Police capture burglary suspect

By DAVID BOWSER
Staff Writer

A 20-year-old Pampa man was in Gray County jail following an early morning struggle with police officers investigating an eastside burglary.

Brian Keith Arnzen, 20, 434 N. Hill, was being questioned today in connection with a burglary reported shortly after 1 a.m. this morning at the Taylor Mart at 404 N. Ballard. Arnzen was also being held in lieu of $7,500 on a charge of assaulting a public servant.

Officers said they received a report of a burglary in progress about 1:10 a.m. today at the Taylor Mart. Officers Shawn Waters and Heather Ratzlaff were the first on the scene.

"I was two blocks away," Waters said.

The officers interviewed witnesses, then scoured the area around the store.

Shortly before 3 a.m., Waters saw a car matching the description of the vehicle in which the burglars were thought to have escaped. When he tried to stop the 1989 Oldsmobile Cutlass, it sped away.

The car pulled up in front of Arnzen's house on North Hill Street, officers said, and the driver jumped out and ran.

Waters said the man ran across the yard and down the alley.

Pampa Police Officer Andy Alaniz pulled his patrol car to a stop to block the alley, then proceeded to search backyards along the alley in the 300 block of North Houston.

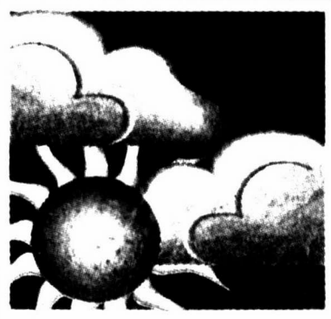

Officers said a man was found crouched in one of the backyards and surrendered when officers shown their flashlights on him and ordered him out of his hiding place.

Police said, however, that while the man was being handcuffed, he kicked Alaniz and a scuffle ensued. Waters, Alaniz, Pampa Police Officer Keith Morris and Gray County Deputy Cary Rushing subdued the man, identified as Arnzen, and took him to the Gray County jail where investigators were questioning him late this morning.

Officers said they believe that there were two people involved in the burglary of the Taylor Mart.

Authorities said about $450 in damage was done to the

DBA street party set for August 5

Rattlers to give Hockey Clinic

Pampa Downtown Business Association (DBA) is planning its second annual Downtown Street Party on Aug. 5.

"We have the Amarillo Rattlers scheduled again this year. The kids really seemed to enjoy the Hockey Clinic last year so we wanted to bring the Rattlers to Pampa again," said ReDonn Woods, chairman of the event.

The DBA thanks Kenny Cargill, a local CPA, who has agreed to host the Rattlers' Hockey Clinic this year, Woods added.

Jack Sutherland, of the Gift Box, is setting up booths. Last year several churches, businesses, individuals and other organizations set up booths with a variety of wares including food, sale items and handed-out information.

Music for the Street Party is being scheduled by Chase Roach of Tarpley Music. This year a guitar, bass and drum contest is in the offing.

"The different groups that performed last year seemed to be something everyone could enjoy," Woods said.

DBA is organizing a variety of other activities to be announced at a later time. For now, booth spaces are available and participants are needed for the guitar, bass and drum contest.

Anyone who would like to set up a booth should call Sutherland at 669-9881. Price of booth space is $15.

PISD considers five-year facility repair plan

By DEE DEE LARAMORE
Staff Writer

Pampa Independent School District (PISD) officials are considering a five-year $1.5 million plan to upgrade and repair school buildings.

Denver Bruner, facilities management coordinator, presented the proposal to the PISD board of education at its meeting this week. Board President Jay Johnson tabled action on the plan so board members could study it further.

Devised by the Facilities Committee, the proposed plan allows for approximately $300,000 to be spent per year for repairs and upgrades of various school buildings and grounds throughout the district.

Board members Jay Johnson, Lee Porter and Pat Kennedy are members of the Facilities Committee, along with Bruner.

Bruner said the plan was developed by compiling lists of needed identified by PISD staff, board members and teachers.

Needs were then prioritized with safety being given first priority and aesthetics receiving least priority, he explained.

Special Projects funds (Function 81) will be used to pay for the work outlined in the plan, Bruner said.

Funds to pay for the first year's projects have been included in the preliminary 2000-2001 PISD budget.

"I'm glad for a five-year plan, but I still want to do a little painting," Kennedy said.

"Yes, ma'am, we will. That will come out of my normal operating budget," Bruner said.

A major expenditure in the plan goes to replace approximately 75 percent of the brick at Pampa Middle School over four years.

The plan allows for 13,500 square feet to be replaced the first three years and the remaining 9,000 square feet to be replaced the fourth year.

Crumbling bricks from the 1950s has made this project a top priority, officials said.

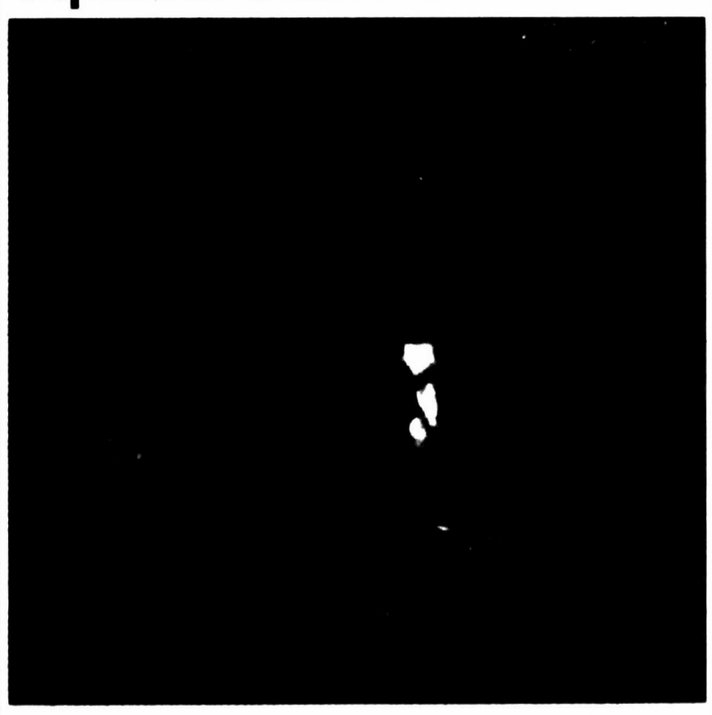

"I don't know what happened in the 1950s. I don't know what the board was thinking," Bruner said. "All I know is that we've inherited this."

Other major projects in the preliminary plan include the following:

- replace and repair of interior floor tiles at several schools;
- various projects to meet ADA requirements;
- roof repair/replacement at various schools;
- resurfacing of parking lots;
- remodel Valhalla;
- replacing marker boards;
- replace classroom doors at PHS
- an irrigation system for Austin;
- additional play equipment and parking at Wilson;
- refurbish PMS lockers
- technology upgrade at PHS
- finish MPAC building
- refinish gym floors at all

Discovery phase proceeds in NBC Plaza, City lawsuit

By DAVID BOWSER
Staff Writer

Lawyers for the City of Pampa and for NBC Plaza Joint Venture proceeded today with the discovery phase of a lawsuit concerning the city's sewer.

NBC Plaza Joint Venture is suing Pampa over damages caused by a sewer backing up last December.

"We're in the preliminary stages of discovery," Chris Parker, lawyer for NBC Plaza Joint Venture, said today.

According to the lawsuit filed in Gray County in May, lawyers for NBC said that on Dec. 1, and again on Dec. 9, city employees, using motor drive equipment, created a vacuum or pressurized the city sewer system, forcing raw sewage to flood the building and offices.

'We're in the preliminary stages of discovery.'

— Chris Parker, attorney
NBC Plaza Joint Venture

NBC lawyers said in their filing that extensive damage was done to the facility and to personal property in the building. Parker said that carpet was destroyed, sheet rock was damaged and other property in the building was contaminated, making the building useless and uninhabitable.

Parker said office equipment and personal property were damaged, and tenants had to be temporarily relocated. He said their businesses were disrupted.

NBC Plaza Joint Venture is asking for unspecified damages, the cost of the suit, interest on the damages and future relief.

Lawyers for the City of Pampa claim that as a municipality, the city and its employees enjoy immunity from the suit because the actions taken by city employees were in performing governmental functions.

City of Pampa is shielded from liability, said Billy Wolfe, who represents Pampa, under a doctrine of qualified immunity.

Wolfe in his answer to the allegations in the suit also asks 223rd District Court Judge Lee Waters to order NBC Plaza Joint Venture to amend the lawsuit petition to include specific damages or to strike that portion of the pleading.

Graham fights to the death

By MICHAEL GRACZYK
Associated Press Writer

HUNTSVILLE, Texas (AP) — Gary Graham promised to "fight like hell" his execution.

He did.

Angry and defiant, Graham was executed Thursday evening for killing an Arizona man during a Houston robbery 19 years ago, a crime he insisted to the end he did not commit.

"This is what happens to a black man — genocide in America," Graham said, almost spitting out and shouting his words while strapped and handcuffed to the death chamber gurney.

"This is nothing more simple than murder, state-sanctioned murder in America," he barked. "They know I'm innocent. They won't acknowledge it."

His lethal injection, the 23rd in Texas this year and the 135th while presumed GOP presidential nominee George W. Bush has been governor, created an uproar among death penalty opponents who agreed with Graham that he was innocent and unfairly convicted.

Bush's presidential aspirations and a renewed national attention to the death penalty also fueled the Graham debate.

After a flurry of last-minute court activity that delayed his punishment for almost three hours, and with hundreds of demonstrators ranging from socialists to the Ku Klux Klan waiting outside behind barricades guarded by officers wearing riot gear, Graham was put to death.

Five death chamber officers forcibly strapped him to a gurney when he resisted coming out of his cell.

"True to his word," Texas Department of Criminal Justice spokesman Larry Fitzgerald, who watched the procedure, said.

Graham was rumpled, his head restrained, his wrists cuffed as he angrily proclaimed his innocence and called for a moratorium on the death penalty in Texas, the nation's most active capital punishment state.

"Keep marching black people, black power," he repeated. "They are killing me tonight. They are murdering me tonight."

Graham was pronounced dead at 8:49 p.m., eight minutes after the lethal drugs began flowing into his arms.

"They are using him as a political sacrifice," the Rev. Jesse Jackson, asked by Graham to be a witness to his death, said after the execution.

Graham was a teen-age street thug who pleaded guilty to 10 aggravated robberies during a week-long May 1981 crime rampage in Houston but said he did not kill Bobby Lambert, 53, of Tucson, Ariz., during a robbery outside a Houston supermarket.

He was convicted primarily on the testimony of a single eyewitness, Bernadine Skillern, who was in her car and watched as Lambert was confronted and shot. She identified Graham as the gunman and never wavered in her testimony over 19 years.

"I don't feel joy and I don't feel sadness," Skillern said. "I only feel relief. I hope to get back my privacy."

As the 6 p.m. scheduled execution time approached, eight anti-death penalty demonstrators broke through barricades and headed toward the front door of the prison. They quickly were subdued by officers, arrested and taken away. A ninth person was arrested for throwing a plastic bottle at a prison administrator, who was not hurt.

Graham had initiated much of the attention, demanding in interviews that thousands of his supporters show up outside the death house and contending he was the victim of a racist system intent on what he called a "legal lynching."

He didn't get thousands, but he clearly attracted the most vocal outpouring since pickax murderer Karla Faye Tucker two years ago became the first woman executed in Texas since the Civil War era.

Death penalty debate continues

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Gary Graham may be dead, but debate over capital punishment will shadow Texas Gov. George W. Bush's White House bid because his home state is scheduled to execute an average of one man a week through Election Day.

Bush has shrugged off doubts about the fairness of the justice system, saying he knows of no innocent person executed in the state. And he attributes the case's international attention to the "emotionality" of the issue.

"I recognize there are good people who oppose the death penalty. I've heard their message and I respect their heartfelt point of view," Bush told reporters in a statement near his suite in the Capitol, as Graham was being removed from his cell and prepared for execution in Huntsville.

The governor was resolute in his support of the execution.

"After considering all the facts, I am confident justice is being done," he said. "May God bless the victims, the families of the victims and may God bless Mr. Graham."

Graham at that point had minutes to deliver an angry diatribe against capital punishment before being put to death by lethal injection. At 8:49 p.m., his case was over.

But as Bush runs for president, he remains governor of a state that has put more people to death in the last two decades than any other.

His handling of the furor over how the death penalty is meted out in Texas is a window into his personality, giving voters a preview of how he might deal with the nation's weightiest public policy decisions, if he wins the White House, political analysts say.

"Someday, he might have to push a button that doesn't just fry an individual but says, 'We are at war,'" said Marc Landy, chairman of Boston College's political science department. "The issue with Bush is not does he have the guts to do it but is he a judicious, thoughtful, mature leader?"

Bush's body language, rhetoric and demeanor in dealing with the case gives voters a glimpse of his personality and character, added Benjamin Page of Northwestern University. Bush was criticized for laughing during a televised debate when asked about a pending execution.

"It's the question of basic brainpower but also the question of basic humanity and depth of feeling," said Page, a political science professor.

Sunday, variable cloudy with a chance of rain. High Thursday was 89 and the low, 68.

STATEWIDE — Skies were partly cloudy Thursday with temperatures forecasted to be in the 90s for much of the state, the National Weather Service said.

In North Texas, skies were cloudy early Thursday with highs expected to peak into the 90s. Combined with the humidity, the heat index could approach 100, forecasters said.

Partly to mostly cloudy skies are expected though Saturday in West Texas and The Panhandle. Highs Friday should be mostly in the 80s and 90s.

Skies were also partly cloudy in sections of South Texas.

Temperatures at 4 a.m. Thursday ranged from 74 at Burnet to 81 at Galveston.

The forecast calls for partly to mostly sunny skies and highs near 90 along the coast and 100 elsewhere, with thunderstorms possible.

Pentagon: China unlikely to attack Taiwan

By ROBERT BURNS
AP Military Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A new Pentagon assessment of China's security strategy concludes that Beijing in unlikely to attack Taiwan because the Chinese believe war would jeopardize their economic growth and world standing.

The report, months in the making and long overdue to Congress, says that although China is strengthening its military power on a broad front and is gradually closing a qualitative gap with Taiwan's smaller military, it would face "significant shortcomings" in a conflict with Taiwan even a decade from now.

The report says China's resolve to use military force under certain circumstances "should not be discounted."

Over the coming five years, the People's Liberation Army will have "only a limited capability" to conduct offensive operations against Taiwan in a way that effectively combines air, sea and land forces, the report says. It says the PLA's naval, air and ground troops are not fully integrated into a cohesive combat force.

"This weakness would contribute to Taiwan's ability to sustain air, sea and ground operations in the face of a PLA attack in the short term," the report says, even though China has a far larger armed force.

In the longer term, China could gain a greater edge over Taiwan in both the quality and quantity of its military forces, the report said. At that point Taiwan's success in deterring Chinese aggression will depend on its ability to acquire and operate modern arms and technology.

China's leaders appear committed to a goal of achieving the status of a "medium-sized great power" by 2050, the report says. It views the development of military power as a secondary complement to policies of economic reform with a goal of eventually playing the role of a great power and emerging as the pre-eminent power in Asia.

The Pentagon released its report Friday shortly after Secretary of State Madeleine Albright completed a hastily arranged visit to Beijing. On Thursday she made a fervent pitch to President Jiang Zemin to hold at least low-level talks with Taiwan in an effort to defuse tensions.

The communist government in Beijing views Taiwan as a renegade province and insists it not seek international recognition as a separate state. It has refused to renounce the option of using force against Taiwan and has said it might do so in any of three circumstances: if Taiwan declared independence, if a foreign power intervened to stop reunification on China's terms or if Taiwan gained nuclear arms.

U.S. policy is to view Taiwan as part of China, although the United States sells defensive arms to the island, which split from mainland China after the communist takeover in October 1949.

The Pentagon report puts considerable emphasis on China's recent buildup of short-range missile forces along its southeast coast directly across from Taiwan. The warning time for missile launches against Taiwan "most likely will decrease" if China continues expanding these missile forces as expected, it said. The implication is that this trend makes it more difficult to defend against a surprise attack.

On Friday, Taiwan's military announced that China began live-fire artillery tests off its southeast coast. Taiwanese officials said the exercises were routine and not a threat to the island.

The Pentagon's assessment takes account of a wide range of variables and does not specifically predict whether China will attack Taiwan. It emphasizes that despite refusing to renounce the military option, Beijing has been consistent in putting its national goal of economic reform at the top of its priorities.

"Some in China are aware that war with Taiwan could be economically and politically devastating," it says. China has avoided activities that might threaten its economic growth and its access to foreign markets.

"In initiating a military conflict with Taiwan, Beijing would run the risk of jeopardizing both its continued economic development and its political standing, especially among those regional states with which it has unresolved territorial disputes," it says.

China's leaders appear committed to a goal of achieving the status of a "medium-sized great power" by 2050, the report says. It views the development of military power as a secondary complement to policies of economic reform with a goal of eventually playing the role of a great power and emerging as the pre-eminent power in Asia.

Air Force general defends missile defense system before Congress

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Pentagon is defending its high-stakes efforts to develop a national missile shield, rejecting assertions by some observers that it has rigged the testing of the proposed $36 billion system.

The Air Force general in charge of the system, Lt. Gen. Ronald Kadish, told Congress there is no deception in the up-and-down testing of the system.

Kadish said he'd tell his own children the interceptor defense is worth developing because the country is now defenseless against long-range nuclear missile attack from hostile nations or terrorists.

Critics say the Pentagon hasn't proved its proposed system of interceptor missiles will work. One test succeeded but a mock warhead slipped through in the latest one, and another test is scheduled July 7 over the Pacific.

Kadish, after briefing House members in a classified hearing Wednesday, said in an open session Thursday that allegations of fraudulent testing have been made since 1996 and have been taken seriously with no evidence of deception.

Kadish said the system, to be deployed in 2005, is "high-risk" and stressed that it would not protect against any massive attack.

"We will not be perfect against every conceivable countermeasure, but neither will our adversaries be perfect against our capabilities," he said.

In the toughest political challenge yet, more than 50 House Democrats urged the FBI on Thursday to investigate allegations by scientists of "fraud and cover-up" in testing of the system designed to defend the United States against limited accidental or intentional nuclear attack.

Physicist Robert L. Park, Washington director of the American Physical Society, said the limited testing conducted by the Pentagon is inadequate to ensure a viable system.

Park said his organization of scientists strongly supports an FBI inquiry into whether any tests have been rigged or whether data has been withheld.

He appeared at a news conference on the Capitol lawn with Rep. Dennis Kucinich, D-Ohio, and other Democrats, who called for an inquiry into allegations by Massachusetts Institute of Technology professor Theodore Postol of Pentagon and subcontractor deception in the testing.

"If we're relying on this technology to protect the United States and the technology is being advanced with false information, the people have a right to know," said Kucinich, holding up a black umbrella full of gaping holes as symbol of an ineffective missile defense.

Kucinich and 52 other Democrats wrote to FBI Director Louis Freeh calling for the investigation.

"The American people need an independent investigation of this matter to determine if the well-documented and serious allegations of fraud in the National Missile Defense system are true and if a cover-up of that fraud has taken place," the letter said.

President Clinton has yet to decide whether to go ahead with a national missile defense, but the chairman of the congressional subcommittee overseeing Pentagon research, Rep. Curt Weldon, R-Pa., said Thursday that Clinton has to give a thumbs-up because he signed a law that requires such a system.

Weldon accused critics of an "outrageous, despicable lie" in their allegations of fraud.

Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott, meanwhile, said he is "not going to be outraged" if Clinton passes a decision on developing missile defenses on to his successor.

Clinton has suggested he plans to make a deployment decision this fall, but Lott said he believes the president may avoid that so as not to cause problems for presidential candidate Al Gore.

Lott is the first high-ranking Republican congressional leader to suggest that a delay by Clinton might be acceptable, leaving the decision to "hopefully future President George W. Bush," who backs an even more ambitious anti-missile defense.

Pentagon backs off fighter contract split

FORT WORTH (AP) — The idea of dividing the coveted Joint Strike Fighter contract between defense contractors is being scrapped in favor of a winner-take-all competition between Lockheed Martin Corp. and the Boeing Co., defense officials said Thursday.

At stake is which company will take charge of the $200 billion next-generation fighter program.

Experts said in Friday's editions of The Dallas Morning News said that a competitive scenario might mean the loser of the high-stakes competition is forced out of making fighter jets.

Lockheed Martin Aeronautics Co. of Fort Worth, which employs nearly 11,000, would stand to get a large chunk of the business if its parent wins.

The Pentagon's acquisitions chief, Jacques Gansler, said Thursday that the internal deliberations were resolved in favor of maintaining competition.

"The strategy ... will be a winner-take-all program, which is what we had planned all along and which we still have assessed as the one that seems to make the most sense to us," Gansler said.

The Fort Worth Star-Telegram however reported that a letter to Congress released Thursday by Defense Secretary William Cohen said the Pentagon would continue to evaluate the nature of the competition.

"We will continue to evaluate these options and to develop a comprehensive assessment that our successors can use as they make decisions on the future course of the JSF program," Cohen said in Friday's editions of the Star-Telegram.

Pentagon officials hope to announce the winner in spring 2001. The first phase of the contract is for $19.8 billion, for engineering and manufacturing development.

YOU HAVE THE RIGHT TO KNOW THE "REAL" TRUTH

It is apparent that my opponent will say or do anything to purposefully deceive the public in his desperate attempt to win the District Attorney position.

My opponent knows full well that I have NO CRIMINAL RECORD. The Railroad Commission's very own records show there was no crime committed. He is also aware that a person with a criminal record cannot be licensed to practice law. I have been a licensed, practicing attorney for nearly 22 years with no reprimands or disciplinary actions.

You will recall that Senator Kay Bailey Hutchison was indicted in a political vendetta. Did this keep her from becoming a U.S. Senator?

I strongly urge all of the voters in the 31st district to consider these facts and not be deceived by misinformation and my opponent's desperate attempt to reclaim the DA position.

WHAT KIND OF DISTRICT ATTORNEY DO YOU WANT FOR THE 31ST DISTRICT?

1. One who is committed to the office on a full-time basis.
2. One who firmly believes in harsh, consistent prosecution.
3. One who will make himself available to law enforcement.
4. One who will make himself available to the public.
5. One who is concerned with the rights of victims.
6. One who has positively no ties to ACLU lawyers.

House showdown over federal tobacco lawsuit

By ALAN FRAM
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — For the third time in a week, House supporters and foes of the huge federal lawsuit against the tobacco industry are battling over whether to stifle the litigation by blocking money to pay the government's legal costs.

With a potential settlement worth billions of dollars at stake, the House planned to vote Friday on Republican-written legislation that would prevent the Justice Department from accepting $12 million from other agencies to help foot the bill for the tobacco action. Without the money, Attorney General Janet Reno has said her agency would have to drop the suit, which it filed in September.

"This is a huge gift to the tobacco industry of what could be billions of dollars by insulating them" from the suit, said Rep. Henry Waxman, D-Calif., leader of the effort to thwart the GOP language.

But Rep. Robin Hayes, R-N.C., said Waxman and President Clinton, who supports the suit, had an election-year "political goal ... to destroy, to eliminate, to wipe off the radar screen the tobacco industry, farmers and everyone connected with the industry."

Clinton weighed in on Thursday, accusing the cigarette companies of "working overtime to pass special protections to shield them from financial responsibility for the harm they've caused."

The lawsuit seeks to recover costs the government said it has incurred from decades of helping Americans with smoking-related illnesses, a price tag federal officials say exceeds $20 billion annually.

A provision in a $35.5 billion measure financing the departments of Commerce, State and Justice would forbid the Justice Department to accept financial help from other agencies for suits the government has filed.

Waxman's amendment would exempt suits filed before last Jan. 1, which he said would affect only one action: the tobacco litigation.

The White House has threatened a veto because of the tobacco language and cuts in Clinton proposals for hiring local gun-crime prosecutors and police officers, legal aid for the poor, and payments for U.N. peacekeeping missions.

The Justice Department's bills for the suit are expected to be $40 million for 2000 and 2001 alone. The department wants the departments of Veterans Affairs, Health and Human Services, and Defense to contribute $4 million each next year to help pay the bill.

On Monday, the House voted to block Justice from receiving $4 million from Veterans Affairs, only to reverse itself the next day.

The showdown came as the Senate grappled over legislation on prescription drugs and worker-protection regulations. Both issues are more likely to be the stuff of veto fights or campaign commercials than to be enacted into law.

On Thursday, the Senate used a mostly party-line 53-44 vote to reject a Democratic plan for creating a new prescription drug benefit under Medicare.

The measure was preordained for defeat in the Republican-controlled Senate. But Democrats were happy to showcase their plan and contrast it with a GOP alternative pushed through the House Ways and Means Committee a day earlier. The GOP package would subsidize private insurers to encourage them to provide their own coverage plans.

Forty-two Democrats and two Republicans, Peter Fitzgerald of Illinois and Lincoln Chafee of Rhode Island, voted for the proposal. There were 52 Republicans and Democrat John Breaux of Louisiana opposed. Not voting were Democrats Barbara Boxer of California and Daniel Inouye of Hawaii, plus Republican Ben Nighthorse Campbell of Colorado.

The Democratic plan would require participants to pay monthly premiums of about $35 and a $250 annual deductible. In exchange, the government would subsidize the costs of purchasing beneficiaries' drugs.

Minutes earlier, the Senate voted 57-41 to block proposed Clinton administration rules that would require employers to take extra steps to prevent repetitive motion injuries in the workplace. The rules are expected by year's end.

Democrats said the regulations could prevent many of the 1.8 million such injuries that occur every year. But Republicans said the rules would be too expensive, are not based on sound science and might usurp state worker compensation laws.

The approved language would block the Occupational Safety and Health Administration's proposed rules until October 2001 — after Clinton has left office.

The House approved a bill with similar language two weeks ago. The White House has threatened a veto.

Democratic Sens. Ernest Hollings of South Carolina, John Breaux of Louisiana and Blanche Lincoln of Arkansas supported blocking the new rules. The only GOP defector was Sen. Arlen Specter of Pennsylvania.

Boxer and Inouye missed the vote.

Fossils challenges theory of dinosaur origin of birds

WASHINGTON (AP) — The fossil of a small lizard-like, flying reptile with a complex set of feathers challenges the theory that birds evolved from dinosaurs, a new study says.

Researchers say the feathered reptile lived about 220 million years ago, proving that feathered animals evolved millions of years before the appearance of the dinosaurs that most experts say are the ancestors of modern birds.

The fossil has been called Longisquama and is thought to be an archosaur, a member of a reptile group that later gave rise to dinosaurs, crocodiles and birds. The first known bird, Archeopteryx, appeared about 145 million years ago, some 75 million after the date for Longisquama.

"Here you've got an animal that isn't a bird and it isn't a dinosaur, and yet it has feathers," said Nicholas R. Geist, paleobiologist at Sonoma State University and co-author of a study appearing Friday in the journal Science.

"It is going to be a major monkey wrench in the theory about the dinosaurean origin of birds," he said. "It is going to cause some people to take a real good second look at their data."

However, Jacques Gauthier of Yale University, an expert on the evolution of dinosaurs, said that Longisquama is a poorly preserved specimen that is important only "if you allow your imagination to run wild."

"There is a huge body of data that show birds evolved from dinosaurs," said Gauthier. "This (the Longisquama study) is way over the top."

Gauthier said that a single specimen is not enough to dismiss a theory that is supported by many studies that point to the dinosaur ancestry of birds, including evidence that some dinosaurs had feathers.

The Longisquama fossil includes the head, forelegs and part of a torso of a lizard-like animal. Along its back are a series of appendages that Geist and his co-authors say are feathers.

Longisquama was found in Kyrgyzstan, in central Asia, in 1969, and was stored for years in a drawer in Moscow. The specimen provoked little interest until it was included as part of a traveling exhibition and spotted at a shopping mall in Kansas by Oregon State University paleontologists John Ruben and Terry Jones, co-authors of the study in Science.

Ruben and Jones said they identified the appendages on the back of the small fossil as feathers and began a long study of the small critter.

Jones said that the feathers along the back of Longisquama are fully developed and very "birdlike."

"The skeleton is also very birdlike," said Jones. "It has a birdlike head, shoulders and a wishbone. The wishbone is almost exactly like that of Archeopteryx."

Geist said the feather structure of Longisquama was well preserved in hardened mud because the animal apparently sank to a lake bottom after it died.

He that Longisquama probably had muscle control of the feathers and that it used them to glide from trees. The animal was not able to achieve true flight as do modern birds, said Geist.

"These feathers emerge from a follicle the way feathers do in modern birds," said Geist. "They had a quill-like structure that was hollow."

Geist said that feathers are very complicated structures and that it is unlikely that feathers would have evolved twice — once among the early reptiles and then later among the dinosaurs.

Branch Davidian trial to focus on cause of fire

WACO (AP) — Agents with the Federal Bureau of Investigation shot canisters of tear gas to try and force Branch Davidian leader David Koresh and his followers from their rickety wooden complex April 19, 1993.

But plaintiffs in the $675 million wrongful death lawsuit against the government allege flames consumed the structure minutes after the last canisters landed in the kitchen area.

The entire building ultimately burned to the ground, ending the 51-day standoff.

Survivors and family members of the some 80 people who died in the siege say tank-riding agents fired off the potentially incendiary canisters and possibly knocked over kerosene lanterns when they were demolishing the building. But the government maintains suicidal sect members set the three fires that engulfed the complex and are responsible for their own demise.

The debate over who sparked the fire was expected to intensify Friday with planned testimony from Tom Rowan, an FBI agent who helped launch tear gas canisters into the building.

Other FBI agents, including Joseph Servel and Michael Sackett, have said a fire erupted in the kitchen less than 30 seconds after they saw a tank insert tear gas into the room.

Testimony Thursday from Servel, a tank commander, showed other FBI agents also noticed smoke coming from the structure. "We saw smoke within seconds. We saw flames and then the smoke started getting really thick," Servel said.

Under cross-examination by government attorneys, Servel said he also observed what appeared to be muzzle flashes from gunfire in several windows before the fire started.

Earlier Thursday, several former high-ranking FBI officials said agents went beyond a government-approved plan for launching a tear gas operation against the Davidians when they used a tank to ram through walls and rip gaping holes in the sect's complex.

Retired deputy assistant FBI director Danny Coulson said in videotaped testimony that he was surprised when he saw a tank deeply penetrating the sect's building because the actions strayed from the tear-gassing plan approved by Attorney General Janet Reno.

"I don't recall that the plan contemplated this activity," Coulson said, referring to the tanks' movement on that day. "It would appear to be inconsistent."

Coulson said he watched the events of April 19 unfold on television in Washington and remembered saying, "I hope that's a bad camera angle."

A videotaped deposition of former FBI Director William Sessions also called into question the destruction rendered by tanks as the tear-gassing operation went forward.

On the tape, plaintiffs' lead counsel Michael Caddell asked Sessions if the destruction of a part of the building known as the gymnasium was approved. "That was not the plan, the plan was for the insertion of the gas," Sessions said.

Jury clears bank in Ponzi scheme

HOUSTON (AP) — A jury found Thursday that Texas Coastal Bank in Pasadena and its former president were not negligent in their dealings with two Houston investors who became victims of a Ponzi scheme.

The jury in State District Judge Martha Hill Jamison's court said the investors were most to blame for getting swindled out of $280,000 in the pyramid scheme, the Houston Chronicle reported Friday's editions.

Thomas Lamb and Jack Littell said the bank gave the swindler, who banked at Texas Coastal, strong business references even though his banking transactions suggested otherwise.

Both investors said they were told they would earn a 10 percent monthly return on an investment with Winterhawk West Indies Ltd. The pair checked out Winterhawk's owner, Robert Schoonover Jr., then going by the name of Robert Cord.

Texas Coastal President Billy Holcomb and the bank gave Schoonover strong references, said Olney Wallis, attorney for Lamb and Littell.

The two investors lost the $280,000 they invested with Winterhawk. They were seeking to recover the money plus interest and damages.

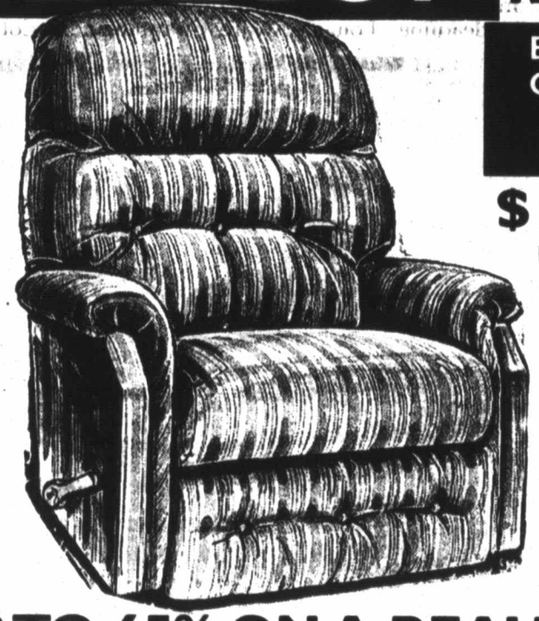

The defendants' lawyers argued that Texas Coastal wasn't required to give Lamb and Littell sound advice because they were not customers, and that it was up to the pair to take due diligence before investing in Winterhawk.

Dear John,

Pursuant to the instructions of Ms. Mary Ann Wiley of the Railroad Commission of Texas this date, enclosed please find a cashier's check in the amount of $2,415.46, payable to Compressor Rental Services, Inc., the complainant in the referenced case. I have also this date contacted your office by phone to verify that the case will be dismissed tomorrow at the scheduled pre-trial. Ms. Wiley has related to me that if I represent to her that the "check is in the mail" she will see to it that the case is dismissed on March 15, 1991. I trust that you will see that such is the case. At any rate, the check is in the mail today. I would appreciate it if you would forward a signed copy of the Order dismissing the referenced case to me for my file. If you have questions or instructions regarding this, please advise. With best personal regards, I remain

Very truly yours,

Ray: 'Substantial evidence' of Hillary Clinton role in travel office firings

By PETE YOST
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Independent Counsel Robert Ray said Thursday there is "substantial evidence" that Hillary Rodham Clinton played a role in White House travel office firings, contrary to her denials, but he won't bring charges against her.

Ray said he could not prove beyond a reasonable doubt that "any of Mrs. Clinton's statements and testimony regarding her involvement in the travel office firings were knowingly false."

"The independent counsel has declined prosecution of Mrs. Clinton," Ray said.

The prosecutor also criticized the White House for what he called "substantial resistance" to providing "relevant evidence" to his investigators.

"The White House asserted unfounded privileges that were later rejected in court," Ray said. "White House officials also conducted inadequate searches for documents and failed to make timely production of documents, including relevant e-mails."

The White House issued a statement that accused the Independent Counsel of politicizing an investigation that has "dragged on far too long" by "inappropriately characterizing the results of a legally sealed report through innuendo."

"After seven years and the expense of tens of millions of taxpayer dollars, the Independent Counsel confirms what we have said all along: There is no evidence that the first lady did anything wrong. In fact, the Independent Counsel confirms what the president and first lady have always said about this matter," White House press secretary Joe Lockhart said in the statement.

Ray's decision came on the same day that government officials said a top Justice Department had recommended that a special counsel be appointed to investigate Vice President Al Gore in the 1996 campaign fund-raising controversy. The recommendation came from Robert Conrad, supervising attorney for the Justice Department task force investigating 1996 fund-raising abuses, according to officials, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Ray issued the statement about the first lady after closing out the investigation into the 1993 firings of all seven employees of the White House travel office, which spurred one of the first major controversies of President Clinton's tenure.

The announcement comes less than six months before the election. Mrs. Clinton is seeking to become a U.S. senator from New York.

When Ray recently announced the closing of the FBI files investigation, he praised the White House for cooperation and emphasized there was no "substantial" evidence of wrongdoing.

But in Thursday's statement, Ray challenged the veracity of Mrs. Clinton's account of the firings. She has repeatedly stated she did not play a role in them.

"Mrs. Clinton does not know the origin of the decision to remove the White House travel office employees," her lawyers told congressional auditors in 1994. "Mrs. Clinton did not direct that any action be taken." In 1996, Mrs. Clinton swore to Congress that the earlier answers "were accurate."

Ray noted that Mrs. Clinton "had discussions with Deputy White House Counsel Vince Foster, Chief of Staff Mack McLarty and longtime friend and adviser Harry Thomason." Ray also called attention to a phone conversation she had with David Watkins, then the White House administration chief.

Those contacts have been known since the White House's original review of the firings in 1993. However, Ray concluded the contacts "ultimately influenced Watkins' decision to fire the travel office employees."

"Nevertheless, the evidence was insufficient to prove to a jury beyond a reasonable doubt that any of Mrs. Clinton's statements and testimony regarding her involvement in the travel office firings were knowingly false," he said.

The White House travel office workers who were fired served at the pleasure of the president and could have been terminated without any reason. But a White House lawyer who worked for Foster contacted the FBI to pass along rumors of financial improprieties before the workers were fired.

Republicans accused the White House of using the FBI to justify the firings.

Foster later committed suicide.

The White House conducted an internal review and issued a public apology, saying the firings had been mishandled. It also reprimanded four presidential aides while recommending that five of the seven former employees be given new government jobs. The former head of the office was prosecuted and acquitted of financial wrongdoing.

Ray's predecessor, Kenneth Starr, zeroed in on the travel office in January 1996 when a memo by Watkins surfaced stating that Mrs. Clinton had been behind the firings.

Regulations target feds use of Internet tracking software

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Clinton administration's budget office issued strict new rules Thursday for how government agencies use software to track Internet users and ordered all departments to immediately review their compliance with existing privacy policies.

The directive from the Office of Management and Budget comes a day after the White House ordered its Office of National Drug Control Policy to stop tracking computer users viewing its anti-drug advertising on the Internet. The ads, sold by a company contracted by the drug office, used "cookies," small software files often placed on computers without a person's knowledge that can can track movement on the Web and collect personal data.

In a memo to all government agencies, budget director Jack Lew explicitly pointed out that the administration's privacy policies include all contractors operating Web sites on behalf of the government.

"Under this new federal policy, 'cookies' should not be used at federal Web sites, or by contractors when operating Web sites on behalf of agencies," Lew said, noting there would be strict requirements for using the software.

Federal agencies will have to demonstrate a "compelling need to gather the data," publicly disclose how any collected personal information would be protected and get the authorization of the agency head. For example, using a cookie on a State Department Web site would require the personal approval of Secretary of State Madeleine Albright.

The new directives also require agencies to include descriptions of their compliance with the Web privacy policies in their budget submissions this fall.

As far as protecting a person's personal information, the government must make sure it practices what it posts.

"If an agency Web site states that the information provided will not be available to any other entities, it is the responsibility of the agency to assure that no such sharing takes place," Lew said.

Earlier Thursday, Republican lawmakers denounced the drug policy office for its tracking of computer users, a practice contrary to the administration's own guidelines.

"The government should not be in the business of cybersnooping," said House Majority Leader Dick Armey, R-Texas. "These sites ought to be an essential link for citizens who want to become more involved in our government. It is an outrage when this vital trust is violated by the lack of concern for personal privacy."

Following the White House's order to cease using the software, the drug policy office ordered their contractors to stop using the cookies as soon as possible, said Don Maple, who helps run the office's media campaign.

"We had obviously underestimated the administration's sensitivity to the use of this technique," he added.

Last week, Armey, along with Reps. Bill Tauzin, R-La., and Bob Goodlatte, R-Va., wrote the White House requesting all federal Web sites be checked for compliance with Internet privacy standards proposed for business by the Federal Trade Commission.

"A project with links and tracking to proprietary Web sites and business has vast privacy implications with which Congress should be consulted," Tauzin said in a letter to Barry R. McCaffrey, head of the drug policy office.

Various Web sites displayed the anti-drug ads, which also appeared on Internet search engines when users typed in key words related to drugs. Users clicking on the ads were taken to a drug policy office site called "Freevibe," which targeted young people. Upon entering the site, a cookie was placed on users' computers.

The tracking totaled the number of people clicking on ads, which ads they clicked on and what pages they viewed on the Freevibe site, Maple said.

Senate votes for year delay in new workplace safety rules

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Republican-controlled Senate voted Thursday night to block proposed Clinton administration rules giving workers new protections against repetitive motion injuries.

The 57-41 vote, on an amendment sponsored by GOP Sen. Mike Enzi of Wyoming, was mostly along party lines and came several days after the House adopted a similar ban. Democrats immediately said President Clinton would veto the overall bill, which provides annual spending for the departments of labor, education, health and human services.

Democrats said the regulations developed by the Occupational Safety and Health Administration could help for an estimated 1.8 million workers who suffer from ergonomic injuries each year.

"The Republican position is turn a deaf ear to these workers, ignoring the fact that they are facing debilitating injuries," said Sen. Richard Durbin, D-Ill.

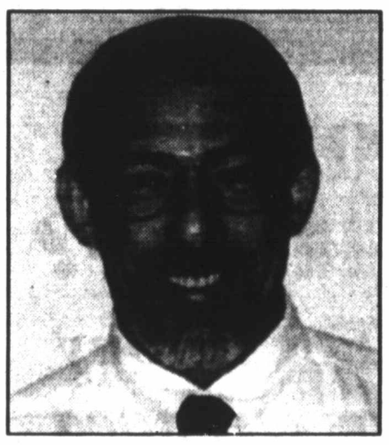

Republicans insisted that the new rules would cost businesses too much. "There are going to be workers who lose their job because of this rule if it's imposed," said Sen. Tim Hutchinson, R-Ark. "There are small businesses that are going to go bankrupt because of this rule if it's not stopped."

The proposed rules, made public in November after a decade of study and delay, would require employers to minimize the everyday physical stresses of a broad range of jobs. Final standards are now scheduled to be released by the end of 2000.

Because the vote came on a one-year spending bill, the ban technically would expire at the end of the next fiscal year, in October 2001.

OSHA estimates the rules would cost businesses $4.7 billion to implement, but predicts net savings of $9 billion in medical costs and increased productivity. Republicans say that figure is wrong, pointing to Small Business Administration estimates of $60 billion a year or more.

"This is the largest, most onerous and expensive rule in the history of this agency," Enzi said. "This rule has serious, substantial flaws."

Texas 100 Stock Index reflects market volatility

■ The energy sector and the service and financial sector turned in the best performance in May, rising 6.5 percent and 3.6 percent, respectively. In the energy sector, high oil prices meant increased company profits. Energy stocks that gained value include Phillips Petroleum Co., BP Amoco Corp., Texaco and Shell.

AUSTIN — The Texas 100 Stock Index fell 6.5 points, or 4.5 percent in May to 136.9, with entertainment, travel and retail stocks taking the hardest hit. The Standard and Poor's 500 Index fell 2.2 percent and the Dow Jones Industrial Average dropped 2.0 percent.

The energy sector and the service and financial sector turned in the best performance in May, rising 6.5 percent and 3.6 percent, respectively. In the energy sector, high oil prices meant increased company profits. Energy stocks that gained value include Phillips Petroleum Co., BP Amoco Corp., Texaco and Shell.

In the financial sector, all of the Texas 100's bank stocks gained value, some in double-digit percentages. Shipping companies Federal Express and United Parcel Service dropped 5.8 percent and 10 percent, respectively.

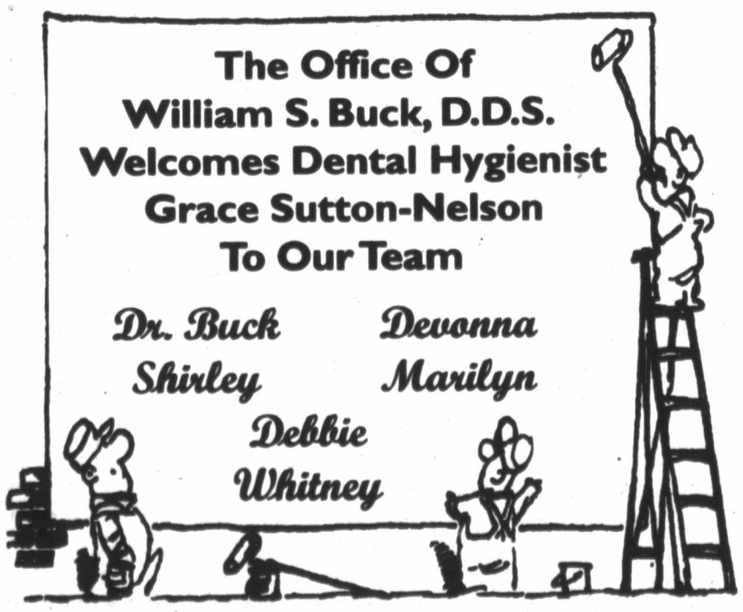

Stock prices in the entertainment and travel sector dropped 15.1 percent in May, giving up all of April's gains, and then some. Every stock lost value, except Continental Airlines Inc., which rose 9.5 percent. Phoenix Restaurants (Black-Eyed Pea) fell 38.5 percent, after a 117 percent increase last month.

The retail sector had its second consecutive weak month, failing 8.7 percent in May. J.C. Penney Co. bucked the trend, with a 30.6 percent gain in its stock value. Investors appeared pleased with the company's restructuring plan, which includes closing 40 Penney's stores and 289 Eckerd pharmacies. Tandy Corp. said it wants to be officially known as Radio Shack. The name change didn't help the company's stock value, which dropped 25.2 percent.

High tech stocks, which have performed well for more than a year, lost some of the ground they had gained, dropping 7.4 percent. The sector's computer manufacturers and chip makers declined, while the defense contractors held steady.

The Texas 100 Stock index tracks the stock prices of the 100 largest publicly traded employers in Texas. In the last 12 months, the Texas 100 has risen 5.6 percent, compared to a 9.1 percent rise in the Standard and Poor's 500 and a 0.4 percent decline in the Dow Jones Industrials.

The Texas 100 Stock Index reflects the current value of $1 00 invested in its component companies in December 1997. The investment would be worth $136.91 now.

AT&T cable ruling could open Internet competition, Portland city officials say

By WILLIAM McCALL
AP Business Writer

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Despite losing the fight to regulate AT&T Corp.'s cable network, city officials say their battle will nevertheless open up competition among Internet service providers.

The 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in San Francisco decided Thursday that the AtHome cable Internet service offered by AT&T was really a telecommunications service — meaning it is subject only to Federal Communications Commission control, not the city's.

A spokeswoman for AOL, which initially was one of the most ardent lobbyists against AT&T in this debate before backing off, praised the decision, saying the matter should be left to the industry.

The court rejected a federal judge's ruling last June that Portland had the right to regulate the cable TV system AT&T acquired with its purchase of Tele-Communications Inc., known as TCI.

AT&T had sued Portland, claiming it was still a cable TV service that could close access to competitors because it was simply delivering information. At the time, AT&T was transforming the system to a two-way interactive system that can also accommodate telephone service.

"I think the irony is that AT&T suing us forced open access," city commissioner Erik Sten said. "Had we not stood up to AT&T, competitors probably would not have bothered to come to Portland."

AT&T said it got the ruling it was seeking all along — namely, that cities and counties had no authority to regulate its cable system.

"It simply validates our conclusion about what the law says," said Jim Cicconi, AT&T general counsel. "We won the case."

But Greg Simon, co-director of the openNet Coalition, which was backing Portland, said AT&T was trying to avoid federal regulation and ended up putting itself squarely under the thumb of the FCC.

"If you read their press release they say they won because Portland can't regulate them as a cable company and their stock went up two dollars," Simon said.

"But I don't think their stock will go up when they give the rest of the story," he said. "They lost. The 9th Circuit has said, 'You're open now!'"

FCC Chairman William Kennard issued a statement saying that federal policy will continue to "promote choice" and that consumers "should be able to point, click and choose their Internet service provider."

The FCC has been leery of creating regulations that might stifle this emerging technology. As AT&T argued in its appeal, the FCC has deliberately taken a hands-off approach to regulating cable access to the Internet after the Telecommunications Act of 1996.

Fears about accessibility to cable lines were also raised when America Online announced this year that it was purchasing Time Warner, the nation's second-largest cable provider. However, officials at the two companies have said they will give their customers a choice of Internet service.

A spokeswoman for AOL, which initially was one of the most ardent lobbyists against AT&T in this debate before backing off, praised the decision, saying the matter should be left to the industry.

"The debate about open access regulation has been overtaken by the tremendous progress in the marketplace, with AT&T and AOL and Time Warner all committed to providing open access and choice for consumers," said Kathy McKiernan.

Pantyhose key evidence in Swearingen case

HOUSTON (AP) — A Willis man on trial for capital murder likely strangled a Montgomery College student in 1998 with a pair of his wife's pantyhose, Texas Department of Public Safety experts testified Thursday.

Larry Swearingen, 28, is accused of luring Melissa Trotter, 19, from the Willis college campus, strangling her with the hose and then dumping her body in the Sam Houston National Forest sometime around Dec. 8, 1998.

DPS criminalist Sandy Musialowski said the leg of the hose that police believe was used to strangle Trotter matched a pair of hose missing one leg found by Swearingen's landlord in a trailer the Swearingen lived in before his arrest, according to Friday's editions of the Houston Chronicle.

Another DPS expert, Cassie Carradine, testified that a DNA test showed a hair found in the pantyhose belonged to Swearingen's wife, Terry.

Prosecutors are seeking a death sentence against Swearingen, an ex-convict with a history of violence toward women. His trial began June 14.

He has denied the charges, saying he met Trotter at the college the day she disappeared but didn't see her after that. In May, after spending five months in Montgomery County awaiting trial, he attempted suicide by slashing his wrist and an arm with a disposable razor.

Swearingen, an electrician, had done work at the college and knew Trotter through his sister. Trotter was last seen talking with Swearingen in the college library on the afternoon of Dec. 8. Her body was found a month later.

An earlier indictment also charged Swearingen with sexually assaulting Trotter before he killed her.

The pantyhose are part of a pile of evidence prosecutors have presented linking Swearingen to the crime.

Carpet fibers from Swearingen's residence were found on Trotter's clothing and Trotter's hair and fibers from her jacket were found in his truck, according to testimony.

Experts also testified that fibers from Swearingen's pickup were found on Trotter's jacket.

Prosecutors say Swearingen may have brought Trotter to his home before strangling her and dumping her body.

Terry Swearingen testified she found a pack of cigarettes matching the brand the victim liked to smoke and a lighter similar to Trotter's in their trailer the day the college student went missing.

She also said the bed appeared to have been disturbed and her husband told her that someone must have broken in.

Presbyterians to debate same-sex unions

DALLAS (AP) — Members of the Presbyterian Church USA are set to discuss the issue of same-sex unions tomorrow at their national convention in Long Beach, California.

Last month, United Methodists upheld a ban on same-sex commitment ceremonies, also known as holy unions.

However, Presbyterians are in a nique position because their ighest court recently ruled that the ceremonies are allowed under the denomination's constitution.

"This is an argument between those who consider purity as the highest virtue and those who consider inclusivity as the highest virtue," The Rev. Blair Monie of Preston Hollow Presbyterian Church in Dallas told his congregation Sunday.

The church court's decision jolted the nation's largest Presbyterian denomination, which has been divided by debate over homosexuality for nearly three decades.

"The fact that the church is even at this point is a sign of our brokenness and fallenness from God," Joe Rightmyer, executive director of Presbyterians for Renewal, a conservative movement in the church, said in Friday's editions of The Dallas Morning News.

Rightmyer said the ruling puts Presbyterians in the position of condoning same-sex relations, which has never been the denomination's stance. He predicted that a majority of Presbyterians won't tolerate the unions.

Opponents of the ruling may try to amend the denomination's constitution to expressly prohibit same-sex ceremonies.

A similar amendment was approved at the 1994 national meeting but wasn't ratified by the required majority of the denomination's 171 presbyteries, or districts.

FACT

Following the Republican Primary, several supporters went to D.A. John Mann to discuss the issue of a "full time district attorney". Although John felt strongly he had been doing the job of a full time DA, he did come to agree with us that the issue seemed to be important to some voters. After a lengthy discussion he concluded that if re-elected, he would begin taking the necessary steps to turn his office into a full-time position. This would mean having the legislature, in regular session, pass legislation to make the change legal. He expressed the desire to make sure everyone was fully aware as to the cost of the change, and he wanted all the taxpayers of this district to be fully informed as to all the ramifications involved in this change. It will mean paying the "full-time DA" $101,000, which John did not find disagreeable since he had been doing a "full-time" job for part-time pay. There will be other added costs with this change and those costs will be payed for by the taxpayers - that is a simple FACT! We hope convincing John to take this step is what the voters want. If you, the voters, feel this is unnecessary, you will need to make your opinions known to John after the election - if you chose to re-elect the only qualified candidate in this very important race. If not, you know his opponent is already committed to adding that additional cost to the already overtaxed citizens of this district.
The FACTS are now yours to consider. JOHN MANN has a proven record of service to this district; his opponent simply has a "proven record".

Within the church family can be some of life's most wonderful moments

By the Rev. Darrell Monday

Central Baptist Church

Family. Within family can be some of life's most wonderful moments! Who can forget the nervousness tempered with joy, anticipation and even some fear that a couple feels as they step forth in beginning a new family? Standing before God in the presence of their childhood families and friends they covenant together to build a family, a life, a home.

Certainly there are difficult days and experiences to be faced, but the wonders exceed these. How can one ever get over the awesome miracle of birth? Who can forget the excitement of hearing those first "understandable" words? Taking the first step, riding the first time on the bike, that first ball game or toot of a horn, the first date, the leaving of home for college, a marriage ... all these and more make family, in spite of its many difficulties, a precious experience in the journey of life.

That's the way it is in God's family! The Central Baptist family has had and continues to have these wonderful moments of family life. Two families that exemplify this wondrous family journey in the church family are the Mike Watsons and John Manns. What joy and privilege has been Central's family as these families met Christ in new birth, took those first steps of faith and spoke those first words of testimony for Jesus. How exciting to see them step out in those first experiences of serving the Lord and see how God moved in and through their lives.

It was with a mixture of great joy and regret that Central Baptist released these two families to God's calling in their lives. As they sensed God's special calling in their lives and surrendered to His will, it came time to give them away to the covenant of their new calling. Now with eagerness our family awaits the news of our "extended" family as they follow through in this new portion of their journey with God.

Mike, Sharlotte, Reese and Erin Watson and John, Sandy, Kendall and Lauren Mann have moved to Fort Worth to attend Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary in preparation for the ministries the Lord is calling them to. Though the moments in a family when growth leads to change is hard, it is also filled with anticipation as to what the change will lead. And as in a family no two are the same, God's work in the Watsons and Manns and His work in the rest of our "family" is unique and wondrous.

That family atmosphere and wonder can be experienced in your life as well as you make a decision to get involved in God's family. These family "moments" abound at Central Baptist. You are invited to be a part of this part of God's family anytime. Come be a part of these life experiences that forever change us and mold us. Come witness the miracles of God working in His family. For information about Central's family activities and wonderful moments, call 665-1631 or check our website at www.centralbaptist-pampa.net.

The Continentals

(Special photo)

Calvary Baptist Church will present the Continental Singers and Brass, an empowered, enthusiastic, evangelical group of youth, at 7 p.m. Saturday, June 24. In the year 2000, the Continentals continue a 33-year tradition of cutting-edge music ministry by presenting an inspiring program packed with the best of music, choreography and personal testimony. This group of 50 vocalists, instrumentalists and technicians between the ages of 16 and 26 has been carefully chosen from thousands who audition annually. The concert is free and open to the public. A love offering will be taken.

Religion briefs...

Religious groups respond to Supreme Court prayer ruling

NEW YORK (AP) — A leading Islamic advocacy group joined Christian conservatives in objecting to this week's U.S. Supreme Court ruling that student-led prayers at football games are unconstitutional. "As demonstrated by the increase in violence, sexual promiscuity and drug use at schools throughout the country, there is clearly a need for more student-sponsored spiritual guidance, not less," said a statement by the Council on American-Islamic Relations.

The Fellowship of Christian Athletes called the decision a "bizarre and ironic intrusion in the religious life and expression of American student athletes."

The National Council of Churches said, "The court wisely recognized that participation in these prayers might not be voluntary for all students."

The American Jewish Congress called the decision "an important victory because it firmly dispels any notion that schools can evade the constitutional mandate of religious neutrality in the schools."

Linking religion and medicine called scientifically questionable

NEW YORK (AP) — The trend toward incorporating religion and spirituality into health care is ethically and scientifically questionable, according to an article in this week's New England Journal of Medicine by a group of Christian, Jewish, Buddhist, and Muslim biomedical researchers and chaplains.

Combining the two "leads to weak science (and) watered-down religion," said the article whose lead author was Richard P. Sloan, director of behavioral medicine at Columbia-Presbyterian Medical Center.

"We are troubled by the uncritical embrace of this trend by the general public, individual physicians and American medical schools," the article said.

The authors stated that "limited, narrowly focused and methodologically flawed studies" are leading to false conclusions that religious activity promotes healing, that patients should be encouraged to participate in such activities, and that patients want a spiritual component to their medical care.

"Attempts to link religion to health oversimplifies both," the authors concluded.

My continual quest of communing with God

From the Back Pew...

By Cheryl Berzanskis

As I was watching from the back pew this week, it occurred to me that I don't want church, I want God and the God I am continually discovering is a God not bound by constitutions, by-laws or denominational lines. I also crave knowing the people who relate to God the same way as I do — through art, literature, music, study.

In the quest for communing with God and knowing His people intimately I have discovered His church — the church with which He has blessed me — is a scattered thing.

My dear friends in Pampa, a friend in Canyon, a friend in Utah, friends in Amarillo — they are my best church because in them the spiritual longings, the fears and blessings are confided as freely as by a little child. That "church," a gift from God, provides much of the support for my spiritual existence.

To find that church outside the organized church re-emphasizes the concept of the catholic, or universal church, because God's people are not gathered under an institutional umbrella nor organized into a real estate owning corporation which boasts a cross on its meeting place.

But in the spiritual intimacy of friendship there is a church perhaps more New Testament than we might have considered. This church is about relationships not organization.

To say this is not to belittle the church on the corner nor its denominational parent because these associations of people and resources do massive amounts of good and much needed work. It takes people in harness together to open and manage a hospital, to envision and nurture an orphanage full of children, to write effective curricula for Sunday school.

But my point is that the church is more than an incorporated group, as fine as that might be, but is made of self-selected friends who break bread — spiritual, physical, and emotional — together.

New Stepfather Gets an Eyeful From Daughter Home on Break

Abigail Van Buren

SYNDICATED COLUMNIST

DEAR ABBY: I have a beautiful 20-year-old daughter. She's currently home from college for a break. She spends a great deal of time in our back yard sunning by the pool and swimming. This is fine, but my concern is that she's doing it in the nude.

Now I am far from a prude, Abby, and do most of my own sunning and swimming in the nude as well. My concern is that I am recently remarried, and my daughter doesn't bother to cover up when my new husband is home. She seems just as comfortable nude in front of him as she is in front of me. This seems odd, because this is only the third or fourth time my daughter has met him.

I am further conflicted because my husband obviously enjoys looking at my daughter while she's naked. She has a great body. My husband has been constantly aroused, and this has been leading to some of the best sex I have ever had. When I thought we were falling into a rut, all of a sudden we're making love twice a day. I love it!

My daughter is home for one more week. I'm not sure whether to say anything to her or not. I'm certainly enjoying the side benefit of her exhibitionism. Should I just enjoy this week knowing that she'll be back at summer school soon?

CONFUSED BUT ENJOYING

DEAR CONFUSED: Speak up now. By allowing this to continue, you are playing with dynamite. While your daughter has probably learned the habit of swimming and sunbathing in the nude from you, the fact that she is doing this in front of your new husband — whom she has only recently met — is extremely inappropriate.

Consider the future. What if your daughter decides to spend other vacations with you? You won't be able to let your husband out of your sight. And if he surprises you, and turns out to be capable of making love three times a day, it could mean the end of your marriage.

DEAR ABBY: I have just finished reading the letter from the woman whose father-in-law is giving her the cold shoulder because she refused to take her infant on his rickety old boat after he had a couple of beers — and without an infant life jacket!

I once worked in a maritime law firm. One of my jobs was typing notes into computer files. About 80 percent of the boating accidents were alcohol-related. More than half resulted in deaths, paralysis, brain damage, lost limbs, etc.

Let that father-in-law stew. He was wrong, and she was right to put her own and her child's safety first.

SAFE ON PUGET SOUND

DEAR SAFE: If your letter doesn't convince people to wear lifejackets, and to refrain from mixing alcohol with boating, nothing will. Please, readers, have a safe and sane summer on our nation's waterways.

The Stars Show the Kind of Day You'll Have: 5-Dynamic; 4-Positive; 3-Average; 2-So-so; 1-Difficult

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
★★★★★ You radiate and draw others close. If there are any touchy situations you want to eradicate, do it. Discussions become high-level, with much mutual understanding. Gather with friends, visit a museum or go for a picnic at a favorite park. Tonight: Who cares if tomorrow's Monday?
This week: Take charge of finances. Skip over hurdles. Remember that there's no such thing as impossible.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
★★★ Sit back and let family or loved ones make the decisions. You don't always have to be in control. Relax and allow yourself to indulge. A partner could be changing. Be receptive. You just might like what you see! Closeness builds. Tonight: To many, you will be invisible!
This week: You beam, yet you cannot subdue the unpredictable. Use your great business and professional skills.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
★★★★★ No matter where you direct your efforts, they succeed. Knowing what you want helps, but also mix in some spontaneity. Laugh with friends. Get into a favorite sport or pastime. You spread your wings. Be especially nice to someone who is undergoing personal changes. Tonight: The party goes on.
This week: Check out all information before deeming it fact. Break past others' logic.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
★★★ Reorganize your desk, pull weeds or tackle an unfinished task; you'll relax more afterward. Make a point of inviting friends or an older relative over. Show off your most recent home project. Don't worry about others chipping in. Tonight: Your opinion is sought.
This week: Aim high. Ignore a partner who could be demoralizing. Work independently for now.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
★★★★★ You flourish when your mind wanders. Meet a friend at a favorite but distant spot, or take in a movie. You could be exaggerating the implications of a comment or action of a friend or loved one. Detach. Give people the benefit of the doubt. Tonight: Go exotic.
This week: Take charge. Don't let your personal opinions interfere with your professional life.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
★★★★★ Take time with a loved one. Share some of your long-term fantasies that involve him. Think about where you want to go in the future. A new domestic situation might be very nice. You have changed a lot. Get together with loved ones. Tonight: Make someone feel very important.
This week: Reach out and seek answers. Absorb the bumps. You'll ultimately gain.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
★★★★★ Others take the lead. An offer comes in that feels too good to be true. Bring up a suggestion for conversation. You'll gain from different opinions. Don't feel that you need to defend yourself or the idea. Flow with spontaneity. Tonight: Let another decide.
This week: Mobilize a partner. Work as a team. Be smart and walk away from wild risks.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
★★★★ You might need more relaxation than others do right now. Someone does his best to pique your interest. Still, you might not be ready to take off. Acknowledge his caring. Finances might stop you from doing what you want to do. Consider putting in some overtime. Tonight: Get a head start on tomorrow.
This week: Others hold the cards. Play along. Your time will come on Thursday.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
★★★★★ Your ideas delight others. Wherever you go, you are greeted by fun and smiles. Another clearly appreciates you and wants more. If single, someone you meet could become very important. Indulge, delight and enjoy friends and family. Tonight: Be spontaneous.
This week: Dig into work and ignore flak. Your effectiveness wins kudos.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
★★★★ Remain direct with family. A personal problem bothers you. Discuss it with a dear friend or partner who helps you gain perspective. Others mean well, and they demonstrate their feelings. Opt for a get-together close to home, or invite others over. Tonight: Relax at home with friends.
This week: Dig into your bag of tricks. You'll find the right answer. Hold that thought!

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
★★★★★ Don't stand on ceremony — make that call. Another is only too delighted to hear from you. Catch up on news. Confirm plans. You could be confused about a friendship; clear the air. Invite another to pitch in. You work well as a team. Tonight: Try a new restaurant.
This week: Avoid getting locked into conservative thinking. Thursday, you loosen up. Finally!

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
★★★★ You might believe you have to spend more than is necessary to show your caring. Use your ingenuity. You touch another on a very deep level. Make an effort toward someone you look up to, who might not be as contrary as usual. Communication flows. Tonight: Your treat.
This week: Expenses get out of whack. Be honest about what is ailing you. Handle the problem rather than spend, spend, spend.

PAMPA — There will be a 9-hole golf scramble at 6 p.m. Monday at the Hidden Hills public course.

The scramble, sponsored by the Hidden Hills Ladies Golf Association, is open to both men and women.

Entry deadline is Sunday. Entry fee is five dollars plus green fee and carts.

OLYMPICS

FEDERAL WAY, Wash. (AP) — Mark Ruiz earned a trip to the Olympics, saving himself with a brilliant final dive at King County Aquatic Center. Troy Dumais will be joining Ruiz in Sydney.

Ruiz, an overwhelming favorite at the U.S. Olympic trials, jumped from fourth to first in the 3-meter springboard with his last dive, a reverse, 3 1/2 somersault with a half-twist.

Ruiz's score of 98.70 was the best of the night. He finished with a total of 1,130.67 points to earn his first trip to the Olympics. Dumais claimed the other spot on the Olympic team with 1,120.32 points — even though he arrived at the pool less than two hours before the competition because of kidney stones.

BOXING

GLASGOW, Scotland (AP) — Lou Savarese, virtually a silent partner in Mike Tyson's second boxing venture in Britain, hopes to make some noise in the ring Saturday night.

"We plan on going into this fight and winning," said Savarese, who turns 35 on July 14.

The 6-foot-5 veteran of 42 fights (39-3, 32 knockouts) figures to give the former heavyweight champion a harder time than Julius Francis, who was stopped in the second round by Tyson on Jan. 29 at Manchester, England.

Those three losses, however, came in his last six fights, and hardly anyone gives Savarese a chance against Tyson, who has slowed but still maintains one-punch knockout power.

There was a good chance Savarese might not have returned to the ring if he had not be given an $850,000 chance against Tyson.

"It'll be a great fight," Tyson, who turns 34 next Friday, said.

Questions about the fight, however, were few and far between Thursday at the final news conference.

Reporters asked about Tyson's alleged altercation with promoter Frank Warren.

"I love Frank Warren," said Tyson, who denied he hit the promoter in a dispute over payment of jewelry he purchased when he was in London in January.

He also was asked if he threatened to throw Warren through a window.

"No sir," Tyson replied.

"Why?" someone shouted.

"Because there is a big line," a smiling Tyson said.

Warren did not attend the news conference.

Anne-Marie Hudson, a spokesperson for Warren, said he intended to fly to Glasgow after a meeting with his lawyers in London, but he missed his flight.

She said Warren plans to sue over some articles published about the alleged incident.

A London jeweler claims Tyson still owes $650,000 for jewelry, including a diamond encrusted watch, On Thursday, Tyson was served with legal papers.

It is known that Tyson expected Warren to pay for the jewelry and the promoter refused.

Tyson earned at least $8 million for stopping Francis in the second round, and he will earn another $8 million on Saturday.

Tyson also was asked how he felt about opposition from women's groups and members of the Scottish parliament to his fighting here.

Celanese slips by Cabot in City Tournament

PAMPA — Celanese won a close contest against Cabot 8-7 in Tuesday's early game in the Cal Ripken 11-12 City Tournament at Optimist Park.

Dylan Henley was the starting pitcher for Celanese.

Catcher Jake Craig got the first out for Celanese by picking off leadoff batter Brady Eakin trying to steal second after being hit by a pitch to get on first.

Cabot loaded the bases when Henley walked Michael Grajeda and Bradley Johnson, and an error by the first baseman allowed Grant Stucki to reach base. Henley was relieved by Logan Brown. He walked Dustin Kuhn to score Grajeda. Johnson and Stucki each scored on passed balls. Brown struck out the next two batters to get out of the inning.

Grant Stucki was on the mound for Cabot. He walked leadoff batter Adam Estrada, who advanced to second after Tyler Hall was hit by a pitch. Jake Craig hit a single to score Estrada. Henley reached first on a walk. With the bases loaded, Stucki went to work and struck out the next three batters.

Craig worked just as hard pitching for Celanese to walk only one and strike out three.

Stucki allowed a hard-hit double by Kenny Smith, then struck out the next batter. Estrada grounded out to first, and Hall grounded out to shortstop to make a short second inning.

Stucki started the third inning off for Cabot with a solid single and then went to second on an error by the left fielder. He eventually scored on passed balls. Craig walked two of the next five batters and struck out three to end the inning. Fired up, the heavy-hitting Craig cranked one over the center field fence for a home run to start the third inning. Henley followed with a single and was advanced to second when Logan Brown grounded out to first. Clay Jones reached first on a walk.

Both runners advanced a base on a ground out by Taylor Smith to first base. Both runners were left stranded when Stucki struck out the next batter.

In the top of the fourth, the top of the batting order came to the plate for Cabot. Tyler Hall walked Eakin, who stole second on a passed ball. Grajeda advanced Eakin with a single. Hall struck out the next batter, then allowed Stucki to score both runners with a hard-hit triple. Hall walked the next two batters and Stucki scored on a passed ball. Hall then ended the inning by striking out the next two.

Timmy Dudley started off for Celanese with a walk from Stucki. then advanced to second on an error by the Cabot shortstop. Dudley then stole third on a passed ball, but was thrown out at home by the third baseman on a fielder's choice grounder by Estrada. Estrada advanced to second on a passed ball, then was safe at third on a fielder's choice grounder by Hall. Craig walked to load the bases. Henley scored two on a double to left field. Stucki struck out the next batter for out number two. Craig scored when Clay Jones reached first on an error by the Cabot first baseman. Taylor Smith went to first on a catcher's interference call. Both Jones and Smith scored on passed balls. Timmy Watson was stranded on second after reaching base on an error by Cabot. Stucki struck out the next batter to end the inning.

Hall got down to business in the fifth by walking only one and striking out three. Johnson was left stranded on second after getting to base on an error by the Celanese third baseman.

Cabot was not giving up easy. Relief pitcher Dustin Kuhn walked Estrada, the leadoff batter. Hall hit a line drive to the first baseman who tagged the bag for the first out, then made a double play by throwing Estrada out at second. Craig reached first on an error by the shortstop. Henley hit a fly ball deep to left field, but Cabot fielder Alex Torres came up with the catch to end the scoreless fifth inning.

Hall really came up big for Celanese in the sixth by striking out the first two batters, walking the third, and striking out the fourth to end the game with the final score 8-7.

Celanese hitters were Jake Craig with an over the fence home run and a single, Dylan Henley double and single; Kenny Smith a double. Stucki led Cabot in hitting with a triple and single. Michael Grajeda had a single.

Berkman's 3-run shot helps Astros down LA

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston Astros manager Larry Dierker likes what he sees in Lance Berkman this season.

"He looks like a professional hitter, last year he looked like a guy who was just hanging on," Dierker said after Berkman's three-run homer in the first inning helped the Astros to a 6-3 victory over the Los Angeles Dodgers on Thursday night.

"He has a lot of power and is more disciplined at the plate than last year. He is sticking with a plan and trying to get pitches he can hit."

Berkman, who has seven home runs and 23 RBIs since being called up from AAA New Orleans on May 25, agrees with Dierker's analysis.

"It's just part of the maturing process. A lot of it is just getting the at-bats and getting to play every day," Berkman said.

"When you see a lot of pitchers, you learn to make adjustments. This is a game of adjustments."

Berkman was 3-for-3, matching his career high for hits in a game.

Scott Elarton went eight innings, his longest outing of the year, limiting the Dodgers to four hits, tying his season best.

Elarton (5-3) struck out six and walked only one while facing the Dodgers for the first time in his career.

Elarton allowed one earned run, also matching his best of the season, set May 4 at Chicago, as he ran his record to 4-0 at home.

"Outside of the walk and two hits he allowed in the fifth inning, that was about as good as you can pitch," Dierker said. "Elarton was outstanding. He had great command of his fastball and he kept it out of the hitting zone."

The Dodgers were impressed, too.

He throws in the low 90s, but the ball gets on you real quick," Gary Sheffield said.

Sheffield hit his fourth homer in three days against the Astros, raising his season total to 24 and extending his hitting streak to 12 games.

There have been 116 home runs in 34 games at Enron Field, just two short of last season's total in the Astrodome.

"The key is that I have been seeing the ball real good. When you swing at strikes, good things are going to happen. That's what I have been doing. I just want to ride it as long as I can," Sheffield said.

Marc Valdes got three outs for his first save since May 11, 1997, for Montreal. He allowed a run-scoring, double-play grounder to Chad Kreuter in the ninth.

Darren Dreifort (4-6) lost his third straight decision and for the fifth time in his last six. Dreifort, who had been 2-0 against Houston this year, gave up five runs — three earned — and five hits in seven innings.

Houston stopped a four-game home losing streak and ended the Dodgers' four-game road winning streak.

Berkman's first-inning homer followed walks to Craig Biggio and Jeff Bagwell.

Dreifort hit an RBI double in the fifth, but Julio Lugo's slow bouncer in the sixth went through the legs of Mark Grudzielanek at second for a two-run error that made it 5-1. Moises Alou had a run-scoring double in the eighth.

Notes: When Dreifort hit Chris Truby with a pitch in the second inning, it gave the Astros a major league-high 48 hit batters this season. ... The Dodgers' bullpen had gone 7 1-3 hitless innings before Berkman's eighth-inning single off Terry Adams.

Cardinals outslug Giants

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Craig Paquette's RBI single off the glove of reliever Mark Gardner gave the St. Louis Cardinals an 11-10 victory over the San Francisco Giants on Thursday night.

Gardner (4-3) hit Mark McGwire with a pitch to start the ninth and Eli Marrero pinch ran. Ray Lankford singled with one out and Paquette followed with a one-hopper to the mound that appeared to handcuff Gardner. But the ball squibbed away near the third-base line.

McGwire tied Mike Schmidt for seventh place on the career home run list, hitting No. 548 in the fourth inning.

Shawon Dunston's eighth-inning three-run homer brought the Cardinals back from a seven-run deficit to a 10-9 lead. Dunston also homered in the seventh and had a two-run double in the fifth.

Jeff Kent had a three-run homer to ignite the Giants' eight-run fifth against Pat Hentgen, and tied it at 10 with an RBI single off Dave Veres (1-2) in the ninth.

Dunston's sixth homer came on an 0-1 count against Felix Rodriguez and with an assist from left fielder Barry Bonds. Bonds made a leaping attempt at the wall, but the ball bounced off his glove and over the wall as Bonds sagged.

Hospice sets golf scramble

PAMPA — The BSA Hospice 10th annual Pampa Golf Scramble offers a day of fun, food and lively competition — all to benefit area hospice patients and their families.

The Hospice Scramble is set for Saturday, July 15 at Hidden Hills. Proceeds will help provide quality hospice care to local patients and their families, regardless of their ability to pay.

BSA Hospice invites area golfers to enjoy a great day of golf while benefiting their community. A registration fee of $40 per player includes green fee, cart, prizes, food and refreshments. Four-player teams will sign-in at 7 a.m. and tee off at 8 p.m. Teams will be flighted according to handicap by the Hidden Hills golf pro. Prizes will be awarded for first, second and third place scores in each flight.

Special prizes will be planned for Longest Drive and Closest to the Hole.

Golfers should contact David Teichmann at Hidden Hills Golf Course (806-665-6677) or Gayle Allston, BSA Hospice in Amarillo (806-212-8787).

Through sponsorships, the BSA Hospice Scramble provides an excellent opportunity for local business and industry to contribute to the community. By sponsoring a hole for $50 or a cart for $25, participants will help provide quality hospice care in the local area and showcase their company or service.

Geddes has 2-shot lead

WILMINGTON, Del. (AP) — Two of the best scores on the first day of the LPGA Championship came from Jane Geddes and Pat Bradley, somewhat surprising considering their minds were on other matters.

Geddes, who made a hole-in-one for a 5-under 66, hasn't won on the LPGA Tour in six years and devotes much of her time these days to an Internet company she is starting, with hopes of moving on to another career.

She pried herself away from San Diego, where Planesia.com is moving into a new office this week, and found herself with a 2-shot lead at DuPont Country Club.

"It was kind of ironic, thinking how to make this transition, how many tournaments will I play in the year," Geddes said. "And now, I'm out there leading a major. It's silly."

Among those at 68 is Bradley, a Hall-of-Famer who won this tournament 14 years ago to become the first woman to complete the LPGA's modern career Grand Slam. Lately, the only reason she looks at a leader board is to scout potential players she will captain in the Solheim Cup this fall.

"I do find myself mentally wandering a little bit and watching other players' scores, which I never really dealt with for most of my career," Bradley said.

Also at 3-under 68 were Tracy Hanson, Gloria Park and Betsy King, another member of the Hall of Fame who has won twice this year.

Gonzalez headed to New York?

By ADAM NAZIMOWITZ
Associated Press Writer

The last multiple-award winner the New York Yankees acquired hasn't worked out the way they wanted. They hope to have better luck with two-time AL MVP Juan Gonzalez.

Roger Clemens, the five-time Cy Young Award winner acquired by New York from Toronto before the 1999 season for left-hander David Wells, reliever Graeme Lloyd and second baseman Homer Bush, has not lived up to expectations.

The Yankees and Tigers agreed Thursday to a tentative trade that would send Gonzalez to New York. He would have to waive his no-trade clause, then agree to a contract extension within a 72-hour window, which isn't likely to happen.

Clemens decided if he couldn't beat the Yankees, who won two of three World Series before they got him, he would join them.

But Clemens has struggled in New York, landing on the disabled list both seasons, while Wells continues to excel in Toronto.

Wells improved to 12-2 this season and 29-12 in two seasons with the Blue Jays, allowing two runs — one earned — and seven hits in seven innings of a 7-4 victory over Detroit. He struck out seven and walked two in winning his fifth straight decision.

Toronto and New York are a half-game behind Boston in the AL East after the Red Sox defeated the Yankees 4-2 Thursday night.

"They're not playing like they've played the last couple of years. I think we're better," Wells said. "It doesn't matter who they acquire. I don't care how good you are. If you don't have good pitching, you are not going to win. Just ask Cleveland."

In other AL games, it was Minnesota 3, Texas 2; Chicago 6, Cleveland 0; Anaheim 4, Kansas City 3; and Seattle 11, Baltimore 4.

Clemens is 18-16 with the Yankees following consecutive Cy Young seasons with Toronto. His ERA was 4.60 last season and is 4.76 this year.

"George wanted a publicity thing. Roger can draw some fans," Wells said. "He got a great pitcher, but unfortunately Roger is having a tough time. He's on the DL. That's their dilemma. I'm moving on, and I'm doing what I love to do."

Yankees rookie Jake Westbrook failed for the second time in as many chances. The right-hander gave up four runs and six hits in 2 2-3 innings against Boston.

Nomar Garciaparra had a pair of doubles to raise his major league-leading batting average to .396, and Ramon Martinez pitched 6 2-3 strong innings as Boston earned a split of the four-game series.

"You know George Steinbrenner is never shy about using his pocketbook, especially when he thinks he needs to do it to win," said Red Sox first baseman Mike Stanley, a former Yankee. "But we're in first place. Who says we need to do anything?"

Ben Ford will make his major league debut for the Yankees on Friday night against the White Sox, who swept four games at Yankee Stadium last weekend.

"It's unfortunate. After beating Pedro (Martinez) on Tuesday, we had visions of three, maybe four," Yankees manager Joe Torre said. "We got a little greedy. Two-two is disappointing. It feels like we lost the series."

Twins 3, Rangers 2

Butch Huskey scored from second as a teammate was caught in a rundown in the top of the ninth, lifting Minnesota over Texas.

Huskey doubled off Tim Crabtree (1-4) leading off the ninth and pinch-hitter Denny Hocking walked. Chad Moeller grounded to second base, and Hocking avoided the tag of Frank Catalanotto, who threw to first to retire Moeller. Hocking was caught in a rundown on first baseman Rafael Palmeiro's throw to second, but Huskey alertly rounded third and slid under the tag of Ivan Rodriguez for the winning run.

LaTroy Hawkins (2-2) retired the last batter in the eighth. Bob Wells got the last two outs for his fourth save.

Rodriguez hit his 23rd homer for Texas.

White Sox 6, Indians 0

Cal Eldred pitched a seven-hit shutout, his first in three years, and won his seventh straight as Chicago split a four-game series at home.

The White Sox moved 7 1/2 games ahead of the Indians in the AL Central.

Eldred (9-2) beat the Indians for the third time this season, defeating Chuck Finley (5-5).

Royals 4, Angels 3

Tim Belcher limited visiting Kansas City to one hit in the first six innings for his first win in eight decisions against the Royals.

Belcher (2-0) left with no outs in the seventh after giving up three runs and three hits.

Anaheim's Bengie Molina's two-run homer tied it at 2 in the second, and the Angels took a 4-2 lead in the third against Jay Witasick (1-7).

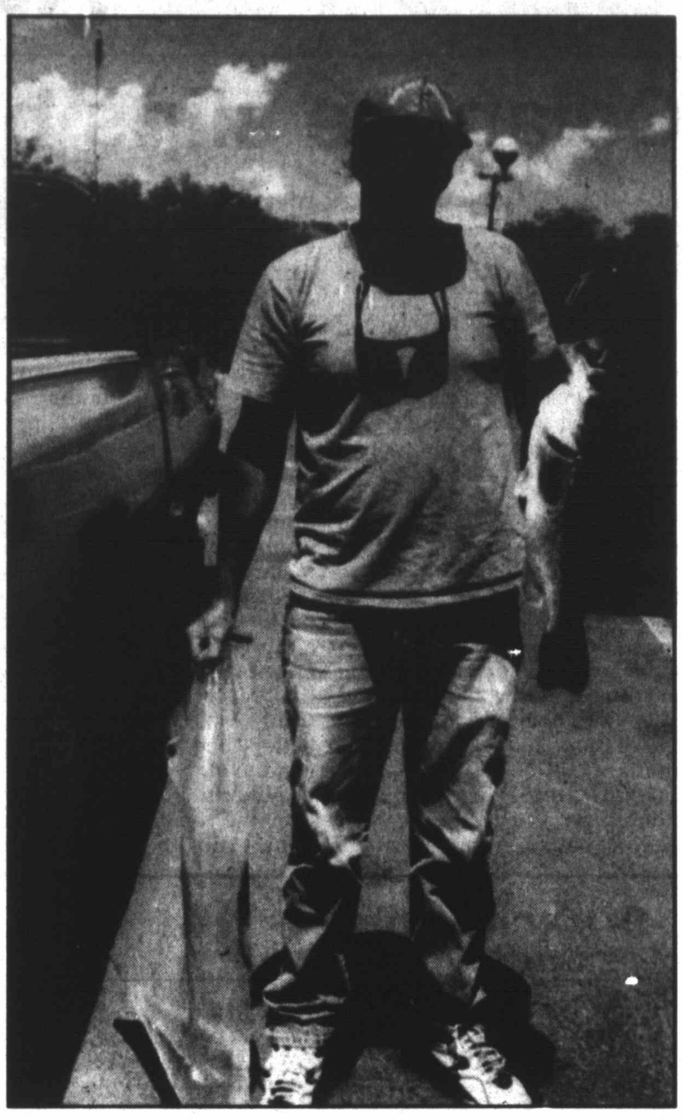

Mariners 11, Orioles 4

Jay Buhner hit a three-run homer in the second inning at Safeco Field, and Jamie Moyer (6-2) beat Baltimore for the 10th straight time.

Edgar Martinez hit his sixth career grand slam in the eighth, giving him a major league-leading 77 RBIs.

The Mariners, swept in a three-game series in Baltimore in May, won their third straight and fifth in six games. The Orioles dropped their sixth in a row.

Bassmasters hold Meredith tourney

Danny Hathcoat was the Big Bass winner with this 4.57- pound catch at Lake Meredith.

AMARILLO — The Top Of Texas Bassmasters held a tournament at Lake Meredith May 20-21.

The first-place team was Jimmy Corley and Tommy Sutton with 21.33 pounds. Second-place team was Steve and Maxine Stauffacher with 10.08 pounds. Third-place team was Floyd Lott and Bill Crook with 10.02 pounds.

Danny Hathcoat took Big Bass with a 4.57-pound black bass.

Club meetings are held the first Tuesday of each Month. New members are welcome and can fish one tournament as a guest for Big Bass before joining.

Anyone intertested may call Bill Crook at 669-2764.

FLORENCE, Ala. — Texan Clark Wendlandt, 34, will join America's elite sports heroes as a cereal box icon after winning the 2000 Land O' Lakes Angler of the Year award Thursday on Pickwick Lake. The award was presented during the Wal-Mart FLW Tour's $1 million Forrest Wood Open presented by Kellogg's.

In addition to gracing the cover of Kellogg's brand Corn Flakes and Frosted Mini-Wheats boxes, Wendlandt will receive $25,000 and a Johnson or Evinrude-powered Rangers 518 VX bass boat. Should he win the Forrest Wood Open, which runs through Saturday, Wendlandt will receive an additional $200,000.

Wendlandt is the second angler to ever be featured on Kellogg's boxes. David Walker of Cannon, Ky., the 1999 Angler of the Year, was the first.

Dennis Miller joins Monday Night crew

NEW YORK (AP) — What's next, Chris Rock at the British Open?

In a bid to reverse sliding ratings, ABC Sports brought aboard Dennis Miller as part of a drastic reworking of its "Monday Night Football" broadcast team.

Yes, THAT Dennis Miller — the former regular on "Saturday Night Live" and host of his own HBO comedy show. The Dennis Miller known for his sarcastic rantings and obscure references.

Hall of Fame quarterback Dan Fouts, a reserved analyst with experience calling NFL and college football, will also join play-by-play announcer Al Michaels — the lone holdover from last season — in the broadcast booth.

Miller's "role will not be to do Xs-and-Os, nor will it be to do stand-up comedy," Don Ohlmeyer, the show's producer, said Thursday. "Our goal was to try and put together a team that has distinctive voices, distinctive personalities, distinctive points of view."

Eric Dickerson, like Fouts a member of the Pro Football Hall of Fame, and ESPN's Melissa Stark join the show as sideline reporters, replacing Lesley Visser.

Housecleaning at "Monday Night Football" began in March, when color analyst Boomer Esiason was fired after two seasons, and Ohlmeyer, the show's producer in the 1970s, was brought back.

Ohlmeyer, who hand-picked the new crew, had vowed to get viewers talking about the show the way they did when Howard Cosell and Don Meredith were on ABC's NFL team.

Miller's selection might do just that — at the risk of alienating viewers who prefer their football announcers with a background in the game.

"We want a telecast that's relevant, successful and unpredictable," Ohlmeyer said. "If it doesn't work out, no amount of buzz will save us."

The Nielsen ratings for "Monday Night Football" have decreased each of the past five seasons, from an average of 17.8 with a booth of Michaels, Dan Dierdorf and Frank Gifford in 1994, to last season's record-low for the program of 13.7 with Michaels and Esiason. A rating point represents 1 percent of U.S. TV homes.

"'Monday Night Football' was not as special as it used to be and that's why we've taken the dramatic steps we've taken," ABC Sports president Howard Katz said. "We wanted to remove some of the sameness. We wanted to reinvent a little bit."

About 20 people were in contention for each of the new spots in the booth, and auditioned by "calling" a tape of last year's AFC playoff game between Buffalo and Tennessee with Michaels.

Bombastic talk show host Rush Limbaugh was "seriously considered," Ohlmeyer said, adding, "I'm hopeful that Rush will do some appearances for the show in some capacity."

Miller insisted he would not try to dominate the air time.

"I'm going to try to stay in the background and ask questions a fan would ask," Miller said. "The rants are my HBO show and I won't try to recreate that. I'm going to try to integrate myself in a three-man scheme."

The new trio will start working together next week, Ohlmeyer said, and the show returns to the air Sept. 4, with Denver playing Super Bowl champion St. Louis.

Bird turns down Pacers' offer to stay

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Larry Bird, who coached the Indiana Pacers for three years and turned down an offer to take a front-office job with the team, plans to spend at least a year away from basketball.

"With Larry, once he tells you something, that's it," Indiana Pacers president Donnie Walsh said Thursday after announcing Bird's decision to leave.

"It was something that was well-stated and understood by the team," Jalen Rose said. "So it wasn't something we always came up to him about. We just wanted to go out and win a championship for him."

The Pacers came close this year, losing to the Los Angeles Lakers in six games in the NBA Finals.

Bird, given an option of succeeding Walsh as team president after Walsh retired, said in February he was "90 percent" certain he would retire altogether. He later backed off that, but after the loss to the Lakers, he said he was leaning toward returning to his home in Naples, Fla., where he and his wife already have enrolled their children in school for the fall.

"I want to take some time off to rest, spend time with my wife and kids, then decide what to do," Bird said. "The last three years have been a great experience. While our goal was to win a championship, I'm still very proud of what the players accomplished."

The three coaching candidates Walsh already has talked to are Pacers assistant Rick Carlisle; Sacramento assistant Byron Scott, a former Pacers player; and Hall of Famer Isiah Thomas, who played at Indiana University.

"I know the three candidates are all people who could do a good job, given the opportunity," Rose said. "So it just basically boils down to who Donnie thinks can do the best job for the future of the franchise.

"The fact is, we want somebody that's going to come in and help us win, and somebody that's going to bring an exciting style of play that the fans can come and enjoy," he said. "We want to win the championship, and we want to win a lot of games."

Walsh said there are no frontrunners for the job, which could take several weeks to fill.

"I'm not putting any deadlines on it. I've talked to three candidates who know what the team is, know who the players are," he said. "Everyone seems to think the draft is some magic time when we have to have a coach in place. I don't anticipate that at all."

The NBA draft is next Wednesday, and the Pacers have the 27th pick in the first round.

"There's a lot of draft work to be done because we ended so late, so we have to catch up with that as well. So it's going to be a very busy week," Walsh said.

Besides finding a new coach, Walsh also must deal with six free agents, including Rose, Reggie Miller, Mark Jackson and Rik Smits, all starters. Austin Croshere and Sam Perkins, two of the top reserves, also will become free agents on July 1.

Walsh said Bird told him Wednesday he would not take a job in the front office.

"The way he put it to me, he really didn't know what his plans were going to be after that, but right now he just wants to take time off and think about it," Walsh said. "He thought it was a great experience, but he's not ready to commit to go forward in the future. I'm really sorry to hear that, because I would have loved to have him here."

Texas girls lose Oil Bowl opener

WICHITA FALLS, Texas (AP) — Round 1 of the Texas-Oklahoma girls basketball series went to Oklahoma Thursday evening.

The Oklahoma all-stars defeated the Texas all-stars 68-62 in the second Oil Bowl girls basketball game. The showdown was the first between Texas and Oklahoma.

Texas fell into a sticky situation early, falling behind 13-0 in the first quarter, but the team battled back. Oklahoma was able to fight off each Texas comeback with a sound offensive game and a smart defensive attack.

"We had to keep things interesting," Oklahoma coach Cherie Myers said. "We had a lot of fun, and we enjoyed the hospitality."
