MISD, city approve tax increases

Thomas: 'We've tried to balance budget, be frugal in spending'

By CHRIS VAN WAGENEN
Staff Writer

They are the hottest seats in town, but no one is lining outside to steal them.

It was a tough day for seven Midland City Council members Tuesday — and for that matter, for the City of Midland.

In one breath, the city was praised by its auditor at 9 a.m. for "tight expenditure" controls. Two hours later it was chided by local residents for what they termed as loose spending habits that contributed to passage of a 7.22 percent tax increase.

"I don't think you'll see anyone on council jump up and speak out in favor of a tax increase," said Mayor Carroll Thomas. "All we've tried to do is balance the budget and be as frugal in our spending."

Of course, not all shared the mayor's sentiment for the city's current thrift policies.

"Suffice it to say, I'm opposed to any tax increase," said Midland resident Scott Davis.

Although several citizens attended Tuesday's meeting, Davis was among only five residents who protested council's adoption of the $57.3 million budget. That budget calls for a 6.85 cent tax increase in 1988-89 over the current effective rate of 43.8 cents per $100 valuation.

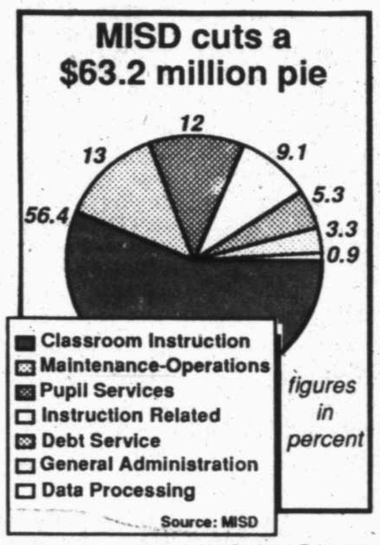

But City Councilman Robert Rendall took issue with Davis and others, noting that when the council pulled the knife out on certain public services the previous year, "We received a strong response from the community not to cut."

Earlier in the day, council members received the city's latest audit results conducted by Peat, Marwick & Main.

In its report, the firm observed that the city was in "good financial condition" for its size. "We've seen good fiscal control...the debt ratio is healthy...budgets have been met...expenditures have been reduced," said Peat Marwick representative Royce Mitchell.

Certainly, council wasn't going to dispute those facts. According to Thomas, the city did everything but make cuts in services to avoid the impending increase.

Little opposition to tax hike voiced at school board meeting

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

In a move they believe is supported by a majority of the community, trustees unfroze the school district tax rate Tuesday night and passed a 10.64-cent hike.

The 1988-89 school district 90.54-cent tax rate and $63 million budget were adopted unanimously before a gathering of about 30 citizens.

Midland Independent School District trustees haven't raised taxes since 1986, though the tax base has been dwindling since 1985, statistics show.

Because the new tax rate is a less than 8 percent increase over the 1988-89 effective tax rate, the district is not subject to a rollback election.

The school district's 1988-89 effective tax rate of 85.95 cents would garner the same amount of tax dollars as the district's 1987-88 tax rate.

The 1988-89 actual tax rate is 5.35 percent higher than this year's effective tax rate, as calculated by the Midland County Appraisal District.

"None of the board members had one single phone call" opposing the tax increase, said District 5 trustee George Staley.

"We feel like this is definitely a minority," Staley said of the trio of taxpayers who spoke against the move Tuesday night.

Opposed to the increase was Midlander Norma Jennings.

"I resent being taxed. I'm tired of me working and carrying the load," Ms. Jennings told the board.

Former District 6 school board candidate Mona Craig said she felt the school district could trim fat off its budget thus negating the need for a tax hike.

Countered Joy O'Hara: "Please raise my taxes. Please help my children."

Mirroring her sentiments was accountant Gary Willis, a member of the past school district community panel that helped cement plans for the district's $11.8 million elementary expansion plans.

County tax is expected to decrease

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

To raise or lower taxes: that's the question Midland County Commissioners are contemplating this week.

A little bit of both: that's the answer the five-member court is likely to realize.

In calculating the proposed 1988 tax rate of 16.50 cents per $100 valuation — a rate nearly two cents higher than the rollback rate of 14.65 cents per $100 valuation — commissioners are expected to lower overall property — ad valorem — taxes by about 26 percent.

While the proposed tax rate technically increases, County Auditor Floyd Jarnagin said taxes on the average Midland County home will more than likely decrease.

The convoluted equation was brought on by a half-cent county sales levy — imposed last January for the purposes of broadening the tax base and rolling back taxes below the current level of 21.07 cents per $100 of valuation.

With a 6.17 percent reduction in the county tax base from 4.195 billion to $3.893 billion, commissioners say a 16.50 tax rate — with the addition of $3.33 million in sales tax revenues would generate the same amount of tax dollars as last year.

Commissioners were required by law to conduct a public hearing Tuesday to announce their intent to increase total tax revenues from properties on the Midland County tax roll. Individual taxes may increase or decrease, depending on the change in taxable value of certain properties.

Commissioner Durward Wright said the court is expected to approve a proposed $14.9 million budget for 1989 and set the tax rate at its Aug. 29 meeting.

Without exemptions, the tax rate of 16.50 cents per $100 valuation would cost a homeowner whose property was valued at $55,000 in 1987 about $87.29 — $31.12 less in taxes on the same home, which is now valued at $52,900.

Moreover, taxpayers who pay early could save up to 3 percent on their property tax bill, asserted Tax Assessor/Collector Frances Shuffield.

Ad valorem taxes collected by the Midland County Tax Assessor/Collector's Office accounted for about $4.16 million — or 70 percent — of the county's operating revenue last year. The remaining 30 percent — or $2.64 million — was collected from fines and fees.

This year, ad valorem taxes will account for 43.6 percent of the county's total revenue, with 28.8 percent coming from sales tax and 27.5 percent generated from fines and fees, Mrs. Shuffield said.

By law, the ad valorem tax rate is to be reduced to account for the revenue acquired by sales tax collections this year. County commissioners in subsequent years are to adjust the effective rate to reflect increases and decreases in those revenues.

Any windfall from the sales tax collections will be held in an "excess sales tax revenue" fund to be used to cover the shortfall in tax collections and other earnings.

After three years, the excess collections can be moved to another account, a "sales tax debt service" funding, allowing the county to pay its debts. The remainder may be used for unspecified purposes.

Quayle indignant about Parkinson's claim

■ Related story — 5A

WASHINGTON (AP) — Republican vice presidential nominee Dan Quayle is embarking on his first solo campaign trip, indignant about a former lobbyist's claim that he propositioned her but declaring he can put the furor behind him by stressing "jobs, peace, freedom."

The Indiana senator travels to Cincinnati and to Lexington, Ky., then makes an address tonight before a national conference of enlisted National Guardsmen in St. Louis.

Quayle spent Tuesday at his Virginia home working on his stump speech as new revelations surfaced about his entry into the National Guard and relationship with a woman lobbyist.

He says he believes the Guard issue will fade during the campaign because "we will be talking about what the American people want to talk about: peace, jobs, freedom."

"The voters don't know Dan Quayle yet. The voters don't know Dan Quayle because you haven't given me a chance to present myself to America," he told reporters outside his home in the Washington suburb of McLean, Va.

The public wants to know how he intends to work with George Bush and "are not interested in a bunch of rumor and gossip and half truths and...outright lies," Quayle said.

As for new reports about his entry into the Guard and relationship with former lobbyist Paula Parkinson, Quayle said: "This is just getting a little bit outrageous and I'm getting a little bit indignant about just one bum rap after another."

Quayle has denied using his family's influence to get into the Indiana National Guard during the Vietnam War, saying that the Guard had openings at the time.

Trade deficit largest drop in 5 years

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. trade deficit fell by 14.9 percent from April through June, the biggest improvement in more than five years, the government reported today.

The Commerce Department said that a record level of U.S. exports and the first quarterly decline in imports in three years pushed the deficit down to $29.9 billion in the second quarter.

The deficit was down from an imbalance of $35.2 billion in the first three months of the year. Both quarters represented improvements from a record deficit of $41.2 billion in the fourth quarter of last year.

The 14.9 percent narrowing in the deficit represented its biggest decline since the fourth quarter of 1982, when the imbalance fell by 18.9 percent.

The new figures confirmed an improvement that had already shown up in the department's monthly merchandise trade reports. The earlier figures showed a 12.8 percent drop in the deficit to $32.6 billion in the second quarter, compared to $37.4 billion in the first quarter.

Today's figures are smaller because they subtract factors such as shipping costs and military sales from the monthly numbers.

U.S. exports rose $4.4 billion to a record $79.7 billion in the second quarter.

Van driver won't be charged

From Staff Reports

SWEETWATER — No charges will be filed by the Department of Public Safety against the driver of a van that was involved in an accident that took the lives of five Midland Boys' Club members and injured 13 others, the investigating officer said.

Trooper David Gonzales concluded in his report that the driver — Damon Polk, 23 — was not asleep at the wheel and, in fact, did reach down to remove a bottle that rolled from beneath his seat.

"There are not going to be any criminal charges filed," Gonzales said today. "I'm just finishing the paperwork now."

Gonzales said he had no evidence to suggest that Polk had fallen asleep at the wheel of the van while returning the Midland team from a softball game about 1 p.m. Aug. 12.

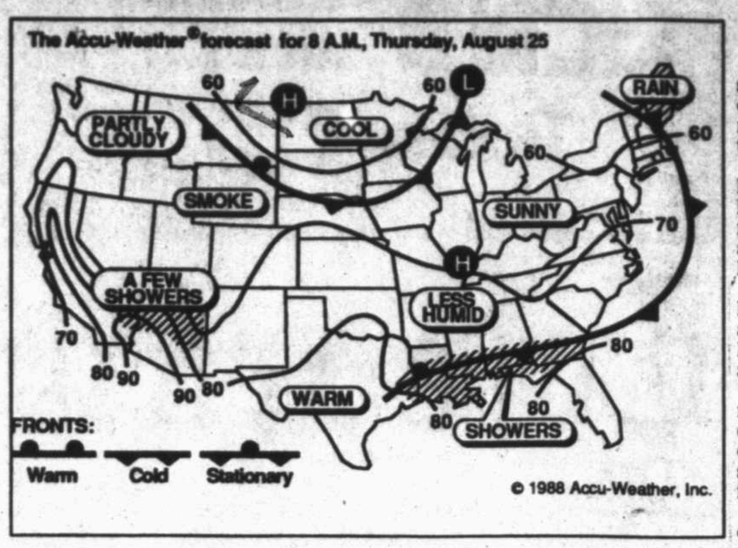

The trooper said he initially suspected sleep as the cause of the accident based on the fact that Polk had gotten up early that day, played softball and then ate just before leaving.

That accident occurred when the van swerved out of control and into the path of an 18-wheeler in the westbound lane of I-20, about a mile east of Sweetwater.

Gonzales said it was his opinion that Polk was fully "conscious" when the accident occurred and was not "fatigued".

WEATHER SUMMARY

From Staff and Wire Reports

Partly cloudy skies with a very slight chance of rain is in the forecast for tonight, according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport. The low will be near 70, and winds will be out of the southeast at 5-10 mph.

Thursday will be mostly sunny, with the high in the middle 90s and winds out of the southeast 5-15 mph.

Tuesday's high of 97 was nine degrees cooler than the record high of 106 set for that date in 1977. The overnight low of 69 was eight degrees warmer than the record low of 57 set for this date in 1966.

STATE

A weak cold front moving slowly across North Texas triggered showers and thunderstorms and forecasts called for the possibility of showers and thunderstorms over much of the state through Thursday.

Skies will be partly cloudy statewide with scattered showers and thunderstorms, mainly in South Texas and West Texas, through Thursday.

The front extended early today along a Texarkana to Dallas to Midland.

Strong thunderstorms roared across portions of North and Northeast Texas during the night and early today.

A severe thunderstorm packing high winds roared through the Paris area Tuesday night, knocking down trees and power lines and blowing a pickup truck off a highway overpass, officials said.

Deputy Steve Owens of the Lamar County Sheriff's Department said the back section of a brick building in Lamar County also was damaged by wind.

A woman driving the pickup on the Southwest Loop around Paris was not injured when the truck toppled, Owens said. Two other vehicles were blown into each other by the storm, which hit about 7 p.m., Owens said.

The National Weather Service reported an estimated 2 inches of rain fell in one hour in Lamar County.

A strong thunderstorm caused problems in the Dallas suburb of Plano late Tuesday night.

Numerous Plano residents were without electricity for a time Tuesday night and early today after straight winds knocked down some power lines.

Officials said numerous residents also lost telephone service and about 40-50 customers remained without telephone service early today.

NATION

Flash-flood warnings were posted in mountain and desert sections of California and Arizona today after monsoonal showers and thunderstorms closed roads and overturned trucks and parked airplanes.

"This is worse than when it snowed" last Christmas, police Lt. Richard Miranda said in Tucson, Ariz., as emergency workers grappled with weather-related problems Tuesday.

Scattered showers and thunderstorms fell today from the lower Mississippi Valley to the Tennessee Valley, and rain fell along the East Coast from southern New England to the Carolinas.

The storms in the Southwest on Tuesday brought heavy rain and strong, gusty winds to parts of Arizona and California. Winds peaked at 64 mph in Tucson, and 1½ inches of rain fell in just half an hour in Ehrenburg near the California line.

In Arizona, a Tucson man and his stepson were stranded in the middle of the swollen Santa Cruz River until a Department of Public Safety helicopter rescued them, authorities said.

At Tucson International Airport, the storm overturned two small planes, broke winds and propellers on three large cargo planes and blew off hangar roofs and doors, said spokeswoman Vicki Mathews. Damage was estimated at $750,000. The storm also downed trees and power lines.

MISD

"I'm tired of this selfishness. These statistics, from an accountant's point of view, represent a job of good administration from the school district," Willis said.

"The fact that when Midland was hit the hardest, ya'll were able to keep the tax burden where it was is marvelous. Education is important and this is an excellent budget," Willis declared.

According to Willis, the 10.64-cent hike amounts to "one Sunday dinner a year," or in the words of Ms. O'Hara, "one drive through McDonald's a month."

With that analogy, Ms. Jennings returned to the podium and asserted: "If I'm selfish fine, but I am tired of taxes. I don't have the privilege of sitting on my fanny" and not working, she said.

"The superintendent makes an outrageous salary," Ms. Jennings said of Dr. Joe Baressi's $96,000 annual salary.

"I don't go out to lunch three times a week and I don't go out to Sunday dinner. There are people who are struggling. We are being taxed to death," Ms. Jennings said.

Added Mark Kundra, an out-of-work opponent to the hike: "As for selfishness, I take that as a personal insult, but I really don't expect an apology."

Baressi maintains a majority of Midlanders don't oppose the tax hike and understands that quality education costs.

"Our board cares a lot. We even had a (public) hearing at 7 p.m. so everyone could attend," the superintendent said.

Factored into the 1988-89 tax increase and budget is a pay raise for teachers that will cost the district about $2 million next year, trustees have said.

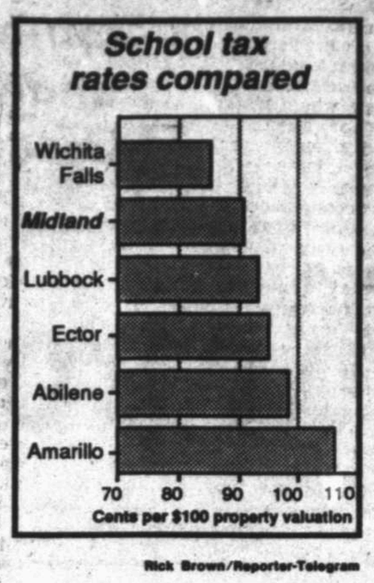

The $63.2 million budget also includes the salaries of new teachers required by the district if it is to comply with a state legislative mandate calling for smaller student-teacher ratios, trustees have said.

Fifty-six percent of the budget is attributed to teachers' salaries, said MISD Director of Communications Ted Miller.

Another 13 percent of the budget will go to the maintenance and operation of the district; 12 percent to pupil services such as transportation and 9 percent to instructional-related costs such as books and sports, Miller explained.

The remainder of the budget is consumed by bonded indebtedness, general administration and data processing costs, Miller said.

In addition to raising taxes, MISD will spend about $1.3 million of operation reserves next year to meet budgetary demands, said MISD Business Manager Don Furgeson.

Rick Brown/Reporter-Telegram

In a 30-minute presentation Tuesday night, Baressi pointed out that the district's new 90.54-cent tax rate is lower than that of five other districts in West Texas.

Moreover, Baressi claimed MISD spends less money per student than other similar districts though enrollment is up and taxes have been frozen.

Without subtractions for exemptions, a taxpayer will pay about $40 more this year on an average-priced $55,000 home.

With homestead exemptions, however, the net increase shouldn't amount to more than $25, school district statistics show.

When a Midland homeowner is 65-years-old his school taxes are frozen and don't increase, Miller said.

Commissioners, in concluding meetings with the county's 25 department heads, have unveiled the proposed 1989 budget, which includes the $200,000 cost affixed to hiring 9.5 more jailers.

The Texas Commission on Jail Standards ordered the county to hire the extra manpower to bring the recently renovated County Jail up to state standards.

In addition, the budget provides for $1.39 million to be allocated to pay a portion of the county's debt, which was acquired by the 1985 jail and youth renovations and this year's construction of a new 192-bunk downtown jail, Commissioner Guy McCrary said.

Captain of ship refusing to attend disciplinary hearing

WASHINGTON (AP) — The captain of the USS Dubuque is refusing to appear at a Navy disciplinary hearing on charges of dereliction of duty for failing to rescue a boatload of Vietnamese refugees who claim they later resorted to cannibalism to survive, the service says.

Capt. Alexander G. Balian, 48, of Los Angeles has been charged with two counts of violating lawful orders under a section of the Uniform Code of Military Justice that calls for "non-judicial punishment proceedings," said Cmdr. David Dillon, a Pacific Fleet spokesman in San Diego, Calif.

He was ordered to appear at a closed "admiral's mast" this afternoon before Vice Adm. George W. Davis Jr., the head of all surface ships in the Pacific Fleet, the spokesman added. At such a hearing, Balian could be stripped permanently of his command, fined or issued a letter of reprimand or censure.

But Balian notified the Navy on Tuesday afternoon that he was exercising his right to refuse the admiral's mast, said Captain Peter Litrenta, spokesman for the U.S. Pacific Fleet.

"This won't be dropped," a source said. "If he doesn't show up for the mast tomorrow, then there's going to be a court martial."

Balian was charged with violating a general Navy regulation "by wrongfully failing to render appropriate assistance to Vietnamese refugees found on the South China Sea on June 9, 1988, in danger of being lost."

The second count accuses him of violating standing operational orders for the Pacific Fleet "which require a commanding officer to aid and rescue refugees encountered at sea in life-endangering circumstances."

The Navy also alleges Balian "was derelict in the performance of those duties in that he negligently failed to investigate sufficiently and render appropriate assistance...as it was his duty to do."

In an admiral's mast, Davis would serve as the lone judge or authority in considering the evidence.

Given Balian's decision not to attend, Davis will have to decide whether to drop the matter or order an Article 32 hearing. An Article 32 hearing, similar to a civilian grand jury proceeding, is the first step in a full military court martial.

Balian was relieved temporarily of his command of the Dubuque on Aug. 13 pending the outcome of a Navy investigation.

The Dubuque, an amphibious landing ship, encountered the boatload of Vietnamese refugees while steaming to duty in the Persian Gulf. The Navy said the Dubuque gave the refugees several hundred pounds of food and water and navigational aids but did not take them aboard because "the refugee craft was judged seaworthy" by Balian.

Navy regulations and orders specify that warships should "be alert for refugees on the high seas" and "if encountered, ships are to extend humanitarian assistance as needed."

"In the case of an unseaworthy vessel, adverse weather or other special circumstances, the refugees may be embarked and transported to the Navy ship's next port of call."

The boat people eventually were rescued off the coast of the Philippines and taken to a refugee camp there, where reports of murder and cannibalism began to surface.

Some survivors have been quoted as saying they ate fellow passengers to stay alive after they encountered the Dubuque. Two victims reportedly died of starvation, but three others allegedly were murdered through drowning and then eaten.

Some survivors charged the Dubuque refused to take them aboard even though their boat was disabled and they were dying of exposure and starvation.

In addition to the Navy, the United Nations High Commission on Refugees has been investigating those reports.

Robert Cooper, the U.N. commission's Manila representative, said 52 refugees survived 37 days at sea but 58 people died during the crossing.

TRADE

Sales of both farm and non-farm products rose during the quarter as the decline in the value of the dollar continued to make American goods competitive once again on foreign markets.

Agricultural exports rose 7 percent to $9.7 billion, the highest level since the second quarter of 1984, reflecting in part a jump in prices.

Corn sales climbed 27 percent, with much of the gain attributed to increased sales to the Soviet Union and Mexico. Wheat sales were up 10 percent due to an increase in sales to China while meat and poultry shipments rose 28 percent, largely due to an increase in sales to Japan.

Soybean and wheat prices both rose 13 percent while corn prices were up 7 percent. The report said the sharp price increases did not reflect the effects of this summer's drought, indicating that further steep price increases will be on the way.

Imports fell by $900 million, the first quarterly decline in imports since the first quarter of 1985.

The improvement came in non-oil imports as petroleum imports actually rose during the quarter.

The trade deficit decreased with every major geographic area with the exception of Canada, the country's largest trading partner. The Canadian deficit rose by $500 million to $4.1 billion.

As usual, the largest deficit was with Japan, an imbalance of $11.9 billion, down $1.1 billion from the first quarter.

The deficit with Latin American decreased $1.5 billion to $1.7 billion while the deficit with Western Europe fell $900 million to $3.8 billion.

MCHD to hold public hearing to discuss proposed tax hike

From Staff Reports

Midland County Hospital District directors will hold a public hearing Thursday at 1:30 p.m. to discuss a proposed 5.44-cent tax hike.

Directors today were expected to meet to review the proposed 55 percent increase, but take no action, a hospital district spokeswoman said.

Hospital district directors have said the proposed 1988-89 tax rate of 13.58 cents is necessary to cover the costs of medical treatment for the needy in Midland County.

The 1987-88 hospital district tax rate was 8.14 cents per $100 of valuation.

The meeting Thursday will be held in the Midland Memorial Hospital medical staff conference room.

CITY

"The problem is (in a downturn) that city services don't contract when the economy contracts," he said.

City officials claim that while other governing entities were adding to their coffers, council held the line, balanced the budget and made cuts without impacting precious services.

But that didn't impress Midland resident Randall Foster. "I like to eat steak every night, but I don't," he said.

Added resident Bob True: "The people I've talked to are upset about this. Give us a little rest."

In other business, council:

- approved allocation of $791,399 in Community Development Block Grant funds. Selected projects are open to public inspection for one week before they're submitted to the U.S. Department of Housing & Urban Development. Funds will be made available Oct. 1.
- approved a $75 selling price for its Centennial Comprehensive Plan, Vol. II.
- approved support of Proposition 1 that will ensure that Texas spends federal highway funds on highway improvements.
- agreed to study a proposed damage fee schedule directed at oil and gas development as well as geophysical exploration operations on city-owned T-Bar Ranch acreage located between Winkler and Loving counties.
- met with newly hired building official David Wayland, who came to Midland from the City of Odessa. Wayland will serve as head of the Inspection Division in the Planning and Development Department.

But a retired Indiana guard official acknowledged Tuesday that he asked the Guard personnel office to "hold" a space for Quayle after receiving a call from a Quayle family friend in 1969.

Retired Major Gen. Alfred Ahner, former military support officer for Indiana and later head of the state's National Guard, said he was contacted by an old friend, Wendell Phillippi, a retired Guard commander who then worked for a newspaper owned by Quayle's family.

"Wendell Phillippi had called and said he had a good man, and said he thought he'd make a good Guardsman," Ahner said in a telephone interview from Indiana.

After learning there were a couple vacancies, "I said hold one of them, there's a good guy coming over," he said.

"We couldn't take him if there wasn't any opening," Ahner said. He said Quayle was accepted into the state's headquarters unit, which was "pretty selective" and looked for recruits with intelligence and leadership potential.

VAN

The trooper also said that no charges would be filed as far as the number of passengers that were crowded into the van.

Gonzales indicated a charge might have been filed if the driver had been distracted. "But I don't believe that was the case," he said.

Earlier, Gonzales had the said the van should have had no more than 12 people in it. There were 17 on board at the time of the crash.

Meanwhile, a spokeswoman at St. Mary of the Plains Hospital in Lubbock said Quincy Hubert, 11, and Marvin Brown, 14, remained in serious condition as of 8:30 a.m. today.

At Methodist Hospital, also in Lubbock, said Polk was moved to a private room today. His condition was listed as stable.

Appeals court rules federal guidelines as unconstitutional

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A U.S. appeals court struck down new guidelines establishing a range of sentences for federal crimes, ruling the standards are unconstitutional because they were drafted by judges as a political act.

The 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, the highest court to rule on the issue, said Tuesday that placing three federal judges on the seven-member sentencing commission violated constitutional separation of powers.

In a 2-1 vote, the court decided the use of judges on the commission interfered with the "aura of judicial impartiality" by allowing the president to appoint and remove members, said the opinion by Judge Alex Kozinski.

"Congress may not, under our system of separated powers, require judges to serve on bodies that make political decisions," Kozinski said.

The decision affects only the region covered by the 9th Circuit, comprising nine Western states, Guam and the Northern Marianas. However, the court is the nation's first on the appellate level to rule on the validity of the guidelines.

Other federal judges nationwide have issued numerous conflicting rulings on challenges to the guidelines, mostly based on the separation-of-powers issue.

The guidelines were challenged by public defenders, who were displeased with provisions that lengthened sentences for many crimes and restricted judges' authority.

The chairman of the sentencing commission, Judge William Wilkins of the 4th U.S. Circuit Court in Appeals in Richmond, Va., said he was disappointed by the ruling but added, "We'll be having a definitive and final answer from the U.S. Supreme Court real soon."

Wilkins, interviewed from Washington on Larry King's syndicated radio talk show, said courts have decided about 200 cases based on validity of the sentencing guidelines, with the rulings about evenly divided.

The Supreme Court has scheduled arguments on the issue for Oct. 5 in a Missouri case, he said.

Tuesday's ruling on two consolidated challenges from San Diego said the commission violated the constitutional limit on the role of the judiciary because "its function is political and not judicial in nature."

Kozinski said the commission had to make rules and policies having the force of law, "tasks that only the legislative or executive branches, and not the judiciary, may constitutionally perform."

The guidelines, which took effect in November, recommend minimum and maximum sentences for each crime, requiring the judge to state unusual circumstances for imposing a sentence outside the range.

The appeals court also found invalid the 1984 sentencing law that created the Sentencing Commission and abolished parole in post-November 1987 cases. Such a ruling would restore the entire previous law, which generally gave judges wide-ranging sentencing discretion and provided for parole eligibility after one-third of a sentence.

"We're very happy with the guidelines being thrown out," said Geoff Hansen, an assistant federal public defender in San Francisco. "We're just ecstatic that we don't have to deal with this nightmare any more."

But he said lawyers will be "in some state of uncertainty" in dealing with many recent cases, including some where the guidelines helped individual defendants and others involving plea-bargains based on the guidelines. The status of parole is also unclear, he said.

Kozinski said the commission's detailed rules on sentences for each crime invade the executive and legislative policy-making roles in many ways.

Thornburgh questions Meese action

Thornburgh

Thornburgh said in an interview Tuesday that he is taking a "second look" at an order Meese signed on his last day as attorney general that requires special investigations of members of Congress suspected of criminal wrongdoing.

"I want to find out what the underlying premise was in the issuance of the order," said Thornburgh.

The former Pennsylvania governor, who was sworn in Aug. 12, arrived in the waning days of the Reagan administration to head a department that had been buffeted by Meese's tenure.

Meese was the subject of a lengthy investigation by Independent Counsel James C. McKay, who declined to seek indictments but said in his final report that Meese "probably" had broken ethics laws.

Meese's final-day order for special prosecutors to investigate members of Congress was widely viewed on Capitol Hill as a parting shot by Meese at his critics there.

Thornburgh, 56, a former head of the Justice Department's criminal division in the Ford administration, said Tuesday that it is "pretty well known that I see a very limited role for special prosecutors-independent counsels in the process of investigating and prosecuting criminal cases."

He said U.S. attorneys and the department's office of public integrity, which investigates corruption of public officials, do a fine job pursuing allegations of criminal conduct, and prosecuting if necessary.

Thornburgh established the public integrity office in the mid-1970s.

"I guess what I am curious about is what is being proposed...a cure where there is no disease" he said. "I am taking what could be called fairly a second look at that order."

While Meese was attorney general, a number of high-ranking officials resigned, and a number expressed unhappiness with the attention Meese was forced to give to McKay's investigation.

Asked how he planned to restore morale, Thornburgh said: "You lead by example, and I want to make it clear that my view of the department is one that requires an absolute fidelity to high standards of professional conduct and integrity in our operations...the values and principles of any organization are transmitted from the top."

Thornburgh said he will talk to an advisory group of U.S. attorneys to see what they think of Meese's last-minute order on investigations of members of Congress.

The order requires that attorneys general appoint an independent counsel to investigate allegations of wrongdoing made against a senator or congressman.

Although the Justice Department already could conduct such investigations on its own, Meese said his order was designed to ensure that legislators and top executive officials are treated equitably.

The 1978 Ethics in Government Act allows executive-branch employees to be investigated by special prosecutors, a provision that was designed to eliminate possible conflicts of interest in which an administration would be responsible for investigating itself.

No comparable conflicts exist when the Justice Department — part of the executive branch — investigates members of Congress, who are part of the legislative branch.

Sen. Carl Levin, D-Mich., chairman of a governmental affairs subcommittee, already had asked Thornburgh to rescind Meese's order because it contained a drafting error and the public never got a chance to comment on it.

During the next five months, Thornburgh said he will "take stock and make sure everything is shipshape" in the department. He said the department will aggressively pursue the war on drugs and other criminal activity.

Although he is a strong supporter of GOP presidential nominee George Bush, Thornburgh said he will not campaign for Bush and has no commitment that he will keep his job if Bush wins in November.

He refused to talk about partisan politics because of the sensitivity of his position.

And he said he had no idea when the department's office of professional responsibility, which looks into the conduct of Justice employees, will complete its own review of Meese's conduct to see if it met ethical standards.

The ethics review began after McKay issued his report last month. McKay concluded in his final report that Meese probably broke conflict-of-interest and tax laws, but Meese said the report "vindicated" him.

Clause in trade bill aims to make U.S. 'measure up'

LOS ANGELES, Calif. (AP) — Give 'em an inch and they'll take a kilometer.

Crusaders for wider use of the metric system are happy about an obscure section of the trade bill signed Tuesday by President Reagan, a section they say will help America measure up in a metric world.

The bill designates the metric system as the preferred method of measure for trade and commerce and requires government agencies to start buying metric whenever practical.

For the U.S. Metric Association, which since 1916 has been prodding America to join most of the world in using metric measure, the bill is a milestone, or perhaps a kilometer post.

"I think the government's decision to adopt this law is pulling the country in the right direction," said Lorelie Young, association president.

"We interpret it to be saying that the metric system is highly important to the United States — to educate our youngsters in this scientific world, to put us in sync with the rest of the world and to give us the advantage of the best measurement system ever devised."

The Omnibus Trade and Competitiveness Act of 1988 gives U.S. negotiators more leeway to bargain at international trade talks, strengthens the government's ability to fight restrictive trade policies of other countries, and provides for retraining of Americans who lose their jobs because of foreign competition.

It also says that by 1993, agencies should "use the metric system of measurement in procurement, grants and other business-related activities, except to the extent that such use is impractical or is likely to cause significant inefficiency or loss of markets to U.S. firms."

Analysts at the National Association of Manufacturers don't expect much impact from the section because of the language giving agencies an economic out, said Howard Lewis, a vice president of the Washington, D.C., lobbying group.

But for the 3,500-member Metric Association, which promotes the switch nationwide from its headquarters in the Los Angeles suburb of Northridge, the bill seems likely to hasten the inevitable conversion.

Ms. Young recalled with relish that the bill's example of an economic hardship big enough to win an exemption from the metric policy was a company faced with competition from a foreign producer of non-metric goods — an unlikely situation.

Automakers and other sectors of heavy industry are gradually getting on the metric bandwagon, Ms. Young said, though lumber and machine tool industries are notable for their adherence to tradition.

"Our liquor industry hasn't suffered," she noted, "and they were one of the first to convert."

The metric system uses weights and measures, such as the liter and the gram, that are multiples of 10. Calculations in the traditional English system are more difficult because that system is based on varying multiples.

Little has been done to promote use of the metric system nationwide since passage of the Metric Act of 1975, said Valerie Antoine, executive director of the association.

"The act set up a U.S. metric board that would monitor a changeover and educate the public, but it was not given any real clout," she said. "They didn't really get any place."

Fire moves within mile of Yellowstone hotel

Associated Press

A fire that has scorched nearly 92,000 acres in Yellowstone National Park burned within a mile of a hotel complex today, while crews near Helena, Mont., aimed to contain a 37,000-acre blaze by tonight.

A rash of wildfires broke out Tuesday in Oregon, including a small blaze ignited by a plane crash that killed three people, while a fresh fire in Washington state spread to 500 acres in a few hours.

In western Yellowstone, part of the North Fork fire was pushed by gusting winds to within a mile of the Canyon Junction campground and hotel complex, said park spokeswoman Joan Anzelmo.

A park employee who wouldn't give her name said officials would evacuate the area today as a precaution.

The Canyon Junction campground, 25 miles northeast of Old Faithful and on the main park road, also contains three dormitories for park staff and a visitor center.

No significant growth was reported Tuesday in the nine other major Yellowstone fires, but one park road, the park's south entrance, four campgrounds and the Grant Village hotel, campground and visitors center complex remained closed.

Shorter days and cooler air signaling the approach of fall in northwestern Wyoming indicate relief may be on the way for the 4,000 firefighters and 1,200 soldiers battling the flames over 350,000 acres in the nation's oldest national park.

Although temperatures Tuesday reached the mid-80s, lows early Tuesday in the mid-30s helped firefighters. Similar lows and damp air were forecast for today, and officials hoped frost would form to further discourage the flames.

"Even a little bit of a break can be very helpful with firefighting efforts," Anzelmo said.

AP Laserphoto

Firefighters Andy Garrett, left, of Lake Bluff, Ill., and Greg Zem, right, of Northridge, Calif., peer through thick smoke as they man a roadblock in Yellowstone National Park.

Firefighters at a 156,500-acre blaze in the park's northeastern corner were aided Tuesday by about 600 soldiers from Fort Lewis, Wash., who began mopping up on the fire's eastern edge in Shoshone National Forest. The military relief enabled 600 firefighters to attack the active sections of the fire.

Another 600 Fort Lewis soldiers were to help clean up a 4,300-acre fire in Wyoming's Bridger-Teton National Forest and adjacent Grand Teton National Park. The fire was about 60 percent contained Tuesday.

Favorable weather also helped firefighters at Bighorn National Forest in north-central Wyoming, where they hoped to contain a 9,000-acre fire tonight.

A 27,000-acre fire in the same wilderness was causing problems for 500 firefighters trying to keep it from invading private land dotted with cabins. In Montana, easterly winds Tuesday pushed a blaze away from the towns of Cooke City and Silver Gate, Yellowstone officials said.

Reinforcements were due today from Alaska to help direct efforts to contain a stubborn, 26,000-acre fire in the Absaroka-Beartooth Wilderness near Yellowstone. The Alaskan firefighters were freed by authorities after wildfires in that state diminished.

In the mountains southeast of Helena, nearly 3,000 firefighters gained a foothold in a two-week battle to contain the 37,600-acre fire that destroyed more than a dozen structures.

"There are no problems on the line that we've heard of, and we're still hoping for containment by 8 p.m.," said Gordon Gray, a fire information officer.

Fire officials also said a 12,600-acre fire south of the Northern Cheyenne Indian Reservation in southeastern Montana was nearly contained Tuesday night.

In addition, 30 firefighters worked on the outskirts of a 34,000-acre fire in the Scapegoat Wilderness north of Lincoln, Mont.

In the west-central Oregon town of LaPine, three families were briefly evacuated Tuesday night due to one of a series of small fires in the state. Lightning was blamed for at least 50 of the blazes, while record-breaking heat was a contributing factor.

In east-central Oregon, a plane crashed Tuesday near a mountaintop in the Malheur National Forest, killing three people and starting a fire that charred a quarter-acre of woods before it was extinguished.

Near Morton, Wash., gusty winds and 100-degree temperatures allowed a forest fire to grow from 60 acres to 500 within a few hours Tuesday, officials said. The blaze burned mostly on land owned by the Murray Pacific Co., a timber firm.

Ex-Panther leader refuses prison release

SAN QUENTIN, Calif. (AP) — Former Black Panther leader Huey Newton refused to leave prison on his scheduled release date Tuesday, demanding that officials also free fellow inmate and ex-Panther Elmer "Geronimo" Pratt.

Newton

Newton has been in prison for 60 days for parole violations. Pratt, a convicted murderer, has been serving a life term since his conviction in 1972. Two weeks ago he lost his eighth bid for parole after a state panel called him a "danger to the public."

Sue Gegner, an acquaintance of Newton's, said that Newton did not expect Pratt to be freed. "It's more of a statement that he's trying to make," she said.

"Geronimo Pratt has been unjustly imprisoned for over 18 years and he (Newton) feels very strongly about this," Gegner said.

San Quentin spokeswoman Jeanne Ballatore said that when officers went to Newton's cell Tuesday morning to begin release proceedings, he refused to leave.

Prison officers filed a disciplinary action against Newton for refusing to obey a direct order. A state parole board panel met at the prison later in the day and recommended that Newton's sentence be lengthened by 30 days for violating the order, but Newton instead requested a formal hearing by the full state parole board, Ballatore said.

He will remain in custody at least until the full hearing, set for Aug. 30, and the board's decision about what action is in order, she said.

If Newton continues to refuse to leave, he can receive additional discliplinary citations that require him to remain behind bars up to the time his parole expires on Feb. 8, 1989.

"If at that point in time if he continues to refuse...a decision would have to be made. He'd be trespassing at that point," she said.

Reagan's hometown awaits Soviet visitors

DIXON, Ill. (AP) — A warm welcome and a glimpse of life in the town where President Reagan grew up await a small delegation from Dickson, Siberia, for its weeklong "Dickson-to-Dixon" goodwill summit.

Signs in storefronts proclaiming "Peace on Earth," written in English and Russian, and flags of the United States and the Soviet Union will greet the three-man delegation when it arrives tonight.

A heavy dose of Reagan history, including a visit to the president's boyhood home — a two-story frame house on the south side — will highlight the visit by Dickson Mayor Nikolai T. Kardamyshev, journalist Boris S. Ivanov and interpreter Nikolai S. Vishnewvsky of Moscow.

"I want them to feel they are experiencing Midwestern American hospitality," says Mayor James E. Dixon. "I want them to see our people at work. To see what we produce. Hopefully, they will get a feel for life in small-town America."

Dixon hopes to build on the improved relations Reagan has established with the Soviet Union, and believes cultural exchanges between average citizens are essential to preserving peace.

"Our specific (object) is to open avenues of friendship between two small communities and hopefully to serve as an example for other communities in the two nations," Dixon said. "It's a single step in support of important goals."

There will be no parades or flashy festivals to impress the Soviets. Instead, this town of 15,700 will provide a relaxing boating excursion on the Rock River, tours of factories and farms, and meals at its "hash houses."

"We're going to take them to Pizza Hut and places like Arthur's Garden Deli for sandwiches, stuffed baked potatoes and frozen yogurt," said Dixon.

"Knowing the importance of the working man in the Soviet Union, we're going to let them meet our factory workers, farmers and others on a personal level. We'll give them a flavor for what's going on."

The Soviets will arrive late tonight and Dixon will escort them on a private tour of Reagan's boyhood home Thursday morning. It's the house where 9-year-old Ronald "Dutch" Reagan, son of a shoe salesman and a dressmaker, lived from 1911 until he left for college in 1928.

Jury selection begins in Barry Minkow case

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Jury selection has begun in the trial of Barry Minkow, the former carpet-cleaning whiz kid accused of bilking banks and investors out of more than $24 million through a securities fraud scheme.

Jury candidates were given a questionnaire Tuesday asking about their knowledge of the widely publicized case, their ability to be fair and impartial and their willingness to serve on a trial expected to last three months.

The 22-year-old Minkow, who turned his after-school business into a $100 million carpet cleaning empire, has declared his innocence, and claims he was a victim of organized crime figures who manipulated him and his business affairs.

A panel of 200 prospective jurors jammed the courtroom Tuesday as U.S. District Judge Dickran Tevrizian opened Minkow's trial by reading the 57-count indictment against him. It accuses Minkow of securities fraud, credit card fraud and mail fraud.

On trial with him is accountant Norman Rothberg, accused of taking a bribe to retract his warnings that Minkow's ZZZZ Best company was involved in fraud.

Minkow was originally indicted with 12 others, 10 of whom have since pleaded guilty to various charges stemming from the alleged scheme.

SSC report to be released

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — The coordinator of Arizona's drive to win the federal "super collider" project says a federal report on all seven proposed sites is to be released soon.

Assistant Attorney General Ian Macpherson says federal officials told him Tuesday that an environmental impact statement on the seven proposed states should be released by the end of this month.

Portions of the statement, expectly to be an extremely lengthy document, were being sent to printers, Macpherson said he was told.

Following release of the impact statement, hearings will be held in Arizona and the six other states competing for the advanced physics research project.

Macpherson says project boosters in Arizona were preparing for release of the statement by contacting environmental activists to offer to arrange site tours and to answer any questions they might have now.

Dog survives 12-floor fall

MYRTLE BEACH, S.C. (AP) — A 3-pound Yorkshire terrier survived a fall from a 12th-floor balcony and may be walking again by the end of the week, a veterinarian says.

"It's really a lucky dog," said veterinarian Earl Johnson, who treated the tan and black dog named Missy. "I didn't think she was going to make it, to tell you the truth...it's a definite miracle."

Doctors said Monday the dog had an 85 percent to 90 percent chance of total recovery.

Missy fell Friday from the penthouse balcony of the Sea Mark Tower condominium.

Her owners, Roy and Ann Gipson, said strong winds created a vacuum that sucked the small dog through a 5-inch-wide opening in a guard rail.

Random AIDS testing set

ATLANTA (AP) — More than 1 million newborns will be tested for AIDS antibodies by the end of 1989 in a program federal researchers hope will give them a true picture of the spread of the disease in the United States.

The infants will be tested randomly and anonymously in the program, part of a $40 million package of initiatives to track the spread of the virus.

The tests will determine only whether the mother is infected, Dr. Timothy Dondero said Tuesday, and a positive result does not necessarily mean the child has or will get AIDS.

Dondero, head of the sero-epidemiology branch of the AIDS program at the Centers for Disease Control here, said some studies indicate 30 percent to 50 percent of newborns testing positive for the virus could eventually develop the disease.

The program is intended to test a representative sample of the population to determine where AIDS infection among women is concentrated and to determine where to target prevention programs, Dondero said.

Dondero said plans for the tests are in place in 23 states plus Puerto Rico and the District of Columbia, and testing is already under way in about half of those.

Kids won't return to school

MARION, N.C. (AP) — Three siblings whose parents have fought with school officials since spring because the children were not allowed to preach at the school gates will be taught at home, a mediator says.

"We pretty much got what everybody wanted," said Dan Rodden, president of Caleb Campaign of Chicago, a non-profit Christian rights organization negotiating with school officials on the family's behalf.

Rodden said Tuesday that David and Robin Strode of McDowell County had signed a statement asking that their children be removed from Eastfield Elementary School and be taught at home.

But the county school superintendent, David Ricketts, said he was not sure an agreement had been reached.

Quayle criticized for voting against veterans' interests

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Vietnam veterans' group is criticizing Republican vice presidential candidate Dan Quayle for voting against what the group says are the interests of former Vietnam servicemen.

"On a number of different occasions, the Indiana senator has had a chance to show just how deep his fondness for Vietnam veterans goes, and in each case he's dropped the ball," said Mary Stout, president of the Vietnam Veterans of America.

Quayle's military record is under fire amid reports he used the influence of his powerful newspaper publishing family to join the Indiana National Guard in 1969, shortly before he would have been eligible for the draft at the height of the Vietnam War.

Quayle's office released his military records Tuesday. The 47 pages of military records show that Quayle scored below average on journalism tests he took after working more than four years as a National Guard public affairs official.

But the records don't have any information about whether Quayle used connections to join the Guard.

The Vietnam Veterans of America on Tuesday criticized Quayle's votes in the past two years on veterans-related issues, including his opposition to a bill making the Veterans Administration a Cabinet-level department.

During an appearance Monday night before the Veterans of Foreign Wars, Quayle also was criticized by some veterans for that same vote.

When he introduced Quayle, Larry W. Rivers, the VFW's senior vice commander-in-chief, was applauded when he said, "Dan, we applaud your stance on defense and foreign policy issues, but you and I still have some talking to do in the area of veterans legislation."

Quayle did a quick about-face on the issue, saying moments later, "I'm sure that as I grow older that I will learn my youthful indiscretions of failing to vote for the Veterans Administration. I will recognize my mistake and it will turn out to be the greatest cabinet we have in our government — no doubt about that."

The Senate voted 84-11 passage on July 12 of the bill making the VA a Cabinet-level agency. Quayle was one of the 11 opposition votes. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, the Democratic vice presidential nominee, voted for the bill.

A day earlier, both Quayle and Bentsen voted against legislation which would permit veterans to go to federal courts to challenge VA decisions, a right that veterans don't now have. Veterans organizations have pushed for that right of judicial review.

On Oct. 16, 1987, Quayle voted with the minority in an unsuccessful attempt to close the 188 storefront counseling centers scattered around the nation for Vietnam veterans. The Senate rejected the closure on a 57-33 vote. Quayle was one of the 33 minority votes, while Bentsen voted to keep the centers open.

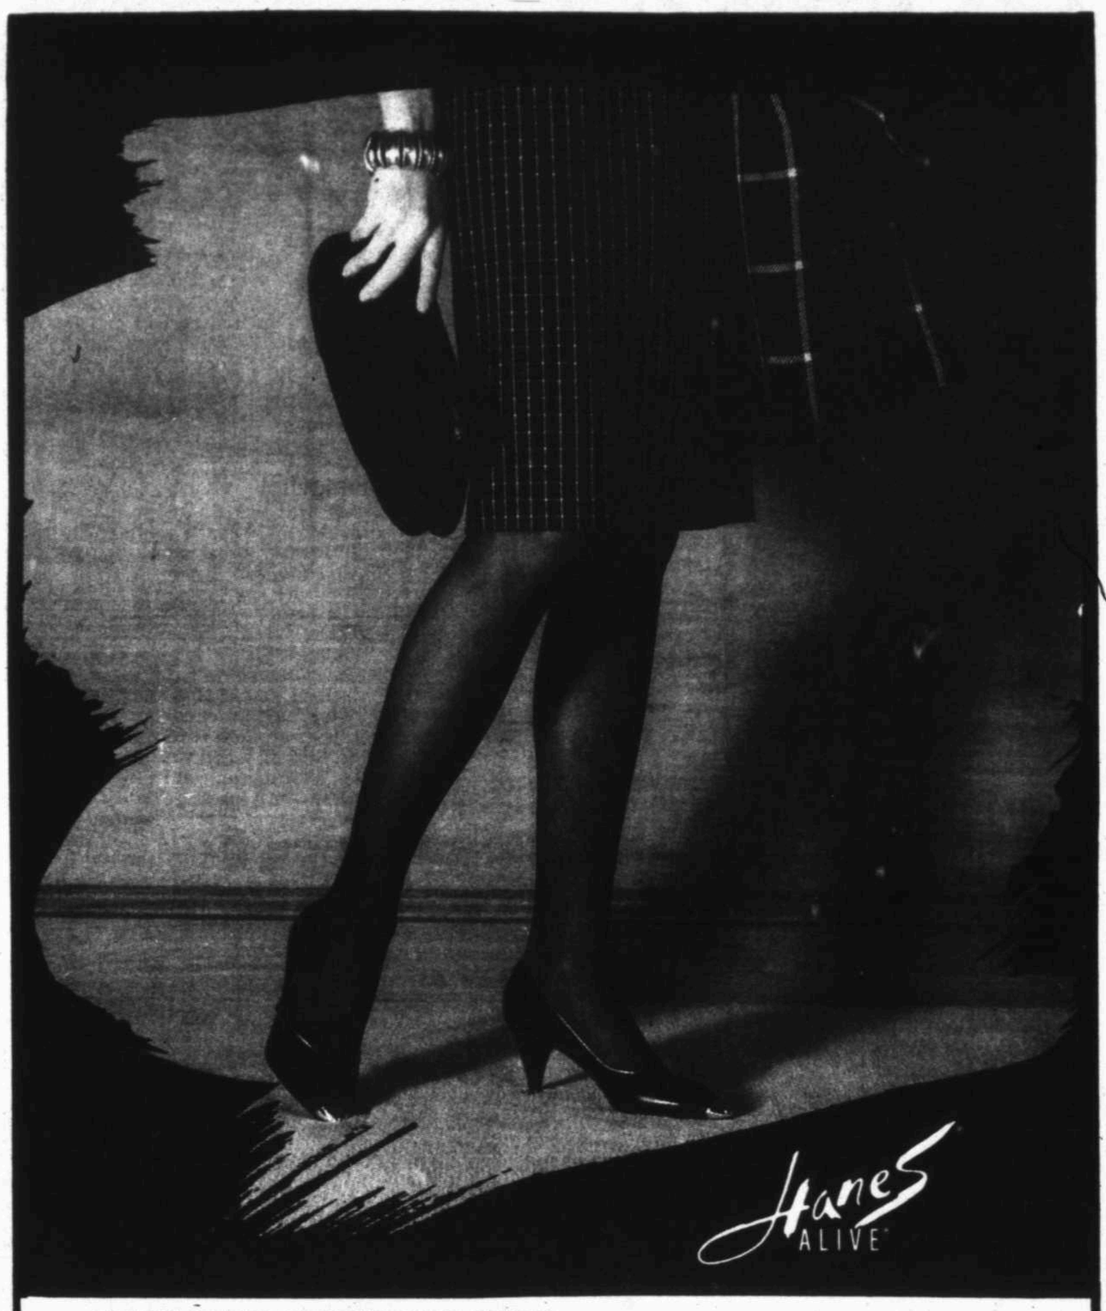

Quayle and Bentsen joined a unanimous 89-0 vote on May 8, 1987, when the Senate approved a bill to continue indefinitely the GI bill, a sweeping measure which provides education benefits for veterans.

Last Dec. 4, Quayle and Bentsen both again joined a unanimous 88-0 vote approving an increase in the disability rate for veterans and improved veterans benefits.

Generally, the military records released Tuesday are routine papers, detailing immunizations and copies of orders mentioning Quayle's name. Quayle entered the guard May 19, 1969, six days before he was to graduate from DePauw University and become eligible for the draft.

He had been called for his pre-induction physical April 9, 1969, an indication he was likely to be drafted.

Quayle spent almost all his Guard career in the 120th Public Information Detachment. Most of his time was as a clerk-typist, although he also was rated as a senior information specialist.

S. Africa sanctions aren't best way

The political aspects of the House of Representatives' recent move to tighten sanctions against South Africa were downplayed by Democratic lawmakers. They insisted it merely is a way for the United States to express its unqualified opposition to the racial policies of the apartheid regime.

There is a better way though. In reality, the move in the House is far from unqualified. The Democrat-sponsored bill contains carefully crafted loopholes to allow the United States to buy any rare strategic materials it likes from mineral-rich South Africa, including platinum, chrome, diamonds, gold, uranium and any other mineral the president may deem necessary for the U.S. defense and economy. Thank goodness, at least, for that bit of planning.

On the other side of the coin, Rep. Ronald Dellums, D-Calif., chief author of the legislation, would be hard-pressed to explain to South Africa's oppressed blacks, whose labor is exploited in mining these minerals, how such sales would improve their lot economically or politically.

Political ploy or not, introduction of the bill has sharpened the divisions on South African sanctions along party lines. Democrats believe the bill will help Michael Dukakis in the November election, despite the fact that the sanctions are unlikely to be enacted in their present form. Senate support for the measure is reportedly weak, and President Reagan has pledged to veto it in any case.

Most unfortunate is the timing of the bill. Falling in the middle of delicate negotiations over the future of Angola and South-West Africa (Namibia), it was virtually irresponsible. A key element of the peace plan is Pretoria's agreement to relinquish its domination of South-West Africa. This promise was wrung from Pretoria only after years of steady pressure from the U.S. State Department. The threat of harsher sanctions now raises the real danger that President P.W. Botha will be forced by right-wing elements to reconsider allowing South-West Africa to take independence, with its undeniable risk that an unfriendly, Marxist-inclined government could take control.

Many South African blacks reject sanctions because they are first in line to suffer the effects of a slow-down in the economy. A vociferous minority of blacks supports sanctions in the cynical hope that a desperately impoverished black population would be driven to rise against the forces of apartheid in a swift and bloody revolution.

Many Americans, too, are opposed to the policy of apartheid. Yet sanctions don't offer a solution. Steady and less violent progress toward the dismantling of apartheid could be maintained if the United States were to continue its economic involvement, thereby setting a much-needed example of interracial cooperation. Additionally, through cultural, educational and business contacts, it should work toward raising black standards and creating the stable, middle-class society from which South Africa's future black leaders must be drawn.

It's too simplistic, even arrogant, to presume that the United States will rid South Africa of the evils of apartheid by withdrawing and scolding self-righteously from a distant corner. Japan has now become South Africa's biggest trading partner. The United Kingdom has large investments there. France and West Germany also maintain profitable business contacts. Even the Soviet Union is now trading openly with South Africa. None of these countries condones apartheid. Each strives pragmatically to end it, as the United States should, by close involvement and constructive dialogue.

Another View:

Misplacing blame

I believe the actions of Iran were the proximate cause of this accident and would argue that Iran must bear the principal responsibility for the tragedy." So says Admiral Crowe, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, endorsing the Pentagon's report on the shooting down of the Iranian airliner by the USS. Vincennes.

Admiral Crowe's defense of the captain's actions is justifiable. His attempt to blame Iran as the principal perpetrator of the accident is grotesque.

It is not every day that American forces shoot down civilian airliners. When they do so, the United States government needs to acknowledge, at the highest level and without equivocation, that a terrible mistake has been made.

President Reagan has done so in his request that Congress pay compensation, without admitting fault, to the families of the 290 people aboard the airliner. But Congress has greeted the request with disdain. Some members contend America would look naive making payments to a country that holds American hostages, others that payment should be made conditional on the hostages' release.

These objections do Congress little credit. The compensation is owed, as a moral duty, to individuals. To condition payment on actions by Teheran would mimic the mentality of hostage takers.

Unfortunately, doing right by Iran is not a popular cause in an election year. Les Aspin, chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, predicted earlier this month that Congress would not vote to compensate the victims unless the Pentagon's review of the accident showed that it was "almost entirely the United States' fault."

Hence Admiral Crowe's blaming of Iran is all the more dismaying. Not only is he at odds with the president's policy, but he encourages the opponents of that policy in Congress.

He is more persuasive in his defense of the Vincennes' captain. Given the information available, and its context, Captain Rogers had little choice but to assume the oncoming plane was hostile and to order its destruction. That said, the Navy's defense of the Vincennes' performance is difficult to follow. The "proximate" cause of the accident, with all respect to Admiral Crowe, is that the men and machines aboard the ship misidentified the approaching Airbus as an Iranian F-14 fighter. Yet, in the Navy's book, neither are at fault, even though a nearby ship, the USS Sides, correctly deduced that the plane was not a threat.

"The Aegis combat system's performance was excellent — it functioned as designed," declares the investigating team under Adm. William Fogarty. But civilian aircraft carry transponder devices that, when queried by a warship's radar, respond with clear information as to the aircraft's range and altitude. The correct interpretation of transponder messages should have been the first priority in the design of the Vincennes' equipment and the training of its crew. Had that been done, the Airbus tragedy would not have occurred.

Shooting down the Airbus was a blunder, and the fog of war cannot veil the ample contribution made to it by the Vincennes' crew and equipment. The Pentagon and Congress need to stop blaming Iran and compensate the innocent victims without further delay.

Medellin Cartel: A history of crime

WASHINGTON — Seven years ago, more than 200 drug traffickers met in a restaurant on the outskirts of Medellin, Colombia, and formed one of the deadliest combinations for profit of this century, the Medellin Cartel. They supply 80 percent of the cocaine used in the United States. It is smuggled in on a bloody trail of crime and anarchy.

Jack Anderson

We have tracked the workings of this group and investigated its leaders. From U.S. intelligence officials in Washington, embassy sources in Latin America and highly classified government reports, we have pieced together a history of the cartel and profiles of its four leaders.

On Nov. 12, 1981, guerrillas of the revolutionary "April 19 Movement" or M-19, snatched 26-year-old Martha Ochoa from the University of Antioquia in Medellin. M-19 demanded several million dollars in ransom from her family. In polite circles, the Ochoas are known for their collection of fine horses and real estate holdings. Strip away the pretense and they are Colombia's reputed first family of cocaine, presided over by Martha's father, Fabio Ochoa.

Her brother, Jorge Luis Ochoa, responded coolly to the kidnapping in a scene worthy of "The Godfather." Jorge reckoned rightly that all wealthy drug traffickers were at the mercy of M-19, which raises money by collecting ransoms. Jorge summoned more than 200 drug traffickers to the Ochoa family's restaurant, Las Margaritas.

They came from Medellin, from the Colombia capital of Bogota, from Cali, Leticia, Cartagena and Barranquilla. When they left the restaurant, Jorge Ochoa had formed his own terrorist group with Pablo Escobar, Jose Rodriguez-Gacha, and Gustavo de Jesus Gaviria.

They called themselves Muerte a Los Secuestradores — "death to kidnappers" — and announced their arrival with a flourish. On Dec. 2, they dropped leaflets from a small plane over the city of Cali during a soccer match. The leaflets promised, "the public and immediate execution of all those persons involved in kidnapping."

Dozens of people linked to M-19 were killed before Martha Ochoa was released without ransom. The cartel had flexed its muscles and liked the feel. Soon, they were killing competitors in Miami and New York, and assassinating hundreds of police officers, judges and journalists in Colombia.

The same four leaders head the Medellin Cartel today, and only some budding competition from a cartel forming in Cali seems to challenge them.

Pablo Escobar, 39, is believed to be the titular head of the cartel. He has been indicted four times in the United States for drug trafficking but has escaped arrest. More than 1,000 Colombian soldiers hunted him down last April in Medellin and got so close that Escobar had to flee in his pajamas.

Escobar's specialty is security. His force includes more than 100 young assassins trained to make machine-gun hits from motorcycles. He is believed to have ordered the assassinations of Colombian justice minister, Rodrigo Lara Bonilla, in April 1984, and American DEA informant, Barry Seal, in February 1984 in Baton Rouge, La.

Jorge Ochoa, 39, and his family transport cocaine to Florida, California and New York. He has been indicted in the United States for drug trafficking and has been arrested twice. The first time was in Madrid, Spain, in 1984, when he was setting up a European distribution network. Spain ignored American requests and sent Ochoa home, where he was released on a mere $10,500 bond.

He was arrested again in Colombia last November for illegally importing bulls, but was released. The United States protested the release and Colombia's attorney general Carlos Hoyos went to Medellin last January to investigate. Hoyos was promptly murdered. Someone ran his Mercedes Benz off the road and sprayed it with machine gun fire.

Jose Rodriguez-Gacha, 41, runs his cocaine business out of Bogota and smuggles the drugs through Mexico to Los Angeles. He is also building a large cache of weapons and explosives. He once owned "The Millionaires," a Bogota soccer team. No cream puff, he was accused by the Colombian government of assassinating Jaime Pardo Leal, Colombia's most prominent leftist politician, last year.

Gustavo de Jesus Gaviria, a cousin of Pablo Escobar, has a drug distribution network extending to Florida, Connecticut and Europe. He has been indicted on U.S. drug trafficking charges and uses his drug profits to buy U.S. real estate.

MUM'S THE WORD — During the presidential campaign White House officials have stopped talking about the administration's nemesis in Panama, Manuel Noriega. The silence doesn't mean the effort to oust Noriega has stopped. Behind the scenes, the administration has given top priority to getting rid of Noriega, preferably before the election. Noriega is hanging on with the help of Fidel Castro and the Medellin Cartel. Intelligence reports claim that Panama's economy is in ruin. Inventories are low and people are hoarding goods. Some businesses are closing. Foreign investors are pulling out and construction is at a standstill.

MINI-EDITORIAL — When Iran and Iraq finally agreed to consider calling it quits, guess who ran to the phone to play the role of peace-maker. Moammar Gadhafi couldn't resist giving Iraq a jingle to make sure no one was taking advantage of his friend, the Ayatollah Khomeini. We're reminded of a pit bull trying to smooth things over between a Doberman and a Rottweiler. As long as there is a bone somewhere, we have to worry about the motives of all three.

Bush speech helped; Quayle choice didn't

WASHINGTON — In picking Sen. Dan Quayle as his vice-presidential partner, George Bush didn't remove the doubts about his leadership; he multiplied them. His judgment is now an issue more than ever — not whether this bird from Indiana can fly or whether he dodged the Vietnam draft but whether Bush would pick the best available people to help govern the country.

James Reston

This haunted an otherwise successful convention. The vice president made the best speech of his long and distinguished career. It was shrewdly political. It reconciled the irreconcilables. With its kind words for the jobless, the homeless and the environment, it comforted the independents. It was at times eloquently philosophical and even funny. And it was carefully balanced with a right-wing agenda masquerading in the binding of a hymn book.

Also, it was flawlessly delivered. Never before had he looked or sounded so presidential, but when it came to making his first major decision, he didn't act presidential. He had five months to make up his mind but dithered around until the last minute and then chose the least experienced candidate in the field.

That wasn't what he promised. He had said his first test of a vice-presidential nominee would be the one best qualified to be president, but he passed over Bob Dole, Howard Baker, Jack Kemp and others, who in the opinion of many observers in his own party met that test better than Danny Boy.

Even if he had been looking for somebody who could bash the Democrats, Dole has forgotten more political tricks than Quayle is likely to learn between now and November. But Bush wouldn't have been comfortable with Dole or the other heavy hitters, and was apparently looking for somebody who would be as deferential to him as he was to Reagan, and somebody who was young enough and handsome enough to baby the baby-boomers.

The irony of this, of course, is not only that the vice president is now more uncomfortable than ever but that his public-relations adventure was so unnecessary.

Despite the guesses of the pollsters, the outlook for Bush was bright. The waves on the surface may be going for the time being with the Democrats, but the deeper tides are running with the Republicans.

To begin, they have two things the Democrats lack: the power of the White House and the popularity of President Reagan.

Bush made a lot in his acceptance speech, almost too much, of what he personally was going to do. "I won't let them take it away." But when Reagan flies around country urging the voters to sustain his successes, he can whistle this tune better than anybody else.

Also, the Republicans have the peace and prosperity issues: inflation, unemployment, interest rates and control of nuclear weapons are all on their side. The only things they have to fear are the deficits, and the American people don't seem to be worrying much about that. Besides, the Republicans can always blame the deficits and all other nuisances on the Democrats (or the press), who are always complaining about something.

Other trends or tendencies favor the GOP. They have broken the Democrats' hold on the South. They have picked up votes with the movement of the workers from the cities to the suburbs. They are strong with the business community, the good-luck farmers, the middle-aged and, as mass education has grown, with the middle range of college graduates.

The Democrats are still, by and large, the party of the poor, the city, the bad-luck farmers, the immigrants, the blacks and the least educated.

These generalizations are slippery, but are still fairly good guides to voting habits, and the edge is probably with Bush if he plays to his party's strengths and not to his weaknesses.

There are serious issues to be debated in this campaign on both foreign and domestic policy, and the sooner Bush and Dukakis get together and debate them instead of damning each other on the side, the better. But a study of the two acceptance speeches indicates that the differences are not as great as they pretend, and the chances are that the margin in November will be close.

If so, the winner may very well be chosen not on the political issues but on issues of character and judgment.

This is why Bush's first major decision was so important. For in picking Quayle, he was not only unfair to the young and inexperienced senator from Indiana, pitching him into the pit with only a few hours' notice, but unfair to the country, which expected him, especially in a world of terrorists, to select the best qualified and not the most "comfortable." He didn't check Quayle's military record or ignored it, but still insists that "ideology" is a more important issue than "competence."

LEWIS GRIZZARD

Right to 'tire-tool defense' common sense

Bobby Humphrey of the University of Alabama is one of the top collegiate football running backs in the country.

More importantly than that — in my mind, at least — is the fact he's the first person I've heard about in years who's been tire-tooled.

Grizzard

Bobby Humphrey was in some sort of late-night bistro in Tuscaloosa and fell at odds with another gentleman, who settled the argument by taking a tire tool and breaking Mr. Humphrey's jaw with it.

I have no idea what the disagreement was about, but I do know that one of the quickest ways to settle an argument is to break the other guy's jaw with a tire tool. Not another peep will be heard from him.

Before going any further, however, it occurs to me there may be those out there who do not know exactly what a tire tool is and that it has a rich history as a weapon.

A tire tool is that thing in your trunk you use when you have to change tires on your car. It's long and made out of steel and you pull your hubcaps off with it.

Not long after the horseless carriage came upon the scene, somebody invented the tire tool, and it became an instant hit as something with which one could do enormous damage to others.

The first recorded tire tool incident was in Cairo, Ill., in 1917. Lon Forcastle found his best friend, Arnold Soberdash, was fooling around with his wife, Glenda.

Lon located Arnold drinking beer in a local tavern and said to him, "Arnold, you scum-sucking pig, you've been fooling around with my wife, Glenda."

Before Arnold could speak, Lon let loose on him with a tire tool, and they said it was months before Arnold could sit up and take solid food.

My late father told me of a rather large young woman in his boyhood days who wore overalls and carried a tire tool strapped to one leg.

"One night at the dance," my father said, "this ol' girl asked a boy to dance with her and he made fun of her abundant personage.

"She bent over and reached up her pants leg and pulled out that tire tool and beat the young man unmercifully, and ended the dance."

I'm not certain what happened to fighting with tire tools over the past several years.

I guess all that kung fu and karate became popular and it often is a lot easier just to pull out the pistol you bought at the pawnshop and shoot somebody rather than have to go all the way back out to the parking lot and get your tire tool.

Maybe, however, the fact a popular football hero like Bobby Humphrey fell victim to a tire-tooling, it will make a comeback.

It's less expensive than shooting somebody. You've got to buy the gun and then the ammunition. Tire tools come free with cars.

Plus, it's the right of every American to bear a tire tool. That's not in the Constitution, I don't think, but it's probably in all Ford truck drivers' manuals.

Army destroys Palestinians' homes

JELAZOUN, Occupied West Bank (AP) — The army today demolished three homes belonging to Palestinians who allegedly killed an Arab collaborator and Israel sharply rejected U.S. criticism of its deportation policy.

Palestinians in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip began a two-day general strike to protest the deaths of four Arabs in Israeli prisons.

John Whitehead, the U.S. deputy secretary of state, urged Israel to reconsider its policy of deporting Palestinian activists and said continued expulsions would damage relations between the two countries.

The Israeli Foreign Ministry today responded: "Israel does not accept the American interpretation of international law regarding deportations...The legality of deportations was checked recently by Israel's Supreme Court, which ruled that deportations are legal, according to both Israeli and international law."

Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir also explained Israel's policy on deportations in a 90-minute meeting today with U.S. Ambassador Thomas Pickering, said Shamir's spokesman Avi Pazner.

Pickering refused to answer reporters' questions about the meeting, and Pazner refused to elaborate.

WORLD

Israel has deported 33 Palestinians since the Palestinian uprising began Dec. 8. Last week, 25 more were ordered expelled.

Whitehead's statement marked the first time the U.S. has warned that Israel's policies in the territories could threaten relations.

The Haaretz and Jerusalem Post dailies said Whitehead spoke to Israeli Charge d'Affaires Oded Eran in a meeting in Washington Tuesday. An Israeli source in Washington confirmed the meeting.

"Whitehead's statement was sharp. I don't see it as an ultimatum, but they definitely want us to stop the deportations," former Foreign Ministry director David Kimche told army radio.

Israel has said it uses the measure "only as a last resort" and calls it an acceptable means of deterring violence.

The latest strike was called in a leaflet issued Tuesday by pro-PLO underground leaders of the uprising, who also urged solidarity with 5,000 Arab prisoners and detainees in Israeli jails.

In Jelazoun, a refugee camp of 5,000 north of Jerusalem, soldiers ordered a curfew after destroying homes belonging to three alleged members of grassroots committees that Israel outlawed last week.

The three allegedly beat an Arab youth to death while interrogating him about suspected collaboration with Israel.

An AP reporter saw two army jeeps blocking the entrance of the camp. The streets were virtually empty.

The pre-dawn demolition came several hours before 14 U.S. Congressional aides were scheduled to visit the camp on a tour organized by the Arab-American Anti-Discrimination Committee.

In the West Bank town of Jenin, soldiers rounded up six Palestinians suspected of belonging to the Palestine Liberation Organization's mainstream Fatah faction, the army said.

The suspects were accused of hurling three firebombs at Israeli and Arab targets and throwing an explosive at an Israeli bus, the army said. A bomb with a chemical charge was found in their possession, it said.

The general strike paralyzed transportation and commerce in at least six major cities in the occupied West Bank and the Gaza Strip.

In Hebron, Bethlehem and Gaza City, some Palestinians violated the strike, the third in four days. Some shops were open and taxis transported some workers to Israel.

Masked Arab youths pelted rocks at some of the cars along a five-mile strip connecting Bethlehem to Jerusalem.

The latest strike was called to honor "martyrs behind bars," including two Palestinians shot to death in a prison riot last week and two who the army and police said committed suicide within the last month.

Relatives said one of those said to have committed suicide, Nadil Mustafa Beduah of east Jerusalem, had his teeth knocked out and several ribs fractured before his death.

Crown prince of Denmark hurt in wreck

LUZECH, France (AP) — Crown Prince Frederik of Denmark was slightly injured in an automobile accident near the chateau of his father, the Count of Monpezat, a family spokeswoman said today.

Prince Frederik, 20, was treated for slight injuries to his head and shoulder and was released from the hospital, said Dina Luttichau, the family's private secretary. His brother Joachim, 19, who was driving, was not injured, she said.

Their French-made Peugeot 205 swerved to avoid another car and overturned twice on Tuesday night on the road from the town of Luzech to nearby Cahors in mountainous south-central France.

Also in the car were two friends, Peter Heering and Anders Mostke Leth, who was treated for rib injuries.

Experts confirm Iraq dropped mustard gas

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — A U.N. team of chemical weapons experts has backed Iran's claim that Iraq dropped mustard gas on an Iranian city this month in a raid that came after both sides had accepted a U.N. cease-fire resolution.

In a note attached to the report Tuesday, Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar said the bomb attack violated provisions in the 1925 Geneva Convention on the use of poison gases.

There were no reported deaths in the Aug. 2 attack on the city of Oshnaviyah, which is a few miles from the northeast corner of Iraq, though Iran said 2,680 people were injured. Baghdad denied responsibility for the raid.

The chemical weapons experts said they found medical and chemical evidence of mustard gas, including shell fragments like those used in previous gas attacks, when they visited the site Aug. 12-14.

The attack at 2:45 a.m. on the civilian residents of Oshnaviyah took place "in an area adjacent to an urban center lacking any protection against that kind of attack," the team said in its report to the Security Council.

At the time of the attack, both Iran and Iraq had accepted Security Council Resolution 598, which calls for a cease-fire in their nearly 8-year-old war, though negotiations on a truce starting date were still in progress.

Patients injured in the attack and Iranian authorities told the team that a propeller-powered plane dropped eight bombs as most residents slept. Four bombs landed in a neighboring field and four fell in nearby mountains.

Contras to be restricted to border area

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras (AP) — The government will restrict to a border area Contra rebels who have in the past four months entered the country in a mass exodus from Nicaragua, the foreign minister said.

The government is keeping the rebels near the Nicaraguan border to prevent instability in Honduras, Foreign Minister Carlos Lopez Contreras said Tuesday.

Contra officials have said more than 14,000 rebels and civilian supporters of their campaign against Nicaragua's leftist Sandinista leaders entered Honduras in the past four months, seeking refuge and humanitarian aid distributed by the United States.

Lopez Contreras said Honduras was allowing the U.S. aid to reach the Contras as part of the peace plan signed last year by five Central American presidents.

He said the Contras cross the frontier frequently because, under the plan, they were to be assigned to a zone in Nicaragua that borders Honduras. But he acknowledged that some Contras were "entering Honduras as refugees, then later returning to their country to fight."

Since 1981, the U.S.-supported rebels have maintained base camps in Honduras in their fight to overthrow the Sandinistas. A provisional ceasefire has been in effect in Nicaragua since March 21.

Lopez Contreras noted that anti-communist rebels from Nicaragua and leftist guerrillas from El Salvador have used frontier territory for their war bases, damaging Honduras' social stability.

He said the superpowers had created "peculiar" problems for Honduras, with the United States supporting the Contras and the Soviet bloc backing Nicaragua's Sandinista government and the Salvadoran rebels.

There have been several anti-American demonstrations this year in Honduras, which is considered one of Washington's strongest allies in the region.

City likely to tap water field for 50 years

By CHRIS VAN WAGENEN
Staff Writer

A city consultant has concluded that Midland has a 50 to 75 year supply of water at its Paul Davis field site located between Martin and Andrews counties.

The 3-inch-thick document — prepared by Ed Reed & Associates — was presented to council Tuesday.

"I would say if we handle it (the field) properly, it should last at least that long," said Reed about Midland's chief water source.

The latest longevity estimates are based on the assumption that the city will use water from the Stacy Reservoir Dam as its primary source in 1990-91.

The $63 million Stacy construction project — which is now under way 25 miles southeast of Ballinger — will serve San Angelo, Abilene and members of the Colorado River Municipal Water District as well.

Currently, Midlanders consume between 26 million to 30 million gallons of water per day. By 1991, that demand is expected to increase to 40 million gallons, according to city officials.

For the time being, Deputy City Manager Mike McGregor said the city is taking advantage of 14 new wells drilled over the past 18 months on the 33,000-acre site.

The new wells, according to the report, produce at a rate of 9,535 gallons per minute.

In its study, Reed said the company found Midland was using field water at a rate that is expected to fall below 20 million gallons per day in five to seven years.

McGregor said any plans to drill additional wells are largely dependent on Stacy's construction schedule.

"If we see that Stacy is a year or two behind we'll probably be looking at more drilling up there," he said.

Midland — which needs a minimum of 26 million gallons of water per day — tapped Paul Davis field in the late 1950s.

Reed estimated the field is now 50 percent developed. Depletion estimates were set at 30 to 40 percent.

Despite some heavy rainfall in recent years, Reed told council members at a work session that the field was recharging at a rate of about a half-inch a year.

In its reports, the company described water quality as "good to fair," with a high fluoride concentration — a common characteristic found in the Tertiary Ogallala formation.

Currently, Midland receives a mixture of well/lake water from Paul Davis and E.V. Spence Reservoir near Robert Lee.

Stacy Dam, scheduled for completion in 1990, will hold about 455,000-acre feet of water and yield about 90,000-acre feet a year, according to the CRMWD estimates. Midland holds a 16 percent interest in the project.

Crime Stoppers seeking higher 'quality' of calls

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

Plenty of Midlanders are calling Sgt. Keith Ward, but what they are not saying is discouraging.

"We are getting a lot of calls, but they are of poor investigative value," Midland Crime Stoppers coordinator Ward said. "It is a quality, not quantity problem."

The difficulty began in June, when the quality of calls to the familiar telephone number, 694-TIPS, began to drop off. Since the summer months are a traditional slow time for tips, Ward said he was not worried.

"But I don't see why it should be that way," he said. "The crime rate generally rises in the summer, so you'd think the calls would, too. It would be beneficial to us and to the community that when there's more crime, we should get more calls."

Statistically, counting the number of calls received and rewards paid, the program appears healthy, Ward said.

"The calls we are getting are like this: we will get a call that Joe on Illinois Street is dealing dope. But there is no last name, no address, no specifics, and we can't do anything with that type of call," he said.

David Cobos, coordinator of Crime Stoppers of Texas and former head of Midland Crime Stoppers, said the local effort may need rejuvenation.

"If you drive to work the same way every day, and see the same billboard, pretty soon you stop looking at it," Cobos said from his Austin office. "Maybe they need to change some things."

The packaging of Crime Stoppers, from the weekly appearance in local newspapers and television stations of the "Crime of the Week" to community involvement, are crucial to the continued popularity of the program, Cobos noted.

Calls continue to stream in about fugitives wanted by area law enforcement agencies, and the staple calls about narcotics are always there, Ward said.

"But we don't get any calls on burglaries, and burglary is one of my pet peeves," he said. "It is important that we do something about narcotics, but I'm sure the community, since it is happening to them, is more interested in us doing something about the burglaries. And we're not."

One Midland police detective who almost daily sees Crime Stoppers information says he is still sold on the program.

"Probably 30 percent of it is good, reliable information," said Sgt. B.G. Johnson of the crimes against persons section. "It may be something we have already checked, but it is good information."

There is little Crime Stoppers can do to attract better information, according to Johnson.

"It is kind of consistent," the detective said of the quality of tips.

> "The calls we are getting are like this: we will get a call that Joe on Illinois Street is dealing dope. But there is no last name, no address, no specifics, and we can't do anything with that type of call."
> — Sgt. Keith Ward

"There are a lot of people who wouldn't report stuff even if they knew it. Then there is a group that is real conscientious, that is trying to help us, but they may not have information that we can use," he continued.

"The parties calling in the most are the people who are out in the street, who know these (wanted) people for one reason or another, and are making money off Crime Stoppers. Some of these people depend on Crime Stoppers to make ends meet."

"I just don't know if they could do anything to improve it," Johnson said.

But Ward, a sheriff's investigator who runs the office with police Sgt. Milton O'Bryant, said part of their job is to make Crime Stoppers appealing to supporters and potential informants.

"I would like to talk before more civic organizations," Ward said. "We do a few things out in the community, but only to about 10 to 15 people at a time."

Midland County Sheriff Gary Painter said he hasn't noticed a drop-off in the quality of information.

"But we get a lot of information that is repeat," he said. "You always would want to see something fresh and new. But we've got some dedicated people that continue to call, and you have to continue to work the ioformation you get."

While "it may take some innovative and creative ability" to generate some enthusiasm for the program, "most people already know they can get a cash reward if they call with good information," the sheriff said.

The reward structure, which is set and approved by a board, likely will not change, Ward and Cobos agreed.

"I don't think that increasing the rewards will do anything," Ward said. "We pay pretty big rewards as it is."

"That would cause problems in the long run," Cobos said of a suggestion to boost the awards. "The guidelines have to stay the same."

If the calls don't improve by mid-September, "I am going to start getting worried," Ward said. "I'd like to get word out to the people that we are still here and still operating, but that we can do better."

Odessa council OKs budget without tax hike

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — The City Council Tuesday approved a 1988-89 budget slightly more than seven percent higher than the current fiscal year without resorting to a tax rate increase.

Following approval of the nearly $44 million budget, Mayor Don Carter predicted the city of Odessa would be the only taxing entity in Ector County that will not have to raise its tax rate to meet expenditures in the coming fiscal year.

The 1988-89 budget includes slightly more than $27.1 million for the general fund, nearly $15.8 million for the water-sewer fund and $758,319 for debt service.

In recommending that the 1988-89 tax rate remain at last year's 48.65 cents per $100 of appraised value, City Manager Bill Brown noted that the same tax rate as last year was proposed, despite a 5.2 percent decrease in the city's taxable value base, which is now nearly $1.23 billion.

Actually, based on information presented to council members by Brown, city administrators could have recommended a tax rate increase of 2.61 cents. The rate approved by council members Tuesday provides for continuation of both the 20 percent general residential homestead exemption and the $13,300 senior citizen exemption.

The budget also provided for payment of liability claims of $395,000 growing out of two separate accidents involving Odessa Police Department motorcycles.

Without discussion Tuesday, councilmen approved the payment of $250,000 to Glenn E. Guy and his wife, Harriettte, of El Paso, for claims sought in connection with an accident that occurred during a Shriner parade last May.

The council also approved payment of a $145,000 claim to Clarice Welsh in connection with an accident involving a police motorcycle in August 1987, which fatally injured Scott Smith, who died in February of this year.

Council members voted to increase the budgets of the Odessa Chamber of Commerce Economic Development Department, Odessa Teen Court and Permian Basin Mental Health/Mental Retardation.

The chamber's economic development budget will jump from about $246,000 to $265,000. The budget for Teen Court will increase from $30,500 to $35,500 in the coming fiscal year. The MHMR budget will rise $6,540, to $58,866.

The budget approved for the Odessa chamber's convention and visitor's bureau in the coming year will be $480,201, $321 less than the budget for the current fiscal year.

Odessa's acting fire chief to succeed retiring one

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — City Manager Bill Brown Tuesday announced acting Fire Chief James R. Wiggs would succeed longtime Fire Chief Bill Childers, who retired May 25.

Wiggs, 49, who joined the Odessa Fire Department in 1959 and has been assistant chief under Childers since 1976, said he realized the former chief would be a hard act to follow, but "I'll do my best to be one of the best chiefs Odessa has had." He added that the former chief had "taught me much over the years."

Brown's announcement that he had chosen Wiggs came during Tuesday's regular council session.

Wiggs was one of two finalists that emerged from the eight men who applied for the job.

The other finalist was C.A. Martin, currently chief of the Flowermound Fire Department in the Fort Worth/Dallas area and a friend of Wiggs who was with the Odessa Fire Department from 1960 to 1968.

Brown said Wiggs had "earned" the right to succeed Childers, "not by my hand," said the city manager, "but by his own efforts and work."

As chief of the department, Wiggs will be paid $49,212 per year.

He will be responsible for overseeing the department's $6 million budget and 182 firefighters and administrative personnel.

Describing Wiggs as a "team member," Brown noted a city manager "cannot make improvements without the assistance of your team."

Midlanders' generosity pays off for Food Bank

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

A turnout of 2,500 Midlanders bearing food for the hungry netted 4,726 pounds of mostly canned goods and $1,439.50 in cash for the Permian Basin Food Bank in the recent Summertime Street Fair held at Midland Community Theatre's Courtyard.

"It was fantastic," said Dolly Neff, the Food Bank's executive director.

"I was ecstatic. I couldn't believe the fantastic turnout and the cooperation among the businesses providing the food," Ms. Neff said. "And the agencies that we serve came out and helped with the cleanup. It was so rewarding."

The Summertime Street Fair was a swap-off event in which tickets for admission were canned food goods and cash. And the "pay-off" for the fair-goers was three-fold: samplings of foods prepared by Midland merchants and restaurateurs, entertainment by musical groups and the pleasure of donating food to feed West Texas' poor and hungry people.

"We are making plans to do the same thing bigger and better next year," said Ms. Neff. "Linda (Bond) pulled it off beautifully."

Ms. Bond, the theater's director of development and marketing, coordinated the Summertime Street Fair to benefit the Food Bank, which distributes food to agencies that serve the poor and hungry in a 14-county area of West Texas.

"Everybody always needs canned foods," Ms. Neff said.

Since the Food Bank open in July 1985, it has distributed more than 2.4 million pounds of food to 100 nonprofit charitable agencies, which range from soup kitchens to senior-citizens centers from Big Spring to Alpine.

In the Food Bank's past fiscal year, it distributed 1.25 million pounds of food — fresh, canned, dried, and frozen — to feed the aged, the ill, the young and the needy in West Texas.

The Food Bank, headquartered in Odessa, collects, inspects, stores and delivers surplus, salvage and other donated foods — vegetables, fruit and meat.

Foods collected in the Summertime Street Fair included canned tuna fish, canned fruit, rice, and "all kinds of canned vegetable and all kinds of canned meat," which Ms. Neff said, "was so pleasant, for canned meat is a premium product."

Don Bachmann, the Midland Community Theatre's executive director, said that he was "astonished" by the turnout of Midlanders who supported the food-drive.

"Since this was the first time we'd tried this, we expected maybe 500 people," he said. "It was extremely gratifying to see such a response to benefit the Food Bank."

The Summertime Street Fair was sponsored by the Reporter-Telegram, KTPX-TV, KUFO-FM radio and the theater.

Midland merchants who prepared food for the fair included El Chico, Fuddruckers, Gili's, Taco Villa, Texas Refreshments, Pizza Hut, Dr Pepper, Holiday Inn Country Villa Convention Center, Schlotzsky's Sandwich Shop, Catfish USA, Burger King, Parrot's Eatery, Kick's Bakery, Baskin-Robbins of Midland, Basin Candy and Venezia.

Other donations were made by Abra-Kadabra, Arby's, Corley Paper Co., Happy Days Daylight Donuts, the Museum of the Southwest, the Midland Angels and Jack Rice Insurance Agency.

George Moreno, restaurant chairman for the fair, said the turnout to the fair surprised the merchants.

"All of the restaurateurs were caught short," he said. "We spent much of the day running back for refills.

"Lynnette White of Baskin-Robbins (ice cream) alone was prepared for the enormous crowd," Moreno said. "She'd worked at Gourmet Midland and had predicted there would be a big crush."

El Chico's booth went through five 32-gallon barrels of tortilla chips and more than five gallons of hot sauce, Moreno said.

Space industry fueled by education, panel says

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas should promote the space industry by such action as encouraging an education-industry relationship, which would ensure an adequate number of graduates suited for space careers, according to recommendations agreed on by a special legislative committee.

The Space Science Industry Commission did not take a formal vote on the entire package of recommendations Tuesday. Members discussed the proposals, changed wording and are to sign the final report later.

Commission member Hans Mark, chancellor of the University of Texas System and former NASA deputy administrator, drew a comparison between the potential of space-related industry and of the semiconductor research consortium based in Austin.

"Sematech is a payroll for Austin and for Texas of $250 million a year. If that were all, it wouldn't be important," Mark said. "What's important is that that will attract all kind of industry to come that wouldn't have come otherwise. That's the payoff."

Space is the "same game, just a different field, that's all," Mark said.

Sen. J.E. "Buster" Brown, committee chairman, said the space industry could become as important to the Texas economy as the energy industry was at its peak.

"No question — at some point, we will see it as equal to the oil and gas industry in this state," said Brown, R-Lake Jackson. The commission was created by a Senate resolution.

Members approved a recommendation asking the governor to appoint a permanent Texas Space Commission to encourage economic development by fostering space-related industries and encouraging commercialization, Brown said. Action was necessary on that item because of a Sept. 1 deadline in the legislation authorizing the permanent panel.

The new commission would be staffed through the Texas Department of Commerce until sufficient funding is provided for a separate staff.

Some other recommendations, which are to be relayed to the Legislature by Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby, call for:

— State efforts to help universities obtain research funds, and to encourage universities to join in grant applications and share in projects.

— Development of a catalog of ongoing space research projects at public and private universities.

— Identification and support for federal projects that could have a positive economic impact on the state's space research programs.

DEATHS

Byron Post

KERRVILLE — Funeral services for former Midland resident Byron Post, 85, of Kerrville, will be held at 10 a.m. Thursday at the Kerrville Funeral Home Chapel. Burial will be in the Glen Rest Cemetery under the auspices of the Kerrville Masonic Lodge.

He died Monday.

Post was born July 12, 1903, in Canton. He was the owner and operator of an aviation company, and was the brother of pioneer aviator Wylie Post.

He is survived by his wife, Mary Post of Kerrville; a daughter, Carol Post Rand of Oakland, Calif.; a son, Richard Byron Post of Irving; a brother, Gordon Post of Oklahoma City; and two grandchildren.

Albert Price

Albert Price, 87, of Midland, died Tuesday at his home following a brief illness.

Services are pending with the Thomas Funeral Home.

Astronaut's widow doesn't back NASA links with Thiokol

HOUSTON (AP) — The widow of Challenger astronaut Michael Smith says she does not believe NASA should still rely on Morton Thiokol Inc. for its solid rocket boosters.

"I don't believe Morton Thiokol should have been allowed to make the boosters after the Challenger tragedy," Jane Smith said Tuesday.

Morton Thiokol built the redesigned booster rocket that will be used on Discovery, the first post-Challenger flight that is expected to launch in late September. The Challenger tragedy was blamed on a faulty booster rocket.

"When the captain runs a ship aground, they're punished and held accountable, and they go on to other pastures. And they're punished. And in this case, Morton Thiokol was never punished," she said.

Mrs. Smith and attorneys for Morton Thiokol agreed Monday to an undisclosed financial settlement of the $1.5 billion suit she filed in the wake of the Jan. 28, 1986 Challenger explosion.

Her settlement was the last of the Morton Thiokol lawsuits to be settled.

Ex-sheriff reportedly used beepers to alert dealers

SHERMAN (AP) — A now-suspended sheriff used signals sent by electronic beepers to warn a co-conspirator of impending drug raids, the unindicted co-conspirator says.

Former drug informant Donnie Flowers gave the testimony Tuesday in the drug trafficking trial of suspended Orange County Sheriff James Wade.

The drug scheme was financed and equipped by Wade, Flowers told a federal court jury earlier in the trial.

A color code on voice-operated beepers was first used to warn Flowers in the event Orange County narcotics officers intended to raid the drug operation, he said in testimony that began the second week of Wade's drug trial.

Flowers said Wade later used the numbers 666 on digital beepers as the warning about planned raids.

Flowers, who claimed to be Wade's partner in the scheme, said Wade furnished money, chemicals and laboratory equipment used in the illegal drug operation.

Flowers was arrested in Hardin County in October 1987. Authorities found in his possession a rifle, telephone beeper and a bank deposit slip, all later traced to Wade by the FBI in an inquiry begun in January.

Methamphetamine laboratory equipment used in making the illegal drug, that had been confiscated by authorities in a December 1985 drug raid, was also seized, Flowers said.

Nyle Henry Baker and Addie Guillory were arrested in the Orange County raid.

Flowers testified Wade gave the laboratory equipment to him along with Guillory, Bobby Rogers and Baker to make methamphetamine, or "speed."

Teen pregnancy linked to abuse

Copley News Service

Many cases of unplanned teen pregnancy may be linked to childhood sexual abuse, says a study released by the Ounce of Prevention Fund and the Illinois Department of Children and Family Services.

More than 60 percent of the Illinois teen mothers surveyed said they had been sexually abused as children or forced into sex as a teen. One-third were younger than 12 when the first abuse occurred.

"Some girls don't know how to say no to their boyfriends because they never learned to say no to other significant men in their lives," said Judith S. Musick, executive director of the Ounce of Prevention Fund. An abusive childhood experience affects the capacity to make responsible choices, including whether to have sex and whether to have protected sex, she added.

As a result of the study, the Ounce of Prevention Fund has implemented a child sexual abuse prevention program called "Heart to Heart." Trained instructors teach teen mothers to come to terms with their own experiences.

North Carolina woman sues Texas faith healers

GREENVILLE, S.C. (AP) — An elderly North Carolina woman is suing two Texas faith healers, saying that while they performed a "laying on the hands," they provided no one to catch her when she fell.

Evelyn E. Kuykendall, 66, of Marshville, N.C., fractured her neck and spine when she hit the floor, according to the lawsuit filed Monday in U.S. District Court in Greenville against Charles and Frances Hunter of Kingwood, Texas. The Hunters, who operate Hunter Ministries, have 20 days to respond to the suit.

Mrs. Kuykendall, who according to the lawsuit suffered from a curvature of the spine before the fall, is asking that a jury decide an appropriate reward.

The suit said Mrs. Kuykendall incurred medical expenses of $56,582.51, which included two operations on her spine while she was in Greenville Memorial Hospital from April 8 to June 7.

Mrs. Kuykendall said she now suffers from a significant deformity and disability as a result of a fractured neck and spine during an April session at the Hyatt Hotel in Greenville.

She said during the seminar the Hunters assured those attending that "catchers" would be provided during their "slain in the spirit" healing sessions to protect them from injury when they performed "the laying on the hands."

Mrs. Kuykendall said in her suit that when she was "slain in the spirit" they failed to provide a "catcher" and allowed her to fall on a floor, fracturing her spine and neck.

A spokesman for Hunter Ministries declined to comment on the lawsuit.

According to the suit, Mrs. Kuykendall had suffered for several years from a severe curvature of the spine and attended the faith healing seminar on April 8 in search of help.

Mrs. Kuykendall also alleges that after she fell the Hunters displayed "callous indifference" by instructing friends of hers not to render aid and leaving her without any medical attention.

Prior to April 8, Mrs. Kuykendall said she frequently studied books and videos authored by the Hunters in which they discussed faith healing procedures.

Mrs. Kuykendall said she met the Hunters at the faith healing seminar, which was part of an April 6-8 revival concluding with a "Healing Explosion" at Greenville Memorial Auditorium.

Exercise training class offers conditioning for flabby spirits

From Staff Reports

Exercise with a spiritual lift. AerobiRhythm's new "Keep on Keepin' On" workout with contemporary Christian music and workshop will be featured Friday and Saturday at First Baptist Church.

The Friday afternoon session, which begins at 3 p.m., will be basic training for beginning instructors on how to teach, organize, administer, and promote fitness as a ministry in churches.

Saturday, beginning at 8:30 a.m., is a day emphasizing "Fitness" in all areas of a person's life — exercise, nutrition, stress management, and spiritual development.

The workout includes flexibility, aerobic, and calisthenic routines that will allow participants to "Get Fit With Fun."

The workshop is geared to train instructors to use fitness as a tool for ministry in Christian organizations etc. Continuing Education Credit for International Dance Exercise Association will be given to certified instructors who attend.

Dallas officers file suit against city hiring plan

DALLAS (AP) — A federal suit has been filed alleging that the Dallas police affirmative action hiring plan discriminated against three white officers passed over for promotion of a black officer.

The suit seeks $13.5 million and was filed late Monday by officers Marjorie Cunningham, Mark Ford and Brenda Nichols.

The officers are seeking to have the City Council-approved hiring plan declared illegal and to prevent the city from receiving any federal financial assistance.

The suit was triggered by the announcement Feb. 19 by former Police Chief Billy Prince that Ford, Cunningham and Nichols had been passed over for promotion to sergeant in order to promote black officer Leroy Griffin, even though the three white officers ranked higher on the civil service promotional list.

At the time that he made the move, Prince said it was to comply with a new City Council policy requiring that 25 percent of those promoted be black and 10 percent be Hispanic.

It was the first time a chief had deviated solely because of race from the traditional departmental practice of promoting the highest-scoring officers from a list that ranks officers according to scores on written examinations.

Nichols was eventually promoted to sergeant in March, but Cunningham and Ford still are patrol officers.

The city's Civil Service Board upheld the chief's action after the three officers filed complaints. They also filed complaints with the U.S. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, which gave them the right to sue because it would not be able to investigate and resolve the case within six months.

The suit alleges the failure to promote the three white officers because of their race is a violation of federal laws that prohibit racial discrimination in employment.

It also alleges the affirmative action plan sets quotas rather than goals, a practice that violates federal law.

The officers ask in the suit that that the city be prohibited from using any policy that bases promotions on race.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR VOLUNTEERS

Volunteers are like Ford, they have better ideas. Volunteers are like Coke, they're the real thing. Volunteers are like Pan Am, they make the going great. Volunteers are like Dial Soap, they care more, don't you wish everybody did? Volunteers are like VO-5 Hair Spray, they hold up in all kinds of weather. Volunteers are like Hallmark Cards, they care enough to give the best. Volunteers are like Standard Oil, you expect more and you get it. But most of all... Volunteers are like Frosted Flakes, they're GRRRREAAAT!

Volunteer opportunities for this week include:

- Committed and dependable individuals are needed to assist various human service agencies daily for a few hours a week. Great way to polish old skills and/or learn new ones.
- Telephone counselors needed to provide support and reassurance to school-aged children at home without adult supervision during after school hours by answering a Phone A Friend telephone line. 2 hours every other week. Training provided.
- Individuals to help a nonprofit organization with a mailout (stuffing/addressing envelopes) during the week of Sept. 12. A fun project for friends and/or family to do together.
- Septemberfest is still signing up interested individuals that can "man" game, T-shirt, and refreshment booths. Lots and lots of people are also needed to help with setting up and tearing down the event. Great opportunity to volunteer and have loads of fun with friends and/or family!

For more information on how you, family and/or group can volunteer please call The Volunteer Center at 697-8781.

Our hearts overflow with sincere appreciation for all who expressed thier love and sympathy in so many comforting ways during our recent sorrow. We are deeply grateful to all of you.

3 Hispanic agents reject discrimination claims in testimony

EL PASO (AP) — Three Hispanic FBI agents who did not join a class-action discrimination suit against the bureau say the agency is free of anti-Hispanic bias.

The FBI called the three men — including the highest-ranking Hispanic FBI agent — one after another to conclude Tuesday's testimony in U.S. District Court. The agents said they had not been discriminated against and did not believe a pattern of discrimination exists in the FBI.

But Julian de la Rosa, who last month became the agency's highest-ranking Hispanic when he was named agent in charge of St. Louis, acknowledged he once encouraged a fellow Hispanic agent to "follow his conscience" if he wanted to file a discrimination complaint through the bureau's equal employment opportunity office.

Other Hispanic agents testifying for the government Tuesday were Victor Gonzalez, the No. 2 man in the New York office, and Leroy M. Teitsworth, the second-in-command in Albuquerque.

The three are not among the 311 Hispanic agents joined in the class-action suit, which contends the FBI discriminates against Hispanics in hiring, promotion, assignment and discipline.

The plaintiffs seek unspecified damages and changes in FBI policies. About 400 of the FBI's 9,400 agents — or 4.3 percent — are Hispanic; 8 percent of the general U.S. population is Hispanic.

Under cross-examination, de la Rosa was asked about the testimony of Mike Rodriguez, an agent in San Juan, Puerto Rico, who said last week he considered filing a religious discrimination complaint against the bureau last year.

Rodriguez testified he consulted with de la Rosa about filing the complaint.

Asked Tuesday whether he had encouraged Rodriguez to file a complaint, de la Rosa testified, "I recall telling Mr. Rodriguez he should follow his conscience and do what he feels he has to do."

Rodriguez was one of about 40 agents who testified last week that Hispanic agents are transferred more often to undesirable locations, are handed assignments that are either less glamorous or more dangerous and receive less recognition for their successes.

During testimony earlier Tuesday, executive assistant FBI director John Otto said the bureau has not established a quota system to ensure Hispanics are included in a program to train agents for top management positions.

Otto, one of three No. 2 men under FBI director William Sessions, denied Hispanics are routinely weeded out of a fast-track promotion track.

Melvin Jeter, head of the FBI's equal employment opportunity office, said Hispanic agents have filed 25 discrimination complaints in the past, and all were determined to be unfounded.

De la Rosa, Gonzalez and Teitsworth all said they had never suffered discrimination and didn't believe there is systematic bias against Hispanic FBI agents. Under cross-examination, Teitsworth acknowledged that last October he notified his superiors by memorandum that he was opting out of the class-action suit. In December, he was promoted.

The suit was filed in January 1987 by Bernardo "Matt" Perez, who contends he was forced by superiors in Washington, Los Angeles and elsewhere to accept promotions he didn't deserve. Perez, now the No. 2 agent in El Paso, used to be in charged of the San Juan office and was second-in-command in Los Angeles before his transfer to El Paso.

Injured defendant to be shackled during trial

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A capital murder defendant injured after jumping from a third-story window in a failed escape attempt will remain handcuffed and shackled in a wheelchair during his trial, a judge ruled.

Michael Lee Lockhart's attorney had requested that the trial, which is in the jury selection phase, be postponed until the defendant could recuperate from a fractured pelvic bone. But State District Judge Larry Gist of Beaumont, after hearing from a physician who examined Lockhart, ruled Tuesday the defendant was healthy enough to continue in his trial.

Gist also ordered Lockhart remain handcuffed and his legs shackled while in the courtroom because of the escape attempt and because of an outburst during a hearing last month in Beaumont.

The 27-year-old Lockhart is charged with capital murder in the March 22 slaying of a Beaumont police officer Paul D. Hulsey Jr., who was investigating a report of a stolen car when he was shot.

Lockhart's trial was moved to San Antonio on a change of venue earlier this month and on Aug. 18, prior to the start of the day's jury selection, he jumped out of the window at the Bexar County Courthouse.

He leaped through blinds and glass and landed about 15 feet below on the courthouse's first-floor rooftop.

Tuesday, Lockhart appeared in court in a wheelchair and with handcuffs and leg irons. The second-story courtroom had no windows.

Dr. Jesus Valdez, assistant medical director of the Bexar County jail, testified that although Lockhart suffered a fracture, it did not rupture any organ and that the defendant would recuperate within a month if allowed to sit and rest.

"He appears to be very comfortable sitting in a wheelchair," Valdez said. "The defendant appears to be alert. He doesn't appear to be in any acute distress."

After Gist denied the request to postpone the trial, Lockhart's court-appointed attorney, Charles Carver of Beaumont, asked for a mistrial because of publicity surrounding Lockhart's escape attempt.

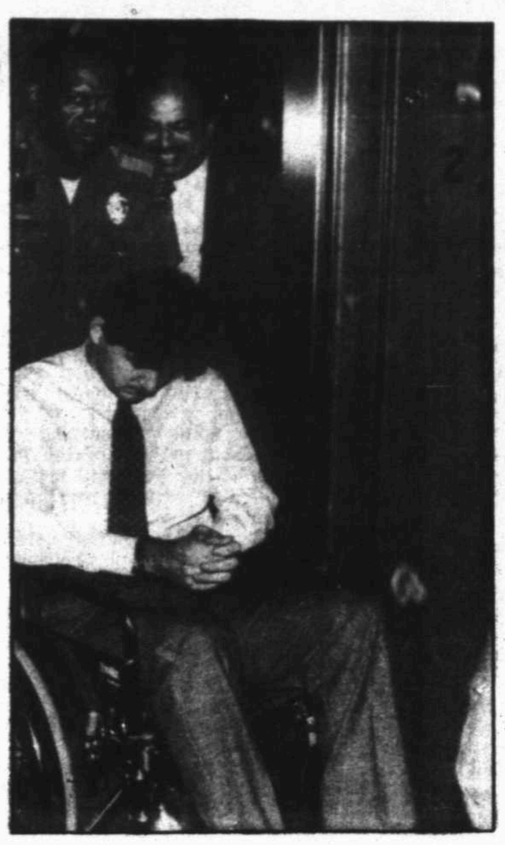

Jefferson County District Attorney Tom Maness objected to the request.

"We feel the defendant can't profit from his own wrongdoing," Maness said.

Jury selection is scheduled to continue today and testimony is expected to begin after Sept. 1.

Lockhart also is charged with capital murder in the death of 16-year-old Windy Gallagher, who was stabbed 21 times and whose body was found in the bedroom of her Griffith, Ind., home on Oct. 13, 1987.

He also is charged with capital murder in the death of 14-year-old Jennifer Colhouer, whose body was found in an upstairs bedroom of her Land O' Lakes, Fla., home, on Jan. 20.

Bexar County Sheriff's deputies transport capital murder defendant Michael Lee Lockhart to a courtroom for a pretrial hearing in San Antonio Tuesday. Lockhart, on trial for the killing of a Beaumont policeman, injured himself last week when he jumped from a third-story window.

Panel considers linking improved scores with funding

EDINBURG (AP) — A proposal to link improvement in test scores with funding for public schools would not punish districts with large numbers of limited-English students, members of a blue ribbon panel said.

"We are looking at ways to improve rather than simply reward those that are doing quite well," said Austin businessman Larry Jenkins, chairman of the 15-member Select Committee on Education.

Rio Grande Valley educators told the committee Tuesday districts in the area with many migrant farmworker families and Spanish-speaking children with limited English would suffer if the state bases funding decisions on achievement test scores.

Children of migrant farmworkers often spend only a short time in the school district during the year, said Dr. T. Carl McMillan, superintendent of the Harlingen Independent School District.

Those students, he said, could bring the district's average down if they are there during the period when the basic skills tests are given.

"Just judge those that we've got there and we've had a chance to teach a significant amount of time, and we feel we've got a teaching staff that will do a good job," McMillan said.

Jenkins said that, among other recommendations, the committee probably will recommend financial incentives that will reward districts for improvement, not their performance compared to others. It would not affect basic funding, he added.

The select committee appointed by Gov. Bill Clements last January is examining the state's public school funding and evaluating the operation of the entire educational system. It is holding hearings to help prepare a report for the Legislature.

State District Judge Harley Clark of Austin last year ruled Texas' public school finance system is unconstitutional because it does not ensure that each school district has the same ability to obtain money to educate students. The state and some school districts have appealed the decision, known as Edgewood v. Kirby, but the 3rd Court of Appeals has not issued an opinion.

Richard Cantu, a member of the board from state education District One, which stretches from Laredo to Brownsville, said the level of English proficiency in the area also brings scores down.

Eighty-five percent of students in the Rio Grande Valley have Spanish surnames and many speak Spanish first, Cantu said.

"When they take these tests, they don't necessarily think in English, and although they are proficient in (speaking) the language, they might not think in the language," Cantu said. "Very, very possibly they might not score well on these tests, and I don't think that a test should be a medium for funding for schools."

Committee member Dr. Winston Power Jr., superintendent of the Highland Park Independent School District in Dallas, said factors in gauging a school district's improvement would include test scores, the dropout rate and the effectiveness of other programs.

"I don't think it's fair for us as educators to ask the public for more money without being willing to show some results," Power said.

Employers discriminating against workers who look foreign, House subcommittee told

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The fear of employer sanctions contained in the new immigration law has caused employers to discriminate against foreign-looking job-seekers, members of a U.S. House subcommittee have been told.

Immigration attorneys and civil rights representatives told the U.S. House Subcommittee at a hearing at Trinity University Tuesday that fear and confusion surround the new immigration law.

Mike Lehr, Texas field coordinator for the Federation for American Immigration Reform, said Hispanics allegedly have fallen victim to job discrimination because of the fear of employer sanctions.

"One of the principal safeguards included in (the 1986 act) to prevent discrimination against foreign-looking employees is the requirement that there be universal verification of every employee," Lehr said. "In other words, employers must ask every single employee for work authorization documents, and cannot single out only those employees they suspect of being unauthorized to work."

The Immigration Reform and Control Act allows for the legalization of aliens who have lived in the United States since 1982.

Some testimony centered on the confusion surrounding employer sanctions for hiring illegal aliens.

Although the law provides for civil sanctions against employers, some employers say they are being threatened with criminal charges of harboring or transporting illegal aliens.

The law is "balanced legislation," U.S. Rep. Ron Mazzoli, D-Ky., chairman of the House Immigration Subcommittee, said. U.S. Rep. John Bryant, D-Dallas, joined Mazzoli in the hearing.

The hearing at Trinity was the second held by the subcommittee, which is attempting to find out what problems have surfaced since the law took effect.

Nancy Taylor Shivers, an immigration attorney, said she would like to see the government give spouses of qualified aliens immigration privileges above and beyond existing quotas in order to maintain the family structure.

The privilege would allow spouses to live in the United States while awaiting permanent visas.

"As long as we have to wait 10 or 12 years for a visa, we're always going to have a problem with illegal immigration," Taylor told the subcommittee.

The first subcommittee hearing was held in San Angelo and focused on the agricultural guest worker program.

Judge denies woman convicted of murder a new trial

AMARILLO (AP) — A Houston secretary convicted of capital murder for the killing of the wife of her former boss and lover has been denied a new trial.

State District Judge Michael McSpadden ruled Monday none of the nine grounds for a new trial put forth by attorneys of Jane Ada Callaway had merit.

Ms. Callaway, 36, was convicted and sentenced to life in prison by an Amarillo jury in June for hiring a gunman to kill Judy Woods Saragusa. The trial was moved from Houston on a change of venue.

Mrs. Saragusa was found shot to death Sept. 2 in the upstairs of her palatial Houston home. Her husband, Michael Saragusa, was the co-owner of a wholesale liquor business who said he and Ms. Callaway had a short-lived affair while she worked for him.

Attorneys Richard "Racehorse" Haynes and Dan Cogdell claimed their client didn't get a fair trial because — among other reasons — Hispanics were excluded from the jury, prosecutors didn't tell the defense about a plea bargain with one of the co-conspirators and statements Ms. Callaway made to police before her arrest were allowed to be heard by the jury.

Stanley Schneider, an appeals specialist brought in by Haynes and Cogdell, said that the lack of Hispanics on the jury was important even though the woman isn't Hispanic.

"Just because she's white doesn't mean she's not entitled to a cross-section of the community," he said.

Cogdell said he will appeal McSpadden's decision, citing 15 to 20 points of error he contends were made in the trial. However, he said he doesn't expect a ruling from the 7th State Court of Appeals for about a year.

Ms. Callaway, meanwhile, remains in the Potter County Correctional Center.

New police chief 'awarded' unusual citation by officer

DALLAS (AP) — Officer Charles Tull says he would have just as soon not have his new boss learn his name on the boss' first day at work.

But it didn't work out that way.

Tull, 51, issued a parking ticket to a city car being used by new Dallas Police Chief Mack Vines only a short time after Vines took the oath of office Tuesday.

"I certainly didn't want the new chief to learn my name by issuing him a traffic citation on his first day on the job," Tull said. "When I retire it would have been just fine for him to give me a plaque and say 'Charlie who?' "

The officer said he didn't know it was Vines' car when he wrote the ticket, but it wouldn't have mattered anyway.

"I'm sure the man is far and above doing anything but laugh about one of his lowly patrolmen writing him a parking ticket for $15," Tull said. "I've issued tickets to city cars and police officers' cars on numerous occasions."

"The officer was doing his job," Vines said. "He gets three points. He sounds like the kind of officer we need."

WORLD in brief

Somalia, Ethiopia exchanging POWs

DIRE DAWA, Ethiopia (AP) — Ethiopia and Somalia have started exchanging more than 3,700 prisoners of war, some held since the two Horn of Africa neighbors began fighting over a patch of desert 11 years ago.

The scheduled 10-day operation follows an accord signed by Ethiopia and Somalia in April and involves some prisoners held since hostilities began in 1977, said the International Committee of the Red Cross.

On its first flight Tuesday, a Red Cross-chartered plane brought 176 Ethiopians and a Cuban from Somalia's capital Mogadishu to Dire Dawa, Ethiopia, and returned to Mogadishu with 111 Somalians, a Red Cross statement said.

The exchange left 3,421 Ethiopians in Somalia and 118 Somalis in Ethiopian hands.

Under an April 6 accord, both sides agreed to withdraw troops from their borders, a move which was completed in May.

They also agreed to swap prisoners and restore diplomatic relations, severed at the outbreak of the 1977-78 Ogaden war.

Somalia had invaded the arid region, which Ethiopia owns but is populated by ethnic Somalis.

Asteroid named for poet

MOSCOW (AP) — Pravda said today that a distant asteroid has been named after Anna Akhmatova, one of Russia's favorite 20th century poets. Her work was barred from publication during most of her life.

The Communist Party newspaper said Soviet scientists requested that the International Planetary Center in the United States grant the name in honor of the poet's 100th birthday.

Akhmatova was born in 1889 and gained fame for her works, inspired by the style of Alexander Pushkin, before the 1917 Bolshevik Revolution.

Her husband, poet Nicholas Gumilev, was executed by the Bolsheviks in 1921, and officials frowned upon her work from then until 1940. She was rehabilitated during World War II, but lost favor again in 1946 and was expelled from the Soviet Writers Union for "bourgeois decadence."

Akhmatova was reinstated in 1959 and died seven years later.

Her works are in great demand in the Soviet Union, where poetry is a popular art form.

Doctor killed in battle

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — A Swiss doctor who had joined leftist Salvadoran guerrillas was killed in a firefight with government forces, the head of the military press office said Tuesday.

Dr. Jurg Dieter Weiss, 42, was one of three guerrillas killed Monday in a clash with government troops near Ilobasco, Col. Galileo Torres told The Associated Press.

Ilobasco is 24 miles northeast of San Salvador.

Torres said one Salvadoran solider was injured in the fight.

He said the Red Cross and the Swiss Embassy have been advised of Weiss' death, and that arrangements for transfering his body to Switzerland were pending.

Tunnel work continues

SANGATTE, France (NYT) — Digging day and night in three shifts, 1,800 French workmen have in the last year bored 200 yards to the Sangatte beach and will soon be under the English Channel itself, while on the other side of the waterway even swifter progress is being made in easier ground by British colleagues from the Eurotunnel consortium.

Although the excavating is running slightly behind schedule, British and French consortium executives express confidence that the handshake envisioned by Sebastien Krantz will take place in 1993, by which time the European Community is supposed to have completed its single internal market.

Splendidly isolated British headline writers will no longer be able to tell their readers that "Europe is cut off by fog," because Europe will only be a 28-minute train ride away. As Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher recently noted, "No one would have been more thrilled than Queen Victoria, who always saw a Channel tunnel as offering salvation from her dread of seasickness."

Cause of deaths unknown

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Authorities have yet to determine why 12 peasant farmers died this month in isolated towns near the Veracruz state capital of Jalapa, the Excelsior news service has reported.

The farmers died within a 20-day period after exhibiting similar symptoms, including vomiting, dehydration and severe stomach pains, Pedro Coronel Perez, state representative of the federal Health Department, said Tuesday.

Coronel Perez speculated that the deaths could stem from water or foods contaminated by pesticides.

Truck collides with bus

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — A truck rammed head-on into a Hungarian bus on a highway near Vienna, killing at least 10 people, police said.

They did not know the cause of the accident, how many people were on board the bus, or whether they were all Hungarians.

The highway is a main artery between the Hungarian border and the Austrian capital.

Strikers close down last section of port of Gdansk

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Strikers closed down the last section of the Gdansk port today and a convoy of more than 60 police vehicles and water cannons headed toward the city along the main road from Warsaw.

Riot police smashed barricades to break up a strike at a southern coal mine and cleared strikers from an idled bus depot in Szczecin, but opposition sources said a coal mine and a cement factory joined more than a dozen workplaces on strike.

Confronted by an 8-day-old series of job actions posing the stiffest challenge to its rule since 1981, the Politburo urged Communist Party members "to counter attempts to stir illegal strikes," the state-run PAP news agency reported.

The stoppages have idled coal mines and factories employing about 100,000 workers. The strikers demand legalization of the Solidarity trade union movement, reinstatement of workers fired for union activity and wage increases.

PAP said the Politburo also decided to convene an extraordinary meeting of the policy-making Central Committee "in the nearest future."

Section 2 of the Gdansk port, a cargo-loading division which was the only one in the city still working, joined the strikes today, government and opposition spokesmen said.

Near Elbiag, about 50 miles southeast of Gdansk, a long column of police vehicles assembled along the main highway leading to Gdansk, said Western reporters driving to Warsaw.

Solidarity leader Lech Walesa, taking part in a strike since Monday at the Lenin shipyard in Gdansk, rallied today with strikers there and at two nearby shipyards.

"It is you, the young people, who will renew Solidarity and renew the country," Walesa exhorted youthful strikers at the Repair Shipyard, according to a tape of the rally given to reporters.

In Szczecin, police today routed strikers from a bus depot, said Jozef Kowalczyk, spokesman for the Inter-Factory Strike Committee in the Baltic port. PAP said strikers left the Klonowice depot "at the call of security forces," leaving only the Dabie depot still on strike. On Monday, police raided three depots around the city and arrested strikers.

Police evicted 150 strikers from the Miesko mine in the Silesian town of Walbrzych in an assault Tuesday evening, said Robert Kozak of the Solidarity Information Commission.

Government spokesman Ryszard Straus said a group of "party activists, management and workers" accompanied by police intervened to end the strike, and he denied that police played an active role.

But at another mine in the Silesian coal fields, about 125 miners Tuesday blocked themselves 580 yards underground in a shaft near the curfew-bound southern town of Jastrzebie.

The miners pledged to stay underground at the 30 Years of People's Poland mine "until the end of their lives, until all the demands are met," said Wojciech Maziarski, a Solidarity spokesman in Warsaw.

Meanwhile, strikes ended peacefully at the Lenin mine in Myslowice and the Victoria mine in Walbrzych, PAP said.

But Kozak said the Knurow mine in Gliwice in the south and the Dzialoszyn cement works in Wielun in central Poland joined the strikes today. Straus said he had no information on the strikes.

In another development, Zbigniew Bujak, a former underground Solidarity leader, made a dash for his motorcycle during the night and escaped police watchers stationed outside his Warsaw-area home since Sunday, said his wife Waclawa.

The Politburo issued a communique saying speedy changes must be made to correct the country's economic policies. The government has raised prices 40 percent this year and wages have lagged far behind inflation.

Government spokesman Jerzy Urban said at least 49 people have been detained in connection with the strikes.

Walesa appealed again Tuesday for dialogue with authorities to end the strikes, but the government, which has declared the strikes illegal, refused. Communist authorities stifled Solidarity in a December 1981 military crackdown, and it was outlawed the following year.

"There will be no political talks under the 'pistol' of a strike," Urban told a Warsaw news conference.

He did not rule out declaring a state of emergency in the affected provinces: "The measures that will be applied will be adequate to developments."

Urban said a special Parliament commission will meet Aug. 31 to review the government's policies.

Interior Minister Czeslaw Kiszczak announced Monday that troops would be sent to secure major industrial plants, though none were in evidence at the plants on Tuesday.

Kremlin concerned about Polish strike

MOSCOW (AP) — The Kremlin says it is watching with concern the situation in Poland, but it has not issued any official comment on an 8-day-old strike wave in the Soviet Union's western neighbor.

Soviet media today issued reports on a meeting of the Polish Communist Party's Politburo, but offered no commentary.

Foreign Ministry spokesman Gennady I. Gerasimov, at a regular news briefing Tuesday, said, "We closely follow the situation in Poland."

"We are, of course, very attentive and interested and we are concerned by the events of Poland," he said.

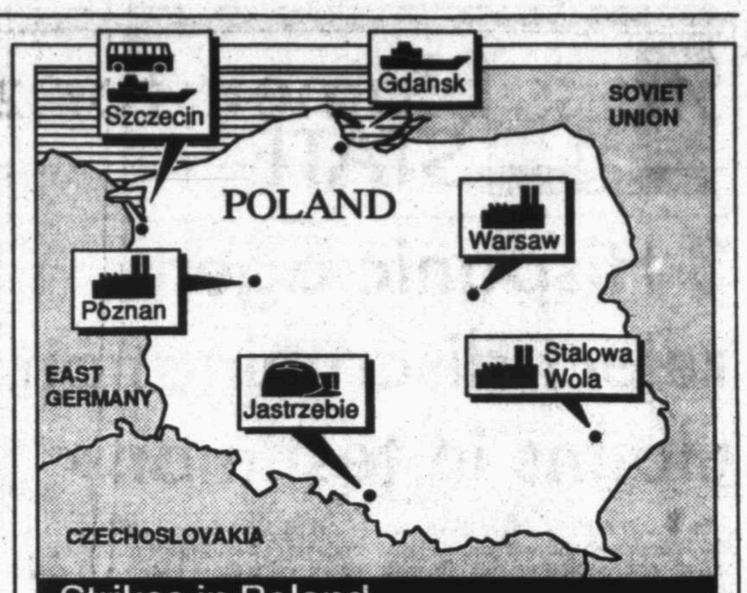

The Soviet news agency Tass quoted a statement by the Polish Politburo saying that difficult living conditions and justified criticism of authorities were not acceptable reasons for the strikes plaguing the Soviet-bloc country.

The strikes are the worst labor unrest in Poland since 1981, when the Warsaw government stifled the Solidarity free trade union movement with a military crackdown.

"Economic damage is piling up. Poland's prestige and economic confidence in Poland in international relations suffered substantially," the Tass report said of the current strikes.

It reported that the Politburo approved a letter to party members calling on them to counter the strikes.

Asked if the strikes in Poland and protests Sunday in Czechoslovakia on the 20th anniversary of the Soviet-led invasion of that country helped Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev's opponents find fault with his policy of greater openness, Gerasimov said, "I think you can find ammunition in any event."

Strikes in Poland

MINES

Polish goverment authorities announced a curfew 8/23 on Jastrzebie, the center of strikes that began a week ago. 67,200 miners are effected by strikes at ten mines.

SHIPPING:

On 8/22 in Gdansk, 13,000 workers at the docks and the Lenin shipyard were idled by a strike, 6,000 dock workers in Szczecin have been effected by a strike since 8/17.

PUBLIC TRANSPORTATION

Partial streetcar traffic resumed in the port city of Szczecin 8/23 after police dislodged strikers from depots. Army troops have been operating the buses. Solidarity leaders say 2,800 transit workers were effected.

FACTORIES

Solidarity leaders say they have been joined by workers at the Ursus tractor plant and the Huta Warszawa steel mill in Warsaw. Leaders were also joined by strikers at the Cegielski turbine works in Poznan and the Stalowa Wola heavy machinery plant.

Man kills himself because bribes not enough

BEIJING (AP) — A Chinese army veteran committed suicide because he was unable to pay the bribes needed to obtain a good job, an official daily reported today.

Wang Zhilong, who was looking for civilian work after 20 years in the army, jumped to his death on July 27 from the fifth floor of a hospital in central China's Luoyang City, the China Daily said.

Wang had been hospitalized after trying to kill himself three days earlier by touching electric wires.

The report said Wang became depressed after a local Communist Party official, Li Shiyi, demanded a color TV, a bicycle and name-brand cigarettes and liquor as preconditions for arranging a job.

It said Wang spent his life savings of $810, more than double a worker's annual salary, on the gifts, but was still unable to satisfy the corrupt official.

It said Wang's suicide surprised local party and government officials and a joint team was formed to investigate the death and punish those responsible.

Stress blamed for zoo-hatched Andean condor's death

AP Laserphoto

One Andean condor, conceived and hatched in captivity, died while being moved in an experiment to see how its cousin, the California Condor, would adapt to the wild.

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Stress is believed to have killed a zoo-hatched Andean condor that was on its way to freedom in an experiment to see how its endangered North American cousin will adapt to the wild.

Three other transplanted Andean condors in the program were doing well Monday, officials said.

The Andean birds were chosen for the experiment because it is the closest living relative to the California condor. Though the Andean species is also endangered, they number in the thousands. Only 28 of its North American cousins exist and all in captivity.

The Andean condors, which are also endangered, were transported to Los Padres National Forest in airline-style animal shipping crates and placed in secret holding pens Saturday.

One died while being transported.

Preliminary results of an autopsy show the death was stress-related, although infection has not been ruled out, said Joe Dowhan, condor recovery coordinator for the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.

Final test results are expected by Wednesday.

He said it was premature to say how officials might have handled the move differently or what changes might be implemented to prevent other deaths.

"This is a learning process. Right now there are all kinds of scenarios we could consider changing," he said.

Scientists are conducting the experiment to see how birds hatched in captivity adapt to freedom, fending for themselves in a region without native birds of their species to serve as examples.

The first group of the 3- and 4-month-old birds are scheduled to spend several weeks in mesh enclosures in the forest 75 miles northeast of Los Angeles.

Two came from the San Diego Wild Animal Park; one was from the Fish and Wildlife Service center in Patuxent, Md.; and the one that died came from the Los Angeles Zoo.

Scientists will prepare the birds for their first flights over the dry mountains and foothills that once supported a large population of California condors.

The condors are being exposed to other young condors for the first time because they were raised singly, as in the wild, Dowhan said.

More Andean condors will be brought to the area in October.

In December, when the birds should be able to fly, scientists will fit them with radio monitors, release them, and follow their progress.

The Andean birds will remain in the wild until it's time to release California condors, perhaps as early as 1992 if officials have continued success in captive breeding programs at the Wild Animal Park and the Los Angeles Zoo, Dowhan said.

Blood tests on the first California condor conceived in captivity determined the bird is a female, officials said Monday.

The 4-month-old bird, named Molloko, also was determined to be "in perfect health," said Tom Hanscom, spokesman at the Wild Animal Park. The bird, which weighed in at 6¾ ounces when born April 29, now weighs 16 pounds.

Fourteen of the 27 other California condors are females. Park officials say further tests will determine which of the birds are related and how they will be separated for breeding.

Texan's hobby turns into serious study

By MAX ALBRIGHT

AMARILLO (AP) — If it's possible to see the universe in a blade of grass, imagine what can be discovered looking at a butterfly.

For Amarillo scientist Richard Howard, butterflies and moths are the focus of a lifetime of love and pursuit of knowledge. It started when he was 6 years old, 36 years ago.

Howard, a biology professor at Amarillo College, knows Megathymus streckeri texanus is the correct name of the brown-and-white Yucca Skipper butterfly, which whizzes through Palo Duro Canyon at 60 mph. The Prairie Empress, a light tan nondescript butterfly, is a subspecies native to the Texas Panhandle and it was discovered by Howard. It's also known as Asterocamya montis prairiensis.

But for Howard, butterflies are not just a source of random information. Butterflies and moths play a vital role in the earth's ecological system and are part of United States' wildlife heritage, he said.

"The love of discovery, that's the name of the game," he said, about his study of butterflies. "Knowledge for the sake of knowledge, not for money."

Though, he said, it's not selfish knowledge, but knowledge that will be passed along and used.

Later this summer, Howard plans to donate to Brigham Young University at Provo, Utah, the bulk of this personal collection of 5,000 butterflies and moths from all over the world. The small animals, as he sometimes calls them, will be placed in the Monte L. Bean Life Science Museum reference collection there. This is his second donation. Eight years ago he gave the museum, what was at that time, his lifetime collection.

Earlier this year, Howard finished working on a book about butterflies and moths. After teaching school every day, he came home and typed to midnight for four years. The book will contain 250 pages of color pictures of 3,600 species of butterflies and moths.

He lends his entomology expertise to Monte L. Bean Life Science Museum, West Texas State University, Texas Tech University, Carson County Square House Museum and House of Butterflies, which is a run by a private collector in Cleveland, Tenn., and he's also the curator of Amarillo College Natural History Museum.

"Butterflies are a barometer of environmental stress," said Howard.

Chemicals in the environment and destruction of habitat are causing species of butterflies to disappear. It's a sign, a warning, that the earth's life sustaining system is out of balance, he said. The disappearing rain forests, especially in Southeast Asia, mean less butterflies, and less humidity being put into the atmosphere at the equator, thus altering elimate patterns for the whole world, he said.

Howard started his first butterfly collection when he was boy in Amarillo and his grandfather used his felt hat to help him catch them.

Now it's a first class operation, backed up by scientific expertise and a library of butterfly information.

"It takes a lifetime to learn how to identify them," he said. Wing veins, genitalia, geographic range, color patterns and larval characteristics, all go into making a positive identification, he said.

Working with butterflies is a talent or a gift, he said, and it helps that he's been doing it all of his life. Catching butterflies is very enjoyable, it gets him out in the country and he meets farmers and ranchers, who allow him to "catch and few bugs and take them back to the museum," he said.

Howard has traveled all over the United States and he says he is careful to collect so as not to damage the butterfly population.

"Even with a common species, you could over collect and eliminate it," he said.

Howard has a permit to remove butterflies from state parks, but the ones he catches there can't be traded or sold.

He doesn't sell any of his butterflies, but he sometimes does trade with other scientists, which is how his collection as come to include butterflies from all over the world.

His present collection is valued at $500,000. Each spread butterfly is flawless in it detail and comes with Howard's professional label, which identifies the insect. It includes some species that are now extinct.

There are 1,600 species of butterflies and moths in Texas, says Richard Howard, biology professor at Amarillo College.

There are 140,000 species worldwide. Only 20,000 of them are butterflies.

How do you tell a butterfly from a moth? You can't always wing it on looks alone.

"It's not that easy," says Howard. "But generally, butterflies fly by day and moths fly by night. Moths spin cocoons; butterflies don't."

If a butterfly-moth type insect doesn't fly easily into either category, then, says Howard, it's called a skipper.

Skippers fly by day, have a moth-like appearance and spin cocoons.

Although it sounds like "That's Incredible," the Yucca Skipper in Palo Duro Canyon really does zip by at 60 mph, Howard said. When he goes to net one, he takes two other people with him.

Inventor puts money on Educated Guess

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — "I like to think of it as a game with educational implications."

The creator's description sounds as suspicious to a kid as a cereal commercial touting nutritional value.

But from its roots as a pastime for his college friends to winning the prestigious 1987 Parents Choice Gold Seal Award in its category, Educated Guess has taught Spencer Price a few things.

And he had a little fun along the way.

One of he first things the 26-year-old entrepreneur learned was that he didn't learn much he considered useful in business school. After two years at Texas Tech University, Price dropped out and returned to his Hays County home.

He worked 2½ years for the family owned telephone company in Hays County before deciding to try marketing his game.

"There were a lot of definition games out there but there were no storytelling games," he said.

The object of the game is to guess a word when given the definition, part of speech and the first letter. As soon as any player has won 10 words, play stops and each player writes a short story from the words each has won. Additional words, divided into parts of speech and assigned point values, are provided on the colorful game board. Points are awarded for the words used and bonus points for speed in writing the story.

Because the words are chosen at random, the resulting stories have a tendency to stretch the limits of imagination and range from silly to clever.

The obvious educational applications include building vocabularies and grammar skills, but perhaps more importantly the game fosters creativity.

Price would like to develop the educational market but has not been very successful because of the hierarchy of school districts. "Nobody has any authority to buy anything."

The flexibility of Educated Guess makes it an excellent tool for teachers. "They like to use it in their classroom as a reward or as part of the class."

Price said the requisite 10 words won before writing stories can be reduced to five to meet time constraints of class periods.

"You can put a lot of variables on it. Everybody does that. Whatever plays well," he said.

Creativity is treated with indifference in schools, he said. "If you were creative, that's fine. If you weren't creative, that's fine too."

He credits his parents with fostering his own creativity.

"People with creative minds can do a lot more in the job market with an English degree than somebody with a business degree."

Price believes the workplace — management levels, particularly— requires creativity and innovation to economize and streamline operations. He also thinks the rewards for creativity today exceed those in the past.

Art therapy helps kids deal with sexual abuse

FORT WORTH (AP) — One little girl's crayon self-portraits never extend below the waist.

Another draws a man behind bars — the place she'd like to put the man who sexually abused her, the child tells her therapist.

Those disturbing examples of children's art are far from the customary smiling faces and bright suns of the elementary school set — but they are "a constructive way for the (sexually abused) children to vent anger," said Rita Foust, a clinical social worker in private practice at The Treatment Place in Fort Worth.

"If you want to communicate with children and find out how they're feeling, how they perceive what's happened, you have them color or paint or work with clay or write stories," she said.

Ms. Foust, who has worked with sexual abuse victims for 10 years, sees about 15 children each week. Art therapy is one of several methods she uses in treatment, and two recent art therapy workshops Ms. Foust conducted for other professionals have drawn packed houses.

During the 1920s and 1930s, psychologists and psychiatrists began to find meaning in children's art, with drawing exercises used as intelligence tests, according to the Journal of Psychosocial Nursing. But although art therapy has been used with geriatric and mental patients, it wasn't until the last 15 years that professionals began using it as therapy for sexually abused children, Ms. Foust said.

Through art therapy and counseling, "we try to repair damage to developmental delay," explained Ms. Foust, who also chairs the Tarrant County Sexual Abuse Advisory Committee.

"That's because some of these children will be overly sexual — or go backward and wet their pants, even if they're 5 or 6.

"The children who drew these pictures are not happy," she said, pointing to a cluster of drawings. "But you work with them, and over time, the drawing begins to be more in line with what's normal for children of that age....And they'll stop having nightmares."

Another counselor who has used art therapy is Deborah Caddy, a counselor at the Rape Crisis Center.

"We find it's a real helpful tool to get them (abuse victims in the children's program) to express themselves," she said. Besides looking for clues in the art — phallic symbols, for example — "we try to gauge where they are in their progress. Maybe they're going from dark colors to rainbows, for example. And it's also good to establish rapport."

"You'll see things that express inner rage they're not even in touch with," added Deborah Moore, a psychotherapist with the Professional Alliance Counseling and Consultation Center. "You get them to get those feelings out and then step back and look at it, and it's not quite so threatening."

What art therapy is not, Ms. Foust is quick to point out, is random guesses or mystic interpretation of drawings. The interpretation must be accompanied with more conventional methods of counseling.

"You couldn't just bring me three pictures and have me say, 'This is what they mean,'" Ms. Foust said. But the art gives her clues.

One mother, who asked that she be identified only as Brenda, has had her 4-year-old daughter in treatment for a month. The child was fondled by a relative during an out-of-town visit in March.

"I was giving her a bath...and she came out and told me," Brenda said. "I nearly went crazy. They ran tests, and charges have been filed."

She was struck, she said, by one drawing her daughter did, depicting herself in a corner of the page and a man in the middle with "something between them, blocking them off from each other," Brenda said. "She had written 'No' (and the first few letters of the accused abuser's name).

"I thought that was important, because my daughter doesn't know many words."

Her first drawings after the abuse, along with other behavior, seemed to reflect a changed attitude toward men, Brenda said.

"She doesn't go around many men," she said. "She used to get along with them great, but now she cries a lot. She had bad nightmares at first — and I've seen her do to her dolls the way he (the abuser) did to her.

"She won't bring the subject up, but she'll draw a picture of him — a very ugly man."

Brenda draws hope from her daughter's most recent drawing — a picture of a mother and daughter playing ball — and from the fact her daughter is having fewer nightmares.

"She's more playful than she was at first," Brenda said. "I think this is helping to bring her out and ease her mind."

Ms. Foust gives another example: One little girl who drew her abuser as a monster was asked to tell about it.

"She said it eats things up, flies everywhere," Ms. Foust said. "I asked her, 'How will he go away?' She said, 'If you throw food on him.' I said, 'What kind of food?' She suggested cheese — she has quite an imagination — and started taking cheese to bed with her.

"Since she started doing that, her mother said she stopped having nightmares. But I would never have been able to put that together without her drawing."

Another child, asked to draw how he felt about being abused, drew several panels of pictures of himself, including captions that said, "Shock. Embarrassed. Shy. Why did he do it?"

One youngster even made a brightly colored sex abuse avoidance handbook.

"Sexaul (sic) abuse is when somebody touches you where their (sic) not supposed to," he wrote. "A person who abuses somebody...is very dumb to hurt a person's feelings.

"Tell someone you trust. The school nurse or counselor. Tell your teacher or your mama."

Rebels head for Plainview and 'real' introduction

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

Midland Lee's 1988 football Rebels were introduced to its rabid public Tuesday night at Lee High School with the annual "Meet the Rebels" rally, but head coach Earl Miller and his staff are looking ahead to Thursday's introduction to Plainview.

That's the introduction that will speak more than words can express. The Rebels invade Plainview Thursday for junior varsity and varsity scrimmages, set for 5 and 7 p.m., respectively.

The scrimmage will be Lee's first look at what they can do against some outsiders and will offer a tape measure of sorts to see if the first two weeks of preseason drills have been effective.

And at this point Miller knows what to look for.

"The first thing we have to do is test our two junior quarterbacks (Ty Chambers and Vince Henderson) on the varsity level and see if they can execute. Neither one has been in a varsity game and they haven't been under fire against any outside competition on this level," said Miller. "We feel both these kids have the characteristics of the great quarterback, but we hope one will come to the front."

But playing a junior at quarterback isn't the only concern for a team that returns only two starters in tight end Quincy White and linebacker Mike Pearson. The defensive secondary is the next on Miller's watch list.

"Our secondary still has a long way to go," notes Miller. "Again, we just don't have any experience back there. We have some good talent, but they haven't had much varsity action.

"You take (safety) Marcus Strambler. He has a great deal of talent, but missed most of spring training when he went to the state track meet in the hurdles. Still, he has that kind of speed and talent and he's replacing Jimmy Fennell, who may have been Lee's greatest ever at the safety position."

Miller would like to see his overall defense make a good showing in the scrimmage.

"I want our defense to be aggressive and set the tempo of games we play," says Miller. "You don't see anyone win in this district if you don't play good defense. Since 1982, when they put two teams from every district in the state playoffs, I don't think you will find a playoff team from our district that didn't rate very well on defense. It is a key."

However, Lee lost all of its offensive skill people, except White, to graduation, losing, in fact, the state's most powerful offensive machine. Still, Miller feels his running backs are a plus of his 1988 squad.

"With (Steve) Whiteside, (Jason) Fletcher and (Ferris) Strambler, we may be as good as we've ever been overall in those positions and I really believe that," says Miller. "We may see a drop off from a Waymon Goodley at fullback, but our halfbacks are bigger than we've ever had and can do the same things some of our smaller backs have done in the past. Against Plainview, we want to see if this area is really a plus for us.

"We've also got to put our offensive line under a test. We've moved a lot of people around there and we aren't as big as in the past, but we feel it could turn into a pretty good offensive line. We know what Quincy White can do, but we need to look at the rest of them."

The 165-mile hike to the Panhandle city will give the Rebs another test of sorts, one they better get used to in 1988. Lee opens with far-away Killeen Sept. 2 and plays in El Paso two weeks later. In fact, Lee has only four home games this year.

"We better get used to playing on the road. I've never seen a schedule like the one we have. We're packing the suitcases for the season."

Plainview's Red Rage Booster Club has invited Lee fans to share in a barbecue that will be served throughout the scrimmages, beginning at 5 p.m. Tickets will cost $5 per plate and can be purchased at the scrimmage.

Washington cuts Midland's Kleine

HERNDON, Va. (AP) — The Washington Redskins cut 17 players Tuesday, including 1987 top draft pick Wally Kleine of Midland and veteran placekicker Ali Haji-Sheikh.

Kleine, a second-round pick last year, never played a regular-season game with the Redskins. The 6-foot-9, 320-pounder spent last season on injured reserve with a bad knee, and this summer he never showed the prowess at defensive tackle that he exhibited as a three-year starter at Notre Dame.

Washington tried to convert the former Midland High star to an offensive tackle last year, but this season he asked to be moved back to defense. He got his wish, but had only two tackles and an assist in three preseason games.

"We have four quality guys there, and we just didn't think he had a chance to make it," Gibbs said. "We tried him on offense, then we took a shot with him on defense, but we just couldn't find the spot for him to fit in."

Kleine refused to talk to reporters as he bolted out of Redskin Park, the team's practice facility.

IN REDUCING their roster to the league limit of 60, the Redskins also placed 10 players on injured reserve, two players on the non-football injury list and declared center Ray Hitchcock physically unable to perform.

Tuesday's moves ended the summer-long battles for the team's kicking jobs. Rookie Chip Lohmiller inherits the placekicking position from Haji-Sheikh, and the departure of 12th-round draft pick Wayne Ross means incumbent Steve Cox will retain the punting job.

Haji-Sheikh, who replaced an injured Jess Atkinson in the second game last season, made both of his field goal attempts and all five conversion tries during the preseason. But the Redskins figured that letting him go two weeks before the regular season would take some pressure off Lohmiller, who admitted he was strained by the competition.

"Maybe this will enable him to be more relaxed this week," special teams coach Paul Lanham said. "I know I'd feel a lot more secure if I was sure the job was mine."

Lohmiller, Washington's top draft choice last April, has missed two conversions and two field goals during the preseason. But he possesses a very strong leg, and the Redskins' coaching staff thinks it is only a matter of time before the University of Minnesota product begins performing up to his ability.

"We feel Chip is the strongest (of the two) and he has the potential to be a real good kicker," Washington coach Joe Gibbs.

Said Lanham: "Chip has a little more physical potential than Ali has," Lanham said. "We figure he can be in the top half-dozen kickers in the league."

HAJI-SHEIKH, a five-year veteran, had previously been cut by the New York Giants and Atlanta Falcons. He said his departure from New York in 1985 was more painful, but still seemed plenty distraught on Tuesday after he cleared out his locker.

"It always hurts more the first time, but this is right up there," he said.

Haji-Sheikh was asked if he felt he got a fair shot at the job. "I got a shot," he replied. "I showed what I can do, and that's all I can ask for."

Cox, meanwhile, was surprisingly subdued when reporters told him that Ross had been cut. Although Cox averaged 43 yards a punt against the Los Angeles Raiders last Saturday, he has been erratic since last October and knows his status is anything but secure.

"All I know is that I'm the punter today," he said. "Who knows what will happen tomorrow or the next day?"

"Steve's the guy who won the job," Gibbs said. "We don't plan on bringing anyone else in. . .right now we're going with Steve."

Washington was required to make 30 moves Tuesday because defensive end Dexter Manley, who is serving a 30-day suspension for substance abuse, does not count as part of the roster. Eric Yarber, who returned 37 punts last year but suffered a knee injury Aug. 12 against Miami, was the most notable name among those placed on the injured reserve list.

Angels lose, but stay close

From Staff Reports

SAN ANTONIO — Luis Lopez had a solo homer and drove in three runs to lead the San Antonio Missions to a 7-2 victory over the Midland Angels here Tuesday night.

But the Missions lost one off the field when Texas League President Carl Sawatski denied their protest of Monday's game in which Missions Manager Kevin Kennedy claimed the Angels used an ineligible pitcher.

The two decisions combined helped tighten up the already crowed Texas League West second half pennant race. El Paso dropped a 4-2 decision to the Wichita Pilots, leaving Midland only 1½ games out of first place and first half champion San Antonio climbed to within two games of the lead with only six games left in the race.

Greg LaFever, 9-7, allowed six hits and struck out two for the victory.

The Angels aided San Antonio's cause with seven errors, one by each member of the infield, one by the starting pitcher Tim Burcham, and two by catcher Mike Knapp.

Lopez' homer gave San Antonio a 4-2 lead in the fourth inning. Mike Batesole was 3-4 for the Missions' 12-hit attack.

Midland faces its last road game of regular season tonight against the Missions and will return home for a Thursday encounter with Wichita, the beginning of an important five-game stand. The San Diego Chicken will be on hand for the 7 p.m. Thursday game to add to the excitement of a pennant race.

Jim Tatum's two-run double powered Wichita over the El Paso Diablos.

Kelt impressive, Yeary produces first day WTGA surprise with upset

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Margaret Kelt, the Tulsa University senior-to-be, led 16 golfers into the second round of the Women's Texas Golf Association state amateur golf tournament with a crushing 10-8 victory over Diane Smedman, a University of Texas student, Tuesday.

Martha Yeary, Fort Worth, scored the day's surprise with a 1-up after 19 victory over Mary Schmidt, a one-time WTGA champion from Houston Champions.

Also advancing were Sandy Hamby, Monday's low junior qualifier; former champion Toni Wiesner; Pamela Behrens, the retired squash player, and Janis Self.

Diane Dill, who shared seniors comedalist with Sue Leach, both with 82s, defeated Missy Mullins 1-up. Carol Albers dropped Leach into the consolation bracket with a 1-up-on-20 win, the day's longest match in the championship flight.

KELT, Dallas Prestonwood, who played on Tulsa's NCAA women's champions last spring, won every hole of her match and finished two under par.

"I sank a 12-footer for a birdie on two and a five-footer for another birdie on six. I could have had another birdie on eight," Kelt said. "It was one of these days when everything went right. If I missed the green, I still managed to get up and down in regulation."

Yeary, playing her sixth WTGA but in the championship flight for only the second time, confessed to a bad case of nerves and jitters in her match with former champion Schmidt.

Whatever, it produced one of the day's most exciting matches.

"I had a 79 and Mary shot 78," said Yeary, who has daughters 15 and 17 years of age.

Down two holes, the fashion consultant won nine and 10 to pull even and from that point on, it was a see-saw match.

"I lost 11, pulled even at 12, lost 14, won 15, and then lost 17," the former TCU student said.

Schmidt had a good drive on 18 and Yeary was in the rough, but recovered with a strong four and six irons to send the match into extra holes.

While Schmidt was in the rough and short of the green on the left.

"I hit a thin nine-iron and it rolled to the back of the green and I two putted for the par," Yeary said.

ACTUALLY, Yeary's win shouldn't rank as too much of a shock. Although she has been playing golf 15 years, she didn't get serious until eight years ago.

"I took lessons and worked a lot on my game."

Last year she won the CCWGA (involving five clubs) and the Glen Garden titles last September. In 1984, she was the Colonial club champion.

Golf ticket for lefty roller skater

Battles

Toni Wiesner not only is a lefthander, but once was a national roller skating champion back when she was 19 while living in New York City.

She turned her back on roller skating after she and her partner were given a five-minute standing ovation. What changed her life was a fourth place finish.

"I decided then not to ever again play a sport where you are judged."

So, 15 years ago Toni took up golf where the frustration may be greater, but success or failure depends on how many strokes it takes to get the ball in the hole and not on the whim of a judge.

Wiesner has been playing in WTGA state amateur since 1973. She won in 1985 and has been qualifying round medalist twice.

"Losing in the third round last year was a disappointment," says Toni who "fell in love with Fort Worth" after moving there from West Hempstead, N.Y.

Still, it wasn't that bad a year. The Fort Worth Star-Telegram named her Tarrant County Golfer of the Year.

In Monday's qualifying round at Green Tree, her 77 was good for a third place tie. Then Tuesday she scored a 5 and 3 win over Rebecca Meisen by playing even par on the front side to take charge.

"The greens are difficult to read and they are putting the pins in diabolical positions." Diabolical or not, it didn't seem to bother her.

So along with Margaret Kelt, Pamela Behrens and Mona Jennings, she has to rank as one of the favorites for the title.

Wiesner whose age is "none of your business" won the Southern Amateur in 1981 and the Mexican Amateur in 1982, but her biggest thrill was winning the Women's West Texas in Abilene in 1981.

"The Abilene paper had a picture of Jack Nicklaus, another of Ayoki and one of me on the same page."

With the kind of success she has enjoyed did she ever consider turning pro?

"Never. The LPGA tour is a tough life."...

Mona Jennings, who also advanced with a victory Tuesday, would like to have a whirl at the LPGA after finishing Texas Tech. "Next summer I plan to play in the Trans and some of the big amateur events, go to touring school and perhaps play the Futures."

This summer she feels her game has made great progress because of her job at Pampa CC.

Her dad probably is even more proud of the fact that she made the Dean's list at Tech....

Jeana "Dolly" Thomas is this year's believe-it-or-not story of the tournament. She hit 16 greens in regulation in Monday's qualifying round. That's one more than medalist Margaret Kelt hit.

Kelt shot a 74. Thomas had a 101.

"I had 10 three-putt greens," she says, not to mention a five-putt and two four-putt greens.

But that will happen, maybe, when you've been playing golf only a little over a year. Just a few weeks back in a Permian Basin Golf Association event, she shot a 74.

Minnesota's Bill Musselman ..."Defeat is worse than death."

Landry backs Pelluer, cuts Paul McDonald

IRVING (AP) — Tom Landry is doing his best to quash quarterback quandries with his 1988 Dallas Cowboys.

On Tuesday, Landry gave veteran Paul McDonald his walking papers, handing the third team quarterbacking spot to Kevin Sweeney, who performed impressively for the replacement team last year. It was a case of Landry going for youth over a nine-year veteran.

Coach Landry also gave another vote of confidence to Steve Pelluer as his starting quarterback.

Pelluer hit only 2 of 9 passes for 20 yards in a 17-9 NFL preseason victory over the Chicago Bears Monday night before he suffered a concussion.

He is expected to be healthy enough to play in Saturday night's exhibition finale against the Houston Oilers.

"Steve will start the Oiler game and will probably start against Pittsburgh in the regular-season opener," Landry said. "It's his job. The only thing that can take it away is his (lack of) performance."

Danny White came off the bench to lead the Cowboys to their second consecutive preseason victory. It's the first time since 1985 that Dallas has won back-to-back preseason games.

"Danny had a pretty good game," Landry said."You have to have experience at the quarterback position and I think Danny will have the capabilities to win some games for us."

Landry said Pelluer brings many weapons to the Dallas offense, including his ability to scramble.

"He still hasn't had as much playing time as he needs and we want to see him grow," Landry said. "His ability to run is a great asset. It cuts the traps down."

Landry said Pelluer knows better than to take on tacklers like he did linebacker Dante Jones of the Bears.

"He knows how to fall down but he didn't get a block he thought he was going to get and got hit in the face," Landry said. "I was amazed he was able to call the play that Herschel (Walker) scored on the next down. He was woozy and we had to get him out of there."

The Dallas defense will be depleted against the Oilers because both safeties Bill Bates and Victor Scott will not play. Bates was kicked in the shin on the last play of the victory over the Bears and Scott sprained an ankle while returning an intercepted pass.

Timberwolves hire Musselman

Promises 'stalking' team on cold Minnesota nights

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Bill Musselman, who used to tell the University of Minnesota basketball team that "losing is worse than death," was introduced Tuesday as the first head coach of the NBA expansion Minnesota Timberwolves.

"We wanted a coach with fire in his guts," Timberwolves president Bob Stein said, "and with the ability to be patient to build a young team. We feel we have one. He is an intense competitor, one who generates excitement."

Musselman, 48, was signed to a four-year contract at an undisclosed salary by the Timberwolves, who begin play in the 1989-90 season.

Musselman's trademarks are his intensity and his win-at-all-costs attitude.

While coach at Minnesota, he posted a sign in the locker room reading: "Defeat is worse than death because you have to live with defeat."

On Tuesday, Musselman showed no sign that his intensity and desire to win had waned.

"If you want to picture the type of team that I feel the Timberwolves want and I want, I would say that you could visualize a cold, dark winter night in the state of Minnesota, a pack of timber wolves stalking and waiting for its prey. And the prey — and the opposition — is fearful of what might happen," he said. "World War III will take place. In lighter terms, the prey is in for a tough night and the battle of its life.

"I will make one commitment — the Minnesota Timberwolves will fight each night like it's their last game."

"He's one of the most intense people I've ever met," said Gary Holle, general manager of the Albany Patroons, who Musselman coached to the Continental Basketball Association title last year. "He works the refs. He's all over the place. That's his style. He doesn't let up for one minute. When his players come out of the locker room, they're believing in him."

Clyde Turner, Minnesota's leading scorer during Musselman's first two years at the school, said that while most coaches are intense, "Musselman is probably more on the extreme."

"During a game, he might pull you out and call you names," Turner said. "He would go crazy the next week in practice, make you run an extra mile, do extra pushups or situps."

Still, Turner said he was certain that Musselman had matured since he was the Gophers' 31-year-old coach.

Said Musselman: "That was 16 years ago. I think I've grown and matured as a person."

Musselman coached Ashland College in Ohio to a 129-30 record from 1965-71 and then, in 1971, became the youngest head coach in Minnesota basketball history.

The Gophers were 11-13 in 1970-71, but Musselman guaranteed that his team would contend for the Big Ten title in his first year. He produced, guiding Minnesota to its first outright conference championship in 53 years.

His rookie season as a big-time college coach wasn't without incident, however. On Jan. 26, 1972, with the Gophers hosting Ohio State, an ugly brawl broke out. Three Buckeyes had to be hospitalized and Gophers Corky Taylor and Ron Behagen were suspended for the rest of the season. Musselman was accused of not trying to stop the brawl.

Despite losing Taylor and Behagen, the Gophers won the title with the "Iron Five," which included current New York Yankees star Dave Winfield.

Musselman went on to compile a 69-32 record in four seasons at Minnesota and his .683 winning percentage is the best in school history. But he left in 1975 with the NCAA investigating his program and, after his departure, more than 100 NCAA rules violations were uncovered. Minnesota was placed on probation for three years and received two years of strict sanctions that included no television appearances or postseason invitations.

"If today was my first day at a college, I would probably not do the same things," Musselman said.

"He was probably the most intense individual I ever worked with," said Tom Greenhoe, who has worked in Minnesota's sports information office since 1969. "He is the exponent of a guy who lives and dies the game.

"You could just read intensity in every gesture, every spoken word. He was going to win. The very first practice he had here was one of the toughest I've ever seen."

Houston slashes 14 from roster

HOUSTON (AP) — The Houston Oilers cut 14 players, including veteran Rayford Cooks and three draft choices Tuesday, reducing their roster to 60 players.

Others released were cornerbacks Evan Cooper and Tony Newsom; linebacker Thad Jefferson; wide receivers Keith McDonald, Keith Willis, Chris Darrington and running backs Mike Williams and Chris Dabrow, center Brett Petersmark and tight end Arrike James.

Cooks played in 10 games for the Oilers last season, including the three strike games as a replacement player.

The Oilers released ninth-round pick linebacker David Spradlin, of Texas Christian, 10th-round pick wide receiver Marco Johnson of Hawaii and 12th-round pick linebacker John Brantley of Georgia.

Offensive lineman Doug Williams went on the injured reserve list with a broken leg. Also on the injury list are linebacker Alex Hoover, safety Tracy Eaton and guard Almon Young.

"This is my first trip to Midland and I love the dry heat," she said. "This is a good course, but the rough makes it tough. I've been in the rough so much I'm beginning to adjust to it."

JENNINGS, a student at Texas Tech, who qualified Monday with a 77, eliminated Linda McReynolds, 2 and 1, although she was down two at 10. "I won 11 and 13 and then went ahead on 16. Linda played well on the front nine. She had birds on 2, 5 and 6."

Jennings, who sat out last golf season at Tech, was pleased "with the way I hit the ball. I hit a lot of greens. I just wasn't making my putts."

Play resumes today with title flight matches starting at 10:46 a.m.. Thursday's play will reduce the field to the two finalists with quarter and semifinal rounds.

Also an impressive winner Tuesday was Janis Self, a 4 and 3 winner over Martha Mahan, a former WTGA champion. "I had four birdies and was even par when I closed out the match with a 30-footer on 15."

LONG DRIVES AND SHORT PUTTS— Kelt and Kathy Mankowski posted a combined 152 in Monday's qualifying round to give Dallas Prestonwood the Team Cup. While Kelt won Tuesday, Mankowski lost to Sandy Hamby on 18....Midland's Charlotte Marburger, down three at the turn, rallied to defeat former WTGA president 'Nez Muhleman, River Bend, in a fifth flight match. As has been the case so many times, No. 16 was the decisive hole with Marburger hitting the green of the par three water hole and parring while her opponent went into the drink....

Mets own hex against Dodgers

Associated Press

More than 30 years ago, the Dodgers beat every team except the New York Yankees. Now their problem is the New York Mets.

From 1947 to 1956, the Dodgers won six pennants but lost five World Series to the Yankees. They may have moved to Los Angeles, but the Dodgers still have a New York problem. Tuesday's 5-1 loss to the Mets was the seventh in eight games against New York this year, including all five in Dodger Stadium.

"They've got a very good team and they've been tough on us," said Steve Sax, who drove in the Dodgers' only run with an infield hit in the second inning. "Hopefully, we can turn it around and do better if we meet them in the playoffs. Right now we just have to go out and get them tomorrow."

"It's one of the mysteries of baseball," said David Cone, who scattered nine hits over 7⅔ innings. "We play well against the Dodgers and we don't against the Padres. I can't put my finger on it or come up with some profound explanation."

Cone, 13-3, struck out six and walked none. Randy Myers finished with hitless relief for his 18th save and hit a run-scoring double in the ninth before Wally Backman added an RBI single.

Trailing 1-0, New York rallied for three runs in the fifth on Mookie Wilson's RBI single, Backman's run-scoring double and Keith Hernandez's sacrifice fly.

"This is a big series, and I hope this is going to carry over," Backman said, looking forward to a potential playoff matchup. "We're ready to play these guys. We match up pretty well with them. The teams are built around pitching. We've got some power and they've got some power, but we've got a better defensive ballclub. But when you get to the playoffs, it's a whole different story and these games are meaningless."

"It's always good to get up for a good team like the Dodgers," Cone said. "But if we see them in the playoffs, you can throw all these games out the window."

Los Angeles rookie Ramon Martinez, 0-1, allowed six hits and three runs over 4⅓ innings. The 20-year-old Dominican right-hander had allowed two runs over 14⅔ innings without a decision in his first two starts.

Cubs 9, Astros 3

Damon Berryhill's two-run homer and Vance Law's two-run single highlighted a seven-run seventh inning, Chicago's biggest this season.

Mark Grace broke a 2-2 tie with an RBI single and Rafael Palmeiro followed with a sacrifice fly before Law's single and Berryhill's fifth home run. Mitch Webster's run-scoring single made it 9-2.

Jamie Moyer, 7-12, gave up 12 hits and three runs, striking out seven in his third complete game. Danny Darwin, 6-10, gave up 11 of Chicago's 16 hits, allowing six runs in six-plus innings.

Expos 2, Giants 1

Hubie Brooks drove in Rex Hudler with a two-out, pinch-single in the 13th inning as Montreal ended its nine-game losing streak and improved to 17-5 in extra innings this season.

Scott Garrelts, 3-7, who allowed only two hits in five innings, walked Nelson Santovenia to open the 13th. Hudler pinch ran, was sacrificed to second and stole third.

Andy McGaffigan, 5-0, pitched two innings of hitless relief. Joe Hesketh pitched the 13th for his fifth save.

San Francisco, which had its five-game winning streak stopped, hit into five double plays.

Pirates 2, Reds 0

Dave LaPoint, 2-0, won his second consecutive game since his trade to Pittsburgh and his fifth straight overall, giving up four hits in 7⅔ innings. Jim Gott finished with one-hit relief for his 24th save.

Andy Van Slyke hit a two-run homer, his 22nd, as the Pirates ended a 25-inning scoreless streak.

LaPoint, traded from the Chicago White Sox on Aug. 13 for reliever Barry Jones, has given up one run and seven hits in 14⅔ innings for Pittsburgh.

Cardinals 7, Braves 0

Bob Forsch pitched a six-hitter and Tom Brunansky drove in three runs, including two with a first-inning homer.

Forsch, 8-4, struck out five, walked two and allowed one runner past second base in first complete game since he shut out Pittsburgh on Aug. 10, 1987.

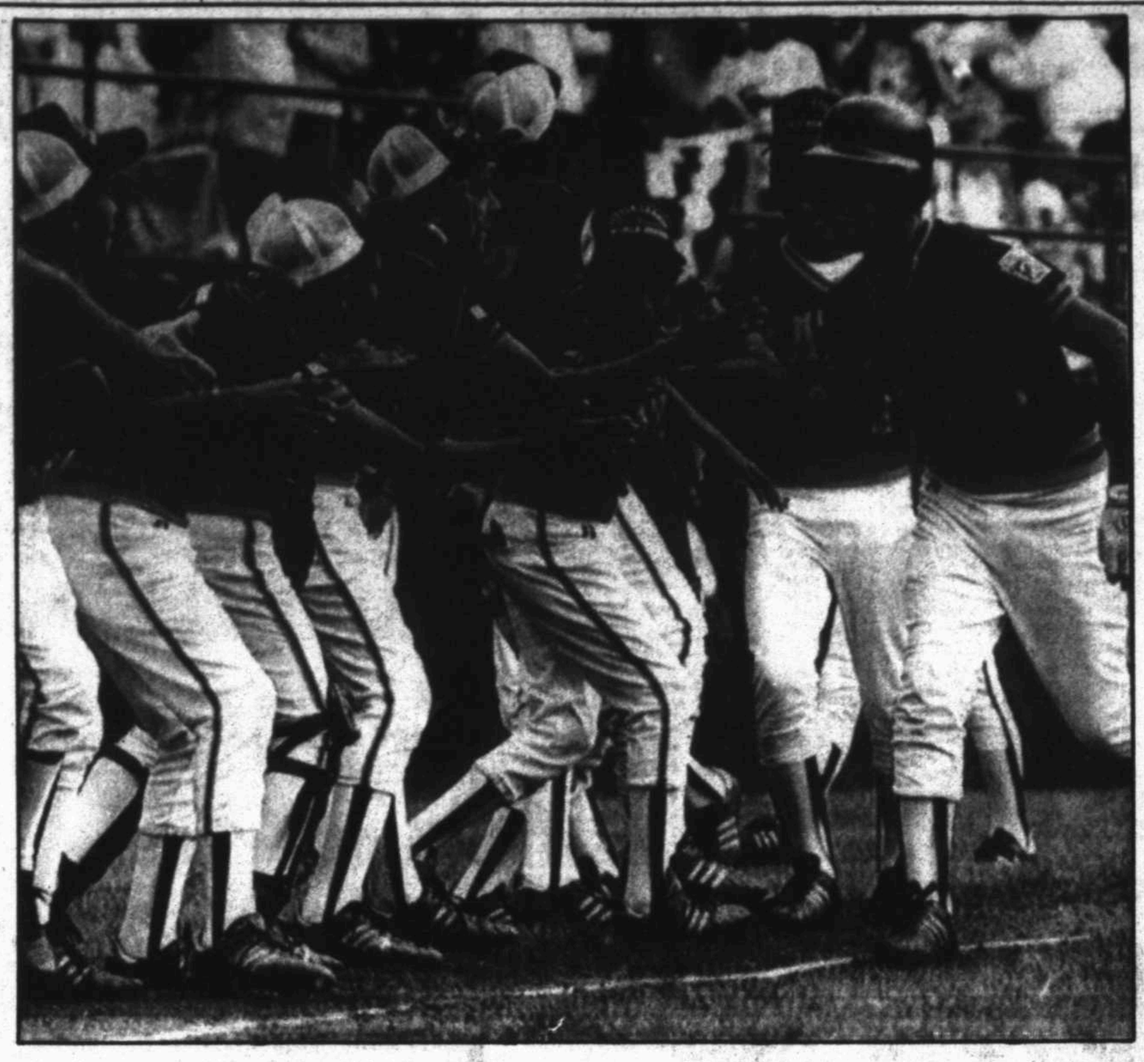

John Smoltz, 1-4, pitched 1⅔ innings and gave up six hits and four runs. Nine of the 14 batters he faced reached base. Jim Morrison, normally an infielder, made his second mound appearance this season, pitching the ninth.

Padres 9, Phillies 1

Carmelo Martinez hit a pair of two-run homers and Ed Whitson, 11-8, pitched a seven-hitter, striking out seven, for his first complete game since July 26, 1987.

Kevin Gross, 11-10, pitched 3⅔ innings, his shortest outing in 27 starts, allowing seven hits and six runs.

Jaime Montenegro of Panama is congratulated for a homer against Taiwan in the first game of the Little League World Series Tuesday, but Taiwan won the game, 5-4.

Taiwan stages rally to nip Panama

Far East going for 18th Little League title in 22 years

WILLIAMSPORT, Pa. (AP) — Taiwanese teams have a reputation for walloping opponents at the Little League World Series with power hitting and strong pitching.

While the opposition scratches out runs with infield hits and base running, the Taiwanese knock the ball over the 210-foot fence.

Curundu, Panama, gave Far East champion Tai Chung, Taiwan, a taste of Taiwanese medicine Tuesday in the opening game of the Little League World Series.

Panama, the Latin American champion, took a 4-0 lead on three home runs through the top of the third inning before Taiwan rallied to win 5-4.

"The last two innings, we gradually recovered our batting power, knowing the timing of the pitches," Taiwan Manager Ta-Yuan Lai said through an interpreter.

Taiwan eked out two runs in the third inning and a run in the fourth off curveball-throwing Panama pitcher Eric Osorio.

Taiwan scored on a total of four singles, two walks and two wild pitches to draw within 4-3.

With one out in the bottom of the sixth inning, Chung-Liang Lin doubled, Fong-An Tsai singled and Ching-Chung Chang hit into a fielder's choice to third, scoring Lin and tying the score at 4-4.

After an intentional walk to Taiwan's leadoff hitter, Jui-Cheng Chen grounded a ball to the right of the mound. Osorio knocked the ball down but slipped on the wet field, allowing Tsai to score the winning run.

Panama Manager Luis Silgado said bad breaks cost his team, which comes from an impoverished barrio in Panama City.

"We didn't have luck in the game," Silgado said through an interpreter.

Jaime Montenegro and Amable Gordon had solo home runs and Marcos Perez hit a two-run homer for Panama.

"We got all our runs on home runs. They got theirs running the bases," Silgado said.

In 15 Little League World Series, Taiwan has been eliminated only once in the first round, a 3-2 loss to Chinandega, Nicaragua, in 1970.

The Far East has won 17 of the last 21 Little League World Series. Latin American hasn't won since Monterrey, Mexico, took back-to-back championships in 1957 and 1958.

Chen, who moved from shortstop to pitcher with no one out in the second inning, was the winner. He allowed two runs on five hits. He struck out seven and didn't walk a batter.

Osorio allowed eight hits while striking out six and walking five, one intentionally.

Kerrville faces 28-4A probe

AUSTIN (AP) — Allegations that Kerrville Tivy High School last season provided free motel rooms, food and prints of pictures to football officials in possible violation of University Interscholastic League rules will be heard by a District 28-4A executive committee in New Braunfels on Tuesday.

In a letter to the seven District 28-4A schools, UIL director Bailey Marshall asked the committee — made up of superintendents or principals from New Braunfels, New Braunfels Canyon, Boerne, San Antonio Alamo Heights, Schertz Clemens and Kerrville — to investigate three possible violations.

The first allegation, according to the Austin American-Statesman, was that Kerrville supplied officials with a motel room before and after one, or possibly more, home games, even though they did not live far enough from Kerrville to merit the accommodations. The second allegation was that the school provided hors' d'oeuvres before and after games, and the third was that representatives of the school photographed the officiating crew and then provided prints of the pictures.

Kerrville Coach Donnie Laurence said Tuesday he had checked with the UIL, and "it's all legal."

"We give a sack lunch to the officials after the game, and it's all just as legal as can be," he said. "We've already checked on the pictures, and we couldn't find anybody who took any. Somebody might have, but I don't know about it."

If visiting schools agree, officials may receive up to $15 per day for meals and may be compensated for lodging, the American-Statesman said.

Rangers fall apart in wild ninth against Kansas City

Associated Press

The Kansas City Royals had a wild time in Texas.

The Royals combined six walks with four hits and a wild pitch, rallying for eight runs with two outs in the top of the ninth inning Tuesday night for a stunning 11-7 victory over the Texas Rangers.

"You've got a four-run lead going into the ninth, you've got to figure the bullpen's going to do the job," Rangers manager Bobby Valentine said. "But we ran into big trouble. We gave it away. We walked it away."

Trailing 7-3, George Brett began the comeback with a single. Later, he drew a bases-loaded walk that put Kansas City ahead. The Rangers used four pitchers while Valentine and catcher Jim Sundberg were ejected.

"Winning like this has tremendous possibilities for us," Manager John Wathan said. "Now we have to take advantage of it. It's an entirely different mood in the clubhouse tonight. The music's blaring. Everybody's happy."

Texas starter Jeff Russell held the Royals to five hits and left after eight innings with a four-run lead.

"Jeff said he had nothing left," Valentine said. "It had been a long game. It was a situation where Jeff was gassed and where Mitch (Williams) hadn't pitched and I could get him into the game. But he just didn't have it."

New York's Dave Winfield ...third strike tantrum

Brett met Williams a leadoff single and Brad Wellman and Bill Buckner drew one-out walks.

Dale Mohorcic, 2-6, struck out Bo Jackson, but pinch hitter Danny Tartabull got a two-run single and Willie Wilson's RBI single pulled Kansas City within 7-6.

Kurt Stillwell walked to load the bases and Kevin Seitzer's walk tied the score. Sundberg was ejected for arguing and reliever Guy Hoffman then walked Brett, forcing home the go-ahead run.

Valentine was ejected by home plate umpire Tim Tschida after Brett's walk, which capped 12 straight balls by Texas pitchers.

"Several of those pitches could have been called strikes," Mohorcic said. "But when a guy's a little wild I think the umpire has a tendency that when you throw a good pitch, he's going to think it's an accident and call it a ball."

A wild pitch by Craig McMurtry enabled another run to score, Pat Tabler walked and Wellman hit a two-run single.

"I never said anything to him," said Valentine, explaining his third ejection this season and 17th of his career. "I was asking my catcher where the pitch was on the walk to Seitzer. I was upset, no doubt, but there's nothing in the rules that says you can't be upset."

"He (catcher Mike Stanley) said the pitch was down the middle. I didn't say he (Tschida) was blind or anything. But he thought I was showing him up."

Steve Farr, 4-2, got the victory.

Twins 7, Tigers 5

Kent Hrbek's second homer of the game, a two-run shot in the 10th inning at the Metrodome, led Minnesota over Detroit for the 10th straight time.

The Twins are 10-1 against the AL East leaders this season. In last year's AL playoffs, Minnesota beat Detroit in five games. The Tigers had not lost 10 consecutive times to the same team since Boston beat them in 1975.

Hrbek hit a two-run homer in the first inning, later singled and then homered in the 10th after Kirby Puckett singled off Mike Henneman, 6-3. All 24 of Hrbek's home runs have come against AL East teams, six versus Detroit.

Jeff Reardon, 1-4, won his first game since last Sept. 13. The Twins won their first extra-inning game in six tries this season.

Red Sox 10, Angels 2

Mike Greenwell drove in his major league-leading 100th run, sending Mike Boddicker and Boston over California.

Greenwell went 3-for-4 with an RBI single that capped a three-run fifth inning and put the Red Sox ahead 3-2. Wade Boggs also had three hits and raised his AL-leading average to .359.

Jim Rice, Rich Gedman and Todd Benzinger homered for host Boston.

Boddicker, celebrating his 31st birthday, scattered six hits over 7⅓ innings and raised his record 10-14 overall and 4-2 for the Red Sox.

Chuck Finley, 7-12, took the loss.

Yankees 5, Athletics 4

Tommy John was a loser, but the New York Yankees weren't.

John, despite another strong pitching performance, failed to gain career victory No. 286 because Dave Righetti squandered a 4-0 lead.

But after Oakland rallied for four runs in the eighth, the Yankees scored one in the ninth on Don Mattingly's single and won.

Rafael Santana, Claudell Washington and Mattingly each stroked a single against Greg Cadaret in producing the run that kept the Yankees from extending their losing streak to a season-high five games and enabled them to cut their distance from first place to five games.

The flurry of singles became necessary when Righetti failed in a save situation for only the second time in his last 12 opportunities, dating to June 11.

John left the game with one out and two on in the eighth, having allowed no runs and five hits.

"I got the ball up in the middle of the strike zone and I didn't get it in where I wanted it," Righetti said.

"I threw the ball right down the chute. On Steinbach's hit, the slider stayed right in the middle of the plate instead of going down; it's a good pitch to hit.

"On Hubbard, I wanted the ball in on his hands, but it stayed out over the plate.

"I got the ball in on Phillips, but he flared it."

AL Roundup

Blue Jays 7, White Sox 2

Fred McGriff, Jesse Barfield and Ernie Whitt homered and Toronto sent Chicago to its sixth straight loss. The start of the game at Exhibition Stadium was delayed 2 hours, 13 minutes by rain.

McGriff tripled and scored on Barfield's single, giving him 500 career RBI, for a 2-1 lead in the second. McGriff hit a 452-foot homer, his 29th, and the two-run shot made it 5-1 in the sixth.

Barfield hit a two-run homer, his 14th, and Whitt had a solo homer, his 10th.

Jim Clancy, 7-15, got the victory and Duane Ward picked up his 10th save. Melido Perez, 11-8, was the loser.

Indians 6, Brewers 2

Joe Carter doubled twice and Rich Yett pitched five-hit ball for seven innings as Cleveland won at Milwaukee.

Paul Zuvella hit an RBI double during a three-run fifth and Carter and Mell Hall had run-scoring doubles during a three-run seventh.

Yett, 8-4, helped the Indians end a three-game losing streak. Bill Wegman, 10-11, dropped his fifth straight decision since July 19.

BILL GRIMES

Day coming for professional athlete in White House

Grimes

This is an unusual year. How does a guy like me pick a President from among a former college cross-country runner and a former lefthanded-throwing first baseman, both of which I have been?

Much has been made of a presidential candidate's athletic interests. This year is no exception. Michael Dukakis has his speed walking, and George Bush has his jogging. Dukakis used to jog, too, but gave it up after developing plantar fascitis.

(I'll let you wonder what that is.)

Reporters have trailed Dukakis while on a walk, while Secret Service men are frequently seen jogging with Bush. After all, they have to be on the alert for some airhead throwing beer cans out their window, just like the rest of us joggers.

If elected, Bush wouldn't be the first presidential jogger (though Dukakis would be the first President who ran in the Boston Marathon, which he did as a teenager in the early 1950s.). That honor, at least since the current fitness boom started, goes to the oft-lamented Jimmy Carter, who frequented both the South Lawn of the White House and the trails around the Camp David presidential retreat.

For the most part, Americans seem to think the most viable presidential candidates need some sort of athletic background. I don't know if I'd make a serious judge of character based on a candidate's athletic interests, however. Richard Nixon was (and is) an avid baseball and football fan.

STILL, GOING all the way back to Theodore Roosevelt (1901-09), voters have identified with athleticism in a presidential candidate.

After replacing the corpulent, cigar-smoking William McKinley upon the latter's assassination in 1901, exploits of Roosevelt's background as a North Dakota rancher came to the fore. TR was also known as an impressive big-game hunter, as well as an all-around tough guy.

Roosevelt's successor, William Howard Taft (1909-13), reportedly wasn't much of a sports fan, but did become the first President to throw out the first ball at a major league season opener in 1911.

Even the thin, frail Woodrow Wilson (1913-21) had been a pretty good baseball player at Princeton in the late 1870's. But from there, you have to skip toward Dwight Eisenhower (1953-61) to find a President with developed athletic ability.

In fact, Ike may have been the best natural athlete ever to ascend to the presidency. Not only was he a standout football player at West Point, before a knee injury derailed his hopes at a varsity letter, But the future general was also reported to be a fine baseball player.

Maybe in these times, Ike would have foregone West Point for an athletic scholarship at Kansas or Kansas State, or maybe even a pro baseball player. How would history have been changed if he'd forgotten about that military nonsense?

WOULD WE really be speaking German?

In later years, of course, Ike was an avid golfer.

Nixon (1969-74) wasn't much of a golfer, but he did ride the bench for the Whittier College football team in the mid 30s. Later of course, he became famous for placing congratuatory phone calls to the Super Bowl champions.

But we're getting ahead here. No matter what you think about his politics, one can't deny that John F. Kennedy (1961-63) may have been one of the most rabidly athletic presidents — despite a virtual what's what of physical ailments.

Kennedy was known for orchestrating some of the famous Hyannis Port touch football games, but he had been on the Harvard swim team in the late 1930s and was well-thought of as a sailor. This aquatic background no doubt came in handy when Japanese navies sunk his PT boat during WWII and he had to swim miles to safety with a wounded buddy in tow.

Gerald Ford (1974-77), of course, was a good football player on a horrible University of Michigan team in the mid 1930s. Maybe these days, he would have postponed law school to sign a free-agent contract in the NFL or CFL.

But pro sports didn't pay much during the Depression, so off he went to law school and a long political career.

(Now, they go to pro sports and then start the political career.).

Jimmy Carter (1977-81) took up jogging during his 50s, and has been an avid fly fisherman for most of his life. And, Dutch Reagan's (1981-present) college football career at Eureka College has been well-documented. Reagan was also the first ex-sports announcer to descend into the abyss of electoral politics (Bob Costas, beware).

Dutch also thinks it's cool to phone world champions on their night of triumph. Guess some folks get a charge out of that.

I feel confident that Dukakis and Bush will carry on the traditional involvement with presidents and athletics, even though neither was a world-class nor pro athlete in his youth.

THE DAY is coming, however, when we will probably have a pro athlete in the White House as a resident — not just as an honored guest. Former pro football quarterback Jack Kemp fell short in his bid this year, but he's going to probably get another shot at it, if he stays in the public eye.

Then there's Bill Bradley, and Tom McMillen...both of whom who are elected officials...and Roger Staubach...who maybe could be if he so desired.

These folks just demonstrate the pervasive intertwining of sports and elective office in recent years.

I don't know if that really matters, but it's kinda fun to think about. So I thought about it and shared my thoughts with you.

Aren't you thrilled?

Take the Simmer out of summer meals with

Beat-The-Heat MAIN DISH SALADS

When the temperature soars and no one feels like eating, much less cooking, main dish salads come to the fore. Fast and fuss-free to prepare, they wake up warm-weather appetites and keep the cook and kitchen cool.

Creating beat-the-heat main dish salads can be an easy act of improvisation. Home economists suggest starting with deli-cooked meat or poultry, or convenient canned tuna. Add a colorful combination of the season's finest salad fixings, toss with a zesty dressing and chill to allow flavors to mingle. What could be easier?

To add sizzle to the salad's dressing in short order, look to versatile picante sauce, in the cook's choice of mild, medium or hot. Stirred into sour cream, mayonnaise or a favorite creamy dressing, or briskly blended into a vinaigrette, it provides a one-of-a-kind flavor boost and just the desired degree of jalapeno pepper "punch." Served solo as a zesty dressing, it adds lively, garden-fresh flavor at a slim five calories per tablespoon. Try it in the following summer-easy salads, then experiment on your own, and watch your cool summer salads become the season's hottest menu items

Add sizzle to summer menus with the lively flavors and cooling crunch of Thai-Style Beef Salad, Artichoke and Chicken Salad, Spicy-Sweet Chicken Salad and Tex-Mex Tuna Salad. A sure-fire way to wake up warm weather appetites, they rely on the zesty, garden-fresh flavor of picante sauce for their tongue-tingling taste appeal.

THAI-STYLE BEEF SALAD

- 1/2 cup picante sauce
- 1/4 cup chopped cilantro
- 2 tablespoons vegetable oil
- 1 tablespoon soy sauce, as desired
- 1 to 2 teaspoons shredded fresh ginger, as desired
- 3/4 pound deli-sliced roast beef, cut into 1/2-inch strips
- 4 cups shredded romaine lettuce
- 1 cup halved cucumber slices
- 1 small red or yellow bell pepper, cut into short, thin strips
- 1/2 cup sliced radishes
- 1/3 cup thin red onion rings

Combine picante sauce, cilantro, oil, soy sauce and ginger; mix well. Toss 1/2 cup of the picante sauce mixture with meat. To serve, toss remaining picante sauce mixture with lettuce, cucumber, yellow pepper, radishes and onion rings. Arrange lettuce mixture on serving platter; top with beef mixture. Serve with additional picante sauce. Makes 4 servings.

ARTICHOKE AND CHICKEN SALAD

- 1 jar (6-1/2 ounces) marinated artichoke hearts
- 2/3 cup picante sauce
- 1/2 teaspoon salt
- 2 cups diced cooked chicken or turkey
- 1/3 cup thinly sliced red onion rings
- 1/3 cup sliced radishes
- 6 to 8 cherry tomatoes, halved or quartered, as desired
- 1 large ripe avocado
- Lettuce leaves (optional)

Drain artichoke hearts, reserving marinade; halve or quarter, as desired. Combine picante sauce, salt and reserved marinade in large bowl; mix well. Add chicken, artichoke hearts, onion and radishes; toss lightly. Cover and chill. To serve, peel and seed avocado; cut into 1/2-inch lengthwise slices. Cut each slice crosswise into thirds. Add to chicken mixture with tomatoes; mix lightly. Serve on lettuce, if desired, with additional picante sauce. Makes 4 servings.

TEX-MEX TUNA SALAD

- 2 cans (6-1/2 ounces each) OR 1 can (13 ounces) solid white tuna in water, drained and flaked
- 1/2 cup sliced ripe olives
- 1/2 cup sliced green onions with tops
- 1/2 cup thinly sliced celery
- 2/3 cup picante sauce
- 1/2 cup dairy sour cream
- 1 teaspoon ground cumin
- Lettuce leaves or shredded lettuce
- 12 taco shells

Combine tuna, olives, green onions and celery in medium bowl. Combine picante sauce, sour cream and cumin; mix well. Pour over tuna mixture and toss lightly. To serve, line taco shells with lettuce leaves; spoon tuna mixture into shells. Or, line individual serving plates with shredded lettuce; top with tuna mixture and surround with tortilla chips. Drizzle with additional picante sauce; top with additional sour cream, if desired. Makes 6 servings.

SPICY-SWEET CHICKEN SALAD

- 2/3 cup picante sauce
- 1/2 cup mayonnaise
- 1 tablespoon honey
- 2 to 2-1/2 cups diced cooked chicken or turkey
- 1 cup thinly sliced celery
- 1 cup seedless grapes, halved
- 1/3 cup chopped toasted pecans
- 1/2 teaspoon salt
- 1/4 cup sliced green onions with tops

Combine picante sauce, mayonnaise and honey in medium bowl; mix well. Stir in chicken, celery, grapes, pecans and salt. Cover and chill. Sprinkle with green onions and serve with additional picante sauce. Makes 4 servings, about 4 cups salad.

SOUTHWESTERN COBB SALAD

- 3/4 cup picante sauce
- 2 tablespoons bottled Italian dressing
- 3/4 teaspoon ground cumin
- 3 cups shredded lettuce
- 2 cups diced cooked turkey or chicken
- 1 can (8 ounces) red kidney beans, rinsed and drained
- 1 ripe avocado, peeled, seeded and diced
- 1 medium tomato, chopped
- 1 cup (4 ounces) diced monterey jack or cheddar cheese
- 6 slices crisply cooked bacon, crumbled

Combine picante sauce, dressing and cumin; mix well. Chill. Line large platter with lettuce. Arrange turkey, beans, avocado, tomato, cheese and bacon in rows over lettuce. To serve, pour picante sauce mixture over salad; toss. Serve with additional picante sauce. Makes 6 servings.

Midwestern cuisine relies on 'seasonality'

By TRISH HALL
New York Times News Service

It may be hard for born-and-bred Midwesterners to believe, but their region is being touted as the next mecca for food.

In Chicago the Heartland Food Society has been formed to try to improve the reputation of Midwestern food.

The American Institute of Wine and Food, an arbiter of taste, will hold a convention there in May, its first in the Midwest.

The region's first exhibition for its specialty food suppliers will be held in Chicago Sept. 18.

And restaurants that define their menus as Midwestern have recently opened in Chicago and Minneapolis.

In a way, it makes sense.

One by one, various sections of the country have affirmed their local cuisines.

Finally, the middle is getting its turn.

But is there, really, such a thing as Midwestern cuisine? And if there is, what is it?

For many Americans the Midwest is synonymous with salads of iceberg lettuce drowned in orange dressing and sprinkled with fake bacon that is texturally akin to bits of glass. If that is a cuisine, it is one they would rather not eat.

CHEFS IN THE Midwest are divided on whether the region has its own cuisine, or is even developing one.

But, as a two-week trip through part of the region makes clear, there are more good and more varied restaurants than a decade ago, with innovative chefs making a point of using indigenous foods.

Chefs have persuaded purveyors that there is a market for things like arugula and goat cheese.

Stephen Langlois, the chef at Prairie in Chicago, said that despite this year's poor weather, 90 percent of the food he is using comes from the Midwest.

Although their styles vary, the best Midwestern chefs believe in preparing food that is appropriate to the time of year.

"What Midwest cuisine represents is seasonality," said Leslee Reis, chef and owner of Cafe Provencal, Bodega Bay Cafe and Leslee's, all in Evanston, Ill.

"When it turns to winter here, you think of hearty stews. If I was cooking in Los Angeles, God forbid, I don't think I'd ever cook a stew."

Although many restaurants use the local bounty, some chefs are especially connected to the land and its yield.

Gregory Upshur, chef at Cousins Heritage Inn in Dexter, Mich., once asked some boys to kill rattlesnakes that had been seen near the restaurant.

"I skinned them and browned them with shallots," he said. "People were delighted to try them."

UPSHUR, WHO LIVES among muck farms that have dirt so rich it resembles potting soil, understands the sources of flavor in a way that urban dwellers may not.

"The deer around here eat alfalfa and corn and apples," he said. "They are what they eat, and they're fantastic tasting."

These chefs are finding a clientele among increasingly well-traveled customers who know more about food than they used to.

"Five years ago, if they saw terrine on the menu, they expected soup," said Lowell Pickett, who owns Dakota Bar and Grill in St. Paul. "There's been a dramatic increase in sophistication."

Still, the Midwest is the kind of place where signs over roadside restaurants simply say, "Food."

For many people, eating is utilitarian rather than experiential, and they prefer their meals simple, even bland.

"Some would say it's like the accent and speech pattern," said Ken Goff, the chef at Dakota, who is a native Minnesotan. "You get rid of anything that would give it any flavor."

Rather than fight the culture, Goff tries to raise it to its highest level.

Using ingredients from local farmers, he cooks familiar food with a twist, like turkey pot pie with yam-dill sauce, or a hot meat loaf sandwich with sun-dried tomatoes and smoked-onion gravy.

With these new restaurants providing a ready market, growers and producers are finding it worthwhile to provide foods once thought exotic.

FOR EXAMPLE, when Karen Odessa Piper opened L'Etoile in Madison, Wis., 12 years ago there was one local supplier of fresh vegetables.

Now she and her chef, Jim Spaeth, draw on dozens of local sources, not only for vegetables but also for other ingredients.

"Elk, venison, buffalo — we're just beginning to tap that," she said.

In Cleveland, Denise Fugo and Ralph DiOrio no longer import herbs and lettuce from California; they get what they need for their restaurant, Sammy's, from nearby growers.

The wares of these small producers have long been used by Michael Foley, the 35-year-old executive chef at Foley's and at Printer's Row in Chicago.

When he opened Printer's Row in 1981, customers were angry that his seasonally oriented menus did not have the dishes they expected.

"They said, 'Why can't I have a strawberry?'" Foley recalled.

"People didn't like it."

And they wouldn't touch Midwestern fish like pike. "They ate swordish and salmon," he said. "Big-name fish."

That has changed, but he would like to see even greater use of regional ingredients.

"I'm asking that people buy locally to keep the farmer in business," said Foley, whose menus include dishes like duck braised with apples and veal with leeks, sweet onions and chives.

Although the Midwestern economy depends heavily on the food business, just-picked ingredients are often an anomaly.

"People say, 'What did you do to this food to make it so good?'" said Brian Polcyn, the 28-year-old chef at the Pike Street Restaurant in Pontiac, Mich.

"I say, 'All I did was use fresh food.'"

Avoiding middlemen pays off financially, too.

BASIL FROM a distributor is four times as expensive as basil from a farmer, Polcyn said.

And using local supplies gives a chef greater control.

Harlan Peterson buys snap peas, baby lettuce, basil, baby squash, fresh raspberries, wild leeks and morels from local sources for Tapawingo, his restaurant in Ellsworth, Mich.

If the food doesn't meet his standards, he doesn't have to buy it. When a delivery is flown in from another region, he said, "You just have to take it."

A few chefs go further: they believe the Midwest has a specific cuisine that was hidden by the homogenization of food in this country after World War II.

Defining it is the problem.

"Whatever it will be, it will have come from the farm," said Tim Anderson, an Arkansan who is executive chef at Goodfellow's in Minneapolis.

Anderson, the former executive chef at Routh Street Cafe in Dallas, describes his food as simple home cooking, but it isn't.

Neither is the food at Prairie, where Langlois also speaks of turning to the area's culinary roots, especially those of its Scandinavian and German settlers.

Still, even diners who praise the food consider the Midwestern label another kind of hype.

"They could call this a French restaurant and it wouldn't make a difference to me," said Bill Tulin, a Chicagoan who said he liked the food at Prairie.

But as some chefs try to define a Midwestern cuisine that reflects the cooking of longtime residents, new influences are being infused: in the Detroit area by an influx of Lebanese, and in the Twin Cities by Vietnamese, Laotians and Afghanis.

Indeed, many Midwesterners believe that the region is too varied, ethnically and in other ways, to have one cuisine.

The desire to draw more attention to the region's variety and quality prompted Kaye Zubow, a partner in Wild Game in Chicago, a food supplier, and Barbara Grunes, a cookbook writer, to form the Heartland Food Society last year.

A better image for Midwestern food might help draw young chefs who go to the coasts, knowing so little about the middle.

When public attention comes, it doesn't often focus on high cuisine.

"You don't have Wolfgang Puck here," said Gordon Sinclair, owner of Gordon, a restaurant in Chicago. "You have Chef Louis, who cooked a turkey in a paper bag on a television talk show."

Pasta salads feature a smorgasbord of vegetables

Copley News Service

Why did it take us all so long?

For at least a couple of generations we knew that macaroni salad was marvelous. So why didn't it occur to us until a few short years ago to try even a few variations on that theme?

Probably just because we were kind of stuck in culinary ruts during those years, and innovation was definitely not encouraged in most quarters.

But now, watch out! Almost anything goes in the pasta salad department.

ZITI SALAD NICOISE

Vinaigrette:
3 tablespoons red wine vinegar
1 teaspoon Dijon mustard
1 clove garlic, minced
¼ teaspoon hot pepper flakes
¼ teaspoon salt
½ cup olive oil
Salad:
12 ounces ziti or pasta twists
8 ounces fresh green beans
1 coarsely chopped red onion
½ cup sliced black olives
4 tablespoons minced parsley
2 tablespoons minced fresh basil or 2 teaspoons dried basil
1 teaspoon small capers, drained
2 (6½- or 7-ounce) cans solid-pack tuna in oil, drained
Garnish:
12 cherry tomatoes
1 (2-ounce) can flat anchovies
1 tablespoon minced parsley
3 hard-cooked eggs, quartered (optional)

Bring large pot of water to boil for pasta.

To make dressing, whisk together vinegar, mustard, garlic, hot pepper flakes and salt. Whisk in olive oil until well blended.

To make salad, add salt and pasta to boiling water and cook for 10 minutes. Add beans and boil 2-3 minutes more until beans are crisp-tender and pasta is al dente. Drain well in colander, then run cold water over pasta and beans to stop cooking.

Turn pasta and beans into large mixing bowl and add red onion, olives, parsley, basil and capers. Add dressing and toss to coat. Break tuna into pieces and add to salad. Toss gently to combine but take care not to break up tuna too much. (The salad may be served immediately or chilled up to 4 hours. Remove from refrigerator 30 minutes before garnishing and serving.)

To serve salad, spoon onto large platter or individual plates. Garnish with tomato and anchovies. Sprinkle with 1 tablespoon minced parsley. If using hard-cooked eggs, arrange them around edge of salad.

TARRAGON-THYME SHRIMP AND ORZO SALAD

Tarragon-Thyme Dressing
2 tablespoons white wine vinegar
2 teaspoons coarse-grain mustard
1 clove garlic, finely chopped
3 tablespoons vegetable oil
3 tablespoons olive oil
3 tablespoons chopped fresh tarragon or 1 tablespoon dried
1 tablespoon chopped fresh thyme or 1 teaspoon dried
¾ teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon black pepper
Salad:
8 ounces (1 cup) orzo or other small pasta
12 ounces medium shrimp, peeled and deveined
8 ounces plum tomatoes, cored, seeded and chopped into small cubes
1 cup frozen corn kernels, thawed
¾ cup thinly sliced scallions including green tops
½ cup diced red pepper
½ cup thinly sliced celery
Sprigs of fresh herbs, if available, for garnish

Bring large pot of water to boil for pasta.

To make dressing, whisk together vinegar and mustard in small bowl. Add garlic and gradually whisk in oils. Stir in herbs and season with salt and pepper.

Add salt to water and cook orzo in rapidly boiling water for 5 minutes. Add shrimp and continue to cook orzo and shrimp for 2 more minutes. Drain into colander and run cold water over them to stop cooking. Drain well and transfer to large bowl. Add tomatoes, corn, scallions, red pepper and celery and toss to combine.

Pour dressing over salad and toss gently to coat well. Serve immediately or chill for up to 8 hours. Garnish with herb sprigs before serving.

Crunchy vegetable salad packed with vitamins

By NANCY BYAL
Associated Press

For a change, serve vegetable salads such as this one on thinly sliced green pepper rings. The crunchy rings are packed with vitamin C.

GARDEN POTPOURRI

1½ cups shredded zucchini
⅓ cup shredded carrot
⅓ cup sliced radishes
⅓ cup chopped cucumber
2 tablespoons sliced green onion
⅓ cup plain low-fat yogurt
1 teaspoon sugar
¼ teaspoon celery seed
⅛ teaspoon garlic powder
Dash pepper
1 medium green pepper

In a mixing bowl combine zucchini, carrot, radishes, cucumber and green onion. For dressing, in a small bowl stir together yogurt, sugar, celery seed, garlic powder and pepper. Cover and chill vegetable mixture and dressing separately at least 1 hour.

To serve, cut top from green pepper and discard top, seeds and membranes. Thinly slice pepper into rings and arrange on 4 salad plates. Toss together vegetable mixture and dressing and spoon over pepper rings. Makes 4 servings.

Although Anne Herbig was born in El Campo, she grew up in Mexico and Cuba and said she learned to speak Spanish before she learned English. Now she has lived in Midland 10 years, and in that time she has become very involved in numerous activities.

She enjoys playing tennis, walking and taking aerobics classes to help keep fit. Although she used to play tournament tennis, now she just plays for fun. She said she also used to play golf, but when tennis became so popular, she found she enjoy it much more.

Mrs. Herbig has done work for Hospice, and was a member of the Symphony Guild and served on that board. She currently is a member of the Petroleum Wives' Club and a board member of the Midland Country Club Ladies Association.

On her creative side, Mrs. Herbig enjoys doing needlepoint. In fact, her needlepoint hobby led her into a parttime job at Needleworks, a store catering to all needlecraft needs. Her current needlecraft project is a Nativity scene.

"I hope to have it half finished by this Christmas and to finish it by next Christmas," Mrs. Herbig said.

She also redecorated her home with the help of Jean Pittman, a friend and interior decorator. Where her home is located is "Midland's best kept secret," according to Mrs. Herbig. But when she and her husband first looked at the home, "It had pea-green carpet on the wall," among other things that were not to Mrs. Herbig's tastes. "She (Mrs. Pittman) was fun to work with and easy to work with," Mrs. Herbig said. "We totally redid the house and lightened it up."

Mrs. Herbig and her husband, Jack, have three sons: John Herbig, a geologist in Midland; David Herbig, a second year law student in Houston; and Andy Herbig, a senior at Texas Christian University. The family attends the Episcopal Church of the Holy Trinity where Mrs. Herbig has served on the Altar Guild of which she is a past chairman, was a delgate to the Diocesan Council and is a member of the Episcopal Church Women.

She also helped put together the church cookbook, "Simply Divine Cookbook."

"I tested recipes and submitted recipes," Mrs. Herbig said.

However, Mrs. Herbig admitted, "I just almost don't cook any more."

But when she had three growing boys at home, some of their favorite dishes included fried chicken, rice and gravy, roast with mashed potatoes and gravy, meat loaf and macaroni and cheese.

The following recipes are a few of Mrs. Herbig's favorites.

CHOCOLATE PEANUT BUTTER BARS

½ pound (2 sticks) unsalted butter (melted)
2¼ cups graham cracker crumbs
1 cup chunky peanut butter
2 cups powdered sugar
2 cups semi-sweet chocolate chips (12 ounces)
2 tablespoons unsalted butter

Mix together melted butter, graham cracker crumbs, peanut butter and sugar. Press into the bottom of a 9x12-inch pan.

Melt together chocolate chips and 2 tablespoons butter in top of a double boiler. Spread the chocolate mixture on top ot the peanut butter mixture. Chil cut into small bars.

POPPY SEED BREAD

3 cups flour
1½ teaspoons salt
1½ teaspoons baking powder
2½ cups sugar
1½ teaspoon vanilla
1½ cups milk
1⅓ cups salad oil
1½ teaspoon almond flavoring
1½ tablespoon poppy seeds
3 eggs

Mix all ingredients together and beat for two minutes. Pour into two greased and floured loaf pans. Bake for one hour and 15 minutes at 350 degrees.

GLAZE:
¾ cup sugar
¼ cup orange juice
½ teaspoon vanilla
½ teaspoon almond flavoring
2 teaspoon melted butter

Mix together and pour over hot bread.

BAKED STUFFED ONION

Core out about one inch in top of an onion which has been cleaned. Fill with:
½ cube beef bouillon
Pat of butter
Parmesan cheese
Bread crumbs
Salt and pepper to taste

Wrap in foil and bake for one hour in 400 degree oven.

MACARONI SALAD

2 to 3 cups seedless green grapes, halved
1 8-ounce package shell macaroni
1 8-ounce can pitted ripe olives, drained and halved
¾ cup chopped green onions
2 to 3 ounces blue cheese, crumbled
Salt and pepper to taste
¼ teaspoon garlic powder
3 tablespoon fresh lemon juice
1 cup mayonnaise

Cook macaroni according to package directions. Drain. Combine hot macaroni with grapes, olives, onions, cheese, salt, pepper and garlic powder. Mix together lemon juice and mayonnaise until smooth. Combine macaroni mix and mayonnaise until evenly mixed. Refrigerate covered several hours or overnight before serving.

Mary of Puddin Hill not revealing secrets

By MELVA GEYER

GREENVILLE, Texas (AP) — Mary of Puddin Hill is not revealing the recipes that have propelled her fruitcake company into an international market, but she is going to share a collection of family and Puddin Hill store recipes.

The recipes, mixed with some history, will be in her new "Puddin Hill Cookbook," rolling off the press later this summer.

The volume is the work of Mary Lauderdale's daughter, Pud Kearns, who began the project 11 years ago and for the past two years has dedicated a great portion of her life to completing the work.

The family is quick to emphasize that none of the recipes in the Puddin Hill catalog is in the cookbook. "There are some family secrets that we have to keep," said Mary, who with her husband, Sam, began the business 40 years ago.

It was the 40th anniversary that gave Mrs. Kearns the impetus to complete the project which began after the death of her grandmother, Gertrude Horton, in 1977. Mrs. Horton, wife of the late Gen. Hal C. Horton, whose parents James and Mary, began the Puddin Hill legend, left 21 file card boxes full of recipes.

From those boxes, from some of the favorites served for lunch at the Puddin Hill Store and from a collection of recipes left to Mrs. Kearns by the late Stella Denny, Mrs. Kearns tested and then selected 335 recipes for the cookbook. Some of the recipes go back 150 years.

Mrs. Kearns said many of her grandmother's recipes were written on the back of bridge score sheets, presumably exchanged during an afternoon of card-playing.

She says putting the cookbook together was an educational experience. Many of the older recipes had to be translated for modern kitchens.

One recipe called for ham baked in skimmed milk. At the time the recipe was formulated, skimmed milk was whole milk with the cream skimmed off the top.

Another recipe called for a nickel bag of redhots. Mrs. Kearns had to find out how big a bag of red hot candies a nickel would buy, say 50 years ago.

"Also, the cookbook had to be written with the customer in mind — especially the out-of-state customer," Mrs. Kearns said.

She said she followed a basic rule in selecting the recipes: "If you can't buy it at Safeway in Greenville, you don't use the recipe."

She said that was one reason she called for canned tamales in one of the stuffed chicken recipes. "People in New Jersey can't go out and buy home-made tamales," she said.

There was also another key "ingredient" that went into the cookbook, according to Mrs. Kearns and Mrs. Lauderdale.

They picked out one person they knew who did not know — or care to know — a lot about cooking. They would always ask themselves, "Would she have this in her kitchen?"

Mrs. Kearns also spent a considerable amount of time researching the family history. She went back to about 1840, when the 620 acres southeast of Greenville became the property of James Horton. The original young Mary, walking across the soggy soil, exclaimed it was "just like walkin' through puddin," inspiring the name "Puddin Hill."

That history is run throughout the cookbook's 11 chapters and includes a number of humorous anecdotes provided by Mrs. Kearns' grandfather, including a memorable Christmas when he helped rescue a set of false teeth from the bottom of a well so a relative could eat Christmas dinner.

"These are recipes and stories of the people tied to this land ... I think when people read it they will laugh or at least smile to themselves about the stories. There's's a lot of humor," Mrs. Kearns says.

The chapters also include a humorous look at "Life at Club Lake" which features the single recipe contribution by Gen. Horton — for catfish bait.

There are also party menus in the East Texas tradition for "Weddings and Wakes," full dinner suggestions for "A Puddin Hill Christmas," and hints for serving dinner "When Company Comes."

There is also a chapter on "Sam and Mary" as they prepared the first batch of fruitcakes in Austin to help finance their college educations.

Each chapter is illustrated with sketches from the family hsitory by Dallas artist Bill Carr, who also created the cover for the hard-bound cookbook — a pastel of Mary past and present and a young Pud, much in the Norman Rockwell tradition.

Mrs. Kearns chose the self-publishing route becuase it allowed her more control over the final appearance of the cookbook. Pre-publication sales which will continue through Aug. 27 at the Puddin Hill store on Interstate 30, with a statewide kickoff Sept. 15 at Austin's Green Pastures Restaurant.

"I still can't believe it's finished," said Mrs. Kearns, who says she practically hibernated from January until May, testing recipes, getting the final draft finished, and proofreading.

"But it's something I'm extremely proud of," she said. "It's something I'm glad I've done."

Mix, cook, serve beans in same dish

Associated Press

HAWAIIAN BAKED BEANS

1 16-ounce can pork and beans with tomato sauce
1 15-ounce can three-bean salad, drained
1 8-ounce can crushed pineapple (juice pack)
⅓ cup bottled barbecue sauce
1 tablespoon Worcestershire sauce

In a 2-quart microwave-safe casserole combine pork and beans, three-bean salad, crushed pineapple, barbecue sauce and Worcestershire sauce. Cook, covered, on 100 percent power (high) 11 to 13 minutes or until heated through, stirring twice.

Americans top chocolate consumers

By JIM WOOD
Hearst News Service

Is there anything better than a hot fudge sundae, the thick chocolate sauce slightly melting the vanilla ice cream, making it just a little soupy? Treats like this are why chocolate is so popular.

We Americans are the world's top chocolate consumers, which is only fair because chocolate came originally from the Western Hemisphere. The conquistadors learned about it from the Aztecs, who regarded it as a royal drink. The Spaniards took it back to the Iberian court, whence it spread to the court of Louis XIV of France and to the Low Countries by way of the Spanish envoy, the Duke of Alba. (For more about the romantic history of chocolate, check the beautifully written account in "The Chocolate Cookbook" by Juliette Elkon Hamelecourt, published by Macmillan.)

At a symposium on chocolate last year at the Lawrence Hall of Science in Berkeley, Calif., experts said that chocolate's popularity is on the rise. Ghana is the world's leading producer, but other countries around the equator grow significant crops, including Brazil – the Western Hemisphere's largest producer –Nigeria, Cameroon, Ivory Coast, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Venezuela and Mexico. Yet for all its popularity, most people seem to know little about chocolate beyond how wonderful it tastes.

Chocolate comes from pods of white cocoa beans, 20 to 40 beans to a pod, which are fermented about a week to remove acids. Then the beans, which by now have changed from white to brown, are roasted and their meat (the nib) is separated from the shells. The nib, which is loaded with cocoa butter, is then processed in various ways to produce chocolate.

The language of chocolate can be a little misleading. Dutch process chocolate, for instance, does not necessarily come from Holland. The term refers to a process using a harmless amount of alkali to remove the bitterness from the chocolate.

White chocolate technically isn't chocolate at all, because, although it usually contains cocoa butter it has no chocolate liquor. Milk chocolate contains real milk or cream, while breakfast cocoa isn't necessarily destined for a breakfast beverage; "breakfast" refers to the amount of cocoa butter in the powder, at least 22 percent.

One of the big advantages of chocolate is its versatility. "The Chocolate Cookbook" offers over 200 delectable chocolate recipes from Apricot Fudge to Zuppa Inglese. The excellent "New Doubleday Cookbook," a general cookbook, has more than 90 entries under chocolate.

A few words about storage during the summer: Chocolate should be stored in a cool place – not over 78 F – but not the refrigerator, where, even if carefully wrapped, it will pick up other food odors. If chocolate is not kept cool enough it gets a whitish "bloom," caused by the cocoa butter separating. Such chocolate is still edible, though some chocoholics claim they can taste a difference.

Here are some good summer chocolate recipes from the American Dairy Association.

CHOCOLATE BREAD PUDDING

4 cups 1-inch French bread cubes (6-7 slices), crusts removed ½ cup coarsely chopped pecans
1½ cups milk
2 ounces unsweetened chocolate
3 eggs
1 cup firmly packed brown sugar
1 teaspoon vanilla extract
Whipped cream

Place the bread cubes and nuts in a buttered 1½ quart casserole. Heat the milk and chocolate in a small saucepan until the chocolate is melted. Beat with a hand mixer until the chocolate is completely dissolved. Meanwhile, beat the eggs and sugar until well blended. Stir in the chocolate mixture and vanilla. Pour over the bread and nuts. Let stand, covered, at room temperature, 30 minutes.

Preheat the oven to 325 degrees. Bake, uncovered, 30-35 minutes, or until a knife inserted near the center comes out clean. Cool at least 1 hour. Serve topped with whipped cream.

SPIRITED TRUFFLES

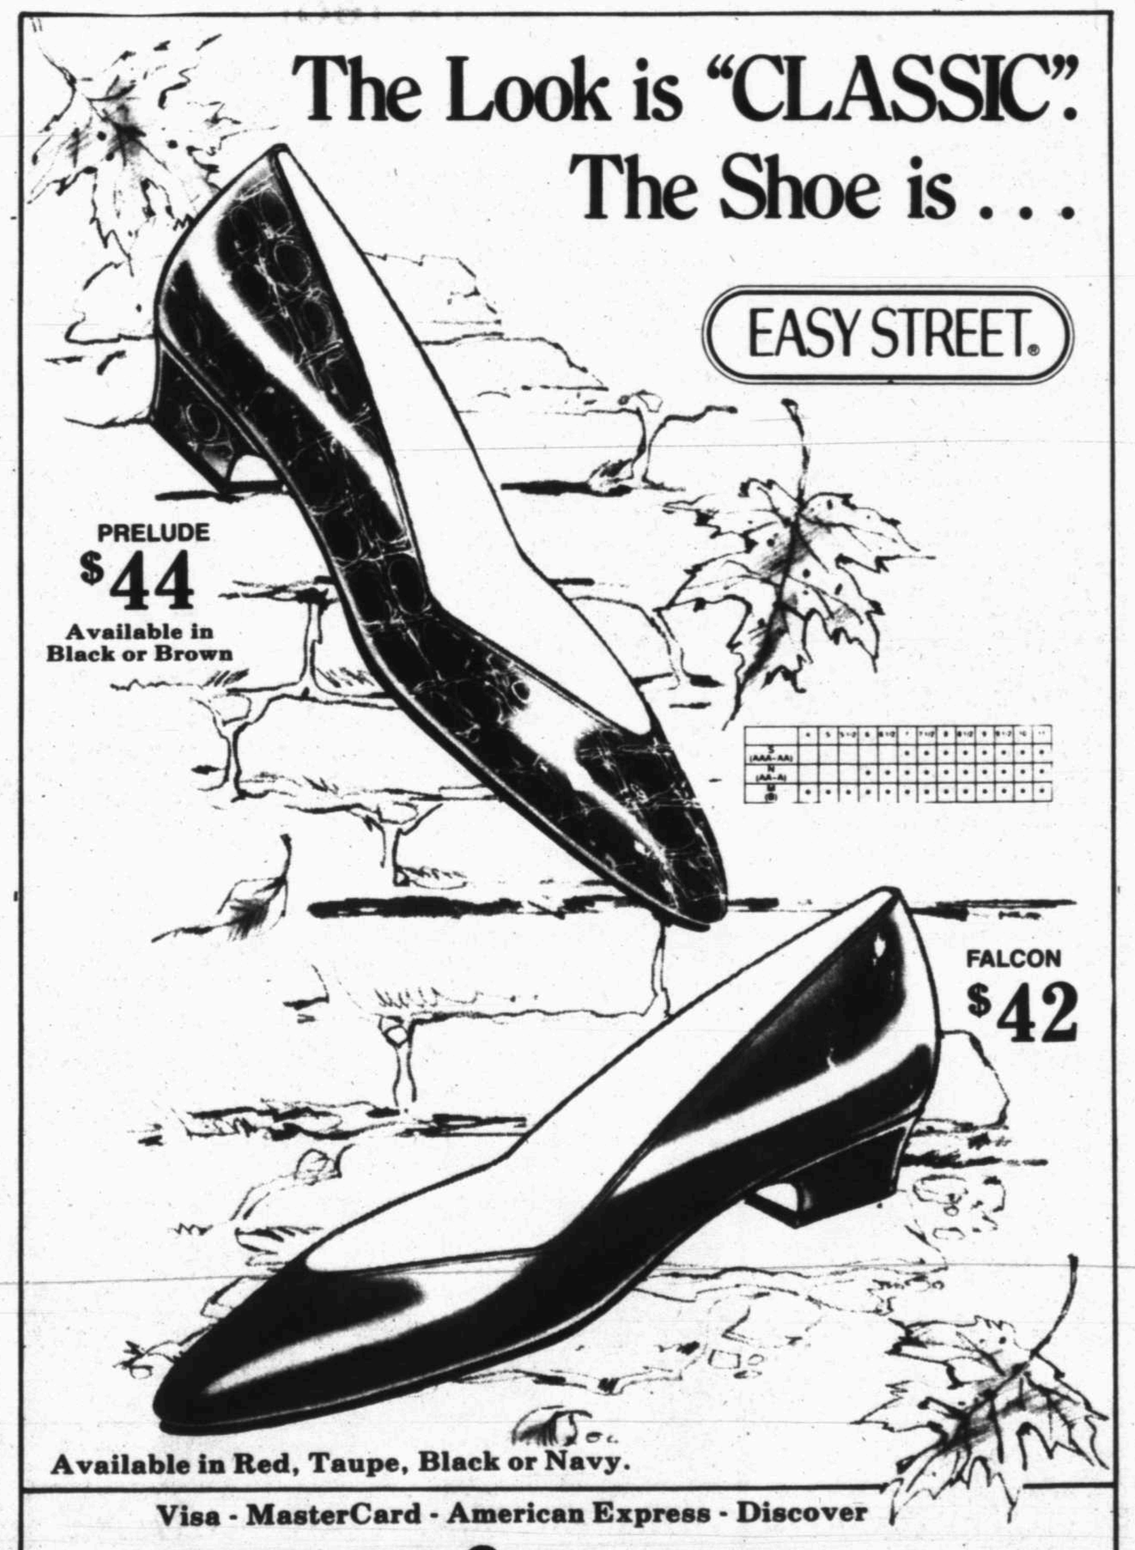

5 ounces milk chocolate, in pieces
4 ounces sweet baking chocolate, in pieces
1 ounce unsweetened chocolate, in pieces
¾ cup whipping cream
3 to 4 teaspoons raspberry, almond, peppermint or orange liqueur
6 ounces sweet baking chocolate
1 tablespoon vegetable oil
Unsweetened cocoa

Place the first three chocolates in the work bowl of a food processor or blender. Finely chop the choocolate. Heat the cream to just the simmering point. With the machine running, gradually add the cream, mixing until the chocolate is melted. Scrape down the sides of the container. Blend in the liqueur.

Cover a cookie sheet with waxed paper; butter the paper. Spoon the chocolate mixture in a thin layer onto the cookie sheet. Refrigerate until the chocolate is firm, about 30 minutes. Return to the work bowl or blender. Process until light and fluffy, about 30 seconds. Spread on the cookie sheet again and refrigerate until the chocolate can be formed into balls but is not hard, about 20 minutes. Carefully shape into 1-inch balls. Freeze until firm.

Melt 6 ounces sweet baking chocolate and oil in a small heavy saucepan over low heat. Dip the frozen chocolate balls into the melted chocolate mixture to coat. Place on a waxed-paper-lined baking sheet. Sprinkle lightly with cocoa. Keep frozen until ready to serve.

Cookbook's recipes unusual, eclectic

Author's Santa Fe restaurant founded 45 years ago

By CHARLES BRITTON
Copley News Service

From the cover of this book, the casual browser might conclude that it is devoted to the new Southwestern cuisine, that effort to take one of America's few native schools of cooking and modernize it within an inch of its poblanos.

As a matter of fact, several people around the office did just that.

"Hm," they said, flipping through the pages, "new Southwestern cuisine, huh?"

Actually, nope, not much. Rosalea Murphy opened the Pink Adobe in Santa Fe, N.M., 45 years ago in an innocent time before anyone had so much as dreamed up the notion of nouvelle anything, when chefs were not expected to be the hero-artists of civilization.

Murphy begins by accepting the label "eclectic" for her recipes.

"Because I came to Santa Fe from New Orleans, via San Antonio," she writes, "it is quite natural that my recipes are also ... influenced by the Creole and the Cajun."

The Pink Adobe is a famous restaurant. At least, the publisher assures us that it is. Frankly, I had never heard of it until I picked up this book, and, having taken a deep breath, I frankly admit the fact, thus branding myself an ignoramus.

If you've never heard of it either, you can come over here and huddle in the corner with me and hope that we can't qualify for a look from Murphy that, according to her publisher, "will bring a water buffalo to its knees."

If you have wanted to get beyond the canned chilies stage of Mexican cooking, this book can give you a hand. Murphy describes the different chilies, their uses and how to prepare them, as well as listing mail-order sources.

The skin of chilies is very tough, so chilies must be peeled before using. Roasting them loosens the skin. Remember when handling chilies to always wear gloves; the oils can irritate the skin and eyes.

To roast and peel green chilies: Place 12 pods on a cookie sheet under a broiler about 3 inches below the heating element. Turn the pods frequently as they begin to blister. When completely blistered (pods should be charred but not burned), remove from the broiler and wrap in a damp, clean dishtowel and allow to steam for 10 minutes. Remove the stem end, scrape out the seeds (if desired; much of the pepper's potency is in the seeds), and peel the outer skin downward.

The recipes in this collection range from the routine (boiled asparagus with butter, parsley and a sprinkle of Parmesan cheese) to the trendy (spinach with balsamic vinegar) to the traditional (arroz con pollo). This breadth is suggested by the following excerpts.

POTATO SALAD WITH GREEN CHILIES

2 pounds Idaho potatoes
4 fresh green chiles, roasted and peeled, or 1 (4-ounce) can whole green chilies
½ teaspoon sugar
2 tablespoons cider vinegar
2 tablespoons olive oil
1 teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon freshly ground black pepper
½ cup finely chopped onion
1 teaspoon prepared mustard
1½ cups mayonnaise
1 cup crumbled goat cheese

In salted water to cover, boil potatoes with skins on until tender, about 30 minutes, do not overcook.

When cool, peel potatoes and cut into ½-inch cubes. Cut chilies into 1½-inch strips. Combine chilies and potatoes. Gently toss with sugar, vinegar and olive oil. Add salt, pepper and onion. Mix mustard with mayonnaise and fold into potato mixture. Toss gently but thoroughly.

Turn into serving bowl and sprinkle top with cheese.

PINK ADOBE SPAGHETTI II

¼ pound butter
½ clove garlic
2 tablespoons chopped fresh parsley
1 tablespoon chopped fresh basil or 1 teaspoon dried basil
¼ cup olive oil
1 pound spaghetti, cooked

In 12-inch skillet; melt butter and press garlic into it. Add parsley and basil. Cook for 5 minutes over moderate heat, stirring constantly. Do not allow butter to boil.

Remove from heat and add olive oil. Chill to harden. Serve with hot spaghetti, letting diners help themselves to chilled sauce.

Yields: 6 servings.

MEATBALLS

1 medium onion, chopped
3 tablespoons butter
1½ pounds ground top round
1 pint sour cream
1 pinch fines herbes
½ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon pepper

In medium skillet, saute onion in 1 tablespoon of the butter. Remove onion, reserve butter. Mix onion with meat, half the cream, herbs, and salt and pepper. Form into 12 balls. Add remaining butter to skillet, and saute meat balls in this.

Remove meatballs from pan. Add rest of sour cream to pan. Scrape pan well and reduce cream to a light gravy; pour over meat balls.

SESAME CHICKEN IN ACORN SQUASH

Marinade:
1 1-inch piece fresh ginger root, peeled and sliced thin
2 tablespoons sesame oil
3 cloves garlic, peeled and halved
½ cup white wine
¼ cup soy sauce
Chicken:
2 whole chicken breasts, cut into ¾ inch strips
2 acorn squash, halved lengthwise
½ cup flour
4 tablespoons sesame seeds
3 tablespoons unsalted butter
3 carrots, peeled, sliced and blanched
20 snow peas, blanched
1 small head broccoli, cut and blanched

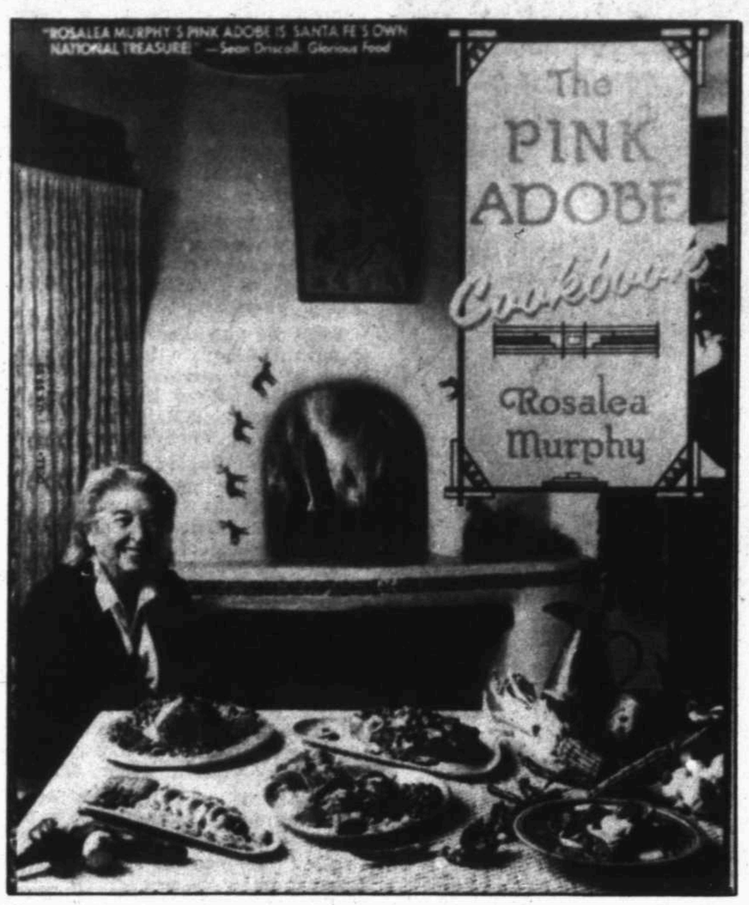

Combine the marinade ingredients in a large bowl. Marinate the chicken strips overnight.

Preheat the oven to 350 degrees. Place the squash cut side down in a 9x13x2 inch baking pan. Add approxiately ½ inch of water and bake the squash until tender, about 40 minutes.

About 15 minutes before the squash is done, combine the flour and sesame seeds. Remove the chicken from the marinate and roll the strips in this mixture.

Melt the butter in a skillet. Saute the chicken four to five minutes, until golden. Remove the chicken. Pour off the butter and crumbs. Add ¼ cup strained marinade to the skillet. Stir in the vegetables and cook until heated. Add the chicken and combine thoroughly. Spoon the chicken mixture into the baked squash halves.

Serves 4.

PESCADO CON SALSA VERDE

6 6-to-8-ounce halibut steaks, cut ½ thick
Salt and freshly ground black pepper to taste
½ cup flour
Salsa verde:
⅔ cup olive oil
½ cup minced onion
1 clove garlic, minced
3 tablespoons flour
2 cups clam juice
⅓ cup dry vermouth
1 teaspoon salt
⅓ cup minced fresh parsley
⅓ cup roasted, peeled, and chopped green chilies
2 tablespoons minced jalapeno or 2 chilies
2 tablespoons chopped fresh cilantro, for garnishp

Wash the halibut and pat dry. Spinkle with salt and pepper to taste, then dip in flour. Set aside.

In a heavy, 2-quart saucepan, heat ⅓ cup olive oil. Add the onion and garlic, and saute until wilted and transparent. Add the flour and mix well, then add the clam juice and vermouth. Stir constantly with a whisk until the sauce boils and thickens slightly. Reduce the heat and simmer for about two minutes.

Add 1 teaspoon salt, the parsley, green chilies and jalapeno and cook for about one minute. Keep warm in the top of a double boiler over hot water. In a heavy 12-inch skillet, heat the remaining olive oil over moderate heat. Add the fish and cook four minutes on each side until lightly browned.

On each serving plate, mask the fish with salsa verde. Garnish with cilantro.

GREEN CHILE RISOTTO

5 cups chicken broth
2 tablespoons butter
2 tablespoons olive oil
½ cup minced onion
2 cups arborio rice, well washed
⅓ cup vermouth
½ cup roasted, peeled and chopped fresh green chilies or 1 4-ounce can hot green chilies, chopped
⅔ cup grated Parmesan cheese
½ teaspoon white pepper

In a 2-quart saucepan, bring the chicken broth to a simmer. Keep the broth hot while heating the butter and olive oil over low heat in a 3-quart saucepan. Add the onion to the butter and oil and saute until limp. Add the rice, stirring with a wooden spoon, until the rice is well coated with the butter and oil. Add the vermouth, stirring until the wine is absorbed. Then add about ⅔ cup of the simmering broth, stirring until it is absorbed. Continue in this manner, adding about ⅔ cup of broth at a time until all is used and the rice is al dente. This procedure takes almost 30 minutes. Remove the pan from the heat and stir in the chilies, Parmesan cheese and pepper. Serve hot.

Chef's book chock full of foods' history, origins

New York News Service

Consider this simple meal: Corn on the cob with butter and salt, chicken with rice, lettuce tossed with olive oil and lemon, and ice cream. What could be more ordinary? More prosaic? More boring?

But its very ordinariness made it fascinating to Dr. Margaret Visser, a classicist whose interest in the meanings of everyday foods resulted in "Much Depends on Dinner," a book about the myth and history of that one meal's ingredients. The book, a best seller in Canada, was published in the United States this year by Grove Press and is now going into its second printing.

Visser's work, which is dense with detail and analysis, also offers food trivia that could enrich any cocktail party. The reader is told, for instance, that a Greek named Pithyllos kept his tongue in a bag between meals to preserve its sensitivity; that thousand-year-old popcorn can still be popped, and that eating ice cream makes the body warmer rather than cooler, because of the work it must do to balance the temperatures.

Although Visser, who teaches ancient Greek at York University in Toronto, clearly delights in telling these stories, she does it for a reason: to help people find greater meaning in their lives by recounting the origins and myths of the simple objects that surround them.

"We tend to think in our culture that something that is ordinary is not important," she said in a telephone interview. But in fact, it is the reverse. "It is only ordinary," she said, "because it is important." The ordinary, she said, orders our lives; the word "ordinary" comes from the Latin word for order.

Because people have lost touch with the fascination of the ordinary, she said, they have lost a sense of meaning, a meaning they deeply need. "In the modern culture," she said, "people are very, very bored."

In traditional cultures, Visser said, ordinary things are always imbued with significance. Food was sometimes worshiped, and always respected. The Mexican Indians, for instance, would breathe on ears of corn to accustom them to heat before throwing them in boiling water.

Visser said she would like to help people see modern life with the same kind of reverence and meaning. "The next time they eat a lettuce salad," she said, "I would like them to think about why they are eating that leaf, of all the leaves they could eat, and to realize that they don't make that choice in a vacuum."

Visser's rule of writing was simple: she filled her book with ideas that interested her, and left out whatever bored her. She did all of her research in Canada and in France, where she and her husband, Colin, the head of the drama department at the University of Toronto, also have a house. The book is eclectic and international, which may reflect Visser's life. She was born in Zambia and has lived in the Middle East, France, the United States and Canada.

Sources for the book included trade journals like Poultry Science and Food Engineering; reference works and encyclopedias on food, including the "Foods and Food Production Encyclopedia"; specialized books like "Corn: Improvement, Seed Productions and Uses"; magazine articles like "The Chemistry of Garlic and Onions," and occasionally even fiction.

Although that eclecticism provides great detail, her dependence on secondary sources — and a book this wide-ranging probably could not be produced without relying on them — means the reader cannot be assured that apocryphal food stories are not being recycled.

Some food experts noted that the book does not represent original research in the field, but nevertheless makes a contribution. "It's a very admirable idea," said Nach Waxman, owner of Kitchen Arts and Letters, a New York store devoted to books on food and wine. "I am a huge admirer of books that look at the underside of any phenomena."

Because she began as an amateur in the realm of food, Visser said, she learned a great deal in her research. Some topics, like corn, were easier to research because much has been written about them. Lettuce, though, was another story. Nothing had been done, so she began with what she knew: "I dimly remembered reading a book about Adonis, and it mentioned lettuce, so that was the first thing." Butter, too, was surprisingly unplumbed territory.

She found that ancient myths are sometimes reflected in modern attitudes. Some people feel uncomfortable about salt in their food, supposedly because of health concerns about its effects. But salt has always been viewed by society as powerful and dangerous; some people still throw salt over their shoulders when it is accidentally spilled, to ward off trouble.

Today, she said, most people are unaware of the myths that inform their food choices and tend to devalue ritual. Even that, though, says something about the culture.

"Nothing more directly expresses our loathing of hierarchy," she writes, "than the precut, precoated, ground and reconstituted portions, often computer calculated to be equal, which we get as fast food."

She is now writing a book about table manners, which will look more closely at modern rituals of eating and how they are changing. The loss of certain rituals, she said, symbolizes profound shifts. Some families, for instance, infrequently eat dinner together. "It's a symptom," she said. "It means to me a breakup of the family bond."

DEAR ABBY

Fund raisers 'pre-buy' sales anger supporter

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: If you can solve this, you will be helping hundreds of organizations that raise money by putting on "white elephant" sales, garage sales, bake sales, used book sales, etc.

I'm referring to "pre-buying" privileges given to committee members. For years, I've watched these well-to-do women snatch up designer clothes, rare books and the choice items at rock-bottom prices. The public never even gets a chance to see them!

Don't they realize that it is those special treasures that bring in the customers? This year I saw a museum-quality book of poetry "sell" for a dollar — before the sale started.

I once baked and decorated a gorgeous cake for my club's bake sale to raffle off. I'm sure they could have made $25 from it. It was snapped up by the head of the bake sale committee — for $5.

I raised this issue and got the cold shoulder. Abby, the only organizations I know of in this town that do not allow members special pre-sale privileges are the Lions Club and the Junior League.

Any ideas for halting these ripoffs? — IN THE STATE OF WASHINGTON

DEAR IN: Yes. Those who are responsible for the sale, auction, raffle or whatever should declare: "The committee shall agree on the sale price, then mark each item with the asking price. And only after the public has had first crack at all the merchandise should it be offered to members of the organization. No exception." Period.

DEAR ABBY: My problem is a couple of years old, but it still bothers me. I have a sister and a brother. All of us are married and only a few years apart in age. A couple of years ago, my mother had two very nice rings. One was her engagement ring from our father, and the other was her own mother's ring. My mother asked my sister to choose the ring she wanted, then Mother gave my brother's wife the other one. I was overlooked completely. To make matters worse, my mother told everyone involved not to tell me. (I found out from a relative who didn't know it was supposed to be a secret.)

I am very hurt because my mother chose my sister-in-law over me to give something important to. The ironic part is that my sister-in-law and my brother are now getting divorced — and there goes the ring!

Every time I see my mother, I think of this ring business and feel hurt and resentful. I avoid going over to see her. I don't know what to do. I have two faces — one feels guilty for not showing my mother the affection and attention a daughter should, and the other one can't seem to get over the hurt I feel. It's not really the ring; it's the idea that I was passed over in favor of my sister-in-law.

What should I do? — HURT

DEAR HURT: Call your mother and ask to meet with her — just the two of you alone. And when you meet, be totally honest. Say, "Mother, you hurt me." Then tell her why — without being judgmental or unkind. This way, the cold war — and your feelings of guilt — will come to an end.

Whether she apologizes or explains is not important. But everything will be out in the open and you will have cleared the air.

Is your social life in a slump? Get Abby's booklet, "How to Be Popular" — for people of all ages. To order, send your name and address, plus check or money order for $2.89 ($3.39 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Popularity Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)

Food additive may cut cholesterol

Copley News Service

If the cholesterol in some foods is so bad for us, why not simply remove it before eating?

That's exactly what researchers at Iowa State University have done with normal homogenized milk, and they hope to do it with eggs, meats, cheeses and other foods.

But the process isn't that simple. The human body regularly cuts cholesterol levels in foods we've eaten using an enzyme secreted in the large intestine. That same enzyme can also be found in cucumber, soybean and corn leaves.

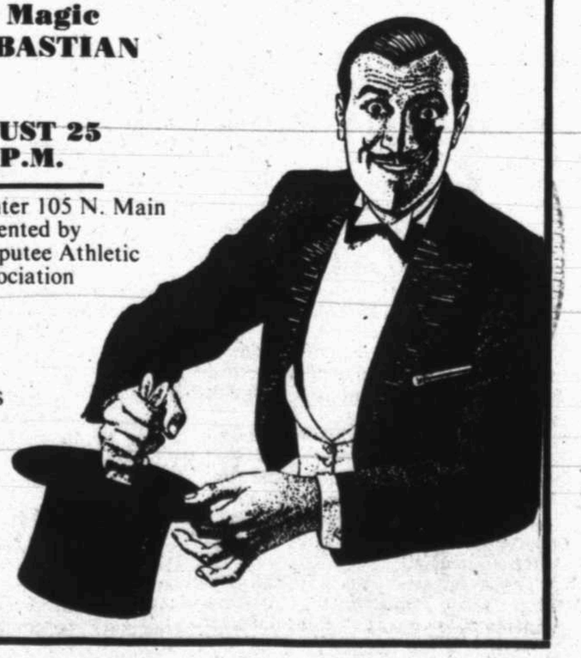

So researchers hope to create a food additive that will either be mixed in during processing or right at the table before you chow down.

Fruits of summer inspire no-bake pies

Copley News Service

Glorious peaches. Tangy plums. Mellow nectarines. Scarlet raspberries.

It is the soft fruits of summer that — more than any other season's bounty — inspire the baking of pies. And yet, in the sweltering days of late summer, what cook feels like turning on the oven?

Susan Purdy to the rescue.

Faced with this very dilemma one summer afternoon in her Connecticut kitchen, the author of the recently published "As Easy As Pie" (Atheneum, $22.95, also now available in paperback), decided to experiment with some no-bake crusts and fillings. Her efforts produced a galaxy of colorful, cool, simple and delicious pies that are among the most satisfying desserts we have tasted in a long time.

Purdy, who teaches pastry and pie-baking classes at the Silo Cooking School in New Milford, Conn., has had many encounters with students terrified of making piecrust. Understanding the need for quick-and-easy crust recipes that are elegant and yet don't require special temperature conditions and handling, she developed a variety of no-bake crumb-and-nut crusts that require virtually no skill to prepare correctly.

Her imaginative creations include such crust combinations as graham-nut, chocolate-pecan, coconut.

"These piecrusts are virtually foolproof," Purdy told us as we were having visions of her Two-Berry Orange Cream Pie in Amaretto-almond crust, "but I do have a few hints for giving them optimum taste and texture."

When making nut or nut-crumb crusts, Purdy advises toasting the nuts first at 300 F for 5-6 minutes on a jelly roll pan. (This toasting may be done on a cool day and the nuts may be frozen until needed.)

Avoid grinding the nuts alone in a blender as they will turn into a paste. Rather, blend them either with cookie crumbs or use a mouli grater.

Then, when pressing the crust into the pie plate with your fingers or the back of a spoon, make certain there are no thick areas where the sides of the plate meet the bottom.

Finally, be sure the crust is firmly chilled for at least 30 minutes before filling it.

"Summer fruit pies really lend themselves to creativity," claims Purdy, who advises that all of her crusts and fillings may be mixed and matched according to taste. She likes to think of the instructions given below as master recipes or jumping-off points for the cook's own inventiveness.

Purdy also believes in responding to the inspiration of the fruits in the market that look most appealing.

For example, if you are making the Two-Berry Orange Cream Pie, you might vary the filling and topping to complement or contrast flavors. You could use creme de cassis or Grande Passion (passion-fruit liqueur) instead of Grand Marnier if you feel those flavors would enhance a fruit topping of kiwis or nectarines.

Whatever fruit you decide to use, Purdy advises preparing it just before assembling the pie. If washing is required, immediately pat the fruit dry with paper towels or the fruit will get soggy and the glaze will not adhere properly.

The glaze on a pie serves two purposes. First, it prevents the fruit from oxidizing, and second, it imparts a brilliant sheen to the pie.

Apply the glaze approximately two hours (or less) before serving the pie and chill immediately. If the glaze must hold longer than two to three hours before the pie will be served, add the unflavored gelatin that is optionally suggested in the glaze recipe below.

CNS Graphic

"And one last point I always like to make regarding whipped cream," says Purdy. "If you are planning a whipped cream garnish, make sure you buy cream labeled 'heavy cream' and not 'whipping cream.' Whipping cream will whip up but will not hold a decorated shape since it contains only about 30 percent butterfat.

"You must look for a heavy cream that contains a butterfat content of 36 percent to 40 percent for your whipped cream decorations to hold their shape."

Here is a selection of Purdy's recipes adapted from "As Easy As Pie." In all cases, prepare the pies in 10-inch pie plates and serve them directly from the plate as you would a traditional baked pie.

Combinations of crusts and fillings offered here are only suggestions. Mix and match at will.

With Raspberry Yogurt Tart, the picturesque glazed berry topping conceals a flavorful layer of fruit yogurt blended with cream cheese. Purdy devised this filling as an accompaniment for whatever fresh fruits are available and she likes to select a yogurt flavor that complements the color and taste of the fruit. The gelatin is added to set the filling so that the tart can be sliced neatly.

RASPBERRY YOGURT TART

No-Bake Graham-Nut Crust (see below)
2 (8-ounce) packages cream cheese (not the whipped variety) at room temperature, cut up
2 tablespoons frozen orange juice concentrate, undiluted
1 tablespoon grated orange zest
4 tablespoons granulated or confectioner's sugar, sifted
1 cup fruit-flavored yogurt, such as raspberry, strawberry, cherry or orange
1 envelope (2 teaspoons) unflavored gelatin
4 tablespoons cold water
3 to 4 cups fresh raspberries, stemmed, rinsed and dried well on paper towels (or substitute blueberries, strawberries, bananas, pitted grapes or cherries, sliced nectarines, peaches or peeled kiwis)
Red Currant-Kirsch Fruit Glaze (see below) if tart is to be held longer than 2 hours before serving

First prepare piecrust and set in refrigerator to chill until firm, at least 30 minutes.

In mixer or food processor combine cream cheese, orange juice concentrate and grated zest, sugar and yogurt. Cream until thick and smooth, set aside.

In small saucepan, sprinkle gelatin over cold water, set aside about 3 minutes, then stir in 3 or 4 tablespoons of yogurt mixture. Set pan over medium heat and slowly bring to boil stirring until gelatin is completely dissolved. Boil, stirring about 15 seconds. Remove from heat and cool. Put gelatin mixture into mixer or processor and beat together with remaining yogurt mixture.

Pour yogurt mixture into firmly chilled piecrust, chill at least 4 hours, or until filling is set. Top with attractive arrangement of dry prepared berries and fruit slices. Brush with glaze, if desired, and refrigerate until ready to serve.

GRAHAM-NUT CRUST

1 cup graham cracker crumbs
¾ cup ground walnuts
5 tablepoons sugar
7 tablespoons melted butter or margarine

In bowl, combine crumbs, nuts and sugar. Pour on melted shortening and gently toss crumbs to coat. Press crumbs evenly over bottom and sides of 10-inch pie plate, using back of spoon or fingers. Take care not build up too thick a layer in corners.

To make rim, if desired, hold the thumb or forefinger of your left hand horizontally on top of pie plate rim, while fingers of other hand press crumbs up to it, making a firm lip. Chill until firm.

RED CURRANT-KIRSCH GLAZE

½ cup red currant jelly
1½ teaspoons unflavored gelatin (see note)
2 tablespoons kirsch (another fruit-flavored liqueur or fruit juice may be substituted)

Yields ½ cup, to coat one 9- to 12-inch pie or tart.

Place jelly in saucepan. Add gelatin and liqueur or fruit juice. Stir over medium heat until mixture is smooth and clear and gelatin completely dissolves. Bring to boil for about 30 seconds, then cool to lukewarm. Use pastry brush to apply glaze over dry fruit on top of pie or tart. Chill to set glaze. Store leftover glaze in covered jar in refrigerator. Reheat to use.

Note: You may omit gelatin if you plan to serve pie within 2 hours of glazing.

The technique for making No-Bake Fresh Fruit Pie is quite simple. Some of the fruit is first mashed and cooked into a thickened sauce. Then the remaining fresh fruit is stirred in and the entire mixture turned into a crumb crust. The filling is so delicious, it can be served as a pudding without any crust.

NO-BAKE FRESH FRUIT PIE

1 10-inch vanilla cookie crumb crust (see below)
4 cups any combination of fresh berries, picked over, hulled, washed and drained dry; and/or cut-up, peeled fresh fruit (see note)
Two-thirds to 1 cup sugar
3 tablespoons cornstarch
1 cup water
1 tablespoon lemon juice, approximately
2 tablespoons butter
Optional garnishes: sweetened whipped cream or ice cream

Prepare crust and set it in refrigerator to chill until firm, about 2 hours.

In food processor or using fork, mash 1½ cups of cut-up mixed fruit. Measure sugar, cornstarch and water into pan and whisk until smooth. Stir in mashed fruit and cook over medium-low heat for 7 to 10 minutes or until mixture is thick and clear. Stir in lemon juice.

Taste sauce and correct balance of sugar and lemon, if necessary. Stir in butter and all remaining cut-up fresh fruit or berries. (Firm fruit like apples or plums are best slightly mashed into cooked sauce, with softer fresh fruit and berries simply stirred in.)

Chill until partially thickened. Pour into pastry shell and chill to set. Serve with ice cream or sweetened whipped cream.

NOTE: Try blueberries and peaches, or raspberries and nectarines or blueberries and strawberries or plums and peaches. Do not peel plums, nectarines or pears.

TWO-BERRY ORANGE CREAM PIE

1 10-inch Amaretto-almond crust (see below)
1½ cups orange cream cheese pie filling (see below)
4 cups fresh berries (2 cups red berries plus 2 cups blue or black, if available) hulled, rinsed and dried well on paper towels
½ cup Red Currant-Kirsch Glaze (see above)

Prepare piecrust and set in refrigerator until firm, about 2 hours.

Prepare orange cream cheese pie filling and spread it over pastry shell. Top with concentric circles of berries, alternating colors: a red ring, a blue ring, etc. Brush berries with fruit glaze (using gelatin) and chill several hours before serving.

ORANGE CREAM CHEESE PIE FILLING

12 ounces cream chesse (not the whipped variety)
6 tablespoons granulated sugar
2 tablespoons cream or orange-flavored liqueur, or rum
1 tablespoon grated orange zest
4 teaspoons frozen orange juice concentrate, undiluted

Cream all ingredients together in processor, blender or electric mixer until mixture is light and smooth. Proceed as directed above.

AMARETTO-ALMOND CRUST

1¾ cups crushed Italian Amaretto cookies
½ cup ground toasted almonds
5 tablespoons sugar
7 tablespoons melted butter or margarine

In bowl, combine cookie crumbs, toasted almonds and sugar. Pour on melted shortening and gently toss crumbs to coat. Proceed as directed above in Graham-Nut Crust recipe.

Fruit best served fresh

Hearst News Service

Reach for a peach or a nectarine or snitch a plum or pear from the fruit bowl for the best of summer treats. Eating fruit out of hand is the easiest and healthiest way to enjoy the fruits of summer. Here are some tips and fresh ideas for fresh or cooked fruit:

The best way to ripen summer tree fruit is to place it in a loosely closed paper bag at room temperature. The more fruit in the bag, the faster and more evenly it ripens. To speed the process, put a ripe banana or two in the bag with firm fruit.

Most fruit ripens within one to three days. Ripe fruit will keep at room temperature about 24 hours, refrigerated, three to five days.

As a rule of thumb, two large or three medium peaches, pears or nectarines or six large plums equal a pound.

■ PEACHES: Available into October; California peaches come into peak supply twice: mid-May to mid-June and mid-July through August. One medium peach provides about 50 calories, vitamins A and C, minerals, and lots of fiber.

■ FRESH IDEAS: Add cubed peaches to grated cabbage and carrots, and toss with vinaigrette for a different coleslaw.

For a homemade touch, fold mashed fresh peaches into softened vanilla ice cream, add a dash of almond extract and quickly refreeze.

Stuck with overripe fruit? Whirl it into a blender milk shake, or cook it into a conserve, butter or spread.

■ NECTARINES: Many varieties (California produces almost 150) are available at peak season from mid-June to September. A 5-ounce nectarine provides about 65 calories, dietary fiber, potassium and vitamins A and C.

■ FRESH IDEAS: Scoop tuna salad into fresh nectarine halves, sprinkle with sesame seeds and serve with a lemon wedge.

Warm a wheel of Brie cheese in the oven and serve with sliced fresh nectarines and assorted crackers.

For a chilled soup, puree 2 cups fresh nectarines, ½ cup sour cream (or plain non-fat yogurt) and ½ cup rose or blush wine in a blender and serve icy cold.

■ PLUMS: Plums come in a rainbow of colors from yellow to red, purple, green and blue; different varieties are in peak supply from May to October. One 2¼ ounce plum provides about 33 calories, dietary fiber, essential vitamins and minerals.

■ FRESH IDEAS: For a breakfast treat, layer coarsely chopped plums with non-fat yogurt and crunchy cereal in tall glasses.

Serve fresh plum wedges with garlic-herb flavored soft cheese for a deliciously different appetizer.

Serve fresh or chilled poached plums with barbecued poultry or pork.

Stuff whole, pitted fresh plums with cream cheese; add chopped nuts, candied ginger or coconut.

■ BARTLETT PEARS: In peak supply from early August to mid-October. One 6-ounce pear provides about 100 calories, dietary fiber and potassium.

■ FRESH IDEAS: For an elegant dessert, pare, halve and core pears, poach in water with sugar and lemon juice until tender. Drain pear halves, then thinly slice each half, keeping slices connected at one end like a fan. Serve on pureed frozen or fresh raspberries and dribble melted semisweet chocolate overall.

For a classy pear salad, halve pears, core with a melon baller, arrange on assorted greens, top with crumbled blue cheese and toasted walnuts and spoon vinaigrette over all.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 25, 1988

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: You will feel more at ease in new situations. Your shyness is attractive. Good health gets top priority. You gain the advantage in business and financial matters when you stay a step ahead of everyone else. You love the good manners and gracious hospitality of new friends. Do more entertaining yourself. Your ability to have a good time grows as you feel more secure in a relationship. Trust is the key to making your personal life work.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: pitcher Rollie Fingers, actress Ruby Keeler, actor Mel Ferrer, cartoonist Walt Kelly, former Gov. George Wallace, actress Anne Archer, conductor Leonard Bernstein, actor Sean Connery, athlete Althea Gibson, actor Van Johnson.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You develop a taste for unusual art and unconventional people. Today's headlines give you food for thought, plus some ideas you can use to promote your personal goals. Money woes fade away.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You find it easier to let go emotionally now. Look for new outlets for your talents. You have nothing more to prove where your career is concerned.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Children add special joy to your life. Protect money and valuables at home as well as when you vacation. Review the past and then plan for the future.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Work at bringing better balance and more quiet time into your private life. Let others look after themselves for a change. An important love awaits you.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Forgive someone who should have known better and a rift will heal quickly. Be sure your interpretation of a situation is correct before you make a decision about the future. Ask questions.

VIRGO (August 23-September 22): The day gets off to a flying start. Channel your energy into areas where you can improve your career prospects. You need to do more business to make larger gains. Romance is iffy.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Wise choices put you in charge of your own destiny — at least for now. Teamwork will help improve the bottom line. Quit hiding the facts from loved ones. Revise your budget. Romance deepens.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Accounts should be brought up to date. A first-class day for writers and musicians born under this sign. Short business trips prove more lucrative than long ones.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Do not try to force the pace. A better day for study than for important transactions. Postpone signing documents and contracts. Devote more of your time to home and family affairs.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Come to grips wth odd jobs, home repairs. Family member is willing to pitch in and help. Creative enterprises have an excellent chance of becoming lucrative. Group activities hold appeal tonight.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A follow-through day as far as regular work is concerned. Stick to routine tasks. Consolidate efforts to promote a business venture. Creative work is satisfying but not particularly profitable. Be patient.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Friends are particularly helpful if you are dealing with knotty problems. A good day to reach influential people. Insist on written contracts.

3 ◇	Pass	4 ♠	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: King of ♠

Deception need not be elaborate to be successful. East's play on this hand is within the grasp of everyone—provided you can foresee the problem you will be posing for your opponents.

Note North's cue-bid of the enemy suit despite the fact that he had two losers there. In the modern style, the immediate cue-bid by responder simply sets up a forcing situation and fixes trumps, but does not promise control of the enemy suit.

Assume you are East. Partner leads the king of clubs and you follow with the deuce. How do you hope to defeat the contract?

If you are looking for a way now, the boat has already sailed—you should have thought before playing to the first trick. Now partner will take two club tricks and then shift. Eventually you will get your ace of diamonds, but declarer will finesse you out of your trump king and make his contract.

See the difference if you start an echo on the first club by dropping the eight, and complete it with the deuce when partner continues the suit at trick two. Partner will surely lead a third club and declarer, fearing that you are out of the suit, will ruff with one of dummy's honors to prevent an uppercut with the nine of spades.

Declarer might be a little surprised when you follow suit. He will be far more disconcerted when he finds that, by ruffing high, he has established your nine of trumps as the setting trick—all you have to do is cover with the king when declarer leads one of dummy's trump honors. Not what you would call a spectacular falsecard; just a simple little coup that is almost bound to succeed.

What if your job was to defend the Secretary of Defense?

You might find yourself with No Way Out, just as Kevin Costner does in this newly released nail-biter on channel 22. Sit tight on August 28 at 10:00 p.m. to watch this situation complicate itself on Channel 22

Court upholds damage award against clinic in Sinatra suit

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A Swiss clinic that falsely claimed it had treated Frank Sinatra with a "youth serum" of sheep cells has been ordered to pay the singer $450,000 in damages.

"It's excellent (that the court) has seen fit to vindicate the right of a U.S. citizen to protect his name and his reputation from avaricious appropriation, both here and abroad," said John A. Lawrence, a lawyer for Sinatra.

The 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals on Tuesday upheld the September 1986 award against the Clinic La Prairie, rejecting the Montreux, Switzerland, clinic's claim that U.S. courts lacked jurisdiction in the case.

"The clinic's employees fabricated an elaborate story calculated to link Sinatra's name with their services," said Judge Dorothy Nelson in the 3-0 decision.

Patricia Beaman, a lawyer for the clinic, was unavailable for comment Tuesday, her office said.

The dispute stemmed from an October 1984 article in the National Enquirer that said Sinatra had been treated at the clinic with a "youth serum" extracted from sheep cells intended to retard aging.

But Sinatra had never even visited the clinic, although an attempt was made to recruit him as a patient, according to the court.

While the clinic has no branches in California, it was trying to solicit business in the state when it planted the phony story in the tabloid in 1984, knowing that Sinatra lived in the state and the Enquirer circulated widely here, the court said.

"The clinic viewed the article as essentially a free advertisement that could reach between 5 million and 20 million people," Nelson said in the 3-0 decision.

The court said the Enquirer called the clinic the previous month asking if Sinatra had been a patient. The clinic's U.S. representative, Richard Van Vrooman, then arranged a visit by an Enquirer reporter, who was given false statements by the clinic's president, medical director and others about Sinatra's supposed visit and their personal contacts with him, the court said.

Buckingham Palace said Tuesday the 28-year-old Royal Navy lieutenant left Gatwick Airport on Monday night, hours after the palace announced the baby's name and released the first official pictures of her, taken by the prince.

"I have to smuggle pizza in," Cuomo said Tuesday, referring to the late hours he keeps in his office at the nearby Capitol.

Cuomo's culinary problems surfaced when he boarded a plane for a flight to Plattsburgh and asked an aide for a cup of coffee.

"Something with caffeine in it," Cuomo pleaded. "I can't even get that at home."

ATHENS, Ohio (AP) — A state appeals court upheld the 1986 conviction of country singer Johnny Paycheck for shooting another man in a barroom, but ordered a lower court to reconsider the 9½-year prison sentence.

Paycheck

The Ohio 4th District Court of Appeals on Tuesday said the trial court erred in imposing its sentence without first holding a presentencing hearing after the conviction for aggravated assault and tampering with evidence.

Paycheck claimed self-defense in his 1985 confrontation with Larry Wise, then 37, in a Hillsboro tavern. Wise said he had been having a friendly talk with Paycheck and other bar patrons about cooking deer meat when Paycheck shouted, "I'm no country hick," and shot him, grazing his skull.

Paycheck, 49, is best known for the 1978 hit "Take This Job and Shove It." He has been free on bond, pending his appeal.

CHINO, Calif. (AP) — Armless musician Tony Melendez says being kissed by Pope John Paul II last year has brought him fame and fortune, but a peculiar legacy also emerged from the papal peck on the cheek.

"It's scary. A lot of people want to kiss the same cheek," said Melendez, 26, who played the guitar with his feet and sang for the pope in Universal City on Sept. 15 as millions watched on television.

Since then, Melendez has gone from local church appearances to paid performances throughout the world, working three weeks every month. He leaves next month for a tour of Japan.

Melendez was born in Nicaragua with no arms, a result of the drug thalidomide taken by his mother during pregnancy.

"There are a lot of extremely accomplished guys out there. And yeah, if I was them, I guess I would resent it a little bit," McDonald said recently. "But you have to remember that I was always in good bands.

"I have a certain knowledge of chords and I have all the technique but I've never really mastered anything. That's always been a sore spot with me," he said. "I don't why I'm not better. I guess it's just laziness really."

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Rudolph Valentino, the silent film idol who died 62 years ago, was remembered by a few dozen people who gathered at his crypt.

Valentino was eulogized Tuesday by actor Joe Wagstaff as a man "whose strength of personality transcends time and decay."

The Italian-born actor was 31 when he died Aug. 23, 1926, in New York of a perforated ulcer.

Thousands, especially his female fans, mourned his death, and for years the anniversary drew large crowds to his crypt at Hollywood Memorial Park.

Avocados add color, flavor to recipes

By DESIREE VIVEA
Copley News Service

Add a bit of avocado to a dish and you are adding exotic flavor, friendly vitamins and a touch of tropical elegance.

Native to South America, the name avocado comes from the Aztec word ahuacatl — while some folks know the fruit simply as the "alligator pear." That's right — fruit. The avocado, normally used as a vegetable, is really the fruit of a large, glossy-leafed shade tree.

While you don't usually cook them in the microwave, avocados may be used to garnish a number of microwaved dishes.

Sliced avocado is tasty atop a chicken casserole.

If the recipe calls for cheese to be added during the last minute or so of cooking time, just insert a layer of sliced avocado under the cheese for a subtle touch of flavor.

Use chunks of ripe avocado to garnish anything from a salad to a tamale pie to a hot pita sandwich.

Guacamole is the rich, creamy sauce made of mashed ripe avocados and sour cream or mayonnaise, plus a bit of lemon or lime juice to keep the color intact (the tender flesh tends to go from green to brown when exposed to the air). Serve guacamole with any microwaved Mexican dish (enchiladas, burritos, etc.), or with tortilla or corn chips as an appetizer before dinner.

Try sliced avocados in quesadillas (one of my favorite quick microwave snacks). Slice thin and spread over shredded cheese on a tortilla. Add some chopped black olives or chives, if you like, or a bit of chopped tomato. Chopped fresh cilantro is also good, if you appreciate its unusual flavor. Fold tortilla in half, microwave a minute or so (only until cheese has melted), and serve with a dab of salsa on the side. Make the whole thing right on a paper plate for minimal cleanup.

A GOOD source of vitamins and minerals, avocados are also quite high in protein and fat: a ripe, mature avocado consists of between 5 percent and 25 percent oil.

When shopping for fresh avocados (they're not available any other way) look for firm fruit with a uniform, unblemished skin. Avocados should be heavy for their size, and yield to gentle pressure.

If further ripening is needed, store in a brown paper bag for several days (never store unripened avocados in the refrigerator!) Fully ripened avocados will be soft but not mushy, and may be refrigerated up to eight days before use.

When storing half of an avocado, leave the pit in, squeeze fresh lemon or lime juice over cut surface, and wrap snugly in plastic wrap before refrigerating.

(Recipes in this column are tested in 625-to 700-watt microwave ovens.)

MICRO-TIP OF THE WEEK

Cooking containers don't heat up during microwave cooking, but heat from food does transfer to containers. That's why it's always a good idea to use pot holders when removing a container from your microwave oven.

SUMPTUOUS SCRAMBLE

2 tablespoons butter or margarine
4 eggs
¼ cup half-and-half
1 (4-ounce) can mushroom stems and pieces, well drained
3 slices bacon, cooked and crumbled
⅛ teaspoon pepper
2 tablespoons shredded Monterey Jack cheese
½ medium avocado, peeled and chopped

Preparation Time: 5 to 10 minutes
Cooking Time: 6½ to 8½ minutes (plus 3 minutes standing time)
Oven Setting: HIGH (100 percent power); MEDIUM (50 percent power)

Place butter or margarine in 1-quart microwave-safe casserole. Microwave on HIGH setting about 30 seconds, or until melted, turning dish to coat. In small dish beat together eggs and half-and-half. Add to casserole, along with mushrooms, bacon and pepper; stir.

Microwave at MEDIUM setting, uncovered, 6 to 8 minutes, or until eggs are just set, stirring twice during cooking time. Sprinkle cheese over top and let stand, covered, 3 minutes to complete cooking.

Garnish with avocado chunks and serve immediately with toast or warmed tortillas.

WHITE CHEESE ENCHILADAS

2 cups ricotta cheese
1 egg, lightly beaten
¼ cup chopped onion
3 tablespoons diced mild green canned chilies (well drained)
3 cups shredded Monterey Jack cheese
8 (6-inch-diameter) corn tortillas
1 (10-ounce) can mild enchilada sauce
½ cup sour cream
1 large ripe avocado, sliced
8 large ripe black olives, pitted
¼ cup chopped fresh cilantro (optional)

Yields 4 servings.
Preparation Time: 15 to 25 minutes
Cooking Time: 10½ to 15 minutes
Oven Setting: HIGH (100 percent power)

In medium mixing bowl combine ricotta, egg, onion, chilies, and 1 cup of the Jack cheese; set aside.

Wrap tortillas in a clean dish towel and microwave ½ to 1 minute, or until pliable. Divide cheese mixture evenly among tortillas, then roll each tortilla up tightly. Arrange, seam-side down, in a lightly buttered 12x8-inch glass baking dish.

Pour enchilada sauce over enchiladas. Microwave, uncovered, 9 to 12 minutes, or until enchiladas are heated through, rotating dish ½ turn every 5 minutes. Sprinkle remaining Jack cheese over top and microwave 1 to 2 minutes longer, or until cheese is melted. Garnish each enchilada with a spoonful of sour cream, a slice of avocado, an olive and a sprinkling of chopped cilantro, if desired.

Cooking contest finds egg-ceptional recipes

By TRENT ROWE
New York Times News Service

It's a good thing that eggs are versatile, otherwise judging an egg recipe contest could be deadly.

And one limited to main dishes could be more so. No custards, no puddings, no pies, no fun.

But it didn't turn out like that at all. The event was the Fifth Annual Florida Egg Cook-Off at Busch Gardens in Tampa — in a tent in a parking lot, no less. But it worked out fine.

The contestants slaved over hot stoves while we three judges loafed and munched at the end of the tent separated from the heat by a potted hedge and in the breeze of an electric fan.

The contestants could not see the looks of delight or derision as we tasted their 10 creations.

Five stoves were loaned by Peoples Gas Systems, Inc., a fact that would not ordinarily make it into a story except for the fact that the appliances were donated to Metropolitan Ministries when the contest was over. Five ranges and 10 dishes means they were only used twice before they went to a good cause.

Mary Scourtes, food editor of the Tampa Tribune, and Lorrie Guttman, food editor of the Tallahassee Democrat, were the other willing participants in the decision-making.

First prize was $500 and a chance to compete in the national finals in New York City in the fall. Second got $250, third was $100 and fourth got $50.

"All the participants are winners," says VaLinda Parsons of the Florida Poultry Federation, "because they were chosen from 425 entries to make it this far." Top prize in the national competition is $4,000.

The rules were that the dishes had to have one egg per serving and they had to be creative but not necessarily original. Some of them were definitely creative.

We judged by giving point values for such things as taste, ease of preparation and nutritional value and in many contests it comes down to adding up the scores to declare the winners.

Not this time. The first three winners were unanimous. We all chose Italian egg and lettuce bundles by a wide margin because the presentation was outstanding and so was the taste.

Crustless ratatouille quiche came in second because it had just about everything to make a balanced main dish, it tasted good and was easy to make.

Turtle Bay black bean and Monterey Jack cheese pie was third. The combination of black beans and cheese in one dish was creative and rice mixed with cheese was used as a second layer. The way the ingredients were assembled in the dish made it look stratified when it was cut.

The last place was the only one that wasn't unanimous but it was close to it. Two of us picked Egg-ceptional main dish salad and the other judge had it tied for fourth. It has foods from three of the four major food groups and a whole wheat roll served with it makes it a nutritionally perfect meal.

ITALIAN EGG AND LETTUCE BUNDLES

12 very large Romaine lettuce leaves
1 5-ounce package long grain and wild rice mix
Olive oil
6 eggs, beaten
1 cup ricotta cheese
2 tablespoons chopped red bell pepper
2 tablespoons chopped green bell pepper
½ cup chopped walnuts
½ teaspoon fennel seed, crushed
Italian charred peppers

Cut about two inches of the heavy center vein out of the lettuce leaves. Cook leaves in large amount of boiling, lightly salted water for 30 seconds or until limp. Drain well and pat dry; cool.

Meanwhile, cook rice according to package directions. In 8-inch skillet, heat 1 teaspoon olive oil; add 3 beaten eggs, and cook over low heat, without stirring, until set. Invert skillet over a baking sheet to remove eggs. Cut into narrow strips. Repeat with remaining 3 beaten eggs. Reserve half of the egg strips.

Coarsely chop remaining half of egg strips (3 eggs). Toss together rice, chopped egg strips, ricotta cheese, peppers, walnuts, and fennel seed. Arrange two lettuce leaves overlapping to form a cross. Divide egg mixture into six parts. Fill six lettuce crosses. Fold leaves over rice to form a bundle (make 6 bundles). Place bundles, seam side down, on lightly oiled 10x12-inch baking pan. Brush tops of bundles with olive oil. Bake, covered, in preheated 350 degree oven for 20-25 minutes, until heated through. Serve on bed of charred green and red peppers and remaining egg strips.

Italian Charred Peppers

2 teaspoons olive oil
1 large green bell pepper, cut into strips
1 large red bell pepper, cut into strips
Egg strips (3 eggs), reserved from above recipe
2 tablespoons chopped walnuts
¼ cup chopped fresh basil

In 10-inch skillet, heat 2 teaspoons olive oil, until pan starts to lightly smoke. Remove from heat and add peppers all at once. Return to heat and cook one minute, stirring constantly. Stir in egg strips, walnuts and basil. Serve on heated tray, with Italian Egg and Lettuce Bundles on top. Garnish as desired. — Gloria Norton. Jacksonville, Fla.

CRUSTLESS RATATOUILLE QUICHE

1 teaspoon butter
1 small eggplant, cut into 1-inch cubes (about 4 cups)
2 medium tomatoes, quartered
1 small zucchini, sliced
¼ cup chopped onion
½ cup chopped green pepper
1 clove garlic, chopped fine
3 tablespoons olive oil
6 eggs beaten
1 cup shredded Swiss cheese
1 teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon pepper
2 tablespoons Parmesan cheese

Preheat oven to 350 degrees. Grease a 9-inch quiche pan with butter. In large skillet, saute vegetables for five minutes in olive oil. Mix beaten eggs, Swiss cheese, salt and pepper in large bowl. Add vegetable mixture and mix well. Pour into quiche pan. Sprinkle Parmesan cheese on top. Bake for 30 minutes. — Marsha Dribinsky. Miami, Fla.

TURTLE BAY BLACK BEAN AND MONTEREY JACK CHEESE PIE

Olive oil to coat pie pan
6 extra large eggs
½ cup milk
1 tablespoon beef bouillon powder
1 tablespoon garlic powder
1 tablespoon oregano
1 teaspoon salt
2 15-ounce cans black beans, drained
2 cups steamed white rice
8 ounces Monterey Jack cheese, grated
6 tablespoons sour cream
6 thin slices red onion

Preheat oven to 375 degrees. Lightly coat 10-inch pie pan with olive oil. Combine eggs, milk, beef bouillon, garlic powder, oregano and salt, and beat until bouillon is dissolved. Combine black beans with one-third of the egg mixture and pour into the pie pan. Combine the rice and the cheese and spoon over the beans. Cover with remaining egg mixture. Bake 45 minutes at 375 degrees. Serve with sour cream and sliced onions. — Edward Burfine. Boca Raton., Fla.

EGG-CEPTIONAL MAIN DISH SALAD

6 eggs, hard-cooked and chopped
1 16-ounce package frozen peas, thawed and drained
1 head cauliflower, broken into flowerets
¼ cup chopped onion
1 8-ounce can sliced water chestnuts, drained
1 sweet red pepper, cut into slices
½ cup cheddar cheese, shredded
½ cup plain yogurt
¼ cup buttermilk salad dressing
1 teaspoon lemon juice
1½ cups lettuce, shredded
½ cup sunflower kernels, toasted

In large bowl, combine eggs, peas, cauliflower, onion, water chestnuts, red pepper and cheese, tossing gently. In small mixing bowl, combine yogurt, salad dressing, and lemon juice; mix well. Pour over vegetable mixture and toss gently. Cover salad and refrigerate for eight hours or overnight.

To serve, place half cup shredded lettuce on individual dinner plates; spoon salad onto lettuce and sprinkle with sunflower kernels. — Laura Case York. Valrico, Fla.

Mothers Should Be Home For Their Children.

Nothing could be more like home than having a baby in your own private Labor/Delivery/Recovery room–the new LDR's–at Women's & Children's Hospital. We've opened up a whole new childbirth option for mothers that comes with all the comforts of home.

Designed for low-risk births, our LDR's look every bit like professionally decorated bedroom suites. Just like home. Or, at a fine hotel. You'll find comfortable furnishings, a private bath, and even a restful easy chair in this beautifully-appointed birthing environment. State-of-the-art equipment and supplies necessary for childbirth have been thoughtfully hidden from view, but are ready and available when needed.

When you're admitted to an LDR, you will remain there throughout the birth process and recovery period. You may be supported by your husband or other chosen "coach." After you've welcomed your new child, and visited with siblings, family and friends, you'll be moved to your hospital room for the remainder of your stay.

The LDR's offer a cozy, secure place for you and your family to experience and celebrate one of life's most private moments. Call 334-8200 at ext 297 for a tour or more information about The Birth Place and the physicians on staff here. Then, come to Women's & Children's Hospital for the warmest welcome you can give your baby. You'll feel right at home.

Windfall profits repeal applauded

DALLAS (AP) — The windfall profits tax repeal will ease some burdens on oil companies, but Texas oil producers and politicians said more measures are necessary to help the industry bounce back from its slump.

A landmark trade bill President Reagan signed Tuesday included a provision repealing the eight-year-old windfall profits tax on domestic oil.

John E. Watson, president of the Texas Independent Producers and Royalty Owners Association, said his organization has been working for the repeal since the tax was enacted in 1980.

Low oil prices have kept oil companies from paying much of the tax during the past 2½ years, but oil producers still have had to certify production and report it to the Internal Revenue Service, Watson said.

The base crude oil price upon which the tax is levied is between $19 and $20 a barrel for independent producers, Watson said. Crude oil sold for about $15 a barrel Tuesday.

"Of course, when you're not paying any tax, and it gets repealed, it's not going to have a whole lot of immediate monetary effect on you," Watson said. "Some accounting work will be taken off our back, hopefully."

Both U.S. senators from Texas, Democratic vice presidential nominee Lloyd Bentsen and Republican Phil Gramm, played prominent roles in the effort to repeal the windfall profits tax.

In a statement released when the trade bill was passed Aug. 3, Bentsen said, "It's great news for energy producers in this country."

Gramm said in a telephone interview Tuesday that it was a "red letter day for the oil industry."

The repeal is the first positive step Congress has taken on oil in a decade, he said.

Watson said further help for the troubled oil and gas industry should come in the form of federal financial incentives for marginal and stripper wells, Watson said.

Stripper wells generally produce less than 10 barrels of oil a day. Wells are considered marginal if production is low in comparison to the amount of revenue obtained, Watson said.

He also said tax credits are needed for exploratory wells.

Major oil companies fared well in the last quarter, mainly from industries associated with the oil business, Watson said.

"Independents, on the other hand, are still struggling. They're still falling by the wayside," said Watson, whose organization includes about 4,000 independent producers and royalty owners.

Gramm said even though oil companies have paid small amounts of the windfall profits tax the past two years, the oil industry has continued to pay an estimated $100 million annually complying with the tax rules.

The federal government has spent about $15 million each of the past two years for paperwork overseeing the tax, he said.

NCNB not affected by withdrawals

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Assistant Business/Oil Editor

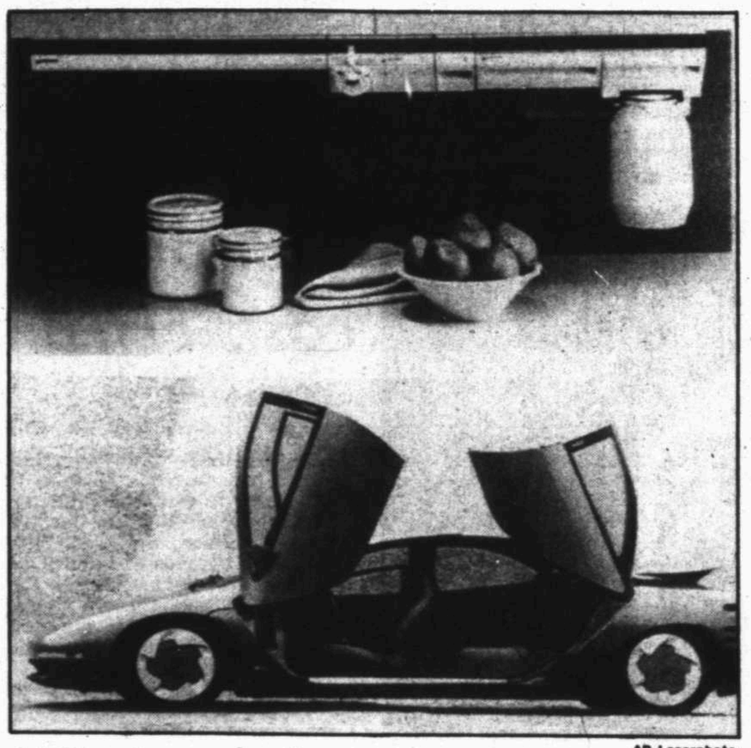

The impending end of the FDIC's blanket insurance commitment over total deposit balances helped fuel $300 million in withdrawals from NCNB Texas National Bank in recent weeks, according to published reports.

At NCNB's Midland branch, bank officials have answered a lot of questions on changes in Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. coverage, but have not seen any significant movement of deposits out of the bank, Jane Simonitsch, assistant vice president of corporate development, said this morning.

Withdrawal figures were not available for the local bank, but Simonitsch said the bank has not seen any undue concern from its customers.

The Dallas Morning News reported that the NCNB Texas vice chairman Timothy Hartman said the bank expects that statewide withdrawals could total as much as $600 million — roughly 10 percent of the $6 billion the institution maintains in

Odometer settlement announced

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. (AP) — Nearly 40,000 owners of Chrysler Motors Corp. cars whose odometers were disconnected while company executives test-drove them are entitled to more than $16 million in restitution under a nationwide settlement.

Attorneys general from 10 states assisted in the settlement, which will pay the wronged car owners at least $500 apiece, Missouri Attorney General William Webster said at a news conference Tuesday.

Chrysler already has announced it will increase warranty coverage for cars on which odometers had been disconnected in the company's "Overnight Evaluation Program." A few were involved in accidents, and consumers that later purchased those cars will receive new automobiles, Webster said.

Webster served as the lead negotiator in the settlement affecting 39,500 consumers in 46 states, Guam and Puerto Rico. The agreement was filed Aug. 19 in U.S. District Court in St. Louis.

Sea World lays off 750 in belt-tightening move

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — The dismissal of 750 workers in six Harcourt Brace Jovanovich parks around the country is part of "belt-tightening" measures by the Orlando-based parent company of Sea World and other facilities, executives said.

The layoffs announced Tuesday affect about 10 percent of the park system's 7,500 full-time employees, said Robert Evanson, a senior vice president and chairman of HBJ's parks operation.

A total of 215 employees were fired at Sea World of Texas in San Antonio. Another 1,500 temporary and seasonal workers will leave their jobs by Sept. 6, bringing the total number of fulltime and temporary workers to about 1,500 at the park, officials said.

"Employee cuts are a routine part of any corporate belt-tightening. We will be a more efficient company," said Dan LeBlanc, a spokesman at San Diego Sea World, which will lose about 150 employees.

Sea World spokesman Bob McCullough said the move does not mean the $140 million, 250-acre Texas park, which opened in April, is in financial trouble.

"Our attendance has been better than we had imagined, but not until we got into operating the park did we know how many employees it would take to operate it. Now we know," McCullough said.

Attendance at the park, located on the city's western edge has already topped 2 million.

McCullough said the full-time staffers will now number about 870 and part-time workers and seasonal employees will push the workforce to about 1,500 with the same annual payroll of about $25 million.

The workforce could increase to 3,000 again during the peak summer season next year, McCullough said.

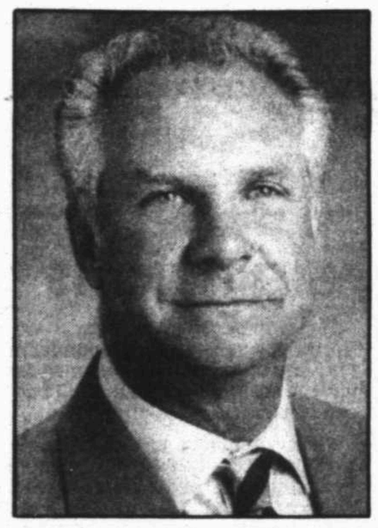

"We have contributed a tremendous amount to San Antonio and Texas and we will continue to do that in the years ahead, but this was a necessary correction to make sure we could meet our goals as a business," he said.

HBJ reported $62.9 million in second-quarter losses on revenues of $446.6 million. The company repelled an unwelcome takeover bid last year by adopting a $3 billion recapitalization plan and plunging into debt before selling off several units.

A total of 334 workers received layoff notices at company facilities in Central Florida, including 113 at Sea World, 161 at Boardwalk and Baseball near Haines City and 60 at Cypress Gardens in Winter Haven. An additional nine park support workers will be laid off from corporate headquarters.

HBJ operates another Sea World in Cleveland, but there was no word on cuts there.

Company-wide, the fired workers ranged in experience from several months to more than 15 years.

Prices flatten after small drop

From Staff Reports

Oil futures weakened Tuesday in advance of the American Petroleum Institute's weekly report on supplies of energy products.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, contracts for October delivery of West Texas Intermediate opened flat with Tuesday's close of $15.70, down 21 cents from Monday.

Tuesday was the first day of trading in the October spot contract. Trading in the September contract expired Monday.

Analysts said Tuesday's energy futures market was influenced by trader expectations that the API's weekly report, released after the close of trading, would show higher inventories of oil products, particularly oil.

The report indicated that while stocks of gasoline and distillates rose last week, crude oil inventories declined by nearly 4.3 million barrels.

Analysts had expected a build-up of 2 million to 4 million barrels of crude, said John Azarow of Shearson Lehman Hutton Inc.

Analysts said the oil futures market has lacked direction in recent weeks outside of the weekly API reports. The market is awaiting fresh news affecting supply and demand and, particularly, developments involving the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, they say.

Japanese comment undercuts dollar

LONDON (AP) — The U.S. dollar fell against most major foreign currencies in early European trading today following remarks by Bank of Japan Governor Satoshi Sumita.

Gold prices also fell slightly in extremely quiet trading.

The dollar slid after Sumita said the West German mark's decline was "inexplicable" and termed a further drop in the yen as undesirable.

In Tokyo, the dollar rose 0.37 yen to a closing 134.30 yen. Later, in London, it was quoted at 134.20 yen.

Other dollar rates at midmorning, compared with late Tuesday's rates:

—1.8957 West German marks, down from 1.9060

—1.5990 Swiss francs, down from 1.6055

—6.4415 French francs, down from 6.4635

—2.1395 Dutch guilders, down from 2.1440

—1,406.00 Italian lire, down from 1,407.50

—1.2305 Canadian dollars, up from 1.2303

In London, the British pound was unchanged from late Tuesday at $1.6795.

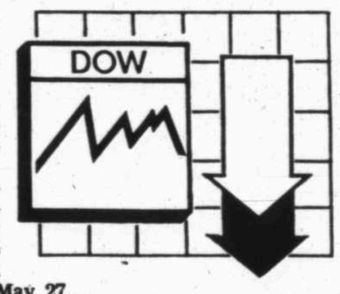

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $432 a troy ounce and at midmorning, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $432.10. Both were down from Tuesday's late bid of $432.75.

In Zurich, the bid price was $432.10, down from $433 bid late Tuesday.

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold fell 59 cents to close at a bid $434.

Silver was quoted in London at a bid price of $6.73 a troy ounce, down from Tuesday's $6.74

Stocks drift lower in listless trade

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market finished about where it started Tuesday after a listless session distinguished chiefly by one of the lowest trading volumes of the year.

The first of some widely-anticipated economic reports due for release this week failed to inspire either buying or selling pressure.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, which fell 25.78 points on Monday to reach it lowest level in nearly three months, gave up another 0.89 to close at 1,989.33. That is its lowest close since it ended at 1,956.44 on May 27.

Declining issues outnumbered gainers by about 8 to 5 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 552 issues up, 811 down and 580 unchanged. The NYSE index finished unchanged at 145.94.

Volume on the floor of the NYSE came to 119.54 million shares, down from 122.25 million in the previous session and the lowest since 113.4 million shares were traded on Aug. 5. There have only been two other days this year when trading volume was lower than it was Tuesday — May 23, when it was 102.64 million shares, and June 20, when it was 116.75 million.

The Wilshire Associates Equity Index, the market value of NYSE, American and OTC issues, fell $2.236 billion, or 0.09 percent, to $2.574 trillion.

Standard & Poor's industrial index rose 0.10 to 294.59, and S&P's 500-stock composite index edged up 0.11 to 257.09.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Furr's owner makes offer for Wyatt chain

LUBBOCK, Texas (AP) — Officials of Furr's/Bishop's Cafeterias L.P. said Tuesday they offered to acquire all outstanding shares of Wyatt Cafeterias Inc. for about $179 million or $87 per share in a cash deal.

A pending tender offer by a Dallas-based Wyatt Cafeterias employee stock ownership plan to acquire all Wyatt shares at $84 per unit preceded the Furr's/Bishop's bid.

In the ownership plan's tender offer, a portion of the consideration to be paid would be placed in an escrow account.

Furr's/Bishop's, in its letter to the Wyatt board of directors, said it was prepared to negotiate terms of its offer, including price. The offer was scheduled to expire at 3 p.m. Friday, subject to extension.

The limited partnership also offered to purchase directly from a number of charitable, educational and nonprofit organizations their Wyatt shares at $87 per unit.

Air Midwest to become Braniff feeder

DALLAS (AP) — Officials of Braniff Inc. announced Tuesday they reached an interim agreement with Air Midwest, which will serve Kansas City as a Braniff Express carrier.

The two carriers said the interim agreement was effective Sept. 15 and a final pact was expected soon.

Air Midwest, under the interim agreement, would operate flights to and from Kansas City under a code-sharing agreement with Braniff as a Braniff Express carrier.

"We believe this will be mutually beneficial for Air Midwest, Braniff and the communities served by both carriers," said Richard L. James, executive vice president-planning for Braniff.

Appeals could delay Dalkon payments

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — Appeals filed in the days before A.H. Robins Co.'s bankruptcy reorganization was to take effect will delay payments to many Dalkon Shield claimants, according to an attorney involved in the proceedings.

Three appeals to the plan had been filed as of Tuesday on behalf of several hundred Dalkon Shield claimants.

The deadline for appealing is Thursday, one month after a federal judge entered an order confirming the plan, which includes a $2.5 billion trust fund for women claiming injuries from the Dalkon Shield birth control device Robins sold.

Lubbock business consultant makes impact coast to coast

Success comes from helping executives revamp image

LUBBOCK, Texas (AP)— Business executives on both the east and west coasts say a Lubbock man is making a significant impact on the way they do business.

Claude Dollins, 47, may have traveled an unusual path to his current career as a nationally known management consultant, but the combination may be the key to his growing success at helping companies replace the hard-nosed executive image with a people-centered leadership style that emphasizes teamwork and peer support.

Dollins served as Baptist Student Union director here for 12 years before earning a master's degree in family counseling in the College of Home Economics at Texas Tech University. He was in private counseling four or five years before turning his attention to the business world.

The chief executives of companies that hire Dollins call him a bridge builder, coach, facilitator, counselor and friend.

"He's a very honest, down-to-earth, dependable friend," said Phil Baker of Dallas, regional managing partner for Pannell, Kerr, Forester. The region Baker oversees encompasses about a third of the U.S.

"Claude is the epitome of the West Texan — you don't have to have a written agreement with Claude," Baker said.

A few weeks ago Baker attended a seminar in Boston where Dollins was speaking. "Most of the participants were from the East Coast — most soft-pedaled their tough material. Claude didn't do that. He doesn't take that podium to make a lecture on things that will make people feel good and give them a warm feeling in their tummy," Baker observed.

ABOUT 120 MANAGING partners heard Dollins address the topic of what leadership should be in their own systems, Baker said. "Some of the things he said were counter to how they run their operation. So many (speakers) use (the platform) as a way to sell their services. They don't go right to the bone of the issue.

Baker said the most important thing he has learned from Dollins is that "each individual I work with is just that — an individual. I have to adapt my style to that individual's style so that we can work together for a better alternative."

Hardest to accept is "slowing down long enough and being respectful of my partner's viewpoints — not just bulling ahead and doing it my way. He is a coach to chief executives. He can deal with them as an equal and help them be effective," Baker said.

"What we are trying to do and what Dollins is helping us do is perform at our peak level," said Gary McMahan, general agent for Massachusetts Mutal Life Insurance company in Hampton Roads, Va.

McMahan supervises 40 agents. Dollins' approach, he said, is to encourage peak performance rather than competition as the motivating force among his agents.

"It's an approach, frankly, that business and top management needs to look at more than at the bottom line," McMahan said. "It's all based on a simple model of getting support from your peers."

TAKING THE COMPANY'S top 10 producers, McMahan offered Dollins' services on a fee-participating basis cost. Agreeing, the agents met with Dollins for a series of sessions.

"I've been with him eight times this year," McMahan said. "I've spent a considerable amount of time and money and have committed to do so in the future."

Are Dollins' methods effective?

"We are 42 percent ahead of last year," McMahan said. He noted that not all the growth came from those participating in the seminars, but says he believes the attitudes they learned spread through the agency.

"People just feel better about themselves — it's kind of gotten all the skeletons out of the closet," he said.

Tom Rimerman, managing partner of Frank, Rimerman & Co., an accounting firm in Palo Alto, Calif., recalls that several years ago as president of the California Society of Certified Public Accountants, he was looking for someone to develop and teach a leadership course.

"We interviewed several people, and I think Claude was the last one — I remember him distinctly because when he walked in the door to sit down in this conference room, it took him longer than anyone I have ever seen. I guess that comes from walking across those fields out in Lubbock," Rimerman quipped.

"He has that rare ability (that) when you meet him and talk to him you feel like you really know him," Rimerman said, attributing it partly to Dollins' background as a counselor.

"BUT IT'S also his basic personality," he added.

In addition to the team-building workshops, Dollins "puts a few thoughts at the end about the quality of life, what it's all about and (suggesting) maybe you better slow down and figure it out for yourself ... there's a little bit of a preacher in him from that standpoint, but that's all right," said the accounting executive.

An old saddle, well-polished, is the most important furnishing in Claude Dollins' office. The saddle belonged to his father and serves to remind him of his West Texas heritage, a benefit he is quick to acknowledge.

"He has something of a Will Rogers wit," said Glenn Biggs, chairman of Gill Savings in San Antonio. Dollins was a student at Hardin-Simmons University in Abilene when Biggs first met him.

Dollins' humor is "low-key and human centered, generally coming from experience his father had as an old cowboy," Biggs said. Dollins plays well on his western heritage, but not to the extent that he wears cowboy boots and adopts a phony image, Biggs said.

"He simplifies a complex issue in a way that is disarming," Biggs said. "He's not like some motivational speakers who feel like they have to holler loud, ring little bells and do showman kind of things.

ADMITTING THAT earlier he might have advised Dollins to make his headquarters in a city such as Dallas, Biggs said, "I must confess, coming from Lubbock you're not in the mainstream. You don't have a lot of corporations, but he's brought that kind of homespun philosophy that can only be hammered out in a place like Lubbock."

Dollins

Biggs said Dollins is on the crest of the team-building perspective because "He is very individual-centered. He wants to make sure that the person is heard and has a place, not leaving it just to the cold monolithic organization. So many companies will say, 'Yes, the human factor is our greatest asset,' but it's a long way between the statement and implementation of that," Biggs added.

State gets $450 million from notes

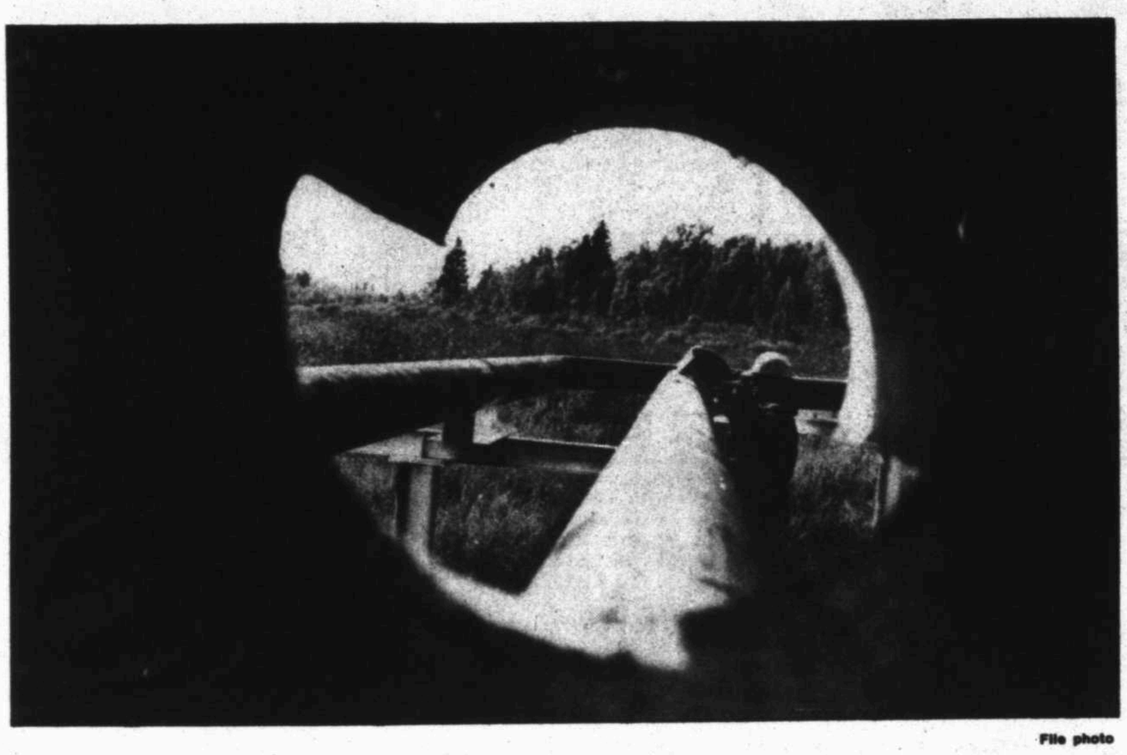

AUSTIN (AP) — State Treasurer Ann Richards Tuesday announced the sale of $450 million in short-term cash management notes with an average net interest rate of 6.093 percent.

"We were quite pleased with the bids that we received. The market opened in our favor this morning and the interest rate on these bonds was surprisingly lower than expected," Richards said. The savings on the interest will earn the state about $7 million this year, she said.

The winning bidders were represented by Morgan Stanley & Co., Inc., which purchased $150 million of the bonds; B.T. Securities Corp., $200 million; Dillon Read & Co., Inc., $50 million; and Citicorp Securities Markets, Inc., $50 million.

In all, the Treasury got 38 bids for the notes, which will be redeemed Aug. 30, 1989.

The notes were needed to correct a cash imbalance in the state general revenue fund of about $1.2 billion the first week in January. The state uses a combination of money from the cash management note sale and interfund borrowing to meet the "cash hole."

California thrift bailout costs FHLB $565 million

By ANDREA ADELSON
New York Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — The Federal Home Loan Bank Board said Tuesday that it would provide $565 million in financial assistance to an investor group that intends to merge two California savings institutions.

The group, DP Holdings Inc., is headed by former Treasury Secretary William E. Simon, and it will invest $207.5 million in the deal.

Under the agreement, the Bell Savings and Loan Association, an insolvent savings institution based in San Mateo, Calif., that has assets with a current value of $953 million would be merged with the Western Federal Savings and Loan Association, a healthy savings unit based in Marina del Rey, Calif., with assets of $2.5 billion. The merged institution would keep the name Western Federal.

The move was the latest in a series of rescue packages put together by the bank board in recent months to sell, liquidate or merge insolvent institutions, mostly in Texas.

Last week, it announced two deals in Texas.

In California, regulators have closed three involvent savings and loans, paying $1.6 billion to depositors, and are working on a rescue plan with the Robert M. Bass Group of Texas for the nation's second-largest savings institution, American Savings and Loan.

The Simon group hopes to raise much of the $207.5 million it will invest in the public markets, according to a filing with the Securities and Exchange Commission.

The group said $145 million would be used to buy out Western Federal's current shareholders at $41 a share, while $30 million is the personal investment of Simon, who has been criticized for putting little of his own funds into acquisitions.

The remainder will be used, along with the bank board's financial assistance, in improving Bell's capital base and ridding the new institution of bad loans, said an individual close to Simon's group who asked not to be named.

Bell was one of the most notorious of California's fast-growing savings institutions and one of the first to be put in the bank board's management consignment program in 1985.

Through aggressively soliciting $100,000 certificates of deposit, Bell grew explosively, from $400 million in assets in 1982 to $1.9 billion by 1984. Bell managers then issued loans on a number of commercial construction projects, many of which eventually went into default.

During this growth binge, Bell was headed by David Butler, who owned a small commercial real estate firm in northern California.

In March 1986, the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp. filed a lawsuit in Federal District Court in San Francisco against Bell's top officers and directors for fraud and misappropriation of funds.

Simon's group agreed last August to buy Western Federal. But completion of the deal was postponed when the group had to revise its financing because of the weakened financial condition of an Australian partner.

Over the last two years, the bank board had twice tried to find a buyer for Bell Savings by holding an auction.

As part of the merger agreement, the FSLIC would receive $15 million in preferred shares of DP Holdings and a 25 percent stake of nonvoting common stock.

Western Federal will be one of four financial institutions overseen by Wespar Financial Services Inc., a San Francisco entity controlled by Simon's group. Wespar is headed by Preston Martin, the former vice chairman of the Federal Reserve Board.

Besides Western Federal, the group controls Honolulu Federal Savings and Loan; Southern California Savings and Loan of Beverly Hills, and West Coast Savings and Loan of Santa Monica.

In addition to Martin, Simon's group includes Larry B. Thrall, a Los Angeles real estate investor; Roy Doumaini, chairman of First Interstate Bank of Hawaii; Craig Gosden, chief executive of Wespar Realty Advisers Inc. in Los Angeles, and Gerald L. Parsky, a Los Angeles lawyer.

NYSE head: Tokyo market open to foreign firms

By DAVID E. SANGER
New York Times News Service

TOKYO — The chairman of the New York Stock Exchange came to the only stock market bigger than his own and pronounced the Tokyo market open to foreign firms, after years of struggle.

"Three years ago, the only topic of discussion here was whether or not Americans could get access to this market," John J.Phelan Jr. said in an interview Tueday.

He had just toured the exchange with the head of the its international department, Hideaki Yamishita, and met with representatives of the 17 New York Stock Exchange member firms that have begun to trade in Tokyo as well as in New York.

"Today, no one talks about it. Instead, they talk about how to make money — the same way they do in New York or London or Brussels."

While Phelan contended that foreign firms, which now account for 22 of the 122 on the Tokyo exchange, were no longer "inherently disadvantaged," brokers here cautioned that they were not yet full members of the club.

Much of the market's activity is dominated by the four largest securities firms here, led by Nomura Securities, and their decisions about what to urge clients to buy and sell each day are the largest determinant of short-term movement in prices here.

"We are still excluded from the short-term game," a prominent foreign broker said here recently.

Most brokers and other securities house officials appear to agree, however, with Phelan that the Tokyo exchange has proved far more hospitable for foreign brokers than seemed likely three years ago.

Phelan's comments about the securities industry were in sharp contrast to the complaints of other American industries — from semiconductor makers to farmers — who maintain that despite agreements and government-to-government cajoling, Japanese markets remain basically closed to them.

But they were also a measure of how urgently Japanese officials have moved to clear away obstacles to making the Tokyo exchange a premier world market, alongside London and New York.

Despite its size — Tokyo's trading volume and market capitalization outstrip New York's — the Tokyo exchange has until recently felt somewhat like an insecure newcomer.

Phelan is expected to announce the creation of a Japan Advisory Committee to counsel the New York exchange on the views of the Japanese business community and the relationships between international capital markets.

It will be headed by Saburo Okita, a former foreign minister of Japan, and the vice chairman will be Akio Morita, the chairman and founder of the Sony Corp., who has assumed the informal role of Japan's leading business diplomat.

The move comes just as Japanese investors, literally awash in money, are investing record amounts in the American markets.

But few Japanese firms have sought to be listed on the American exchanges, chiefly because most appear to be unwilling to submit to the stricter requirements in reporting earnings in the United States.

Among other differences, Japanese firms report their consolidated earnings only twice a year and are not required to break out details according to their lines of business.

On one topic critical to both exchanges — joint policing of insider trading — Phelan appeared not to be pressing the Japanese too hard on this trip.

Young computer expert charged with bilking six investors

DEDHAM, Mass. (AP) — A young computer whiz who tried to commit suicide after creditors and authorities seized his company has been charged with bilking six investors out of more than $500,000 to keep his business operating.

A Nofolk County grand jury handed up an indictment Tuesday against 24-year-old Tex Zachary Hildreth, charging him with 11 counts of felony larceny.

He was scheduled to be arraigned today in Norfolk Superior Court. His attorney did not return telephone calls after business hours Tuesday.

Hildreth, who started his computer software firm at age 20 and lived lavishly, orchestrated "financial deals where he promised investors substantial returns," said Mike McGorty, a spokesman for the county district attorney.

"The money is still outstanding," the spokesman said. "This (fraud) could stretch well beyond a million dollars."

Some of the money was solicited to pay off other investors and bank notes, said McGorty.

Hildreth also is charged with using falsified documents to obtain bank loans for his Braintree-based company, Massdata Corp., McGorty said.

"Why he was doing it is something that remains to come out. This is a very long and careful investigation and it continues," he said.

The grand jury heard testimony from more than 50 witnesses over two months, McGorty said.

Each of the 11 counts carries a maximum penalty of five years in prison or a $25,000 fine and two years in prison, McGorty said.

Hildreth and his mother, Rose, 50, fled Massachusetts just before his company was closed in May and its assets seized.

They were found a short time later when an employee at a New Hampshire hotel called police to report a bloodied man wandering in the lobby. Police found Hildreth, who apparently had slashed his wrists. His mother, a former school lunchroom worker who was employed by Massdata as a clerk, was found lying injured in their room. Both were incoherent, police said.

In the room, authorities found what they believed were suicide notes, said Manchester, N.H., police Lt. William Bovaird.

Hildreth, who had been charged with larceny of more than $250 after police received a complaint about his business dealings, was arrested as a fugitive.

He bought his first computer at age 16 and, with the help of a mentor, rented office space to start his own software firm at age 20. The confidence he gained prompted the overweight young man to lose 115 pounds in less than two years.

He quickly surrounded himself with symbols of success, including a $220,000 condominium, a $32,000 BMW and a $4,000, 50-inch TV.

Legendary Kelly to step down as Beatrice chairman

By JULIA FLYNN SILER
New York Times News Service

CHICAGO — Donald P. Kelly, who led a $6.2 billion leveraged buyout of the Beatrice Co. in 1986, will resign as Beatrice's chairman on Oct. 1, the company said Tuesday.

Kelly, 66, has overseen the sale of about $7 billion of Beatrice's assets since the buyout, most recently Tropicana Products Inc. and the Beatrice International Food Co.

With only a few businesses remaining, Kelly had been widely expected to resign from the company's day-to-day management to pursue his own deals.

The timing of his resignation was influenced by Beatrice's recent decisions to end negotiations with a third party that sought to purchase the company.

Beatrice has also halted efforts to sell its remaining operating companies, Swift-Eckrich Inc., Beatrice-Hunt Wesson Inc. and Beatrice Cheese Inc., a spokeswoman said.

These decisions, which were made because the company did not receive what it considered to be adequate offers for its businesses, were disclosed last month in a Securities and Exchange Commission filing. As a result, Beatrice's present focus is as an operating company, which no longer coincides with Kelly's interest and strengths as a deal maker, the spokeswoman said.

"Beatrice has clearly reached a new stage in its development," said Henry R. Kravis, a member of Beatrice's board and a founding partner of Kohlberg, Kravis, Roberts & Co., the investment banking company that acquired a controlling stake in Beatrice after the buyout. "Today's announcement recognizes that reality."

Kelly, who owns about 3.1 percent of Beatrice's stock, will continue to be a member of the company's board. He is said to be interested in spinning off Swift-Eckridge Inc. as an acquisition vehicle.

The company's spokeswoman declined to comment on Kelly's plans. But company insiders say that Kelly is considering starting a new company, which has been dubbed E-III a name derived from E-II a company headed by Kelly that was set up to buy other companies.

E-II, which went public in 1987, was acquired by American Brands Inc., a consumer goods company based in Old Greenwich, Conn. last February.

Frederick B. Rentschler, who has been president and chief executive of Beatrice since June 1987, will continue to have responsibility for day-to-day operations of the company, which earned $303 million on sales of $968 million in the quarter ended May 31.

"Beatrice needs a strong operating executive and has that expertise at hand in Fred Rentschler, who is familiar with the businesses and who will help assure future returns for the company," Kelly said in a statement. Kelly was unavailable for further comment.

Workers comp groups merge

AUSTIN (AP) — Two organizations dedicated to reform in the Texas workers' compensation system announced a merger Tuesday to persuade the 1989 Legislature to make widespread changes in the system.

"We're not going to be satisfied with some tinkering of the current system. Some small changes here and there are not going to fix it. What needs to be done is a major overhaul of our workers' comp system," said Dallas-area banker Gary Bruner.

Bruner, of Commonwealth Bancorp., Arlington, told a news conference Texas Alliance for Growth and Texans for Equity in Workers' Compensation would merge under the alliance name.

Ron Bradford of Gifford-Hill & Co., Inc., Dallas, said Texans for Equity has "many hundreds of members throughout the state."

Bruner, noting that numerous groups are working on workers' compensation, said, "We have a very common thread. We want to see Texas progress economically."

He gave as one example Justin Boot Co., which he said pays $750 a year per worker in workers' compensation premiums, while in Missouri it only costs Justin $159 a year per worker. "Guess where they're going to expand their plant when they have that decision to make? It's going to be in Missouri," Bruner said.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

CD cash in EE bonds makes dollar sense

By BILL DOYLE

Q. A $22,000 certificate of deposit we own will mature shortly. We are inclined to put that money into Series EE, U.S. Savings Bonds. The main reason is that we would not have to keep track of the interest accruing on the bonds and would not be required to report the interest on our federal income tax return until we cash the bonds.

We have more than enough other income for our needs and realize savings bond interest is not too great. But we just don't want the yearly hassle of reporting investment income. My husband and I are in our late sixties and detest paperwork. Under these circumstances, are EE bonds a good choice?

Doyle

A. Certainly. You're like many folks — of all ages — who want safe investments to tuck away and not bother about until the time comes to collect the cash.

Owners of EE bonds, as well as the predecessor E bonds and U.S. Savings Notes, can choose between two methods of reporting the interest on their federal income tax returns. That interest is not subject to state and/or local income tax.

They can report that interest on the return they file each year or, as you plan to do, they can report it on the return filed for the year in which the bonds are redeemed. The vast majority of people use the second method.

Savings bond interest shouldn't be called "not too great." On a government guaranteed investment, a more apt description is "not bad at all."

EE bonds now being sold accrue interest at a guaranteed 6 percent or a variable "market-based" rate, whichever is higher — when held for at least five years. If cashed before five years, they earn less.

The market-based rate, which is set every May 1 and November 1 for the following six months, is equal to 85 percent of the average yield on five-year U.S. Treasury bonds and notes. Since the market-based rate system was put into effect on Nov. 1, 1982, that rate has ranged from 11.09 percent to 6.06 percent. For the current six months, it is 6.9 percent.

Q. I have four Series E bonds in $1,000 denominations, bearing issue dates of July, September, November 1977 and February, 1978, respectively. I am not currently in need of cash.

What percentage of interest am I getting on these bonds? Do you recommend I retain them?

A. Your particular bonds are accruing annual interest at a guaranteed 7.5 percent and will continue to do so until each enters its next "extended maturity period" — 15 years after its issue date. With that interest rate, the natural recommendation is to hang on to those bonds.

E bonds issued from December 1973 through June 1980 had five-year original maturities and, so far, have been granted two 10-year additional maturities.

Q. You have explained that E bonds issued before May 1952 reach final maturity and stop paying interest after 40 years. What about Es issued after May 1952. When does the interest on them stop?

A. That depends on exactly when each E bond was issued.

Here's the schedule of issue dates and maturity periods: May 1952 through January 1957, 39 years and eight months; February 1957 through May 1959, 38 years and 11 months; June 1959 through November 1965, 37 years and nine months; December 1965 through May 1969, 27 years; June 1969 through November 1973, 25 years and 10 months; December 1973 through June 1980, 25 years.

Although not assured, it is generally expected that Es issued after November 1965 will be granted further 10-year extensions.

All EE bonds, which have been issued since 1980, are in their original maturity periods and will probably get extended maturities.

Credit card, mortgage rates different animals

BUSINESS MIRROR

NEW YORK (AP) — Recent increases in short-term interest rates could hurt homebuyers and homeowners whose monthly payments are based on variable-rate mortgages. No question about it.

But credit card users could be hurt even worse.

First reactions to the increases focused almost entirely on housing, since by far the greatest variable debt is owed in this category. But interest on most home mortgages remains tax-deductible; most credit card debt isn't.

Moreover, much credit card interest is at rates actually double that on many home mortgages. In addition, many credit card users incur fees that, if added to the posted rate, would bring it beyond 20 percent a year.

Credit card debt is especially sensitive, too. Whereas most home mortgage loans vary only on a six-month to three-year basis — meaning delays in increases could be that long — credit card interest can change very quickly.

In addition, home mortgage debt is actually an investment in the sense that increases in home prices might entirely offset any rise in interest costs.

Most credit card debt offers no such offset; generally, it is used to pay for items that have been completedly consumed, such as vacations, or for items of eroding rather than increasing valuue.

And, of course, Uncle Sam's tax code does very little to help credit card users adjust to the higher costs.

Until 1986, all credit card interest constituted a deduction on federal income tax returns. The Tax Act of 1986 cut that to 65 percent in 1987 and 40 percent this year. The percentage falls to 20 in 1989, and 10 in 1990.

Because of its relatively low interest rate and full tax-deductibility, home mortgage debt remains the only tax shelter available to most people, and it is an enormous one.

So great is it, and so much of a departure from the treatment afforded other debt, that real estate and housing people are convinced an attack on it will be launched in Congress next year.

Meanwhile, statistical evidence suggests Americans are very aware of the friendly treatment accorded housing debt. Despite interest rates edging higher, sales of existing homes in June rose for the fifth straight month.

The latest interest rate increases, to 6.5 percent for the Federal Reserve discount rate and 10 percent on the prime lending rate, may eventually take a toll on home sales and housing starts. But even this is not a certainty.

In their August analysis, for example, economists of the National Association of Realtors said expected rises in interest rates might encourage many potential homebuyers to purchase home earlier than they had planned.

Such a phenomenon would not be new; in the 1970s, many couples bought houses earlier than they had planned in order to beat rising prices. And the same behavior has long been observed in automobile markets.

Besides, there is a fair chance that higher interest rates might, in the long run, be offset entirely by increases in the market value of the house that is purchased with the debt. What could be more comforting than that?

Or, on the other hand, what could be more distressing than to pay increasing rates of interest for goods or services whose value is declining or already used up?

That is the situation in which credit card borrowers might find themselves.

Fall fashions feature bold colors, blurry outlook

By LOUIS TRAGER
Hearst News Service

The colors may be brighter in clothing this fall, but the outlook for a season of green in the retail industry is fuzzy.

As retailers gear up for winter, which traditionally accounts for about 30 percent of their business, the predictions of industry observers range from cautious optimism to just plain caution. The optimists aren't pretending it will be a boom year, and the pessimists acknowledge that 1988 probably won't be the disaster it originally threatened to be.

The vagueness of many forecasts and the speculative nature of the reasons behind the predictions are easily explained, said analyst Ed Weller of Montgomery Securities.

"It's because nobody knows what's going on," he said. "There aren't real trends now."

Marketing consultant Albert Aguiar(CQ) foresaw "a mild increase for the year, not a barn-burner. It isn't going to be one of the great retailing years of our lives."

He projected a 2 to 3 percent annual increase in same-store sales for the nation's biggest retailers. Same-store sales compare sales at existing stores from period to period.

Weller's sums up his outlook for the year in one word: Blah.

"But blah is a relief because it was the (pits) for a year," he says.

For the last year, retailers have faced mounting inventories, constant price-cutting, moderate sales growth, little or no increase in same-store sales and poor profit margins. The rest of this year's numbers almost have to look relatively good if only because the 1987 numbers were so dismal.

The topic of women's clothing quickly surfaces in almost any discussion of retailing. That's because it is a big part of the business, accounting for up to 30 percent of department store sales. It is also the big draw for women customers, who still do the bulk of the shopping for most other merchandise.

Industry observers say women's clothing is bound to start moving better than it has during the past 12 months. The symbol of the period was the mini-skirt, which provoked an unorganized boycott by an aging, working female population left without acceptable hemline standards.

The hope for major gains in the women's clothing segment of the retail market rests largely on a belief that consumers, by curbing their spending, have beaten designers into coming up with more varied, becoming and versatile clothes.

Fall clothing for women will carry a variety of hemlines, tending lower, and greater emphasis on suits and slacks. Women's clothes also will be more colorful, with the hope that this will translate into eye-catching and appealing.

However, where the optimists see variety, the pessimists or realists, such as Aguiar and retail consultant Robert Kahn, see fashion industry and consumer confusion and conservatism.

Many stores got inventories down last spring, have them under control now and are trying to wean customers off the sale-a-day syndrome. Still, the first indications are that back-to-school sales have been bogged down by the national heat wave, Weller said.

Optimists such as securities analyst Alan Silverman of Evans & Co. in New York say there is nowhere for the thermometer to go but down, and no way for sales to go but up.

Consumer debt and interest rates are high, both bad signs. Still, "people seem willing to borrow; income growth seems good, too," Silverman says. He projects Christmas sales 5 to 6 percent above 1987 levels.

over-$100,000 accounts — which will no longer be fully insured when the final merger agreement between NCNB and the FDIC is signed before the end of October.

NCNB's sources of funding — including $3 billion in cash from the FDIC as part of the restructuring transaction — are adequate and the bank faces no cash squeeze as a result of any withdrawals, Hartman said.

The FDIC agreed to extend the blanket coverage of former First RepublicaBank deposits for the 60 to 90 days it is expected to take before the final agreement is signed, Simonitsch said.

When that deal is signed the blanket commitment will be lifted.

A separate issue surrounds the change in NCNB's structure, where each bank in the system has become a branch of the central Dallas-based institution, while First RepublicBank Corp. maintained 40 separate banks under a single holding company.

As branches of a single bank, FDIC deposit insurance will be limited to $100,000 per qualified depositor across the system.

Last week on his visit to Midland NCNB Texas chairman Buddy Kemp said that the bank could consider "packing" CDs at its other state banks — North Carolina, Florida, South Carolina, Georgia, Virginia and Maryland — to increase depositor insurance if necessary.

However, he emphasized that deposit insurance should not be an issue with a healthy bank. "Eventually, you are going to realize that you don't have to be (worried about the $100,000 limit) anymore," Kemp told a group of 50 Midland bank customers and dignitaries.

"You've got some strong and healthy banks here and you will get away from the mindset that banks here have clearly taught you to do over the last five years.

"Now that you're going to have some statewide banks, you're not going to be able to (pack accounts). But more importantly, you're not going to need to any more," said Kemp.

Simonitsch noted that the corporation has not specifically addressed the "packing issue" adding that the service is not currently available to NCNB customers, but could be considered at some point in the future.

TAX

Gramm said other measures, including tax incentives to spur drilling and complete deregulation of gas prices, are still needed to boost the industry.

Bentsen described the windfall profits tax as "a levy that singled out America's energy producers for some of the most misguided and unfair treatment in our history."

Congress passed the windfall profits tax in exchange for the phase-out of price controls on domestic oil. It was an attempt to recapture some of the money oil companies were expected to make when prices increased after full decontrol began in 1981.

About $77.3 billion in windfall profits tax has been collected since it was imposed.

SETTLEMENT

The states that did not participate in the settlement were Georgia, Kentucky, Nevada and South Carolina, Webster said.

Webster said his office and officials in some other states were mailing letters to the car owners.

"The practice by Chrysler of selling what were supposed to be new cars which had already been driven hundreds of miles is in my opinion a deplorable business practice that results in deceiving consumers," said Kansas Attorney General Robert T. Stephan, who also announced the settlement.

Local insurance agent re-elected to TALU board

Dee K. Carter, Midland agent for the Lincoln Natioan Life Insurance Co. of Fort Wayne, Ind., has been re-elected to a three-year term on the board of directors of the Texas Association of Life Underwriters.

He will continue as director for Region 6 of the TALU, which covers associations of life underwriters in Midland, Odessa and San Angelo.

Carter was also appointed chairman of the public service committee for the state of Texas and the TALU by Curtis Saylor, TALU president. In this position, he will coordinate public service activities of the 39 ALU associations throughout Texas.
