Ceremony honors Old Glory, patriots

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

Call them patriots, if you like. But there are some folks who are downright sentimental about and protective of the American flag.

And it was on Flag Day, on the grounds of the Federal Aviation Administration's air-traffic control tower at Midland International Airport, that a national flag first scaled the new 20-foot flagpole there to the background music of "The Star-Spangled Banner."

The newly-christened flagpole and its setting in a Xeriscape garden are the result of a joint effort by the FAA air-traffic control staff and 15-year-old Midland Boy Scout David Leon, who designed and coordinated the event as his Eagle Scout project.

As Old Glory waved in the wind, Barbara Blocker recalled the time years ago when World War II veteran Alfred "Al" Hirt, a tank commander in Europe, cried in distress over disrespect of the flag.

The flag had been stolen from the flagpole at the Veterans of Foreign Wars Post 7208 in Midland in the mid-1980s when Hirt was post commander.

"We were all standing out there, looking up at the empty flagpole," Ms. Blocker recalled. "I said, 'Al, we can get another flag.'

"There were tears running down his face," Ms. Blocker said.

"'I know, Barbara,'" the old veteran, now 84, said and replied emphatically: "'But that's my flag. That's my flag. I fought for that flag.'"

To Hirt, who now lives in Cleburne, said "It means the same thing it always did — freedom and freedom of speech.

"That flag belongs to everyone of us," Ms. Blocker said. Its desecration at the VFW post "cut a piece out of that old man's heart."

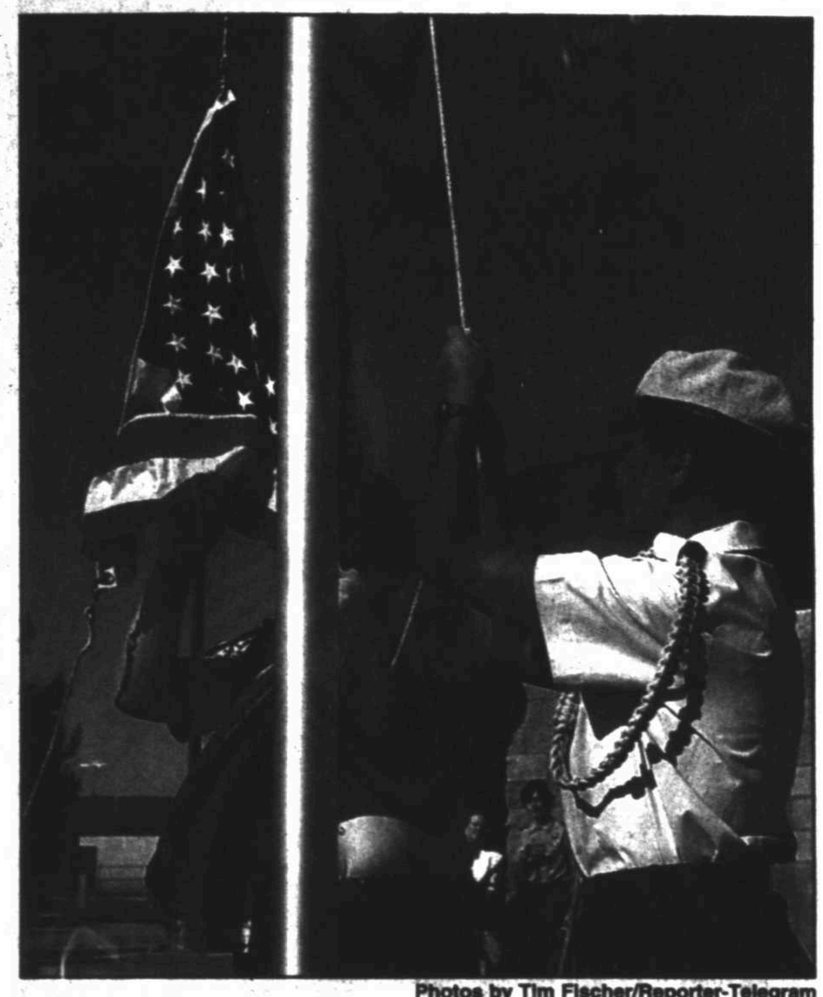

Flag Day, which was first observed in 1877, celebrates the time a hundred years earlier when the Continental Congress adopted the Stars and Stripes as the official flag of the United States.

"Our flag — the Stars and Stripes, the Star-Spangled Banner, Old Glory, the national ensign — reminds of the sacrifices made by so many patriots who have gone before us to ensure that we can enjoy life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness," said David Hafer, a 42-year-old FAA air-traffic controller who emceed the ceremony.

Leo Welch, a 78-year-old World War II U.S. Army soldier who fought in Europe, shared that perspective.

"We all did our part," Welch said of the Allied forces, including Americans, Britons and Canadians, who were in the

Basin's GOP doesn't want nasty primary

■ Three Republicans have announced candidacy for lieutenant governor seat.

By Stewart Doreen

Texas Republicans are going to want the best candidate for the lieutenant governor's post, but at what cost?

With Texas Land Commissioner David Dewhurst's announcement he will add his name to the list of Republicans seeking what is arguably the most powerful post in Texas politics — he is joining Sen. David Sibley of Waco and former Texas Supreme Court Justice Greg Abbott for what's rapidly becoming of the state's most hotly contested seats.

It is a potential dog fight with three Republicans and one Democrat going at it, and the winner may get damaged in the process, which is something Permian Basin Republicans would rather not see.

"If it does happen, it will harm the Republican effort in the fall," said Odessa businessman Bob Barnes, who might run for state senator should Teel Bivins opt to step down from his District 31 seat. "They don't need to be trashing each other. They need to run a clean race, stick to the issues and let the people know what they stand for. Then they can go forward into the fall, and hopefully, win there, too."

Frank Cahoon — a former state representative in Midland (1964-68) — said there is the potential of the Republicans going through a "spirited race."

"When you have a multitude of candidates, you create a competitive race," Cahoon said.

In particular, Cahoon said Dewhurst is attempting to get as many county

Officers train to detect drug influenced drivers

By Kristine Aleman
MRT Correspondent

Local law enforcement officers will be detecting more than just alcohol in intoxicated drivers after completing a drug recognition course hosted by the Midland Police Department.

The Drug Recognition Expert (DRE) course began last week and is continuing with hands-on work until July 30. Officers are learning how to detect drivers who are under the influence of substances other than alcohol.

"This training is very important in our area due to the fact that there are more and more intoxicated drivers using drugs," said David Galvan, DPS trooper and DRE student. "It is a real extensive course and has been really stressful."

The 10 officers participating study all different drug categories by completing a systematic standardized 12-step evaluation, including measuring a subject's pulse, temperature, attitude and coordination.

"The evaluation tells and shows us what category of drug that person is influenced by right now, instead of the toxicology samples, or urine samples that can record drug intoxication from up to two months

Senate passes education bill requiring annual tests

By David Espo
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — In a triumph for President Bush, the Senate overwhelmingly passed groundbreaking education legislation Thursday that requires annual math and reading tests for millions of schoolchildren as part of an effort to improve the nation's public schools.

The vote was 91-8, and set the stage for a summer of negotiations on a final compromise among the White House, the GOP-controlled House and the Senate, newly under Democratic management.

President Bush, traveling in Europe, issued a statement that hailed the vote and said it meant "we are close to a monumental achievement with bipartisan support. As a result of our efforts, we have wide agreement on the principles of education reform."

Senate passage came after a bumpy, last-minute detour into the emotionally charged issue of the Boy Scouts and homosexuality.

On a vote of 51-49, the Senate approved a proposal by Jesse Helms, R-N.C., to strip federal funding from any school district that discriminates against the Scouts or similar groups that "pro-

Unemployment inches higher, but Basin fares better than big markets

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

Though Midland-Odessa unemployment inched higher in May, the region fared better than the state's larger metropolitan regions, according to the Texas Workforce Commission.

The unemployment rate in the commission's Midland-Odessa metropolitan statistical area inched up to 4 percent from 3.8 percent in April but is below the 5.6 percent seen last May.

Phil Arnold, information specialist with the commission in Austin, pointed out the increase was smaller than that seen by Austin, whose rate rose 0.6 percent; Dallas, 0.4 percent; Fort Worth or Houston, who had 0.3 percent each.

"Odessa-Midland is following the state trend except you're not having nearly the unemployment claims as Dallas, Fort Worth, Austin or

CRC program trains teens for work force

Teen-agers at the Midland Children's Rehabilitation Center are getting some training this summer by learning the skills and gaining the experience they need to enter the work force.

It is all part of a new pilot program at the Rehabilitation Center, which provides occupational and physical therapy services for children with disabilities. The program is now in its second week.

"The kids notice that our volunteers come here to work and don't see much of a difference between the volunteers and them," said Margaret Byrne, occupational therapy assistant. "They've been asking to work for a long time, so we started this pilot program."

Through an anonymous grant, four teen-agers are given the opportunity to work two hours a day, three days a week with pay. While they

U.S. soldiers don black berets for first time

By Elliott Minor
Associated Press

FORT BENNING, Ga. — Spc. Angela Pena spent two hours shaping and adjusting her new black beret, saying she didn't want to look like "a French baker."

She and thousands of other U.S. soldiers, from the 38th Parallel in Korea to offices a world away from danger, replaced their baseball-style field caps and other headgear with black berets Thursday in a move intended to boost morale.

Pena will wear hers as a clerk here at the home of Army's elite Rangers, once the only U.S. soldiers who could wear black berets.

"I like it. I think it looks very professional," said Pena, 22. "You just have to shape it to make sure it looks right."

Army Chief of Staff Gen. Eric Shinseki ordered the change in October. Some Rangers grumbled, saying giving everyone the black berets cheapened something they had earned through their grueling training. In a compromise, they will be issued distinct tan berets next month.

Although active-duty soldiers refuse to criticize the change openly, some retired Rangers have opposed letting others wear what had been the exclusive headgear of the Rangers since 1974. The 2,000-person force takes on some of the military's most hazardous missions.

"Putting the black beret on our soldiers' heads to make them feel good is nothing more than putting a Band-Aid on a sucking chest wound," said Emmett Hiltibrand, a Vietnam veteran and president of the 75th Ranger Regiment Association. "We haven't put much emphasis on training. We've put emphasis on feeling good and touchy-feely."

Only two other Army groups had been authorized to wear berets: Airborne (maroon) and Special Forces (green).

Shinseki has said the new berets will unify the force as it is reshaped for a world without a Cold War and a clear enemy. He said he developed the idea at a ceremony attended by smartly dressed Rangers last year at Fort Bragg, N.C.

Capt. Melanie Sloan, who works in a blood bank at Fort Bragg, said the new headgear would be appreciated by hospital workers.

"Us folks are here behind the scenes doing stuff for those soldiers," she said. "They're trying to make us all equal."

Hours earlier in Seoul, South Korea, 700 soldiers standing in formation removed their old camouflage hats and donned black berets in unison.

"The sun shines first on the tip of the spear, and Eighth Army is proud to lead the Army this morning by donning a symbol of unity, commitment to excellence and agility: the black beret," said Lt. Gen. Daniel R. Zanini, chief of staff of the 8th U.S. Army in Korea.

Each new beret is emblazoned with a blue patch representing the Continental Army, with 13 stars for the original colonies.

"It's tacky. What's with the blue?" she said. "The green would probably match the uniforms better."

Retired Ranger Robert Haywood wore his black beret to the Atlanta ceremony and criticized the Army. He said the Pentagon should have given everyone else the tan berets and allowed the Rangers to keep their symbol.

"The Rangers had such a good reputation, they are trying to build up the Army by letting them wear our berets," he said.

The beret replaces several other hats, but helmets and camouflage caps still will be worn during deployments, field training and in combat.

Only a third of the Army's 336,000 soldiers had their berets in time for ceremonies Thursday. Production was delayed when members of Congress complained the Pentagon had used foreign manufacturers, including some from China. The Pentagon will not issue $4 million worth of Chinese berets to soldiers and plans to sell most of them in surplus stores.

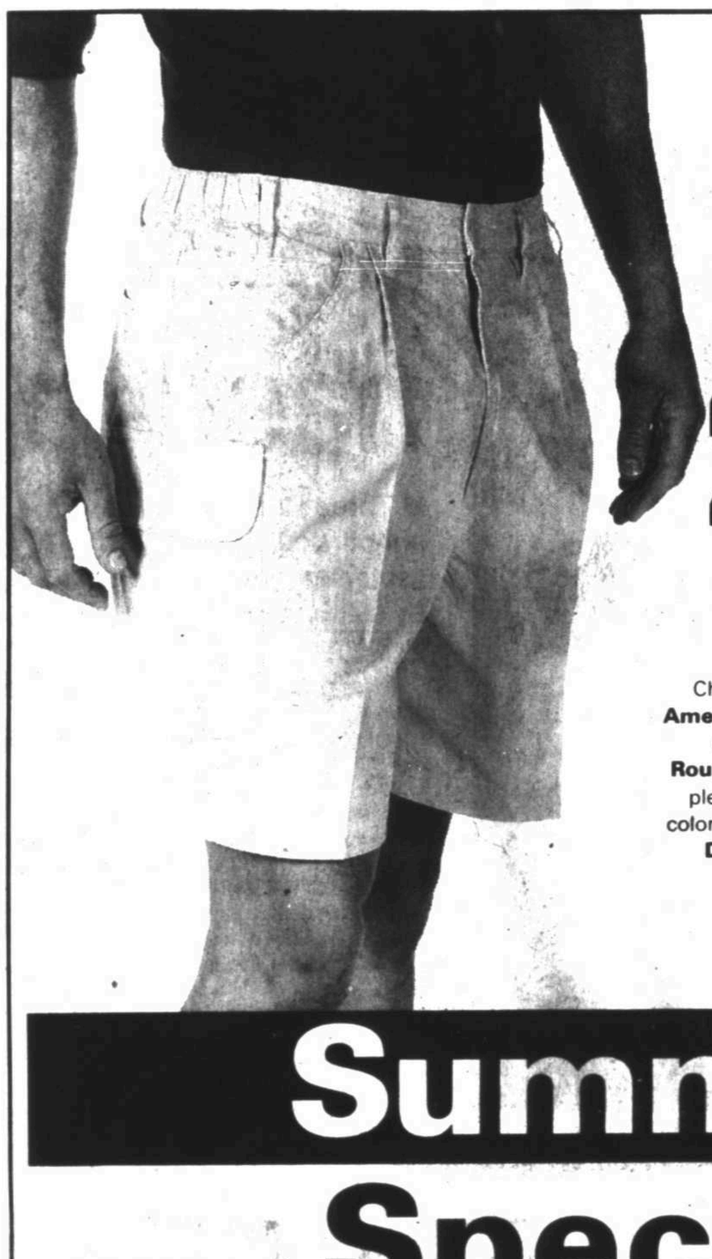

Some soldiers complained the berets are impractical. It has no bill to protect from the sun, it loses shape in your pocket and some women say the beret can only be properly worn with flat hair.

"If it's worn right, it looks good," said Command Sgt. Maj. Jeff Kennedy, a Valdese, N.C. resident based in Friedberg, Germany. "But you have to shape it and shave it every week and that's a lot of work."

Unrest abroad sparks alerts for vacationing Americans

By Nancy Benac
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Americans abducted in the Philippines. Unrest in Nepal. Terrorist threats from groups linked to Osama bin Laden.

Headlines around the world are giving travelers fresh incentive to keep alert for warnings before venturing off to distant lands.

In the past three weeks alone, the State Department has issued 17 new or updated travel warnings and other statements to advise Americans of concerns in countries from A to Y — Algeria to Yemen.

One was a "worldwide caution" that Americans abroad may be the targets of extremist groups tied to bin Laden's organization. Another warned about the dangers of travel in certain areas of the Philippines, where Muslim rebels last month abducted 20 tourists including three Americans, one of whom they claim to have beheaded.

The advisories are monitored by travel agents and tour companies, which combine that information with their own feedback from abroad in deciding whether to cancel or alter trips.

But ultimately, individual travelers make the final call.

"The world is a very, very big place, and if you feel uncomfortable with the notion of going to Nepal suddenly, it's OK," said Don George, travel editor of Lonely Planet guidebooks. "You should look around and choose Thailand or France or someplace else."

Washingtonian Leslie Morgan, planning a three-week trip to China and Hong Kong with her 85-year-old father, jokes about ending up in a Chinese prison camp but shows no qualms about making the trip despite recent tensions between Beijing and Washington.

"Most of the world is pretty friendly," Morgan, 50, said after visiting a passport office. "But you check out the tours and you check out the warnings that the government puts out."

College student Brian Wendroff, planning visits to Europe and South America, said he'd think twice about going to a country the State Department warned against.

"I'd just kind of balance them and see if it's worth it," said Wendroff, a student at George Mason University in northern Virginia.

Tour company Saga Holidays, which has a tour of Nepal scheduled for September, says it hasn't gotten any calls from concerned travelers despite recent violence there sparked by a murderous royal rampage.

Saga plans to monitor State Department travel warnings before deciding whether to pull the tour, said Kerry Crisley, speaking for the Boston-based company.

"If our customers are nervous or they're not able to see everything that's part of the service, then it might be worthwhile to postpone things," she added.

The State Department issued an announcement that "strongly recommends that American citizens defer travel to Nepal" because of unrest after the June 1 assassination of the king and other members of the royal family.

Such government announcements detail risks that may be confined to certain areas or are linked to a specific event, such as an anniversary that may stoke local anti-American sentiment.

These announcements are temporary and have expiration dates, unlike State Department "travel warnings," which urge Americans not to visit certain countries and stand until further notice. At present, there are travel warnings in effect for 28 countries, and almost that many additional announcements.

Some foreign governments and tourism boards have accused the State Department of using its travel assessments for political reasons, criticism dismissed by Karolina Walkin, a spokeswoman for the agency's consular affairs bureau.

"When it comes to the safety of American citizens, this is not an issue determined by political considerations but rather by safety and security issues," she said.

The agency put Israel on its warning list for the first time last October and issued an update earlier this year, warning Americans to defer all travel there because of "heightened threat of terrorist incidents." Geoffrey Weill, a spokesman for Israel's tourism ministry, called the warning "very fierce," and said the government should change its wording so travelers don't feel they are being told what to do.

Other countries also offer their citizens advice on traveling abroad — including trips to the United States. Britain, for example, includes special notes urging visitors to Florida to be "vigilant about their personal safety" and advising tourists in Cincinnati, the site of April rioting, to "stay off the streets after the close of the normal working day."

Thanks to the Internet, travelers have instant access to a variety of travel assessments — sometimes with dramatically different conclusions.

The State Department, for example, warns U.S. citizens against visiting Libya because of "hostility to the United States in some segments of the population and some elements of the Libyan government."

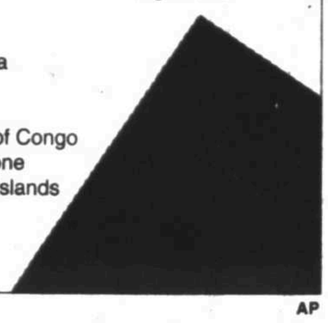

The Australia-based Lonely Planet, meanwhile, offers this: "Despite the country's demonization in Western mass media, most travelers who have visited Libya report having a grand old time. The Libyan people enjoy a well-earned reputation for kindness and hospitality toward visitors."

Travel at your own risk

The State Department issues "travel warnings" and "public announcements" for Americans who may travel abroad. Travel warnings urge Americans not to go until further notice. Public announcements urge Americans to avoid certain parts of a country or advise of other special risks that may be temporary. Here are the countries listed in the report.

RACE: Campaign costs could be another issue

chairmen to support him as possible.

"That will make it a more intense race — and maybe more controversial within the party," Cahoon said. "It is a pure primary. I am very surprised county leaders and county chairmen would support one candidate over another."

Campaign cost also could be another issue. On June 5, current Lt. Gov. Bill Ratliff stated he didn't like the politics involved in running what could be a $10 million campaign.

Dewhurst — who expects his campaign will have raised $1 million in June — has repeatedly said, "At the end of the day, I won't be outspent."

Awaiting the winner of the Republican primary in November of 2002 will be a Democrat with fewer scratches — probably former Texas Comptroller John Sharp.

And despite the Republican's recent success in major statewide elections, Cahoon warns despite losing to Rick Perry in the 1998 lieutenant governor's race, Sharp is not damaged goods.

"John Sharp is a viable candidate," Cahoon said. "He has lost an election, so anytime you lose, you lose some of your viability, but he is a very viable candidate."

Today, Midland Republicans can hear Dewhurst, a Houston millionaire, as he enters the final day of a three-day, nine-city Texas tour to kick off his candidacy. After a 10 a.m. stop at Midland County Republican Headquarters on 407 E. Illinois St., Dewhurst will make appearances in Lubbock and Amarillo.

In a press release, Dewhurst says the tour will allow Texans to know he is a conservative leader who does what he says.

In an interview with the Reporter-Telegram, Dewhurst stated he will not get involved in the mudslinging and name-calling. He wants his record to speak for itself.

"I am hoping that ultimately we can all unite behind our candidacy and avoid a divisive primary," Dewhurst said.

As land commissioner, Dewhurst cut the ageney's budget by 23.5 percent in 1995 and then again by five percent in 2001 while reducing work force and increasing new services.

"Those are fine gentlemen, and they will have to do what is best for them, but I have an unblemished record in business and as land commissioner, providing more services for Texas while lowering costs of government," Dewhurst said.

While the state is leaning more toward the right with every election, it may seem like total Republican control is imminent. The State Senate is barely Republican. The House is expected to favor Republicans after the next redistricting. The state's major officials — governor, lieutenant governor, attorney general, comptroller, land commissioner — are all Republican.

That makes winning the lieutenant governor's race that important. As the presiding officer in the Senate, the lieutenant governor has been called the most powerful man in Texas government with the authority to control the flow of legislation and name committee members.

"As the state becomes more Republican in its attitude, if the right guy is there (in the lieutenant governor's seat), he could be as powerful as some of the lieutenant governors in the past," Midland County Republican Chairman Sue Brannon said.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

BILL: Measure calls for $15 million more than proposed

hibit the acceptance of homosexuals." But opponents countered by winning swift approval of a proposal barring schools from denying access to any youth group, Boy Scouts included, on the basis of their views on sexual orientation.

The clash over the Scouts provided a noisy conclusion to seven arduous weeks of debate on the issue atop Bush's agenda — and a bill that senators in both parties agreed would mark a fundamental shift in the federal government's role in education.

"What we passed today is not a Democratic bill or a Republican bill — but an education bill," said Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., the chairman of the Education Committee.

Republicans sounded pleased as well. "A lot of his (Bush's) agenda is in this bill," said the GOP leader, Sen. Trent Lott of Mississippi.

At the same time, maneuvering was already under way in advance of House-Senate negotiations. Lott said the funding in the measure "got out of control." Bush said that "additional spending on education s ly is justified." But, he added, "In the past, increased spending and the creation of multiple new programs have not improved student achievement."

Majority Leader Tom Daschle, D-S.D., said there wasn't enough money. "We can't have reform without resources and that's the next step," he said.

In all, the Senate-passed measure called for roughly $15 billion more spending than Bush has proposed for next year alone. The companion House-passed measure calls for funding between the White House and Senate levels.

The Senate measure is a bipartisan culmination of Bush's campaign pledge to fix the nation's public schools. It would require states to administer annual math and reading tests to students in grades three through eight. Schools with low test scores would receive additional aid, but if a school failed to show enough progress after two years, low-income students would be free to transfer to another public school. After three years, the same students would be permitted to use federal funds for tutoring or transportation to another public school.

All schools would receive some additional flexibility in their use of federal funds as part of the effort to improve. In addition, a small number of states and school districts would qualify for an experimental program with far fewer restrictions on the use of federal funds, part of an effort to see whether that could raise student performance.

The framework of the measure was fixed during weeks of negotiations involving the White House, Senate Republicans and Democrats led by Kennedy.

All sides gained concessions in some areas, and gave them in others. The bill contains far more money than many Republicans favor, for example, and lacks the type of expansive flexibility that many GOP senators wanted for school districts around the country. On the other hand, Kennedy agreed to the pilot program known as Straight A's, to the discomfort of teacher unions who are traditional Democratic allies.

Passage of the bill came by an unexpectedly lopsided margin. Opponents included GOP Sens. Helms, Robert Bennett of Utah, John Kyl of Arizona, Don Nickles and Jim Inhofe of Oklahoma and George Voinovich of Ohio. Democrats Ernest Hollings of South Carolina and Russell Feingold of Wisconsin also voted against the measure. Sen. Daniel Inouye, D-Hawaii, didn't vote.

Helms injected last-minute controversy into the education debate with his amendment, which he said was triggered by last year's Supreme Court ruling that upheld a national Boy Scouts policy banning gay members and leaders. The North Carolina Republican cited numerous examples in which local schools or school districts had excluded scouts from the use of facilities — evidence, he said, of discrimination.

To critics of the amendment, he said, "it bears out exactly what I was told was going on in the way of lining up of opposition on the other side to this amendment by the homosexual and lesbian leaders in this area."

"Here is an organization that's been next to God and country, mom and apple pie for as long as we can think of, and now it's being pursued," said Sen. Sam Brownback, R-Kan.

mostly work around the building taking care of office chores and housekeeping, the teens also get lessons in work behavior, ethics and responsibility.

"We want to guide them to the skills they need for realistic work opportunities," Ms. Byrne said. "By the candor they have with evaluating themselves, I know that most of them are being realistic. They like to see the cause and effect of working."

Each day the teens sign a job contract listing their assignment for the day. At the end of their two hours, the workers have a chance to be evaluated by the supervisors and by themselves. Their day's pay relies on the evaluations.

"I supervise them to make sure they do everything correctly, but also to make sure they do it on their own," said Jessie Fiske, a senior at Midland High School and a summer employee of the Rehabilitation Center. "I usually just have to explain things once and they just do it from there."

The teens spend their work time cleaning equipment, washing and folding towels from their swimming exercises at COM and copying papers. Each chore teaches the teens a valuable lesson. They also participate in a Tae Kwan Do class.

"Working helps me to be experienced with people and the different machines we use," said Crystal Hallmeyer, 18, who enjoys office work the most.

Marisa Madrid, 16, stumbled upon one of her jobs after supervisors noticed her ability to speak Spanish fluently. She occasionally helps interpret documents for people as well communicate with Spanish-speaking patients.

"My favorite job is interpreting because it's the easiest," Miss Madrid said. "But I'm learning how to be a responsible person and maybe I'll be interested in something like this for the future."

Although the workers take their chores seriously, Miss Fiske said when the atmosphere gets a little boring, someone steps in to liven things up.

"I've been here for 16 years," Miss Madrid said. "I think it's worth it to make someone laugh."

CEREMONY: Color guard from Midland High raise flag

(From 1A)

June 1944 D-Day Normandy Invasion and days to follow to defeat the Axis powers' Nazi Germany.

"Plus, the folks back home did their part, too," Welch said. "Without the folks back home, we wouldn't have done anything (toward winning the war)."

Welch said his wave of forces "got hit almost immediately" by the German defenders.

"That flag means a lot to me, yes, sir," Welch said. "I get kind of choked up when you talk about that Old Glory. It's a good thing."

And he applauded David Leon, who volunteered to take on the flagpole-garden project toward earning his Eagle Scout rank with the help of his father, FAA air-traffic controller John Leon, the FAA Midland staff and Boy Scouts of America Troop 175.

"I did the design," David Leon said, and — with the aid of his troop — "cleared the rocks, and we put in the plants" designed for landscaping in a semi-arid or drought-like conditions.

Gary Farnum, an airways-facilities FAA technician, installed the flagpole and the electrical-lighting lines and irrigation system.

A color guard of the U.S. Air Force's Junior Reserve Officers' Training Corps at Midland High School raised the flag.

"Old Glory represents a great country that I'm glad I was born in," the Leon youth said. "I've been to other countries, and I'm thankful that I didn't grow up in some place that is constantly in civil war like a lot of places in the Mid-East and Europe."

His father, John Leon, noted his children "have been brought up in flag etiquette. And they've learned a lot about the flag.

"We thought it was important both for the federal facility to have a flag and also to honor the flag," John Leon said. "People take this country for granted so much. And there have been so many people that have gone before that have given everything that they have — given their lives and all for this country. And I just think we are so complacent these days."

The senior Leon said he is "very proud of David and Troop 175" for their work on the project. "The Boy Scouts is a very patriotic organization" and holds onto "traditional values heading back toward the founding of the country."

The youth's grandfather, Maurice Wheeler, was a "Hump pilot" who flew the C-46 Commando and the C-47 Skytrain over the Himalaya Mountains in the World War II's China-Burma-India Theater, John Leon said.

Andi Ramaker, the FAA air-traffic manager in Midland, encouraged the flagpole-garden project.

"It is important that we honor the country that we serve by having the flag out there for everyone to see," Ms. Ramaker said. "It was important to everyone in this facility to get that flagpole."

Houston. The reason that's happening is there's been a lot of lay offs," he said.

"At 4 percent, Odessa-Midland is lower than the state," he added. The state rate was 4.5 percent, up from 4.3 percent in April.

The city of Midland unemployment rate was 3.2 percent in May, compared with 3.1 percent in April and 4.8 percent last year.

Also up was the Odessa-Midland labor force, which grew to 118,365 from 117,227 in April and from 117,448 last May. The number of employed residents rose to 113,651 from 112,716 in April and from 110,889 a year earlier while the number of unemployed residents rose to 4,714 from 4,511 in April. There were 6,559 unemployed residents last year.

"This is typical of university students coming back and taking jobs," Arnold said of the results, also illustrated by a 400-job increase in trade employment, of which 300 jobs were in the retail sector.

June results, he said, should also bear out the trend of rising unemployment as summer job seekers enter the market.

While nonagricultural employment grew by 900 jobs in May, employment in the mining sector — primarily oil and gas extraction — was unchanged at 12,000 in May. That figure, however, is 1,000 jobs or 9.1 percent better than the 11,000 employed in the sector last year.

"There's been substantial improvement," Arnold said. "You're doing better than the state average."

Odessa-Midland ranked 16th among the commission's 27 MSAs. The lowest rate was in Bryan-College Station, 1.5 percent, followed by Lubbock, 2.2 percent, San Angelo, 2.5 percent, Amarillo, 2.8 percent and Wichita Falls, 3 percent. The highest rate in the state was McAllen-Edinburg-Mission, 10.6 percent. The border areas, Arnold said, were the only areas of the state to see a drop in unemployment rates.

Statewide, the number of employed Texans grew by 17,200 over the month.

However, 260,000 more Texans were employed in May compared to the same period a year ago, commission Chair Diane Rath said.

Nonagricultural jobs increased by 21,200 in May with the service industry, the state's largest industry, accounting for a major portion of those jobs — 13,600 jobs.

"This represents a significant 4.4 percent annual growth rate," said T.P. Mahoney, commissioner for labor.

Meanwhile, transportation, communications and public utilities added 1,400 jobs in May.

DRE: Drugs classified into seven categories ago," said Craig Matthews, MPD patrol officer and DRE instructor.

DRE classifies the drugs into seven categories: central nervous system depressants, central nervous system stimulants, hallucinogens, narcotic analgesics, inhalants and cannabis.

During class, students get the opportunity to participate in "mock-evaluations" with instructors as subjects. As part of the course, they will also practice evaluations on this weekend's arrested, most of whom are usually willing to participate, Matthews said.

"Most of us have gone through DWI training. This is just a step forward in recognizing intoxicated drivers by other substances and keeping our streets safe," said Tom Swearingen, McCulloch County Sheriff's Department deputy.

The classes, which are nationwide, have been very thorough and well-coordinated, he said. Every student is taught the same curriculum so each DRE can read and understand the evaluation of another.

"If we do an evaluation on our subject, then there's not a whole lot we don't know," Matthews said.

Matthews is one of two DRE's in the Midland Police Department. After training, MPD will have three more DRE's on staff.

Lab study finds possible villainy in vitamin C pills

By Paul Recer
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The vitamin C pills taken by millions of health-conscious Americans may actually help produce toxins that can damage their DNA, a step toward forming cancer cells, a laboratory study suggests.

In a study appearing today in the journal Science, University of Pennsylvania researchers said they found in test tube experiments analyzing the action of vitamin C that the nutrient can act as a catalyst to help make a toxin that can injure DNA, the body's genetic code.

The findings do not mean that vitamin C causes cancer, said Ian A. Blair, lead author of the study, but the research does sound a warning about the use of vitamin C pills.

"Vitamin C can do some good things, but it can do some bad things as well," Blair said. "If you really wanted to be cautious, you just wouldn't use supplementation (vitamin pills.)"

Instead of pills, Blair said people can get all the nutrients they need through a balanced diet, particularly fruits, vegetables and grains.

Balz Frei, a professor at the Linus Pauling Institute at Oregon State University, said the Blair study "is an important finding in understanding the chemistry of vitamin C." He cautioned that the results come from a test tube study, which involves chemicals in glass lab dishes, and that the same action may not occur in living animals.

In the study, Blair and his colleagues analyzed the effects of vitamin C on lipid hydroperoxide, a compound produced in the body from fat in the diet. Lipid hydroperoxide can be converted in the cell into agents, called genotoxins, that can damage DNA.

Blair said his group found that vitamin C was highly efficient in converting lipid hydroperoxide into the gene-damaging toxins.

"Just because you damage DNA doesn't mean you'll get cancer," Blair said. "The cell has an exquisite repair mechanism for lesions in the DNA."

Blair said the research may explain the failure of studies that have attempted to show vitamin C can protect against cancer.

"There are two camps — people who think vitamin C supplementation is good for you and those who think it is bad for you," he said. "There is a paucity of any scientific evidence that it is really good for you."

Vitamin C supplementation includes not just pills, but also the addition of artificial forms of the nutrient to foods, such as juices, cereals and even candies.

The popularity among health-conscious Americans for popping vitamin C pills was boosted by Linus Pauling, a Nobel-prize-winning chemist who advocated large doses of the vitamin. He routinely took 15 grams daily and was 93 years old when he died in 1994.

However, Frei, a nutrient expert at the institution named for Pauling, said such large doses of vitamin C have not been proven to be beneficial in clinical studies.

"The Linus Pauling Institute does not endorse megadoses," Frei said. "Our advice is to eat a healthy diet rich in fruits and vegetables."

Vitamin C is an antioxidant. It neutralizes oxygen free radicals, which are metabolic products in the cell that can damage DNA. Some researchers have speculated that because of its antioxidant action, large doses of the vitamin could prevent cancer, strengthen the immune system and prevent the common cold.

Clinical studies, though, have been disappointing, said Frei.

"Vitamin C does not prevent a cold," he said, although some studies suggest the nutrient may hasten recovery.

Vitamin C can help patients lower high blood pressure, and Frei said some studies have suggested that "people in a disease state," such as an infection, may be helped by vitamin C.

Asked if healthy people benefit from vitamin C supplements, he said: "I don't think we could say that."

The Institute of Medicine, an arm of the National Academy of Sciences, recommends that women need 75 milligrams of vitamin C daily and 90 milligrams for men. Smokers need an additional 35 milligrams. These are levels easily achieved by a balanced diet.

Much more than that is generally useless, said Frei. A healthy body can absorb about 200 milligrams a day and the surplus is carried away with urine.

Survivors of border crossing continue wait for clearance

PHOENIX (AP) — Eleven border crossing survivors considered key witnesses in the trial against their alleged Mexican smuggler are being detained in U.S. custody because of a delay processing their work permits.

The men, from the Mexican states of Veracruz and Guerrero, are considered key witnesses against Jesus Lopez-Ramos, 20, of Sonoyta, Mexico, the 12th survivor of the crossing that left 14 dead.

The men were to have been released Wednesday. They have been held by U.S. authorities since last month, when U.S. authorities rescued them in the desert east of Yuma, Ariz.

On Monday, they were taken to San Luis Rio Colorado, Mexico, across the border from Yuma, so that the Border Patrol could make them re-enter the United States with their temporary work permits.

They returned to Phoenix and will work there for the duration of the trial.

Immigration and Naturalization officials referred calls to the U.S. Attorney's Office, who refused to comment on the delay.

President Bush looks to future in European trip

It seems President Bush has been the target of a great deal of criticism during his first trip to Europe. That criticism is not warranted and we have to wonder about its source.

The president's critics have repeatedly implied that he lacks the knowledge, depth and understanding necessary to deal with our friends in Europe.

We would beg to differ.

While it's true President Bush's political experience is limited to his tenure as governor here in Texas, he's certainly surrounded himself with top-notch foreign policy advisors including Condoleezza Rice and Colin Powell. And although the president is reluctant to play up family ties, many of us believe he learned a thing or two from his father, well-regarded for his expertise in foreign policy.

President Bush's speech this week before members of the NATO alliance sounded themes that have become familiar to many of us — we must find a way to work together, be inclusive and not try to ignore the challenges we face.

The president may have ruffled a few feathers, but spoke the truth when he warned NATO members, "We must strengthen our alliance, modernize our forces and prepare for new threats."

In this trip to Europe, many have likened President Bush to President Reagan who upon his first official visit to Europe was seen as a maverick westerner with radical ideas. Of course, historians today continue to give the foxlike Ronald Reagan greater credit for ending the Cold War and strengthening ties with our European allies.

Today, the cast of characters in Europe is very different from those in Reagan's day. The very Bill Clinton-like Tony Blair now resides in 10 Downing Street, rather than conservative Margaret Thatcher. The outlandish Gerhard Schroeder is now chancellor of Germany, rather than the pragmatic Helmut Kohl. And while President Reagan, followed by President George H. W. Bush, worked hard to bridge the gap with the Soviet Union's Mikhail Gorbachev, our new president faces a much greater challenge with Russian President Vladimir Putin. Our European friends, particularly France, have been extremely vocal about our tenuous relations with Russia. President Bush also caused a minor stir when he reiterated that Eastern European countries ought to be considered for NATO membership.

We have faith in President Bush, his team of seasoned advisors and the forward-thinking agenda the White House team appears to be developing. It is an agenda that will be good for America, as well as our European friends.

But it takes time to develop new relationships and trust. That's what President Bush's trip to Europe is all about.

There are many critics out there eager to tear down President Bush, and they immediately point to innocent mispronunciations as "evidence" of inexperience in foreign policy.

We remain proud of our president and applaud him for taking this trip and working to strengthen our ties with Europe. The United States has a unique role in global affairs as champion of freedom and democracy. We have no doubt President Bush understands this responsibility.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Friday, June 15, the 166th day of 2001. There are 199 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On June 15, 1215, King John put his seal to Magna Carta ("the Great Charter") at Runnymede, England, granting his barons more liberty.

On this date:

In 1520, Pope Leo X threatened to excommunicate Martin Luther if he did not recant his religious beliefs.

In 1775, the Second Continental Congress voted unanimously to appoint George Washington head of the Continental Army.

In 1836, Arkansas became the 25th state.

In 1844, Charles Goodyear received a patent for his process to strengthen rubber.

In 1849, James Polk, the 11th president of the United States, died in Nashville, Tenn.

In 1864, Secretary of War Edwin M. Stanton signed an order establishing a military burial ground, which became Arlington National Cemetery.

In 1944, American forces began their successful invasion of Saipan during World War II. Meanwhile, B-29 Superfortresses made their first raids on Japan.

In 1978, King Hussein of Jordan married 26-year-old American Lisa Halaby, who became Queen Noor.

Ten years ago: India concluded its violence-racked elections, with the Congress Party of recently assassinated former Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi gaining a plurality of votes.

Chess does wonders for inner-city kids

WASHINGTON — Ever heard of the Dark Knights? They're from Mont Hall, one of Harlem's worst performing middle schools until a real estate and construction magnate named Dan Rose entered the picture. Last spring the Dark Knights ranked No. 1 in the United States national school chess competitions. They learned to play at the chess program sponsored by the Harlem Educational Activities Fund (HEAF), founded by Rose.

Anderson

Moreover, program director Maurice Ashley is the only African American to become an international chess grandmaster. He's so good that Wynton Marsalis drops by the center to play both jazz and chess. Chess, says Ashley, imparts intellectual rigor as well as life lessons. The New York Police Athletic League agrees, and its officers have provided space for the program. It's part of an ambitious effort launched by Rose 10 years ago to take inner-city students through middle school to high school and then through college with the full expectation that they will join the American mainstream.

Currently HEAF has a full-time staff of 12 educators and social workers, over 40 part-time assistants, an additional 40 volunteers and an annual budget of $1.5 million. Its success has been stunning: By last fall, 78 of its Central Harlem students, many of them the first members of their families to finish high school, were in colleges such as Harvard, Haverford, Bryn Mawr, Barnard and Cornell. Not one of HEAF's students has ever dropped out of school. And though the program offers no sex education or contraceptives, only one young woman has had a baby and only one male student has fathered a child. Both are continuing in college.

What is HEAF's secret? It's summed up in Rose's philosophy: We want to engage our students, he said, "not only in 'schooling' but in 'learning' (which includes reading, travel, music, art, the theater and all other things which bring knowledge and delight); learning which will help them not only in 'getting a job' but in 'pursuing a career,' learning which, in turn, will help them not only in making a living but also in leading a life that is satisfying, productive and fulfilling."

With this goal ever in mind, HEAF has done more than work with educators at Columbia University to rewire Mont Hall and put together a program there in computer hardware, software and the Internet. It has done more than prepare students to take the entrance exam for New York's elite public high schools. It has done more, too, than conduct workshops in note-taking, study habits, time management and research techniques. It has done more, also, than lead students in the development of business plans for restaurants.

In addition to all of these efforts, HEAF has arranged scholarships to summer camps in Maine for 10 to 12 year olds, where one HEAF student was elected "camper of the year."

Rose also engaged Denise Woods, an African American actress at the Julliard School, to conduct classes in proper breathing and speaking. The idea is to prepare students for a larger world and to be sure they feel comfortable and confident there.

"Our students understand that we know and respect them as individuals," said Rose, "that HEAF is with them for the long haul." But the students must do their part. They must agree that HEAF will receive copies of their report cards. "They know," explained Rose, "that HEAF is 'on their team' but that in order to do our job, we have to be fully informed of their activities."

Several Texas polls will show you the money

Rich candidates aren't new in Texas politics, but there could be a bumper crop of them running next year.

Land Commissioner David Dewhurst's announcement Wednesday for the GOP lieutenant governor's nomination wasn't exactly news, since his fat wallet helped convince Acting Lt. Gov. Bill Ratliff and Comptroller Carole Keeton Rylander to pass on the race. Dewhurst proved in 1998 that while money might not be able to buy happiness, it can sure help for a down-ballot statewide office. Now he'll see if his personal fortune can help him a little higher up the ballot.

The reason money is so important is it pays for the consultants, pollsters, media advisers, direct mail specialists, phone banks, other organizational help, and biggest of all, buying time for TV ads.

McNeely

While voters will say too much money is spent on politics, they also won't vote for somebody unless they've heard of them. Texas has 21 million people and 19 media markets. It takes either money, or inherited name ID like George Bush's, to get voters' attention.

Others with at least eight-digit net worths include:

— Democratic gubernatorial hopeful Tony Sanchez of Laredo, with a fortune from oil and gas and banking — and who some say recently proved he's serious about running by shaving his mustache.

— Former UT quarterback Marty Akins of Marble Falls, another Democratic gubernatorial candidate, a wealthy trial lawyer once associated with legendary Houston attorney Joe Jamail. He is already boasting of hiring national firms for media, polling, opposition research and direct mail.

— Rep. Kenn (cq) George, R-Dallas, who made millions in oil and then buying and selling hospitals. He's eyeing the Land Commissioner slot Dewhurst is vacating.

Rich Texas candidates from past years include some winners:

— Former Republican Gov. Bill Clements. In 1978, he told GOP voters his fortune guaranteed he wouldn't "run out of gas in the fourth quarter" against a Democrat. He crushed the GOP state chairman at the time, former state Rep. Ray Hutchison (husband of now-U.S. Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison) and indeed upset Democratic nominee John L. Hill — another multimillionaire.

— Former Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby, who in 1972 used his family's newspaper and TV wealth to beat three state senators for the Democratic nomination — including former Gov. John Connally's brother Wayne — and coasted to victory in November.

— Former U.S. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen's family wealth was at least a start in helping him wrest the 1970 Democratic nomination away from populist U.S.. Sen. Ralph Yarborough. Bentsen then beat a Republican named George Bush.

Three whose money helped win their party's nomination, but who lost the general election, were:

— Midland oilman Clayton Williams Jr., whose early TV ads blew away credible opponents in the 1990 GOP gubernatorial primary, but whose boot-in-mouth tactics caused his loss to Democrat Ann Richards.

— Dallas investor Richard Fisher, whose bucks helped win the 1994 Democratic U.S. Senate nomination over former Atty. Gen. Jim Mattox and then-U.S. Rep. Michael Andrews of Houston, but who lost to incumbent Republican Kay Bailey Hutchison.

— The late former U.S. Rep. Jim Collins, R-Dallas, whose family insurance fortune in 1982 couldn't overcome the massive re-election effort for Democratic U.S. Sen. Bentsen.

CAL THOMAS

Superintendent was on right track

School superintendent J.J. Phillips believed certain ideas were so important he compiled a little book for his students to memorize between the first and eighth grades. He dedicated "Selections for Memorizing" to the "Boys and girls of the Lancaster (Ohio) public schools to the end that none may go astray, but that all may be led to live high and holy lives."

The book was intended as a supplement to the studies in that Ohio school system. It contained verses from the Bible including The Lord's Prayer, the 23rd Psalm, the Beatitudes and instructions about honesty and integrity. It reflected a consensus at the time of how one should live so that personal and societal welfare might be promoted. There were also poems about light and fun things, as well as thoughts about respecting your parents and honoring your country.

Thomas

In 1923, when that little book was printed, it was not considered harmful to the spiritual or intellectual well-being of students. Quite the opposite. Today, that book would have a hard time finding its way into a public school library, much less be assigned reading.

Monday's 6-3 ruling by the U.S. Supreme Court that a Milford, N.Y. public school must allow a Christian club to meet on school property after hours when it provides facilities for other clubs is something of a bow to the past when thoughts like Phillip's were considered during the school day. Today, religious watchdog groups like the ACLU and Americans United for the Separation of Church and State behave as if religion is a harmful germ and that schools and public policy function best when they are decontaminated of such ideas.

While religion does not need the support of government, neither should it receive government's antipathy.

The teaching of a child cannot, or should not, be done piecemeal. Good nutrition requires a balanced diet. No one would think of giving a child a healthy breakfast, then feeding that child food containing harmful bacteria for lunch. It's the same with intellectual and moral development. If children are being taught one thing at home and at their place of worship, only to have those concepts undermined by the state in taxpayer-supported schools, the result is likely to be a malnourished mind and spirit.

Under the First Amendment, Congress is proscribed from making any law restricting speech, religion and the press because the Founders saw this trinity of expression as healthy and helpful to the republic. In its ruling on the Good News Club vs. Milford Central School, the Supreme Court properly concluded that to exclude the Christian club solely on the basis of the content of its message was to discriminate against that club on free speech grounds. I wish the court had reached the same conclusion about "free exercise" on religious grounds, but let's not look a gift court in the mouth.

When I scan the readings in Phillips' book, I read lines about nobility and integrity, reverence and honor. I wonder who decided these things could harm the children who learn them. Who held a referendum that allowed people to conclude secularism was a better "religion" than, as the old hymn puts it, the "God of our fathers, whose almighty hand ... In this free land, by Thee our lot is cast"?

If our government is to be of, by and for the people, why can't the people decide these things instead of narrow interest groups and unelected judges? Fifty years of imposed secularism has given us a record on which we can judge the success or failure of religious cleansing.

In our age, there is no more objective Truth. No idea is to be preferred over another. It wasn't so in 1923 in Lancaster, Ohio. Then, sixth graders were asked to memorize what today would be the politically incorrect:

"God, give us men! A time like this demands
"Strong minds, great hearts, true faith and ready hands;
"Men whom the lust of office does not kill;
"Men whom the spoils of office cannot buy;
"Men who possess opinions and a will;
"Men who have honor; men who will not lie ..."
(From "Wanted," by Josiah Gilbert Holland, 1819-1881)

Bush spars with European leaders on issues of global warming

By Ron Fournier
Associated Press

GOTEBORG, Sweden — President Bush sparred Thursday with European leaders over climate change, unwavering in his opposition to a global warming treaty. Sweden's prime minister accused Bush of pursuing "wrong policies" that endanger the environment.

Emotions ran high in this quaint seacoast city as hundreds of demonstrators hurled bottles and cobblestones to protest globalization, the European Union and Bush policies. Police arrested more than 200 as the president met with EU leaders at the midpoint of his first overseas trip.

At the meeting behind metal barricades, Bush sought to minimize differences with EU Commission President Romano Prodi and Swedish Prime Minister Goeran Persson, whose nation holds the organization's rotating presidency.

"We don't agree on the Kyoto Treaty, but we do agree that climate change is a serious issue and we must work together," Bush said at a news conference with Prodi and Persson. It was the second day of U.S.-European discord after a breach among NATO allies Wednesday over Bush's plans for a missile defense system.

Bush put Prodi on the spot — encouraging a question about the failure of most EU countries to ratify the same global warming treaty that Bush is criticized for rejecting. Afterward, at a private dinner with presidents and prime ministers of 15 EU nations, Bush was pointedly told that the global warming treaty "was the only show in town," according to Persson's spokesman.

The Europeans said they would press to ratify the 1997 pact — known as the Kyoto accord for the Japanese city where it was signed — while Bush pursued a more modest initiative to boost research and technology that could reduce global warming.

Portugese Prime Minister Antonio Guterres said German Chancellor Gerhard Schroeder was trying to engineer a compromise with the United States in time for a new round of Kyoto talks next month in Bonn, Germany.

"There is scope for working together before Bonn to see if a solution can be found," the prime minister said.

The United States and EU also:

- Agreed to move toward a new round of global trade talks when the World Trade Organization meets in November. The two sides have a series of disputes pending, notably over EU fears that Washington is moving to block steel imports and over European restrictions on genetically modified food imports.
- Urged Israel and the Palestinians to keep their cease-fire.
- Renewed their commitment to peacekeeping missions in the Balkans.

More than a thousand protesters clashed with police and thousands more demonstrated peacefully. As Bush returned to his hotel from dinner, people lining the roads booed and hissed as the motorcade passed. Some waved black flags and shouted or whistled, and made thumbs-down signs and other rude gestures.

After a stop Friday in Poland, Bush will conclude his five-nation trip Saturday in Slovenia, where he will meet Russian President Vladimir Putin. The contentious subject of missile defenses will be at the top of the agenda there.

"Russia is not the enemy of the United States," Bush said Thursday.

On global warming, Bush dismayed governments and environmentalists worldwide when he announced in March that he was abandoning the Kyoto Protocol. The treaty marked the first time that the world's industrialized nations had committed to binding limits on the heat-trapping gases that many scientists say threaten catastrophic changes in the planet's climate.

Persson withheld criticism of Bush during the news conference, but said afterward that his position is a heavy blow to the international effort against global warming.

"It will have a tremendous impact, sorry to say, because it would have sent an extremely strong signal if the U.S. had stuck with the Kyoto protocol," Persson said.

The United States is the world's largest producer of heat-trapping gases and Persson said its leadership would have prodded developing countries to join the cause.

"I think he has the same strong commitment to going ahead with the climate change" fight, the prime minister said of Bush. "The problem is we think that he chose the wrong policies and I have the impression that he thinks the same way about Europe."

Indeed, the president jumped at the chance to highlight the fact that Europe has not rushed to ratify the four-year-old treaty. It came when he was asked why the action of European leaders has not been as forceful as their rhetoric.

"I think that's a good question for President Prodi," Bush replied with a smile. Turning to Prodi, he mischievously added, "I would be interested in your answer."

Prodi's reply was terse: "There is not one single country who has declared not to ratify it."

White House advisers privately said the exchange underscored what they consider to be an element of hypocrisy in the EU's criticism of Bush. For his part, the president said, "I don't believe there's any politics, necessarily."

Even before Bush turned his back, the treaty had a rough history in the United States.

President Clinton had said he supported the pact but never sent it to the Senate. On its own, the Senate unanimously rejected the accord in a symbolic vote.

Bush disavowed the pact in March, saying it largely exempts developing nations and would harm the U.S. economy. Advisers now concede they did not adequately brace the public or U.S. allies for the action.

"We welcome the fact that President Bush and the U.S. administration have now recognized the scientific basis of climate change and have agreed to a research program to look at the issue," said a spokesman for British Prime Minister Tony Blair.

Persson said Bush and the EU would establish "some type of procedure" that will help the allies cooperate on the issue. Bush promised "new channels of cooperation."

End to Vieques bombing leaves questions about cleanup hurdles

VIEQUES, Puerto Rico (AP) — Even if the U.S. Navy ends six decades of bombing practice on Vieques in 2003, environmentalists say it could take decades to remove unexploded ammunition and clean up the battered reefs.

Responding to President Bush's announcement Thursday that the Navy would stop exercises on Vieques in less than two years, critics said much work remains to prepare the Puerto Rican island of thick scrub bush and white sand beaches for a future without the military.

"The cleanup of Vieques is going to take decades," said anti-Navy activist Robert Rabin. "It must begin immediately, and that's one of the demands that has not been met."

The Navy has used the island to train troops for major conflicts from World War II to Kosovo, and it says the island's terrain and location uniquely allow for simultaneous mock assaults by air, sea and land.

In 1940 the Navy took over two-thirds of Vieques — an island slightly larger than Manhattan — though its bombing range covers only 900 acres — less than 3 percent of the island.

With whips and beard inspections, squads enforce 'pure' Islam in Afghanistan

By Steven Gutkin
Associated Press

KABUL, Afghanistan — It's prayer time in the Afghan capital and anxious young men tear out from dusty wooden stalls in the main market to escape the religious police, who are lashing merchants with leather whips.

"Close your shops, Muslim brothers! Everyone in the mosque for prayer!" a loudspeaker shouts.

The religious police — the enforcement wing of the Ministry for the Promotion of Virtue and the Prevention of Vice — are the cornerstone of the Taliban leadership's drive to establish "pure" Islam in the war- and drought-ravaged nation of 21 million people.

The ministry wields almost unlimited power in the 95 percent of Afghanistan controlled by the Taliban. Now, say those who know the country, it is being strengthened even further by growing tensions with the outside world.

The Taliban is angry about U.N. sanctions. It feels the world should congratulate it for eradicating opium-producing poppy crops, but instead focuses on denouncing the Taliban for destroying ancient statues of Buddha, banning women from schools and work places, and ordering the Hindu minority to wear yellow identifying badges.

The virtue and vice ministry has about 32,000 recruits, graduates of Islamic high schools who lead two kinds of enforcement: virtue squads to coordinate Islamic education, and vice squads to stamp out the evils contained in the Taliban's extraordinarily strict interpretation of Islam.

Vice squads make sure women cover themselves head to toe in the all-encompassing "burqa," and force men to pray and grow untrimmed beards. They ban music, television and gender-mixing, beating and jailing offenders.

Ahmad Farid, a 22-year-old bicycle repairman, failed to escape the leather whip at the market last week.

"I am a Muslim, so of course I know I should pray. But how can I go to a mosque with my hands and my shirt so dirty?" he said, extending his arms to reveal grease-blackened clothes. "A man should have clean dress when he prays."

"He should have washed his hands 30 minutes before prayer," explained Abdul Matin Saib Zaudah, deputy chief of the ministry's military division, when asked about the incident. "Because when you pray, you are talking with your God."

The concept of promoting virtue and preventing vice is not new to Islam. Saudi Arabia's similar "virtue and vice" agency patrols shopping malls and other public places. Iran's Headquarters for the Promotion of Virtue and Prevention of Vice runs poster campaigns to encourage women to cover themselves and men to refrain from harassing women.

But the Taliban have gone to a new level, making the virtue and vice ministry "the supreme power of the land," Zaudah said.

In a rare move, the ministry allowed a foreign reporter to accompany one of its patrols at Khairkhana Pass, a checkpoint just north of Kabul and close to a pocket of resistance by the Taliban's northern-based opposition.

Assigned to ensure military compliance with Islamic law, the turbaned, whip-wielding police scoured soldiers' clothing and vehicles for prohibited materials such as music cassettes, hashish and tobacco — and checked each fighter's beard for evidence of trimming — a serious violation of the Taliban's code.

"Where are your cigarettes?" barked a policeman after finding a box of matches. "I swear I don't have any," responded a young Taliban fighter whose jeep with military markings was stopped at the roadblock.

Tobacco was recently banned for Taliban fighters, though it's still permitted for civilians.

A new decree from the virtue and vice ministry admonishes Afghans against wrapping food in newspapers in case they contain holy writings.

The decision on badges, not yet implemented, is meant to distinguish Hindus from Muslims. Taliban officials say it's to protect Hindus from religious police, but many countries have condemned it as a human rights violation.

A ruling issued last week requires the few foreigners in Afghanistan — mostly relief workers — to shun alcohol, pork and loud music.

Afghanistan has the world's worst refugee crisis, and aid organizations say harassment by vice squads is becoming a serious hindrance to efforts to help millions of people hit by drought and civil war.

"The hard-liners are in control ... and that means the religious police," said Arif Ayub, Pakistan's ambassador to Afghanistan.

The religious police are far more active in Kabul, a city of 1.5 million, than in conservative rural areas, where the Taliban emerged in the early 1990's as a ragtag group of fundamentalist students and clerics. In Kabul their activities tend to stir resentment, but they remain widely popular in the countryside.

Amin Tarzi, senior research associate at the Monterey (Calif.) Institute of International Studies, says punishments such as whippings have roots in antiquity, but were never codified into Islam and its holy book, the Quran.

"All this talk about pure Islam going back to the Quran — it's not in the Quran," Tarzi, an American Muslim of Afghan origin, said in an interview.

He said the Taliban's regulations are a way of enforcing "their reign of terror," and "The only way for them to legitimize what they're doing is to say it's Islamic."

Employee of Bush adviser pleads guilty to mail fraud

By Natalie Gott
Associated Press

AUSTIN — A former aide to George W. Bush's media adviser pleaded guilty Thursday to mail fraud and perjury, admitting she stole and mailed a Bush debate videotape to Al Gore's campaign and lied about it to a grand jury.

Juanita Yvette Lozano, 31, entered the plea in U.S. District Court after reaching an agreement with prosecutors in May.

Lozano faces up to 10 years in prison, up to six years of supervised release and up to $500,000 in fines, U.S. District Judge Sam Sparks told her. She is scheduled to be sentenced on Aug. 17.

"I want you to understand the finality of it because in truth, this means whatever sentence you get, you have to take," Sparks told Lozano.

Lozano calmly answered all questions posed to her by Sparks. When he asked her how she pleaded to the charges, she said: "I plead guilty."

She left the courtroom without talking to reporters. When reporters asked why she mailed the tape, Lozano would not answer and continued walking with her lawyers past the courthouse.

White House spokeswoman Jeanie Mamo said the White House was saddened by news of the plea.

"We expressed early on that no one was more interested in getting to the bottom of this matter than we were. We said we would be sad and surprised if the allegations are true, and we are," Mamo said.

Lozano's attorney Christopher Gunter refused to answer questions, saying he would not comment until after sentencing. Prosecutor Raymond Husler also declined comment.

In exchange for her plea, the government dropped one count of her three-count indictment, the accusation that Lozano lied to the FBI during the investigation.

Lozano worked for Maverick Media, formed by a top Bush media adviser, Mark McKinnon, to develop Bush's political ads.

"(McKinnon) is just deeply saddened and extremely disappointed that she would do this to him, his family and the president," said Rusty Hardin, attorney for McKinnon. "Fortunately, it had no effect on the campaign, but she couldn't have known that at the time and that was not her intent."

In September, a Bush videotape, strategy book and other papers taken from Maverick Media were sent to former U.S. Rep. Tom Downey, D-N.Y., who was advising Gore before the first presidential debate with Bush.

The package included a note bearing the name "Amy Smith" that said: "I will call you soon to find out what other materials can be useful to the VP."

Downey immediately turned the materials over to the FBI, and agents later identified Lozano as a suspect, based on surveillance videotape from an Austin post office.

Lozano, a Democratic county precinct chair, said she used her home computer to look up Downey's address on the Internet before sending him a package promising further help.

Prison inmate gets 50 years in Lubbock hospital hostage incident

By Betsy Blaney
Associated Press

LUBBOCK — A prison inmate charged with taking two nurses hostage and raping them at a Lubbock hospital received a 50-year sentence Thursday in a plea bargain agreement.

Dekenya Nelson, who attacked the nurses after he was brought to University Medical Center from the Preston Smith Unit in Lamesa on Jan. 3, received two 50-year sentences to run concurrently after pleading guilty to two counts of aggravated sexual assault.

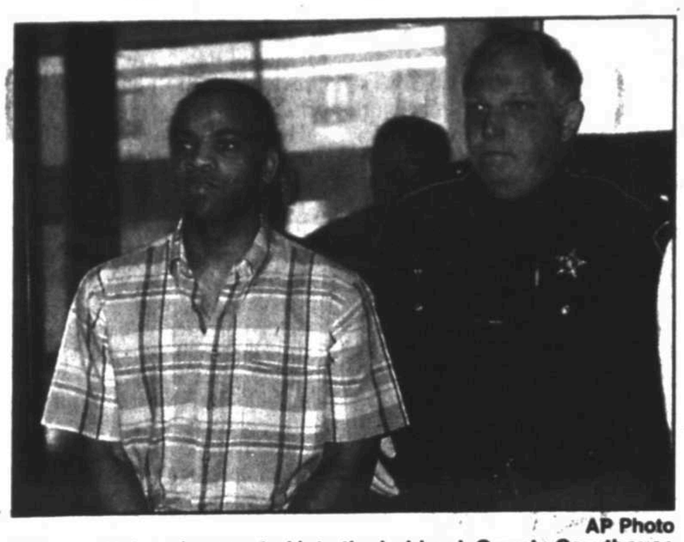

Nelson currently is serving 140 years for burglary, car theft and sexual assaults, including the 1996 rape of a female civilian prison employee. The 50-year sentences will begin after Nelson completes his 140 sentence.

After the hearing, the two nurses filed a civil lawsuit against the Texas Department of Criminal Justice and 10 of its officers and prison guards, claiming that adequate security procedures were not in place.

Texas Department of Criminal Justice spokesman Glen Castlebury declined to comment on the suit.

"We routinely do not comment on pending litigation in which we are represented by the attorney general," he said.

A spokeswoman for the Attorney General's Office, Jane Shepperd, said the lawsuit had not reached the office yet and she could not comment.

AP Photo
Dekenya Nelson is escorted into the Lubbock County Courthouse Thursday. Nelson, an inmate charged with taking two nurses hostage and raping them at University Medical Center on Jan. 3 after he was brought from the Preston Smith Unit in Lamesa, pleaded guilty Thursday to two of the four charges against him.

Both victims were at the courthouse Thursday; one was in the courtroom when Nelson, who had already been sentenced, took the stand. The woman shook her head and dabbed tears from her eyes several times as Nelson testified under questioning by his attorney and the prosecutor that he had a real handgun — a 9 mm Glock — that he had gotten from one of the guards who was at the hospital with him.

"That was very unexpected," said Susan Scolaro, the Lubbock County prosecutor. "His credibility is definitely at issue. I don't know whether to believe him or not."

According to an internal prison report released in March, security lapses by two prison guards and their supervisor created the opportunity for the incident.

The guards failed to properly search Nelson before they took him to the Lubbock hospital, according to the report. The guards also failed to properly restrain him with leg irons and chains during the 50-mile trip, investigators learned.

The incident began when Nelson, 25, complained of internal bleeding. He told guards that he had swallowed a metal bottle opener.

Guards strip-searched Nelson before taking him to the prison infirmary but they did not search him during the three-hour period before taking him out of the prison.

Nelson, who was under a blanket, freed himself from his handcuffs and produced what appeared to be a pistol, the prison report states.

Police later determined the pistol was made from a hairbrush, deodorant bottle, soap and pages from a Bible. Later, an X-ray showed a handcuff key in his rectal area.

The report also said hospital X-rays showed the hairbrush hidden on Nelson, but no one alerted guards.

The victims' attorney, Richard Griffin of Austin, said at a press conference following the court proceeding that the lawsuit is intended to make the Department of Criminal Justice accountable for its "egregious conduct."

"It's time to abandon the ancient concept that 'the king can do no wrong' when it comes to the proper custody of convicted criminals," Griffin said. "Texas has never had a king and the Department of Criminal Justice should not be treated as a king and given sovereign immunity as long as the department continues to conduct its affairs with such painful disregard for public safety."

Missing San Antonio woman's car found in Illinois

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Police said Thursday they hoped a car found in Illinois and personal check cashed in California would help lead them to a San Antonio woman missing for two weeks.

Anamaria "Anita" Alvarez, a 45-year-old hospital worker, was last seen May 31 at a bank on the city's far west side, officials said.

Officers and volunteers, including the woman's fiancee, relatives and co-workers, searched a wooded area near the bank using a helicopter and bloodhounds, but found nothing.

Alvarez's car, a 1991 blue Chevy Cavalier, was found Monday near a bus station in Effingham, Ill., said San Antonio police spokeswoman Sandy Gutierrez. San Francisco police said Wednesday a check of hers was cashed at a Bank of America branch there.

"We hope that she's doing all this (herself)," Gutierrez said. "We don't know if she has been a victim of foul play and somebody else is doing all this."

Jazz guru helps out with Manor Park festival

By Lana Cunningham
MRT Correspondent

Roy Harris likes to joke that Chris Newman got so hungry for New Orleans-style food that she organized a jazz party last year at Manor Park to get some.

That may be partly true, she admitted. But she also thought a jazz festival would be a new event to keep the beat moving at the retirement community. It was such a swinging success that Manor Park is sponsoring its second "Jazz'n It Up at Manor Park," from 5 to 7 p.m. today. Featuring music and food, it will be held at Greathouse Activities Building ,2208 N. Loop 250 West. And, this year, the organizers are opening it to the public.

Listening to the music won't cost anyone a penny. But to eat in the Jazz Cafe will cost $5 per person and that will get them cajun shrimp, gumbo, red beans and rice, muffuletta sandwiches and pralines.

"I went to the big jazz festival in New Orleans and then I attended the one in my hometown of 5,000 people. I thought if a small town could do it, maybe Manor Park could, too. I had a supervisor at that time who was Cajun, and we thought we could pull it off," explained Ms. Newman. Plus, she knew several of the residents were jazz enthusiasts, such as Harris.

When it came to the details, she asked for help from some of the residents, including Harris. Last year, he loaned several album covers from his extensive collection as decorations.

Entertainment this year will come from Carvel Mills and Sound Investments; Tall City Trio, a group from the Midland-Odessa Symphony; and Rassie Flunder. Last year, said Ms. Newman, Flunder was a success and this year he promises to bring a couple more musicians with him. A saxophonist, he plays in the style of the late Louis Armstrong.

"I was so amazed at the crowd we had last year," Harris said. "I've been a jazz buff since I was about 7 years old. When I was in junior high, I played in a small dance band." Harris played the trumpet and his two brothers played saxophones. Another member of his dance band was a girl, who played the piano.

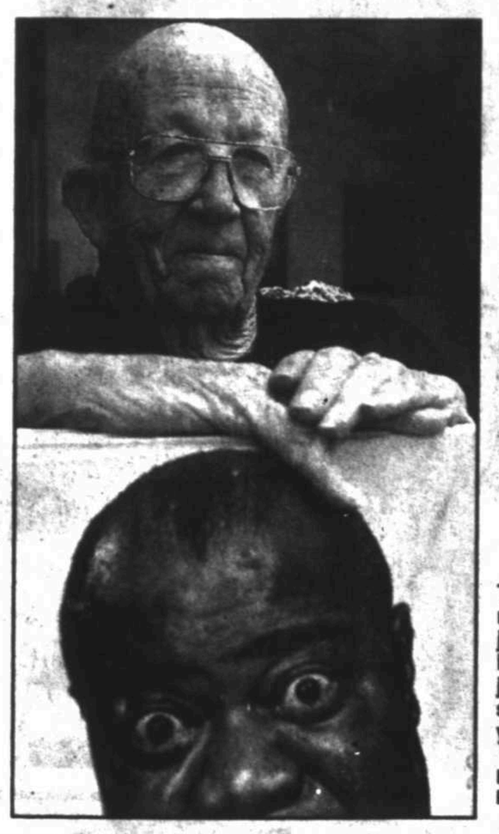

"We didn't get very rich at it," said Harris, laughing. "We did have one job every Wednesday night. I think we each got $1 for playing."

Coming from Muskogee, Okla., jazz is not the music one would expect Harris to love. His family had a radio and they listened to various types of music. His grandmother taught piano and organ, and his mother played the piano in a movie theater before her marriage.

"In the early '30s and '40s, the radio played good music," he said.

"They had the Big Bands. It was some of the best music you'll ever hear."

Please see GURU/7B

This is Roy Harris, who is a jazz afficiando. He has been a jazz buff ever since he was 7 years old.

FAMILY MATTERS

Discussing extra-marital affair can help in healing process

By Jim May

DEAR FAMILY: I found out two months ago for sure that my husband of nine years has been having an affair with a woman at his office. I knew something was going on, but he denied, denied and denied. I guess he thought I was really stupid because he didn't know that I knew how to get the e-mails he thought he had deleted. When I confronted him, he lied about it. Then he confessed, but he won't give me any details. All he keeps saying is that he's sorry, it's over, and he will never do it again. That's just not good enough for me after all the lies he's told. Besides, he still works with this woman!

My problem is that when I told my friends about it, some told me that I should divorce him right away because "if they do it once, they will do it again." Others (including our minister) told me that I should "forgive and forget." I'm having difficulty doing either one. I don't think I'm weird or strange for wanting to know just what when on. What I do know is I am in more pain than I have ever been in my life and can't get rid of it. I can barely stand for him to touch me, and he wants to make up and have sex. I can't have sex with him without thinking about him and her!

I'm sure you must have had to help people with this in the past. What do I do? We can't go on like this. I want to forgive and forget, but I just can't. Sometimes I just want to end the marriage, but we have an innocent child that would be badly hurt if I did. — CHEATED ON AND DEVASTATED

DEAR CHEATED: Your pain is real, and it must be addressed if the marriage is to continue and prosper. While your husband's position is most common and familiar — "I'm sorry, I'll never do it again, let's go on" — that approach rarely ever works. Unfortunately, human nature most commonly seems to be that if questions go unanswered, then anger is repressed, resentments build, and it comes out in a variety of indirect forms (for example, no interest in restoring the sexual relationship). Marital betrayal typically destroys the essential element of marital trust. That trust must be restored. One of the most powerful trust-rebuilding processes actually addresses one of your major concerns — exactly what happened?

Psychologist Peggy Vaughn, reporting on a survey of 1,000 people between the ages of 30 and 50 whose spouses had had affairs, found that: 62 percent wanted to know "everything about the affair including sexual details," 31 percent wanted just "general information," and 7 percent did not want to know the details. Some 54 percent of those who discussed the affair "a lot" felt healed somewhat, compared to the 35 percent who talked "very little." A very promising finding (which matches my clinical experience) is that 59 percent of those who discussed the affair "a lot" say their marriage is now better; 43 percent who discussed it a "good bit" say their marriage is better; while only 21 percent who discussed it "very little" say their marriage is better. These findings lend statistical support to the idea that discussing the affair "a lot" is more beneficial for most couples.

I would encourage you to share this information with your husband and see if he would agree to schedule time on a regular basis to answer all of your questions about his affair. In order for the process to be effective, he must tell you the "truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth" no matter how painful it might be. He is not to shade or omit details to avoid hurting your feelings. This painful process of asking and telling the complete truth is actually a major step toward restoring trust in the relationship. Trust is essentially a matter of comparing data (actions) with words. When you know all of the details, then they form a basis that you can use to compare his words with his future actions.

An additional powerful value to using this process is that it creates a level of honesty and intimacy (shared pain) that may never have existed in the relationship before. When a couple works through this process, they emerge knowing more about their partner's feelings and thinking than ever before. I believe that Jesus was teaching us a lot about our frailties when he told the woman "caught in the very act of adultery" to "go and sin no more." Forgiveness is a goal and hopefully will come with time. However, most people usually need to deal with their feelings over being wronged as part of that process. You may also find marital counseling with a trained professional who is "marriage positive" to be helpful.

Jim May , Ph.D., is the director of the Family Wellness Center.

GURU: Manor Park Jazz Fest set for tonight

(From 6B)

However, it was jazz music to which he was always drawn. A geology graduate of the University of Oklahoma, Harris once had saved money to attend the Texas-OU football game. Instead, he bought a radio for his mother's car.

"I was courting my wife when all those good bands were playing." Over the years, he taught Mary Frances to enjoy jazz. "She never understood when we went to a dance, I would stand and watch the orchestra. She wanted to dance and I wanted to just watch. I was a better watcher than a dancer," he explained.

Harris had his favorites: Louie Armstrong ("I got to see him in person one time in Houston."), Eddie Miller, Ralph Sutton ("One of the best piano players.") and Benny Goodman ("The father of jazz.").

When Odessa and, later, Midland started sponsoring jazz festivals, Harris was involved. He and his wife attended every year until his wife's death after more than 60 years of marriage. "I never thought living out here on the prairie I'd have a chance to go to jazz parties," Harris said.

The 86-year-old, who jokes that he doesn't look a day over 96, is still offering advice for this year's Manor Park Jazz Fest. "I'm looking forward to this jazz festival. I've been playing a lot of jazz music lately. I sit down and play myself a concert."

This evening, Harris can listen to the real thing.

Hotter weather leads to heat stroke so use common sense

Page

Right or wrong, one of the annual rites of spring is to write something concerning the hazards of heat and humidity, particularly as it pertains to elders. Summertime should be when the living is easy — but it "ain't necessarily so."

The body makes its own heat and eliminates the excess by sweating (men) and perspiring (ladies) with subsequent evaporation, and by convection and radiation, plus dilatation of the skin blood vessels. This constitutes the body's heat-regulatory mechanism, which in the elderly often breaks down under the stress of summer's excessive high temperatures and high humidity — all increasing the work load on the heart. This explains the increase in the death rate during hot humid weather.

Specific heat disorders are heat cramps, heat exhaustion and heat stroke. Cramps are preceded by profuse sweating and thirst and can be corrected by electrolyte-rich beverages such as Gatorade or salt and potassium concoctions. Loss of appetite, nausea, vomiting, disorientation and postural hypotension characterize heat exhaustion, which luckily also responds to similar therapy. Heat stroke can be lethal and constitute a true medical emergency. The skin becomes dry, temperature rises abruptly, pupils dilate, confusion sets in followed by coma. Immediate hospitalization is indicated.

Luckily, by the very act of living in West Texas one benefits from the low humidity and prevalent winds, so first, the application of a little common sense can afford adequate protection. This consists of eating light meals featuring salads, soups and fruits; drinking 10 glasses of water daily; avoid direct sunlight for long periods of time; wear wide-brimmed hats and loose clothing; and if the air conditioner breaks down, retreat to a library, mall or movie theater.

As you grow older, don't be a mad dog a la Noel Coward and "go out in the midday sun."

DEAR ABBY

Callers to psychic hotlines are advised to hang it up

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I recently moved to Minneapolis from south Florida, where I had worked as a telephone psychic. The money was great. However, I now live in an area where I actually know my neighbors, and I feel very guilty about my previous line of work.

Pauline & Jeanne Phillips

We "psychics" were really just saleswomen. We convinced callers that we knew something about their future. The callers were both men and women, and they really believed what we fed them. I feel doubly bad remembering how when business was slow, we laughed about the "pathetic losers" who were calling us. Some of them, I know, spent most of their daily wages on those phone calls.

I can't do anything to make up for my past sins, but please, Abby, warn callers of psychic hotlines that they are dealing with people with no more knowledge of the future than they themselves have — probably less.

If they need someone to talk to, they should access the Internet. They'll be dealing with people just like us — but it won't be nearly as costly. — PAM THE SINNER, MINNEAPOLIS

DEAR P.T. SINNER: Those who call are not "pathetic losers;" the losers are those who take advantage of unsuspecting people searching for validation or encouragement.

I'm pleased you have turned over a new leaf. There's nothing like being inundated with good, solid Midwestern values to help a sinner see the error of her (or his) ways.

There is plenty you can do to make up for your past sins. I have a terrific idea for you. Use your talent to save lives. Since you're good on the telephone, sign up for training and volunteer for a crisis hotline. The psychic rewards are phenomenal.

DEAR ABBY: I am enclosing a poem that I wrote for my father. With Father's Day approaching, you might like to share it with your readers. — NATHAN HELLMAN, WHITESTONE, N.Y.

DEAR NATHAN: Your poem touched my heart, and I'm sure it will do the same with my readers as well. Read on:

DAD
They tell you to believe
In your teacher
In your doctor
In the president.
But for me
The one I always believed in
Was my dad.
He was always there for me.
With him in my corner,
I was invincible.
Now he's gone.
They tell me about all the good deeds he did.
But for me
His greatness
Isn't captured in words or deed.
It's found in what he meant to me
And how I felt
When he was around.

CONFIDENTIAL TO THE WIFE OF THE ABUSER IN FLORIDA: You have suffered enough. Make your plans and leave. Do not alert him beforehand. If he hasn't shaped up in more than 50 years, he's not likely to change now. I wish you the best of luck. You deserve it.

Ballroom dancers triumph at Blackpool championships

From Staff Reports

PROVO, Utah — The Ballroom Dance Company at Brigham Young University recently placed first in both the Standard and Latin Divisions at the British Formation Championships in Blackpool, England.

The winnings mark the 15th and 16th first-place championship medals that the BYU teams have received, according to Curt Holman, a member of the BYU dance faculty.

"The teams compete at the championships every three years, and since 1989, both the Modern and Latin teams from BYU have won first place," said Holman.

"We also received a great response from the audience when we performed our pre-tour showcase in Provo last month," he said.

The BYU Ballroom dancers performed in Midland in January.

The British Formation Championships are among the most prestigious championships in the world because they are one of the longest-running, said Lee Wakefield, director of the company.

The Netherlands team, which had been ranked fifth in the world, was a formidable opponent in the Standard Division, according to Holman. The Latin competition was also fierce, with six international teams competing.

The two teams began preparing for the championships in July 2000. Each team practiced for three or four hours a week throughout the year, Holman said.

Now that the competitions are over, the teams will tour and perform throughout England, Norway, Sweden and Denmark before returning to the United States on June 23.

Court guardian told judge eight years ago that girl's mother unfit

By Susan Parrott
Associated Press

DALLAS — A court-appointed guardian told an Ellis County judge eight years ago that Barbara Catherine Atkinson was an unfit parent and that her baby should remain with the East Texas couple attempting to adopt her.

But the judge returned the girl to her biological mother, saying the woman's parental rights had not been terminated.

"It is devastating because it could have been prevented," said Dallas attorney Kamela Cromer-Wilkinson, the court-appointed guardian. "It was 100 percent absolutely avoidable."

The girl, now 8, was rescued Monday after being locked in a mobile home closet for at least four months and nearly starved. The mother and a stepfather are charged with serious injury to a child.

Barbara Atkinson remained Thursday in the Dallas County jail in lieu of $100,000 bond. Her ex-husband, Kenneth Ray Atkinson, will not be released on bond because he also faces charges of probation violation out of Ellis County, police said.

Five other children in the couple's Hutchins home have been placed in foster care by Child Protective Services.

Brad Lollar, the court-appointed defense attorney for Barbara Atkinson, said he has talked only briefly with his client. He said Hurst police should not have released crime scene photos to the media.

"That jeopardizes a defendant's right to have an unbiased trial and grand jury," he said.

The court had not yet appointed a lawyer for Kenneth Atkinson.

The woman, whose name at the time was Barbara Calhoun, had one other child at the time that Cromer-Wilkinson recommended that Lauren Ashley Calhoun be placed with adoptive parents.

The lawyer, who was a neutral court representative, said she had a "feeling" that Atkinson did not want the child back.

"Her home life was unstable. It was not nurturing," Cromer-Wilkinson said. She said the baby should have been allowed to remain with the couple who took custody of her at birth and wanted to keep her.

Bill and Sabrina Kavanaugh, who live near Canton, had arranged for a private adoption and took custody of Lauren at birth on April 13, 1993. Atkinson was a friend of the second wife of Bill Kavanaugh's brother-in-law.

But soon afterward, Atkinson changed her mind and demanded the girl back.

The Kavanaughs were able to retain exclusive rights to Lauren for about nine months, but the courts limited their contact thereafter. After eight months of judicial struggles, a second judge ordered the girl's return to her birth mother.

"The attorney we used messed up, and we did not obtain paternal rights," said Bill Kavanaugh, 62. "We fought her in court and lost. We lost on a technicality."

The last time Bill and Sabrina Kavanaugh saw Lauren, she was an energetic, healthy 2-year-old who loved the outdoors and movies, he said.

The couple is haunted by a new image — the girl who law officers found six years later in a filthy trailer. Police say the girl weighed only 25 pounds, with her skin peeling and stomach bloated from malnutrition.

Kavanaugh said Lauren was a typical toddler. Thumbing through old photos of the couple with Lauren, Kavanaugh stopped at one of a smiling child on their farm for her first Christmas.

"She was very normal," he said. "You can see how well she was progressing."

The couple said they never gave up hope that they'd see Lauren again, and want to regain custody.

The girl remains in serious but stable condition at Children's Medical Center, CPS spokeswoman Marleigh Meisner said.

She is suffering malnutrition and underwent surgery Tuesday, but Meisner said privacy laws don't allow her to disclose further details about Lauren's condition.

"We are very hopeful she will continue to improve," she said. "Lauren has already shown she is a survivor."

CPS has not attempted to interview the girl because of her frail health.

Meisner said Lauren may have spent time over years in a 4- by 8-foot closet littered with human waste and soiled clothing. Not only is she a foot smaller than most children her age, but court documents state that she has the communication skills of a 3-year-old.

Barbara Atkinson told others that Lauren had an eating disorder and was staying with a baby sitter, police said.

The girl's siblings will be interviewed and videotaped by CPS investigators, Meisner said. The girls, ages 5, 6, and 10, are in one foster home; the boys, ages 23 months and 3 years, are in another.

She said the five are doing well and are not malnourished, but are saddened by the absence of their parents.

None of the children attended school last year, and may never have been enrolled, Meisner said.

A juvenile court judge is scheduled to decide on June 26 if the children, including Lauren, should be placed with relatives or remain in CPS custody.

Meisner would not say which relatives have expressed interest in housing the children, but said none of the fathers of Lauren or the children had been located. Kenneth Atkinson was the father of several of the younger children.

The case will be presented to a criminal grand jury, said Steve Tokoly, an assistant district attorney for Dallas County. Conviction of injury to a child carries a penalty of up to life in prison.

Dave Landers, chief of the Hutchins Police Department, said the Atkinsons have expressed remorse during interviews with officers.

CPS has received hundreds of calls from citizens wanting to help the children, Meisner said. The case is one of the most horrific that Dallas County case workers have investigated, she said.

"My heart absolutely broke for this child," Meisner said. "I can't describe how frail and small she was."

Los Angeles' Kobe Bryant talks to reporters during a press conference Thursday in Philadelphia. The Lakers lead the 76ers, 3-1, in the NBA finals.

Los Angeles tries to wrap up greatest postseason run in history of league

By Chris Sheridan
AP Basketball Writer

PHILADELPHIA — Kobe Bryant was dreaming of a dynasty, Shaquille O'Neal was pondering his legacy, Ron Harper and Horace Grant were making comparisons to the Chicago Bulls of the 1990s.

The Los Angeles Lakers were getting a little ahead of themselves Thursday on the eve of Game 5, but with good reason.

There was a sense pervading the First Union Center that the NBA Finals are all but over. Even the Philadelphia 76ers seemed ready to succumb to the inevitable.

"What I'm starting to feel like now," Allen Iverson said, "is that the way to beat those guys is to really blow them out to have a chance. And the way things are going, that's just not going to happen."

The Lakers hold a 3-1 lead in the series and have a chance Friday night to finish with a postseason record of 15-1, which would be the best in NBA history.

They also would become the first team ever to go through the playoffs undefeated on the road.

Although the task at hand is winning one more game, the Lakers allowed themselves to look at the bigger picture.

Bryant admitted that he goes to bed at night wondering whether this Lakers team could become a dynasty. Coach Phil Jackson discussed O'Neal's desire to leave a legacy as one of the game's best big men, and Harper and Grant — who each won three championships with Michael Jordan during the last decade — gave their unique takes on how history will judge this team.

"I think in terms of running through the Western Conference like we did and winning two on Philly's court, it puts us among the best teams ever," Grant said. "But in order for us to rank up there with those best Bulls teams, we have to win more than two championships."

The Sixers now have to win the final three games of the seven-game series, a feat no team has ever accomplished in the finals.

Outlaw makes all-state

Staff Report

Greenwood senior Justin Outlaw didn't concentrate on only one sport this past spring, but that didn't prevent him from excelling at both.

Outlaw

Outlaw, a second baseman for Greenwood's baseball team, was named as an infielder to the Texas High School Baseball Coaches Association Class 3A All-State team. He pulled off the trick even though he spent much of the baseball season also running track.

As a sprinter, Outlaw qualified for the Region I-3A meet. While that showed he had speed which coud wreak havoc on the base paths, his track skills were a mixed blessing for the Rangers on the diamond.

"Justin was a big leader for us this year," said Greenwood coach Tony Pallanez. "When he was at track meets and wasn't (with the team) it hurt us a lot. Maybe we'll have to redo our schedule in the future to accommodate some of the track kids."

When Outlaw was on the field, though, there was little doubt that he could produce. As Greenwood's leadoff hitter, he provided the spark, hitting .463 and stealing 21 bases in 23 tries. He also scored 22 runs and drove in 19.

Outlaw, who also was a defensive back on Greenwood's highly successful football team last fall, kept opposing pitchers on their toes with his sheer speed.

"He was able to steal bases and was a threat every time he got on base," said Pallanez. "If he got on base that meant things were going good for us."

Flores ousts 2000 champ

ODESSA — In a battle between the 1999 and 2000 champions, Odessa's Denise Flores pulled out the victory over Midland's Lisa Beck in the semifinal round of the Women's West Texas 67th Annual Golf Championship Thursday afternoon.

Beck started off strong, leading by two holes going into No. 15. However, strong play by Flores on the last four holes closed the gap.

"Down the stretch I played really well," Flores said. "I was down two going into fifteen. I won fifteen and seventeen and tied on sixteen to pull

Hale Irwin watches his tee shot on the 11th hole during Thursday's first round of the U.S. Open at Southern Hills Country Club in Tulsa, Okla. Irwin leads the tournament — although some players, including Tiger Woods, did not finish their rounds because of rain.

Irwin announces his presence; Woods shows his vulnerability

By Doug Ferguson
AP Golf Writer

TULSA, Okla. — It was a shot that Tiger Woods has made look routine, a 2-iron that pierces through the wind and stops within the shadow of a flag at high noon. Only this time, it belonged to a man twice his age.

Hale Irwin took off his cap and swirled it around, whipping the gallery lining the 18th fairway into a frenzy the way he did 11 years ago at Medinah when he became the oldest U.S. Open champion.

"Age is just a number," the 56-year-old Irwin said.

The only number that mattered when heavy storms soaked Southern Hills and suspended the first round was the 3-under 67 next to his name that made him the early leader Thursday at the U.S. Open.

"My purpose here this week is not to be ceremonial. It's to be competitive," Irwin said. "And I think today established those bona fide credentials."

All Woods established was that he was human.

He pounded the turf with the bottom of his putter after getting a 45-foot birdie putt only two-thirds of the way there. He flung his wedge toward his caddie after a chunking a shot that led to a rare double bogey.

And when he left Southern Hills after play was suspended for good, 3-over par and in danger of dropping another stroke on the 10th hole, he had little to say to reporters.

"I'll talk to them tomorrow," Woods told a U.S. Golf Association official before climbing into a car.

When play resumes at 7 a.m. today, Woods will face an 8-foot par putt and a long day of trying to make up for the lost time.

Retief Goosen of South Africa birdied the seventh hole just before the sirens sounded and was tied with Irwin at 3 under. Toshi Izawa of Japan was at 2 under after four holes.

Loren Roberts and Stewart Cink were the only other players who finished their rounds under par, both at 69.

Phil Mickelson made back-to-back bogeys on the back nine to finish at 70, along with Sergio Garcia, Angel Cabrera and Matt Gogel. Davis Love III, playing for the first time in two months because of neck and back injuries, Midland's Joe Cotton throws a pitch during the RockHounds' 2-1 victory over Wichita Thursday night at Christensen Stadium. Cotton (4-0) got the win in relief of Midland starter Jon Adkins.

'Hounds keep delaying Wichita's division-winning celebration plans

By Oscar LeRoy
Sports Writer

Even though the Midland RockHounds are not fighting for a first half pennant, they want to make sure no one else celebrates in their house either.

Wichita, fighting for the first half pennant in the Texas League East Division with Arkansas, is looking for that celebration at Christensen Stadium, but for two straight nights, all the Wranglers have gotten is disappointment. The RockHounds got some great pitching, some great defensive plays and solo home runs from Brian Luderer and Todd Mensik for a 2-1 win over Wichita Thursday night.

With the loss, the Wranglers are a half-game back of Arkansas in the East. Round Rock, the winner of the first half West Division pennant, downed the Travelers Thursday night, 4-3, to keep the Wranglers within striking distance with two games to go in the first half of Texas League play.

Thursday's contest at Christensen proved to be a great pitching battle. RockHound hurlers Jon Adkins, Joe Cotton (4-0), Chris Enochs and Tyler Yates combined to limit the Wranglers to just one earned run on five hits.

"Our pitchers have done a great job," said Mensik, who hit the eventual game-winning home run in the bottom of the fourth inning. "We had three errors up there and they still only gave up one run.

"(The Wranglers) have a great staff too. These were just two great pitching staffs going right at each other. You have to tip your hats to them as well. Their starting pitcher (Corey Thurman) got ahead of guys and made good pitches. It's just that we were one better than them tonight."

The only run the 'Hounds pitchers gave up was in the fifth after Juan Brito doubled home Angel Berroa, who reached when he was hit by a pitch by Cotton.

The only other threat by the Wranglers came in the sixth when they had Alexis Medrano at third base with nobody out. Cotton got Shawn Gallagher to pop up to first, got Brandon Berger to ground out to short and then saw Mike Lockwood make a nice diving catch in right field for the third out.

"We kind of lucked out," said Midland manager Tony DeFrancesco. "Lockwood comes up with a big catch. He missed it off the bat initially but made a nice recovery."

Adkins started the game but only went four innings because of a 50-pitch count. Adkins is coming off a shoulder injury which caused him to miss two starts.

"It looks like he's going to be all right," said DeFrancesco about Adkins. "So after the All-Star break, we're going to have him back. Joe Cotton came in and pitched three quality innings. Chris Enochs came in and did a good job as well as did Tyler Yates, our closer."

Jacks re-sign three players

ODESSA — The Odessa Jackalopes re-signed three veteran players for next season on Wednesday, extending new deals to forwards Trevor Allman and John Bossio and defenseman Scott Hillman.

"These three players were instrumental in our success (last season)," said Jacks head coach and director of hockey operations Don McKee. "They are skilled hockey players and also exceptional people."

Allman, who joined the Jacks after playing at Harvard, had 24 goals and 31 assists in his rookie season and shared the team's Rookie of the Year award with Konrad McKay.

Bossio, named the team's most valuable player in 1999-2000, was selected to the Western Division All-Star Team. In two seasons in Odessa, Bossio has 64 goals and 82 assists. he was also the winner of last season's Nick Lamia Community Commitment Award for contributions to the franchise off the ice.

Hillman was named the team's Defenseman of the Year last season. He was the team's top scoring defenseman with 41 points and had the second best plus-minus rating on the club with a plus-18.

The Jacks now have four players under contract for next season. All-star goaltender Grant Sjerven agreed to terms with the club earlier.

Berkman ends slump, beats Twins

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Lance Berkman hasn't been in the majors long enough to know when a slump is officially over.

He's just guessing, but a grand slam and two-run homer ought to do it.

Berkman went 4-for-5 and set a career high with six RBIs as the Houston Astros beat the Minnesota Twins 8-3 Thursday night.

Berkman, who has 16 homers in his first full season with the Astros, was homerless in June, with just two RBIs. More telling, Berkman had walked only three times.

"That's indicative of being too anxious and not seeing the ball," Berkman said. "You try to go back to square one: See the ball, hit the ball."

Berkman used a night off Wednesday to simplify his approach.

"It's good to help the team again," Berkman said. "With men on, I've struck out and popped up and just not produced.

"You take a look at the season, there's going to be at least one of those periods where you can't find it and you have no idea. You always panic and think you can't get out of it. If you can hold it to just one of these, you'll have a pretty good season."

GOLF: Barker, Flores meet for title

even."

The round came down to the final hole, as Flores and Beck were tied heading into the eighteenth tee box.

"I hit a good drive on eighteen and was able to chip it up close," Flores said.

That birdie was good enough to give Flores the win 1 up after 18 over last year's champion, Beck.

In the other semifinal match, Lubbock's Marian Barker defeated S nrock's Sterling Seward 2 up after 18 to advance to today's final.

"Well, I am one day closer again," Barker said.

Barker started the day off strong, giving herself a two hole lead after the second hole.

"I parred the first two holes and Sterling bogeyed them," Barker said.

The round was not without excitement as Seward made a move late in the round.

"I was up three at the turn and then Sterling calmed down and played really well," Barker said. "On fifteen I thought I hit a really good drive, but it must have taken a bad bounce because I ended up in the water."

A birdie by Seward on the seventeenth hole closed the gap to one, but Barker had just enough to hold on for the win.

"The wind changed today and came out of the north," Barker said. "It made the short holes long and the long ones short. The change made this an entirely different course."

After the first two holes, Barker never had complete command of the round as Seward hung around until the final hole.

"We went back and forth all day, and I just made more mistakes than she did," Seward said.

Today's final features two ex-champions in Flores and Barker. Flores won this tournament in 1999 while Barker won here in 1996.

"I guarantee that the hardest thing to do is getting to Friday, then you have to turn around and win," Barker said. "I don't know what is going to happen, but it will be fun."

The championship flight will tee off at 9:20 a.m. today to determine this year's champion.

Midland's Becky Hakes will be teeing off at 9 a.m. today in the first flight's championship round. Another Midlander, Denna McGuire, will also be playing for a championship coming out of the fifth flight at 8:15 a.m.

Semifinal results from the Women's West Texas golf tournament being held at The Club at Mission Dorado in Odessa:

'HOUNDS: Midland tries to finish strongly

(From 1C)

Luderer in the third and Mensik in the fourth.

With two straight wins against one of the better teams in the East Division, the RockHounds look to have shrugged off a sluggish performance against Tulsa, in which they lost three of four games. Finishing the first half strong is what the RockHounds are looking for before they start the second half of play Wednesday at home against San Antonio.

"Hopefully the guys got some motivation and finish strong for the half," DeFrancesco said. "We've still got some work to do in the next 72 games."

ROCKHOUND BITES: Arkansas' magic number to clinch the East is 2. If the Travelers can beat Round Rock and then if the Wranglers lose to Midland tonight, Arkansas will clinch... Yates picked up his 11th save of the season... Midland pitcher Aaron Harang will not take part in Tuesday's Texas League All-Star game in San Antonio. Harang has experienced some pain in his throwing arm and will take advantage of the three-day break coming up. Reliever Claudio Galva will take Harang's spot on the All-Star roster. Galva has six saves in 28 appearances with a 2.30 ERA.

Cardinals get robbed

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Nine St. Louis Cardinals players, including rookie sensation Albert Pujols, were the victims of hotel room break-ins Wednesday night.

The other victims were outfielder Bobby Bonilla, utility player Craig Paquette, and pitchers Gene Stechschulte, Mike James, Jason Christiansen, Mike Timlin, Steve Kline and Mike Matthews.

The thefts at the Fairmont Hotel, on Kansas City's upscale Country Club Plaza, were discovered when the players returned from Wednesday night's 4-1 loss to the Royals. Police were still taking statements late Thursday afternoon, and a list of stolen property was not immediately available. Police estimate the value of the stolen property at about $10,000

NBA: Lakers can make history with win

(From 1C)

They are beaten up, mentally and physically, practically running on fumes.

"I have enough in my gas tank to keep going, but I don't know when it's going to run out," Iverson said. "Hopefully we'll win this game and I'll find out in L.A."

Asked if he could remember the last time he lost three consecutive games, Jackson pondered the question for a moment and answered with a simple, "No."

For the record, the Lakers haven't lost three straight since Jackson took over as head coach two seasons ago, and a Jackson-coached team has not had a three-game losing streak since December 1994, during Jordan's first retirement.

The Lakers held a 3-1 lead over the Indiana Pacers last season but fell behind by 20 points at halftime and lost Game 5 by 33 points.

The Pacers, however, had more offensive weapons and were healthier than the 76ers, who have received little from anyone other than Iverson and Dikembe Mutombo.

Further decreasing their chances, the 76ers are facing a team that is 3-0 in elimination games this season. A year ago, Los Angeles was 4-6 in elimination games.

"We put ourselves in this situation last year and got blown out in Game 5, but we've matured so much this season that it's very difficult for us to imagine coming in for a Game 5 and having a letdown like we had last year," Bryant said.

OPEN: Woods struggles through first round

(From 1C)

bogeyed the last two holes for a 72.

Irwin, who qualified by winning the Senior Open, can become the oldest first-round leader of the U.S. Open since World War II if his lead stands. Where he goes from there is anyone's guess, but he won't rule himself out yet.

"It's not like I've never been here before," he said.

Irwin has won the U.S. Open three times, one fewer than Jack Nicklaus and Ben Hogan and two more than Woods. His last title came in 1990 at Medinah, when he was given a special exemption to play and beat unheralded Mike Donald in a playoff.

Who can forget Irwin prancing along the ropes slapping high-fives with the gallery after a 45-foot putt on the 72nd hole to get into a playoff?

There he was again Thursday, his hair more salt than pepper but the enthusiasm and desire unchanged.

He pumped his fist and mouthed "Wow!" to his caddie when he holed a momentum-saving 25-foot par putt on the 16th. And when he drilled his 2-iron into the crown of the hill from 198 yards and watched it hop up to the green and stop 2 feet from the hole, he was all smiles.

"I don't know if he's genetically blessed," said Loren Roberts, Irwin's playing partner and a mere pup at 45.

That was hardly the case for Woods, who is coming off a clean sweep of the majors and is trying to become the first player to win five straight majors.

His 2-iron sailed over the bunker and into the right rough on the opening hole, and Woods slumped his shoulders and tried to force a smile. He had to save par on the first two holes, and it didn't get any easier.

His 45-foot putt on No. 3 came up about 15 feet short. Woods walked slowly, the kind of gait expected out of a Senior Tour player like Irwin, until he reached the ball and slammed his putter into the ground. He wound up with a three-putt bogey, then plodded along with pars until disaster struck on the ninth hole.

With about 90 yards to the green, Woods hit his wedge fat and out to the right. It clipped a branch and plugged into the bunker, and he could do no better than blast out over the green into the thick Bermuda rough.

His pitch for par rolled 8 feet past the hole, and he lipped that out for double bogey.

Perhaps the storms were a blessing. Woods hung another shot out to the right and into the bunker on No. 10, blasting out to 8 feet when he hurried off the course.

With more storms coming and Southern Hills already soaked, the USGA called it a day after a delay of 90 minutes.

Tim Claire and David Rydell's names may be familiar to many area residents from their association with a previous company they ran and operated for over ten years. That company was sold to a consolidator after four years in corporate America. " We came to realize that we prefer a more personalized contact with our customer base "stated Claire. Rydell added " As the owners of ComfortZone 500, we once again have that opportunity. We also have the freedom to hand pick and train all of our employees. We are dedicated to providing the highest customer service possible".

Tim Claire

David Rydell

Claire continued, "Previous experience has taught us that building a customer base takes time, energy and dedication. And we have to offer the highest quality service installation at the best price to compete with the other contractors out there. With the establishment of a new company, we know our first priority is keeping our staff working. We have decided to give up trying to make a profit during the initial months of operation. Comfort Zone 500 will instead offer the best value in the Permian Basin to replace heating and air conditioning systems."

NEW YORK — Crude and heating oil futures rose at the New York Mercantile Exchange Thursday, but nearby gasoline futures ended slightly lower as traders unwound hedges and the New York cash markets fell.

Light trade buying of crude and heating oil futures to unwind a hedge also meant selling the gasoline leg. Speculators also bought on oversold technicals after the petroleum complex held support levels in early trade.

Crude oil futures were up 20 cents to close at $29.04 a barrel.

Gasoline futures fell 1.97 cent to close at 87.18 cents a gallon.

Heating oil futures ended at 83.28 cents a gallon, up 3.14 cents, while natural gas fell 26.3 cents to $4.038 per 1,000 cubic feet. In London, Brent crude was up 25 cents to close at $29.59 on the International Petroleum Exchange.

Dollar falls

LONDON — The U.S. dollar was lower Thursday against most other major currencies in European trading.

The euro was quoted at 85.88 cents in late European trading, up from 85.30 cents Wednesday. Later, in midday trading in New York, the euro traded at 86.09 cents.

Other dollar rates in Europe, compared with late Wednesday, included 121.29 Japanese yen, down from 121.73; 1.7776 Swiss francs, down from 1.7902, and 1.5164 Canadian dollars, up from 1.5162;

Gold rises

Gold closed in London at $273.00 bid per troy ounce, up from $271.20 on Wednesday. In Zurich the bid price was $272.35, up from $271.45. Gold rose $1.10 in Hong Kong to close at $272.25.

Silver up

Silver closed in London at $4.43 bid per troy ounce, up from $4.37.

Stocks tumble

NEW YORK — More bad economic and earnings news battered the stock market Thursday, slamming technology stocks and sending the Dow Jones industrials down more than 180 points.

The Dow was also hurt by news that General Electric's plans to acquire Honeywell might not win approval from European officials.

Analysts said a barrage of second-quarter earnings warnings have unnerved investors, who now fear that a business turnaround is unlikely in 2001. A profit warning after the market closed from tech bellwether JDS Uniphase raised the likelihood of more selling today.

The Dow closed down 181.49 at 10,690.13, for a loss of 1.7 percent, recovering from a drop of as much as 212 points.

Broader stock indicators also dropped sharply. The Standard & Poor's 500 index fell 21.73, or 1.8 percent, to 1,219.87, and the Nasdaq composite index fell 77.59 to 2,044.07, a decline of 3.7 percent.

Some of the Dow's steep decline Thursday was attributable to Honeywell, which dropped $5.16 to $37.10 after GE indicated its plan to acquire the company for $41 billion might not be approved by European regulators. GE rose $1.01 to $48.86, but another Dow component, United Technologies, fell $3.16 to $77.10 on speculation it was interested in buying Honeywell.

Trade seminar draws local interest

By Andrea Fryrear
MRT Correspondent

Local businesses got a taste of the fast-paced world of international trade Thursday at the West Texas and Mexico Trade Seminar.

Delegates from Chihuahua, Mexico and the surrounding area sat alongside interested local merchants throughout the day as a distinguished line of speakers gave them the information they needed to establish regular trade between Chihuahua and West Texas.

Neil McDonald, the Director of Economic Development at the Odessa Chamber of Commerce, said the seminar was an excellent opportunity for local businesses.

"Some small businesses will find immediate trade leads available through the 21 Mexican delegates," McDonald said. Others will discover international trade is a possibility that they can explore in the future.

Tom McMinn of McMinn's Furniture in Odessa found the seminar to be beneficial.

"They are answering a lot of our questions, but I'm mostly pleased with the opportunity to meet the people who are here. We all wish we had spent more time learning Spanish," McMinn said with a smile.

According to Fernando Castro, one of the Mexican delegates and the Secretariat of Industrial Development in Chihuahua, the primary goal of this seminar and others like it is to raise awareness of the availability of an international market.

"The main purpose is to let people know that there is a huge international market outside their home town or state," Castro said.

McMinn said he can see the far-reaching benefits of a seminar like this as well as the immediate goal of informing local businesses about international trade.

"I think that by opening trade across the border we will see a long term benefit of the development of the northern part of Mexico," McMinn explained. "Then that will eliminate a lot of the fear we have now regarding the border and make it more open."

Castro also said he feels both sides of the border will benefit equally from regular open trade. He explained that besides exchanging products, businesses from Texas and Mexico can make joint ventures that will allow them both to expand.

"There is a huge demand in the maquiladoras for a wide variety of products like plastic goods and electronics," Castro said. "Joint business ventures will help them to provide these goods and allow them to do more than they could do as individuals."

Maquiladoras are Mexican factories are usually located just across the border. Many American businesses prefer to do their manufacturing in maquiladoras because of the lower costs.

Additionally, Castro said West Texas businesses should be eager to take advantage of the free trade agreements Mexico has with other countries.

"We have free trade agreements with countries like Europe and South America. Small businesses from Texas can use these agreements to trade without tax with these other places," Castro explained.

Businesses from Texas and Mexico alike could benefit from a steady flow of economic traffic along La Entrada al Pacifico, and many local merchants like McMinn "look forward to the point in time when we can enjoy open trade across the border."

Pink birds of business

Flamingos no laughing matter in e-business

By Mike Yager
MRT Correspondent

Some people sell shoes. Other people sell cars. Midlander Pamela Jane "PJ" Zarzano sells flamingos. Not the actual bird, but replicas of the water fowl that can often be found adorning the front lawn of someone's grandparents.

Ms. Zarzano, who has turned her love for the pink flamingo into a profitable Web site based-business, proves one person's tacky piece of Americana can be another person's treasure.

"I've always been involved in business," she said, "but I've never done anything that's this much fun."

Ms. Zarzano runs and operates uptownflamingo.com, a Web site devoted entirely to the sale of everything flamingo related, from wine glasses, to clocks, to toilet brushes. She first thought of the idea when buyers commented on the logo of her first company, which featured a flamingo, and she thought that there might be a small niche that would be interested.

It turns out that more than a small niche was created. With sales of $200,000 last year and appearances in the Wall Street Journal and the June 4 issue of People Magazine, Ms. Zarzano is far from in the red with her pink friends.

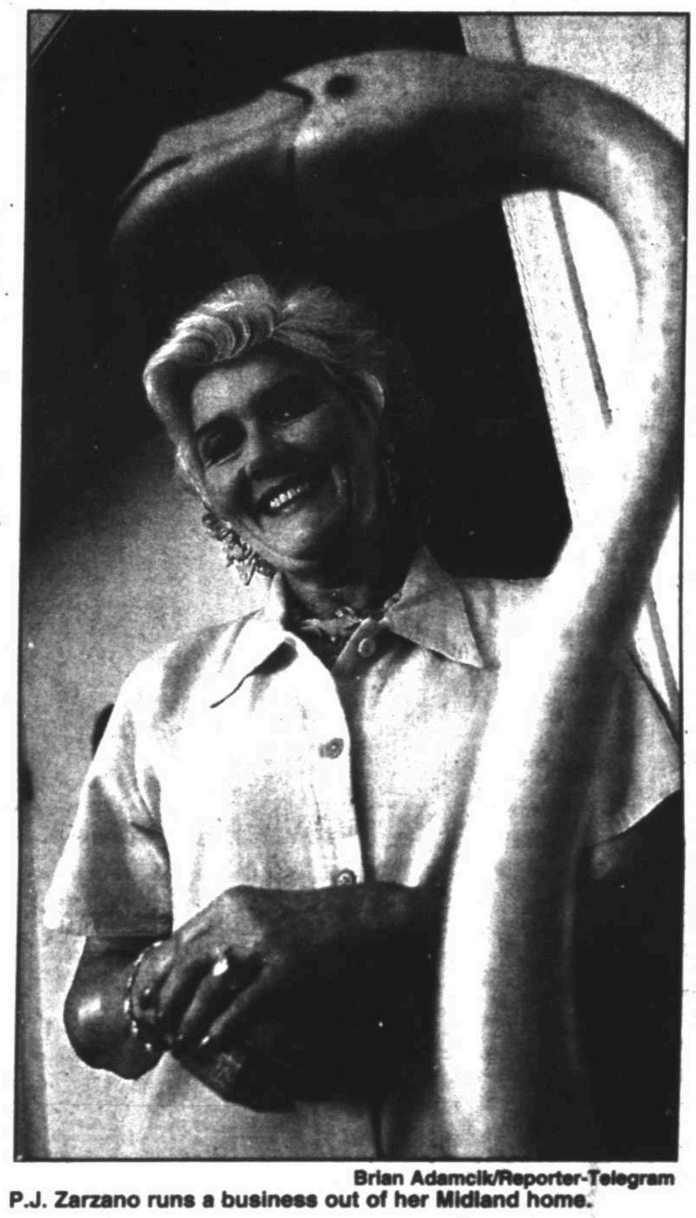

"It's been a very busy site all along," noted Ms. Zarzano, who has a faithful fan base that existed long before the People article, "but certainly because of the publicity it's become much busier."

She first gained the upsurge in publicity when a customer who received broken merchandise in the mail turned out to be a Wall Street Journal writer. When the writer saw how quickly Ms. Zarzano replaced the marred flamingo, she took notice of the e-business that had something far different to offer.

A year later, the Journal did a story on the end of pretension in entertaining company, no better story to accentuate the assets of uptownflamingo.com. Even Ms. Zarzano admits not many people can see the words "flamingo," and "classy," in any kind of close proximity; some would even laugh at the prospect. However, she is not laughing, and neither are her buyers.

Uptownflamingo.com has been praised as "always having something to salivate over," and with artwork that can price up to $2500, "tacky," is hardly the word that could be used for the merchandise.

"I carry really upscale products," commented Ms. Zarzano, despite selling more yard ornament birds than any other product, "I carry a tremendous line of products and some really beautiful pieces."

Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram
P.J. Zarzano runs a business out of her Midland home.

Ms. Zarzano operates the Web site out of her home, complete with, you guessed it, flamingo decor. Business, however, has been made more difficult after daughters/employees Gina, 20, and Sandy, 19, left earlier this week to attend Southwest Texas University in San Marcos. Difficulty aside, Ms. Zarzano is still ready to take on this surge of business, by herself or otherwise.

"I've lost my help, my slave labor," Ms. Zarzano said with a laugh, "I've pretty much learned to go without sleep now." Her daughters, who attended Midland College this past year were vital in the packaging, shipping and accounting of the company, and with upwards of 400 to 600 Web site hits per day, she admits she may not be able to retain her current pace herself.

While 400 to 600 hits may not seem like that much, it is far higher than average visitor/sale ratio, the task of self sufficiently running the business could seem a bit daunting.

"People don't come to the site unless they're really interested in buying," she commented, "and my customers are really interesting."

In fact, not only will some loyal buyers spent a pretty penny at the site, but will mail Ms. Zarzano pictures of themselves adorned in the flamingo attire or surrounded by whatever they may have purchased.

When she may seem a little stressed at the prospect of an even larger upsurge in her Midland-based, small e-business, Ms. Zarzano merely reminds herself why she continues the fight.

Ms. Zarzano admits, "No one has ever taken the chance to put this kind of business together," but nevertheless, it has become a model for other up-and-coming businesses on the net.

SBA recognizes Permian Basin entrepreneurs

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Permian Basin entrepreneurs were celebrated Thursday as the Lubbock District Office of the Small Business Administration marked its annual Small Business Week celebration.

Permian Basin honorees include Trina Moralez, president and chief executive officer of La Margarita Restaurant, Small Business Person of the Year; Iris Correa, executive director MANO Hispanic Chamber of Commerce, Odessa, Minority Small Business Advocate of the Year; Joann Garcia, office manager, Great Basin Petroleum, Financial Service Advocate of the Year; J. Gordon Lunn, founder, worldinternetradio.com, Small Business Journalist of the Year; Community National Bank of Midland and Southwest Bank of Odessa, Outstanding Lender; Isaac Lujan, Triple I Janitorial Services, District Director's Young Entrepreneur; Paula Delbosque, owner La Debo Na Salon & Day Spa, Midland and Patrice Speed, co-owner, Loving Touch Flower & Gifts, Monahans, Entrepreneurial Spirit Award.

Tom Dowell, SBA District Director, told those at the luncheon that the Lubbock District office, which oversees 71 Permian Basin counties for the SBA and was created in 1953, last year guaranteed 362 loans worth $50 million to small businesses and entrepreneurs. The group also counseled 4,000 small business owners or would-be owners and hosted 5,000 at its workshops.

Access to capital is a major issue for small businesses, pointed out keynote speaker Rey Ocanas, executive director of the Texas Association of Community Development Corporations.

His association is comprised of 400 non-profit organizations across the state focusing on housing and economic development, such as MANO — the Mexican American Network of Odessa.

He likened a small business to an engine, one that may need some parts repaired or replaced, or the capital to fuel its growth or continued existence.

Organizations such as MANO, he said, are key to helping small businesses or entrepreneurs who want to start a business. MANO helps those who have bad credit or too short a credit history banks require for loans, and lack the personal wealth or friends and family with the capital to help fund a business start-up or expansion.

He said commercial banks can be a vital partner in helping fund such community development organizations, as can the city and county where the organization is located.

"Why is this important?" he asked, pointing out there are 25 million small businesses in the nation and 99 percent of the nation's employers are small businesses.

"Fair and equitable access to capital for a small business can help turn a neighborhood around," he added. "There won't be a Dell, a Samsung, Sony or IBM that come in and create 10,000 jobs with high incomes. And that's OK because you have a better hope — small businesses. They are a viable option, they exist and they're vibrant. A healthy small business is nimble, flexible and adaptable. It can locate its store or shop in a low-income area and have a ripple effect. The workers buy their groceries in that area; they eat lunch there; buy office supplies there, use the dry cleaners. It also improves the appearance of the neighborhood."

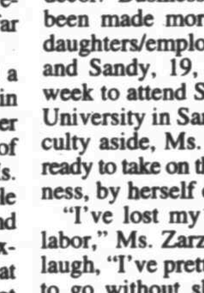

He said legislation passed in the last session funded a program that would provide funding for grants to associations like MANO, allowing them to help small businesses in their communities. The language of the program died in the legislation session, he said, so his association is waiting to see if they can still provide the grants. If not, he said, he will lobby the next session of the Legislature in 2003 again.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Invest in bonds that are professionally managed

By Eric Tyson

Q: Is this a good time to buy into bonds? Interest rates have declined, so should I wait until they are up again? Some suggest that a drawback of buying bond funds versus individual bonds is that a bond fund never matures and therefore the price fluctuates, while a individual bond's price will be stable when it is close to its maturity. What's your opinion on this?

Tyson

A: I don't make predictions. Even if I did, I would first still tell you that you should come up with an overall asset-allocation mix — how much you want in stocks versus bonds. Only then should you purchase specific investments to fulfill your desired asset allocation.

Since early 2000, interest rates have been on the decline, but the interest rates on longer-term bonds have actually risen significantly this spring. If your overall asset allocation has you putting more money into bonds than what you already have invested in bonds, I would say it doesn't look like a bad time to do so.

As for bond funds versus individual bonds, please remember that a bond fund is nothing more than a collection of individual bonds. All individual bonds fluctuate in value as interest rates change.

It is true that a bond's price tends to become more stable as the bond approaches its maturity, but that issue is irrelevant in your selecting bond funds or individual bonds. What you need to do before buying any bonds is to determine what range of maturities makes sense for you given your investment objectives and situation. You can invest in short-term to long-term bonds either individually or via a diversified mutual fund.

One thing that an individual bond can do for you is allow you to pinpoint getting back a particular amount of principal at a predetermined date (presuming the bond issuer is not in default). Such certainty might be useful when you know you're going to need money on a given date, such as for payment of your kid's college tuition. If you need money with complete certainty at a given future date and you buy individual bonds, you had better invest in bonds with high safety, such as U.S. Treasuries. (Treasuries pay interest that is federally taxable but state tax-free, which might not be tax-appropriate for you.)

When I invest in bonds, I do so through the best professionally managed bond mutual funds. Why? For the simple reason that a bond-fund manager has the time and expertise I don't have to evaluate the merits of various individual bonds. Also, a bond fund offers me tremendous diversification at a lower cost that I couldn't replicate on my own.
