Schneider was considerably under the 24 hour, 1 minute record set by the late Frank Goldsborough, New York, the first youth to claim the junior flying record.

Witt, as chairman of the legislative committee sponsoring four amendments to the constitution filed a statement saying reports he had received from all over the state indicated the amendments would be supported in the November election.

Prisoner Confesses Part In Alfred Lingle Murder; Gangs Are Implicated

(By The Associated Press) CHICAGO, Oct. 3.—A confession that he had taken part in the assassination of Alfred (Jake) Lingle, Tribune reporter, was made today by Frank Bell, a prisoner who has been held in the county jail since late in June in connection with several robberies and another murder which police believed was a sequel to the newspaperman's death.

The other slaying was that of Christ Patras, proprietor of a cafe in the Northside neighborhood where numerous Moran gangsters lived and did business. Authorities have persistently held the Moran gang guilty of the Lingle slaying.

Gangster Implicated
Bell implicated Joe Truam, northern Indiana gang leader who is now in Leavenworth prison, and Richard M. Sullivan, as the two men he drove to Michigan avenue and Randolph street just before Lingle was shot down in a crowded pedestrian tunnel leading to an Illinois Central suburban station.

The men met a "blonde young man" who fired the fatal shot, Bell said. He also said Sullivan was the killer of Patras, whom he described as acting as agent for Jack Zuta in offering $10,000 for Lingle's death.

Bell's story was told to the coroner's jury investigating the Lingle case. The jury was suddenly called back into session tonight by Coroner Herman Bunden on the basis of Bell's confession.

Three Hundred England Agog At Slayings of Missionaries

(By The Associated Press) LONDON, Oct. 3.—News which horrified all England was received in a cable to the London headquarters of the Church Missionary society today, saying two of its women missionaries, Miss Edith Nettleton and Miss Eleanor June Harrison, had been shot by the Chinese bandits who held them captive since last June.

The message which told of the tragedy was very brief.

Nettleton and Harrison shot, Consul and Sullivan returning Fochow.

The envoy referred to is the British consul at Fochow, A. J. Martin, who had gone up river from Fochow to negotiate the release of the women. Miss Edith Nettleton and Miss Eleanor June Harrison, who accompanied Martin on his mission.

Tonight the foreign office said it had received a message from Martin while he was in the interior, stating briefly he had received word from Kienyang saying Miss Nettleton and Miss Harrison had been shot.

The women were captured at Chungang, northern Fukien province, last June while traveling to Kienyang. There were long negotiations for their release, and at one time the bandits sent what purported to be one of Miss Nettleton's fingers to the British consular authorities, threatening death to the women of $10,000 ransom were not paid. The bandits first asked $100,000, reduced it later to $50,000 and eventually got down to $10,000.

Betrothal of Italian Princess and Bulgaria's "Bachelor King" Latest Royal Romance Effectuated in Europe

(By The Associated Press) ROME, Oct. 3.—A new royal romance in Europe tonight brought about the betrothal of Princess Giovanna of Italy, prettiest daughter of the king, and King Boris of Bulgaria, often described as Bulgaria's bachelor king.

Official announcement of the engagement was made late this evening by the king's majesty King Prince Humbert of Italy and Queen Victoria Eleanora of Greece.

Word that the princess was betrothed leaked out in Rome late in the afternoon, but though it was known to be true, official circles declined to confirm it. There was even a suggestion that the conclusion was a hoax.

Problems Settled
The royal consent means that all problems of religion and state affairs have been settled. Princess Giovanna is a Roman Catholic and King Boris is an Orthodox Greek Catholic.

For some years the European excursions of Bulgaria's king have been regarded as having matrimony for their ultimate object. Many eligible royal and princely names have been connected with him. Announcement of the engagement today follows within less than a year the marriage of Crown Prince Humbert of Italy and Princess Marie Jose of Belgium.

Pope Appeals His Six Year Pen Sentence

Former Banker at Southland Carries Case to Court of Criminal Appeals in Move to Reverse Conviction

Official Found Guilty of Violation of State Banking Laws After Disappearance in December of Last Year

(By The Associated Press) AUSTIN, Oct. 3.—J. M. Pope, a Southland banker, today appealed to the court of criminal appeals his six year sentence for violation of the state banking laws. Pope was found guilty of violating the banking laws in connection with the loss of more than $2,500 in the Southland bank of Southland, of which he was an officer.

According to testimony in the trial, the time locked safe was locked with that amount supposedly in it the night of December 2, 1929, and was not opened until December 4. Pope's whereabouts during that time was not known. Penalties and small change were all that remained in the safe when it was opened.

Maple Murder Trial to Jury

Fate of Confessed Slayer of Two Policemen Rests with Houston Jurors; Penalty of Death Demanded

(By Associated Press) HOUSTON, Oct. 3.—The murder case of J. J. Maple, confessed slayer of two policemen, went to the jury at 4 p. m. today.

For nearly six hours counsel had argued, the prosecution demanding the death penalty for the former army sharpshooter; the defense pleading for a prison term and asking the jury to "abandon the doctrine of hate and take up the Godly doctrine of repentance, forgiveness and mercy."

Asks Forgiveness
B. O. Fuller, chief of defense counsel, asked for "forgiveness" in closing for Maple. He insisted malice had not been established.

Assistant District Attorney General James Peden, making the last speech, attacked the slayer perhaps more than had any of his colleagues.

Motorcycle officer Edward Fitzgerald and his companion officer, W. E. Phares, were slain by Maple on the night of September 20 when they came to arrest him for the robbery of the Touchy Furniture company. Maple pleaded guilty and expressed to his counsel, during the trial, a desire for a death sentence. He previously had admitted the killings and the robbery, in which he was aided by E. P. Grimes. Grimes, however, has denied participation in the shootings.

Reuben Clark Will Succeed Dwight Morrow

Salt Lake City Man Appointed Ambassador to Mexico Late Friday; Served in Embassy of Former Envoy

(By The Associated Press) WASHINGTON, Oct. 3.—J. Reuben Clark of Salt Lake City was appointed late today to succeed Dwight W. Morrow as ambassador to Mexico.

Announcement of the appointment at the White House filled a vacancy which has existed less than a week. Morrow resigned Tuesday to conduct his campaigns in New Jersey for the senate.

Mexico Pleased
Clark, who served as counselor for the embassy under Morrow, is a former under-secretary of state. He is credited with having a wide knowledge of Mexican affairs and his appointment was described tonight by Ambassador Telles of Mexico as a "happy one."

The choice was regarded as in line with the announced policy of President Hoover of seeking men with wide experience in Latin American affairs for those posts. Clark has been mentioned widely as the likely choice for several months.

Secretary of State Kellogg named Clark as under-secretary of state in 1928. On March 3, 1929, the eve of President Hoover's inauguration, the last revolution broke out in Mexico. Clark, who was in Washington, gathered the press dispatches describing the Mexican revolt, and worked all night to prepare a memorandum on Mexican conditions which during his first day of office aided President Hoover in the task of defining a United States policy toward the revolution.

All Southern States Asked To Help Plan

Cooperation of South in Any Program of Cotton Acreage Reduction Sought by Chief Executive in Statement

Problem Discussed

All Angles Taken as Committee Asks Legislative Action of McDonald Bill to Limit Texas Acreage

(By The Associated Press) AUSTIN, Oct. 3.—Insisting that all southern states should join in any program of reducing cotton acreage, Governor Dan Moody today declined to call the Texas legislature into special session to enact the McDonald cotton acreage reduction bill.

He consented, however, to act as intermediary for a group of legislators and farmers seeking the reduction program in obtaining the sentiments of governors in all the southern states on acreage reduction legislation.

Delegates Satisfied
Although the governor did not definitely promise, members of committee which visited him felt sure he would consent to the special session if governors of other states in the area would agree to convene their respective legislatures.

The governor, at a long conference at which all angles of the problem were discussed, reiterated the belief that the Federal Farm Board should take the lead in any such attempt. He said he was convinced that if the matter was placed before farmers of the south as a unified measure in which all cotton farmers were parties, a substantial reduction in the land planted in cotton would be brought about without the need of specific legislation by each state.

In any event, he said, the regular session of the legislature in January would be held.

The Woman's Angle

ST. BLANCHET'S BEAN
A Woman's Angle

THE OTHER day, some friends and I were contemplating making a younger and present and, in looking at the garments in pink and blue, the old question came up: "Is it blue for boys or blue for girls?" The same question that has arisen every time I have shopped for infants' things since I can remember, and as always when we just about had the question settled, some one suggested that recently, the colors had been exchanged.

Frankly, I do not know where to get authoritative information on this question and I haven't looked very far because I usually forget all about it until I go shopping for some friend's baby. But I am sure that I am not alone in wondering. Since I have so often heard others express this wish, I am sure that there are plenty of people who want to know. So this is to be a question for my readers. If any one knows just which color is for the boys and which for the girls, will she write in and tell me and I shall be glad to pass the word on.

ANOTHER WOMAN RISING
IT IS so seldom that women really rise in the legal profession that one who has received outstanding recognition should be mentioned. Such a woman is Mrs. Rebecca Scandrett Greathouse. A woman who is now in her middle thirties, she has served for the past five years as assistant U. S. attorney at Washington, D. C. She is a member of the National Women's party and other women's organizations, as well as being sponsored by the Republican leaders in her home state of New Jersey. There are rumors now that she may be named assistant United States attorney-general to succeed Assistant U. S. attorney-general Fuller, who has resigned.

The story of Mrs. Greathouse's rise to legal fame has not been a fairy story. She has worked for this goal and she actually did not start her legal career until she came to Washington to live after her marriage in 1921. Her father and two brothers are attorneys and she, too, followed in their footsteps. She has taught English at Smith college, her alma mater, and she has been a member of the Women's College, Plattsburg, at Vassar as an amateur nurse, she was a war entertainer with the Smith college unit of Y. W. C. A. that saw service overseas, she has been in newspaper work and an editor in a law school for women.

Mrs. Greathouse has had a rich experience to bring to her legal practice that fits her for the honor which she wears. It seems to me that there are other women who could have places of honor in diplomatic circles or legal circles, where men always predominate, if they would fit themselves for the places. Frequently the woman who enters a profession is willing to take the same thing that is offered to her, to serve in some clerical position with a law firm and her failure to rise grows out of her willingness to stay there.

RESPONSE IS GOOD
THERE HAS been an excellent response on the part of local people in our call for old clothes for the poor. Mrs. A. T. Bigger, president of the Woman's Church Federation, said, "We have received many garments and have distributed them where they were needed," she continued.

Winter clothes will be needed during the winter, particularly coats, she pointed out.

STUFFED PEPPERS
HERE is today's recipe, stuffed peppers: Six large green sweet peppers, one tablespoon chopped onion, one cup canned corn, one cup dry bread crumbs, 1-2 cup milk, 2 tablespoons flour, one tablespoon butter, one egg. Parboil the peppers 10 minutes in one quart of water; cut in halves lengthwise, remove seeds, stuff and arrange in pan. Cover with buttered crumbs. Bake in hot oven until brown. To prepare stuffing, make white sauce of milk, butter, flour, salt, onion and one green pepper chopped fine. Add the canned corn and cook five minutes. Remove from fire and add beaten egg and bread crumbs sufficient to absorb excess moisture.

WHY NOT BEAUTIFY?
AND NOW, beauty parlors are being established before and probably will be here in a few years. I'm for them. Why shouldn't men beautify the same as women? A lot of them do, as a matter of fact, although they are timid about letting it be generally known because of public opinion and because the effeminate man is supposedly the one who goes in for this type of thing.

As one who admires those big bearded men from the wide open spaces, I can't see why they can't have clean, fingered and fresh-looking skins and neat hair. Grooming doesn't necessarily mean artificiality and men probably need some place to go for grooming just as women do. When I have to look at men wearing pouce and by girls wearing powder puffs, I'm going to start wearing dark glasses, but to the local grooming, such as I have seen recently, I'm for it.

Cotton Pickers Arriving Here

Estimate Hundred Workers Are Entering This Area Daily in Response to Demands of Cotton Farmers

Each day about 100 cotton pickers are entering this area in response to a demand which it is estimated will reach 2,000 men. F. N. Gooding, United States employment service field representative here, said Friday.

Orders for 500 men already have been received and are being filled as rapidly as possible, Mr. Gooding said.

Delay Explained
The delay in arrival of pickers on the cap rock was attributed to the lateness of the close of the picking season in southern Texas, particularly in the Waco vicinity, according to Mr. Gooding.

Duty of Mr. Gooding is to assist farmers in obtaining men for cotton picking. He was assigned to Lubbock recently by C. W. Woodman, Port Worth, assistant director of the southwest section of the United States labor employment service.

Aids Entire Section
"While my territory is the immediate section around Lubbock, on the South Plains, I am serving some as far away as 100 miles," Mr. Gooding said. "I am glad to take requests for men and also to direct men to where they can secure employment."

United States Adopts Policy Of Hands Off

American Government Not to Interfere with Situation in Cuba; to Stay Neutral During Haitian Elections

BY C. P. WILLIAMSON

WASHINGTON, Oct. 3. (AP)—Definite policies of non-interference by the United States in the present situation in Cuba, and complete neutrality in the forthcoming elections in Haiti have been determined on by the American government.

After many weeks in which the state department has maintained an outward complacency toward the political situation in Cuba, it became known today that the policy of the Hoover administration is at the present the same as that enunciated by Elihu Root while secretary of war under President McKinley.

Interpretation Amendment
This pronouncement in 1910 embodied an interpretation of the Platt amendment controlling Cuban-American relations stating the amendment did not contemplate "intermeddling" with the internal affairs of Cuba. Only such acts as would maintain an adequate government to protect lives and property and fulfill American obligations under the treaty of Paris, concluding the Spanish-American war, would be justified under the declaration as communicated at that time to the late Major General Leonard Wood, then in Cuba.

At a conference with newspapermen today, however, Secretary Stimson was careful to point out that, while the United States has never intervened to maintain any Cuban government in power, each case must be looked upon according to its merits and a case might arise in the future which might distinguish it from those which the American government uses as precedents for its present policy.

Although this statement by the secretary might be interpreted as indicating the state department looked for a possible change in its policy in the present situation, the general opinion among observers here tonight was that only as a last resort would the American government at the present time take

Scientists Pooh-Pooh Claim of 300 Year Old Toads; Pass Investigation

WASHINGTON, Oct. 3. (AP)—Scientists at the Museum of Natural History, who say "Pooh! Pooh!" to the claim that three toads found in Oklahoma have lived three hundred years, will pass up the invitation of J. B. Thoburn, curator of the Oklahoma Historical Society, to come and see for themselves.

Reiterating their skepticism, Dr. Remington A. Kellogg and Miss Doris Cochran, today cited their decisive and drastic action so far as Cuba was concerned.

No Change Hinted

The state department declaration on the forthcoming elections in Haiti contained no reference to a possible change in the situation there which might be inferred to mean a possible change in American policy. The statement on Haiti, similar to one issued by the American high commissioner in Port au Prince, said the elections were "entirely a Haitian affair" and American officials in Haiti have been instructed to maintain "a strictly neutral attitude."

The policy of the state department at present, Stimson said, is one of maintaining a close watch of the Cuban situation, with no intention of minimizing it.

He credited the Indian mound and clay ball toads with the usual season of hibernation, about one winter.

How careful you are to have your coffee just right. The taste, the body and all the fine touches of quality that go into a cup of coffee—all these are so much more important than the mere fact that it is "brown." There are many things that make coffee brown. But taste is the thing that counts.

Shortenings, too, even though they may be white, can be quite different. They are made differently. The Wesson Oil people, when they make Snowdrift, use an oil as choice as a fine salad oil. And a little extra care sends it to you pure, fresh and sweet... good to eat all by itself. Free from animal fats, Snowdrift comes to you sealed pure and fresh in an air-tight can. Until you break the seal on that can, no other hands have touched it.

And remember that you need something pure and good to cook with, because in baking or frying, you really eat the shortening you use. It comes to your table as an important part of the food. And nothing can be too good for you to eat.

Lubbock's oldest bread, Sally Ann, is now sold in over 150 stores in Lubbock and on the South Plains, over looking the many hotels and cafes.

The importing of outside bakery products from our larger cities is something that is hardly noticeable to the average shopper. The quality of Sally Ann Bread and other local bakery products are not excelled by any breads in the Southwest.

Mr. Joe Baldrige, owner of Lubbock Bakery, states that many attempts have been made to dominate the field with other bakery products but always the shoppers of Lubbock demand the fresh, wholesome breads that are baked in Lubbock, Texas.

Sally Ann Bread is the oldest bread in Lubbock that has not changed its wrapper and name. The wrapper with the name Sally Ann on it, signifies to the shopper of Lubbock, "A BREAD THAT IS FRESH AND WHOLE SOME"—Adv.

PORT OF ENTRY FOR ANTIQUE FURNITURE

The East Texas Chamber of Commerce has asked the Texas delegation in congress to obtain from the treasury department an order designating Galveston and Houston as ports of entry for antique furniture. Under the new tariff act, the secretary of the treasury is authorized to designate a limited number of ports where antique furniture may be imported and admitted duty free.

Some time ago Harry Hawley of Galveston became interested in this matter and attempted to obtain such a designation for Galveston and Houston. The treasury department has refused, however, designating New Orleans as the only port of entry for antique furniture on the Gulf coast—the only one, in fact, between Baltimore and Los Angeles. These ports were selected, it was explained, "with due regard to the volume of business transacted, as well as their geographical location."

Designated ports on the Atlantic coast are Boston, New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore, all within a few hundred miles of each other. The Pacific coast ports are San Francisco, Seattle and Los Angeles. One would suppose that the treasury department considers interest in antiques among people of the South, Southwest and Middle West extremely negligible. However, it is well to consider that Texas has four customs districts which would be served by the designation of a port of entry for antique furniture on the Texas coast.

In point of import and export trade, the ports of Galveston and Houston are exceeded only by New York. Their steamship service is certainly no less extensive than that of New Orleans, with the exception of service to Latin America, which scarcely figures in the importation of antique furniture. Texas has four customs districts which would be served by the designation of a port of entry for antique furniture on the Texas coast.

From the treasury standpoint, the matter seems to be one simply of convenience. The customs act defines as an antique a piece of furniture which is 100 or more years old. Hence it is necessary to have at ports of entry a customs inspector who is qualified to pass on the antiquity of furniture offered for duty-free admission. Mr. Hawley suggests that one inspector could be trained to perform this work in connection with his other duties at the ports of Galveston and Houston, their accessibility to each other making this arrangement entirely practical. The suggestion impresses the Avalanche as a sound one. We are confident that the proposed designation would be a great convenience to Southwestern collectors and dealers, of whom there are more than the treasury department is probably aware. If other influential organizations and individuals follow the example of the East Texas Chamber of Commerce, no doubt the treasury can be prevailed on to reconsider its veto.

DESPECIFIC CRIMINALITY

It is hardly necessary to say that every effort should be made to apprehend motorists who flee from the scene of an accident leaving a victim helpless in the road. Such a person offends all sense of decency. He loses such rights as he has; the benefit of extenuating circumstances in the mind of the public. Yet the number of hit-and-run drivers seems to grow constantly and with distressing rapidity.

It is easy to understand that for a moment a motorist might be panic-stricken when he realizes that he has struck down a fellow-being. But he convicts himself of cowardice who yields to panic and flees from the scene. He is showing lack of, rather than possession of the presence of mind which should be required of all operators of motor vehicles. He is worse than a coward who would leave a man, woman or child in distress, actuated purely by cunning and fear of prosecution or punishment. Only creatures of distressing mental shortcomings would be guilty of such inhumanity, but unhappily of such creatures there are many. And there is no way of knowing who they are until it is too late.

An appeal to manhood where there is no manhood, is futile. So long as there is a possibility of escaping the consequences of carelessness there will be those who will attempt it. Society's only effective check is by ruthlessly tracking down the malefactors and treating them as dangerous criminals.

POST-GRADUATE EDUCATION

When America was young teaching was one of the functions of the mother. Schools were few and far between, and knowledge was gained at the family fireside. Through the years the system of public schools grew until today knowledge is imparted by trained teachers, supplemented by what little attention a mother is willing and able to give.

The American press is the university of the masses. Through it those whose school days were few or have been left far behind are enabled to keep abreast of the times. In it they find articles dealing with science, politics and current events. Through it leaders of thought and moulders of opinion deliver their messages. He who reads his newspaper conscientiously and intelligently adds to his store of knowledge unceasingly.

No other agency comes into so intimate contact with the great mass of the people: in no other way can so many men, women and children be reached continuously to impart knowledge to them. The press, which has been called a university, is constantly adding to its curriculum.

SENATOR FROM NORTH DAKOTA OFFERS GOVERNMENT REMEDY FOR UNSTEADY WHEAT MARKET

By Charles P. Stewart
(Central Press Staff Writer)

WASHINGTON, Oct. 3.—Senator Lynn J. Frazier of North Dakota is the unlikeliest of law-makers to see the least thing funny in any plot to lower wheat prices. Wheat is his state's principal crop. The senator himself is a wheat grower. Nevertheless, he chuckled audibly at my request for his opinion of Secretary of Agriculture Hyde's outcry over Soviet Russia's "short sales," as responsible for the Chicago market's recent weakness.

"The federal farm board," he said, "couldn't even steady it by buying 50 million bushels. Hyde's theory is that it slumped on account of the Soviet's 5 to 10 million-bushel holdings. Five to 10 million bushels of selling—stretched over a considerable period of time—out of approximately 20 billion bushels of trading annually! The agriculture department is to be complimented on its thoroughness, anyway. It must have done its investigating with a microscope."

"But it's odd," continued the senator, "that the government seems to have overlooked one thing which, to me, is highly conspicuous. That's the spread between the wheat prices and bread prices."

"The lower wheat says, the longer the loaf continues to retail at 9 cents or thereabouts. Our farm secretary's sharp eye can discern Soviet transactions in thousands of 1 per cent, but he misses bakery trust profits running as high as 9 or 10 hundred per cent."

"It's curious, isn't it?"

"While I can't seriously share in Secretary Hyde's alarm at the discovery of a little Russian hedging on the Chicago market, the Soviet's wheat dumping in Europe presents a grave problem to the American farmer," admitted the North Dakotan.

"With a big wheat surplus here, Russian competition abroad concerns us vitally."

"It compels us to cut our overseas prices, which reflects unfavorably on our home prices. True enough, it looks as if Russia ought not to have so much wheat to export. Every indication is that the Soviet government is able to export it only by starving the Russians themselves—which is not right. As a humanitarian, Secretary Hyde complains about it very properly."

"But what are we going to do about it?"

"We can't very well go over to Russia and compel the Soviet regime to feed its own people adequately—so that there will not be a Russian surplus in other European countries."

"Yes," answered the senator, "there is."

"The remedy for the United States government to create an authority charged with the duty of fixing a fair price for such American crops as wheat of which there is a large surplus and buying those crops in, at the established price, up to the limit of American requirements."

"For example, if an advance estimate indicates a domestic demand for 80 per cent of a certain season's coming wheat yield, the stipulated price would be paid to each farmer for 80 per cent of his crop."

"The 80 per cent bought and paid for, the remaining 20 per cent would be sold abroad for whatever it would bring. Undoubtedly the farmers usually would have to take a loss on it. That would tend to make them more cautious the following year. Thus production would adapt itself to national necessities."

"But would farmers not habitually booby trap beyond the 80 per cent limit?"

"That would have to be penalized," said the senator.

"There probably would be cases of it, especially at first. In wartime, when price fixing prevailed, a few farmers were punished for hoarding. This would be the same thing in reverse. It practically would cease as agriculture accustomed itself to the system."

"And it would apply to all crops of which there was an excess."

The North Dakotan nodded. "Wheat," he explained, "and cotton—until producers arrived at a balance between supply and demand. Sometimes potatoes might be included—in the event of over-production, such as has happened."

"Suppose advance estimates erred?"

"They would carry over into the ensuing season," said the senator.

"But would all this be constitutional?"

"A-a-a-h!" exclaimed the North Dakotan, with a prolonged inflection.

"Now you ask a highly critical question. I can answer for the plan's advantages to agriculture, but that may be just its legal weakness. The more advantageous an economic plan is, to the masses of the people, as against the classes, the surer it is, generally speaking, that the United States supreme court will find it unconstitutional."

STUDY SHOWS CHILDREN GROW MORE IN SUMMER AND FALL

By Dr. Morris Fishbein, Editor Journal of the American Medical Association, and of Hygiene and Health Magazine

The average person is likely to take it for granted that a child grows constantly from birth to maturity at a fairly even rate and to be little concerned with the factors concerning growth at any given time. Actually, children, like plants, grow much more during some seasons than during others. Their rate of growth seems influenced by the weather, the sunlight, exercise, diet, and many other factors.

For at least a quarter of a century it has been known that the children tend to grow more during the summer than during the winter, the fact being emphasized by German investigators who made a special study of the subject.

Thus, one German investigator who examined 1,000 German infants found the increase in weight much greater during the late summer and autumn than in the spring and early summer or in the winter.

An American physician who studied several thousand children in Boston during the period of their school life noted a seasonal difference in the weight increase, the September to January period averaging 34 pounds in boys, whereas February to June period averaged 32 pounds. He found, in general, a loss of weight in April, May and June.

An increase in height is found to take place rapidly from April to June, slowing down in the hot summer months and still more in the winter months. The figures were recently checked for 650 children, aged 7 to 8, in four Scottish towns. All of these children had an increase in height in the three months from March to the end of June more so than in any other period.

The smallest increase in height took place in October, November and December, the greatest increase in weight took place in July, August and September, and the second greatest in October, November, and December.

In the early part of the summer, namely, April, May and June, 25 per cent of the boys actually lost weight, although they increased in height.

Such studies as these emphasize the importance of a study of normal conditions before attempting to draw any conclusions as to loss of weight or height in relationship to diet and disease. Unless one knows the normal curve of growth and of height, it is not possible to venture any opinion as to the significance of sunlight and ultra-violet rays on increase in weight or height at any given period.

OUR SPEED POSSIBILITIES AS COMPARED WITH THE ANT

In agility and muscular strength, insects are relatively much better equipped than human beings. My statement about the ant is based on observation by the entomologist Beal, who places the ant even ahead of the bee in intelligence and muscular perfection. If we moved our legs as quickly as the ant, we should walk at the rate of 800 miles per hour.

CHAPTER XLII

It found its mark on Garry Sloan's nose and the big director staggered. And then he came on like a giant fury, snarling, and in a moment Rorimer went to the pavement beneath a smashing blow, with an agonized cry from Anne Winter ringing in his ears as he fell.

He scrambled up again, brushing Anne aside as she sought to interfere. But Sloan was too big for him. The director was on him as once, eyes blazing, swinging mighty fists, and one of them connected solidly with Dan's chin and the lights went out.

When he opened his eyes again Sloan was beaming over him with a worried look on his face. Blood was flowing from his nose. It ran down in a dark rivulet over his mouth and chin. He said anxiously, "Are you all right, Rorimer?"

Dan nodded and managed a feeble smile. An smile changed in his head and Sloan was a hairy vision to him, kneeling there with one arm around a girl who slumped beside him and shook with violent sobs. He could feel the man's other hand behind his neck, propping him up.

Sloan's strained features relaxed at the other's smile. "Sure you're all right?" he repeated, and Dan assured him that he was. To prove it he got up unaided and stood on his feet.

"I'm sorry, Rorimer," the director said. "Sorry as hell. I went off my nut." He turned his attention to Anne and pressed his mouth to her ear and told her not to worry. "It's all right, Anne; everything's all right again. Buck up now."

Things slowly became clear to Rorimer again, as though he were emerging from a fog. He put his fingers against his jaw and they touched a tender spot where Sloan had hit him and knocked him unconscious, and he suddenly felt that never before in his life had he been so ridiculous as this; for there was Sloan with his arms around the trembling Anne Winter—the Lord only knew what had happened to Anne—and here he was rubbing a sore chin after a bad licking. All because he had stuck his nose into somebody else's affairs.

He felt the spot gingerly again. Lucky that his jaw hadn't been broken for his pains. Just a big fool.

Sloan had been decent, too—very decent—more so than he had a right to expect. He ought to be sore. Dan went over to him and he said, "I'm sorry—terribly sorry. It was my fault, the whole thing. I made an awful rap of myself."

"It's all right," the other assured him with a bloody grin, and he held out his hand for Rorimer to shake. It was his left hand; the other arm was around Anne Winter. "We all fly off the handle once in a while. I guess," Sloan smiled. "Forget it. Forget it and say something to her, will you? I can't get a rise out of her. She's scared out of her head."

Sloan himself spoke something to Anne again, but his words had no effect. So Dan held her and murmured into her ear while the director wiped his face with his handkerchief; he rubbed her wrist and patted her shoulder, and talked to her, and Anne's convulsive weeping continued.

He looked up at Sloan and shook his head. Having removed most of the blood from his face, Sloan now plucked at his chin and gazed thoughtfully at the distracted girl. "There's nothing to worry about, I believe," he assured Rorimer. "She's just a bit hysterical, that's all."

"It's all my fault, too," Dan murmured in self-reproach, but Garry Sloan smiled and said he was not so sure of that.

"I contributed my bit," he remarked, and he looked thoughtful again. And then he took hold of Anne and pulled her gently to her feet and held her there. He spoke sharply to her.

"We're going back, Anne. Come along. We're going back on the set and you're going through that scene. Understand?"

Rorimer heard voices not very far off, coming nearer to them—the crew, most likely, coming back for the "shooting."

Sloan heard them too. He raised Anne's chin, compelled her to look at him and listen to what he said. "Come on, Anne, we're going back. Come along. You and I have a little cleaning up to do," he smiled. "What the others don't know won't hurt them. . . . Feeling better, Anne?"

Anne nodded. With Sloan on one side of her and Dan on the other, she walked back to the studio.

Paul Collier that night heard a strange story. Dan came home, wild of eye, with marked face and dirty clothes, and Collier took one look at him and his mouth fell open in amazement.

"Well," he demanded. "What hit you?"

"You'd be surprised," Dan replied with a grin, and he sat down and related what had happened.

"You mean to tell me you took a punch at Garry Sloan?" Paul once interrupted unbelievably.

And Dan laughed. He could laugh now, although he was not any less the fool. "You should have seen what he did to me. He knocked me colder than a herring."

Sunday-School Lesson

BY DR. J. E. NUNN

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON FOR OCTOBER 5, 1930

General Topic:—Zacharias and Elisabeth: Life in a Pious Home.

Scripture Lesson:—Luke 1:6, 9-26, 26-38.

5. There was in the days of Herod, king of Judea, a certain priest named Zacharias, of the course of Abijah; and he had a wife of the daughters of Aaron, and her name was Elisabeth.

6. And they were both righteous before God, walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless.

7. Now Elisabeth's time was fulfilled that she should be delivered; and she brought forth a son.

8. And her neighbors and her kinsfolk heard that the Lord had magnified his mercy towards her; and they rejoiced with her.

9. And it came to pass on the eighth day, that they came to circumcise the child; and they would have called him Zacharias, after the name of his father.

10. And his mother answered and said, Not so; but he shall be called John.

11. And they said unto her, There is none of thy kindred that is called by this name.

12. And they made signs to his father, what he would have him called.

13. And he asked for a writing tablet, and wrote, saying, His name is John. And they marvelled all.

14. And his mouth was opened immediately, and his tongue loosed, and he spake, blessing God.

15. And fear came on all that dwelt around them; and all these sayings were noted abroad throughout all the hill country of Judea.

16. And all that heard them said, What then shall this child be? For the hand of the Lord was with him.

17. Yea and thou, child, shalt be called the prophet of the Most High: For thou shalt go before the face of the Lord to make ready his ways:

18. To give knowledge of salvation unto his people in the remission of their sins.

19. Because of the tender mercy of our God, whereby the dayspring from on high shall visit us:

20. To shine upon them that sit in darkness and the shadow of death; to guide our feet into the way of peace.

21. And the child grew, and waxed strong in spirit, and was in the deserts till the day of his showing unto Israel.

22. Golden Text:—And they were both righteous before God, walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless.—Luke 1:6.

Time:—John the Baptist was born in June, B. C., six months before the birth of Jesus.

INTRODUCTION

"Some of the noblest characters of the Old Testament, such as Joseph, David, and Jesus, were the children of wicked fathers; but usually good children are born of good parents, and this was notably true of our Lord Jesus Christ and his great herald, John the Baptist. Let us see what the New Testament says about the father and mother of each."

ZACHARIAS AND ELISABETH

This beautiful and noble pair had no children, a sad misfortune in Hebrew eyes, for children were looked upon as a token of divine favor; moreover both of them were too old to have children in the ordinary course of nature. But as Zacharias was at the height of what was the greatest moment of his life, having been assigned by lot to the duty of offering incense on the altar of incense in the Holy Place of the sanctuary or inner building of the temple, the great archangel Gabriel appeared to him and told him that he should become the father of a son, whose name was to be John. This son was to be a Nazirite, a man of great holiness and spiritual power, a second Elijah preparing the way of the long-expected Messiah. Because Zacharias did not believe the angel and dumb, and had to communicate asked for a sign, he was made with the wondering people, waiting outside for the usual blessing, by means of signs.

In the sixth month after these events, the same archangel Gabriel announced to Mary of Nazareth in Galilee, a kinswoman of Elisabeth, that she would give birth supernaturally, though a virgin, to the Messiah prophesied in the Old Testament, Jesus, the Son of God.

PARENTAL INFLUENCE

John was the man he was in a large part because Zacharias was the man he was. He breathed in the atmosphere of devotion from infancy. He was surrounded in his home by righteousness. His parents taught him the fear of God. They had a sense of true values, and so he grew up with a rich and worldly power and luxury as the little things they are and obedience to God and likeness to God as the great things they are. He saw in the love of his father and mother and their reverence before the Lord the image and example of all that is best in mortal life, and that vision never left him.

FAMILY WORSHIP

John's recollections in after years would be of the constant personal by his father of the sacred books, and of his patient teaching of their contents to him. To no ordinance of the Lord was the devout Hebrew parent more faithful than to that which enjoined the careful catechizing of his children in the first principles of their faith and first records of their history. Family worship is also a strong and sacred power.

"Happy is he or she who has such a father and mother, and whose childhood is nurtured in such a home. Out of such homes have come the men who have been the reformative and regenerative forces of the world. The influence of the mother is especially noteworthy; nearly all men who have been conspicuously great and good have owed much to their mothers. In this narrative the mother is less prominent than the father; but enough is told to show of what manner of spirit she was."

—James Hastings.

"THIS NAME IS JOHN." V. 63

And they made signs to his father, what he would have him called. It would appear that Zacharias had become deaf as well as dumb. And he asked for a writing tablet, and wrote saying, His name is John. The tablets in common use at this time throughout the Roman Empire were commonly of wood, covered with a thin coat of wax, on which men wrote with the sharp point which has left its traces in our language, in the word "style," in its literal and figurative sense. And his mouth was opened immediately, and his tongue loosed. There was no gradual return of the faculty of speech, but it returned as suddenly and miraculously as it was lost.

And he spake, blessing God. "Probably in the words of the hymn given in verses 68-70, which begins 'Blessed be the Lord,' the hymn which had been forming in his mind during his long period of silence and deafness.

And fear came on all that dwell round about them. The word translated 'fear' does not mean terror, but rather reverential awe. And all these sayings were noted abroad throughout all the hill country of Judea. The 'hill country' is a mass of low, rounded hills lying between the Jordan valley and the low region along the coast of the Mediterranean—the backbone of Palestine. These sayings mean the account of these supernatural happenings—what was done as well as what was said. And all that heard them said, What then shall this child be? Considering the wonders which accompanied his birth, great things were to be expected of the boy.

THE "BENEDICTION" OF ZACHARIAS, V. 67-69

"Blessed be the Lord God of Israel; for he hath visited and redeemed his people. The song of Zacharias is called, from the first word of the Latin translation, the Benedictus. It is a hymn of thanksgiving to God for the salvation which Zacharias in prophetic vision saw that God was about to send to earth in the person of the Messiah, of whom his own son was to be the herald. And so the Benedictus, while retaining the form and the very language of the Old Testament, breathes the spirit of the New Dispensation. It is a fragment of a song, and now near world, a world already seen and possessed by Zacharias in the anticipations of faith."—Rev. Henry Burton, D. D.

TRAINING OF A JEWISH CHILD

Of course the first training of a child was the work of his mother, but the early education of a child devolved upon the father. If the father were not capable of elementary teaching, a stranger would be employed. In the days of Christ, home teaching ordinarily began when the child was about three years old. There is reason for believing that, even before this, that careful training of the memory commenced, which has ever since been one of the mental characteristics of the Jewish nation. Verses of Scripture, benedictions, wise sayings, etc., were impressed on the child, and mnemonic rules devised to facilitate the retention of what was so acquired. At five years of age the Hebrew Bible was to be begun; commencing, however, not with the Book of Genesis, but with that of Leviticus. The history of Israel would probably have been long before imparted orally. At six years of age he would be sent to school. The grand object of the teacher was moral as well as intellectual training.

"Young people were brought up to work. It was a father's duty not only to have his son taught the Law, but also to find him a calling. To neglect this was as bad as it would be to make a brigand of him."—Rev. J. Brough. "It is to be especially noted that the education of a Jewish child consisted almost entirely of the Bible. With it he was taught to read and write, and through its wisdom he was made ready for life. In this way were reared the greatest characters the world has known."

sentence, What manner of child shall this be? I would say, He or she will be the manner of child that you, the parents, make him or her."—Rev. Hugh Black, D. D.

"God desires the flower of life and not the stalk, the kernel and not the shell, the living foliage and not the fallen sheaf, fresh youth and not failing age."—Sabine Baring-Gould.

There are three pillars which should hold up the roof-tree: unselfishness, purity and love. Where those three pillars stand the thatch may be straw, but it will be a home. Let us grant that the father is one that ruleth well his own house, having his children in subjection, with all gravity, as Paul puts it; let us grant that the mother is, as he says in another place, 'a woman who knows how to stay in the house'; and let us grant also that children have been taught to love and serve one another, to seek each the other's good—there you have a home. Very simple! But the best thing on earth is a home so made."—James Hastings.

The Hollywood Story

Copyright 1930 by NEA Service Inc. by ERNEST LYNN

You could have counted a hundred over me.

He went on with his story. "And I'm a son of a gun if he didn't make her go back and go through that scene again! And she went through it like a million dollars. The third one," he finished.

Collier settled back in his chair and stared. "What a story!" he exclaimed softly. "What a story! It's the best yarn that's cracked in Hollywood in a year." He grinned. "Can I use it?"

"Can you what?"

Collier threw an arm up over his head and shook from an imaginary blow. "All right. All right. I was just kidding. Don't throw any punches at me," he said. "What did Sloan do? What did Anne do?"

"MORE MORE MORE MORE —"

"Just what I'm telling you. He talked to her for a while. Sat in her dressing room with her and told her all the simple things to go through with it. And I'm telling you she did too. I stuck around to hear part of the playback and then I beat it. She's absolutely going to steal the picture."

"Didn't you take her home?"

"He took her home? Do you think I was going to stick around after that happened? Nothing doing. I ducked out. What a goof she must think I am—swinging on Sloan that way."

"They eat that up, my boy."

"Yeah," Dan rubbed his chin and smiled ruefully. "Gee, how that guy can hit!"

Paul chuckled and lastly stretched out a long arm for a cigarette.

"You sure went out of your class," he observed, measuring his friend with admiring eyes. "But I don't think there's anything so remarkable in what Sloan did afterward. I mean about making Anne do her stuff. The same thing's been done before, under different circumstances, of course. He just caught her in the right mood and grabbed his chance, that's all. He knows his stuff. . . . But what do you think of Garry Sloan now? Is he a director or isn't he?"

"I'll never say another word against him," Rorimer promised. "I know when I'm licked."

Pretty thoroughly licked, he thought—in more ways than one.

Waiting for Sloan to appear the next morning, he had a few misgivings. They had parted friends but he had not ceased to reproach himself for his foolishness. Sloan, he feared, might not be so pleasant about it now that he had had a night in which to think matters over.

But the director was cordial when he came, and he took Dan to one side and told him to forget what had happened.

"No one has to know a word about it. No one was there but the three of us. It doesn't have to go any farther."

"One of the camera men gave me a funny look last night," Dan told him with a smile. "He must have thought something."

"That's all explained. I told him you stumbled over a step in the dark."

"I'm just a sap."

"Sure you are," Sloan said cheerfully, "but you'll have to take credit for one of the biggest scenes in the picture."

He ran his fingers through his blond mop of hair. "She'll be great address yet, Rorimer. Watch her. I guess I was pretty tough on her last night," he admitted, "but sometimes you have to be in this business. . . . Has she been around today?"

"I haven't seen her."

Anne did not appear at all that day. There was nothing more for her in the picture now. There remained only the war sequences, in which she did not appear and which were to be made on location. And Dan was relieved that he did not have to face her. There had been no talk between them—nothing; he had remained in the background while Sloan brought her around to doing what he expected of her.

The following day, though, he saw her. The publicity department had arranged a luncheon appointment for her with a newspaper writer. Anne came early, and Garry Sloan discovered her and took her to the projection room forthwith to look at the last rushes and hear his praise.

"Great, Anne. Absolutely great!" Sloan's manner said. "Tell me, now, that I was right." And Anne told him.

From the window of his office Dan Rorimer saw them walking across the court in the bright sunlight. Sloan had his arm around her and Anne's face was smilingly upturned to his. She looked very happy, and Dan, with a queer little smile, turned back to his work.

Later on in the day, as he was passing through the hall downstairs, Anne's voice called to him from one of the publicity offices and she came out to him.

He said abruptly, "I want to apologize for what happened the other night."

"You needn't," Anne smiled at him. She did not look tired now. Her eyes were bright and gay.

"I lost my head, that's all. I'm sorry. I guess you think I'm an awful roughneck."

"Why Dan! You don't believe that." She shook her head. And she added softly, with a direct look into his eyes: "You couldn't be a roughneck if you tried, Dan. You're too much of a gentleman."

Dan said, "Thank you, Anne," and he left her then and went upstairs to his office.

Anne stood there in the hallway and watched him go. She stood there and watched his back disappear around the stair corner, and for some strange reason she thought of the lines of a song that Dan had asked her to sing for him. The last time she had sung for him. . . . And she knew that she had been quite blind not to have realized that she loved him very dearly.

So she went to him.

Dan was bending over his typewriter when she came in. His elbows were propped on the ledge and his chin was buried in his hands. Anne closed the door behind her and he looked around at its sound.

"Why, Anne!" He rose at once. She smiled at his astonishment.

"Aren't you going to ask me to sit down?" she asked.

"Why, of course. Sit down, Anne."

What she had to tell him she was already telling him with her eyes. But he looked very uncomprehending. "Dan, she said, "I've known you, thought, but in many ways he was a strange young man. Under the circumstances there was only one thing to do."

So she looked at him steadily enough, though her heart was pounding and her cheeks were flaming, and she said, "Dan, do you remember the night you asked me to marry you?"

Dan's mouth twisted strangely. "Remember it?"

"I hope you still mean it, Dan," she told him, "because I'm no longer uncertain."

The door was shut, but it would have made no difference to Dan if all the world had seen.

Farmer Barely Escapes Death As Home Burns

C. C. Bessen of Near Monroe Wakes in Time to Escape Smothering; House Burns Down Thursday Night

Asleep in his burning home, C. C. Bessen, a farmer living near Monroe, barely awoke in time to escape smothering and to flee from the flaming structure about 10 o'clock Thursday night.

The house and all its contents were destroyed and if Mr. Bessen had not awakened when he did, he probably would have been burned to death, said Sheriff Wade Hardy, who was summoned to the blaze late Thursday night.

The family had gone away for the night and a lamp which had been left lighted in the house was burning when Mr. Bessen fell asleep, he told Sheriff Hardy.

When the farmer awoke, feeling that he was nearly smothered, he obtained a bundle of clothing and went to a door, which was too narrow to permit exit of both a person and the bundle, Mr. Bessen said. He was forced to leave to the flames the only articles he had attempted to save.

The Bessen property is two miles north and a half mile east of Monroe. Efforts to save the building and contents proved futile.

AUSTIN MAN SHOT

NO TIME FOR SCHOOL

A certain girl who came to Lubbock to enroll in Tech secured a job working every afternoon for her board and room. In a few days she also got a job on the same block where she lived, caring for a baby. When enrollment began the co-ed went to register, but much to her surprise found that all her time was scheduled for the two jobs, and that she had no time to attend classes. She had to give up one of her jobs.

BLACK-DRAUGHT LONG IN USE

George Lady Tells of Buying Her First Package of This Medicine in 1876.

Columbia, Ga.—Theodore's Black-Draught has been in use for the relief of constipation, indigestion and biliousness, for nearly one hundred years, and many people tell of having taken it, when needed, all their lives.

"Mrs. M. C. Bessen, of 44 West Myrtle Street, this city, recalls her first use of Black-Draught, fifty-three years ago.

"When I lived in Forsyth, Ga., in 1876," says Mrs. Bessen, "I bought my first Black-Draught at Mr. Jim Jay's store. He was selling it, and some one in the store recommended it to me for biliousness, and as I was having trouble and needed a purgative, I bought it. "If I get constipated, I have headache and feel as tired and sluggish, and such a bad taste in my mouth. But after I take a few doses of Black-Draught I get all right.

"In all these years, I have never found a better medicine of the kind. I am satisfied, as why change? I recommend it to old and young."

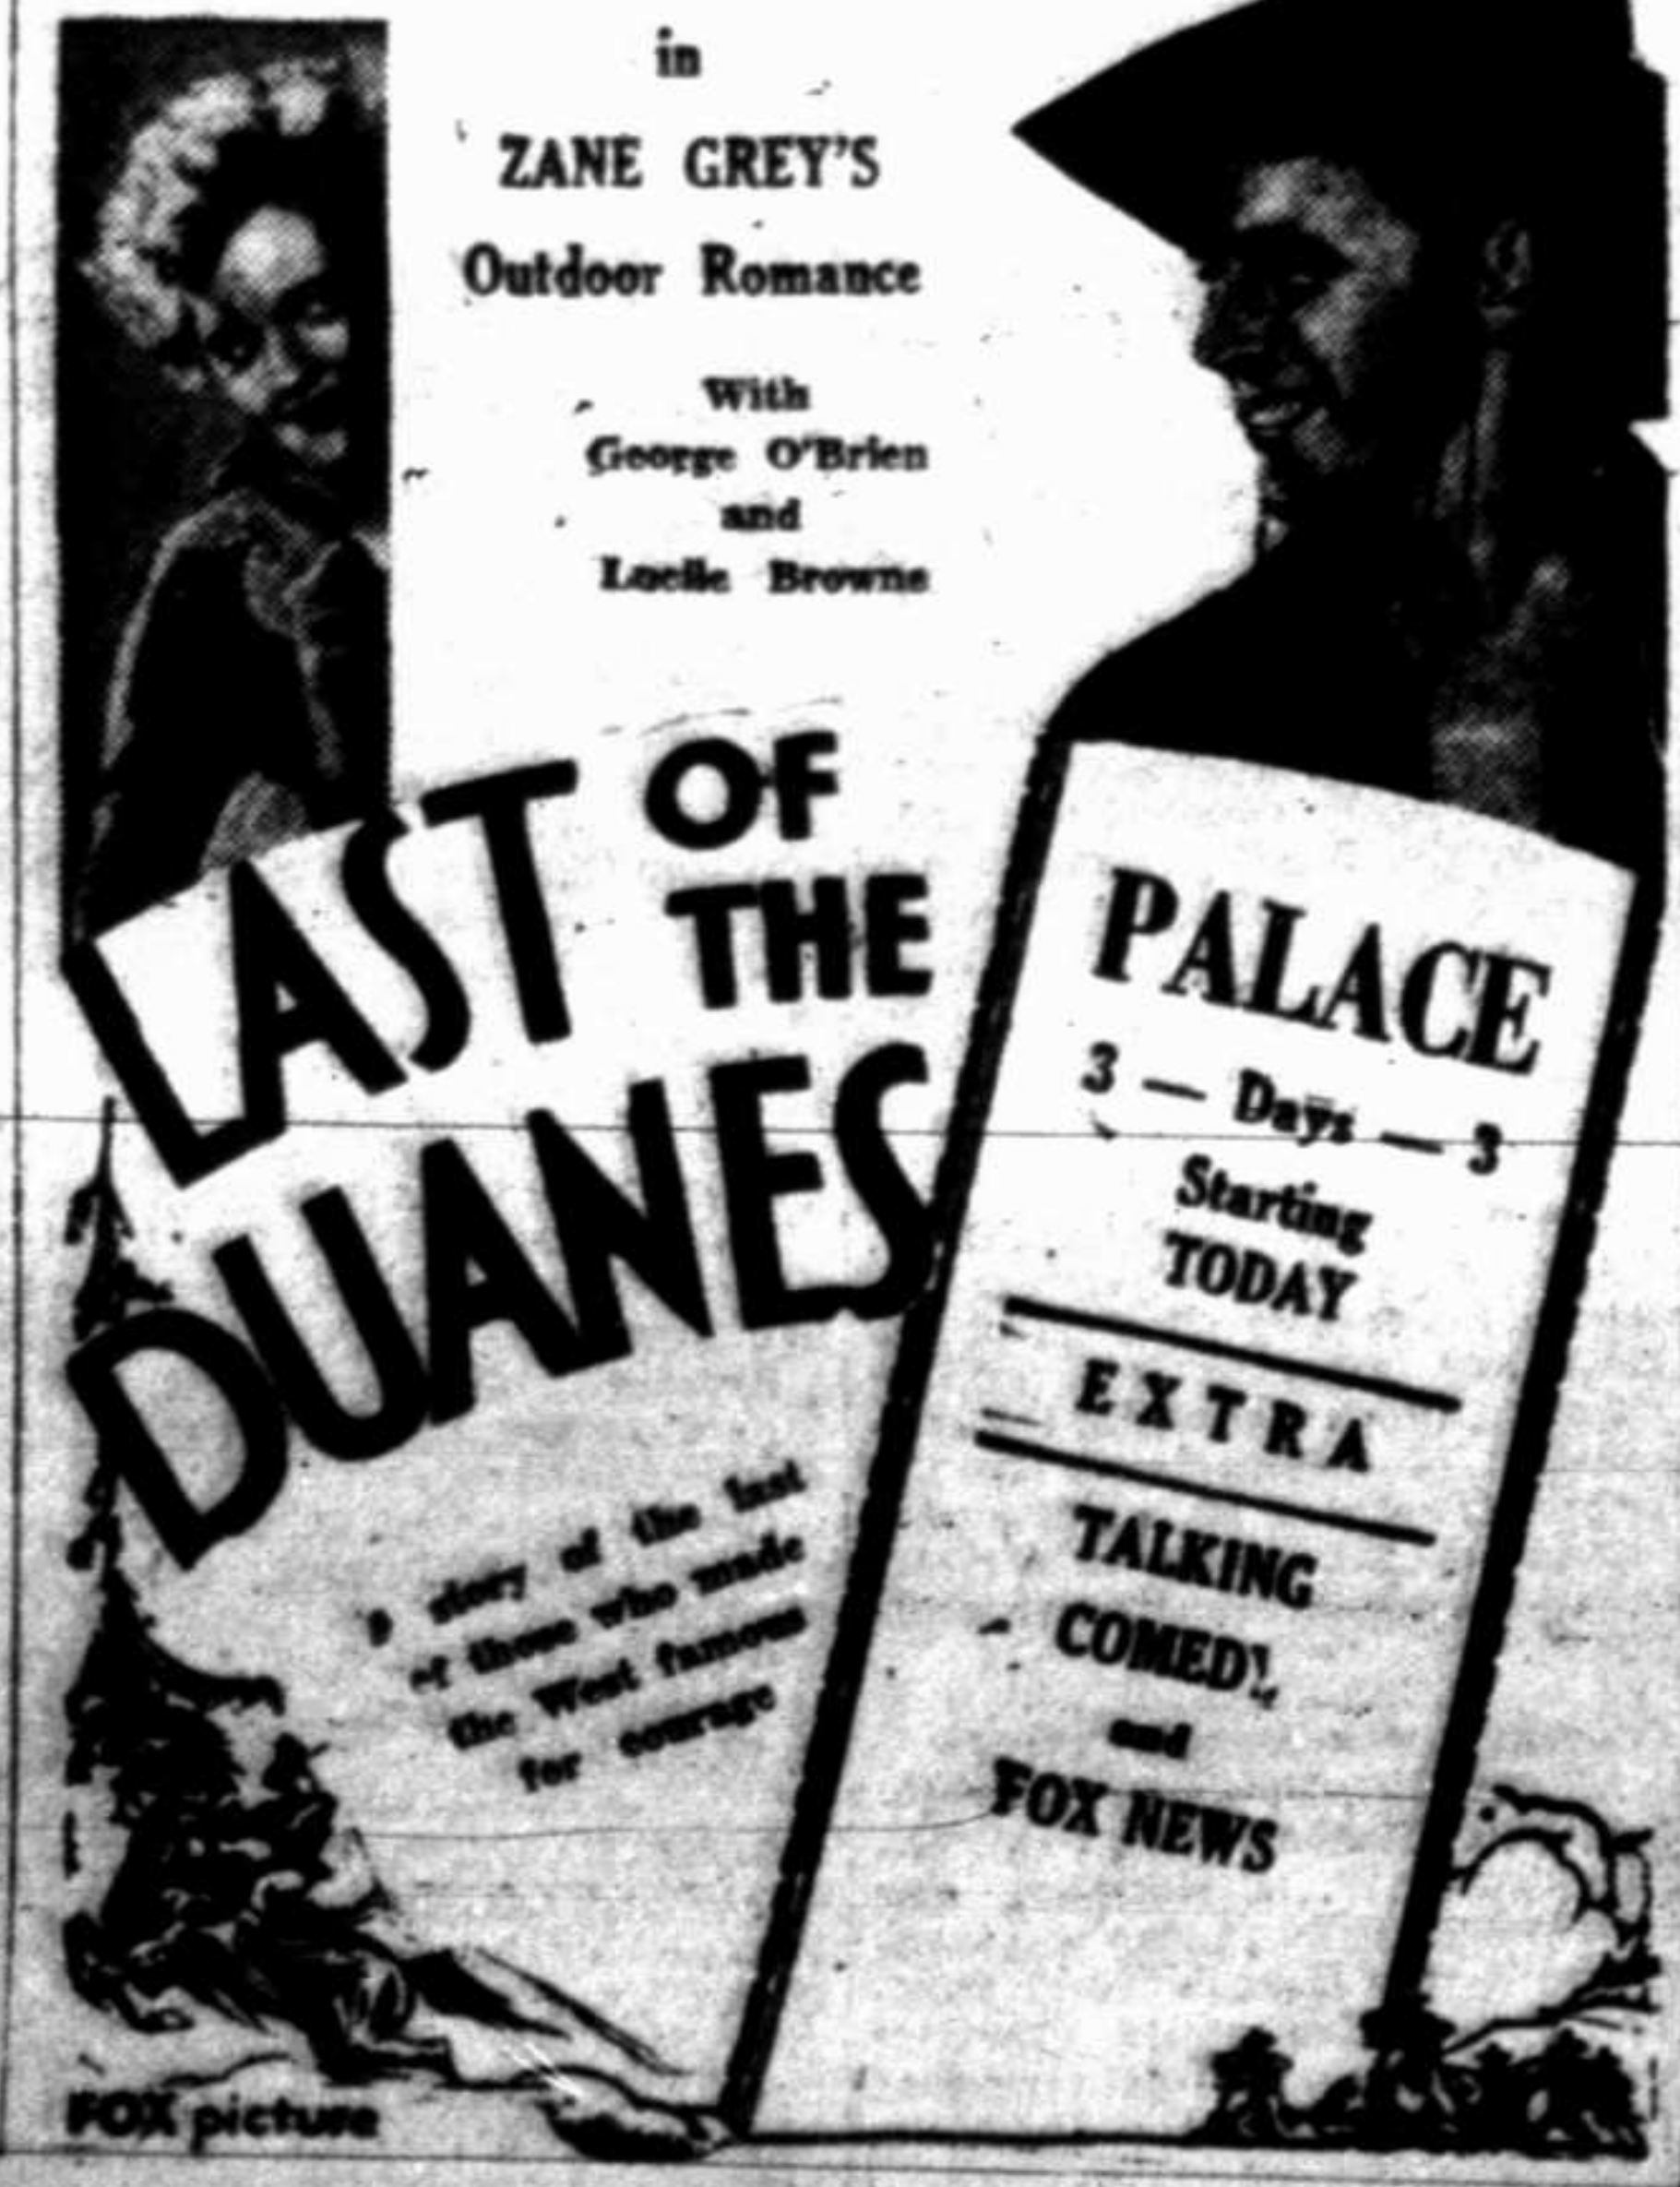

Sold in all packages.
