Final vote delayed on recession relief bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — A $4.6 billion recession relief bill remained stalled today just short of final congressional approval, hung up in a complex dispute over how to distribute money to hard-pressed regions of the country.

While key House lawmakers spent the morning reviewing a Senate-passed formula for distributing funds, Democratic leaders said a final vote would probably be delayed until after the House acts on a 1984 budget.

That would postpone a vote until late in the day or perhaps Thursday.

The bill provides not only money for food, shelter and public works jobs, but also an additional $5 billion in loan and grant money needed urgently to continue unemployment benefits in more than two dozen states.

President Reagan has indicated through aides he would sign the bill.

Both houses approved the overall shape of the bill easily on Tuesday — the House on a vote of 329-86 and the Senate on an 82-15 roll call.

To alleviate the longest recession since World War II, the measure provides about $325 million in food and shelter for the needy and more than $400 million in additional funds for a variety of social programs.

Related story, Page 4A

There is also $1 billion in grants to local governments, of which $375 million may go to pay for public service jobs. That was a provision advocated by women's groups, who complained that most of the public works construction jobs financed by the bill would go to men.

Most of the rest of the money would go for government building projects covering everything from highways and airports to flood control, repair of Veterans' Administration hospitals and Forest Service and Park Service projects.

Differences between the House and Senate over how much money to spend and what programs to spend it on were resolved easily earlier in the week. But efforts to speed the measure to the White House faltered Tuesday night when the Senate balked at accepting a change the House suggested for distributing the funds.

Because of the disagreement, the measure bounced from the House to the Senate and back to the House again.

Even so, Sen. Mark Hatfield, R-Ore., said shortly before midnight he thought a compromise had been worked out that the House would ratify later today.

In addition, he added, "After a conversation with Mr. Stockman today, I am confident the bill will be signed by the president."

Under the new compromise, roughly $3 billion of the total $4.6 billion would be distributed to areas of the country that suffer from highest unemployment, a provision Hatfield said would assist 8,700 separate regions.

In addition to the disagreement over how to distribute the money, Sens. John Heinz and Arlen Specter, both Pennsylvania Republicans, sought to reinstate $1.2 billion in revenue sharing that the Senate approved earlier but was dropped from the compromise.

Their efforts failed, however, when Hatfield warned that adding the money would risk a presidential veto. In addition, Senate Republican Leader Howard Baker declared, "This is not the time and this is not the place to add over a billion dollars."

France forming 'combat ministry'

PARIS (AP) — President Francois Mitterrand will be presiding over a drastically reduced Cabinet today when it assembles at the Elysee Palace to put finishing touches on a new program to revitalize France's economy.

Premier Pierre Mauroy submitted the resignation of his Cabinet on Tuesday, a day after the third devaluation of the French franc under the 22-month-old Socialist government. Mitterrand immediately asked him to form another Cabinet.

Mauroy called the new team his "combat ministry" against France's widening foreign trade deficit, unemployment and high inflation.

Mitterrand has scheduled a nationally televised speech to explain the Cabinet's reduction from 44 to 15 members and possibly announce new economic austerity measures.

The Socialist president is struggling to renew faith in his government since leftist setbacks in municipal elections earlier this month and Monday's devaluation of the franc.

The new Cabinet retains such key government figures as Finance Minister Jacques Delors, Defense Minister Charles Hernu and Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson.

Among those missing from the inner circle is Culture Minister Jack Lang, whose outspoken anti-Americanism made him one of the more controversial members of the administration. The Culture Ministry was reduced to a department, but there was no indication whether he would continue to head it.

Jean-Louis Bianco, secretary-general to the presidency, said the Cabinet reduction was achieved largely by downgrading 10 ministries: planning, culture, leisure, communications, post and telephone, veterans, consumer affairs, women's affairs, sea and environment.

He said the sub-ministers and secretaries of state named later to head the downgraded ministries as departments would participate in Cabinet meetings only for business "relating to their areas of competence" and "upon the decision of the president."

Perhaps the most significant change was the consolidation of economic power under Delors the finance minister, who will now have budget responsibility.

The new Cabinet also retains Gaston Defferre at the Interior Ministry, Pierre Beregovoy at Social Affairs, Robert Badinter at Justice and Alain Savary at Education.

Communist participation in the government was reduced from four ministers to two, but remained proportionally the same in light of the smaller size. Charles Fiterman stayed on as transportation minister and Marcel Rigout as professional training minister.

One surprise Tuesday night was the announcement that Jean-Pierre Chevenement had resigned as minister for research and industry on Feb. 2 after "disagreements" with the president.

He was the second minister to quit but keep his resignation secret. Foreign Trade Minister Michel Jobert announced Sunday that he had resigned four days earlier, claiming he was not allowed sufficient authority.

Midland College considering construction project

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

Midland College may be adding a building to its campus in the next two years without increasing taxes after MC trustees looked at its options during a board meeting Tuesday afternoon.

With a record enrollment and filled classrooms cited as reasons for the new building, trustees also approved adding 10 teaching positions.

A proposal for a 20,000-square-foot building, made by MC President Dr. Jess H. Parrish, still may not be large enough to take care of the rapid increase in students.

A building of that size, however, could be built from revenue bonds rather than taking the issue to the public in a district-wide election.

The number of college hours on which state appropriations are based, increased 29 percent over spring 1982 at Midland College, Parrish said. Enrollment at most community colleges is on the rise, but not as drastically.

"Most showed a 4 to 5 percent increase in community colleges," he said. "Some showed up to 10 percent."

With the influx of students comes a need for more instructors and space, especially for more expensive, specialized laboratories.

An estimated cost of $75 per square foot places the price of the building at $1.5 million, Parrish said.

Related story, Page 1C

The building could be financed on a 17-year bond indebtedness without any increase in student tuition or building use fees.

Both regular and summer school tuition, based on 3,200 students, brings in $104,250 and about $141,750 in building use fees. Outstanding revenue bond requirements, which will average $96,600 through the next six years, leaves the college $149,400 for bond money.

"We could build a $1.5 million building now without any bond election," he said.

Trustees, recognizing the need for expanding, voiced concern about the practicality of a building that size.

Allison Fine Arts Building contains 88,000 square feet; the Occupational-Technical building, also 88,000 square feet, was originally built as a 65,000-square-foot facility; the science building has 29,000 square feet.

"Even if we built it at 20,000, probably only 75 percent would be usable space," Parrish said. "We're looking at a 15,000-square-foot assignment."

"I don't want to do this and then come back to the voters and ask for a bond (for more building space) because they'll say, 'They just built something out there. They don't need it.'" Trustee Reagan H. Legg said.

The most logical site for the building is directly east of the Student Center and north of the Learning Resource Center, according to Parrish.

Tentative proposals called for taking bids in February 1984 with construction to be completed in early summer or by fall 1985.

"With our present enrollment, it's needed now," Parrish said. "And I don't know what our need will be in 1985."

Trustees asked Parrish to bring recommendations to the board by early June on how much footage is needed, what areas need it the most and comparison costs of various sized buildings.

Related to the increase in students was the reappointment of all instructional personnel and approval of a recommendation made by Parrish for additional teaching positions in at least 10 areas.

"(The new teaching positions) will probably come before (trustees vote on) the budget because of the neccessity of advertising (the positions)," Parrish said.

Currently, there are 41.5 academic instructors, which takes into account one person who is co-employed by Midland Community Theatre, and 23 fulltime vocational-technical instructors, including one who teaches in Fort Stockton.

Greenwood school board upholds suspension for hair code violation

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

Under Jennings Bryant's admission that "yes, sir, he did violate the rule by his hair being ⅛ to ¼ inch over his ear," Greenwood Independent School District Board refused Tuesday to rescind the school's suspension of Bryant's 10-year-old stepson Michael Simmons for hair code violations.

The youth was suspended in early February and assessed zeros for work missed after his parents failed to comply with the school's hair code, adopted by the board last December. He was allowed to return after his hair was cut so that it was off his ears, above his collar and out of his eyes.

The board's decision came after a 70-minute public hearing punctuated at times by cheers in support of statements favoring the administration.

"How is a 10-year-old boy to comply with Greenwood Independent School District policy?" asked Bryant of Debra Edgerton, the teacher who originally reported Michael's hair code violation.

"That's up to you to teach him that responsibility, evidently," she responded to loud applause.

Throughout the hearing, Bryant sought to make the issue the hair code itself rather than whether or not his son was in violation, despite repeated warnings from GISD attorney Mike McKinney. Additionally, Bryant attempted to establish that the code was not equally enforced, producing at one point photographs of supposed violators.

"I think it's equally applied to everyone," said Miss Edgerton in response to questioning from Bryant. She later added, however, that a violation may go unnoticed due to "the kids brush(ing) their hair behind their ears.... We don't touch them to see how far down it goes."

Principal Bob Pheil explained to the board that he checks the students in each classroom at least once a week for compliance with the code, and noted it is not uncommon to find several in violation at any one time. When asked by Bryant how he felt a hair code benefited a child's education, Pheil pointed toward discipline.

"My main concern is that it really helps promote discipline within individual students, and that we all have rules to live by that keep our society organized," he said, receiving cheers from the audience.

Radiation accident wasn't reported, state official says

WEBSTER, Texas (AP) — An industrial accident that contaminated at least two workers with radiation at a plant here was revealed by an employee but not reported by the company, a state health official says.

The Texas Bureau of Radiation Control Monday suspended the license of Gulf Nuclear Inc. for its plant about 30 miles southeast of Houston, according to Richard Ratliff, director of the bureau's compliance and inspection division.

Ratliff said Gulf Nuclear, which manufactures radioactive substances used primarily by the oil industry, did not notify the state agency about the spill, as is required by state regulation.

A Gulf Nuclear official denied the accusation.

"We feel this is serious due to the fact we were not notified of the accident when it happened and the fact that employees were not analyzed to determine if they had been exposed to radioactive materials," Ratliff said.

Ratliff said Tuesday the license will remain suspended pending an investigation of the plant's operations.

Ratliff said two Gulf employees were injured when a stainless-steel capsule containing Americium 241 was ruptured by a lathe, exposing its radioactive contents.

The Vista Hotel is dwarfed by the twin towers of the World Trade Center in New York City. Although all of these buildings have windows, the "Blank Wall" theory of architecture holds that outsiders cannot see in, but those inside can see out, effectively blocking out the streets from the inside of the buildings.

Main Street's new face blank

NEW YORK (AP) — There's a new face on Main Street — a blank one.

Buildings with big, blank walls designed to shut out the street and everyone on it are proliferating in the nation's downtowns, according to William H. Whyte, an urbanologist who has mounted an exhibition on the trend at the Urban Center here.

Hotels, civic centers, banks and other structures are using walls to block out the "messy and chaotic" city and create an "internalized, controlled environment," complains Whyte.

"Look what they're doing to the street," he cries. "They're making it deadly dull."

Whyte, author of "The Organization Man," the best-selling study of corporate culture in the 1960s, has in recent years moved his gaze from the corporate boardroom to the street below. There he has found vitality in chaos, delight in tackiness.

The blank walls he protests are common in downtown "megastructures," such as the Renaissance Center in Detroit, Atlantic Richfield Plaza in Los Angeles, Omni International and Peachtree Center in Atlanta and Houston Center.

The builders of the complexes of hotels, stores, offices and theaters have said they are designed to guarantee a secure, efficient and tranquil environment in turbulent and possibly threatening urban settings.

TO WHYTE, THEY are as inviting as fortresses. To Whyte, the Renaissance Center says, " 'Come inside and be safe from Detroit.' It doesn't do anything for downtown renewal. To save the city they repudiate it."

Many downtown hotels seem designed to protect the visitor from the city he is visiting, Whyte adds. The Bonaventure Hotel in Los Angeles has "the largest blank wall you ever saw," Whyte says.

Institutions "have a special affinity for blank walls" and buildings such as FBI headquarters in Washington and the Atlanta Public Library "proclaim the power of the institution and the inconsequence of the individual...They tell you you're pretty damn insignificant," Whyte says.

The blank wall's move to the city from the suburbs is most apparent in new downtown shopping centers such as James River Plaza in Richmond, Va. and the Williams Center in Tulsa, Okla., Whyte notes.

Convention centers, he says, "are the worst offenders of all." In Dallas, Atlanta and Kansas City, they are almost all wall, "hermetically sealed boxes...with equispaced saplings for visual punctuation," Whyte says. "There's no regional variation. The only difference is the number of saplings."

BANKS USED to have windows through which pedestrians could see banking take place. But the Banque National de Paris in New York has installed one-way black glass so those inside can see out, but not vice versa.

Signs compound the insult of this authoritarian architecture. A great blank telephone company building wall in New York bears the sign, "No ball or Frisbee playing."

Sometimes architects provide openings on only one side of a building, forgetting about the other three. At Lincoln Center here, Avery Fisher Hall proves that a theater, a classic excuse for a closed box, can put on a show of its own for the street if it is enclosed in glass.

But a block away, the same complex has a dull, gray face on Amsterdam Avenue.

On his travels around the country, Whyte has encountered blank walls most often in smaller and medium-sized cities "shell-shocked" by the rise of suburban shopping centers. "They've lost their ego to the suburbs, so they say, 'If you can't beat 'em, join 'em,' " Whyte said with a shrug.

Many of these communities' new buildings are designed by "architects who don't know the street and are afraid of it. They're up the wall with fear of undesirables. They think the city is a place of winos, porno shops, that sort of thing."

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M., a city with some colorful, interesting streets, has been marred by several faceless megastructures, Whyte says.

Some big cities have the same problem. Downtown Los Angeles, he says, is awash with new blank walls. "They ought to have their heads examined," he says. "They're blowing their big chance."

Doctors hopeful for Siamese twins

Dual heartbeats heard in girls

EL PASO (AP) — Doctors were more hopeful that Siamese twins born here could be separated following the detection of two heartbeats, a hospital spokesman said.

Officials at Providence Memorial Hospital also said they expected results today from tests made to determine if the newborns' livers are attached.

Doctors detected two separate heartbeats during the twin girls' second day of life Tuesday.

"That means it's that much stronger that there will be less of a problem in the separation" of the two girls, said Gary Conwell, Providence's public relations director.

But he said that doctors caution that the dual heartbeats don't guarantee the hearts aren't attached.

Chances are slim the babies, who were in stable condition, can survive if their hearts and gall bladders are attached, Conwell said.

Preliminary tests indicate "a significant sharing of major organ tissues," said Dr. Richard Heath.

The twins were named Brenda Ivon and Miriam Aracely Hernandez on Tuesday by their parents, Maria Delores and Raul Hernandez of Cuidad Juarez, Mexico.

> "I think if you've got twins that are facing each other...and they've got a separate cardiovascular system in each one of them, that's an optimal case."

Hernandez, 27, who had been worried and incredulous at first, said Tuesday that his hopes are high the twins will survive.

Heath, the El Paso pediatrician leading the examinations, said he couldn't recall any cases in which Siamese twins connected by the heart had been successfully separated.

"Something in the pit of my stomach tells me this may be OK, even though all the odds are against it," Heath said in a telephone interview. "I'm tremendously optimistic."

The exam scheduled today, called a heart catheterization test, will determine if such optimism is warranted, Heath said. Dye will be injected into the infants' hearts, and X-ray equipment will trace its flow through the blood stream.

Doctors examining the infants also were scheduled to review results of Tuesday's arteriogram to determine how extensively the livers are joined, if at all.

The girls, weighing six pounds each, have separate respiratory and cardiovascular systems, Conwell said.

They "move back and forth with each other," Conwell said. The babies occasionally flail out with the arms, striking the other, he said.

Two pediatricians who helped separate Siamese twins elsewhere in the country said the heart test is one of two exams that will determine the twins' chances for survival. The babies will have a good chance of living if their hearts and gall bladders are separate, they said.

"I think if you've got twins that are facing each other...and they've got a separate cardiovascular system in each one of them, that's an optimal case," said Dr. Franklin Harberg, chief of surgery for Texas Children's Hospital in Houston.

Harberg, who has helped separate two sets of Siamese twins, called the examination period "a matter of studying the hearts."

Dr. Mary Ann South, a former El Pasoan now on loan to the National Institutes of Health in Bethesda, Md., said the twins probably will die if they can't be separated.

"I don't think they could live for an extended time," she said.

Ms. South was the pediatrician for Siamese twins separated successfully by Dr. C. Everett Koop, now United States surgeon general.

An estimated one U.S. birth in 200 results in identical twins, and only about 1 percent of identical twins are born with their bodies joined together.

"It's very sad," Mrs. Hernandez said of the twins' birth. "I have no idea what we're going to do."

Siamese twins normally are connected by their abdomen, hips or chest, doctors say.

"It's a medical curiosity, pure and simple," Heath said.

Conwell said Tuesday an infant heart specialist may operate on the twins in Houston or Denver. One thing the twins have going for them is that they "have a good weight for something like this," Conwell said.

Final witnesses to testify in cops' trial

DALLAS (AP) — The final witnesses in the federal civil rights trial of seven New Orleans police officers prepared to testify as the defendants continued denying charges of conducting brutal interrogations following the killing of a patrolman.

Five more defense witnesses were expected to be called today and prosecutors said they would put on two rebuttal witnesses before both sides begin presenting closing arguments.

Detective Dale Bonura, one of the seven defendants, testified Wednesday that an alleged police brutality victim was afraid to answer questions about a patrolman's killing but he knew something about the slaying and wanted to get it off his chest.

But Bonura denied he or his partner, Stephen Farrar, beat or threatened any of the men they questioned.

Five men who lived in New Orleans' predominantly black Algiers section testified they were threatened with guns, beaten, stomped, kicked and abused during interrogations about the killing of white patrolman Gregory Neupert.

Another defendant, Detective Thomas R. Woodall, testified that he heard Farrar and Bonura question one of the alleged brutality victims, Robert Davis, but did not participate in the interview. Detective Richard LeBlanc, a third defendant, claimed he was not assigned to the case.

Prosecutors contend the officers were criminally overzealous in pursuit of the killer of a fellow officer. Defense attorneys maintain the alleged victims lied about being beaten to hide their cooperation with police from people on the street.

If convicted on the federal charges, Farrar, Bonura, detectives Woodall, LeBlanc and Ronald Brink, Sgt. John McKenzie and Officer Stephen Reboul could be sentenced to up to 10 years in prison and fined $10,000.

Bonura said Tuesday that he and Farrar considered Davis a "possible vital link" in their investigation and said they wouldn't beat a witness whose help they might need later in court.

"You don't press a witness that might break the case for you," said Bonura. Instead, he said he and Farrar tried to win Davis' trust.

He said Davis was scared and nervous when they, acting on a tip from an anonymous caller, picked him up and questioned him about what he saw when Neupert was killed on Nov. 8, 1980.

"I believed he knew something but was afraid to say. You could see he wanted to get it off his chest but he was scared," said Bonura.

"Davis trusted us to a degree, still not enough to get involved," he said.

He said he and Farrar left the interview room and came back a short time later and found detective Oris Buckner, a black officer who has testified for the prosecution under a grant of immunity, yelling in Davis' face.

A short time later, Bonura said Davis told them he heard the shots that killed Neupert and saw a man run past him. He testified Davis said he knew the man only as Comanche.

Comanche was a nickname for James Billy Jr., one of four people killed during a police crackdown in Algiers after the shooting death of Neupert.

Ms. Deal was in court in connection with a pending trespassing charge when Scott Gordon, assistant to County Court-At-Law Judge Al Leal, saw her move something from the front of her clothing to her back.

O'Brien said after the items were found, he asked that Ms. Deal be examined by a psychiatrist. She is scheduled to return to court April 26.

Mother of four wins first city job

AP Laserphoto

Reading off the name of one of 1,000 winners of summer jobs for the city is Edwin Robinson, Director of Human Resources for the city. First name called was Mary Gwin, 27.

CLEVELAND (AP) — An unemployed mother of four thought she had only a "one in a million" chance of getting a city job, but became the first winner in a lottery for 1,000 temporary jobs that was entered by more than 11,000 jobseekers.

Mary Gwin, who has been without steady work for two years, was chosen in a drawing Tuesday night for a job cleaning up vacant lots and city parks. The jobs last 12 weeks, beginning in April, and pay $4.50 an hour.

"My daughter was telling me, 'What if they draw your name?' I said, 'They're not going to get my name.'" Ms. Gwin said after the drawing, two days before her 27th birthday. "I thought, in a drawing, I might be one in a million, and then I was the first one."

Ms. Gwin, who is unmarried and has four children ages 13 months through 11 years, said she has held secretarial jobs, but no steady work, for about two years.

"They say it is only part time, but it's better than nothing," she said.

About 11,200 people applied Monday and Tuesday for the 1,000 jobs, city officials said. The drawing began at 6 p.m. Tuesday and continued until 250 names were chosen. The other 750 winners will be drawn later.

Winners will be notified by mail and will be screened to make sure they hold no other jobs, said Jack Bigham of the city Human Services Department.

Bigham said the summer job lottery, which started in Cleveland last year, "pretty much takes the politics out of the scramble for temporary city jobs."

Only unemployed city residents 18 or older were eligible, Bigham said.

Officials originally printed 10,000 applications, but had to print more when the first edition ran out by noon Monday.

Public Hall, where application were taken, was opened at 6:30 a.m. Tuesday because a crowd gathered in sub-freezing temperatures waiting for the 8 a.m. opening.

On Monday, several glass doors were broken as people pushed for position in line after some arrived at 4 a.m.

"There was no advantage to being first in line," Bigham said. "They still thought it was first-come, first-serve."

Bigham said 4,200 vacant lots were cleaned last year in the program, called Project CLEAN. He said 1,200 people of 3,800 who applied got jobs.

The program will employ four groups of 250 people each, with the first group reporting for work in April.

James Watt defends Ruckelshaus

WASHINGTON (AP) — One day after William Ruckelshaus was brought in as "Mr. Clean" to spruce up the Reagan administration's environmental record, he was embraced as a team player by the man environmentalists consider public enemy No. 1 — James Watt.

The controversial interior secretary defended the administration's environmental record during a lunch with reporters Tuesday and blamed a "campaign of hatred" for preventing the truth from reaching the American people.

Watt praised Ruckelshaus, the administrator-designate of the Environmental Protection Agency, as being totally committed to administration policies and the need to work on the "team" to accomplish those policies.

Watt said he told Ruckelshaus on the telephone last week that "we have the most outstanding environmental record ever accomplished by any administration.

"We talked about the commitment Bill Ruckelshaus and I have to the Reagan philosophy, the concept of teamwork, that we work together in carrying out the Reagan agenda and his (Ruckelshaus') full commitment to the president's program and his full commitment to team membership," Watt said.

Ruckelshaus was named by Reagan on Monday to succeed Anne M. Burford as head of the EPA in an effort to restore confidence in an agency buffeted by charges of mismanagement, political manipulation and favoritism to polluters.

In the latest development in the continuing round of congressional investigations of the agency, a draft report by a House subcommittee charged that the EPA "acted improperly or at a minimum created the appearance of impropriety" in deciding not to regulate formaldehyde as a suspected cancer-causing chemical.

The report, a copy of which was obtained by The Associated Press, accused assistant EPA administrator John A. Todhunter of ordering changes in the opinions of EPA's scientific staff and acting administrator John W. Hernandez of holding "closed-door science courts" that gave industry a special forum to make its case that formaldehyde did not need to be regulated.

Todhunter, through spokesman Mike McDonnell, denounced release of the draft report by the House Science and Technology subcommittee as "contrived for maximum political publicity."

While Ruckelshaus was receiving words of praise from Watt on Tuesday, he was being greeted by thunderous cheers by EPA employees who gathered to hear their future boss promise to "administer and enforce the laws as they're written by Congress."

Many environmental critics have said Ruckelshaus' selection will have no impact unless he is able to convince the administration to reverse course on its environmental policies.

But Watt said the administration did not need to change policy because "we are doing what is right.

He blamed the Washington press corps for not reporting the administration's accomplishments — such as its tripling of expenditures to restore the national parks.

"We have been subjected to a campaign of hatred by those few groups who have been able to get on page one with the most distorted stories imaginable," Watt said.

Watt brushed aside questions of his own tenure in Washington, repeating what he always says, that he'll pack his bags the moment he becomes a liability to President Reagan.

Last week, Edward J. Rollins, Reagan's chief political adviser, said, "Jim Watt is a politically astute man, and he realizes that there is a line that he can cross where he becomes a liability to this president.

Watt said he did not think Reagan would be hurt in the long run by his confrontational style because the "results are so good for the country and that truth will get out."

At the EPA, Ruckelshaus was greeted by a banner declaring, "Welcome Back, Bill" as he addressed several thousand employees gathered outside the headquarters building.

While loudly cheering his pledge to enforce the laws, the crowd listened quietly when Ruckelshaus said Reagan was committed to cleaning up the environment and will give the EPA the resources to do the job. In his first two years, Reagan imposed sharp budget cuts at the agency.

He assured the workers that he hasn't "taken leave of my senses" by accepting the invitation to reclaim his old job and leave a position as vice president of the Weyerhaeuser Co. of Tacoma, Wash.

Republican leader suggested White House aide, Lavelle meet

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — The state Senate's Republican leader says he suggested a meeting between former EPA official Rita Lavelle and a White House aide that led to accusations of political manipulation in disbursement of cleanup funds.

But Sen. William Campbell told reporters Tuesday he didn't intend the meeting to turn into a political strategy session.

Campbell said he told Ms. Lavelle last June when she was in Sacramento that she should meet James Medas, Campbell's former chief of staff and now White House special assistant for intergovernmental affairs.

He said the meeting was to discuss "how to deal with governors per se rather than a political discussion."

Medas acknowledged Monday that he and Ms. Lavelle, then head of the Environmental Protection Agency's $1.6 billion toxic waste cleanup program, met last July 13 and discussed several governors up for re-election.

Several members of the House Energy and Commerce subcommittee say handwritten notes of the meeting, taken by a Lavelle aide, confirm that the EPA was trying to influence the outcome of political races by approving or withholding cleanup funds.

The subcommittee voted 8-0 Monday to cite Ms. Lavelle for contempt for failing to testify about use of the funds, an action that could lead to criminal charges.

Ms. Lavelle was fired from her post last month.

Reagan ready to reveal photos

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, stepping up his sales campaign for a big Pentagon buildup, is ready to reveal secret aerial photographs of Soviet-supplied weapons and installations in trouble spots around the world.

The president will address the nation tonight in a nationally broadcast speech from the Oval Office at 8 p.m. EST.

An administration official, speaking anonymously, said Reagan would display now-secret photos that document the existence of Soviet-supplied arms and installations in Central America and perhaps in the Middle East. As president, he is empowered to declassify secret material.

Intelligence specialists have long been opposed to disclosure of reconnaissance photos from spy planes and satellites, arguing it would show adversaries how good — or how bad — U.S. capabilities are.

An administration official said the pictures probably would be those taken by high-altitude aircraft, instead of by super-secret space satellites which reportedly are capable of taking pictures from as far out as 25,000 miles.

"There's a lot of debate going on about how much to reveal," the official said. "Whether we show the most sophisticated stuff — I doubt it."

For strategic reconnaissance outside the Soviet Union and China, the United States frequently uses the Blackbird SR-71 spy plane, which flies at above 100,000 feet.

Although aerial photos frequently appear grainy to the untrained eye, they can provide a wealth of information to photo interpreters. Pictures taken by satellite 150 miles above the Earth and beyond can show sharp details about personnel, missiles, submarines and tanks and can be used to track the progress of missile silo construction, according to military officials.

White House spokesman Larry Speakes said the major objective of tonight's speech "is to acquaint the American people to the threat we face.

Asked how the address would differ from Reagan's earlier speeches on national defense, Speakes said, "The president thinks its important to underscore his viewpoint on it, and to address it in what may be certain new terms."

After conferring with Reagan on defense issues, Rep. Jack Kemp, R-N.Y., quoting the president as saying "he would allow some photographs to be used that might help share his concern about the threat that we face from the modernization program advanced by the Soviet Union."

Speakes pointedly noted that congressmen have been urging Reagan to declassify some secret material and share it with the public. "While I can't promise it, I would urge you to wait and see," said Speakes.

Administration strategists hope the speech will encourage Americans to put pressure on an increasingly balky Congress for a big increase in defense spending.

Speakes said Reagan considers tonight's address "a particularly important speech since it comes at a critical juncture in our national discussions of security issues," with Congress poised to cut deeply into Reagan's $273.4 billion defense budget.

Speakes said the speech "will underscore the administration's commitment to restoring the United States' defense posture, with particular emphasis on the threat which now confronts us."

Greenwood school board backs suspension of 10-year-old boy

"Are these rules equally applied to all students?" asked Bryant.

"I make a very sincere effort to enforce it for all students," replied Pheil.

Placing himself on the stand, Bryant testified that "what really got me upset was when (Michael) was suspended from school when it was barely over his ears...Yes, technically speaking, Michael was in violation of the rule...but the rule is not equally applied."

In his closing arguments, Bryant — a GISD school board candidate — admitted, "I know you'll find my son in violation," but asked board members to reconsider assessing the youth zeros for missed assignments.

McKinney explained to the board after testimony was completed that a motion would have to be made if a board member wished to rescind the suspension ruling. Otherwise, he said, no further action would be necessary.

At that point, a motion was made for adjournment, it was seconded, and the vote was unanimous.

Afterward, school board president Patsy Herrington was asked if the board would consider at a later date Bryant's request for a less rigid hair code and revision of the policy to assess zeros for work missed due to suspension.

"As far as the zeros, that part might be considered," she said, "but as far as the hair code, as the board now stands, I would say not."

Lower energy prices could alter consumer price figures

WASHINGTON (AP) — Consumer prices, barely inching up so far this year, are likely to be kept in check for the next few months by tumbling energy prices, economists say.

In advance of today's release of new inflation figures, economists predicted that the Labor Department's Consumer Price Index held steady — or rose just slightly — last month.

Those prices advanced a mere 0.2 percent, after seasonal adjustment, in January. They fell 0.3 percent in December.

Inflation for all of last year stood at 3.9 percent, the best showing since the 3.4 percent of 1971 and 1972.

Kathleen Cooper, senior financial economist at Security Pacific National Bank in Los Angeles, predicts inflation will run at about the same pace this year, too.

Allen Sinai, senior economist at the Lexington, Mass., consulting firm of Data Resources Inc., expects inflation rates "to remain in low single digits for most of the next six months."

Helping to keep the pace slow, said the economists, are falling energy prices.

Donald Ratajczak, economic forecaster at Georgia State University, said: "Energy prices continued to drop sharply in February and March. Indeed, gasoline prices fell more sharply in February than the month before."

The OPEC oil cartel recently slashed its base price for crude oil by $5 a barrel, to $29. And Sinai said that cut will filter through to consumer prices in the coming months.

Even so, rising food prices are expected to offset some of those sharp declines in energy costs.

Ms. Cooper said a hint of the food price increases to come showed up in last week's Labor Department report on wholesale prices.

Those prices, often a barometer of how food, energy and other commodity prices will move at the retail level, rose a seasonally adjusted 0.1 percent in February. Surging food prices wiped out fresh declines in energy prices, the department said in its report on the Producer Price Index for finished goods.

Ratajczak, too, predicts a sharp pickup in food prices might show up in the Consumer Price Index.

"Substantial rains along the West Coast, where most produce currently is being produced, may generate more striking increases" in fruit and vegetable prices, he said in a newsletter to clients.

"When such possible gains are added to clear increases for sugar, meats and non-alcoholic beverages, the food index could show dramatic increases in February and March," he said.

Economists also will be watching the new report to see how the housing component of the index behaves.

With the January report, the department changed the way it calculates home ownership costs in an effort to make them more accurately reflect what consumers pay.

People need to ask about X-rays

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

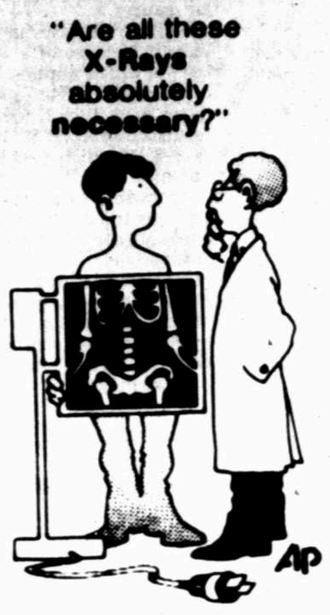

Americans undergo millions of dental and medical X-rays every year and a consumer group which says much of the radiation is unnecessary is urging people to ask more questions before they agree to the tests.

The Health Research Group has produced a guide for consumers called "The X-Ray Information Book." It was written by Priscilla W. Laws, a physics professor who worked with the group to study the risks involved in needless diagnostic X-rays.

Dr. Sidney Wolfe, head of the health group, which is affiliated with Ralph Nader's Public Citizen organization, said that X-ray tests "properly and appropriately done, are an important part of the practice of medicine and dentistry.

"But what about X-rays that should not have been done at all or ones that were done with poorly functioning equipment, poor techniques or inadequate patient protection? In each case, the patient is the victim of unnecessary radiation and its attendant hazards."

Wolfe said consumers should ask doctors and dentists exactly why each X-ray is needed. Is it simply a repeat of a similar procedure done relatively recently? Why can't the existing X-ray be used? If you decide you don't want a new X-ray, tell your doctor. If the doctor refuses to listen, Wolfe said, consider changing doctors.

—If you are a woman and there is any chance you are pregnant, inform the doctor or dentist immediately; don't wait to be asked. Pregnant women particularly should avoid X-rays of the lower back or abdominal region unless there are strong indications of serious disease.

Wolfe said members of the medical profession are getting used to people asking more questions. And he said consumers should think carefully about dealing with a doctor who is unwilling to listen to a second opinion — from another doctor or from patients themselves.

According to "The X-Ray Information Book," more than 150 million people had at least one diagnostic X-ray last year. And the guide estimates that 30 percent are unnecessary. Wolfe also said that as many as one-fifth of the X-ray units checked by state radiation inspectors are not in compliance with the law, "often causing patients to be exposed to excessive and illegal amounts of radiation emitted from faulty equipment."

The Health Research Group guide says there are several things you can do to avoid unnecessary X-rays and to make sure that the ones you DO need, expose you to the minimum radiation. Among them:

—Try to determine what verifiable benefit you will get. Will it provide information that could influence the course of treatment? Keep a record of your X-ray history including the type of test, where it was done and when, so you can tell the practitioner about already available data.

—If you are a woman and there is any chance you are pregnant, inform the doctor or dentist immediately; don't wait to be asked. Pregnant women particularly should avoid X-rays of the lower back or abdominal region unless there are strong indications of serious disease.

—Avoid mobile X-ray units if possible. These units often produce miniature films, a process which often involves more exposure than conventional machines.

—Refuse to submit to dental X-rays as part of every routine checkup unless you have special problems or the dentist can justify the need for new tests.

Anthropologist refutes cannibalism as custom

Anthropologists imbibe cannibalism like mother's milk. But not Dr. William Arens. This is one anthropologist who believes the unspeakable act of man eating is myth, fed by prejudice and "pure sensationalism."

In an interview appearing in the April issue of Science Digest, Dr. Arens, an anthropologist at the State University of New York, Stony Brook, challenges two centuries of anthropological wisdom. After years of research, he's convinced cannibalism, as a custom, never existed.

He started out a believer. But then he began checking evidence, going further and further back to find the original sources. "When I got to the end, I couldn't tell who, if anyone, had seen cannibalism," Arens said.

"If it's a custom, it should be observed. That's an anthropologist's job," Arens said. "If tribes in New Guinea are supposedly still eating human flesh, then why hasn't somebody seen it?"

While explorers like Livingstone believed many of the people they encountered in Africa were cannibals, Arens points out that they never actually saw cannibalism. "Look, I know Africa better than anyplace else," he said. "There's not good evidence for cannibalism existing in Africa. None. People like (British exploreres) Stanley and Livingstone walked around Africa in perfect safety. No one ate them. And Africa has played such an important role in the myth of cannibalism."

Arens admits that "at certain times in certain places people have eaten other human beings" — even in our culture in the last century when settlers were trapped in a high Sierras blizzard. But that does not make cannibalism a custom anywhere. "Anthropologists," he said, "miss that distinction."

The author of a 1979 book, "The Man-Eating Myth: Anthropology and Anthropophagy," Arens is not shy about criticizing "Excess and Restraint" by anthropologist Ronald Berndt. Arens says of Berndt's book: "He does provide some rather explicit descriptions of cannibalism. Apparently what he is doing in reporting something that he heard."

Tiny change may turn gene into rogue

SAN DIEGO (AP) — The tiniest possible change at a crucial spot can turn a normal human gene into a rogue gene that produces cancer, a researcher says.

"This oncogene (cancer gene) acquired its malignant properties by the simplest possible genetic alteration, the substitution of a specific nucleotide (the building blocks of which genes are made) within a normal human gene," said biochemist Mariano Barbacid of the National Cancer Institute.

His laboratory, along with two others, announced last year the isolation of a human cancer gene and later that it resulted from a "point mutation," the very small but profound change.

Barbacid and other researchers told an American Cancer Society symposium earlier this week that a recent flood of new findings about cancer-causing genes is giving scientists their first tentative glimpses into the tragic chain of events that leads to cancer.

The idea that certain genes present in every cell of the body can somehow be changed into cancer genes was demonstrated scarcely five years ago. It has since become a hot topic in cancer research and labs around the world have produced a wealth of data in the past two years.

At least 15 proto-oncogenes, genes that have the ability to change into cancer genes, have been found and others may be discovered. They are among more than 50,000 genes contained in every human cell and most researchers believe they have some normal functions; at least a few seem to work only when a child is developing in the womb.

Some doctors advocate removal of colon polyps

Dear Dr. Solomon: During my regular annual physical examination, my doctor found some small polyps in my colon. They're not bothering me — in fact, I didn't even know I had them — but he says he thinks they should be removed and he's referring me to a specialist. Do you see any reason for having an operation when I'm not even sick? — Don, Chicago, Ill.

Dear Don: Some physicians recommend that all small colon polyps should be removed if they can be reached fairly easily. Dr. Jovitas Skucas, of the University of Rochester Medical Center, explains that these polyps often cannot be distinguished from small malignant polyps. Therefore, their removal reduces the possibility of cancer spreading to other areas.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I am going to have plastic surgery. Does this mean that I am going to have a skin graft? — Ms. K.O., Akron, Ohio

Dear Ms. K.O.: No. Skin grafting is used when there is no other satisfactory way of closing a large wound or defect. Skin grafts also are used to release a tight scar. A qualified plastic surgeon relies on his judgment and experience to decide when a graft is necessary, what type to use, where on the patient's body to take it from, and to predict how it may look. A skin graft seldom matches the color and texture of the normal surrounding skin, although many blend well, especially on the face. Some scarring will occur where the graft joins the adjacent skin. There also may be scarring at the site from which the graft is taken, as well as changes in color and texture. For this reason, grafts are usually taken from areas covered by clothing, if possible.

Dear Dr. Solomon: What kind of people do they have coaching high school and college sports? I have a nephew who plays both baseball and basketball, and he says he plays even when he doesn't feel well because it's expected of him and the coach gives him a hard time if he doesn't play. What kind of nonsense is this? A few years from now the game won't mean a thing but he may still be suffering from the effects of an injury that he didn't take care of. — Augie, St. Louis, Mo.

Dear Augie: As a physician, I advise my patients, including athletes, to listen to their bodies. Playing tennis or jogging despite a painful knee or a pulled muscle is simply asking for a more serious injury.

I would particularly advise young athletes that "playing with pain" is more an indication of immaturity than a sign of bravery. I can understand why professional athletes, whose very livelihood depends on their performance, ignore these warning signals, even though from a medical standpoint they are foolish to do so. But when high school and college athletes are expected and encouraged to play with pain, I suggest it's time for the schools to reconsider their purpose and to reappraise their values.

For Jerome, St. Louis, Mo.: Breathing 100 percent oxygen appears to reverse the physical and psychological symptoms of alcohol withdrawal, according to a study of 98 chronic alcoholic patients. Those with residual symptoms of depression were helped by further treatment with nitrous oxide and oxygen.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My father is 76 years old but has been told on several occasions that he is in good health. Yet he continues to complain about a number of different aches and pains. He's pretty well fixed financially and could afford a psychiatrist. I have not discussed this with him but I'd like to know what you think of the idea. — Mr. S.G., Pittsburgh, Pa.

Dear Mr. G.: Being well fixed financially may be helpful if a person is in need of psychiatric care, but it is not a criterion for psychotherapy. Neither, from what you write, is the fact that your father complains about his health.

There certainly are times when a referral for psychotherapy is indicated, and I have occasionally recommended such a course for one of my patients. But this has been rare. Particularly with my elderly patients I find that devoting a little more time to them and permitting them an opportunity to get some things off their chest is as helpful to them as more formal psychiatric treatment would be.

You do not indicate whether your father lives alone or is otherwise isolated, or even whether he has someone to talk with. Before I raised the question of a psychiatric referral, I would try to determine whether he has had the opportunity to discuss his concerns in any great detail with his physician. This may be all your father needs.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I am a 32-year-old attorney, have been married eight years, and have held off starting a family until my practice was well established. I now hear all about the increased possibility of birth defects in children born to older women, but what I'm wondering about is whether I will have more trouble conceiving. Do you have any information about this subject? — Pearl, New York City, N.Y.

Dear Pearl: A French study has suggested that there is a significant decrease in fertility in women in their early thirties, but these findings have been disputed by an American study that covered the same age group.

I would suggest that if you plan to start a family, the most important thing you can do is maintain your general health through a program of exercise, sound nutrition that includes well-balanced meals and avoids fad diets, and regular physical examinations.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I agree that it's never too early to begin taking care of yourself. What I would like to know is at what age a person's diet begins to have an effect on the cholesterol in his system. — Dave, Rochester, N.Y.

Dear Dave: Cholesterol levels have been found to be sensitive to dietary intake in babies as young as six months of age. The results of a study of more than 400 infants showed that those who were fed cow's milk had significantly higher cholesterol levels than did babies who received a commercial milk-based or soy-based formula. At one year of age, however, there was no significant difference in cholesterol level between the two groups.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I'm almost ashamed to write this because it's so stupid, but I recently swallowed a small marble. When I called my doctor, he told me to watch to see if it passes in my tool. I must admit that I thought he was going to tell me that I needed an operation. Everything turned out all right, but what I would like to know is if the doctor was taking chances playing a wait-and-see game. — Jack Reno, Nev.

Dear Jack: An operation to remove a foreign body is usually necessary only in cases that involve perforation, serious bleeding, or obstruction of the bowel; otherwise, a wait-and-see attitude is safe. Either the item will pass naturally or it may even be decided to leave it in the bowel if it is not causing any ill effects.

(If you have a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D., 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon cannot give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.)

Know what insurance doesn't cover

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

Knowing what your insurance policy DOESN'T cover can be just as important as knowing what it DOES, or you could be caught short when disaster strikes.

Many Californians whose houses were destroyed or damaged in recent storms, for example, discovered too late that their homeowners' policies did not protect them against losses caused by floods.

Flooding is only one of the perils that is not covered by conventional insurance policies. Even the most comprehensive policies — the ones known as "all-risk" — don't cover damage from earthquakes, war or nuclear accidents, as well as floods.

Note: Flood insurance coverage IS available from the federal government; if you live in an area that is prone to flooding, ask your insurance agent about getting the extra coverage. You also may be able to buy an earthquake endorsement for your existing policy from your regular insurer.

Uninsured losses in general will be more costly for individuals because of a change in the tax law. Under the old law — which applies for 1982 returns due April 15 — you could deduct from your income any uninsured casualty losses over $100. Under the new law, which starts with the returns due April 15, 1984, you can deduct only those losses over $100 which exceed 10 percent of your adjusted gross income.

According to the Insurance Information Institute, there are four types of policies for homeowners. All provide some coverage for both your house and its contents. None covers automobiles.

The "Basic Form" — also known as HO-1 — protects your home and property against 11 kinds of losses: fire or lightning, loss of property removed from premises endangered by fire or other perils, windstorm or hail, explosion, riot or civil commotion, aircraft, vehicles, smoke, vandalism, theft and breakage of glass constituting a part of the building.

Witnesses want cigarette which is self-extinguishing

WASHINGTON (AP) — Maura Melody says her firefighter husband might be alive today if Congress had enacted legislation requiring the development of a self-extinguishing cigarette that would not ignite furniture or mattresses.

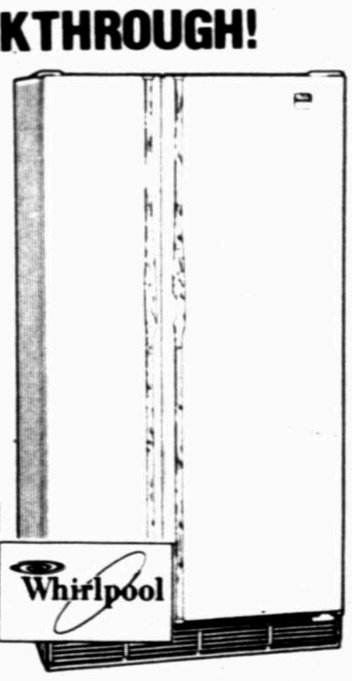

"I guess my plea is for the wives of all the firefighters in this country. What happened to me could happen to any of them," Mrs. Melody, of Danbury, Conn., said earlier this week in urging Congress to give the Consumer Product Safety Commission the authority to regulate the flammability of cigarettes.

Jay and Carole Bondi of Glendale, Calif., told the House Energy and Commerce subcommittee on health and the environment that their two young children died needlessly in a cigarette-caused blaze.

Rep. Joseph Moakley, D-Mass., has introduced legislation that would give the product safety commission 24 months to develop a standard for a cigarette that, left unattended, would be unlikely to ignite furniture or mattresses.

No parole recommended for killer

FORT PAYNE, Ala. (AP) — A jury has recommended life in prison without parole for an 18-year-old mother of three found guilty of torturing and killing a 13-year-old girl she picked up to have sex with her husband.

A jury of seven women and five men deliberated three hours and 45 minutes Tuesday before convicting Judith Ann Neelley of Murfreesboro, Tenn., in the death last September of Lisa Ann Millican.

Circuit Judge Randall Cole set sentencing for April 18. Under state law, he may either accept the jury's recommendation or sentence Mrs. Neelley to death in the electric chair.

Conviction to be appealed

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Defense attorneys say they will appeal the conviction of a cocaine smuggler and his son found guilty of conspiring to kill five people, including a federal judge who had sentenced the father to 20 years in prison.

Robert Gomez-Soto, 57, and his 24-year-old son, Peter, were convicted Tuesday by a U.S. District Court jury.

They were accused of enlisting the aid of two inmates at Lompoc Federal Prison, where the father was jailed, to hire a hit man to assassinate authorities and witnesses involved in the drug smuggling conviction. The plot was uncovered by an undercover FBI agent.

Officials want ship in Norway

MOORHEAD, Minn. (AP) — Officials in Norway have given a non-profit board here that owns a replica of a Viking ship until June 1 to remove the vessel from the country or face $50,000 in import fees.

But because the 76-foot-long replica will not fit through a Boeing 747's door, the Red River Valley Heritage Society hopes to persuade either NATO or a private shippping company to bring the vessel home.

The society wants to display the ship, the Hjemkomst, in Moorhead, the home of the late Robert Asp. He started construction of the ship in 1971 but died in 1980. Four of his children were among the 12-person crew that sailed the Hjemkomst to Norway last summer.

Seaman refuses to wear uniform

BALTIMORE (AP) — A Navy seaman who refused to wear a uniform because of her beliefs was being held in "disciplinary segregation" with nothing to wear but a sheet and blanket, officials said.

Seaman Leslie Anne Cole, 28, who had asked for conscientious objector status and decided to act on her beliefs after seeing the movie "Gandhi," was court-martialed for failing to go to her duty station and was sentenced to 60 days hard labor and discharge. She has not been allowed to see her family because "she has to be in the proper uniform to see visitors," Julius Simms, spokesman at Fort Meade, said Tuesday.

Simms said exceptions would be made for the base chaplain and a lawyer. Ms. Cole's attorney said he was waiting to hear whether he would be allowed in.

A base spokeswoman said Ms. Cole refused to see visitors, but a local chaplain said authorities at the base refused to let her see him because she would not wear a uniform.

Three roommates subdue intruder

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich. (AP) — A young nurse's aide said she and her roommates tackled, punched and tied up an intruder at their apartment, then turned him over to police.

Paige Akers, 21, said, "I've worked too hard for the things I own and for the life I have. It was weird. It was an experience I wouldn't like to go through again."

She said she was lying awake in bed Sunday at about 2 a.m. when neighbor Timothy Cavner, 22, switched off the electricity, broke through a kitchen door and walked into the room where she was sleeping.

"He put his knee down on the bed and that was all she wrote," the 5-foot-2½-inch Ms. Akers said.

She said she tossed the bed covers over him, wrestled him into the kitchen, punched him and slammed his head against the floor. During the scuffle, her roommate, 22-year-old Debbie Marshall, arrived home and helped subdue the man.

Another roommate, Kim Rosemont, 18, awakened and the three women tied the man's hands behind his back while a friend flagged down a police car passing nearby.

Professor may have as many as 13 aliases

SHIPPENBURG, Pa. (AP) — A mystery professor accused of using bogus credentials to get two college teaching jobs in Pennsylvania may also have taught at a suburban Baltimore university, an official says.

The suspect, known to authorities as "John Doe," remained behind bars today on $150,000 bail on a variety of charges stemming from his alleged forgery of credentials to get a teaching job at Shippensburg State College.

Until his arrest Monday, the suspect was known as John Bryon Hext at Shippensburg and as Peter H. Pearse at Millersville State College. He taught at the two schools on alternate days beginning last fall.

During arraignment Tuesday, "John Doe" refused to answer questions about his age, marital status and whereabouts before coming to Pennsylvania.

Attorney General LeRoy Zimmerman said earlier that the man was "crafty" and had taken officials on "a merry paper chase that hasn't ended yet...This case is just beginning, believe me."

Deputy Attorney General Kim Daniel said German marks, Swiss francs, British pounds, Canadian dollars and Australian currency were found in the man's wallet. In addition, he had one or more passports and printed stationery and other documents that indicated he had as many as 13 aliases.

"John Doe"

Katie Ryan, a spokeswoman for Towson State University in Maryland said Tuesday that "it sounds very likely" that David A. Gordon, a part-time business teacher who resigned last March, is the same man.

Gordon abruptly resigned in mid-semester "apparently to return to teach in London," Ms. Ryan said. "Though it is easy to say this is the same man, it is not easy to prove."

Among the 16 cartons of documents found in "John Doe's" Lancaster, Pa., apartment, were records of a checking account with Baltimore's Union Trust Bank in the name of David Gordon.

Investigators also turned up a telephone credit card issued to Paul Crafton, of Potomac, Md., in the Lancaster apartment. A woman at the Potomac address referred all questions to John Pyfer, a Lancaster, Pa., attorney representing the suspect.

A Towson State student, Robert Parker, called The Baltimore Sun on Tuesday to say a published photograph of the suspect resembled Gordon. Parker said he had taken a course from Gordon in 1981.

At arraignment, the man seemed nervous and politely answered the district judge in a faintly British accent. The man was of medium height and appeared to be in his early to mid 50s, had salt-and-pepper hair and a beard.

"We don't know who the man is," Daniel told District Justice Donald W. Daihl. "We have to consider him a prime bail risk."

The man's double life came to light when students at Shippensburg complained he was incompetent. An investigation uncovered that the name Hext was apparently borrowed from an Australian professor. The man was arrested Monday as he reported for classes at Millersville.

"John Doe" is charged with five counts of forgery and five counts of tampering with public records for allegedly submitting a fraudulent resume and three letters of recommendations from fictitious people.

He is also charged with theft by deception, false swearing, and tampering with public records. He is accused of fraudulently accepting over $14,000 in salary from Shippensburg.

A search of the professor's apartment in Lancaster found 16 cartons neatly stacked and full of credit cards, identification cards, business cards, blank checks.

Two senators want regulation revived

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two conservative senators are going to court in a bid to revive a government regulation requiring that parents be told when their minor daughters obtain prescription contraceptives from federally financed clinics.

Sens. Jeremiah Denton, R-Ala., and Orrin G. Hatch, R-Utah, said Tuesday they would join four families in a suit to be filed today to appeal a permanent injunction against the regulation.

The regulation, proposed by the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, would require notification of parents or family guardians within 10 days after their daughters were given prescription contraceptives by a federally funded facility.

It would have gone into effect last month but was blocked by two separate federal judges.

Reagan will consider new missile plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — In an attempt to break the stalemate in arms control talks with the Soviet Union, President Reagan is considering a new, two-stage U.S. proposal to eliminate ground-based nuclear missiles in Europe, administration officials say.

The new offer would retain, as the final goal, Reagan's proposal to eliminate all such U.S. and Soviet missiles, but first would reduce arsenals on both sides, said the officials, speaking on condition they not be identified.

Officials cautioned, however, that final details were still being worked out and that Reagan had not yet given his firm approval to the plan, which originated primarily in the Pentagon.

After 16 months of negotiations, the two superpowers are deadlocked on Reagan's "zero-option" plan. Under that proposal, in exchange for the dismantling of more than 600 Soviet missiles targeted on Western Europe, the NATO allies would forego the planned deployment of 572 U.S. cruise and Pershing II missiles beginning in December.

THE SOVIETS have countered with an offer to cut down to 162 missiles, matching the French and British force which the administration refuses to include in the negotiations in Geneva, Switzerland.

The president may touch on the shifting U.S. policy in a defense speech tonight, but a fuller account of the bargaining strategy is expected in a Los Angeles address next week, after the current round of talks adjourn.

The new approach would set, in a first stage, equal ceilings of 75 to 100 U.S. and Soviet missiles with a minimum of some 300 warheads, the sources said. The Soviets would reduce to that level while a matching number of the U.S. missiles were deployed.

One official, who declined to be identified, said the U.S. ceiling would be set at 75 missiles, all of them of the cruise variety, while another official said some provision would be made for including a number of Pershings in the NATO force.

The Soviets are more concerned about the Pershing, which can reach their territory in five to eight minutes, much more quickly than the cruises.

THE ORIGINAL NATO plan called for the deployment of 108 Pershings in West Germany, with 464 cruises deployed there, in Britain and in Italy, and possibly the Netherlands and Belgium.

Asked Tuesday night about reports that the president had made up his mind on the issue, White House spokesman Lyndon Allin said: "The president has said the zero option is not a take-it-or-leave-it proposal, but it remains our ultimate goal. If there are ideas to consider and possible ways we can reach that goal, then the president is willing to talk about those goals and consider them. I don't know of any decision the president has made like the one you've described to me."

On several occasions, Reagan had stressed his determination to insist on the elimination of Soviet medium-range missiles. But under pressure for a compromise from several allied governments, he has also promised that U.S. negotiators would consider any serious Soviet proposal.

Whatever his final decision, officials said, the president will keep insisting on "zero-option" as the end result of any agreement with the Soviet Union and will refuse to count the French and British missiles in the U.S. total.

Interferon treatment discouraged

In AIDS cases, anti-viral agent may prove harmful

By WARREN FROELICH
Copley News Service

Physicians treating victims of the mysterious acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS) with the anti-viral agent interferon may be doing more harm than good.

According to Dr. Jan T. Vilcek, a microbiology professor at the New York University School of Medicine in New York City, concern is growing that interferon — used experimentally to treat everything from the common cold to a variety of cancers — may weaken the already debilitated defenses of the AIDS patient.

If so, he said, physicians who are using interferon to treat some AIDS patients with rare and fatal Kaposi's sarcoma may unwittingly be "adding insult to injury."

"My concern is that the current attempts to use interferon for the treatment of AIDS are too crude, not unlike attempts to fix a broken computer with a sledgehammer," Vilcek said.

"The disappointments resulting from earlier attempts to publicize interferon as a 'priceless miracle drug' for cancer hopefully will have a sobering influence on attempts to exaggerate interferon's worth in the therapy of AIDS."

The syndrome, first reported among male homosexuals, has now been reported in more than 1,200 persons nationwide, including 450 persons who have died from a variety of strange ailments resulting from their depressed, or deficient, immune systems.

Besides members of the homosexual community, AIDS now has spread to women who are sexual partners of these men, infants in contact with victims, Haitians and hemophiliacs.

So far, the cause of the syndrome remains unknown, although many now suspect a transmissible agent like a virus. Although there is no known cure, physicians are injecting interferon with some success into AIDS patients with Kaposi's sarcoma.

For example, one group of researchers at Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center in New York City recently reported complete tumor remission in 16 percent of Kaposi's patients receiving genetically engineered interferon, with another 32 percent showing partial tumor reductions.

However, Vilcek cautioned that reductions in tumors are not the ultimate goal in treating AIDS patients. Indeed, he noted, many patients die from rare infections.

"What we don't know is whether by treating the tumor we are not perhaps causing some other problems which might increase their chances for other complications," he said.

Vilcek, an interferon expert, said his studies showed that a specific type of alpha interferon found in the blood of AIDS victims was remarkably similar to that found in systemic lupus erythematosus (SLE), an auto-immune disease in which the body's own army of defenders wages war on itself.

This variety of interferon was detected in 63 percent of patients with Kaposi's sarcoma and 29 percent of patients with swollen lymph nodes. None of the unique interferon was found in normal subjects, while 8 percent was found in healthy homosexual men.

Such statistics could have important implications for AIDS treatment, Vilcek said, because preliminary evidence indicates that in lupus patients this "interferon is bad for the patient." That is, as interferon increases, the lupus patient's condition worsens.

Could the same be true for AIDS patients?

The answer isn't known yet. The question, however, is disturbing, Vilcek emphasized.

"The final outcome of its actions on the immune system is largely unpredictable," he said. "So while administering interferon to AIDS patients with Kaposi's sarcoma could help to shrink the tumor, it might further worsen the patient's immuno-deficiency."

No link found between AIDS, hepatitis vaccine

ATLANTA (AP) — Researchers at the national Centers for Disease Control say the new hepatitis B virus vaccine is not linked with the deadly Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome, and shows no serious side effects.

The CDC said recently that of more than 200,000 people who have been given the vaccine, only 118 have become ill. Of those, 56 cases were determined not related to the vaccine and only six people were seriously ill.

No cases of AIDS were found in people who received the vaccine after it became generally available last July, and just two AIDS cases — no more than expected — were found among homosexual men participating in the initial study and trial of the vaccine.

AIDS, a mysterious breakdown of the body's disease-fighting system, has been seen in more than 1,200 people in the United States, most of them homosexual males. Hepatitis B vaccine, first licensed in 1981, is made from the blood plasma of donors who have the disease, most of whom are homosexual men, the CDC said.

Despite the positive findings, public fears persist about the vaccine, said Dr. Donald Francis, a hepatitis researcher with the CDC's Phoenix, Ariz., branch.

"There are fears even in medical communities that 'it will cause AIDS and I will not take it.' There's a great spectrum of concern out there still," he said.

Researchers think AIDS may be transmitted by an infectious agent, and the procedure to inactivate the hepatitis B virus in the vaccine probably would inactivate any AIDS agent as well, Francis said.

The vaccine costs about $100 for a series of three injections, and has been given only to high-risk groups, including homosexual men and medical personnel. For the most part, only medical workers whose employers are paying the high cost for the vaccine have received it, he said.

Man who snapped out of coma battling depression

ROBBINSDALE, Minn. (AP) — A former policeman who miraculously snapped out of a two-year coma is battling depression and paralysis while his wife voices one regret: she wishes he had been taken off a life support system sooner and left to die in peace.

David Mack, 39, is one of only two patients in history to awaken from a "persistent vegetative state," said Dr. Ronald Cranford, a neurologist at Hennepin County Medical Center.

The former Minneapolis police officer had hoped to regain use of his limbs, but after a year of therapy that hope is gone. He now lives at the Trevilla Nursing Home, a residence for disabled adults.

"For David, this is a long-term arrangement," said Mack's wife, Marlies. "There is nothing after this except an old-folks nursing home. It's not a cheery thought."

When Mack was asked about his future, tears formed in his eyes.

By nodding his head and spelling out answers to questions on an alphabet board, Mack said he is satisfied with the medical decisions made in his case.

"I often do get depressed but I just look in mirror and feel better," he spelled out when asked if he is fighting depression.

"I do know he has bouts of depression when he doesn't know if he really wants to live like this," Mrs. Mack said.

While Mack was in a coma, his doctors and his wife decided to keep feeding him with a tube but not to treat any infection or other complication if it developed, feeling this would be "extraordinary care" for a person with only the dimmest chance for recovery.

"I don't have any regrets about the decisions I made — taking him off the life-support system; stopping treatment but not food and water; treating him like a human being, not just as a body in a coma.

"The only thing I think I would change if I could was this: I would have done it sooner. I would have disconnected the respirator that first week," Mrs. Mack said.

Mack suffered extensive brain damage when he was shot in the neck and abdomen on Dec. 13, 1979, after he and other officers forced their way into a Minneapolis home while trying to serve a search warrant.

After tests indicated that he would never regain consciousness, Mack was moved from Hennepin County Medical Center to a nursing home on Oct. 15, 1980. On Oct. 22, 1981, a doctor doing a periodic checkup discovered Mack was following him with his eyes.

Tests showed that Mack, though still very disoriented, was regaining consciousness. The only other documented case in which a patient in a "permanent vegetative state" later recovered was that of a New Mexico man, who remained paralyzed for eight years before dying of an infection last year, Cranford said.

When doctors found that Mack had regained consciousness, he immediately was transferred back to the hospital. He recovered his mental capabilities, but his brain never regained the ability to control his limbs.

Mack's case was studied extensively by the President's Commission on Ethical Problems in Medicine to determine when doctors should consider a case hopeless and stop treatment.

The commission, which released its report today, concluded that patients should make the final decision about ending life-sustaining treatment and if they are incapable, the last word should come from their families or a designated representative.

Mrs. Mack said that if she had stopped life support in the first week, her husband probably would have died.

"I never wanted him to die. I never thought of it in those terms. I wanted him to be left in peace. ... We don't have control or choice over God's decisions. If it's your turn to die, you die. Right now," she said.

"Sure, this might be a miracle," Mrs. Mack said, "but sometimes I could definitely get along without this miracle.... It's nothing you'd consciously want. You fight with him, you laugh with him. He can be very funny."

The winter has been hard on Mack. He underwent bladder surgery and an operation on his salivary glands to reduce drooling. He still drools, but not as much.

He has had colds and other respiratory problems. "It seems to me all we did this winter was fight infection," Mrs. Mack said. She said her husband is not physically worse than before, but isn't better, either.

"Whenever he gets himself up physically, he gets a cold or something and we're dragged down again," Mrs. Mack said. "This is what we have now, so we'll make the best of it."

The bidding:

West	North	East	South
Pass	1 ♠	1 ◇	1 ♠
Pass	2 ♠	Pass	Pass
Pass

Opening lead: Seven of ◇.

The big hands usually attract most of the attention. That is not surprising, for one big swing can decide a match, or turn a loser into a winner at the rubber bridge table.

Among experts, however, partscores are the trenches where the battle is fought, with give and take by both sides and an occasional decisive thrust that turns the tide of battle. Today's hand is from a rubber bridge game at New York's renown Cavendish Club.

You need sound values to overcall a one club opening bid with one diamond. That is because you have not consumed any of the enemy's bidding space. But when partner is a passed hand, you can relax your requirements slightly if you want to get in a lead-directing bid. So East interposed in the auction in the event that South should become the declarer, and that proved to be the case.

West dutifully led a diamond, East won the queen and cashed the ace. Then he continued with the eight of diamonds, to show that his entry as in the higher-ranking of the remaining side suits—in this case, hearts. West ruffed and followed instructions by shifting to the jack of hearts. East won the ace and unerringly found the best defense.

From East's point of view, the defensive prospects were bleak indeed. The most he could hope for from his partner was the ace of clubs, so the setting trick had to be developed in the trump suit.

East led a fourth diamond! Declarer discarded from his hand and overruffed West's spade ten with the queen. As the cards lie, declarer could still get home by playing East for J-9-x of trumps, but he was not blessed with ESP. Instead, he led a trump to his king—down one.

Rubber bridge clubs throughout the country use the four-deal bridge format. Do they know something you don't? Charles Goren's "Four-Deal Bridge" will teach you the strategies and tactics of this fast-paced action game that provides the cure for unending rubbers. Some Israeli soldiers go to jail rather than Lebanon

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Ze'Ev Gavish is a computer programmer, Amnon Lichter, a member of a communal farm and Eli Biton, a merchant. They are three of the 25 Israeli soldiers who have gone to jail rather than serve in the Lebanon War.

In a country where wars are regarded as a matter of physical survival, conscientious objection is virtually unknown. The fact that in nine months 25 Israelis have opted not to serve reflects how deeply opposition to the Lebanon War has permeated Israeli society.

A military spokeswoman calls it "a marginal phenomenon." But the anti-war movement claims it is widespread. It says hundreds of soldiers have refused to serve in Lebanon since the June 6 invasion but have been spared jail to avoid publicizing the problem.

The army appears to show a measure of understanding, even tolerance. It is in a tough spot. To ignore the dissenters is to risk a breakdown of discipline. To jail them in large numbers could turn conscientious objection into a national issue. And by forcing them to serve in Lebanon, it risks harming the morale of other troops.

"We consider it primarily a disciplinary problem," says military spokeswoman Maj. Irit Atzmon. "But we deal with each case individually."

THIS IS A citizen's army, resting heavily on reservists who have jobs and families. Many of the objectors are reservists. Many are friendly with their commanding officers in civilian life. "There is no single, all encompassing law to deal with the problem," says Maj. Atzmon.

Most of those who have served jail terms are college-educated Israelis in white-collar jobs. Several come from kibbutzim, or communal farms, bastions of left-wing opposition to Prime Minister Menachem Begin.

The war, which drove Palestinians out of Beirut and has left 25,000 Israeli troops in Lebanon pending withdrawal negotiations, deeply divided Israel.

Ze'ev Gavish, a reserve lieutenant in the military police, was called up in September for a one-month stint at Ansar prison camp in southern Lebanon, where Israel is holding some 5,000 Palestinians on suspicion of serving the Palestine Liberation Organization.

He refused to go. "I was never active in politics," he says, "but I saw this war as a serious degeneration. I don't want any share in it."

HIS SUPERIOR, a lieutenant colonel, was surprised at his refusal. "He argued that people like me should want to serve in Ansar because we could maintain moral standards," said Gavish, 30. "I said I didn't believe those prisoners were PLO agents and they shouldn't be in Ansar."

Gavish was quietly reassigned elsewhere. But in January he was again called to Ansar and refused to go. This time the response was harsh. A field court jailed him for 20 days, and added seven more days when he came out of prison and still wouldn't go to Ansar.

In the end he accepted service in Lebanon, as a guard escorting buses carrying freed Ansar prisoners home.

The anti-war movement emerged in the first month of the Lebanon invasion, when the first reservists came home. Some of them formed up as "Yesh gvul," meaning "There's a Limit." Andre Draznin, one of the founders, says "the idea was to express that there's a limit to what we are willing to do as soldiers."

PEACE NOW, the larger and more established dissident movement, also came out against the invasion, but unlike Yesh gvul, it does not countenance refusal to obey army orders.

"The army's task is to fight for the protection of the citizenry. The Lebanon war doesn't meet this criterion," says Draznin, a combat medic who refused to go to Lebanon but was not jailed. "There was no threat to the life and liberty of the populace that necessitated going to war," he says.

At the start of the war, the army pushed into southern Lebanon in a drive against guerrillas bases from which Palestinians had been raiding villages in Israel. The army pressed all the way to the PLO stronghold in West Beirut.

Bahrain tourist, financial hub of gulf

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — With its pearling trade only a legend and its oil wells running dry, Bahrain is forging ever stronger links with its economically powerful neighbor Saudi Arabia.

In eight years of stunning growth, the 225-square-mile island has become the tourist, banking and financial hub of the Persian Gulf — largely fulfilling the role once played by Beirut in conflict-torn Lebanon.

Youssef Shirawi, the development and industry minister, said the sinking of the first piles of a 15.5-mile, $564 million Saudi-Bahraini causeway in February ranked with the discovery of oil in 1931 — the first strike in the gulf — and the evacuation of British troops in 1971 as landmarks in Bahrain's history. Bahrain was a British protectorate from 1861 to 1971.

"The whole country will change," said Shirawi, sitting in his modest office at the government building here. "We will no longer be an island after 1986. People will go to work in Saudi Arabia in the morning and come back to Bahrain at night."

Manama also is the playground of the gulf, mainly because it is one of the few places in the area where one can legally drink alcoholic beverages. It is an oasis of tolerance and good living, sandwiched between the Islamic fundamentalist regimes of Iran and Saudi Arabia.

At one of its nine deluxe hotels recently, a group of gulf Arab tourists in flowing robes and checkered headdresses sat entranced by a Dutch bellydancer. Just up the street, two American square dancing groups, the Arabian Hoedowners and the Gulf Promenaders, were showing off their stuff.

The London Shakespeare Group is doing "Twelfth Night," and professional wrestling is coming to town.

Bahrain has refused to change its liberal ways in defiance of Iranian leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's strident revival of Iran' historical claim to the island. The U.S. naval task force in the Persian Gulf also is allowed to refuel here.

Most Bahrainis are Shia Moslems, spiritual brothers of Iran's predominant Moslem sect, and the island has been ruled by Persians several times in its long history.

East German art exhibition comes under fire for lack of 'socialist heroes'

BERLIN (AP) — East Germany's first national art exhibition since the communist government gave artists permission in 1978 to paint what they want has come under fire in the official press for its lack of works symbolizing "socialist heroes" and for a nude painting deemed too explicit.

The show has touched off a national debate on whether the government's policy of artistic freedom is being abused.

The nude painting is the work of Willi Sitte, an artist who also is a member of the Communist Party's powerful Central Committee.

His "Couple on a White Sheet" — a nude man and woman — was assailed in a viewer's letter published by the Dresden Communist Party newspaper Sachische Zeitung. Wrote the viewer: "Is this not going too far? Must love, intimate love at that, be fully shown on a painting?"

Sitte's painting and the others are on display at the 9th Art Exhibition of the German Democratic Republic in Dresden, which opened in October and features 3,045 works by 1,511 artists.

The official news agency ADN described the exhibition as "a unique opportunity for an overview of five years of development of art" in East Germany, but said many visitors were disappointed at the lack of works reflecting "the optimism and confidence of our political views and our socialist way of life."

Other official publications complained about the lack of the traditional socialist-hero type of painting.

The 1978 government decision gave artists the green light to follow the schools of their choice so long as their works are neither "decadent" nor "formalistic."

This encouraged a trend away from the Soviet-inspired works dominating the East German art scene after World War II. A favorite subject of this school is a giant figure clutching a flag or hammer.

Problem's root

There is another of those well-intentioned bills currently before the U.S. Senate which even if enacted likely will not bring about greater safety for consumers. The idea behind the Federal Anti-Tampering Act is good, but in reality the root of the problem isn't being addressed.

Most Americans were shocked and horrified last fall when cyanide-laced Extra-Strength Tylenol capsules claimed the lives of several innocent victims in the Chicago area. It became immediately obvious that the possibility of product tampering was a hazard to the American public.

One response to the Chicago area poisonings was better than the one now proposed. Tylenol was immediately pulled off store shelves and didn't return until use of tamper-proof packages was initiated. Putting the capsules into the tamper-proof packaging was a wise move that provided additional protection to consumers and gave them peace of mind about resuming use of the product. It was a proper response to a demonstrably dangerous situation.

The Federal Anti-Tampering Act would only be beneficial in the regard that it imposes substantial penalties on those who tamper with food, drugs and cosmetics sold in interstate commerce. It also provides punishment for those who knowingly make false statements about such an offense.

Statutes already on the law books provide ample opportunity to punish those who knowingly try to injure another. In that respect, the provisions of the Federal Anti-Tampering Act likely would only be of minimal value. Already, though, there are too many overlapping and meaningless statutes; more aren't needed to further impede the judicial system.

What is needed is swift administration of justice. The way to bring about a reduction of the type of criminal activity witnessed in Chicago and other areas last fall is to catch, swiftly prosecute and throw the book at the people responsible. We can't see the legislation in question making that result any more achievable.

Taking forceful action against criminal activity is the key, not passing laws of little value.

Good new course

Australia's new prime minister, Bob Hawke, is calling a week-long economic summit meeting of his administration's leaders in April to set the course for the next three years.

We wish the conference and the new government success. Australia is a staunch ally of the United States and holds the same hopes we do for the future of the Pacific region.

Australia is an important trade and military partner to this country. Ties between the two nations are strong. Australia's soldiers fought side by side with American troops in Africa and in the South Pacific during World War II.

The United States and Australia both are vitally concerned about the preservation of a stable world order, political freedom and economic progress. The two countries have a harmony of views on international issues.

The new prime minister has the mark of a leader. He is a Rhodes scholar, a man of considerable intellect. He is aggressive and unafraid to take on opponents. He is a friend of America.

Australia is in good hands, with Hawke heading the government.

Another View:

Why not Chicago?

The Congressional Budget Officer or the State Department or the Organization of American States should establish a Committee for the Resolution of Where to Celebrate the 500th Anniversary of the Discovery of America. With Columbus Day, 1992, just around the corner, the United States must make plans. The potential for international discord is formidable, and Spain already is rolling the waters.

A Spanish government bureau wants the celebration held in Seville, which is reasonable, and Chicago, which is not. Carl Sandburg discovered Chicago. Besides the choice of a site this side of the Atlantic should be made in the Americas. A U.S. agency for that purpose could be called the Bureau of Columbian Affairs — except that similar bureaus exist in the State Department, but spelled "Colombian" instead of the Anglicized "Columbian." Colombia is the Latin American country named after the navigator, who was called Cristoforo Colombo in his native Italian.

Italians might think the anniversary should be celebrated in Genoa, where Columbus was born. But since he sailed with Spanish backing, Spain has a logical claim to the glory of the man whose name in Spanish is Colon. Accordingly, the American celebration agency could be called the Bureau of Colonial Affairs, but heaven knows what critical resolutions would be introduced in the United Nations if that happened.

Of course Scandinavians would point out that Columbus was a latecome in the American-exploration business, while the Irish could renew their claim that Saint Brendan beat Leif Ericson to this continent by five centuries.

A Madrid newspaper scoffed at the Chicago choice: "It is the city of Milton Friedman and the Chicago boys who appear eager to ruin the economy of every South American country." But a Spanish newspaper's petulance pales before the diplomatic conflict that other choices might provoke. On second thought, we favor Chicago for Columbus in 1992.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Another Nicaraguan war coming

Jack Anderson

WASHINGTON — Another civil war is about to explode in Nicaragua, less than four years after Sandinista guerrillas overthrew the U.S.-backed dictator, Anastasio Somoza.

Thousands of well-armed and trained anti-Sandinista rebels have already infiltrated into northern Nicaragua, and their leaders say they're ready to launch an offensive against the Managua regime. They believe their chances of success are excellent.

Coordinated with this military action, exile leaders of the Nicaraguan Democratic Force (FDN) plan a diplomatic move designed to give their cause international credibility. They intend to create a state-within-a-state — a "Free Nicaragua" — in the area that comes under their control.

By moving into Nicaragua proper from their sanctuaries in neighboring Honduras, the FDN units have already discarded the image of a futile exile movement. Setting up a rival government within Nicaragua's borders would be the next step in the FDN's quest for recognition.

My associate Jon Lee Anderson interviewed FDN leaders in Washington and Miami. They emphasized what they feel are crucial points about their movement:

— Though the core of the FDN's fighting strength is made up of former members of Somoza's defeated National Guard, people from all sides of the political spectrum have joined up. Their common bond is opposition to the Sandinistas' Marxist regime.

— Unlike the Sandinistas, FDN leaders insist, they will hold completely free elections within 18 months; even leftist parties will be allowed to take part.

— The FDN guerrillas say they have no connection with the much-publicized joint exercises held across the border by the U.S. Special Forces and the Honduran army. "We don't have any gringo trainers," an exile leader stressed. "We are all Nicaraguan fighters, fighting inside Nicaragua."

Despite this claim of independence, intelligence sources say the Reagan administration is unquestionably giving at least tacit support to the FDN movement.

The reason for this is the administration's belief that Nicaragua is the key to Central America's future. In a sort of reverse Domino Theory, U.S. planners figure that an ouster of the Sandinistas from Nicaragua would cause the collapse of the leftist guerrillas in both El Salvador and its neighbor to the north, Guatemala.

The reasoning behind this theory is that once the Sandinistas are no longer in power, there will remain no direct airlift route for the Cubans to send arms and advisers to a safe haven on the mainland, from which they can be transported easily to leftist guerrillas throughout Central America.

FDN leaders claim to have wide support in their northern Nicaraguan bridgeheads and to have recruited not only many peasants, but disenchanted Sandinista militiamen as well. They say that for months they have been carrying out reconnaissance and infiltration raids deep into the country's interior.

The FDN claims to have about 6,000 fighters in its various encampments; it needs and expects support of city dwellers, mainly those who helped the Sandinistas overthrow Somoza, but hid their weapons instead of turning them in — "just in case." The FDN may also get help from Miskito Indian guerrillas.

Footnote: A former Sandinista diplomat says Fidel Castro may try airlifting troops to Nicaragua if his Sandinista clients are seriously threatened. In this case, it would behoove the United States to impose a blockade on Nicaragua, he said.

EXECUTIVE MEMO: Energy Secretary Donald Hodel may not be the administration doormat his predecessor, James Edwards, was. A congressional source noted with satisfaction that Hodel has defied the Office of Management and Budget over the Strategic Petroleum Reserve. Congress ordered DOE to fill the reserve at a rate of 220,000 barrels a day throughout 1983, and stipulated that any leftover money due to falling oil prices should be used to increase the reserve. Penny-pinching OMB issued a legal opinion that DOE isn't required to do so, but Hodel responded with a contradictory legal opinion that "the minimum required fill rate is the highest practicable rate," even if it means more than 220,000 barrels a day.

— Matthew Novick was fired as inspector general of the Environmental Protection Administration for alleged improprieties. One of them was having his secretary type up a college term paper for Novick's son, Bob. As a career employee, Novick pere could not be dismissed from federal service outright. He had to be kept on the payroll. So he was detailed to the office of an old buddy, Inspector General James Richards of the Energy Department. And guess what? Young Bob Novick, the cause of Pop's ouster, has worked in the same office as a part-time employee while going to school.

WATCH ON WASTE: Military personnel sent overseas are entitled to store their household goods in this country during their tours abroad. But Pentagon auditors found that as much as $5 million a year may be spent on effects stored long after they should have been picked up. Service personnel have died, retired or simply not bothered to retrieve their household goods. Some effects have been in storage since 1969.

HEMISPHERE REPORT

Latin banker sees improvement

William Giandoni

WASHINGTON — Latin America's best-known international banker is predicting relative prosperity for the other American republics by 1985.

Three factors are working in Latin America's favor, says Antonio Ortiz Mena, president of the Inter-American Development Bank.

— Oil prices are declining.

— Interest rates are dropping.

— The economy of the United States has "re-initiated" its activity, "though this may be a not-very-accelerated recovery," Ortiz Mena told a group of newsmen here recently.

The drop in petroleum prices will help all of the Latin American nations, except the oil exporters, which are Mexico, Venezuela and Ecuador, by cutting the costs of fuel they must import.

The decline in interest rates is perhaps of even greater benefit to the Latin countries, including the oil exporters, because the bulk of their $300 billion foreign debt carries floating interest rates that rise and fall with those in Europe or the United States.

Clearly, though, Ortiz Mena's optimism is based in great part on the recent performance of the U.S. economy.

"The reactivation of the U.S economy is going to have an undoubtedly (favorable) effect on the economies of the rest of the industrialized countries," he reasoned. "All of this is going to translate into greater demand for Latin American products and improvement in prices."

Ortiz Mena indicated that he does not expect oil prices to keep going down.

"We do not think that the oil price drop is a phenomenon that will last a long time," he said. "Reactivation of the economy in the whole world is going to bring a greater demand for petroleum and, as a consequence, a stabilization of the price."

Ortiz Mena questioned fears that the measures being taken to ease the liquidity problems of Mexico, Brazil, Argentina and Venezuela may not be sufficient, or that the austerity they must impose on themselves will have too high a social cost.

Ortiz Mena, who was Mexican treasury minister from 1958 to 1970, during the Lopez Mateos and Diaz Ordaz administrations, and who has headed the bank here since 1971, is "not pessimistic about the possibility that these countries will stick to their commitments."

He insisted, as have other Latin and U.S. bankers and economists, that the problem in Latin America is "liquidity, not insolvency."

Of the total Latin foreign debt of some $300 billion, approximately $75 billion is causing the current difficulties because of its short term and high interest rates. The remainder is long term, payable in relatively easy installments.

Ortiz Mena was emphatic in dismissing talk that the Latin American nations might form a "debtors' cartel," and refuse to make payments on their debt.

"I do not think there is a possibility that could happen," he said.

"The Latin American countries have been meeting with all the banks and institutions that deal with them, trying to reach understandings to continue the service of the debt," he said.

The idea of a moratorium "has been rejected by the Latin American countries as an unsound way to deal with the problem. The countries realize that what they need is new capital to continue their development and, with such an approach, there would be a complete 'dry out' of external resources," he said. A moratorium "offers no advantage to the region. It would be suicidal. It would mean that they would have no more credit. It's not a solution, but rather a very grave complication" of the problem.

Ortiz Mena is of the opinion that "this year and next will be very difficult years" for Latin America. But prospects should improve after that.

Statistics released Sunday, March 20, in the bank's annual report for 1982, suggest that there has been considerable improvement in Latin America in recent years. For example, gross domestic product per capita has nearly doubled since 1960, when it was $823 a year. By 1970 it had risen to $1,118, and by 1981, to $1,554. That increase came despite the fact that population rose from 209,855,000 in 1960 to 357,997,000 last year.

ART BUCHWALD

Sending in troops stirs memories!

"Sergeant, we are sending you to El Salvador to advise the government troops there how to fight the left-wing guerrillas who are winning the war."

"Yes, sir."

"Your orders are to train the government forces to search and destroy the guerrilla hideouts, and give the troops moral support when they are in combat. But under no conditions are you to engage in the fighting yourself."

Art Buchwald

"I understand, sir. I go in with the troops, but I don't fire my own weapon."

"Except, of course, if you are fired upon."

"I got you, sir. What kind of weapons do the guerrillas have?"

"Mostly American. They got them from Vietnam or captured them from El Salvadoran troops, or bought them from the same troops. One of your jobs will be to see that the government officers don't sell their weapons to the other side."

"Yes, sir. Am I supposed to do anything to win the hearts and minds of the Salvadoran people?"

"Of course. That's why we're sending you there. One of your missions is to make sure the government troops don't kill too many peasants or burn down too many villages that are suspected to be harboring left-wing fighters."

"How do I do that?"

"The same way you did it in Vietnam. You explain to the government soldiers that rape, murder and pillaging will not be tolerated by President Reagan. That should stop them."

"It certainly should. Anything I ought to know about human rights?"

"We're not sending you down there to train anyone in human rights. The government of El Salvador has just been given a clean bill of health on human rights by the American government, so I don't want to see anything in your reports on human rights violations on our side. But if you see any committed by the other side, we want to hear about them pronto."

"I understand, sir. How is the morale of the El Salvadoran troops?"

"Excellent, although there have been a number of desertions. Your job is to see that the government troops don't go over the hill."

"Can I shoot them?"

"No, but you can authorize one of the officers you're advising to shoot them. But, for God's sakes, don't put anything in writing."

"How do we know if we're winning the war?"

"We're working up a body count system at the Pentagon that will soon go into effect. We'll expect body count reports from you every day."

"It sounds more like Vietnam all the time."

"This is not a Vietnam operation, and you're not to refer to it as such. This is a rescue operation to uphold a democratic government in Central America, and to protect a freedom-loving people from being taken over by the Communists."

"I gotcha, sir."

"Stop winking. I'm serious. Now you were chosen to be one of 110 American advisers to turn this war around."

"That's not a lot of advisers for a full-scale guerrilla war."

"It's only a beginning. Once we get enough of you in there, Congress will be in no position to stop the president from sending in more American troops to support you."

"I hope so. I don't want to get my keister shot off."

"Sergeant, I have utmost confidence that you can do the job. And one more thing, don't talk to the press. They'll only write how incompetent and corrupt the El Salvador military officers really are."

"Are they?"

"That's top secret information."

Old-time flavor will remain in renovated city hall building

WILLIAMSPORT, Pa. (AP) — In the late 1800s, Councilman Maurice Lundy spent many hours discussing policy inside the spacious 20-by-40-foot council chambers of the Pine Street City Hall.

But that's not the only reason his great-grandson Richard H. Lundy Jr. now owns the vacant structure in Lycoming County.

"I like old buildings," said Lundy, a Williamsport contractor. "I could see potential in it. Besides, it was too pretty to be torn down."

Having narrowly escaped that fate, the former city hall is undergoing extensive restoration that Lundy estimated will cost about $600,000.

He purchased the building in May 1982 for $50,000 after nearly two years of negotiations.

After seven months of tearing out walls and a drop ceiling in the former meeting room, of stripping layers of paint, renewing chipped ornamentation and installing electrical, plumbing and heating work, Lundy says the masterpiece is near completion.

The first tenant — a bank — recently moved in and installed a drive-up window on the south side of the building. Workers are now scurrying to complete first-floor facilities that the Williamsport Chamber of Commerce will soon lease.

Much of the remaining work will be completed after tenants have signed contracts so plans may be made in accordance with their needs, Lundy said.

But the original flavor will remain.

A brick-enclosed elevator shaft that was never completed will become an entranceway for some of the building's office space.

In the former council chambers, a balcony that was sealed off has been reopened and the several steel vault doors will add a touch of days gone by.

Panda acts for sweets

SHANGHAI, China (AP) — Wei-wei, possibly the world's most popular panda, picks up an enormous knife and fork and gobbles a chunk of toffee-flavored sponge, sending his chopstick-using Chinese audience into hysterical laughter every night.

"Eating with knife and fork is the act everyone loves best," says Luo Xinqi, 29-year-old trainer of the giant furry star of the Shanghai acrobatic troupe.

Wei-wei, ("great-great"), a 10-year-old male, is probably the world's only performing panda, says Luo, tossing a strawberry-flavored sweet into the panda's mouth.

His acrobatics represent quite an achievement since giant pandas, although large and adorable, are very clumsy and slow to learn.

Wei-wei is trained with candies, sugar cane, affection and great patience. Giant pandas are not as greedy and hungry as bears, monkeys or dogs, says Luo, so it's more difficult to entice them with sweets.

It took more than one month to train the panda to eat with a knife and fork and two months to train him to lie on his back and juggle a ball with all fours.

"Pandas are slow to learn, but once they master a trick, they never forget," says Luo, who raised the panda (literally "bear-cat") from the time he was a cub and has been the bear's "male nurse" for nine years.

Wei-wei performs almost every night. He pulls a small cart, rides a rocking horse, turns somersaults, goes down a slide and blows a trumpet while standing in a cart pulled by two small dogs.

"Wei-wei loves to be with human beings," says his trainer, "and he likes to hug people. That was okay when he was a cub but now that he weighs more than 100 kilograms (220 pounds) I don't want him to embrace me and knock me down, especially during a show."

Sometimes he misbehaves when he gets excited and instead of turning two or three somersaults, he may turn 50. Occasionally in play he knocks his trainer down, hugs him and tries to pull off his clothes.

He may bite, but lightly and only in fun.

"He has known only love, so he expects it and isn't afraid of other animals," Luo says. "Wei-wei wants to play with the tigers but the tigers want to eat him."

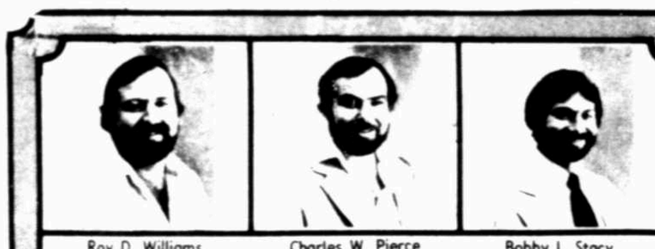

Wei-wei was born in a preserve in Sichuan province, the panda's native home. Nine years ago he was taken to Shanghai for a film documentary on training pandas. He gave his first performance in 1975.

The troupe has tried to mate Wei-wei twice. "Although he is highly qualified — only middle-aged — he hasn't liked either of the lady pandas he met," Luo said.

Every day Wei-wei eats 4 to 6 pounds of bamboo shoots and leaves and 3.3 pounds of a mixture of corn, root vegetables, soybean husks, sugar, cream and salt.

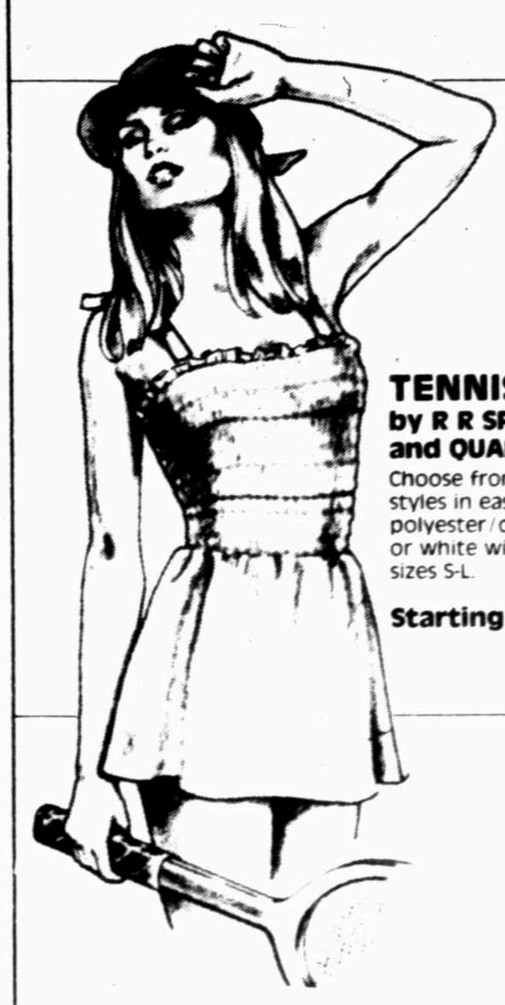

Giant pandas in the wild eat much more and become very fat, but Wei-wei is kept from getting too roly-poly so that he can entertain his fans.

Conductor: Sousa should be heard, enjoyed

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — In a simpler age, John Philip Sousa was America's self-proclaimed "Pied Piper of Patriotism."

The March King was the most popular musician in the United States and perhaps the best known in the world in the early years of the century.

Today his name recalls a time of bandshells and monuments, tricolor bunting on the village green and his most famous tune, "The Stars and Stripes Forever."

Times have changed and Sousa's brand of musical showmanship has fallen from favor, at least with critics.

But Donald Hunsberger, a conductor at the University of Rochester's Eastman School of Music, says Sousa deserves to be heard and enjoyed — and not just on Memorial Day.

"It's taken us 25 to 30 years to wake people up to the fact that a wind ensemble (like the Sousa Band) can give a very serious concert," Hunsberger said.

Something of an entertainer himself, the robust, 50-year-old music professor has recorded two Sousa albums with his student Eastman Wind Ensemble.

Hunsberger recently led the ensemble through a rousing Sousa-style concert for 2,000 people in Eastman Theater, where Sousa himself once performed.

The fast-moving program included a startling variety of music, from Franz Liszt's "Second Hungarian Rhapsody" to a Sousa arrangement of "The Pirates of Penzance."

Faculty members soloed on trombone, timpani and marimba, while a long-legged flutist in tights, top hat and tails paraded on stage to announce encores with hand-lettered placards.

Hunsberger loved it. "Sousa made a direct appeal to the average person, not just the astute concert-goer," he said later. "He just had that magical touch for putting it all together."

During the 1950s, Hunsberger himself was a trombone soloist and staff arranger for the U.S. Marine Band, which Sousa made famous.

Sousa turned the Marine Band from ragtag to world class from 1880 to 1892 while writing such marches as "Semper Fidelis" — the Marine anthem — and the "Washington Post."

The "Washington Post," written for a newspaper essay contest in 1889, became a two-step ballroom hit in America and Europe and helped vault the Post into prominence.

Sousa left the Marines to form the Sousa Band, which he conducted around the world for nearly 40 years until he died in Reading, Pa. — a respected millionaire — in 1932.

Band members wore military-like black uniforms and played with technical perfection, twice a day, seven days a week, for months.

Sousa left his mark wherever he went. Even today, the Marine Band in Washington performs at least one Sousa march in every concert, according to Maj. Charles Erwin, an assistant director.

Most of Sousa's suites and operettas are gathering dust today, but his marches — like "El Capitan" and "Hail to the Spirit of Liberty" — sound as fresh as ever at halftimes and in reviewing stands.

Ironically, Hunsberger said, the sheer familiarity and directness of Sousa's marches make them hard to conduct.

Jail moves to beach

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — A portable jail, complete with a "soothing" pink holding cell, has opened up just a block from the beach, ready to handle the thousands of sun seekers who flock here for the rites of spring.

The makeshift pokey has evolved over the past 15 years from a single tabletop on two trash cans to a full-service processing center featuring two trailers, five holding cells and two portable toilets.

The mini-complex is geared to handle violators of municipal ordinances such as exposure, disorderly intoxication or drinking alcohol in public.

Most lawbreakers — college students, motorcycle enthusiasts attending Bike Week, rock concertgoers and just ordinary sunbathers — can usually pay $35 fines on the spot and waive court appearances.

"It's mutually beneficial all the way around," said Lt. Joe Muffaletto of Daytona Beach city police. "It helps the judges and the clerk clear the dockets. It keeps the jail from overflowing. It saves the tourists time and money."

Those who can't post bonds go to the county jail in DeLand, more than 20 miles way.

Police officers have all the comforts and technical equipment of home base: chairs, tables, fingerprinting and photography equipment.

While waiting for drug analyses or computer background checks, male prisoners wait in one of four red holding-cell trucks on loan from the county jail.

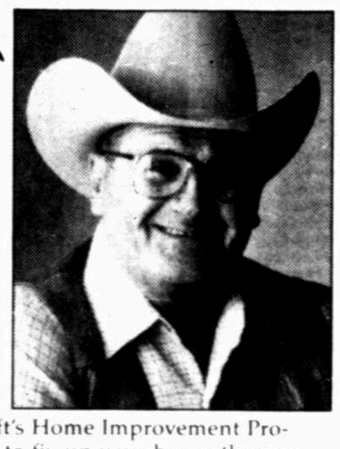

Women have the "pink room," a small silver water tank discarded by the city. Inside it, wooden benches line the cylinder. A telephone, a mesh-covered porthole and graffiti adorn the pink walls.

"It's painted pink because that's supposed to be soothing," said Lt. Joe Muffoletto. "I guess it works. We've only had the phone ripped off the wall three times."

Police opened the movable jail for Bike Week last week, processing more than 300 people a day. But when motorcycle enthusiasts left townbeachside arrests dropped.

Blackwell's bat leads Rebels over Abilene

Lee tied for district lead

Midland Lee's Barry Blackwell continued to terrorize District 4-5A pitchers and teammate John Denton went the distance on the mound for a 6-1 league victory over Abilene High Tuesday at Lee Field.

Blackwell has had seven hits in eight at bats through three 4-5A games, including Tuesday's three-for-three performance for a hot .875 average. Picking up one double, his extra base hits now read three two-baggers and a home run. He's also coming through with runners in scoring position, adding two RBI to the two in previous games.

"What he's doing now is better than he's done in his carrer," said Lee head coach Ernie Johnson. "He did today what he did in San Angelo, getting what I call clutch hits, hits with men in scoring position."

With Darrel Holmes on second base in the first inning after a single and wild pitch by Abilene's Joe Reyes, Blackwell stroked a double into center field for a 1-0 Lee advantage.

Holmes again reached scoring position in the second inning after Abilene second baseman Jim Mobley overthrew first on a double play attempt, putting Holmes on second. A second wild pitch by Reyes moved him to third and Blackwell's single to right brought him across the plate to up the lead to 3-0. Dennis Matta scored the inning's first run on Mobley's throwing error after a single to center and stealing second.

IN THE top of the third inning, Denton threw away his own shutout bid after giving up a hit to Eagle Pat Sigala. With George Shannon at the plate, Denton tried to pick Sigala off first but overthrew his mark, allowing him to move to second. Shannon then stroked an RBI single to left field.

Still, it was the only run the Eagles were able to get off Denton who gave up six hits while striking out nine.

"They couldn't put anything together against John," said Johnson. "John Denton pitched a strong game. When he got behind 2-0, he was always able to come back throwing strikes. That's obvious by his nine strike outs and one walk."

"It's frustrating," said Abilene coach Bob Harmon. "It's the first time we've been held to one run. The minimum we were held to was three. I didn't think there was a right-hander who could hold us to one run. He (Denton) did a good job."

LEE ADDED three runs in the bottom of the third inning on doubles by Ted Leps and Mike Mercurio and a sacrifice fly by Steve Woodlee.

"Basically it was a pretty easy game for us," said Johnson. "They (Eagles) didn't hit the ball well. We're not hitting the ball that good but we're getting some hits. We dinked them to death (Texas League singles falling in the gap)."

The victory gives Lee a 3-0 4-5A record and a 9-6 mark on the season while the Eagles fall to 1-2, 6-8. Abilene's lone district win came against Permian in a makeup game Monday 4-0.

On Thursday, Lee will host Pecos in a non-district matchup. The Rebels will conclude their current home stand with Saturday's game against Permian.

Cooper silences Bulldogs' sticks

Midland suffers first district shutout, falls to 1-3

ABILENE — Abilene Cooper moved into sole possession of third place in the District 4-5A standings Tuesday with a 4-0 victory over Midland High here.

The Cougars trail league co-leaders Midland Lee and Big Spring (both 3-0) by one game with a record of 2-1 while Midland High is tied with three teams for fourth, Odessa High, Abilene High and San Angelo, all at 1-2.

For the first three innings of play, Cooper's Greg Galbraith and Midland High's John Covarrubias were each looking for a shutout victory. Covarrubias lost his bid in the fourth when Cooper brought home two runs while Galbraith kept his going through seven. The Cougars also added one run in each of the fifth and sixth innings.

The Bulldogs will be in Snyder today for a 4 p.m. game and will travel to Odessa on Saturday to take on the Panthers at 2 p.m.

Cooper plays host to league co-leader Big Spring, also at 2 p.m.

Elsewhere around the 4-5A Tuesday, Odessa High took Big Spring to the limit and then some before losing a 5-4 decision in eight innings while San Angelo posted a 6-4 victory over Permian.

Killer Frogs face Nebraska in NIT

By The Associated Press

The Texas Christian University basketball team features an all-senior front line that ranges from 6-foot-8 to 6-10.

That could present some tall problems for Nebraska in Thursday night's National Invitation Tournament quarterfinal game at Lincoln, Neb., according to Husker Coach Moe Iba.

"They're a tough team for us to go against because of their size," says Iba. "They play a good matchup zone defense and the 30-second clock will favor that. They'll also run their motion offense as well as anybody we'll play all year."

The TCU-Nebraska game is one of three NIT contests Thursday night. In other action, Wake Forest meets South Carolina in Greensboro, N.C., and Fresno State plays at Oregon State. The quarterfinal round will conclude Friday night, when Mississippi takes on DePaul in Rosemont, Ill.

Quarterfinal winners will advance to the semifinals Monday in New York's Madison Square Garden. The title game will be played March 30.

TCU is playing some of its best ball of the season. Two weekends ago, the Horned Frogs upset then sixth-ranked Arkansas 61-59 in the semifinals of the Southwest Conference tournament in Dallas. TCU followed that victory with a 62-59 loss to nationally top-ranked Houston in the SWC championship game.

In the first two games of the NIT, the Horned Frogs took a 64-62 decision over Tulsa, the 1981 NIT champion, and then beat Arizona State last Monday night.

"TCU will be a very physical team for us to play," says Iba, thinking mainly of the Horned Frogs' front line of 6-10 center Brian Christensen and 6-9 Doug Arnold and 6-8 Doug Cucinella at forwards.

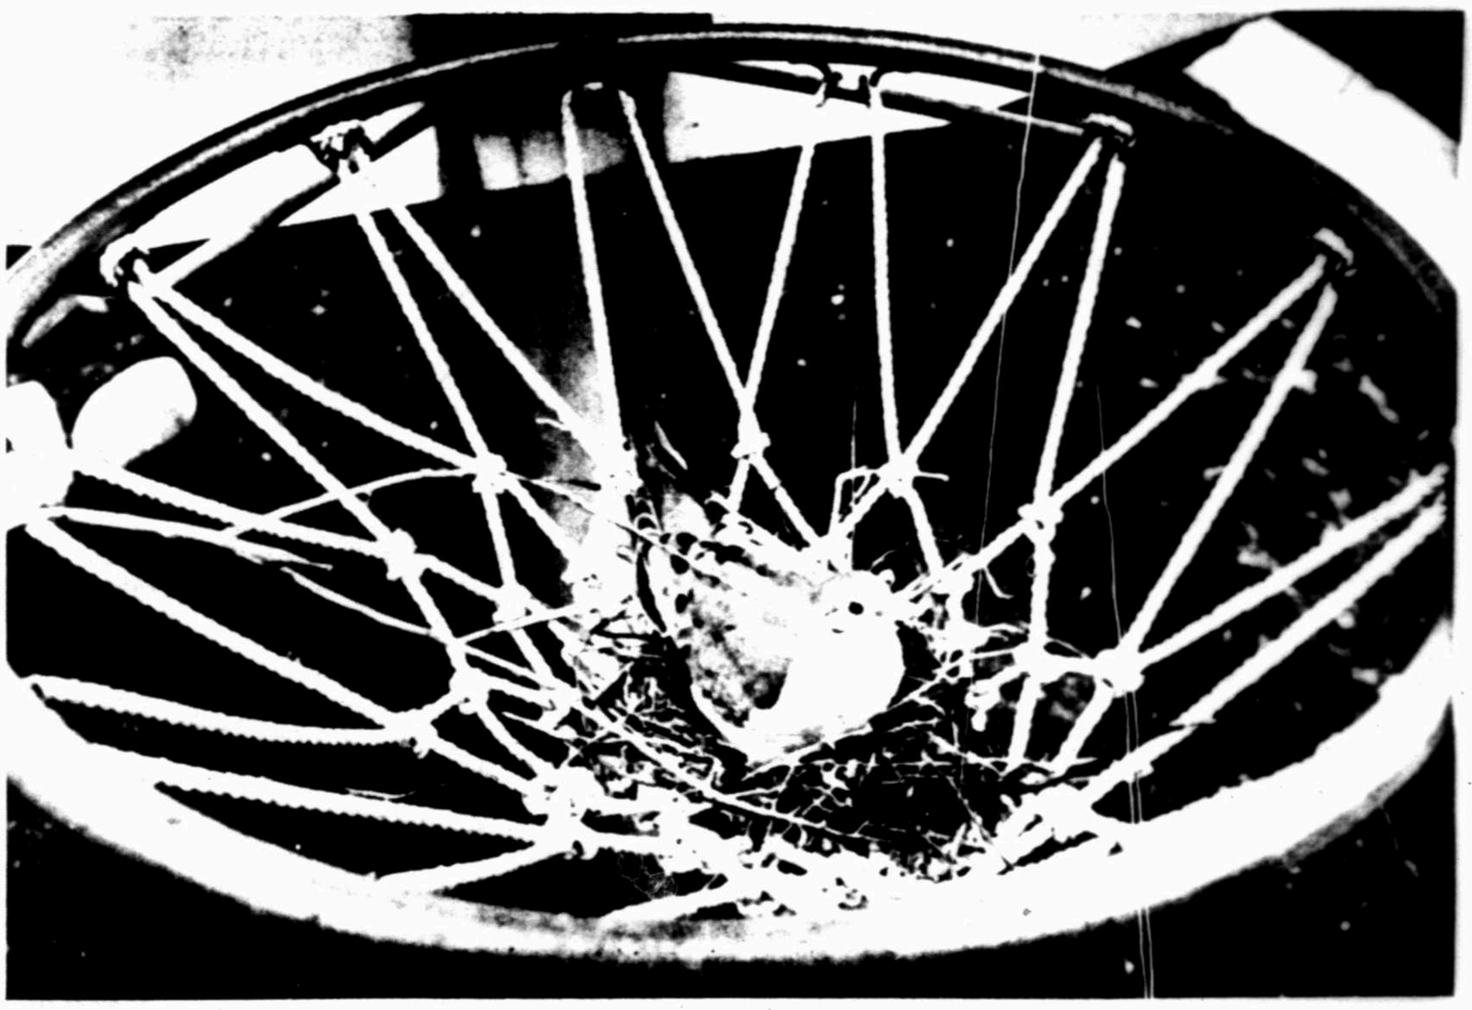

"We're going to have some short practices, so we don't wear our kids down. They're better off fresh. You've got to make sure you have your legs and some bounce in a physical game. You've got to be able to jump."

Nebraska beat Tulane 72-65 in the first round and then knocked out Iona 85-73 in the second round.

In Monday night's other second-round games, Mississippi won 65-57 over South Florida, DePaul downed Northwestern 65-63, South Carolina trimmed Virginia Tech 75-68, Fresno State turned back Michigan State 72-58, Wake Forest beat South Florida 65-57 and Oregon State walloped New Orleans 88-71.

The Ole Miss victory has pumped up Ken Turner, Mississippi's assistant coach. "We're in Newark, just across the bridge," said Turner, implying that he had the New York skyline in his sights.

The most exciting game of the second-round was between DePaul and Northwestern, won by the Blue Devils on a 35-foot buzzer shot by Kenny Patterson. Ironically, Patterson wasn't even first choice to take the final shot for DePaul. The plan formulated by Coach Ray Meyer called for either Bernard Randolph or Tyrone Corbin to take the final shot.

"Spring averages don't mean much. Oh, everybody likes to do well, but until the bell rings, it doesn't mean a thing. The year I hit .300 with the Yankees I hit .182 in the spring. One year I hit .400 with 10 homers in the spring and got off at .160." Reggie Jackson on spring averages.

Cy Young won more games than any other major-league pitcher with 511 victories in his career. But Young didn't win every time he took the mound, not by any means. He also lost more games than any other pitcher, 315.

Cougar's big men ready for Tigers

HOUSTON (AP) - Alvin Franklin, the freshman point guard charged with quarterbacking the University of Houston's powerful inside game, has spent the season trying to learn how a freshman starting guard should behave.

"I don't know how I'm supposed to act or play, so I just go out and play the best I can," said Franklin, who will guide the UH attack Friday night against Memphis State in the third round of the NCAA Midwest Rgional tournament at Kansas City, Mo.

"I wish somebody would tell me so I would know."

The confident LaMarque, Texas, teen-ager earned a starting position because no one told him a freshman wasn't supposed to start for the nation's No. 1 ranked team.

In last Saturday's second-round victory over Maryland, no one told him a 6-0 freshman wasn't supposed to drive the baseline, score a triple-pump basket over a 6-9 opponent and then draw a foul.

His loudest cheering section was the UH bench.

"That move was awesome," fellow guard Reid Gettys said. "I tried to count the pump fakes and I lost track after three. He was so quick. It was just great to see him take it right at their big guy like that."

Franklin, who led the state's schoolboy scorers last year, has had to sacrifice his urge to take the ball to the basket because of UH's powerful inside corps led by 7-0 Akeem Abdul Olajuwon.

Franklin has been forced to play the outward role of the assist man but he still has the heart of a shooter.

"I think I could have averaged maybe 14 points a game this year but I'm doing what it takes for us to win," Franklin said. "I know that I'm building up my confidence now and that my turn is coming. I think I'll be able to shoot more next year."

Franklin's transformation from a high school shooting guard to a college point guard hasn't been easy.

"I guess that basket was the shooting guard coming out in me," Franklin said. "When the season first started, I was timid about shooting but now I look inside and if the pass is not there, I'm confident enough to put it up."

Franklin's confidence now is riding as high as Houston's 23-game winning streak.

"I'm glad I've earned the confidence of the other fellas," Franklin said.

"It makes me feel good that I am handling the pressure and being the point guard for the No. 1 team in the nation."

The Cougars scheduled a closed workout to avoid distractions and plan to leave Thursday for Friday's battle with the 17th-ranked Tigers, who held the No. 1 rank in the nation for one week during the regular season.

Coach Guy Lewis clearly does not enjoy some questions that probe possible weaknesses in his team.

One query sure to raise his voice level several decibles concerns Houston's mild regular season schedule and a theory that a tougher schedule and possibly a loss near the end of the season would give the Cougars more intensity going into the playoffs.

Benefitting from a loss is foreign to Lewis' coaching philosophy.

"I have never known any good that came out of losing a game, I think it's too silly to even discuss," Lewis said. "Any coach who thinks a loss helps has a right to his own opinion but I don't think it's good for a Guy Lewis team."

Knicks do a number on Erving-less Philadelphia

By The Associated Press

The New York Knicks did a number on the Philadelphia 76ers.

Seventy-six, to be exact.

Bernard King hit 16 of 18 shots and finished with 33 points as New York defeated the 76ers 89-76 in National Basketball Association action Tuesday night.

The 76ers' 76 points were 19 fewer than they compiled in their previous lowest-scoring game this season. And they lost for only the 10th time in 67 outings.

"Of course I'm upset," 76ers Coach Billy Cunningham said after the Knicks snapped Philadelphia's seven-game winning streak. "They deserved to win. They outplayed us. It's as simple as that."

The last time the 76ers were held under 76 points was Jan. 20, 1981, when they scored 75 against the Detroit Pistons. In addition, their 32-point first half was their lowest since Feb. 9, 1974 against Washington.

Philadelphia was playing its fifth straight game without star forward Julius Erving, who has a wrist injury, and the 76ers also lost forward Bobby Jones with an ankle sprain in the first quarter.

So the Knicks, who have the No. 1 defense in the NBA, blanketed all-stars Moses Malone and Andrew Toney, who were 6-for-15 and 4-for-15 from the field, respectively.

"The loss of Erving and Jones was a major blow for them, but look how many games Malone and Toney have won for them," Knicks Coach Hubie Brown said. "Without Dr. J, they had won three straight over Boston, Milwaukee and Detroit and that's not chopped liver."

King had 10 points during a 25-4 spree in the first quarter, which ended with the Knicks ahead 33-14. It was 48-32 at halftime.

"In our four previous games with the 76ers, their guards just decimated us," Brown said. "They got 60 and 70 percent of their points on fast breaks. Our main goal tonight was to prevent their guards from penetrating and we did that."

The 76ers, who hit only 12 of 43 shots in the first half and 30 of 85 for the game, cut the deficit to nine on six occasions thanks to tenacious rebounding. Philadelphia won the battle of the boards 52-41, but the shooting of King and Paul Westphal, who hit nine of 14 shots for 19 points, prevented the 76ers from seriously threatening the Knicks.

"A team like Philadelphia is never out of the game," Brown said. "They never give up and that's why they have the record they have."

Franklin Edwards led Philadelphia with 18 points, while Malone had 14.

Robertson calls strike detrimental

ALBUQUERQUE (AP) — National Basketball Association players will strike April 2 unless a new contract is hammered out between the players association and team owners, says former NBA player Oscar Robertson.

"I think a strike would be very detrimental to the good of basketball," he said Tuesday while in Albuquerque for a motivation seminar for employees of a supermarket chain.

The owners have only themselves to blame for the current state of affairs — astronomical salaries, said Robertson, who played for the Cincinnati Royals and Milwaukee Bucks.

"If a guy's going to pay a guy $1 million when he's only worth $100,000, he's crazy," said Robertson, who retired in 1974.

The basic disagreement between the two sides is that the owners want a salary cap and the players want to continue free agency, and Robertson said both sides are steering toward "a head-on collision."

"Boom. That's why they've got to negotiate. They should have started months and months ago," he said.

There has been no contract since last June. The current free agent agreement is good for two more years.

"The owners want to get out of this. The players don't," Robertson said. "But it's a business situation. If the owners don't have the vehicle, then the players don't.

"If I'm an owner, and I don't tamper with your player, there's no problem," he said.

Pace quickens in NBA talks as deadline nears

NEW YORK (AP) — The pace of National Basketball Association labor negotiations is quickening as the players' April 2 strike deadline nears.

The two sides met for the third time this week on Thursday, 10 days before the strike date.

But despite 12 hours of talks since Monday, players association chief Larry Fleisher said Tuesday night that he forsees nothing that would make him consider extending the strike deadline beyond April 2.

Asked if the approach of the deadline meant that negotiations would be held more regularly than they had been since talks began last July, Fleisher said "Unless somebody gets angry, I believe we will continue talking. But nothing has been decided past Thursday. Nothing can be gained by not talking."

Fleisher, in keeping with an agreement that neither side would discuss the content of negotiations, declined to say if there had been any progress in nearly 12 hours of talks this week.

He added, however, that no new proposals had been presented. "Everything we've talked about has been related to what's been brought up before," he said.

"The policy agreed upon by the parties is to make no comment on what takes place at the meetings," said Alex Sachare, a public relations spokesman for the league.

He again declined to say where Tuesday's session had been held, other than that it was in New York. Asked if Thursday's meeting would be in New York, Sachare replied, "No comment."

Sachare said a meeting of the league's board of governors scheduled for Thursday in Chicago had been called off, with no new date set. Commissioner Larry O'Brien had been expected to brief the club owners on the talks' status at the meeting.

The Milwaukee Bucks' Junior Bridgeman, treasurer of the players' association, sat in on the negotiations.

Tom is terrific again; Astros, Rangers lose

Kansas City Royals' George Brett plays ball boy as he flips balls through a hole into a rack that feeds a pitching machine during spring training in Fort Myers, Fla.

By The Associated Press

For the time being, Tom Seaver is Tom Terrific again.

The 38-year-right-hander, winner of 264 games and three Cy Young Awards, held Boston to five hits in seven innings Tuesday as the New York Mets trounced the Red Sox 8-0 in an exhibition baseball game.

After 5½ years with Cincinnati, Seaver is back where he spent his first 10½ seasons in the major leagues. And for a change, he was the Seaver of old rather than the old Seaver who struggled to a 5-13 record in 1982, including a 5.50 earned run average.

And as usual, Seaver, who walked one and struck out three, was his own severest critic.

"I struck out the pitcher on a bad pitch," he said. "I was working on a slider and it was up, but he missed it, and that would have been a bad situation in a game if I had thrown it to a different kind of hitter. It was high in the strike zone."

Another right-hander, John Fulgham of St. Louis, is 12 years younger than Seaver and pitched 10 complete games in 19 starts four years ago but is coming off rotator cuff shoulder surgery. Tuesday, he hurled four scoreless innings, allowing four hits and striking out three as a split squad of Cardinals blanked the Cincinnati Reds 4-0.

Exhibition Baseball

Jorge Orta smacked a two-run homer and Ernie Whitt, Jesse Barfield and Hosken Powell added solo shots as the Toronto Blue Jays walloped another group of Cardinals 10-5.

Chili Davis, who started the spring with an 0-for-15 slump, continued his recent torrid pace with two singles and two doubles — he is on an 11-for-18 tear — in leading the San Francisco Giants past the Seattle Mariners 7-5.

Jerry Reuss pitched seven innings and hit three singles as the Los Angeles Dodgers routed the Houston Astros 14-4. The Dodgers broke the game open with six straight hits in the fourth inning. Mike Marshall homered.

Ex-Dodger Steve Garvey hit his first home run in a San Diego uniform, a first-inning shot off Milwaukee's Moose Haas, as the Padres defeated the Brewers 6-1.

Lynn Garrett homered in the 11th inning to give the Oakland A's a 2-1 victory over the Cleveland Indians. Rick Sutcliffe, the American League ERA leader last season, tossed six shutout innings for Cleveland.

Pascual Perez and Brian Fisher shut out Texas on seven hits and Bruce Benedict's third-inning single accounted for the only run as the Atlanta Braves beat the Rangers 1-0.

Bill Gullickson and Ray Burris combined on a five-hitter as the Montreal Expos blanked a Kansas City Royals split squad 3-0.

Dick Schofield's two-run double highlighted a five-run fourth inning against Chuck Rainey that gave the California Angels a 5-3 victory over the Chicago Cubs.

Richie Hebner had three hits and four RBIs to lead the Pittsburgh Pirates to a 10-5 victory over the Detroit Tigers.

Tony Bernazard doubled home two runs and Pat Tabler drove in two more with a triple and single as the Chicago White Sox edged the Minnesota Twins 6-5. Another White Sox squad whipped the other Royals squad 8-2 as Britt Burns allowed one run in six innings.

The Philadelphia Phillies and Baltimore Orioles played to a 3-3 tie in a game that was called after 13 innings.The Orioles loaded the bases with none out in the bottom of the 13th but rookie Ed Wojna retired the next three batters.

There're old Phillies in NL

By BUD SHAW
Copley News Service

CLEARWATER, Fla. — Richie Ashburn, the Philadelphia Phillies' play-by-play announcer and former member of the 1950 Whiz Kids, swears there is absolutely no truth to the rumor that the team has asked him to suit up this season.

"Can't be done," Ashburn explained. "But only because the Mets still own my contract."

These are the Over-The-Hill Phils, a team that hopes to become the rage of the National League East and nursing homes everywhere, a team that only a grandmother could love.

With Steve Carlton expected to pitch opening day, the Phillies may very well field a starting nine that averages 35 years old. Walkers will not be allowed on the base paths but surgical stockings will. The most popular clubhouse game? Bingo, of course.

In putting together a team to celebrate their 100th year of existence, the Phillies signed Joe Morgan (39) and Tony Perez (40) in the off-season. That they happen to be joining Pete Rose (41), Carlton (38), Ron Reed (40), Tug McGraw (38) and Bill Robinson (39) is the reason why this team has become known as the Wheeze Kids.

"We're old and we know it," Perez said. "But we also know that we can still play the game. It's just been a lot of fun so far, being back together with Pete and Joe. We're keeping each other loose, just like we did back in Cincinnati."

"It's nice to be here," Morgan says, "but I'm not here for a reunion, you know?"

The Phils picked Perez off the Boston Red Sox scrap heap after he had been used only sparingly in 1982. Pete Rose did not cast the deciding vote but he helped convince the Phils that Perez' bat was still alive and that his presence in a clubhouse as humorless as their own certainly wouldn't hurt any.

"Our whole ballclub in Cincinnati revolved around him," Rose said. "A guy like him can keep a team together. It's just great to have old 'Doggie' back."

The acquisition of Morgan was more a roll of the dice, if only because he will have to be an everyday player at a position Manny Trillo treated as an easel. With Trillo gone to Cleveland, the Phillies hope Morgan can repeat last season's performance when he hit .289 with 14 home runs and 61 RBI for the Giants — his best year since 1976.

Along with Morgan, the Wheeze Kids also picked up relief pitcher Al Holland, who, at the age of 30, is a babe by Philly standards. Lost in the deal with the Giants was starting pitcher Mike Krukow, one of the more dependable arms on a staff that last year pretty much began and ended with Carlton.

"We're going to have an explosive club," Rose promised. "I don't think you're going to see too many 1-0 or 2-1 games when we're playing. A lot depends on our pitching. But you can say that every year and you can say that about every team in the league. I don't think it's that big of a deal."

For his part, Rose was less than his spectacular self in 1982. The last time he hit less than the .271 he recorded this past year was 1964. Manager Pat Corrales, who used to feel old at 41, has suggested that he will spell Rose at times this year. Rose, of course, has suggested that he will not.

Lloyd opens Slims play

NEW YORK (AP) — Chris Evert Lloyd, intent on regaining her spot as No. 1 in the world in women's tennis, begins a major push tonight when she takes on Zina Garrison in the first round of the $350,000 Virginia Slims Championships of New York.

Lloyd, seeded second, lost the No. 1 spot to top seed Martina Navratilova last year, although she captured her sixth U.S. Open singles title and defeated Navratilova in the final to annex her first Australian Open crown.

The select 16-player field at Madison Square Garden will get underway when Sylvia Hanika of West Germany meets Kathy Rinaldi, who will turn 16 on Thursday.

Other matches tonight will send two-time U.S. Open champion Tracy Austin against Virginia Ruzici of Romania, while Bettina Bunge of West Germany will take on Bonnie Gadusek.

On Thursday, other first-round pairings will pit Navratilova against Hana Mandlikova of Czechoslovakia, Evonne Goolagong of Australia against Pam Shriver, Wendy Turnbull of Australia against Barbara Potter and Billie Jean King against Andrea Jaeger.

Goolagong, who has captured Wimbledon twice, received a wild-card entry into the invitational tournament. The others are the top 15 players on the Women's Tennis Association computer.

Although Navratilova is heavily favored to capture her fifth title this year — she won the Virginia Slims' stops at Washington, Houston, Chicago and Dallas, the only multiple winner in the first seven tournaments of 1983 — she is a little wary.

"You guys just about gave me the check and trophy before it started last year," she told newsmen. "I'm not going to let you do that this time."

Last year, it was the Avon Championships, and Navratilova breezed into the finals where she was upset by Hanika. Navratilova lost only twice more in 1982, to her doubles teammate, Pam Shriver, in the quarterfinals of the U.S. Open and to Lloyd in the final of the Australian Open.

In December, she again met Lloyd, this time in the final of the Toyota Championships, and dropped the first set. She hasn't lost a set since.

California's celebrity tax labeled ridiculous

By The Associated Press

To some, California's tax on out-of-state athletes is "a nuisance." Others say it is "ridiculous."

Yet California persistently enforces its law — which taxes professional athletes on money they theoretically earn in the state — and even boosted the percentage it gets this year.

Such a tax is not unique. States such as New York and Wisconsin have similar laws and collect from athletes. Other states, like Louisiana, have such provisions but don't go too far out of their way to get their money.

"You know what it's like to fill out your tax returns. It's a burden," says Robert Pickel, vice president in charge of finance for the Buffalo Sabres of the National Hockey League. He fills out the team's California tax forms. "Imagine doing that for 20 players."

"I think it's ridiculous," Bob Pulford, general manager of the Chicago Black Hawks of the NHL, says of California's tax. "It's not fair to tax people on one or two games."

Adds Mel Lowell, controller of the New York Rangers of the NHL and New York Knicks of the National Basketball Association: "This is just a nuisance tax. For all the time and effort it takes, the revenue they get is just meaningless."

This year, meanwhile, California expects to collect even more from its so-called "celebrity tax," which also affects rock stars and other show biz-types. Facing a state deficit that could hit $1.5 billion this year, the state has changed the law to raise an anticipated extra $25 million.

Ben Miller, a California state tax attorney who works heavily with the provision, explained how the change would affect a player for an out-of-state major league baseball team that plays one-eighth of its games in California.

"If you've got an athlete who makes $200,000 a year, and one-eighth of his salary comes from California, we figure one-eighth of $200,000 is $25,000, and that's the income we tax."

In past years, the player would look up $25,000 on state tax tables and figure a tax of about $500, he said. But effective this year, for the first time, the new law applies.

"Now we compute what the state tax would be on a $200,000 income and say one-eighth of the tax on a $200,000 income is the amount you pay in California," Miller said. "It's a big difference, and these people are going to start screaming. Where they used to have a tax liability of $400 or $500, it's going to be a tax liability of $4,000 or $5,000."

Says Larry Bowa, shortstop for the Chicago Cubs: "I don't think it's right but there's nothing you can do about it. What they say is any place you play, they can take your money."

New York State has imposed a similar tax on out-of-state athletes since its personal income tax was first instituted in 1919. New York's tax is now levied on the same sliding scale all state residents are subject to: 2 percent on $1,000, up to 10 percent on $17,000 of income and above.

Warren Brundidge of the state Department of Taxation and Finance says New York's tax "really doesn't apply to anyone except those in the superstar category."

Brundidge said teams are supposed to withhold the New York State taxes from their players' paychecks and forward the money to the tax department, a policy he admits doesn't work too well. But since the non-resident tax brings in "so little" money, he said the state doesn't devote much effort toward making sure out-of-state teams comply.

Wisconsin takes in about $50,000 a year from the paychecks of professional athletes, and almost every team that plays in the state appears to be complying, says Daniel Smith, administrator of the state Income, Sales, Inheritance and Excise Tax division.

Missouri, Virginia and Oregon also have such taxes, although officials admit the amount of money they take in through them is negligible.

Louisiana also has such a tax, but Virgil Brady, deputy assistant secretary of the state tax department, says the law is hard to enforce.

"When it comes down to it, I imagine that a lot of people don't file returns," Brady said. "We don't have an elaborate system to check on who is filing and who isn't."

Ohio, Michigan and New Jersey do not have such taxes.

"It would be an administrative nightmare," said John Fuchs, a spokesman for New Jersey's Department of Treasury.

BOWLING BEAT

Garcia engineers perfection

By RANDY ISENBERG

Rick Garcia, a mechanic by trade and a 165 average bowler on the side, hit the jackpot while bowling in the Exxon Mixed League last Thursday at the Dellwood Lanes.

Garcia ran a string of 12 strikes in a row for a perfect 300 game. Garcia was hitting on all cylinders during his special night, but he saved the best to last. Garcia began the evening with a 200 game and followed with a 193, both well above his average. But he followed with perfection in what will be a night to remember.

After Garcia had completed seven strikes in a row, over 200 bowlers and spectators began gathering to watch the year's first league 300 game bowled. After the first strike in the 10th frame, a quiet calm gripped the crowd. The 11th strike brought thunderous approval and applause followed the 12th strike.

The 300 game will earn Garcia a century emblem for bowling 100 pins over his average.

Mario Jimmenez continues his assault on the Most Improved Bowler record. Bowling in the Friday Nite Owls, Jimmenez rolled an 11 strike 279 game and a 733 for three games. The series was the high for the week in Midland. Jimmenez, a teacher at Sam Houston, had a 159 average last year, but owns a 179 average this year.

Joyce Straughan paced the women bowlers with a 652 series on the strength of a 266 game while bowling in the Wednesday Ladies Scratch League. Earlier in the week, Joyce rolled games of 205-212 for a 761 four game set.

JoAnna King also cracked the 600 barrier with a 615 series on the strength of a 232 game. Carol Hutchison rolled a 247 game and 580 series.

Bowling in the Civic Commercial League, Leo Rodriquez rolled a 258 game and 673 series and then jumped to the Jack & Jill League for a 279 game and 696 series.

Several Midland bowlers produced achievements that will be recognized. Marsha Gephart, with a 125 average, rolled a 637 game to go 112 pins over her average for another century patch. Roland Moreland and Gail Hubbard also broke the 100 pins over average mark. Moreland had a 237 game while Hubbard had a 232 game, both exactly 100 pins over average.

Dennis Brewer rolled a triplicate 202 for a 606 series. Brewer will receive an award honoring his triple score. Gail Horsburg converted the "Big 4" split (4-6-7-10).

Mom worries about coach

CHARLESTON, S.C. (AP) — There's more to life than coaching the nation's small-college basketball champions, as College of Charleston Coach John Kresse was reminded Sunday morning.

The night before, Kresse's Cougars defeated West Virginia Wesleyan 57-53 in the championship game of the National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics tournament in Kansas City, Mo.

"Trying to keep things in perspective, our first phone call early Sunday was to mom in New York," Kresse said. "At 7 a.m. she had not gotten the scores. I called her at 7 and told her the Cougars had won the national title.

"She said that was fine but asked, 'What happened to your voice?' and 'Are you taking care of yourself Johnnie?'" the coach recalled.

Kresse was hoarse from coaching his club through the five-game tournament.

"The significance of the event is just starting to hit home," said Kresse.

The College of Charleston became the first team in NAIA history to win the crown on its first trip to the tournament.

"The most difficult game was the championship game when we were going for all the marbles," Kresse said. "I feared a letdown after defeating giant-killer Chaminade."

Does a national championship mean Kresse is headed for bigger things?

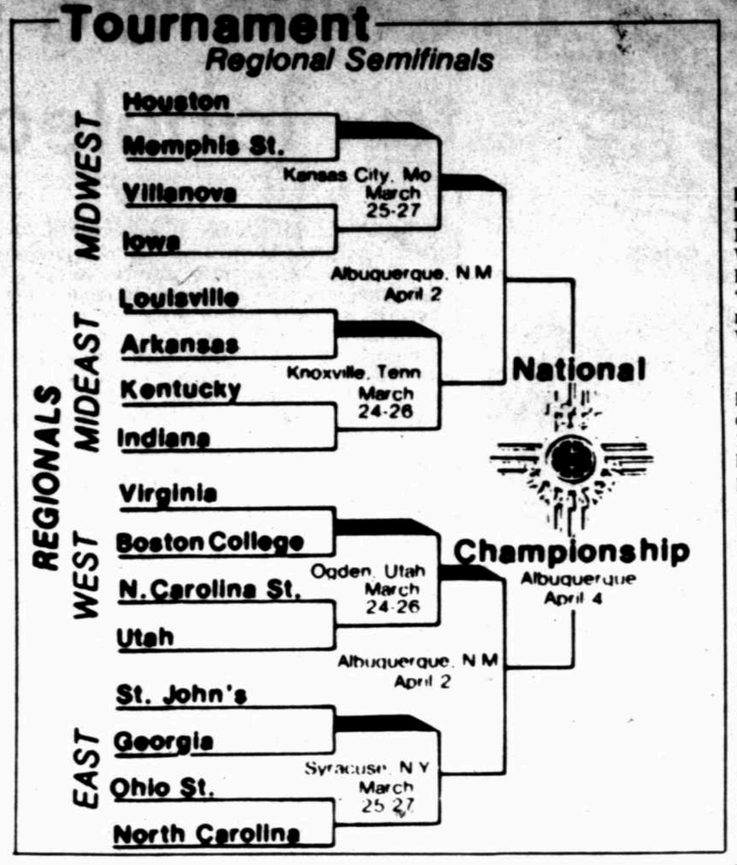

Not right now, he says.

"I go by it on a day-to-day and a season-to-season formula. A year back I packed my bags and had gone to Davidson but after a week realized my heart was in Charleston," he said.

"At this moment I am very happy with the college and the charming city of Charleston."

Gerutailis cleared of drug charges

NEW YORK (AP) — Tennis star Vitas Gerulaitis has been cleared by a federal grand jury of allegations that he had agreed to purchase $20,000 worth of cocaine.

Following a year-long probe, U.S. Attorney John S. Martin Jr. announced Tuesday that no charges would be filed against Gerulaitis, who currently is ranked fifth in the world and known for his jet-setting lifestyle.

Martin said he would not press misdemeanor charges, though he could do so without an indictment. And he said the grand jury action marked the end of the Gerulaitis investigation.

"I'm just happy it's ended," Gerulaitis told reporters, via a telephone hookup between the office of his lawyer, Thomas Puccio, and Milan, Italy, where he was waiting to play his first-round match in the Cuore Cup tournament.

"I know that both sides did what they both felt was correct and just," Gerulaitis said. "I'm just happy with the result."

Gerulaitis, a Brooklyn-born resident of Kings Point, said his family was "greatly relieved" at the outcome of the investigation, though he said he always believed he would be exonerated.

Puccio praised Martin and the grand jury for conducting the case in "a highly professional and conscientious manner."

Martin's office rarely comments on the actions of a grand jury that does not indict, but he said he felt in this case he had to make them public because of the publicity the case had received.

Martin said the grand jury "found a lack of sufficient evidence to bring criminal charges against Mr. Gerulaitis with respect to allegations involving a cocaine transaction engaged in by Tony Goble, an acquaintance of Mr. Gerulaitis."

Goble, 36, a Florida backgammon player, was convicted last Sept. 2 of conspiracy to buy a share of synthetic cocaine from federal undercover agents.

In his conversations with the agents, Goble boasted that he was a close friend of Gerulaitis, whose earnings of $450,875 ranked eighth last year. He has won $2,251,466 in his career.

Dolphins being evicted

MIAMI (AP) — City officials took the first formal step Tuesday toward evicting the Miami Dolphins from the Orange Bowl by notifying the National Football League that the franchise is behind on its rent payments.

The NFL response, for the moment at least, was a verbal punt.

"It seems to be a dispute between the Dolphins and the city," said league spokesman Jim Heffernan.

Islanders lose Patrick title

By The Associated Press

Even when you beat the New York Islanders, you still have to respect them.

"They're still the best team in hockey until they lose the championship," says Boston Bruins goalie Pete Peeters. "They might win a fourth."

Peeters' comments came Tuesday night after the Bruins beat the Islanders 3-1 in Uniondale and mathematically eliminated the three-time Stanley Cup champions from winning the Patrick Division title.

"We outplayed them, but they made use of all their opportunities," said Islander goalie Billy Smith. "We played well, but got no breaks. We hit crossbars and missed open nets. What can you do?"

Meanwhile, things were falling into place for the Bruins — particularly shots by Rick Middleton and Tom Fergus. Speaking of his key second-period goal, Middleton said:

"It went off somebody's stick and I just grabbed it. After I got by their defenseman (Stefan Persson), Smitty (Islander goalie Billy Smith) went down, so I went upstairs. Tonight, we played very well defensively, like we did in the middle of the year."

After the Bruins opened the scoring on Wayne Cashman's first-period goal, Middleton picked up a loose puck near the Islander blue line, and faked out both Persson and Smith at 1:06 to give the Bruins a 2-0 lead. It was Middleton's 43rd goal of the season.

The Islanders struck back at 13:11 as Mike Bossy swept a 20-footer past Peeters on a power play. The goal, Bossy's 55th, ruined Peeters' bid for his ninth shutout, which would have tied the club record set by Terry Sawchuk in 1955-56.

At 18:18, Fergus scored the goal that broke the Islanders. Taking a drop pass from Luc Dufour, Fergus whacked in a 25-footer from the slot for his 27th goal, giving the Bruins a 3-1 lead.

NHL Roundup

Blues 4, Whalers 1

Jorgen Pettersson scored two goals, including the game-winner, as St. Louis beat Hartford to hand the Whalers their 50th defeat of the season. Brian Sutter also scored two goals for the Blues, both coming in the final period.

Canadiens 6, Kings 5

Second-period goals by Robert Picard and Mark Napier broke a 2-2 tie and Montreal held on in a wild finish to beat Los Angeles.

Larry Murphy brought the Kings within 4-3 with a power-play goal at 12:51, but Mario Tremblay, who also had two assists, got that one back for Montreal 1:48 later by drilling his 30th goal past Kings goaltender Gary Laskoski.

U.S. wins second in World Hockey

TOKYO (AP) — The United States took an early lead Wednesday and went on to beat Rumania 6-2 in the Group B action at the World Ice Hockey Championships.

The victory was the second for the undefeated Americans and put them in first place in the third day of the eight-nation contest.

Mark Kumpel, assisted by Mike Fidler, put the U.S. ahead by scoring at 15:50 in the first period. Kumpel had another goal in the third period.

American Steve Jensen gave his team its second goal at 2:55 in the second period.

At 9:26 in the second period, Rumanian Vasile Hutanu scored his country's first goal on an assist by Gheorghe Justinian. The second Rumanian goal came at 18:04 in the third period by Laszlo Solyom.

Other American scorers were Fidler, Ron Wilson and Steve Ulseth.

In first round action yesterday, the Americans tattooed Yugoslavia 13-2.

Displaying sharp shots and teamwork, the Americans trounced Yugoslavia in the squad's first match of the Group B.

"If we play this type of hockey, we will be successful in clinching the group title," Art Berglund, the team's deputy general manager, said after the game.

The U.S. Team, favored to win the eight-nation round-robin contest, met a stiff Yugoslavia defense in the first period, scoring only once, but overpowered it with six goals in each of the final two periods in the game, played before 1,500 spectators at a special hockey rink set on Tokyo's National Swimming Stadium.

U.S. Coach Lou Vairo said the combination of 17-year-old Bryan Lawton, a Rhode Island high school student, former Los Angeles Kings player Steve Ulseth and Boston college player Gary Sampson worked well to win the game.

Olympic hero back in NHL

BOSTON (AP) — Former U.S. Olympic hockey goalie Jim Craig is back in the National Hockey League.

Craig agreed to a contract with the Minnesota North Stars through the end of the 1983-84 National Hockey League season, his attorney said Tuesday.

Craig, 25, currently playing with Team USA in Japan, could be available to play for the North Stars at the end of the regular season and in the playoffs, said the attorney, Bob Woolf.

He could have signed with two other NHL teams, but the Minnesota situation was "the most wholesome," Woolf added.

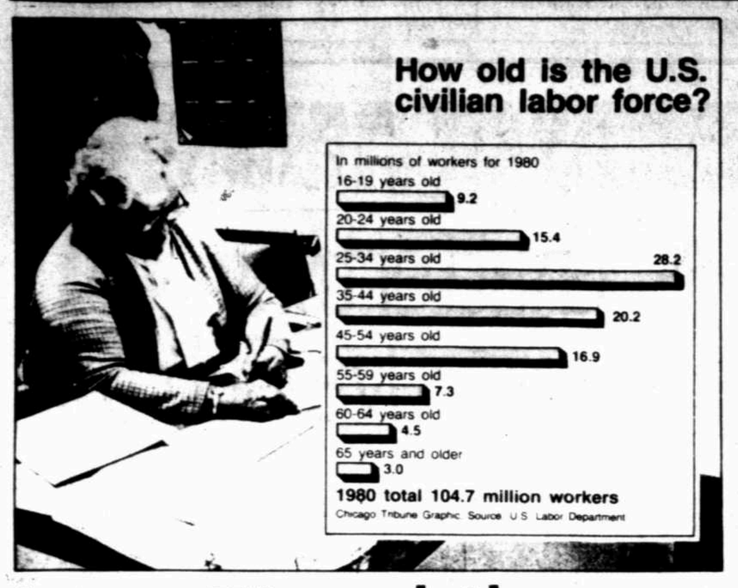

Craig, the goalie on the 1980 American team that won the gold medal in the Winter Olympics, has been playing with Team USA, from which much of the 1984 Olympic team is expected to come.

After the 1980 Olympic triumph, Craig played four games with the Atlanta Flames. In the following off-season, the North Easton, Mass., native was traded to Boston. He played 23 games for the Bruins in 1980-81 and compiled a 3.68 goals against average.

He spent the 1981-82 season in the minors and was in the Bruins' training camp last summer, but did not make the team.

Ixtoc spill settlement slight

HOUSTON (AP) — SEDCO Inc., manufacturer of the offshore drilling rig that blew out in the Gulf of Mexico in 1979, will pay Texas coastal businesses less than 1 percent of the damages they had sought to recover from history's worst oil spill.

U.S. District Judge Robert O'Conor gave preliminary approval Tuesday to a settlement under which SEDCO, the Dallas drilling company founded by former Gov. Bill Clements, would pay businesses more than $2.1 million for damages stemming from the Ixtoc I oil spill.

Shrimpers, fishermen, motel and hotel owners and holders of other private interests had asked for $350 million in four class action suits arising from the 1979 spill that fouled Texas beaches, said Theodore Dimitry, attorney for SEDCO.

"When a publically held company has $350 million in claims against it, there is some inclination to get rid of those claims," Dimitry said in explaining why SEDCO settled out of court with the businesses.

Sidney Ravkind, a Houston attorney who represented a group of South Padre Island tourist businesses, had admitted "the actual damages of our clients would be very difficult to prove."

The claims alleged lost revenues from tourist income and from harm done to the fishing industry.

O'Conor set a June 9 hearing to determine how to divide the settlement.

SEDCO's written statement said the company denies fault and legal liability.

SEDCO settled with the federal government March 2, agreeing to pay $2 million to settle all claims. The government had asked for $12.5 million for the cleanup and an unspecified amount for damage to natural resources.

The major action against SEDCO that remains unsettled was filed by the state.

Permargo, a Mexican firm holding an exploration contract with the country's national oil company, was drilling in the Bay of Campeche off the coast of Mexico June 3, 1979, when the well blew out and spewed about 100 million gallons of crude oil over several weeks.

The drilling company was using a semi-submersible SEDCO-135 rig.

SEDCO vowed to "pursue its rights to be fully indemnified by Permargo in accordance with its contract" in a statement distributed after Tuesday's settlement.

Brian Berwick, assistant attorney general with the environmental protection division, said Texas still has an action pending against SEDCO, asking for "in excess of $10 million for the environmental harm done by the oil that landed on Texas' beaches" and coastal waters.

He said the state has filed similar suits against Pemex, the Mexican national oil company, and Pemargo.

Texas is seeking to recover tax revenues lost because of the harm to the tourist industry, Berwick said.

IPAA hails decision

WASHINGTON (SWN) — The Independent Petroleum Association of America (IPAA) has hailed a Supreme Court decision to expedite oral arguments on the constitutionality of the "windfall profit" tax on crude oil.

IPAA and the Justice Dept. had both requested the case be heard in April providing a greater likelihood of a decision on the two-year-old lawsuit before the end of May.

The "windfall profit" tax was ruled unconstitutional by U.S. District Judge Ewing T. Kerr last November in Cheyenne, Wyo., as it exempts new oil produced above the Arctic Circle, except the Prudhoe Bay Field on the North Slope of Alaska.

IPAA, representing 7,500 independent domestic oil and natural gas producers, filed the lawsuit against the government in October of 1980, contending the constitution requires all federal taxes to be uniform.

"We are most pleased by the court's announcement," said Lloyd Unsell, executive vice president of IPAA.

"Domestic oil production is already in an economic slump and the prolonging of this case would continue a climate of uncertainty for independent producers across the country.

"The declining price of domestic crude oil in addition to this crippling excise tax has forced the shutdown of more than half of our operable rigs at a time when this country should be working toward energy independence," added Unsell.

"Every idle rig in America denotes greater reliance on imported energy."

InterFirst hikes loan loss reserve

DALLAS (AP) — Loan loss reserves of InterFirst Corp., the state's largest bank holding company, have been increased by $18 million because of "substantial adversity" in the energy industry, a company official says.

The larger reserves will trim the holding company's first-quarter earnings projections by one-third, InterFirst chairman Elvis L. Mason said.

Mason, making the announcement concurrently in Dallas and to security analysts in New York, said the bank holding company would increase its loan loss reserve in the first quarter of 1982 to cover possible loan losses of $33 million.

The provision would lower InterFirst's 1983 first-quarter earnings to $36 million, down from $54 million during the same period a year ago, said Mason.

"This pattern could hold true for the remainder of 1983, depending upon future developments," Mason said in a speech to the securities analysts. "We may well be too conservative in these judgments. But if we are wrong, we prefer to err on the conservative side — for the protection of our customers and shareholders."

Banks maintain reserves to cover loan losses and take the funds directly from earnings. InterFirst had a loan loss reserve of $152 million at the end of 1982, equal to 1.2 percent of its outstanding loans.

One analyst who attended the presentation said Wall Street had been expecting 1983 to be a tough year for Texas banks. But analyst J. Frederick Meinke said that the size of InterFirst's provision was a surprise.

"There is little encouragement in the outlook for 1983," Mason said.

• • •

DALLAS (SWN) — Dallas-based InterFirst Corp. today announced it would lower the annual percentage rate (APR) for all InterFirst-issued MasterCard and Visa credit cards throughout Texas to 18 percent effective April 20.

J. Jack Hays, vice chairman of InterFirst Bank Dallas, said the systemwide reduction from the current 21 percent APR was made after a review of rapidly declining rates for the past several months.

The action will affect more than 300,000 holders of credit cards issued by InterFirst's 51 subsidiary banks across the state.

Hays said the reduced rate would apply to statements received after April 20. He added that under current Texas law the maximum rate InterFirst banks could charge on credit cards is more than 22 percent.

Geo/Sat Comm spuds sputnik

HOUSTON (AP) — Geosource Inc. and Satellite Business Systems soon will provide customized commercial satellite communications services to the oil industry, officials announced Tuesday.

The company, GEO/SAT COMM, will provide satellite voice and data communications by small, transportable earth stations to remote drilling sites and offshore rigs in the United States.

J.J. Marsh, president of the new company, said a network control center and a 12 meter dish antenna were being constructed in Houston and service is expected to begin later this year.

Marsh said the service will allow customers to increase productivity, reduce drilling costs and transmit large volumes of data quickly.

Geosource, a wholly-owned subsidiary of Aetna Life & Casualty based in Houston, provides high technology products and services to the petroleum industry. SBS, located in McLean, Va., is a satellite communication carrier owned by Aetna, COMSAT and IBM.

Bankers taking heat from Congressman

WASHINGTON (AP) — The banking industry has been accused by the chairman of a House banking subcommittee of failing to move aggressively enough to reduce interest rates on auto, consumer and home mortgage loans.

Rep. John J. LaFalce, D-N.Y., told a Texas banking official during a subcommittee hearing Tuesday that "the financial industry has got to do more to help lead our country out of its economic recession."

"I don't think the financial community is doing nearly enough," LaFalce said during a hearing on consumer interest rates held by the subcommittee on economic stabilization.

LaFalce's comments came after William E. Gibson, chief economist of RepublicBank Corp. of Dallas, testified that financial institutions were making a "stepped up" commitment to the mortgage market.

Gibson said that "mortgage rates are coming down ... car loan rates are coming down ..."

LaFalce then asked whether banks were experimenting with variable rate auto loans, under which the interest rate would be tied to fluctuating market rates for capital.

"I think it's coming," replied Gibson, who represented the American Bankers Association, which includes most of the nation's full service banks. "I suspect there are institutions out there experimenting with it right now."

But LaFalce complained that such creative approaches to helping finance consumer purchases were not widespread enough, and warned that Congress was expecting some action.

Gibson responded that "the general structure of rates are coming down" and that, "I think the banks kind of understand the feeling here."

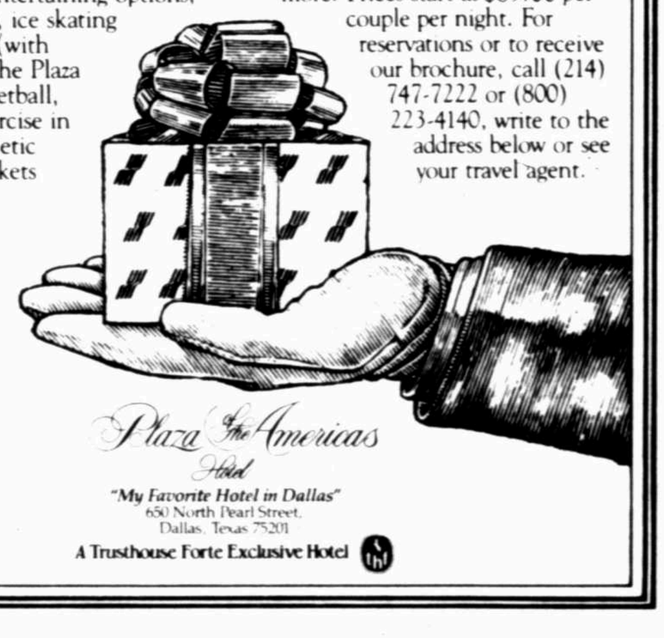

Earlier, LaFalce had complained about the level of interest rates on consumer loans compared with other types of loans, such as commercial loans.

However, Arnold A. Heggestad, of the University of Florida's College of Business Administration, testified that in the historical sense, the gap is not excessive between consumer interest rates and prime rates — the rates charged by banks to their best commercial customers.

Housing's recovery conservative, cautious

By SUSAN WARFEL
Hearst Feature Service

The housing industry is recovering at last, but unlike the reckless days of the late 1970s, this new expansion period is beginning with conservatism, care and caution.

If you bought a home back when real estate was still the hottest game in town, you probably scrambled to get the choicest, most expensive property you could land as soon as you could scrape up a minimum down payment. That was the wise thing to do — then. Twenty percent home appreciation and double-digit inflation assured you that even if the purchase was difficult to accommodate in the beginning, it soon would drift down to a comfortable level of affordability.

But the seemingly endless recession which sent the real estate market plummeting to a depth so low that only now, three years after the contraction started, is it picking up, has left its mark. Economists largely agree that the housing recovery notwithstanding, if you buy a home today you'll be much more likely to look at a home's value as shelter rather than as an investment. And you'll probably buy only what you can afford now.

Those are a couple of the changes that will occur as the nation begins a slow and highly segmented real estate recovery.

Housing prices, which have sagged somewhat because of slack demand, will firm as more people start to buy homes, but the prices aren't expected to surpass the general rate of inflation in the next year.

NATIONALLY, housing starts probably will reach 1.3 million or 1.4 million units, up from 1.1 million in 1982, predicts Charlotte Chamberlain, chief economist for the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, the federal agency that regulates savings and loans. That compares to a peak of 2.4 million housing starts in 1972.

There are a number of reasons why the housing recovery is expected to be limited, but most have to do with economic uncertainty.

One out of 10 American workers is unemployed, and, obviously, jobless people don't buy homes. Neither do people who are still worried about their job security.

From Washington comes the threat of still larger budget deficits, which could absorb so much of the country's savings that there would be little money left for other types of financing. Then there are changes being discussed in the nation's tax structure that could affect the whole economy.

And don't forget the two new market-rate accounts banks and thrifts are offering. With a one-day maturity, the accounts call into question the ability of the institutions to continue making long-term home loans.

STILL, encouraging signs have appeared, thanks in large part to a sharp drop in interest rates. Families that have suppressed their need for bigger and better housing because of financial conditions or economic insecurity are now stepping back into the market. Sales of both new and used housing are up. Builders are submitting plans for new projects.

But as the recovery unfolds, improvement will be heavily concentrated in the $70,000 to 100,000 home category. Obviously, part of the reason for the sharply skewed sales is that many people can't afford to buy anything else. But there's more to it than that. In many cases, people who might otherwise consider buying more expensive homes won't be able to find financing, and when they can the interest rate will be high.

A lot of lenders just aren't making loans of more than $108,000. That's the limit on the size of the loans that they can sell to organizations like the Federal National Mortgage Association, known as Fannie Mae, and the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corp., called Freddie Mac. After being burned in the last few years by having too many low-interest mortgages on their books, many lenders don't want to make loans they can't sell off quickly.

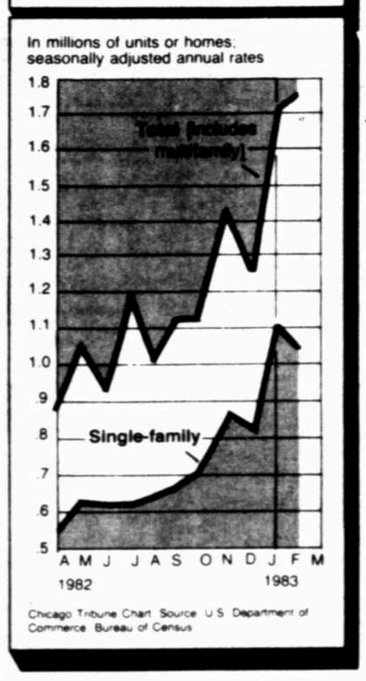

Actual interest rates, though, probably won't change much except for slight, temporary movements up and down over the course of the year. Fixed-rate, long-term loans of $108,000 or less are now 12 percent and up. Loans of more than $108,000 typically cost 2 percentage points more.

YET THERE WILL be no shortage of mortgage instruments available. If you buy a home in 1983, you could choose a fixed-rate 30-year home loan, an adjustable-rate loan, a fixed-rate loan with a five- or seven-year due date, a balloon mortgage, a graduated payment mortgage or something else.

If you're trying to sell an existing home, you may still have to carry some of the financing yourself to make the purchase more affordable for the buyer. That will be especially true if you're trying to sell a medium- or higher-priced home, since that segment of the market is expected to remain in the doldrums for a little longer. And if you've got a second home in a resort area, you may be out of luck. These properties will be hard to move in the next year.

Housing just won't be the automatic good investment that it was in the '70s. And that brings us back to an extremely important factor behind the caution in today's housing market — the controlling of inflation.

Tycoon quaking in Aspen

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Serive

DENVER — Out of time and besieged by more than $44 million in foreclosure actions, unpaid loans and debt claims, land tycoon Hans Cantrup of the chic resort city of Aspen, Colo., asked the federal bankruptcy court Tuesday to protect him from his creditors.

The filing climaxed two weeks of frantic maneuvering in which Cantrup tried to line up a multimillion-dollar bailout. Several times sources close to Cantrup reported him on the verge of a deal — only to have it fall through before the documents were signed.

Cantrup's bankruptcy petition, with which he seeks protection under Chapter 11 of the federal bankruptcy code, freezes the 36 foreclosure actions brought by creditors in a dozen states, and more than 30 lawsuits. The foreclosure actions account for $37 million, with the remaining $7 million being claims in lawsuits and other debts.

It also gives Cantrup more time to try to pull together a bailout deal. But this time it will be under the scrutiny of a federal judge and Cantrup's creditors, including IntraWest Bank of Denver, which is trying to recover the $15.65 million it has lent him.

In a statement Tuesday night, Cantrup's attorneys said, "Hans Cantrup, Aspen's and Colorado's largest hotel and condominium developer, announced today that he has voluntarily obtained the assistance and protection of the Chapter 11 court for the reorganization of his extensive land holdings in Aspen."

Cantrup maintained a public optimism even after the bankruptcy petition filing Tuesday

"With the Chapter 11 court's help, I have every confidence that a fully successful outcome for all parties and for the City of Aspen can be quickly achieved," Cantrup said through a spokesman Tuesday night.

Although Cantrup's bankruptcy court petition officially was called voluntary, sources close to the case suggested that he had little choice.

Cantrup's petition was filed only seconds before federal bankruptcy court in Denver closed its doors.

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. — Aldo Gucci hates sales.

"Our customers are people of pride and ambition," Gucci says. "They do not like to be pushed and shoved around behind the counter during sales. It makes it very difficult to eat frog legs (which the retailer serves to customers in his store) while you shop."

Yet the founder and chairman of one of the most elegant and expensive stores in the world, also realizes that even Gucci shoppers love a bargain.

So he came up with a compromise.

He put a selection of off-season clothing, shoes and other Gucci merchandise in one place, marked it down 30 percent to 50 percent, then let people elbow their way to the bargains.

This concept has been so successful since its introduction four years ago on the seventh floor of Gucci's New York store that last month the retailer opened its first store devoted entirely to "discount" Gucci merchandise.

Called "Gucci on Seven," the store is in Beverly Hills.

This store, which Gucci prefers to call a clearance center for Gucci merchandise instead of a discount store, is in keeping with a retailing trend that has become the rage this year. Going a step further, Edwin G. Roberts, chairman and chief executive of the new Plums discount chain, calls off-price retailing the fastest growing segment of retailing in the nation.

Blind man throws papers for living

CLAREMORE, Okla. (AP) — Jim Findley estimates he has pedaled a bicycle 241,000 miles delivering newspapers in Claremore.

It is not just the number of miles he has ridden, or the fact that he has had the same route for 35½ years, that amazes his customers.

Findley, who has had glaucoma since he was 15, is blind in his left eye and has only 30 percent vision in his right.

Considered legally blind, Findley, 48, rides his 10-mile route twice a day — in the early morning darkness delivering the Tulsa World and in the afternoon delivering The Tulsa Tribune.

"I just take it as one of those things in life," he said of his blindness. "I don't let it bother me."

With the slight amount of vision he has in his right eye, Findley can make out shapes of homes, cars and people, but little else.

Only by voice can he recognize a person. He discerns approaching cars more by sound than sight.

After years of traversing the same streets, the shapes and colors of homes and buildings have become landmarks in his memory.

Relying on memory, he rides his route or makes trips to the store.

When a subscriber is added to his route of about 200 customers, he sometimes calls on his supervisor, Kenneth DeLozier, to help him locate the house.

Hospitals finally responding to needs of nation's nurses

LIVINGSTON, N.J. (AP) — There were times, Harriet Rowand says, when all she wanted to do was eat supper and find out what had happened to her two children.

But for 10 years, hospitals around the country offered no help to Mrs. Rowand, or to others like her — nurses looking for steady hours.

While Mrs. Rowand stuck it out at St. Barnabas Hospital here, a quarter of the nation's 1.4 million registered nurses abandoned active practice and almost one-third of the remaining nurses now work only part time, according to the American Nurses Association.

But the rotating schedules that drove away thousands of Mrs. Rowand's fellow professionals and played a part in the 100,000 current vacancies in nursing positions, are beginning to change.

For Mrs. Rowand, her days of dinner on the run are over. She now works two 12-hour weekend shifts and gets paid for a full 35-hour week under an innovative scheduling program here.

THE NEW schedule is one of many designed recently by hospital officials looking for ways to keep nurses on the job and to attract others to the field.

"You have a recruiting war going on, where they (nurses) can go to the highest bidder," said Ronald Del Mauro, the St. Barnabas vice president for personnel. "It's happening all over the country."

"The staff nurse today can go anywhere to work," said Grace Guidera, acting vice president for nursing at St. Barnabas, which patterned its program on a similar one devised by Baylor University Medical Center in Dallas. "You have to make it inviting."

Hospitals with flexible schedules hold an edge, even when competitors pay higher wages, Del Mauro said. Many are responding to the nursing shortage by offering counseling services, self-help programs and day-care facilities.

"There were days when I was standing in my white uniform at the stove," said Mrs. Rowand.

"WHEN I STARTED nursing there was nothing for us," said Mary Jo Truskowski, a nurse at St. Barnabas for 15 years. "The hospitals still have a way to go. You'll see even more changes in the next five years."

Mrs. Truskowski is the single parent of a 9-year-old son, Alex. Another new program — the "night incentive plan" — allows her to work from 11 p.m. to 7 a.m. Sunday through Wednesday, be paid for five nights of work, and have Thursdays, Fridays and Saturdays free.

"Working a night shift is very tiring and it disrupts your sleeping pattern, so having three nights off in a row really makes a difference," said Mrs. Truskowski, who now has more energy for her son and time for twice a week college studies toward a bachelor's degree.

"Nursing professionals are looking for a relatively sound lifestyle. Rotating schedules and working weekends are burdensome," Del Mauro said.

Hospital administrators say they have not computed the extra cost created by innovative schedules. But they note the tab is reduced by lower turnover rates and decreased absenteeism.

AND NURSES working regular schedules can plan their personal activities around their work, reducing their need for unscheduled days off and the resultant overtime costs to the hospital, administrators said.

Mrs. Rowand said she is much happier with her new schedule, even though the 12-hour weekend shifts in the emergency room are arduous.

"It's good my children no longer need to ask, 'Do you have to work tonight?' They like to tell me what happened to them during the day and now, I'm not too tired to listen," said Mrs. Rowand.

At Baylor, where the two 12-hour weekend shifts are used in every unit except the emergency room, hospital officials reported cuts in the turnover rate of 32 percent in 1980, the first year of the program, and of 25 percent in 1981.

THEY ALSO noted a decreases of 15 percent and 5 percent in vacancy for 1980 and 1981, respectively, even though Baylor increased its staff from 700 nurses to 1,100 nurses to accommodate the new scheduling.

"It's worked out wonderfully," said Joyce Ross, a Baylor spokeswoman. "We've had hundreds of calls, though we don't know how many other hospitals have implemented this. We actually stopped counting inquiries because they were too numerous."

Baylor executives aren't taking full credit for the scheduling system.

"We got the idea from a tire company," Ms. Ross said. "General Tire of Akron, Ohio, had a weekend work force and someone in our management development people read about it in trade magazine. We looked at it and modified it."

'SOS' signals alter boundaries of new congressional districts

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Urgent SOS signals were cited as the main reason the new boundaries of Louisiana's eight congressional districts zig here and zag there and make peculiar shapes.

SOS is the old emergency radio call to Save Our Ship — but the sardonic political meaning is Save Our Seat.

The SOS defense was raised unblushingly in federal court here last week, as witness after witness — both Democrats and Republicans — acknowledged the boundaries were drawn to protect the incumbents.

Black voters, who filed suit and brought the matter to court, argued that the strange-looking, misshapen districts were laid out so there would not be a New Orleans district in which black voters outnumber whites.

The blacks asked the court to order a reapportionment which would include at least one majority-black congressional district in the state.

Racial gerrymandering, drawing lines to "dilute" black voting power, is unconstitutional. If SOS gerrymandering is not racial can it, too, be declared unconstitutional?

WHERE DOES IT say in the Constitution, or in federal law, that an election district may not be shaped to look like a salamander or a duck?

But if this SOS system is legal, one couldn't tell it by the three federal judges sitting on a special court that held a four-day hearing of a suit filed by a group of black voters.

Listen to a question Judge Robert Collins of New Orleans put to Professor John Wildgen of the University of New Orleans after he testified that reapportionment should not involve drastic change.

"Would you agree that a new order is emerging in the city of New Orleans, and that the old order — thank God — is changing, and that fact must be dealt with?" asked Collins, a one-time civil rights activist and the first black federal judge appointed in the Deep South.

Wildgen, who testified for the defense as an expert on political science, shrugged and agreed.

Collins also asked Gov. Treen if he felt it unreasonable for blacks "to want to have a black congressman."

THE GOVERNOR didn't consider the desire unreasonable. He said he didn't think it should be guaranteed, either.

At another point, Wildgen said blacks have equal access to the electoral system. Judge Fred Cassibry of New Orleans took him to task on how he could say such a thing when blacks have less education, less money.

It was a question Cassibry raised several times.

"I do not confuse 'access' with 'success,' " Wildgen replied.

"Well, winning isn't everything but there is a saying that losing is nothing," said Cassibry. "Losing is what blacks have been doing for a long time."

Wildgen did not pursue the point. "You can't win a debate with a federal judge in a courtroom," he said later.

Earlier, Cassibry also said the reapportionment "chopped up the black vote" and expressed doubt that a black candidate could be elected unless a district was majority-black.

The defense argued this view flies in the face of the fact that New Orleans has a black mayor, elected by a white cross-over vote, a black sheriff, a black clerk of court and two black city councilmen.

NEW ORLEANS IS about 55 percent black but 53 percent of the registered voters are white. In the 1981 reapportionment, the city was split between the first and second congressional districts.

Judge Henry Politz of Shreveport, La., third man on the panel, had a hard time handling reapportionment as a subtle political maze of conflicting pressures.

It would be easy to decide this case if it were just a question of numbers, he said. In Louisiana the zigzagging lines were drawn so that each district, no matter how odd it looks, has about 525,000 people.

"But that's not the end of the inquiry," said Politz. "There are other considerations we have to factor in. Some we can grab and hold them tight and some are like holding fog in your hands."

Politz also chafed under defense claims that reapportionment should be handled with as little change as possible.

'Lester' dies in sting

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Lester Williams was a laid-back crook with a Southern drawl, a .38 in a shoulder holster and good connections to high rollers with big bucks.

"He was the kind of guy who could set up big deals," said State Police Lt. Michael A. Bryan.

The lieutenant ought to know. He played the undercover role of Lester around New Orleans for 14 years.

But now, Lester is no more. His cover was blown, sacrificed in a Long Island, N.Y., police sting that recovered $3.7 million worth of stolen paintings.

Twenty-three paintings, including a $400,000 Picasso and a Monet valued at almost $600,000, were stolen by three masked bandits who broke into a mansion at Sands Point on April 13, 1982.

As the bandits should have known, selling such identifiable loot is not easy. Three months after the robbery, they were still looking for a buyer.

Word trickled down to Lester.

"I got it first from a rich real estate man in Mississippi," Lester, or Bryan, recalled recently.

"He called and said, 'Hey, for what it's worth, word is out on the Gulf Coast that there is a load of art for sale at 12½ percent on the dollar.'"

Lester went around to a shady lady he knew. "I hear you got something going," he said. She was glad to see him. She was looking for buyers and promised Lester a nice "finder's fee." She produced a detailed list of paintings, including measurements and names of the artists.

"She even had a Polaroid picture," said Bryan. "Somebody propped the paintings up against a wall and made a photograph."

Bryan put the list on the national police teletype to see if anyone knew about them; the Nassau County police phoned right back.

Lester became indispensable. The shady lady told him to check into a certain Long Island motel; a man named George would contact him.

George was George Haag, 57, who used to rob banks for a living but, having served time on those enterprises, now prefers the more temperate demands of law clerking, Bryan said.

Lester arrived in style, by private plane. His accouterments included a borrowed ring with a diamond the size of a golf ball. He told Haag he knew nothing about art and so had brought along his own $600-a-day art expert — actually an FBI agent whose speciality is art.

Haag seemed overly cautious and stalled on the deal. Lester threatened to fly home. Haag then admitted he was having the shady lady flown to New York to make sure Lester really was Lester.

On July 15, 1982, Lester was eating breakfast in a motel dining room when Haag walked in with two women from New Orleans. The women pointed Lester out and left, mission accomplished. No longer suspicious, Haag joined Lester at the table.

Haag now felt safe. He shouldn't have. As well as talking to a Louisiana state police lieutenant, Haag was rubbing elbows with law officers.

"They had up to 30 people there," Bryan said. "The businessmen and airline pilots at neighboring tables were police. The busboys were police. I've been in this business a long time and I know what a good operation looks like. They put on a fine operation."

Louisiana State Police Lt. Michael A. Bryan, an undercover agent for 14 years, gave up that role when his cover was blown.

Lester knew he had his man hooked. Haag was in up to his eyes with a loan shark and had to deal. The agreed upon purchase price, $465,500 — most of it paper with real money as flash — was in Lester's attache case. But he wanted his art expert to examine the merchandise first.

That was no problem, said Haag. The stuff was in a motel just down the street. His sidekick, Michael McLaughlin, took Lester's art expert and bodyguard to inspect the paintings.

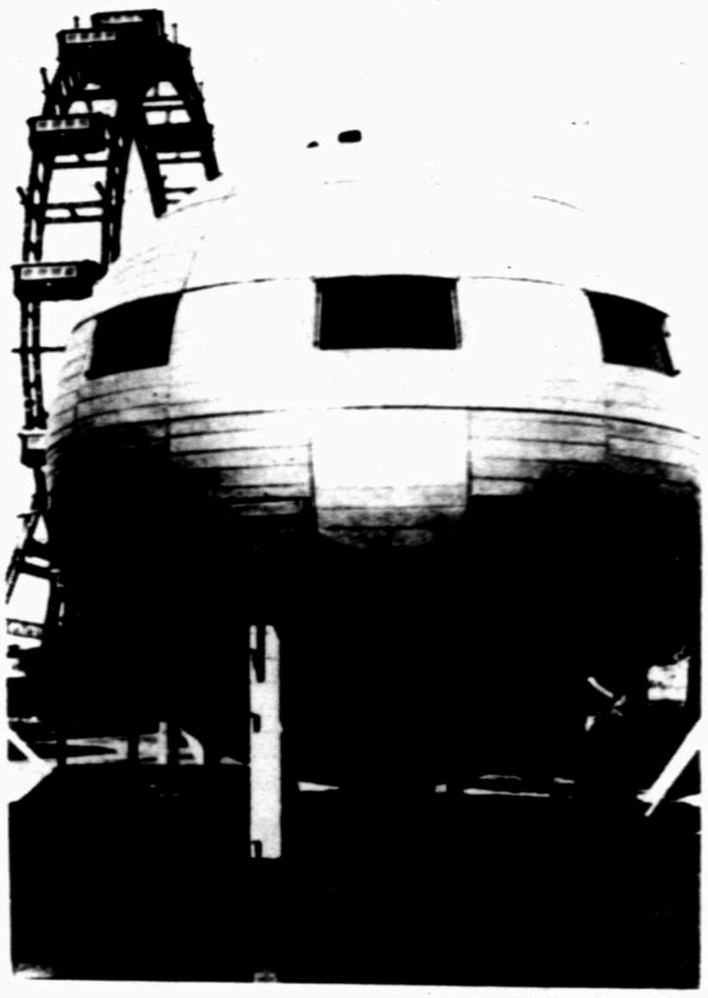

Detectives in assorted costumes scrambled discreetly to set up surveillance.

"I sat there with George," Bryan said. "I'm left-handed and I had a gun on him under the table and at the time I figured he had a gun on me. It was awkward eating with my right hand and time dragged.

"George and I were both getting nervous when all of a sudden here come shotguns from all directions. The bust was on. I accused him of setting me up and kicked over the table. They dragged us out of there kicking and screaming."

All of the paintings were recovered, and Haag and Lester were thrown in jail. While being booked, they took a couple of swings at each other. Haag got the worst of it — Lester's diamond ring opened a minor gash on his forehead.

It developed that Lester, having no prior record, was able to post bail.

The house measures eight meters (26.25 feet) in diameter, is anchored to the ground by a concrete pillar and could become home to an entire family.

Worms turn organic garbage into fertilizer

VOORSCHOTEN, Netherlands (AP) - Piton vermicultures has about 16 million full-time workers who labor day and night, live in the dirt and eat garbage. But no one ever complains.

In fact, company founders Pieter Frijters and Anton van Es see themselves as men with a humanitarian mission, developing what they consider the world's most ecologically efficient waste disposal method.

Success for their infant enterprise depends, however, on the continuing appetite of their workers, known to science as Eisenia Foetida, or the common manure worm.

Worms have the ability to convert raw organic garbage into highly nutritious manure fertilizer. And the little creepers have gargantuan appetites, every day munching their own half-gram weight in organic waste, including paper products.

So Frijters and van Es, both 34, decided to put it all together into a reliable method of garbage disposal that produced something beside pollution.

They developed a system of large octagonal mazes, each filled with about 50 tons of garbage and stocked with about 2 million hungry worms. The 4-inch invertebrates can chomp their way through that amount of trash in about 90 days.

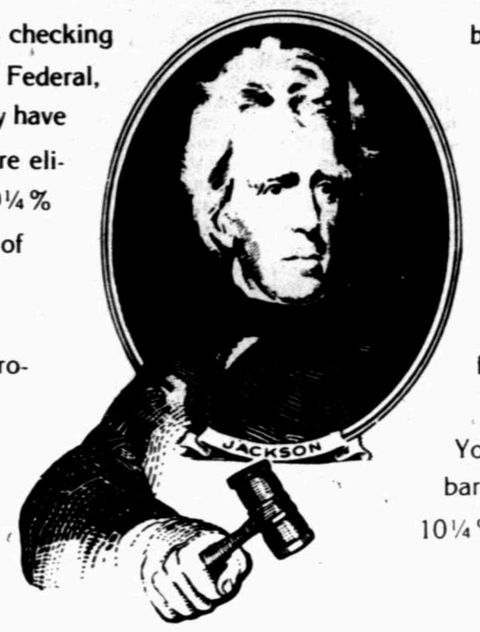

Frijters, van Es, and their three employees shovel out what's left, known to the trade as "castings," and refill the empty section for the earthworms' next circuit. So far they have eight mazes in operation for breeding purposes. This spring they begin merchandising their year's stockpile of earthworms and manure, as well as franchising the patent-pending garbage conversion system that produced it.

Piton Vermicultures (a combination of Pieter, Anton and the Latin for worm) plans to franchise the mazes in groups of five each, which they estimate can convert 80 tons of garbage a month. Each five-unit installation would sell for about $111,000.

Lawmakers find different ways to repeat each other in debate

By TOM RAUM

WASHINGTON (AP) — You'd think that in a 13-hour congressional debate, like the one the House had the other day on a proposed nuclear weapons freeze, lawmakers would run out of different ways to say the same thing. They didn't.

They just keep getting more and more elaborate in their comparisons.

Rep. Barbara Boxer, D-Calif., compared the nuclear arms race to "two people standing in a gasoline puddle, one with ten matches and one with nine, aruging over which can start a fire."

Rep. William Ratchford, D-Conn., viewed the arms race as a "genie let out of the bottle...that genie is no longer a genie or a genius. That genie has become a monster."

Minority Leader Robert Michel, R-Ill., denounced the freeze resolution as "the first sip of the bitter cup." Rep. James Martin, R-N.C., compared it to a misguided gambit "in a careless chess game."

Rep. Henry Hyde, R-Ill., said the resolution, in calling for what amounted to both a freeze and a reduction, had become "a carnivorous vegetarian." Rep. Ed Bethune, R-Ark., accused freeze proponents of "shoveling smoke."

Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., didn't offer an analogy; just some fractured English. He kept referring to the "mutual and verifiable" freeze as "a variable freeze."

• • •

Senate Minority Leader Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., marched onto the Senate floor resplendent in a bright red vest, a shiny gold watch chain dangling from his pocket, and wearing a wide tie with red, white and blue stars.

Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker, R-Tenn., stopped in his tracks and gave Byrd a bewildered glance. "Am I bright enough for you, Howard?" Byrd asked.

"If you were any brighter, I'd be blind," Baker replied.

• • •

Baker has a reputation for standing in the front of the Senate, called the "well," and explaining things to Republicans as they come on to the floor — like how he wants them to vote.

Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., made note of Baker's practice the other day when observing that backers of an amendment to repeal the 10 percent withholding on savings and dividends had claimed 62 votes one morning, but by the time a test vote was taken, their strength had dropped to 59 — one less than they needed for victory on the procedural motion.

"It had been watered down to 59 in the well," Helms said.

"The senator and I were in the well together, as I recall," Baker said.

"Yes," Helms responded. "You just outwatered me."

• • •

Rep. Barbara Mikulski, D-Md., recently declared that "women, because of certain lifestyle issues, are less likely to have coronaries and more likely to have babies." She spoke at a news conference on economic equity legislation and was referring to the price of life insurance for men and women.

Sen. Gary Hart, D-Colo., who was at the same news conference, confessed to some enlightenment. "I learned something new here this morning. I learned that women are more likely to have babies."

Analyst: Funds won't buy planned arms

WASHINGTON (AP) — Ten years ago, the Army decided to build a light new bazooka that would pierce tank armor head-on and could be mass-produced for $75 each. One "Viper" now costs $787, although it can't knock out an oncoming tank and still isn't being mass produced.

According to several new studies, the blame should go to the Pentagon's inter-service rivalries, politics and inefficiency.

Criticisms of military procurement are almost as numerous as the stories about cost overruns and problems with new hardware.

But the most recent studies, particularly one by a young Pentagon analyst, have drawn close attention on Capitol Hill and given ammunition to critics of President Reagan's $1.7 trillion program to "rearm America."

In response, the Pentagon says things have changed, arguing that a series of reforms by the Reagan administration will help cut down overruns.

"We are very sensitive to this problem," says David Chu, chief of the Pentagon's office of Program Analysis and Evaluation.

THE STUDIES have a central theme: that the record spending which Reagan has proposed won't buy as many weapons as the Pentagon says.

One of the key figures has become Franklin C. Spinney, an analyst in Chu's office.

Spinney studied 30 years of Pentagon purchasing and 111 weapons systems. His two-hour briefing, entitled the "plans-reality mismatch," has played to standing-room crowds before congressional committees.

Spinney is a reluctant critic — he argues that defense spending needs to be increased, not cut.

But his message is that there are "structural problems" that lead to cost overruns and that strong corrective action is needed. Otherwise, defense budgets might have to be increased by as much as 30 percent to buy all the planned weapons, he says.

One problem, says Spinney, is that contractors "buy in" to a big job by proposing an unrealistically low initial cost.

The Pentagon contributes to the problem, he argues, by continual design changes. For example, the Air Force one year proposed 360 changes — almost one a day — in the FB-111 bomber, he says.

"You're dealing with the most complex bureaucracy in Washington," he says. "Everybody is fighting to save their programs" and during the battle the most optimistic cost projections are used.

CONGRESS ADDS TO the problems, he says, by "stretching out" a program to cut costs in a specific year, which saves money in the short run but eventually drives up costs because economies of large-scale production are lost, he says.

And Congress often forces the Pentagon to buy weapons the military doesn't want, Spinney notes, because of political considerations such as home-state jobs in a defense plant.

Similar conclusions were reached in studies by the Council on Economic Priorities, which has been critical of the defense build-up, and the conservative Heritage Foundation, a supporter of Reagan's plans.

Consider the Viper. Shortly after the weapon was proposed, it was redesigned with a lighter-weight explosive head which had less punch. And the motor was reduced in size to cut down the noise.

The result was that the Viper, intended to puncture tank armor head on, couldn't do the job.

Rather than killing the weapon, the Army changed its mission — proposing that it be fired at a tank from the side or the rear.

When word of Spinney's study began circulating on Capitol Hill, top Pentagon officials criticized it and tried to block Spinney from talking to congressional committees.

BUT UNDER THREAT of a congressional subpoena, Spinney was allowed to make his case.

The Pentagon responds that Spinney's study is "historical" and doesn't take into account the 32 procurement reforms known as the "Carlucci initiatives," after Frank Carlucci, the former deputy defense secretary who ordered them in 1981.

The initiatives include increased "multi-year" funding instead of year-to-year purchases, fixed production rates and consideration of a contractor's past cost performance in awarding contracts.

These changes, according to Chu and other top Defense Department officials, will make production lines more stable and curb the inefficient "boom-and-bust" cycle of military spending.

While Chu says it is too early to tell, he contends that the Carlucci proposals are helping to bring costs back into line.

Organization fighting homosexual ruling

Group wants law reinstated

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

A national organization that considers itself "a counter-weight to liberal influence" is fighting the civil rights ruling in Dallas last fall which struck down the state law against homosexuality.

In a motion filed Monday, the Washington Legal Foundation is asking the Texas Supreme Court to order state Attorney General Jim Mattox to appeal federal Judge Jerry Buckmeyer's Sept. 30 decision that the law on homosexual conduct is unconstitutional.

The statute — a Class C misdemeanor carrying a maximum fine of $200 — forbids "deviate sexual intercourse with another individual of the same sex."

But since deviate sexual intercourse between consenting adults of the opposite sex is not banned, the apparent basis for Buckmeyer's ruling was that the law discriminates against homosexuals.

Drawing an analogy between the homosexuality statute and laws that discriminated against blacks, a spokesman for Mattox's office said Tuesday, "It treats different classes of people differently. You have to prove that there is some rational reason for treating them differently. The attorney general couldn't find a rational reason and therefore declined to appeal the decision."

But the Legal Foundation, which claims 200,000 members and supporters nationwide, says Mattox is shirking his responsibility by not appealing Buckmeyer's ruling.

"The Supreme Court has original jurisdiction to require a state official to do his duty," said R. Gregory Lamb, regional counsel for the group's recently opened Texas division in Dallas.

"What we're saying is that the attorney general does not have discretion to drop the appeal, but that he has the duty to appeal cases of this nature where statutes are declared unconstitutional.

"It basically is on appeal in federal court already. Potter County District Attorney Danny Hill is appealing it.

"What they (those who challenged the constitutionality of the law) did in the case was file a lawsuit against all the district attorneys in the state as members of a class, and Danny Hill is a member of that class.

"That's the status of it right now. Hill is appealing it and we're asking the Supreme Court to compel the attorney general to appeal it also. We think it's really his duty to do so."

Lamb also said that while some people who want the decision overturned are claiming that "this particular class of people (homosexuals) really constitutes a public health hazard, we're not involved with that.

"Keep in mind, we're not addressing the merits of the appeal itself. What we're saying is that it's a duty of the attorney general to enforce the laws of the state of Texas.

"That is our sole motive. The WLF does not get involved in social issues. What we're concerned about is constitutional issues."

Founded six years ago in Washington, D.C., the WLF outlines itself in a list of congressional lobbyists as "a counter-weight to the liberal influence of consumer and similar public interest groups."

The group — according to Executive Director Dan Popeo, whom Forbes magazine has dubbed "The Ralph Nader of the Right" — supports due process for victims of crime, civil liberties for businessmen, a strong national defense and protection of free enterprise from government regulation. It accepts no government funding and is supported solely by private money.

In further describing the WLF, Popeo said: "We're a counter-balance to organizations that are, I think, anti-public interest. There are a lot of groups running around the country on taxpayer dollars that are pro-big government, pro-criminal. They abuse the judicial system and are responsible for excessive government regulation.

"They're responsible for excessive government interference in our daily lives. They're responsible for inflation, the number of crime victims, the criminal justice system breaking down.

"Our members and supporters are consumers too. They breathe the same air and drink the same water as all the other consumers. We believe we represent the real public interest."

Asked why homosexuality should be a WLF concern and proscribed by the government, Popeo declined comment, saying:

"I'm going to stand on what's already been said. I don't see any ambiguity. I don't see any contradictions. I don't think I need to explain anything any further."

It is not known when the court will rule on the WLF request.

New director on board

Kenneth Barnes, the new branch executive of Washington/Park Center YMCA, plans to use a little elbow grease and introduce more programs to revive the south and eastside Ys. Some of these programs include karate, ballet, co-ed fitness and a sports academy.

New director 'grew up at the Y'

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Kenneth Barnes' first introduction to the YMCA was prompted by his mother — she was determined her 5-year-old son would learn to swim.

"I grew up at the Y," Barnes said, explaining that after participating in Y programs he became the youngest YMCA volunteer at age 11.

When he was 15, Barnes was the youngest paid staff member at the Metropolitan Atlanta, Ga., YMCA's southwest branch.

Today, the 29-year-old Atlanta native is executive branch director of Midland's Washington/Park Center YMCA.

After two weeks on the job, Barnes already is making plans to revive Midland's south and eastside Ys.

"We're going to get back to the basics," he said. "The key to any YMCA is not only staff teamwork, but collaboration between the community and the administrative staff. It's now up to the staff to get some meaningful and viable programs."

One of those planned programs is a basketball clinic.

Unlike the basic sportsmanship stressed in the Y's basketball leagues, the clinic would be taken a step further.

"We're going to teach kids the basics and specifics neglected in league play," Barnes said. "These new programs won't be for only black kids, but quality programs for all Midland kids."

Barnes also intends to expand the Youth Sports Academy program.

"The concept of the academy allows kids to try out for a sport, distinguishing their ability. A league goes on through the sport's duration, but the academy will be year round. We hope to include basketball, track, football, swimming and raquetball. We'll concentrate on the age group 15 years and under.

Barnes said other programs include a football clinic, co-ed fitness and aerobics for women.

"I would like to increase female participation in all areas," Barnes said. "We also intend to include what I call the non-traditional programs — karate, modern dance and ballet."

Meanwhile, staff members at the Washington/Park Center Ys are gearing up for summer programs. Barnes said he's trying to make arrangements for the Y to have access to a pool for a morning swim program.

Because Barnes "grew up" at the YMCA, he says, "It's the best place to leave your child and feel safe about it. It provides a child with leadership by showing rather than pushing a child, builds confidence and self-esteem, as well as providing fun for the child."

After graduating from high school, Barnes worked as an assistant manager at a drugstore chain. He saved his money and enrolled in college. Because his studies were leaning toward health and physical education, he again opted to work at the Y on a part-time basis.

But the part-time job turned into some 40 to 50 hours a week along with carrying a full load at school. During this time, his dream of becoming a varsity coach disappeared after he discovered it was difficult for young coaches to break into high school varsity coaching.

"So, I've been working as a professional program director at the Y and it's been rewarding."

From his experience participating and working in the YMCA, Barnes said he has learned that community attitudes toward the neighborhood YMCA are important.

Although Washington/Park Center Y won't be changed overnight, a "little elbow grease won't hurt. We don't have any immediate plans for expansion, but I do want to give these facilities a good cleaning. This Y will be well-maintained, staffed and cleaned."

Board of trustees discuss MC gate

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

Controversy over the closed gate at Midland College's Wadley Avenue entrance squeaked opened Tuesday in a meeting of the MC Board of Trustees.

Discussions with the City of Midland's planning staff and Planning and Zoning Commission have only increased a number of possible suggestions for easing traffic jams circling the campus.

None is acceptable to college trustees or administrators.

About five years ago, an entrance to the college was put in next to The Hillander School on Wadley Avenue as a secondary exit after special events at the Al G. Langford Chaparal Center. The gate is locked during the day by the City of Midland.

City officials were planning to remove the gate and the bridge that crosses the Northwest Drainage Channel because the structures limit the channel's holding capacity.

MC administrators were opposed to the entrance at that time, according to Dr. Al G. Langford, former MC president. Their opinion was based on the possibility of unnecessary outside traffic cutting through the campus to avoid the Wadley-Garfield Street intersection.

Despite their earlier objections, trustees now want that entrance.

The possibility of removing the bridge, deepening the channel and building a road with a gradual decline is feasible, according to Dr. Jess Parrish, MC president.

If the entrance is kept in this manner, administrators want a traffic light installed on Wadley. During the day, the light could be set to blink and on nights of heavy campus traffic, the light could be controlled automatically or manually to allow traffic to exit quickly.

Reports indicated city officials, however, favor extending Haynes Avenue or one of the Stutz, Auburn or Metz Place cul-de-sacs into the campus as another entrance.

"The (planning) staff preferred to have an opening onto North Garfield into one of the cul-de-sacs," said Trustee Kenneth Peeler. "Then the Planning and Zoning Commission had a different feeling. They felt we should go ahead and open Haynes up and extend it as far as we could. The director of public works (Fred Baker) wanted it to be a one-way around the (campus) circle and close the (west) gate."

Opening another exit on Garfield "would just throw more traffic on Garfield and not be beneficial to us," Peeler said.

Trustees and administrators indicated their understanding to be that only Baker wants to seal off the Wadley entrance.

According to Mike Stevens, Al G. Langford Chaparral Center director, if the gate on Wadley were open, more people would park behind Chaparral Center, where there usually are about 2,000 parking spaces available.

"People will park around the circle all the way to the administration building before they'll park behind Chap Center," he said. "They don't know if they can get out of there in the back or not."

"If you had controlled access (with a traffic light at Wadley) where you could have it open at 5 p.m. every day and after Chap Center events, the students and faculty would find out in three days when it was open and that would eliminate a lot of (outside) cross-campus traffic," Parrish said.

"But if we could open it all of the time, that would sure be better than not having it open at all," he added.

Turning the circle into a one-way street would be frustrating to many people, he said.

If Haynes Avenue were extended, campus expansion to the north of Haynes wouldn't be logical, Trustee Ralph May pointed out. About 70 acres of land owned by the city apparently had been eyed as a possibility for future expansion projects.

Parrish and other administrators are scheduled to meet with the city council Tuesday morning to discuss the issue.

Injured trackman sues MoPac for $1.2 million

A Del Rio trackman who claims he was injured on July 9, 1981, while riding a motor car to check railroad tracks between Big Spring and Odessa has filed a $1.2 million federal lawsuit against Missouri Pacific Railroad Co.

The lawsuit's petition doesn't detail the nature of the mishap, which the trackman, Gregorio Ruelas Gomez, says happened six miles southwest of Stanton.

MoPac, however, denied that any injuries which Gomez might have suffered were due to the railroad's negligence but were caused by Gomez's negligence.

Gomez, a Mexican citizen living in Del Rio, says that MoPac "was negligent in failing to maintain the equipment and the surroundings in which he worked in a safe and working order."

All told, Gomez is asking for $1,275,000 in damages to compensate him for his "serious disabling injury.

MISD board OKs teacher's 'appraisal program'

Board also discusses college preparation methods

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

Starting this fall, teachers will be graded according to one set of criteria established throughout the Midland Independent School District.

On Tuesday afternoon, MISD Board of Trustees approved the "teacher performance appraisal program" which will focus on five areas and emphasize instruction.

In other action, trustees heard reports on methods of improving college preparation for students and a report on the athletic program's finances. Trustees approved faculty contract renewals and continuing the on-campus suspension program.

The new teacher performance program was developed by a 14-member group of teachers and administrators to improve the quality of instruction, develop better communication and improve professional growth and responsibilities.

Teachers will be evaluated on the basis of their teaching skills, classroom and school environment, communications skills, interpersonal relationships and professional responsibilites, according to Garland Chapman, assistant superintendent of administration.

Three conferences to evaluate preparation, assessment and presentation skills will be made, Chapman said. The ability to establish and maintain an effective classroom environment and to communicate with parents, students and co-workers also will be considered.

Trustees also heard a report by Dr. Duane Moore on the distribution of a college guide to all junior students. The assistant superintendent of instruction said the guide, "Countdown to College," contains sample letters, a comparison of colleges and a checklist of steps to take when applying to colleges.

> "...Teacher performance appraisal program"...was developed...to improve the quality of instruction, develop better communication and improve professional growth and responsibilities.

The booklets will be mailed to all junior students along with a letter from Superintendent Dr. Joseph P. Baressi Jr., inviting students and parents to contact school counselors for assistance.

According to Moore, other methods of improving the efficiency of college counseling includes more personal counseling dealing with taking achievement tests and more follow-ups with parents and students.

Moore also strongly suggested resuming a four-year degree for high school.

"We need to start in the eighth grade," he said. "It won't be written in concrete because the students will change. But it certainly will act as a guideline."

Students were required to fill out four-year plans until about six years ago, Chapman said.

Also to begin next year is a vocabulary program to be taught by English teachers in the seventh through twelfth grades, Moore said.

"It will be continuous but by the time kids finish the sequence, they will have been exposed to approximately 1,700 words."

Other programs being developed to raise college entrance examination scores include evening courses using video tapes and computers to improve achievement test skills and a one-semester Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT) preparation course.

Trustees were told final receipts for the 1982-83 athletic program were $40,000 more than what was estimated by Athletic Director Gil Bartosh. Receipts totaled $147,461.

Revenues were greater because of concessions, which increased 50 percent, and a new policy allowing the second place team in the district playoffs. According to Bartosh, the dual football creates more community interest and involvement.

About $25,000 a year is saved because of a policy to seek bids on equipment, he said. Also, the 250-mile limit for travel and stable gasoline prices kept increases in the travel budget to 3 percent over last year.

Trustees also approved a resolution continuing the on-campus suspension program for the last time in conjunction with the Permian Basin Regional Planning Commission. The district was funding 80 percent of the program locally with the PBRPC providing 20 percent. Next year, the district will be required to fund the program.

Police say man didn't commit rapes

HOUSTON (AP) — Florida police have determined that a man charged in the murder of Elizabeth Faubus, the estranged wife of former Arkansas Gov. Orval Faubus, could not have committed six rapes in 1981 in Miami because he was in jail.

Metro-Dade County Detective Jim Baab said investigators from his office questioned David Scott Helfond March 10, the day after he was arrested in Mrs. Faubus' slaying. He said Helfond was jailed in Florida between May and October 1981, when the rapes occurred.

All of the six victims were single professional women who lived alone in the same Miami apartment complex. The similarities between the crimes and Mrs. Faubus' slaying piqued their interest, detectives said.

Helfond, who lived in Miami before moving to Houston three months ago, is charged with capital murder in the March 3 strangulation of Mrs. Faubus, one of three wealthy women found dead in bathtubs at their homes within a three-day period.

Helfond has pleaded innocent to the charge, and a pre-trial hearing has been set for April 15.

Mrs. Faubus, 44, had lived alone since her husband moved back to Arkansas a year ago and had filed for divorce.

Her nude and battered body was found immersed in a bloody bathtub of her fashionable home. Less than 72 hours earlier, the bodies of Bertie Eakens, 74, and Ruth Kottler, 61, were found in bathtubs at their homes.

A 29-year-old Houston man has been charged with capital murder in the slaying of Mrs. Eakens.

Detectives have released composite drawings of two women and one man wanted for questioning in Mrs. Kottler's death. However, homicide Detective J.C. Mosier said the three "may be witnesses and not necessarily suspects."

Mrs. Kottler, a savings and loan executive, was found in her bathtub when she failed to show up for work. She was fully clothed, bu the tub was filled with water.

She had been beaten, and her purse and some jewelry were missing, investigators said.

Detectives said the three people, depicted in sketches released Monday, were seen near Mrs. Kottler's apartment about the time she was believed to have been killed.

One woman was seen standing next to the victim's car and the other was spotted near Mrs. Kottler's apartment, police said. The man was seen on the stairs leading to the apartment, detectives said.

Sharp murder trial could begin in May

KERMIT (AP) The second trial of convicted murderer Michael Eugene Sharp, moved to the Southwest Texas community of Ozona from here on a change of venue, could begin in May, an official says.

State District Judge James Clack of Kermit granted the change of venue Tuesday and will preside over the trial at 112th District Court in Ozona.

Although no precise date has been set for the trial, 109th District Clerk Virginia Healy said it could begin "sometime in May."

Sharp, 28, will be tried in the June 11 stabbing death of Brenda Kay Broadway. He was earlier convicted in the slaying of one of Mrs. Broadway's two daughters.

Police say the trio was abducted from a Kermit car wash on June 11, 1982, then taken to a remote area of West Texas near a cattle-watering tank. Mrs. Broadway and her 8-year-old daughter, Christi Michelle Elms, were sexually abused and stabbed in the heart.

Sharp was arrested five days after their bodies were discovered in rural Winkler County.

A Lubbock jury sentenced Sharp to life in prison after his conviction last November for the murder of Christi, 8.

The other daughter, 15-year-old Selena Kay Elms, is scheduled to testify in Sharp's second trial. She managed to escape from her abductor while her mother and sister were being stabbed.

Selena Elms told police she escaped and ran naked for five miles before finding help at a West Texas drilling site. She later identified Sharp as the assailant.

She suffered minor cuts and abrasions during the ordeal.

Man arrested on drug charges

A young westside man was in city jail this morning awaiting arraignment on felony drug charges stemming from a raid on his residence late Tuesday afternoon.

Garry Allyn Burns, 19, of 1401½ W. Montgomery St., was arrested for possession of marijuana with intent to distribute after police said they found assorted drug paraphernalia and several bags of marijuana during a search of his home shortly after 5 p.m.

The raid was carried out on authority of a warrant signed earlier in the day by Justice of the Peace Robert Pine. One of two other men in the house at the time was arrested for possession of marijuana and for violation of probation.

The other man was released following questioning. City narcotics agents and officers from the Midland County Constable's office conducted the raid.

Woman beaten in robbery attempt

ODESSA — A southside woman escaped serious injury when a man beat her in a robbery attempt at her home about 11 a.m. Tuesday.

Patricia Salinas, no age available, of 818 Del Rio, told police she was returning to the house after emptying trash in a Dumpster when she was confronted by a young black man who pushed her inside, threw her to the floor and began beating her and demanding money.

She managed to free herself and throw a pan of hot water at her assailant, who then fled. It is not known if he was burned in the incident.

He was further described as about 18 years old, having a neatly groomed afro haircut and wearing orange slacks and an orange windbreaker.

Armed men rob Odessa store

ODESSA — Two men escaped on foot after holding up the La Villita Drive-Thru store at 1050 S. Dixie Blvd shortly after 9 p.m. Tuesday.

A clerk told police the men, both Hispanic, entered armed with a pistol and a .410-gauge shotgun, which discharged into a light fixture when the clerk threw her hands into the air, accidentally bumping the muzzle of the weapon.

After taking money from one cash register, the men fired a shotgun blast into a second register when it wouldn't open. The clerk said they then walked calmly from the store and disappeared with an undisclosed amount of cash.

Both men wore bandanas on their faces and were in their late teens or early 20s.

San Jacinto County sheriff resigns after he admitts torture

COLDSPRING (AP) — The San Jacinto County sheriff's office has been run almost exclusively by volunteers since the former sheriff resigned last week, admitting he tortured prisoners and searched passersby for drugs without cause, officials said.

County Judge Kent Morrison said Tuesday he had sworn in 12 reserve officers Monday night to take the place of the previous staff, which new Sheriff Robert E. Brumley fired Friday.

Morrison said Brumley asked for the resignations of the previous staff immediately after being appointed to fill out the term of James C. "Humpy" Parker. Parker pleaded guilty to two counts of federal civil rights violations and one count of extortion Friday.

Brumley, 50, said his house cleaning was aimed at removing "all shadow of doubt that has hung over this office" during the investigation of Parker.

But Brumley said he did not mean to imply that the former staff was involved in criminal activity. He said he just wanted to hire "all my own officers."

Brumley retained one deputy in the warrant division and hired a full-time secretary, Morrison said. Otherwise, the department will be staffed by the reserve deputies, who volunteer 16 hours a month as patrol officers.

Brumley, a former Houston police detective and two-term mayor of this community, took over the post after Parker, 47, admitted operating a "marijuana trap" on heavily traveled U.S. Highway 59, as well as subjecting jail inmates to water torture to gain confessions and testimony.

Criminal charges said Parker's deputies were ordered to stop "hippies," blacks, and people whose cars bore bumper stickers advertising a rock radio station in Houston. Officers also were told to stop drivers with Louisiana license plates issued around Shreveport.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Thomas Scott Woodward said sheriff's officers believed there was "some connection between people traveling to those points and people carrying drugs."

The charges also said deputies often strip-searched men and women stopped in the trap on U.S. 59, about 70 miles northeast of Houston.

Figures from the Texas Department of Public Safety showed 1,124 drug-related arrests were made in 1981 in San Jacinto County, which has a population of about 10,000. Only Harris County, with 2.1 million residents, had more such arrests that year, with 1,172.

Brumley said those who resigned Firday were four deputies, four dispatchers, one secretary and the entire reserve force of 18 deputies.

The sheriff said he wants to meet soon with 12 new reserve officers to discuss an extensive training program and a strict set of department guidelines.

Turn into a large mixing bowl; break up into small pieces; beat, without melting, just until consistency is uniform. Stir in banana — it should be pureed just before using. Return to freezer tray and freeze until firm — 3 to 5 hours. Makes about 1 quart.

This old-fashioned Sunday dinner designed for the contemporary hostess features Brown Chicken Fricassee with Herbs, Easy Spinach and Cheese Bake and Spiced Raisin and Walnut Pie.

Sunday dinner American custom

It is almost universally accepted today that dinner is the meal we eat in the evening. What, then, is supper?

In recent history the two terms have been used interchangeably though dinner is now the more popular name for the last meal of the day. But it wasn't always so. Until the mid-1800s, dinner was a gargantuan mid-day meal. Supper was a lighter repast, eaten later in the evening.

In America dinner was a hearty noon-time meal until the industrial revolution brought people from rural areas to the cities to work in factories. Since workers could no longer go home for a mid-day meal, and heavy food impeded production, a light lunch, frequently carried more sensible way of eating. A heavier dinner was taken in the evening.

Except on Sunday. Until recently, in most American households, Sunday dinner for family and friends was an institution.

The following recpies can help make today's Sunday dinners lighter and easier, more fitting to today's lifestyles.

BROWN CHICKEN FRICASSEE WITH HERBS

1/4 cup butter or margarine
2 pounds chicken parts
1 can (10-3/4 oz.) condensed cream of chicken soup
1/4 cup Chablis or other dry white wine
8 small whole white onions, about 1/2 pound
2 tablespoons chopped parsley
1 teaspoon lemon juice
1/4 teaspoon tarragon leaves, crushed
1/4 teaspoon rosemary leaves, crushed
1/4 cup heavy cream

In 10-inch skillet over medium heat, in hot butter, brown chicken. Add remaining ingredients except cream. Heat to boiling; reduce heat to low. Cover; cook over low heat 45 minutes or until chicken and onions are fork-tender, stirring occasionally. With slotted spoon remove chicken pieces to warm platter; keep chicken pieces warm. Gradually stir cream into soup mixture; serve with chicken. Makes four servings.

EASY SPINACH AND CHEESE BAKE

1 can (10-3/4 oz.) condensed cream of onion soup
2 packages (10 oz. EACH) frozen chopped spinach, cooked and well drained
1 package (10 oz.) frozen peas, cooked and drained
1/4 teaspoon marjoram leaves, crushed
4 eggs
1 cup shredded Swiss cheese

In covered blender container combine soup, vegetables and marjoram; blend at low speed until smooth. Add eggs; blend 15 seconds more. Stir in cheese. Pour mixture into 10 x 6-inch baking dish. Bake in 375 degree oven for 45 minutes or until knife inserted in center comes out clean. Remove from oven; let stand 10 minutes. Makes eight servings.

SPICED RAISIN AND WALNUT PIE

2 tablespoons cornstarch
3/4 cup orange juice
1 can (10-3/4 oz.) condensed tomato soup
2 cups raisins
2/3 cup sugar
1/3 cup chopped walnuts
1/2 teaspoon ground cinnamon
1/2 teaspoon grated orange rind
1/8 teaspoon ground cloves
2 tablespoons butter or margarine
Pastry for two-crust pie

Preheat oven to 425 degrees. In cup mix cornstarch and 1/4 cup juice until smooth. In two-quart saucepan over medium heat combine soup, raisins and remaining 1/2 cup juice; heat to boiling. Reduce heat to low. Cover; cook over low heat 10 minutes, stirring occasionally. Add cornstarch mixture and remaining ingredients except pastry. Cook, stirring until thickened.

Prepare pastry. Roll out half of pastry and line 9-inch pie plate. Pour soup mixture into pie plate. Roll out remaining pastry into 11-inch-diameter circle; cut into 1/2-inch wide strips. Moisten edge of bottom crust with water. Crisscross strips over filling to form lattice top. Trim strips even with edge; press edges to seal. Flute edges, if desired. Bake 25 minutes or until filling is set and crust is golden.

Vitamin A healthful: Too much is dangerous

By SHIRLEY BRIGHT BOODY
Copley News Service

The role of vitamin A in maintaining good vision has been well recognized for many years, but now researchers are looking at it as a possible new aid to improving our immune systems, and a variety of other functions.

Vitamin A, it seems, participates in the proper growth of bones, helps to maintain sufficient mucous production and even plays a part in our reproduction processes. But that's not all.

A recent study suggested that a simple increase in foods that are high in vitamin A in the daily diet could possibly help the body protect itself against lung cancer. Other kinds of cancer were not mentioned in this particular study, but they may well be included in further studies.

People who have low levels of carotene (the vitamin A that is found in plants) also seemed to have a greater risk of developing lung cancer. Is it possible that by simply eating more green, red, and yellow vegetables and fruits that we can improve our whole immune system not only against cancer, but a host of other diseases as well? Not all the facts are known yet, but the newest information available certainly points in that direction. It's one of those situations where it can't hurt and it may help — a lot.

Among the 488 men who participated in the low carotene level study, 14 of them developed lung cancer, while only 2 cases of lung cancer were reported with higher intakes of carotene. Statistics can be confusing of course, but these are, I believe, encouraging.

It is not clear at this point whether the vitamin A must be taken as carotene from plant sources to be protective, or whether vitamin A from animal sources (called retinol) is as effective.

Carotene does accumulate in tissues, especially the skin, and will produce a strange yellowing color if too much is taken. People who eat too many carrots or drink too much carrot juice will develop a yellow tint to their skin. It is not necessary to go to extremes to get sufficient vitamin A.

Animal origin vitamin A, retinol and retinoids, are stored in the liver and can be toxic if too much is taken. Dangerous excesses of these substances are not usually taken as foods but as vitamin A supplement pills.

I hope you will not run out and buy huge quantities of vitamin A supplements mistakenly thinking you are protecting yourself against cancer. I want to make it clear that you don't need a lot of vitamin A pills that could be dangerously excessive and accumulate in your body. What you should do is safely increase the high vitamin A foods in your diet each day, preferably as fruits and vegetables.

Animal sources of vitamin A are egg yolks, butter, cheeses, liver, kidney, cod liver oil, and to a lesser extent muscle meats, fish and seafoods. These sources, while providing considerable vitamin A, also are higher in cholesterol and calories.

Fruits and vegetables do not contain cholesterol at all. They are lower in calories and fats, except for avocados, and provide the vitamin A as carotene, which may be the best kind.

Dark green leafy vegetables, carrots, spinach, broccoli, tomatoes, yellow squash, beets and salad greens, avocados, oranges, limes, pineapples, dates, figs, grapes and bananas are all superb sources of vitamin A, and if you include several of them in your diet each day you will have plenty of this important vitamin.

The effect on the immune system (the body's multiple defense mechanisms against infections and disease) of either deficiencies or excesses of vitamin A is now being considered as some kind of cellular interaction. How this may actually work is not clear, but it is known that a vitamin deficiency can cause the immune system to not work as effectively as it should. This means an increased susceptibility to viral and bacterial infections, parasite invasion and possible cellular changes.

Clearly it is in everyone's best interest to make sure that nutritional deficiencies do not exist, but in spite of known problems that can develop many folks will still ignore their diets.

Paying renewed attention to including three to four servings of high vitamin A fruits and vegetables in our daily menus may be of even more importance today than when our grandmothers served them, whether we liked them or not.

I remember my grandmother serving fresh parsley with practically everything. I didn't like it at the time, but now I use it too. How did grandma know that parsley is one of the richest sources of vitamin A available?

Marshmallow Easter treats

What could be more fun than Easter crafts made from oven-toasted rice cereal Marshmallow Treats!

Easter and the Easter bunny — there's not a more fitting pair this side of Santa Claus and Christmas. So who better to attend the neighborhood Easter egg hunt that Peter Cottontail himself.

Just prepare a batch of marshmallow treats using oven-toasted rice cereal. Shape the warm mixture into three balls: two large ones for the body and a small one for a cottontail. Build the bunny, adding floppy paper ears as well as candy features and buttons.

MARSHMALLOW TREATS

1/4 cup margarine or butter
1 package (10 oz., about 40) regular marshmallows or 4 cups miniature marshmallows
5 cups oven-toasted rice cereal

Melt margarine in lage saucepan over low heat. Add marshmallows and stir until melted and well blended. Remove from heat. Add cereal. Stir until well coated. Use cereal mixture to make Peter Cottontail or Easter Egg Nests.

PETER COTTONTAIL

Prepare one recipe of marshmallow treats for seven-inch bunny. Using buttered fingers, shape 3-1/2 cups warm mixture for body and two cups mixture for head. Join head and body with toothpicks to create a bunny seven inches high. Shape remaining mixture into a ball for the "cottontail." Brush with corn syrup and roll in coconut. Attach to the body with a toothpick. Make ears and feet from colored paper. Cut two slits in head to attach ears. Set bunny on paper feet. Create eyes, nose and buttons with assorted candies. Use pipe cleaners for whiskers.

Note: Recipe can be shaped into two smaller bunnies.

EASTER EGG NESTS

Prepare one recipe of marshmallow treats, adding 1/2 cup coconut, tinted green, to mixture. Portion mixture into 16 2-2/2-inch muffin-pan cups. Shape each into nest. Fill cooled nests with jelly beans, miniature marshmallows or chocolate eggs. Decorate with pipe cleaner handler for baskets, if desired.

DEAR ABBY

Woman wants to keep silver

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I were married for five years. We had gone together for two years, so I thought I knew him quite well. The first two years of our marriage were wonderful, but after that he became less loving and started working nights and weekends. Naturally I suspected another woman. He finally asked for a divorce. When he told me he was leaving me for his homosexual lover, I was shocked! I nearly had a nervous breakdown.

Our divorce was amicable. We sold our home and divided the proceeds on the sale equally. He insisted that I keep all the furnishings.

It's been over a year. We have not talked to each other since, and I plan to keep it that way. However, his mother phoned me last week and asked me if I would please return the silver she gave us at the time of our marriage, as it has been in her family for many years. I told her that the silver now belonged to me, and I had no intention of returning it. She seemed very upset.

I am certain that she doesn't know the reason her son and I were divorced. Should I tell her the truth? And don't you think I'm entitled to keep the silver? — VIRGO ON THE CAPE

DEAR VIRGO: Concerning the silver: It couldn't possibly mean as much to you as it means to your former mother-in-law, so I would recommend generosity on your part. Concerning the reason for your divorce: Silence is golden.

DEAR ABBY: Please tell "Holding Out and Proud of It" to be careful. (She's a 27-year-old virgin who is saving herself for the man she marries.)

I fell hard for a man who used to kiss me on the hand when we said good-night. He never made a move to be any more intimate than that. I thought, Bravo! At last I have found my dream man. He respects me!

After 14 months of this, I let him put a ring (engagement) on my finger. He still never made a pass at me. But I returned his ring when I found out he made a pass at my kid brother. — END OF STORY IN DETROIT

Coffee 'mystery ingredient' in recipes

Copley News Service

The American lifestyle revolves around that rich, dark brew called coffee.

From the morning eye-opener to the espresso with dessert, our day revolves around coffee. Even office workers who shun the stuff take a "coffee break." Casual restaurants are called "coffee shops," a place to meet and linger over a cup.

In cooking, coffee can be the "mystery ingredient" that makes a dish special. You can't quite put your finger on what it is, but the enhanced flavor is apparent.

• If a recipe calls for instant coffee, use instant espresso for a stronger, more robust flavor.

• Grind coffee beans as fine as possible and mix with water to form a paste. Use the paste to color gravy, muffins or cookies.

• Espresso beans of the continental or French roast can be substituted for nuts in your favorite fudge recipe. The beans are crunchy and contrast well with the chocolate flavor in the candy. For even more coffee flavor, substitute brewed coffee for some of the liquid in the fudge recipe.

Instant coffee granules can also be added to your favorite ham glaze. Mix ingredients in small pan over medium heat. Add 2-3 tablespoons instant coffee granules, stirring until coffee has dissolved.

Here are some coffee recipes, grounds for your own experimenting. Some are from HP Books "Coffee Cookery" by Ceil Dyer.

BETTER THAN BARBECUED SPARERIBS

5 to 6 pounds country-style spareribs, cut in serving-size pieces
Water
1 cup prepared coffee
1 cup molasses
½ tsp. salt
One-third cup prepared mustard
1 tbsp. Worcestershire sauce
One-third cup cider vinegar
2 to 3 dashes hot pepper sauce

Preheat oven to 350 degrees. Arrange spareribs one layer deep on a rack in a large shallow roasting pan. Add water to cover bottom of pan. Roast 1 hour. Pour drippings from pan. Remove rack and place ribs in pan. In a small saucepan, combine remaining ingredients. Stir over medium heat until blended and steaming. Pour over ribs. Bake ½ hour more, basting frequently with sauce. Makes 8 servings.

ORANGE LOAF

1 cup all-purpose flour
1 cup whole wheat flour
1 tsp. baking soda
½ tsp. salt
1 thick-skinned orange
1 cup raisins
About ½ cup prepared hot coffee
4 tbsps. butter or margarine, room temperature
1 cup sugar
1 egg
½ cup chopped walnuts

Preheat oven to 325 degrees. Oil a 10x6-inch loaf pan; set aside. Sift togeher flours, baking powder, baking soda and salt; set aside. Grate peel from orange. Cut orange in half and squeeze juice. In a measuring cup, combine grated orange peel, juice and raisins. Add hot coffee to make 1 cup. Cool to room temperature. In a large bowl, cream butter or margarine with sugar. Add egg. Beat until light and fluffy. Add flour mixture alternately with orange-coffee mixture, stirring after each addition. Fold in nuts. Pour into prepared pan. Bake in preheated oven about 1 hour or until firm and lightly browned on top. Cool in pan on rack. Makes one loaf.

COFFEE STROGANOFF

1 tbsp. butter or margarine
1 tbsp. oil
1 garlic clove, peeled and minced
1 large onion, peeled and chopped
½ cup flour
¼ tsp. pepper
½ tsp. salt
1½ pounds lean veal, cut across grain in thin strips
2 tbsps. more butter or margarine
1 tbsp. Worcestershire sauce
1 cup chicken broth
1½ cups prepared coffee
¼ cup chopped fresh parsley
8 oz. sour cream, room temperature
¼ cup more flour
8 oz. package flat noodles, cooked according to package directions

In a 2-quart Dutch oven or heavy pot over medium heat, heat butter or margarine with oil. Add garlic and onion. Saute until soft but not browned. Remove from pot and set aside. In a shallow bowl, combine ½ cup flour, pepper and salt. Dredge veal strips in flour mixture. Melt 2 tablespoons butter or margarine in pot. Brown veal strips. Add onion and garlic, Worcestershire sauce, chicken broth and coffee. Bring to a boil over medium heat. Lower heat. Cover and simmer 1½ hours or until veal is very tender. Stir in parsley. Lower heat to stop boiling. In a small bowl, blend sour cream and ¼ cup flour. Add to hot liquid. Cook and stir until thick and creamy, but do not boil after adding sour cream. Serve over hot cooked noodles. Makes 4 to 6 servings.

Sour cream will not curdle when added to a hot sauce if the sauce is not boiling and the sour cream is at room temperature. Stir sour cream into sauce very slowly. Heat, but do not boil after sour cream has been added.

COFFEE PARFAIT

¾ cup sugar
One-third cup water
4 egg yolks
Dash salt
2 cups heavy cream
2 tbsps. instant coffee
2 tsps. vanilla
1 (1-ounce) square bitter chocolate, shaved or grated

Cook sugar and water in saucepan until syrup spins a thread or it reaches 20 degrees on a candy thermometer. Meanwhile, beat egg yolks and salt thoroughly. Beat hot syrup into egg yolks in a thin gradual stream and continue beating until cool. Beat heavy cream with coffee and vanilla until cream holds definite peaks. Fold in cooled yolk mixture along with three-quarters of the chocolate. Reserve remaining chocolate for garnish.

Spoon into ramekins and freeze until firm. Remove from freezer and put in refrigerator about 1 hour before serving. Put the squares of bitter chocolate in the freezer for several hours; it is then easy to shave with a heavy knife. Makes 12 servings.

INSTANT SPICED COFFEE MIX

6 tbsps. instant coffee powder
4 tbsps. instant nonfat dry milk powder
2 tbsps. granulated sugar substitute
⅛ tsp. cinnamon
⅛ tsp. nutmeg
⅛ tsp. ground ginger
½ tsp. vanilla extract

In a small bowl, combine all ingredients except vanilla extract. Stir to blend. Sprinkle with vanilla extract. With a fork or wooden spoon, stir and press until no trace of extract moisture remains. Sift to blend thoroughly. Store in an airtight container. To prepare 1 serving, spoon 2 to 3 teaspoons of mix into a standard-size cup. Fill with almost boiling water; stir. Makes about ¾ cup mix.

Babka Polish Easter tradition

Associated Press

Cooks interested in breads and coffee cakes traditionally made in various countries during the Easter season, will find about 30 recipes for these in one chapter of "The Festive Bread Book" by Kathy Cutler (Barron's).

One of the most famous of these coffee cakes is Polish Babka, and Kathy Cutler gives two recipes for it. I tried the one calling for the smallest number of egg yolks and it worked beautifully. Because this Babka does not have the candied fruit and almonds added to some versions, I found it especially delicious toasted and slathered with butter and strawberry jam. This treatment of Babka may be frowned upon by some purists, but it's mighty good eating.

Another of the Cutler Easter recipes is for an Italian Easter Basket with colored uncooked eggs baked in it — an offering you may have admired in Italian bakeries and would enjoy duplicating at home.

Easter is, of course, only one of the holidays treated in "The Festive Bread Book." Sixteen others — from New Year's to Christmas — are given their due. And all the recipes are clearly and concisely written. In addition there are short introductory notes to them. Color photographs by Bill Helms show the baked breads and coffee cakes.

The author of "The Festive Breads Book" teaches bread-baking in New England and knows whereof she writes.

KATHY CUTLER'S BABKA

1 tablespoon dry yeast
¼ cup warm water (105 to 115 degrees)
1 stick unsalted butter, melted
½ cup sugar
4 egg yolks
3½ to 4 cups all-purpose flour
½ teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon vanilla extract
1 teaspoon rum
¾ cup warm milk (105 to 115 degrees)
Fine dry bread crumbs
Confectioners' sugar

Dissolve yeast in warm water. Set aside for 5 minutes. Cream butter and sugar in mixing bowl. Add egg yolks, 1½ cups flour, and mix thoroughly.

Add yeast mixture, salt, vanilla, and rum.

Add milk and enough remaining flour to form a soft dough.

Knead on lightly floured surface until smooth — about 10 minutes. Place in greased bowl, turning to coat top.

Cover; let rise in warm place until double — about 1 hour.

Punch down dough. Generously grease 10-inch bundt pan. Lightly coat pan with bread crumbs. Put dough into prepared pan.

Cover, let rise in warm place until double — about 45 minutes.

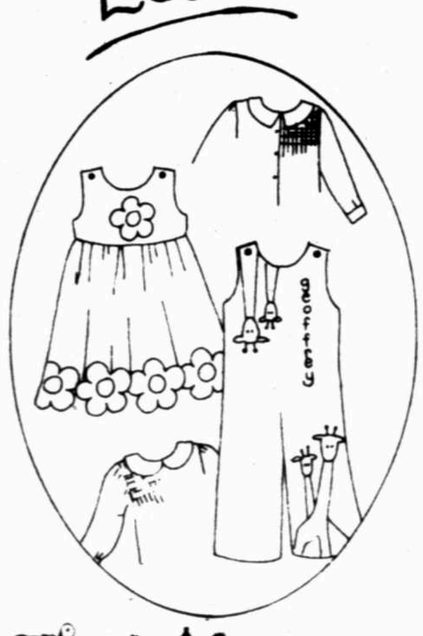

Bake in a preheated 350-degree oven 45 minutes or until done.

Cool in pan on wire rack 10 minutes. Then remove from pan. Cool on rack. Sprinkle with confectioners' sugar before serving.

Food Editor's Note: In trying this recipe, we used a fluted round 9-cup pan that measures 9 by 3½ inches. — C.B.

Headcheese: Childhood delight

By MERLE ELLIS

From the time I was 12, working wih my Dad at the Council Oak Store in Sioux City, one of my favorite luncheon meats has been headcheese. Two, three, four times a day during my 4 to 6 p.m. after-school work at the market, I would "lift" a slice of headcheese or "souse" from the deli case, roll it around a spoonful of potato salad (also "lifted" from the deli case, but Mom made it so somehow it seemed less "lifted"), slip into the back room and enjoy.

On Saturday, when I had a full half-hour lunch hour, a few slices of headcheese along wih a few slices of tomato and onion (procured from the produce department at a bargain price), all doused liberally with a bottle of the grocery department's best oil and vinegar dressing, made a marvelous meal. Little did I realize then that I was developing a rather expensive taste. I found that out last month in New York.

Headcheese is a good, old-fashioned home-style product developed, I'm sure, as a means to use all of the variety meats that resulyted from home slaughter at "hog-killing-time." Everything "'cept

Here is a recipe from Grandma's old cookbook to give you an idea of how it was made.

HEADCHEESE

"Clean head thoroughly, removing all hair and scruff; skin out snout and lower jaw and remove jaw bones. Cut head in two pieces. The tongue, heart and feet properly cleaned may also be included if desired. Cook until meat falls from bones. Cool, remove all bones, run through chopper. Season with salt, pepper, sage and the strained broth in which the meat was cooked. Mix and place in earthen vessel, weigh down. When very cold, cut in slices. Serve for luncheon or supper." Or, slice 1/4-inch thick and serve with a good vinaigrette as a first course, a La Tulipe.

Most of you, I'm sure, are not quite up to all of that, even if you had easy access to a hog's head. But you can make a very good headcheese in your own kitchen with meat that is readily available in any supermarket. Here is a recipe that I devised after returning, broke but inspired, from the Big Apple.

HEADLESS HEADCHEESE

3 pounds fresh pork picnic shoulder (bone in)
2 pork tongues OR 1 veal tongue
2 pig's feet, split
1 onion, stuck wih 3 or 4 cloves
1 bay leaf
1/2 teaspoon sage
1/2 teaspoon thyme
1 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon pepper

Put everything in a large, heavy pot, cover wih water, bring to a boil, reduce heat and simmer for 1-1/2 hours. Remove the pork shoulder and the tongue. Continue simmering the feet for an additional hour to develop a rich gelatinous broth.

Allow the pork and tongues to cool so that they can be handled, then remove all skin, bones and gristle and return them to the stock. Cut the meat into 1/2- to 3/4-inch cubes and set aside. Reserve any small pieces and trimmings.

Remove the pig's feet from the broth, allow to cool and remove the bones. Grind, or finely chop the meat and skin from the feet along with the reserved trimmings and small pieces of tongue and pork shoulder.

Mix the cubes of pork and tongue with the finely chopped meat. Add enough of the strined broth to cover. Return the mixture to the heat and bring to a boil. This reheating serves to mix the natural gelatin from the pig's feet thoroughly through the mixture so that when the headcheese is chilled it will slice without crumbling.

Pour into containers of desired size and shape (loaf pans work well). Chill until firm, then weigh down and refrigerate for 24 hours.

The possible variations are almost endless. Different seasonings may be added at the beginning of the reheating step. Try a bit of marjoram, coriander and/or cloves. Mix in a small can of button mushrooms. Add 1/2 cup or so of cider vinegar to the broth, toss in a few green olives and you have sour headcheese or "souse." Use your imagination.

Pancakes come in many forms

AP Feature Service

A favorite food in many forms and in as many lands is that primitive kind of bread known as the pancake.

For generations, Americans have started their day with a platter of golden flapjacks slathered with melted butter, and maple syrup or honey.

Not content with that, many of us lunch on blintzes, of Jewish origin, filled with sour cream and jam, or start off dinner with Chinese egg rolls dipped in fiery mustard and sweet and sour sauce.

These are a few of the better known forms the versatile pancake can take.

Less known is the Mexican pancake wrapped around squares of Jack cheese which has been rolled up in peeled green chili. Or egg-rich German pancakes topped with apple slices and pan-cooked till golden-brown.

One of the heartiest pancake dishes is the Hungarian palacsinta, when spread over with a mixture of sour cream and chopped cooked ham.

Better known to us are the French dessert crepes, those lacy, thin discs covered with jam or preserved fruit.

For the start of the meal, there is the Russian blini, one of the most famous of all appetizers. This is a truly gourmet dish that can take a large bite out of your bank account if you use the traditional Russian filling of black sturgeon caviar and smoked salmon slices.

The British spice their griddle cake batter with chopped brains and hard-boiled egg bits.

Pancakes can be elaborate or simple. One of the easiest to cook is the potato pancake, which is delicious for lunch or dinner accompanied by meat, fish or fowl. Here is a recipe.

6 medium potatoes
2 eggs
1 small onion, grated
1½ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon pepper
1 teaspoon ground nutmeg
1 tablespoon all-purpose flour
Vegetable shortening

Peel potatoes and shred to make enough for three cups. If you shred them ahead of time, place in bowl and cover with cold water, then drain and dry well with paper towel.

Beat eggs in large bowl, stir in potato bits, onion, salt, pepper and nutmeg. Sprinkle flour over the top and stir in.

Melt enough shortening in large, heavy frying pan to make depth of ¼ inch. Heat. Drop potato mixture — ¼ cup for each cake — into hot shortening, flattening slightly with back of spoon to make thin cakes. Fry slowly, turning once, 3 to 5 minutes or till crisp and golden. If necessary, add more shortening and reheat between batches. Serve hot.

LIVING TODAY

Older adults manage meals

By SHARON A. HILLIS
Midland County Extension Agent
Home Economics

Many older persons have problems that require some adjustment in meals. But you can deal with these problems rather that ignoring them. Buying necessary foods may be difficult on a fixed income. Whenever possible, do the shopping yourself. Shopping costs less than having groceries delivered, there are greater choices and you may find it an enjoyable challenge in stretching your budget.

Don't let lack of energy or poor eyesight interfere with preparing good meals. Use a large print cookbook if you are having trouble reading recipes. You can check one out from the public library or purchase one from a bookstore.

When you don't have the energy to cook a full meal, try preparing smaller, more frequent meals. There is nothing magic about three meals a day. Five small meals a day are fine as long as they include needed nutrients and the calorie intake maintains reasonable body weight.

If you have dental problems or wear dentures, you may need to use more foods that are soft and easy to chew. Use strained or chopped fruits that are prepared for infants as sauce for milk desserts or combine with tapioca or rice. Serve strained vegetables instead of whole vegetables, or add them to ground meat.

Meal planning is especially important for older adults. Here are some suggestions that will help you plan carefully:

* Follow recipes so food is well prepared and not wasted.
* Use shortcuts to save time and energy. Mixes, ready-prepared or home-prepared, and other prepared or partially prepared food will demand less energy.
* Plan one-dish meals or a main dish you especially like.
* Store leftovers promptly so you can use them for another meal. Leftover fruits and vegetables can make interesting salads or desserts. Meat, fish and poultry may be creamed or baked in a casserole with vegetables, rice, noodles, bread or cereals.
* Store enough food in the refrigerator or cupboard shelves so you can keep shopping to a minimum.

Living alone and cooking for one makes some older adults lose their appetite and interest in eating. But be aware that a person's attitude is very powerful. You can learn to enjoy dining alone. Try new dishes occasionally and use additions such as herbs and spices to make food taste better.

For serving, treat yourself like a guest. Use garnishes on the food, attractive trays, pretty place mats and other decorations to make the meal enjoyable. Listen to the radio or play favorite records while eating. If your budget allows, invite friends and relatives to some of your meals. Dine out occasionally for a change of food and surroundings.

While many older adults have to change their habits or cope with eating problems, most can find new ways to enjy mealtime.

POSITIVE THINKING

Destructive thoughts able to destroy lives

By NORMAN VINCENT PEALE

We can destroy ourselves or create ourselves by the thoughts we think. No one can be constructive apart from a healthy mental state.

What is the individual who thinks destructively actually doing? He is pumping out negative thoughts every day and as a result activates the world around him negatively. Is he changing things for the better? No at all. He is only adding to a failure pattern. But the person who thinks positively looks for solutions. As a result he is open to new ideas than can change things. He is not an "if" thinker; he is a "how" thinker.

There is an important distinction between an "if" thinker and a "how" thinker. The "if" thinker broods over a difficulty or setback, saying bitterly to himself, "If only I had done this or that...if only the circumstances had been different...if others had not treated me so unfairly...." So it goes from weak explanation to weak explanation, round and round, getting nowhere. The "if" thinker indicates a defeat attitude.

But the "how" thinker wastes no energy on post-mortems when trouble or even disaster hits him. Immediately such thinkers look for the best solution, knowing there is always a solution. He asks himself, "How can I use this setback creatively? How can I bring something good out of this? How can I stage a comeback?" Not if but how.

The "how" thinker gets problems solved efficiently knowing that values are always to be found in difficulty. He wastes no time with futile "ifs" but goes right to work on the creative "how." He eliminates destructive thinking; he uses constructive thinking. And he never gives up! Never, no matter what. the thought came back.

There was a man who married a poor girl with deficient education. This fellow, a college graduate, came from a so-called best family with a pile of money, and his negative thinking wife couldn't forget it. She felt inferior and kept thinking she hadn't the mentality or background to hold him. Her subconscious mind told her, "Maybe if you acted sick, your husband would love you more and you would be in less danger of losing him." So she made herself sick, not deliberately, but through the unconscious mind, until she actually became an invalid.

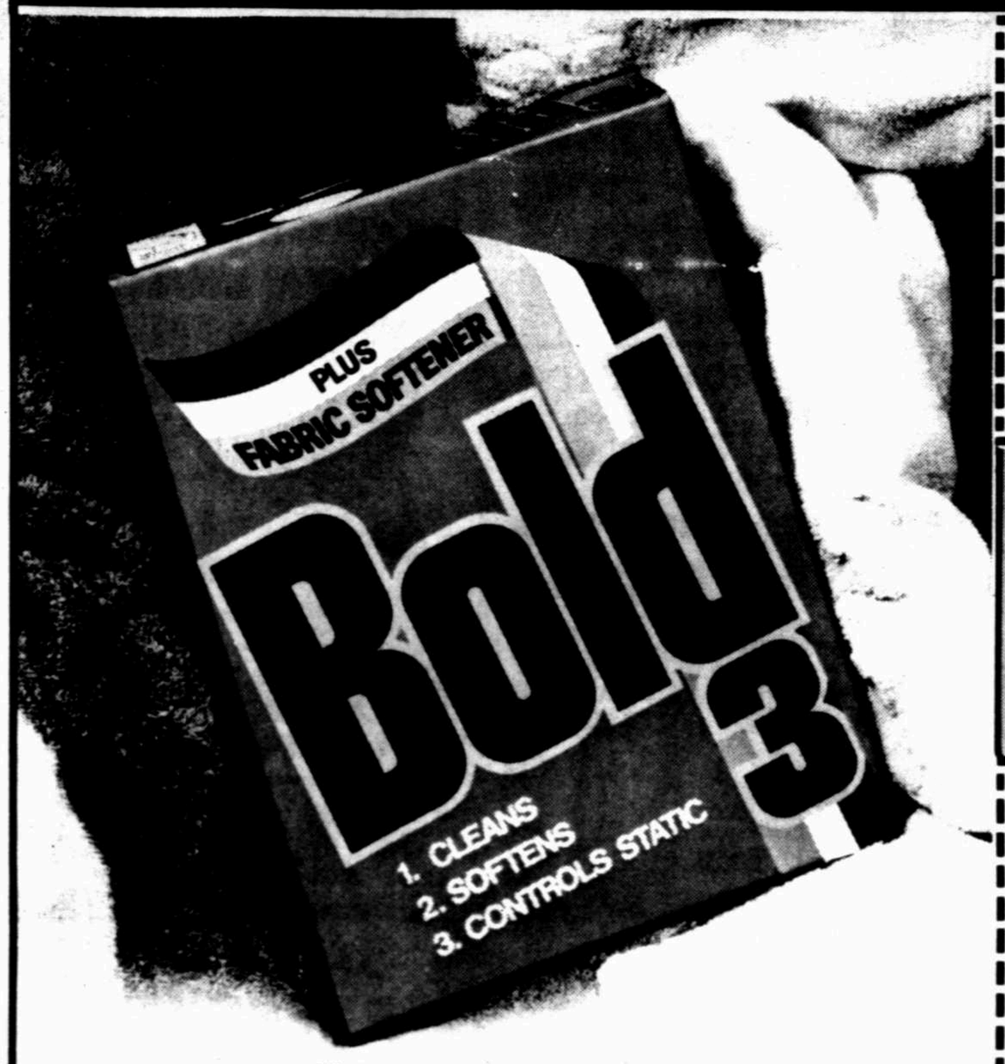

The doctor told her husband, "I find nothing really wrong with her. Her trouble is in her thoughts, in her twisted thinking." He suggested something which struck me as rather amusing, and it worked! The doctor thought of a scheme. He hired the most beautiful nurse he could find, a real glamour girl, and she was a little younger than the wife too! In caring for her patient, she got to know the husband as well.

One day, on the doctor's order, the husband said to his wife, "Darling, you often tell me that you want me to be happy after you are gone. Well I think I've found someone who will take your place. I find our nurse very attractive."

The wife became a well woman. She no longer let thoughts of inferiority dominate her.

Minister: China doesn't back forced abortions

PEKING (AP) — China's family planning minister said the government does not endorse forced abortions, though some may occur as part of the country's aggressive birth control program.

"We should admit that there are shortcomings in our work, and that it is impossible for us to make things perfect," Qian Xinhong told a news conference earlier this week.

"If the government allowed the use of force, the problem really would be very serious," he said, commenting in reports that authorities coerce women into having abortions.

China, which is actively promoting birth control in an effort to keep its population from exceeding 1.2 billion by the year 2000, has asked families to limit themselves to only one child.

Turkey losing money from poppy-growing efforts

ANKARA, Turkey (AP) — The Turkish government is in the red by millions of dollars in its efforts to grow opium poppies under strict controls and prevent their leakage into the world's illicit heroin market, officials say.

The chief causes for the losses lie in a low demand on the legal world market, a large stockpile of dried poppies and a new poppy-processing factory working far under its capacity.

From dried opium poppies come the morphine derivatives that produce pain killers for the medical drug industry. From ripened poppies comes the opium gum that is processed in clandestine laboratories into heroin.

In 1971, the Turkish government banned opium poppy cultivation under strong pressure from the United States. Cultivation was resumed in 1975 under a system declared virtually smuggle-proof by the United Nations and U.S. narcotics experts.

The peasants of the sun-baked central Anatolia plateau, the only part of the country where cultivation is permitted with licensing, are not allowed to slash the ripe poppy pods to let the sticky opium gum ooze out. The pods, which grow as big as tangerines on long stalks in mid-summer, must be left to dry out in the fields and the opium gum dries up with them.

Only sophisticated factories can extract the morphine derivatives from the dry pods and until the Turks built their factory the plants existed only in France, the Netherlands and Hungary.

But Turkey's factory was built — at a cost estimated by Western experts at $50 million — to turn out 90 tons of morphine hydrate annually. One Western expert said that far exceeds the world demand.

Working in full capacity, the plant is capable of processing 20,000 tons of dry poppy pods a year. But it started production this year only at half capacity and three tons of morphine hydrate have been shipped to a U.S. drug company. Contracts have been signed for the export of at least seven more tons this year — still not enough to break even.

Another problem for the Turks is that since 1975, dry pods have been piling up in storage. The state-owned soil products office is under legal obligation to buy the entire crop from the farmers.

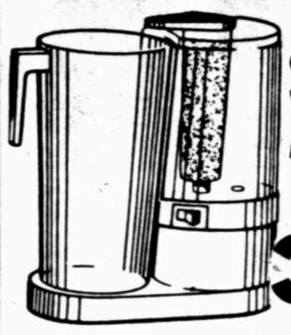

Halil Ceken, director of the soil products office, said 44,000 tons have been exported so far, mostly to France and Netherlands.

Dry pods are light in weight and large in bulk and Turkey has trouble finding storage space.

More than $15 million has been paid to the farmers for poppy purchases in the last eight years and only one third of the cost has been recovered from exports.

Argentine rulers shift to left since Falklands war

By DOUGLAS GRANT MINE

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — The Argentine military government has made an about-face in some matters of foreign policy since the war with Britain over the Falkland Islands last year.

The change has aroused concern in some civilian political quarters.

The staunchly anti-Communist generals seized power in a 1976 coup declaring their unshakeable commitment to what they termed "Western and Christian civilization." They put down Cuban-backed revolutionaries here and warned repeatedly of a "Red menace" to the West.

They don't act and talk that way any more. In fact in some cases they do the opposite.

For example:

An Analysis

PRE-FALKLANDS — The regime withdraws its ambassador from Cuba and sends military advisers to Central America to aid covert U.S. efforts to halt leftist guerrilla advances. Relations with Washington are flourishing. Yasser Arafat's admission that some Argentine terrorists received training with the Palestine Liberation Organization rules out the opening of a PLO information office in Buenos Aires.

The white minority regime in South Africa is hailed as a prospective close ally in the South Atlantic. The military junta orders the Foreign Ministry to study withdrawal from the Non-Aligned Movement (Third World) that Argentina joined in 1973.

POST-FALKLANDS — President Reynaldo Bignone, a keynote speaker at the recent Third World summit in New Delhi, India, praises Fidel Castro's "valor" and accuses the United States of interferring in Argentina's internal affairs. The U.S. ambassador in Buenos Aires is summoned to the Foreign Ministry to explain the distribution here — the day after Bignone, a retired army general, thanks Cuba and Castro for support in the Falklands conflict — of a State Department report on Cuban aid to Argentine guerrillas in the mid-1970s. Bignone meets with Arafat, calls for a Palestinian nation and denounces South Africa as "intransigent...aggressive...and racist."

"There has evidently been a change of course of 180 degrees in Argentine foreign policy," said Antonio Troccoli, leader of the Radical Party — the nation's largest behind the populist Peronists ousted by the armed forces in 1976.

"What is really unsettling is that the change has come about without the neccessary debate and the participation of Argentine society, which all of a sudden finds itself dragged along on a course about which it has not been consulted and in which it has had no participation."

The foreign policy turnabout is a direct result of last year's war, which was won by Britain at a cost of 712 Argentine and 255 British lives. The United States backed Britain in the conflict morally and materially.

The Soviet bloc and the great majority of the Third World developing nations backed Argentina.

Former Foreign Minister Oscar Camilion is one of the few leaders, civilian or military, publicly opposed to the current commitment to the non-aligned bloc.

Birthdays don't have age-old meaning in Florida

Time more forgiving in what some call 'heavan's waiting room'

By HUGH A. MULLIGAN
AP Special Correspondent

SARASOTA, Fla. — Happy birthday to me. Play it again, maestro, but not in dirge time.

If one must add another candle to the cake, count another ring on the tree of life, pass one more milestone on the journey to the undiscovered country from whose bourn no traveler returns, Florida is a more forgiving place than most to let it happen.

Age doesn't seem to matter down here. Or it's so relative even a giant sequoia would feel like a stripling.

Just the other day on one of the area's many golf courses a 92-year-old all-weather regular scored his age. "I couldn't do that when I was 80," he joked, bounding from the golf cart with the vigor of a man who expected to break 100 on his tombstone and probably will. The White House switchboard logs quite a few calls to these parts with centenary greetings from the president.

YEAR-ROUND RESIDENTS (as opposed to snowbirds from the North) claim the only people who die young in Florida are insurance actuaries and bookies who gave the Dolphins points over the Redskins.

More than 450 years ago a Spanish adventurer named Ponce de Leon came clanking along the Florida coast in search of a marvelous fountain that the local Indians told him would restore youth to the aging.

The Seminoles still spin tall tales for the tourists, especially around the apron at Hialeah race track. The magic elixir of long life was here all the time and poor old Ponce didn't know it. Though disappointed at not finding his fountain, he returned eight years later and tried to develop the real estate, then died prematurely at age 61 from tomahawk wounds. A mere kid by local standards, not even old enough to make a Little League shuffleboard tournament.

In Florida, you hear lines like that because people don't sit around waiting for the Grim Reaper.

Mulligan's Stew

They take up jogging, racquet ball, marathon running, etcetera, to outdistance him. Even poor health is looked upon as a state of mind that stirs only self-pity. The game of life is to be played to the final whistle, regardless of equipment problems.

THE FOURSOME IN FRONT of us one day on a Sarasota golf course were all to a man, and one woman, 20 years older than I, and 30 to 40 strokes apiece better off, even though one of the men carried a cane and another had a back brace and a brace on his right leg all the way up to the hip joint. The woman, whose arthritic left hand caused her to change to a baseball grip, told me "a geriatric golf joke":

It seems these three old fellows went out for a round together. One couldn't see too well, one was "deaf as a post" and the other was losing his memory. The chap hard of hearing teed off first, keeping his head down like a pro.

"Sounded like a great shot," shouted the fellow with the poor eyesight, "unfortunately I couldn't see where it went."

"I did, and it was a fantastic drive," chimed in the third partner.

"Where did it go?" asked the first.

"I don't remember," came the answer.

Laughter all around, the loudest from players even older than those depicted in the joke. Time is not of the essence around here, where the older you get, the less you are expected to act your age.

AT FIRST LIGHT, the beaches along the Gulf of Mexico stir with an antic life more fascinating than the water fowl featured in the tourist brochures. Elderly people by the hundreds, probably the thousands, are out digging clams, collecting shells, wading, walking, studying nature, even taking early morning dips. They cram the rails of the charter fishing boats. Later in the day you see them filling the tables in the library, eager for the final knowledge of the purpose of life.

There is about them an enthusiasm for life that is usually associated with youth, but rarely observed in the more immature beachcombers, who slouch about in a slough of pot and cassette-recorded chaos thumping through a head set. The tanned and wrinkled sifters of the early morning sand aren't just killing time before time kills them. They can reach into their shell rakes and tell you the difference between a left-handed whelk and a spiny periwinkle, as surely as they can tell you the best place to go for happy hour cocktails, a reduced rate early bird dinner or a cut-rate morning movie matinee. Reduced circumstances dictate frugality but not defeat.

ST. PETERSBURG calls itself "heaven's waiting room," but the joke is benign because only the scorned self-pity set sits around waiting. The rest happily are into all kinds of sports, crafts, volunteer work, refusing to whine like Iras in Shakespeare's "Antony and Cleopatra": "The bright day is done and we are for the dark."

Churches down here appear to be more crowded, and the communicants more fervid than in more youthful communities, but so too are the ballroom dance schools, the museums and the art galleries, as befitting an area of endless renaissance. Newspapers in Florida seem to draw more and better written letters to the editor than in other parts of the country, an observation confirmed by some of my editor friends hereabout. Just because the next world is around the corner doesn't mean the more senior of our citizenry have given up on reforming this one. These people aren't afraid to speak their opinions. At an overly explicit performance of the play "Le Ronde" recently, one old gentleman got up and denounced the heavy breathing and moaning of the lovers on stage as obscene. A dozen others walked out behind him. Rude perhaps, but the director should not have been surprised if adult situations evoked an adult response from genuine adults.

HERE IN THE DEEP DECEMBER of life, folks seem to have adopted as their life style lines from a Dylan Thomas work called "Poem in October":

"Do not go gentle into that good night,
Old age should burn and rave at the close of day;
Rage, rage against the dying of the light."

This young birthday boy, on a visit to Florida, is full of admiration for the way the locals go about burning, raving and raging.

Minister ordered to stop mobile weddings

HOUSTON (AP) — The city of Houston has ordered a church minister to stop conducting wedding ceremonies from his mobile chapel — a panel truck parked at a meter.

The Rev. Charles Neal was told Tuesday his practice is in violation of several city ordinances.

"He is in fact operating a business from a public street and that's totally illegal," said Ray Kennedy, deputy assistant director for the city's Traffic and Transportation Department.

Pedestrians pause to notice the famous "stars" along Hollywood Boulevard's "Walk of Fame" across the street from Mann's Chinese Theater, formerly known as Grauman's Chinese Theater. Reconstruction and facelifts of many of the area's historic landmarks are under way in hopes of restoring the image of glitter and glamour once more to Hollywood.

Alternative housing industry booming

CORRY, Pa. (AP) — The conventional housing industry has been wallowing in the trough of the national recession, but the market for alternative shelter such as log, geodesic dome and earth berm homes has been growing for years.

"This is a sleeper industry. It's been growing by 30 percent to 50 percent a year for the past several years," said Terry Peterson, publisher of the trade magazine, Alternative Housing Builder.

"Twenty years ago, this was a novelty item. But in the middle to late 1960s, it exploded," Peterson said in a recent interview.

Robert Sheehan, an economist for the Washington-based National Association of Home Builders, said alternative housing was insulated from the economic factors that affect conventional builders.

"Most log homes are really a luxury item, and luxury has done fairly well. They're not really cyclical," said Sheehan, noting that alternative housing made up only a fraction of the total housing market.

Peterson, a former home builder who edits his bimonthly magazine in this town located near Erie, based his figures for growth on the number of manufacturers, builder-dealers and consumers. He agreed with Sheehan that the rich who are unaffected by exorbitant mortgages had made the surge possible.

"These are people who can afford any house they want," Peterson said. "They're not buying shelter, they're buying a lifestyle — a little Biltmore or a little Casa Loma. They're making a statement about themselves.

"They're buying a status symbol," he added. "The people who live in these homes are the people who buy windmills and solar panels.They retreat into a cocoon, tear off the tie, chop some wood, throw it into the woodstove and live in their own world. They want to be unique."

There are over 10,000 alternative housing builders nationwide, and Peterson expects that number to double in the next five years.

According to his magazine's 1982 survey, 77 percent of the alternative houses sold are primary dwellings rather than seasonal cabins in the backwoods.

The survey also showed that 39 percent of the buyers pay cash, 63 percent of the homes cost $70,000 or more and 40 percent of the builder-dealers have built at least one dwelling worth at least $250,000. The mean cost is $65,000 to $75,000.

Peterson said alternative housing also appealed to first-time buyers who can save by assembling the homes themselves.

Entrepreneurs work to restore Hollywood to its glamour days

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Prostitutes, wearing spike heels and miniskirts, strut up and down the boulevard. Across the street, a drug deal is taking place. Not far away, a dazed woman whose painted face attracts little attention pushes a grocery cart laden with all her worldly goods.

Welcome to glamorous Hollywood, or as some call it, "Hollyweird."

The name Hollywood for many evokes images of beautiful movie stars, black limousines, world premieres and star-studded parties.

But the real Hollywood is a dowdy reflection of the glorious '20s and '30s when walled-in studio empires commanded huge stables of actors, directors, producers and writers.

Landmarks like the plush Garden of Allah apartments, the Hollywood Hotel and the original Brown Derby restaurant are remembered only in nostalgia books. Once-flashy showplaces have fallen into disrepair or disappeared altogether.

But new life is surging in a community that hit the skids in the 1960s.

A grass-roots revitalization has cropped up among the local residents and entrepreneurs tired of prostitutes, pimps, derelicts and street gangs tarnishing a community with one of the most bankable names in the world.

EFFORTS ARE BEING made to refurbish crumbling historic landmarks, establish museums and restore old buildings.

"It's just going to take time. It's not going to happen overnight," said Dennis Lidtke, a businessman who spent $7 million and the last four years to restore the 55-year-old Hollywood Palace near Hollywood and Vine. The ornate theater has been turned into a disco, restaurant, private club and video recording soundstage.

Lidtke, who owns a highly successful design company, was convinced his multimillion-dollar project located near the famous street corner would pay off.

"I saw millions of tourists come to that corner," he said. "They would shake their heads and take a picture of a street sign. But they would still come."

Donations of more than $3 million are rebuilding the Hollywood branch library which was set on fire last April, destroying the facility's film collection and rare books. "It has been a wonderful outpouring from the community," said Sheila Grether of the Los Angeles Library Association.

The name Hollywood continues to beckon tourists from all over the world. A 1982 survey by the Southern California Visitor's Council found that Hollywood still ranks with Disneyland as one of the attractions tourists most visited. Some 43 percent of them said it was their biggest disappointment.

"THEY COME HERE to see what Hollywood was like when Hollywood was Hollywood," said Marian Gibbons, president of Hollywood Heritage, a preservationist society she helped establish in 1980.

Little of that old flavor remains. Only one major film studio, Paramount Pictures, is still around. The rest moved long ago to such unexotic places as Culver City and Burbank.

But Hollywood Heritage is trying to give tourists a taste of the old days. One of the organization's projects is to make a Hollywood studio museum out of the old barn Cecil B. DeMille used in 1913 for his directorial debut, "The Squaw Man."

The barn, stored for years on the Paramount lot, has been moved near the Hollywood Boll.

"Producers sell pictures all over the world with the magic name of Hollywood. It's the least we can do," Ms. Gibbons said of the project.

Currently Hollywood's top tourist attractions are the famous corner of Hollywood and Vine; Graumann's — now Mann's — Chinese Theater, where sightseers can view the concrete-preserved footprints of their favorite stars; and the Hollywood Walk of Fame, where more than 1,400 brass stars embedded in the sidewalk honor radio, television and movie stars.

THE WALK OF Fame on Hollywood Boulevard received a face lift last year when two businessmen, Michael Kellerman and Robert Goldfarb, began a movement to find volunteers who would adopt a star and keep it scrubbed and polished.

Their next project is to persuade retailers to clean up shabby storefronts and to distribute garbage cans along the street.

"I look at Hollywood Boulevard like a gold mine with all the veins exposed," Kellerman said. "It's just a matter of tapping away and the gold falls into your hands."

The James Nederlander Co., a part owner of the Pantages Theater, one of the nation's first art deco movie palaces, presents stage shows there now. The company is planning to build two more theaters across the street.

Owners of the Aquarius Theater are removing the building's art deco interior and restoring the original name — the Earl Carroll Theater, which was the home of the "Earl Carroll Vanities" from 1938 to 1948.

SEVERAL REAL ESTATE developers have purchased some of Hollywood's landmark buildings and are planning to give them a face lift before renting them out as office space.

"Hollywood is the new up-and-coming area of Los Angeles," said Vernon McDade, a real estate developer.

Bill Haley still 'rocking around the clock' at time of his death

By MIKE COCHRAN

HARLINGEN (AP) — He lived fast and hard, like his music, entertaining rogues and royalty and loving and loathing life on a go-go show biz track.

"Rock Around the Clock" took him to the top. Twice.

He faded in and out of the limelight during 30 rollercoaster years in the peaks and valleys of the nation's consciousness.

And at the end, two years ago, Bill Haley died here in the obscurity of the Rio Grande Valley in the shadow of the Mexican border.

Recognized widely as the father of rock 'n' roll, Haley and his beloved Comets left a musical legacy that surely will survive the ages, yet his final days remain very much a blend of curiosity and bewilderment.

He had the lusty temper and thirst of an Irishman, which he was, but he also radiated the warmth, charm and spirit so common to the Irish.

"I don't think he willfully or knowingly destroyed himself," says banker Eason Tarr, one of Haley's few close friends in Harlingen.

"I've asked myself a thousand times 'Why? Why? What could I have done?' I knew him pretty damn well. I was close to him and I still don't understand."

HALEY DIED Feb. 9, 1981, at the two-story, wood-frame home he shared here with his Mexican-born third wife, Martha, and the couple's three children.

He was either 53 or 55, depending on the accuracy of his driver's license or the musical reference books that chronicled such hits as "Shake, Rattle and Roll" and "See You Later, Alligator."

Justice of the Peace Tommy Thompson ruled that Haley died of natural causes.

"He was lying on a bed in a normal fashion as though he were asleep," said Thompson, a casual acquaintance of Haley.

"He was friendly with me but he was not an outgoing individual. He had problems."

Recalled his banker friend Tarr:

"He was living within himself at twice the pace of a normal person. He was hyper. He was like a time bomb ready to go off."

William John Clifton Haley Jr., like his friend Tarr, was born in Highland Park, Mich., to a church organist mother and a banjo-playing father. Both encouraed him to learn guitar.

At age 15, he left home to travel with a country band and soon formed his own group, the Saddlemen, which played on a radio station in Chester, Pa., and in a bar in Gloucester City, N.J.

"We started out as a C&W group, then we added a touch of rhythm and blues," he told the Los Angeles Times in 1970. "It wasn't something we planned, it just evolved."

IN 1952, HE changed the name of his seven-piece band to Bill Haley and the Comets and continued to experiment with a new sound.

"We were something different, something new," he said. "We didn't call it that at the time, but we were playing rock 'n' roll.

"We were lucky. We came along at the right time in which nothing new was happening in the music field. The big band era had faded. We had an open market.

"It was easy to hit a home run."

Haley's lyrics often were inspired by phrases he'd heard from high school kids, such as a 1953 recording called "Crazy Man Crazy." That song and "Rock the Joint" before it were modestly successful.

In 1954, he graduated from a succession of small labels to the important Decca label, where he recorded Jimmy DeKnight's "Rock Around the Clock."

Drummer Harry Jaeger emerged from the studio that day and told a friend, producer John Hammond: "John, this record is going to change the course of music."

He was right.

"Rock Around the Clock" went nowhere at first, but the next year it was selected as the theme song of a Glenn Ford-Sidney Poitier movie called "Blackboard Jungle."

"I REMEMBER going to see 'Blackboard Jungle,'" rock musician Frank Zappa recalled years later. "When the titles flashed up there on the screen, Bill Haley and the Comets started singing, 'One, two, three o'clock, four o'clock rock.'

"It was the loudest rock sound kids had ever heard. Blackboard Jungle represented a strange sort of endorsement of the teen-age cause."

Indeed, teen-agers found in it a secret, defiant meaning for them alone, and by midsummer it reigned as the nation's No. 1 tune.

"It started the whole cotton-pickin' thing," says Major Bill Smith, a Fort Worth record producer. "Rock 'n' roll...whether it was Elvis, Little Richard, Jerry Lee Lewis, Chuck Berry or any of those cats...it all came from "Rock Around the Clock."

Haley later starred in a movie by the same name and another entitled "Don't Knock the Rock."

From 1953 until 1960, Haley and the Comets had a succession of hits, most notably Joe Turner's "Shake, Rattle and Roll," but nothing had the impact of "Rock Around the Clock."

That song was re-released in 1974 and ascended again to the Top 40.

Yet his success in this country was modest to the fame he found abroad, particularly in Britain, where the London Daily Mirror ran daily columns to keep his fans posted on his first tour.

ON OCT. 20, 1955, the Comets headlined a show at a high school auditorium in Cleveland. That night Haley met a young, largely unknown singer who was not unfamiliar with the Haley sound and style.

His name was Elvis Presley and he was perhaps a year away from replacing Haley as the "King of Rock 'n' Roll."

In 1976, New York Post columnist Lou O'Neill met Haley by chance in Veracruz, Mexico, and asked why a famous rock star was living there in relative obscurity.

"Look," Haley replied, "after a while you want to withdraw from all of the so-called fame.

"I had two marriages wash out in the States, but since I've been living down here my whole life has become a lot more peaceful."

He told O'Neill he still went out on tours every six months or so and that the Comets were in great demand for "a lot of the oldie shows."

"It's funny," Haley said, "how the passage of time makes you remember the good times instead of the bad. But believe me, it wasn't all fun and games either."

Actually, he was enormously popular in Mexico, which perhaps explains why he eventually chose to live out his final years just this side of the border.

"He came to Harlingen to slow down," said Tarr, "and it was a good idea. But I don't think he ever accepted it...I'm not sure he really wanted that.

"A PART OF him was still longing for show biz and the limelight.

"Common sense said 'hang it up' and another side was still yearning for the crowds and the youth and energy that they display."

Haley was drinking heavily during this period and more than once was picked up by friendly police as he wandered the streets alone at night.

They knew and liked Haley and usually dropped him off at his home or let him sleep it off at the jail.

"He was a decent man, a quiet man with not much to say," recalled former Police Captain Buddy Laramore. "He called me quite often to talk. I didn't know him as well as I could have, but I knew him pretty well."

Although he refused to grant interviews — even denied to reporters that he was Bill Haley — and lived as a semi-recluse, acquaintances said he enjoyed being introduced as Bill Haley of Bill Haley and the Comets.

"Sometimes he'd walk in and tell us he was Bill Haley and show us his driver's license," waitress Barbara Billnitzer said at the time of his death. "He always seemed real lonely."

A Harlingen high school student recalled that "Some of us knew who he was, but most people just knew him as Mr. Haley."

TARR SAID HE and Haley were never drinking companions but that they talked many times, often about their hometown of Highland Park.

"He was not always drinking, but he would go on binges and he wouldn't eat," said Tarr, who said he never knew Haley to use drugs.

"Bill said drugs were a dead end for anybody who ever got involved," he remembered.

Haley once brought him the manuscript of an autobiography he was working on but when Tarr did not read it immediately he took it back in a huff.

"Well, give it here. You don't care," he quoted Haley as saying.

Haley's wife told a reporter the manuscript is now in the hands of a London agent and declined an interview on the grounds that it might somehow effect potential publishing and film rights.

"Martha is a real sweet lady," said Tarr, adding with a smile:

"She can be fiesty as the dickens but I guess you have to be to live with a guy like him. There's no way things can be calm and settled when that guy was around."

Tarr remains puzzled that Haley did not resume his tours, because, physically, he was capable of returning to the road.

"HIS TRIPS weren't flops, they were successful," he said, including a resounding triumph in late 1979 before British royalty in London.

In a front page story dated Nov. 27, the London Evening Standard reported:

"The Queen returned to her youth at the Royal Variety Performance last night and Rocked Around the Clock with Bill Haley and the Comets.

"When the veteran rock 'n' roller took to the stage at the Theatre Royal, Drury Lane, his astonishing kiss curl still miraculously intact after 25 years in the business, she leant forward in her seat and nodded her head in time with the music throughout the set.

"Afterwards she approached Haley at the presentation ceremony and said: 'It was great to hear that music again. I grew up on it and it reminds me of when I was young. It takes one back a bit and I enjoyed it.'

"'It reminds me of when I was young, too,' replied the beaming and now distinctly pudgy singer..."

During his final tour, in South Africa nine months before his death, Haley discussed the London performance with a foreign journalist.

"I was very nervous because no rock 'n' roll star had ever been invited to do a Royal Command Performance, although the Beatles had met the Queen and talked to her...

"I REMEMBER walking out and seeing the lights shine on the Queen's diamond tiara in the Royal Box...As I started to do the songs I was very conscious of the tiara because of the lights."

He soon realized, by the glitter from the crown, that she was keeping time with his music.

Mayor Jerry Rigdon, of Burlington, Iowa, is one of many people in this small southeast Iowa city who is against bringing a nuclear weapons assembly plant into the state. Rigdon says he doesn't think nuclear weapons should be assembled anywhere — and particularly not near his city.

Iowa city weighs costs, benefits of having nuclear arms plant

BURLINGTON, Iowa (AP) — The mayor says he doesn't want nuclear weapons in his backyard. A union leader would welcome the jobs. A city councilman agrees the benefits would be substantial. A local minister is not so sure.

A study by the federal government on where to place a nuclear weapons assembly plant has divided residents of this southeast Iowa city where area unemployment stands at 14.6 percent.

"It bothers me that we are so callous that when the government offers this type of move, people say 'Great! Jobs!' without thinking of consequences," says the Rev. Art Campney, pastor of the First United Methodist Church.

Campney is a member of a group called Citizens For Peace which opposes moving a nuclear weapons assembly plant, operated by the Department of Energy, from Amarillo to Middletown, Iowa, about eight miles west of this city of 30,000.

A possible move was the subject of a draft environmental impact statement issued by the Energy Department in December 1982. The study explores the environmental effects of three plans to expand the country's capabilities to produce nuclear weapons.

"We already have enough of these weapons to not only obliterate our enemies but ourselves several times over. I find the idea of building more ludicrous."

ONE PLAN CALLS for building new facilities at Pantex, the Texas plant which now produces the weapons. A second calls for a partial or complete relocation of Pantex functions to the Iowa Army Ammunition Plant in Middletown, the third, for moving operations to the Hanford Reservation, near Richland, Wash.

A partial relocation of operations to Middletown would mean 1,000 jobs and $2.16 million in construction for southeast Iowa. A complete move would mean 2,600 jobs and $1.5 billion in construction, according to the draft study.

"It's a pretty staggering amount of money they are talking about," said city Councilman Lowell Bauer. "I see the benefits as rather great and I've heard a good deal of community support."

"We would welcome the work with open arms," said Wayne Coin, business representative for District 131 of the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers. Membership in the local is now about 700, down nearly 40 percent from March 1982, Coin said.

Mayor Jerry Rigdon agrees that the move would do wonders for the area's unemployment rate but he says, "I don't care if it brings 60,000 jobs or 160,000 jobs — you can't let economics enter into it.

"I AM OPPOSED to the building of nuclear weapons whether they are built in Amarillo, Texas, Richland, Washington, Moscow, or Burlington, Iowa," said the 44-year-old Rigdon. "You could say I am particularly opposed to them in my backyard."

From 1947 through 1975, parts for nuclear weapons were made at the Iowa facility. At that time, the plant employed up to 10,000 people who traveled to their jobs from distances of up to 75 miles.

The closing of that branch of the Iowa plant and more recent economic trends have produced deep cuts in the area's job opportunities.

Burlington's largest employers are producers of durable goods, mostly for the ailing farm and automobile industries. In the last several years, J.I. Case, the area's biggest employer, has laid off 1,400 people, reducing the farm implement producer's workforce in the area to about 1,300.

The Burlington-West Burlington Area Chamber of Commerce has been guarded in its statements on the plan.

"LET'S JUST say there's more interest than animosity," among chamber officials, said Executive Director Steve Synder.

City Councilman Wayne Hogberg is also interested. He said the government "has to produce these weapons somewhere" so Iowa may as well reap the benefits.

But the mayor waves away this idea.

"We already have enough of these weapons to not only obliterate our enemies but ourselves several times over. I find the idea of building more ludicrous," Rigdon said.

Burlington's future "lies with the Caterpillar Co. or J.I. Case or Champion," Campney said.

"We already have more nuclear bombs than we want," he said.

Caterpillar Inc., a manufacturer of heavy construction equipment, was expected to become the area's biggest employer after completion of a new plant. But work on the facility stopped late last year when Caterpillar employees in six states went on strike. They are still out.

WILLIAM ALLEN, a retired engineer, calls the trade-off between jobs and weapons "devastating."

"The price for a few jobs seems a little bit high when we weigh it against the damage to our children, our children's children, and our children's children's children," he said.

But Snyder believes residents cannot afford to dismiss the plan without careful consideration.

"We have compassion for those against the plan. But the economic impact of 1,000 to 3,000 jobs — that's a bunch," he said.

Threat of nuclear war discussed in Washington State classrooms

By STEVEN GOLDSMITH
Hearst Feature Service

SEATTLE — The threat of nuclear war has exploded in the school classrooms in Washington State.

At an elementary school here, "E.T." teaches pupils how communicating better with strangers could reduce the threat of global war.

In Redmond, Wash., two university professors debate President Reagan's nuclear deterrence policy before a group of seventh-through-12th-graders.

Since last fall, when the drawings of 2,000 children papered the Kingdome arena during a Target Seattle nuclear awareness event, interest in bringing the issue to the classroom has grown.

"Teach Peace" say the buttons worn by members of Educators for Social Responsibility, one of several groups arranging nuclear-awareness activities in the schools. The organization, based in Massachusetts, already has 270 members in Washington and says inquiries from new teachers and parents come in frequently.

"We've been getting calls for information from all over the state," said Helen Strickland, the executive secretary.

Not all educators and parents, of course, are enthusiastic about bringing the nuclear weapons issue into the classroom. A major worry is that only one viewpoint, that of activists, will be heard by students.

"THIS RAISES SOME truly profound questions about education," said Donald Hellmann, a University of Washington foreign policy expert who supports the Reagan administration's deterrence policy.

Hellmann accepted invitations to present that view at two schools. He said the schools are sincerely trying to present both sides, but "it's a real pedagogical problem."

"I don't accuse anybody of brainwashing," he said, "but there's an overwhelming tendency to psychologize, oversimplify and moralize. This is an issue of tremendous complexity, and yet I've seen people accused of being pathological for having a certain view."

Strickland replied that Hellmann's being invited to speak was an example of how all opinions are sought.

"We've worked very hard at trying to be fair, to get in all sides," Strickland said. "We're all exploring how to treat this with kids."

The Seattle School Board barely approved, by a 4-3 vote, any participation in the Target Seattle events.

During the Target Seattle week, teachers formed workshops to compile information and eventually produced a packet of classroom materials for elementary schools and another for secondary schools. The packets have since been used by individual teachers mostly on their own initiative.

SOME MATERIALS were drawn from long-established programs in Roman Catholic schools. Dr. Anthony Gnanarajahcq, peace and justice education coordinator for the Seattle archdiocese, said the church's approach is to work on "broader" issues such as global interdependence rather than focusing solely on the superpower arms race.

"Some people say that all issues fade under this thing," he said. "But what about hunger and injustice? The problem is important, yes, but it's part of the whole picture."

That generalized approach was adopted in the Target Seattle curriculum, at least for the elementary school level. John Morefield, principal of Dearborn Park Elementary in Seattle, said several public school teachers have tried the so-called conflict-resolution exercises.

In one communication exercise used at Dearborn Park, students were asked to pretend that their teacher was E.T. and that he was unfamiliar with earthly ways. The pupils' job was to tell E.T. in writing how to make a peanut butter sandwich.

As the lesson progressed, "E.T." had great trouble when he followed the children's vague instructions. When they told him to spread the peanut butter, for example, he spread it on the entire loaf of bread, wrapper and all. Morefield said the messy, and funny, lesson helped convey the message that peace can come through working harder at clear communication, especially with strangers.

"IT'S NOT content-oriented like with secondary students," Morefield said. "It's more exploring feelings from a peaceful point of view, learning communication skills, accepting differences and resolving generalized kinds of conflicts."

At junior and senior high schools, more explicit discussions of the arms race are taking place.

Erie and Laurel are cities linked by black citizens

EDITOR'S NOTE: Some left their Mississippi town as many as 50 years ago, traveling north to find work. And respect. Through the decades, they came from Laurel to settle in Erie, Pa. Many of that Pennsylvania city's blacks recall the strong link with Laurel to this day.

By MARY MacVEAN
Associated Press Writer

ERIE, Pa. — Jo Kathy Gilliam remembers she "cried so hard" after her first summer in Erie when her mother decided the family wouldn't return home to Laurel, Miss.

"It was just different here. It was friendly but you could tell people knew you were from the South and treated you differently," says Ms. Gilliam, who was 15 years old when Erie became her home. "We left a lot of things behind."

Ms. Gilliam, 28, moved to Erie in 1969, joining an enclave of blacks from Laurel who first came to Erie during the Depression.

THE LAURELITES took refuge in Erie to escape the poverty and racism that sent many Southern blacks to Northern industrial cities in search of jobs and equality.

About 1,000 of Erie's 11,600 blacks once called Laurel home. Half of Erie's blacks have familial ties to the quiet Mississippi town of 22,000 near the Alabama border.

After four decades, many Laurelites remain homesick and long for Southern life. They say Erie hasn't fulfilled their dreams, and many hope to return some day.

Only a handful of people have returned to Laurel during their working lives, according to their Erie friends. But, as the first emigrants near retirement, more expect to go home.

"I like it there, I love it. I'll go back when I retire," says Walter Crosby, 61, who has lived 40 years in Erie. "It's different there because conditions have changed. But I can always look at it as Laurel because my schoolmates are there and doing well."

IT WAS NO ACCIDENT that Crosby and others came to Erie, known as "a working town" during the hard times of the '30s and '40s. A cadre of ministers traveled between Erie and Laurel, publicizing jobs in Erie's then-blossoming industries.

The first workers, and their families who followed, were a community, helping and depending upon one another. But they grew apart as they adjusted to Northern urban life.

Today, as the painful memories of Jim Crow mellow, Erie's Laurel community is beginning to reunite.

"I'm surrounded by so many Laurelites here, it's like a second home," says Ms. Gilliam.

Before 1940, less than 1 percent of Erie's residents were black. By 1980, 10 percent of the city's 120,000 residents were black.

LAUREL WAS AN UNUSUAL Southern city with one of the few black middle classes of the early 1900s and a respected black high school, according to Cleveland Payne of the University of Southern Mississippi.

But Laurel's major industry, lumber, fell to the Depression and segregation grew.

In 1934, the Rev. Ernest Franklin Smith, a black Methodist Episcopal minister who is now retired, came to Erie.

He helped lead the move to Erie, buying meals for some on the long train ride north, searching for housing in Erie and encouraging people to join his parish.

"The mayor got in touch with the bishop, he wanted someone to take charge of the black people," says Smith, 89, who still wears his cleric's collar even at home, which is cluttered with plaques and the memorabilia of his career.

An Alabama native, Smith had friends in Laurel and rode the train to Mississippi to recruit for job openings through friends and at church meetings.

"But I had to do it undercover," Smith recalls. "Southern employers didn't want their labor to leave, they wanted them to stay and work for nothing."

YET THEY LEFT and carried to Erie a common bond — pride. Many say that pride was nurtured in Oak Park High School, where Laurel's blacks were educated from 1928 until it closed in 1970.

"When integration started, all schools had to be desegregated to get government support. No white kids wanted to go to Oak Park so it closed," says Jerry Prince, an assembler at General Electric.

Prince, 35, who left Laurel in 1967, is president of the 75-member Erie chapter of the Oak Park Alumni Association, the first nationally chartered black high school alumni group.

In the past, Erie's black organizers didn't use the Laurel connection "because people were fleeing that hometown," says Fred Rush, a city planner and one of the few blacks in the city administration.

But Rush called the Oak Park graduates "possible seed corn" to unite other blacks in Erie.

"Once you get pride, things can change," he says.

Pride is abundant among Oak Park graduates. More than 3,000 alumni attended a homecoming in Laurel last summer, including a caravan of more than 100 Erie residents. Alumni have traveled to Laurel every other summer since 1976, when the first homecoming was held.

MEMBERS OF THE Erie chapter view their high school with an affection that continues to influence them decades after graduation.

"We knew more than just Booker T. Washington and George Washington Carver," says Celestine Davis, now an English teacher in Erie. "When we came up here, they knew nothing about it."

Graduates are quick to note their most famous alumnus, opera diva Leontyne Price, and other successes. They say students were instilled with a confidence in their ability to succeed.

Life was hard for those first emigrants to Erie, although there was work at such industries as the Erie Malleable Iron Co., Hammermill Paper Co. and the Bucyrus-Erie foundry.

Salaries could be triple those of Laurel's major employer, the Meagle Furniture Co., according to Payne.

"I was a young man when I came here," says Crosby, who moved north after high school. "I wasn't looking to come here to stay. I was just going somewhere."

Hiram Warbington left Laurel after World War II with more purpose.

"I came out of the service, and we got a big welcome in San Francisco," says Warbington. "When I got off the bus in Laurel, people called me boy.

"Then, I was working with a white guy, and he was making more money and I was doing more work. I didn't like it, but there was nothing I could do about it. It just got to the point I couldn't take it any more," Warbington says.

"You don't think about it when you go back, but you don't forget it either," says Mrs. Davis.

She recalls her uncle's death at the hands of a Ku Klux Klansman, who bombed her uncle's store. The KKK member was acquitted, she says.

Thelma Grady followed her uncle to Erie after high school in 1953. She remembers that she and her school friends were forced to give up their bus seats for white workmen.

Liberty City residents blame troubles on hard times

By JOHN-THOR DAHLBURG
Associated Press Writer

MIAMI — The hearses are queued up for a funeral along Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. Boulevard. The afternoon drinkers gather in the sun outside the M&M Lounge.

In African Square Park, four young blacks sprawl on benches, sip from beer bottles wrapped in paper bags and tell of hard times in Liberty City.

"Sometimes, I try and think about my future — all I see is a great big blank," says Lonnie Westbrook, 19. "A zero. The only way to get out of here is by joining the Army, and they're not taking now."

"The next 20 years, that's what I'm worrying about," echoes Adrian Miller, 19. "What do I have now? Nothing. What will my own kids have? Nothing."

For Miller and Westbrook, both out-of-work school dropouts who say they're actively seeking jobs, the riot-torn 200-block Miami neighborhood of Liberty City has become a sun-washed dead end.

"The tune 'Survival' has become our song; you know, the one that goes: 'Only the strong can survive,' " says 20-year-old Richard Davis, who smiles faintly and shows two gold-capped teeth. "We're surviving together."

Last Sunday night, Miller, Westbrook and 500 other young people spilled into Liberty City streets from African Square Park after police unplugged the super-amplified music at an open-air disco when neighbors complained of the din.

Trash fires were lit, bottles and chunks of concrete hefted, a self-service gas station ransacked and three white motorists slightly injured. Police arrested 31 in the spree, then jailed 20 more the following night when police reported renewed but "sporadic" bottle-tossing.

Spending their time in Liberty City's African Square Park, trying to cope with hard times, are Forrest Cutler, seated, Richard Davis and Jeffrey Carr. Cutler, who perceives a lack of work and hope, believes a civil war is brewing in his Miami neighborhood.

AP Laserphoto

The weekend episode was a far cry from the May 1980 explosion in Liberty City ignited by the acquittal of four white former policemen in the beating death of a black insurance executive. Eighteen people died in the three days of rage, and $100 million in property was looted, wrecked or consumed by flames.

In December, two days of rioting erupted in Overtown, some 40 blocks to the south, when a white Miami police officer killed a black inside a video-game parlor.

Police spokesman Angelo Bitsis said last Sunday's disco disturbance "had nothing to do with race" and was triggered "by people who didn't want to turn their music down."

But youths in Liberty City say all three disturbances were rooted in anger and despair at not sharing in the fruits of Miami's 1980s boom and in the prosperity of white and Latin neighbors.

"The way things are going now, I think a civil war is coming," warns Forrest Cutler, 23, a graduate of Allen University in Columbia, S.C., who works as a part-time physical education teacher.

"All most dudes want from life here is a change and a chance. They're not getting anything in Liberty City," says Cutler. "No chance at all."

Cutler is at least half right, according to the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics. Black teen-age joblessness in Miami hovers around 45 percent, while total unemployment for Miami workers of all races and ages is 10.2 percent.

"Warehousing and janitoring aren't even available now for us blacks, let alone something you'd want to spend your life doing,' says Cutler. "We all have stories about places that never hire blacks. But they'll take the Haitian brothers, because they'll work for below the minimum wage."

The White House announced last week that $37 million of the $70 million promised after the May 1980 riots has been pumped into the neighborhood. However, much of Liberty City remains grim, a network of slums painted hospital-green or gray where 66,000 people live three miles from sparkling Biscayne Bay and the multimillion-dollar office suites of Miami's downtown.

It is a humble end for a city dreamed of in the 1930s as "a higher-priced residential enclave" for "black professionals."

Ad agencies ignore ratings

ENTERTAINMENT

NEW YORK (AP) — The ballyhooed network ratings race is like the potato-sack competition at the company picnic. It's great for back-slapping, ego-boosting and prestige-building, but outside the office, it's really meaningless.

The networks make a big fuss over beating one another, and Nielsen's comparative numbers are made available to the public, through their hometown newspapers, each week. Everyone who cares knows that CBS is No. 1 so far this year.

"There's glamour in winning the season," says H. Weller Keever, ABC's vice president for sales. "Cumulative ratings are very meaningful to stations, program departments and stockholders."

But advertisers — the people who pay the bills — consider this season-long competition virtually insignificant.

"We have practically zero interest in it," says Richard Kostyra of the J. Walter Thompson ad agency. "Those figures are based on households, and our clients care about specific targets, like women 18-34. There's an old-but-true cliche: Households never buy anything. People do."

That means if sponsors want women, they buy into a show like "Dynasty" on ABC. If they want men, they pay for a chunk of NBC's "Hill Street Blues." The ratings scorecard reflecting over-all network performance is mostly for show, or show business.

And here's another surprise from Madison Avenue. Although major miniseries attract large audiences, network ratings inflated by these blockbusters are disregarded by advertisers when they purchase commercial time for the next season. "They have no relation to buying," says Keever.

Ratings for individual programs do establish next season's ad rates for those shows. In setting commercial charges, advertisers disregard abnormal ratings from special broadcasts like miniseries, the World Series or one-of-a-kind programs like the "M*A*S*H" finale, Keever says.

So the full rating point ABC gained from its 18-hour "Winds of War" in February didn't translate into the $50 million in future ad revenues a Nielsen point is supposed to be worth.

The networks say that rough dollar figure applies only to ratings earned by regular series programming.

"Advertisers buy programs or packages of programs on a program-by-program basis," says David Poltrack, CBS' head of sales. "They don't buy a network's national average. Buyers are very astute."

ABC's revenue from "The Winds of War," which averaged a 38.6 rating, came from the $175,000 the network charged for a 30-second commercial. ABC will charge $150,000 for "The Thorn Birds," the 10-hour miniseries, which runs four consecutive nights, starting Sunday.

ABC says that all commercial time has been sold, even though some advertisers balked because "The Thorn Birds," the story of a priest tempted by the love of a woman, will be shown during Holy Week. The United States Catholic Conference complained about ABC's scheduling.

Ratings interest at the networks is running high now. With the prime-time season over April 17, ABC is making a last-gasp — but probably futile — bid to catch CBS with "The Thorn Birds." Kostyra says the advertising community expects "The Thorn Birds" to earn ratings comparable to "The Winds of War."

Originally scheduled for May, "The Thorn Birds" was moved up so it could be counted in the 1982-83 season.

Although ABC gained ground during its week of "The Winds of War," the network hasn't sustained the momentum and trails CBS by a full point. Through March 17, CBS had an 18.4 rating for the season, ABC 17.4 and NBC 15.5. Ratings measure the average percentage of TV households watching a given minute of prime time.

CBS has won every week since "The Winds of War," and the two programs ("Condo" and "Amanda's") that ABC introduced during "The Winds of War" blitz have fared poorly.

Guatemala's 'state of siege' ends

GUATEMALA CITY (AP) — President Efrain Rios Montt entered his second year in power today by revoking a state of siege he imposed eight months ago in a bloody campaign to rid the country of leftist rebels.

"On March 23, there will be a strong change because there will not be a state of siege anymore, nor a state of alarm or a state of anything. You will be normal citizens, here and everywhere else," he told the nation last week.

On Tuesday, Rios Montt announced a 30-day amnesty for the guerrillas to turn in their weapons. The period begins March 29.

The state of siege permitted mass arrests, secret trials and firing squads that executed 15 people — the last five of them Monday.

Six of the executions came four days before Pope John Paul II visited Guatemala earlier this month, and defied a papal plea for clemency.

Rios Montt is abolishing the state of siege as part of a "Day of National Dignity" including dedication of a monument to the March 23 coup that brought him to power one year ago.

He was scheduled to sign new decrees returning the country to constitutional rule at a ceremony later in the day.

The president retains legislative powers, however, and it is not clear if the secret courts will go out of existence with the end of the state of siege.

Rios Montt's new program also includes measures for the registration of political parties and creation of an independent electoral tribunal to set up elections for a constituent assembly.

The assembly would decide when presidential elections will be held. Rios Montt has hinted that they will be held before the end of this year. He has said he will not seek the office.

The president, an army general and "born again" convert to a U.S.-based evangelical Christian sect, acknowledged last week that his regime had abused its authority in an effort to end the undeclared civil war that has taken more than 6,000 lives since 1978.

"We, the government, know and understand that we have sinned, that we have abused our power, and we want to reconcile ourselves with the people," he said in a nationwide television and radio address.

Rios Montt extended a month-long amnesty offer once before, in June 1982, but few accepted it.

He claims rebel activity is down by 20 percent this year because he has reduced rural support for them by providing Indian villages with food, money for public works and civil defense groups made up of local villagers.

The London-based human rights organization Amnesty International, however, says the reduced activity may be the result of a "scorched earth" policy aimed at ridding the northwestern highlands of the leftist insurgency.

An estimated 35,000 Guatemalans, mostly impoverished Indians from the northwestern part of the country, have fled across the border to Mexico to escape the army's campaign.

There has been no reliable estimate of the number of people killed in the campaign against the guerrillas, but refugees who arrived in groups of up to 300 in January and February — many of them after walking for more than a week — told of massacres of villagers, rape and torture.

Secretary of State George Shultz prepares to testify before a Senate subcommittee studying economic and military assistance to El Salvador.

Approval of military aid for El Salvador predicted

WASHINGTON (AP) — The chairman of an important Senate subcommittee predicts the Reagan administration will get most of the military aid it wants for El Salvador, but the money may have strings attached.

Sen. Robert W. Kasten, R-Wis., commented Tuesday as the Appropriations subcommittee on foreign operations began considering Reagan's request for $110 million to train and equip Salvadoran soldiers.

Kasten said Congress might impose a ceiling on military advisers, require free and fair elections, or bar further aid until suspects in the murders of four American churchwomen are brought to trial.

Secretary of State George P. Shultz testified that the funds are essential in efforts to put down "Cuban-backed guerrillas."

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee is taking up the issue today.

Kasten said his subcommittee would act this week on the first $60 million of the request. This amount would be diverted from military aid programs for other countries.

A committee source, speaking on condition he not be identified, said there were five or six votes on the nine-member subcommittee to approve the administration request.

But Daniel K. Inouye, D-Hawaii, the ranking Democrat on the subcommittee, said, "I'm afraid that by persisting and carrying out this policy, we may be creating another Castro there."

Meanwhile, Thomas O. Enders, assistant secretary of state for inter-American affairs, told the corresponding subcommittee in the House:

"The point which has to be made is that the insurgents are not going to dominate the country by force. Once that point is made, a political solution becomes possible. If that point is not made, the conflict could go on for a very long time."

Nicaraguan businesses guarded

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — The government posted police at two companies and sent auditors to a third, saying it was seizing assets belonging to Adolfo Calero Portocarrero, a businessman turned counter-revolutionary rebel leader.

Assistant Police Chief Roger Cabezas said the ruling leftist Sandinista junta government was afraid the firms' earnings were financing Nicaraguan exiles attacking from across the border in Honduras.

The Foreign Ministry sent a letter of protest to Honduras on Tuesday, blaming Nicaragua's neighbor for border attacks the Sandinistas claim are financed and organized by the United States.

The leftist government says its troops are battling an estimated 2,000 Honduran-based rebels who have crossed into northern Nicaragua.

At the United Nations in New York, Nicaragua asked for an emergency meeting of the Security Council because of the incursion.

The government sent auditors to the posh Camino Real hotel near Managua's airport. At the same time, dozens of police stood guard at Milca — the Coca-Cola bottling company — and at the Datsun automobile importer, where they were sent Monday night.

A Justice Ministry statement issued Tuesday night said the three companies would continue to operate normally while their assets remained "on deposit" with the Ministry of Tourism, Industry and Commerce.

Calero Portocarrero is a former co-owner of Milca and reportedly sat on the executive board of the other two companies. He left Nicaragua for Costa Rica last December and is a political leader of the rebel Nicaraguan Democratic Force, which claims to have 10,000 troops attacking Nicaragua from bases in Honduras.

Nicaragua says national guardsmen who served under the rightist dictator Anastasio Somoza, overthrown by the Sandinistas in 1979, are among the Nicaraguan exile forces launching the raids.

A government statement issued Tuesday night described Calero Portocarrero as "directly responsible for crimes committed by bands of former Somoza national guardsmen who have infiltrated into national territory."

It said the seizure of assets was "preventive intervention" while the government investigated Calero Portocarrero for "hiding property."

The statement did not mention Manuel Ignacio Lacayo, a Costa Rica-based Nicaraguan the Chamber of Commerce says owns the majority share of the three firms.

Withdrawal talks reportedly at sensitive stage

By The Associated Press

U.S. special Middle East envoy Philip C. Habib shuttled from Beirut to Tel Aviv today amid reports in the Lebanese press that the three-month-old negotations for a troop withdrawal from Lebanon have reached a "sensitive" stage.

Habib and his deputy, Special Ambassador Morris Draper, tentatively scheduled a meeting with Israeli Defense Minister Moshe Arens and Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir in Jerusalem.

Habib was to relay to Israeli officials Lebanese reaction to the latest Israeli positions on the withdrawal of Israeli troops from Lebanon and future security arrangements, an informed source was quoted by the independent An-Nahar newspaper as saying.

An-Nahar's publisher, Ghassan Tueni, is Lebanon's coordinator for the negotiations and an adviser to President Amin Gemayel.

Israel, which invaded Lebanon June 6, has a reported 30,000 soldiers in the country. Syria and the Palestine Liberation Organization also maintain troops there, but Lebanon has said both have given assurances they would pull out their forces from eastern and northern Lebanon when the Israelis withdraw.

"Negotiations have now reached a very sensitive stage. Habib will come back a second time to Beirut this week with the Israeli answers," one informed source said, according to An-Nahar.

The sources told An-Nahar that on Friday, during the next round of formal withdrawal talks, Lebanon would give a "clear" answer to points raised by the Israelis. The talks will be held in the northern Israel resort town of Netanya.

Habib returned to the Middle East last weekend with new U.S. proposals aimed at satisfying Israel's demand for security on its northern border while meeting Lebanon's insistence on a complete Israeli pullout from Lebanon.

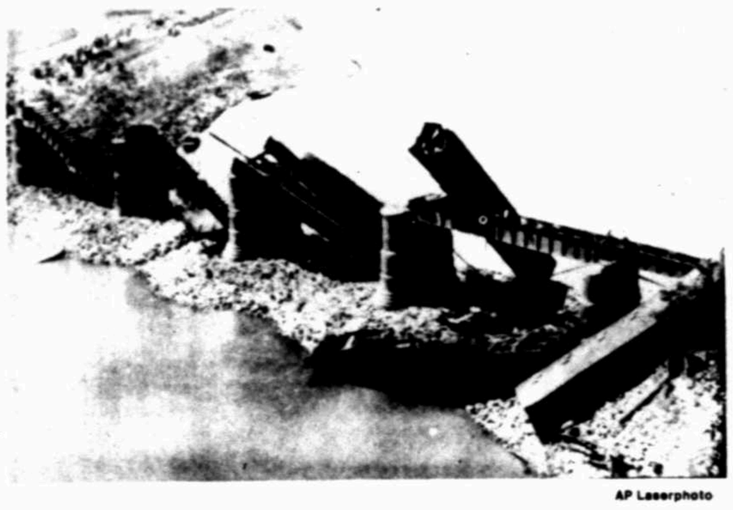

Sources close to the negotiations said Habib went to Beirut on Monday with Israel's agreement to drop its demand to retain troops in southern Lebanon after the bulk of Israeli forces withdraw.

Reports from Washington on the U.S. proposal say the United States will beef up the weak Lebanese army to help control southern Lebanon and that joint Lebanese-Israeli military patrols will guard against Palestinian guerrilla infiltration.

A report Wednesday in the Syrian government newspaper Tishrin said Syria would not accept any American-sponsored agreement between Israel and Lebanon or the presence of Israeli or U.S. troops in that country.

"No one knows when the American military presence in Lebanon will end. But Syria and its allies, especially the Soviet Union, will not accept it," the daily said.

The wreckage of a passenger train lies in a riverbed near Dilpasha, Bangladesh.

Derailment takes about 100 lives

DHAKA, Bangladesh (AP) — More than 100 people were killed and 200 injured when a passenger train derailed on a remote bridge that collapsed, plunging three cars into a river, reports reaching Dhaka said today.

Authorities would only confirm 16 dead and 28 injured in the accident late Monday in Ishurdi, about 150 miles northwest of the capital.

Defector backs Agca's testimony

NEW YORK (AP) — Evidence from a Bulgarian defector supports testimony by Mehmet Ali Agca that he was working for Bulgaria when he tried to kill Pope John Paul II, The New York Times reported today.

Iordan Mantarov, 48, a Bulgarian diplomat who defected to France in July 1981, told French intelligence agents that a plot to kill the pope was devised by the KGB, the Soviet intelligence agency, and by the Bulgarian secret service, the newspaper said.

The plan was drawn up, Mantarov said, because the two agencies believed the pope was the keystone of a United States effort to subvert the Polish government and move it away from the Communist bloc.

Women out of Australian prison

CANBERRA, Australia (AP) — Two elderly Oregon women caught with almost 2 tons of hashish in their camper van were freed from prison today and put on a plane for home, nine years before their 14-year sentences expire.

Florice Marie Bessire, 66, and Vera Todd Hays, 65, both of La Pine, Ore., were arrested in 1977 after narcotics officers found the hashish hidden in the false floor of a Mercedes-Benz camper they were driving across Australia. The drugs had an estimated street value of $12.5 million.

Strategy session concludes today

VILAMOURA, Portugal (AP) — Western alliance defense ministers today conclude a two-day strategy session with a renewed vow to deploy nuclear missiles in Europe this year and a message to President Reagan to make new arms reduction proposals.

U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger and 12 counterparts in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization are expected to declare their solidarity with a nuclear deployment schedule that is denounced by of millions of Europeans who do not like atomic weapons.

The ministers are expected to issue a declaration warning of a massive Soviet buildup of medium-range nuclear missiles, which includes an estimated 351 SS-20 rockets with three warheads each and a range of 3,750 miles.

Vice president visiting Canada

OTTAWA (AP) — Vice President George Bush is making a busy 14-hour visit to Canada today, once more taking up his role as salesman of U.S. nuclear arms policy.

The Liberal government of Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau is an increasingly wary customer, worried about polls showing strong public opposition to proposed tests of U.S. cruise missiles in northern Alberta.

Kuwait invests in American land

KUWAIT (AP) — This oil-rich Arab nation has invested $144 million in federally owned territory in the United States, the Kuwaiti oil minister says.

Sheik Ali al-Khalifa made the disclosure to Parliament on Tuesday while protesting a recent decision by U.S. Interior Secretary James Watt to ban foreign investment in federal lands.

"We shall seek to rectify this decision, through legal means," the sheik said. He added, however, that the investment represented a "negligible" percentage of Kuwaiti funds invested in U.S. territory.

Mammoth tusk found in Moscow

MOSCOW (AP) — The tusk of a mammoth which roamed the region 70,000 to 80,000 years ago was found in the outskirts of Moscow by a construction brigade digging a foundation, a local newspaper reported.

The find was made in the town of Dolgoprudny, 12 miles northwest of the Soviet capital near Sheremetyevo international airport.

A geologist who examined the tusk said it appeared to belong to one of the last and largest species of mammoths, Evening Moscow reported Tuesday.

Pencil sketch sold for $210,000

PARIS (AP) — A pencil sketch by Jean Auguste Ingres was sold at auction for $210,000, the highest price ever paid for a sketch by the French artist who died in 1867.

Auction organizers said the sketch sold Tuesday for three times the figure expected by art experts.

The sketch, done in Rome in 1817, is a portrait of Charles Thevenin when he was director of the Academie Francaise, a group of noted writers who guard the purity of the French language.

Jet crashes in Falkland Islands

LONDON (AP) — A Royal Air Force Harrier jump-jet fighter developed engine trouble while on a routine patrol over the Falkland Islands and crashed into Port Stanley harbor, the Defense Ministry said.

"We lost a Harrier aircraft this afternoon," a ministry spokesman said Tuesday. "The pilot got into difficulties over the sea and ejected."

A British Broadcasting Corp. Correspondent in Port Stanley said the Harrier's engines cut out at 1,000 feet during a reconnaissance flight and crashed into the harbor, missing a destroyer, a tanker, a submarine and several freighters.

The pilot was picked up by launch, he said.

Billboard sitters hope to win house

ALLENTOWN, Pa. (AP) — They spent the winter huddling in tents, cooking on hot plates, "camping" on a billboard 18 feet above the ground beside a highway. They braved bitter wind, freezing rain and occasional snowstorms.

Now, at last, it is spring, and six months to the day after three men climbed a ladder to the billboard platform to try to win an $18,000 house in a radio station's crazy contest, their thoughts are of hot showers, cold beers and making money from their ordeal.

But not of coming down.

"I think I can put in one summer up here, but I'd hate to go to another," said Dalton Young, 23.

Young's competitors are Michael MacKay, 31, and Ron Kistler, 25. The three men, all from the Allentown area, entered the WSAN contest Sept. 20. The contest was simple — the one who lasted the longest won the house.

But no one expected the "billboard boys" to endure so long or draw such attention.

"We just renewed the billboard for another six months," said Rick Musselman, station manager for WSAN, which concocted the contest to promote its change in musical programming. "I had figured it probably would end sometime in the middle of the winter. But I think what may have kept it up was the press."

The sitters have become internationally known, with press from as far away as Australia and New Zealand telephoning them or coming to interview and photograph them in their tents on the 10-foot-wide ledge.

Their telephone numbers were changed recently after the numbers were published in France and they got a number of late-night, incomprehensible calls.

"They'd say, 'Michael MacKay,' I'd say, 'Oui' and then I'd say, 'I don't speak French, goodbye,"' said MacKay, a social worker on indefinite leave from his job. "One out of every 100 phone calls, I'd get one who could converse. Most of them thought I was crazy."

Young and MacKay, hoping the attention can translate into cash, recently hired a lawyer to contact agents who might sign them for product promotions.

"We're talking about making different public appearances when this is over with," MacKay said. "We're looking (to make appearances) for products we use.

"The tent is one of the biggest ones," he said, noting, however, that the zipper was broken and he was holding the front flaps shut with safety pins.

MacKay, the only married man among the sitters, said being separated from his wife has been difficult. She has been allowed to visit only on Christmas, New Year's and Valentine's Day.

The first day of spring is not a visitor's day, but MacKay said he would celebrate anyway — with a case of beer.

Despite their assorted deprivations, the men said life on the billboard was not unpleasant. They have tents big enough for two, hotplates to prepare their food, ample supplies of water, heaters, radios and plenty of books, magazines and other reading material.

MacKay has actually complained the accomodations are too comfortable and is prolonging the contest. Early in the winter he wanted to get rid of the heaters but was outvoted.

Young, who joined the contest almost immediately after getting out of the Army, said one of the few luxuries he misses is a hot shower.

"When you have a thundershower, that's about the only time we get a shower," he said.

Homemade flintlock rifles much in demand

BETHLEHEM, Pa. (AP) — Thirteen years ago, Herman Hendricks wouldn't have been able to tell the difference between a firing pan and a frying pan.

But that's not the case now. The 38-year-old Bucks County man is in demand, so much so that his "signature" on a reproduction flintlock rifle is worth a couple of thousand dollars.

But Hendricks remains modest to the point that his exquisite rifles, powder horns, pistols and hatchets are sometimes given away. If he has a friend or relative who at one time admired his work, Hendricks may decide to make a present of it.

In this day and age, that may be difficult to understand, especiallly considering his rifles require more than 300 hours' work. But to Hendricks, giving is often better than receiving.

"When you make this stuff and put so much time and love in it, I don't mind giving it away," he says.

"My personality is in those guns. And I'm not a chintzy old so-and-so."

Like many muzzleloader enthusiasts, Hendricks began his career with a flintlock kit. It proved to be a good deal of fun and helped spark his curiosity.

It wasn't long before he was collecting as much information on flintlocks as he could find.

"I had a few books, copied a few things, asked questions, and things picked up little by little," he recalls. "I thought we had gone as far as we could with high-powered rifles, and I was looking for a challenge. It turned out to be a lot of fun."

The Pennsylvania counties of Bucks, Northampton and Lehigh comprised one of the centers of the flintlock industry during the late 18th and early 19th centuries, an era known as the golden age of rifle-making.

Each county had its own school of thought, and there were often several schools of thought within each county, depending on the creative whims of those families who carried on the trade.

Hendricks is following in the footsteps of such well-known flintlock makers as Herman and John Rupp, Adam Angstadt and Andrew Verner. He attempts to follow the design of these Colonial weapon-makers as closely as possible and it is often painstaking work.

The wood, usually a variety of maple, is purchased from a supplier in Lycoming County. It is very rough in shape when Hendricks receives it. He must first provide an inlet for the rifle barrel, then determine the correct location of the lock and trigger assembly, the butt plate, trigger guard, nose cap and ramrod thimble.

"After everything is laid out and the brass work is on," he says, "I can have the engraving done."

Finishing the wood is quite a chore in itself, but something with which Hendricks, a furniture finisher in Quakertown, is quite familiar.

"I believe my products are as good as anybody's," he says. "And we don't overprice anything. I sold three pieces, a matched set of a hatchet, pistol and rifle, for $3,500.

"I don't get much hunting in myself, but I still love the rifle. I'm just glad I can carry on the tradition."

Heart recipient's condition worsens

Barney Clark

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Artificial heart recipient Barney Clark, his condition worsening, battled a 102-degree fever while "very concerned" doctors ordered more tests to pinpoint a puzzling ailment that was shutting down his kidneys.

Clark's wife Una Loy, who was described as depressed, kept a vigil at her husband's bedside today as the retired Seattle-area dentist entered his 112th day of life on an artificial heart.

"His death is not imminent," University of Utah Medical Center spokesman John Dwan said late Tuesday. "If the problems persist, however, they have the potential of being very serious."

Doctors planned to downgrade Clark's condition from fair to serious because of the fever and kidney trouble if the "negative trend" continued, Dwan said. Clark, 62, also would be moved from his hospital room to a surgical intensive care unit.

"To say they are very concerned at this point would be an understatement," Dwan said. "His kidneys are shutting down. They have not shut down completely, but they are not doing very well."

A decision on whether to move Clark was expected today at a morning meeting to be attended by specialists in infectious diseases, attending physician Dr. Lyle Joyce, and Dr. William DeVries, who performed the historic implant Dec. 2.

Clark was on the verge of death from heart failure when he was picked to receive the Jarvik-7 heart by a University of Utah Medical Center panel. He was suffering from cardiomyopathy, a degenerative and incurable disease of the heart muscle.

The seven-hour operation to implant the fist-sized, air-driven, polyurethane pump was successful.

But Clark required surgery three times more — to replace a broken valve in his new heart, fix tiny air leaks in his lungs and stop persistent nosebleeds. He suffered seizures Dec. 7, leading to a prolonged period of depression and disorientation. Recently, he had been recovering from aspiration pneumonia.

Clark developed fever and his kidneys started weakening Saturday.

Clark was not in pain Tuesday, but was "less responsive than he has been," Dwan said. "He's coherent sometimes; other times he's not responsive." He was being given only limited doses of antibiotics, for fear the drugs would complicate his kidney problems.

Joyce tried to place Clark's latest setback in perspective. "We've been in tight spots before and we've got him out of them. It's a tight one," Dwan quoted the doctor as saying.

Dwan said he spoke with Mrs. Clark at about 7 p.m. Tuesday as she prepared to spend the night in her husband's private room.

"It's as you might expect," he said. "She's one of the strongest people I've ever met. Her mood swings with Dr. Clark's condition. When his condition is in the valley, her mood is, too."

In their consultations about Clark's kidneys, doctors said they believed "the possibilities vary from simple blockage to terminal kidney failure," Dwan said.

Belushi's accused killer freed

Cathy Smith, right, and an unidentified friend leave Toronto's courthouse Tuesday after Ms. Smith was released on bail.

TORONTO (AP) — Cathy Evelyn Smith, charged with murder in the drug death of comedian John Belushi, is free on bail but must stay in the Toronto area, reporting twice a week to police while she fights extradition to Los Angeles.

York County Court Judge George Ferguson set bail for the 35-year-old singer at $75,000, equivalent to about $61,000 in U.S. currency, following a one-hour hearing Tuesday.

Ms. Smith, who had been in custody since surrendering Friday to Toronto police, was lively and smiling as she entered the courtroom, but sat in the prisoners' dock clutching her hands in her lap throughout the proceeding.

She shielded her face from news cameras as she left the courthouse after the hearing.

The extradition hearing is scheduled for March 29.

Ms. Smith, who has worked as a backup singer with Gordon Lightfoot and other well-known performers, is believed to be the last person to see Belushi alive.

A grand jury in Los Angeles County indicted her last week on one charge of second-degree murder and 13 counts of supplying and administering dangerous drugs to the 33-year-old Belushi, who was found dead March 5, 1982, in a Hollywood hotel bungalow.

Under Ferguson's order, Ms. Smith must stay within five Toronto-area counties, report to police twice a week and give a 24-hour notice if she changes her address.

The judge banned publication of any evidence or statements by attorneys at the hearing, a common step in prominent criminal cases in Canada. He told reporters they were allowed to report only the terms of his bail order.

Ferguson instructed U.S. reporters to observe his rules, saying that if they do not obey, "They shall have to deal with me and I shall deal with them."

At the time of Belushi's death, Ms. Smith, who had been living in Los Angeles, was questioned but released. The reopening of the investigation was was prompted by an interview Ms. Smith gave to the tabloid National Enquirer in which she said she administered a "speedball," a mix of cocaine and heroin, to the comedian. She later retracted the statements, saying she was under the influence of alcohol and drugs at the time of the interview.

Los Angeles District Attorney Robert Philibosian said an autopsy found the comedian had died of "acute heroin and cocaine intoxication."

The National Enquirer reporters were witnesses before the Los Angeles County grand jury that indicted Ms. Smith.

Philibosian said California law authorizes a charge of second-degree murder if death is caused by someone committing "an inherently dangerous felony — such as furnishing or administering cocaine or heroin" even if the death were not intentional.

One possible issue at the extradition hearing is whether there is a comparable crime under Canadian law.

Belushi was best known for his manic portrayals on NBC—TV's "Saturday Night Live." He starred in such movies as "Animal House," "The blues Brothers," "Neighbors" and "Continental Divide."

Woman still showing 'miracle' blur in eye

AP Laserphoto

Displaying the cartoon that caught the eye of Queen Elizabeth II is Arizona Republic cartoonist Steve Benson. The queen, who enjoyed Benson's light look at her return from America's storm-plagued West Coast, has requested the original.

MIAMI (AP) — Since she was a schoolgirl in Cuba, Maria Antonia Mendoza has been stopped by strangers who ask to see the curious blur on her eye.

"Maria Antonia...let me see the Virgin in your eye," they say. Or, "There goes the girl of the Virgin."

The blur, she says, is a vision of the Virgin Mary she saw when she was 16, on Christmas Eve 1929.

Since then, she says she has let "more than 1 million people" see it.

"My mission in life has been to show the Virgin to all who want to see her. I have never charged a cent," she said in a recent interview.

As Mrs. Mendoza, now in her 70s, recalls, it was 4 p.m. on Christmas Eve and she was in her dormitory at Sacred Heart School in Havana, combing her hair. "Suddenly, I felt a wonderful chill through me," she said. "I have never felt such a feeling again.

"In the mirror, I saw the Blessed Virgin in my eye.

"Then a nun knocked on the door and I asked her, 'Sister what do you see?' and she said, 'The Holy Virgin!' and she kissed my eye."

She said later the sisters determined that the image was that of Notre Dame de la Medaille Miraculeuse — The Virgin of the Miraculous Medal, who according to legend appeared to St. Catherine Laboure in Paris on Nov. 27, 1830.

The Catholic Church has not declared the woman's eye a miracle, but does not dismiss her belief either.

"The church studies and analyzes before making a comment," said the Rev. Juan Sosa, chairman of the Archdiocese of Miami's committee on popular piety. "But it certainly recognizes the religious orientation of people and their capacity to interpret a natural phenomenon as being a manifestation of God."

An opthalmologist at St. Francis Hospital, Dr. Henry M. Clayman, was not familiar with Mrs. Mendoza's story but said there are eye illnesses that can distort the shape of the iris.

Mrs. Mendoza has shown the configuration on her eye in Australia, Manila and Miami, where she has lived for the past 22 years. She said as soon as word gets out, she is surrounded by people, believers and non-believers alike.

Even though hospitalized for a heart condition, Mrs. Mendoza still is beseiged by the curious. On Sunday, 40 or 50 people at a time waited in line to get in to see her, said Patricia Stiers, administrative nursing supervisor at American Hospital. "There's definitely something there," she said.

Mrs. Mendoza, a mother of two and grandmother of five, is still enchanted with her eye.

Verdict won't end battle, Marx attorneys say

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (AP) — As jurors struggled behind closed doors to reach a verdict, attorneys in the Groucho Marx estate trial said any decision the panel makes will not end the bitter legal battle involving Marx's companion, Erin Fleming.

The jurors begin their fifth full day of deliberations today with no sign of whether they are near a verdict.

Miss Fleming awaited their decision at home, but her attorney and the attorney for Bank of America kept a vigil at the courthouse Tuesday.

The bank, executor of Marx's estate, asked that Miss Fleming be forced to return $428,000 to the estate, claiming that she pressured the late comic into giving her the money. The defense argued that Marx willingly gave her money and gifts which he intended for her to keep.

Miss Fleming's attorney, David Sabih, reported that she is still optimistic the jury will rule in her favor.

"I talked to her on the phone," Sabih told reporters. "She said, 'Don't worry. The longer they talk, the better it is for us.'"

Sabih said Miss Fleming felt that 12 reasonable people discussing the issues for such a long time would eventually see things her way.

Fugard's anti-apartheid play appears successful

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Playwright Athol Fugard's fellow South Africans finally have seen his most personal drama. To theatergoers who have seen dozens of anti-apartheid plays in recent years, "Master Harold and the Boys" had the ring of the faded hopes of 1950s liberals who believed love was the key to racial harmony.

Though it is the only dramatic work by the noted white South African playwright ever banned, "Master Harold" seemed a fairly mild production for the Market Theater, venue for the country's most biting commercial anti-apartheid plays.

A good section of Johannesburg's elite was present for the Tuesday night opening. Perhaps one fifth of the audience was black, including anti-apartheid activist Bishop Desmond Tutu. Unlike South African cinemas, the theater allows people of different races to attend shows.

Though the Tony-Award winning play received a standing ovation from most of the audience, some said it did not seem as significant as Fugard's other recent plays — blunt attacks on the politics of apartheid, the white-minority government's systematic separation of the races.

The Rand Daily Mail, the country's leading English-language morning newspaper, called the production "tremendous theater" but rejected the views of American critics who call it Fugard's best.

If it seemed mild, Fugard's boyhood chum, his family's black servant Sam Semela, gets much of the credit.

Fugard says Semela helped him avoid "the ugly cause and ugly effect" of apartheid. Fugard bought Semela an airline ticket from Port Elizabeth to attend Tuesday night's opening, but the elderly black man died three weeks ago.

The playwright recalled, hours before the premiere, telephoning Semela from New York when the play opened on Broadway last year.

It tells the story of a white boy, in a fit of depression over the return home of his crippled father, who verbally assaults the black servant who had grown to be his second father. Fugard was the real-life boy, and Semela the real-life servant.

"He (Sam) knew nothing about the play and he'd also never received a call from New York before and he was quite elderly at that point," Fugard said.

"It took a long time to believe that he was actually on the receiving end of a call from New York and even harder for him to realize that he had gone on to be a character in a play that was an attempt at a portrait of him.

"It's taken a long time to getting around to recognizing it or acknowledging it, but I've finally done it, and it's bitterly disappointing that he wasn't around to see me acknowledge him because ... I am so conscious as time has passed since those early years, God, more than 30, 35 years ago, just what a profound influence Sam did have on me and my life."

A good portion of the play is not political — Fugard has often said he is worried politics come between him and the audience. Much of the dialogue concerns a boy's anger about having to care for a drunken, crippled father.

"I thought it was something for which you don't applaud. The first response is weeping," Bishop Tutu said after the final curtain. "It's saying something we know, that we've said so often about what this country does to human relations."

He said the audience reaction reminded him of a prayer service. "The proverbial pin could be heard dropping," Tutu said.

Because there are few overt political moments in the play, Fugard was shocked when it was banned briefly this year, apparently by someone who did not realize it was written by the country's most famous playwright. The ban, under the government's wide-ranging censorship laws, was overturned quickly.

The play opened at Yale University, moved to Broadway and won three Tony nominations during its highly acclaimed run. Zakes Mokae won the best actor award.

Because it was Fugard's first play to open abroad, he said, "I've been very impatient to share this one with a South African audience."

Honesty pays for man who turned in $45,000

CONCORD, Calif. (AP) — Honesty paid off handsomely for a born-again Christian who turned in $45,000 that he found on a bus stop bench, and can now keep because it went unclaimed for 90 days.

Richard Wooten, a 32-year-old electronics technician and a recovered alcoholic, found the package on Dec. 1. He should get a $45,000 check from the city "any time now," Concord Administrative Accountant Everett Clift said Tuesday.

Wooten had said that he agonized for several hours about giving up the money after he found it. He called a news conference and described, with great emotion, the impact the event had on his life.

"A year ago, I would not have turned that money in," Wooten said in December. "Money has always run my life because I've always been short of it. I had always realized that money comes first, but now I trust the Lord and he comes first. And this event gives me an opportunity to share that."

Police Sgt. Jerry Thomas said that during the past 3½ months, several people have tried to claim the mystery money.

One man "had some really off-the-wall story about the Mafia and how the money was really his because the Mafia had stolen his prostate gland and this was obviously Mafia money and the money was rightfully his," Thomas said.

Thomas said the department also received a handful of calls from other police agencies investigating cases of lost money.

Robert Goulet

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (AP) — Actor-singer Robert Goulet has been charged with drunken driving and assault on a police officer after he rammed two parked cars with his vintage Stutz Blackhawk auto.

The misdemeanor counts, filed Tuesday, stem from his arrest last Friday in the Marina del Rey area of Los Angeles, half a mile from where witnesses said Goulet's 1974 Stutz hit two parked cars.

Goulet was arrested by California Highway Patrol officers and was booked at the nearby Culver City jail for investigation of driving under the influence of alcohol.

The 49-year-old entertainer reportedly refused to take a blood-alcohol test. He later was released on $1,000 bail and is to be arraigned April 1.

The Canadian baritone's popularity soared in the 1960s but faded in the 1970s, and the singer attributed his fall to alcohol.

In an interview with the Associated Press last September, Goulet said, "The booze was contributing to my downfall in the 1970s. When that drinking stopped, things began to turn around."

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — Author Roger Kahn, who wrote "The Boys of Summer" about the old Brooklyn Dodgers, says he took on the presidency of the Columbia Mets farm team to provide literary fodder for another baseball book.

"If I'm a great president and write a bad book, I won't be satisfied," said Kahn, who plans to call the non-fiction work "Diamond in the Rough."

"I guess there's a little George Steinbrenner in all of us," he said, referring to the New York Yankees' general manager.

Kahn will live in Columbia this summer and will be involved in the "day-to-day operation of the club," Mets Vice President Lou Gorman said at a news conference Tuesday.

Kahn told reporters his book will be about the players on the Class A South Atlantic League team, their struggles and triumphs with pro baseball.

"'Boys of Summer' was 55-year-olds looking back. This will be youth looking ahead," Kahn said.

ATLANTA (AP) — Former Gov. Lester Maddox, who won office in the late 1960s after a segregationist campaign, could get a state pension, thanks to legislation proposed by a black civil rights leader.

State Rep. Hosea Williams said Tuesday that the former governor may have talked like a segregationist, but he was the first Georgia governor in modern times to hire blacks for the Georgia State Patrol and the Georgia Bureau of Investigation.

Williams, a Democrat, said Maddox also led the way in desegregating drivers license lines on state property and was the first to "make poor people feel welcome at their governor's mansion."

Williams proposed a law allowing former governors with only eight years of state service to qualify for a state pension.

Maddox, 67, served four years as governor in the late 1960s and four more as lieutenant governor in the early 1970s under former Gov. Jimmy Carter, but he did not qualify for a state pension.

ROCKFORD, Ill. (AP) — Controversial rock singer Ozzy Osbourne left his concert at Rockford's Metro Centre on a stretcher when chest pains forced him to cut his act short, officials said.

Osbourne was listed in fair condition early today in Swedish American Hospital after being admitted Tuesday night.

A hospital spokeswoman, who would not give her name, did not elaborate on his illness.

Douglas Logan, Metro Centre general manager, announced the singer's condition to about 5,700 fans after Osbourne was put on a stretcher and into an ambulance waiting offstage.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP) — Although Gov. George Wallace is being treated with a narcotic and an anti-depressant while hospitalized, doctors say the drugs will not impair — and may improve — his ability to work.

Dr. C.E. Rupe, an specialist in internal medicine at the University of Alabama Hospitals, briefed reporters Tuesday on the condition of the 63-year-old governor, admitted to the medical center Saturday for tests.

Rupe said a team of doctors at the center was trying to discover the cause of the chronic pain Wallace has suffered since the 1972 assassination attempt that left him paralyzed from the waist down. Wallace was wounded while campaigning for president.

U.S. District Judge Robert Takasugi, who had reduced De Lorean's $10 million bail to $5 million Dec. 23, gave the government until Monday to file documents in support of the bail increase request. He set a March 30 hearing on the matter.

De Lorean, 51, remained free on bail.

IN RE:
POST PETROLEUM CO., INC.
Debtor.

No. BK-82-01889
ORDER REQUIRING ALL PARTIES IN INTEREST TO FILE PROOFS OF CLAIM, ESTABLISHING DATE BARRING FURTHER FILING OF CLAIMS

Now on this 10th day of March, 1983, there came on for hearing before me the Application of Post Petroleum Co., Inc., debtor in possession, seeking an Order of this Court requiring all creditors to file Proofs of Claim in this action. In support of said Application, debtor in possession represented that the Schedules filed must be verified prior to submission of a Plan of Reorganization or Disclosure Statement. The Court further finds that such Order is appropriate under rules of this Court and the United States Bankruptcy Code.

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED, ADJUDGED AND DECREED BY THE COURT that all creditors or parties having claims against the estate of Post Petroleum Co., Inc., debtor herein, file Proofs of Claim with the Office of the United States Bankruptcy Court Clerk, Seventh Floor, 201 Dean A. McGee Avenue, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma 73102, and contemporaneously mail a copy of such Proof of Claim form, with all supporting documentation to the offices of Post Petroleum Co., Inc., Tenth Floor, Colcord Building, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma 73102 to the attention of Mr. Dick Hunt.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that all claimants attach to their Proofs of Claim supporting documentation as to the debt upon which claim is based, and in the case of creditors performing services or delivering materials to specific well sites of the debtor, that these creditors reference the specific well sites where such work was performed or material delivered. Any creditor asserting a secured position, whether by way of agreement or statutory lien must attach documentation upon which they rely in asserting a priority or security position and in the case of Mechanic's and Materialmen's Liens, attach to their Proof of Claim a copy of the filed Lien Statement.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that all claimants must file their Proofs of Claim, delivering copies thereof to the offices of Post Petroleum Co., Inc., as noted herein, on or before the 12th day of April, 1983. PARTIES FAILING TO FILE PROOFS OF CLAIM AS HEREIN DECREED SHALL BE THEREAFTER BARRED FROM ASSERTING ANY CLAIMS OF WHATSOEVER KIND OR NATURE AGAINST THE DEBTOR ESTATE OR ITS PROPERTY.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Office of the Court Clerk of the United States Bankruptcy Court issue notice of this Order to all parties in interest herein and, upon request of any parties in interest, provide a Proof of Claim form.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the debtor in possession is hereby ordered to publish this Order in its entirety for three consecutive days in the Journal Record of Oklahoma City, Oklahoma and such other newspapers in such other locations as it shall deem proper.

Mission Square Plaza
Retail and Office Condominiums

Owning is better than renting.

If you're presently renting retail or office space, you already know some of the disadvantages-frequent cost-of-living rent increases, leases that give the landlord all the advantages, costly sales overrides on your retail sales. In short, you're not in control.

From a pure economic standpoint, ownership beats renting. Consider these advantages:

* You mortgage payments are fixed and not subject to escalation or overrides to a landlord.
* You receive tax deductions for interest and tax payments.
* You get a tax deduction for depreciation over the next 15 years.
* You have control over your space, and no one can cancel your lease.
* You can buy enough space to meet your future growth plans and lease the expansion area until it's needed.
* All maintenance and upkeep is furnished through the Owner's Association.
* Your real estate investment gains value.

In addition to all this, Mission Square is strategically located in one of the city's fastest growing areas; North Big Spring and Loop 250, just northeast of ClayDesta Plaza.

Mission Square is an ideal location for professionals, service businesses, and a variety of retails stores. Contact our office now, for a full color brochure and further details.
