two seats are not up for election on the commissioners court. The present court signed a host agreement in March in support of the facility in return for the right to collect fees that could total up to $1 million a year.

The facility, which would be located near Westbrook, is expected to create about 100 jobs and would handle between 2,000 and 5,000 tons of waste daily, said local developer Jim Moody. Proponents are hoping it will be a boon for the economy while opponents say some pollution is inevitable and if one person is affected adversely, it would not be worth the risk.

"If the majority of the people in this precinct are opposed to this, as their elected representative, I will represent their views," said Guelker.

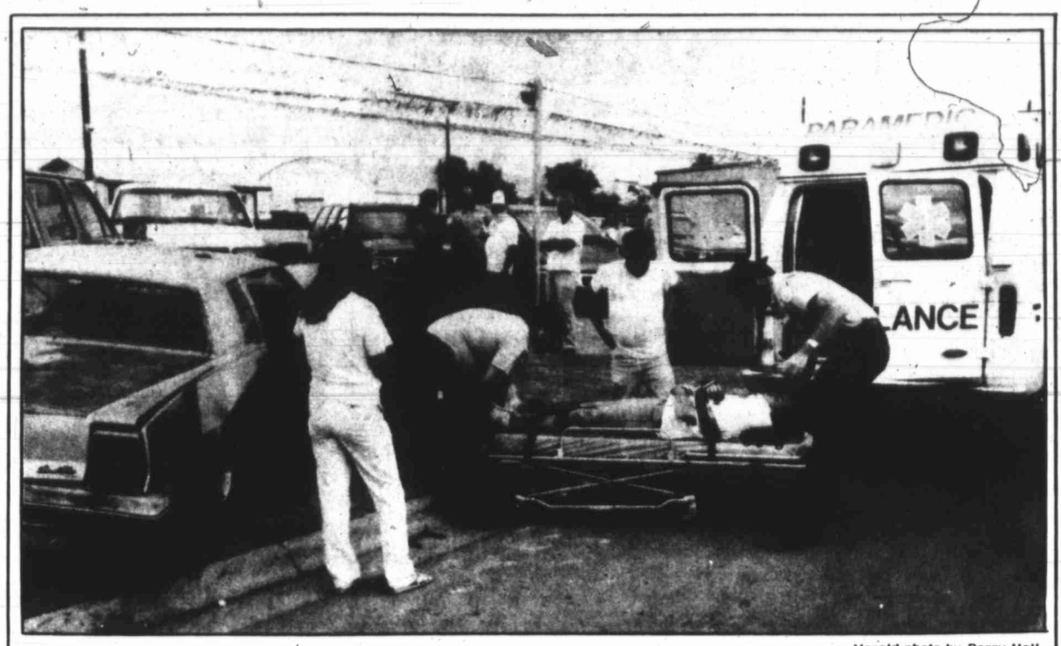

He said that, in discussions with people in his precinct so far, the indication is most are opposed. "I feel like the majority of the people are oppossed to the proposed hazardous waste landfill," he said.

The week before last, Republican candidate for Pct. 3 commissioner, Charles Inman, made his position publicly known also. "I'll go on record as being against it," he said. "If it hurts one person, if it is detrimental to the county, then I'm against it."

Pct. 3 incumbent and Inman's opponent, Democrat Buddy Hertenberger, said Monday he is in support of the incinerator and landfill as long as it passes the safety standards of the Environmental Protection Agency, the Texas Water Commission, the Texas Air Quality Control Board and the Texas Department of Health.

"My position is our society revolves around a final authority in every portion of our government," he said. "I'm satisfied that this thing is not detrimental to our society if it passes the prerequisite tests of the final (federal and state) authorities."

County judge candidate Ray Mayo, running unopposed after defeating incumbent S.L. "Mac" Morris in the Democratic runoff, said the issue should be decided by a majority of the people. He suggested that a survey be conducted during the general election, an idea that the Commissioners Court has discussed on another issue involving a 911 emergency telephone system.

community for doing little to help thousands of Asian refugees from Iraq and Kuwait, some of whom are dying from exposure in a squalid makeshift camp in the desert while they await transport home.

In the Soviet Union, Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze proposed an international conference on the gulf crisis that would also take up the Arab-Israeli conflict and the civil war in Lebanon.

In a major foreign policy address, Shevardnadze also said Sunday's superpower summit in Helsinki, Finland, would mark "a major milestone on the road toward resolving the crisis in the Persian Gulf."

In another development, Iraq suggested setting up an international "people's court" to try President Bush for defiling Islam and for human rights violations. The state-run Iraqi News Agency said today the idea was discussed by the nation's union for lawyers and human rights association.

The West looked in vain over the weekend for large-scale, follow-up flights after hundreds of Western and Japanese women and children were allowed to leave on Iraqi jetliners on Saturday.

But there was a report that 138 Westerners — about them two dozen Americans — would be allowed to fly out to Jordan today.

And a convoy carrying about 300 British women and children left Kuwait City just after dawn heading for Baghdad, where they hoped to continue overland to Jordan or fly home via Amman, British officials said.

Some of the evacuees have acted as human shields at strategic Iraqi sites on orders of Saddam, who last week said women and children would be allowed to leave. About 3,000 Americans — a third of them women and children — were among 21,000 Westerners initially trapped in Iraq and Kuwait by the invasion.

On Monday, the Iraqi News Agency quoted remarks made by Iraq's foreign minister, Tariq Aziz, to President Cornelio Sommaruga of the International Committee of the Red Cross regarding foreigners inside Iraq.

"Suffering as it is from the effects of the international siege, Iraq will not be responsible for their suffering resulting from the shortages in food supplies," Aziz said.

He urged countries with large number of citizens in Iraq to "take urgent measures" to send those citizens food supplies.

Iraq rescinded landing rights for foreign charters into Iraq to pick up foreign nationals, and some sources said Baghdad was seeking to swap hostages for trade, apparently in an attempt to poke holes in the embargo.

Japan's Kyodo News Service said Iraq was asking Tokyo to bend the embargo in exchange for freeing Japanese hostages.

In Paris, the Foreign Ministry indicated Iraq had set conditions unacceptable to France in return for landing rights that would allow a French plane to repatriate 200 women and children.

In Baghdad today, Western diplomats were negotiating frantically with officials at Iraq's Interior and Foreign Ministries to obtain exit permits for a group of 138 foreign women and children who want to leave on the Iraqi Airways flight, diplomatic sources and airline officials reported.

One Western diplomatic source said 24 Americans are among those trying to leave on that flight. The others are Britons, Canadians, Italians, French and Irish nationals, he said, but could not provide a breakdown.

In Baghdad, an official at the U.S. Embassy said the Iraqi pane was chartered by the U.S. government.

Late Monday, an Iraqi Airways jumbo jet carrying Iraqis stranded in Britain by the crisis left London for Baghdad. An airline official said 195 passengers were aboard.

More than 100,000 Asians — Indians, Sri Lankans, Bangladeshis, Thais and Filipinos — remain stranded in Jordan.

Some are stuck in a squalid, makeshift camp in the no man's land just inside Jordan because authorities at the border post of Ruweishid, swamped by the human tide, has not been able to process them.

Crown Prince Hassan, brother of King Hussein, today appealed for immediate aid. "We should not forget that the situation, critical as it is, may be only the tip of the iceberg," he told a news conference.

On Monday, the Iraqi News Agency quoted Mohammed Mahdi Saleh, acting minister of commerce and finance, as saying Iraq had suspended payments on its foreign debt, estimated at $30 billion to $35 billion.

Most of that is owed to the United States, Britain, France, the Soviet Union, West Germany and Japan for purchases of weapons, technology and food.

as well.

The threat of the Texas Academic Skills Program (TASP) test has apparently increased the number of students in "developmental courses." Students have flocked to those courses of basic math, reading and writing this year, Evans said.

They must take developmental courses until they pass the skills test, required by law when 15 credit hours are completed.

"It looks like it must be a hard test," Evans said. "Just from looking at the number (of students) in those developmental courses. A lot of them must not have passed it yet."

Enrollment in the college's Harold Davis Fitness Center is "going wild," Evans said. Because students can sign up anytime during the year for the 16-week course, there will be no limit on the number of students, he said.

No total enrollment figures for the college are available yet, as students at all campuses continue to register.

Between late registrations, schedule changes and straightening out students' problems, the registrar's office has been a busy place this week, Evans said.

"I know they expect a record (enrollment) this year," he said. "The way things are going around here, it looks like we're getting it."

A call placed to her residence in Maine this morning revealed that the telephone has been disconnected.

The man who owns the third building has agreed to pay for the demolition, officials said.

Because Bidden resides such a long distance from Big Spring, Thomas said forcing her to comply with the Board of Adjustments order will be "real hard to enforce."

Municipal Judge Gwen Fair said if a complaint is filed against Moffatt she will issue a summons, requiring him to appear at a hearing.

Thomas said at last week's council meeting that Moffatt could be jailed if he fails to respond to a municipal court summons.

"Hopefully, we can make these people do something," he said.

necessary. . .I think we're going to have to raise revenues, cut spending, be a little more prudent about the way we spend our defense dollars."

Sen. Carl Levin, D-Mich., appearing with Rostenkowski, echoed the call for more international support. "We've got to focus on a number of things and one is the burden-sharing issue. We must get more of our allies there, in greater numbers."

Levin said the morale of U.S. troops "is very, very high." But he said they are in an "extraordinarily difficult environment" and are getting "no mail yet, no newspapers, no cigarettes. We're going to have to worry about rotation and relief for some of our forces."

Bush ended a three-week vacation in Maine on Monday evening and scheduled the morning meeting with his Cabinet.

White House aides, meantime, worked intensively to prepare for Sunday's superpower meeting in Helsinki, Finland, announced on unusually short notice last weekend.

The aides prepared for the possibility of a Friday departure, giving the president a chance to meet with Finland's President Mauno Koivisto on Saturday before he sees Gorbachev on Sunday.

Bush will meet with the Soviet leader for five hours, then return to Washington.

A delegation of 22 House members returned to Washington on Monday night after touring the Persian Gulf region and inspecting the U.S. military operation that has been rushed in since Iraq's Aug. 2 invasion of Kuwait. A Senate group was expected back from the region later today.

Rep. Richard Gephardt, D-Mo., the House majority leader, told reporters at Andrews Air Force Base, Md: "All of us left here with the conclusion that the president's action was a correct action. All of us come back believing that is the case."

But, Gephardt added, "We need more help, especially from our NATO allies, to have troops on the ground with ours." He said the bipartisan delegation also "firmly believes that the financial burden of supporting multilateral military deployments in the Persian Gulf area must be shared equitably."

The foreign affairs committees of the House and Senate planned to question Secretary of State James A. Baker III on the president's gulf strategy at hearings this afternoon and Wednesday.

Baker leaves Thursday for Saudi Arabia and the gulf region to solicit financial contributions to bolster the U.S. effort and also to provide economic assistance to countries hard hit by the international embargo against trading with Iraq. He also planned stops in West Germany and Italy.

Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady was setting out on a similar mission today to Paris, London, Seoul and Tokyo.

Bush announced last week that he wants to enlist the wealthy nations of the world to help pay the $1 billion per month in U.S. costs for military might mustered against Iraqi President Saddam Hussein.

The Helsinki summit is expected to focus on the Middle East. The president and his spokesmen have said a wide array of subjects also will be covered, including progress toward an agreement on reducing troops and tanks in Europe. But officials said privately that the arms reduction discussion would be mostly a review of the status of ongoing negotiations.

Bush before his past two meetings with Gorbachev has consulted widely with other heads of state.

"I'm assuming he'll take into account the view of allied leaders" this time as well, said White House spokesman Roman Popadiuk.

In addition to the foreign policy preoccupation, Bush returns to a full agenda of other business.

He plans a political trip on Thursday, traveling to Topeka, Kan., and Tallahassee, Fla., to raise money for Republican candidates.

The House returns from its summer recess on Wednesday and the Senate will be back in full session next week.

Budget talks, stalemated when Congress left in early August for its recess, resume later this week. Administration officials say the $1-billion-a-month U.S. military operation in the Persian Gulf will make reaching a deficit-cutting agreement even more difficult.

Bush spent Labor Day, the last day of his vacation, at his seaside home in Kennebunkport, Maine. He went boating in choppy seas and played 18 holes of golf, taking national security adviser Brent Scowcroft along on both outings.

Graf teaches Capriati a lesson

NEW YORK (AP) — Boris Becker found a way to win. Steffi Graf made a tough match easy.

And that's why both defending champions are still in the hunt in the U.S. Open.

"I knew that it wasn't going to be easy against her," Graf said of her fourth-round matchup against 13th-seeded Jennifer Capriati. You wouldn't know it by the score — 6-1, 6-2 in 53 minutes.

"I had to find a way. I was trying to find a way, and I did it finally," Becker said after beating back unseeded Darren Cahill 2-6, 6-2, 6-3, 3-6, 6-4 on Monday to advance to the men's quarterfinals.

Becker will next play eighth-seeded Aaron Krickstein, a 6-3, 6-4, 6-4 winner over Amos Mansdorf. The other quarterfinal pairing in the bottom half of the men's draw sends No. 4 Andre Agassi against unseeded Andrei Cherkosov of the Soviet Union.

On Monday, Agassi defeated No. 13 Jay Berger 7-5, 6-0, 6-2 and Cherkosov eliminated Christo van Rensburg 6-4, 6-4, 7-5.

Other fourth-round winners in the women's draw were No. 4 Zina Garrison, No. 6 Arantxa Sanchez Vicario and No. 12 Jana Novotna. Garrison defeated Nathalie Tauziat 6-1, 7-5, Sanchez Vicario downed No. 16 Barbara Paulus 6-4, 6-3 and Novotna stopped No. 7 Katerina Maleeva 6-4, 6-2.

That sets up the quarterfinal pairings of Graf vs. Novotna and Garrison vs. Sanchez Vicario.

Two women's quarterfinals were on tap today: No. 8 Mary Joe Fernandez against No. 9 Manuela Maleeva-Fragniere, and No. 5 Gabriela Sabatini against Leila Meskhi tonight.

Graf, who has dominated this Grand Slam tournament for the last two years, played almost perfectly in reaching the quarterfinals, dazzling the 14-year-old Capriati with powerful ground strokes.

"I was pretty nervous," Capriati said. "I didn't realize how nervous I was until I got out there. In the beginning I couldn't hit a ball on the court."

Graf's victory was complete in every respect, handing the ninth-grader a tennis lesson, although Capriati had a plan.

"Keep moving her. Just don't hit to her backhand. Maybe break down her forehand and come to the net and attack her a lot. Serve well," Capriati said. "But nothing worked."

On the other hand, everything worked for Graf, who was very gracious in victory.

"She didn't play as well as she can play, I think everyone realizes that," Graf said. "There was a lot of pressure on her — and on me, too."

The victory capped Graf's 160th consecutive week as the top-ranked player in the world, a record for both men and women.

Early in the first set, Capriati's usually solid forehands and backhands floated long or thudded into the net. The Florida teen-ager seemed tentative, and she admitted later she was suffering from stage fright.

"At the beginning I couldn't hit a ball," she said. "Just going out there knowing that I would be playing Steffi on Stadium Court. Everybody is going to be out there watching."

What the crowd, and Capriati, saw was Graf in high gear.

"She's definitely still at another level," Capriati said.

Becker and Cahill battled for 3 hours, 14 minutes, and the momentum changed repeatedly.

Cahill, who upset Becker in the second round of the Open in 1988, played courageously. He won eight straight points in the fourth and fifth games of the first set as he weathered Becker's hard serves and sometimes wild shots.

"It was a little bit windy, especially in the beginning," Becker said. "It took awhile until I found my rhythm. I started to serve better in the second set, and then every set it got better."

Becker came back strongly in the second set, breaking Cahill three times, and seemed in control

Refrigerator wins quarter horse race

RUIDOSO DOWNS, N.M. (AP) — As a race horse, Refrigerator was the product of bargain breeding, with a history of bleeding during and after a race.

As a jockey, Kip Didericksen was hardly a role model — a high school dropout who two years ago was barred from riding because he used an electrical device to try to get a horse to run faster.

This duo of disaster proved to be the perfect combination for winning the world's richest quarter horse race.

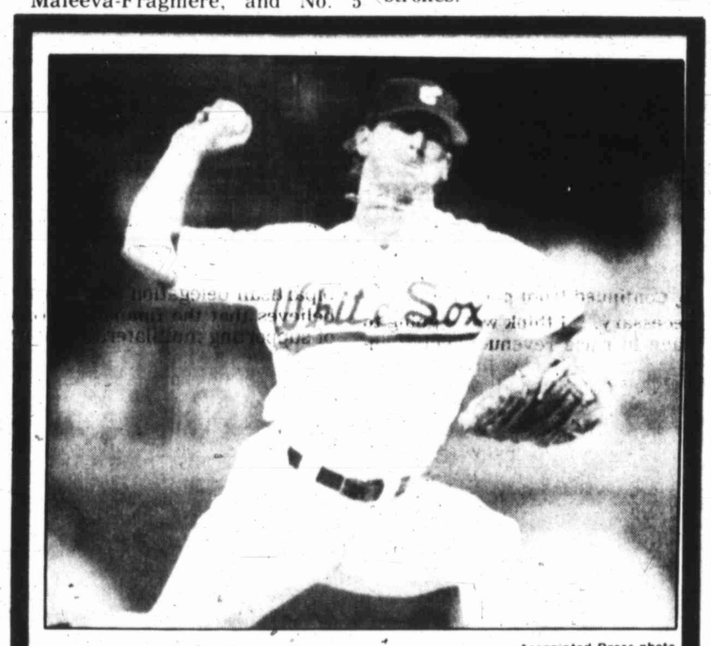

Refrigerator, a 2-year-old brown gelding with a suspect pedigree but undeniable talent, raced to an easy victory in Monday's $2 million All American Futurity at Ruidoso Downs.

In a race filled with trouble for favored Strait To The Bank and stablemate Special Record, Refrigerator and Didericksen were a picture of perfection in capturing the winner's share of $1 million in the straightaway sprint.

There were no arguments after Refrigerator had sped to a futurity-record time of 19.39 seconds for the 400 yards and a 1¾-lengths victory over the previously undefeated filly Quick Fun.

See Me Gone, a filly owned by Cathy Collins and Jean Chaves of Broomfield, Colo., ran third and earned $105,500.

The win was the seventh in nine races for Refrigerator this year.

Ho-hum; Daniel wins again

SPRINGFIELD, Ill. (AP) — If Beth Daniel gets any hotter, her irons may melt.

By winning the LPGA Rail Charity Classic for the second year running, Daniel extended her recent run to four victories in her last five starts this season. And the $45,000 she took home from a $300,000 purse gave her an earnings record of $658,782, $4,650 more than Betsy King's record set last year.

"I have a lot of confidence right now," Daniel said after Monday's round of 5-under-par 67 gave her a three-stroke edge over Susan Sanders. "I am playing well. You tend to play more aggressive when you're playing well."

Daniel birdied the first two holes Monday, added a birdie at No. 6 to turn at 11 under, then birdied 12 and 13. A bogey at 14 was offset by a birdie at 17. She finished at 203, 13 under par for three rounds on the 6,403-yard Rail Golf Course.

She finished one stroke shy of the three-round tournament record of 14 under, set in 1982 by JoAnne Carner.

"My 4-iron on the second hole was my best shot of the day," Daniel said. "On the front nine I didn't hit the ball real solid, but I got it worked out and started hitting it good on the back nine."

Sanders, four shots off the two-round lead shared by Daniel and Martha Nause, shot a 66 that featured seven birdies and one bogey. She birdied Nos. 2, 3, 5 and 6, settling for a 3-under front nine after a bogey at No. 7. She birdied 12, 13 and 14 to take sole possession of second place.

"It has been kind of a disappointing year for me, but it's a nice feeling to have a good round on the final day to move into the top 10," Sanders said. "I didn't realize until I putted out on the 18th that I was in second place. I didn't want to get too caught up in the scoreboard."

Nancy Brown, with a 67, and Alice Ritzman, who shot 68, were tied for third at at 9-under 207. Brown's round featured four birdies and an eagle on the 13th.

Donna Andrews, an LPGA rookie who was two shots out of the lead after two rounds, finished with a 70 for 208, five shots off the lead.

Kate Rogerson finished alone at 209 after a 69.

Cowboys send message to Smith by signing Highsmith

IRVING (AP) — The Dallas Cowboys finally got their highly touted, top-rated running back, but it wasn't Emmitt Smith.

Alonzo Highsmith, a powerful fullback who played for Coach Jimmy Johnson at the University of Miami, was traded to Dallas by the Houston Oilers for draft picks on Monday.

HIGHSMITH

The move sent a message to Smith, the Cowboys' first-round draft pick who has become the longest holdout in team history.

The Cowboys still hope to sign Smith, but acquiring Highsmith soothed concern over a stagnant running game during a 1-3 exhibition run.

Head scout John Wooten said Highsmith could be the missing ingredient the Cowboys need to get their running game going.

"I like this guy second only to breathing," Wooten said. "He can play."

Highsmith was the third player taken in the 1987 NFL draft, but fell into disfavor with the Oilers. First-year coach Jack Pardee's run-and-shoot offense left Highsmith the odd man out.

"Alonzo is a talented player, a hard worker, and will fit into our system perfectly," Johnson said. "He's a great blocker and has a great attitude and he knows the system."

The Cowboys plan to play Highsmith on Sunday in the regular-season opener against the San Diego Chargers.

Dallas gave Houston second- and third-round draft picks.

"Alonzo is the best blocking fullback in the league and a winner through and through," Johnson said. "Now we only have one piece of the puzzle left."

"It feels good to get back to Coach Johnson again," Highsmith said. "He's running the same offense we had in college. I know what he is all about. His main thing is to win."

Johnson said he knew of no immediate movement in talks with Smith, who is asking $700,000 a season on a three-year contract. The Cowboys are offering about $600,000 with a $1 million bonus.

Smith, an All-American running back from Florida and the 17th pick in the NFL draft, has enrolled in classes at his old school.

Highsmith was Houston's leading rusher in 1989 with 531 yards, but he had only 35 yards on five carries in exhibition play.

Highsmith said he didn't like playing for Jerry Glanville, who left as coach of the Oilers to take over the Atlanta Falcons after last season.

"I've regressed since I went to Houston," Highsmith said. "My pass receiving and running skills went down. All they wanted me to do was block."

Highsmith passed the Dallas physical although he is bothered by a sprained foot.

"I hurt my foot a couple of weeks ago and it's been painful," he said.

World record

JEREZ DE LA FRONTERA, Spain — U.S. runners Danny Everett (right) and Roberto Hernandez of Cuba celebrate after they both set the world record for the 300 meter race at 31.48 in an international track meet Monday. Everett wes declared the winner, but both were clocked in the same time.

Dorsett says Pokes need him

DALLAS (AP) — Tony Dorsett has a simple solution to the Dallas Cowboys' inadequate running game: sign Tony Dorsett.

"They don't have a running back out there that can do what I can do," Dorsett, 36, said in today's editions of the Dallas Times Herald.

Dorsett, the Cowboys' all-time leading rusher with 12,036 yards and No. 2 on the NFL's all-time rushing list with 12,739 yards, has recovered from the knee ligaments he tore in training camp last year with the Denver Broncos.

"There's no doubt in my mind I could play for the Cowboys right now. They're still waiting on their No. 1 pick (tailback Emmitt Smith), but Emmitt's no Tony Dorsett," he said.

Despite his desire to return to the Cowboys, Dorsett still is rankling over the aborted tryout he received last month.

Dorsett said he was invited to Cowboys Ranch in mid-August by John Wooten, the Cowboys's director of pro personnel. Wooten liked what he saw, but coach Jimmy Johnson nixed a Dorsett return to Dallas.

"Supposedly, Jimmy thought I would be too intimidating a factor for the younger guys, which I didn't quite understand. They don't have many veterans on that team right now, and I guess he thought the type of veteran I was over the years would not be conducive to his way of coaching," Dorsett said.

"I'm my own man and sometimes I'll say things that may be right and may not be. My thinking is that Jimmy wants more young guys that he can have control over."

Ryan scalps Tribe

By The Associated Press

Nolan Ryan got his 302nd career victory by holding Cleveland to one run and two hits in eight innings as the Texas Rangers beat the Cleveland Indians 6-2.

The 43-year-old Ryan (13-7) struck out eight and walked two. John Barfield yielded a pinch homer to Mitch Webster in the ninth. Mike Walker (1-5) was the loser as the Indians lost their eighth straight.

Texas took a 2-0 lead in the third on RBI singles by Gary Pettis and Jack Daugherty. Ruben Sierra had a two-run double in the fifth and the Rangers made it 6-1 in the sixth on a run-scoring single by Juan Gonzalez and a suicide squeeze by Jeff Huson.

AL

Bobby Thigpen's major league-record 47th save Monday night in Chicago's 4-2 victory over Kansas City, the White Sox remained 6½ games behind Oakland in the American League West.

Thigpen came on after the White Sox took a 3-2 lead on Carlton Fisk's tie-breaking homer in the sixth inning and added an insurance run on Robin Ventura's RBI single in the eighth.

Thigpen yielded a one-out single to Brian McRae but George Brett grounded into a game-ending double play. A mob scene ensued on the mound, with Fisk grabbing Thigpen in a bear hug.

Athletics 9, Red Sox 5

In a possible playoff preview, Oakland kayoed Kiecker (6-7) in the first inning and ended Boston's 10-game winning streak, longest in the AL this season. Rickey Henderson, who homered in the seventh off Wes Gardner, opened the game with a single, Willie McGee beat out an infield hit and both runners advanced on a wild pitch.

It appeared that Kiecker might escape when he struck out Jose Canseco and retired Harold Baines on a pop to third. But he walked Carney Lansford, filling the bases, and Mark McGwire singled for a 2-0 lead. Steinbach ran the count to 3-2, then hit his eighth homer.

Oakland's Scott Sanderson (14-9) struggled for five innings, allowing three runs, but got the victory with help from Gene Nelson in the sixth and Rick Honeycutt and Reggie Harris in the eighth. McGee had a two-run single for the A's, and the Red Sox got two-run homers from Mike Marshall and Tom Brunansky.

"Just another series, as far as I'm concerned," Boston manager Joe Morgan said. "You can lose three or win three in this series and it wouldn't make a difference of one iota when we get to the playoffs."

Tigers 5, Blue Jays 0

Cecil Fielder hit his 43rd home run and Walt Terrell pitched seven innings of four-hit ball as Detroit snapped Toronto's four-game winning streak. Terrell (4-2) didn't allow a hit until the fourth. He struck out five and didn't walk a batter in improving his Tiger Stadium record to 38-13.

"I always seem to pitch well in this ballpark, and I don't know why," Terrell said. "If I knew, I'd sure as hell take it on the road with me. It would be great if you could put it down in Anaheim and places like that."

Fielder, leading off the sixth, hit the first pitch about 10 rows up the second deck in left field to make it 3-0. It was his fourth homer off Jimmy Key (9-7) this season and his 112th RBI.

Twins 6, Brewers 0
Twins 9, Brewers 5

Mark Guthrie pitched a four-hitter for his first major league shutout in the opener and the Twins completed the sweep with five runs in the ninth inning of the nightcap, highlighted by Shane Mack's three-run double off Dan Plesac.

Guthrie (6-7) held the Brewers hitless until Dave Parker singled with two out in the fourth inning. In his previous start, he pitched the first complete game of his career. In the nightcap, Mack had three hits and five RBIs.

Mariners 6, Orioles 2

Matt Young gave up two runs in seven innings as Seattle handed Baltimore its ninth loss in 10 games. Young (7-14) yielded five hits and has surrendered only four earned runs in 21 innings against the Orioles this season. Bill Swift worked two innings and Mike Jackson got the last three outs. Pete O'Brien drove in two runs for the Mariners.

Angels 7, Yankees 0

Kirk McCaskill, coming off a shutout, pitched six more scoreless innings and California broke a tie with a six-run sixth. It was Dave Winfield's first appearance at Yankee Stadium since being traded in May. Winfield went 0-for-4 but scored the first run after drawing a leadoff walk.

Winfield was cheered when he brought out the lineup card and got an ovation each time he came to bat.

The punchless Yankees have lost five straight games, being outscored 42-6 in that span. New York has been shut out 12 times this season and held to one run in 23 games.

Mets still leading Bucs

By The Associated Press

[illegible] Gooden and the St [illegible] had trouble dealing with the heat.

New York let Gooden do the pitching in St. Louis on Monday, while Doug Drabek took the mound in Pittsburgh. So it figured things would remain the same in the National League East. They did, too.

The Mets beat the Cardinals 9-3 to maintain a one-half game lead over the Pirates, who beat Philadelphia 4-1.

In St. Louis, Gooden pitched seven scoreless innings but had to leave the game because of the 96-degree heat. For seven innings, the Cardinals couldn't do much with the heat he was throwing.

"Gooden was better than good today," Cardinals manager Joe Torre said. "It seemed like every time he needed it, he could reach back and find something extra."

Gooden (15-6) has won 12 of his last 13 decisions, giving up only three runs in his last three starts. He yielded six singles to St. Louis.

"I was very happy to see (Manager) Buddy (Harrelson) come out," said Gooden, who left after throwing a few warmup pitches before the eighth. "I'm beat. I feel old."

Drabek helped the Pirates keep pace by tossing a four-hitter to beat the Phillies at Three Rivers Stadium for his 18th victory. The right-hander is 10-2 this season following Pirate losses.

"(Manager) Jim Leyland doesn't know how lucky he is to have a guy he can run out there every five days like Doug Drabek," Phillies manager Nick Leyva said. "He's outstanding. When he can get his breaking ball over for strikes like he did today, he might be the best pitcher in the league right now."

Drabek (18-5), improving to 9-1 since the All-Star break, has pitched three complete-game victories over the Phillies this season, allowing seven hits and two earned runs (0.67 ERA) in 27 innings.

Mets 9, Cardinals 3

Kevin McReynolds drove in the Mets' first run in the fourth inning with a double and hit his 20th home run with two on in the ninth. Former Cardinal Tom Herr and Darryl Strawberry added three hits each for the Mets, who are 10-5 against St. Louis this season.

Pirates 4, Phillies 1

Jeff King, in a 2-for-21 slump, went 2-for-3 with two doubles and two RBIs in support of Drabek as the Pirates, coming off a 2-3 road trip to Atlanta and Houston, won for only the third time in their last nine games. They improved to one game over .500 (31-30) against NL East.

Braves 8, Reds 6

Consecutive doubles by Tommy Gregg and Andres Thomas broke a seventh-inning tie as Atlanta beat visiting Cincinnati for its fourth straight victory.

With two outs in the the seventh, Gregg doubled off Tim Layana (5-2) and Thomas followed with a double. Jim Vatcher added an RBI single.

Astros 7, Dodgers 3

Casey Candaele had four hits for only the second time in his career, including a two-run single in a four-run fourth inning, and right-hander Bill Gullickson ended a personal four-game losing streak.

The Astros' victory — only their 21st in 66 road games — ended Fernando Valenzuela's three-game winning streak.

Dave Rohde, who replaced Bill Doran at second base for the Astros following Doran's trade to Cincinnati last week, added a pair of run-scoring singles and prevented a run in the fourth inning with a diving stop of Mike Scioscia's grounder in the hole.

Gullickson (9-12) won on the road for the first time in seven decisions dating back to May 3 at Philadelphia. Dave Smith, the third Houston pitcher of the game, pitched the ninth for his 21st save.

Expos 3, Cubs 2

Andres Galarraga singled home Delino DeShields from third base with two outs in the 12th inning to lift Montreal past Chicago at Olympic Stadium.

DeShields opened the 12th with a single off Randy Kramer (0-2) and was sacrificed to second by Otis Nixon before moving to third on a single by Marquis Grissom. Grissom went to second on Tim Wallach's grounder and Larry Walker, a .238 hitter, was walked intentionally before Galarraga singled up the middle.

U.S. Open

of the match after wrapping up the third set. But Cahill somehow rallied and beat Becker in the fourth set, breaking him three times.

In the fifth set, both players were at the top of their attacking games. Becker pulled off the only service break, in the seventh game.

The difference in the fifth set, Cahill said, was "I played a couple of loose volleys at the wrong time, and I think he served a lot better. He picked up his game a bit in the fifth set."

Garrison has moved into the quarters without dropping a set, something she attributes to "a lot of skill and a lot of luck."

"The balls just fall in my way when I need them," the Houston native said. "I'm hitting the ball a lot better. More than anything, I'm just mentally fighting it out when I need to, staying in there, getting that extra inch on the ball when I need it."

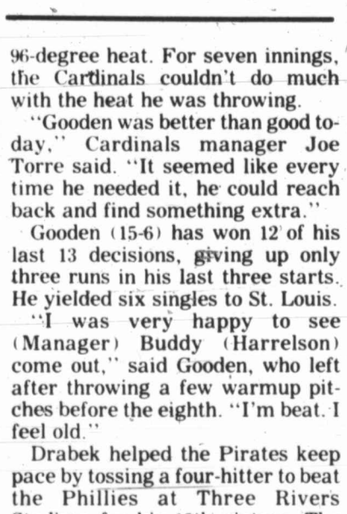

And it happened late in the second set against Tauziat.

Garrison was broken while serving at 5-3. Tauziat then held to pull to 5 -5 before Garrison got her game in gear once again.

Garrison held serve, then broke Tauziat by punching a forehand volley deep into the corner that the French woman could only get a racket on.

Although Garrison has reached the semifinals at the National Tennis Center the last two years and was in the Wimbledon final earlier this summer, her name is seldom mentioned when talk turns to contenders for the U.S. Open title.

"That's the way I like it," she said. "Before you know it, you sneak up on them. ... It's much easier to concentrate that way."

NEW YORK (AP) — Alex Haley says he may not have become a writer if his parents and grandparents had not given him a foot-thick slice from a California redwood as a gift 60 years ago.

The tree slice had small white markers illustrating the tree's growth, Haley says in the Sept. 2 issue of Parade magazine.

"I was told that, if I read all I could, whenever I found something notably historic, then that could become another marker in my slice of tree," he said.

"From then on, I read every book I could handle, along with my grandpa's newspapers for black people," he said. "Today, I absolutely believe that the reading inspired by the tree slice greatly influenced my becoming an author. It is also why I like most of all to write about historical subjects."

FAIRHOPE, Ala. (AP) — Glenn Ford plays an aging policeman not unlike himself in "Raw Nerve," a murder mystery being filmed in coastal Alabama.

The character, Captain Gavin, is "just as much like me as possible, I guess. I can't play roles which require me to be someone other than myself," the 74-year-old Canadian-born actor said Wednesday.

Ford said it takes "real nerve" for him to appear before the camera. "I never wanted to be an actor," he said. "I just got lucky."

"Raw Nerve" is expected to be released in about a year. It also stars Sandhal Bergman, Randall "Tex" Cobb, Ted Prior, Traci Lords and Jan Michael-Vincent.

NEUTRAL ZONE BETWEEN IRAQ AND JORDAN — Some 40,000 refugees are presently stranded in a transient camp in the neutral zone between Iraq and Jordan after fleeing Kuwait and Iraq. The refugees are grouped in the camp before being able to cross over the border into Jordan. As the numbers of refugees continue to grow, the time spent in the camp is increasing.

U.N. sanctions beginning to work; Iraq makes plea

By SIDNEY S. FEINGOLD
Associated Press Writer

Iraq has asked Western countries whose citizens it holds to urgently send food for them, increasing concern that Saddam Hussein may not intend to free all remaining women and children hostages as promised.

The request was yet another sign that Iraq is feeling the crunch from the trade embargo ordered by the United Nations after Iraq's Aug. 2 invasion of Kuwait. Iraq also suspended payments on its foreign debt on Monday.

In the Persian Gulf waters, meanwhile, U.S. Coast Guardsmen boarded the Iraqi-flagged freighter Zanoobia in the Gulf of Oman today in line with the tightening embargo on Iraqi trade, naval and shipping sources said.

It would be the first reported case of U.S. forces boarding an Iraqi-flagged vessel since the U.N. embargo was imposed on Iraq last month.

Also today, Jordan's crown prince criticized the international community for doing little to help thousands of Asian refugees from Iraq and Kuwait, some of whom are dying from exposure in a squalid makeshift camp in the desert while they await transport home.

In the Soviet Union, Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze proposed an international conference on the gulf crisis that would also take up the Arab-Israeli conflict and the civil war in Lebanon.

In a major foreign policy address, Shevardnadze also said Sunday's superpower summit in Helsinki, Finland, would mark "a major milestone on the road toward resolving the crisis in the Persian Gulf."

In another development, Iraq suggested setting up an international "people's court" to try President Bush for defiling Islam and for human rights violations. The state-run Iraqi News Agency said today the idea was discussed by the nation's union for lawyers and human rights association.

The West looked in vain over the weekend for large-scale, follow-up flights after hundreds of Western and Japanese women and children were allowed to leave on Iraqi jetliners on Saturday.

But there was a report that 138 Westerners — about them two dozen Americans — would be allowed to fly out to Jordan today.

And a convoy carrying about 300 British women and children left Kuwait City just after dawn heading for Baghdad, where they hoped to continue overland to Jordan or fly home via Amman, British officials said.

Some of the evacuees have acted as human shields at strategic Iraqi sites on orders of Saddam, who last week said women and children would be allowed to leave. About 3,000 Americans — a third of them women and children — were among 21,000 Westerners initially trapped in Iraq and Kuwait by the invasion.

On Monday, the Iraqi News Agency quoted remarks made by

County's first bale a winner

By MARCELLINO CHAVEZ
Staff Writer

"More than anything, we want to recognize the farmer of Martin County. Without cotton, there is no Stanton. We want to recognize the efforts of the farmers," said Stanton National Bank president Joe Hodges in 1989.

In 1990, the same concern is shown as Hodges and other MC businesses are participating in a county-wide first bale award.

With more that 114,000 cotton acres planted in the county it's no wonder that this commodity is considered "the most important crop in this area," according to Martin County Extension Agricultural Agent Greg Jones.

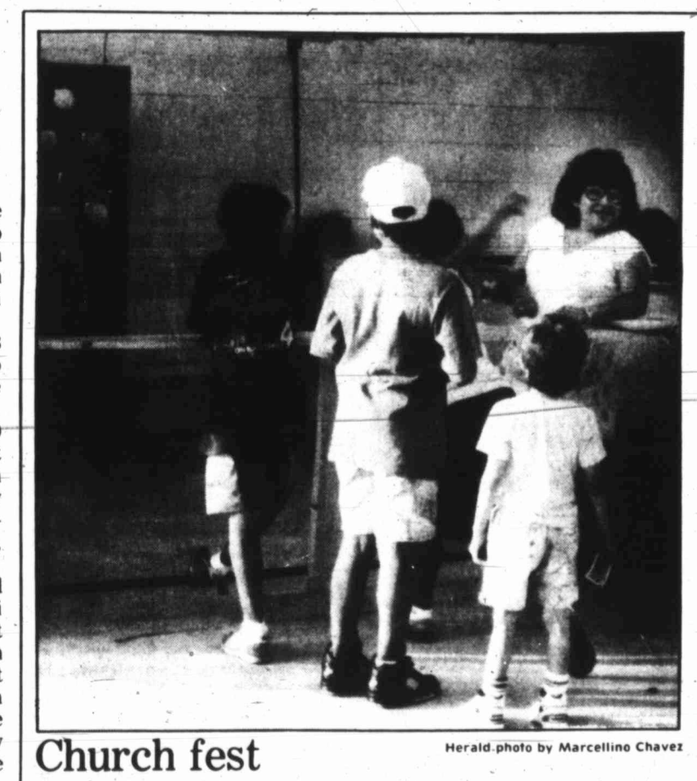

SNB is once again coordinating the program to collect and award the cash-prize for the first bale of cotton produced and ginned in the county.

The program was revived by SNB in 1988 after a long "lay off" which awarded Eddie Cook $1,000 for his effort October 14 of that year. Cook baled the first load again in 1989, but this time it was almost a month earlier, Sept. 20. On his second trip to the awards table, Cook received $2,850 for his participation, according to SNB president Joe Hodges.

Last year's winning cotton was planted on the Tom Ranch Company, a farm Cook leases three miles southeast of Stanton. He planted the Acala 90 seed on April 24 of '89.

The program was designed to serve as an incentive for local farmers and for the community to show support for its bumper crop. "Cotton is the economic base for this area," said Jones.

Local business that participated in '89 were; Stanton National Bank, Cap Rock Electric, Stallings and Herm, Bill's Grocery and Hardware, Herb Henderson Auctioneer, Wheeler Motor Company, Franklin and Son, Texas Utlities, Lenorah Savings and Loan, Hughes Fertilizer Company, Farm Bureau Insurance, Farmers Co-op Gin, J.D. Crawford Insurance, Eiland and Associates, Farmers' Co-op of Ackerly and Cave-Bowlin, Inc.

Groundwater control stirs officials

By PATRICK DRISCOLL
Staff Writer

Some area officials are concerned that a proposed 50-year state water plan will usurp local control of groundwater, giving more control the state.

"It appears that the state will be taking over control of groundwater," said Rep. Rob Junell, D-San Angelo, who is on the House Natural Resources Committee. "We are definitely against that. Those of us in West Texas want to be able to control our own groundwater both in quantity and quality."

Junell testified Thursday in Austin in the last of 13 public hearings held around the state last month on the proposed "Water for Texas Plan" by the Texas Water Development Board. The TWDB plan to develop and manage the state's water resources in order to insure adequate water is mandated by state law.

"I'm going to do everything I can to see that control of our underground water remains with local people and with property owners," Junell said.

Losing local control would also affect underground water districts, said Mark Hoelscher, president of Texas Underground Water Conservation Districts. Hoelscher testified Tuesday at a hearing in Midland that the proposal implies that local groundwater districts do nothing, lack expertise and state control is needed.

"I can only surmise that its author simply does not have a working knowledge of existing districts nor the ability to envision their future potential," Hoelscher said of proposal statements in Chapter 4, page 11. "Who in the TWDB do we still need to convince that underground water conservation districts are effective?"

Hoelscher also disagreed with proposals in Chapter 4 to require that groundwater district management plans be approved by the TWDB and that districts provide water usage data to the board.

"We strongly disagree!" he said of getting TWDB approval for management plans. "Time and history have shown that local issues are best understood and handled by local people. The preservation and protection of West Texas' most precious natural resource, groundwater, is perhaps Iraq's foreign minister, Tariq Aziz, to President Francesco Sommaruga of the International Committee of the Red Cross, regarding foreigners inside Iraq.

"Suffering ... from the effects of the international siege, Iraq will not be responsible for their suffering resulting from the shortages in food supplies," Aziz said.

He urged embassies with large number of ... Iraq to "take urgent measures to send those citizens food supplies.

Iraq rescinded landing rights for foreign charters into Iraq to pick up foreign nationals, and some sources said Baghdad was seeking to swap hostages for trade, apparently in an attempt to poke holes in the embargo.

Japan's Kyodo News Service said Iraq was asking Tokyo to bend the embargo in exchange for freeing Japanese citizens.

In Paris, the Foreign Ministry indicated Iraq had set conditions unacceptable to France in return for landing rights that would allow a French plane to repatriate 200 women and children.

In Baghdad today, Western diplomats were negotiating frantically with officials at Iraq's Interior and Foreign Ministries to obtain the release of a group of 138 foreign women and children who want to leave on the Iraqi Airways flight, diplomatic sources and airline officials reported.

One Western diplomatic source said 24 Americans are among those trying to leave on that flight. The others are Britons, Canadians, Italians, French and Irish nationals, he said, but could not provide a breakdown.

Late Monday, the Iraqi Airways jumbo jet with Iraqis stranded in Britain ... left London for ... one official said ... aboard.

More than ... Asians — Indians, Sri Lankans, Bangladeshis, Thais and Filipinos — remain stranded in Jordan.

Some are stuck in a squalid, makeshift camp in the no man's land just inside Jordan because authorities at the border post of Ruweishid ... by the human tide ... been able to process them.

Crown Prince ... brother of King Hussein ... appealed for immediate ... We should not forget that the situation, critical as it is, may be ... the tip of the iceberg," he told a news conference.

On Monday, the Iraqi News Agency quoted Mohammed Mahdi Saleh, acting minister of commerce and finance, as saying Iraq had suspended payments on its foreign debt ... timated at $30 billion to $35 billion.

Most of that is owed to the United States, Britain, France, the Soviet Union, West Germany and Japan for purchases of weapons, technology and food.

The news agency quoted Saleh as saying the debt suspension would have adverse effects on countries and companies "incapable of withstanding ... current situation." He was referring to the economic woes faced by poorer countries that count on trade with Iraq to generate critical foreign exchange.

Perryton firm awarded aerial contract

LUBBOCK — The contract for aerial spraying in the 1990 High Plains Boll Weevil Control Program has been awarded to Perryton Aviation of Perryton, Texas.

Larry Schickedanz, owner of Perryton Aviation, Inc. submitted a two-tier bid at a bidders' meeting held at Lubbock Civic Center August 29. Schickedenz's low bid, of $8.80 per gallon for the first 5,000 gallons applied and $7.09 per gallon on subsequent applications, was chosen from eight bids presented at the meeting. Lubbock-based Plains Cotton Growers, Inc. let the 1989 contract for $5.93 per gallon. The 27-year-old program is conducted in cooperation with U.S. Department of Agriculture from PCG's field office in Spur, Texas.

Cottontalk

Before making the contract award, Program Coordinator for PCG, Roger Haldenby commented to bidders that the 1990 weevil suppression program is expected to be much smaller than in recent years. An early freeze in October 1989, and low temperatures in December helped minimize the numbers of boll weevils that were able to survive the winter. The hot, dry conditions of May and June for this year have further reduced populations.

The contract calls for applying ultra low volume malathion, at the rate of 12 ounces per acre, to an estimated 50,000 to 150,000 acres of cotton. Four air-craft will be used. The control zone lies along and below the Caprock on the eastern edge of the High Plains from Silverton, Briscoe County, in the north to Vealmoor, Howard County, in the south.

Pheromone traps set out below and along the Caprock since May have caught 98 percent fewer boll weevils this year than during the same period in 1989, added Johnny Anderson, Program Manager. Anderson explained that the early indications are for this to be a light year but that treatment decisions are based on a field-by-field manual survey of boll weevil populations. This survey using 32 two-person teams, will start September 5th.

The first spray application to infested fields will be made September 24. Treatments will then be repeated as necessary, at ten-day intervals until the first area freeze.

Since its inception in 1963 the program has successfully prevented the spread of boll weevil into the cotton acreage above the Caprock and on into New Mexico.

Sea World to cut back

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Sea World of Texas announced today it is laying off more than 300 full-time workers and will close most days during non-summer months.

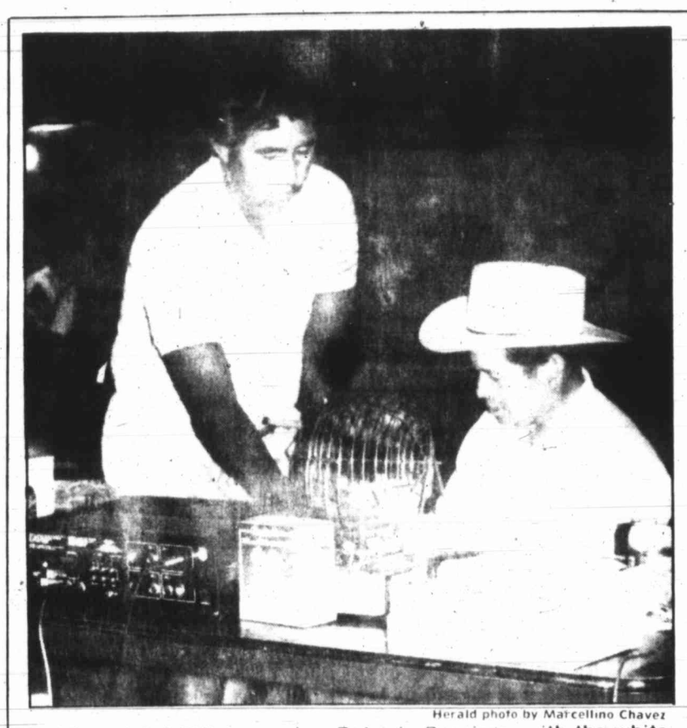

The marine park had been open daily during the summer and Wednesday through Sunday in other months.

Under the new schedule, Sea World will open weekends and holidays in March, April, May, September, October and November. It will close in December, January and February.

During the summer season — Memorial Day weekend to Labor Day weekend — Sea World will open daily, park officials said in a prepared statement.

"Most of our guests are families, and by and large they can only visit Sea World during the summer when school is out or, during spring and fall, on Saturdays and Sundays," park chairman George J. Becker Jr. said in the statement.

Attendance during winter months has been so low it doesn't warrant keeping the marine park open, Becker said.

Church mini-fest proves successful

After their successful summer festival, St. Joseph Catholic Church members held a small mini-fest to pay for expenses that the church had incurred as of August, according to church spokesman Clemente Villa.

Half the size of their regular festival, church organizations consisting of the Knights of Columbus, the alter society, CCD classes and the prayer group participated in the festivities and created another success.

Eight booths were set up to entertain the community. The booths included food such as: gorditas, hamburgers to cotton candy, popcorn and soft drinks were there for the public to quench their appetite. Along with food booths, game booths were there for festive goer's to enjoy themselves and help the church at the same time.

Ground

the most important of these local issues and groundwater districts have done a commendable job handling it.

"We wish to be given credit for having done so and given assurance that this witch hunt for state control will stop," he said.

As far as providing usage data, he said that with increased underground water levels in the past 10 years, it is not "an appropriate way to spend our money and time." Otherwise, local water districts have always been willing to share information, he said.

Besides groundwater, the TWDB plan also addresses other issues such as surface water projects dealing with quantity and quality. The plan projects that seven trillion gallons of water annually will be needed by the state in 2040 for an estimated population increase from 16 million in 1985 to 35 million.

Interest in religion growing

HOUSTON (AP) — Religion courses are growing in popularity at local campuses, including the University of Houston where it's standing room only in a class called "The Bible and Western Culture."

College officials say enrollment in religion classes began soaring two years ago, and they see no signs of a slowdown.

At Houston, religion scholar Lynn Mitchell teaches "The Bible and Western Culture" in the university's mammoth Melcher Hall. The class is packed.

On a recent morning, Carol Strickland, a 32-year-old mother of three, showed up even though she was not enrolled.

President briefs Cabinet on Iraq

By RITA BEAMISH
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — President Bush met with his Cabinet for a post-vacation briefing on the Persian Gulf crisis today while two congressional teams ended a first-hand look at the situation in the region.

The president, returning to the capital just five days before he holds his third summit with Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev, also was dispatching two top aides to solicit donations from wealthy allies to cover expenses of the massive U.S. military operation in the gulf region.

Bush refused reporters questions about the gulf crisis during a brief photo session with Cabinet members.

"We are going to have to expect more cooperation from the 22 countries that are participating in this effort," Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., the chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, said today.

Rostenkowski, who returned from Saudi Arabia Monday night, also said on "CBS This Morning" that Americans are "just going to have to recognize the fact that sacrifice is going to be necessary. . .I think we're going to have to raise revenues, cut spending, be a little more prudent about the way we spend our defense dollars."

Sen. Carl Levin, D-Mich., appearing with Rostenkowski, echoed the call for more international support. "We've got to focus on a number of things and one is the burden-sharing issue. We must get more of our allies there, in greater numbers."

Levin said the morale of U.S. troops "is very, very high." But he said they are in an "extraordinarily difficult environment" and are getting "no mail yet, no newspapers, no cigarettes. We're going to have to worry about rotation and relief for some of our forces."

Bush ended a three-week vacation in Maine on Monday evening and scheduled the morning meeting with his Cabinet.

White House aides, meantime, worked intensively to prepare for Sunday's superpower meeting in Helsinki, Finland, announced on unusually short notice last weekend.

The aides prepared for the possibility of a Friday departure, giving the president a chance to meet with Finland's President Mauno Koivisto on Saturday before he sees Gorbachev on Sunday.

Bush will meet with the Soviet leader for five hours, then return to Washington.

A delegation of 22 House members returned to Washington on Monday night after touring the Persian Gulf region and inspecting the U.S. military operation that has been rushed in since Iraq's Aug. 2 invasion of Kuwait. A Senate group was expected back from the region later today.

GEORGE BUSH

Rep. Richard Gephardt, D-Mo., the House majority leader, told reporters at Andrews Air Force Base, Md: "All of us left here with the conclusion that the president's action was a correct action. All of us come back believing that is the case."

But, Gephardt added, "We need more help, especially from our NATO allies, to have troops on the ground with ours." He said the bipartisan delegation also "firmly believes that the financial burden of supporting multilateral military deployments in the Persian Gulf area must be shared equitably."

The foreign affairs committees of the House and Senate planned to question Secretary of State James A. Baker III on the president's gulf strategy at hearings this afternoon and Wednesday.

Baker leaves Thursday for Saudi Arabia and the gulf region to solicit financial contributions to bolster the U.S. effort and also to provide economic assistance to countries hard hit by the international embargo against trading with Iraq. He also planned stops in West Germany and Italy.

Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady was setting out on a similar mission today to Paris, London, Seoul and Tokyo.

Bush announced last week that he wants to enlist the wealthy nations of the world to help pay the $1 billion per month in U.S. costs for military might mustered against Iraqi President Saddam Hussein.

The Helsinki summit is expected to focus on the Middle East. The president and his spokesmen have said a wide array of subjects also will be covered, including progress toward an agreement on reducing troops and tanks in Europe.

Historian in middle of dispute

BEDFORD (AP) — A Texas man who removed artifacts from a Zulu battlefield in what is now South Africa has been caught up in a dispute over their ownership.

Bedford resident Greg Marcinek conducted two archaeological digs on the 110-year-old battlefield site between some 20,000 Zulu warriors and about 1,000 British soldiers.

South African officials want the artifacts Marcinek dug up from the privately-owned pasture and are reviewing their options to recover them. Marcinek said he had permission to take them but will return them once they are cataloged.

"The Khambula battle site has been declared a national monument," Janette Deacon, head of South Africa's National Monuments Council, told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram.

Ms. Deacon said Marcinek went to South Africa on two occasions and shipped back boxes full of animal-skin shields.
