Western to reopen as United Bank branch

Jerry Mennega/Reporter-Telegram

United Bank Chairman Wayne Merritt comments on the purchase of Western Bank.

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Business/Oil Writer

The doors of Western Bank will reopen Monday morning for the first time in 90 hours as a branch of Midland's United Bank, N.A.

The Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.'s (FDIC) board of directors approved United assumption of Western's deposits at 2:30 Saturday afternoon after nearly three days of negotiations to find a buyer for the bank.

The bank was closed Thursday by Texas Banking Commissioner James Sexton.

"We want to assure all former Western Bank depositors that every dollar of their deposits is safe and backed by the financial strength of United Bank," said United's Chairman and Chief Executive Officer Wayne Merritt in announcing the deal Saturday night.

Drive-in windows at the Andrews Highway bank will open at their usual time, 7:30 a.m., and lobby doors will open to the public for the first time since Thursday at 9 a.m.

United, which will honor checks bearing Western's name, automatically assumes the business of all its predecessor's depositors, who held more than $66 million in 13,300 accounts, said Bill Olcheski, FDIC spokesman in Washington D.C.

Those accounts include the 100 accounts the FDIC said were in excess of the $100,000 insured limit.

Although the Andrews Highway location will operate as a branch of United, Merritt asks former Western customers to continue to use their former bank facility through the end of September.

He expects United's and Western's computer systems to be integrated by the end of the month when all United customers will be able to withdraw and deposit funds at both branches.

United agreed to pay a purchase premium of $300,000 to assume Western's deposits and will also buy some of the failed bank's assets for $6.6 million, local FDIC closing manager Frank Norris said.

Former Western employees and all United Bank employees will meet at 3 this afternoon for a briefing on how management expects operations to flow on Monday morning.

Merritt did not say how many of Western's former employees will be retained by United.

The FDIC advanced United $65.9 million to facilitate the assumption and purchase.

The FDIC retains 100 percent of Western's loans and some other assets, with a total book value of $66.2 million, he said.

Western had total assets of $72.8 million when it failed on Thursday.

FDIC will recover at least a portion of its advance to United through the liquidation of loans and those assets not assumed by the purchaser, Norris said.

United will begin a 120-day exclusive option period to purchase individual loans from Western's portfolio on Monday, Merritt said.

Merritt said former Western account holders would not be charged insufficient fund fees for checks not honored while the bank was closed.

He added the bank is urging merchants to waive any returned check charges that they would normally assess.

"None of this was the customers' fault and we hope merchants will be understanding."

United Bank, which was issued its national charter in 1984, showed $112.3 million in assets as of Aug. 31 and total deposits of $89.8 million. Paid-in capital at the bank was more than $20.2 million at the end of August.

United Bank rose from the ashes of Metro Bank at Midland Air Terminal, which was one of three area banks to fail in 1983.

Metro was purchased at the time it failed by three Panhandle area investors, who opened Mid-Cities Bank at the airport location.

In early 1984, United was chartered when it moved to the old Pioneer Gas Building on Missouri Street in downtown Midland, said Scott Lovett, executive vice president of United.

Terrorists kill 21 in synagogue

ISTANBUL, Turkey (AP) — Two Arab terrorists stormed Istanbul's main synagogue Saturday, killing 21 worshipers and wounding four with submachine-gun fire before blowing themselves up with hand grenades, officials said.

One of the wounded died Saturday night, raising the death toll to 22, police reported.

Officials said about 10 people escaped unharmed, including five or six women in a separate section of the synagogue.

Interior Minister Yildirim Akbulut said the gunmen locked the synagogue's main door with an iron bar to keep worshipers from escaping and sprayed the congregation with bullets.

When police arrived the terrorists detonated hand grenades and killed themselves, officials reported.

A teen-ager who survived the massacre but whose father perished said the terrorists doused some of the bodies with gasoline and set them afire. Police said seven bodies had been burned.

"When the shooting began, we all threw ourselves on the floor," 17-year-old Rafi Saul told Anatolia, Turkey's official news agency.

He was quoted as saying, "I pretended to be dead. But I lifted my head briefly to see what they were doing and saw them pouring gasoline on bodies" and then setting them on fire.

The grenade explosions made a charnel house of the Jewish house of prayer, where worshipers were arriving for Sabbath services. Dismembered bodies lay among wrecked rows of chairs. All the victims had been shot, Akbulut said.

Premier Turgut Ozal said after an emergency Cabinet meeting in Ankara, "This appears to have been a suicide commando mission."

Air Force evacuates 17 wounded in hijacking

KARACHI, Pakistan (AP) — A U.S. Air Force medical transport plane on Saturday evacuated 17 people, including six Americans, who were wounded in the hijacking of a Pan Am jumbo jet in which at least 15 people were killed.

Pakistani officials meanwhile issued conflicting statements about the fate of the four hijackers, all believed to be Palestinians. Some said all four survived. Others said one was killed and three survived, one of whom was wounded.

The gunmen, wearing the uniforms of airport security workers, seized the aircraft with nearly 400 people aboard early Friday. They initially demanded to be flown to Cyprus in a move to gain the freedom of Palestinian terrorists jailed there.

The hijacking ended 17 hours later when lights went out inside the aircraft and the hijackers fired at passengers and hurled grenades. Army commandos gained control of the aircraft half an hour after the shooting began.

Pakistani officials said at least 15 people were killed, among them three Americans. Hospitals reported 127 people injured.

Texans celebrate survival of relatives in hijacking

Associated Press

Relieved families all across Texas were celebrating Saturday after hearing news that their relatives had survived the bloody hijacking of a Pan Am jumbo jet in Pakistan.

In Portland, near Corpus Christi, a woman learned Friday afternoon that her husband, Milind Chaubal, escaped with only a broken leg and possibly a broken arm.

And in Kingsville, the worried family of 19-year-old T. Wijeyasangary got a call from him Saturday morning saying that he had not been hurt and that he'd be on his way home soon.

Wijeyasangary was the youngest of five brothers who had planned to come to South Texas from Sri Lanka and study at Texas A&I University. Two brothers and two sisters now live with their mother in a Kingsville apartment complex.

Charlotte Moore of Houston said she was "absolutely walking on air," after hearing that her fiance, Dave Allison, suffered no more than a sprained ankle.

Allison, 37, was en route from Karachi to Amsterdam on a business trip for Bawden Drilling Inc., said Bob Dodds, vice president of marketing.

Also in the Houston area, Asha Reddy of Sugar Land, whose 12-year-old son was aboard the plane, said she tried to telephone President Reagan to ask him to negotiate for the hostages' release before she finally received word that her son was not injured.

Her son, Siddharta, an eighth-grader this year at Fort Bend Junior High, had spent the summer in India with relatives, she said.

"I've seen so many hijackings on TV so many times, but I can't express how bad it was today," Ms. Reddy said.

In Portland, Mrs. Chaubal spent last night resting with her 15-month-old daughter and declined to make a statement to the Corpus Christi Caller-Times.

An unidentified family friend at the Chaubal home, however, said the woman's husband was injured when he "jumped off the back edge of the wing."

Chaubal had been in India almost two weeks visiting his father, and was on his way back to the United States when the hijacking occurred, said the friend, who requested anonymity.

Paresha Shah, a 24-year-old member of a group of Indian dancers aboard the flight, told relatives in Houston she was not injured during the hijacking. She was on her way to the United States with the troupe to perform in several cities, including Houston, according to her cousin Raunak Kothari.

Round 2 to start in budget fight

AUSTIN — For the first weekday in a month, the House and Senate chambers lay quiet Friday — a quiet broken only by the sound of workmen replacing light bulbs and tour guides explaining the famous paintings on the walls.

The calm between the storms, however, won't last long.

Gov. Mark White gave the Texas Legislature just three days off from its battle to tame the $3.5 billion deficit that threatens to bankrupt the state by December. Round 2 begins Monday.

The spirit of compromise never took hold in the 30-day special session that began Aug. 6 and hobbled to a name-calling close Thursday.

Senate and House leaders entered the session with diametrically opposed solutions for the deficit. Even though White threw in with the pro-tax Senate in his opening-day speech, it took barely three weeks for the feared stalemate to arise.

In one sense, the impasse was a philosophical one: tax vs. no tax, balance the budget vs. do enough to just get by. But the real dead end came over what everyone called the first step toward resolution: cutting the budget.

"We don't just cut the things that I don't use and you don't use, we cut the things everybody uses," says Rep. Ernestine Glossbrenner, D-Alice. "There is nothing that is not touched by them either directly or indirectly."

For senators, all of whom have at least one state university, medical school or mental health institution in their district, the House's proposed $670 million in cuts hit home and hit home hard.

Their constituents, they said, just wouldn't stand for such reductions.

House members responded that they wouldn't even talk about taxes until lawmakers had done what their constituents demanded: trim state spending to make up for depleted resources.

Five senators and five representatives spent nine days trying to reach a compromise over the $320 million difference in the two chambers' budget cuts.

The last two days' of meetings were more private — and sometimes angry — negotiating sessions than public offerings of give and take. The 10 men left town Thursday still at least $220 million apart.

Sen. Grant Jones, D-Temple and chairman of the Senate conferees, remains optimistic that negotiations will pick up next week.

"It's always a lot of pushing and pulling and feeling, wondering just how far one would go, how far another would go," Jones, a veteran of budget deliberations, says.

"Until you give people those times to express what they think, hear what other people think and realize there may be different approaches, it's just a matter of negotiation."

From Staff and Wire Reports

A city official said he has no idea how much money Big Spring will ask for in disaster relief aid surrounding the collapse of the city-owned Commanche Lake Dam a week ago Saturday.

Hal Boyd, Big Spring city assistant city manager and emergency management coordinator, said engineers will begin estimating damages to the city on Monday.

"We have to present a total dollar amount to the state's Emergency Management for Disaster Assistance division which includes damage done to individuals and businesses as well as to the Commanche Lake Dam itself," Boyd said.

Boyd said the money the city would receive from the state would go to repairing the dam that broke last week as a result of heavy rains that beseiged all of West Texas.

"I have no idea how much damage was caused by the collapse of the dam," Boyd said.

Boyd would not comment on the fact that although the dam was declared an "unsafe-high hazard" by the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers in 1979, city officials never made any attempts to adjust the dam to a safe operating state.

SESSION

Sen. Bob McFarland, R-Arlington, says he sees no sign that House negotiators are willing to reach a compromise.

"When you have a posture of 'take our plan or else,' it doesn't leave much alternative," McFarland says.

Only if that process ends, most observers say, will legislators turn to the larger issues.

"Our first priority is to try to make cuts in state spending and try to bring that figure down as far as we possibly can," says House Speaker Gib Lewis.

"If we get the opportunity to do what we want to do in the House, and that is to follow through on various budget cuts, various transferability of funds and do what we think needs to be done in state government to run state government in a business-like way, if that doesn't bridge the gap, sure I'll vote for a tax bill."

Lewis' chief lieutenants remain convinced, however, that the House plan will "bridge the gap."

As added ammunition, the speaker's team tried to change the focus last week from balancing the budget to "cash flow."

The most pressing problem has become the $1.3 billion in obligations the Treasury will be unable to meet around Dec. 19.

"Only the House's program can balance cash flow," says Rep. Mike Toomey, R-Houston. "They (senators) are maintaining they want to raise taxes, but they don't have a solution to the entire problem. The House is the only one that's got a solution, and I think they're going to finally realize that."

The House plan which, in the new lingo, "will cash flow" through the end of the fiscal year, includes about $650 million in spending reductions, an early retirement program for state workers, changing the state pay day and delaying until Aug. 31 the transfer of $62 million a month into the teachers' and state employees' pension plans.

Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby last week put out a new proposal — some cuts, increases in the sales and gasoline tax and a four-month delay in the pension fund transfers — that Lewis' staff says will keep the Treasury solvent at least through Jan. 1, 1988.

House leaders say the speaker's plan, coupled with a 50-percent larger tax increase sometime next year, would reach the same goal.

Rep. Mark Stiles, D-Beaumont, says waiting until 1987 for a tax bill gives the economy a chance to pick up. "We're being optimistic about the economy," Stiles says.

"Why pass one (a tax increase) now if you don't have to?"

House liberals say they gave Lewis a chance to move his tax-free plan during the first special session, but starting next week they'll try to force his hand.

Rep. Al Luna, D-Houston and chairman of the Mexican-American legislative caucus, says the higher education cuts the speaker's plan depends on could destroy "the future of Hispanics in Texas."

"We've been patient, and we've allowed the process to work on the House side," Luna says, predicting the caucus will win broad support for a tax bill. "It's time that we took some more forceful action."

Rep. Frank Collazo, D-Port Arthur, is one of those converts. "When I first came here, I was for the no-new-taxes program, I thought we could do it," he says. "But in just a few I days, I could see where the cuts were."

Luna sees an ulterior motive on the part of the 50 or so House Republicans who have vowed to stick with the Lewis anti-tax plan.

"It's in their interest, and their interest for (GOP gubernatorial nominee) Bill Clements for us to continue to founder and not resolve the deficit," he says.

Hobby, who has ignored his fall GOP opponent David Davidson, says he sees no role for partisan politics when it comes to the state budget.

"It's been a very puzzling session," Hobby says. "The customary major interest groups in the state — labor, business, education — are unanimously for responsibly addressing the state's financial problems.

"It's not that labor's for this and business if for that, or business is for this and education's for that."

Nevertheless, the spectre of the November general election has haunted the session from the beginning, with particular emphasis on White's rematch against Clements.

Many observers see the governor still riding strong on his take-charge, gut-up-and-pass-a-tax-bill-because-we-need-it stance from the beginning of the session.

"I think that showed leadership," says Sen. Roy Blake, D-Nacogdoches. "I can't say that we've done anything that would help or hurt him."

McFarland, the Republican senator from Arlington, says the governor lost that leadership image when the 30-day session ended belly up.

"I don't see how his positives on leadership can go up as a result of a failed session," he says.

Acting House Majority Leader Steve Carriker, D-Roby, says White has played down the political consequences in his frequent meetings with lawmakers at the Governors Mansion.

"He says, 'You guys, don't worry about what this session looks like to the press and the public,'" Carriker says. "He seems extremely wiling to accept responsibility."

Rep. Ed Kuempel, R-Seguin, says White's stock would improve if he brought those meetings from the mansion to the House floor.

"He deals from a position of aloofness," Kuempel says. "He's not in the trenches getting dirty with everyone else."

One former GOP House member says the public will blame the Legislature, not White, for the impasse.

"It's hard for a governor to lead because it's such a constitutionally weak office," he says, adding that the chief executive often must rely on the "illusion of leadership" to keep lawmakers on track.

"Nobody creates the illusion better than White."

Members of both parties agree that the governor has only a few weeks in the next special session to turn that illusion into real progress.

So does White.

"The Senate is going to have to give some ground, and so is the House, but that's the process of negotiation and I think that it will eventually work," he says. "Our constitutional duty and our first responsibility is to balance the budget, and that's exactly what we must do. There's disagreement on how do to that, but it's no longer a question of politics, it's a question of arithmetic."

Chronology of Events Leading to Special Session 1986

JULY 24: Bullock increases deficit to $3.5 billion. Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby calls for $650 million in budget cuts, broad tax increases.

AUG. 5: House Speaker Gib Lewis calls for $2.1 billion in cuts, bookeeping maneuvers.

AUG. 6: Special Session convenes; White calls for $1.4 billion in cuts, temporary sales tax increase.

AUG. 15: House passes $739.4 million in budget cuts.

AUG. 26: Senate approves $418 million in spending reductions.

AUG. 27: House-Senate conference commitee begins budget negotiations.

TURKEY

In Washington, State Department spokesman Bruce Ammerman said seven rabbis were reported among the dead and that Istanbul's chief rabbi, David Asseo, reportedly was wounded.

But in a call to Asseo's residence late Saturday night, a family member said the rabbi was safe and home asleep. Other sources said he was not at the synagogue during the attack.

Ammerman said U.S. authorities in Turkey were trying to determine if any Americans were killed or wounded.

Police sources said all the dead worshipers were Turkish men, and Akbulut said most were elderly. However, Anatolia said the dead included an unidentified visiting rabbi from Israel.

Akbulut told The Associated Press police found 102 spent cartridges on the floor of the Neve Shalom Synagogue. He said the assailants entered at about 9:20 a.m., secured the main door, then stood about 10 yards apart and began firing submachine guns into the congregation.

One of the injured reported the terrorists shouted in Arabic as they fired, Akbulut said.

He said the terrorists were killed by three hand grenades they detonated at close range. The legs and lower trunk of one terrorist were blown off by the explosion, he added.

Turkish officials had said earlier only four worshipers in the main prayer room, where the attack occurred, escaped uninjured. But there were five or six women in an upper balcony in the building and they also fled unharmed, one of the women said.

"We heard a deafening sound. Everybody was panicked and started running out of the building," Refka Termin, 47, told The Associated Press. "As we left the building we saw bodies of three or four men on the ground covered with their prayer shawls."

In Jerusalem, Prime Minister Shimon Peres said in an appearance on Israeli television, "Old people in the midst of their prayers, innocent people, were shot in cold blood ... this time we have to take notice."

There were three conflicting claims of responsibility — on behalf of a Shiite Moslem group and two previously unknown groups, one calling itself Palestinian and the other saying it was Arab. Istanbul police said only that the attackers were Arabs. Akbulut said they were in their 20s.

Istanbul's deputy police chief, Mehmet Agar, told AP earlier that the terrorists turned to flee after shooting the worshipers, but ran back into the synagogue when confronted by police alerted by the sound of gunfire.

"Then a loud explosion was heard," said one police official, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Ozer said the explosives touched off a fire that was quickly extinguished. Police said seven unexploded grenades were found at the scene.

The Athens News Agency, in a dispatch from Istanbul, said the gunmen entered the synagogue posing as photographers.

Victims' bodies were borne away in pine coffins to a hospital for identification. Police said 12 victims were identified but released no names or nationalities.

The Turkish government issued a statement saying, "Reports from cities throughout Turkey confirmed that this cowardly attack on Jewish Turks has saddened and infuriated the whole Turkish nation."

PAKISTAN

Airline officials and sources here estimated about 80 Americans were aboard the flight that originated in Bombay, India, and was headed for New York by way of Frankfurt, West Germany.

In New York, a Pan Am spokesman, James Arey, said the airline's count showed 44 Americans were aboard. But he said that list was not definitive, and the State Department would have to make the final determinatioin based on the people holding valid U.S. passports.

A C-141 medical evacuation plane was en route to West Germany after picking up 17 injured in Karachi, including six Americans, six Britons, three West Germans, an Italian and an Austrian, U.S. diplomats at the airport said. The wounded will be treated at U.S. military hospitals in West Germany.

Pan American World Airways sent a special plane to Karachi to pick up passengers who want to continue on to Frankfurt and then New York, airline officials said. The plane was scheduled to leave Karachi on Sunday.

Indian government officials said a special Indian government plane was also heading for Karachi to take the Indian citizens to Bombay.

At Bombay's Sahar International Airport, about 50 relatives and friends of the Indian passengers in Karachi gathered at the Pan Am counter and criticized the U.S. airline, saying it had provided no information on the fate of the Indians. Many chanted the slogan, "Shame on Pan Am!"

One of the protesters identified himself as Chhotulal Patel, and he said he was the uncle of an American, Rajesh Kumar of Huntington Beach, Calif., who was shot and his body tossed onto the tarmac shortly after the gunmen seized the plane.

"My nephew's 82-year-old grandmother and 46-year-old mother are stranded in Karach," Patel said. "I don't know how they are."

R. C. Chowdhary, Pan Am's passenger services manager, told the angry group that the hijackers had taken the passengers' passports and other documents and added: "Pakistan is a different country. There are certin formalities that take time." The Indians were told that the flight bringing their relatives and friends to Bombay was expected around 12:30 p.m. Sunday.

In Mexico City, the Foreign minister said five Mexicans were passengers on the hijacked jet, and one was killed and one was wounded. It did not identify them.

A police official, who insisted on anonymity, said 87 Arab students were rounded up in Karachi for questioning .

DAM

"I wasn't employed by the city then, so I'm not in a position to comment," Boyd said.

About 70 homes were flooded when the dam, located on Big Spring's south side, broke on the evening of Aug. 30.

A preliminary American Red Cross report said 15 of the homes were heavily damaged. No dollar estimate has yet been made.

Mary Guiterrez, 44, was killed when flood waters consumed the truck in which she, her husband and child were riding in.

Boyd said he would not comment on the question of whether or not Ms. Guiterrez' death was a result of the Commanche Lake dam breaking.

"From what we understand, the family drove into a low-water crossing," Warren Samuelson, head of the Texas Water Commission's dam safety unit, told the Dallas Morning News.

"The city says it was not related to the dam failure and there's no evidence to show that it was or was not," he said.

The Texas Water Commission, the agency responsible for regulating larger dams, said Comanche Lake Dam is one of 210 dams in the state listed as "unsafe-high hazard".

The Morning News said that the dam was never repaired. The newspaper's review of state records in July showed that because of a limited budget and personnel, the state almost always moved slowly in enforcing its dam regulations.

The News reported that of the 210 "unsafe" dams, none had been brought up to state standards and repair work was planned on only 18, despite the fact that some were declared unsafe as early as 1977.

BANK

At about the same time, a group of local investors bought control of the bank from the previous investors.

In November 1984, United moved to its present downtown headquarters at Marienfeld & Texas Streets. The bank now has 278 local investors, Lovett said.

The FDIC's Olcheski was confident that the required final court approval needed before the assumption is complete would be gained before Monday morning.

Merritt declined comment on whether other bidders were involved in purchase negotiations saying only, "All I know is that they talked to us last and longest." He also noted that questions concerning ownership of the bank building were among the stumbling blocks to negotiations.

Merritt apologized to all former Western customers for the stress and inconvenience resulting from the lengthy purchase talks.

Western's failure was the 16th in Texas in 1986, the highest number ever in one state in a single year, eclipsing both Oklahoma and Nebraska, where 13 banks failed last year. The Western closing brings the national total for the year to 99.

Hunts claim Barefoot Sanders will be biased toward case

By SUSAN ASCHOFF

DALLAS (AP) — U.S. District Judge Barefoot Sanders' refusal to remove himself from cases involving the billionaire Hunt brothers of Texas is based on legal precedent, but past politics shadow the proceedings.

Attorneys for William Herbert, Nelson Bunker and Lamar Hunt had asked Sanders to remove himself after the judge ordered them to transfer bankruptcy cases from New Orleans to Dallas by Sept. 11.

The Hunts are battling 23 banks trying to collect $1.5 billion in defaulted loans to two Hunt-owned energy companies, and have sued the banks for $14 billion claiming the banks conspired to run two of their companies out of business.

The Hunts claimed Sanders has a conflict of interest because he owns stock in Allied Bancshares Inc., of Houston, and has "philosophical differences" with the Hunt brothers that bar him from being impartial.

But in his denial Friday, Sanders attacked the Hunts on both counts.

Allied Bancshares is not involved in the case, and Sanders revealed his financial interest in the company in annual disclosure statements, the judge said in his refusal to remove himself.

And if the judge and plaintiffs have had "political or philosophical differences, it is a matter of no consequence in this or any other court," he wrote.

"The court declines to adopt a rule that a 'liberal' client or lawyer can disqualify a 'conservative' judge, or vice versa, or that a Republican client or lawyer can disqualify a Democratic-appointed judge, or vice versa. One sure consequence of such a doctrine would be chaos...," the denial said.

Sanders is an often-controversial, liberal Democrat who served three terms in the Texas Legislature and lost a close race to Republican Bruce Alger for Congress in 1968.

STATE

In 1960, he spearheaded the Democratic presidential campaign in Dallas County, and was appointed by President John F. Kennedy to be U.S. attorney for the Northern District of Texas.

He later served as an assistant U.S. attorney general and legislative counsel to President Lyndon B. Johnson. President Jimmy Carter appointed him to the federal judgeship.

By contrast, the Hunts have been described as ultra — and often reactionary — conservatives.

Their late father, H.L. Hunt, who parlayed a $5,000 inheritance into one of the world's great oil fortunes, did not run for political office but zealously campaigned for his own political ideas.

He was a devoted admirer of the late Sen. Joseph McCarthy, and promoted his ideas through radio programs and a newspaper column, "Hunt for Truth," damned by liberals and praised by conservatives.

On Thursday, Hunt spokesman Joe Grillo said Sanders "having stock in any bank, particularly a Texas bank, is improper and leaves some doubt about the judge's impartiality."

The Hunts also said it was widely known that they opposed Sanders in his congressional campaign.

"We think Judge Sanders' decision is outrageous," said Keith Burton, a Hunt spokesman, late Friday.

Sanders' 1986 personal financial disclosure form shows an investment in Allied of between $100,000 and $250,000 — his single largest stockholding interest. The denial issued Friday lists 6,723 shares of Allied Bancshares out of 41,445,000 shares outstanding.

Sanders said he disqualifies himself from any cases involving Allied Bancshares.

Sanders Thursday ordered the Hunts' Placid Oil Co., one subsidiary and the William Herbert Hunt personal estate trust to file a motion to transfer bankruptcy petitions to U.S. Bankruptcy Court in Dallas.

Placid Oil, the Hunt trust and Placid Building & Service Co., which owns 27 percent of a downtown Dallas office tower, filed petitions under Chapter 11 of the U.S. Bankruptcy Code last Friday in New Orleans to stave off foreclosures on their property by the banks.

But banks seeking payment of the defaulted loans said the bankruptcies could be handled more efficiently in Dallas.

In their $14 billion lawsuit against the 23 banks, the Hunt companies claim a conspiracy by the lenders to corner the offshore drilling market because they refused to refinance loans to the Hunt businesses.

Stephen Gordon, one of the lawyers representing the three Hunts, said an appeal of Sanders' transfer order would be filed with the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans — a court which may also be asked to consider whether Sanders should remain seated as judge in the cases, Burton said.

Canyons, cliffs abundant clues to ancient man

By MIKE COCHRAN

LANGTRY (AP) — "It's warm enough for rattlesnakes," observed Jack Skiles as he headed down the steep slopes of Eagle Nest Canyon toward a rendezvous with prehistoric Texas.

"Better keep an eye out for them," he added, unnecessarily.

On the canyon floor, a rock wren flitted between blooming oak and buckeye trees, scolding the intruders as they descended into this strangely quiet and vaguely mysterious crevice.

"You just seem to drop off into another world when you enter this canyon," said Skiles, who grew up exploring the caves and shelters of the Indians that lived in this rocky, rugged region of Southwest Texas perhaps 10,000 years ago.

Skiles, 55, is manager of the Judge Roy Bean Visitor Center in Langtry and his home and the museum are little more than a stone's throw from a canyon named for an eagle's nest built into a cliffside 106 years ago.

It is here, in the canyons and cliffs along the Rio Grande River, that archaeologists have found a mother lode of rock art and other clues to the lifestyle of prehistoric man.

Skiles said the ancient paintings, or pictographs, are scattered across Texas from the Hueco Tanks near El Paso to the Panhandle, to Paint Rock east of San Angelo and through the Hill Country.

But an abundance of rock art in Texas lies within a 50-mile radius of the mouth of the Pecos River, up and down the Rio Grande and along the Devils River and its tributaries.

Engineers dammed the Rio Grande in 1968 to create Amistad Reservoir, obliterating many pictograph sites, but local historians say those that remain contain distinctive rock art ranging from single paintings to panels of paintings hundreds of feet long.

Just who painted it and why and what it all means are among the questions researchers hope someday to answer.

"Archeologists regard the area as one of the major pictograph regions of the world," said Skiles, smiling as a perspiring companion struggled to avoid live cactus and phantom rattlers.

Besides Eagle Nest Canyon and a popular but remote excavation site called Baker Cave, this archeological wonderland also includes the splendid Seminole Canyon State Historical Park near Comstock.

The 2,173-acre park features a lively little museum, guided tours to major cliff paintings and a hiking trail to a scenic point overlooking Panther Cave on the northern bluff of Seminole Canyon.

From the overlook, visitors can glance down and see the huge red panther which gave the cave its name or gaze out across the Rio Grande arm of Lake Amistad into Mexico.

And then there's Seminole Sink, which contains the bones of the oldest burial population yet discovered in Texas.

The November issue of Texas Parks and Wildlife magazine tells how 8,000 years ago a small band of people carried their dead to a final resting place in a cavern 20 feet below the ground.

Discovered by archaeologists in 1984, the ancient burial ground contained the remains of 21 men, women and children lying beneath a rock pile caused by a partial collapse of the vaulted ceiling.

Why the sinkhole fell into disuse is unknown, but the burial site holds more than a bit of intrigue.

"Atop the pile were the remains of a middle-aged man who was cremated some 400 years ago, bundled into a pouch and dropped down the shaft," wrote Dr. Solveig Turpin, director of the Texas Archaeological Survey.

"His remains were covered by only a few rocks, some dirt, burned bone, charcoal and stained soil."

Eagle Nest, Baker Cave and Seminole Canyon are considered the most significant of the many Lower Pecos River archaeological sites in part because they've been studied and written about more than others.

At Baker Cave, a rock shelter on a private ranch in Val Verde County, a research team led by Dr. Thomas Hester uncovered what the San Antonio Express-News called an "archaeological goldmine."

Hester, director of the University of Texas at San Antonio's Center for Archeological Research, described Baker Cave as one of the best preserved rock shelters in America, explaining:

"The artifacts have been protected by the dry southwest Texas weather and by the layers of limestone dust which fell from the shelter roof over thousands of years."

The research team found charcoal and a dartpoint to help verify an apparent 7000 B.C. occupation and also uncovered part of a basket woven between 4500 and 3000 B.C.

Baker Cave also yielded sandals, mats, knots, cords and other basketry made from local desert plants along with flint arifacts and waste chips, animal and fish bones, nuts and seeds.

Hester said the rock shelter contained evidence of as many as 20 occupations.

"The top layers indicate that the most recent inhabitation was around 1400 A.D., about the time the bow and arrow was introduced into the south and southwest Texas area," he said.

As a noontime sun beat down on Eagle Nest Canyon, Jack Skiles and his companion trudged along a dry creek bed and into a rock cavern which Skiles called the "ice box."

"It can be hot as hell out there but so cool in here," he explained. "Indians once came here for water, before the sheep and goats ate all the grass. Now there's nothing to hold the water."

On down the canyon, Skiles pointed out an excavation site at the foot of a bluff where University of Texas archaeologists uncovered layers of burned bison bones more than 20 years ago.

He said the Indians drove great herds of buffalo over the canyon bluffs and sent them plunging onto the rocks below, butchering the animals where they fell.

The remains of an estimated 800 animals are buried in the excavation site and range from ancient buffalo to camels and a "horse no larger than a dog," Skiles said.

"Can you imagine the feast they had when they got a bunch of buffalo?" he wondered. "They were more accustomed to eating birds."

Actually, they ate just about anything, according to a stomach analysis performed on the body of an Indian recovered by Skiles parents from an ancient burial site.

"They found lots of grasshoppers, prickly pear seed, a white footed mouse and the vertebra of a tiny snake," Skiles said with a grin.

Cotton ginning nets 'harvest of frustrations'

By ROBERTA SABO

SAN BENITO (AP) — The ginning should have been a celebration of a year's labor, but for cotton farmer Doug Hansen it just concluded a harvest of frustrations.

"This is the most disappointing season that I have ever seen," Hansen said.

"It is a crop that, this year, I did not enjoy growing," he said. "It makes me sick."

He grew up on the family cotton farm that his father founded outside San Benito in the 1930s. He took charge of the operation in 1968 after he graduated from college.

Now the earnings from the 280 acres of cotton and some additional acreage of grain sorghum are Hansen's livelihood. He supports his wife and three daughters with that income.

After last year's bumper crop, he and other Valley cotton farmers, expected a similar yield when they planted in late February and early March. Their cotton is the first harvested in the nation and an important source of Valley income.

"It just doesn't seem like it is quite 'there. Everybody I've talked to is saying the same thing. It's just 'not all there. ...The crops this year — with the prices so cheap — you need everything just to break even."

— Doug Hansen

But as the season progressed, Hansen gradually saw his hopes for a good yield uprooted by a combination of a very late rainfall and severe boll weevil problems.

Hansen is one of a limited number of Valley farmers who irrigates his cotton. That water can be the key to a successful crop during an extremely dry season, but this year it worked against him.

"The rains," he said, "came at the wrong time — just after I irrigated my cotton."

The combination of irrigation water plus the rains stunted the crucial early growth of the plants.

Then the boll weevils attacked, causing Hansen and other farmers to repeatedly apply expensive insecticide to kill the pests.

By early summer Hansen knew his crop would not match last year's high yield of two bales per acre. But when he began defoliation this month, he expected to reach 1½ bales an acre.

In the defoliation, farmers spray the plant with a chemical that kills the leaves. The process is necessary because the green leaves would stain the cotton as it is picked mechanically.

The cotton farmers call defoliation "burning," because the leaves turn brown, as if the plant had been burned.

As Hansen progressed from the defoliation to the harvgst, he realized that the yield was going to be even worse than he expected. It did not even reach one bale per acre.

"It just doesn't seem like it is quite 'there," he said. "Everybody I've talked to is saying the same thing. It's just 'not all there."

With the combination of the low yield and the depressed price of cotton, Hansen now is afraid he will harvest at a loss.

"The crops this year — with the prices so cheap — you need everything just to break even," he said.

After the cotton is picked, it is formed into modules, a compressed unit of cotton, or loaded into trucks and taken to the cotton gins.

During the peak of the cotton season, the gins run 24 hours a day, shutting down only for maintenance. The Brownsville Cooperative Gin has the capacity of 17 bales per hour.

The dusty and noisy ginning process cleans and dries the cotton. The seeds then are separated from the lint, which is formed into bales, most weighing nearly 500 pounds.

The bales usually are sent to the Port of Brownsville, where they await shipment to their buyer, or they are stored in warehouses for the government loan progrm. The seeds are turned into cotton seed oil at a mill in Harlingen.

For Hansen, the ginning is the end to a frustrating season.

"I just will be relieved to get it all over with," Hansen said.

Dallas Times Herald sale final

DALLAS (AP) — Los Angeles-based Times Mirror Co. has completed the sale of the Dallas Times Herald to MediaNews Group in a $110 million transaction, officials said.

As the sale was finalized Friday, C. David Burgin formally succeeded Shelby Coffey III as senior vice president and editor of the Times Herald.

"We will return to our roots and recapture our core market," said MediaNews chief William Dean Singleton. "At the same time, we intend to adhere to the journalistic standards that have made the Herald one of the most honored newspapers in the nation."

Confirmed encephalitis cases now number eight

HOUSTON (AP) — Two more cases of St. Louis encephalitis have been confirmed in Harris County, one of which led to the death of a 69-year-old woman, health officials said.

The two bring the total to eight confirmed cases and three suspected cases — all in the Baytown and McNair areas, health officials said. Of those cases, four people remain hospitalized.

Linda Forys, a spokeswoman for the county health department, said the 69-year-old woman lived in the McNair area northwest of Baytown and died Aug. 26, of an apparent stroke.

Ms. Forys was unsure whether the woman's cause of death would be listed as a stroke or encephalitis.

Culex mosquitoes carry the St. Louis encephalitis virus. Since July 15, 78 pools of mosquitoes in the county have tested positive for the virus. Most of the pools were in Baytown, but some were also in the Houston area.

This is the first outbreak of St. Louis encephalitis since 1982, when two deaths were reported among seven confirmed and one suspected case. In 1964, Houston was hit by an encephalitis epidemic that claimed 32 lives and 712 confirmed or suspected cases.

Symptoms include fever, headache, nausea, stiff neck, change in mental function — including sleepiness — and convulsions.

A patient is considered a suspected victim of St. Louis encephalitis after one blood test with a positive response. That case is confirmed after a second test taken later demonstrates a similar positive response.

Robert Bartnett, director of Harris County Mosquito Control, said the public should take precautions, particularly during the early evening when the mosquitoes that carry the disease are most likely to emerge.

Houston health officials also have reported their first suspected case of sleeping sickness in a 23-year-old man from Sharpstown, a Houston suburb. The man became ill with fever and drowsiness and remained in the hospital, said Dr. Gordon Reeve, chief epidemiologist with the Houston health department.

"He's had a really rough time of it. His physician says he's recovering, but he still has a way to go," Reeve said. "That's a reminder that it can be a very serious illness."

STATE in brief

Friends of mesquite tree to show its economic value

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Friends of the lowly mesquite tree plan a day-long meeting Sept. 12 to demonstrate how products from the tree can contribute to the Texas economy.

Evan Quiros, Laredo, program chairman of Los Amigos del Mesquite, said there would be a wide-ranging series of lectures to show how the mesquite, once considered a liability, can be made an asset.

"Instead of spending money on control and eradication, the landowner should be getting an income from firewood, lumber, barbecue chips and chunks as well as veneer from some of the larger, longer and straighter trees," Quiros said.

PUC to snub project audit

AUSTIN (AP) — The Public Utility Commission has authorized cancellation of contracts with consultants to the four-state Palo Verde nuclear power project audit.

The commission said Friday it acted on the recommendation of its general counsel, Susie Holmes, who reported the Arizona Corporation Commission has reached agreement with Arizona Public Service Co. to allow an audit of the Palo Verde construction costs to resume without the involvement of Texas and New Mexico partners.

Truck mishap kills two

COMSTOCK (AP) — Two people were killed and one injured Friday when a dump truck hit a car and crashed into a liquor store, authorities said.

A Department of Public Safety spokesman identified the dead as Vergie McKaskle, age unknown, and Dorothy Robertson, 65, both of Comstock.

McKaskle was killed when the dump truck struck her car on U.S. 90 this morning. Peace Justice Mike Deaton pronounced her dead at the scene.

Robertson, who was sitting in a chair inside the store and residence, was pinned under the truck when it crashed through a wall. She died later at Val Verde hospital.

The truck's driver Alan F. Linden, of San Angelo, was not injured, the DPS spokesman said.

Deaths murder or suicide?

CARROLLTON (AP) — A mother and her two toddlers were found fatally shot Friday in what police believe was a murder-suicide.

The three were found by the woman's husband when he returned home from work about 5:30 p.m., said Carrollton Police Lt. Randy Posey.

Patricia Lasner, 29, and her daughters, Meredith Lasner, 2, and Heather Lasner, 10 months, had been shot with a .38-caliber handgun found at the house, Posey said.

Mrs. Lasner died en route to the hospital. The two girls were pronounced dead at the scene.

National Guard fears cuts

AUSTIN (AP) — The National Guard Association of Texas said Saturday that budget cuts of 30 percent proposed in the recent legislative special session would seriously harm the Texas National Guard's defense posture.

Authorities searching 'backers of terrorist act'

NATION

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — The Reagan administration admits it does not know who is responsible for the 17 hours of terror aboard the hijacked jet in Pakistan, but warns it is searching for the backers of the "cruel and sinister terrorist act."

"We will always be vigilant in our efforts to find out who commits acts of terrorism, to prevent them, and, if necessary, to follow up on them with appropriate means," White House deputy press secretary Larry Speakes said Friday.

In Washington, the government issued arrest warrants for three of the hijackers Friday night, charging them with murder, hostage taking, attempted air piracy and aircraft sabotage.

The warrants were issued against three men, none identified by name. The Justice Department identified them as being under the age of 30 and traveling on Iranian passports. The move was described as a protective measure and that U.S. officials expect Pakistan to prosecute the gunmen.

The State Department had said two hijackers were killed and three others were captured when Pakistani commandos stormed the jumbo jet at the Karachi airport. Early today the State Department said it now understood there were four hijackers in all, and that one was killed and three were in custody.

In Pakistan, however, Army generals said that there were four hijackers and that all were in custody. They offered no explanation for the confusion.

Conflicting claims made in Cyprus and Lebanon identified the Arab gunmen who took over the Pan Am jumbo jet as pro-Libyan or pro-Iranian. Libya's state-run Tripoli radio said the government of Moammar Gadhafi had no role in the hijacking, which resulted in at least 15 killed and 127 wounded.

"We are unable at this time to make any connection with any government or any other specific group that would be responsible for this," Speakes said. "We do know that Libya and Col. Gadhafi have the capability to cause terrorist acts on a worldwide basis, but we cannot connect this one at this time.

"Certainly we will try to determine if there is...any backing to these individuals but at the moment we cannot make it."

In recent days, the administration had warned that Gadhafi might be planning terrorist acts.

Asked if the United States had been consulted by Pakistan on the use of force, Speakes said, "The decisions made in this incident were those made by the Pakistani government."

About 400 people were on board the plane when the gunmen seized the Boeing 747, which was bound for New York via Frankfurt, West Germany.

At least 127 people were wounded when the hijackers sprayed the plane's interior with gunfire when the aircraft's lights went out and commandos entered the cabin. The State Department said at least 17 of the injured were Americans. One American was shot to death by the gunmen before the final assault.

State Department spokesman Diane Kelly said a U.S. military plane equipped for medical evacuations was arriving in Pakistan today to pick up injured Americans.

Reagan, nearing the end of a 23-day vacation, was kept abreast of hijacking developments by telephone calls and intelligence reports sent to his mountaintop ranch.

He kept to his normal schedule of horseback riding, chopping wood and ranch chores. In the evening, the Reagans' son, Ron, and his wife, Doria, were guests for dinner.

In a statement read by his press spokesman, the president called the hijacking "a cruel and sinister terrorist act" and he praised the government of Pakistan for acting "boldly and decisively to bring this nightmare to an end."

Reagan said that "the terrorists conducted a despicable and cowardly crime by threatening, assaulting and murdering innocent passengers of a crowded airliner — men and women, young and old — with machine guns and hand grenades."

"Nothing can justify such barbarism," Reagan added. "We can think of no punishment too severe for the criminals responsible.

"We are confident that those who perpetrated this brutal act will be brought to justice," the president said.

He also hailed Pan Am personnel "for their cool and professional competence in helping to ensure that this incident could be concluded where it started."

Another State Department spokesman, Charles Redman, said the hijackers were "Arabic-speaking, either Palestinian or Lebanese." He said the United States had no information on any possible Libyan connection.

"At the moment, we have reported the hijackers claimed to be members of the Arab Liberation Organization," he said. "That group was previously unknown to us."

He said that of 380 persons on the manifest of aircraft passengers, there were 65 American citizens, although Redman cautioned that not all of them may have been on the aircraft. However, Martin R. Shugrue Jr., vice chairman of Pan American World Airways, told a news conference in New York that 44 Americans actually boarded the plane.

Pete Martinez, a third State Department spokesman, confirmed the shooting and death of Rajesh Kumar, 29, a native of Kenya and naturalized American citizen who lived in Huntington Beach, Calif.

U.S. moves in response to the hijacking included the dispatch of the aircraft carrier Forrestal toward Cyprus, the intended destination of the hijackers before their takeover collapsed.

The government also assembled a team of investigators from the FBI and several other federal agencies to probe the hijacking, federal law enforcement sources said.

Redman said the Federal Aviation Administration had checked the Karachi airport as recently as three weeks ago under its regular program of monitoring anti-terrorist procedures at international airports and "rated it pretty high-level security."

Scientists say 'Classic Coke' not same drink

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Classic Coca-Cola is not necessarily "the real thing," two Houston scientists have found.

Although the manufacturer claims it to be a revival of the "old Coke" that was intended to be discontinued with introduction of "new Coke" in April 1985, and although the label bears the words "Original Formula," laboratory analyses showed that Classic Coke's formula is not always the same as that of "old Coke" tested by the scientists.

The difference is in the types of sugar used to sweeten the beverage. The tested samples of "old Coke" contained a mixture of three kinds of sugar — fructose and glucose, both of which are found in corn syrup, and sucrose, which is ordinary table sugar extracted from sugar cane or sugar beets.

The Classic Coke, however, was found to contain no sucrose but only the other two corn syrup sugars in higher concentrations to achieve the same total sugar level.

Each kind of sugar, although sweet, is chemically distinct and has its own flavor nuances. Some Coca-Cola fans have claimed that Classic Coke does not taste like the Coke they remembered of old. The laboratory analyses, reported in the British scientific journal Nature, suggest why.

The "old Coke," tested in 1983, was 3.3 percent fructose, 2.9 percent glucose and 4.7 percent sucrose.

Tested samples of Classic Coke were 6.3 percent fructose and 4.6 percent glucose, with no sucrose. The scientists called this "transition Coke."

New Coke uses the same two sugars but in concentrations about 10 percent higher. The Classic Coke appeared to be a reversion to the two-sugar formula of "transition Coke," which was on the market only a few months, and not a genuine revival of the earlier three-sugar formula.

The scientists were Leigh E. Wyborny and Ira L. Shannon of the Oral Disease Research Laboratory at the Houston Veterans Administration Medical Center and the University of Texas Dental Branch.

They made the analyses after noticing that "old Coke" was labeled as containing "sugar" whereas Classic Coke is said to contain "high fructose corn syrup and-or sucrose." The change puzzled them, and they wanted to know how the product had changed.

Ronald Coleman, a spokesman for the Coca-Cola Co. in Atlanta, said Coke's formula had indeed changed over the years and that the choice of sugars, once strictly specified by the company, is now largely left to local bottlers.

The choice is usually made on the basis of price since different sugars vary in cost in different parts of the country. The parent company, he explained, supplies only a syrup consisting of a "secret formula" mixture of flavoring and coloring agents while local bottlers supply the two main ingredients, carbonated water and sugar.

Film crew's explosion wounds five

CHICAGO (AP) — An explosion set off by a television crew went awry and toppled a wall onto customers in a crowded restaurant, injuring two diners and three other people, authorities said.

"They were filming an episode of 'Crime Story' on the sixth floor" of the apartment building that also houses the Medici on Surf restaurant, said a police officer who asked not to be identified. "They had some mock explosion that was not so simulated."

Fire Battalion Chief Jeremiah Dwyer said a small explosive charge had been set in the elevator shaft of the building and was "overcharged."

The force of the blast Friday night collapsed a 20-by-20-foot brick wall that divided the restaurant from the elevator shaft, said Gerard Santos, a waiter at the restaurant.

"I heard a very loud thing, like a shotgun," he said.

"People screamed and ran out the door," Santos said, adding the restaurant then closed.

"We were almost full to capacity," with about 90 people, he said.

Bartender Christopher Zerebny said four booths along the collapsed wall were blown into the middle of the restaurant.

"It was like Beirut or something," he said.

The two injured diners, Hugh and Karen McBride, bot 29, of Chicago, were listed in stable condition with head and shoulder injuries, said John Parrish, director of nursing at St. Joseph's Hospital.

Gusmano Cesaretti, 42, of Pasadena, Calif., a TV crew member, was in guarded condition with first- and second-degree burns on his face, hands and back, Parrish said. He was being transferred to the Cook County Hospital burn unit, Parrish said.

George Kohat, 42, of Chicago, was in stable condition with burns to the left hand and arm, said Janice Miller, nursing supervisor at Illinois Masonic Medical Center. He was to be transferred to the University of Chicago burn unit, she said. It was not clear if he was a member of the production crew.

A fifth person, Joe Nowaczyk, 47, suffered minor injuries to his head and leg while standing on the 13th floor of the building, Chicago Police Officer Charles Koppenhoefer said.

Some drugs can provide relief from symptoms of hay fever

BOSTON (AP) — About this time each year, the immune systems of millions of Americans run amok.

A cruel and ironic mix-up occurs. The internal chemistry that's supposed to keep them healthy makes them sick. They drip and sniffle. They wheeze. They sneeze. They itch in places that they can only fantasize about scratching.

They have what's sometimes known as allergic rhinitis or, quaintly, autumnal catarrh. To most everyone, however, it's hay fever, the seasonal allergy that's a far worse evil than its mildly whimsical name suggests.

As only these victims of nature can appreciate, the disease has the power to reduce strong men and women to eviscerated shells, sad shadows of their once peppy selves. In the grim, pollen-choked days of September, it may even set the mind to wondering whether life is really worth living.

There is no easy cure for hay fever. But over the past couple of years, three new kinds of drugs have been introduced that provide merciful escape from the symptoms. And unlike many of medicine's earlier answers to hay fever, these treatments are not worse than the disease.

In fact, Dr. Michael Kaliner, chief of the allergic diseases section of the National Institute of Allergic and Infectious Diseases, can now make a statement that he says would have been unrealistic just two years ago:

"People should not have to suffer. Proper use of the drugs we have today should control essentially everybody's symptoms. There's been dramatic improvement."

The new drugs are Seldane, a form of antihistamine, and two kinds of nose sprays — Nasalcrom and topical steroids. All of them, in different ways, take the punch out of histamine, the natural body secretion that gets out of whack during allergy time.

Hay fever is an allergy to pollen. It afflicts roughly 20 million Americans. In the central and eastern parts of the country, ragweed is the big offender in the late summer and fall. But people are also allergic to grass and trees in the spring and early summer. Virtually everywhere in the country, something blooms to make people sneeze.

However, hay fever certainly isn't the only allergy. An equal number are thought to be be allergic to cats, dust, insects, medicines, molds, foods or feathers, among lots of other things.

In all of these allergies, the body's immune system identifies some harmless intruder as a danger and opens war. The real internal troublemaker is an antibody called immunoglobulin E, or IgE. This antibody wasn't woven into the body's chemistry simply to make folks miserable. It's useful for warding off parasitic infections. But people with allergies have too much of it.

Here's what happens:

With lots of IgE floating around, thousands of the antibody molecules stick to the surface of mast cells. These cells line the skin, nose, throat and other parts of the body. Trouble starts when an allergen appears on the scene.

An allergen is anything that causes an allergy. For a hay fever sufferer, it might be a few innocuous grains of ragweed pollen. The allergen combines with the IgE. This reaction, in turn, stimulates the mast cells to manufacture a burst of chemicals. Among these secretions is histamine.

Campus officials 'hardly aware' of courtship violence

By KILEY ARMSTRONG

NEW YORK (AP) — Courtship violence — threats, slaps and beatings by boyfriends and girlfriends — affects at least two of 10 college students, and campus officials are hardly aware of the problem, researchers say.

"We didn't discover child abuse until the '60s, or spouse abuse until the '70s. But they've been there forever. Now, courtship abuse is the topic of the '80s," said Rosemary Bogal-Allbritten, associate professor of social work at Murray State University in Kentucky.

A national survey she recently completed with her husband, William Allbritten, the university's director of counseling, found that most college officials knew of only one to 10 incidents of such violence on their campuses.

But a study of students at Murray State three years ago indicates at least one-fifth of all college students experience some form of courtship violence, and 60 percent know of someone involved in a violent relationship.

The researchers, who made the more recent study public last week, contacted 1,922 campus housing directors, counseling and health center directors, student development vice presidents, security directors and chaplains. Abuse included threats, shoving, slapping, choking, attacks with weapons and sexual assault.

Using statistics, Sally Torrey, director of the Emporia State College Women's Resource Center in Kansas, has compiled this scenario of typical, advanced courtship violence:

It's a fairly serious relationship and one, or maybe both, experienced some physical abuse as a child.

"It's a curious thing. We've always thought that with spouse abuse, it was the marriage, finances, children that keep the woman in a battering relationship. And here we don't have those things, yet there's still a tendency for people to stay in the relationship."
— Sally Torrey

The man has a volatile temper, is jealous and has trouble adjusting to college demands. The woman is emotionally dependent upon him. They argue a lot, but she's more adept at put-downs. They've broken up several times.

After an episode of violence he's contrite. He promises it won't happen again. She wants to believe him. They feel closer in the aftermath of violence, at least until the next time.

Ms. Bogal-Allbritten estimated that 20 percent to 40 percent of couples remain together after violence.

"It's a curious thing," said Ms. Torrey. "We've always thought that with spouse abuse, it was the marriage, finances, children that keep the woman in a battering relationship. And here we don't have those things, yet there's still a tendency for people to stay in the relationship."

In a paper presented Wednesday to the American Sociological Association, Jan Stets and Maureen Pirog-Good of Indiana University said that most courtship violence occurs after the initial dating stage, when the partners, no longer on their best behavior, enter into a brutal power struggle.

Out of a random sample of 505 students who had a girlfriend or boyfriend within the past year, the researchers chose 126 males and 206 females to study. Nineteen percent of the women and 12 percent of the men said their partner had inflicted violence on them.

The problem is similar to spouse or child abuse in that it "cuts across all educational levels, classes, races," Ms. Bogal-Allbritten said in a telephone interview.

Like a battered wife, she said, the abused girlfriend "often has been told she's not a very worthwhile individual."

"We all want to be paid attention to. Often times we can't get positive attention from someone so we settle for negative attention. I'm spanking you because I love you' — kids hear that and transfer it to their adult relationships," she said.

Because acceptance of violence tends to begin in childhood, education should begin in grade school to "help the child understand that that isn't a normal relationship," and colleges should form links with spouse abuse shelters and update training for counselors, she said.

Reagan: 'Say no' to drugs

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — President Reagan urged young Americans Saturday to "say no" to drugs and said those that do will "be a hero in my book."

The president used his weekly five-minute radio address to appeal directly to young people:

"I'm going to ask you a favor: say no to drugs, and tell your friends to say no, too."

He also announced that Mrs. Reagan and Education Secretary William Bennett will issue handbooks later this month "for communities to use to rid schools of drugs."

He gave no details of what the handbook would contain, but said, "Just as surely as it will require the diligence of parents, teachers and principals, beating drugs in our schools will require the involvement of neighbors, community groups, law enforcement officials, churches, and synagogues."

"But most importantly," he added, "beating drugs will require the courage and conviction of our young people themselves."

Speaking from his mountaintop ranch, Reagan said that over the summer "we've witnessed a growing national awareness of the waste and tragedy that always lies just one step behind drug use."

He said there was "no better time than now, and no better place than our schools" for people to get involved in doing something about drugs.

Addressing young people, Reagan said, "I know that sometimes it takes all the courage you can muster to 'just say no,' to go with your conscience, what you know is right, rather than with the pack."

The president concluded by saying that "each time you say no to drugs, you'll be helping America beat one of the most serious challenges we've ever faced.

"And, believe me, you'll be a hero in my book."

Officials to decide if body is that of missing fisherman

GULLIVER, Mich. (AP) — Authorities will have to wait until next week to find out whether a body found on Lake Michigan's shoreline is that of a fisherman missing since his boat was in an accident with a Yugoslav freighter.

Charlevoix County Sheriff George T. Lasater said Friday a positive identification on the body found Thursday was not expected until at least Monday, but added it is assumed to be that of Edward Perkins.

Perkins, 47, of Naubinway disappeared after the 620-foot Jablanica either struck or swamped his 40-foot Razel Brothers fishing boat Aug. 20.

The bodies of two others aboard the fishing boat were recovered soon after the accident.

VWs costing more in '87

DETROIT (AP) — Volkswagen has announced an average 4.2 percent increase on its 1987 models over 1986.

The 1987 Golf will be called the Golf GL and have upgraded interior, headlights and wheels. It will cost $8,190, compared with $7,780 for the 1986 Golf, said the German automaker's Volkswagen United States subsidiary.

The four-door Jetta GL will cost $9,990, compared with $9,485 in 1986, while the Scirocco will cost $10,680 in the new model year, compared with $10,260.

The Golf models built in Pennsylvania are on their way to dealer showrooms and the import line should begin arriving by the end of the month, VW spokesman Jerry Amestoy said Friday.

Mine explosion kills one

The men were using the dynamite to extend a tunnel in the mine 20 miles north of here, Duschesne County Sheriff's Deputy Glade Hadden said today.

A U.S. Forest Service crew planned to defuse explosives remaining in the mine after Friday's blast, he said.

Hadden said Wallace Muir, 57, of Sandy, was dead on arrival at Duschesne County Hospital.

Doug Bailey, 44, of Midvale, suffered abrasions and puncture wounds on his back. He underwent surgery early today at St. Mark's Hospital in Salt Lake City and was listed in fair condition and stable, a nursing supervisor said.

Daniloff 'fears jailers preparing to try him for espionage'

MOSCOW (AP) — American reporter Nicholas Daniloff called his wife from prison Saturday and said he fears his KGB jailers are preparing to try him for espionage, despite a "fuzzy hint" that a prisoner exchange deal could be arranged, his wife said.

Daniloff, 52, was arrested Aug. 30 by the KGB secret police after a Soviet acquaintance handed him a package later found to contain secret maps and photographs. No formal charges have been filed.

Daniloff's wife, Ruth, has said her husband was framed. Daniloff himself has denied any spying.

Mrs. Daniloff received the call at the Moscow office of U.S. News & World Report news weekly magazine, for which Daniloff is a correspondent. She said her husband told her a KGB investigator was listening to the 15-minute conversation.

Gary Lee, a reporter for The Washington Post, also listened to the call through an extension in Daniloff's office.

Mrs. Daniloff said she was disturbed by the call.

"I didn't know who he was really talking to, whether he was talking to me, whether he was talking to the investigator sitting next to him, or whether he was talking to the people who were listening in," she said.

Lee said Daniloff sounded like he was under strain and focused on what he believes is an impending trial. He quoted Daniloff as saying: "I probably sound worried. I am worried."

WORLD

Mrs. Daniloff said she mentioned a plan reportedly offered to the Soviets.

U.S. officials in Washington, speaking on condition of anonymity, have said a proposal was made through diplomatic channels to release Daniloff.

In exchange, Gennady Zakharov would be released to the Soviet ambassador in Washington who would guarantee that he show up for his trial. Zakharov, a United Nations employee from the Soviet Union, is jailed in the United States on espionage charges.

"He (Daniloff) said he had picked up a very fuzzy hint of it," Mrs. Daniloff said. "I don't think he took much notice of it. ...Their main line is this will end in a trial and sentence."

Mrs. Daniloff has said that Soviet authorities framed her husband in retaliation for the Aug. 23 arrest of Zakharov.

Foreign Ministry spokesman Gennady Gerasimov has denied that Daniloff's case is related to Zakharov's.

Secretary of State George Shultz said in a speech at Harvard University Friday that a swap has been ruled out.

Lee said Daniloff seemed reluctant to talk about prison conditions.

"He wanted to impress that he was not being physically mistreated," Lee said. "He said the food was really bad. He had mashed potatoes and one herring for dinner last night."

Daniloff did not say how he spends his days, for how many hours he was interrogated, or what kind of talks he has had with the Soviet sharing his 8-by-10-foot cell at Moscow's Lefortovo Prison, Lee said.

Mrs. Daniloff said her husband told her he was in good health, but was seeking permission to receive medicine for chronic high blood pressure.

She said she spent most of the conversation conveying how his situation has been reported in the West.

He was grateful for a letter in which 29 U.S. reporters accredited in Moscow appealed to Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev for Daniloff's release, she said.

Dark silence preceded pandemonium

By G.G. LABELLE

KARACHI, Pakistan (AP) — When the lights went out in the Boeing 747, the only sound was the tiny, gurgling snoring of an infant. Minutes later, "utter pandemonium" broke out as the four terrorists tossed grenades at terrified passengers and opened fire in the darkened cabin.

"So many rounds were being fired that the sounds and the smells of the gunfire were overwhelming," said Jay Grandtier, 47, of Porter, Colo.

At least 15 people were killed and more than 120 injured. The 17-hour hijacking ended when Pakistani commandos seized control of the Pan Am airliner about half an hour after the shooting began.

The heavily armed hijackers, disguised as airport security workers, stormed the plane shortly before 6 a.m. Friday. The three-member crew escaped through a hatch in the cabin roof, forcing the hijackers to add a new crew to their list of demands.

The frightened passengers were told little of what was going on.

At about 8:30 a.m., the hijackers shot an American passenger and tossed him onto the tarmac. He died later at a hospital. Several passengers said they heard the gunfire, but didn't know what had happened.

The hijackers changed from being "very harsh" to being "very nice" as the ordeal went on, said David Jodice of Vienna, Va.

During the first six hours, the passengers were not allowed to eat, drink or go to the bathroom and were forbidden to talk, said Dr. Yashwant Bhandari of Short Hills, N.J.

Kurshid Anwar Mirza, director general of Pakistan's Civil Aviation Administration, said the hijackers' mood turned after a 7 p.m. deadline for getting a new crew passed.

The deadline was extended until 9 p.m., but shortly after 8 p.m. the hijackers refused to talk by radio to negotiators, he said.

Mirza issued conflicting statements about what was going on outside the plane just before shooting started at 9:50 p.m.

On Friday, he said Pakistani commandos anticipated the power failure inside the plane because fuel was running low and "started moving out" to prepare for action.

On Saturday, he said the commandos had not prepared for storming the aircraft when the shooting began.

He said he and other negotiators were approaching the plane to find out why the hijackers would not talk on the radio and why the plane's lights went out "earlier than we anticipated."

It is not known whether the hijackers started shooting after seeing something outside the plane or because they thought the power failure was a signal that the plane would be stormed.

Mohammed Amin, a Pakistani businessman and passenger, said he understood the Arabic spoken by the hijackers and when the plane's lights went out he heard one of the gunmen tell another: "The moment for the last jihad has arrived. If we are killed, we will all be martyrs." Jihad is the Arabic word for holy war.

Cynthia Buthello, a passenger from Bombay, India, where Pan AM Flight 73 originated, said the gunmen ordered passengers into the aisle as the plane went dark. "I think they said 'One, two, three' in their language and they just started shooting," she said.

Jodice said the hijackers "were shouting at us in pitch darkness and then we totally panicked when they threw a hand grenade at the passengers."

The grenade exploded with a "huge blast," he said, and screaming passengers, including dozens of women and children, struggled to hide or to open the emergency exits as the hijackers fired automatic weapons.

"The scene in the airplane and on the tarmac immediately afterward was utter pandemonium, women and children and everyone diving to the exits," said Grandtier.

He said there was more gunfire outside the plane. The runway lights had been turned off.

More than 20 ambulances arrived, and were quickly filled with wounded. One was loaded with 11 bleeding victims.

Grandtier said he was helping a man with a broken leg to an ambulance when a rescue worker tried to pick up the man's legs to carry him to safety. The victim screamed in agony.

On Saturday, the plane was still standing on the tarmac, about 200 yards from the terminal. There were bloodstains on one wing, and passengers' shoes, purses and other articles still lay by the emergency chute.

Israel suspects Libya, Soviets denounce Pan Am hijacking

Associated Press

The Soviet Union on Saturday denounced the deadly hijacking of a Pan Am jumbo jet in Pakistan, while Israel said it suspected Libyan involvement and Britan praised Pakistan for refusing to make concessions.

At least 15 people were killed and more than 120 were wounded Friday when four hijackers fired automatic weapons and hurled grenades at passengers inside the Boeing 747 sitting on the tarmac at the Karachi airport.

The hijackers, believed to be Palestinians, had demanded to be flown to Cyprus where they wanted to free jailed Palestinian terrorists. Pakistani commandos took control of the plane after 17 hours.

Libyan leader Col. Moammar Gadhafi has denied Libyan involvement in the hijacking.

The White House said it was "not prepared to link those involved in this incident with any specific group or government."

Tass, the official Soviet news agency, said, "A grave crime has been committed which involved casualties among innocent people."

"The Soviet Union most resolutely condemns this act of terrorism and calls upon all states for effective cooperation so as to eradicate fully this dangerous phenomenon," it said.

In the past, the Soviet Union has refrained from harsh condemnations of terrorist acts attributed to Libya or the Palestine Liberation Organization.

President Reagan has called the hijacking a "cruel and sinister terrorist act."

"Nothing can justify such barbarism," he said. "We can think of no punishment too severe for the criminals responsible. We are confident that those who perpetrated in this brutal act will be brought to justice."

Binyamin Netanyahu, the Israeli ambassador to the United States, said in an interview with Israel Radio that "there is no question about Libya's part in this deed." He did not elaborate.

Italian Defense Minister Giovanni Spadolini said he was "not prepared to accept Gadhafi's disclaimer," but he made no further comment about the Libyan leader.

British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher praised Pakistan for refusing to make concessions to the hijackers.

In a message to Pakistani President Gen. Mohammad Zia ul-Haq, she said: "We admire your resolution and determination in these very difficult circumstances."

Yugoslavia denounced the hijacking as an "insane terrorist act" and called for greater international cooperation in fighting terrorism, the official Tanjug news agency reported.

Gadhafi says he played no part in hijacking

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

KAMPALA, Uganda (DPA) — Libyan leader Moammar Gadhafi said Saturday that his country was not involved in the attempted hijacking of a Pan Am airliner in Pakistan that ended in bloodshed.

Arriving here Saturday, Gadhafi said that there was no justification for reporters to ask him if Libya had been involved in the incident because there was nothing to indicate that his country had ever been involved in a hijacking.

Gadhafi instead said the hijacking could have been the work of the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency or Israel's Mossad intelligence service. But he admitted that he had no evidence for such a claim.

"I could not say definitely," Gadhafi told reporters at Entebbe airport. "But if it is so, then it is a dangerous thing."

Earlier Saturday, the lIbyan news agency Jana called the hijacking in Karachi a plot by the CIA and Mossad "to pave the way for another aggression on Libya."

Jana's political commentary writer expressed surprise at news reports indicating that a caller to a Western news agency office on Cyprus Friday, speaking Arabic with a North African accent, claimed that the hijacking had been carried out by a previously unknown group calling itself the "Libyan Revolutionary Cells."

The writer stressed that Libya had "no connection whatsoever" to the hijacking and said, "We feel surprised at this manner to implicate Libya in this incident."

A statement signed by "pro-Libyan forces in Lebanon," a hitherto unknown group, warned Saturday that "any American-European aggression on Libya" will be avenged "and will cost many more lives than the losses of the Karachi hijack episode."

Chinese leader working for troop withdrawals in Cambodia

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

PEKING — Chinese leader Deng Xiaoping has offered to meet Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev if the Soviet Union is willing to take a "solid step" toward getting Vietnam to withdraw its troops from Cambodia, the official Chinese news agency said Saturday.

"If the Soviet Union can contribute to the withdrawal of Vietnamese troops from Kampuchea (Cambodia), this will remove the main obstacle in Sino-Soviet relations," Deng was quoted as saying.

"Once this problem is resolved, I will be ready to meet Gorbachev," said Deng, according to the account by the New China News Agency." ...I believe a meeting like this will be of much significance to the improvement of Sino-Soviet relations and the normalization of Sino-Soviet state relations."

Deng made his remarks in a Sept. 2 interview with CBS journalist Mike Wallace. The interview is to be broadcast on the CBS program "60 Minutes".

Diplomats said it was the first time that Deng has offered to meet with Gorbachev. Earlier this year, the Soviets had offered to meet with high-ranking Chinese officials, but the offer was rejected.

China and the Soviet Union split over ideological differences in the 1960s. The last formal top-level meeting between the two countries took place in 1969 when Soviet Premier Alexei Kosygin met Chinese Premier Chou En-lai in Peking.

The Chinese have cited three obstacles to talks. In addition to the Vietnamese occupation of Cambodia, the Chinese list the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan and the large Soviet troop presence along the Sino-Soviet border.

Diplomats cautioned that Deng had selected the most difficult of the three obstacles as a condition for a meeting with Gorbachev. The Soviet leader had not even mentioned the Cambodia issue in his major speech on Sino-Soviet relations July 28. The speech, delivered at Vladivostok, was a bid for a broad improvement in relations and ties with China and other countries in Asia and the Pacific.

Asian diplomats say that while the Soviets provide Vietnam with heavy financial and logistical support for their occupation of Cambodia, they are not necessarily in a position to pressure the Vietnamese. The Vietnamese have a long history of resisting foreign pressure.

Even if the Soviets wanted to, they might not be able to persuade the Vietnamese to get out of Cambodia, an Asian diplomat said.

Vietnam invaded Cambodia in 1979, toppling the brutal rule of the Khmer Rouge, led by Pol Pot. There are an estimated 160,000 to 180,000 Soviet-backed Vietnamese troops in Cambodia.

The Reagan administration supports Cambodia's non-communist resistance fighers. Last December Congress passed legislation allowing the administration to provide between $1.5 million and $5 million in overt military or economic aid to the non-communist Khmer People's Liberation Front and a smaller non-communist group headed by Cambodia's former head of state, Prince Norodom Sihanouk.

In his interview with CBS, Deng made no apparent concessions to the Soviets, aside from offering the summit meeting. It was not clear why Deng chose to make his offer through the American press.

In the interview, Deng suggested that the Soviets were still divided among themselves as to what their China policy should be. He said that soon after Gorbachev made his conciliatory-sounding speech at Vladivostok, a Soviet Foreign Ministry official made another speech that was different in tone.

"This shows that the Soviet authorities have to decide among themselves what China policies to pursue, and so we still have to wait and see," said Deng.

At Vladivostok, Gorbachev offered an apparently unilateral concession on a river dispute and said the Soviets were considering a withdrawal of a "substantial part" of their troops now stationed in Mongolia, a pro-Soviet country bordering China.

Gorbachev also said the Soviets would withdraw six regiments of Soviet troops from Afghanistan by the end of this year, but the Chinese have been unimpressed with that offer, since it amounts to only a small percentage of their total troop strength in that country.

On other issues, Deng said he hoped that President Reagan would make an effort to help bring about the reunification of Taiwan with mainland China. The U.S. position is that this is a matter for China and Taiwan to settle between themselves.

WORLD in brief

Watchmen find bomb, it explodes, killing one

LIMA, Peru (AP) — A bomb in a building in Lima's Miraflores district exploded Friday when two watchmen picked it up, killing one of the men and wounding the other, police reported.

They said the bomb was concealed in a package that was left in the sixth-floor hallway of a 10-story office and apartment building. The structure houses a movie theater on the ground level.

There was no immediate claim of responsibility, but a policeman at the scene said a banner and pamphlets of the pro-Cuba Tupac Amaru Revolutionary Movement were found in the area.

Miraflores is a residential and commercial district with elegant shops, nightspots and open-air cafes.

The Tupac Amaru group frequently bombs restaurants, department stores and other targets seen as symbols of the rich, but usually after closing hours to avoid bloodshed.

Dinosaur speed studied

BRISTOL, England (AP) — The 35-ton brontosaurus lumbered across the prehistoric world at about 8 mph, but his lighter-weight cousin triceratops could haul his 6-ton frame along almost twice as fast, a zoology professor believes.

R. McNeill Alexander, zoology professor at the University of Leeds, presented a paper on the varying gaits of dinosaurs to the annual meeting of the British Association for the Advancement of Science on Friday.

The horned triceratops was the runaway leader among the heavier dinosaurs, he told The Associated Press.

"It could practically gallop — up to 15 mph," he said.

"The brachiosaurus had an unknown track record, but as it weighed 50 tons it was unlikely to have shone," the professor said.

Alexander said that speeds were worked out from examinations of fossil footprints, bone structures, and the biomechanical processes involved.

He said that all known footprints of dinosaurs of 5 tons or more seemed to indicate walking speeds of 2 mph to 4 mph.

Gadhafi gathering allies

TRIPOLI, Libya (AP) — Col. Moammar Gadhafi told the Marxist presidents of Cuba and Nicaragua that Libya would stand by them "in encountering U.S. terrorism," Libya's JANA news agency reported.

JANA said Friday that Gadhafi met with Cuban President Fidel Castro and Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega on Thursday. It did not say where the meeting was, but the leaders attended the non-aligned movement summit in Zimbabwe.

JANA said Gadhafi announced that in the meeting "coordination has been achieved to safeguard the defense of our peoples."

"He states that he has stressed to our friends Castro and Ortega that they will not be alone and that the great Al Jamahiriya (Libya) together with all the peoples that struggle for freedom will be by their side in encountering U.S. terrorism," JANA said.

Aquino plans U.S. visit

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Several economic advisers will accompany President Corazon Aquino when she visits the United States this month, the presidential palace said today.

A palace news release said Mrs. Aquino will meet with presidents of the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank the day after her Sept. 17 visit with President Reagan.

Mrs. Aquino will leave Manila on Sept. 15 and visit San Francisco, Washington, Boston and New York before returning Sept. 23.

Her delegation will include Finance Minister Jaime Ongpin, Trade Minister Jose Concepcion, Central Bank Gov. Jose Fernandez, chief economic planner Solita Monsod and Agriculture Minister Ramon Mitra.

Mrs. Aquino will receive honorary degrees from Boston University and Fordham University, the St. Iganatius medal from Boston College and the Berkeley Medal from the University of California at Berkeley, Saguisag said.

TORNADO or THUNDERSTORM

WATCH

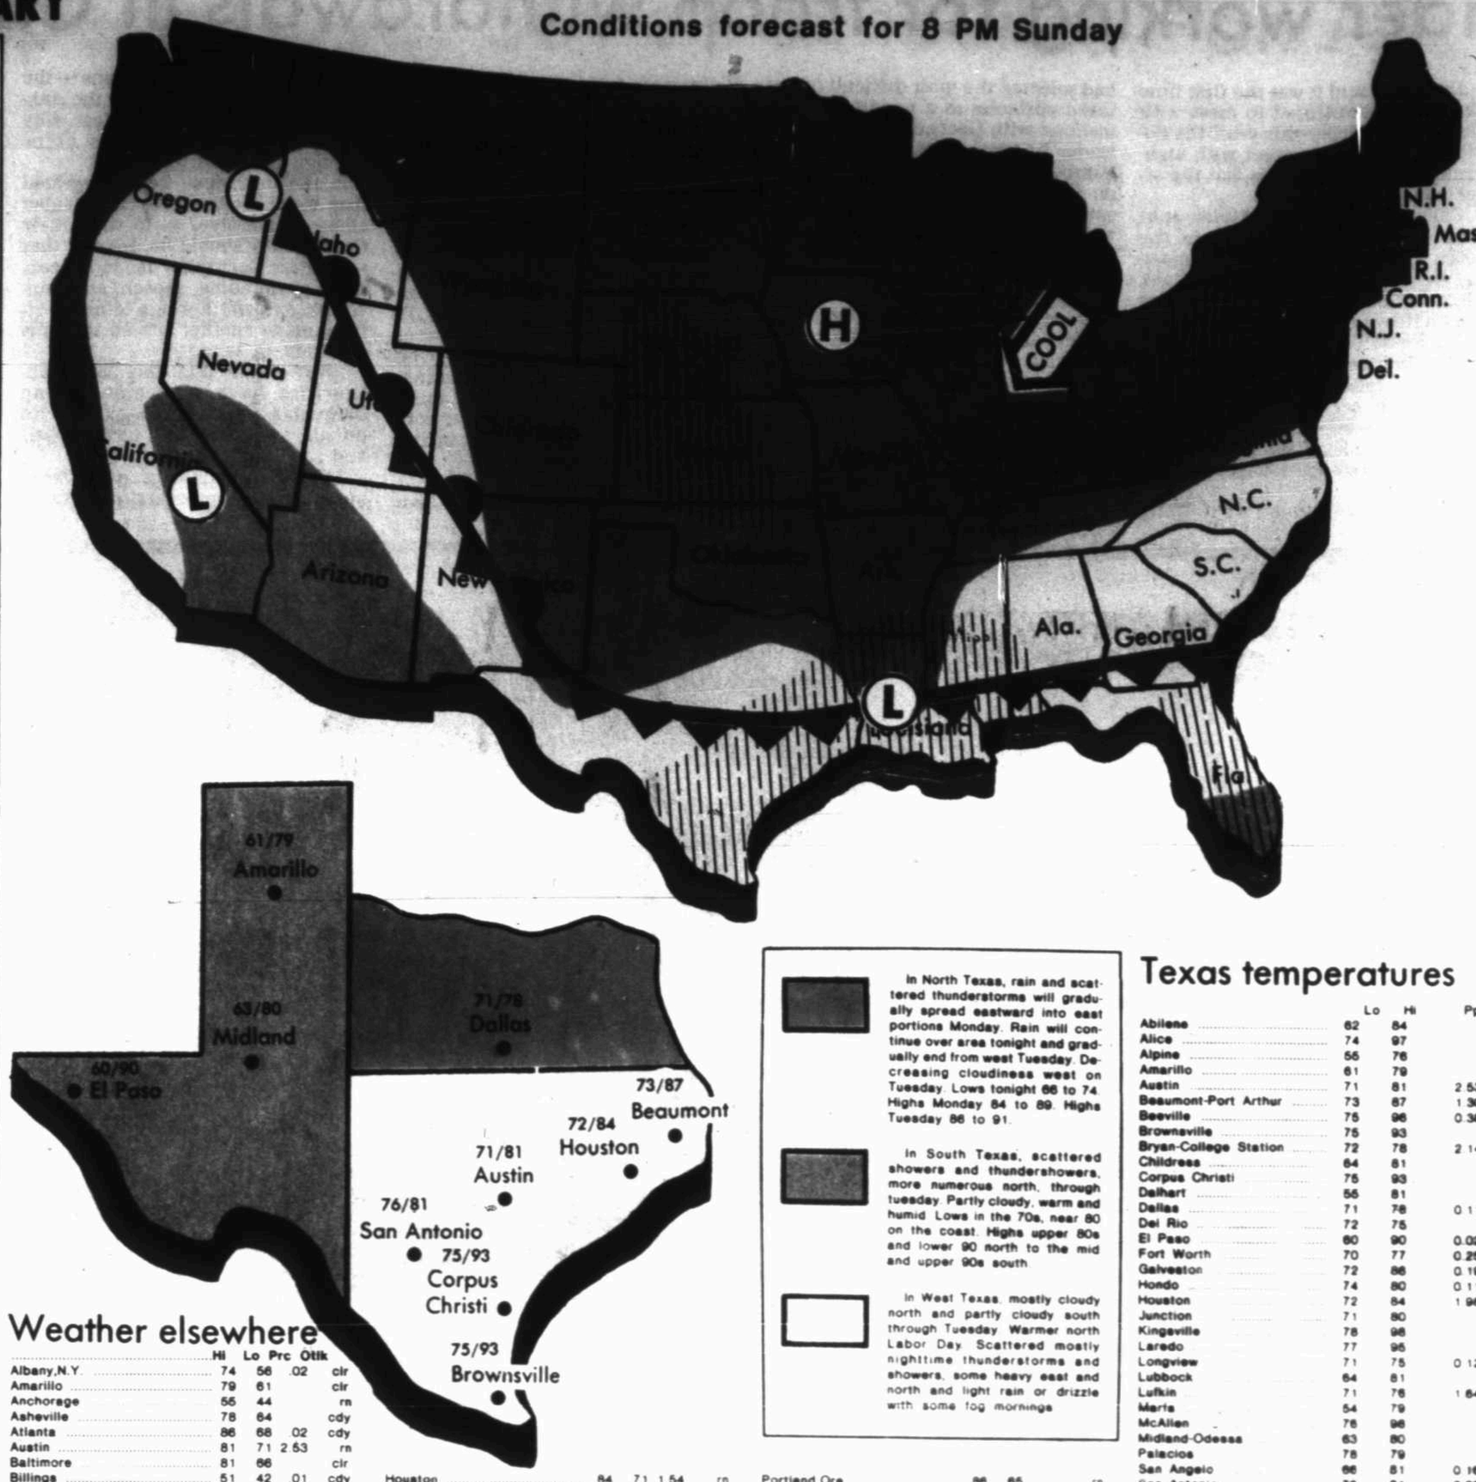
WARNING
(A tornado or severe thunderstorm already is in existence.)



In North Texas, rain and scattered thunderstorms will gradually spread eastward into east portions Monday. Rain will continue over area tonight and gradually end from west Tuesday. Decreasing cloudiness west on Tuesday. Lows tonight 66 to 74. Highs Monday 84 to 89. Highs Tuesday 86 to 91.

In South Texas, scattered showers and thundershowers, more numerous north, through tuesday. Partly cloudy, warm and humid. Lows in the 70s, near 80 on the coast. Highs upper 80s and lower 90 north to the mid and upper 90s south.

In West Texas, mostly cloudy north and partly cloudy south through Tuesday. Warmer north Labor Day. Scattered mostly nighttime thunderstorms and showers, some heavy east and north and light rain or drizzle with some fog mornings.

Fall-like days due

From Staff and Wire Reports

The National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport predicts fall-like weather is on the way.

Sunday should start out cloudy but clear up partially by noon.

The high should be in the mid 70s with winds from the northeast blowing in around 10-15 mph.

Sunday night should be just the reverse with partly cloudy skies turning cloudy by midnight.

STATE

Scattered showers and thunderstorms continued to drench several regions of the state Saturday, with the heaviest rains falling over East and south Central Texas.

A flash flood watch remained in effect Saturday night in Central, North and South Texas, according to the National Weather Service.

Otherwise, much of Texas was under a blanket of low clouds Saturday, although some sunshine was visible in the far west and northwest plains.

Late-afternoon temperatures were mainly in the 70s and 80s, with readings in the 90s confined to the deep south. The 3 p.m. state temperature extremes ranged from 70 degrees at Guadalupe Pass to 97 degrees at McAllen in the lower Valley.

The forecast for North Texas calls for showers and thunderstorms through Monday with highs in the 70s and 80s and lows Sunday in the 50s and 60s.

West Texas should be generally fair through Monday with widely scattered thunderstorms. Highs should range from around 70 in the extreme north to the lower 90s in the Big Bend valleys. Lows should be in the 60s and 70s.

South Texas should be mostly cloudy with scattered thunderstorms through Monday. Highs should be in the 80s and 90s, with lows mostly in the 70s.

NATION

A blast of cool air moved into the Great Plains, the Mississippi Valley and the Great Lakes, triggering frost and freeze warnings.

Rain fell over southern and northern Texas and from northern Louisiana to Oklahoma.

Lamesa fights to keep Santa Fe Railroad

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

LAMESA — Citizens here are struggling to keep their railroad.

Santa Fe Railroad — in the throes of a possible merger with the Southern Pacific system that would create the nation's third-largest rail system — wants out, claiming the line between Slaton and here is unprofitable.

This city of some 12,000 is about halfway between Midland and Lubbock.

Santa Fe has filed an abandonment with the Texas Railroad Commission, but has yet to submit it to the Interstate Commerce Commission, which must approve it.

But Lamesa officials — worried it will hamper their economy — hope the ICC never gets to rule in the case.

"We've got to keep our railroad," said Luke Nichols, executive vice-president of the Lamesa Area Chamber of Commerce.

"The important thing is that we make our case. It would just be a devastating blow to this area...people won't even talk to you if you don't have a railroad."

About 1,600 rail cars use the track annually, an average of 31 cars shipping about 2,300 tons per week.

Based on information from Lamesa's chamber, the track is vital to the cotton industry of Dawson County as more than 40 percent of the cotton ginned here is shipped by rail.

Also, without the rail, the city would no longer be able to maintain its large storage of grain, which is more than 31,000 tons.

Said Nichols: 'We will have a railroad."

"It is simply not making money," said Clyde Jeffus, Santa Fe's assistant general manager in Amarillo.

"Anytime you abandon a line, it is an economic decision. We haven't really gone into the revenue feature yet, (but) the abandonment has simply been filed.

Nichols said Santa Fe does not want to repair the Lamesa track, which he said would cost at least $480,000 and maybe as much as $1 million to fix.

"They've neglected that track for years," he said, adding the city is willing to work with Santa Fe.

"We think they want to go to a short line operation, to sell the line to someone else, but we want Santa Fe to keep it," Nichols said.

"We need to get them some sort of help on repair like federal grant money. We are willing to work with them and will meet with them in October."

Nichols said he and other Lamesa business owners met Friday with a member of the Railroad Commission and Don Beyette, a representative of Chickasha Oil, one of the rail's heavy users.

County's pared-down budget will prevent tax hike

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Midland County's 1987 proposed budget — in order to quell a tax hike — is 10 percent below the county's 1986 budget.

It reflects a drop in property values, an unchanged tax rate of 19.96 cents per $100 valuation, and a paring of proposed departmental expenditures.

The proposed budget at $13 million is more than $1 million below the 1986 budget of $14.28 million.

"I was just real happy we were able to go ahead and stay within our (projected) income," said Commissioner Win Brown.

The commissioners eliminated the shortfall by cutting down proposed expenditures by $800,000 and projecting $200,000 in increased revenues.

The commissioners will hold a public hearing on the proposed budget and effective tax rate at 10:30 a.m. Monday in the Commissioners' Courtroom on the second floor of the Midland County Courthouse.

"The bottom line for the taxpayer is that he will have about a 10 percent cut in his county taxes," Brown said. There will be some variations."

"They (taxpayers) are hurting," Brown said. "We are hurting. All of us are hurting. A lot of people out there are in dire straits and are really hurting."

THE MIDLAND ECONOMY largely is based on the petroleum industry. And the slump in the price of oil effected a drop in property values and put a damper on spendable income.

"In the Permian Basin, the price of oil determines the property valuations," said County Auditor Floyd Jarnagin. "We've just got an oil economy. If the price is depressed, that directly affects our revenue."

The 1987 budget is based on the collection of 95 percent of taxes and the levying of fines and fees.

County Tax Assessor-Collector Frances Shuffield will send out tax notices in October.

"The county probably has been more conservative and penny-pinching than any of the other taxing entities (in Midland County)," Brown said.

"Not once, we just went over and over and re-considered" the budget in making cuts.

Brown said that if the "economy stays like it is now, more than likely there will be another devaluation in property values and other (budgetary) cuts to meet the income" without raising county taxes.

The countywide tax base has dropped about 11 percent — from $5.123 billion to $4.54 billion.

"We (commissioners) have done our best to pare expenses and to balance the budget," said Commissioner Durward Wright.

"We will spend a tad less (about $50,000) than we take in."

WRIGHT SAID taxpayers will receive a reduction in actual tax dollars paid and that will vary in accordance with appraised values" set by the Midland Central Appraisal District. It is a rather sizeable tax reduction."

"We have effected a net tax reduction of approximately 10 percent," Wright said Thursday.

Monday to emphasize illiteracy problems

By JANE DEES
Staff Writer

The Bus

I go to the bus stop.
This is the bus stop.
I stop at the bus stop.
This is my bus.

The problem lies in the fact that a portion of the illiterate adult population in Midland County — 15 percent of the total adult population — can't.

"Most illiterates can read up to a second- or third-grade level, but we've had some come in who most definitely could not read "The Bus" passage," said Janice Langdale, executive director of the Midland's Need to Read program.

September has been earmarked as "National Literacy Month" with Monday being "National Literacy Day."

The day is geared toward highlighting the adult illiteracy problem in the nation and hopefully getting those who find themselves in that position motivated to do something about it, Ms. Langdale said.

"The focus of the day is to alert people to the fact there is a real problem with adult illiteracy. There is help for them.

"You can't be a good citizen without being literate," Ms. Langdale said.

"The focus of (National Literacy Day) is to alert people to the fact there is a real problem with adult illiteracy. There is help for them. "You can't be a good citizen without being literate."

— Janice Langdale, executive director, Midland's Need to Read

Ms. Langdale said functional illiteracy is the inability to read, comprehend, write and compute at a level which enables one to meet requirements of adult living.

Statistics show that one out of five Americans is functionally illiterate: 25 million cannot read or write. This number is increasing by 2.3 million a year in legal and illegal immigrants, refugees, and 950,000 young people per year who drop out of school, statistics showed.

The Texas Education Association reported that Texas is third in the nation (behind California and New York) in the number of under-educated adults, with 21 percent of the Texans over 18 "not possessing the functional competencies prerequisite to coping in society."

Gov. Mark White reported in 1983 that one out of every five Texans was illiterate.

Ms. Langdale said there is no single reason for illiteracy in adults.

"Some didn't go to school, perhaps because they were from migrant families who thought it was more important to work.

Some dropped out of school because they may have had to take care of other siblings or instead became frustrated because they weren't progressing in school; they may have had a learning disability," Ms. Langdale said.

"There was also a time when educators thought it was more important to the socialization process of a child to promote him to the next grade than to retain him.

"Some thought it would have looked silly to see a child old enough to be in the sixth-grade sitting in a second-grade classroom, but that philosophy has really changed now," Ms. Langdale said.

Midland's Need to Read program was born in 1984 after local Adult Basic Education (a GED high school equivalency test study group at Midland College) officials became alarmed at statistics such as those above, Ms. Langdale said.

"The ABE saw the need for a program such as this when they would have people come in to study for the GED who couldn't read above the fifth-grade level (which Ms. Langdale said is the borderline between literacy and illiteracy)," she said.

The ABE secured a one-time $20,000 grant from the Texas Education Agency for the purpose of starting a "literacy council," later named the Need to Read Program.

Ms. Langdale said to be eligible for the free program, one must be over 17 years of age and must take diagnostic tests that render him functionally illiterate.

Thereafter, the student is assigned a tutor and the two begin working together, agreeing to meet two hours a week for at least three months, Ms. Langdale said.

"We don't have a classroom type setting because different people want to learn to read different kinds of things," Ms. Langdale said.

She said a person may have more of an interest in learning to read leisurely or instead, learning how to fill out a job application or read directions on a package.

The tutors are trained in the two basic curriculums of the program — either a phonetic approach which concentrates on vowel and consonant sounds or a practical application approach which focuses more on recognizing words such as "fill out the form," or "sign here," Ms. Langdale said.

"I refuse to answer the question, 'how long does it take?'," she said.

"That always varies with the individual, the amount of time a person spends on homework and practicing, for instance," Ms. Langdale said.

Ms. Langdale said in August they had 37 students in the program, which she said, is really an open-ended sort of thing.

She said the youngest student they've had was 17 and the oldest was a gentleman in in 60s.

Tutors and students meet in a variety of places, such as churches, the public library downtown or at Midland College, Ms. Langdale said.

Tutors are required to have a high school diploma or the equivalent and must attend a training session taught by Ms. Langdale which teaches them the different approaches, she said.

"We have retired teachers, a cable television executive, geologists, engineers, accountants and housewives as tutors.

Ms. Langdale said the program has a 15-member board which includes educational experts as well as the private sector because "they know how to raise the money we need to sustain the program."

"Five other literacy councils were formed when we were in Texas and we are the only one who made it (financially) on our own. Others must still rely on state funding," Ms. Langdale said.

"Our expenses include my salary, the part-time secretary's salary, reading materials and tutor training materials.

Other funding comes from private foundations, businesses and individual donations, she said.

"If I had to tell someone why they should come in for a test who thought they might be illiterate, I would tell them that anyone can become a reader.

"Once they learn, their self-confidence never fails to soar," she said.

'Irish eyes' smiling on St. Ann's

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Literally.

Four new teachers — all from the Republic of Ireland — have joined the St. Ann's School staff, taking a three-year sabbatical from their present jobs on the Emerald Isle, opting to teach West Texas school children.

Ann Marie Kendrick, Geraldine Curran, Catherine Campion and Bernadette Byrne say they hope to share information about how the Irish teach and, in turn, learn a few things about America's educational system.

They're hoping to "find" themselves, so to speak.

"We applied to an agency in Dublin which recruits teachers to the states," said Ms. Byrne, a native of Edenderry in Ireland's Midlands.

"We didn't exactly choose Midland. They chose us."

Since coming to the Permian Basin two weeks ago, the four women have indulged themselves in training sessions and classroom preparation.

"It's a little premature to make any judgments" about what they've learned, said Ms. Curran.

But the native of Kildare said she is most impressed with the small class sizes common to St. Ann's.

St. Ann's classes average 25 to 30 students compared to Irish classrooms, which often exceed 35 pupils.

The smaller the classes, the easier it is to teach, she said.

Ms. Curran said the need to "spread her wings" and "recharge the battery" prompted her to leave her homeland temporarily in favor of taking up residence in the U.S.

Ms. Kendrick, a native of Cork in Southern Ireland, said she likes the "friendliness" in West Texas.

"People go out of their way to help us," she said, and "it was quite a novelty for us to see the desert."

Ms. Campion said she looks forward to the challenge of teaching American children and evaluating their progress.

So far, "the children understand what I mean them to do," said the native of Kinkenny in Central Ireland.

"They don't seem to have any difficulties understanding me."

288 Basin business utilizing Bid Center services

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — At the end of eight months of operation the Permian Basin Bid Center show 288 businesses from nine counties on its client list.

According to Hank Henry, chairman of the Bid Center board of directors, clients have been successful in biding on slightly more than $2 million in federal government contracts or subcontracts.

Henry said board members will present the Bid Center's 1987 budget Tuesday to the Midland City Council for consideration.

In a meeting Friday with U.S. Rep. Larry Combest of Lubbock, Bid Center Director Dave Thayer told Combest the center's budget for the next fiscal year will be $115,000, adding the center needs from $150,000 to $160,000 to expand services to get more contracts.

The Bid Center, located in the Grand Slam Village office complex in the Airport Industrial area, is a satellite of the Beaumont Bid Resource Center.

Thayer has said the Beaumont center signed up only 35 clients in its first year of operation, compared to the Midland-Odessa's 288.

Of the total number of clients signed up so far, Thayer says, 168 are from Ector County, 100 are from Midland County and 20 are from nine other counties.

A summary of Bid Center clients shows 74 (44%) of the Ector County clients employ five or less workers, 41 (24.4%) have from 5-to-10 employees and 53 (31.5%) employ 10 or more.

From Midland County, 70 of the 100 clients have five or fewer employees, 13 have from 5-to-10 and 17 employ 10 or more people.

Two of six Howard County clients five or less people and four have 10 or more.

Two of the four Ward County clients employ five or less one employer has 5-to-10 and one has 10 or more.

Three Andrews County clients have five or fewer workers. Of two Crane County companies on the client list, one has five or fewer employees and one has 10 or more.

Dawson and Gaines counties each have one business on the client list that employees 10 or more workers.

Martin and Winkler counties each have one business that employs five or fewer employees and Lea County in New Mexico had ine business on the client list that employs 5-to-10 workers.

A breakdown of types of business being aided in obtaining contracts by the center show 48 machines shops in Ector County, 37 process equipment manufacturers and 12 process equipment dealers.

Nine of the clients from Midland County are in the machine shop business, nine are process equipment manufacturers and six are process equipment dealers.

Winkler County has one machine shop on the list. Dawson and Gaines counties each show a client in the process equipment manufacturing business.

Thayer says the question has come up several times about what the center is doing for small businesses, disadvantaged businesses and women-owned businesses, which are the three categories of companies the government is trying to promote business for.

"The small business side of this is a confused and varied picture," Thayer said. "and it has several different standards for determining what constitutes a small business."

By the largest such standard, he says, "There is no such thing as a large business headquartered in the Permian Basin (that is on the center's client list). They're all small."

A large business, Thayer said, is defined as one having $17 million annually in gross revenues or 1,500 employees.

In the disadvantaged business category, Thayer says, there is a total of 23 as well as 23 woman-owned businesses.

The mix of different business categories shows Ector County to have the greatest number of machine shops, process equipment manufacturing and repair facilities and process equipment and material dealers.

In the category he considers "professional services," which would include geologists, drafting and map making, engineering and design, architects and management services, Thayer says, there are 25 on the Midland client list but none from Ector County.

Holly remembered on birthday

LUBBOCK (AP) — Fans of rock legend Buddy Holly celebrated the 50th anniversary of his birth Saturday, winding up a 5½-hour "Budfest" that featured the Crickets, the late musician's original band.

About 2,500 people heard performances Friday and early Saturday by the Crickets and 10 other bands and performers in memory of Holly, who died at age 22 in a plane crash on Feb. 3, 1959 — "the day the music died."

Other performers at the concert in the Lubbock Civic Center exhibit hall included Carl Perkins, Del Shannon and Bo Diddley.

"This is one night that can never be repeated again," said rockabilly star Buddy Knox. "You'll never see all these people, all these stars, on the same stage. This is phenomenal."

"I grew up at a time when Buddy Holly was on top," Gov. Mark White told the crowd. "He's still on top. His music hasn't died."

Holly, who was born Sept. 7, 1936, in Lubbock, discovered his last name was misspelled without the 'e' on his first record and adopted the misspelling in his musical career.

Holly's greatest hits included the rock 'n' roll anthems "Peggy Sue" and "That'll Be The Day" as well as many other rock standards that have been recorded since by other artists.

The concert was the main event of the week-long Lubbock Music Festival, which began on Labor Day.

"Lubbock has never seen the likes of this before," said promoter Robert Gamble. "The people who really appreciate rock and roll were all here tonight, and they will be telling their kids about it for years."

The festival was to have been named after Holly, but the idea was scrapped after conflicts developed between the musician's widow, Maria Elena Holly, and the West Texas Music Association, said Jeff Klotzman of the festival's organizing committee.

On Saturday afternoon, Jerry Allison, Joe B. Mauldin and Niki Sullivan, the original Crickets, were inducted into the Lubbock Musical Walk of Fame. Songwriter Sonny Curtis, a member of the Crickets who never toured with Holly, was also honored.

A crowd of about 200 people gathered near the Buddy Holly statue just west of the Lubbock Memorial Civic Center to witness the ceremony.

After pausing to choke back some tears as he approached the podium, Sullivan said that "standing here, I just happened to think Buddy Holly and The Crickets are together ... I love you for caring enough to remember."

Other Lubbock-area natives honored there include musicians Waylon Jennings, Mac Davis, Bobby Keys, Ralna English and Jimmy Dean, and actors G.W. Bailey and Barry Corbin.

The weekend celebration featured Knox, who earned a gold record for "Party Doll" in the late 1950s, followed by The Rockin' Ricochettes of Minneapolis and 1950s teen idol Bobby Vee.

Vee's first major appearance was when he and his band were hired to fill in for Holly after the Clear Lake, Iowa, plane crash that also claimed the lives of The Big Bopper and Richie Valens.

The Ricochettes backed up additional sets by Shannon, Diddley, Perkins and the Crickets.

The Crickets performed 15 songs, and were joined by Curtis, Knox and the Ricochettes in singing "That'll Be the Day."

BUDGET

The tax decrease will touch "practically every citizen and every company in the community."

Though the average reduction will be 10 percent, Wright noted that some taxpayers' county-tax reduction will be "up to 30 percent" while that of others will be "practically nil" due to variations in appraised property values.

Jarnagin noted the 10 percent overall county-tax reduction would mean that a taxpayer who paid $200 in county taxes in 1985 would be paying $180 in taxes this year to fund the 1987 budget.

Wright noted "every department" within the county has taken a budgetary cut in realizing a reduction in the budget and a decrease in tax dollars.

"It has come through the agreement and the help of every department head," said County Judge Bill Ahders. The commissioners did not allow for any salary increases.

Following is a breakdown of the proposed county expenditures for 1987 and that for 1986 budget.

General Administration: $2.47 million in 1987 and $2.67 million in 1986. This includes the $49,296 salary for County Judge Bill Ahders in 1987. Each of the four commissioners are salaried at $25,326 in 1987. Money for their salaries come from the Road and Bridge Department Fund.

Judicial: $2.53 million in 1987 and $2.66 million in 1986. The state salary for each of three Texas district court judges — Barbara Culver, Pat Baskin and Vann Culp — in Midland County is unchanged from 1986 at $56,135 and is supplemented by the county up to almost $10,000. District Attorney Al Schorre is salaried by the state at $44,342 and receives an additional $10,400 from the county. District Clerk Vivian Wood is salaried at $37,104. County Attorney Mark H. Dettman is salaried at $45,936. Justice of the Peace Robert H. "Bob" Pine is salaried at $34,860. County Clerk Rosenelle Cherry is paid $39,084. Pay for the County Court-at-Law Judges Willie DuBose and James Fitz-Gerald III is, respectively, $55,932 and $53,352.

Elections: $162,428 in 1987 and $205,665 in 1986. Elections Administrator Bettye Calvert's salary is pegged at $29,124.

Financial Administration: $823,083 in 1987 and $845,225 in 1986. County Auditor Floyd Jarnagin earns $36,924. County Treasurer Dee Thompson's pay is set at $38,484. Tax Assessor-Collector Frances Shuffield is salaried at $37,944.

Public Safety & Corrections: $2.99-million in 1987 and $3.17-million in 1986. Sheriff Gary Painter is salaried at $36,984.

Health and Welfare: $151,862 in 1987 and $162,254 in 1986.

"We had a very positive meeting," Nichols said. "We came out of the meeting feeling good, very optimistic. The thing I learned is that Santa Fe is a good company, and they would be good to work with."

Jeffus said the Lamesa track has been generating less revenue for some time, mainly due to the shippers preferring truck over rail.

"This is not something recent. It's been a gradual process," Jeffus said. "Trucks are getting a lot of our business, and people in small towns especially are using trucks.

"It is just a fact of life."

Jeffus said he doesn't know what the outcome of the abandonment will be.

"This is something that goes on every year — railroads annually file abandonment maps with the proper authorities. It just so happens that the Lamesa branch, or subdivision as we call it, is on this map," he said.

Nichols said he believes the current attempt of Santa Fe to merge with Southern Pacific could directly influence the Lamesa line.

"I think the merger would help Santa Fe, and would help keep this track. Other mergers I think have made it necessary to merge."

The ICC, going against its own staff recommendation, voted to block the merger in July.

The commission has said the merger posed anti-competition problems that outweighed potential public benefits.

Santa Fe and Southern Pacific have asked the ICC to reconsider.

Many forces shape economic changes

Oil prices were in a slide that would take them from $30 a barrel in November to below $10 in March, and with them the tax livelihood of Texas.

For weeks Bullock's staff had been working out how much the price collapse would cost the state treasury. A somber Bullock told a luncheon gathering of reporters the grim outlook.

"I see state government cut to the bare-bones minimum," he said.

Texas faced a deficit of $1.3 billion then. Six months later the red ink had risen to more than $3 billion.

In little more than five years, the state's oil boom had turned to bust.

"Our sesquicentennial year is becoming the most critical turning point which our state economy has faced in several decades," Baylor University forecaster M. Ray Perryman told the Beaumont Enterprise in the first of a 14-part series on the Texas economy.

"By this point in time it seems almost trite to point out that diversification is the key to the future of Texas," Perryman said.

Industry leaders, politicians, analysts and others interviewed by the newspaper see several forces shaping the change:

— The oil industry is being restructured, meaning fewer jobs but, perhaps, a stronger industry.

— Agriculture is at a crossroads. Burdened by debt and low prices, its outlook is uncertain.

— A growing service sector will create most new jobs, ranging from fast-food workers to telecommunications.

— High tech will be increasingly important as Texas moves into the computer, robotics and biotechnology, and private ventures are launched into space.

"We are moving away from a resource-driven economy and into an economy driven by technology," said David Norton, director of the Space Technology and Research Center at the Houston Area Research Center. "The next economy is based on using brain power."

As a result, Texas' economy will more closely resemble that of the rest of the country, with more emphasis on services and less violent boom-and-bust swings, economists say.

Perryman predicts the recession will last through most of 1987, followed by a modest recovery. Over the next 20 years he sees gross state product growing at a compounded annual rate of 2.9 percent — similar to growth in the U.S. economy as a whole.

Still, Texans are reluctant to let go of life as it was before the oil crash.

Per capita personal income soared 160 percent between 1973, when the Arab embargo turned the oil world upside down, and 1983, when the first major cracks began to appear. In those 10 years, per capita income climbed from $4,500 to $11,644 a year.

Hundreds of thousands of out-of-staters came for jobs. The state boasted budget surpluses without personal or corporate income taxes.

Economists have estimated Texas loses $3 billion in gross economic output and $100 million in local and state taxes for every $1 drop in oil prices.

For every $5 drop, reports the Federal Reserve Bank of Dallas, the state loses between 86,000 and 136,000 jobs.

Robert Mettlen, acting director of the Bureau of Business Research at the University of Texas, said "everyone is underestimating the likelihood that oil prices will stay low. They are thinking they will come back up. They won't."

But oil prices are only the beginning of the story. The economic downturn now being weathered is the unhappy meeting of many long- and short-term, often global, problems.

The world is in a period of commodity deflation. Prices for everything from oil to copper to farm products have been falling. Lack of inflation, surpluses and new competitors all play a role, and Texas is a state largely dependent on commodities.

The worst shipping slump of the post-war era has devastated the Gulf Coast, closing shipyards, throwing seamen and longshoremen out of jobs, and leaving ports struggling to survive.

Economic problems in Mexico have helped throw the Texas side of the border into a retailing decline.

The results have sometimes been catastrophic.

Some smaller Texas oil communities face a ghost town future, while larger cities struggle. Port Arthur's jobless rate hit 25.8 percent in June before dropping to 21.5 percent in July, in part because of people stopping their search for work or leaving the area.

Midland Police investigating thefts of stereos

Michael Hopkins, 5009 Rio Grande, reported several components of his stereo system, valued at $220, were taken from his apartment early Saturday morning, reports said.

Maria Hernandez, 1505 S. Fort Worth, reported to Midland police her CB radio and stereo, valued at $800, were stolen from her car around 1 p.m. Saturday afternoon.

Engineers group to hold luncheon meeting

From Staff Reports

The Reservoir Study Group of the Permian Basin Section, Society of Petroleum Engineers, will hold a luncheon meeting this Thursday. Lunch will be catered beginning at 11:30 a.m. at a charge of $5 a plate.

The topic of discussion will be "A Second Look at the Chapman Reef Fusselman Field," presented by Dick Prentice of Arco Oil and Gas Co.

This meeting will be held at the American Legion Hall in Midland, which is located on Air Park Road west of Big Spring Street.

Street reconstruction 'on hold' until Midland economy improves

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

City council members say they are taking a "wait-and-see" attitude on passing a street bond issue until the economy improves.

Public Works Director Fred Baker says the council has about a year and a half before the remaining $2.77 million left from a 1982 bond is used up.

Most of Midland's major streets are about 30 years old and in need of reconstruction, Baker said.

Five city councilors and the mayor agreed that continuing reconstruction of many of Midland's arterial 30-year streets is a priority, but they said they will have to wait until the economy improves before they can present another street bond issue to the voters.

"The council is basically taking a wait-and-see attitude as to what our economy is going to do. We've just been waiting for the economy to get better so we'd have a chance of passing a bond," said Councilman Gordon Marcum II.

"We have plenty of projects, but our problem is just figuring out when we can do them," Marcum said.

In January the council decided not to present a street bond of up to $12 million to voters because of the sudden drop in the local economy and oil prices.

Council member Katie Heck said, "We pulled the bond because of the uncertainty in the economy. We know though that there is street reconstruction that has to be done and the sooner we do them the better it will be.

"There's never a good time to ask people for money, but I think everyone would agree there are expenditures you just have to make," Ms. Heck said.

Before the bond money runs out, up to six streets on the city's priority list may be reconstructed, Baker said.

About eight arterial streets are being overlayed and reconstructed, Baker said.

Many streets are being rebuilt to carry increased traffic loads, he said.

"Most of the major streets require rebuilding to meet traffic loads now imposed on them. There are very few streets we can salvage to meet present traffic loads by overlaying," Baker said.

A recent street inventory study has given streets an average rating of 75 on a scale of zero to 100, Baker said.

To keep streets at this level the cost will be about $5 million a year, Baker said. This year's street department budget is $3.6 million, he said.

OC's planetarium stands empty awaiting action to keep it alive

ODESSA (AP) — Devoid of students who seek unpromising careers in astronomy, the Poole Planetarium at Odessa College resembles a forgotten toy.

Equipped but locked up and empty, it could fade into infinity like a dying star unless some sort of community funding arises to keep it alive, a school official said.

The planetarium, located in a second-floor classroom of Wilkerson Hall, was used for astronomy classes through the 1984-85 year but is no longer used for academic purposes.

"With a degree in astronomy, you can either be a practicing astronomer or teach astronomy to other people. It does not translate directly into a desirable career opportunity," said Bernhard Sedate, OC vice president for instruction.

"The interest never seemed to be as strong as we'd hoped. It just didn't take off," he said, adding an average astronomy class was about eight students.

He said there is always hope that the community might respond to efforts to keep the planetarium active.

"But realistically, I'm not expecting it. I'd be delighted but surprised to have a donor to resurrect the planetarium," he told the Odessa American last week.

Sedate said the only use of the planetarium this past year was by the Ector County Independent School District. The district paid a person from the University of Texas at El Paso to operate the equipment and give planetarium shows to sixth-graders this spring.

But Keith Dial, ECISD assistant superintendent for instructional services, said no decision has been made whether the district will do that again this year.

He said a study will be done first to see if the project was worth the $1,500 it took to bring in the operator and lodge him for several weeks while the programs were presented.

Sedate said the 50-seat planetarium was built in 1965.

OC astronomy classes fulfilled a science requirement only. There was no degree program, Sedate noted.

Scout units, church organizations and the general public attended planetarium shows more often than OC students, he said.

Sedate said the cost of maintaining the planetarium is about $25,000 to $35,000 annually.

Most of that amount was for a director's salary, he said, but also included repairs, maintenance, operation funds and promotional literature.

"When you get into replacing equipment or adding new equipment, you put that on top of that," he added.

He said the 21-year-old planetarium equipment is probably worth $25,000, but might not raise that much if sold now because of its age.

Falling 'curtain'

Call it surprising, because it is that, or write it off as a carefully-orchestrated disinformation assault, but something interesting and almost unbelievable is happening behind the Iron Curtain. The "curtain" is starting to look a bit threadbare, in fact.

Not the least of the latest developments was the Soviet public admission that the Chernobyl nuclear disaster was the result of gross human error "by the workers." That wouldn't be so shocking were it not for the fact that 10 years ago — even five years ago — the secrecy that pervaded Russian society and, particularly, the Soviet hierarchy made such an admission of wrongdoing completely unthinkable. Such events as the Chernobyl disaster did not happen in the Soviet Union. Even when they did, they fell victim to the omnipresent official silence.

That's why the brief, to-the-point admission recently by Andronik M. Petrosyants, chairman of the Soviet Committee for the Peaceful Uses of Atomic Energy, that the catastrophe was "... a result of a whole series of gross violations of operating regulations by the workers" was entirely out of character for the Soviets.

While it's obvious that such overpowering forces as the technological revolution sweeping the world have made it more difficult for Soviet authorities to maintain their strict code of secrecy and to control the dissemination of information, there also have been other indications that changes are taking place behind the fraying Iron Curtain that strike at the very heart of communism. For example:

■ A 17-page document leaked to the West recently was sharply critical of the Soviet system and urged easing restrictions on the press, allowing freedom of speech and even alternative political representation. The document, which a Soviet dissident now living in the United States says probably was written by those familiar with internal Soviet government dialogue, even advocates: "The dictatorship of the proletariat has fulfilled its historic mission and is no longer necessary." The point of the document: Revolutionary changes are needed in the Soviet system to allow Russia to compete with the West.

■ The Soviet Union's bid to participate in the upcoming talks of the 92-nation General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) definitely signals tacit recognition of the fact that the Soviet economic system is not working. That's something other nations have realized for years — that the world of the 1980s is not the world of V.I. Lenin, founder of Russia's Communist Party. GATT was organized in 1948 with the specific intention of upgrading living standards and achieving world economic growth by liberalizing world trade. That runs counter to all of Lenin's early teachings on which the Soviet system is based.

While the impact of these various vestiges of change on the relationship between the United States and Russia will take months or even years to decipher and implement, they do indicate the need for the Reagan administration to watch future Soviet actions carefully. Perhaps there is occurring, as some have speculated, a "golden opportunity" for the two superpowers to lead the world to a new plateau of peace and global understanding.

For that kind of progress to occur, however, there will need to be more give-and-take between the two powers and fewer unfortunate incidents like the Soviet state arrest of U.S. News & World Report correspondent Nicholas Daniloff, a blatant retaliatory move for the U.S. arrest of a Soviet spy. How the Soviets respond to Western press criticism of their arrest of Daniloff could well point to their future course. It has become apparent in recent months that Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev plays to the press and if that fact helps to bring about pressure to effect change behind the Iron Curtain, so much the better.

Speculating on what goes on behind the Iron Curtain won't be necessary if the Soviets will only let the curtain fall.

Another View:

AID's illogical move

By cutting off all support for the United Nations' Fund for Population Activities, the U.S. Agency for International Development has fired the one international organization that could both monitor China and help that country upgrade its family-planning program. In the process, AID has hurt millions of poor families in more than 130 countries served by the U.N. agency. The decision is unconscionable.

Chinese officials have repeatedly assured the Reagan administration that their family-planning program is voluntary, and also have relaxed the one-child-per-family policy. The Fund for Population Activities is prohibited by charter from involvement in abortion or coercive birth control. AID nevertheless rejects China's claims and contends that the U.N. agency's contributions to census collection and family-planning education constitute involvement in a coercive program.

Incongruities multiply. Because the U.N. fund spends no U.S. money in China, the decision hurts other poor countries instead. AID officials say the $25 million denied the U.N. agency will be spent on direct grants to governments and private family-planning organizations. But many countries lack the expertise or infrastructure for family planning — indeed, requests for U.N. help have grown by 50 percent in recent years. Many also object to bilateral aid because they want no foreign strings attached to their population policies. And private organizations cannot reach as many needy areas as an international agency can.

If AID is truly concerned about abuses in China, it would increase support of the U.N. agency instead of ending it. But AID's desire to placate U.S. anti-abortion groups apparently is stronger than its desire to ensure that Chinese families have access to humane birth-control services. Such groups have lobbied ferociously for cutting off the International Planned Parenthood Federation, which lost U.S. support last year, as has the U.N. fund now.

Just as antagonists of international family planning reject China's claims about its voluntary birth-control policy, they ignore warnings about the tragic impact of denying U.S. support to the Fund for Population Activities. Experts say that curtailing the fund's birth-control activities could result in nearly 3 million more unwanted pregnancies in poor countries in the next year, and 1 million more abortions. AID should rethink its purpose.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Sunday, Sept. 7, the 250th day of 1986. There are 115 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

Fifty years ago, on Sept. 7, 1936, President Franklin D. Roosevelt dedicated the recently completed Boulder Dam — now known as Hoover Dam — by pressing a golden key at the White House to signal the start-up of the dam's hydroelectric generators in Nevada. By October, electricity from the dam was flowing to Los Angeles.

On this date:

JACK ANDERSON

GOP needs to research its 'heroes'

WASHINGTON — President Reagan and other Republican leaders have patiently — and with some success — tried to wean the so-called "ethnic" vote away from its historic home in the Democratic Party, mainly by playing on the deeply felt anti-communist sentiments of Americans with family ties to the captive nations in the Soviet bloc.

Jack Anderson

But in their zeal to win friends and votes among those of Eastern European heritage, politicians haven't always been careful to check the resumes of individuals and institutions they suppose are representative of the various ethnic groups.

Our associates Corky Johnson and Donald Goldberg have found unsavory political skeletons in the closets of some recipients of warm praise from the president and other GOP politicians. Here are the cases that are most embarrassing to the Republicans, or at least should be:

— Yaroslav Stetsko, head of the virulently anti-communist group called the Anti-Bolshevik Bloc of Nations. Following Stetsko's death in July, a note on White House stationery was sent to his widow, signed by the president and Mrs. Reagan. The condolence said: "Our thoughts and prayers are with you at this time of sorrow. May God bless and keep you."

The note to the widow was not President Reagan's first involvement with Stetsko. The two men met in 1983 at the White House and were photographed shaking hands.

Rep. Jack Kemp, R-N.Y., a conservative presidential hopeful, also had extravagant praise for Stetsko in a statement entered in the Congressional Record after his death. Kemp paid "special tribute to the great Ukrainian freedom fighter," and said Stetsko had "dedicated his life to promoting the cause of liberty."

Kemp arrived at this conclusion from the "authorized" version of Stetsko's background, which claims that as a Ukrainian nationalist leader during World War II he had been a Nazi prisoner and was tortured in a concentration camp.

Historians have a less sympathetic view of Stetsko's activities during the war. As premier of the Ukrainian puppet state set up by the Nazis after the 1941 invasion of the Soviet Union, Stetsko was "without a doubt" a Nazi collaborator, according to respected historian Charles Allen.

Members of the Ukrainian nationalist organization headed by Stetsko during the Nazi occupation fought alongside the German invaders, and many were outfitted in Wehrmacht uniforms. Stetsko's thugs were responsible for the slaughter of 7,000 Jews in the city of Lvov alone, according to other historians of the period.

— In 1984, Reagan sent a message of congratulations to the Romanian Voice on the occasion of its 100th anniversary. "I am very happy to extend warm greetings to the staff and friends of the Romanian Voice," the president wrote. "Your newspaper is part of the rich ethnic diversity that enhances our culture and is so essential to America's strength." The letter was proudly displayed in the December 1984 edition of the Romanian Voice.

The newspaper's rich ethnic diversity included enthusiastic editorial support for Archbishop Valerian Trifa, a rabblerouser who had shilled for the notorious Romanian Iron Guard and its Nazi supporters, and who incited a bloody pogrom of Jews in Bucharest early in World War II. Trifa covered up his pro-Nazi past when he immigrated to this country after the war, and fought for years against revocation of his U.S. citizenship and deportation.

Trifa was finally deported for alleged war crimes only two months before Reagan's letter of congratulations appeared in the newspaper that had championed the old war criminal so vociferously. The Romanian Voice has also defended the fascist, anti-Semitic Iron Guard.

RUSSELL BAKER

Sissies don't last long in insurance economy!

Despite what you hear, this is not a service economy. It is an insurance economy. Or haven't you noticed that no matter what your favorite shop claims to be selling nowadays, what it's really selling is insurance? For instance:

Russell Baker

Man goes to buy a VCR. It would be the same if he wanted a television set, an automobile, a vacuum cleaner, you name it, they're going to sell him insurance on it, but this time what he wants is a VCR.

Goes to a discount store. Electronic machines are like mattresses. Always sold at a discount. The discounting is so widespread that nobody knows what the original price was.

O.K., you've been to these discount stores. Heavy prison-type bars across the windows, right? Provided they have windows. Usually they don't, so inside is like being in a warehouse, except one whole wall is covered with hundreds of television sets.

They are all showing the same soap opera: every set blaring at maximum volume. The predominant color is magenta. Sounds like one of the characters was raped recently and another just got back from being dead.

Man wanders around hoping a salesman will notice him, because what does he know about VCR's? He didn't go to MIT. He majored in Corneille, Racine and Moliere at Johns Hopkins, and needs a tubes-wires-and-buzzers expert to explain why four heads are better than two.

Apparently, however, the salesmen are all graduates of England's great Salesman University, because they couldn't care less that somebody wants to spend money. Finally, just as in England, one eventually condescends to waste a little time with a customer.

Remember high-pressure salesmen? You went in to buy a handkerchief and when those guys finished you came out wearing a chartreuse suit and lavender suspenders. High-pressure salesmen thrived back when Americans made fun of the Japanese as junk peddlers. Now we have the low-pressure salesman.

"What's the difference between a two-headed and a four-headed VCR?"

"One's got two heads and the other's got four."

"Why do some sets cost three times as much as others?"

Man feels ashamed of himself for exposing the salesman's ignorance. What if the poor bird's boss is watching? He could get fired.

Best thing is to ease off on the tough questions. So pointing to the two cheapest machines in sight, the customer says, "Which is the better buy?"

Man picks one at random, offers a variety of credit cards and is instructed to report to the counter where the worst salesman in town suddenly shows his true colors.

"Naturally, you'll need the insurance."

"Absolutely not." Man's already got so many insurance policies on consumer goods that he had to rent warehouse space to store the file cabinets. He was attacked by a rat last time he went there looking for the insurance policy on his kitchen stove, which, as usual with insurance policies, didn't cover the problem.

VCR insurance salesmen don't easily discourage.

"So what's a little rat bite compared to knowing your VCR will be fully insured for months after its warranty expires?"

"No, no, no. No insurance."

"You mean to say you'd risk total loss of your investment in this VCR simply because you are too cheap to buy a little insurance?"

"Well, it's not that I'm cheap. But ... you know ... the rats. ..."

"Friend, let me help you put the rat menace out of your mind once and forever. By purchasing an amazingly low-priced policy specifically tailored to the needs of those who suffer loss of income as well as pain and mental agony because of rat bites, as well as rooster peckings, muskrat nips and moose gorings — yes, friend, those innocent-looking moose antlers can do surprising amounts of damage..."

Man says, "You mean I can get all that written in as a rider on the VCR insurance for the incredibly low additional price of only $39 per quarter?"

Who can resist that bargain? But he remembers the last thing his family told him when they gathered to bid him goodbye. "Whatever you do," they'd said, "don't let them sell you any insurance."

Man picks up his uninsured VCR, says he's leaving, heads for the door. Salesman races ahead, throws himself to the floor, sobs aloud. Apparently his three children need expensive surgery if they are ever to walk again, but it's hard to be sure because hundreds of TV sets are all swinging into the next soap opera and maybe the salesman is echoing lines from a father just returned from the dead.

In any case, if he says you can't get out without stepping on him, don't be shy. Sissies don't last long in an insurance economy.

GEORGE F. WILL

Daniloff's 'problem' not with Soviet ghosts!

WASHINGTON — In Washington it sometimes seems that almost everything is legal, and absolutely everything is permissible — except simple declarative sentences, such as: Nicholas Daniloff shall be free within 24 hours or the Soviet ambassador shall depart these shores on the 25th hour.

George F. Will

When the State Department said it would not tolerate a link between the Daniloff case and that of Gennadi Zakharov, the U.N. employee recently charged with espionage, realists knew to expect the linkage in 24 hours. It came with Reagan's offer to turn Zakharov over to Soviet custody pending trial in this country.

KGB agents pounced on Daniloff, Moscow correspondent for U.S. News & World Report, when a Russian acquaintance handed Daniloff a package that the KGB says overflowed with secret material. The crudeness of the frame-up justifies two inferences: Soviet authorities have reasonably concluded on the basis of recent experience that U.S. weakness in such episodes enables the Soviet Union contemptuously to dispense with subtleties. And Zakharov must have been involved in acutely sensitive matters, so eager are his employers to get their hands on him. That, they now shall do, and shall administer psychological and perhaps chemical treatments to reduce his capacity for damage when — if — he comes to trial.

With metronomic regularity, the Soviet regime does something outrageous and the U.S. government indulges in perfunctory displays of indignation, to no effect. The most substantial response to the invasion of Afghanistan — the grain embargo — was ended by a rhetorically conservative President who, five years later, with the slaughter of Afghans continuing, is subsidizing grain sales to the Soviet Union.

When the Soviet Union orchestrated the suffocation of Poland's Solidarity, he refused to use as a weapon the credits that sustain all the mendicant economies of the Evil Empire. To the Korean Airlines massacre, he responded with a rhetorical vigor inversely proportional to his policy response. In 1985, when a U.S. Army major was shot by Soviet troops while performing his duties in East Germany, and was left on the ground to bleed slowly to death, Reagan said such "episodes" whetted his appetite for summits.

Given this squalid record, who is mystified that in dealing with Reagan (who in 1980 said: By cracky, no one will take Americans hostage on my watch), the Soviets made Daniloff a hostage and Reagan promptly offered to make a deal. Actually, the New York Times is mystified.

Its editorial, "Ominous Ghosts in Moscow," the tone of which is "Say it ain't so, Mikhail!", displayed the intellectual contortions of incorrigible detentists. There are, said the Times, several possible explanations of Daniloff's arrest "but none speak (sic) well of the Soviet government." How vexing: an incident that complicates speaking well of that government.

The Times wonders whether, if Daniloff was seized in response to Zakharov's arrest, the KGB acted "on its own," showing "alarming independence." On the other hand, if — say it ain't so! — the Politburo approved, the Times sees an "alarming" sign.

Read slowly: "a sign that (the Politburo's) bureaucratic interests take precedence over diplomacy and decency."

So, if the Soviet regime has lapsed this once from decency, it must have done so because of some quirky "interest." This is a way of defining the episode as aberrational, not characteristic.

The Times does wax stern: The incident is "an ominous reminder of how pendular may be the 'openness' promised" by Gorbachev. Not since Stalin's reign has a frame-up resulted in an American being imprisoned, and the Times wonders: "Does Mr. Gorbachev really mean to summon up that ghost?"

Ghosts, yet. The problem is not Stalin's ghost, it is that Gorbachev and his colleagues are Stalin's children.

Next month, Oxford University Press publishes Robert Conquest's "The Harvest of Sorrow," his harrowing history of the terror-famine of 1932-33, by which Stalin crushed the Soviet peasantry and the Ukrainian nation, causing more deaths than were suffered in World War I by all the belligerents combined. Conquest notes that even in today's supposedly "de-Stalinized" Soviet Union, there is utter tendentiousness in the few references to that hidden holocaust. The Large Soviet Encyclopedia article on famine does not mention it. When the regime refers to the "so-called famine," it blames reactionary landowners. Perhaps that is "pendular openness."

Many in the West live by, and the West may yet die by, the hope that the Soviet system is evolving into something other than the system that caused the famine and today buries the truth about it beneath mountains of mendacities. The problem — Daniloff's problem — is not a ghost. The problem is Stalin's children and their filial piety.

BILL MODISETT

Bill Modisett

The story goes that in the 1930s or thereabouts, a West Texan schooled in the ways of cattle and horses but unfamiliar with the "oil patch" made his way into a cafe in Midland (or was it Odessa?) and ordered a cup of coffee.

The waitress brought the coffee and the cowboy drank it slowly. Then he got up and strolled to the cash register to pay out.

"That'll be 50 cents," said the cashier.

The cowboy was dumbfounded and asked her to repeat what she had said. Then he handed over two quarters, slowly shaking his head in disbelief.

"You just come to town?" the cashier asked him, making an attempt at small talk.

"Yes ma'am," the cowboy replied. "And I'll probably be staying. There's gotta be money to be made in any town where they can charge 50 cents for a cup of coffee."

The cowboy, you see, recognized a characteristic of the Permian Basin economy that a lot of others in this region now realize. The life here may be more difficult than in some other areas, but there's opportunity.

Don't kid yourself. Times are tough in Midland and Odessa currently. Layoffs have kicked the local unemployment rate sky-high, and business failures have touched virtually every family in some manner, even if it's only a friend or acquaintance that has lost a job. It still hurts. It hurts because the people of the Permian Basin are, in a lot of ways, like one large family. They have similar jobs, similar interests, similar values and a devotion to the land they call home. They care about each other.

In the past few months, there have been people who've given up and left the Permian Basin in search of work. That's completely understandable because they must do what they must in order to survive difficult economic times. But it has only been some, not the rumored "droves" that were supposed to turn the two cities into ghost towns by this time or earlier.

Now summer's over in the sense that school has resumed and guess what? Midland's school enrollment is up over last year's and Odessa's enrollment only dipped slightly.

What does that mean? Well, it could — and does — mean a lot of things but one observation that cannot be avoided is that it signals the fact that the rumored mass exodus did not occur.

Why wouldn't people leave, if there are no jobs to be had here? Maybe there are no jobs to be had anywhere. After all, even Texas' economy statewide is not outstanding at this time and when that is the case, it spells disaster for the people in a situation like the Permian Basin's. It means suffering and that is always tragic.

But maybe another factor should be included. Maybe a lot of people in Midland and Odessa feel the same way as the old cowboy with the 50-cent coffee bill. It may be tough and may take some time to resolve, but the life here is worth the waiting — the "cost," if you will.

That fact may not make the hurt of a lost job or difficult times any less painful, but it may make it easier to bear.

MISD deserves thanks for anti-drug stand

The MISD School Board is to be commended for the resolute stand they have taken on what the consequences will be for any student participating in extracurricular who uses or is in possession of tobacco, alcohol of any mood-altering chemical. Their new extracurricular policy creates sound rules for our student leaders, and encourages them to set the example to "just say no."

Midland appears to be a leader in Texas by attempting to rid our schools of drugs and alcohol. Would everyone take a few minutes to contact a school board member, or the MISD superintendent, and encourage them to continue their efforts to provide a chemically free environment for our children!

Minnesota achieved outstanding results when they implemented, and enforced, a similar policy.

Why is school board running kids' lives?

I am very concerned about our school board trying to run our kids' lives. My concern is the policy they approved forbidding the use or possession of tobacco products, alcohol and/or mood altering drugs by extra-curricular participants on or off campus.

The part that gets me is the out-of-school hours. I believe it is none of their business what goes on when the child is not at school or on a school trip.

Our kids have rights, too. I think this policy sounds a lot like one they might have in Russia!

Students should be punished for doing these things at school, but why don't we leave the rest to the parents and authorities. The best thing we as parents can do is be good examples. I just can't see schools trying to govern what goes on during the out-of-school hours.

And, why are they concerned only with the kids who are in extra-curricular activities? If they are going to punish one group, why not the other students?

My children are not in school yet, but when they are I might consider a private school over our public ones.

Maybe when they do start school we will have a school board that will listen to the parents.

Kent should be ashamed for selling pornography

First, let me say that my name is Rev. Roy L. Smith and I am the president of the Citizens for Decency in Andrews.

This letter is concerning the article that Bill Kent ran in the Odessa American on Sunday, Aug. 24, concerning the issue of pornography.

Bill Kent and his corporation should really feel ashamed of themselves because of the foolish game that they are playing in trying to play down the seriousness of pornography and the damage it does.

Mr. Kent and his egotistical West Texas Pride dares to flirt with the emotions of the public. This is not an issue of West Texas Pride. This is an issue of morals, and Mr. Kent, in being the owner of Kent Kwiks, has the opportunity to set a decent moral standard in the entity of convenience stores.

Mr. Kent has stated before that his company keeps these books in areas away from kids, and as I have stated to him before that bad sexual habits are learned, not passed down biologically, and it is perverted-minded adults that get hold of this material and molest children, and kidnap children, and ruin the lives of innocent young kids.

I am a proud West Texan, but I know pornography cannot be justified by his playing games and trying to win people over to his side. Because it is lawful for him to sell pornography, does this make it right in the sight of the Almighty God? The Kent Corp. needs to fear God, not the Odessans for Decency or West Texans for Decency.

If Mr. Kent can read and see the damage that pornography has done and is doing to society and to the children throughout our country, and he still sells this junk in his stores, it becomes evident to me that Mr. Kent does not care about my kids or anyone else. The heart of the matter is that for Kent stores pornography is profit.

Mr. Kent stated that he has given time and money to various children's functions. If this is true, Mr. Kent should know the innocence and beauty of children. With all of this evidence of the damage that pornography does, how can Mr. Kent be pleased with himself knowing that a child molester may be buying his books, reading them and maybe abusing the neighbor's child. With this in mind, how can one live with that very real reality of being an indirect accessory to crimes linked to pornography. If Mr. Kent has a good conscience selling pornography, then he is a modern-day pharoah.

My prayer is that God will soften his heart and open his spiritual eyes to the real truth and issue, which is a spiritual wickedness in high places.

May God allow you time to change your mind and realize that Christianity is a way of life, not a religion of good deeds.

Rev. Roy L. Smith, President

Clements doesn't even know what he thinks

I see that Bill Clements, after months of saying he would never, under any circumstances, allow a tax increase, has said that to make that promise would be "nonsense." Apparently, his pledge never to raise taxes has disappeared as magically as his secret plan to solve the state's budget crisis.

Texas is in a critical position now and it is very important that we have a governor who has the courage to do what is right. Mark White fought to improve our public school system, and now he is fighting to keep the funds that will make improvement possible. Bill Clements can't even make up his mind about what he thinks.

SPEAKING OUT

Immigration policy not applied equally

EDITOR'S NOTE: Illegal immigration has been making news for years in West Texas, but particularly since officials for the Immigration & Naturalization Service conducted a controversial "sting" operation in the area in late July and deported a number of people.

The Reporter-Telegram asked two Midlanders — LULAC chapter president Edia Hernandez and naturalized citizen Jennifer Lopez — to give their views on the subject.

By EDIA HERNANDEZ

Edia Hernandez is president of the Midland Chapter of the League of United Latin American Citizens.

Once again the question of the problem of illegal aliens has been replanted. The problem is one whose seed has been planted time and again by the United States when it has been in need of Mexican "cheap" labor.

In 1942, the government of the United States established the Bracero Program to recruit temporary migrant laborers from Mexico during the war effort. When expediency better serves, immigration laws have been administered in response to a problem perceived as having been created by illegal aliens in the Southwest. The Great Depression stimulated public backing to expel foreigners competing with Americans for scarce jobs. During the period of "Operation Wetbacks" in 1954, Mexican workers were blamed for a variety of crimes. Now during the oil crisis, the cycle has revolved.

During each of these three periods, Mexican-Americans' constitutional rights have been cruelly violated. Many suffer unreasonable searches and seizures. As citizens, our right of assuring due process and equal protection of the law has been violated. For these reasons, I find it necessary to speak out.

Perhaps we need to be reminded of our Texas history. The first people of European ancestry to settle in the Southwest were from Spain. The settlements in Texas date as early as 1659 when El Paso was founded. These settlements remained part of Spain until Mexico's independence in 1821. Mexicans fought along side Americans in 1836 at the Alamo. To go back completely in history would be lengthy. However, all a person has to do is go to various monuments through the United States to find Hispanic names inscribed on them. As a patriotic American, I can proudly relate my father was in World War II and my husband served in Vietnam.

Illegal aliens, just as the immigrants who came through Ellis Island, came to this country because they suffered poverty. Today's struggle of the illegal aliens has brought them here with the same hope. I can't speak personally of all the struggles of the illegal immigrant since I have not experienced them. However, as an American citizen I can attest to my understanding of our Constitution. Perhaps some have forgotten and others have not lived here long enough to cherish that same Constitution which Americans have fought and died to preserve. History has taught us that when the human rights of one are being violated, our constitutional rights are endangered.

Immigration laws have existed since 1882. These laws have been administered to fit the attitude of our country. The flight of Asians in the 1970s created an enormous refugee settlement problem in the United States which taxpayers paid for. In the six-month period in 1980, some 125,000 Cubans arrived in Florida in uncontrolled sea migration. The partiality of this country's immigration laws significantly discriminates because the main concern of American lawmakers worried about illegal immigration is undocumented immigration from Mexico. The attitude of our country does not always hold true to the inscription written on the Statue of Liberty. Nor does it hold true to our constitution that "all men are created equal."

I can't offer a solution to the illegal alien problem. However, I do know this country has to be made accountable for the constitution which should provide equal treatment for all. At present the law is only focusing on the undocumented Mexican immigrant. And in the process of deporting illegal aliens, United States citizens have been mistakenly deported. This error occurs because Mexican-Americans are identified on sight as being "Mexican." Therefore, a fair-to-all immigration law must be administered.

Today it is us; tomorrow it could be you!

U.S. encourages illegal aliens' immigration

By JENNIFER LOPEZ

A native of Mexico, Jennifer Lopez is a naturalized U.S. citizen who has lived in Midland since 1952.

I would like to share my experience regarding illegal aliens in this country. I am a naturalized citizen who was born in Mexico and who has lived in Midland since 1952.

This is the United States with freedom for all who believe in our country and our system. I don't believe we have to learn to speak any foreign language just to accommodate anyone. I came to the United States myself and have tried to educate myself and learn the American way.

It isn't that way for every illegal alien. The majority of illegal aliens only get married to an American citizen to obtain their residential visa. A Mexican citizen will pay 1,700 to 2,000 tax-free dollars for a marriage and once he gets the visa, he leaves the wife with two or three kids for Uncle Sam to support on welfare, which is paid for by the American taxpayers.

I'm not saying that every illegal alien is this way. Some are not. But some get on drugs, get arrested, tried and sentenced and then crowd our jails and prisons, cause prison riots while living on taxpayers' money.

The country has blown its budget out of proportion by being so generous with illegal aliens. We've set up educational facilities in order to teach them our language and our American system and they repay us with a slap on the face because we are so dumb as to work for our living while they don't.

The problem is too much assistance. Our country encourages illegal immigration by offering welfare assistance to people who come here seeking citizenship status and obtain Social Security cards and other papers. Why should we keep paying welfare to a woman who married an illegal immigrant after the man has already left her? Our government has spent millions of dollars to train these people different job skills, but they like welfare better. We should help her to a point, yes. But then we should cut off the welfare.

I believe in welfare for people who have earned it, such as the sick, the old and the handicapped. These illegal immigrants should attempt to better themselves. After all, life is what you make it. I don't believe we should have to learn to speak any foreign language to accommodate anyone.

Employers of illegal aliens should be fined because whether an employer is paying less is beside the point. If he's paying less, he's discriminating through wages.

Another way to address the illegal immigration problem would be to punish those in drug-related cases to the fullest extent. Funds confiscated in drug-related cases should not be refunded. Also, ports of entry to the United States should be closed down in order to better monitor who is coming into the country.

The country needs to have responsible caseworkers in agencies such as the Immigration & Naturalization Service, welfare and Planned Parenthood who can educate the illegal aliens and to cope with the problems of immigrants in this country. We need to deal with the human problems. We the people know what the problem is and what it takes to solve it. I do not believe in discrimination of races of people, just in actions.

But to stop illegal aliens from coming in, people of Mexican descent when arrested should be detained until proof of citizenship or other permit of entry is shown.

Let's not go around thinking we are smart because we are not. We are letting illegal aliens outsmart us and often victimize us as well.

Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

NEW YORK — There was good news from Europe earlier this week about our economy which I want to be sure you know about in case you missed seeing it in this, hopefully your favorite, newspaper.

There has been a lot of speculation recently that the federal deficit will not be reduced sufficiently to avert a recession in the next year or so.

As regular readers of this column may remember, I have been optimistic about the basic strength of our economy and therefore not unduly worried about the danger of the deficit precipitating another recession. I have not just been whistling in the dark. My confidence has been inspired to a considerable extent by the conviction of one of Europe's leading monetary experts who is also a warm friend.

More than two years ago, Lord Harold Lever, former senior cabinet member and financial adviser to the last two British Labor Party governments, told me in London the American people should not be greatly worried about the deficit. He did not believe it would bring about a recession. That was long before there was any assurance Congress would enact measures to reduce the deficit by cutting government spending.

While Lord Lever believed a deficit that topped $200 billion should be brought down gradually, he did not think even that high figure would wreck our economy.

"Most people in the United States and elsewhere who are obsessed about the high American deficit haven't studied the problem closely," he said. "While you've got easily the biggest deficit in the world, you also happen to have the biggest single economy in the world."

In subsequent meetings Harold has continued to maintain that view which has led me to discount the gloom and doom predictions of some economists and media pundits.

It was therefore particularly gratifying to read the report sent from Paris in mid-week by Bernard Kaplan, our chief European correspondent, the highlights of which follow:

"A growing number of European economists are betting that conditions are ripe for renewed American expansion within the next six months, notwithstanding the current spate of discouraging statistics.

"This sudden and unexpected show of optimism comes from some of the same experts who earlier were loudest to sound warnings over the dangers of America's deficit and its unfavorably lopsided trade balance.

"Now, according to one of them, Hans Grotemayer of the Essen Economic Institute, the domestic and trade deficits may have been overemphasized. At the same time, a number of the American economy's underlying strengths were too readily ignored.

" 'The chances of a resumption of American growth over the next 12 months are at least as great as of the U.S. moving into recession,' he says in his organization's latest bulletin.

"The West German economist doesn't expect 'miracles.' A renewal of economic expansion, if it happens, will, he believes, be 'modest,' in the neighborhood of three per cent for a 12-month period up to mid-summer 1987.

"He said such a growth rate would be a 'respectable accomplishment with positive significance for the whole world economy.'

"Another economist who views America's prospects optimistically is Christian Chardin, a senior executive of France's Bank for Foreign Trade, who argued that figures indicating a drop in overall U.S. production had been widely misinterpreted.

"'It's true that total output shows the U.S. economy marking time,' he said. 'But that's because of the severe crises which have hit agriculture and the oil industry.'

"This was misleading because, with those exceptions, U.S. output remained comparatively strong and the growth of service industries, representing about two-thirds of the GNP, continued at a healthy rate, he added."

Warren T. Brookes, one of the most acclaimed and erudite financial writers in America, wrote for Hearst News and Feature Service recently that the Department of Commerce failed to mention several significant aspects of the nation's economy.

He said at the time the GNP was supposedly falling flat, that disposable personal income — the largest component of GNP — was soaring by 7.4 percent, following a rise of 6.5 percent in the first quarter. Brookes added that it was "the fastest two-quarter rise (6.9 percent) in 22 years."

That was the brightest news I've seen this week and I hope it cheers you up as much as it does me.

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

First week at MC features several bulging classrooms

By H. A. TUCK

The first week of classes went well, though many rooms are bulging and won't handle any more students. Late registration continues this week and through Sept. 17.

Hours for late registration this week are 8 a.m. to 8 p.m. Monday, 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. Tuesday through Thursday, and 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Friday.

Persons who want to take 12 hours of credit courses or more must register by Tuesday, Sept. 9. The last day of registration for those planning to take less than 12 hours is Wednesday, Sept. 17. But remember the longer you wait to register, the more make-up work you'll face and the harder it will be to do all the course work.

If you would like to check on which courses still have openings, you should visit the Student Services Office in the Administration Building or call 685-4501. Do it Monday!

Almost everyone will find something interesting in the exhibit now on display at the McCormick Gallery. Entitled "Book of Days," the show is comprised of black-and-white photos selected from hundreds of Texas photographers, with most of the photos made in Texas. Almost none of them are traditional landscape photos, although many folks seem to be experimenting with infrared film for their landscapes.

The McCormick Gallery is located in the Allison Fine Arts Building. Gallery hours are 1 to 5 p.m. Sunday, 8 a.m. to 10 p.m. Monday through Thursday, 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Friday, and 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Saturday. This exhibit remains through Oct. 2.

Last week we introduced quite a number of new faculty members. Here is information about the remainder of the new full-time people:

Bob Templeton assumes the position as Allison Professor of Journalism, replacing the retired Ralph Sellmeyer. Templeton received his BS degree from East Texas State University and his MJ from North Texas State University. He's been editor of the Hereford Brand, teaching assistant at North Texas, magazine editor for Equity Media in Dallas, corporate communications specialist for EDS Corporation in Dallas, part-time instructor at Eastfield College in Garland for four years, and public relations manager of the Texas Credit Union League in Dallas the past two years.

Cindy Turland began Aug. 1 as Director of the Adult Basic Education programs, where she began as a volunteer and then as a part-time paid instructor. Her BS degree is from Texas A&I University and her MA in special education is from UT-Permian Basin. She was employed by the Andrews School District for nine years, where she established and taught the program for emotionally disturbed students. She had a similar teaching position with the Greenwood School District for two years.

Katherine Voss-Roberts is a new biology lab instuctor. She received her MS degree from Arizona State University, where she served as a teaching assistant. Her BS was earned at the University of Wisconsin. Katherine also attended Northern Arizona University and Arizona State University. She's done considerable research in ornithology.

There are 20 interesting Continuing Education Courses starting this week, offering a chance to learn new skills quickly and at very low costs. The courses include: Assertiveness Training, Bridge I, Cake Decorating I, Graphology I, Pilot Instrumental Training, Pilot Ground Training, Stained Glass I, Bookkeeping I, Calligraphy I, Drawing, Conversational French, Woodworking I, Introduction to Photography, Auto Service Techniques for Women, Bridge II, Figure Drawing, Interior Decorating I, Woodworking II, Tole Painting I, and Concrete Masonary.

You'll note that quite a few of these courses have a "I" behind them, which indicates there's a second course for those who complete one and want to learn even more about a subject.

To register, visit the Continuing Education Office in the Administration Building Monday.

Teacher can ease aliens' transition

Associated Press

EL PASO — Armando Magellanes, an El Paso construction worker, has passed his citizenship test.

"Yes, it was hard," he tells other members of his citizenship class in Armijo Recreation Center. He thumps his chest to show how fast his heart had beat. When the examiner asked him if his application was "fact," he had not understood the word. He was afraid he'd failed.

"You are giving us a little lift," Luz Rodriguez, class instructor, says. She turns to the other students: "What nationality are you?"

"Mexican," they respond.

"And what nationality are you?" she asks Magellanes.

"American," he says laughing.

The class applauds. Magellanes hands the teacher a thank-you present: flower plaques.

"The biggest gift is to see you pass the exam. It makes my day," she tells him. "When someone takes the exam, I never wear a blouse with buttons, because I pop them off with pride."

Magellanes is the 42nd successful graduate of Ms. Rodriguez's ongoing class, organized in 1983 by Armijo Branch Public Library.

"Why did I volunteer as teacher? I don't know. I just like to see people try to get ahead," Ms. Rodriguez says.

And she had some extra time. She'd just closed the beauty shop she'd operated 40 years in her El Paso home. Besides, the Chihuahua-born woman has been interested in government and history since she studied for her own U.S. citizenship in 1941.

The free class meets at 6 p.m. Tuesdays and Thursdays. Ms. Rodriguez infuses a little sparkle, even some fireworks, into the citizenship drills.

"OK, girls and boys, let's start," she begins, collecting homework. "If you study, you'll get rid of that nervousness. You'll go in for your test like this, 'Ask me anything.' Supposing they ask you....

Columbus came in the Mayflower, right? No, of course not. The Pinta, the Nina and the Santa Maria.

"Why is the Fourth of July celebrated? It is the anniversary of the independence of the United States. Say 'anniVERsary.' Are any of these words hard for you to say? If you don't understand on your test, tell the examiner, 'I didn't hear you. Please repeat the question.'

"What was the reason for the War of Independence? The colonists were dissatisfied. England passed laws and taxed them, and the king did what he wanted. Sure, he was a king.

"Listen to me, who was the greatest general of the War of Independence? Thomas Jefferson? Lincoln? No. George Washington, right?

"Here is a diagram that tell you about your government. You've got to copy it. The president has to be native-born, so none of us could be president. R-e-a-g-a-n. Have you got it right? Who votes for Congress? We do? Not yet. Who is Speaker of the House? Tip O'Neill. There he is in a picture with Dolly Parton.

"Is it 'Constitutional amendments' or 'commandments'? What does posterity mean? Can you say 'tranquility.'

"What is the population? About 200 million. 'About' because every day somebody is born and somebody dies and somebody crosses the river.

"Show me how to do the Pledge of Allegiance. When is it proper to display the American flag? Fiestas? Every day, weather permitting.

"Let's study about dates — fechas, fechas. What happened July 4? What important happened in 1845? What other important dates — the year you become a citizen of the United States, right?

"Look at this question: 'Why do you want to become an American citizen?' I want you to think of something of your own."

Arnulfo Porras, an auto parts salesman formerly of Chihuahua, likes to unfurl the flag before each class meeting. He says he wants to be a citizen:

"This country adopted me and I have more opportunities here."

Santiaga Guerrero, a factory worker who has lived in El Paso 13 years, has been dreaming of citizenship since she was a little girl.

EDUCATION IN BRIEF

She makes sure you don't bother birds

Associated Press

CORPUS CHRISTI — People ruffle Emilie Payne's feathers because they bother her birds.

They do things like put up fishing huts on the tiny spoil islands in the Laguna Madre, land helicopters on the islands, and let boys take target practice with BB guns.

This kind of activity annoys the birds, and anything that annoys the birds annoys Emilie Payne.

Those humans!

She puts them in the same category as dogs, coyotes, raccoons and other varmints when it comes to talent for frightening the thousands of birds who come to the Coastal Bend to nest.

Buzzing along the shallow waters of the Laguna Madre on a recent morning, Ms. Payne surveyed her realm and said, "It's just paradise here, isn't it? If people would just leave it alone."

In her view, if it doesn't have feathers and lay eggs, it doesn't belong with the birds. So she has taken it on herself to keep the sand sanctuaries free of vexatious humans.

She regulary patrols the waters near Pelican, South Bird and Shamrock islands in a small motorboat — a Boston Whaler — in which she carries wooden signs to mark bird sanctuaries.

She is a warden for the National Audubon Society and is considered an expert on brown pelicans.

She has a quick tongue when her birds are endangered, which, she said, has made her some "non-friends."

Emilie Payne's one-woman bird campaign started some 20 years ago when she went on her first official bird count.

The brown pelicans were near extinction and she was a fledgling environmentalist.

"They put me ashore on the banks, and I never saw anything like it — there were thousands of them and they wanted me to count those birds. Well, my life was never the same afer that."

Her life since has been devoted to birds.

A baby brown pelican bit her upper lip when she clamped a plastic band to its leg. To Ms. Payne, the angry snap holds the significance of a kiss, and she says she wishes it had left a scar.

Once a struggling species, the brown pelicans are thriving around Redfish Bay, largely because they are raising their young without human dissturbance on Pelican Island, Ms. Payne said. This year a record 500 baby birds hatched on the island.

Standing in the shallows of the Laguna Madre, her telescope aimed at a flock of white pelicans, the straw-hatted bird champion marvels that whole families have camped on South Bird Island.

"I almost had a heart attack," she said, when one boy in a family camped on Pelican Island started shooting at seagulls with his BB gun.

Over the years she has witnessed a lot of human infractions and, she said, in each instance, the two-legged invaders flushed the birds away from their nests and their helpless young.

It's vital, she explained, that wild birds have an isolated oasis to hatch and fledge their young, safe from coyotes and other predators. Thus, the miniature islands that dot Coastal Bend waterways have become haven to thousands of nesting birds.

Unfortunately, they also attract people.

The islands, she said, "are necessary for them and a luxury for us."

She once dropped anchor next to two fisherman who refused to cooperate with her appeal to leave the shore of Pelican Island, so she started to chat. "Fishermen hate that," she said, and they left.

"These people do not realize they are doing harm just by being there," she said.

"I have an extreme amount of respect for her," says Jerry Unruh, fellow environmentalist and past president of the Coastal Bend Audubon Society.

"She's among a group of rather strong women I know that I'm very impressed with. When most people are content to sit and watch television and watch the world go by, she's out in the bay in her Boston Whaler in all types of weather."

Indeed, Ms. Payne has sat out more than one storm in the Boston Whaler and has even pulled ashore on Pelican Island — commiting one of her own cardinal sins — because of a nasty storm.

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Perhaps Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby put it best when he said the House is out to "save state government by dismanteling it."

The junior chamber's zeal to use the $3.5 billion state deficit as a catalyst for budget crunching has extended of late to the op-ed pages of various Texas newspapers. Defending their colleagues against the vitriolic outcries of senators who call them hard-hearted hypocrites, Reps. Mike Toomey of Houston, Mark Stiles of Beaumont and Rick Williamson of Weatherford have begun to play the old numbers game.

Over the last 10 years, they point out, the state budget has increased more than 150 percent. Quoting Toomey: "It is inconceivable that such growth could have occured without administrative excesses, misplaced spending priorities, duplication, legislative pork-barrel or pockets of waste."

If the House gives in now to senatorial demands for a tax increase, they argue, the opportunity to really streamline state government will be lost forever.

Unfortunately for the well-intentioned conservatives, their sheer-growth/we-gotta-cut-now contention falls through on both accounts.

Let's start with a look at the numbers. In May 1973, the Legislature adopted a $9.8 billion budget for the 1974-1975 biennium. Last spring, lawmakers approved 1986-1987 appropriations totalling $37.3 billion. That's a 281-percent increase over 12 years.

But over that same dozen years, the Texas population has grown by 36 percent. A 1974 dollar buys only 42 cents worth of goods and services today. Adjusting for that inflation and population growth, the 281-percent budget increase drops down to 16.9 percent — 1.4 percent per year.

Well that's still growth in government, you say. Admitted. But maybe, just maybe, the Texas Legislature over those 12 years was finally meeting some obligations from which it had abdicated in the past.

The greatest dollar increases came for education, and the state still lags behind the nation in scholastic achievement. We've had programs to control disease among calves for years, but not until 1985 did the Legislature decide to finance indigent health care — mostly for young, sick humans.

Even still, Texas ranks among the bottom three or four states in per-capita taxes collected and expenditures made by state government.

From fiscal 1974 to fiscal 1987, population-and-inflation-adjusted state spending on human services actually declined 3.9 percent. Natural resources and recreational services payments dropped 19.8 percent.

Enough on that already, let's look at the House contention that proposed budget cuts are eliminating some of that growing governmental fat. Not counting the zapping of the 3-percent pay raise state employees had expected to take effect Labor Day, the House has chopped $668.9 million from the fiscal 1987 budget.

Is it cutting out excess and waste by slicing $282.2 million from higher education — 15.3 percent of the 1987 appropriations for universities, medical schools and junior colleges — and then telling the institutions they can take the cuts wherever they like?

Is it "purging the accumulated layers of unnecessary bureaucracy" by ordering a similar, $26 million, take-it-where-you-want-it cut for most health and human services agencies?

One of the House's deepest cuts took $4.6 million from the Department of Public Safety. Will keeping 90 new troopers off the highway streamline government operations?

The House leadership says it wants to wait until the January regular session starts so it will have the time to more thoroughly examine the state's economic straits before plunging headlong into a tax increase. In the meantime, they say, let's cut when we can.

Obviously, that same argument applies to cutting as well as taxing. If a 30-day special session isn't long enough to get a good grip on the Texas economy, those wholesale, unspecified House budget cuts prove that it sure isn't enough time to root out inefficient governmental bureaucracy.

House prepares for debate on immigration reform

By PEGGY ROBERSON
Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON — The House reluctantly is preparing for a new contentious and emotional floor debate on immigration reform soon after members return from their summer recess this week.

Supporters hope to stave off amendments that would almost surely kill the bill on the floor or, if it passes, in a subsequent conference to reconcile differences with a version approved by the Senate a year ago.

The House Rules Committee has scheduled a Wednesday meeting to devise a plan for floor debate that probably will permit a limited number of amendments, but sources close to behind-the-scenes negotiations said it could be postponed.

This marks the fourth successive year in which Congress has considered immigration reform. In 1984, immigration legislation cleared both houses but fizzled out in a House-Senate conference committee in the waning days of the session leading up to fall elections.

The centerpiece of the latest bill, like the earlier efforts, is an attempt to penalize employers who hire undocumented workers in order to remove the lure of jobs that presumably attract a flood of immigrants. Coupled with employer sanctions is legalization for illegals who have been in the country for several years.

The most difficult issue again this year, once more only weeks away from congressional elections, is how to regulate the use of foreign workers in agriculture.

The House Judiciary Committee grudgingly accepted a compromise that would give a "green card," signifying permanent resident status, to farm workers who had worked 60 days in American agriculture between May 1985 and May 1986. It was intended to appease Western growers who had insisted on a large foreign "guest worker" program to guarantee them adequate labor for harvesting perishable crops.

The Senate, bowing to the growers, included in its bill a greatly expanded guest worker program, sponsored chiefly by Sen. Pete Wilson, R-Calif., that would allow up to 350,000 workers into the country each year for as long as nine months. They could move crop-to-crop and state-to-state within specified agricultural regions but they would be required to return to their own countries after working in the fields and would not be permitted to adjust their status to permanent resident alien.

House Judiciary Committee Chairman Peter W. Rodino Jr., D-N.J., adamantly opposed a guest worker program and vowed never to support a bill with such a provision. "I would rather see no bill than one which could jeopardize the wages and working condtions of American farm workers and allows the large-scale influx of foreign farm workers," Rodino said in opening remarks to his committee.

It was an effort to overcome his and others' objections that led three Democrats — Charles E. Schumer, N.Y., and Howard L. Berman, Calif., both Judiciary Committee members, and Leon E. Panetta, Calif., a member of the Agriculture Committee — to draft the measure now known as the "Schumer compromise" that would give resident status to those who had worked in American fields for two months between May, 1985 and May, 1986.

These workers would not be required to remain in agriculture, and the provision allows them to be replenished by foeigners if they take jobs outside agriculture. Replenishment workers would have to work 60 days in agriculture for each of two years or be sent home. If they wanted to become citizens they would have to work another 60 days in agriculture for each of three additional years. The bill sets a cap on the number of farm workers to be admitted under the permanent resident program, with the cap declining by 5 percent each year.

The Schumer compromise has won tentative support from some former foes, including the National Council of La Raza, a national Hispanic organization, and some church groups.

Another influential Hispanic group, the Mexican American Defense and Education Fund, remains strongly opposed, mostly because members believe any employer penalties would result in hiring discrimination against workers who "look foreign" or have "foreign sounding" names, even if they are native born. Mario Marino, a MALDEF attorney, said the way to ensure an adequate supply of farm workers is to improve working conditions and pay, not to import thousands of foreigners who could be easily exploited.

The board of directors of the American Civil Liberties Union considered the issue at a recent national meeting and again went on record as opposing immigration reform as envisioned by both the House and Senate bills.

Schumer and Berman, defending their proposal against critics, said without their plan immigration reform is dead for this year. They said their compromise would help avoid a battle with the Agriculture Committee, which had succeeded in attaching a massive guest worker program to the bill on the floor in 1984.

The compromise also would revise and expand the existing "H-2" worker program, under which employers petition the Labor Department for foreign workers for a specified time and type of work. Labor lobbyists and representatives of Northeast and Southeast growers, who previously had opposed immigration legislation, helped to draft this section.

Among the opponents to the Schumer compromise was Rep. Romano Mazzoli, D-Ky., one of the chief co-sponsors of the failed 1984 bill. He called it a "rolling legalization" program that would entice people to come into the country — the exact opposite of the stated goal of immigration reform.

Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, was quoted as saying the proposal is "even too absurd for the House of Representatives."

INS lacks funds for deportation

LINCOLN, Neb. (AP) — The U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service regional office is so low on funds that it won't be sending illegal aliens back aross the U.S. border, the agency's director said.

The regional agency stopped deporting aliens two weeks ago, district director Dennis Holm said Friday. Unless an alien commits a crime, Holm said, no one will be deported until the new fiscal year starts in October.

"When the money is gone, it's gone," Holm said from his Omaha office. "We're only going to pick up criminal aliens."

Since they stopped deporting aliens, 17 people have been released in Iowa and Nebraska, Holm said. Eight people were let go in the Panhandle and three people were released in Ravenna.

"Just to jail two or three aliens when they're so many out there is ridiculous," Holm said. "If we went out and picked them up, we'd have to ask them to voluntarily leave the country and they won't do that."

The district normally is allocated $30,000 to $40,000 a quarter to deport aliens. But, Holm said, a heavier than usual influx of aliens has depleted the money.

The cost of sending one person from Omaha to El Paso, Texas, by bus is $350, Holm explained.

Others have been flown to a deportation depot in Denver but that option has been discontinued temporarily since the agency can no longer use discount air fares supplied by recently folded Frontier Airlines.

"It's not cheap to send the aliens away," Holm said.

The regional INS office, based in Omaha, has five investigators that cover nearly 144,000 square miles, spanning from Chadron to Davenport, Iowa.

People who make it through the wire fences and harsh desert conditions along the Mexican border, the unofficial port of entry for many, often follow Interstate 80 into Nebraska, he said.

They find work in fields in the Panhandle and also in packing plants in Iowa and eastern Nebraska, Holm said. Many of them are single men who send money back to families in Mexico.

However, Holm said, now whole families are crossing the border because of an immigration bill that has stalled in Congress but would give resident status to aliens already here.

"Our interiors are getting fuller and fuller all the time," he said.

But since it cannot afford to deport aliens, Holm said, his office will focus on detecting fraudulent immigration papers and aiding other agencies in preventing drug smuggling.

"We'll try to deport but we won't always be able to do it," he said. "It's going to be a little skinny till the end of the month."

GOP 'vulnerable,' Democrats 'immune?'

Both parties target Texas races in November balloting

By KATHRYN BAKER

WASHINGTON (AP) — Republicans concede that two freshman GOP Texas congressmen are vulnerable to defeat this year, while Democrats insist their incumbents are immune from upsets.

Both parties say they hope to cut into each other's territory, with Republicans targeting three Democrats and Democrats aiming to reclaim three districts.

"We will pick up seats in November in Texas," said Rep. Tony Coehlo, D-Calif., chairman of the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee.

"Certainly, we don't have the luxury of Ronald Reagan on the ticket in 1986, I wish we did, I'd feel better about our changes to win," said Kelly Johnston, regional field manager for the National Republican Congressional Committee. "But overall, we have no reason not to be enthusiastic."

With Ronald Reagan at the top of the ticket in 1984, Republicans won in four districts that had been Democratic. They also held onto two open GOP seats. That raised their share of the 27-member delegation from four to an unprecedented 10 members.

Two of the "six-pack" of GOP freshmen — Mac Sweeney of Wharton and Joe Barton of Ennis — appeared to be in for tough re-election races, according to spokesmen for both parties.

But both parties claim an edge in winning the open seat that Republican Tom Loeffler of Hunt left for an unsuccessful run at the GOP nomination for governor. That race pits long-time Democratic state Sen. Pete Snelson against former Bexar County Commissioner Lamar Smith.

The huge district, which stretches from San Antonio to Big Bend, has traditionally been represented by a West Texan, but the corner comprised by Bexar County has a disproportionate number of the voters.

Snelson was being dramatically outspent by Smith, but Snelson is well-known in the district from his years in the state Senate.

"He's a popular, local Texas Democrat and he's running on his record," said Mark Johnson, a spokesman for the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee.

"This is a Republican district," said the GOP's Johnston, noting that Clements received 62 percent of the vote in the 1982 gubernatorial election even though he lost statewide.

Three Democratic incumbents have been targeted by the Republicans — John Bryant of Dallas, Jake Pickle of Austin and Ron Coleman of El Paso — as being out of touch with voters in their districts.

"Every House Democratic incumbent from Texas will be re-elected in the fall," Coehlo said flatly.

In perhaps the worst trouble is Sweeney, who defeated incumbent Democrat Bill Patman of Ganado in 1984. He has been accused by members of his congressional staff of insisting that they work on his re-election campaign, and newspapers in the district wrote that his congressional office expenditures are the highest among the Texas delegation.

"Mac has certainly been the victim of pretty harsh attacks, and some of it may even be justified," said Johnston. "But he's done a tremendous job of representing his district."

Despite Sweeney's vulnerability, Democrats were unable to recruit a "name" candidate to run against him. He faces attorney Greg Laughlin of West Columbia.

"Sweeney is an extremely vulnerable fella, but our candidate is an absolute novice," said a Democrat in Washington who did not want to be quoted by name.

Both Laughlin and Sweeney have borrowed heavily to finance their campaigns.

Barton faces a more formidable opponent, Fort Worth attorney Pete Geren, former state director for Democratic Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, in a district that Democrats see as basically theirs.

The 6th, which stretches from Houston to Dallas, was represented by Democrats until Phil Gramm switched parties in 1983 and won a special election as a Republican.

Gramm left the seat to run for the Senate. Barton barely squeaked through the 1984 GOP primary, then won the general election without much trouble.

Barton received some negative attention when he was accused of inflating his engineering credentials on his resume. But he has avoided Democratic complaints about Republican response to the woes of the oil industry by going against the Republican tide and supporting an oil import fee.

If Democrats are hoping to reclaim Barton and Sweeney's districts, Republicans say they are confident of picking up two districts they say are becoming increasingly Republican.

Mesquite attorney Tom Carter is running against John Bryant as too liberal for the East Dallas constituency. But Bryant is in better shape for campaign money.

In Austin, the constituency is affected by the University of Texas vote, which has been shifting from liberal Democrat to Republican.

Pickle, who was elected in 1963 to the seat that Lyndon Johnson once held, faces former Austin Mayor Carole Keeton Rylander, who switched to the GOP to run against him. Ms. Rylander has picked up little traditional political backing and was far behind in contributions. She is expected to rely on new Republican voters.

Like Bryant and Pickle, Republicans say, Coleman's politics are out of sync with his constituency. They are running accountant Roy Gillia against him.

Republicans seem to have dropped their earlier touting of a possible upset in the 12th district represented by Jim Wright, who is expected to become speaker of the House next year.

The other incumbents were not expected to have trouble in their races:

— Charles Wilson, D-Lufkin, versus Liberty salesman Julian Gordon;

— Ralph Hall, D-Rockwall, versus Tyler attorney Thomas Blow;

— Martin Frost, D-Dallas, versus Irving pilot Bob Burk;

— Jack Brooks, D-Beaumont, versus Beaumont investment counselor Lisa Duperier;

— Jack Fields, R-Humble, versus salesman Blaine Mann of Spring;

— Beau Boulter, R-Amarillo, versus Doug Seal, a farmer from Wellington;

— Richard Armey, R-Denton, versus Grapevine developer George Richardson;

— Bill Archer, R-Houston, versus Harry Kniffen, a Houston truck driver;

— Tom DeLay, R-Sugar Land, versus Houston political consultant Susan Director;

And the rest were unopposed in the general election: Jim Chapman, D-Sulphur Springs; Marvin Leath, D-Marlin; Mickey Leland, D-Houston; Kika de la Garza, D-Mission; Charles Stenholm, D-Stamford; Henry B. Gonzalez, D-San Antonio; Albert Bustamante, D-San Antonio; Mike Andrews, D-Houston; Solomon Ortiz, D-Corpus Christi; and Steve Bartlett, R-Dallas.

Texas school abandons controversial flag

GRAND PRAIRIE (AP) — A high school football team, in its first game of the season, decided to abandon the Confederate flag that brought it so many headaches last year.

A few South Grand Prairie High School students draped themselves in blanket-sized Rebel flags to keep dry during the rain-soaked game Friday night, but Principal Buddy Perry said the team was given the choice of displaying the flag as a team symbol and chose not to.

"It was left up to the students, because this is all for them," he said.

One player who didn't want to be identified said the students who wanted to keep the flag as a symbol had all graduated.

Lee Alcorn, local chapter president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said the NAACP had observers at Friday night's game and would have staged protests at later games if the flag had been flown.

NAACP members picketed South Grand Prairie's last home football game in 1985 after the school board refused to ban the flag.

Perry said he didn't know whether the flag would be displayed during any future games.

"Once again, it will be a team decision," he said.

The Texas Education Agency earlier this year told school officials to stop sanctioning use of the flag and warned that their school district could lose state accreditation and millions of dollars in state aid.

Grand Prairie school board president Jim Swafford said his group would consider at its meeting Sept. 11 whether it will appeal the agency's order.

The TEA warning came after the NAACP filed a complaint over the flag following a refusal by a black sophomore, Fred Coleman Jr., to play under the flag because he believed it was racist. Coleman later transferred schools.

The 2,250-member student body later voted to continue flying the flag by a 4-1 margin, but senior cheerleader Sean Wheetley said Friday that the team had the TEA order in mind when deciding not to display the flag.

"We decided it as in the best interest of the school if we waited until after the appeal before we carried the flag," he said.

Full Democratic field eyes election

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG
AP Political Writer

WASHINGTON — Gary Hart is stocking up on beef. Joe Biden is grilling a Cabinet member one week, a Supreme Court justice the next. Mario Cuomo has been preoccupied with who will be lieutenant governor of New York and Lee Iacocca is saying, no, no, no.

And they are only a few of the names in a crowded Democratic field relishing the prospect of the first presidential election of the post-Reagan era.

Campaigning for the 1986 elections is just heating up, but the jockeying for the 1988 Democratic presidential nomination already is going full steam. No one has declared his candidacy, but there is plenty of early activity.

So far, the Democrats have avoided the sort of bloodshed that usually marks the struggles for the party's presidential nomination and often leaves the winner badly wounded.

But what pleases them most is the prospect of running against someone other than Ronald Reagan.

The Democrats never laid a glove on Reagan. They carried six states in 1980 and one in 1984.

While the prospect of Reagan's retirement is a source of Democratic delight, many party leaders are aware that their decline in presidential politics began well before 1980.

The Democrats have lost four of the last five presidential elections and their nominees have been particularly weak in the South and West, the high-growth Sunbelt states.

As a result, the potential Democratic candidates are busy establishing their credentials as spokesmen for the party's future rather than prisoners of its past.

Finding himself in the unfamiliar role of early front-runner, Hart is working hard to assure that no opponent can score points during the next campaign by repeating Walter F. Mondale's question from 1984: "Where's the beef?"

The Colorado senator, who is giving up his seat when his term expires in January, has written a book on defense policy, delivered a lecture series on foreign affairs, and issued a steady stream of statements on a broad range of issues.

Hart said in an interview that he welcomes the attention his ideas get because of his role as front-runner.

"If I'm right about my notion that ideas have power, and it's not just personalities, then I welcome the attention to those ideas," he said.

Linked to one of the ideas getting a lot of attention is Rep. Richard Gephardt, D-Mo., who may try to make the tough jump from the House of Representatives to the White House.

Gephardt's issue is tax simplification. He was an early champion of that cause along with Sen. Bill Bradley, D-N.J. The tax bill that is expected to clear Congress in mid-September may get Gephardt more attention as he quietly moves around the country, meets with party regulars and tries to become better known, particularly in Iowa and New Hampshire, the states that lead off the caucus and primary season.

Former Gov. Charles Robb of Virginia is staking out the conservative territory as chairman of the Democratic Leadership Conference. Robb, Gephardt and Gov. Bruce Babbitt of Arizona were prime movers in formation of the council which was designed to inject conservative ideas into a party they felt had drifted too far left and was tied too closely to labor and various interest groups.

Babbitt achieved a bit of one upmanship in the competition for attention by bicycling across Iowa and mountain climbing in New Hampshire.

Biden capitalized on his position as a senior member of two important Senate committees — Foreign Relations where he had a heated confrontation with Secretary of State George Shultz over South African policy, and Judiciary where he questioned Justice William Rehnquist at the hearing on his nomination to be chief justice.

The prospect of a Southern regional primary on March 8, 1988, is particularly attractive to party conservatives who have spent the past year making that dream a reality.

But it also has its appeal to the Rev. Jesse Jackson, who stands alone on the left wing of the party and appears virtually certain to make another run for the presidency. Opponents of the regional primary have argued that in a crowded field, Jackson could end up the winner in Southern states with sizable black electorates.

Jackson surprised many party leaders with the strength of his 1984 campaign and this time he is far better organized. Jackson is using his Rainbow Coalition to build a grass roots organization and also is courting support among financially distressed farmers.

Cuomo is running for a second term as governor of New York and recently has been preoccupied with trying to assure that his choice for lieutenant governor, Rep. Stanley Lundine, becomes the Democratic nominee for that post.

Standing in the way was Abraham Hirschfeld, a wealthy New York City developer. A state judge ruled Hirschfeld off the ballot and the state's higest court upheld that ruling on Thursday.

While Cuomo refuses to discuss a possible presidential candidacy, the identity of his lieutenant governor could become an issue if he decides to try for the 1988 nomination. If Cuomo ran, the lieutenant governor would be the man in charge while he was campaigning around the country and would become governor if Cuomo were elected.

While most of the Democrats are grabbing at every opportunity to get some attention, two people who have no problem being noticed are giving no sign they're interested in running.

"Bill Bradley would be a terrific candidate," said Republican Gov. Thomas Kean of New Jersey recently. "I don't think the Democrats will be intelligent enough to nominate him."

Democratic pollster Peter Hart said the New Jersey senator and former professional basketball player now scores about 5 percent on polls asking Democrats for their 1988 choice. But, added Hart, Bradley probably would shoot into the front ranks if he declared his interest in running.

"Flattering" is how Bradley responds to the talk and so far he has made no move to capitalize on it.

Iacocca, chairman of Chrysler Corp., is the target of a draft movement, but has responded with his now familiar disavowal of interest: "I am not a candidate, do not plan to become a candidate, and see no circumstances that would change my mind."

What intrigues such Democrats as Greg Schneiders, a leader of the draft committee, is Iacocca's standing as an American folk hero, the man who saved Chrysler from bankruptcy.

But the automaker keeps saying no. He lives in Michigan where voters do not register by party and some Democrats suspect that in his heart Iacocca is a Republican.

Crime-victim organizations unite to criticize proposed funding cuts

AUSTIN (AP) — "Shame on you," a Fort Worth-area woman told Texas legislators Saturday for attempts to siphon money from a state fund that aids crime victims.

"Three years ago almost to the day, a man broke into my mother's home and beat her to death with a hammer while she slept," Donya Witherspoon told a gathering on the front steps of the Capitol.

She and representatives of crime-victim organizations in Fort Worth, Dallas, Austin, Harlingen, Waco, Harker Heights, El Paso and Lubbock met Saturday to plan demands on the 1987 Legislature.

But they also scolded budget cutters who tentatively plan to cut $2 million from the Crime Victims Compensation fund, which is administered by the attorney general's office for expenses and lost wages caused by violent crimes.

"It is even more shameful and more horrible that the people elected to represent and protect you take the money that is set up to help you go on living your lives and bury the loved ones," Ms. Witherspoon told about 50 people gathered at the Capitol, most of them carrying black balloons.

"I say that fund was set up and solely supported by fines imposed on convicted criminals and there are no tax monies involved. It is strictly money from criminals," she said.

"I say 'Shame on you' to any elected official who wants to take that money and further victimize people whose lives have been shattered," she added.

Bob Stearns of Austin, chairman of People Against Violent Crimes, said the compensation fund had paid $8.9 million to crime victims in the past year.

"It has helped a lot of victims through a lot of very, very tough times," Stearns said.

Ella Fitzgerald 'improving' after surgery

Fitzgerald

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Jazz singer Ella Fitzgerald has been improving daily since undergoing open heart surgery and soon will leave the intensive care unit, a hospital spokesman said Saturday.

"Her recovery has been very normal," Cedars-Sinai Medical Center spokesman Ron Wise said.

Miss Fitzgerald, 68, was listed in stable condition at Cedars-Sinai, where she underwent a coronary bypass Wednesday after being admitted Aug. 19, Wise said.

"She probably will be transferred sometime this weekend into a private room, where she'll probably be for about a week while she starts walking around and getting her strength back," Wise said.

A spokeswoman for Miss Fitzgerald said the singer's concert engagements for the remainder of 1986 have been canceled.

Miss Fitzgerald was hospitalized with congestive heart failure after becoming ill in her hotel room following a July 26 performance in Lewiston, N.Y.

Known for her improvisational "scat" singing, Miss Fitzgerald has made more than 250 record albums, and her biggest hit, "A-Tisket, A-Tasket," which she co-wrote, has been enshrined in the Grammy Hall of Fame.

Brenner

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Comedian David Brenner will headline a program of distinguished alumni when West Philadelphia High School celebrates its 75th anniversary next year.

Joseph Pollock, former superintendent of schools in Scranton, Pa., and president of the alumni association, said all living retired teachers who were on the West Philadelphia faculty will be guests at the reunion.

"We hope to reach more than 50,000 alumni now living all over the United States and the world," Pollock said.

Among prominent alumni are show business stars Jeanette MacDonald, Gale Sondergaard, Paul Douglas, John Carradine, "My Fair Lady" producer Herman Levin and pianist Eugene List.

NEW YORK (AP) — Jane Pauley, new mother and "Today" show host, will stay up late Thursday for a brief appearance on the morning program's live prime-time special, "Today At Night, Volume II."

Ms. Pauley, who gave birth to her third child, Thomas Moore, Aug. 27, has been on maternity leave since late July. Her husband is "Doonesbury" comic strip artist Garry Trudeau.

She is scheduled to return to NBC's top-rated morning broadcast on Oct. 10, the day before her 10th anniversary on "Today."

Simmons

LONDON (AP) — American balloonist Vera Simons says she has received offers from other European cities to do a sky sculpture for them, after putting an "aerial crown" on the National Gallery of Scotland for three weeks.

Her two-thirds size replica of the neoclassical building in white balloon fabric was inflated on the roof during the three-week Edinburgh International Arts Festival last month.

By day, the sculpture, which was 100 feet long, 66 feet wide and 28 feet high, reflected the changing sky. By night, it was illuminated.

Other cities showing interest are in Scotland, England and continental Europe, Miss Simons said before leaving Saturday for her home in Washington, D.C.

Miss Simons, who now spends more time as an artist than as a balloonist, holds an unofficial women's world record of 133 hours continuously aloft in a balloon.

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — Is she 36-22-37 or 35-23-36?

Only her dressmaker will know for sure because for the first time in about 40 years, the Miss America Pageant program this year will omit contestants' bust, waist and hip measurements.

Pageant Chairman Albert A. Marks Jr. said contest officials decided the statistics are "a non-essential collection of information" and "serve no useful purpose."

"Also, it has been one of two targets that are constantly aimed at by women's groups, such as NOW (National Organization for Women) and Women Against Pornography," he said.

The pageant, however, will provide the measurements to members of the news media who ask for them, Marks said.

Houston

NEW YORK (AP) — Dire Straits and the Swedish band a-Ha, which used the same director for their videos, dominated MTV's third-annual Music Awards.

Dire Straits' "Money for Nothing," which contained the lament, "I want my MTV," won the award for best video of the year.

A-Ha's "Take on Me," which featured animated footage, won for best concept, best new artist, best special effects, most experimental and best direction.

Whitney Houston won as best female vocalist for "How Will I Know" and Robert Palmer took top honors as best male vocalist for "Addicted to Love."

One tick all Falcons need

Senior halfback Marc Munafo led the Air Force Falcons with 120 yards on 17 attempts in the team's wishbone attack.

Miners quarterback Sammy Garza passed for 290 yards and two touchdowns while suffering two interceptions and fumbling the ball twice. Two of Garza's turnovers led to Falcon scoring drives.

Air Force raised its record to 2-0 overall and 2-0 in WAC play.

Odessa High grad sparks Raiders with interception TD

LUBBOCK — Sophomore safety Boyd Cowan's 83-yard interception return set off a 17-point third-quarter explosion that propelled Texas Tech to a 41-7 rout of Kansas State Saturday night.

Kansas State, 1-1, had the only touchdown of the first half, on quarterback Randy Williams' 46-yard strike to wide receiver John Williams.

But Scott Segrist's field goals of 22 and 22 yards allowed the Red Raiders to trail only 7-6 at the half.

Kansas State was at the Tech 28 early in the third quarter, but Cowan, a graduate of Odessa High, stepped in front of a pass aimed at Dan Hughes along the left sidelines and dashed 83 yards untouched for the score.

That set up a 25-yard field goal, and Tech quarterback Billy Joe Tolliver hit split end Wayne Walker for a 39-yard TD pass that widened the Red Raiders' lead to 23-7 with 4:34 left in the fourth quarter.

Tech made a rout of it in the fourth quarter, adding touchdowns of 3 and 2 yards by Bouvier Dale and Ervin Farris, and another 25-yard field goal by Segrist.

Tolliver was 19 of 40 for 204 yards and one touchdown, with one interception.

Kansas State completed 13 of 38 passes for 218 yards, but could add only 32 yards rushing on 32 carries. Tech picked up 157 yards on the ground.

Becker latest Mecir victim at U.S. Open

NEW YORK (AP) — Czechoslovakia's Miloslav Mecir upset Wimbledon champion Boris Becker 4-6, 6-3, 6-4, 3-6, 6-3 Saturday night to set up a men's singles title match against defending champion Ivan Lendl at the U.S. Open tennis championships.

In a women's singles semifinal Saturday, top-seeded Martina Navratilova fought off three match points before surviving against West Germany's Steffi Graf 6-1, 6-7 (7-3), 7-6 (10-8). She will meet seventh-seeded Helena Sukova for the title Sunday.

Earlier in the day, Lendl gained the men's singles final on the hard courts of the National Tennis Center for the fifth consecutive year by beating Sweden's Stefan Edberg 7-6, 6-2, 6-3.

All four singles finalists are natives of Czechoslovakia, the first time in the history of America's premier tennis event that all four finalists have been natives of the same foreign country.

Navratilova, however, became a naturalized American citizen in 1981 and Lendl lives in nearby Greenwich, Conn.

"This is the first time I did well here," the 16th-seeded Mecir said. "Maybe next time I can play even better on this surface. I'm just trying not to lose."

Against the hard-serving Becker, Mecir played marvelous tennis. He handled the West German's booming serve with ease, used his groundstrokes to move Becker from side to side, and hit his serves so deep that Becker had trouble handling them.

Baylor dodges Cowboys' bullet

LARAMIE, Wyo. (AP) — Baylor Coach Grant Teaff wasn't surprised Saturday by his 12th-ranked Bears' narrow 31-28 victory over Wyoming.

"I told everyone that would listen to me that it was going to be close. We had a couple of chances to grab a lead, but we did not execute," he said.

"I told my players that although they didn't win by as much as last year (39-18) they played better today," Teaff added. "They played better today because this is a much better football team."

Wyoming got a record-setting performance from stand-in quarterback Scott Runyan, who completed 28 of 53 passes for 343 yards, but watched a last-minute opportunity to win slip away when free safety Thomas Everett intercepted a Runyan pass with 1:29 left to play.

"I thought we could win the game there at the end," Wyoming first-year Coach Dennis Erickson said. "We ran a good route, but we missed the read and didn't see the safety. You've got to expect that (interceptions) when you're playing against great players. Everett is a great player."

Everett picked off two Runyan passes and Cody Carlson threw for 244 yards, but three missed conversion attempts by Wyoming proved to be Baylor's winning margin.

Sooners destroy No. 4 UCLA, 38-3

Associated Press

NORMAN, Okla. — Sophomore quarterbacks Jamelle Holieway and Eric Mitchel directed top-ranked Oklahoma's wishbone to a 479-yard land grab and the Sooners opened defense of their 1985 national college football championship Saturday by routing fourth-ranked UCLA 38-3.

Holieway capped a 12-play, 80-yard drive with a six-yard touchdown run midway through the second period, putting the Sooners ahead to stay, 10-3. Patrick Collins' one-yard TD run with 2:15 left made it 17-3 following the third of four first-half interceptions thrown by UCLA's Matt Stevens.

A fifth interception in the final period equaled the most ever thrown in a game by UCLA.

Sophomore Leon Perry, Oklahoma's backup fullback, rambled 24 yards for a third-quarter touchdown and Mitchel scored on a 10-yard run barely two minutes after he entered the game late in the period. He also ran a yard for Oklahoma's final touchdown with 6:10 left in the game.

The Sooners, who have a history of struggling in opening games, completely dominated the 1985 Pacific-10 Conference and Rose Bowl champions both offensively and defensively in the first meeting of the two schools.

They outrushed the Bruins 219 yards to 25 in the first half — Holieway carried nine times for 66 yards — and outgained them 228-89 while controlling the ball for 20 minutes and 17 seconds.

With All-American linebacker Brian Bosworth leading the charge, they also shut down UCLA's powerful ground game while cornerback Scott Garl, strong safeties Sonny Brown and David Vickers, linebacker Paul Migliazzo and free safety Ricky Dixon each contributed an interception.

Miami 23, Florida 15

GAINESVILLE, Fla. — Melvin Bratton scored touchdowns on runs of 24 and 20 yards and third-ranked Miami's defense stymied Florida's explosive offense as the Hurricanes knocked off the 13th-ranked Gators.

The contest had been billed as a matchup of potential Heisman Trophy-winning quarterbacks, but Bratton and the Miami defense that sacked Florida's Kerwin Bell six times and recovered four fumbles stole the spotlight.

Miami quarterback Vinny Testaverde was ineffective early, but tossed a 15-yard touchdown pass to Michael Irvin for a 23-9 lead with 11:12 left in the fourth quarter. The senior from Elmont, N.Y., finished with 12 completions in 25 attempts for 161 yards and was intercepted three times.

Alabama 42, Vanderbilt 10

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. — Alabama sophomore Gene Jelks raced 75 yards for a touchdown and Derrick Thomas blocked a punt and returned it for another score as the fifth-ranked Crimson Tide crushed Vanderbilt in SEC play.

No. 1 Christoval teaches Mustangs six-man lesson

From Staff Reports

It became painfully clear to Midland Christian and Coach Homer Jackson why the Christoval Cougars are the top-ranked six-man football team in the state.

Using a combination of size, speed and strength, Christoval romped over the Mustangs 60-14 Saturday afternoon, ending the game on the 45-point rule with more than three minutes left to play.

"You can see why they're rated where they are...I think it should be illegal how many big athletes they have out there," Jackson said. "But we scrapped with 'em all game and we looked like dwarfs out there.

"Our biggest kid was about as big as their smallest starter...That's intimidating in itself. I was impressed with Christoval."

The outmanned Mustangs did manage to put up a pair of scores on the afternoon, both thanks to junior Tony Corona. Corona connected with R.P. Johnson on a pass play to close the gap to 24-6 in the first half.

Then in the second half, with the Cougars threatening to invoke the point-rule early, Corona broke loose for a 39-yard touchdown run to make it 48-14.

"At least we got this one out of the way," Jackson said. "We're gonna' win some before it's all over with."

Next week Midland Christian looks for its first win of the season against Bethel Christian of New Mexico in a 2 p.m. Saturday game.

Cruz belts two-run homer to nip Cards in ninth, 7-6

Associated Press

HOUSTON — Jose Cruz hit a two-run homer off Todd Worrell with two out in the ninth inning Saturday to rally the Houston Astros to a 7-6 victory over the St. Louis Cardinals.

Charlie Kerfeld, 9-2, pitched the final inning and got the victory.

Steve Lake hit a three-run homer in a five-run sixth inning that helped the Cardinals tie the score 5-5 after trailing 5-1, and Ozzie Smith drove in a go-ahead run with a grounder in the seventh.

Smith grounded out to shortstop Dickie Thon in the seventh, scoring Andy Van Slyke with the go ahead run after the Cardinals had shelled Houston starter Bob Knepper in the sixth with five consecutive hits.

Knepper, the major league leader with five shutouts, blanked St. Louis until the sixth.

Lake's first home run of the season capped the surge, scoring Smith and Terry Pendleton, who had reached base on singles.

Jim Lindeman and Tito Landrum started the inning with singles and scored St. Louis' first two runs on the hits by Smith and Pendleton.

The Astros took a 5-0 lead when Glenn Davis sent the first pitch by Bob Forsch into the left field bleachers in the third inning after Bill Doran and Denny Walling each reached base on singles.

Davis singled in the second inning, went to second on Bass' groundout and scored Houston's first run on a double by Cruz. Cruz scored from second base on a line single to center field by John Mizerock.

Houston's Billy Hatcher extended his hitting streak to 15 games with an eighth-inning single, and St. Louis' Vince Coleman stole the 200th base of his career in the first inning.

National League

Mets 4, Padres 3

NEW YORK — Gary Carter hit two home runs, including the game winner with two out in the eighth inning, as the Mets defeated the San Diego Padres.

Carter's first home run brought the Mets within 3-2 in the sixth inning. His second, on a 3-2 pitch from Lance McCullers, 7-7, was his 21st of the season and capped a two-run rally.

Steve Garvey drove in a pair of San Diego runs, one with a leadoff homer in the second inning and another with a single in the Padres' two-run third inning. Garvey now has 32 RBI and seven homers in his last 35 games.

Reds 5, Cubs 1

CINCINNATI — Ted Power pitched seven strong innings and Dave Parker drove in two runs to lead the Cincinnati Reds to a victory over the struggling Chicago Cubs.

The victory boosted the Reds to 70-65, the first time they've been five games over .500 this season. They've won 10 of their last 13 games to secure a hold on second place in the national League West, trailing Houston by seven games.

Power, 6-6, made his fourth consecutive start after 229 relief appearances, allowing five hits and striking out five over seven innings. The right-hander shut out the Cubs until Ron Oester's error let in an unearned run in the seventh. Ron Robinson pitched the final two innings for the Reds.

Expos 3, Giants 1

MONTREAL — Luis Rivera's two-run single capped a three-run rally in the eighth inning and gave the Montreal Expos a victory over the San Francisco Giants.

Giants starter Kelly Downs took a three-hitter and 1-0 lead into the eighth, but left after Tim Raines led off with a double. Andre Dawson greeted Frank Williams, 2-1, with an infield single that sent Raines to third.

Tim Wallach followed with a grounder to third baseman Luis Quinones, who threw the ball past first base for an error, allowing Raines to score and putting runners at second and third. Rivera then grounded his single up the middle.

Dennis Martinez held the Giants hitless until the fifth and gave up four hits in seven innings. Martinez and Downs were locked in a scoreless duel when San Francisco's Mike Aldrete singled with one out in the seventh. Pinch-runner Dan Gladden stole second and scored on a double by Candy Maldonado.

Dodgers 3, Phillies 2

PHILADELPHIA — Fernando Valenzuela pitched a six-hitter and struck out a season-high 14.

Valenzuela, leading the National League in victories, raised his record to 18-9 by beating the Phillies for the fourth time without a loss this year. Valenzuela pitched his major league-leading 17th complete game, and walked two.

Mike Schmidt hit a two-run homer off Valenzuela in the first inning. It was Schmidt's league-leading 31st homer of the season and 489th of his career.

Steve Sax, 12-for-23 in his last five games, rapped three hits and drove in two runs.

Sax hit a two-run single in the second inning for a 3-2 lead. Ralph Bryant led off with a double against Kevin Gross, 9-11, and Franklin Stubbs walked. Dave Anderson followed with a blooper that second baseman Juan Samuel could not hold, but right fielder Glenn Wilson recovered quickly and threw to third for a forceout.

Braves 4, Pirates 2

ATLANTA — Bob Horner hit his first career grand slam and Atlanta, despite getting only two hits, beat Pittsburgh.

Horner connected in the third inning against Stan Fansler, who was making his major-league debut. Horner's homer, his 22nd of the season and the 210th of his career, ended his status as the major-league player with the most home runs without a grand slam.

Atlanta trailed 1-0 when Glenn Hubbard led off the third with a bunt-single. Omar Moreno and Ken Oberkfell drew one-out walks and Horner sent a 2-2 pitch over the center-field fence.

The Braves did not get another hit in the game against Fansler and relievers John Smiley, Bob Walk, Hipolito Pena and Don Robinson.

David Palmer, 11-8, pitched six-plus innings for the victory. Jeff Dedmon closed with three shutout innings for his third save.

Jim Morrison drove in both Pittsburgh runs. He hit his 18th home run in the second and added an RBI double in the seventh.

"I can serve my best serve and he can make a winner of it," Becker, seeded third, said of his conqueror. "No shot is for sure.

"He's very unpredictable. So many times you're off-balanced. He doesn't really play, you know. He makes easy mistakes, then the next three shots you have no chance to get it."

NAVRATILOVA WAS forced to win a third-set tiebreak in order to reach the women's singles final for the fourth straight year.

"You guys were saying this was going to be close, but this was ridiculous," said Navratilova, who is seeking her third title in four years at this Grand Slam tournament.

Like Lendl, Navratilova has reached the final at all three Grand Slam tournaments this year, losing to Chris Evert Lloyd in the French Open and winning at Wimbledon. Lendl won the French and lost to Becker at Wimbledon.

"She's a terrific player," the women's top seed said of the 17-year-old Graf. "I hope she doesn't get too much better or I'll quit. I feel lucky I got through this one. I lost a couple of third-set tiebreakers here before. You can't be pushed any more."

Navratilova staved off three match points by her 17-year-old opponent — two of them coming in the 10th game of the third set. And she was foiled by Graf the first two times she reached match point, finally closing out the battle on the third one.

Sukova upset six-time winner Chris Evert Lloyd 6-2, 6-4 on Friday to gain her berth in the final.

"I had a chance at 5-4 and two match points, and they were two second serves," Graf said. "So I should have made some more out of it there."

Asked what she would want to do differently next time against Navratilova, Graf said:

"I hope I am going to win the last point."

The victory by Navratilova extended several streaks that she shares with Lloyd. Either Navratilova or Lloyd have appeared in each of the last 22 Grand Slam finals, and either one or both have been in the last 12 U.S. Open women's finals.

The last time neither appeared in an Open final was in 1974, when Billie Jean King defeated Australia's Evonne Goolagong. The last time neither appeared in a Grand Slam final was the French Open in 1981 when Hana Mandlikova of Czechoslovakia defeated West Germany's Sylvia Hanika.

LENDL WAS awesome in his destruction of Edberg, the reigning Australian Open champion who was seeded fourth in this 128-man singles field. Only twice in the match did the Swede reach break point on Lendl's serve — in the fourth game of the opening set and the seventh game of the third set.

Both times Lendl, who has reached the final of all three Grand Slam tournaments played this year, fought back to hold. Not once in the match did Lendl lose his service as he simply overpowered his foe.

Everything Lendl tried worked. His groundstrokes were deep enough to keep Edberg pinned to the baseline. And when the Swede was able to work his way into the net, Lendl found the passing lanes with both his forehand and backhand.

"If you can win the tiebreak, you have not only the edge that you have won the set, but you have the edge mentally," Lendl said. "It's very hard to come back from one set or two sets down if you know the other player is in good shape and running and would rather die than lose.

"Maybe it was a little easier than I expected, but I always go into a match expecting the worst," Lendl said. "I think he got a little tired mentally after the first set. He played a good first set and lost it."

Moore and Jones came down the final straightaway each with a chance to win it. But Jones, from Wisconsin-Lacrosse, beat the Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute grad by three seconds.

In the women's division, Donna Weatherford took the title with a 38:53, nearly 2½ minutes in front of second place Gail Sabanosh. Sabanosh finished in 41:14, Donna Reker was third in 41:51.

In the two-mile division, Al Guevara led the way with an 10:37 and Joe Tighe's 11:12 was second. For the women Charlotte Larson paced runners with a 14:20, Lindsey Brickley was second at 14:33.

The Big Heart Award was given to Daniel Kerwin.

The Sixth Annual Septemberfest run was sponsored by J.E. Borron, Miller Sales, United Bank and the Midland Jaycees.

Spinks TKOs Tangstad

After Tangstad staggered up after the second knockdown, referee Richard Steele gave him the mandatory eight-count and stopped the fight at 58 seconds of the fourth round.

Spinks, the only light heavyweight champion ever to win the heavyweight title, had too much power for Tangstad, who hails from a country where professional boxing is banned.

The victory was the 30th and 20th knockout for the 30-year-old Spinks, who weighed 201 pounds to 214¾ for Tangstad.

For Tangstad, the beginning of the end came at 1:45 of the third round, when Spinks shot two left jabs to the Norwegian's face and followed with a right hand to the jaw that put him down.

But Spinks sensed the finish and he came out winging in the fourth.

Tangstad got up and was obviously woozy, but Steele took a long look and waved him forward. Spinks dropped him with another left hook and although Tangstad again got up, Steele had seen enough.

Tangstad was the aggressor in the first round and seemed to have an edge as a large Norwegian contingent in the crowd of 6,000 at an indoor arena chanted "Tangstad, Tangstad, Tangstad!"

But Spinks, who enjoyed a 6½-inch reach advantage over the European champion, speared Tangstad with hard left jabs in the second round and rattled him with a couple of good left hooks and a left-right-left combination.

"I'm always aggressive; I never back up," Tangstad said before the fight.

Spinks, a 6-1 favorite, was defending the IBF title for the second time since he won it on a unanimous 15-round decision over previously unbeaten Larry Holmes on Sept. 21, 1985.

He earned $1 million for his work on Saturday night.

Tangstad, who was guaranteed $50,000 and was supposed to get $250,000 from foreign TV, now has a 23-2-2 record with 14 knockouts.

He was trying to become the second Scandanavian to win the heavyweight title. On June 26, 1959, Ingemar Johansson of Sweden, who was in the crowd Saturday night, knocked out Floyd Patterson in the third round to win the title at the Polo Grounds in New York.

Tyson stops Ratliff to gain shot at title

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Undefeated Mike Tyson, again showing devastating punching power, stopped Alfonzo Ratliff at 1:41 of the second round Saturday night to set up a challenge for the heavyweight boxing title later this year.

The victory moved Tyson into a matchup against champion Trevor Berbick for the World Boxing Council heavyweight title on Nov. 22 at the Las Vegas Hilton.

Gerry Cooney's camp reportedly has offered $3 million for Berbick to fight Cooney instead of Tyson, but promoters and officials of the Hilton on Saturday confirmed that a Berbick-Tyson bout would be held as planned.

Tyson chased Ratliff the entire first round before finally connecting early in the second with a vicious left uppercut that put Ratliff on the canvas. Ratliff managed to get up at the count of nine, but Tyson swarmed over him again, throwing flurries of punches while Ratliff tried to escape from along the ropes.

A right hook shook Ratliff again and Tyson followed it with a series of punches, the last a left hook that put Ratliff down again. Ratliff sat stunned on the canvas and referee Davey Pearl stopped the fight, not even bothering to count.

It was the 25th knockout in 27 fights for Tyson in a professional career spanning only 18 months. Fifteen of his knockouts have come in the first round.

The 20-year-old Tyson, fighting in Las Vegas for the first time since losing in the Olympic box-offs to Henry Tillman in July 1984, came out stalking Ratliff in the first round. But Ratliff, a former WBC cruiserweight champion, wanted no part of Tyson and spent the first round dancing around the ring.

In the second round, Ratliff decided to come out and fight Tyson, a strategy that soon proved to be his undoing.

Tyson, 221¼, of Catskill, N.Y., had predicted that Ratliff would be stopped "the first time he gets hit correctly." That occurred when Tyson threw a left uppercut just as Ratliff tried a right uppercut, and Ratliff went down for the first time.

Ratliff, 201, of Chicago, had a 14-inch reach advantage and, at 6-foot-5, was nearly six inches taller than Tyson, but neither advantage helped him. Ratliff, who was knocked out in previous fights by World Boxing Association champion Tim Witherspoon and former WBC champion Pinklon Thomas, lost for the fourth time against 21 victories.

Oliva keeps WBA crown

NAPLES, Italy (AP) — Patrizio Oliva defended his World Boxing Association junior welterweight title Saturday night when Brian Brunette of St. Paul, Minn. quit in the third round of a scheduled 15-round bout in the Italian's hometown.

"Thanks very much for cheering me on, Naples. I won this one for you," said Oliva, who had won the title by outpointing Argentina's Ubaldo Sacco at Monte Carlo on March 15.

Some 9,000 fans, most of them cheering for Oliva, watched the fight in the Sports Palace.

About 300 American rooters, some from Brunette's hometown and a contingent of sailors from the U.S. 6th Fleet which is based in Naples, were in the arena.

Hours before the fight, Brunette weighed in at 141 pounds, one pound over the division limit. Ninety minutes later, he weighed exactly 140.

Oliva, a former bank clerk who turned professional after winning a gold medal in the 1980 Moscow Olympics, weighed 139.

Arizona shows Houston who has toughest cat, 37-3

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Tailback David Adams rushed for 126 yards and two touchdowns while quarterback Alfred Jenkins threw for three more scores as Arizona opened its football season Saturday night with a 37-3 non-conference victory over Houston.

The 5-foot-6, 170-pound Adams compiled his yardage on 20 carries while scoring on runs from 7 and 2 yards out.

Jenkins, also a senior, fired a 46-yarder touchdown pass to split end Jon Horton, who caught six passes for 115 yards.

Arizona's big-play defense stifled also Houston all night long, coming up with a safety, a fumble recovery and three interceptions — one of which led to the Wildcats' first touchdown, a 9-yard Jenkins pass to wide receiver Derek Hill.

Jenkins also hit fullback Charles Webb with a 5-yard scoring pass to give Arizona a 23-0 lead.

Place-kicker Chip Browndyke booted a 22-yard field goal for Houston's only score as the half ended at 23-3.

Arizona scored first on a safety when several Wildcats tackled Cougars' quarterback Gerald Landry in his own end zone on Houston's second offensive play from scrimmage.

Wildcat free safety Eugene Hardy's over-the-shoulder interception late in the first quarter stopped a Houston drive and the rest of the half was almost all Arizona.

The Wildcats were sparked by Adams' 43-yard burst to the Houston 31 on the first play of the second period.

Walls could be suspended

DALLAS (AP) — The Dallas Cowboys warned cornerback Everson Walls that he can be suspended if his walkout continues over a contract dispute.

Walls may not be allowed to return this season if he misses Monday night's NFL opener against the New York Giants, Cowboys President Tex Schramm and Coach Tom Landry said.

"We're talking about a different situation if he misses the game," Landry said. "You don't know what will happen after that."

The Cowboys can suspend Walls for four games, or, if he doesn't return in five days, place him on the reserve list. That means he could miss the entire season.

Team officials sent letters on Friday outlining both options to Walls and agent Steve Weinberg.

"I think that Tom made it clear that things will change if Walls misses the game," Schramm said. "Minds will start changing if he misses the game."

Walls told Landry on Thursday he was leaving the team and filing a grievance with the NFL Players' Association to have his contract dispute settled by arbitration.

Walls and Weinberg claimed the Cowboys have not acted in good faith during the renegotiation that they are required to undertake because of a clause in the player's contract.

Weinberg asked that an arbitrator be appointed by the NFL Management Council. He said that arbitrator would be asked to force the Cowboys to bargain in good faith.

Cowboys officials contend they have negotiated in good faith and have made at least five offers to Walls.

"Negotiating in good faith doesn't necessarily mean that the two sides have to like what the other one wants monetarily," Schramm said.

If Walls doesn't return, rookie Johnny Holloway will start against the Giants. Rookie Cornell Gowdy also will play at left cornerback, Landry said.

Dolphins, Marino sign deal

MIAMI (AP) — Quarterback Dan Marino of the Miami Dolphins signed a $9 million, six-year contract Saturday with incentive clauses that could make him the highest paid player in the National Football League.

Quarterback Jim Kelly, who recently signed an $8 million, five-year agreement with the Buffalo Bills, is now the best paid NFL player, but Marino's total income could surpass Kelly's if Marino collects on all of the incentive provisions in his contract.

While the Dolphins have not made the official announcement, Marino confirmed Saturday that he had signed. He said he didn't want to say much else about it because he didn't want to upstage the official announcement from Dolphins owner Joe Robbie.

"I signed it this morning," Marino said after the Dolphins final practice before their season opener against the Chargers in San Diego.

"They'll probably make the announcement when we get out to San Diego. Whenever Mr. Robbie wants to do it."

The monetary details of the contract, which reportedly includes a $2 million signing bonus, have been widely reported in local newspapers, but Marino has verified only that they are "in the range" of the actual figures.

The contract was drawn up Wednesday morning during a New York meeting between Robbie and Marvin Demoff, Marino's agent, and was finalized Thursday night. The actual signing had been delayed because Robbie, Demoff and Marino were never were in the same city and because Marino's wife Claire gave birth to their first child Thursday.

Marino was in the final year of a $2 million, four-year contract he signed as Miami's No. 1 draft choice in 1983 out of Pittsburgh. The new salary structure takes effect immediately, giving him a raise for the 1986 season from $400,00 in base pay to about $1.5 million.

Marino has passed for 98 touchdowns and more than 11,000 yards during his first three seasons in the league. He has been voted to the Pro Bowl all three years.

He also has had offseason knee operations each year, and one of the reported provisions of the contract is that he will collect even if he can't play because of an injury.

Vols roll New Mexico, 35-21

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Tennessee tailback Keith Davis split the New Mexico defense for touchdown runs of 46 and 14 yards as the 10th-ranked Volunteers rolled to a 35-21 victory Saturday night in the college football opener for both teams.

Davis, a sophomore, carried 11 times for 89 yards while classmate Jeff Francis, making his first start at quarterback, completed 19 of 32 passes for 230 yards without an interception.

The Southeastern Conference Vols played without 10 team members who are under NCAA suspension for letting someone other than family or UT students use their complimentary passes.

New Mexico, of the Western Athletic Conference, lost despite quarterback Billy Rucker's 127 yards passing and 97 yards rushing.

Lobos senior Kevin Burgess, who gained 61 yards on 16 carries, scored on a pair of 2-yard runs to pull New Mexico to within 17-14 early in the second half.

Tennessee's defense held the Lobos to 392 total yards and contributed one touchdown when senior free safety Charles Davis intercepted a tipped pass and returned it 55 yards.

William Howard, junior fullback for Tennessee, added the Vols' final touchdown in the fourth period when he capped a nine-play, 70-yard drive with a 9-yard scoring run off tackle.

Kicker Phil Reich, a junior walk-on subbing for the suspended Carlos Reveiz, kicked field goals of 30 and 33 yards for Tennessee and added three extra points.

Fehr snaps tie, opens three-shot B.C. lead

ENDICOTT, N.Y. (AP) — Rick Fehr continued his hot putting and took sole possession of the lead Saturday with a 4-under-par 67, after three rounds of the $400,000 B.C. Open.

Fehr's five-birdie performance gave him a 15-under-par 198 for the tournament and a three-stroke advantage over Larry Mize.

Mize, who started the day in a deadlock with Fehr, was plagued by bogeys and could only muster a 1-under-par 70 despite four birdies. His three-day total is 12-under-par 201.

Howard Twitty, Larry Rinker and Dick Mast were next in line to Fehr, seven strokes back at 205. Twitty and Mast both began play Saturday trailing the leaders by six strokes.

Chip Beck was eight strokes behind at 206.

Mize opened play with a 20-foot birdie putt to take a brief lead over Fehr. But the 24-year-old Seattle, Wash., product countered with back-to-back birdies of his own on the second and third holes to take a one stroke advantage, which he never relinquished.

Fehr, looking for his first PGA Tour victory, sank a 10-foot uphill putt for the tie, then followed up with a 3-footer on the par-5 third hole after setting himself up with a 100-foot pitch shot.

Fehr and Mize then exchanged a pair of birdies en route to the back nine, with Fehr capitalizing on two more par-5 holes.

"I think I responded real well to Larry," said Fehr, enjoying his first-ever third-round lead.

Fehr said he tried to keep to his game plan and play the course rather than Mize.

"When you're that far ahead of the field, it's hard not to play head-to-head," Fehr said.

Both golfers scored birdies on the par-5 12th hole before Mize helped his opponent with a bogey on the next hole, giving Fehr a two-stroke lead.

Fehr returned the favor with a bogey on the troublesome 15th hole, where bogeys have become commonplace during the first three days of the tournament. The miss reduced Fehr's lead to one stroke.

But Mize was unable to take advantage and instead lost more ground when he suffered bogeys on the last two holes.

A double bogey on the 18th on Friday cost Mize the two-stroke advantage he held at the time.

Unheralded Smith holds off Lopez charge to lead Ping

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — M.J. Smith, who has struggled through 13 years of obscurity on the LPGA tour, held off a charge by defending champion Nancy Lopez Saturday to take a one-stroke lead after two rounds of the $200,000 Cellular-One Ping Championship.

The New Zealand-born Smith, whose best finish this year has been a tie for 33rd, was at 5-under-par 139 through 36 holes on the windy par-72, 6,260-yard Columbia-Edgewater Country Club course.

Smith, 34, who lives in Marietta, Ga., had begun the second round with a two-stroke advantage after shooting a tournament record 66 in Friday's opening round.

"It's nice to shoot 73 and be able to still stay in the lead," she said. "It doesn't happen very often."

Smith, who never has won an LPGA tournament, is 126th on the money-winning list this year with just $7,591. She has said she's so unhappy with her play that she may retire at the end of this year.

"I was very nervous on the first hole," she said. "I didn't settle down for about four holes."

On the fifth hole, she rolled in a 50-foot birdie putt and she had a steady round the rest of the way.

"I call that a no-brainer," she said of her long putt.

Lopez, who needs one victory to clinch a spot in the LPGA Hall of Fame, was tied with Colleen Walker at 4-under-par 140.

Japan's Ayako Okamoto was alone in fourth place at 3-under-par 141. Jan Stephenson, Dale Eggeling and Marta Figueras-Dotti were three shots back at 2-under-par 142.

The field of 134 was pared to 70 for Sunday's final round. First place is worth $30,000.

Oklahoma State rally tips SWL

LAFAYETTE, La. — Ronnie Williams passed to Hart Lee Dykes for two touchdowns and Bobby Riley had a 97-yard kickoff return for the other in an 18-point fourth period that rallied Oklahoma State over Southwestern Louisiana, 21-20.

It was the college football season opener for both teams and USL, hoping to give Nelson Stokely a victory in his head coaching debut, nursed a 13-3 lead heading into the fourth quarter.

But Williams hit Dykes with a 45-yard bomb to make it a 13-9 affair and, after a fumble recovery by USL's Benny Carey in the end zone moved the Cajuns into a 20-9 advantage, Riley returned the ensuing kick off 97 yards to make it 20-15 with 3:09 remaining.

Bobby Humphrey added a pair of TD runs for Alabama — for two and 30 yards — while Marco Battle scored on a 7-yard run and Van Tiffin had field goals of 48 and 24 yards, spoiling the debut of Commodore Coach Watson Brown in Vanderbilt's season opener. 5

Tiffin's field goals and the two-yard Humphrey run gave sluggish Alabama a 14-0 lead at halftime.

But Jelks, who had 116 yards on 11 carries, jolted the Commodores with his 75-yard sprint through the middle of the line on the first play from scrimmage in the second half, giving Alabama a 21-0 lead.

Thomas, a sophomore linebacker, led an Alabama defense that had eight sacks of Vanderbilt quarterback Mark Wracher. The 6-foot-2, 222-pound Thomas had three sacks for 29 yards in losses as Alabama moved to a 2-0 record.

Penn St. 45, Temple 15

STATE COLLEGE, Pa. — Quarterback John Shaffer vindicated Coach Joe Paterno's vote of confidence Saturday night as he threw for three touchdowns and ran for another in sixth-ranked Penn State's victory over Temple.

Shaffer, who led Penn State to within one game of a national championship last season and survived an intense preseason competition with backup Matt Knizner, completed 12 of 18 passes for 194 yards. 6

Penn State jumped to a 21-0 first-period lead as Shaffer completed nine of 10 passes for 132 yards and two touchdowns.

The Nittany Lions drove 79 yards on 10 plays as Shaffer completed four passes, the last going 10 yards to fullback Steve Smith, for a 7-0 lead.

Then Temple's Paul Palmer, last year's national runner-up in rushing and all-purpose yardage, fumbled and Penn State recovered at the Temple 25. In four plays, the Lions scored, with Shaffer throwing the final 14 to Eric Hamilton.

Penn State then drove 72 yards on seven plays, with Shaffer completing five for 59 yards and E.J. Dozier running across from the 9 to make it 21-0.

Nebraska 34, Florida State 17

LINCOLN, Neb. (AP) — Quarterback Steve Taylor had a hand in all four Nebraska touchdowns as the eighth-ranked Cornhuskers overcame their problems with the NCAA to beat No. 11 Florida State.

Taylor, a sophomore starting his first game, carried 22 times for 139 yards. He ran for touchdowns of 20 and 6 yards and threw for two more TDs. Florida State led 14-10 at halftime, but the Seminoles were stopped cold in the second half. Nebraska shut them out in the final 35 minutes. 8

Nebraska officials had considered forfeiting the contest until the National Collegiate Athletic Association agreed Thursday to delay the suspension of 60 players for improper selling of tickets.

The game, played in frequent rain, was the season opener for the Cornhuskers. Florida State is 1-1.

Taylor hit tight end Todd Millikan with a 12-yard touchdown pass late in the third quarter to break a 17-17 tie. Taylor connected with wingback Von Sheppard for a 46-yard score on the Huskers' next possession.

Auburn 42, Tn.-Chattanooga 14

AUBURN, Ala. — Jeff Burger threw three touchdown passes and Auburn harnessed Tennessee-Chattanooga's ground attack as the 14th-ranked Tigers defeated the Mocassins.

Burger's scoring strikes, including 41 yards to Lawyer Tillman and 42 yards to fullback Tommie Agee in the first half, offset a performance by the junior signal caller that included two interceptions and several errant throws dropped by Mocassin defenders. 14

Brigham Young 52, Utah State 0

Lindsley, who threw two interceptions in a shaky first quarter, broke open a 3-0 contest seconds before halftime with a two-yard scoring toss to Chuck Cutler. Lindsley's debut as BYU's quarterback also included a 24-yard touchdown pass to Mark Bellini as the 24-year-old senior completed 24 of 37 passes. 18

BYU, 11-3 and ranked 16th in the nation at the end of last season, exploded for 42 points in the second half. Utah State could not contain the Cougar aerial game, mounted no serious offensive threat and failed on its lone field goal attempt of 65 yards.

Reb sophs beat Bullpups, 15-8

From Staff Reports

Todd Overend threw a third quarter touchdown pass of 40 yards to John Ward and then ran for a two-point conversion Saturday at the Lee Field to lift the Midland Lee sophomores to a 15-8 victory over Midland High.

Midland High took an 8-7 lead over Lee just prior to the half when David Ray scored on an 11-yard run and then caught a two-point conversion pass from Terry Haney, but the Bullpups couldn't mount a second half score.

Lee struck first in the game when Darwin Cavil scored from 10 yards out and Troy Oliver kicked the extra point. Lee had a 6-2 advantage in penetrations in the contest.

The MHS sophomores were undefeated last year, beating Lee twice. This was the opening game of the year for both teams.

Quarterback Dudley Jordan led the attack, scoring on runs of 30 and 10 yards while Blaine McAnally had an eight-yard TD run and David Whiteside add a five-yard TD. McAnally also ran for two two-point conversions and Jordan ran for another.

The Lee JV defense also turned in a safety for the final margin.

Owls open season with 28-14 win

HOUSTON (AP) — Rice quarterbacks Mark Comalander and Quentis Roper combined for three touchdown passes and the Owls overcame five turnovers to defeat Lamar 28-14 in non-conference college football Saturday night.

Comalander's 7-yard touchdown pass to running back Mark Scott with 3:28 left in the third quarter broke a 14-14 halftime deadlock and got the Owls off to a winning start under new coach Jerry Berndt.

Comalander and Roper alternated at quarterback throughout the game, and junior running back John Davis gained 126 yards on 16 carries in the season opener for both schools.

Lamar running back Burton Murchison, who gained 259 yards against Rice last season, finished with 69 yards on 22 carries.

Rice took a 14-0 lead on Comalander's 5-yard touchdown pass to tight end Ken Major and a 62-yard touchdown bomb from Roper to Chris Nixon on the first play of the second quarter.

But the Cardinals fought back to the 14-14 tie with a 38-yard interception return by Keith Pruitt and a 12-yard run by Murchison over a 53-second span of the second quarter.

Faust debuts at Akron with 35-0 win

AKRON, Ohio (AP) — The task is the same, and accomplishing it just as satisfying no matter what the level of competition, Gerry Faust said after tucking away his first victory as football coach at the University of Akron.

"There's pressure to win for any coach at any level," Faust said after the Zips blanked tiny Salem, W.Va., College 35-0 Saturday night.

The former Notre Dame coach admitted that butterflies bothered him throughout the day, but he refused to place any special significance to the game.

"It was important for the kids to win, and it was important to the program," Faust said.

The game was Faust's first since he resigned after five years at Notre Dame, where he registered a record of 30-26-1.

Colorado State upsest Colorado, 23-7

Associated Press

BOULDER, Colo. — Workhorse fullback Steve Bartalo rushed for 145 yards on 39 carries and scored a third-quarter touchdown, sparking Colorado State to a 23-7 upset of turnover-prone Colorado in a college football opener for both teams Saturday.

The Rams, winning for the first time since this rivalry was renewed in 1983 after a 25-year hiatus, turned two Colorado fumbles into 10 quick third-quarter points to take a 13-0 lead.

CSU linebacker Dale Carr, a standout the entire game on a dreary, damp afternoon, forced a fumble by Colorado halfback Sam Smith at the Colorado 8-yard line to set up Bartalo's TD run on the next play with 8:34 left in the third quarter.

Rutgers 11, Boston College 9

NEWTON, Mass. — Joe Gagliardi threw a four-yard touchdown pass to Henry Henderson, Doug Giesler kicked a 23-yard field goal and Rutgers held on for an 11-9 upset victory.

Troy Stradford's 17-yard run with a fumble recovery with 4:28 gone in the fourth quarter made the score 11-6. Boston College threatened again after Ted Gaffney's interception gave it the ball at the Rutgers' 41-yard line.

But the Eagles had to settle for Brian Lowe's 29-yard field goal with 6:27 left in the game.

Rutgers, which was 2-8-1 last season, ended a six-game losing streak against the Eagles, who were coming off a 4-8 campaign last season.

Virginia 30, S. Carolina 20

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. — Chris Warren and Don Majkowski paced a first-half Virginia offense that rang up 378 yards and 27 points.

Warren, a sophomore who played in Virginia's secondary last year, made his first start at tailback Saturday and responded with six first-half carries for 90 yards and one touchdown.

Whitten sparks SFA, 28-14

LORMAN, Miss. - Todd Whitten passed for three touchdowns and ran for another to lead Stephen F. Austin State University to a 28-14 victory over Alcorn State University in the season opener for both teams.

Whitten opened the scoring for the Lumberjacks with a 32-yard pass to Drake Williams with 41 seconds remaining in the first quarter.

Alcorn State came back to cut the halftime margin to 7-6 when Cedric Bush scored on a seven-yard run. Edward Whatley missed the extra point kick.

Stephen F. Austin opened a 28-6 lead early in the fourth quarter after Whitten completed a 33-yard pass to Chris Edwards and rushed for a touchdown from seven yards out in the third quarter, then completed his second straight touchdown pass to Edwards with 10:30 remaining in the game.

The host Braves completed the scoring with 4:08 remaining when Larry Brown scored on a seven-yard run. Whitten finished the game completing 13 of 24 passes for 167 yards and no interceptions.

Austin 35, Colorado College 34

COLORADO SPRINGS — Capitalizing on a scoring fumble recovery by Dean Colbert and Gary Wright's 45-yard touchdown on a pass interception, Austin College edged Colorado College in a cliffhanger.

After Wright's fourth quarter interception return that put Austin up 35-28, CC's Phila Apodaca scored from one yard out for his second touchdown of the day to narrow the deficit to 35-34. CC then tried for the victory with a 2-point conversion run that failed.

Apodaca tallied his first touchdown, a 2-yarder, in the first quarter to put CC up 14-7.

Austin went ahead for the first time in the third quarter, 28-21, on Colbert's fumble recover on the CC one yard line.

CC's Charles Lorimer, who had connected on a 23-yard scoring pass play to Rich Lawton in the second, scored on a one-yard keeper to knot the score again.

Texas Football

Nevado-Reno 35, Sam Houston St. 7

RENO, Nev. — Nevado-Reno senior wide receiver Bryan Calder grabbed 13 passes from quarterback Eric Beavers for three touchdowns and a school-record 200 yards.

Calder scored on a 19-yard pass from Beavers on the Wolf Pack's first possession, four minutes and 27 seconds into the game. Nevado-Reno, 2-0, then rolled to a 21-0 lead early in the second quarter on touchdown runs of 9 yards by Charvez Foger and 12 yards by Lucius Floyd.

After Vernon Fulbright scampered 12 yards for a score to cap a 77-yard drive by Sam Houston, 0-1, the Beavers-to-Calder connection wrapped up the scoring on TD passes of 15 yards in the second quarter and 18 yards in the final period.

Calder's receiving total eclipsed the old school mark of 198 yards set by Jeff Wright against Idaho State in 1976.

Beavers, a senior who last week became the Wolf Pack's all-time leading passer, threw for 302 yards on 22 completions in 35 attempts with one interception.

Panhandle 27, Tarleton 12

GOODWELL, Okla. — Ray Williams scored two touchdowns to lead Panhandle State of Oklahoma over Tarleton State.

Williams, who finished with 66 yards to lead the Aggies, scored on a 6-yard run to open the scoring in the first quarter and added a 1-yard plunge midway through the second period. Tony Thomas also had a 3-yard run for Panhandle State.

Tarleton State narrowed the gap to 7-6 after Williams' first touchdown when Boo Jones scored on a 96-yard run with the ensuing kickoff.

A 4-yard pass from Tarleton State quarterback Danny David to Eric King narrowed the Aggies' lead to 20-12 with 3:31 remaining in the third, but Panhandle State's Todd Beer recovered a Tarleton State fumble in the end zone for a touchdown early in the fourth quarter.

NTSU 7, Southwest Texas 0

SAN MARCOS — David McGinty raced 19 yards for the game's only score in the second quarter as North Texas defeated Southwest Texas.

McGinty's touchdown came at the end of a seven-play, 57-yard drive. Todd Smith kicked the extra point.

It was a game of missed opportunities for Southwest Texas as the Bobcats failed to score four times when they were inside the North Texas 10-yard line. Twice they were stopped by fumbles, once when they were stopped on fourth down and once on a missed field goal attempt.

Monty Moon picked up 62 yards for North Texas and Ben Beal added 45 yards.

Troy St.38, W. Texas St. 32

CANYON, Texas — Reserve halfback Robert Carter scored the winning touchdown on a 55-yard run as Troy State, Ala., defeated West Texas State.

The winning score came with 8:36 remaining in the fourth quarter.

Carter also scored on a 29-yard-run in the first quarter to open the scoring.

The Trojans rolled up 402 yards on the ground and passed for 118 yards in the victory over West Texas.

Votie Patterson caught touchdown passes of 43, 21 and 51 yards from Tod Mayfield of West Texas State. Mayfield completed 29 of 53 passes for 354 yards.

Macalester 22, Trinity 0

NORTHFIELD, Minn. — Tom Lindell passed for 164 yards and a touchdown and Mike Boecker ran for 63 yards and also threw a 73-yard halfback-option pass for a score, leading Macalester to a victory over Trinity.

Macalester totally dominated their San Antonio foe in the season-opener for both schools, outgaining Trinity 264-78 yards.

Lindell's 6-yard touchdown pass to Marck Peters kicked off the scoring and Lindell's 6-yard run made it 12-0. Boecker then connected with Bill Schmidt on the long bomb to make it 19-0 at the half and Macalester just cruised to victory.

BEARS

BAYLOR TRAILED 6-0 after Wyoming's Erik Coleman took a Runyan pitch and dashed into the end zone from nine yards out with 18 seconds left in the quarter. However, Rob Whorley missed the first of three extra point attempts for the Cowboys.

Baylor gained just two yards on its first possession of the second quarter. But Everett intercepted his first pass of day with Wyoming on its own 28-yard line, racing 42 yards for a touchdown.

Wyoming, which gained 343 of its 409 total yards in the air, drove 77 yards on its next possession to score on an 11-yard pass from Runyan to James Loving.

The Cowboys attempted a two-point conversion pass but it fell incomplete, leaving them with a 12-7 lead with 9:39 left in the half.

Baylor recaptured the lead six minutes later when Randy Rutledge drove six yards into the end zone to give the Bears a 13-12 lead.

Baylor opened the second half by moving from its own 18 to its 42, but Carlson had a pass intercepted by Wyoming's Reggie Berry.

Runyan brought Wyoming back four plays later when he hit junior college transfer Freddie Dussett over the middle for a 27-yard touchdown.

Whorley's extra point was blocked, leaving Wyoming with an 18-13 lead.

Baylor regained the lead for good with 10:39 left in the third quarter when Charles Perry took a pitch around the left corner for 28 yards into the end zone. Carlson then connected with Perry on a two-point conversion pass as the Bears went ahead 21-18.

The fourth quarter opened with another Baylor score as Tod Conner went in from the 4. The teams then traded field goals, with Whorley connecting from 37 yards out and Baylor's Mark Mahler from 42 yards to make the score 31-21.

Incaviglia homers pace Rangers to 6-4 win over KC

Associated Press

ARLINGTON — Rookie Pete Incaviglia hit two solo home runs and Orlando Mercado and Ruben Sierra also homered to lift the Texas Rangers to a 6-4 victory over Kansas City.

Incaviglia's homers were his 22nd and 23rd of the season, giving him a team record for home runs by a rookie. The old mark of 22 was set by Dave Hostetler in 1982.

Sierra broke a 4-4 tie in the sixth with his 10th homer, and Incaviglia homered on the next pitch from Steve Farr, 8-4.

Rookie Edwin Correa earned his ninth victory against 12 losses. Correa pitched six innings and allowed four runs, three of them earned. Dale Mohorcic relieved at the start of the seventh and earned his sixth save.

Jamie Quirk hit a three-run homer off Correa in the second for a 3-0 lead.

The Rangers scored once in their half of the second when Larry Parrish walked, went to third on Sierra's single and came home as Incaviglia bounced into a double play.

Texas tied it in the third, one coming on Mercado's first homer of the year and the other when starter Charlie Leibrandt balked home a run.

Kansas City went ahead 4-3 in the fourth on Lonnie Smith's RBI single after an error by Correa. Incaviglia tied it in the bottom of the inning with the first of his two home runs.

Bret Saberhagen, the 1985 Cy Young winner, made his first appearance since coming off the disabled list Sept. 1 and pitched two scoreless innings in relief.

Red Sox 3, Twins 2

BOSTON — Marty Barrett hit a two-out, run-scoring single in the ninth inning as the Boston Red Sox came from behind for the fifth consecutive game by edging the Minnesota Twins. The victory was the Red Sox's seventh straight, their longest winning streak of the season.

Kirby Puckett drove in both of Minnesota's runs off Dennis "Oil Can" Boyd with a double in the third inning, but the Red Sox came back with single runs in the seventh and eighth innings to tie the score 2-2. Minnesota third baseman Gary Gaetti's error allowed the Red Sox to score in the seventh, and Jim Rice singled home a run in the eighth.

A's 5, Tigers 4

OAKLAND, Calif. — Stan Javier lined a two-out single to left to drive in Jose Canseco with the winning run and lift the Oakland A's over the Detroit Tigers in 10 innings.

Canseco started the inning with a one-out walk off Detroit's Bill Campbell, 3-6, who relieved starter Jack Morris to start the 10th. After Canseco stole second, Jerry Willard grounded out to send Canseco to third. Javier, batting only .188, hit a 2-2 pitch to left field.

Joaquin Andujar, 9-6, pitched 10 innings to earn the victory, giving up eight hits, two of them homers by Kirk Gibson, his 21st and 22nd of the year. Andujar walked four and struck out eight.

Blue Jays 4, White Sox 0

Key, 12-9, allowed three singles and a double over eight innings in keeping Toronto 5½ games behind first-place Boston in the American League East. Key got an inning of one-hit relief help from Tom Henke as the Blue Jays won for the 11th time in 13 games.

Bannister, 9-11, had allowed only Bell's homer until the ninth inning. With two out and a runner aboard on third baseman Dave Cochrane's error, Bell singled and, after a walk to Jesse Barfield loaded the bases, Garth Iorg hit a three-run double. All three runs were unearned.

Key, meanwhile, gave up a leadoff double to Daryl Boston, then retired nine straight batters before Reid Nichols led off the fourth with a single. Key gave up his third hit when Harold Baines reached him for a single in the sixth, and the fourth on Tim Hulett's single leading off the seventh.

Mariners 6, Orioles 2

BALTIMORE — Mike Morgan pitched a five-hitter for his first career victory against Baltimore and Phil Bradley and Jim Presley drove in two runs apiece in the first two innings.

Morgan, 10-15, entered the game with an 0-8 lifetime record and 5.22 earned run average against Baltimore. The Orioles lost for the 12th time in 14 games.

The Mariners had seven of their 11 hits in the first two innings, and for the second straight game every player in the lineup hit safely.

Motorola, the Best Trained, Best Retained, Best Managed, and Most Innovative Sales Team in American Electronics*

*Source: America's best and worst sales forces. Sales & Marketing Management, December 3, 1984

There's no reason to continue to be a member of a team that is less than number one. Motorola Communications and Electronics, Inc. is the world leader in the manufacturing and distribution of high technology communications equipment. We provide the crucial communication links that make the business world go 'round.

We seek sales professionals to market our popular systems throughout Midland and the surrounding area. If you have 2+ years' outside sales experience selling to diversified markets, we will connect you with a big future.

A college degree and some exposure to the communications/electronics industry would be a plus.

We offer a generous salary plus incentive bonus, company car, paid expenses, complete benefits package and profit sharing.

For immediate consideration, please send your resume to:

Home secure home

In-home security is a relatively new segment of the consumer electronics industry, and one that holds promise of rapid growth.

This week's feature home, located at 2806 N. Garfield, has plenty inside to be protective about, as the pictures show.

Please see SECURE, Page 2D

A floor-to-ceiling mirrored fireplace and solid oak cabinets for an entertainment system and gun racks provide an elegant contrast in the living area.

The centrally-located hot tub and patio area are enclosed under a glass roof that is spectacular both day and night.

SECURE

The old saying that one cannot judge the inside of a book by its cover is certainly true of this week's feature home. From the outside this collection of townhomes may seem small, but the excellent use of positioning and space has made the interior roomy, with approximately 3,000 square feet of living area.

Decorated in contemporary fashion, white and cream colored carpet and wallhangings make these rooms seem even bigger.

A very unique feature of this house is the centrally located hot tub and patio area. Reminiscent of the ancient Greek and Roman bath houses and beautifully tiled in white, this area is large enough for a party, but intimate enough for two.

The glass roof in this area gives bathers the opportunity of looking at either the sun or stars. Sliding glass doors lead from this area into the living area, the dining room or one guest room.

The living room, with a 20 foot cathedral ceiling is elegant yet comfortable, with cream colored carpeting and fabric wall paper. A mirrored floor-to-ceiling fireplace contrasts beautifully with a solid oak entertainment cabinet and gun rack.

Both guest rooms are decorated in white and feature full baths and walk-in closets.

This room has two full baths with sunken tub and walk-in closets.

A private patio in the rear of the this room is a perfect place for a patio party or a barbecuing on those summer days.

In the kitchen white tile is beautifully contrasted with brown and white suede wall hangings. A built-in microwave and an abundance of cabinet space are just the beginning of the amenities in this room.

The formal dining room and adjacent wet bar look out into yet another small private courtyard, this one decorated in an oriental style, complete with budha statue and bambo plants.

A two car garage completes the description of this elegant abode, listed at $250,000 by Bohannan Realtors Inc.

Three entrances - in the front, through the patio and into the master bedroom and through the garage (plus all the windows), could make this home a prime target for burgulars. However an Ademco security system keeps everything secure both while the occupants are home or away.

The application of modern electronic technology has made self installation of intrusion prevention devices possible for the first time. Millions of homes are now equipped with low-cost alarm systems, some of which phone or radio out an alert at the first sign of trouble.

Wireless remote control systems provide instant operation of all the lights in a home from a single location, and equipped with an electronic timer, can give an empty house the look of occupancy.

Smoke detectors are today considered an absolute must for every home. Inexpensive closed-circuit TV systems are in use monitoring entryways, swimming pools and playgrounds.

For more information on a security system for your home consult the yellow pages under security control equipment and systems.

Windows, skylights popular remodeling projects

By Barbara Mayer
AP Newsfeatures

Letting the outdoors into the house is a contemporary concept. In times past, when insulation was poor or nonexistent, and people chopped wood to keep warm, there was considerably less interest in the view from the kitchen or bedroom window.

This change in attitude may help explain why one of the more popular home remodeling projects is adding a skylight or a greenhouse window or creating a windowed el or bay.

Nowadays, manufacturers of both windows and window treatments have caught up with the American love of light with improvements in window construction and with a greater number of ready-made shades and blinds to cover them. As a result, projects that once were too costly for most pocketbooks are more manageable.

An advantage gained from installing new windows now, besides the opportunity to let a little light shine in, is that new windows are usually both more energy-saving and require less maintenance.

If you are considering installing new windows, either as part of a home remodeling project or in an existing room and plan to be shopping for new windows, keep the following tips in mind:

— Look for a supplier who handles more than one brand or go to several dealers to see what is new. Several makers have recently started making factory-engineered rounded Palladian style windows, which are particularly appealing in traditional colonial style homes.

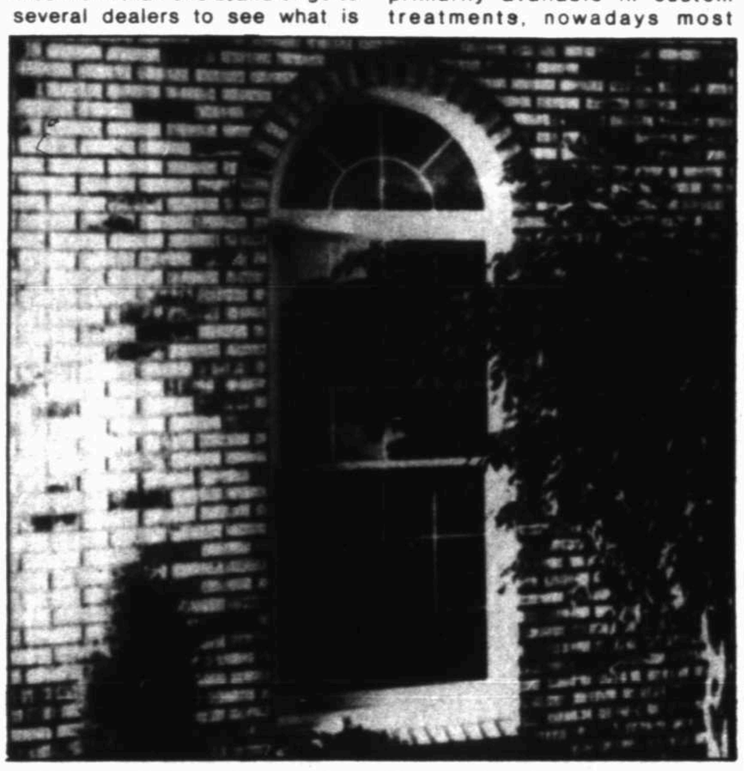
— Ask questions about energy efficiency and necessary maintenance. Make it clear that you want to see the most innovative new products available.

— You can improve your dealer's service to you by coming prepared with some information about your needs. You should know which direction the windows face since orientation does make a difference in requirements. Measure the size of window, although it is relatively easy for an installer or a do-it-yourselfer to make the opening larger.

When comparing prices, it's wise to consider the issue of maintenance, since initial cost may be higher on better quality windows, but long-term costs may be lower.

Factory-installed weatherstripping and vinyl-clad wood cost more but frequently do not have to be replaced as soon as less expensive windows. Double-paned insulating windows eliminate the need for storm windows and thus cut maintenance considerably, particularly if you pay somebody else to put them up each season.

As for window treatments, check the offerings in vertical blinds, mini-blinds and standard and pleated shades. Though once primarily available in custom treatments, nowadays most stores offer these coverings ready-made at a considerable saving.



This window's authentic colonial look was achieved by using the new Perma-Shield circle top window over a double hung unit.

Fascinating Facts

By Bob & Bill Drummond, Licensed Master Plumbers

New York City, with a traffic problem of the first magnitude, has the most elaborate, costly and varied system of traffic regulation in the world. The traffic light control system is important throughout the city. In this system signals simultaneously show green on a series of parallel streets, permitting traffic to move, and at the same time, signals on the intersecting arteries show red, bringing traffic to a halt. After a brief period, usually two minutes, the operation is reversed. Problems occur when traffic volume preclude the intersection from being cleared on each sequence.

Gridlock strikes fear into the hearts of New Yorkers. When your plumbing suffers from gridlock, we can get things flowing again. Call SANITARY PLUMBING, HEATING & AIR CONDITIONING, 694-8871 for sales and service. We're licensed, bonded and insured. Our service experts are fully trained and qualified. We service what we sell.

HELPFUL HINT: Reduce heating & cooling bills, let us install a Honeywell energy saving thermostat.

'Outdoor room' replaces patio

By Barbara Mayer
AP Newsfeatures

In the 1930s and '40s, it was the backyard. In the '50s and '60s, the patio replaced the yard.

Now, the space we live in out of doors has gone uptown and is called "the outdoor room."

Though this "room" may have no roof or walls, in at least some instances it comes complete with a swimming pool or spa, electricity, barbecue, furniture and potted plants.

With this kind of equipment, it seems clear that the space is meant to be important in the family's life — and so it is. To get the most out of the effort you put into creating it requires careful attention to detail.

If you've got an outdoor room in mind for the coming warm-weather season, perhaps these tips from landscaping authorities will help:

— Have a plan and stick to it. Take care of the basics first. These include screening for privacy with trees and large shrubs and, if necessary, fences. Hide unsightly views with plantings and take into consideration some plants will soon outgrow their present confines. Get help from a plant nursery and check in landscaping books before making a selection.

— If you have expansive grounds with an oversupply of trees, don't feel you must keep every one. Undesirable trees which are weedy or which compete with plantings can be taken down. Choose trees and shrubs you like and, to minimize maintenance, choose those that are known to be hardy in your area.

An important factor in how comfortable your outdoor room will be is in the flooring that you choose. Choices for paving are varied, but take into account local climate, necessary upkeep in time and money and the relationship between original cost and longevity. Select paving that is in character with the house and the surrounding landscape.

Take into account any special factors. For example, if you have young children, is the surface soft enough for them to safely play on, yet solid enough for fast-moving games?

Is the paving unsightly or slippery after rain? Does it dry quickly? Will winter snows wash some of the surfacing away?

Gravel and wood chips are inexpensive compared to other surfacing materials, but both need to be replenished frequently since they wash away.

The most popular outdoor paving has been around long enough to prove itself in a vareity of climates. That includes brick, stone, wood decking, concrete blocks, poured concrete and gravel. In some areas, tile, beach pebbles, wood rounds, crushed rock and indoor-outdoor carpeting in a grass-like texture are also popular.

An "outdoor room" with no roof or walls can have a spa like this one that holds up to seven guests. It was shown during the National Association of Home Builders exposition in Dallas.

Computer 'sees' 3D house design

HANOVER, N.H. (AP) — For the potential homebuyer who cannot visualize what a house would look like from regular blueprints, a new computer program offers three-dimensional pictures with immediate feedback on suggested design changes.

The house design system was developed last year by Mark Franklin, of Glastonbury, Conn., when he was a graduate engineering student at Dartmouth College.

Under the system, with a push of a few buttons the customer can select a standard cape, saltbox or ranch, or start from scratch, and also can add a wing or subtract a window, and change the style or color of the house.

The system was created by Franklin as part of his master's thesis project. It was funded with financial support from Northern Energy Homes of Norwich, Vt.

Oriental designs inspired English and French work

By Barbara Mayer
AP Newsfeatures

Americans sometimes seem to have a bit of an "interior" complex since so many of our design inspirations have come from France and England.

But, says designer Ray Sobota, perhaps we'd be less intimidated if we realized that many of the French and English designs are themselves based on Oriental motifs.

The Chinese invented the cabriole leg and much else besides, says Sobota, director of design for Century Furniture Co. Furthermore, he adds, many of the most illustrious designers of history — Thomas Chippendale, for example — borrowed heavily from the Chinese.

According to Sobota, fretwork, which is characteristic of much 18th century English furniture, is one of the least-recognized Oriental borrowings. Western furniture designers and artists found the ornamental detailing and patterns on Chinese architecture so interesting that they used them as repetitive cut-out patterns to add interest to furniture. Fretwork is found as a design element on wallaper and fabric, too.

While the Chinese influence was greatest in England and also flourished in France, the young nation of America in the late 18th and 19th centuries was also influenced.

Today, the enthusiasm that began in the 18th century has re-emerged as Oriental style home furnishings once again become popular. Today's interior designers use the style as it was always used, to lend distinction to a faceless interior, to provide a bit of color in a drab room, to suggest formality and richness.

One of the special advantages of decorating with Oriental-style furnishings is the ability to create both traditional and contemporary settings with them. Chinese-inspired pieces such a lacquer screens, Oriental rugs and ebony and ivory furniture and accessories are timeless and are likely to remain fresh and attractive for many years.

Perhaps one reason for the richness of Chinese designs is their symbolic content, which may lend power to the furnishings. Animals, birds and elements of nature are not merely pretty designs to the Chinese, each has a particular meaning. For example, the dragon represents the deity and has been the symbol of the Chinese emperor since about 200 B.C. Before 1912, when China became a republic, the five-clawed dragon was used only on rugs made for the emperor or important princes. Others had to be content with a four-clawed dragon.

Foo dogs are probably one of the most familiar Chinese depictions on rugs as well as in bronze.

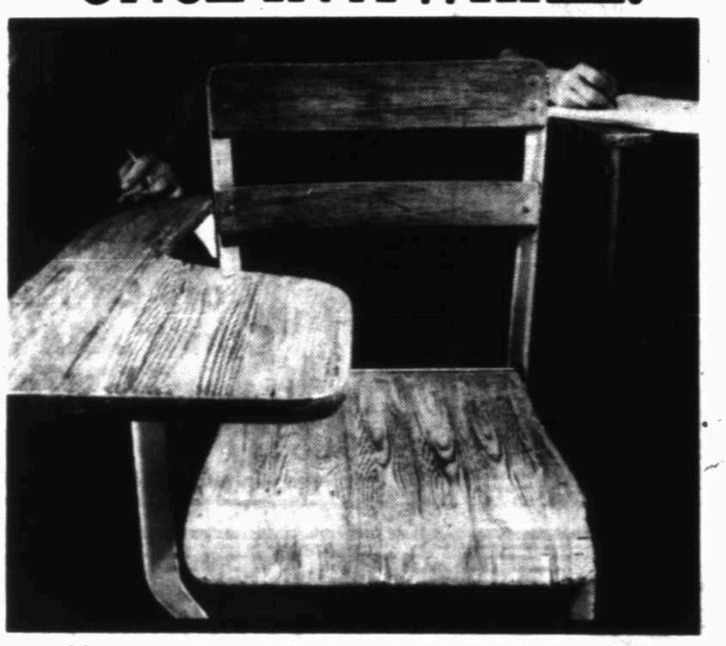
NOTHING IMPRESSES AN EMPLOYER LIKE DROPPING OUT OF SCHOOL EVERY ONCE IN A WHILE.



After several years of intense study, a lot of college graduates finally learn something. They're not qualified for the job they want.

That's why there's a nationwide program for college students called Cooperative Education. It allows students to alternate studies at the college of their choice with paid, practical work experience in the career of their choice.

To participate in Co-op Education you don't need to fit into any particular socio-economic group. You don't need to be a straight "A" student either.

All you really need to be, is smart enough to leave school.

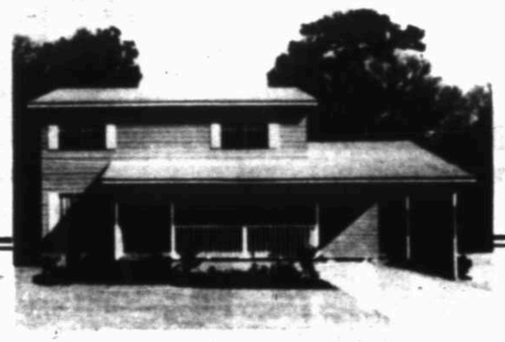
"When it comes to building a new home, I'll offer you a great deal!"

As a matter of fact, I'll build for you and offer you an optional completion allowance of up to $2000.00 for permanent improvements to your home. Who else will offer you a deal like this?

James W. Walter, Chairman of the Board



EXECUTIVE
3 or 4 bedrooms—2½ baths

Install a well and septic tank or hook up to existing utilities. Buy new carpet or landscaping. It's up to you what you do with this allowance. It's your option...and you'll have more home for less money than you ever thought possible. Come in today for a GREAT DEAL and a monthly payment you can afford.

No Down Payment to qualified property owners
Instant Fixed-Mortgage Financing
No "Points" — No Closing Costs
— No Loan Application Fees

That's right! When Jim Walter Homes is your builder, you pay no money down, unless you want to. But you never pay points, closing costs or other fees that add to the cost of financing your new home. When the expense of all these items is totaled, it's like adding to the rate of financing. This could add 2 or 3 percent, even more.

Jim Walter HOMES

to the cost of your new home. So don't be fooled. What you believe to be a low financing rate might actually be substantially higher than my low fixed-mortgage financing that has no closing costs or other fees added on.

Open Weekends

Jim Walter Homes is open daily and on weekends. Come in. Let us show you our display models. Let us tell you how we build on your property up to 90% complete. We finish the outside. Then you finish as much or as little of the inside as you like. The more you do for yourself, the more money you'll save. We build homes with two, three or four bedrooms, one or two-bath models. There's one to suit your family's dream of a new home.

Choose your home from the more than 20 models available. Tell us how much finishing work you want to do and let us quote you the exact cost and your exact monthly payment for the home of your choice. We can begin construction almost immediately, almost anywhere that you own property.

Completion allowance option is a limited time offer and may be withdrawn without notice.

WE BELIEVE IN MIDLAND!

DESPITE THE RAMPANT RUMORS THIS SUMMER of a mass exodus from Midland that would result in deserted streets, empty classrooms, we at COLDWELL BANKER ADOBE INC., REALTORS are indeed pleased to proclaim that there has not been a mass exodus - becuase of two very important statistics:

1. 140 more students enrolled in M.I.S.D. this year than at the same time last year! (18,640 had enrolled as of Septen ber 3, 1986).
2. According to the president of the Midland Board of REALTORS, there are only 12 more homes on the market than at the same time last year; 1642 versus the prediction of 4000 or more homes on the market.

We are excited about these numbers and believe that the future of Midland is indeed bright and the real estate market even brighter. Not in recent memory have we had such low interest rates coupled with realistic home prices which have created a tremendous affordability factor. Ask yourself, has there been a better time to buy?

We at COLDWELL BANKER ADOBE INC., REALTORS believe in Midland and its future. Having been a part of its dynamic growth the last eight years, we look forward with great anticipation for a stronger, more vibrant economy in the years ahead!

We invite you to stop by and get a copy of our curret "Pictorial Buyer's Guide."

For 20 years we have welcomed your challenges...

helped you find homes that were bigger, smaller, newer, older, less expensive, more expensive, urban or suburban...

assisted you in moves across the street, the city, the nation...

advised you on values, market conditions, the economics of adding on or remodeling, and whatever else we could.

Thank you for your 20 years of trust. We are working to earn 21.

The Write Stuff

One picture may be worth a thousand words, but for writers, real creativity is in "the turn of a phrase."

Midland Writer's Association recently conducted a contest, which drew 68 entries in three divisions — articles, poetry and short stories.

The contest, which spurred 25 new members to the organization, may be offered annually, said Mary J. Goodwin, club president and chairman of the event.

Winners were: Articles — John Gerlach, first; Dixie Mims, second; Mable Humphries, third; and Beth Pasley, honorable mention. Poetry — Mary Hawkins, first and third; Johana Mils, second; Mary Ann Calloway, first honorable mention; and Nora L. Norwood, second honorable mention. Short stories — Georgina Trevino, first; W.H. Buzzard, second; Frances Ponder, third; Myra Salcedo, first honorable mention; and Cheryl Mayne, second honorable mention.

Judges were Jo Baldwin, freelance writer; Robert S. Griffin, M.D., and J.W. Kuykendall, M.D.

John Gerlach

On television golf has always seemed to be such a simple sport. You just stroll in the midst of picturesque surroundings that I dream my backyard would look like someday, choosing the correct club to hit that little white ball toward an area of grass that I wish my front yard would look like someday. Nothing to it, right?

Wrong.

I think deep down I knew the truth because I avoided golf for many years with excuses like, "What's so hard about golf — it just wouldn't be a challenge," and "It's not athletic enough for me." What I didn't realize was that during my first round of golf I would be repeating the process of walking 10-20 yards, hitting the ball, walking a while and then again hitting the ball numerous times — an extremely frustrating and tiring and very athletic procedure. In fact, I determined I would have been much more rested, besides lopping 50 strokes off of my score, if I had just picked up my ball and thrown it each time. In fact, I may be able to organize a group of duffers (a word I prefer over the degrading label of hacker) like myself to approach the PGA with the idea.

Of course a golfer is only as good as his golf clubs. So as I began my first attempt at the noble game of golf, I borrowed a friend's extra set of clubs. It was my first mistake. I should have been suspicious when my friend told me that just to be on the safe side I probably should tighten the screws in the woods before using them. These borrowed clubs had an impressive German name on them. I later learned it's translated "cheap." It should have been a clue.

I was basically aware of the difference in the two types of golf clubs as I headed to the tee-box my first time. Irons are clubs used for loft and varied distances as you approach nearer to the hole; whereas, woods are clubs supposed to drive the ball great distances down the fairway.

I quickly discovered the level of my golf versatility as I could hit an extreme range of distance using only one club. Usually the distances of my shots ranged from short to the ball remaining untouched in front of me. And woods didn't bring long distances near to any fairways but they did introduce two important words into my golfing vocabulary: worm-burner (a shot that never leaves the ground) and mulligan (do-overs). Also, in my frustration at my golf ability, "teed-off" expanded in its meaning to me.

As my informal first lesson continued, my "friends" explained how to line up in relation to the ball while lining your feet in a straight line towards the hole. The reason you had to do all this lining up was because once you begin your swing you're not supposed to look at where it went. My "friends" explained that if you watched the flight of the ball you would not hit it correctly. The thing my instructors didn't realize was that those golf balls were beginning to look like a very bad investment by this time and I wanted to be sure I kept in my possession as many as I could for an upcoming yard sale. Although, after making all these alignments to the golf ball and keeping my left arm straight (another key element to good golf, I was told) while not looking up to see where the ball went and while keeping my knees flexed and relaxed, often I had no trouble at all finding the ball after swinging at it — ot would usually be still in front of me.

Having experienced a few times out on the golf course, I was "persuaded" to enter the church scramble golf tournament. Yes, I am the type that brings a huge grin to the face of door-to-door salesmen. I was told that a "scramble" meant that I would be teamed with three other golfers, each of us would take a shot and we would use the best shot of the four. What I wasn't told was that to determine evenly matched teams, each player was ranked from A to D. Every team was to consist of an A, B, C and D player. Almost immediately after we began the tournament, I brought a sense on comradery to my team as my teammates began affectionately referring to me as Double D and Doctor D.

Some of the highlights of my first tournament experience were: being able for the first time to call out "Fore" because my ball went far enough to be a hazard; breaking a tee (I had never swung hard enough before to break one); driving a golf cart for the first time (they gave me my own private cart after seeing me hit on the first three holes); having one of my tee-shots hit one of the metal markers on the ladies' tee-box in front of us and watching my team scatter as the ball ended up 30 yards behind us; and keeping my number of golf balls lost in the single digit range.

The day ended with my team finishing the tournament with a next-to-last place total of 73. Despite our high score, I left the golf course with a self-satisfied smirk on my face. I had reached my goal. My team did use some of my shots! Three strokes of our 73 total were all mine. But that was not the best part. Not only did we use three of my shots, we used one of my tee-shots! I can still hear the supreme compliment given to me by the "A" player of our foursome, "Well, we have two shots in the trees and one in the water. We better use the short one."

Yes, sports fans, it was my shot. . .

"Lost"
Dixie Mims

It was about 5 p.m. on Sunday. After grading papers and preparing lesson plans for my high school freshman and sophomore Spanish students, my fingers were cramped and my mind exhausted and dull.

I set out from Norwood, Colo., and drove toward Nucla, about 20 miles away. Before reaching Nucla, I turned off to the left on another road into countryside that was breathtaking — pine trees, snow-capped mountains and rugged rock formations. The road bent and turned many times, and I soon passed the home of one of my students.

The road soon forked and a sign read "Norwood Burn Road." Since I wanted to get back to Norwood, I turned. Soon the gravel became mud and the mud softer and sloshier. One would think I would have turned around, but I didn't. Instead I continued driving, knowing it was the wrong thing to do. As the mud became softer and the wheels started spinning, I shifted backward, forward and back again. The wheels, however, only sank in deeper. I suddenly remembered that I had snow chains in the trunk; but since the mud came up almost to my bumper, I knew my efforts would be futile. Norwood, I thought, could be no more than a quarter of a mile away.

As it was becoming dusk, I took my flashlight from the glove compartment and started walking along the dirt road. I walked and walked and walked — that road seemed like miles. As I reached a fork in the road, I thought of Robert Frost's poem, "The Road Not Taken," and where the other fork would have led me.

After continuing down the left fork of the road for what seemed like a mile, I saw tire tracks. Forest rangers, I thought! I had finally made contact with civilization. Just over the hill my eyes caught a glimpse of the lights of Nucla. Where was I? Very shortly the tire tracks disappeared into the snow. Realizing that I could not get up the steep, snow-covered hill, I turned back and sat down to rest for a minute. I knew that I must soon be on my way, as darkness was approaching.

I kept on walking. A rustling of leaves to my right startled me. A snake, I thought at first. Though it was not a snake, I realized then that I was now vulnerable to all the elements of nature.

After walking for hours, I realized that I was getting farther and farther away from town and from civilization. I was lost!

As I crossed over a small hill, I saw a bright orange light in the distance. A forest fire, I thought! I must find the ranger, for he could surely help me. My body ached, but I continued to walk toward that light. As I neared it, the light seemed to be a light in a house. My hopes raised, I hollered loudly and wondered if anyone in it could hear me, but there was no answer. My hopes had been dashed once again. I had no choice, though, but to continue walking toward the light.

As I approached the light, I saw that it was not a light in a house but rather a campfire. My body ached all over after walking for six hours, and I decided to bed down there for the night. Pangs of hunger and thirst overwhelmed me, and as I approached the campfire, I heard what sounded like cowbells. Could it be goats? I was overwhelmed with fear. It was then that the Biblical parable of the sheep and goats came to mind.

I laid down in front of the campfire in the ashes, using them for both a bed and a pillow, and pulled the hood of my jacket over my head to protect it from the cold wind. Sleep evaded me. I was ill and the cold wind blew against the back of my legs, diminishing the warmth on my face. The goat bells kept clanking and I got only a little rest that night.

About 5 a.m. the next morning I awoke, still feeling sick, isolated and lonely. I had to find my way back to the road.

Have you heard...?

By MARILYN McKNIGHT HARRISON

The Summer Mummers ended its 38th triumphant season over Labor Day Weekend with a gala wrap party.

Cast and crew members and their guests assembled in the clubhouse of Quinten's Walk Apartments to rehash the summer's fun, to view the popular movieola sequences from past Mummers (dating from the movies' inception in the late 1960s to the present), and to enjoy a late night hot dog supper.

Hosting the party were Barbara Fritz, Doug Heck and Tim Rosborough.

An awards ceremony highlighted the evening. The "Mummer of the Year" was awarded jointed to Judy Powell and Odessan Scooter Tilley for their direction and hard work this summer. Co-stage managers Kathy Allen and Karlis Gruzins received engraved pewter tankards.

Producer Doug Heck was presented an engraved plaque, which will go on his director's chair in appreciation for producing the 1985 and 1986 shows. He also was pleased to be the recipient of a framed wall plaque of a Playbill from the very first Mummers in 1949. It came from Bill Pennebaker's collection of Mummers memorabilia.

Bill tells us that "The Drunkard" played three weekends the Summer of '49 at the old American Legion Hall on South Colorado Street. Its cast and crew included such well-known Midlanders as Art Cole, Patricia Pryor (now Mrs. Martin Allday), Norris Creath, Bill Pomeroy, Becky and Jack Huff, Stan Shaeffer, Duke Jimerson, Sonya Little Scholl and Bill Pennebaker.

THE SATURDAY AFTERNOON WEDDING of Melody Stewart and Dick Bowdon was preceded by a series of festive events.

Co-hosts were Ruth and Phillip Becker, Mary Jo and Jack Darden, Marjo and Harold Rydell, Billie and W.B. Stephens and Peggy and Bill Thorsen.

Guests included Melody's parents, Kathleen and Harold Stewart, and Dick's parents, Dot and Bill Bowdon of Houston and formerly of Midland.

Joy (Mrs. James) Finley and her daughter, Melanie, entertained for the bride with a recipe shower and rice bag party. Each guest was asked to bring her favorite recipe, along with the pan or key ingredients to create her masterpiece.

A bridesmaids luncheon was given by Janell (Mrs. Bill) Pendleton, Ardis (Mrs. Wendell) Smith and Martha (Mrs. Truman) Rhodes at Ranchland Hills Country Club. The bride's maternal grandmother, Mrs. Florence Deal of Burbank, Calif., was a special guest.

After a honeymoon in New Hampshire, the couple will be at home in Midland.

TEN MIDLAND GIRLS and one Odessan attended Heart O' the Hills Camp in Hunt — the heart of the Texas Hill Country — this summer.

They were Alyson and Ashley Bunnell, daughters of Charlene and Doug Bunnell; Hannah Boyd, daughter of Nancy and C.E. Boyd; Suni Cox, daughter of Jana Cox; Emily Kleine, daughter of Ann and Bill Kleine; Taffy Staley, daughter of Sandra and George Staley.

Also, Meredith Secker, daughter of Sue and Dan Secker; Chris Tom, daughter of Kay and James Tom; Sherri Alexander, daughter of Carole Alexander; Robin Goodson, daughter of Joyce and Harold Goodson, and Rachel Henderson, daughter of Mrs. Jerry Henderson of Odessa.

A DOUBLE WEDDING recently united in marriage two sisters with two young men who have been friends and neighbors for a number of years.

Wedding vows were exchanged by Teresa Simmons and Glen Thompson and Renae Simmons and Tim Vannaman the evening of Aug. 23 in the Main Street Church of Christ. Making it even more a family affair, the brides' uncles, Leo Copeland of Seminole and Odell Farr of Carrollton performed the ceremony.

The brides are the daughters of Lanell Simmons and the late Paul Simmons. Parents of the grooms are Janis and Mort Thompson and Martha and Tom Vannaman.

Following the ceremony, a reception was held in the church's Fellowship Hall. The brides' table was adorned with a beautiful arrangement of summer flowers in their chosen colors of rose and lavender. Violet Farr of Eden made each of her granddaughters a three-tier bride's cake, and she also made the cake for the grooms' table.

Bridal parties held earlier this summer were a lingerie shower at the home of Frances (Mrs. Jimmy) Smith and a miscellaneous shower in the Fellowship Hall.

Glen and Teresa are now at home in Lubbock, where Glen is a student at Texas Tech. Tim and Renae are living in San Angelo, and Tim is attending Angelo State University.

Scientists trying alternatives to animal research

United Press International

Under mounting pressure from animal lovers, scientists at a major U.S. medical center are testing product safety on computers and cell cultures instead of cats and rabbits.

The Johns Hopkins Center for Alternatives to Animal Testing in Baltimore, which has received most of its $3.7 million funding from the cosmetics and fragrance industry, is evaluating at least 30 methods that do not rely on live animals for assaying toxicity of new health and beauty aids.

If they prove feasible, the tests could spare many of the 2 million to 4 million animals used in toxicity experiments each year — and yield more reliable data.

"The center has shown that good science can go hand in hand with reduction in animal use," says Henry Spira, an opponent of animal experimentation.

Now in its fourth year of operation, the center recently announced that it is ready to validate alternative methods to the 40-year-old Draize eye test.

A prime target of animal rights activists, the Draize test measures the potential harm of products by placing high concentrations in the eyes of live rabbits.

Alternatives now under consideration include tissue culture tests on human eye cells left over from corneal transplant surgery and cattle eyes obtained from slaughterhouses. Theoretically, the results of these tests would be more applicable to humans than are Draize findings.

"The impetus for us to look at alternatives came from the animal welfare movement, but ... it's pushing us in the right direction, toward something that is really important in science," says Dr. Gary Flamm, toxicology chief at the Food and Drug Administration.

"I think that in trying to get an alternative test that is as good as the Draize, we will almost inevitably end up with a better test."

The same conclusion was reached by the Congressional Office of Technology Assessment in a report on alternatives to animal use.

Released in February 1986, the report said "total replacement of animal use will not occur in the foreseeable future" but added that computer simulation and cell cultures could reduce the extent of animal experimentation.

Judging by corporate support for the Hopkins center, consciousness has been raised in the board room as well as the lab. The list of the center's sponsors — which is headed by the Cosmetic, Toiletry and Fragrance Association and includes Bristol-Myers, Clorox, and Exxon — shows that industry is also concerned about the negative image of animal experiments, says activist Alex Pacheco.

Pacheco, who directs the People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals, believes that such support is "nice window dressing ... For every $50,000 in corporate sales, they contribute 20 cents to the center. What we need is a couple dozen centers."

Still, Pacheco admits that the center's scientific agenda "is a great thing."

Such progress should be credited to the animal welfare movement, he says.

Animal protectors willing to kill people

LONDON (UPI) — There are now animal lovers in Britain who admit they are willing to kill people to protect animal rights.

"In a war you have to take up arms, and people get killed," Tim Daley, a commercial pilot turned animal rights activist, said in a recent nationwide television broadcast.

This admission shocked a nation that sees itself as made up of animal lovers. Longer established animal welfare groups think animals can do without such protection.

"It's certainly made people more aware of animal rights, but this is a minor advantage compared to the damage caused," said David Paterson, administrator of the British Veterinary Society's Animal Welfare Group.

Police said that since 1981, groups of self-proclaimed animal lovers have claimed responsibility for about 2,000 acts of violence, causing more than $9 million worth of damage to farms, laboratories and the meat trade.

The clandestine Animal Liberation Front, which claims 1,600 members, said it planted 16 bombs at the homes of politicians or scientists involved with animal experiments.

The Front claimed responsibility for a number of other attacks, including burning a meat-processing factory, physical violence against hunters, breaking into research laboratories and freeing captive animals.

London Times Columnist Bernard Levin said that what motivates the perpetrators of such acts "is not a love of animals but a hatred of human beings.

"What horrible frenzy grips these people so that in order to destroy the humanity in themselves they must abuse and daub and smash and burn and injure and perhaps at last kill?" Levin wrote.

Paterson said reasonable people would prefer not to use animals for experimental and scientific purposes.

"Unfortunately there are insufficient valid alternatives, and if advances in the treatment of human and animal diseases are to continue animals must be used," he said.

But Daley and fellow members of the Animal Liberation Front say violence, including the destruction of property and life, is morally justified "in a war to free animals."

"It's like the law in Germany during the war that allowed the torture of Jews," said a Front leader who requested anonymity.

Weight Watchers will help you overcome those "tough times" with the help of five informative booklets.

"What can I eat at a party?"

"We go to a great restaurant and I don't know what to eat."

"I LOVE desserts!"

Now, with these booklets, you'll have the answers to most of the problems you encounter every day at parties—restaurants—holiday time—dessert time and at breakfast.

Now, you'll be able to handle them all and still lose weight faster and easier!

As I started out, I heard a pickup motor. Finally it seemed that another human being would find me. The truck rounded the bend. Exuberant, I started waving madly to him and hollering.

When the driver of the truck and his passengers got out, I saw that they were one of my students, his father and their sheepherder. Mr. Alexander had a very puzzled look on his face, as if he wanted to say, "What in the world?" My appearance justified that look, for my hair was disheveled, my face covered with ashes and my jacket reeking with the odor of smoke. Hysterical, I explained to him what had happened, but he had a hard time believing it. He thought that I was trying to rustle his sheep. When he told me that I was only about one-quarter of a mile from Norwood, I was both surprised and relieved, for I was a teacher and should have had enough sense to know that guidelines are needed, especially in a strange area. And how humiliated I was for one of my students to see me in that state.

Mr. Alexander took me into town and stopped at the service station to send a winch truck out for my car. Mr. Haley, the owner of the service station and the father of another one of my students, later told me how difficult it was to get my car out of the mud. Comments about my adventure ranged from "I can't believe it" to "You never take the Norwood Burn Road, not even in the summer, much less in the winter."

A teacher can learn from her students the very lessons she is trying to teach — know something about what you are doing before you attempt it alone.

"The Mystery of the Strange Thump-Thump"
Frances Ponder

"Daisy, you naughty cat! Stop scattering the weeds!" Sara Beth scolded.

Daisy caught another weed in her paw, flipped it into the air and then scooted out of Sara Beth's reach. She sat licking her paws and washing her face. After washing her face she curled up under the shade of a bushy tomato plant to take a nap.

Sara Beth continued pulling weeds from the radishes. The pile grew higher and higher now that Daisy was no longer scattering them.

This was Sara Beth's own special part of the garden and she was very proud of it. She worked in her garden almost every day.

As she worked Sara Beth began to notice an odd sound coming from somewhere nearby. It was not one of the soft, buzzing, whispering garden sounds but a strange thump-thump and scratch sound.

"I wonder what that could be?" She stood up and looked around but could see nothing unusual in the garden. As the thumping sound came again Sara Beth said,"Come, Daisy, let's see what is making that strange sound."

Daisy had heard the thump-thump, scratch-scratch, too, and stretched her neck to peer around. She moved closer to Sara Beth and began to creep along with her body almost flat on the ground.

At the end of the squash row there was an overturned basket. As they neared the basket Sara Beth said, "Careful Daisy, the sound may be coming from under there!" As Sara Beth lifted the basket with a stick Daisy crouched close by Sara Beth's foot, ready to spring. But there was nothing under the basket.

THUMP-THUMP, SCRATCH-SCRATCH! The sound was louder! Daisy arched her back and began to meow loudly. "MEOW, MEOW!"

"It's coming from over there near that pile of tomato stakes. Let's look there," Sara Beth said.

Daisy flattened herself on the ground again and slithered along toward the pile of tomato stakes. She perched herself on top of the pile as Sara Beth poked with the stick. She was ready to pounce if anything ran out. But nothing did except a black beetle and that couldn't have made the mysterious sound.

"THUMP, THUMP, SCRATCH, SCRATCH!" It was so loud! Was it getting closer? Sara Beth picked Daisy up and held her tightly. But Daisy wasn't afraid! She squirmed out of Sara Beth's arms and headed for the cucumber vines which sprawled across the wide row in front of them.

Sara Beth poked at the vines with her stick. She upset a bee that was buzz-buzzing around a yellow cucumber blossom. A brown lizard hiding under a leaf blinked at them and then hurried away just out of reach of Daisy's quick paws.

"Let's look in the compost bin!" Sara Beth tip-toed around the row of snap beans and looked into the almost empty bin. Daisy leaped to the rim of the bin and peered in too. But there was nothing in the compost bin!

A small tree stood close by and Daisy scrambled up its trunk and sat on the highest branch where she could see the entire garden. An angry bird, frightened from the nest, scolded loudly from the top of the garden fence.

Daisy sat very still and waited. "Get down, Daisy! There's nothing in that tree!" said Sara Beth crossly. "Where is that strange sound coming from?" Sara Beth was getting very hot and tired.

THUMP-THUMP, SCRATCH-SCRATCH! The sound was very close now!

Suddenly Daisy leaped to the ground and stood flicking her tail. One flick, two and three flicks, then she was flat on the ground slithering toward the back of the garden.

THUMP-THUMP, SCRATCH-SCRATCH! Something was in the ditch!

"Careful, Daisy," called Sara Beth. "Don't get too close!" Daisy crawled bravely to the edge of the ditch and looked in, her body quivering, ready to spring.

Slowly Sara Beth walked up and stood beside Daisy. "So, you are the one making that mysterious noise," she said.

There in the bottom of the shallow ditch lay a turtle on his back. His tiny legs were kicking furiously as he tried to right himself. As he kicked the edge of his hard shell and his feet went THUMP-THUMP, SCRATCH, SCRATCH against a spade left standing nearby.

As Sara Beth reached down and picked up the unlucky turtle, Daisy arched back and began to hiss. SSSsss. SSSsss.

"It's all right, Daisy. We have found the mysterious noise maker but we must send him on his way. If he stays in our garden he will eat our vegetables."

She carefully placed the turtle on the outside of the garden fence. After a moment he poked out his head, looked around, then waddled away into the high weeds.

"You're a brave cat, Daisy," said Sara Beth giving the cat a soft rub behind her ears.

"Purrrrrr...." said Daisy as she flicked her tail one, two and three flicks and followed Sara Beth out of the garden.

"Not Like Everyone Else"
Cheryl Mayne

I don't know why I loved him. It was a compulsion with me. Aaron never hesitated to tell me that my dress was too short or that I didn't look good in brown. He told me that he was embarrassed to walk me to class at school because someone in his drafting class said that I was skinny and had crooked teeth. Still, his acceptance was what I longed for more than his love.

I was two months older than Aaron and I passed my driving test and received my license two months before he did. I began to notice in October of our sophomore year that he was beginning to pay attention to me, calling me on the phone, eating lunch with me in the school cafeteria. Two weeks before his 16th birthday, Aaron asked me for a date. We were to go to Odessa to celebrate his birthday over dinner.

He called me the afternoon of our date and said, "I failed my driver's test today, and I won't be able to drive to Odessa. Mom and Dad are taking us. My little sister has to come, too."

"I'm sorry you failed your test," I told him. "Anyway, I don't mind your parents going."

"My mom is going to wear her blue silk dress," he told me.

It was important to him that I looked appropriate.

"OK, I'll wear my pink dress. You've seen it before and you said you liked it," I told him, knowing that I had only one nice dress. A friend had grown out of it and had given it to me. I couldn't afford to buy a new dress.

My parents had been divorced for six years and Mother did not make enough money to support my three younger brothers and myself. Mother had a difficult time holding down a job. She had never finished high school and had recently developed a problem with asthma. Most of the money that she did earn went to pay either doctor or medical bills. In fact, Mom had an appointment in Odessa that very afternoon to see an allergy specialist.

"Sure," he said, "I remember that dress. That will be fine. I'll see you at six."

After I hung up the phone, I began to clean the house. It was always a mess with three boys to dirty it up and Mom too sick to clean.

I finished getting ready for my date after the house was clean and opened the drapes in the living room. I sat on the couch and waited for everyone to arrive. About five minutes before six o'clock, the phone rang. It was Buddy, my mom's boyfriend from Odessa.

"Your mother is at the doctor's," Buddy said. "She wants you to ask your boyfriend to bring you up here so you can drive her home in her car. The doctor gave her some medicine and she is too groggy to drive."

"But my date, my first date. I've been looking forward to it for weeks."

Oh, what could I do? How could I ask Aaron or his parents to take me to my mother? I looked out the window and saw that he and his parents had just driven up the driveway in their new Mercury.

"Buddy, could you please bring her home," I asked, "since you're already there?"

"Well, who is going to get the car back?" he demanded.

"I don't know," I said. "Maybe I can go back and get it tomorrow. But I really can't get it now. They just pulled into the driveway. I can't decide. I don't know what to do."

Aaron came to the door smiling. I'm sure that he thought this would be a perfect evening. If only he knew.

"Are you ready?" he asked as I hung up the phone.

"Sure," I said.

"Who was on the phone?" he wanted to know.

"Oh, no one," I answered, wondering if he could read the guilt and embarrassment on my face.

"Let's go," he said, "everyone is waiting."

He opened the door and I climbed into the back seat between him and his little sister. I was so worried and confused.

We finally got to the restaurant. I ordered shrimp, like everyone else. I couldn't stop thinking about my mother and about how angry she would be with me.

"Why can't I be normal like everyone else?" I cursed under my breath.

I remembered stories that my friends at school had told me about their first dates and how much fun they were. And here I was in the restaurant with my boyfriend, thinking of no one but my mother.

"Anne," someone called.

I looked up. Oh, no! It was my mother standing there, in a drugged stupor, leaning on the shoulder of her newest boyfriend. They were here, in the restaurant.

"Here are the keys," she slurred. "The car is parked by the hospital. It's out of gas," she said.

My ears didn't work. My eyes sought a door, an escape. Where could I run? I saw nothing but my drunken mother leaning on this man's arm, and his pants were unzipped. I couldn't move. I couldn't speak. Someone took the keys for me. I don't even remember when she left.

Then, she was gone. I still couldn't breathe. My eyes moved around the table. They were all staring at me. How they must have judged me; me with no explanation! How things must have looked!

We left the restaurant not long after. We found the car. It had been damaged in a wreck about two weeks before my big date. Aaron and I got in the car. I had to drive, of course. We went to the Mobil self-service station where his father filled up Mom's car and paid the bill with his credit card.

We drove the 20 miles home. I could hear myself breathe and so could he. My hands were sweating on the steering wheel. I was so ashamed. I drove like a zombie, a zombie who couldn't breathe. I finally got home and said good-bye to the family and to Aaron.

They drove away and I walked into the house. There she was, on the couch, waiting for me.

"You are so ungrateful!" she screamed. "You don't even care about your own mother. How can you be so selfish? You wouldn't even care if I died."

I ran into my room and closed the door. I cried myself to sleep. But the nightmares still come. Always I run away when I see my mother and her boyfriend handing me the keys. I always run, and when I leave the restaurant, I can breathe. But when I wake up, I realize that I didn't run and that Aaron never called me back.

AT WIT'S END

Clothing designed with memory

By ERMA BOMBECK

High tech is all right in its place, but it's getting out of hand.

We all remember padded bras, strapless bras, French bras and Phyllis Diller's living bra that died. Now technology has come out with a "memory bra." I'm serious.

It's an undergarment that contains a special lightweight metal alloy of nickel and titanium that allows the bra to shape itself to the wearer and weighs no more than a ballpoint pen.

No matter how many times it is laundered it remembers its original shape and goes back to it.

That's all well and good, assuming it has something to remember.

But what if all of our clothes were programmed to taunt us with our past? Next thing you know we'll have bikinis that roll up into a string and play, "The Way We Were."

Or talking slacks that shout "Repent!" when you try to zip them up.

I've got nothing now but a closet full of memories. There's a navy coat dress that remembers when it buttoned over my stomach, and a wrap-around skirt that remembers wrapping all the way around to the back. I paid big money to have a knit skirt steamed and blocked to erase the memory of my profile when I wore it.

Probably the only great thing about pantyhose is that every time you wash them they go back to their original shape. I look at that puckered, starved, withered six inches of nylon and feel reborn again. God has given me a second chance to pack it in!

The next thing you know your entire closet will have a memory storage bank. Your shoes will remember when they fit. Your blouses will remember when you could button the bottom button. Your overblouse will remember when it bloused.

In talking with my friends, I asked them if a bra with a memory had been one of their priorities.

"Compared to what?" asked one of them.

"Compared to feeding the world's poor, securing peace in the Mideast or discovering a cure for anxiety."

"Actually," she replied, "I see it more of an effrontery to women that they can't remember from one washing to another what they look like."

"That's a problem?"

"What was the question?"

I don't know. Sometimes it seems the world is just moving along too fast for me. Phones without cords ... talking cars ... sonic sensors on your car keys ... digital clocks ... word processors that hold your memories.

Now I have to worry what happens when I take a bra out of the dryer. Did it just collapse from too much to remember ... or did it just turn senile?

Order of birth influential

Associated Press

Some couples are literally born for each other — and others may find the order of their birth causes personality clashes.

Whether a person is firstborn, a middle child or the family baby has a powerful influence on personality, according to an article in a recent issue of Redbook, as well as the choice of a spouse and the kind of marriage they have.

"Birth order can be a useful tool in helping a couple discover and deal with the tensions and problems that are apt to emerge in any relationship," wrote therapist Kevin Leman, who said there had been thousands of studies on how the "family constellation" determines human behavior.

"These studies have identified three main birth-order positions," he said, "firstborn (which includes only children), middleborn (second, third, fourth, etc) and lastborn, or youngest."

Birth-order experts say firstborns are more highly motivated to succeed than their younger siblings. A high proportion of them wind up in "status" professions such as medicine or law. Twenty-one of the first 23 astronauts were firstborn or only children.

They also tend to be picky perfectionists whose air of confidence and competence may hide a deep sense of inferiority.

Middle children are most likely to become whatever their older siblings are not, saving themselves from having to compete with big brother or sister.

Middle children are the most monogamous of the birth orders, weathering the bad times but also sometimes staying with a partner who is abusive or domineering. Faced with marital conflict, they often choose to avoid confrontation.

Youngest children tend to be funny, carefree, affectionate and persuasive and often grow up to become salesmen or enter the helping professions such as counseling or teaching. They also grow up being coddled and cuddled one minute, and compared unfavorably with older siblings the next.

As adults, lastborns typically are cocky, self-centered, insecure and competitive. In marriage they tend to be demanding, dependent and even manipulative.

Marriage is a combination of birth orders, and Leman said that in his practice as a therapist the most volatile couples were those who had married within their own birth order.

"Whether you're a perfectionist or a performer, a pleaser or a peacemaker," Leman said, "putting your loved one first — which is just practicing the Golden Rule — will improve your marriage, regardless of the order in which the two of you were born."

Games can ruin marriage

Associated Press

There are a series of games many married players engage in — sometimes both partners win but sometimes their marriage is the loser.

These games are unspoken agreements that when one partner acts in a certain way, the other will respond accordingly, according to an article in the September issue of Redbook.

Here are some of the most common — and destructive — games, as excerpted from Doris Wild Heimering's book, "Happily Ever After: A Therapist's Guide to Taking the Fight Out and Putting the Fun Back into Your Marriage."

■ "I'll Do It When I'm Good and Ready." In this game, one partner asks the other to do something. That partner promises to do it, then doesn't.

After a lot of nagging he or she says, "I'll do it when I'm good and ready."

Favorite subjects include quitting smoking, going on a diet, starting an exercise program, cutting down on drinking, cleaning the basement, fixing the fence and balancing the checkbook.

To stop playing, the partners must agree when the job will be done. If it isn't done by that time, assume it won't be.

■ "Why Don't You ... Yes But ..." In this instance, one partner suggests doing something while the other throws up obstacles.

This game is played most often by couples in a power struggle over who will make decisions.

■ "Sweetheart." These players ask how your day was, not because they care but because they want to appear nice.

Sweethearts should compliment and love themselves and ask how their mates feel only when they really want to know.

■ "Corner." In Corner, no matter what the spouse does, the other finds something to be dissatisfied about. Usually once the "Cornerer" becomes aware of his behavior ploy, the game is over.

■ "If It Weren't For You ..." In this case one partner puts the blame on the other when the responsibility really is his or hers.

A man who feels shy about drinking with the boys will tell them his wife won't like it.

■ "Now I've Got You." In this game one partner has the other followed to prove he or she is seeing someone else, or marks the liquor bottle to make a point about drinking or asks about a certain incident when he or she already knows the answer.

To stop playing this game, confront your spouse long before you build your case. Get things out in the open and discuss them.

■ "Look at Me!" Some people are attention competitive, always looking for attention.

The best defense is to let your mate know exactly what he or she is doing so he or she can modify behavior.

■ "Nothing's Wrong." The classic example is the attention and control-competitive wife who, when obviously angry, is asked what's wrong and mutters, "Nothing."

Woods' anniversary celebrated

Mr. and Mrs. A.W. Wood of Midland were honored with three parties in celebration of their 50th wedding anniversary. Saturday a reception was given at First United Methodist Church Parlor, and a dinner party at the Hill House. Brunch today was at Bennigan's. The gatherings were hosted by the couple's children.

Wood and the former Margaret Jane Patton were married Sept. 5, 1936 in Oklahoma City. They have three children, Patricia Wood Cobb of Midland, Ann Wood Cook of Alamo Heights and R. William Wood of Denton, as well as eight grandchildren and one great-grandchild.

The couple has lived in Bartlesville, Okla., Eldorado, Ark., and since 1952 in Midland. Wood was a petroleum engineer and regional manager with Monsanto. Mrs. Wood was chairman of the English department for Midland Independent School District. Both are retired.

The couple attends First United Methodist Church.

IT'S YOUR LIFE

Discuss finances

By STEVE EDWARDS

When I was a boy, my family never talked about finances. If something within reason was needed, generally it was provided. It was like having a "good fairy" who sometimes said "no". You hear the same comment from many families. The young child knows neither the amount of the family income nor his parents' financial condition. It was not known whether the purchased item was bought through excess funds or through a sacrifice made by mom or dad.

Why do parents react this way? Sometimes this information is withheld in the early years as a matter of discretion and judgment. Parents rarely tell friends the details of their economic conditions and because children sometimes are prone to mention family secrets, the information is withheld. In later years, parents may have other reasons for maintaining their secrecy. If the family has prospered financially, parents may prefer that their children grow up learning to be on their own and not be influenced by how much money the family has. Parents with comparatively little money may wish their children to believe that family finances are in better shape than they actually are. Some parents take the attitude that it is simply not a child's business to know about family finances. They figure that the youngster will find out soon enough anyway.

When the time comes, many families — especially adult children and their parents — put off talking about family finances until "the proper time." Unfortunately, when that time comes, it is often surrounded or associated with crisis events or turmoil.

Three daughters were confronted with the issue of their mother being placed in a nursing home. Each daughter lived in a different state. The mother was still in charge of her money, and though care was needed, was reluctant about spending her total savings. As her concern was that her grandchildren remember her, she planned to leave a legacy to each. The mother asked the daughters to help pay for the nursing home.

The daughters, thinking the nursing home was a good idea, were unprepared to financially support the move. They in turn asked their husbands. The men responded, "Of course we'll take care of mother, but doesn't she have any money of her own? We thought she had money. As for us, with the kids in college, sending $100 a month would be tight."

The scenario begins to intensify. The daughter wants to help the mother in a move which is good for "mom," yet is pressured by the needs of her own family. She feels guilty in denying her mother, yet how can she send money she doesn't have?

The daughter also becomes angry at being put in the situation. She begins to question why the mother needs to leave money to the kids. "It's silly to send money that she already has. Yet, we don't know what she has."

This scene is reacted in many ways for various families. Parents retire, yet retirement income is not sufficient. Or perhaps the adult children need financial assistance; yet the parents' retirement income doesn't allow them to respond. A parent may have a severe illness or surgery and require financial assistance. Parents may need to move into a controlled retirement complex or nursing home.

The factors are many, yet the questions come back in the same vein, "Who will pay for these costs? How much money do our parents have? What kinds of investments or monthly benefits? What about our children's finances?"

Attitudes also compound the concerns. Some older parents are frugal in spending for their own needs and are imbued with the idea of leaving something to their children after death. Other parents — and children — possess the attitude that they are quite prepared to spend all they have for their own comfort.

For various reasons, financial discussions between parent and older children are difficult. Some family members are as reluctant to probe as to reveal. A parent or child may not want an added financial responsibility. Yet as family members live longer, money must be discussed.

The hard fact is that life is expensive. Retiring, like many other things, costs much more than in years past. Thus, it is legitimate as well as imperative that adult children and parents discuss together all aspects of money.

Will there be enough for living expenses in the foreseeable future? What about expensive medical bills? What about alternative types of houses or extended medical care?

Questions concerning social security, Medicare, supplemental insurance, taxes and tax breaks, wills, annuities, trusts as well as a host of others need to be addressed. These discussions should begin before a parent retires and continues through their lifetime.

Regardless of the age, family members should initiate discussion concerning these topics. These areas represent legitimate concerns for future security and communications.

MISTER ROGERS

Children take adults' words literally

By FRED ROGERS and BARRY HEAD

A friend of ours remembers, when he was 4 or so, hearing his older sister being told to "watch her tongue." Curious, he went off to his room and tried to watch his. "To begin with," he recalls, "I found it was a hard thing to do and made you go cross-eyed. And then I couldn't figure out for the life of me what was meant to happen when you did watch it."

There must be thousands of times during childhood when children misunderstand what they hear. Our mind has a way of making sense — any kind of sense — out of what our ears and eyes bring to it. When what comes in is new or unfamiliar, the mind will do its best to match that information with something it already knows. On the seeming formlessness of treetops and clouds the mind will impose faces or animal shapes that we know.

The same thing happens with unfamiliar words and meanings. Just the other day, a colleague, who is slightly hard of hearing, was working with the radio droning in the background. He was astounded to hear a commercial message having to do with "Mozart's hairline."

"I couldn't imagine what that was all about," he said, "so I asked someone else in the room. At first I got a blank look and then a guffaw. It had been an ad for Ozark Airlines."

Many of children's misunderstandings may arise the same way — by fitting the unclear into what's already understood. I'm told that children have thought that the carol "Silent Night" was about someone called Round John Virgin. My sister used to say as part of her night-time prayer: "The pirates and the glory forever and ever...."

But there's another frequent source of misunderstanding, and that's children's tendency to take what we say literally. How can they do otherwise when they're just beginning to put words together? But at the same time that their parents may be telling them, "Say what you mean," those parents, themselves, aren't saying what they mean at all.

Does "We'll go in a minute" really mean that 60-second period of time parents may be helping their children to understand? What do you suppose a child imagines when a grownup talks about being "all ears" or "all thumbs"? Or having to "keep your eyes peeled"? Phrases about body parts may be particularly likely to be misunderstood because body parts are of such urgent concern to very young children.

One of their major concerns is whether body parts really and truly hold together, or whether they can break off like parts of a toy. "Losing" an arm or a finger may be understood as just that: It simply got lost.

And "losing" a husband or a child may be a frightening thought for children when fears about separation from those they love are another natural source of anxiety. It's not the fear of death that may be so upsetting; just that it seems so easy for people to get lost from one another.

Death, though, is the subject of many misunderstandings, perhaps because adults often have a hard time talking about it simply and directly. Saying that "Grammy went to sleep and never woke up" may seem like a gentle way to break the news of a close relative's death, but it has led to night-time fears for many children who begin worrying that if they let themselves go to sleep, they may never wake up, either.

A clear instance of a children's literal misunderstandings is the story of the child who was terrified to go to the funeral home to see Grandpa's body laid out... but who was vastly relieved once he approached the open casket because he could see that Grandpa's head was still there as well, not just his body!

Sometimes it's our misunderstandings as well as our childrens' that contribute to the confusion of anxiety.

DEAR ABBY

Lasting love, not just romance, sought

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I read your column every day and have never seen my problem addressed. I am 41, single and a fairly attractive young woman. (Some men have even called me beautiful.) I have a good personality and have no trouble attracting men — but I can't keep them.

After dating a man for a while, by the time I fall in love with him, I find out he isn't "in love" with me. He's comfortable, happy and considers our relationship "wonderful," but he's not interested in me as a lifetime partner. I am not desperate, but every time I find a new man and develop a relationship with him, he makes me feel as if I'm pushing him for a commitment; then he breaks off with me.

Please help me. I don't want to be single forever. — NEEDS HELP

DEAR NEEDS: If every new man in your life makes you feel like you're pushing him for a commitment, you are — either consciously or unconsciously. In your next relationship, say absolutely nothing about where the relationship is going, no hinting about marriage, a solid commitment or anything that could be construed as "pressure." Then if nothing happens, and you think you've invested enough time in the relationship, say goodbye, and mean it! And don't be surprised if you hear from him again. Do not use this as a trick to get a commitment out of him. It won't work. Use it only if you think the relationship has no future.

DEAR ABBY: It is very important for me to get an answer from you. When a woman marries a man with children, they become her stepchildren, right? Well, if her husband dies, are the children still her stepchildren? Thanks. — CHICAGO QUESTION

DEAR QUESTION: Yes.

DEAR ABBY: In my estimation, there's nothing lower than a pickpocket. As yet, I have never lost anything to a pickpocket; I always carry my money in an inside pocket that's very inaccessible. I do carry a wallet in my hip pocket, but there's nothing in it except a note which reads:

"Thank you for finding my wallet. I owe you $100. Please present this note to the desk sergeant at the Indianapolis Police Station next Monday at 9:30 a.m. to collect your reward." — SNEAKY PETE

Greater weight gain in pregnancy helpful

WASHINGTON (AP) — Women who gain 26 to 35 pounds during pregnancy run a significantly lower risk of losing their child to stillbirth or late miscarriage than women who put on less than 16 pounds, a government study shows.

The study by the National Center for Health Statistics said women who gain less than 16 pounds have a fetal death rate of 10.5 per 1,000 live births, compared with a death rate of 3.8 at the higher weight range.

The statistics, based on a sample of nearly 16,000 pregnancies, suggest that current obstetric guidelines for weight gain may be too conservative.

The statistics showed that 23 percent of the women giving birth in 1980 gained less than 21 pounds during pregnancy, and 12 percent gained less than 16 pounds.

Baby diapers musical

Nothing — unless junior's diaper is wired up to a new gadget called the Babylody Wet Diaper Alarm.

Once the battery-powered wee-wee warning system is placed in a diaper, it lets loose with a musical tune whenever baby is wet and needs changing.

The diaper alarm is being sold in France, but should make its way to England and America before long. — CNS

MACAU

The Hyatt's Taipai Island Resort, above, opened this past June.

By CAROLYN FITZ-GERALD

On a trip to Macau, the first step is onto Japan Air Lines flight number five bound for Hong Kong. From there, I slip into the wide-armed kimono with the slightest of bows that is offered and fall easily into the oriental mood — a person who understands that less is better and that nothing is sometimes everything.

The stewardess passes out cocktails and napkins. Suddenly, with the time it takes to set the napkin down, she creates a graceful bird and places it before me. This gift, called origami, is offered with a tiny smile.

Next come the hors d'oeuvres. The little tray is arranged with a sliver of apricot, a tiny fish, a leaf and a shitake mushroom angled to make a microcosm of a world of beauty.

Who could disturb this work of art? But with a glace around, it is obvious others are enjoying the beautiful little morsels as if they know more beauty is to come, so I destroy the tasty arrangement too.

"Would you like the Japanese menu or the American fare?"

"Oh, decidedly Japanese," I answer, although I do not recognize most of the dishes on the listing.

First, there is seaweed soup followed by squid and mussels, octopus and chopped raw fish called sushi. A steaming broiled yellowfish is brought separately. Again, the arrangement is perfection.

"Would you like Dom Perignon or Mumm's champagne as an accompaniment?"

Never before faced with a choice of such magnificent equals, I choose the Mumm's, which adds sparkle to an already picturesque meal.

After dining, I note that the loungers that recline 90 degrees are augmented with pop-up foot rests. At least, they pop up for other people. I try mine; but decide not to wrestle with it.

With a sixth sense bred in the oriental bone, the stewardess glides forward and effortlessly induces my footrest to rise like a Phoenix.

Ahhh. The long rest is welcome, and it is interrupted only by the tea ritual. The green tea leaves slowly unfurl a bittersweet aroma that mingles with the shiseido shaving lotion lacing the air around the men who have opened their gift packs.

The plane stops briefly in Tokyo. Then we spend almost four more hours jetting down the coast to Hong Kong. Looking down, there is no mistake about where we are. While the giant-size neon signs advertise Kodak and Coca-Cola, the harbor is jammed with colorful junks, and the sheer mass of humanity packed into this tiny island is apparent in the buildings looming skyward, stacked like jackstraws up the steep hillsides.

Across the harbor lies the Kowloon Peninsula where most of the population lives and where the luxury hotels, nightlife and shopping are located.

Kowloon is a dazzling display of neon. Here high tech and squalor meet in an art form peculiar to this city where big business and cheap labor combine to offer the best at bargain prices.

Hong Kong boasts the finest hotels in the world, tailoring emporiums where silk dresses and wool suits are made to order for a third of the cost that clothes off the rack would cost at home, and jade, pearls and designer goods from European countries. All of these are offered at reduced prices. Cameras and other high-tech items from Japan also are more affordable here.

I check into the Hyatt Regency Hong Kong, which faces famous Nathan Road. Here, department stores and shops are eager to deal with foreigners.

At the Lang-Crawford department store I purchase a silk blouse for $11. At a nearby store jammed with computers, calculators and fine lenses including binoculars, telescopes and microscopes, I purchase a Richo camera of the fail-safe variety. Later, the $90 camera proves remarkably reliable and produces high quality photos and slides as well.

There are many things to see as well as buy, so I hurry to the very end of the Kowloon Peninsula where the Grand Hyatt Hotel overlooks the harbor.

From the glass enclosure I view the largest natural harbor in the world. It is awash in small junks, fishing boats, sampans and ships. Most of the small boats are painted red, which stands for happiness. Others are colored yellow for prosperity or green for life, but happiness is a definite front runner. A great many are faded beyond categorizing.

I ask about one large, well-kept junk which gleams in all of its red glory. A Hyatt official tells me that this floating palace has been hired for the day by the hotel so that a private party of guests may have a picnic in the harbor. The cost for the day is abut $2,000 to $3,000 Hong Kong dollars, at a rate of about $10 American to $80 Hong Kong.

I notice other hotels sunk on pylons in the harbor, make a quick circle of the International Exhibition Centre and exit to find a line of taxi drivers poised to deliver guests to their destinations.

Like a gunshot I ricochet through heavy traffic and arrive miraculously back to the Hyatt on Nathan Road.

Here I dine elegantly on deep fried lily root, sea bass and a host of other succulent dishes.

Soon I must leave for the jetfoil dock at the ferry terminal where I will embark and skim over the China Sea to Macau.

I think of Humphrey Bogart with his felt hat pulled down and his trench coat collar pulled up, jumping into a Chinese fishing boat, slipping the fisherman a bill and muttering a hard-bitten, "Macau!" through clinched teeth.

For my personal opinion, I think the one-hour glide on the jetfoil sounds even more exciting than Bogart's choice.

My American passport means I do not have to stand in the long visa line, so we rev up and begin our top-of-the-water glide.

We pass tiny islands which have erupted out of the China Sea as a result of some long-dormant volcano. The small boats weave in and out of the tiny islets. They bear names like Lo Shan and Linjueng.

At last we are in sight of Macau, Taipa Island and the black beaches of Coloane Island.

The Macau Peninsula and the two islands are held by China but function under Portuguese rule. Portugal tried to give the colonies back after a socialist revolution in 1974, but China would have lost face accepting a leisure resort based on gambling, so they settled for part of the revenue and let Macau continue to operate as always just outside the China gate.

As we disembark, chattering workmen begin to hose down our friction-hot craft almost immediately. I wonder if we are on fire, but I see that the other jetfoils are being routinely washed too.

A blonde woman is tripping along the wharf in high, high heels, holding a broad brimmed round hat on her head. "Taipa Island Resort" is stamped on the white cloth in bright green letters.

Soon we are crossing the bridge via Macau and we are speeding on our way to the Hyatt Taipi Island Resort.

Suddenly I am in a tropical island paradise with waterfalls, winding paths set amid banyan trees and acacia, fountains and a pool with a swim-up bar. There are also squash courts, tennis courts, a putting green and a complete health and beauty spa.

Please see MACAU, Page 2F

Connected to the Taipa Island Resort is the Hyatt Regency Macau, which places the resort in the best of two worlds with outdoor lushness and indoor climate control.

After taking advantage of the sports equipment, the beauty treatments, the back massage and fitness center, and enjoying the flamingos and Koi fish in the garden pool, what is there to do in this remote Chinese-Portuguese entity?

While shopping in Hong Kong was at bargain rates, there is no tax in the free port of Macau, so prices are about 50 percent less than they are in Hong Kong.

Gambling is perhaps what the city is best known for, and the casinos are open and humming with activity 24 hours every day.

Shrines and monuments abound. Just a pedi-bike trip through Macau is a treat because you can easily imagine you are looking at Shanghai in the 1930s.

Many motion pictures are filmed in Macau because its untouched colonial architecture and slow-paced ambience offers a look back in time.

Actor Sean Penn and wife Madonna are here starring in a film about the opium trade called "Shanghai Surprise."

While Penn has fired his public relations person since arriving in Macau and made headlines by allegedly attacking a photographer, this scene where he is pounding a man with his shoe is strictly make believe, just part of the movie.

Moving on from the movie set, I enter the area of the Macau market where visitors can buy everything from dried fish to rare porcelain. Down the side streets from the market are many curio and antique shops.

There are also some jewelry shops and clothing stores, but few goods are available compared with Hong Kong.

I buy a pair of malachite and gold cuff links for under $20 and price an antique jade and coral necklace for $60. A pair of intricately carved 17th-century chairs can be bought and shipped home for under $1,000.

The streets off the market are interesting, but the casino is where the real action is and the Lisboa Hotel is probably the largest and best known.

Here, hundreds of Chinese farmers who have money to spend are busy. The communist approach to raising crops failed and they were allowed to opt for free enterprise a few years ago. Consequently, Chinese farmers who operate under fewer restrictions are among the wealthy citizens of China.

There are no Las Vegas whoops and cries. Gambling is not a game here. The idea is to make money, and it is serious business to all of the players.

There are also horse races, dog races and trotting in this gambler's haven where they even bet on the weather and how high the tide will be.

For those who want local color without expense, there is always a festival going on. Macau's background of Oriental and Portuguese with a little British thrown in presents a colorful outing.

In May, both the Festival of Fatima, featuring children dressed like those to whom the Virgin Mary appeared in Portugal, and the Festival of the Drunk Dragon, where young men don replicas of dragon's heads and run riotously through the streets, are met with equal enthusiasm.

There are often folk dances and Chinese lion dances at the same time in the square among the ruins of St. Paul's Cathedral.

Macau's wind surfing grand prix occurs in November, and there are always museums and gardens for browsing.

Dining is a logical pastime in this city where Chinese and Portuguese cuisines combine to produce spicy Macanese dishes, including lamb, pork and bacalhau or cod dressed in cheese, lobster sauce or dotted with piquant Portuguese olives.

The food at the Hyatt's O Pescador is some of the best, and there often are cooking contests there. One winner prepared a spicy pork dish called capela, but the best part of any meal is usually the Portuguese wines and port which are opened with care.

In order not to disturb the sediment in the bottom of aged port, trained waiters at the Hyatt offer bottles in the Portuguese manner. They approach with a pair of red-hot iron tongs which they fit around the neck of the bottle, and with an expert twist the top falls off into a pristine white napkin, cork intact. The prize for this difficult task lies in the smoothness of the undisturbed port which is gently poured into tiny crystal glasses.

The rumor around Macau is that it will soon revert to Chinese rule and law just as Hong Kong will go back to China in 1990. Rampant building in Hong Kong would suggest that this change poses no problem there.

Here, watching the children playing and speaking Chinese, English and Portuguese — which is required in public school — travelers can expect little change will occur in this island refuge where citizens decided to throw out the opium traders centuries ago so that it would be a peaceful place to live and work; a place where people would like to come. And so it is.

Next week: Tokyo's Shinjugu, new center for city government, transportation and shopping will be featured.

AAUW to sponsor workshop

"Women As Leaders," a workshop designed to explore creative ways to manage home, family, career and volunteer work, will be 9:30 a.m.-3 p.m. Sept. 20 at the Petroleum Club.

Sponsored by the Midland and Odessa branches of American Association of University Women and the National Association of Bank Women-Permian Basin, the workshop will be open to all interested women.

Mule meet planned in Ruidoso

Ruidoso Down Mule Skinners is sponsoring a three-day mule meet at Ruidoso Downs Race Track Sept. 12-14, said David McMath, association president.

Events will include 220-yard to one-mile races, pony express race, mule auction, bloomer races and a balloon bust.

The American Mule Association Futurity for three year olds will be Sept. 13. Post time each day will be 1 p.m. There will be 12 races each day.

Several of the world's fastest mules will be featured at Ruidoso this year. World champion "Cajun Queen" of J.B. Rogers Ranch, Ruidoso, N.M., will be defending her title.

Race entry information can be obtained by contacting Ruidoso Downs Mule Skinners, P.O. Box 2627, Ruidoso, N.M. 88345 or 505-257-5292. General admission is $2.50. Children under 12 are admitted free.

Business, individuals or organizations my sponsor races. For more information call 505-257-5888 or 505-257-5292. Sponsors will present trophies in the winner's circle.

A mule auction is scheduled for 7:30 p.m. Sept. 13. Multi-use mules of all ages will be sold. For information about the auction call 915-573-2493.

Travel brochure clears up confusion

What's in a name? If you don't know the difference between "bulk fare" (it's not a health food diet) and an ITX (no relation to AT&T), a copy of "Let's Talk Travel" may prove useful.

The glossary is available free from the institute, along with a list of local CTC agents (the CTC designation is awarded to travel agents with five or more years experience who have completed a graduate level travel management program over a minimum of 18 months). Send a self-addressed, stamped envelope to "CTC Travel Glossary," Institute of Certified Travel Agents, 148 Linden St., P.O. Box 56, Wellesley, Mass. 02181.

Shark's mouth glows

Associated Press

Ten years ago, scientists found a previously unknown species of shark with an enormous, glowing mouth that apparently lures krill, says National Geographic.

Americans have travel tradition

WASHINGTON (UPI) — America is a land built on travel — that of immigrants to the country and settlers who traveled west in it. But the concept of travel for pleasure is also a long-standing American idea.

Bernard Mergan of The George Washington University in Washington traces the development of modern tourism in three stages in his book, "Recreational Vehicles and Travel: A Resource Guide."

The word "tourist" first appeared in English usage in the early 1800s, Mergan says, when modern travel was born. But America became travel-conscious in the 1840s, through "yacht clubs, balloon expeditions, steamboats, (and) the expansion of the railroad." The final stage, running from 1900 to 1960, saw "technological innovation and democratization" through such inventions as the motor vehicle and the airplane.

Mergan finds other milestones in travel history in the introduction of the camera and of the charge card.

Sailing triggers relief for fall vacationers

ROCKPORT, Maine (UPI) — With the summer tourist season safely over, early fall is the perfect time to plan a revitalizing vacation. And if you're looking for a unique and refreshing way to tour New England this September, sailing may be the answer.

The Maine Windjammer Association is offering week-long sailing tours in its fleet of 13 authentic nineteenth and twentieth century schooners.

The schooners cruise along the romantic coves of Penobscot Bay. Passengers can sit back and relax, enjoying the colorful fall foliage which highlights the Maine coast — or they can try their hands at hoisting the sails and navigating the ship.

From on board, passengers can view Maine's wildlife, and may catch a glimpse of the spectacular Northen Lights. Passengers can also spend their evenings ashore, exploring the local harbor towns, and enjoying an authentic Maine Lobster Bake.

Cruises range from $350 to $465 per person. For more information, write the Maine Windjammer Association at Box 317P, Rockport, Maine 04856, or telephone (800) 624-6380.

Native birds of Guam becoming extinct

AGANA, Guam (AP) — As many as 25 species of birds once inhabited the island of Guam.

Five of these species were found only in Guam. Of these five, all are extinct in the wild, or nearly so.

Reasons are habitat loss, pesticides, hunting and disease along with the worst culprit, the brown tree snake.

By JANET STEINBERG
Copley News Service

From 13 countries, 310 vocalizing passengers raised bubbly-filled glasses as Captain Helmuch Klostermann made the first slice into a multi-decked cake. This special birthday celebration in the Veranda Deck's Explorer's Lounge was heralding the start of M/S Pearl of Scandinavia's fifth year of cruising in the Orient.

Whether you choose to sail Pearl's "Great Cities of Asia" cruise (as I did this year) or her "China Explorers" or "Bangkok, Bali and Beyond" cruises (as I have done in the past), you can be assured that you'll be sailing the cruise line that claims to "have taken more travelers, for more years, to more places in the Far East than any other cruise line in the world."

"I'm really in love with Pearl," exclaimed an experienced cruiser from New York. "Whether she's in love with me, I don't know. But she's my kind of girl."

"Just what kind of girl is Pearl?" you might ask. Making her 1967 entry into the world as Finnstar, the world's largest car ferry, the flat-sterned Pearl is a simple lady. Unimpressed and undaunted by her more sybaritic sisters, this well-appointed gal is not given to delusions of grandeur. Her cabins sport no balconies opening to the sea; photos of her midnight buffets aren't suitable for framing and her showtime extravaganzas would not make it to Las Vegas.

What separates Pearl, however, from the other girls on the block is the fact that this warm, intimate ship is destination-oriented. Instead of being a guest in a large floating hotel, you will feel like a member of an intimate club, sharing unique and mysterious destinations together.

Because of her small size (12,456 tons) and her shallow draft (20 feet), Pearl can negotiate waters inaccessible to larger ships. Eliminating the time-consuming need to tender passengers ashore, her itineraries can offer more time in those faraway places with strange-sounding names. Pearl not only introduces her passengers to the great cities of Asia, she also gives them time to get to know those exotic ports.

And, speaking of ports, what exciting destinations we explored. Flying some 24,000 miles, crossing innumerable time zones and the International Dateline, dipping below the Tropic of Cancer and approaching the Equator, we embarked upon a 3,049 nautical-mile cruise where bamboo-eating pandas, emerald Buddhas and gold-domed mosques would be de rigueur while sea-ing the "Great Cities of Asia."

HONG KONG: Jo-sun. Foong ying doe Hong Kong. (Good morning. Welcome to Hong Kong.)

Our pre-cruise tour began in the city of rickshas and Rolls-Royces where a jet bursts out over the "Fragrant Harbour" and a runway juts out into the junk-sailed sea. Seething with life, the Hong Kong of the 1980s comprises a total territory of 404 square miles and is populated by almost 6 million people of whom over 98 percent are Chinese.

For the person who can resist round-the-clock shopping in this neon-blazing bazaar, there is a basic "must" list of sights to be seen. For approximately 10 cents (U.S.), the eight-minute voyage of the Star Ferry will shuttle you between Kowloon and Hong Kong Island. On another eight-minute ride, the world's steepest funicular, the Peak Tram, will zip you from sea level to Victoria Peak.

Hong Kong is Food Street and Bar City — from the glittering "Golden Mile" to the legendary Wanchai home of the "crazy mad in love" Suzie Wong ... where the sky is aglow with the pinks and mauves of neon. This is the city of a million lights.

GAMBLING ON TEXAS' FUTURE

Lawmakers consider taking chances to balance budget

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Business/Oil Writer

When the legislature convenes its second special session of the year on Monday, one hot topic for consideration as a possible means of raising revenues to overcome the projected deficit is a statewide lottery.

It appears pari-mutuel horse and dog racing is losing steam on the home stretch. Although a horse and dog racing bill made it through both the state House and Senate, Gov. Mark White has announced his intention to veto the measure.

But, even if White carries through on his intention, it is likely that other gambling proponents in the state will push lawmakers to consider a lottery bill in the next 30 days.

One strong argument against legalized betting on the ponies and the puppies is the prospect of increased crime and criminal infiltration of betting.

"Lotteries could be a much lesser evil, provided law enforcement officials are given a definite overview program for enforcement," notes Midland District Attorney A.W. (Al) Schorre Jr.

A strong supporter of a state lottery appears to be Comptroller Bob Bullock, who points out that state lotteries are the fastest growing source of revenue for state governments, outstripping either sales or income taxes by a wide margin.

"No state has ever lost money on a lottery and some have done spectacularly well," Bullock wrote in a Fiscal Notes state newsletter earlier in the year.

For instance, last year in the eight most populous states with lotteries — California, Illinois, Massachusetts, Michigan, New Jersey, New York, Ohio and Pennsylvania — an average of $94 of lottery tickets per resident were sold. Those states averaged $37.72 per person in net receipts to state coffers.

Applying similar performance statistics to Texas yields estimated gross receipts of $1.5 billion, with net revenue of $600 million per year once a lottery becomes fully operational.

However, even if a lottery bill manages to get out of legislative committee, across the chambers' floors and gain the governor's signature, the voters will still have the ultimate voice in approving a lottery.

Creating a lottery would require a constitutional amendment, meaning that approval of two-thirds of the Legislature would be needed in order to set an election date for a lottery referendum, which would require a majority vote of the state electorate.

It is likely that receiving voter approval would not be a major stumbling block. No lottery measure placed before the voters has ever failed in this country.

Wagering may open door to addiction

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Business/Oil Writer

Opponents of legalized betting say it could increase compulsive gambling, a malady they say is reaching crisis proportions.

Most people who bet, do so occasionally, and are able to easily control their behavior without disrupting their lives.

Compulsive gamblers are different. For them, gambling evolves into an obsession driving them to neglect families and jobs while plunging deeper into debt. Some may turn to crime to fund their ever-larger debts.

Compulsive gambling is recognized by the American Psychiatric Association as an addictive disorder similar to alcoholism or drug dependence. The symptoms of compulsive gambling may be easier to hide than those of chemical dependence, but they are just as destructive to the victims and their families.

However psychologists are divided on the appeal of lotteries to compulsive gamblers. Some say that the low odds of a statewide scale lottery does not attract compulsives, but others, and groups such as Gamblers Anonymous (GA) say all forms of gambling are potentially addictive.

The U.S. could have as many as 10 million compulsive gamblers, according to GA. GA is a 15,000-member international self-help organization modeled on the concept of Alcoholics Anonymous. By helping gamblers identify their problem, GA enables sufferers to cope on a day by day basis. GA estimates there are five to six million compulsive gamblers nationwide.

The National Council on Compulsive Gambling, an organization of 400 health professionals, educators, lawyers and recovered gamblers, estimates the number at six to 10 million.

CLASSIFIED INFORMATION

Classified ads track variety of indicators

By DEANNA J. NEAL
Business/Oil Writer

In metropolitan areas, one measure of a city's economic health is the local newspaper's classified advertising section. While decreases in overall classified advertising are indicative of the local economic downturn, statistics from the Reporter-Telegram's classified department show a healthy level of economic activity in Midland.

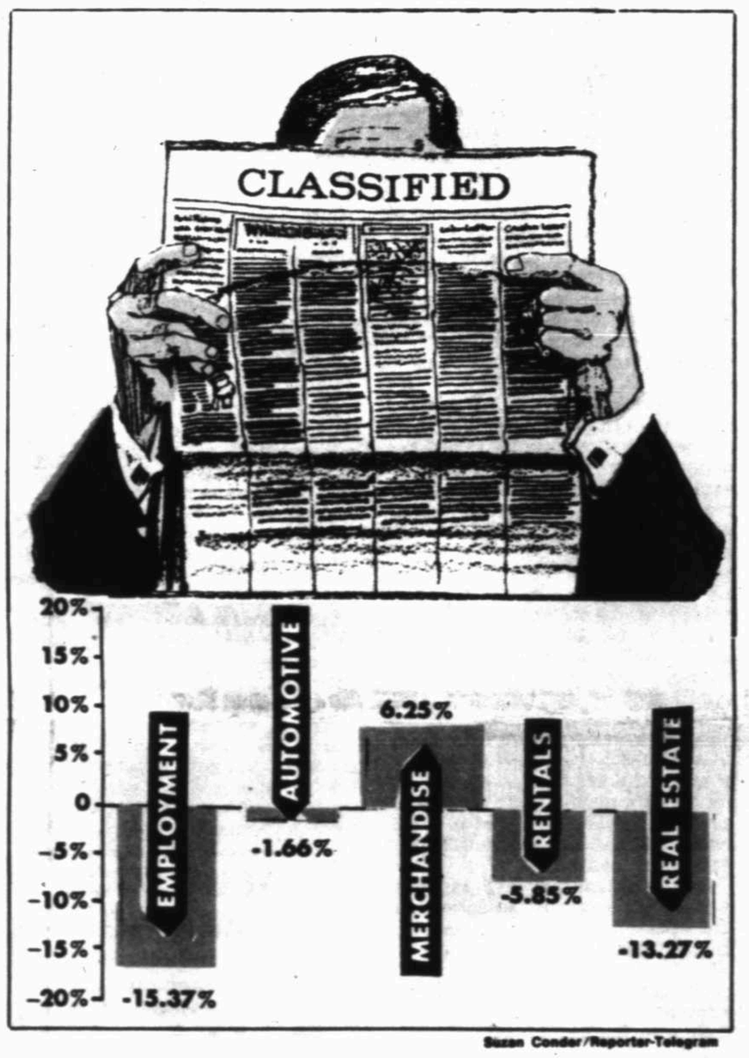
Richard Hardin, advertising director at the Reporter-Telegram, says, "The decrease in the number of classified advertisements placed was certainly less than we expected in light of the severity of the oil industry turmoil."

"Anytime a city's major industry undergoes tough times, you gear up and expect the worst, but fortunately the 'what could have been' is much worse than the 'what is'," he adds.

Five major categories tracked by the local newspaper are: employment; automotive; merchandise; rentals; and real estate.

Comparing the first six months of 1986 with the same period in 1985, the number of ads placed in the help wanted section of the Reporter-Telegram dramatically declined, dropping by 15.37 percent, the largest decrease in any one section of classified advertising. Hardin notes that in 1981, it was not unusual for the paper to run eight pages of help wanted ads. "Currently, we are fortunate to have one page of ads seeking workers. That is expected in today's local job market, where unemployment reached double digits in June."

Please see CLASSIFIED, Page 2G



Suzan Condor/Reporter-Telegram

The number of ads being placed in the local paper's classified section is a good measure of economic activity in the city. Shopping the classifieds is one place for consumers to locate the best deals on autos, housing or find a bargain on household goods.

From Staff Reports

When Texans celebrate, the party can last for days or months and everyone is guaranteed a good time. 1986 has been no different, as citizens around the state celebrated the 150th birthday of Texas.

While fun and good food was the center of the celebration, many Texas cities found time to honor the state with worthwhile projects that will give joy to its citizens for years to come.

In Houston, three architects got the opportunity to turn a dream into a big money project for their firm. Robert Liner, Guy Hagstette and John Lemr beat 118 other entries in national competition to design the Sesquicentennial Park along Buffalo Bayou in downtown Houston.

Their firm, Team Hou, is designing the million dollar park being built in honor of the state's Sesquicentennial.

South Texas woman rolls tortillas into big profits

McALLEN, Texas (AP) — Lillie Gonzalez has rolled her tortillas, eggs and beans into millions of dollars in the past decade and she's done it with the tasty combination she calls "patos," not the customary burritos.

Mrs. Gonzalez, 71 is owner of El Pato, a chain of seven Mexican fast food restaurants stretching from Brownsville to Mission in the Rio Grande Valley.

She advertises her restaurants as "The Valley's Amigo."

"Mexican food is very tasty and I think people want to try something different. They've had enough of pizzas. They want to try something new," she said.

Her restaurants are popular for their breakfast tacos or "patos," which are white flour tortillas stuffed with a combination of scrambled eggs, bacon, potatoes, cheese and vegetables.

There is also the traditional Mexican lunch plates featuring crispy corn tacos with rice and beans, among others. There are monthly lunch specials.

In 1974, when Mrs. Gonzalez opened her first restaurant, she cooked all day.

"I made $32 that day. I made the flour tortillas myself, everything myself because I wanted to see what I was getting into," she said.

"My husband said, 'Lillie, I'll give you 10 times that every day if you just quit and go traveling with me.' But I said, 'No.' I saw the potential," Mrs. Gonzalez said.

Her restaurants were designed for carry-out orders, but some do have dining rooms.

In an area where Mexican food is plentiful, Mrs. Gonzalez said two things attract customers to El Pato — good food at a reasonable price.

AP LaserPhoto

Lillie Gonzales does not plan to let age stop her ambition to open more of her El Pato chain restaurants. Her popular breakfast taco, or 'pato', is a large seller that has brought her large profits.

"If we had to depend on the Mexican people for our business, we'd starve because they can make their own," Mrs. Gonzalez said. "Because of our prices, I think we do have the clientele that we have. The food is so good and priced moderately, so I'm sure that's why it accounts for a lot of our business."

Mrs. Gonzalez said she began calling her flour tacos "patos" because she wanted to use the name El Pato, the name of her late husband's Mexican food distributorship.

"When I first started, nobody knew what it was. I had to train them. It took a few months before it caught on," Mrs. Gonzalez said. "Now, if anybody says they're selling white patos, they'd better have ducks."

Mrs. Gonzalez, already wealthy before she opened her restaurants, said she has added to her bank account.

"I'm not going to tell you how much I've made," she said at her home. "But as you can see, I'm very comfortable."

Mrs. Gonzalez was born in La Coste, outside of San Antonio, but her parents and two sisters made their home in East Chicago.

"Since I was a little girl I felt I could do anything. I'd go out and play football with the boys, as well as sit down and sew," she said.

She began working in stores before she was 12 and eventually became a bank bank teller before marrying and raising two children.

Her first husband died and in 1951 she married Joseph H. Gonzalez.

She worked with her husband while raising two other children and in 1967 she moved to McAllen to help him with the business in South Texas.

Her husband sold the business in 1970 and a year later, Mrs. Gonzalez opened a women's apparel shop, Mrs. G's, in Edinburg. A fire at the store forced her to close shop.

"He was completely against it," Mrs. Gonzalez said. "I always felt I wanted to do this and use some of my own home recipes."

JOHN PAUL PITTS

Do Texans need sanitary air laws?

Texas Attorney General, Jim Mattox has sent letters to seven fast food restaurant chains in the state inviting them to participate in a program that provides nutritional and caloric information about restaurant foods. "We have become a health conscious society," says Mattox. "More of us are jogging, exercising and watching our caloric and nutritional intake. We are also more mobile and it is important fast food restaurants cooperate in helping us stay healthy."

Well and dandy! America has become more health conscious, and it is good to know how many calories are in a taco — how much fat in a hamburger. I am sure it could make us all more healthy, and Mr. Mattox can be applauded for wanting to keep us healthy. Mattox's involvement in the health of Texans, however, serves to highlight a brewing controversy in the state and spotlight a gaping hole in Texas law.

It is ironic that Mr. Mattox is able to use his high office to "encourage" the fast food industry to safeguard Texans' health with food content disclosure, but is totally unable to address one of the most controversial health subjects of our time — indoor pollution, caused namely by cigarette smoke but also radon gas, asbestos, carbon monoxide and other toxic substances which pollute the indoor air we breathe.

Each year nearly 5,000 people in the U.S. die as a result of passive cigarette smoking alone — that is breathing the smoke of others — while thousands more non-smokers develop respiratory and heart problems as a result of second hand cigarette smoke. The Environmental Protection Agency has conducted tests which proved conclusively that indoor pollution is consistently worse than outdoor pollution. But not the Texas Attorney General, Texas Department of Health, Texas Air Control Board, not even the federal Occupational Safety and Health Administration can lift a finger to protect the citizens of Texas from this acknowledged health problem.

The reason: There is not a single law in Texas which applies to indoor air pollution!

There are laws to control outdoor or ambient air pollution, regulated by the Texas Air Control Board. But no law to regulate indoor pollution. And there are laws to protect workers on the job from toxic air, enforced by OSHA. But no laws to protect the public.

One health official acknowledged that it was possible to herd the public into a public eating place and make them ill with foul air without fear chastisement of any federal or state agency. Moreover, they could keep doing it over and over because it is not against the law.

Who's to blame? We have no legislative mandate in this area, says the attorney general's office. The Texas Clean Air Act did not give us a clear mandate in this area, says the Texas Air Control Board. The legislature gave us no jurisdiction over indoor air quality, says the Texas Department of Health. The blame clearly rests with the Texas Legislature, and it is no mere oversight. The lawmaking body, under pressure from special interest groups, has deliberately dodged the controversial issue of cigarette smoking in public places, session after session. And that is why the Texas Department of Health has volumes of regulations to protect

"Most of the ads are a mixture of fast food and service-oriented employment, with very little demand for professional and high-tech employees."

The paper's advertising head points out a significantly decreased number of regional and national help wanted ads placed. "We used to get a fair number of employment ads from out of the area, particularly from Dallas and Houston. Now, we see very little outside advertising, which I think is indicative of the markets in other cities affected by the oil industry crisis."

The volume of automotive advertising also declined during the period monitored. A drop of just 1.66 percent in the amount of automotive advertising lineage sold represents a slower year for automobile sales in Midland. "Local automobile dealers had a tremendous year in 1985. To date in 1986, area dealers have not had anywhere near the volume of sales recorded last year.

"Generally, dealers will allocate a certain percentage of their sales dollars for advertising. When those dollars are fewer, advertising allocation suffers," Hardin adds.

He notes that automotive advertising has picked up in the last few months with the onslaught of low interest financing from auto manufacturers, and expects to see it pick up even more with GM's recently announced 2.9 percent financing and Ford's 2.4 percent offering.

The automotive category also includes ads placed by individuals selling used cars. "We have seen some increase in those numbers, due primarily to two-car families deciding they can get by with just one, or selling an extra car out of necessity."

In the merchandise category, Hardin includes such items as appliances, household items, art, antiques, pets and supplies and advertisement for garage and yard sales. Classifieds placed for those items marked the only increase at the Reporter-Telegram, up by 6.25 percent for the six-month period.

"We are seeing a large variety of merchandise being sold and much greater volumes in terms of luxury items such as computers and stereos. Classified advertisers are becoming very competitive and consumers can find some outstanding bargains by shopping the classifieds," Hardin says.

A surprising drop of 13.27 percent was seen in the rental category. Hardin notes that realtors indicate a rise in home sales so he is hard pressed to explain the drop in ads placed in the real estate area. "It's possible that with the increase in availability and affordability of housing, coupled with lower interest rates, realtors are not having to promote homes so heavily in order to sell them."

He also felt that some of the decrease can be attributed to the vacancies of several downtown office buildings.

In the area of rentals, the paper's classified section saw an overall decline of 5.85 percent in the number of ad lines being bought during the six month period. The numbers, however, reflect an increase of between 15 and 25 percent during April, May and June.

Hardin estimates that as more homes are being purchased, many of the apartments are experiencing higher vacancy levels. "Many people who have previously been apartment renters are now finding houses affordable and are opting to buy their own homes."

Many of the large apartment complexes that have previously had little trouble remaining leased are now having to advertise and offer special deals to draw the renters back into the apartments, he added.

LOTTERY

The enabling bill for a lottery could also specify the use for lottery proceeds. States with lotteries in operation have dedicated funds according to needs. Six states earmark lottery funds for education, while ten other lotteries' receipts go into the general fund.

Schorre says he is not a booster of lotteries because they are not efficient in raising money, but he's not greatly opposed to a properly designed lottery program either.

In terms of revenue efficiency, tax collection costs generally amount to only 1 to 2 cents of each dollar collected, while lottery expenses can run from 7 to 25 cents of each dollar deposited by the state.

In addition, starting up a lottery can be a very expensive proposition. Although this 'seed money' is generally repaid quickly, start-up costs can range from $1 million to more than $16 million for a large lottery, such as California's.

In countering opponents arguments to lotteries as a potential hotbed for criminal activity, Bullock notes that modern state-run lotteries are among the most security-conscious of all state agencies. "They generally have computerized security and internal audit systems and hire a full-time investigative staff."

In addition, a high percent of lottery administrators and security officers have law enforcement backgrounds, Bullock says.

PITTS

Texans from unsanitary food and workers in restaurants, but not a single one to protect Texans from unsanitary air. While laws to keep hair out of our food are strictly enforced, there are none to keep cigarette smoke out of the lungs of children, asthmatics, and people with heart and respiratory problems who frequent public eating places.

Jerry Lauderdale, administrator for occupational health programs with the Texas Department of Health concurs. "There are simply no standards of air quality for the public."

Lauderdale said the Texas Department of Health proposed a bill last session of the Texas Legislature which would have extended jurisdiction of the the department to cover indoor air quality, but it was dropped because of legislation introduced to curb cigarette smoking in public places.

The bill to regulate cigarette smoking in all public places was defeated but Lauderdale expects it to pass this session. "This next session, I expect we will see a bill passed that will regulate cigarette smoking statewide. The support for it is growing stronger each year. Austin, Dallas and Houston already have laws to regulate it."

The question is: Will a curb on cigarette smoking be enough? Should there be firm standards of quality for the air we breath indoors? Does Texas need a law on the books that makes it as illegal to give customers polluted air as it is now to give them tainted meat.

California ruling stalls pipeline

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — A county supervisor changed his vote, halting work on a pipeline to Texas and jeopardizing onshore siting of a $3 billion Exxon oil project.

Supervisor David Yager provided the crucial swing vote that made it 3-2 in favor of strict air-quality conditions on a Gaviota oil project 20 miles west of Santa Barbara.

Exxon spokesman Donald Cornett said the restrictions were unacceptable and will terminate company efforts to negotiate pollution rules with the county.

Cornett walked out of a special Board of Supervisors meeting Tuesday after telling the supervisors that if Yager changed his mind the oil company will ask federal Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige for a permit allowing the company to continue processing its oil offshore at its present storage and treatment vessel in federal waters.

In another development, Ronald Hinn, president of Celeron Pipeline Co., announced after the vote that the company has decided to temporarily delay work on a 10-mile connection in Santa Barbara County to its main pipeline system that runs from the West Coast to Texas.

THE MOST INFORMATIVE OIL SHOW EDITION EVER

Now in its most severe downturn in history, the domestic oil and gas industry awaits the turnaround. It has been down before, and will be up again, maybe sooner than we think. How did the industry get to this point and where do we go from here? The 1986 Oil Show Special Edition of the Midland Reporter-Telegram will attempt to answer these questions and more, with relevent stories, interviews and statistics about the long and near-term history of the domestic oil and gas industry. This edition promises to be one of the most informative oil editions ever produced by the Reporter-Telegram.

U.S. rig count up after week of decline

The number of working oil and gas rigs in the country rose to 731 this week after having dropped by 11 last week, Hughes Tool Co. officials said.

The count rose by four from last week's total of 727, company officials reported. Last year at this time the count was 1,932.

The Permian Basin rig count, as reported by Hughes, fell by two to 80. Lea County was the most active in the Basin with 12 rigs working there. Andrews and Ector counties each posted six working rigs.

Discoveries decline

AUSTIN (AP) — The Railroad Commission reported 27 new gas and 31 oil discovery wells in August, down from July's totals of 40 gas wells and 30 oil wells.

The August gas discoveries included three in the San Antonio area, five in the Refugio area, two in Southeast Texas, eight in deep South Texas, three in East Texas, two in West Central Texas, two in North Texas and one each in the San Angelo and Midland areas.

The August oil discoveries included six in Refugio, four in Southeast Texas, seven in deep South Texas, five in East Texas, three in West Central Texas, two each in San Angelo and Midland areas, and one each in the Lubbock and North Texcas areas.

State offshore oil production drops

AUSTIN — Leases in state offshore waters produced 138,514 barrels of oil during June, down from 168,103 barrels in May, according to the Texas Railroad Commission.

Gas well gas production from offshore leases amounted to 7,707,498 Mcf in June, against 7,934,564 Mcf in May.

In June, offshore crude production made up about 0.2 percent of the preliminary figure for crude production in Texas. Offshore gas well production was approximately 2.28 percent of the preliminary state total.

Graduate Center lists schedule of fall classes

"The Effective Job Search," meets Tuesdays, Sept. 9-16 from 7 to 9 p.m. This seminar will teach step-by-step job hunting techniques that produce results. Registrants will learn to identify their usable, transferrable skills — the skills you have and enjoy using, how to determine where to use these skills, and how to locate and get hired by the organizationthat is right for you. This course is not only for those currently out of work but also for those who might be planning a change in the future. Marion Kimberly, Counselor, will instruct. Fee is $60; $10 for those unemployed since January.

"Increasing Performance Potential," will be held Wednesdays, Sept. 10-24 from 7 to 9 p.m. A high performer is someone who is consistently moving toward his highest potential with zest and great personal satisfaction rather than with tension and stress. Almost anyone can learn to become a high performer by learning certain skills and characteristics and how to develop them. Marion Kimberly will instruct. Fee is $80; $10 for those unemployed since January. Eligible for 6 CPE credits.

"Oil and Gas Office Systems" is set for Wednesdays, Sept. 10-24 rom 7 to 9 p.m. This course focuses on small independent oil and gas producers, support personnel, and anyone wanting exposure to oil and gas office management. Topics include setting up accounts payable, accounts receivable, joint interest billings, disbursement, handling prepayments, organizing prospect and lease files, legal and well files, production files and associated reporting, log files, and tips on delay rentals management, daily drilling reports and inventory control. Yolane Hartsfeld, owner, TYMD Production Services, Midland, will instruct. Fee is $120; $15 for those unemployed since January. Eligible for 6 CPE credits.

"Waterflooding and Carbon Dioxide Flooding for Geologists," meets Sept. 11 and 12 from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. This short course presents the basics of waterflooding and carbon dioxide flooding for development and production geologists. It introduces the basic reservoir properties favorable for water and carbon dioxide floodings and specifies and describes the data requirements for the design of water and carbon dioxide flooding projects. It identifies the areas of carbon dioxide and waterflooding studies where the geologist can contribute most. Dr. H. Ching Wu, professor of petroleum engineering, Texas A&M University, will instruct. Fee is $260; $30 for those unemployed since January.

"Hydrogen Sulfide Training" will be held Sept. 11 from 6 to 10 p.m. This course meets certification requirements. Greg Bonner, co-owner, Javelina Energy Services, Inc., will instruct. Fee is $50.

"Cost/Managerial Accounting" in the CPA Review Program will meet Sept. 12 from 6 to 10 p.m. and Sept. 13 from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Frank Collins, Ph.D and CPA will instruct. Fee is $66 plus $71.90 for texts.

For registration or further information, call 683-2832.

MEETINGS

Geologists to honor executive director

Marie Bellomy

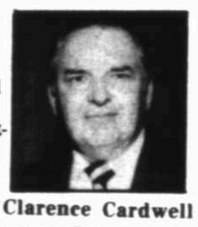
The West Texas Geological Society and the society's past presidents will honor Marie Bellomy with a roast at the regularly scheduled noon luncheon meeting on Sept. 9 at the Midland Center. The luncheon begins at 11:30 a.m. and will cost $7.

The occasion is to honor Bellomy on her 25th anniversary with the WTGS.

Society to examine state of oil industry

Top executives and engineers will examine the current status of the petroleum industry when the Society of Petroleum Engineers, SPE, meets for its 61st annual Technical Conference and Exhibition Oct. 5-8 in the New Orleans Convention Center.

Desk & Derrick hosts ARCO executive



Clarence Cardwell

The Midland Desk & Derrick Club will hold their monthly meeting on Sept. 11 at the Petroleum Club. The meeting will begin at 7 p.m.

Guest speaker will be Clarence Cardwell, retired vice president of ARCO Oil & Gas Co. His topic will be "The History of the Permian Basin Oil Show."

SPE section plans luncheon meeting

The Trans-Pecos Section of the Society of Petroleum Engineers will begin its 1986-1987 program year with a luncheon meeting on Sept. 10 at the Odessa Country Club. The meeting begins at 11:30 a.m.

The program will be given by Loren H. Stiles, waterflood-recovery specialist and senior technical advisor in the Southwest Rocky Mountain Division of Exxon U.S.A. His topic will be "Problems and Opportunities in Mature Waterfloods - Reservoir Oriented."

Accounts schedule technical meeting

All accountants and anyone interested in management accounting are invited to attend the first technical meeting of the National Association of Accountants on Sept. 11 at the Ramada Inn. Happy Hour will be from 5:45 to 6:30 p.m., followed by the program from 6:30 to 7:30 p.m., and dinner at 7:30.

Cost of the dinner is $15 per person, and admission is free to those who only wish to attend the program. Guest speaker will be Deen Booth, an Account Examiner with the Tax Department of the Texas Employment Commission.

Purchasing managers set Tuesday meeting

The Permian Basin Purchasing Managers Assoc. will meet on Tuesday, Sept. 9 at the Airport Executel.

Ron Bowman, associate manager of the Dale Carnegie Institute will be the guest speaker. He will speak on "Stress: Coping With Changes".

There will be a new member orientation at 5:30 p.m., followed by dinner at 6:30 p.m. and the program at 7:45 p.m.

Group seeks GM investigation

WASHINGTON (AP) — Citing 1,500 driver complaints, an auto safety group wants two federal agencies to order General Motors Corp. to recall 6 million of its cars and repair their alleged power steering problems for free.

The private Center for Auto Safety on Tuesday said that while the defect first appears as a loss of power-assist to steering when the engine is cold, it later can lead to loss of control during turns.

The center filed a petition with the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration seeking an investigation of safety problems caused by the alleged sudden loss of power steering in 1980-84 front-wheel-drive A-, J- and X-body cars.

The request for a NHTSA investigation and subsequent recall of the cars was based on 1,500 complaints involving at least 20 accidents and seven injuries, the consumer group said.

The center also filed a petition with the Federal Trade Commission alleging that GM has established a "secret warranty" on the alleged defect, offering to pay part or all of the repair costs for owners who complain the loudest.

The petition to the FTC seeks an investigation of the alleged problem and an order requiring GM to let drivers know about its free-repair policy and to reimburse owners for past repairs to the power steering system.

The center estimated that repair costs to motorists eventually will total $500 million.

GM spokesman Bill Noack said the government hadn't found a safety defect in the cars, and he said the company doesn't offer secret warranties.

Noack said the company has a "customer satisfaction policy" to repair power steering systems on certain 1980-81 Chevrolet Citations, Buick Skylarks, Oldsmobile Omegas and Pontiac Phoenix models, with power steering problems on other cars handled on a case-by-case basis.

LCRA approves funds for pipeline

AUSTIN (AP) — Board members of the Lower Colorado River Authority authorized $4.27 million for a natural gas pipeline to provide a source of fuel for its Ferguson Power Plant on Lake LBJ.

LCRA officials said the 16-inch diameter underground pipeline would connect the river authority's existing pipeline east of Kyle to a major east-west pipeline near Prairie Lea in Caldwell County.

The proposed 18 1/2-mile pipeline would be built by Tenngasco Gas Supply Co. The line would tie in to the Oasis Pipeline, owned jointly by Tenngasco; Intratex Pipeline Co., a subsidiary of Houston Pipe Line Co.; and Dow Pipeline Co. That pipeline goes from Pecos County in West Texas to Katy near Houston.

The gas-fired Ferguson Power Plant is used to supplement power generated at coal-fired Fayette County plants. It is now dependent on the Valero Transmission Co. pipeline to carry its natural gas supply.

Officials said the added line will promote a competitive environment and lower prices for natural gas transport and supply that could save the company $6.1 million during the first five years.

Tenngasco construction manager Jim Kennedy said the line could be operating four months from final contract approval if land acquisition and permits from the Texas Railroad Commission and other agencies go smoothly.

Officials said the $4.27 million price for the project includes the cost of right-of-way acquisition from landowners

CAPITAL STRENGTH

At United Bank our officers and directors have set a goal to maintain the highest capital-to-assets ratio among Midland financial institutions. We have achieved a ratio of 18% at the end of August, still the strongest in Midland.

Our capital base is an important safety factor for our depositors and shareholders. It ensures that we have the capacity to weather uncertain economic conditions. United Bank's unprecedented growth is due, in large part, to the leadership of the men who comprise our board of directors. Each director contributes experience and wisdom in his special field, and together, give our management a realistic and balanced approach to meeting the banking needs of our community.

This strategy is reflected in the positive results of our year-to-date operations. Earnings through August totaled $684,738. Comparisons with our 1985 performance is shown below.

Tracy Scoggins... ...likes being in man's world

By Fred Robbins
King Features

When tawny Tracy Scoggins — in a white, figure-hugging bodysuit — turned up at my door the morning we did this interview, she all but stopped traffic on my Manhattan side street.

Stepping inside, she said of her head-swiveling outfit, "This isn't mine. It's something I borrowed from a girlfriend I'm staying with in town. I brought all gabardine dresses and boots when I flew in from California and, suddenly, it's 85 degrees. So I'm wearing whatever I find in my friend's closet."

Was she bothered by all the attention she got on the street?

"Oh, no," said the long-limbed, green-eyed beauty, currently making waves on TV as Monica, Charlton Heston's business executive daughter, in ABC's "The Colbys."

"I'm not used to being stared at. I grew up in a small town in Texas — Dickinson — and I always dressed far out, always had a dark suntan and a wild hairdo. So people noticed. And it was the same when I was modeling in New York. In California, though, TV and movie stars are a dime a dozen and nobody pays any attention to you. But it's a lot different here in New York.

"At first when people looked at me, I'd check to see if I was zipped up. Then I realized it was because they had seen me in "The Colbys." And New York people are so friendly. They come up and say hello, and they all want to know what happens next on the show."

When last seen on "The Colbys' " cliff-hanger episode this past spring, Monica Colby was at the controls of a private plane that was going into a tailspin over some rough terrain, obviously headed for a crash.

Asked what does happen next, Ms. Scoggins tosses back her reddish-brown mane and laughs, "Since my contract was picked up, I know Monica survives. She will be back wearing more beautiful clothes by Nolan Miller and, as certain otherwise intelligent career women are inclined to do, making more foolish choices with men. Beyond that, I don't know. I only get my script one week in advance. So I can't wait, myself, to see what's going to happen."

For 28-year-old Tracy Scoggins, in her "gradual career but with an uphill curve," "The Colbys" is a case of third-time's-the-charm. She starred earlier in two failed series. Her first, three seasons ago, was "The Renegades" with fellow Texan Patrick Swayze, which went by the wayside after only seven episodes. This was followed by "Hawaiian Heat," a feeble show that at least eked out 13 episodes before expiring.

Tracy Scoggins plays record-company executive Monica Colby on the ABC-TV series "The Colbys."

Referring to "The Colbys" and her role in it, Ms. Scoggins says, "As women televison actors go, I think I'm one of the luckiest there is. I appreciate this part. I thank God for it every day. It's just what I wanted.

"Monica is a loving, nurturing daughter, sister and friend. She dresses nicely and wears her hair attractively. She's also a successful businesswoman, goal-oriented, a real achiever. Very direct. Fits in quite well in a man's world, which is something I've always done myself."

She shudders to recall the "bouncy beauty" roles she was obliged to play in the past.

Producers of both her previous shows demanded that she be blond. Reluctantly complying with this peroxide edict, Ms. Scoggins vowed "never again" the minute the series went off the air. "God had the right plan," she says. "I was not meant to be a blonde. I didn't even recognize myself and I felt like a fraud.

"Beauty of any sort can close as many doors as it opens in Hollywood," she says, speaking with the voice of experience. "If you look halfway decent, people are prone to assume you're a moron. You're always having to prove yourself and that gets a little tiring. Beauty can also be a trap in another way. You find — or at least I've found — reverse discrimination in casting. There are plenty of parts I could have done, and wanted to do, but...

"This is just one of my breakfasts. I'll have another when we finish here. Guess I have a really high metabolism. I eat something about every hour, a complex carbohydrate or some protein — potatoes, carrots, a wheat muffin.

"But I never have to worry about my weight. Not yet. I don't even own a scale — haven't since I've been on my own. But I can tell if my pants don't fasten as easily as they should. Then I cut down a little. Of course, since I've alway been an athlete, and often in competition, I exercise so much that it'll be a while before I have to start worrying."

At the moment, Ms. Scoggins explained, she was in training for a California triathlon, in which she would participate in a 40-mile bike race, a half-mile swim and a 10-kilometer run.

The star's interest in sports, it seems, started early. Both her parents, besides being lawyers, were ranking athletes. Lucille, her mother, was once among the top five tennis players in Texas.

"I play tennis a couple of times a week," says Ms. Scoggins, "but I'm not as good as I should be, considering that a tennis ball was the first thing I held as an infant." And Scott Scoggins, her late father, was both a triathlete and a Golden Gloves boxer.

"As an only child, born late in my parents' marriage," Ms. Scoggins says, "I was kind of the son my father always wanted and never had. So I was introduced to sports when quite young and was always 'one of the guys.'

Sharon Gless... ...now a different person

By JANE ARDMORE
King Features

She is just back from the South Pacific, her first real vacation in four years, and she is radiant. Bora Bora, Moorea, Huahine. She is not only more beautiful, she is different. There is in today's Sharon Gless an inner glow that is visible.

"This is the first year I had the courage to go away and do nothing on hiatus from 'Cagney & Lacey.' I'm essentially a workaholic. Other years on hiatus I've done one or two movies for television.

"This year I was offered an exceptional project; it took everything I had to turn it down. But I owed it to myself and to this series to which I'm committed to get some rest. So I went and my beau went with me..."

Her beau is Hector Figueroa, the cinematographer who shot the series during its first three years. "He created the look for 'Cagney & Lacey' and now he's working on movies for television."

She says she misses working with him, "but I get to see him in the evening. He's a calming influence on my life. I have a hard time relaxing; it takes me a full week to give myself permission, to tell myself, 'It's OK, Sharon, to relax, you're not being lazy.' My work ethic is terrible. Luckily, Hector is calming and very understanding."

With Ms. Gless, he has become interested in metaphysics, which she has been studying for seven years. "It teaches you to control your own life," she explains, "and the astounding power of the unconscious mind...how to plant ideas in that unconscious mind and make them happen. Like magic!"

She explains, "It's changed my whole life. You have to grow as a human being if you're to grow within your art. I didn't have enough caring for myself. Actor/director Jack Colton with whom I shared some loving years used to mimic my attitude: 'Hello, I'm Sharon, I'm sorry.' " She laughs, remembering.

"Well, that's no longer my attitude, I want you to know. I've changed in these last four years. They've been the most important time of my life. I hope I can say that again in another four or five years; and I should be able to because I've learned to love and respect myself." That is the different Sharon Gless; that is the change.

When we first met, the day before she started shooting her first episode on "Cagney & Lacey," she was forthright and giving, but she had no idea what she was getting into.

"They'd warned me it was going to be hard work but I said, 'Don't be silly, I love hard work.' Well, I'll never forget that first year. Sixteen-hour days, half-hour lunches (now we're down to about a 14-hour day. We have two hours of prepping, hair, makeup, wardrobe, rehearsal. The crew is given a 12-hour minimum). And after last year when we had an hour for lunch because Tyne Daly was having a baby, we're back to our half-hour lunch.

"At the end of the first year, they took us to New York for a symposium for NOW with Gloria Steinem, and our producer Barney Rosenzweig did a film for the occasion: outstanding scenes on the show from beginning to end. Tyne and I sat there watching this hour-long film, seeing ourselves becoming increasingly debilitated."

She continues, "In the opening scenes we were so fresh and perky. By the end of the year...I grabbed Tyne's hand and said, 'Can you believe this deterioration?' We were aging before our very eyes. That's what a really successful weekly series does to you; but it's so rewarding. You grow so much, learn so much, the scripts are so well written, so demanding, you just have to become a better actress."

That she has become better is attested by the recent TV Guide poll of directors, producers and casting directors of television productions who were asked to name the most talented performers on television today, and named her as "the performer most frequently praised in any category. Ms. Gless, who stars as Sergeant Christine Cagney on CBS's police drama, 'Cagney & Lacey'...someone with unlimited range, equally adept at comedy and drama."

Bill Persky, producer/director of "Kate & Allie," says, "I love her because what she transmits is strong, vulnerable and yet very feminine." Ms. Daly was another overwhelming favorite.

"Tyne and I love working together," Ms. Gless says. It's been a wonderful trip for me and I hate it when they print such garbage that makes us sound like rivals. We're both healthily competitive but don't undermine each other. That would be so dumb. All we'd be doing would be slitting our own throats because without each other, there'd be no show. I couldn't stand going to work day after day with someone I didn't care for.

"There was a time when the press seemed determined to tear us apart, to take two happy women and drive a wedge between us. It made for provocative copy, but I think it's a tribute to us both that we survived it. And that we both love the series and wanted it to last we proved when we were canceled after 22 episodes, went out, hit the road and begged the public to protest.

"It was Barney Rosenzweig's idea. He's terrific and knows we've had our differences, but we can handle them. He's the one person solely responsible for keeping the show alive."

BETWEEN THE LINES

Q. I think Steven Bauer is gorgeous. Please tell me about him.

F.M.
Las Vegas, Nev.

A. He's 30, was born in Cuba, the son of a pilot for the Cuban national airline and his wife, a schoolteacher, who emigrated to Miami in 1959. He studied guitar and trumpet, sang in the choir during his teens and became interested in acting while at Miami Dade Junior College.

A small role in the play "Summer and Smoke" got him going and he immediately enrolled in classes for voice, ballet and drama. After winning a role as one of the street gang Jets in a University of Miami production of "West Side Story," he was admitted to the drama department of the university full-time.

Steven Bauer

He then studied with an Actors Studio alumnus and won his first leading roles, in school productions of "Of Mice and Men," "Oklahoma" and "Candide." It was his continuing role in the Miami-based public television show "Que Pasa U.S.A.?" that brought him to the attention of Hollywood executives, however.

He was signed by Columbia Pictures Television and once he moved to Los Angeles, appeared in such series as "The Rockford Files," "Hill Street Blues," "One Day at a Time" and "From Here to Eternity," along with TV movies such as "An Innocent Love."

He and wife Melanie Griffiths then moved to New York where he studied with famed acting teacher Stella Adler and appeared in the off-Broadway plays "Waiting for Lefty" and "Mozart and Salieri."

While he was in New York, he went up for and won the role that would be his big break: that of Al Pacino's sidekick in the movie "Scarface." His performance was one of the few aspects of the movie that elicited unanimous praise, leading to his starring role in the movie "Thief of Hearts," and his co-starring role in the current "Running Scared."

Bauer also just finished a movie for HBO called "The Sword of Gideon," about a group of Israeli citizens who gather together to avenge the massacre of the Israeli athletes at the 1972 Munich Olympics, and is now filming "Wildfire," a love story about two people who fell in love as teen-agers when both were living in an orphanage and meet again 10 years later. It co-stars Linda Fiorentino, of "After Hours" and "VisionQuest."

He and Ms. Griffiths have a son, just over a year old.

Q. I just saw Shirley Bassey in concert and thought she was sensational. Could you tell me about her background?

Hilda Bourgeois
Barnegat, N.J.

A. She was born in the tough "Tiger Bay" section of Cardiff, Wales, in 1937, the last of seven children of a West African merchant seaman and his British wife. The family was poor, surviving on welfare payments. At 14, Shirley quit school to work in a porcelain factory.

She could sing, however, so she began performing in local men's clubs to bring in extra money — an experience, she has said, that taught her how to handle tough audiences. At 16, she made her professional debut in a musical, "Memories of Jolson," that toured the country.

It was also significant because she fell in love with a fellow cast member and gave birth to a daughter, Sharon, who because of Shirley's age and unmarried status, was sent to live with Shirley's older sister in Wales.

Again on tour at 18, Shirley was discovered by a nightclub owner and hired to sing in a London cabaret. She was an immediate sensation. Soon afterward, her career got an even bigger boost when the star of a West End hit came down with appendicitis and she was rushed in to replace her, winning even greater raves.

Shirley Bassey

That led to a recording contract, TV appearances and more concert appearances, in which her fiery style earned her the nickname "The Tigress of Tiger Bay," an image she reinforced in her private life.

British newspapers in the late '50s and early '60s were filled with lively tales from her personal life: the time an ex-boyfriend broke into her room and held her at gunpoint while she played some of her recorded love songs to him, to soothe him and give the police time to break in and capture him; a gunfight between two ex-boyfriends in front of a theater where she was performing; a suicide attempt by then (now-ex) husband Kenneth Hume after she told him that their marriage was over. (They eventually reconciled but he later divorced her, claiming grounds of adultery and naming the late actor Peter Finch in his suit.)

In the meantime, her career was expanding on an international level. Appearances in U.S. cabarets and on "The Ed Sullivan Show" won raves; her recording of the title song for the 1964 James Bond film "Goldfinger" was a huge hit. She began to tour extensively around the world, a situation that continues two decades later.

After performing to SRO crowds in the U.S. and taking the summer off in Marbella, she's going back on tour in Australia September 18, followed by five concerts in the Middle East and two galas in London. She's also planning to record a new album.

Tragedy struck in her life last year when her 22-year-old daughter from her marriage to Kenneth Hume was found dead in the Avon River near Bristol, England. Shirley, divorced from second husband Sergio Novak, lives in Switzerland.

Roger Moore

Q. Please tell me and my 12-year-old son the names of all of the James Bond movies. Have there been any other Bonds besides Roger Moore and Sean Connery?

L.M. Calsada
Santa Maria, Calif.

A. The movies are: "Dr. No," "From Russia, With Love," "Goldfinger," "Thunderball," "You Only Live Twice," "On Her Majesty's Secret Service," "Diamonds Are Forever," "Live and Let Die," "The Man With the Golden Gun," "The Spy Who Loved Me," "Moonraker," "For Your Eyes Only," "Octopussy," "Never Say Never Again," (a remake of "Thunderball") and "A View to a Kill."

Besides Moore and Connery, George Lazenby briefly had the role, in "On Her Majesty's Secret Service," although Peter Sellers and David Niven might also qualify, since they starred in the satirical version of another Ian Fleming Bond novel, "Casino Royale."

As you've probably heard, Pierce Bronsnan may be the next Bond if the producers can work around his "Remington Steele" schedule, now that that show has been rescued from cancellation and is back on NBC's fall schedule. They're working on it as we go to press. If not, other top contenders for the part are Sam Neill, Bryan Brown and Simon Macorkindale.

Q. Please answer a question for me: Did Lilli Palmer die a few months ago by committing suicide?

J.R. Clark
Metairie, La.

A. The cause of her death in January of this year was officially listed as cancer.

Q. Can you tell me who played Shug Avery in "The Color Purple"? Also, what is she doing now?

Phyllis Livings
Niles, Mich.

A. The actress is Margaret Avery and she's currently on an international tour promoting the movie. As she's explained it, she didn't get too many great offers after the movie, but according to her manager, she has, mostly in TV.

TRACY

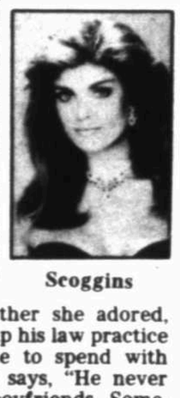
"Being brought up by myself had its advantages. It made me strong. It made me comfortable at being alone a lot, which I am. Also I was taught to make my own way so I wouldn't have to depend on anyone else. That's given me an edge that I think men have."



Scoggins

Recalling the father she adored, who "all but gave up his law practice to have more time to spend with me," Ms. Scoggins says, "He never liked any of my boyfriends. Sometimes my mother and I arranged to have the boys come and pick me up when Daddy wasn't there. He objected to most of them. And when I meet a man now, I always subconsciously ask myself if Daddy would have liked him. And the answer," she laughs, "is always no."

Her active participation in sports increased through all her school years.

Upon graduating from high school at 16, she entered Southwest Texas State University at San Marcos, where she majored in physical education. Before receiving her degree there, she had won letters on the tennis, gymnastics, swimming and springboard diving teams.

"All along, though, I had wanted to be an actress, someone like Joan Crawford, my particular favorite," she says. "She always portrayed strong, independent women, and I like that. As I look back on it, it strikes me that Joan Crawford was ahead of her time. I'd planned to reach my goal of being an actress by a roundabout route. While training as a springboard diver, I thought if I could make it in diving, I could then somehow get into acting, starting perhaps with endorsements. So I set my sights on making the 1980 Olympic diving team. But that never came about."

Fate, however, does have an interesting way of tipping ambitious people into avenues that ultimately lead to a realization of their dreams.

Her road to stardom began when she spotted a news item in a Houston paper that John Casablancas, president of New York's Elite Model Management Corporation, was in town scouting models for his international agency.

Upon their meeting, Casablancas, impressed by her photogenic face and 36-24-36 figure, promptly signed her to a contract. The following week, in New York, Ms. Scoggins started to work. But her life would take a surprising turn or two before she made it to Hollywood.

Returning to New York, she soon found herself part of an all-female rock group, The Fantasms. This band, based on The Village People concept, had "something for everyone" — a glamorous blond Swede who suggested Marilyn Monroe, a Latin beauty, an exotic black singer in African garb, a child-woman figure wearing Mary Janes and pinafores, and a black-leather girl. The latter, alas, was Ms. Scoggins, whose prior musical experience had been singing at the First Baptist Church in her home town of Dickinson.

For a year, after rehearsing in New York, The Fantasms played all over Europe — Paris, London, Milan, Munich — and recorded an album that vaulted into the Top 10 in both Germany and France.

"Then," says Ms. Scoggins, "two of our members got pregnant and our sexy costumes were all shot to hell, so we had no choice but to break up the act. But I wouldn't trade that experience for anything. I think many people dream about being up on stage as a rock star. So it was kind of living a fantasy. It was a blast."

While resuming her modeling career, Ms. Scoggins began attending the acting classes of a couple of coaches in New York. She does not disparage what they taught her. Still, after working with Barbara Stanwyck and Charlton Heston in "The Colbys," she says, "I've learned more from them in one season than from all those years and dollars and classes put together.

"Stanwyck, for instance, once observed that new actors have a distracting tendency to bob their heads when they talk. And she told me, 'Say it with your eyes, Tracy. Then the camera won't leave you, the audience won't leave you. Just center yourself and say it with your eyes.' It's the best advice I ever got."

After gaining experience in TV commercials in New York, Ms. Scoggins headed for California. She first landed a minor role in a television movie, "Twirl," then paid her dues acting in episodes of many series: "Remington Steele," "The A-Team," "Magnum, P.I.," "The Dukes of Hazzard," "The Fall Guy," "T.J. Hooker" and "Hardcastle and McCormick."

Soon she was earning upwards of $100,000 a year as a free-lance actress, and her salary for "The Colbys" is said to be considerably more.

Yes, she confides, she likes the money that comes with Hollywood success. "I would be lying if I didn't admit that. Money means freedom to me. Freedom to travel, which I love to do. Freedom to enjoy my sports, which happen to be fairly expensive. It also means that my mother can have whatever she wants. But acting means more to me than the money.

"Every day is different. I like the challenges and the competition, though I don't particularly like it that Jaclyn Smith seems to get every part I want to play. Working in a series, I enjoy the free time that you have during hiatus. Like now, with 2½ months I'm free to go to France to study at a French school, which I've wanted to do for a long time.

"And you get to know and work with such interesting people — legends like Charlton Heston. He presents such an imposing figure that I was rather awed at first, thinking, 'You're acting with Ben Hur.' But he has such a lovely way about him. He seems to realize that he has this intimidating aura about him, so he goes out of his way to make everyone else feel comfortable.

"The 'Colbys' cast, actually, is something like a family. In other shows I've done, there always seemed to be one rotten apple. But that isn't true here. I'm especially close to Stephanie (Sable) Beacham and Claire Yarlett, my little sister on the show, both of whom now also live near me. And I'm crazy about Maxwell Caulfield, but he and his wife live up in Santa Barbaara, which means they aren't available for socializing. Yes, 'The Colbys' set is a very friendly place to be."

Though happy to be working in Hollywood, the new star still keeps her distance from it, living at the beach, a long hour's drive from the nearest studio, up in North Malibu.

"This quiet isolated area," she says, "gives me the separation I need from the business. It makes me calm, makes me feel like I'm in a different place. The air is fresh and clean out there, and I train a lot. I ride my bike and jog in the hills. And Pepperdine University is nearby with its track and pool, both of which I use to work out."

Still single and expecting to remain so for quite a while, Ms. Scoggins says, "My career is most important to me. There are many things I want to do — miniseries, TV movies, maybe feature films. Right now, marriage and a family are not very high up on my list of priorities. Among all the married friends I have, I don't see a lot of happiness out there. Such a struggle. So it's not something to look forward to, as I see it. Even a relationship doesn't have great appeal to me.

"I may be happier when I'm in love, but it wears off so quickly. Then there's a kind of pain, the down part. I'd rather just flirt around.

"Actually, I don't have to have a guy in my life to be happy, and most of the time I don't. When I'm with a man I'm not as productive. I don't do the work I should, go to the classes I should. I tend to feel that I must devote time to this man and my personal needs suffer a bit; I don't like that."

What she does like is being in control of a situation.

Referring to a book she recently read, "Smart Women — Foolish Choices" by Connell Cowan and Melvyn Kinder, Ms. Scoggins says, "It makes the interesting point that men make their destiny while women fantasize about what will happen to them. Too often this is true, I believe. But I think more like a man. If, for instance, I see somebody I want to know, I'll arrange for it to happen. And he'll end up asking someone for my phone number, thinking all along it was his idea."

As Ms. Scoggins says, "I tend to like people — power-oriented people like lawyers and brokers — who don't need attention the way actors do. Actors have got to be at center stage. A relationship, however, can only bear one person who needs to be in the limelight, and I'm afraid that's going to have to be me. I'm pretty self-interested. I need a lot of attention."

SHARON

She explains, "What happened was that after we were canceled, Tyne and I were both inundated with letters. So he took my mail and Tyne's and his own and wrote a form letter. He thanked the writers for their letters, apologized for the form and asked them to write a few more letters, one to the network, the local TV station and the newspaper. That's when the writing campaign started.

Gless

"And then he asked Tyne and me if we'd go out and appear on local TV, on radio and visit the newspapers. I told Barney, 'You're asking us to beg. I will not beg!' 'Oh yes you will,' he said. 'On your knees, you'll beg.' So I said, 'All right, if that's the way you feel about it.'

"So Tyne and I split the United States. Television, radio, newspapers. We begged people to write in and they did. CBS was deluged. 'Oops,' they said, 'we've made a mistake.' They had the guts to say that, call us back and give us new contracts. That was three years ago."

Ms. Daly and Ms. Gless are absolute opposites, but they have something important in common — caring. They survived cancellation and a lot of harassment.

"There was one article that could have been disastrous," Ms. Gless recalls. "I read that story, and immediately pounded on her dressing-room door. 'I need to tell you something,' I said. 'You're going to be reading an article that quotes me on things I never said.' 'I believe you,' Tyne said. 'Let's see it.' You have to have your head on straight to survive this kind of thing. My mother says, 'Rise above it. Maybe the poor man or woman had a stomach ache. Learn compassion.'"

Her parents are proud of her. Her mother in Carmel and her dad in Los Anegeles each have their own VCRs and keep playing everything Ms. Gless does. She didn't turn out as they probably expected when she was a child growing up in Hancock Park, an elite area of Los Angeles, and attending Marlborough School from which most girls went onto prestigious colleges and thence to the Junior League and a fashionable wedding.

Ms. Gless managed to leave Marlborough before she was expelled, got through a boarding school in Northern California run by Dominican nuns and was expelled after two years for a prank at Gonzaga, a Jesuit University in Spokane.

That was just fine. What she wanted was to earn her own money, not have to be dependent on anyone. After secretarial school, she got into the production end of film business in Los Angeles. But from the beginning, she had her heart set on facing the camera not working behind it. She enrolled at Estelle Harmon's Acting School.

The man who trained her was George Shdanoff, "A wonderful, wonderful gentleman. He always dressed for us on scene nights, complete with elegant suit and tie, in respect for our performance. To this day, when I have an emotional scene to do as Christine Cagney, at the end of the day, I can leave her behind because that's how he trained me. You don't go around sobbing all day because you have done an emotional scene. The audience should do the sobbing. You start studying your scenes for the next day.

"I don't know how Hector puts up with me at times. It's not that I'm unkind or curt. I'm just, at times, removed. He'll read in another room or he'll bring me a drink, he's just there for me. So is Monique James, the lady who gave me my chance in this business. A group of us students had put on a homemade comedy-/melodrama (audience admitted free) and a public relations man saw it and introduced me to Monique who was then vice president of MCA. What a job that was for a woman at that time! A fabulous person, she is now my manager and close friend. She's the one who sees the dailies. I can't bear to look. I just study my lines for the next day.

"I must say, I couldn't possibly do what Tyne does — act and then go home, supervise a household, cook and care for children. That would be too much. Last October I decided my little house in the valley might be too small and I actually bought the house in Bel Air originally built by Cesar Romero. I loved it. Such a beautiful house. It had room for a housekeeper and I had a dream of redoing the house and changing my lifestyle. But it's not the right time. My requirements would take a year and I don't think I'm able to do that while I'm on this series. I become so focused when I work, it's all I can do. My hat is off to Tyne.

"But truly, I love my lifestyle as it is, my little one-bedroom house in the valley and dinner out with Hector. I was a very good cook before I became a working actress. Then I realized that cooking had been my creative outlet. When I started putting my energies into performance...no cooking.

"I was one of those little girls who grew up on Cinderella. Walt Disney ruined my life. I thought some prince was going to sweep me away. The interesting thing — all my friends were getting married and having children just at the time I realized how much I enjoyed being single. Which doesn't mean not having love in my life. I've always had love in life, my parents, supportive friends. How can you marry when you're constantly changing?"

And she is changing. The trip to the South Seas changed her. "It is so different, so serene. We especially enjoyed the overwater bungalows, these wonderful grass shacks on stilts over the ocean. There are holes in your living room floor covered with heavy Lucite with a rope attached. You can lift up the Lucite and drop an hors d'oeuvre to the fish. No telephones. No room service (which usually I love); but you just walk the plank to the dining room. What freedom!

"On 'Cagney & Lacey,' we're always bundled up since we're supposed to be working in Manhattan. I'm a native Californian but even so, I'm not used to walking about with so few clothes as one wears in the islands. The big decision of the day is which color pareo you're going to wear. They're all beautifully tie-dyed, gorgeous colors and beneath them you wear a little bikini bottom. You swim without a top. If no one's looking, you swim without bottoms.

"No one looks at you, that's what's so wonderful. It took me a while to overcome my shyness, but I did get over it. You find yourself walking taller, getting more tanned, your eyes grow clear. There was one morning I woke up to find Hector looking at me with tears in his eyes. 'What's wrong?' I said. He said, 'Look at yourself in the mirror, Sharon.' So I did. The face that looked back at me was somehow reminiscent of my childhood self.

" 'That's what I mean,' he said. He'd been so sad about how exhausted I'd been at the end of the season. I guess this new Sharon is what happens after being in paradise for a while. I was asleep every night by 10, awake at 5:30 to watch the sunrise. In the South Pacific the sky turns yellow as the sun rises. It's exquisite.

"I knew there'd been an emotional change in me but I hadn't realized it was noticeable physically. What touched me so was that he was so touched. And I expect to keep on changing. I expect life to get better and better all the time!"

ENTERTAINMENT IN BRIEF

Vaquero exhibit at museum

The hot, dusty, thorny world of vaqueros is captured in "El Vaquero: Genesis del Cowboy Texano," on display at The Permian Basin Petroleum Museum Saturday through Oct. 5.

"El Vaquero," a traveling exhibit from the University of Texas Institute of Texan Cultures at San Antonio, consists of more than 100 photographs with the text in English and Spanish and presents an intimate view of Mexican vaqueros and their everyday work on a large ranch in northern Mexico.

The exhibit's striking photographs, taken by William D. Wittliff, document the everyday reality of the vaqueros' life on the range. Wittliff lived and traveled with a group of vaqueros on a roundup.

Many of the ranching skills and techniques developed by the first vaqueros more than 200 years ago are still practiced today and as a result, vaqueros learned to adapt to their environment.

They constructed saddles that would keep riders on their horses under the most grueling conditions and learned to braid lariats for use on elusive animals. To protect themselves from the harsh sun they wore sombreros, and chaps were worn to protect their legs from the mesquite thorns.

"El Vaquero" can be seen Monday through Saturday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Sunday from 2 to 5 p.m. Admission at the museum is $2 per-adult and $1 per-child. "El Vaquero" will be followed by "West Texas Development: Growth of a State."

Gallery fall opening slated

Taylor, known principally for his watercolors, is now gaining appreciation for his oil and charcoal pieces as well.

"In his work, sensitively rendered still life objects are juxtaposed with strongly patterned backgrounds or delicately colored geometric grids to create compositions beyond the range of the traditional still life," says a gallery spokesman.

Taylor, who holds graduate degrees from Fort Hays State University in Kansas, teaches painting and drawing at Midland College. A member of the American and national watercolor societies, Taylor is currently represented by Nimbus Gallery, Dallas.

Ms. Yarosz received her master of fine arts from Ohio University, Athens, Ohio, and is assistant professor of art at Midwestern State University, Wichita Falls. Featured in the Alvarta Invitational: Texas Select in 1985," she was called the standout of the show for her watercolors "Ripe Offering" and "Snake Charmer." For the Gallery 1114 show, Taylor has included watercolors and a charcoal drawing. Ms. Yarosz is including her "House and Garden" series of drawings and monotypes.

The public is invited to attend an opening reception from 7 to 10 p.m. Sept. 13. the show will hang through Oct. 17.

Gallery 1114, an artist's cooperative, features contemporary art. The gallery, located at 1114 N. Big Spring St., is open Wednesday through Saturday from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Sunday from 1-5 p.m.

MCT presenting 'Foxfire'

Based on the books that began as a series of columns in the Rabun-Gap, Ga., high school paper, the play "Foxfire" is set in northern Georgia and revolves around an Appalachian mountain family threatened with the loss of their land. The action takes place in the present but the history of these people is revealed in flashbacks. Through these brief glances into the past the audience gains an idea of rustic Americana.

Anne Caldwell portrays Annie, the widowed folkwoman and Bill Shaner is seen as Hector, her spectral husband. Dillard, the country singer son, and Holly, his childhood friend and a school teacher, are played by John Bourke and Patsy Springer. The slick real estate developer is played by Steve Gandy.

All performances are at 8 p.m. except the 2:30 p.m. matinee Sept. 14. The box office opened for MCT membership this week and opens to the general public Tuesday. For reservations call 682-4111.

Pickwicks slate auditions

The Fall 1986 Auditions for the Pickwick Players, Midland Community Theatre's youth performing troupe, will be held at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave., Thursday at 4:30 p.m.

All students between the ages of 12 and 18 or who have already entered the seventh grade may audition. A prepared, memorized audition of approximately one minute must be performed at that time. Auditionees will also be asked to participate in an improvisation and will be interviewed by a member of the Pickwick Board.

Those who are accepted will be notified by phone that evening and will return to register for the Thursday Pickwick class and for fall auditions the following week. For more information call Michael Spicer, 682-2544.

Robert Willson's glass sculptures at art institute

ODESSA — The Art Institute for the Permian Basin, 4909 E. University, is featuring the works of Robert Willson and Margaret Pace Willson through Oct. 25. Also on view through September is the traveling exhibition "Drummers of Change."

Willson was born in 1912 in Mertzon. From that West Texas ranching country, his artistic travels led him to the glass factories of Murano, Italy. In 1958, Willson was the first person to have an exhibit of solid glass sculptures in Venice, Italy, a city known for fine glass works.

Willson says of working in glass, "Sometimes I get a little impatient when other people do not see glass in romantic terms. But, after all, glass is more important and interesting than any unbeliever."

Mrs. Willson, a graduate of Sophie Newcombe College, was a student of Willson's at Trinity University in 1946. The two were married in 1981. A native of San Antonio, Mrs. Willson is the founder of Pace Picante Sauce.

"Drummer of Change," on loan from the Texas Humanities Resource Center, includes print and photographic reproductions of "breakthrough" works by modern artists, such as, Picasso's "Guernica," Jackson Pollock's "Vision and a dream," Judy Chicago's "Dinner Party" and Marcel Duchamp's "Nude."

Accompanying the exhibition will be films discussing modern art. The first of these is "The Future That Was," which examines modernism today. This film will be shown at 2:30 p.m. Sept. 14 and at 12:15 and 4 p.m. Sept. 16. Also being shown is "The Iron Horse," at 12:15 and 4 p.m. Sept. 23.

Show to benefit epilepsy group

The Gallery will hold a charity art show and auction in the Atrium of ClayDesta National Bank in Midland on Sept. 19. Proceeds will benefit the West Texas Epilepsy Association.

A variety of art consisting of bronzes, oils and prints will feature artists including bob Guelich, G. Harvey, Robert Summers, and Windberg. The art may be viewed at The Gallery, 100 S. G Street, Midland, from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., Monday through Friday. Appointments are available upon request.

The benefit will begin at 6 p.m. with a cocktail reception. The auction will begin at 7:30 p.m. All art will be on display in the Atrium the afternoon of the show.

"The Epilepsy Foundation of America estimates 2 percent of the population has some form of seizure disorder," said Jane Pattillo of the West Texas Epilepsy Association. "In Midland County, 1,948 people may have epilepsy. In the 17 county area served by West Texas Epilepsy Association, approximately 6,919 persons may have need of the services the agency provides."

Located at 3610 W. Wall, Suite 114 in Midland, the WTEA offers referral, counseling, advocacy and public education programs to the residents of Midland County at no charge. Financial assistance is available for epilepsy-related medications upon approval.

For information about epilespy, contact the WTEA office in Midland at 697-7901. For reservations, tickets or information for the art show and auction, contact Tim Haynes at The Gallery, 687-4094.

The 1986 Super National 2 Demolition Derby is set for 8:30 p.m. Sept. 20 at Twin Citites Speedway, off Highway 80 east of Odessa Country Club's golf course.

Sponsored by the Midland Suburban Lions Club, the seventh annual demolition derby is the second in a series of three being staged this year. The final derby will be held at 2:30 p.m. Oct. 5.

Cost for derby drivers is $25 per car entered. Individual as well as team entries are welcome. In addition to the $2,000 prize money for the first five places, $500 will be presented to the team with the most cars entered.

A spectator drag will precede the derby. In this process of elimination event, a spectator runs one trip around the oval track with another vehicle. The winner stays, and the loser is eliminated. Vehicles entered must be street legal, have tags and four wheels. Prize money and trophies will be awarded.

Gates open at 5 p.m. Tickets, priced at $6.50 for adults, $2 for children 6 to 11 years old and free to those under 6 years old, may be purchased at the gate.

For more information call J.A. "Monty" Coldwell, Suburban Lions Club derby chairman, at 683-8541, or go by A-Quick signs, 2917 W. Industrial Ave.

That's one way of looking at it.
Another way is to ignore it and hope it goes away. Or tell yourself it's hopeless. And that's called playing with fire. Because there's one thing we know for certain.
And that is that high blood pressure can usually be controlled. By following your doctor's advice. By exercising regularly to control weight. By cutting down on salt in your diet. And by sticking to your prescribed medication. Because if you don't take it seriously today, it could take you by surprise tomorrow.

GOREN BRIDGE

BY CHARLES GOREN AND OMAR SHARIF

©1986 Tribune Media Services, Inc.

DEAR MR. GOREN

Q.—A recent addition to our rubber bridge game keeps announcing "alert" before she makes a jump bid. Is this allowed? Isn't it simply warning partner? — A.N., Wilmington, Del.

A.—Obviously, the new member of your game is more used to duplicate bridge than rubber. However, she does not have her terminology quite right.

In duplicate, you "alert" your partner's bid, not your own. Whenever your partner makes a bid that has a conventional meaning, i.e., it is not a natural bid in the named suit, it is your duty to "alert" your opponents that such an action has taken place. They can then ask the meaning of that bid, should they so desire. Alternatively, they can wait until the end of the auction to inquire about the meaning of any artificial bids.

When you are about to make a jump bid, you should announce: "I am about to make a skip bid. Please wait." Your left-hand opponent is then supposed to pause 10 seconds before taking any action.

That is as much for his protection as for yours. What happens is that, after a preemptive jump in front of him, a player might have to think before taking some action. Without the skip-bid warning, he might be giving away his holding were he to take some time for thought before passing. Equally, by passing immediately after a preemptive bid has been made, he could be revealing that he does not have a hand good enough to cause any problem.

If a skip-bid warning has been given and the next player pauses 10 seconds before passing, the strength of his hand is unknown to anyone else at the table. This has such obvious benefits that many rubber bridge clubs throughout the world have adopted this procedure.

Q.—Omar Sharif looks better than ever on the videocassette "Play Bridge with Omar Sharif." What keeps him so young? — G.J., Baltimore, Md.

A.—I have it on the most reliable authority it is bridge that keeps him looking as young as he does!

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon
Monday, September 8, 1986

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Your sensitivity will serve you well in both business and finance. At the same time, a certain shyness may inhibit you in affairs of the heart. Even mistakes can be turned to your advantage in the next few months. Teamwork is the key to greater success at work. Family members find ways to be more helpful and supportive. Give as much as you get.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Let partner take care of joint interests. He has wonderful financial instincts now. Travel proves beneficial for both romance and business. Evening is the ideal time to ask an important question.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): An excellent time to start a new business. Seek expert's advice and get promises in writing. Romance will be happier than in the recent past.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): An ideal day for going over accounts. Bring paperwork connected with taxes or insurance up-to-date. Romance thrives on tender, loving care. An unexpected social event adds excitement to your work day.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Diplomacy and patience will pay off handsomely today. Influential people help you boost profits. Do not take a piece of gossip too seriously or you could risk destroying a relationship.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Be careful not to spread yourself too thin. Influential person values quality over quantity. A disagreement with mate or partner can easily be resolved. Seek a quiet setting for a serious discussion.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Last week's differences of opinion are forgotten. Influential person shows a marked interest in how you react when under pressure. Home life should be pleasant if you meet your obligations.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Avoid becoming involved in anything clandestine. Keep everything out in the open. Your career receives a nice boost from a former employer. A move to another city is a real possibility.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Be certain the decisions you make today are yours alone. Professional people are helpful if you seek counseling. A great day for anyone who deals in real estate. Romance continues to please.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Loved ones' requests could make you late to appointments. Government officials also make demands. Seek legal counsel to avoid hassles. Romance looks especially rewarding. Speak from the heart.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You can take it easier this week if you will. Regular periods of rest and recreation restore your energy. Be truthful when answering questions today. An associate protects your interests.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You have an uplifting effect on a business partner this week. Take a positive approach and you will succeed in almost everything you attempt. Romance takes a dramatic turn. Happiness soars!

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Use your power judiciously. Others will be both caught off-guard and impressed by your new aggressiveness. Being around children this evening will provide you with some very special memories.

Symphony to host 'Battle of Batons'

The Midland-Odessa Symphony, under the direction of Dr. Thomas Hohstadt is hosting, for the first time, a "Battle of the Batons" competition. The idea for such a performance has been tried successfully in other communities. The performance will be televised live from Odessa's Holiday Inn Centre on KOSA TV from 7 to 8 p.m. Sept. 9.

"This show will feature local personalities competing for the title of Permian Basin Amateur Conductor Champion," symphony spokeswoman Connie Linsler says. "It's an opportinuty for us to share with the people of West Texas what the symphony has to offer. People will be able to call in and order season tickets while the symphony is on the air."

THEATRE SCHOOL REGISTRATION

The 1986 Fall registration for young people's classes will be held Tuesday, Sept. 2 through Friday, September 12. Anyone wishing to register, may call, come to the theatre, or use the coupon.

A new project will be tried this semester which we feel will be both successful and popular. Following the initial few weeks of instruction, each class will be assigned a short play from a classic of children's theatre. This play will form the core of instruction around which each class will work. At the end of the semester, there will be an evening of presentations of these classroom works.

More Than Just A Grocery Store!!!

A shopping trip to Furrs is not like it used to be. Times are changing and Furr's is setting an innovative pace. If you haven't been in a Furrs Supermarket lately you will be surprised by what you'll find. More departments, more service and more savings than ever before. Our new departments are crowded with delicacies to tempt the connoiseur in all of us. Like fresh pasteries, fresh baked bread and rolls from our bakery. You can even catch a splash of the sea breeze when you pass our fish market, because of our fresh fish.

Look closely at this ad because all of our Furr's Stores are not the same. We're not like peas in a pod. No two Furr's Stores are just alike. If one store doesn't have what you need, check this ad for the special departments you need and where to find them. Because Furr's has it all. Furr's will satisfy everyone from the connoiseur to the most finickey. So come into Furr's today and shop with us, you'll be glad that you did!

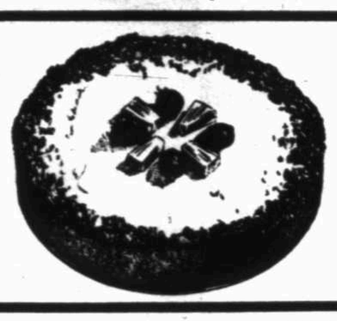
Furr's carries an incredible variety of meats. And among these products, we also carry a rather unique set of items. These are our prepared dishes. Things like stuffed pork chops or turkey, or the next selection, STEAK AND LOBSTER, which really requires no recipe to prepare. Instead, what we are offering you is an accompaniment to this supremely delicious dish. Enjoy steak and lobster with:

Steak & Lobster

lb. $7.98



CHEESE CAKE SUPREME

For the crust:
16 graham crackers, crushed
¼ c. melted butter
Filling:
24-oz. cream cheese, softened
4 eggs, beaten
1 tsp. vanilla
½ c. sugar
1 pt. sour cream
12-oz. frozen cherries with juice
1 tsp cornstarch

Line a nine inch pie plate with mixed graham crackers and melted butter. In a mixing bowl, mix together cream cheese, eggs, vanilla and sugar, then pour over graham cracker crust.

Bake in a preheated oven at 325° for 30 minutes, remove and cool for 10 minutes.

Mix sour cream with sugar and spread over cooled cake, then return to oven at the same temperature for 10 minutes. Remove and allow to cool again.

In a small sauce pan, boil fruit juice and cornstarch for two to three minutes until mixture thickens. Add the cherries, mix well, and pour over cheesecake, allowing mixture to settle on the top. Refrigerate until ready to serve. Makes 8 servings.

salt and pepper to taste
2 oranges
2 teaspoons lemon juice
2 tablespoons butter
1 teaspoon minced parsley
2 leaves minced fresh sage

Melt the butter in a large skillet and add the fish, turning so each piece is well buttered. Sprinkle with salt and pepper, cover tightly and cook over very low heat until fish flakes easily. Remove and keep warm while sauce is prepared.

Using the other orange, grate the peel into a saucepan and squeeze the juice over it. Add the lemon juice, butter and finely minced herbs. Stirring constantly, heat the sauce until it bubbles up and pour directly over the fish.
