Demonstrators' deaths mar Solidarity marches

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Police dodging bricks and firebombs fired on a crowd of demonstrators in the town of Lubin, killing two and wounding 12 in the most violent incident marking the second anniversary of Solidarity, the official PAP news agency said today.

Meanwhile, the wife of interned Solidarity leader Lech Walesa said after visiting him that he "was not of the opinion to turn out in the streets and fight. But the workers know that the law is not respected (by the authorities) and workers should fight with the appropriate measures." She did not specify which measures would be appropriate. Mrs. Walesa spoke to a reporter in Gdansk.

The report by PAP was the first announcement of fatalities in demonstrations in at least a dozen cities Tuesday. They were the first deaths caused by clashes between police and protesters since the early days of martial law last December.

PAP said three of the 12 wounded in Lubin were hurt seriously. Eleven police officers and one volunteer police reservist were also reported hurt.

"Investigations so far show that firearms were used because of the aggressive behavior of the crowd, who were attacking the (government) forces with gasoline bombs, stones and bricks," Warsaw radio said in a report monitored in London.

Lubin, in southwest Poland about 40 miles from Wroclaw, was not mentioned in earlier reports about the rioting that erupted in at least 12 Polish cities on Tuesday. It is a copper-mining town of 67,000 people, where few incidents of unrest have been reported previously. Authorities responded to Tuesday's deaths by imposing an 8 p.m. to 5 a.m. curfew on the town's youths and an 11 p.m. to 5 a.m. curfew on adults.

Similar curfews were reimposed in Wroclaw, Dzierzoniow, Bielawa, Klodzko and Swidnica, official sources said.

Warsaw radio, meanwhile, said police had arrested a "terrorist group" planning "political murders" in Katowice, southwest Poland's coal capital where protests were also reported Tuesday.

"In the apartment of one of the group's members...police found methodical instructions on killing people with specially devised bullets," the radio said.

The broadcast said the arrests were "terrifying evidence of the increasing ruthlessness" of political opponents.

The radio said the group planned to execute officials in public, sabotage state facilities and provoke demonstrations and riots by Solidarity members who failed to accept their conspiracy.

The state media hinted at a new crackdown by Poland's martial law regime, saying Poles will have to "pay" for the defiant demonstrations in support of Solidarity.

U.S. protests Cuban jamming of several radio freqencies

WASHINGTON (AP) — The State Department says Cuban jamming of at least five AM radio frequencies in the United States is another example of "Cuban disregard for international agreements and the rule of law."

The department declined to speculate about Cuba's motives but the broadcasts appeared to be related to an administration proposal for the establishment of a Florida-based station, Radio Marti, to broadcast to Cuba.

The Cuban broadcasts Monday night caused an outcry among the affected American stations. General Manager Abe Barron of WHO of Des Moine, Iowa, said, "This is the first firing in a radio war that the State Department has taken so lightly."

Music and both Spanish and English propaganda were heard on American stations ranging from Fort Lauderdale, Fla. to Salt Lake City, Utah.

In a statement late Tuesday, the State Department said the Cuban broadcasts were on several new frequencies, including some never mentioned by Cuba in a proposed plan that was rejected by an international broadcast conference held last fall in Rio de Janeiro.

"This is unfortunate evidence of continuing Cuban disregard for international agreements and the rule of law," the statement said. It added an American response to the Cuban action is under consideration.

The statement said Cuban jamming and interference has been going on for over 15 years and that Cuba attempted to stir up social unrest in the United States during the 1960's through a so-called Radio Dixie.

"The problem of Cuban interference, which is now assuming national proportions, needs to be addressed as a separate issue from Radio Marti," the statement said.

In New York, an informed diplomatic source said Monday's broadcast would not be repeated immediately and was meant as a "test and a warning" to demonstrate the interference the broadcasts could cause in the United States.

Session could make or break pipeline ban

By JOHN P. WALLACH

WASHINGTON — Secretary of State George Shultz will attend a special meeting of NATO foreign ministers on Oct. 2-3 in Ottawa that is quickly assuming proportions of a make or break session on the controversial Reagan embargo of firms supplying equipment to the Soviet natural gas pipeline.

State Department spokesman John Hughes, in announcing the Shultz trip, which will be his first since assuming office, said the unusual Ottawa meeting has been planned since President Reagan met NATO leaders in Bonn in June.

But the imposition of the first sanctions by the Commerce Department this week against Dresser-France, a subsidiary of Dresser Industries of Dallas, and against John Brown, a British company whose business is almost entirely dependent on imports of General Electric products, gives it urgency.

If the "temporary denial orders" intended to punish these companies for defying the Reagan ban stay in affect, the United States and its European allies may find themselves closer to an actual "trade war" than anyone would have thought possible a few months ago.

British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and Foreign Secretary Francis Pym have made a deliberate effort to avoid inflammatory anti-American rhetoric on the issue like that used by French Foreign Minister Claude Cheyyson when he told newsmen the U.S. and France were "in the throes of a divorce."

For this reason, Shultz reportedly made a special plea to Reagan to exempt John Brown from the "full" denial order, which prohibits the British company from buying any goods or services in the United States.

Directors of the John Brown company, which employs about 10,000 Britons at a time when unemployment in Britain has reached record proportions, recently informed the U.S. Embassy in London that the multi-billion dollar concern would go bankrupt if the Reagan sanctions are imposed.

Shultz reportedly has been working behind the scenes in an effort to resolve the dispute before the November meeting of the GATT nations in Geneva where it is feared the European Common Market countries will seek reprisals by adopting protectionist tariffs against American farm exports.

William Brock, Reagan's special trade negotiator, said Tuesday that the Western allies must agree on a 'whole new strategy" on East-West trade. "We have to find ways to reduce the amount of really strategic material that is going to the Soviets," Brock said.

If the NATO partners at the Ottawa meeting agreed to such restrictions in the future, it is possible that Reagan would reconsider the ban on U.S.-owned foreign companies, Hughes said. "I think the U.S. would be willing to discuss any proposals made by its allies" to resolve this crisis, he added.

Reagan meanwhile was described as resolute in his desire to maintain the sanctions until significant progress is made towards the lifting of martial law in Poland, the freeing of political prisoners there and the resumption of a real dialogue with the Solidarity free trade union movement.

Reagan's attitude is "one of regret and of sympathy for the compahies involved," Hughes said, "but his policy is firm and he has made it clear he is committed to this policy.

"In the case of each violation the administration will indicate what appropriate action it will take," the spokesman said.

Penalties for violating the embargo include possible fines of up to $10,000 for each American director of the foreign subsidiary as well as possible prison terms. "Obviously the administration is concerned" about the impact of this growing crisis on transatlantic relations, Hughes said.

Center provides educational services

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

About half of the staff at Region 18 Education Service Center spends an average of three days a week out in the field. Those 32 people will average 10,000 miles a year in-district traveling.

According to Dr. J.W. Donaldson, executive director, one year when the staff was somewhat larger, he figured they had traveled ten times around the world.

Region 18 is the largest of the 20 education service centers scattered throughout the state. It serves school districts in 19 counties and covers over 38,000 square miles. The districts range in size from Ector County Independent School District's 24,000 students to Terlingua's 24.

Last year, over 13,000 school employees participated in over 500 workshops scheduled by the education service center. That was a substantial increase from the number of workshops and participants during 1980-81 — and with a smaller staff, Donaldson pointed out.

"We are one of the few things that can do more with less," he said, grinning. "But we've got that rubberband stretched around us about as far as it can go."

Created by the State Board of Education in 1967, the 20 education service centers provide cost effective services to 100 percent of the school districts in Texas. Operating the education service center on fewer funds from federal sources, Donaldson said there has been a cutback in the number of staff employees, revenue and expenditures and an increase in the amount of state and local funding over the past year.

The percentages of revenues generated for the 1981-82 year were 26 percent local, 29 percent state and 45 percent federal. This year, revenues will be 34 percent locally funded with 35 percent coming from the state and 31 percent coming from federal funds.

Revenues decreased from $2,787,661 in 1981-82 to $2,467,241 in 1982-83. Expenditures decreased form $2,947,722 in 1981-82 to $2,595,363 in 1982-83.

While the media lending libraries have operated by charging school district $1 per student with the state matching that figure, Donaldson said this year school districts will pay $1.50 while the state will continue to pay $1. Private schools are charged $2.

"With the exception of curriculum media and films, our primary function is to assist teachers and instructors in learning new skills," Donaldson explained.

The center allows school districts to share costs of often expensive workshops, lectures and training sessions. According to Donaldson, the center provides services that many smaller districts with limited budgets could not afford.

"Our philosophy is that service available anywhere should be available everywhere," Marion Sell, deputy director, explained. "A person shouldn't be penalized because of where he lives."

"We have no regulated or mandated function," Donaldson said. "Ours is completely voluntary. If a school district can get services better or cheaper someplace else, we suggest that they do. We can put them in touch with the people that can best serve them."

"We don't just go out and put on a session," Vernon Stokes, assistant director, added. "We address it to their needs."

Providing assistance to local districts in curriculum and staff development has made the last two or three weeks of the summer the busiest for putting on workshops, according to Donaldson, although the planning began as early as December and January.

"During the month of June, we had 1,700 teachers in 40 or so workshops," he said.

"June through August is like Christmas to us," Sell added, laughing.

Midlanders face substantial hikes in auto insurance rates

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The so-called "typical" motorist in the Midland area will be paying $64 more for auto insurance as of Nov. 1, under new auto insurance rates approved by the State Board of Insurance.

That amounts to an increase of 16.9 percent over current rates, SBI reports.

Statewide average increases are 14.8 percent. The 16.9 percent figure for Midland and Ector counties is the largest percentage increase in the state.

SBI bases its comparison figures on 1982 low-priced Ford, Chevrolet or Plymouth, not used in business but driven to and from work, with no male operator under 25, and no female operator under 21.

Those rates also reflect basic $10,000/$20,000/$5,000 liability (the minimum required by state law), $5,000 personal injury protection, $50 deductible comprehensive and $200 deductible collision coverage.

Average increases for bodily injury rates for the Midland area are 11.5 percent, while the average increases for property damage are 23.1 percent.

Related story, Page 4A

For $200 and $250 deductible collison coverage combined, the average increase is 16.6 percent.

Those figures apply to the rating territory including Midland, Ector, Howard and Scurry counties.

Other area counties (with the exception of Tom Green) fall into another rating territory, for which the change for the "average" motorist would be $31, or 9.1 percent.

Last of PLO guerrillas leave Beirut

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — As the last Palestine Liberation Organization guerrillas prepared to leave here today for Syria, Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger arrived to thank the U.S. Marines who helped safeguard their departure.

The defense secretary flew in by helicopter and met immediately with U.S. presidential envoy Philip C. Habib at the residence of U.S. Ambassador Robert Dillon, five miles east of the city. There were no details on their talks.

Weinberger was to meet later today with Lebanese President Elias Sarkis.

Beirut newspapers reported that Weinberger's talks with Sarkis and Lebanon's president-elect Bashir Gemayel were expected to focus on strengthening the Lebanese army and on a process to bring about an Israeli and Syrian withdrawal from Lebanon in the wake of the PLO evacuation.

The defense secretary was expected to lunch with U.S. Marines, who arrived here last week to join French and Italian troops in a peacekeeping force to oversee the withdrawal.

WEINBERGER SAID Tuesday the 800 American soldiers could be withdrawn "very soon after" the pullout is completed.

PLO chief Yasser Arafat was due in Greece today aboard the Greek cruise ship Atlantis for the first stop on his journey into exile. Arafat is expected to "stay up to 24 hours in Greece and leave by air," Greek government spokesman Dimitri Maroudas said.

Arafat, who left Beirut Monday, has not said where he will go from Greece, but government sources in Athens say he is headed to Tunis, Tunisia, where he will begin establishing a new PLO base.

Massive barrages of machine gun fire thundered in west Beirut in tribute to the last departing contingent of 700 PLO guerrillas set to sail today to the Syrian port of Tartus, three days ahead of schedule.

Lebanon's state radio said Arafat's top security chief Salah Khalef, code-named Abu Iyad, and chief of staff, Brig. Gen. Saad Sayel, also known as Abu Walid, were among the last batch of evacuees.

On Tuesday, the Syrian army completed a two-day withdrawal of its 3,000-man 85th Brigade, and two Greek ships — the Paros and Santorini — sailed for North Yemen with 480 men on each, PLO officers said.

AN ESTIMATED 15,000 PLO fighters, Syrians and Palestine Liberation Army troops will have been scattered in eight Arab countries when the withdrawal is completed.

The next issue in the Middle East inevitably will concern the creation of a Palestinian state long sought by the guerrilla organization.

A top-secret State Department advisory group has recommended the United States support the creation of such a state in the Israeli-occupied West Bank and Gaza, where 1.3 million Palestinians now live. The new state would share Jerusalem as a capital with the Jewish state, according to the proposal.

A copy of the study, obtained by The Associated Press, says the United States and Israel could avert control of such a state by pro-Soviet radicals committed to destroy Israel if both countries helped in its formation.

Israel flatly rejects the idea of a Palestinian state in the territory it occupied in 1967.

In a related development, President Reagan has told Israel he wants the West Bank linked to Jordan in a future Middle East peace settlement, and Jewish settlement of the occupied territory stopped, the Israeli radio and press reported today.

THE ISRAELI media said the American policy, reportedly outlined in a letter from Reagan to Prime Minister Menachem Begin Tuesday, stirred worried reaction from the Israeli government.

Israel Radio said Begin would interrupt his vacation in northern Israel to chair an emergency Cabinet meeting.

Officials refused comment on the reports, but the media quoted government sources as saying the U.S. policy departed from the Camp David accords, which was the basis for negotiations of the West Bank and Gaza Strip and their 1.3 million Palestinian residents.

The accords outlined a plan for five years of self-government for the Palestinians in occupied territory, after which their final status would be settled in negotiations involving Israel, Egypt, Jordan and the Palestinians.

Weinberger is scheduled to travel to Tel Aviv from Beirut for talks with Israeli leaders, including Defense Minister Ariel Sharon, and then go to Cairo to meet with Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak.

Asked if he planned to discuss the withdrawal of Israeli troops from Lebanon, Weinberger reiterated the U.S. position that the removal of all foreign troops from Lebanon was "essential to ultimate peace" in the region.

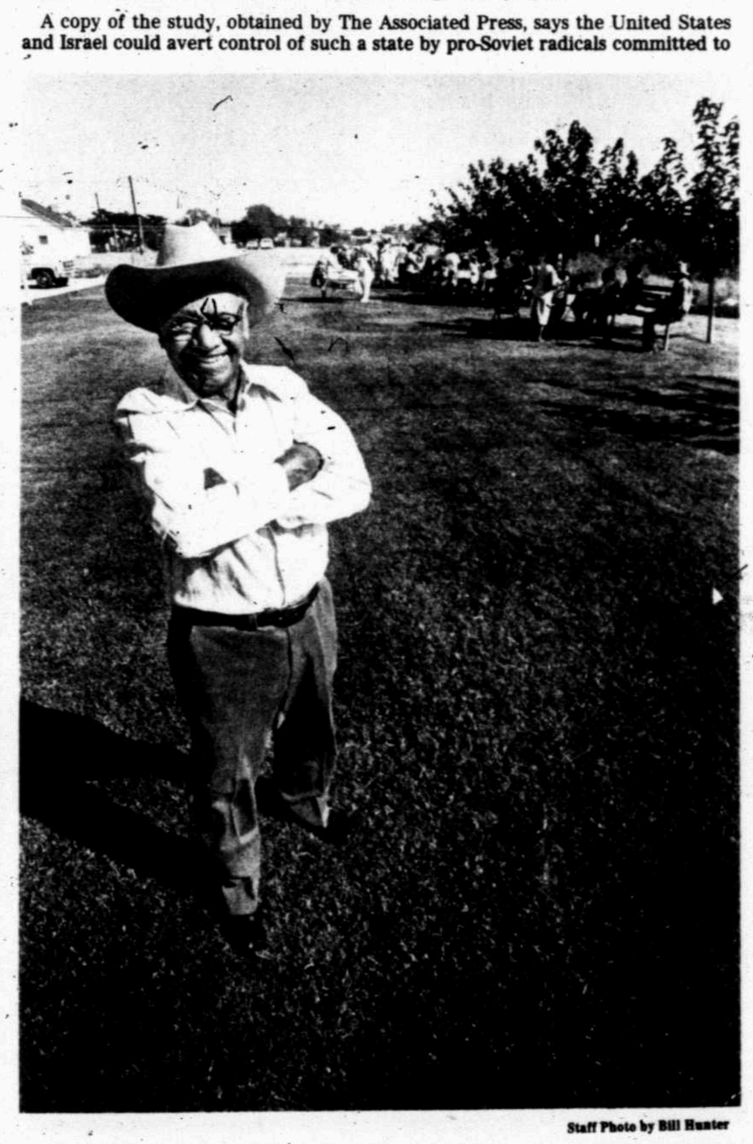

LEBANESE PRIME Minister Shafik Wazzan says he wants the Israelis to withdraw from the Beirut seaport, airport and positions on the mid-city entrances to west Beirut now that the PLO evacuation is nearing an end.

But the Israelis say the PLO violated the evacuation plan by turning its heavy weapons over to its leftist Lebanese militia allies, instead of the Christian-led Lebanese army. Israel is now demanding that the 1,500 fighters of the pro-PLO Moslem Mourabitoun militia be withdrawn from west Beirut.

Wazzan and other Lebanese Moslem leaders rejected the demand, saying this was a "strictly domestic affair uncovered by the PLO evacuation agreement."

PLO sources admit guerrillas did give their heavy weapons to their leftist allies. Wazzan, however, said the PLO gave some of their weapons to the army and destroyed most of them before departure.

M. Peter McPherson, administrator of the U.S. Agency for International Deveopment, said here Tuesday that Congress is expected to authorize the $65 million requested by the Reagan administration for relief and rehabilitation in war-torn Lebanon. He said the immediate needs had been met, but that shelter would be required for about 60,000 people before the autumn rains.

Three held for possession of unregistered firearms

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

An Odessa gunsmith, his girlfriend, and a companion who were arrested for possessing unregistered automatic firearms are awaiting arraignment in federal court in Midland.

Arrested Thursday night at an Odessa motel as they were closing a firearms sale to an undercover special agent of the U.S. Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms (ATF) were John James Donnelly, 36, the gunsmith and a manufacturing engineer; Judy Ann Grimmett, 28, and Frederick Ray Cheyney, 29.

Donnelly, who does business as "Ballistek," allegedly converts semi-automatic firearms to automatic-firing weapons and fits them with silencers. He is being held in the federal ward of the Midland City Jail in lieu of posting a $50,000 cash bailbond. Ms. Grimmett and Cheyney, who were released the day after their arrest under $10,000 personal recognizance bonds, are to appear before U.S. Magistrate J. Michael Cunningham in a preliminary hearing at 9 a.m. Friday in the George Mahon Federal Building.

In an alleged gun-sale arrangement made in a Lexington Motor Inn room, Donnelly is accused of offering to sell a Colt AR-15, .223-caliber rifle, converted to fire fully automatic and equipped with a silencer, and a silencer-rigged Ruger .22-caliber Mark I pistol for $1,950 to ATF Special Agent Henry Murray. Neither silencer bore serial numbers, which are required by law. After checking the National Registration and Transfer Records, ATF agents found that no firearms were registered to Donnelly, under his name or in the name of his business, according to ATF agents.

Donnelly also was charged with carrying a .38-caliber Colt Combat Commander pistol.

Ms. Grimmett, whom agents say they had under surveillance when she allegedly delivered the rifle to Murray after Murray had placed a telephone call, was charged with carrying an AMT backup model .38-caliber, 9mm semi-automatic pistol in her purse.

Federal court records reveal that ATF agent Murray had met with Donnelly and Cheyney to negotiate a firearms sale after a federal informant had told ATF of Donnelly's scheme of illegally converting semi-automatic firearms to automatic-firing weapons.

In their 9 p.m. motel-room meeting, Donnelly and Cheyney allegedly offered to sell Murray the rifle and pistol for $1,950. Thereafter, Donnelly made a telephone call.

Elsewhere in Odessa, AFT Special Agent Charles Baylor, who had staked out Donnelly's and Ms. Grimmett's residence, observed the woman "place what appeared to be a firearm" in a Jeep recreational vehicle and then drive to the motel. Once at the Lexington, Ms. Grimmett met Donnelly and Cheyney and handed to Donnelly "something in a blanket." Donnelly then re-entered the motel room, and the three Odessans subsequently were arrested for possession of illegal firearms.

Woman escapes from abductors

A 22-year-old woman escaped unharmed after being abducted near Midland High School late Tuesday morning.

The woman told sheriff's deputies four men, two of whom were armed with knives, forced her into a car at 11:30 a.m. and drove around the eastside before stopping at a convenience store about 45 minutes later. The men had been drinking and apparently had stopped to get more beer when she managed to get away.

The body of an apparent suicide victim found in Ulmer Park about 10:15 a.m. Monday has been identified as that of George Henry Nanoki, 30, of Mesa, Ariz. He had been shot in the right temple with a .22-caliber handgun, which was found nearby.

Odessa policeman treated for injuries

ODESSA — An Odessa police officer was released from Medical Center Hospital following treatment for facial injuries after a high speed chase and a fight with the young motorist he had been pursuing.

Cpl. Kevin Begley suffered minor facial lacerations and a scratch to the left eye during a fight with a juvenile motorist who finally stopped in the driveway of his home after Begley had chased him several blocks.

Begley said he had observed the youth's car travelling at a high rate of speed and become airborne when it hit a dip in the road at an eastside intersection about 1:10 a.m. today. The driver finally pulled into the driveway of his home and family members helped subdue him during the fight.

The youth was turned over to juvenile authorities.

Baltimore man acquitted of murder

BALTIMORE (AP) — A defendant who "rolled the dice" with his future by letting jurors decide his fate by a majority vote, rather than unanimously, has been acquitted of first-degree murder.

After nine hours of deliberation Tuesday, a criminal court jury deadlocked 10-2 in favor of acquitting Larry House, 22, of Baltimore. Because of his decision to ask for a majority decision, the deadlock meant acquittal instead of a retrial.

"He rolled the dice," his lawyer, Howard Margolies, said afterward. "He had the Bible with him and said he had prayed. He wanted to go with it."

DPS investigates death

BIG SPRING — The Department of Public Safety is investigating the apparent hit-and-run death of a woman whose body was found lying on the side of the north service road of Interstate 20, a half-mile west of Salem Road, in Howard County about 9 p.m. Tuesday.

Pronounced dead at the scene was 56-year-old Opal Lee Black of Big Spring. There were no witnesses to the accident.

Services are pending at a Big Spring funeral home.

U.S. ready to impose sanctions on British company

WASHINGTON (AP)— The Reagan administration is ready to impose penalties on a British company that plans to ship pipeline equipment manufactured with U.S. technology to the Soviet Union.

A Soviet freighter in the port of Glascow, Scotland, began Tuesday to load 500 crates of turbine parts produced by the John Brown Engineering Co. of Glasgow. The parts are intended for use in the trans-Siberian natural gas pipeline to Western Europe.

State Department spokesman John Hughes said that "measured" and "appropriate" punitive action will be taken by the Commerce Department against John Brown as soon as a legal determination is made that the parts have been shipped, even though the exact nature of the penalty remains to be determined.

In California, White House deputy press secretary Larry Speakes said no decision has been made about what action would be taken against the British firm.

He said Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige and Secretary of State George Shultz in Washington talked with national security adviser William P. Clark in Santa Barbara by telephone Tuesday.

The State Department said the form of the penalty will be similar to the temporary denial orders issued last week against two French firms — Dresser France and Cruessot-Loire — after they obeyed French government orders to ship compressors to the Soviet Union for use on the pipeline.

The two companies were temporarily banned from buying U.S. products and technology.

The Washington Post and Los Angeles Times reported today that the administration will impose only limited sanctions on the John Brown company. The New York Times said senior administration officials recommended to Reagan that the sanctions should be softened and should be the same for all nations defying the embargo. CBS News said the sanctions would be less severe against John Brown, and that the sanctions against the French companies would be lessened.

John Brown has been told by British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher to ignore the American ban.

In Glasgow, port officials said loading of the turbines, including parts made by the General Electric Corp., is expected to take four days.

President Reagan wants pipeline construction stopped or slowed to bring pressure to bear on the Soviets because of their support for martial law in Poland, to prevent Western Europe from becoming overly dependent on Soviet energy, and to deprive the Soviets of the $10 billion in hard Western currency the pipeline is expected to earn annually.

New abortion law in effect

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — A law requiring doctors to inform parents before performing abortions on girls under 18 went into effect today after a judge refused to block its enforcement pending a full hearing.

A court fight by Planned Parenthood Federation of America, which hopes to have the law declared unconstitutional, was to continue today.

On Tuesday, U.S. District Judge Cale J. Holder denied Planned Parenthood's request for a preliminary injunction to block enforcement of the law.

"Under no circumstance!" said Holder. "No. We have to hear the evidence in the case."

Under the law, any doctor who performs an abortion on a minor without telling her parents first or getting a court waiver could face felony prosecution and penalties of up to eight years in jail and $10,000 fines.

The law doesn't apply to girls under 18 who are independent of their families or those who are married.

Dr. Ralph Streeter of Indianapolis, testifying at the hearing Tuesday, said he opposes the new law because requiring parental notification can often cause problems for teen-age girls.

"I think this (new law) would either send them out of the state or possibly open the door for illegal, unsanitary abortions," Streeter testified.

areas through workshops for reading, writing and math improvement, discipline/motivation/student services, gifted and talented, handicapped, science, social studies, bilingual education, migrant education and administrative/management.

The staff also works in helping districts to receive accreditation, bus driver training, drivers education and adult continuing education services.

In addition to the many workshops and training seminars the staff puts together, the $1.5 million media library is used by students and teachers every day.

Also, Otis Burnett, data processing manager, heads a staff that does test scoring, payroll, finance and tax accounting, student scheduling and grade reporting, attendance accounting and computer assisted instruction for the school districts in Region 18.

Carol Gruben, assistant director of special education, works in a department that assists in providing occupational and physical therapy, orientation and mobility and psychological services for the hearing and sight impaired and the severely handicapped.

All staff members are highly qualified, Donaldson pointed out. They are required to have their master's degree with a specialization in curriculum supervision.

"We're not interested in hiring rookies," he explained. "They have to have credibility when working with teachers."

"They are called to work with some highly competitive people out there," Stokes added. "There are a lot of excellent teachers out there.

"These are creative people," he continued. "They are self-starters and they have to be. This is an idea-generating place."

Former Polish leader dies

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Wladyslaw Gomulka, the Polish communist leader who rode into and out of power on earlier waves of worker unrest, died today at the age of 77 after a long battle with cancer, the state media said.

Informed sources said Gomulka, often seen in the past as a chain smoker, had been treated for throat cancer during the past year at government clinics.

Gomulka played no role in Polish politics after he was ousted from power on Dec. 20, 1970, and lived quietly at a government villa in the Warsaw suburb of Otwock. He fell in the aftermath of a workers' uprising in Gdansk and Szczecin that the army bloodily suppressed.

THE OFFICIAL casualty count from the episode was 45 killed and 1,165 injured. Polish dissidents have long maintained that the real figures were much higher.

The uprising made plain the extent of worker dissatisfaction with the government's economic policy and performance. Before order was completely restored, Gomulka left the ruling Politburo and was replaced by Edward Gierek.

A statement released at the time said Gomulka asked to be relieved of his duties because of "circulatory trouble and eye disorders," but subsequent accounts by Polish authorities have all said that he was forced out.

ALTHOUGH HE left office involuntarily, Gomulka remains the closest the Polish communists have come to producing a genuinely popular leader, thanks to the way he stood up to Soviet pressure during the Khrushchev and Stalin eras.

Born in Krosno on Feb. 6, 1905, Gomulka started work at age 14 in local oil fields. Friends remembered him as a youth with a razor-sharp temper who had little time for socializing.

He launched his political career at age 22 as a Communist organizer in the Dabrowa mining district and was jailed several times by the pre-war government.

He was sentenced to four years in prison in 1932 for allegedly fomenting a strike in Lodz, the nation's textile city. The sentence was remitted when his health broke.

FOUR YEARS LATER, he was sentenced to seven years imprisonment for illegal Communist Party activities in Silesia. He spent the first 18 months in solitary confinement and was released at the outbreak of World War II in 1939.

The prison term probably saved his life. While Gomulka was behind bars, Soviet dictator Josef Stalin executed most of the Polish Communist Party's leaders, who had fled to Moscow. They were accused of "deviation."

When the communists took power in Poland after World War II, Gomulka insisted that the Polish party should take into account national differences, that there could be different and equally legitimate ways to construct a communist society. This brought him into increasing conflict with the wing of the party which had spent the war years in Moscow and hewed closely to the orthodoxy propounded by Stalin.

IN SEPTEMBER, 1948, Gomulka was attacked for deviation and forced to relinquish his party post. A year later he was relieved of his other government jobs and expelled from the party.

In July, 1951 his opponents claimed he was involved with a clique of generals accused of subversion.

Poland weathers more street violence

By THOMAS W. NETTER

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Poland has weathered another round of street protests, but neither the Solidarity underground nor the martial law regime can claim a clear victory.

Street disturbances broke out Tuesday in Warsaw and at least eight other cities as Solidarity supporters heeded calls by fugitive union leaders for a show of strength on the second anniversary of Solidarity's birth.

An Analysis

Both Solidarity, and the authorities who suspended the union when they declared martial last Dec. 13, apparently saw the planned protests as a major test of strength, as well as a testing ground for tactics. But neither side saw it as a final showdown.

Despite the number of protesters — said to be in the thousands in the larger cities of Warsaw, Gdansk, Nowa Huta and Wroclaw — the general lack of workers in the crowds may force a change in union tactics.

"The turnout, which seems to be less than underground leaders had hoped for, shows some weakness in Solidarity's tactics and (may) force it to change its views," one Western observer said. "The union may have to discard future plans for street activities."

Workers, who formed the backbone of the independent union during its strikes and protests last year, were in the minority of those taking to the streets Tuesday, many reporters and witnesses said.

"That's absolutely right," said one reporter who stayed with the crowds during hours of running and dodging tear gas and flares.

The campaign of fear that had preceded the protests apparently kept most workers away from the center of the cities, or in factories. Others leaving their workplaces when shifts changed merely went home.

"There is no sense in staging such a demonstration," a bus driver said shortly before the disturbances began. "It could develop into a massacre and we want a peaceful demonstration."

Nevertheless, thousands of people did show up at gathering points despite the warnings, indicating that there are still many people willing to risk severe penalties and tear gas to express their dislike for the government.

Prisoners riot in Montreal; At least six inmates hurt, guard says

MONTREAL (AP) — As many as 180 prisoners rioted Tuesday night at the Montreal Detention Center, and at least six inmates were reported injured.

Rejean Lafleur, president of the guards' union, reported the injuries, saying his information came from sources inside the jail. There were no reports of hostages being taken.

"This is not a mini-riot. It's a real riot," Lafleur told reporters. He referred to earlier police reports describing the disturbance as a "mini-riot."

"You can't see two feet ahead of you" inside the prison because of the smoke, he said.

One convict was carried out of the provincial facility and placed in the rear of a prison vehicle, witnesses said.

A Quebec provincial police spokesman said between 130 and 180 convicts began wielding iron bars and had set a small fire in one wing of the institution in the north-end of Montreal at about 10:50 p.m. EDT.

Quebec provincial police were called in to attempt to quell the riot, but the situation was still out of control three hours later, the spokesman said.

Montreal firemen brought the fire under control, but police reportedly had difficulty returning the prisoners to their cells, partly due to dense smoke.

Quebec jails and federal prisons have been tense since July 25, when three guards and two prisoners died at Archambault federal penitentiary north of Montreal in the bloodiest riot in Canadian penal history.

Some guards at the Montreal center, formerly the Bordeaux Jail, and at the Orsainville provincial prison near Quebec City have been on a work slowdown to press for increased security.

Lafleur said guards staging a sit-in at the Montreal center offered to return to work to help quell the riot, but authorities refused the offer.

"Since July we have been telling the administration that something serious — a riot — was going to happen," Lafleur said, adding that 150 knives have disappeared from the prison kitchen.

After his fading cries alerted a woman living nearby that he was trapped in an abandoned well, Curtis Decker, 16, of Longview was pulled from the 20-foot hole. He fell into the well Saturday evening as was rescued Tuesday morning.

Youth's cries finally lead to his rescue from well

LONGVIEW, Texas (AP) — When she heard the faint sound — like a baby crying — she stepped out onto her porch and listened again. But she couldn't see anything, and the voice stopped.

That was Sunday morning.

"I heard it Monday, off and on. But you know how a little goat would sound or holler," the woman said. Again, she shrugged it off.

On Tuesday, the desperate cries of Curtis Deckard, 16, trapped for three days in three feet of water in the bottom of an abandoned well, finally brought help.

His middle-aged neighbor, who asked not to be identified, visited a friend's house Tuesday morning and again heard the sound.

"Then I could distinguish, and I said, 'That sounds like somebody.' I went closer and I could hear," she said.

"Help! Help! Help me, somebody!" she heard someone crying faintly.

The woman ran for help, and a short time later, about 10 a.m., firemen lowered a ladder down a 23-feet-deep, vine-covered well on a partially wooded vacant lot, about 100 yards from the woman's home, and pulled Deckard from his prison.

Police Sgt. Hal Brasier said the slender youth told his rescuers he had been "screaming his lungs out" since he fell through rotted boards covering the well about 6 p.m. Saturday in this East Texas town 125 miles east of Dallas.

"He was very, very weak," Brasier said. "But he wasn't really dehydrated because there was water out there. The ambulance units checked him out and said his pulse was fine, he just needed rest and something to eat."

The well was just wide enough to keep Deckard from bracing his back and feet against the dirt sides and inching out, Brasier said.

"You could see where he tried to do it, but he just couldn't get any higher," Brasier said.

"I tried to step on the boards and the thing broke," Deckard said as he lay on his guardian's couch Tuesday.

"He told me he couldn't really tell it was a well. There was a vine across the well and it was in a bush," said Betty Curry, Deckard's guardian.

Police and firemen had trouble finding where Deckard's pleas for help were coming from, Brasier said.

"The screams were pretty weak, and at first it sounded like it was over this way, then it sounded like it was over that way. Finally they located the well and they looked in and saw him, and he was looking up at them with very sad eyes," Brasier said.

Ms. Curry said she had been caring for Deckard since he was 7 years old, and that he divided his time between her and his mother, who also lives in Longview.

"I missed him, really, Saturday night, but I thought he was with his mother. I found out that neither my mother or his mother had seen him since Saturday evening," she said.

"We got him now and thank God he's alive," Ms. Curry said.

Deckard was taken to his mother's house and fed milk and soup.

"He had hollered so, he couldn't talk. He was just trembling and he said he crouched down in that water," Ms. Curry said. "He said when he got here he wouldn't leave no more, but he'll feel better."

Brasier called the incident "a freak accident" and said city workers would cap the well to prevent future accidents.

The neighbor who sent rescuers to the well said that after she heard Deckard's cry Tuesday, she ran to her house and called an emergency number.

"Then I got so nervous I sat right here on the porch. I was in an extremely nervous condition. That was the pitifulest sound you'd ever want to hear, just hollering, 'Help me, somebody.'"

Auto insurance rate increase granted

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Drivers in Midland, Ector, Scurry and Howard counties will be hit hardest while some motorists in Chambers County won't be hit at all by the $262 million auto insurance rate increase granted by the State Board of Insurance.

The package approved Tuesday in a 3-0 board vote means an average statewide increase of 14.8 percent. The specific increases will vary according to type of coverage and location.

A $64 increase — highest in the state — was approved for basic coverage for a 1982 low-priced Ford, Chevrolet or Plymouth in Ector, Midland, Scurry and Howard counties. Chambers County drivers will be the only Texans facing no increase on basic coverage when the new rates take effect on Nov. 1.

The $262 million increase upset David Irons, attorney for the Texas Automobile Insurance Service Office, which wanted a $584 million hike, or 33.2 percent.

"I'm dismayed," Irons said. "I think the profit allowed in this ratemaking is grossly inadequate."

Board members Bill Daves, Durwood Manford and Lyndon Olson decided to go with the 14.8 percent package calculated by the board staff, instead of the 17.3 percent increase proposed at an Aug. 12 hearing. Staff actuary Gaylon Daniel said the recommendation was dropped to 14.8 percent when updated figures were plugged into the complex formula used to determine rates.

Irons said it would be up to the approximately 400 companies that write auto insurance in Texas to decide if there will be a court challenge of the board decision.

"I would be hesitant to say they may be in trouble (as as result of the board action)," said Irons. "But there will indeed be some companies that feel this adjusted rate is an adequate rate and others will feel the rate is grossly inadequate."

The insurance industry said the large increase it requested was needed because of inflation. Olson asked George Berry, an economist who testified for TAISO, if consumers would think a jump in the rates would further boost inflation.

Berry, who said the "profit outlook is bleak" for companies that write auto insurance, told Olson that it is to the consumers' benefit to guarantee "profitable institutions" so "they will be in business next year."

About the increases, Berry said, "(The consumer) doesn't like it. I don't like it. But I think we have an obligation to let financial institutions earn a fair rate of return."

Here are average increases (actual dollar and percentage) approved by the board. The rates shown are based on standard coverage for a 1982 low-priced Ford, Chevrolet or Plymouth that is not used for business but is driven to and from work, and is not driven by a male under 25 or a female under 21:

Grand jury subpoenas, receives absentee ballot box

BROWNSVILLE, Texas (AP) — A federal grand jury that will hear evidence gathered during an investigation into vote fraud in four South Texas counties has subpoenaed and received an absentee ballot box impounded after the May primary election, officials say.

The Texas Rangers, recently joined by the FBI, have been investigating allegations of vote buying, pressuring of voters and the presence of names of convicted felons on tally sheets in Starr, Duval, Zapata and Webb counties.

The federal grand jury was convened so the state would not have to present vote fraud cases to separate state grand juries, Texas Ranger Jack Dean of San Antonio said Tuesday.

U.S. Attorney Daniel Hedges of Houston agreed the Brownsville federal grand jury would receive evidence gathered in four counties, all located in the Southern Judicial District of Texas.

The ballot box sent to the grand jury was from Starr County, officials said. Election materials have been impounded in the other three counties, but apparently have not been turned over to the federal grand jury.

Since the investigation in South Texas began, the four U.S. attorneys in Texas, Texas Secretary of State David Dean, the FBI, Texas Department of Public Safety director Col. Jim Adams, the Rangers and other officials have formed the State Task Force on Voter Fraud.

Dean has said the current investigation is most sweeping since the days of "Duke of Duval" George B. Parr.

Parr was a political kingmaker in South Texas from the 1930s until he committed suicide in 1975 while facing a five-year prison term for income tax evasion.

Vote fraud allegations were regular fare during Parr's reign, including the famous "Box 13 Scandal" when Lyndon Johnson narrowly defeated former Gov. Coke Stevenson in the race for the U.S. Senate in 1948, earning Johnson the nickname "Landslide Lyndon."

The latest task force meeting took place Monday in Houston. Officials discussed publicizing election day telephone numbers where voters can report suspected infractions at the ballot box.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Jack Wolfe of Brownsville said Tuesday that a ballot box impounded in Rio Grande City was subpoenaed by the grand jury, but had not yet been sent.

Wolde declined to comment on the course of the South Texas investigation, but said, "We did not present any cases to the grand jury concerning any of the vote fraud cases."

"When we get to the point that we feel like there is probable cause to believe federal election laws have been violated, then we're going to present those to a grand jury," he said.

Clements wants no 'interference'

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Gov. Bill Clements has blasted fellow Republican Jim Collins for "a breach of good taste and a breach of etiquette" and warned Collins not to meddle in Clements' re-election campaign.

Collins, who is running for the U.S. Senate, released a poll several weeks ago that indicated he was gaining on incumbent Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, a Democrat. But Collins' aides said the poll also showed Clements trailing his Democratic opponent, Attorney General Mark White.

"I consider it a breach of good taste and a breach of etiquette for someone to dip into my race," Clements said Tuesday, during a campaign stop here. "Mr. White can do what he wants. He's my competitor. But I don't like someone else dipping into my race.

"But I'll tell you what," the governor said, "if it continues, what's good for the goose is good for the gander."

Clements' comments came after a speech to about 1,000 people at a reception for Young Professionals for Clements. The governor is in the middle of a two-week campaign tour across the state.

The governor never had responded to the poll commissioned by Collins, currently a U.S. representative; except to say that it was inaccurate. He has remained neutral in the Collins-Bentsen race.

Clements said he has seen four polls, all showing him "comfortably ahead" of White. One was conducted by a pollster he hired and another was by a national pollster who checks support for President Reagan, he said. Clements said the two others were Democratic polls.

The governor said he planned to have another poll conducted in a couple of weeks.

Clements said he is counting on the votes of Democrats to return him back into office, adding that 45 percent of all Texans say they are ticket splitters.

"You can't imagine how important that is to the election process in Texas," Clements said.

Reporter hopes for stay from justice, governor

BOSTON (AP) — A reporter found in contempt of court for refusing to testify in a murder trial was hoping for a stay from a U.S. Supreme Court justice or a pardon from the governor after spending his first night behind bars.

Gov. Edward J. King promised Tuesday to "review the case thoroughly" today and consider attorney Thomas C. Troy's request for a pardon for Paul W. Corsetti. The Boston Herald American reporter was returned to jail Tuesday evening to serve a 90-day sentence.

"I believe right now I'm told the full due process of law has been exhausted by Mr. Corsetti's attorney," King told WBZ-TV. "So if I am the only avenue I think it's appropriate for me to review what has happened, review the recommendations and come up with a decision. I'll be doing that with my chief counsel."

U.S. Supreme Court Justice William J. Brennan Jr. could still grant a request for a delay of the sentence.

Corsetti, 33, was returned to jail Tuesday night after a 24-hour delay — granted Monday by a state Supreme Court justice — passed with no word from Brennan.

"I feel like a man on a sinking ship with all the lifeboats gone, and I'm looking around for a helicopter," Corsetti said as the deadline passed.

The reporter was first returned to the Billerica House of Correction, where he had spent three hours Monday before being granted the temporary stay. He was then transferred to a smaller Middlesex County jail in Cambridge.

"Safety is the predominant factor in my mind," Troy said. "I'm not saying there is going to be any problem, but looming large in my mind is the possibility that someone might want to harm Paul Corsetti."

Middlesex County Sheriff Edward F. Henneberry said the transfer was also arranged to avoid disrupting the 570-inmate Billerica facility, adding that Corsetti was considered a low-risk prisoner. The reporter was housed alone in an 8- by 9-foot cell at the 58-prisoner Cambridge jail.

Asked if he had ever considered giving in, Corsetti said, "No. I never changed my mind. I believe what I did was right."

Corsetti was cited for criminal contempt in March 1981 after refusing to testify at a pre-trial hearing in the case of Edward R. Kopacz Jr., 21, of Lowell, who was accused of murder. Corsetti had written a story saying Kopacz, who was later acquitted, had admitted a role in the slaying.

Corsetti said he refused to testify about the interview because he had promised not to disclose the conversation in court. He contended that two police officers had the same information anyway.

He was jailed after the state Board of Pardon and Parole turned down his request for parole or a reduction in sentence. The board, which is advisory, also recommended that King not grant a pardon.

In asking the Supreme Court to intervene, Corsetti's attorney said an appeal was being prepared which "will present substantial questions of law and is not frivolous or taken for delay."

The legal questions will include "the scope and protection of a reporter's privilege under the First Amendment" and whether Corsetti was entitled to a jury trial, the motion said.

Official dismisses one of 11 charges against Noguchi

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Former coroner Thomas Noguchi's fight to win reinstatement got a boost from a hearing officer's decision to dismiss one of 11 charges against him, his attorney says.

Civil Service Commission hearing officer Sara Adler on Tuesday threw out a charge that Noguchi had publicly misrepresented a county Board of Supervisors' order limiting what he could say about the deaths of celebrities.

However, she rejected a request by Noguchi's attorney, Godfrey Isaac, to dismiss all 11 charges.

Ms. Adler heard five weeks of testimony from the county justifying the demotion. Isaac begins his presentation Tuesday.

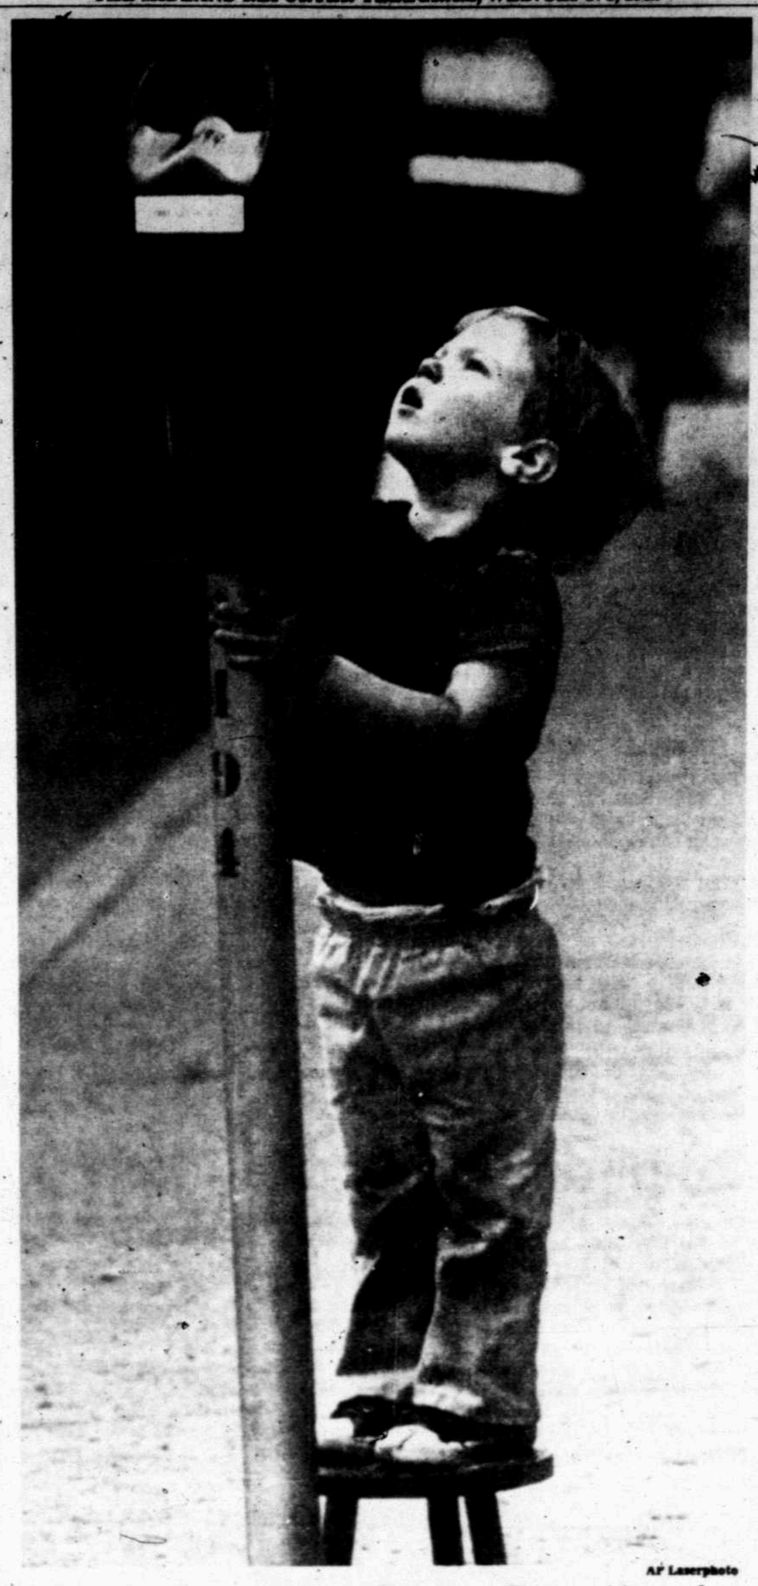

William Masterson, the private attorney representing the supervisors, said Ms. Adler's decision to dismiss only one charge was a victory for the board.

"I am, overall, very, very satisfied," said Masterson. "I felt that all the charges were appropriate and all substantiated, but the fact that only one out 11 were removed is no concern to me at all. The fact that we lost just one is proof just how solid the other 10 are."

But Isaac called the dismissal "a major and significant defeat for those members of the Board of Supervisors who voted to demote Dr. Noguchi" and the beginning of "forward progress to victory and Dr. Noguchi's return to his permanent position as chief medical examiner-coroner."

He said the 55-year-old Noguchi, who was reinstated as coroner by the Civil Service in 1969 after the Board of Supervisors dumped him for making "erratic" public statements, was "very optimistic" about the outcome of the current hearings.

Noguchi was demoted in April by the board, which alleged he mismanaged the coroner's office, was frequently absent and sensationalized the deaths of celebrities.

When Tuila Brink drives from Uniontown, Ohio, to visit grandson Jason Chalmers, Jason gets his stool so he can feed the parking meter outside his Columbus home, keeping grandma's car free of parking tickets. Testimony continues on sending sex offender back to prison

TRENTON, N.J. (AP) — An obese sex offender who claims prison would endanger his health was seen in a casino without the cane and oxygen tank he used in other appearances, witnesses say.

The testimony Tuesday came before Superior ourt Judge Richard J.S. Barlow Jr., who released 565-pound Joseph "Jo Jo" Giorgianni on Aug. 6 after one week in prison because evidence indicated that prison threatened his life.

After a public outcry, prosecutors asked that Giorgianni be sent back to prison to complete his original 15-year sentence. More arguments were scheduled today.

On Tuesday, two people told Barlow they recently saw Giorgianni gambling or watching prize fights at an Atlantic City casino on five occasions, and a doctor said Giorgianni's asthma is not as severe as claimed.

Also, a prize fight videotape showed Giorgianni in the background, barreling down a walkway without the cane and oxygen tank that he has brought to doctor visits and prison appearances, waving to friends with a Panama hat and lighting up a cigar or cigarette.

The 33-year-old Trenton sandwich shop operator was convicted of carnal abuse and debauching the morals of a 14-year-old girl customer at the shop in 1978.

Giorgianni was seen four other times at The Sands last April and May — playing blackjack twice, walking the casino floor once and attending another fight — by Veronica Meszaros, a state Division of Gaming Enforcement investigator.

Giorgianni, who did not appear in court Tuesday, says he suffers from morbid obesity, chronic asthma, interruptions in breathing while he sleeps, phlebitis, heart failure and hypertension.

His lawyer, E. John Wherry Jr., did not produce any medical expert to support these claims, relying instead on previous records.

Giorgianni has claimed prison life could imperil him because of the weak air conditioning at the Yardville infirmary and because he had to walk long distances to eat or go to the bathroom.

But on Tuesday, state officials testified there are staff doctors, nurses, psychiatrists, psychologists, dietitians and engineers who can handle Giorgianni's unusual needs.

Ex-legislator wins nomination for Georgia governor

ATLANTA (AP) — Joe Frank Harris, a Georgia legislator for 18 years, brushed aside charges he would be a puppet for the powerful house speaker and defeated a better-financed opponent for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination.

In another primary battle Tuesday, Max Cleland, who headed the Veterans Administration during the Carter administration, unseated appointed incumbent David Poythress for the Democratic nomination for secretary of state.

Harris

Harris, 46, of Cartersville, placed second in the primary three weeks ago but defeated five-term Congressman Ronald "Bo" Ginn by about 70,000 votes in Tuesday's runoff.

With 2,242 of 2,247 precincts reporting, Harris had 497,862 votes, or 53.7 percent, to Ginn's 427,838, or 46.2 percent.

He faces Republican state Sen. Bob Bell of DeKalb County in the general election. Incumbent George Busbee, a Democrat, cannot seek re-election this year because he has already served two consecutive terms.

Cleland, a handicapped Vietnam veteran, was endorsed by the former president and was already known in Georgia politics for his unsuccessful 1974 race for lieutenant governor.

He will face Republican Nick Reagan Belluso in the general election.

With 2,241 of 2,247 precincts reporting, Cleland had 432,452 votes, or 51.9 percent to 400,688 votes, or 48.0 percent, for Poythress.

In other races, voters also chose Democratic and Republican nominees for eight of the state's 10 congressional districts.

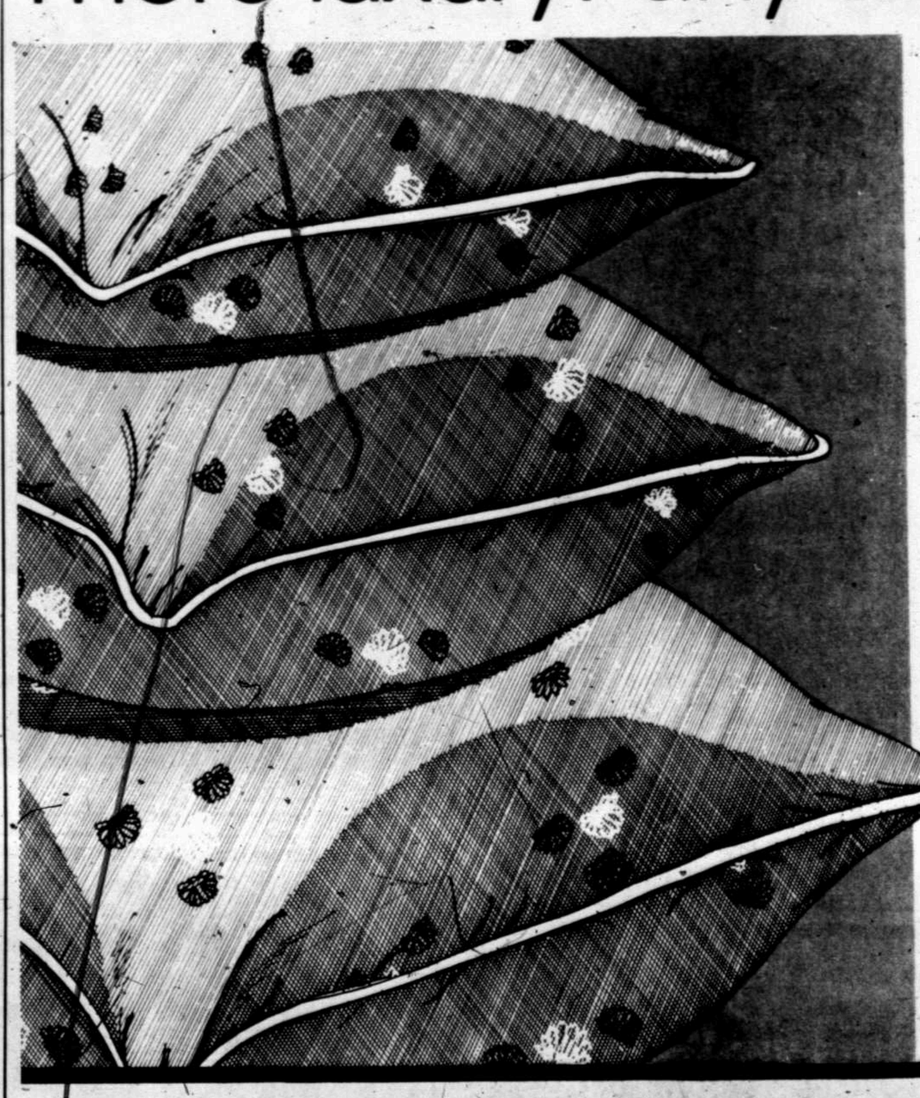

During the three-week runoff campaign, Ginn charged that Harris would be a pawn of House Speaker Tom Murphy if he became governor. But Harris, speaking with reporters Tuesday before claiming victory, said his opponent's "desperation campaign backfired" because "people saw through it."

Harris, who emerged from obscurity months ago with a promise not to raise state taxes, won the runoff even though Ginn was better financed and enjoyed support from Georgia teachers and endorsements from four defeated gubernatorial candidates and many of the state's biggest newspapers.

Chinese Communist congress opens

By VICTORIA GRAHAM

PEKING (AP) — China's Communist Party Vice Chairman Deng Xiaoping today opened the first party congress in five years and said it would propel the country along on its own course of modernization.

Red ceremonial flags flew in the vast central Tiananmen Square around the Great Hall and inside, banners proclaimed: "Long live the great Communist Party of China," and "Strive to create a new situation in all fields of socialist construction."

About 200 spectators gathered outside.

Deng, 78, who holds the real power in both the party and the government, opened the meeting early today and told the 1,545 delegates that the nation's three major tasks in the 1980s are socialist modernization, striving for the return of Taiwan and combating hegemonism and safeguarding world peace.

"CHINA'S AFFAIRS should be run in our own way by our own efforts," Deng said. "While we value friendship and cooperation with other countries and people, we value more our own independence and sovereign rights.

"No foreign country can expect China to be a vassal, nor expect China to swallow any bitter fruit to the detriment of China's interests," Deng declared.

He apparently referred to U.S. arms sales to the Nationalist Chinese regime on Taiwan, which China considers to be one of its provinces, and revised Japanese history textbooks which gloss over Japanese atrocities in China from 1937-1945.

Deng, who has been criticized for his liberal foreign policy, said China should learn from other countries and draw on their experience in modernization, he said, "but mechanical copying and application of foreign experience and models will get us nowhere."

"THE CHINESE," he said, "must blaze a path of our own and build socialism with Chinese characteristics."

Deng said the 12th Party Congress would adopt a new party constitution and elect a new Central Committee, a Central Advisory Commission and Central Discipline Inspection Commission.

For the rest of the century, he said China must do four things:

—Restructure the administration and economic set-up and make China's leaders more revolutionary, younger, better educated and professionally competent.

—Build a socialist, spiritual civilization.

—Strike at criminal activities and economic corruption.

—Rectify the party work style.

The speech was reported by the official Xinhua news agency. Foreign reporters were not allowed to attend the Congress, expected to last 10 days.

DENG, CHAIRMAN of the Congress, declared it the most important meeting since the 7th Party Congress in 1945, which he said overcame wrong ideas in the party.

AP Laserphoto

The 12th national Communist Party Congress opens in Peking today, the first in five years, in the Great Hall of the People. Deng Xiaoping, China's top leader, declared the Congress would propel the country on the course he has charted for modernization.

At the 8th Party Congress in 1956, he said, China embarked on an ambitious crash program of industrialization, but the party was not prepared and "we suffered serious setbacks."

It was a reference to the late Chairman Mao Tsetung's disastrous economic policy, known as the "Great Leap Forward." The Great Leap was an effort to quickly industrialize the country and creat people's agricultural communes. Deng had argued against Mao at the time, but lost.

Deng said the party's Central Committee in December, 1978, finally restored the correct policies. At that meeting, Deng announced his program of modernization and repudiated Mao's leftist idea of continuing and convulsive class struggle.

Monahans bank president's wife kidnapped, released

MONAHANS, Texas (AP) — The president of a bank had to withdraw all the cash from his bank and borrow money from another in an attempt to meet the ransom demand of a man who kidnapped his wife.

Charles Wade, president of the First State Bank of Monahans, could not raise the $300,000 demanded. But his wife, Jerry Wade, was found by authorities unharmed, a bank vice president said.

Police arrested the kidnapper in a stolen pickup truck in Crane and Mrs. Wade was found "safe and sound," an FBI spokesman said.

James William Hughes was charged with aggravated kidnapping in connection with the case after he was taken to Monahans from Crane Tuesday night, Justice of the Peace Ed Hammond said. Hammond denied bond to the man.

"We couldn't come up with (the ransom) because we just didn't have it," said bank executive vice president Johnny Jordan. "We borrowed from another bank as much as they'd let us, and we still didn't have that much."

Wade's son Mike, who is the Wade County district attorney, said his father went to Sand Hills Park at 5:30 p.m. Tuesday to pay the ransom, after he received a phone call at his bank office demanding $300,000.

The kidnapper did not show up, Jordan said.

The younger Wade said his mother was kidnapped from her home about 4 p.m. that day after the assailant broke into her home.

Jordan said the Wades "knew of (the kidnapper). They knew his family."

The FBI spokesman, who asked not to be identified, said the suspect was arrested about 7:30 p.m.

He said reports indicated that Mrs. Wade was found with the suspect, although he added, "everything we have right now is very confusing."

Study urges U.S. support of Palestinian country

WASHINGTON (AP) — A State Department advisory group is recommending that the United States support creation of a Palestinian state in the West Bank and Gaza that would share Jerusalem as a capital with Israel.

With the Palestinian evacuation of Beirut ending, the recommendation is likely to be one of the main proposals studied by Secretary of State George P. Shultz as he re-evaluates long-term policy for the Middle East.

The study, by a top-secret State Department advisory group, caused a stir in Israel after it was leaked there last March, but has received little attention in the United States.

A copy of the 25-page study, obtained by The Associated Press, says a Palestinian state is virtually inevitable. If the United States and Israel help in the formation, they could avert control by pro-Soviet radicals bent on the destruction of the Jewish state, it says.

ISRAELI DEFENSE MINISTER Ariel Sharon claimed U.S. officials made a similar proposal to him during a visit here last week.

A State Department spokesman has denied U.S. officials made such a proposal to Sharon.

The study, which lasted nearly two years, was printed last spring in a classified, in-house State Department publication. Former Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. discussed the proposals with the chairman of the group and seemed receptive to the ideas, if noncommittal, sources said.

Israel flatly rejects the idea of a Palestinian state in the West Bank and Gaza, where some 1.3 million Palestinians now live under Israeli occupation.

In a related development Tuesday, ABC News reported that President Reagan plans to warn Israel that annexation of the West Bank would set off a "crisis of massive dimensions" in relations with the United States.

ABC, reporting what it said was the "main points...as now being drafted," said Reagan would warn that annexation would violate the 1979 Camp David peace agreements between Egypt and Israel.

U.S. POLICY HAS BEEN that the future of the Palestinians is something to be decided in negotiations under the Camp David agreements.

Alabama farmer to be sentenced for larceny by U.S. district judge

An Alabama farmer, who reportedly moved to the Midland-Odessa area for work during the recent oil boom, is to be sentenced for larceny at 12:30 p.m. Sept. 10 by U.S. District Judge Lucius D. Bunton.

The farmer, Eddie Wayne Comer, has pleaded guilty to one of four counts in a federal indictment which alleges that he did "convert to his own use" 3,169 bushels of soybeans, which he in 1980 allegedly had mortgaged to the Commodity Credit Corp. in securing a loan, while the loan was still outstanding.

The average market price of soybeans in Texas in 1980 was $7.60 a bushel.

Comer has pleaded guilty to the first count of the indictment, which alleges that he converted to his own use 763 bushels of soybeans on Dec. 11, 1980. He allegedly did the same with 790, 832 and 784 bushels of the crop on Dec. 12, 17 and 19, 1980.

At $7.60 a bushel, the 3,169 bushels would exceed $24,000.

Reportedly at Comer's request, the case was transferred from the U.S. court system's Northern District of Alabama to the Midland-Odessa Division of the court system's Western District of Texas.

Comer has listed an Odessa address.

Odessa police confiscate pot plants

ODESSA — Acting on a tip, Odessa narcotics officers raided a house near the downtown area about 3:30 p.m. Tuesday and confiscated 943 marijuana plants found growing in the backyard.

After receiving the tip, officers obtained a search warrant and said the marijuana, some of it 5 feet tall, was visible from the alley of a residence at 308 W. 6th St.

Bonds totaling $6,500 were set on 31-year-old Canuto Tarango and 28-year-old Virginia Tarango, both of the 6th Street address.

Clements names Odessan to task force

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Gov. Bill Clements has named Bill Elms of Odessa to the Governor's Task Force on Private Sector Initiatives, which is to "promote a partnership between the private sector and government, working together to solve community problems."

Elms is managing partner of Elms, Faris & Co., Odessa.

James Brady attends musical at Wolf Trap

VIENNA, Va. (AP) — White House press secretary James Brady, making a public appearance days after his most recent hospitalization, attended a performance of "The Sound of Music" at Wolf Trap Farm Park near the nation's capital.

Brady, who was shot in the brain during the March 1981 assassination attempt against President Reagan, was accompanied by his wife, Sarah.

Piloting ferry today like driving bus on empty street

By SID MOODY

GOVERNOR'S ISLAND, N.Y. (AP) — Most things, like houses or bathing suits or books, have a front and a back.

With Richard Dare it all depends. He pilots a ferry.

Every 15 minutes he closes up what was the front and ambles 150 feet to what was the back. Once he's inside the pilot house, a replica of the one he just left, it is now the front. A long pull on the whistle and he's off on another ocean voyage — 800 yards to the tip of the Battery on Manhattan. He's been tennis-balling back and forth for nine years.

How many crossings?

"Thirty-two times a day. Five days a week. Vacations. You figure it out."

72,000.

CAPT. DARE, 55, is as well-rounded as his command, a properly ovoid 185-foot craft named The Tides. Time was when New York harbor was a D-Day of tugs, barges and ferries. In the pecking order of things, ships looked down on tugs, tugs on barges and barges on ferries. They just plowed furrows in the river.

"You had to pick a hole and charge. Now it's like driving a bus on an empty street."

Tunnels and bridges spelled the end of those fullbacking days. Only two Governor's Island ferries and the Staten Island fleet remain. Today Dare's biggest concern is hitting the slip dead center by playing the erratic currents and billiard winds that carom every which way off the towers of the financial district.

"It's like parking your car in the garage when the driveway is moving sideways."

Even after 72,000 crossings, each landing is a mini-adventure, sometimes a misadventure.

"If you hit wrong and the passengers look back at the pilot house, you don't mind. What do they know? But in the old days, if the horses looked back, you knew you were in trouble."

IN THOSE horsey days, ferries were moveable stables. Horse droppings were dried a tad, then heaved into the boiler along with the coal. Deckhands had the air of the paddock instead of the sea.

Those were the days of steam when a load of bad coal could send the pressure gauge plummeting like a Wall Street panic.

Capt. Joe Glennon, a friend of Dare's visiting for an hour or so of voyaging, recalled the time the gauge nosedived from 90 pounds to 60 to nothing.

"At which point the engineer said: 'Captain, you're on your own.' We didn't even have enough steam to blow the whistle for help."

A passing tug finally came to the rescue.

Wearing ruts in the harbor is not precisely like rounding Cape Horn in the Roaring Fifties, but there are moments. Dare, a onetime Sea Scout from Dunellen, N.J., started his naval career in tugs. Once he was losing an upwind struggle against a hurricane. A passing tug with more oomph threw him a line. It was Dare's father.

"He never let me forget it."

DARE, LATER moved on to skippering cruise boats for the Circle Line but left that for ferries after a youngster on a bridge high above the Harlem River scored a direct hit on the pilot house with a watermelon.

The 'tides' home port is Governor's Island, headquarters of the Coast Guard Third District. Dare carefully remembers to keep the end of the ferry with the Coast Guard's orange chevron stripe pointing towards the island so his employers "can think they know which end is the bow."

The island has always been a world apart from the city. The Dutch first settled here before buying Manhattan for $24. It is still accessible only by water, and then only after passing security. Crime is nil. You can golf only a mile from Wall Street.

The only civilian inhabitant among the 5,000 Coast Guard persons and their families is the lady who runs the guest house.

The island's southern end is fill from subway excavations. But the north is original island, a greenswarded nob with an old fort and vintage brick officers' homes standing at parade rest under the trees. It's what New York might have been if no one had showed up. The Brooklyn-Battery tunnel goes right by the island, and there had been talk of tapping into it. The Navy, which preceded the Coast Guard here, preferred to remain insular. So the ferries are the only land links.

He doesn't let it throw him off course, but the likes of Capt. Dare have played a disproportionate role in American history. John Glover ferried George Washington's beaten army across the East River by dark of night after the Battle of Long Island so it could fight another day. Cornelius Vanderbilt, who was to leave fortunes and railroads in his wake, got his start ferrying produce and people from Staten Island in his sailboat. John Stevens reputedly ran the world's first steam ferry, from Brooklyn to Manhattan, in 1811. Aaron Ogden sued Thomas Gibbons over ferry rights between New York and New Jersey, which led in 1824 to the landmark Supreme Court decision that made the interstate commerce clause in the Constitution the nation-shaper it has become.

Beef breeder calls himself 'just a cowboy'

EDITOR'S NOTE: Businessman, naturalist, inventor — but, mostly, cowboy. One of the more prosperous cowboys, to be sure, but the tag tells a good deal about Tom Lasater, the cattle rancher who bred the Beefmaster herds.

By TAD BARTIMUS

MATHESON, Colo. (AP) — One of America's shrewdest judges of beef steak on the hoof claims cowboys are the dumbest people in the world.

He ought to know. He's been one for 51 years.

Tom Lasater is a member of this country's landed gentry, the big cattle ranchers whose great herds and bull-headed grit tamed the West.

He sprang from the sweltering scrub land of south Texas, where his father amassed holdings of nearly 400,000 acres before he lost most of it in the 1920s. When Tom was born, his father, Edward C. Lasater, a onetime gubernatorial candidate in the Lone Star state, ran 20,000 head of Hereford and Shorthorn range cattle and held title to the world's largest Jersey herd.

But when Edward died in 1930, Tom dropped out of Princeton to become a traveling salesman for the family creamery. He spent weekdays driving dusty backroads on a butter route, then jumped on a horse on weekends to help his older brother tend what remained of the ranch. He earned $75 a month.

In 1933, Tom Lasater gambled on his good name and struck out on his own in the cattle business.

TODAY THE bandy-legged grandfather is boss of 28,000 acres of prime eastern Colorado grazing land. With only three hired hands, two pickup trucks, and a 1949 tractor to help him, Tom Lasater rides herd on 125 miles of fence, a river, 48 windmills, and more than 1,200 head of cattle.

His bulls, cows and calves comprise a unique breed of bovines. They are Beefmasters, a name Lasater patented in 1949 for his own three-way cross of Shorthorn, Hereford and Brahman cattle. In 1954, the U.S. Department of Agriculture officially recognized the Beefmaster as an American Breed.

After the first Beefmasters were developed between 1931 and 1937, the herd was "closed." There has been no new blood introduced into Lasater's foundation stock in 55 years.

At 71, Lasater is not a conglomerate or an appendage of some multinational company. He's a widower who's raised four sons and a daughter. He's made money, and apparently enjoys spending it. He's a gentleman of the old school, a connoisseur of fine art and aged liquor, a man who's spent his life wedded to the land, appreciative of the growth and renewal that springs from it. He's ridden many a horse hard, but he's never put one away wet.

Lasater calls himself "just a cowboy" who roams his vast range in a scuffed Stetson, dusty boots and faded jeans. But under that favorite old hat there's a brain that combines the acumen of a businessman, geneticist, nutritionist, naturalist and inventor.

He's created a suspension fence that needs little maintenance and fewer posts than the average range fence; he's come up with special, high protein food pellets designed specifically for his herd; he's initiated systematic performance testing of bulls, and he's banned all hunting and poisons from his land because "ever since the white man threw the Indian off, it's been horribly mistreated."

LASATER ONLY half-jokingly maintains that his peers are "the stupidest people in the world" because they consistently refuse to recognize Mother Nature and their own collective clout.

"Ranchers carry the biggest stick in this country because they're food producers, and everybody's got to eat," says Lasater.

"And everybody else has a union except us. We could sit down and work out a live-and-let-live deal with Mr. Safeway and Mr. A&P and come out ahead, but we don't. The packer, the feed lot, and the wholesaler all get their cut, but the rancher winds up on the losing end every time."

Lasater's breeding and management program is based on the survival of the fittest. When he was first starting out in south Texas, he wrote to stock shows for the scorecards on prize-winning cattle.

"I discovered that 90 percent of the characteristics for which our leading shows were judging cattle had nothing to do with the efficient production of beef," he recalls. "I sat down and listed what I thought was essential in a good beef animal. I boiled 25 traits down to six. There's no way to get along without any one of them."

Those characteristics, which have been emphasized in the Beefmaster herd, are: disposition, fertility, weight, conformation, hardiness and milk production. If any of Lasater's animals fail to become gentle enough to eat out of his hand, or don't drop a calf according to schedule, or grow up with misshapen toenails, they are culled from the foundation herd.

"IT'S A long pull to let the natural breeding selection take over, and it takes any generations to accomplish, but somebody had to start," says the blue-eyed, chain-smoking stockman. "Perfection is always the horizon, and anybody who sets their goal so low they can reach it is a fool."

Apart from development of the Beefmaster herd, Lasater seems most proud of his marketing innovations.

"We sell by mail order," says Lasater, a grin splitting his weathered face. "This is our 33rd anniversary for the mail order contracts, and that makes it the oldest in the beef business. Those old boys thought I was crazy when we started, but we've been over-subscribed every year. I've urged 'em all to try it, but they just shake their heads and say 'nope.'"

Every Nov. 15, Lasater mails bull contracts to previous Beefmaster purchasers and others on an extensive mailing list. Potential buyers have 15 days to decide if they want to buy a bull. Lasater has 100 bulls for sale at a set price for each. This year's No. 1 offering costs $3,800; the 100th bull will go for $1,325.

Purchasers send in a down payment, and between Aug. 18-20, they or someone representing them must be at the Lasater Ranch holding pens during a predesignated 20-minute period to buy.

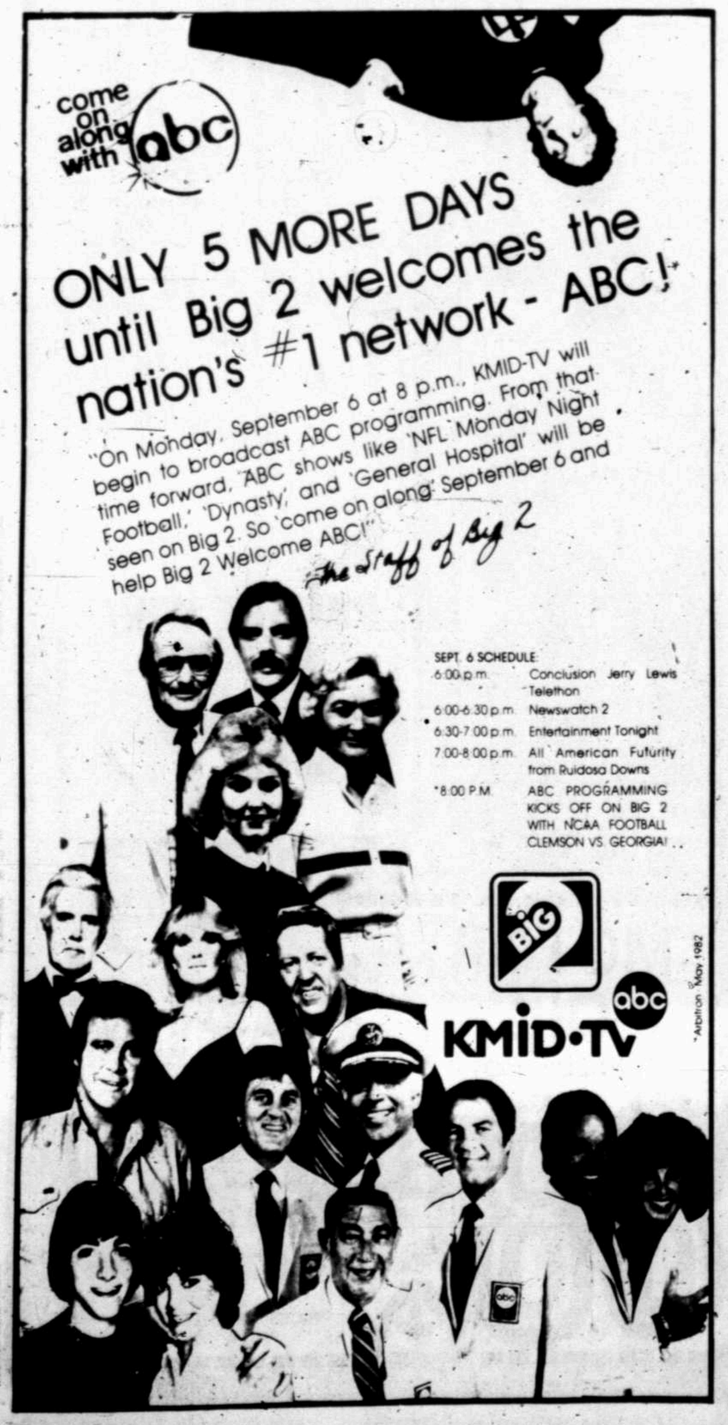

The rancher reserves 20 of the top bulls for himself each year to remain with his foundation herd.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Only 30 percent of salt intake can be controlled

Dear Dr. Solomon: I've stopped adding salt to my food at the table, but the more I read food labels, the more I realize how much salt is contained in the foods we buy at the store. In view of this, how much salt can I actually eliminate from my diet even if I don't add any to my food at the table? — Sparky, San Francisco

Solomon

Dear Sparky: According to Dr. Donald V. Schlimme, assistant professor of horticulture at the University of Maryland, up to 25 percent of the salt in foods occurs naturally, and about 50 percent is added during processing or cooking. Therefore, a person can control less than 30 percent of his or her intake of salt by not using any at the table.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I'm trying to cut down on the amount of fat I eat and I think I've been pretty successful. Instead of using cream in my coffee, I started using whole milk and now I'm using skim milk. Would it help any if I switched to one of those non-dairy products instead of using the skim milk? — Patricia, Oklahoma City, Okla.

Dear Patricia: The non-dairy substitutes for cream that are now on the market contain coconut oil, which essentially is a saturated fat. In general, the total fat content of these substitutes is not much different from that of the dairy product it is designed to replace, and may even exceed it. Therefore, switching to a non-dairy product merely in the expectation of decreasing your intake of fat is not indicated.

However, new cream substitutes now coming on the market contain soybean oil instead of coconut oil, and these new products can make a difference in your intake of fat. This is one more illustration of the importance of getting into the habit of reading food labels. Two products may look alike and serve the same purpose, but their contents may be markedly different.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I want to lose about 10 pounds, and I told my doctor that my diet plan was to cut out all carbohydrates so that I could lose the weight very quickly. He disagrees with my diet ideas. I don't understand. — E.C., Los Angeles

Dear E.C.: I also disagree with you. First of all, a fast weight loss is generally the kind of weight that reappears as soon as your normal eating pattern is re-established. As long as you are changing your eating plan to lose weight, make it a diet that you can live with for the rest of your life. A slow, steady weight loss is the kind of weight loss that generally remains off. One of my books, Dr. Solomon's High Health Diet and Exercise Plan, may be a good starting point from which to begin your new diet regimen.

Second, don't cut out carbohydrates completely. You might want to limit your intake, but keep in mind that carbohydrates supply most of the body's energy needs. They are necessary for protein digestion and certain brain functions. You want a diet that is going to take off weight and keep it off. You also want to have enough energy in the process.

'Urban Cowboys' die at the hands of preppies

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — The demise of Texas chic in fashion circles has not affected makers of basic western wear, but the trend's death at the hands of preppies means some workers will lose their jobs in layoffs.

The tight designer jeans, slick satin shirts, fringes, feathers, tassles and glitter that were the trademarks of the urban cowboy are waning from the fashion scene. And with them are going the $5 billion in sales in 1980. Now some of Texas 265 western wear and accessories makers feel neglected.

"What happened is that the urban cowboy went preppie," said Dick DeBryun, an El Paso publicist who handles six major western wear clients, including the nation's largest maker of cowboy hats, Bailey Hat Co. of El Paso.

"I do feel that a lot of western wear companies were really stupid going to capital expansion during the craze," he said.

Indefinite layoffs of 275 Tony Lama Boot Co. employees last week mean a 20 percent reduction the workforce, said chief executive officer Gene Hosey.

Employees at the plant worked only four-day shifts to cut back production in the last two months, but the orders were not there. More than 100,000 pairs of boots sat in storage while executives wait for the big fall and Christmas orders that already should have come in.

"As the saying goes, Christmas comes every year," said Holmes Till, a Tony Lama vice president and national sales manager. "Traditionally, the orders have come in about now. I think it's running a few weeks late."

The boot inventory has doubled since January, a sure sign that the cowboy craze is over, Hosey said.

"If we would have had this kind of inventory last year, we would have sold them. We just couldn't make them fast enough last year," said Till.

Tony Lama recently built a second factory to handle orders for boots made of exotic hides, such as ostrich belly, for which there is still a one-year backlog of orders.

Boots, which at Tony Lama cost from $120 to several thousand dollars, made up one-fifth of the western wear industry's retail sales in 1980.

Nearly half the total sales were jeans, according to the Western and English Manufacturers Association of Denver, which is surveying the 3,000 cowboy clothes and accessories makers in the United States to determine the impact of the urban cowboy phenomenon.

"Companies that cropped up over night to take advantage of the craze disappeared just as fast, leaving in their wake memories of feathers and frills and, to some, the wrong impression of the western lifestyle," the trade group advised members.

Gigi isn't going to be a dogface Marine

NEWPORT NEWS, Va. (AP) — The U.S. Marine Corps is barking up the wrong tree if it thinks it's going to make a dogface out of Gigi Whitmore.

"I know Reagan is pushing this draft," said Lucille Whitmore of Newport News. "But drafting a dog?"

The Whitmore's 13-year-old purebred dachshund, Gigi, got a letter Saturday from the U.S. Marine Corps. Addressed to Ms. Gigi Whitmore, it read:

"Dear Ms. Whitmore — We appreciate your interest in the Marine Corps but since you're 13 you won't be able to join the Marine Corps for a while.

"But as our way of showing appreciation for your interest, we are enclosing a special Marine memento.

"I want to give you this advice. The Marine Corps wants you to stay in school and get your diploma. The more education you have the more valuable you will be to yourself and to the Marines."

Mrs. Whitmore said the letter came as a complete surprise.

"How they ever got her name I'll never know," she said "Even her age is right."

She and her husband, Ronnie, called the local Marine Corps recruiting office to point out the mistake. They noted that Gigi can't be charged with not registering. She's on file with the American Kennel Club.

Industrial resistance, public apathy combine to kill metric system in U.S.

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The metric system, a way of life in most of the world, could prove to be the Edsel of American measurement.

Because of a combination of industrial resistance, consumer dislike and public apathy, the meter appears to be running out.

It has been a "tremendous flop," says the former head of a state council set up to preach the system as the way of the future.

"People want to keep their quarts and gallons and that stuff," said Glenn Brown, first and former chairman of the Texas Metric System Advisory Council.

The 1977 Texas Legislature set up the council to aid in a national effort to convert to metric. At its first meeting in December 1977, someone suggested council members should be briefed on the system so they "would not be put on the spot" with a quick question about how it worked.

AS OF SEPT. 30, the federal equivalent of the board goes out of business. President Ronald Reagan, while thanking federal board members for their efforts, said Americans evidently want little to do with the way most of the rest of the world measures things.

The state council is scheduled to remain in business until next August. But Charles Forester of Austin, a board member, expects it to "just about fade away."

"There was a real need a few years ago for a Metric Advisory Council because it did appear we'd be involved in the conversion process," said Forester. "I don't know what the reason is that it did go away. Maybe inflation. The American public had other things to think about."

Forester said the main purpose of the council was to react to business questions about the metric system. "There was nothing, basically, to respond to," said Forester, supervisor of weights and measures for the Texas Department of Agriculture.

Brown said many industries — including the one he represents — found the cost of conversion prohibitive. Brown is executive vice president of the Dairy Products Institute of Texas, a metric resister.

"It's not worth all that extra cost to the consumer, at a time when everyone is paying plenty for everything," he said.

WILLIAM NICOL of Dallas, the current chairman, says the conversion is underway. He favors mandatory conversion. Chuck Newell of the Texas Industrial Commission, and the metric council's "staff," said there has been some conversion.

"Look on the shelves in your grocery store. Look at what you buy and how it's measured," he said.

Nicol said conversion-by-law would go smoothly.

"Australia went mandatorily, cold-turkey metric and within six weeks everybody was completed converted and comfortable. It would go just as smoothly here if the United States ever had guts enough to do it," he said.

Nicol and other metric backers say the big reason to convert is that most other nations — many of which do business with Texas companies — measure in metric.

"We're bitching about not being able to sell our products. It's because we're not metric. That's not the whole cause, but you don't try to talk to the Mexicans in English when you are trying to sell something. You have to speak Spanish," said Nicol, who is in the industrial scales business.

FOR $10 MILLION, according to Nicol, the State Highway Department could put metric distances on road signs. But Ernest Kanak, supervising traffic engineer, says Texas motorists won't have to worry about making the conversion to metric signs.

"My guess is that it would not occur in Texas unless it was something that came about nationwide," he said.

As Nicol points out, the metric system has crept into some aspects of Texans' lives. The liquor industry has been quicker to convert than most. Metric gas pumps were popular in some parts of Texas for a while, but that popularity has faded.

Some athletic measurements have gone metric. The outfield walls at Arlington Stadium (but not the Astrodome in Houston) show the metric distance from home plate.

Nicol is proud of the metric conversion in track and field, where the change was made to conform to the measurements in international competition.

But Clebune Price, University of Texas track coach, says it's been a failure, no matter how you measure it.

"BY 1985 or 1986 we'll be back to yards," predicted Price, a member of the committee that sets such rules for college track and field.

"I just don't think people understand meters. I don't," he said. "I was on the committee when we voted to go to meters. I thought the whole country was going to meters. Obviously we're not."

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 NT	Pass	2 ♠	Pass
2 ♡	Pass	4 ♡	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Ace of ♠.

Bridge has borrowed colorful terms from a number of sports to describe its plays. This one comes from one of our favorites, boxing.

The bidding was impeccable. North used the Stayman Convention to locate a heart fit, and then took the pressure off his partner by bouncing into game.

The defenders did much better on this hand than we would have. West's lead of the ace of spades can hardly be recommended, because it is more likely to establish tricks for the no trump bidder than to hit partner with sufficient values in the suit to make the lead worthwhile. But who are we to quibble with success?

West continued with a spade and the defenders quickly reeled in their book. But where was the setting trick to come from? The chances of a diamond trick were slim — declarer was a big favorite to hold the ace. And even if declarer didn't have the king of clubs, that card surely was finessable. By a process of elimination, East worked out that his only hope was a trump trick.

Even that did not look too promising — with the J-10 in dummy, declarer would finesse for the queen. However, there was a legitimate chance if West held the nine of trumps. Playing on that assumption, East continued with a fourth round of spades. He was reasonably certain that a ruff and sluff would do declarer little good, but see what havoc it wrought.

After declarer discarded a diamond from hand, West was up to the occasion — he ruffed with the nine of trumps. Dummy overruffed with the ten, but the spots in trumps were significant — East now had promoted one of his trumps into a certain trick. As long as he just covered whatever trump was led from the table, he was assured of the setting trick.

This play is known in the trade as an "uppercut." Few will argue about its effectiveness over the table as in the ring.

It's worth the cost

The second anniversary of the Polish union Solidarity came and went Tuesday amid concerns that the union may be fighting a battle for its life. Martial law continues, but despite that fact the spirit of Solidarity is alive and as vibrant today as it ever has been.

"Martial law can be liked or disliked, but it must be respected," warned Polish premier Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski. "Disturbing this law will not be tolerated."

That says a lot about what the subjects of a communist regime can expect from their brand of government. The fact that martial law has been imposed on the people of Poland since last Dec. 13 says a lot about the failure of the communist system in that nation.

What the people of Poland have been crying out for are basic human needs that the government of Poland has been unable to satisfy. Some of those needs include enough food to eat, enough fuel to keep themselves and their families warm in the harsh winter months, enough warm blankets for their children. The communist government in Poland doesn't want to admit failure by its acknowledging that the horn of plenty communist oppressors promise can't deliver the goods.

But neither do they whisper the promises the capitalist system offers, particularly the measure of freedom those in the West enjoy.

Solidarity's voice is quieter today than it once was, crushed by the system that is supposed to give the working class the freedom it seeks. Solidarity will not fade into the distance, though. Solidarity is a dream; the dream of freedom and of plenty.

Wherever man yearns to be free the flame of freedom flickers. It cannot be doused by those who seek to smother it and to control it for their own evil purposes.

Lech Walesa and thousands of other Poles brought to life that flame of freedom in Poland. Many have paid the price for their bravery, Walesa among them.

It's important for the founders of Solidarity and thousands of others to remember what they are fighting for today. Freedom is worth that fight.

Gym isn't necessary

Members of the United States Senate listened to their constituents on the matter of building a luxurious gymnasium, which would have been their third in the nation's capital. After what has been described as an "avalanche" of protesting letters and telephone calls, the Senate backed away from what looked to the public like another boondoggle.

When the question first came up about a third gymnasium, the answer should have been a quick and emphatic "No." But so many senators liked the idea they went ahead with plans to incorporate a gymnasium into the Hart Senate Office Building, now under construction. It would have cost an estimated $736,500 and would have been paid for by you know who.

Senator William Proxmire of Wisconsin deserves credit for being one of the first to speak out. "Most of us," he said, "are physically inert, tired, beat old codgers for whom a workout means stretching out on a table to absorb a rubdown." Proxmire could get away with such hyperbole, being well known as one of the most physically fit solons in the world's most exclusive club.

He had a more serious objection, of course, and that was that two gymnasiums certainly are enough for 100 senators. To expand to three would mean that the upper body would be carrying its body building to an extreme, providing one gym for every 33 and a third senators.

Thanks partly to Senator Proxmire's eagle eye for frugality, Americans rose in a chorus of complaints and the Senate surrendered.

Another View:

An open door policy

Red China's open door policy isn't being slammed shut, but Peking is closing it a bit by stiffening restrictions on overseas travel.

The problem is the escalating number of defections of prominent Chinese to the West.

Until recently, Peking appeared willing to overlook defections since relatively few well-known Chinese had fled to other countries. In previous years, China was able to keep such embarrassment to a minimum by extensive screening of people going abroad and by not allowing diplomats to travel with their families.

The picture has changed dramatically under the open door policy, which is aimed at strengthening ties with the Western world. Now Chinese are traveling all over the West. There are more than 8,000 Chinese scholars, scientists and students in the United States alone, the U.S. Embassy in Peking reports. There are thousands more in Western Europe, Japan and Soviet-bloc nations.

Peking has enacted a number of regulations to keep down the number of defections. One deals with brainwashing privately sponsored students before they become eligible to study abroad. They are required to spend one year working in China to assure that they are mature ideologically before venturing abroad. Another prohibits two members in the same family from living overseas at the same time.

Peking is in a bind. It seeks a wider relationship with the rest of the world to bring China into the modern-day world. It seeks international funding that would spur trade and assist in building a sturdier economy in a nation of 1 billion people.

The numerous high-profile defections from the Soviet Union are a contrast to the lesser problem that exists in China. One reason for the difference is the intense surge of patriotism in China, where defectors are looked upon as traitors.

With such strong patriotism in place, China could climb the economic ladder much higher and much faster if the rulers had the wisdom to also open the door to allow freedom to reign among the masses.

ART BUCHWALD

Cap's humor will make you die laughing!

People are constantly asking me, "Who is the man with the most humor in the Reagan administration?" They are surprised when my response is "Cap" Weinberger, our secretary of Defense. "Cap" says things with a straight face that make you want to roll on the floor.

Art Buchwald

Just the other day he told newspapermen he is for a "protracted nuclear war." He doesn't want one of these hair-trigger wars which last 30 or 40 minutes. "Cap" said he has ordered everyone at the Pentagon to figure not only how to keep a nuclear war going, but how to make sure the U.S. wins one when the missiles start flying.

Half the people in the Pentagon took "Cap" seriously. But those who knew what a deadpan comic "Cap" is just laughed and went back to doing the crossword puzzle.

The material for "Cap's "prolonged nuclear war" came out of a routune he did when he first took charge of the Defense Department and came up with a comic routine on "limited nuclear war."

He tried this one out in front of an armed services committee last year and had everyone in stitches. "Cap," without cracking a smile, said he thought a "limited nuclear war" with the Soviets was not only feasible, but essential so the U.S. would have time to fight a conventional war.

Cap said if we let the Russians know that we were only going to fight a "limited nuclear war" then they would agree not to use their big stuff to attack us.

The only ones who didn't laugh were our NATO allies who figured out if a "limited nuclear war was going to be waged it would be on their turf," and even after Al Haig tried to explain to the Europeans "Cap" was only joking, they still didn't find the secretary of Defense's war routine very funny.

So Cap got his writers together and said, "I think my jokes are losing something in the translation. We're going to have to come up with a new monologue, and throw the 'limited nuclear war' stuff out."

One of the writers said, "I got it! What if you just stand up at the microphone and say you're no longer for a 'limited nuclear war,' but you've opted for a 'protracted' one instead? Say we're going to build offensive weapons that will make the U.S. prevail no matter what the Russians throw at us."

"That's pretty funny," Cap said. "Let's work on it. But keep it quiet or Johnny Carson will hear about it, and use it on his 'Tonight' Show first.

The writers all went to work and came up with some memorable lines.

One was "you show me a secretary of Defense who is not preparing to win a nuclear war, and I'll show you a secretary of Defense who should be impeached."

Another one which was a real crowd pleaser: When he was asked if a nuclear war was winnable, Cap replied, again with a straight face, "I just don't have any idea; I don't know that anybody has any idea. But we're certainly going to give the armed forces everything they need to win one."

These are just a few samples of "Cap" Weinberger's humor. They may not sound as funny on paper, but when you see him standing up in front of the mike, looking like Woody Allen, delivering them, you could die laughing.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Low-tar cigarette not so low after all

WASHINGTON — The cigarette industry is engaged in a multimillion-dollar "Tar Wars," with The Force being applied against one company by its competitors.

Jack Anderson

Rival cigarette makers complained to the Federal Trade Commission about the tar content of Brown & Williamson's Barclay cigarettes. Acting on test data supplied by the competitors, the FTC last June determined that Barclay cigarettes have a filter that fooled the commission's tar-testing machines.

Instead of the one milligram of tar that Barclay has been claiming, the FTC found the level was anywhere from three to seven milligrams per cigarette.

Brown & Williamson went to court to keep the FTC from elaborating on its findings, and a federal judge in Kentucky temporarily stopped the agency from proceeding further.

The injunction, however, doesn't apply to me. Here's what the makers of Barclay didn't want the smoking public to know:

According to a June 1 memo written by FTC official Timothy Muris, "all three of our consultants have concluded quite clearly that Barclay cigarettes smoke significantly differently in human lips than they do in our machines."

Muris added: "All agree that the Commission should act now to inform consumers that Barclay is not a 1-milligram tar cigarette."

The internal FTC documents, obtained by my associate Tony Capaccio, show that the agency relied heavily on research data submitted by R.J. Reynolds and Philip Morris.

One consultant, Dr. Lynn Kozlowski, had this to say in his suppressed report: "In my opinion, the Philip Morris and R.J. Reynolds research strongly supports the conclusion that Barclay delivers tar and nicotine out of proportion to the FTC rating."

Another consultant, Dr. Fred Block, wrote: "The preponderance of data thus indicates that the FTC tar and nicotine values of Barclay cigarettes are misleading ... The data do indicate the present need for action."

The FTC's draft statement, suppressed by the court order, states that Barclay cigarettes "are more appropriately ranked at significantly higher levels of tar and nicotine" than their currently advertised levels. "The relative delivery of carbon monoxide is significantly greater than suggested by the current FTC rankings."

What's more, the statement warns, because of the unique construction of Barclay filters, higher tar levels "occur automatically and cannot be avoided by informed consumers."

Health considerations aside, the stakes in the Barclay controversy are enormous. As smokers continue to favor low-tar cigarettes, a low FTC rating is pure gold for a tobacco company. In its 18 months on the market, Barclay has captured a 1.5 percent share of the cigarette market. Industry figures indicate that each percentage point of market share is worth $130 million a year.

Footnote: A Brown & Williamson spokesman said it was Barclay's success in cutting into the market that caused the competition to complain. "We feel that in singling out Barclay, the FTC has bowed to a competitive ploy," he said.

CUSTOMS COWBOY: U.S. Park Police keeping their eye on a "Yippie" marijuana smoke-in near the White House last July 3 were understandably concerned when they spotted a pistol holster sticking out from under the motorcycle jacket of a casually dressed man.

Under questioning, the man identified himself as a Customs Service security agent, and said he was "gathering evidence" for his boss. But the Park Police thought he was "acting funny," so they relieved him of his Smith & Wesson handgun and hauled him in.

After a few hours of confusion, Customs supervisors verified the gun-toting spy's identity, and were able to retrieve both him and his weapon. Customs sources say he didn't have permission to carry his pistol outside the office, and an internal investigation was made into the embarrassing incident.

Customs officials would not comment on what, if any, disciplinary action was taken against the agent, but offered assurance that all personnel were now "sensitive to firearms policy" if they weren't before.

MISSED POINT: The Voice of America recently taped what Washington officials figured would be a dynamite feature for the radio's Korean listeners: a story on Peter Kim, Korean-American star place-kicker for the University of Alabama. But when the tape arrived in Seoul for broadcasting, officials there had to do it all over again. Reason: Most Koreans, especially in the North, don't have the foggiest idea of what American-style football is all about, let alone place-kicking.

LET'S SEE: M-I-S-S-I ... As one of Washington's better-known Republicans, House Minority Whip Trent Lott of Mississippi is regarded by GOP candidates as a valuable endorsement to get. One such hopeful, Manuel Iglesias, got Lott to sign a fundraising invitation to help Iglesias raise money for his campaign against Rep. Claude Pepper, D-Fla.

The letter had "Congressman Trent Lott" printed in bold letters across the top. In the upper left corner was the name of his home state: "Mississipi" — leaving out the second "p." Iglesias' campaign was unaware of the mistake.

A CHANGING WORLD

Writer still pursuing people, 'big story'

Completing just over 50 years of putting one word after another in this fascinating business of reporting on the local, national and world scene, there are lots of memories, and, hopefully, more to come.

John Pinkerman

The memories will jog the nostalgia of mostly oldsters but to this man who has experienced them, they represent the ultimate in fulfillment of a boyhood dream — meeting and talking with plus writing about the "big people" of the world.

For those who remember the early days of Franklin Roosevelt's New Deal, the first big interview still is remembered the best. It was with James A. Farley, national Democratic chairman and later postmaster general. Nobody has ever been kinder to me than was this tough but genial politician as he patiently put up with dumb questions from a $10-a-week cub reporter. With that memory it is gratifying that almost 50 years too late Jim Farley has been remembered by the renaming of the New York City General Post Office in his honor. Mayor Ed Koch said it right when he noted, "Jim Farley was No. 1 and there is no better monument to his memory than this building, which is ZIP Code 10001, No. 1 in New York."

But, Jim Farley was only one "hero" in this man's memory. FDR was one of sorts, particularly the manner in which he made himself available for repetitive questions during the 1940 campaign against another great man, Republican Wendell Willkie.

There have been other things — and tragedies. There was the afternoon, again for a very young reporter, of the errant train that ran down eight youngsters in Derby, Conn. There was the electrocution that made this man for a long time a dedicated foe of capital punishment. There was the near arrest and jailing briefly for digging out municipal skulduggery — and vindication when the culprits were exposed and punished. There was the wonderful experience of a wide variety of stories — from the most exciting to the dullest Epworth League "bean supper."

There have been interviews with the famous; the near famous and the infamous (including mobster Dutch Schultz) but the most wonderful man of them all is still the best remembered — Lou Gehrig, great baseball player with the New York Yankees. Lou was far more than a ballplayer. He was a man after whom any American youngster might want to model his life. He was talented and he was generous. He was famous and he was humble. And death took him far too early at 38.

Meetings with many other sports figures were part of the reporting experience, as were sessions with presidents — FDR, of course, Gerald Ford, Jimmy Carter, Ronald Reagan. In between were a couple non-reporting wars, with more time than one might think to dream of returning to the journalistic typewriter.

"Big people" interviews included lots of others: Bill Graham, Chiang Kai-shek, Konrad Adenauer, Josip Broz Tito and such great sports figures as Gene Sarazen, Gene Tunney, Jack Dempsey, even mountain-man Primo Carnero (and only OLD boxing fans will remember him). There also was a man few Americans will remember but he was one of the bravest — Chancellor Leopold Figl of Austria, who practically spit in the eye of his Soviet occupiers after World War I. And, one of the great statesmen of all time, Abba Eban, once foreign minister of Israel.

"Big name" editors, of course, made most of the joys possible in the first 50 years of this love affair with journalism. Just right for the young and naive reporter was enial Jim McGovern, famous througout the East in the early 1930s as editor of the Bridgeport, Conn., Times-Star. And, in later years, that perfectionist of writing and reporting, Executive Editor Carl Lindstrom of the Hartford Times. But, most important in this man's career, perhaps, was the late Jim Copley, owner of the Copley Newspapers and 100 percent a newsman's newsman.

The news business has changed dramatically in 50 years and today its electronic character is a mystery to some of us old-timers. But, writing is a craft and we all aspire, young and old, in the same way as this young squirt did in 1932. So, now on to the next 50 (or fewer, as fate may direct) years — with only a slight change in sponsor to alter that same old business of putting one word after another. And, with the same urge to meet the big people and become involved in the "big story" of the day.

Linda Lavin marries Kip Niven at their home overlooking ocean

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Two hundred friends and relatives were invited to the wedding of actress Linda Lavin and actor Kip Niven at their home in Malibu, overlooking the Pacific Ocean.

Linda Lavin

Miss Lavin, television's "Alice," and Niven said their vows Aug. 22, according to Bette Ashley, publicist for Warner Bros. Television. It was the second marriage for both.

Actress Gail Strickland was maid of honor. Also in the wedding party were Niven's children, Jim, 10, and Kate, 6.

Miss Lavin, 44, a native of Portland, Maine, began her career on the stage in New York, winning awards for off-Broadway appearances in "Little Murders" and "Wet Paint."

Prior to 1976, Miss Lavin was a regular on the "Barney Miller" show. "Alice" begins its seventh season this fall on CBS-TV.

Niven, 37, has appeared in the films "In Cold Blood," "Magnum Force," "Earthquake" and "Airport '75." His TV appearances include "A Fire in the Sky" and "Blind Ambition."

After an 11-year marriage, Miss Lavin filed for divorce from actor Ron Leibman in April 1980. Leibman played the title role in the TV lawyer drama series "Kaz" and portrayed a labor organizer in the film "Norma Rae."

LIMA, Ohio (AP) — Organizers say a free concert by country music star Willie Nelson netted $22,702 for community projects.

Willie Nelson

An estimated 30,000 fans attended the concert June 30, and the money they spent to park, quaff $2 beers and buy Willie Nelson T-shirts and other souvenirs at the day-long event came to $74,519.

The Council for the Arts of Greater Lima made a profit after paying expenses of $51,817, according to operations manager Betty Plapp.

The idea for the concert came in March when a Wall Street Journal article contrasted the stagnant economy in this northwestern Ohio community of about 50,000 people with the prosperity of San Angelo, Texas, a city with about 70,000 residents.

Lima officials contacted counterparts in San Angelo asking for help, and aid was offered by Sam Lewis, an advertising and public relations agent who is a friend of Nelson's.

His performance lasted nearly three hours and was capped by a surprise appearance by former sidekick Waylon Jennings.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — The Internal Revenue Service hopes fans of Johnny Paycheck will pay big bucks to buy two guitars, four TV sets and other odds and ends of the singer's personal belongings.

Johnny Paycheck

The IRS has scheduled an auction Sept. 9 to settle Paycheck's personal income tax debt of at least $103,000. He is best known for his hit, "Take This Job and Shove It."

The sale will settle three liens, said IRS spokeswoman Eve Miller, adding that regulations bar disclosure of his exact tax debt.

Paycheck's property was seized Aug. 11. It included an onyx ring, a bedroom set, a lounge chair, a couch, baby furniture, a washer and dryer, a sewing machine, a vacuum cleaner, suede clothes and jackets, boots, eight-track tapes, awards and plaques and a Buford Pusser walking stick.

Pusser was the McNairy County, Tenn., sheriff made famous by the "Walking Tall" series of movies based on his life.

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — The O'Jays, black American singers who toured South Africa in March 1981, have been commended by a United Nations committee for later denouncing South African racism.

The commendation came at a meeting Tuesday of the Special Committee against Apartheid, the South African segregation system.

Chicago, Miami fighting over location of 1992 World's Fair

MIAMI (AP) — The 1992 World's Fair will mark the 500th anniversary of Christopher Columbus' arrival in the New World, and Miami, not Chicago, should be the site, says Florida Gov. Bob Graham.

Chicago officials won conditional approval to host the fair at a Paris symposium of exhibitors this spring, and hope for final approval from President Reagan. But they won't get it if Graham and some high-powered lobbyists have their way.

"There is no question Chicago is capable of hosting the World's Fair, but this particular celebration belongs in Miami," Graham said Tuesday. "After all, Columbus landed only about 200 miles from here."

The governor, wearing a loud red tie stitched with Florida's outline and a yellow "Make It Miami" button, gave his blessing to a state delegation that was to travel to Washington today with an application for the fair in time for a Sept. 1 deadline.

Chicago officials have complained that Miami's lobbyists in Washington have violated unspoken protocol by pushing too strongly with political heavyweights for last-minute approval of the site.

But Expo 500 president Randolph Coleman said Miami organizers "just utilize groups that could influence (Reagan's) decision."

Among the groups that are going to bat for the Miami site are about 100 congressmen from areas with strongly Hispanic influences, as well as the Organization of American States.

Reagan is expected to decide by November whether Chicago or Miami wins the lucrative rights — estimated at $1 billion — for the fair.

A feeble attempt by Columbus, Ohio — namesake of the Italian explorer — fell by the wayside last year, not long before Miami got into the race.

Miami wants to hold the fair on 350 acres of Virginia Key, a coastal island two miles from downtown. The fair would generate 66,000 jobs statewide from 1988 through 1992, Expo 500 officials say.

In little more than a year, organizers have spent $1 million for lobbyists, site plans and a three-volume study listing the economic benefits of the six-month fair.

"We're not very happy," said Timothy Schulte, spokesman for the Chicago World's Fair. The city has spent $2.5 million the last four years promoting a 500-acre lakefront site for the fair.

Wedding couple from another world

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — The wedding announcement said a doctor and his bride tied the knot, but the young and restless honeymooners didn't really exist; they were from another world.

On Sunday, a newspaper announcement reported that Elisabeth Anne Chandler and Dr. Neil Phillip Curtiss got married Saturday evening at St. Mark's Episcopal Church in the posh New York suburb of Scarsdale.

But there is no St. Mark's Episcopal Church in Scarsdale.

And the only place you'll find the lovely couple and their attendants, also listed in the announcement, is on the afternoon television soap opera "Days of Our Lives."

David V. Hawpe, managing editor of The Courier-Journal, said in a statement published Tuesday that the paper's readers had been the victims of a "hoax wedding announcement."

The phony nuptial note had been submitted in a "routine way" to the paper's Accent Department, the statement said.

"There was no reason to believe that it was anything other than a legitimate submission," Hawpe said.

NBC-TV publicist LeAnne Baker, in a telephone interview from Burbank, Calif., said the incident was not only strange but contradicted the plot line of the program.

She said Liz Chandler and Curtiss were supposed to be married on the TV show about three weeks ago, but it turned out that Liz's current husband won't grant her a divorce until she bears him a child.

"Sometimes fans get really into it. They can't separate reality from fiction," she said.

Maureen McNerney, editor of The Courier-Journal's Accent section, said some people have suggested that NBC might have placed the announcement as a public relations stunt.

"Oh God no!" Ms. Baker said.

The announcement, submitted by somebody using the name of the purported bride-to-be, gave a New York phone number that turned out to be the office of the magazine American Lawyer.

Board of directors chooses new name for boys ranch

A new name has been designated for the boys ranch, expected to open in October, for boys ages 7 to 17 who are orphaned, neglected, abused or delinquent.

According to director Frank Kiker, the four-member board of directors chose Monday night to name the ranch the Permian Basin Boys Ranch.

Orginally known as the Hiding Place Boys Ranch, the ranch is located about 10 miles southeast of Midland on County Road 160. According to Kiker, the board of directors decided to change the name to a more positive one after receiving comments from the public due to recent publicity.

A logo still is being sought for the ranch, Kiker said, and persons with ideas are urged to contact him.

Persons interested in donating time, experience, money or gifts also should contact Kiker at Permian Basin Boys Ranch, Inc., P.O. Box 763, Midland, 79701; Route 1 Box 84 H 19, Midland 79701; or by calling 682-7582.

Recipe exchange yields many favorites

By BETSY BALSLEY
Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

Food writers seem to eat, breathe and live to exchange recipes. We collect them like dogs do fleas. Some are tried once and quickly disposed of. Others find a place in ever-expanding personal recipe files that are no better organized than yours.

Exchanging recipes turns into a fine art when food writers get together. As might be expected, we tend to talk shop. And inevitably the conversation gets around to recipes. What kinds of foods are currently popular here or there? What's new in food trends? Do you have any unusual or exciting recipes that my readers might enjoy? The same questions are asked over and over again, with the result that scraps of paper with cryptic notes are crammed into wallets, pockets or purses.

THEN, ONCE IN A WHILE, one sits down and tries to get organized. The notes are translated into readable recipes and taken to the kitchen for testing. Usually the collection turns out to be a heterogeneous one. There may be desserts. (No, that's wrong. There are always desserts. America seems to live on sweets.) Other recipes may be for new versions of simple, basic foods such as biscuits. But what biscuits! Whatever is a big hit in one part of the country will eventually wend its way to the rest of it.

For the past year I have been amassing just such a collection of recipes: There's no real rhyme or reason to them. And there certainly is no similarity among them. They do, however, have two things in common. All are good, and each reflects a type of cooking popular in the part of the country where it originated.

Some of these recipes have decidedly provocative names. Who, for instance, could resist trying a dessert called The Next Best Thing to Robert Redford? Or a cake entitled Better Than Sex? Others, of course, boast less glamorous names, but in their own ways are wonderful foods.

As I say, over a period of time one tends to acquire a very eclectic group of recipes that are good and fun to serve on appropriate occasions. They don't go together and aren't meant to. But they deserve a place in any recipe collection simply because they're good foods.

Here are a few of the recipes that have found a home in my personal recipe file during the last year:

ACCORDING TO MARGE HANLEY, food editor of the Indianapolis News, this dessert got its name when it was served to a group of women at a luncheon where everyone was talking about the movies and which stars they liked. The dessert was an instant hit, but as Robert Redford was being discussed when it was served, one guest announced that she still liked Robert Redford better. Thus, whatever the dessert had been called previously, it acquired a catchy new name on the spot. It's rich, chocolatey and has a wonderful attribute — it can be made ahead.

THE NEXT BEST THING TO ROBERT REDFORD

1 cup flour
1-2 cup butter or margarine, softened
1 cup finely chopped pecans
1 (8-ounce) package cream cheese, softened
1 cup sugar
1 (9-ounce) carton frozen non-dairy whipped topping, thawed
1 (6 3-4-ounce) package instant vanilla pudding mix
1 (6 3-4-ounce) package instant chocolate pudding mix
3 cups cold milk
Grated chocolate candy bar, optional

Prepare bottom crust by mixing together flour, butter and pecans until crumblike. Press mixture into greased 13x9-inch baking pan. Bake at 350 degrees 15 to 20 minutes until lightly golden. Cool.

Beat cream cheese with sugar until smooth. Fold in half of whipped topping. Spread mixture over cooled crust. Combine vanilla and chocolate pudding mixes. Beat in milk until smooth and thickened. Spread over cream cheese layer. Spread remaining whipped topping over top. Sprinkle with grated chocolate candy bar, if desired. Cover and refrigerate overnight. Makes 16 servings.

BETTER THAN SEX CAKE

1 (18 1-2-ounce) package yellow cake mix
1 (1-pound 4-ounce) can crushed pineapple
1 cup sugar
1 (6-ounce) package vanilla pudding mix
1 cup whipping cream, whipped and sweetened
Flake coconut, lightly toasted

Prepare cake in 13x9-inch baking pan and bake according to package directions. Combine crushed pineapple and sugar in saucepan and bring to boil. Cool slightly. When baked cake has cooled, poke holes in it with fork. Pour pineapple mixture over it. Prepare pudding mix according to package directions. Cool. Spread prepared pudding over top. Chill.

Just before serving, cover with sweetened whipped cream and sprinkle with coconut. If desired, garnish with pineapple slices. Makes 12 to 16 servings.

I DON'T KNOW who Mrs. Harvey was, but her fruitcake recipe won a contest in Tampa, Fla., in 1951 and Ann McDuffie, food editor of the Tampa Tribune, says her readers demand a reprint of the recipe every year. This is a lighter-than-usual fruitcake that keeps beautifully and tastes divine.

MRS. HARVEY'S WHITE FRUITCAKE

4 cups shelled pecans
3-4 pound candied cherries
1 pound candied pineapple
1 3-4 cups flour
1 cup butter or margarine
1 cup sugar
5 eggs, beaten
1-2 teaspoon baking powder
1 tablespoon vanilla
1 tablespoon lemon extract

Chop pecans and candied cherries and pineapple into medium-size pieces. Dredge with 1-4 cup flour. Cream butter and sugar together until light and fluffy. Beat in eggs until well blended. Sift remaining 1 1-2 cups flour and baking powder. Fold into egg and butter mixture. Add vanilla and lemon extract. Mix well. Blend in nuts and fruits.

Grease a 10-inch tube pan. Line with heavy brown paper and grease again. Pour batter into prepared pan. Place in cold oven and bake at 250 degrees 3 hours. Cool in pan on cake rack. Makes 1 (5-pound) cake.

Note: Batter may be baked in 2 (9x5-inch) loaf pans for 2 1-2 hours. To prepare Mrs. Harvey's Apricot Fruitcake, substitute 3-4 cup soaked, cooked and drained dried apricots with 1-4 cup of their juice for 1 cup pecans. Do not dredge apricots with flour. Add apricots to batter with remaining fruits and nuts. Bake as directed.

Italian wine comes from ancient town

By NATHAN CHROMAN
Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

MONTALCINO, Italy — Very few of the world's red wines offer such a full bouquet, fine flavor and balance as Tuscany's Brunello di Montalcino.

The ancient town of Montalcino stands high on a picturesque hill as a modern monument to man's love affair with the grape. Etruscan and Roman objects have been discovered throughout the area, including wine artifacts that suggest grape production for more than 1,000 years, along with two nearby important provinces, Florence and Siena, Tuscany's primary civilizing forces.

Actually, Montalcino is much older than its celebrated wine, which did not become so until the end of the last century. It is believed that the name Brunello was created by local growers because of the dark brown color of its principal grape, Sangiovese. Since the town is within the Chianti region, other traditional grapes were Canaiolo, Trebbiano and Malvasia.

MUCH OF BRUNELLO'S acceptance is due to the early wine-making passion of a dedicated pharmacist, Clemente Santi, whose love of wine in the 1800s exceeded that of his profession. He became so successful as a wine maker that by 1856 his wines received critical praise at Paris and London expositions. His grandson, Ferruccio Biondi, later literally created a revolution in Montalcino wine making by eliminating Chianti's traditional Tuscan technique, the governo, which requires a second fermentation and the addition of must from slightly dried grapes. No doubt with this 1870 innovation, Biondi, then only 20, created an Italian red masterpiece.

TWO GENERATIONS LATER, Santi's descendants, mainly Franco Biondi-Santi, are still producing fine Brunello. Indeed, he believes it is so fine that his price in the United States frequently is $100 per bottle with allocations of 100 cases to the East Coast and 50 to the West.

Since he sells all that he produces, Biondi-Santi is not concerned about the price. "Why should I be," he asked, "when what I do is principally to attain perfection? And indeed, I feel my wines are in a class with the likes of Lafite, Latour and Mouton. Price is not considered there, so why should it be here? Is it simply that my wine is Italian?"

I quite agree, as Brunello has its own special charms, especially Brunello 1970 Reserva. Here is Brunello at its best in depth and intensity, a wine in which age and vintage obviously made a difference. In determining value and price, Brunello should never be judged on the basis of a youthful bottle such as the Brunello 1977, which, although in a fair vintage year, still has far to go. The question of price pales when one tastes a bottle like the 1970, which fulfills all of the potential of a generous, fine drinking Brunello.

AT FAT LESS COST but of high quality is the wine of Fattoria dei Barbi. This is an estate with roots that go back to 1500. It now is owned by Francesca Colombini Cinelli. The Colombinis can trace their connection to the property to the middle 1800s.

LIVING TODAY

Use resources to fullest

By SHARON A. HILLIS
Midland County
Extension Agent
Home Economics

Make the most of resources on hand to confront today's economic situation.

Many kinds of resources are ours, if only we recognize them and make them work for us. Resources are useful and especially important in reducing the difference between an individual's level of living and standard of living.

Standard of living is the social or individual goal. Level of living is the actual situation. The closer these two are to each other, the more comfortable and secure an individual feels about his economic welfare.

Living standards and living levels differ mainly when we don't use all of our resources to close the gap.

HUMAN RESOURCES

Human resources are perhaps the most useful because an individual can exchange them for goods and services, including money. They include any tools such as knowledge, skills, abilities and time.

For example, someone with athletic ability might serve as a playground supervisor on a part-time basis. Or, exchange baby-sitting skills for someone else's gardening talents.

COMMUNITY RESOURCES

Community resources is another means of reducing the resource gap. There are many agencies, organizations and facilities which can provide assistance, information or entertainment. For example, take the family on a picnic at a local park instead of going out to eat.

ENVIRONMENTAL RESOURCES

In addition, you can use environmental resources to narrow the gap. This might include local art exhibits, flea markets, museums, libraries and government facilities, which you could consider environmental resources.

Add flour mixture alternately with water, ending with flour mixture. Stir in oats, nuts and raisins. Drop by tablespoons onto greased baking sheets. Bake at 350 degrees 15 to 20 minutes or until light brown in color. Makes 7 dozen.

DEAR SOS: Will you kindly give me the recipe for pita bread? It was featured in your column a few years ago, but I have lost the recipe. — MRS. S.M.B.

DEAR MRS. S.M.B.: The bread that forms a natural pocket when baked originated in ancient times with the Arabs who appropriately named the bread Khubz Arabi (Arabic bread). Other groups who adopted and adapted the bread have called it by numerous other names, including pita or pide.

PITA BREAD
(Arabic Bread)

2 packages dry yeast
2 1-2 cups warm water
1 teaspoon sugar
1 1-2 tablespoons salt
1 tablespoon oil
6 cups flour, about

Sprinkle yeast over water in large bowl and stir until yeast is dissolved. Stir in sugar, salt, oil and enough flour to make sticky dough. Turn out onto well-floured board and knead until smooth and elastic, about 10 minutes, working in flour as needed.

Shape dough into roll 12 inches long. Cut in 12 equal pieces. Knead each piece until smooth and round. Roll out each ball of dough into circle 1-8 inch thick. Place on well-floured surface and cover with cloths. Let stand 2 hours or until dough has risen slightly. Bake at 400 degrees 15 to 20 minutes or until bread is puffed but not browned. If desired, place under broiler to lightly brown tops. Makes 12 pita breads.

DEAR SOS: I recently attended a luncheon where a dessert called Million Dollar Pie was served. It was delicious, but the hostess would not share the recipe. Can you help? — LAURA

DEAR LAURA: Maybe not. We have a recipe for Millionaire Pie shared by Clifton's Cafeteria, in Los Angeles, but not Million Dollar Pie. Could it be similar? Let us know.

MILLIONAIRE PIE

1 1-3 cups powdered sugar
1-3 cup margarine, softened
1 egg
1-8 teaspoon salt
1-8 teaspoon vanilla
1 (8-inch) baked pastry shell
Topping
Sweetened whipped cream

Combine powdered sugar, margarine, egg, salt and vanilla in bowl. Mix on low speed 15 minutes exactly. Spoon mixture evenly into pie shell. Spread Topping evenly on top of filled pie. Using pastry tube, pipe a ruffle of whipped cream around edge of pie to garnish. Chill at least 4 hours before serving.

Topping

2-3 cup whipping cream
2-3 cup crushed pineapple, drained
1-3 cup chopped pecans

Whip cream until stiff. Fold in pineapple and nuts.

Help for people with milk intolerance developed

By SHIRLEY BRIGHT BOODY
Registered Dietitian
Copley News Service

There are many people who cannot drink milk because they are "lactose intolerant." This means that their bodies do not produce a sufficient quantity of an enzyme called "lactase" needed to metabolize the milk sugar "lactose" into simpler sugars that can be absorbed by the small intestine.

When people with this problem try to drink milk, the results are almost always bloating, belching, cramps, flatulence and diarrhea. These uncomfortable symptoms are enough to scare off further contacts with milk of any kind. Their reluctance to repeat the discomfort of including milk in the diet is understandable.

CALCIUM AND INEXPENSIVE high-quality protein, as well as many other vitamins and minerals, are then omitted. They must, of course, get these nutrients from other foods such as soy milk, sardines, green leafy vegetables, herring, broccoli, collards and seafood with tiny bones. One problem is that some of the green leafy vegetables also contain a substance called oxylate that interferes with calcium absorption, lessening its availability.

CLEARLY, HELP WAS NEEDED and it fortunately is here in the form of a lactose enzyme powder commercially called "Lact-Aid." Adding the lactase enzyme to milk changes the unabsorbable milk sugar (lactose) into galactose and glucose, which are readily usable sugars.

Patients with the lactase enzyme deficiency are usually able to avoid their usual miserable consequences of drinking milk, when the Lact-Aid has been added to the milk first. The good news is, the calcium absorption is unaffected.

Some lactase-deficient people, while not able to tolerate plain milk, can take some partially fermented milk products such as cottage cheese, yogurt, buttermilk, sour cream and some hard cheeses.

In some cases small portions (2-4 ozs) of milk can be tolerated if taken throughout the day. Adding the Lact-Aid enzyme is preferable to taking the chance of triggering any unnecessary symptoms, however.

THERE ARE THREE TYPES of enzyme defects of the small bowel.

One is the congenital defect when a person is born with little or no lactase enzyme and is intolerant of lactose (milk sugar) all his life. This is exceedingly rare.

The secondary lactase deficiency may develop with certain diseases, such as tropical sprue, celiac disease and protein malnutrition. Sometimes after the use of antibiotics following bacterial infections, the enzyme is depleted.

The third kind is a developmental one that affects much of the world's population, primarily blacks, Orientals, American Indians and those of Mediterranean and Central European ancestry.

The enzyme levels are high in infancy when milk consumption is also high, but decreases in childhood and adolescence, to a very low level in adults. Some will argue that, based on population studies, the presence of the lactase enzyme in the adult intestine is abnormal. There are those who insist that milk should not be taken by adults, but much more advanced nutrition studies have not supported that claim.

MILK AND DAIRY PRODUCTS are great nutrition bargains, providing much needed and inexpensive nutrients that are hard to find in other such concentrated sources. Indeed, mother's milk is all a baby needs for the first few months of life — anywhere in the world.

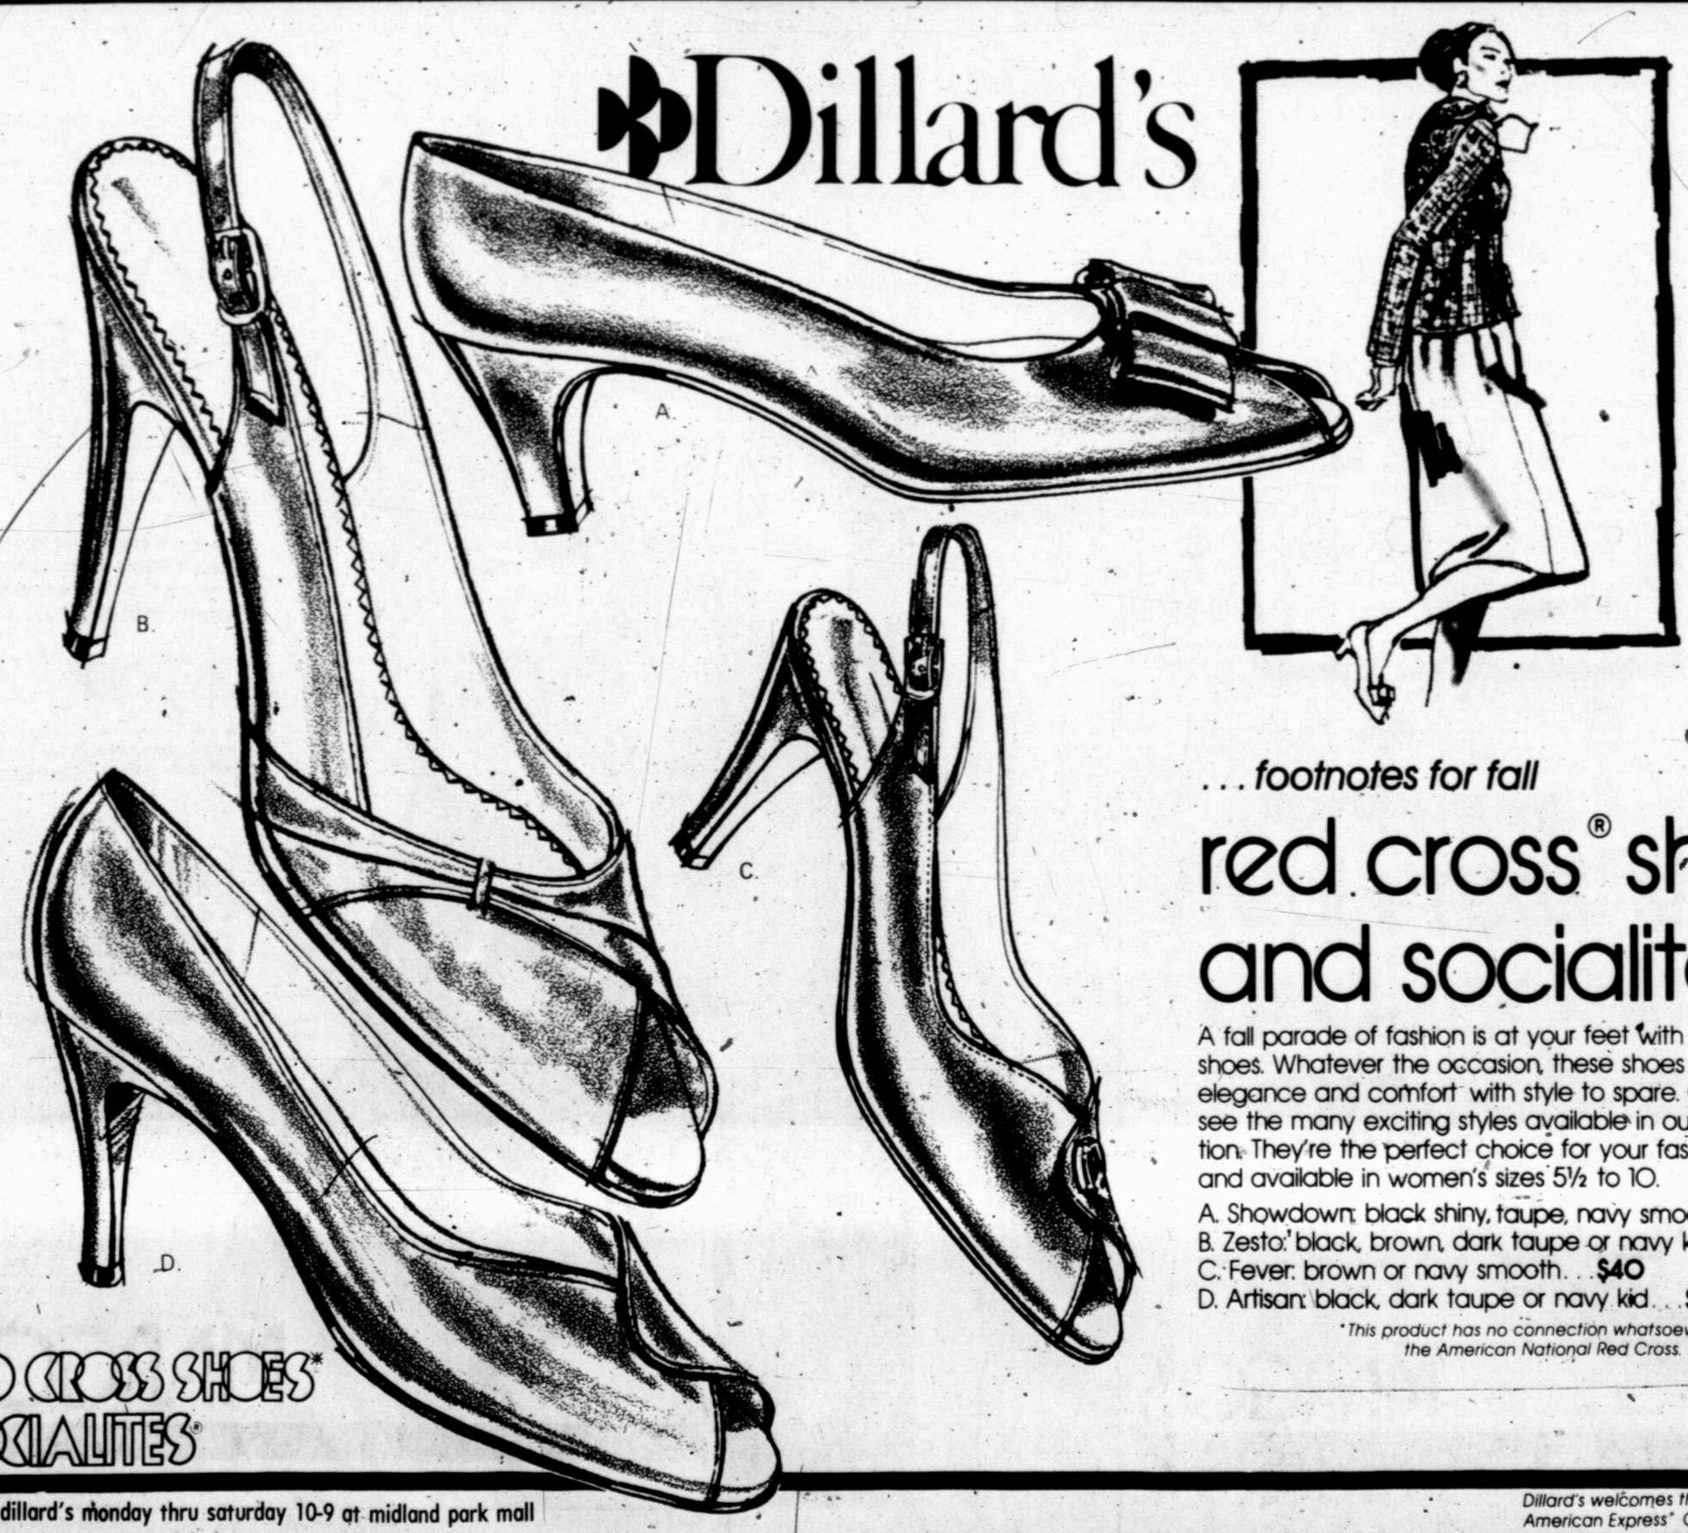

There are other reasons too, that some people cannot tolerate milk. Allergies to milk protein, psychological distaste and acquired revulsions are common reasons for avoiding milk.

If you have been unable to take milk because of a lactose intolerance problem, try adding some Lact-Aid enzyme to help you digest it. Start with small quantities of milk and increase them as tolerated. The recommendation for milk consumption is 3-4 cups daily for children and 2 cups for adults. Pregnant women need at least 4 cups daily.

DEAR ABBY

Weekend compatibility may not last lifetime

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: You recently advised "S. and J.," two senior citizens, to "follow their hearts" and get married against the wishes of their married children who suggested they live together first. ("S. and J." rejected that idea, saying they would be ashamed for their grandchildren.)

Having recently helped my father obtain a very painful and costly divorce from the woman he married three years after my mother died, I vote for living together first.

"S. and J." said they had taken several weekend trips together so they know they are "compatible." That's all well and good, but weekend vacations do not provide the same test for total compatibility as living together. Couples who are truly serious about no hanky-panky before marriage could devise their own code of ethics during their trial living-together arrangement. — DIVORCE DISASTER IN DALLAS

DEAR DISASTER: When senior citizens marry, they would be well-advised to seek advice and counsel from their attorneys concerning a prenuptial agreement. A divorce at any age is no picnic, but it's considerably more bearable when neither party gets soaked.

DEAR ABBY: What would you do if you were in my place? I'm 41, divorced, have a 9-month-old baby, and I'm living at home with retired parents. No job and no money.

I love my daughter, but I don't think I can raise her because I am neither emotionally nor financially able to. I want her to have a good life, so I've been thinking about letting her be adopted.

My parents are dead set against it. How can I make the right decision? My parents say if I give her up, I'll regret it, but I don't know what kind of life she would have with me.

I need your advice. — B.

DEAR B.: You need more help than I can give you in a letter. I urge you to talk to your clergyman if you have one. If you don't, please get professional counseling from your local social services or mental health clinic. Yours must be a well-thought-out solution you can live with. God bless you for wanting to do what is best for your daughter.

DEAR ABBY: We have sent this same letter to your sister, Ann, in an attempt to reach as many people as possible.

We are writing in behalf of a growing number of families who have lost husbands, wives or children in the armed services under unusual circumstances.

The loss is tragic enough, but the inhuman way the government treats the families by withholding or covering up the facts of the death, and even by putting pressure on those still in the service who have knowledge of what actually happened to the deceased, needs to be brought to light, now.

We lost a son in May 1981 from the U.S.S. Norton Sound, and after the Navy dragged out the investigation for four months, we were told that it was a tragic accident. Our own investigation has revealed that our son was murdered onboard the ship and his body was dumped at sea.

The organization we have just formed is called "Citizens Against Military Injustice," 26 N. Onondage Road, Mason, Mich. 48854. We are asking your help in reaching other families who want to join in the fight for justice. Together we hope to be able to get someone in Congress to help us.

Thank you for space in your column. — FRANK & AUDREY LOCKWOOD, SAN DIEGO, CALIF.

Salmon delicious in several ways

By MERLE ELLIS

Salmon is in season! I think that's what makes summer my favorite time of year. It's certainly not the weather. I could do without the heat.

Salmon is one of the most delicious and versatile fish in the world. It is marvelous baked, broiled, poached, smoked or salted. And now's the time to enjoy it.

Salmon is in season, but that doesn't necessarily mean that it is cheap. Salmon filets were going for $5.99 a pound in my neighborhood last week and salmon steaks were $4.99. Smoked salmon was $10.99 a pound and Nova Scotia lox were $4.39 for 1/4 pound. Prices like that could make for a rather expensive salmon season summer. But I found a solution.

Last week whole salmon were on special in one market for $2.99 a pound. That's not as cheap as sweet corn, but it's the best price you're apt to find on this delicious fish.

I bought one and, with a little cutting up in the kitchen, did all kinds of things with it. So can you! When whole salmon is on special in your neighborhood, don't hesitate to buy one — head and all. Here are some of the things you can do with it.

BARBECUE THE WHOLE THING. There is no more simple or delicious way to cook a whole salmon than to stuff it with a few slices of tomato, green pepper, lemon and onion, dot it with butter, wrap it with heavy-duty aluminum foil and put it on the babecue for about 10 to 12 minutes per side.

IF A WHOLE SALMON is more than you need for a meal, steak part of it. Steaking a salmon is almost as easy as slicing a loaf of bread and, when you can save over two dollars a pound by doing it yourself, it's certainly worth doing it yourself.

Simply cut off the head right behind the "collar" — that's the hard, curved bone just behind the gills (you can't miss it). Remove the tail and the fins and set them aside along with the head. They can be the beginnings of a great fish soup or chowder. Then, cut of steaks as thick or as thin as you like. A good sized stiff-bladed knife works best. (I use a 12-inch cook's knife.) Cut down to the bone, then using your left hand to hold down the tip of the blade, force the heal of the knife through the bone with a good hefty push on the handle.

Cook the salmon steaks any way you like. They are essentially the same as the steaks that the butcher cuts for you. The only major difference is about $2 a pound.

WHEN YOU HAVE cut off as many steaks as you need, or when you have come to the point where the steaks are too small for serving, filet the tail. Insert the knife along the side of the bone in the center of the fish and cut out along the rib bones. Lift up the meat and cut along the bones in the other direction to remove the boneless filet.

Do the same on the other side of the fish and you'll have two beautiful boneless salmon filets. Similar cuts were going for $5.99 a pound in my neighborhood last week. You can cook them along with the steaks, but, if you want a real treat at a bargain price, smoke them.

SMOKED SALMON is out of sight, both in terms of taste and price. But it is so easy to do yourself there is no reason not to enjoy!

I have smoked salmon by three different methods and have found very little difference in the finished product. I have done them in my barbecue kettle with hickory chips. I have done them in one of those wonderful little hickory smokers that do a good job of smoking all manner of things. And I have done them in the kitchen in the oven of my electric range using liquid smoke.

There are those who have nothing good to say about liquid smoke. I think it's becuase they don't understand what it is. I find it does a marvelous job, but this in not the time to debate its merits.

Whichever way you smoke your salmon, the process starts the same. First, soak the filets for 30 minutes in a brine solution of 1/4 cup non-iodized salt dissolved in one quart of water. While the fish soaks, start your coals and soak some hickory chips. If you're using a barbecue kettle, build a small fire on one side only. Remove the fish from the brine, dry it with paper towels, brush it with vegetable oil on both sides and place it on the top shelf of the smoker or on the side opposite the coals of a kettle cooker.

IF YOU'RE USING LIQUID SMOKE, remove the fish from the brine, dry it, brush it with vegetable oil, then with liquid smoke. Place the fish on the center rack of a 150- to 175-degree oven for about 1-1/2 hours. Baste occasionally with oil and liquid smoke until the desired taste and appearance is achieved.

No matter how you smoke your salmon, it will be delicious, and you'll be saving $4.39 per 1/4 pound!

Book paints portraits of top officials

WASHINGTON (AP) — Ralph Nader says Ronald Reagan has set out to create "a government of General Motors, by Du Pont, for Exxon" and his associates have published a 750-page book to back up that view.

"Reagan's Ruling Class," published by a Nader spinoff, the Presidential Accountability Group, asserts that the administration is run by men of great wealth and narrow vision who hold common attitudes and ideologies.

Ronald Brownstein and Nina Easton, the book's co-authors, profile the 100 administration movers and shakers they consider the most powerful. Fifty-seven agreed to be interviewed for the book.

Most are portrayed as insular and insensitive to any government obligation to help those less fortunate than themselves.

"Reagan has turned over control of the U.S. government to a group of officials with a remarkably similar and limited set of experiences and allegiances that are remote from the realities of life for most Americans," Nader said at a news conference summarizing the book's conclusions.

"Almost 30 of the top officials in the administration are millionaires, and many are multimillionaires who view government as an instrument for the powerful and wealthy, unaccountable to the public. It is a government cadre of extraordinarily broad wealth, narrow vision and little compassion."

The result, he said, is an attempt to build "a government of General Motors, by Du Pont, for Exxon."

Housing Secretary Samuel Pierce, asked if he sensed a commitment to civil rights in the Justice Department, hedged and became "visibly uncomfortable," the book said.

"It's hard for me to say," Pierce replied. "I don't know, but in time I will know very well...I want to watch these things."

Pierce said he would quit the government if something happened "that I could not absolutely take in my heart."

The book said President Reagan's contention that the Soviet Union enjoys military supremacy over the United States was not echoed by three top national security officials in their interviews — CIA Director William Casey, arms negotiator Edward Rowny and Deputy Defense Secretary Frank Carlucci.

"Some people judge it one way, some people judge it the other way," Casey said in a two-hour session with the authors. "I don't think you know."

Rowny is portrayed in the book as having quarreled with his own American colleagues when he was part of a Carter administration arms negotiations team in Geneva in 1977.

"I don't think that General Rowny was really interested in any kind of available compromise," the book quotes chief U.S. negotiator Paul Warnke of the 1977 experience. "His views would have required that the Soviets give up in every respect where the asymmetries favored them and allowed us to preserve every instance where the asymmetries favored us."

The book also brought to light an incident 10 years ago involving Interior Secretary James Watt, who ran the Bureau of Outdoor Recreation in the Nixon administration. Career government employee Roy Wood was Watt's special assistant.

Wood told the authors that it became apparent that Watt wanted to ease him out.

Watt summoned him and said, "Let's pray about it," Wood said, "and down on our knees we went...We prayed on our knees and I could feel that steely knife twisting in my backbone."

Wood's wife Matilda said Watt later called her. "He said he had talked with the Lord and the Lord felt that we should return to Georgia," she told the book's authors.

Ralph Nader has released a 750-page book written by two members of his staff about the top 100 officials of the Reagan administration. "Reagan's Ruling Class" will sell for $24.50 in bookstores.

'Dirt scandal' results in more trouble for Donovan

NEW YORK (AP) — It began as the "dirt scandal," in which the city paid $500,000 for pile of sand which it already owned. But within a week, this case of local corruption involved a gangland slaying and new questions about Labor Secretary Raymond J. Donovan's troubled public life.

Donovan's headaches seemed to have been resolved in June when special prosecutor Leon Silverman announced there wasn't enough evidence to support allegations that Donovan was involved with racketeers and knew about payoffs made by his former firm.

But his problems returned last week with reports that the city had been duped into paying $500,000 to a contractor for sand it had dug from city property.

The firm, Jo-Pel Construction and Trucking Co., was an important subcontractor for Schiavone Construction Co., a New Jersey company where Donovan once was the top financial officer.

The story continued, gangland style, Aug. 25 when a 31-year-old man was murdered in his car on a Bronx street. Hundreds of witnesses saw three men speed off in a red Pontiac whose license plate number was plainly visible.

INVESTIGATORS found two surprises. The victim, Nathan Masselli, had an interest in Jo-Pel. So did his imprisoned father, who had a nickname ("Billy the Butcher") and a record that indicated he was a member of the Genovese crime family.

A key link surfaced the next day: Both father and son had cooperated with Silverman, who recently had reopened his investigation of reports that Donovan was involved with organized crime during his career at Schiavone.

Nathan Masselli, who had no criminal record, was the second figure in the Donovan investigation to be murdered.

In June, Fred Furino, a former Teamsters union official who had been interviewed several times by Silverman, was found shot to death in the trunk of his car on Manhattan's East Side. No suspects have been arrested in that case.

Officials said that when Nathan Masselli was killed, his father, Pellegrino William Masselli, had been scheduled to testify again by Silverman in the renewed Donovan inquiry. Silverman reopened the investigation last month, but has not said what prompted the new probe.

The elder Masselli's lawyer, John Iannuzzi, quoted Masselli as saying he doubted the slaying of his son was connected to the Donovan investigation and had no new information for the probe, according to an article in Tuesday's New York Times.

IANNUZZI ALSO said Masselli told him he had "no idea" why his son was killed, the Times said.

The father had agreed to cooperate in the original investigation after Schiavone officials refused to pay Jo-Pel some $600,000 which Masselli claims it is owed, according to Silverman's report.

"I'm supposed to go away Monday, but I don't have to if I help the government," Masselli reportedly told Schiavone counsel Morris Levin last December.

"They will help me if I give them anyone in Schiavone construction," Masselli told Levin.

After his son's murder, the prison guard on Masselli was tightened and the FBI moved into the case. Silverman told reporters he was "distressed at the death of any person who was involved in the investigation I am conducting."

On Saturday, a man police said was one of three seen fleeing the scene of Nathan Masselli's death surrendered to the Bronx district attorney.

SALVATORE ODIERNO, 67, was described by a prosecutor at his arraignment as a veteran soldier in the Gambino organized crime family. He had, said District Attorney Mario Merola, "survived a lifetime in a very hazardous occupation."

Merola succeeded in getting the suspect held without bail pending a hearing Friday.

Odierno's neighbors on Long Island described him as a friendly yet quiet man who gave them vegetables from his garden.

A puzzling aspect of the Masselli slaying was the clumsiness of the hit. Masselli was gunned down in early evening near a brightly lighted playground, where there were hundreds of witnesses. And the killers drove off in a car which could be easily traced.

One theory was that Odierno willingly sacrificed himself for the mob; another was that the younger Masselli, whom an FBI official described as "a gutsy guy," refused to submit quietly and forced his murderer's hand.

On Monday, officials said Odierno was refusing to talk.

HIS LAWYER, Louis Aidala, described Odierno as "a retired gentleman" who "did not run because he has nothing to hide."

"He has nothing to worry about," Aidala said.

The FBI stressed there was no proof of a link between last week's events and the Silverman investigation; nor was there a solid link between the Masselli and Furino murders.

Meanwhile, a spokesman for Donovan, Vernon Louviere, said Monday in Washington that Donovan and his lawyer met for 2½ hours Sunday with Silverman in New York. No other details of the meeting were given.

In a statement released by Louviere Monday, Donovan said, "I am fully confident that Mr. Silverman's report will be as favorable as the previous one — which is to say I will be fully cleared of these newest allegations. As I have said repeatedly, there is absolutely no substance to these charges, and that is the way the final chapter will be written."

Twenty-two legislators call it quits in the House

WASHINGTON (AP) — While most congressmen are hustling votes and spending millions to be re-elected, three senators and 22 members of the House of Representatives are saying "enough" and calling it quits.

Some say they're going home or retiring in Washington because they can make more money with less frustration, others want more time with their families. A few say the job just isn't what it's cracked up to be.

Rep. Shirley Chisholm, D-N.Y., said her congressional duties have become "tedious and frustrating" after seven terms. She said she hopes to be more effective when "freed from the wheel-spinning confines of the congressional cloisters."

"I hope to get out and make enough money in a couple of years to be able to afford to come back," said Rep. Ken Holland, D-S.C. Like many lawmakers, Holland said he finds it hard making ends meet on his $60,663 annual federal salary.

"It is simply that when one has done the same thing for 28 years, as I have, he ought to think about doing something new," said Rep. Henry S. Reuss, D-Wis., chairman of the Joint House-Senate Economic Committee. He plans to combine law, teaching and writing in Washington or Wisconsin.

Of the 25 members who are not seeking re-election this November, 12 are Republicans, 12 are Democrats and one — Sen. Harry F. Byrd Jr. of Virginia — is an independent.

Byrd, in the Senate for three six-year terms, said he just didn't want another six years on the job. Virginia has had 47 senators in the last 200 years and "only six served longer than I have," Byrd said.

The list of 25 does not include eight members who lost primary elections and are taking forced retirements, nor Rep. Frederick Richmond, D-N.Y., who resigned his seat earlier this month after pleading guilty to three federal charges including income tax evasion and marijuana possession.

Another 18 House members have resigned their seats to seek higher office, mostly in the Senate.

Rep. William Brodhead, D-Mich., is giving up after eight years in the House.

"I'm subject to tremendous ethical conflicts all the time. Pressure all the time. A declining standard of living...very superficial personal relationships," Brodhead said in an interview. "I don't think people realize what a lonely job this is."

Rep. Richard C. White, D-Texas, said his family "needs my presence, but my official duties oblige me to be absent from them about one-third of the year." He also cited a "need to realize my full earning potential."

"I'd never expected to stay in Congress forever," said Rep. Marc L. Marks, R-Pa., who is retiring after three terms.

Marks, who began a blistering campaign against President Reagan's economic program last March, said his decision "made it a hell of a lot easier" to speak out against administration policies. Political pressures "prevent us being as candid as we'd like to from time to time," he said.

For example, the decision gave Marks the freedom to respond with a succinct, profane note when a constituent sent "vicious, personal" letters complaining about his anti-Reagan stance.

House Rules Committee Chairman Richard Bolling, D-Mo., a one-time contender for speaker who underwent a triple heart bypass operation last fall, says "I'll be more useful to the causes I support out (of Congress) than in."

Two who came to Congress this year to fill vacancies are not seeking re-election: Sen. Nicholas Brady, R-N.J., succeeding former Sen. Harrison Williams, D-N.J., who quit after his Abscam conviction; and Rep. Jean Ashbrook, R-Ohio, filling out the term of her late husband, John Ashbrook.

Among the other departures:

— Sen. S.I. Hayakawa, R-Calif., 76, who said earlier this year he wanted to concentrate on legislation rather than a campaign, citing "my own internal imperative to turn in a record of solid legislative achievement."

— Rep. Jim Jeffries, R-Kan., a two-term congressman, who listed frustration with high budget deficits and a "left-leaning" press.

— Rep. John Rhodes, R-Ariz., who was House minority leader during the Watergate years. Rhodes had planned to [illegible] in 1980, but ran that year on the off chance [illegible] publicans captured the House, he might [illegible] peaker.

Juvenile study released

WASHINGTON (AP) — Police officers probably should have a greater "street-level" role in handling teen-age troublemakers, a government-backed study says.

The study, released by the Justice Department earlier this week, also said broken homes have little to do with producing juvenile delinquents, but teen-agers who drive cars have increased risks of getting into trouble.

The study also cast doubt on the popular notion that "employment while in high school deterred delinquency."

"Those who were employed during both the summer and the school year, particularly the males, had somewhat more police contacts and seriousness scores than did others," the researchers said.

The study suggested a greater role for police officers in dealing with young offenders.

"Continuation and expansion of street-level dispositions — counseling and release by the (police) officer — is probably a wise policy because fewer youths are brought into the justice system, a step for which we see little evidence of positive results."

"It may also be that the effectiveness of a policy of street-level dispositions could be enhanced by a police training program which provides officers with a better understanding of human behavior and juvenile behavior in particular," the study added.

The researchers recommended focusing more attention on what they called "hard core" juvenile delinquents who have shown a tendency toward repeat offenses.

The study, conducted by University of Iowa researchers between 1974 and 1980 in Racine, Wisc., was financed in part by the Justice Department. Its conclusions do not necessarily reflect the official views of the department.

The researchers called Racine, a city of 100,000, a "microcosm" of the United States.

The researchers noted that the delinquency rate significantly increases for those who hold their first full-time job at age 17 or earlier.

As for driving, the researchers said, "Both males and females had more police contacts after receiving their driver's licenses."

They added:

"But we must remember that most were receiving their licenses just at the time that they were eager to have the rights and privileges of adults — to engage in unfettered fun and to enjoy the freedom of adults, without perhaps knowing how to be as careful as adults."

The study's conclusions about the effects of broken homes on juvenile crime contradicted the commonly held notion that children growing up with single parents are more likely to turn bad.

"The marital status of parents had little relationship to the delinquency behavior of juveniles," the researchers said.

'Major Oak' set ablaze in Sherwood

NOTTINGHAM, England (AP) — The Major Oak, a 500-year-old hollow tree in Sherwood Forest, hiding place of the legendary Robin Hood, was set afire by vandals and may not survive.

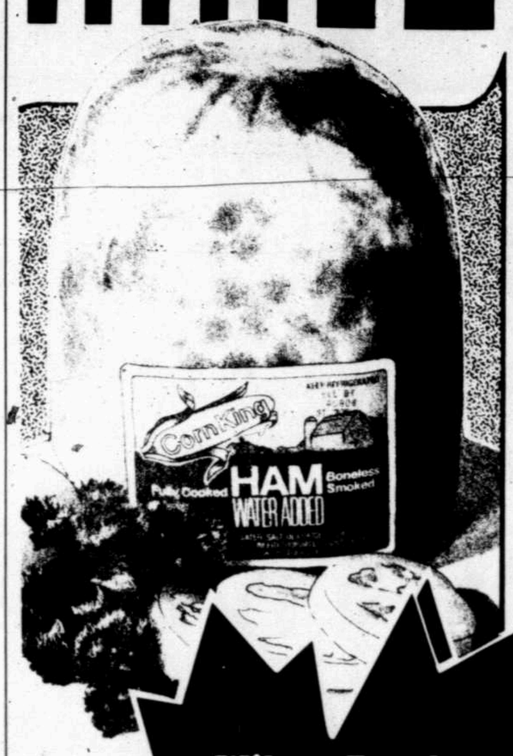

Police said they were looking for two youths seen in the tree before the fire Monday night.

As firemen struggled to save the tree, forest ranger chief Ian Solly said: "Setting fire to the Major Oak is arson against our heritage. It may be several days before we know whether the tree is still alive."

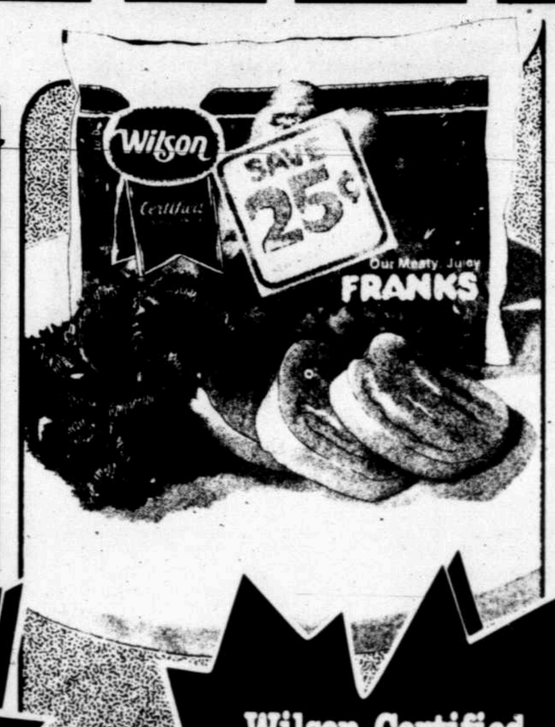

Legend has it that Robin Hood was an outlaw in the Middle Ages who robbed the rich to help the poor and lived with his gang in Sherwood Forest.

College to build new kilns

Since one of the earliest cave dwellers formed a blob of mud into a water container or cooking pot, people have been fascinated with the utility and beauty of transformed clay.

Midland College's ceramics program attracts large numbers of students who continually find new challenges in a lump of clay. John Harmon, instructor in ceramics, announced that Midland College is planning to build two new kilns this fall to accommodate increased enrollment in the program.

"This program allows for the student to cover a wide range of personal choices — from the various techniques of handbuilding to throwing on the potter's wheel," Harmon pointed out. "The individual is encouraged to develop an awareness of both the functional and sculptural aspects of clay.

"They are involved in making both their own clay and glazes and loading and firing their own kilns."

The large ceramics studio at Midland College provides an excellent working environment, complete with electric or kick potter's wheels, tables for handbuilding, clay mixer and kilns for various firing techniques.

"These classes provide wide opportunities for the individual to develop an appreciation for both the aesthetic and technical aspects of the ceramic arts," Harmon said.

Harmon joined the Midland College faculty in January 1982 with an extensive background as a ceramic artist. During 1976-77, he held a grant from the Western States Art Foundation which enabled him to work as an apprentice to the Raku artist, Jim Romberg, at the Sun Valley Center for the Arts and Humanities, Sun Valley, Idaho. He worked for a number of years as a studio potter, producing functional porcelain vessels.

He also began concentrating on the sculptural dimension of clay, which led him to earn a master of fine arts degree from the University of Texas at San Antonio.

Most recently he has participated in the Biennial Invitational Ceramics Exhibition at Corpus Christi State University; received a third place in the Llano Estacado Art Association's National Show at New Mexico Junior College in Hobbs, N.M.; second place in the Corpus Christi Art Foundation's annual exhibition at the Museum of South Texas; and a one-man show at the Southwest Crafts Center in San Antonio.

Polish girl awaiting operation

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) — When Erie County Executive Edward Rutkowski visited Poland last year, Solidarity leader Lech Walesa asked him to do what he could for a 6-year-old Polish girl who needed a heart operation. She is now in Buffalo awaiting surgery.

Emilia Smolinska, who lives in a village outside Warsaw, arrived in Buffalo earlier this week with her mother.

She was greeted at Greater Buffalo International Airport by Rutkowski and Dr. S. Subramanian, the heart surgeon who will operate on Emilia at Children's Hospital here to close a hole in her heart.

Rutkowski said Emilia probably will enter the hospital today, and Subramanian said the surgery could be as early as Friday.

Meantime, the child and her mother stayed overnight at the Buffalo home of Joel Maten, who was on the trip to Poland with Rutkowski last year.

"He thought it would be nice the first night to stay there," said Rutkowski.

The Hotel Lenox has donated living quarters to Mrs. Smolinska while Emilia is in the hospital. Rutkowski said donations paid for the airline fares to bring the mother and child to the United States.

Lebanon will recover with aid, official says

The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

BEIRUT, Lebanon — The United States has increased its assistance to war-battered Lebanon to $95 million as part of what will have to be a "very, very large" international effort to help rehabilitate the country from the Israeli invasion, a senior U.S. government official said Tuesday.

Peter McPherson, director of the U.S. Agency for International Development (AID), told a press conference in East Beirut that he was confident the country would recover from the effects of the massive Israeli air, sea and artillery bombardment as well as years of civil war destruction.

He announced the United States would provide $30 million in loan guarantees to assist the private sector in redevelopment efforts. The guarantees reduce interest rates on the loans.

McPherson said he was confident that Congress would approve $50 million in aid requested by President Reagan. Another $15 million in emergency relief assistance is also being provided.

MUHAMMAD ATALLAH, chairman of Lebanon's Council for Development and Reconstruction, said in an interview Tuesday that the country would require about $24 billion to revive from the effects of war, about evenly divided between the government and the private sector. Lebanon's gross national product is about $6 billion.

He expected about 75 percent of the government funds to come from foreign assistance, much of it from Arab oil-producing countries that are Lebanon's traditional customers.

Seven oil-producing countries pledged $2 billion in 1979 but the fund never got off the ground because of the continuing civil war and later Israeli attacks.

Both the U.S. and Lebanese officials expressed confidence, however, that Lebanon would bounce back.

McPherson, on his second visit to the country in two months, said, "Lebanon has an enormous amount going for it. The facts are this is a vibrant economy" which "will respond well with political stability."

"THE LEBANESE GOVERNMENT needs to take the lead," he said, and added that after meetings with officials, including President-elect Bashir Gemayel, he was convinced the regime would do so.

Atallah noted that any deterioration in the security situation would deal a serious blow to redevelopment, which he estimated could take five to eight years. There are fears that Israeli forces may clash again with Syrian or Palestinian troops in the eastern or northern parts of the country once the evacuation of the Palestine Liberation Organization from Beirut is completed this week.

"Although Lebanon's face is so mutilated, it has not lost any of its characteristics," including being a center of commerce, banking and services for the Middle East, he said optimistically.

As an illustration of the gravity of West Beirut's problems, he said it costs about $20 million to build a single 12-story building. Municipal officials estimate that the Israeli bombardment destroyed or heavily damaged about 25 percent of the buildings in the western part of the city, which has most of the modern structures and suffered the greatest damage.

MCPHERSON HAS NOT TOURED West Beirut during his two visits, nor have other AID officials. Apparently for security reasons, Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger is not scheduled to set foot there during his brief visit Wednesday.

The AID director explained that "it is our feeling that the situation is about ready to wrap up there," meaning the PLO withdrawal. He said AID officials would visit West Beirut "shortly."

He denied that the American assistance was reparations to Lebanon for the destruction caused by U.S. weapons and munitions provided to Israel.

Cynthia H. Rodriquez, a 1982 graduate of Midland High School, is the recipient of an academic scholarship from Midland Police Officers Association. Miss Rodriquez, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Rodriquez, will attend Midland College this fall.

Greece quietly welcomes Arafat

ATHENS, Greece (AP) — PLO chief Yasser Arafat, making his first step into exile, arrives here today to a low-key welcome from a Greek government anxious not to upstage an overlapping visit by French President Francois Mitterrand.

Evacuated from Beirut because of Israel's Lebanese invasion, the Palestine Liberation Organization chairman and 60 aides were expected aboard the Greek cruise ship Atlantis at the secluded little Flisvos yacht marina just west of Athensn

Prime manister Andreas Papandreou planned to meet the ship, along with four ministers, but he bowed out of the official lunch with the PLO leader at an unnamed seaside hotel. Instead, the host is Deputy Foreign Minister Carolos Papoulias.

Press Minister Dimitri Maroudas said the PLO chairman could stay up to 24 hours and was expected to fly to an unannounced destination by Thursday morning. Government sources said Arafat's eventual destination was the North African nation of Tunisia, where he is expected to setup his new headquarters.

Plans for Arafat's arrival were noted perfunctorily on evening newscasts of government-owned television channels. Announcers said pointedly that Arafat was accepting "an open invitation," suggesting that he was responsible for the timing.

The prestigious, privately owned daily "Kathimerini" gave the story modest display, without comment.

"The Greeks are playing this very dim," said a PLO official, clearly displeased, who asked not to be named.

"We hope Arafat will meet with reporters, but there is nothing I can tell you now," he said.

Mitterrand flies in from Paris later today. An Elysee Palace spokesman said Monday that the French president would not see Arafat in Athens.

In Damascus, however, an aide to PLO foreign minister Farouk Kaddoumi, who uses the single name, Marwa, said, "Arafat will definitely see President Mitterrand, despite the denials."

The Greek capital and the Flisvos marina showed no signs of the impending visit, with none of the green, red, black and white PLO banners or Arafat portraits that greeted evacuating Palestinians elsewhere.

The low profile was in sharp contrast to Arafat's triumphant three-day visit last December, wlen he conferred at length with Papandreou, arranged for full diplomatic status for the PLO and went away an honorary citizen of Athens.

In December, Papandreou said, "we shall play, as far as we can, the role of a bridge between the Middle East and Europe."He said the Greek and Palestinian peoples "wougd not only draw a new path for the two nations, but generally for Europe and the world."

Greece is the only member of the European Economic Community to hold Israel at a shade less than full recognition, offering de facto but not de jure acknowledgement. Israel and the PLO have equal status in Greek diplomacy.

Sixty PLO fighters are undergoing treatment in Greek hospitals and more than 200 Palestinian orphans from Beirut are on government-paid holidays here.

Arafat left Beirut Monday to an emotional farewell from enthusiastic crowds who surged through security barriers to see him off.

He was among the last of PLO leaders and fighters to leave, forced into uncertain exile after 12 years of pressing a military and political campaign from the Lebanese capital.

Arafat is expected to turn up in a number of capitals shortly as he shifts his emphasis to building on the political advantage he gained by holding out against the Israeli siege of the PLO's west Beirut stronghold.

By Sept. 6, he is expcted in Fez, Morocco, for an Arab League summit. Before or after, he is awaited in Tunis, which the government hopes will be his unofficial capital, close to Arab League headquarters and in a politically tolerant atmosphere.

About 1,000 PLO officers and fighters arrived in Tunisia Saturday.

Cuba seeks to defer debt repayments

LONDON (AP) — Cuba is seeking to defer debt repayments it owes to Western banks because of economic problems caused by a sharp fall in world sugar prices, the drying up of new loans, and economic hardship caused by a U.S. trade embargo, the Financial Times reported today.

The British business daily said Cuban authorities sent a telex message to their main Western bank creditors asking for permission to defer repayments for up to 10 years of principal due between now and the end of 1985 on its hard currency foreign debt of $3 billion.

The Financial Times said Cuba's main bank lenders were believed to be Japanese, French and Canadian institutions. American banks do not lend to the Communist-ruled Caribbean island for political reasons.

The newspaper said the Cuban move came as little surprise to commercial bankers who had been aware of developing financial strains in Cuba.

Weinberger visits Beirut for talks today

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger arrived in this war-battered Lebanese capital today for talks with Lebanese and U.S. officials and lunch with the U.S. Marines who helped safeguard the PLO exodus.

Weinberger landed by helicopter at the port of Beirut, which is under Marine guard, and headed directly for talks with U.S. presidential envoy Philip C. Habib, who negotiated the withdrawal of Palestine Liberation Organization forces from Israeli-ringed west Beirut.

There were no details on the meeting at the residence of U.S. Ambassador Robert Dillon.

Weinberger's meetings with Lebanese officials were expected to concentrate on a possible increase in military aid to the Lebanese army.

Group reports killings

NEW YORK (AP) — Amnesty International reports that since Idi Amin's overthrow 1½ years ago, the Ugandan army has conducted mass killings of unarmed civilians and systematic torture of political prisoners under the pretext of national security.

The report, based on the testimony of former prisoners, says soldiers whipped some prisoners with barbed wire, beat and bayoneted some to death and raped women prisoners.

The 28-page report by the human rights organization, entitled 'Human Rights Violations in Uganda: Extrajudicial executions, torture and political imprisonment," was released Tuesday.

In many cases, civilians have been killed because they were suspected of being guerrillas or guerrilla supporters, the report said. But the "victims include innocent and unarmed men, women and children who simply happened to be in an area of armed conflict," it said.

Prisoners are also subjected to severe cell overcrowding, denied medical treatment and left to starve, and sometimes detained indefinitely without charge or trial, the non-profit group said.

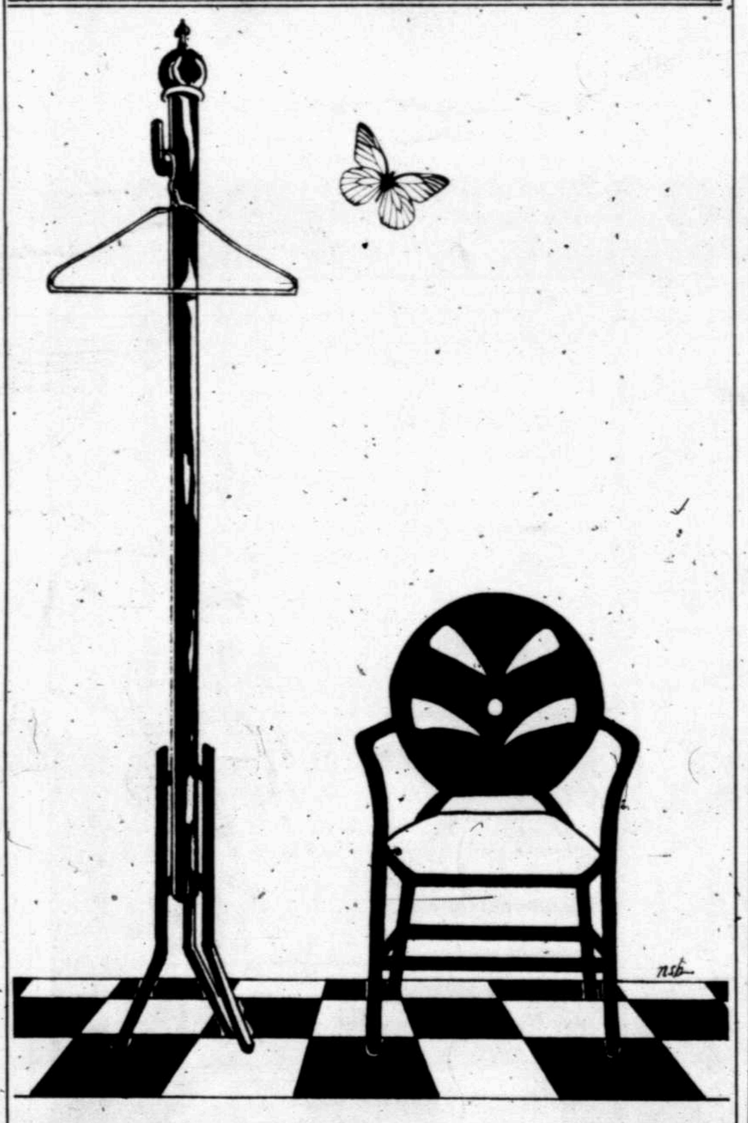

"While in many cases it does not appear that such abuses by the army were authorized by the government beforehand, failure by the government to take effective remedial action would appear to indicate that it condones such abuses," the organization wrote.

Amnesty International said its appeal to the government of President A. Milton Obote to investigate the reports of human rights abuses has met with "few and unsatisfactory" responses.

In meetings with Amnesty International in January 1982, the Ugandan government "strongly denied that prisoners were detained, tortured or killed by the army, or that the army was out of its control or responsible for atrocities on unarmed civilians."

Under Ugandan law, the army has no authority to detain civilians. Nevertheless, the report said, the total number of civilians detained illegally in military barracks at various times under Obote's government "is thought to be in the thousands."

SEC, Swiss agree to illegal trade crackdown

By ROBERT L. JACKSON
Los Angeles Times-Washinton Post News Service

WASHINGTON — The U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission, culminating months of negotiations, reached agreement with Switzerland Tuesday to clamp down on illegal insider trading through the use of secret Swiss bank accounts.

In a Memorandum Of Understanding signed by both countries, Swiss law enforcement officials agreed to help the SEC identify anonymous investors who use privileged information and hide behind the anonymity of Swiss banking procedures to make illegal profits in the stock of U.S. companies.

The U.S.-Swiss agreement caps a long effort by John M. Fedders, SEC enforcement chief, to make significant headway against insider-trading abuses, which have been a high-priority target of his investigators.

U.S. law already forbids corporate officials or their relatives or friends from using so-called "inside" or nonpublic information about an upcoming event, such as a takeover bid, to make quick profits by trading in a firm's securities.

The agreement calls for Swiss bankers to freeze the account of a U.S. client who comes under investigation by the SEC for suspected inside transactions. Until now, Swiss authorities could not cooperate with SEC probes because insider trading was not a violation of the law in Switzerland and thus was not covered by the 1977 Mutual Assistance Treaty between the two countries.

The new pact is a "provisional measure," officials said, to be used until the Swiss enact their own law banning insider trading, which they are expected to do within the next two years.

SEC officials said an important case that led to the agreement was the takeover bid for St. Joe Minerals Corp. by Seagram Co.

In connection with the proposed takeover, the SEC charged last year that Giuseppe B. Tome, an Italian investor, had misused advance information he had obtained from Edgar Bronfman, Seagram's chairman, to purchase St. Joe stock and options through a Swiss bank.

Although it was ultimately unsuccessful, the takeover bid sent prices in St. Joe securities skyrocketing, yielding Tome about $2 million in profits, the SEC said.

Bronfman was cleared of any involvement in Tome's transactions. Tome's profits were frozen pending the SEC inquiry.

In another instance, a federal judge in New York last year froze more than $5 million in stock market profits, at the request of the SEC, as a result of alleged insider trading in the securities of Santa Fe International Corp.

Those transactions, channeled through Swiss banks by anonymous investors, occurred just before the announcement on Oct. 5, 1981, of a proposal by Kuwait Petroleum Corp. to buy the oil-drilling company for $2.5 billion in cash.

At a news briefing Tuesday at the Swiss Embassy here, the SEC's Fedders said that the agreement represented "a new way of law enforcement cooperation between two nations interested in the U.S. capital market." Switzerland is "the sixth largest investor in the United States as a whole," said U.S. Ambassador Faith R. Whittlessey, who was also present.

Under terms of the joint memorandum, requests by the SEC for information will be made through the Department of Justice and the Swiss Federal Office for Police Matters to a three-member commission of inquiry to be appointed by the Swiss Bankers Association.

The commission will then ask the Swiss bank to submit a detailed report on the transaction in question. The bank is expected to freeze the account of its client up to the amount of profit realized in the questioned transaction, officials said.

The client must also be notified by the bank of the SEC's inquiry.

Automakers planning to hold line on prices of '83 models

DETROIT (AP) — Ford Motor Co. and Chrysler Corp. are expected to follow General Motors Corp.'s lead and hold the line on new-car price increases in the 1983 model year, industry analysts say.

GM on Tuesday announced its 1983 model prices — an average 1.9 percent higher on overall models than the current prices. But the announcement included price reductions on 38 models and price freezes on another 26. The other 60 GM car models will go up in price an average $357 to $686.

Arvid Jouppi, independent auto industry analyst, said it will be the first time some new-model prices have been decreased nationwide since the Great Depression. He did not know, however, what kind of price decrease occurred in the Depression and in what year.

The move is meant "to promote an early recovery in auto sales, while holding down inflation," a GM statement said. GM Chairman Roger B. Smith said the action will help GM's cars be competitive.

Auto analysts David Healy of Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc. in New York and John Hammond of Data Resources Inc. of Lexington, Mass., said the move will be copied by Ford and Chrysler.

"They have no choice" but to follow the industry leader, Hammond said.

But he added he was unsure how effective the pricing would be. Consumers likely to be shopping for a new car this year last were in the market four years ago, he said. New-car prices have risen 60 percent in that time, he said.

Ford spokesman George Trainor said the automaker was studying GM's announcement and "will try to respond in a competitive manner." Ford prices usually are not released until just before model introduction in the fall, he added.

Chrysler spokesman Doug Nicoll said "we will be competitive," but would not elaborate. Chrysler prices are not expected to be announced until model introduction in the fall, he added.

GM's price cuts, ranging from $250 to $1,500 on base prices, are mostly on the automaker's smaller cars which have been selling poorly this year as gasoline prices declined and stabilized.

Base prices on full-size cars, luxury models, some midsize cars and the sporty Chevrolet Camaros and Pontiac Firebirds, which have been selling well this year, will increase, GM said.

So far in 1982, GM car sales are down 13.3 percent from a year ago despite dealer incentives during late summer and rebates and low interest rates earlier in the year. The 1982 models' prices were 6 percent higher than 1981 models.

Specifically, price cuts of $250 will be applied to GM's mid-size models: Chevrolet Celebrity, Pontiac 6000, Oldsmobile Ciera and Buick Century, the statement said.

Price cuts of up to $500 will be applied to subcompacts with comparable equipment: Chevrolet Cavalier, Pontiac 2000, Oldsmobile Firenza and Buick Skyhawk.

A price cut of $1,500 on the Cadillac Seville involves changes in standard equipment on the cars. GM spokesman Cliff Merriott said the automatic turn-on for headlights, aluminum wheels and special stereo speakers will be removed.

The Cadillac Cimarron price will remain the same but $400 worth of equipment will be added, the statement said.

Prices of the subcompact and compact Chevrolet Chevette and Citation, Pontiac 1000 and Phoenix, Oldsmobile Omega and Buick Skylark will be unchanged.

The rest of GM's model line will go up in price, although the automaker gave no details.

Economic idicators seen pointing at improvement

By LORRAINE CICHOWSKI
AP Business Writer

Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige joined private economists in hailing the government's latest report on key economic indicators as pointing to "solid economic improvement" in the coming months.

The upward-looking report came Tuesday, and the Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks responded by cracking the 900-point barrier for the first time in more than a year.

The Dow advanced 8.01 points to 901.31, its highest close since 901.83 on Aug. 25, 1981. Nearly four stocks gained in price for every one that lost on the New York Stock Exchange.

Economists said the Commerce Department's report that the Index of Leading Indicators jumped 1.3 percent in July indicates that overall national economic activity should increase substantially by the end of the year. It was the fourth consecutive monthly increase.

"I believe the leading index and the recent sharp drop in interest rates are paving the way for solid economic improvement," Baldrige said.

Jerry Jasinowski, chief economist for the National Association of Manufacturers, called the report "encouraging evidence that economic recovery is about to get under way."

The index includes statistics from 10 separate categories and is intended to forecast future economic trends.

The Commerce Department also reported orders for manufactured goods rose 2 percent in July, the third straight monthly gain and the biggest increase since the end of 1980. Orders rose $3.1 billion to a seasonally adjusted $160.2 billion.

Although the 2 percent gain over June's orders was the largest percentage increase since December 1980, total orders still were 7 percent below the level in July 1981, before the recession began.

The Conference Board, a research group supported by business, reported meanwhile that plans for spending on plants and equipment plunged 22 percent in the second quarter from the previous three months.

The board said capital appropriations, which are authorizations to spend money in the future on new plant and equipment, fell to a seasonally adjusted $20 billion.

Actual capital spending by the 1,000 largest manufacturers fell 2 percent from the first quarter to $26.3 billion.

Lora Collins, an analyst for the Conference Board, said it was not surprising that manufacturers' spending expectations are weak.

"There has been virtually no net economic growth for three years, and manufacturing capacity utilization is under 70 percent, the lowest since early 1975," she said.

Social Security a ticking timebomb

By ARELO SEDERBERG
Hearst Feature Service

With the graying of America, the Social Security system is a ticking time bomb that could make the troubles of Chrysler or International Harvester seem like child's play.

If there are no significant revisions, the system might go bankrupt. And a "Catch-65" on revisions, which conventional wisdom usually translates into reductions, is the voting wallop of those over 65, in addition to persons about to retire.

Retired persons account for about 20 percent of all voters. It's little wonder, then, that a Reagan administration proposal last year to cut Social Security outlays by $81.9 billion in 1982-86 was shot down by a resolution that passed the Senate 96-0.

Regardless of your age, you're affected by the problem. Everyone may crab about high income taxes, yet it's a little-known fact that more than half of American families pay less in income tax than in Social Security deductions. That group rose fivefold in the past decade, from $374 a year in 1970 to $1,975 in 1981.

Social Security is supplemented by private pension funds, of course, but it still is the giant of retirement money. It dispenses nearly four times what is paid out by pension funds.

If you still think of America as a nation of me-generation youngsters, forget it. It is now estimated that there is one retired person for every five workers. In 20 years, it will be one pensioner for every two workers. This is because of the slowdown in births, longer lives and earlier retirements. If you add government employee benefits, the annual outlay is $200 billion a year – more than defense expenditures. As the government strives to cut its budget in the still-continuing battle against inflation, Social Security "entitlements" loom a major problem.

What to do? In a recent paper, one expert – Powell Niland from Washington University in St. Louis – admitted that he hadn't a sure answer, yet he listed some suggestions.

A possible short-term solution would be to borrow from related programs that have surpluses, such as the Disability Insurance Fund or the Health Insurance Fund. Yet that would be a Band-Aid to heal a slashed throat.

The long-term problem is the heart of the mess. The current big swell in the population – those who are now about age 35 – will be retiring in less than 30 years. It could be that there won't be much Social Security money left for them.

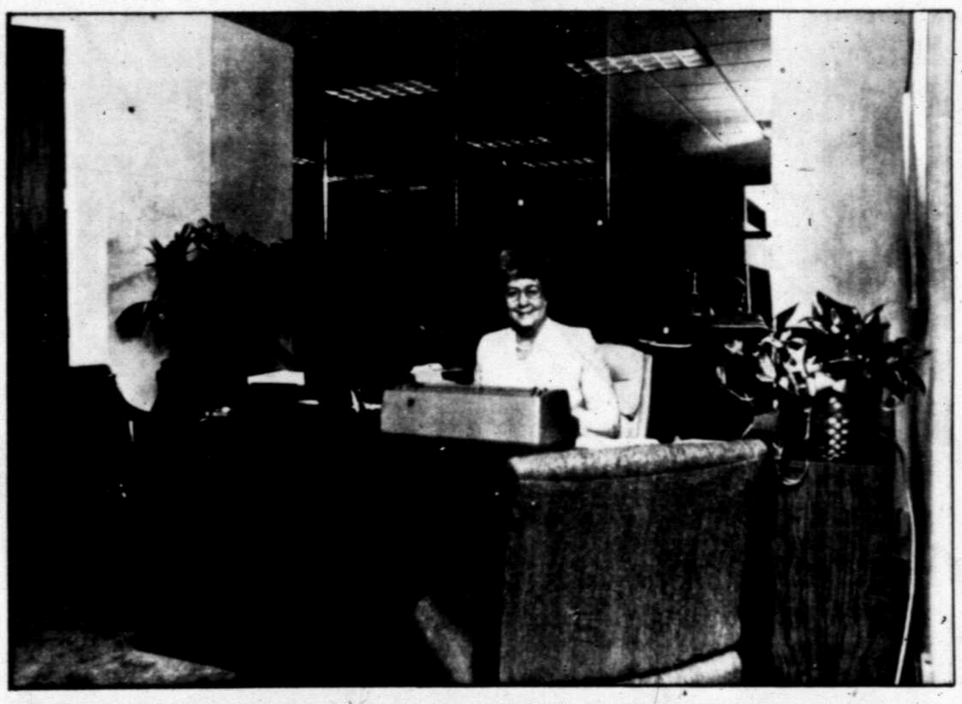

Niland suggests that one partial solution could be an increase rather than a decrease in the retirment age, perhaps extending it to 68. In 1940, five years after Social Security came into being, the life expectancy at 65 was 12 years for men and 13.6 years for women. Expectancies now have doubled those figures.

One factor about Social Security that appears forgotten is that is never was intended to "take care of the retired." It was designed only to provide minimum income to be supplemented by private pensions and savings, yet its cushion allowed people to feel comfortable. Social Security provided only about 27 percent of all retirement and disability benefits 30 years ago, about half that of today.

The number of people covered has increased to about 90 percent of all employees. And with more women working, physical numbers have swelled. Meanwhile, savings for retirement have dropped sharply. With inflation raging, only suckers save long term.

So the monster lurches on. The warning here, however, is not to depend totally upon it. Current plans, such as the Individual Retirement Account, which permits a tax deduction up to $2,000 a year and a tax deferral of income up to age 59, offer significant viable alternatives, especially for those me-generation youngsters.

Take climbing at America's gambling meccas

By ANDREW JAFFE
Hearst Feature Service

LAS VEGAS — The total gaming earnings of casino and hotels in America's three gambling meccas — Las Vegas, Reno and Atlantic City — rose almost 20 percent last year to $3.6 billion and may top $4 billion this year, but major profit increases for the industry are in Atlantic City.

While Atlantic City's earnings climbed a whopping 71 percent to $1.1 billion, those of Nevada's casinos increased only 5 percent to $2.5 billion. The figures were developed by the respected Philadelphia accounting firm of Laventhol and Horwath, and the message is that some of Atlantic City's growth is occurring at Nevada's expense.

"Within a few years, Atlantic City could surpass Las Vegas in terms of total casino win," predicted H. Steven Norton, executive vice president of Resorts International Inc. "The Atlantic City casino win for 1982 will be approximately $1.5 billion or $1.6 billion, and total casino/hotel revenue should exceed $2 billion."

Harold Vogel of Merrill Lynch noted that while Atlantic City revenues will grow from 20 to 30 percent this year, Nevada will be fortunate to eke out a 7 percent gain.

"Las Vegas also may face a long-run growth problem as casinos become more dependent on gaming devices rather than table games and live entertainment," Vogel said. "Over the short run, conversion from costly entertainment and labor-intensive games to specialty gaming devices makes good economic sense. However, this may cost Las Vegas some of its competitive advantage and excitement in the long run."

Some analysts blamed Nevada's problems strictly on the recession.

"Recessionary forces had a negative impact on the gaming industry in Nevada in the first quarter of 1982," said Theodore W. Anderson, senior vice president with Argus Research. He noted that occupancy rates were down 5 percent last year as a result, he said, of a drop in real disposable income, a decrease in convention business and the high relative cost of a Las Vegas vacation.

"A major factor contributing to the current vitality of the Atlantic City market is the fact that its immediate customer base lies within a 350-mile radius (a one-day trip) of Atlantic City, compared with 600 to 700 miles for Las Vegas," he said.

Laventhol assembled its data from the annual reports of major gaming companies, 10-K reports filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission and information filed with the New Jersey Casino Control Commission, according to Laventhol partner Saul Leonard.

• Nevada operations, which are controlled by the Nevada Gaming Commission, were less forthcoming than the Atlantic City outlets, because Leonard said the study was only able to review 70 percent of the total "legalized casino gaming revenue" in Nevada, while it had access to records of all gaming operations in Atlantic City. The statistics show a general decline for Nevada.

Airline passenger traffic to Las Vegas declined 6 percent last year. While 19 million visitors descended on Atlantic City, only 12 million visited Las Vegas, a decline of 38 percent.

If Las Vegas visitors did not stay longer (four nights, compared to 1.3 in Atlantic City) and spend a bit more, the New Jersey would resort would be No. 1 already, some analysts believe.

The issue of what portion of Atlantic City's success is coming out of Las Vegas' hide is a sensitive one for the industry. The issue is worrying Las Vegas casino owners, but they stress their town — and its slice of the nation's gambling trade — is firm.

"Atlantic City, because of its proximity to a large population, is assured of a good position in the casino gaming industry," said Morris Shenker, chairman of Dunes Hotels and Casinos Inc. "However, for the near future, Atlantic City cannot compete on a large scale for the clientele that patronizes Las Vegas."

That view, however, is not widely shared on Wall Street, where many analysts think Las Vegas' decline is due in part to its gaudy image and in part to economic factors.

"Las Vegas has suffered a major downturn in convention business because of the recession, and it might well be that the growth Las Vegas traditionally has experienced is over forever," said Daniel R. Lee, an analyst with Drexel Burnham Lambert.

Foreign money appears to be flooding U.S. stock market

By DONALD C. BAUDER
Copley News Service

Foreign money appears to be flooding into the U.S. stock market — one of the key factors in the huge run-up of past weeks.

Respected analysts think this foreign buying will continue — probably pushing the Dow Jones Industrial Average to a record high.

John P. Dessauer, a newsletter author based in Orleans, Mass., traditionally watches the first hour of trading on the New York Stock Exchange. If volume is high — more than 14 million shares — and the market is up sharply in that first hour, Dessauer normally concludes that foreign buying is pushing the market up.

"In this rally, first-hour volume is running well above 14 million shares, and the market has been up strongly. I have a feeling that we are seeing a substantial influx of money from overseas. My friends on Wall Street tell me that volume is coming from institutional investors — meaning, in large part, banks. That's another sign of overseas money," said Dessauer in an interview.

The buying makes a prophet of him. In his most recent newsletter, published right before the rally started, Dessauer predicted that it was just a matter of weeks before overseas money poured into the U.S. market. In the 1981 bull market, foreign buying was the main catalyst — and hit $1 billion a month. He can see that happening again in the current rally.

At the time of his forecast, it was a somewhat stunning prediction, for the U.S. market was in the doldrums, particularly as compared with overseas markets. Since the election of Ronald Reagan, stock markets in London, Tokyo, Frankfurt and even Paris had outpaced the New York Stock Exchange, noted Joseph McAlinden of Wall Street's Argus Research Corp.

"Now, however, the New York Stock Exchange seems on the verge of reversing this relative performance. Indeed, worldwide stock prices are now flat on their backs, and U.S. interest rates and U.S. economic recovery, both primary propellants of the U.S. stock market, will be key determinants of their recovery," said McAlinden.

He agrees with Dessauer that foreign buying is already in evidence: "U.S. equities are becoming increasingly attractive to foreign investors," said McAlinden.

But the U.S. run-up has spurred activity abroad, too. In one day recently, the World Index (computed by Capital International Perspective of Geneva, Switzerland) jumped five points.

Up to that time, the world had been in a dismal bear market. From November 1980 through the middle of August, the World Index had dropped 25.6 percent to a two-year low. This year alone, the index had been down 16 percent.

Country by country, performances have been mixed. The booby prize goes to Mexico, where stock prices have been down 85 percent from their 1981 high, noted McAlinden. Since the first of the year, Canada's market has been down 35 percent, Australia down 27 percent and South Africa down 32 (although South Africa is now pulling back sharply as gold mine stocks rise with the price of gold.)

Stock markets in other countries, such as Japan, Italy, West Germany and France, also have been behaving poorly — but most of them have done better than the United States.

"About the only two positive market performances around the globe this year were in Western Europe — London and Brussels," said McAlinden. In Britain, there has been increasing confidence in an economic recovery. In Belgium, "a new, conservative government, unafraid of challenging the unions, has won the hearts of many European investors and helped raise the Belgian index more than 25 percent over its low of the previous year. Most of this gain occurred before March, however," said McAlinden.

Nation's airlines' hope for summer profit dashed

By SALLY KORIS
Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES — With the peak travel season almost concluded, the nation's airlines have found their expectations for summer profits dashed. As a result, observers of the airline industry are predicting that yet another round of heavy discounting will begin as airlines scramble to increase traffic in the slow months following Labor Day.

"The industry was misled into believing it would have a good summer by first quarter figures, when they thought traffic was beginning to rise," said Neil Effman, senior vice president of airline planning for Trans World Airlines. "But the summer came and they found traffic wasn't increasing. So people are saying it's common sense that if traffic is soft and there's excess capacity, there's bound to be price wars. Whenever you have an unstable situation, there's always the possiblity that a carrier will take unusual pricing actions that will be met by the competitors."

According to figures compiled by the Air Transport Association, passenger traffic for all scheduled domestic airlines was up only 1.3 percent in June and 3 percent in July, compared with the same months a year earlier — far below the hoped-for 8 percent to 10 percent gain. These figures represent a great disappointment to the carriers, who have been struggling to reverse the tide of low load factors and increasing red ink for more than two years.

"There are two factors why the hoped-for summer traffic never emerged," said Julius Maldutis, airline analyst for Salomon Brothers. "The first reason is that the economy has not recovered from the recession. And consumers, who figured airlines would raise their fares in the summer, decided to take early vacations. The consumer beat the airlines at their own game."

Because the expected recovery hasn't materialized and most carriers aren't optimistic about the autumn months, airline experts are predicting the airlines will cut fares after Labor Day to stimulate traffic, despite the fact that many airlines have said they will raise fares on selected routes.

Although American, TWA and United all announced their intentions to increase fares by 5 percent in August, none has yet carried through with the raises. The carriers postponed fare increases from Aug. 1 to Aug. 15, and now are saying the increases will go into effect Sept. 7. And by their own admission, the carriers won't gain much even if they do raise fares.

"In the old days, the increases would go into effect in all our markets," said Al Becker of American. "Now, so many markets are exempted that the 5 percent increase turns out to be a lot less, like maybe 1 or 2 percent."

And there's strong reason to believe discounts will indeed continue and perhaps proliferate.

"If some airlines are giving away seats for kids in August — traditionally, our best month — what are they going to be giving away in October, November and Decemeber, when we're all scrambling for traffic?" reasoned Chuck Novak of United Airlines.

Analyst Maldutis said there is a good likelihood that price wars will erupt in selected markets — such the eastern corridor to Florida and transcontinental markets — later this year.

Whether price wars erupt or not, all observers of the industry agree that they are counterproductive. "Discounts don't stimulate traffic, they just redistribute it," said Robert Joedicke, an analyst with Kuhn, Loeb. "I can't imagine why carriers would get into discounts, because so many of them have run through their cash and are running down their equity. And they really need to put up as much cash as possible to carry them through the off-peak season."

Old rule now new rule for airlines

WASHINGTON (AP) — Attention airline customers: the government says you are again entitled to double compensation if you're bumped from a flight and aren't quickly provided with alternate transportation.

Now the bad news: You must begin paying new air travel taxes today even though President Reagan has not yet signed into law the bill establishing them, according to the Internal Revenue Service.

Both changes, announced Tuesday, will affect thousands of airline passengers in the United States etery day.

The Civil Aeronautics Board reinstated double compensation as of Oct. 1 after suspending it for a year. The CAB dropped the double payment requirment after the strike by air traffic controllers in August, 1981, because the number of flights was reduced.

"We feel the system is back enough to normal operations that the airlines can find alternative transportation (for a bumped passenger) within the time period," CAB spokesman Ted Lopatkiewicz said.

Under current regulations, a passenger who is bumped off a flight is entitled to the face value of the one-way ticket up to $200 as well as a flight to the original destination.

But under the double compensation provision an airline must pay double that amount if the passenger does not arrive at the destination within two hours of the original arrival time.

The two hours is extended to four hours on international flights.

Government estimates show that more than 90,000 passengers were involuntarily bumped from flights in 1981.

The bumping is attributed largely to the practice among airlines of overbooking flights because of expected "no-shows" — people who make a reservation and then don't show up to claim it.

Meanwhile, reporters curious about IRS authority to collect taxes before a tax bill is signed were told the agency was acting according to provisions contained in the measure.

Most of the provisions in the $98.3 billion bill, which Congress approved Aug. 19, concern 1983 taxes. But the tax changes concerning air travel and fuel were to take effect at 12:01 a.m. Wednesday.

"Despite the fact the president has not signed the bill, the applicable taxes should be collected as of Sept. 1, 1982, even though the bill may not be signed until after that date," an IRS statement said.

There was no indication of when Reagan, vacationing in California, was likely to sign the bill, for which he had lobbied strenuously.

The airline tax changes include:

—An increase from 5 percent to 8 percent in the levy on commercial airline tickets and a new 5 percent tax on air freight.

—A new $3-per-person departure tax for passengers leaving the country.

—Increases in taxes on fuel used in private aviation.

Muse Air swaps slots, plans West Coast service

DALLAS (SWN) — Muse Air Corporation has submit ted to the Federal Aviation Administration for approval a proposed slot exchange agreement between Muse Air and another airline, which, if approved by the FAA, will provide Muse with three additional landing slots at a west coast airport. Muse intends to use the slots to begin non-stop service from Houston's Hobby Airport this fall.

Lone Star closing linked to foreign dumping

WASHINGTON (AP) — The recent layoff of thousands of workers at Lone Star Steel proves that unfair trade by other countries does not cripple only inefficient operations that ought to be out of business anyway, U.S. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen says.

Subsidized imports of oil pipes and other oil company equipment, such as that manufactured by Lone Star Steel in East Texas, increased by more than 50 percent in the first six months of 1982, Bentsen said Tuesday.

The Texas Democrat released a letter he wrote President Reagan, urging him "to use powers already in law to stem the tide of subsidized steel imports."

The indefinite closing of Lone Star Steel's production facilities shows the real sting of unfair trade, Bentsen said.

Lone Star officials told him their production facility, which makes specialty oil country goods, is as efficient and modern as any in the world today, Bentsen said.

But in the first half of this year, according to the American Iron and Steel Institute, the French increased their subsidies on carbon steel by more than 20 percent, the Italians by 25 percent, the British by 20 percent and the Belgians by more than 20 percent.

Bentsen said he wrote Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige last month, at the height of international steel negotiations, advising him to avoid any deal with subsidized producers of carbon steel in Europe that left out pipe and tube products.

"It cripples our winners as well as our losers. Not even a tough, efficient competitor like Lone Star can win against a stacked deck," Bentsen said.

Youth unemployment topped 19 percent

WASHINGTON (AP) — Unemployment among American youths was 19.7 percent at the peak of the summer, with more than a half million more teenagers out of work than at the same time a year ago, the government reports.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics, surveying joblessness among youths between 16 and 21 years of age, also said Tuesday that the youth civilian labor force declined to 17.1 million in July 1982. That was attributed mostly to a decline in size of the population in that age group.

Nonetheless, the bureau said, the number of youths who entered the labor force and could not find work increased by 530,000 over the year. That had the effect of driving the youth unemployment rate up to 19.7 percent this past July, compared to 16 percent in July a year ago. All told, some 3.4 million youths were unemployed during the month.

Bankers going bonkers because of high loan portfolio risks

By DONALD C. BAUDER
Copley News Service

It's bad enough to be exposed. It's even worse when your exposure is exposed.

That's why bankers are going bonkers these days. Their loan portfolios are exposed to horrendous risks — and that exposure, in turn, is being exposed by the media.

Consequently, at a time when interest rates are coming down and bank stocks in theory should be rising, the reverse is happening: The stocks of major banks such as BankAmerica, Citicorp and Chase Manhattan are being whipsawed.

In an article titled "Burro's Debt," the London Economist cracks that, "Mexico's saddle load of debt threatens to make asses of some of the world's largest banks." The nine biggest U.S. banks have loaned the equivalent of 40 percent of their capital and reserves to Mexico, says the article.

Similarly, Los Angeles international economic adviser Robert Felsette writes in James U. Blanchard III's precious metals newsletter that loans to Argentina alone from the United States' nine largest banks represent 25 percent of their capital and reserves.

Columnist Dan Dorfman — and others — quote from analyst T.J. Holt's new study of U.S. banks' risky assets. The Wall Street Journal daily writes about the loans to the lesser-developed countries (LDCs) — as well as other shaky loans, such as to real estate developers.

But this is not hyperbole. It's not a media non-event. Even the banks' staunchest defenders admit the threat is all too real.

"There is no question that the size of the Mexican debt in relation to U.S. banks is large. It will take time to sort this out," said Ched McConnell, analyst for New York's Keefe, Bruyette & Woods, in one of several interviews.

Citing a recent U.S. Federal Reserve study, McConnell said that loans of U.S. banks (not guaranteed by a third party) to Argentina are $8.4 billion. Brazil — $18.2 billion. Venezuela — $10.1 billion. And Mexico — $21.8 billion.

"I think it will be some time before these concerns fade, and therefore the stocks will remain cheap," said McConnell, who thinks the endangered LDC loans will "be rescheduled, but won't involve major write-offs." And, eventually, he feels that patient investors will be rewarded in these battered bank stocks.

But as interviews with Felsette, Holt and others reveal, there is a definite feeling that while depositors won't suffer, bank stockholders will.

"The debts to foreign governments will never be paid. They will be extended, and institutions such as the International Monetary Fund (IMF, already rescuing Mexico), the World Bank and ultimately the U.S. Treasury will be called upon to help. There will be more problems with the private debt in these countries," said Felsette. "I don't think depositors have anything to fear. The Federal Reserve will help out. But bank profits will suffer and stockholders will lose."

Westport-, Conn., based Holt said that the large banks have reached for these shaky loans as they have come under pressure to keep growing. "It's like Braniff. They feel they have to grow — in an extremely competitive environment."

The loans to the LDCs were based on "the profit motive," said Holt. It wasn't an altruistic thing, and he doubts that the U.S. government was putting pressure on the banks to make the loans. "I do think, however, that they (the banks) might have been misled into believing that the U.S. government and the Federal Reserve would bail them out on the LDC loans, but that can't happen," he said.

Using a weighted index of six banking measurements, Holt came up with a list of the 100 strongest and 100 weakest U.S. banks. He evaluated equity as a percentage of total assets; loan loss reserves as a percentage of total loans; commercial and industrial loans, construction and land development loans and foreign debt as a percent of total loans and purchased liabilities (such as certificates of deposit) as a percentage of total liabilities.

Almost all of Holt's 100 strongest banks were small; only one had assets above $1 billion. By contrast, the largest U.S. money center banks were high on the list of the 100 weakest banks. Among the worst 25 were First National of Chicago (4th worst); Manufacturers Hanover (5th); Bank of America (9th); Chemical Bank (11th); Continental Illinois (15th); Chase Manhattan (17th); Morgan Guaranty (20th); Citicorp (21st), and Bankers Trust (25th).

"One of the things that worries me the most is the purchased liabilities, such as the large certificates of deposit (CDs), the repurchase agreements ("artificial" sales of paper for just a day or two) and federal funds (funds held overnight by banks). Basically, these represent ways of making a return on money without having high reserve requirements. But the trouble is, suppose some large corporation, which has been buying CDs from a large U.S. bank, decides that the bank's exposure to Mexico is too large. So it decides not to take CDs or repurchase agreements. This can snowball and cause real problems," said Holt, who is worried that there could be a failure of a large U.S. bank.

"The banking system is reasonably sound and there's little danger of total collapse. Unlike savings and loans, most commercial banks are enjoying good current earnings. Barring a 1933-type run on the entire banking system, we believe the most probable scenario is that a few of the weakest banks will suffer huge loan losses and go under water," said Holt.

"The FDIC (Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation) will be able to cover insured deposits, but many stockholders will be wiped out and uninsured depositors could be hit with substantial losses as well. We advise subscribers whose banks are among the 100 weakest to stay away from their large CDs and avoid their common stocks. For the same reason, you should steer clear of those money market funds whose portfolios are heavily weighted with these big bank CDs," said Holt.

"The banks can't go under. The Federal Reserve will have to bail them out. Bang — that's the end of monetarism," said Andre Levie of La Jolla Securities. Levie has never liked bank stocks and is not surprised they are not performing. But he believes the situation is grave enough to threaten the entire stock market: "It reminds of Germany in 1923, when stocks were going wild in the face of a collapse of the currency," he said.

Levie feels that when the Fed bails out the banks, the U.S. currency will unravel — and that's why he likes precious metals such as gold, silver and platinum as a long-term hedge against the calamity.

Bitter enemies join in opposition to labor board nominee

By MERRILL HARTSON
AP Labor Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The National Right To Work Committee and the AFL-CIO, bitter enemies on most issues, are opposing Senate confirmation of John R. Van de Water as head of the National Labor Relations Board.

But they're against Van de Water for different reasons.

Ever since his elevation to the top post at the labor relations agency in August 1981, the AFL-CIO has claimed that Van de Water is pro-management. Now, the right-to-work group is assailing Van de Water as pro-union.

Van de Water, a 64-year-old Los Angeles lawyer who has run a management consulting firm for more than 30 years, has been serving under a "recess appointment," which will expire at the end of the current congressional session.

Reed Larson, president of the 1.5 million-member right-to-work group, wrote Reagan on Aug. 24 demanding withdrawal of the nomination, which has hung in limbo since it failed to clear a deadlocked Senate committee last Nov. 19.

In the letter, made public Monday, Larson charged that Van de Water's actions as interim chairman of the federal agency " ... clearly demonstrate his bias in favor of forcing workers to join and pay a union in order to keep their jobs."

Robert F. Bonitati, Reagan's labor adviser, was returning from vacation Monday and said he could not comment immediately on the Larson letter.

Reagan, however, has steadfastly backed Van de Water despite the setback in the Senate committee.

Van de Water was out of the country and unavailable for comment.

Last November, the AFL-CIO hailed the Senate committee's 8-8 deadlock on whether to send Van de Water's nomination to the full Senate. Union president Lane Kirkland said at the time that he hoped Reagan "would have the good sense" to ask the nominee to step down.

In his letter to Reagan, Larson said, "Millions of Americans had hoped that with your election, a new balanced approach would be brought to the National Labor Relations Board. It is obvious that Mr. Van de Water's confirmation as chairman will not bring such a balance."

He was irked by Van de Water's refusal to explain why he sided with three other members of the five-man labor relations board earlier this year in recommending against Supreme Court review of a Florida right-to-work case. The right-to-work group was seeking the high court's review of the case.

The dispute involved the question of whether a local of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers could enforce a contract provision requiring workers at three federal installations in Brevard County, Fla., to belong to the union.

The 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruled in June 1981 the provision was legally enforceable despite Florida's right-to-work law barring such "agency shop" agreements.

The Supreme Court subsequently denied the committee's petition for review of the case.

Larson maintained that by recommending against review, Van de Water in effect had "defended the firing of workers in right to work states who refused to join the union where the contract was existent on a federal installation."

Ed Darrow, a spokesman for the Senate labor panel, said Monday, "The committee is still deadlocked as far as I see it. There haven't been any shifts on the committee."

There has been speculation that Senate supporters of Van de Water may seek to have the committee discharged from responsibility for the nomination. But that procedure has seldom succeeded in the past, and there was no indication it was a serious option.

Official knocks criticism of worker training policy

WASHINGTON (AP) — A high-ranking Labor Department official has brushed aside as "sour grapes" a charge that the Reagan administration has given short shrift to apprenticeship programs designed to train skilled workers.

Albert Angrisani, assistant secretary of labor for employment and training, said Tuesday that the assertion, made by the recently resigned chairman of the Federal Committee on Apprenticeship, "was politically motivated."

Robert Glover, who headed the 25-member advisory panel, wrote a three-page letter to Labor Secretary Raymond Donovan charging the department with "disinterest, inactivity and neglect" of federal apprenticeship initiatives.

"Your early policy statements emphasizing your concern for promoting training rather than income maintenance programs encouraged several committee members. But unfortunately, in the apprenticeship area, your actions have failed to match your rhetoric," Glover, a University of Texas economist, told Donovan in announcing his resignation on Aug. 6.

"The bald truth," he said, "is that after more than a year and a half into this administration, the Department of Labor has not achieved any positive accomplishments in apprenticeship training."

Reached by telephone Tuesday on the university campus in Austin, Glover said he never got a reply from Donovan.

Angrisani, speaking in Donovan's behalf, said Labor Department officials preferred postponement of any major undertakings until final enactment by Congress of a manpower training bill for fiscal 1983.

Angrisani noted that Glover's term would have expired Sept. 30 and added, "The points he makes in the letter were invalid."

The assistant labor secretary said the states now have prime responsibility for administering apprenticeship programs, and that the administration wanted to hold off on any further federal efforts until the new job training bill becomes law.

Mexican leader has last word

MEXICO CITY (AP) — President Jose Lopez Portillo makes his last and perhaps most important state of the nation address today, with Mexico gripped in its worst economic crisis since the 1910-1920 revolution.

On the eve of the speech, a presidential press spokesman heatedly denied new rumors that a coup was being planned by Mexico's armed forces.

"There has been talk of assassinations and nobody has been assassinated. There has been talk of attempts and none has occurred," Francisco Galindo Ochoa said during a televised interview.

He criticized news agencies for "irresponsibly echoing" rumors of "a possible coup d'etat.

"It is all false. Mexico is confronting a financial crisis, which the people know, but at no time has the social peace been threatened," he said.

On Tuesday a 24-hour consumers' strike called by housewifes to protest high prices was only partially effective. It followed a wave of rumors, ranging from a possible coup to new economic restrictions, that sent hordes of shoppers Monday to stores to stock up on staples.

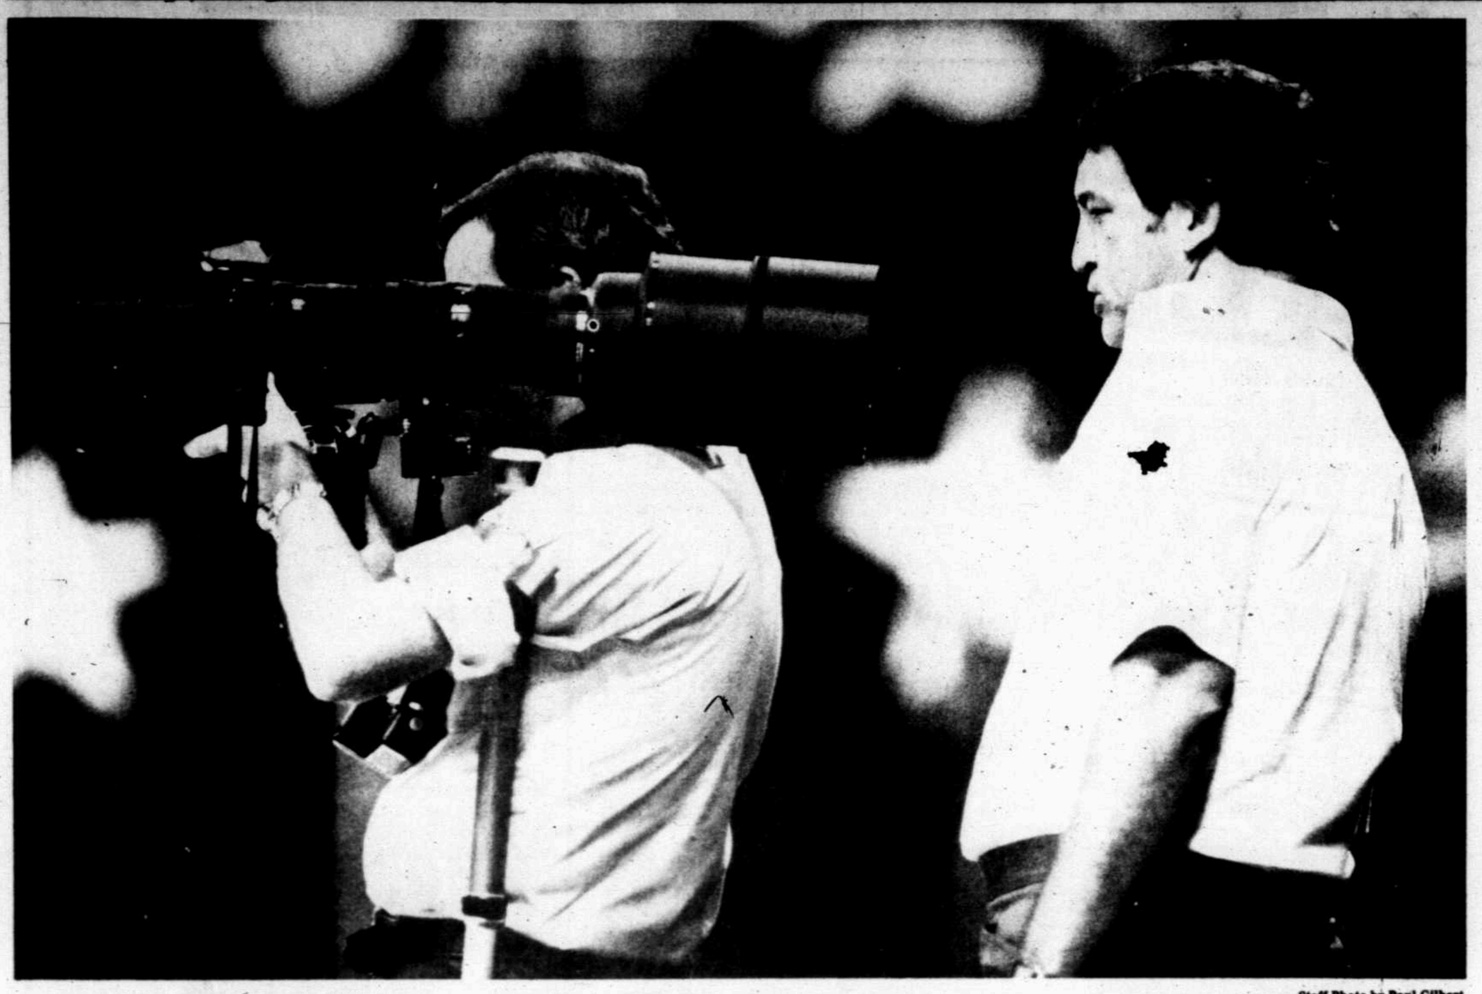

Spot checks showed there were few shoppers in food stores in southern Mexico City Tuesday and many shops were closed.

Lee Rebels unveil 'No Name' squad

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

With Friday's 1982 football kickoff date quickly approaching, Midland Lee's "No Name" Rebels were introduced to the public Tuesday night at the Lee Field House for the first time during the annual Lee High Chicken Feed.

The "No Name" tag has come about because the Rebels have no returning starters back for this campaign, but optimism was untainted Tuesday with over 1,000 students and Lee fans in attendance.

In fact, Lee High seems geared to support its "No Name" team in 1982 as members of the band, cheerleaders, twirlers, flag section, Rebelettes, rifle drill team and football teams numbered 37 percent of the Lee student body, according to Scotty Alcorn, who served as master of ceremonies for the eighth straight year.

ALTHOUGH THE Rebs can do little to shake the "No Name" tag at this point in time, they seem ready to erase that identity starting Friday when they host Lubbock Coronado at Memorial Stadium at 8 p.m. in the season opener.

"I've been reading in the paper about this 'No Name' team," responded Dr. Joe Smith, principal at Lee. "But I'm looking for them to make a name for themselves this year. I wouldn't be surprised to see a 10-0 season."

The Rebels will not be without talent, despite the fact there are no returning starters and they have already proven that. The Rebels took a 4-2 decision over the Andrews Mustangs in a three-hour scrimmage last Friday in Andrews, showing that coach Spike Dykes' new Wishbone offense has a chance to be explosive.

The Rebels also showed that passing from the Wishbone can be effective as three Lee quarterbacks tossed for over 100 yards, including a 46-yard scoring strike.

Lee has no one that stands out in the backfield as six to eight running backs seem pretty equal, but the group has speed to burn and broke twice on TD runs in excess of 60 yards against the Mustangs.

MANY LEE fans were worried that the new Lee Wishbone might be a little dull after viewing the spring game where only one TD was recorded on the night, but Dykes never seemed to be very concerned about that and Friday's showing seemed to prove his point.

"What people don't realize is that you're not going to score many points in the spring game when you divide the teams as evenly as we do. The spring game comes after three weeks of hard work and all the players have been working on the same plays. The only way you're going to have a lot of offense is if you stack the teams and that has never been our aim," Dykes said.

The passing attack wasn't impressive in the spring game either, but the showing in Andrews didn't come as a surprise to quarterback coach Jack Tayrien. "People seem to think you can't throw out of the Wishbone, but it is a good formation for throwing because you can almost bet you're going to get one-on-one coverage. Alabama does a great job of throwing the ball from the Wishbone and we've studied a lot of their films."

When the Rebels take the field against Coronado Friday, they will be facing another team that has its share of inexperience. Only two starters return for Coronado from a team that was 3-6-1 a year ago under coach Jack Quarles. But the two returning are in two skill positions with quarterback Mike Meeks and tailback Jeff Johnson. Meeks is one of the better quarterbacks in West Texas.

DURING THE Tuesday rally, Dick Mercurio, Lee High Booster Club president, said that the booster club would meet each Tuesday night at the Lee Youth Center to view the film of the previous week's game with Dykes serving as host. The booster club also gave away the new Lee Rebel yearbook, which features past history of the Rebels.

Mercurio also said that plans are being made to charter a bus or two for the trip to El Paso, Sept. 17, when the Rebels travel to meet El Paso Eastwood. Those wishing to make that trip should contact Mercurio. The final price has not been set, but Mercurio thought it would be $19 or $20 per person. The bus would leave on that Friday and return following the game.

The Coronado game is the only non-district game of the year at home for the Rebels. They will face Monahans on the road, Sept. 10, before meeting Eastwood. District 4-5A play will begin Sept. 24 when the Rebels host Odessa High at Memorial Stadium.

Tickets for the Coronado game went on sale today at the athletic office at Memorial Stadium and will remain on sale through noon Friday. Tickets are $4 for adults and student tickets may be purchased at the schools.

Dodgers slow Midland, but who cares?

SAN ANTONIO — For the first time since the series began, the Midland Cubs have lost a game to San Antonio, but they made the Dodgers work overtime to do it. And who cares anyway since it is that time of the season when wins and losses mean nothing?

The Cubs have already clinched the second half title and are just waiting until Friday when they travel to El Paso for the Western Division playoff.

With two outs in the bottom of the 10th inning, Todd Gauntlett singled between third and shortstop to drive in R.J. Raynolds from second to give San Antonio the 7-6 victory.

Frank Dente, who pitched 4⅔ innings of relief for starter Jim Nobles, picked up his first victory of the season against one loss while Midland's Tim Millner fell to 2-3 with the decision, also as a reliever.

The loss was the first one Midland had sustained against the Dodgers in the series after four victories and it ended the Cubs winning streak at six games and gives them a 16-3 record since their nine-game winning streak during the last home stand at Cubs Stadium.

Tonight the Dodgers will conclude Texas League play for the season against Midland while the Cubs will begin playoff action against El Paso Friday to determine the Western Division champion.

Cubs manager Brian Murphy announced Tuesday that Doug Welenc will be on the mound Friday in the playoff opener against the Diablos. Jon Perlman, who started Tuesday night against the Dodgers, is scheduled to pitch the first game Saturday. Texas League officials have decided that the second and third game, if needed, will be played Saturday in El Paso. The first game will be nine innings, but if the third game is needed, it will be only a seven inning game, much to the chagrin of Murphy, who doesn't like the idea.

In other Texas League action, Tulsa edged Jackson, 3-2, and Amarillo slipped past El Paso, 6-4. Arkansas' scheduled game at Shreveport was postponed by rain and will be made up as a doubleheader as part of tonight's regular season windup.

Doug Lulay and Mark Gillaspie each slugged solo homers as the Amarillo Gold Sox slipped past the El Paso Diablos, 6-4.

The winning pitcher was James Overbruner, 1-1. The loser was Derek Tatsumo, 2-2.

Tommy Dunbar's solo homer in the ninth inning powered the Tulsa Drillers to a 3-2 victory over the Jackson Mets.

Jackson grabbed a 2-0 lead in the first innning when Jim Woodward scored from third on a wild pitch and John Gibbons singled home Bill Rittweger.

Tulsa bounced back with two runs in the fifth inning when Steve Buechele's sacrifice fly scored Dan Murphy and Shake Moore singled home Tracy Cowger.

Tom Henke, 3-6, was the winning pitcher. John Violette, 2-6, was the loser.

Mascarin upends Billie Jean

NEW YORK (AP) — Before 18-year-old Susan Mascarin took the court for her first-round match against Billie Jean King in the U.S. Open tennis championships, she got a little advice from her coach, Owen Davidson.

"He said not to look at her," said Mascarin. "She's very intimidating. I think she can outstare me."

So Mascarin tried hard not to think about King, a tennis legend who won her first U.S. Open crown, a doubles title, in 1964, the year Susan was born. It was not an easy task.

"When she's serving, it's kind of hard not to look at her. I tried to look at the ball, but she got in the way."

Still the teen-ager from Grosse Pointe Shores, Mich. overcame the center court jitters and the 12th-seeded King's stare for an impressive 6-3, 6-2 victory and the first upset of the 101st U.S. Open tournmaent.

Other first day winners included No.11 seed Mats Wilander of Sweden, another precocious 18-year-old, who defeated Bill Scanlon 6-4, 6-3, 6-1; third-seeded Ivan Lendl of Czechoslovakia, who beat Ramesh Krishnan of India 6-4, 7-6, 6-1; and No.4 seed Guillermo Vilas of Argentina, who outlasted Chris Dunk 6-7, 6-3, 6-4, 6-2.

In women's play, Chris Evert Lloyd, seeded No.2, got started with an easy 6-1, 6-0 victory over Pilar Vasquez.

Martina Navratilova and John McEnroe, the tournament's top seeds, both swing into action tonight. Navratilova faces Laura DuPont and McEnroe goes against Tim Gullickson in center court matches.

King started fast against Mascarin, winning the first three games. "I was shaking, really nervous about playing Billie Jean," the youngster said.

But King was having problems with her volley.

"It was one of those days," said King. "I'd get in position to do something with my volley and there would be no volley. Susie knew my volleys weren't doing well. I only won one 30-all point all day and I didn't win the game."

King, playing singles in the Open for the first time since 1978, dropped seven consecutive games before evening the second set at 1-1. But Mascarin kept the pressure on and pulled in front. Still, the presence of King, who has won this tournament four times, on the other side of the net remained a problem for the youngster.

"Even at 5-2, I wasn't sure I was going to win," she said. But Mascarin finished King off in the next game.

Evert Lloyd won the first five games against Vasquez before dropping one and was in total control of her match.

"Winning here is important for me because I've been disappointed in my year," she said. "I don't think in terms of winning a sixth Open. I think in terms of this year. Winning here would make it a good year for me."

Earlier, Lendl and Wilander both scored straight set victories although both struggled at times.

Lendl beat Krishnan 6-4 in the first set but then needed a tie-breaker to take the second 7-6. He completed the sweep by winning the last set 6-1.

"I was nervous in the beginning," the Czech star said. "I was mis-hitting and I couldn't serve well. The wind was taking the ball."

The turning point came when Krishnan double-faulted on the final point of the second-set tie-breaker.

"His serve is flat and he was serving deep," said Lendl. "With the wind, it is difficult to keep it in those lines."

Wilander, surprise winner of the French Open, also had his problems in his first match at the National Tennis Center.

"In practice, I thought it would be difficlt to play here because it was very windy," he said. "In the beginning, I was nervous."

But Scanlon was unable to seize any kind of advantage and Wilander recovered from an early 4-2 deficit in the first set. "I was lucky because he didn't serve well and didn't play well in his own service games," the young Swede said.

Vilas dropped the first set against Dunk in a tie-breaker, but battled back to win the next three and advance to the second round.

Mavericks waive LaGarde for youth

DALLAS (AP) — The Dallas Mavericks have put veteran forward Tom LaGarde on waivers.

Norm Sonju, general manager of the National Basketball Association team, said Tuesday the move was made so the Mavericks could concentrate on younger players.

LaGarde, 27, is one of the original Mavericks, acquired in the dispersal draft from Seattle in 1980. He started all 82 games in the team's first season, averaging 13.7 points and 8.1 rebounds.

Last season, he averaged 6.6 points and 4.5 rebounds in 47 games.

Can Don Shula continue to work wonders with Dolphins

MIAMI (AP) — Can Don Shula continue to work wonders with a young, "no-name" team? Or will the experience of quarterbacks Richard Todd or Joe Ferguson get their clubs to the top of the AFC East?

Despite the rapid demise of one-time division powers New England and Baltimore in 1981, the three-team battle for divisional honors among the Miami Dolphins, New York Jets and Buffalo Bills proved the division was still the most balanced — and probably hardest to predict — in the National Football League.

The race, in fact, was the NFL's tightest, and some experts are predicting the same for 1982. New England and Baltimore, meanwhile, will be launching rebuilding projects under new coaches.

Shula, with a reputation for getting the maximum out of his teams, did one of his finest jobs last year, leading a supposedly rebuilding Dolphin team to an 11-4-1 finish and their second division crown in three years.

He did it with a relatively inexperienced team averaging just over 25 years of age, without a clear-cut starting quarterback and without a big-name star.

The Jets, meanwhile, soared as Todd tossed 25 touchdown passes and cut his interceptions from 30 to 13 and the "New York Sack Exchange," led by All-Pro defensive ends Joe Klecko and Mark Gastineau, terrorized opposing quarterbacks.

The Jets dominated their divisional foes, but a late-season loss to Seattle tossed Walt Michaels' club out of the driver's seat for the AFC East crown. They settled for their first playoff appearance in 12 years.

Ferguson enjoyed one of his most successful seasons and the Bills put together four straight victories to head into the regular season finale against Miami with the divisional title on the line. The Dolphins won 16-6 in the Orange Bowl, where Buffalo hasn't won since 1966 and must close the 1982 season.

While the Dolphins and Bills battled for the crown, the Patriots and Colts, co-owners of the worst record in the NFL at 2-14, met in what was dubbed the "Stupor Bowlm," the loser receiving the top pick in the college draft.

Baltimore, which began the season with a one-point victory over New England, came away with a two-point triumph over the Pats and the No. 2 pick.

Ron Meyer, who built Southern Methodist into a national power in recent years, has replaced Ron Erhardt at New England, bringing six assistants from SMU along with him.

His first move was to try to shore up a defense that allowed an NFL-leading 2,950 yards rushing by making Texas defensive end Kenneth Sims the top selection in the draft, then grabbing Lester Williams, a huge defensive tackle from Miami, Fla., later in the first rgund.

Baltimore fired Mike McCormack and hired Frank Kush. The club then traded veteran quarterback Bert Jones to the Los Angeles Rams and, armed with two first-round draft choices, went for Mississippi State linebacker Johnie Cooks and Ohio State quarterback Art Schlichter.

Neither third-year pro David Woodley nor veteran backup Don Strock was able to claim the Dolphins' No. 1 quarterback job during Miami's drive to the division title.

Strock, Bob Griese's understudy for seven years, relieved Woodley four times during the regular season and also came off the bench to engineer a dramatic comeback that fell short — 41-38 in overtime — against San Diego in the playoffs.

Shula has said the decision might be easier if the quarterbacks utilized similar styles. Woodley is a scrambler whose running ability must be considered by a defense, while Strock, who completed 60 percent of his passes a year ago, is a dropback passer who reads coverages well.

Miami's already-solid offensive line has been bolstered by No. 1 draft choice Roy Foster of Southern California. The defense, meanwhile, is anchored by All-Pro nose tackle Bob Baumhower and a solid corps of linebackers.

The secondary, a weak link during a mid-season slump a year ago, has been hit hard by injuries and Shula is counting on cornerbacks Don McNeal and Gerald Small to return to form.

The ground attack is led by Tony Nathan, who led NFL runners with a 5.3 yards per carry average, and second-year fullback Andra Franklin.

The Jets are looking for another big season from Todd and would like to see second-year running back Freeman McNeil stayed healthy. McNeil ran for 623 yards in 1981, despite missing five games and parts of three others.

Todd's primary receivers will be wide receivers Wesley Walker and Johnny "Lam" Jones and tight end Jerome Barkum.

Defensively, Klecko and Gastineau are the mainstays of a unit that recorded an NFL-record 66 sacks. Klecko led the way with 20½ sacks, while Gastineau recorded 20.

Michaels is hoping rookie linebacker Bob Crable, the team's No. 1 draft choice, will be able to help.

Bear Bryant returns looking 10 years younger

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Sports Writer

Bear Bryant is back from wherever it was he went on vacation in June — perhaps as a reward for his record 315th victory — and he looks 10 years younger. The word is that the Alabama coach, who turns 69 on Sept. 11, had cosmetic surgery to remove some of those famous wrinkles.

"I'm not gonna answer that," he said, "but I feel younger than I did." He was just as evasive about most of his whereabouts.

"I was planning to go to North Africa and Switzerland and Holland and England, but I didn't get to any of 'em," he said. "I just wanted to be alone to do anything I wanted to do when I wanted to do it. I had offers of two different country places with seven bedrooms and seven bathrooms and servants, but I didn't go to either one. I'm not gonna tell you where I went, but I wound up fishing, walking, doing anything I wanted to.

"I FISHED with a cane pole, I slept, I played with puppies and dogs, I drove in the country, I drove in the city. Nobody knew me. I did nothing, really. I tried not to think about football or worry about it.

"I watched my diet, although I stopped in Meridian, Miss., to get a hamburger and Columbus, Miss., for some watermelon. I just hopped in the car and went. I really rested and I lost some weight. I've been on a weight jag for a couple of years and I'm down to 198."

Now it's time for football. "I'm not looking forward to the season because I'm a year older," Bryant said. "But, on the other hand, I am looking forward to it because I'm going to try and enjoy watching the players get better.

"I'm going to try and enjoy the things I've taken for granted. I'm going to try awfully hard to help everyone and not worry about things that don't go well. Worrying doesn't help you anyway, but I've never been able to avoid it."

NEW YORK City is anything but a college football hotbed, but the town had some distinguished visitors this summer.

The Big Eight Conference gave Coaches Barry Switzer of Oklahoma, Jimmy Johnson of Oklahoma State and Don Fambrough of Kansas a chance to visit for a couple of days and meet the media.

The 30-scholarship rule has leveled things off nationally and prevented teams from stockpiling hordes of outstanding athletes, but the feeling among the coaches was that this could be the Big Eight's best year since Nebraska, Oklahoma and Colorado finished an unprecedented — and since unequaled — 1-2-3 in The Associated Press poll back in 1971.

"Nebraska and Oklahoma will still be the Big Two, but the gap is closing," said Fambrough. "Everbody in the conference is competitive. I really feel everybody will be improved. There were fewer Big Eight kids drafted by the NFL last year because there were so few seniors. There are more players to work with than we've ever had. Look at what Nebraska's got returning. You've got to look at them as a contender for the national championship.

"We'll be a little better. The 30-rule has helped us. It's made a few more players available. When the rule was first passed, I was against it, but now I'm convinced it's helped us."

EDDIE CROWDER, Colorado's athletic director, was the head coach 11 years ago when the Buffs finished third in the country. "Oklahoma and Nebraska will again be very good and I think it will be a two-team race again," he said. "I don't see any evidence of a big move by any other team. I see other people in the race soon. I'm not sure this is the year, but I think it's happening.

"This is probably the strongest the conference has been in a while. I don't think it's back to that 1971 level, but it's the closest it's been."

Johnson, an assistant at Oklahoma in 1971, has been the head man at Oklahoma State for three years. "When I first went to Oklahoma State, I didn't think the league was comparable to 1971," he said. "But this year will be the best since I've been at OSU."

JOHNSON MAY have found a quarterback by accident. Adam Hinds passed for more than 1,300 yards as a freshman at Principia College in St. Louis two years ago. The next summer, he was visiting a friend in Stillwater, the son of a former OSU basketball star, and worked out with some of the Cowboy football players.

"They convinced him he could play at this level, so he asked to transfer," Johnson said. "He had to sit out the 1981 season, but he took every snap with the scout team against the first-team defense. He's a heck of a competitor."

Last spring, Hinds completed 27 of 44 passes for 346 yards and three touchdowns.

One reason former SMU coach Ron Meyer's return to Texas was not successful last Saturday night in Texas Stadium was because Dallas Cowboy Harvey Martin (79) was harrassing his quarterbacks. Meyer is in his first season as coach of the New England Patriots and his Pats couldn't beat the Cowboys in this NFL exhibition.

Tom Landry makes worst-kept secret public

DALLAS (AP) — The worst-kept secret in the Dallas Cowboys' pre-season training camp became public Tuesday: Danny White is going to be Coach Tom Landry's punter again.

Punters Tom Striegel of Southern Illinois and David Finzer of DePauw were among 10 rookies placed on waivers Tuesday.

"They were just too inconsistent," Landry said. "It's difficult to find a kicker coming out of college. You almost have to find one like we did our placekicker (Rafael Septien). You have to have experience to kick in the National Football League."

In six years of punting in the NFL, White has kicked the ball 454 times for a 40.3 yard average. Last year, he averaged 40.8.

"White will be our punter, although we may look at some others," Landry said.

Asked if he was afraid White could get hurt, Landry said, "No. If I did, I wouldn't have him kick. The possibility of him getting hurt is slim.

"He has a greater chance getting hurt tying to pass. Of course, if he does get injured, then somebody could always say they told me so," Landry said.

White said he prefers to punt.

"I enjoy doing it," he said. "It's something else I can do to help the team."

Other rookies cut were guards Harris Burnett of Cal-Fullerton, Rich Burtness of Wyoming, and Todd Eckerson of North Carolina State, defensive tackle Joe Gary of UCLA, wide receiver Pete Harvey of North Texas, placekicker Greg Porter of TCU, defensive end Bill Purifoy of Tulsa, and tight end George Thompson of Albany State.

The Cowboys, 2-1 in the preseason, meet the Houston Oilers, also 2-1, Saturday night in the National Football League pre-season finale for both teams.

White will punt in the game and play two or three quarters before giving way to backup Gary Hogeboom.

USFL announces divisions

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States Football League announced Tuesday that its 12-team league will begin its inaugural season in March divided into three, four-team divisions.

League commissioner Chet Simmons announced the divisional breakdown following a two-day owners' meeting in the nation's capital.

The league will consist of an Atlantic division with teams from the New York-New Jersey area, Philadelphia, Washington and Boston; a Central division represented by Birmingham, Chicago, Detroit and Tampa Bay; and a Pacific division with teams from Phoneix, Los Angeles, Denver and the San Fransisco-Oakland area.

Four teams will qualify for the playoffs, including the three divisional champions and a "wild card" team, which will be the fourth team with the best overall record.

GTCC teams fight cancer

The teams of Brian Jones-David Williams and Bill Boehm-David Abbott finished first in their divisions Tuesday in the Walter Hagen Memorial Golf Tournament, an 18-hole, two-man scramble benefit for the American Cancer Society.

Jones-Williams won the A Division with a 60 followed by Jim Chase-Bill Hightower at 61 and David Hurta-Richard Smith at 63.

In B Division, Boehm-Abbott won with 59 while Jim Beech-Sam Snoddy at 61 placed second and Robert Henry-Randy Marain at 63 third.

Nolan Ryan is almost perfect

Mets' Ron Hodges ends Ryan's perfect game bid in eighth

By The Associated Press

Nolan Ryan hit the spot for the Houston Astros.

"I've never seen him more overpowering," said catcher Alan Ashby. "He was right at the corners."

Ryan's picture-perfect performance almost resulted in an unprecedented sixth career no-hitter Tuesday night. He lost it in the eighth on Ron Hodges' clean single to left field and settled for a two-hit, 4-0 victory over the New York Mets.

"The ball Hodges hit was on the black (of the plate)," said Ashby. "He knew it, and he hit it the only way he could."

"Nolan's ability doesn't surprise me," Ashby continued. "What surprises me is that a human being has that much ability."

Ryan, 14-9, walked three and struck out nine to run his season strikeout total to an even 200, the ninth season he has reached that plateau.

Hodges' hit admittedly dismayed Ryan, but not enough to shake him completely.

"There was no letdown after the hit," he said. "You have to keep it all in perspective."

Almost lost in Ryan's fine performance was the Mets' growing losing streak, which reached 15. The streak is the longest in the majors this year and the Mets' longest since they lost 15 straight in 1963.

The Astros scored a run against Ed Lynch, 2-6, in the first inning when Dickie Thon led off with a double, was balked to third and came home on Tony Scott's grounder. Houston added two runs in the seventh on RBI hits by Ashby and Danny Heep, and scored its final run in the ninth off reliever Charlie Puleo on Scott's RBI single.

Braves 3, Phillies 0

Tommy Boggs, pitching for the first time since injuring his shoulder April 20, threw six shutout innings as Atlanta beat Philadelphia.

Boggs, 2-0, who suffered a slight tear in his shoulder in the spring, allowed three hits, struck out two and walked two. Reliever Gene Garber completed the shutout to earn his 26th save.

The Braves took a 1-0 lead in the fourth inning without benefit of a hit against loser Ed Farmer, 2-5, then went up 2-0 in the sixth on an RBI single by Bob Horner and 3-0 in the eighth on an RBI single by Dale Murphy.

Dodgers 4, Cardinals 1

Burt Hooton earned his first victory in more than four months, hurling Los Angeles over St. Louis. Hooton, 2-5, who has been on the disabled list twice this season, pitched into the eighth inning before Steve Howe picked him up, preserving the triumph with his 12th save.

Hooton, scattered seven hits while walking one and striking out two, in his fifth start since knee surgery on June 21. His only previous victory this season was a one-hit, 4-0 shutout over Philadelphia April 29.

The Dodgers got all the runs they needed by scoring three times off Steve Mura, 11-9, in the first. Ken Landreaux singled home one run, Ron Cey hit a sacrifice fly and Steve Garvey capped the rally with a run-scoring base hit.

Pirates 7, Padres 1

Jason Thompson drove in three runs with a pair of homers, and Manny Sarmiento scattered nine hits to lead Pittsburgh over San Diego.

Mike Easler added a two-run homer as the Pirates roughed up San Diego starter John Montefusco, 9-9, for six runs in the first five innings.

Sarmiento, 6-3, walked two and struck out five in his third complete game of the season.

Reds 2, Expos 1

Paul Householder singled home the tie-breaking run in the 14th inning to pace Cincinnati over Montreal.

Dan Driessen's single led off the 14th against Ray Burris, 4-14, the fifth Montreal pitcher. Cesar Cedeno moved Driessen to second with a sacrifice bunt and Rafael Landestoy was intentionally walked. But Householder foiled the strategy by lining a single to right.

Charlie Leibrandt, 4-7, the fifth Reds' pitcher, worked the final two innings.

Montreal first baseman Al Oliver found the loss hard to take.

"It was probably the most frustrating one this year," he said. "We had so many chances to win the game earlier and we couldn't come through with the key hit. Any loss at this stage is depressing. It's part of life, but sometimes it's hard to accept."

Giants 4, Cubs 3

Joe Morgan and Jack Clark drove in runs in the seventh inning as San Francisco came from behind to beat Chicago.

Chicago starter Randy Martz allowed only three hits, including a two-run homer by Reggie Smith in the third, through six innings. But then the Giants erupted in the seventh on a run-scoring grounder by Morgan and RBI single by Clark.

Winner Al Holland, 4-3, pitched the seventh in relief of Fred Breining, who struck out 11 Chicago batters but also allowed nine hits in six innings.

Tech's Smith is ineligible

LUBBOCK, Texas (AP) - Freshman running back Timmy Smith of Hobbs, New Mexico, is ineligible to play for the Texas Tech Red Raiders this year, it was announced Tuesday.

"He is in school and working toward becoming eligible," Tech Coach Jerry Moore said.

The 6-1, 190-pound Smith was named to two All-American teams and was New Mexico Player of the Year.

Browns' boss takes strike talk by players in stride

BEREA, Ohio (AP) — Cleveland Browns owner Art Modell and Coach Sam Rutigliano are not paying much attention to a revelation by Browns player representative Doug Dieken that some players wanted to call their own strike.

Some of the Browns, angered by stalled contract talks between the players' union and team owners, considered striking in the second half of Cleveland's game Saturday night against the New Orleans Saints, Dieken said.

"After they saw the offer the owners made, a large number of guys came up to me during the week and talked about not playing the second half of the New Orleans game," Dieken said. "They were really insulted by the offer. They were totally upset."

Dieken said he met with the players and convinced them that a limited strike was not in the best interests of the union.

"I told the guys I think it's better to do things on a league-wide basis rather than hit-miss by individual teams. Basically, I told them I didn't think it was a very good idea at the time," Dieken said.

"They must have been joshing," Modell said in reacting to the strike talk.

Rutigliano said, "I find it very hard to believe, and I would be very disappointed if they had even considered walking off the field before the game was over."

The Browns and the Saints met at midfield before Saturday's kickoff and shook hands in a show of solidarity for the National Football League Players Association. The players are seeking a percentage of the owners' earnings.

Ruidoso races bring cash

RUIDOSO (AP) — Economically speaking, Terri McDaniel's family has a pretty solid piece of the rock — her husband is a plumber in a community where that profession is becoming as popular as the daily horse racing form.

The McDaniel family lives in Ruidoso, easily the most prosperous little town in New Mexico from mid-May through Labor Day, when the quarter horses and thoroughbreds race at Ruidoso Downs.

Horse racing is big business in New Mexico, and nowhere is that more evident than in the community nestled amidst the pine trees and canyons of the surrounding Sacramento Mountains.

SOME OF the biggest money races in the world are run each summer at Ruidoso Downs, and it is the drama of watching quarter horses run for a million dollars that lures thousands of racing fans — most of them Texans — to Ruidoso.

That's where the McDaniels come in.

Terri McDaniels manages a dozen of the hundreds of cabins that along with the motels in town are booked solid every weekend of the summer. Her husband Danny works for one of the town's plumbing firms, much of whose business these days comes from the hundreds of condominiums under construction in the area.

"You can drive out five, 10 miles in any direction from Ruidoso and it's stack full of condominiums," said Terri McDaniel. "My husband's company has bids for work for the next five years on condominiums and townhouses."

ALTHOUGH RUIDOSO is situated near one of the state's more popular skiing areas, Sierra Blanca, there is no question that it is the horse races that keep the area's economy in the black.

"It is a totally summer thing here," Terri McDaniel said. "In the winter some of the businesses close up until the following May."

Although it is difficult to pinpoint total economic impact on New Mexico, Racing Commission Chairman Raymond Eaves says the industry pumps anywhere from $80 million to $100 million a year into the state's economy.

"A racing dollar probably turns over 15 times before it leaves the community," said Eaves.

At Ruidoso Downs and Sunland Park near El Paso, Texas, employee payrolls run close to $1.8 million each. Santa Fe Downs General Manager Pete Drypolcher says that track employs up to 850 workers during a summer, with the payroll right at $1 million. La Mesa Park's figures are 250-275 employees and a payroll of about $400,000.

Those figures don't reflect the hundrreds of grooms, jockeys and stable hands employed by individual trainers and horsemen at the five tracks.

THE STATE'S coffers also have fared handsomely from the racing industry.

In 1980, total revenues to the state amounted to $3,385,129. That included more than $2.9 million from the tax collected by the state for pari-mutuel wagering.

The state's share of revenues dropped to $2.2 million in 1981, the result of a Legislature-approved plan to allow the tracks to keep part of the funds to pay for capital improvement projects as well as all of the uncollected winnings that previously had reverted to the state.

The racetracks in 1981 shared in more than $1.1 million to expand or improve their facilities.

Since the tracks retained the uncollected winnings, last year they were not required to report the amount of winning tickets that went unclaimed. But in 1980, the last year in which the unclaimed money was absorbed by the state, the total was $176,483.40.

Ruidoso Downs, which benefits from Texas' ban of pari-mutuel racing, again led the way in 1981 with a total handle of $40,080,694. That worked out to a daily average of $120.24 for each bettor at the track.

Sunland Park, with the longest season, was next with a total handle of $24,776,225, followed by the Downs at Santa Fe with $24,623,666. The New Mexico State Fair, despite having only a 17-day racing program, hit a record $15,294,937 in 1981 while La Mesa Park enjoyed the most successful year in its history with a total handle of $12,379,735.

MUCH OF the success can be attributed to the fact the five racetracks draw from different clientele. While Ruidoso Downs thrives on the bettors from West Texas and as far east as Dallas, La Mesa Park draws fans from the Texas Panhandle, Oklahoma, southern Colorado and western Kansas.

Sunland Park draws mostly from southern New Mexico and El Paso, since it is situated just outside the Texas border city. The Downs at Santa Fe gets most of its bettors from Albuquerque and the summer tourist visitors to the capital city.

The figures may vary, but the annual impact on each of the cities where a racetrack is located is the same — the 20 motels and 26 restaurants in Raton are just as full as those in Ruidoso.

Angels close in on Royals

Angels route Tigers as Hough three-hits Kansas City

By The Associated Press

While Reggie Jackson, Don Baylor, Rod Carew and Fred Lynn get most of the attention on the California Angels, Brian Downing has quietly shucked his catcher's tools and done the job in left field.

Downing, who spent most of his career as a catcher before moving to the outfield this season, was 4-for-5 and drove in five runs with a grand slam homer and a solo shot as the Angels bombed the Detroit Tigers 11-0 Tuesday night.

"I'm comfortable in left field now," says Downing, who is hitting .285 with 22 homers. "That's made all the difference in the world. When I went to spring training this year, I knew Bob Boone was the catcher. Look in my locker; I don't even have a catcher's mitt any more."

California's victory, combined with Texas' 6-0 triumph over Kansas City, cut the Royals' lead in the American League West to 1½ games over the Angels.

"This is a good team," Downing said. "We've got a lot of offensive weapons. If we get down, we know we have the ability to come back."

Left-hander Geoff Zahn, enjoying his best season with a 15-6 record, credited his team's offense with much of his success.

"It's taken me my whole career to find a team that knows how many I need," said Zahn said, who pitched an eight-hitter.

"It's very rewarding to win 15 games," Zahn said. "The significance, however, is the fact that this club is in a pennant race and it's important for me to pitch well."

Leading 2-0 until the fifth inning, the Angels scored seven runs to put the game away.

Jackson, who had three hits and three RBI, led off by belting his 32nd home run. Detroit starter Jack Morris, 14-14, then walked Lynn, gave up a double to Doug DeCinces and walked Baylor to load the bases.

The rest of the inning was a nightmare for Detroit.

Larry Pashnick relieved Morris and uncorked a wild pitch, scoring Lynn. He then walked Grich to reload the bases and threw another wild pitch one out later, scoring DeCinces. Boone walked to load the bases again, setting up Downing's second career grand slam. Downing's second homer made it 11-0 in the ninth.

Orioles 1, Blue Jays 0

Jim Palmer won his 10th straight game and the 260th of his career, blanking Toronto on four hits for his first shutout in four years.

Palmer, who hasn't lost since May 30, now has 52 shutouts in his career. He got all the support he needed when Eddie Murray hit a sacrifice fly in the first inning.

Rangers 6, Royals 0

Texas ended Kansas City's seven-game winning streak and helped California's cause as Charlie Hough tossed a three-hitter.

Hough improved his record to 12-11 with his second shutout and third triumph against the Royals this year.

The Rangers put the game away with four runs in the second inning off loser Bud Black, 4-5. Lamar Johnson and George Wright both had run-scoring singles, Jim Sundberg had an RBI double and Mike Richardt hit a sacrifice fly.

Brewers 8, Mariners 2

Ted Simmons, Don Money and Charlie Moore drove in two runs apiece as East-leading Milwaukee manhandled Seattle.

Mike Caldwell, 13-11, allowed eight hits in seven innings to pick up his sixth victory in his last seven decisions.

Simmons had RBI singles in the first and third innings, Money hit a two-run homer in the seventh and Moore climaxed the Brewers' four-run third with a two-run single.

Red Sox 4, A's 0

Chuck Rainey pitched a five-hitter and was backed by Dwight Evans' two-run homer as Boston stayed 4½ games behind Milwaukee by defeating Oakland.

Evans hit his 26th homer of the season to highlight a three-run sixth inning for the Red Sox.

Rainey, 7-4, struck out four and walked two to outduel A's starter Preston Hanna, 0-2, who gave up only six hits and two earned runs.

Yankees 3, Twins 1

Graig Nettles and Ken Griffey accounted for New York's runs with homers to help left-hander Ron Guidry earn his 100th career victory.

Guidry, 13-5, struck out eight and walked four while scattering nine hits. He was aided by three double plays.

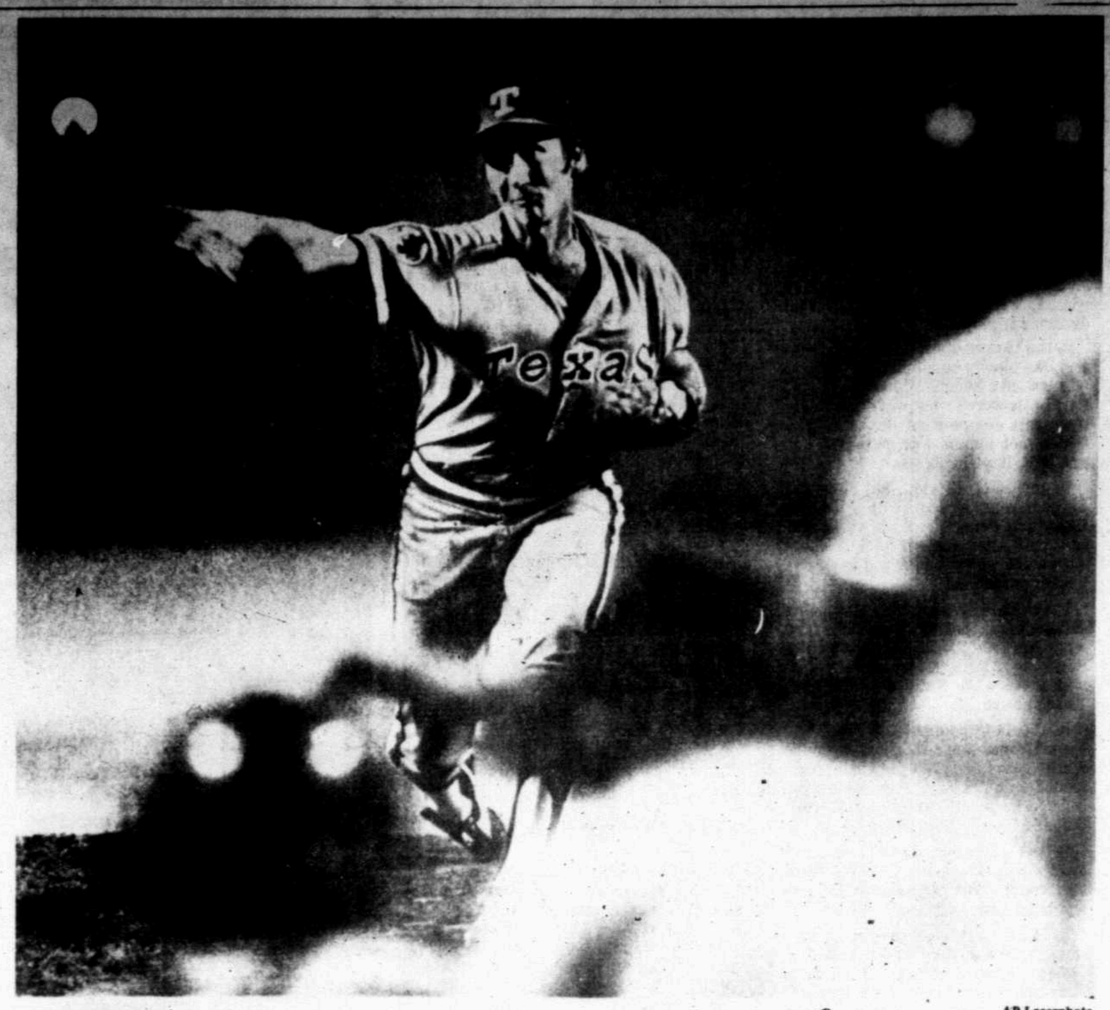

Griffey gave the Yankees a 1-0 lead in the sixth with his 10th homer, but Kent Hrbek tied the score with a single for Minnesota in the bottom of the sixth. Nettles broke the deadlock with a two-run homer in the ninth.

White Sox 14, Indians 6

Chicago broke an 5-5 tie with eight runs in the sixth inning against Cleveland, which committed three errors during the rally en route to its sixth straight defeat.

Harold Baines' double made it 6-5, but the Indians were their own worst enemy the rest of the inning.

Two walks forced in another run before Alan Bannister committed a double error on a ground ball by Carlton Fisk, with two runs scoring. Larry Milbourne's wild throw on Vance Law's grounder let in two more and Aurelio Rodriguez singled in the final two runs.

BYU is top choice in WAC

DENVER (AP) — Six-time defending champion Brigham Young University is the overwhelming choice to make it seven straight Western Athletic Conference football titles this fall, according to a poll of sportswriters and broadcasters at the conclusion of the WAC Skywriter's Tour Tuesday.

The media gave BYU 23 first-place votes. Wyoming had the remaining five first-place nods and finished second in the poll.

Based on a voting system giving one point for a first-place vote, two for a second, etc., BYU garnered 31 points and Wyoming had 60.

Hawaii was rated third, with 83 points, followed by New Mexico with 114 and San Diego State with 130. Air Force was picked sixth with 169 points, Utah seventh with 173, Colorado State eighth with 214 and Texas-El Paso last with 239.

The media predicted that BYU quarterback Steve Young would be the outstanding offensive player this season. Young is filling the shoes of record-setting passer Jim McMahon, who graduated.

Other players receiving votes for outstanding offensive player were Air Force quarterback Marty Louthan, Wyoming fullback Walter Goffigan.

Tommy John elated to be in California

DETROIT (AP) — Tommy John, unhappy in New York, is pleased to be joining the California Angels and they're extremely pleased to have him.

"I can't wait to get there," the left-handed pitcher said Tuesday night after learning he'd been dealt by the New York Yankees to the Angels.

"I'm joining a great bunch of guys and I like the idea of contributing to a pennant race," John, in Minneapolis with the Yankees, said before leaving to join the Angels in Detroit.

One of his new teammates and another former Yankee, Reggie Jackson, said he looks forward to playing with John, who spent three full seasons in New York after leaving the Los Angeles Dodgers in 1978.

"I think Tommy John will give our whole ball club a lift," Jackson said. "He's a great competitor who has proven that he can do the job down the stretch."

Angels Manager Gene Mauch said: "All I can say is if Tommy John gets seven starts, we've got seven chances to win. I'm not saying he'll win every game, but he hardly ever beats himself.

"We've wanted Tommy John for four or five weeks. If he's ready, he'll pitch the first game in Milwaukee (Friday night)."

The 39-year-old John joined the Angels in Detroit late Tuesday night. With a 10-10 record this season and a 3.66 earned run average in 30 appearances, his lifetime record is 233-169. A three-time winner of 20 games, he is the winningest pitcher in the American League over the past three years with a 52-36 mark.

The Angels, who also purchased veteran left-hander John Curtis from the San Diego Padres earlier Tuesday, gave up three minor league players, to be named later, to the Yankees.

John played seven seasons with the Dodgers prior to signing as a free agent with the Yankees. He also pitched for the Cleveland Indians in 1963 and 1964 and for the Chicago White Sox from 1965 to 1971.

John had asked to be traded a month ago, having grown unhappy with the defending AL champion Yankees, who are floundering in the AL East this season.

"I knew it would come down to the last day," John said. "It's like playing poker. Everybody makes their bids. Yesterday all the cards were dealt and it came down to today."

He said he hoped he would be favorably remembered by the New York fans.

NFL's waiver wire spits out list of household grid names

By The Associated Press

The closer it gets to the National League Football regular season, the more familiar the names on the waiver wire become.

L.C. Greenwood, the last remaining member of Pittsburgh's "Steel Curtain" defensive line, was released by the Steelers on Tuesday, the day teams had to trim their rosters to 60 players.

Terdell Middleton, a 1,000-yard rusher for Green Bay in 1978, was waived by the Packers.

And place-kicker Benny Ricardo, the New Orleans player representative who once made an NFL-record 29 straight field goal attempts from inside 40 yards, was cut by the Saints.

Among those also waived Tuesday were linebacker Ed Simonini, a six-year player with Baltimore; defensive back Ricky Churchman, a San Francisco starter in 1980 who has been plagued by injuries; and veteran defensive end John Banaszak, released by the Steelers.

Teams have to be down to 49 players by next Monday.

"I didn't say anything when I came in, and I'm not going to say anything when I go out," said Greenwood, a week shy of his 36th birthday. He was the oldest Steeler and the only one left from the first Pittsburgh team Chuck Noll coached in 1969.

The 6-foot-6½, 250-pound Greenwood played in six Pro Bowls but saw only limited action in Pittsburgh's three exhibition games this year.

"It's tough. It's not easy," Noll said after Greenwood was released. "We felt we had young people playing well and had to do it."

Banaszak, a seven-year veteran, started 12 games last year. He played in the 1975, 1979 and 1980 Super Bowls.

"My services were no longer needed," Banaszak said. "It certainly wasn't an easy decision on Chuck's part."

In Green Bay, Middleton gained 1,116 yards for the Packers in 1978, his second season in the NFL. Since then, however, his production has dropped and he gained only 181 yards last year.

New Orleans decided to keep fourth-round draft choice Morten Andersen — who made three of six field goal attempts in the preseason — rather than Ricardo, who made two of two. But Ricardo said being the team's player representative sealed his fate.

"I think all of that added up, and I was just not a welcome sight around there," Ricardo said.

Last year was Ricardo's worst in the NFL, as he made only 13 of 26 field goal attempts. When he previously played for Detroit, however, he made 29 in a row from inside 40 yards.

"It didn't matter if Morten Andersen had been 0-50 and I was 50-50. It wouldn't have mattered at all."

Jack Kramer takes blast at pro game of tennis

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent

The first big power in professional tennis and the man who long ago should have been made the commissioner grieves for the game to which he has devoted most of his adult life.

"It has gone berserk — it is out of control," says Jack Kramer, "Big Jake," Davis Cup star at 18, former U.S. and Wimbledon champion, successful pro promoter, founder and first president of the Professional Tennis Players Association.

"The top players don't want to be told anything. People can come in and do whatever they please. There is no central control. If a guy flouts a rule and is suspended or fined by the so-called establishment, all he has to do is go to some place like Oklahoma City or Del Ray Beach and play an exhibition for $50,000.

"He doesn't lose anything. While personally he is prospering more perhaps than athletes in any other sport, the game itself is suffering as a whole. And I am not sure how long promoters and sponsors will continue throwing out so much money while being treated with such arrogance and disdain."

Kramer, a boyish-looking 61, said it is a shame that men's tennis hasn't accepted an organization such as women's tennis, men's and women's golf.

"The girls are all on the same team," he said. "They agree. They cooperate. They set out on a course of action. They are far-more stable than the men. Both men's and women's golf have strong controlling bodies which fix legitimate schedules and rules to which all competitors adhere.

"Can you imagine Jack Nicklaus and Tom Watson playing an exhibition in Kalamazoo while the Masters is going on in Augusta? No, simply because they have a feeling for traditions of the game."

Kramer, although still a promoter of a $175,000 tournament in Southern California and a strong voice in international tennis councils, has turned his efforts to promoting tennis at the grass roots level.

He is active in the National Junior Tennis Council and is in the New York area not only for the U.S. Open at Flushing Meadow but to attend the Future Champions Tournament this week at Port Washington, N.Y., sponsored by Congoleum and directed by Arthur Ashe, the U.S. Davis Cup captain.

The event is for kids who have never played in a tournament. The winner receives the Arthur Ashe Cup.

Outwardly, men's pro tennis appears to be prospering but inwardly it is ripped by a power struggle between the Grand Prix, backed by the national associations with a yearly prize cache of $18 million, and Lamar Hunt's $7 million World Championship Tennis (WCT) tour, which often go head to head.

Two powerful management groups — Mark McCormack's, International Management Group and Donald Dell's Pro-Serve — control most of the top-ranking players. They keep their charges playing big money exhibitions around the world.

There is no uniformity to tournaments outside the major events, such as the French, Wimbledon and U.S. Open. Even then, top players frequently spurn these classics.

Magazine says cheating on rise

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — There is more cheating today than ever before, especially in college basketball and football, because the "rewards for a winner are staggering," says the University of Texas alumni magazine.

Seventeen major colleges are on National College Athletic Association probation, an all-time record, and another 35 are under investigation, said the Alcalde, a magazine for UT ex-students with 40,000 circulation.

ROBERT HEARD, an Austin free-lancer who wrote the article, sought a list of past violators that the NCAA has compiled, but the NCAA refused to release the names on the ground that once a school has served its probation and presumably cleaned up its program further publicity is undesirable.

"But if only the NCAA leadership and a few NCAA committees are allowed to see the big picture, the public cannot know how bad it is," Heard's article states.

Heard's research showed at least 114 major schools have been penalized by the NCAA at least 171 times in the 30 years since its membership gave the NCAA authority to punish violators.

"There are not penitentiaries we're talking about," the article says. "Nor even competing business enterprises. These are institutions of higher education. They should be expected to cheat about as often as churches."

Twenty-nine schools have been caught more than once, led by Southern Methodist with five probations, the article states, and adds:

"Miami (Fla.) and Wichita State each have four. These schools have been on probation three times: Arizona State, California, Florida State, Indiana, Kansas, Michigan State, Mississippi State, North Carolina State, Oklahoma, UCLA and USC (Southern California).

"These schools have been on probation twice: Auburn, Bradley, Cincinnati, Colorado, Houston, Illinois, Kentucky, Montana State, Pan American, St. Louis, San Francisco, Southwestern Louisiana, Tulsa, West Texas State and Wisconsin."

THE ARTICLE says the NCAA "has been accused of having 'Catch 22' regulations where protecting a student's rights are concerned, of presuming guilt, of being 'prosecutor, jury, and judge,' of "having its fingers on the scale of justice,' and of having enforcement procedures 'resembling a Rube Goldberg contraption gone mad.'"

UT law professor Charles Alan Wright, chairman of the NCAA Infractions Committee for the past five years, defends the NCAA staff.

AFC Central shoots at Bengals

CINCINNATI (AP) — The "Steel Curtain" is gone from Pittsburgh, the "Snake" is gone from Houston, and a lot of the green is gone from Art Modell's wallet in Cleveland.

While the defending American Conference champion Cincinnati Bengals are content to glide essentially unchanged into the 1982 season, their Central Division opponents are making major modifications to try to overtake one of the surprising teams of 1981.

The Bengals churned through the rest of the conference last season, compiling a 12-4 regular season mark on the way to their first Super Bowl. The rest of the AFC Central Division faltered, with second-place Pittsburgh finishing just 8-8, and the Bengals believe they have the potential to become the next National Football League dynasty.

"I think this will be the Steelers team of the future," All-Pro second-year wide receiver Cris Collinsworth said. "I think we've got that kind of potential."

CINCINNATI had one of its quietest training camps this year. After two years under Coach Forrest Gregg, the players know the offensive and defensive systems. Cincinnati looked for backup help in the 1982 college draft, and will return essentially the same starters from a team that lost to San Francisco in the Super Bowl.

"We are going to have to make some adjustments. But there will be no dramatic changes," tight end Dan Ross said of the offense.

The Bengals' offense relies on the short, accurate passes of Ken Anderson, who won Most Valuable Player honors by throwing for 3,754 yards and 29 touchdowns with only 10 interceptions last season. Ross set a club record with 71 passes, and Collinsworth broke the team mark with 1,009 yards receiving in his rookie season.

Wide receiver David Verser, the Bengals' No. 1 pick in 1981 ahead of Collinsworth, has shown signs of finally adjusting to the offensive system, giving Cincinnati an enviable stable of swift receivers. But Ross thinks the key to another Super Bowl season is Anderson's arm.

"Ken can have another tremendous year," Ross said. "He was probably the whole deal behind our offense. If he has another season like he did last year, we should end up where we were."

The four-time Super Bowl champion Steelers have made dramatic changes to try to avoid another year like last year. Head Coach Chuck Noll has switched from the four-man "Steel Curtain" defensive line to a 3-4 alignment, and has tailored the offense more toward the short pass.

Greg Hawthorne looks to team with Franco Harris in the Steeler backfield and catch plenty of short tosses from Terry Bradshaw. The veteran quarterback will direct an offense that relies more on shorter routes by receivers and passes to the running backs.

"We have better overall team speed now, which was one of our goals," Noll said, referring to another anticipated improvement. "The team that has speed and knows how to use it has the edge. It's a game of mobility."

A lot of the familiar names are missing from the Pittsburgh roster. Five players have retired since last season, including Joe Greene, Jon Kolb, Sam Davis, Dwight White and Randy Grossman.

Picked by some observers to go to Super Bowl XVI, the Browns collapsed from their 11-5 record of 1981 to just 5-11 last year. The "Kardiac Kids" who won games with last-second heriocs in '81 weren't able to deliver when it counted last year. Six times they failed to convert last-minute chances that could have won games.

"It wasn't a matter of being blown out," Coach Sam Rutigliano said. "It was a matter of not taking advantage of opportunities."

THE BROWNS got rid of veteran running back Greg Pruitt, defensive end Lyle Alzado and linebacker Robert L. Jackson. Second-year running back Charles White will be given a chance to team with Mike Pruitt.

Former MVP quarterback Brian Sipe had to work with an injured receiving corps and offensive line last season, when he threw for 3,876 yards but was intercepted 25 times.

Modell, the Browns' owner, made a stunning bid to shore up the sometimes leaky Cleveland defense by signing linebacker Tom Cousineau for a reported $3.5 million for five years. First-round draft choice Chip Banks, a linebacker from Southern Cal, joins Cousineau in the million-dollar defense.

The Houston Oilers are looking to build a diversified offense that doesn't count on fullback Earl Campbell to carry the load. The strong fullback gained 1,376 yards last season, the lowest total of his career, but caught a career-high 36 passes for 156 yards.

Quarterback Ken Stabler is gone, and the Oilers plan to go with Gifford Nielsen, who started the last two games of 1981.

However, tight end Dave Casper warned that it will take the 7-9 Oilers of 1981 a while to rebuild.

"We're not going to come right back," Casper said. "If anyone on this team thinks that, they've got sand in their eyes."

Durham has to fight for San Diego State job

SAN DIEGO, Calif. (AP) — Darius Durham is the nation's leading returning receiver for 1982, having caught 65 passes for 988 yards and seven touchdowns a year ago.

Yet so deep is the San Diego State receiver corps that Durham is having to fight for a starting job this fall.

Sidelined for much of the spring with a leg injury, Durham started fall practice behind Phil Smith at one of the two wide receiver positions. Smith is no slouch. He caught 28 balls for 476 yards and two TDs last year, leading the team with a 17.0 yard-per-catch average.

At the other position is Clinton Sampson, a speedster who caught 20 passes for 308 yards and a TD. His top game was in the Mirage Bowl, where he had six grabs for 86 yards, including a score.

Sampson is backed up by promising sophomore Vince Warren, who as a running back in high school led the state of New Mexico in scoring with 26 touchdowns and gained 1,537 yards.

"We're pretty solid at wide receiver," said Coach Doug Scovil in something of an understatement.

That's hardly surprising for a team that likes to go to the air as much as the Aztecs do.

They threw the ball 57 percent of the time last year, compared with about 30 percent for those teams which try to strike a balance between the run and pass.

"We like to light up the scoreboard, that's what it all boils down to," says Durham, a 6-foot-2, 195-pound senior from Garden Grove, Calif.

The Aztecs must replace quarterback Matt Kofler, who compiled impressive numbers in 1981 and was a second-round NFL draft choice. Senior Rick Hansen, a perennial backup who threw just 11 passes all last season, is slated to be the starter. But insiders are betting that freshman Jim Plum, perhaps the most highly recruited passer in the nation, will take over the position before the season ends.

"We feel real good about Rick," Scovil told Western Athletic Conference Skywriters. "Jim is still trying to learn the offense and his head is swimming, but he'll be a great quarterback for us in a couple of years."

Durham said the Aztec receivers don't really care who is at quarterback. "We think we'll be able to throw as effectively as in the past," he said. "Right now it looks like Rick is the starter, and he is looking good. He should be just as capable as Matt was."

Durham points to "better offensive line blocking and a stronger running game" as factors which should "complement our passing game" this fall. "People will have to respect our running attack now," he said. "They can't just assume that we'll be throwing on third-and-five any more."

A professional career seems within Durham's reach, despite his current problems. "I'm not really thinking about a pro career right now, but I know that anyone who plays in a system as sophisticated as ours will get a look by the pros," he said. "We all feel that if we learn this system we can play in any system in the country, at any level."

And Durham insists that Scovil "still hasn't put in all the offense yet. We only used a small portion of it last year because it's so complicated, but we're adding more and more. He's a mastermind."

Besides a stronger running attack, a stiffer defense also will be essential for SDSU to better last year's 6-5 record. The Aztec defense was mediocre at best in 1981, yielding 359 yards and 21 points per game to rank sixth in both categories in the WAC.

Bulldogs roll over Imperial

The Midland High volleyball teams took two victories over Imperial Tuesday night in the home debut of the Bulldogs.

The MHS varsity defeated Imperial by a 15-7, 15-11 score as Deniese Lanz led the way with 10 good serves. Penny Griffin and Laura Sherman were also standouts in the spiking department while Melinda Rascke and Teresa Haney also had good outings.

"We are still making a few mistakes, but we seem to be ironing those out of our game," said MHS volleyball coach Linda Jolly.

The MHS junior varsity also pelted Imperial, 15-8, 15-2, making both MHS squads 4-1 on the year. Both teams owned previous victories over Imperial.

Harper quits Longhorn team

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — University of Texas basketball guard Ray Harper, a starter as a freshman two years ago, has quit the Longhorn squad and plans to enroll at Kentucky Wesleyan.

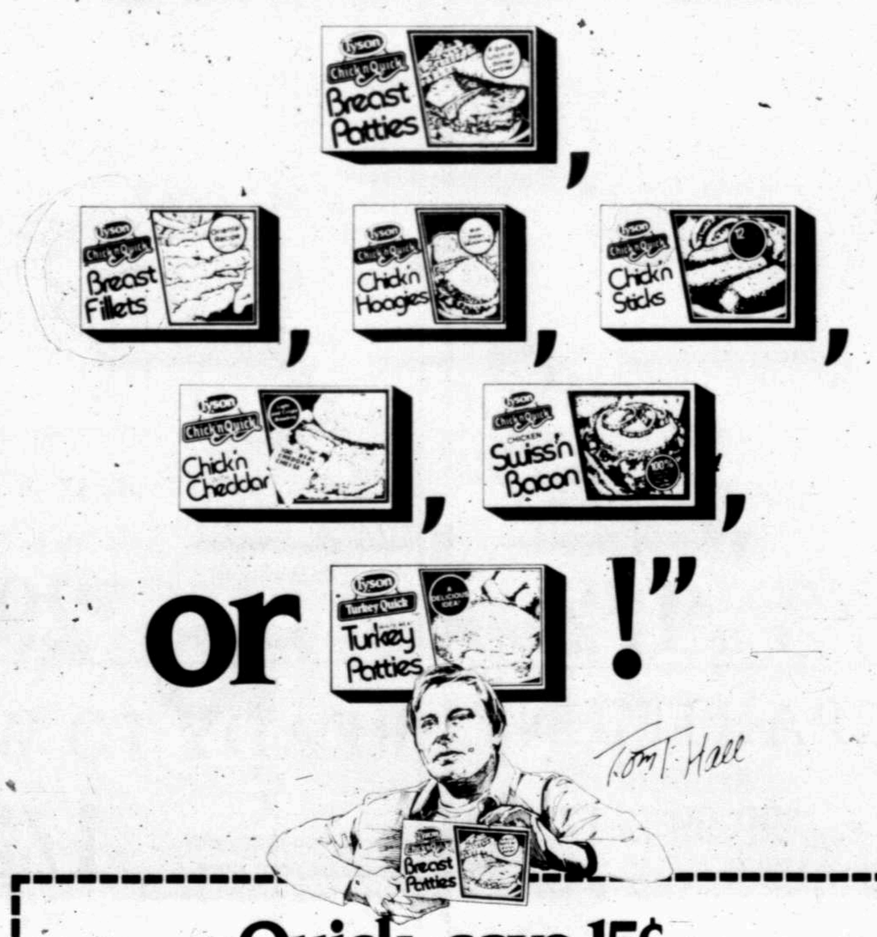

The 5-11 junior is a native of Bremen, Ky., about 35 miles from Kentucky Wesleyan's campus in Owensboro. Harper will have to sit out one year before regaining NCAA eligibility.

The reasons for Harper's sudden departure are unclear.

"You'll have to talk to coach (Bob Weltlich)," he said. "I really can't talk about it."

Weltlich, whose first Longhorn squad has been thinned by departures, said, "My understanding is that he wants to stay closer to home. I just talked to him and as far as I know he has no problem here. Anything else I would say would be pure speculation."

Emerald ring hidden in strawberry jam

Copley News Service

The hiding place for the emerald ring — value $500,000 — was a jar of strawberry jam. After wearing it, the owner would place it in the sticky preserve and screw on the lid — an update on the ol' cookie jar.

When gemologist Saren Spicer appraised the ring it still had seeds in the prongs.

Another woman, known for the fabulous family gems she wears, has four safes. Her hope is that if burglars clean out one, they will not think to look for more.

A couple has a safe sunk in the concrete of their garage floor. Over that goes a drip pan — a normal sight in a garage. The car is parked over that and the garage is locked. While somewhat inconvenient, that is their answer to protecting their valuables.

"I can't afford to insure my jewelry any more" is heard more often these days. Scary stuff. But just what does one do? Here is some advice.

SPICER SAYS THAT IF MONEY is a consideration regarding insurance, "people should insure the jewelry they wear all the time, that which is subject to loss and damage — the diamond solitaires, a watch, earrings." She recommends other jewelry be kept in a safe-deposit box.

Appraisals are important (and required regularly for insurance). "Jewelry appraisal is a specialty, even among gemologists." Appraisers should be graduates of the Gemological Institute of America, and should have membership in the American Gem Society, the International Society of Appraisers or the American Society of Appraisers, she says.

For large important stones, say $15,000 or more, she suggests documentation by the Gemological Institute, which is based in New York. This internationally recognized certificate gives a description of a stone, does not put a price on it. The cost of such a service can "run into a couple hundred dollars."

Jeweler Joe Jessop says it always helps to have a complete and up-to-date appraisal, preferably with pictures.

"IF A PIECE IS misplaced, stolen, whatever, you have a basis for assisting the police department in locating the piece if possible." Jessop also recommends a safe in the home, especially for pieces used often. "If it's an important piece and rarely used, then it's better in a safe-deposit box." He also suggests a house alarm system.

Nicaragua blames U.S. for attacks

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — The Sandinista government is blaming CIA-trained "counter-revolutionaries" for Sunday's attack on a construction plant in northeastern Nicaragua.

In a statement issued Monday night, the Interior Ministry said the attack was indicative of "large-scale logistic support and the highly specialized training that counter-revolutionary groups infiltrating the country are receiving in (neighboring) Honduras from the CIA."

It gave no details of the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency's alleged involvement in the attack, but charged that such acts were part of "the plans for destabilization the Reagan administration is developing against the Sandinist popular revolution."

About 70 insurgents wielding dynamite charges destroyed 31 trucks, four steam shovels and other heavy equipment Sunday at the state-run contruction plant, 217 miles northeast of the capital, government sources said.

A Construction Ministry official identified as Ronald Espinoza was reported killed in the attack. Property damage was estimated at about $1.2 million.

The Interior Ministry announced last week that anti-Sandinist rebels have launched at least 78 attacks this year on Nicaraguan towns and villages near the border with Honduras.

According to government sources, at least 200 have died in border clashes during the last two years.

Nicaragua has accused Honduras of complicity in the violence by allowing its territory to be used as a base for the raids, most of which are reportedly carried out by former members of the late dictator Anastasio Somoza's national guard.

The guardsmen fled Nicaragua after Sandinist rebels overthrew Somoza's rightist regime in July 1979 and formed their own leftist government.

West Texas Legal Services publishes two pamphlets

The Midland-Odessa offices of West Texas Legal Services has recently published two pamphlets on how to deal with used car dealers and how to sue in Justice of the Peace Court.

"Due to the demand for information on automobile repossession and legal access to the court system, our offices have prepared these booklets as a consumer guide," said Jerry Lopez, managing attorney for the federally funded agency. "We hope these pamphlets will help educate the public as to their rights and responsibilities in these areas."

The JP pamphlet answers such questions as what kind of cases the court handles, how to file a suit, the cost and preparation for trial and whether or not a lawyer is needed.

The car guide deals with title questions, repossession rights of both parties, warranties, contracts, repairs and shopping tips.

The pamphlets are free. More information may be obtained by calling the Midland office at 563-0090 or the Odessa office at 332-1207.

U.S., U.S.S.R. editors convene

NEW LONDON, N.H. (AP) — A dozen U.S. newspaper editors and 11 of their Soviet counterparts met Tuesday to discuss the similarities and differences between their countries, societies and professions.

Nuclear arms freeze and mutual trust and distrust surfaced as the key topics at the first working session of the week-long U.S.-Soviet Editors Conference at Colby-Sawyer College.

The session, co-sponsored by the New England Society of Newspaper Editors, is the first of its kind. A member of the Soviet delegation called it "pioneering"

Jon Breen, executive editor of the Nashua Telegraph, said many Americans "have a tendency not to learn enough about our neighbors in the world. I suspect our guests know more about us, our institutions, then we do."

Sergei Vishnevski of Pravda told his American colleagues that the Soviet Constitution guarantees a free press, but he said, "We combine freedom with the obligation of citizens."

He said that "the main bulk of Soviet newspapers is directed at showing and criticizing the shortcomings of Soviet life."

Borrowing the analogy of Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes that freedom does not allow yelling fire in a crowded theater, Vishnevski said, "Freedom can't be adventurism."

DPS predicts 47 deaths over holiday

AUSTIN — Although motor vehicle fatalities are down by 5 percent statewide over last year's toll, the Department of Public Safety is forecasting 47 traffic deaths will occur this Labor Day weekend.

DPS Director Col. Jim Adams said, however, that drivers could help limit the number of fatalities by using seat belts, maintaining safe speeds and refraining from alcohol. He added that about half of the holiday deaths will likely involve alcohol.

Last year's Labor Day toll was 50. Eight more persons died later of injuries suffered during the 78-hour period. The DPS will have extra patrols assigned to areas where heavy volumes of traffic or drinking drivers can be expected.

"Local highway patrol commanders will assign additional troopers as they deem appropriate to assist the holday traveler and to watch for drivers who violate traffic laws," said Adams.

The upcoming holiday is one of the last holidays of the summer vacation period and extensive travel and heavy traffic can be expected. The DPS is urging motorists on long trips to take advantage of the many rest stops provided by various business clubs and the state highway department.

Also, the DPS will conduct Operation Motorcide, whereby city, county and state police will report the number of traffic deaths directly to the news media.

Cdr. F.D. Meyer talks into a radio transmitter on the deck of the USS Iowa as workmen prepare the battleship for its 1,700-mile journey to a Mississippi shipyard for refitting. Masselli was undercover informant, report says

NEW YORK (AP) — A contractor who was executed in gangland style Aug. 25 served as an undercover informant in the federal investigation of Labor Secretary Raymond J. Donovan, according to a government report.

The slaying victim, 31-year-old Nathan Masselli, allowed agents on the staff of special prosecutor Leon Silverman to record four of his telephone conversations last May.

Masselli's father, reputed organized crime associate Pellegrino William Masselli, has figured prominently in the investigation of Donovan on allegations the Cabinet official was tied to the mob in his past role as a New Jersey construction executive.

Silverman issued a report in June saying there was not enough evidence to seek charges against Donovan. He later reopened his investigation after receiving new allegations.

According to his report, Nathan Masselli allowed investigators to secretly record his telephone conversations with Morris J. Levin, general counsel of Donovan's former employer, the Schiavone Construction Co. of Secaucus, N.J.

Levin had contacted Nathan Masselli one day before William Masselli was to testify before a federal grand jury investigating Donovan, the report said.

The report said Levin explained the Schiavone company's view of a paper written by a senior executive, Joseph DiCarolis. William Masselli once claimed the document showed he paid a $20,000 kickback to get a $200,000 loan from Schiavone, according to the report, which said there was not enough evidence to back the charge.

The Massellis' company, Jo-Pel Contracting & Trucking Inc., received the loan to start work as a minority subcontractor hired by Schiavone to excavate a New York subway project.

The Massellis' sale of the excavated dirt back to the city for use as landfill is being reviewed by the city Department of Investigation, which was to disclose its findings today.

In Washington, Donovan issued a statement Tuesday saying "there is absolutely no substance to these charges, and that is the way the final chapter will be written." In New York, Silverman refused to comment on the report.

Meanwhile, police were continuing their investigation of Nathan Masselli's death after discovering early Tuesday what was believed to be the getaway car. Police are holding reputed gang figure Salvatore Odierno, one of three suspects, and Bronx District Attorney Mario Merola said detectives had two other suspects whom he declined to identify.

Results of Agent Orange study may be slow in coming

WASHINGTON (AP) — Vietnam veterans may have to wait until 1988 or 1989 for the government to decide whether exposure to Agent Orange in Vietnam is damaging their health.

The Veterans Administration said Tuesday that research into the effect of the herbicide will not yield conclusions for six or seven years — if all goes well.

In 1979, Congress directed the VA to conduct an epidemiological study, comparing the health of a group of men who were exposed to the spray in the war zone with men who were not exposed. The study has run into a series of delays.

The VA's Advisory Commitee on Health-Related Effects of Herbicides, a scientific advisory panel, was told Tuesday the government must still determine whether it can adequately identify soldiers who came into contact with the herbicide. Unless they can be identified, the study cannot be conducted.

The VA's pace came under criticism from Illinois state Sen. Karl Berning, who chairs the Illinois Agent Orange Study Commission. He told the panel he sensed "a lack of commitment, a lack of concern, a lack of interest on the part of the national government" in the veterans who worry about the effects of the herbicide.

"Continued studies of the types that have been discussed here, we agree, are necessary," Berning said.

"However, I remind you that while you and I are talking, men and women, our fellow citizens, are suffering and dying now — and, from what we have had in the way of testimony, with little or no help from their government."

He said veterans were "all too often treated with abuse and contempt by the VA."

Dr. Barclay Shepard, a VA official and the chairman of the advisory body, replied that several years ago, when the full extent of the problem was unknown, VA doctors appeared "as less than concerned." But, he said, that is no longer the case.

Some 12 million gallons of Agent Orange were sprayed from 1962 to 1971 in South Vietnam to destroy crops and strip the leaves off trees to uncover communist troops' jungle hiding places. The herbicide contains dioxin, a highly toxic contaminant.

For several years, veterans have blamed the herbicide for a high incidence of birth defects in their offspring and for a wide variety of ailments — cancers, liver and kidney disorders, tingling in their fingers, nerve and skin troubles, numbness, vision and hearing impairments, fatigue, reduced sexual drive, impotence and miscarriages by their wives.

The VA's position has been that no evidence exists linking those difficulties to exposure. It has refused to pay compensation to veterans for Agent Orange claims.

But, under a law enacted last year, VA hospitals give priority treatment to veterans who attribute health difficulties to Agent Orange.

At Tuesday's meeting, Shepard laid out the timetable which showed that the epidemiological study will take another six or seven years.

First a pilot program must be conducted to show the study is feasible.

The overall plan calls for comparing the health of 6,000 men identified as having been in contact with the herbicide with two other groups of 6,000 men each. One will be men who did not serve in Vietnam, the other will be men who served there but who were not exposed to Agent Orange.

But Shepard said partial answers to the Agent Orange will be available before the major study is finished.

One investigation will examine whether Vietnam veterans are fathering a disproportionately high number of babies with birth defects.

Another will study the health of several hundred men who served in Vietnam and who had identical twin brothers who did not take part in the war.

Both of those studies should be completed in 1984, Shepard said.

The Air Force is conducting a third study of the health of of the airmen who took part in the spraying operation.

Vietnam veterans who suspect they were exposed to Agent Orange may request examinations in VA hospitals even if they have no health complaints. So far, 95,000 have been examined.

Air Force searches for missing transport

CHARLESTON, S.C. (AP) — The Air Force searched early today for a missing C-141B transport plane with nine crew members aboard that had been on a low-level training mission in the Appalachian Mountains, authorities said.

A C-130 aircraft retraced the jet's route from northeastern Alabama through Tennessee and North Carolina to northwest South Carolina, said Capt. Beth Schneidhorst of the Charleston Air Force Base.

The 168-foot-long transport was due back at the Charleston base about 6 p.m. Tuesday. Its last contact was with the Federal Aviation Administration, which granted the plane clearance to descend near Scottsboro, Ala., at 1:15 p.m., Ms. Schneidhorst said.

The misson was to have ended about 50 miles southwest of Spartanburg, S.C., said B.H. Steed, night duty officer with the FAA in Atlanta.

The search for the missing airplane began about 6:30 p.m. Tuesday, and continued until midnight.

At the same time, officials at Charleston Air Force Base activated a board of base officers and experts to help find the plane.

Navy secretary threatens to cancel F-18 orders

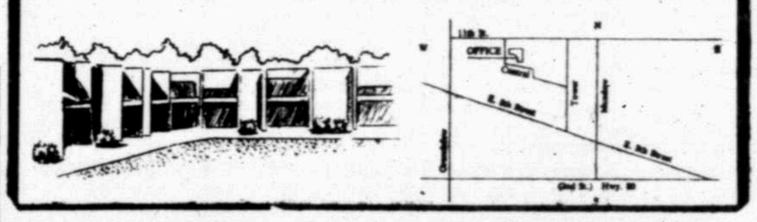

WASHINGTON (AP) — Navy Secretary John Lehman says he'll cancel government orders for the F-18 fighter unless its builders bring down the cost of the jet aircraft.

"The price must come down, or we're not going to buy it," the secretary said Wednesday.

The F-18, built by McDonnell-Douglas Corp. as prime contractor and Northrup Corp. as an important subcontractor, cost $24.1 million, exclusive of spare parts and development charges, in the 1981 fiscal year.

'What you do for dogs you...do for humans,' lawyer says

WASHINGTON (AP) — The federal government should guarantee that drugs used to execute criminals are swift and painless, says an attorney who is appealing a court decision upholding the right of states to administer lethal injections.

"I thought what you do for dogs you would do for humans," said David E. Kendall, a lawyer for death row prisoners in Oklahoma and Texas.

Kendall said he would ask the U.S. Court of Appeals to overturn the decision Monday by U.S. District Judge Norma Holloway Johnson.

She upheld the position of the Food and Drug Administration, ruling the FDA was not required under the law to ensure that drugs used for executions by states are effective for that purpose.

The prisoners, Kendall said, submitted affidavits from doctors contending that laboratory tests indicated drugs designated for use in executions would not cause a swift and painless death.

Kendall said he is not aware of any prisoner executed in the United States by a lethal injection. The American Medical Association and medical societies in the four states that have passed laws requiring death by drug injection have said doctors should not administer lethal drugs for executions.

He said 194 prisoners are under death sentence in the four states: 146 in Texas, 39 in Oklahoma, five in Idaho and four in New Mexico. Kendall represents five prisoners in the Oklahoma State Penitentiary and three in the Ellis Unit of the Texas Department of Corrections.

Individual prisoners have filed separate suits contending that execution by injection is unconstitutional, he said.

The FDA, Kendall said, has testing standards for drugs used to put animals to death, but won't initiate similar safeguards for prisoners.

Jerry Halperin, an FDA official, said veterinarians are permitted to use any drug available to kill an animal. But if a manufacturer wants to promote a drug as humane for killing animals, the drug firm would need FDA certification that the product is effective for that purpose.

Halperin said the Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act is a consumer protection law to make sure drugs are proven safe and effective. But he said it was never contemplated, as the prisoners contend, that the law be used "to destroy life."

He contended the use of lethal drugs by states was a matter of states' right and added, "We don't evaluate ropes to see whether they're effective in hanging people. Why create that kind of standard for drugs."

The state laws authorizing drug executions generally require administration of a quick-acting barbiturate combined with a chemical paralytic agent.

The drugs contemplated for use already are lawfully manufactured and marketed for medical and therapeutic purposes.

Soviet doctors believe in 'balneology' — science of mud

By ROBERT GILLETTE
The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

PYATIGORSK, U.S.S.R. — From the shady streets and manicured parks of this old Russian resort city, the landscape sweeps down a majestic slope to the flat green steppe below, past the fetid mud of Lake Tambukan, then beyond to the distant white cone of 18,510-foot Mount Elbrus, Europe's highest peak.

Anywhere else, Lake Tambukan — which means "bad smell" in one of the local languages of the Caucasus Mountains — might be dismissed as an unfortunate blemish on an otherwise magnificent landscape.

But the small round lake and its tons of black, sulfurous mud are a valued and carefully protected national resource with no swimming allowed, according to Dr. Nikolai Georgievich, director of the All-Union Scientific Institute of Resortology and Balneology. Balneology is the Soviet science of mud and mineral baths.

Soviet doctors firmly believe that Lake Tambukan's mud — which looks, feels and smells like the goo that comes out of a clogged drain at the end of a plumber's snake — is richly endowed with minerals, "vitamin complexes" and anti-bacterial properties that make it a unique medical treasure.

"MUD CURES STERILITY in women," a resort official in Pyatigorsky asserts. It is also credited with relieving aching joints, back pain, colitis and stomach ulcers.

At no small expense to the state, 14,000 tons of Lake Tambukan's mud are dredged up each year, packed in special pressurized containers to preserve the musty gases, and shipped to trade union health spas around the country, to be swabbed on the bodies of ailing Soviet workers.

This faith in the curative properties of mud exemplifies the power of tradition in Soviet medical care. Procedures long ago abandoned in the West survive and even flourish alongside modern treatment techniques.

Special state farms, for instance, are dedicated to growing medicinal herbs. Popular health magazines still tell readers how to prepare mustard plasters for chest colds. Many hospitals capable of providing up-to-date care also routinely practice cupping, the ancient technique of drawing malevolent humors from the body by applying warm glass cups to the skin.

SIMILARLY, WHILE FEW medical researchers in the West put stock in the 18th- and 19th-century fashions of mud and mineral baths, balneology is big business here, drawing a share of the state's scarce medical resources that is far from trivial.

In a country where such basic items as antibiotics, anesthetics, surgical thread and hypodermic needles are in chronically short supply, the Soviet state, through its centrally controlled trade unions, spends hundreds of millions of rubles each year on a system of "balneological sanitariums" located in 19 resort centers along the Black Sea coast, in the Caucasus Mountain region, the Baltic republics, Central Asia and Siberia.

FOUR MILLION PEOPLE a year stream through Sochi, armed with permission slips from doctors at home and vouchers from work for inexpensive, state-subsidized rest cures that last 24 days. On a bright summer day recently, thousands of vacationers dozed on wooden pallets on the pebbly beach, strolled about the picturesque town, or sat on park benches comparing experiences with exotic-sounding cures.

Most sanitariums offer "oxygen cocktails," a frothy blend of honey, egg white, spices and a blast of air. One Sochi sanitarium claims that all its 170 rooms are equipped with "radio pillows" for treatment by "hypno-psychotherapy," using special programs broadcast from the sanitarium's Center of Psychotherapeutic Suggestion.

Another spa in Sochi says it uses "radio-biotelemetry" to diagnose its patients and features a funicular railway leading to the beach to let patients supplement their mud cures and psychotherapy with "climato-therapy" — otherwise known as sun and the tranquil sound of the surf.

MATSESTA, THE COUNTRY'S LARGEST balneological spa, nestled in a forested cleft in the hills above Sochi, specializes in pungent hydrogen sulfide baths. Stalin is reputed to have built a hideaway in the hills above Matsesta with a pipeline running up from its naturally sulfurous mineral springs.

Discovered in 1837 by an English traveler named John Bell, who followed his nose to the source of a strong rotten-egg aroma, Matsesta now treats 500,000 patients a year in a lavish, nicely landscaped complex of buildings that gleam with polished wood and marble.

"In the West, Balneology is not in fashion, but here it is of great interest," Dr. Alina A. Kubzin, the spa's deputy chief physician, observed. Matsesta, she explained, is the Checken language word for "fiery water," a named derived not from its temperature or its taste — the water is tepid and undrinkable — but for the rosy hue it imparts to the skin after only a brief bath.

TICKING OFF A LIST of benefits reminiscent of the label on an old-fashioned patent medicine bottle, Dr. Kubzin said Matsesta's water relieves baldness, hardening of the arteries, back pain, rheumatism, periodontal disease and infertility in women.

"The gas in the water penetrates the skin, goes into the blood, relaxes the heart and nourishes the internal organs," she explained, adding that "it's good for sportsmen too because it hardens the muscles."

But not too much at a time. "The Institute of Physiotherapy and Balneology in Sochi recommends no more than 15 minutes at once," she said. The hydrogen sulfide gas in the local water is toxic in large concentrations, and employees at the spa are compensated for any hazard that may exist, the doctor said, by a month's vacation every year and a pint of milk a day. What good this does, or how a series of 15-minute baths can have a lasting therapeutic effect, was left unexplained.

IN A ROOM OFF the marble-pillard main lobby, a row of middle-aged men leaned over separate sinks, each with a hose in his mouth attached to a small shower head that drizzled sulfurous water on his gums. "Quite an excellent procedure," Dr. Kubzin said. "It strengthens the gums."

In the lobby of a nearby building, a small crowd of jovial and seemingly robust men and women waited their turns to step into old-fashioned cast-iron bathtubs for total immersion therapy in Matsesta's soupy black water.

In one treatment room, a silver-haired engineer with lower back pain looked as if he might like to doze off in his tub. But with the hand of a matronly nurse in a white smock clamped firmly to his wrist, measuring his pulse, there was no chance.

"Feels good," he said noncomittally, as he emerged from the water right on schedule, his skin a bright rosy color.

Continuing her tour of Matsesta, Dr. Kubzin said that the sulfurous water seemed especially good for women suffering from infertility, though it was hard to know why.

Asbestos lawsuits increase

Copley News Service

In 1942 when Essie Moore had a job in a Pascaguola, Miss., shipyard scraping insulation from ship pipes, he didn't know he was working with asbestos.

And later when he moved to San Diego and worked at a Naval Station ship repair facility and National Steel and Shipbuilding Co., he still didn't know.

"We used to get a sheet of it and spread it out and lay on it at night (during lunch breaks) on the third shift," Moore said. "I didn't learn I was working with asbestos until years later."

Now Moore, 62, knows a lot more about asbestos. He retired from NASSCO on disability in February because of a severe and chronic pulmonary disease, and probable asbestosis.

Moore is among thousands across the nation who have damage suits pending against manufacturers of asbestos, which can cause lung cancer and other pulmonary diseases that don't show up until years after contact with the material.

About 11 million workers have been exposed to asbestos since World War II, when use of the highly effective fireproofing and insulating material mushroomed. One cancer expert says an epidemic of deaths stemming from asbestos-related diseases is expected between now and the end of the century.

Up to 240,000 of those exposed will die between now and the year 2000, Dr. Irving Selikoff, of New York's Mount Sinai School of Medicine, said in a report to the U.S. Department of Labor. It will create a "liability nightmare" for the insurance industry, he added.

The nightmare already has begun; diseases triggered by exposure to asbestos years ago are beginning to create a crisis for victims, their families, the medical field, lawmakers, asbestos manufacturers and the courts.

The scope of the asbestos problem is beginning to come into focus, but solutions aren't being found rapidly enough.

Vietnamese refugees drowned

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Seven Vietnamese refugees were drowned and 70 were rescued in two incidents reported by Manila newspapers Tuesday.

The newspaper "Bulletin Today" reported a man, two women and four children drowned as a refugee boat capsized during a typhoon that hit parts of the Philippines last week. Forty-seven refugees from the same boat made it to safety.

In another incident, the "Evening Express" reported that 23 Vietnamese were taken ashore by Filipino fishermen on a small island 400 miles north of Manila.

Death rate rises in Soviet Union

WASHINGTON (AP) — Influenza, alcoholism and limited medical care are combining to cause a rising death rate in the Soviet Union, an unprecedented trend in peacetime, according to a private study.

Murray Feshbach of Georgetown University, a leading authority on the Soviet population, also reports a drop in male life expectancy since 1964 in the Soviet Union.

The declines in Soviet population growth could lead to shortages of workers and soldiers in that country by the turn of the century, the study said.

"Barring time of war, this trend is unique in the history of developed countries," Feshbach wrote in his study "The Soviet Union: Population Trends and Dilemmas," published Monday by the private, non-profit Population Reference Bureau.

Feshbach said the Soviet Union's death rate dropped to a low of 6.9 deaths per 1,000 population in 1964, but "since then, if official Soviet data are to be credited, the rate has increased by 50 percent to 10.3 in 1980. The U.S. crude death rate was 8.8 in 1980."

A population's death rate goes up when fewer children are being born, and thus elderly persons make up more of the total population. "However, the dramatic rise in the national crude death rate of the Soviet Union is beyond what can be explained by the population's 'aging' so far," he said.

Life expectancy at birth also is declining among Soviet males, Feshbach found. In 1964, it reached a high of 67 years for a male, but has since dropped to 61.9 years in 1980. By comparison, for American males, the official life expectancy at birth was 69.5 years in 1978.

"Alcoholism, now pandemic in the USSR, is undoubtedly a leading factor behind the mortality rise among working-age Soviet men, although heavy drinking is also increasing among women and teen-agers," Feshbach wrote.

"Alcohol consumption has also increased in the United States but the primary difference is that, in the USSR, hard liquor makes up 65 percent of all alcohol consumed, versus 40 percent in the U.S.," he said.

It was Feshbach who, two years ago, first disclosed an increase in Soviet infant morality. That was attributed to a number of factors including influenza epidemics, poor prenatal care and inadequate nutrition.

That high infant mortality is also a factor in the rising Soviet death rate, he reports.

Health care has grown in the Soviet Union, but that has centered on expansion rather than upgrading quality. As a result, he concluded, the Soviet medical system is unable to cope with the needs of the population.

And while he said Soviet leadership has expressed conern about this problem, the proportion of the national budget devoted to health care dropped from 6.6 percent in 1965 to 5.2 percent in 1978.

Feshbach said the decline in Soviet birth rates has been particularly noted among Russians, Ukrainians and Belorussians, while births continued at a high level in the Asian sections of that country.

From a current estimate of 154 million Soviets of working age, Feshbach projects growth to only 158 million by 1985 and 160 million by 1990.

Arms-control treaty with U.S.S.R. unlikely soon

WASHINGTON (AP) — Despite 21 weeks of arms control talks in Geneva, the issues are considered too complex, the suspicions too deep, for a new treaty with the Soviet Union to emerge soon.

U.S. and Soviet negotiators are using a summer recess in the bargaining to consider their next moves when the talks resume on Oct. 6. Here in question-and-answer form is a summary of where the talks stand and where they may be headed.

Q: Are the United States and the Soviet Union close to an agreement?

A: Apparently not, due to the complexity of the issues. However, the two sides are serious in their bargaining. Proposals are not being swept aside the way the Soviets rejected President Carter's cutback plan out of hand in 1977.

Q: What's at stake?

A: In one set of negotiations, how many rockets the Soviets will target on western Europe and whether new U.S. missiles aimed at the Soviet Union will be deployed in Britain, West Germany and Italy beginning in December 1983.

In the second negotiations in the Swiss city, the eventual size of the U.S. and Soviet strategic arsenals — long-range bombers and missiles carried in submarines and stored in land silos — will be determined.

Q: How long have the negotiations gone on?

A: Twenty-one weeks of talks have been held on Euromissiles and six on strategic weapons, the so-called START talks. Progress there is better than in the 1972-1979 SALT negotiations, which produced a treaty after seven years. That is the agreement Reagan condemned during his campaign but is observing as long as the Soviets do the same.

Q: Are there any deadlines?

A: Not in the usual sense, but the negotiators at work on Euromissiles have to keep in mind that the first of 572 Pershing II and cruise rockets will be deployed in western Europe unless an agreement is reached within the next 15 months.

"It's impossible to say whether we will have an agreement by December 1983," an official here said.

Q: What is the Soviet response to President Reagan's proposal for a START treaty?

A. In the treaty's first phase, the number of strategic warheads on both sides would be sliced by about one-third. This would cost the Soviets more because it would cut deeply into their lead in heavy land-based missiles. But all strategic nuclear weapons eventually would be on the table, giving the Soviets a chance to neutralize U.S. advantages.

The Soviets have responded informally and cautiously so far. They have made it clear they want to head off U.S. cruise missiles, the hedge-hopping, pilotless weapon in which the United States holds a lead, and to slow down the Trident nuclear submarine program.

The Soviets promised to study Reagan's proposal during the current recess and to respond more fully after the negotiations resume on Oct. 6.

Q: Will the START talks be merged with the negotiations on intermediate range missiles?

A: Not for the time being, at least, although U.S. negotiator Edward Rowny's delegation is coordinating strategy with Paul Nitze, the Euromissiles negotiator, and his team.

Q: Is the anti-nuclear movement having an effect on the negotiations?

A: Rowny claims the freeze movement peaked sometime before the opening of the START talks in late June. Other U.S. officials contend the administration is proceeding at its own pace, and that Reagan presented his proposal when it was ready, on Mother's Day.

Still, arms control is an importnat issue in the November elections. No administration can be impervious to the voters' interests and anxieties.

Q: Is Congress having an impact on the talks?

A: In a blow to the nuclear freeze movement, the House voted 204-202 on Aug. 5 to reject a resolution calling for a negotiated halt to a weapons buildup on both sides. Reagan said the vote was a signal to the Soviet Union of support for his policy.

Harvard to work with toxin

The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — The National Institutes of Health has approved a gene-engineering experiment with one of the deadliest toxins known to man, prompting an uncomfortable debate among some scientists over the value of such experiments compared with their risks.

The study, as planned by John R. Murphy of the Harvard Medical School, would take the gene for diphtheria toxin and splice it into the genetic material of the common bacterium Escherichia coli.

Until recently, the planned experiment would have been prohibited by federal rules, unless special permission were received. The stringent rules stemmed from the hypothetical risk that such an experiment could result in a catastrophic new strain of bacteria that would be as common as E. coli and as lethal as diphtheria. If such a strain escaped from the laboratory, the result could be disastrous.

Scientists generally agree that such a possibility is in the realm of science fiction, but the Murphy experiment, approved under a recent relaxation of the rules, gave nervous quavers to some at NIH.

"It really upset me," said Dr. Mark R. Geier, an assistant professor at Johns Hopkins University and a guest physician at NIH, who called the experiment the riskiest one ever allowed by NIH.

"If they don't reject this kind of experiment," Geier said, "what kind would they reject?"

The experiment had to be cleared with both the NIH committee on recombinant DNA and the NIH Biosafety Committee, either of which could forbid it.

The biosafety panel first voted unanimously against the experiment. Later the group reversed itself and voted unanimously to approve it. The committee on recombinant DNA unanimously approved it the first time around.

Murphy's work will be carried out in a high-containment laboratory at Ft. Detrick, Md., and is intended to determine what risks there may be in such experiments, as well as answering two basic questions: whether E. coli will accept the toxin gene and be able to make toxin with it, and whether the toxin would be secreted once made.

Geier acknowledged that the risk of the experiment is extremely small, "one in a zillion or something," but he felt the potential benefit of Murphy's experiments was not great enough to justify it.

Members of the biosafety committee agreed that the risk is minuscule, but they disagreed with Geier's assessment of the importance of Murphy's work.

Saudi sheik, wife wage bitter custody battle

MIAMI (AP) — The lawyer for a wealthy Saudi sheik, saying his client is "not going anywhere" with four children involved in a custody battle, has managed to quash a requirement for the sheik to post a $1 million security bond or go to jail.

Lawyers for Sheika Dena, 24, the estranged wife of Sheik Mohammed al Fassi, had persuaded a Miami judge to require the sheik post the money, a guarantee that he would not depart with the children. Fourteen officers showed up at the sheik's Miami Beach residence Saturday to serve the writ.

But on Monday, Dade Circuit Judge Jack Turner struck down the bond requirement, saying he doesn't levy it in other child-custody wrangles "and I don't see why I should here."

The sheika is suing to gain primary custody of the children, ages 3 through 5, and claims al Fassi, 27, might abscond with them. She also wants half of his reputed $6 billion fortune, and claims al Fassi is in arrears for $675,000 in temporary stipends and related expenses.

"He (al Fassi) is a citizen of the world and can go anywhere he wants," argued lawyer Melvyn Frumkes, who is handling the case for the sheika with celebrity-divorce lawyer Marvin Mitchelson. "That includes leaving at a moment's notice."

Although Turner struck down the $1 million bond requirement, he also forbade either al Fassi or his wife from removing the four children from Dade County until the custody dispute is over.

"He'll show he's not going anywhere," al Fassi attorney Ellis Rubin shouted in the courtroom, pledging his client's participation in future hearings.

The custody battle then moved from the courtroom to the law offices of Mallory Harton, a former judge appointed special master in the case by Turner. Behind closed doors Monday, the sheika told lawyers why she felt she should have custody. The sheik was to give his deposition today.

The custody battle began in California, moved to the Bahamas and then came to Miami, the sheik's residence. Since the heirs have lived in Florida for the past six months, Frumkes said, a Florida judge will have the last word on whether al Fassi can retain his custody awarded by a Bahamian court.

Latin America reels under recession

EDITOR'S NOTE — Mexico sits on an abundance of oil, but is in deep economic difficulty. Other Latin American nations are rich in other vital natural resources but they too face serious economic problems. An Associated Press survey of the area indicates some could face crises of major proportions if conditions continue as they are. Here is a report.

By TOM FENTON

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — Latin American economies are reeling — some at a dizzying rate — under the weight of world recession and high U.S. interest rates.

The foreign debt of four major countries — Mexico, Brazil, Venezuela and Argentina — is a combined $236 billion, with their incomes declining as repayment obligations come due.

Unemployment is rising, bankruptcies are increasing and national currencies are falling in value.

The world recession has lessened demand for Latin America's raw materials and crops at a time when high interest rates in the United States make it tough and costly to borrow money from international banks.

The combination is a crippling, double economic whammy on a region whose inhabitants have little belt left to tighten, a part of the world where unemployment checks, food stamps and other social benefits are largely unknown.

All this carries the threat of social unrest to an area of the world that is, in the main, politically unsettled and struggling to overcome economic underdevelopment.

MEXICANS SAY THEY ARE in worse trouble than at any time since the 1910-1920 revolution, with a peso devaluation that sent the nation into shock in mid-August and forced the renegotiation of some of its foreign debt, which totals an estimated $80 billion.

Soup kitchens have sprung up in the industrial belt around Buenos Aires, Argentina, where unemployment is at a 10-year high of 10 to 12 percent.

The ranks of beggars and street vendors, including grown men and children, are swelling in Santiago and in Bogota, Colombia.

In Chile, bankruptcies in the first half of 1982 hit 362 in contrast to an average of 117 a year in the period 1970-75. Brazil reports bankruptcies in some industrial areas as up 16 percent over 1981 in the first 31 weeks of this year and up 60.8 percent over 1979. In Argentina, bankruptcies are believed partly responsible for a 6 percent decline in the gross national product, the sum of all the country's goods and services.

UNEMPLOYMENT NUMBERS VARY from country to country and in some the numbers vary from what is put out officially and what economists estimate privately.

In Brazil, the official unemployment rate is 5.8 percent, but economists say a more realistic figure is 10 to 15 percent.

In military-governed Chile, a University of Chile survey put unemployment at 23 percent, the Roman Catholic Church at 30 percent and union leaders at 35 percent.

Colombia's official rate is 9.5 percent but private economists put it at least 20 percent.

In Mexico the rate of unemployment and underemployment — people out of jobs but earning some money at odd jobs — is estimated at 40 percent.

Peru's official unemployment rate is given as 10 percent and the underemployment rate as 51 percent.

Jose Manuel Pinilla is among Latin America's underemployed. He shines shoes in Bogota, Colombia, and on a good day he makes $4.50. Pinilla can afford milk for only one of his two young children. Breakfast is sugar water and a tortilla, with eggs two Sundays a month for the children. Lunch is corn soup and vegetables, with milk for his 4-year-old son, but none for the 8-year-old. There is no evening meal.

ANOTHER IS CLAUDOMIRO MARCHET, an electrician laid off six months ago in Sao Paulo, Brazil. He earns $140 a month painting refrigerators at his home and says it's the only work he can get.

Delfina San Martin and her husband Maximino together earn $260 a month in Mexico City. The couple is hard pressed to support four children and pay rent on their two-room apartment.

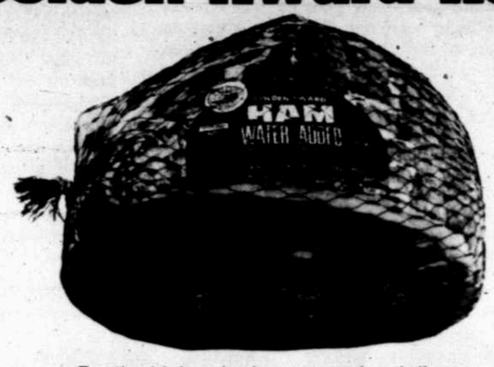

Brazil's economy declined for the first time in 16 years last year, plunging to a negative growth rate of 3 to 5 percent, according to independent statisticians. Some economists see no growth again this year for that South American giant, which has a foreign debt of $63 billion now and likely to reach $70 billion by year's end, government officials say. The cruzeiro, the national currency, undergoes periodic devaluations and there are suggestions in some economic and political quarters for a renegotiation of foreign debt payments, as Mexico has done with U.S. banks.

MEXICO, VENEZUELA AND ECUADOR, which depend heavily on oil for export earnings, are suffering from a world petroleum glut that has eroded prices and stunted their growth.

Venezuela, which counts on oil for 90 percent of its export earnings, is trying to stretch declining petroleum revenues to support a bloated bureaucracy that employs one in 14 citizens and consumes two-thirds of the country's earnings, while foreign debt obligations are around $27.5 billion.

Falling sugar and soybean prices have shrunk Brazil's earnings while Colombia, Mexico, El Salvador and Brazil are feeling the pinch of a lackluster coffee market. Colombia has 8.7 million 60-pound bags of coffee in warehouses waiting for better prices.

Chemical may aid brain transplants

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The discovery of a natural chemical the brain uses to repair itself should boost rapidly-expanding research on partial brain transplants that might someday be used against neurological diseases and injuries, a psychobiologist says.

"The reason all this sounds far-fetched is because people think about (transplanting) the whole brain, instead of just a part of it," said Carl Cotman of the University of California-Irvine. "We're just trying to repair or replace a nick in the brain. Given that, I don't think it sounds so eerie."

In a series of experiments in which a portion of rats' brains were cut away and replaced by brain tissue transplanted from unborn rats, Cotman said his group found growth factor proteins that "help the brain's repair capacity and help the graft survive."

The growth stimulant, its existence long suspected, apparently is produced in direct response to injury and peaks in concentration three to six days after tissue is surgically removed, he said in an interview.

"More of the neurons that we transplant stay alive when we put them in after a delay (to catch the peak). They grow out very vigorously and they make many of the connections that had been lost" through removing the original tissue, he said.

That finding should help other researchers now experimenting with transplants, Cotman said. Growth factors, if isolated and purified, might even be inserted with transplants to improve success, he said.

The research, which also involved Ellen Lewis and Manuel Nieto-Sampedro of UCI and a UC-San Diego team headed by Silvio Varon, Marston Manthorpe, Stephen D. Skaper, Gilles Barbin and Frank M. Longo, was reported in the Aug. 27 issue of the journal Science.

Cottman speculated that years from now treatment with growth factors might be tried to stop or slow progressive brain deterioration, such as in some forms of senility.

Researchers around the world are proving they can transplant a piece of one animal's brain into the brain of another. The new tissue usually survives and often automatically hooks itself accurately into the brain it is joining. The result in many cases is the correct, though seldom full-scale, production of vital hormones.

The peculiar nature of the brain all but eliminates the problem of rejection, which bedevils most organ transplants, and Cotman said the surgical technique "is not terribly difficult."

Cotman, a major figure in such research, said some scientists have even found they can inject brain cells into an animal's brain and "they definitely become part of the (brain) tissue. They migrate to the correct positions and, as far as people can tell, they do all right. It really is the stuff of science fiction."

Swedish scientists this year took a portion of a human's adrenal gland and transplanted it to another part of the same person's brain in hopes of easing severe Parkinson's disease, a progressive neurological disorder involving loss of a specific hormone. The transplant was made, but the improvement was described as slight.

Cotman says years of work with animals are still needed before humans reap the potential of brain transplants. Although scientists have shown transplants can survive and form connections, they don't know whether every hook-up is made and the result is functional in all respects.

And a rat's tiny brain is far from the wondrous complexity of a human's.

But the possibilities are dramatic. Brain cells are not reproduced. Once killed by stroke, aging or traumatic head injury, they are gone forever — unless doctors learn to replace them.

Leakey claims fossil elusive 'missing link'

NAIROBI, Kenya (DPA) — A fossil found in north-central Kenya may be a long-sought "missing link" in the evolution of prehistoric man, paleontologist Richard Leakey said here Tuesday.

Leakey, appearing at a news conference here with his Japanese colleague, Dr. Hidemi Ishida of Osaka University, said the fossil — the remainder of an upper jaw bone — was about 8 million years old.

Leakey said the bone fell directly into the "fossil gap" that had previously existed between the remains of Ramapithecus and Australopithecus, prehuman beings who lived 12 million and 4 million years ago, respectively.

"The significance of the find must remain somewhat in suspense but first indications suggest that it is a very critical specimen and we expect more will be found of the same kind," Leakey told reporters.

Leakey said the upper jaw bone, bearing five teeth, was found last Friday morning in the Samburu Hills near Baragoi, about 230 miles north of the Kenyan capital.

Transplant recipient bears twins

DALLAS (AP) — A Fort Worth woman who gave birth to twin boys is one of only five kidney transplant recipients in the world to successfully deliver twins, Dallas doctors say.

Phyllis Allen, who recieved a kidney 11 years ago, survived not only the rigors of pregnancy, a large risk in itself, but also the added strain of bearing twins, who were born Friday, her doctors said.

"The doctors had always advised me against getting pregnant," said the 34-year-old Mrs. Allen, who spent seven weeks in a special high risk pregnancy unit at Parkland Memorial Hospital before giving birth.

"But last December when the maternal clock was ticking out, we decided to go ahead and try," she said.

The infants — one weighing 5 pounds and the other weighing 4.5 pounds — were born prematurely. Doctors expect the boy and girl to be released from the hospital in about two weeks.

"In the past decade more and more women with transplanted kidneys have become pregnant and successfully delivered babies," said Dr. Kenneth Leveno, the obstetrician who delivered the twins by Caesarean section.

Dr. Leveno said transplant recipients could reject their kidneys during the pregnancy or could develop high blood pressure complications that could endanger both mother and child.

"While pregnancy in transplant patients in a hazardous condition, there has been a reasonably good outcome," he said.

Jurors to debate murder of nun

AMARILLO, Texas (AP) — The trial of an 18-year-old man charged with capital murder in the Halloween rape-slaying of an elderly Catholic nun was expected to go to the jury today.

After final arguments by the prosecution and defense, District Judge George Dowlen was to give his charge to the jury and order the panel to begin deliberations.

Johnny Frank Garrett took the stand in his own behalf Tuesday, which allowed the prosecution to enter into evidence a statement that police say he gave them orally, then refused to sign.

The state introduced a statement that said Garrett choked and raped 76-year-old Sister Tadea Benz while drunk on whiskey and "two hits of acid."

Garrett denied giving such a statement and accused police of concocting it.

Officers said Garrett made the statement after they arrested him in his home, across the street from the convent, on Nov. 9, 1981, about 10 days after the murder.

Amarillo police Sgt. Walt Yerger testified Tuesday that Garrett told him he broke into a lower window of the convent in the early morning hours of Oct. 31. Garrett said the nun woke up while he was in her room and that he choked her until she passed out, then had sex with her, Yerger testified.

Garrett testified that a cousin told him he killed the nun. The cousin, called to the stand, denied Garrett's charge and said he was living in Pampa, Texas, at the time of the murder.

Garrett's mother and half-sister testified Monday that he was home at the time of the murder.

Police said his handprints and fingerprints were found on a headboard in the nun's room. Garrett testified Tuesday that he had been in the bedroom, but said he was there the day before the murder.

Garrett said he walked through the front door of the convent about noon Oct. 30, found nobody inside, took a small knife from the kitchen and went upstairs. He was looking for stereo equipment and crucifixes, and the knife, which was entered into evidence, was bent when he used it to pry open a drawer, he said.

Garrett's fingerprints were left on the headboard when he leaned across the bed to grab a crucifix, he said.

Sisters at the convent disputed Garrett's account, saying they would have been eating in the dining room, and the front door of the convent would have been locked at the time Garrett said he entered the building.

Attorneys argue against death sentence

ABILENE, Texas (AP) — Defense attorneys planned to present evidence today in an attempt to convince jurors that a 26-year-old man convicted of capital murder in the slaying of a prominent Abilene artist should not be sentenced to death.

Jurors deliberated an hour and 40 minutes before convicting Wayne East on Tuesday. He could be sentenced to life in prison or death by injection.

East was accused of fatally stabbing 77-year-old Mary Eula Sears on Nov. 23, after tying her to a chair and torturing her to make her tell where she kept her jewels.

Prosecutors presented witnesses Tuesday during the punishment phase of the trial who accused East of several other crimes ranging from aggravated rape and armed robbery to the sexual assault of a 5-year-old boy.

Before deliberations began Tuesday, State District Judge Billy John Edwards ordered a man who identified himself as Paul Anderson of Houston, East's half-brother, jailed for 30 days for contempt of court.

Anderson shouted during final arguments Monday that "a white dude did it." When Edwards asked him if he had any reason why he should not be held in contempt, Anderson repeated the statement and said East is innocent.

"They're not going to hang my brother," he said.

Jurors still deliberating deputy's fate

HOUSTON (AP) — Prosecutors say a fired sheriff's deputy encouraged the fatal beating of a 17-year-old burglary suspect, but defense attorneys argue the officer was just doing his job.

"He was just plain mean," Assistant District Attorney Larry Schreve said of former Harris County Sheriff's Deputy William T. Gordon.

But Gordon's attorney, James Manley, contended his client had "absolutely zero control" in the death of Steven Barnette.

Jurors continue deliberations today after failing to reach a verdict Tuesday.

Gordon, 39, could be convicted of aiding or encouraging an assault on Barnette by his co-defendent, Deputy Constable Billy McCreight. Conviction carries a maximum sentence of life in prison and a $10,000 fine.

However, jurors could find Gordon guilty of abusing the prisoner by pulling his hair, stepping on his feet or striking his body and assess a sentence of up to 10 years in prison and a $5,000 fine.

Barnette was arrested March 19 for allegedly burglarizing two homes in the suburb of Channelview. He collapsed in a jail holding cell and died the following day of a ruptured spleen.

Prosecutors argued Barnette's death was directly caused by a beating while in the custody of Gordon, McCreight and former Sheriff's Deputy William F. Whigham.

Gordon and McCreight, who will be tried in October, were charged with felony civil rights violations. Whigham agreed to testify for the prosecution in exchange for a one-year probated sentence.

Schreve argued Barnette was beaten because he refused to give deputies the address of his alleged accomplice.

"But Sherlock Gordon here got the address. To me, it sounds like something out of the Middle Ages. To me, it sounds like torture," Schreve said.

Schreve also argued that deputies could have saved Barnette by telling doctors he had been beaten.

"Steven was in obvious pain. He couldn't see. He couldn't walk," he said. However, the defendant said he thought Barnette was drunk or on drugs, he said.

Defense attorneys argued Gordon was only doing his job.

"They've got to use psychology and they've got to use interrogation," Manley said.

Bell's rate increase hearing begins today

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The sixth almost-annual Southwestern Bell rate increase hearing opened today with company officials testifying they have done all they could to keep costs down, but still need $4.60 more per month from residential customers.

"We are once again faced with the pressure of inflation and the increasing demands for telephone service which cause our expenses to continue their upward spiral," said Southwestern Bell Vice President Paul Roth in prefiled testimony.

This time around the company wants $471.5 million in increased Texas rates, the largest-ever request submitted to the Public Utility Commission. PUC staff members will argue for a $304.5 million increase for the telephone company.

However, the Texas Municipal League, representing several cities served by Southwestern Bell, says only a $217.9 million hike is needed.

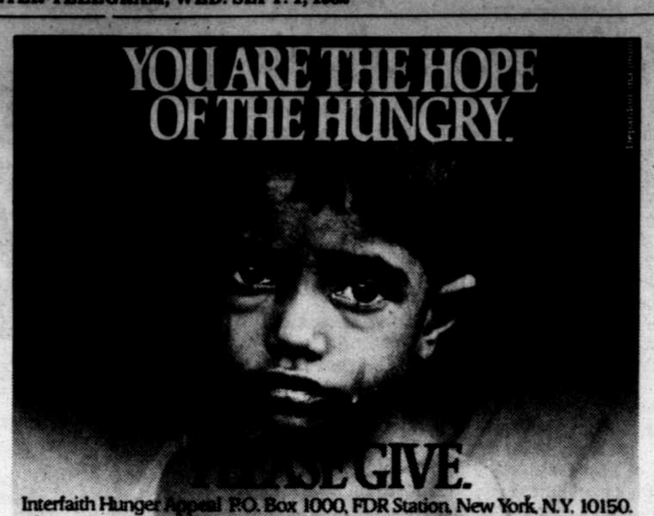

Southwestern Bell has asked for a rate increase every year since 1976, except for 1978. The telephone company filed the first-ever rate case at PUC after the commission was created in 1975.

No increase was requested in long distance rates, where Southwestern Bell faces increasing competition. TML and General Telephone, two of the approximately 20 intervenors in the case, have asked PUC to raise the Southwestern Bell long distance tolls.

The package proposed by Southwestern Bell includes a decrease from 10 to three in the number of no-charge directory assistance calls per month.

The hearing is expected to last up to eight weeks and two PUC hearing examiners have been assigned to the case. One examiner will determine how much of an increase is warranted and the other will decide which services will pay for the increase.

PUC's three members will study the hearing examiners' report and rule in the fall.

You can't afford NOT to buy any longer!

Total move in costs of $5250 is based on 5% down or $3800 plus $1450 limited closing costs based on 15 days prepaid interest. The first year's payment of $673.30 (principal and interest only) is based on a loan amount of $71,400. The first year's payment and buyer qualification will be calculated equivalent to a rate of 180 7/8% for 95% loan-to-value. Interest will be charged at a rate of 15 7/8% for the first 6 months of the loan. After the first 6 months interest will be charged at the most recent 6 months Treasury Bill plus 4.25%. Payments on these mortgages are graduated so as to increase the principal and interest payments 7.50% each year for the next 4 years. At the end of the first 5 year period, the graduation in payments will cease. A new payment schedule will be computed using a variable rate mortgage to amortize the remaining balance over the remaining 25 years of the mortgage basis upon the then current Treasury Bill rate plus 4.25%. The 7 1/2% maximum increase can be more if the original loan principal exceeds 125%. At each 5 year anniversary date, the adjusted to allow the remaining payments to fully amortize the loan. Annual percentage rate approximately 16.575%.
