Negotiators cut sting to seal compromise 5-year budget

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congressional negotiators settled all tax issues in President Clinton's compromise budget on Monday, setting up showdown votes this week in the House and Senate. The plan calls for billions in higher taxes on the wealthy and a gasoline tax increase of 4.3 cents per gallon.

Democratic leaders predicted the legislation, designed to cut the deficit by about $496 billion over five years, would win approval.

The White House welcomed the agreement and President Clinton was expected to bestow a public, formal blessing today.

But Republicans attacked it swiftly. Senate GOP Leader Bob Dole called the measure "the largest tax increase in the histo-

Flood wall in St. Louis stands firm against rushing onslaught

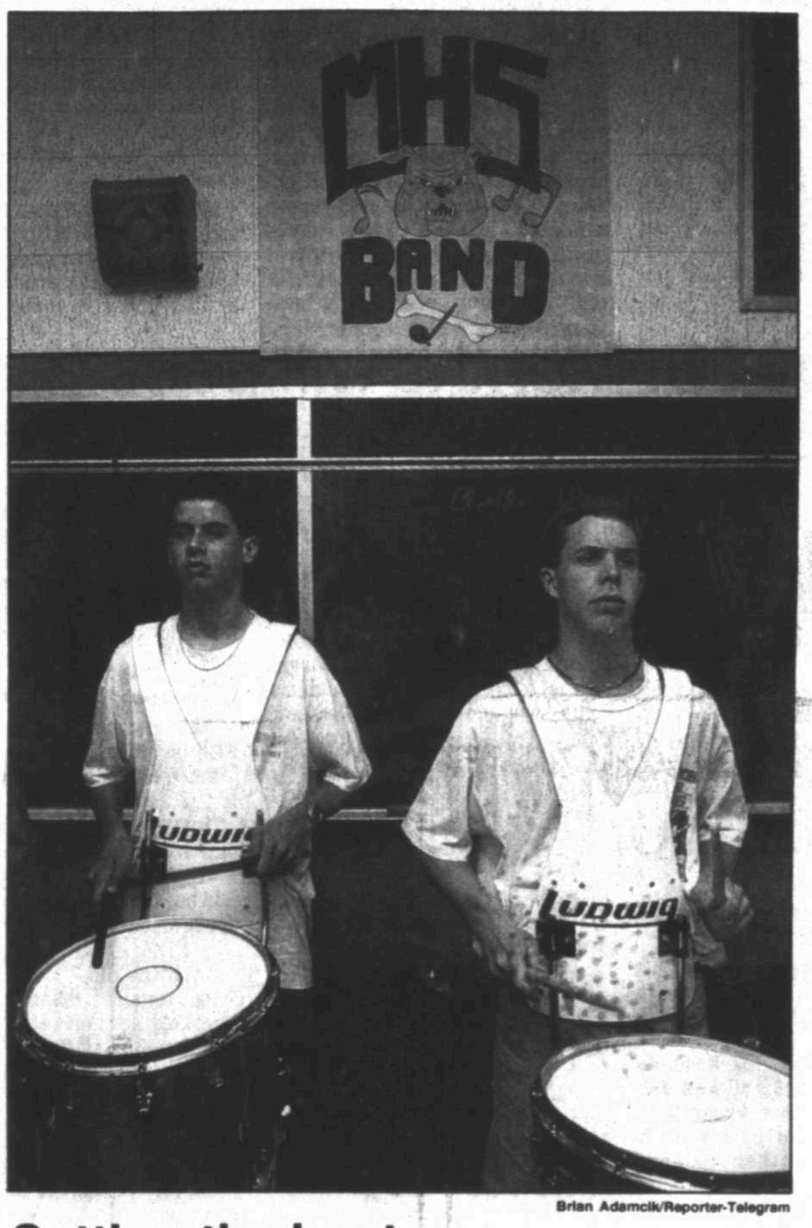

By Sam Howe Verhovek
N.Y. Times News Service

ST. LOUIS — The Mississippi River all but consumed villages and farmland to the north and south of here Monday, but St. Louis's 11-mile concrete flood wall stood firm against a rushing onslaught of muddy water that officials described as the death throes of the great flood of 1993.

The havoc suffered in the smaller towns along the Mississippi and Missouri rivers proved to be this city's gain, because unexpected breaks in levees outside the city helped reduce the pressure of the Mississippi and bring down its crest, which ran below the most dire predictions made over the weekend as it passed the landmark Gateway Arch here.

Although forecasters said Sunday that the river would crest in St. Louis Monday, it now appears that the crest came even as they

Courts whisk teary toddler to new home

ANN ARBOR, Mich. — In an instant, Jan and Roberta DeBoers' 29 months as parents were over.

"Mommy!" 2½-year-old Jessica screamed as she was whisked Monday from the only home she has known, away from her swing set, away from her dog.

The weeping DeBoers made a final lunge at the dark-eyed toddler they had fought a fierce legal battle to keep. They were restrained by friends as their attorney carried Jessica away from their two-story house, adorned with signs that made one last heartbreaking plea.

"Dan and Cara, please don't take our little Jessica away," read the signs punctuated with a red heart that was split in two and dripping red tears.

Attorney Suellyn Scarnecchia strapped the wailing toddler into a car seat in a waiting minivan, then climbed in beside her. Earlier, DeBoer had loaded the van with Jessica's bed and mattress, blue and white stripped stroller and boxes of belongings.

Scarnecchia said Jessica cried, "I want my dad. Where's my dad?" as she Midland school-board trustees are so confident in the district's fiscal management that they invited the state comptroller's office to examine district accounts.

Another recent audit supported the trustees' convictions that monies are being handled well. A report published by Lawrence F. MISD was compared with 44 other school districts in the state in the report "Controlling Costs in the Classroom," and was audited along with 16 other districts.

Area effects of new federal cable-TV rates law remain fuzzy

By Darren J. Waggoner
Staff writer

Whether cable consumers see rate refunds as a result of a new federal cable TV law remains uncertain.

But — due to Dimension Cable Services' monopoly on the local market — the company soon will have to get city approval before raising its rates.

Prompted by a rising tide of complaints from consumer groups, rates affecting 57 million subscribers across the nation will be monitored by municipalities who have received regulation certificates from the FCC.

"The benchmark rate will be set by the FCC (Federal Communications Commission), all the city can do is say, 'Hey, you're above the benchmark, do something about it,'" said Assistant City Attorney Chad Weaver.

Currently, cable TV rates across the country are frozen at their September 1992 levels.

In June, city officials applied with the FCC for a cable regulation certificate. One week earlier, the FCC delayed enforcement startup from June 21 to Oct. 1, saying it needed $11.5 million more to enforce the law.

Upon approving the money, Congress moved up the date for rate relief to begin on Sept. 1.

But the FCC — citing internal problems involving the hiring and training of lawyers, accountants and economists — is not sure it can meet the deadline, according to Commissioner Andrew Barrett.

"We have not had a chance to discuss it internally," he said, of the $11.5 million appropriation. "I want to do the right thing. I want to get it done properly."

Even if the starting bell sounds on Sept. 1, months will pass before consumers feel its effect.

After certification is granted, the city will have 120 days to adopt its rules for enforcing the regulations.

Then it notifies the local cable company, which has 30 days to file its new rates based on the FCC's formula.

If there are no questions, the new rates would go into effect in another 30 days.

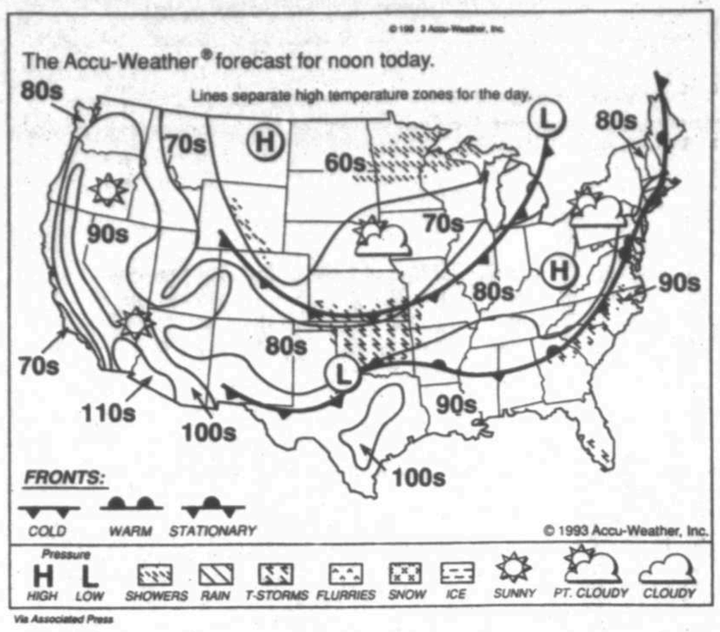

However, the city could take another 90 days after the cable company has submitted its new rates to gather more information. It can take an additional 150 days, if the local cable company has complained that the FCC's formula does not leave enough money to cover the cost of providing service.

Missy Orr-Ryan, General Manager at Dimension Cable, said she is unsure

Chance of rain to cloud day

Today's forecast calls for partly cloudy skies with a 20 percent chance of rain, a high in the mid-90s and southeast winds at 10-20 mph. Tonight should be partly cloudy with a 20 percent chance of rain and a low near 70, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Wednesday should be partly cloudy with a 20 percent chance of rain and a high in the mid-90s.

After an overnight low of 74, Monday's high reached 91, compared to the record high for that date of 106 set in 1944. The record low was 60 set in 1971.

STATE

The record-breaking dry spell in parts of North Texas was broken Monday, and areas that didn't get rain likely will get some by week's end, said Alan Moller, a meteorologist with the National Weather Service's Fort Worth office.

"We're going to end this dry streak . . . within the next day or two," Moller said.

No rain was recorded in the Dallas-Fort Worth area for the entire month of July. But on Monday, showers extended across the region.

The forecast for North Texas today calls for partly cloudy skies with a chance of thunderstorms. The highs will be in the mid-90s to near 100 degrees and lows will be in the mid-70s.

Skies were mostly cloudy over West Texas Monday with scattered showers from San Angelo to El Paso.

Temperatures generally were in the 70s and 80s with variable winds of 5 to 15 mph. The wind was gusty at times over the extreme northwest Panhandle.

Today's forecast calls for showers and thunderstorms throughout the day. Some may be severe across the Panhandle and northern portions of the South Plains.

Highs will range from the 80s in the Panhandles and mountains to near 103 in the Big Bend area.

While showers developed around the rest of the state, nearly all of South Texas continued to bake in temperatures in the 90s and 100s.

Skies were mostly sunny to partly cloudy.

The region is expected to be partly cloudy and hot today with widely scattered showers in the east. Highs again should be in the 90s and 100s.

NATION

Thunderstorms bearing large hail and heavy rain developed Monday over the lower Great Lakes and moved across the Northeast. In the South, strong storms also blew across Arkansas.

A slow moving cold front curved from the central Rockies across the southern Plains and lower Mississippi Valley, through the Ohio Valley to the eastern Great Lakes.

Along and ahead of the front, a line of strong thunderstorms developed in moist and unstable air over the eastern Great Lakes, and some of the storms became severe, with large hail and damaging wind.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

WHISK: Courts pull teary toddler from home

the DeBoers during the flight, Faupel said.

The new family went into seclusion, rather than return to their home in Blairstown, Iowa, about 25 miles west of Cedar Rapids, she said.

"It will take a while to cement this relationship," Faupel said.

Earlier Monday, the Iowa Supreme Court rejected a request for an emergency stay of the transfer. The news came just five minutes before Jessica's last ride away from her Michigan home.

"I thought someone very high up would say, 'I just can't watch this,'" said Joan Pheney Engstrom, a member of the DeBoer support group Justice for Jessi.

Jessica had been told she would be moving to Iowa, but didn't learn until Sunday she would leave Monday, Scarnecchia said. Meetings over the past three weeks between the Schmidts and their daughter were intended to ease the move.

Jessica appeared to have some idea of what was going on, said Don DuQuette of the University of Michigan Law School, who has worked on the DeBoers' behalf.

On Saturday, Jessica suddenly looked at DeBoer and said, "The court gave me away," DuQuette said at a news conference. The DeBoers did not attend.

In Blairstown, the Schmidts' small, white home sat empty, wrapped in a yellow ribbon and decorated with a sign proclaiming "Welcome Home Anna." Below "Anna," in smaller letters, was "Jessica."

The Schmidts have said they will call the girl Jessica, at least for a while. They arranged for a therapist to help in the transition if neccesary.

Many in Blairstown, population 700, just want life to return to normal for the Schmidts, and for themselves.

"What I want is for everyone to let them go their way," said Carol DeNeve, who lives a block from the Schmidts. "There's nothing anybody can do to change it. I feel sorry for both of the families. It went on too long."

Mrs. Schmidt gave up custody of the girl shortly after giving birth Feb. 8, 1991, in Cedar Rapids. She was single at the time.

The DeBoers planned to adopt Jessica. But Mrs. Schmidt, who initially named the wrong man as the father, changed her mind. She informed Schmidt of his paternity on Feb. 27, 1991, and they began trying to get their daughter back the next month.

The Schmidts were married in April 1992 and had another daughter, Chloe, in June.

Iowa courts awarded the girl to the Schmidts and the Michigan Supreme Court ruled in July that order must be enforced in Michigan. The U.S. Supreme Court refused Friday to block the transfer.

The DeBoers maintained it would be in Jessica's best interests to stay with them since they had raised her since birth. But the Schmidts said they had a right to raise their own child.

It wasn't known if the DeBoers would be able to visit Jessica, Scarnecchia said.

Mrs. DeBoer had counselors with her Monday, the lawyer said. She kept some of Jessica's toys and books — "things she just couldn't part with," Scarnecchia said.

In the early evening, DeBoer propped a ladder against the house and silently took down most of the placards.

He left the one with the broken heart.

AUDIT: Report 'confirms' MISD performance

services.

MISD was ranked as the 33rd largest district in terms of student enrollment. It ranked 23rd out of 45 in the percentage of students in grades 3, 5, 7, 9 and 11 mastering all three portions of the TAAS (Texas Assessment of Academic Skills) test.

The audit, however, did note places where the district could have saved money.

During the 1991-'92 school year, the state auditor's office said MISD could have saved $278,096 in expenditures outside the classroom. The expenditures included $500 for audit expenses, about $8,500 in water bills, $70,340 in expenses for building supplies and maintenance, $86,294 in travel expenses, and $112,436 in expenses in property and liability insurance.

Lusby said much of the travel expenses incurred are between Midland and Austin.

"We have to go further than many of the cities we were compared to," he said, noting that travel expenses are incurred by district employees and school-board trustees.

MISD school-board president Jack Hightower said MISD's travel expenses are high when compared to other districts in a Benchmarks report released just Monday. Produced by the Texas Research League in Austin, Hightower said the Benchmarks report indicated MISD's travel costs were high. "Greenwood's travel cost is right under us, so that tells you something about our location," he said.

As for the water bill, much of which goes toward keeping school campuses and playing fields green, Lusby said Midland may get 13 inches of rain in a year, where some of the other cities in the comparison get 30 inches.

"Midland can't compare for rainfall to Dallas/Fort Worth or San Antonio," he said.

Despite the high water bill, Hightower said a recent Benchmarks report indicated that MISD's overall utility cost per pupil annually averages $97. "We aren't very high on the list with that," Hightower said.

MISD's maintenance bill was larger than other districts, according to Lusby, because the district's buildings "on the average are older than those in metropolitan areas and require more money to maintain. Some districts have a lot of brand-new buildings that are easier to maintain."

Hightower said MISD's administrative costs have been higher than some other districts in past years, which has influenced trustees not to fill certain vacated administrative positions this year.

"We have cut a good many people all in all, and have not replaced them," Hightower said. "We are in pretty good shape overall."

Lusby said the state auditor's report "confirms MISD as one of the more efficient districts in the state."

"However, the staff will continue to analyze the data, especially the areas in which the report identifies MISD as having potential savings," he said.

EFFECTS: Months will pass to assess impact

what effect the regulations will have on local cable service.

"I'm in the process of analyzing what this means and negotiating with the (local) channels to give us the rights for carrying them," she said. "KPEJ has already given us that right."

Under terms of the Cable Act of 1992, a city is allowed to regulate rates only if there is no "effective" competition for cable television services — or if 30 percent of household subscribe to the cable system.

In Midland and Midland County, 70 percent of homes who have access to the system subsribe to Dimension Cable.

Once certified, a city only will be allowed to regulate "basic" cable, equipment charges and charges for ancillary services — such as connection and disconnection fees.

The cable company will have the option of restructuring rates for specific tiers as long as the average cable bill remains the same. Some consumer groups are concerned that cable companies may reduce the number of channels offered for basic service.

Weaver said that only the FCC will be allowed to regulate rates for additional tiers of service beyond "basic" cable. Fees for other premium services — including pay-per-view and pay-per-channel — will not be monitored by the FCC or cities.

Since 1986, cable television rates have been deregulated. In response to skyrocketing prices, Congress passed the Cable Act of 1992, allowing municipalities the opportunity to regulate rates if they so desired.

The FCC has agreed to regulate upper-tier cable services on a complaint basis. After that, cable companies will be free to raise their rates, but only at the discretion of the city. The FCC anticipates that cable charges in most cities will go down after that date.

TRIAL: Fort Worth businessman testifies

scribed the chilling events at his fashionable Fort Worth home in the early morning hours of March 12, 1992.

The state alleges that Koslow's daughter Kristi, 18, offered Dillingham and another young man $1 million from her purported inheritance to kill her parents. Kristi is the adopted daughter of Jack Koslow and a previous wife.

Kristi and her boyfriend, Brian Salter, 20, will be tried later.

All three defendants have given statements to police.

Although most of the grisly details were known previously, Monday was the first time Jack Koslow, a former banker and Vietnam helicopter pilot, publicly gave his version of the attack.

He said he awakened that night to his wife's screams, the sounds of people yelling and the "high-pitched shrill" of a pre-alarm system.

"We've got guns. This is a robbery. Keep down," he quoted the intruders as saying.

"I jumped out of bed and started running for the gun cabinet," he told the jury of eight women and four men. But the door burst open "like an explosion" and he was ordered to stop.

"I debated whether to try to go ahead and load the gun and defend ourselves . . . ," he said, but decided against it. "Today, I regret that decision."

He said he and his wife obeyed commands to lie face down on the floor.

"My wife was a very kind individual, a very timid individual. I can't tell you how frightened she was that night. She was terrified. I told her to come over by me and lie down and trust me.

"And she did."

He recalled hearing the dog "barking her head off" and worrying briefly that the intruders might harm the animal.

"The next thing, an individual started beating on me from behind. I can remember the whole world going black. Seeing stars . . . Pow . . . repeated, repeated, repeated," Koslow testified.

He also recalled one of the knife-wielding assailants telling the other, "Cut in here." He said someone cut his throat.

"I was trying to get off the floor, trying to get my muscles to move. But I just couldn't do it.

"I remember waking up and looking around the room. Caren was lying face down on the floor . . . in a pool of blood . . . . All I remember is that she was covered in blood."

She had been bludgeoned and her throat cut.

Choking back tears, and his voice dropping to a whisper, Koslow recalled how he knelt down over his wife, put his hands on either shoulder and tried unsuccessfully to lift her.

"I knew she was either dead or dying," he said. "I can't tell you the cold feeling that came over me. The terrible rage."

He said he ran to the gun cabinet but was unable to load one of several shotguns. He tried to phone for help, he said, "But I couldn't make the phone work."

Eventually, he stumbled to the home of a neighbor, Kevin Levy, who made a 911 emergency call. Levy was the state's lead witness Monday morning.

FIRM: River deals what might be final blows were speaking. The river reached 49.4 feet here Sunday, about 2.5 feet below the top of the flood wall, and it got up only as high as 48.6 feet Monday, according to the National Weather Service.

"It looks like it's finally going to ease up," said Ken Kruchowski, a spokesman for the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers. "As long as we don't get any steady rainfall in the Mississippi basin in the next few days, and that's not forecast, we should be on a steady downward trend here."

Nonetheless, both the Mississippi and Missouri, the two longest rivers in the country, are leaving behind a numbing swath of destruction as they recede. The scars were evident throughout a two-hour aerial tour of the St. Louis region Monday afternoon.

In Chesterfield, west of this city, a Coca-Cola truck could be seen bobbing through the water, and private jets at the suburban Spirit of St. Louis airport were pushed around like toys in a bathtub until they were wedged against a stand of trees. A section of U.S. Highway 40 was so submerged that only the top of a "Speed Limit 55" sign was visible.

South of St. Louis, a levee broke early Monday morning in Monroe County, Ill., and flood water virtually covered the small town of Valmeyer and dozens of farms in a 20-square-mile area around it. The area had previously been evacuated; no injuries were reported. There and up the river, near Alton, Ill., farm after farm was under water; often, the glistening tops of silos were the only evidence that structures used to be there. The width of the river could be measured in miles.

Even as most of the city of St. Louis was breathing a collective sigh of relief, there was still considerable danger there Monday evening.

CUT: House, Senate negotiators settle budget tax issues

ry of the world."

The bill provides for five-year tax increases estimated at $242 billion. An estimated $254 billion would be saved by restraining the growth of various federal spending programs, including Medicare.

More than three-quarters of the tax increase would come from those with incomes over $200,000 a year. The only provision with direct impact on most middle-income families is a 4.3-cent-a-gallon increase in the 14.1-cent gasoline tax.

The agreement capped months of maneuvering on the measure, which Clinton presented to Congress within a few weeks of his inauguration last January.

"We are confident this will command majorities in the House of Representatives and the U.S. Senate," House Speaker Thomas S. Foley, D-Wash., told reporters.

White House Press Secretary Dee Dee Myers welcomed the agreement. "We think it's going to be a good deal — something that's going to be able to pass the House and the Senate," she said.

She said planning was proceeding for Clinton to address the nation at 7 p.m. CST today to promote the compromise. She said Clinton will seek to persuade Americans that "there is no alternative . . . that this is the only game in town."

One of the toughest issues in the deficit-reduction talks was resolved at the last minute with agreement to restrain the growth of Medicare for the elderly and disabled by just under $56 billion over the next five years. Sen. John D. Rockefeller, D-W.Va., said the hold-down on Medicaid for the poor will save closer to $7 billion than the $8 billion approved earlier.

Leaders were assuming the bill would be acceptable to a majority of House Democrats once the Medicare question was settled. Republicans in both houses are unanimous in their opposition.

Senate Democratic leaders were forced by the defection this weekend of Sen. David Boren, D-Okla., to try to win back one or two of the six party members who had voted "no" when the original version of the bill passed in June. Vice President Al Gore's tie-breaking vote to pass that version. Democrats have a 56-44 Senate majority.

One target was Sen. Richard Bryan, D-Nev., who feared a provision reducing the portion of business meals and entertainment deductible for tax purposes would hurt the economy of Las Vegas.

World in brief

■ U.N. peacekeepers begin withdrawal

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia — The United Nations began the scheduled withdrawal of peacekeeping troops from Cambodia on Monday, but conflicts persisted between the government and the Communist Khmer Rouge faction.

A contingent of 849 soldiers from Tunisia who had been stationed in the central province of Kompong Chnnang left for Thailand en route home.

The remainder of the 20,000-man U.N. military force is scheduled to leave by Nov. 15.

The force's 17-month mission was to monitor a cease-fire by Cambodia's four factions and disarm all the troops before organizing democratic elections this past May.

But the Khmer Rouge violated almost every provision, refusing to disarm and boycotting the elections.

■ Report: Israel won't retry Demjanjuk

JERUSALEM — Two newspapers reported Monday it was unlikely that John Demjanjuk would be tried again since Israel lacks evidence to convict him of Nazi war crimes.

The reports came a day after the Supreme Court unexpectedly issued a restraining order delaying Demjanjuk's deportation from Israel for 10 days. The Justice Ministry had no immediate comment.

The court ruled on an appeal against Demjanjuk's being freed after he was acquitted last week of being a brutal Nazi guard at the Treblinka death camp in World War II Poland. Israel's attorney general was asked to explain whether Demjanjuk should be tried for other war crimes.

■ Tutu, ANC call for security; toll tops 90

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — Archbishop Desmond Tutu called for international peacekeepers to stop township violence Monday after more than 90 blacks died in a frenzy of shootings, stabbings and arson attacks.

Townships around Johannesburg were described by police as very tense Monday, and commuter trains halted service into affected areas as stonings, shootings and firebomb attacks continued.

At daybreak, bodies lay beside burned-out cars and shacks, and armed gangs roamed the streets. A police report said 91 people had died since Saturday in area townships, making it one of the bloodiest weekends in months.

"The latest killings . . . have demonstrated beyond doubt that we are incapable of restoring law and order ourselves," Tutu said.

■ Hijacker kills Israeli official in Gaza

JERUSALEM — A Palestinian hijacker seeking revenge for Israel's latest assault on Lebanon seized a U.N. school bus and rammed it into two Israeli government vehicles Monday, killing one official and injuring five, the army said.

The bus was hijacked in Gaza City just after the students got off, Arab reports and U.N. officials said. It belonged to the United Nations Relief and Works Agency, which administers relief to Palestinian refugees.

A gunman carrying explosives got on and forced the driver and four UNRWA employees to ride to an isolated spot on a coastal road, Arab reports and UNRWA officials said.

He then ordered all five off the bus and rammed it into a police van and a car from Israel's military administration, employees of the U.N. agency said.

The hijacker fled, and the military sealed the area to search for him.

NATO warns of air strikes against Serbs

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — NATO warned early Tuesday that it is preparing to carry out air strikes against Serbs if their "strangulation" of the Bosnian capital of Sarajevo persists.

The NATO declaration today came after one of the longest meetings on record of the North Atlantic Council, NATO's political forum.

Ambassadors of the 16 NATO countries wrangled for nearly 12 hours over a U.S. proposal to subject Serb gunners surrounding Sarajevo to the alliance's formidable air power. President Clinton said on Monday that he believed the allies would authorize the American proposal.

The Atlantic alliance said it "has decided to make immediate preparations for undertaking . . . stronger measures including air strikes against those responsible, Bosnian Serbs and others, in Bosnia-Herzegovina."

Although the NATO declaration focused mainly on the Serb siege of Sarajevo, the Croats have also come under increasing criticism for atrocities against Muslims.

If NATO ultimately agreed to hit Serb positions from the air, it would mark the first time in the military alliance's history that it undertook an offensive capacity. NATO was founded in 1949 to defend against invasion from the Soviet bloc.

The Atlantic alliance 'has decided to make immediate preparations for undertaking . . . stronger measures including air strikes against those responsible, Bosnian Serbs and others, in Bosnia-Herzegovina.'

Officials said the North Atlantic Treaty Organization planned to meet again next Monday to hear the recommendations of NATO military advisers on the logistics of protecting Sarajevo from the air.

The statement stressed that any implementation would have to occur under the shield of the United Nations.

"The allies regard the dire humanitarian situation in Bosnia, and particularly in Sarajevo, including repeated violations of cease-fires, as unacceptable.

"They warn the parties to the conflict of their determination to take effective action," the declaration said.

A German official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Canada put up some of the stiffest resistance during the meeting, which was supposed to last about two hours.

Canada insisted that U.N. personnel oversee any operation, to better protect Ottawa's ground troops in Bosnia.

NATO sources said earlier that Britain and France had also expressed serious reservations out of concern for their ground troops and the effect air strikes could have on the humanitarian aid operation.

But officials said Germany, Turkey and Iceland staunchly backed the United States. The United States has not contributed personnel to the U.N. peacekeeping force.

Sarajevo was surrounded by insurgent Bosnian Serb forces shortly after the Muslims and ethnic Croats in Bosnia-Herzegovina declared independence from the Serb-dominated Yugoslav federation 16 months ago.

The city has been under constant artillery and sniper fire since then, with power, electricity, drinking water and food in short supply or at times absent. Clinton said in Washington Monday that he expected the allies would back the administration's plan to use NATO warplanes to break the Serb encirclement of Sarajevo and increase the humanitarian aid getting in.

Washington's assertiveness on Western air strikes marks a turnaround in its policy on Bosnia.

Last May, European pressure forced the administration to climb down from a similar but broader proposal for air strikes on targets in Serbia and sections of Bosnia held by Bosnian Serb irregulars.

NATO aircraft already have been empowered to protect U.N. troops stationed in Bosnia. About 70 combat aircraft are stationed in the region awaiting a final go-ahead from New York.

In response to the U.S. proposal, Bosnian Serb Air Force commander Gen. Zivomir Ninkovic warned that if U.S. fighters attack, his forces "will fire back with all their might.

"Those who want to become the world's policeman simply do not care for their allies' opinion," Ninkovic said Monday at his command headquarters.

Christopher, Mubarak: Recent clashes re-energize peace talks

ALEXANDRIA, Egypt (NYT) — With the clashes between Israel and pro-Iranian guerrillas in southern Lebanon halted for the moment, Secretary of State Warren Christopher and President Hosni Mubarak of Egypt said Monday that the violence had energized the search for peace in the Middle East.

"I think the situation in Lebanon, perhaps paradoxically, has given a new burst of energy to the negotiations," Christopher told reporters after meeting with Mubarak on the first leg of his Middle East shuttle.

He added that the two men "agreed that recent events there can serve as a reminder to all parties that the Arab-Israeli negotiations can quickly deteriorate if we do not take this moment for peace making."

The talks, in Washington, adjourned on July 1 with the parties described as still far apart on the core issues.

Israeli and Palestinian negotiators are stalled over the extent of interim self-rule the Palestinians will have in the occupied territories. Israeli and Syrian negotiators have been unable to get beyond what exactly President Hafez Assad of Syria means when he offers Israel "full peace" for complete withdrawal from the Golan Heights.

Christopher arrived in Egypt on Monday on the first stop of a three-day visit to the region. His aides said Christopher will try to get Israel, Syria, Jordan and the Palestinians to refocus on the peace talks, which were foundering even before the battles broke out on July 25 in southern Lebanon and northern Israel.

Though Christopher tried to put a positive spin on the effect of the fighting, aides traveling with him said the shelling, which has killed 140 people and wounded more than 500, had been a setback to the peace talks.

An official on Christopher's airplane told reporters that the parties had reached a point in the 21-month-old talks where they faced their toughest decisions, and that they were being distracted by the battles between Israel and Party of God guerrillas.

French franc hits all-time low next to German mark

BERLIN (AP) — The French franc fell to an all-time low Monday against the German mark despite maneuvers aimed at rescuing Europe's currency system, but trading overall was cool compared to last week's frenzy.

European Community finance ministers and central bankers decided after a weekend meeting in Brussels to, in effect, allow currencies to temporarily float to combat speculators who have been battering the trading bloc's monetary system.

German Finance Minister Theo Waigel said the new arrangement "brought back stability" to the European Monetary System.

But Dutch and Danish officials criticized it as a setback to the EC nations' efforts to forge closer economic and monetary links. Prime Minister John Major of Britain said the EC plan to introduce a single European currency by 1999 "looks totally unrealistic now."

Last year the British and Italian currencies had to leave the rate system, and last week the German central bank said it spent $35 billion to support the French franc and other weakening currencies.

The new deal will let most European currencies float 15 percent up or down from their central balance. Previously the permitted range was 2.25 percent for the French franc, and speculators battered it to the floor last Friday, prompting the emergency meeting of finance ministers.

While most currencies fell Monday against the German mark, trading was not as wild as it had been last week.

Economists said traders seemed to be waiting for expected government reactions. If France and other states cut their interest rates, their currencies could fall even further.

The Danish krone fell to 4.1388 to the mark, down from 3.9088 Friday. The Belgian franc also fell, from 20.9 francs to the mark on Friday to 21.4 on Monday.

Kickapoo Cavern State Natural Area park superintendent Dave Stuart poses with stalactites hanging from the ceiling of the Kickapoo Cavern on June 9. State park officials are sprucing up the 6,368-acre park, but they say they intend to keep the natural beauty of the place just that — natural.

Texans take in beauty of ancient cave

By Kelley Shannon
Associated Press Writer

BRACKETTVILLE — Deep beneath the cactus and cedar of the Edwards Plateau is a 250,000-year-old geological wonder known for years to Indians, frontier soldiers and a few curiosity-seekers.

These days, Kickapoo Cavern State Natural Area is attracting all sorts of Texans eager to hike into the big cave to see its dramatic stalactites, stalagmites and giant columns.

State park officials are sprucing up the area to make it more accommodating for campers and day visitors. But they say they intend to keep the natural beauty of the place.

"It's more like spelunking, I guess, than if you go to ... a more commercial cave," said park superintendent Dave Stuart. "Anybody can go into a cave where they have little plaques that say 'King's Throne' or 'Devil's Workshop.' Why not have a cave that's primitive, that doesn't have this kind of thing?"

Certainly nature is the attraction of the "natural area," the state's official designation of the park located 20 miles north of Brackettville in southwest Texas.

The 6,368-acre park is home to two endangered species: to-busch fishhook cactus and a secretive little bird called the black-capped vireo. Threatened species living at the park include the Mexican pinion pine, the zone-tailed hawk, the Texas tortoise and the Texas horned lizard, or horned toad.

■ Texas Travel

About a million Brazilian free-tail bats fly out of Green Cave each evening during summer months. Farther north in Edwards County, about 4 million of the bats put on the same show at Devil's Sinkhole, located on 1,800 acres also owned by the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department and managed by Stuart.

The Kickapoo Cavern adventure begins with the trip to get there.

On the desolate, winding ranch road to the park, jack rabbits and cotton-tailed rabbits dart across the highway.

Reaching Kickapoo Cavern itself requires a drive or hike along a rocky, rugged park road then a climb up a hill to the small, fenced-in entrance to the cavern. Stuart accompanies visitors into the cave, which is pitch-dark, deep and potentially dangerous because of its loose rock floor.

It may seem unimposing at first, but the descent into Kickapoo Cavern quickly changes that image. This cavern is as big and showy as any of the roadside commercialized caves in the Texas Hill Country. But its primitive feel takes visitors back in time.

Researchers have dated a stalactite from the park at 257,000 years old.

Water percolating through limestone formed the cave. Carbonic acid ate away at the limestone for thousands of years until large underground chambers were formed. Cave growths — stalactites hanging from the ceiling, stalagmites jutting up from the cave floor and columns where the two growths join together — were formed by slow, dripping water.

Huge columns are perhaps the most spectacular features of the cavern. The biggest columns are 20 to 30 feet in diameter and about 75 feet tall.

"It's mind-boggling how long it took for those things to get that big," said Stuart, a biologist who is most interested in the park's wildlife but marvels at the geologic formations.

Also visible in the cave are layers of sediment formed by the movement of the ocean over thousands of years as it swallowed what is now Texas, then receded, then returned again.

Stuart believes Indians used the cavern for shelter possibly 5,000 or 6,000 years ago because of charred rocks found near its entrance. Other Indians may have used the cave later on. The cavern is named for the Kickapoo Indians, a wandering tribe of the area.

It's a safe guess that soldiers from old Fort Clark in Brackettville explored the cavern. Some graffiti inside dates back to the 1880s, and some reflects that its authors were in a military company.

Santa Fe art worth seeing

By Jennifer Merin
For AP Special Features

SANTA FE, N.M. — Veryl Goodnight's monumental western theme sculptures are on view at the Cowboy Hall of Fame in Oklahoma City, the Houston Museum of Western Art and in a host of other prestigious art collections from Colorado to mainland China.

But you have to come to Santa Fe to see the artist at work.

In Goodnight's stylish southwestern studio, with its plaster walls, high ceilings and exposed beams, you can watch as she creates larger-than-life clay sculptures to be cast later in bronze.

The studio's focal point is a platform where models — people, dogs and horses — pose. Goodnight measures them with calipers so the sculpture's proportions will be accurate.

Goodnight's workshop — with its adjacent stables and flower gardens — is one of several ateliers open to the public through Studio Entrada, a tour program designed to give art lovers and collectors behind-the-scenes glimpses of this famous arts community.

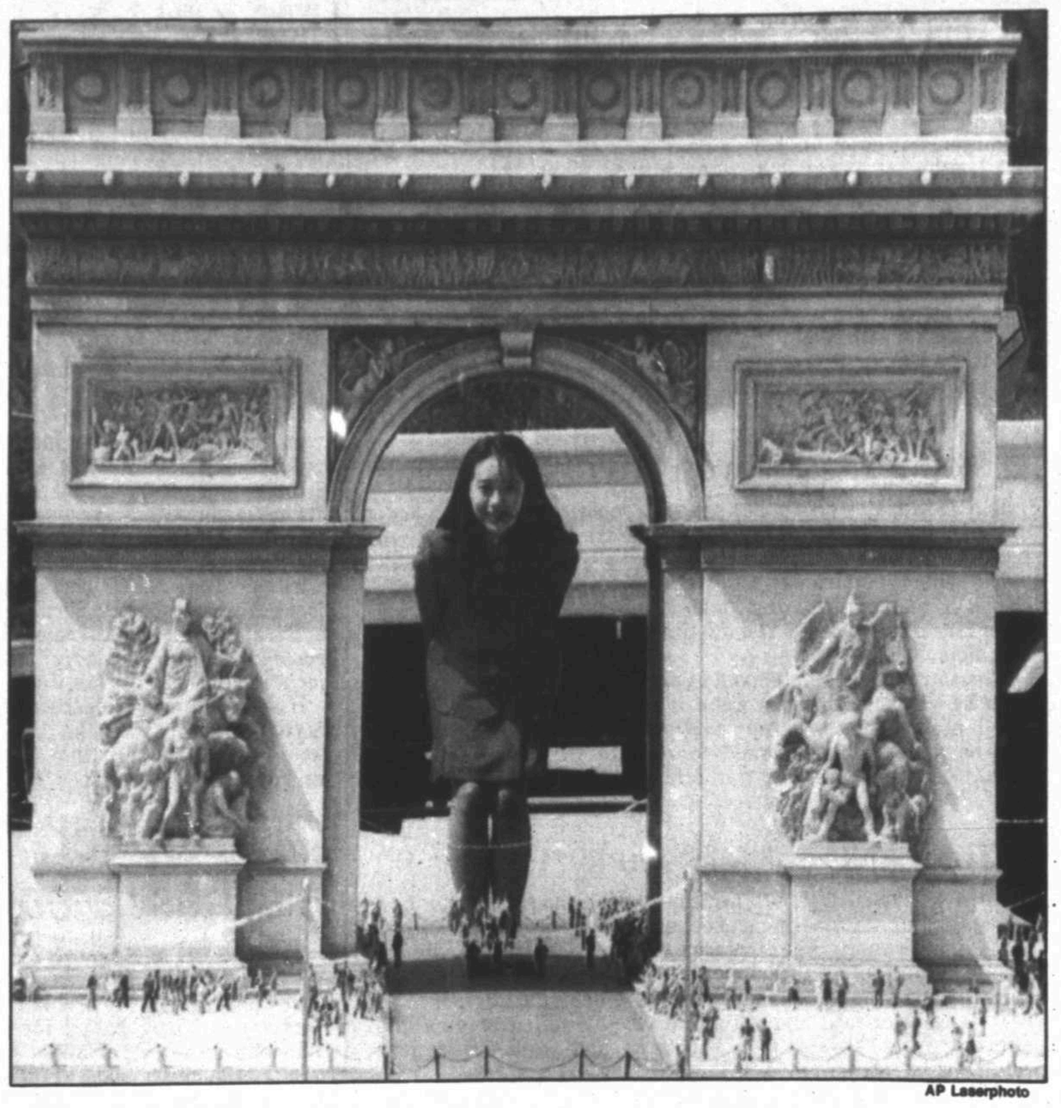

Linda Morton, Studio Entrada's founder and owner, tailors itineraries to each client's art preferences, be they figurative or abstract and in media ranging from acrylics to clay. Tourists may choose from among 15 well-known painters, sculptors, ceramicists and jewelers.

After visiting Goodnight, clients might choose to meet Douglas Atwill at his studio near Canyon Road, Santa Fe's posh gallery row. Atwill, an impressionist landscape painter, travels through New Mexico recording picturesque sites with pastel and earthy desert colors, or depicts Monet-like gardens of colorful flowers from unusual perspectives — a cat's-eye view, for example. Works are in acrylic, ranging in size from 8-by-10 inches to 5-by-8 feet.

Then on to Gary Mauro's ranch-style studio, where the artist uses a fabric relief technique to create soft three-dimensional female nudes on canvas. The almost quilted effect of the canvas is enhanced by subtle shading of the figures. Mauro creates similar but smaller bas-relief pieces on heavy paper. He also does bronze nudes.

Carlos Carulo is a sculptor and painter whose works reflect southwestern themes, many based on American Indian legends and customs. Carulo's top-floor studio, next to the old Santa Fe railroad station, has a marvelous view of downtown and of Santa Fe's ski basin.

Railroads still provide great way to travel, enjoy scenery

Associated Press

Many people born since the 1950s know about train travel only from listening to their elders reminisce, but it is still a wonderful way to travel and see scenery that otherwise might only be accessible on foot, horseback or snowshoes.

While you can cross the country via conventional, modern and very comfortable railroad service, writes science-technology editor Abe Dane in the current issue of Popular Mechanics, you can also explore special areas of particular interest with great trains and train rides around the country. Some operate year-round, others only seasonally.

They include:

■ Grand Canyon Railway, Williams, Ariz. Uses steam locomotives — one dating back to 1906 — to pull 1920s coaches on an eight hour, 65-mile round trip between Williams depot and Grand Canyon depot, including a three-hour layover at Grand Canyon's south rim. The trip covers classic Old West territory, including wide-open plains, minor canyons and portions of the world's largest stand of Ponderosa pine. Adults $47; children $14.50.

■ Gettysburg Railroad, Gettysburg, Pa. Runs steam locomotives from Gettysburg to Biglerville, chugging through historic Adams County and Civil War battlefields. During the first week in August, a Lincoln impersonator performs on the train. The one-and-three-quarter-hour, 16-mile ride cost $7 for adults; $3.50 children; $6.50 seniors.

■ Durango & Silverton Narrow Gauge Railroad, Durango, Colo. Has steam engines pulling 1880-vintage wood coaches and gondola cars from Durango to Silverton through great Rocky Mountain scenery. The route travels 400 feet above the Animas River along a shelf of the San Juan Mountains. Stops are scheduled at Needleton and Elk Park for hikers and fishermen. The nine-hour, 90-mile trip costs $37.50 for adults; $18.65 for children; $63.85 for parlor car.

■ Mount Washington Railway Co., Mount Washington, N.H. Uses cogwheel locomotives — six built between 1870 and 1908 — to climb Mount Washington, at 6,288 feet the Northeast's highest peak. The track's average grade runs 25 percent; the steepest grade is 37.41. The three-hour round trip costs $32.

■ Napa Valley Wine Train, Napa, Calif. Runs about 15 mph through Napa Valley wine country on a three-hour, 36-mile round trip between Napa and St. Helena that features homemade gourmet meals. Parlor cars are used for hors d'oeuvres, cocktails and special wine tasting. Fare: $29 (meals extra).

■ Roaring Camp & Big Trees Narrow Gauge Railroad, Felton, Calif. Steam locomotives pull open gondolas between Roaring Camp and Bear Mountain, a one-and-a-quarter hour, 6-mile ride. The train passes a steam sawmill, 1880 general store, covered bridge and red caboose saloon. Other activities include chuck-wagon barbecues, annual Civil War re-enactment, 1830s mountain-man rendezvous, handcar races and Fourth of July Frog Jump. Fare: adults $11.50; children, $8.50.

■ St. Louis & Chain of Rocks Railroad, St. Louis, Mo. Uses streamlined diesels, 1920s coaches and an open car for a one-hour, 6-mile trip along the Mississippi River and includes November hay rides, December Santa Claus trains and once-a-year full-moon evening run. Free in coach or open car; $3 for private car.

HOW THEY DO IT

The Courier Route: Fly for Less (But Leave Your Luggage at Home)

Last summer, on a trip to England for his daughter Molly's graduation from Oxford, Howard Clark of Maitland, Fla., cut his airfare in half by flying as a courier. Clark had joined the International Association of Air Travel Couriers, an organization in Lake Worth, Fla., that helps match travelers with air-express shipping companies needing couriers. In exchange for paying for about half the passenger's fare, shipping companies use a courier's luggage allotment to transport goods quickly, avoiding the comparatively slow process of freight shipment. Here's how Clark, his wife June and a daughter, Krysten, flew round-trip to London for about $300 each.

❶ Checking the listings
For an annual fee of $35, Clark receives a newsletter listing shipping companies' courier needs. Last July, a daily Miami-to-London flight, returning to Miami a week later, was listed for $299, plus a $28 departure tax, or $327; the average coach fare was then about $600, even with discounts. Clark phoned the company's broker, Discount Travel International, of Miami, and booked flights for himself, his wife, and daughter. Only one courier was needed each day, so they would travel separately, on July 14, 15 and 16.

❷ Departure day
On July 14, a shipping company representative met Clark at the airport, and gave him a round-trip ticket marked "No baggage." Using Clark's luggage allotment, he checked two mail bags aboard the plane. Clark, allowed only carry-on luggage, boarded and arrived in London as scheduled. The mail bags were claimed and taken through customs by an agent of the shipping company.

❸ Family follows
June Clark flew to London on July 15, Krysten on the 16th.

❹ A week later, the couriers return
The staggered flights gave the Clarks a four-day overlap in London, including Molly's graduation day. They flew back to Miami separately, on July 21, 22, and 23.

What they saved
Round-trip coach fare, with advance-purchase discount, on the same American Airlines flight in July 1992, compared with the Clarks' courier fares:

Some drawbacks
- The luggage restriction forces couriers to travel light and makes a long stay impractical.
- The cheapest courier flights — a recent Miami-to-London seat was $100 round trip — usually become available when a courier cancels, so advance notice may be only one or two days.

Fighting crime is everyone's job

Serious crime continues to be one of society's biggest headaches, reinforced time and again by the results of surveys showing that Americans are afraid that their property or themselves will be victimized by criminals.

Anyone who is unaware that society has been growing more violent in recent years merely has not been paying attention.

That's why it was refreshing to learn that serious crime, referred to by law enforcement officers as Part I crime, was down by 2 percent in Midland and nearly 13 percent in Odessa for the first half of 1993.

Part I crimes involve such offenses as murder, sexual assault, robbery, aggravated assault, burglary, theft over $750, auto theft, rape, larceny and arson.

There were some particular areas of concern in both communities. In Midland, rape offenses increased by 15 percent, theft over $750 by 8 percent and auto theft by 2 percent, while in Odessa murder was up by 20 percent, aggravated assault by 2 percent and arson by 58 percent. Law enforcement officials no doubt will be scrutinizing the latest results to see whether their crime prevention efforts can be more effectively utilized.

Police spokesmen in both cities have highlighted community relations efforts as reasons for the overall crime drop. That's entirely appropriate. Past efforts to get residents of both communities involved in crime-fighting have shown extremely positive results.

And as Midland Police Cpl. Jim White noted, being involved in the community — and hearing firsthand the concerns of residents — helps the law enforcement community learn specific needs.

Fighting crime is a two-way street — it takes the efforts of both law enforcement and individual citizens to bring about a reduction in serious crime. Fighting crime is the job of everyone.

Corsicana death shows need for hogtying ban

A Navarro County grand jury's refusal Wednesday to indict two former Corsicana police officers in the death of an African-American man who was in their custody will not end the controversy created by the June 5 incident.

Those who are convinced that Craig Thomas' death was the result of police wrongdoing will keep pressing for the Justice Department to seek federal indictments of the former lawmen involved in the man's arrest. It is important that all legal avenues be explored in a police matter that has stirred such strong emotional feelings.

But regardless of how the criminal justice system eventually handles the case, there is one conclusion to be reached from this tragic incident: The manner in which Craig Thomas was restrained is too dangerous to be permitted any longer.

Mr. Thomas was hogtied by Corsicana officers when he resisted arrest following a routine traffic stop. He lapsed into unconsciousness while taken to jail and was pronounced dead later at a local hospital. Two separate autopsy reports listed positional asphyxia as one of the causes for his death.

At least 70 percent of the nation's largest police departments have banned this type of restraint, according to a survey conducted by the San Diego Police Department. Based on those findings, the Dallas Police Department decided last month to prohibit the hogtying of arrested persons.

It is time for all law enforcement agencies in Texas to do the same thing. When individuals have their arms and legs secured behind their backs, the possibility of asphyxiation or serious injury simply is too great for officers to take the chance.

During the last year, there were at least two other incidents, in Lubbock and Amarillo, where a man's death partially was attributed to this type of restraint. And yet the Texas Department of Public Safety and the Houston Police Department report that they still permit hogtying as an acceptable method for controlling a violent prisoner.

After reviewing more than five days of testimony and evidence in the Craig Thomas case, the Navarro County grand jury unanimously recommended a statewide ban on hogtying. Law enforcement agencies should heed the jury's request and find other ways to restrain individuals that carry far less deadly consequences.

Today in History

Today is Tuesday, August 3, the 215th day of 1993. There are 150 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

Fifty years ago, on Aug. 3, 1943, during World War II, Gen. George S. Patton slapped and verbally abused Private Charles Herman Kuhl of Mishawaka, Ind., at an army hospital in Sicily, accusing him of cowardice. Patton was later ordered by Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower to apologize for this and a second, similar episode that occurred a week later.

On this date:

In 1492, Christopher Columbus set sail from Palos, Spain, on a voyage that would take him to present-day America.

In 1914, Germany declared war on France.

In 1921, baseball commissioner Kenesaw Mountain Landis refused to reinstate the former Chicago White Sox players implicated in the Black Sox scandal, despite their acquittals in a jury trial.

In 1923, Calvin Coolidge was sworn in as the 30th president of the United States, following the death of Warren G. Harding.

In 1936, the U.S. State Department urged Americans in Spain to leave because of that country's civil war.

Service plan is concealed power grab

Warmly, fuzzily, President Clinton calls for prompt enactment of his warm fuzzy program for national service. He is outraged that Senate Republicans are blocking the measure, hoping to whittle it down in length, size and cost. How dare they?

Murchison

How dare they not? is the true question. "National service," at any cost, in any shape, isn't precisely what the country needs right now. But how instructive is the debate!

It was said jokingly, in Britain's salad days, that the empire had been created in a fit of absence of mind. It could be said equally that the welfare state was created — and magnified many times — in a fit of absolutely handsome intentions. Our political leaders are forever trying to encourage our higher sensibilities, through appropriating and spending our money.

National service is the cuddliest of notions — decades old, with a constituency on the right (William F. Buckley Jr.) as on the left and in the middle. The Democratic Leadership Council, which Clinton once headed, sees it as a means of combating the "prevailing climate of moral indolence," in which "such venerable civic virtues as duty and self-sacrifice and compassion toward one's less fortunate neighbors are seldom invoked."

Hooray, then, for national service — defined as the employment, by government, of youth in enterprises like teaching, policing, cleaning parks and emptying bedpans. The workers would learn the importance of service. They would emerge better Americans, and America would be a better place.

The taxpayers are invited to underwrite this burst of philanthropy. Bill Clinton's original plan for national service, before Congress fell to pruning back its branches, called for 100,000 students performing up to two years of community service in exchange for a $5,000-per-year education voucher. Workers would be paid the minimum wage and receive health and child care benefits. It has never been clear, on the president's showing, who truly would be getting served — the taxpayers, through this infusion of talent, or the talent, through the infusion of taxpayer cash.

Would all this be nice to do? It might. Two better questions are: 1) Do we need it, and 2) can we afford it? The indicated answers are 1) no and 2) no.

How can we need such programs as these? Already 23 federal programs perform like services: VISTA, Foster Grandparents, Teach for America, Youth Conservation Corps, Student Literacy Corp., YouthBuild and so on. The cost is $1.3 billion: to which Clinton, by 1997, would add $7.4 billion. (This is not even counting private, unenumerated service.)

I had thought, from the tenor of his exertions, that the president was trying to reduce the deficit. At this juncture, we need another replicative federal program the way the Mississippi Valley needs another thunderstorm.

But the warmth, the fuzziness of it all! This is the president's ace in the political hole. If there is no logical reason for pushing a 24th program of national service, there are political reasons, emotional reasons. Clinton has been playing them like a tenor sax solo: mellow and throaty.

Opponents, so as not to seem flint-hearted, have offered alternatives, including more efficient use of federal student-aid monies and even tax-free education savings accounts. This is fine, but the best response would be an attack on federal programs of all shapes and sizes.

So we have a crisis of morale. To what is that chiefly attributable if not to the substitution of public for private endeavor? Where Americans once used to do for themselves, insofar as possible, they now buck all major responsibilities to Congress, which happily spends their money on the purchase of political gratitude. National service is part of the Clinton administration's design for concentrating in Washington more power than ever before. Soon we turn to Hillary's health care plan. The administration has ideas meanwhile for "strengthening" public schools.

Warm, fuzzy national service will be hard to stop, but the effort to derail or just slow it is a powerful service to this, our overburdened nation.

Pundit detects flourishing secret codes

Why do Americans abbreviate so much? In a society organized from the A.A.A. for roadside emergencies to the Z.P.G. movement for Zero Population Growth, shorthand is an obvious reason. Another, not-so-obvious reason is coming into play — insiderness.

Safire

People have always employed special languages, or codes, "for communication for intimates, with special names for one another, words that have private significance, deep looks, little sighs," writes the linguist Robin Lakoff in her book "Talking Power." Thus, anxious mothers have long whispered "F.H.B." — family hold back — lest there not be enough shrimp salad to serve all the guests. "O.T.T.," a theatergoer may say to his wife, to show he is grossed out by stage business he thinks is over the top.

But lately, this form of code has become more public and more pervasive. Magazines have sought to convey themselves as instruments of elite cliques by changing from names to initials. Women's Wear Daily spawned W in 1973. House and Garden, which published its final issue in July, was known as HG during its last six years. TNR is what insiders call The New Republic.

Fast-food restaurants also prize the insider cachet conferred by code. "Mickey D" is the name that boys in the 'hood gave McDonald's. "KFC" is the abbreviated nickname that Kentucky Fried Chicken finally adopted formally.

More recently, code abbreviations have appeared with increasing frequency in pop culture. Only squares need coaching to know that the name of the rap group N.W.A. stands for "Niggas With Attitude." The pre-teen-ager in the movie "Sleepless in Seattle" dismisses her boyfriend's father with an arcane "H and G," for "Hi and goodbye."

"O.P.P., yeah, you know me," chants the rapper, leaving clueless listeners free to believe he means "other people's property," when sophisticates know he has a sexual reference in mind. T.F.S. — thanks for sharing — derives from the closing line of Narcotics Anonymous and other recovery-movement meetings. Now it's heard in casual, even sarcastic comment on, for instance, flatulence in the family station wagon.

The electronic conferences conducted on computer networks provide another fertile source of cool code. Participants seem to favor initials both for efficiency and hip snobbery. They might type "LOL," laughing out loud, or even "ROTF," rolling on the floor. For strong distaste, the abbreviation of choice might be "SMTOE," sets my teeth on edge. Or, to show withering contempt for a beginner, one might write "RTM" — read the manual. Heated sentiment, cool code.

Box of Tide contains hidden economic pill

The story made a lot of sense. Procter & Gamble Co. laid off 13,000 employees because it was the only way it could make a profit without raising prices. The company was not the only one laying off people. IBM, Apple Computer, GE and AT&T have also decided that people are too expensive to have around when you're doing business.

Buchwald

While the layoff idea works for the moment, it will eventually cause problems for big business.

Ten years from today Procter & Gamble executives may meet in the board room to discuss the terrible downtrend in the sale of Tide detergent.

"What's going on?" the chairman asks. "We sold only one box of Tide this year."

The sales manager replies, "All our customers have been laid off by their companies and people are now beating their clothes on rocks down by the river. We took a survey and found out that everyone laid off is no longer interested in our products."

A vice president says, "Suppose we start hiring again so that people can buy Tide."

The chairman shakes his head. "If we do that we'll raise costs and hurt our profits. Maybe we ought to offer a coffee cup and saucer with each purchase."

"I'm not sure that will work," the advertising manager says.

The chairman is frustrated: "How can all these other big companies lay off people and not know how it will hurt the economy? All those thousands dumped by IBM, American Airlines and General Motors were all Tide users until they got the ax. Now they're making their own soap from whale blubber."

A vice president speaks, "They're probably saying the same thing about us. IBM hasn't sold a computer since it fired 50,000 employees, and AT&T can't get anyone to make a long-distance call since it dropped the bomb on its employees. Nobody seems to have any money to spend on detergents and the other good things of life. We will have to be realistic and go back to the old-fashioned way of thinking — which is that you can't get anybody to spend money if they don't have any."

The chairman remains firm, "I'm not rehiring people until IBM does. Why should we be the fall guys and the other companies get a free ride?"

A flunky comes into the office and the vice president of sales asks, "Did it move?"

The flunky shakes his head.

The VP explains to the group, "As you know, when we laid off everyone we were able to produce only one box of Tide. Unfortunately, it was shipped to a grocer next to a McDonnell Douglas plant, which laid off 30,000 employees last week. The Tide is still on the shelf.

"We can either move it to a more affluent neighborhood or discount it in hopes that someone will purchase it with their unemployment check."

"If we don't sell that box of Tide, the stockholders are going to be wondering what management has been doing all this time," the chairman says.

"It's obvious to me that the only way the economy is going to get on its feet again is for big business to stop firing everybody. I'm willing to do my share. Let's hire one more person to man the Tide production line. There's no reason we can't produce two boxes this year."

The advertising manager says, "Good show, boss. With two boxes of Tide we can save the capitalist system."

Teen seeks to sever ties with biological parents

By James Martinez
Associated Press writer

SARASOTA, Fla. — Kimberly Mays uttered just a few soft-spoken words on the stand Monday, and they carried all the conviction she could muster: She never wants to see her biological parents again.

The 14-year-old girl is seeking to sever all ties to Ernest and Regina Twigg and preserve her life with Bob Mays, the man who has raised her since she was switched at birth with another girl in a Florida hospital in 1978.

Kimberly, a blonde, hazel-eyed ninth grader, spent less than a minute on the stand as testimony began in the civil trial to decide whether the Twiggs should be granted visiting rights.

Circuit Court Judge Stephen Dakan didn't say when he expects to issue a ruling.

Asked if she was sure she never wanted to see her biological parents again, Kimberly responded: "I am positively sure."

The Twiggs' attorney, John Blakely, then asked the girl whether she has psychological problems or nightmares. Kimberly responded on both counts with a barely audible "No."

Kimberly's attorney, George Russ, said the question "What constitutes a family?" goes to the heart of the case. "Biology alone — without more — does not create or sustain a family," he said.

Russ argued that Kimberly has already made a loving, psychological bond with Mays, and to force her to visit a family she considers strangers would be devastating.

But Mrs. Twigg testified that the judge should not take Kimberly's feelings into consideration.

"I really don't think she knows the impact of what she is doing," she said. "When she has her own children and looks back, she may really regret the decision she has made now."

Blakely said the Twiggs have a right to at least visit with the child who is their flesh and blood.

He said Mays never lived up to an agreement he made in 1989 to allow the Twiggs visitation instead of custody. Mays called the agreement off after five visits, saying it was too upsetting to Kimberly and that her grades were slipping.

"This, to the Twiggs, has been devastating," Blakely said. "To their perspective, Kimberly has now been taken from them twice."

'When she has her own children and looks back, she may really regret the decision she has made now.'
— Regina Twigg

The saga began at a hospital in rural Wauchula, where identification tags were switched and girls born to the Twiggs and to May and his wife, Barbara, went home with the wrong parents.

The exchange came to light nearly a decade later, when the child raised by the Twiggs, Arlena, developed heart problems and blood tests showed she was not their biological daughter.

After Arlena died in 1988, the Twiggs launched a search that led them to Kimberly and Mays, a roofing salesman whose wife died of cancer in 1981. Mays' second marriage ended in divorce, and Kimberly is his only child.

In 1989, Mays gave in to the Twiggs' demand for genetic testing with the condition that if Kimberly was their biological daughter, they would not seek custody, only visitation. The visits began in 1990 but soon ended.

On Monday, the two families sat at opposite ends of the courtroom and did not look at each other.

In testimony, the Twiggs and their seven other children — ranging in age from 24 to nine — said Kimberly enjoyed the few visits she had with the family.

Some of the Twigg children testified that Kimberly even asked to be called "Arlena" during her family visits.

Regina Twigg testified she was surprised when on the first visit at a putt-putt golf course, Kimberly called her "Mom."

"I was totally delighted. It was such a beautiful feeling," she said.

The case has already been the subject of a made-for-television miniseries, a book and a network television special. Last year, Mrs. Twigg participated with the author of a book that portrayed Mays as an unfit father and suggested that he participated in the hospital switch.

U.S., allies to weigh sanctions against Libya

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S., British and French officials will meet in London on Tuesday to discuss tightening sanctions against Libya for its alleged role in the bombings of American and French civilian aircraft in the late 1980's.

The incidents involve the downing of Pan Am flight 103 in 1988 over Scotland, with a loss of 270 lives, and the crash of a French UTA airliner over Niger in 1989, which killed 170.

The United Nations Security Council has imposed sanctions against Libya for its failure to hand over two suspects wanted in the Pan Am incident.

During the campaign last year, President Clinton said he would press the United Nations to broaden the sanctions to include an oil embargo. But government officials said that outcome is highly unlikely because there is no consensus for such action.

Asked about the Tuesday meeting in London, the State Department declined comment, saying it does not provide details on diplomatic exchanges. The U.N. Security Council is scheduled to review Libyan compliance with Council resolutions at mid-month.

There has been discussion of a ban on deliveries of oil technology to Libya but the government sources, asking not to be identified, said intelligence reports indicate Libya has been stockpiling these supplies.

There has been discussion of a ban on deliveries of oil technology to Libya but the government sources, asking not to be identified, said intelligence reports indicate Libya has been stockpiling these supplies.

Another option is the freezing of Libyan assets abroad. But Henry Schuler, of the Center for Strategic and International Studies, said Monday he has seen reports suggesting that Libyans have withdrawn $3 billion in assets from European banks to minimize the impact of any assets freeze.

Schuler said it is foolish for anyone to believe that Libyan leader Moammar Gadhafi would ever surrender the two suspects for trial.

"They would very quickly implicate him personally and thus shatter the loyalty of the internal security forces," Schuler said.

He believes the administration should drop its insistence on working in concert with the United Nations and demand instead that the Europeans go along with an international oil embargo against Libya.

But the State Department thus far is committed to working on the issue with the United Nations.

State Department press officer Sondra McCarty said Monday the United States, France and Great Britain are committed to gaining full Libyan compliance with U.N. resolutions and are trying to make U.N. sanctions more effective.

A year ago, the Security Council imposed an arms and diplomatic embargo against Libya, causing some inconvenience for Libya but not enough to force its hand on the release of the two suspects to American or British authorities.

A Libyan offer to turn over the suspects to a neutral third country has been rejected.

New discovery suggests killer bees migrating faster

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — A second swarm of Africanized bees has been found in the city, suggesting the bees have penetrated farther into Arizona than previously thought, officials said Monday.

It was the seventh swarm of the aggressive bees found in the state. The only other state so far reached by the bees is Texas.

A beekeeper who removed the swarm from the middle of the city in June assumed they were normal honeybees, but later discovered they were the agressive hybrid from South America, officials said.

Beekeeper Gordon Waller removed the so-called "killer bees" June 17 from a creosote bush. Another colony killed a dog June 6 on Tucson's west side.

Authorities had believed the swarm that killed the dog had "hitchhiked" to Tucson, likely aboard a truck or train. But they said presence of a second wild colony within the same time frame hints that the pioneering swarms of Africanized bees have reached this far north of Mexico by themselves.

"From now on, we are going to start to see more Africanized bees, especially by next spring," said Keith Curtis, an Agriculture Department official in Tucson.

"That means we must educate the public and our fire and safety people. People need to start beeproofing their homes."

Five more Africanized swarms have been found along the Arizona-Mexico border — one in May near Mohawk, 54 miles east Yuma, and four in July near Sasabe.

The swarms are thought to be groups in advance of the main population of migrating colonies heading north from Mexico.

3 missing in Exxon refinery explosion

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — An explosion ripped through a section of the nation's second-largest petroleum refinery Monday, and three workers were missing.

The explosion ignited a fire at a two-acre unit in the 2,100-acre Exxon plant. The fire took three hours to bring under control, but the area was still too hot to search, said plant manager Bill Rainey.

The explosion occurred in one of three units where heavy, tar-like oil is processed into gasoline, Rainey said. All fuel lines leading to and from the damaged unit were cut off moments after the explosion, he said.

The fire did not interrupt other operations at the plant.

The refinery employs 1,700 people and up to 1,500 contract personnel who do maintenance and related work, Rainey said. Two of the missing workers were Exxon employees and the other was a contract worker.

A minor electrical fire in the same unit last April injured one person.

An explosion on Christmas Eve 1989 in the refinery's storage area killed two, injured seven and shattered window glass as far away as two miles.

Hotness above collar real cause for concern

By Walter Putnam
Associated Press writer

ATLANTA — It's easy to lose control when you get hot under the collar, but getting hot above the collar may be the main concern in a heat wave.

High temps and hot tempers go hand in hand, and the culprit is the effects of heat on the brain, according to researchers who study human behavior.

As the mercury rises, so do violent crimes, aggression and a general tendency of just feeling negative. Many people experienced that during July, with temperatures in the upper 90s and above in most of the Southeast.

Research shows that "heat increases the chemicals in the brain that cause the negative feelings," said Leonard L. Martin, a University of Georgia psychology professor who specializes in moods.

"Heat puts people in a bad mood. It makes them irritable. Most of the ill effects you see are a result of the mood, and not the heat directly," Martin said.

Craig Anderson, who teaches psychology at the University of Missouri, said there are numerous studies on heat and aggression, some going back to the 1700s.

"It is clear from our more recent studies that hot temperatures and cold temperatures increase feelings of hostility," he said. "When you're very, very uncomfortable, one of the feelings produced is an increase in hostility."

Aggressive behavior, including violent crime, tends to increase in hot weather. The murder rate, spouse battering and other forms of assault also go up in hot weather, he said.

Anderson said some factors are difficult to gauge, such as the role increased consumption of alcohol in summer might play on the crime rate.

Also, more research is needed to determine exact links between temperature and secretion of hormones that affect mood, Anderson said.

The hypothalamus of the brain, which controls body temperature, has been closely linked with emotions such as anger, he said.

There are clearer links between heat and physical illnesses, including those affecting the brain. Studies have shown that people who exercise strenuously in the heat lose too much of certain minerals, such as potassium.

"What happens is that if you lose a lot of water, the sodium concentration in the blood rises sharply," said Dr. William Mitch, a professor at Emory University School of Medicine. "That produces confusion, loss of mental acuity."

This syndrome is seen in people lost in the desert.

"When they get goofy, what that is really due to is the rise of sodium in the blood," Mitch said.

Perspiration is the body's natural method of cooling off by losing heat, but too much can be fatal.

"If you lose too much heat, the blood flow to the skin and the muscles drops and the core temperature in the innermost parts of the body begins to rise sharply," Mitch said.

Heat shock results when the body temperature gets to very high levels, creating the possibility of irregular heart beat, damage to the muscles and organs, or the brain.

Dr. William Davis, chief of emergency medicine at Emory, said the heat has a twofold impact on emergency rooms.

"We see a significant increase in elderly patients who come in with confusion, dehydration," Davis said.

"The other is we tend to see an increase in the number of victims of violent crime. It seems that the old adage that when it's hot people fight holds true," he said.

CDC: Teens' violent behavior can be treated

LOS ANGELES (NYT) — A deadly epidemic is stalking the nation's youth, according to health officials, and it is spread not through bacteria or virus but rather by bullets, knives and other weapons in an increasingly violent society.

Over the past decade, there has been a sharp rise in violent behavior and homicides among teen-agers and young adults in the United States.

In California, homicide is now the leading cause of death among people aged 20 to 24, and the second-leading cause for those aged 13 to 19, according to the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

As the numbers have risen, health officials have increasingly advanced the notion that youth violence is a social epidemic that can be fought with public-health techniques focused on prevention.

"The concept of treating violence as a preventable problem in society is sort of catching on like wildfire," said Alex Kelter, chief of emergency preparedness and injury control for California Department of Health Services.

"We believe it can work," Kelter said.

Billie Weiss, an epidemiologist with the Los Angeles County Department of Health Services, said the notion that violence should be considered an epidemic has formed slowly.

But the numbers have become too great to ignore, said Weiss, who is director of the health department's Injury-Prevention Project and head of the Los Angeles County Violence Prevention Coalition.

Of 2,589 murders in the county last year, 803 were gang-related and many of them were youths, Weiss said.

"If you had an infectious disease that caused 2,589 deaths in Los Angeles County last year, that would be an epidemic of major proportions and we'd bring all the public-health resources to bear on it," she said.

From the statistics, a grim picture emerges of a youthful generation at war with itself and the world around it.

From the statistics, a grim picture emerges of a youthful generation at war with itself and the world around it.

Guns now are responsible for more deaths of teen-agers in the United States than from all natural diseases combined, said Dr. Yvette Davis, an epidemiologist at the CDC in Atlanta.

For Americans ages 10 to 34, guns are the second-leading cause of death, Davis said.

Since 1985, when about 2,500 youths died of gunshot wounds, the risk of being shot to death has increased 77 percent for teen-agers. In 1990, the last year for which statistics are available, about 4,000 teen-agers died at the end of gun.

In cities around the nation, violence-prevention programs have opened in recent months or soon will open, public-health officials said.

"We need to show these children that they have a future," said Dr. H. Range Hutson, an assistant professor of emergency medicine at Los Angeles County-University of Southern California Medical Center.

"You can put 3,000 more law-enforcement officers on the street and it's not going to make a difference unless you also put people out there to run prevention programs," Hutson said.

The California Wellness Foundation announced last week plans to spend $30 million on anti-violence programs over the next five years. The foundation was established in 1992 by Health Net, California's second-largest health maintenance organization.

The CDC, meanwhile, is providing funds for pilot projects in New York City, Houston and Durham, N.C., to find out what kind of programs have the biggest impact on reducing violent behavior.

"Our mission is to prevent youth violence or those things that led to our young people being killed by violence," said Mary Ann Fenley, a spokeswoman for the National Center for Injury Prevention and Control at the CDC.

A dramatic increase in violence by youths first began building up about seven years ago, said criminologist James Alan Fox, dean of the college of criminal justice at Northeastern University in Boston.

In 1986, Fox said, a disturbing trend first showed up in the homicide rates for the United States. Although the population teen-agers was dropping, the pace at which they were murdering people was rising at an alarming rate, Fox said.

Since then, the rate at which adults are committing homicide rate has continued to drop while the rate at which those ages 14 to 17 have been killing has jumped 124 percent, Fox said.

"What's happened basically is that murder is reaching down to a much younger age," Fox said.

"The really bad news is that this is nothing compared to what we will be seeing in the next few years," Fox said. "The population of teen-agers is now beginning to rise. By the year 2005, the number of 15 to 19 year olds will increase 23 percent.

"A 14-year-old with a gun in his hand is much more menacing person than a 44-year-old with a gun in his hand," Fox said.

"A 14-year-old is much more likely to use that gun — over a menacing glance, over a pair of sneakers, over nothing at all," he said.

DAY WATCH

Vehicle accident

A Midland man was in critical condition and another was undergoing observation at Memorial Hospital and Medical Center Monday night after a pickup they were riding in flipped over the back guard rail of a Midland car dealership earlier in the day.

According to a police report, a 1971 Chevrolet pickup, driven by 30-year-old Roger L. Smith, was eastbound in the 3900 block of Bankhead St. at about 6:30 p.m. when it swerved to miss another vehicle. Smith lost control of the pickup, which hit three garbage dumpsters and the back guard rail of Village Lincoln-Mercury, 3915 W. Wall St.

The pickup then flipped and landed upside down on a Dodge Shadow parked on the lot.

Smith and 29-year-old James Starkes, a passenger, were not wearing their seatbeats and were ejected from the pickup.

Smith was in critical condition with undetermined wounds. Starkes was undergoing tests late Monday and his condition was not determined.

Cocaine charges

BIG SPRING — Two Big Spring residents were out on bond Monday after Big Spring police found an ounce of cocaine and firearms at their residence Saturday.

According to a police report, at approximately 6 a.m. Saturday, the Big Spring Police Department Narcotics Unit executed a search warrant at the residence located at 605 S. Bell St. Officers seized approximately one ounce of cocaine, several rifles and semi-automatic handguns and approximately $700.

Juan Hernandez Trevino, 43, and Irene Marquez Lara, 35, were arrested and charged with possession of a controlled substance.

Deaf man calls 911, triumphs over tragedy

By Katherine Poteet
Staff writer

On April 22, Dale Herrin picked up his telephone and dialed 911.

Not only did he save his wife's life, he became an example of technology and knowledge triumphing over the handicap of deafness. And, Tuesday, the technology got better.

Herrin and his wife Joey, who is also deaf, were presented with a TDD 2700 by Lynnlee James, store manager for the AT&T Phone Center in the Midland Park Mall. The device, formally known as a Telecommunication Device for the Deaf, will allow the Herrins to communicate over the telephone by placing the receiver of the phone in holes on the machine and dialing the number and their message on a keyboard that feeds into the telephone.

"They have an old teletype machine and we are donating a new TDD, which is much smaller and much more advanced," Ms. James said. "Most businesses are required to have these machines. And, if someone they are trying to call doesn't have a TDD, they can call West Texas Relay on the 800 number and they will translate to the business."

The couple will be the subject of a "Rescue 911" episode later in the fall and their home had been turned into a makeshift studio.

"They've been at this for three days," said Steve Burke, an interpreter from Odessa who had been working with the couple during the shooting. "They're in their pajamas because they

Chamberlin gives voice to children

■ The program offers opportunities for a happy, fulfilled life.

By Ed Todd
Staff writer

Andra Chamberlin's fascination with life and living in West Texas extends from the "spectacular" sunrises and sunsets over the plains to helping heal spirit-broken and abused children who are crying for help, compassion, and the love of kindness.

The children experience all too much of life's harshness, hate, misunderstanding, indifference, and calloused love that doesn't know how to express care.

"I think it takes a strong person to appreciate the beauty of this area," which some people see only as virtually without trees, no lakes, and "not very green."

And by a "strong person," she means someone who "doesn't take everything for granted, (someone) who looks for beauty beyond the obvious."

In a recent outing with her "little sister" in Midland's Big Brothers-Big Sisters program, Ms. Chamberlin and her "adopted" sister counted 32 "different wildflowers in one field.

"I've lived all of my life in West Texas," Ms. Chamberlin said. "This is my home. Sunrises and sunsets are not just good looking. They are spectacular. You've just got to be

Midlander surrenders to area FBI

■ Many elderly people fell victim to the scam, some losing large sums of money.

Staff report

A Midland man turned himself in to the FBI Monday and two Houston residents were arrested there last Friday as a result of an investigation conducted by the Midland Police Department and the Midland office of the FBI.

Yousif Ayesh David, 44, surrendered in Midland Monday afternoon.

Norris Louis McGraw, 41, and George O. Nyateng, 35, were arrested in Houston last Friday.

Arrest warrants had been issued in Midland charging the three men with telemarketing fraud. According to the complaint filed by the FBI, the men are accused of operating a scheme wherein victims were contacted by telephone and told they had won a large prize. But in order to collect the prize they had to first pay the applicable taxes.

The victims, many of whom were elderly, sent money to the men and never received anything of value. One elderly female victim allegedly lost $25,000 in the scam, FBI officials said.

The two Houston men appeared before a U.S. Magistrate in Houston on Friday and the Midland man will do the same today, officials said.

Jury imposes death penalty on drug dealer

By Josh Lemieux
Associated Press writer

BROWNSVILLE — A jury on Monday imposed a rare federal death penalty on a convicted marijuana smuggler blamed by prosecutors for eight murders.

"The only thing that I can ask you to consider is to start making your peace to your God," U.S. District Judge Filemon B. Vela told Juan Raul Garza after reading the jury's verdict.

Garza, 36, was convicted by the same panel last week in a 10-count indictment naming him as the boss of a drug ring that imported tons of marijuana into the United States between 1983 and 1993.

Garza, dressed in faded blue jeans, remained impassive during the verdict, He sat hunched slightly over the defense table as he had through much of the three and a half week trial.

The indictment contained three murders, five counts of possessing large amounts of marijuana, and one count each of money laundering and running a continuing criminal enterprise.

During the penalty phase, prosecutors presented testimony that he ordered or carried out five more killings, four of them in Mexico, to persuade the jury to sentence Garza to death.

Garza became the fifth person nationwide — and the first in Texas — to be sentenced to death under a 1988 federal "kingpin" law for drug-related murders, according to the National Coalition Against the Death Penalty.

"He fits the kingpin law perfectly. He's the type of person they wrote the law for," said Assistant U.S. Attorney Mark Patterson after the verdict.

Prosecutors portrayed Garza as a violent leader who controlled the ring by killing workers — including his son-in-law — for failing him. The defense said the government's case depended on un-

Life's competitions aren't necessarily raceathons

More rambling thoughts from a semi-tangled brain . . .

— Why is it that when you are driving in your car and punch over to another radio station it invariably is playing the tail end of your favorite song? Is it part of a giant conspiracy to keep you from hearing the whole song?

— I've never participated in any event that ends in "athon," be it a walkathon, a bikeathon, a readathon or what have you.

— I guess I should consider myself lucky.

— People who insist on telling you how much a particular piece of clothing cost probably don't realize just how tacky that really sounds.

— By the same token, it is sorta fun to buy something terribly expensive at Neiman Marcus or Saks Fifth Avenue and then to make sure all your friends know where the item came from. As long as you don't quote a price, it is not considered tacky behavior. Don't ask me how I know that, I just do.

— As I write this column, I have a terrible case of heartburn.

— I recently heard a college professor say on national television that a large federal deficit is actually good for the economy. As I listened to his reasons I found myself wanting to hire him as my personal accountant.

Hazel Kennedy

Memorial services for Hazel Glenn Richards Kennedy, a former resident of Stanton, were held last Friday at the Community United Methodist Church in Ruidoso, N.M.

Mrs. Kennedy died Sunday, July 25.

She was born in Meridian, Texas, on Aug. 12, 1900 to John Williams and Bess (Lomax) Richards. The family moved by covered wagon to Martin County.

While living in Stanton, Mrs. Kennedy attended St. Mary's Convent School, the only Roman Catholic convent between Fort Worth and El Paso.

She graduated from West Texas Normal School (now West Texas State University) in Canyon with a teaching certificate.

She married Ike Kennedy in 1921.

In 1943, the family moved to Lubbock, and Mrs. Kennedy was instrumental in starting Overton Chapel, which later became Oakwood United Methodist Church. While in Lubbock, her husband was greenskeeper at Lubbock Country Club. He later was hired to build the front nine holes of what is now Cree Meadows Country Club.

The family moved to Ruidoso in 1945. While there, Mrs. Kennedy was a charter member of two Methodist churches. At the Community United Methodist Church, she taught the Kindergarten Sunday School class for more than 35 years. She also was active in United Methodist Women.

Mrs. Kennedy also was active in Ruidoso Woman's Club, Garden Club, Hospital Auxiliary, and the Care Center Auxiliary.

In the 1960s, Mrs. Kennedy had the "Little Pink Doll House," where she sold Madame Alexander dolls and the many doll clothes she had sewn by hand.

Survivors include a daughter, Corinne Swearingin of Ruidoso; one sister, Johnnie Bess Bryan of Stanton; and numerous other relatives.

The family requests memorials be directed to Community United Methodist Church, P.O. Box 3145 HS, Ruidoso, N.M., 88345; or Home Health Services of Lincoln County, P.O. Box 3579 HS, Ruidoso, N.M., 88345; or the Lincoln County Food Bank, P.O. Box 1372, Ruidoso, N.M., 88345.

Her grandsons will serve as pallbearers.

VOICE: Woman works for children's rights

spectacular. You've just got to be willing to look for what God has to offer us here, and He's got a lot to offer."

And the children with whom she deals in her "Voices-for-Children" program in the Centers for Children and Families "have a lot to offer us.

"The program offers a chance for children to have a full and happy life," said the 34-year-old Ms. Chamberlin, who is finishing up an academic degree in sociology and who is to study psychology in graduate school.

Ms. Chamberlin coordinates the efforts of volunteers, "especially the volunteers," who "gather information for the judge" on the fate of children who are in unhappy and dysfunctional families where abuse and neglect are common place.

"Our purpose is to be the eyes and the ears of the judge (Dean Rucker) who deals with family-court matters and the welfare of children," Ms. Chamberlin said. "Our job is to provide him with information so that he can make a better decision as to the placement of the child."

Is the child to be returned to his or her parents, placed in a foster home, or turned over to relatives?

Can the parents re-order their lives and learn how to be caring and effective parents? Is there hope for uniting a family that is disrupted?

To gather information on children and their families, Ms. Chamberlin's volunteers talk with the children and with their parents, foster parents, teachers, relatives, counselors and neighbors.

"We see some families that are not ideal," Ms. Chamberlin said. "Just because the child doesn't have a swimming pool in his backyard and doesn't have 10 pairs of shoes doesn't mean the child comes from a bad home. The majority of people we work with don't have what we think are ideal homes."

The ideal goal of the Voices-for-Children program is to return the children to their families "if it is at all possible" and if the family's problem or problems that are disturbing to the child can be resolved.

"It is important that the child goes back home," she said. However, "What's for the best benefit of the child may be the child not going back home."

Those are the saddest cases and the "worst" cases, though rare, are when parental rights are terminated. "It happens occasionally but rarely," Ms. Chamberlin said.

"If there is no way the family can put it together, you may recommend placement (of the child) with relatives and the termination of parental rights.

"What you want is what's best for the child," she said. Often, that is through rectifying family problems that might be rooted in the parents' inability to properly handle their anger and frustration.

Each child needs a sense of belonging to a stable family.

"I think most parents love their children," Ms. Chamberlin said. "They just don't have the knowledge or the parenting skills to effectively raise a child."

Parents may mistreat their children through abandonment, neglect, and through physical and sexual abuse and still "love their children.

"It's not that they don't love their children," Ms. Chamberlin said of some parents. "They don't have the parenting skills necessary to handle their children. They don't have the impulse control or don't know how to handle their own emotions."

Instead of striking out at their children, parents "can learn to count to 10 and take a deep breath" and possibly consider the surface and root causes of their anger and the ramifications of hitting their children.

The Parent Partners program at the Centers for Children and Their Families, which is a United Way agency, helps parents learn parenting and life skills.

Children innately want to be an integral part of their family.

"All children long to be with a family. They want a sense of family. They want a sense of completeness," Ms. Chamberlin said.

Before heading up the Voices-for-Children program, Ms. Chamberlin was the education director for the Midland Rape Crisis Center. In her role there, she had encountered "lots of children who had been abused and hurt.

"You look into their eyes, and it is as if there was nothing there — no love, no hope, no joy," she said. "There is nothing there when you look into their eyes."

Ms. Chamberlin, who views her life as "extremely blessed," feels a need to "give something back" to her community and to the world by helping children to experience happy and fulfilled lives.

Ms. Chamberlin looks to the writings of American philosopher Ralph Waldo Emerson for inspiration in her work. She has adopted as her creed Emerson's mini-essay on "Success":

"To laugh often and much; to win the respect of intelligent people and affection of children; to earn the appreciation of honest critics and endure the betrayal of false friends; to appreciate beauty, to find the best in others; to leave the world a bit better, whether by a healthy child, a garden patch or a redeemed social condition; to know even one life has breathed easier because you have lived. This is to have succeeded."

GARZA: Jury imposes rare federal death penalty corroborated testimony from former Garza workers who were lying to gain leniency in their own sentences.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Jose Angel Moreno defended the plea agreements with more than a dozen former Garza workers.

"Without their testimony, there wouldn't have been any murders to prosecute," Moreno said. "It would have just been a drug case."

Defense attorneys Philip H. Hilder and Douglas C. McNabb complained that the government alleged five additional murders during the penalty phase without ever charging their client in those cases.

"You can't help but think that they took that into consideration in determining the ultimate punishment," Hilder said.

"We're going to appeal on constitutional grounds and on insufficiency of the evidence," he added.

The defense complained that the government didn't seek the death penalty for the hitmen, most of whom testified against Garza in exchange for a lighter sentencing recommendations from prosecutors.

But Patterson said Garza molded his workers into killers. "He made them what they are," he said.

Jurors convicted Garza on Thursday in the 1990 killings of Erasmo de la Fuente and de la Fuente's frequent companion, Gilberto Matos. Witnesses testified that Garza blamed de la Fuente for the loss of a marijuana shipment.

Garza also was convicted in the January 1991 death of Thomas Albert Rumbo, who had agreed to cooperate with authorities after he was caught loading marijuana for Garza.

Jurors deliberated nearly seven hours over two days after the penalty phase, during which they heard testimony about the five other murders.

Former gang members testified that Garza ordered the murder of Bernabe Sosa, his son-in-law, in January 1992 because Garza blamed him for the seizure of a marijuana load in Houston.

A former enforcer named Jesus Flores testified that he helped torture and kill his own sister-in-law, Diana Flores Villarreal, in July 1991 because Garza suspected her of snitching on him.

Jesus Flores' cousin, Israel Flores, said Garza ordered him to kill a longtime friend, Antonio Nieto, in May 1991 because the two had squandered Garza's money on a dope-buying trip to Mexico.

A week earlier, Garza himself had killed a drug middleman named Fernando Escobar-Garcia because "he said he didn't have no use for him," Israel Flores testified.

Witnesses said Garza ordered the death of pilot Oscar Cantu in April 1991 because Cantu had lost money to Mexican federal police.

All five were killed in Mexico except Ms. Villarreal.

Mark Reich, the special agent for U.S. Customs Service who led the three-year investigation, said he suspected links between Garza and Juan Garcia Abrego, considered one of Mexico's biggest drug traffickers.

Garza would not likely have been able to fly drugs over Mexican airspace without ties to organized crime, and he was arrested in November 1992 at one of Garcia Abrego's safehouses in Mexico, Reich said.

Garcia Abrego and others were charged in a 125-count federal grand jury indictment in Dallas three years ago. He remains at large.

Educator Connie Smith receives 'Teacher of the Month' award

A Bonham Elementary teacher received the Teacher of the Month award at the Black Chamber of Entrepreneur's meeting Monday.

Connie Smith, a third-grade teacher, has taught in Midland for the past 25 years. She worked as Pease Elementary School before moving to Bonham. Before moving to Midland, she taught in schools in Missouri and Washington state.

"I believe every child can learn," Ms. Smith said. "They just have different learning styles."

In other business, Chamber Vice President James Fuller announced the chamber's upcoming fund-raiser on Sept. 18. The event will be a concert by jazz musician Tom Braxton at the Ramada Inn.

Barbara Sumners, Director of Health and Safety at the Midland County American Red Cross, spoke to the board about needing volunteers to train for the organization's upcoming HIV/AIDS series.

"There are some people in this community who, I think, just don't believe this is necessary," Ms. Sumner said. "But, I'm hear to tell you, HIV and AIDS are in this community and we need to educate ourselves. This series has the most up-to-date information concerning this social disease."

She also said the Midland organization has two people and an emergency unit helping with efforts in the Midwest flooding.

The board also heard a presentation from the Midland County Fire Department on its new Cadet Program for young people interested in a career in the Fire Department and on efforts to raise funds for a Fire Safety Trailer for the department's safety program.

are re-enacting the phone call today."

After about 45 minutes of following directions and working under intense lights, the Herrins sat in their living room, looking tired from all the fuss but pleased that they will be able to get their message out to others nationwide.

"Many deaf people don't know about calling 911 or they don't think the dispatcher will answer," Herrin signed through Burke. "They don't know how to use it. Now, others will see this on television and can learn from us."

Mrs. Herrin said the old Western Union-style teletype machine her husband used to call 911 was purchased 28 years ago and was made of Army surplus metal from World War II.

"We had never used it until that morning," she said.

That morning, at about 9 a.m., Mrs. Herrin started having difficulty breathing due to an ongoing heart problem. Herrin said he called 911 because, although his wife had had problems with her heart before, this time seemed worse.

"I watched television and knew that calling 911 would save her life," he signed. "I knew it would be faster than me driving her to the emergency room. She might not have made it if I had done that."

The dispatcher who took Herrin's call, Shannon Bufler, was nominated for Telecommunicator of the Year by the Midland Emergency Communication District and was interviewed for the television show.

"She was a wonderful woman," Herrin signed. "She really calmed me down. I was very, deeply scared, but I did the right thing."

Panel approves DFW horse racing track

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Racing Commission on Monday approved a proposal for a major-league horse track in the Dallas-Fort Worth area.

Opponents of the plan pushed by Midpointe Racing and Lone Star Jockey Club said they probably will challenge the decision in court.

The commission also denied Bandera Downs racing dates for next year, citing a number of alleged improprieties at the horse track, which is located about 45 miles northwest of San Antonio.

A Bandera official said he was shocked by the allegations and would respond to the charges soon.

In the battle over the Dallas-Fort Worth track, commissioners allowed Midpointe's R.D. Hubbard to buy a Class 2 pari-mutuel license from a track that was never built in the Hill Country town of Round Mountain.

The commission also voted 3-1 to allow Hubbard to move that license to Grand Prairie. Hubbard, president and chief executive officer of Hollywood Park in Inglewood, Calif. says Midpointe plans to build a Class 1 facility with the Class 2 license.

Class 1 tracks are major-league facilities, such as Churchill Downs where the Kentucky Derby is run. Class 2 tracks are mid-sized tracks that generally have quarterhorse races and shorter racing seasons.

Last year, the commission granted the Class 1 license to Lone Star Jockey Club. That decision is tied up in court.

Now, Lone Star has joined with Midpointe in an attempt to build the Class 1 facility with the Class 2 license.

"We are prepared to bury the hatchet and go down the road to build a fine racetrack," said Jim Musselman, president of Lone Star.

But opponents said the commission's action circumvents the court battle, and essentially gives Midpointe license to build a Class 1 facility without competition.

Dean Davis, an attorney representing a rival group called Pinnacle Park, said, "Expediency is never going to win over due process." He said Pinnacle Park probably will appeal the commission's decision in court.

Trinity Meadows, a Class 2 track near Fort Worth, also voiced opposition to the plan.

Commissioner Hugh Fitzsimons said the public interest would best be served by getting a Class 1 track built as quickly as possible. Commissioner Ronald Krist dissented, saying, "I think what's in the public's best interest has to do with due process."

Hubbard said the track could be built in Grand Prairie by April 1, 1995.

The commission also criticized Bandera Downs and refused to grant it 1994 racing dates until it responds to allegations of improprieties.

Commissioner Krist, who's also chairman of the panel that oversees the Texas Department of Public Safety, said Bandera officials have consistently refused to cooperate with law authorities.

He said the track was told recently by the DPS to notify them when a suspected bank robber started using marked bills at Bandera Downs to place small bets and get unmarked bills back in change.

But track officials, he said, overruled those instructions.

Krist also accused the track of holding an illegal race between two horses, and of using an unlicensed announcer.

He said the track should answer these charges at the commission's next meeting in October.

Bill Bowers, general manager of Bandera Downs, said he was stunned by the charges and that his attorney would respond to them soon. "I don't think the whole story has been told today," he said.

In other business, the commission approved dates for other mid-sized horse tracks, and the state's only Class 1 horse track under construction, Sam Houston Race Park.

Under the dates approved by the commission, Sam Houston will have a thoroughbred meet from April 29 through June 19, and a quarterhorse meet from July 1 through Sept. 18.

The track is also seeking a fall meet.

The board also approved race dates next year for the state's dog race racks, Corpus Christi Greyhound, Gulf Greyhound Park and Valley Greyhound Park.

Lawmakers recommend caucus-funding changes

AUSTIN (AP) — The head of a House panel studying legislative caucuses said Monday he thinks they shouldn't get tax dollars for their day-to-day operations.

"I suppose that there are issues that should require public funding, such as redistricting, but for the general day-to-day operation of a caucus, I think that the members should fund it . . . through their campaign account or something like that," said Rep. Warren Chisum, who heads the Texas Conservative Coalition, a House caucus that doesn't get public money.

Chisum, D-Pampa, also suggested possible limits on private fund-raising by caucuses and advocated financial disclosure requirements.

But he said his House Administration subcommittee won't make recommendations on caucus funding until after the state Ethics Commission meets Sept. 2. Lawmakers want the commission to address several questions, including the issues of public funding and financial disclosure.

Of 10 House caucuses listed by the subcommittee, four get public funds: the Democratic, Republican, Mexican-American and black caucuses.

Each was allocated $5,000 a month while the Legislature was in session beginning in 1991, plus $2,000 a month when not in session. They got $25,000 for the January-May regular session this year but have received no money since then, while the issue is under study.

Rep. David Counts, D-Knox City, said the reasoning behind public funding was that the Legislature was dealing with redistricting, and the caucuses want to ensure their constituents were fairly treated. He suggested such funding is no longer needed.

But public funding of caucuses is supported by the government watchdog group Common Cause, along with restrictions on private fund-raising.

Watchdog groups want caucuses to be under the same prohibition as individual lawmakers, who can't raise political contributions during the 140-day regular session and 30 days before and. Some have advocated additional limits.

They also have suggested that caucuses be required to report their contributions and expenditures, as lawmakers do to the Ethics Commission.

Chisum said he believes caucuses should be required to file financial disclosure statements.

And even though his Conservative Coalition raised a "significant amount of money" during the recent legislative session, he said that caucuses in the future probably should be under the time restriction as individual lawmakers.

"That's the time (during and right before the session) that special interest groups on the outside see that they're probably going to need to influence some legislators, and they'll do it in any way they can," Chisum said.

He said that guidelines are needed to prevent any problems.

"The biggest abuse I see that could come out of this is that you could take taxpayer dollars, public funds, and use those for election purposes," said Chisum. "That should never be done."

He questioned a situation in which Milton Rister served as director of the House Republican Caucus, paid with public funds, and also worked for the state Republican Party.

Officials: Released killer returns to Sweetwater

AUSTIN (AP) — Convicted child-rapist and killer Raul Meza, driven out of several cities by public outcry, will live in Sweetwater until authorities can find a permanent spot for him, parole officials said Monday.

"We don't know how long he will be there. He will be there until we can find another acceptable plan," said Raven Kazen, spokeswoman for the pardons and paroles division.

But because state law required his release from prison, she said, "Ultimately, he has to have a place to live."

Meza, 32, left prison June 21 after serving only 11 years of a 34-year sentence.

He will be kept at a Sweetwater pre-parole facility operated by the private Concepts Inc., until a permanent location is found, Ms. Kazen said.

Meza pleaded guilty in 1982 to the rape and murder of an 8-year-old Austin girl. The killing occurred while Meza was on parole from an aggravated robbery in which a convenience store clerk was shot.

He was denied parole seven times, beginning in 1985. But by June, he accumulated enough "good time" in prison to be released. He is to remain under mandatory supervision until 2016.

After Meza's presence sparked protests in Uvalde, El Paso, San Antonio, Wichita Falls, Mineral Wells and Sweetwater, the parole agency two weeks ago refused to divulge his location.

On Monday, three days after the Texas attorney general ruled that Meza's whereabouts was public information, parole officials responded to open records requests filed by The Associated Press and other news organizations.

Ms. Kazen said the case has sparked "the obvious public outcry, which we can all understand."

However, she said, Meza's release was due to actions of the Legislature — not the parole board.

"The law has dictated that he is to be released and a free man unless he violates some rule or condition. And that's what we're having to try to work with," Ms. Kazen said.

"It wasn't a parole decision . . . Our lawmakers made the laws that have released him."

She said terms of his release call for Meza to receive sex offender counseling, report several times a month to his parole officer and be visited at home by a parole officer. "He will be intensely supervised."

She also said the parole agency prefers putting Meza in a halfway house, like that where he stayed briefly in El Paso, so he could be most closely supervised. Another option is a private residence.

"At one time we had him under 24-hour supervision in the halfway house, on electronic monitoring. We had the most intensive supervision you can give any individual without them being locked up in the Texas prison system," Ms. Kazen said.

"If we put him in a private residence, yes his parole officer will visit him. Yes, he will report to his parole officer. But there's not going to be someone there with him 24 hours a day."

However, halfway houses may not want a criminal with Meza's background and high profile. The attention he gets could disrupt their other programs, she said.

She also said placing Meza in another state isn't a prospect.

"When we're talking about somebody who's been convicted of an offense like this, there are children and concerned community members in any other state. And, actually, we will be able to provide him closer supervision here in Texas by far than we could provide if he is sent out of state," she said.

Last week, Meza filed a lawsuit contending that the state parole agency had, for all practical purposes, arrested him without reason. His petition seeks his release and that the state be barred from transferring him to another state without his approval.

Authorities seek suspect in killing of Mexia officer

MEXIA (AP) — Authorities were searching Monday for answers in the shooting death of a Mexia police officer as his fellow officers tried to cope with the first-ever death of one of their own while on duty.

Officer Ricky Lee Ward, 33, of Fairfield was killed Monday morning while chasing a man suspected of shoplifting at a convenience store, said Mexia City Manager Gerald Yarbrough.

Ward is the sixth officer in the state to be killed on the job so far this year, said Mike Cox of the Texas Department of Public Safety.

No arrests had been made Monday afternoon, said Sheriff Dennis Walker of the Limestone County Sheriff's Department, which along with the Texas Rangers is investigating the shooting.

The incident occurred around 12:30 a.m. after Ward and officer Susan Farris were called to the Pronto Food Mart, Yarbrough said.

The officers were inside the store when someone told them a man was scratching on their squad car with a tire tool, he said.

Ward and Ms. Farris went out to confront the man, who denied doing anything and ran away.

Ward chased the man, who dropped what police believe was a pager. When Ward bent over to pick up the object, he was shot in his left side, Yarbrough said. The suspect got away.

The officer died while in surgery at Parkview Regional Hospital around 2 a.m., Yarbrough said.

Yarbrough said the shooting has shocked this town of 7,000 and its police department, which consists of only 12 commissioned officers. The department is "undergoing quite a hard time," he said.

Yarbrough said the city has asked the crisis unit of the Austin Police Department to send some personnel to Mexia to meet with officers here.

Mexia is located about 80 miles south of Dallas. Ward, a Mexia officer for three years, is survived by his wife and two stepchildren.

12-year-old sitter ushers 4 children from burning home

HOUSTON (AP) — A 12-year-old baby sitter herded her sister's four young children from a burning house after one of them apparently set fire to a bed.

Children and sitter escaped injury, but fire officials expressed concern that someone so young had been put in charge.

Ms. Beckwith said she usually leaves her children at her mother's, but she didn't have a way to get them there Sunday.

The 12-year-old, whose name has not been released, guided the children from the house. The fire gutted one bedroom and apparently began when one child lit a bed on fire with a lighter.

Problem of children with guns requires urgent fix

By Erma Bombeck

If 14 children were killed in a bus accident en route to a Little League game, it would be the lead story on the 6 o'clock news.

If 14 children perished in a fire at a day-care center, it would make the wire services.

Bombeck

If 14 children drowned in a boating accident at a church picnic, there would be a full-scale investigation.

Where is the outcry for the 14 children who will die today in gun accidents — the 14 who will accidentally shoot themselves or be shot by a playmate?

We're not taking very good care of the children we are charged to protect. And that's our job. We seem to think that after we get them through the stages of "Don't put that in your mouth!" or "Don't play with matches," we've done it.

But it goes on. "Don't accept rides or candy from starngers." "Don't swim alone." "Don't play ball in the street." "Don't use kerosene to start a campfire." "Don't use Daddy's electrical tools."

Every day I hear how this generation of children is so much more advanced mentally than their parents or grandparents. Don't count on it. They're children who have not yet developed judgment and can't tell reality from make-believe.

By the time they have finished elementary school, they will have watched 8,000 murders on television. Bang! Bang! You're dead! And next week, the same guy gets killed again on another thriller, or he appears on a talk show to discuss his next film.

In the eyes of a child, he didn't really die. The gun didn't shatter his eardrums when it was fired on television. The victim didn't even bleed a lot. And there wasn't a funeral shown where people were sad the person was gone.

There isn't a gun made that you can hide from a child and his insatiable curiosity. The same child who can get the bell out of a ball in 20 seconds at the age of 9 months can find a handgun. He pays the price for his curiosity.

The cause-of-the-month is to get violence and murders off the television screens. I'd feel a lot better if we got it out of the home.

The purpose of this column has always been to amuse, enlighten, or say something that hasn't been said before. This one does none of those things. It's merely an effort to call attention to 14 children whose lives ended today — and to ask, for what?

Erma Bombeck's column is distributed by Universal Press Syndicate.

DEAR ABBY

Beauty pageant plummets into battle of titles

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Over the years, I have written many plays and articles. (No pay, but I have enjoyed every minute of it.)

Van Buren

I am now planning a beauty pageant, and I'm working with the contestants — females between 20 and 40 years old. When I addressed them as "girls," I was reprimanded and told that the term "girls" should be reserved for children, and the appropriate term for these females is "ladies."

When I addressed them as "ladies," I was corrected again and told that "women" was the way to address them. However, when I called them "women," some of them objected, saying they preferred being called "ladies."

The date of the pageant is approaching, and I would appreciate knowing how to address the contestants. There seems to be a variety of opinions, and I will be beholden to you for the correct one. Thanking you in advance, I am ... HY WALLACE IN SKOKIE, ILL.

DEAR HY WALLACE: All females are "women," but not all women are "ladies."

The dictionary defines a lady as someone who is polite, refined and well-mannered. Not all women possess those traits.

Why don't you simply refer to the women as "contestants"? Or better yet, refer to them as "beauties" — I assure you, you will get no complaints.

DEAR ABBY: Every year without fail, on Aug. 31, parents phone their pediatricians' office demanding that "Irving" or "Esmeralda" be given an appointment THAT DAY for a school examination. Without this examination, the parents plead, the child will not be admitted to public school or allowed to play school sports.

Parents should understand that while it is easy to do last-minute Christmas shopping on Dec. 24, the same cannot be said for performing a thorough history and physical examination on a child! This takes a significant amount of time by a pediatrician or pediatric nurse-practitioner, and cannot be reduced to a "quickie" office visit.

Abby, if you print this, perhaps parents will have their children's checkups scheduled earlier, and pediatricians and their staff will have fewer "Maalox moments" the final week of school vacation. — MARVIN L. AUERBACK, M.D., FOSTER CITY, CALIF.

DEAR DR. AUERBACK: Thank you for a valuable suggestion. Parents: Avoid the rush, and schedule those back-to-school checkups NOW.

DEAR ABBY: Here's another name you might like to add to your "odd names" list: A friend of mine from years ago, Jim Paradise, married a girl by the name of Helen Courtney. Thus a new name — Helen Paradise. — GENE D. WARD, LOS ANGELES

DEAR MR. WARD: Cute!

Updating Texas lotto signs is job for early risers

FORT WORTH (AP) — Updating all those roadside Lotto Texas billboards is a well-orchestrated task. Workers usually get the word on the new jackpot in the wee hours of the morning and make the changes while most people are still asleep.

All told, the update takes about 10 minutes — unless the wind's blowing hard — less time than some people spend picking their numbers.

The process starts immediately after the six winning Lotto Texas numbers pop out, just before 10 p.m. each Wednesday and Saturday.

For the next several hours, a computer in Ausin crunches numbers to determine if there were any winners. State lottery officials then fax the new pot size to billboard owners about 4:30 a.m.

Across the state, billboard crews hit the road.

Early Thursday, it was still pitch black in the Fort Worth suburb of Haltom City when crew chief John Hyatt rolled up to an exit off Airport Freeway with Nito Franco, Eddie Chasteen and Adon Contreraz and hustled up ladders to the metal catwalk of one billboard.

They were dwarfed by the string of 8-foot zeros announcing Wednesday night's $20,000,000 prize.

In less than three minutes, Franco had dislodged the "WED." panel, slid it left out of its tracks, flipped it to "SAT." and slipped it back in. Chasteen picked "31" from a stack of boards lying on the catwalk and exchanged it for Wednesday's "28" date.

It's unlikely the jackpot can grow too big for the board.

The sign is designed for only eight digits, but should the jackpot hit $100,000,000, billboard officials are ready.

"We have an extension with a '1' that would cover the dollar sign, then a dollar sign that would go to the left of that," said Gene Leehan, a spokesman for Chicago-based Patrick Media, owner of two Tarrant County billboards.

"We can do any nine-digit number," Leehan said.

At the other end of the billboard, Hyatt and Contreraz played with the numbers. They replaced the "20" with the lowly "3," indicating that at least one gambler struck it rich on Wednesday night. The current starting jackpot is $3,000,000.

Real 'Star Trek' future slowly is being sucked into black hole

By Harry F. Rosenthal
Associated Press writer

HOUSTON — It was 1969 and three men had just returned from the moon. They got parades and medals and a presidential dinner. Their burn-stained space capsule was hauled around to all 50 state capitals, escorted by highway patrolmen with the reverence and awe accorded to Old Glory herself. It was hot as the dickens but people lined up for hours just so they could say they had seen the thing.

It was history and triumph and the United States was No. 1. Oh, my, America was proud.

Fast-forward to 1993.

Apollo is history. Skylab is forgotten and the space shuttle has flown 57 times since 1981. Ho hum.

With the tragic exception of Challenger, all launches and landings look the same — up and down, up and down — and network television long ago quit carrying them live. Ask the man on the street to name a current astronaut and get a blank stare.

For nine years, there's been a boring debate in Washington: does the United States need a space station? Last month, in Congress, the no-sayers came within one vote of killing the project.

Where have all of NASA's friends gone?

In the 1960s, NASA could do no wrong. It had the whole country in its corner and the goal was simple: beat the Soviets.

Nobody's head rolled when the early rockets blew up or when John Glenn failed 10 times to get off the ground before becoming the first American to orbit Earth or when NASA spent $26 billion to get 12 men onto the moon.

"NASA was a creature of the Cold War," said Don Fuqua, the former chairman of the House space committee and now president of the Aerospace Industries Association. "When the Berlin Wall came down, there no longer was this enemy out there that we had to compete with."

The bleachers where the cheerleaders once sat now are filled with critics.

One of them, a congressman, told his colleagues recently that NASA had led them around by the nose for years and "bamboozled" Congress. Even NASA acknowledges it underestimated costs and overpromised results.

That was just one of the many confidence-eroding circumstances.

The Challenger disaster, which killed seven astronauts on the 25th shuttle flight, was "an accident rooted in history," according to investigators who concluded the agency had gotten sloppy.

The Hubble Space Telescope's inability to see to the edge of the universe as promised was due to careless miscalculation. The $1.4 billion Galileo space probe to Jupiter is handicapped because its main antenna is jammed.

On its 12th anniversary, the space shuttle fleet was on only its 54th mission; NASA had promised up to 400 by then. The shuttles have proved to be cantankerous, finicky and expensive.

'Lady'-chasing detective to hang up bunny suit

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A vice cop who attracted national attention with his unorthodox arrests of prostitutes is hanging up his bunny suit and putting away the Santa Claus outfit.

Detective John Millikin was to retire at the end of July from the San Antonio Police Department after 26 years on the job.

Millikin is known for coming up with zany schemes to make arrests.

One case that made news nationwide became known as the "Santa Claus Caper," according to the San Antonio Express-News.

In the mid-1980s, just before Christmas during a routine, overnight vice sweep, Millikin asked himself: Why not put a patrolman in a Santa Claus suit on known prostitution corner and see what happens?

Millikin ended up arresting seven prostitutes that chilly night.

Vice Lt. Rudy Vernon said Millikin once made arrests in a topless bar by having an officer pose undercover in a wheelchair.

In another caper on an Easter Sunday, Millikin dressed up in a rabbit suit and drove along a main inner-city street in an unmarked car.

Five minutes later, Millikin arrested a prostitute after telling her he was on his way to a children's party, but had just enough time for a little "action."

"You know, I still have that rabbit suit," said Millikin with a laugh.

Police Chief William Gibson said the department will miss Millikin.

"It's going to be hard to find somebody to fill the bunny suit now that he's gone," Gibson said.

Sheriff's campaign 'deputy' is questioned

FORT WORTH (AP) — District Attorney Tim Curry is investigating whether Sheriff David Williams acted properly in issuing a badge, keys, shotgun and other items to his largest campaign contributor.

Controversy over providing the equipment to Ed Max, who contributed $55,000 to Williams' $120,000 campaign effort, has been building in the department since it wass issued in January.

He received a sheriff's badge, portable radio, office keys, bullet-proof vest and shotgun.

Max, who has an auto parts business, said he had no intention of acting like a deputy sheriff. Behond that, he designated attorney Tom Wilder, a business associate and Williams' campaign manager, to speak for him.

"He had absolutely no intent to take law enforcement action of any kind. He at no time exercised any law enforcement prerogatives. Ed is not a gun nut. He's not a police buff," Wilder said.

Campaign contributor-auto parts dealer-'unpaid volunteer adviser' got badge, keys, shotgun.

"Granted, a mistake was made here, but it was an honest mistake. Frankly, this has received a much higher level of scrutiny than it should have," Wilder said.

The sheriff merely asked Max to act as an unpaid volunteer adviser, making suggestions and recommendations about several facets of the sheriff's department, Wilder said.

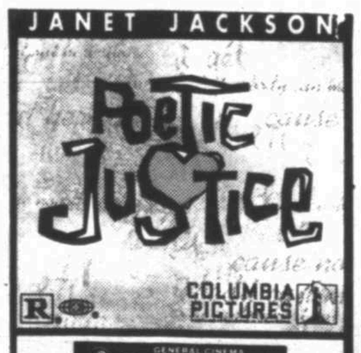

Wilder said except for the keys, Max never used the equipment.

"They were handed to him in January, they were put in the trunk of his car, and never saw the light of day. He has never worn a gun, never flashed a badge," Wilder said.

Because of questions raised, Max returned some of the equipment and planned to have it all back by the end of the week, Wilder said.

Beach crowd

Teen-age homicide

1 week starts endless chain of young death

By Fred Bayles
Associated Press Writer

Our count begins on a Sunday. It is an arbitrary starting point along an endless chain of young deaths.

Robert Lozano, 17, is shot in the chest at a neighborhood barbecue in Grand Prairie, Texas. The killing leaves his pregnant wife a widow at 16. His accused assailant: a 16-year-old boy angry at Lozano for sounding his car horn.

Lozano's brother, Jose, blames the gangs.

"They've shot at us about five times," he says with chilling matter-of-factness.

In North Philadelphia, Michael Douglas, 17, is shot in the back. Police arrest a 20-year-old neighbor, Michael Frazier. The two had fought earlier, with knife and stick, over a broken window.

Arthur Williams Jr. stands on a fifth-floor porch in a Chicago housing project when shots ring out. An aunt shouts to take cover, but the 13-year-old is killed by a high-powered rifle round. A 14-year-old boy is charged with the murder.

In the early hours of Monday, Ny-Aya Hill, 16, is stabbed to death, allegedly by an 18-year-old neighbor at her Brooklyn housing project. The reason: an argument over a boy.

What is shocking about these deaths is that they have become commonplace.

In some cities, teen murders have become so frequent as to defy the definition of news. They are given scant public notice — a few paragraphs in the newspaper, brief words on the evening news.

But to criminologists and public health officials charged with taking society's pulse, the deaths of Robert and Michael, Arthur and Ny-Aya are markers of an epidemic that shows signs only of worsening.

According to Northeastern University criminologist James Alan Fox, the rate of murder among those 14 to 17 more than doubled since 1986. In the inner city, increasing teen violence has accounted for a disproportionate share of the murder rate. Nationally, on average, six teens die violently each day.

Houston saw teen homicides double between 1988 and 1990 alone. The toll is rising in Detroit: 40 youths between the ages of 13-19 were killed in the first half of the year; 54 died in all of 1992.

The killing is not confined to big cities. In Wichita, nearly half of this year's murders involved either victims or assailants 18 or younger.

This grim body count is dwarfed by the number maimed and traumatized by violence. The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention say that for every death, 100 are wounded.

"People often forget a lot of the violence is much more than what we see in the number of deaths," said William Wiist, a researcher with the Houston health department.

In the public mind, the violence is a crime problem, a reflection of growing lawlessness that calls for more cops and tougher courts.

But to Dr. Mark Rosenberg, an associate director and epidemiologist at the CDC, the steady rise in murdered and murdering teens points to a public health crisis.

"Epidemic is precisely the right word for it," said Rosenberg. "When people think of violence and homicide, they think of someone caught in the cross fire of a robbery. But most of these homicides are not associated with a felony. They involve something else."

The homicide count for the week of July 11-17 ticks away.

Monday. In St. Louis, Antjuan Jones, 16, is found dead behind a vacant building not far from home. Witnesses see three men shooting guns; there is little else for police.

Jones becomes a statistic: the city's 131st homicide this year, the 37th involving a victim or assailant 18 or younger.

On Tuesday, a shotgun blast kills Rason Sanford as he sits in his BMW at a Cincinnati shopping mall. Police find a gun in the 18-year-old victim's hand. Because he was arrested for drugs, police call the murder drug-related.

But Sanford's brother, Michael, says the two 17-year-olds and a 16-year-old charged in the killing were feuding with their victim.

Tuesday becomes Wednesday. Mary Hughes, 17, and a 13-year-old friend set to ambush her father in the backyard of her Houston home. She wants to kill him, police say, because she was upset with parental rules.

But the two teens argue, and Mary is shot in the neck. Her father finds the body.

Health researchers try to crack an epidemic by looking at three distinct areas: host, environment and agent.

By studying who is susceptible, contributing factors in the surroundings and the characteristics of the disease itself, cures and preventions can be developed.

Young males bear the brunt of this epidemic, representing 73 percent of the victims, Fox said. While whites account for 53 percent, black males face a five times greater risk of dying violently.

The epidemic is more pronounced in cities of a quarter-million or larger. Growth in teen homicides is taking place everywhere, except in the South, where the rate of increase is slightly slower.

Not surprisingly, young males also are the likely cause of death.

Boys kill 10 times more than girls; blacks kill six times more than whites.

Most of these homicides are intraracial. Ninety-three percent of whites kill whites; 92 percent of blacks kill blacks.

Slightly more than half kill a friend or acquaintance; 15 percent kill a family member. The remaining third choose their victims among strangers.

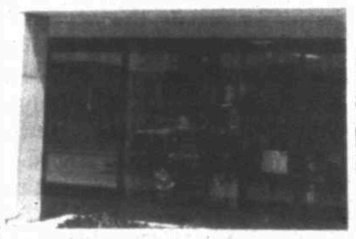

No matter the victim, killer and circumstance, firearms are used in three-quarters of teen homicides, a figure triple what it was in the mid-1980s.

"Our data suggests it's not necessarily that kids are fighting more, but the fights are being done with guns," Rosenberg said. "A lot of times, the only thing that differentiates the victim from the perpetrator is who shot first or straighter."

Nintendo World Class Service®

Delta Electronics has sent two of its technicians to Nintendo of America Inc.'s headquarters in Seattle. Washington.

Their extensive training has resulted in Delta Electronics being classified as a Nintendo World Class Service Technical Team.

™1993 Nintendo of America Inc.

According to recent statistics published by Nintendo of America Inc. one out of every three households in the United States currently owns at least one Nintendo electronic game such as the Nintendo Entertainment System®, Super Nintendo Entertainment System®, and the Nintendo® Gameboy®.

This extremely large number of video games means that there has to be a highly trained and qualified support service available to do the routine maintenance and servicing.

Don Baker, one of the technicians at Delta Electronics says that, "Nintendo computer games are as complicated as small personal computers." They are packed full of integrated circuits and micro chips which are relatively delicate.

Couple this with the fact that children are notoriously bad at looking after their toys, (even grown up children subject the games to a great deal of abuse), and it is easy to see why Delta Electronics has sent Baker and Ed Huwa of San Angelo to Nintendo's headquarters in Seattle. Washington to receive detailed training in the repair and care of these complex machines.

The games may look sleek and uncluttered from the outside, but inside they are highly sophisticated units full of advanced circuitry. Repairing them is not for the untrained, which is why Baker and Huwa (already very experienced technicians) spent a week learning the finer points of game repair.

Delta Electronics is perhaps better known in the Midland area for its reliable, high quality repairs on general household electronics such as televisions, stereo systems, video cassette recorders, microwave ovens and camcorders. Now Delta has received certification as a Nintendo World Class Service Technical Team.

Because Delta works to Nintendo's own rigorous quality standards, every game unit which is brought in undergoes highly detailed testing by computer both before and after the repair. Diagnostic testing programs can quickly identify any problem, enabling a fast turn around of repairs.

Each unit is then tested for up to eight hours with another program to double check all of the systems. All machines must be functioning as new before they will be returned to their owners.

This kind of attention to detail comes naturally to Delta's team of electronic technicians who have a real understanding of a subject that most people know absolutely nothing about.

If a piece of your electronic equipment breaks down, or if it needs servicing, be it a video camera or an electronic game, call Delta Electronics at 683-3582 or take the equipment to their service center at 1308 S. Midkiff St. Suite 303 and let them take a look.

Cliff Whittington, the owner of Clean Air Systems displays his new Allergy & Dustfighter filters. These filters will eliminate over 94% of all indoor pollutants and as the picture shows comes in a range of sizes. For more information about standard or custom filters call 520-9337

Year Round Allergy Relief From Clean Air Systems

Allergies are traditionally associated only with the hot, dusty days of summer, but unfortunately this is a common misconception.

Although they are normally at their worst during the summer months, allergies can be a serious problem all year round.

The changing seasons bring with them a change in our lifestyles and behavior, which in turn affects our exposure to the allergens which trigger allergic reactions.

Being outside more often during the summer exposes us to a lot of pollen and dust, but, as fall approaches we tend to spend more time inside where pet dandruff, mold and dust is reintroduced into the air that we breathe.

Constantly re-breathing air that is laden with allergens can prolong the effects of your summer allergies and heighten the effects of the changing allergens.

If one considers that approximately 15% of the population of the United States has an allergic reaction which requires repeated medical attention then it is easy to see how important it can be to eliminate these microscopic particles from your living areas.

Cliff Whittington, the owner of Clean Air Systems has developed a new type of filter that slips into your existing air conditioning system and removes over 94% of indoor pollutants from the air.

The Allergy & Dustfighter filter turns your air conditioning unit into a home sized air purification system. This not only keeps your air allergen free, but it also helps to keep maintenance costs down by reducing the need for expensive air duct cleaning.

The only maintenance required is a quick hose down once a month and then the filter slips back in place.

To combat odors as well as allergens, Whittington developed the ODOR-BAN pad which is a 200% added charcoal media that is based around the Allergy & Dustfighter filter. It has all the benefits of the original filter as well as reducing odors. Both of these filters are available in a wide range of standard sizes with custom sizes available. Help with installation is available free of charge.

The filters are currently being offered with a 10% discount for Extra Club members.

"The only people who need this product are those that breathe," said Cliff Whittington.

Call Clean Air Systems today at 520-9337 or stop by at 1308 S Midkiff. Midland, and breathe easier tommorrow

Dry Cleaning on the week end Comet Cleaners is open on Saturday until 5p.m.

Professional Dry Cleaning is now available on Saturdays at Comet Cleaners. For more information about their wide range of services stop by one of their three locations or call 689-9723

If your work schedule is too hectic Monday through Friday to allow you time to take care of your dry cleaning needs, Comet Cleaners has a handy solution.

Comet Cleaners dry cleans on Saturdays for your convenience: bring your clothes to any of the three Comet locations by 10a.m. Saturday and your clothes will be ready for collection at between 2 and 3p.m. that afternoon.

Comet Cleaners is committed to customer satisfaction and convenience. A great example of this philosophy are the store hours which are geared towards the special needs of busy working people.

The stores opening hours are: 7a.m. to 7p.m. Monday through Friday and 7a.m. until 5p.m. on Saturdays.

If Comet Cleaners has promised an article of clothing to a customer, they will not leave until the order has been done.

This level of commitment to their customers ensures that your clothes are ready when you want them.

You can depend on Comet Cleaners as have scores of Midlanders since owner Billie Jo Corbelle opened her first Comet Cleaners at 2606 N Midland Drive on the 3rd of September 1982.

That was the beginning of the famous 'Drop Your Pants' specials which are designed to save money and to give a chuckle or two.

Comet is still offering their well known specials: you can still have three pairs of pants professionally dry-cleaned for only $5.99; the same price that was offered when Comet first opened.

Comet Cleaners is West Texas owned and operated which means that the customer is helping to keep jobs and money in the Permian Basin. In addition, local people know what Midlanders want and require in a service. This helps to keep the level of services high, and prices down.

Special services currently offered by Comet Cleaners include:
a handy drive through service at each location,
- Three locations to serve Midland.
- Free minor alterations (on hems, zippers and minor mending).
- Major alterations and professional tailoring Monday through Friday.
- Hand Wash (professional finish),
- Leather and suede cleaning,
- Drapery.
- Mens and ladies pants; three pairs dry cleaned for only $5.99.
- Same day service (in before 9a.m. out by 5p.m).
- Membership of the International Fabric Care Institute.

For more information about Comet's full range of services drop by any one of the three locations in Midland: 3108 W. Cuthbert, 2606 N. Midland Drive (one hour service available at these two locations) and2106 N. A St, (package mailing, gift wrapping and UPS available at this location.)

Rockets trade

HOUSTON — The Houston Rockets released veteran guard Eric "Sleepy" Floyd on Monday and acquired swingman Mario Elie from the Portland Trail Blazers for a second-round draft pick in 1995.

Floyd, an 11-year veteran, was waived to create room under the NBA salary cap.

He averaged 11.5 points and 5.4 assists in six seasons with Houston. Last season, in 52 games, he averaged 6.6 points and 2.5 assists. His career scoring average is 14.2 points.

"We thank Sleepy for all he has done for the club over the years," general manager Steve Patterson said. "He always conducted himself in a professional manner. We wish him luck in his future endeavors."

Floyd, 33, has a million-dollar contract through next season that the Rockets are bound to honor.

Ivan returns

ARLINGTON — Texas Rangers catcher Ivan Rodriguez returned to the starting lineup Monday, making a fast recovery from Friday's surgery to repair a fractured left cheekbone.

Rodriguez was examined by Dr. James Harrington before the game against the Chicago White Sox and given clearance to play.

He suffered the injury when he was hit by Hubie Brooks' backswing during a game at Kansas City last Thursday.

Rodriguez, who started for the AL in the All-Star game, entered Monday's game with a streak of eight consecutive hits, tying the club record shared by Rico Carty and Oddibe McDowell.

To protect the injury, Rodriguez is wearing a catcher's mask with extra padding. Doctors have assured Rodriguez he is no danger of worsening the injury if hit by a foul tip.

Nickname change

WASHINGTON — The only native American in the U.S. Senate has introduced a bill that would prohibit the Washington Redskins from building their new stadium unless owner Jack Kent Cooke agrees to change the team's name.

"The name 'Redskins' is highly offensive to native Americans because it conjures up bad stereotypical images of Indians," said Sen. Ben Nighthorse Campbell, D-Colo.

"Since Mr. Cooke has steadfastly refused to change the name of the team and he wants to build his new stadium on federally controlled land, we want to have some say as to what conditions will be imposed on its tenants."

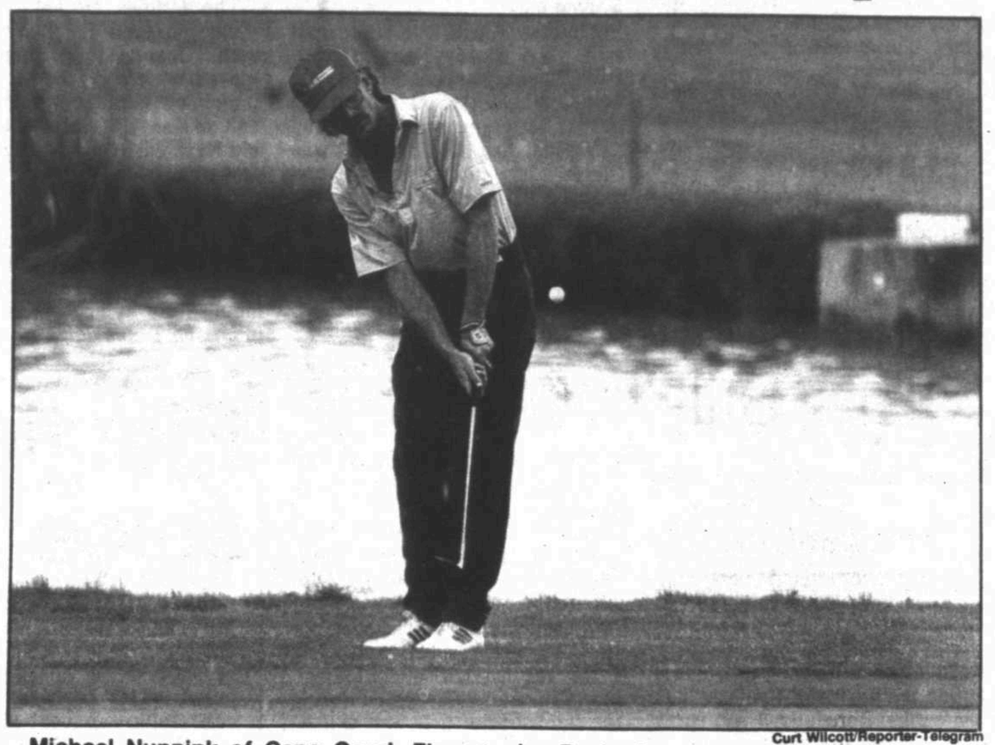

Cooke is negotiating to build a $205 million, 78,600-seat stadium on what is now a federally owned parking lot next to RFK Stadium, the Redskins' home since 1961. The talks have been stalled for about six months over what city officials say is the length of the lease.

RFK has the smallest seating capacity in the NFL and does not have luxury suites.

Just another qualifying day

From a spectators viewpoint, it was total insanity.

From a professional golfer's view, it was just another qualifying day on the Nike Tour.

There were 135 golfers trying for 18 qualifying spots and 10 alternate spots for this week's tournament.

The first group teed off at 8 a.m. the last group pulled their last balls out of the cup at 9:11 p.m. Throw in a 40-minute rain delay in mid-afternoon, playing in darkness the last two playoff holes and a friendly game of tag with the water sprinklers the last hole of play, and it makes for an interesting long distance call to the wife.

"It's this way every time you have a one day qualifying round," said Tommy Darling, head pro at The Club at Mission Dorado, the host site of this week's Nike Permian Basin Open.

"This was the first time to play in the dark — it was a great experience," said David Petry, who drove from Gulfport, Miss., to Odessa in 23 hours. "I went through San Antonio to drop off my wife and two kids. One of them wasn't feeling well and will have to go to the doctor this week. Then it was back in the car to Odessa. I left (Gulfport) at 6 p.m. Saturday and arrived in Odessa at 5 p.m. Sunday."

When the headlights had cleared, South Africa's Deane Pappas was standing atop the leader board with a sparkling 4-under 68 as 19 golfers shot under par on a day when conditions were ideal for the golfers.

"The course played pretty easy today," said Pappas, who will thrill the gallery this week with his monsterous drives off the tee box. "The

Teaff bids goodbye

By Denne H. Freeman
AP Sports Writer

WACO — Grant Teaff bid an emotional farewell to Baylor University after a 21-year association but he's not traveling far away.

Teaff, 59, accepted the executive directorship of the American College Football Association Monday effective in January and will move the headquarters from Orlando, Fla., to Waco.

"It was a very difficult decision," Teaff said. "My family had a deep emotional investment in Baylor University. We leave with a heavy heart because the university has been very good to us but we also leave with a big smile on our face."

Teaff will resign his athletic directorship effective Aug. 31 and Baylor was expected to give the job to Dick Ellis, currently the associate athletic director.

Teaff, the winningest football coach in Baylor history, handed over the head coaching job to assistant Chuck Reedy in January to become a fulltime athletic director.

"I'm very excited for Grant," Reedy said. "He'll do a great job. And I'll still have him around for some advice."

Teaff said, "I'll be at Floyd Casey

Thousands mourn Lewis

■ Family members, teammates and fans gathered at Northeastern University for Reggie Lewis' funeral.

By Rob Gloster
AP Sports Writer

BOSTON — "Reggie, We'll Always Love You!"

The large red sign, with white lettering, crowned the doors leading into the stifling college arena in which relatives, fans and teammates paid tribute to Reggie Lewis today.

Black bunting covered the Northeastern University crest on the outside of Matthews Arena, where Lewis starred for four years before going on to the Boston Celtics and where funeral services were scheduled.

An estimated 7,000 mourners filled the arena, fanning themselves against the heat. Men removed their suit jackets.

"Reggie enriched our lives, our city and our world," the Rev. Peter Gomes, minister of the Memorial Church at Harvard University, said in his eulogy.

"Let us show that in this city we can not only cheer a man on the courts, but also stand with him" in mourning, Gomes said.

Several hundred people had already gathered by 8 a.m. CDT, two hours before the viewing was to begin. They ranged from toddlers to grandmothers, some wearing Celtics or Northeastern basketball jerseys with Lewis' No. 35.

"He was just part of my life," Kenneth Catino, 22, said, shaking with emotion. He wore the No. 35 shaved into his

MHS, Lee to start grid practice

By Terry Williamson
Sports editor

On a cloudy Monday morning, Buster Barnes, Midland High assistant football coach, said, "There are some kids having some heavy duty prayer meetings today, asking that this cloud cover last at least through Wednesday."

Why Wednesday? Well, if you aren't familiar with the new University Interscholastic League rules, you don't know that two-a-day workouts begin Wednesday, a full month before the first game.

Both Midland Lee and MHS start the pre-season grind Wednesday, cloudy or not. Both schools are allowed the early starting date since neither had spring training. It's easy to see that the UIL is trying to make it attractive as possible for teams to give up spring training. Only Odessa Permian and Abilene Cooper had spring training drills this year.

"We will issue equipment at 8 a.m. and hold our first practice at 9 a.m.," Earl Miller, Lee head coach, said. "We can't issue equipment until Wednesday, but we will be on the field as soon as we get that done."

MHS coach Ronnie Reeger said, "We'll issue equipment between 7:30 and 8 a.m., hold a brief squad meeting and then get out there."

Both schools will also workout Wednesday afternoon from 4 to 6 p.m. Teams will be in shorts and shoes until Monday when both can don the full pads.

Both coaches like the earlier starting date.

"I've always felt like we needed more time in pads," Reeger said. "When I was playing, you needed time to break in your shoes. That's no longer a big problem, so I think giving more time in pads is a good idea.

"I'm looking forward to it, and I know the kids are. I just hope we can maintain that enthusiasm after a couple of weeks when everyone is hot, sweaty and tired."

Miller likes the earlier start because of the heat.

"We can take things a little slower and not work as long in each practice," Miller said. "With the heat we've been having, about two hours at a time is all you need to go and that's what we plan. The heat also develops mental toughness by the time district rolls around. But we realize we need to be careful."

Also under new UIL guidelines, teams that did not participate in spring training may have three scrimmages this year, one of which they may charge admission. Midland High has elected to have only two scrimmages in August while Lee will scrimmage all three times.

"Three scrimmages and three weeks of work before our first game is really going to help us," Miller said. "This gives us more opportunity to make changes.

The Bulldogs are set for a scrimmage against Roswell Goddard in Hobbs, N.M., on Friday, Aug. 20, tenatively set for 5:30 p.m. CDT. MHS will then host Big Spring on Friday, Aug. 27, at a time still to be determined.

Lee will meet El Paso Eastwood in Van Horn on Tuesday, Aug. 17, and will host the University of Chihuahua on Monday, Aug. 23, and will charge admission to help pay the expenses of the visitors from Mexico. The two teams played a regular season game two years ago at Memorial Stadium. Lee's final scrimmage will be Saturday, Aug. 28, against El Paso Jefferson in Alpine.

Johnson red over defeat

By Denne H. Freeman
AP Sports Writer

IRVING — Winning football games is Jimmy Johnson's life. So he can't even stomach a sloppy loss of a meaningless exhibition game in August.

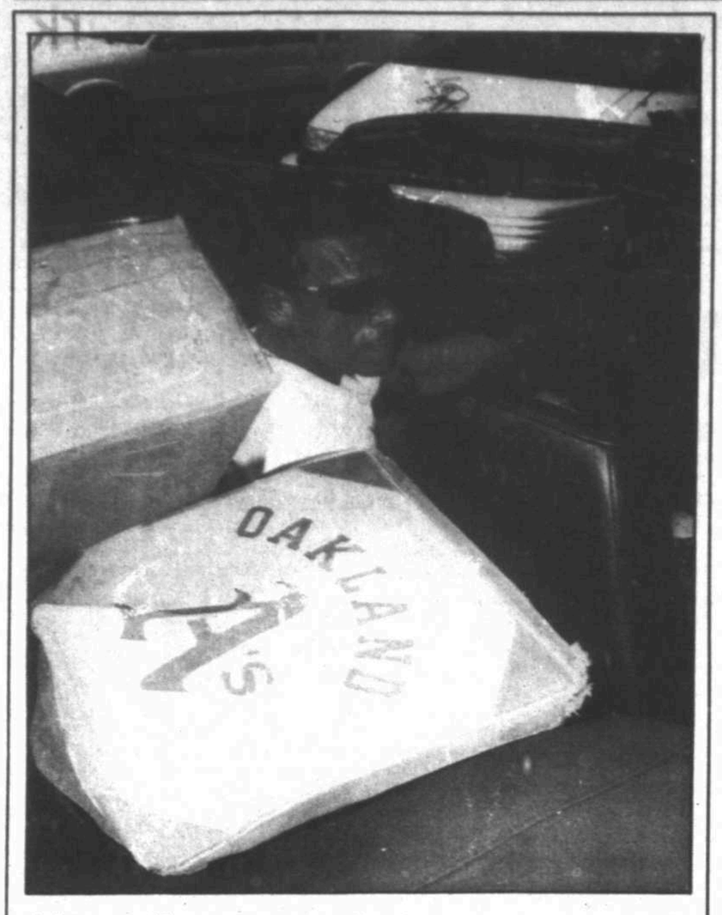

Johnson is already jittery about his defending Super Bowl champions although the first regular season game is still a month away and quarterback Troy Aikman and running back Emmitt Smith are out of action.

The Minnesota Vikings inflicted a 13-7 defeat on the sore and tired Dallas Cowboys Sunday night and Johnson acted like someone had stolen his $7,500 Super Bowl ring.

"It would be very easy to say we'll be fine when the season starts," said a red-faced Johnson, whose team left for London today for next Sunday's "American Bowl" game against the Detroit Lions.

White's two-run homer lifts Jays

NEW YORK — Devon White's two-run homer in the sixth inning broke up a scoreless pitching duel between Jim Abbott and Todd Stottlemyre and led Toronto to a 4-0 victory over New York Monday night.

■ AL Roundup

The victory gave Toronto a two-game lead over both New York and Boston in the AL East and dropped the Yankees into third place, one percentage point behind the idle Red Sox.

The Blue Jays have won eight of their last nine games, and 12 of their last 15.

Abbott (8-9) was working on a two-hitter when Pat Borders opened the Toronto sixth with a bunt single. Willie Canate sacrificed Borders to second and then White hit Abbott's first pitch off the left field foul pole for his 12th home run of the season.

In the ninth, Joe Carter sealed the victory with his 20th homer after Alfredo Griffin reached on an error. It was just the second home run in the last 28 games for Carter.

Stottlemyre (6-7) pitched seven innings, allowing eight hits. Danny Cox pitched the final two innings for his second save of the year.

Abbott allowed four runs — three earned — on seven hits in 8⅓ innings. He struck out six and walked none.

White, who will lose his leadoff spot when Rickey Henderson arrives Tuesday, opened the game with a single. Abbott retired the next 12 batters before John Olerud singled leading off the fifth. It was Olerud's lone hit of the game and dropped his batting average one point to .400.

Orioles 7, Brewers 5

BALTIMORE — Jeff Tackett, a late-inning replacement for injured catcher Chris Hoiles, singled home the go-ahead run in the seventh inning as Baltimore rallied to beat Milwaukee.

Sherman Obando and Jack Voigt homered for the Orioles, who were close to dropping their sixth game in the last seven before Tackett's hit capped a three-run seventh.

B.J. Surhoff homered, doubled twice and drove in four runs for the Brewers, who have lost five of six and 14 of 20.

The Orioles trailed 5-3 when Voigt homered to open the seventh. Obando then singled and moved to second when first baseman John Jaha threw wide to second on a sacrifice attempt by Harold Reynolds. One out later, Mike Devereaux beat out an infield hit to load the bases.

Rangers 9, White Sox 8

ARLINGTON — Pinch-runner Manuel Lee capped a hitless ninth-inning rally by scoring on a wild pitch and Texas defeated Chicago to stop the White Sox' six-game winning streak.

The Rangers, who scored five runs in the sixth inning on one hit, trimmed Chicago's lead in the AL West to 4½ games over Kansas City and 5½ over third-place Texas.

With one out, Jeff Schwarz (2-2) walked Julio Franco, and Lee came in to pinch run. Scott Radinsky then relieved and walked pinch hitter John Russell. Donn Pall replaced Radinsky and got Dean Palmer on a ground out to first base, moving the runners up. Pall's wild pitch, on a 1-1 count on Doug Strange, scored Lee.

Chicago had tied the score 8-8 in the ninth off Tom Henke (5-3). With one out, Bo Jackson struck out, but reached first on Geno Petralli's passed ball. Steve Sax, pinch-running for Jackson, scored from first on a double to right field by Lance Johnson.

NIKE: Still the bubble

wind will have a big say in the way the course will play. With the exceptions of that little storm that blew over this (Monday) afternoon, it was good conditions.

I've been playing pretty well the last few qualifiers, but not in the tournament. I think I have been hitting the ball pretty well the last few weeks. Hopefully, I can carry it over to the tournament."

After the last group had finished play, the next task at hand was determining the qualifiers and alternates. The cut was set at 2-over 74 for the playoff. Twelve golfers played for 11 spots on the automatic open spots for the tournament. Twenty golfers played for an alternate spot. Last year, approximately 20 alternates received berths in the tournament, according to tournament officials.

So a legion of golfers broke into four groups and scattered to four different tee boxes to begin a play-'till-dark, winner-take-all match play for the tournament spots.

The pecking order of players began to take shape as short putts lipped out. Midland College's Chad Campbell three putted on the third playoff hole to finish in the fourth alternate spot. Midland's Randy Kahn finished as the seventh alternate. Mission Dorado assistant pro Chris Carpenter finished in the eighth alternate spot.

"By what people have been saying, I feel real good about making the tournament," said Campbell following the nine-hour golf marathon.

Four Midlanders appear to have a lock on playing in the PBO. Larry Bryan fired a 1-under 71 to automatically earn an open spot. Campbell and Kahn fired even-par 72, Carpenter a 1-over 73.

"It was not too tough today," said Campbell, who bogied during the third playoff hole and will be the fourth alternate for the tournament. "The course was softer than when I played here during the school semester, although the rough was a lot harder to play. I haven't played this course that much since school was out, but I played it about once a week during school.

Here are the results from the qualifying round of the Nike Permian Basin open begin played at The Club of Mission Dorado Friday-Sunday.

68 (4-under)— Deane Pappas

70 (2-under)— Steve Alexander, Steve Kelly, Troy Manning, Lance Posey, Bob Ralston.

72 (even)— *Chad Campbell, *Randy Kahn, Ryan Murphy, David Petry, Robert Fischer, Clark Dennis.

73 (1-over)— Marlin Board, Mike Petrovich, *Chris Carpenter.

74 (2-over)— Jeffery Beal, Gary Mahanay, Bart Duncan, Ronnie Fletcher, Shawn Haberstroll, Brooks Klein, Shawn Savage, Richard Horn, Jerry Wilton.

Other Midland scores: 76—Charles Killinen, 77—Leon VanRensburg, 78—Mike Stanfield, Richard Ashton, 80—Ron Hinds, 82—Rick Gasser, Derek Edmonds, 84—Mitch Spence.

Ejections, brawl spice Cubs win

CHICAGO — Steve Buechele broke an 8-8 tie with one of seven homers in a game spiced by brushbacks, a bench-clearing brawl and six ejections, and Chicago rallied to beat slumping Pittsburgh 12-10 Monday.

Carlos Garcia homered twice for the Pirates — who lost their third straight game and eighth in 10 — and was the focal point of brushback pitches that resulted in the sixth-inning brawl. It started when Pittsburgh's Blas Minor (6-5) threw at Mark Grace after Bob Scanlan (3-5) hit Garcia in the top of the inning.

Reds 6, Rockies 2

CINCINNATI — Colorado lost its franchise-record eighth straight game as Cincinnati rode Tim Pugh's complete game and Joe Oliver's three-run homer to a 6-2 victory Monday night.

Pugh (7-10) limited the Rockies' struggling lineup to nine singles — three by Dante Bichette — before Vinny Castilla hit a two-run homer with two out in the ninth. Pugh didn't walk a batter until the ninth, and struck out six.

Mets 4, Expos 3

MONTREAL — Bret Saberhagen outpitched Ken Hill to win his fourth straight decision, and Tim Bogar drove in three runs as New York beat Montreal.

Saberhagen (7-7) allowed three hits in eight innings, giving way to John Franco, who got his eighth save. After allowing a first-inning leadoff triple to Delino DeShields, Saberhagen set down 15 of the next 16 batters.

Hill (7-3), whose 2.77 earned run average is fifth in the National League, was no match for Saberhagen. The Mets got 10 hits and two walks, chasing Hill after 5⅓ innings.

Cardinals 5, Marlins 3

ST. LOUIS — Brian Jordan and Rod Brewer supplied the offense for Bob Tewksbury, and St. Louis Cardinals beat Florida Marlins.

Jordan had a triple and a double and scored two runs, and Brewer drove in two.

Tewksbury (11-7) allowed two runs on 12 hits with two walks and one strikeout in seven innings.

RED: 'Pokes sloppy

(From 1C)

"We need a sense of urgency on this team. It will be difficult to correct in next week's practices but it WILL be corrected when we get back to Austin."

What Johnson wants to correct is five turnovers, three lost fumbles and two interceptions that kept the Cowboys from mounting any serious offense. However, the Cowboys will get only two days of hard work in London.

Johnson didn't make any excuses for his dog-tired team which had three days of scrimmages against the Los Angeles Raiders and a scrimmage with the Houston Oilers just before they played the Vikings.

"I saw a team that has a lot of holes to fill," Johnson said. "I don't want to be an alarmist but everybody seems to be extremely happy to wear their Super Bowl rings. There's 27 teams out there waiting to take those rings."

Considering Smith is holding out in Florida and Aikman is recovering from back surgery, Johnson's outburst seemed to be overkill this early in the season.

"This is the first game of the pre-season and we've already got people panicking," said linebacker Ken Norton.

Rookie wide receiver Kevin Williams said Johnson was livid in the dressing room after the game.

"The coach was at least a level two on a three-point scale," Williams said.

Hugh Millen had a bad night as Aikman's replacement. He served up two interceptions and was sacked three times. Millen, who came to the Cowboys as a free agent from New England, seemed to have problems whenever the Vikings blitzed.

The Cowboys lost one of their up-and-coming defensive stars when safety Darren Woodson suffered a fracture of his right forearm.

Lesbian reputation of team hurt Lady Longhorn hoops recruiting

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Lady Longhorns basketball team, which spent much of last season ranked in The Associated Press Top 20, often has difficulty recruiting because the program has been rumored to be a haven for lesbians, according to a published report.

The Austin American-Statesman reported in a copyright story in Tuesday's editions that many players and recruits, including Texas Tech star Sheryl Swoopes, have backed out of the program because of the Lady Longhorns' reputation.

Swoopes, the MVP of the NCAA national championship game won by Texas Tech, had signed with the Lady Longhorns and was living on campus when she abruptly quit school and went home.

It was reported at the time that she was homesick and thought she'd be more comfortable on a smaller campus.

But her mother, Louise Swoopes, recently told the American-Statesman that her daughter came home partly because she was bothered by the presence of lesbians on the basketball team.

She said that two lesbian players had made a sexual advance toward her daughter.

Lady Longhorn basketball coach Jody Conradt said she had no knowledge of that incident.

Conradt does not acknowledge the lesbian label, saying simply that the university has a policy not to discriminate against anyone because of sexual orientation.

"The best team I ever had had diversity," Conradt said. "When our society learns to embrace diversity, we'll be a lot better society."

Cinietra Henderson, a Texas center who completed her eligibility last season, said she doesn't think the program promotes itself as lesbian-oriented.

"But it does have a reputation as a gay team," Henderson said.

Pat Luckey, a USA Today first-team All-America forward from San Marcos, said she decided against Texas partly because of the program's reputation. She was also recruited by Houston, and ended up signing with the Lady Cougars.

"I know a lot of girls ruled out Texas for the same exact reason," Luckey said. "That was a real big factor with me. ... I wouldn't fit in because I don't like girls."

Conradt, the winningest coach in the history of women's college basketball with a 620-153 record and one national championship, said the issue of lesbian athletes does come up during recruiting visits, but she has never heard a recruit reject UT because of it.

She said the question "is not given any more significance than any of the other ones that come up during recruiting."

Granbury High School coach Leta Andrews, who had two daughters play at Texas and a third work as a student assistant coach, has heard the same rumors about the UT program.

"I have heard people mention that," said Andrews, who has coached 31 years and won 857 games and a state championship. She said her daughters have nothing but praise for the UT staff.

Highly recruited basketball player Jody Holcomb said she was aware of Texas' reputation when she was recruited out of Waco Midway.

"Especially when I signed with Texas," she said. "People were saying, 'They're a bunch of dykes up there.'"

At least two of the eight basketball players who have left Texas in the past four years have said the presence of lesbians on the team contributed to their decision to leave.

"That played a part, yes," one former player said of the lesbian tag at Texas. "Probably everybody left for that reason. I would say a majority did."

Courtney Canavan, who left the Texas program after two years but remained in school, said the lesbian issue had nothing to do with her decision.

"I didn't have a problem with it," said Canavan. "I kind of kept to myself. Their business is their business. None of it was forced on me."

TEAFF: Tough decision to leave

Stadium for the opener (against Fresno State) but I may be in a balloon over it. I don't think I could handle sitting in the stands.

"I'll miss being on the sidelines during football season. However, I told Chuck I won't miss two-a-days (practices)."

Teaff replaced Charley McClendon, who will step down from his position on Jan. 1, 1994.

Teaff committed to the AFCA for 10 years.

"I told 'em I'd do it in five-year increments," Teaff said. "I'll go five years and see how I feel.

"I do have a uniqueness for the job. It goes back to the fact that I've coached at every level. I've been a head coach in Division III. And I've coached in Division 1-A."

Teaff had a record of 128-105-6 and his teams were 4-4 in bowl appearances. Teaff took Baylor to the Cotton Bowl twice only to lose.

Only three other coaches, Darrell Royal, Frank Broyles, and Jess Neely have won more games in the Southwest Conference than Teaff, who became Baylor head coach on Dec. 23, 1971.

In a taped message, Baylor president Herbert Reynolds thanked Teaff for his "loyalty."

Teaff had numerous offers to leave Baylor and came closest to going when he received a big bid from Southern California.

"One of the reasons I decided to stay at Baylor was because I treasured the family environment," Teaff said. "I'm leaving some great memories."

Teaff has been chairman of the AFCA ethics and rules committees.

He said the AFCA faced some great challenges.

"There's a move to cut scholarships and other restraints have been threatened," Teaff said "I intend to lead the fight for the things we believe. The future is scary."

Musset ties save mark

Staff report

SAN ANTONIO — The Midland Angels rose from the land of the dead in the ninth inning here Monday night to take a 5-2 Texas League victory over the San Antonio Missions and give Jose Musset a chance to tie a new Angels' saves record.

Midland scored four runs in the top of the ninth after going into the inning trailing 2-1. Jorge Fabregas keyed the uprising with a bases loaded, two-run single over third base. Brian Grebeck later had a run scoring double and Emmitt Cohick had an RBI single to polish off the rally.

Then Midland reliever Jose Musset came on in the bottom of the ninth with one out and a runner on to record his 20th save, tying the 1987 franchise single season saves record of Bryan Harvey, who now is the relief ace of the Florida Marlins. Musset did walk one batter and hit another, but had a strikeout to end the game with the bases loaded.

Midland's Mark Ratekin, making his first start for the Angels, pitched into the ninth for his first victory.

Midland has now won 12 of its last 14 games.

Midland has two more games with San Antonio before returning to Angels Stadium Thursday for 10 games in 11 days against third place Wichita and first place El Paso. The outcome of the homestand will probably determine the Angels' Texas League playoff fate.

LEWIS: Lots of friends

hair.

Police estimated the size of the crowd at 10,000.

"He was friends to a lot of people who didn't even know him," said one mourner, Anthony Petteway.

A 10-foot floral arrangement of green and white flowers stood at the front of the arena, bearing the message: "All our love, the Celtics family."

A spotlight was trained on Lewis' jersey hanging in the rafters.

"I wanted to be right in front, wanted to be first," said Kerri-Lyn Moody, 15, who had waited in line since about 5 a.m. "I just wanted to be here."

"It's so confusing to me," she said. "I don't know why it happened, why he had to die."

Jai Wray, 15, came from West Palm Beach, Fla., to stay with relatives in Boston and attend the service. A freshman on his high school basketball team, he stood quietly in a blue suit.

"I like the Celtics and certain players on the Celtics stand out from others," Wray said. "He was going to be the next leader."

One elderly mourner collapsed from the heat at 9 a.m. He recovered after being treated by a team of paramedics.

A private service was held Sunday night at a funeral home in the city's Roxbury section for the Lewis family and close friends of the Celtics captain. Many others planned to be at today's service at Matthews Arena.

Northeastern officials spent the weekend fitting as many chairs as possible into the 83-year-old facility, but still expected an overflow crowd.

"We hope that we have a crowd problem," Keith Motley, dean of student services and associate head coach at Northeastern, said Sunday. "That would be an outstanding tribute to Reggie."

Motley called on fans to line the streets of the motorcade taking Lewis to Forest Hills Cemetery in south Boston, a 4.7-mile trip. Among the people buried at the cemetery are playwright Eugene O'Neill, poet e e cummings and abolitionist Edward Everett Hale.

Lewis got differing diagnoses, with some doctors saying he had a dangerous heart ailment and others saying he had a minor nerve disorder and "a normal athlete's heart."

His death came one week before Lewis was scheduled to go to his hometown of Baltimore to begin workouts supervised by a cardiologist. His wife, Donna Harris Lewis, said in a statement Thursday that Lewis did not play any strenuous basketball since April 29, but some students have said that he had.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

TUESDAY, AUGUST 3, 1993

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: You will find answers that make you feel more content. Career progress accelerates. Fresh financial gains give you greater freedom. You make an excellent personal decision as Christmas approaches. Family members applaud. A monetary or business problem is not as bad as it first appeared. Ask your siblings or close friends for their support. A bold move will pay off in favorable publicity.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: singer Tony Bennett, actress Dolores Del Rio, author Martha Stewart, actor Martin Sheen.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You can regain peace of mind by resolving a conflict with a neighbor. Do it. Extensive research will help you overcome a work problem, setting the stage for a bonus or raise.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): There may be a better way to handle your money. Take enough time to do a project right. A romantic interlude has you rethinking your ideas about commitment. Know your own heart.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): The longer you wait to act or speak your mind, the harder it will be to change a business decision. Give family members the benefit of the doubt. A trip is best postponed.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): By paying keen attention to detail now, you will prevent a misunderstanding with a lover, partner or pal. Take nothing for granted. Your social life is on the upswing.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): The cooperation and recognition you seek may seem non-existent today. Not true — a partner is eager to help, needing only an encouraging word from you. The financial outlook brightens.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A reunion with friends from the past could take you far from home. Keep an open mind; you could spot a great area for future growth. Be more mindful of other people's needs.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You now are in a position of power; business dealings with VIPs could spell prosperity. Travel links you to important sources of knowledge and money.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): The future takes on a rosy glow when newly uncovered information puts you in the know. It may be time to tie the knot, to win your romantic jackpot! Make the first move.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): The forecast is sunny for travel, romance and entertainment. Your wit and creativity make a wonderful impression on newcomers. Do not get swept away by an emotional undertow at work.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Do not push too hard or judge others harshly today. Lighten up. Emphasize teamwork and cultivate camaraderie. When work and friendship merge, all is well.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Be careful not to overlook or underrate anyone today. Luck, love and distant matters combine to make your expectations more divine. Accentuate emotional calm to avoid emotional confrontations.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A reserved, dignified approach helps you achieve success now. More rest and relaxation keep you mentally alert. A change in a relationship eventually will work to your advantage.

TODAY'S CHILDREN are loving, family-oriented and eager to do right. Although these Leos are ambitious, they will also lend a helping hand to others trying to get ahead. They enjoy healthy competition but will not compromise their principles in order to win. So long as these Leos receive the attention and affection they feel is their due, everything will go smoothly. Ignore them, however, and they can turn obstructive.

The bidding:

West	North	East	South
Pass	Pass	Pass	1 ♠
Pass	2 ♠	Pass	4 ♠
Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: King of ♢

Some hidden chances are easy to spot. Others require extensive excavation. On this hand there are actually two additional possibilities. Can you uncover both? Which is the better of the two?

The auction is routine. All that remains is for you to deliver 10 tricks after West leads the king of diamonds and shifts to a trump.

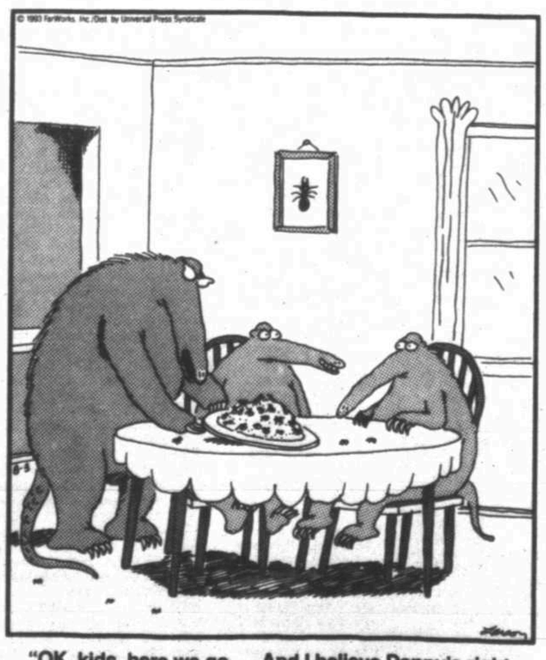

Without the spade shift, you could have ruffed two hearts in dummy. Unfortunately, you have no quick entry to your hand, so if you go for the ruffs, the defenders can thwart you by winning whichever minor-suit trick you elect to surrender to prepare for a re-entry to hand and then returning a trump. That will strand you with a heart loser in addition to the three obvious minor-suit losers.

Have you recognized the extra chances? One is to find a defender with ace-king of clubs bare; the other is to find East with specifically J 10 x of diamonds. There are only two combinations of A K in either defender's hand; there are three permutations of J 10 x in East's hand.

When this hand was played in the Australian National Women's Teams, Barbara Travis won the trump switch in dummy and led a diamond to the ten, queen and ace. The trump return was again won on the table and a diamond ruff fetched the jack from East. It was a simple matter to ruff a heart in dummy and discard the other heart on the nine of diamonds to avert a second heart loser. Making four-odd.

Family now comes first for Who's singer-guitarist Pete Townshend

LOS ANGELES — Family now comes first for singer-guitarist Pete Townshend.

"I'm far more interested in holding my family together and bringing up decent kids with principles than in being a rock star," he said before a recent performance of his "PsychoDerelict" rock soap opera. "As long as I can hang onto that, I think I'm a worthy member of society."

Townshend, who rose to fame smashing guitars with The Who rock band, lives outside London with his wife and 3½-year-old son, Joseph. He has been meeting with singer Roger Daltrey to discuss bringing out a box set of The Who material for a 30th anniversary collection in 1994.

Townshend spoke frankly about The Who's wild-man drummer, Keith Moon, who died of an overdose of medication in 1978.

"I have less sympathy for the life he represents now than I ever did," he said. "He was a nihilistic clown, a brilliant example of the tragedy behind the clown. If he thought it would make you laugh, he would pour petrol all over himself and set himself on fire."

WINDSOR, N.H. — Bianca Jagger accompanied an 8-year-old Bosnian boy to a summer camp where he will finish his recovery from heart surgery.

Jagger

Mohamud Ribic stayed close to Jagger when he arrived Sunday at the Interlocken International Summer Camp. Her intervention brought his evacuation in May from the besieged town of Tuzla in Bosnia.

Other campers greeted the boy with songs and smiles. "We're trying to make him feel as welcome as possible," said Liza Zapol, 14, of Concord, Mass.

Later, Ribic tried out some of his few words of English.

"Hi! My name is Mohamud," he said to one girl.

Ribic was dying of congenital heart failure before surgeons in New York patched a hole in his heart. He stayed afterward with Jagger, a former model who is the ex-wife of Rolling Stones rocker Mick Jagger.

She said she hopes to return Ribic to his mother in a month or so, when surgeons feel he is up to it.

HONG KONG — Madonna wants to take her act to China.

"Madonna is very interested in playing in China," her New York-based publicist, Liz Rosenberg, said Monday. "It's an ongoing request that her manager is trying to arrange."

But she disputed a report in the China-funded Wen Wei Po newspaper that said the pop singer wanted to go to China to support Beijing's bid for the 2000 Olympics.

"I don't know if Madonna has any opinion about the Olympics," she said.

According to the newspaper, Li Juan, anchorwoman for Chinese state-run television, said Madonna's management contacted her to discuss concert possibilities and asked her to go to Hollywood to meet the singer.

"Madonna indicated that she is very keen to go to China to perform and support Beijing's bid for the 2000 Olympics," Li said.

Li said Chinese officials were seriously considering Madonna's wish to perform because "she indicated that she would respect and accept conditions and demands laid down by the Chinese side," the newspaper said.

Beijing disregarded earlier requests from Madonna to play in China because her shows were considered too revealing, Li told the news agency.

Madonna begins a world concert tour Sept. 25 in London, Ms. Rosenberg said.

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. — Jack Lemmon and other wealthy denizens of Beverly Hills are up in arms over a neighbor who has big plans for a house — an 18-bedroom estate larger than a football field.

London financier Robert Manoukian wants to build the 46,000-square-foot house, and he's already won approval from the city's planning commission.

Lemmon and his neighbors have banded together as Citizens for the Preservation of Beverly Hills to call for stricter regulations that would effectively stop the house from being built. The City Council has scheduled public hearings for Tuesday and Wednesday.

The issue isn't just "a case of the fat cats being mad at a fatter cat," said Lemmon, whose 6,000-square-foot house is next to Manoukian's property.

"When I moved into Beverly Hills over 30 years ago, I thought this is one of the most beautiful, small towns that I've ever been in in my life, including Europe. It has done nothing but become uglier and uglier, thanks to the government of Beverly Hills."

A lawyer for Manoukian said he expected the project would be approved.

The city has several other large homes, including the 46,000-square-foot Greystone Mansion that now is a city park, and the 35,000-square-foot villa of actress-singer Pia Zadora and her husband on what was the Pickfair estate of Douglas Fairbanks and Mary Pickford.

Prices gain

NEW YORK — Oil prices finished higher in light trading on Monday after an explosion at the nation's second-largest refinery pushed prices for gasoline and home heating oil higher.

Only a small portion of Exxon's 455,000 barrel per day refinery in Baton Rouge, La., was disabled by the explosion and fire. But news early in the day of a possible disruption to supplies of refined products gave energy prices a modest boost from their lows of the session.

Prices wandered after news of the early-morning explosion was spread by news services at about 10:30 a.m.

West Texas Intermediate for September delivery settled at $17.97 per barrel, up 9 cents at the New York Mercantile Exchange.

Natural gas prices were lower, with contracts for delivery in September settling at $2.216 per 1,000 cubic feet, down 0.4 cent.

Business seminar

"Growing Your Business With a Plan" will be offered Thursday at the Center for Energy and Economic Diversification, Highway 191 and FM 1788, from 1 to 5 p.m.

The seminar will examine the value of developing a business plan and what elements such a plan should include.

The seminar is sponsored by the Small Business Development Center of the University of Texas of the Permian Basin, along with Midland College, Odessa College, Howard College and the Chambers of Commerce for Midland, Odessa and Big Spring.

Fee is $20 per person and reservations can be made by calling 567-5502.

Dollar falls

NEW YORK — The dollar tumbled Monday against the Japanese yen and German mark after the European currency crisis eased and the greenback's lure as a "safe haven" declined.

The dollar hit a new postwar record low against the yen in New York. It was quoted at 104.37 yen in late trading, down from 104.70 Friday — the previous record low.

The British pound was quoted in late New York trading at $1.5020, more expensive than $1.4830 on Friday.

Stocks rally

NEW YORK — Stocks rallied Monday amid hopes that measures taken by European finance ministers to restore calm to the currency markets there will bring lower interest rates to the recession-bound nations.

The Dow Jones industrial average rose 21.52 points to 3,560.99.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines by about 3 to 2 on the New York Stock Exchange.

June construction spending rises

Analysts: 1.2 percent increase is offset by weak residential sector

WASHINGTON (AP) — Spending on construction projects jumped 1.2 percent in June, the best showing this year, but analysts said the all-important residential sector was still not responding as it should to the lowest interest rates in two decades.

The Commerce Department report Monday showed that spending on all types of construction rose to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of $460.1 billion, an increase of $5.5 billion over the May level.

The advance was led by the biggest increase in government spending in more than a year, a gain of 3.6 percent. That reflected a huge 9.3 percent rise in outlays for highways and streets.

Private construction was up as well, reflecting strength in the residential sector, but by a much more modest 0.3 percent.

The overall increase was the biggest since a 1.3 percent rise last December. Spending rose 1.1 percent in May after posting two months of weak showings.

The Clinton administration is counting on strength in such interest-sensitive sectors of the economy as construction to offset the economic drag from the higher taxes and cutbacks in government spending that are part of its huge deficit reduction plan.

But economists said they have been disappointed that single-family construction has not picked up more than it has, given interest rates that are at their lowest level since the early 1970s.

In June, residential construction advanced 0.9 percent with single-family construction up 0.5 percent and multifamily building rising 2.9 percent.

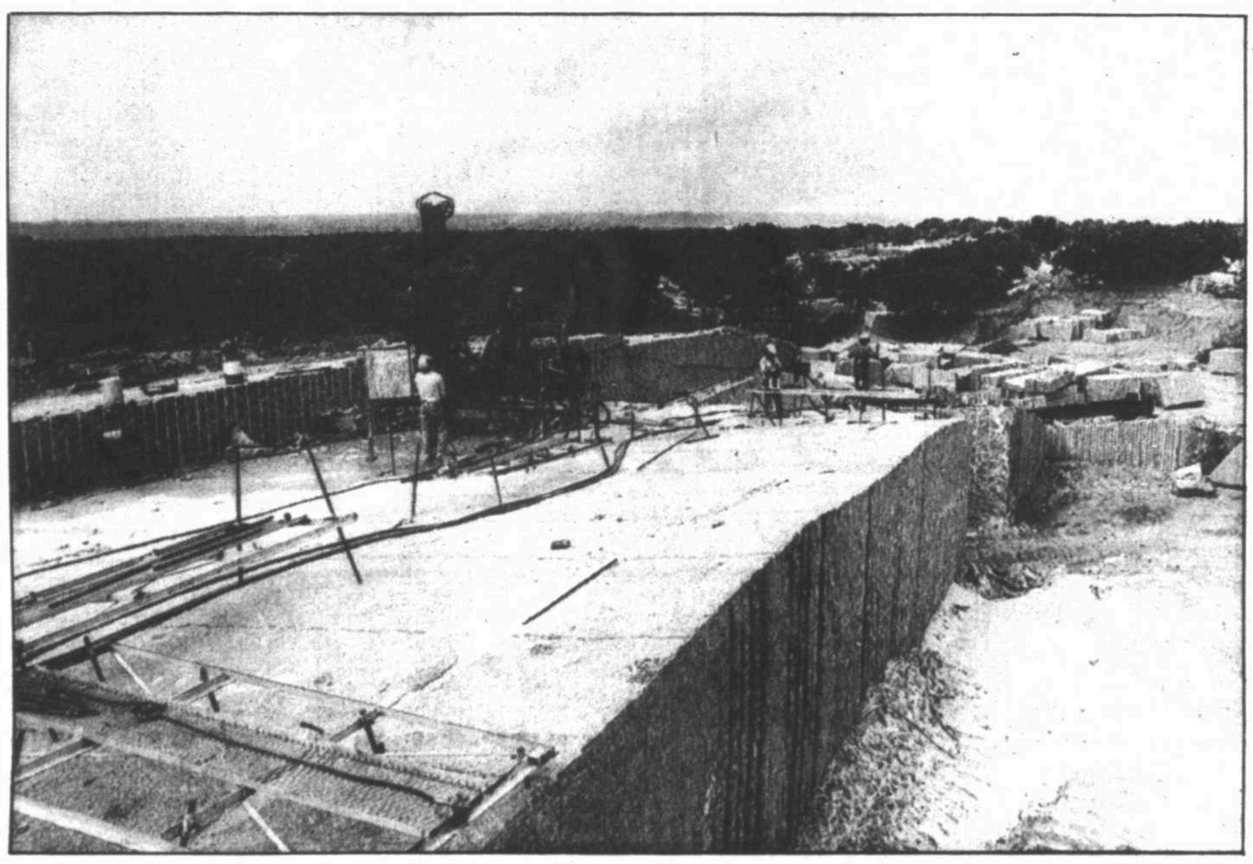

Analysts said the gain in apartment building was from a very low base and was not likely to be sustained given continued high vacancy rates. They said single-family home starts will have to improve significantly if forecasts of a pickup in economic activity in the second half are to come true.

So far this year, the overall economy, as measured by the gross domestic product, has risen at disappointing rates of 0.7 percent in the first three months of the year and 1.6 percent in the just-completed April-June quarter. The Clinton administration and many private analysts are counting on growth of more than double the 1.6 percent rate in the second half of this year.

"We've got to get better housing starts for something to happen in the second half," said Lawrence Meyer, head of a St. Louis economic consulting firm. "I am still hopeful that the low interest rates and continued modest improvement in employment will lead to steady improvement in housing and that we will see stronger residential construction in the second half."

David Wyss, an economist at DRI-McGraw Hill Inc. in Lexington, Mass., said that the Midwest floods should eventually add to construction spending as flood-damaged structures are replaced, but that the floods will likely depress activity until things are dry enough for rebuilding to begin.

The 3.6 percent increase in public construction lifted that category to an annual spending rate of $125.6 billion. It was the biggest one-month increase since a 4.8 percent rise in May 1992 and was led by a 9.3 percent rise in spending on highways and streets.

For more than 100 years, granite has been taken from exepnsive quarries in the vicinity of Marble Falls.

Many workers were laid off between 1985 and 1992, but an investment in new equipment is paying off.

Misnamed Marble Falls offers much granite

By Zeke MacCormack
Associated Press writer

MARBLE FALLS — There's no marble in Marble Falls, and there are no falls either, but there is plenty of granite around the Burnet County community.

For more than 100 years, the igneous rock has been drilled, blasted and hoisted from the area's expansive quarries.

"Sunset red" granite was mined here for the Texas Capitol in 1885, when convict laborers were used to cut and ship the 15,700 carlo ds of stone to Austin on a specially built railroad line.

Huge chunks of discarded granite line Farm Road 1431 between Marble Falls and Granite Shoals, and derricks once used to lift the rock pierce the sky.

Granite industry jobs were coveted by area residents in the 1950s, said Richard Wright, who spent 34 years in the quarries before retiring in 1991.

"Back then, there weren't many good jobs around. I was just glad to get something to eat," said Wright, 64, who began working for $1.25 an hour as a crane operator.

"I'd pick up 90- or 100-ton blocks and set them out so they could take them over to the plant to saw them up," he said.

"It was a lot harder back then than it is now," he said, noting fork lifts now carry the stones instead of cranes, and an explosive device called a primer cord has replaced the wedges and black powder used to break the rock.

More recent changes have helped the Texas Granite Corp., once the county's largest employer with 400 workers, cope with increasing competitiveness in the granite industry.

About 225 workers were laid off between 1985 and 1992 as business soured, but about $10 million was invested in new equipment by Cold Spring Granite Co. of Minn., Texas Granite's parent company.

New saws can cut granite veneer as thin as 1¼ inches, and new polishing equipment puts a bright finish on the sheets of stone that make it more marketable.

Transit mixes area, Bryan firms' assets

Staff report

BEAUMONT — Transit Mix Concrete & Materials Co. announced the acquisition of certain assets of South Texas Construction Co., headquartered in Midland.

Transit, headquartered in Beaumont and a subsidiary of Trinity Industries Inc., also acquired certain assets of Bernath Concrete Products and Brazos Valley Lumber, headquartered in Bryan.

South Texas Construction, Bernath Concrete and Brazos Valley Lumber will operate as part of the Transit Mix division. Transit operates facilities throughout Texas.

Mark Stiles, president of Transit, said "We are extremely excited about these acquistions and the opportunity to join these communities. The addition will expand the scope of Transmit Mix beyond the southeast and central Texas regions to markets across the state.

"We will actively seek the cooperation, encouragement and leadership of local civic and business leaders so we may become a good corporate citizen of these communities and have a positive impact on the area's economy," he said.

South Texas Construction provides site work, asphalt paving, asphalt patching and concrete work-curbs, sidewalks, etc. The company also serves as a supplier of base materials, limestone aggregate and hot mix. John W. Campbell will be manager of South Texas Construction Co.

Bernath has ready-mix concrete plants in Bryan, College Station, Hearn, Madisonville, Caldwell and Huntsville. R.L. Smith will serve as manager of the Bernath facilities. Brazos Valley Lumber supplies lumber and construction materials to the Bryan-College Station area.

Trinity Industries — parent of Transit Mix — is headquartered in Dallas and manufactures and markets a wide variety of products, principally in six business segments: railcars, marine products, construction products, metal components, containers and leasing.

Federal agency securities pay higher interest

By Bill Doyle

Q: My husband and I are in our late 60s and retired. We have $150,000 in certificates of deposit. As the interest on CDs is so low, a friend suggests we could get a little more income from federal agency securities.

We know nothing about such securities. What are they? Is there any risk involved? Are CDs better for us?

Doyle

Q: Your friend was talking about debt securities, such as bonds and notes, issued by agencies that are either part of our federal government or have congressional charters.

Some are backed by the full faith and credit of our federal government, but most are not. There is virtually no risk in any of them, if they are held to maturity. No federal agency has ever defaulted on its debt obligations. It's unthinkable that any ever will.

Rather than risk, federal agency securities are more accurately thought of as having a high degree of safety. However, because they are not direct obligations of the U.S. government, they pay somewhat higher interest. Not a great deal higher. But higher, nonetheless.

Your friend is correct. You can get a bit more income from many of those federal agency securities than is available from CDs with similar maturities. As with all securities paying fixed interest, the longer the maturity, the higher the interest.

Although there is no risk of loss if federal agency securities are held to maturity, there is "market risk." If you buy one of those securities and sell it before its maturity date, you might get less than the price you paid.

Q: How often do federal agency securities pay interest? What is the smallest amount in which they can be purchased? Where can I buy them?

Most "agencies," as they are called in the world of finance, pay interest semiannually. However, mortgage pass-through securities of the Government National Mortgage Association, the Federal National Mortgage Association and the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corp. all pay interest monthly.

Minimum denominations vary from $1,000 to $25,000, but most are $5,000.

You can buy "agencies" through almost all securities brokerage firms and many banks.

Q: My newspaper carried the enclosed story about U.S. Treasury bills. It gives the discount rate on three-month and six-month bills. Then it gives the yield on one-year bills, which is higher. I don't think this reporting is fair. Right?

A: Wrong! You're doing worse than mixing apples and oranges.

The clipping you sent along reported on two different items.

First, it gave the results of the latest auction of three-month and six-month T-bills — which takes place every Monday. In that auction, the average discounts were 3.07 percent on three-month bills and 3.14 percent on six-month bills.

Second, as is clearly stated in that news story, "in a separate report, the Federal Reserve said the average yield for one-year Treasury bills, the most popular index for making changes in adjustable-rate mortgages, rose to 3.61 percent last week."

The first part of that article told readers what happened at the weekly auction of three-month and six-month T-bills. The second part provided important information for homeowners whose mortgage interest rates are keyed to the average one-year T-bill yield.

Q: Is it true that the yield on a T-bill always is higher than the bill's discount rate?

A: Yes. Every T-bill is issued at a price below its face value — the price at which it is redeemed when it matures. The difference between the two prices is the discount.

The amount of the discount, as a percentage of the purchase price, is the yield. Some reasonably complicated mathematics shows the yield always is higher than the discount.

Kennedy book is mix of fact, fiction what lies between

By Rick Hampson
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK — When he set out to answer the question, "What's it like to be Teddy Kennedy?" Joe McGinniss employed a writer's usual tools: library research, personal interviews, general legwork.

But since the Massachusetts senator wouldn't talk to him in any depth, and since the inner Kennedy was "encrusted by fable and lore," McGinniss says he had to resort to other devices: inference, rumination, speculation.

The result is "The Last Brother," a blend of fact, fiction and whatever lies between. In one scene, as a despondent Kennedy walks the beach with his sister shortly after his brother John's assassination in 1963, McGinniss writes:

"Suppose — not that there is any evidence he considered this — he suddenly just veered left, away from his sister, and plunged, fully clothed, into the roiling, frigid waters of Nantucket Bay? Just swam out into the mist until exhausted?"

The critics are not amused.

—"A genuinely, unrelievedly rotten book, one without a single redeeming virtue ... the worst book I have reviewed in nearly three decades." Jonathan Yardley, Washington Post.

—"The world's most slowly executed book report." Priscilla Painton, Time.

—"The book isn't bad; it's awful." Christopher Lehmann-Haupt, New York Times.

McGinniss, a reliable producer of well-received best-sellers since publication of "The Selling of the President 1968," expresses surprise.

"Somehow, I struck a nerve," he said in an interview, "and the nerve is striking back."

Critics say, variously, that the book is unoriginal, or all too original, and was done for a fast buck (a reported advance of $1 million, plus revenue from an NBC miniseries).

McGinniss did incorporate masses of previously published material, without benefit of footnotes or source notes. And although he says he did scores of interviews, relatively little of the material gathered therein appears in the book.

What distinguishes McGinniss from his predecessors is his attribution of thoughts — internal monologue — to characters he never even interviewed, often but not always qualified by phrases and words such as "must have" and "apparently."

At first, Simon & Schuster planned a brief disclaimer at the front of the book; that was abandoned in favor of a much longer author's note at the end.

"I'm not saying everything in this book is absolutely true," McGinniss said. "I don't know if the Mafia really played a role in the assassination of John Kennedy, but I find it plausible; it explains why the Kennedys (who allegedly did business with the mob) didn't want an investigation of the assassination. ... People are free to accept that or reject it."

'A genuinely, unrelievedly rotten book (The Last Brother), one without a single redeeming virtue ... the worst book I have reviewed in nearly three decades.'

—Jonathan Yardley
Washington Post

But he concedes that as "The Last Brother" is now presented, many readers will conclude that the author is sure the Mafia was involved. The book, in short, has a labeling problem.

"Where do you put it in the bookstore?" he asked. "I really don't even know what to call it. I suggested 'mytho-biography,' and now I'm not sure that's wrong."

While McGinniss says he exercised such license so the reader could empathize with his subject, the Kennedys found the book extremely unflattering. That, McGinniss said, explains some of its trouble.

"They got the word out so quickly and so early it became politically correct to trash this book," he said. "There's been a somewhat organized and conscious effort by them and their supporters to create a climate where it's easier to criticize the book than praise it."

'Somehow, I struck a nerve, and the nerve is striking back.'

—Joe McGinniss
Author
'The Last Brother'

Among his allegations:

—Ted Kennedy called William Manchester, author of "The Death of a President," and urged him to speak out against McGinniss. (Manchester says the call had nothing to do with his plans to sue for copyright infringement.)

—Eunice Kennedy Shriver discouraged Barbara Walters from a planned interview with McGinniss on ABC's 20-20. ("Absolutely untrue," said Lucy Kraus of 20-20. "A segment was never specifically scheduled; Eunice Shriver never, ever called Barbara; we had talked about an interview, but Simon & Schuster pulled back.")

—Seven public relations firms contacted by Simon & Schuster refused to work on the book.

Although book publicists generally regard any publicity as good publicity, sales have yet to take off.

Thespians to work to expose bad police

By Larry McShane
Associated Press Writer

There's a problem with liability insurance, which must still be addressed, and another problem the cops might not have considered.

NEW YORK — Police corruption? In the '70s, city police turned to Frank Serpico. In the '90s, they're turning to Al Pacino — the guy who played the undercover officer in the movie.

The city, home to thousands upon thousands of out-of-work actors and actresses, is considering a casting call for anyone interested in uncovering rogue cops, Police Commissioner Raymond Kelly announced.

The thespians, in character, would work with the police Internal Affairs Bureau to expose bad cops — a problem that has gained increasing notoriety as a mayoral commission probes illegal activity in the department.

But before they shout lights, cameras, action for this merger of entertainment and enforcement, some actors and actresses are screaming, "Cut!" They far prefer peering over stage lights to looking up a gun barrel.

"I'd have to think twice — maybe three times — before saying yes," said Nancy Mannes, 27, a student at the Actor's Institute. "What if something happens? What do you do then?"

Aspiring actor Keith Hutt, 25, of Manhattan, agreed: "This is real danger. Suppose a cop finds out who you are. His life, career and family are in jeopardy. Who know what he'll do?"

Who cares? We're talking work and cash, said Jason Heller, an actor who spent 13 years in Japan making action flicks. He had one vital caveat for any police audition: "The money has to be there."

Which is the beauty of the plan. The Screen Actors Guild has 22,000 members in its New York City branch; 80 percent are out of work at any given time, and they all have to eat, said SAG spokesman Ed Flynn.

That's an impressive talent pool, even if it runs the gamut from Pacino (Oscar winner) to Marla Maples (Donald Trump winner).

"They generally must take other work to survive," said Flynn — survive being the key word for the folks who generally settle in as waiters or bartenders.

There's a problem with liability insurance, which must still be addressed, and another problem the cops might not have considered.

"What happens when you're undercover and some officer comes up and says, 'Hey, haven't I seen you on television?'" wondered actress Brenda Smiley, who's appeared twice on the New York-based police drama "Law and Order."

Such problems are apparently not enough to dissuade the aspiring actors who see undercover police work as their springboard to stardom.

"I can tell you we're getting a lot of calls today," said Deputy Police Commissioner Suzanne Trazoff. "Every unemployed actor in town is calling us."

Pet gets birthday dip, pat on head

By Steve Rubenstein
N.Y. Times News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — A big yellow dog, determined to be man's best friend no matter what, plunged into San Francisco Bay July 27 and did what no dog has been asked by her master to do in the long history of the relationship.

She swam across San Francisco Bay, from Alcatraz to Aquatic Park. All she got when it was over was half a candy bar and a pat on the head.

"Good dog," said her master, Dave Horning, in perhaps the understatement of the century.

Horning, a champion long-distance swimmer from Stinson Beach, has swum the Alcatraz crossing about two dozen times. A few months ago, he noticed that his 4-year-old Labrador retriever, Summer, enjoyed following him into the water on his afternoon swims.

"One day, she whispered 'Alcatraz' in my ear," Horning said. The pair began training in earnest, swimming a mile a day and dining on pasta and zucchini, Summer's favorite foods.

After pawing over the tide tables, man and dog hitched a ride to Alcatraz Tuesday on a friend's boat and jumped off at a tiny beach on the island's south shore. There was a brief pause for Summer to chase a seagull, then the two swimmers entered the water at 7:47 a.m.

"OK, girl, let's go," said Horning, and Summer began paddling alongside her master, her head aloft, her noble nose pointing southeast. She matched him, stroke for stroke, as the two dodged floating beer cans and empty potato chip bags. Despite Horning's claim of "shark-infested, bone-chilling waters," the primary danger came from a boatload of photographers that seemed bent on running them down.

Throughout the danger, Horning remembered to turn his head and breathe facing the cameras.

"Good dog, good dog," Horning told his companion, who maintained her position at Horning's elbow even though it meant being bonked on the head every time her master took a stroke, of which there were many thousand.

DISTRIBUTORSHIPS
LOOKING FOR PART TIME JOB? HAVE WE GOT A DEAL FOR YOU
The Midland Reporter-Telegram has several distributorships which are available now.

Often Asked ????
Is it worthwhile for adults also?
Yes! Our current distributor force is already 90% adult and 10% youth.

Morning newspaper routes are attractive for:
- ADULTS who have F/T jobs, yet want to supplement their income with a steady part-time job.
- MOTHERS who can't justify a small job and daycare, because as a distributor, you do not need daycare!
- STUDENTS needing a part-time job which will work with classes!
- SENIOR CITIZENS wanting regular exercise, added income, or just want to work with people, neighbors and friends.

How much money can I make as a distributor?
Depending on the size of distributorship from $300 to $700 monthly!
Some make even more!

How long does it take?
The actual delivery takes 1-2 hours Monday-Saturday, and 2-3 hours on Sunday, again depending on the size of the distributorship. Also, a few hours a month are needed to collect from subscribers. Many distributors choose to handle some of this by putting envelopes in subsribers'papers. Collecting in person will be necessary though!

When do papers have to be delivered by?
6 a.m. Monday-Friday and 7 a.m. on Saturday, Sunday and holidays.

Do I ever get a day off?
The job requires a 7-day a week commitment. However, distributors do take days off by finding a friend or a family member to substitute a for them!

RESERVE YOUR DISTRIBUTORSHIP NOW!
