Budget surplus takes center stage

By Rick López
Staff Writer

AUSTIN — The star of the 76th Legislature isn't the governor with presidential aspirations, but a $5 billion budget surplus with infinite possibilities.

Today, lawmakers will hear the first pound of the legislative gavel and ride off into 140 days of debate, bargaining and handshaking.

They will discuss proposals to allow consumers to choose their own utility companies and explore motions to adopt a school voucher system — but most legislators will be eyeing the budget surplus and what it can do for their constituents.

"It's the biggest thing this session," said State Rep. Tom Craddick (R-Midland). "We're going to have to find a specific way to give these tax dollars back to the people."

Craddick said the overage could be used to give Texans a break on their local and state taxes, or it can give tax breaks to large companies that have main offices in the Lone Star State.

"I hope we use it for our schools. Many changes need to be made in public education," Craddick said. "... or it could go to the general revenue and be spent on everyone."

Texas educators brace themselves as Legislature begins new session

By Daniel Arp

As the gavel drops for the first time today on the biennial state legislative session, school districts across Texas will officially begin holding their breaths.

"When the Legislature meets, it's the most dangerous time in education in Texas," said Steve Buck, president of the Midland Federation of Teachers.

There is always a potential for drastic policy change to come out of legislative sessions, and this year is no exception.

Teacher salaries, voucher programs and state funding formulas will be some of the major educational areas of focus in the State Legislature this year. Bills are already being filed but will not be voted on until May, putting a freeze on much

102nd birthday

It was a long time ago, early into the 1900s, when Laura Massey Coston was her daddy's little girl. As was her duty, she did her father's bidding and went straightaway to church.

First of all, she wasn't supposed to sit at the back of the church but up front. And she was supposed to wear her Sunday best and certainly not her bonnet.

That was one of the down-on-the-farm stories which Mrs. Coston told Monday on her 102nd birthday at Midland's Courtyard Care Center.

BAGHDAD, Iraq — With the Iraqi currency worth less and less, shoppers must hand over fistfuls of cash just to buy groceries, and grooms looking for a wedding ring need a 3-inch stack of bills. County commissioners begin 1999 term

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

Midland County Judge Bill Morrow, acting as moderator, cast nary a vote on Monday in presiding over his first session of the new Midland County Commissioners' Court that adopted rules of conduct that focused on decorum.

The court took much action in 4-0, 3-0-1 and 3-1 votes, including a 3-1 vote that conditionally authorized the county judge to sign an interagency agreement to authorize Midland County to participate in the Permian Basin Drug Task Force (PBDTF).

Signing the agreement is contingent upon the governor's office authorizing money to fund the task force.

"This court will go with whatever the governor recommends and approves on drug task forces," Morrow said. "It's hard for us to know what the overall scheme is (statewide in combating drug traffickers). We certainly need drug interdiction ... the question is, 'Where are we going to spend our limited resources?'" Morrow asked.

At his first session as presiding officer of the Commissioners' Court, Morrow tendered his state-of-the-county message and his voting style.

"I will vote to break a tie ... as moderator," said Morrow, who adopted a style exercised by his "mentor," Judge Barbara Culver Clack, who was county judge in the 1960s and 1970s and later served as a Texas district court judge and a state Supreme Court justice. "If it is that close of a vote, I am going to get to vote anyway."

Morrow's predecessor, Jeff Norwood, however, made motions and regularly cast his vote, tie or no tie.

"The judge can legally do it, but most don't," said Win Brown, who served as a Midland County commissioner for 24 years and who retired from the court four years ago. "In the long haul," he said, "it is not the best or the expedient

Tax receipts down for fifth month

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

Midland's sales tax receipts are down 12.5 percent for sales made in the month of November, making this the fifth month in a row that sales tax revenues have fallen.

The state comptroller's office returned $798,252 in sales tax revenues to the city of Midland recently. That is down $109,401 from sales tax revenues recorded in January of 1998, said Rick Menchaca, deputy city manager.

In addition, this makes four consecutive monthly decreases is sales tax checks from the state since the fiscal year began in October, Menchaca said.

So far this fiscal year, tax revenues are down $262,000 from anticipated sales tax income for the year. This 7.4 percent decrease in sales tax income will likely mean a full $1 million less money in the city's budget by the end of the fiscal year.

"Unless things change dramatically, we are predicting a $1 million shortfall," he said.

In the current budget, $13.6 million in tax revenues was anticipated for the 1999 fiscal year.

At today's meeting of the Midland City Council, a number of cost-conserving steps will be considered to address this shortfall before it becomes a major problem, he said.

"The council will be looking at instituting a hiring freeze for non-public-safety positions," Menchaca said.

Another possibility the council will consider is offering a three-month severance pay as an early retirement package — which historically is an effective way to open up a few positions, he said.

Each vacancy created in that manner, if the council approves the emergency plan, will be evaluated with regard to maintaining appropriate city services for the remainder of the budget year, he said.

The downturn trend in city sales tax revenues is one of the economic indicators that show an increasing economic impact from the diminished oil and gas industry, said Dennis Clayton, economic development manager for the Midland Chamber of Commerce.

"We're feeling it emotionally ... and then the sales tax rebates reflect what's going on in the oil industry," Clayton said.

"Retail (business) through the holidays has kept us sort of stable ... and Midland's position as a regional center has helped mediate or soften the impact (of low oil prices)," he said.

New bridge keeps eastside Midland students high and dry

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

Three different public schools draw students along Carver Street, and these young people no longer are exposed to mud, traffic and nuisance water at the Midland Draw crossing.

Just south of Scharbauer Drive, Carver runs down into and across the large drainage canal, which holds a bit of water for days after a rain or when city crews clear water pipes upstream.

In early 1998, Midland City Council members voted to do something for the large number of pedestrians forced to walk this crossing to have access to other parts of the neighborhood.

"We had a number of requests because of nuisance water in the channel making it difficult to cross," said Marcus Johnston, director of engineering and development for the city.

"The crossing is fine, but we do have problems when it rains," said Linda Ramirez who works at Pease Elementary.

"The bridge helps out a lot," she said.

Children from Ben Milam Elementary and Lee Freshman School create a lot of foot traffic along this route, she said.

A raised bridge crossing the canal was not only exorbitantly expensive, but would significantly reduce the drainage efficiency of the channel during heavy rains, city officials said.

BUDGET: Surplus to dominate agenda

(From 1A)

Rep. George "Buddy" West (R-Odessa) said that if the surplus is used to give tax breaks to large companies, then it should also benefit West Texans with small oil businesses.

"We're hurting in West Texas. It's OK in other parts of the state, but right now we're only paying 85 cents for a gallon of gas," West said.

Legislators will also hear presentations from the appropriations and finance committees on how the first installment of an $17.3 billion settlement with the tobacco industry should be spent.

Cathy Tiege, a spokeswoman for Sen. Teel Bivins (R-Amarillo), said there are few options the panel could decide on, since the conditions of the settlement require the money to be spent on tobacco education and treatment of smoking-related illnesses.

Bivins' flight to Austin was delayed, so he couldn't speak with reporters Monday, Ms. Tiege said.

A successful GOP sweep of state offices capped by Gov. Bush's re-election broke the leadership hold Democrats held for years. However, the power shuffle shouldn't interfere with the legislators' objectives — regardless of what party they back, West said.

"It doesn't mean we have to take sides; it means we have to work together," he said. "We're not going to be all tied up in politics like they do in Washington."

West appears to have sponsored more bills this session than other representatives in Midland, Odessa and Big Spring. He's drafted 18 this session and has five dealing specifically with law enforcement issues. Bivins drafted four bills and Craddick none.

Among the items West proposed are:

- HB 228, which asks state agencies not to reunite abused children with their families if the home the child will live in is shared by the perpetrator;
- HB 232, which proposes that the punishment for Class B intoxication offenses be increased from a minimum of 72 hours in jail to 30 days;
- HB 274, which asks that "unreasonable noise", such as loud stereos and other controlled sounds that exceed a decibel level of 55, become an element used to prosecute cases of disorderly conduct. This excludes sounds that can't be controlled, like construction equipment;
- HB 244, which suggests that inmates be required to participate in a work or educational program while serving their sentence. Another bill West sponsored, HB 275, allows jailers to take away gym privileges and other recreations amenities from inmates who do not partake in the enrichment programs.

SCHOOLS: MISD wants increase from state

(From 1A)

MISD says it wants an increase in the base state allotment to school districts. In addition, it would like an increase in the Tier 2 Equalization Rate. Currently, the state supplements school districts' local funds up to $21 per penny per student if they need it. The district would like to see that equalization amount increased to $24.

"Wealthy school districts have a significant funding advantage over poor school districts," said Martin. "I think that funding advantage ought to be addressed by the Legislature."

Teachers' unions will be pushing for higher salaries this session, especially in light of the drop in Texas' teacher salary rank two places recently to 38th in the nation.

Annette Cootes, information officer with the Texas State Teacher's Association, said her group will be pushing for an increase in teacher salaries up to the national average.

"The money's there. There are severe teacher shortages in all areas of the school curriculum," she said. "We need across the board raises of about $6,000, which comes to about $300 a month."

Superintendent Joseph P. Baressi Jr. called for a plan more focused on critical shortage areas: bilingual education, math and the sciences. Currently, the state provides a base salary and it is up to the districts to shell out extra dollars for harder-to-find teachers.

"Teacher compensation and benefits is probably the biggest reason we lose teachers," Baressi said.

Even if officials don't get anything on their wish lists, they will breathe a sigh of relief when the final gavel drops if certain pieces of legislation are not passed.

Vouchers continue to be a concern for many in the school system, since they introduce a competitive option without many of the regulations placed on school districts.

Officials are also concerned about the state mandating any new programs without providing any funding for them, which would force districts to find the money locally.

(From 1A)

of the budget planning for Midland Independent School District until the summer.

"There's no way to predict ahead of time what our funding is going to be," said Art Martin, executive director of business services.

Adding extra suspense to this legislative session is the surplus in the state budget — in the 6 billion range.

"For the first time, we have a surplus in money, and everyone wants a chunk," said Buck.

District officials and lobby groups alike are already developing their wish lists.

COURT: Judge wants to be 'moderator,' he says

(From 1A)

thing to do. You work with the commissioners."

Voting only as a tie-breaking, "I can be the moderator and concentrate on maintaining order, listen and vote when I have to," Morrow said.

He had no tie-breakers to resolve on Monday. Most votes were 4-0, including the one to change the court's meeting day to Wednesday instead of Monday beginning on April 14.

Morrow cited county government's "new beginning," invited the county's 425 employees to be part of a forward-thinking team, and viewed the county's workforce "as our most valuable asset."

Morrow, a 63-year-old Midland lawyer and former Midland City Councilman, is presiding over the five-member court that consists of two new commissioners, Mike Bradford of Precinct 2 and Randy Prude of Precinct 4, and mid-term, carry-over Commissioners Henry Goulet of Precinct 1 and Louisa Valencia of Precinct 3. Immediate past commissioners are Guy McCrary and James Brezina.

"It went as I expected," Morrow said of the meeting. "It was orderly, took a little longer. We had a lot of items. I think that everyone responded well to our new rules. I see a lot of them looking forward instead of looking backward."

Sheriff Gary Painter, who has had conflicts with past county-government administrations, said that he was pleased with the court's "relaxed atmosphere, the opportunity to speak without being attacked, the opportunity to provide input in a relaxed atmosphere, and being accepted as an elected official who has some knowledge of his job."

In a 3-1 vote, the Commissioners' Court approved Painter's request that the judge sign an interagency agreement provisionally authorizing Midland County to participate in the resurrected Permian Basin Drug Task Force.

The agreement would be valid only if the Governor's Office funds the task force, Morrow noted.

"I'm looking forward to getting back into the Permian Basin Drug Task Force (PBDTF) and getting back into fighting the narcotics problem on a large scale," said Painter, who was chairman of the late 1980s-founded PBDTF, which went defunct last year when the Governor's Office denied the task force funding and instead funded the newly-created West Texas Narcotics Enforcement Task Force (WTNETF). The WTNETF is commanded by Texas Department of Public Safety (DPS) investigator David Bradshaw of Midland.

Commissioner Bradford noted that he is not related to Bradshaw, who earlier had been referred to as Bradford.

"We will work with the West Texas Narcotics (Enforcement) Task Force," Painter said.

Mrs. Valencia suggested that "wouldn't it be better if we joined forces with the other (WTNETF) and made it stronger?"

Painter replied that "there are some problems that have come up, ... a very delicate situation," that could result in court action.

He declined to be specific.

The court also authorized Painter to hire an investigator, in the $27,000-to $35,000 range, to work for the PBDTF only if the Governor's Office does fund agency.

Mrs. Valencia cast the nay vote.

"I still feel that we should have joined the (West Texas Narcotics Enforcement) task force run by DPS," Mrs. Valencia said. "It was approved by the governor. Gary (Painter) still doesn't know whether his grant application will be approved or not."

The PBDTF is headquartered in Pecos in Reeves County, which is host agency, and includes counties of Midland, Reeves, Winkler, Ward, Presidio, Jeff Davis, and Culberson, according to Painter.

"There's no reason why the two task forces can't work together (in combatting drug trafficking)," Painter told the Commissioners' Court.

"Why do we need two (task forces)?" Goulet asked Painter.

"That's what the Governor's Office wanted," Painter replied. "The Governor's Office has no problem with two or more task forces."

Goulet asked Painter if he envisioned "any territorial disputes" between the two agencies, the PBDTF and the WTNETF.

"Henry," the sheriff said, "there's plenty of work to go around."

DRAW: Students stay high and dry

(From 1A)

City Engineer James Robertson and others put their heads together and designed a raised sidewalk just high enough to allow nuisance water to flow underneath but not high enough to impede drainage flow along the canal.

Finished in early December, the raised sidewalk cost the city only $23,000, compared to hundreds of thousands for a raised bridge.

The only time the walkway will not be available for use is during periods of heavy rain, Johnston said.

"They're not going to be walking through there when it's raining anyway," Robertson said.

The new foot bridge also provides an extra measure of safety for crossing students, as the tires of passing cars are blocked by the raised, concrete structure.

The foot bridge is a definite improvement to the neighborhood, Ms. Ramirez said. "And this neighborhood needs a lot of (city) improvements," she said.

While designed in house, the city contracted out the project in the same certificates of obligation passed to complete all of last year's paving projects around the city.

RECEIPTS: Economy showing strain

(From 1A)

ning to show the increasing strain on the economy, Midland Chamber data shows.

At the beginning of 1998, unemployment in the Midland/Odessa metropolitan statistical area was fluctuating between 4.2 percent and 4.5 percent. In the latter part of the year, however, the unemployment rate has been between 5.8 percent and 6.1 percent.

Midland's stand-alone unemployment figures are a bit better than the overall picture, beginning the year at 3.3 to 3.5 percent unemployment and finishing the year at 4.6 to 4.7 percent unemployment.

The number of passenger tickets at the Midland International Airport has dropped from 42,402 in November of 1997 to 40,523 by this past November.

Not all of the indicators point south, however. Residential building permits issued in November of 1997 totaled 10, while in November of 1998 there were 17 such permits issued.

The total Midland County labor force has grown from 60,644 in November of 1997 to 64,386 in November of 1998.

Ethnic Albanian aide assassinated, Milosevic sets release deadline

PRISTINA, Yugoslavia (AP) — An aide to Kosovo's top ethnic Albanian leader was assassinated outside his home Monday, hours after hard-line Yugoslav President Slobodan Milosevic set a deadline for rebels holding eight Yugoslav soldiers hostage.

The shooting of Enver Maloku worsened the already explosive atmosphere in Kosovo, where the guerrillas are fighting for the Albanian-majority province's independence from Serbia, the main republic in Yugoslavia.

A European official who met with Milosevic on Monday said the Yugoslav leader has set a deadline for the release of the soldiers, who were seized Friday after their convoy strayed into rebel-held territory.

Knut Vollebaek, the Norwegian foreign minister who chairs the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, warned that Kosovo will explode in bloodshed unless the separatist Kosovo Liberation Army releases the soldiers immediately.

"There is very little time left, and we have to see an immediate release of the hostages if we should avoid a major conflict," Vollebaek said in Belgrade. He did not specify the time limit for Milosevic's deadline.

The OSCE said the captive soldiers were being treated well in a heated building near Stari Trg, a coal-mining village 30 miles northwest of Pristina, the capital of Kosovo.

Maloku, the head of the Kosovo Information Center, was shot Monday afternoon in front of his home in Pristina, and OSCE officials said he was pronounced dead shortly afterward.

Initial reports said Maloku was targeted by a sniper, but the sources later said he was hit by semi-automatic gunfire from three assassins as he was about to leave his car.

Maloku had escaped an earlier assassination attempt in November.

Maloku had escaped an earlier assassination attempt in November. He is a close associate of Kosovo Albanian leader Ibrahim Rugova, a moderate who has been at odds with the rebel KLA.

Those differences have led to speculation that Maloku's killing may be connected to rivalries among the different Kosovo Albanian factions.

The KLA has refused an appeal by NATO and others to free the soldiers, demanding the release of their own fighters first.

In Switzerland, a rebel spokesman said Monday that some of the KLA hostages may be set free, but only in exchange for Albanians held by the authorities — terms the government seems disinclined to accept.

"We are going to make a step forward," Bardhyl Mahmuti told reporters in Geneva, saying "certain of them may be freed" in a deal for Albanians incarcerated by Serbs.

A videotape of the hostages, made available by the OSCE to reporters late Monday, showed the eight in apparently good condition.

"Since we've been here, nobody has beaten us or abused us verbally," one of the unidentified soldiers told the camera. "They (the KLA) have behaved very correctly."

Milosevic called the kidnapping of the soldiers "a criminal act" Monday after his talk with Vollebaek.

Their detention is the latest challenge to the off-and-on cease-fire in Kosovo, where more than 1,000 people have been killed in the nearly year-old conflict.

Five people were reported killed over the weekend, including an Albanian teen who died Saturday in Serb shelling near Stari Trg.

Representatives of Kosovo Serbs said a state of emergency should be declared in the province and that OSCE monitors should be given 24 hours to leave before a major crackdown against the rebels.

The head of the Yugoslav army, Gen. Dragoljub Ojdanic, arrived Monday in Pristina, and an army statement said Yugoslav forces there have been put on high alert. Yugoslav army tanks have been stationed close to Stari Trg.

Teams of unarmed OSCE monitors, who now number nearly 700 in Kosovo, were in almost continuous contact with both sides Monday to try to head off further fighting.

In Iraq, groceries cost shoppers fistfuls of cash

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — With the Iraqi currency worth less and less, shoppers must hand over fistfuls of cash just to buy groceries, and grooms looking for a wedding ring need a 3-inch stack of bills.

Economic sanctions imposed after Iraq's 1990 invasion of Kuwait have crippled the Iraqi economy, causing the value of the national currency, the dinar, to plummet.

The problem is that Iraq's largest bill — the 250-dinar note — is now worth only about 13 cents. As a result, some Iraqis tote their cash in black plastic bags, while others use burlap bags or cardboard boxes when paying for big-ticket items like appliances.

Before the invasion of Kuwait, Iraq had a thriving economy. One dollar bought 20 dinars on the black market and the largest bill was the vivid red-and-blue 25-dinar note.

Today, a dollar is worth 1,800 dinars. And most of the 250-dinar bills are crisp and immaculate, evidence that the Iraqi government is printing them at a rapid rate.

Faleh Hassan, the owner of an electronics store in Baghdad's wealthy neighborhood of Mansour, doesn't bother counting the 450,000 dinars he is paid for one of his washing machines. If stacked, the pile worth $250 would be seven inches high.

Hassan simply trusts his regular customers. His clerks count money from new buyers, but he doesn't ask customers to wait while the cash is checked.

Other merchants have found creative ways to count their money. While some measure the height of a stack of bills, Fawzi Dhayif uses his jeweler's scale. A recent test found his method was accurate to within one bill, a discrepancy he blamed on a few dirty notes.

At Dhayif's shop, a gold wedding band costs 200,000 dinars, or $110. That's about 2 pounds of dinars.

U.N. economic sanctions imposed after Baghdad's invasion of Kuwait forbid trade with Iraq, which means international credit cards can't be used in the country.

Although checks are available, few Iraqis trust the banking system, and many merchants won't deliver goods until a check clears.

"Iraqis are worried about food and medicine," said Amr Jassim, a goldsmith in the city's Adhamiya district.

Arafat urged to postpone declaration of statehood

JERUSALEM (AP) — Visitor after visitor has urged Yasser Arafat not to declare an independent Palestinian state on May 4, fearing it will spark violence and hurt chances for real independence.

Arafat, for now, is not saying what he will do.

In response to the most recent appeals by Rep. Tom Lantos, D-Calif., and Japanese Foreign Minister Masahiko Komura, the Palestinian leader simply said Monday that May 4 is a special occasion that needs to be marked — leaving everyone guessing about what he had in mind.

May 4 — the target date set by the Oslo accords for completing a permanent peace agreement between Israel and the Palestinians — is less than two weeks before Israel's May 17 general elections. Declaring a Palestinian state then would raise tensions at a critical moment in the Israeli campaign.

Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu is portraying himself as the only leader who can stand up to the Palestinians and has threatened to annex key parts of the West Bank if Arafat declares statehood.

A unilateral declaration of statehood just before the elections could lead Netanyahu to take stronger action than he might otherwise. It also would likely boost Netanyahu's re-election chances and weaken his main challenger, Ehud Barak, of the Labor Party.

Supreme Court upholds New York's crackdown on X-rated businesses

WASHINGTON (AP) — New York City's crackdown on strip clubs and smut shops survived a Supreme Court challenge Monday when the justices rejected a pair of appeals in which X-rated businesses and their patrons said their free-speech rights were being trampled.

The justices left intact regulations that prohibit sex-oriented theaters, bookstores, massage parlors and dance clubs from operating within 500 feet of homes, houses of worship, schools or each other.

About 150 establishments previously deemed to be primarily adult-oriented now face one of three options: move to some outlying industrial area, close down or change the nature of their business.

"We're obviously disappointed," said Beth Haroules of the New York Civil Liberties Union, which represented customers of adult businesses in all five New York boroughs.

"The city might now get even more aggressive — sending what amounts to SWAT teams into establishments they believe are adult-oriented," she said. "It's unfortunate because what's under attack is protected expression. You may not like it , I may not like it, but it's protected. The city should have used less intrusive regulation."

Mayor Rudolph Giuliani called the decision "terrific." He said the crackdown on sex shops is "one of the prime reasons for the revival of the city in the sense that the city is a more decent place and a nicer place for people to visit."

The nation's highest court refused last summer to halt the city's efforts while the legal challenge was pending.

In other matters Monday, the court:

—Refused to reinstate a child molester's prison sentence that was set aside by Nebraska's highest court because a judge quoted Bible verses before imposing the man's punishment.

—Left invalidated an Arizona voter-initiated measure that had declared English the state's official language and required its use for most government transactions.

—Rejected for the fifth time in recent years a challenge to the military's "don't ask, don't tell" policy on homosexuals.

—Let stand a ruling that said Philadelphia's public transit authority violated an anti-abortion religious group's free-speech rights when it disallowed station posters linking abortions to breast cancer.

'It's unfortunate because what's under attack is a protected expression. You may not like it, I may not like it, but it's protected. The city should have used less intrusive regulation.'
— Beth Haroules , New York Civil Liberties Union

In the New York City case, the longstanding dispute between Mayor Rudolph Guliani's administration and adult businesses has little to do with efforts, well under way, to clean up Times Square in the heart of Manhattan.

Adult businesses, and others as well, in that once-seamy area of the city were purchased and put out of business under the city's eminent-domain power in recent years.

When the disputed zoning regulations were passed in 1995, city officials estimated that only 20 of 165 then-existing adult establishments could stay where they were. The others had to reduce the adult-oriented share of their business to less than 40 percent, or move.

A number of X-rated businesses have closed or substantially changed their operations since the city began enforcing the rules last summer.

Some of their efforts to come into compliance with the zoning regulation have sparked new litigation. For example, city officials are appealing a judge's ruling that a swanky topless club has come into compliance because it now lets children in.

Giuliani said "this is, like, nuts," when a state trial judge ruled that Ten's World Class Cabaret in Manhattan "cannot be defined as an adult eating and drinking establishment if it does not exclude minors."

New York's highest court upheld the regulations last year, ruling that they did not violate the state constitution or the federal Constitution's First Amendment. The club owners and patrons then asked a federal judge to rule on their federal constitutional arguments.

But the federal judge said the state courts already had decided the same free-speech question.

The 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals agreed last June, saying the sex club owners already had a "full and fair opportunity" to argue their free-speech claim in state court.

Jib's deep-fried catfish warms up the crowd

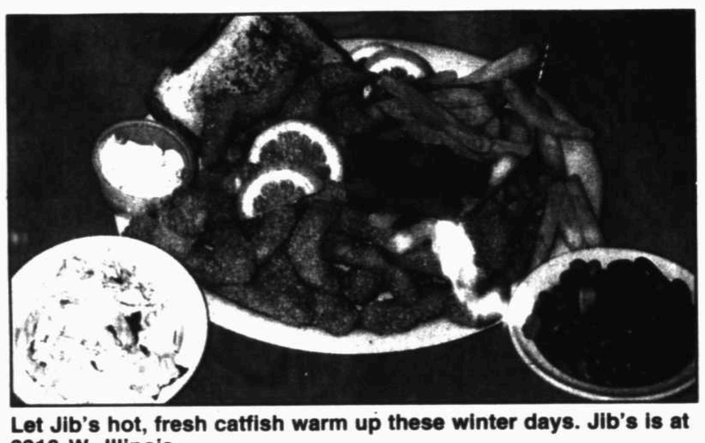
"It's gotta be cold enough out here to give frostbite to an Eskimo," Earl moaned as he stomped his feet and rubbed his gloved hands together.

"I've seen Eskimos," Slim replied, "and they'd be sunning themselves in this weather."

"All the same, I didn't bargain on frostbite when I let you talk me into helping you coach your nephew's soccer team," Earl said, coldly. "Why don't they play this game in the summer, or in a domed stadium or something?"

"Aw, man," Slim cut in. Pointing at his goaltender, he shouted, "Don't let their forwards waltz up to the goal—come out a little ways and challenge them!" Then, muttering to Earl, he said, "I think that puts us behind 3-1."

"Tell you what I'd really like to do," said Earl, "would be to go to Jib's right about now. They'll be open till eight o'clock, long after this game is over. Ahh, I can almost TASTE that hot, steaming catfish—tender, flaky, farm-raised, mind you—rolled in Jib's own specially seasoned corn meal, then deep-fried to flavor-bursting perfection. That catfish is surrounded by the warmth of its companions like tender pinto beans, fresh hush puppies, richly buttered Texas toast, crunchy French fries and one cool treat—salad or Cole slaw. That's a meal that'll warm you up all the way to your toes, Slim. I wish I feel warmer just thinking about it."



Let Jib's hot, fresh catfish warm up these winter days. Jib's is at 3316 W. Illinois.

"Did I make any substitutions last period?" Slim asked.

Earl grabbed Slim's coat collar. "Substitutes? Accept no substitutes!" he shouted. "Jib's catfish is the real Texas thing!"

"Would you mind paying attention to the game?" Slim asked. "I didn't bring you out here so you could daydream about Jib's. I need help. The forwards aren't attacking the ball properly. Can you talk to them during the next time out?"

"I'll talk to the whole team, Slim. I have an idea." "Anything you can do would be great," Slim agreed.

At the next time out, Earl spoke to the team for only about 30 seconds, then sent them out on the field. "That was pretty short, Earl," Slim said. "What could you say in that amount of time that would help?"

"Just sit tight and see," Earl said.

Sure enough, their team scored three goals in the last 10 minutes to win the game 4-3.

"Okay, what did you tell them to create such a turnaround?" Slim asked as the team celebrated on the frigid field.

"Simple. I said that if they won, we'd take 'em over to Jib's so they could warm up with some of that great catfish."

"That's no big deal," Slim replied, "We eat there after most games."

"Wellllll...." Earl said. "I told 'em, if they won, YOU'D pay for it."

U.S. still ahead in deadly game with Iraq's leader

Following the attacks launched against Iraq on Dec. 16-19, there were scattered reports that the sites targeted were not vital to Iraq's military and had not truly achieved the intent, which was to set back Saddam Hussein's war-making ability.

Now, three weeks later, comes a Pentagon estimate that actually doubles the damage estimate initially issued from the four days of bombing. The Pentagon said Friday that the attacks had set back Hussein's weapons program two years and killed from 600-2,000 members of the Republican Guard, Hussein's elite fighting force.

Shortly after the bombing The Dallas Morning News had stated, "It will be days before we know whether the United States achieved its goal of slowing down Saddam's buildup of weapons of mass destruction. Advance warning of the attack may have given the Iraqi dictator time to move enough equipment and personnel to survive the bombardment."

However, in its Friday report the Pentagon noted that U.S. and British forces damaged buildings containing hard to replace equipment and materials for making chemical, biological and nuclear weapons and missiles as well as missile test stands, special presses and wind tunnels. The attacks also left the Republican Guards without barracks, working tanks or other gear.

The report also noted that the attacks may have fanned the flames of discord already simmering among some of Hussein's military commanders. Marine Gen. Anthony, head of U.S. forces in the Persian Gulf, observed that Hussein's efforts to maintain a tight military grip, his attacks on Arab leaders for not supporting him against the United States, and his challenges to the "no-fly" zones suggest that Hussein is struggling.

All that said, the December attacks certainly did not remove Iraq from the list of countries that would like to see Uncle Sam in a grave. At the most, those attacks bought the United States a little more time which it should use to best advantage diplomatically to drum up support among Hussein's Arab neighbors. After all, if he wins this contest they will be the losers in the long run.

There is no easy solution to the problem of Iraq. Hussein, many analysts say, is politically entrenched there and as long as his supporters stay true, he will not likely be toppled.

He definitely does not like nor trust the United States. So the best that may be done is to stay one step ahead of him in this cat and mouse game. If we don't, we lose.

Today in History

Today is Tuesday, Jan. 12, the 12th day of 1999. There are 353 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On Jan. 12, 1932, Mrs. Hattie W. Caraway became the first woman elected to the U.S. Senate.

On this date:

In 1519, Holy Roman Emperor Maximilian I died.

In 1773, the first public museum in America was established, in Charleston, S.C.

In 1915, the U.S. House of Representatives rejected a proposal to give women the right to vote.

In 1942, President Roosevelt created the National War Labor Board.

In 1945, during World War II, Soviet forces began a huge offensive against the Germans in Eastern Europe.

In 1948, the Supreme Court ruled that states could not discriminate against law school applicants because of race.

In 1964, leftist rebels in Zanzibar began their successful revolt against the government.

In 1966, President Johnson said in his State of the Union address that the U.S. should stay in South Vietnam until Communist aggression there ended.

In 1969, the New York Jets defeated the Baltimore Colts, 16-7, in Super Bowl III at the Orange Bowl in Miami.

In 1976, mystery writer Dame Agatha Christie died in Wallingford, England, at age 85.

With 2000 nearing, is country going Y2Krazy?

In some states, people are stockpiling food and fuel. Others are building bomb shelters and emptying bank accounts or planning other ways to ride out the apocalypse.

Anderson

There are hotlines you can call to find out how you will be affected. Therapists are available to help you cope with the grief and anxiety of not knowing if your garage-door opener will be working a year from now.

Then there is the growing number of folks who think the whole thing is a sham. That it'll take care of itself.

The truth about the dreaded Millennium Bug is probably somewhere in between, say experts we've spoken to.

With 355 days and counting before the clock strikes midnight on Dec. 31, 1999, millennium hype is already getting out of hand. Nothing has received more ink than the dreaded computer bug now known simply as Y2K. More than 600,000 Web sites are now dedicated to the subject, with wildly varying predictions about the crisis to come.

Briefly, for anyone who's been stuck in a cave the last two years: During the first 30 years of the modern information revolution, about 160 billion lines of code were written to help run almost every aspect of our daily lives. Programs were written to do everything from balance your monthly checkbook to launch nuclear missiles.

But the brilliant folks who designed these programs were too busy to look at a calendar. Had they done so, one of them might have realized that the century would soon be ending. This oversight presented a problem, since all their programming used only two digits to indicate the year, instead of four. Unless something is done, computers all over the world will read next year's date as 1900, not 2000.

The prospect of a worldwide computer crash has put many of the same brilliant people to work on fixing the mess they made.

"There is actually a broad range of scenarios," says Bruce Webster, co-chair of a Washington, D.C.-based Y2K group. "The problem with having only two pictures for the future is that when people realize the Pollyanna-everything-will-be-fine viewpoint is not correct there will be mass panic because then everyone will assume it has to be the other end of the spectrum."

Stories abound of mishaps while testing computers by running the clocks ahead to December 31, 1999: A 500 megawatt British power plant failed when an embedded chip undetected by programmers shut down a sensor in a smoke stack. Computers at a U.S. water-treatment facility confused daily functions and dumped all chemicals into the water at once, rendering the water toxic.

As the date gets closer, a couple of things are becoming clear:

-- Cash is king.

Fixing the problem has turned out to be more expensive and harder than originally forecast. It's a labor-intensive undertaking, and cutting corners won't work. Douglass Carmichael, president of a Washington Y2K consulting company, believes "the original picture was very simple-minded." Companies in the lead, Carmichael told us, are now revising original budgets. Companies with financial or credit problems may have trouble raising the money they need to fix their systems.

Last year, AT&T predicted that $375 million would correct their Y2K problems. Now, the company expects to spend $900 million and has bumped back its readiness date.

-- Uncle Sam can't help. He has his own problems.

Companies that got an early start on fixing the bug are now almost prepared. But some firms have resisted the inevitable because they fear their efforts will be wasted if their contractors or vendors don't do the same. Carmichael says some firms are counting on a government bailout, though there's been no sign of one yet.

"(These companies) are not looking at the big picture," Carmichael says. "They are still thinking of Y2K as a technical problem, when societal impacts are the greater problem."

The federal government itself has come under criticism for being late to the party. Although key federal agencies like the Pentagon and the Social Security Administration swear they'll have the problem corrected, others lag far behind.

-- The worst disruptions will likely occur overseas, especially poorer nations where computer systems are old and not easily replaced.

Says Webster: "Technologically, we can deal with this. It may take a while, people may be without phone or power for a day, a week or as much as a month, but we have the technology to fix every problem we encounter.

"Where we could see massive problems, is if the public panics or loses faith in our ability to correct problems."

Court supports Internet without a net

WACO — The Internet is: (a) the ultimate encylopedia; (b) Pandora's box via modem.

People across the country, and in Waco this week, are arguing whether the answer is (a) or (b).

The answer, of course, is: (c) all of the above.

And the question of the moment is what to do when you have this wondrous, mischievous resource in a public library.

What you do, a federal court in Virginia has ruled, is that you let the people open the encyclopedia/box, without choosing for them what they can or cannot view.

If you avail the Internet at a public library, ruled a judge in a case involving the Loudoun County public library, installing pornography-blocking software without patrons' consent violates the First Amendment.

The Supreme Court likely will rule on this in due time. But people who want libraries to porn-block the Internet in these public venues should know that the court already has sided against government's prior restraint of the Internet.

Congress tried prior restraint with the Communications Decency Act of 1996. A unanimous Supreme Court then ruled that government had to meet the highest standard of public necessity, the "strict scrutiny" standard, to block anything from the Internet. Underlying the court decision were the vague criteria the Communications Decency Act could use to block material from the Internet.

Forbidden words

In the Virginia case, plaintiffs pointed out that library-installed software blocked some Web sites that had nothing patently offensive or vulgar, such as the Zero Population Growth Web site and one offered by the Quakers. The blocking is based on seeking out key words, nothing more.

Ultimately Judge Leonie Brinkema ruled that a public library can choose to offer Internet services, but cannot choose to offer that service and then excise parts of it, comparable to tearing pages out an encyclopedia it offers.

The case set up ironic adversaries. The defendants in the case were the library and its board. Among those who supported the plaintiffs' case against the library was the American Library Association.

One might point out that it's not censorship for libraries to use discretion as to what material they carry, since they do and always will.

Richard Matthews with the American Library Association said the discretion amounts to one choice alone: whether to offer the Internet or not. If you offer it, you offer all of it.

In response to an appeal that she install blocking software, Waco-McLennan County chief librarian Pamela Bonnell said she won't. Indeed, she even plans to have an Internet-access terminal in the children's section when additional terminals are available. She said the only provision the library might take in the children's section is to have it in plain sight of a supervisor. Currently, the library's sole Internet-access terminal has a screen to prevent eavesdroppers or inadvertent eye-fulls.

Loudoun County's new policy is to make blocking software, still loaded but in an "off" mode, an option to click "on" for those signing up to use the Internet. Children must have the signature of a parent or guardian, who can choose to have the blocking software activated.

The American Library Association's Matthews said only about 15 percent of public libraries install blocking software. Based on the federal court ruling, adults who demand to unblock the 'Net would be within their rights.

How to explain librarians' virtual solidarity in defiance of blocking materials?

Their profession is one of which the "core values" are "protecting and advancing intellectual freedom supported by the First Amendment," said Matthews.

Yes, that First Amendment. It's a Pandora's box, modem not included.

Let impeachment system work, and watch the results

WASHINGTON — The White House message is plain: If the Senate dares to call Monica Lewinsky as a witness, the Clinton lawyers will drag out the impeachment trial clear through to the summer and blame the GOP for shutting down the government. On Wednesday the Senate Democratic leader, Tom Daschle, snapped a partisan salute, announcing "universal, unanimous opposition to witnesses."

Safire

Why such hardball against taking Lewinsky testimony in public? The ostensible reasons are that the young woman's account would embarrass the president, offend the dignity of the Senate, corrupt the public morals and take a day or two away from saving Social Security in 2034.

The real reason is that her testimony cuts both ways. On the first count of impeachment — lying under oath before a grand jury — Monica is a witness for the prosecution. But on the second coun' — witness-tampering to obstruct justice — she can be treated by Clinton lawyers as a witness for the defense. That makes it awkward for either side to attack her credibility.

Take the perjury charge first. The President in his civil sworn deposition claimed never to have touched Ms. Lewinsky intimately, and before the grand jury stuck to that absurd tale of total passivity. She testified to the contrary in clinical detail. The Senate is obliged to decide which one has been — and still is — lying under oath.

On the obstruction charge, however, Ms. Lewinsky went out of her way to swear: "No one ever told me to lie. No one ever promised me a job." The Clinton lawyers made a strong point of this volunteered assertion before the House, and surely will again at trial. Prosecutors will counter that although the President never specifically said "Lie!" he suggested a false cover story that corruptly influenced her testimony. Still, her defense of Clinton carries weight.

Are senators sitting as jurors duty bound to hear directly from her, since she is already on the record? Yes. If jurors are sworn to decide impartially whether to believe her story or the President's, they are obliged to listen to her testimony (and his, if he wishes) firsthand, including decorous cross-examination. House Judiciary members failed to do their duty on this; senators should not.

When dire warnings of "national paralysis" were made before the House impeachment vote, the majority leader, Trent Lott, set minds at ease by assuring us that any Senate trial could be conducted fairly in three weeks or less. Now it's up to him to deliver on that promise of promptness within constitutional proceedure, and equally up to Senate Democrats not to march in partisan lockstep with a Clinton filibuster if they don't get their preferred witness-free trial.

We all know what outcome a substantial majority of the public wants, and therefore how unlikely is Clinton's removal by two-thirds of the Senate. But the notion of a quickie trial prearranged to be aborted after a few days by a vote of one-third of the senators was a non-starter for good reason: A vote that stipulated that serial perjury is not cause for removal would set a terrible precedent.

The chief justice can be trusted to go by the book and move the proceedings along. Most senators, after the Daschle hissy fit to bar all witnesses passes, can be trusted to act as serious participants in a constitutional corrective. We can hope that this time the impeached will act in the national interest — which is also his own best interest — not to disrupt or delay the trial or seek to discredit its participants.

Respect the impeachment process; the system will work if we let it. Senate jurors and the chief justice, not pollsters or pundits or pressure groups, will set the pace and length of the trial. The State of the Union address can wait a couple of weeks and then get a respectful hearing.

GOP lawmakers say, 'if this is not enough, what is?'

David Espo
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Clinton and House Republicans clashed in impeachment trial papers Monday, the White House claiming perjury and obstruction allegations fall short of high crimes and misdemeanors and GOP lawmakers rebutting: "If this is not enough, what is?"

Clinton denied "each and every allegation" in the House-passed articles of impeachment. The House, in papers filed a few hours later with the Senate, insisted the evidence against the nation's 42nd president "overwhelmingly supports both charges," perjury and obstruction of justice.

The two documents were filed in advance of opening trial arguments, set for Thursday in the Senate with Chief Justice William Rehnquist presiding.

Clinton's lawyers decided to forgo filing a motion seeking to dismiss the case at its very inception, although officials suggested they would make that motion after both sides had finished presenting evidence.

The House decided against filing any immediate motions, as well, although lawmakers are certain to seek permission from the Senate later to call witnesses.

The papers were filed as key House lawmakers met privately to plan the formal presentation of their case. "We will do a very good job and then when we reach the point of asking for witnesses, we think the senators will be in a more generous mood having heard our case," said Rep. Henry Hyde, R-Ill., point man in the impeachment effort.

In a conclusion to its 105-page filing, the House termed the impeachment battle a "defining moment for the presidency." If Clinton is not convicted, "then no House of Representatives will ever be able to impeach again and no Senate will ever convict. The bar will be so high that only a convicted felon or a traitor will need to be concerned," the GOP prosecutor-lawmakers wrote.

"Can you imagine a future president, faced with possible impeachment, pointing to the perjuries, lies, obstructions and tampering with witnesses by the current occupant of the office as not rising to the level of high crimes and misdemeanors? If this is not enough, what is?"

Several of Clinton's defenders in the House said during the proceedings there that, even if proven, the allegations against Clinton did not warrant impeachment. And even Republican senators concede that a two-thirds majority of the Senate appears unlikely to convict Clinton and remove him from office.

Vice President Al Gore predicted Monday that the Senate would not do so. "What the president did was wrong," Gore told The Associated Press in an interview. "He's acknowledged that, asked for forgiveness. But what he did falls far short" of misbehavior warranting removal from office.

White House spokesman Joe Lockhart, asked whether the president will personally answer questions at his Senate trial, told reporters, "I have no reason to believe that he will testify."

The 13-page filing from Clinton's lawyers — a joint effort by six private attorneys and five members of the White House counsel's office — was submitted in a sealed envelope received by Senate Secretary Gary Sisco at 11:48 a.m. — 12 minutes before the deadline.

Inside was a two-pronged rebuttal to the charges.

First, that the allegations of perjury and obstruction of justice "do not constitute high crimes or misdemeanors," and thus are insufficient to warrant the "conviction and removal from office of a duly elected president."

Secondly, that Clinton is innocent of the charges lodged, specifically the accusations of perjurious and misleading statements to Independent Counsel Kenneth Starr's grand jury about his relationship with Monica Lewinsky. Clinton also denied committing perjury in answers to grand jury questions about earlier testimony in the Paula Jones sexual harassment lawsuit, in statements he permitted his attorney to make in the case and in his answers to questions about alleged efforts to influence others' testimony.

Show will go on, with special appeal to Clinton's fellow baby boomers

WASHINGTON (AP) — On one level, the state of the union is a breeze. "In a sentence, here's how I assess our present condition: America is working again," President Clinton says. Capitalize the letters — as in, State of the Union — and things get complicated.

With official Washington tied up in knots over Clinton's impeachment trial, some in Congress have called for a postponement of his annual prime-time speech to a joint session of the House and Senate. But the congressional leadership has not officially asked Clinton to put it off.

White House aides are emphatic that the show will go on Jan. 19 even though that is the day Clinton's lawyers are scheduled to open his defense in the Senate trial on charges stemming from the Monica Lewinsky affair. Senate Minority Leader Tom Daschle, D-S.D., said Sunday that Clinton should give the address, even though it may be "uncomfortable."

Many of the president's political advisers view the speech as an immensely important opportunity to convince Americans that he can still lead. A high job approval rating is his best defense against a Senate conviction, they say, and Clinton's poll ratings generally improve after State of the Union addresses.

"Our objective is to show continued vitality and energy," said White House deputy chief of staff Maria Echaveste. "We have a lot of work to do."

Over the weekend, Clinton scribbled a 20-30 page, double-spaced second draft of the speech. Another revised draft or two, and he will begin rehearsing in the White House family theater.

Whether Clinton directly addresses the Lewinsky matter when he faces lawmakers and TV cameras in the House chamber is largely a personal decision and "one that most likely will be put off until the end," press secretary Joe Lockhart said. The president didn't mention the scandal last year, days after it surfaced, and his poll numbers jumped.

Also on hold for now is how specific Clinton will get on Social Security reform. One top adviser, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the White House is struggling with how to progress beyond last year's clarion call to "Save Social Security first," without boxing Clinton in on details not yet weighed by congressional Democrats.

"We want to move the ball forward a little without making anyone feel they've been left behind," this adviser said.

Presidential aides seem united in opposing clemency for spy

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Clinton's senior national security aides appear united in opposing Israel's request for clemency for Jonathan Pollard, the former U.S. Navy intelligence official who spied for Israel in the 1980s and is now serving a life sentence.

Monday was the date the White House set for receiving recommendations and information from the departments of state, defense and justice as well as the CIA and other intelligence agencies.

A senior U.S. official said Monday that Secretary of State Madeleine Albright has told Clinton there are "no compelling foreign policy considerations" to justify releasing Pollard. Albright's views, combined with the known views of other senior Clinton aides, could seal Pollard's fate.

Albright's stance suggests she sees no significant impact on U.S. relations with Israel if Pollard remains in prison.

His imprisonment almost derailed the U.S.-brokered Israeli-Palestinian peace agreement reached in October during talks at Wye River Plantation in Maryland. Under last-minute pressure from Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, Clinton promised to take a fresh look at clemency for Pollard even though two previous reviews of the case, also requested by Israel, found no grounds to commute his sentence.

David Leavy, spokesman for the White House's National Security Council, said he could not comment on specific recommendations received so far. He said some might be delayed slightly for logistical reasons. At any rate, he said, Clinton was unlikely to make a quick decision.

DEAR ABBY

Warning signs help parents identify drug abuse

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR READERS: Yesterday I printed a letter from Gen. Barry McCaffrey (Ret.), director of national drug control policy in Washington, D.C., in which he asked parents to act upon 10 New Year's Resolutions to Raise Drug-Free Kids. Space limitations prevented me from printing the warning signs he said parents should look for. Although there is no single factor for drug use, warning signs of a potential problem include:

Van Buren

(1) Drop in academic performance

(2) Lack of interest in personal appearance

(3) Withdrawal, isolation, depression, fatigue

(4) Aggressive, rebellious behavior

(5) Hostility and lack of cooperativeness

(6) Deteriorating relationships with family

(7) Change in friends

(8) Loss of interest in hobbies and/or sports

(9) Change in eating/sleeping habits

(10) Evidence of drugs or drug paraphernalia (e.g., needles, pipes, papers, lighters)

(11) Physical changes (e.g., runny nose not from cold, red eyes, coughing, wheezing, bruises, needle marks)

Help is available: Call this number for information: (800) 666-3332 and ask for the new Growing Up Drug Free Parents Guide. Call the hot lines for help: (800) 662-HELP or (800) 821-HELP. Or surf for information on the Web at www.whitehousedrugpolicy.gov or www.health.org or www.drugfreeamerica.org.

DEAR ABBY: Do you enjoy large, festive parties where the band is so loud you cannot hear the guest next to you speak?

We went to a very expensive black-tie wedding last week. Most of the guests left the room at various intervals throughout the evening in order to be able to converse with other guests without shouting.

The guests complained to each other about the loudness of the music, but no one felt they could speak to the host and hostess about it because they thought the loud music was their choice.

I spoke with the hostess about it today. She said she also thought the music was too loud, but she thought the guests were enjoying it.

Abby, is there anything guests can do about it? I am not complaining about music in general. It's only the very loud music I resent, which causes me to go home with a sore throat from shouting.

Do other readers agree? — ROBERTA BERENS, ENCINO, CALIF.

DEAR ROBERTA: I'm sure many readers will agree with you, depending upon their age. It's a generational thing. Young people tend to favor loud music, which explains why so many have hearing problems in their later years. Had you asked the host, the hostess or even the band leader to tone down the volume — your request may have fallen on deaf ears.

Trial of man accused of mutilating boy postponed

EDINBURG (AP) — The capital murder trial of Pablo Lucio Vasquez, accused of mutilating a 12-year-old boy during a drunken party in Donna, has been postponed for a week.

The trial was scheduled to start Tuesday, but has been put off until Jan. 19. State District Judge Fernando Mancias granted prosecutor Joseph Orendain's request for a continuance to await DNA testing of blood from the crime scene.

Vasquez, 21, faces the death penalty if convicted. Another suspect, 15-year-old Andy Chapa, will face trial as an adult for capital murder in the case. Six others, including two teen-age girls, are accused of tampering with evidence for allegedly helping cover up the crime.

Although police say robbery is the motive in the David Cardenas killing, they also have theorized from the beginning that the boy was mutilated as part of ritual sacrifice. Donna gang investigators have identified groups in the border town of 14,000 as "satanic gangs" that follow rituals linked to the occult.

But several cult experts say many cases of teens forming "satanic" groups or gangs involve ideas they derive from movies, songs and television.

Cardenas' mutilated body was discovered April 22, hidden under aluminum slabs in a vacant lot. He had been missing for several days.

Police believe Cardenas was killed at night during the weekend of April 17. His attackers robbed him of a gold ring and necklace, dragged his body and body dumped it in a field.

Firefighters, county douse feud

By T.E. Jenkins
Big Spring Correspondent

BIG SPRING — It would seem a cease fire has been called between the Howard County Volunteer Fire Department and Howard County Commissioners following Monday morning's regular meeting of the court.

County Commissioner William Crooker said that during the past two weeks he and newly appointed commissioner Gary Simer have worked with VFD Chief Tommy Sullivan to find a solution to the problems between their two agencies ... and a possible solution has been reached.

"The Howard County Volunteer Fire Department has initiated an application for incorporation which should be forthcoming in the very near future," Crooker said during the meeting. "After some rather lengthy discussions he (Sullivan) agreed with us that this would be a possible solution to the problem, and would be beneficial to both the county and the volunteer fire department."

Trouble between the two groups became apparent during the Dec. 28 meeting of the commissioners court, when Sullivan and a large number of volunteer firefighters appeared before the court looking for answers to their most recent budgetary requests.

Crooker said the proposal to incorporate is still in the rough-draft stage, but many of the finer points of the agreement have been agreed upon, including the addition of a committee to oversee the operation of the department and its funds.

"There will be a board that would be responsible for the appointment of the fire chief and his operations of the volunteer fire department," Crooker said. "That same board would be responsible for submitting to the commissioners court the department's budget, in cooperation with the fire chief.

"We would not disturb his (Sullivan) current table of organization. There are still some fine points that we need to work out in this proposal, but it looks like the best was to go from here."

Crooker said that at the suggestion of Simer, one of the commissioners would be appointed to sit on the board, and would serve as a much-needed liason between the two agencies in an attempt to avoid similar confrontations in the future.

Although the idea of contracting the volunteer fire department's services through the incorporation may seem appealing to some commissioners, many of the volunteer fire fighters aren't comfortable with the idea, citing as apparent need for control as the driving force behind the court's proposal.

Hazardous cement

DALLAS — Two judges are set to recommend this week whether the state's largest cement manufacturer should get a federal permit for burning hazardous waste as fuel, a decision which could set a precedent for more than a dozen other plants also seeking permission nationwide.

The nation's first full-scale hearing, involving Dallas-based Texas Industries Inc., included testimony on health and nuisance concerns from more than 20 residents near the company's plant.

Hearings over a four-month period in the Dallas area and in Austin by two administrative judges also included more than 50 expert witnesses and legal arguments by state regulators, the Sierra Club and other environmentalists.

The proposal for decision by Judges Tommy Broyles and Carol Wood could be several hundred pages — rivaling the total length of final arguments in the case.

"This is important on a national scale because about 20 other cement kilns are waiting to go through the same process," said Jim Schermbeck, staff organizer for Downwinders at Risk, a group of North Texas residents fighting hazardous-waste burning at TXI.

"If the judges recommend changes in the permit, it will be sobering that a group of PTA moms protected the public health better than the government."

Work, dominoes key to happiness for 102-year-old

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

It was a long time ago, early into the 1900s, when Laura Massey Coston was her daddy's little girl. As was her duty, she did her father's bidding and went straightaway to church.

"Laura," her father told her, "I expect to see you in church."

He already had promised her that she could ride the family horse that day.

"I went in (to church) with my bonnet, ... dressed like I was (in play clothes), and sat there in the very back seat" of the row of pews.

First of all, she wasn't supposed to sit at the back of the church but up front. And she was supposed to wear her Sunday's best clothes to church but didn't and certainly not her bonnet.

Her father, whom she adored, wasn't particularly pleased.

"'If I hadn't already told you you could ride, you wouldn't,'" he told her. But he did, and he was a man of his word.

That was one of the down-on-the-farm stories which Mrs. Coston told Monday on her 102nd birthday at Midland's Courtyard Care Center.

She grew up in cotton country in Kaufman County near Dallas.

"My daddy, you could sort of talk him

Charges dropped against woman in big spender case

■ Christopher James Price remains in Midland County jail without bond.

Authorities dropped charges against an Odessa woman who the FBI arrested while probing a money laundering scheme and multi-state drug delivery operation.

At Monday's hearing, officials announced that Teresa Jean Ashley, a 21-year-old mother arrested for money laundering, was dismissed from the investigation.

Ms. Ashley, who works for Caesar's Gentlemen's Club, was arrested Wednesday along with Christopher James Price, 32, who officials said spent more than $300,000 on expensive cars and topless dancers.

Ms. Ashley was dismissed because evidence show she had little involvement in the case, Special Assistant U.S. Attorney John Klassen said.

"That's the judgment call we have made at this moment," Klassen said.

Despite the changes, a federal grand jury will decide who should be charged in the case. It could be presented for indictment as soon as Jan. 20, court officials said.

Price waived his right to a detention hearing Monday and will continue to be held at the Midland County jail without bond because he is considered a "flight risk," Klassen said.

According to a criminal complaint filed in Midland federal court, Price

Tall City becomes 'Middle of Somewhere' with new slogan

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

That common complaint about Midland being "out in the middle of nowhere" has given rise to a new motto and logo for the Convention and Visitors Bureau of the Midland Chamber of Commerce.

The CVB has unveiled its new slogan, "Midland: In the Middle of Somewhere" ...to eat, to meet, to visit, to stay or to play. The slogan is accompanied by a new logo depicting the Midland skyline in colors of bright pink, purple, green, orange and yellow.

The bureau has also received a service mark for its new slogan and logo, meaning that it cannot be used by individuals, associations or corporations without written permission and under strict guidelines.

"People from elsewhere in the state may think we're out in the middle of nowhere, and we may be, but we're also in the middle of good hotels, nice restaurants, shopping centers. We're one of only three or four cities in the state with two nationally accredited museums. This gives us a chance to show that off," said Marvin Wynn, president and chief executive of the Midland Chamber of Commerce.

"The visitor industry is important to our economy. Some think of visiting as vacation destinations, and we know Midland is not a vacation destination unless you're visiting family. And even if you're visiting family, that's a visitor bringing dollars into the community. There's also meetings, sporting events and business people coming through. It's an important source of economic development and we're trying to do everything we can to expand the visitor industry," he said.

Competition among Texas cities to bring in visitors — and the dollars they spend — is so tough that such a minor thing as a consistent logo and slogan can give a town a slight edge, said Shura Lindgren, director of convention and visitor development.

"It helps us look as though we're professional in our approach," she said. "When you think of cities like Amarillo and Dallas, their approach is consistent and professional. This makes us look consistent and professional."

Tourism is big business, she said, "and a lot of cities are natural stopping places and they have bigger budgets. For us to compete, we have to be a little more creative and go a little further, go that extra mile."

She said one of the bureau's goals over the last couple of years was to bring con-

Museum of the Southwest receives grant from Texaco

By Georgia Temple
Staff Writer

An elementary study of matter served as a conduit for the Museum of the Southwest staff to transform ideas into an $85,000, two-year grant from the Texaco Foundation.

"Initially we receive $45,000 for the first year," said Jill Johnson, development officer for the museum. "And it's focused directly on the second-grade level, and the second year focuses on the first-grade level."

The check to build and develop a new science exhibit that will open in the autumn changes hands today at a luncheon at the museum. On hand to make the presentation will be representatives from the New York, Houston and Midland Texaco offices.

"I think it's great," Tom Jones, director of the museum, said of receiving the grant. "The museum's past achievements have depended on a strong combination of public and private support. Contributions from corporate foundations, in particular, are critical to ensure that the museum continues its tradition of excellence as we enter the new millennium. Texaco Foundation grants are highly competitive, and we are pleased to be included among this year's recipients."

GRANT: Midland facility was prime location

science programs in early childhood education. Additionally, the Texaco Foundation has another focus area — music programs represented in a program entitled "Early Notes: The Sound of Children Learning."

"The Texaco Foundation believes in the capacity of strong music and science programs to better prepare a diverse future work force," said Anne T. Dowling, foundation president. "Research has shown that comprehensive music education, introduced across the curriculum in the earliest grades, improves student learning.

"Similarly, we know that hands-on science lessons are the best way to build a lifelong interest in science among young children. Texaco funding in both of these program areas is intended to stimulate creative changes in curriculum and improve community and parental involvement."

The Midland facility was in a prime location to be considered for such a grant because, as Texaco representative for public and government affairs Judy Stiranka said, "We give preference to Texaco hometown communities."

In the beginning of the process last June, Ms. Johnson submitted ideas for specific programs at all three entities of the Museum of the Southwest — the art museum, the Fredda Turner Durham Children's Museum and the Marian Blakemore Planetarium.

"Basically, it started with conversations with the Texaco Foundation," Ms. Johnson said. "We presented an idea that would deal with early childhood education from each of the facilities. Second grade and below were the target areas. From those initial ideas, we had further conversations, and the Texaco Foundation in New York narrowed it down to a focus on the Children's Museum. That was where they wanted to target their interest and have us come up with a proposal."

The creation of the museum program "Splash! Bang! Boom!" began in July with discussions among Karen Winkler, curator of the Children's Museum, Jones and the members of the children's museum committee including Jan Artley, science director for the Midland Independent School District.

"I knew that we brought in traveling shows, traveling exhibits, and thought it would be an opportunity for us to develop our own exhibit," said Ms. Winkler, who joined the museum staff at the end of June. "It came together so easily that we just felt it was meant to be."

The proposal encompassed the elements sought by the foundation, Ms. Johnson said. "It had to be science in nature. It had to deal directly with the state-mandated science curriculum for that age group. And they also wanted something where their employees could volunteer and play an active part with the program."

"Splash! Bang! Boom!" features individual kiosks that offer activities designed to encourage learning about "Matter: Heat, Light & Sound" and "Machines & Electricity" through experimentation and testing.

The working relationship between the Texaco Foundation and the museum staff was augmented by the cooperation of the Midland school district.

"This new exhibit is a wonderful example of how cooperation between community facilities, such as the Museum of the Southwest, foundations and the school district can greatly enhance what the district could ever do by itself," said Ms. Artley.

"The whole proposal developed with a lot of input back and forth, which is totally different than any other grant I've worked on," said Ms. Johnson. "A lot of times you write a grant, and it either gets accepted or denied.

"But with this type of process that Texaco's going through, they are hand-in-hand involved — 'I like this part.' 'I didn't like that part.' They are helping to make the program evolve into something that will develop their interest as well as the community. It's a new way to look at grant writing and funding; it's more interactive than it typically is."

BIRTHDAY: Mrs. Coston says husband was 'one in a million'

out of things, but you couldn't her," Mrs. Coston said.

"My mother thought we ought to work, but daddy played with us. He was a wonderful father, if I do say it."

Later on, she played the forty-two (42) domino game but never cards. "I never went to dances. We went to church as far back as I can remember as a child. That was a 'must' on Sunday."

Mrs. Coston, who had two sisters and two brothers, said that she had a "good home life.

"We didn't have a lot of money. We had the essentials. That's as far as it went."

And when she reached womanhood and marrying age, she was richly blessed.

"I married a farmer," she declared. "He was one in a million. If there ever were a good family man, it was him."

Out on the farm, the "money crop was cotton. We raised stock and feed. It was my job to weigh" the cotton brought in from the fields by cotton-pickers, and he hauled it to the gin."

Away from work, "We went to forty-two parties a lot," she recalled. "That was the main game we had. To me, it was a clean game."

Mrs. Coston seemed bewildered that people marveled, make a big fuss, over her longevity, all of those 102 years.

"I don't know," she said of her age. "But work never hurt anybody. I think I had a clean life. That might have something to do with it. It's hard to analyze yourself."

CHARGES: Price told deputies money was from gambling was arrested after his alleged accomplice told Midland FBI agents that Price was involved in a multi-state drug operation and had made about $500,000 for a Phoenix kingpin.

A report indicates that FBI agents learned about Price after his accomplice contacted Midland police officers Dec. 19.

The informant, who agents never identified, and Price had just returned from making large marijuana deliveries in St. Louis, Mo., and Louisville, Ky., and checked into a Big Spring motel for the evening, a criminal complaint states.

Officials quoted the alleged accomplice as saying that most of the pot deliveries they made were in the amount of 250 pounds or more and hauled from state to state in a Ryder moving truck.

As the alleged accomplice took a shower, Price sneaked out of the room and left Big Spring with the drug proceeds, the report states.

The accomplice called their drug kingpin in Phoenix and told him Price bolted with the cash. The kingpin told her to take a taxi to the Midland International Airport and that he'd have a flight to Phoenix ready for her when she arrived, the report said.

But when the accomplice called the man in Phoenix for a confirmation number for her flight, the alleged dealer told her that she was probably helping Price escape and that he was planning on having someone kill her and her family, officials said.

The panic-stricken informant ran to airport police, who contacted the FBI. An investigation was initiated and authorities later discovered that Price was in Odessa and had spent more than $300,000 on five new cars, dirt bikes, an expensive stereo system and exotic dancers.

Price had told salesmen that he'd won "the big" lottery, but Ector County sheriff's deputies called the state Lottery Commission and discovered that Price was not among their list of winners. Informants also told police that Price bragged about winning a $2.5 million lottery jackpot and bought cars for four strippers.

Deputies called Price and asked him about the large amounts he was spending. Price told them that he won it in Las Vegas, where he gambles often and places large bets in amounts between $50,000 to $100,000. He told one deputy that he was worth $2.5 million, and that it wasn't unusual for him to spend large amounts of cash on impulse.

Though he claims to be the brother of Ms. Ashley, she claims otherwise, Klassen said.

Price "told people that he was related to her (Ms. Ashley), but that didn't turn out to be true, just like his claims that he won the lottery or won his money in Las Vegas," Klassen said.

sistency to its presentations.

"We'd been using the chamber's logo and the maroon color, but there was no consistency, nothing to set us apart," she said. Going through previous advertisements in various tourist publications, she pointed out that different colors and formats were used "that looked like it was by 15 different agencies."

The lack of a consistent logo and slogan meant the city lacked a marketing image, she said.

"When we're going out and marketing Midland, a lot of times visually may be the only way to market yourself at a trade show. There was no tag line, nothing to explain who we are or to describe us, that we're a neat city with a lot to offer."

She and her staff worked with the advertising agency Admarc, which came up with the slogan, which was chosen by the bureau's advisory board when it was submitted along with several other choices.

The staff and Admarc also developed the five-color presentation and, if the advertising options are limited, a two-color option. She said there will be no deviation, that the colors, typeface and type style will remain consistent throughout the bureau's brochures, publications, specialty advertising items and advertisements. It also appears on the bureau's calendar of events, business cards, letterhead and thank you notes.

The same scheme will also be used in the bureau's bid packages, which contain letters from Mayor Bobby Burns, Wynn and officials of the local chapter of the association whose convention is being solicited.

Ms. Lindgren said the same scheme will also be incorporated in the bureau's two upcoming projects, an Internet site on the World Wide Web and a promotional video.

She explained that Midlanders attending a convention can take the video along to help solicit a future convention to Midland.

Ms. Lindgren said she expects both the web site and the promotional video to be completed by the end of the chamber's fiscal year October 1.

Other projects include a meeting planner guide and a group tour manual to be given tour operators.

She said she believes the bureau's focus on establishing a consistent, professional image has paid off on the bottom line. According to the Texas Department of Economic Development Tourism Division, the Odessa-Midland metropolitan statistical area posted a 27.7 percent increase in room revenues for the first quarter of 1998 over the same quarter a year earlier, while the state saw a 13.9 percent growth.

For the second quarter of 1998, the division said, Odessa-Midland saw a record 8.6 percent increase in room nights sold. In the same quarter the state saw quarterly room revenues exceed $1 billion for the first time.

"I do think our approach affected that success, as did the efforts and the team approach of the CVB staff," Ms. Lindgren said. "The staff is good at lending each other support and pitching in to help."

Businesses welcome lawmakers

AUSTIN (AP) — As lawmakers convene Tuesday and lobbyists work overtime to sway them on issues from taxes to health care to electric deregulation, one winner is already being declared.

The local economy.

Hotel occupancy goes up; restaurants, caterers and coffee shops see an increase in business; even photographers benefit when the Legislature convenes for 140 days every two years.

"They're very welcome and it's very much a positive sign for the economy. ... It's just a very nice busy kind of added buzz time of year when the Legislature convenes," said Gwen Spain of the Austin Convention and Visitors Bureau.

Joni Witt, director of sales and marketing for the historic Driskill, said the downtown hotel sees a dramatic jump in occupancy during the legislative session — about a 20 percent increase is expected.

"There are several dates in January, February and March that are already sold out ... The hotel itself, since opening in 1886, has taken part in the creation of many Texas traditions," she said. "LBJ and Lady Bird had their first date here."

Ibrahim Measher, manager of the Doubletree Guest Suites near the Capitol, also sees an increase in occupancy and the hotel's catering business in legislative years.

"We really do well with the Legislature since we are so close ... We're within a two-minute walking distance. Our business does shoot up when they're in session," he said.

Art Aubry, owner of Shooting Star Photography, is looking forward to the Legislature's return and to next week's inaugural celebration.

"I was so thankful when the governor got inaugurated last time, I almost renamed the place George W. Bush Photography. I sold every roll of film in the house," he said.

Donna Taylor, owner of Little City Espresso Bar and Cafe, said her shop typically gets a lot busier as lawmakers return — and she began noticing a difference as the Legislature leaned more to the GOP in the last legislative session.

Republicans have narrowed the gap in the Democratic-majority house, and they have a Senate majority.

"They don't tip as well, and they don't spend as much money. It was really funny," she said.

Those conservative Republicans are getting a price break from Austin, with free parking at city meters and free passes to city parks, including golf courses. The mayor says the benefits show a commitment to working with the Legislature.

Jim Halbrook of the Austin Parks and Recreation Department said he hasn't yet had lawmakers call to make a reservation on a course.

The textbooks tell you that the most desirable game contracts, if enough strength exists in the combined holding, are, in order: four of a major when an eight-card, or better, trump fit is available; three no trump, if there is no major fit; and five of a minor, where you need to take 11 tricks to score the game bonus. But there are exceptions to every rule.

This hand was played in a rubber-bridge game at New York's prestigious Regency Whist Club. North's heart cue-bid showed a limit raise or better in spades. When South showed interest in a no-trump game, North decided that nine tricks might be easier to come to than 10, and raised to game in no trump.

Note that, as the cards lie, four spades has no play. Three no trump, however, was another matter. West led the eight of hearts, taken in the closed hand with the jack. Declarer's first move was to lead a low club, not that it mattered. West elected to rise with the queen to lead another heart through dummy's K 10. Declarer took the trick with the king in dummy, then ran five spades, discarding a club from the table.

East, who had to make four discards, had an impossible problem. Two diamonds and one heart were easy pitches to find; the last was another matter. If East discarded another diamond, declarer would lead a low diamond and duck on the table, setting up the king. Whether the defender discarded a heart or a club made no difference. Declarer cashed the remaining heart, then exited with a club, forcing East to set up dummy's king of diamonds as the fulfilling trick.

Connery miffed over lack of knighthood

GLASGOW, Scotland — Sean Connery still sounds sore about being passed over for one of Britain's highest honors — knighthood.

"I think it lacks class on their part," the Scottish-born actor was quoted as saying in Monday's Glasgow Evening Times.

The Scottish National Party accused the British government in February of rejecting Connery because he is a longtime advocate of independence for Scotland.

The Scottish National Party, which Connery supports, is battling for seats in the 129-member Scottish Assembly, which will be elected in May. If the national party wins the most seats, it has promised to seek a referendum on full independence within four years.

Connery thinks politics influenced lack of knighthood.

Connery told the newspaper that it was "strange" how he'd played a knight in his latest film, "The Avengers."

Describing the character of Sir August De Wynter as "a scoundrel, a blackmailer and a cheat," Connery said: "It makes you wonder at times what exactly is the criteria to qualify."

NEW YORK — Tony Danza's absence from Broadway was short-lived.

The actor is returning to the Great White Way as Rocky the bartender in the revival of Eugene's O'Neill's "The Iceman Cometh."

Danza, whose work in the shows "Taxi" and "Who's The Boss?" is well known to television audiences, played the lead role in Arthur Miller's "A View from the Bridge" on Broadway during the summer.

Joining Danza in the run of "The Iceman Cometh" will be Kevin Spacey, who appeared in the play's London productions. The play opens in April.

NEW YORK — Lucy Lawless, who battles evildoers in the show "Xena: Warrior Princess," has a blunt message for anorexics.

"To any girls out there who are thinking of it, or are just getting into it, just quit your bloody nonsense," the New Zealander tells the upcoming issue of USA Weekend.

Lawless says she is actually tired of hearing about the eating disorder.

"I've got to say anorexia sort of bores me," she said. "You think you're going to get respect, attention, blah blah blah, and it's quite the opposite."

Lawless says she speaks from experience.

"I used to quite like bulimia. I used to think that was fun."

"Just quit it," former bulimic Lawless tells anorexics.

Anorexics tend to starve themselves and exercise obsessively, while bulimics typically binge on food, then vomit or use laxatives to purge themselves.

PASADENA, Calif. — Fashion-challenged actors will have a half-hour of safe time before this year's Academy Awards.

Geena Davis has been named the host of an officially sanctioned pre-Oscar show on March 21, muscling in on talk show host Joan Rivers and others who have made watching the stars walk into the ceremony a lucrative business.

"The one thing I can guarantee that it will not include is anyone yelling, 'Who made your dress?'" Davis said Sunday.

Davis' show will be telecast on ABC, followed by the award ceremony.

During the show, other networks will be barred from televising the stars as they enter the theater. That puts a crimp in the plans of people like Rivers, who critiques the actors' and actresses' outfits.

The Academy of Motion Pictures Arts and Sciences and ABC saw a booming pre-show business and wanted in.

"We wanted to be in control of this kind of material and programming," said Robert Rehme, president of the Academy.

Jordan to retire

CHICAGO — Michael Jordan, the greatest player and greatest draw in NBA history, planned to retire from the Chicago Bulls on Wednesday, a source told The Associated Press.

Jordan, whose final shot last season brought the Bulls their sixth championship of the decade, will make the announcement at a news conference in Chicago, according to the source, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

If so, it would be the second time in five years that he walked away from the game.

"I don't have any reaction. I don't have any comments," said Bulls owner Jerry Reinsdorf when reached at his Arizona home Monday night.

Asked about Jordan's retirement, Bulls spokesman Tim Hallam said, "At this particular time, I can't comment."

However, Jordan's retirement also was reported by The New York Times, USA Today and The Denver Post.

Rhodes back to glory?

■ Ex-Eagles coach lands on feet in being named new Packers coach.

GREEN BAY, Wis. — Talk about good timing.

Two weeks after being fired by one of the NFL's worst teams, Ray Rhodes was hired Monday to coach one of the best — the Green Bay Packers.

Rhodes left the 3-13 Philadelphia Eagles to return to the place where he was defensive coordinator in 1992-93 under Mike Holmgren, who left Friday to become coach and general manager of the Seattle Seahawks.

"When you look at the football team and everything around it, you are in awe," Rhodes said at a packed news conference at Lambeau Field.

"I don't want to compare the Philadelphia Eagles football team with the Green Bay Packers," Rhodes said. "That is not fair to anybody. We were never able to get the core players that this team has here right now."

Rhodes is one of only three black head coaches in the NFL, all in the NFC Central Division. Minnesota's Dennis Green and Tampa Bay's Tony Dungy are the others.

Rhodes was hired seven years to the day that Holmgren took over the Packers. Holmgren led Green Bay to the last two Super Bowls.

"The seat is going to be hot. The shoes are going to be big to fill," Rhodes said.

"The key is to keep the machine running, keep the machine going. Make sure if you need a new tire here, or a new tire there, you put it on. But don't mess with the engine. Don't mess with it," he said.

The Packers, done in by injury and inconsistency, slipped to 11-6 this season, losing a wild-card playoff game at San Francisco and leaving Holmgren with an 84-42 mark, second only to Vince Lombardi in the team's 80-year history.

The team still has a solid nucleus, including Brett Favre, Antonio Freeman, Dorsey Levens, LeRoy Butler and Vonnie Holliday and averted a free agency plunge by re-signing tight end Mark Chmura and

Chaps fall in WJCAC debut by 5

Staff Report

LEVELLAND — After producing a heady victory over No. 8 nationally ranked Weatherford College on Thursday, the Midland College Chaparrals opened their defense of the Western Junior College Athletic Conference here Monday night on the wrong foot.

South Plains (11-7, 1-0) thumped the Chaps 70-65 here at the Texan Dome as Lamarque Ward pumped in 27 points and Centellis Tucker added 10 more.

However, MC coach Pat Rafferty wasn't disappointed with the result. He liked the battle his team gave.

"Obviously, we didn't shoot very well (20 of 53 from the floor and three of 13 from three-point range), but we didn't go away," Rafferty said. "We got down by 10 and cut the margin to three a couple of times.

"It was the first league game on road for our whole team. We made some threes and hung tough down the stretch and were right there. We're going to build from this. South Plains and Howard are the toughest places to play in league. Now, we know what to expect. I don't think the league winner

MC women overcome slow start

Staff Report

LEVELLAND — The Midland College Lady Chaparrals shook off a cold start at the Texas Dome Monday night to come away with a 65-55 win over the South Plains Lady Texans.

MC is now 1-0 after its Western Junior College Athletic Conference debut for 1999 and 14-2 on the season. It was the first win for the Lady Chaps at South Plains in three years.

It wasn't a promising start for the Lady Chaps, however, as SPC held a 25-20 lead at the half. MC was sluggish in the first half and didn't lead the game until well into the second half of play.

MC outscored SPC by a 45-30 margin in the second half.

"I was happy with the way we played in the second half to win the game and it's tough to win here," said MC coach Ron Jones. "I was disappointed that we didn't do the things we knew we had to do in that first half. We didn't play with intensity and ended up in a half-court

Lone Star teams shape up

DALLAS — The passes came in faster, the shots started to mean something and there were more weights to be lifted more often. So went Monday's first post-lockout, pre-training camp workout for the Dallas Mavericks.

"There's a little anxiety in the air, so guys are playing a little harder and with a little more urgency and commitment," guard Steve Nash said. "It's definitely a little more serious."

Forward Samaki Walker, who has been working out for weeks at the Landry Center, said Monday's session was more intense than usual, complete with harsher trash-talking and extra pushing and shoving. There also was an air of secrecy surrounding the practice, which was closed to reporters.

"Before today, you had guys from various gyms all over the city coming in and playing, which we didn't mind. But now it's time to buckle down and really get serious," Walker said.

"We're really pushing each other," said forward Kurt Thomas, a free agent expected to remain a Maverick. "Instead of just pickup ball, we're starting to play like we normally play during the season."

The intensity level also went up at the Westside Tennis Center in Houston, which already had been one of the hot spots during the lockout.

Former Rockets Otis Thorpe, Sam Cassell and Robert Horry were among the competitors, along with Matt Maloney, Brent Price and Mario Elie, all free agents from last year's team. Nick Van Exel, a Houston resident with no connection to the Rockets, also practiced. None of the four Rockets under contract

Greenwood faces formidable Crane

By Stewart Doreen

■ Area Basketball

The Greenwood boys basketball team traveled three hours Friday get its first district win — a 54-49 victory over Alpine.

Today, Greenwood's trip is shorter, but the mission is more dangerous. The Rangers travel to Crane to face the undeniable District 4-3A favorite, and driving back to Greenwood this time around with win No. 2 will be much more difficult, although not impossible.

"I don't think that Crane is unbeatable," Greenwood coach Justin Morett said. "We will just have to do things better to beat them."

In other words, this Ranger team will have to bring its A-game.

"I see a lot of things that we will have to do to win," Morett said. "We have to cut down turnovers and not hurry shots, passes and things like that."

It shouldn't be a suprise that Crane (10-6 and 1-0) has jumped out to its district-favorite status. Crane's football team, which advanced to the state semifinals, was loaded with good athletes and made the jump over to the basketball court.

The Golden Crane hoops team shows the same type of athleticsm and revolves around a 6-foot-4 inch monster in the middle, Jamin Phipps. Donnie Bishop, another football standout, also received all-district honors on the hardwood last year.

"They got that Phipps kid," Morett said like he didn't have to mention anyone else. "They also have some good perimeter players."

The Rangers will counter with senior guard Josh Gilliam, who is averaging 10.5 points a game, but has registered 20 in his last two games. Junior post Derek Gasch is scoring 9.8 points a game and senior forward Daniel Odom is third at 9.5. The Rangers' leading rebounder is junior forward Nathan Himbury at eight rebounds a contest.

After Crane, Morett thinks the other

No one in 4-5A looks likely to catch Midland High

The District 4-5A boys basketball race could be very interesting — for second and third place.

As far as the championship race is concerned, there appears to be no race. That factor may have been decided in the first week of three sets of games.

Williamson

On Friday, the Midland High Bulldogs, also known as the defending Class 5A state champions, probably put a lid on the title run with a road win over Abilene Cooper, a team that some thought might be able to hang with the Bulldogs for a time.

But in the first three games of the district season, MHS never skipped a beat. The 'Dogs showed that they can beat a cross-town rival (Midland Lee), showed that they can rip one of the worst teams in the league (Odessa High) by a suitable margin and then showed they could beat their top contender on the road. There's just not much else left to prove for MHS.

The only way that MHS isn't going to return to the state playoffs for a try at that repeat title is for all of its Big Three (Charles Tatum, Jay Christian and Blake Johnston) to go down to injury. And that just isn't likely in basketball.

Also, MHS proved, as far as District 4-5A play is concerned, that the loss of the high scoring and high rebounding Kirby Lemons isn't going to be that much of a factor. After all, without the awesome post player, MHS held Cooper post Felton Freeman to a meager six points in his house Friday. There is probably no more telling statistic than that one.

Of course, the loss of Lemons could play more of a role in the playoff run back to Austin, but it isn't going to be a factor in the district run.

So, that leaves us with that battle for second and third place. Cooper still remains as a favorite to capture one spot. Abilene High, already a loser to Cooper in Week 1, got back some respect Friday with a ripping of Lee.

Lee has been a mixed bag of results. The Rebels, after losing their opener to MHS, defeated Odessa Permian on the road last Tuesday. Permian is a team that went to the Region I tournament a year ago. It looked as if the Rebels might make a strong playoff run after that come-from-behind win, but then Lee stubbed its toe badly Friday at home in a 71-54 bombing at the hands of Abilene High.

Where this leaves Lee, and Permian for that matter, is a story still to be played out. Right now, you have to give the edge to Cooper and AHS as the No. 2 and 3 teams in the league with Lee and Permian probably left to cast any deciding votes if needed. And things don't get easier for Lee since the Rebels travel to Abilene Friday to meet Cooper, needing to pull off what MHS has already accomplished.

The girls race is already down to a four-team scramble and only one will be left without a playoff trip. Midland High, Odessa High, Abilene High and Lee are all still in the hunt. MHS, however, is a perfect 4-0 and already owns wins over OHS and Lee. That probably means the Lady Bulldogs will be back in the playoffs again this year.

Lee's girls (3-2) jumped back into the hunt Friday by handing Abilene High its first district loss of the season.

It is beginning to look like the girls of Cooper, San Angelo and Permian aren't going to be much of a factor in the district run, so the matchups between the top four contenders will carry huge importance. So, the key game tonight will be the OHS-AHS matchup in Abilene.

There is still a long way to go in both races since the first half isn't even over yet, but still, a lot has already been decided.

Midland High

Opponent: San Angelo Central Bobcats.
Where: Chaparral Center.
When: 7:30 p.m.
Records: Midland High is 17-3 on the season and 3-0 in District 4-5A. Central is 17-4 and 1-1 in district.
Notes, Quotes: Midland High has already produced what may be the key victory in the District 4-5A race after beating Abilene Cooper on the road Friday night, 75-66, while holding Cooper's Felton Freeman to a meager six points. The Bulldogs have now recorded 30 consecutive on-court wins in 4-5A play, covering parts of the last four seasons. Against Cooper, Charles Tatum and Blake Johnston both scored 22 points while Jay Christian added 16. The Bobcats own an impressive 17-4 record for the season. In distnct play, San Angelo has a loss to Abilene Cooper and a meager two-point win over Odessa High, 55-53, last Friday. MHS, on the other hand, owns an 87-56 win over OHS. "We're playing very, very well," said MHS coach Jack Stephenson. "We're just trying to get better every game and I think we are doing that." Against OHS, the Bobcats were paced by Brian Young with 13 points while Robert Rohlfs had 12. Like MHS, the Bobcats lost only three non-conference games, but didn't play nearly the schedule that the Bulldogs played. That fact may be showing as league play begins. Also against OHS last Tuesday, MHS' Johnston set a school record with 15 steals, beating the old record of 13 set by James Pitts in 1982.
Next: Midland High will resume its 4-5A schedule Friday night with another home game at 7:30 p.m. against Abilene High at Chaparral Center. AHS (1-1 in league play) hosts Odessa High tonight in Abilene.

Midland Lee

Opponent: Hobbs Eagles.
Where: Hobbs, N.M.
When: 6:45 p.m.
Records: Lee is 8-12 on the season and 1-2 in District 4-5A. Hobbs is 11-0.
Notes: This is a non-conference game for the Rebels as they take a break from 4-5A action, but it isn't an easy break. Hobbs is a perfect 11-0 under first year head coach Russ Gilmore, who replaces the legendary Ralph Tasker. The Eagles will also be waiting with baited breath for the Rebels since Lee defeated Hobbs in Midland a year ago. Lee is coming off a horrific 71-54 loss to Abilene High in a game where the Rebels didn't handle court pressure well. "We'll be getting another heavy dose of pressure from Hobbs," said Lee coach Jon House. "You can bet on that. Hobbs is undefeated. Hopefully, we can gain something from this game." Despite the results of Lee's last game, Jeramy Conaway did have a good outing with 16 points and 12 rebounds. Orlando Castillo had 12 points and Matt Winston added 10. One area where Lee was weak against AHS was scoring from in close, hitting only 10 of 25 shots in the paint. Lee was also 0-for-13 from three-point range and that's another area where Lee usually performs well.
Next: Lee returns to District 4-5A action against Abilene Cooper Friday at 7:30 p.m. at Cooper. Cooper (2-1 in district play) is playing a key 4-5A match at Odessa Permian (1-1) tonight.

Midland High

Opponent: San Angelo Central Bobcats.
Where: Chaparral Center.
When: 6 p.m.
Records: Midland High is 17-3 on the season and 4-0 in District 4-5A. Central is 9-11 and 0-4 in district.
Notes: Two teams at opposite ends of the 4-5A spectrum will meet at the Chap Center tonight, with the Lady Dawgs looking to maintain a perfect record and stay alone in first place while Central is merely looking to crawl back into respectability. Midland High played one of its best district games to date Friday night, whipping Abilene Cooper on the road 66-42. The Lady Dawgs had four players scoring in double figures, led by Morgan Kelley and Edrea Rogers with 12 points apiece. Kelley's game was especially encouraging since she was finally able to finish several scoring opportunities inside... Central is coming off a 59-49 loss to Odessa High, which lost to Midland High only three days earlier. The Lady Dawgs can already claim one victory over Central this season, having defeated the Lady Bobcats 65-48 in the championship game of a tournament in Big Spring. Rogers led MHS with 24 points in that game.
Next: Midland High continues its 4-5A schedule with another home game Friday night at 6 p.m. against Abilene High at Chaparral Center.

Keyshawn showing he can do everything

By Barry Wilner
AP Football Writer

HEMPSTEAD, N.Y. — Keyshawn Johnson never has heard of Jack Manders and probably doesn't know much about Jim Thorpe, either. Even if he emulated them in the New York Jets' latest big victory.

Johnson put on a performance for the ages in Sunday's 34-24 victory over Jacksonville that propelled the Jets into their first AFC Championship game in 16 years.

He caught nine passes for 121 yards and a touchdown; ran twice on end-arounds for 28 yards, including a 10-yard score; recovered a fumbled lateral by Jaguars safety Chris Hudson that thwarted any first-half momentum the visitors might have gained; blocked like a fiend, including laying out defensive end Joel Smeenge on Curtis Martin's touchdown run; and intercepted Mark Brunell's desperation pass at the end of the Jets' seventh straight win.

Not a bad day's work. Not since Manders did it for the 1937 Bears against Washington in the NFL title game has a player had TDs rushing and receiving, recovered a fumble and intercepted a pass.

"They put me in a position to make plays," Johnson said of the coaching staff that didn't draft him, but has turned around the team that went 1-15 in Johnson's final season under Rich Kotite. "All I ever wanted to do is be involved, because I always feel I can make a difference if they utilize me and give me the chance.

"One thing that is important to me is that my coaching staff and the guys I play with respect my play and enjoy me on the field. That's pretty much all I care about, getting my team to the next step."

That step comes in Denver on Sunday, and no one was more responsible for getting the Jets there than the top overall draft pick of 1996. While Johnson made the Pro Bowl this season and has steadily improved under Bill Parcells and his staff, his work against Jacksonville could become a signature moment for the tall (6-foot-3), fast, aggressive wideout from Southern California.

Until recently, Johnson was best known for penning a harsh autobiography after his first NFL season in which he scorched Kotite and several teammates. His feud with fellow receiver Wayne Chrebet, while somewhat overblown, still exists on a limited level.

But he's letting his play speak for him even louder than the frequent soliloquies he conducts in the locker room, the interview room, on radio and television — hey, anywhere anyone asks him a question.

"He's a guy who plays with a lot of confidence," said Vinny Testaverde, who has hooked up with Johnson on eight TDs this season. "He's a great example of a guy who prepares well every week, is excited about playing football and is a kid at heart.

"He makes big plays for us on Sundays, which is the most important. He's a big-time player."

Parcells recognized that immediately when he took over the Jets in early 1997. Amid much speculation that Parcells would clamp down on Johnson's outgoing manner, the coach has let his prize receiver be himself.

Sunday's showing was just the latest payoff.

"He enjoys that kind of competition," Parcells said. "He's very tough mentally and physically. I really take my hat off to him.

"He is a well-developing player. What I like about him is he is ready for the next thing on his plate."

Now what could that be? Returning kicks? Punting? Trying field goals? Coaching?

"I just try and play," Johnson said. "I don't have to demand the ball with these coaches. They know and recognize talent and how to exploit defenses.

"As a rookie, I had to demand the ball, because we were losing and they weren't getting it to me. Here, you don't even have to say nothing. They understand. They know what it takes to beat people."

On Sunday, and probably in the future, that means plenty of Keyshawn.

Schottenheimer quits in latest coaching shuffle

Associated Press

NFL coaches were on the move again Monday.

In the latest installment, Marty Schottenheimer was out at Kansas City, Andy Reid was in at Philadelphia and Ray Rhodes stepped in at Green Bay to replace his former boss, Mike Holmgren.

Schottenheimer's resignation came after a 7-9 season, his first losing campaign since he became an NFL coach in 1984. Considered a Super Bowl contender when the season started, Kansas City was beset by injuries and also became the NFL's most penalized team.

"After 10 years it's time to give someone else an opportunity to implement their plan," said Schottenheimer, 101-58-1 with the Chiefs. "I've decided to take a break, to take some time and relax."

There was no immediate word on Schottenheimer's successor.

The Eagles hired Reid, the Packers' quarterbacks coach, to replace Rhodes, and signed him to a reported $5 million, five-year deal. Both Rhodes and Reid coached with Holmgren and are close friends.

"Today the turnaround begins," Eagles owner Jeffrey Lurie said two weeks after he fired Rhodes following Philadelphia's 3-13 record — the Eagles' worst since 1972.

"This is the first step in putting the Philadelphia Eagles back on the map," Reid said.

The 40-year-Reid, who worked under Holmgren for seven years at Green Bay, became the second-youngest head coach in the NFL after Oakland's Jon Gruden, 35. Reid became the NFL's only head coach who has not served either as a college head coach or an NFL coordinator. He's also the first to jump from position coach to head coach since Art Shell with the Raiders in 1989.

Rhodes worked with Holmgren in San Francisco, then moved to Green Bay as defensive coordinator for two seasons before returning to run the 49ers' defense for the '94 season. He was then hired by the Eagles, where he was coach of the year in '95 after his team went 10-6.

But Rhodes ran into front-office problems, working under four different general managers. Even Lurie took some of the blame for the Eagles' poor showing, saying he should have paid more attention to the front-office situation.

For Schottenheimer, the frustration culminated with a Monday night game in November when the Chiefs committed five personal fouls on Denver's final touchdown drive in a 30-7 loss.

A seething Schottenheimer apologized and said he'd never been so embarrassed. Owner Lamar Hunt called the episode a disgrace to the team and the city.

Hunt said he reluctantly accepted Schottenheimer's resignation, adding it marked the end of a "golden era" for the Chiefs. The owner said he twice asked Schottenheimer to reconsider, and the decision became final only this morning.

"I've never been retired before," Schottenheimer said. "At this juncture, I really don't know. I'm going to work on my golf game. Pat and I are going to travel."

Rhodes' appointment solved a major problem for the NFL — he was one of just three black coaches in the league and most of the prospects for coaching jobs are white.

But, several black assistants remain in the running.

game.

"We didn't really change anything for the second half, but just played harder and caused them some problems defensively to keep it out of a half-court game. We didn't create any tempo with our defense in the first half."

Amie Kane led MC with 14 points while Natalie Goodall and Julie Rampley added 10 each. Taqita Hunter had 12 rebounds. Goodall hit three of six shots from three-point land to aid in the win.

Missy Frazier was the Texan thorn in the side for MC as she led all scorers with 19 points. No other Lady Texan, however, hit in double figures. Frazier hit three of four shots from three-point range.

MC will host New Mexico Junior College at 6 p.m. Thursday as the WJCAC women head into round two of the conference race.

AREA: Rangers have rough road game

two playoff spots are up for grabs. Greenwood has been to the playoffs in three of Morett's four years as head coach. He thinks making it four of five will be tough.

"I think everyone after Crane is pretty even," Morett said of Greenwood, Alpine, Monahans, Kermit and Presidio.

With that being said, Greenwood (10-12) has one good win already.

"It is nice to win the first one (district game) and nice to win on the road," Morett said.

The Greenwood girls open up the 4-3A doubleheader at the Crane gym. The Rangerettes are 5-11 overall but 2-1 in district play. Friday, 13 Lady Rangers played as Greenwood bounced Alpine, 59-51. Kristi Brown led Greenwood with 18.

Stanton gets big district-opening wins: Stanton boys coach Doug Gordon couldn't have asked for a better opening night. Not only did his Buffaloes get a win over then No. 13 Coahoma, but Tahoka defeated No. 5 Plains. That could mean quite a head start for the 4-3 Buffaloes.

"The win means a lot to us," Gordon said. "It gets us off to a good start and it keeps us out of that hole (of starting district at 0-1). We are not on good footing yet but we are not in the hole either."

The 10-7 Lady Buffs, under first-year coach Tim Van Hecke, also picked up a district-opening win. It was the team's seventh straight victory.

"The girls are coming together," Van Hecke said. "Coahoma is a great team and to beat them was unbelievable."

Both Stanton teams are in action tonight against Post.

Rankin opens district: The Rankin boys and girls basketball teams finally get to open up district play tonight against Garden City. The Rankin boys, in particular, are off to a fast start, recording a 15-3 record.

"Our kids are ready to get district started," Rankin boys coach Cory Richardson said. "We have been picked to win our district, but it will be a free-for-all. We have one of the tougher districts in the region, and nobody can be taken for granted."

The Rankin girls (11-6) will have their hands full, taking on a Lady Bearkat team which is poised to make a run at sixth straight district title. Friday, Garden City (14-2, 1-0) ripped Water Valley 59-32 as four Lady Bearkats (M'Lynn Niehues, J'Layne Niehues, Stormi Chandler and Kyndra Batla) hit for double digits.

Happy Birthday To You: Stanton's Rainnie Hull celebrated her 18th birthday by playing a key role in the Lady Buffaloes' 49-38 win over Coahoma. Hull hit six 3-point field goals and totaled 21 points as the Lady Buffs won their seventh straight game.

Weekend Highlights: 20 point club - Stanton's Rainnie Hull 21; Midland Christian's Justin Gibson 20; Ira's Morgan Clements 20; Ira's Jerek Brown 25; Andrews' Jacob Lopez 20; Trinity's Renee Rougeaux 20 (on Friday); Greenwood's Josh Gilliam 20.

Double-Double: Stanton's Chad Smith 13 points, 10 rebounds; Stanton's Justin Cobb 16 points, 16 rebounds. Trinity's Renee Rougeaux 14 points 19 boards (Saturday); Other top performances: Trinity's Mark Stoltz 15 assists (Saturday).

Tonight's Games: Big Spring girls vs. Snyder; Andrews girls at San Angelo Lake View; Greenwood boys and girls at Crane; Stanton boys and girls host Post; Garden City boys and girls at Rankin; Midland Christian boys and girls at McCamey. Trinity girls vs. Forsan; Trinity boys at Forsan.

RHODES: Ex-assistant returns to Pack

(From 1C)

right tackle Earl Dotson. But the Packers have to replace defensive end Reggie White and need to shore up a suspect secondary.

"Right now, what you do is you pull a few spark plugs out, you wipe them off," Rhodes said. "You make sure you keep the car fine-tuned. That is what we intend to do."

Rhodes, who reportedly signed a four-year deal at about $1 million a season, said the offensive scheme won't change and that the defense needs only minor tinkering, which he intends to provide. Linebacker Lamont Hollinquest said the players applauded general manager Ron Wolf's hiring of Rhodes.

"All the guys like him. I guess he's a players' coach," Hollinquest said. "And obviously, he is very aggressive as far as his defensive scheme."

Wolf said Rhodes, 48, was the only person he interviewed for the job.

Wolf called the Eagles' dismal season "an aberration" for Rhodes, who was an assistant for 14 seasons, including 12 in San Francisco, before being hired as the Eagles' head coach in 1995. Rhodes went 10-6 his first two seasons but was 6-9-1 in 1997 and even worse this season.

Rhodes is the Packers' 12th head coach and first black to hold the job. But Wolf said race was not a factor.

"We need to erase that idea. I wanted to hire, in my opinion, the best football coach available," Wolf said. "I did that."

Wolf bristled when asked why he didn't hire the Packers' veteran offensive coordinator Sherm Lewis instead. Lewis, who also is black, has been mentioned for a number of head coaching jobs in the NFL for several seasons.

"To bring that up at this time, I think is in very poor taste," Wolf said.

Rhodes said he already has spoken with Favre and Butler.

"The excitement they have shown about me coming back has been great," he said.

He also said he's been talking with Lewis about possibly remaining in Green Bay as offensive coordinator if he doesn't get a head coaching job of his own. Rhodes called Lewis "a very valuable person, in my mind, with this offense."

Wolf said Holmgren's aura and the big shadow he cast would put pressure on his successor.

"You need somebody who could withstand that," Wolf said, contending Rhodes' tenure in Philadelphia proved he could withstand the heat.

There goes Mr. Jordan?

■ Bulls work out while superstar looks set to retire by Wednesday.

By Nancy Armour
AP Sports Writer

DEERFIELD, Ill. — Decked out in Chicago Bulls garb from head to toe, Luc Longley ran laps, Steve Kerr drained 3-pointers and Toni Kukoc used a basketball to show Randy Brown a few soccer moves.

After six months of lockout limbo, the Chicago Bulls are back and all is right with the world. Well, almost. Kerr and Longley are players without a team, and the biggest Bull of all, Michael Jordan, was nowhere to be found.

And apparently, he isn't coming back.

A source told The Associated Press, that Jordan, the greatest player and greatest draw in NBA history, planned to retire from the Bulls on Wednesday,

Jordan, whose final shot last season brought the Bulls their sixth championship of the decade, will make the announcement at a news conference in Chicago, according to the source, who spoke on condition of anonymity. If so, it would be the second time in five years that he walked away from the game.

"I don't have any reaction. I don't have any comments," said Bulls owner Jerry Reinsdorf when reached at his Arizona home Monday night.

Asked about Jordan's retirement, Bulls spokesman Tim Hallam said, "At this particular time, I can't comment."

However, Jordan's retirement also was reported by The New York Times, USA Today and The Denver Post.

There had been considerable speculation as to Jordan's future since NBA players and owners reached a settlement last Wednesday to end the six-month lockout. But the six-time playoff MVP has decided to retire at age 35.

Jordan's agent David Falk said that "until he announces whether he is retiring or returning, anything else is speculation."

Jordan is a five-time league MVP, and led the NBA in scoring 10 times and averaged 31.5 points per game.

With NBA players starting to get ready for the season to begin Feb. 5, Jordan was expected to announce his plans before training camps open Monday.

Jordan had been in the Bahamas on vacation, but returned this week to Chicago.

"It's kind of strange, but this whole thing has been pretty strange," Kerr said. "I'm just happy to be back in here. It's fun to be back."

The NBA got back to business Monday, with teams opening their training facilities to players. Coaches can't have any contact with the players until training camps open Jan. 18, but players can work out and meet with trainers.

All four of the Bulls players under contract — Kukoc, Brown, Ron Harper and Keith Booth — showed up at the Berto Center, along with free agents Kerr, Longley, Bill Wennington, Dickey Simpkins and Rusty LaRue. Even former Bull B.J. Armstrong, who played on the first three championship teams and is now with the Charlotte Hornets, made an appearance.

But still no Jordan.

The Bulls have contacted all of their free agents' representatives and still want to bring back last year's team, which won Chicago's sixth championship of the 1990s, general manager Jerry Krause said.

But that's up to Jordan. His Airness spent last week on vacation in the Bahamas, and no one knows exactly when he's coming home.

Dwight Manley, agent for Dennis Rodman, said Monday that Rodman will wait and see what Jordan does. Until then, don't expect to see Rodman near the Berto Center.

"He's known for reporting late," Manley said. "I certainly don't expect him to go in early."

Houston Waltrip's star Falu declared ineligible

HOUSTON (AP) — School officials on Monday declared Houston Waltrip senior guard Antonio Falu ineligible for the 1998-99 season, finding he violated the state's four-year eligibility rule by not listing on his transcript two prep schools he attended.

The school also informed the University Interscholastic League that it planned to forfeit the 12 games Falu had played in so far this year.

"He did have some other places that he's played at in the past that he did not inform us of," said Houston Independent School District spokesman Terry Abbott. "It is clear at this point that he is ineligible to play this year."

Falu, considered one of the top recruits in the nation, transferred to Waltrip as a junior in 1997 and helped the Rams win the 1998 Class 4A state championship as they defeated Lamesa in the state semifinals. His transcript shows he spent his ninth- and 10th-grade years, 1995-96 and 1996-97, at Defensores Academy in Puerto Rico.

However, the Houston Chronicle reported Sunday that during the years Falu purportedly was in Puerto Rico, he was enrolled at Florida Air Academy in Melbourne, Fla., and Oak Hill Academy in Mouth of Wilson, Va. And two men who coached Falu at those schools told the Chronicle that 1995-96 and 1996-97 were actually his 10th- and 11th-grade years.

"Antonio Falu should be a freshman in college," Kevin Dunne, the former basketball coach and athletic director at Florida Air Academy, told the newspaper.

Falu could not be reached by The Associated Press. However, the 19-year-old told Houston television station KRIV Monday that he had no idea he was breaking any rules.

"I didn't know the rules before," Falu said, adding that the school's decision left him "empty." "It's hard to describe. All of the hard work, and now they are going to take that away from me.

"I feel bad because the only thing I want to do is play basketball," Falu said. "That's my first love."

HISD spokeswoman Lisa Bunse said the decision to declare Falu ineligible was based on a preliminary review of his unofficial transcripts. Officials transcripts from Puerto Rico are being forwarded to the school district for review, she said.

Falu averaged 22.1 points, 8.7 assists, 6.1 rebounds and 3.3 steals per game last season in helping Waltrip win the Class 4A state championship. Abbott said it was unclear whether Falu's ineligibility would affect last year's title.

This season, Waltrip had started 12-5 with Falu averaging 30 points a game. Falu had been named the Chronicle's 1998-99 preseason Player of the Year and was ranked 37th on The Sporting News' list of the top 100 seniors in the nation.

Falu signed with the Houston in September to join Clyde Drexler's team next year. However, he could lose all or a portion of his college eligibility if the NCAA finds he was involved in academic fraud.

Athletes at Texas public high schools are subject to the UIL's "four-year" rule, which limits a student's high school eligibility to four consecutive years, beginning in the ninth grade.

The UIL grants waivers to give students additional years of eligibility because of illnesses or other extenuating circumstances. However, UIL officials have said Falu sought no special waiver.

Salt Lake City controversy may force out a dozen IOC members

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — As many as a dozen IOC members may be ousted this month because of the scandal surrounding the 2002 Winter Games in Salt Lake City, IOC executive Anita DeFrantz said Monday.

"I can assure you that the IOC will itself take action," DeFrantz said.

"There is an investigation under way by the IOC, and in fact that investigation has pretty much concluded to the extent that letters have been sent to the members who apparently have abused their privilege."

DeFrantz, an IOC vice president from the United States, told the annual NCAA Convention that the suspected IOC members have 10 days to respond to the accusations before a report is completed and a news conference is held Jan. 25.

"By that point, we believe that we will have folks who need to resign clearly identified and, I hope, resignations in hand," she said. "So I expect there are going to be fewer members of the IOC."

Robert Garff, chairman of the Salt Lake Organizing Committee, said Monday the SLOC ethics panel investigating the scandal has identified eight IOC members who could be implicated and is "waiting to hear explanations that might exonerate" them.

Details concerning salary cap remain uncertain

By Chris Sheridan
AP Basketball Writer

NEW YORK — Amid widespread confusion over new salary cap rules, NBA training facilities were reopened to players Monday while lawyers for the league and union worked to put the lockout settlement in writing.

"It's like my college poker games: They're making the rules up as they go along," said agent Keith Glass, one of several people around the league who described the situation as chaotic.

The lockout will remain in effect until the agreement is finalized, with Jan. 18 set as the target date for opening training camps and allowing trades and free agent signings to commence.

In the meantime, general managers are being allowed to talk to agents in anticipation of the frenzy that lies ahead. The problem, though, was that people were interpreting certain settlement terms differently.

"It's total confusion," agent Mark Fleischer said. "I've had three GMs tell me they understand certain rules to mean one thing, while I've been told the rules are the complete opposite. And these are significant things that are in dispute."

One of the settlement terms called for a salary cap of $30 million for the upcoming season, which was almost $2 million less than most teams had been expecting. Also, it became apparent that changes in so-called "cap holds" — rules that determine how unsigned free agents are counted against their former teams' salary cap — would end up hindering player movement.

"You can only have general discussions, and no one is sure if you can actually agree on a deal," agent Herb Rudoy said. "So you couch everything with vague references to whether a player might be interested, or what he kind of money he might be looking for."

With everyone anxiously awaiting an end to the state of limbo, players were free for the first time in more than six months to use team facilities.

Only a handful showed up at many sites, making scrimmaging impossible in some cases. But players were still able to work on conditioning drills, lift weights and shoot around.

At the Knicks' training facility in Purchase, N.Y., Charles Oakley's presence gave them just enough bodies to hold a five-on-five. Oakley, ironically, played on the same team as Marcus Camby — the player he was traded for on draft night last June.

"He gave us all fair warning: Don't come down the lane. You know Oak's motto," said John Starks, who was Oakley's teammate on the Knicks for eight seasons.

Oakley, now a member of the Toronto Raptors, claimed to be in perfect shape. The biggest difference was his hair, which was spun into mini-dreadlocks.

"Tell the Lakers I'm ready. They don't have to worry about me being fit," said Oakley, who hopes to be traded to a contender like Los Angeles.

Coaches were not allowed to work with players Monday, which will remain the case until the lockout settlement is finalized. Also, the league will not release the new schedule until then.

So much uncertainty combined with so much anxiety — as well as the anticipation over whether Michael Jordan will retire — should make for a busy week.

"I felt like a rookie getting drafted and coming into an arena for the first time," forward Anthony Mason said of walking back into Charlotte's training complex for the first time since the Hornets were eliminated from the playoffs.

The Hornets' workout wasn't scheduled to begin until noon, but rookie Ricky Davis showed up at 8:30 a.m.

NBA: Mavs have 10 players under contract

were there.

In Dallas, Mavericks general manager-coach Don Nelson stood on the sidelines as seven of his players scrimmaged with about as many free agents. Nelson could only watch, though, as league rules prohibit him from barking out orders until training camps open next week.

"For him not to coach when he sees half his team here, I know it's frustrating for him — as frustrating as it was for us to not be able to play," guard Michael Finley said.

Officially allowing players into the team's training facility, where many had been working out anyway, was the first loosening of the rules since the lockout ended last week. A bigger change was letting players use locker rooms and the weight room.

The Mavericks also were allowed to begin working with Chad Lewis, the team's strength and conditioning coach. Although most players had been working out on their own, none had pushed themselves as hard as Lewis did Monday.

"I think in any professional sport, guys can work as hard as they can, but then they get into a more serious, more competitive atmosphere and you're always below where you thought you were," Nash said.

Finley spent much of the hiatus in Chicago working with a personal trainer. He said he was almost in game shape in late October, when the season was supposed to have begun, then cut back as he waited for the labor issues to be resolved.

The Mavericks are a step ahead of many clubs because their roster is virtually set. Ten players are under contract with the final two spots likely going to Thomas and draft-day acquisition Dirk Nowitzki, who will arrive Tuesday from Germany.

Another benefit is that more than half the team often practiced together during the lockout. The pickup games especially helped Nash, who also was acquired on draft day and is expected to step in at point guard.

"The guys who have been playing with him for well over a month — and there's been like five or six every day — you can really see they already know exactly what's going on," Nelson said.

At San Antonio's workout were Spurs center David Robinson along with forwards Tim Duncan and Monty Williams; and guards Antonio Daniels and Reggie Geary.

"They had a quick lift and went through some drills — nothing too high stress or high pressure," said Tom James, Spurs director of media services.

He said drills weren't that much of a shock because players have been preparing — even traveling to Houston to work out — and had a good turnout Monday in the Alamo City.

Watchdog group calls for tax cut

By Stephanie Elizondo Griest
Associated Press

AUSTIN — State lawmakers should give Texans an across-the-board sales tax cut with part of the extra $5.6 billion available this session, a government watchdog group recommended Monday.

"Times are good for many Texans," said Mary Nell Mathis, a spokesperson for Common Cause. "...Some of the bonanza should be returned to the taxpayers in the form of a tax cut."

Ms. Mathis recommended a one-half cent cut in the state sales tax rate, which she said would use up $1 billion per year of the surplus. That would be a nickel savings on every $10 purchase.

"Not a big amount, but it's a start," she said.

At six and a quarter, Texas has one of the highest sales taxes in the nation.

The tax primarily hits middle-to-lower income families, said Charles Holt, a business professor at the University of Texas who serves on the tax committee of Common Cause.

He said families with an $11,000 annual income paid 13.8 percent in property and sales taxes. Families with annual incomes of $139,000, on the other hand, paid 6.3 percent in combined taxes, according to Holt.

While wealthier families spend more, they also travel out of state more — which generates no Texas revenue — and save more, as stocks and bonds have no sales tax, Ms. Mathis said.

Comptroller Carole Keeton Rylander, in her official projection of state government revenues for the coming two years, has said lawmakers would have an additional $5.6 billion available when the Legislature convenes Tuesday. That is down from a $6.3 billion estimate made last summer.

Gov. George W. Bush has said the revenue increase still should be enough to fund the property tax and sales tax cuts he proposed when campaigning last year. He has suggested reducing the sales tax on certain items, such as school clothes in August or diapers.

"To give a few selected exemptions, though helpful in themselves, would entail more tax complexity, would invite still more exemptions, and would just sugarcoat a very bitter pill of greater tax regressivity," said Forest G. Hill, a UT professor of economics who also serves on Common Cause's tax committee.

"Can this be compassionate conservatism? Or is it more like corporate welfare at taxpayers' expense?" he asked.

Bush has also proposed using $2 billion to reduce school property taxes, but the advocacy group said the idea should be reconsidered, as property-tax rates are out of scale with the rest of the nation.

A property tax cut would mainly benefit heavy industry like power plants and oil and gas companies, which don't need a break. We want a cut to go to the people," Ms. Mathis said.

Bush said he appreciated the group's comments, but still stood by his proposals.

"What I think is more fair is property tax, some sales tax cuts, a small business tax cut and a (research and development) tax credit — that is exactly what I campaigned on and that's what I'm going to push during the legislative session," he said.

Ms. Mathis also proposed that $1 billion of the surplus be put in a "rainy-day" fund, to be saved for harder times that may come.

Crude rises

NEW YORK — Crude oil rose almost 3 percent to a two-month high on expectations for leaner supplies, after a key Nigerian terminal was shut down by local protesters demanding a greater share of oil revenue. The shutdown of Royal Dutch/Shell Group's Forcados oil terminal is contributing to a 300,000 barrel-a-day drop in Nigerian production, Shell said, or about 0.4 percent of world supply. The disruption followed a report last week that U.S. inventories had their biggest drop in 18 years.

Net stock shines

NEW YORK — Internet and technology stocks once again stole the show on Wall Street, lifting the Nasdaq composite index to its seventh consecutive record high on Monday. But that was the only bright spot in the stock market. The Dow Jones industrial average and most broader indexes fell as investors cashed in on last week's sharp gains.

Dollar falls

NEW YORK — The dollar fell to a 28-month low against the yen Monday, extending a slump from last summer's highs despite continued strength in the U.S. economy and a faltering Japanese economy. The dollar gained ground, however, against most major currencies, including the brand-new euro, which slipped to $1.1542 in late New York trading from $1.1554 Friday. The dollar bought 108.93 Japanese yen in New York, down from 110.93 yen late Friday. During the trading day, the dollar fell to 108.22 yen, its lowest point since Aug. 28, 1996. The dollar was trading at 124 yen at the start of December and at more than 147 yen last August.

Microsoft trial

WASHINGTON (NYT) — Microsoft Corp. began its defense in the government's antitrust lawsuit Monday with an economist from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology bearing a massive tome of written testimony with a simple message: Microsoft's business practices are good for consumers, and any government meddling with the software industry would likely do more harm than good.

The 328-page testimony by Richard Schmalensee of MIT is a sweeping rebuttal to the Justice Department's two-and-a-half-month attempt to prove that Microsoft used its monopoly in personal-computer operating system software to thwart competitive challenges posed by the rise of the Internet.

The government's case, Schmalensee wrote in his direct testimony, amounts to "speculation" based on a "morass of e-mails" from Microsoft executives that at first glance may seem damaging, but are not. Forget the atmospherics, he tells the court, and focus on the outcome — what he insists is a lack of measureable harm, current or future, to consumers from Microsoft's business practices.

"Proper economic inquiry into whether a company is engaged in anticompetitive conduct should end if it concludes that consumers have not been harmed by the conduct at issue and are not likely to be harmed in the future," Schmalensee wrote.

Merger expected to have minimal affect on Permian Basin employees

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

Nabors Industries' planned acquisition of Pool Energy Services, announced Monday, should have a minimal impact on Permian Basin employees, according to Nabors officials.

"In terms of the quantity of people, the impact will be minimal," said Dennis Smith, director of corporate development for Nabors. "Pool's business is well servicing and ours is drilling. The only overlap would be in administrative and support services. The field staff is separate."

To improve cost savings, officials said they plan to eliminate redundant staff and close offices where both companies have locations.

To improve cost savings, officials said they plan to eliminate redundant staff and close offices where both companies have locations.

"We'll certainly combine offices, and we plan to keep the best of both companies," Smith said.

He cautioned that there are no firm decisions yet because "we don't expect the transaction to be approved by government officials until the middle of the second quarter. That's four months or so away. Until then, the two companies will operate as separate companies as required by law."

Pool Energy shareholders will receive 1.025 shares of Nabors stock for each Pool share, implying a value of $16.46 per Pool share and a total value of $518 million. Nabors will also assume $144 million in debt.

Monday's merger agreement ends a struggle between the two companies that began in October when Nabors bid $13.85 a share for the company.

"At the time the offer was made, the perception was that oil prices would firm by the end of the year. OPEC was meeting and there was optimism that the market would turn around, but that didn't happen," Smith explained. "Pool wanted to look at its alternatives to get the best deal, whether selling the company was the best or if their internal plans were best. Then they sat down and negotiated a better value and better terms. The previous offer was a .418 share of Nabors stock and $6 in cash. Now the offer is all stock."

In a statement, James Jongebloed, chairman and chief executive officer of Pool, said that the agreement "provides Pool shareholders with a large premium for their investment in Pool."

In that same statement, Eugene Isenberg, chairman and chief executive officer of Nabors, said that "the current reduced activity levels and uncertainty of tomorrow's market environment make this combination particularly timely and beneficial."

The combined company will operate 440 land drilling and 750 workover/wellservicing rigs in North America, 100 drilling and workover rigs internationally and 60 offshore rigs both domestically and internationally.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Nervous investors shifting money from stocks to bonds

By Eric Tyson

Tyson

Q: Because of the excellent gains in the stock market, I have ignored bonds. My overall anxiety level about the stock market is increasing, being 59 years old. I have been thinking about selling approximately $60,000 in stock mutual funds and will incur capital gains taxes to do so. What do you think of my putting the proceeds in some of Vanguard's bond funds, such as Total Bond Market Index, Long Term Corporate and Admiral Intermediate Term U.S. Treasury, or balanced funds such as Wellesley?

A: First, I think you need to get clear as to what overall asset allocation — division of assets between stocks and bonds — you desire. Moving money out of stock funds and into bond funds and/or balanced funds can reduce your stock allocation to a given level.

However, you also need to consider the tax consequences of your fund choices. If you're still working or simply in a higher tax bracket, you should avoid taxable bond and balanced funds such as the ones you are considering.

If taxes aren't a big issue for you, the funds you mention seem fine, although a Treasury fund is state-tax free and thus pays lower interest than a comparable taxable bond fund investing in, say, corporate bonds. The Total Bond Market Index fund might be all you need, as it is incredibly diversified.

Q: I would like to commend you on your comparative analysis of contributing to a 401(k) vs. Roth IRA. You are the only analyst in the popular media explaining the issues so clearly and easy to understand. With the Roth IRA, they tax your income today by delivering a promise of not taxing your savings many years in the future. Why would anyone believe such a promise when the Congress' track record of keeping promises is lousy? In addition to that, if you want future tax relief, you can always invest in municipals. Furthermore, it is likely that you are in a higher tax category today in your working age than when you retire. So, all in all, the Roth IRA is stupid. Thank you for pointing this out to your readers.

A: Thank you for your feedback and, yes, I too am amazed that people could be so shortsighted as to believe politicians promising future tax breaks and socking it to them today.

For all but rare situations, it is foolish for people to bypass funding a tax-deductible retirement account in lieu of funding a non-tax deductible account such as a Roth IRA.

People should also think long and hard about converting a regular IRA to a Roth, as they will have to pay real tax dollars today, again in the hopes of a promised future tax break.

Q: I am a 23-year-old college student and do not have much of an income because of my full-time status. I have little money to invest, but I started a Roth in 1998 and am wondering if there are any other ways for me to invest the little extra cash, approximately $1000 per year, which I want to save. I have given up on CDs and saving accounts due to the little or no interest earned.

A: Investmentwise, what makes sense for this other money very much hinges upon what future purpose you see for utilizing it.

For example, if you expect to spend this money in a few years on a home or personal things after college graduation, you should stay with relatively safe investments such as shorter-term bonds.

On the other hand, if you're investing for long-term growth, stocks are the place to be.
