Good Evening!

AREA

PAMPA — A pair of teenage boys are in custody of their parents today awaiting a court date after they were charged with burglary of a habitation and burglary of coin-operated machines on Tuesday.

The youths, both 16, are alleged to have burglarized the home of Richard Rex Payne, 2616 Evergreen sometime between Aug. 3 and 1 a.m. Monday. Taken in the burglary were a shotgun, two .22-caliber rifles, a handgun, a .257 Robert rifle, collectible coins and currency and personal documents.

Recovered about 10:20 p.m. Monday were three weapons, said Officer Brad Love of the Pampa Police Department.

On Tuesday, officers recovered the handgun buried outside town. The currency and coins were discovered buried in a separate location. The .22-caliber rifle is still missing, Love said.

The boys are expected to face adjudication on Aug. 29, say juvenile officials.

PAMPA — A pair of black youths who claim to be selling candy on behalf of Chief Juvenile Probation Officer Albert Nichols and the Juvenile Probation Office have not been asked by Nichols to do so, he said today.

"This office is not selling anything," he said.

If citizens are approached by youths who claim to be selling candy on behalf of Juvenile Probation, Nichols suggests they contact the Pampa Police Department.

Nichols said he heard of the scheme after being contacted by Postal Service officials who caught the boys pouring water in a mail slot at the Combs Worley Building. The youths told postal workers they represented Nichols, Nichols said.

PAMPA — Members of Gray County's Juvenile Probation Board are to meet at 10 a.m. Thursday in the second floor courtroom of Gray County courthouse.

A nine-item agenda is to include a report from District Judge Lee Waters on the 1994 Juvenile Judges Conference, budget matters, collection of office fees, the 1994 monitoring summary and technical assistance report.

Members of the board Waters, County Judge Carl Kennedy and District Judge Kent Sims will also discuss a proposal for Gray County to share costs with Pampa Independent School District for a staff psychologist. They plan to hear from justices of the peace Bob Muns and Margie Prestidge about legal filings on juveniles.

A grant request submitted by the office will be discussed with the board.

PAMPA — Gray County Appraisal District's Appraisal Review Board will meet beginning at 3:30 p.m. Thursday in the district's conference room at 815 N. Sumner.

Items scheduled to be discussed in the meeting include questions concerning business and personal property.

In addition, the board will hear from Pat Bagley, chief appraiser for the district.

WASHINGTON (AP) — For many Americans the memory of family life may resemble Ozzie and Harriet, but real life is beginning to look more like Murphy Brown.

Less than half of all American families these days have children under 18 living at home, and of those that do, one-third are single parents.

A new Census Bureau study of families and households found one tradition that still holds, though — when there is a single parent, it's usually Mom.

The annual analysis of households and families, released Tuesday, recorded 96.4 million households as of last year, including 68.1 million family households. That means families constitute about 71 percent of households, down from 81 percent in 1970.

And of the 68.1 million families, 33.3 million have children under age 18, while the majority, 34.9 million, had none under 18 at home.

By contrast, in 1970 America had 51.5 million family households, including 28.7 million with children and 22.7 million without.

Work begins to refill Lake McClellan

By CHERYL BERZANSKIS
News Editor

Attempts to reclaim Lake McClellan's status as an oasis in a dry land are underway as county employees work to implement a U.S. Forest Service plan to create a retaining structure to hold silt dredged from the lake.

Employees of Precincts 3 and 4 began construction on a 480-feet by 135-feet retaining wall across a bowl-shaped draw on the northwest side of the lake a month ago.

The wall of dirt excavated from the draw is being formed over a sand and gravel base to operate as a silt filter for water dredged from the lake. According to the plan, as water filters through the retaining structure, it will return to the lake clear and silt free. Forest Service officials hope the silt-free water will discourage the lake from refilling so quickly with silt.

Commissioner Gerald Wright, spearheading the project for the county, believes the retaining structure is the first step toward a dredging program which county officials have been discussing for months. Wright said the plan calls for dredging west of the dam and in the channel area to increase lake depth and discourage evaporation.

There is one drawback, however - the lake is nearly dry. Two puddles remain west of the dam with most of the lake bed covered in vegetation. Other portions are covered with a fine, dry silt patterned with cracks deep and wide enough to eat a tire.

Coupled with the 50-year accumulation of silt is a problem neither the county nor the Forest Service can control — lack of rain fall.

"The lake's gotta have some water in it before any of this will be worth doing," said Stan Anthony, a Precinct 3 employee assigned to the project.

He and others associated with the project say rain is the key to rejuvenating Lake McClellan. It might be years before the structure is actually used, he said.

Anthony estimated the project will take one month to complete. The retaining structure - government officials are careful not to call it a dam - is funded through a challenge cost-share agreement between the county and the U.S. Forest Service by which the county provides labor and equipment and the federal agency antes up for materials.

Wright explained the Forest Services estimates the county would spend $50,000 in fuel and material to build the structure, plus another $50,000 for labor and equipment. He thinks the agency has $190,000 budgeted for dredging and supplies.

The county applied for a $50,000 grant through North Rolling Plains Resource Conservation and Development. If the grant is approved, funds will be used to "repay" the U.S. Forest Service the $50,000 estimated to be used in construction, therefore leaving all the $190,000 budgeted for dredging available.

"I think we've got a good chance to get the money if the money's available," said Wright.

An alternative proposal on the table, but not approved is to build a silt dike inside the shoreline to decrease the size of the lake bed. The modification was suggested by U.S. Forest Service District Ranger Reggie Blackwell as a less expensive alternative to dredging by excavating the dry lake bed for depth.

"That's what (Blackwell) is trying to get the Corps of Engineers to approve - to remove some of the silt in dry form," said Wright.

The excavated bowl area is expected to hold 160,000 cubic yards of silt, Wright said. Inside the gravel and sand base will be a perforated drain pipe wrapped in a geotextile fabric. The four materials - sand, gravel, perforated pipe and geotextile fabric – are expected to act as filter sufficient to catch silt without clogging. The water will return to the lake via irrigation pipe.

Lake McClellan has suffered from a lack of rainfall and the upstream damming of McClellan Creek.

The lake, built by the Civilian Conservation Corps and opened in 1940, once covered 316 acres.

Agencies seek help from city budget

By RANDAL K. McGAVOCK
Staff Writer

Pampa's proposed 1994-1995 budget and requests for assistance from two outside agencies topped the agenda of Tuesday's meeting of the Pampa City Commission.

Representatives of the two organizations, Clean Pampa Inc. and Meals on Wheels, appeared before commission during the work session prior to their regular meeting.

Both organizations are seeking financial assistance to meet their present and future needs.

Bill Waters, a local attorney and civic leader, was one of a handful of people to speak on behalf of Clean Pampa Inc.

"Apparently the fear is that without some assistance from the city this organization can no longer exist," said Waters. "The trend over the last few years with the organizations that make up grants will consider applications only for projects and not at all for operational expenses and that is the great need of Clean Pampa."

To help defray some of those operational costs, Pam Green, executive coordinator of Clean Pampa, proposed moving into city-owned and operated facilities. Doing so could save her organization approximately $7,500.

In addition to savings on rent, Green estimated additional money could be saved through the use of the city's telephones and other equipment like copiers and typewriters.

As for its status as a non-profit organization, Green said it wouldn't be endangered by using city-owned office space and equipment.

Besides Clean Pampa, a representative of Pampa's Meals on Wheels program also addressed the City Commission, asking for assistance although no specific dollar amount was requested.

Burglar, drug user tells of wasted life, family pain

By CHERYL BERZANSKIS
News Editor

This is the fourth in a series on crime and its effects in Gray County. Today a man who admits stealing from his employer to buy drugs tells how he got to that point and what he plans to do about it.

A Pampa man says he chose the road well traveled and along that crowded thoroughfare which the Bible says leads to destruction, David Charles Shilinsky leaves the debris of a wasted life.

Shilinsky, 26, is in Gray County jail indicted on two counts of burglary of a building. He is charged with stealing ribeyes from his employer, Dyer's Bar-B-Que, and lifting hamburger patties from Hamburger Station to feed his habit.

The 26-year-old man is on probation in Potter County convicted of forgery. He expects he may be sent to a drug treatment center for felons run by the Texas Department of Criminal Justice.

Unlike some criminals who make the law come after them, Shilinsky turned himself in to Gray County officials on May 9.

"I knew I was guilty," he said.

He credits former deputy Charlie Morris with making an emotional connection with him.

"He told me I'll have to pay the price and it could be the best day of the rest of my life, and I believed it," Shilinsky said.

Shilinsky isn't a throwaway kid over whom society shakes its collective head. Instead, he is one of four children who grew up going to church every time the doors opened and attending Christian schools because his parents wanted to shield him from secular influences.

His parents' ministrations, however, backfired. Instead of being inoculated against the sin of the world, Shilinsky says he ran toward it – as fast as he could. Resentment toward his parents' choices festered inside Shilinsky so that when he ventured into the work world as a 14-year-old, the charm of pot, parties and girls was too alluring. He says he resents missing athletics, the prom and dating.

"I felt like I was deprived of it," he said.

Shilinsky was raised to shun the wiles of the devil. As a teen in Christian school, he was warned repeatedly about the corruption of rock and roll, the drag, booze and dating. Drug use was the ultimate sin.

"We get out of that school and the influence ... the wanting to fit in was so strong," he said.

Fit into a sinful world he did. He's stolen from his brothers and sisters, slept under cars when homeless, skipped child support payments and used a lot of dope.

"When I came out of the school, I felt so needed to be accepted. I did go in hard and heavy. I don't know if that's a strength or weakness," Shilinsky said.

Maybe things will be different. Shilinsky agreed to this story and to use his name because he claims to be sorry for the grief he's caused his family and the community.

"I totally believe in God," he said through tears, "There's no doubt I am a Christian. All of my history served as a good witness to a lot of people. I have to prove it now.

"What's different this time is that this time I've repented," said the two-time graduate of residential rehabilitation programs. "It's easy to repent where I'm at. I feel forgiven. I'm forgiving myself.

"If I had any advice to give anybody it's 'think before you do (drugs).' It's real easy to do when your friends are doing it."

During his criminal history, Shilinsky estimates spending $5,000 in legal and bond fees. He's seen the inside of Amarillo and Potter County jails for lack of automobile insurance and nonpayment of traffic tickets – and then there is the matter of forgery. His toddler son lives in another state and the child support is not up to date. Shilinsky describes it as the complete irresponsibility of living.

In the early days of drug use, he called himself a "functional" user – he held a job and paid the rent. Later, he said he "moved a lot" to avoid paying the rent.

"I've blown paycheck after paycheck after paycheck," he said.

Shilinsky went through what is a common cycle of drug use – he said he pushed himself to the limit financially and physically before temporary periods of working to get rent money and, of course, more dope.

"Once you've lost it all, it's almost impossible to pull yourself up. My end was county jail with felony charges for forgery," Shilinsky said.

Starting over is what he longs to do, he said.

"I want to help people," he said, and by age 30 he'd like to work with those who like himself have a drug or alcohol problem.

"As I become sober, the reality of responsibility and what I have done to the family sinks in," he said.

Police name evening shift commander

By CHERYL BERZANSKIS
News Editor

Officer Tommy Pickering is expected to take the reins of leadership Friday as the evening shift lieutenant at Pampa Police Department.

Pickering was selected Tuesday by Chief Chuck Flemins after a selection process begun in late June. His promotion completes the ranks of station commanders responsible for day-to-day shift operations. Lt. Shawn Fullagar, promoted May 27, leads the day shift and Lt. Steve Chance, a 14-year department veteran, heads the midnight shift. Pickering will be responsible for the evening shift, 4 p.m. to 2 a.m.

He is the second lieutenant chosen by a selection process revamped this year by Flemins and Col. John Ellen. The promotion process included 15 research-oriented essay questions, a comprehensive resume, detailed statement of personal management philosophy, oral presentation to the selection committee, time-controlled essay exam, two-hour oral interview with the selection committee and a personal interview with Flemins, who made the final selection.

Lt. Tommy Pickering

To be eligible to begin the promotion process, an officer must have six years experience, 12 in-service training points, a Texas driver's license, be a certified Texas peace officer, and have completed any disciplinary action or probation prior to beginning the process.

Three other officers tested for the job.

Pickering is a native of the Dallas-Fort Worth area. He graduated from Grand Prairie High School and the North Texas Council of Governments Police Academy in Arlington. He worked for the Hood County Sheriff's Office in Grandbury and Pantego Police Department in South Arlington and was a corporal in the Colleyville Police Department in northeast Tarrant County.

While at Colleyville, he was assigned to the Tarrant County Narcotics Intelligence and Coordination Unit as an undercover officer.

He served as a field training officer in Pantego, Colleyville and Pampa police departments.

The new lieutenant said he believes he can bring training and exposure received at other departments to this position. His vision for the agency is to strive for modernization and press for higher departmental standards. Pickering said he would like the Pampa agency to serve as a model for other agencies.

The position pays $2,148.82 per month.

Logo contest winner

Doug Locke, left, accepts a $50 U.S. savings bond certificate from Larry Orman, Citizens Bank and Trust president, for being named winner of the Great Texas Tumbleweed Festival logo contest. The presentation was made this morning at the bank's parking lot with a mock-up replica of the logo. The festival is under the direction of the Pamp/Gray County Citizen Activities Association, which conducted the logo contest. Locke's entry was chosen from 11 entries looked at by five judges. Citizens Bank donated the savings bond certificate. Locke is a local accountant and active citizen in the community. See related photo, Page 2, for the logo design. Detainees deny Cuban lieutenant killed in hijacking

KEY WEST, Fla. (AP) – Twenty-four Cubans who tried to reach the United States on a stolen Cuban government boat were brought to port and detained today by U.S. officials trying to figure out whether they should be treated as criminals or defectors.

The Cuban government initially contended a Cuban navy lieutenant was killed in the hijacking Monday and demanded the Cubans be returned as common criminals.

But a U.S. Coast Guard official said the refugees insist no one was killed, and Cuban officials seemed to be backing off the claim today.

Twenty-six Cubans were picked up Tuesday afternoon from a 30-foot vessel about 60 miles southwest of Key West. They were held at sea aboard a Coast Guard cutter overnight, and brought to Key West about midday today.

Two of the 26, a woman and her young daughter, were removed from the cutter earlier in the day because the girl suffered a minor injury in a shipboard fall. The two were being taken to a Key West hospital.

The rest, including young men wearing shorts and at least two small children, walked off the cutter early this afternoon.

The Cubans were to be turned over to the Immigration and Naturalization Service, which handles all new arrivals. They would be held for further questioning, said INS spokesman Lamar Wooley in Miami.

"This is supposedly a hijacking, and we want to make sure the State Department takes a proper action on this," Senior Chief Petty Officer Luis Diaz said earlier.

Lawsuits claim antibiotic drug caused 10 deaths

SAN ANTONIO (AP) – A newly approved antibiotic drug caused the deaths of ten South Texas residents, according to lawsuits on file in federal court here.

The lawsuits, filed against Abbott Laboratories of Chicago, allege that the deaths resulted from the use of Omniflox, a trade name for the chemical temafloxacin.

The lawsuits were originally filed in Bexar County state district courts, but were moved to federal court, authorities said Tuesday.

Lawyers for Abbott Laboratories have filed documents denying the manufacturer was responsible for any ill effects claimed in the lawsuits and questioning whether some of the deceased had even taken the drug.

The lawsuits were brought on behalf of relatives of the deceased, and claimed the deaths came less than a month after the U.S. Food and Drug Administration on Jan. 30, 1992, authorized the sale of the drug Omniflox in the United States.

The antibiotic drug was intended for treatment of infections of the lower respiratory system, urinary tract, prostate gland and skin.

Abbott voluntarily withdrew Omniflox from the market June 5, 1992, after about "50 reports of serious adverse reactions, including three deaths," were reported to the company and the FDA during the first three months the drug was in use, according FDA records.

Abbott attorneys countered that plaintiffs failed to state how the drug was defective or unreasonably dangerous, as well as failing to state how Abbott didn't adequately warn of risks or harm.

Korean airliner skids off runway, catches fire; all reported rescued

By JU-YEON KIM
Associated Press Writer

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) – A Korean Air jet battered by an approaching typhoon skidded off a rain-slicked runway after a forced landing today, but all 160 people aboard escaped before the plane burst into flames.

The pilot had tried unsuccessfully to abort the landing on the southern resort island of Cheju. But gale-force winds practically slammed the Airbus A-300 to the ground and it rammed into a safety barricade at the end of the runway and caught fire, officials said.

Within two minutes, the 152 vacationers and eight crew members who had boarded in Seoul scrambled down an escape chute to safety, Korean Air officials said.

Nine people – all from South Korea – were slightly injured. All but two were treated and released, officials said this afternoon.

Airline officials said the quick evacuation prevented a major disaster. Television footage showed black smoke billowing from the plane as the fire turned the passenger section into a charred lump of metal.

"I looked back as I escaped, and the plane exploded with a bang," said Paik Eun-kyung, a flight attendant who was one of the last to flee before the jet went up in flames.

As the plane landed, the lights went off in the cabin and oxygen masks dropped out of overhead compartments, she said.

"I heard screams in the darkness and children crying," she said.

Another flight attendant, Kim Young-mi, said the airliner shook violently as strong winds buffeted it. It crashed moments after the pilot tried to take off again.

One witness reported flames at the front of the plane, and Kim said she saw smoke coming from the tail section. Everyone was evacuated through a front hatch because there was no time to open the side doors, she said.

Ten small explosions rocked the plane within minutes after passengers and crew had escaped to safety, witnesses said.

Firefighters were unable to control the blaze in the rain and wind. Only the tail and cockpit were intact after the flames died out nearly two hours after the crash.

A typhoon warning was in effect in southern South Korea at the time of the crash. Typhoon Doug later weakened into a tropical storm, but still managed to dump up to 7 inches of rain across the south today.

The runway is only about 100 yards from a dock, and officials said there probably would have been many casualties if the plane crashed at sea, where waves reached 25 feet high.

Ferry service connecting Cheju island — about 80 miles off the southern tip of the Korean peninsula — to the mainland had been canceled for two days, tying up hundreds of holiday makers.

Airlines had reported flights in and out of the island more packed than usual Tuesday as vacationers sought to travel by air instead. Thirteen Japanese were the only foreigners among the passengers.

Richards hits airwaves first with campaign

By MICHAEL HOLMES
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN (AP) – Republican George W. Bush says the gubernatorial campaign's first television commercial – being aired by Democratic Gov. Ann Richards – has a familiar ring.

Richards' 60-second commercial touts her call for a teen curfew. It hit the airwaves Tuesday, six days before Bush's first ad was scheduled to run.

Besides being first, the Richards spot takes direct aim at one of Bush's key campaign issues – combating juvenile crime.

Bush, who last week said he will begin airing his commercials Aug. 15, has made juvenile crime a centerpiece of his campaign. He accused Richards of ignoring the problem until he started talking about it.

"The juvenile justice code has not been a high priority item for this administration. All of sudden, 11 months after my proposal came out, we see the first peep," Bush said.

Bush said that when he issued a detailed juvenile reform proposal last year, "That plan was ridiculed and mocked. And now the first shot out of the box has something to do with teenage curfews as a way to solve juvenile justice."

Filmed in a classroom setting, Richards' commercial shows the governor telling youths why she favors curfews and other measures.

"Your life means a whole lot to me. I want you to grow up, and have a family and have children. And when you're on that street late at night with some of these people, these kids who are irresponsible, your life is in danger," she says.

"And I've got to do everything I can to protect you. You've got a lot of years left."

The Democrat is "trying to obscure the fact that there has been nothing happening for four years," Bush said. "The ad ... basically says I (Richards) failed, warning children not to go out on the street at night."

The commercial details Richards' proposal for juvenile reforms.

"She's calling for zero tolerance for violence, disruptive behavior, guns, drugs and weapons. Plus strict enforcement of truancy laws and curfews," the ad says.

Chuck McDonald, the governor's campaign spokesman, said the commercial began airing Tuesday in Houston and Dallas and would be running statewide by next week.

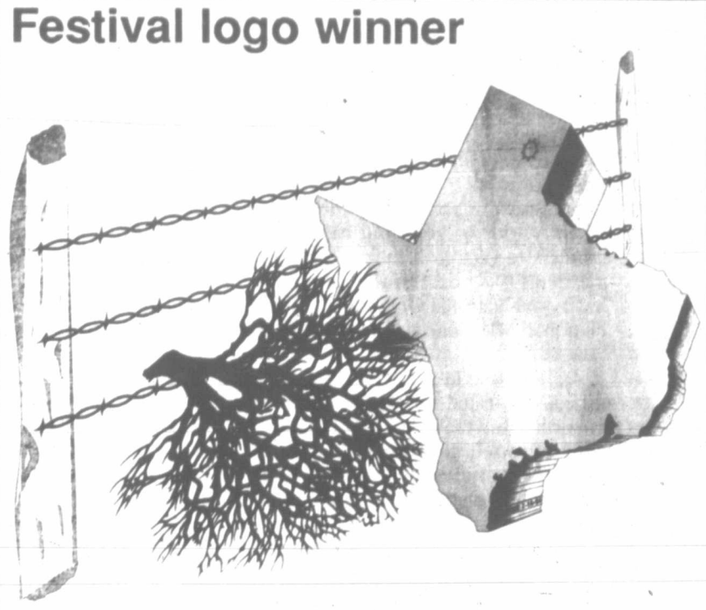

The opening of the televised battle is unusual. In addition to the early date – election day isn't until Nov. 8 – these commercials also are the first either Richards or Bush has aired this year.

That's because each faced only one lightly funded opponent in the March primaries. Richards defeated Gary Espinosa of Palestine, while Bush downed Ray Hollis of Abilene.

In other developments Tuesday, Richards' campaign said it also was airing a second TV commercial, only in East Texas, which discusses the governor's record in putting people to work. "For the last two years, we have created more jobs in the state of Texas than any other state in the United States, and we're going to continue to do it," she says.

Karen Hughes, a spokeswoman for Bush, said the state's payroll also has been growing. "Unfortunately for the taxpayers, many of the jobs Ann Richards has created have been at taxpayer expense," she said.

Cal Farley's Boys Ranch Rodeo to help mark 50th anniversary

The Cal Farley's Boys Ranch Rodeo is celebrating its 50th Anniversary, and the boys and girls are preparing to show the Panhandle what they can do.

The annual event will be held during the Labor Day weekend on Sunday, Sept. 4, and Monday, Sept. 5, at the Ranch, 36 miles northwest of Amarillo.

In hopes of winning trophy belt buckles, children of all ages from Boys Ranch, Girlstown U.S.A. and Cal Farley's Family Program will compete. The boys will be riding calves, bulls, broncs and steers, and the girls will be competing for top honors in barrel racing and pole bending events.

Riding clubs from the Tri-State area will join the youths during grand entries on both days. It is a rodeo for all of the boys and girls, and those who do not compete as contestants will be selling barbecue plates, soft drinks and popcorn, or working at the many jobs required for a successful rodeo.

Several popular specialty acts will entertain the crowd, including a calf scramble, an FFA project parade, and barrel races with five and six-year-old children riding stick horses. Among the spectators will be many of the Ranch graduates who return with their families for an annual reunion.

Since 1939, over 4000 boys have called the Ranch "home," and some travel long distances to attend the rodeo, as well as the many Boys Ranch Alumni Association festivities.

Up to 10,000 people are expected to fill the rodeo grandstands. Tickets for reserved bleacher seats are $4, general admission adults $3, general admission children (6-12) $1. Beginning at 11:30 a.m., barbecue beef plate lunches will be sold for $4, with rodeo action beginning at 2:30 p.m.

The Boys Ranch Rodeo is the only one of its kind in the nation. Further information and reservations are available by calling (806) 372-2341, or by writing P.O. Box 1890, Amarillo, Texas 79174.

Fort Worth activist killed in his office

FORT WORTH (AP) – Friends and supporters say activist Emmett Allen was developing into a powerful political force in Fort Worth before he was gunned down in his real estate office.

Allen, 38, was shot at least three times Tuesday, once in the head, police said. Police said they were just beginning the investigation and did not have any suspects or motives. His body was found about 6 p.m. Tuesday.

Allen was known as an anti-gang and fair housing activist in Fort Worth. He was a frequent visitor to City Council meetings, and ran for the council twice and was reportedly considering a third try.

"He meant a lot to the community," said police Chief Thomas Windham. "He meant a lot to us at the Police Department. He was a critic when it was time to criticize. He was a strong supporter when it was time to support."

Allen owned Allen Realty and Associates, and was active in the local Republican Party. He was also a part-time substitute teacher, and spoke out against billboards promoting alcohol, tobacco and sleazy motels in low-income black neighborhoods.

"This is such a tragic thing," said former state legislator Reby Cary. "It bothers me that we're losing such a good young man."

Allen was a member of the Coalition for Fair Congressional Redistricting formed to fight a recent congressional redistricting plan.

"He was passionate about the things he believed in," said Roy Brooks, president of the Minority Leaders and Citizens Council of Fort Worth and Tarrant County. "He believed in his people, he believed in economic advancement for his people and he went about to try to create opportunities for people to become meaningfully involved in the mainstream."

We're working to protect you— but we need your help!

Our most important goal at Natural Gas Pipeline Company is to safeguard everyone who lives and works along our pipeline route. But as hard as we try, we can't do the job alone. We need your help to spot and report pipeline emergencies so we can react promptly. And we need your cooperation to prevent accidents from happening.

Help prevent pipeline accidents:
- Call BEFORE you dig, drill, blast or doze.
- Watch for our signs at road, railroad and river crossings, at fence lines, ditches and other sites.
- For no-cost location of underground facilities, call the 24-hour "TESS" number (1-800-DIG-TESS) to reach Texas Excavation Safety System. Please call two working days in advance.

Signs of a pipeline emergency:
- Hissing or shrill SOUND.
- Unusual BLOWING dirt or dust.
- Persistent BUBBLES in water.
- DYING PLANTS amid healthy ones.
- FIRE or EXPLOSION near pipeline.

To report a pipeline emergency:
- Phone 1-800-733-2490, our toll-free, 24-hour line.

Steps to take in a pipeline emergency:
- Evacuate the area immediately.
- Avoid potential ignition sources.
- Warn others to stay away.

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Opinion

Too many people isn't main problem

When delegates to the International Conference on Population and Development meet in Cairo, Egypt, in September, we predict that population, not development, will dominate the agenda. It should be the other way around.

The story line leading up to the conference is a familiar one: World population is exploding. In the poorest countries, food production cannot keep up with the growth of hungry mouths to feed. Something dramatic must be done to control the rising number of human beings.

Granted, at first glance, the population numbers look daunting. Each year, world population grows by 89 million. Most of that growth – more than 90 percent – occurs in the world's less developed countries. By 2050, demographers predict today's world population of 5.6 billion will have grown to somewhere between 7.8 billion and 12.5 billion.

Conference delegates have already drawn up a preliminary plan, with heavy emphasis on universal access to birth control, including abortion. It's a plan that, like most of its kind, misses the global reality of population and development.

The obsession with population control carries two hazards: It obscures the real cause of poverty in the world, while posing a threat to individual freedom. Hundreds of millions of people in the Third World are not poor because of "overpopulation." They live in squalor because of cultural impediments and bad government policies that thwart economic progress. Examples abound of nations that prosper even though they are brimming with people. If sheer numbers of people were the problem, then countries such as Japan, Hong Kong and the Netherlands – crowded and resource poor – should be economic laggards. Instead, they are among the wealthiest in the world.

In contrast, Brazil is endowed with great natural resources, the same land area as the continental United States and only half our population. Yet its economy is a mess primarily because of government meddling. Sub-Saharan Africa, also endowed with ample resources, remains mired in poverty because of socialist economic policies and civil wars.

By emphasizing population control, delegates to the upcoming conference will miss an opportunity to promote sound economic policies based on private property and free markets. It is free markets, not government-imposed birth control plans, that offer the best hope for the world's poor.

Another danger of the population-control agenda is that it too often ignores individual liberty. "Voluntary" programs can become mandatory, forcing men and women to submit the most fundamental aspects of their lives to the control of bureaucrats. The most gruesome example is Mainland China and its "one family, one child" policy. This policy has led inevitably to forced abortions and official monitoring of menstrual cycles. (Advocates of "reproductive freedom" in the United States grow strangely silent when foreign governments engage in this sort of coercion in the name of population control).

If the ultimate goal of conference delegates is to mitigate suffering in the world, they should focus on promoting policies that foster economic growth. They should champion the sort of market reforms that are already lifting millions of people out of poverty in Latin America, Eastern Europe and the Pacific Rim of Asia.

Who really owns 'family values'?

Nat Hentoff

The use – for political purposes – of "family values" has been largely left to polemicists on the Right, very much including the Christian Right. Members of those organizations are increasingly elected to school and library boards around the country, and they then try to decide for all the families in the town what can and can't be taught and read in the schools. They censor books and silence teachers – all in the name of their family values.

Yet I consider myself very much concerned with family values. My wife and I have four children, and we have not in the least been passive in teaching them about honesty and respect for others and the dangers of censorship to free thought. We never mention God, however, so I expect many in the Christian Right would claim that what we call family values is so deficient as to be fraudulent.

My wife and I appear to be out of step in another way. According to all the polls, a considerable majority of the American people believe that what Bill Clinton did – with regard to adultery – before he became president is of little importance. The man was elected to be president, they say, so let him govern.

My sense is that anybody who commits adultery, in or out of office, has a weak character. That's one of the reasons I didn't vote for Clinton as president. The adultery; the ways he dodged the draft; and other acts of questionable morality in his years as governor made clear to me that he would be a president who does not stand up for his alleged principles. And I was right – as survivors in Bosnia and fleeing Haitians can tell you. So can civil libertarians as they watch him support a crime bill swarming with such draconian measures as 60 new crimes that will bring the death penalty.

What does all that have to do with philandering? The man's moral compass veers with the wind.

Pro-choice organizations claim they certainly have family values. When a woman has a choice as to whether to bring a pregnancy to term, the child will be welcomed into – and thereby strengthen – the family.

Yet, in New York state, when a woman legislator recently tried to get a bill passed that would allow mothers to be told if their infants are HIV-infected, the fierce and successful opposition to that bill was led by the National Organization for Women and the National Abortion and Reproductive Rights Action League.

As it is now in New York and 43 other states, all infants are tested for HIV – which leads to AIDS – at birth. But they are blind tests, and nobody is allowed to tell the names of infected infants. What kind of family values do NOW and NARAL have when they are ardently willing to allow the infected infants to go home without anyone knowing that they will soon be attacked by infections due to their weakened immune systems? More important to these pro-choice groups, however, is the sanctity of confidentiality. That is, once the infected child's name is known, the mother will be revealed to be HIV positive.

It's more vital to them to keep the mother's secret than to save the infant who is obviously not a fetus any longer, but a born person under the Constitution.

Yet, the mother will know inexorably – when the child, who would have lived much longer if treated, dies.

Is this truly an illustration of family values?

Meanwhile, in the nation's high schools and colleges, there is an increasing tribalism – deep divisions between blacks and whites; Latinos and blacks; apprentice skinheads stalking everybody, especially blacks and Jews.

Some of these divisions are due, at least in part, to such hustlers of hate as Louis Farrakhan and Khalid Abdul Muhammad. When he was alive, Rabbi Meir Kahane, who spoke at colleges, was also a contributor to this bigotry.

But what kind of homes do these bitter student separatists come from? Do their parents ever tell them – as Benjamin Franklin did in his time – that if we don't hang together, we'll hang separately? Not "hang" in the literal gallows sense. But a country engaged in such internal wars will inevitably unravel, and just about everyone will be weakened.

The Christian Right is part of this tribalism. So are those feminists who work so hard to keep HIV infants from being identified. (Some feminists dissent.)

No one owns family values, but not many of us on all sides practice them. And it is not merely nostalgic to try to get them back. It's a matter of survival.

Today in history

By The Associated Press

Today is Wednesday, Aug. 10, the 222nd day of 1994. There are 143 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Aug. 10, 1846, Congress chartered the Smithsonian Institution, named after English scientist Joseph Smithson, whose bequest of half a million dollars had made it possible.

On this date:

In 1792, during the French Revolution, mobs in Paris attacked the palace of Louis XVI. The king was taken into custody, put on trial for treason later that year and executed the following January.

In 1809, Ecuador struck its first blow for independence from Spain.

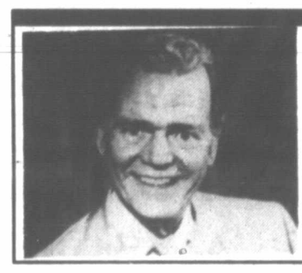

In 1874, Herbert Clark Hoover, the 31st president of the United States, was born in West Branch, Iowa.

In 1921, Franklin D. Roosevelt was stricken with polio at his summer home on the Canadian island of Campobello.

In 1944, 50 years ago, during World War II, American forces overcame remaining Japanese resistance on Guam.

In 1948, Allen Funt's Candid Microphone, later titled Candid Camera, made its television debut.

Finding the best defense for O.J.

Paul Harvey

Perhaps you've already heard more than you want to know about the O.J. Simpson case, but because it has become a media circus, you need to know why: The best defense is a good offense.

O.J. Simpson's high-octane lawyers are earning their money now. A hundred million witnesses saw Simpson's runaway Bronco flight that night; his lawyers have to try to obscure that event with a smoke screen of "reasonable doubt."

Also, when the Simpson "suicide note" was read aloud to the world, it sounded like a confession of guilt. It made no mention of anything that might implicate anybody else.

In an effort to change that negative to a positive, Simpson was advised – probably by F. Lee Bailey – to set up a hot line phone number and publicly pledge half a million dollars to anybody who could name "the real killer."

Again, the most effective defense is a good offense. But the hot line might have been a mistake. Most of the callers hang up. Some say he is innocent. Some say they wish he had committed suicide. Many complain the trial is wasting taxpayers' money. Some say they know who did it and insist that Simpson, personally, return their call.

If nothing comes of all this (and it's unlikely anything will) ... if, despite a half-million dollar incentive, nobody comes up with another name, it will tend to confirm in the public mind that Simpson has to be the killer.

So now Simpson's attorneys are attacking the fairness of police, the ineptness of medical examiners and the possibility of prejudice.

The defense must help the public forget the suicide note Simpson wrote and the trail of blood from Nicole Simpson's house to his. They must focus attention on "other possibilities."

They've found a disgruntled ex-cop named Zvonka Pavelic who is willing to wage war on his former associates.

Pavelic is the likely leaker to the media of allegations of racism and corruption in the LAPD.

Competing news media, as never since the days of yellow journalism a century ago, are regurgitating rumors and parroting handouts and twisting facts and paying hundreds of thousand of dollars for personal appearances by anybody claiming to know anything titillating.

Might the O.J. Simpson trial demonstrate for all of us that there really is a different system of justice for the rich and for the poor?

Simpson has employed the most powerful team of attorneys and advisers money can buy.

In the courtroom, they will be matched against the student of one of them – an employee of the state whose experience and credentials are comparatively minimal.

All this strategic maneuvering and manipulating – so obvious to you – to a jury might raise "reasonable doubt." And on that Simpson's lawyers are betting his life.

Clinton's health care reform bill: DOA

Chuck Stone

Like the apocryphal feline with nine lives, Bill Clinton will have escaped another political demise if any "reasonable facsimile" of his health care plan passes.

The prognosis isn't good. Right now the plan is in intensive care, hooked up to an IV and being administered oxygen every time a congressional opponent calls a press conference.

If one uses Clinton's qualifying phrase for welfare reform, "welfare as we know it," then health care reform, "as Clinton knows it," will not be enacted.

The entire health care debate has been reduced to a series of numbers – 256, 218, 187, 90, 70 and 35. Algebra defines the politics of health care.

Because 187 Republicans are expected to unanimously oppose any Democratic version of the health plan, the House leadership is reduced to working only the 256 Democrats in order to get the majority of 218 to pass a bill.

But as that irreverent Gaelic wag, Mr. Dooley, once mused, "Th' Dimycratic party ain't on speakin' terms with itsilf."

Oh, they speak to each other all right, especially in bars and at bacchanalian activities.

But the three groups of 90, 70 and 35 Democrats are united in their oppositions to a health plan that does not satisfy their various agendas. The group of 90 wants a "single-payer" plan modeled after the Canadian national health insurance program in which the federal government pays everybody's health bills. A second group of 70 Democrats will vote against any bill that does not include abortion services. And a third group of 35 Democrats will vote against the bill if it does cover abortion services.

Even the polls can't decide where the American people stand. Recently, the USA Today/CNN/Gallup poll reported that 55 percent of Americans were opposed to health care reform. The New York Times/CBS News poll reported that 79 percent of the American people believe it is "very important" that Clinton's universal coverage plan is passed.

Business can't even get its economic act together. The Business Roundtable, comprised of leaders of 200 of the nation's largest businesses, opposes any system that would give any tax breaks or economic advantages to small businesses.

But like the thread of mighty armies, health care reform is an idea whose time has come. It may surprise some of you – as it did me – to know that the American Civil Liberties Union defines health care as a civil liberty that should not be denied to anyone.

Responding to the success of the anti-abortion lobby in squelching debate on the merits of the full range of reproductive health services – including abortion – the ACLU contends that the Health Care Reform Bill of Rights is as indigenous to democracy as the rights to freedom of speech and assembly and freedom of religion.

The Bill of Rights Article I guarantees everybody the right to receive "adequate, accessible and affordable health care services throughout their lives."

Article II respects "a person's right to autonomy in decisions concerning medical treatment, including matters of reproductive choice."

Article III guarantees due process of law for all persons in their right "to receive information about their health care, rights, options, and responsibilities ..."

Article IV reaffirms the First Amendment's right to freedom of religion and speech by "guaranteeing individuals the right to opt out of the health care system if their moral convictions or religious beliefs forbid them from accepting medical treatment."

What President Clinton has got to decide – which he seems congenitally unable to do in the Bosnia and Haiti crises – is precisely where he stands and how much he is prepared to to give away in order to get a health care bill passed.

One thing we do know at this juncture: The original Clinton health care bill is already DOA, dead on arrival.

NRA action stalls vote on crime bill

By CAROLYN SKORNECK
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) – Bouncing back from a series of defeats in Congress, the National Rifle Association has managed to stall for more than a week a $33.2 billion crime bill that would ban many assault-style firearms.

At first, it looked as if the crime bill would breeze through Congress, putting 100,000 more police on the streets and providing life sentences for some third-time felons and billions for prisons and crime prevention.

And the NRA looked like a spent force in this Congress, having lost crucial votes on the firearms ban and the Brady bill requiring a five-day wait and background check for handgun purchases.

But the NRA found a way to delay the crime bill: Persuade enough gun-ban opponents to block a procedural vote on rules lawmakers would follow when the measure comes up for a final vote in the House. Given that Republicans tend to oppose rules as a matter of course, the targets were narrowed to Democrats.

Combined with some black lawmakers' opposition to the bill's more than 50 new death penalties and its dropping of a provision making it easier to prove bias in capital cases, the Democrats couldn't move the bill.

The White House estimated 10 to 12 more votes were needed. As some decided to vote for it, gun-control opponents pulled others back, a key House official said.

The bill cannot reach the floor until at least Thursday.

"This is to us a very important vote, as it is to our 3.4 million members," NRA chief lobbyist Tanya Metaksa said Tuesday. "We've been fighting against gun bans all of 1994 and will continue to do so until our last breath."

This view has been conveyed to members of Congress, she said, but she demurred when asked if it was accompanied by threats.

"Would I do that?" she asked. "I'm very nice. I'm a grandmother. I never threaten anybody."

She doesn't have to. For those thinking of bucking the NRA, there is in their midst an example of one who did just that: Rep. Ron Coleman, D-Texas.

Coleman, a longtime NRA supporter, voted in May for the assault-style firearms ban after discussing it with local law enforcement officials. His vote was crucial to the ban's 216-214 win.

Last month, Metaksa was in El Paso, Texas, endorsing Coleman's Republican rival.

"The NRA has a lot of people scared up here," Coleman said Tuesday. "Anybody that denies that is lying to you."

Unlike Coleman, House Judiciary Committee Chairman Jack Brooks, D-Texas, tried hard to defeat the assault-style weapons ban and then tried to keep it out of the crime bill. Unable to do either, he inserted something the NRA wanted: an exemption from the Brady law's waiting period and background checks on people reclaiming their handguns from pawnbrokers.

Nevertheless, the Gun Owners of America blasted Brooks.

"If Jack Brooks allows this crime bill to see the light of day with a gun ban in it, then he better re-examine his oath of office," said Larry Pratt, the group's executive director.

Gun-control advocates have also been busy.

Handgun Control Inc. staged a news conference Tuesday with victims of gun violence, including Byrl Phillips-Taylor of Richmond, Va., whose 17-year-old son was killed in 1989 by an Eagle Scout wielding an AK-47 that would be banned under the crime bill.

"Congress, how many times do I have to keep coming back?" she asked. Holding up a photo of her son, she cried, "Look at him. He was my life. Do something."

The six-year crime bill would authorize $11.1 billion for state and local law enforcement, $10.5 billion for state and local prisons, $8.9 billion for crime prevention and drug courts and $2.8 billion for federal law enforcement. It also would create more than 50 new death penalties.

The weapons ban would affect 19 named types of firearms and scores of others that the government characterizes as assault-style, and it would limit magazine capacity to 10 rounds. At the same time, it would exempt 650 named firearms and all guns legally owned when the law took effect. The Senate included the ban as part of its crime bill on a 56-43 vote, while the House narrowly passed it, 216-214, as a separate measure.

Agriculture secretary to be target of Justice probe

By ROBERT GREENE
AP Farm Writer

Mike Espy

WASHINGTON (AP) – As Agriculture Secretary Mike Espy tells it, he knew he was a politician the day his father set down a Bible, a $20 bill and a bottle of whiskey and told him to choose. Espy picked all three.

That flair for self-deprecating humor may serve the former Mississippi congressman well in the days to come, now that an independent counsel is being sought to investigate his relationships with big food companies, including the Arkansas-based poultry giant, Tyson Foods Inc.

And the focus on his access to corporate travel and sport tickets will likely undercut Espy's efforts to streamline the massive Agriculture Department and improve food safety standards.

"The problem is there in part because it would appear that Secretary Espy's judgment is being called into question," said Sen. Richard Lugar, the leading Republican on the Senate Agriculture Committee. "His vigor with regard to other programs may be somewhat impaired."

Attorney General Janet Reno asked a three-judge panel Tuesday to appoint an outsider to complete a Justice Department investigation of Espy's corporate contacts. The selection could take weeks.

The request comes three days after the panel appointed Kenneth W. Starr to head an investigation into President Clinton's Arkansas business dealings when he was the state's governor.

"We are confident that after a full, fair and expeditious review of the facts, Secretary Espy will be completely exonerated," Evan T. Barr, an Espy attorney, said in a statement. Barr said all of Espy's "official and personal travel and entertainment expenses have been properly accounted for and reimbursed."

The request focused on trips Espy took to Arkansas in May 1993, when he stayed at a Tyson facility after a speech to a poultry group and flew to Washington on a company jet; and to Texas in 1994, when he and his companion, Patricia Dempsey, sat in the Tyson skybox for a playoff game between the New York Giants and the Dallas Cowboys.

The request left the way open for investigation of possible favors from others, including tickets for Espy to a 1993 professional basketball playoff game from Quaker Oats in Chicago.

The counsel, moreover, also will be able to investigate whether aides to Espy interfered last year with efforts by the Food Safety and Inspection Service to draft tough regulations on poultry, a major industry in Clinton's and Espy's home states.

Espy contends his aides took over the work because the agency could not be trusted to act on behalf of consumers after years of inaction. The proposed regulations finally came out in July.

Reno said she had to make the request under a law, renewed June 30, that requires outside investigations of top executive branch officials. She said there was no evidence Espy did anything in exchange for the gifts.

But there was enough evidence of possible violation of the 1907 Meat Inspection Act, which bans any gift from a corporation.

In a separate action, the Justice Department said it saw nothing to warrant prosecution or further investigation of Patricia Jensen, the acting assistant secretary of agriculture responsible for food safety and inspection.

Jensen attended an Arkansas Razorbacks basketball game in February using a ticket provided by a consultant to Tyson. Jensen, not covered by the independent counsel law, said she paid for the $13 ticket shortly afterward.

Sen. Thomas A. Daschle, D-S.D., whose agriculture subcommittee is awaiting the administration's food safety bill, dismissed any notion that the Agriculture Department will be hindered.

"I think Mike Espy has such credibility here on the Hill in part because he's been a colleague, and secondly because of his record over the last 18 months" on improving food safety, Daschle said.

The more liberal, populist farm groups more likely to criticize corporate coziness have been quiet. Espy has brought them into the process and given them political jobs after 12 years of Republican neglect.

"He's been a very positive secretary to this point, and I expect he will continue to be so," said Larry Mitchell, director of governmental affairs for the National Farmers Union.

Meteor show coming soon

BOSTON (AP) – Miss the comet crash on Jupiter? No problem. There's another celestial show in the air, and it doesn't even require a telescope.

The Perseid meteor shower is due to peak sometime after midnight Thursday. Clouds willing, it will show its best stuff over the continental United States and Canada, especially the West Coast.

"If you just go out with a lawn chair and have some patience, you should get a pretty good look," said Dan Green of the Harvard-Smithsonian Center for Astrophysics in Cambridge. "You don't need binoculars or a telescope or anything."

The shower occurs every August as Earth passes through chunks of debris left by Comet Swift-Tuttle as it slowly disintegrates. At its peak, as many as one meteor every 10 or 20 seconds could streak across the sky. The biggest ones will burst into flames and last for several seconds.

The meteor shower comes less than a month after the collision of Comet Shoemaker-Levy 9 with Jupiter made front pages and led newscasts worldwide.

Blueberry delight made easy as pie

By The Associated Press

The following recipe for blueberry and white chocolate cheese pie was developed by Cafe Zenon in Eugene, Ore., for the Oregon-Washington Blueberry Commission.

Blueberry and White Chocolate Cheese Pie

For the crust:
1 cup roasted ground hazelnuts
1/2 cup brown sugar
4 tablespoons melted butter
For the filling:
4 ounces white chocolate, finely grated
8 ounces softened cream cheese
2 ounces (1/4 cup) sour cream
For the topping:
2 cups fresh blueberries
1/4 cup white sugar
For the garnish:
Zest of 1 lemon
White chocolate shavings

Line bottom of a 9-inch tart pan with parchment paper. Mix crust ingredients and press into pan bottom and slightly up the sides. Chill.

Melt white chocolate in double boiler over hot but not boiling water. Stir constantly.

In a separate bowl, whip cream cheese for 3 minutes. Add the melted white chocolate; beat for another minute. Add sour cream; beat until very smooth. Using a star tip and pastry bag, pipe filling into the crust in concentric circles, starting in the center. Fill entire crust; chill until firm.

For the topping: Rinse fresh blueberries and toss with the 1/4 cup sugar. Heap the blueberries on top of the filling. Garnish with lemon zest and white chocolate shavings. Makes 8 servings.

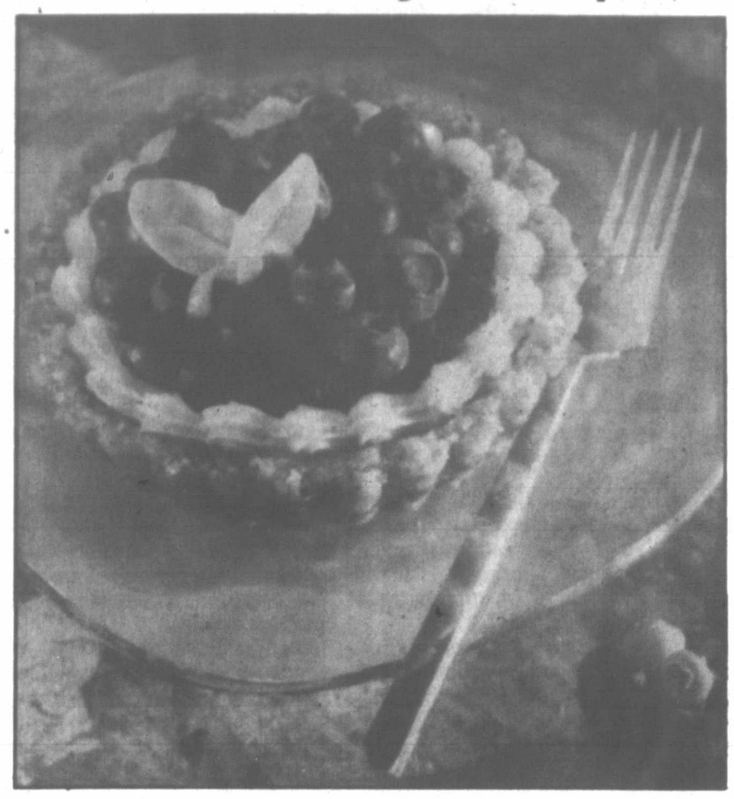

Nutrition facts per serving: 414 cal., 4 g pro., 29 g fat, 39 g carbo., 157 mg sodium, 50 mg chol., 64 mg calcium, 166 mg potassium.

Note: To make individual tarts, follow the recipe instructions, substituting the following ingredients: 2 cups roasted hazelnuts, 1 cup brown sugar, 8 tablespoons melted butter. Use four 4-inch or 6-inch tart pans with removable bottoms.

Line with parchment. Mix crust ingredients; press into tart pan bottoms and up the sides. Shape the edges of the crust into a scalloped pattern. Chill.

Makes 4 tarts.

Sorry soggy sandwiches, Tortas taste truly terrific

By The Associated Press

Sunset concerts, theater in the park, a trip to the beach, a Labor Day outing — all lend themselves to outdoor dining. Deciding what to pack in the picnic basket, however, can be a real challenge.

Instead of soggy sandwiches, take a cue from Italian cooks and prepare a torta — a portable pie filled with all kinds of good things to eat! In the following recipe, the torta is filled with cooked crab, spinach, zucchini, mushrooms and cheeses. To save time, use frozen bread dough for the torta. Serve with a green salad and fresh fruit for dessert.

Picnic Torta

2 loaves frozen bread dough (thawed)
1 tablespoon chopped fresh thyme or 1 teaspoon dried
1 medium red onion, chopped
1 clove garlic, minced
3 cups sliced mushrooms
Salt and pepper to taste
3 tablespoons olive oil
2 tablespoons chopped fresh dillweed
4 zucchini, sliced
1/2 bunch fresh spinach leaves, washed and dried
2/3 cup shredded Monterey Jack cheese
2/3 cup shredded mozzarella cheese
8 ounces flaked cooked crab meat

Combine bread dough; let rise until doubled. Sprinkle with thyme and roll on floured surface into a 20-inch circle. Transfer to a greased 10-inch springform pan, letting edges drape over the sides.

Saute onion, garlic, mushrooms and seasonings in 2 tablespoons of the olive oil until tender, about 5 minutes. Stir in dillweed; reserve. Saute zucchini in remaining oil until tender.

Layer mushroom mixture, half zucchini, half spinach leaves, half cheeses and half crab meat. Repeat.

Bring dough together over top, leaving a small vent for steam. Brush lightly with oil or a beaten egg. Bake in a 375-degree F oven for 50 minutes or until golden brown and crusty. Cut into 10 wedges while warm or let cool to room temperature. Makes 10 servings.

Salad makes a great dish

By NANCY BYAL, Food Editor

Yes, you can use frozen or canned corn in this side-dish salad but why not take advantage of sweet kernels right off the cob, especially when you can find bargain prices at farmers' markets? Just cook a few ears in your microwave oven or on the rangetop, then shear the tender kernels from the cob. Once you add a few cherry tomatoes and cauliflower flowerets and toss them in a nutty garlic dressing, you'll have enough salad for a large gathering.

Corn and Cauliflower Toss with Pecan Dressing

4 fresh ears of corn or 2 cups of sweet corn
1-3rd cup chopped pecans
3 cloves garlic, minced
1/4 cup almond oil or salad oil
1/4 cup white-wine vinegar
2 tablespoons snipped chives
2 tablespoons snipped parsley
1 teaspoon sugar
1/2 teaspoon salt
1/8 teaspoon pepper
3 cups small cauliflower flowerets
2 cups quartered cherry tomatoes
Leaves of greens, such as flowering kale, leaf lettuce, spinach or romaine leaves (optional)

For fresh ears of corn, remove husks; scrub with a stiff brush to remove silks. Rinse. Cook, covered, in a small amount of boiling salted water for 5 to 7 minutes or until tender. (Or, cook in a microwave-safe baking dish with 2 tablespoons water on 100 percent power (high) for 9 to 11 minutes, rearranging once.) Rinse under cold water. Using a sharp knife, remove corn kernels from cobs. (Or, for frozen corn, cook according to package directions.

For canned corn, drain and do not cook.) You should have about 2 cups.

In a small saucepan cook pecans and garlic in 2 tablespoons of the oil for 1 minute. Remove from heat; cool slightly.

Remove pecans with a slotted spoon, reserving garlic mixture; drain pecans on paper towels.

For dressing, in a screw-top jar combine reserved garlic mixture, remaining oil, vinegar, chives, parsley, sugar, salt and pepper. Cover and shake well to mix.

In a large mixing bowl combine corn, cauliflower flowerets and tomatoes. Add dressing; toss gently to coat. Cover and chill for 4 to 24 hours. Stir in pecans. To serve, line a large serving bowl with desired salad greens; add the chilled salad mixture.

Makes 12 side-dish servings.

Nutrition facts per serving: 103 cal., 7 g fat, 0 mg chol., 2 g pro., 10 g carbo., 98 mg sodium, 3 g fiber. RDA: 41 percent vit. C, 11 percent thiamine.

Alternatives to beef abound

By NANCY BYAL, Food Editor
Better Homes and Gardens Magazine

Ground chicken has recently joined ground turkey as another option to ground beef. The fat content of ground chicken can vary, but don't let it fool you. If made with breast meat, it can be lower in fat. However, if ground chicken contains dark meat and skin, it can have more fat than lean ground beef. It's a good idea to compare the nutritional information on the packages.

Because ground chicken is milder in flavor than beef, it may be more versatile in cooking. For example, in the recipe below, crushed tortilla chips and a pinch of chili powder turn mild-mannered ground chicken into one bold Tex-Mex burger. Monterey Jack cheese studded with jalapeno peppers adds even more kick.

For a real taste of cactus country, serve the burgers with blanched cactus pads. You can find them in the produce section of some supermarkets, often alongside specialty produce. To blanch, cook the cactus pads in boiling salted water for 30 to 60 seconds.

Southwestern-Style Burgers

1 beaten egg
1/4 cup crushed nacho-flavored or plain tortilla chips (1 ounce)
3 tablespoons finely chopped green pepper
3/4 teaspoon chili powder
1/4 teaspoon salt
1/4 teaspoon pepper
1 pound ground raw chicken or turkey
1 avocado, halved, seeded, peeled and sliced
4 ounces sliced Monterey Jack cheese with jalapeno peppers
4 kaiser rolls or hamburger buns, split
Lettuce leaves
Salsa

In a medium mixing bowl combine egg, tortilla chips, green pepper, chili powder, salt and pepper. Add chicken; mix well. Shape into four 3/4-inch-thick patties.

To grill, on an uncovered grill place patties directly over medium-hot coals; cook for 15 to 18 minutes or until no longer pink, turning once. Top each patty with avocado slices and cheese. Grill for 1 to 2 minutes more or until cheese is melted. Toast rolls on grill, if desired.

(Or, to broil patties, preheat broiler. Place patties on the unheated rack of a broiler pan. Broil 3 to 4 inches from heat for 6 minutes. Turn patties and broil for 6 to 8 minutes more or until patties are no longer pink. Toast rolls under broiler, if desired. Top burgers with avocado and cheese. Broil for 1 to 2 minutes or until cheese is melted.)

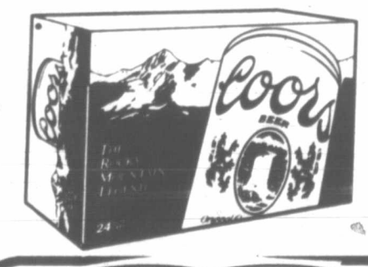

To serve, place one lettuce leaf on bottom half of bun. Top with cooked burger and salsa. Makes 4 servings.

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Although I am not a mother — I am a son — last Mother's Day started as an average Sunday for me.

My mother and grandmother live about 900 miles away, so for the 10th consecutive year, we weren't together.

I live in south Florida, and there are a lot of retired seniors living here.

I was having dinner at a famous Miami Beach deli when an elderly woman with a cane passed my table. I overheard her ask a waiter where the ladies' room was. He pointed to a very steep staircase and walked away. I knew this lady would need some assistance, so I asked my waiter to offer her mine. She accepted, and I invited her to join me for dinner.

Over the next 2 1/2 hours, I learned about her life of 92 years. She had been a widow for 25 years, and had four children and 12 grandchildren. Only two of those people had remembered her that day. My dinner with this truly grand woman left me feeling richer.

Abby, I am a 32-year-old man, living alone and HIV-positive; therefore, it is quite probable that I will not have the opportunity to share the next 60 years with my mother on her very special day.

I want my mother to know that I appreciate the life and unconditional love she has given me over the last 32 years. If she sees this, she will know that every day is Mother's Day to me.

FLORIDA SON

DEAR FLORIDA SON: What a sweetheart you are. On the off chance that your mother doesn't see this, why don't you clip it a mail it to her? It would be a shame for her to miss this loving message.

DEAR ABBY: About a year ago, my mother and I went out to dinner with a friend (I'll call her Carol). Our husbands were away on a hunting trip. Carol was depressed because of her husband "Bob's" drinking and going to bars. She said she had tried to get him help for his drinking. He would be good for a while — but then he'd go right back to the bars.

Abby, my mother's husband, "Sam," is a good friend of Bob's. Sam is 50 and very smart. He told Mom that for years Bob has been sleeping with women he meets in the bars, and brags about it. He even asked Sam to join him! Sam said no, he wasn't going — and warned Bob that he could get AIDS. Bob laughed and said, "No, not me!"

Abby, Carol and Bob have two adorable little girls. Carol is completely in the dark because she thinks Bob's problem is drinking, when the problem is really other women.

I asked Mother why she didn't tell Carol what she knew, and she told me that he had read an article of your years ago that said a friend should never tell a friend; that the friend would not believe it and would end the friendship. Wouldn't the friendship end anyway, if she died from AIDS? And who would take care of those little girls? The friend who kept her mouth shut to avoid "making wave"? Do you have an updated answer in this day and age?

ANONYMOUS GOOD FRIEND

DEAR FRIEND: AIDS is now a very realistic factor in the decision of whether or not to disclose infidelity. Bob should be told that if he doesn't tell his wife what has been going on, you will. Also, they should both be tested for AIDS.

But don't dismiss the link with alcohol so quickly. Alcohol impairs judgment, and abuse of alcohol can play a major role in the transmission of sexually transmitted diseases by causing people to do things on impulse that they might not otherwise do.

Government retirees need not worry about pensions

By JOHN D. McCLAIN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The federal insurance program that guarantees individual pensions has been likened to a savings and loan crisis about to happen.

Not to worry, says the government — at least, not yet.

"We are alive and well and able to pay benefits," assures Martin Slate, executive director of the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corp., the government agency that insures private retirement programs. "We're not in any immediate danger."

Still, worried retirees write to Washington, expressing concern over the safety of their pensions. Letters to members of Congress. Letters to administration officials. To labor unions. To senior citizens organizations.

"I recently read a news article" about pension problems, a man in Jackson Heights, N.Y., wrote his senator. "If I were 20 years old, I would have proceeded directly to the sports section and kept reading. The fact is, I am over 60, retired and worried."

Another retiree, living in Lauderhill, Fla., told the PBGC: "Although nothing bad has happened as yet, I am concerned about the future of my retirement pension. ... What will happen if (his former employer) goes out of business, which I feel is a good possibility ...?"

"I read with deep foreboding" a recent article about underfunded pension funds, a Michigan man said in a letter to Labor Secretary Robert B. Reich. "As a 25-year retiree of one of the companies listed, you can imagine my concern. Do we have the potential for a new savings and loan-type debacle?"

Although denying any immediate danger, Slate, the PBGC executive director, acknowledges that the agency has "serious long-term problems."

"We need reforms now to stay ahead of the curve and deal with the problem while it's still manageable," he contended in a recent interview.

Reich, who also serves as the PBGC board chairman, has said there is a "potential parallel" to the multibillion-dollar S&L bailout. "The trend is very disturbing," he admitted to Congress earlier this year.

But he, too, emphasized the pension problem "is not now a crisis."

Reich and Slate say most of the nation's pension plans are healthy and the vast majority fully funded.

Underfunded pension liabilities did total $53 billion in 1992, up from $27 billion in 1987. But the PBGC says 75 percent of those liabilities are owed by financially healthy companies and do not necessarily represent a risk.

Although the PBGC is running a $2.9 billion deficit because of liabilities incurred from terminated plans, it has $8.4 billion in assets.

"Because PBGC's payments are spread out over many years, it can continue paying benefits for a long time," Reich maintains.

Nonetheless, he says, the deficit will not disappear on its own and warns that "chronic underfunding can undermine our retirement system" and "poses an unnecessary and unacceptable risk for workers and retirees."

To minimize that risk, the Clinton administration has proposed reforms that would assure all vested benefits be funded within 15 years, which Slate says would eliminate the agency's deficit within 10 years.

The legislation would speed sponsor contributions to underfunded single-employer plans and enhance PBGC's authority to require compliance. It also would increase premiums for plans considered most at risk and require simply understood disclosure information for plan participants.

Congress already has held hearings on the proposals, which have bipartisan support. The administration hopes the legislation will be sent to the White House later this year.

Nevertheless, some retirees don't think the reforms go far enough.

The Jackson Heights retiree, for instance, says, "If (a) plan becomes underfunded, then the compensation of (the) top three management levels of the corporation (should be) reduced to no higher than $200,000."

And, he adds, "If management changes plans and-or benefits, it can only be for those hired after the change and must be clearly and unmistakably stated that the change has been made."

Conference workshops aim to reach elderly minorities

Older members of ethnic and cultural minority groups have a disproportionately high level of need for public-sponsored human services. Unfortunately, they are often either reluctant to take advantage of these services or unable to find their way into the system.

The Texas Department on Aging will be looking for solutions to this paradox in its third annual Texas Minority Elderly Conference Aug. 17-19 in Odessa.

The conference is aimed at professionals in aging, members of the academic community, elected officials and policymakers, minority elderly associations and interested members of the general public. Some of the many issues its workshops will address are:

- "Marketing" services more effectively to minority seniors;
- Cooperation among agencies in solving minority access problems; and
- Minority outreach strategies which have been proven to work.

Ideas and solutions that emerge from these workshops will be incorporated into specific recommendations for agencies and lawmakers.

Hot conditions boost respiratory ailments

By DR. MORTON LIPPMANN
New York University Medical Center
For AP Special Features

Do the hot and hazy days of summer make you want to flee to the great indoors and turn on the air conditioner?

That may be a sensible precautionary measure for the elderly who have such respiratory problems as emphysema, bronchitis, and for people of all ages with asthma.

Respiratory ailments tend to become aggravated during hot and hazy weather when high temperatures, combined with secondary pollution, compound the stress placed on the respiratory system.

Secondary pollutants are gasses and particles that form in the atmosphere from a combination of primary emissions of pollution from sources such as autos and power plants. The secondary pollutants that most affect the respiratory system are ozone gas and sulfuric acid droplets.

Concentrations of ozone and sulfuric acid tend to be higher during the summer because high temperatures and large amounts of sunlight speed the chemical reactions that create these pollutants.

Because ozone and sulfuric acid are formed in the atmosphere they can cover broad geographic areas. The highest concentrations of the chemicals tend to be anywhere from 30 to several 100 miles downwind from the primary sources of pollution.

Air-borne pollution can play havoc with the respiratory system, causing, for example, an increase in acute episodes of asthma, even among young people.

During hot and hazy weather, there also tend to be increases in the amount of people hospitalized for exacerbation of chronic lung diseases, such as emphysema, bronchitis, and asthma. Those with less lung capacity to begin with, such as the elderly, are at particular risk.

There are several steps that can be taken to reduce the risk of respiratory problems associated with high temperatures and secondary pollution.

People who have respiratory problems but would like to get some fresh air and exercise should do so before 10 a.m., when the concentration of ozone in the air is at its lowest.

Ozone — and to a lesser degree, sulfuric acid — build up during the day. The highest levels of ozone are produced when there are several hot hazy days in a row.

At times when the ozone level is high, staying indoors and running an air conditioner may help prevent respiratory attacks. Air conditioning cools the air and reduces the stress placed on the body by heat. In addition, an air conditioner helps filter the air so that much of the outdoor air pollutants do not enter the house. Keeping the house tightly sealed while the air conditioner is running can also reduce the levels of secondary pollution.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Have someone double-check your work today if you have to perform a tedious mental assignment with lots of figures and facts. Your probability for errors is rather high. Trying to patch up a broken romance? The Astro-Graph Matchmaker can help you to understand what to do to make the relationship work. Mail $2 to Matchmaker, P.O. Box 4465, New York, N.Y. 10163.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) In spite of what your better judgment tells you today, you might ignore it and do something erratic that could be both counterproductive and costly. Caution, Virgo!

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Instead of being more persistent when challenged today, you might buckle under pressure and elect to do something less effective. Maintain the courage of your convictions.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Impatience could be your worst enemy today, because it may unduly anger you if persons with whom you're involved don't immediately go along with your plans. Count to 10.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Be extra mindful of your possessions and resources today. Don't carelessly leave valuables unguarded in ways that might tempt the light-fingered.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) In order to achieve your objectives today, continuity of purpose is essential. You are kidding yourself if you think you'll hit your targets with a series of lucky shots.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Do not put on any airs or affectations today, or boast about things you've never accomplished. Your story might be checked for credibility and cause you embarrassment later.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Be friendly and cordial to all you encounter, but avoid getting too deeply involved with any one person. Friendships are extremely fragile, today and it won't take much to shatter bonds.

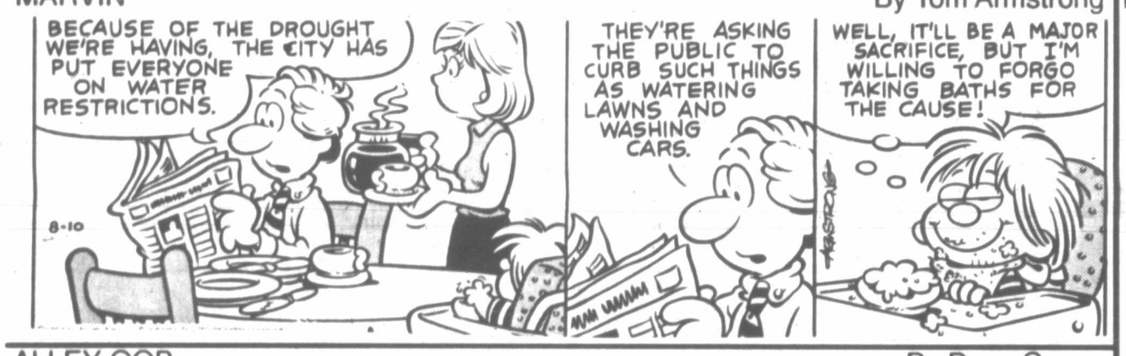

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Strive to be diplomatic and tactful with individuals today whose aims are not in accord with your own. There could be touchy situations that might erupt into something unpleasant.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Today you might have a tendency to promise one thing and do another. Take your commitments seriously so that later you won't have to make both alibis and amends.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) If you're going to take any gambles today, do so in areas with which you're familiar. Even here the odds could be tilted against you, whereas in other areas, they may be outlandish.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) You're usually a pretty good judge of character, provided you let your logic supersede your feelings when making evaluations. Today, however, your emotions might call the shots.

NBC WORLD SERIES

WICHITA, Kan. (AP) — The Anchorage, Alaska Glacier Pilots came from behind to defeat the Topeka, Kan. Capitals 10-7 late Tuesday night and remain undefeated in the National Baseball Congress World Series.

Anchorage scored twice in the seventh and three times in the eighth.

The Glacier Pilots got home runs from Jeff Liefer, Cale Carter and Johnny Macalutas.

The tournament has experienced record breaking attendance through nine days, 72,594 or an average of 8,066 fans daily. The old mark was 6,714 daily in 1993.

Earlier, Darrin Griffin's eighth-inning grand slam and a second-inning triple play highlighted the Elkhart, Kan., Dusters' 8-5 victory over the Clarinda, Iowa, A's.

In other games, Mike Coin cracked three home runs for the Evansville, Ind., Outlaws to tie a single-game record in the 60th annual tournament.

The Wichita Broncos beat the Beatrice, Neb., Bruins 5-4, and the Nevada, Mo., Griffons defeated the Hays, Kan., Larks 10-7, the Dallas Sharps downed the Seguin, Texas, SMI Steelers 8-1, and the Outlaws beat the Edmond, Okla., Jetta Mudcats 10-6.

CHAN ADVANCES

MASON, Ohio (AP) — Returning champion Michael Chang used his quickness and a sharp service return to eliminate Greg Rusedski of Canada 6-3, 6-3 in the second round of the $1.72 million ATP Championship.

Rusedski double-faulted nine times Tuesday night, including on the final two points of the match that lasted just one hour, four minutes.

And when Rusedski's booming serves were landing in play, the fourth-seeded Chang was able to handle them

"That seemed to frustrate him," Chang said.

Also advancing were No. 3 Michael Stich of Germany, No. 7 Jim Courier, No. 10 Petr Korda of the Czech Republic and No. 12 Wayne Ferreira of South Africa.

Sixth-seeded Todd Martin, who injured his groin in the Canadian Open on July 24, withdrew from the tourriament on Tuesday. His place has been filled by Alex O'Brien.

Stich advanced to the quarterfinals with an easy 6-2, 6-4 win over Aaron Krickstein.

HOLMES WINS

PRIOR LAKE, Minn. (AP) — Looking forward to his third — and, he promises, his last — retirement, Larry Holmes plans to enjoy some of life's simple pleasures.

And, when he has the time, he plans to give boxing's powers-that-be some most unpleasurable moments.

After winning a unanimous 10-round decision over Jesse Ferguson on Tuesday night, the 44-year-old former world heavyweight champion said he would like to fight fellow old-timer George Foreman before retiring for good at the end of the year.

And then?

"I would fish, learn how to tend bar and teach fighters how to fight," said Holmes, whose 61-4 record includes a 13-1 mark since he came out of retirement a second time in 1991. "And I would cause problems to the fighting game to make the sport more legitimate."

Holmes, the champion from 1978-85, claims he hasn't gotten a title shot since he lost to Mike Tyson in 1988 because promoters don't like him. He has no use for the alphabet soup boxing divisions — WBA, IBF, WBC and WBO.

"Sometimes there's no such thing as fairness. It's all who you know," he said, adding that maybe he'll just form his own boxing organization: "I would call it LHO."

BASEBALL STRIKE

NEW YORK (AP) — Less than 24 hours after discussing the mechanics of an orderly shutdown, negotiators for baseball owners and players meet again today in an attempt to avoid the strike that is scheduled to start Friday.

Neither side seems to think the sport's eighth work stoppage since 1972 can be stopped.

"If there's not a lot new and different to talk about, it'll be a short meeting," union head Donald Fehr said Tuesday.

Negotiators had been set to continue Monday's meeting about non-economic issues. Instead, the No. 2 officials on each side debated issues such as whether players can use club equipment during a stoppage (they can't).

They also discussed "how people get home, where they mail checks to for the 11 days if there isn't a settlement, minor-league assignments," Fehr said.

At this point, it appears the sides continue to meet out of habit rather than hope.

"We are meeting because you leave no stone unturned," management negotiator Richard Ravitch said.

Tuesday's news conferences by the leaders of each side produced new heights of rhetoric. Fehr said owners had left the players only one option: accept a salary cap.

"That's Munich," he said, referring to Neville Chamberlain's appeasement of Adolf Hitler in September 1938, when the British Prime Minister gave part of Czechoslovakia to Germany.

"The only value of a cap is sort of a 'peace at any price,' " Fehr said. "I'm about to draw a very overblown analogy, so don't suggest that I mean it in the sense it's going to sound, but that's Munich. It's sort of like, 'Don't worry. It won't hurt that bad even though it's unfair, and we shouldn't worry about it. Everybody should go and play baseball. It's sort of like small and far-away countries.' You don't do that and it's inappropriate in my judgment to ask for it."

Ravitch, too, said he saw little hope of avoiding a walkout. But he said he didn't think it would last all winter.

"The acts of self-immolation reach the point of Kafkaesque proportions," he said.

Azinger ready to defend PGA championship

By BOB GREEN
AP Golf Writer

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — Paul Azinger is already finished with "moral victories."

Only one week into his comeback from cancer, Azinger has lofty ambitions for his defense of PGA national championship title, although he's not predicting an outright victory in the tournament that begins Thursday at Southern Hills.

"I really can't speculate on how I'm playing," he said Tuesday. "Even if I was hitting the ball like Jack Nicklaus dreams of hitting the ball, I wouldn't predict I was going to win."

Would making the cut serve as a realistic goal?

"I'm a little rusty," admitted Azinger, who started his comeback last week with two rounds in the Buick Open. "But I've found that if you're just trying to make the cut, you're going to be somewhere around the cut.

"If you're leaderboard-conscious, you have a much better chance of making the leaderboard," he said.

And he made it clear he intends to be leaderboard-conscious.

He missed the cut at the Buick Open, shooting rounds of 76 and 70, but said that could have been a blessing in disguise. Due to weather delays, a double round of 36 holes was scheduled for the final day.

"I'm not sure I was ready for 36 holes," he said. And he also put behind him the nervousness of the first round of his return to competition.

"For most of the round, I was so nervous I didn't know where I was or what I was doing. I was walking around in a fog," he said.

"I'll be nervous on Thursday, but it won't be the same thing at all."

The start in the Buick Open also answered a question about his desire; whether his priorities may have changed and his desire diminished in the wake of his battle with cancer.

"I got mad," Azinger said. "There's no question about my attitude. I missed an 8-foot putt for par and I was so mad I could have spit nails."

Azinger leads the return of some of the walking wounded whose absence from the pro tour, he said, has had a profound effect on the season.

However, Azinger stopped short of saying their absence was responsible for foreign-born players winning all three earlier majors. Jose Maria Olazabal of Spain won the Masters, Ernie Els of South Africa won the U.S. Open and Nick Price of Zimbabwe won the British Open.

Another win by a foreigner this week would bring about an unprecedented foreign sweep of golf's Big Four events.

"Well, just let me say that with me out, with Freddie (Couples) out with a bad back for a while, with Phil (Mickelson) getting hurt then not playing very good, and Payne (Stewart) not playing well, that's another $5 million the other guys were playing for this year," he said.

All are in the 151-man field here. Couples, at least, is on the short list of Americans most likely to avert the foreign sweep.

Couples, who missed three months with his back troubles, scored his first victory in 17 months last week in the Buick Open.

And Stewart, in his last start, shot four rounds in the 60's, providing an indication that his long slump may be nearing an end.

While he indicated that from a patriotic standpoint he would prefer that Americans were not shut out of major-tournament victories this year, Azinger saluted the rise of the foreign players.

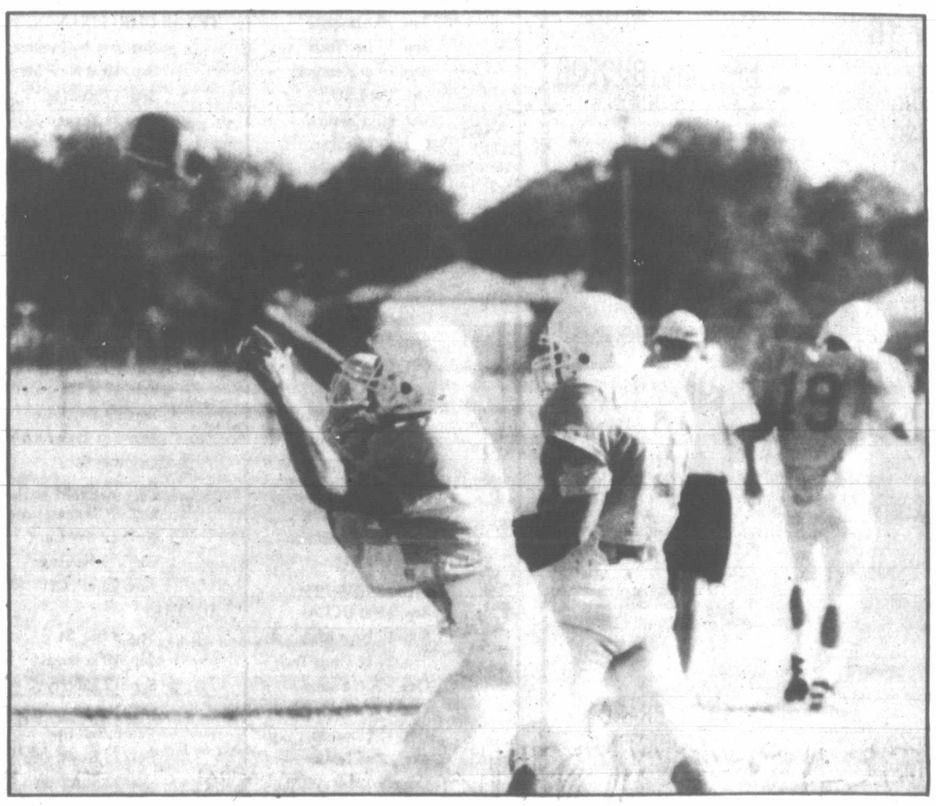

"I think it's great that you have 15 players from Australia you could name that are capable of winning a major," he said.

"I think it's great that you've got guys from South Africa playing as well as they are. You've got guys from Japan who can come over here and win a major championship. Golf is very strong in Europe.

"The game is never going to be the same again and you'll never see Americans dominate again. It's going to be a world effort from now on.

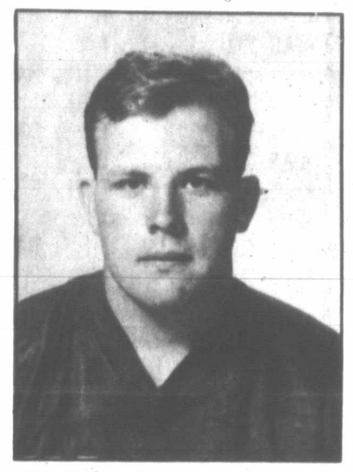

"You've got a guy from Fiji (Vijay Singh) that can win a major championship. Are you kidding me? I think it's great."

Sexton returns as second-year starter for UCO Broncos

Phil Sexton

Defensive end Phil Sexton of Pampa will be counted on heavily for the University of Central Oklahoma Broncos this season.

Sexton, a 240-pound sophomore, came into his own the second half of the 1993 season and is expected to be a defensive stalwart for the Broncos and head coach Gary Howard this fall. He saw limited playing time in the first four games last year, then broke into the starting lineup the second half of the season, quickly becoming one of UCO's top defenders.

Sexton finished with 48 tackles and was second on the team in sacks with seven for a minus 51 yards. He tied for first in tackles for losses with seven for a minus 26 yards.

UCO's 1994 football media guide describes Sexton as an intense competitor and a superb pass rusher with a knack for making the big plays. He's going to be counted on heavily this season because of his experience on a depth-shy defensive line," the guide says.

In his first-ever start, Sexton had eight tackles with one sack and one tackle for a loss against Abilene Christian University. He was redshirted in 1992.

When he played for the Harvesters, Sexton was a two-time All-District pick as a tight end and defensive end. He earned All-State honors on defense as a senior.

The Broncos, who finished with a 7-3 record a year ago, open the season Sept. 3 against Mesa State.

After 27 years, Marshall retires as UIL director

By CHIP BROWN
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN (AP) — Over the past 27 years, Bailey Marshall has helped lead the University Interscholastic League through the completion of integration in Texas high schools and into the era of no-pass, no-play.

Marshall, 60, on Tuesday announced his retirement as UIL director, effective March 1, 1995.

As head of the league that oversees public high school sports, academic and music competition, Marshall has watched students fulfill young dreams.

And away from the band contests and playing fields, Marshall has been through countless legal battles with member schools that fought UIL decisions on alleged rules violations.

"I could tell you about nearly all the courtrooms in Texas," Marshall said, chuckling. "I've seen 'em all."

But Marshall, who joined the UIL as assistant athletic director in 1967, became athletic director in 1968 and then director in 1977, says most of his memories focus on the students.

"It just fills you up with pride to go watch those students perform in the music or academic areas, or to go watch them perform in the athletics. That's our reward," he said. "Our programs are second to none and the same goes for our students."

Marshall says it's unfortunate so much of the UIL's time is spent handling rules violations. He said the league frequently looks like the bad guy after making a ruling that keeps a team or student from competing.

One notable battle began in 1988, when Dallas Carter High School was found by the UIL to have an ineligible football player but later won an appeal in court and went on to win the Class 5A championship. After two more years of court proceedings, Carter was stripped of its title and its trophy was returned in 1991 at Marshall's request.

"It's amazing what people will do when it comes to competition," Marshall said. "I don't mean that all in a negative sense either. People at high schools would always say they thought we were out to get them.

"I said we are not out to get anybody. We are just out to make sure everyone abides by the rules. If you are not going to abide by the rules, then, yes, we are out to get you."

Marshall has never seemed to mind getting in the middle of disputes. He spends his weekends officiating basketball games. His wife, Becky, is a college basketball official.

Once, during a game Marshall was officiating, his son, Steve, was interrupted by a man sitting next to him.

"Do you know who that official is?" the man asked.

"No," Marshall's son said, playing along.

"That's Bailey Marshall, the director of the UIL. You would think after getting yelled at all week by the high schools, the last place he would be on the weekend is out on the court getting yelled at some more," the man said.

"Yeah," said Marshall's son, fighting back laughter.

Marshall acknowledges that his strong beliefs in the UIL and its rules border on emotional. He never backs away from a call on the basketball court, and he has never soft-peddled his views to the UIL's state executive committee, which rules on alleged violations.

"I probably could have been a little less aggressive when I discussed issues," Marshall said. "People who don't know me maybe took me the wrong way. They might have thought I was mad. I just get so involved in the issue. I get emotional because it's so important to me."

Marshall said he has worked hard to give the UIL foresight and flexibility. Marshall says Texas was among the first states to get women's high school sports on line, including volleyball in 1968.

"When we first started volleyball, a handful of us were announcing, selling tickets and everything else. But we got it up and going well before many other states," he said.

Rangers cling to half-game lead in AL West Division

ARLINGTON (AP) — With probably only one game left for the Texas Rangers until the strike hits, tonight's game against the Seattle Mariners looks like the seventh game of the World Series.

The Rangers are clinging to a half-game lead over the A's in the AL West after falling 8-5 to Seattle on Tuesday night. Oakland beat Chicago 4-2.

With so much on the line, Texas manager Kevin Kennedy plans to pull out all the stops, including having perfect game pitcher Kenny Rogers in the bullpen if needed.

"I'll treat (tonight's game) like it's all or nothing," Kennedy said.

These are desperate times for the Rangers, who lost their fifth straight Tuesday night and fell nine games under .500, their worst record since the end of the 1992 season.

Making things even worse, Texas is 8-21 against its division and 1-8 against the Mariners.

"It's tough to talk about every night, but we're last in fielding, 12th in pitching and we've lost five straight to Oakland and Seattle, teams we should beat," Kennedy said.

"Right now my guys are down. I'm disappointed in my team and with what's happening in baseball."

Kennedy is disgusted with a team that leads the league in errors, unearned runs and home runs allowed. He said if the strike is avoided or is short-lived, a shake-up would be in the offing.

"When we know what's going to happen, we'll have to make changes on this ball club, and have a team meeting," he said.

Seattle, meanwhile, is actually making the best out of its road trip from hell caused by unsafe conditions in its home park, the Kingdome.

WAC may be part of Cotton Bowl future

DALLAS (AP) — The departed members of the Southwest Conference may eventually meet again in a familiar location — the Cotton Bowl.

The Cotton Bowl, which used to host the SWC winner and an invited guest on New Year's Day, is scrambling to figure out what to do now that it's been left out of the Tier I Bowl Alliance to determine a national champion.

One of the latest possibilities is matching up the Western Athletic Conference champion with the Big 12's No. 2 team starting in 1996.

When the SWC splits up in 1996, four schools are bound for the Big 12, three for the WAC and Houston will be independent.

John Reid, executive director of the Holiday Bowl, told The Dallas Morning News that discussions between the WAC and the Cotton Bowl have taken place.

The WAC champion, which goes to the Holiday Bowl the next two seasons, does not have an automatic slot in the new Tier I Bowl Alliance. The Southwest Conference champion will play in the Cotton Bowl on Jan. 2, 1995, but the bowl has no contract with a conference after that.

WAC commissioner Karl Benson wouldn't say whether a conference champion might play in Dallas in two years, when the league gets Texas Christian, Southern Methodist and Rice, plus Tulsa, Nevada-Las Vegas and San Jose State.

Meanwhile, Pac-10 officials said discussions have been ongoing with the Big 12 about a bowl in Texas matching the Pac-10's No. 2 team against the Big 12's No. 2 team, either in Dallas or San Antonio.

"I don't think it matters, San Antonio, or Dallas, the majority of our people are going to the location to support their team," said Duane Lindberg, Pac-10 assistant commissioner. "ABC is very interested in a 1 p.m. time slot for a game on New Year's Day."

A group of NCAA Division I-A commissioners chose the Fiesta, Orange and Sugar bowls last Thursday as the Tier I games for the 1995-97 seasons, with an option to renew from 1998-2000.

Jury assesses death punishment in homosexual slaying

By KELLEY SHANNON
Associated Press Writer

KERRVILLE (AP) – Former fast-food restaurant manager Donald Aldrich has been sentenced to death for the execution-style slaying of a homosexual man whose killing raised the ire of gay rights activists.

Aldrich, 29, showed no emotion when state District Judge Joe D. Clayton read a Kerr County jury's verdict Tuesday evening.

Aldrich would not speak to reporters as he was ushered away by jailers. He later cried openly during an interview in the Kerr County Jail with the Tyler Morning Telegraph.

"I didn't intend for (Nicholas) West to die. I'm a lot of things, but I'm not a killer," Aldrich told the newspaper. "I can't justify what I did no matter what I say. I just can't justify it."

A seven-man, five-woman jury deliberated about an hour and 15 minutes before returning the death verdict. Aldrich was convicted last week in the capital murder of Nicholas West, 23, who was abducted from a Tyler park and shot to death last Nov. 30.

West's half-naked, bullet-riddled body was found in a clay pit about 10 miles outside Tyler.

The case led to protests by homosexual rights groups and attracted national attention. Aldrich's trial was moved from Smith County because of pretrial publicity in Tyler.

In a videotaped confession, Aldrich said he and some friends abducted West from a park and robbed him because he was gay. Aldrich told investigators he flinched and fired two shots after another man began shooting West.

Aldrich also told authorities he did not like homosexuals and a homosexual relative had raped him when he was 9 years old.

Aldrich said it was a mistake to talk to police investigators.

"When I gave my confession, I didn't know it was capital murder. I didn't know I would be facing the death penalty," he said. "Because of my confession I put them (defense attorneys) between a rock and a hard place. There wasn't much they could do."

But Chief felony prosecutor David Dobbs of Smith County said West's slaying obviously was a "hate crime."

"This man is a predator," Dobbs said in his closing argument. "This man takes from other people. This man enjoys, literally enjoys, seeing other people in pain and in fear."

Prosecutors displayed a chart for jurors showing previous crimes Aldrich had committed, primarily burglaries and robberies.

"I think the most impressive evidence we had was the escalated history of violence," said Dobbs, who had reminded jurors of other attacks Aldrich and his friends carried out in the name of "fag bashing."

Defense attorney Bill Wright, in his closing argument, said there is no justification for preying on homosexuals, but Aldrich is "somebody who does not perceive homosexuals in a normal way" because of his childhood molestation.

Dobbs dubbed that claim by Aldrich a "faddish cop-out," and Smith County District Attorney Jack Skeen Jr. called Aldrich a "callous, cold-blooded executioner."

Jurors rejected arguments by defense lawyers that Aldrich should receive a life sentence instead of death by lethal injection. The attorneys said Aldrich fit in well during previous stints in prison and would again.

Ruling: DPS must reveal settlement

AMARILLO (AP) – The Texas Department of Public Safety must reveal how much it paid to settle a lawsuit filed by former trooper Raymond D. Jacobs, the Texas Attorney General's Office has ruled.

Last week's ruling came about six months after the Amarillo Globe-News requested disclosure of the amount under the Texas Open Records Act. The DPS had refused to reveal the amount and referred the request to the attorney general's office for a ruling.

The attorney general's office told DPS attorney Charles Karakashian Jr. in a letter that the agency failed to request an opinion within 10 days, as specified by law.

"When a governmental body fails to request a decision within 10 days of receiving a request for information, the information at issue is presumed public," the attorney general's office wrote.

The letter added that the DPS had to show a compelling interest to withhold the information. The agency's lawyer said the agreement could be withheld because the lawsuit contained intimate or embarrassing information.

But the attorney general's office ruled that the settlement agreement didn't reveal such details.

Karakashian did not immediately return a telephone call Tuesday from The Associated Press.
