Snow takes bloom off peach crop

Associated Press

Central Texas peach growers say one of the best peach crops in recent years has been nipped in the bud by unseasonably cold weather that included a surprise snowfall across portions of North Texas.

Some very light snow fell in the Port Arthur-Orange area of Southeast Texas late Sunday and early today as the state remained under the grip of a strong Arctic cold front.

Record low temperatures for March 30 were expected across a vast area of Texas by dawn today with most areas expecting even colder temperatures by dawn Tuesday.

In Amarillo, the temperature was a record 12 degrees at 5:45 a.m., compared with the old record of 15 degrees, set in 1926. Wichita Falls had a record 23 degrees, compared with the old record of 27 degrees set in 1973.

Frank Muller, a peach grower at Stonewall, west of Austin, said growers are bracing for even colder temperatures tonight.

"It doesn't look good," Muller said. "The front caught us by surprise."

Muller said the 2,500 acres of peach orchards at Stonewall have been in full bloom since March 10 and growers were anticipating a record May harvest when the cold weather hit.

The cold front dropped temperatures into the upper 20s across the Hill Country to San Angelo. The temperatures should climb into the low to mid-50s today, dropping back to the low 30s to upper 20s Monday night, the National Weather Service says.

"We were really loaded this year. It looked like a top yield," Muller said.

Some growers said they checked their peaches Sunday and found they had been damaged by the cold.

The full extent of the damage will not be known until there is a warming trend and a day or two of sunshine, growers said.

Milton Jung, a major peach grower in Gillespie County near Fredricksburg, said Sunday it appears his 250 acres of peach trees appear to be wiped out.

"Our loss will probably be close to $300,000," Jung said.

Jung said his partnership's anticipated crop of 20,000 bushels of peaches apparently was lost.

The local forecast for tonight calls for fair skies and a low temperature in the upper 20s. Winds will be light and variable.

Tuesday will be sunny with the high in the upper 60s. Winds will be from the south at 10 to 20 mph.

Jimmy Dean Rudd loner, not rebel

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Jimmy Dean Rudd was just 12 years old when James Dean died in a 1955 California sports car crash, but like so many 50s youths, he identified with the troubled star of "Rebel Without a Cause."

"I always thought of myself many times as a loner, so I was identified back in those days when I was 15, 16, as a rebel," Rudd says. "I wasn't a rebel though, I was just a loner."

These days, state Representative Jim D. Rudd is far from a rebel. As chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, the 44-year-old Brownfield Democrat is a key member of Speaker Gib Lewis' team.

Although he spends most of his long days in a committee room crammed with lawmakers, bureaucrats and reporters, Rudd still feels like a loner sometimes.

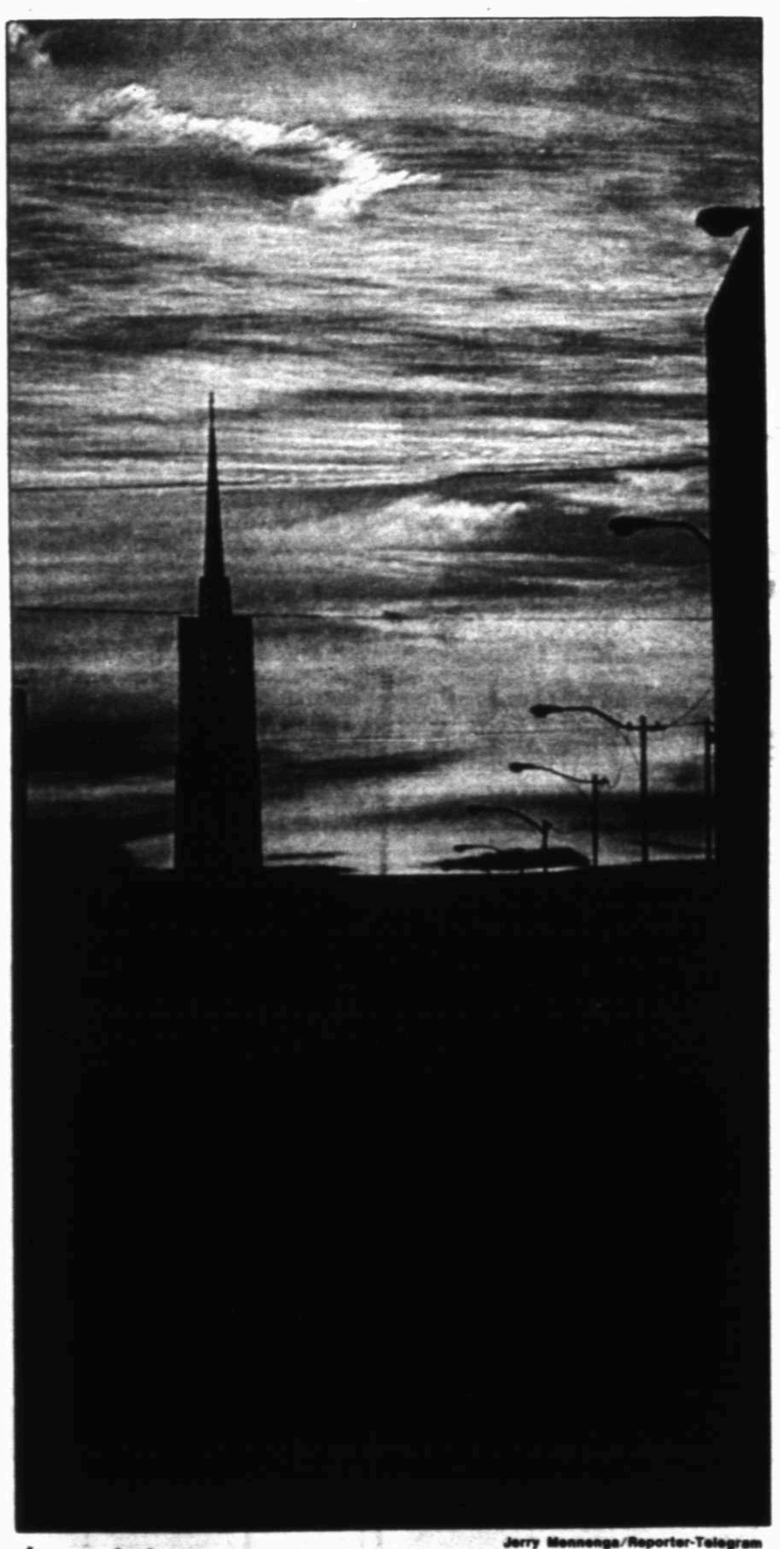

"I have heard from the committee, the more moderate or liberal side, 'Rudd, you've got to hold the conservatives down. We can't cut and butcher this up,'" he says. "On the other side I'm hearing, 'Rudd, the liberals and moderates are getting too much in the budget.'

"And I'm sitting in the middle getting both sides of this within this body. Because both sides are saying the other side's getting too much and I'm not balancing it right. It is a balancing effect, it really is, and that's what you try to do."

First elected to the House in 1976, Rudd was still a freshman when then-Speaker Billy Clayton appointed his fellow West Texan to the budget writing committee two years later. Early in 1984, when Chairman Bill Presnal resigned to take a management job at Texas A&M, Lewis tapped the level-headed Rudd to run the committee, perhaps because his eight-county district along the New Mexico border includes no state institutions that might sway his objectivity.

While Presnal reigned over a decade of plenty, Rudd has held the purse strings for three years of dwindling state revenues and growing state needs. Since he took over, the 29-member panel has met almost continuously — through regular and special sessions — working ever harder to balance the budget.

Spy recruiter quits Israeli air force

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — A top air force officer was quoted today as acknowledging he recruited Jonathan Jay Pollard to spy for Israel but that he did not consider it a mistake and resigned only because "America wants a head."

Lt. Col. Aviem Sella on Sunday resigned his command of Israel's most prestigious air base, Tel Nof, citing his concern for deteriorating U.S.-Israeli relations over the Pollard affair.

Sella, 46, was indicted in the United States this month on espionage charges. His appointment March 3 to command Tel Nof angered U.S. officials who interpreted it as a reward for his role in the Pollard affair.

The mass circulation newspaper Yediot Ahronot today quoted Sella as saying he recruited Pollard and passed him on to Rafael Eitan, head of the Defense Ministry's Scientific Liaison Bureau.

"Yes, I recruited Pollard. He came to me, and I passed him on to Rafi Eitan. I did not do more than that," Sella was quoted as saying in the interview, conducted last Friday.

"I don't think I made a mistake ... I did only what any other (Israeli) Jew would have done," Sella was quoted as saying. He was quoted as saying his contact with Pollard was limited to recruitment because controlling a spy was the job of the secret services.

He also was quoted as saying he was reluctant to leave his post but that "America wants a head."

Pollard, a 32-year-old American Jew and former civilian analyst for the U.S. Navy, was sentenced to life in prison March 4 for selling Israel hundreds of classified U.S. military documents in 1984-85.

The Israeli military spokesman's office had no immediate comment when asked to confirm Sella's reported comments. Sella could not immediately be reached for comment.

Police probe robberies of store, restaurant

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

Police have a suspect in the Sunday night aggravated robbery of a fast food restaurant, while a 33-year-old Midland man stabbed following a later theft at a convenience store was hospitalized and in stable condition.

According to reports, a clerk at the Taco Bell, 210 N. Midkiff Road, told police a man wearing a stocking over his head entered the store about 9:40 p.m.

The suspect ordered an employee to "get the money," forced another employee to lie down, and threatened to shoot them with a black automatic pistol he displayed, police said.

The man took money from the cash registers, as well as two money bags, and left through an east side back door, reports said.

The man was described as a black male, five feet six inches tall with a stocky build, wearing a red shirt, dark pants, and a black jacket. Shortly after the robbery, a man matching the description was questioned and remains a suspect, police said.

Police also are investigating the robbery of a 7-Eleven store, 1112 S. Midland Drive, just before midnight, and a stabbing that occurred after the boyfriend of the clerk chased two men.

According to reports, Jackie Dale Perkins, 33, was stabbed after he chased two Hispanic men who allegedly stole two 12-packs of beer from the store.

Elections 87

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the second in a five-part series on Saturday's city, hospital district and school district elections. Today's article is an overview of Greenwood Independent School District balloting.

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Word has it that Greenwood got its name from two pastors — one named Green, the other, Wood — who wandered across east Midland County preaching wherever they were welcome, including a saloon.

That was more than a hundred years ago.

The only people doing any preaching in Greenwood these days — besides ordained ministers — are candidates running for election to the Greenwood Independent School District Board of Trustees.

Greenwood's election may be the "hottest" race around, with two of the three trustee races being contested.

Only incumbent James R. Brooks has no opposition in a bid to regain his Place 3 trustee position.

Ted Benton, GISD Place 4 Trustee, faces three men vying for his office. They are Leroy Ledford, Harry Tanner and Stanley Reed.

Two others are attempting to oust incumbent Charles Gardner from his Place 5 spot. They are LaDean Massey and Paul Sims.

Tort reform: Change in 'open courts provision' first step

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the second in a seven-part series on proposed tort reform currently being considered in the Texas Legislature. This segment deals with a constitutional amendment to the Texas Bill of Rights.

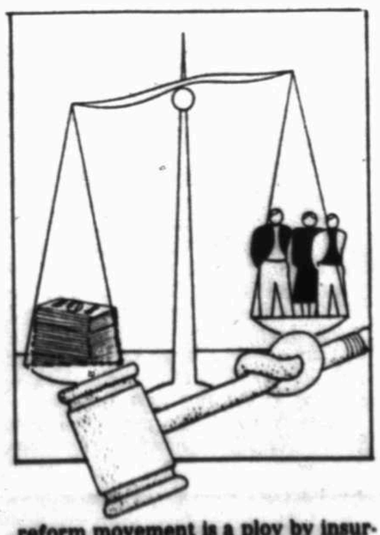

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

"All courts shall be open, and every person for an injury done him in his lands, goods, person or reputation, shall have due course of law."
— Article 1, Section 13, Texas Constitution

The tort reform debate began in earnest earlier this month and already has kept its promise of being one of the Legislature's toughest issues — with doctors, businesses, cities, engineers and others lining up against trial lawyers, labor unions and consumer groups.

Tort reform proponents want to limit what injured people can receive in court judgments, whom they can receive damages from and when and where they can sue.

On the other side are attorneys who represent injured plaintiffs, consumer groups and some labor organizations. They say the whole tort reform movement is a ploy by insurance companies to keep injured people from collecting what they deserve.

But before lawmakers can work on other reforms, those favoring changes in the tort system say there must be a constitutional amendment to change the Texas Bill of Rights "open courts provision," which they say the Supreme Court has used to throw out laws the Legislature passed but that pro-plaintiff justices didn't like.

Tort reformers claim the open courts amendment will tell the courts: The law is what lawmakers say it is.

Opponents say revising the open courts provision would be a mistake and would take power away from one branch of government — the judiciary — and give it to another — the legislative.

They say the Legislature can fine-tune tort laws without taking away constitutional guarantees.

Under Senate Joint Resolution 3, pre-filed last summer by Sen. Grant Jones, D-Abilene, the Legislature would define "the concept of open courts and remedy by due course of law to the fullest extent permitted by the United States Constitution."

Jones, co-chairman of a special legislative committee studying tort law and liability insurance, said in a letter to former Gov. Mark White that the Texas Supreme Court would void some tort reform efforts because of the open courts provision.

The Supreme Court has misapplied the open-courts provision, Jones said, and has expanded the scope of lawsuits despite objections from lawmakers.

Jones predicted the Supreme Court would strike down or ignore some of the current tort reform proposals — for instance, limits on non-economic damages like pain and suffering, mental anguish and punitive damages — under the open courts rule.

The Texas Civil Justice League and other proponents believe this amendment is critical because of the Texas Supreme Courts' aggressive legislative interpretations.

"The current court has written more tort law in the last three years than the Texas Legislature has in the last 30 years," said TCJL spokesman Bill Messer.

While the Legislature should not lightly repeal fundamental rights, juries must also be educated in all aspects of a case to balance the scales, said Midland County Attorney Mark Dettman.

But Texas trial lawyers like Edward Garza of Midland say a grave injustice will be done if the insurance industry is permitted to destroy the system of trial by jury.

"The jury system has always been our guide and conscience," Garza said. "The system is not broken; it certainly does not need to be fixed."

Odessa Attorney Ruff Ahders also defended the present system, saying "It's slow, it's cumbersome and it's difficult, but it's the best system in the world."

Also stirring debate in the Legislature are proposed changes in the state's judicial selection process.

The State Bar of Texas' survey of its membership's attitudes about the judicial selection process found that 56 percent said they favored non-partisan election of trial judges and 55 percent were for non-partisan election of appellate judges.

Thirty-one percent favored a system in which judges would be appointed by the governor, subject to approval by the State Senate. And 43 percent of those responded that they were for appointment of judges from a list submitted by a select panel.

Twenty-five percent supported the present, partisan elective system of judicial selection.

If an appointive system was adopted, nearly three-fourths of the lawyers voting said they supported retention elections for appointed judges, rather than life-time appointments.

Thirty-nine percent of the 18,136 lawyers and judges who were sent ballots responded to the State Bar-sponsored polls conducted by the San Jose opinion research firm of Stanley Baran.

State Bar President Bill Whitehurst has said the poll results indicate a sharp division of opinion among lawyers on what system of judicial selection would best serve Texas.

Supreme Court Chief Justice John Hill had urged the board of directors of the State Bar to include an appointive system of judges in its legislative proposals for 1987. The board rejected the recommendation, but set up the membership survey to determine if there was a consensus for a particular plan.

Any change in the judicial selection process would require a constitutional amendment, including a two-thirds vote of both Houses of the Legislature and a vote of the people.

Late last year, a Committee of 200 was announced as supporting an elected-judicial-selection system at an Austin news conference.

The committee, chaired by Austin Attorney Charles Herring Jr. and comprised of lawyers and nonlawyers throughout Texas, was formed to counter the Committee of 100 organized by Hill urging passage of the constitutional amendment.

TUESDAY: The proposed elimination of joint and several liability.

Cisneros, Hobby underscore state commitment to colonias

SAN JUAN (AP) — As part of his commitment to bring new industry to the Rio Grande Valley, San Antonio Mayor Henry Cisneros said he plans to call together business and government leaders from across the state.

"I've been asked to pull together statewide leaders," the mayor said. "I will go about it. I will do it."

Among them will be influential Dallas businessman H. Ross Perot, Cisneros said Sunday, because Perot has expressed concern about the the polarization of Texas.

He said Perot expressed the fear during a recent conversation that "if Texas is just high-tech in just a few major cities...we're going to miss the boat completely."

Cisneros and Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby were in this Rio Grande Valley community Sunday to follow up on promises they made to Valley Interfaith, a coalition of 34 churches and parishes, to improve conditions in the area.

In a speech to 1,500 members of Valley Interfaith, Hobby said $150 million in low-interest loans is available to bring water and sewage to colonias — unincorporated communities that suffer diseases more commonly found in the Third World than in contemporary rural Texas.

Hobby, who in 1985 told Valley Interfaith that $100 million in state funds would be set aside for colonia development, said after Sunday's meeting that Congress recently appropriated $111 million to clean up water in Texas.

Also, Hobby said, the Texas Water Development Board has sold $150 million worth of bonds to create a revolving fund to finance the kind of improvements needed in the Valley.

"It can come to the Valley if your local officials will apply for it. This money is available at very low rates of interest...but they can't get the money if they don't ask for it," Hobby told the group.

He said communities that could not afford to pay back the money — expected to be loaned at 3.5 percent to 4 percent — would not qualify for the loans.

The Texas Rural Water Task Force, in a report released in January following 18 months of study, concluded that up to 250,000 people in four Valley counties are living in colonias. The report said many of the residents have no sewage facilities and some are without water, electricity or gas service.

The study said the colonias "commonly have hand-dug pit latrines or privies" and that many of the subdivisions "suffer disease problems that more closely resemble Third World conditions than those of the rest of contemporary rural Texas."

Another study concluded it would cost from $100 million to $150 million to provide water and sewage systems to colonias in Hidalgo, Cameron and Willacy counties.

Hobby said South Texas needs a good infrastructure to attract industry and jobs. He pledged to fight any efforts in the Legislature to reduce or eliminate pre-kindergarten programs or increase class size.

The Valley has one of the highest unemployment and high school dropout rates in the nation.

Cisneros was questioned at Sunday's meeting about whether he plans to follow up on a promise he made last year to include the Valley in any efforts to improve economic conditions in South Texas.

"It's necessary to educate the rest of Texas and the leaders of corporations in the rest of Texas that we're part of Texas," Cisneros said. "We have to reverse this process of investing in certain regions and not in others."

Swaggart draws crowd despite denominational ills

LOS ANGELES (AP) — They came by the thousands, despite television, despite Saturday night dates, despite the sex scandal rattling the Assemblies of God. They came to hear the Rev. Jimmy Swaggart preach the Gospel.

And Swaggart is one TV evangelist who doesn't believe in going easy on his flock.

"Men are sinners," thundered the preacher from Baton Rouge, La. The fabric of society is unraveling. Salvation is only for those who accept Jesus as their personal savior and live the Ten Commandments.

He also pleaded with them to double their contributions, saying he needed $7 million to continue the work of Jesus.

On Sunday, Swaggart lamented the fact that it's taken word of a minister's sexual indiscretion to get the press interested in the evangelical ministry.

"If the news media got as excited as it has this last two weeks, think what it's going to do when the trumpet sounds and every child of the living God gets up and leaves this world."

His message comes wrapped in rousing gospel music, delivered in an atmosphere of joyous good fellowship, and the faithful respond. Swaggart's Los Angeles Crusade this weekend packed the Los Angeles Sports Arena: 12,000 on Friday, 16,000 on Saturday and 14,000 Sunday.

"It's exciting. It's love," said Dianne Finneran, explaining why religion for her is a full-time state of mind instead of a weekly duty.

"When you open your heart to Jesus everything changes," said Ms. Finneran, 37, a city water department employee who attends Christ Chapel in Walnut Valley. "I've been down in the pits, and he's changed my life so dramatically."

She joined the others who stood, hands raised heavenward, swaying to the strains of "How Great Thou Art."

Like others in the crowd, she said she feels hurt by the revelation that another television preacher, the Rev. Jim Bakker, hushed up a sexual encounter, and by the way the media and Bakker's fellow evangelists have responded.

"It's very sad, but it just goes to show you that man's going to fall," said Roy Tyler, 25, of Lomita.

"It's not for me to judge," said Shirley Blasingame, 64. "The Lord can turn it around and make it good."

Swaggart, already one of the top-rated preachers on television, suddenly popped up on news shows like ABC's "Nightline" after Bakker's fall.

Bakker's lawyer, Roy Grutman, accused Swaggart of leaking word of Bakker's 1980 fling in a Florida motel room with Jessica Hahn in hopes of taking command of the PTL ministry. Grutman warned Swaggart to back off, claiming there was "smellier laundry" of Swaggart's which might be disclosed.

GISD

Of concern to voters in the GISD is how to fund the district in the face of falling oil and gas valuations.

Officials cite the fact that more than 40 percent of the district's budget comes from oil and gas revenues. Everyone knows the state of that industry, hence the worry.

"The taxpayers are paying about all they can stand to pay," said Brooks, a farmer and 21-year veteran of the school board.

With state funding on the decline and House Bill 72 mandates creating a need for more funding, Brooks said board members may have to consider cutting money from athletics and other extracurricular activities to trim the budget.

"Sports and extracurricular activities are secondary to me," he said. "If it comes to that point, we may have to look at these areas."

The four candidates vying for the Place 4 seat agree that providing a solid education for Greenwood children should come first and foremost, but each has his own idea on how to do that.

"I feel our children are getting a fine education at Greenwood," said City of Midland fireman and pump service owner Leroy Ledford. "I would like to see that improved.

Ledford said he will work to establish programs that help children better prepare for college and other programs of higher education.

He said he doesn't favor a tax increase, but prefers spending cuts to balance the district budget.

"This is an area that needs to be looked into, and would be one of the first tasks I would want to check out," he said. "I can assure you if there is anything to be saved, I'll be for it. Our taxes are getting much too high."

Incumbent Ted Benton said six years on the board has prepared him well for the challenges facing GISD in the future.

Benton, owner of the Big 3 Tire store, said his primary responsibility as a school board member is to look out for the best interests of the school children and taxpayers.

While Benton hopes there won't be a need for a tax increase, he wouldn't rule one out, he said.

"No one is in favor of raising taxes, but we may have to maintain our schools," he said.

Benton called "imperative" board planning for future growth — even in tough economic times.

"I believe we have the best school district in Texas. It takes quality people on the school board to see that continues," he said.

For Reed, a field supervisor for Chevron Pipeline Co., ensuring the economic operation of the school district comes first.

Reed said that a concern for his own offspring's education has trickled down to include all GISD children.

"We must maintain the quality of life and education we've established. We are obligated to maintain the atmosphere of the school system within its economic limitations," he said.

Reed favors evaluating all existing programs to find areas that could be cut to save money, he said, adding that he would vote to raise taxes only as a last resort.

Tanner, a sales manager for a fiber glass company, said communication between the school board, administration, faculty, students and community is the key to effective GISD operations.

"There must be community support for our school and less (community) interference," he said. "Our teachers and administrators are hired to do a job and they must be given that chance."

Tanner said the oil industry is bound to turn around, and that means growth for Greenwood and the GISD.

What the school board must do in that case, he said, is "make GISD as attractive as possible. That will generate more revenue and improve the overall economic condition of the district."

Mrs. Massey, a Midland Independent School District teacher, said that "academic material should have priority in the budget.

"We're going to have to cut some fat...I'd like to see us concentrate on areas other than the classroom," she said.

Like her challengers, Mrs. Massey also recommended improved communication between the community and the GISD board.

One way to accomplish this goal would be organizing a school-community group such as Midland's Volunteers in Public Schools, she said.

"I've worked with parents groups in other states. It can work here too," she said.

Sims, production manager for Petromark Resources Co., said he's running for Place 5 to "see that the kids at Greenwood get the best possible education they can, to see that they have a good environment to learn in, to see that the teachers have a good environment to teach in and to see that everybody gets the equal opportunity that he or she deserves."

His oil business experience would help the GISD board because "most of our budget comes from taxes on the oil and gas industry."

Sims views the advantages and disadvantages of the school district's growth as the top priority of the board of trustees.

"The school district has grown from a 1A school to a 3A school in six years, while funding from the state has been cut. With the price of oil fluctuating up and down, we should be looking at other means of funding our programs," he said.

Incumbent Gardner, a service adviser for Friendly Pontiac, is running for another term because "I'm concerned about the direction our school is going and I'm also concerned about the direction our tax rate is going," he said.

"The next few months will be the most critical in the history of our school district due to the economy," said Gardner, noting that 55 percent of the district's revenues comes from taxes on the oil and gas industry.

Gardner predicted that GISD taxes would have to be raised 20 to 30 percent to generate the same amount of revenue budgeted in 1986-87.

"I can and I will work to keep that (a tax increase) from happening," he said.

Gardner said the most important issue remains ensuring that GISD children receive equal treatment.

"I want to see the average student have as many opportunities as the bright student, the slow student, the athlete, the school board member's child or the teacher's child.

"I moved to Greenwood because of the reputation of the school district, and I'd like to see it that good again," he said. "We've had some pretty strong leaders who built that reputation."

RESIGNS

Sella, who remains in the air force, said in his resignation letter he was stepping down because of "the worsening of Israeli-U.S. relations and my concern for the future of relations between the two countries and ties with U.S. Jewry."

He added, "If facts had been the only consideration, I would not have drawn the conclusion that I reached." He did not elaborate.

Sella said his decision was "personal and independent" and came despite numerous requests "from the general public and even American citizens who have expressed support and identification with me and have urged me to continue in my job."

According to Israeli newspapers, Sella was a top pilot and computer expert who won the Air Force Prize, one of its highest awards, for a program that jams enemy radar during combat. Colleagues described him as one of two or three candidates for air force commander.

Sella has faced little criticism in Israel for his role in the Pollard case, and his resignation drew wide praise.

"I expected it. He did what he had to do," Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir, of the right-wing Likud bloc, said on Israel radio. He declined to speculate when asked if others would resign.

RUDD

House and Senate colleagues use words like "hard working," "honest," "good natured" and "intelligent," when they describe Jim Rudd. Rep. Mark Stiles, D-Beaumont, says House members trust him.

"If he tells you it's Christmas, hang up your stocking," Stiles says.

"He's got the toughest job in the House — except for the speaker of course — particularly during these times when so many people blame him for cuts when in fact it's not him but, you know, external forces," says Rep. Mike Toomey, R-Houston, the House GOP leader for holding the line on state spending.

Rudd suffered mountains of blame during last summer's special sessions when he led the House budget-cutting forces against senators who wanted a tax increase to cure the then-$3.5 billion deficit. Rudd encountered reporters immediately after an emotional Senate hearing where the mother of a severely handicapped child said her son would die without the Department of Health's crippled children's program.

"That's not a critical service to me," he said, a statement that drew howls of protest statewide. Rudd still holds to his position but says it's not as hard-hearted as it sounds.

"The problem we have and the problems I think all governments are having at this time: how much can the people afford?" he says. "For all of those that live, I'm sure there's just as many right now that we could do some more for. But the problem is we just can't afford it.

"We could tax people 25 percent of their income and still couldn't reach all of them."

For the next week or two or three, Rudd and the committee will tackle their toughest job yet: deciding which of the state's needs are important enough to fit within Gov. Bill Clements' $25.8 billion bottom line on spending for 1988 and 1989. That's $3.1 billion less than what other House committees have recommended for appropriation.

Rudd's concern is that Clements' pledge to veto any more than $2.9 billion in new state taxes will force lawmakers to cut state aid to schools, junior colleges and health services, a "solution" that would give local officials no choice but to raise property taxes.

"By the end of April we'll have worked out or shown the governor a solution, a passable bill," he says, "or be in the position of asking him to re-evaluate what he said in light of the current situation, what we have shown him through the (budget) writing process."

Already, Rudd says, the committee has made preliminary cuts in licensing agencies, refusing their requests for more lawyers and investigators to track down consumer's complaints.

"The governor's in the wonderful position of saying, 'Well, I didn't tell 'em to do that, all I said was the bottom line,'" he says. "The problem is, in this sort of system you cannot look at a budget that Jim Rudd likes or Bill Clements likes, you look at a budget that 15 in this (committee) like and 76 down there (in the House) like."

Despite the long hours and notoriety, Rudd says he likes his job, for now.

"I like the fact that I'm kind of somewhat in the driver's seat of a big instrument or big something that's going somewhere, hopefully," he says. "I like the position, but it is very tiring and taxing and I don't think many people can imagine what it is to sit here and get the demands that you get."

With his attorney-wife at home caring for his law practice and his oldest daughter already a junior at Texas Tech, Rudd says thoughts of retirement are "starting to creep in." A run for Congress, something he "toyed with" in 1984, is also "not out of the question."

Despite, and partly because of, the tough times he inherited, Rudd says he's pleased with the imprint he's had on the state budget. "One of the things I've always thought, being a conservative person, is that government grows too fast, government spends too much," he says.

"We need to curtail that, we need to slow it down for the sake of taxpayers and the everyday public. I think I've done that."

For the record, Jimmy Dean Rudd, says he was named after neither the movie star nor the country singer-sausage king. "My mother wanted to name me 'James,' but she said nobody'd ever call me 'James.' I don't know where she got 'Dean.'"

SNOW

theirs look the same. There might be some left somewhere in the county, but I seriously doubt it."

Jung said temperatures dropped to 26-28 degrees Sunday and remained that cold for about 10 hours.

"It's hard to say right now if the damage is total, but it looks that way to me. If they're not totally wiped out now, they will be by (Monday) morning," he said.

Duery Menzies, county extension agent, said it was too early to tell how much damage the cold caused throughout the area. He said it would take a day or two before the total damage could be calculated.

"Right now we're in sort of a holding pattern," Menzies said.

Grape growers in the Texas Hill Country also worried that their crops might be damaged by the cold.

"Anytime you see a freeze this late, it's serious," said Ned Simes, a Hill Country grape grower.

He said it is probably already too late to protect the earlier budding grapevines that have six-inch shoots, saying he is more concerned about saving his watering system from costly breaks caused by the freeze.

A hard freeze was forecast early today for most of the eastern half of Texas and residents were warned to protect tender vegetation, pets and exposed water pipes.

Most of the snowfall had ended by early today, although some snow was falling during the early morning hours in extreme Northeast Texas.

The abnormally cold weather was blamed on a massive arctic high pressure ridge that stretched from southern Canada to South Texas.

In Austin, the temperature hit 34 on Sunday, tying a record for March 29 set in 1944, and weather officials said the March 30 record of 33 was also in jeopardy.

In records dating back as far as 1927, the weather service has never had a reported reading of freezing or below in Central Texas in the first part of the year, after March 28, officials said.

The frigid weather follows an unusually mild winter in Texas. Only six days of temperatures 32 or less were reported in Central Texas over the three months, with less than 24 hours total under the freezing mark.

The Panhandle has had snow for a week. Light snow and flurries fell Sunday across a large section of the rest of West Texas, North Texas, Central Texas and East Texas.

Sleet covered the ground in East Texas Sunday afternoon, and marble-size hail was reported near Carthage, as a narrow band of thunderstorms moved through.

ROBBERY

Police said Perkins was stabbed in the abdomen and leg after he confronted the two in an alley near Midland Drive. After the stabbing, the two men escaped in a gray Ford Thunderbird driven by another man, and Perkins was able to walk back to the store to await police and paramedics.

Reports said the store clerk, Pauline Kay, 31, was in the store vault when the two men entered the store at 11:50 p.m., grabbed the beer and fled. Perkins then chased them, police said.

The first suspect was described as five feet to five feet two inches tall with a medium to heavy build and wearing khaki pants. The second suspect was described as five feet 10 inches tall with a medium to heavy build. He had a mustache, and wore a black and red flannel shirt and blue jeans.

DISD policy may mean loss of TSTA convention

LUBBOCK (AP) — Dallas may lose the 1988 Texas State Teachers Association convention unless it rescinds a policy that forced almost half of the city's 52 delegates to miss the annual meeting.

Pauline Dixon, president of the Dallas TSTA affiliate, said Dallas' delegates to the convention were told they could not use professional-leave days to come to Lubbock despite a Dallas school board policy that authorizes such leave.

On a unanimous vote at the 108th annual TSTA gathering Saturday, more than 1,000 delegates gave the Dallas Independent School District six months to reverse the decision.

Otherwise, they said, TSTA will begin proceedings to relocate the group's 1988 convention away from Dallas. TSTA officials said $750,000 is a conservative estimate of the direct economic impact the group's convention has on a city.

Thirty of the Dallas' Classroom Teachers of Dallas delegates made the TSTA convention by using personal leave days still due them.

Ms. Dixon, president of the Dallas TSTA affiliate, said Dallas superintendent Linus Wright expressed personal support for the TSTA members, but followed legal advice in denying them a day off to attend. He said the district could be liable for improper use of tax money, she said.

"The Dallas school board should feel some pressure from this," said TSTA President Charles Beard. "We will try to negotiate with them as we tried to do all along to try to convince them that they've really made a mistake in this action that they've taken."

Wright was out of state and unavailable for comment Sunday, said his administrative assistant, Bob Johnston.

Bob Baker, past president of the Dallas teacher group, said the refusal to grant release time was merely another move in a long series of anti-teacher association actions by Dallas school officials.

"What happened in Dallas was that somebody wanted to play union-buster," he said.

Fort Worth art patron moving to Big Apple

FORT WORTH (AP) — Anne Hendricks Bass, autocrat of the arts, is moving to New York this summer, leaving the city's cultural officials wondering how they will fare in her absence.

Officials at the Fort Worth Ballet, which Ms. Bass rescued from bankruptcy two seasons ago, confirmed that the art patron is moving to New York at the end of the school year, the Fort Worth Star-Telegram reported Sunday.

Ms. Bass, 45, the wife of Fort Worth philanthropist and billionaire Sid Bass, refused to comment on her plans.

But ballet artistic co-director Nanette Glushak confirmed the move. "She's leaving and I think wants to break most of her ties here," Ms. Glushak said.

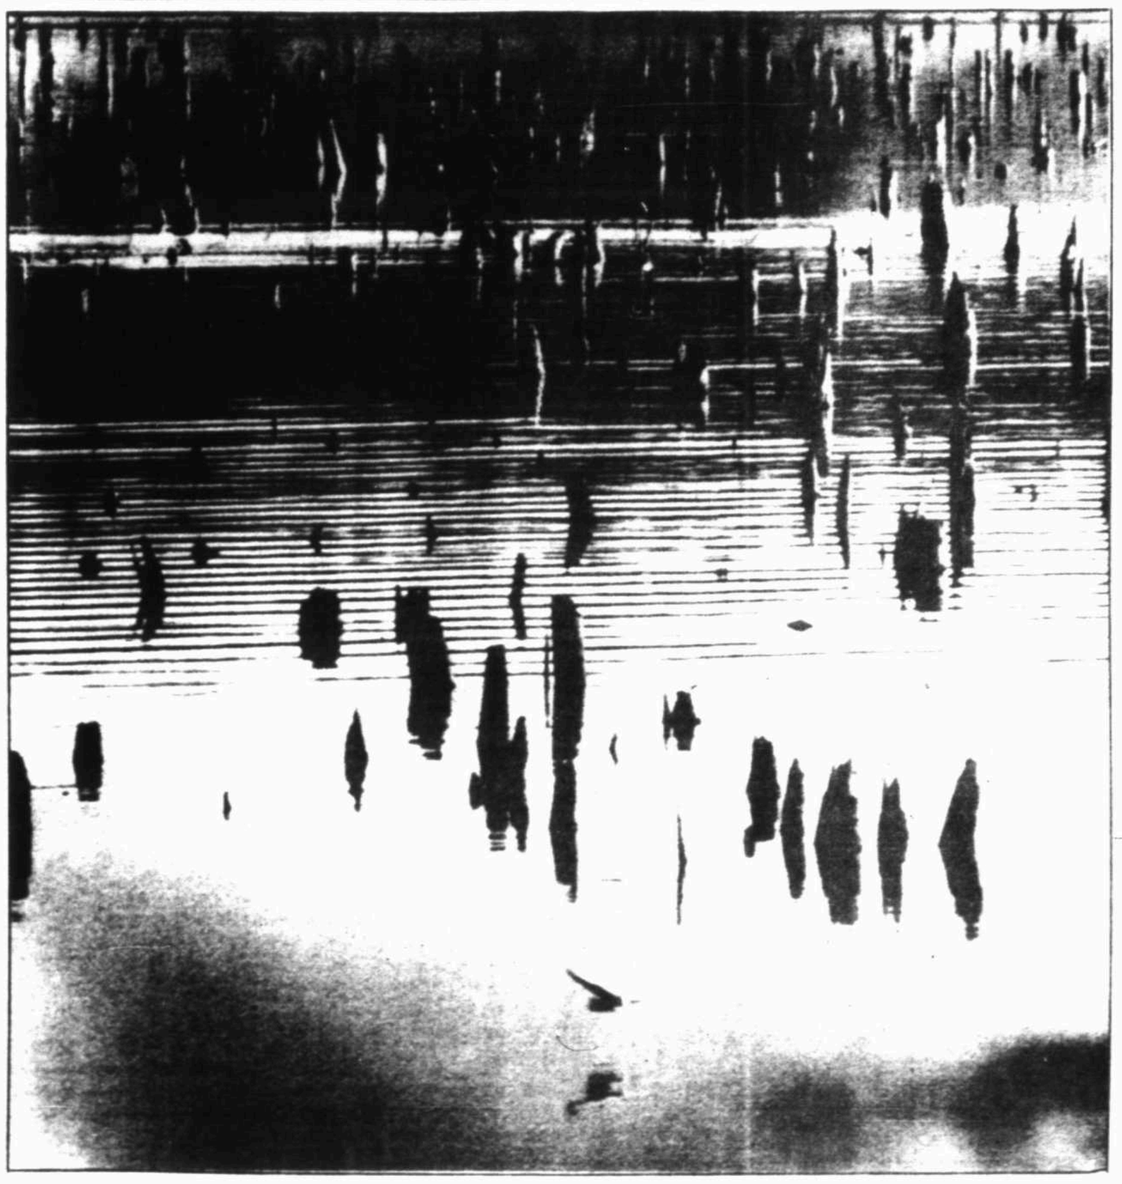

Ms. Bass has given more than $300,000 in direct grants to the ballet during the last two years and has given at least $250,000 through the Sid Richardson Foundation, which her family controls.

Her departure also will leave a void at the Fort Worth Symphony and the Fort Worth Art Museum. She is a vice president and major supporter of both groups.

Since 1984, Ms. Bass has paid Glushak and co-artistic director Michel Rahn undisclosed sums to serve as her private ballet instructors while using their spare time to build a ballet company.

Ballet executive director Jane Brown said the company will have to start paying their salaries, which could amount to $90,000.

However, Ms. Glushak said the departure could create more freedom for the ballet corps, which has won favorable reviews. The company's repertoire has been restricted to Ms. Bass' selections. She paid royalties and guest-artist fees averaging $12,000 per performance during the last two seasons.

At least $20,000 missing from Little League

KERRVILLE (AP) — More than $20,000 raised to finance construction of two new Little League ballparks in Kerrville has been stolen, police said.

The news forced a halt in construction, and Yvonne Helwig, the local Little League president, said, "We're going to be doing good to just get through the year.

"It has been a real shocking situation. Honesty is what we base our organization on."

Little League officials first became aware of the missing building account funds in February after Ms. Helwig, who at that time was president-elect, asked for an audit.

About 400 youngsters raised the money over the past three years by selling candy bars and raffle tickets, officials said.

The Kerr County District Attorney's office and Kerrville police are investigating the theft, which apparently occurred over a three-year period, Detective Joseph Lanning said.

"We do have a suspect in the case," Lanning said, "but we don't have an accurate amount of money taken. The auditor is not finished."

"It's in the president's manual," Ms. Helwig said. "There is supposed to be an annual audit done and it's supposed to be sent to (state league headquarters in) Waco."

Ms. Helwig said it is unknown when the last audit was done. After Ms. Helwig asked for the audit, league board members checked accounts and were shocked by the findings.

"They had nothing in there even close to what they thought they had," Lanning said, "and only a little more than what is needed to cover operating expenses for this year."

In addition to the sale of candy bars and raffle tickets by youngsters, adult members sponsored a barbecue dinner and dance last year to raise donations. Concession profits also were supposed to have been deposited in the building fund.

Texas sanctuary workers' conviction upheld

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court today left intact a ruling that the criminal prosecution of "sanctuary movement" members who aid illegal aliens from Central America does not violate religious rights.

The justices, without comment, refused to hear an appeal by two people convicted of such activity in Texas.

John B. Elder, director of a "refugee sanctuary" in San Benito, Texas, and Stacey Lynn Merkt, a volunteer at the shelter, were convicted of conspiring in 1984 to transport illegal aliens within the United States.

Elder also was convicted of conspiring to smuggle illegal aliens into the country.

He was sentenced to 150 days imprisonment, to be served at a halfway house. Ms. Merkt was sentenced to 179 days in jail and three years probation.

Elder's shelter provides assistance and lodging to Central Americans, principally from El Salvador, who have fled their countries and entered the United States.

The shelter, founded in 1982, receives financial support from the Roman Catholic Diocese in Brownsville, Texas, protestant churches and other religious organizations.

Elder and Ms. Merkt were convicted of driving five Salvadoran illegal aliens from San Benito to McAllen, Texas, and putting them on a bus for Houston.

The five aliens, two adults and three children, were arrested by Border Patrol agents.

Elder's and Ms. Merkt's convictions were upheld by the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals last July 17.

The appeals court rejected arguments that they should not have been charged with crimes because their activities in behalf of illegal aliens are inspired by their religious beliefs.

The appeals court said the sanctuary movement case differs from those in which the Amish have been allowed to keep their young children out of public schools and Seventh-day Adventists have been protected against being fired for refusing to work on their Sabbath.

STATE IN BRIEF

Lead levels in air have dropped since 1980

AUSTIN (AP) — Levels of lead in the air have dropped dramatically since 1980 in nearly all the state's metropolitan areas, according to a Texas Air Control Board report.

In only two areas — Dallas and El Paso — have levels exceeded the federal standard to protect human health since 1980, the report shows. In other areas, the levels are a fraction of the standard, and the trend is continuing downward.

Lead is a metallic element that can cause severe harm to humans, including brain and kidney damage. In most areas, the major source of airborne lead is leaded gasoline, and lead smelters also have caused problems in some areas.

The decrease, which generally parallels the federal government's actions to reduce air pollution from automobiles, is one of many key findings in the report.

Man held in deputy's death

PERRYTON (AP) — A man wanted in connection with the fatal shooting of a sheriff's deputy was being held in an Oklahoma jail Sunday, authorities said.

Ochiltree County Chief Deputy Melvin Kenneth Drum, 55, was hit in the face by a shotgun blast Saturday while he was responding to a domestic disturbance, said Sheriff Joe Hataway.

Alvin Wayne Crane, 28, was arrested hours later by the Oklahoma Highway patrol on a rural road in Beaver County, Hataway said. Hataway said a capital murder charge was filed in Perryton against Crane, who was being held in Oklahoma in the Beaver County Jail.

Beaver County Sheriff Bill Cassingham said Sunday that Crane was being held as a fugitive and had been taken before a judge. Bond was denied, Cassingham said.

Senior in serious condition

BEAUMONT (AP) — Jordan Reese, a 17-year-old senior at Beaumont Kelly High School, remained in serious condition late Sunday from injuries suffered in a weekend auto accident that killed three classmates.

Patrick Phelan, John Mattingly and Edward Gripon Jr., all 18-year-old seniors,, were fatally injured in the accident about 11:45 p.m. Saturday.

The four had attended a Houston Rockets basketball game Saturday night. On Interstate 10 about four miles west of Winnie, their eastbound car veered to the right, left the roadway, and hurtled through the air before striking an embankment and landing in a canal, officials said.

Department of Public Safety Trooper Lourencio Adome said it appeared the vehicle was traveling at a high rate of speed.

Booming market helps PUF

AUSTIN (AP) — A booming stock market has left the Permanent University Fund in rosy shape despite Texas' gloomy oil-dependent economy, officials say.

The fund has grown at a vigorous pace in recent months because it was invested on Wall Street during the biggest bull market in years.

The surge in stock profits was more than enough to offset the drop in mineral revenue, and managers of the fund are aiming at continuing that pattern, officials said.

Use of special monitors in court cases criticized

DALLAS (AP) — The recent use of special monitors in Texas, to apprise federal judges on the progress of reforms in care for prisoners and the mentally retarded, has come in for both criticism and praise.

Texas' facilities for its prison inmates and for the retarded are the focus of protracted class-action lawsuits, and in both cases the presiding judges have turned to special masters.

The lawsuits have dragged through federal courts for more than a decade — one demanding improved conditions for inmates and the other seeking to get retarded patients out of institutionalized settings.

Supporters praise the use of such monitors as a way to speed court-ordered reforms by providing technical expertise that extends the arm of the court into the facilities.

But critics, including U.S. Attorney General Edwin Meese, contend that the masters are doing jobs that judges should perform and their expenses are straining state budgets.

The state of Texas has already paid $3.8 million for the special master involved in the prison lawsuit.

Meese issued a March 1986 policy statement opposing all but the most narrow use of special masters as fact-finders on issues incidental to the main focus of a case.

Since 1981, Vince Nathan, who was appointed special master by U.S. District Judge William Wayne Justice of Tyler to monitor the Texas Department of Corrections, has been assisting in the largest prison reform case in the country, involving 27 prisons and 38,000 inmates. He also is a special master in prison reform cases in Georgia and New Mexico.

So far, the state of Texas has paid a total of $3.8 million for costs incurred by Nathan and his monitoring staff, according to the state comptroller's office.

Last July, U.S. District Judge Barefoot Sanders of Dallas appointed Linda O'Neall special master in the suit against the Texas Department of Mental Health and Mental Retardation. The state ranks 51st after all other states and the District of Columbia in quality of care, according to a national rating system.

Costs incurred by Ms. O'Neall, a Florida sociologist, have totaled nearly $200,000 since her appointment and are an added drain on state coffers, say state lawyers who have contested Ms. O'Neall's appointment.

In the 13-year-old lawsuit against Texas institutions for the retarded, Ms. O'Neall had served as an expert consultant in the case since 1983 when both sides reached a settlement agreement without a trial.

"I see no end in sight to this litigation and I think we all know that the litigation needs to be brought to some kind of termination date," Sanders wrote in appointing Ms. O'Neall.

But since January, her new duties have been on hold. The parties are awaiting a rehearing of an appeals court decision against enforcing some provisions of the settlement's community-placement provisions.

State lawyers also are appealing her role as special master, and their legal arguments mirror Meese's contention that judges should not delegate their duties to special masters.

When Ms. O'Neall served as an expert consultant to both parties in the suit, her agreed annual salary was $45,000, but the court later increased the annual limit to $179,000.

Hazardous wastes to be shipped through Texas

HOUSTON (AP) — Mexico will be transporting hazardous wastes through Texas and other U.S. border states under an agreement with the United States that has angered some Texas officials because it apparently includes no notice to the states, The Houston Post reported in a copyright story.

"This damn stuff is coming through this state, and the federal regulations don't require them to notify state agencies about it," a state official who asked not to be identified told the newspaper.

The U.S.-Mexico agreement allows hazardous wastes to be shipped from one country to the another for processing and disposal, the Post reported in a story published on Sunday.

Environmental Protection Administration officials said Texas authorities may be misconstruing the agreement's language and regulations for enforcing it.

The Post said state officials discovered the agreement by accident earlier this year. University of Texas graduate students doing research on hazardous wastes shipments and materials were routinely given a copy of the EPA regulations during a trip to Washington.

The U.S.-Mexico agreement, signed last November, is an "annex" to a treaty on the environment signed at La Paz, Mexico, in 1983. Under the revised agreement, before a company in this country can ship hazardous wastes to Mexico it must find a firm in Mexico willing to accept it.

Mexico's government has to approve the deal and notify the U.S. embassy in Mexico City. The embassy tells the State Department, which notifies the EPA, which, in turn, tells the company it can export the material.

The process would work much the same way for hazardous wastes shipped from Mexico to this country.

An export permit lists names and addresses of those involved, the wastes and destination. But it can cover a series of shipments over as many as 12 months without separate, detailed permits for individual truckloads, freight cars of barges of wastes southbound for disposal, an EPA official told the Post.

Such procedures, the unidentified official agreed, would make it virtually impossible for officials in Texas or other states to be alerted in advance about specific shipments. It might be up to the Texas Legislature to require such advance notification, she said.

At least one group in Mexico expressed surprise about the agreement.

"We don't want our country to be a receiver of toxic wastes," said Manuel Fernandez, president of the Mexican Conservation Federation in Mexico City.

"What are we going to do with it?" Fernandez said. "Even if it is brought here legally, nobody knows what to do with it."

TEC helps unemployed find work in Virginia

FAIRFAX, Va. (AP) — Employment officials in Texas and Virginia are pooling their resources in an effort to match unemployed workers in the Lone Star State with an abundance of unfilled jobs in the Old Dominion.

The Texas Employment Commission is asking Houston's unemployed if they are willing to relocate to northern Virginia. If they are, their resumes will be sent to the Virginia Employment Commission's office here, where they will be distributed to employers.

"We're kind of feeling our way," said Charles Wilkerson, manager of one of 10 Texas Employment Commission offices in the oil-depressed Houston area. "We're not sure whether it's going to work, but we hope it will."

The program will concentrate initially on Houston's unemployed, said Wesley W. Caison Jr., the Virginia Employment Commission's northern Virginia area manager. Depending on the program's success, it could be expanded to other parts of Texas and to other oil-producing states, Caison said.

"We're in business to try and help employers find a work force and we're going to try to do that whatever way we can," he said.

"There's not many occupations in our area that are not growth occupations," Caison said. "The unemployment rate in our area is less than 3 percent and the demand is great."

Caison said the concept of coordinating the Texas jobless with northern Virginia job opportunities was born when employment commission officials from the two states talked at a recent conference.

With northern Virginia's unemployment rate at 2.5 percent, there are not enough workers to fill job openings in the building trades, retailing and other service industries. Some employers have gone to West Virginia and other economically depressed areas to find workers.

Wilkerson said Houston's eligible work force, with many highly skilled professionals, has an unemployment rate of 11 percent. About 2,000 people file unemployment claims with his office a month, Wilkerson said, and the number of jobs available through the commission has plummeted from 8,000 to as low as 800.

Officials at both employment commissions said their biggest concern is that Houston's unemployed may not be able to afford the move to northern Virginia or the area's high housing costs.

Caison said some employers will pay to move professionals. But they probably won't want to do the same for secretaries and workers in lower-paying jobs.

"Although as hard as they are getting to find them, there may be some employers willing to defray part of the costs," Caison said.

Texans will get a taste of life in northern Virginia from a videotape developed by Fairfax County's Economic Development Authority, Caison said.

JEANE DIXON'S your horoscope

© 1986, Los Angeles Times Syndicate

TUESDAY, MARCH 31, 1987

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: There will be lots of decisions to make in the year ahead, especially in August. You come up with a bright idea to move your career forward. Others applaud your originality! Your work life dominates over the next several months. The most pleasurable and relaxing times will be when you are outdoors. A fitness program keeps you feeling fine if you follow doctor's orders. You will be at your best when negotiating money deals. Time is on your side. A temporary separation enhances a special love relationship.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You cannot be in two places at one time. Avoid wasting time in idle chatter and concentrate on routine tasks. Great progress can be made through talks, meetings and negotiations. Use your intuition.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Nothing important will develop on the business front. Use your time to complete projects you have put aside. Influential person will be impressed by your persistence in finishing what you started.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Do not take any risks with your money. Check your standing at the bank. You can obtain valuable information from associates who like to keep a low profile. Family members may not want to cooperate.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Expansion in conjunction with your business dealings is favored. Evaluate a partnership. Spend any free time with a different crowd—broadening your horizons will give you valuable new insights. Issue more invitations.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): An abundance of work activities could create lots of unfinished business, unless you stick to a schedule. Someone you have neglected recently might enjoy a small gift or "thank-you" dinner.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You can both promote yourself and sell property for a nice profit today. The purchase of a computer or electronic equipment is important for overall efficiency, and is a smart investment.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Be more willing to try new things and directions. Concentrate on what lies ahead rather than dwelling on the past. You can, however, recycle an old idea to improve the bottom line.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Investments and speculative ventures are in the spotlight now. Do not spread yourself too thin. Avoid taking on more work than you can deliver. A too-hasty agreement may fall through.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Cultivate those who work close to powerful people. They could help you get in to see their bosses. A plan you have developed is worthwhile but may need more work.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Use any slack time to catch up on paperwork. Now is a wonderful time to experiment with new ideas. Do not be afraid to seek advice from someone who has had more experience.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Try harder. Really concentrate on your regular work. A new approach will make those in authority sit up and take notice. Creative enterprises must be kept within reasonable financial limits. Be frugal.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Try to speed up routine work. Show that you can be quicker off the mark than someone who is competing with you for an important new post. Short trips can be useful.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1 – As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠95 ♡AKJ9 ◇A763 ♣J62
Your right-hand opponent opens the bidding with one club. What action do you take?
A. – In theory, there is nothing you can do. You can't make a takeout double without spades and you need a fivecard suit to overcall. Here, however, we would bend the rules a little and overcall one heart. Our suit is good and our hand is worth an opening bid.

Q.2 – Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AQJ63 ♡A8 ◇762 ♣KQ9
The bidding has proceeded:

West	North	East	South
1 ◇	1 ♡	Pass	?

What action do you take?
A. – You could easily have a game, but where? You want to make sure partner bids again, but to jump to two spades overstresses the quality and length of your suit and in modern theory it is no longer considered forcing. The solution is to cuebid two diamonds. That will give you the chance to show your spades in comfort, knowing that partner must find another bid. The course of the auction should then enable you to place the final contract with confidence.

Q.3 – As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AQJ63 ♡KQJ95 ◇87 ♣4
Your right-hand opponent opens the bidding with one diamond. What action do you take?
A. – Experience has shown that it is wrong to make a takeout double with a twosuited hand the enemy might be able to preempt you out of your best suit. We vote for a quiet one spade. It is our bet that the auction won't die there.

Q.4 – Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠7 ♡1076 ◇K83 ♣AK10952
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	2 ♣	Pass
2 NT	Pass	?

What action do you take?
A. – The one thing you can't do is rebid three clubs that shows a subminimum twooverone response with no strength outside the club suit. You have only two choices: pass or three no trump. We opt for the latter since our hand should produce five or six tricks for partner.

Q.5 – Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♡AK98632 ◇AQ108 ♣76
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♡	Pass	3 ♡	Pass

What do you bid now?
A. – While you might have a grand slam, the possibility exists that your limit is 11 tricks. Where partner has stuff is the question. Blackwood won't necessarily help you uncover whether he has the right cards or not. Start a cuebidding sequence with three spades your cheapest firstround control.

Q.6 – Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AJ95 ♡Q72 ◇KJ762 ♣9
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	1 ◇	Pass
1 ♡	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A. – You have no reason to suppose that no trump is going to be your best spot. If partner has four spades, a spade contract should prove infinitely superior. Bid one spade, which is forcing since it is a change of suit by responder, to see what partner does next.

'Platoon' expected to take best picture honors tonight

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The film world's 59th Academy Awards will be presented tonight before an estimated billion television viewers in 86 countries, climaxing one of the most suspenseful Oscar races in recent years.

The consensus suggests that Oliver Stone's slashing "Platoon" will be announced when Dustin Hoffman declares "...and the winner is" for best picture. But the acting awards are by no means certain.

Some predict that Academy voters were swayed by sentiment and selected seven-time nominee Paul Newman ("The Color of Money") for his first acting Oscar and the deaf actress Marlee Matlin ("Children of a Lesser God") for her first film role.

Bob Hoskins ("Mona Lisa") and Sissy Spacek ("Crimes of the Heart") also have their advocates. And the races for supporting actor and actress appear wide open.

A stunning black, white and silver art deco set reminiscent of Hollywood's golden era will showcase the presenters and production numbers at the Dorothy Chandler Pavilion. ABC will televise the ceremonies, starting at 9 p.m. EST.

Veteran Oscar director Marty Pasetta staged rehearsals while crowds of spectators lined the performer's entrance of the theater Sunday hoping to catch a glimpse of a star or two. They watched as Dom DeLuise, Lou Rawls, Bernadette Peters and dozens of others arrived.

Inside, hundreds of stage hands wearing headsets and carrying walkie-talkies milled about while elaborately costumed dancers rehearsed their steps for the Best Costume Design award.

A seemingly frustrated Pasetta, taking on the heady chore of coordinating the 19 cameras, computer-operated graphics, film clips, enormous stage sets, and teleprompter, coached presenter Lauren Bacall on her lines.

"You're not the pope so don't bless the crowd," he said as she waved her microphone in the air.

Most of the acting winners will reel off their thanks in person, with the Academy reporting only three acting nominees as no-shows.

Maggie Smith ("A Room with a View") is appearing in a London play, while Newman is busy editing "The Glass Menagerie," in which he directed his wife, Joanne Woodward.

Michael Caine, nominated as supporting actor for "Hannah and Her Sisters," will be unable to return from the Bahamas location of a "Jaws" sequel.

Newman also claims superstition, telling his publicist: "I showed up seven times (he was also nominated for producing 'Rachel, Rachel') and lost. Maybe I can win if I stay away."

Another notable non-appearance will be Woody Allen, nominated for directing and writing "Hannah." He expected to follow his Monday night ritual of playing jazz clarinet at Michael's Pub in Manhattan.

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — The Dalai Lama, exiled spiritual leader of Tibetan Buddhists, was quoted as saying he has no plans to return to his homeland as long as it remains under Chinese rule.

"It is time for waiting and watching," the Indian Express quoted him as saying in a rare interview published Sunday.

China invaded Tibet in 1951. The Dalai Lama fled to India in 1959 after a failed Tibetan uprising against the Chinese.

The Chinese have tried to woo the 52-year-old lama back, but intermittent talks have ended in stalemate.

PALM SPRINGS, Calif. (AP) — High school dropout Frank Sinatra crooned a few tunes to raise money for construction of a school and said more entertainers should turn out for education.

"There should be such fund-raising performances for education throughout the country," Sinatra told a black-tie crowd at the $500-a-person dinner. "As a high school dropout, I can appreciate and treasure the value of an education."

Sinatra, 71, a resident of Palm Springs, helped raise $300,000 at the benefit Saturday for Palm Valley High School, a prep school.

It was his first public engagement since abdominal surgery for diverticulitis last November. Since then, follow-up surgery was performed in January, and scar tissue removed earlier this month.

SIOUX CITY, Iowa (AP) — "Love Boat" star turned congressman Fred Grandy was headed back to Washington after marrying television reporter and novelist Catherine Mann.

Grandy and Ms. Mann, who met when she interviewed him in 1982, were married Saturday night at St. Thomas Episcopal Church in Grandy's hometown. It was the second marriage for both.

Ms. Mann is chief correspondent for the "Entertainment Report," a syndicated report for use by local news programs. She is the author of "Tinsel Town" and recently completed a second book, "Rumors."

Grandy won the 6th District congressional seat as a Republican last year. He formerly was best known for his "Gopher" role on ABC's "The Love Boat."

No immediate honeymoon trip was planned as Grandy was returning to his congressional duties today.

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Rock and country star Bob Dylan will launch a four-month world tour in Israel, a tour organizer says.

Dylan and Tom Petty and The Heartbreakers will arrive in August for two performances, Ronit Arbel of Talit Productions, which is organizing the visit, said Sunday.

The performances will be at Tel Aviv's Hayarkon Park and at an outdoor concert theater outside the old walled city of Jerusalem, Mrs. Arbel said. His next stop after Israel will be Vienna, she said.

• • •

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Capt. John Testrake says his book about the 17-day ordeal of a TWA jetliner hijacking is meant to emphasize how his faith helped him survive.

Testrake, 59, of Richmond, was pilot of the jetliner hijacked as it flew from Athens to Rome in 1985.

He said that profits from "Triumph Over Terror on Flight 847" will go toward college scholarships for Richmond High School graduates who are interested in aviation.

The book, told in the first-person, centers on "the part the Lord played in this," he said. It was written with David J. Wimbish, a writer-instructor with Pat Robertson's Christian Broadcasting Network Inc.

NEW YORK (AP) — "I Spy" heroes Alexander Scott and Kelly Robinson are getting back together in a reunion of sorts after 20 years.

Robert Culp, who played espionage agent Robinson, is a guest on NBC's "The Cosby Show" on April 9. Bill Cosby was Scott.

Backing the winners

Political action committees, as fickle as fortune itself, know how to back a winner. In fact, it seems that they find losing so distasteful that they go out of their way to insure against it.

According to a study released recently by the public-interest lobby Common Cause, dozens of PACs involved in last year's U.S. Senate elections covered both sides. In each of the seven Senate races in which a Democratic challenger defeated a Republican incumbent, PACs backed the Republican incumbent during the campaign, then contributed to the winning Democratic challenger shortly after the election.

At the risk of sounding cynical, one might suggest that some PACs aren't particularly committed to a candidate's aims, ideology or political party. They seem interested, above all else, in buying influence with a U.S. senator.

In North Dakota, for example, 39 PACs that contributed to the unsuccessful re-election campaign of Republican Sen. Mark Andrews switched sides and gave to Kent Conrad, the newly elected Democrat, after the election.

The 39 PACs included the National Association of Letter Carriers, the National Rifle Association, the Tobacco Institute Inc. and the American Bankers Association. The bankers group, which gave $10,000 to Andrews before the election and $10,000 to Conrad afterwards, switched sides in four of the seven Senate races.

The only bright spot in this cynical little exercise in democracy is that six of the seven winning challengers favor fundamental changes in the current campaign-financing system. They are co-sponsoring Senate Bill 2, the Senatorial Election Campaign Act, which would limit the total amount of PAC funds congressional candidates can accept. The bill, which now has 36 co-sponsors, also would limit campaign spending as part of a voluntary system of partial public financing in Senate general elections.

PAC publicists argue that PAC-giving represents citizen participation in the political system. Citizens, however, don't vote for both candidates — once before the election and a second time after the winner has been chosen.

If we're really interested in citizen participation, we'll demonstrate it by bringing the PACs under control..

Independent neighbor

One of the political miracles of today's world is the astonishing ability of the Republic of Finland to maintain a western style democratic-capitalist system while its entire eastern border faces a frowning Soviet Russia.

It has not been easy for this former arch-duchy of old Imperial Russia. After the Leninist Revolution and the end of World War I, Finland attained nationhood and settled down to a fierce truce with its Communist neighbor. But when the Soviets seized the newly created Baltic states at the outbreak of World War II, Finland resisted and fought a bitter war in 1939-40 with its big adversary.

Finland lost that war and a lot of its eastern territory but the performance of its small, highly professional army electrified the free world. Even after World War II, Finland eluded the hug of the bear and remained outside the Iron Curtain.

The little land of forests and lakes has had to tread warily in its relations with the USSR and it tolerates the presence of a Kremlin-directed Communist Party in its political system. But at no time has it knuckled under.

This was demonstrated in the recent parliamentary elections when the Finns handed the Communists a stunning defeat, prompting one official to remark that Communism "is a spent force in Finnish politics."

The sturdy independence and spirit of self-determination exemplified by the Finnish people have few parallels in history.

Another View:

Praising the changes

The March figure for Jewish emigration from the Soviet Union is the highest in five years, about 400. The news evokes pleasure — and recurrent questions. How significant are these reforms of Mikhail Gorbachev's? How should the West respond to them? Such questions split Soviet dissidents and emigres. The dissidents speak largely to Gorbachev and address what could be done. The emigres talk mostly to the West and focus on what should be.

Consider these two different views:

— "It's not right to say that it's only propaganda or window-dressing. Objectively, something real is happening. How far it's going to go is a complicated question. But I myself have decided that the situation has changed."

— "For the West to take the new policies at face value is to deal with symptoms and ignore the disease. ... What Westerners fail to understand is that if the Soviet leaders were really intent on radical change, they would have to begin by discarding the ruling ideology."

The first comment came from Andrei Sakharov in Moscow weeks after his release from internal exile. It typifies the attitude of dissidents within the country. The second, from a prominent group of Soviet emigres in an Op-Ed article in The Times Sunday, bears the mark of those outside. The views seem contradictory but they share a goal: bigger and more meaningful changes.

The insiders focus on how different today is from yesterday, and their remarks are intended primarily for the Soviet leadership. So, although these dissidents range from skeptical to hopeful about prospects, they believe the best way to respond to the changes is with encouragement.

The emigres focus instead on how little different today is from yesterday, and their primary audience is the West. They are less inclined than the dissidents to praise and prod. They properly remind the West that life in the Soviet Union is far from acceptable by Western standards, and is not likely to become so under a Soviet regime.

The West, recognizing its limited impact on Soviet domestic policy, can take tips from both groups. Gorbachev deserves praise for the remarkable changes he is attempting, and those dissidents inside working to further the change deserve support. But if praise and support are in order, uncritical enthusiasm is not. It is up to the West to hold each change to higher standards and broader human rights perspectives.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Monday, March 30, the 89th day of 1987. There are 276 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On March 30, 1981, President Reagan was shot and wounded by John W. Hinckley Jr. outside the Washington Hilton Hotel. White House News Secretary James S. Brady, a Secret Service agent and a District of Columbia police officer were also wounded in the attack.

In 1870, Texas was readmitted into the Union.

Brazil debt could cause world panic

WASHINGTON — The Latin American debt crisis is deepening, and federal officials are contemplating once again the dread possibility of a financial Armageddon that could leave the world banking system a smoldering ruin.

Jack Anderson

The effect on millions of Americans, already bent bowlegged under their consumer debts, would be catastrophic.

Brazil, the biggest single debtor in Latin America, recently announced that it can't even meet interest payments on its $100 billion debt. Other countries in the region are making it clear that they must find some relief from the burden of their collective $400 billion debt. These ominous developments are a reminder to Treasury and Federal Reserve Board officials that a full-blown international panic has been averted so far with only temporary, Band-Aid expedients.

What will happen if the debt bomb goes off? This is no academic question for Treasury officials, who have been trying to forecast the consequences and draw up contingency plans to soften the impact. But one Treasury economist glumly predicted that a default by one or more Latin debtor nations would create a "credit implosion" in the United States. Here's why:

Default by Brazil or another big debtor could cause the collapse of at least one "megabank" stuck with the defaulting government's now-worthless bonds. And such is the delicate interrelationship among the major banks that the failure of one would almost certainly topple others like so many dominoes.

The banks that managed to survive the initial debacle would lack the resources to finance the major corporations' operations and expansion, which depend on borrowed money. Not only would the supply of credit dry up, but desperate bankers would call in loans already made in hopes of staving off collapse. Calling in loans would create a wave of corporate defaults and bankruptcies; refinancing would be impossible.

That's what the Treasury official meant by credit implosion.

The casualties would not be restricted to bankers. Corporations driven over the edge would take their workers with them. Suddenly stripped of their jobs, they would be unable to make their loan payments. This would bring even more banks to ruination, and a full-scale depression could result.

"The problem with the major banks is that they are the system," a former Treasury official explained to our associate Michael Binstein.

The 15,000 banking institutions in the United States are ostensibly independent. But they are locked together like Siamese twins in everything from check clearing, wire transfers and data processing to loan sharing and investment advice.

More than $1 trillion worth of transactions per day depend on this interlocking network. The efficiency and stability of the credit system are essential not only for banking but for the nation's economy as a whole.

"A sudden failure of one institution, particularly of substantial size, can interrupt a long chain of payments and dramatically and unexpectedly affect other, unrelated institutions, some of which may not even have a business relationship with the institution in difficulty and have themselves been well managed and sound," Fed chairman Paul Volcker has warned Congress.

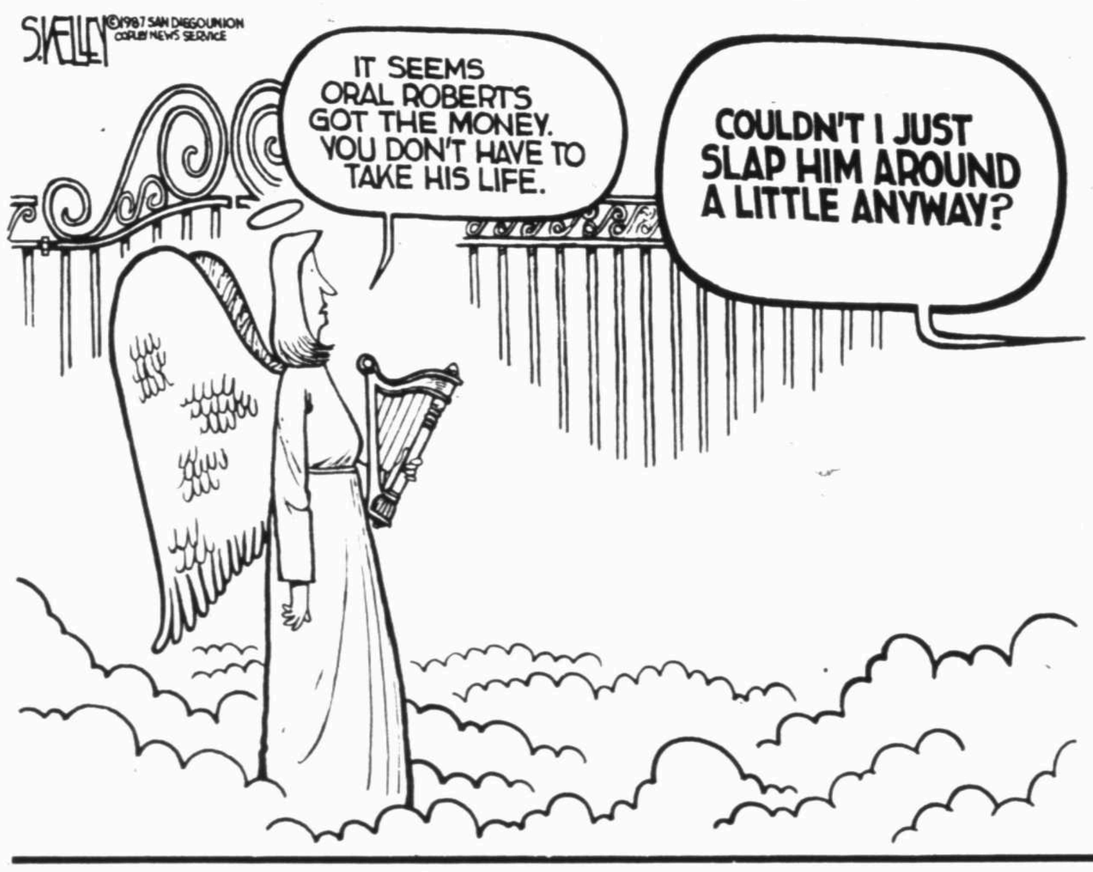

In other words, the innocent will suffer along with the guilty.

Perversely, American workers and businesses are already suffering from Latin America's efforts to solve its debt problems through austerity and retrenchment. This has brought a drastic decline in U.S. exports to the debtor nations, and a loss of at least a million jobs in manufacturing and agriculture.

DEAD END: The federal highway bill doesn't have to be the gigantic pork barrel full of "special projects" that it has become for well-situated members of the Public Works Committee. The Senate last fall voted to give state governments the authority for highway construction using federal funds from the gasoline tax. That would certainly be fairer than allotting construction money on the basis of committee members' home districts. Too fair for the House, as it turned out. When Rep. Jim Moody, D-Wis., proposed a similar bill in the Public Works Committee, it was promptly spiked.

Reagan won't endorse for '88 campaign

WASHINGTON — If any hope still lingered that Ronald Reagan might endorse George Bush for the 1988 presidential nomination, he extinguished it over lunch in the White House with longtime political operatives.

President Reagan's meeting with the regional political directors (rpd's) of his 1984 and 1988 campaigns turned into a pep rally. While faithful lieutenants were pledging undying support, he volunteered he would remain neutral and reiterated belief in the 11th Commandment forbidding one Republican from criticizing another. The rpd's were divided mainly between supporters of Vice President Bush and Rep. Jack Kemp.

A footnote: At the lunch, the president failed to respond at all to an appeal that he order early deployment of the Strategic Defensive Initiative. When the idea was broached, Reagan listened but said not a word.

CUOMO'S CANDIDATE

A private telephone call from Sen. Joseph Biden to Gov. Mario Cuomo attempting to terminate their budding feud was amiable, but Cuomo insiders say he seldom forgives or forgets an insult and is not likely ever to join the Biden-for-president vanguard.

Cuomo had not hidden how irked he was by Biden's comments on the campaign trail that governors have trouble handling the presidency, as witness the performances of Jimmy Carter and Ronald Reagan. Advisers had told Biden he must repair the damage, and he finally tried by telephoning with an apology. While Cuomo says the matter is finished and lists Biden as an acceptable presidential candidate, friends say the rancor remains.

In contrast, Cuomo has grown closer to the presidential front-runner, Gary Hart. They have conferred over the telephone frequently, and the governor has expressed his admiration for the former senator's grasp of issues.

CAP'S FURY

Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger was livid at Sen. David Durenberger when the former chairman of the Senate Intelligence Committee accused the CIA of using an Israeli army officer to "spy" during Israel's 1982 invasion of Lebanon.

Weinberger was irritated not only because the Republican senator may have broken a rule against leaking classified information but because he did it for apparent political reasons. Durenberger, up for re-election next year, made the charge before a closed-door fund-raising meeting of Jewish Americans in Palm Beach County, Fla., last week.

Fueling Weinberger's anger was suspicion that the Minnesota senator made the charge to his Florida backers to provide a pretext for the American spy, Jonathan Pollard. Pollard has been sent to jail for life for espionage in the service of Israel.

PAT IS MISSING

A solicitation to conservatives for the "annual spring briefing" April 26-27 of Sen. Jesse Helms's Coalition for Freedom is supposed to start with a speech by Patrick J. Buchanan at his home, but nobody bothered to check with the former White House communications director.

A letter from Thomas F. Ellis, Helms's right-hand man, asks a $5,000 fee for the weekend to provide funding for an anti-Communist "shadow cabinet" that will "take on" the State Department. "The festitivies will begin at 6:00 p.m. on Sunday, April 26th, with a reception at the home of Pat and Shelly Buchanan," Ellis, leader of the Congressional Club of North Carolina, writes. "Mr. Buchanan will speak ...".

Buchanan told us he has other plans for the weekend and does not intend to take part. A Congressional Club official, Carter Wrenn, told us he had been informed Buchanan was giving a reception for the United Conservative Appeal, which includes the Congressional Club. All this will not help Buchanan's relations with the Helms political apparatus, which was not happy when he backed out of a presidential bid earlier this year.

SOVIET READER

Shortly after Sen. Malcolm Wallop made a hard-hitting speech attacking the Reagan administration for giving up on early deployment of the Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI), the first person who arrived in his office to grab a copy was a top official from the Soviet embassy.

Wallop's strong speech represented a sharp break between him and the administration. But neither Secretary of State George Shultz nor the White House had sent for the full text of what he said before a Soviet diplomat arrived in his office.

To the Kremlin, Wallop's break with the president over the administration's failure to launch early deployment of SDI was big news, posing possibilities of major political warfare within the Republican party. The Soviets seem to understand the importance of that more than the president's men.

CHARLEY REESE

Americans still can shape nation's destiny

The first step in conning a person is to get him to accept your basic premise.

For example, if I could convince you that the success or failure of journalism is measured by Charley Reese's prosperity or lack of prosperity then I have in effect co-opted you. You might think you were being an objective judge of journalism, but you would in fact be merely an advocate of Charley Reese's prosperity.

Charley Reese

This kind of trick is played on the American people all the time. The arms control special interests, for example, have convinced many people that the success or failure of U.S. and Soviet relations is measured solely by an arms control treaty.

Corporate types try to convince people that the success or failure of an economic policy is measured solely by its effect on their profits. Union types will try to convince you that the success or failure of an economic policy is to be measured by the effect it has on union members' wages and benefits.

It's a great help to clear thinking if, when you see someone pronouncing judgments about whether a thing is good or bad, a success or a failure, you determine what criteria, or set of standards, they are using. Every judgment necessarily presupposes a set of criteria.

You cannot decide someone is beautiful unless you have a clear idea in your own mind as to what constitutes beauty and what constitutes ugliness. You can't say a policy is a failure unless you know what the end result should be.

For example, I judge public education to be a failure because I think public education ought to produce people who can read and compute, who are knowledgeable of history and geography, who are equipped with a marketable skill or the capacity for higher education. Therefore widespread illiteracy, unemployable graduates, deplorable ignorance, and remedial classes in colleges define public education's failure.

I think a sound farm policy ought to produce a maximum number of successful farmers and a well-fed population. Therefore when I see bankrupt farmers and hungry or malnourished people, I judge the farm policy a failure.

We take the first step, toward good or evil, when we decide what it is we want. Both our criteria for judging results and our subsequent decisions are dictated by that first choice of a goal. Even those people who refuse to clarify their goals in effect decide not to decide and to choose instead to flow with any current that comes along.

I do not think we can solve our national problems until we decide what it is we want to do. Do we want high corporate profits or do we want a society in which everyone who wants to can find a job that will sustain themselves and their families? The two are not necessarily compatible. Do we want a monetary system that is stable enough to justify saving or do we want a monetary system that can be inflated or deflated to suit the interests of a few?

Do we want the widest possible distribution of ownership or do we want a tiny elite to own most of the nation's assets?

Most of the solutions being offered are self-serving to the groups which offer them.

The American people have to realize that this is their country, it is their responsibility to shape its destiny, and they have the power to shape its destiny if they will but exercise it. The very first step is to decide what that destiny ought to be.

People have the power of their vote but the political process has been largely taken over by special interests. The idea of a good election, from the special interests' point of view, is a contest between Candidate A, who will serve the special interests, or Candidate B, who will serve the special interests.

They have taken the political process by default, however, and if the American people will turn off their television sets and begin to think for themselves, they can regain their birthright.

Contra-aid group touted connections with White House

North

WASHINGTON (AP) — A private Contra-aid operation, assisted by Lt. Col. Oliver L. North, touted access to President Reagan and the White House to raise millions of dollars from wealthy Americans, documents show.

At least one contributor believes that North, then a White House aide, was controlling how the funds were spent, according to the internal documents obtained by a former employee of fund-raiser Carl "Spitz" Channell.

A $100,000 check to Channell's tax-exempt National Endowment for the Preservation of Liberty — some of the more than $7 million raised in 1986 — was sent by Pennsylvania contributor Bruce Hooper. The check was accompanied by a note telling Channell's staff, "Please have Ollie contact me to let me know what he's going to do with it."

The note, dated May 27, 1986, was among documents that Jane McLaughlin, who worked as a fund-raiser for Channell, has turned over to Lawrence E. Walsh, the independent counsel investigating the secret sale of U.S. arms to Iran and the possible diversion of payments to Nicaraguan Contra rebels.

The documents, which were reviewed by The Associated Press, indicate a more active role by North in Channell's program than previously acknowledged by Channell.

Channell, whose activities are under scrutiny by the independent counsel, has maintained that North did not raise or control money for Channell's projects, which included a speaker program featuring Nicaraguan Contras, a $1 million pro-Contra television campaign and humanitarian aid contributions estimated at some $3 million during the two-year congressional ban on military aid to the Contras.

Hooper acknowledged sending McLaughlin the note and $100,000 check. But he declined in a telephone interview to elaborate on Channell's relationship with North other than to say, "I had a sense that...they were cooperating between each other about those funds."

Channell spokesman Jared Cameron said "there would be no comment on stolen documents."

He said North was simply a re-source of information for Channell since both worked for Reagan's policy of backing the Contras.

Cameron has said the two met as many as 14 times, only during White House briefings that Reagan sometimes attended, where North spoke to Channell contributors about Central America.

However, the documents show North wrote to donors to thank them and encourage support.

North was fired from his National Security Council job last November for his role in the Iran-Contra affair.

The presidential commission that investigated the Iran-Contra matter said North was deeply involved in raising private funds for the Contras and in getting weapons to them during the congressional ban on military aid from 1984 to 1986.

Letters from McLaughlin to donors state, "We met with the president" or "Spitz met with the president" and cite Reagan's support for Channell's efforts.

Cameron said Channell had one meeting with Reagan, in the company of others, that was in addition to the "presidential walk-throughs" at the contributor White House sessions.

Included in the documents is a May 2, 1986, letter from North to Hooper reviewing the progress of Contra aid legislation in Congress.

"The president is chipping away at the opposition," the letter said, adding, "This is due in no small way to your support of the ongoing Central American Freedom Program of the National Endowment for the Preservation of Liberty."

"I hope you will remain steadfast with the president as he leads this effort. I know personally that he values your help very much," the letters said.

Three days later, Hooper wrote to Channell that he had "a stimulating morning in the company of Mr. North with Jane McLaughlin."

Asked about the meeting, Hooper said he had wanted North to brief him on Central America before making the financial commitment to Channell.

"He never asked for money," Hooper said. "I never talked money with Oliver North...Obviously he knew I was supporting the president and giving to the National Endowment."

He said North never told him how the money was spent but that he understood his money would be spent for non-lethal assistance, not weapons.

Iran reportedly sent arms to Sandinistas

WASHINGTON (AP) — Thousands of rifles and hundreds of thousands of rounds of ammunition were sent from Iran to Nicaragua in early 1985 shortly before the White House arms overtures to Tehran, present and former U.S. officials say.

The administration never publicly denounced the alleged Iranian role in arming the Sandinista government, unlike the highly critical U.S. attitude toward the military ties of other Middle East radicals and Marxist countries with Nicaragua.

Three sources who verified the Iranian-Sandinista link suggested the administration remained silent on the arms shipments to promote a favorable atmosphere for its secret overtures to Iran during an 18-month period between 1985 and 1986.

Officially, State Department spokesman Charles Redman had no comment when asked about the issue Friday.

However, a fourth State Department source, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said there was no evidence of Iranian arms shipments to the Sandinistas.

The Tower commission report on the secret sale of U.S. arms to Iran and the possible diversion of payments to the Nicaraguan Contra rebels fighting the Sandinistas said the Nicaraguan vessel Monimbo was carrying weapons to Nicaragua by way of North Korea but made no reference to the country where the weaponry originated

The Rragan Administration has provided the Associated Press with a number of photos which reportedly portray increased battlefield activity by the Contras since the resumption of U.S. military aid last fall. The administration claims thousands of Contras have filtered back into Nicaragua from Honduran bases since December. Photos such as the one above were provided without any details as to time, place or circumstance.

The report said Lt. Col. Oliver L. North, the fired National Security Council staff aide, was so worried about the delivery that he recommended the vessel either be seized or sunk.

The report said the plan was abandoned after a friendly country, which was not identified, turned down a U.S. request to carry out the operation.

The three sources confirmed the Monimbo made at least one arms delivery from Iran to Nicaragua by way of North Korea. One former official said additional deliveries may have been carried out by Cuban vessels to disguise Iranian involvement.

A possible additional reason for use of third country ships was that the Monimbo proved to be unseaworthy, the source said.

Another source said he recalled the Nicaraguan vessel was docked at the North Korean port of Hungnam in May 1985, the same week the administration began its initial soundings about Iranian willingness to open a dialogue.

A brief flurry of interest in the Iran-Sandinista connection occurred when Iranian Prime Minister Mir Hussein Musavi met with Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega in Managua in January 1985.

President Reagan cited that meeting as evidence of the "new danger" represented by the Sandinista government.

Philadelphia man called 'danger to himself, society'

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Nine years ago, a judge who sentenced Gary M. Heidnik to prison for the false imprisonment of a retarded woman said Heidnik "will be a danger both to himself and to society...This court is quite concerned."

Early Wednesday morning police found three women chained in Heidnik's basement and 24 pounds of human limbs in his kitchen freezer after a fourth woman escaped.

The block where police made their grisly discovery was open to traffic Sunday for the first time since Wednesday. "It was like a street festival Saturday," said officer Timothy King, guarding the crime scene.

Heidnik, 43, has been charged with multiple counts of rape, kidnapping and related charges and one count of murder. District Attorney Ronald Castille has said he expects to charge Heidnik in another death as well.

The concern shown by Common Pleas Court Judge Charles P. Mirarchi Jr. in 1978 was the result of the crimes Heidnik had committed and his long history of mental disorders.

Heidnik was accused of taking a 34-year-old woman with the intelligence of a 5-year-old from a mental institution and holding her for 10 days before authorities found her in his Philadelphia apartment, where he had been living with the woman's mentally impaired half-sister.

He was convicted of lesser charges, including false imprisonment, after neither woman testified, and sentenced to three to seven years.

Before his trial began, he was admitted to the veterans hospital at Coatesville, Pa. He told Mirarchi that he had been treated "three or four" times before at Coatesville.

Heidnik testified that he suffered from schizophrenia and took Thorazine, Cogentin and Inderal for it. One of the drugs, he told Mirarchi, was supposed to "stop my head from shaking...I mean, I do have problems, you know."

Neighbors have said they didn't know Heidnik well, but his records and acquaintances describe him as a man of contradictions.

Heidnik was trained as a nurse, but many of his victims were the mentally retarded. He piled up a $500,000 stock portfolio, but lived in one of the city's poorest neighborhoods. He associated frequently with blacks, but a former tenant said he sometimes spoke of a coming "race war."

In 1971, Heidnik and his brother opened the United Church of the Ministers of God, which had eight other members, all mentally retarded, according to his former wife.

In 1976, Heidnik allegedly barricaded himself in his basement and fired a shot that grazed tenant Robert Rogers, 45, when he tried to enter.

"He made up his mind: The race war was going to start, and I was going to be the first victim," said Rogers, who is black. Heidnik is white.

Charges of aggravated assault were dismissed, and he sold the house and moved. The new owners said they found pornographic comic books, garbage and a three-foot deep hole in the basement, large enough to hold a person.

Education agency backdated documents, paper says

WASHINGTON (AP) — Officials at Department of Education regional offices falsely dated documents to make it appear they were complying with a federal court order for swift review of civil rights complaints, a department spokesman said Sunday.

Secretary of Education William J. Bennett learned of the practice, which was most common at the Boston office, last June and called on James B. Thomas Jr., the department's inspector general, to investigate, said Loye Miller, the department's spokesman.

The inspector general's report was forwarded to a federal judge in Washington, Miller said.

"We discovered this in-house, that deadlines had not been met, and moved quickly to correct on our own initiative and to inform the federal court," Miller said.

The practice allowed department officials to certify falsely that the government was meeting court-ordered deadlines for review of civil rights abuses.

The court order, which stems from a 17-year-old lawsuit against the old Department of Health, Education and Welfare, requires the Education Department to issue Letters of Finding within 105 days after receiving civil rights complaints and to assure that any violations are corrected within 195 days.

The order, which was made by U.S. District John H. Pratt, covers colleges and other institutions.

"The court order in effect requires rather quick movements on civil rights complaints," Miller said. "Some of the deadlines were not being met. When we became aware of it...by some other personnel complaint...we told the federal court what had happened."

The Washington Post, which obtained a copy of the inspector general's report, reported in today's editions that the backdating took place in at least six of the department's 10 regional offices.

In the Boston office, seven officials, including the former civil rights director, acknowledged to department investigators that they participated, The Post said. Investigators, who compared papers with log books and other records, found dates altered in 23 of 35 cases in Boston, the Post said.

The backdating allegedly ranged from one day to two weeks.

Alicia Coro, acting assistant secretary for civil rights, told the newspaper that "some of the senior managers were actually instructing to employees to backdate documents."

In a report to Coro, also obtained by the Post, department officials said a nationwide review found dating discrepancies in half the regional offices.

Discrepancies were found in 14 of 32 cases examined in the Atlanta office, 18 of 26 cases in Dallas, 17 of 36 cases in Kansas City and seven of 20 cases in both San Francisco and Seattle, the report said.

1787 Constitution Daybook

Associated Press

Friday, March 30, 1787
PHILADELPHIA TODAY

The Street Commissioners today formally hired Messrs. Shiney and Pepper to take over the business of cleaning the city's streets. They replaced the crew of convicts who had been assigned that duty and had proven to be miserable failures.

Ann Warder, an English Quaker lady living in Philadelphia, described these convicts in her diary today:

"The convicts here have recently been condemned to hard labor instead of execution, and now clean the streets. They have an iron collar around their neck and waist to which a long chain is fastened and at the end of a heavy ball. As they proceed with their work this is taken up and thrown before them. Their clothing is a mixture of dark blue and brown stuff; their heads shaved; they wear parti-colored woolen caps, so that an attempt to escape would early be discovered. A guard accompanies each gang. At first the prisoners were much averse to this shameful exposure and preferred death to it. Two things I think need regulating, suffering people to talk to them, and to prevent their receiving money."

CONFEDERATION TODAY

William Samuel Johnson attended Congress during the day and dined at his club after the session. He must have had a sumptuous meal, for it cost 14 shillings.

The North Carolina delegation in Congress submitted a report with confirming documents relating to the seizure of merchandise belonging to a North Carolina resident by the Spanish at Fort Natches on the Mississippi. The Jay-Gardoqui negotiations proposed to close the Mississippi to American shipping. But, since the treaty was not in force, there was a jurisdictional question of whether or not the American government could do anything for the claimant.

Sometime this month (the record is not exactly clear when) an American explorer by the name of John Ledyard set out from St. Petersburg in Russia, intending to walk across Asia to Kamchatka, then secure ship passage to the west coast of North America and walk across that continent to Virginia.

DELEGATES TODAY

Gov. William Livingston of New Jersey wrote Jedidiah Morse with several suggestions concerning New Jersey geography for Morse's next edition of "Geography Made Easy." The first American geography had been so successful that Morse was revising and enlarging the work for its next edition. Livingston had taken great interest in the volume and throughout 1787 he submitted facts and figures about his state.

In today's letter, he mentioned that he had contacted every member of the Legislative Council (similar to a state Senate) and asked each one to submit materials about his county. Only three had complied to date, and Livingston promised the he would "give the delinquent councilors a gentle shove to perform their promise" at the upcoming legislative session in May.

Morse was considered the father of American geography. His textbook went through numerous editions and was a very popular educational item. Morse's son, Samuel F.B., was even more famous as a painter and inventor of the telegraph.

LOOKING BACK
John Ledyard — American Explorer

John Ledyard was a restless youth who ran away from his home in Connecticut to become a sailor. Eventually he joined the British Navy and accompanied Capt. James Cook on his epic voyages in the 1770s. He kept a journal of his adventures and published it in 1783. One year later, he began preparation for his trip around the world, in which he planned to walk from St. Petersburg to the Pacific Ocean, then cross to North America and walk to Virginia. Such a feat not only had never been done, it also had never been contemplated, and most observers thought he was mentally unbalanced.

Empress Catherine the Great of Russia refused him permission to cross her country for three years. Then, sometime during this month 200 years ago, he decided to embark on the journey anyway. He made some progress, but in September he was temporarily detained by Russian officials at Yakutsk. Ledyard was allowed to continue, but in February 1788 he was arrested under the empress' orders and returned to the Polish border, banished from Russia for life.

Ledyard had written to Thomas Jefferson shortly before his departure, describing his plans. Jefferson feared that the adventurer had "too much imagination," but he recognized the importance of exploring the North American frontier and probably began dreaming about a future expedition. Ledyard, for his part, gave up on the around-the-world idea. But the bug for epic adventure was still with him and he started making plans to explore the continent of Africa. Unfortunately, he died before he was able to fulfill this last dream.

NATION IN BRIEF

AIDS vaccine unlikely in this century, Koop says

NEW YORK (AP) — The complex nature of the AIDS virus is likely to prevent development of an AIDS vaccine in this century, U.S. Surgeon General C. Everett Koop warned Sunday.

"A cure I think is very problematical," Koop said in an interview aired on "Face the Nation," the CBS News program. "And a vaccine for this very complicated virus I don't think is in the cards for this century."

In Washington last week, experts including Dr. Robert Gallo of the National Cancer Institute, a co-discoverer of the AIDS virus, said a vaccine should be ready for general use by the mid-1990s.

But Koop, noting the tenacity and complexity of the deadly virus, was less optimistic.

"Vaccines take a long time to develop," he said, noting that it took 19 years to produce a vaccine against hepatitis B.

"This is a much more complicated virus," Koop said. He called tests of experimental AIDS vaccines "the very earliest preliminary tests, and before we have a vaccine available for use is a long way down the pike."

He indicated that the federal government's $80 million AIDS education budget was adequate.

Bad trip finally ends

DENVER (AP) — A Trailways Bus finally arrived after a 3½-day odyssey from Kansas City that included a holdup of passengers reminiscent of an Old West stagecoach stickup, a fierce spring blizzard and two breakdowns.

The 600-mile trip, which should have taken a little more than 14 hours, began Thursday morning and ended late Sunday night.

The five weary passengers refused to talk to reporters about it. They left the bus, quickly making their way to connecting routes or destinations in Denver. One passenger said only that he felt "lost" and refused to identify himself.

The passengers negotiated with Trailways officials immediately on their arrival, and settled for "a considerable amount of money," said an official for the bus company who refused to give his name.

Residents seek supermarket

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — Residents in the heart of the state's largest city say the low-income area is improving, but lacks one basic convenience. The neighborhood where about 68,000 people live has no major supermarket.

"You take a supermarket for granted, but you learn around here that you don't take anything for granted," said Mary Smith, a community leader in the city's Central Ward.

Seven years ago, residents began talks with Pathmark stores to get a supermarket, but many are still taking buses to other towns to buy their groceries.

A community group has purchased 90 percent of a rundown block for a supermarket, but has been stuck in court for two years trying to oust property owners who are holding out.

The group, New Community Corp., also buses residents to supermarkets in nearby Belleville, said Joe Cheneyfield, corporation vice president.

Race riots in the late 1960s prompted middle-class flight to the suburbs, and residents acknowledge that the ward has seen better days.

Rare bird sighted on key

BOOT KEY, Fla. (AP) — A bird last sighted in the Florida Keys in 1832 by naturalist and painter John James Audubon has been spotted twice on this tiny island, authorities said.

The first sighting of the Key West quail-dove March 22 was confirmed when an editor for the Audubon Society magazine saw it two days later, said Karen Sunderland of the society's research office in Tavernier.

The bird, though it is also called the Key West pigeon, now lives only in the West Indies, apparently because hunters killed them off in the Keys.

Key West birdwatcher Frances Hames said she thinks the one seen here may have been blown over from the Bahamas by a strong wind.

Quail-doves have brown backs, white bellies, green crowns and a white streak on their faces.

Abducted newborn found

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. (AP) — A newborn child abducted after the slaying of her mother was treated well by her captors, gaining a pound in three days before being found by authorities, her grandfather said today.

Friends and relatives were praying for Heather Marie Witt at her grandfather's house Sunday when the FBI called and said she was all right.

Wendy Lee Zabel, 23, and Robert H. Ryan, 26, surrendered peacefully late Sunday.

Spring weather due back in area

From Staff Reports

With springtime temperatures returning to the Permian Basin, residents may look forward to sunny skies and warmer weather.

Forecasters with the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Air Terminal say tonight will be fair, with the low in the upper 20s. Winds will be light and variable.

Tuesday's forecast calls for sunny skies, with the high in the uppers 60s. Winds will be from the south at 10 to 20 mph.

Sunday's high of 32 was 62 degrees cooler than the record of 94, set in 1946. The overnight low of 17, broke the 50-year-old record of 23 degrees, set in 1937.

STATE

A freeze warning is in effect tonight for most of Texas except the Lower Rio Grande Valley and some portions of West Texas.

Lows were expected to drop below freezing as far south as South Central Texas and Southeast Texas.

Winter weather was very much in evidence at dawn today as a mass of Arctic air sent temperatures plunging to record levels for March 30 at Lubbock, Midland-Odessa, Wichita Falls, Dallas-Fort Worth, Waco and Corpus Christi.

In Amarillo, the temperature was a record 12 degrees at 5:45 a.m., compared with the old record of 15 degrees, set in 1926. Wichita Falls had a record 23 degrees, compared with an old record of 27 degrees set in 1973.

Some light snow was falling early today in extreme Northeast Texas, but accumulations were expected to be less than an inch. Some very light snow fell late Sunday and early today in the Beaumont-Port Arthur-Orange area of Southeast Texas.

Forecasts called for sunny skies and warmer temperatures over West Texas, decreasing cloudiness and warmer temperatures over North Texas, windy and cold in South Texas today.

It will be mostly clear and cold statewide tonight.

Lows will be in the 20s, 30s and 40s.

Highs Tuesday will be in 60s except in the Big Bend area of Southwest Texas and in extreme South Texas where readings will be in the 70s.

Early-morning temperatures were in the teens in the Panhandle and South Plains and in the 20s and 30s elsewhere except in the Lower Rio Grande Valley where readings were in the 40s. Extremes ranged from 13 at Amarillo to 45 at Brownsville.

The kitchen, above, located at the back of the house, is separated from the dining room by the butler's pantry. In the original 1901 parlor, shown below, is a music box sitting beneath the lamp; the couple's brass bed is visible in the next room. Many of the furnishings in the home are original.

Joseph and Mary Potton had the only bedroom in the Big Spring house, top photo. The wood stove that heated the room is visible in the mirror's reflection. The attic, shown in bottom photo, was remodeled and used as a children's bedroom after several of their grandchildren moved in. At the foot of the bed is a trunk covered with children's books, including the "Pitter Patter" book and "Toy Train," as well as a toy cash register and wooden pull toy.

Mechanic's mansion

BIG SPRING — Just a short walk from the railroad roundhouse where he used to work stands the Victorian home built in 1901 by master mechanic Joseph Potton, one of early Big Spring's leading citizens.

The home, designed by the Fort Worth firm S.B. Hagart and Son, has been completely restored, and is now owned by the Howard County Historical Commission.

The Dora Roberts Foundation donated $25,000 to buy the house and $5,000 to buy the furnishings, according to Polly Mays, who chairs the commission.

Located on the edge of downtown, the Potton house, circled by its original iron fence, welcomes visitors with an airy entrance way, high ceilings and framed photographs of Mr. and Mrs. Potton.

Much of the home contains original furnishings used by the Pottons. Just near the front door is a still-working grandfather clock Potton brought back from his homeland, England, in 1907. The clock is valued at $2,500, ironically what it cost to build the house in 1901.

Hanging on a peg is a Stetson's black felt derby

The Potton House frames the state historical marker donated to the site in 1976. Above an attic gable on the left is marker that says simply "1901," the year it was built.

(size 7¼, cost $3.50) once owned by Potton.

Ms. Mays, who chairs the commission, said the one-bedroom Potton home was considered a mansion in its day.

Potton, born in 1847 in Portsmouth, England, came to the Lone Star State in 1882 probably at the behest of his employer, the Texas and Pacific Railroad. He came to Big Spring in 1892.

His wife Mary, also an English native, came with him. Both were in their 30s when they adopted Texas. They had three children, two girls and a boy.

Although Potton built the house in 1901, he leased it until 1912, when the family finally moved in, Ms. Mays said.

The parlor, second-largest room in the home, contains a piano built by Listz Knabe purchased by Potton just a few weeks after Teddy Roosevelt bought an identical one. Here, Mrs. Potton probably served her afternoon teas to members of St. Mary's Episcopal Guild.

DEATHS

Clara Tyler

BIG SPRING — Funeral services for Clara Tyler, 84, of Midland, will be at 1:30 p.m. Tuesday at Nalley-Pickle and Welch Rosewood Chapel, with the Rev. Bob Porterfield, paster of the West Kentucky Baptist Church, officiating. Burial will follow at Trinity Memorial Park in Big Spring.

She died Sunday in a Midland nursing home after a lengthy illness.

She was born Nov. 18, 1902, in Ellis County. She married Cleve Tyler Dec. 11, 1920, in Big Spring. He preceded her in death in February, 1964. She was a member of the First Baptist Church of Coahoma. She moved with her family in 1913 to Howard County and settled in the Coahoma area. She and her husband farmed north of Coahoma until his death, when she moved to Coahoma. She moved to Midland in September, 1986.

Survivors include a daughter, Mrs. Elton (Dorothy) Holloway of Midland; two sons, T.D. Tyler of Johnson City, Kan. and Leney Tyler of Bay City; a brother, George Warren of Coahoma; a sister, Juanita Parks of Sacramento, Calif.; 15 grandchildren and 20 great-grandchildren.

Besides her husband, Mrs. Tyler was preceded in death by a son, C.T. Tyler on March 11, 1974; her parents and four brothers.

Pallbearers are Alvie Harrison, Clinton Harrison, Doug Warren, Randall Reid, Buddy Anderson and J.D. Spears.

Auto mishap

Paramedics attend a woman who was slightly injured Sunday afternoon in a two-vehicle accident. According to the Department of Public Safety, a report was unavailable because the woman was treated and released. Bystanders said the accident occurred about 5:30 p.m. at the intersection of State Highway 191 and Andrews Highway.

Man who kept SRT at bay expected to be charged

From Staff Reports

Police said this morning a 50-year-old man who kept the Special Response Team at bay for several hours late Sunday will be charged with making a terroristic threat.

The man's diabetic wife, who reportedly had been without insulin for several days, was treated and was improving, police said.

The episode began when the Permian Basin Center for Battered Women and Their Children received an anonymous telephone call about a diabetic woman who had not received insulin. Police were dispatched to a residence in the 400 block of C Street shortly after 6 p.m..

Authorities said two officers went into the yard of the residence when one thought the man, wearing what appeared to be a U.S. military uniform, reached for a weapon. Afterward, they saw the man carrying a sword and were told he owned a gun. By that time, the man, who police say was Puerto Rican, had blocked the door with an icebox, police said, and the SRT was called in about 8:20 p.m. because the woman's condition appeared to be worsening.

After several hours of negotiations, officers entered the apartment, and the man was arrested without incident. Police said they found some ammunition in the house and a rifle in the man's car.

The Border Patrol was notified of the man's arrest, police said.

ARMED FORCES NEWS

Navy Seaman Recruit Joe A. Sanchez, son of Joe A. and Zoila Sanchez of Midland, recently completed recruit training at Recruit Training Command, San Diego, Calif.

During Sanchez's eight-week training cycle, he studied general military subjects designed to prepare him for further academic and on-the-job training in one of the Navy's 85 basic fields.

Sanchez's studies included seamanship, close order drill, Naval history and first aid. Personnel who complete this course of instruction are eligible for three hours of college credit in Physical Education and Hygiene.

A 1986 graduate of Lee High School, he joined the Navy in Oct. 1986.

Naval Recruit Billy Richardson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ralphard Ray Richardson of Midland, recently enlisted for a three-year tour of duty. He will begin recruit training in November at Great Lakes, Ill.

After eight weeks of recruit training, he will be a member of the Navy's medical field program.

Naval Recruit Jimmy Rodriquez, son of Mr. and Mrs. Pete Rodriquez of Midland, will begin recruit training in San Diego, Calif., beginning in August.

After the eight-week training period, he will be a member of the Navy's communication field program.

Sgt. Johnnie B. Saul, son of Deanna Saul of Midland, has reenlisted in the U.S. Air Force after being selected for career status.

Assigned at Tinker Air Force Base, Okla., Saul was approved for reenlistment by a board which considered character and performance.

He is an airborne communications systems operator with the 963rd Airborne Warning and Control Squadron.

Airman 1st Class Darcy J. Cano, son of Mr. and Mrs. Diego Cano of Midland, has graduated from Air Force basic training at Lackland Air Force Base.

During the six weeks of training the airman studied the Air Force Mission, organization and customs and received special training in human relations.

In addition, airmen who complete basic training earn credits toward an associate degree through the Community College of the Air Force.

He is a 1984 graduate of Midland High School.

Naval Recruit Rocky Sanchez, son of Mr. and Mrs. Etitacio Sanchez of Midland, will begin recruit training in San Diego, Calif., in July.

After the eight week training cycle, Sanchez will be a member of the Navy's aviation apprentice training program.

POTTON

The bedroom holds the couple's brass bed and an iron wood stove similar to, but smaller than, the original. At the foot of the bed is their wooden camelback trunk. A bathroom is just a few steps away from the bedroom, and an outhouse was also built.

Ms. Mays said there are many doors, dozens of windows, and eight transoms in the interior of the house.

"They were a great aid to ventilation, but, also, then there was a great fear of fire," she said. "The floors of the house are pine, except in the dining room which has a fir floor."

The windows and areas above the doors are painted yellow and green, or "spinach and cream," as they were referred to when the house was built.

The parlor and the dining room hold the house's two fireplaces; to the left of the dining room hearth is the china cabinet. Above it is a swivel lamp anchored to the wall after the house was wired for electricity.

Just off the dining room is a butler's pantry, with a hall leading into the kitchen. In the main pantry, Mrs. Potton's tiny tea strainer was left, along with a cherry pitter, old light bulbs and 1925 Texas vehicle license plate.

Beneath the kitchen is a cellar that was used for storage.

The attic of the home was remodeled into a children's bedroom after several of the grandchildren came to live with the Pottons.

The exterior of the home is Pecos sandstone that Ms. Mays said was brought in by train. She said it was a commonly-used material in 1901 (and also was used in the construction of the county's second courthouse).

Ms. Mays said the iron pillars of the house may be flues from an old steam engine. Decorations on the gables are zinc; the gables also sport fish-shaped shingles.

Behind the house is a big yard, which had a large barn for the horse, buggy, and a compartment for wood and coal. Later, as Potton owned the first automobile in the city, it was used as a garage.

Mrs. Potton died in 1914, when she was 64, according to Ms. Mays. Potton died six years later. After his death, the family lived in the home until 1965.

The home was entered in the National Register of Historic Places in 1975 and was recorded as a Texas Historical Landmark in 1976.

The Potton House is one of 17 historical homes in the Big Spring area, Ms. Mays said. As part of the commission's work, Howard County plans to produce its own historical marker, a gold burnished metal reproduction of Signal Peak and surrounding mesas.

Firms afraid to leave even shred of evidence

DALLAS (AP) — When Steve Webster makes a fresh pot of coffee at Bell Helicopter Textron Inc., someone might get the idea he's using a secret remedy.

He tosses the old coffee grounds into the company paper shredder — the same place as classified documents the company doesn't want anyone seeing.

Bell doesn't want to risk an employee throwing a sensitive item in the ordinary trash so all of the trash in Webster's department is placed in sealed wax bags, which then are turned into a confetti even the shrewdest industrial spy couldn't put back together.

Like many other Fortune 500 companies, Bell has installed industrial strength paper shredders, garbage cans that lock, and signs that read "Better Shred than Read."

Texas, with its high concentration of computer and defense industries, feels particularly vulnerable.

"It's an appropriate paranoia," says Srully Blotnick, a New York business psychologist. "If someone has a two- or three-month lead time on you on the introduction of a new product, that's huge. If someone can find your diagrams and blueprints and memos and plans, it's worth hundreds of millions of dollars."

IBM claimed losses between $750 million to $2.5 billion in the early 1980s when it sued Hitachi Ltd. of Japan and National Semiconductor Corp. for stealing trade secrets in a joint espionage plot. The case was settled out of court for about $300 million in 1983.

Some companies do shredding for private citizens worried about someone finding such things as their bank numbers.

"You have to be very careful," says Glenda Uehlein, whose year-old Mesquite-based Mobile Document Destruction Service pulls right up to your door.

Few companies, it seems, are immune. Even the Dallas Cowboys shred extra or old game plans and scouting notes. "It's a safety factor," said assistant coach Dick Nolan.

In the world of industrial espionage, garbage accounts for about 35 percent of the way spies obtain information, says Richard Heberlein, national chairman for safeguarding proprietary information committee for the American Society for Industrial Security.

WEST TEXAS IN BRIEF

Archaeologist to speak on prehistoric adaptations

From Staff Reports

The Midland Archaeological Society's monthly meeting will be at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday in the new wing of the Museum of the Southwest, which can be entered on the west side.

Guest speaker will be David Meltzer, assistant professor of anthropology at Southern Methodist University. He will speak on "Adaptation Under Stress: Archaeology of the Altithermal."

Meltzer earned a bachelor of arts degree in anthropology and soils from the University of Maryland and went on to obtain a master's degree and doctorate in anthropology from the University of Washington.

Meltzer's fields of interest include Paleoindian prehistory, especially in the Southern Llano Estacado, and the Quaternary paleoecology of North America.

During the last two summers, he has conducted excavations at Mustang Springs, east of Midland. Archaeologist Michael Collins, formerly of Midland, assisted with the research.

At the site, Meltzer discovered several prehistoric hand-dug water wells, which have provided clues to the prehistoric climate.

The public is invited to attend.

Probe into fire continues

From Staff Reports

The investigation continues into a weekend Odessa fire that an Ector County sheriff's captain said caused the death of three children while their father was at a local bar.

Capt. Gene Kloss of the Ector County Sheriff's Department said his office is waiting for the Odessa Fire Department to determine the cause of the fire before considering neglect charges against the children's father.

Odessa Fire Marshall Rick Cates said he expects to have an official cause of the fire by late today.

Preliminary investigations indicate the fire that destroyed the west-side Odessa trailer house was sparked by an electrical short in the dryer, Cates said.

The charred bodies of Jonathan Kelley, 8; Charla Kelley, 4; and Stacey Kelley, 2, were found in the ruined trailer after the 2 a.m. Saturday fire.

Kloss said the mother, Kelly Kelley of McCamey, said her children were taken away and given to the father.

Jaycees' role honored

From Staff Reports

The Midland Jaycees were recently awarded the Honorable Mention Service Club award by the Texas Recreation and Park Society for its role in the development of Centennial Plaza, Jon P. Butler Park and the Tot Lot at Windlands Park.

"We're honored and pleased to be recognized by a statewide organization for our community development efforts," said Ron Munn, local Jaycees president.

Accepting the award on behalf of the Jaycees at the TRAPS awards dinner in Galveston were Guy McCrary and Kelly Fish, president and vice president of Midland Centennial Plaza Association, an affiliate of the Midland Jaycees.

George Logan, Midland Parks and Recreation director and TRAPS director, said, "The Jaycees have been active and enthusiastic volunteers in the Midland parks system and this recognition is well-deserved."

Jaycees is a leadership training organization through community service for persons between the ages of 18 and 35. For more information about the Jaycees, call 683-7330.

Bankruptcy judge to speak

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — U.S. Bankruptcy Judge R. Glen Ayers will be the featured speaker at the Permian Basin Economics Club monthly meeting April 2.

According to PBEC President Jim Williams, the April meeting will be held at the Holiday Inn Country Villa Convention Center in Midland, rather than Mission Country Club, because Judge Ayers will be holding bankruptcy court hearings.

Ayers, who holds degrees from the Harvard School of Law, the University of South Carolina, the University of North Carolina and Clemson University, presides over bankruptcy proceedings throughout the Western District of Texas.

Williams, a principal of Texas Business Forecasts, urged members to encourage their business associates to attend the meeting "to hear a person intimately familiar with what makes businesses fail or succeed in West Texas."

Williams urged that reservations be made no later than noon Tuesday by calling 563-5553.

The cost of the luncheon is $9 for members and $15 for non-members and guests.

Local students honored

From Staff Reports

Students from Lee and Midland High Schools recently participated in the Texas Forensic Association's State Tournament in Dallas.

Earning honors were LHS students Kelly Johnson, named the Outstanding Speaker in the Congress; Joanna Horn, semi-finalist in Original Oratory; Becky Horn, quarterfinalist in Lincoln-Douglas Debate; Joanna Horn and Samta Khandelwal, octa-finalists in cross-examination debate; and Midland High School students Danica Milios, third place in Humorous Interpretation; and Jennifer Helms and Stephen Murrell, quarterfinalists in Duet Acting.

Bandits sell technology to Soviets for bounty of cash

EDITOR'S NOTE: Werner Brunchhausen is scheduled to be sentenced today.

By FAYE FIORE
Copley News Service

LOS ANGELES — Christopher Boyce was a $140-a-week general clerk dabbling in drugs and surfing the Palos Verdes Peninsula when he engineered one of the most notorious espionage cases of all time.

A 21-year-old political rebel who sold classified satellite secrets to the KGB, Boyce the spy went down in motion picture history in "The Falcon and The Snowman."

But it isn't likely they'll make a movie about Werner Bruchhausen.

The 47-year-old West German wasn't a spy, he was the master of "techno-bandits," a little-known fraternity of international businessmen who secretly sell American technology to the Soviet Union at enormous prices.

THE CRIME of illegal export lacks the luster of espionage — the theft of classified information — but federal prosecutors say the damage to national security is "untold."

And a spate of recent cases like Bruchhausen's underscore their belief that pirating thrives in the aerospace-rich cities from Santa Monica to San Diego, Southern California's own Silicon Valley.

"There are a tremendous number of companies with Department of Defense contracts in that area. And there are a host of people out there who are trying to dupe us," said J.R. Mellitt, retired FBI agent and assistant manager of corporate security for Hughes Aircraft in suburban Westchester.

THE COASTLINE is prime hunting ground for technology bandits: a dense cluster of high-tech firms just hours by car from the international gateways of Los Angeles Harbor, Long Beach Harbor and Los Angeles International Airport.

And the bounty is cash.

"I can't think of any case motivated by loyalty to a foreign nation. In almost every case, the common denominator is greed," said U.S. Attorney Robert C. Bonner, the chief federal prosecutor in Los Angeles.

The central district that spans California from San Luis Obispo to San Clemente has prosecuted about 22 diversion cases since 1980, more than any federal jurisdiction in the country.

Exportation of military and commercial equipment is restricted by the State Department and Department of Commerce through commodity and munition control lists.

Transfer to a foreign country of any item on those lists marked "classified" is espionage. But the sale of material that does not rise to that level of secrecy falls into mundane criminal headings like "false statement to a government agency."

The government estimates that the Soviets spend up to $1.5 billion a year to steal Western technology, offering profits as high as 300 percent for businessmen who can slip it out of country.

AS MANY as 5,000 Soviet projects are said to have benefited from stolen American brainstorms, according to Ambassador Robert W. Dean, a White House expert on illegal exportation who testified at a recent trial.

Translated, illegal exports can be everything from blueprints for a bomb factory to high-frequency transistors that eavesdrop on NATO discussions of troop movements.

The government says Bruchhausen was unparalelled in his field. Convicted recently of 15 counts of wire fraud, the electronics mastermind pushed Soviet technology a decade forward with enough computer parts to build a microchip plant in Moscow, said Assistant U.S. Attorney William Fahey, chief of the public fraud and government corruption unit.

BUT HIS was just one of several diversion cases to cross Fahey's desk in recent months.

■ Charles McVey II is considered a fugitive. He disappeared before he was indicted in March 1983 on charges of shipping more than $15 million in space satellite equipment to the Soviet Union. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger termed the equipment "indispensable" to the American space program.

"The incredible chutzpah," said prosecutor Fahey, "is he not only exported the technology, but a team of experts to set it up and keep it running."

■ Brothers Ronald and Barry Semler were indicted in January for contracting the sale of 102 high-performance Hughes helicopters to communist North Korea. The Semlers had formed a West German helicopter sales and service company that became Hughes' Western European distributor.

Federal agents intercepted the last shipment of 15 commercial helicopters. But they say 87 others, capable of conversion to military use, arrived in North Korea.

■ Richard K. Smyth, indicted for selling nuclear triggering devices to Israel, moved out of his waterfront home in nearby Huntington Harbor and friends have said he "does not plan to return" to the United States.

He has been considered a fugitive since August 1985, when he failed to appear for trial.

"I can't think of any case motivated by loyalty to a foreign nation. In almost every case, the common denominator is greed."

— U.S. Attorney Robert C. Bonner
Los Angeles chief federal prosecutor

AMBASSADOR DEAN testified that Western businessmen like Smyth, McVey and the others are a favorite tool of diversion for foreign agents.

The Soviets shop international trade fairs to find out what technology is available and look for Western businessmen "out to make a quick buck," said customs special agent Steven Dodge. American manufacturers often fill orders believing they will be used within the United States.

But customs agents say it is impossible to estimate the amount of technology that slips past inspectors in mismarked crates and is lost among millions of tons of shipments that leave Los Angeles every year.

"This is a commitment administered and funded by the Soviet government and carried out by the KGB," said special agent Dodge, a veteran investigator of illegal export cases.

But customs can't search every package that leaves the United States any more than the Internal Revenue Service could audit every taxpayer who files a return, agents and prosecutors agree.

"There are 100 miles of dock in Los Angeles and Long Beach harbors. That crate would be backed up to downtown L.A. in about six weeks — and that isn't counting what goes out of LAX (the Los Angeles airport)," Dodge said.

BUT THE massive volume of prosecutor caseloads indicates businessmen aren't always truthful in marking shipments. And this has prompted a host of security measures by federal agencies and Southern California defense contractors.

The U.S. Attorney's Office, the FBI, CIA, U.S. Customs and the Department of Commerce hold seminars at aerospace firms to make manufacturers suspicious of their buyers' motives.

"If it can't be plugged into a socket in the United States and he says he's not going to export it, that's probably a good indication he will," Dodge said.

Although agents say technology thieves are undermining national security, the penalties so far have not reflected the magnitude of the crime, officials complain.

Albert F. Kessler was arrested trying to board a London-bound plane at L.A. Airport, his luggage stuffed with nearly a half-million dollars worth of Hughes missile and satellite guidance systems. Kessler and two others were convicted in August 1982 after a Hughes employee noticed one of them was not conversant in the technology he ordered.

The most severe sentence in that case was six months in prison.

BY CONTRAST, former FBI agent Richard Miller was convicted of passing a single classified document to a female KGB agent in a trial that captured international attention.

Miller was sentenced to life in prison for espionage.

So far the stiffest sentence for illegal exportation was dealt to a suburban Redondo Beach man, Antoli Maluta, convicted of helping Bruchhausen export millions of dollars in technology from South Bay firms. He served three years of a five-year sentence.

If the government gets its wish, Bruchhausen will break the existing record when he is sentenced today. Fahey said he will ask for the stiffest sentence ever imposed.

MEANWHILE, THE government continues its search for techno-bandit fugitives who are among the most nation's most-wanted men.

It took seven years for them to extradite and convict Bruchhausen, and Fahey said they will continue with the same dogged determination until fugitives like McVey and Smyth go to trial.

"Everybody knew Bruchhausen. Everybody thought he was untouchable," Fahey said. "The message I want to go out is this: 'You can run, but you cannot hide.'"

Mountain climber's widow determined to reach top

Hearst News Service

She lost her husband and nearly all her fingers and toes on 28,208-foot Kanchenjunga, yet Cherie Bremer-Kamp still dreams of returning to climb Earth's third-highest peak. The next time will be solo, she says. Her commitment reaches further than most dedicated climbers care to go.

Bremer-Kamp was married for five years to physician Chris Chandler, one of America's premier alpine climbers, until January 1985, when he died on Kanchenjunga in the Himalayas. Her first book, "Living on the Edge," recounts her misadventure on Kanchenjunga's North Face. It is a tale of grand dreams that fell to pieces only hours from the summit and of sacrifices that brought no glory, only death in the jet stream.

Bremer-Kamp, 41, ponderes the question of reasonable limits regarding her 1985 Kanchenjunga climb, then one of the boldest summit bids in Himalayan annals.

"I'm frankly amazed at how gullible some climbers are," she says. It's a trend that some call "superalpinism."

Superalpinists reject the military attack mentality of expeditions to the world's 8,000-meter peaks. No more bottled oxygen. No more native porters lugging tons of gear to stock five or six tent camps on high. No more lingering three months on a mountain's lower flanks to acclimatize between ferrying back-cracking loads.

INSTEAD, THE superalpinists choose a new purity of ascent, a bracing minimalism. They climb in one quick continuous push, setting camps as they rise with maybe one partner or two — in as little time as four weeks or less for even the world's tallest peaks.

There are extreme risks with this new style. With little support from below, and minimal hope of rescue, these teams are more at the mercy of weather and avalanches. And they risk higher vulnerability to cerebral and pulmonary edema, unpredictable and often fatal altitude ailments whose origins are medical mysteries. That is what killed Chandler.

The couple's first try at their beloved mountain, nicknamed "Kanch," was in spring 1981. They made it to within 2,000 feet of the summit. Their second try, from Nov. 25, 1984, to Jan. 19, 1985, was the first time any climbers had ever tried to scale Kanchenjunga in the winter.

They again chose the forbidding North Face, a wall of ice-plastered rock and hanging glaciers once judged unclimbable. To do it in winter, when the earth's 200-mph jet stream dipped to 23,000 feet and engulfed most of the peak, when the temperatures at dusk plummeted to nearly minus 70 degrees — so cold it snapped the metal posts of their crampons — was beyond comprehension.

Chandler and his wife had only two expedition companions: a friend, Lori Orlando, who managed the base camp at 16,800 feet, and a 27-year-old Nepalese man, Mongol Singh Tamng, who was an alpine novice. He helped carry loads and made it to their ill-fated high camp.

BEFORE THEY left for the Himalayas, Orlando had a troubling dream and shared it with Bremer-Kamp. There are three climbers, she said, and they are very close to the top. One is sitting alone with his back to the mountain and the others go down without him. One of them is yelling at the other.

"Something is terribly wrong, but I can't work it out," Bremer-Kamp was told. "One of the climbers looks like he doesn't know what he's doing, like he's not used to climbing. There will be much falling. Wait, there's something else I forgot to tell you. It's about the gloves. You lose or drop one, yes. Cherie, you've got to do something about your hands. Promise me."

In between load carries, which they only could manage one day in three because of the winds, the three climbers spent 13 nights at base camp, at 16,800 feet; six nights in a tent at 18,500 feet; 22 nights in a tent at 20,000 feet; three nights at 22,800 feet; one forced bivouac at 23,700 feet, standing on a rock ledge; one night at 24,000 feet in a tent; and their final ascent night in a cramped snow cave at 26,000 feet.

At that altitude, only one-third the oxygen at sea-level is available in the atmosphere, and experienced climbers force themselves to function through their stupor by rote behaviors.

The morning of their 45th day brought splendid weather, and Chandler was tending the butane stoves when the flames went out. But he just sat there breathing in raw gas fumes, wearing a silly grin. Later, he gagged severely and was too weak to put on his own crampons, so Bremer-Kamp had to help him.

Then Chandler declared, "I'm going blind; I can't see anything." Bremer-Kamp realized he had been stricken with cerebral edema, a deadly illness at that altitude. Her body experienced a jolt of adrenalin, constricting her blood vessels — and at that instant she could feel her fingers grow stiff and clawlike. In panic, she tore off her gloves to look, and the air temperature of about minus 60 degrees froze her fingers solid in less than five seconds.

SHE AND Mongol labored to get Chandler down the mountain, roping him between themselves, but he stumbled like a drunk. At one point they all fell about 400 feet down the face. They were saved when their rope snagged on a snowdrift. After a full day of effort, they had only lowered him 1,000 vertical feet, a distance healthy climbers can drop in half an hour or less.

They carved a bivouac platform on a slope and prepared to hunker down for another night. The last thing she heard him say was, "Will somebody help me?" And he tried to run away inside his sleeping bag, but fell down and died.

She propped his body up facing the Tibetan plateau below; there was no safe way to get it down. Then she and Mongol took four hellish days to drop to base camp. By then her fingers and toes were black and dead. It took a runner eight days to reach a village that had a radio and call for help.

All of Orlando's dream had been realized. Yet, after that living nightmare, Bremer-Kamp still wants to go back, to use her nursing skills to set up a health clinic for the Nepalese and to climb the mountain one more time.

"I still don't know what my potential is," she concedes. "I don't know if I can even hold an ice axe. But I'd like to go back and climb Kanch solo. That's my innermost desire. It's really beautiful up there. I feel so very close to that mountain."

Monthly luncheon scheduled

Midland Christian Women's Club will have its monthly luncheon 11:30 a.m. April 7 at Green Tree Country Club. Julie Rozan and Nancy Navarro of The Shop will display items from the store and give tips in basket arranging. Members bringing guests will be eligible for a drawing for a basket.

Soprano Jane Ward will present music. Lea Hemphill of Dallas will be guest speaker.

Cost of the luncheon will be $10. Nursery for pre-school children will be at Northwestern Baptist Church. Mothers are asked to bring sack lunches for their children. Drinks will be provided.

For luncheon and nursery reservations call 686-9277 or 684-4444. Midland Christian Women's Club has no dues or fees, is non-denominational and is open to all interested women.

DEAR ABBY

Readers debate if gift requires thank-you note

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am constantly amazed at some of the nitwits who write to you. I refer particularly to "Burned Up in Butte" whose son received a card for his 16th birthday with this handwritten message: "Sorry, Billy, no money this time because we received no thank-you for the money we sent last year. Lots of love, Grandma and Grandpa Jones."

"Burned" complained: "Although these grandparents are retired and living on a fixed income, they are far from poor, and it wouldn't have hurt them to have enclosed a $10 bill."

Abby, instead of taking offense, "Burned" should have boxed Billy's ears all the way to the desk and forced him to write his grandparents a long letter of apology.

You asked your readers how they felt about Grandma's message to Billy. How did they feel? — MRS. GLENN R.

DEAR MRS. R.: "Burned" lost to Grandma in a landslide. Some typical letters:

DEAR ABBY: I'd like to nominate Grandma Jones for Grandmother of the Year. I wish I had the guts years ago to do what she did.

I have seven grandchildren whom I've outfitted lavishly every Easter and Christmas. On their birthdays I have sent them all sizable checks and became so accustomed to not receiving any kind of thank-you, I would have fainted had one arrived.

From now on, I'm going to follow Grandma Jones' lead. — ANOTHER GRANDMA, MOLINE, ILL.

DEAR ABBY: If children have no manners, whose fault is it? Their parents'.

Listen to this: Every year, our 42-year-old daughter-in-law has acknowledged our carefully chosen Christmas gifts in the following manner: "Thank you for the lovely silver bowl for us; for the nice jacket and sweater for Jane (age 18); for the stereo for Dick (age 16). Love, Betty." Period.

The least she could have done was to have added: "We are fine. How are you? Dick and Jane broke their right arms so they are unable to write." — ANONYMOUS IN ROSWELL, N.M.

DEAR ABBY: Can you top this for ingratitude? After her birthday last year, our 23-year-old niece phoned us from Los Angeles — not to thank us for our card with money enclosed, but to complain because it wasn't enough! — PHLABBERGASTED IN PHOENIX

DEAR ABBY: When my children were little, I sat them down with crayons and paper before they even knew how to write and said, "Copy this!" Then they would "draw" a picture of the gift they had received and copy their names, after which they placed X's for kisses.

People shouldn't be so hard on kids. They learn what they are taught. — MINNESOTA MOM

Another victim comes forward

EDITOR'S NOTE: Responding to a recent AP series entitled "Fugitives," a second victim of rapist William Ted Wilhoit has come forward to tell her story of the events of 1973-74, saying, "We've all been fugitives." Her account raises new questions about the arrest and conviction of Kenneth Leslie Miller, who spent 11 years on the run for a crime authorities now say that Wilhoit committed.

By MIKE COCHRAN
Associated Press Writer

Years later, Jenny Dennis would recall that August night in 1973 as uncomfortable, fitful and filled with horrible dreams.

"I had just moved into my new house" in Fort Worth, she said, "and I still remember the nightmares I had that night."

An omen, perhaps.

Within hours she would be at the mercy of a knife-wielding rapist and become a part of a 13-year ordeal involving sexual assaults, attempted murder, mistaken identity, alleged police brutality and fugitives on the run.

Though she took the witness stand and told her story, the jury system would be her attacker's ally and not her own.

She would surrender her innocence for unwarranted but haunting feelings of guilt. And in March 1987, she would offer a story that would cast another shadow over the investigation of the June 1974 shooting of TCU coed Janelle Kirby.

"Somebody's lying," she insists.

Jenny Dennis arose that torrid August 1973 morning, dressed and climbed in her car for the short drive to Texas Christian University to enroll for her senior year as a student in medical technology.

Her car died.

As she struggled with the ignition, a young man saw her dilemma and started across the street toward the car.

"I'd never met him, never talked to him," she said. "Right before he got there, the car started, so I kinda waved and he kinda waved."

After returning from the TCU campus, she noticed the house door had been tampered with. She was concerned but not alarmed.

A short time later, a young man appeared at her door and said he had come to welcome her to the neighborhood.

"It was this guy that I'd seen that morning, and he said: 'Hi, my name is so-and-so.'

"I'm just a kid and I don't know any different, and I think, well, that's nice. He's already tried to help me with my car, so it was a neighborly gesture.

"When he came through the door, my pet bulldog got between us and was stiff as she could be, growling and snarling, and she'd never been like that."

The man stopped in his tracks.

"I'm afraid of dogs," he said. "Could you do something with her?"

She put the dog out.

They chatted for several minutes, and she turned away momentarily.

"I think I knew it was coming a millisecond before it happened," she recalled. "In an instant, he was behind me with the knife at my throat."

He was not very big and didn't weigh much. The knife was "just a knife."

But, she added, "Fear is a great equalizer. And it was a paralyzing fear. It literally makes you feel like you have no bones, just limp."

Instinctively, she grabbed his hands to prevent him from cutting her throat. Her mind was a jumble of thoughts.

"Where will he take me? How will they find me? Who's going to find me?"

She hoped it would not be her mother.

The intruder bound her hands with panty hose and began to undress her.

"He went over to draw the blinds and somehow I got one hand free, and when he came back, we had a scuffle and fell down, and I hit him in the head and broke his watch, and he got the knife back at my throat."

She remembers apologizing for resisting and begging him not to kill her.

The intruder terrorized her sexually for nearly three hours, but failed to commit rape in the legal sense. Jurors thought that was significant. They also wondered why she hadn't tried to escape.

Against a backdrop of "All My Children" on the television screen, the intruder straightened up the room and removed any signs of a struggle.

Ms. Dennis remembered thinking, "What's this guy doing? I know who he is. I know where he lives. He can't possibly let me go."

Then her assailant, William Ted Wilhoit, 20, walked out the door.

"He just left," she said. "I'm incredulous. I'm thankful, but I'm incredulous."

Bright, upbeat and stylish, Jenny Dennis works today in the trust department of a Fort Worth bank.

"I had an unpleasant experience in 1973, and I wish it hadn't happened, but having experienced it, there are good things about me that I might not be otherwise," she says.

"It made me a stronger person, maybe in some ways too strong. It made me thankful for my life, and it made me appreciate life itself. I'm a more compassionate person.

"For the rest of my life, I will be a rape victim. But I'm happy and I'm content with who I am, and I don't want to give the impression that I sit around terrified of life. I just try to be very careful."

She says she was aware as a college student of the dangers of rape, but, like everyone, thought it happened only to others.

"Not to me in my own house in broad daylight," she said. "It changed my life forever. I don't dwell on it, but it's there. The awareness now is subtle, but it's always there."

Though her marriage to her college boyfriend failed, she said her life now is "normal," with "good relationships, wonderful friends and wonderful family."

She declares "I will not give Wilhoit the victory of ruining my life."

Police wasted little time in August 1973 arresting William Ted Wilhoit and charging him with assault with intent to rape. But they failed to take photographs of the cuts and bruises on the hands, arms and neck of Jenny Dennis.

The absence of such evidence would be pivotal in the jury's decision six months later to acquit Wilhoit of the assault charge.

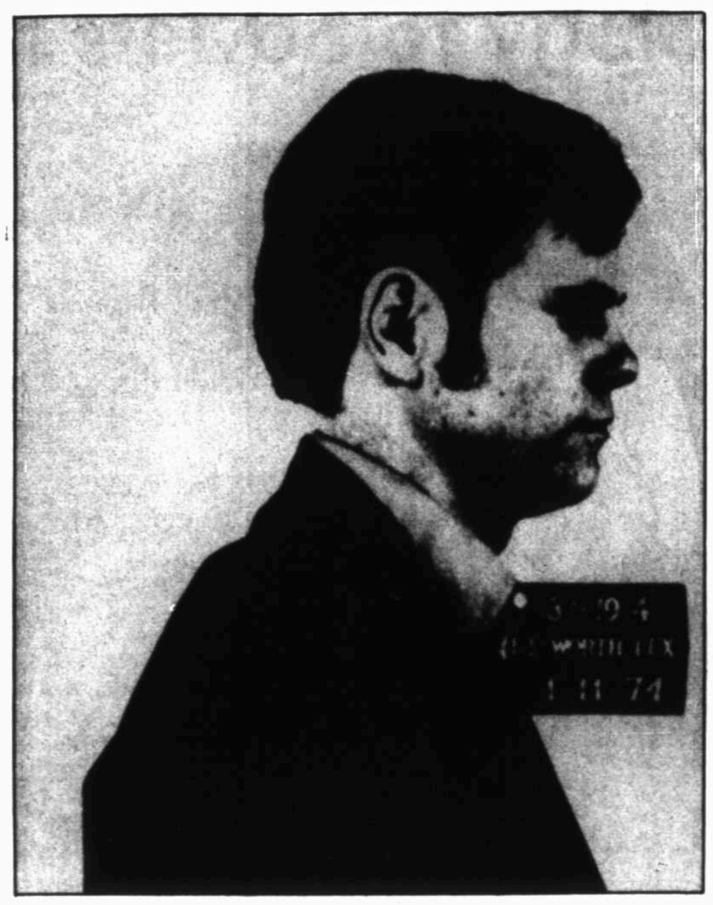

"The pictures could have made a difference," Ms. Dennis says now. "It's a mystery why they took no pictures."

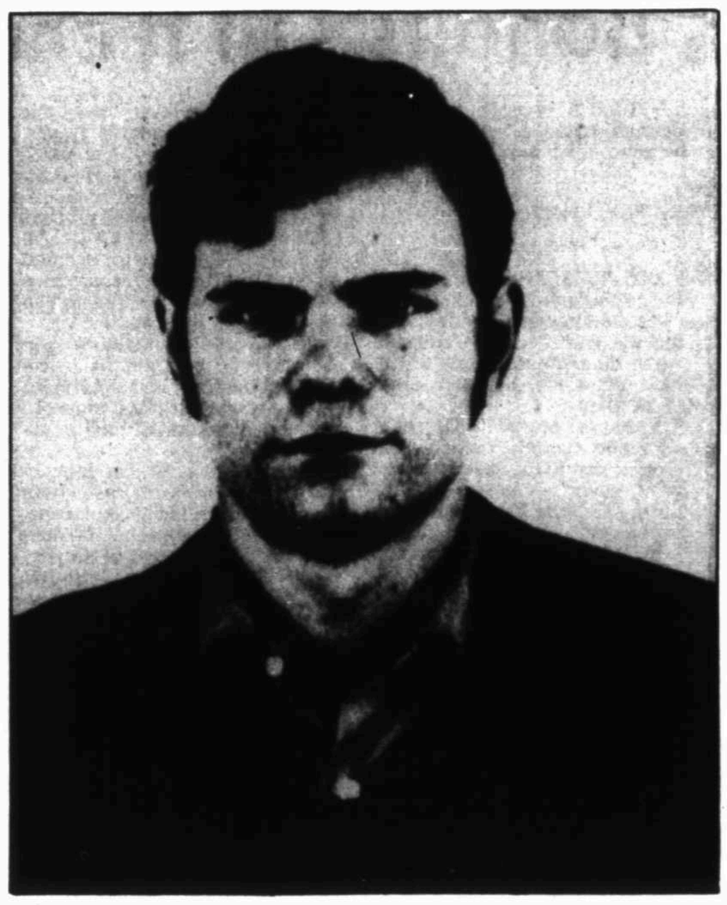

After the verdict, a Fort Worth Star-Telegram reporter interviewed five jurors, all women.

Said one:

"We found him not guilty because her story didn't make sense. He never really did force himself on her. She invited him in.... She was a college student. Her boyfriend lived across the street and he had a bad temper.

"She probably led the man on and then felt her boyfriend would get mad."

William Ted Wilhoit appears in this 1974 Fort Worth Police Department mug shot.

Said another:

"I think the girl meant what she said, but we felt she had lots of chances to get away.... We didn't want to send him away. It would have been on his record forever."

A third, with no photographic evidence to rely on, said:

"She contradicted herself. She said he had a knife and that he had cut her. But she had no bruises or cuts. Sure it was six months later, but there should have been some aftermath.

"I think they were fooling around."

A fourth:

"That girl was lying. I would never get myself in a situation where that could happen to me. She let that man in."

A fifth:

"The details she gave just didn't add up. I live alone and I know that if a man tried to rape me, I would run and holler.... She didn't try to get away. I had some doubts....

"But she was very chesty and that day she didn't have no bra on."

The juror apparently ignored or overlooked testimony that the assailant pulled the bra down over his victim's arms and that it further restrained her ability to resist.

That same juror concluded:

"If it had been rape instead of attempted rape, I might have felt different."

Shortly after the March 1974 trial, Jenny Dennis told the Star-Telegram the jurors debated only about 30 minutes before reaching a verdict.

"That whole time I sat in the courtroom with my mother and a friend and my boyfriend and listened to them laughing," she said.

"It sounded like a party in there, talking and laughing. What were they laughing at? I was dumbfounded. It wasn't funny to me."

She wondered if they'd still be laughing when Wilhoit attacked again.

"I hope they think about what they've done," she said after the verdict. "I think it's just a matter of time before he does it again."

Three months later, police now say, William Ted Wilhoit entered the upstairs apartment of TCU coed Janelle Kirby and shot her five times in the head and face when she resisted his attempts to clamp a handcuff on her wrist.

The Kirby shooting stunned Jenny Dennis. She was swept by a cold chill when she read of the attack.

"The description, everything about it made me think it was Wilhoit, plus I felt it so keenly within me," she said. "I had that chill that sort of comes over you and a strong intuitive feeling."

Less than a year had passed since her own ordeal and Wilhoit was never far from her mind. One day she was in her carport with her back to the street when "I got one of those horrible chills from my head to my toes."

She turned to see Wilhoit sitting in his car in front of her house.

"It literally made me nauseous."

Ms. Dennis said Wilhoit spent hours on end at a church behind the Kirby apartment. Ms. Dennis did not learn until later he was a self-proclaimed ministerial student.

After the Kirby shooting, Ms. Dennis said she called the police department and explained who she was.

"I gave them my name and told them what had happened to me."

She said she told police of the similarities between the attacks on Janelle Kirby and her own experience and the proximity of Wilhoit's church to Ms. Kirby's apartment. "I had an overwhelming conviction that he was responsible and I said I felt very strongly that they should investigate William Ted Wilhoit as a suspect."

At the officer's request, she repeated the name.

"Well, isn't that a coincidence," she recalls him saying. "I've got his file and his picture in front of me right now. We are looking at him as a suspect."

It was at this point in 1974 that somehow, somewhere, something went haywire.

As recounted in a recent AP series, "Fugitives," police at the time appeared more interested in a young Vietnam veteran named Kenneth Leslie Miller than Wilhoit.

Investigators raided Miller's apartment twice in 1974 looking for narcotics and weapons but found only a small amount of marijuana. After the the second raid on Aug. 14, doctors removed Miller's spleen because, contended Miller, he was beaten so severely.

Miller later filed a civil suit against two narcotics officers and both were suspended indefinitely.

Two weeks later, according to police files, Janelle Kirby identified Miller from a police photo spread as the man who shot her on June 11.

For reasons never explained, police waited a month after the Kirby ID before arresting Miller. The arrest coincided with a Civil Service hearing in which the two narcotics officers were reinstated after Miller was unable to identify one of them in the courtroom.

Miller went on trial for attempted murder in early 1975 and was convicted largely on the testimony of Miss Kirby. Miller fled the courtroom after the verdict but was assessed a 70-year prison sentence in absentia.

His flight took him across the country and finally to Las Vegas, where he was arrested last summer, almost 11 years after his abrupt departure. It was then that Fort Worth police, acting on a tip, looked at Wilhoit in connection with the Kirby shooting.

Detectives who were assigned in 1986 to reinvestigate the Miller case could not find evidence that William Ted Wilhoit was a suspect in the Janelle Kirby shooting and were, in fact, puzzled why police supposedly ignored him in 1974.

"The police were negligent," Jenny Dennis asserts. "They were remiss, because they knew — somebody knew. I know they had that information. I know they were looking at him. I wasn't talking to the janitor. I was talking to a policeman who was on that case.

"And if they never showed Janelle Kirby his picture after what I told them, explain that to me. Explain that to Miller. Explain that to Janelle Kirby."

Kenneth Miller's attorney, Bill Magnussen, told the AP last week he found it ironic that police could come back in 1986 and determine Wilhoit's guilt when they couldn't do it in 1974.

"They were so intent on getting Miller, and clearing the officers at the Civil Service hearing, that they ignored other suspects," the lawyer said.

He said Ms. Dennis is "gutsy" for coming forward with her story after the AP series appeared and he said he feels police should still attempt to find out what actually happened in 1974.

Police Chief Thomas Windham told the AP through an aide the Kirby case is now 13 years old and that no useful purpose could be served by committing resources to reopen the investigation.

Detective Danny LaRue, who spoke last week with Ms. Dennis, said the department had gone as far is it could with its inquiry. He said he found Ms. Dennis to be "intelligent, sincere and credible" but he could not speculate on the disturbing questions raised by her story.

"The case is closed," he said.

Four years after the Janelle Kirby shooting, Jenny Dennis was scanning a the back pages of a newspaper and spotted an article which recounted how an Abilene housewife had been raped by a student minister at Abilene Christian University. Police had arrested a 25-year-old convicted burglar and alleged sex offender named William Ted Wilhoit.

"I nearly went bananas," Ms. Dennis recalls.

While she found the news from Abilene heartbreaking, Ms. Dennis said it also mitigated her own feelings of guilt. It was therapeutic to think of the Fort Worth jurors who freed Wilhoit, "I told you so."

"Intellectually, I knew I had done nothing wrong. I'd done nothing to provoke him. Nothing to deserve what he did. I knew what really had happened. But I thought, gosh, the jury didn't believe me. They laughed. Maybe it really didn't happen that way.

"And I think rape victims do feel guilty," she says now.

"So I did feel a lessening of guilt when he raped again. But it also made me feel guiltier because of the devastation he brought to yet another family."

Moved by her anger, guilt and sympathy, Ms. Dennis contacted Deborah Hankins, the Abilene victim, and volunteered her help.

Thus, when Wilhoit went on trial in November 1978, Jenny Dennis was seated on the front row of the Abilene courtroom and there she remained throughout the proceedings.

Largely on the basis of Deborah Hankins' testimony, a jury convicted Wilhoit of aggravated rape and assessed a 40-year prison sentence.

As the attack on Deborah Hankins lessened Jenny Dennis' feelings of guilt, Mrs. Hankins says new disclosures in the Kirby case ended eight years of feeling guilty for not resisting Wilhoit's attack.

"Until last summer," she told the AP, "I couldn't talk about this without crying. I could not accept the fact that I had not fought back. That burden was lifted when I found out how violent he is."

After learning through the AP series of Wilhoit's role in the Kirby case, she said, she concluded he probably would have shot her, too, if she had resisted. Mrs. Hankins decided then to "come out of the closet" to campaign for legislation that could extend the time of violent criminals behind bars.

"Some good has got to come from this evil for me to accept it," she says.

The new developments which tie Wilhoit to the Kirby case have, Jenny Dennis says, put her through a "weird" experience.

"I'm not reliving what happened to me 13 years ago in its worst sense, but I'm having trouble sleeping. I'm having trouble concentrating.

"I think about this a lot. I've been sick at my stomach. I feel the same anger and frustration at a system that has worked to let him go.

"They should have had Wilhoit on the Janelle Kirby case."

Says Jenny Dennis:

"I wasn't a good victim, because Wilhoit got off on my deal.

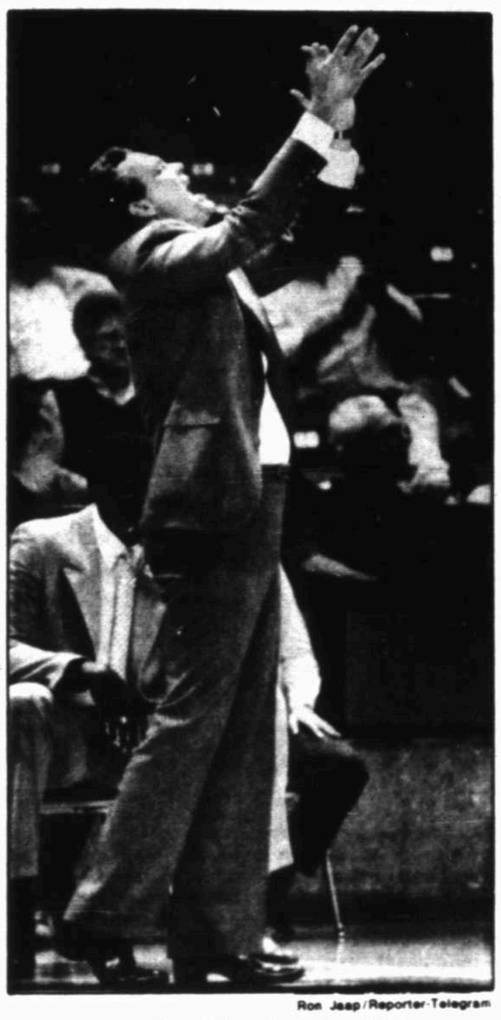

"But what would they have given him even if he had been convicted? Two years? A suspended sentence?

"At some point he would have been turned loose. He would have raped and killed a different group of people. Somebody gets the black marble.

"You can't question the past."

Stone to leave MC for UTA head post

Ron Jaap/Reporter-Telegram

Jerry Stone headed for UTA.

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Jerry Stone will take over as head basketball coach at the University of Texas-Arlington after 10 years at Midland College. Stone, who has compiled the winningest record in junior college ranks over the last six years, emerged as the choice to make UTA's program "the showpiece sport" at the institution midway between Dallas and Fort Worth.

UTA, basically a commuter college which is striving to make basebetball the rallying point for students and alumni after the abolition of football in 1985, had 67 applications for the vacancy.

At the time, UTA, a charter member, was forced to drop out of the Southland Conference. However, after the University of New Orleans, Louisiana Tech and Arkansas State bolted the SLC for independent football status, the SLC revised its constitution to allow UTA to return to the fold.

Admitted along with UTA for basketball were Northwestern Louisiana, Sam Houston State, Stephen F. Austin and Southwest Texas State. A big plus is that the SLC automatically qualifies its champion for the NCAA basketball tournament.

See Story, Page 4C

Stone was scheduled to appear at a press conference at Arlington today for the official announcement, however, storms in the New Orleans area, where Stone was attending the NCAA Final Four, knocked out telephone communications to the hotel where the coaches are staying....and no telling what it might do to flights out of New Orleans.

In his tenure at MC, Stone's Chaparrals were 276-67 with five WJCAC and five Region V titles. Three Stone teams went to the NJCAAs in Hutchinson, Kan., the 1982 winning the title and this year's team losing to Southern Idaho in the finals.

In the last six seasons, Stone was 212-33 and that includes a 21-12 year.

Dr. Jess Parrish, MC president, said a committee would be formed to seek a replacement for Stone.

"We wish Jerry Stone the very best," said Parrish, "We appreciate the 10 great years he has given to Midland College, building what we feel is the finest junior college program in the country."

He added, "A selection committee will be formed in the immediate future to seek out the best possible replacement for Coach Stone."

Dr. Parrish expects a long list of applicants to apply, "because of MC's excellent reputation, great basketball program and the excellent home court facility, Chaparral Center."

Stone will be taking over a program that has been in the doldrums. Last season UTA was 10-18. The team plays in 4,000 seat Texan Hall, a concert theater in which the court is on the stage. Plans for the future include a joint-effort UTA, city and school district arena seating between 6,000 and 7,000. It's still in the planning stage and a tentative completion date, if all goes well, would be 1990.

Among the 67 applicants at UTA was Moe Iba, who was named coach at nearby TCU when Jim Killingsworth decided to retire.

One Dallas writer described the hiring of Stone as "the most import decision in the history of the school. They want a showcase sport and feel with Stone's background and success, he will give it to them."

Stone was named Kodak Junior College Coach of the Year and, although his Chaps fell a point shy in their quest of the national title, and he was named NJCAA Coach of the Year, upsetting defending national champion San Jacinto, a team that hadn't lost in two years, in the second round of the tournament.

Sandy Lyle finally shakes Jeff Sluman in TPC

PONTE VEDRA, Fla. (AP) — Sandy Lyle, a golfing globe-trotter and a former British Open champion, just couldn't shake off that persistent, plucky little guy.

"He was sticking to me like mud to a shovel," Lyle said Sunday after he finally outlasted Jeff Sluman on the third hole of sudden death and won the $1 million Tournament Players Championship Sunday.

It wasn't easy, on this drizzly day more common to Lyle's native Scotland than normally sunny northern Florida.

Lyle's victory — his first anywhere in the world since a triumph in the Greensboro Open 51 weeks ago — required an 8-foot par-putt at the right moment and some minor magic down the stretch.

The 8-foot par-saving putt came on the third playoff hole. It came after Sluman — at 5-foot-7 and 135 pounds one of the smallest players on the American tour — had bogeyed the hole.

The winning par, the most valuable of Lyle's career, was worth $180,000 from the total purse. It also provided Lyle with a 10-year exemption to all American tour events.

Sluman, who never before had finished higher than fifth in a regular PGA Tour event, took some consolation from a $108,000 second prize.

"I guess I can't be too disappointed," he said.

Lyle's minor magic got him into the playoff. He chipped in from an extremely difficult position for a birdie on the 15th and dropped a 30-foot putt on the tough 18th for the birdie he had to have to finish regulation play at 274, 14 under par on the Tournament Players Club at Sawgrass.

It finished off a final round of 70 for Lyle. But it wasn't quite good enough. Sluman made a testing 12-footer to tie for the lead and complete a final round of 69.

A spectator may or may not have extended the playoff.

The unidentified man — he slipped away from security personnel after they'd fished him from the lake on the 17th — provided a distraction Sluman didn't need.

Sluman was lining up an 8-foot birdie putt that would have won it when the man went into the water near the island green of the second playoff hole.

"I can't say it (the distraction) hurt, but it sure didn't help," Sluman said. "I was a little quick on the trigger (with the putt). If I had hit it firm, there might have been a different ending.

"When we went to the 18th tee (for the final playoff hole), I kind of felt like we'd gone one hole too many," Sluman said.

He was right.

Lady Vols win NCAA title

AUSTIN — The Tennessee Lady Volunteers ended a long jinx and gave Coach Pat Head Summitt her first NCAA women's basketball title after 11 years of trying. "The monkey is finally off my back," she said after the Vols' tough defense helped inflict a 67-44 defeat on Louisiana Tech.

Seven previous Summitt-coached Tennessee teams had reached the Final Four, only to lose, including three defeats by Tech. It was the second worst defeat ever handed Louisiana Tech and tied the lowest point total in the Lady Techsters' history.

Focus shifts to defense

Indiana, Syracuse meet tonight

By WILLIAM C. RHODEN
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW ORLEANS — At first glance, the national championship game between Indiana and Syracuse tonight seems to lack the ingredients for a classic basketball confrontation.

Unlike the semifinal game Saturday between Indiana and Nevada-Las Vegas, the tensions that make for drama — contrasting styles, clashing systems, the first meeting between two coaching masters — are missing.

But the final could be explosive. Indiana and Syracuse are strikingly similar, and the game will likely have more strategical nuances than either team's semifinal game.

"I think Indiana is similar to St. John's in our league," said the Syracuse coach, Jim Boeheim, whose team finished in a three-way tie with Georgetown and Pitt for first place in the Big East Conference this season.

"They are an excellent defensive team, they let you come to them," Boeheim said. "You have to execute well in the half-court offense. You're not going to get transition baskets. We have to execute well in the half-court game, and that is a large order."

IN A GAME that matches teams from the Big Ten and the Big East Conferences for the first time in a national championship, Indiana is a solid favorite over a Syracuse team that not many knew or appreciated until last week, when the Orange upset North Carolina.

What fans saw then and what they may see is one of the most well-rounded, explosive teams in the country.

Whether the Orange will be able to play consistently enough to stay close early or have the mental toughness to win is not known.

"You have to have three things to be able to play well on offense," said Bobby Knight, the Indiana coach. "You have to be able play inside, get the ball inside, and do some things well on the perimeter. They do all three things. Defensively they are a very aggressive team that can come at you in a couple of different ways."

THE ORANGE, using a multi-pronged attack on offense, have averaged 83 points a game this season while holding opponents to 72.7 points per game and 43.1 percent shooting.

Jim Boeheim
....first trip to Four

Indiana has averaged 82.3 points during the season and 92.2 in the tournament. The Hoosiers, playing basic man-to-man defense, have held opponents to 70.9 points per game and a 45 percent shooting average.

Indiana and Syracuse will have similar problems: stopping a bruising inside attack and controling one of the opposition's backcourt players.

For Syracuse, that means trying to stop Steve Alford, Indiana's 6-foot-2-inch senior guard who excels in coming off of picks and screens. Alford was masterful on Saturday, scoring 33 points on 10-of-19 shooting. Not only do the Hoosiers pick for Alford, the front-line players — Rick Calloway, Daryl Thomas, and Dean Garrett — set effective picks for each other.

"NOBODY we play screens as well as Indiana does," said Boeheim, the Syracuse coach. "Alford does a better job of reading the screen as any player. They just make such a conscious effort. Whoever plays him will have to get help, but he'll have to be very tough-minded and tough physically to play him."

The task of guarding him could fall to one of three people. The candidates are Sherman Douglas, the Orange sophomore point guard; Greg Monroe, the senior guard; or Howard Triche, the 6-5 senior swingman and the team's best defensive player.

"It's going to be tough because Alford runs off a lot of picks and screens," Douglas said. "It will be the team's responsibility to push him and and make him earn his shots. He can't have open shots."

Douglas added: "The key to our game will be what's been the key for our season all year — if we can rebound and shoot our free throws."

A key player for Indiana is Rick Calloway, the Hoosiers' versatile 6-6 forward.

Calloway averaged 13 points and 4.4 rebounds a game this season. Dean Garrett, the 6-10 center, gives Indiana a shot-blocking threat and Keith Smart, a 6-1 junior guard, gives Indiana another elusive one-on-one player.

THE PROBLEM Indiana faces is the Orange's offensive diversity. All five starters average in double figures, and each has a unique role.

"We play offensively the way we've always played, and that's for everybody to be involved," Boeheim said. "We try not to go to one or two guys. We've always been balanced at Syracuse, and I think it's difficult to play us and say you're going to stop one or two guys."

Douglas has been the catalyst for Syracuse this season and could be instrumental in stopping Alford. But during the tournament, Rony Seikaly, the 6-10 center, has been Syracuse's most important player. In Syracuse's four tournament games, Seikaly has dominated the opponent's center with a consistency he rarely displayed during the season.

Derrick Coleman, the talented 6-9 freshman forward, will also be important to Syracuse.

"Our defense has been better in the last few weeks due to the development of Rony and Coleman," Boeheim said. "The one thing we have this year is two shot-blockers. If you have one occupied, the other one can still be in the area to block the shot. That's been very important to us."

Depth, once thought to be a Hoosier weakness, has emerged. Joe Hillman, the 6-2 sophomore guard, and Steve Eyl, the 6-6 junior forward, have made contributions off the bench.

Syracuse has gotten good performances from two reserves, Stevie Thompson, the 6-4 freshman guard, and Derek Brower, the 6-9 junior center.

But in the end, the outcome will be determined by the starters, and to a large extent by how well Syracuse controls Alford.

Who does Knight think he is, Dean Smith?

Battles

Who does Bobby Knight think he is, Dean Smith?

Tempestuous Bobby is down to his last chance and, frankly, has about as much chance as a snowball in Midland on a March 29.

This guy is too much. All season the Indiana coach with the penchant for breaking chairs, pounding on scorers tables, has preached the same sermon.

He has repeated his opinion so many times to skeptical newsmen, it has become more of a vow than a statement of pure unvarnished fact.

Frankly, there's no way he can come through, but then we'll see what kind of a coach the Great Bobby Knight is when the Hoosiers, the champions from the Big 10, face Syracuse, the survivor of the annual fratercide in the Big East.

PUT a couple of Big East teams on a basketball court and it's like the days when District 4-5A was proud to be referred to as the Little Southwest Conference.

Knight keeps promising, but he never delivers.

All year he has been warning writers, "This team isn't that good."

He intimated this bunch had no business winning the Big 10 Conference..before they won it.

Well, Knight has been doing whatever people do through their teeth. After watching the lengths to which LSU went to stop Scott Alford, and for the most part getting away with on-court mugging, you've got to figure Knight has been putting everybody on.

BLAME IT on that guy that wrote the book about Knight and the Hoosiers' season last year. Knight is obviously upset and apparently vowed writers wouldn't get anything out of him.

So now Knight is faced with one final chance of putting up or shutting up. From Knight's remarks, Indiana has no business winning, let alone being in the finals, especially as Big 10 champion.

The suspicion is that the same thing will happen that always happens when his team reaches the finals.

Indiana will win. And then how will Knight explain beating the Big East, which some claim is college basketball's toughest league?

AND WHILE the Hoosiers are beating the Orange, enjoyment of the final will be marred by irritation of those longshot view of the game's site, the Louisiana Super Dome, a monsterous abomination on the game.

Some of those seats are so far away, it's must be like taking basketball through a straw.

The floor is so far away, it even seems as though the tv cameras shooting the action must be located across the Mississippi River.

The place is so huge, it makes the Carrier Dome seem intimate.

Of course, the justification is that the fans pay their way in just to be there, and that relates to Bowl Game type bucks.

And don't forget, Bobby, win this one and your reputation will be gone. People will be saying, "That Knight, he wouldn't recognize talent if he saw it."

Time is ripe for another cage fix

NEW YORK (AP) — Junius Kellogg, whose disclosure of a bribe offer uncovered a series of college basketball fixes during the 1950s, says the atmosphere is ripe for it to happen again.

"Most definitely. As long as you have point spreads and big money being bet, the potential is there," he said.

Kellogg's report of a bribe attempt in 1951 triggered an avalanche that caught more than a half-dozen teams and threatened to bury college basketball.

THE SPORT was riding a wave of popularity in those days not unlike the current frenzy.

The crowds were big — 18,000 packed Madison Square Garden in New York for doubleheaders three nights a week — and the betting was heavy.

Then came disclosures that some players, in some cases virtually entire teams, had been bribed by gamblers to dump games or shave points. The sport fell from favor, the crowds and the interest dwindled, and so did the betting. The crowds have long since returned, not only in the arenas, but on television, with all three networks televising games this season — and the betting again is furious.

"Thirty five million Americans bet each week," said Danny Sheridan, an oddsmaker, who put the amount wagered in the billions.

"Whenever you have big betting, someone will be seeking to find an edge. That is the nature of the beast," Kellogg said.

WHAT BETTER edge than to have someone in the game manipulate the score so that it winds up in favor of the gambler in relation to the point spread?

"Many of the kids who are playing come out of poor backgrounds. The chance of making fast money overnight would be appealing," Kellogg said.

Did he think that has been happening?

"I don't think about it," he said. "But I'm naive. I have a sense of purity about such things. I don't want it to happen. I'd be as surprised as anyone."

That was his reaction when he was a center at Manhattan College and was offered $1,000 by a former Manhattan player to make sure the team lost by more than eight points to DePaul in a game at Madison Square Garden.

"He said to me, 'If you lost by 10 or 15 points, what's the difference?' " Kellogg recalled.

KELLOGG TOLD Ken Norton, then Manhattan's coach, and as a result, two of the team's former players were arrested along with three gamblers.

"I thought it was just he and I," Kellogg said of the bribe offer, "but it was the whole world."

Subsequently, disclosures of fixes caught up with City College of New York, which was manipulating the scores when it won both the NCAA and NIT championships in 1950; Long Island University; New York University; Bradley, Toledo and Kentucky, whose coach Adolph Rupp said his players wouldn't touch a bribe with "a 10-foot pole."

It has happened again since, most recently involving players at Tulane, and a new lure was used, drugs rather than money.

The thought that it could happen again prompted television producer Bob Seizer to get Kellogg and Sheridan together last week on his syndicated show, "Sports Pros and Cons." Their debate over whether gambling should be legalized will be seen later this spring.

Sheridan said bookmakers take a beating when games are fixed and are very diligent in watching for suspicious games. He said information from a Las Vegas bookmaker helped uncover the scandal at Tulane.

KELLOGG argued against legalizing gambling because he said it would increase betting.

"The greater the number of bettors, the greater the interest in the outcome and the greater the chance of someone trying to persuade a young man to fix or dump a game," he said.

Kellogg, 60, is first deputy commissioner of Commerce and Development in New York, part of the city's Human Resources Department.

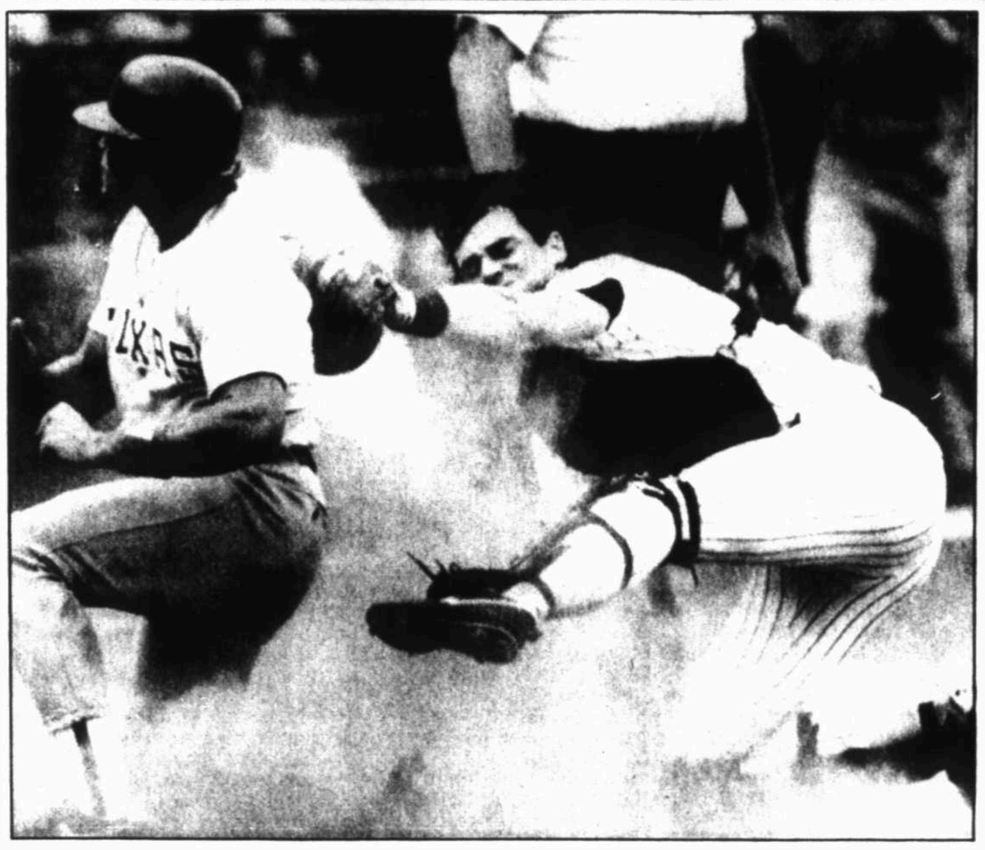

He has been confined to a wheelchair since 1954 when he was paralyzed in an automobile accident while with the Harlem Globetrotters.

There were rumors then that he was hurt in retaliation for helping to break up the fixes.

"That's not true. The driver, one of my teammates (on the Globetrotters), just lost control of the car," he said.

Kellogg said educational programs, in effect at many schools, help to guard against attempts to fix games.

"Show the players what happened to those who took bribes and how it ruined their lives," Kellogg said. "Most of them may not even know that it happened."

Coaches discuss rules changes

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — College coaches, upset with recent NCAA rule changes, discussed their concerns this weekend with the executive director of the NBA Players' Association.

"The whole thing is a little premature right now," Eddie Sutton, vice-president of the National Association of Basketball Coaches, said Sunday. The NABC is meeting in New Orleans this week in conjunction with the NCAA's Final Four basketball tournament.

Members of the NABC board met Saturday with Larry Fleisher, who is executive director of the NBA Players' Association.

Sutton, the Kentucky basketball coach, said some coaches are upset with some NCAA rules and asked someone to come in and discuss the issues with NABC leaders.

"Some of the coaches asked us to visit with someone," Sutton said Sunday.

"We just asked Fleisher to come because he is a friend of college basketball."

Asked about reports college coaches might be interested in forming their own union, Sutton said there is "not much support for such a move at this time."

"I don't think anybody is gung ho about the idea" Sutton said. "There are just some isolated cases where coaches are unhappy."

Sutton said many coaches are unhappy with NCAA rules cutting the number of basketball scholarships from 15 to 13.

"And some coaches are upset because the part-time coaches' postion has been eliminated," Sutton said. "There are a lot of very good coaches out of work."

Sutton said talk of a possible coaches' union is nothing new.

Nettles just may make Braves club

Associated Press

Graig Nettles says he came to the Atlanta Braves' spring camp hoping to win a job and impress some people. It's still not official that he's on the roster but has impressed a few people.

Nettles hit three homers and a double Sunday as the Braves beat the Baltimore Orioles 12-1 at West Palm Beach.

Nettles, 42, hit a solo homer off Scott McGregor in the second inning and a two-run homer in the sixth after drawing a walk on his second at-bat. In the eighth, Ted Simmons and Nettles greeted reliever Don Aase with back-to-back homers. Nettles, who has been playing first and third, also doubled later in the inning.

"I've never been much of a spring player and I've always been a streaky home run hitter," said Nettles who has six homers and another in a B game this spring.

Nettles, who played third base for the New York Yankees championship teams in 1977-78, was released by the San Diego last season after hitting .218 with 16 homers and 55 runs batted in.

"I usually get in a hot streak during the season," Nettles said. "This couldn't have come at a better time for me. I came down here to impress people and this has got to be helping me."

Atlanta's Davis Palmer yielded one run in seven innings, a solo homer by Fred Lynn. McGregor gave up five runs in five innings.

Spring Training

Indians 10, Cubs 6

In Tucson, Rick Dempsey doubled and singled, driving in two runs and scoring twice, and Tony Bernazard, Julio Franco and Pat Tabler each drove in two runs as Cleveland defeated Chicago. Cleveland starter Greg Swindell got the win, allowing five runs, four of them earned, on five hits in seven innings. He struck out nine and retired 14 of the final 15 batters he faced.

Brewers 3, Giants 2

In Chandler, Robin Yount doubled in the go-ahead run in a two-run sixth inning as Milwaukee defeated San Francisco to snap a five-game exhibition losing streak. Rick Manning began the sixth with a pop-fly double off Giant loser Kelly Downs as shortstop Jose Uribe lost the wind-blown ball in the sun behind third base. Yount followed with a hard hop double to right center, scoring Manning. Yount moved to third on a passed ball and scored on Jim Paciorek's hard smash to third.

Dodgers 6, Expos 3

In Vero Beach, rookie outfielder Chris Gwynn's two-run single highlighted a three-run eighth inning that carried Los Angeles over Montreal. The eighth-inning rally against Montreal right-hander Tim Burke broke a 3-3 tie. Los Angeles reliever Tom Niedenfuer recored his second straight save of the spring. Fernando Valenzuela went eight innings for the Dodgers in his longest spring outing, allowing three runs on seven hits, while issuing four walks and striking out six.

Mariners 6, A's 5

In Tempe, Harold Reynolds drove in the go-ahead run with a suicide squeeze bunt and hit a two-run, inside-the-park home as Seattle nipped Oakland. Reynolds' perfectly placed bunt scored Dave Valle to cap a three-run second inning that erased a 2-0 Oakland lead. His homer off loser Chris Codiroli made it 6-2 in the fourth inning.

Rained Out

Several games were rained out Sunday in Florida including: St. Louis at Houston; Toronto at the New York Mets; Boston at Detroit; Minnesota at Chicago White Sox; Kansas City at Philadelphia; and Pittsburgh at Cincinnati.

Angels 7, Padres 6, 11 innings

In Palm Springs, rookie Devon White singled in the winning run in the bottom of the 11th inning as California outlasted San Diego. White's bases-loaded single with two outs off loser Dave Dravecky drove in his 22nd run of the spring. It was White's third hit in six at-bats.

Ray Leonard: once a master, now a mystery

By PHIL BERGER
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — Earlier this month, from the training camp of Ray Leonard in Hilton Head, S.C., the veteran fight trainer, Angelo Dundee, dashed off a postcard to a boxing friend.

"Am here with the next champ," wrote Dundee, one of Leonard's three co-trainers. "Ray in fine shape. Just will have too much for Hagler in every department."

Marvelous Marvin Hagler, the middleweight champion, is Leonard's opponent April 6 at Caesars Palace in Las Vegas, Nev., in what is being billed as "The SuperFight."

For Dundee, the Leonard he anticipates watching that night is the sleek boxer-puncher who, as a welterweight and then a junior-middleweight champion, was so smooth, so cunning in the ring, and so pleasing a personality outside of it, that he was the sport's dominant presence in the late 1970s and early 1980s, before an eye injury forced him to retire.

But the question before the house is: Is that Ray Leonard still in business?

GIL CLANCY, for one, doubts that Leonard has, as the fighter puts it, "that certain something I used to have back in 1981 — that indescribable special ingredient."

Last Monday, Clancy, a former manager-trainer, watched Leonard work out for one day in Hilton Head. The Leonard he said he saw had a middleweight's musculature but not the rat-a-tat punching sharpness that Leonard as a welterweight and junior-middleweight possessed. By Clancy's view, Leonard was not putting together his blows against southpaw sparring partners as effectively as he had earlier in his career.

"THEY'VE built his body up," Clancy said. "He's weighing 157, 158. But I don't know that it's a good idea. As I told Ray, 'Now that you're a middleweight, I don't think you're gonna out-cute Marvin Hagler.' I think his best shot is to take chances and try to get Hagler out of there. A slugfest."

Compared with the "tactical fight" that Dundee has been espousing, Clancy's was an unusual notion, based, apparently, on his feeling that Leonard, who fought at around 147 pounds as a welterweight, no longer has the quickness afoot that once enabled him to set up at angles that made his punches indefensible, and then to find escape routes from counterblows. Of course, Clancy's opinion was formed after only a day's exposure to Leonard's training regimen.

In returning to boxing after an absence of nearly three years from the sport, Leonard has had to set out a training plan that was bound to be more complicated than most — there was so much catching up to do.

"The approach for this fight," said Leonard, "has been quite unique. I've been preparing for a year. Doing it in stages, mental and physical. It took a year to get all the crannies. The timing, the rhythm. The endurance and stamina."

AS LEONARD described it, in each day's workout he would concentrate on elements of attack or defense. In his closed-door workouts at Hilton Head his sparring was not restricted to trading punches. There were times when Leonard and his sparring partners literally walked through ring contingencies.

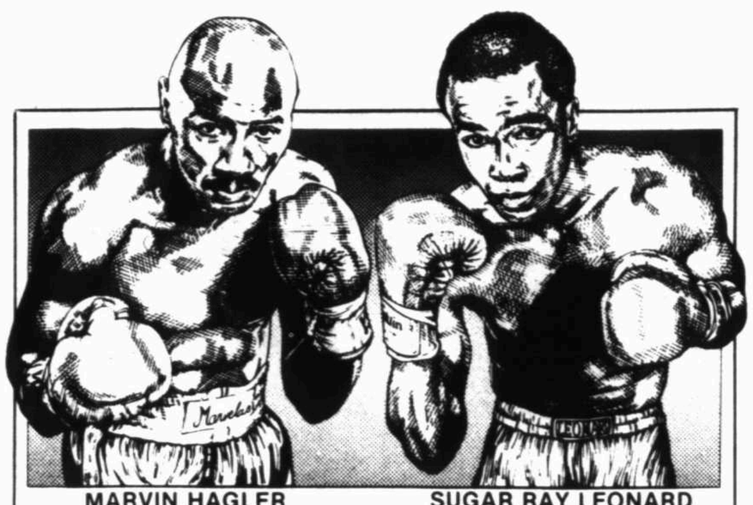

It was a thinker's game plan, and suited to Leonard, one of the fight business' more creative on-the-job minds.

For most observers, the unknown quantity in SuperFight is Ray Charles Leonard, now 30 years of age.

The salient fact is this: Leonard, who these days lives in Potomac, Md., with his wife, Juanita, and two sons, Ray Jr., 13, and Jarrel, 2, has fought only twice in five years.

In February 1982 he knocked out Bruce Finch in three rounds. In early May of that year, Leonard was operated on for a detached retina of his left eye that would prompt his retirement from boxing in November 1982.

While out of the ring he worked as a commentator on boxing telecasts for CBS-TV — often teamed with Clancy — and for Home Box Office, and he attended to commitments from his commercial endorsements.

MARVIN HAGLER 62-2-2 (52 KOs) — SUGAR RAY LEONARD 33-1-0 (24 KOs)

Hagler vs Leonard

On Monday, April 6, at Caesar's Palace in Las Vegas, Marvelous Marvin Hagler defends his undisputed world middle-weight title in a 12-round fight against former world welterweight champion, Sugar Ray Leonard. Undefeated in 11 years, Hagler has a 62-2-2 record, with 52 knockouts, against Leonard's 33-1-0 record, with 24 KOs. Sugar Ray's last fight was on May 11, 1984 -- his only fight in the last five years.

Then, in May 1984, Leonard came out of retirement to fight a journeyman named Kevin Howard.

Against Howard, Leonard showed the ring rust. Howard knocked Leonard down in the fourth round before the former champion stopped him in the ninth. Leonard was so disappointed that he announced afterward he was retiring again.

Leonard returned to analyzing fights for HBO (his deal with CBS expired and was not renewed). Then, when Trainer became the manager in 1984 of a Canadian Olympic medalist, Shawn O'Sullivan, Leonard got increasingly involved in that fighter's development. He went from being a ringside observer to an unpaid cornerman of O'Sullivan, and even began sparring with the welterweight to give his advice a hands-on authority.

"To stay in the ring," said Trainer, "he found he had to get in shape. Running and going to the health spa, which was what he had been doing, were not enough to be in boxing shape. Remember: I never asked him to spar. He volunteered."

With Hagler's fights routinely shown on HBO, Leonard, as commentator, was at ringside for them. Watching Hagler — whom he regarded as a special fighter — he would project Ray Leonard as the opponent. "I can whip the sucker," Leonard would tell HBO colleagues.

For a reported $11 million guarantee (Hagler is said to be guaranteed $12 million), Leonard has his chance, not only to beat Hagler but to defy time's inevitable erosion of a fighter's skills.

According to Trainer, Leonard earned $40 million to $45 million during his career and currently receives interest on his bonds and real estate investments at "close" to seven figures annually.

"This fight has absolutely nothing to do with money," Trainer said. "The challenge would do far more for him than the money."

Leonard agrees. "I know a lot of critics think what I'm doing is crazy, and ludicrous," he said. "But they never had a pair of gloves on."

On a day earlier this month in Hilton Head, Ray Leonard stood in the middle of the ring, his body tilted forward, like a pitcher peering in for the catcher's signals.

By that posture he made his face an inviting target for a sparring partner. It was from the same stance that Leonard taunted Roberto Duran in their rematch in November 1980. That night Leonard avenged the only loss on his 33-1 record (24 knockouts) by confounding Duran with the elusive target he made of himself and humiliating his opponent to the point where Duran said "No mas" — no more — and quit.

Elements of that psychological warfare figure to infiltrate his fight against Hagler. Already the psychological factor has worked into the pre-match preparations. On the publicity tour Leonard and Hagler embarked on back in November, Leonard would extol Hagler as a great champion. For Hagler, who cultivates his enmity toward opponents to get himself in a fighting furor, the constant praise was grating.

In December, Hagler quit in midtour, saying he didn't want to see Leonard's face any more until the night of the fight. To some, it showed that Hagler would not let himself be manipulated by Leonard. But Leonard is still counting on turning Hagler's burning aggression back on him. If he can bait Hagler in the ring, as he did Duran, Hagler's frustation could become Leonard's ally.

Earnhardt catches gasless Elliott

DARLINGTON, S.C. (AP) — Bill Elliott ran out of gas on the last lap and Dale Earnhardt, who took a calculated risk by pitting 11 laps from the end, charged past to win the TranSouth 500 Sunday at Darlington International Raceway.

Earnhardt, who came up with another in a series of dominating performances, passed the coasting Elliott in the fourth turn of the final lap on the 1.366-mile oval and crossed the finish line 1.23 seconds ahead.

"We had more to lose than we did to gain (by stopping)," said Elliott, whose crew chose to keep him on the track.

Earnhardt, the defending Winston Cup champion and already the owner of a big point lead after only five NASCAR stock car races this season, led the most laps for the fourth straight race and picked up his third victory in five starts this season.

The two-time series champion led often, avoiding serious trouble in the wreck-filled race. He averaged 122.540 mph and picked up first-place money of $52,985.

He took the top spot 73 laps from the end of the 367-lap event and appeared to have things in hand until suddenly diving onto pit road on lap 356. The stop took him just 4.3 seconds and he managed to come back onto the track in third place, behind Elliott and Ken Schrader.

"The fuel gauge went down on the back straightaway and I told them I've got to come in to get some gas now," Earnhardt explained. "The Good Lord was looking after us."

Alford desire pays off

By HANK LOWENKRON

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — His father provided the ignition, Indiana Coach Bob Knight did the fine tuning and both say it was Steve Alford who provided the fuel that powered him to within one game of an NCAA basketball championship.

"Steve has driven himself by the desire to be the best basketball player he possibly can," said Sam Alford, who coached the two-time All-American at New Castle High School in eastern Indiana. "He works hard at his game and at his image. He wants to be a leader, on and off the court."

"It goes back to my upbringing. I was brought up in a basketball home, and my father taught me how to play," the younger Alford said Sunday. "I have lived basketball ever since I can remember."

"I THINK through the association that he had with his dad, Steve learned to shoot the ball and learned to shoot it well. I think his dad was a stickler for shooting mechanics and made sure that Steve had the proper approach to shooting," Knight said at a Sunday news conference. "Steve obviously liked shooting a basketball. I think he's really enjoyed just the simple act of shooting and making shots.

"I think Steve has progressed tremendously as a player able to see the game and do those things that he sees developing in the game from possession to possession. I think that's taken a little work on his part."

A long basketball season ends for both Alfords with Monday night's title game at the Louisiana Superdome where the No. 3 Hoosiers face No. 10 Syracuse.

"I'M VERY tired," the elder Alford said. "I've been to 31 of Indiana's 33 games, plus all of mine. It has been financially and physically a very exhausting year."

The younger Alford, averaging 22 points this season for the 29-4 Hoosiers with a career total of 2,415 points, said his biggest disappointment in basketball was not taking his father's team into the Final Four of the Indiana high school tournament as a senior. New Castle lost to eventual state champion Connersville in the title game of their semistate despite a 37-point performance by Alford.

Alford had a record 94 points for the two semistate games, including 57 in the semifinals.

The elder Alford proudly rattles off the accomplishments of his son, who needs 25 points against Syracuse to become the Big Ten Conference's career-scoring leader.

"Steve has made it to the NCAA final, but I know he won't be satisfied unless he gets that championship," his father said.

Stone departure no surprise

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Stone's departure comes as no surprise to Midlanders. Each spring has found Stone looking for a position at a four-year school. Until this year, the right opening never came along.

It reached a point after a national championship, a fourth place at nationals and a 33-1 season, that Stone was beginning to wonder what it would take for any one to notice.

"It's not Midland," Stone has assured in discussing his ambitions. "It's the challenge of something new and the luxury of recruiting a player and having him for four years."

"In junior college, you recruit after the four year schools have had their pick. And when you get'em, it's usually the middle of their second year that they concede that 'Hey, maybe coach knows what he's talking about.' About the time you gain their confidence and full attention, you lose them."

STONE, 45, came to Midland in 1977-78 and while his first Chaparral team finished above .500, 16-15, it was only 7-11 in conference, good for a seventh place finish.

In 1978-79, the Chaparrals became competitive with a 21-12 record, 13-6 WJCAC record for third place and a third place finish in Region V. After that, except for one down season, the Chaps were never to finish below second in conference under Stone and never worse than second in Region V.

The 1979-80 season saw MC go 27-6 and 14-4 for second in WJCAC and Region V.

Four of Stone's teams had their seasons ended by the eventual national champion. The first was in 1980-81 when MC went 30-3 and 16-2. All of the losses were to Nolan Richardson's unbeaten NJCAA champs. Two were in regular season and the other in the Region V finals.

The proudest moment was in 1981-82 when Stone didn't have enough players to hold an intra-squad scrimmage after Christmas break yet won it all with 5-6 Spud Webb at point guard and NJCAA All-American Puntus Wilson leading the way.

THAT TEAM was 34-4 and the second of Stone's six 30-plus winners. The only interruption was the 1983-84 team which was 21-12 and didn't even reach the Region V.

The 31-4 team in 1982-83, the one that was seeking to repeat as national champions, and the 33-1 team in 1985-86 were beaten in the play-in game for the right to go to Hutchinson, Kan., by San Jacinto. The 31-6 team of 1984-85 lost to Dixie, Utah, in the NJCAA semifinals. Dixie went on to win the title.

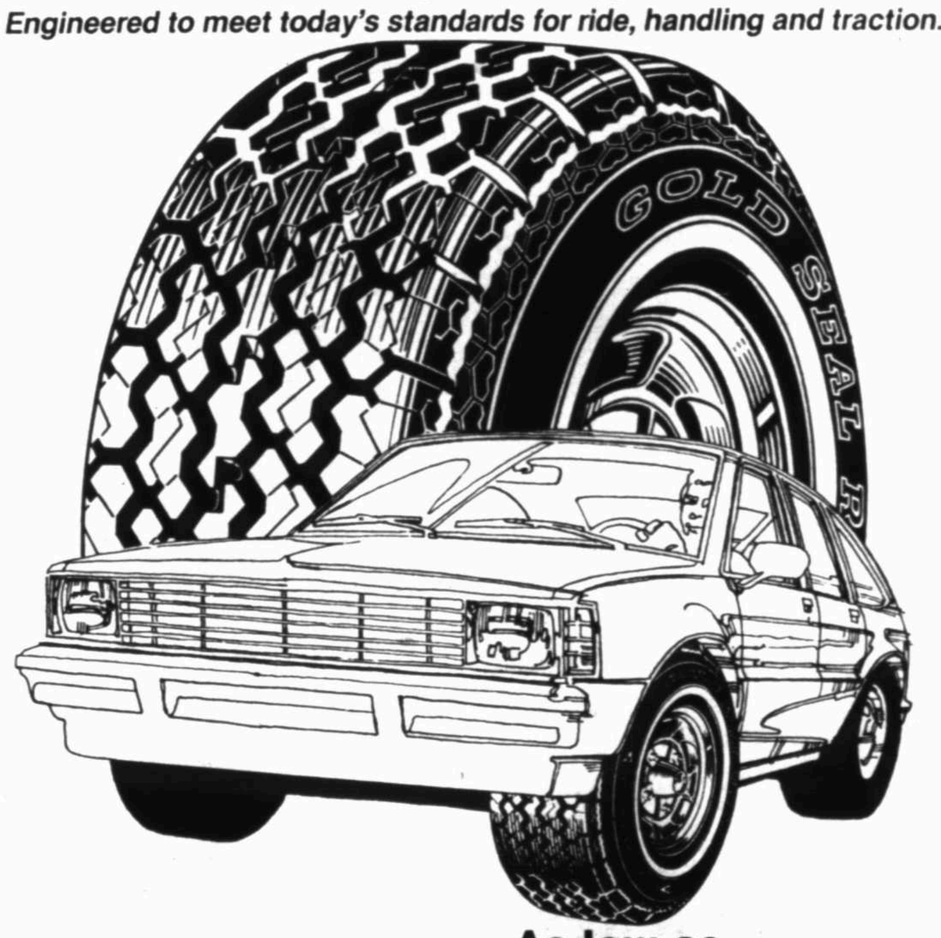

In 10 seasons, Stone's Chaps were 276-67. Over the last six years, he had the winningest record, 212-33, in juco ball and despite a one point loss in the finals of the NJCAA this year, he was named NJCAA Coach of the Year, an honor later confirmed by Kodak, which also picked him as the year's best.

Stone's All-Americans include Charles Johnson, Wilson, and Ricky Grace, the floor general of the 1985-86 team. Grace went on to the University of Oklahoma where he assumed the same role he had at Midland in guiding the Sooners into the NCAA playoffs.

Stone was raised in Arkansas City, Kansas, graduated from McMurry College in Abilene and earned his masters at Hardin-Simmons University. he coached at Richardson High in North Texas before taking the head coaching job at Tarleton State in Stephenville and then moved to Midwestern University in Wichita Falls before coming to Midland.

Human rights among Thatcher-Gorbachev topics

AP Laserphoto

British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, left, shakes hands with an elderly Soviet woman during a visit Sunday to downtown Moscow. Ms. Thatcher is in the Soviet Union on a rare state visit. She also toured suburban housing complex and the Trinity- St. Sergius Monastery in Zagorsk.

By DAVID MASON
Chief European Correspondent

MOSCOW (AP) — British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev held nearly four hours of talks today on a wide range of issues including human rights and arms control, said British sources.

The sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity, described the morning Kremlin discussions as "vigorous and often forthright but never hostile."

Among issues discussed were human rights, differences in the two countries' political systems and philosophies and some "nitty gritty" on arms control, said the sources.

In a discussion about human rights, Gorbachev raised the issue of Northern Ireland's sectarian strife, said the sources. They did not elaborate.

The discussions ran well into the normal lunch period and finally recessed on the Soviet leader's initiative.

When Mrs. Thatcher returned to the British Embassy across the Moscow River from the Kremlin for a hasty late lunch, she was asked why the talks had run beyond schedule.

"They were too interesting to break off," she replied.

The talks were to resume in the afternoon with the participation of British Foreign Minister Sir Geoffrey Howe and Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze, who held a separate morning meeting.

An aide to the Conservative prime minister earlier said she would press Gorbachev for effective and verifiable arms agreements, including a superpower accord to rid Europe of medium-range missiles.

Before meeting with Gorbachev this morning, Mrs. Thatcher laid a wreath at the tomb of the unknown soldier near the Kremlin. The monument commemorates the 20 million Soviets who died in World War II.

She stood with her head bowed before the huge wreath of red carnations and lilies as the British and Soviet national anthems were played.

On Sunday, the first full day of her five-day visit to the Soviet Union, Mrs. Thatcher visited a 14th century monastery and called for greater religious freedom on the Soviet Union and throughout the world. She also urged that people imprisoned for their faith be released.

Before going to the Kremlin today, Mrs. Thatcher met for about 40 minutes at the British Embassy with five members of the Soviet Peace Committee at their request.

British sources said the Soviet group called for elimination of nuclear weapons and complained that Britain was strengthening its nuclear arsenal.

The sources quoted Mrs. Thatcher as saying nuclear weapons had helped keep the peace in Europe for 40 years, deterring both nuclear and conventional wars. But, the sources said, Mrs. Thatcher made it clear she wants all nuclear forces cut back while insuring security for both East and West.

Mrs. Thatcher criticized the Soviet military presence in Afghanistan, where an estimated 115,000 Soviet troops are helping the government fight Moslem guerrillas.

The peace group replied that the United States had occupied Grenada in 1983, the sources said, but Mrs. Thatcher said the United States left the Caribbean nation quickly after insuring a return to democracy.

Among those in the Soviet group were Galina Ulanova, a former ballerina, Vladimir Karpov of the Soviet Writers' Union and cosmonaut Georgy Grechko.

On Sunday, Mrs. Thatcher attended Mass at the Trinity-St. Sergius Monastery in Zagorsk.

Filipino town patrolled by vigilantes

By CRISELDA YABES

DIGOS, Philippines (AP) — The Mindanao island town of Digos has launched a crusade against Communist rebels that some officials hail as a model for the nation but others denounce as replacing "terror of the left" with "terror of the right."

Every night, members of NAKASAKA, an acronym for United Association for Peace in Tagalog, staff neighborhood checkpoints in the darkened streets and sound alarms when suspected rebels of the Communist New People's Army appear.

Not long ago, Digos, a city of 75,000 people in Davao del Sur province, about 630 miles south of Manila, was controlled by the Communists, who began their insurgency 18 years ago.

But residents say they grew tired of paying the Communists "revolutionary taxes" as killings increased daily.

"Before, they welcomed the NPAs, they thought the NPAs were liberators," said Digos Mayor Juanito Camasura, a former leader of the militant leftist BAYAN, or country, movement.

"There was a sort of a feeling of romanticism when we speak of the NPA. But they started to make abuses and killing people left and right," he said.

In recent weeks, anti-Communist citizens' groups such as NAKASAKA and Alsa Masa (Masses Arise) have sprung up in widely scattered areas of Mindanao and the central Visayas islands.

Citing NAKASAKA specifically, Local Governments Secretary Jaime Ferrer has applauded the idea of citizens uniting against the Communists and urged local officials to organize similar groups.

Some military and civilian officials believe such groups provide a way of improving intelligence information on rebel movements and depriving the guerrillas of popular support in the countryside.

Since NAKASAKA was organized in early March, anti-Communist banners have replaced rebel propaganda in Digos. One sign proclaims: "Communism has no place in the Philippines."

Lt. Col. Jesus Magno, the provincial commander, told The Associated Press that 182 rebels and about 2,000 sympathizers have surrendered since NAKASAKA was formed.

But the growth of armed vigilante groups also has triggered a national debate on the effects of such a strategy on a nation seeking to rebuild democracy and the rule of law in wake of the 1986 ouster of President Ferdinand E. Marcos.

"The terror of the left is being replaced by the terror of the right," said Amando Doronila, editor of The Manila Chronicle. "One wonders how democracy is being saved from the insurgency by these terror methods and by polarizing rural inhabitants."

The military says NAKASAKA members, unlike their counterparts in the Alsa Masa movement in Davao City, carry no firearms.

Instead, members of a machete-wielding religious cult, Tadtad, whose members believe they are invulnerable to bullets, provide security for NAKASAKA patrols.

"We do not allow them to fight the Communists," Magno said of NAKASAKA.

Lech Walesa criticizes Polish price increases

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Solidarity founder Lech Walesa sharply criticized sweeping new price hikes and told hundreds of cheering supporters that a "major, determined protest" is needed to bring about economic reform.

The first stage of the price increases took effect Sunday, raising the cost of most basic food items by an average of 10 percent, gasoline by 25 percent and cigarettes and alcohol by 20 percent. Meat and utility price increases tkae effect Wednesday.

The Communist leadership says the increases, the result of cuts in government subsidies, are a necessary element of a reform strategy aimed at balancing supply and demand.

"We are sitting on a powder keg," Walesa said, contacted by telephone Sunday at his Gdansk apartment. "I don't know of any incidents, but ... people are dissatisfied."

Earlier Sunday, about 1,500 supporters gathered outside the rectory of St. Brygida's Roman Catholic Church in the Baltic port city and greeted Walesa with chants of "Solidarity" and "We will win."

"I am decidedly against price hikes as the only sign of implementing the (economic) reform," said Walesa, who played a tape of his speech over the telephone.

"Without a major, determined protest the country will not embark on the road to reforms," he told the crowd. "I don't know whether the protest will be possible today or tomorrow, but I and Solidarity activists ... are ready to play this game."

Walesa stopped short of calling for any industrial action, but said Solidarity activists around the country would support the wishes of factory workers.

Price increases historically have been a volatile issue among Polish workers.

Greece sees oil-rights standoff as victory for Papandreou

ATHENS, Greece (AP) — Greeks rallied around the government Sunday and labor unions canceled strikes as a standoff with Turkey over Aegean Sea oil rights ended in what Greece saw as a victory for Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou.

A 48-hour military alert was wound down Sunday, but officers could not leave their units, said military sources, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Greece planned a show of military strength with a five-day, air-sea exercise starting Monday in the northeastern Aegean, where a Turkish research ship had planned oil exploration in a continental shelf area claimed by Greece.

Turkey stepped back from a military confrontation with fellow NATO member Greece over mineral rights in the Aegean when it changed the ship's course at the last minute Friday.

Turkish Premier Turgut Ozal said the ship, Sismik-1, would confine its tests for oil to Turkish territorial waters, provided Greece did the same.

Ozal said in Ankara on Sunday his handling of the dispute turned "the crisis to our advantage," but did not elaborate.

He spoke after returning from a two-month stay in the United States, where he underwent a coronary bypass operation. He received a traditional Moslem welcome, with Turks slaughtering hundreds of sheep in the streets of Ankara.

In Greece, strikes by civil servants and bakery workers set for Monday were canceled in a show of suport for the government. Even the Greek Orthodox Church, battling the governing socialists for control of church-owned land, said it would stop holding public protests.

"We called off the strike against the government's pay policies because we've got to have national unity at a time of crisis with Turkey," said an official of the civil servants' union, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Analysts said Papandreou's handling of the crisis also would boost his popularity among Greek left-wingers, who have accused the government of abandoning its radical anti-Western platform and moving to the right.

At one point during the confrontation with Turkey, Papandreou demanded the temporary shutdown of operations at a U.S. military base near Athens, citing a clause in the 1983 Greek-U.S. defense accord that permits such action during a national emergency.

The continental shelf dispute last brought Greece and Turkey to the brink of war in August 1976, when Sismik-1 carried out oil testing in international waters. As a radical opposition politician then, Papandreou urged the conservative government to "sink the Sismik."

WORLD IN BRIEF

Italian terrorist captured

CARACAS, Venezuela (AP) — Security agents captured Italian right-wing extremist Stefano Delle Chiaie, accused in Italy of involvement in more than 100 bombing deaths, after chasing him down a street, police said.

Stefano Delle Chiaie

Interior Minister Jose Angel Ciliberto said Sunday that Delle Chiaie, who has been on the run for 17 years, will be deported to Italy immediately.

Security police commander Col. Porfirio Valera said Delle Chiaie was arrested Saturday after police went to an apartment in a middle-class Caracas neighborhood where he apparently lived for the past three years.

"Our security agents had been alerted that Delle Chiaie had fled Bolivia and they began a long search that concluded yesterday (Saturday)," Valera told reporters.

He said Delle Chiaie fled through a back door, but special agents of the security police gave chase and captured him on the street.

"He politely congratulated our agents and told them it was the first time he had been caught," Valera said.

Delle Chiaie, 49, used more than 20 aliases after fleeing Italy in 1970, according to Valera. He entered Venezuela in 1984 with a Bolivian passport in the name of Vincenzo Modugno and lived here as Alfredo di Mauro, the commander said.

Italian security agents and Interpol officials were reported en route to Caracas.

Shamir retains party role

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir vowed never to relinquish the occupied Arab territories and retained his leadership of the right-win Herut Party during a 17-hour convention that ended today.

"They (the West Bank and Gaza Strip) will stay in our hands forever," Shamir shouted Sunday, shaking his fist at 2,100 party delegates who responded with loud applause.

Shamir, 71, made the remarks in a 30-minute address after being re-elected Herut Party chairman by a unanimous show of hands. He was unopposed.

Herut is the largest party in the Likud bloc, which together with the left-of-center Labor Party has governed since 1984. It considers Gaza, which Israel captured from Egypt in the 1967 Middle East War, and the West Bank, captured from Jordan in the same war, as integral parts of Israel.

The delegates approved a resolution urging the government to annex both territories.

Early returns favorable

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — Early returns indicated Haitians voted overwhelmingly for approval Sunday in a referendum to endorse a new constitution.

With nearly 13 percent of the vote counted, 99.81 percent of the votes were cast in favor, said Anaise Chavenet, spokeswoman for the Ministry of Information.

Official results won't be disclosed for 15 days, and Ms. Chavenet would not project a turnout.

Six hours after polls opened at 6 a.m., more than 1,000 votes had been cast at City Hall in Leogane, a town about 25 miles west of the capital. Every vote was "yes," election officials at the site said. Polls closed at 6 p.m. and no election-related violence was reported.

Poison oil trial begins

MADRID, Spain (AP) — Nearly six years after the first of 584 Spaniards died from consuming tainted rapeseed oil, thinking it was olive oil, 39 defendants face trial today on charges including homicide and fraud.

The prosecution is seeking a total of 106,000 years in prison for the accused. Even so, under Spanish law no person may be sentenced to more than 30 years in prison no matter how many counts on which they are convicted.

The prosecution also is seeking $117,000 in compensation for relatives of each of the dead and varying amounts in compensation for 24,992 people said to be permanently impaired from consuming the adulterated oil.

Rape is a plant of the mustard family, the seeds of which yield an oil used as a lubricant. Unadulterated rapeseed oil is not poisonous, though it is not generally used as an edible oil.

The accused are charged with conspiring to sell, as olive oil, rapeseed oil adulterated with highly toxic industrial aniline dye. Beside homicide and fraud, the charges also include "crimes against the public health."

Crocodile attacks woman

BROOME, Australia (AP) — A 9-foot-long crocodile attacked a young American woman swimming in a remote river Sunday, police said. The woman was missing and presumed dead.

Ginger Fay Meadows, 24, of Aspen, Colo., had dived into the Prince Regent River, where more than 100 of the reptiles are known to breed, said chief inspector Arnold Davis of the Broome police department.

He said she was swimming between a rubber raft and the 105-foot yacht Lady G when the crocodile attacked.

"Both disappeared and haven't been seen since," said Davies, who is leading the search for Ms. Meadows. He said her passport gave her parents' address as Charlottesville, Va.

Dollar plunges

LONDON (AP) — The dollar plunged to a record low today against the Japanese yen and kept falling against other major currencies when European trading opened.

Gold prices rose, following Friday's surge in New York, before slipping back.

Despite heavy central bank intervention, the dollar plunged 2.80 yen from Friday to close at 146.20 yen in Tokyo, its lowest rate since modern exchange rates were set in the 1940s. Later in London, the dollar rallied slightly to 146.40 yen.

Traders in Tokyo, where dealing ends before European markets open, estimated the Bank of Japan bought $1.5 billion in morning trading alone in an attempt to prop up the U.S. currency.

The dollar's previous record closing low in Tokyo was 148.80 yen, set last Tuesday.

Other dollar rates at midmorning, compared with late Friday:

—1.8055 West German marks, down from 1.8240

—6.0090 French francs, down from 6.0620

—1.3030 Canadian dollars, down from 1.3063.

In London, the dollar fell against the British pound, which was quoted at $1.6105

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $425.75 a troy ounce but fell back later. The opening was well up from $417.30 late Friday in London and $422 in New York.

At mid-morning today, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $421.80.

Silver was quoted in London today at a bid price of $6.31 a troy ounce, up from late Friday's $6.06.

Chip dumping dispute escalates

By DAVID E. SANGER
New York Times News Service

ANALYSIS

NEW YORK (NYT) — In the trade dispute with Japan over computer chips, the real issues have rarely been what they seemed.

In the last month, the Reagan administration has suddenly interceded on behalf of the American semiconductor industry three times — imposing trade sanctions against Japan last Friday; blocking the Japanese purchase of a Silicon Valley chip maker two weeks ago and marshaling support last month for an unusual manufacturing consortium of American chip makers. In each case, federal officials have cited an hip urgent need to protect the nation's economic well-being or national security.

Many industry executives and analysts say that while they welcome the government's sudden interest in the plight of American chip makers, the public justifications for those moves have actually served to mask the underlying problems.

"What's been happening for the past few weeks only makes sense if you look at the subtext instead of the actual words," one senior government trade official said during the weekend. "The real issue is not what role Japan is playing now, but the role it might play in the U.S. economy in the 1990s."

The disparity between the spoken concerns and the underlying worries about the future of the American electronics industry has led to some strange paradoxes. Among them:

—Although the trade sanctions were imposed because Japan has supposedly "dumped" memory chips, or sold them below cost, in violation of the 1986 semiconductor trade agreement, no one is actually arguing that Japan's recent practices have hampered sales of American-made memory chips. In fact, only two American companies still sell the most common types of memory chips on the open market. The sanctions against the Japanese, one Commerce Department official noted, were intended mostly as "a shot across their bow."

—Government officials blocked Fujitsu Ltd.'s proprosed purchase of the Fairchild Semiconductor Corp., citing national security: If the sale went through, they said,Japan could obtain critical logic-chip technology developed in the United States. But once the deal was scuttled, Fairchild immediately announced that it was negotiating a "technology licensing exchange" with Fujitsu — an arrangement that would make the technology available. Nevertheless, there has been relatively little objection raised to that arrangement.

—The industry consortium, called Sematech, was formed to improve American chip-making technology, and it seems likely to receive substantial federal financing. But many experts contend that the nation's semiconductor manufacturers have lost very little of their manufacturing prowess; the real problems center on demand for American-made integrated circuits and the structure of the American chip-making industry.

If these government actions in recent weeks have seemed more a product of haste than study, industry officials say, no one should be surprised. A few years ago, when the American automobile and steel industries seemed in terminal decline, high technology in general — and the semiconductor business in particular — looked like a locomotive of the economy.

Chip-making involves design artistry and manufacturing skills that have long kept the United States at the technological forefront in everything from building the most complex billion-dollar phased-array radars for the military to producing deceptively simple $2,000 personal computers for consumers.

"We had been ahead for so long that when everything began to fall apart, no one in the government was ready to listen," Andrew Grove, the chief executive of the Intel Corp., one of the nation's leading chip makers, said a few weeks ago. "And let's face it," he added, "these problems are a lot more complicated than bailing out Chrysler."

Indeed, early overtures by industry officials for a government-coordinated effort to revive the industry met with little enthusiasm. Such plans smacked of industrial policy, a course that the Reagan administration rejected soon after taking office.

So the federal role, so far, has been limited to specific trade actions that seem chiefly designed to buy time for the industry as it struggles to reorganize for the coming decade.

The memory-chip sanctions are an example. No one believes that American companies will ever again be a force in the memory business — where profits depend on high-volume production and low cost, factors that play to Japanese strengths. Yet, industry officials say the trade action will probably slow the Japanese entry into the more complex and far more profitable markets in logic chips and custom-designed semiconductors.

The real issue, such comments seemed to suggest, had less to do with security than reciprocity: It no longer seemed worthwhile to sell technology to overseas companies that were more adept at marketing those discoveries than the inventors themselves.

Emcee J. Gordon Lunn ribs Drew Diggins after the crowd picked him as the world's Ugliest Roughneck at the PBPA Blowout.

Far from a pretty victory

From Staff Reports

His friends say he's so ugly his mama had to tie a bone around his neck to get the dog to play with him; that he's so ugly he has to slip up on a glass of water to get a drink. He's Drew Diggins, the World's Ugliest Roughneck.

"Compared to the people I work with, this is a distinct honor," said Diggins, who earned his ugly title at this weekend's Permian Basin Petroleum Association Blowout.

Now a petroleum engineer for Wagner & Brown oil producers in Midland, Diggins a graduate of Texas A&M, says he got his roughnecking experience in 1983 in Oklahoma City. Besides having the honor of being named the world's ugliest, Diggins also picked up a $100 check and a framed drawing of the World's Ugliest Roughneck by cartoonist Norman Johnson.

The light-hearted contest was a highlight of Saturday's all-day Blowout for Energy Appreciation Week. The competition was "not to breate or belittle anyone, but just a chance to do something silly, have a little fun and get folks' minds of the industry's problems," explained Harry Spannaus, executive vice president of the PBPA.

Local economy still dragging

By DEANNA J. NEAL
Business/Oil Writer

A tally of various economic indicators in the Tall City shows decline in virtually every sector, as consumer confidence continued to lag during February.

From the construction sector to the airline and financial sectors, figures compiled by the economic development department of the Midland Chamber of Commerce indicate continuing decline in an already depressed economy.

However, the unemployment rate regained its downward trend after taking a jump in January that halted six months of gradual decline. Out of a total labor force of 51,200 (down from 52,100 in January), 10.5 percent were looking for jobs. Last year in February, the unemployment rate stood at 7.7 percent.

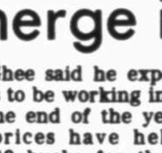

Airline boardings were down 12.45 percent from February 1986, with Midland Regional Airport reporting 39,434 boardings during the month. Postal receipts dipped 11.29 percent.

All major utilities reported small decreases in the number of connections during the month, with telephone connections taking the biggest dive at 4.94 percent.

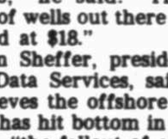

Midland bank's showed a 9.88 percent drop in deposits, but deposits at the city's savings and loans continued to show gains, up 38.66 percent. City coffers were replenished with $411,191 collected in city sales and use tax, but that figure is down more than 16 percent from year ago figures.

Signs of hope emerge in state economy

HOUSTON (AP) — The plunge in the Texas economy seems to have hit bottom, say some economists and business leaders, who express some hope this year for the area's financial fitness.

"I'm seeing the first robins of spring," said Ed McGhee, vice president of the International Association of Drilling Contractors, in predicting better days in the oil business in the second half of 1987.

The latest rig count totaled 784, and McGhee said he expects about 1,200 rigs to be working in the country by the end of the year.

"Oil prices have held steady around 18 bucks for the last few months," he said. "There are a bunch of wells out there that can be justified at $18."

Loran Sheffer, president of Offshore Data Services, said although he believes the offshore drilling industry has hit bottom in the Gulf of Mexico, "the fallout of companies is still taking place."

"I've got the gut feeling the Gulf utilization rate will climb above 50 percent by September," Sheffer said. That rate is currently at 35.6 percent with 83 of the 233 mobile offshore rigs in the Gulf now employed.

Economist M. Ray Perryman, director of Baylor University Forecasting Service, sees the end of the downturn occurring in the "April, May, June time frame."

Permian drops marketing charges

From Staff Reports

Effective April 1, Permian Corp. will drop its transportation and marketing charges for purchased crude oil.

"While those charges have been significantly reduced in recent months, this will completely eliminate those charges," said a Permian spokesman.

Crude oil representative Bill Rigney explains that the company's move means "we will be paying the posted price at the lease, period."

Permian and virtually all other crude oil buyers in the Permian Basin are currently posting a $17.50 per barrel price for West Texas Intermediate crude.

MEDICAL NOTICE

I am pleased to introduce and make available to Midland, the latest in medical technology for the Control & Treatment of Upper Gastrointestinal Bleeding, namely the HEATER PROBE. When used with a Therapeutic Gastroscope it is a non-surgical treatment about 90% effective for control of actively bleeding Gastric/Duodenal Ulcers, Mallory Weiss Tears of the esophagus, AV angiodysplasia.

Stock Market Loses

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market dropped sharply today as investors, motivated by the trade confrontation between the United States and Japan, extended a wave of selling that began on Wall Street Friday.

Analysts said investors also were concerned about the possibility of a rise in interest rates, and called the drop a much-needed correction of an overextended market.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials fell 44.32 points to 2291.48 as of noon EST. In the first hour of trading, the closely watched index skidded nearly 80 points.

The record drop over a day for the Dow was 86.61 points to 1,792.89 last Sept. 11, representing 4.6 percent of the value of the index. Concern about rising interest rates was the primary reason for that decline.

SUTTON PLACE
Sutton Place is beyond your expectations. Conveniently located just minutes from downtown, nestled among large old trees and gracious grounds. In the center lies a sparkling pool and cabana for relaxing moments...You probably wouldn't expect large spacious rooms, abundent closet space, fully equipped kitchens, private balconies or patios? But all these extras are standard at Sutton Place.
601-N. George #98 682-2423

GULF SHORE VILLAGE
Solidly constructed patio homes with beautiful brick fronts capture the charm of a quaint village on a secluded beach. High vaulted ceilings, large colonial glazed windows, trellised patios, and shingle accents enhance each design with romance of your own private seaside cottage ...and located right in the heart of Midland.
509 Delmar Dr. 689-8116

DEL MAR VILLAS
Like a charming country village, Delmar Villas are built in clusters of four to eight-unit buildings that are quaintly arranged along private landscape drives. Quality amenities like brick hearth fireplaces, balconies, garage or carport, and fully equipped kitchens, including your own washer and dryer, serve the standard of living you have come to expect. The lovely pool and cabana complete the formula for year-round luxury living at Delmar Villas. 1 & 2 Bedrooms.
509 Delmar 689-8116

SIGNATURE PLACE
Townhome living as personal as your signature, located in an established residential neighborhood and designed for your individual needs.
