U.S. transport ship arrives in Gulf of Suez

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — The U.S. transport ship Shreveport, with four mine-hunting helicopters aboard, sailed into the Gulf of Suez today and joined an international force seeking to clear the Red Sea of explosives.

The U.S. ship made the trip from the Mediterranean through the 100-mile-long Suez Canal in eight hours, about four hours faster than normal, and joined the U.S. ship Harkness and four British minesweepers and a British support vessel in the gulf, the northwestern fork of the Red Sea.

About 200 American personnel are reported to be involved in the effort to clear the huge sea — 1,450 miles long and up to 225 miles wide — of the explosives that have damaged at least 16 ships since July 9.

In Paris, a major Iranian exile opposition group, the Mujahedeen, today claimed Iran's Organization of Military Industries had been involved in a top secret project to produce sea mines since the start of the year.

The group said information about Project Sadaf (Oyster) was received from sources in the Iranian army. There was no immediate comment from Iran.

The statement said the project is overseen by the most senior authorities of the regime of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, including President Ali Khamenei. It said Iran also had bought a large quantity of mines from abroad.

The British ships involved in the mine hunt were anchored today at a small Egyptian naval base at Adabiya, a few miles south of the city of Suez, while crews worked on some last-minute steering and sonar problems.

Officers aboard one of the ships said they expected to begin operations this evening or Friday and to continue searching for two weeks to two months.

Egyptian naval sources said the 9,000-ton Shreveport did not dock at Adabiya because the harbor was too small to accommodate it. They declined to pinpoint the ship's location.

U.S., British and Egyptian officials said that apart from locating and dismantling mines, they want to determine who sowed them.

One of the divers on board the wooden-hulled Gavinton told Associated Press photographer Don Mell: "The biggest problem that we face here is that we don't have any idea what we are looking for."

Officials are unsure who is behind the mysterious explosions in the Red Sea, or what kind of devices have caused the blasts. There are many different kinds of mines: mines that float on the surface and are detonated by contact and mines that sit on the bottom of the sea and are activated by metal.

One expert aboard the Gavinton said he believed the mines were small, a few hundred pounds of explosives. But he said he felt they would have to have been professionally sown.

Egyptian officials have speculated Libya or possibly Iran may be responsible for laying the mines, but both countries have denied it. Iran has repeatedly blamed the United States, and Washington has denied that accusation.

Iran's Islamic Republic News Agency on Wednesday also charged Egypt was involved in the mining and urged that "impartial authorities" such as representatives of Moslem and non-aligned nations should investigate the mining.

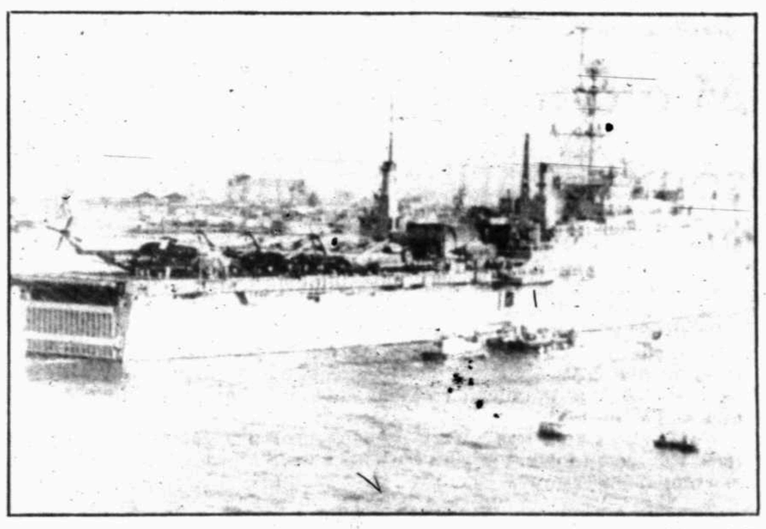

Mohamed Kamel, deputy director of Suez Canal operations, told reporters Wednesday that 10 "suspect" ships of various nationalities had been stopped and searched by Egyptian authorities.

He gave no details, but Foreign Minister Esmat Abdel-Meguid was quoted as saying Libyan, Iranian and Cypriot ships had been searched.

The foreign minister's remarks to the Paris-based Arabic magazine Al-Watan Al-Araby were carried by Egypt's state-run Middle East News Agency.

He was quoted as saying nothing was found aboard the Iranian and Libyan ships, but that authorities confiscated arms and other military equipment from the Cypriot vessel, which was supposed to be carrying a load of tin.

In addition to the U.S. and British minesweepers, Egyptian and French vessels are also taking part.

Committee inches through planks

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Assistant City Editor

DALLAS — Like earthworms, the Republican Platform Committee dug deep into the Economic Progress plank and inched through it word by word Wednesday afternoon. But it is that plank which will serve as the main foundation for President Reagan's re-election campaign this fall, said a West Texas congressman at the end of a grueling session.

During the morning session, the group reviewed reports compiled by each subcommittee, voicing opinions that set the tone for the afternoon session in which amendments were offered to delete, change or add words to the reports.

"The Republican Party should redefine compassion," said Congressman Jack Kemp of New York, who became one of the more vocal members of the committee during the afternoon. "The most compassionate society is one which provides the most opportunity. The inner city poor who depend on welfare face the highest tax burden in the United States. If a single mother leaves welfare, she has to make $19,000 to meet what she can get on welfare. The Democratic Party turned its back totally on the inner city poor."

It was an "us vs. them" attitude as the Republicans outlined what they are doing and the Democrats aren't on the economic platform.

Ex-Odessan, Loeffler chosen for committee

DALLAS — Anne Ashy eased down into the cushioned chair in the auditorium and sighed. It wasn't the same attitude she displayed two afternoons earlier when her subcommittee had completed its first day of testimony. Wednesday was the first day all seven subcommittees came together in one large Platform Committee hearing.

Mrs. Ashy and U.S. Rep. Tom Loeffler of Hunt were selected to represent Texas on the Platform Committee.

A Victoria housewife, Ms. Ashy grew up in Odessa and has worked as a fulltime volunteer in Republican politics for years. She was selected as a delegate to the Republican National Convention and given the additional duties of the Platform Committee. Her subcommittee examined public and private sector initiatives.

Wednesday evening, she admitted, "I'm having a hard time deciding which amendments are really necessary. The subcommittee work was wonderful. Everybody gets their say in that."

Everyone got their say on the Platform Committee, too, and that's why it had taken so long.

Monday afternoon, she had bubbled about the interesting work and the organized meetings. "I've got one vote like everyone else has. I can hardly wait to see how it will fit into the document."

Mrs. Ashy had started out as an independent, and her work with the Republican Party "just evolved over the years."

GOP worried about television coverage

DALLAS (AP) — Republican leaders, polishing up President Reagan's 1984 campaign platform, are worrying over how television will play next week's GOP convention and about energizing loyalists who might take the president's re-election for granted.

Those issues — and not the sparring over nuances in writing the party platform — were uppermost as a made-for-television convention was taking shape in the August heat of Texas. The convention begins Monday.

Citing polls showing Reagan leading Democrat Walter F. Mondale by 15 or more percentage points, Republican Chairman Frank J. Fahrenkopf Jr. brushed off the ideological skirmishes between moderates and conservatives when he reported to the party's governing National Committee on Wednesday.

Election day over-confidence was on his mind.

"The greatest threat, as I view it, to the re-election of Ronald Reagan and George Bush is not domestic policy; it is not foreign policy," Fahrenkopf said. "The greatest threat is over-confidence by those in this room and throughout this country who are charged with the responsibility for voter motivation and voter turnout."

He laid out plans for the party to spend a record $20 million on exhaustive efforts to get Republicans to the polls.

Sen. Charles Percy of Illinois, a party moderate in a tough re-election fight against liberal Democratic Rep. Paul Simon, took one look at the platform draft and disassociated himself from it.

Percy deplored the pledge to appoint only judges who oppose abortion.

"Having been to a great many conventions, I would not feel that a convention is a cross-section of the typical mainstream of America or the mainstream of the Republican Party," Percy told reporters in Springfield, Ill. "This convention tends to be somewhat more conservative."

Convention preparations rolled along. Work crews unfolded thousands of bright red padded seats on the floor of the empty Dallas Convention Center, where the air conditioning made the hall frosty cold, in sharp contrast to a blistering heat outside.

All was moving toward the nomination, without opposition or dissent, of Reagan and Bush in a single call of the states Wednesday night. Reagan, back in Washington from his California vacation, will arrive that day and accept renomination Thursday.

Fahrenkopf said the American people would get a "good show" if those who make the decisions in television allow it. His big worry, he said, is "whether or not it goes out over the air."

The three commercial networks abandoned their customary gavel-to-gavel coverage of the conventions this year, and ABC opted for entertainment over politicians during a prime-time half-hour of the Democratic convention last month.

The convention master plan calls for tightly timed two-hour, prime-time sessions. Long, windy speeches are out, Fahrenkopf said in an interview.

Gary Hoitsma, the RNC's director of communications, has said, "We don't have controversy, we don't have a contest, but that doesn't mean we can't put on a good show."

Meanwhile, the 106 delegates on the Platform Committee sat in nine tiers on the stage of a nearby auditorium and went over their drafts with an audience of only a few dozen reporters and party operatives.

Protestant militants battle police in Northern Ireland

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Hundreds of Protestant militants threw gasoline bombs and battled the predominantly Protestant police force early today in what officers said was one of the worst such riots in a decade.

The Protestant attacks came after several outbreaks of rioting this week by Catholics opposed to British rule in Protestant-dominated Northern Ireland.

In the Shankill Road district, about 500 Protestant rioters set two shops afire, and erected barricades and ignited them. Others ripped up paving stones and tore down concrete lampposts, smashing them into chunks on the road and hurling them at police.

Housewife Rosemary Wilson told reporters: "The IRA can get away with it — killing and bombing and taking lives every day. Now it's our turn to be heard."

Her comments echoed a growing sense of frustration among Northern Ireland's million-strong Protestant majority, alarmed at what they see as propaganda successes by the outlawed Irish Republican Army.

The mainly Catholic IRA is fighting to drive the British from Northern Ireland and unite the province with the Irish Republic.

The Protestant majority fears British authorities may try to push them into a union with the overwhelmingly Catholic Irish Republic in a bid to end 15 years of sectarian bloodshed.

A police spokesman reported "no serious injuries" and said several arrests were made in the rioting, which was described as among the worst by the so-called "loyalist" Protestants in 10 years.

The violence began late Wednesday when a mob hijacked a bus. When police officers moved in, they ran into a barrage of gasoline bombs.

Police said the rioting escalated as supporters of the Ulster Volunteer Force, responsible for some of Northern Ireland's worst terrorist atrocities, rampaged down the street.

A half-mile stretch of Shankill Road, controlled by the Protestant extremist group, was littered with debris. One group of militants smashed the windows of a reporter's car.

A leading Protestant politician, Thomas Passmore, a member of the Northern Ireland Assembly, appealed in vain for calm.

He condemned the violence, saying: "These people are mindless. They are doing the IRA's work for them...They are destroying the Shankill."

The violence began shortly after baton-wielding police fought with 47 alleged Protestant terrorists on trial in Belfast's Crown Court Wednesday. Screaming women relatives of the defendants, arrested on the word of an informer, lobbed plastic bags of urine at police officers in the heavily guarded courtroom.

Police reported several minor injuries in the 20-minute courtroom clash. Reporters covering the trial said several defendants and their supporters were seen bleeding from truncheon blows by officers of the Royal Ulster Constabulary.

"It's a bad day when our police attack their own people," said Shankill Road resident Sammy Smyth, 36.

The 47-defendants, including 64-year-old grandmother Agnes Calderwood, faced 227 charges ranging from murdering Catholics to membership of the outlawed Ulster Volunteer Force.

All were implicated by confessed Ulster Volunteer Force gunman William "Budgie" Allen.

The Royal Ulster Constabulary today was to bury the 200th officer to be killed by terrorists. Sgt. William McDonald died Sunday, the 15th anniversary of the start of the current phase of the province's sectarian bloodshed in which at least 2,387 men, women and children have died.

McDonald, 29, died of injuries received in an IRA bombing Nov. 4 that killed two other officers.

Protestants are bitter at widespread condemnation of the police for an assault on a rally in Belfast Sunday organised by Sinn Fein, the IRA's political front.

A Catholic, 22-year-old Sean Downs, was killed and 20 other persons were wounded when riot police firing plastic bullets waded into the unarmed demonstrators in an unsuccessful attempt to arrest Martin Galvin, 34, a leading American supporter of the outlawed IRA.

Galvin, 34, publicity director of the New York-based Irish Northern Aid Committee, had been banned by the British from entering Northern Ireland. He escaped the police swoop at the rally and is still believed to be in hiding in the Catholic stronghold of West Belfast.

AP Laserphoto Map

The National Weather Service forecasts showers Friday for parts of Washington and Oregon. Showers are predicted for parts of Arizona, New Mexico, Utah and Colorado. Showers are expected in a band from parts of Colorado and Wyoming northeast to Minnesota, Michigan and Wisconsin. Showers are also expected for the Gulf states through Florida and up the Eastern Seaboard to the Carolinas and then up to Delaware.

Midland again could get some scattered showers

From Staff and Wire Reports

Thunderstorms may again be witnessed by Midlanders tonight, predicts the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

Partly cloudy skies are forecast tonight along with a 30 percent chance of thunderstorms. Lows in the middle 60s will be accompanied by southeast winds of five to 10 mph. Conditions will continue through Friday with a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms and winds from the south. The predicted high will be near 90.

Wednesday's high was a warm 90 as compared to the 104 record set in 1969. The record low set in 1972 was only 2 degrees below today's 64-degree morning temperature.

STATE

Fair to partly cloudy skies and mild pre-dawn temperatures dominated the Texas weather picture today after widespread thunderstorms over Southwest Texas ended shortly after nightfall.

'Texas Taxis' rope in Republicans

DALLAS (AP) — Limousine company owners were rubbing their hands in glee over the prospect of being booked up by big-money, image-conscious Republicans at the party's 1984 convention.

They were wrong.

"I've heard a whole lot of noise, but I haven't seen a whole lot of interest," said Philip Purdie, owner of The Limousine Co. of Dallas.

Most of the 15 limousine companies contacted by The Associated Press reported only mild interest from conventioneers.

There was one notable exception.

Dick Moore, who leases giant "Texas Taxis" complete with longhorns mounted on the hood, says his fleet is almost booked solid. But then his cars also come with a six-pack of Lone Star beer cooling inside and a yellow rose for each female rider.

"It's all part of the show they want to put on as high rollers," Moore said. "It's the people's image of Texas. They play the oil millionaires."

Marvin Wade, owner of Elite Limousine Service, offered one possible explanation of why the more sedate limo fleets are going largely unused. "Maybe it's because Buick and Oldsmobile dealers furnish some cars at no charge and then sell them afterwards at a discount," he said. "That tears our limousine business up."

A spokesman for area Buick and Oldsmobile dealers said between 50 and 100 cars would be distributed for convention use.

Skip Klahr, president of Dallas Limousine Service, said he knew of several people who bought a limousine or two thinking they would make a bundle during August.

"But I don't think anybody will be making a landslide killing," he said.

Many people backed out after seeing the rental prices of the luxury autos, Klahr said.

Price quotes ranged from $27.50 to $75 per hour, with most companies insisting on a five-day, 12-hour-per-day minimum. That means those elegantly padded wagons range from $1,650 to $4,500.

"We're not taxi cabs," Klahr said. "This is a quality service and the price is proportionate."

David Bush, customer services manager for Limousines Inc., said he hasn't heard much from delegates — but he has been contacted by members of the news media.

"They've been contacting us mostly, such as the New York Times and ABC News," Bush said. "We're geared for the media because they'll need the cars longer."

COMMITTEE

When the nitpicking over adding words, commas or periods was over, U.S. Rep. Tom Loeffler of Texas said the platform "is very clear that the Republican Party is against raising taxes and we're the ones to reduce growth of federal spending.

"It's reflective of a responsible thrust of government."

The economic platform focused on free enterprise, taxation, spending, monetary policy, regulatory reform, support for small business, science and technology, energy and international economic policy.

Over an amendment offered by Sen. Paula Hawkins of Florida, one of the co-chairmen, the committee argued for more than an hour, adding amendments to the amendment, and finally going back to Ms. Hawkins' original suggestion.

The arguments centered on expanding Individual Retirement Accounts to all family members and especially homemakers. As written by the Economic Progress subcommittee, the proposal would allow families to deposit up to $2,000 per person into an IRA account, not to be used specifically for retirement, but to allow it as a special savings account for college education and first-time homebuyers.

Currently, only $2,000 per working adult can be placed in an IRA, and that amount is not taxed. Homemakers and children can't take advantage of it.

Ms. Hawkins wanted to eliminate expanding it to all family members. "People are calling it the kiddie account," she said.

Sen. Bob Kasten of Wisconsin, who chaired the subcommittee, argued his group meant what they wrote.

Kemp argued for the tax exemption. "In Japan, you can save up to $50,000 tax free. In the U.S. we give you a piddly $2,000 a year and when you cash it in you get taxed to the wall."

Julie Belaga of Connecticut cnastised the committee, saying she found their discussion "mind-boggling. I thought we were going to deal with the deficit. How can we consider a giveaway to the middle and upper income families. These are the people who will take advantage of it, not the poor people."

After the committee approved Ms. Hawkins' amendment, Loeffler argued the $2,000 per person exemption wouldn't be designed for the wealthy. "If you're wealthy, what's $2,000? With this you're giving everyone an opportunity and putting a cap on it."

Amendments made by Loeffler, who represents Midland in his 21st District, were approved in the Energy subdivision with no argument from the rest of the committee. Those included repeal of the Windfall Profit Tax and decontrol of natural gas.

But another member wanted to add a statement endorsing development of alternate energy resources and the group argued over whether or not to list those forms of energy, such as wind, solar and geothermal.

Margaret Miller of West Virginia piped in that she wanted to see coal listed. Told it was included in another section, she said, "But I want to see it listed again." Her idea failed.

Kemp saw the need for a comma in the international economic policy statement, but his idea was reduced to one word: worldwide. The sentence now reads: "The recent tremendous expansion of international trade has increased the American standard of living worldwide."

But Kemp couldn't let the issue end without adding, "We're the most open market in the world. We encourage trade. I want to show we're part of a global economy, not a closed economy."

However, a move by Kasten to include a section about centralizing trade offices in various government departments was canceled by the committee. Members contended it would appear to be adding another government agency at a time when President Reagan is wanting to eliminate some departments, such as energy.

The committee spent little time on agriculture, arguing only over whether they should give a 50 percent tax exemption to farmers, ranchers and other individuals in private business who must purchase their own hospitalization insurance. Eventually, the amendment passed.

The committee started this morning at 9, taking up Security for the Individual, which begins with Education and Youth.

ASHY

Her overwhelming concern is the federal deficit. "Everything seems to stem from money," she said after listening to one full day of testimony from witnesses. "We have to reduce that deficit by all the cuts we can manage."

Wednesday's duller session still didn't dim her enthusiasm. "I've come so far now, that if all they want me to do is go back and lick envelopes, I'd be glad to do it."

Moderates: Platform may be too conservative

DALLAS (AP) — Several party figures are warning that the emerging Republican platform may be too conservative for mainstream voters, as GOP moderates readied a doomed effort today to revive the platform's support for the Equal Rights Amendment.

So far, the party's Platform Committee has made the platform more conservative than even the White House had wanted.

The prospects for endorsing the ERA are so unlikely that such a move died in subcommittee when no one would second the motion.

A band of party moderates plans to bring up the issue again today as the 106-member panel heads for completion of the conservative-dominated campaign document that won President Reagan's general approval on Wednesday.

The Republican platform supported the ERA concept for 10 presidential campaigns before abandoning the endorsement in 1980.

"The Equal Rights Amendment is one of the best conservative issues there is," said Mary Louise Smith, an Iowa delegate, former co-chairwoman of the Republican National Committee and an ERA backer. "It talks about individual freedom and individual rights and individual responsibility.

"That's the heart of the ERA, and it's a tradition in our party," she said, adding that she knew the odds were againt reviving GOP support for the amendment. "I don't want to argue who's out of step with whom, but this party belongs to anybody who wants to particpate."

In West Virginia, state Republican Chairman Kent S. Hall said the platform was so conservative that "It will make it tough on some candidates. It's too doctrinaire and too conservative."

The Equal Rights Amendment, which would assert that equality of rights could not be abridged or denied because of sex, failed to win ratification of the required 38 states. But supporters are seeking to revive it to give states another chance to approve it. It is opposed by President Reagan.

Despite moderate protests over the proposed platform nearing completion in the committee, Rep. Trent Lott of Mississippi contended the platform reflects mainstream GOP thinking and is no more conservative than most party loyalists.

Lott, in fact, said that the panel has taken several actions to tone down the document, even though those making it more conservative have gotten the most attention.

He cited a 58-33 vote on Tuesday to modify a section that had called for extending Individual Retirement Accounts to "all family members," even children. The action scaled it down to propose expanding coverage just to "homemakers."

On Wednesday, the committee completed work on its economic plank after yielding to a White House request to back away from earlier language calling for replacement of the graduated income tax with a flat-rate tax.

Instead, the committee voted unanimously to list the flat tax as a "most promising approach" without committing the president to support it.

"We're totally satisfied with the tax plank," Reagan emissary Drew Lewis said after the vote. "We've been giving a little bit, they've been giving a little bit."

Earlier in the day, the adminstration had compromised and agreed to support a tougher no-tax-increase plank than it had wanted.

GOP accused of treating women as 'baubles'

DALLAS (AP) — A month after the Democrats made history by nominating a woman for vice president, Republicans will try to confront the gender gap by giving women unprecedented prominence at the GOP convention in Dallas.

But the GOP plan was getting a skeptical reception from some prominent Republican women, including Sen. Nancy Kassebaum of Kansas, who said she was delaying her arrival in Dallas to protest being "treated as a bauble on the tree."

Kathy Wilson, a Republican who is chairman of the National Women's Political Caucus, said the party was pursuing a "showcase strategy."

"They are staging a veritable talent show," said Ms. Wilson, who plans to release a report the opening day of the convention that will dispute Reagan administration claims that it has done a great deal for women.

Nonetheless, the Republicans can claim an impressive increase in the number of women delegates over 1980. This year about 44 percent of the delegates at the GOP convention will be women, compared to 29 percent four years ago.

At a Republican National Committee meeting on Wednesday, Betty Heitman of Baton Rouge, La., co-chairman of the RNC, said, "We, the women of the Republican Party, have listened long enough to the radicals and loudmouths who can find nothing good to say."

GISD trustees will discuss budget at meeting

From Staff Reports

Greenwood school trustees will meet in special session at 8 p.m. Friday to approve the 1984-85 budget.

The tax rate needed to finance that budget will not be set until Tuesday's regular board meeting, but Superintendent Sam Martin does not expect the increase to exceed 3 percent, so a public hearing will not be called.

If the proposed rate exceeds 3 percent, a public hearing must be held before the rate is approved. If the rate is more than an 8 percent increase, the district may be subject to a rollback election.

Also:

— Junior high and high school students should register for classes Friday. Seniors should come from 8-9 a.m., juniors from 9-10 a.m. and others from 10 a.m. to noon. Updates of last year's schedules are necessary due to employee and schedule changes.

— All-day kindergarten will be offered this year. Classes will begin at 8:15 a.m. Tuesday.

— New elementary students may preregister from 8:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. until school starts. They need birth certificates, up-to-date shot records and last year's report card.

— School lunch prices will be 75 cents for elementary children and $1 for high school students.

— Reserve seats for the football stadium can be purchased for $25 per seat. Admission is not included in the price.

— The first varsity home game will be at 8 p.m. Sept. 14 with Water Valley. The first home junior varsity game is set for 7 p.m. Oct. 4 against Coahoma. The first 8th-grade home game will be at 5:30 p.m. Sept. 13 with Ozona. And the first 7th-grade home game is scheduled for 4 p.m. Sept. 13 against Big Spring.

TDC inmate stabbed to death

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — A 24-year-old inmate at the Texas Department of Corrections Ellis II unit was stabbed to death early today, TDC officials said.

Melvin Douglas, serving a 15-year term for aggravated robbery in Harris County, was dead on arrival at Huntsville Memorial Hospital, spokesman Phil Guthrie said.

Douglas becomes the 10th fatality at a Texas prison this year, surpassing the nine homicides in the state corrections system for all of 1983. All of this year's victims have died in stabbing incidents.

Guthrie said Douglas was stabbed three times in the chest with a homemade knife as cells were opened this morning for breakfast.

An inmate suspected in the slaying was in custody and the case has been referred to the Walker County Sheriff's Department for investigation, Guthrie said.

Also today, Guthrie said a vocational nurse held at knifepoint Aug. 1 at the TDC Ramsey II Unit says she was raped during the hostage incident.

The 27-year-old nurse, who was also a guard at the prison, originally told authorities she was not injured but later said she had been raped.

TDC Director Ray Procunier negotiated with convicted rapist Richard Joseph Sisto for five hours, before he was able to convince the inmate to give up his hostage and surrender.

Meanwhile, a 21-year-old unidentified inmate at the Darrington Unit near Rosharon was undergoing surgery today after he was stabbed several times in the back. The incident, about 1:30 a.m., was the latest in a series of stabbings and assaults in the nation's second-largest prison system.

The outbreak has prompted authorities to beef up security and scour prisons for weapons.

Traffic stop leads to arrest

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — A routine traffic stop at 1:45 a.m. today led to the arrest of a 24-year-old Odessa woman wanted in Florida for retail theft, aggravated battery and failure to appear in court.

Sharman Jackson, 24, listing a 2nd St. motel as her residence, was stopped by officers after failing to observe a red light in the 200 block of Lincoln. She was then arrested for not having proper insurance or a driver's license.

A check by arresting officers showed Ms. Jackson was wanted on a warrant issued by the Pinellas County Sheriff's Department in Largo, Fla. She faces charges of attempting to flee an officer after trying to escape from the scene.

Following her arraignment, she will be transported back to Florida.

Electronic mail...An alternative to phone call, postal service

WASHINGTON (AP) — Slowly, but now surely, Americans are discovering an alternative to the telephone call and the U.S. Postal Service.

Known generically as electronic mail, it is grounded in computers and is still largely a business phenomenon. But as personal computers multiply, so does the private, at-home use of electronic mail.

It can take many forms, including such "old" technologies as telex, or tele-typewriter, networks. Indeed, most of the existing traffic begins its life electronically but ends up being delivered in printed form. (The Federal Express Corp. recently launched such a high-speed document delivery service called ZapMail.)

But the part of the business said to be finally zooming these days is computer-to-computer communications — typing messages on a computer and sending them to another computer for reading, another computer in your own office or across the country.

Electronic mail is a small business, clearly in its infancy. Industry revenues are estimated at only around $50 million. But spurred by the proliferation of personal and desk-top computers, advertising campaigns by network operators, and experiments with electronic information and banking systems, analysts claim the business is set to explode.

"It will not be at all surprising to see industry revenues hit $200 million to $300 million next year, and very likely $800 million to $1 billion by the end of the decade," says Kenneth G. Bosomworth, president of International Resource Development Inc., a Norwalk, Conn., consulting and research firm.

"People have to get used to a whole new technology," adds Michael Cavanagh, a Washington, D.C., consultant and executive director of the fledgling Electronic Mail Association. "But we're finally getting close to that critical mass that will set the stage for geometric growth."

Among the claimed benefits: an end to "telephone tag," where the person you're calling is out and when he returns the call, you're out; an imperviousness to time zones; an end to garbled messages; an ability to reach dozens, or thousands, of people with the same message simultaneously; and a reduction in the paper flood that confronts many managers.

Among the drawbacks: It's not necessarily cheaper overall, given equipment costs; many people who work on computers still need help in learning to send electronic mail; there's no guarantee the recipient is checking his "electronic mailbox" regularly; it reduces human contact and the pleasantries that accompany phone calls; and it poses a financial threat to the government postal system on which most Americans depend.

But to hear many businessmen tell it, once you go electronic, there's no turning back.

"I don't have to interrupt meetings anymore to take phone calls," says J. Robert Harcharik, president of the MCI Communications Corp.'s MCI Mail, one of the newer entrants to the field. "I only handle five or six phone calls a day now. Everything else is done at my convenience, electronically."

"It's just such a logical way of doing business," says Rich W. Coughenour, the director of mail services and office automation for the giant Citibank in New York. "You get to the point where you depend on it. Even when I was on vacation, I never lost contact."

"We've been able to quantify and identify a 33 percent to 36 percent reduction in the amount of interoffice mail going to our people on the network," says Coughenour. "Also, telephone service is becoming more expensive. With electronic mail, you can prepare your message 'off-line,' then send it at great speed, minimizing telephone connect time."

"Sixty-five percent of the first-class mail business is companies sending you a bill and you paying a bill," says Harcharik.

Bosomworth and Cavanagh say the technology and promise of electronic mail were apparent more than a decade ago, when manufacturers started designing smaller and easier-to-operate computers.

Mountain creates many adventures for Alaskans

DENALI NATIONAL PARK, Alaska (AP) — The chief park ranger, his green fatigues sodden with mud, helped the wet and weary tourists across the final stretch of wilderness between mudslide and civilization and said with a grin, "This your first trip to Denali? Welcome."

Recent mudslides at Denali, the home of North America's highest peak, Mount McKinley, stranded hundreds of travelers and underscored the temperamental nature of Alaska's outdoors.

At 20,320 feet, Mount McKinley towers above the clouds and creates its own weather systems. Sudden shifts, as from bright sunshine to thunderstorms on the day of two of the mudslides, are common.

The park service warns that the mountain — which the Athabascan Indians called Denali, or "Great One" — can be "as unpredictable as a Las Vegas slot machine. You never know what will happen."

What did happen one day late last month was part drama and part comedy.

An intense late afternoon storm had rolled across the mountains and dropped a cloudburst over Igloo Canyon. The rains sent a cascade of water, rocks and mud rolling down Cathedral Mountain, choking off the only road at a point 35 miles into the park.

The first signal of trouble for the tourists came over the two-way radio on one of the buses that make regular runs into the 6 million acre park and preserve.

"There's a mudslide ahead and I don't think we're going to get out of here for a long, long time," the voice of one bus driver gloomily relayed.

The tourists, up to 40 in each of several buses, were already disappointed by the clouds that had shrouded McKinley all day. They slumped into their seats, grumbling.

But they had already marveled at the other wonders of the park, which drew 346,000 visitors in 1983 with a real life version of "Wild Kingdom." Against a backdrop of snowy mountains and pristine streams, they had spotted grizzly bears, moose and Dall sheep.

Then, when the buses halted at the edge of the slides — two of them, three feet deep and 40-50 feet across — park officials said it would be hours before the mud would be cleared away.

One by one, the stranded travelers turned curious. They pulled on rain gear and walked up to see the mudslide. Some posed for photographs in front of the slide; others tried to stand atop it, only to sink knee-deep; children skipped stones in a murky stream that had cut through the mud.

Chief Ranger Tom Griffiths crossed the first slide to look at the second one. At first, he thought only experienced hikers should try to cross the mud. "They're going to get wet and muddy. Only people who are good hikers should do it," he relayed via radio.

By this time, seven buses had pulled up at one mudslide; an eighth was stranded between the two blankets of mud. No one had been injured and Griffiths termed the situation "not a life-threatening emergency," but, counting tourists whose buses were halted farther up the park, more than 600 were stranded.

When the rain ended, rangers decided to shift people across the mudslides to waiting shuttle buses. The more physically fit people rolled up their slacks and waded through the muck, backpacks and cameras held high.

Children were carried across, some slung over the shoulders of park employees like sacks of flour. The elderly and some women, including one who was pregnant, were either carried or helped across the first mudslide.

On the other side, the tourists crossed 50 yards of spongy, brush-covered tundra, stepped through more mud and water and worked their way down a steep hill toward the buses.

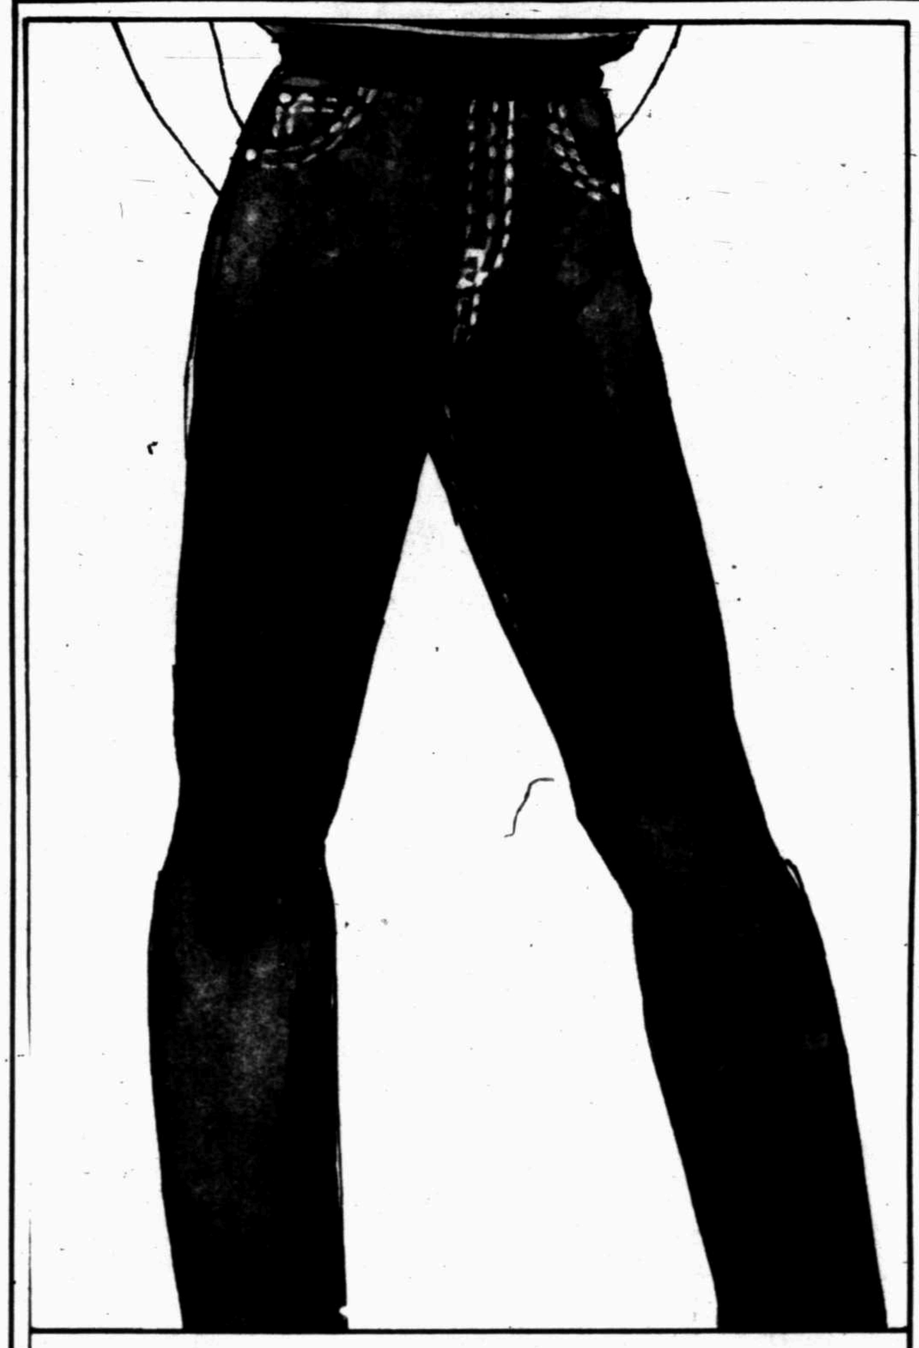

Nell and Everett Towle, a honeymooning couple in their 70s, picked their way down the final hill and declared the mudslides were just "another experience on our trip." They had traveled 9,000 miles in their motor home since marrying Nov. 17 in Dowling Park, Fla.

"It's exciting. We're having a good time. As long as no one's hurt, it doesn't matter," Mrs. Towle said.

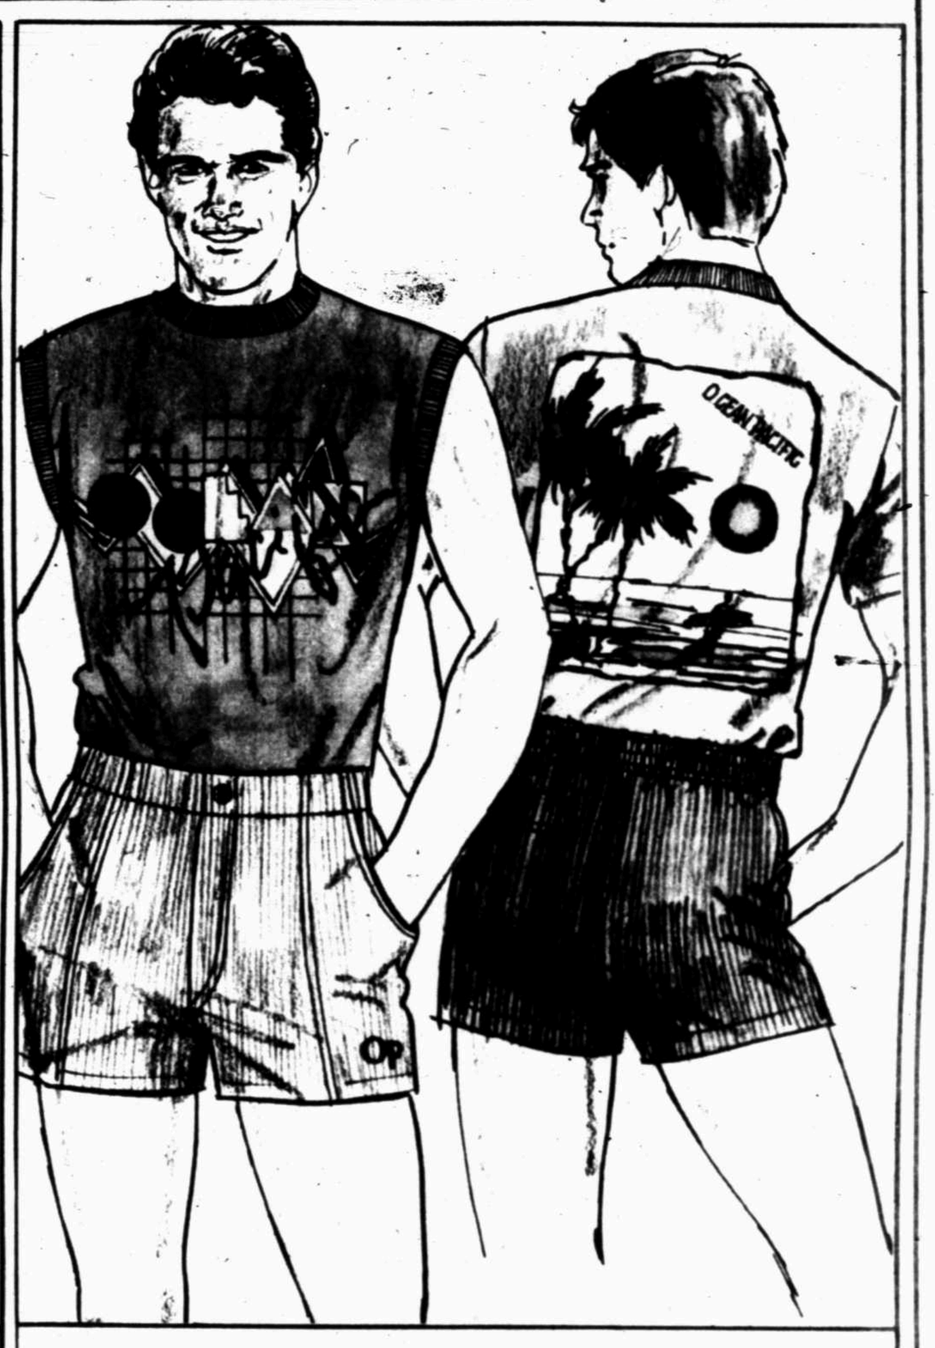

The mudslides also added excitement to Gail Laudicina's first trip to Alaska.

"This is my first trip to Alaska and probably my last," she said with a chuckle. "I'm never coming back. I'm just glad nobody got hurt."

WEATHER SUMMARY

National Weather Service NOAA U.S. Dept. of Commerce

AP Laserphoto Map

The National Weather Service forecasts showers Friday for parts of Washington and Oregon. Showers are predicted for parts of Arizona, New Mexico, Utah and Colorado. Showers are expected in a band from parts of Colorado and Wyoming northeast to Minnesota, Michigan and Wisconsin. Showers are also expected for the Gulf states through Florida and up the Eastern Seaboard to the Carolinas and then up to Delaware.

Midland again could get some scattered showers

From Staff and Wire Reports

Thunderstorms may again be witnessed by Midlanders tonight, predicts the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

Partly cloudy skies are forecast tonight along with a 30 percent chance of thunderstorms. Lows in the middle 60s will be accompanied by southeast winds of five to 10 mph. Conditions will continue through Friday with a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms and winds from the south. The predicted high will be near 90.

Wednesday's high was a warm 90 as compared to the 104 record set in 1969. The record low set in 1972 was only 2 degrees below today's 64-degree morning temperature.

STATE

Fair to partly cloudy skies and mild pre-dawn temperatures dominated the Texas weather picture today after widespread thunderstorms over Southwest Texas ended shortly after nightfall.

'Texas Taxis' rope in Republicans

DALLAS (AP) — Limousine company owners were rubbing their hands in glee over the prospect of being booked up by big-money, image-conscious Republicans at the party's 1984 convention.

They were wrong.

"I've heard a whole lot of noise, but I haven't seen a whole lot of interest," said Philip Purdie, owner of The Limousine Co. of Dallas.

Most of the 15 limousine companies contacted by The Associated Press reported only mild interest from conventioneers.

There was one notable exception.

Dick Moore, who leases giant "Texas Taxis" complete with longhorns mounted on the hood, says his fleet is almost booked solid. But then his cars also come with a six-pack of Lone Star beer cooling inside and a yellow rose for each female rider.

"It's all part of the show they want to put on as high rollers," Moore said. "It's the people's image of Texas. They play the oil millionaires."

Marvin Wade, owner of Elite Limousine Service, offered one possible explanation of why the more sedate limo fleets are going largely unused. "Maybe it's because Buick and Oldsmobile dealers furnish some cars at no charge and then sell them afterwards at a discount," he said. "That tears our limousine business up."

A spokesman for area Buick and Oldsmobile dealers said between 50 and 100 cars would be distributed for convention use.

Skip Klahr, president of Dallas Limousine Service, said he knew of several people who bought a limousine or two thinking they would make a bundle during August.

"But I don't think anybody will be making a landslide killing," he said.

Many people backed out after seeing the rental prices of the luxury autos, Klahr said.

Price quotes ranged from $27.50 to $75 per hour, with most companies insisting on a five-day, 12-hour-per-day minimum. That means those elegantly padded wagons range from $1,650 to $4,500.

"We're not taxi cabs," Klahr said. "This is a quality service and the price is proportionate."

David Bush, customer services manager for Limousines Inc., said he hasn't heard much from delegates — but he has been contacted by members of the news media.

"They've been contacting us mostly, such as the New York Times and ABC News," Bush said. "We're geared for the media because they'll need the cars longer."

When the nitpicking over adding words, commas or periods was over, U.S. Rep. Tom Loeffler of Texas said the platform "is very clear that the Republican Party is against raising taxes and we're the ones to reduce growth of federal spending.

"It's reflective of a responsible thrust of government."

The economic platform focused on free enterprise, taxation, spending, monetary policy, regulatory reform, support for small business, science and technology, energy and international economic policy.

Over an amendment offered by Sen. Paula Hawkins of Florida, one of the co-chairmen, the committee argued for more than an hour, adding amendments to the amendment, and finally going back to Ms. Hawkins' original suggestion.

The arguments centered on expanding Individual Retirement Accounts to all family members and especially homemakers. As written by the Economic Progress subcommittee, the proposal would allow families to deposit up to $2,000 per person into an IRA account, not to be used specifically for retirement, but to allow it as a special savings account for college education and first-time homebuyers.

Currently, only $2,000 per working adult can be placed in an IRA, and that amount is not taxed. Homemakers and children can't take advantage of it.

Ms. Hawkins wanted to eliminate expanding it to all family members. "People are calling it the kiddie account," she said.

Sen. Bob Kasten of Wisconsin, who chaired the subcommittee, argued his group meant what they wrote.

Kemp argued for the tax exemption. "In Japan, you can save up to $50,000 tax free. In the U.S. we give you a piddly $2,000 a year and when you cash it in you get taxed to the wall."

Julie Belaga of Connecticut cnastised the committee, saying she found their discussion "mind-boggling. I thought we were going to deal with the deficit. How can we consider a giveaway to the middle and upper income families. These are the people who will take advantage of it, not the poor people."

After the committee approved Ms. Hawkins' amendment, Loeffler argued the $2,000 per person exemption wouldn't be designed for the wealthy. "If you're wealthy, what's $2,000? With this you're giving everyone an opportunity and putting a cap on it."

Amendments made by Loeffler, who represents Midland in his 21st District, were approved in the Energy subdivision with no argument from the rest of the committee. Those included repeal of the Windfall Profit Tax and decontrol of natural gas.

But another member wanted to add a statement endorsing development of alternate energy resources and the group argued over whether or not to list those forms of energy, such as wind, solar and geothermal.

Margaret Miller of West Virginia piped in that she wanted to see coal listed. Told it was included in another section, she said, "But I want to see it listed again." Her idea failed.

Kemp saw the need for a comma in the international economic policy statement, but his idea was reduced to one word: worldwide. The sentence now reads: "The recent tremendous expansion of international trade has increased the American standard of living worldwide."

But Kemp couldn't let the issue end without adding, "We're the most open market in the world. We encourage trade. I want to show we're part of a global economy, not a closed economy."

However, a move by Kasten to include a section about centralizing trade offices in various government departments was canceled by the committee. Members contended it would appear to be adding another government agency at a time when President Reagan is wanting to eliminate some departments, such as energy.

The committee spent little time on agriculture, arguing only over whether they should give a 50 percent tax exemption to farmers, ranchers and other individuals in private business who must purchase their own hospitalization insurance. Eventually, the amendment passed.

The committee started this morning at 9, taking up Security for the Individual, which begins with Education and Youth.

Her overwhelming concern is the federal deficit. "Everything seems to stem from money," she said after listening to one full day of testimony from witnesses. "We have to reduce that deficit by all the cuts we can manage."

Wednesday's duller session still didn't dim her enthusiasm. "I've come so far now, that if all they want me to do is go back and lick envelopes, I'd be glad to do it."

Moderates: Platform may be too conservative

DALLAS (AP) — Several party figures are warning that the emerging Republican platform may be too conservative for mainstream voters, as GOP moderates readied a doomed effort today to revive the platform's support for the Equal Rights Amendment.

So far, the party's Platform Committee has made the platform more conservative than even the White House had wanted.

The prospects for endorsing the ERA are so unlikely that such a move died in subcommittee when no one would second the motion.

A band of party moderates plans to bring up the issue again today as the 106-member panel heads for completion of the conservative-dominated campaign document that won President Reagan's general approval on Wednesday.

The Republican platform supported the ERA concept for 10 presidential campaigns before abandoning the endorsement in 1980.

"The Equal Rights Amendment is one of the best conservative issues there is," said Mary Louise Smith, an Iowa delegate, former co-chairwoman of the Republican National Committee and an ERA backer. "It talks about individual freedom and individual rights and individual responsibility.

"That's the heart of the ERA, and it's a tradition in our party," she said, adding that she knew the odds were againt reviving GOP support for the amendment. "I don't want to argue who's out of step with whom, but this party belongs to anybody who wants to particpate."

In West Virginia, state Republican Chairman Kent S. Hall said the platform was so conservative that "It will make it tough on some candidates. It's too doctrinaire and too conservative."

The Equal Rights Amendment, which would assert that equality of rights could not be abridged or denied because of sex, failed to win ratification of the required 38 states. But supporters are seeking to revive it to give states another chance to approve it. It is opposed by President Reagan.

Despite moderate protests over the proposed platform nearing completion in the committee, Rep. Trent Lott of Mississippi contended the platform reflects mainstream GOP thinking and is no more conservative than most party loyalists.

Lott, in fact, said that the panel has taken several actions to tone down the document, even though those making it more conservative have gotten the most attention.

He cited a 58-33 vote on Tuesday to modify a section that had called for extending Individual Retirement Accounts to "all family members," even children. The action scaled it down to propose expanding coverage just to "homemakers."

On Wednesday, the committee completed work on its economic plank after yielding to a White House request to back away from earlier language calling for replacement of the graduated income tax with a flat-rate tax.

Instead, the committee voted unanimously to list the flat tax as a "most promising approach" without committing the president to support it.

"We're totally satisfied with the tax plank," Reagan emissary Drew Lewis said after the vote. "We've been giving a little bit, they've been giving a little bit."

Earlier in the day, the adminstration had compromised and agreed to support a tougher no-tax-increase plank than it had wanted.

GOP accused of treating women as 'baubles'

DALLAS (AP) — A month after the Democrats made history by nominating a woman for vice president, Republicans will try to confront the gender gap by giving women unprecedented prominence at the GOP convention in Dallas.

But the GOP plan was getting a skeptical reception from some prominent Republican women, including Sen. Nancy Kassebaum of Kansas, who said she was delaying her arrival in Dallas to protest being "treated as a bauble on the tree."

Kathy Wilson, a Republican who is chairman of the National Women's Political Caucus, said the party was pursuing a "showcase strategy."

"They are staging a veritable talent show," said Ms. Wilson, who plans to release a report the opening day of the convention that will dispute Reagan administration claims that it has done a great deal for women.

Nonetheless, the Republicans can claim an impressive increase in the number of women delegates over 1980. This year about 44 percent of the delegates at the GOP convention will be women, compared to 29 percent four years ago.

At a Republican National Committee meeting on Wednesday, Betty Heitman of Baton Rouge, La., co-chairman of the RNC, said, "We, the women of the Republican Party, have listened long enough to the radicals and loudmouths who can find nothing good to say."

GISD trustees will discuss budget at meeting

From Staff Reports

Greenwood school trustees will meet in special session at 8 p.m. Friday to approve the 1984-85 budget.

The tax rate needed to finance that budget will not be set until Tuesday's regular board meeting, but Superintendent Sam Martin does not expect the increase to exceed 3 percent, so a public hearing will not be called.

If the proposed rate exceeds 3 percent, a public hearing must be held before the rate is approved. If the rate is more than an 8 percent increase, the district may be subject to a rollback election.

Also:

— Junior high and high school students should register for classes Friday. Seniors should come from 8-9 a.m., juniors from 9-10 a.m. and others from 10 a.m. to noon. Updates of last year's schedules are necessary due to employee and schedule changes.

— All-day kindergarten will be offered this year. Classes will begin at 8:15 a.m. Tuesday.

— New elementary students may preregister from 8:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. until school starts. They need birth certificates, up-to-date shot records and last year's report card.

— School lunch prices will be 75 cents for elementary children and $1 for high school students.

— Reserve seats for the football stadium can be purchased for $25 per seat. Admission is not included in the price.

— The first varsity home game will be at 8 p.m. Sept. 14 with Water Valley. The first home junior varsity game is set for 7 p.m. Oct. 4 against Coahoma. The first 8th-grade home game will be at 5:30 p.m. Sept. 13 with Ozona. And the first 7th-grade home game is scheduled for 4 p.m. Sept. 13 against Big Spring.

TDC inmate stabbed to death

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — A 24-year-old inmate at the Texas Department of Corrections Ellis II unit was stabbed to death early today, TDC officials said.

Melvin Douglas, serving a 15-year term for aggravated robbery in Harris County, was dead on arrival at Huntsville Memorial Hospital, spokesman Phil Guthrie said.

Douglas becomes the 10th fatality at a Texas prison this year, surpassing the nine homicides in the state corrections system for all of 1983. All of this year's victims have died in stabbing incidents.

Guthrie said Douglas was stabbed three times in the chest with a homemade knife as cells were opened this morning for breakfast.

An inmate suspected in the slaying was in custody and the case has been referred to the Walker County Sheriff's Department for investigation, Guthrie said.

Also today, Guthrie said a vocational nurse held at knifepoint Aug. 1 at the TDC Ramsey II Unit says she was raped during the hostage incident.

The 27-year-old nurse, who was also a guard at the prison, originally told authorities she was not injured but later said she had been raped.

TDC Director Ray Procunier negotiated with convicted rapist Richard Joseph Sisto for five hours, before he was able to convince the inmate to give up his hostage and surrender.

Meanwhile, a 21-year-old unidentified inmate at the Darrington Unit near Rosharon was undergoing surgery today after he was stabbed several times in the back. The incident, about 1:30 a.m., was the latest in a series of stabbings and assaults in the nation's second-largest prison system.

The outbreak has prompted authorities to beef up security and scour prisons for weapons.

Electronic mail...An alternative to phone call, postal service

WASHINGTON (AP) — Slowly, but now surely, Americans are discovering an alternative to the telephone call and the U.S. Postal Service.

Known generically as electronic mail, it is grounded in computers and is still largely a business phenomenon. But as personal computers multiply, so does the private, at-home use of electronic mail.

It can take many forms, including such "old" technologies as telex, or tele-typewriter, networks. Indeed, most of the existing traffic begins its life electronically but ends up being delivered in printed form. (The Federal Express Corp. recently launched such a high-speed document delivery service called ZapMail.)

But the part of the business said to be finally zooming these days is computer-to-computer communications — typing messages on a computer and sending them to another computer for reading, another computer in your own office or across the country.

Electronic mail is a small business, clearly in its infancy. Industry revenues are estimated at only around $50 million. But spurred by the proliferation of personal and desk-top computers, advertising campaigns by network operators, and experiments with electronic information and banking systems, analysts claim the business is set to explode.

"It will not be at all surprising to see industry revenues hit $200 million to $300 million next year, and very likely $800 million to $1 billion by the end of the decade," says Kenneth G. Bosomworth, president of International Resource Development Inc., a Norwalk, Conn., consulting and research firm.

"People have to get used to a whole new technology," adds Michael Cavanagh, a Washington, D.C., consultant and executive director of the fledgling Electronic Mail Association. "But we're finally getting close to that critical mass that will set the stage for geometric growth."

Among the claimed benefits: an end to "telephone tag," where the person you're calling is out and when he returns the call, you're out; an imperviousness to time zones; an end to garbled messages; an ability to reach dozens, or thousands, of people with the same message simultaneously; and a reduction in the paper flood that confronts many managers.

Among the drawbacks: It's not necessarily cheaper overall, given equipment costs; many people who work on computers still need help in learning to send electronic mail; there's no guarantee the recipient is checking his "electronic mailbox" regularly; it reduces human contact and the pleasantries that accompany phone calls; and it poses a financial threat to the government postal system on which most Americans depend.

But to hear many businessmen tell it, once you go electronic, there's no turning back.

"I don't have to interrupt meetings anymore to take phone calls," says J. Robert Harcharik, president of the MCI Communications Corp.'s MCI Mail, one of the newer entrants to the field. "I only handle five or six phone calls a day now. Everything else is done at my convenience, electronically."

"It's just such a logical way of doing business," says Rich W. Coughenour, the director of mail services and office automation for the giant Citibank in New York. "You get to the point where you depend on it. Even when I was on vacation, I never lost contact."

"We've been able to quantify and identify a 33 percent to 36 percent reduction in the amount of interoffice mail going to our people on the network," says Coughenour. "Also, telephone service is becoming more expensive. With electronic mail, you can prepare your message 'off-line,' then send it at great speed, minimizing telephone connect time."

"Sixty-five percent of the first-class mail business is companies sending you a bill and you paying a bill," says Harcharik.

Bosomworth and Cavanagh say the technology and promise of electronic mail were apparent more than a decade ago, when manufacturers started designing smaller and easier-to-operate computers.

Mountain creates many adventures for Alaskans

DENALI NATIONAL PARK, Alaska (AP) — The chief park ranger, his green fatigues sodden with mud, helped the wet and weary tourists across the final stretch of wilderness between mudslide and civilization and said with a grin, "This your first trip to Denali? Welcome."

Recent mudslides at Denali, the home of North America's highest peak, Mount McKinley, stranded hundreds of travelers and underscored the temperamental nature of Alaska's outdoors.

At 20,320 feet, Mount McKinley towers above the clouds and creates its own weather systems. Sudden shifts, as from bright sunshine to thunderstorms on the day of two of the mudslides, are common.

The park service warns that the mountain — which the Athabascan Indians called Denali, or "Great One" — can be "as unpredictable as a Las Vegas slot machine. You never know what will happen."

What did happen one day late last month was part drama and part comedy.

An intense late afternoon storm had rolled across the mountains and dropped a cloudburst over Igloo Canyon. The rains sent a cascade of water, rocks and mud rolling down Cathedral Mountain, choking off the only road at a point 35 miles into the park.

The first signal of trouble for the tourists came over the two-way radio on one of the buses that make regular runs into the 6 million acre park and preserve.

"There's a mudslide ahead and I don't think we're going to get out of here for a long, long time," the voice of one bus driver gloomily relayed.

The tourists, up to 40 in each of several buses, were already disappointed by the clouds that had shrouded McKinley all day. They slumped into their seats, grumbling.

But they had already marveled at the other wonders of the park, which drew 346,000 visitors in 1983 with a real life version of "Wild Kingdom." Against a backdrop of snowy mountains and pristine streams, they had spotted grizzly bears, moose and Dall sheep.

Then, when the buses halted at the edge of the slides — two of them, three feet deep and 40-50 feet across — park officials said it would be hours before the mud would be cleared away.

One by one, the stranded travelers turned curious. They pulled on rain gear and walked up to see the mudslide. Some posed for photographs in front of the slide; others tried to stand atop it, only to sink knee-deep; children skipped stones in a murky stream that had cut through the mud.

Chief Ranger Tom Griffiths crossed the first slide to look at the second one. At first, he thought only experienced hikers should try to cross the mud. "They're going to get wet and muddy. Only people who are good hikers should do it," he relayed via radio.

By this time, seven buses had pulled up at one mudslide; an eighth was stranded between the two blankets of mud. No one had been injured and Griffiths termed the situation "not a life-threatening emergency," but, counting tourists whose buses were halted farther up the park, more than 600 were stranded.

When the rain ended, rangers decided to shift people across the mudslides to waiting shuttle buses. The more physically fit people rolled up their slacks and waded through the muck, backpacks and cameras held high.

Children were carried across, some slung over the shoulders of park employees like sacks of flour. The elderly and some women, including one who was pregnant, were either carried or helped across the first mudslide.

On the other side, the tourists crossed 50 yards of spongy, brush-covered tundra, stepped through more mud and water and worked their way down a steep hill toward the buses.

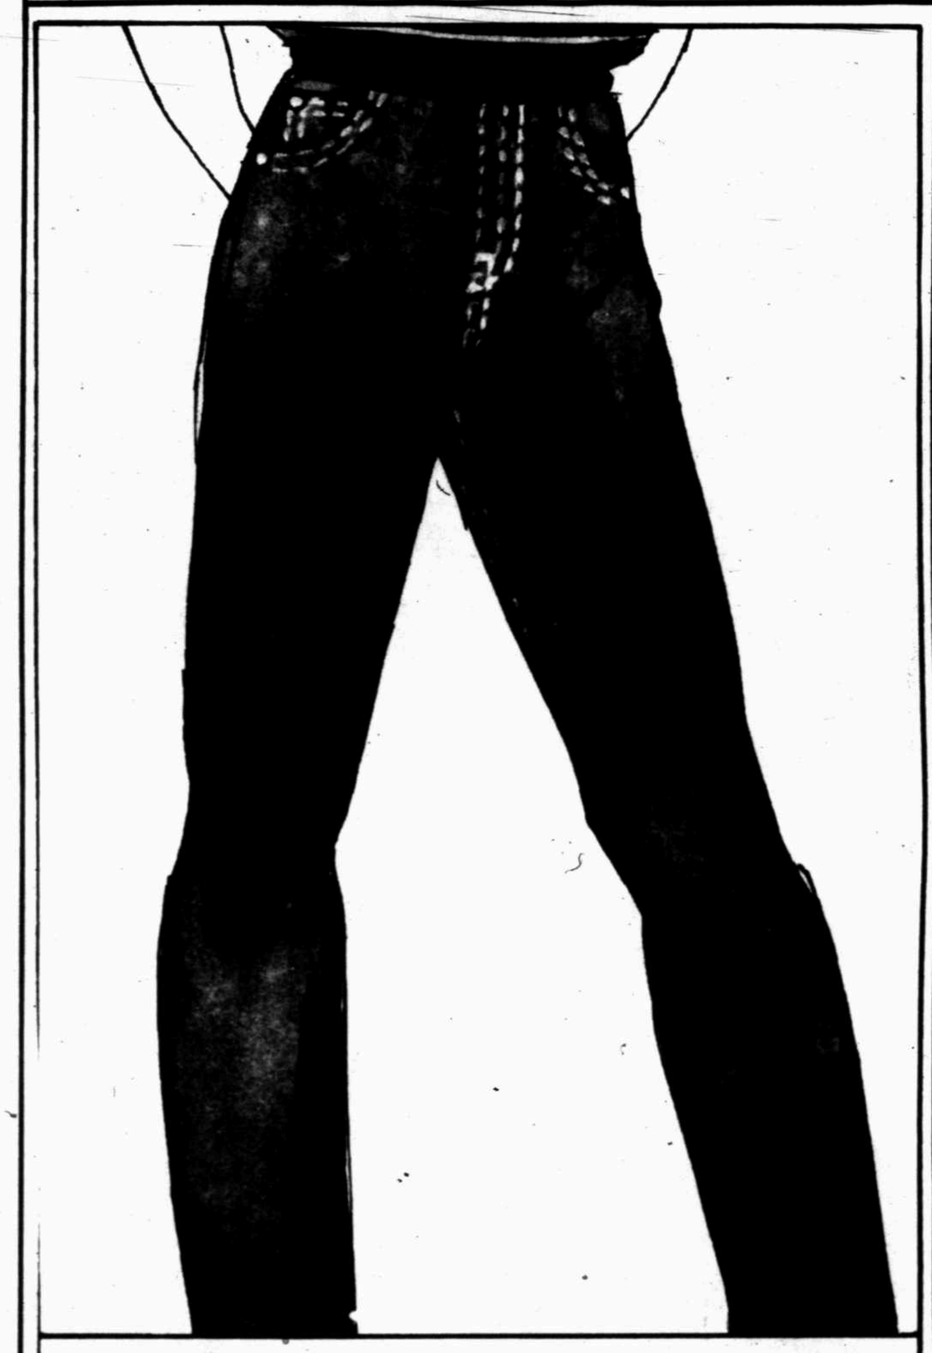

Neil and Everett Towle, a honeymooning couple in their 70s, picked their way down the final hill and declared the mudslides were just "another experience on our trip." They had traveled 9,000 miles in their motor home since marrying Nov. 17 in Dowling Park, Fla.

"It's exciting. We're having a good time. As long as no one's hurt, it doesn't matter," Mrs. Towle said.

The mudslides also added excitement to Gail Laudicina's first trip to Alaska.

"This is my first trip to Alaska and probably my last," she said with a chuckle. "I'm never coming back. I'm just glad nobody got hurt."

Bush thinks Zaccaro should show taxes, but won't show his own

DALLAS (AP) — Vice President George Bush says the husband of Democratic vice presidential nominee Geraldine Ferraro should make his tax returns public, but Bush says "I see no need" to reveal his own tax documents.

The Republican vice president said he released tax returns dating back six years during the 1980 campaign and after taking office put his assets into "the most stringent blind trust established."

"Obviously, if I have conducted myself that way I think others ought to do it for this job," Bush said. "I'm saying, this is what I've done and I'm saying others ought to do it this way."

In a telephone interview with The Associated Press from his vacation home in Maine, Bush also underscored his willingness to debate Ms. Ferraro but said there likely would be no more than one such meeting. As to who will decide whether he debates Ms. Ferraro, the vice president said it would be "my decision."

Republicans gathering for next week's GOP convention have been heaping criticism on Ms. Ferraro over her husband's refusal to release his tax returns.

At the same time, some GOP lawmakers say Bush should take the same step and release his returns. They include Sen. Robert Dole of Kansas, Rep. Trent Lott of Mississippi and Rep. Bobbie Fiedler of California.

Ms. Ferraro's husband, real estate executive John Zaccaro, said Wednesday he was reconsidering his refusal: "I don't want to hurt my wife. I think the public should know a certain amount."

Ms. Ferraro says she will release her own tax returns next Monday, along with other personal financial information.

Bush, asked about Zaccaro's refusal, said that when he was running for office he released tax returns for six years and a detailed financial statement of all assets and liabilities. After winning the vice presidency, he put his assets into a blind trust so that they are managed by a trustee rather than by Bush himself. Investments are kept secret from him.

As to suggestions he should release his taxes, regardless of the blind trust, Bush argued: "I can't do it because it breaks the trust. You have to go to get the Government Ethics Office to give you permission to do that, and maybe that's what you have to do, but then that violates the blindness of the trust. I am not at liberty to do it."

"I don't even write out my tax return, haven't filled them out, haven't signed my tax returns since I've been in this job," he added.

"If you want to go backwards from the most stringent blind trust established, why, that's a different point," he said. "I don't think it's relevant when you have a point of departure, when you've released six years of tax returns."

To release his returns, Bush said, "You have to go to the Government Ethics Committee and get permission to do it and I see no need to do that. I've had no interest, no possible conflict of interest and no access to information on this ever since the assets were put into that trust."

He added, "I haven't even thought about it (releasing the returns). I can't release it. I don't have the power to do that."

His press secretary, Peter Teeley, said Bush receives a quarterly report of the overall worth of the trust but that he does not know where the money is invested. "Nor does he know what he's paying in taxes," Teeley said.

President Reagan releases his tax returns each year even though some of his assets are in a blind trust. Teeley said Reagan's trust was "a different sort of trust. His trust is not as stringent as ours."

On the matter of debating Ms. Ferraro, Bush said: "I expect if there's any, there will be one. I have said I would like to do it but there's no decision on it."

He said there was "no hangup" about reaching a decision. "It's August. People forget that. It's early. We haven't been nominated yet."

Commissioners vote to stop garbage scavenging for food

RIO GRANDE CITY, Texas (AP) — Commissioners in one of the nation's poorest counties have voted to post a warning sign and hire additional personnel at the county dump to stop people from scavenging there for food.

Starr County Commissioners asked that the sign be posted Friday to warn people that it is illegal to take aluminum cans, wood and food from the dump.

Starr County Judge Blas Chapa said he had been told increasing numbers of people were eating out of the dump. He labeled the situation "unsanitary" and said anyone caught hunting through garbage after the sign is posted will be fined.

"We have people eating out of it and building shacks for when the crops come in," Chapa said during a Monday commissioners court meeting.

"We're responsible for the dump and we could have a tremendous lawsuit if somebody gets sick out there."

Starr County residents have an average per capita income of $3,884 compared to the national average of $10,495, making it one of the poorest counties in the country, according to the state welfare department.

Jose Maria Alvarez, a county commissioner and superviser of the dump, said additional employees would be hired soon to guard the dump during daylight hours.

Alvarez said he knew of one family that finds $80 worth of recyclable aluminum cans at the dump each week.

GOP honors convention planners

DALLAS (AP) — With the opening of the Republican National Convention just a few days away, party officials and Dallas convention planners took some time out for congratulations and pep talks.

"The city of Dallas is truly a great convention city," Republican National Committee Chairman Frank Fahrenkopf told a group of convention hosts at a Wednesday luncheon held in their honor.

Former Dallas Mayor Jack Evans, who was in office when the party decided to hold its convention here, was ceremoniously awarded the first official convention badge.

"Honored guest" passes were also given to several of the other convention organizers, including builder Dave Fox.

"I do appreciate that since I read in the paper this morning about too few seats in the hall. Now there'll be one less," Fox joked as Fahrenkopf gave him the badge.

Fahrenkopf quickly added, "This is for standing room only."

"In all seriousness," Fox said, "you bring us honor to be in our city."

Dallas County Republican Chairman Fred Meyer assured the national party committee members that "our momentum, our enthusiasm has been building, building, building."

"We're about to bear fruit," Meyer said. "Our goal is to make this the best Republican convention — or Democratic convention — ever held."

Albert Casey, chairman of the board of American Airlines, the "official airline" of the convention, feigned insult at the locale of the luncheon.

"Wait'll I get a hold of the fella that booked this into the Hyatt, the company that owns Braniff," he said.

Casey, who drew big laughs during his brief remarks, told the group that he had just returned from the Olympics in Los Angeles and had a few suggestions for Dallas.

Contaminated water back in system

McKEESPORT, Pa. (AP) — County health officials again are advising the 40,000 customers of the McKeesport Municipal Water Authority to boil their water before drinking, after an equipment breakdown caused the water to be contaminated.

Allegheny County health department spokesman Guillermo Cole said Wednesday that equipment in the water's coagulation process broke down Tuesday night. The process removes contaminated particles in water from the Monongahela River to make it safe for drinking.

Study: Tax policies widen income gap

NATION

WASHINGTON (AP) — Reagan administration policies have contributed to a widening income gap between America's poor and well-to-do families, a new private study contends.

"Because of underlying economic and demographic trends, some of this widening of the income distribution would have taken place regardless of who was president," said the study by the Urban Institute. "But the particular tax and benefit reductions that President Reagan supported exacerbated the trend," it said.

"His policies helped the affluent but were detrimental to the poor and the middle class," the study said.

Administration officials declined to comment in detail without studying the 415-page report. But Robert Ortner, chief economist for the Commerce Department, said he doubted the contention that Reagan policies had contributed to a widening gap.

Besides, he said, cuts in the tax rate pushed by the administration actually helped low-income Americans by creating more jobs.

The institute's figures are based on government statistics but are adjusted in several ways and include only estimates for the still-unfinished current year.

Basically, they say that after discounting for the effects of inflation, American families' after-tax income rose 3.5 percent to 4 percent between 1980 and 1984 compared with average four-year gains of 5.1 percent in the 1970s and 11.3 percent in the 1960s.

But the gain was not evenly distributed, the report said. Dividing American families into fifths, by income levels, it said a typical family in the bottom 20 percent suffered an after-tax income drop of nearly 8 percent in the first four years of the decade. A typical middle-class family's income rose about 1 percent and after-tax income rose nearly 9 percent for the wealthiest fifth.

Layoffs during the 1981-82 recession were one obvious factor dragging down average income for the poorest families, since many wage-earners in that category lost their jobs and had no income at all for long periods.

In addition, there were increases in two-wage-earner families and single-parent, female-headed families.

Reagan policies did have an effect, the report said, citing spending restraints on social programs mainly benefiting the poor as well as tax-rate cuts with big benefits for the wealthy.

Previously, the administration has rejected contentions that the tax cut was not equitable by saying nothing could be fairer than the plan Congress adopted to cut all rates by about the same amount.

Woman granted rights to visit young daughter

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — A woman who lost custody of her 7-year-old daughter after marrying a black man says she's "so excited my feet haven't touched the ground" after learning she can see the girl for the first time in 18 months.

Hillsborough County Circuit Judge Manuel Menendez Jr. granted Linda Palmore, 38, temporary visitation rights on Tuesday so she can see Melanie Sidoti, who lives with her father, Anthony Sidoti, in Texas.

Mrs. Palmore got custody of Melanie in 1980, but Sidoti successfully challenged the award when Mrs. Palmore married Clarence Palmore.

The U.S. Supreme Court ruled this year that race could not be a factor in custody cases.

Boy injured by fireworks

SEASIDE HEIGHTS, N.J. (AP) — An 8-year-old boy was in critical condition today after being hit by an unexploded shell during a fireworks display on the boardwalk in this shore resort, police said.

Michael Parantino of Clifton was in extremely critical condition at Community Memorial Hospital in Toms River, where he was taken after the accident Wednesday night, said police Lt. Thomas O'Hare.

The 2-pound fireworks cannister, about 6 inches long, had been shot 500 feet into the air but did not explode and fell to the ground, hitting the child, police said.

The boy's mother, Nancy, was treated for minor injuries at the hospital and then released, said police spokesman Bob Littore. The child's father, Joseph, was not injured.

USSR can retrieve object

FAIRBORN, Ohio (AP) — The Air Force says the Soviet Union can pick up an 18-inch piece of a booster rocket found in a southwestern Ohio field that re-entered the atmosphere in a fiery show.

The pancake-shaped object bearing Cyrillic writing on one side was found three days after it fell to Earth July 27. The Soviets are entitled to get the fragment back under a 1968 treaty providing for return of astronauts and objects launched into space, the Air Force said.

Public to get free ride

WORCESTER, Mass. (AP) — Bus commuters in 16 Worcester-area communites are in for a free ride today after striking transit employees ratified a three-year contract to end a 19-day walkout.

About 20,000 Worcester-area commuters were left without public transportation July 28 when members of Amalgamated Transit Workers Union walked off the job in a dispute over the use of part-time drivers.

Robert Ojaia, the authority's administrator, said bus patrons would get free rides when service resumed at 6 a.m.

Military action put on hold

VISTA, Calif. (AP) — The Marine Corps will not bring military charges against five Marines accused of murdering a staff sergeant as part of a plot by the victim's wife until the case is resolved in civilian courts, a spokeswoman says.

The Marines, identified by police as Russell E. Sanders, 20; Kevin W Watkins, 20; Mark J. Schulz, 19; Jeffrey T. Mizner, 21; and Russell A. Harrison, 19, pleaded innocent Wednesday in Vista Municipal Court to murder and conspiracy charges in the shooting death of Staff Sgt. Carlo G. Troiani. The victim's wife, Laura Troiani, also has been charged.

Sgt. Terri Durn, a Marine spokeswoman, said no decision will be made about bringing military charges pending a civilian trial.

Cities to be held liable

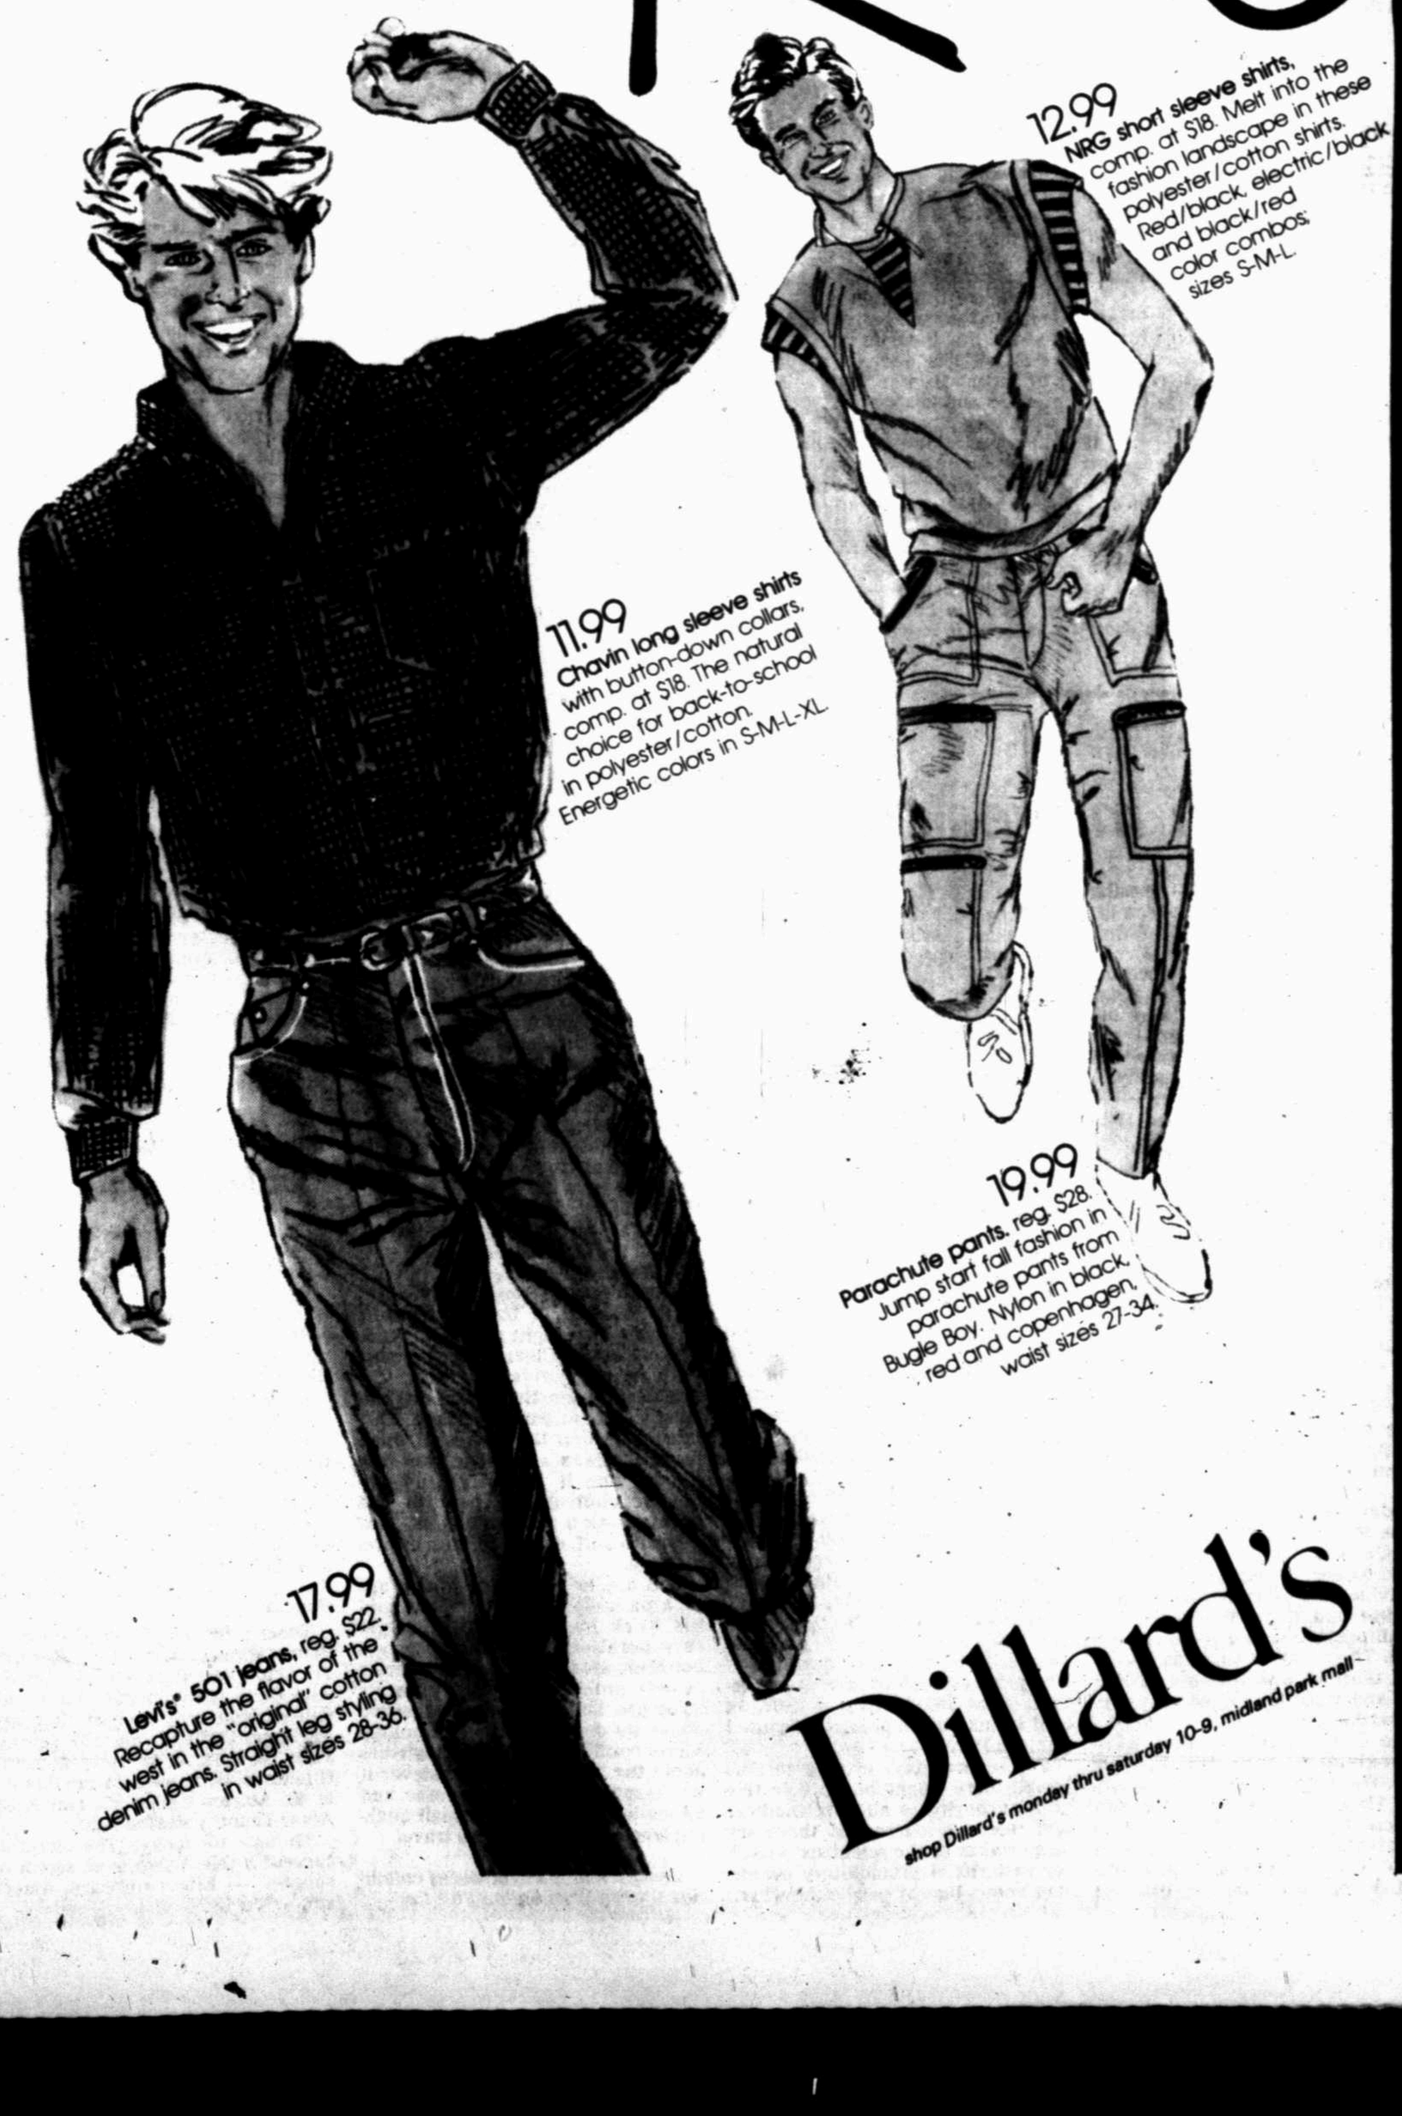

BOSTON (AP) — A woman whose husband and daughter died in a 1978 car crash says she's "thrilled" with a state Supreme Court decision holding municipalities held liable if police stop, but don't arrest, drunken drivers who later cause accidents.

But the 4-3 ruling, which was handed down Wednesday, rejected an $873,697 award to Debbie L. Irwin, 25, of Ware, and ordered a new trial because a piece of evidence was improperly introduced.

Ware police stopped Donald Fuller, 19, of Monson, in May 1978 as he drove out of a nightclub parking lot, and then let him drive on, according to the suit. Fuller had a .20 blood alcohol level, double the standard for being under the influence.

Taxtime story

Nothing is quite as intriguing as American presidential politics. There's a surprise every minute.

Over the past few days we've watched in awe as Democratic presidential nominee Walter Mondale told the American people if elected he would definitely increase their taxes and that, although he wouldn't admit it, President Reagan would have a secret plan to raise taxes after November, too.

Well! Political analysts didn't have to tell us — or most other Americans, for that matter — that such a posture isn't exactly the most endearing for a politician, but then the heat of presidential race can create strange bedfellows.

What Mr. Mondale obviously was hoping for was a statement from President Reagan that he would not approve an increase in taxes under any circumstances. He didn't get it. What Reagan did was to go as far as he could go without locking himself into a situation that may change. He ruled out a tax hike except as a "last resort and then went the additional step of vowing to veto any increase in personal income tax rates.

It's ironic in a way that this somewhat silly discussion has led us down a path whereon the two candidates can be viewed for what they truly are: Walter Mondale talking about taxes having to be raised regardless and President Reagan talking about attempting to hold the line on taxes so that money can be left in the pockets of the nation's people who, logically, will spend it for goods and, in turn, fuel the economic recovery.

The topic that isn't being talked about too much currently, but that obviously will have to be talked about soon is reducing deficits because that is the bugaboo that could potentially wreak havoc with the economic recovery. That's why President Reagan isn't closing all the doors now open to him, but then why talk about something now that you may later regret bringing up. If animal lovers will excuse us, the Reagan administration has already shown us there is more than one way to skin a cat.

Come to think of it that's a good lesson for Walter Mondale to remember next time he gets the urge to talk about raising taxes.

Worthwhile words

Quotable quotations of the past week roamed the realms of the use of language and national politics.

We all have seen television shows "made possible," as the announcer says, by a grant from somebody or other. A little boy in a Wall Street Journal cartoon, "Pepper ...and Salt," obviously had viewed the same programs, for he adopted the language when he showed his new bicycle to friends. "This bike," he said, "was made possible through a grant from my grandmother."

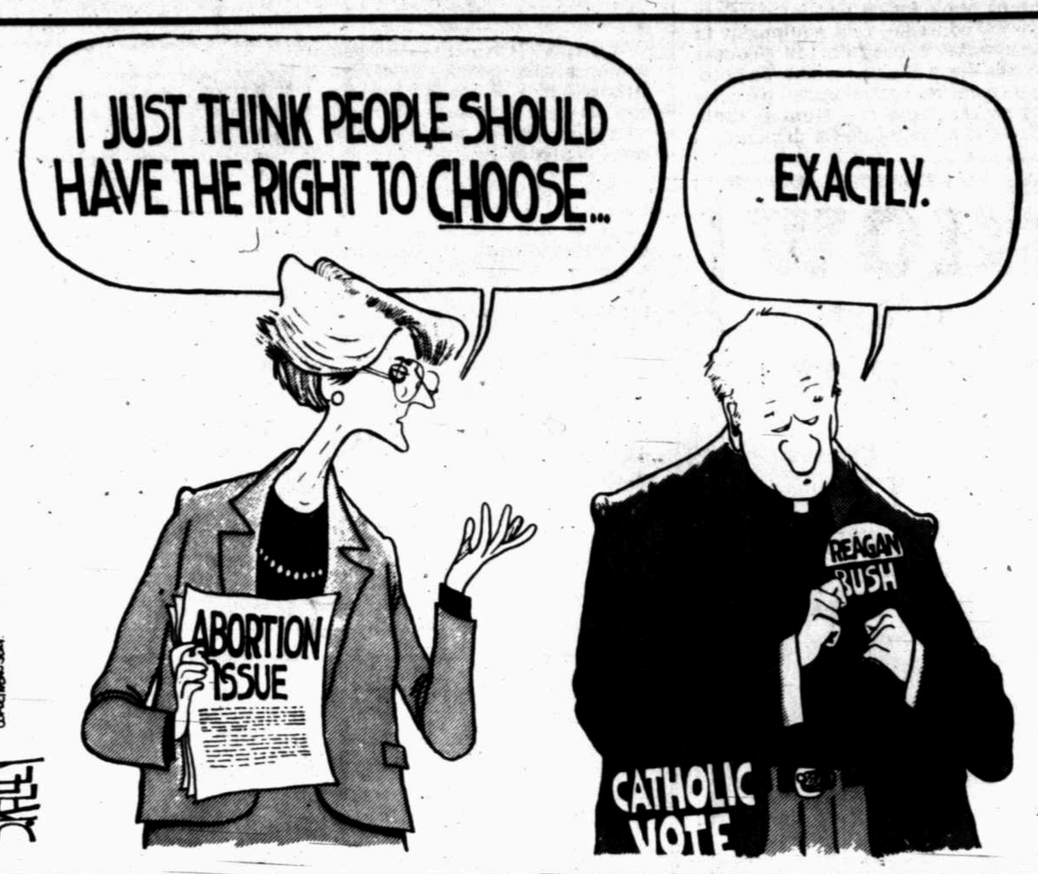

A Republican member of the United States Senate from Idaho, Steve Symms, had an interesting comment on the eve of the Senate committee hearings on overhauling the federal income tax. Said the savvy senator:

"When Congress talks of tax reform, grab your wallet and run for cover." Also on the senatorial side, another astronaut has come in from outer space to run for public office. The first was John Glenn, the Ohio Democrat who holds a seat in the United States Senate. The latest space entry is Michigan's Jack Lousma, former space shuttle commander who has just won the Republican nomination for the seat held by Democratic Sen. Carl Levin.

Mr. Lousma's message, predictably astronautical, went like this:

"All systems are go. In November, we will land in Washington and the United States Senate."

It would be a crowning glory to the space age to have two travelers in the interplanetery atmosphere, one a Democrat and one a Republican, serving in the Congress. Time, like the astronaut, flies in ways amazing to behold.

ART BUCHWALD

Breathe deep, it's only smog!

Smog, which was once the big attraction of Los Angeles, can now be found all over the country from Butte, Montana, to New York City, and people are getting so used to polluted air that it's very difficult for them to breathe anything else.

Art Buchwald

I was lecturing recently, and one of my stops was Flagstaff, Arizona, which is about 7,000 feet above sea level.

As soon as I got out of the plane, I smelled something peculiar.

"What's that smell?" I asked the man who met me at the plane.

"I don't smell anything," he replied.

"There's a definite odor that I'm not familiar with," I said.

"Oh, you must be talking about the fresh air. A lot of people come out here who have never smelled fresh air before."

"What's it supposed to do?" I asked suspiciously.

"Nothing. You just breathe it like any other kind of air. It's supposed to be good for your lungs."

"I've heard that story before," I said. "How come if it's air, my eyes aren't watering?"

"Your eyes don't water with fresh air. That's the advantage of it. Saves you a lot in paper tissues."

I looked around and everything appeared crystal clear. It was a strange sensation and made me feel very uncomfortable.

My host, sensing this, tried to be reassuring. "Please don't worry about it. Tests have proved that you can breathe fresh air day and night without its doing any harm to the body."

"You're just saying that because you don't want me to leave," I said. "Nobody who has lived in a major city can stand fresh air for a very long time. He has no tolerance for it."

"Well, if the fresh air bothers you, why don't you put a handkerchief over your nose and breathe through your mouth?"

"Okay, I'll try it. If I'd known I was coming to a place that had nothing but fresh air, I would have brought a surgical mask."

We drove in silence. About 15 minutes later he asked, "How do you feel now?"

"Okay, I guess, but I sure miss sneezing."

"We don't sneeze too much here," the man admitted. "Do they sneeze a lot where you come from?"

"All the time. There are some days when that's all you do."

"Do you enjoy it?"

"Not necessarily, but if you don't sneeze, you'll die. Let me ask you something. How come there's no air pollution around here?"

"Flagstaff can't seem to attract industry. I guess we're really behind the times. The only smoke we get is when the Indians start signaling each other. But the wind seems to blow it away."

The fresh air was making me feel dizzy. "Isn't there a diesel bus around here that I could breathe into for a couple of hours?"

"Not at this time of day. I might be able to find a truck for you."

We found a truck driver, and slipped him a $5 bill, and he let me put my head near his exhaust pipe for a half-hour. I was immediately revived and able to give my speech.

Nobody was as happy to leave Flagstaff as I was. My next stop was Los Angeles, and when I got off the plane, I took one big deep breath of the smog-filled air, my eyes started to water, I began to sneeze, and I felt like a new man again.

CIA-Moonie link brings warning

WASHINGTON — In the Central American hinterlands, it is sometimes difficult to distinguish the CIA's operatives from the Rev. Sun Myung Moon's disciples. They appear to be working in harness against the communist-tainted Sandinista regime in Nicaragua.

Jack Anderson

This troubles at least one Pentagon analyst, now stationed in Korea, who has warned the White House that the CIA-Moonie connection could cause possible political damage to President Reagan's re-election campaign.

The analyst's unofficial memo, titled "Potential Problems," has been slipped to my associate Donald Goldberg.

"Current Moonie involvement with government officials, contractors and grantees (in Central America) could create a major scandal," the memo warns. "If their activities and role become public knowledge, it will unite both the left and the right in attacking the administration."

The memo continues: "If efforts are not taken to stop their growing influence and weed out current Moonie involvement in government, the president stands a good chance of being portrayed in the media as a poor, naive incompetent who is strong on ideology and weak on common sense. ...

"The likelihood of a reporter or a Democratic staff member piecing the total picture together is too great to be neglected. Any thought that this festering problem will go away if ignored is foolish."

The "total picture" of Moon's activities in Latin America is not clear. But there is no doubt that the Korean messiah — now in prison for income tax evasion — has established a solid presence in the region, with ties to right-wing groups and U.S.-supported guerrillas.

My associate Jon Lee Anderson reports from Central America that CAUSA International, Moon's political front, has representatives working in programs that help the CIA in its "contra" war against the Sandinista government.

CAUSA maintains a publicity office in Tegucigalpa, the Honduran capital, but its principal activities are in the field. CAUSA provides cash and other aid to Honduran-based Nicaraguan contras and Honduran right-wing political groups. Many anti-Sandinista guerrillas wear red CAUSA T-shirts, with a map of the world on them.

But CAUSA and its affiliate, the Refugee Relief Freedom Foundation, provide more than T-shirts to rebel groups. They also funnel supplies to refugee families in and near contra camps and pay for trips by rebel leaders to the United States.

One contra leader, Fernando "El Negro" Chamorro, told my associate that as early as 1981, CAUSA representatives sent him on an all-expenses-paid trip to the United States to try to unify the Nicaraguan exile groups.

The airlift of supplies to the rebels by Moon's Unification Church has escalated since Congress cut off CIA funding for the contras. The administration has been attempting to "privatize" its war against the Sandinistas and is apparently willing to work with Moon's people.

Footnote: A Unification Church spokeswoman denied that the church is engaged in any but religious activities in Central America.

MONDALE'S MISSION: For Walter Mondale, whose political career has been built on the fine art of coalition building, the supreme challenge is at hand. Only if he can maintain the precarious unity that he achieved at the San Francisco convention will he stand a chance of beating Ronald Reagan.

Mondale is pinning his hopes on little more than two dozen states that would give him a bare majority in the Electoral College. But even this narrowly focused campaign depends on keeping the disparate elements of the Democratic Party happy — or at least not so unhappy that they might vote for Reagan or stay home on Election Day.

These contentious constituencies — blacks, Jews, Hispanics, labor, women, Southern populists and blue-collar ethnics — have their own conflicting goals and demands. Mondale needs all of them to win, yet every time he appears to "tilt" toward one group, he risks alienating one or more of the rest.

Barely a handful of political leaders interviewed by my reporter Norman Kurz honestly feel that Mondale will carry their states, even with the dramatic boost he gave the ticket by picking Rep. Geraldine Ferraro as his running mate.

Westerners are convinced — and rightly so — that Mondale, who did poorly in the region's primaries, has all but written them off. Southerners expressed pessimism about the chances of two Northern liberals in an area that voted against one of its own, Jimmy Carter, in 1980.

Two Texans had faint hopes for the Democratic ticket in that key state. "If the election were held today, there's no doubt we'd lose Texas, and without Texas the Democrats can't win," said Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, adding loyally, "but we have a chance."

House Majority Leader Jim Wright said: "It's going to be uphill all the way. Ferraro would not have been my first choice. ... But when the quarterback calls the play, I go block downfield."

Another View:

Legal path needed

The leaders of the two largest postal unions should drop their talk about calling an illegal strike.

Vincent F. Sombrotto, president of the National Association of Letter Carriers, and Moe Biller, head of the American Postal Workers Union, said they would go to jail if necessary.

But postal workers are forbidden by law to strike. The writers of the law felt that the continuation of mail delivery for the public is essential.

There are legal procedures for resolving the dispute. Now that negotiations have failed, the procedure is to submit the issue to binding arbitration. The process has started.

Base pay for the average postal worker is $23,238. The unions are asking for raises of about 10 percent in the first year and 4 percent in each of the next two years of a three-year contract, plus other benefit increases.

A move by the Postal Service to unilaterally lower the pay for newly hired workers by 23 percent and to reduce their benefits has upset some of the union members. Management says it is entitled to do this without getting union approval because the contract has expired.

The two large postal unions and two smaller ones have brought suit in federal court seeking to stop the Postal Service from putting the cuts into effect.

The lawsuit is a better way of handling this disagreement than an illegal strike would be.

Earth moves for seismologist

BERKELEY, Calif. — Sensible citizens consider modern life altogether too full of incident, and they may become cross with Professor Bruce Bolt because he says the earth is going to heave beneath our feet. In fact, were our feet sufficiently sensitive — and thank God they are not — we would, he says, feel it heaving constantly.

George F. Will

Bolt is a seismologist. His science is of intense interest in California, and in New Madrid, Mo., the site, around New Year's, 1811-12, of several of America's severest quakes. They temporarily reversed the flow of the Mississippi, altered its course and caused church bells to ring in Boston.

Today about a million people live in the zone of maximum vulnerability. Quakes of the 1811-12 scale would damage St. Louis, Little Rock, Nashville and parts of seven states. Because quakes are rarer there than in California, building codes are less strict. The rarity is ominous. Geological tensions are building in that zone and a sudden adjustment may be overdue.

The New Madrid quakes were approximately 8 on the Richter scale. The Alaska quake of Good Friday, 1964, was 8.4. The 1906 San Francisco quake was 8.3. The scale is logarithmic: The San Francisco quake was 900 times more powerful than the 6.5 quake that in 1983 left 30 percent of the houses in Coalinga, Calif., uninhabitable. The Coalinga quake resulted from some faults not previously mapped, raising the question of how many more unknown faults in California could cause quakes of 6 severity.

There are 2,500 to 10,000 measurable quakes a day, worldwide. In California there are about 30 a day strong enough to make a squiggle on seismographs here and elsewhere. (Instruments can measure ground movements the size of a molecule of oxygen.) The problem is that California has chosen, improvidently, to sit on two plates of the earth's crust, one of which is moving south while the other heads for Alaska at a rate of two inches a year.

No good can come of this, but there is no reasoning with these plates. And there is no predicting when tension built by the friction (rocks under great pressure are elastic enough to store energy like springs) will produce sudden slippage.

Quakes kill thousands of people each year. One in China in 1976 killed an estimated 400,000. It is a scientific certainty that large quakes are coming to the United States, Japan and elsewhere. But, Bolt says, predicting times as well as places is a science in its infancy. Chinese sources claim that an evacuation of a city, in response to correct prediction, saved 100,000 lives in 1975. In 1981 an inaccurate prediction caused panic in Peru.

For several days after a serious quake there might be no effective civil authority to allocate medical and rescue resources. So there are large stakes in the scientists' search for patterns of premonitory events. Bolt knows that by predicting where and how much the earth may move, measures can be taken (concerning the architecture of schools, distribution systems for water and power, dams, bridges and other matters) that will mean that when the pieces are picked up, there will be fewer pieces than there might have been.

The Lisbon earthquake on All Saints Day, 1755, was an important event in the history of the European mind. It killed thousands of persons in churches, and thousands more who, fleeing to the seashore, were drowned by a tidal wave. It raised doubts about the beneficence of the universe and God's disposition toward the 18th century.

Seventeen days later, in Boston, a quake stopped clocks and killed fish in the harbor. In 1886, Charleston, S.C., shook for eight minutes, and 60 persons died. Clearly, seismology, with its predictive potential, is a practical matter. But Bolt, a dry and laconic Australian, is relaxed. One must be when the stakes of one's investigations are large, but the events one is investigating are beyond control and, pending the accumulation and sifting of vast quantities of evidence, are unpredictable.

Bolt has, as a good scientist is apt to, a philosophic turn of mind, and his work has potentially cosmic reverberations. Earthquake waves bouncing around the earth's interior reveal much about the planet's structure, and hence are suggestive about its origins. Thus seismology serves cosmology by producing clues about the "big bang" or whatever it was that produced the universe, and all matter, including the small quaking fragment on which we travel.

CBO report forecasts little change in deficit

WASHINGTON (AP) — Ronald Reagan's last budget report before Election Day holds no promise for the balanced federal budget that he pledged when campaigning for the presidency four years ago.

Rather, the report, released Wednesday by the Office of Management and Budget, foresees little change in the red ink over the next few years.

It does show that the budget deficit could be whittled down to about $21 billion by the end of the decade — but only if the economy grew at a robust clip and Congress adopted deficit-snipping proposals pushed by the White House.

Otherwise, the budget office expects the deficit to run at $161.7 billion in 1989.

It hit a record $194.5 billion in the last fiscal year, which ended on Sept. 30, 1983.

It's expected to be $174.3 billion in the current fiscal year.

Reagan, who has made no similar promises for a balanced budget so far in this campaign, has blamed the sharp 1981-82 recession for contributing to the high deficit.

But Democrats are pointing the finger at the president and the big tax cuts he pushed early in his term.

Indeed, Walter Mondale, Reagan's foe in this campaign, blasted the fresh budget projections as "cooked" and "garbage."

Mondale has promised to trim the deficits by two-thirds by the end of the next presidential term, partly by boosting taxes. He says he's been waiting for the administration and Congressional Budget Office to complete their summer budget reviews before releasing additional details of his plan.

The nonpartisan Congressional Budget Office weighed in last week with its revisions of the budget numbers. The deficit forecasts by the CBO and the administration are not far off this year and next, but widen sharply by the end of the decade.

The CBO projects a deficit in 1989 of $263 billion, about $100 billion more than the administration.

Edwin Dale, spokesman for the administration's budget office, says half the yawning gap in the figures is due to interest rate assumptions.

The CBO thinks interest rates will be about 9 percent in 1989, not much under the 10.5 percent currently.

The administration projects a 5.1 percent level.

It also is forecasting the economy will grow at a faster clip than the CBO, bringing in additional revenues, and that inflation will be somewhat lower.

Under the administration's latest assumptions, the economy will grow 6.5 percent this year, just about the same as in 1983. It will slow to a 4 percent rate in the next four years and then dip to 3.7 percent in 1989.

But if the economy were to expand at a faster clip — 5.5 percent during 1985-88 — sharp inroads could be made in the deficit, according to a high-growth scenario laid out by the budget office.

Anti-barking ordinance has owners at end of their tether

SMITHTOWN, N.Y. (AP) — A law limiting dog-barking to 15 minutes at a stretch — to be enforced by a stopwatch-toting inspector — has pet owners at the end of their tethers, vowing to fight for "our dogs' constitutional rights."

"The war has just begun," Muriel Dietch, a two-dog owner, said Tuesday after a Town Board that heard "horrendous" complaints from aggravated non-dog owners passed the ordinance 4-0.

This Long Island town of 6,500 licensed dogs — one for every 18 residents — already has a noise ordinance of 65 decibels for residential areas. But because dogs rarely achieve those levels, the existing law is useless for curbing curs.

Town officials say the new law, with fines of $50 for a first offense, $100 for a second offense and $500 and a possible 15-day jail term for a third, should help muzzle incessant barkers.

But pet owners like Mrs. Dietch are afraid that unfriendly neighbors will take advantage of the ordinance, which takes effect next week, to sic town authorities on people they dislike.

"All your enemies have to do is get to you through your dog," she said. "This is going to turn neighbor against neighbor.

"We'll go to the Supreme Court for our dogs' constitutional rights," she added.

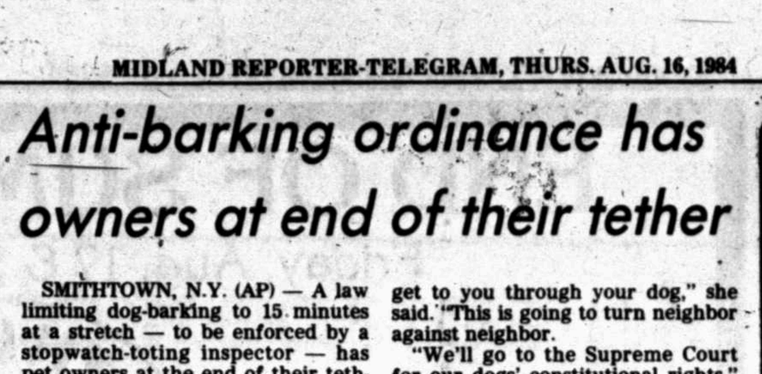

Smithtown Supervisor Patrick Vecchio said officials will only take action aganst a dog owner after they listen to a violation and time it for 15 minutes. Asked how it would be enforced, Vecchio said an inspector would respond with a stopwatch when notified of a complaint.

He said the ordinance was enacted after Town Board members received several legitimate complaints.

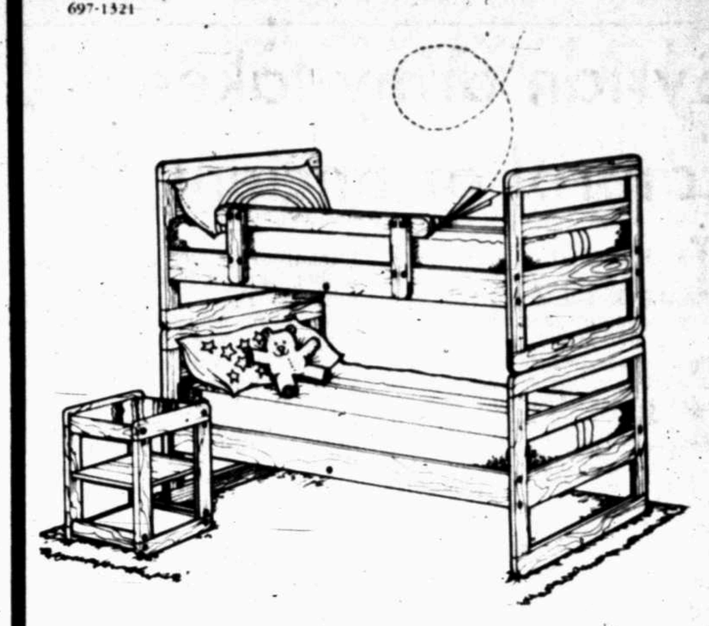

"Some of the complaints were horrendous," said Vecchio, whose allergies prevent him from owning a dog. "Someone can leave a dog tied to a tree for hours, and that dog will bark incessantly. It will drive you crazy listening to that noise all day."

"Dogs are born to bark," Mrs. Dietch said.

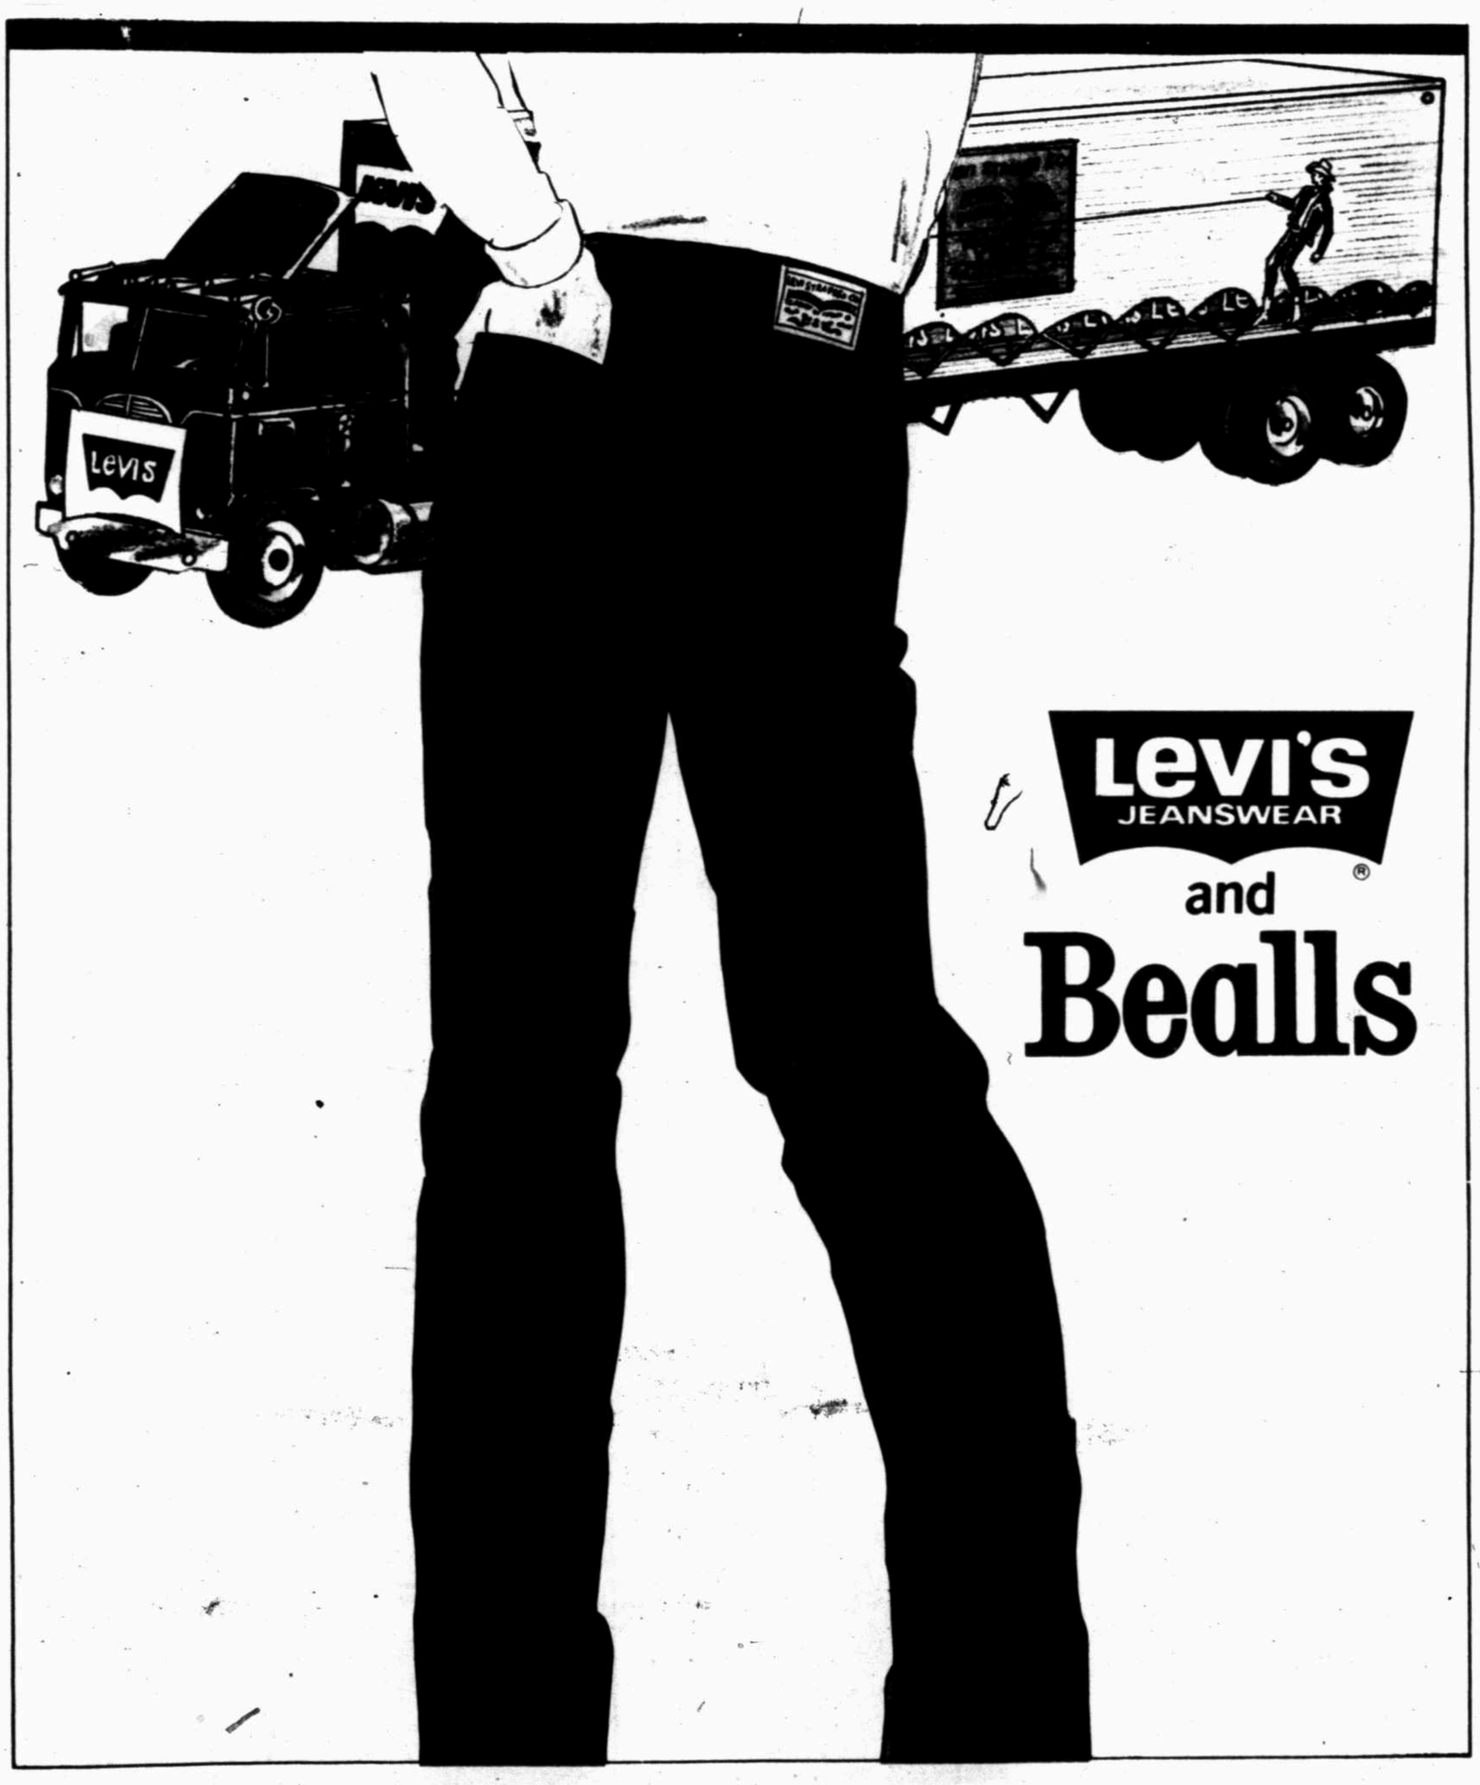

A crowd of about 35 dog lovers attended Tuesday's meeting and jeered when the law was passed. High School senior Tina Castorina showed up at Town Hall with Pugs, a 5-pound Shitzu, and called the law "stupid."

Syrian army takes control of ancient city

By G. G. LaBELLE

BAALBEK, Lebanon (AP) — Syrian army forces have taken control of this ancient city from Iranian Revolutionary Guards and the radical Moslem militias linked to the bombings that killed more than 300 U.S. and French servicemen in Beirut last October.

The entrance is bricked up at the Khawam Hotel, once headquarters for the Iranian soldiers sent to Lebanon by the Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini. Next door sits a Syrian armored vehicle, under a tarpaulin but clearly ready for use.

On the streets that had been patrolled by bearded militiamen and the Iranians, Syrian soldiers now man checkpoints, carefully monitoring traffic.

"It is safer here now. You hear no shooting at night," said one longtime resident of the city in eastern Lebanon, eight miles from the Syrian border.

People in Baalbek and a foreigner who visits regularly said the Syrians were in firm control but they would say little about how they took over, fearing possible reprisal. There have been reports for several months of Syrians clashing with Iranians or with members of the Shiite Moslem militia Hezbollah (Party of God). One report said the Iranians had been driven out.

But two vehicles full of Iranian soldiers were seen on a recent day's visit, and one residents said the Iranians, perhaps hundreds of them, ere still around. He added, however, "They are allowed to carry only their personal weapons. You don't see their big guns anymore."

As for the armed miltiamen of Hezbollah or the closely allied Islamic Amal, they are mainly seen guarding the entrances to their offices or the homes of their leaders.

Khomeini sent in the Revolutionary Guards during Israel's 1982 invasion of Lebanon. During previous visits, this reporter saw crowds of militiamen wandering the streets freely, dressed in a variety of uniforms and carrying Kalashnikov automatic rifles and various other assault guns.

The city, once a tourist spot because of its magnificent Roman ruins, developed the reputation as the planning center for bombings and other attacks in Beirut and Israeli-occupied southern Lebanon.

U.S. intelligence sources have said responsibility for the suicide truck bombing at U.S. and French headquarters in Beirut last Oct. 23 could rest with either Hezbollah or Islamic Amal, a breakaway group from the mainstream Shiite militia Amal, which is Arabic for hope. Leaders of Hezbollah and Islamic Amal have denied involvement in the bombings.

In an interview the Hezbollah spiritual leader, Sheik Sobhi Tufayli, said there had been "no such thing as a real problem" between his militia and the Syrians.

His comment differs with reports of clashes over the past several months, some set off as fundamentalist militiamen tried to impose Islamic law on Baalbek.

One Baalbek man said the commander of Syrian troops in the area, Brig. Hikmat Ibrahim, made clear his attitude toward Islamic fundamentalism during Ramadan, the Moslem period of fasting in June.

Afghan war crosses over into Pakistan

GAMBEEL, Pakistan (AP) — Jamal Hussain was tilling his land and schoolchildren were reciting verses from the Koran when the bombers struck, leaving fields of wheat and corn scarred with craters the size of a small house and killing a villager.

For the 200 families of Gambeel, a hamlet of mudbrick houses 12 miles from Afghanistan, the Afghan war had crossed the border this week.

Jamal said Soviet-made MiG-21s swooped on Gambeel, dropping 21 bombs in 15 minutes in the raid on Monday.

Six of the bombs fell within 35 feet of the village school, where 85 children were in class.

"We fell to the floor as soon as we heard the explosions," said one schoolboy. "Those nearest the door made a run for the fields. Our school has the only blue roof in the village. It stood out."

The school, with its shiny new corrugated iron roof, survived the raid intact. The local mosque was a mass of rubble and burned-out timber. Nearby, a farmhouse, where several families lived, will have to be rebuilt.

A woman was killed in the attack and three villagers were injured. The bombing destroyed two houses and killed 13 head of livestock.

The next day, Tuesday, the Pakistani village of Teri Mangal was bombed by Afghan warplanes, an official government announcement said on Wednesday.

Fourteen people were killed and five were injured in Teri Mangal, authorities said.

The Pakistani government says there have been 500 such attacks since 1980.

A Foreign Ministry spokesman said Wednesday that the bombings could adversely affect talks next week on Afghanistan between Pakistan and the Afghan regime. The United Nations is arranging the talks, to be held in Geneva, Switzerland.

The talks, concerning Afghan refugees in Pakistan, are part of a two-year effort to reach a political settlement of the crisis triggered by the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan in 1979 to shore up the regime in that central Asian land-locked country.

Jamal's account of the bombing was confirmed by Sange Marjan Khan, the Pakistani government's representative for the Kurram Tribal Agency of Northwest Frontier province. The agent is based in Parachinar, 35 miles northwest of Gambeel.

"These latest attacks are a signal from the Soviets warning us not to provide any more humanitarian assistance to the refugees," Marjan said. "By doing so, we risk more attacks."

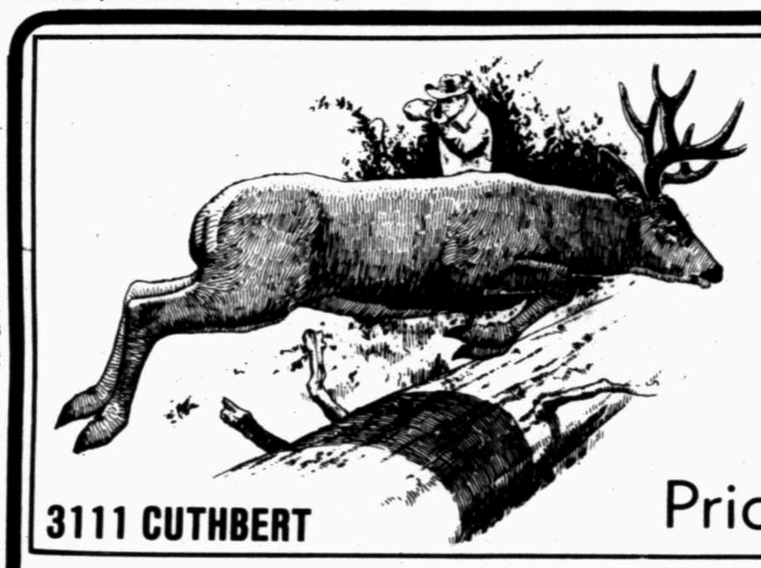

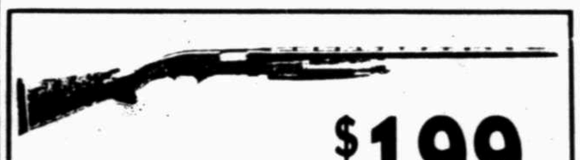

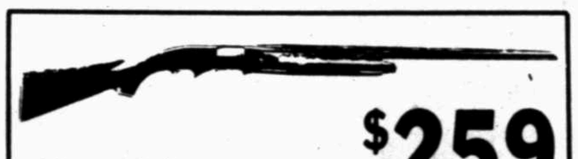

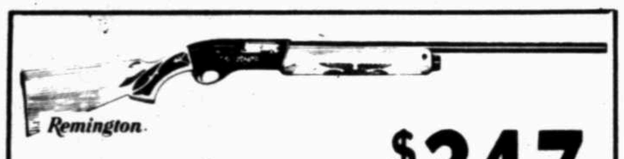

Pakistan has given shelter to an estimated 3 million Afghan refugees since the Afghan war began.

Jamal, describing the bombers, said: "They flew over in formation. There were 15 planes but only three attacked. The other 12 were there for cover."

Marjan said that judging by the size of the craters, each plane dropped 500-pound bombs.

"Come here for a couple of days and you will get used to waking up in the morning to the distant thump of artillery, aerial bombing and shelling," said Jamal. "But there is no reason for what has happened here."

Rose returns to Reds as player-manager

CINCINNATI (AP) — Visions of the Big Red Machine of the 1970s were dancing in the minds of the Cincinnati Reds owners when they decided to hire Pete Rose as a player-manager for the struggling ball club.

"He and Tony Perez remind the people of the times when the Reds were big winners," said Marge Schott, a minority shareholder, who believes the fans will turn out for the Cincinnati native despite the team's next-to-last position in the National League West.

"Pete is history. If he gets close to the record (Ty Cobb's all-time career hit record), the people will pack the stadium," Schott said. "The man on the street here loves him. They are the ones who buy the tickets. They are going to go bonkers over Pete coming back."

Reds spokesman Jim Ferguson said Wednesday in St. Louis that Rose had been acquired as a player from the Montreal Expos and would replace Manager Vern Rapp starting Friday night when the Reds host the Chicago Cubs. The Reds, who were off today following an 11-inning, 3-2 victory over St. Louis in Rapp's final game, have to move someone to make room for Rose on the roster.

Ferguson said Rose, who had not been a regular with the Expos, would be primarily a manager but would be available for some games and as a pinch hitter. Rose, who earlier Wednesday in San Francisco denied he was taking the job, could not be reached for comment early today. The Reds scheduled a news conference for 3 p.m.

The announcement was well received by veteran players. Team captain and shortstop Dave Concepcion, who played with Rose, said: "Pete will be a good manager and he will make a difference in the attitude here. He's a great guy to deal with and he was a great player. If he has to be hard with the players, he can be. He's got the ability and he knows the game."

Second baseman Ron Oester, another Cincinnati native who grew up watching Rose, added: "If anybody can motivate this team, Pete can. I can tell you this, he won't put up with anything less than an all-out performance."

Tony Perez, another member of the Reds powerhouse teams of the 1970s, returned to Cincinnati prior to the 1984 season but never expected to be playing for his longtime friend.

"He will help the attitude here," Perez said. "The attitude has not been bad but it hasn't been what it should be."

Rose left Cincinnati as a free agent in a wage dispute with former Reds President Dick Wagner. He went to Philadelphia, where the Phillies won National League pennants in 1980 and 1983.

The 43-year-old Rose had difficulty finding a club to play with this year before he was signed by Montreal. But he was benched when the Expos acquired first baseman Dan Driessen from Cincinnati. The Reds have not said who will be sent to Montreal to complete the deal.

The switch-hitting Rose, who holds the major-league record of 10 seasons with 200 or more hits, started the 1984 season with 3,990 hits, 201 shy of Cobb's mark of 4,191. Through Wednesday, Rose had appeared in 95 games this season, collecting 72 hits in 278 at-bats for a .259 average.

Rose broke in with the Reds in 1963 and spent 16 seasons here. He helped lead the Reds to four National League pennants (1970, 1972, 1975, 1976) and two World Series championships (1975, 1976).

Rose, named the NL Player of the Decade of the 1970s by The Sporting News, won the league's Rookie of the Year award in 1963, was named Most Valuable Player in 1973 and was the MVP in the 1975 World Series when he hit .370 against the Boston Red Sox.

The Reds, who have been at or near the bottom of the NL West in the last three seasons, replaced Russ Nixon with Rapp last winter. Rapp constantly manipulated the lineup, drawing fire from veterans like Concepcion.

"You've got to respect your manager," said one Reds veteran, who asked not to be identified. "You don't have to like him, but you sure have to respect him. I haven't talked to anybody here who even liked Vern."

Pitcher Bob Owchinko defended Rapp.

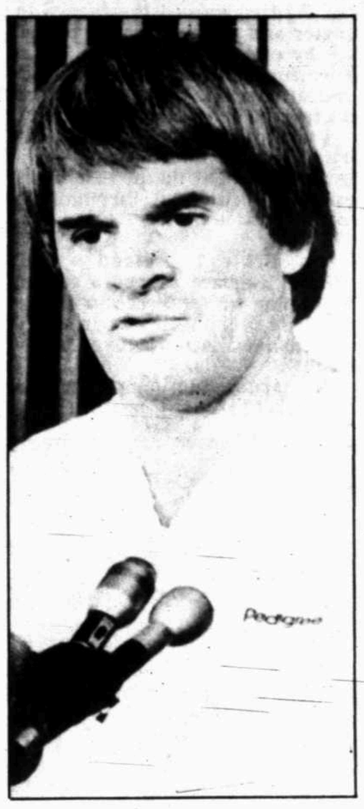

"Vern hasn't done anything to hurt this team or make it lose," Owchinko said. "I know he's not an easy guy to get along with or talk to and he'll be the first to tell you he's an old goat, but he hasn't hurt this team. In fact, I think he's done everything he possibly can to help us win."

"I did everything I could," Rapp said. "I have no bad feelings toward anyone," said Rapp.

"I've had my shots," added Rapp, who managed the St. Louis Cardinals in 1977. "I'm not a perfect person. I just did the best I could within myself."

Rapp, 56, said he was informed of the managerial change only moments before Wednesday night's game via telephone by club president Bob Howsam. The Reds have a 51-70 record and are 21 games behind the division-leading San Diego Padres.

"He (Howsam) just said that he was sorry that I had to find out the way that I did," said Rapp, whose firing had been rumored hours earlier.

Pete Rose

Concepcion, Perez back with 'Charlie Hustle'

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Dave Concepcion and Tony Perez, two teammates from the glory years, think Pete Rose will do well as player-manager of the Cincinnati Reds.

"It took me by surprise," said Perez after learning Wednesday that the 43-year-old Rose would be taking over the club. "I knew Pete was going to manage Cincinnati when he retired, but I didn't expect it this way."

Concepcion, a five-time Gold Glove winner while playing shortstop for the Reds, mentioned Rose's work ethic as an important component for the club.

"He's a good baseball man, he likes to work hard. He's going to make a lot of people work hard," said the 36-year-old infielder. "It's going to take a lot of patience. He'll have to let the young guys play."

Nick Esasky, one of the promising young players Rose will attempt to bring along, identified part of the new manager's task in succeeding Vern Rapp at the helm as recognizing that "you have 25 players and 25 different personalities" with which to deal.

"You aren't going to please everybody all the time. We have a lot of things that have to be ironed out," said Esasky. "I guess they didn't have enough confidence in him (Rapp). I got along with him all right. I might not have agreed with all the things he did, but you never do."

Brad Gulden, who delivered the winning hit in Rapp's lame-duck game as Reds manager, also spoke well of the departing pilot.

"He treated Brad Gulden very well. He stuck with me and gave me the opportunity to play," said the 28-year-old catcher. "It's just one of those things. The ballclub wasn't winning, and the manager had to go."

"They'll respect him as a player or as chief. He knows the game," said the 42-year-old Perez. "If they were going to make a change, I don't think it could have been better than Pete. I'll just help any way that I can."

Accident mars celebration

Over 100 hurt at ticker-tape parade

NEW YORK (AP) — America's Olympic medal winners got an "incredible Big Apple welcome" Wednesday, but the exuberance of their Wall Street ticker-tape parade was dampened when a scaffold rail collapsed, injuring about 101 spectators, five seriously.

Some of the injured "showed the Olympic spirit," said Mayor Edward Koch. "They were worried (the accident) might interfere with the parade."

The 221 athletes followed a line of yellow balloons and paper flags leading through the Financial District's "Canyon of Heroes" toward City Hall.

Cheering crowds 10 to 20 deep lined Broadway during the hot, humid noon hour, and office workers threw ticker tape, computer cards and hundreds of thousands of make-believe gold medallions from their windows.

Koch, who said Americans had "over 200 new stars in our flag," estimated that "more than 2 million people lined the sidewalks and looked out the buildings" at the Olympians.

Police were skeptical of the mayor's crowd estimate, but said they had no immediate figures of their own. The city's population is just over 7 million.

"Thank you for this incredible — I mean incredible! — Big Apple welcome," Mary Lou Retton, gold medal gymnast, said at a City Hall ceremony following the parade.

Police and witnesses said a wooden scaffold fronting around a building at 195 Broadway gave way, spilling some of about 200 people who were standing on the structure onto the street. Several were carried on stretchers to ambulances, which struggled to pass through the dense crowds.

"Kids were climbing up (on the scaffolding) and I heard a loud cracking, and they fell down on top of people," said Jeanne Daoust of Staten Island, who was standing beneath the structure.

"The cops were just looking and they didn't stop the crowd from going up," she complained.

Alice McGillion, police spokeswoman, said two police officers had seen about four people on the scaffold before the accident and asked the building engineer if they had permission to be there. The engineer said they were employees of the building, and the officers left, she said.

Shortly thereafter, 15 or 20 people climbed on the scaffold, according to Ms. McGillion. She said they leaned against the scaffold barrier fence to peer over at the parade.

"They were pushing against the boards to get a look at the parade and it just came down," she said.

"I thought it was the end of the world. I didn't know what happened. It was very fast," said Frank Thomas, 23, of Brooklyn, who suffered a head cut when the scaffold rail fell on him.

His face was bloodied and he held an ice pack on his head. "The doctors said I have to go to the hospital, but I don't want to miss this," he said of the parade.

The city's Emergency Medical Service said 58 of the 65 people injured were taken to hospitals for treatment. The rest were treated at the scene.

City officials halted the parade, which had not reached the site of the accident when the railing gave way. After a half-hour delay, the parade resumed.

Many in the parade were not immediately aware of the accident. "We're all burning nervous energy, and you can burn that a long time," said a smiling Bart Conner, a gold medal gymnast.

"The parade is for everybody," said Mark Breland, a boxing gold medalist. "It's like a second Olympics."

Al Parisi, a street-sweeper standing with a broom along the parade route, said the ticker tape parade was "my first. Never seen anything like it before. I gotta sweep up after it's over. But I don't mind it — not for them."

Koch, walking in front with Retton, boasted, "I'm walking with a double-10er," a reference to the gymnast's excellent scores in competition.

Koch had promised the Olympians that the ticker tape parade would be the city's "biggest and best." Astronaut John Glenn was honored with a ticker tape parade up Broadway in 1962; the most recent such parade was in 1981, when the American hostages returned from Iran.

The parade route ran from Battery Park in lower Manhattan up Broadway to City Hall, about 10 blocks uptown. Unlike most of their heroic predecessors, the 1984 Olympians — who spent the last two weeks running, cycling, swimming, jumping and diving — walked instead of riding.

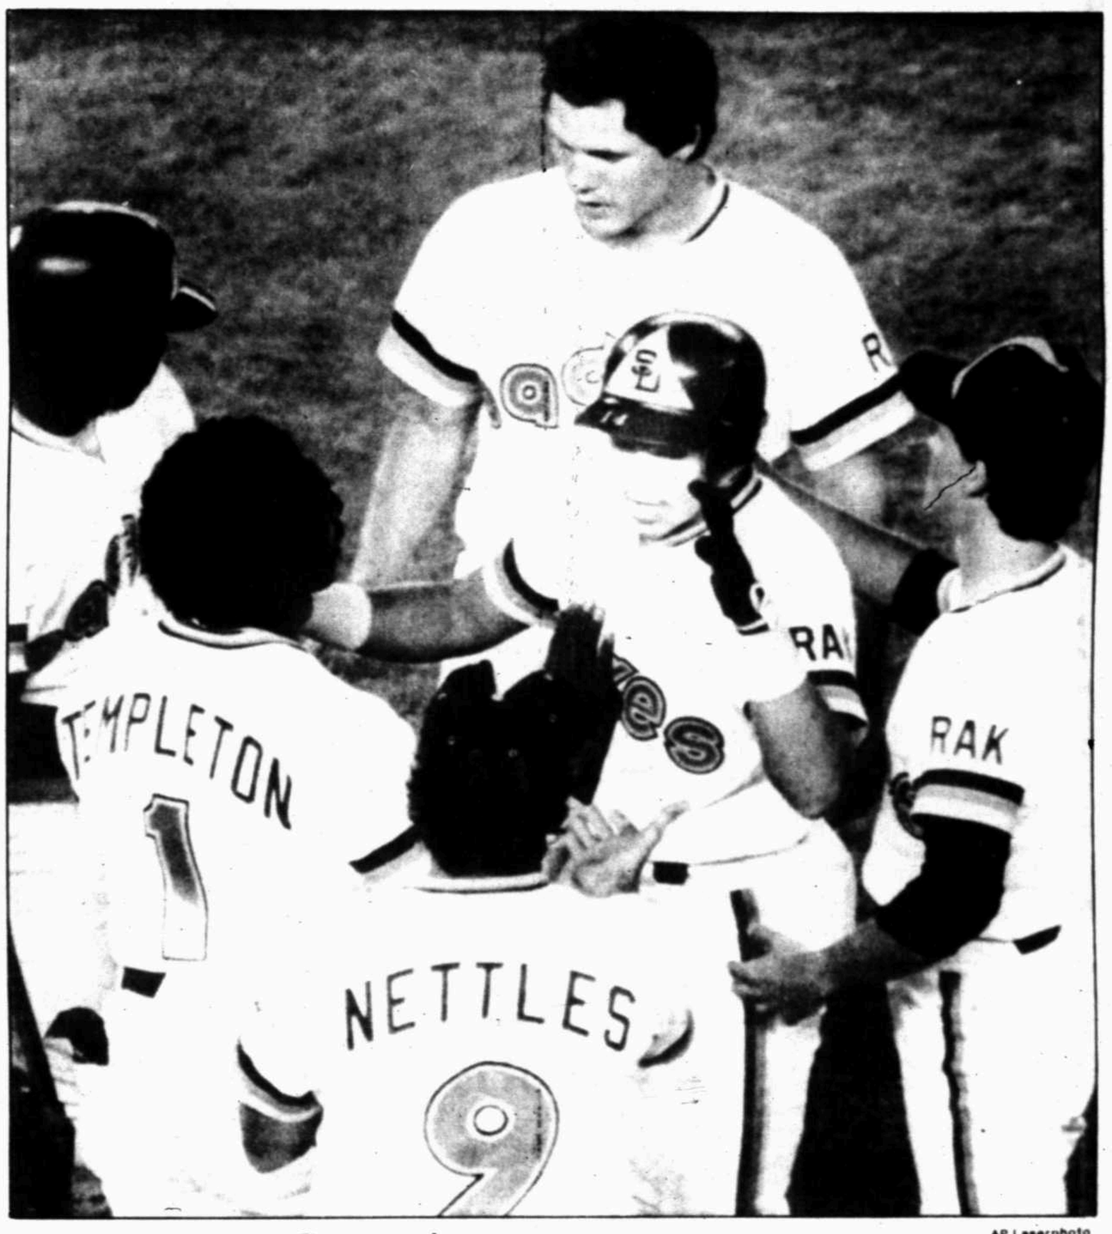

Also marching were marathon runner Joan Benoit, wrestler Jeff Blatnick, swimmers Tracy Caulkins and Rick Carey, gymnast Julianne McNamara, boxers Tyrell Biggs, Henry Tillman and Breland and most of the men's gymnastic team.

The city produced and distributed more than 600,000 hand-cut and hand-stamped paper gold medals depicting a golden apple and bearing the inscription "Good as Gold"; 20,000 paper flags with the gold apple medallion and the inscription "We are stardust, we are golden ..."; and 10,000 yellow balloons on three-foot long yellow ribbons.

Following speeches at City Hall, the Olympians were off to Orlando, Fla., and a visit to Walt Disney World. On Thursday they were scheduled to fly to Dallas for a pro football game and a barbecue.

The parade was part of a five-city tour that kicked off Monday in Los Angeles at a luncheon with President Reagan. The athletes spent Tuesday in Washington, where they rode up Pennsylvania Avenue to the cheers of 40,000 people. Then they were honored by Congress for rekindling "that spirit that makes people proud of America."

The tour's sponsor, the Southland Corp., said it was the first time Olympic medalists were accorded such salutes outside their own home communities.

Lee, MHS ticket sales booming

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

Midlanders still have until Aug. 31 to purchace season tickets for Midland High and Midland Lee football games this fall, but if the early rush is any indication of things to come, Tall City football fans will see high school football in record numbers in 1984.

Lee fans have already purchased season tickets at a record level, according to Gil Bartosh, Midland athletic director. And Midland High's season ticket number has already eclipsed that of last year.

At mid-week, Lee fans had gobbled up 1,771 season tickets, breaking the old record of 1,582 set in 1980. That seems impressive considering the fact that season tickets will be sold through Aug. 31 at the Memorial Stadium ticket office.

Midland High had reached the 800 mark in season ticket sales at midweek, surpassing the 791 sold in 1983. MHS sold a record 1,027 season tickets in 1981 and still have a way to go to reach that record level.

However, Janelle Dozier, athletic department secretary, says, "Midland High is picking up now. I don't think they (Midland High fans) felt the rush that some of the Lee people did because there is a better selection."

Lee fans purchased 1,391 season tickets in 1983 prior to the 13-3 season and a berth in the state finals. This year's response can be directly pointed to that effort on the field by the Rebels.

"We took care of our season ticket holders last year in the playoffs and a lot of people said they would buy season tickets this year. There were a lot of people who didn't like standing in line at 4 a.m. to get playoff tickets. That very fact has helped us this year. You can see what has happened," said Bartosh.

Last year's season ticket holders were given first shot at playoff tickets last fall. Games at Memorial Stadium and Ratliff Stadium in Odessa produced huge ticket lines by fans who wanted to see those playoff games. There was limited seating in those two stadiums.

Lee playoff games in Lubbock's Jones Stadium (twice), Fort Worth's Amon Carter Stadium and Irving's Texas Stadium proved to be no problem for playoff bound spectators because there was virtually no limit on tickets due the the size of those stadiums.

It's ironic that Lee's season ticket total of 1,391 in 1983 was down somewhat. The banner year for both schools came in 1981 when Lee sold 1,495 season tickets and Midland High 1,027.

Both schools probably would have had a banner year in 1983 if the 1982 season had turned out better at the end. That was the year both Midland High and Lee were involved in a four-way tie for second place, but both missed the playoffs by a coin flip. San Angelo won that flip to enter the playoffs. That series of coin flips could have set back the season ticket rush by one year.

Last year's season ticket option holders have already had their opportunity to renew those tickets. Season tickets have been on sale to the general public since Monday and they will be sold until 5 p.m., Aug. 31. After that, persons wanting to see MHS or Lee football will have to purchase tickets on a weekly basis, beginning on Wednesday prior to Friday's weekly game at Memorial Stadium.

Season tickets for all five Midland High home games are $20 per person, including the final matchup against Lee since the Bulldogs will be the home team in 1984.

Five home games for Lee are also $20 per person, not including the MHS game. Lee fans, however, may purchase tickets to the MHS game when they make season ticket purchases for $5 extra per person.

Tickets for both MHS and Lee, which would include the final MHS-Lee game, would be $40.

Fans are getting a break in ticket value as well. Season tickets are going at the rate of $4 per game while per-game buyers will pay $5 per game during the season.

Fernandez bedazzles former Dodger teammates

Associated Press

Sid Fernandez thinks the Los Angeles Dodgers made a mistake when they traded him to the New York Mets, and the young southpaw is not only doing his best to prove it — he's succeeding at it.

"He hasn't been bad in any of his seven starts this year," said New York Mets Manager Davey Johnson after watching Fernandez key a 3-2 victory over the Los Angeles Dodgers Wednesday night.

Fernandez, in his first appearance against his former team since a trade last winter, scattered five hits over 7 2-3 innings and won his fourth game in five decisions with relief help from Wes Gardner and Jesse Orosco.

"It definitely was not a grudge match," said Fernandez,. "but it does feel good to show them that they might have made a mistake. The Dodgers got what they wanted (reliever Carlos Diaz and utilityman Bob Bailor) and the Mets got what they wanted. I do they think they gave up on me a little."

George Foster slugged his 18th home run, one of only four hits off loser Fernando Valenzuela, 9-14. Valenzuela has lost three straight decisions, six of his last seven and eight of his last 11. The Los Angeles left-hander struck out nine but walked five. He was also victimized by two errors in the seventh inning by third baseman German Rivera that led to the winning run.

With one out in the seventh, Rivera booted Mookie Wilson's grounder. Wilson stole second, his 36th theft of the season, and after Kelvin Chapman walked and Keith Hernandez flied out, Foster grounded sharply to Rivera who threw wildly to first, enabling Wilson to score the winning run.

The victory moved the Mets within 2½ games of front-running Chicago in the NL East.

Expos 8, Giants 3

Left-hander Dan Schatzeder belted a game-winning, two-run single, added a double and a triple and scattered nine hits through eight innings, leading Montreal over San Francisco.

Schatzeder, 6-3, fell behind on an unearned run in the fourth inning, but used his bat to give the Expos a lead in the fifth off loser Mark Calvert, 2-3. After Dan Driessen and Tim Wallach opened the fifth with singles and advanced on a passed ball by catcher Bob Brenly, Schatzeder singled for a 2-1 Montreal lead.

Schatzeder also tripled and scored in a two-run seventh-inning rally.

"I take pride in my hitting," said Schatzeder. "I like to bat. I got a decent pitch to hit (in the fifth) and I was able to drive it through the hole."

Braves 7, Pirates 3

Glenn Hubbard capped a six-run first inning with a three-run double and Dale Murphy drove in three runs to lead Atlanta over Pittsburgh.

The early explosion provided a comfortable cushion for right-hander Steve Bedrosian, 9-6, who worked five innings for his third victory in the four games he has started. He struck out four and walked four.

Gene Garber hurled the final four innings for the Braves, earning his fifth save.

Pittsburgh starter Rick Rhoden, 10-9, was the victim of the Braves' early assault. But after yielding six runs before getting anyone out, Rhoden retired the next 12 batters, striking out six. He left the game after giving up another run in the fifth.

Reds 3, Cardinals 2

Brad Gulden's RBI single with two out in the 11th inning lifted Cincinnati over St. Louis in a game that marked the end of Vern Rapp's tenure as manager. Rapp was fired and will be replaced by Pete Rose, who was acquired by the Reds from the Montreal Expos to serve as player-manager.

Gulden's single came off Cardinal relief ace Bruce Sutter, 4-4. Sutter, who entered at the start of the 10th as St. Louis' third pitcher, struck out Dave Parker and Nick Esasky to start the 11th. But Cesar Cedeno followed with a single and stole his second base of the night before Gulden singled home the winning run for the Reds, making a winner of Tom Hume, 4-12.

Reds starter Jay Tibbs pitched brilliantly until running into trouble in the eighth when he gave up a run on Steve Braun's RBI pinch single. The Cardinals tied the score 2-2 in the ninth when Lonnie Smith drew a bases-loaded walk off reliever John Franco.

Astros 6, Cubs 2

Mark Bailey drove in three runs and Bob Knepper and two relievers combined on a six-hitter as the Astros defeated Chicago to extend their winning streak to six games.

Bailey, who finished with three hits in three at-bats, singled home a run in the fourth, then knocked in a pair of runs in the eighth with a bases-loaded double against losing pitcher Dennis Eckersley, 6-7.

Knepper, 12-8, struck out four and walked two in seven innings to improve his career record against the Cubs to 6-7 and record his third consecutive victory. Bill Dawley and Frank DiPino finished up for the Cubs, with the latter recording his 11th save.

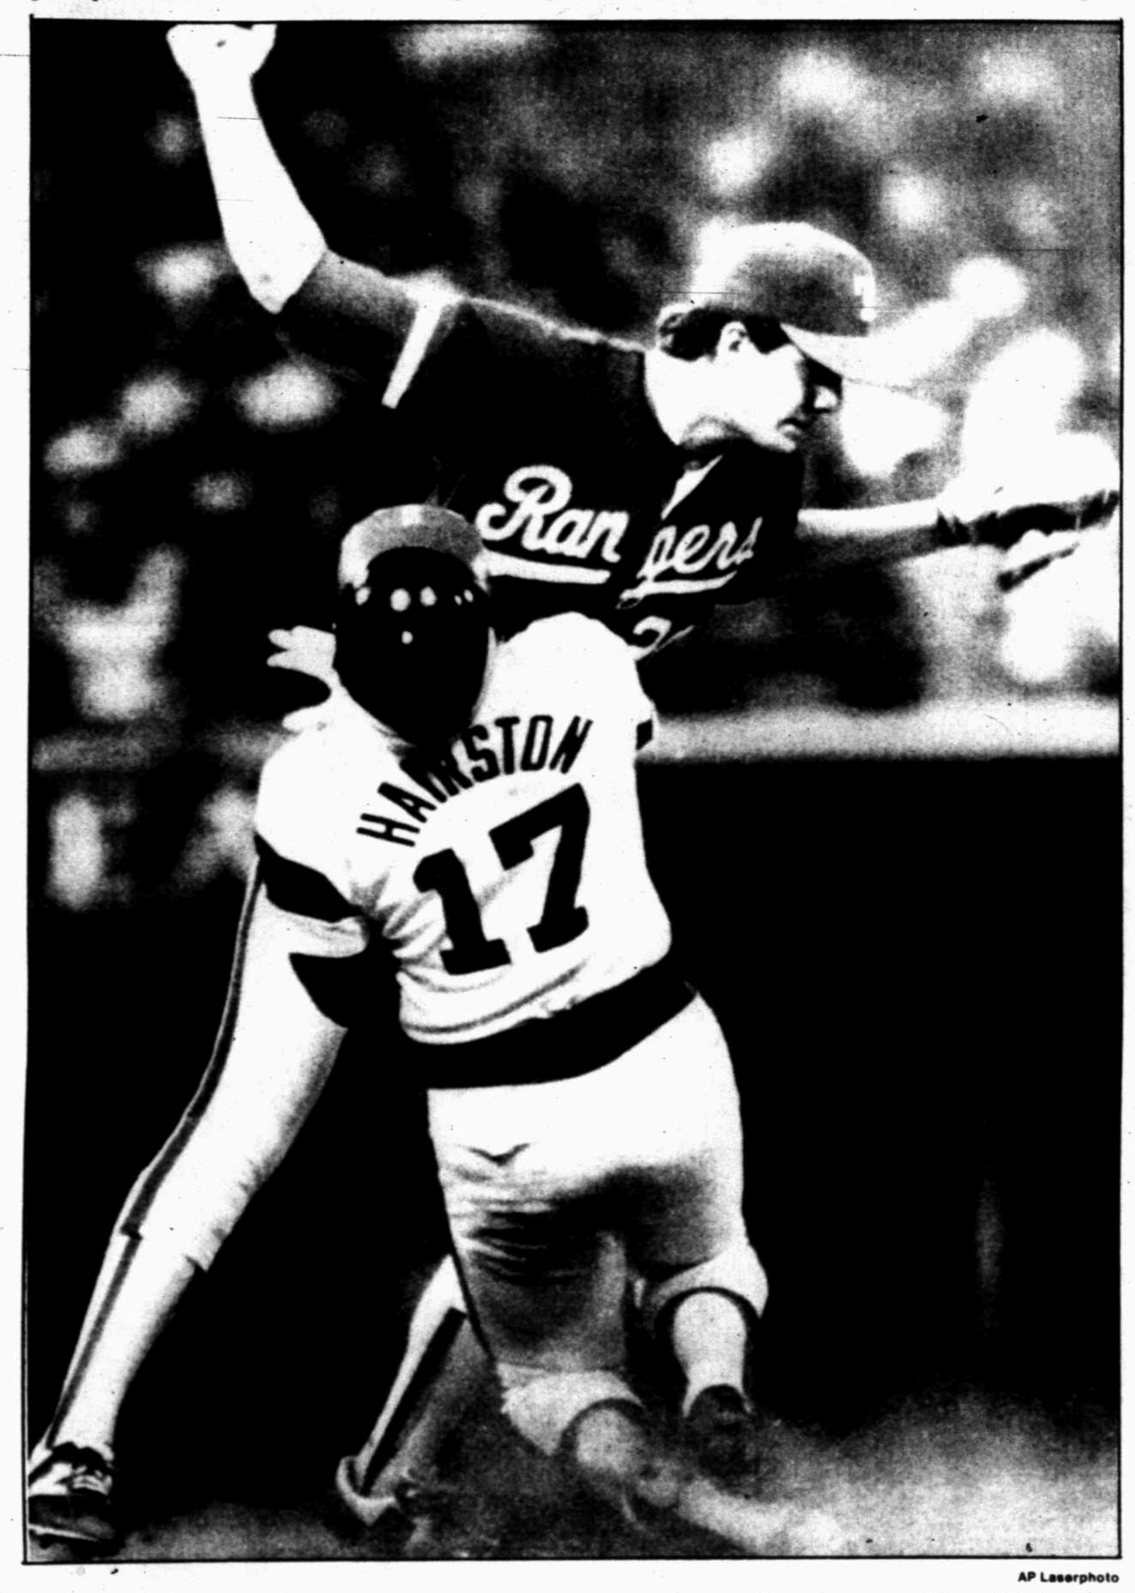

Padres 4, Phillies 3

Carmelo Martinez hit a bases-loaded single with one out in the ninth inning to boost San Diego over Philadelphia.

Tony Gwynn led off the Padre ninth with a triple off Al Holland, 5-7, the fourth Philadelphia pitcher. After walking Steve Garvey and Kevin McReynolds intentionally, Holland struck out Terry Kennedy, but Martinez slapped a single to left to win the game.

Reliever Rich Gossage, 7-4, who gave up the tying runs in the ninth on a two-run single by Greg Gross, was the winner.

Tribe smokes Jays twice

Associated Press

What had seemed so easy just the night before suddenly became difficult, and left the Blue Jays with a half-game profit to show for all their effort.

The Jays swept a double-header from the Indians on Tuesday, but lost a pair Wednesday night in Cleveland — one an embarrasing 16-1 defeat and another an agonizing 4-3, 13-inning affair.

Like a spendthrift on payday, the Blue Jays lost 1½ of the two games they had gained on Detroit, which dropped a twin bill one Tuesday. The Tigers beat California 8-3 Wednesday night.

Cleveland's 19-hit barrage was overpowering in the first game. George Vukovich drove in four runs and Andre Thornton slapped three run-scoring singles to back the eight-hit pitching of Don Schulze.

After taking a 3-2 lead in the top of the 10th, losing it in the bottom of the inning and getting the first two outs in the 13th, the Blue Jays lost the nightcap when George Bell dropped — or did he? — Joe Carter's sinking liner.

"I saw him catch it," Carter said. He had stopped going down the first base line. "Then (Coach) Ed Napoleon was telling me to touch first base. I didn't see the ball come out of his glove."

"Bell came up with the catch," Toronto Manager Bobby Cox said. "He raised his arm and showed the ball. Then the ball popped out when he hit his elbow on the ground. To me, it's a catch."

"I just want to go to bed," Bell said.

The ball at first stuck in the end of Bell's glove. But when Bell rolled to show the ball to the umpires, it popped out, allowing Mike Fischlin to score the winning run.

"When I first hit it, I thought it was in the gap for sure," Carter said. "Then I saw him (Bell) coming for it. He made a gallant try for it."

Cleveland's Mike Jeffcoat, 4-1, gave up two hits in three innings for the victory. Jimmy Key, 3-5, took the loss.

In the opener, Schulze, 2-4, a rookie obtained from the Chicago Cubs in June, pitched his first major-league complete game.

Cleveland took a 1-0 lead in the first against Luis Leal, 12-3, on Thornton's first RBI single.

After Brett Butler struck out to start the Indians' third, the next six Cleveland hitters scored, one each on singles by Thornton and Jerry Willard, two on a single by Vukovich and two on Brook Jacoby's double.

Cleveland chased Leal with three runs in the sixth on Thornton's third RBI single and Vukovich's second bases-loaded single of the game. Tony Bernazard slugged a solo homer, his second, to highlight the Indians' three-run seventh, and Jerry Willard added his eighth home run in the eighth as Cleveland scored three times off Rick Leach, who moved in from right field to pitch the last inning.

Tigers 8, Angels 3

The Tigers rebounded from their double-header loss Tuesday night as Dan Petry improved his record to 15-5, tying him with teammate Jack Morris as the winningest pitcher in the AL.

"We dropped back two games and I wanted to put an end to that," Petry said. "That California lineup tends to put the fear in you."

It was the first time since Aug. 2 that a Tiger pitcher held the opposition to fewer than four runs.

Tom Brookens' three singles drove in two runs and Dave Bergman's two triples drove in three.

Doug DeCinces hit his 15th home run for the Angels, his second in as many nights. Fred Lynn also hit his 15th for California.

Rangers 6, White Sox 5

Larry Parrish led off the 10th inning with his 20th home run off Richard Dotson, 12-10, who lost his sixth of seven decisions since the All-Star break.

Dotson said the Rangers didn't hit him that well. "But of course (today) in the paper they'll all look like line drives," he added. "But I'll know better."

Charlie Hough, 13-10, threw 145 pitches and gave up homers to Harold Baines, Carlton Fisk and Greg Walker, but pitched into the tenth for the victory. Dave Schimdt got the last three outs for his eighth save.

There were plenty of fireworks in the 10-inning, 11-run game — too many, in fact. Six people were slightly injured when fireworks went off in the right field stands after Walker's homer.

A's 6, Orioles 1

Carney Lansford had a home run and two singles while extending his hitting streak to 18 games. Mike Heath drove in two runs with a bases-loaded double in the seventh inning.

Lansford, batting .370 in his streak, drilled his ninth homer off Dennis Martinez, 4-7. The surging A's have won 10 of 13 while the sagging O's have lost 11 of 16.

Yankees 3, Mariners 2

Rookie Joe Cowley, celebrating his 26th birthday, won for the fourth time in five decisions while making his fifth major-league start.

Jay Howell pitched 2 2-3 hitless relief innings, and Dave Righetti got the final two outs for his 21st save and ninth straight in a save situation.

Dave Winfield singled in the go-ahead run in the fourth inning. Jim Beattie, 9-13, was tagged with his fifth straight loss.

Royals 13, Red Sox 8

The Royals rallied for seven runs in the sixth inning with the help of three Boston errors.

Bob Stanley, 7-8, started the sixth after Bob Ojeda left the game with a 6-2 lead suffering from a sore left elbow.

Reliever Joe Beckwith, 6-3, picked up the win. Dan Quisenberry pitched the final three innings for his 31st save. Don Slaught slugged his second home run for the home team while Tony Armas hit his league-leading 33rd for the losers.

Brewers 8, Twins 4

Rick Manning hit a three-run homer and scored three times as Milwaukee snapped Minnesota's three-game winning streak. Five other Brewers added one RBI each.

Mike Caldwell, 6-10, won his second straight after losing nine in a row.

Chestnut leads Cubs over El Paso

From Staff Reports

EL PASO— The Midland Cubs exploded for 15 hits and pounded the El Paso Diablos 8-1 here.

Catcher Don Hyman paced Midland with three hits, and pitcher Troy Chestnut had another solid performance in a route-going effort. Mike Brumley homered for the Cubs' only extra base hit of the onslaught.

Midland scored three times in the first inning, then added another run in the second to stake a 4-0 lead that was never challenged.

Every Cub had at least one hit.

Midland (20-30) further earned the victory by getting no free baserunners. the Cubs went through four Diablo pitchers, but none surrendered a walk.

In other games Wednesday night, Beaumont clipped San Antonio 4-3 in 11 innings, Midland trounced El Paso 8-1 and Jackson blanked Arkansas 6-0.

Oscar Mejia had four hits — including a pair of doubles — and drove in two runs to lead Tulsa to a 10-5 win over Shreveport in Texas League action.

Mejia's performance highlighted a 16-hit attack by the Drillers, which included seven base hits and Greg Tabor's eighth-inning homer, his sixth of the year.

Kelvin Torve hit a two-run homer for Shreveport in the fifth inning, while Bryan Snyder added a solo shot for the Captains in the sixth.

Tulsa's Jose Guzman, 6-7, was the winning pitcher. Kernan Ronan took the loss for Shreveport.

ROSE

"It took me by surprise," said Perez after leEZBI½⅞G will attempt to bring along, identified part of the new manager's task in succeeding Vern Rapp at the helm as recognizing that "you have 25 players and 25 different personalities" with which to deal.

"You aren't going to please everybody all the time. We have a lot of things that have to be ironed out," said Esasky. "I guess they didn't have enough confidence in him (Rapp). I got along with him all right. I might not have agreed with all the things he did, but you never do."

Brad Gulden, who delivered the winning hit in Rapp's lame-duck game as Reds manager, also spoke well of the departing pilot.

"He treated Brad Gulden very well. He stuck with me and gave me the opportunity to play," said the 28-year-old catcher. "It's just one of those things. The ballclub wasn't winning, and the manager had to go."

Outfielder Gary Redus said he expected no immediate impact to evolve from the change.

"You've just to keep concentrating on what you're doing and play the best you can," said Redus. "I've been through this before. There's nothing you can do."

As Cincinnati's new manager, Rose will be reunited with Concepcion and Perez — his teammates on four World Series teams during the 1970s.

"I think he'll be a good manager. Pete's the kind of guy that wouldn't let his teammates play bad. They'll respect him as a player or as chief. He knows the game," said the 42-year-old Perez. "If they were going to make a change, I don't think it could have been better than Pete. I'll just help any way that I can."

There was no immediate word on a possible shakeup on the Reds' staff of coaches, most of whom were brought in by Rapp.

"I wouldn't expect that there would be, at least until the end of the year," said Joe Sparks, who is in his first Cincinnati year. "One thing about it, it's been an exciting day today for everyone on this club."

Pryor heads for Tech with diploma in hand

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Judson high school running back Chris Pryor, who propelled his team to a 5A state championship last year, has finished his high school diploma requirements and is bound for Texas Tech.

Pryor graduated from high school last week after completing the lone English course required for a diploma.

He signed with Tech in February, but had to give up his athletic scholarship and the chance to play ball this fall when he failed to graduate.

He had been considering going to Texas A&I, where he would have been eligible to play football this year. But Tuesday, he told the San Antonio Light, "I'm 100 percent sure I'm going to Tech. Nothing is going to change my mind."

Pryor said he planned to leave for Lubbock Wednesday. Sports Information Director Joe Hornaday said officials were expecting him Wednesday, but he could not confirm Pryor had arrived.

Pryor's parents Betty and Patrick Pryor could not be reached to confirm his departure.

Pryor broke Craig James' Class 5A rushing record of 2,804 yards last year to propel Judson to the state championship.

Baseball owners discuss league expansion

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Major league baseball owners have put off a discussion on expanding their two 16-team leagues, but the subject won't go away.

"Tabling is too strong a word for it," said Sandy Hadden, secretary-treasurer and general counsel for Major League Baseball, after the owners adjourned a brief summer meeting Wednesday. "We will continue to study it.

"The clubs felt our plate was very full of issues. We had too many issues too substantive in nature."

One key issue facing the leagues is a new contract agreement with the players' union. The current one expires Dec. 31.

"There was a strong feeling among many of the members that before a final decision is made on expansion, we should have collective bargaining behind us," Hadden said.

Hadden said no cities were officially discussed as candidates for new teams during the league's four-hour meeting behind closed doors Wednesday. But he said a group of Tampa, Fla., businessmen did make an impression because of their cooperation in the sale of the Minnesota Twins to Minneapolis banking executive Carl Pohlad.

Pohlad, 68, president of F&M Marquette Bank of Minneapolis, purchased Calvin Griffith's 52 percent share of the Twins for an estimated $32 million and bought another 42 percent of the club's stock from H. Gabriel Murphy through the Tampa Bay Baseball Group.

Knowing they did not have a majority interest, the group of Tampa businessmen agreed in April to sell Pohlad the shares they had purchased from Murphy for a reported $11.5 million.

Williams blasts Torre

SAN DIEGO (AP) — San Diego Padres Manager Dick Williams says he will appeal any suspension by the National League office for his part in Sunday's beanball war and subsequent brawl with the Braves in Atlanta.

Speaking to reporters Tuesday night after San Diego's 3-2 win over Philadelphia, the coach also had strong words for Braves Manager Joe Torre, who said after the brawl that Williams is "an idiot ... spell idiot with a capital I, and Williams with a small w."

"I see that he's able to spell now," Williams said. "The only thing I'll say is that he started it, and he got the last shot in. As far as anything else, I'm available any time, any place. I won't be intimidated."

Williams would not deny reports that he instructed pitchers Ed Whitson, Greg Booker and Craig Lefferts to throw at Pascual Perez after the Braves right-hander hit Alan Wiggins with the first pitch of the game.

The beanballs sparked bench-clearing brawls in the eighth and ninth innings in which 16 players, coaches and managers were ejected. Fines and possible suspensions have not yet been announced.

"We had to show them that they couldn't intimidate us," Williams said. "They started the whole thing. If I'm suspended, Torre should be, too. I'll definitely appeal."

Sox fans get burned

CHICAGO (AP) — Six people suffered slight burns at Comiskey Park when a piece of fireworks flared in the lower right-field grandstand during the Chicago White Sox-Texas baseball game.

The accident occurred in the bottom of the sixth inning Wednesday night, after Greg Walker hit a home run.

The scoreboard customarily shoots sparkling fireworks into the air after Chicago homers, with the fireworks exploding before they hit the ground.

While Walker was rounding the bases, the fireworks flared in the aisle of the grandstand, filling the area with smoke. There was no apparent explosion.

The six people were initially treated in the stadium's first-aid room, but four people were later taken to nearby Michael Reese Hospital.

Golfer becomes one-in-hole

HOUSTON (AP) — If there is life after death, Thomas John Caradonio will be ready to play golf.

The 70-year-old Houston golf enthusiast was buried Tuesday, wearing full golfing regalia and holding a golf putter in his right hand.

"It would have been his request," said Bruce Earthman, another avid golfer and a long-time family friend.

"He knew none of us would remember him in a regular business suit," Earthman said. "We would remember him in casual clothes, like he wore when he was playing golf."

Earthman said Caradonio's children made the decision to bury their father in the golf outfit.

Caradonio, a real estate consultant, died Saturday morning in mid-game, on the eighth green at Willowwisp Country Club in southwest Houston.

Soviet counter-Olympics begin

MOSCOW (AP) — Druzhba-84, the Communist bloc's answer to the Los Angeles Olympics, opened today at several Eastern European sites under a shroud of uncertainty.

About 40 nations — some 100 fewer than came to Los Angeles — were slated to take part in Druzhba-84 opening ceremonies Saturday at Lenin Stadium in Moscow, according to the Soviet news agency Tass. Soviet officials said some 8,000 athletes, about 1,000 more than in Los Angeles, would take part in the ceremonies, but Tass didn't specify how many of those athletes would be representatives of non-Soviet countries.

While the general design of the games is known, exact scheduling and official lists of participants remains a mystery. But organizers insisted that full competitions would be held.

While taking pains not to violate the charter of the International Olympic Committee by calling this an "alternate Olympics," the Soviet bloc nonetheless was hoping for a bevy of world records in an effort to undermine the results of the Los Angeles Games. The Soviet Union, citing concern for the security of its athletes, stayed away from the Olympics and induced 13 of its allies to follow suit.

The Tass report said that athletes from nine Western countries would take part in the men's track and field competition in Moscow. There was no mention, however, of American participation by either Tass or the U.S. Embassy in Moscow.

However, American sprinter Alice Brown was said to be among 230 women from 19 nations enetered in women's track and field competition today in Prague, Czechoslovakia. Brown's name was not on a list of competitors and she was not registered at the athletes' hotel, but an organizer insisted she would participate.

The games, to be held on overlapping dates through this weekend, call for men's track and field in Moscow, yachting off the coast of the Soviet state of Estonia, women's track and men's and women's gymnastics in Prague, judo and modern pentathlon in Poland, diving in Hungary, weightlifting in Bulgaria and boxing in Cuba.

The Soviet Sports Committee said Wednesday it did not know whether Romania, the only Warsaw Pact country to defy the Soviet boycott, would attend. But Romanian athletes and coaches, who arrived home on Wednesday following a 53-medal harvest at Los Angeles, gave no indication they would join the Soviet games.

Lewis has gold but not silver

HOUSTON (AP) — While sprinter Carl Lewis was winning four gold medals at the Olympics in Los Angeles, someone broke into his west Houston home and made off with some silver pieces and his stereo equipment, authorities said Wednesday.

"We have no suspects at this time," Harris County Sheriff's Deputy Milton Lehmann said. "The case has been referred to the detective bureau for further investigation."

Lehmann said there was no immediate indication how much the missing items were worth.

Lewis, who is employed by Houston television station KTRK, telephoned the station Tuesday night after returning home from Los Angeles and reported the theft.

KTRK sportscaster Bob Allen said Lewis told him that in addition to the missing items, a crystal collection had been smashed to the floor.

Allen said Lewis told him he had planned to leave Thursday for Europe, but scrapped those plans because of the burglary. Lewis later told the station that he would depart Saturday.

Lewis matched the 1936 Olympics performance of legendary Jesse Owens by winning Olympic gold medals in the long jump, 100 meter and 200 meter dashes and anchoring a world record-setting 400-meter relay.

USA swimmers step up medals

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (AP) — Amy White, Jenna Johnson and Mark Stockwell performed a little alchemy at the United States Swimming Long Course National Championships, turning Olympic silver medals into gold.

White, Johnson and Stockwell all captured individual silver medals two weeks ago at the Olympic Games in Los Angeles. Wednesday night at the International Swimming Hall of Fame pool, they moved up to the gold-medal level.

White, 15, of Mission Viejo, Calif., won the women's 200-meter backstroke in 2:14.95 during the Phillips 66-sponsored event; Johnson, 17, of Santa Rosa, Calif., claimed the women's 100 freestyle in 56.36; and Stockwell, who swam for the Australian Olympic team in Los Angeles, took the men's 100 freestyle in 50.38.

White and Stockwell swam to second place finishes in the same events at Los Angeles, while Johnson won her Olympic silver medal in the 100 butterfly. Johnson recognized the golden color, though, because she was a member of the winning 400 freestyle relay team in L.A.

Erika Hansen, at 14 the youngest swimmer in the women's 200 butterfly, stole some of the attention from the Olympians by winning her event.

Hansen of King of Prussia, Pa., placed third in the event at the Olympic trials. On Wednesday, she swam a 2:12.08, just a tad slower than the bronze medal time of 2:11.90 in the Olympics.

The other winners Wednesday were: Brett Beedle of Los Altos, Calif., in the men's 200 breastroke in 2:18.73; Dan Veatch of Rockville, Md., in the men's 200 backstroke in 2:03.43; Christopher Rives of Houston in the men's 200 butterfly in 2:01.05, and Polly Winde of Fort Washington, Pa., in the women's 200 breastroke in 2:35.51.

Raiders give themselves Super-tough act to follow

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Los Angeles Raider Coach Tom Flores knows his team has a big challenge in trying to measure up to last season's National League Football championship season.

"The only thing you can do to be successful is repeat," says Flores. 'There are only two ways to go, repeat or go down. That's a tremendous amount of pressure, there's no doubt about that. It's so hard to repeat these days."

The Raiders, who took the NFL Championship with a 38-9 victory over the Washington Redskins in Super Bowl XVIII, will be trying to become the first team to repeat as championship since the Pittsburgh Steelers in 1979-80.

Four teams — one on the rise, one on the rebound, and two rebuilding — in the Western Division of the American Football Conference will be trying to bring the World Champions down.

Twenty-one of 22 starters return with 21 of 22 starters from the Super Bowl victory for the Raiders. Perennial All-Pro linebacker Ted Hendricks retired recently.

Led by 14-year quarterback Jim Plunkett, the offense will look almost the same with Marcus Allen and Kenny King the running backs and Cliff Branch and Malcolm Barnwell giving the Raiders a speedy tandem at wide receiver.

Tight end Todd Christensen's holdout, seeking a contract renegotiation, may leave that position as a question mark, but the Raiders signed free-agent tight end Dave Casper, who played with the Raiders from 1974-80, as a precaution.

Defensively, the absence of Hendricks will be the biggest change on a squad which led the NFL in quarterback sacks last year with 57.

In cornerbacks Lester Hayes and Mike Haynes, acquired mid-season last year from the New England Patriots, Los Angeles may have the best duo in the league.

The Seattle Seahawks are a team on the rise that appears to be the Raiders' biggest threat.

Under Chuck Knox, in his first year with the club, the Seahawks made the playoffs with a 9-7 recovered and ousted the Miami Dolphins before losing to the Raiders 30-14 in the AFC championship game.

And bigger things are expected this year.

"We made great strides in our first season together but there is still plenty of work to be done," says Knox. "We must strive for even more improvement."

Under Knox, the Seahawks built a potent running attack around Curt Warner, who became Seattle's first 1,000-yard rusher in 1983, blending it with the arm of quarterback Dave Krieg, who started the final 11 games for the Seahawks and finished as the AFC's second-leading passer. In the 11 games Krieg started last year, the Seahawks were 7-4.

Krieg will have wide receiver Steve Largent, who has the longest pass-catching streak going at 91 games, and Paul Johns back. Look for second-round draft choice Daryl Turner out of Michigan State to make a contribution.

Last year the Seattle defense surrendered the most yards (6,029) in the AFC last year. The Seahawks have signed 11-year veteran Jim Youngblood as a free agent and obtained cornerback Terry Jackson from the New York Giants in a trade in moves to bolster the squad.

The San Diego Chargers are a team that hopes to rebound from a disappointing injury-riddled 6-10 season last year.

"I have never been through a season with so many injuries in key positions," says Charger Coach Don Coryell.

The biggest key to the Chargers is their quarterback. As Dan Fouts goes, so go the Chargers.

Last year, Fouts suffered a strained rotator cuff in his throwing shoulder and missed six games, in which the Chargers went 1-5. But Fouts, who holds 22 team and seven NFL passing records, is "healthy and throwing better than ever," says Coryell.

The Chargers picked up fullback Pete Johnson from the Cincinnati Bengals in exchange for Michael Brooks. The tandem of Johnson and Chuckie Muncie might be the largest running back combination in the league.

The Chargers' defense is trying to shrug off a 1983 season in which it coughed up 372 yards and 29 points per game. The unit includes four players who were rookies last year: linebackers Billy Ray Smith and Mike Green, and cornerbacks Gill Byrd and Danny Walters. If any of them learned anything last year, the unit will be stronger this season.

A youth movement has surfaced in Denver, which finished the 1983 season with 13 rookies, nine second-year players and four third-year players.

"We're at a critical stage now, because some changes are being made that will be require young people to step in and play," said Denver Coach Dan Reeves, now in his fourth year in charge.

By trading sending quarterback Steve DeBerg to Tampa Bay, the Broncos have establishing second-year rifleman John Elway as the their starter.

Reeves has admitted rushing Elway last year. The rookie opened the season as a starter only to end up on the bench. Elway, the No. 1 selection in the 1983 draft, finished last among quarterbacks in the AFC but should improve as he will be more comfortable with the club's complex offense. The Broncos obtained fifth-year quarterback Scott Brunner from the New York Giants to take some pressure off Elway.

Denver's defense will be hurt by the retirement of Pro Bowl linebacker Randy Gradisher and the slow recovery of linebacker Bob Swenson, who missed the final 14 games of last season with a knee injury. The Broncos picked up Stan Blinka from the Jets to help out at that position.

The other team rebuilding is the Kansas City Chiefs, who hope to end a 13-year absence from the playoffs under second-year Coach John Mackovic.

Mackovic's first year saw the Chiefs finish at 6-10 but they established something that had been missing in Kansas City for some time — a passing attack.

Quarterback Bill Kenney threw for 4,348 yards, the fourth-highest single-season total in NFL history, with 24 touchdown passes. Kenney, however, had no running attack — the Chiefs ran for just 78.4 yards per game — to help him out.

"I think you'll see our running game improve," says Mackovic. "We are going to spend more time on it, and we have more to work with.

Returning veterans Theotis Brown, Billy Jackson and Ken Thomas will be the core of the Chiefs' running attack. Also expected to contribute will be newcomers Herman Heard, a third-round draft choice, and Ken Lacy, signed after a successful USFL career with the Michigan Panthers.

USFL schedules meeting

NEW YORK (AP) — The United States Football League's executive and long-range planning committees met Wednesday with the possibility of shifting to a fall playing schedule among the topics they were expected to discuss.

USFL officials, however, said there would be no announcement regarding the status of the talks until at least next week when the two-year-old league is expected to take a vote on the matter during a meeting of owners in Chicago Aug. 22-23.

Doug Kelly, a league spokesman, said members of both committees met for several hours Wednesday and would continue their discussions at a hotel Thursday morning.

"We don't expect any announcements, though," Kelly added.

Dallas-Steeler game without typical luster

IRVING, Texas (AP) - Things just won't be the same tonight when old foes Pittsburgh and Dallas collide in a National Football League preseason game without running back Franco Harris of the Steelers and defensive tackle Randy White of the Cowboys on the field.

The unbeaten teams, both 2-0, are having contract problems with their two stars. Both shied away from training camp while their contracts are being renegotiated.

The nationally televised game (ABC-TV) at 8 p.m. CDT will be blacked out locally and feature a halftime appearance of the United States Olympic medal winners who are on a "Victory Tour" after winning 83 gold medals in Los Angeles.

Dallas was rated a four-point favorite by the oddsmakers over the Steelers, who downed the Philadelphia Eagles 20-17 in overtime last week.

Pittsburgh is 6-3 against Dallas in exhibition games.

The Danny White-led Cowboys beat the San Diego Chargers after knocking off Green Bay in their first preseason game.

The Steelers have been getting good quarterbacking by Dave Woodley, who came over from Miami.

White was in a struggle to retain his starting status until challenger Gary Hogeboom hurt his right shoulder while making a tackle following a blocked San Diego field goal.

Hogeboom is hopeful of playing in Dallas' final preseason game Aug. 28 against Houston.

Oilers wooing USFL's Rozier

SAN ANGELO, Texas (AP) — Former Nebraska All-American and Heisman Trophy winner Mike Rozier will be the guest of the Houston Oilers at Saturday's Houston-New Orleans National Football League exhibition game, Oiler General Manager Ladd Herzeg has confirmed.

The Oilers made Rozier the No. 2 overall pick in the NFL's June 5 supplemental draft.

Herzeg said the meeting Saturday with Rozier and his agent, Art Wilkerson, would be an exploratory session. "We'll be speaking in generalities at this point," Herzeg said.

Rozier, a former teammate of No. 1 draft pick Dean Steinkuhler, had a disappointing rookie season with the Pittsburgh Maulers of the United States Football League.

Rozier has two years remaining on a $2.6 million contract with the Oilers, who could buy up the remaining two years of the contract or sign him to a future Oiler pact.

Oiler running back Earl Campbell, who settled contract problems with the Oilers during the off-season, has two years remaining on his contract and said recently that he would like to play four more years and to end his career with the Oilers.

Campbell currently is sidelined with a swollen knee that has been slow to respond to arthroscopic surgery.

Herzeg declined to discuss the Oilers' plans for Rozier, who suffered from a lingering ankle injury in his first USFL season.

"I don't think he ever recovered from the Orange Bowl injury to his ankle," Herzeg said. "They thought about surgery this off season, but the ankle is decalcifying by itself, and surgery won't be necessary."

Rozier rushed for a Big Eight Conference record 4,780 career yards at Nebraska and became the second player in NCAA history to surpass 2,000 yards rushing in a season with 2,148 yards.

DO YOU WANT A NORMAL LENS!

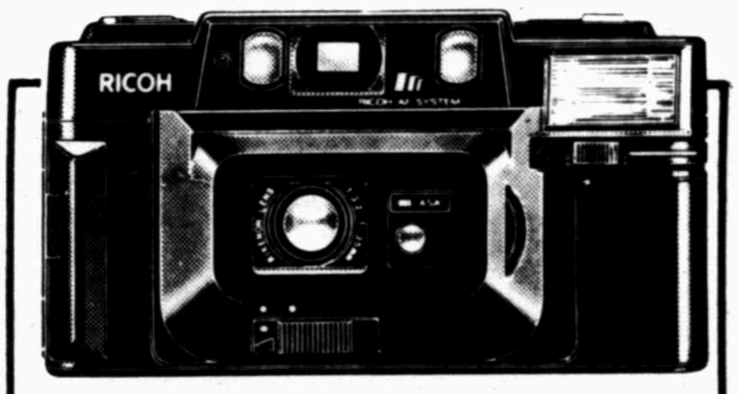

We don't think so. In the past the so-called "normal lens" was far less expensive than lenses of other types, especially zoom lenses. Now for only $89 more than the price of a 50mm lens you can get a 35-70 f2.8 macro zoom lens. We call this lens a "super normal" because it drastically increases the versatility of your 35mm camera. You get 3 different lenses in one small package. Wide angles for scenery and groups, telephoto for sports and portraits plus the added bonus of macro for close-ups of 35mm cameras, match it with the Sigma 35-70 f2.8 Macro "Super Normal"

JIM MURRAY

After six Olympics, memories can fade

After six Olympics, it's only natural, I expect, for them to run together in the mind.

Let's see. It was the 10,000 at Munich where Lasse Viren fell down, then got up to win and set the world record, wasn't it? Or was it the 5,000 at Montreal?

It was at Tokyo, wasn't it, that the Tunisian Gammoudi crashed into the field on the last lap and knocked the Australian Ron Clarke out of all chance? Or did the pictures show he knocked Billy Mills out of it, but Mills won, anyway?

Did you actually say to a Canadian journalist in the midst of the first heat of the 1,500 at Munich: "What's Jim Ryun doing running back there in the pack with all those rinky-dinks, he's liable to be knocked down!" or do you now only think you did?

You looked up just in time to see Bob Beamon's record jump at Mexico City, even though you were across the track chatting with Jesse Robinson at the time, didn't you? Of course, you did. Who would be buying a Coke at a time like that?

But medals do not always go to the swift or victories to the brave. We have today, accordingly, updated our own honors list, medals going to individuals whom you might not otherwise be celebrating today. The medal is in the form of a bottle cap held together by two pieces of Kleenex and bearing the Latin words for "Lower, Slower and Fatter." America leads in this medal count, too. They go to:

1– Any journalist who could write one complete story on women's gymnastics without using the word pixie.

2-- Any country that had a national anthem you could leave the stadium humming.

3– Any journalist, print or electronic, who could open an interview with something other than, "Slug, your feelings, if you can tell us, on winning the (gold, silver, bronze, last place)? Your thoughts right now."

4– Any competitor who has just won a gold medal and doesn't say, "It hasn't hit me yet."

5– Any spectator who just paid $200 a seat and happened to be bending down getting a tuna fish sandwich during a race and looked up and said, "What's Mary Decker doing lying down on the ground like that for? Is the race over?"

6– Any homeowner who bought a new stereo, refrigerator, bedroom set or RV on time plan figuring he would get the payments from $50-a-day parking fees on his Exposition Park area lawn.

7– Any ticket broker who promised to take his wife to the Greek Isles on the proceeds from scalping track and field tickets, who passed on a chance to buy soccer tickets because, "These are Raider fans; they don't like any game you play only with the feet."

8– To Gabriela Andersen-Schiess, the Swiss marathoner, for getting more publicity out of the event than the winner. For instance, did you know who won the 1908 marathon, the one where Dorando Pietri collapsed in the stretch? It was Johnny Hayes, an American department store clerk and now a trivia answer. Dorando got songs written about him, including one by Irving Berlin. For the record, Joan Benoit won the 1984 marathon, but Gabriela will be a song title.

9– To a young runner who ran up on the heels of a British competitor and tumbled to the ground and lost all chance for a medal. Mary Decker? Hardly. No, it was Pierre Deleze, who tumbled over Steve Ovett at the very finish line of his heat in the 1,500, a race that would have put him in the semifinals. His fall aroused no international controversy, no "Is Ovett Guilty?" headlines. No discus thrower carried him off the track. Ovett didn't apologize to him. All that happened was that some official came up to him and said: "Get up, you're holding up traffic," and someone else said crankily: "Can't you watch where you're going? You could've cost Steve the race!"

10– To the Soviet track and field team for outstanding sportsmanship in leaving all those gold and silver medals lying around to be picked up by the American athletes. The Americans did the same thing for them in 1980, and I'm sure they just wanted to return the favor.

11– To that 11-year-old mare that got claimed out of some county fair races in West Virginia, where she went off at boxcars and never won but who became a combination of Black Beauty and Trigger for one night in the Coliseum, the most famous since the one who fanned Roy Rogers with his hat.

12– To Seoul, Korea. Don't worry, the Russians will come. Will they ever!

Mattox sues dump site operator

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

State Attorney General Jim Mattox has filed suit against the operator of a private garbage dump in rural Midland.

Named as defendant in the suit, which was filed this week on behalf of the Texas health department, is Jess Laubinger of the Laubinger Excavating Co.

The dump is located about a mile southwest of town near the intersection of County Roads 1213 and 113.

The site has been inspected on at least seven occasions in the past 1½ years, according to the suit, and allegedly has been found in violation of several provisions of the Texas Solid Waste Disposal Act.

The allegations include: operating without a health department permit; not filing soil and liner reports; not operating the site in accordance with an approved engineering site development plan; not properly confining windblown waste; not providing adequate disposal procedures for vacumm truck wastes; allowing the open burning of solid waste; not adequately controlling access to the site to prevent the dumping of unauthorized materials; not providing adequate fire protection; not adequately controlling fly, mosquito, rodent problems and other pest problems; and not properly covering all solid waste.

The suit seeks civil penalties of $2,000 for each act of violation and for each day of violation.

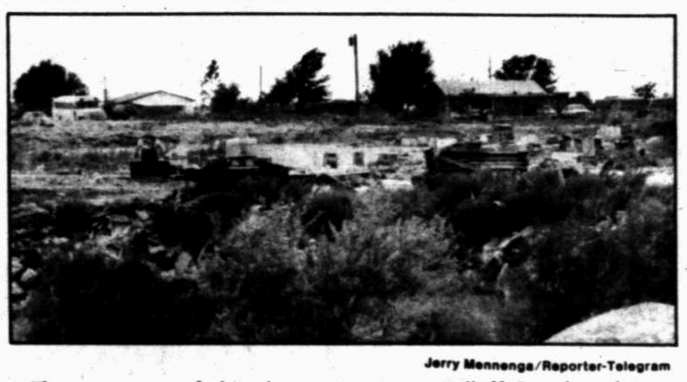

Calling the site "a hazard to the public health," the suit also asks for an injunction to get the dump in compliance with state law.

The suit further alleges that Laubinger "has been notified repeatedly, both orally and in writing, that he should bring the site into compliance, but has repeatedly failed to do so."

Laubinger could not be reached for comment. But his 22-year-old son Jess Laubinger Jr. said today: "The dump is closed at the momemt and we're doing everything we can to get a permit.

"It's a good site for a landfill because it's out of public view. We run a paper recycling plant that keeps from having to chop down trees."

No trial date has been set.

Jerry Mennenga/Reporter-Telegram

The operator of this dump site near Midkiff Road and Interstate-20 has been named defendant in a civil lawsuit filed this week by State Attorney General Jim Mattox. The suit alleges that the site is a health hazard and is not being operated in compliance with the Texas Solid Waste Disposal Act.

Bishop instilling ideas in youth

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Louis Calvin Browning has come a long ways in his 78 years.

In his boyhood, he used to run barefoot around Washington-on-the-Brazos.

"I chased rabbits for breakfast and rabbits for supper."

Today, Bishop Browning is chasing after youth and money to keep his cause going.

His mission today is to ward off crime by instilling noble ideals and ideas in youth.

The gray-haired Browning, decked in a black suit, red vest and polished black shoes, climbed aboard the speaker's platform of his "Crime Stop" van and lectured evangelically to about 40 youths in Washington Park.

He had predicted 500 boys and girls would turn out for his "Youth Crime Prevention League" rally in in southeast Midland.

The turnout didn't diminished his enthusiasm.

He exhorted the children to learn "respect for themselves, respect the rights of others and stay in school."

And Browning, riding on his own bandwagon, focused on and, perhaps, magnified his own works to bring about racial harmony during the restless 1960s.

He criticized militant blacks, such as comedian Dick Gregory, who, chanted "Burn, Baby, Burn" in urging the blacks to avenge the wrongs the white did to them and their enslaved ancestors.

Browning said he confronted Gregory and admonished him.

Gregory responded.

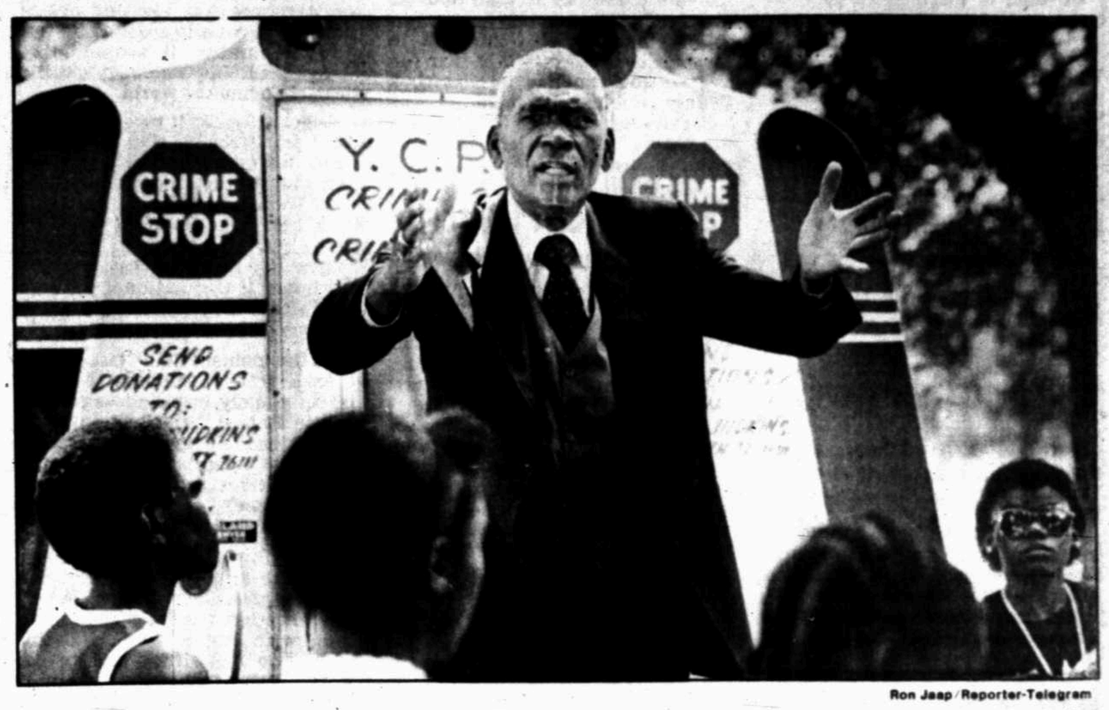

"'You're the first black man that ever challenged me,'" he said Gregory told him. Browning said he reminded Gregory that this country belongs to all Americans regardless of race, creed and color and to burn it would harm all people — not just the whites. "Be loyal."

Browning lifted himself to near martyrdom. Leaders, he said, should be asking:

"Where is this fellow Browning who risked body and limb for God and country?"

He tried to heighten the mood.

"You've got to sing and open up."

Ron Jaap/Reporter-Telegram

Bishop Louis Calvin Browning exhorts youth to avoid crime and drugs, to get a good education and to lead productive lives. The country's "greatest asset" is young people, he says.

He led the little ones in his hearty singing, "My Country 'Tis of Thee, Sweet Land of Liberty."

"Now," he asked, "who will lead the Lord's Prayer."

"I will," said 13-year-old Tonya Williams.

Browning resumed his sermonizing.

"God is in all of us," he said. "God is the source for all things."

"There has got to be a returning back to save the nation and the world. Turn to God to save this world. God still has control of this world."

Browning told the youngsters not to steal. "Don't bother anybody else's things." Avoid drugs, which, he said, will "get you flying above the clouds, but you'll come down with a bang...You won't be able to cope with society."

He told them to get educated and to speak proper English.

"Education is the key to success."

Instead of saying, "He do" or "He don't," master the King's English and say "He does" or "He doesn't."

"People judge you by what you say" more so than by how you dress.

Browning told the youth to prepare for their careers in life.

"Be ready for the opportunity," he said. "If you're ready, the job will look for you."

Browning, an independent Methodist bishop who founded his Youth Crime Prevention League in 1956, said he's "going for 100 (years)" in preaching against crime. He also is raising money for a planned museum and goodwill center at his Fort Worth state and national headquarters.

"Society is not concerned about the color of your skin or the texture of your hair," he told the children, "but what you can produce."

Afterward, the asked the youngsters to join him in this adage: "I'm not where I have been. I'm not where I am going. But I am on my way."

Linda Williams, 12, listened to the preachments.

"He's right about all those things," she said. "And I think we should get a good education."

"He told me that it's not right to take drugs," said James Archie, 12, "and that we should do the right things. He gave some very encourging words."

Said Passion Hurd, 9: "I think he was good...very good message."

Browning estimated that he has spoken to 5 million young people in his 27 years of traveling and lecturing against crime and for its prevention.

The museum and goodwill center he is trying to build at his headquarters at 109 S. Judkins St. in Fort Worth will serve youth.

Art work... a 'ministry' for Methodist minister

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

Kenneth Wyatt

The distance from a Methodist minister to an artist was not a long journey for Kenneth Wyatt. It represented more of a return to a childhood love, developed when he lived on a farm outside Midland during his childhood.

"There was a young man in my class at school that I can remember could draw horses, and I just couldn't understand how he could draw that pretty a horse," Wyatt said in a Wednesday interview at Midland American Bank. Wyatt was in town for the opening day of a three-day showing and sale of 12 of his paintings being held in the bank's lobby.

"I just loved him. I just hung over his shoulder all the time watching him draw." He can't remember the young man's name whose drawings of horses so "inspired" him when he was in the sixth grade and began to draw himself, but he recalls taking the initiative. "I got him to show me how he did it."

Today, Wyatt does more than draw. And out of the close to 4,000 works he has executed, several are now part of, among others, the collections of the Queen of England and President Ronald Reagan.

"I think the reason that artists are pleased and proud that collectors accept your work is the fact that they can really go out and buy anyone's art they want to. When they buy yours and put it in their collections, then you feel really good about it."

He remembers how he felt when Barbara Walters gave the tour of the White House of the West and he saw his painting, a storm scene with a man riding a horse through the rain past the lights coming from an old house by the side of the road.

"I ran over to hug the TV set," Wyatt said, laughing. "You strut sitting down."

Several corporations, such as, Pioneer Natural Gas and U.S. Steel, a couple of museums, including the Diamond M Museum in Snyder, as well as 80 to 90 banks own his work.

"Most people invest in large corporations, they buy stock and so on. It tickles me when one of the large corporations invests in me and they buy my work."

Although primarily considered a painter, his work is not limited to painting.

"I do everything. I do pencils, I do the bronzes, sculptures, I like to do it all. I think if you're going to be an artist, you ought to be a complete artist and do something in everything whether you really concentrate in that area or not.

"Most of everything I do is oil. Some people are purists, they paint just one thing. I try to paint everything. I just enjoy putting down things on canvas," Wyatt said. Smiling, he added, "I'm a fast worker, but I didn't start until late. I have a lot of catching up to do."

The Wyatt family only lived in Midland for a few years before moving to another town which played an important role in Wyatt's life — Stephenville.

"My father told the family, 'Nobody in our family has ever been to college. I can't afford to send you, I'm going to take you.' So he found a college town and moved to it and sent us all to school."

Wyatt graduated from high school when he was 14 and started preaching. "I was pretty young to start out, but they gave me a church and off I went.

Becoming a minister was, for Wyatt, "a natural thing to do.

"I was raised in the church and I could speak fairly well in front of groups and I felt an inclination, I suppose you could say I was called to the ministry, because I felt like I needed to proclaim what I'd learned about the Scripture."

Odessan gets probation for part in murder plot

By LAWRENCE BUDD
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Two days of testimony in Ector County district court ended Wednesday with the 74-year-old defendant pleading guilty to soliciting an undercover officer to murder a Midland man. Punishment was set at 10 years probation.

It was an abrupt ending to the solicitation of capital murder trial of 74-year-old O.B. King. He was charged with acting as go-between in a murder plot that was never hatched in which a Midland woman was to pay to have Midlander Booker T. "Billy" Green slain as revenge for Green having shot her father to death.

Green was tried twice for the November 1981 shooting of Midlander R.J. Morris, the first proceeding ending in a mistrial. He was found innocent in August 1982.

King pleaded guilty to having acted as middle-man in the scheme by soliciting an undercover sheriff's deputy in Dec. 1982 to kill Green. Carol Morris, 33, daughter of the man Green shot in a dispute following a dice game, allegedly agreed to pay for Green's death.

Jurors listened to two days of evidence which ended Wednesday afternoon, with both sides having completed their cases. When District Judge Joe Connally adjourned court, the jurors were to return this morning to decide the 74-year-old Odessan's guilt.

But after Connally denied defense attorney Tony Chavez's motion for an instructed verdict of not guilty, Chavez decided to forego the jury deliberations.

King faced a maximum sentence of life imprisonment and a $10,000 fine. Noting his client's advanced age, Chavez said "My objective was to keep him out of the pen anyway I could."

Ms. Morris, in Midland County jail awaiting appellate decisions on forgery and theft convictions, was never indicted in connection with the murder plot.

The undercover deputy who set up the tape recordings which sealed King's fate explained no recordings were ever obtained of Ms. Morris to corroborate the testimony of he and another man who were pretending to be interested the scheme.

Jurors listened to recordings of conversations in which King discussed the slaying. The deputy and his accomplice alternately wore body microphones during the conversations.

Chavez said a turning point was Connally allowing Odessan Stanley Matkin to recall Ms. Morris's part of a conversation in which the deal was discussed. Matkin testified Tuesday that Ms. Morris said, "I want him dead around Christmas time. I want to hurt his family the way he hurt mine."

Matkin said the original price was to be $8,000, but subsequent discussions dropped the figure to $5,000. Connally said at the close of testimony he was concerned with his allowing the hearsay testimony of Ms. Morris.

Quest to find roots never-ending journey

By RHONDA RIGENHAGEN

Melba Midkiff prefers the branches of her family tree to be laden with rotten apples.

"The hardest man in the world to trace is a man who was poor and honest; he left very few records," the Midland amateur genealogist quoted. "If he was poor, he didn't own any land and if he was honest he didn't have any court records."

Without such documents, her efforts to trace her roots often lead to dead ends — one of the most frustrating aspects of genealogy, she said.

For more than a decade Mrs. Midkiff has burrowed through family bibles, censuses, courthouse records, newspapers, letters, diaries, photographs, archives, cemeteries and various publications in her ancestral search. Her quest has taken her to Utah, North Carolina and Tennessee. Soon she plans to expand into foreign research.

She has several albums filled with aged photographs of grim-faced relatives, photocopied records, neatly scripted letters and yellowed clippings. Some of the documents date as far back as the 1700s, and she has been able to track her lineage to the 1600s.

"It's a fun hobby," she said. "It's really fascinating to study. You get interested in your roots and it's a never-ending thing. You never find out all of them, and you always have something to look forward to."

As past president of the Midland Genealogical Society and a Mormon — whose religious tenets require it — Mrs. Midkiff is perhaps more dedicated to tracing her family history than most people. She feels it is important "to be able to tell my children who they are and where they came from."

Time will always be there; It's unstoppable

This thing called time has me baffled. I can't figure out what it is. Further, I don't know why I should worry about it. I can't stop it, dissect it, analyze it, tear it apart, put it back together and proclaim that Einstein's theory of relativity has been superseded in greatness by Todd's theory of time.

What time is has been pondered by philosophers and scientists for centuries. Einstein gave it some thought.

About the only concrete but elusive conclusion thinkers have come up with is that time parallels change. That's not to say that time is change but certainly they're related.

We mark time by sunrises and sunsets, by the changing seasons, and by the changes in our own lives. We are young and, suddenly, it seems, we become old. We await for another change.

Occasionally, I return to what was. Rather, I return to those places on Earth where my universe once centered. The old "home place" out in the country, in a place called Pacio in the blacklands of Delta County and near the old North Sulphur River in East Texas, is no more. It's kaputt but is on my recall list. The old green oak house where my grandparents lived and toiled is gone. Granddad, Asa Williams, died on the farm in 1969. Grandmother died a few years later. The old North Room, where the old Edison phonograph played those lively quarter-inch fox-trot records and the player piano gladden hearts, is in time's grave.

It's sad not to see your grandparents on the farm where they lived for decades. What's even more sad is the demise of the old-fashioned family get-togethers. Other symbols of time, death and the drifting of families, seem to have diminished the urgency of those gatherings.

My other grandfather, D. Todd, used to mark the comings and goings of the Southern Pacific System's steam locomotives in nearby Cooper. He was the railroad's depot agent there. I dearly miss the sight, sound and smell of the old trains. I miss dad's father.

And, so, in an instant I become angry. I wonder why time has taken its toll. Why have things changed so?

It appears that I, Mr. Egocentric, wants the world to remain static and archaic. I want change not to come. I want to deny time.

Yet, I freely climbed aboard this missile in space called time. I traveled helter-skelter and went from east to west in my quest for adventure. It's always there, even if you don't travel. For me, the blindspot in that sojourn through time and space is looking backward too intensely. It'll trip you up every time unless you glance into the past to get your bearing's today for traveling into the morrow.

Time is not a burden; it's a sojourn in space.

Odessa woman awaiting arraignment on charges

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — A 21-year-old Odessa woman was in the Odessa City Jail awaiting arraignment this morning on charges she took an $800 ring from a Midland man Wednesday night in a parking lot of a 2nd St. motel.

Gerald Oden, age unavailable, 2408 Faulkner, Midland, reported to police he was driving through the parking lot of the Deluxe Motel, 1102 W. 2nd St., about 10 p.m. Wednesday when he was hailed by five or six women.

When he stopped the car, the women gathered around both sides of his car and began touching him, according to reports, with one of the women taking his pinkie ring shaped like an oilwell spouting three diamonds.

After describing the woman to police, officers were able to locate her at another 2nd St. motel. Oden identified her and she was arrested for felony theft.

Reports do not indicate whether the ring, valued at $800, was recovered.

In a similar incident, an Odessa man reported a $1,100 necklace missing after his car was surrounded by several women about 1 a.m. today in the same area Oden was accosted.

Jessie Gonzalez, age unavailable, 1018 E.Hillmont, told police his car was surrounded by the women in the 200 block of N. Whitaker, with one propositioning him while another exposed her breasts.

He later realized his gold necklace with a St. Christopher's medal was missing and reported the incident to police. No arrests had been made this morning, but a description had been provided.

Minister

After 32 years in the ministry, Wyatt retired. He then became an after dinner speaker for the Knife and Fork Clubs of America.

"I wanted to take the message from the church and get it out from behind the pulpit for a while and get it out to the people. The bishop decided that would be a good idea and let me do that."

While he was on the circuit, he began painting as a pasttime. That was 12 to 14 years ago.

"I had a lot of spare time because when you're speaking, you're speaking but when you're not, you're not doing anything."

He found that he enjoyed painting. Within a year, he was earning enough income to pursue a fulltime career as an artist. Most of his work is sold from his studio at home in Tulia, however, his first works were sold through a gallery which sold them at an art auction.

"That set the price and it was set pretty high compared with what most people have to go through."

Today, Wyatt's work brings an average price of $3,000 to $4,000.

For Wyatt, the "ministry of art" is just "a change from one ministry to another." He has looked for ways to "do anything for the church." Last year, he was successful in combining the two.

"We had an opportunity to do a painting for the Methodist church portraying the bicentennial of Methodism. We went to England, did the researching of it and came back here in Texas to paint it."

The painting recreates what might have been the scene when, in 1784, 81-year-old John Wesley, the founder of the Methodist Church in Great Britain and America, sent Thomas Coke, Richard Whatcoat and Thomas Vasey to the then newly independent colonies in the New World.

"It shows Wesley saying goodbye to Coke as he sent him to America to ordain Asbury (who was in the States) and start the Methodist church here just after the Revolutionary War."

Wyatt said he hopes a copy will hang in the 38,000 Methodist churches across the country.

Showings such as the one at Midland American Bank are important to his career because they keep him from "being unknown.

"You want to get out in the public and let the people know who you are, and the only way to do it is to go place to place. Otherwise, you just sit at home, and your reputation doesn't really grow."

Jefferson Starship... a relic of the 70s

By MARK LEWIS
Staff Writer

Jerry Mennenga/Reporter-Telegram

Grace Slick and Jefferson Starship touched down for a rock concert in the Ector County Coliseum Wednesday night. Ms. Slick, who shares lead vocals for the band, is the only remaining member of the original Jefferson Airplane.

ODESSA — It was August 1967. The Summer of Love, they called it. San Francisco was suddenly the music capital of the universe, and "Somebody to Love" by the Jefferson Airplane was blasting out of radios from coast to coast. For a few giddy moments, it seemed like changing the Top 40 could actually mean changing the world.

August 1984. As it turned out, the world didn't change that much. But when Jefferson Starship opened their show at the Ector County Coliseum Wednesday night with Grace Slick belting out "Somebody to Love," it was an exhilarating moment for many in the audience, like hearing the national anthem again after being out of the country for many years.

But the moment didn't last.

Aside from "Somebody to Love" and an equally inspiring version of "White Rabbit," the evening was devoted entirely to Starship songs, which was appropriate since aside from Ms. Slick, none of the band members had been with the Airplane in its glory days.

Bassist David Freiberg had been there with another legendary '60s band — Quicksilver Messenger Service. That band is long gone now, along with Big Brother and the Holding Co. and all the other exponents of the Psychedelic Sound. Only the Grateful Dead remain, presiding over their own private cult of aging hippies and perennial Deadheads.

But no one could accuse the Starship of being a relic from the '60s. With the flashy power chording of guitarist Craig Chaquico, the extended bass solos of Pete Sears, and the atmospheric synthesizer pyrotechnics of at least two keyboard players, the Starship has clearly progressed beyond the tired cliches of '60s nostalgia.

What they are is a relic from the '70s.

This may explain why the Coliseum was only half full. But those who did show up seemed to enjoy the show, though they responded with greater enthusiasm to the more recent Starship songs, such as "Find Your Way Back" and "Jane," than they did to the two Airplane classics. This apparent lapse of taste can easily be explained by the fact that the medium age of the audience was approximately 19, and many hadn't even been born when the Airplane's "Surrealistic Pillow" album came out in 1967.

The band's current album is "Nuclear Furniture," and their energetic delivery of such new songs as "No Way Out" clearly pleased the audience. Mickey Thomas is a talented if uninspired lead singer, and his constant jumping up and down was an effective counterpoint to the sedate Ms. Slick, who adopted the more dignified pose of a rock 'n roll matron. The band conducted a fast-paced 90-minute set, including the obligatory encore, and if the audience wasn't clamoring for more, it did seem reasonably satisfied.

But the few '60s veterans present might well have clamored for more. What about such Airplane classics as "Volunteers" and "Crown of Creation"? What about the Starship's biggest hit, "Miracles," which launched them as a group 10 years ago? Sure, Marty Balin and Paul Kantner aren't with the group any more, but Thomas could have taken a shot at some of these songs.

But the Starship knows its audience — only a few in the crowd even knew what was missing. After all, the Summer of Love was 17 years ago.

And what a long, strange trip it's been.

GENEALOGY

"More and more people are becoming interested in genealogy, and younger people are becoming interested in it," she said. "It's not just old ladies with nothing better to do." The Midland Genealogical Society has about 135 members, she pointed out.

Beginners interested in tracking down their roots should start with themselves and work backward, she advised. "Write everything down and fully document your research so you or someone else can find it again. Start with the easy records — your family records."

Information is recorded on a form called, appropriately enough, a pedigree chart.

The next step is to write and, if possible, interview relatives and others interested in genealogy. "A lot of my information comes from correspondence," she said, estimating she has written 100 letters a year since she began her research in 1972. "Most people in genealogy are willing to share their information, that's where you get most of it. You build on what others have found before you."

Then comes hunting through records. Both the Midland and Odessa libraries have extensive information in their genealogy sections, Mrs. Midkiff said. Midland County Library has nearly 7,000 volumes and more than 1,000 rolls of microfilm dealing with historical information. Sources of information keep expanding, and the only thing to limit an amateur genealogist is his own interest.

In some ways cultivating the family tree is becoming more difficult due to increasing mobility, divorces and remarriages, Mrs. Midkiff admitted. But the advent of computerization has facilitated record-keeping tremendously.

"It's going to be just a matter of time before you'll be able to call it all up on a computer," she said.

But until then, the tilling and weeding is a labor of love. "I have made some dear friends, found some close and not-so-close relatives and run into a few just plain ol' soreheads." But when the result sprouts a new branch on the tree, it's worth all the effort, she said.

TRIAL

Ms. Morris searched him for a body mike at their second meeting, said Matkin, but Monnie Weddel, the deputy who was wearing the device at this meeting, did not allow a search.

King accused Weddel of going back on a deal made during efforts to obtain enough evidence against Ms. Morris. Officers are prohibited by law from making deals with suspects.

"He made the deal," said King, who has been out on his personal recognizance since his arrest in January 1983. Weddel denied making any promises to the 74-year-old Odessan.

The first trial in December 1983 ended with Connally granting a mistrial after Matkin improperly testified about Ms. Morris's part in the first conversation.

AT&T rate cut request draws opposition

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas could wind up with reduced long distance rates, but higher local bills, if AT&T Communications wins approval for a $101 million rate cut, says a Southwestern Bell official who opposes the reduction.

AT&T on Wednesday asked the Public Utility Commission for a decrease of more than 14 percent on intrastate long distance calls. The company wants an increase on other services, plus a 50-cent charge for long distance directory assistant calls.

Tom Jones, AT&T vice president, said the rate reduction is possible because of management penny-pinching and a recent PUC ruling he said allows cheaper AT&T access to the Southwestern Bell network.

"We have discovered a viable means of reducing our cost, and we intend to pass that savings along to our customers in the form of a long distance price reduction," Jones said.

Judge orders fire employees to pay widow

HOUSTON (AP) — The Houston assistant fire chief says he wants to appeal a judge's ruling awarding more than $53,000 to the widow of a black man who died of a heart attack after his health deteriorated when co-workers allegedly taunted him with racial slurs.

Houston Assistant Fire Chief Dennis Holder said Wednesday he'll follow necessary procedures to appeal the ruling because he believes the allegations are not true.

U.S. District Judge John Singleton ruled Tuesday in favor of radio technician James W. Hamilton's family, saying the racial pressure the 44-year-old experienced "had physical side effects and contributed to Hamilton's poor health."

Singleton ordered the city and two of Hamilton's supervisors — C.L. Wilford and C.P. Nelson — to pay Hamilton's widow, Carrie M. Hamilton, $50,000 for Hamilton's "humiliation, mental anguish and a decline in his physical and mental health."

The defendants were ordered to pay an additional $3,129 in back pay for a demotion Hamilton received in 1982. Hamilton died in February 1983.

Hamilton began working for the department in 1979 and did not have a history of blood pressure problems or any other serious ailments, the judge said. Within four years, however, he suffered a stroke and then a fatal heart attack.

"We argued in court that (the racial attacks) contributed to or caused his death," the family's attorney, Patrick Gilpin, said. "It was incredible. It's really unforgivable in this day and age."

The judge's ruling cited instances where white employees allegedly told black co-workers they should be sent back to Africa and posted cartoons ridiculing blacks. In one instance, Singleton cited a poster depicting a group of monkeys which said, "They can't fire us ... slaves have to be sold."

In his opinion, the judge also mentioned an incident in which a white (employee) referred to a radio call that came in about a black woman suffering a miscarriage. The employee said he hoped the baby would die "because it would be just another nigger he would not have to kill," Singleton wrote.

Holder said he will urge Acting Fire Chief Raymond Harrison to contact the city's legal department and appeal the ruling because the department is not responsible.

"I am absolutely amazed at the decision in this case," Holder said. "I can't believe this occurred. I can't believe that they awarded him anything."

Holder said he believes Hamilton became frustrated because he reached a point where he couldn't handle the job.

"What we have here is an employee that was not capable of handling the job and then he died and they're blaming it on us," he said.

Hamilton originally filed the suit alleging racial discrimination and emotional distress in 1982. The suit was later taken over by Hamilton's widow on his behalf, Gilpin said.

Experts peer in Lucas' mind for answers

GEORGETOWN, Texas (AP) — A team of experts wants to know what made self-professed murderer Henry Lee Lucas kill so many people, and they're combing though his mind to find out, a sheriff says.

Williamson County Sheriff Jim Boutwell said Wednesday that a team of psychology and police experts has examined Lucas to probe mental traits leading to violent behavior and perhaps to decode early warning signals.

A physician, two psychologists and two psychiatrists appointed by a Texas Department of Public Safety task force examined Lucas during a day-long session Tuesday, Boutwell said.

Boutwell, who attended the session, says the experts will compile a report for law enforcement officials "in the coming months."

"We hope to establish some guidelines for officers and doctors to use in handling killers and preventing their outbreaks," he said.

"Even the street officers not usually involved with killers may be helped in spotting potential dangers and in handling cases that may come under their jurisdiction," Boutwell said.

Lucas, 47, claims he killed more than 150 people, most of them women, during years of cross-country travel. The drifter has been convicted of four killings in Texas and faces death by injection.

The DPS task force has said Lucas has been linked to 135 unsolved killings.

Boutwell said Lucas "is a con artist, but these experts could pretty well recognize when he was not on the level with them."

Lucas, who has been in and out of jail since he was 13, claims his killing spans 20 states. During a capital murder trial for the Halloween 1979 slaying of an unidentified hitchhiker, Lucas said he killed 360 people, but later backed off that estimate.

NOTICE OF SETTLEMENT OF CLASS ACTION

To: All person of hispanic descent who have been or will be questioned, arrested, detained, incarcerated or charged by Texas Department of Public Safety personnel for alleged violations of the immigration laws or for investigation of their immigration status.

A class action lawsuit has been filed on your behalf alleging that officers of the Texas Department of Public Safety had no authority to arrest or charge people with violations of the U.S. immigration laws. In order to settle this lawsuit, the Texas Department of Public Safety has agreed to a consent decree which prohibits their officers from the following: enforcing civil immigration laws, enforcing criminal immigration laws for which arrest is not authorized by state and federal law, questioning people regarding their right to be or remain in the United States, and placing immigration holds on people suspected of immigration violations. In addition, the decree provides for guidelines in the questioning and arrest for investigation of nationality and immigration status, handling of arrest for criminal immigration violations, and record keeping.

For more information about the terms of the settlement and your right to file objections, you should write or call

After years of working to live, couple lives to work

SULPHUR SPRINGS, Texas (AP) — A visit with John and Willie Mae Harris of the North Caney community in Hopkins County is a celebration — a celebration of work, of community, of family, of life.

They are an example of how much can be done with very little if people are willing to work at it.

John Harris is an ebullient man who thrust his long muscular arms foreward and spread work-knarled hands before his visitor and said, "I work to live."

Harris made his statement with a kind of joy.

Although officially "retired" from his employment as a meat cutter for Pratt Packing Co., he has not retired from work despite the pain of arthritis.

"I told my boss when I left that I wasn't going home to just sit. And they wouldn't see me just running up and down the road in my truck. I had work just waitin' on me," he said with a laugh.

Some of the work waiting on Harris is the addition of four new rooms on the Cherry Grove Baptist Church. He took a short break from his volunteer construction project to talk about building a home and a commmunity.

When Harris came to the house from his work, he was chided gently about his appearance by his wife, Willie Mae. Her offhand manner suggested that many times she had told him "to wash up and change clothes for company."

With equally familiar manner, he pleasantly ignored the urging and settled into his rocking chair and commenced his favorite activity — talking with friends about family, community and working.

Like many arthritis sufferers, he has found that activity is a powerful antidote for the crippling effects of the disease for both the mind and the body. "If I stopped (working), I'd be dead. I want to live. The more I do, the better I feel," he added.

For John and Willie Mae Harris, the will to work and faith in God and themselves is at the root of their success in not only raising 10 children, but becoming community leaders as well.

Their philosophy is quite simple; if you want a better life or a better community, all the help you need is at the end of your arms.

Harris said, "If you want something done, walk out there and with your hands and take hold. Somebody will come along and help, but you've got to get involved."

Mrs. Harris said that one of their involvements was, and still is, the county 4-H program.

She said as a girl growing up in the North Caney community she was deeply impressed with the opportunities for learning self-help skills and self-confidence in dealing with the world outside their close-knit community from 4-H.

"Children did not have the opportunities then in school that they have now. They have so much now, but then we had to organize something in the community to help young people become well-rounded. In the 4H program, we learned public speaking, how to plan meetings and community organization as well as how to garden, sew and can," she said.

Mrs. Harris observed that the larger role that schools are now occupying in the lives of children has reduced some of the interest in 4-H activities.

She said the irony of more and better educations and job opportunities seem to have made the younger generation even less independent than her own. The dependence is created by a need for wages to pay for goods and services, often purchased on credit, that she and her husband made or did for themselves. "And we believe in pay-as-you-go," she said.

"So many of the young women work in factories now. They don't have time for gardens or quilting (one of Mrs. Harris's passions) or canning," she said.

But at the same time, she rejoices at the opportunities for education, material comforts and security that her children and grandchildren have today.

Harris said he was a third grader when his father died and he was forced to drop out of school to augment what little his mother could earn by taking in washing and ironing.

He grew up near Mount Vernon during the days of the "Great Depression."

World War II intervened. When he returned to Texas in 1945 from his tour of duty with the U.S. Army engineers, all of his family had left Mount Vernon.

Harris said one of his brothers lived in the North Caney community, so John settled in to take up farming with his brother and go to school at night on the G.I. Bill.

"I took classes in auto mechanaics, tailoring and cabinet making that were taught in the old American Legion Hall and I was growing cotton on a piece of land that I rented," he recalled.

That memory of a cotton patch brought up another memory — a high school girl who lived in the neighborhood. She was the fourth of Dot and Betty Barry's 13 children.

John Harris recalled that he would drive his team of mules past the young lady's house on his way to the fields. She would usually be sitting out on the porch.

He said that once his brother teased him about driving that old mule and wagon in his old work clothes down the road where the young lady he was courting could see him.

He told his brother that she may as well get used to seeing him that way because he didn't go around in his Sunday clothes all of the time. He smiled at his wife and said, "I would stop and she would always talk to me, even though I was just as nasty as I could be. So I thought she must like me all right."

The couple had four daughters then twin sons, another daughter, another set of twins (a boy and a girl) and then another daughter. The oldest is now 35 and the youngest is 21. Two of their 16 grandchildren are twin girls.

Flags from many countries fly outside the Dallas headquarters of Electronic Data Systems Corp. EDS will be acquired by General Motors for about $2.5 billion. The companies management team will remain intact according to GM.

GM buys Dallas firm for $2.5 billion

DETROIT (AP) — General Motors Corp. says it has finalized the terms of its $2.5 billion acquisition of Electronic Data Systems Corp., a Dallas computer company.

EDS is a major producer of large data processing systems and communication networks. The automaker made the purchase as part of its efforts to bolster and market its own computer technology.

Under terms of the agreement, holders of EDS common stock can exchange each share for $44 in cash or a combination of $32.50 in cash and two-tenths of a share of a planned new class of GM common stock, the automaker said Tuesday in a statement.

The giant automaker said it would apply to have the new stock listed on either the American or New York stock exchange. GM also said it would issue an additional 22.6 million shares of the new stock within two years.

The purchase, announced June 30, will be completed upon approval by EDS stockholders. GM stockholders also must approve an amendment to the company's charter creating the new stock, the statement said.

GM also said Tuesday that it has entered into a separate agreement to buy 28,371,000 shares of EDS stock, about 48 percent of the outstanding shares, from company founder H. Ross Perot, his family and others in the company. GM will receive proxy voting rights for the shares when EDS shareholders vote on the approval, the statement said.

EDS also granted GM an option to buy at $44 each 11 million other EDS shares, representing 18 percent of the outstanding shares.

Production up; Deficit should hold firm

Showing relentless staying power, the nation's economic surge gained more steam as production at factories, mines and utilities rose a healthy 0.9 percent in July, while the White House said the federal budget deficit should hold steady over the next three years.

In posting the July production gain, the Federal Reserve on Wednesday said industrial output was up a revised 0.9 percent in June, instead of the 0.5 percent originally forecast.

Robert Wescott, an economist with Wharton Econometrics, said the July increase reflected growing optimism by manufacturers.

"Everyone is now convinced that this expansion is rolling and going to continue at least through 1985. That optimism is causing the industrial sector to increase production," he said.

In another report released Wednesday, the Commerce Department said inventories held by U.S. businesses rose 0.03 percent in June, the smallest increase in a year.

Some economists said the slowdown in inventory restocking and Tuesday's report of a 0.9 percent July drop in retail sales signaled that future production gains would moderate.

"With retail sales growing more slowly and the housing industry already peaked, we will begin seeing smaller increases in industrial production in the months ahead," said Lawrence Chimerine, chief economist at Chase Econometrics.

However, Chimerine predicted increases for the rest of the year would still be in the range of 0.4 percent to 0.5 percent a month — substantial enough to drive unemployment down further.

Temporary jobs turning permanent

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Increasingly during the current economic recovery, the temporary employment industry is finding itself a matchmaker for permanent business relationships.

Some in the industry report that business is up as much as 60 percent from last year, and with more temporary employees in the market place, some in the industry say, more are being hired away for permanent jobs.

In an expanding economy, said Herbert H. Bienstock, director of the Center for Labor and Urban Programs Research at City University in New York, "Temporary workers are used to test the market, to see if the expansion will be permanent."

"And it makes sense," Bienstock added, "that the people who pinch hit will be offered a permanent place in the lineup."

Just such a pinch-hitter was Scott Lane, 34 years old, an artistic director of the Gallery Theater in Los Angeles until funding cuts forced the theater to close. Lane returned to New York, began writing a musical and supported himself as a word processor for Manpower Inc., the largest temporary employment service in the country.

A subsidiary of the Parker Pen Co., Manpower has 1,075 offices in 32 countries, each year working with some 600,000 employees. The company has 25,000 to 30,000 more of its people working in an average week this year than a year earlier.

For Lane, a one-day assignment at Citibank stretched into several weeks. One day, he said, "Someone suggested 'getting somebody like Scott' " to help with a presentation. "Why get someone like me?" Lane recalled saying. "I'm already here." He now has a permanent position as a creative assistant for corporate presentations in Citibank's communications division.

Stacey Valenca, 25, also worked for Manpower. After four weeks on an assignment at Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer in New York in 1978, she was hired as a secretary. "They were pleased with me, and I liked the company," she said. She is now manager of contract services and assistant to the president.

Manpower employees are hired by client companies at least "five times a day," said Mitchell Fromstein, president. "Placing people in permanent slots is not our primary role, but we say it's going to happen anyway so why fight it? Why not use it to attract people, even for a short time, that are good."

Well service rig count up; 40 percent not working

From Staff Reports

While 640 more well service rigs were working in June of this year than in May, still only 60 percent of the well service rigs available in the U.S. were working, according to the Association of Oilwell Servicing Contractors.

This number, however, reflects an 8 percent increase over May in which only 52 percent of the rigs were working. Canada continues to reflect unusually low utilization, with only 36 percent of the avialable rigs working as compared to 21 percent in May.

West Texas reported the largest increase, with 14 percent more rigs going to wwork in June than May. Of 1,990 available rigs in West Texas, only 1,080 or 52 percent were working in May. In June, 1,363 or 68 percent were working.

It was the highest percentage of working rigs for any area of the country, with the Eastern region showing 61 percent of the rigs working.

Hobb's refinery will shut down

From Staff Reports

Citing intense competition and a decreased demand for refined products, Southern Union Co. of Dallas announced Wednesday afternoon that it would close its Famariss Refinery south of Lovington, New Mexico on August 31, resulting in the loss of jobs for approximately 100 workers in the Hobbs and Lovington area, according to a story in the Hobbs Daily Sun News.s.

Southern Union Refining Offical, Earl Crane, in Hobbs, said the shut down would involve 138 jobs, but a small work force of perhaps 30 will be retained to maintain the facility and retrain new employees if and when the plant reopens. Those employees hot being retained will leave the refinery within 60 days.

Southern Union has lost more than $8.5 million from its crude oil refining sector since 1982, and has been operating below designated capacity since that time. The firm will continue to operate its pipeline and terminal facilities.

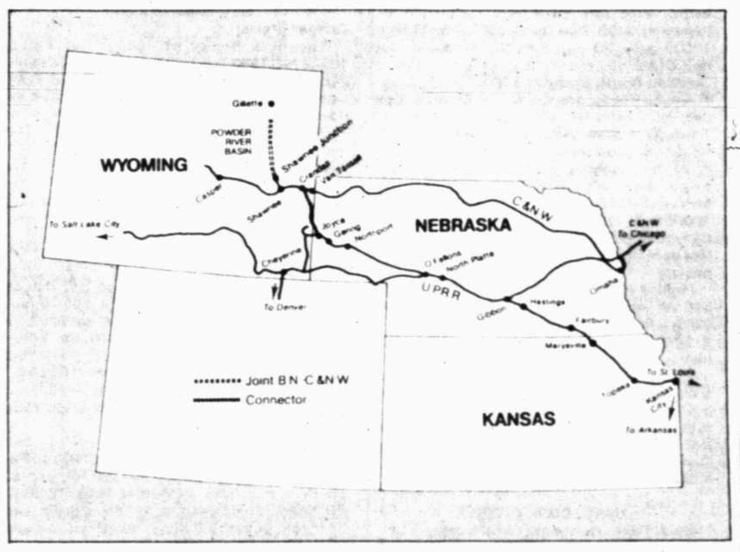

The Dallas-based firm said that during the past four years, it had invested over $20 million in the facility, and it was necessary to close the New Mexico refinery to prevent further losses.

Earlier this summer, Southern Union Refining President, Randolph Scott, said the company was looking at a number of options for the financially troubled refinery, which included: upgrading the plant to process gasoline; combining with other plants to spread costs and temporary closure.

Scott said that the other options, "just didn't prove feasible." He said that the inability of small refineries to refine a large number of products was part of the problem.

A Southern Union spokesman said the closing was the result of market conditions, which included: intense price competition and a reduced demand for gasoline and other refined products.

Southern Union President, Fred Hansen concluded that marketing conditions will determine when the refinery can reopen.

The new 107-mile rail line will carry coal from Wyoming coal fields to plants belonging to Arkansas Power and Light Co. in Newark and White Bluff, Arkansas. The line was built jointly by Chicago & North Western Transportation Co. and Union Pacific Systems.

Rail line largest in 47 years

OMAHA — A 107-mile rail line that is the largest single rail construction project to be undertaken in the U.S. within the last 47 years will open Thursday, August 16, it was announced today.

"The new rail route will provide American consumers with competitive transportation for the first time from the Powder River Basin coal fields of northeast Wyoming," said James R. Wolfe, president of the Chicago & North Western Transportation Co. C&NW and Union Pacific System build the 107 miles of new and reconstructed rail line under a joint financial arrangement.

The first 110-car coal train will be sent across the Wyoming-Nebraska border following noontime ceremonies at the state line that will be attended by officials representing the railroads, utilities, lending institutions, contractors, mines and area communities.

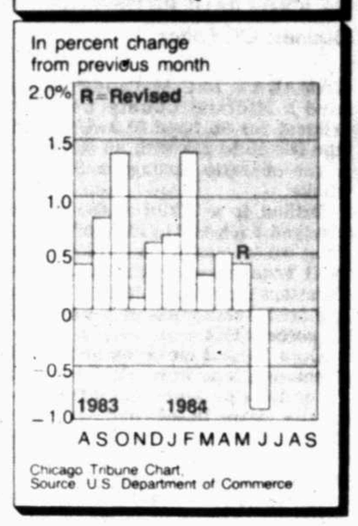

This train will be the first to carry coal to Arkansas Power & Light Co. under a 20-year contract. This contract calls for delivery of approximately 220 millions tons of coal to power plants at Newark and White Bluff, Arkansas. A second contract, with Wisconsin Public Service Corp., calls for delivery of at least 800,000 tons of coal annually to Weston Spur, Wisconsin.

Both UP and C&NW are actively seeking other contracts with power companies in the Midwest, South and Southwest and have projected that the line will carry approximately 25 million tons annually by the beginning of the next decade.

The project was originally expected to cost $460 million and be ready to haul coal at the end of two construction seasons. "It beat the mark on both counts," said Richard H. McDonald, vice president in charge of Western Railroad Properties, Inc., a C&NW subsidiary participating in the project with UP.

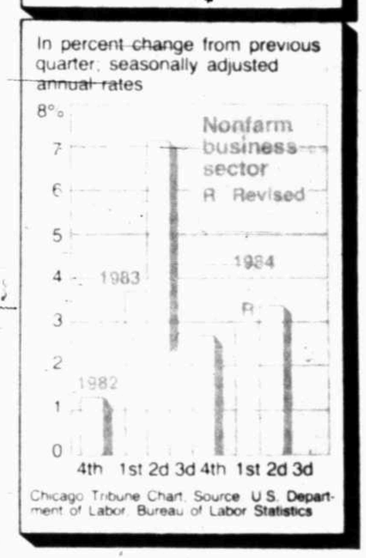

"We finished the line three months ahead of schedule, and it is coming in at approximately 20 percent less than the origianl cost estimate," McDonald said.

FOUR C. OIL & GAS CORP., Dallas, finaled its No.3 Moncrief pumping 19 bopd of 32 gravity API crude with 45 Mcfd gas and half barrel of water from perforations at 1,608 to 1,654 ft., following a treatment with 10,000 gal. acid, and fracturing with 35,000 gal. fluid and 25,000 lb. sand.

It was drilled to 2,391 ft. and plugged back to 1,920 ft. with 7 in. casing being set to TD. Formation tops on an elevation of 2,392 ft. were: Yates 1,242; Queen 1,864; Grayburg 2,064; San Andres 2,361.

The discovery well is located 1,070 ft. from west line and 967 ft. from east line of Section 16, Block 3, H&TC survey, one mile south of Imperial.

Dual discovery made in Crockett

TEXACO INC., Midland, has finaled a dual discovery, probably in the Simpson, to extend oil production in the Seright (Strawn) field, 18 miles northwest of Ozona.

The No.4 M.A. Shannon pumped 52 bopd of 38.9 gravity crude with 10 bwpd and a gas oil ration of 981:1 from perforations at 6,258-6,370 ft. in the Simpson discovery zone and 14 bopd of 46.4 API crude with 3 bwpd and a GOR of 23,857:1 from perforations at 5,927-6,000 ft. in the Strawn to extend the Seright one location to the east and become the sixth producer in that field.

Locaton is 457 ft. from south and 2,200 ft. from east lines of Section 11, Block 10, GC&SF survey.

Southland earning up

FORT WORTH — Southland Royalty Co. has announced increased earnings for the second quarter of 1984. Net income for the second quarter increased 20 percent to $7,687,000 or $.18 per share, compared with $6,387,000 or $.15 per share reported in the second quarter of 1983. The improved operating results were due primarily to increased gas production from offshore Louisiana properties. Total revenues for the second quarter were $79,252,000 compared with $79,778,000 in the second quarter of 1983.

Net income for the six months ended June 30, 1984 increased 15 percent to $17,362,000 or $.40 per share, compared with $15,128,000 or $.35 per share in the same period of 1983. Total revenues for the first half equaled $162,124,000 compared with $162,206,000 in the first half of 1983.

In addition, Brumley said that the company had recently begun purchasing its common stock in open market transactions under a previously authorized program. Purchases were resumed due to management's belief that the current market price of the company's stock represents an attractive investment when compared to the underlying value of the company's oil and gas assets.

Adobe earnings up 9 percent

Adobe Oil & Gas Corp. has announced earnings and earnings per share for the second quarter 1984 were up nine percent compared to the 1983 period.

Net earnings for second quarter 1984 were $5,936,000 or $.36 per share compared to $5,445,000 or $.33 per share for the like 1983 quarter. Cash flow for the second quarter increased to $14,915,000 compared to $14,540,000 in the year ago period.

For six months 1984, net earnings were $11,626,000 or $.71 per share compared to earnings of $11,116,000 or $.68 per share for the year ago period. Cash flow for six months 1984 was flat at $29,561,000 when compared to $29,541,000 for 1983 six month period.

The corporation reported that its board of directors has authorized a common stock quarterly cash dividend for third quarter, 1984, of six cents per share to be paid on September 28, 1984 to shareholders of record on September 7, 1984.

Adobe also announced that David L. Dowler has been elected a director of the corporation. Dowler is vice president of Madison Resources Inc., New York, (formerly Madison Fund Inc.). Through recent transactions, Madison Resources acquired an entity, now a Madison Resources subsidiary, which holds some 27 percent of the outstanding common stock of this corporation.

KenCope finals purchase of Allen Oil Tools

SAN ANTONIO — KenCope Energy Companies has announced that it has completed its purchase of all of the stock of Allen Oil Tools Inc.

Allen Oil Tools Inc. is an oil field rental tool business located in Jourdanton, Texas, immediately south of San Antonio. Allen Oil Tools was founded ten years ago by Bill Allen, who will remain active in the business after the purchase.

KenCope paid $1 million for the company, with $300 thousand of the purchase price being paid initially and the balance of $700 thousand amortized quarterly over seven years at 10 percent interest.

Crude oil refining up from previous year

AUSTIN — The Texas Railroad Commission has announced that 58 refineries in Texas proccessed 127,646,377 barrels of crude oil and hydrocarbon blends during April. The April volume compares to 132,479,714 barrels in March and 127,136,560 barrels in April 1983.

TRRC shows July decline in pipeline permits

AUSTIN — The Texas Railroad Commission has announced that 20 permits to operate new pipelines in Texas were granted by the RRC in July. In June, the commission approved 25 permits, while 45 were issued in July 1983.

Seventeen of the new permits were for gathering pipelines, one was for a trunk transmission line, one was for a gas plant, and another was a multipurpose line.

Beard Oil signs drilling pact with Seneca

OKLAHOMA CITY — Beard Oil Company has announced that it has signed an agreement with Seneca Oil Company of Oklahoma City that provides for the drilling of 18 development wells on leases owned by Seneca and its sponsored limited partnerships in Major, Blaine and Dewey counties, Okla.

Economist sees slow Gulf Coast rebound

DALLAS — Still trying to overcome the effects of a more than 50 percent drop in drilling activity, the Texas Gulf coast likely will experience an economic recovery slower than that for the state as a whole, says RepublicBank Corporation's regional economist, Edward L. McClelland, Ph.D.

Even though business conditions in the Beaumont-Port Arthur, Galveston-Texas City and Corpus Christi Metropolitan Statistical Areas have bottomed out, many of the energy-related industries face the prospects of sluggish growth, and industrial diversification will be the key to faster economic growth, he says.

Restaurant chain succeeds with 'elegant clutter'

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK — Anyone who has ever entered a TGI Friday's sees a decor unlike that of any other restaurant except perhaps another unit of the $250 million, Dallas-based chain.

"Elegant clutter" is what Dan Scoggin calls his mooseheads, wood airplane propellers, racing sculls, stained glass, old prints, mirrors, brass fixtures and the like that somehow meld into a serene atmosphere.

Less well known is that Scoggin — who built the chain from a singles place here into more than 80 units nationwide, with more than 20 others scheduled — is one of the more original entrepreneurs in corporate management.

In his mid-40s, Scoggin writes rather than reads the book, the result of having had to learn under pressure what makes a restaurant succeed. Often his ideas are unique. He never advertises, for example. Others do it for him.

"What's the most popular topic at a cocktail party?" he asks. "The bad movie or restaurant you went to," he answers. By the same token, "if people have a phenomenal experience they'll tell 20 others, and half will come in."

To advertise is "to toot your own horn, and what's talkable about that?" asks Scoggin, who has "never spent a dime on advertising" since leaving his selling job at Boise Cascade. He lets people "discover" Friday's decor, its 25-page menu, service and prices. "They feel like evangelists."

Sound management, controls and systems are hallmarks of food chains, such as McDonald's, Burger King and Wendy's. But Scoggin claims his full-menu TGIs (thank God it's Friday) are "the most sophisticated food operation anywhere."

It wasn't always so. A decade ago his venture capital creditors were upset. Having grown his chain to six stores, success turned sour. In three units — Dallas, Houston and Atlanta — volume fell from $60,000 to $30,000 a week.

Scoggin reacted in a singular way, setting out on a 90-day trip around the country, studying successful and failing restaurants, examining their decor, their service, their food and systems, and answering his own questions.

Why, he asked, do so many restaurants have a 5-to 7-year life cycle? It was, he concluded, not just competition from without but aging from within. Restaurants failed to change with times and clientele. They sat pat.

"We found striking common denominators," he said. Putting them to work, he brought each of the three laggard restaurants back to $60,000 a week within another 90 days. Thereafter, sales grew steadily through the 1970s.

"We learned the restaurant business in that period," he says. Having devised his own ways of doing things he now tends to scorn those who seek to succeed in the business without learning from customer responses.

Scoggin claims that each unit of Friday's, now traded on the N.Y. Stock Exchange but owned largely by Carlson Companies of Minneapolis, does in food volume alone what most units sell in food and beverages. At $2.2 million to $2.4 million a year per unit, he says, his units tops that of any other chain.

Among theories developed from his learning trip is that of the four walls, in which he postulates that nothing outside the restaurant's walls affects sales volume — that success is determined only by what happens inside.

The criterion if almost absurdly simple: "If sales are up the customer likes the place. If sales are down he doesn't." The problem and its remedy lies in the people, the food, the execution. "It isn't the weather."

He discovered the success syndrome. "You will always run into it," he says. It might be a once hardworking bartender, for example, who tells customers "if you don't like it here there's 10 others waiting behind you."

That situation actually happened. The Atlanta restaurant had become one of the hottest place in town and the bartender, said Scoggin, grew to think he was the most elegant item in the place. His firing helped restore volume.

Scoggin learned to battle the "employee's cloak" syndrome. An otherwise charitable individual comes to work at the restaurant and becomes transformed into an adversary rather than a genial host or helpful hostess.

He learned to relieve customers of the question of where to eat by having a menu so large it satisfies all palates, and permits customers to dine each night on something different. The menu is studied and upgraded regularly.

Such techniques, boasts Scoggin, leave Friday's with only the grocer as competition as he heads toward his goal of $1 billion in sales by 1990 from Friday's, another chain called Dalts, and Fast Friday's, a fast food chain.

"In the next 20 years our industry must grow up. It must be as efficient as the grocer in purchasing and distribution. It must penetrate the market," he says.

"We buy the same products as the grocer," he points out. "We just package it differently."

No sure 'bail-out sign' for municipal bonds

By BILL DOYLE

Q. I'd like to invest in a municipal bond mutual fund, but I'm leery of the erosion of capital when interest rates rise. Is there any way to avoid or minimize that danger?

A. There's no sure way. It would nice if there was a "bail-out signal" that would tell us all when to sell municipal bonds or redeem shares of municipal bond funds. But none exists.

In recent years, bond prices have been more erratic than in times gone by. However, they still don't jump up and down as much as stock prices. You won't lose your shirt, overnight, in bonds or in mutual funds holding bonds.

Unhappy communists call City Hall to complain

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

SHENYANG, China — Garbage uncollected? Sewers backed up? Landlord refusing to make repairs?

Call City Hall.

In Shenyang, an industrial center of 5.2 million people in northeast China; a call to Mayor Li Changchun's hot line at City Hall gets quick action and, frequently, the mayor's personal attention.

"If a municipal department is at fault, the mayor will really land on it," says Luo Guangqian, director of the municipal general affairs office, which operates the hot line. "Li Changchun has committed his government to be upright, pragmatic and highly efficient, and he abhors bureaucratic do-nothings."

NOT ALL THE complaints are about matters of "urban housekeeping." The mayor also has acted at the request of callers to get food stores opened in new residential areas, to investigate charges of favoritism in factory promotions, to stop price gouging by city stores and to halt the diversion of scarce fresh vegetables into the black market.

Under China's system, local governments, especially those as large as that in Shenyang, the capital of Liaoning province, are responsible for economic development, industrial production, suburban farming and a wide range of other matters, such as food supplies, housing, family planning and jobs for demobilized soldiers — problems generally beyond the scope of an American mayor's office.

"If it happens in Shenyang, it is Li Changchun's responsibility as mayor," Luo said, "and that is what makes the hot line important. It gives the people closer contacts with the municipal government, and lets the mayor know quickly where the problems are."

As much sense as this makes, the special City Hall telephone, which is manned 24 hours a day, was a bold initiative for China when it was installed last September. The entrenched bureaucracy usually tries to keep people at as great a distance as possible, and the Chinese Communist Party has a notable dislike for spontaneous expressions of any sort of dissent.

"There were a lot of very nervous, very anxious people around here the first few weeks of the hot line," a young provincial official recounted. "Li's hot line seemed to many people not just an effort to cut through the bureaucracy but actually an invitation to storm City Hall."

NOBODY HAS laid siege to City Hall so far. But the calls have flowed in at the rate of about 30 a day, according to officials who take down the citizen complaints.

Of the 6,600 complaints in the first eight months of operation, 80 percent are now regarded as "basically solved," officials said, while efforts are continuing on about another 8 percent.

Most of the rest cannot be solved quickly, perhaps not at all, Luo said, because they require construction of new highways, rerouting of the railroads that crisscross Shenyang or changes in central government policy.

LAT Photo

Song Yang, an official in the mayor's office in Shenyang, China, takes a complaint from an irate citizen.

Only a small propotion, less than 10 percent, of the complaints are regarded as entirely unfounded, he said, "and then we do our best to explain the situation to the person and seek his understanding."

There are almost no crank calls. In fact, the statistics understate the hot line's impact on Shenyang and the way it is governed. Li, who at 39 is young for a Chinese mayor, is an engineer who favors a systems approach to problems. He generally orders an investigation of each complaint, so that any related complaints can be uncovered, and then the whole problem can be dealt with.

WHEN A chemical factory worker complained that despite three years of requests he had been unable to get his local housing department to put up a door, a survey found that there were more than 400 similar cases, and action was ordered in them all.

Complaints from residents of new apartment buildings that there were no food stores in their neighborhoods, and that as a result they had to travel back to their old homes to use their ration books, also got the mayor's personal attention. It turned out that almost 80,000 people were involved, and the city's planning system was found to be badly flawed, for it provided stores and other consumer services in new districts only after they were fully occupied.

When a worker from a machine tool factory — one of the few anonymous callers — charged that the best vegetables from suburban farms were being diverted into the black market by bribes to managers of state stores, Li again investigated personally. He ordered a reorganization of the city's purchasing system to give farmers higher prices and ensure stable vegetable supplies at the state stores.

COMPLAINTS FROM a number of districts about local officials forcing residents of sidewalk shanties to move out, often with nowhere to go, led to a major shake-up in Shenyang's system of neighborhood administration.

"Most of these shanties were put up during the Cultural Revolution, when the city was not building new housing," Luo said. "Now, we have an extensive housing program, and we would like the people to move. But this has to be done through persuasion, case by case, because although these are shacks, they are still people's homes.

"Local cadres were being very rough, however, and there was a lot of discontent. The hot line brought this to the mayor's personal attention, and a better program was worked out. Local cadres also were taught an important lesson about serving the people."

Even seemingly routine complaints are reported to Li by the veteran officials, each carefully screened for a "responsible attitude," who take the calls and relay them to municipal bureaus for action.

CONSUMING INTERESTS

Burgers have 'the right stuff' for convenience

By LINDA ANDERSON

I should be ashamed to admit it, but I am in favor of convenience foods. They may cost more and may not be as nutritious as homemade foods, but as a working wife and mother of four children — not to mention the growing kitten and the enormous dog — I can use all the help I can get.

Oscar Mayer recently introduced Stuffin' Burgers, frozen hamburger patties "stuffed" with different fillings. We tested Stuffin' Burgers with mushroom filling and Stuffin' Burgers with Mexican-style filling for price, taste, texture and advertising accuracy. The testers were the usual adults, teenagers and small children.

Stuffin' Burgers are available in packages of two per package, and according to package information, each pattie is ¼ pound. Most flavors cost $2.09 per package of two (except Cheese and Bacon, which costs 10- or 20-cents more), although I found one on sale for $1.79 per package. (Prices listed are from a local supermarket. Prices at other locations may vary.)

The package information claims the patties are made of "lean ground beef," and "The lean ground beef in this product contains 25 percent fat, whereas the U.S. Government standard for ground beef is 30 percent fat." And according to ingredient listing, Stuffin' Burgers (at least the two varieties we tried) seem to have a minimum of strange-sounding ingredients. The only ingredients listed on the labels which I might not ordinarily have around the house were dextrose and monosodium glutamate. (And I at least I know what they are — dextrose is a type of sugar, and MSG is a flavor intensifier.)

Stuffin' Burgers were a big hit with the tasters. The adult male liked both flavors, but the teenagers and the 3-year-old testers were partial to the mushroom burgers. (When the 3-year-old was offered dessert, she said, "Is there any more Stuffin' Burger?")

I, of course, was impressed by the ease of preparation. The burgers can be prepared in a microwave, a conventional oven or a frying pan. I opted for the quickest method — the skillet.

(However, one of my co-workers said he tried the pizza-flavored Stuffin' Burger and was disappointed in the texture. He said it was "...strange. The meat wasn't there so much for the flavor but to hold the stuffing together." And although he said he probably could have made the same thing from scratch for much less the cost, he did eat both patties by himself.)

Each pattie costs more than $1, and for feeding a crowd the price is probably too expensive (especially when ground beef in the store costs about $1.50 per pound, or about 40-cents per ¼-pound pattie).

But Stuffin' Burgers are quick — it only takes about 10 minutes to prepare kid-pleasing hamburgers using the burgers. As a mother of four eager eaters, I really appreciate that.

BETTER BUSINESS

Comparison shopping important

By LINDA TRUITT

The Better Business Bureau has received many calls this week on a company called S & H Marketing Group a.k.a. World Marketing Associates, located in Irving. The company's most recent offer gives the opportunity to purchase by mail a five-piece set of "World Traveler" luggage or a "Dressmaker" top-of-the-line sewing machine.

The company's direct mail advertisement claims the luggage is valued at $289.95 and the sewing machine is worth $312, but because the persons contacted have been computer-selected, the company is willing to offer a sizeable discount. Enclosed is a "check" to be used toward the purchase of the luggage or the sewing machine, so instead of paying $300 the customer only pays about $100.

In 1981 the Texas Attorney General filed a lawsuit against the company alleging the "checks" appear to be real negotiable instruments but are neither valuable nor negotiable, and company misrepresents the $200 savings, misrepresents the value of the merchandise and misrepresents the quality of the goods it sells. The suit also alleges the company misrepresents delivery time, and although the company promises a refund if not satisfied, fails to refund the money of the dissatisfied consumers within a reasonable time. World Marketing Associates denies the allegations. The case is still pending.

Consumers shouldn't be impressed with direct-mail advertisements offering huge savings. The prices could be inflated so the consumer is actually paying what the merchandise is worth. Comparison shopping is the only way to make sure of getting the best value for the dollar.

DEAR ABBY

Woman fears affair has lost promise

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Until the first of the year, I worked as a secretary to a very sweet man, several years older than myself. He told me his wife didn't appreciate him and he found me very comforting to talk to. One thing led to another, and we became intimate.

His wife found out about us and he laid me off, but continued seeing me whenever he could. He called me every day and we'd talk on the phone. He continued my salary although I was no longer working for him, and he also paid off all my debts and made me many promises.

When he and his wife went on a vacation, he arranged for me to stay in a motel nearby so he could spend some time with me. Well, his wife must have had him tailed because she found out about it, and he told me we'd have to "cool it" for a while.

His telephone calls have been tapering off and he seldom gets away to see me anymore. Things are not like they used to be, and I'm beginning to worry. He made many promises.

Do I have any legal rights? This is the second time this has happened to me with a married man. — FOOLED AGAIN

DEAR FOOLED: Since I am not a lawyer, I'm not qualified to tell you what your legal rights are, but if I may offer a bit of advice: Stay away from married men! As my sainted father used to say, "Every once in a while the hog kills the butcher, but most of the time, the butcher kills the hog."

DEAR ABBY: I'm getting married soon and was going to ask my favorite uncle ("Jim") to give me away because my father is dead. Now I'm wondering if I should.

You see, Uncle Jim is now a devoted family man, but he used to be a Catholic priest and he may not feel comfortable participating in a non-Catholic wedding.

Should I leave him out of my wedding? If I do, I'm afraid my mother (his sister) would be deeply hurt. My mother and all her relatives are devout Catholics.

I was raised Catholic, but now I'm a born-again Christian and so is my fiance. Should I play it safe and not invite my mother or any of her relatives?

Hurry your answer. I need to get married soon before this guy changes his mind again. — GETTING MARRIED IN FLORIDA

DEAR GETTING: Ask your uncle if he wants to give you away, and don't try to second-guess his feelings. Invite your mother and the relatives you want and let them decide whether they want to accept or not.

Your closing sentence causes me to question your maturity. If the guy you want to marry might "change his mind" (again, yet!), perhaps you should slow down and rethink the whole thing.

DEAR ABBY: This concerns the frustrated couple who were unable to marry because the man's wife had left him and he couldn't find her in order to obtain a divorce. The wife had not been heard of for over four years and all efforts to find her had failed. Obviously the man couldn't marry again without divorcing his wife, so they turned to you for advice.

You suggested that they retain a lawyer. Abby, why spend money on lawyers? I had the same problem — only I couldn't find the husband who had left me.

I went to three lawyers before one told me that all I needed was my husband's Social Security number. I found it, gave it to the lawyer, and he located my husband in no time at all. — JUST HELPING OUT

Transferees on the move

Copley News Service

Corporate transferees and their families are on the move. They're buying more homes, at higher prices, than they have for years.

This is now a major segment of the total home-buying market — families being relocated from one city to another by an employer.

During the second quarter of 1984, more home sales were made to transferees than any other quarter during the past five years, according to a report issued by RELO Inter-City Relocation Service. Such sales increased by 26 percent over the same quarter of last year.

Prices of those transferee-purchased homes also increased. The average price was 33 percent higher than prices during the second quarter of 1983.

In fact, this year's second quarter was nearly the best (greatest dollar volume) three-month period ever for RELO, the nation's oldest and largest broker referral network.

However, a slight reduction in the number of planned or future transfers has been noted within the past couple of months. This will probably cause a drop in the number of homes sold to transferees during the next three to four months.

Decisions by individuals to transfer from one city to another are made well in advance of the actual sale closing of the real property, it was pointed out by a RELO spokesperson.

Therefore, the transferees actually purchasing new homes during the second quarter of this year probably decided to move to new locations in early 1984 when mortgage interest rates were low.

The corporate "brass" are strongly motivated by interest rates and relocation costs when making decisions about transferring personnel. In the wake of rising interest rates during the last few months, most corporations are taking a more cautious approach to transfers.

This, of course, has an effect on the entire home sale market — particularly in metro areas throughout the country. It will make it more difficult to sell a home during the fall and winter months, and generally feeds a "buyer's market."

Trends related to prices of homes sold transferees are interesting. The average price during the second quarter of this year was $99,000. That's up from $91,350 during the same quarter of last year.

Those are national average prices. Local and regional prices varied greatly.

For example, in Tampa the average price was $92,300; in Boston, $93,100; Chicago, $106,900; Dallas, $109,000; Los Angeles, $155,100.

CURIOUS SHOPPER

Reader won't freeze meat in old wrap

By SONJA HEINZE

Q. Years ago a package of chicken bought in the supermarket had a label on it that said something to the effect: "Warning, do not store in your freezer in this wrapping." One doesn't see this label anymore. Why? Is it still necessary to take chicken out of its original wrapping before storing in the freezer?

I always wash it, dry it and wrap it carefully before freezing it, but my daughter just throws the package as bought into the freezer. Shouldn't she wash it first?

A. "In the past," writes John McClung, a director with the U.S. Department of Agriculture, "packaging materials used for fresh poultry could withstand refrigerator temperatures but did not hold up at freezer temperatures. If poultry were frozen in its original wrapper, the wrapper could easily break or tear, and the poultry would then dry out or get 'freezer burn.' "

Most packaging materials now used by poultry processors can withstand freezer temperatures without breaking, and if you plan on using the poultry within two months, it's not necessary to repackage it. For longer periods, it is recommended that the meat be rewrapped in high-quality, moisture-vapor proof packaging to prevent loss of quality and flavor.

Washing the poultry before freezing would remove any surface bacteria that could potentially cause spoilage, but this isn't necessary if the meat has stayed cold and wrapped from the store.

Q. In a book called "Animal Factories" by Jim Mason and Peter Singer, it states that there are 15 million pounds of cancerous tissue found by meat inspectors from the Department of Agriculture and that this meat is rejected for human use.

However, it also states that this cancerous meat is reprocessed, not thrown away, and is fed to living animals as part of their feed. Isn't it dangerous to humans to recycle cancerous tissue?

A. Condemned meat is recycled. The protein residues may be put into animal feed, and the rendered fats are used mainly for making soap.

Donald Houston, administrator of the Food Safety and Inspection Service of the Department of Agriculture, states that if an animal carcass is found to have cancer, the meat is condemned for human use. There is one exception, however. In the case of cancer of the eye (epithelioma), if the cancer is localized in the eyes, the head is condemned only, and the rest of the carcass is passed for use as human food.

Cancerous and other condemned meat is processed in a pressure cooker at 250 degrees Fahrenheit for 30 minutes. Houston assures us that all bacteria, viruses and cancer cells are destroyed in the process.

Q. I wax my floor, my furniture and my car, but I don't want my apples waxed, and obviously all of them in the supermarkets are waxed. Will washing get this wax off? Is this wax mixed with chemical bug repellants, to further complicate our lives?

A. Most apples sold in supermarkets are coated with wax, which has been applied to improve the shiny appearance of the fruit and to reduce the water loss from the fruit. Water loss results in the skin shriveling. Soap and water will not remove the wax from the skin. Peeling the apple will remove the fiber and most of the vitamin C.

G.D. Blanpied, a professor of pomology (the science of fruit growing) at Cornell University, has more to say on this subject:

"I share your disgust of waxed apples, but for a different reason. The shiny wax disguises the stage of ripening. Therefore, apples that are waxed and shiny and appear to be bright and juicy may be dull and mealy under the wax coating.

"I'm not concerned about the ingredients of the wax because the ingredients are on the Food and Drug Administration's 'generally regarded as safe' list, even though I realize that at some future date additives on this list may be withdrawn. In the meantime, as a consumer I must either eat only natural foods or shop at the chain food store, and hope the Food and Drug Administration is correct."

Professor Blanpied advises consumers to "buy unwaxed apples at a local farmer's market or roadstand," and urges consumers to contact their local county cooperative agricultural extension service (in the phone book), either the agricultural agent or home demonstration agent, to obtain leads on sources of unwaxed apples. "It's a pity," Blanpied concludes, "that one must take special steps to obtain unwaxed apples."

Landon honored with star on Hollywood Walk of Fame

Michael Landon

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Michael Landon, who appeared on television in "Bonanza" and "Little House on the Prairie" for nearly a quarter of a century, now has a star on the Hollywood Walk of Fame.

Landon, 46, on Wednesday became the 1,784th performer to be honored with a marker on the walk, the Hollywood Chamber of Commerce said.

The New York-born Landon made his film debut in 1957 in "I Was a Teenage Werewolf."

In 1959 he began work as Little Joe Cartwright on "Bonanza," a series that ran for 14 years, second among westerns only to "Gunsmoke" in TV history.

Landon then starred for nine years as Charles Ingalls on the "Little House on the Prairie" series, on which he also was a writer, director and executive producer.

Landon's most recent project is "Sam's Son," a motion picture scheduled to open Friday. Landon wrote and directed the movie, which is partly autobiographical, the Chamber of Commerce said.

Anita Bryant

SELMA, Ala. (AP) — Singer Anita Bryant, who moved here from Florida three years ago after her much publicized activities against homosexual rights, is on the road again.

She says she is moving to Atlanta sometime next week.

"Selma was a bridge into a new life for me," Miss Bryant said.

"I have to go where I'll have work and be more accessible to those who want me to work," she said. "I have a new recording contract, will be doing some work with the Nashville Network and Cable Network and in the fall I'll appear on 'Hee-Haw.'"

Miss Bryant also said she is negotiating a television special "that's looking good."

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — An 8-year-old cub reporter who got her story but missed getting Nancy Reagan's autograph now has the best of both worlds.

Angel Wiltz was so busy July 4 writing a story for the San Francisco Examiner about the first lady's discussion with a group of young people about drug abuse that she missed getting Mrs. Reagan's signature. When Mrs. Reagan found out she dashed off a letter to Angel.

"I'm very sorry that I left without giving you an autograph and I'm honored that you would like one," the first lady wrote. "I hope this letter and my signature below will take the place of the autograph you didn't receive."

Angel's mother said the little girl ~~planned~~ to frame the letter.

"She was ecstatic," said Linda Wiltz. "It was the biggest thing of her life. It's made her very aware that there are people of stature who care and care enough to come and view what's going on."

LONDON (AP)— Elizabeth Taylor, who was besieged by photographers when she visited the grave of her ex-husband Richard Burton in Switzerland, is relaxing at a remote highland lodge in Scotland, her hostess said.

Elizabeth Smith, Miss Taylor's friend of 20 years, said Wednesday the actress is at her lodge on the shore of Loch Rannoch, near the eastern Scottish city of Perth, "to get away from everybody and everything." Mrs. Smith told reporters that Miss Taylor "just wants to escape and have some peace and quiet."

She said Miss Taylor was "terribly upset" by photographers who followed her last week to Burton's grave in Celigny, Switzerland, and refused to go away and let her pay her respects unobserved.

Burton died Aug. 5 at 58 of a brain hemorrhage.

Emmy Award voter felt like weekend hostage

NEW YORK (AP) — Tom Fontana now knows what it's like to be on a sequestered jury, held hostage, or maybe stuck in ... The Twilight Zone.

Fontana, writer-producer on NBC's "St. Elsewhere," voted in two Emmy Award categories last year. As a writer, he was eligible to judge his peers only in the writing categories; his group had to decide on the outstanding-writing award for both a limited series and an informational program.

But the limited series were not so limited, and that had Fontana and 16 other writers climbing the walls of a poorly ventilated hotel room in Los Angeles one sultry summer weekend a year ago.

"I had seen all the shows in my categories before," said Fontana. "You can't believe my agony when I realized I was going to have to see four hours of 'Little Gloria ... Happy at Last' and nine hours of 'Nicholas Nickleby' again."

Other programs in the long-form bracket were "Executioner's Song" (four hours), "Who Will Love My Children?" (two hours) and the eventual winner, "Special Bulletin" (two hours).

The Academy of Television Arts & Sciences has a rule forbidding discussion among the voters. An Academy supervisor, sort of a classroom monitor, was there to ensure silence. The only activity allowed was heavy TV watching, with one break for lunch. But even that had a cruel twist.

"After watching hours and hours of 'Nicholas Nickleby,' you get stir crazy. We all were starving," Fontana said. "But, by the time we got downstairs, everybody else had eaten. They all had shorter programs to watch. All that was left were two rolls and the dregs of the cold cuts."

Fontana, who is nominated this year for outstanding writing in a dramatic series, has volunteered to be a judge again when the screening of shows and secret balloting takes place Aug. 27-28. The winners will be revealed on the annual Emmys broadcast on CBS Sept. 23.

"But I'll only do a comedy series," he said. "There'll be no long form for this boy."

Fontana must tell the Academy his current credits to avoid any conflict of interest.

"Our rules state that you can't be a nominee in that category or have worked on that show," said John Leverence, awards director for the Emmy's sponsoring Academy of Television Arts & Sciences. "We want to avoid judges who have worked on the same production company as one of the nominees, or have any affiliation with the nominees. We work on the honor system."

Another Academy rule is that programs must be watched in their entirety. That was a burden in judging the informational category, where the choices were the eventual winner, "The Body Human," and "I, Leonardo."

The "I, Leonardo" tape had a small glitch. The supervisor found a different tape, but because of the "entirety" rule, the panel had to watch the program from the beginning again. The replacement cassette also had a minor gap, producing a near rebellion.

"It was like 'Mutiny on the Bounty,'" said Fontana. "But this time we convinced the supervisor that seeing it twice should count once. I felt badly for 'I, Leonardo.' We were so antagonized that it just had to lose."

3 ♡	Pass	4 ♡	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Four of ◇.

All finesse aren't equal. There are some where, even if they succeed, the best you can do is break even. If they fail . . . Consider this example from a rubber bridge game.

The auction was simple enough. North was on the borderline of a raise to three hearts or four hearts. He chose the conservative course, but South had more than enough to continue to game.

West led his fourth-best diamond, and declarer wasted no time in going down. He won the king of diamonds, cashed the ace of trumps and finessed the jack. West took his queen and continued with a diamond.

Declarer won and tried to ruff a diamond on the table. Unfortunately, East overruffed and, in the fullness of time, declarer lost a trick in each black suit for down one.

The lure of the finesse was declarer's downfall. Had he realized he could afford to lose a trump trick and a trick in each black suit, he might have found the winning line. As long as trumps split 3-2, the contract was cold.

After winning the first diamond, declarer should immediately concede a spade to establish communications between his hand and dummy. Suppose the defenders continue with a diamond. Declarer wins and cashes the ace-king of hearts. Regardless of whether the queen drops, declarer abandons trumps and reverts to diamonds. He ruffs a diamond and, if a defender overruffs, there is still a trump on the board to take care of South's remaining diamond. If no one overruffs, declarer returns to hand with a spade ruff to ruff his last diamond on the table. Regardless of what the defenders do, they can get no more than their high trump and two black-suit tricks.

You need a better reason to take a finesse than simply because one is available.

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Friday, August 17, 1984

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Actor Robert De Niro, tennis star Guillermo Vilas, actress Kathy McNeil (Karen on "As The World Turns"), baseball's Jim Davenport and actress Maureen O'Hara share your birthday. Also born on this date: frontiersman Davy Crockett, motion picture pioneer Samuel Goldwyn and Mae West. A family member's support helps you obtain financial backing for a new business or partnership. Have more faith in yourself. Romance opens exciting doors. Remain true to your ideals. Reward those who have stood by you through thick and thin. A promotion is likely later in the year. A young person wants you for a mentor. Think it over.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): The less you publicize your intentions, the more success you will have. Worries that loomed large yesterday dwindle and disappear. Plan a special dinner with partner. Romance beckons.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): This is no time to draw back. Move forward with confidence in yourself and your ideas. A new understanding sets the stage for a romantic evening. Take care of a money matter.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Your chances for success have never been better! Return all phone calls promptly. A new opportunity arises. Seek financial assistance from a lending institution rather than borrowing from relatives.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You move closer to obtaining an important goal. Do not become frustrated if you cannot reach someone until after the weekend. Follow up on a lucky investment tip. Big gains are possible.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Bickering over trifles only slows you down. Control your temper. You need all of your energies for your work. Partnership problems can be resolved with a phone call. Make intelligent concessions.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Although you cannot afford to ignore the past, your sights should be focused on the future. Hard work brings rich financial rewards. Expand your social horizons. New contacts open important doors.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A loved one wants and deserves more of your time. Take the weekend off from work and turn your relationship around. Your social life accelerates. Let partner take the lead in romance.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Show great confidence when making business decisions. A financial deal takes on added importance. Your faith in yourself and your family are sources of strength. Love is all around you.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Fresh insights give you and your boss welcome answers. Good news arrives from those at a distance. Your concern for a child will fade once you face up to the real problem.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A busy, productive day lies ahead. Do not try to do everything by yourself. If family members can't help, call a trusted friend or colleague. A romantic or financial dilemma is solved.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A reconciliation is successful. New contracts and commitments may not come until next week. Have faith and be patient. The results you get will be worth the wait. Let partner know your intentions.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Share your feelings with a co-worker and he or she will be more helpful. Trust your intuition over a family member's advice where money is concerned. Romance enjoys highly favorable influences.

Zimbabwe's shift toward one-party rule worries West

By JOHN EDLIN

An Analysis

HARARE, Zimbabwe (AP) — When Robert Mugabe led the former British colony of Rhodesia to black-majority government four years ago, Africa — full of dictatorships and military juntas — gained a rare example of multi-party democracy called Zimbabwe.

Now a move by Mugabe, endorsed over the weekend by his ruling party, to install a one-party system has worried Western countries, which have infused Zimbabwe with hundreds of millions of dollars in aid to try to heal the scars of a seven-year war for black rule and keep it on solid economic footing.

Britain, Canada, France, the United States and West Germany are among the concerned. Those nations have been asked by the United Nations to help negotiate a settlement to South-West Africa's struggle for independence from South Africa's white-minority government. Zimbabwe, with its Western-style democracy, has been held out as a kind of inspiration for Namibia, as the disputed territory is also called.

"We have often set up Zimbabwe as a model for what can be achieved in Namibia, and ultimately in South Africa itself," said a diplomat from one of the five Western nations involved in discussions over South-West Africa. "Our case will be somewhat weakened if Zimbabwe takes the one-party route," he said on condition neither he or his country be named.

IN ZIMBABWE, the one-party system has been the focus of lively debate at political meetings and in the state-controlled media.

Zimbabwe is one of a handful of multi-party nations among the 51 member countries of the Organization of African Unity. Botswana, Egypt, Mauritius and Senegambia are examples of multi-party states.

Soldiers or former military men rule 22 African states; most of the others are run by civilians under one-party systems.

The government of South Africa, which borders Zimbabwe on the south and does not belong to the OAU, claims to run a parliamentary democracy, but its black majority of 22 million people cannot vote and are subject to other major discriminations.

Delegates to a congress by Mugabe's party, the Zimbabwe African National Union, endorsed his determination to "bring about a one-party state in the fullness of time and in accordance with the law and constitution."

The British-drafted constitution, approved at pre-independence talks in London in December 1979, guarantees a multi-party democracy until at least 1990.

Mugabe and other advocates of one-party states have contended that Western-style political systems are divisive luxuries which developing nations cannot afford.

MUGABE'S government has spent millions of dollars waging a three-year military offensive against armed rebels allegedly loyal to opposition leader Joshua Nkomo in the southwestern province of Matabeleland. The government argues that the funds would have been better spent on roads, bridges, schools and hospitals.

Critics of the one-party system counter that opposition parties serve as a conscience for the ruling party and as a check against political repression, civil rights abuses and military aggression.

After more than two decades of independence, relatively few of Africa's 500 million people enjoy the political freedom envisioned during independence struggles against colonial rulers.

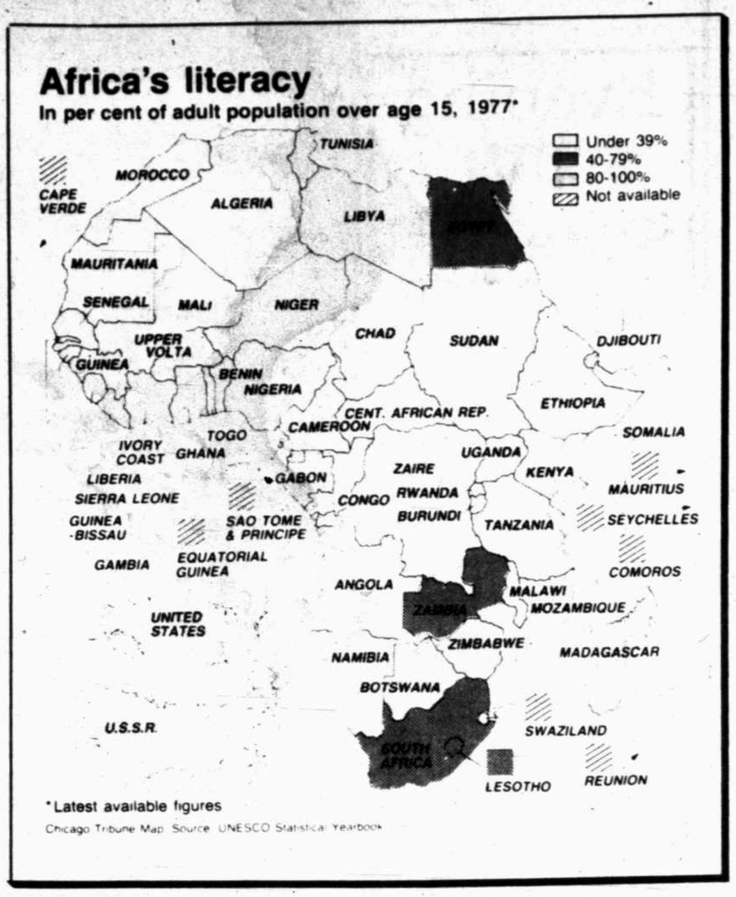

Some 70 African leaders have been deposed in about 100 coup attempts — from Ethiopia in the east to Liberia and Togo in the west. Most of the African leaders toppled from power had ruled their nations with one-party systems.

AMONG THE apprehensive observers of Mugabe's one-party plan were whites who still control the economy, said Ian Smith, the last prime minister of white-ruled Rhodesia. Those whites who were saying a year ago that they could survive under Mugabe's government, according to Smith, "now are saying if it goes on this way we will go down the drain."

Cephas Msipa, a minister of state from Nkomo's party, said his party was not against the concept of a one-party state.

Detained Bishop Abel Muzorewa's party, the United African National Council, said: "A one-party state is an evil concept. If they are so sure that all the people are united under them, why do they need legislation?"

Dennis Divaris, one of 13 white legislators who broke away from Smith's conservatives with the argument they could do more for the minority white community by working with Mugabe, said he believed a one-party state would trigger more violent opposition from the minority Matabele tribe.

Nigerians recall 1983 elections with bitterness

LAGOS, Nigeria (AP) — Just a year ago, Nigeria was absorbed in a robust, feverish exercise to renew its young civilian-run government. But the election season of August 1983 remains a remote and rather bitter memory with the military once more in power.

Candidates and supporters of six political parties were barnstorming Africa's most populous country, stirring spirited, often aggressive politicking from the teeming cities to the most remote villages.

Grassroots attachment to participatory government seemed profound, even though the voting was marred by deadly street violence, allegedly falsified returns, confusion, and charges of irregularities and administrative lapses.

The National Party of Nigeria retained the presidency in the final balloting and scored suspiciously large gains in other races.

But the election marked the beginning of the end of Nigeria's four years of constitutional rule — an experiment that followed 13 years of military government.

The end came last New Year's Eve. Senior military officers seized power in an almost bloodless coup. They condemned Nigerian politicians as inept and corrupt, and given to regarding "victory in elections as a matter of life and death."

It was this dislike of the politicians that apparently led to the abortive kidnapping July 5 of former Transport Minister Umaru Dikko in London. While branding him a master crook, the regime denied responsibility for abducting him. Nonetheless, it was seen in the West as the military government's first international misadventure, resulting in a severe strain in relations with Britain, Nigeria's former colonial master.

The appeal for civilian government endures in Nigeria, although scores of former politicians are in prison or awaiting trial on corruption charges, the six political parties have been disbanded, and anything resembling political activity has been outlawed.

It may be a decade or longer, but many analysts believe that the officers will ultimately return power in some form or another to the civilians.

"It would be their funeral, the day the military regime came out with any kind of statement saying that civilian rule is out of the question," said Stanley N. Macebuh, executive editor of the independent Lagos newspaper The Guardian.

'Disappeared ones' sought in Guatemala

GUATEMALA CITY (AP) — Their stations in life range from peasant farmers to lawyers, from students and teachers to labor leaders. Their relatives say they have looked for them at prisons, police stations, hospitals, morgues and government offices, all in vain.

They are the "disappeared ones" of Guatemala, people who vanished after they were taken by armed men, leaving families in the limbo of not knowing if they are alive or dead.

One of them is an American, J.R. Shelton, whose mother lives in Knoxville, Tenn.

The Mexico-based Guatemalan Human Rights Commission estimates 35,000 people have disappeared in this country of 7.5 million since 1963, half of them since 1978. Both years were times of growing violence from the left and the right.

Although the army, which governs by decree, currently appears to have Guatemala's 20-year-old leftist guerrilla insurgency at bay, the disappearances continue.

Heavily armed men seized Hugo de Leon, a 36-year-old teacher and law student, father of two daughters 13 and 5 years old, March 9 outside the elementary school where he taught, his wife said.

"His pupils saw four men get out of a black vehicle and before their shouts and cries they kicked him and forced him into the vehicle," she said. "We have heard nothing more about him."

Who took him away?

"As always, they were unidentified," she replied.

Mrs. de Leon joined Apoyo Mutuo, Spanish for mutual support, when relatives organized in June to press for information about the missing. The effort is unusual because many Guatemalans have been afraid to talk.

Relatives say the victims were taken by security forces or "heavily armed men" or that they don't know what happened to them.

One woman said witnesses identified the men who took her husband in February as security forces. But she said she publicly describes them only as "heavily armed men" because she is certain he is alive and fears reprisals if she says anything more about it.

A human rights commission spokesman in Mexico said witnesses can identify security forces by their weapons, vehicles, license plates and the impunity with which they act.

An official who served in the military government of Gen. Efrain Rios Montt, overthrown in 1983, said in a recent interview he gives Apoyo Mutuo little chance for success.

Salvadorans using 'indiscriminate' bombing

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Salvadoran military is using "indiscriminate" bombing, shelling and infantry attacks to drive the civilian population out of areas where leftist guerrillas are active, two human rights groups allege.

The two groups, Americas Watch and the Lawyers Committee for International Human Rights, charge that the the attacks have killed thousands of civilians and displaced hundreds of thousands of others.

The New York-based groups, which have monitored human rights in El Salvador for several years, said the attacks appear aimed at driving civilians out of rebel-controlled areas, thus "depriving the guerrillas of a civilian population from which they can obtain food and other necessities.

"The cost of pursuing this policy, in terms of human suffering, is beyond measurement. And, of course, it is a policy that flagrantly violates the laws of war."

Salvadoran officials were not immediately available for comment on the Americas Watch-Lawyers Committee report, released Wednesday. But in the past, the government has denied allegations that its forces deliberately attack civilian targets.

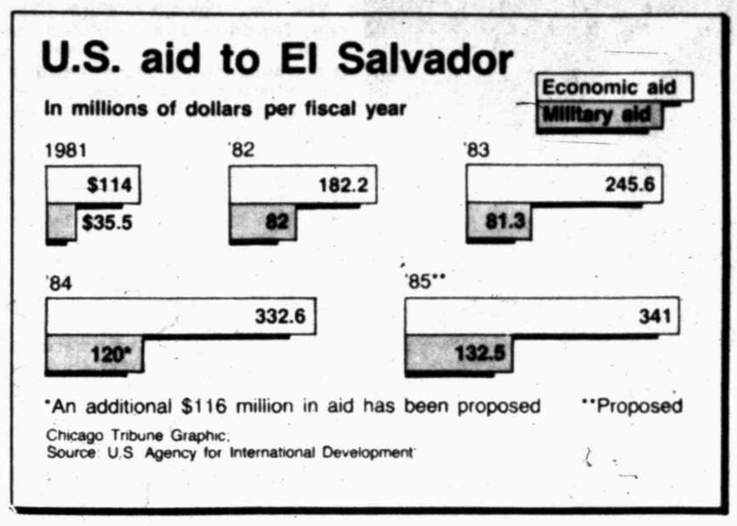

In a report to Congress last month, the Reagan administration praised the Salvadoran military for "growing professionalism and an improved aggressiveness in combat." The administration has dismissed previous charges of indiscriminate attacks as unreliable or politically motivated.

The new 65-page report on El Salvador's human rights does note a "marked decline in the number of death squad killings and disappearances" that followed stern U.S. warnings to Salvadoran security forces late last year.

But the two groups added:

"We believe that the few positive developments in El Salvador are overshadowed by the indiscriminate attacks by the Salvadoran armed forces on civilian non-combatants in conflict zones.

"Thousands of non-combatants are being killed by indiscriminate bombardment from the air, indiscriminate shelling, and indiscriminate ground sweeps. Thousands more are being wounded. And hundreds of thousands are being driven from their homes and forced into the misery of displacement."

ACT president has hopes for future

NEWTONVILLE, Mass. (AP) — Some day, every American television set will be hooked into a vast video lending library. Children will be able to sample the world the way they now scan Saturday morning cartoons.

The vision belongs to Peggy Charren, founder and president of Action for Children's Television, a 20,000-member advocacy organization with a goal of bringing more variety and less commercialism to children's TV.

Sixteen years after she was roused into activism by a dearth of good programming for her two young daughters, Mrs. Charren admits that the ideal she imagines is still far away.

"I think broadcasting is worse for children than it ever was," she says. "There's not now one regular daily program from any major network that's for children. Can you believe that? That should tell you something about the state of children's television today."

Each week, the average American child watches 27 hours of television, mostly a succession of sitcoms, soap operas and game shows made for adults, she says.

Of the programming made specially for kids, "it's almost all comic book shows except for that part of the library that the public pays for, and public broadcasting can't do nearly enough," Mrs. Charren says.

At 56, Mrs. Charren, a small, intense woman with probing eyes and a quick tongue, insists she is not out to clean up TV.

"We think censorship is worse than any kind of junk on television," she says. "The problem for us is to make sure there is enough choice."

From walk-up offices in a weatherbeaten frame house west of Boston, Action for Children's Television, with an annual budget of $300,000, is trying to expand the options for children who are old enough to watch TV, but too young to influence what they see.

Since 1968, ACT has concentrated its efforts in the regulatory arena, pressing the Federal Trade Commission for restrictions on advertising directed at children and the Federal Communications Commission for rules requiring programs geared to young viewers.

The organization won a big victory in 1974 when the FCC adopted a policy statement asserting that broadcasters have "a special obligation to serve children." At the time, the commission was four years into proceedings to consider mandatory children's programming.

All that changed last December when the FCC decided against imposing requirements for children's programming on commercial television, ruling that children are adequately served by educational programs on cable and public television. Mrs. Charren's group has appealed the decision.

Dick Hollands, senior vice president, television, for the Washington-based National Broadcasting Association, says that while broadcasters have consistently opposed attempts to legislate children's programming, they are sensitive to the needs of kids.

"There's a great deal more attention being given this subject, especially from the networks, to make sure they don't do anything harmful to the children viewers and to do some things that are very positive and good," he says.

JoAnn Brokaw, vice president for educational and community services for CBS, says the networks are no longer thinking simply in terms of children's television, but of how to make programming throughout the day suitable for young viewers.

For seven years, CBS has sponsored a Television Reading Program that provides free background material and scripts of certain prime time programs as educational aids for teachers, she says.

Hudson Review honors British writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The Hudson Review says British writer Anthony Powell has been named recipient of the 1984 Bennett Award "in recognition of his distinguished achievement in the art of the novel."

Powell, who lives in Somerset, will attend the formal presentation of the $15,000 award at the U.S. Embassy in London Oct. 25.

The citation accompanying the prize describes Powell as a writer who in "seeing life as a dance that is graceful and dangerous, time as both an opportunity and a menace, and people as comic heroes, equally brave, clownish and lovely, has created in his writing what only great artists can create: A world for which we can weep and cheer."

Democratic vice presidential candidate Geraldine Ferraro speaks to the Sheet Metal Workers' International Association meeting of business agents in Seattle. She received a rousing welcome Wednesday.

Ferraro: Administration has one set of rules for rich, another for poor

SEATTLE (AP) — Geraldine Ferraro, beset by financial disclosure questions, is keeping up her attack on economic policies of the Reagan administration and charging that it plays by one set of rules "for most Americans and one for the privileged few."

At a meeting of the International Association of Sheet Metal Workers, the New York congresswoman said Wednesday that Americans want a government that plays by the same rules for everyone.

"When six million more Americans slide into poverty since this administation took office and they call it an economic recovery, is that fair?" she said.

"When someone who made $200,000 in taxes and got $60,000 back on a tax break and someone who made $30,000 or less got nothing back or had taxes go up, is that fair?"

Members of the union, which endorsed the Mondale-Ferraro ticket this week, clapped and shouted "no" after each question.

Ms. Ferraro made her remarks as she neared the end of her five-day trip to California, Oregon and Washington state, all targeted by the campaign as important to a November victory.

She was attending a rally here today before heading east to spend the weekend in Queens, N.Y., while her husband undergoes surgery for a hernia.

On her first solo campaign expedition, her attempt to focus on the problems of senior citizens, crime control, job opportunities and the environment has been overshadowed by a controversy surrounding her husband's tax returns.

Her husband, Manhattan real estate developer John Zaccaro, said Wednesday he is reconsidering an earlier decision not to release his tax returns. Ms. Ferraro had said earlier he would make them public.

Ms. Ferraro toured the Willamette River on Wednesday, blasted the Reagan administration for its environmental record and kept up her attack on its economic policies.

"This administration likes to talk about the booming economy, but for the farmers, the workers and the fisherman of Oregon, the recession is not yet over," she said. "This administration likes to talk about the booming economy, but for the people of Oregon, there's no recovery until workers recover their jobs."

Ferraro stuck between two worlds

By ANN BLACKMAN

SEATTLE (AP) — Geraldine Ferraro is caught between two worlds — the career woman blazing new pathways for her gender, and the wife of a successful businessman unaccustomed to the scrutiny of public life.

The Democratic vice presidential nominee is finding a pioneer's campaign trail fraught with conflicts and contradictions in her public and private lives.

And she's learning she can't have it both ways.

On her first campaign swing up the West coast, the candidate hailed as the new role model for women has been tripped up by questions that plague many of the nation's growing number of two-paycheck couples: which career comes first — his or hers?

She's running for vice president. He's running a business.

Ms. Ferraro's husband, John Zaccaro, is a wealthy real estate developer in Manhattan who makes it very clear he is proud of his wife, children and business.

But he says frankly that he doesn't want to move to Washington if his wife is elected vice president, insisting: "Somebody has to pay the bills."

Zaccaro's son, John Jr., said that when his parents married 24 years ago, his father didn't want his mother to work.

"Then he thought about it and knew it was unfair," young Zaccaro said during a chat aboard his mother's campaign plane.

Last Sunday, Ms. Ferraro told reporters she wants her husband to make public his federal income tax returns, as she promised he would last month. But she admitted later that she made the promise without consulting him.

Zaccaro refused, but after days of controversy that has overshadowed his wife's historic campaign and dogged presidential nominee Walter F. Mondale as well, Zaccaro said Wednesday that he may reconsider.

An Analysis

Ms. Ferraro's comment: "It's his decision."

Throughout her five-day campaign swing up the West coast, Ms. Ferraro has made a determined effort to prove that as a former teacher, prosecutor and a three-term congresswoman, she is qualified to run for the nation's second highest office.

At every stop, she has challenged the record of the Reagan administration on its policies of arms control, deficit spending, crime control and the environment.

But when confronted with questions about her husband's finances, she fell back on a stereotype that made many professionals wince. She joked that women married to Italian men would understand she can't make decisions for her husband.

By all appearances, Ms. Ferraro is close to her family — a point not lost on Democratic presidential candidate Mondale who, like Predident Reagan, wants to identify his campaign with traditional family values.

But traditions are changing.

Like more and more professional American couples, Ms. Ferraro and Zaccaro had to consider the prospects of a commuter marriage.

Since she was elected to Congress in 1978, the New York congresswoman has lived in Washington during the week and commuted home on weekends. Zaccaro lives in Queens and has taken day-to-day responsibility for their three children, now ages 22, 20 and 18.

Ms. Ferraro is the first woman to campaign for vice president. And of the pressures and problems she's encountered so far, she said in understatement this week: "It's been a little bit tough."

And many professional couples are watching to see how she and her husband resolve their dilemma.

Says Ruth McFarland, a candidate for Congress from Oregon: "Gerry is taking heat for all of us."

Mondale tries to focus attention on Reagan

NORTH OAKS, Minn. (AP) — Walter F. Mondale is trying to keep attention on President Reagan, and not problems nagging his own presidential campaign, with a charge that the administration's rosy budget estimates are election-year distortions.

Mondale, who returned home to Minnesota on Wednesday from a two-day Southern campaign trip, was concentrating today on the nation's farm economy and agricultural policy.

He was conducting a private meeting in nearby St. Paul with agricultural experts and some Democratic members of Congress with a special interest in farm issues.

At a rally Wednesday at the Kentucky state fair in Louisville, Mondale said, "I'm a farm kid and I'm going to make agricultural policy a major issue in this campaign."

He added, "This is the worst farm year since 1933," and he blamed enormous budget deficits for keeping interest rates high, a situation that he said imposed an "invisible tax" on farmers who are heavily dependent on credit.

But he was most critical of figures released earlier in the day by the White House Office of Management and Budget that trimmed administration projections of the budget deficit for the current fiscal year by $3.5 billion, to $174.3 billion.

The report also predicted the deficit at the end of the decade would be about $100 billion less than a projection released last week by congressional economists. In addition, the administration projected interest rates at the end of the decade far lower than those in the congressional report.

Ferraro's friends say lawyer approved loans

NEW YORK (AP) — In 1978, a circle of Geraldine Ferraro's friends and partisans met in the living room of her Queens home and discussed over coffee her first try for a seat in Congress.

One of the decisions they made, at the dawn of her political career, has resurfaced six years later as an issue in Ms. Ferraro's campaign as the Democratic vice presidential nominee.

The question: How could money be raised for the campaign?

A former lawyer for the Federal Election Commission has contradicted sworn statements from Ms. Ferraro's husband about what was said. And others who say they were present charge the lawyer is the one who is lying.

Those who were there — "eight or ten," one says; a dozen, says another — had come together at the Forest Hills home to decide how to mount the former Queens assistant district attorney's first try for elected office.

"They had to bring in dining room chairs, there were so many people," remembered David Blanksteen, an insurance broker who was treasurer in Ms. Ferraro's attempt for a congressional seat. "But what I remember most clearly was this lawyer, this expert, who told us about election law."

The lawyer was David J. Stein, a former counsel for the Federal Election Commission who had recently resigned and gone into private practice. Then 30, Stein was asked whether Ms. Ferraro could borrow money from her husband, a wealthy real state investor, and other family members to help finance her race.

Stein acknowledges he was there. It is what he said when quizzed about campaign finance laws that is under dispute.

Ms. Ferraro's husband, John Zaccaro, has said under oath that Stein approved as a "proper method" the financing of his wife's campaign by family loans. This week, Stein issued a statement claiming he had said no such thing.

One GOP delegate uncommitted

SPRINGFIELD, Ill. (AP) — Susan Catania of Chicago is taking a lonely stand into a Republican National Convention that has been carefully orchestrated as a Ronald Reagan lovefest — she's the only GOP delegate in the nation not committed to the president's renomination.

That position may make her the solitary dissenter among the 2,234 other delegates heading to Dallas to coronate the Reagan-Bush ticket for another four years.

Mrs. Catania, 42, a former state representative and unsuccessful candidate for the GOP nomination for lieutenant governor in 1982, ran as an uncommitted delegate in the March 20 Illinois presidential primary. With a moderate-to-liberal position on many issues, she's often at odds with Reagan policy.

She advocates spending less on defense and more on social programs, for instance. The mother of seven daughters, she is an ardent supporter of the Equal Rights Amendment.

And she's from an area she feels has been shortchanged by the Reagan administration.

"There is real disenchantment with the policies seen so far in the Reagan-Bush administration with the people who vote in the 1st Congressional District," Mrs. Catania said in a recent interview.

"I ran uncommitted because I thought that was the correct way to represent myself and the people in this area," she said.

She was the leading vote-getter in the district, but with only 691 votes. The district is heavily Democratic and 90 percent black. Mrs. Catania is white.

Mrs. Catania, now a political consultant and lobbyist for Common Cause, said she hasn't decided if she will cast her vote — one of 93 allotted to the Illinois delegation — for Reagan.

"If I'm not happy with the platform I probably will not vote for anyone," she said.

"I'd like to see...what Reagan and (Vice President George) Bush plan to use as their principal campaign points. I'd like to see some concern for cities," she said, noting that her district has the greatest concentration of public housing projects in Illinois.

Although she's not crazy about Reagan, she says she wouldn't stray so far afield as to vote for Walter Mondale, the Democratic candidate.

"He is too inclined to try to just give away big piles of money without having enough concern about how the money is spent," she said. "Here in Chicago we've seen abuses of that process for years."

In 1988, when Mrs. Catania hopes GOP moderates will have regained control of the party, she'd like to see Sen. Howard Baker of Tennessee run for president with Transportation Secretary Elizabeth Dole as his running mate.

Mrs. Catania was once a registered independent voter but she switched to Republican when she decided to quit working for a chemical company and get into politics.

She figured the GOP would be the party with the shorter line in such a Democratic stronghold as Chicago.

Utah delegate may be youngest elector

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — At 18, David Fowers will be one of the youngest delegates to the Republican national convention in Dallas next week. But a GOP win in Utah in November might make him the youngest person ever to cast a vote in the Electoral College.

Indeed, Fowers, is setting his sights still higher.

"President in the year 2000. I'll be 35," he says with a self-conscious laugh, citing the minimum age at which one may seek the nation's highest elected office.

Fowers was elected one of Utah's five Republican presidential electors at the party's state convention in June. A preliminary investigation by the Congressional Research Office indicates he is the youngest person ever elected to the position.

Fowers says the research was being conducted at the request of U.S. Sen. Jake Garn, R-Utah.

"As far as we know, I am the youngest. But there are still some possibilities," he said. "They haven't found anyone younger."

Presidential electors are chosen by national political parties in each state to be members of the Electoral College which actually elect the president. The number of electors is equal to the state's number of senators and representatives, and they cast their ballots for the candidate who receives the most popular votes.

Should the president win in Utah — a state that gave him more than 70 percent of its vote in 1980 — Fowers and Utah's four other Republican electors will cast votes for Reagan. Should Mondale win, their Democratic counterparts would vote for Mondale.

Presently, there are 538 electors nationwide, and a candidate needs at least 270, or one more than 50 percent of the total, to become president.

"I'm one of Reagan's 270," says Fowers, who graduated in May from Bountiful High School.
