Reagan to make Caribbean a priority

By JOHN P. WALLACH
Foreign Affairs Editor
Hearst Feature Service

WASHINGTON — President Reagan Wednesday will declare Central America and the Caribbean "our number one foreign policy priority" and ask Congress for $300 million, including $100 million for El Salvador, for a revolutionary new "economic support fund" intended to channel money directly to the people without falling into the hands of corrupt governments.

According to an advance text of the speech Reagan will deliver, he also will propose preferential trade benefits for the six Caribbean Basin nations designed to boost U.S. private investment. The controversial proposal will mean all their major exports, except textiles, will come here duty-free.

The six nations are: El Salvador, Honduras, Costa Rica, Jamaica, Belize and the Dominican Republic.

Finally, Reagan will offer an across-the-board 10 percent tax cut to any U.S. companies that invest in these six nations as well as expanded guarantees for American investment through the Overseas Private Investment Corporation (OPIC), a government agency.

The Reagan plan, which he will disclose in an address to the permanent council of the Organization of American States (OAS), combines the principles of Reaganomics, particularly his deep belief in the free operation of the market place, with a kind of "new federalism" extended to Central America.

What is unique about the Caribbean basin plan, a senior White House official said, is that none of the money will go directly to the six governments. The plan is co-sponsored by Mexico, Venezuela and Canada.

"If they (the six nations) want the money, they will be forced to make a deposit in an American bank," the policymaker said, where the $300 million will be deposited by the U.S. government as interest-bearing capital in what are known in banking circles as "guaranteed callable accounts."

The small businessman or entrepreneur in El Salvador would apply for a loan to a bank in his own country. If the U.S. bank decides the project has merit, and approves the credit worthiness of the borrower, a line of credit would be extended to the foreign bank.

The loan application "would be judged as an ordinary commercial bank transaction," he added, except for the fact that the American bank would know that the U.S. government is standing behind it.

"I just have never heard of a scheme like this," an OAS official said.

"It runs counter to the whole philosophy of foreign aid -that you give so much money to a government to be used for such and such a purpose. You have a feeling for how the money is actually used. But you don't have any control over it," particularly with a government that may be corrupt, he said.

"Here you do have control — you are giving a loan to a foreign government on the sole condition that is administered by the donor government (the U.S.) and that the money never leaves the United States (a line of credit is extended instead.)" Critics of the plan may charge that it shows the U.S. has no confidence in the El Salvador government.

But supporters of the Reagan proposal contend that it has one major and important advantage -"we want to be sure the money goes to the middle class. The only way to get a country back on its feet is through indigenous growth. They (the middle class) are the people who can do it."

He explained that "we want to make sure the funds go to private enterprise and not to the government." Reagan intends to submit the Caribbean basin plan to Congress on Wednesday.

Even more controversial, however, may be his proposal for lifting tariff barriers on all exports, except textiles, to the United States, Canada, Mexico and Venezuela. It undoubtedly will hurt some labor-intensive industries in the United States but will be welcomed by the business community.

"If you can sell 10,000 shoes instead of 1,000 shoes every month in the United States, that's a good thing," one

Commissioners deal with variety of issues

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Midland County commissioners on Monday decided to sell the old county barn and plot for a sky-high sum, couldn't recall if a museum is to be included in the proposed $5.5-million library, quibbled somewhat but decided to pay hydrologists an overdue bill, were disturbed over cut-up county roads and took no action on who collects delinquent county taxes.

Commissioners were unanimous on putting the 1935-built, 2,950-square-foot old County Machine Building and plot at Front Avenue and Pecos Street up for sale for not less than $360,000, although County Judge Bill Ahders said he understands that a bid of $400,000 for the property "already has been made."

Currently, the building is leased to Goodrich Heji.

"I feel that the time is right (to sell the old barn)," said Commissioner Durward Wright. "I would like the money earmarked for the building fund."

"Courthouse-building fund?" asked Commissioner Charlie Welch.

"Oui," re-affirmed Welch.

"Capital improvements," reassured Commissioner Win Brown.

For the past several years, commissioners have been pondering over how to finance courthouse expansion either via tacking a tower onto the 1930-built courthouse or building an annex at Baird Street and Illinois Avenue.

MEANWHILE, THE commissioners' quandary over a new library became moot last spring, when The First National Bank of Midland offered to donate $5.5 million toward replacing the 1950-ish old public library with a four-story edifice between the two proposed 40-story bank towers in downtown Midland. The commissioners accepted the offer.

But on Monday, commissioners were unsure if they had ordered the Midland County Museum, now located in the basement of the old library, to be included in the new design.

"I got news it was totally left out of the plans," said Welch.

Commissioner C. DeWayne Davis concurred.

"There is no provision in the schematics I've seen for the museum," Davis said.

"It should be included," Welch suggested.

"I assumed it already was," voiced Wright.

The commissioners agreed to check into the status of the museum.

WHO'S TO COLLECT the $150,000 or so in delinquent county taxes was unresolved in the day-long session. Previously, the county attorney has been acting as collector of delinquent county taxes, but apparently that is changing now that the Midland County Tax Appraisal District is in operation.

Welch, who represents the county on the appraisal district board, proposed that Jimmie Oglesby, the board's legal adviser and delinquent tax collector for four taxing entities (city of Midland, Midland College, Midland County Hospital District and Midland Independent School District) be authorized to collect the county's delinquent taxes. Oglesby is a former county attorney.

"It doesn't cost the county anyway," said Welch, who noted that new legislation allows for the tacking on of a 15 percent fee on overdue taxes to reward the collector. "We all know we don't need double paperwork," Welch said.

Though Welch was arguing for the Oglesby contract, Midland County Tax Assessor-Collector Frances Shuffield has recommended that the county retain Austin-based tax attorneys Calame, Linebarger & Graham to collect Midland County delinquent taxes. That firm currently is collecting past-due taxes for the Greenwood Independent School District.

County Attorney J. Scott Henderson elected not to side with Welch and remained neutral.

"I'm not going to say anything bad about him (Oglesby); but this other firm, I'm not going to say anything bad about them, either," Henderson said. "I think either way would be good. This other firm (Calame, Linebarger & Graham) is good, according to their reputation."

ALBERT STEWART, superintendent of the county's road-and-bridge department, and the commissioners expressed distress over the increasing incidence of housing developers, their contractors and utility companies cut-

Beirut car bombs, fire kill 12

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Two cars packed with explosives blew up in an outdoor market in mostly Moslem West Beirut today, and police sources said 12 people were killed and 40 wounded, including schoolchildren.

Witnesses said the first car bomb went off at 1:20 p.m., drawing crowds to the scene. Ten minutes later a second car exploded near the crowd, apparently accounting for most of the casualties.

The blasts set off a huge fire that trapped people in flaming ruins, and the police sources said the casualty figure could rise.

Beirut state television said a hitherto unknown group calling itself the "Holy Struggle Organization" claimed responsibility.

But a Western news agency in Beirut said it received a telephone call from a group which calls itself the "Front for the Liberation of Lebanon from Foreigners," also claiming responsibility.

It said the group threatened to "continue a series of operations mostly in Lebanon and abroad until April 28." It did not elaborate and the significance of the date could not be determined.

The front is believed to be right-wing and has said in previous communiques that it wants to rid Lebanon of foreigners, an apparent reference to Palestinians and Syrians.

Scores of ambulances raced to and from the seafront Rawche district where the bombs went off while militiamen fired automatic weapons into the air to clear away traffic.

Some of the wounded were youngsters caught walking or riding buses home from school through the usually overcrowded shopping area.

Take precautions for tornado season

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

It's that season again, and the preparation has begun.

The possible formation of destructive tornadoes, although present throughout the year, is more prevalent in the spring.

With sophisticated equipment, radar and trained personnel, the deadly twisters are usually spotted before they even touch ground.

But as Jim Yates, meteorologist at the National Weather Service (NWS) at Midland Regional Airport, told the 135 people who gathered during the three Severe Weather Spotter Trainings held at Midland College Monday, the information gathered doesn't do anybody any good as long as it is only a piece of gathered data.

"THAT INFORMATION isn't worth the paper it's written on until we can communicate that information to the public," Yates said.

And that is where the severe weather spotters enter the scene.

"The eyewitness reports are really the best detection of all," Yates said.

According to Yates, with the work of the NWS, spotters and civil defense, and with a public that is becoming more aware of ways to protect itself against the weather, the number of people who died during tornadoes in 1981 was the lowest number in history since 1916.

The average number of people killed each year by tornadoes is 111. Last year 24 people were killed.

"By working together, it does pay off," Yates said.

The fourth annual Severe Weather Spotter Training sessions, hosted by the NWS in cooperation with the Civil Defense Offices in Midland and Hobbs, N.M., were primarily directed at the job of the NWS Severe Weather Warning System, the identification of tornadoes and other severe weather, safety tips and information on reporting procedures.

YATES SAID THE most important thing for home safety during a tornado or severe weather is a plan of action.

"You've got to know what hole to dive into," he said. "You don't have time to think, you've got to react instinctively. Know the safest place in your home."

That safest place is the lowest, most interior part of the house.

"Put as many walls as you can between yourself and the outside," Yates advised, adding that the majority of people who are killed during tornadoes are killed by flying debris.

Small rooms, such as closets or small interior hallways, are usually safer than large rooms because the structure tends to be more stable. If a family decides it will use a closet for a shelter during a storm, Yates said to store such things as blankets or sleeping bags instead of bowling balls on the shelves.

While in the designated shelter area, individuals should lay as flat as possible and protect their heads and the back of

Iran cuts its oil prices $2 in effort to boost exports

ROME (AP) — Iran is trying to boost oil exports by cutting its prices $2 a barrel in violation of OPEC's pricing rules, industry sources report, putting further pressure on the cartel to hold a meeting and attempt to prevent an unraveling of its price structure.

Iran's reduction, its third this month, brought the price of Iranian light grade to $30.20 a barrel, $3.80 below the $34 benchmark around which all OPEC members are supposed to set their prices.

Iran's action coincided Algerian reports that the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries had scheduled an emergency meeting for Saturday. It next regular meeting is scheduled for May 20.

Prospects for such a meeting remained in doubt as Saudi Arabia — the cartel's most powerful member, which recently said it had no plans to reduce its production — showed no sign of agreeing.

At the same time, industry sources in the United States said prices in the spot market, where oil not sold on long-term contract is traded, showed signs of stabilizing after several weeks of extraordinary declines.

Iran's customers were reported to have received telexes Monday informing them that the new price of Iranian light crude was $30.20 a barrel. That is $4 below the price Iran was charging as recently as three weeks ago.

Even at the lower price, Iran may not find many new buyers for its oil.

"I don't know anyone who is willing, in today's environment, to go in and buy oil from Iran," said an oil trader for a large American oil company. He said, however, Iran's action may put added pressure on other OPEC members to reduce their prices.

Iran's move underscores the difficulty OPEC faces in selling its oil in a market characterized by oversupply and weak demand. Industry estimates put OPEC's total output at less than 20 million barrels daily, the lowest in a decade.

Iran, with its finances pinched by its 17-month-old war with Iraq, is seeking to boost its export income.

ting into county roads without first getting permission of the Commissioners' Court and then properly repairing the cuts.

Oil and gas pipeline companies have been getting approval for their cuts to lay buried lines and have been making proper repairs, noted Wright. But some of the 650-miles of county roads in the four commissioner precincts are being butchered in the burgeoning residential growth of the county and particularly on the fringes of the city limits.

"If we don't get some teeth in urban development," said Davis, "somebody is going to pay down the line. Roads are being torn up."

"Time is now," said Welch.

County Clerk Rosenelle Cherry said the county currently does not have any restrictions to govern cutting into public roads. However, Wright noted that the county could "charge inspection fees" to ensure proper repair work. Nevertheless, the commissioners are summoning housing developers to the March 8 Commissioners' Court meeting to discuss unauthorized road cuttings.

Later in the meeting, Henderson alluded to the telephone company's laying of underground cable.

"I think we ought to lean on Southwestern Bell a little harder (on repair work) than the city does," the county attorney said.

In other road matters, Stewart said that his crews recently have laid down 2½ miles of caliche on County Roads 137 West, 143 West, 165 South, 1195 South, 98 East, 128 South and Warehouse Road.

CONSTABLE TOM McGinnis was granted his request to fit his deputies in uniforms and to hire a fourth deputy. The additional deputy was approved in a 3-2 vote, as Welch and Wright cast dissenting votes. "I have no argument with the program," Welch said, "(but the county) is spending money we don't have."

At present, Deputy Constable Monte Kay Cross is charged with serving criminal warrants; Deputy Constable Ron Rice serves civil papers, and Deputy Hugh "Buzz" Buzzell patrols the county roadways.

The fourth deputy, who will be grossing about $1,600 monthly, will serve as animal control officer and will be ticketing motorists who litter the roadways.

WELCH, WHO has been vocal in his criticism of hydrologists Ed and Joe Reed, cast the only dissenting vote on paying the hydrologists their $4,808.05 bill for extra work which augmented a $52,000 study of Midland Draw. The 1981 study was requested by the city and county and was paid for in a 62-38 percent split.

Welch contended that the hydrologists should have absorbed the added costs, which represented some repeat testing which was required due to a malfunction meter on an effluent flow from the city's sewage treatment plant.

"Did we make a second contract for the work?" Welch pungently asked in referring to the billing.

"No sir," replied Ed Reed.

"We made the best estimates of those costs," said his son, Joe Reed. "I think it was understood it was estimations."

He said initial readings from a meter were in error, and that new readings, reflected in the additional billings, had to be made. "We came up with the wrong figures...and the work was wasted." The meter was to measure the effluent flow down Midland Draw.

Welch held that the meter was on a pump used to direct water to his farming operation, that trash in the line stopped up the meter and gave false readings. He said the Reeds had no business there in the first place.

"It's me, Charlie Welch, farmer," Welch sounded off, "and the city and the Reeds and nobody else had the authority to operate the pump."

Ed Reed declined to become argumentative. And Henderson voiced confidence in the Reeds and in their professionalism.

"A professional relies on personal observations, the observations and experience, collectively, of his colleagues in the field, and in science," Henderson said. "Without professional testing, we've wasted our funds on Monahans and Midland Draws," Henderson said. "Anybody can go out there and look at the draw."

"We need these people; they're professionals. I'm satisfied with their services," Henderson said. "I'm not going to be looking elsewhere for hydrologists."

Despite Henderson's plea for temperance, Welch still lashed out at the Reeds: "I had total control of that pump!"

"Charlie," Brown said to his fellow commissioner, "I think you have become too personally involved (to be objective)."

Commissioners resolved their policy on rental of the Midland County Exhibit Building by consulting with Henderson and then levying a $100 building-use fee per day and a $100 refundable cleaning and breakage fee. However, the $100 building-use fee may be waived for non-profit organizations. And, in the case of a money-making function for a non-profit organization, the commissioners may opt to take a percentage of the proceeds rather than the fee.

the necks with their hands.

HE SUGGESTED reinforcing the chosen closet with half- or quarter-inch plywood.

"It's not expensive and you only have to reinforce about three feet because you'll be low to the ground," he said.

If a person is not in a house when severe weather strikes, Yates said the main thing to do is look for a solid structure. If there isn't that type of building around, a person should get in a ditch, ravine or culvert, but always be aware of possible flooding.

"Always get out of cars and mobile homes," Yates warned. "They are death traps."

He cited the case of one tornado in which 44 persons were killed. Of the 14 who died in automobiles, 11 were trying to outrun the tornado. Their homes were not touched by damage.

"Stay put," he said. "Don't try to outrun it. They (tornadoes) are unpredictable. They can travel 5-10 mph and have sudden bursts of 70 mph. They can do 90-degree turns, they can stop, they can go backwards.

"They can do pretty much what they want to do."

Tornadoes cannot form without the presence of thunderstorms, hail, strong winds or flooding, Yates said. But don't confuse a tornado's wrath with the mildness of a "dust devil." There is such a thing as an invisible tornado, where the funnel does not seem to reach the ground. Be aware of signs of debris on the ground. If there is debris swirling around on the ground and a storm cloud above it, it will most likely be a tornado.

YATES SAID one couple drove through an invisible tornado thinking it was just a "dust devil," typical of this part of the country. The woman was killed and the man seriously injured.

Dust devils do not occur under thunderstorms.

Severe weather that may result in death is not limited to tornadoes, Yates said. The NWS appreciates any reports on possible tornadoes, funnel-shaped clouds, and excessive winds, hail and flooding.

"Lightning is the single biggest weather killer," Yates said, adding that it is not thought of as such because it only kills one or two people at a time. "That can make the local news but it rarely makes the national news."

The second largest killer is flooding.

Persons having reports or information about the occurence of any severe weather are urged to contact the NWS at 563-2509, or the nearest law enforcement agency.

Warm weather may be on way out

Slightly cooler conditions are expected Wednesday as skies should turn partly cloudy.

The National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport is expecting the mercury to climb only into the upper 60s after several days of 80-plus temperatures. Northerly winds of 15-25 mph also are forecast.

Monday's high of 81 was only five degrees off the record high for the date set in 1977, while the overnight low of 51 was far above the record 14 set in 1966.

No precipitation is forecast, leaving the monthly total at 0.07 inch and the 1982 amount at 0.49 inch.

Patrol officers responding to an alarm at the Junction Laundry, 1500 N. Lamesa Road, about 1:30 a.m. today captured a 17-year-old suspect in the act of burglarizing a building.

His arrest brings to 12 the number of burglary suspects caught in the act during the past week. Police say the arrests clear some 25 residential, commercial and burglary vehicle cases, with about $20,000 worth of stolen cash, checks and goods recovered. All but one suspect was a transient.

Reagan to make Caribbean priority

economist said in explaining how the administration's hope is that the new preferential tariff arrangement will dramatically expand U.S. private investment in these countries.

Reagan is prepared to tell the OAS nations that "access to big markets," such as the United States and Canada, "is the best way to guarantee economic growth," and he will propose in addition an across-the-board 10 percent tex cut for any U.S. firm that invests in any of these six nations.

American farmers probably will be the hardest hit since agricultural commodities, particularly citrus fruits, sugar, oranges and vegetables, are among the leading exports of the Caribbean basin nations. Toys and wood products also lead the export list.

Vice President George Bush informally discussed the plan with AFL-CIO leaders when he addressed the labor union in Florida last week. "They told us they would take the overall political factors into consideration," the official said, and led Bush to believe the powerful union would not formally oppose the plan.

But they also told Bush, according to participants at the meeting, that the AFL-CIO cannot guarantee what the reaction of industry pressure groups will be. "It's one thing what the president proposes and another thing what Congress approves," a Senate source said when told of the plan.

It also will upset America's allies in Western Europe who have been heavily criticized by the Reagan administration for allegedly breaking GATT tariff rules in similarly offering preferential trade deals to North Africa. GATT is the Geneva-based General Agreement on Trade and Tariffs.

It is a worldwide organization of more than 100 nations. The Reagan administration, if Congress approves even a watered-down version of the plan, will have to seek a waiver from the GATT.

In any case, it is certain to heat up the already tense trade friction between the U.S. and its European allies.

AUSTIN — Sen. W.E. "Pete" Snelson, D-Midland, as chairman of the Education Committee, has been named by Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby to a special committee to determine how Texas should respond to President Reagan's "New Federalism."

Snelson was one of nine committee chairmen named to the panel, which Hobby announced Monday afternoon.

Williams returns to stand for cross-examination

ATLANTA (AP) — Wayne B. Williams returned to the witness stand today, a day after he dramatically held out his soft hands for jurors to touch, insisting that he never killed anyone and never held hands "with no man."

Calling himself a "care-free, happy-go-lucky person," Williams told jurors in his murder trial Monday he didn't know the two young blacks he is accused of slaying and certainly didn't kill them.

"I haven't killed nobody," Williams, 23, testified Monday during nearly two hours on the stand. "I haven't thought about it and don't plan on thinking about even doing it to nobody."

Williams, the 65th defense witness, today was expected to face a crucial part of the trial — his cross-examination by prosecutors.

Appearing calm but acknowledging that he was "scared" and "nervous," Williams denied any part in the slayings of Nathaniel Cater, 27, and Jimmy Ray Payne, 21, and said he was not a homosexual.

Cater and Payne were among 28 young blacks whose deaths during a 22-month period were investigated by a special police task force. No arrests have been made in the 26 other killings, but prosecutors contend the deaths of Cater and Payne were part of a pattern of slayings that included 10 other young blacks.

Williams, who followed his 64-year-old mother on the witness stand, also denied any part in those 10 slayings and said he didn't stop on the bridge where prosecutors claim he disposed of Cater's body.

"I want you to tell this jury what in blazes you were doing on the Jackson Parkway bridge on the night of May 21 or the early morning of May 22," defense lawyer Alvin Binder told Williams.

"To be honest with you, trying to get to the other side of the bridge so I could get home," he replied.

Williams was stopped by a police stakeout team May 22 after one officer reported hearing a loud splash in the river and spotted Williams' car — with its lights off — on the bridge.

IN ONE OF THE most dramatic moments of the trial, Binder asked Williams to step down from the witness box and allow the jurors to examine his hands to see if they were calloused from karate. Prosecutors have suggested that some of the victims may have been slain by a method that didn't give them a chance to fight back.

At least four or five members of the panel touched Williams' hands, with one turning them over to examine both sides.

"Have you ever taken your hands and put them around anybody's neck and choked them to death?" Binder asked later after Williams returned to the witness stand.

"Never," he replied.

"Did you ever take a knife in your hands and put that knife in someone else's body?" Binder asked.

"No," Williams answered.

"Have you ever taken a rope and put that rope around somebody's neck and squeezed it until they were dead?" the attorney asked.

"No sir," he replied.

Prosecutors have contended that Williams is homosexual and that his sexual orientation, along with his hatred for poor, black "street kids," provided the motive for the killings.

But the black free-lance photographer and aspiring talent promoter denied both contentions, saying, "There ain't no way I'm no homosexual. I don't have no grudge against them, as long as they keep their hands to theirselves and stay away from me."

Williams called the teen-ager who testified Williams sexually fondled him "a bare-faced liar." Asked about another prosecution witness's claim that he saw Williams and Cater holding hands, he replied, "I haven't been holding hands with no man."

He said he has never made any derogatory remarks about members of any race, except in jest. Asked if he had ill feelings toward any blacks, he replied, "I don't have any grudge against nobody."

MUCH OF WILLIAMS' testimony Monday did not concern the 22-month period when the killings were occurring. He talked of throwing spitballs in elementary school, of being disciplined by his parents and of the radio station he started as a teen-ager.

And he described at length his dealings beginning in 1978 with the blacks youths he hoped to develop into a successful music group.

Williams conceded that he has "a lot" of hype, a term he defined as "using your talents to promote yourself." And he acknowledged that he has two resumes — "one you use when you want to impress someone; another kind you use when you get a job."

But he disagreed with prosecutors' contention that he was a failure in the music business, saying he was a "limited success" and was on the threshold of turning his singing group, "Gemini," into a success when he was arrested.

Test results cite genetic factors for poor performance

By DAVID WOOD
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — The Defense Department Monday released an independent analysis of its nationwide youth achievement test that cited genetic factors as one reason for the relatively poor performance of blacks and Latinos in the test.

The results of the department's test, in which whites scored three times higher than blacks and twice as high as Latinos, have "substantial implications for vocational opportunities and attainment," the report said, because they showed blacks and Latinos continue to be isolated from the American mainstream "both reproductively and culturally."

The test, whose results were officially released Monday, was an assessment of nearly 12,000 blacks, whites and Latinos 18 to 23, measured in a battery of tests administered during the summer of 1980.

The youths, who Department of Defense officials said represented a statistically valid sample of the population, were given the Armed Services Vocational Aptitude Battery, a standard test of mathematical and verbal skills as well as electronics and mechanical ability, that is given to all armed services recruits.

The purpose of the test, the officials said Monday, was to compare the "trainability" of recruits, as measured by the tests, with the general recruit-age population.

The test results showed a median score, out of a possible 100 points, of 59 for whites, 23 for Latinos and 17 for blacks.

Among those already accepted for service in 1980, the median scores were 58 for whites, 41 for Latinos and 33 for blacks. Defense officials interpreted those scores to mean that the nation's military, under the All Volunteer Force concept, are drawing a slightly higher-quality group than the population as a whole.

However, the data also indicated that a majority of blacks and Latinos are at the lower end of the Defense Department's qualification categories. Eighty-five percent of the Latinos joining the armed forces in 1980-81 were grouped in the two lower qualification groups, as were 91 percent of the blacks. The two lower groups contained 62 percent of the white recruits.

The highest qualification group contained 3 percent of the white recruits, 1 percent of the Latino recruits, and less than 0.5 percent of blacks recruited those years.

Lawrence J. Korb, assistant secretary of defense for manpower, said Monday that the military is drawing steadily higher-quality recruits, primarily because it has made military service more attractive through better training and higher pay. He said a return to the draft would not necessarily provide higher-quality soldiers.

The Pentagon's test and the sample of youths it tested were certified as statistically valid and unbiased by the National Opinion Research Center. A spokesman for the center said the test was "more than elegant — it was the best I've ever seen."

Two researchers associated with the center and the University of Chicago, who analyzed the test data, said the relatively poor performance of blacks and Latinos indicated that neither group has been fully integrated into white society.

At the same time, the researchers said in a report distributed by the Pentagon, "the fact that these sociocultural groups are also in large degree reproductively isolated...raises the possibility that the differences in test performance arise from differences in the respective gene pools."

The authors of the report, R. Darrell Bock and Elsie G.J. Moore, noted that "no specific genes have been identified that can be proven to influence directly the types of abilities required by the vocational test."

However, they added, "such test performance has been demonstrated to be broadly hereditable...genotypic variation having an at least indirect effect on test performance must exist."

Despite that correlation between heredity and test performance, the authors wrote that the primary reason for the variation of test scores among whites, blacks and Latinos is cultural. They said the tests draw heavily on skills "drawn from the highest levels of ... the majority culture.

"The relative standing of blacks and Hispanics is, from this point of view, determined by the extent of their integration with the majority culture," the authors wrote. "The results indicate that, in fact, the Hispanics in some regions of the country have assimilated in these respects to a greater extent than the blacks."

Small planes should carry 'black box'

WARWICK, R.I. (AP) — Small commuter planes such as the one forced by fire to crash-land on a frozen reservoir should be required to carry flight data recorders, a federal safety official contends.

James D. Burnett, acting chairman of the National Transportation Safety Board, said Monday that without the instrument, the investigation of what caused Sunday's crash landing of a Pilgrim Airline flight bound from Groton, Conn., to Boston, is "made more difficult."

The so-called "black box" is required on larger commercial aircraft.

One passenger, Loretta Stanczak, in her 50s, of Manchester, N.H., was killed in the crash. Pilot Thomas Prinster, 36, of North Kingstown, R.I., and co-pilot Lyle Hogg, 27, of Groton, were in critical condition at Rhode Island Hospital with severe burns.

Nine passengers escaped serious injury when the plane slammed down on the frozen Scituate Reservoir in western Rhode Island.

"Present regulations do not require planes of this size to carry them. We feel those regulations should be changed," Burnett said.

Burnett spoke at a news conference after a day spent organizing the investigation of the crash landing of the 18-seat plane DeHavilland Twin Otter turboprop.

He confirmed passenger reports that the plane was forced down by a fire. The information came from tapes of pilot communications with the Radar Approach Control Facility at the Quonset State Airport in North Kingstown.

However, the pilots did not "give us any clue where the fire started...our best bet is to talk to the crew members themselves when they are in good enough condition to talk."

Senator charges casino owner borrowed from pension fund

WASHINGTON (AP) — The chairman of the Senate Labor Committee charged today that the owner of Las Vegas' Dunes Hotel and Casino has cheated some of his employees out of millions of dollars by borrowing from their pension fund and not repaying the loans.

Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, also said the employees of the Southern Nevada Culinary Workers' Pension Fund have been treated unfairly by the Labor Department because the federal agency has not criminally prosecuted Morris Shenker, who owns a controlling interest in the Dunes.

Hatch's charges were in remarks prepared for delivery today as he opened a year-long series of hearings into the Labor Department's handling of enforcement cases involving what he described as "abuses of union pension funds by corrupt union leaders and organized crime figures."

According to Hatch, corporations controlled by Shenker or his family borrowed $24 million from the culinary union's pension fund from 1973 to 1977.

At one point in 1977, Hatch said, the $24 million borrowed by Shenker accounted for almost 65 percent of the fund's total assets of $37 million.

According to Hatch, at least $15 million in loans made after passage of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (ERISA) were "prohibited transactions" because Shenker was a party of interest as an employer who makes contributions to the fund.

"The $9 million borrowed by Shenker prior to ERISA became subject to enforcement action because the loans are in default and have been since 1975," Hatch said.

Hatch said his committee decided last year to initiate the hearings into the pension funds after learning that the Labor Department had accumulated a backlog of 247 enforcement cases, many of which were becoming endangered by statute-of-limitation problems.

"We were concerned that an inordinately large number of these case - 163 to be exact - were closed out administratively in 1981," said Hatch. "However, my staff has reviewed enough of them to determine that a common theme runs through all too many cases — that the Labor Department's Office of the Solicitor...has refused to act meaningfully or vigorously against those who abuse these pension funds. This is true with respect to both Democratic and Republican administrations dating back to the Ford years."

Refusal by the solicitor's office to crack down on criminal elements has been cited by the Senate Permanent Investigations Subcommittee as a major contributing factor to the problems with the Teamsters Union Central States Pension Fund, said Hatch.

The same problems have surfaced in an investigation of the Southern Nevada Culinary Workers' Pension Fund, he said.

In his opening statement, Hatch said Shenker ostensibly obtained the $24 million in loans from the bartenders, dishwashers and maids' union for developing two principal properities — Murietta Hot Springs, a spa and residential housing development in California, and Sierra Charter, a housing development in Nevada.

Judge wants Cubans released

ATLANTA (AP) — A federal judge has warned the Justice Department that he will release 321 Cuban refugees from jail if the government doesn't let them go soon.

U.S. District Judge Marvin Shoob made the statement Monday about the Cubans held in the Atlanta Federal Penitentiary.

Shoob called the government's slowness in freeing the Cubans "totally unacceptable."

"If something isn't done to get them out, this court is going to fashion some kind of relief and get them out of there," Shoob said at a hearing to determine what has taken so long to free the Cubans.

At the hearing, federal employees and relief agency workers testified on efforts to find sponsors for the refugees.

Surgeon General Dr. Everett Koop holds a Washington news conference Monday to announce the annual Surgeon General's Report on Smoking.

Government report called 'most serious indictment of smoking'

By BRYCE NELSON
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Cigarette smoking is the major single cause of cancer mortality, and will be responsible for 30 percent of the nation's predicted 430,000 deaths from cancer this year, Surgeon General C. Everett Koop said Monday.

Koop made public the government's annual report on smoking and health, which he said in some respects was "the most serious indictment of cigarette smoking which the Public Health Service has yet made."

It singled out smoking as a major cause of death from cancer of the lung, esophagus, larynx and mouth. The report also called smoking a "contributory factor" to cancer of the bladder, kidney and pancreas.

Because smoking also contributes to coronary heart disease and lung disease, Koop said, "Cigarette smoking is clearly identified as the chief preventable cause of death in our society.

"If I were a smoker of a pipe, cigar or cigarette and were reasonably intelligent and had read this report, I would long since have quit," Koop, who smoked a pipe until 10 years ago, said.

The report linked cigar and pipe smoking to the variety of cancers related to cigarettes, but said that cigarette smoking was the key problem because of the much greater use of cigarettes. The report also linked higher oral-cancer rates to use of snuff and chewing tobacco.

In contrast to earlier reports issued by surgeons general, the 1982 report focused on "the relationship between smoking and a single category of disease: cancer," Koop said. He told a reporter that one of the most significant facts about the new report was the conclusion that cancer from smoking is linked to organs that are not part of the respiratory tract.

In addition to smoking's contribution to cancer of the pancreas, kidney and bladder, the report said that smokers have higher than normal death rates from cancer of the stomach and cancer of the cervix.

Koop said that several of the cancers most strongly associated with smoking — lung, esophagus and pancreas — had very low survival rates, 10 percent or less over five years.

Of the more than 90,000 deaths from lung cancer each year, about 85 percent are due to cigarettes, according to the report. It said the quickly rising lung-cancer death rate for women is soon expected to exceed that of breast cancer, currently the No. 1 cancer killer among women.

Koop made clear that, despite funding cutbacks, the Reagan administration plans to continue the government's anti-smoking campaign that began with the Eisenhower administration in 1957.

The report concluded that the question of whether cigarette smoke causes cancer in nearby non-smokers is unresolved. But it said that "involuntary smoking may pose a carcinogenic risk to the non-smoker" and cautioned that as much as possible "prudence dictates that non-smokers avoid exposure to second-hand tobacco smoke."

Transplant benefactor hospitalized

MILWAUKEE (AP) — A Bermuda woman who pledged $150,000 for a life-saving heart transplant operation for a Milwaukee mother has been hospitalized herself.

Newsmen in Hamilton, Bermuda, said dress-shop owner Maria Benn, 74, told them Monday she still intended to send the money "because the Lord told me to."

In Milwaukee, a spokesman for the hospital in which Janice Terry had been visited Friday by Mrs. Benn said the unemployed mother of two was "disappointed and concerned" by Monday's developments.

Lawrence Tarnoff, spokesman for Mount Sinai Medical Center, said she was told "that Mrs. Benn will not be coming to Milwaukee."

"She remains hopeful, as we do, that Mrs. Benn will soon be able to fulfill her commitment," Tarnoff said.

Ms. Terry, 30, suffers from progressive heart disease. She has no surgical insurance, and welfare officials say Medicaid will not cover a heart transplant because it is classified as experimental surgery.

Mrs. Benn offered the money for surgery last week. She said she was in Dallas when she saw a televised news account about Ms. Terry's financial handicap.

While visiting Ms. Terry's bedside Friday, she said she would visit Milwaukee again Monday with the money.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Share concerns with obstetrician

Dear Dr. Solomon: My husband and I are expecting our first child. We are very concerned about the health of our baby, because there are two mentally retarded in my husband's family. Is there some way to test our unborn child to find out if he is developing properly? — Sally, Oakland, Calif.

Dear Sally: You might want to ask your obstetrician about ultrasound. This test is being used to visualize and document normal as well as abnormal eye movements. This test might indicate developmental problems in the unborn fetus. Abnormal eye movement might alert an obstetrician to change prenatal care for a fetus, or that the fetus may be a high risk during delivery. Talk about your concerns with your obstetrician, but I feel the chances are excellent that you will give birth to a healthy, normal baby. Good luck to all of you.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My aunt is 82 years old and a patient in a nursing home. When I visited her last week, I found that she had fallen a few days earlier and had bruised herself pretty badly. Fortunately, there were no broken bones. I realize that elderly people are more likely to fall than younger people, but don't you think that a nursing home would be able to do something to see that this doesn't happen? — Clara, Brooklyn, N.Y.

Dear Clara: When you have a population of elderly people, some falls are going to be inevitable; and the older the patient, the greater the risk of falling. The only guarantee against falls is to keep the patients from doing anything, and that of course would be even more harmful.

Nursing home personnel are generally aware of the problem and usually take steps to minimize the risk of falls. This frequently happens when a patient tries to change positions — for example, getting out of bed or out of a wheelchair. But patients have to be encouraged to move around, and some falls will inevitably be the result.

Dear Dr. Solomon: A private clinic in the community is offering biofeedback to treat headaches. I get more than my share of headaches and I'm ready to try anything. But I'd like to know that it isn't a rip-off, like copper bracelets for arthritis. I know you can't predict whether it will work for me, but is it possible for biofeedback to be of any help with headaches? — Chris, Dayton, Ohio.

Dear Chris: Biofeedback has been found to be effective in some patients with headaches. In fact, Dr. Leonard G. Hudszinski, a behavioral therapist at the Ochsner Clinic in New Orleans, has described the technique he uses to help patients with chronic muscle contraction or tension headaches that do not have an organic cause.

During seven to 10 weekly sessions, patients learn to consciously control their level of tension, and in this fashion reduce the frequency and severity of their headaches. They are also instructed to practice relaxation exercises twice a day.

Dr. Hudszinksi says that as patients gradually learn to relax their muscles the severity and frequency of the headaches are decreased. He reports having helped 36 people so far without having to resort to the use of drugs.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Would you explain how much rest a person with rheumatoid arthritis should get, and how much exercise? — Ron, Trenton, N.J.

Dear Ron: It is not possible to outline a schedule of rest and exercise for patients with rheumatoid arthritis, since these differ from one patient to another and must be individualized. Too much bedrest can cause contractures of various joints, while too much exercise can aggravate the condition. Patients taking pain medication must be particularly careful since they may try to do too much without realizing it.

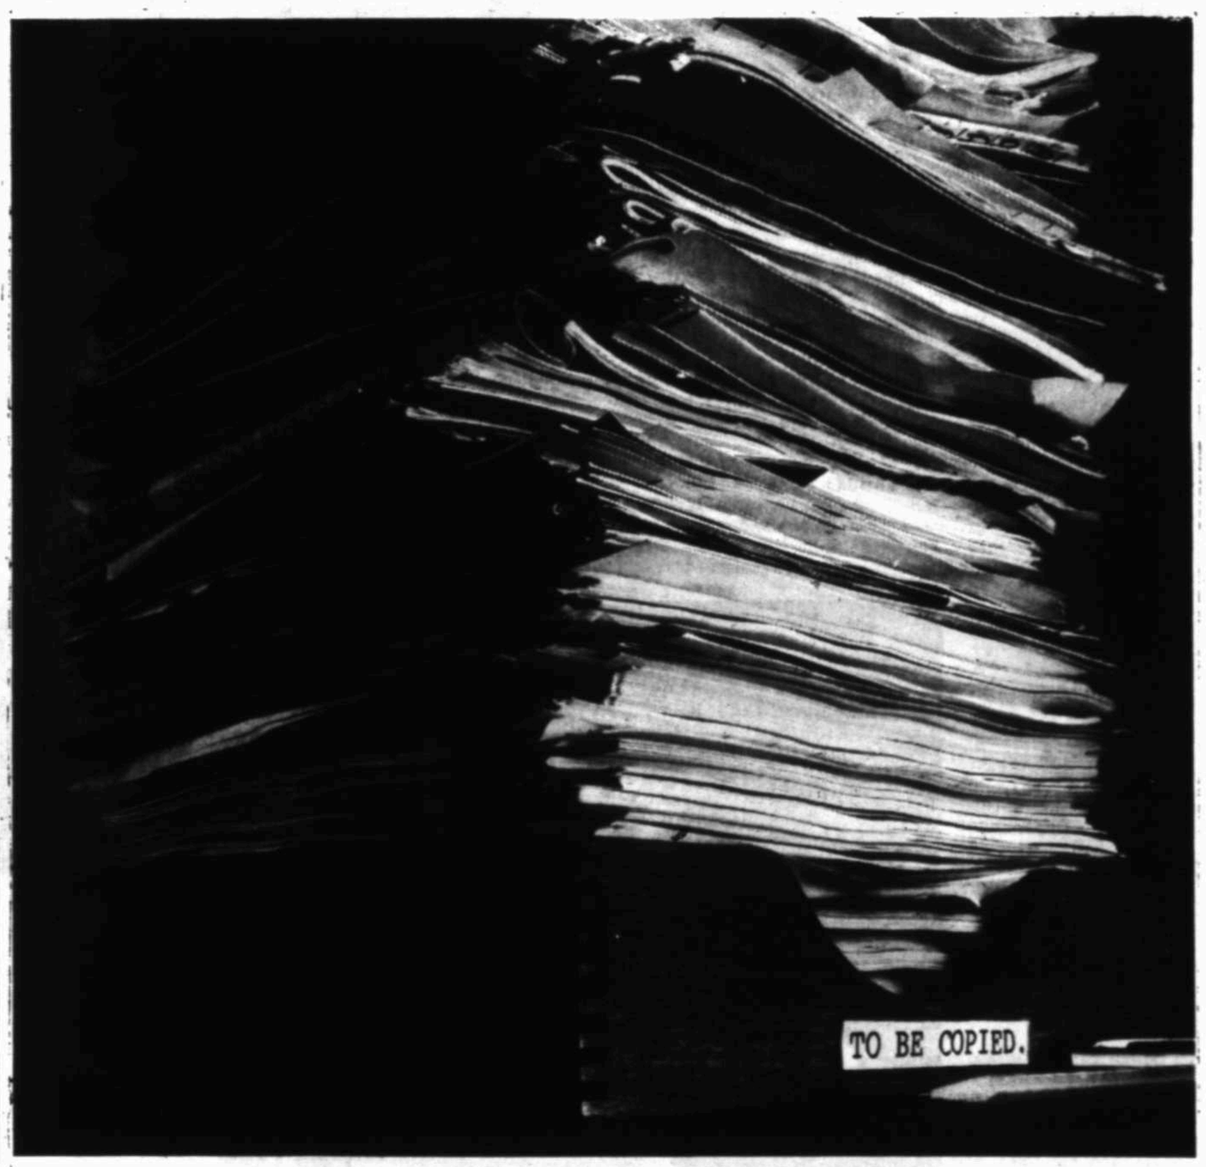

The best policy a person with rheumatoid arthritis can follow is to place himself or herself in the hands of a competent physician and follow the physician's directions. Weight loss, in particular, is important for some patients, because nothing the doctor tries to do is likely to work if the patient is obese.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I've read about the problems that babies born to teen-agers often have. But what about the mothers themselves? Do they have more medical problems than older mothers? — Diane, New York

Dear Diane: As you indicate, adolescent pregnancy is associated with significantly more risk for the babies; however, it does not necessarily appear to be more risky for the teen-age mothers.

Dr. Ann Caufriez and her colleagues at the Free University of Brussels studied almost 900 pregnant adolescents. They found that the teen-agers were more likely to have shorter pregnancies and to experience premature labor than older women. In addition, those under 17 years of age had a much higher mortality than women over 18 years of age, 4.0 percent compared with 1.2 percent.

(If you have a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D., 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon cannot give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column).

You overwork them.
Not intentionally, of course. It's just that you may have no idea how many copies you're making every month.
So you may not even know you've pushed your small copier past its limits until it starts giving you poor quality copies. Or no copies at all.
But you can't really blame the small copier. It's built for small work loads.
What you can do is get the bigger small copier. The Minolta EP520. A plain paper copier with the capacity for big jobs.
It was designed to take options, so it can grow as your business grows. You can get a document-feeder and a sorter. Or a counter that tells how many copies you've made.
And Minolta's exclusive micro-toning system assures rich contrasts and crisp, clear copies. Edge to edge, and corner to corner. On any kind of paper up to 11"x17".
It even lets you know about trouble before it happens, with a self-diagnostic system that tells you when it needs service. And what kind of service it needs.
So get the Minolta EP520, and give yourself a break. Before your small copier gives you a breakdown.

Koch to run for governor of New York

By JOYCE WADLER
The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

NEW YORK — Mayor Ed Koch, who once said that life in the state capital of Albany would be "a fate worse than death," announced his intent to run for governor Monday, cheerfully saying at a raucous news conference that "everyone has to die sometime."

"I have said repeatedly I never planned to run for another office," said the Democratic mayor, whose second term began only two months ago. "But over the last several weeks, following Gov. (Hugh) Carey's withdrawal and the Reagan adminsitration's presentation of its 'New Federalism,' I have reconsidered that decision.

"Across this country the action is shifting from Washington to state capitals. Here in New York, counties, villages, towns and cities will have to look to Albany for financial supports, for new directions and for leadership.

"I believe I can provide that leadership."

Koch, 57, is a tremendously popular politician who was elected this past term with the support of the Democratic and Republican parties and only last month endorsed two local GOP candidates for reelection.

But he had insisted for years he would not seek higher office.

MONDAY there were repeated questions about Koch's change of heart, with repeated suggestions that the outspoken mayor might be turning his back on the city.

"I quote from one of your favorite prophets, Isaiah," began one television reporter, " 'Thou hast forsaken thy people.' " The comment was a reference to Koch's complaints that the quote from Isaiah on the wall of the United Nations building — the one about beating swords into plowshares — was inappropriate.

"Not bad," said Koch, with the appreciation of one showman to another. But he replied, "You will not be losing anyone; you will be gaining a governor."

His spirits throughout the one-hour press conference at the mayoral residence, Gracie Mansion, seemed high, and his comments ranged from one trademark — "That's such a dumb question" — to a sprinkling of "Willya lemme finish?" and two signatures: "Riiidiik-ulous!"

"Will you resign your job?" asked a reporter, "and give the mext mayor a better shot at running the city?"

"I certainly will not resign," said Koch, con brio. "Riiidiik-ulous!"

The mayor was asked whether he intended to run an anti-President Reagan campaign, or whether he would avoid criticizing the president "to not chase away any Republican votes."

"Oh, that's riiidiik-ulous!" said Koch, who in the past has called the administration's New Federalism "a sham and a shame."

"I will indeed not hesitate to criticise those programs I'm opposed to," he said.

Koch, who was named as the favorite among potential gubernatorial candidates last week in an NBC News poll, declined Monday to comment on the merits of the competition, which includes on the Republican side state Comptroller Edward Regan and on the Democratic side Lt. Gov. Mario Cuomo. Koch also declined to criticize the incumbent, Carey.

Asked if he would seek as a candidate for lieutentant governor a "qualified Catholic for the sake of balance," Koch, a Jew, replied that he would only seek to balance the ticket by "regional qualifications," because both he and State Attorney Bob Abrams, who is expected to run for reelection, are New Yorkers.

Koch also said repeatedly that he felt he could represent all New York.

Supreme Court to hear deaf lawyer

By JIM MANN
The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court cleared the way Monday for a deaf lawyer to argue a case before the court for the first time in its history.

The justices granted a request by the attorney, Michael Chatoff, to have computerized equipment installed in the courtroom next month so that he may read the justices' questions and respond to them.

Chatoff is representing a deaf 10-year-old girl named Amy Rowley in a case involving the rights of the handicapped. The issue before the court is whether a school district in Westchester County, N.Y., should have provided the girl with a sign-language interpreter in her classroom.

The Rowley case will also mark the first occasion in which the justices have allowed the use of special audio-visual or transcription equipment by a lawyer appearing before the court.

Last month, Chatoff informed the court in writing that he was "totally deaf" and was not competent enough in the use of sign language to make use of an interpreter. He sought permission to have special equipment called a "tomcat system" installed in the court, and the court agreed.

Under that system, a stenographer would take down questions asked by the justices. The stenographic notes would be immediately converted by a computer, installed outside the courtroom, into English words flashed on a video-display terminal placed in front of Chatoff in court.

A similar system was installed in a Los Angeles courtroom earlier this month to help a deaf defendant understand the proceedings against him.

THERE WERE INDICATIONS last month that Supreme Court officials were reacting uneasily to Chatoff's request.

In a memo to Chief Justice Warren E. Burger, Court Clerk Alexander Stevas said it appeared that Chatoff "is endeavoring to set a precedent by using this procedure in the Supreme Court." He said efforts to persuade Chatoff to let someone else argue the case "have not been fruitful."

But on Monday, the justices approved the use of the special equipment in a brief one-line order, without any discussion or dissenting votes.

"I'm pleased that my motion was granted," said Chatoff, who works as an editor for the West Publishing Co. in Mineola, N.Y. Over the last month, he said, he has "just been sitting, waiting and waiting for some action on my motion."

The current case (Board of Education of Westchester vs. Rowley, 80-1002) is only the second that Chatoff has handled in court. He had previously represented himself in a dispute involving phone equipment for the deaf.

Chatoff had argued the case in the lower federal courts by using a note-taker to write down the judges' questions. He said he was able to understand only 50 percent to 55 percent of the proceedings. "I don't want to use a note-taker (before the Supreme Court) if I don't have to," he told the Los Angeles Times last month.

Bar president warns against over-legislation

By R. J. OSTROW
The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Legislation to strip federal courts of jurisdiction over such key social issues as abortion and busing threatens to destroy the nation's system of government, American Bar Association President David R. Brink said Monday.

Brink, speaking at the annual meeting of the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, said that the more than 30 bills now before Congress to limit judicial jurisdiction confront the nation with its "greatest constitutional crisis since the Civil War."

The association voted last August to oppose the court jurisdiction limitations, but Brink's statement Monday seemed uncharacteristically strong in opposition to the proposals.

Brinks, noting that the bills deal with such sensitive social issues as abortion, prayer in public schools and busing, said that Americans have a right to disagree with court rulings in those areas.

"But we must not solve these or any other social problems by shutting off access by our citizens to the federal courts," he said. "For if we shut off our access to the courts, we shut off our constitutional rights.

"And if Congress can shut off these particular rights, a future Congress can shut off other constitutional rights," Brink said.

HE SAID Attorney General William French Smith and some members of Congress "have been proclaiming" that the judiciary has overstepped its constitutional role and moved into policy-making.

While "that proposition is debatable," Brink said, "it is beyond debate that any of these bills in Congress would invade the judicial branch of federal government. They threaten total elimination of the judicial branch as the arbiter of the Constitution."

The attorney general has said that the court-stripping bills raise difficult constitutional and policy questions on which scholars disagree. On that ground, he has refused to take a position "in a vacuum." He has indicated that when a specific bill moves closer to enactment he may take a stance on the particulars of the measure.

Brink took a contrary view. "Lawyers and judges, as guardians of the rule of law, have a special responsibility to resist these bills on grounds of both law and policy," he said.

Brink cited two provisions of the Constitution in support of his argument. Article III, he noted, provides that the judicial power of the United States extends to all cases arising under the Constitution. And the due process clause of the Fifth Amendment guarantees that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of law.

Western dance classes will be offered from 8 to 9 p.m. Wednesdays. The fee for the class will be $15 for Y members and $30 for limited members per couple. Keith Petty will instruct dances such as the two-step, schottishe and cotton-eyed joe.

The karate class, an on-going class, will be taught from 7 to 8 p.m. Tuesday and Thursday. Fee for the eight classes is $18 for Y members and $30 for limited members. Instructor Curtis Abernathy will stress techniques of blocking, kicking and hitting, along with developing quickness, physical conditioning and limberness.

Aikido, a martial art requiring concentration and strenuous physical effort, will cost $15 for Y members and $25 for limited members. J. Pueschner, instructor, will emphasize complete control of mind and body and calm, alert posture. The aikido movements are continuous, flexible motion which originates at the waist with each movement of a part of the body contributing to the integrated sequence of movements.

Built-in air peril

Last year's strike by air traffic controllers helped to focus public attention on the vital role controllers play in air safety. The three airline crashes of recent weeks ought to stir interest in another aspect of aviation safety — the lack of aircraft design features that could better protect passengers.

Edmund J. Cantilli, a professor of transportation planning and engineering and executive director of the non-profit Institute for Safety in Transportation, noted the obvious examples in a recent newspaper article.

Passenger seats are attached to flimsy tracks rather than being bolted to the floor. The plastics used in airline interiors often emit deadly fumes and gases when burned. Aircraft aren't built to float, even momentarily. And most if not all commercial airliners lack the structural strength that might keep them from breaking up on the slightest impact.

Three of these four design defects almost certainly contributed to the loss of life resulting from the Air Florida crash in Washington, the World Airways accident in Boston, and the recent crash of a Japan Airlines 747 in Tokyo Bay.

Building safer planes involves the same public policy tradeoffs as those so often cited in auto safety debates. First, safety features tend to be expensive; and more expensive planes mean higher airline ticket prices. Second, sturdier planes would probably consume more fuel and so conflict with efforts to conserve energy and reduce operating costs. Once again, the flying public would end up paying more.

America's aerospace industry, still the best in the world, could no doubt design airliners with features that would save at least some passengers in all but the most grievous crashes. But the cost would be unaffordable, just as the sticker price for an automobile that could sustain head-on collisions at 40 miles per hour would exceed the financial means of most motorists.

So, the question for the airline industry, the Federal Aviation Administration, and the flying public is one of balancing costs, practicality, and safety.

In our view, passenger safety has been too little considered by the airlines and by the FAA. Surely, safer seats and less hazardous materials for interior finish wouldn't boost ticket prices that much. And the same might prove true for strengthening airframes and providing some minimal flotation capability.

Granted that all but a tiny fraction of both aircraft and airline passengers are never involved in an accident of any kind. But the toll of those who have died needlessly in survivable crashes over, say, the last decade should occasion second thoughts about passenger safety at the FAA and the airlines. Failing that, Congress should investigate on its own.

Double talk, plain talk

Expressing one's self clearly is a rare art. That is the impression you get from the gobbledygook that comes out of government offices and the allegedly erudite pronouncements of academia. Examples of double talk abound. Here's one from an official of a middle-size state's human resources department. He wrote:

"It is recommended that the focus, scope and purpose be clearly delineated and understood. Then, with the existing resources, the restructuring of the developmental process will be guided by the central concepts of the previously stated management philosophy. Specific functional and administrative activities, service outputs, and staff capacity development will be defined as real need demands are anticipated or identified. Armed with this real need information, a working management tool can be more accurately designed through the use of the proposed management model."

Huh? The guy who wrote this got a promotion, believe it or not. The American Society of Word Watchers would give him a D-minus.

Now for an example of plain talk. A recent Wall Street Journal cartoon called "Pepper ... and Salt" depicted a couple of convicts chatting in their cell, prison numbers on their sweaters. Explained one to the other:

"I took at the office."

They, unlike the government gentleman, believed in eschewing obfuscation.

CHARLEY REESE

Disarmed populace has no protection

Morton Grove, Ill., a suburb of Chicago, has enacted an ordinance banning the ownership of handguns. A stupid U.S. district judge has upheld it.

Charley Reese

The judge ruled that the second amendment to the Constitution applies only to the U.S. Congress, an argument that was defeated at Gettysburg and one which would, if adopted by the Supreme Court, reverse practically every civil rights ruling in this century.

If Bill of Rights No. 2 is binding only on the U.S. Congress, then obviously Bill of Rights Nos. 1, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8 and 9 are equally binding only on the Congress and not on the states. That means the states can re-establish segregation, ban free speech, establish their own religion, and dispense with due process unless they happen to have incorporated these rights into their own constitutions.

It's hard to believe a sober lawyer, even of the caliber you find on the federal bench these days, could make such a ridiculous ruling.

The judge's decision is being appealed but there is no guarantee that an appellate court will do any better. Interpretation of the Constitution has become an Alice in Wonderland affair where the words mean whatever any judge wants them to mean. How else could nine lawyers decide that the same First Amendment allows a girl to dance naked in a bar but prevents her from standing up in a classroom and uttering a prayer.

As for the ordinance, it is an assault against liberty. The men who founded this country understood that government is power and if a people are to be free, they must be in a position to challenge the power of government if that government becomes abusive of their rights. You may read the Declaration of Independence if you doubt what I am saying.

A disarmed populace has no power. Liberal columnists and cartoonists ridiculed a National Rifle Association advertisement which pointed out that the Polish people were helpless because they had been disarmed by gun control laws, but the NRA is right and the liberals are wrong.

You cannot stop a tank with handguns, but you can use the handguns to take anti-tank weapons away from soldiers. Only a hysterical anti-gun nut would make such a stupid statement in the face of 10,000 historical examples of revolutions begun with small arms. If handguns are so useless, why then does every communist government in the world ban their ownership? With what do you suppose nuclear missiles are guarded? You guessed it: small arms.

Every American has the right to own a handgun, a rifle and shotgun. We should defend this right vigorously. The right of self-defense is indisputable and it is a contradiction to assert that right and at the same time deny people the means of defending themselves.

Every home in America should contain firearms and ammunition and every American should become proficient in their use. Rather than ban handguns, we ought to repeal laws which prevent honest citizens from carrying concealed weapons. If the honest people were allowed to go about their business armed, the crime rate would drop precipitously.

The relationship between gun ownership and crime is nothing more than a red herring; but even if it weren't, it's worth the price of a few extra homicides to retain this most basic and fundamental American right.

And let me clue you in on the game the anti-handgun nuts are playing. A handgun is nothing more than a short rifle. You allow them to establish a legal precedent for banning a handgun and you can kiss your right to bear arms — and your liberty — goodbye.

It is a frightening spectacle to see government, unable to control the criminal element, persist in its attempts to disarm the victims of crime.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Weinberg just a 'double-dealing scoundrel'

WASHINGTON — ABSCAM prosecutor Thomas Puccio is a hyperactive, prematurely balding young man who is apt to startle visitors by springing out of his chair and pacing his office.

Jack Anderson

In his Brooklyn domain, he stands guard like St. Peter at the gates of justice. He decrees whom his grand juries shall indict. "I could," be boasted in front of witnesses, "indict a ham sandwich."

He chose a convicted pitchman, Mel Weinberg, to mastermind the ABSCAM investigations. An authorized biography correctly describes Weinberg as an "international con man par excellence, who conceived ABSCAM, wrote the investigative scenario and personally handled almost every contract and payoff."

The book declares further that Weinberg "dominated the hearings and trials spawned by the FBI's ABSCAM investigations." He was presented to the juries as a lovable rascal, an Archie Bunker personality whose gravel voice, Brooklyn dialect and incorrigible ways are merely the calluses on an admirable character.

But in past columns, I have offered evidence that portrays Weinberg as a venal, double-dealing scoundrel who, according to his late wife, conned the ABSCAM defendants and pocketed some of the ABSCAM bribe money.

This has left Puccio's star witness without a rug to stand on, and the frantic prosecutor has come up with a bold, if novel, response. The man who conceived and conducted the ABSCAM investigations and who later dominated the ABSCAM trials, Puccio now argues, is not really important.

In a letter to ABSCAM Judge George C. Pratt, the chief prosecutor solemnly attests: "Weinberg's credibility was not a real issue in the case." (Like Puccio, the judge has also been taken in by Weinberg. Once Pratt actually lamented that Weinberg's criminal career "as a con man has ended" because of his public exposure. The judge praised Weinberg's "contribution to law enforcement in these cases and the personal sacrifices he has endured.")

Weinberg, meanwhile, is engaged in his latest scam — a scurrilous campaign to defame the memory of his late wife of 19 years, who had found his secret diary and, after reading it, had turned against him because of his "lies and deceit." She hanged herself, according to a suicide note, because of "the campaign being made by Mel to discredit me."

This decent woman deserves to have someone defend her character against the lies that her husband has been spreading. Here goes:

The Lie: Weinberg told the New York Post that friends of his wife "threatened to break his legs if he did not give up his mistress."

The Truth: These are tactics much more characteristic of Weinberg than of his gentle wife. Earlier this month, he became infuriated over an article by Greg Walter of the Philadelphia Daily News. According to Walter, the sting man called him, exploded with expletives and threatened to split his head open.

In contrast, Marie Weinberg was a frail, delicate woman who had been abandoned as a child and had no family. Last year Mel moved her to Florida, where she has no friends — except her pastor, Richard Duke, and a neighbor, Jeanette Wrenn.

The Lie: Weinberg has charged that I offered his wife $100,000 to turn her against him.

The Truth: If he can prove that whopper, I'll pay him the $100,000. Marie asked for no money, and I offered her none.

It was Mel, in fact, who valued everything in dollars and cents. He tried to squeeze money out of everything he touched. He conned the FBI into paying him tens of thousands of dollars for his "services." Once, he wangled extra money out of the FBI by falsely claiming his wife needed an operation. He even bamboozled the FBI into paying for his move to Florida by claiming his life was in danger and he needed to hide out. Then he sought out reporters and became one of the most public figures in the state.

In addition to his FBI pay, Weinberg cut a deal to tell his life story for the book, "The Sting Man," and is now negotiating to sell the movie rights. He presented a copy of the book to his wife and inscribed these revealing sentiments: "To my darling wife Marie. May the money from this book bring us love, happiness and most of all a good life."

The Lie: Weinberg said my associate Indy Badhwar tricked Marie into blowing the whistle on him by showing her documentation that he had obtained a Haitian divorce and had married his mistress.

The Truth: In taped interviews, Marie said that she had asked for a divorce but that Mel had put her off.

The Lie: Weinberg flatly denied his wife's statement that he had paid $1,200 to FBI agents Bruce Brady and Steve Bursey.

The Truth: I have copies of the canceled checks. Brady got $900, Bursey $300.

The Lie: Weinberg claimed his wife had agreed to be interviewed only after being assured she would never have to testify.

The Truth: In an affidavit submitted to Judge William Bryant, Marie volunteered that she was willing to testify.

The real question is why the prosecutors hired a man like Mel Weinberg to help them enforce the law.

INSIDE REPORT:

Haig's acceptance of debate leaves Brzezinski puzzled

WASHINGTON — Zbigniew Brzezinski, having refused to appear opposite Soviet Central Committee spokesman Stanislav Menshikov on ABC's Sunday interview show, was flabbergasted to see Secretary of State Alexander Haig answering Menshikov's criticisms of U.S. foreign policy.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

Brzezinski, national security adviser in the Carter White House, felt it would be "demeaning" for a former major foreign-policymaker to appear on the same program with a second-level Soviet propagandist on American television. Menshikov's exposure to American viewers, he felt, would be given additional weight by the presence of a well-known U.S. statesman.

ABC's David Brinkley went to Haig when Brzezinski turned down his invitation. Haig, just back from his European trip, accepted. Haig performed well when he followed Menshikov (who was beamed via satellite from Moscow), but that did not change Brzezinski's distaste for such an unequal bill-sharing. He felt Haig should appear jointly only with his counterpart, Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko, or some other senior Soviet official.

REBELLIOUS REPUBLICANS

Rebellious Republican congressmen became so upset with the Reagan administration that they deputized Republican National Committee chairman Richard Richards to spell out their grievances at the White House Feb. 17 in a private session with chief of staff James Baker III.

Richards reiterated a familiar complaint the past year from Republicans on Capitol Hill: inadequate access to the White House and no impact on filling presidential appointments. But Richards most stressed the complaint of the lawmakers that they have no part of the policy-making process — particularly on the new budget.

The president's men were not impressed. They see the complaints as signs not of White House failure but of congressional nervousness about the currently poor state of the economy and the dangers that poses for them at the polls in November.

WEINBERGER'S NON-STATEMENT

The "top official" traveling with Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger in the Middle East who mortally offended Israel by calling for "redirecting" U.S. policy toward the Arabs was not Weinberger, but Assistant Defense Secretary Francis (Bing) West.

Weinberger, loyal to his own men, declined to target West as the culprit. He ordered his associates not to name West, and took the heat for the offending word himself.

All this does not mean that Weinberger is against shifting the U.S. to a more even-handed Mideast policy, taking equal account of both the moderate Arab states and Israel. That is Weinberger's policy, shared by many other Reagan administration officials — but not, as yet, by Reagan or Secretary of State Alexander Haig. Nor does Weinberger worry about becoming Israel's enemy No. 1.

TOWER'S WARNING

Sen. John Tower, chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, has issued this private warning to budget director David Stockman: Don't try to "back channel" President Reagan's new defense budget.

Tower, a Senate workhorse on all defense issues, is not by nature an angry man. But he has made clear to high White House officials that he will react harshly if Stockman, by innuendo or suggestion, gives an assist of his own to opponents of the new defense budget.

Nevertheless, Stockman seems determined to do just that. Admittedly under heavy defense-reduction pressure from both parties on Capitol Hill, Stockman is tossing off invitations to cut by saying the administration has an open mind on the Pentagon budget. That hints at an early confrontation with Tower, if the senator takes his case against "back channeling" directly to the president.

NEW JERSEY'S SENATOR

Prominent Republican senators are hinting to Gov. Thomas Kean of New Jersey that he should fill the Senate vacancy about to be created by the expulsion of Democratic senator Harrison Williams with a seat-warmer who would agree to serve only until the Nov. 2 election.

That would relieve Kean of the task of picking between the two main announced candidates for the Republican nomination. Kean would prefer conservative Jeffrey Bell, but liberal Rep. Millicent Fenwick has a long lead over Bell in the polls. Prominent senators advise that the tough Senate votes to be faced this summer would benefit neither Bell nor Fenwick during the campaign. The best guess to be seat-warmer: ex-representative Peter Frelinghuysen.

Senatorial advice to name a seat-warmer is low-keyed. But the Senate Republican leadership has made it clear to Kean in no uncertain terms that it feels he would make a horrendous mistake to leave the Senate seat unfilled until after the June 8 primary.

Governors kill 'new federalism' plan

By VIC OSTROWIDZKI
Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — The nation's governors' overwhelming opposition to cuts in federally-financed domestic programs and to key elements of President Reagan's "new federalism" appear to have killed the ambitious plan for turning programs back to the states at least until next year.

"The president's new federalism isn't going anywhere this year," New York Democratic Gov. Hugh L. Carey said after the National Governors Association (NGA), holding its winter meeting here, recommended a go-slow approach. Carey called the proposed cuts "too hard and too severe."

"I would like to see them take it (new federalism) up," said New Jersey's freshman Republican Gov. Thomas H. Kean. "But the plan takes power away from Congress and Congress will be reluctant to let go of this power. There ought to be re-evaluation of the cuts. They're hitting the same people twice."

California's Democratic Gov. Edmund Brown felt Congress ought to set the economy "on the right track" before tackling "new federalism," which he described as "a bureaucratic reshuffling of responsibilities that does not address the main issues at hand, specifically a sick economy."

Even Texas Republican Gov. William Clements, a staunch supporter of "new federalism" as a "marvelous" concept, agreed "it's going to be a much more difficult path (to get it enacted) than most people realize."

Clements joined four other Republican governors in voting for a resolution rejecting the president's recommendation that Washington take over all Medicaid costs in exchange for turning food stamps and Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC) over to the states.

The governors said they would like the federal government to take over Medicaid, but wished to negotiate for some programs other than food stamps and AFDC as their part of the exchange.

And they urged Congress to postpone the whole subject until the states see how deeply the current federal budget cuts will affect them.

The plan was endorsed 36 to 5 in a closed-door meeting. It was similar to a stand taken Sunday by the National Conference of State Legislatures, which met here in an emergency session.

Clements said he expects the president will revise his original proposal once he knows the feelings of the governors.

"I don't think the proposal that was moved on this morning was the last say," he added.

The legislators recommended that officials from all levels of government "sit down together to work out a plan that is fair and rational."

The governors said the Medicaid savings to the states could amount to $31 billion starting in fiscal 1984. But they are concerned that in the long run any swap of responsibilities will shortchange the states.

Florida Democratic Gov. Bob Graham said relinquishing federal control over food stamps and welfare would impose differing burdens from state to state.

Carey described the maneuverings over "new federalism" as "spring training...an exhibition game."

He said that until the budget debate is resolved and the states know precisely where they stand in relation to aid funds the "new federalism" concept will remain just "that...a concept. It's not going anywhere until after the election."

Carey said Reagan ought to prepare "a set of budget alternatives he can offer in the event there is no surge in the economy he (Reagan) is counting on."

Kean said that most governors feel strongly the states cannot absorb further budget cuts.

"It would be unrealistic to expect the states to support another round of deep budget cuts in 1983 with still greater responsibility looming in fiscal 1984 and beyond," Gov. Richard A. Snelling, the Republican chairman of the NGA said.

Many governors said the cuts enacted last year and a decline in revenues have left their states in such a fiscal bind that they have been either cutting services or raising taxes, or both, in order to make ends meet.

Haig warns against influx of refugees

WASHINGTON (AP) — A turn toward more radical leftist governments in Latin America could result in a flood of refugees to the United States that "would make the Cuban influx look like child's play," says Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr.

Haig issued that warning to the National Governors' Association at its annual winter meeting in Washington Monday.

If the United States fails to address the problems in the other nations of the Western Hemisphere, Haig said, there could be a great increase in the flow of illegal refugees.

In 1980, an estimated 1.5 million people entered the United States illegally, including more than 125,000 Cubans in the Mariel boatlift.

Several of the governors told Haig of their concerns over the problem of the refugees, half of whom come from Mexico, and the troubles they face in resettling them in their states.

Americans don't want the United States to become the "home of last resort" for the world's refugees, said Gov. Richard D. Lamm, D-Colo.

Haig, asking the governors to support President Reagan's immigration policy, said "America has not been callous" but noted that refugees also are entering other countries.

The United States, for example, has admitted more than half a million immigrants from Southeast Asia since 1975, but the combined total accepted by other countries is even more, he said.

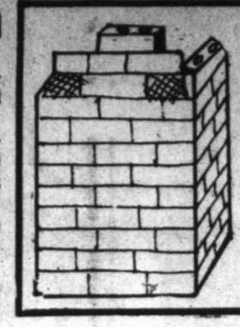

Regarding the Western Hemisphere, Haig called for support of the administration's proposals to provide economic and military aid to Central and South American nations. The United States, he said, has "a special responsibility to...help these people to help themselves.

"As we view the flow of refugees from Cuba and the Central American republics, we can see what can happen in the end if we do not meet the challenge," Haig said.

U.S. "isolationism" and "protectionism" only make matters worse, encouraging the rise of radical regimes that create more problems, he said.

DEAR ABBY

Lonely 'loser' can't win, place or show

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I'm a 24-year-old guy who can't seem to get a girlfriend. I've tried everything. I don't know what the problem is, but I suspect it's my looks or personality. Abby, people who know me say I'm really a nice guy once you get to know me. The problem is that in today's society girls judge guys by their looks.

I'm so lonely, I'd do anything to have a girlfriend to share things with. I'm shy, but when I do get up the courage to ask a girl to dance, I get turned down. I'm well-groomed, dress neatly and have good manners, but I was turned down 10 times one night in a disco. It's so depressing. Why am I such a loser?

All my friends have girlfriends. Some even have two or three, and they all treat their girlfriends lousy. I get invited to parties, but I hate to go because I don't have anyone to take. I hate going to movies all by myself and eating alone. I'm not the most exciting guy in the world, but I have a good job, a nice car and a few dollars in the bank, but money can't buy happiness. — JUST PLAIN LONELY

DEAR LONELY: I can't believe that a man of your description can't find a girl to date. A guy who gets invited to parties must have at least one good friend. Ask him (or her) what there is about you that turns girls off. Skip the discos, and ask your co-workers. Everyone has a sister, a roommate, a cousin or a neighbor who'd like to meet a nice guy. Don't give up. She's out there. And by the way, the answer to your prayers may be found in church.

DEAR ABBY: My daughter is to be married soon. A friend told me to expect some of the guests to bring their wedding gifts to the reception. She says it's a common and acceptable practice these days because people want to save the postage. I always thought wedding gifts should be delivered to the bride's home before the wedding.

When did this practice of bringing gifts to the reception become "acceptable"? Surely the bride can't be expected to open gifts that are handed to her in the receiving line! Also, what if there are no adequate facilities for collecting and safeguarding gifts at the church, hall or wherever the reception is held?

And since the bride and groom leave for their honeymoon immediately following the reception, they can't very well take the gifts with them, so that means the bride's mother has the job of carting all the gifts to her home for safekeeping.

Please enlighten me. — BOTHERED AND BEWILDERED

DEAR B AND B: Thank you for pointing out the tremendous burden imposed on the bride's mother when thoughtless friends hand-carry gifts to the reception. No matter how "common" it has become, it is NOT acceptable.

DEAR ABBY: I'm considered a good cook, and I don't mind giving out my recipe to anyone who wants it. My gripe is the person who doesn't follow the instructions and then complains because it didn't turn out like mine.

For example, take this simple recipe I have used for over 20 years and have given to countless guests:

INFALLIBLE RICE

(serves four hungry, or six polite people)

1 medium onion, minced
2 tablespoons butter
1 cup long-grain, raw white rice
2 cups chicken broth (hot)

Saute onions in butter until transparent. Combine onions, rice and hot broth. Bring to a boil on top of range. Cover and place in 325-degree oven for 20 minutes. Serve and listen to the compliments.

Simple enough? Well, you ain't heard nuthin' yet. I have had people complain that theirs wasn't like mine. Upon questioning them I learned why. Here are a few reasons:

a. Used instant rice.
b. Used another shortening, not butter.
c. Left out the onions.
d. Failed to cover the rice while baking.
e. Used water instead of broth.
f. Allowed rice to "boil" for some time before placing in oven.
g. Let broth cool before using.

Now I ask you! Why can't some people just follow instructions? — RESIGNED

DEAR RESIGNED: For some people, instructions are something they read carefully after a failure to find out what they did wrong.

Pioneer in the middle of modernity

By MEL REISNER
Associated Press Writer

CENTRAL SQUARE, N.Y. (AP) — The tidy little house isn't far from an interstate highway and Oneida Lake, whose blue waters boil with activity in the summer. But the philosophy behind it is decades removed from 20th century America.

"When you have to do it, you do it. That's all," says Alice Wing, whose traits of ingenuity and endurance make her a pioneer in the middle of modernity.

Divorced and homeless in her late 20s, with two children to support, this daughter of a carpenter decided to build her own house. Having no plans to speak of, she began by designing it herself, sketching out rough drawings with a lead pencil in lieu of blueprints.

Somewhere in the project, she learned a joy in craftsmanship which has never left. For years, she has spent vacation moments working on her home.

"I'd rather do that than travel," she says. "When you're done (with a carpentry project), you can stand back and look at it and be sure you've accomplished something. When you come home from a trip, all you've got is dirty clothes."

The house which rose near this Oswego County village contains seven rooms: three bedrooms, and a bathroom, dining room, kitchen and living room. Beyond another broken marriage and the birth of two more children, the house and its builder have endured.

"I built just enough rooms for us to move into," the 58-year-old, self-made carpenter says of the project she began more than 30 years ago.

"It was kind of a shell with partitions to live in while I built what we really needed. But I change things all the time. My kids used to say when they came home from school they never knew what wall ma would have knocked out," she adds.

Mrs. Wing says she had helped her father as a child but got no reciprocal aid because he died about the time her first marriage was breaking up. However, she did inherit a piece of land across the street from her parents' home, and with that break never has had to take out a mortgage for her housing.

An employee of General Electric Co. in Syracuse most of her life, she says she has put most of her earnings into her abode.

Since she started working on it, Mrs. Wing has become an expert in every facet of construction but electricity. She converses easily about plumb lines and the merit of various types of roofing.

She says the most difficult part of getting started was having to go back and correct the mistakes caused by unfamiliarity. She had to talk friends into helping with the electrical work and plumbing.

It's a hard-won experience she hasn't been able to share with her children.

"None of my kids ever wanted to help me, but it was my own fault. I'm too bossy," she says. "They tell everybody that, too: 'We have a bossy mother.' But I hope they'd ask for help if they needed it."

Mrs. Wing did not neglect insulation, and today heats the entire structure with a natural-gas space heater which has kept the interior at 70 degrees even in this winter's bitter cold. She says her most expensive monthly bill for lights and heat combined was $128.

Snug among the houseplants and space-shuttle cleanliness of her kitchen, Mrs. Wing reflects on what has become her life's work.

"It's nothing fancy, just a country home. But I'm just a standard person. I don't try to keep up with the Jonses."

HINTS FROM HELOISE

Keep baby from slipping in the tub

DEAR HELOISE:

My baby is young but very active during his bath.

To keep him from slipping through my soapy hands and sliding down into the water, I purchased some standard bathtub appliques and applied a few to the bottom of the baby's tub.

No more wrestling matches to keep baby above water. — Janet Propes

Good idea, but still keep a good grip on the little darling. — Heloise.

SOCK IT TO YA

Dear Heloise: Cut off the top part of a cotton sock and pull it over your bottle of cooking oil.

The sock will absorb any drips of oil and keep your shelves oil-free.

Easily washed when soiled too or just replace with another odd sock. — Rose

PACKING AWAY

Dear Heloise: If you need packing material for a breakable item and have nothing suitable, popped popcorn (no salt and butter, please) will work fine. — Mrs. Leo Veintraub

PICTURE PROOF

Dear Heloise: When taking an inventory of our household belongings to put with our homeowner's insurance policy, I found a shortcut.

Instead of making a written list, I took snapshots. First, I took photos of each room (all angles) in the house to have a record of furniture, paintings, etc.

Next, I opened up all cupboards, drawers, closets, etc., and took closeup shots of the contents.

I had a complete record of our belongings in no time. These photographs were put in a safety deposit box for safekeeping. — Sherri White

LETTER OF THOUGHT

Dear Heloise: Whenever it seems that things are in a rut and the grass looks greener on the other side, stop to be truly thankful for things just the way they are, and for those around you.

Begin to express your individual creativity in each circumstance. — Terri Breitling

NAME STICKERS

Dear Heloise: I end up with hundreds of unsolicited glue and gummed name stickers every year, most of which have gone to waste.

Not anymore. Now I carry them in my purse. When I go shopping and make purchases, I peel one of the gummed stickers off and stick it on the item, as well as one on the outside of the bag.

That way, if I'm careless enough to leave a package on a counter or in the restroom, the person finding the bag can return it to the store or notify me if they want to return it.

If the stickers aren't the kind that easily peel off without a trace of glue, I'm sure to stick it on an inconspicuous place. — Lillian Titmas

DEAR HELOISE:

Many recipes call for grated lemon or orange peel. I like to keep some on hand for later use. However, not long ago in the produce section of a large store, oranges were displayed with a sign saying they had been treated with an insecticide.

I asked the produce manager about it and he said all citrus fruits are treated with the insecticide and that I didn't have to worry about it.

While I'm sure it's not harmful if one peels and eats the fruit, is it harmful to eat the grated peel? And how about making candied citrus peel?

Perhaps you can get some information on this. — Marie Dorok

I talked with Juan Tijerina, head of a regional office of the Food and Drug Administration, who said all insecticides and pesticides used on fruits and vegetables are water soluble. Therefore, if properly washed before using, the danger of ingesting the chemicals is extremely slight.

Of course, the key words are "properly washed." A thorough rinsing will do the trick, according to Mr. Tijerina.

So, go ahead and make your grated lemon peel or candied peel and feel perfectly safe in eating them. In other words, not to worry! — Hugs, Heloise

CHILD'S 'SIGNATURE'

Dear Heloise: Twenty months ago when our son was born, I wanted to do more than just add his name to the rest of the family's when I signed a greeting card to someone.

So, when those special times come along, I trace around his hand or foot on the back or inside of the card. I used to do my tracing while he was sleeping but, now that he is older, he enjoys watching me do it.

Family members seem to enjoy this and are disappointed if I'm rushed for time and forget Scott's "signature." — Carolyn

DISH BLACK MARKS

Dear Heloise: How can black marks be removed from new ceramic dishes? One of my small salad bowls and one of my large serving bowls look terrible because of the black on them and even my automatic dishwasher won't take it off. — Maria Patterson

Sprinkle a small amount of baking soda on the wet dish, then rub the black marks gently with a soft, damp cloth, and let the soda work its "black" magic.

You'll be surprised at how quickly the marks will vanish! — Heloise

Don't hoard a great household hint. Do send it to Heloise, P.O. Box 32000, San Antonio, TX 78216. She can't answer your letter personally but she will use the best tips received in her column.

Women: The pathetic species

By ERMA BOMBECK

For years, men have been the peripatetic species and women the pathetic.

Traveling husbands whipped in and out of the house, stopping only to pack clean underwear and catch the next flight to Atlanta, while their wives faced a week of leftovers and single parenting.

Well, two funny things happened on the way to jet lag. After years of dropping their husbands off at the airport, a lot of women finally admitted they actually look forward to time by themselves.

In an unofficial poll among wives of husbands who travel, the women admitted they really like the single life occasionally. It was like a mini-vacation. They could relax, eat onions in bed, go on a diet and find their own space.

One woman said she felt like a child who could stay up as late as she wanted instead of having her husband yell, "Aren't you coming to bed?"

Another woman said at first it was lonely, then she realized she could go to movies which her husband hated, eat whenever she wanted to and have pizza for breakfast if she liked and not be tied down to a schedule.

The second funny thing that happened on the way to jet lag was a women's revolution where 43 percent of the women returned to the work force and now they're running for planes while their husbands stay at home.

And the men's reaction? It stinks. Ironically, it has nothing to do with the old cliche, "Absence Makes the Heartburn Stronger." They're just plain lonely.

One man complained, "I come home lonely. I wake up lonely. It's like walking into an empty theatre." Another one said, "I come home ready to talk and unload and there's no one there but my kid hanging on the phone."

What they're feeling is what women have been trying to tell them for years when they walk in the house and ask, "How was your day?" Loneliness takes getting used to. It's the most underrated disease in the world today, characterized by overeating and talking to the tropical fish, yet it's given about as much respect as the common cold.

But men can do it. Next time your wife is out of town, put on the raggy pajamas your wife wants to dust the piano with, get that fish out of the can that she says smells up the entire house. Then climb into bed and spread it on a box of crackers while you're propped up watching the all-night sports network of replays.

As for the garbage by the sink, tell it to take a walk!

RINGING THE BELL

Black communities must be educated

By BOB TIEUEL

Bellringer John E. Jacob of the National Urban League writes: "Dear Bob — Until blacks are aggressively brought into the mainstream of American life, we will continue to suffer gross disadvantage and our communities will continue to be plagued by problems that drive us deeper into despair. Nonetheless, we must redouble our efforts despite our limited resouces. One problem that must be tackled is the shameful withdrawal from political activity as measured by the depressingly low voter registration figures in black communities.

"Politicians look at low black voter turnouts and swiftly conclude black interests can be ignored.... Election-year "get out the vote campaigns" are not enough. There has to be a permanent citizenship education campaign mounted in black communities by community organizations and concerned individuals. This is a responsibility that cannot be shirked.

"Another responsibility that must be shared by all of us is to deal with the crime problem that drains the black economy, disrupts neighborhood life, and wastes the lives of so many young people.

"And the entire community will have to marshall its resources to help the mounting numbers of young mothers and their babies. Teenage pregnancy is a continuing problem: for young mothers, for their children, and for their community at large. When babies have babies, opportunities for both become sharply restricted.

"Everyone, from churches to social groups, fraternal organizations to established social service agencies ought to be actively engaged in helping. Working together in our own communities, we can be better prepared for the difficult decade we face of trial and trouble."

CHUCKLE: ERA in Kenya, black Africa, is facing about the same as here, according to T. Anderson. During a recent parliamentary debate there, a member of the body declared: "It is very African to teach women manners by beating them. Women are occasionally rude and need to be taught manners. I am very opposed to their legislation, because if it is passed, even slapping your wife is ruled out." Which reminds me of the young husband who said, "When I got mad at my wife I threw her over my lap to spank her, but once she was there, I wasn't mad at her anymore."

The Education Department recently proposed regulations that would cut off more than 700,000 college students from the list of those eligble to receive federal high education grants for the needy. What do bellringers think? One bellringer wrote me: "If we cannot forget our differences and unite to preserve public education — Republican and Democrat, conservative and liberal — we may find we live in a nation that has lost its free, universal, unifying public schools."

Pecos, Texas, city and civic officials declared today V.M. Coleman Day. Dr. Coleman was recognized for her many and varied contributions to the civic, charitable and religious life of her community and West Texas. She was the guest speaker on an Afro-American History program at St. James Baptist Church where the Rev. R.M. Montgomey is pastor. A number of city dignataries were on hand to hear her speak on some of the problems facing blacks in West Texas and the nation.

Dr. Coleman is a member of the staff of Midland Memorial Hospital and an active lay person in St. Paul C.M.E. Church in Midland. She has lent numerous efforts to aid small churches in West Texas and Texas College in Tyler, which is owned and operated by the denomination of which she is a member. The affair was sponsored by Friendship C.M.E. Church and Bob Tieuel Jr., acting director of the history program and pastor. Afro-American History observations have been held nationally since 1916, with Dr. Carter G. Woodson, a Harvard PhD. founder.

Note: Dr. Coleman will be awarded a "Woman of the Year" plaque by the Christian Call Mission Fund on March 1, 1982. it was reported.

Watt reverses policy on preservation of wilderness

By JOHN HARRIS
Hearst Feature Service

WASHINGTON — Interior Secretary James Watt's abrupt policy reversal on the preservation of wilderness areas has resulted in a confused pattern of satisfaction and indecision regarding the controversial environmental issue.

A major environmentalist group said Watt's statement was prompted by "election-year" politics. An organization representing top oil companies would only say Watt's statement "deserves careful study." An Interior Department spokesman said questions about Watt's statement were "tough" to answer.

Watt issued a surprise statement Sunday, declaring that he will seek legislation banning mining and drilling in nearly 80 million acres of "wilderness," mostly in Alaska, until the end of the century, or 18 years hence.

"We think these lands are special lands and should be preserved in the natural state," Watt said. "We would not allow any exploration development that would harm the wilderness characteristics...we would not allow a road to be built or anything that would cause damage to the wilderness values."

The proposed legislation represents a total turnabout in policies previously advocated by the Reagan administration. Last year Watt said he welcomed applications from drilling and mining companies to conduct operations in wilderness areas until the year 2003.

While the development has stunned enviromnentalists and their foes alike, it has also left them perplexed about the true nature of Reagan administration policies on environmental issues. In at least one case an Interior Department spokesman appeared as perplexed as anyone else.

"That's a tough question," he said, when queried on what the Interior secretary meant by saying that in an "urgent national need" President Reagan would be empowered under the legislation to exploit wilderness areas otherwise restricted from development.

"Clearly it takes years to exploit a wilderness, and you can't have a pipeline in being on an urgent basis," the spokesman said. He added: "I guess it's just a judgemental call on the President to look ahead in the event of a threatening international situation."

The spokesman also conceded that "no comprehensive inventory" of the mineral and related wealth exists and that such an inventory "is something that has always been beyond our reach."

On Sunday, Watt said:

"We don't know what minerals are there, we don't know what energy potential is there, and right now the U.S. is vulnerable to a natural resource attack or war. We're vulnerable to a strategic mineral shortfall to such a degree that we're now dependent upon Russia and South African nations to meet our needs."

The U.S. Geological Survey, an agency of the Interior Department, is currently engaged in assessing the petroleum potential in wilderness areas. The assessment is scheduled to be completed in about six months, and may help resolve one of the nation's basic environmental debates.

The Reagan administration has contended that vast quantities of petroleum deposits have become inaccessible in wilderness areas as result of legislation supported by environmentalist groups. Industrial sources say as much as 15 percent of the nation's oil wealth may be involved.

Environmentalists have contended that only one percent of the nation's petroleum potential lies under wilderness areas, and that this "insignificant" total lends support to demands for permanent protection of the areas from mining and drilling.

Watt's statement led to evident satisfaction on the part of the Wilderness Society, a major environmentalist group headed by Gaylord Nelson, a former Wisconsin senator.

"Secretary Watt and the Reagan administration are showing awareness that their environmental policies are not popular in an election year," said Gordon Roberts, a spokesman for the group. "That's the primary reason for Watt's reversal."

Roberts recalled that in the House Interior Committee "every representative" recently gave approval to a six-month moratorium on the development of wilderness areas, a fact which he said reflected "great opposition" to previous Reagan administration environmental policies.

"We think it's a step in the right direction," Roberts said of Watt's statement. "But we won't really know what it means until the legislation is introduced."

The American Petroleum Institute, which recently attacked environmental studies by the Wilderness Society as "biased and inaccurate," issued a carefully-worded statement on Watt's declaration:

"The proposal by Secretary Watt seems to be an approach deserving of careful study towards resolving what has been a difficult issue for a long time.

A long shot pays off handsomely. Beauty and abundance are the key elements in your 1982-83 plan.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Communication plays a major role in your success today. Say what you mean. The ability to speak a second language will help in straightening out a mess.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You have to unravel some snarls in romance before you can settle down to business this morning. Do it quickly so that boss does not become annoyed. Better times are coming!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): The talents you normally count on could fail you after lunch. Do not panic! Associate's support makes everything work out fine.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Romance blossoms anew when someone who was transferred to another location returns. Friends are supportive. It is time to cut some old business ties.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Crank up the career machinery and get moving. A unique opportunity exists. Updating the material in an old report helps you advance your personal interests.

We were saddened to learn of the death of Garry Davis of Cos Cob, Conn. A graduate of Harvard University, he was a disciple and frequent partner of S. Garton Churchill. Since he learned his bridge in the days when psychic bidding was in vogue, playing with and against Garry was always an adventure.

There was no doubt that he was an imaginative bidder and card player, and this hand, from a rubber game at the Regency Whist Club in New York, where he was a long-time member, bears eloquent testimony.

Garry picked up the rather uninspiring North hand. His partner was U.S. internationalist, Boris Koytchou, who played on many of our championship teams. Koytchou opened the bidding with one club and then came in freely at the three-level despite the fact that he was vulnerable. With four-card support for his partner's second suit and only a doubleton in the first-bid suit, Garry realized that there might easily be ten tricks in the black suits, so he boldly raised to four spades on his yarborough!

West led the king of hearts and continued with the queen. Declarer ruffed, cashed the ace of trumps and led the ace of clubs and another. West won and forced declarer once more with a heart. Declarer accepted the force, ruffed a club in dummy and returned to hand with the king of trumps. Now he simply led his good clubs. The defenders could score their high trump, but no more.

One of our associates often joined Garry Davis for a game of commuter bridge on the New Haven line. We are sure the games will be duller without him!

Rubber bridge clubs throughout the country use the four-deal bridge format. Do they know something you don't? Charles Goren's "Four-Deal Bridge" will teach you the strategies and tactics of this fast-paced action game that provides the cure for unending rubbers. U.S. Steel resists higher price

PITTSBURGH (AP) — U.S. Steel Corp. chairman David Roderick said his company has made a "fair" offer for the remaining outstanding shares of Marathon Oil Co. stock, and will not sweeten the deal.

Meanwhile, the U.S. Supreme Court refused Monday to revive a challenge by Mobil Oil Co. to U.S. Steel's takeover of Marathon. Without comment, the justices left intact rulings that blocked Mobil's takeover attempt on antitrust grounds.

U.S. Steel won its controlling interest in Marathon, the nation's 17th-largest oil company, after a court battle with Mobil.

Roderick's statement Monday followed reports of opposition to the second half of U.S. Steel's takeover of the Ohio-based oil company.

The U.S. Steel executive warned that shareholders who might resist completing the takeover "will be unable to realize a price in excess of the U.S. Steel offer."

The nation's largest steel producer bought a controlling interest in Marathon for $3.75 billion in cash last month. It needs a favorable vote from two-thirds of Marathon shareholders to acquire the remaining shares and merge the two companies.

Last week, the chairman of Dreyfus Corp. said it would vote its approximately 700,000 shares against U.S. Steel at a special Marathon shareholder meeting March 11.

Other investment counselors have expressed dissatisfaction with what they call the comparatively low value of the notes U.S. Steel intends to trade for the 29 million Marathon shares it doesn't own.

About one-half of Marathon's shares were bought for $125 each on Jan. 7. The second step would swap remaining shares for U.S. Steel notes of $100 paying 12½ percent interest annually.

Roderick said the offer is "well in excess of previous market value for Marathon shares" and "represents the maximum amount that U.S. Steel is willing or prepared to pay for Marathon."

Roderick also said that, while U.S. Steel prefers a merger, an unfavorable vote "would not subject U.S. Steel to any unusual financial or other pressures."

If the merger is rejected, U.S. Steel might consider buying more shares through the open market, depending on the price, Roderick said.

The total value of the U.S. Steel-Marathon transaction, if completed, would be about $6.2 billion, making it the second largest in U.S. corporate history. The biggest was $7.8 billion paid by Du Pont Co. for Conoco Inc. last year.

The energy crisis — The obvious signs are gone

EDITOR'S NOTE: The words are now part of the American lexicon: energy crisis. But are they mere words, or more? As AP Business Writer Robert Burns reports in the first of a three-part series, they are at any rate words to be taken seriously.

By ROBERT BURNS
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The obvious signs are gone: no gasoline lines, no spiraling prices, no fuel shortages. But the energy crisis that pounced on America and swiped at its economic jugular in the 1970s is still alive.

The threat, in fact, may be growing with the spectacular buildup of arms in the Middle East, supplier of 40 percent of the free world's oil.

"We are not out of the woods so far as the energy problem is concerned — not by any stretch of the imagination," says Energy Secretary James Edwards.

For most Americans, the danger may seem exaggerated. After all, gasoline is plentiful and its price has fallen about a nickel a gallon since last April.

Prices of other oil products also have dropped as conservation and recession in the industrialized West have created a glut of oil on world markets.

IRAN HAS CUT its oil prices three times since the start of 1982, fracturing the price structure of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries. Britain and Norway, not members of OPEC, reduced the price of their North Sea oil earlier this month. And Saudi Arabia, the world's largest oil exporter and the kingpin of OPEC, is under great pressure to reduce its output to prevent prices from falling more.

At first glance the fortunes of oil seem to favor the importing countries.

But there is a catch.

Nearly a decade after "energy crisis" became a household term, the United States is still vulnerable to a disruption of international oil supplies for one simple reason: Oil production at home cannot satisfy demand.

Although more oil wells were drilled in the United States last year than ever before, production was virtually even with 1980's. And the United States still had to spend $80 billion for 2.2 billion barrels of imported oil.

THE UNITED STATES is as dependent on foreign oil today as in 1973, when a five-month Arab embargo sparked a quadrupling of world oil prices. Imports equal about one-third of U.S. oil needs, the same as in 1973.

What's more, Arab oil today represents twice the share of U.S. imports that it held in 1973.

Despite efforts by some American oil companies to seek new supplies in areas outside the Middle East, the United States and most of its allies will remain dependent on Arab oil for many years, energy analysts agree.

"So long as the Middle East remains unstable and the industrialized world remains so dependent on oil from that part of the world, you will continue to face the potential for a crisis day by day by day," says Henry Thomas, the Department of Energy's assistant secretary for international affairs.

While that's a serious concern, Americans have dramatically reduced their use of gasoline and other petroleum products. The American Petroleum Institute, a trade group, estimates that gasoline use fell about 4 percent last year from 1980 while distillates used for home heating and diesel fuel dropped nearly 5 percent.

MANY ECONOMISTS believe conservation will continue even if oil prices remain stable in the 1980s.

"I am convinced that the slowdown in the growth of demand is ... permanent," says Aivars Krasts, vice president for planning at Conoco Inc.

In a recent Associated Press-NBC News nationwide poll, 91 percent of those responding said energy conservation is as important now as it was a few years ago. And 93 percent said they personally were conserving energy.

In that same poll, those responding were nearly evenly split on the question of whether the nation faced an energy shortage, while slightly more than three-fourths said the United States was too dependent on foreign oil.

Conservation, by reducing the need for imported oil, has improved America's energy security, private and government energy experts say. But few believe that conservation alone will solve the world's energy crisis.

THE LONG-RANGE SOLUTION is to bridge the gap from the petroleum age to a new era powered by energy from the sun and other renewable resources, experts say.

"The key point is that we're running out of oil," says Bernardo Grossling, a geophysicist and an adviser to the Inter-American Development Bank in Washington. What's left of the world's oil must be used to develop alternatives — and time, he says, is of the essence.

"If we proceed without any sense of urgency and we drift along without doing anything to solve the problem for 10 or 15 years, then we may not have enough oil left to get to the next plateau," Grossling says.

The stakes are high. A major cutoff of oil from the Middle East would cost the U.S. economy hundreds of billions of dollars in lost production and higher inflation, according to a Department of Energy study.

In such a case fuel prices would soar and gasoline lines might reappear.

AND THE DAMAGE may not stop there. A big cutoff of oil to the West would strain relations between the United States and its allies, says William Hogan, professor of political economy at Harvard and director of the university's Energy and Environmental Policy Center.

No one is predicting when a new energy emergency might strike; it's the uncertainty that worries some, yet makes others eager to ignore the problem.

"It makes me nervous," says John Bookout, president of Shell Oil Co., that many people think the United States is immune to another oil-price shock.

Bookout fears complacency from the lull in energy problems will make it more difficult for the industry to win greater access to federal lands and offshore areas to search for oil.

"COMPLACENCY TAKES the pressure off the forces ... at work to solve our (energy) problem," Bookout said.

When the energy crisis burst into the limelight in the early 1970s, it sparked a new push to develop alternative energy sources. Despite setbacks — particularly for nuclear power — forecasters agree coal, solar and nuclear power will provide a greater share of future U.S. energy needs.

In its latest long-range forecast, Conoco says oil's share of total U.S. energy consumption will fall from 45 percent in 1980 to 34 percent by the year 2000.

But at the same time, Conoco says, the United States will be importing a greater share of its oil at the turn of the century than it is today — 36 percent compared with 32 percent last year.

And while some progress is being made in developing alternatives to oil, the drive launched by the Carter administration in 1980 to produce synthetic fuels equal to 2 million barrels of oil a day by 1992 has lost momentum.

"THE (OIL) INDUSTRY is at a turning point," says Herbert Krupp, an energy economist at Bankers Trust Co. in New York. Krupp says many oil companies, fearful that oil prices will not rise substantially over the next several years, are reconsidering investing in expensive synthetic fuels projects.

Nonetheless, most energy specialists agree the Reagan administration took a major step in the direction of improving America's energy security when it accelerated the filling of the Strategic Petroleum Reserve.

When the federal government created the reserve in 1975, it hoped to stockpile 1 billion barrels of oil as a "cushion" against a possible loss of Middle East oil. The reserve is held in salt dome caverns in Texas and Louisiana.

The fill rate fell far behind schedule in 1979, however, when the Carter administration stopped buying crude for the reserve during the supply crunch and price spiral that resulted from a shutdown of Iran's oil fields.

But in the summer of 1980 Congress ordered that the reserve be filled at a minimum rate of 100,000 barrels daily. And last year the Reagan administration boosted the rate, pushing the current reserve to about 240 million barrels, or about 100 days' current imports from the Persian Gulf.

THE MERE KNOWLEDGE among OPEC members that the United States has a strategic stockpile of oil makes the possibility of another Arab embargo less likely, says William Randol, senior energy analyst at First Boston Corp.

But even the administration agrees that a government stockpile is not the only means of preparing for an unexpected interruption of oil supplies.

The need for other actions is at the heart of a debate now raging between the administration and Congress over how the United States should prepare itself for an oil emergency.

In September, a General Accounting Office report to Congress said, "With the exception of the recent buildup of the Strategic Petroleum Reserve, the United States is no better prepared to deal with significant disruptions in oil imports than it was during the 1973 oil embargo."

Congress is working on a bill that would authorize the president to allocate oil supplies and control prices in the event of a severe petroleum shortage. The administration, however, is opposed to the legislation on grounds that government intervention would do more harm than good.

WHILE THE ADMINISTRATION isn't saying exactly what it would do in an emergency, William Vaughan, the Energy Department's assistant secretary for emergency preparedness, says there is no need to worry.

"We are willing to be held accountable for how we deal with it," he says. "But LET us deal with it."

Hanoi doesn't encourage optimism on MIA issue

By DENIS D. GRAY
Associated Press Writer

HANOI, Vietnam (AP) — The U.S. delegation dispatched to Hanoi by President Reagan to discuss the issue of Americans missing in action met for three hours with Vietnamese officials today.

Both sides declined to talk with reporters, saying that discussions would continue Wednesday. But Vietnamese sources warned U.S. correspondents "not to expect any surprises" from the talks.

The U.S. delegation consisted of Richard Armitage, deputy assistant secretary of defense, and four other American officials. They got a hostile reception in advance from Vietnam's foreign minister.

The American delegation is seeking more information about the remains of nearly 2,500 Americans missing in action during the Vietnam War, which ended in 1975.

THE U.S. officials were met at Hanoi's Gia Lam airport by Ngo Minh, the No. 2 man in Vietnam's bureau in charge of the search for missing personnel. They met later today with him and Dang Nghiem Bai, the acting director of the Foreign Ministry's North American department.

Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach told American reporters who arrived in advance of Armitage Monday that the government would not cooperate with Washington in the search for MIAs unless Washington stopped using the issue as a "political weapon."

He said his government was angered last year when some U.S. officials questioned why it had taken six years for the remains of a serviceman to be returned when the man died years before the Vietnam War ended.

"We gave them the remains of three Americans, but they used them as a political weapon against us," Thach said.

Some American officials have accused Vietnam of holding back on both information about the missing and their remains until they could be used to get concessions from the U.S. government.

THACH SAID his government would not allow American search and recovery teams into Vietnam to look for remains of the missing Americans.

"We can do it ourselves," he said. "We do not need Americans here to help us."

He also said that his government would rather work with American veterans' organizations than with the U.S. government to solve what he called a "humanitarian problem."

In December, four members of the Vietnam Veterans of America came to Hanoi and reached an agreement with the government to cooperate on the MIA search, to allow U.S. scientists and doctors to visit for a study of the effects of the defoliant Agent Orange which U.S. forces sprayed about, to have further veterans' visits and to develop a cultural exchange program between veterans and Vietnam.

Vietnam has handed over the remains of 74 Americans killed in the war.

Pentagon officials in Washington say the Defense Intelligence Agency has 273 reports from Vietnamese refugees claiming to have seen American servicemen alive in Vietnam since the end of the war. Additional refugee reports pinpoint purported grave sites and locations of downed U.S. aircraft.

The two nations have no diplomatic relations, and Thach characterized relations between them as "bad."

Gandhi critical of monetary policies

By TYLER MARSHALL
The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

NEW DELHI, India — India's Prime Minister Indira Gandhi Monday criticized the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund and, without naming it, the United States, for failing to respond adequately to problems of the developing nations.

Gandhi, in an inaugural address to representatives of 43 Third World countries meeting here to discuss development problems, called for an end to "outmoded and irrelevant concepts" practiced by the large lending institutions of the industrialized countries.

To meet a deepening world economic crisis, new, innovative measures are needed, she said.

She criticized the World Bank specifically for failing to establish special programs to ease the impact of the energy crisis on developing countries. To meet the growing balance-of-payments crises among Third World nations, she said, the IMF needs to beceome more flexible in its solutions.

"The usual short-term stabilization programs will not suffice in this new situation," she told the delegates.

India recently acquired the largest loan ever granted by the IMF, $5.7 billion, to help correct its own chronic balance-of-payments shortfall.

Without naming the United States, Gandhi also criticized Reagan administration proposals to reduce support to the World Banks' concessional lending agency and place political considerations on loans to the developing countries.

The three-day meeting was convened at India's initiative. It is viewed as an attempt to breathe new life into the stalled North-South dialogue — the negotiations between the industrialized nations of the Northern Hemisphere and the poor countries of the Southern Hemisphere to reshape the global economy.

Following Gandhi's speech, delegates began debating the two main issues of the conference: how to improve cooperation among developing nations and how best to engage industrialized countries in formal negotiations that would lead to large-scale transfer of resources from rich to poor countries.

Chinese Vice Foreign Minister Pu Shouchang reportedly accused the United States and other developed countries of obstructing negotiations.

China, a special guest to the conference, is the only nation represented that is not a member of the non-aligned movement.

Delegates also discussed a proposal to establish a core of technical experts from Third World countries that could examine scientific and industrial cooperation between countries of the so-called South.

'Pirates' from IRA strike ship

MOVILLE, Ireland (AP) — In a pirate-like attack in the early hours today, armed IRA guerrillas captured a British cargo vessel, cast its 10-man crew adrift in a lifeboat in Lough Foyle and blew up the ship, police said.

All the crew members of the ship reached shore safely and no one was hurt in the incident, police said.

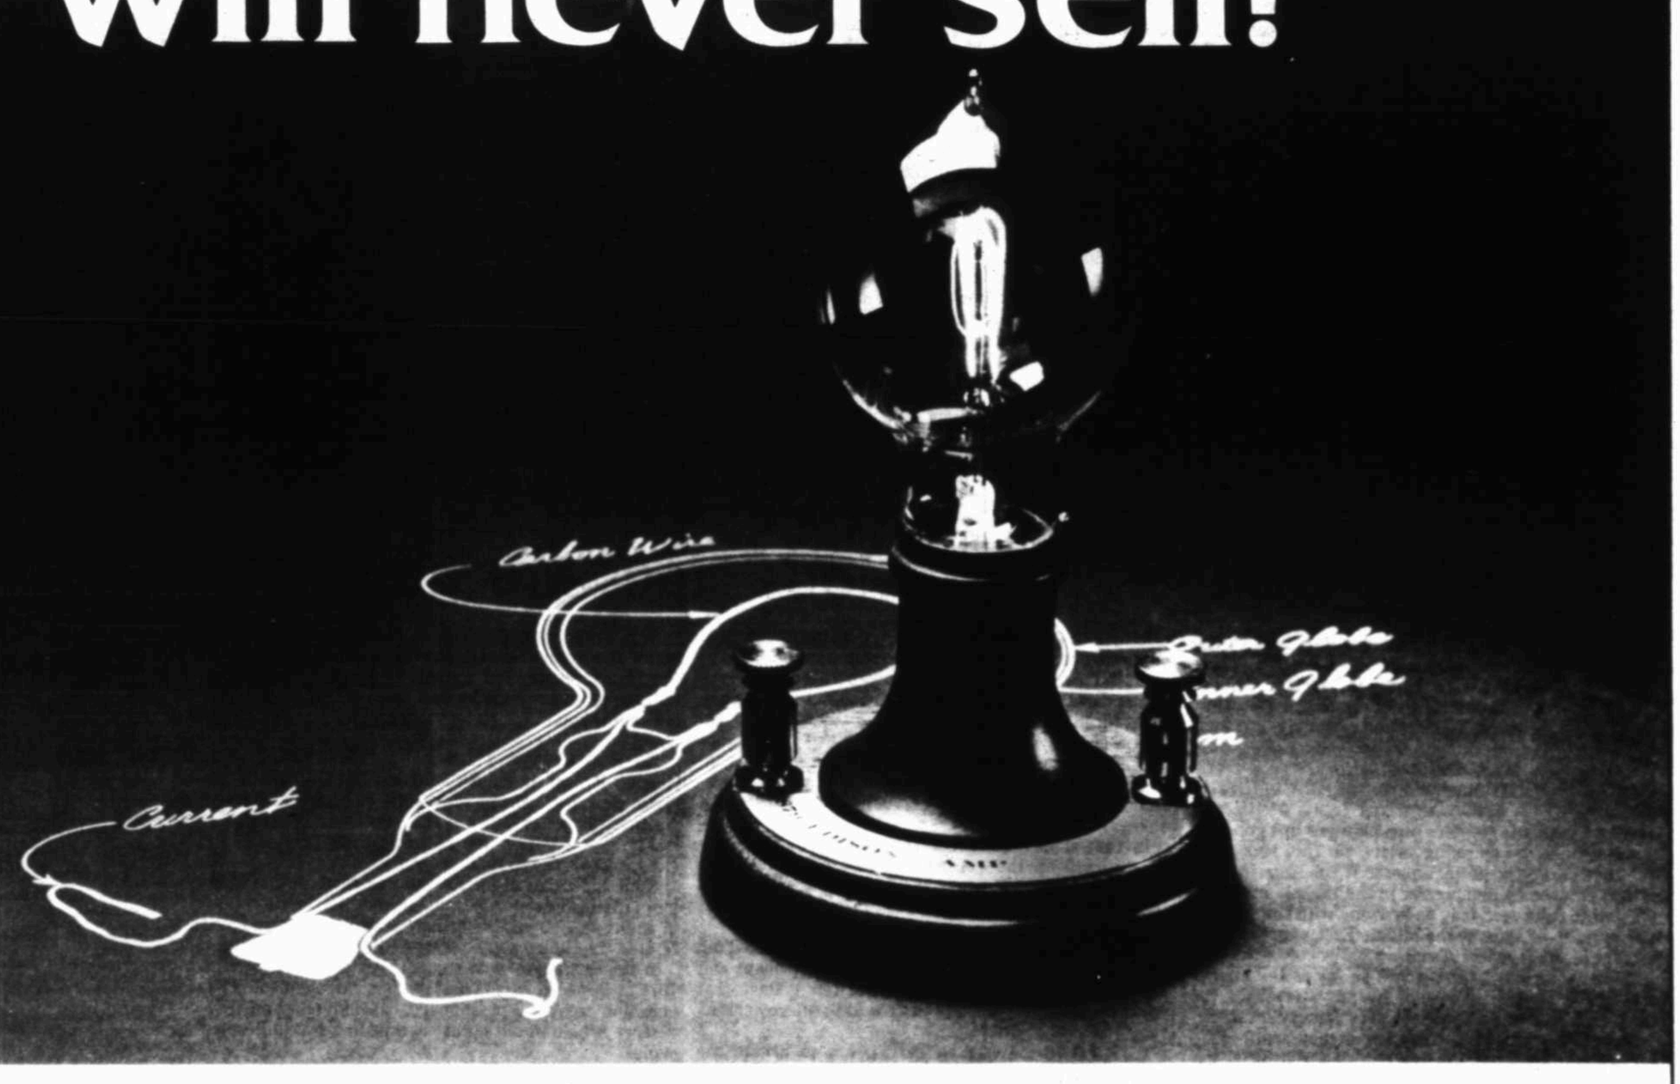

The outlawed Irish Republican Army's Provisional wing said in a statement that it was responsible for what it termed "a successful attack on an economic target."

The gang warned of further assaults on British ships entering Irish waters.

The attack on the 1,200-ton St. Bedan, loaded with coal and bound for Londonderry, Northern Ireland, was a carbon copy of an incident a year ago when a Liverpool coal ship was blown up in Lough Foyle.

Lough Foyle is a sea inlet which separates the Irish Republic from British-ruled Northern Ireland.

"This idea will never sell!"

Wrong.

Thomas Alva Edison came up with a lot of ideas in his lifetime, and not all of them were commercial successes. But he had that rare combination of insight, imagination, and luck that led to the discovery that sound could be recorded and reproduced. His invention — the phonograph. Edison was a businessman. He understood the importance of profits in furthering his research.

Chaparrals nail WTC

Chester Smith connects on 12 of 14 shots

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

"I hurried the shot," Chester Smith explained when asked how he missed a shot, "but I also missed one in the second half, too."

Even so, there was no reprimanding, "don't let it happen again." All the 6-6 freshman from Dallas Wilmer Hutchins did was score 28 points, sinking 12 of 14 from the field and four-of-four from the line, as Midland College raced past Western Texas College, 111-83, Monday night.

The win was Chaparrals' 26th in 30 games this season and 16th in 17 WJCC games. Any fears that MC might let down after clinching the conference title at Odessa last Thursday were for naught, thanks to the largest Chaparral Center crowd to see the Chaparrals play this season. It was enough to hype a team if there were any thoughts of coasting the final two games.

FIVE CHAPS scored in double figures with 5-6 Spud Webb, the Baby Faced Assassin, scoring 25 points and turning into an defensive intimidator, blocking two shots under the basket and suffering the embarrassment of being caught goal-tending. You can imagine what that did to the crowd, biggest roar of a roaring night.

Puntus Wilson scored 23 points, 18 coming in the last half when he went on a streak of six-for-seven from the field during one stretch. Chuck Robinson drilled 12 points through the hoop and Lance McCain 10.

MC jumped to an early 14-6 lead, but WTC threatened to make a game of it, pulling to within two at 12-14 with 12:28 left in the half. Sparked by Smith and Webb, Midland dashed off 14 straight points to lead 28-12 with 9:30 left and it was all over but the final total.

After Webb's goal-tending, Smith's performance highlighted the Chaps play, especially for those who remember back in November when he had trouble hitting the boards with a shot.

"I guess it was my best night of the season shooting," he agreed.

Actually, it wasn't all that much better than what Smith has been doing all along. At Odessa Thursday, he was 10-for-15, against Howard College he was 9-for-13, which is typical of his performance during MC's 16-game winning streak.

WHILE, HE played inside at Wilmer-Hutchins, at 6-6 he figured to move to a forward at the college level, but since he's the biggest Coach Jerry Stone has, he continued to play inside. "There's a difference. My man is usually bigger at the college level than he was in high school, but I like it."

While most of Smith's points come inside, they are of the twisting, turning, banked variety and taken under extreme duress, so his shooting statistics still are impressive. And he has proven that it doesn't pay to give him shooting room from outside, either.

Chester is a good example of Stone's policy of subordinating awesome size and going for "the best athlete."

While WTC is going nowhere this season, Stone is glad this win is in the vault. First, he feared a possible letdown after the title clincher and, then, it was Homecoming with several of the players participating in the halftime ceremonies.

"I was very glad to have this big crowd," Stone said. "I think it kept us from letting down. And I was especially glad we had that 20-point halftime lead with all that was going on out there on the floor."

CHAPSTYQUES—MC closes out its regular season at Clarendon Thursday night and will be seeking to surpass the 16-2 WJCC winning record compiled by their Chaparral predecessors...The Region V tournament begins next Wednesday in Big Spring and Stone notes, "We could easily play Clarendon in our first game over there." Clarendon, incidentally, lost to MC by only two points in a previous meeting at Midland...Mike Richardson, assistant coach at Tulane University, was on hand to scout a WTC guard for the Green Wave, which is battling Memphis State for first place in the Metro Conference...

Story gives up HPU post

BROWNWOOD, Texas (AP) — Chester Story, head basketball coach at Howard Payne University and former head basketball coach at Midland College, and his assistant, Billy Williams, resigned Monday, according to university President Dr. Ralph A. Phelps Jr.

"The two coaches felt that their resignations as of today would give the basketball program an opportunity to develop in a different direction and we agreed," Phelps said.

Howard Payne's basketball team, plagued by drop-outs and the academic ineligibility of several players, including the loss of Kenneth Wallace, the Lone Star Conference's leading scorer at mid-season, had its first losing season in 17 years, finishing 10-17.

In the previous two seasons under Story, the Yellowjackets were 21-7 and 21-9.

Athletic Director Bill Hicks will conduct the search for a replacement.

AL's top hitter is no match for Sox

BOSTON (AP) — American League batting champion Carney Lansford lost his salary arbitration dispute with the Boston Red Sox Monday. His agent called it a test case for other productive, but young, players who don't have the threat of free agency.

Arbitrator Robert Stutz ruled that Lansford's value was closer to the $440,000 offered by the Red Sox than the $650,000 requested by Lansford in a hearing last Friday in New York.

The arbitrator must pick one of the figures for a one-year contract and cannot compromise.

Leigh Steinberg, Lansford's agent, said he hoped to begin negotiations early in the 1982 season toward a long-term contract.

"The hearings were conducted on a highly professional level," said Haywood Sullivan, Red Sox owner and general manager. "Naturally, we are pleased with the result, and now we are looking forward to continuing the negotiations with Carney and his agent during spring training for a long-term contract."

"This was a case that was larger than Carney Lansford versus the Red Sox," Steinberg said. "It was really a test, in some sense, of whether any player who reaches an extremely productive point at a young age can ever hope to be compensated at a level not equal to, but at least in the vicinity of, a productive player at an older age, one having the benefit of having gone for free agency."

Steinberg said that in the hearing the Red Sox agreed that the 25-year-old third baseman, who batted .336 last season, was one of baseball's most productive offensive players.

But the club argued that Lansford's salary should not be based on those of players who have commanded additional pay to keep them from becoming free agents, Steinberg added.

Lansford cannot be eligible for free agency until after his sixth season in 1983.

Steinberg said that if Lansford, the batting champion and one of the game's most efficient run producers last season, can't win in arbitration, "it is going to be very difficult for any young player" who doesn't have the free agency weapon.

However, he added that he was pleased that the Red Sox did not downgrade Lansford's accomplishments in the hearing.

"He was philosophical. His comment was 'we gave it our best shot,'" Steinberg said of Lansford's reaction. "Carney will go out and play as hard as he can play. His only desire is to bring a pennant to Boston and to stay there for many years.

"We understand very well that there is not going to be a run on crying towels in the Boston area for Carney's 'bad' fortune in only achieving $440,000," Steinberg said. Lansford made $275,000 last season, his first with Boston, and $150,000 in 1980 with California, the agent added.

"But what people should understand is Carney Lansford doesn't make the salary rules in baseball nor does he set the market standards."

By going to arbitration, Lansford must accept a standard player contract that doesn't contain incentives, bonuses or other items that often are in contracts, said Steinberg.

"Carney's whole desire in this all along was never to go to arbitration. We always wanted a long-term contract," he added.

He said he was surprised that he lost but added that Stutz ruled in favor of the clubs in four cases he heard last week.

"I would strongly assume that this gentleman won't be an arbitrator for baseball next year," Steinberg said. "I felt he was fair in the hearing room and he had knowledge of baseball. But it does surprise me he could hear four cases and decide every one of them on the management side."

He added that seven persons on the side of the Red Sox were at the hearing.

"It just seems to me it was not the Red Sox we were fighting but the major league baseball establishment," Steinberg said. "Major league baseball was determined to win this case."

Johnson lifts Tech over Texas

LUBBOCK, Texas (AP) — Midland's Charles Johnson led a last-gasp Texas Tech charge as the Raiders overcame a 10-point deficit in the final 3½ minutes to beat Texas 67-65 in Southwest Conference basketball action Monday night that clinched sixth place in the league standings.

Tech thus is guaranteed the home-court advantage for the first round of the SWC tournament, beginning next Monday.

The Texas-Texas Tech game was the only SWC game scheduled Monday. Tonight's schedule finds Texas Christian at Texas A&M and Houston at Rice, both 7:30 p.m. contests.

Texas gained its biggest lead of the game, 61-51, with three minutes, 40 seconds to play and went into a delay game that backfired.

Tech converted several turnovers into points and finally took the lead when Steve Smith stole the ball and fed Johnson for a layup that made it 66-65 with 29 seconds left. Smith then drew a foul and sank a free throw with eight seconds remaining and Texas was unable to score before the buzzer.

Johnson, who had 14 points, was a prep star at Midland High and a Junior College All-America choice at Midland College.

The Raiders outscored Texas 16-4 in that final burst and Texas lost its seventh game in its last nine outings.

The Longhorns had held a two-point halftime lead, 31-29, following a see-saw first period.

Longhorn forward Virdell Howland led all scorers with 24 points, and Texas center LaSalle Thompson had 14 rebounds.

Jeff Taylor led Tech with 18 points and Clarence Swannegan added 16.

The Longhorns fell to a 6-9 SWC mark, 16-9 overall, despite hitting 23 of their 24 free throw tries while Tech only got seven free shots and hit five of them.

"It's just part of the nightmare," said Texas coach Abe Lemons, whose team has collapsed since forward Mike Wacker was felled with a knee injury against Baylor Jan. 26.

"You'd have to be a genius to figure out how to lose that game," he said. "I've never had anything happen to me like this last month. I keep thinking I'm going to wake up and it will all be over."

Tech coach Gerald Myers, needless to say, was much more pleased with the outcome.

"That was great comeback," he said. "We have never had a comeback like that since I've been here. Our guys just would not give up even when we were nine points down with less than two minutes left.

Tech improved its SWC record to 8-7, 16-7 overall.

Midland's Abila bound for Fort Worth

By ROBERT BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

ODESSA — The Midland Boxing Club ran into some stiff competition Monday night in the finals of the 36th Annual Regional Golden Gloves Boxing Tournament here at Ector County Coliseum.

Three MBC boxers went into the finals with hopes of earning a berth in next month's state Golden Gloves Tournament in Fort Worth, but only one made it: 112-pound flyweight Joel Abila.

Abila, in only his second Open Division fight, entered the ring for the first time during the tournament Monday night in the finals. He and his opponent Fane Valle, 110 pounds from Monahans, were the only flyweights who were entered so neither boxer had to worry about preliminary matches.

AS IT turned out, only Valle had to worry about the finals.

Though he has only been an Open Division fighter for a little over a month, Abila displayed the boxing form and ring savy of a veteran fighter using an aggressive offense and near-perfect defense that set up a technical knockout in the second round.

From the very beginning of the bout, Abila was in control. He connected at will with a left jab in the early stages of the fight and added a left-right combination that Valle couldn't stop as the fight progressed.

Midway through the first round, Abila threw a left jab that set Valle up for a right, and when it connected, down he went. An automatic eight count kept him in the first round, but the punishment continued until the bell sounded.

In the second round, Abila continued with the left jab and left-right combo that proved so fruitful in the first and at the one-minute mark he unloaded a flurry of punches at the near-defenseless Valle that caused the ref to stop the fight for a standing eight count. Valle survived that one also, but he didn't get by the next.

At 2:15 into round two the referee stopped the fight giving Abila the victory and a trip to Ft. Worth for the State Golden Gloves Tournament.

IN WINNING the fight, Abila not only displayed a good attack, he also came out of the ring virtually untouched.

"I didn't have any problems with him," said Abila. "He was an awkward fighter, kind of wild. I kept thinking to myself land the over-hand right or a left jab and keep throwing combinations. That's what you've got to do all the time in amateur fighting."

One difference in Open Division boxing over Junior Olympics, the division Abila was boxing in until a month ago, is the length of the rounds. That, according to Abila, is an advantage.

"I was more relaxed with three minute rounds than in Junior Olympics. With only two minutes I had to fight quick, speed it up. Now, with three minute rounds, I can take my time and throw the punches that I need to throw."

"He didn't got to the body in the first round and he did in the second," said MBC coach Rick Fleetwood. "If he would have worked the body in the first round he would have taken Valle out then.

"Joel is quite a fighter, the kid never touched him. The only fight he's lost in the last four years was to a guy who won the National Junior Olympics. He's lightening fast."

ABILA'S VICTORY, as it turned out, also gave the Midland Boxing Club the team title in the competition. Since the host team (Odessa Boys Club) isn't eligible to win the honor, the only competition was the Pecos Evening Optimist Club and when San Angelo's Larry Kerby defeated their final fighter of the evening, Robert Pendleton, the title was Midland's.

Folling Abila's flyweight victory, teammate Felix Munoz, 119-pounder, entered the ring against Ray Cortinez of Abilene.

Munoz controled the fight in the first round with a good left jab and an occasional combination that kept Cortinez from getting inside to score. But he didn't keep it up.

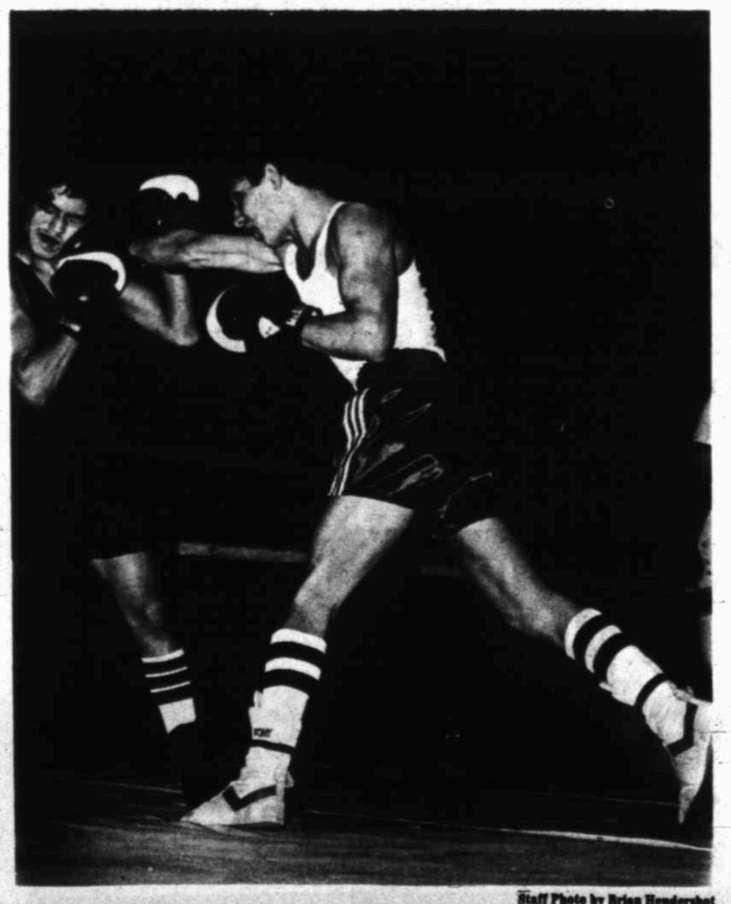

Cortinez started sneaking inside Munoz' defense in the second round and connected on good body punches while Munoz relied on his jab to the head. Both boxers scored well, but Cortinez was beginning to take control of the fight.

In the third round, Cortinez kept getting inside and pounding away at Munoz' body and in the end was awarded the decision.

The final Open Division fight for MBC was Benny Long, 147-pound light middleweight, against defending regional champion Mike Deanda of San Angelo Southside, 145 pounds.

LONG TAGGED Deanda early with good lefts and then got caught on the ropes. The ref seperated the two fighters and Long bent over holding his stomach. When the ref started the count, he straightened up and went back to the fight only to run into a good left followed by a crashing straight right that sent him to the canvas giving Deanda a knockout victory 1:29 into the round.

The only other Midland boxer to fight Monday night was Ruben Tagle at 178 pounds in the Regular High School Division. He scored a decision victory over Monty Lamb of Big Spring despited giving away 14 pounds to his heavier opponent.

Air Force ordered to drop case

Appeals court finds military offered Cooke immunity

By RUDY ABRAMSON
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — The U.S. Court of Military Appeals ordered the Air Force Monday to drop its espionage case against Lt. Christopher Cooke, who was accused of visiting the Soviet Embassy in Washington to pass U.S. military secrets to the Russians.

Shortly after the court acted, the Air Force said that Cooke had been released from custody at nearby Fort Meade, Md., and had left the Air Force "under conditions other than honorable." It said that the Department of Justice was considering criminal prosecution of Cooke.

The appeals court, the country's highest military tribunal, concluded on a 2-1 vote that the 26-year-old officer was denied due process because Air Force officials had promised him immunity from prosecution in exchange for his cooperation, then began court-martial proceedings after he had told investigators of his activities.

The Air Force said that the Department of Defense had no avenue of appeal, and that any prosecution would be up to the Department of Justice.

Cooke's motive, and the sensitivity of any information he turned over to the Soviets, is still a mystery, although there have been reports that the Air Force has had to change the targeting of its 54 Titan intercontinental missiles as a result of the case.

THE BIZARRE CASE BEGAN last May when Cooke was arrested at his parents' home in Richmond, Va.

Because of the controversy over the granting of immunity, the Department of Justice — believing the Air Force had botched the case — refused to prosecute Cooke under civil espionage statutes, the way such matters are normally handled. But after the military court's ruling Monday, a Department of Justice spokesman said that developments had been closely monitored and that department officials were eager to read the opinion of the military tribunal.

Four months after Cooke was arrested, the Air Force convened a court martial at Andrews Air Force Base, Md. After pre-trial hearings, Cooke's attorneys, including criminal lawyer F. Lee Bailey, asked the military appeals court to block the court martial from going forward.

At the time of his arrest, Cooke was deputy commander of a Titan missile silo in Kansas. The Air Force's investigation of him was launched after the FBI observed him leaving the Soviet Embassy just a few blocks from the White House in December 1980.

His arrest came after Air Force investigators followed him from the National Airport in Washington to the embassy last May. Cooke was first questioned without being advised of his right to counsel, and was promised immunity from prosecution by Brig. Gen. Claude Teagarden, the chief judge advocate (prosecutor) of the Strategic Air Command, according to pretrial testimony.

Teagarden denied that he made a flat promise of immunity in exchange for Cooke's cooperating and taking a lie detector test. The Air Force further contended that such an arrangement could only be made by the SAC commander-in-chief.

IN ITS OPINION MONDAY, the Court of Military Appeals said that the manner in which Cooke was brought to trial "is not military justice as authorized by the Constitution and established by the Uniform Code of Military Justice."

Midland public schools' foreign language students, families and friends kicked off Foreign Language Week with a covered dish, buffet-style meal at the Midland High School cafeteria Monday night. Students brought dishes representing the countries whose native languages they are studying. Midland winners of the Seminole Quaternion Contest, held Saturday in Seminole, were announced.

Diamond merchant sued for $60 million

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — A $60 million suit has been filed against diamond merchant Harry Winston Inc. by Phyllis McGuire, one of the singing McGuire Sisters, claiming she gave precious gems to be cleaned and got back fakes.

In a suit filed Monday in U.S. District Court here by San Francisco lawyer Melvin Belli, she accused the gem merchants of "fraud, deceit, perfidy and willful conversion" of her "priceless precious stones."

The suit asked $10 million in general damages and $50 million in punitive damages from the store, headquartered in New York City.

Winston spokesman Ed Gifford said he was aware of the suit but declined to comment.

The papers filed by Ms. McGuire alleged she had knowledge that Winston's, "when found out," switched and stole other customers' precious stones sent to them for cleaning.

The suit claimed that when the other alleged thefts were discovered Winston's paid the value in exchange for a promise not to disclose the theft or payment.

Belli said that after Ms. McGuire complained to Winston's about the matter, the company sent representatives to her house to examine her gems. Belli said one of them was Richard Vena, a Winston's account executive who is one of the defendants.

The suit included a handwritten statement, saying: "The dia (diamond) I examined is not the diamond originally sold to Phyllis McGuire. A drastic mistake has been made by Harry Winston Inc."

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Getting, maintaining credit mainly time, prompt payment

By BILL DOYLE

Q. In the last couple of years, I have become a "deadbeat" by paying our bills very late. I say "our," because I handle the family's checkbook and have never been good at it. I am afraid I have ruined our credit rating. Is there any way this can be rectified? Or, is it simply a matter of time?

A. Mostly, it's a matter of time and of paying all future bills promptly.

The standard advice to someone in your fix is to pay off all present debts as quickly as possible and be prompt in meeting others that normally come in, such as mortgage and utilities.

Then try for an installment loan. Most likely, it will have to be a collateral loan. For instance, with an auto loan, the lender can repossess if you default. Don't. By demonstrating your ability to meet loan payments, your credit rating will improve.

After a year or so, apply for charge and credit cards. You'll probably get them. But the bills you'll be allowed to run up will be kept low for a while.

Q. On Oct. 26, 1981, I mailed a $9,688.13 check to my broker, covering the purchase of a $10,000 Southwestern Bell Telephone Co. 16¼ percent debenture, due to mature Sept. 18, 2021. After repeated requests to the broker, I received a certificate dated Dec. 29, 1981.

Interest on the debenture is payable March 18 and Sept. 18 each year. What period will be covered by the interest I receive on March 18, 1982, inasmuch as the certificate is dated more than two months after I made payment?

A. Six months. You'll get $806.25, one-half of 16¼ percent annual interest on $10,000, this March 18 and every Sept. 18 and March 18 as long as you own that debenture.

Most marketable debentures and bonds — those bought and sold in the marketplace — trade on an "and interest" basis. When you buy, you pay the market price, plus interest accrued from the last interest date or the issue date.

Southwestern Bell's "16¼s of '21" bear an issue date of Sept. 18, 1981. So, you'll get six months interest. If your debenture is in registered form, an interest check will be mailed to you. If your debenture is in bearer form, you'll have to clip a coupon to get your interest.

If you ever sell that debenture, you'll get whatever the market price is at that time, plus interest from the last interest payment date.

Q. What is the difference between a bond and a debenture?

A. A bond usually is secured by a mortgage on property or something else of value. A debenture is backed by a company's general credit. Think of a debenture as an unsecured bond or a long-term corporate I.O.U.

Q. My wife and I have some stocks registered in joint ownership of both our names. Each of us also have some stocks only in individual names. How can we have the stocks in my name changed to joint ownership, without going through a broker and paying commissions?

A. By filling in the endorsement on the back of each stock certificate. On the line where it says you assign the ownership of the stock "to" write in both your names.

You must sign the endorsement and have your signature guaranteed by either a commercial bank, trust company or a brokerage firm. You might be charged a fee. But there's no reason to pay a full commission.

Send the certificate to the stock's transfer agent, by registered or certified mail, return receipt requested. A new certificate will be issued in both names.

Murdoch said to be optimistic papers won't have to close

LONDON (AP) — The Times of London was alive and reporting the news today, and publisher Rupert Murdoch was quoted as saying he is optimistic he won't have to close the famous daily and its sister Sunday Times because of heavy financial losses.

Ten hours of talks with union leaders Monday failed to produce agreement on Murdoch's demand for sweeping layoffs to save money.

But afterward, Murdoch announced he was abandoning his Tuesday deadline for shutting the papers and firing 210 clerical workers.

The Times reported in its own front-page story that the "immediate threat of closure is lifted."

Murdoch was quoted by the afternoon newspaper The Standard as saying: "I am very optimistic about the future...We have already had a lot of movement from the unions."

The dismissals — with two weeks' notice and "on the basis of last in, first out," Murdoch said — are just under a third of the 671 staff in the clerical departments. The total full-time payroll at both newspapers is 2,600. The Times quoted Murdoch as saying the clericals are the "most grossly overmanned areas in the industry."

Arthur Brittenden, director of corporate relations for Murdoch's News International Ltd., Said he hoped there would be no more firings.

U.S. envoy ends Egypt trip without meeting Mubarak

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — U.S. special envoy Richard Fairbanks ended a two-day visit today without meeting President Hosni Mubarak, and sources said he apparently did not make any progress toward an agreement on Palestinian self-rule.

Fairbanks, appointed earlier this month to break the impasse in the autonomy talks between Egypt and Isreal, left for Washington, the sources said.

The presidential office has said Mubarak cancelled all his appointments this week because he had the flu.

The American envoy, who met with Foreign Minister Kamal Hassan Aly on Sunday and Monday, told reporters he would keep details on the talks private for fear of endangering the negotiations.

Foreign Ministry sources said Aly repeated to Fairbanks the Egyptian position that Israel should undertake "confidence-building measures" to encourage participation by Palestinians and other Arab countries in the talks.

The talks, which aim to establish autonomy for 1.3 million Palestinians in the Israeli-occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip, have been bogged down for two years.

Dollar makes foreign gains as trading reported heavy

LONDON (AP) — The dollar made sharp gains on foreign exchanges today, and Tokyo dealers said trading there was extremely heavy. Gold and silver were lower.

Foreign exchange dealers said the dollar's jump was in response to a plunge Monday sparked by lower Eurodollar interest rates. Eurodollars are U.S. dollars on deposit in European banks, including foreign branches of U.S. banks.

Bullion dealers said gold was jarred because of renewed selling by the Soviet Union.

In Tokyo, where markets close before those in Europe open, the dollar closed at 234 yen, compared with 232.30 yen at the close Monday.
