Aquino's appearance draws rousing response

WASHINGTON (AP) — Philippine President Corazon Aquino, given a rousing reception, told a joint meeting of Congress today that if she fails to negotiate peace with communist guerrillas threatening her government she will not flinch from "taking up the sword of war."

"I will not stand by and allow an insurgent leadership to spurn our offer of peace and kill our young soldiers, and threaten our new freedom," Mrs. Aquino said to the applause of her audience.

Mrs. Aquino was greeted in the House chamber by enthusiastic applause and cheers from the members of Congress, many of whom sported yellow flowers in their lapels. Mrs. Aquino wore her trademark yellow suit, like the ones she wore so often during her campaign for the presidency earlier this year.

Mrs. Aquino's speech underscored her policy of negotiating with the communist New People's Army guerrilla movement and, if the talks fail, waging a vigorous war against the insurgents.

"I must explore the path of peace to the utmost, for at its end, whatever disappointment I meet there, is the moral basis for laying down the olive branch of peace and taking up the sword of war," she said. "Still, should it come to that, I will not waver from the course laid down by your great liberator," a reference to Abraham Lincoln and his determination to fight the Civil War.

"Like Lincoln, I understand that force may be necessary before mercy," she said. "Like Lincoln, I don't relish it, yet I will do whatever it takes to defend the integrity and freedom of my country."

She said the aim of the negotiations is "to bring the insurgents down from the hills and, by economic progress and justice, show them that for which the best-intentioned among them fight." Convincing the guerrillas to stop fighting would be accomplished by "political initiatives and local reintegration programs."

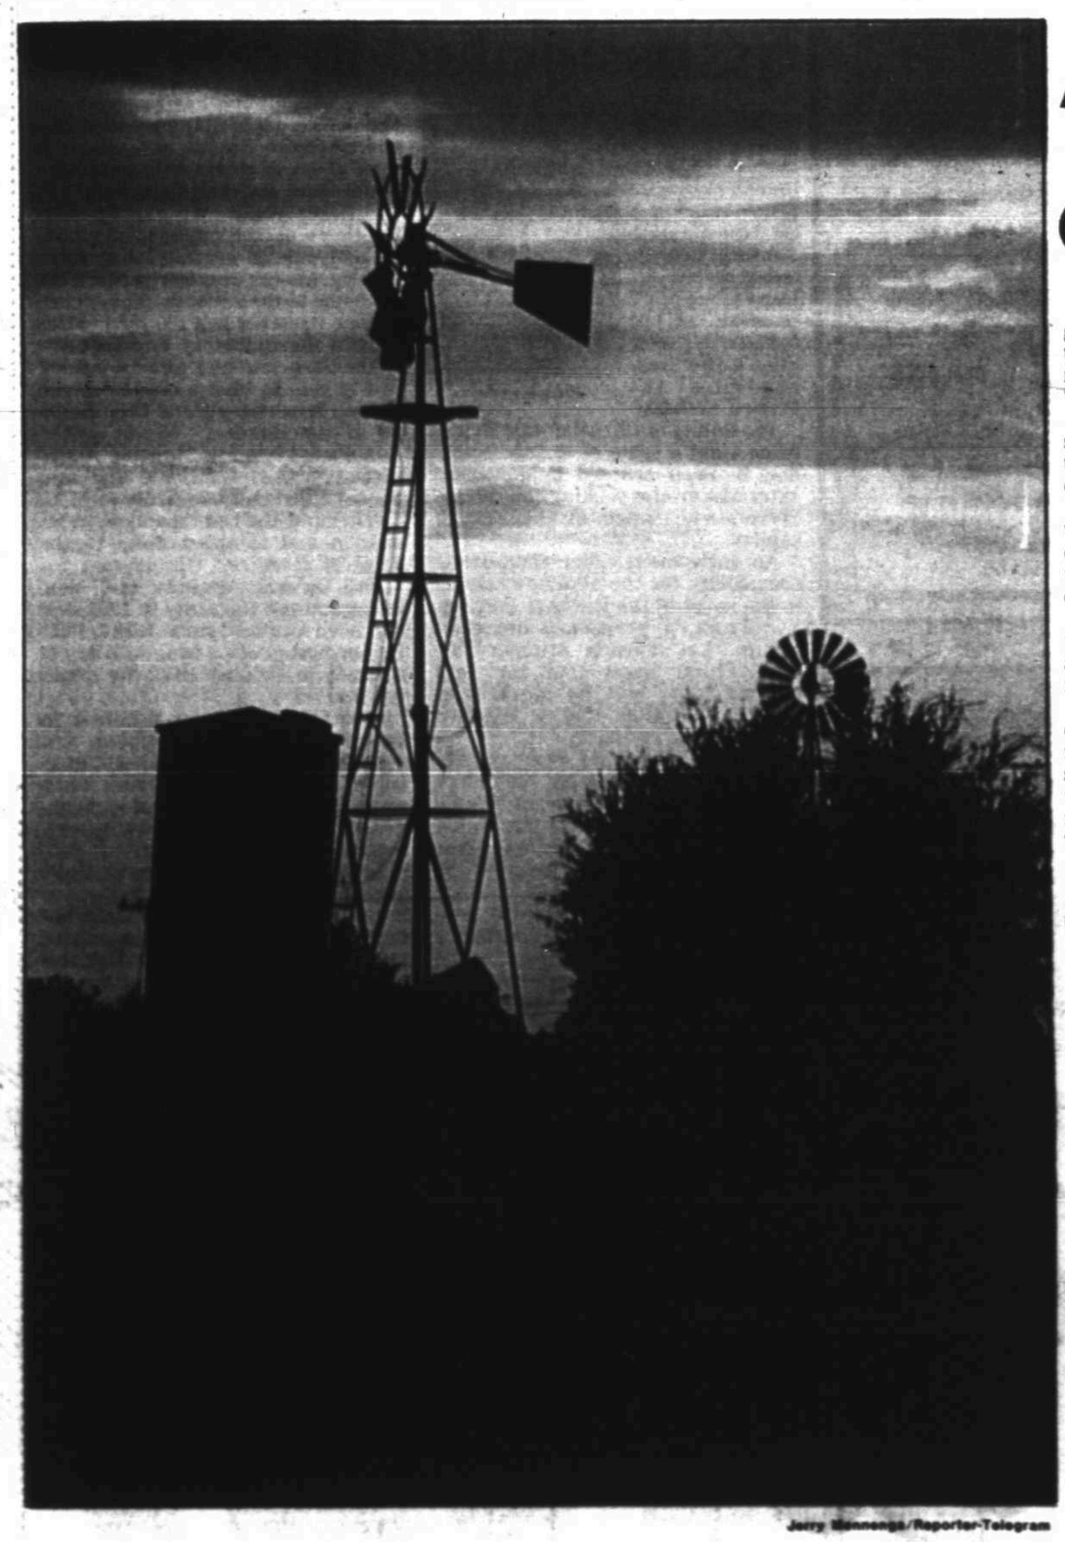

She said her predecessor, Ferdinand Marcos, set aside democratic rights to wage a war against "a communist insurgency that numbered less than 500.

"Unhampered by respect for human rights, he went at it with hammer and tongs. By the time he fled, that insurgency had grown to more than 16,000.

"I think there is a lesson here to be learned about trying to stiffle a thing with the means by which it grows."

After President Reagan and Mrs. Aquino met at the White House on Wednesday, her counsel, Teodoro Locsin, quoted Reagan as telling her, "I've had experience dealing with communists, and you have to be careful."

Gramm seeks study of oil import fee

From Wire Reports

DALLAS — U.S. Sen. Phil Gramm, who in the past has joined President Reagan in opposing an oil import fee, now says he wants a study on whether there should be such a tariff.

Gramm said Wednesday he plans to introduce a bill, called the Oil and Gas Production Revitalization Act, which calls for the import fee study, reiterates Gramm's support of the windfall profits tax repeal, and seeks a requirement that 50 percent of purchases for the Strategic Petroleum Reserve be from domestic sources.

Gramm told the Texas Independent Producers and Royalty Owners Association (TIPRO) the act will call on the Department of Commerce to assess the impact of petroleum imports on this nation's security.

The senator said President Reagan has agreed to support this review of the oil import situation along with other measures in his proposed legislation, including repeal of the Windfall Profit Tax and changes in the Fuel Use Act.

The legislation mandate a thorough assessment of the economic and security impacts of petroleum imports under Section 232 of the Trade Expansion Act of 1962. Policy alternatives — which could include a fee on imports of crude oil and petroleum products — then will be recommended to the president.

"This is the first successful effort, at least to the point of working out a package, that was agreed on by the industry (and) that was supported by the administration," Gramm said in a telephone interview from Washington.

The study would assess the impact of petroleum imports on the nation's economy and security. Conducted by the Department of Commerce and the National Security Agency, it would also evaluate a proposed oil import fee, Gramm said.

Teen boys find they're brothers

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — Chris White and Chris Yerby jokingly told people at school they were brothers.

They not only shared the same name. Both were tall, both played basketball at Carroll High School and they looked remarkably alike.

"People didn't believe us" when we said we were brothers, said Yerby, 18. "They said, 'How can you be brothers? You're both named Chris.'"

It wasn't until last month that the two learned that what seemed mere coincidence was much more.

They are brothers, adopted by different families at birth.

"When I first saw Chris Yerby, I couldn't take my eyes off of him," said Margaret White, mother of 16-year-old Chris White. "I had no doubt they were brothers. No doubt at all."

After an exhaustive search by their adoptive parents, Yerby and White learned they were brothers, born in Austin two years apart, given up for adoption at birth and reunited — by a quirk of fate — in a Corpus Christi high school.

"People say we look alike and that we even walk alike," White said, looking over at his older brother.

"Yeah," agreed Yerby, who is now a freshman at Texas A&M. "My mom now says we even laugh alike."

The two tall, dark-haired teens met last year at Carroll High School, where they both played basketball.

"On my first day at Carroll, these girls came up to me and said, 'Hey, we saw your brother working the other day,'" White told the Corpus Christi Caller-Times.

"And I said, 'I don't have a brother,' and they said, 'Yes you do. We saw him.'"

Slowly, Yerby and White became friends off the basketball court. The more the two told each other about themselves, the more the coincidences piled up.

White, now a high school junior, remembers the conversation.

Council's 'superconference' examines workforce

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — A day-long regional conference at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin held to study the worsening mismatch between workplace needs and workforce capabilities drew nearly 250 representatives from 27 communities in 17 counties surrounding the Midland-Odessa area.

Hosted by UTPB, the "superconference" was sponsored by the Permian Basin Private Industry Council (PIC) for the purpose of exploring the issues, alternatives and perspectives in training and educating the workforce.

Odessa businessman Dave Cox, chairman of the regional PIC chapter and of the Texas Association of Private Industry Councils, said the primary task of PIC, which was created under the Job Partnership Training Act in 1982, has been to train and retrain workers to fill jobs in a changing workplace.

However, he said, PIC's role, by necessity, has changed because in many areas, including the Permian Basin, there are no jobs to train workers for.

This has, in effect, Cox said, put PIC in the business of creating jobs through becoming involved in economic development.

James Roberts, president of the Andrews-based Roberts Publishing Co., which owns 25 newspapers in West Texas, asked those attending the conference if they knew why the Midland-Odessa area has consistently ranked third nationally in per capita retail sales. "Because of the county to the north and the county to the south," he said, referring to residents of Andrews and Crane counties who shop in the Midland-Odessa area.

"If you're going anywhere," Roberts said, "you'd better take us with you."

House tentatively approves ban on state income taxes

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Just two hours before committee hearings on a possible sales tax increase began, the House Wednesday gave tentative approval to a constitutional ban on state income taxes.

On a 99-33 vote, the House advanced the proposed constitutional amendment against imposition of a personal or corporate state income tax. All proposed constitutional amendments need 100 votes in the House to pass.

Ways and Means Committee Chairman Stan Schlueter, D-Salado and co-sponsor of the resolution, said at least 18 of the members absent Wednesday would vote with him when the House takes up the matter again next week. The plan still faces tough sledding in the Senate.

Lewis faces tough fight on tax hike

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Twenty-one months ago, Speaker Gib Lewis purposely appointed 13 of the most conservative members of the House of Representatives to the tax-writing Ways and Means Committee.

Wednesday, the speaker asked them to consider supporting Gov. Mark White's temporary 1.125-percent sales tax increase. At most, four members of the committee will support higher taxes. Interviews with representatives Wednesday show Lewis has a tough job ahead of him moving a bill out of committee and an almost equally difficult task once it hits the House floor.

"I have not asked for any commitment on any of their part or any votes for any proposal we might have," Lewis said after a breakfast meeting with most of the committee members. "I just said, 'Here's where we are. Here's where I think we should be going. That's a decision you all have to make.'"

The speaker reversed his own anti-tax stance Tuesday, saying the Senate's refusal to go along with proposed House cuts leaves him no alternative in dealing with the $2.8 billion state deficit.

Ways and Means Committee Chairman Stan Schlueter, according to sources one of the four reluctant "aye" votes, underscored that reluctance at the beginning of the committee's first public hearing on taxes Wednesday.

"We are here today at the request of the Senate," Schlueter said. "We in the House do not take taxing people lightly."

Tax opponents and supporters on the committee agree that a tax bill will not get the necessary seven votes for a favorable report to the House floor. Committee members say Lewis does not want to move the bill to another, more friendly committee, but will do so "as a last resort."

French response to terrorism will be 'crushing and without weakness'

PARIS (AP) — Premier Jacques Chirac said today France's response to a wave of terrorist bombings, including one the previous day that killed five people and injured 52, would be "crushing and without weakness."

French news reports said police have identified two men believed to have carried out Wednesday's bombing at the Tati clothing and textile store in the Montparnasse quarter of the Left Bank and distributed their descriptions throughout the country.

The reports quoted reliable sources as saying witnesses identified the bombers, from photographs, as Emile Ibrahim Abdallah, a brother of a suspected terrorist imprisoned in Paris, and Salim el Khoury, a member of an extremist group called the Lebanese Armed Revolutionary Factions.

The reports could not be immediately confirmed with police.

Groups claiming responsibility for four other terrorist attacks in the French capital since Sept. 8 have demanded the release of the imprisoned Lebanese brother, Georges Ibrahim Abdallah.

■ Attache in Lebanon assassinated — 2A

"All those who manipulate the bombers must know that they will not shake the calm, the firmness and the determination of the French," Chirac told reporters. "If we can obtain proof of the origin of these attacks, the response will be crushing and without weakness."

The conservative premier, who is also the mayor of Paris, did not say what form a response would take.

President Francois Mitterrand, in Indonesia for a four-day state visit, was in Bali today to rest before returning to France on Friday. He spoke with Chirac at length by telephone.

In another attack involving a French national, the French military attache in Lebanon was assassinated by gunmen today as he drove to work at his country's embassy in Christian east Beirut.

An anonymous caller to a Western news agency in Beirut claimed responsibility for the slaying of Col. Christian Goutiere in the name of the Revenge and Justice Front, a previously unknown group. There was no immediate indication the attack was linked to the Paris bombings, four of which have been claimed by Middle Eastern groups.

Wednesday's bombing was the bloodiest since the recent wave of terrorism began in the French capital Sept. 8. As of this afternoon, there had been no claim of responsibility for the bombing.

Investigators worked late into the night picking through debris in front of the store on the rue de Rennes, looking for clues and to determine the type of explosive device used.

U.S. stresses readiness as arms negotiations resume

GENEVA (AP) — Superpower arms talks resumed today with the United States professing readiness to outline new proposals despite anger over Soviet treatment of American journalist Nicholas Daniloff.

Soviet negotiator Alexei Obukhov said the United States was dramatizing the Daniloff case "with the aim of enhancing the difficulties in these relations and to create additional sources of tension."

If the United States brings up the subject at the talks, Obukhov told reporters, it means "the American side does not wish to create an atmosphere which would be favorable" to seeking arms control agreements.

The two sides resumed talks after a three-month summer break. The sixth round of the negotiations began with a plenary meeting at the Soviet mission attended by 31 American delegates and some two dozen Soviets.

Leading the U.S. delegation is chief negotiator Max Kampelman. Others in the delegation include Richard Perle, assistant secretary of defense, and Pentagon arms expert Col. Robert Linhard, special assistant to President Reagan for national security affairs.

Obukhov, acting head of the Soviet delegation, also leads the negotiating group on long-range weapons. He is filling in for Viktor Karpov, now in Washington with Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze.

The two sides are using other forums in an effort to make progress toward a second U.S.-Soviet summit. The first meeting between Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev was held last Nov. 19-21 in Geneva.

Obukhov was asked about reports that the United States was prepared to propose 30 percent cuts in nuclear forces as an interim measure until 50 percent cuts could be agreed.

He said the Soviets would evaluate any U.S. proposals on their merits. He repeated the Soviet position that the United States must agree to extend the 1972 anti-ballistic missile treaty for 10 to 15 years if any weapons cuts can be agreed.

He also repeated that the Soviets are willing to agree on "partial measures" on outer-space weapons if the United States is not ready for the "radical" solution of banning them completely.

He said those could include banning anti-satellite weapons or "space to earth" weapons.

Daniloff, a Moscow correspondent for U.S. News & World Report magazine, was imprisoned for 13 days in Moscow on charges of spying, which he has repeatedly denied. Released last week to the U.S. Embassy, Daniloff cannot leave the Soviet Union while his case is pending.

Reagan on Wednesday said the case of Daniloff "continues to limit severely what is achievable in our bilateral relations," and urged the Soviets to resolve the case before it does "even more damage" to U.S.-Soviet ties.

During the recess in the Geneva talks, experts from both sides met twice, once in Moscow and then in Washington, to try to find common ground for an arms control accord.

U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz is to meet with Shevardnadze Friday in Washington, and is prepared to discuss arms control and other issues with the Soviet minister, Reagan said Wednesday.

In his arrival statement in Geneva Tuesday, Kampelman said his delegation has "additional ideas to propose" about intermediate-range nuclear forces and strategic nuclear weapons.

Asked when the United States planned to make the proposals, U.S. spokesman Terry Shroeder said he did not want to discuss timing.

He also declined to release details, citing both sides' confidentiality clause.

Obukhov, in his arrival statement, said there had been no progress in the previous five rounds of Geneva talks and that it was now time to "get them off the ground."

He indicated that the U.S. Strategic Defense Initiative remained a major obstacle to agreement on strategic arms reductions.

SDI, dubbed "Star Wars," seeks to create a space-based shield against incoming missiles. Reagan has staunchly defended the project, while the Soviets have demanded it be scrapped, saying it can be used offensively.

TAX

That possibility, said committee member Ron Lewis, D-Mauriceville, could help the speaker win the cooperation he needs to get the bill to the floor through some rare parliamentary maneuvers.

"They'd rather debate the bill here than have someone else debate it," Lewis said. "They want that input."

One alternative, said committee member Bruce Gibson, D-Godley, would be to report the bill back to the House saying the committee cannot agree on a recommendation for action. That would still require seven votes, but some committee members opposed to taxes said they might go along to give the full House a chance to vote.

"I believe in the democratic process," said Rep. Mike McKinney, D-Centerville.

Rep. Dan Morales, D-San Antonio, said other support might emerge if the committee votes to dedicate tax income to a popular program such as prison construction.

Gibson said the breakfast meeting with speaker occasionally became "very hot," with those opposed to taxes expressing a "firm commitment." Rep. Lee Jackson, R-Dallas, said that just because the speaker feels the Senate has killed the House plan doesn't mean the rest of the House agrees.

"This committee will be responsible and work on the subject as long as we're in Austin, but I can't predict what the outcome will be," Jackson said. The special session ends Oct. 7.

The committee heard testimony from pro- and anti-tax witnesses during its public hearing Wednesday. Barbara Tindell, from the United Way chapter in Schlueter's home district, said federal and state budget cuts mean "deserving people are turned away every day."

"A tax increase at this time, while unwelcome, appears to be necessary," she said.

C.A. Stubbs, president of a strong anti-tax movement in San Antonio, called on the committee to rein in "out of control" government spending. "The federal and state governments are taking it from us faster than we are making it," Stubbs said, "and that is the stuff of which tax rebellions are made."

INCOME

The proposal, long a favorite of conservatives, drew strong comments for and against during House debate Wednesday. After final legislative passage, the amendment would come before the voters in the November 1987 general election. If the voters approve, only another constitutional amendment could permit imposition of a state income tax.

"The people of the state should have the opportunity and should know from now on that whenever there should be a corporate or personal income tax levied upon them it will be up to them to do it themselves," said Rep. Bill Haley, D-Center and co-sponsor of the resolution. "They will have to amend the Constitution to do it."

Haley called the federal income tax "the most onerous tax that has ever been imposed." Other supporters said the constitutional prohibition would protect the state's business climate and spur economic development.

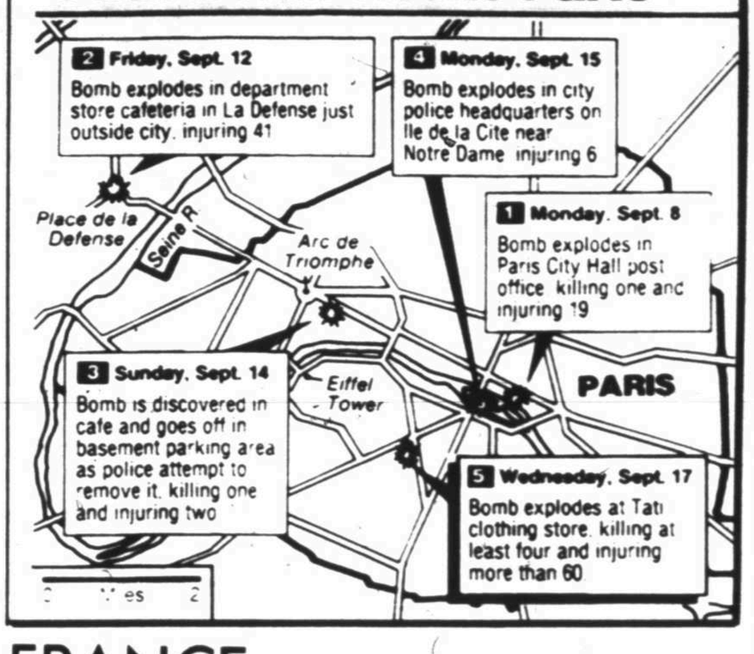

Speaking against the plan, Rep. Al Price, D-Beaumont, said it would tie the hands of future legislatures, forcing them to rely on sales and property taxes, which he said hurt the poor more than the wealthy.

"This resolution would put us in the posture of conducting very bad public policies by foreclosing on some very viable options ... (future lawmakers) may necessarily need in order to keep the state on a sound financial footing," said Price, an advocate of using the income tax to solve the state's current $2.8 billion deficit.

Rep. Irma Rangel, D-Kingsville, called the resolution "wrong." "We would be losing the authority as legislators to represent the people as far as an income tax," she said. "We're passing the buck to the people."

The entire Midland-area delegation — Reps. Tom Craddick of Midland, Kelly Godwin of Odessa, Larry Don Shaw of Big Spring and Jim Rudd of Brownfield — voted for the resolution.

Fifth Bomb Rocks Paris

FRANCE

Police were working on the basis of testimony from several witnesses who said the bomb was thrown from a black BMW in which two mustachioed men were riding.

The most seriously wounded were treated on the sidewalk in front of the Tati store, one of a chain of low-priced clothing and mercantile outlets frequented by North Africans and other immigrant workers in France.

Four of the most seriously injured underwent surgery, hospital authorities said, and 14 others were in serious condition.

Three people were killed and more than 100 injured in the four previous bombings, which hit a city hall post office, a cafeteria in suburban La Defense, the Pub Renault on the Champs-Elysees Avenue and police headquarters in central Paris.

Groups calling themselves the Committee for Solidarity with Arab and Middle East Political Prisoners and the Partisans of Right and Freedom have issued conflicting claims of responsibility for the earlier bombings and threatened new attacks unless Georges Ibrahim Abdallah and two other jailed Middle Easterners are freed.

Abdallah, the suspected leader of the Lebanese Armed Revolutionary Factions, is serving a four-year prison term for possession of arms and false papers.

French military attache assassinated in Beirut

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — A man with a silencer-equipped pistol assassinated the French military attache today as the diplomat stepped from his car just outside the security zone surrounding the French Embassy.

Goutierre

The killing in Christian east Beirut came amid a spate of deadly bombings in Paris claimed by Lebanese extremist groups seeking the release of comrades jailed in the French capital.

An anonymous caller claimed responsibility for the attache's slaying in the name of the Revenge and Justice Front, a previously unknown group. "Let (French Premier Jacques) Chirac know that our next coming blow will be more crippling," the caller told a Western news agency in Beirut.

Embassy spokesman Francois Abi Saab said Col. Christian Goutierre was outside the French legation's security zone in Hazmieh's Mar Takla neighborhood when he was shot twice in the head at 8:30 a.m. (1:30 a.m. EDT).

The Voice of Lebanon radio station of President Amin Gemayel's rightist Christian Phalange Party said Goutierre was struck by three bullets to the head that killed him instantly.

A police spokesman said Goutierre had been tailed by four gunmen, one of whom shot him with a silencer-equipped pistol when the attache stepped out of his parked car.

The Moslem-controlled Voice of the Nation radio station said police described the assassin as a tall, dark man about 28 years old, wearing a white shirt and beige trousers.

Officials could not explain why Goutierre parked outside the guarded and policed security zone after driving his car the 600 yards from his home to the embassy. The security zone stretches in a 100-yard radius around the four-story embassy.

Abi Saab said the attache's body was taken to the morgue of the French Missionary Hotel Dieu hospital in east Beirut.

In Paris, Defense Minister Andre Giraud praised Goutierre and said he was killed in a "cowardly fashion.

"He knew the risks involved in his mission and assumed them to the point of sacrifice," Giraud said.

The Defense Ministry said Goutierre entered the army in 1954, and had been a colonel since July 1, 1980. He was posted to his country's Beirut embassy in October 1984, the ministry said.

Syria, the main power broker in Lebanon, its western neighbor, also condemned the attack and said it received the news of Goutierre's assassination with "profound pain and anger," the Syrian Arab News Agency reported from Damascus.

Syrian President Hafez Assad's government maintains 25,000 troops in northern and eastern Lebanon under a 1976 peacekeeping mandate from the Arab League. It also has been trying to help free seven French hostages held by Shiite Moslem extremists in Lebanon.

A series of kidnappings and attacks over the past two years prompted most Western embassies to move their staffs from the lawless Moslem western sector of Beirut to the city's Christian zone.

AQUINO

At the same time, Locsin told reporters that Reagan appeared to accept Mrs. Aquino's plan for dealing with the insurgency, which has picked up wide support in the poverty-stricken rural regions of the Philippines.

Locsin said both leaders "have the same cynicism about the hard-core guerrillas coming down from the hills," but that Mrs. Aquino feels a need to exhaust peaceful means before invoking military options.

Talks between representatives of the government and the guerrillas began this summer, but no progress has been reported.

A U.S. official, eager to dispel any suggestions that the administration is dissatisfied with Mrs. Aquino's performance, said the United States is solidly behind the strategy. "We are completely in accord," said the official, who spoke only on condition he not be identified.

At a black-tie dinner at the State Department Wednesday evening, Secretary of State George Shultz told the Philippine leader, "We are on your side. Our partnership makes an irreplaceable contribution to stability in the Pacific."

In response, Mrs. Aquino cautioned Shultz that in the "new, mature relationship" between the two countries, the Philippines would sometimes be difficult to deal with, but she said, for the United States, a democracy, "this should be a virtue, not a vice in your eyes."

Mrs. Aquino's visit with Reagan for 45 minutes in the Oval Office and at a White House luncheon was the first official meeting of a nine-day trip to the United States and it was the first time they have met.

Speaking to reporters afterward, Reagan said "her efforts to reconcile all elements of her society and bring them into the democratic process are applauded here.

"Her personal bravery in this heroic endeavor to diffuse conflict has won the hearts and imagination of people everywhere.

"Despite President Aquino's efforts, however, wel-armed communist guerrillas remain a threat to democracy in the Philippines."

The president heaped unqualified praise on Mrs. Aquino's economic program, which is designed to nibble away at the country's $26 billion foreign debt through economic reforms and increased incentives for private industry.

Regarding matching workers to jobs, Roberts said it needs to be a regional effort.

Roberts also noted community leadership has changed over the years, from when community leaders had control of such things as setting utility rates in their own areas. Such responsibilities, he said, have been transferred to Austin.

As to economic problems that currently plague the area, Roberts said, "When a cow is sick, like we are in the Permian Basin, you don't cure the head and tail, you cure the whole cow."

UTPB President Dr. Duane Leach described the conference as "a call to action for the Permian Basin," observing that "catastrophe will not destroy the Permian Basin, but carelessness will. We are going to have to take hold of the future and shape our lives."

The morning segment of the conference was moderated by Tom Wageman, president of RepublicBank First National Midland, who explained the purpose of the day-long program and said individual afternoon group sessions would explore specific elements of the problem of matching workers to jobs.

The partcipants in these groups, he said, would be expected to emerge with recommendations for measures designed to resolve the problem.

The results of the day-long conference will be compiled, evaluated and will result in evolution of a plan that can be implemented to resolve the mismatch between the workplace and the workforce, leaders said.

Midlander Clayton Williams, a businessman, financier-developer, rancher, oil and gas producer, as well as an instructor in entrepeneurship at Texas A&M, was the luncheon speaker.

Williams, who has create 23 diverse and successful companies in less than 30 years, explained that Claydesta Communications grew out of necessity. Efforts to lease space in the Claydesta complex were being hampered by delays in telephone installations. Because of this, a completely computerized phone system was installed that allowed Claydesta to provide near-instant phone service to tenants.

Claydesta Communications emerged, he said, when someone questioned why such service couldn't be made available to others. Claydesta Communications now serves 50,000 customers and has 350 employees, some of whom have been relocated from his oil and gas operations, Williams said.

Regarding current economic conditions, Williams recalled how, at the height of the boom he had 25 rigs working in the Gittings Field alone, his oil and gas company had three million acres under lease nationwide and he had 900 employees. Now, he said, his workforce has been reduced to about 112 and he has two rigs working.

During the boom, he said, it was growth, growth and more growth, but it's different now. The downturn has forced implementation of every conceiveable efficiency including salary reductions and smaller vehicles for company executives.

Willaims described what has happened as a result of the downturn in economic activity as "adapting to the real world."

The morning conference session was opened by Peter O'Donnell of Dallas, president of the O'Donnell Foundation and a member of the Governor's Select Committee on Higher Education.

O'Donnell tracked, what he described as, the "serious problems in Texas" caused by decreasing oil production that have slowed growth in the state.

He predicted that, with the state's population continuing to expand, 1.4 million jobs will need to be created by 1990. To provide these jobs, he said, "We must build a high-tech industrial base."

This will only be accomplished, he said, by strengthening public education. He noted that Texas ranks 45th on SAT scores and stated, without equivocation, that "Texas universities are not 'No. 1' in anything but botany."

Funding for university research, which is essential to higher education, he said, must be increased.

O'Donnell also observed that Texas receives only 3.6 percent of federal research and development funds.

As to why Texas hasn't gotten its share of federal funds, O'Donnell said, Texas is "not hungry" and there are "no great research universities to attract R&D" funds in Texas.

Saying "there is a direct linkage between higher education, economic development and jobs," O'Donnell cited the State of Massachusetts as a successful example of "strong support for public education" and invests heavily in higher education.

O'Donnell pointed out that, in the early 1970s, Massachusetts had a higher unemployment rate than Texas but because of investment in education and its "great research universities," Massachusetts now has a lower unemployment rate than Texas.

He observed that Texas is only now "beginning to provide linkage between higher education, economic development and jobs," which will enable the state to develop the skills and talents that business needs and that this will enhance the state's economic future.

The conference was organized and coordinated for the Private Industry Council by Johnnie Lou Avery of Big Spring, who expressed the belief that the conference provided area business, civic and educational leaders a chance, for the first time, to gather and consider problems on a regional basis and attempt to develop solutions to the problems.

GRAMM

Gramm, who has been opposed to such a fee, said the study will form the basis of a recommendation to President Reagan, also an opponent.

"It would look at the benefits in terms of national security. It would look at the costs in terms of national economy," he said. Gramm said the assessment is a compromise between pro-import fee and anti-import fee factions to examine the facts.

"Everybody's entitled to their own opinion, but not their own facts," he said.

"The administration feels and I feel that having a full airing of the issue, letting everybody present their case, agreeing on a common set of facts will help bring us a unity of purpose on this issue."

"Chris said to me, 'I'm adopted,' and I said, 'Wow, I'm adopted, too.' Then when he said he was born in Austin, I didn't say anything. I just couldn't believe it."

Because they were both adopted and born in the same city, the two youths decided they wanted to trace the records. In January, they asked their adopted parents to trace their respective natural parents.

"We wanted to find the truth for them," said Mary Yerby, mother of Chris Yerby. "That's why it was important."

Mrs. White and Mrs. Yerby agreed they would try to find the boys' natural mother but not reveal her identity.

"They didn't want us to know who our natural mother was," Yerby said. "I really didn't want to know either."

Miners back at work despite union's qualms

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Gold mining resumed today at the Kinross mine and the government began an inquiry into the fire that killed 177 men. A black miners' union accused mine operators of blatant disregard for safety.

The search continued for one man still missing from Tuesday's fire, the worst gold mine disaster in South African history. The No. 2 shaft where the fire took place remained shut down.

Five men had been reported missing this morning. But in the afternoon, a mining company spokeswoman, Beth Kilian, said there had been a mistake in the numbers. She said five men had not been missing, and rescuers were searching for only one.

Of the 183 black miners who suffered breathing problems, burns and other injuries, 14 remained hospitalized this morning, said General Mining Corp. spokesman Harry Hill. He said all 52 white miners hospitalized after the accident had been released by today.

The victims, including 172 blacks and five whites, died from breathing gases released from burning synthetic materials in a fire sparked by a welding torch.

"This disaster takes us back to the Dark Ages and demonstrates clearly the unacceptably low safety standards practiced in South Africa's mining industry," said Marcel Golding, spokesman for the National Union of Mineworkers, which claims about half the nation's 450,000 black gold miners as members.

He said the union has repeatedly asked that materials such as plastic piping that could give off toxic fumes if burned be removed from the mines.

Cyril Ramaphosa, the union's general secretary, said in a South African Broadcasting Corp. radio interview that the fire at the Kinross mine already has changed black miners' attitudes toward the annual wage negotiations with the Chamber of Mines.

"You don't need an expert to detect unsafe working conditions," he said.

Ramaphosa spent three hours Wednesday in the mine, near the town of Evander about 62 miles southeast of Johannesburg. He said the welder involved in the accident that sparked the fire did not have a fire extinguisher at hand.

"We believe this accident could have been avoided," Ramaphosa said after emerging from the mine.

He said the union executive planned to meet to discuss possible legal action on behalf of the injured miners and the families of the dead. Ramaphosa said about 5,000 of the 8,000 black workers at the mine were members of his union.

Mine workers with lung damage sustained in Tuesday's Kinross Gold Mine disaster lie in the Winkehaak Mine Hospital in Evander, South Africa, Wednesday.

Hill said the No. 1 shaft at Kinross, which was shut down Wednesday along with the No. 2 shaft, resumed operations today.

He said the miners assigned to shaft No. 2 will continue to receive wages.

Kinross General Manager Jacobus Oliver said synthetic materials like the polyurethane foam used to control seepage billowed smoke through the tunnels long after the fire had been extinguished. Olivier said the General Mining Corp., the country's second largest mining group, had not known before the fire that the polyurethane foam was flammable.

The Chamber of Mines said in a statement, "The polyurethane and other products used in mines have until now been regarded by mines as safe. But the Kinross tragedy clearly puts a huge question mark over this, which the Chamber of Mines research organization will be investigating once their role in the events at Kinross is known."

The chamber, which groups the country's major mining firms, has not previously tested the foam, the statement said.

Danie Steyn, minister of mineral and energy affairs, toured the accident site Wednesday.

"As usual, a thorough judicial inquiry will have to be conducted," he told reporters.

West German move to block sanctions draws harsh criticism

BONN, West Germany (LAT) — West German commentators and opposition parties Wednesday criticized the government's successful move to weaken European Community sanctions against South Africa, but officials said the ruling coalition would not back down.

West Germany, in a rare display of independence on a major EC issue, took the lead this week in blocking efforts to ban imports of South African coal into the 12-nation community. EC foreign ministers instead agreed Tuesday in Brussels only to ban new investments in South Africa and to halt imports of iron, steel and gold coins.

Critics charged that West Germany had spoiled any chance that the sanctions would be effective in persuading the South African government to end apartheid. They said that the government's apparent change of heart on the issue in recent months had sent the wrong message to Pretoria.

But officials here ruled out any possibility of a shift in Bonn's stance and they indicated that British Foreign Secretary Geoffrey Howe, who was asked to make further efforts to find a consensus within the community, would fail.

"A ban on imports of coal is out, even if everybody else agrees to it," an official here said. Only Portugal supported West Germany's position in Brussels.

The government's tough line reflects the influence of Bavaria's premier, Franz Josef Strauss, West Germany's most prominent right-wing politician, who has long taken a special interest in African issues, officials and commentators said. Strauss, who also heads a conservative bloc within Chancellor Helmut Kohl's Christian Democratic alliance, has made South Africa a test of the government's willingness to hew to a conservative line in foreign affairs.

The West German position reflects the government's longstanding opposition in principle to using economic sanctions.

Bonn's stance also shows how little political fervor the South African issue has generated in West Germany, and in Western Europe as a whole.

Brazilian police scour hills for escaped convicts

PAPUDA, Brazil (AP) — Police scoured the hills south of Brasilia today for 14 convicts who fled their prison with six hostages they later released unharmed.

The prisoners and their captives, who included a Roman Catholic archbishop, sped out of Papuda penitentiary in three cars Wednesday night after a 33-hour standoff. Authorities reneged on their promise of a two-hour head start, and 15 police cars and six buses carrying heavily-armed officers raced after the escapees minutes after they left.

Joiro Gomes da Silvo, a government official in Brasilia, the capital, said the hostages had been released unharmed. He said two of the three escape cars were found about 20 miles from Brasilia, but that none of the inmates had been captured.

The prisoners, convicted of crimes including armed robbery, rape and murder, earlier exchanged 14 hostages they had held since Tuesday morning for three lawyers and three churchmen.

The rebellion in this town 30 miles south of Brasilia was the second prison uprising in two days. On Tuesday, police crushed a revolt at a penitentiary in the southeastern city of Presidente Venceslau, killing 14 inmates.

One of the clerics released near here was the Rev. Geraldo Avila, the auxiliary archbishop of Brasilia. The identities of the other clerics and the lawyers were not immediately available.

The 14 original hostages, nine women and five men, were driven out of the building Wednesday night in police cars. Some were crying and others held their fingers up in V-for-victory signs.

The escapees had stormed the prison's second-floor offices from an exercise yard and taken 15 hostages, including a psychologist, three students in her class on inmate rehabilitation, two military policemen and nine prison workers.

One hostage, a prison guard, later escaped unhurt after jumping from a second story window.

The prison held 491 inmates before the break.

Mexican officials show off reconstruction efforts

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Government officials, showing off what they call a successful reconstruction effort, said Wednesday those left homeless by last year's killer earthquake would have new residences in the next five months.

A bus tour organized by President Miguel de la Madrid's office took about 50 journalists to neighborhoods struck by the Sept. 19, 1985, quake, showing rebuilding efforts in housing, hospitals and schools.

A highlight of the trip was a stopover at the Children's Hospital, where officials showed off a group of 14 toddlers who as newborn infants a year ago were rescued from the rubble of the Juarez and General hospitals.

A year later, they smiled and ran around a playground and shared a cake fashioned in the shape of a bunny.

"All the children are perfect and developing normally; maybe even a little better because of the constant attention they have been receiving," said Dr. Luis Torregrosa, hospital director.

The health sector was among the hardest hit by the quake that registered 8.1 on the Richter scale. About 5,000 hospital beds, or about 30 percent of the total in the metropolitan area of 18 million, were lost.

An estimated 1,500 patients and medical workers lay injured, dead or dying when the Juarez Hospital's 12-story in-patient building fell along with the General Hospital's obstetrics-gynecology and residential towers fell. A plaque at General Hospital near where the towers once stood lists the names of the 100 doctors, nurses and health workers who died there.

The tour also included stops at several areas in the city where the government is building apartment complexes for those left homeless by the quake.

Government statistics distributed during the tour said 44,437 apartment units would be completed by next February for the homeless and that work is underway on about 80 percent of them. Of that, 29,695 units are being built from scratch while the rest are undergoing minor or major repairs.

Israeli TV spots designed to assimilate Ethiopians

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — The government has launched a nationwide television campaign intended to help Ethiopian Jews assimilate into Israeli society.

But some of the Ethiopians, who came from their homeland on a secret Israeli airlift, complain the campaign is insulting because it treats them as a special problem.

Thirty-second commercials during prime viewing times show immigrants from Europe and North Africa discussing how difficult it was for them to fit into Israeli society when they arrived here in the 1950s and 1960s.

The segment signs off with the slogan: "The Ethiopians will also be integrated."

About 7,000 Ethiopian Jews arrived in Israel in 1984 and 1985 on a clandestine airlift called Operation Moses, fleeing famine and persecution in Ethiopia. Some 8,000 others were already living here when they arrived, according to government figures.

The Ethiopians trace their origins to one of the lost biblical tribes of Israel.

But Israeli leaders, including Education Minister Yitzhak Navon, expressed concern that they would encounter prejudice because of their skin color.

"Some people have complained that having black neighbors lowers the value of their property," said Gad Ben-Ari, spokesman for the Ministry of Absorption. "But they are Jews like those who came here from Poland, Morocco or the United States. Israelis will have to become accustomed to these people."

One difficulty facing Ethiopian Jews is the demand by Israel's rabbinical authorities that they undergo a ritual immersion to purify themselves. The rabbis say the Ethiopians were cut off for so long from mainstream Judaism that there is a possibility they became contaminated by intermarriage.

Many French fear anti-terrorist measures will lead to repression

By MORT ROSENBLUM
AP Special Correspondent

An Analysis

PARIS — In spite of wide support for severe measures against terrorism, many French fear the harsh crackdown will erode the tolerance and personal liberties on which France bases its glory.

At the same time, a rising wave of bombings — five in 10 days — brings France face to face with its past compromises with terrorists and with its own treasured values.

A senior police official exposed the raw nerves in an interview, granted on the condition he not be identified.

"The terrorists set up in France during the 1970s. We let them have their houses, their structures, as long as they operated elsewhere," he said. "We thought we could buy a little peace. We were wrong."

When terrorists first targeted France with sporadic bombings in the late 1970s, breaking the tacit accord, police reacted energetically. But after 1981, a new Socialist government reduced emphasis on police operations, reaffirming a commitment to human rights and political asylum.

"Security deteriorated dangerously at that point," the senior police officer said. "Now we are going overboard in the other direction, and a lot of us do not like it."

The troubling part, many French say, is that most people seem to accept harsh and even brutal police tactics, as well using the army for law-and-order functions traditionally left to gendarmes.

Under new laws issued partly in response to the recent bombings, police can stop and search anyone considered suspicious. Suspected terrorists can be held without charge for four days, twice the former limit. Foreigners can be expelled without judicial proceedings.

All visitors, except those from Common Market countries and Switzerland, are being required to obtain visas. Metal barriers have been erected around vulnerable buildings, and guards are checking bags at public places.

Bitterness toward terrorists is fanning racism and xenophobia against the Middle Eastern and North African ethnic groups to which many terrorists belong.

A Middle Eastern group has claimed responsibility for the bombings and warned attacks will accelerate unless French authorities free Georges Ibrahim Abdallah, jailed for a weapons violation and reputed to be the head of a terrorist group called the Lebanese Armed Revolutionary Factions.

Several Lebanese citizens have been ordered out of the country abruptly after years of residence in France. They claim the reason is they refused to act as informers.

Mohammed Tlili, a Tunisian who police questioned in connection with the bombings, was quoted in the popular daily, Liberation, as saying police beat him and made him strip. He said he was allowed to put on a garment for every question he answered.

Marc Kravetz wrote in Liberation: "To regard someone as a suspect because of nationality or religion and order him to choose between informing or packing his bags, lowers us to the level of summary justice of Lebanese militias.

"That is exactly what some of those who are threatened with expulsion came here to avoid," he wrote.

The Rev. Pierre Dubois, one of three French priests expelled last week from Chile by that country's military government, remarked on his return, "I was a little upset by the type of arguments I have heard to justify measures in France against foreigners...since they resemble the arguments applied to me (in Chile)."

Terrorists: American streets 'will soon know us'

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — A terrorist group that claimed responsibility for a wave of bombings in France threatened Wednesday to begin attacks within the United States.

An Arabic-language statement signed by the Committee for Solidarity with Arab and Middle Eastern Political Prisoners accused the United States of pressuring France into rejecting a demand to release the terrorists' jailed comrades.

The statement was delivered to the independent Beirut newspaper an-Nahar.

"We shall meet soon in your great states. We shall get acquainted with your great states, your cities, your skyscrapers, your Statue of Liberty," said the two-page, typewritten statement. "We shall not wait for you to come here. Your streets will soon know us."

The group has claimed responsibility for four bombings in Paris in the past 10 days. Another group, calling itself Partisans of Rights and Freedom also has claimed responsibility for the bombs, which killed three people and injured more than 100.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Soviet official: Expulsion 'concrete blow' to relations

JURMALA, U.S.S.R. (AP) — A Soviet Foreign Ministry official today said the U.S. decision to expel 25 members of the Soviet mission to the United Nations had dealt a "concrete blow" to superpower relations.

The State Department announced Wednesday that the Soviets must leave the United States by Oct. 1.

Soviet ambassador-at-large Vladimir B. Lomeiko noted that the order came shortly before the meeting, scheduled for Friday in Washington, between Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze and U.S. Secretary of State George P. Shultz.

"This is a specific and concrete blow to Soviet-American relations," Lomeiko told a private conference on superpower relations in this Baltic resort town in Soviet Latvia.

"It is a blow all the more so calculated as it is taken on the eve of the meeting between the Soviet foreign minister and the American secretary of state," he said. "In the United States of America, they are very strong (those) who don't want to have an improvement in relations."

Gorbachev appears on TV

MOSCOW (AP) — Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev appeared on television Wednesday night as rumors circulated in Moscow that he and his wife had been attacked in an assassination attempt.

Gorbachev, who left Moscow on vacation a month ago, spoke during a televised appearance in southern Russia. The rumors were that he and his wife, Raisa, may have been injured in an attack.

There was no confirmation of the rumors and no official comment. But the coverage of Gorbachev during the national evening news program may have been intended to quash the rumors. His wife was not shown on the program.

In Finland, the Helsinki newspaper Hufvudstadsbladet on Wednesday quoted unidentified "Western businessmen who have in the past weeks visited the Soviet Union" as saying they heard strong rumors that either Mrs. Gorbachev, her husband or both were injured in an assassination attempt.

The paper noted that such rumors are common when Soviet leaders are on vacation out of the capital.

The Baltimore Sun on Wednesday carried a Moscow-dated story quoting unidentified diplomats and Western businessmen as saying shots were fired at the Gorbachevs as they vacationed in late August in the Black Sea resort of Pitsunda. The Sun also said there were conflicting rumors on whether one or both Gorbchevs may have been injured.

Swiss churches vandalized

GENEVA (AP) — Nighttime intruders broke into two churches, smashing collection boxes and stained glass windows and tossing Bibles on the floor in a rare display of vandalism against religious sites in Switzerland, police said.

At Geneva's main cathedral, vandals demolished the parish office, emptying desk drawers and Bible-filled bookshelves, police spokesman Jean-Claude Ducrot said Wednesday.

Five collection boxes also were broken open in the attack late Monday or early Tuesday, but they contained no money, he said.

At another church over the weekend, vandals cracked a collection box with a pickax and made off with the equivalent of $180, Ducrot said.

Rehnquist to preside over new, 'conservative' Supreme Court

NATION

By JAMES H. RUBIN

WASHINGTON (AP) — William H. Rehnquist, survivor of a bitterly divisive Senate confirmation battle, will preside as chief justice over a new Supreme Court era bearing the conservative stamp of President Reagan.

Rehnquist, scheduled to be installed as the nation's 16th chief justice on Sept. 26, was confirmed by the Senate late Wednesday by a 65-33 vote. The court's 1986-87 term begins Oct. 6.

Rehnquist, 61, told reporters he was "delighted" to be the next chief justice.

He will be joined on the high court by Antonin Scalia, 50, a conservative federal appeals court judge picked to fill a vacancy created by the retirement of Chief Justice Warren E. Burger. The Senate confirmed Scalia's appointment, 98-0.

Although Rehnquist's confirmation was never in doubt, he received the largest number of negative votes of any successful Supreme Court nominee in history.

The anti-Rehnquist forces were characterized as a "lynch mob" by Reagan, according to Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., who telephoned the president with the confirmation news.

"He's very pleased," Dole said of the president. "He characterized some as sort of a lynch mob, I guess."

In a statement released by the White House, Reagan blasted Rehnquist opponents for "political posturing," adding, "the attacks came from those whose ideology runs contrary to his profound and unshakeable belief in the proper constitutional role of the judiciary. I have no doubt that William Rehnquist will prove to be a chief justice of historic stature."

Repeated attacks on Rehnquist's integrity, honesty and commitment to equal rights could leave a damaging stain on the man and the nation's highest court.

Asked if the confirmation process had been arduous, Rehnquist said, "From my point of view, it has."

"They've done everything they can to destroy this man's reputation," said Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, one of Rehnquist's staunchest defenders. The Senate has been through "a Rehnquisition" marked by "distortions and misrepresentations," he said.

Opponents said the elevation of Rehnquist, the Supreme Court's most conservative member for nearly 15 years, casts a dark cloud over the future of justice in America.

"This vote will haunt this body," predicted Sen. Max Baucus, D-Mont.

Sen. Donald Riegle, D-Mich., said it was "a sad and disappointing choice, one that I think will damage our country."

Eleanor Smeal, president of the National Organization for Women, called the confirmation vote "truly a Pyrrhic victory with staggering losses in credibility for the Reagan administration."

Democrats sought in vain to line up enough votes to block confirmation. In the end, only two Republicans joined them in opposing the nomination: Sens. Chales Mathias of Maryland and Lowell Weicker of Connecticut.

Republicans control the Senate, 53-47.

In 1971, a Democratic-controlled Senate confirmed President Nixon's nomination of Rehnquist to be an associate justice by a 68-26 vote.

As chief justice, Rehnquist will serve as the nation's top judge and the "first among equals" on the Supreme Court. When voting in the majority, he will control who writes the court's opinions.

The Senate approved Reagan's only other Supreme Court nomination, that of Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, by a 99-0 vote in 1981.

Notwithstanding the attacks on his fitness, the new chief justice is widely respected and liked for his intellectual abilities and his unassuming affability.

When Nixon nominated him to the high court in 1971 to succeed John Harlan, Rehnquist was a 47-year-old assistant U.S. attorney general with a reputation for brilliance and steadfast conservatism.

Scalia also is widely regarded as an astute intellect who will add a persuasive conservative voice to the high court.

A federal appeals court judge since 1982 and a former law professor, he has expressed views that closely parallel positions taken by the Reagan administration on key issues.

Burger, who turned 79 Wednesday, decided to leave the court to devote full time to promoting the Constitution's 200th birthday celebration next year. His 17 years as chief justice have been the longest anyone served in that job this century.

Weather satellite's first snapshot to Earth success

VANDENBERG AIR FORCE BASE, Calif. (AP) — A weather satellite sent its first snapshot to Earth while champagne-sipping officials celebrated the spacecraft's long-delayed launch as "a boost for America."

The dimly illuminated test photograph of Alaska was received by controllers five hours after the $37.3 million NOAA-10 hurtled into its 518-mile-high polar orbit Wednesday aboard a refurbished 25-year-old Atlas E booster. It was the United States' second successful major launch this month.

Because the picture was taken from the west, where a low sun angle provided poor lighting, "It was dark, so there wasn't much to see," supervisor Richard O'Neill said from National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration's Satellite Operations Control Center in Suitland, Md.

O'Neill said the weather and search-and-rescue satellite, which was called NOAA-G until it reached orbit, would send much better pictures later today. Wednesday's launch came after 16 postponements since last fall.

Officials of NOAA, satellite builder RCA and rocket builder General Dynamics celebrated their success with chilled champagne and cold cuts after the launch from Vandenberg, 140 miles northwest of Los Angeles.

"Obviously, we're very delighted. Atlas played a significant role in getting NOAA-G in orbit. We at General Dynamics consider it a boost for America," said company spokesman Jack Isabel.

Jerry Longanecker, weather satellite project manager for NASA, called it "a boost for NASA morale," which was rocked by the Jan. 28 explosion of the shuttle Challenger which killed seven astronauts and the May 3 destruction of a Delta rocket carrying a weather satellite from Florida. On April 18, an Air Force Titan rocket blew up after liftoff from Vandenberg.

Between the Challenger tragedy and Wednesday's liftoff, two other major launches have succeeded: a classified Defense Department payload carried into orbit Feb. 9 aboard an Atlas at Vandenberg, and the Sept. 5 Delta rocket launch of two satellites which destroyed each other in a successful test of the "Star Wars" space-based antimissile defense system.

Louis Gomberg, RCA's vice president for satellite programs, said Wednesday's launch "was so uneventful I was doing crossword puzzles and reading the newspaper."

Larry Heacock, NOAA's satellite operations director, said that before the launch, "Whenever I had a spare minute, I said a little prayer. It worked."

Heacock said the satellite will photograph Earth for forecasters and U.S. intelligence agencies; collect data to improve long-range and agricultural forecasts; relay distress signals from ships, planes and travelers; measure Earth's radiation belts and how much sunlight the planet absorbs and reflects; and relay data from weather stations worldwide to a processing center.

Ground controllers will spend three weeks to a month preparing NOAA-10 for full operation. Dust, plastic particles and other contaminants on the satellite must be allowed to blow off into space before several delicate instruments are turned on, said David Coolidge, a NASA manager at NOAA's Maryland control center.

NOAA-10 joins NOAA-9 in orbit and is meant to replace NOAA-6, which will be turned off. NOAA-6 was launched in 1979, but worked long beyond its expected two-year lifespan. NOAA-6 lacks search-and-rescue capabilities and has a broken temperature sensor and a faulty camera. But it has been used as a temporary replacement for NOAA-8, which failed last December.

With two polar-orbiting NOAA satellites in place, the agency still needs to put another geostationary satellite in orbit to fully restore the forecasting abilities of the National Weather Service, which is part of NOAA.

Americans 'overwhelmingly' favor manned space flights

WASHINGTON (AP) — A post-Challenger survey shows Americans are overwhelmingly in favor of continuing manned space flights, despite the risk, and they think it important that the destroyed shuttle be replaced.

Only 13 percent of 1,200 people interviewed in an August telephone survey approved the statement, "We should not continue the manned space flight program." Twenty-two percent would favor flights by astronauts only "when it is absolutely necessary" but they would bar civilians such as schoolteacher Christa McAuliffe, one of seven crew members who died in the Jan. 28 Challenger explosion.

"We are finding the American public strongly in support of the space program," said Robert Reisner, vice president of Market Opinion Research, which did the study for Rockwell International, builder of the shuttle. The results were compared with a similar survey in the weeks before the Challenger explosion.

Don O'Neal of Rockwell said the firm sought the data to make marketing decisions because "we felt that there was stronger support for the space program than was reported in the news media."

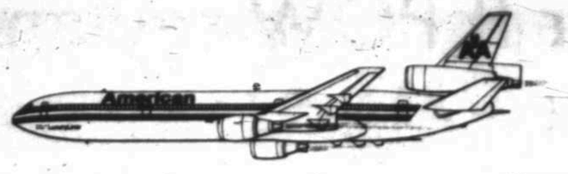

Eighty-nine percent of those questioned thought shuttle flights should be resumed. Eighty-five percent thought the United States should replace the Challenger.

The research firm said the results of the poll would be accurate within 2.8 percent in 95 percent of the data.

Sixty percent of those surveyed said the government "should spend whatever is necessary to maintain U.S. leadership in space," while 27 percent disagreed. And 71 percent felt the space program should be continued to stay ahead of the Soviets, the Japanese and others.

One statement in the survey read, "While it would be good to have another shuttle if we could afford it, the United States should now balance the space program by having more unmanned flights and by using expendable launch vehicles instead of replacing the shuttle now." Forty-nine percent agreed with that statement, and 43 percent disagreed. The rest gave no opinion.

President Reagan, following months of debate within the administration, announced on Aug. 15 his decision that the United States should restore the fleet to four orbiters. He asked Congress to appropriate $272 million in the fiscal year that starts Oct. 1 to get a start on the shuttle.

Ex-World War II POW seeking compensation for self, others

By DAVE SKIDMORE

WASHINGTON (AP) — It's been more than 40 years, but Frank James says his memories of seeing American POWs used as human guinea pigs for Japanese biological warfare experiments in World War II remain vivid.

James, of Redwood City, Calif., was captured early in the war in the fall of the Philippines and was transported with about 1,500 other Americans to a POW camp at Mukden in Japanese-occupied Manchuria. He is seeking compensation for himself and other former inmates of the camp.

Testifying before a congressional panel Wednesday, James said a Japanese medical team, wearing face masks, sprayed an unidentified liquid into the faces of prisoners and gave them injections in November 1942.

In what he described as a follow-up to the experiment, a Japanese medical detail arrived to autopsy selected victims, whose bodies had been stored above-ground during the winter and had begun to deteriorate in the spring.

"Two POWs were selected to work with the team. I was one of those two men," he told the Veteran's Affairs subcommittee on compensation, pension and insurance. "To this day, I can still see those half-frozen, half-thawed intestines of the bodies that Japanese medical personnel opened on that autopsy table."

Later, a medical group returned to Mukden to conduct medical and psychological exams on selected prisoners, he said.

James, who served in the Army until 1966 and has a disability rating of 80 percent from the Veterans Administration, said the VA has failed repeatedly to include information about the diseases he suffered as a POW in his medical record.

"I had lost all body hair, weighed about 80 pounds and wore only a sweater," he recalled. Yet "1,243 days of my life are a void in the official medical records."

"Two POWs were selected to work with the team. I was one of those two men. ...To this day, I can still see those half-frozen, half-thawed intestines of the bodies that Japanese medical personnel opened on that autopsy table."

— Frank James

Rep. Pat Williams, D-Mont., who requested the hearing, said, "The facts are all too clear that too many of the American prisoners of war at those Japanese germ warfare camps have been provided neither adequate health care nor appropriate compensation."

Williams repeated the allegations concerning Mukden, which were first circulated widely five years ago in a Japanese best-seller, "The Devil's Gluttony," by Seiichi Morimura, and outlined in a documentary last year for the British television network ITV.

The Japanese Imperial Army's top-secret Unit 731 used the Mukden camp "for deadly chemical and biological experiments, for injections, body dissections, blood and feces tests, freezing of body parts, infection of wounds with anthrax, the application of plague bacillus, cholera, dysentary and typhoid," Williams said.

But, he said, the Defense Department has refused to make available records of the experiments that would help Veterans Administration physicians treat the former prisoners.

John H. Hatcher, chief of Army records management, said the Army has no records from the Mukden camp and only about 200 pages of secondary documents, such as interrogations of Japanese officials. And those documents provide no evidence that Americans were the subject of experiments, he said.

"Based upon the manner in which records pertaining to American prisoners of war were generated by multiple sources at the end of World War II, catalogued and preserved in the archives, the absence of such records suggests that Americans were not subjected to biological experimentation as alleged," Hatcher said.

Williams said it was not known how many survivors of Mukden are still alive or how many are being denied compensation. But he said, "Those veterans, I tell this committee, have not received justice and they need your help."

Greg Rodriquez Jr., of Tulsa, Okla., son of a Mukden prisoner, testified in favor of legislation sponsored by Williams that automatically would grant World War II and Korean conflict POWs a disability rating of at least 60 percent, regardless of whether they suffer from service-connected ailments.

"The eligible former POWs are dying off. There aren't many left. It won't cost this nation much to grant what their sacrifices earned," Rodriquez said.

Benefits, effective Dec. 1, for a veteran with no dependents range from $1,362 a month for a 100 percent disability to $69 for a 10 percent disability.

Veterans: Agent Orange research may provide missing link in case

WASHINGTON (AP) — New research showing the "fingerprint" of Agent Orange in the blood of exposed soldiers may be the missing link in the case against the wartime herbicide, a group of Vietnam veterans says.

The veterans, along with scientists and congressmen, on Wednesday announced results of a study they say shows for the first time traces of dioxin, a key Agent Orange ingredient, left in veterans' blood.

Scientists and spokesmen for the New Jersey Agent Orange Commission, the study's sponsor, said the new testing takes the case against Agent Orange two crucial steps forward.

They said the research showed tell-tale traces of dioxin can still be successfully seen years after exposure. Furthermore, the tests found levels of dioxin 10 times higher in exposed veterans than in other Vietnam-era servicemen.

The research on 10 highly exposed veterans, however, stops short of linking their health problems directly to the widely used defoliant, the scientists acknowledged. But they asserted that the study represented a breakthrough in efforts to learn the true effects of the herbicide.

The results of the study, they said, should prompt the federal government to drop its longstanding claim that there is no way to prove a cause-and-effect relationship between Agent Orange and poor health.

"All I know is that I've been sick for many years," said Marine Sgt. Sammy Davis, a Congressional Medal of Honor winner who was among the test subjects.

"Maybe this will be the light that will bring (Vietnam veterans) through to tomorrow," he told a Capitol Hill news conference.

Veterans and the government have been deadlocked in the debate about the defoliant used to clear Vietnam's dense jungles.

The veterans claim Agent Orange is the cause of health problems to them and their families, ranging from serious acne to cancer. Government officials counter that no such link has been proven — a claim that prevents veterans benefits for the illnesses.

A lawsuit filed against seven Agent Orange manufacturers by veterans from the United States, Australia and New Zealand resulted in a $200 million settlement in 1984. The litigation, currently under appeal, included 245,000 claims of health damage.

Davis and nine other Vietnam veterans with a history of handling the defoliant served as patients in "The Point Man Project," named for the soldiers who drew enemy fire as leaders of their units.

The veterans were studied along with 17 control cases, including veterans who served in Vietnam without direct Agent Orange exposure and veterans of the era who did not serve in Southeast Asia.

Levels of a dioxin form known as TCDD averaged about 48 parts per trillion in exposed veterans, compared to about 4 or 5 parts per trillion in those who saw no Vietnam service, said toxicologist Ralph Fogelman.

Compromise tax plan will likely pass

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congressional tax-writers are preparing to submit a compromise tax-overhaul plan to their colleagues, and nose-counters say there is no question that they will have enough votes for House passage.

The first vote on the nearly 2,000-page package will come Tuesday or Wednesday in the House, and although its sponsors do not yet have enough commitments to assure passage, they say they are confident they will win.

"It won't be overwhelming but it will pass by a comfortable margin," Rep. Byron Dorgan, D-N.D., a member of the tax-writing Ways and Means Committee, said Wednesday.

A Senate vote would come before Congress adjourns around Oct. 3.

Following a closed caucus of House Democrats to drum up support for the bill, leaders checked their notes and could count only about 100 solid votes among the 252 Democrats. Rep. Jim Moody, D-Wis., a member of the task force pushing for passage, predicted about 100 of the 180 Republicans will support it.

If all members of the House are present, it would take 217 votes to pass the bill.

But John Sherman, a spokesman for the House Ways and Means Committee, said sponsors are confident they have more than enough votes to win. He agreed with the count of only 100 solid votes, but said "we only count a member as solid if he signs his name in blood. If he even blinks, he's listed as leaning."

"We aren't there yet, but there is a great number of undecideds," said Rep. Richard Gephardt, D-Mo., a long-time advocate of tax overhaul.

There has been little enthusiasm for the compromise bill among members of either party, although few lawmakers are eager to work for defeat of a measure that President Reagan has put at the top of his agenda. Although there are many undesirable provisions in the bill, said Gephardt and Dorgan, most lawmakers will consider the package preferable to present law.

But the final votes won't be unanimous. House Majority Leader Jim Wright, D-Texas, predicted the bill will bring in less revenue than backers are forecasting.

The bill, Wright said, "is like a swig of bad whisky. It may make you feel good right now but it'll give you a heck of a hangover tomorrow."

The bill would significantly reduce individual and corporate tax rates but make more income subject to tax by eliminating or repealing several deductions and exclusions. It would cut individual taxes by an average of 6.1 percent, although millions would pay more. Corporate taxes would rise by $120 billion over five years.

Twenty-two negotiators from the Senate and House approved most provisions of the bill on Aug. 16, and since that time, staff members have been translating ideas into technical language. The chief tax-writers, Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., and Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., hope that work can be completed in time to file the bill and a summary explanation by tonight.

Illogical trade

If it isn't already too late to halt the progression of the exchange of American journalist Nicholas Daniloff for captured Soviet spy Gennady Zakharov that's exactly what the Reagan Administration should do.

The diplomatic swap is exactly the scenario the Soviets would like to see develop, but it would be detrimental in more ways than one to relations between the United States and the Soviet Union.

While it's undoubtedly true that Daniloff, the Moscow bureau chief for U.S. News & World Report, would be pleased to see his case resolved, such an exchange opens up a number of distasteful possibilities for the future:

■ Now that the Soviets recognize the United States is willing to knuckle under to "hostage diplomacy," will any American journalist be able to operate overseas with a reasonable degree of security?

■ Will journalists, in fact, become the stock in trade used rather than diplomatic talks?

■ Are all Americans abroad to become vitual pawns in power struggles with foreign governments?

■ Is the U.S. government going to be reduced to accepting such standards of equivalency in all future cases at the whims of foreign powers?

Granted, President Reagan probably has been acting in the Daniloff case mainly in the interest of keeping diplomatic channels between the two nations open so that larger, more substantive issues can be addressed. But isn't the goal of diplomacy actually circumvented when one of the involved nations uses an aggressive act such as the capture of a citizen of the other country to form a basis for supposed equivalency?

The arrest of Daniloff actually stresses how far the United States and the Soviet Union must go before real progress can be made at easing tensions between the two nations. There must be an understanding of the differences in how the two nations view human rights, civil liberties and even legal and illegal detention. Those issues are at the root of the problems between the two countries.

It isn't best to obscure that reality with even more confusion, as the Reagan Administration appears wont to do.

Another View:

Help the 'exception'

Brazil is Latin America's great exception. The biggest nation in an otherwise-Spanish-speaking region, its 130 million people speak Portuguese. Its history has been marked with significantly less political violence than most of its neighbors. And these days Brazil is one of the few debtor nations in the region that can look to its economic future with optimism.

The Reagan administration must keep those differences in mind when pondering the future of U.S.-Brazilian relations after last week's visit by Brazilian President Jose Sarney. For, despite all the public pleasantries exchanged by Presidents Reagan and Sarney during official ceremonies, there was an undercurrent of hostility in the private sessions between Brazilian officials and their U.S. counterparts. For example, the lectures by U.S. officials on protectionism betrayed a rigidity that does not fully acknowledge Brazil's special circumstances and importance.

In his speech to a joint session of Congress, Sarney responded with a solid offer to increase imports from the United States if the United States will help him persuade commercial banks and international lending agencies to reduce the burden of servicing Brazil's $105 billion foreign debt, the largest in the world, by extending the payments. Sarney's proposal merits careful study and a sympathetic response, for the recovery and economic expansion of Brazil are important to the prosperity of the entire hemisphere.

Sarney has overseen a remarkable economic boom since taking office early last year. Despite its heavy debt burden, Brazil last year achieved an economic growth rate of more than 8 percent with a trade surplus of more than $12.5 billion, and indicators point to another upbeat performance this year. Sarney has done this at least partly by bucking the rules of economic orthodoxy — imposing wage and price controls to halt inflation and raising taxes dramatically. But his country is doing just what Reagan and his economic advisers want — working its way out of debt.

Given that reality, the United States should soft-pedal its criticism of Brazil and focus instead on the things that it can do to maintain Brazil's economic growth. By doing so, Reagan will help strengthen ties with one of Latin America's most important democracies — a vibrant nation that could be a world leader by the 21st Century.

JACK ANDERSON

Pressler provides a riveting report

WASHINGTON — Any collection of gasbags, poseurs and egotists that cherishes the self-imposed title of "The World's Greatest Deliberative Body" probably has earned all the guffaws that come its way. But does the U.S. Senate really deserve Larry Pressler, the Dapper Dan of Dakota?

Jack Anderson

We've already awarded the South Dakota Republican the Allen Ellender Memorial Trophy in recognition of his pointless peregrinations around the "mini-states" of Europe last Easter. But the full flavor of this exercise in lightweight senatorial diplomacy can be savored only by sampling Pressler's own report on his 10-day junket, which cost $4,642 in transportation and miscellaneous expenses alone. (Who said there are bargain airfares to Europe?)

The senator's debt to his Rhodes Scholarship at Oxford and his days as an honors student at Harvard is clear at the very outset. Under the provocative heading, "What Is a Small State?", Pressler quotes a little-known British historian who expressed doubt "whether, however viable the small state might be in international politics, it really is a viable subject of study." Pressler offers no enlightenment on this crucial point. After all, he's already made the trip.

"Life in these smallest states offers major compensations for a lack of major world political impact," Pressler writes. "Andorra, for example, has no prisons." Liechtenstein, he informs us, has neither an army nor any unemployed.

Pressler's debt to the encyclopedia is also clear. San Marino, he writes, is "the world's smallest and oldest independent republic; it had its own constitution by the 10th century." Monaco is "one of the safest places on Earth," while Malta's residents have "a life expectancy of 73 years."

But the senator is surely on his own when he writes that the United States and the Soviet Union "have risen like Popocatepetl and Ixtacihuatl above their surroundings."

Actually, a check of Capitol Hill sources and our own files by our associate Lucette Lagnado revealed that Pressler's mini-state meanderings were pretty much par for the course he has followed since he came to the Senate nearly eight years ago. For example:

— Senate staffers gleefully recall the day Pressler was in the Senate gym when a roll-call vote was announced. He had to place a frantic call to the cloakroom and ask that the vote be delayed — while he tried to figure out which locker he had put his clothes in.

— Pressler watchers have been fascinated by his constantly changing hair. The dashing young solon "has changed hair color more often than George Bush changes watchbands," remarked one awed observer. Sometimes the Pressler topknot sports a reddish tint; at other times, it is a dignified brown; most intriguing is what one staffer called "the wet look, as if he put on a lot of gel."

— Recently Pressler ordered Senate Republican staffers not to smoke while he was presiding on the dais, because the smoke bothered him. Then he appeared smoking a long cigar.

— In 1981, Pressler led our list of "least effective senators." That was also the year we caught him plagiarizing a Washington Post series on farm problems for an article under his name in a tabloid published by the Rural Electric Association in South Dakota. He claimed a staffer was responsible.

— In 1982, despite earnest warnings from then-Secretary of State Alexander Haig urging him not to visit Poland, Pressler did — and made headlines by getting himself collared by a cop briefly for taking pictures of a food line in Warsaw. He insisted that the trip "was beneficial to the (State) Department, and it was very beneficial to me."

Footnote: Pressler did not respond to repeated requests for comment.

UNDER THE DOME: The Senate Budget Committee recently advertised for bids on 60 IBM-compatible computers, insisting that the machines be able to handle a video game called Flight Simulator. But it's not what you might think. The Budget Committee staff won't be whiling away the hours playing video games. It's just that Flight Simulator, which uses bright colors and three-dimensional imagery, is a proven benchmark for the industry: If a computer looks good with Flight Simulator games, it will be able to match IBM's graphic capabilities on the serious business the Budget Committee intends to use its new computers for.

DIPLOMATIC DOGGEREL: There are trochees among the teacups in Foggy Bottom, spondees in striped pants and iambs in international affairs. In short, some State Department officials are relieving the tedium by composing rymed demarches. One poetaster in the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, for example, penned this warning to Libya's Moammar Gadhafi in the style of Edgar Allan Poe: "While you're nodding, maybe napping, U.S. aircraft gently rapping, blowing wide your tent-house door. Heed this warning: Halt your terror operations forthwith, or they'll quote Gadhafi nevermore."

GEORGE F. WILL

Ppfffft! There goes the administration

WASHINGTON — When an administration collapses, quickly and completely, like a punctured balloon, as the Reagan administration has done in the Daniloff debacle, a reasonable surmise is that the administration, like a balloon, had nothing in it but air.

George F. Will

The trouble began not in a peripheral crevice in the bureaucracy, but in the President's presence in Santa Barbara, where the first reaction to the hostage-taking was to say that the unpleasantness should not disrupt the Big Picture. Secretary Shultz soon said "there can be no question of equating" the cases of Daniloff and the accused spy Zakharov, and there could be no trade.

But soon came the equation, in the form of the interim trade whereby Daniloff and Zakharov were placed in the custody of officials of their respective governments. The United States thereby paid the first — probably only the first — installment of the ransom (Kissinger used that word to characterize the transaction) demanded by the hostage-takers.

Sen. Richard Lugar (R-Ind.), chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee and candidate to receive the administration's Good Soldier Trophy, says, delicately, "August is a difficult month, apparently, for administration coordination." So is September, so perhaps the problem is with thinking, not coordinating.

Totalitarians specialize in making victims collaborate in their victimization. It took Gorbachev less than two weeks to turn the U.S. ambassador in Moscow into the keeper of Daniloff who, Shultz rightly said, remained a hostage. Reagan was jubilant when announcing this transaction. Conservatives constantly say Reagan's "instincts" are splendid, the problem is only — only! — susceptibility to bad advice. Well.

Leave aside the question of whether policy should be controlled by the instinctual mechanisms of any individual. In the Daniloff affair, Reagan's instinct has prevailed, and has been wrong. It has been identical to Carter's instinct in the Iranian hostage crisis. It has been to make the national interest hostage to the goal of easing the hostage's plight. He wanted Daniloff in more comfortable confinement.

Reagan wrote a letter to Gorbachev, dignifying the Soviet charges by denying them. Gorbachev, displaying the contempt that U.S. behavior is earning, promptly branded Reagan a liar by disregarding Reagan's assurances.

Sen. Pat Moynihan (D-N.Y.), former U.N. ambassador, responding to the assertion that this crisis began when Zakharov was arrested, replied: "We began this chain of events 30 years ago when we started letting the Soviets fill up the U.N. Secretariat with spies, in direct violation of the Charter." The morning Moynihan said that, the lead story in the New York Times reported administration efforts to reduce cuts Congress has voted in subsidies for the United Nations. The cuts are intended to express "among other things" anger that the United Nations, where U.S taxpayers pay one-fourth of the bills, is flagrantly used by the Soviet bloc for espionage.

What must they be saying in the Kremlin, in merry disbelief? "Next, will Reagan want U.S. taxpayers to subsidize grain sales to us?" In 69 years of U.S.-Soviet relations, no U.S. President has been treated with the disdain Gorbachev has now shown toward Reagan, which is especially rude considering that Reagan does indeed want U.S. taxpayers to subsidize grain sales.

George Carver, a senior fellow at Georgetown University's Center for Strategic and International Studies, says that the United States has, in effect, agreed to play by Soviet rules regarding espionage, and has placed a mantle of protection over Soviet spies: "The next time the FBI catches a Soviet, the mattress mice in the State Department and the White House will be out wringing their hands and saying, 'Oh, no, we can't arrest him! We don't want another Daniloff thing; there's too much going on.'"

One of the things the administration is eager to have go on during the Daniloff affair is a "town meeting" with U.S. participants in Riga in the Soviet Union. When the interim trade was arranged, the administration wanted the Americans who had pulled out to go to Riga after all. The administration knew this would imply the respectability of the ransom payment. Several clear thinkers, including Jeane Kirkpatrick and Robert McFarlane, refused to be used, and stayed home.

Two Sundays ago an undersecretary of state evidently thought he was being stern when he said the unresolved Daniloff case will "intrude itself" into all discussions with the Soviet Union. Even today, the administration cannot bring itself to say what it should have said immediately, even instinctively:

"No talks about anything, no subsidized grain sales, no credits, no cultural exchanges, no support for the United Nations, no Soviet ships in U.S. ports, no landings here by Soviet airlines, no nothing until Daniloff is released, unconditionally."

Today the deflated administration is reduced to saying that if Daniloff is not released, his case will be at the top of the agenda for the Shultz-Shevardnadze talks. Wow! That'll teach 'em. That will mean that Shultz will complain and Shevardnadze will drum his fingers and roll his eyes, and then they will proceed with business as usual, the Soviet side confirmed in its contempt.

ART BUCHWALD

Battling drugs takes military intelligence!

The United States is celebrating the 200th anniversary of the Constitution. As part of the ceremonies, the House of Representatives just passed a bill which would require the armed forces to become involved in battling drugs in this country.

Art Buchwald

It's been a long time since the military has been assigned a role in keeping domestic order, and I for one am glad we finally are going to use them for what they are trained to do — maintain law and order at home.

Selwyn Barnaby is not as sanguine about the provision as I am.

"Who wants tanks in our streets?" he complained.

"There won't be tanks in the streets," I assured him, "and if there are, their guns will only be pointed at the windows of the drug dealers."

"How will they know who the drug dealers are?" Barnaby asked.

"The Pentagon will set up a special branch of military intelligence. If the services are responsible for getting the dealers and pushers, they must gather an awful lot of information about our citizens."

"That's what I'm worried about. As soon as the military is given a police role in this country, it will open files on all of us, and then they will use them for other things besides finding dope."

"May I remind you," I said, "that this isn't Chile. Our military will not spy on innocent people — only those who are guilty."

"By whose reckoning?"

"Barnaby, this is an emergency, and we have to use every weapon in our arsenal to beat the drug dealers. If this means giving the military new powers, so be it."

"But once you use the armed forces for anti-drugs enforcement, what is to prevent them from being assigned to other police duties? One of the things I have always enjoyed about this country is that we have never seen any troops in the street."

"You're overreacting. It is my impression that the services will be expected to halt penetration of illegal aircraft into the United States and monitor the U.S.-Mexican border. So it isn't as if the Marines are going to knock down your door at 4 o'clock in the morning."

"Speaking of knocking down your door," Barnaby said. "Did you know the House also passed a law making it all right to introduce evidence obtained illegally and without a search warrant, as long as the officer was acting 'in good faith'?"

"What's unreasonable about that?" I demanded.

"Who knows when a cop is acting 'in good faith'?"

"Cops always act in good faith. They had their hands tied for years because they couldn't do what they wanted to do. But this is coming to an end. Once we see that illegal search and seizure works in drug cases, we can do away with search warrants once and for all."

Barnaby said, "You really believe that, don't you?"

"This is the way I see it," I told him. "The people of this country have to be prepared to give up some of their liberties, particularly during an election year. Do you know what is responsible for the drug crisis? The Constitution of the United States. There are so many loopholes in it that any narcotics dealer can crawl through it standing up. The only way to win the war on drugs is to fix the Constitution so that it no longer gives aid and comfort to the dope peddlers."

"Which means?"

"I have to report this conversation to the Pentagon."

"What are you going to report?"

"That you're soft on drugs, you don't want the military on the streets, and you have a thing about policemen knocking down your door in good faith."

Robertson says if 3 million voters want him in, he'll run for president

Pat Robertson

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Rev. Pat Robertson is waiting for a sign from 3 million registered voters to tell him whether to seek the 1988 Republican presidential nomination.

"If by Sept. 17, 1987, one year from today, 3 million registered voters have signed petitions telling me that they will pray — that they will work — that they will give toward my election, then I will run," he told a rally Wednesday night.

The 56-year-old television evangelist said the nation has been under "an assault on our faith and values" and added, "We have taken the Holy Bible from our young and replaced it with the thoughts of Charles Darwin, Karl Marx, Sigmund Freud and John Dewey."

The loudest, most prolonged applause came when Robertson said, "For the sake of our children, we must bring God back to the classrooms of America."

At the end of his talk, Robertson asked ushers to pass out petitions, which said the signers, "who love America and believe in the traditional moral values upon which our Founding Fathers established this nation, hereby urge M.G. "Pat" Robertson to declare his candidacy for the nomination of the Republican Party to the presidency of the United States of America."

The petitions also included a "personal gift form" which allowed for $100 or $200 contributions, payable by check or credit card.

The three-hour rally at Constitution Hall, home of the Daughters of the American Revolution, opened with an hour of singing by two church groups, the Evangel Temple Choir of Washington and the Victory Singers from Phoenix, Ariz. Also performing was Phil Driscoll, described as an award-winning Christian trumpet player.

That was followed by endorsements from supporters including 18-year-old Randall Brooks, who played the title role in the Broadway musical "Annie"; Ben Waldman, who headed the Jewish Coalition for President Reagan's re-election; James Draper and Charles Stanley, the immediate past presidents of the Southern Baptist Convention; and Bishop J. O. Patterson, presiding bishop of the Church of God in Christ, the second largest black denomination in the nation.

Also endorsing a Robertson candidacy was Roosevelt Grier, a former defensive lineman for the New York Giants, who said, "There comes a time in this country when men and women have to decide."

The rally was broadcast over a closed-circuit hookup to 216 locations around the country. Robertson said he expected an audience of 200,000 people.

At a news conference before the rally, Robertson said he would "become president of all the people and as such could not judge any of the people on the basis of their religious beliefs."

Robertson said the if he attains his goal of 3 million active supporters "it would virtually guarantee victory."

He refused to set a financial goal, but said he hoped to avoid accepting federal funds for his campaign. Since federal matching funds became available for presidential candidates in 1976, only one candidate — Republican John B. Connally of Texas in 1980 — has refused to accept them.

Candidates who accept federal funding are required to abide by spending limits.

In his speech to the rally, Robertson blamed the nation's problems on a "liberal elite" and said, "What we are facing is not a governmental problem, it is a moral problem.

"Human cruelty, human selfishness, alcoholism, drug addiction and sexual promiscuity will always bring poverty and the disintegration of society."

Education head accusing Robertson of engaging in 'invidious sectarianism'

By CHRISTOPHER CONNELL

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of Education William J. Bennett is accusing television evangelist Pat Robertson of engaging in "invidious sectarianism" for suggesting that Christian activists love their families and country more than other people.

But a spokesman for Robertson says the remark that drew Bennett's fire was taken out of context.

"He just said that Christians are pretty patriotic people," Marc Nuttle, a director of Americans for Robertson and president of the Committee for Freedom, said Wednesday.

Bennett chastised Robertson in a speech on religious liberty and the Constitution that he delivered Wednesday night at the University of Missouri in Columbia.

"A public figure recently said that Christians feel more strongly about love of country, love of God and support for the traditional family than do non-Christians," said Bennett. "This sort of invidious sectarianism must be renounced in the strongest terms."

Bennett went on to say that, "The same public figure (Robertson) was on much firmer ground when he later observed: 'I don't think we should invest any candidate with the mantle of God.'"

Religion, said Bennett, "should never be excluded from public debate. But it should never be used as a kind of divine trump card to foreclose further debate."

Bennett apparently read newspaper accounts of Robertson's remarks at a news conference in Lansing, Mich., on July 30, when he was asked if his supporters felt more strongly about certain issues.

According to a reporter's tape of the news conference, Robertson said: "I think patriotism, love of God, love of country, support of traditional family. They believe it would be good for our country if families were closer together. I don't think there's anything very radical, pretty much what Ronald Reagan believes in and has enunciated. I think they feel about them more strongly than others do."

Mrs. King 'aware' sanctions would hurt black-ruled ties

WASHINGTON (AP) — Coretta Scott King, the widow of the slain civil rights leader, says any sanctions against South Africa must be accompanied by increased aid to the white-ruled country's black neighbors.

Mrs. King, who recently returned from a 10-day trip to Southern Africa, made her position known at a scheduled meeting Wednesday with Vice President George Bush. President Reagan dropped in, said Mrs. King's spokesman, Ofield Dukes.

Reagan has been weighing whether to veto a package of sanctions passed by Congress.

Mrs. King, whose husband, Martin Luther King Jr., was killed in 1968, said that for more than 30 years, she has "supported the use of sanctions against South Africa as an effective, non-violent tool."

In her recent trip, however, Mrs. King said she became "keenly aware of the possible negative impact" of sanctions on black-ruled countries which have economic ties to South Africa.

Bill to aid Coast Guard

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate has passed a $10.19 billion transportation appropriation bill that would increase the Coast Guard's budget for chasing drug smugglers by nearly 14 percent.

The bill, which was approved Wednesday by an 87-11 vote, includes $373 million for the Coast Guard's drug interdiction program in fiscal 1987, nearly a $45 million increase from what was appropriated during the current fiscal year, which ends Sept. 30.

It also includes $2.7 billion to operate the Federal Aviation Administration, including the air traffic control system.

Handicapped get grants

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House Education and Labor Committee has unanimously approved a new grant program for states offering special services to disabled infants and toddlers.

The education-for-the-handicapped bill, sent to the floor on a 33-0 vote, also greatly increases the amount of money available to states that provide services to handicapped preschoolers ages 3 to 5.

The bill approved Wednesday authorizes $50 million for the infants and toddlers grants and $184 million in discretionary funds. "Such sums as may be necessary" are authorized for the remaining programs.

The measure will have to be reconciled with a Senate bill that makes education services for the 3-5 age group mandatory and establishes a $100 million infants and toddlers program.

Meese blaming aliens

WASHINGTON (AP) — Attorney General Edwin Meese III, pressing Congress to overhaul the immigration law, has linked drug smuggling with the influx of illegal aliens across the Southwest border.

Border Patrol narcotics seizures, largely in the Southwest, now top 1,000 a year and are worth $150 million, Alan C. Nelson, commissioner of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, said Wednesday at a news conference with Meese.

"The reality is that illegal immigration is contributing to the drug problem," Meese said. He said drug smugglers "get lost in the crowd" of aliens crossing the border and that in some cases the traffickers are pressing aliens to carry drugs.

"The fewer illegal immigrants you have, the less you're going to have them involved in illegal drug trafficking," the attorney general said in urging passage of immigration overhaul legislation lying dormant in Congress.

Beer legislation to be costly

WASHINGTON (AP) — Legislation granting an antitrust exemption to beer wholesalers could cost consumers about $1 billion a year, says a consumer group.

Mark Cooper, who produced an economic model of exclusive beer distribution territories for the Consumer Federation of America, said Wednesday that exclusive territories "will lead to higher prices, do not increase consumption and do not reduce concentration."

The CFA figure was immediately attacked by the National Beer Wholesalers Association, which says the bill is simply intended to prevent frivolous lawsuits against wholesalers.

Opponents of the legislation say it would immunize beer wholesalers' exclusive distribution agreements from antitrust challenge.

Ill children more expensive

WASHINGTON (AP) — A national association of 88 children's hospitals has released a study that it says buttresses its argument that pediatric patients are more expensive to care for than adults.

The National Association of Children's Hospitals and Related Institutions appealed for the government and private insurers to take that into account when they set reimbursement rates for Medicaid and other programs.

The association said that a two-year study of more than 500,000 pediatric hospital records showed that the children's hospitals, like university hospitals, "tend to treat a broader range of case types...more cardiovascular cases, more surgical cases and a most disproportionate number of cancer cases."

Community hospitals often ship their most seriously ill newborns and youngsters to a children's hospital for treatment, the study said.

The association held a news conference Wednesday to make its argument that children's hospitals should gain a permanent exemption from Medicare's prospective payment system.

WEATHER SUMMARY

Pleasant days anticipated

From Staff and Wire Reports

Midland-area residents can expect pleasant skies and warm temperatures on Friday, according to forecasters at the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport. A high in the lower 90s is predicted.

Partly cloudy skies accompany a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms in tonight's forecast by the NWS. Winds will be southerly at 10-15 tonight, increasing to 10-20 on Friday.

Wednesday's high was nine degrees below the record high of 98 set for that date in 1977. This morning's low was 16 degrees above the record high of 47 set in 1971.

STATE

Skies were cloudy to partly cloudy across the state this morning as showers and thunderstorms dampened parts of the High Plains, Central and South Central Texas and the upper coastal plains.

The rain stemmed from moist, unstable air over the state that for the most part avoided the lower Rio Grande Valley and the Trans-Pecos, where clear skies prevailed.

Early morning temperatures were mostly in the 60s and 70s, with some 50-degree readings in the mountains and a few low 80s along the coast, the National Weather Service reported.

The 4 a.m. state temperature extremes were 56 degrees at Marfa and 83 degrees at the Corpus Christi Naval Air Station.

The forecast for North Texas calls for partly cloudy skies with widely scattered thunderstorms through Friday. Highs should be in the 90s and lows in the 70s.

West Texas should see thunderstorms tonight and sunshine Friday with lows in the 60s and highs in the 90s.

South Texas should be partly cloudy with scattered thunderstorms through Friday. Highs should be in the 80s and 90s and lows in the 70s and 80s.

NATION

Thunderstorms drenched sections of the Plains today after a record-breaking downpour in Missouri as rain dotted the nation coast to coast.

Showers and thunderstorms were scattered from the south Atlantic Coast across the Tennessee, lower Ohio and middle Mississippi valleys into the central Plains.

Rain was scattered across the Great Lakes region and from the northern Rockies to the northern and central Pacific Coast.

Slow-moving thunderstorms prompted a flash flood warning in sections of west central Missouri and east central Kansas. A flash flood watch was posted in sections of central Missouri.

Buffs seek 3-0 start, host Rangers

By ERIC SCHURER
Sports Writer

While it may be too early to tell if Dale Ruth has turned the wheels of fortune at Stanton, one thing is certain — he certainly has people excited.

The Buffaloes are off to a 2-0 start, their first since 1980, and this week Ruth brings Stanton home against the Greenwood Rangers in an effort to go 3-0. The contest begins at 8 p.m.

"It's our homecoming and with Greenwood being so close, we're expecting a real big crowd," Ruth said. "We haven't been 2-0 in a long time, not since my second year as an assistant in 1980.

"There's a lot of excitement going on in town. I haven't seen people this excited since we won the district four years ago. But we started slow that year, so this is the earliest I've see people get excited about the team."

Ruth has brought the Buffs back to life with a revamped offensive scheme, turning to the Wishbone T. Though Stanton has yet to match the skill in execution that Midland Lee has attained, the offense has geared up for 46 points in two games.

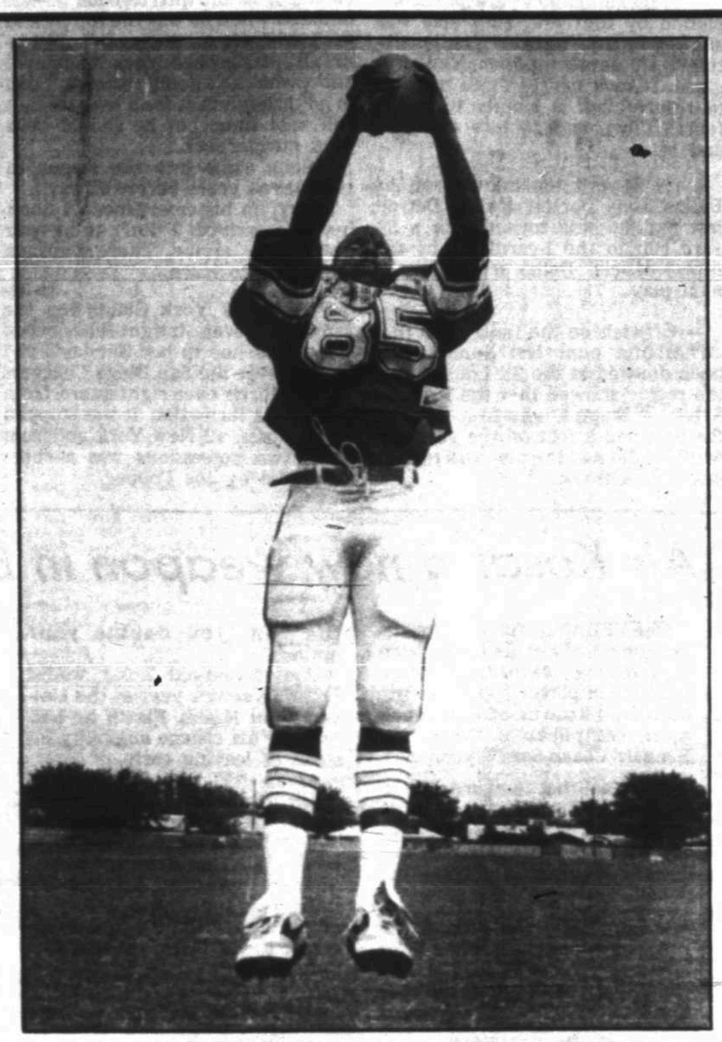

FULLBACK DEREK Sorley is the key to the attack, and the converted split-end ran for his first 100-yard game last week against Coahoma. Junior quarterback Skip Hopkins is also an able runner and each week he learns more and more about the delicate, complex wishbone offense.

But, by going up against the Rangers, Stanton takes on a team that has stumbled to an 0-2 start under a new coach and is looking to right itself before district play opens in October.

Greenwood has stepped up into Class 3A this year, and with Maurice Hodges at the helm, the Rangers are hoping to be competitive in District 4-3A. But consecutive losses to Class 2A playoff-contenders McCamey and Reagan County, have cast some doubt over the Rangers' ability to compete in the higher classification.

HODGES ISN'T discouraged about the play of his team however, and in last week's 26-21 loss to Reagan County, Greenwood's offense showed signs of coming to life.

Rebs face long drive

Unbeatens to battle in El Paso

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

EL PASO — Midland Lee's youthful Rebels will receive their nastiest test of the young 1986 football season Friday night when they make a 600-mile whirlwind round-trip to this Border City without a pillow in sight.

Awaiting the Rebels will be the undefeated El Paso Eastwood Troopers, but it's the trip itself that has Lee coach Earl Miller concerned.

"This will be a tough trip for all of us," said Miller. "We're leaving Friday morning and coming back right after the game. The important thing about this game is how well our kids take to the travel. Only a few of the seniors have made a trip to El Paso."

So the Rebs will learn first hand about life in West Texas football where a bus seat can become a cement slab after about 12 hours.

"We won't be touring Mexico. I can tell you that," deadpanned Miller. "We don't have time to waste. We've got to get back and start preparing for Midland High as quick as we can. With the district schedule at our door, we don't have time to smell the roses," (or taste the tamales).

And if Lee is dreading the long haul, Eastwood coach Todd Ware isn't too excited about the Rebels' arrival, despite scoring 77 points in its first two games.

Ware's Troopers won a 35-31 decision against cross town rival Coronado last week, but it was a costly victory. Eastwood quarterback David Artega went down with a knee injury and is lost for the season.

"David was our leading passer and completing over 50 percent of his passes," noted Ware. "We were a little fortunate to have won two games with him in there, but with him out — I just don't know. We'll just have to wait and see how this turns out, but it's a big blow to our team.

"We've been a big play offense, but now we may have to change up some and I don't know if we can control the ball against a team like Lee, which is big, quick and breaking long plays with the running game."

ON THE other hand, Lee suffered no additional injuries against Plainview and will be missing only defensive ends Jeff McHugh and Mark Breeding.

And Lee is healthy at quarterback where Rodney Johnson already has over 200 yards rushing.

Mustangs, Tors square off in 2-4A opener

By ERIC SCHURER
Sports Writer

Before the season got underway, Andrews' coach David Visentine said his Mustangs could easily go 0-2 "and still be a very good football team."

Well, Friday night at Mustang Bowl, Lamesa, 1-1, will find out just how good the 0-2 Mustangs are as both teams open District 2-4A play at 8 p.m.

In other 2-4A openers, Big Spring is at San Angelo Lake View; Monahans hosts Pecos; Snyder and Fort Stockton tangle in Snyder and defending state champion Sweetwater is idle.

Andrews opened the pre-district season against hefty opposition: Hereford, long a playoff team from Class 5A, now dropped into 4A for the first time, and Midland High from District 4-5A. The 'Stangs lost both contests, failing to score until the final quarter against the Bulldogs.

"I was pleased with the way we played against Midland High, but not with the outcome," Visentine said. "I still think we have a chance at being a good football team this year."

To do that, Andrews will have to get its offense back in high gear. In two games, the Mustangs have only compiled 251 yards and a mere six points.

"We've run into two very good defensive teams, but I thought we were going to be able to move the ball on the ground this year. I hope that doesn't become a problem," Visentine said.

Area Football

THE TORNADOES come into Friday's game with a little different attitude, having posted an impressive 41-20 shellacking of Brownfield last week. The Tors moved the ball on offense for 321 yards, after a poor opening loss to Levelland. Quarterback Tim Berry and tailback Gerry Woodberry provide coach Clyde Noonkester with a dual-edged attack — Woodberry on the ground and Berry through the air.

The Tors' offensive line has provided Berry with enough protection to throw for 323 yards so far, hitting on 53 percent of his passes.

But, Noonkester worries about the size of the Mustangs, escpecially on defense, while as a counter, the Tornadoes rely on speed and quickness.

"We're real small — and they're huge. That could be the key," Noonkester says, "to see if we can overcome their size with our speed and quickness."

The Mustangs' defensive front averages nearly 200 pounds and the heart of the Andrews' defense, 200-pounder Junior Rios, who sat out the MHS game with back spasms, is expected to return. Rios was all-district at defensive tackle as a junior but lines up as a linebacker this season.

"Lamesa only lines up at about 160 pounds at the ends, so they don't even tell you they're going to stand in there with you," Visentine said. "They're small defensively, but they're quick. I mean very quick. That's what they emphasize on defense and that's our main concern."

The Mustangs must also be concerned with their injury list. Rios is likely to return, but several others may be out for this week's district opener.

Andrews' biggest lineman, 255-pound David Jacobson, went down against MHS with a neck injury and was carried off the field on a stretcher. Tests done this week show no permanent damage but possible chipped vertabrae in the neck.

Also, Lut Anderson, who replaced Rios at fullback, has a broken thumb and is questionable.

Cruz homers Astros past Reds; Mets clinch NL East

Associated Press

CINCINNATI — Jose Cruz delivered the knockdown punch to the Cincinnati Reds' playoff hopes Wednesday night with his finest power display in two years.

Cruz drove in five runs with a pair of homers as the Houston Astros beat Cincinnati 6-1 to take a commanding nine-game lead over the Reds in the National League West.

Cruz, who didn't hit a homer until July 11, padded his total to nine with his first two-homer game since July 24, 1984. He claimed his two-run and three-run homers off left-hander Chris Welsh were a matter of good fortune against a pitcher who is usually tough on left-handed batters.

"I was just lucky tonight," Cruz said. "Tonight was one of those nights. Tonight was my night."

Right-hander Danny Darwin, 3-1, allowed just five hits to continue the Astros' domination of the Reds, who went into the game in second place a half-game ahead of San Francisco. Houston has won 13 of its 17 games this season against Cincinnati, including the first two games of the current three-game series.

Astros Manager Hal Lanier traced his club's dominance against the Reds to a three-game sweep at Riverfront Stadium on April 18-20, when Cincinnati was stuck in its early-season slump.

"At the start of the season, we came in here and won three straight," Lanier said. "Maybe that gave the club confidence that they could beat that club. At the start of the season, even I was picking Cincinnati. Maybe it showed them they could play with Cincinnati."

The Reds have been held to three or fewer runs in 10 of their 13 loses to Houston, including a pair of shutouts. They managed just four hits Tuesday night in losing the series opener 6-1.

"I'd say we've been nonproductive," Reds player-manager Pete Rose said. "We're just not hitting. When you get (no more than) five hits two games in a row, you're not going to win many games."

Cruz snapped a scoreless tie with his two-run homer in the fourth inning off Welsh, 6-7, and added a three-run homer in the eighth.

Mets 4, Reds 2

Dwight Gooden said he wanted to finish what he started, and he was there at the end when the New York Mets clinched the National League East crown with a victory over Chicago.

"It was great to be out there," Gooden said after the game in a wild New York clubhouse celebration. "I wanted to finish ... I wanted to be out there."

Gooden said he was more nervous in the postgame pandemonium than he was before the game. Even before second baseman Wally Backman had completed the final out by throwing to first to get Chico Walker on a groundout, hundreds of fans in the crowd of 47,823 swarmed the field at Shea Stadium.

"I got knocked down on the ground," Gooden said. "I didn't know who was on top of me. It was really a scary feeling. You don't know what's going to happen."

Gooden pitched a six-hitter and rookie Dave Magadan got three hits and drove in two runs.

Gooden, 15-6, struck out eight and walked five. He lost his shutout bid when Rafael Palmiero hit a two-run homer in the eighth.

Against Cubs right-hander Dennis Eckersley, 6-10, the Mets broke through in the third inning with four singles. With one out, Lenny Dykstra singled to right field, and Backman followed with a single to center that sent Dykstra to second. Magadan drove in Dykstra as Backman went to third, and, after Gary Carter struck out, Darryl Strawberry hit a single to left, scoring Backman.

Magadan, called up from the Mets' AAA Tidewater farmclub this month and thus ineligible for the playoffs, was in the starting lineup in place of the Mets regular first baseman, Hernandez, who had a slight virus.

Braves 4, Dodgers 1

ATLANTA — Fernando Valenzuela failed in his bid to become a 20-game winner for the first time in his career and become the first NL pitcher to reach that plateau this season when Los Angeles dropped a decision to Atlanta.

Bruce Benedict highlighted a three-run seventh inning with a two-run single to lead Atlanta over Valenzuela, who fell to 19-10. The loss was the Dodgers' fourth straight.

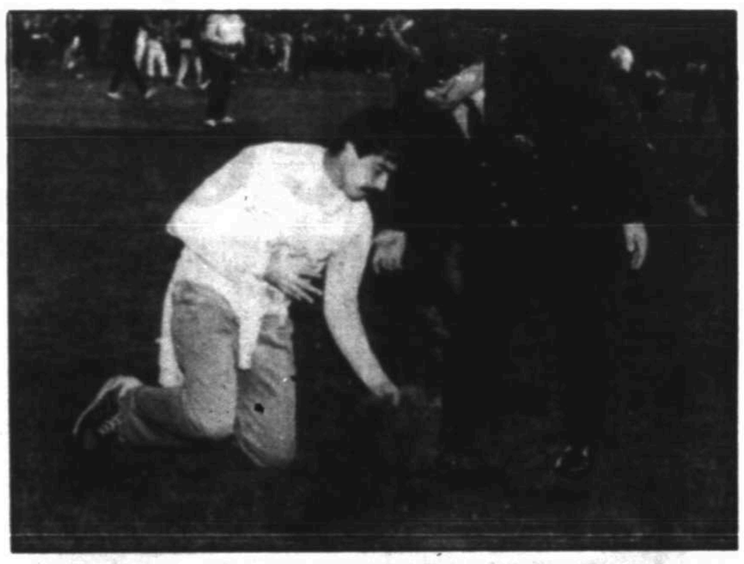

Reliver Jeff Dedmom, 6-6, who had allowed the Dodgers to tie the score in the top of the seventh, when he hit pinch-hitter Alex Trevino with the bases loaded, got credit for the victory.

Cardinals 8, Phillies 5

PHILADELPHIA — Bob Forsch and rookie Todd Worrell combined on a six-hitter and Forsch drove in the game-winning run with a sacrifice fly as St. Louis defeated Philadelphia to snap the Phillies' five-game winning streak.

Rams win bidding war for Everett

Oilers receive star guard, Rams' No. 1 pick in '87

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Los Angeles Rams have acquired the rights to holdout rookie quarterback Jim Everett from the Houston Oilers, according to a published report.

The Rams acquired the rights to Everett, the third player taken in this year's NFL draft, by trading Pro Bowl guard Kent Hill, their No. 1 pick in 1987 and other considerations to the Houston Oilers, the Los Angeles Herald Examiner reported today.

Another player, believed to be currently on the inactive list, is included in the trade. According to the report, it could be defensive end William Fuller, who tried out for the Oilers two weeks ago. Other possibilities are said to be inside linebacker Jim Collins, currently hampered by a shoulder injury, or unsigned wide receiver Henry Ellard.

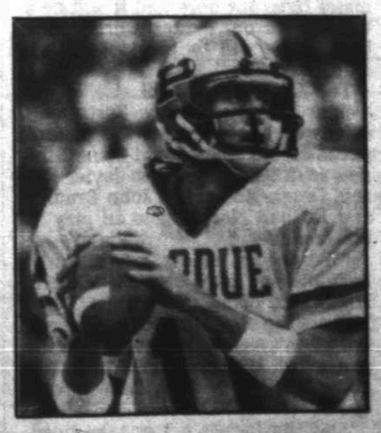

Collins said he wasn't aware of a trade. Mike Blatt, Ellard's agent, also denied any knowledge of a trade Wednesday. And Fuller, the Rams' first pick in the USFL supplemental draft, couldn't be reached.

Everett, who starred at Purdue, was selected by Houston in April's draft. He was picked after Tampa Bay took Heisman Trophy winner Bo Jackson and Atlanta grabbed Oklahoma nose tackle Tony Casillas.

The Rams had to outbid the San Francisco 49ers for Everett. The 49ers, who have lost quarterback Joe Montana for the season after back surgery this week, had offered both of their first-round picks next year, a second-round choice and nose tackle Manu Tuiasosopo. The Oilers were demanding Pro Bowl nose tackle Michael Carter.

Last year at Purdue, Everett passed for 3,651 yards and 23 touchdowns. The 6-foot-5, 215-pound passer was graded by most NFL personnel directors as the top quarterback in the draft.

The Oilers became serious about shopping Everett last week when it became obvious they would not agree to his asking price — $2.7 million over four years. Originally, agent Marvin Demoff had asked for a $3.8 million deal. Casillas had the highest-paying contract among this year's rookies. His four-year package has been pegged as high as $2.3 million.

Rams Coach John Robinson and other club officials were unavailable Wednesday night to confirm the trade. However, Hill told the Herald Examiner that line coach Hudson Houck informed him of the trade last evening.

"Hudson told me I had been traded to Houston," Hill said, when reached at home. "It caught me by surprise. I still haven't received official word of it. That's all I know. Anything else would have to come from the club."

The Rams figure to replace Hill, who has been to the Pro Bowl five times in the last six seasons, with Tom Newberry, their second-round choice this season. "The Rams have pulled off a coup," said Marvin Demoff. Everett's attorney-agent. "They've leap-frogged in the (NFC West) division if Everett is as good as everyone says he is. They beat out the 49ers."

Not all replay problems appear to be solvable

Associated Press

The NFL's official reply to the snags in the instant replay system that have popped up during the first two weeks — most often on national television — is that the system is new and the kinks have to be worked out.

"We're still learning, both downstairs and upstairs," Joe Browne, the NFL's director of communications, said. Dallas' Tex Schramm, the system's most influential proponent, is upset at the mistakes but asks for more time.

Privately, however, league officials concede that some not-so-resolvable bugs have shown up.

For example, the initiative on the replay is supposed to come from the booth, where the replay official notifies officials on the field to hold up the game while they watch the tape.

But will officials afraid of being publicly embarrassed try a speed-up? Once a ball is snapped for another play, the replay rule no longer takes effect. Or will coaches call timeouts in order to get a ruling?

Take Monday night's fiasco at Pittsburgh, where a Denver touchdown was taken away when John Elway was ruled to have thrown a forward pass to Gerald Willhite before Willhite threw a 79-yard TD pass to Steve Watson.

The replay clearly showed the pass was a lateral and the touchdown should have been allowed. But communication between the replay booth and the field were delayed and a play was run before that fact could be communicated to the field.

Elway said later that when he complained about the call, the officials told him — in so many words — to shut up and snap the ball. By the time the official in the booth called to say the replay showed the touchdown should have stood, it was too late.

NFL Notes

The league said the problem was in the booth — the officials there should have informed the officials on the field that they were watching the play.

But if Elway had called time before the next play, the TD, as confirmed by the replay, would have stood. A touchdown is worth a used timeout any time.

REPLAY SCORECARD

Official NFL replay statistics after two weeks:

Of the 24 games played, there have been 17 in which there have been communications between the replay booth and the field. There have been far more incidents of plays reviewed, but there is no official record kept.

Of those 17 communications, three have resulted in reversals:

— A meaningless 4-yard pass completion by the New York Jets was allowed in last Thursday's nationally televised game against New England. It took nearly three minutes to resolve, but it simply turned a fourth down and 18 into a fourth and 14.

— A 34-yard touchdown run by Dallas' Tony Dorsett against Detroit last Sunday was turned into a 33-yard run to the 1-yard line by the replay official. Dallas scored on the next play.

— Officials on the field ruled that an Atlanta punt last Sunday had been downed at the St. Louis 5. But the replay showed that the Falcons' Sylvester Stamps, who first touched the ball, had a foot on the goal line when he did and the play was turned into a touchback.

HEAR AND THERE

Denver's John Elway, who is emerging as the quarterback he was billed as when he was the top pick in the 1983 draft, on the booing of Pittsburgh quarterback Mark Malone: "I know what he's going through. I had to go through that for a long time. It will take time, but he should be a good quarterback."

Malone came into the league in 1980, three years before Elway.

Elway, on his emergence: "I don't feel I've arrived. I don't think you ever really arrive. There's always something to learn."

THE NEW York Giants ran the same play seven straight times inside the 2-yard line in last Sunday's 20-7 victory over the San Diego Chargers — Joe Morris over right guard from a one-back formation. It was stopped seven times; all New York got from those two possessions was a short field goal by Joe Cooper.

The Giants' reasoning was right out of George Orwell via John LeCarre — doublethink and all that. "We stuck with the same play hoping they would guess outside," Chris Godfrey, the Giants' right guard, said. "I think we broke tendencies by staying with the same play."

IRVING FRYAR of New England may have cost teammate Craig James a shot at the AFC passing title.

Last season, the New England running back had two completions in two attempts for two touchdowns — a 139.6 under the NFL's passing rating system. That was second to Brian Brennan of Cleveland, who was one for one for a 33-yard touchdown — a 158.3 rating.

James is down to 104 this year, because Fryar dropped what would have been a 60-yard TD pass last Thursday night against the Jets. James came back to throw for a touchdown in the fourth quarter, 10 yards to Tony Collins.

MC golfers at Levelland if weather allows

From Staff Reports

Hoping to make up ground on the leaders, Midland College's golf team heads for Levelland Friday and the second of three fall conference tournaments. The 27-hole event is being played on the Levelland Country Club course, hosted by South Plains College.

The MC Chaparrals finished fourth among the six conference teams at the season's first conference event last week on the Western Texas College tourney in Snyder.

"If we can get there, and the course is playable, the scores should be very low," MC coach Delnor Poss said. "There's been a huge amount of rain north of Midland during the last two weeks, some of the roads are closed, and we might not get to practice the day before the tournament as we usually do. Right now, it's just a day-to-day situation about playing."

Poss also recalled last year's event at Levelland was postponed after the LCC course was flooded. "With the rain they've had this fall, you can shoot right at the flags and the greens will hold and that's unusual in West Texas," he said.

New Mexico Junior College ran away with the first tournament, scoring 425 and picking up six points. New Mexico Military Institute finished second with 432 and got five points. Odessa College had 434 for third and four points. MC shot 438 and got three points. Western Texas and South Plains tied for fifth and earned 1½ points each.

Three Chaps tied for team honors with respectable 109 scores. Arnie Burttschell had 72-37, while Steve Alexander and Rob Anderson shot identical 73-36 rounds. Glenn Collins, Ricky Cruz, and Gordon Wessels all finished with 113s. NMMI's Derek Crawford had a nifty 102 for medalist honors.

Midland College hosts the final Western Junior College Athletic Conference tournament at Greentree Country Club on Oct. 4. Three more tournaments will be played in the spring. In a major change, the conference went from an 18-hole tournament format to 27-holes. Coaches felt this would allow for more equitable events.

Air Kosar a new weapon in Browns' attack

CLEVELAND (AP) — The development of Bernie Kosar from a promising quarterback into a productive player has made the Cleveland Browns' offense much more complicated, Cincinnati Bengals' Coach Sam Wyche says.

"The fact that they are able to produce in the air as well as on the ground is a problem," said Wyche, whose Bengals face the Browns Thursday night in a nationally televised NFL game.

"Last year, if you stopped the run, you probably stopped their offense," Wyche said. "But if you've got the threat of the pass that's equal with the threat of the run, you double your options."

The 22-year-old Kosar would be in his senior year at the University of Miami, Fla., if he had used all his college eligibility instead of leaving early.

As an NFL rookie last year, Kosar displayed a strong arm but a frequent inability to maneuver long enough to find open receivers. The Browns, consequently, counted heavily on their running game and produced a pair of 1,000-yard rushers in Kevin Mack and Earnest Byner.

New offensive coordinator Lindy Infante, a former Bengals assistant, is trying to diversify the Cleveland attack.

"Bernie's been around long enough now to figure things out," Wyche, a former quarterback, said. "He's holding his concentration downfield much longer. He doesn't scramble, but he's moving better within the pocket, all while he's keeping his eyes downfield."

Kosar's statistics through the Browns' first two games this season are not as impressive as his performances would have suggested. He has completed 34 of 66 passes for 469 yards and two touchdowns, with one interception.

Greenwood's biggest weapon is senior tailback Steve Popham, a 132-yard rusher last week. Popham is a district track champion and is able to outrun most defenses, if he can get loose. His brother Garry is the fullback, and at 215 pounds as a sophomore, his specialty is the inside running game.

In kicker Chad Cottrell, the Rangers also possess a weapon many high school coaches wish they had — a quality kicker within 40 yards.

LEE

In fact, Lee is full of offensive threats. Halfback Dennis Sterling rushed for 133 yards and scored four times two weeks ago against Lubbock Coronado and fullback Waymond Goodley, a green-behind-the-ears junior, carried the Lee rushing load last week against Plainview with over 70 hard earned yards. And this has all come while waiting for Joe Woodard and Durian Jenkins to explode.

Miller is hoping his Rebels put together both offense and defense in this one and will be looking at his defensive secondary Friday.

"This will be a test for our secondary. The secondary only made a couple of mistakes last week, but it cost us on the scoreboard," said Miller. "Eastwood is going to throw the ball and I would like to see our secondary read their keys well and be in position when the ball is thrown."

THE QUESTION for the Troopers, however, is can backup quarterback Chris Cavazos get the ball to the fleet, goal-oriented Edward Givins.

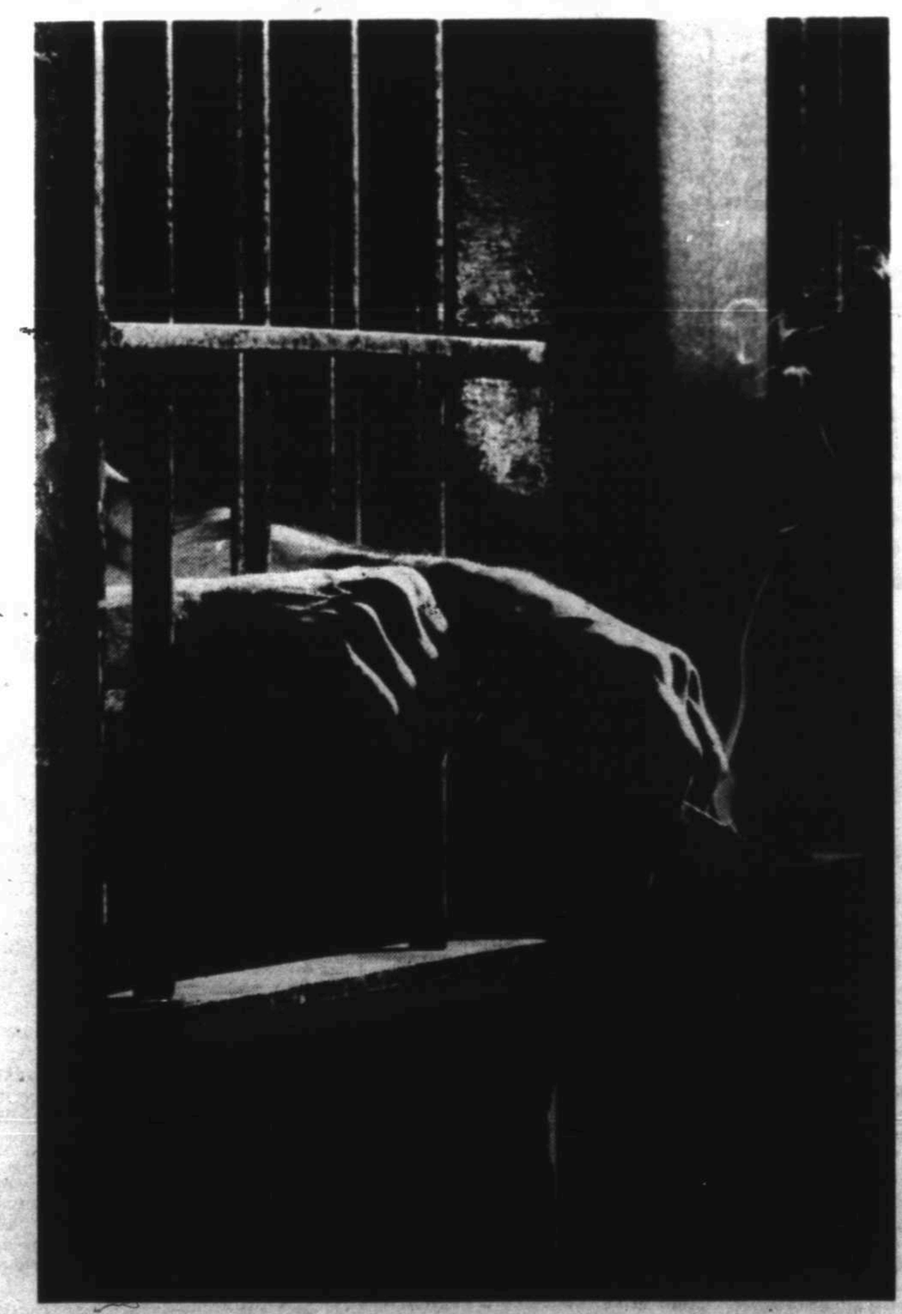

"Givens is a class act at wingback," notes Miller. "He caught three touchdown passes and ran a kickoff back last week against Coronado. Also they can give our offense some problems because they have changed from a 6-1 front to a 5-2. We don't see many fives out here and it will be a big test for our center (Chris Jones) because he will be blocking with a man over him."

The Lee defense will also face a weight advantage since Eastwood's offensive line averages 220 pounds per man, but that should be nothing new to defensive linemen Javier Falcon, Deton McGruder, John Bradley and DeJuan Norris, who all play in the trenches.

"We need a victory so we can go into district play against Midland High with some momentum," said Miller. "We never like to lose a game, but I don't want a loss going into the game with Midland High. Things are going to get serious here pretty quick."

And the Rebels better take heed. This bus ride is long enough, but riding back with Miller after a loss could make eternity a meaningful word. Just ask those who had to sit through the half during "Miller Time" last week when the Rebels were trailing Plainview by a 15-7 margin.

9 out of 10 folks who drop in here dropped out of school.

It's startling. But true.

And at Southwestern Bell Telephone, we believe it's a statistic we can't afford to ignore.

That's why, since 1979, we've been supporting a special program created to keep kids in school and off the streets.

It's called Communities in Schools, and it was started by Texas' first lady, Linda Gale White.

Communities in Schools arranges for free one-on-one counseling to help potential dropouts work out their personal problems, raise their grades, and above all, raise their self-confidence.

So far the program has been so successful, it's expanded from Houston to Dallas, San Antonio, El Paso and Austin.

At Southwestern Bell Telephone, we're proud to support this special program, as part of our overall effort to contribute to Texas communities.

Because we believe the place to get an education is in school.

Not in prison.

We're here to help.

Tigers fire Kirk; No reason given

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Dana Kirk, who coached nationally ranked Memphis State into the NCAA basketball tournament the last five seasons, was fired by the university on Wednesday.

School President Thomas Carpenter said assistant basketball coach Larry Finch would be interim head coach until a replacement can be found for Kirk, who led the Tigers to the Final Four in the 1984-85 season.

Carpenter, in a written statement, gave no reason for Kirk's firing other than to say the school decided "to change the leadership of the men's basketball program."

"That's really all I can say on the advice of counsel," said Carpenter when reached by telephone at his home.

He said the university would buy out the rest of Kirk's contract for about $159,000.

Kirk was not in his office at the university and could not be reached for comment. School officials said they did not know where he was, and his telephone number is not listed.

IN SEVEN years at Memphis State, Kirk, 51, had a record of 158-58. After 13-14 records in each of his first two seasons, Memphis State posted marks of 24-5, 23-8, 26-7, 31-4 and, last year, 28-6.

A native of Logan, W.Va., Kirk came to Memphis State after three seasons at Virginia Commonwealth University, five years as an assistant coach at Louisville and five years as head coach at Tampa.

Finch said he had no advance notice of the action by the school.

"I'm just as shocked as everybody else," Finch said, adding he didn't know why Kirk was fired.

Mike Finn, a spokesman for the school's athletic department, said he also didn't know the reason for the school's decision.

"Basically, they just said they wanted a change in leadership," Finn said.

Bob Winn, the school's sports information director, declined to speculate on the reason for Kirk's firing.

"I was just told to hand out the releases," he said.

THE PAST few years have provided the Memphis State basketball program with national attention, but also have marked some troubled times for Kirk.

Kirk has acknowledged his personal finances were under review by a federal grand jury, but denied any wrongdoing.

Kirk was called before a grand jury last September, about six months after the panel began investigating sports betting in the Memphis area. The probe into gambling has led to indictments against suspected bookmakers in the area, but hasn't resulted in charges against anyone associated with the university.

Two former athletic directors from Memphis State were questioned during the investigation.

Rangers blank A's, 4-0

Rookie, vet provide long ball blasts

Associated Press

OAKLAND, Calif. — Pete Incaviglia is tied with Larry Parrish for the team lead in home runs for the Texas Rangers, but the 22-year-old rookie outfielder won't let competition get in the way of friendship.

"Larry Parrish has accepted me from the first day of spring training as if I were a three-year veteran, and he accepted me instead of avoided me — and that's something I'll never forget," said Incaviglia.

Incaviglia homered twice, and Parrish homered once to lead the Ranger's over the Oakland A's, 4-0, Wednesday to complete a three-game sweep.

"He's helped me out and given me lots of advice to my advantage," said Incaviglia. "We're kind of the same hitters. We like to talk baseball a lot, which is something a lot of people don't do anymore."

Parrish, who hit his third homer in two games, said he feels no pressure at all to match the impressive rookie's numbers.

"I just hope we get three more a piece so we can get 30, but that's about it," said Parrish.

Texas manager Bobby Valentine enjoyed what he saw from his power hitters, even though many of the recent Texas homers have been solo shots. "I'll take them any way they come," he said. "Because they're a lot better than solo singles."

With Edwin Correa on the mound Wednesday, one solo homer would have been enough. Correa pitched 8 and 2-3 innings of shut out ball, to improve his record to 2-13, while Mitch Williams got the last out of the game for his eighth save.

Oakland's Rick Rodriguez was the starting pitcher in his first major league game, and stayed out of trouble beyond giving up the long ball. He lasted 7⅔ innings, giving up seven hits.

"He was very good, I'm impressed," said Oakland Manager Tony LaRussa. "He handled himself very well and I liked his stuff. He just made two mistakes to Incaviglia."

Red Sox 4, Brewers 1

BOSTON — Dennis "Oil Can" Boyd equalled a career high with his 15th victory, and Don Baylor and Dwight Evans hit consecutive homers to lead Boston Red Sox to a victory over Milwaukee.

Boyd scattered eight hits, struck out six and walked one.

The lone Milwaukee run came on a ninth-inning home run by Bill Schroeder.

With their third consecutive victory and 15th in their last 18 games, the Red Sox improved their record to 89-57 and moved closer to their first American League East championship since 1975. Boston can nail down the title with seven more victories, no matter what New York or Toronto do.

Indians 5, Twins 2

CLEVELAND — Pat Tabler's RBI single snapped a 2-2 tie and started a three-run rally in the sixth inning to give rookie Greg Swindell and Cleveland a victory over Minnesota.

The left-handed Swindell, 3-1, allowed two runs on seven hits, striking out four and walking one in seven innings. Frank Wills pitched the last two innings for his fourth save, giving up one hit.

Carmen Castillo hit a two-run homer, his eighth, off Heaton to give the Indians a 2-0 lead in the second. Minnesota tied the game on solo homers by Gary Gaetti, his 31st, in the fourth inning and Greg Gagne, his ninth, in the fifth.

Tigers 8, Blue Jays 6

TORONTO — Jack Morris scattered eight hits and pinch-hitter Larry Herndon hit a three-run homer during a four-run Detroit seventh inning that carried the Tigers to a victory over Toronto.

With the game tied 3-3 in the seventh, rookie Dwight Lowry stroked a one-out single, his second hit of the game off Toronto Jim Clancy, 14-11. After Lou Whitaker singled, Alan Trammell singled to score Lowry and chase Clancy.

Herndon followed with his seventh homer of the season into the left field bleachers off rookie lefthander Jeff Musselman.

Morris struck out eight and walked two before being Willie Hernandez came on in the ninth to get the last out and gain his 22nd save.

Orioles 8, Yankees 3

NEW YORK — Rookie Eric Bell won his first major league start and Larry Sheets hit a two-run homer, leading Baltimore past New York.

The Orioles broke a five-game losing streak and won for just the fifth time in 25 games. New York's winning streak ended at four.

Bell took a four-hitter and 6-2 lead into the seventh. After retiring the first two batters, third baseman Juan Bonilla misplayed Henry Cotto's grounder for his second error of the game, and Wayne Tolleson and Don Mattingly followed with singles that made it 6-3.

Don Aase then relieved the lefthanded Bell and retired Dave Winfield on a grounder, eventually gaining his 32nd save.

White Sox 3, Mariners 0

SEATTLE — Floyd Bannister and Bob Thigpen combined on a four-hit shutout to lead Chicago to a victory over Seattle.

Mark Langston, 12-12, struck out 14 White Sox to give him 211 strikeouts this season, breaking the Mariners' record of 209 that Bannister had set in 1982. It was Langston's seventh complete game of the season.

Bannister, 10-11, pitched six shutout innings, allowing four hits, four walks and striking out four. Thigpen, who has not allowed a run in 27 2-3 innings, pitched the final three innings for his seventh save.

Angels 3, Royals 1

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Brian Downing hit a two-run homer with one out in the bottom of the 10th inning to lift California to a victory over Kansas City and reduce the Angels' magic number for winning the AL West Championship to nine.

Downing hit his 18th homer of the season off loser Bud Black, 5-8, after Dick Schofield had collected his fourth single of the game. It was the first four-hit game of Schofield's big-league career.

Doug Corbett, 4-2, picked up the victory. Corbett blanked the Royals on one hit over the final three innings.

The Angels took a 1-0 lead off Kansas City starter Danny Jackson on Doug DeCinces' 24th homer of the season leading off the bottom of the fourth. But pinch-hitter Hal McRae hit his seventh homer of the season to lead off the eighth to tie the game at 1-1 off California starter Don Sutton.

Forsch, 14-8, worked 7⅓ innings. He struck out five and walked one. Worrell got his 34th save. St. Louis scored two unearned runs against Bruce Ruffin, 8-4, in the first.

After falling behind 4-2, the Cardinals scored five runs in the fourth. RBI singles by Terry Pendleton and Ozzie Smith tied the score and Forsch's sacrifice fly put St. Louis ahead 5-4. An error by second baseman Juan Samuel allowed two more runs to score. The Cardinals added their final run in the seventh on Pendleton's RBI single.

Expos 6, Pirates 5
Pirates 4, Expos 1

MONTREAL — Sid Bream broke a tie with a two-run homer in the sixth inning as the Pittsburgh Pirates beat Montreal for a split of their doubleheader with the Expos.

A two-run double by Andres Galarraga keyed a five-run seventh inning as the Montreal overcame a four-run deficit to win the opener.

Bream hit his 15th homer off Bob Sebra, 4-5, after Barry Bonds doubled. Pittsburgh starter Bob Kipper, 5-7, allowed seven hits in 7⅔ innings, struck out six batters and walked one. Don Robinson got his 12th save.

In the opener, Galarraga lined a 3-2 pitch from Barry Jones, 2-4, off the left field wall to make a winner of Randy St. Claire, 1-0, and set up Jeff Reardon for his 34th save.

Mike Diaz hit a two-run homer, his 12th. in the Pittsburgh second, and Jim Morrison hit his 21st, a three-run shot in the fourth.

Giants 4, Padres 2

SAN DIEGO — Benito Santiago hit his first major league home run with two outs in the bottom of the tenth inning to give San Diego a victory over San Francisco.

Santiago's solo shot came off reliever Mark Davis, 4-6. Lance McCullers, 9-8, the fourth San Diego pitcher, went two innings to pick up the victory. Left-hander Ed Vosberg, making his first major league start, pitched five innings, allowing just three hits, walking three and striking out four.

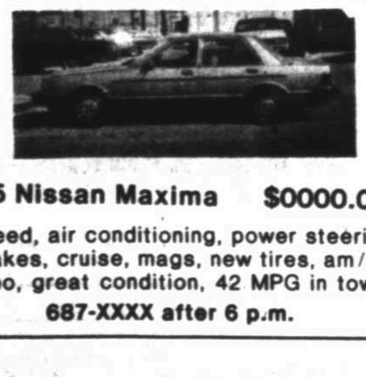

Santiago also had a sacrifice fly and Tony Gwynn hit his 14th homer for the Padres. Jose Uribe had a two-run double and starting pitcher Vida Blue a run-scoring double in a three-run San Francisco fifth. Dan Gladden homered for the Giants in the seventh.

Upton deputy loses job over refusal to apologize

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

MCCAMEY — An Upton County Sheriff deputy has lost his job for refusing to apologize to a group of McCamey Hispanics.

"As far as I'm concerned I did not fire him. He self-destructed job-wise," said Upton County Sheriff Glenn Willeford.

"He self-destructed by saying he would not comply with the terms, which if he was to do, he would have been kept on the payroll," Willeford said.

Deputy Monte Coffee, was suspended Monday after he told Willeford he would not apologize about his behavior on a call to a Catholic Men's Society softball game on August 24.

Coffee says his suspension was politically motivated because Willeford thought he was going to run for sheriff.

"He told some people he was going to fire me because he thought I was going to run.

"I have no animosity toward the people who accused me. They were just used politically," Coffee said.

But Willeford said Coffee could have kept his job if he complied by the terms of the suspension.

"He came in and gave me a reply, stating basically 'I believe the punishment is too severe for the situation involved and I make no apologies for doing my job,'" Willeford said.

The 37-year-old son of the Upton County District Clerk had worked for the sheriff's office for about six months during which, Willeford said he received an unusual amount of complaints about the deputy.

"We've had complaints about him before. People called and said, 'Hey, I wish you'd get your deputy off my case,'" Willeford said.

The majority of the complaints — about three a month — were from Hispanics, he said.

But Coffee said, "He's a liar. He's had a lot of people call in about me, but it wasn't bad, it was complimentary."

On Sept. 1, Willeford suspended Coffee for three days without pay and ordered an apology after he met with a group of Hispanics who said Coffee acted in an intimidating and belligerent manner at a softball game.

Coffee was sent to the game after a dispatcher received an anonymous call that there were a "lot of Mexicans" drinking beer at the ball park, Willeford said.

Coffee said the sheriff's office tried to make a racial issue out of the call.

"It's his department that sent me out on the call that a bunch of Mexicans were drinking. All the racial overtones started with the sheriff's office saying there were drunks and disorderly conduct out there.

"I feel no prejudice. I would have acted the same, no matter what the color of the people out there," Coffee said.

Along with detaining three men who were drinking beer in his car, Coffee acted in a rude manner while talking to a group of spectators with his hand on his gun and occasionally hitting his flashlight against his other hand, said Yolanda Gomez, who made the complaint to the sheriff after the game.

Before he was suspended, Coffee requested a public hearing on Thursday. After the hearing, Willeford stood by his original decision Friday to suspend Coffee for three days without pay and ordered an apology.

DeBakey to address local symposium on heart disease

From Staff Reports

As a former fellow of internationally recognized heart surgeon Dr. Michael DeBakey, Midland surgeon Dr. Roger Bellizaire was highly instrumental in bringing DeBakey's expertise to a symposium on coronary artery disease scheduled Oct. 3, according to organizers.

DeBakey is renowned as a medical inventor and innovator, dedicated teacher and medical statesman.

The cardiology symposium will be held at the Plaza Club, ClayDesta National Bank Building, and is being sponsored by Physicians and Surgeons Hospital. It is open to physicians and medical personnel in West Texas and Southeast New Mexico. The registration deadline is Friday.

"It is our good fortune tha a man of Dr. DeBakey's caliber and notoriety will be in Midland to enrich this symposium," said Belizaire.

DeBakey serves as Chancellor of Baylor College of Medicine. He is the Olga Keith Wiess Distinguished Professor and Chairman of the Cora and Webb Mading Department of Surgery. In addition, he serves as director of the National heart and Blood Vessel Research and Demonstration Center at Houston.

DeBakey's presentation will focus on long-term and short-term results of coronary artery bypass surgery and the current status of artificial heart and cardiac transplantation surgery.

After completing his academic and medical education at Tulane University and his residency at Charity Hospital in New Orleans, DeBakey received further graduate studies at the Universities of Strasbourg and Heidelberg. He returned to Tulane Medical School, serving on the surgical facility from 1937 to 1948. From 1942-46, he was on military leave, serving in the Office of Surgeon General.

During World War II, DeBakey proposed a systematic followup of veterans with certain medical histories and later recommended development of highly specialized centers throughout the country for treating wounded veterans.

His interest in the heart started in medical school. While a student, he devised a pump which later became an essential component of the heart-lung machine that made open-heart surgery possible.

A pioneer in the treatment of cardiovascular diseases, he was the first to perform successful excision and graft replacement of arterial aneurysms and obstructive lesions, to work on development of an artificial heart, to devise a booster pump and to use a heart pump successfully in a patient.

In 1953, he performed the first successful carotid endarterectomy and established the field of surgery for strokes. In 1964, DeBakey and his associates performed the first aorto-coronary artery bypass with autogenous saphenous vein graft.

In 1968, he lead a team of surgeons in performing a historic multiple transplantation procedure in which the heart, kidneys and one lung of a donor were transplanted to four recipients.

His work has been recognized with the establishment of the Micahel E. DeBakey International Cardiovascular Society, and the Michael E. DeBakey Center for Medical Education and Research at Baylor College of Medicine.

He served as chairman of the President's Commission on Heart Disease, Cancer and Stroke; as a member of the National Advisory Heart and Lung Council of the National Institutes of Health; as past president of the International Cardiovascular Society, American Association for Thoracic Surgery and Society for Vascular Surgery, among others. He was elected an honorary member of the Academy of Medical Sciences of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

Among his long list of awards are the Legion of Merit, U.S. Army; Eleanor Roosevelt Humanities Award; and the highest honor a citizen can receive from the President of the United States — the Medal of Freedom with Distinction.

Official says no new shigellosis cases reported

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Wednesday marked the first day in which no new cases of shigellosis were reported to the Midland Health Department (MHD) since the outbreak started, an official said.

"We've had a total of 76 cases in Midland since the outbreak began (Aug. 29)," Don Goodrum, MHD chief sanitarian said this morning.

Health Department officials in Midland and Ector counties confirmed this morning a total of 210 cases in both counties; Ector County has 134 cases.

Though Goodrum said health officials have begun to narrow the source down, he said he did not have much more information than was released at a Monday afternoon press conference.

"Most of those who've gotten it (shigellosis) ate at the Taco Villa in Odessa or Chili's and Texas Burger in Midland," Goodrum said.

He said that officials didn't expect to confirm a contamination correlation between the Taco Villas in Midland or the Texas Burgers in Odessa.

Fred Phillips, regional manager for the Taco Villa restaurants, declined to make a statement concerning the possibility of restaurant business dropping.

"I'm not at liberty to give a statement and I'd like to leave it at that," Phillips said.

Phillips did say the restaurant planned to have some sort of announcement by Sunday.

Management at Chili's and Texas Burger in Midland could not be reached for comment Wednesday night or this morning.

Dr. James Humphreys, a Midland Health Department official, said there appeared to be a stronger correlation between getting infected from Chili's than from Texas Burger in Midland.

"No other restaurants have come up," Humphreys said.

Humphreys said officials were still going through the interviewing process — talking to those who were infected versus those who weren't.

He added that cultures had been sent to the Texas Department of Health in Austin to narrow the type of shigellosis down to one certain sub-type.

Of the four sub-types of shigellosis: group A-shigella dysenteriae, group B-shigella flexneri, group C-shigella boydii and group D-shigella sonnei, Humphreys said they had narrowed it down to group D.

Goodrum said those lab culture confirmations should hopefully be back this afternoon.

School budget cuts last area for legislative negotiators

By JIM WARREN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Senate sees higher education as a way to boost the economy, the House wants it cut along with other state agencies and House-Senate negotiators left again Wednesday without an agreement.

Budget cuts for colleges and universities remain the last major area of dispute among the 10-member conference committee. With the two chambers polarized on higher education spending, both sides foresee no quick break in the impasse.

Sen. Ray Farabee, D-Wichita Falls, said the committee will consider cuts in public education as a possible compromise. He said it would try to avoid cuts that would force local school districts to raise property taxes.

House leaders have said they will not begin talking about new taxes until senators agree to budget reductions. House Speaker Gib Lewis said he is frustrated with the conference committee's inaction.

"The lack of progress that's been made in the conference committee on the appropriations bill; the unwillingness of the Senate to try to make any cuts in state spending," the speaker said, "that bothers me more than anything. There's no effort being made at all to try to make any reductions."

Midlaners organizing 'God and Country Rally'

From Staff Reports

Several dozen Midlanders gathered Wednesday at the Midland County Courthouse to make plans for a "God and Country Rally" that will be held next month at Midland College.

Everett Bender, who is helping to organize the event, introduced several community leaders, including Mayor Carroll Thomas and County Judge Bill Ahders, who voiced their support for the rally, especially at a time when the Permian Basin has been reeling from the economic aftershock of the plunge in oil prices.

"On behalf of this community, I would like to say that we are a country that believes in the Lord, and in hardships like this it is only natural that we turn to Him," Thomas said. "I heartily endorse the God and Country rally."

Bender stressed that the rally would be "non-political," even though the featured speaker, Harald Bredesen, is on a steering committee for television evangelist Pat Robertson, who is expected to seek the Republican nomination for President in 1988, and is on the board of directors of the Christian Broadcasting Network.

"This is not a political rally to endorse anyone," Bender said. "It will also be strictly non-doctrinal...there will be no offering and no admission charge at the door."

Dr. Daniel Vestal, president of the Midland Ministerial Alliance, was emphatic that the rally, also endorsed by County Judge Bill Ahders and City Council member Oralia Corrales, was proper.

"The separation of church and state does not mean the separation of God and country," Vestal said. "Or a separation of religion from reality."

The rally will be held Tuesday, Oct. 7 from 7 to 9 p.m. at the Chaparral Center at Midland College.

Bredeson, who was ordained as a Lutheran minister in 1944, is editor of Christian Education World and has served on the Board of the World Council of Churches. He is also co-founder of the Christian Oilmen's Association.

Midlander indicted in wife's death

From Staff Reports

A Midland man was indicted Wednesday by the Midland County Grand Jury for murder in the death of his wife, who was beaten to death with a garden tool July 3.

Florencio Barron, 22, was indicted for the murder of his wife Martha, 19. The killing allegedly was the result of a violent quarrel between the woman and her husband following a separation, according to Midland County Sheriff Gary Painter, whose office handled the investigation.

Painter said Mrs. Barron was staying with friends in a house just off the Rankin Highway in south Midland County, when her husband allegedly came to the house late in the afternoon of July 3.

Painter said the woman was standing in the front yard of the residence, in front of several witnesses, when the suspect confronted her. The two began arguing and a shoving match followed. During the course of the argument the woman was hit with a metal chair before she was struck in the head with a garden hoe.

Mrs. Barron, who suffered head injuries and a fractured jaw, died at Midland Memorial Hospital shortly after she arrived by ambulance.

Barron turned himself in to authorities at the hospital.

Wedded bliss after honeymoon may just be delusion

Every now and then, I get this obsession with marriage. It passes quickly.

I still suffer from the delusion that wedded bliss lives in splendor beyond the honeymoon.

I should know better. But what has reason to do with "romantic love?" It's for the sensible man and woman when they temporarily lose their senses. But isn't it wondrous while it lasts? Ah, it lives, loves and dies all too soon. But need that be so?

I know not.

I do know, from my experience on the marital battlefield, that marriage is not bliss. Not for very long. I've "gone through" three marriages with three good women. I bailed out when the marriage ship started going down in flames. And after I safely hit ground and gain a bit of my sanity, I began to slip from the bonds of sanity and wonder: "Maybe next time, it will be different." Well, all of my three previous times with wives were different. I can tell you that. Further, I can testify that the third go-round of marriage is not charmed. It wasn't for me. If the charm was there, I certainly missed it.

Sages have forewarned us of marriage. The sardonic H.L. Mencken wrote: "A man may be a fool and not know it, but not if he is married."

Samuel Johnson, I am told, had a few words to say to the likes of me: "A second marriage is a triumph of hope over experience." A third marriage, suggested Jack Edwards, may be a triumph of stupidity over reason. "Never give up," said Winston Churchill, who probably wasn't talking about serial marriages.

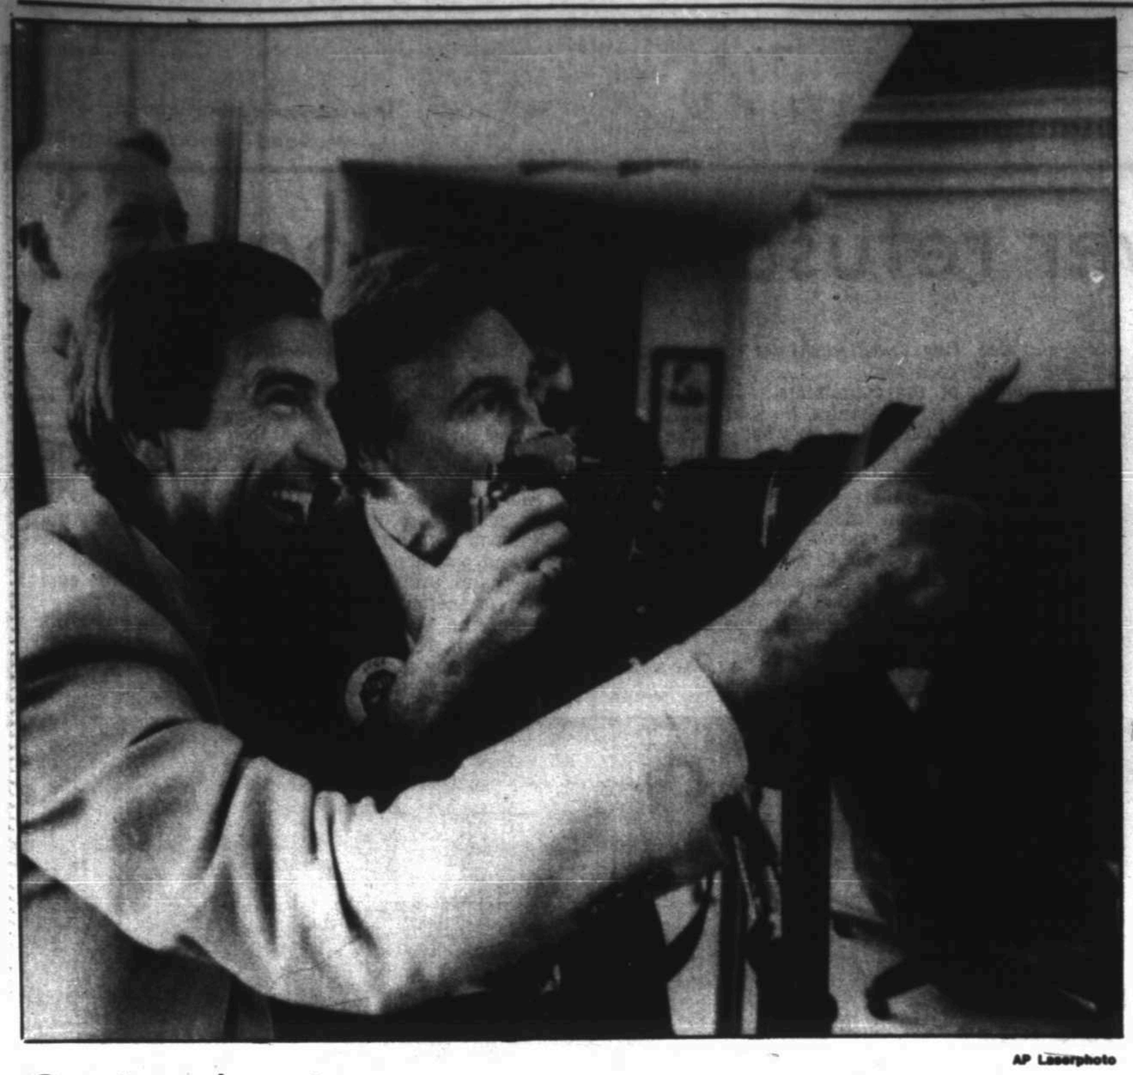

There is merit to marriage. Behold all of the glorious wedding ceremonies and the grand expectations of the brides and bridegrooms. Muse over all of the children in the world. Consider yourself: the blessing of the union of man and woman.

Actually, I'm not serious about marriage. My prospects went out with the Gold Rush of '49. And I am not particularly encouraged by the state of marriage as I've experienced it and as it appears to be.

How many happy couples do you know?

Now, admittedly, I have absolutely delighted in the joy of comfortable marriages and "relationships" — whatever those states of flux are. And I am heartened by the sincere commitments honored by couples and by the trust and love which brings people together in fellowship. That goes for couples and groups. And I truly revel in the bonds of trusting friendships and in the reverence for a Higher Power. That, my friends, is marvelous. And, I think, perhaps a trusting friendship just might be good grounds for a lasting union blessed by God.

Area law enforcer graduates from FBI's National Academy

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Rohrer

Eddie Rohrer, coordinator of the Permian Basin Regional Law Enforcement Academy in Midland, recently graduated from the Federal Bureau of Investigation's National Academy.

"It's probably the most advanced, sophisticated training academy in the nation — maybe in the world," said the 39-year-old Rohrer, who has been coordinator of the police academy here since 1983. "The National Academy is designed for United States peace officers, but it goes beyond that."

Rohrer was in the National Academy's 146th Session, an 11-week intensified program at Quantico, Va. In the session were 200 peace officers, including six women, from 48 states and seven foreign countries. Five were from Texas. Their curriculum included the Code of Criminal Procedures, the penal code, constitutional law, basic patrol procedures, firearms training, investigative techniques, defense tactics, accident investigations, forensic science and and traffic laws.

The "top-of-the-line, sophisticated" training afforded at the FBI National Academy "gives me an idea of how to better the (police) academy and enhance law-enforcement agencies in the Permian Basin," Rohrer said.

"Better training is going to have a favorable effect on law enforcement in the Permian Basin," Rohrer said.

The academy here each year trains between 45 and 60 law-enforcement officers in three 13-week sessions. The academy serves a 17-county area.

Ron Butler, special agent in charge of the Midland FBI office, said Rohrer's training in the FBI National Academy, would "enhance" his law-enforcement mission.

"We would hope that, based upon the training he received at the academy, that this would further enhance the already-significant effort of Mr. Rohrer in regard to his responsibilities at the (Permian Basin Regional Law Enforcement) Academy," Butler said.

At the FBI National Academy graduation ceremonies, FBI Director William H. Webster commended the graduates of the 146th Session for their "commitment to excellence" and the advancement of their careers.

The FBI National Academy was established in July 1935 as a police-training school and has evolved from a pilot class of 23 police officers to the current 11-week program offered quarterly to 200 selected law-enforcement officers. Since its inception, the National Academy has graduated more than 20,000 officers, including 802 officers from 73 countries. Of those, almost 14,000 still are active in law enforcement.

The FBI National Academy offers 40 academic courses accredited by the University of Virginia in the disciplines of management science and police administration, law, physical training, education and communication arts and the behavioral and forensic sciences.

Prior to becoming coordinator of the Permian Basin Regional Law Enforcement Academy, Rohrer was a trooper for the Texas Department of Public Safety in San Antonio from 1970 to 1975 and was a patrol officer for the San Antonio Police Department from 1975 to 1983. He holds the bachelor's degree in criminal justice from Southwest Texas State University in San Marcos.

Proposed constitutional amendment OK'd

By JIM WARREN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — A proposed constitutional amendent to change the state's Bill of Rights and take away some power from the Texas Supreme Court cleared a Senate committee Wednesday.

Sen. Grant Jones, D-Temple and sponsor of the constitutional amendment, said the change in the Bill of Rights is the first step for tort reform, predicted to be a hot topic when the Legislature convenes in January for its regular session.

Advocates of tort reform — changing laws governing civil damage suits — say the Supreme Court has misinterpreted the Constitution's "open courts" provision and has opened the door to more lawsuits and excessive court judgments.

Tort reformers also say the explosion in lawsuits has led to higher liability insurance premiums — or sometimes no insurance at all — especially for doctors, engineers, cities and schools. Opponents, mostly trial lawyers and consumer advocates, say tort reform will make it harder for injured people to sue and is really an effort by insurance companies and big business to make more money.

Jones said the current Supreme Court would strike down most tort reform measures under the open courts provision in the Bill of Rights.

"Without some clarification of the Legislature's power to define remedies and an orderly manner of pursuing those remedies," Jones said, "we are at the mercy of a small group of men (Supreme Court justices) who seem bent on legislating their own ideas of tort and damage suit law."

Sen. Kent Caperton, D-Bryan, said lawmakers don't have to water down the state's Bill of Rights to enact tort reform, which he opposes. Tort reform will not make liability insurance cheaper or more available, said Caperton, a trial lawyer.

But Jones said the amendment is more than a tool to enact tort reform. "In recent years," he said, "the state Supreme Court has utilized the so-called "open courts" provision of the Constitution to strike down legislative enactments with which they disagreed philosophically."

Rep. Mike Toomey, who is co-chairman, along with Jones, of a special committee looking into tort reform, said he will sponsor the amendment in the House if it clears the Senate.

BUDGET

Senators, however, said higher education is the wrong place to make substantial cuts.

"It's with great reluctance that I've voted for (higher education) cuts to this point," said Sen. John Montford, D-Lubbock. "I think it's a step backwards."

"I realize dollars alone don't make a fine institution," said Sen. Grant Jones, D-Temple and head of the Senate negotiating team. "But you can't have a first-rate institution without making a substantial investment."

Jones' counterpart in the House, Rep. Jim Rudd, D-Brownfield, said his plan would force universities to use money from their local funds — accounts the Legislature cannot control — and the real cuts would not be deep.

"There's a great deal of money out there," Rudd argued. "If you (senators), in your infinite wisdom, choose not to use that money for higher education, so be it." Lawmakers should wait until January, when the Select Committee on Higher Education recommends reforms in colleges, to debate university funding, Rudd said.

The House offered a plan Tuesday calling for $255.6 million in higher education cuts, but senators refused to go along. Jones said he doubts if he could sell his fellow senators on deep reductions in higher education.

Rep. Mike Toomey, R-Houston, retorted that he didn't know if the House would agree to smaller cuts. But, Jones told him, "I've also been approached by some of your colleagues who've said, 'For God's sake, please save us.'"

Rudd responded: "I've been approached by several senators who have told me, 'Keep on trucking.'"

DA says indictment stems from criticism of Lucas case

STATE

WACO (AP) — McLennan County District Attorney Vic Feazell, who built his reputation on debunking confessions by self-professed mass murderer Henry Lee Lucas, says bribery charges filed against him are retaliation by those he criticized.

Feazell, 35, was arrested at the McLennan County Courthouse Wednesday on a 12-count federal indictment alleging he told certain defense attorneys to increase their legal fees and pass on a portion of the money to him in exchange for favorable settlement of their criminal cases.

But Feazell, who faces re-election in November, said he is innocent and that the chargese sprang from the Department of Public Safety for his criticism of the Texas Rangers work in investigating the series of killings claimed by Lucas.

"This is not the first time in history that a tough prosecutor who wants to do what's right has been retaliated against," he said.

"I believe I'm going to be vindicated on this thing. I think most people are going to see through it."

Bond was set at $100,000 and Feazell was released on personal recognizance after an appearance before U.S. District Judge Walter S. Smith Jr. He returned to his office, and said he has no plans to resign his position.

A hearing is scheduled Sept. 26, when Feazell is expected to enter his plea.

Feazell, a Democrat, was elected to the district attorney's post in 1982.

In July 1985, Feazell said he feared he might be murdered or wrongly indicted because he had criticized law enforcement agencies working on cases involving Lucas.

At the time, a federal grand jury was meeting in Austin to investigate allegations of corruption in Feazell's office.

Feazell termed the investigation a "witch hunt" prompted by the DPS after Feazell criticized a Rangers task force's handling of the Lucas cases.

A McLennan County grand jury investigated Lucas' confessions in 1985 and declined to indict Lucas in any of three Waco-area slayings to which he had confessed.

Lucas, who once claimed responsibility for hundreds of slayings nationwide, later recanted, saying he was trying to discredit law officers.

Col. Jim Adams, DPS director, has denied that the investigation or charges against Feazell were politically motivated.

The sealed indictment was returned by a federal grand jury in Austin after a lengthy investigation by the FBI, Internal Revenue Service and the DPS, officials said.

The indictment, which includes two racketeering counts and 10 counts of mail fraud, accuses Feazell of accepting 14 bribes ranging from $200 to $4,500 from May 29, 1984, to April 10, 1985.

No attorneys were named in the indictment. Affidavits supporting the indictment remain sealed.

But 21 names believed to be defendants or related to defendants handled by Feazell's office are listed.

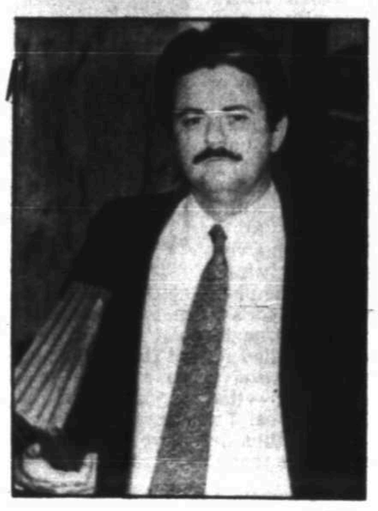

The indictment also accuses Feazell of filing false sworn statements of campaign contributions and expenses, and false reports about case dispositions to law enforcement agencies.

If convicted on all counts, Feazell faces up to 90 years in prison and $560,000 in fines.

U.S. Attorney Helen Eversberg said law enforcement officials searched Feazell's office following the arrest.

"We attempted to make it as unobstrusive as possible so they can continue to conduct their business," she said.

Feazell's wife, Bernie, said agents contacted her at a coffee house about an hour after her husband's arrest and began searching the couple's house.

"This is not the first time in history that a tough prosecutor who wants to do what's right has been retaliated against. I believe I'm going to be vindicated on this thing. I think most people are going to see through it."
— Vic Feazell, McLennan County DA

The indictment, which includes two racketeering counts and 10 counts of mail fraud, accuses Feazell of accepting 14 bribes ranging from $200 to $4,500 from May 29, 1984, to April 10, 1985.

Deported Iranian's wife: Daughter will die if they too deported

DALLAS (AP) — A woman whose husband has been deported to Iran says her 2-year-old daughter will die without medical treatment available in the United States if they are also forced to leave the country.

The woman's husband, Mohammad Reza Nia Youssefi, an Iranian citizen who owned an ice cream business in suburban Arlington, was deported last week.

But immigration officials do not know the whereabouts of Fahimeh Assad Amraji and her two children, said Ron Chandler, regional director of the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service in Dallas.

"We think that they're still in town here," Chandler said Wednesday. "We were hopeful of bringing this to an equitable conclusion without having to go (to arrests)."

The woman told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram that Youssefi's father worked for the late Shah of Iran and was jailed after the Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini assumed power. She said he was freed after friends paid for his release.

She and her husband will be killed or jailed if they return to Iran, she said.

In the United States on a student visa, Youssefi and his family were scheduled to leave the United States on Sept. 10 after they were ordered deported.

Youssefi, who came to the United States as a student, applied for political asylum in 1980 when the agency first issued deportation orders. The agency wanted him deported because he transferred schools without checking with the agency and then quit school — a violation of his student visa, Chandler said.

Airline officials would not allow 2-year-old Salieh Assad Amraji to board because she is an American citizen and did not have proper documents to enter France.

Only French airlines are allowed to travel to Iran.

Immigration authorities ordered Youssefi and his wife to sign the documents so the child would have the needed traveling pass, but they refused, Chandler said.

In their appeal against deportation, Youssefi's attorneys said the child needs to remain in the United States for medical treatment. The girl suffers from an allergic condition that causes blood clots if she eats certain types of food. Without proper care and medication she could die, her mother says.

Youssefi's attorneys filed an injunction to delay deportation, but a federal judge in Dallas denied the stay Friday, clearing the way for Youssefi's deportation the same day. An appeal before the Board of Immigration in Washington D.C., also was denied Friday.

Chandler said immigration officials are trying to contact the family's attorney on the status of the wife and children. He said an arrest had not yet been ordered, but eventually will be if she does not sign the documents for her American-born daughter.

Youseffi was held in Euless City Jail until his deportation to Paris. His wife remained free to take care of the two children.

As of Wednesday afternoon, immigration officials did not have the travel documents ready and were unsure of his wife's whereabouts.

A spokesman for the U.S. State Department said Youssefi's father was not included on a list of prominent people in Iran during the time of the revolution. But, the spokesman said, that does not mean he did not work for the shah or wasn't a supporter.

Various beef used in chopped meat

By SONJA HEINZE

Q. From what kind of beef is chopped meat made?

A. Many of us, while poring over the various packages of chopped meat at the supermarket, packages which may be labeled "sirloin," "chuck," "regular," "premium" or whatever, tend to visualize the butcher in the back room placing a sirloin steak or chuck roast into the grinder. But generally, ground beef is made from the less tender and less popular cuts of beef.

In a booklet prepared by the Department of Agriculture, it states that because ground beef is so popular, many supermarkets and butchers cannot get enough meat from a carcass of beef after they have removed the steaks, roasts and other cuts to fill the demand. So they buy less tender meats or less popular wholesale cuts specifically for grinding into chopped meat.

Some stores may buy imported frozen boneless beef and grind it after adding trimmings from their meat cuttings. Most of your steaks, roasts and chops come from younger steers or heifers, while ground meat comes from older animals. Since the meat of older animals is tougher, fat is added in varying degrees. The more fat added, the cheaper the chopped meat.

There's nothing wrong with this process. It's a good way to use up all the beef. But if you want actual chopped sirloin, buy a sirloin steak and grind it at home.

Q. Do the following restaurants fry their food in beef tallow: Kentucky Fried Chicken, Long John Silver's and Arthur Treacher's Fish & Chips? Also, what does the Price Chopper Supermarkets deep fry their doughnuts in? Millie Jones, Scranton, Pa.

A. Kentucky Fried Chicken meat products and fries are cooked in 100 percent vegetable oil. No animal fats are used.

Long John Silver's uses 100 percent partially hydrogenated soybean oil in preparing all their fried foods.

Arthur Treacher's Fish & Chips cooks its foods in 100 percent peanut oil.

Price Chopper doughnuts are fried in hydrogenated soybean oil.

Q. I was told that there is a delicious way to cook ham with Coke. I understand it's a Southern recipe. Would you know about this? Susan Cower, Palo Alto, Calif.

A. Southern cookbooks that I referred to failed to unearth the recipe you seek. The Coca Cola Co. apparently doesn't have it either. In its place they sent recipes for many other "cooking with Coke" possibilities, including meat loaf, pot roast, barbecued chicken, French onion soup and sauerbraten, to name a few.

Perhaps a reader can supply us with this recipe. In the meantime, would you settle for Coke's Barbecue Sauce? Use it on frankfurters or burgers:

Coke's Barbecue Sauce
2 medium onions
3/4 cup Coke
3/4 cup catsup
2 tablespoons vinegar
2 tablespoons Worcestershire sauce
1/2 teaspoon chili powder
1/2 teaspoon salt

Shred or blender-chop onions. Combine all ingredients. Bring to a boil; cover pan; reduce heat and simmer about 45 minutes until sauce is very thick. Stir occasionally.

Makes about 2 cups.

You can call the Coca-Cola Co. toll-free, 1-800-GET COKE, and ask them to send you their recipes.

DEAR ABBY

Closed car can mean death

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Recently a mailman approached my car, concerned for my infant son who had been left alone in his car seat. I had parked my car in a shaded spot and was within six feet of it, maintaining visual contact while I was on the phone getting directions to my doctor's office. I saw this mailman starting to open my car door when I yelled at him! That's when he told me never to leave a child in a closed car — that he could die in this Arizona heat. I was almost hysterical anyway, then defensive to get a lecture like that! Me — an educated person.

Last week I heard in a newscast that two children had died after being left in a closed car for what their mother said was "only a few minutes." The newscaster went on to say that in a hot climate, the temperature can rise to 200 degrees within minutes and a child — or a pet — can be dead within five minutes.

Thank God and that mailman I didn't have to learn the hard way. Abby, warn other readers, but please don't use my name. I'm a school teacher and people might think I am irresponsible. I'm not. I was only ignorant. — ARIZONA READER

DEAR READER: I have warned my readers about this danger several times, but I'll repeat it for those who may have missed it: On a hot summer day, the inside of a car heats very quickly. On an 85-degree day, for example, the temperature inside your car — with the windows slightly open — will reach 102 within 10 minutes. In 30 minutes, it will go up to 120 degrees. On warmer days, it will go even higher! A child can easily be overcome by heat exhaustion in such conditions. So please do not leave a child or a pet in a closed car — ever, for even a few minutes. Should you be detained for any reason, those "few minutes" could run into 10 or 20 minutes, and the delay could be tragic!

DEAR ABBY: Will you please add this to your collection of letters complaining about the misuse of the English language? This is not a grammatical error, it's a moral one. I would like to begin a campaign against the use of the expression "killing two birds with one stone."

Abby, why would anybody want to kill even one bird with a stone? I can hear the retort: "But it's only a figure of speech." That's not true. I'm a great believer in the theory that language reflects our values, so if we nonchalantly talk about killing two birds, how far are we from actually doing it? Couldn't we just say, "Do two things at the same time"? It means the same thing.

As a bird lover, I find that expression very offensive. Thanks for providing a forum for us complainers. — A BLEEDING HEART LIBERAL VEGETARIAN

DEAR VEGETARIAN: Although I'm guilty of using that expression, I would never kill a bird. But now that you've called my attention to its offensiveness, you'll never hear a peep out of me.

DEAR ABBY: Here's a new one. Is it possible for a woman who is past childbearing age to have a fertile egg implanted in her womb and be able to nourish and deliver a normal, healthy baby?

Doesn't that sound exciting for all the grandmothers like me with eight children and 10 grandchildren? Wow! — HOPING IN OTTAWA

DEAR HOPING: Alas, it's not possible, so enjoy your grandchildren, and leave the childbearing to your children. It's their turn to propagate.

(For Abby's booklet, "How to Have a Lovely Wedding," send a check or money order for $2.50 and a long, stamped (39 cents), self-addressed envelope to: Dear Abby, Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

Magazine promises tips for young married women

By LINDA ANDERSON

Anderson

Since school is back in session, it seemed only appropriate to devote a column to the fine art of reading:

■ A new magazine called "Today's Marriage" will go on sale Oct. 1. Published by Dell Magazine Group, this quarterly is supposed to "address the special needs and issues that confront today's young married women," according to information from the company (though I can't help but wonder about the special needs and issues that confront today's young married men!)

No information was given on the expected size or cost of the issues, but some of the promised articles were on marital fidelity, having babies and the proper way to argue. Sounds just like Redbook or McCalls to me.

■ For those interested in exploring methods of controlling the cost of health care, the National Consumers League is offering a publication called "A Consumer Guide to Health Maintenance Organizations."

A health maintenance organization — conveniently called HMO — is defined in the booklet as "an organization that offers a wide range of medical services to its members for a prepaid fee ... generally paid in full or in part by employers (which) covers medical services, hospitalization and surgery, home health care, outpatient surgery and some nursing home services.

"Preventive care services such as routine examinations and immunizations are also a major element of HMO programs."

For a copy of the publication send $4 to the National Consumers League, 815 15th Street, N.W., Suite 516, Washington D.C. 20005.

■ This can only be called American ingenuity. According to a story filed by United Press International, a new magazine — the first issue was supposed to have gone to press Aug. 25 — has been designed for the sole purpose of reading in the bathroom called — what else? — the Bathroom Journal. The publication "will have a mix of stories dealing the health and fitness, money, sports and other general-interest topics" and will also include "fiction, humor, games and horoscopes" according to publisher Michael S. Cohen, the article said.

The magazine is even supposed to come with its own personal wall rack, and its signature color is supposed to be pink — so it won't look out of place or something equally off-the-wall.

I don't know if the magazine will be sold in our area, but I certainly hope so. I want a copy, just as a collectors' item.

Truck driver awarded

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich. (AP) — A Michigan truck driver, who has driven 2.18 million miles without an accident, has been named Ryder Truck Rental's "North American Driver of the Year."

George B. Drayton, 55, was picked from more than 80,000 truck drivers.

Truck drivers save on fuel costs

MIAMI (AP) — More than 3,000 truck drivers saved their employers nearly $1 million in fuel costs last year by taking part in a fuel conservation program.

Called "Share the Savings," the program gives drivers a chance to share in 60 percent of the saved money. It rewards drivers with travel packages, sporting goods and leisure and home entertainment items.

Some 600 U.S. companies with truck fleets participate in the program run by Ryder Truck Rental.

'Free' gifts lure potential costumers

By JOHN K. SCHMIDT

There doesn't seem to be any end in sight to the number of companies hawking ad specialty products under the "free" gift incentive to entice prospective purchasers. One of the latest is from a company out of Las Vegas, Nev.

The company's "award notice" was sent to a local medical group. We were intrigued by the supposed value of the free gifts, so when we received a copy of the award notice, we called the company to see how we could claim the free gift.

Well, as it turns out we didn't win the 1986 Ford Taurus, the 1986 Searay Seville boat with trailer, the MX Ultra Lite plane with 377 Rotax engine or the Kawasaki 300 jet ski.

We were told that unfortunately somebody else had already won those prizes, but we did win the fabulous vacation of our choice to Hawaii, Australia, England or Tahiti — and it was absolutely free!

After further discussion the company admitted it was almost free. More discussion. Well, maybe not almost free, more like a few strings attached. We have to buy some pen and pencil sets — but they normally only sold in the finest department stores, of course. Oh, of course.

How much? Only $440 — but they are beautifully gift wrapped.

What about the free trip to those exotic locations? Seems we get one airline ticket. The second one (we have to have two) has to be bought through Competitive Edge ... at a discount, of course.

Mileage impacts new car buying

LAKE BUENA VISTA, Fla. (UPI) — Did the miles-per-gallon rating influence your decision when you bought your last car?

Even though gasoline prices have plummeted, Americans still consider gas mileage when purchasing a new car, according to the latest finding of the Epcot Poll.

When more than 7,000 adult visitors to Walt Disney World were surveyed, 46 percent of the respondents — and 50 percent of respondents between the ages of 18 to 34 — replied that the miles-per-gallon rating was a factor in their choice of car.

Thirty-eight percent replied that the miles-per-gallon rating did not effect their selection.

As stated in a previous Epcot Poll, the increased tendency on the part of consumers to buy smaller cars may have had an effect on the responses. Younger respondents — the age group between 18 and 34 — were inclined to place more importance on miles-per-gallon ratings than their elders.

Co-signing for credit can be dangerous financial practice

By JAY GOLDINGER
Copley News Service

It's a drama played out all across America every day and it can cost you a bundle or ruin your credit record if you don't know the rules.

A good friend needs a car, but he has a few credit blemishes. Will you co-sign for him? An engaged couple want to start shopping before their wedding, but one partner doesn't qualify for an American Express card. "Would you please co-sign my application, Sweetheart, so I can shop for our home?" Your 18-year-old son wants a motorcycle, but doesn't have established credit. "Mom, Dad, pleeease co-sign for me, and I'll make the payments."

Just make sure you know the financial facts of life before you co-sign on the dotted line. Not that many people do.

"A potential co-signer is a Siamese twin on the deal for the duration of the loan," says John Meyers, a vice president with Centerre Bank of Kansas City, Mo. "They're liable for the obligation and, while most people know it, they think it will never come back to haunt them. It's like the accident that always happens to the other guy."

Myers says co-signing often is needed to shore up a buyer's weak credit history, strengthen a small down payment or establish credit for the first-time borrower. But, too often the co-signer puts his or her credit on the line out of guilt, friendship, love or some other emotion and "hopes" the buyer can and will make the payments. "Unfortunately," says Myers, "when the loan turns bad, a certain number of buyers walk away from it."

MANY CO-SIGNING situations involve boyfriends guaranteeing loans for girlfriends and in-laws signing for young couples, says Diane Arthur, a finance manager for Ron Price Motors in South San Francisco. "People don't realize the dangers of co-signing," she says. "If the car is uninsured and in an accident, you're liable."

As a result, Ron Price Motors has a co-signers statement in capital letters on every car loan application and co-signers must sign their name to prove they've read and understand it. The language is perfectly clear:

"Notice to co-signer: You are being asked to guarantee this debt. Think carefully before you do. Make sure you can pay if you have to and that you want to accept this responsibility. You many have to pay up to the full amount of the debt. You may also have to pay collection fees and late fees, which increase that amount. The creditor can collect this debt from you without first having to collect from the borrower. The creditor can use the same collection methods with you as he would with the borrowers, such as suing you or garnishing wages. If this debt is ever in default, that fact might become part of your credit record."

Both sellers and lenders are cracking down on co-signers. "Most lenders require a co-signer to be a blood relative," says Tom Martin, sales and business manager for Van Ness Oldsmobile/GMC in San Francisco. "The age of our average buyer is 45 and, if we don't think the (credit) is going to fly, we are not interested in talking to him."

WHAT'S MORE, co-signing a loan may extend a friend's credit, but it limits yours, warns Chuck Teeter, a widely respected finance management consultant in Northern California. "The full balance (of the borrower's loan or debt) shows on your TRW (credit data) report and lenders look on that as being your sole obligation in case something happens to the person you're buying for. Remember, by law, you (the co-signer) must be notified of late payments, so make sure the bank has your correct address."

In fact, lenders don't have to wait until the buyer defaults before they can contact the co-signer, says Dole Thomas, vice president of Bankcard Management for Chase Lincoln First Bank of Rochester. "People don't understand that we can look to either person for payment at any time."

Thomas, who ran the bank's collection department for five years, says co-signing is not "inherently bad or an absolute disaster." About 90 percent of co-signed loans work out, but it's a major risk, and the co-signer can't control the circumstances.

"Two guys are friends in a factory and one needs the car to get to work," hypothesizes Thomas. "The other guy co-signs and the first guy loses his job. The co-signer hasn't factored that into his own bills and he can't make the payments. If you co-sign, consider it your debt that you may someday have to pay."

Other "changes in situations" that can hurt a co-signer: the borrower gets sick, works part time or suddenly quits work for any reason. "Be ready to pay."

The "messiest" situation of all is when two lovers need credit and one doesn't have a financial history, explains Thomas. "Susie needs a new car and 'this will be our car when we get married.' Freddie co-signs. Suddenly, the marriage doesn't happen and the car is in Susie's name and Freddie is on the hook."

One solution for potential co-signers: do a credit check and ask for a financial statement on anyone who's asking you to put your credit on their dotted line — even if it's a blood relative.

Restyling stretches clothes budget

By MARIAN FARR

For many Texas families, the economic downturn means less money. With the beginning of a new school year, this can mean outfitting your children for school will be more difficult.

However, there are several alternatives for stretching the family's back-to-school clothes budget.

Start by going through the children's clothes to see what is worn out, what is outgrown and what can be "restyled."

A clothing exchange with relatives, friends and neighbors can help everyone get more wear out of outgrown — but not outworn — children's clothing. Garage sales and resale shops are also a source of inexpensive clothing in good condition.

If you have the time and sewing skills, try altering some dresses, jumpers and other items.

Look for deep hems in skirts, pants and sleeves that can be lengthened. Decorative stitching, trim or a fabric insert will hide marks from the old hem. Tucks in bodices, skirts, pant legs and sleeves may also be released to add length.

When you shop for school garments, look for durable clothing that can "grow" with the child throughout the school year. Discount and outlet stores carry less-expensive clothing, but it may also be less durable.

Before buying, inspect clothes for wide seams that won't ravel or pull out, and on knits, narrow seams that are stitched and overcast. Double-stitched seams or tape inserted in seams that receive the most stress, such as armhole seams, is another sign of durability.

If the style, fabric, fit and price are right, you can always add needed reinforcements on your home sewing machine to make less durable clothing last longer. When you shop for new clothing, keep in mind the specific features that will allow for the child's growth. Some of these features include deep hems, adjustable straps and waistbands, raglan sleeves and stretchy fabrics.

Two-piece clothes usually provide more room for growth than one-piece items, and dresses without a definite waistline can be worn longer than those with fitted waists.

In general, you'll do best to spend the most money on those clothes that are worn most often, receive the hardest wear and are laundered frequently.

Household appliances seem smarter

Associated Press

Thanks to digital controls, major appliances have never been smarter.

But you don't have to be a computer genius to use them, says Better Homes and Gardens magazine.

Digital appliances use a microcomputer to store and sort all kinds of information. Push a touch pad and your new washer-dryer, microwave oven or dishwasher will perform one task or many tasks in sequence. The computer remembers what to do when, making possible jobs you could never accomplish with a traditional knob-and-dial machine.

Manufacturers want operation to be as simple as using a Touch-Tone phone, but you should ask for a complete demonstration in the store before you buy.

Major appliances with standard controls still dominate the market, and digital-equipped machines cost from $100 to $200 more than a comparable standard model. So why are more and more people buying digital?

■ Electronic controls provide you with more information about your appliance. For example, if the spray arm on your dishwasher becomes blocked, the machine's control panel will flash the information so you can take care of it.

■ The new appliances give you the best possible performance for the least energy. Digital wizardry can delay your clothes washer's start time for you until a later time of day when energy costs may be lower.

■ A single touch can start a sequence of operations. Preset cycles even prevent inexperienced users from putting together cycles or options that might produce the wrong results.

■ Built-in trobleshooting systems will tell you when something is wrong, and what you can do about it. If you do have to call out for service, the internal diagnosis will speed the actual repair.

■ The smooth control panels are easier to clean and keep clean than knobs or switches on standard models.

Refrigerators-freezers: The control panel signals when the doors are left open and when the interior temperature is too warm; it even lets you know when the power has been off too long. Some models also adjust internal temperature when the room temperature is cooler or warmer than usual.

Dishwashers: The control panel will tell you which cycle the washer is in, how many minutes are left in the cycle, and when the cycle is complete. Some models let you program in a "handle with care" mode for your finest china and crystal or a heavy-duty cleaning command to handle extra-dirty pots and pans.

Conventional ovens: Before electronics, your oven temperature could vary by as much as 25 degrees, a considerable variation. Now, fingertip controls allow you to expect accuracy within five degrees — a great asset when you're baking cookies or cakes. Also available are delayed start and stop features, programmed cleaning, and continuous-cleaning functions.

Washers: The biggest electronic advantage is an energy-saving one — washer controls that can be programmed for maximum energy conservation. Preprogrammed cycles adjust washer agitation rates and spin speeds for all types of fabrics and loads. The controls will even prevent you from making an error. For example, if you ask for a warm-water rinse for a load of permanent press clothing, the microcomputer control will respond with a cold-water rinse. It "knows" that cold works best for a permanent press cycle to prevent excessive wrinkling.

Dollar depressed

LONDON (AP) — The dollar declined against all major currencies in early European trading today. Gold rose by about $2 an ounce in Europe.

Dealers in Frankfurt said the dollar was depressed partly by reported remarks by U.S. Treasury Secretary James Baker that the American currency will have to fall further unless Japan and West Germany cut interest rates.

Earlier, heads of the West German and Japanese central banks had said they did not intend changing monetary policies, apparently ruling out an interest rate cut.

In Tokyo, where trading ends before Europe's business day begins, the dollar fell to a closing 154.25 yen from Wednesday's 155.95. Later, in London, it was quoted at 154.35 yen.

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $415.50 a troy ounce, compared with late Wednesday's $413.50 and held the rise in later trading. At midmorning, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $415.70.

In Zurich, the bid price was $415.65, up from $413.50 late Wednesday.

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold rose $4.46 to close at a bid $413.89.

Silver was quoted in London today at a bid price of $5.76 a troy ounce, up from late Wednesday's $5.72.

Stocks mixed

NEW YORK — Caution prevailed on Wall Street again Wednesday, as stock prices were mixed for the third straight session.

But there was a slight change over the previous two days, as investors bought secondary issues, while selling blue chips. On Monday and Tuesday, the opposite happened, causing the blue-chip Dow Jones industrial average to move up slightly, while the bulk of the market retreated.

Wednesday, it was the Dow that fell, by 9.14 points, to 1,769.40. Despite the drop, market experts say there is no clear trend emerging on Wall Street, where stock prices were battered last week by a combination of internal market factors and concern about interest rates.

While the Dow was going down Wednesday, other market indicators were climbing, although modestly. The New York Stock Exchange composite index gained 0.24 point, to 133.45, the average price on the Big Board rose 7 cents and advancing issues led losers, 982 to 627.

The American Stock Exchange index rose 1.78, to 257.50, while in over-the-counter trading the NASDAQ index gained 3.23 points, to 346.90. But the Standard & Poor's 500 index lost 0.04, to 231.68.

Trading volume rose slightly Wednesday, to 141 million shares from Tuesday's 131.2 million. All three days this week, however, were far below the unprecendented activity of last week.

Economy grows at miniscule 0.6 percent

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. economy grew at a minuscule annual rate of 0.6 percent from April through June, the worst performance since the end of the last recession nearly four years ago, the government said today.

The Commerce Department's latest, but unchanged, overall calculation of the gross national product, the total output of goods and services, emphasized how weak economic performance has been this year.

The news on inflation, however, continued to be superb. A measure of prices tied to the GNP advanced at a 1.8 percent annual rate, the slowest increase in almost two decades.

The 1.8 percent annual rate of increase in the GNP deflator, a price index which measures a changing selection of goods, was the best performance since the spring of 1967 and was credited to the dramatic plunge in energy prices this year. This price index rose at a rate of 3.7 percent for all of 1985.

Today's estimate of GNP growth for the spring quarter was unchanged from a month ago.

Many economists had expected the 0.6 percent growth rate would be revised upward to at least 1 percent, reflecting some improvement in trade and less of a deterioration in business inventories.

The fact that the report was unchanged emphasized how close to a standstill the economy was in the second quarter. The weakness has led a few economists to predict an impending recession.

But most analysts believe growth will strengthen somewhat in the second half of the year, keeping the current 45-month-old recovery alive.

The Reagan administration is predicting a dramatic rebound to growth at over a 4 percent annual rate, basing this hope on a belief that the country's disastrous trade deficit will finally begin to show improvement.

Most private economists contend this estimate is far too optimistic, with many of them forecasting growth of around 2.5 percent in the second half of the year.

This would be a significant rebound from second quarter growth, but essentially the same sluggish rate the country has endured since mid-1984.

The Commerce Department two months ago first estimated GNP growth of 1.1 percent in the April-June quarter, lowering that to 0.6 percent last month. It is a rare occurrence when new data does not force a revision in the overall GNP figure. Government economists said the last unchanged GNP report they could find was in the third quarter of 1978.

U.S. imports of crude hit six year high

NEW YORK (AP) — U.S. imports of crude oil and refined products hit the highest level in six years last month because of plunging prices, increased demand and shrinking domestic production, an industry group reports.

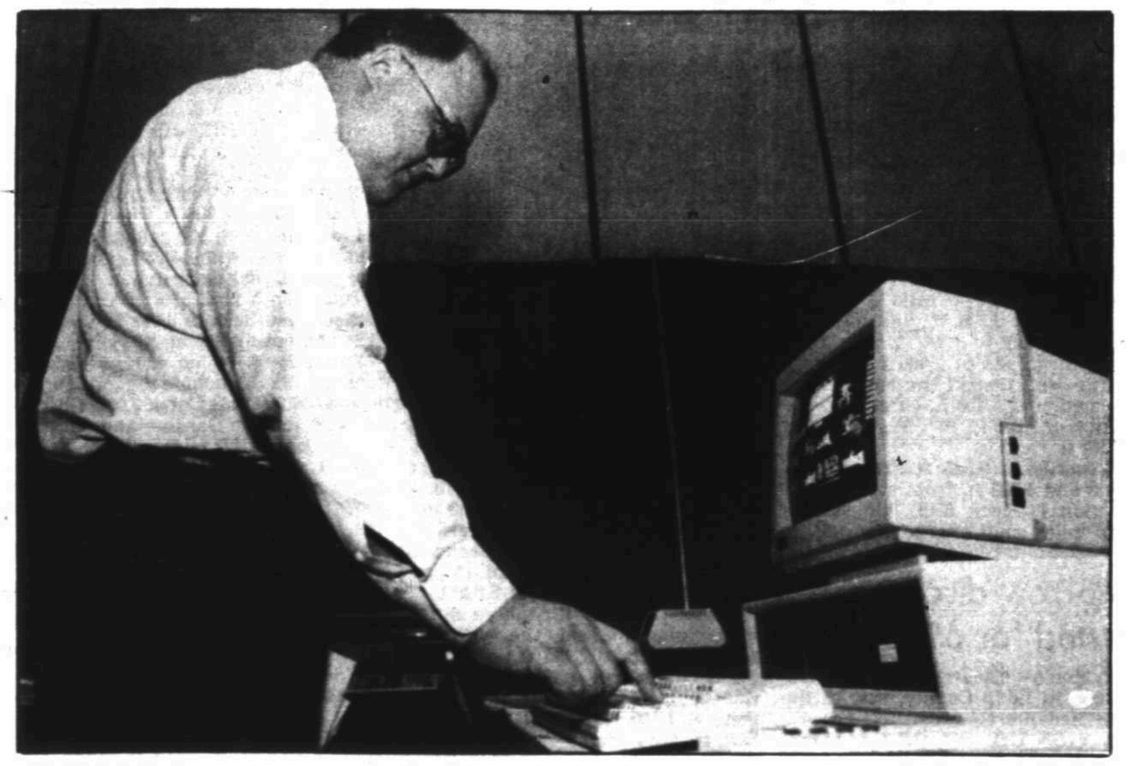

Last month, the United States imported an average 6.85 million 42-gallon barrels a day of crude and refined products, 48.8 percent more than the 6.89 million-barrel combined total in August 1985 — and just under the previous high of 6.89 million barrels in June 1980, the American Petroleum Institute said Wednesday.

Refined products include gasoline, kerosine jet fuel and heating oil.

So far this year, total imports have been 21.9 percent more than in the comparable eight-month period of 1985, the Washington-based organization said.

Oil prices had dropped from more than $30 a barrel late last year to levels between $7 and $10 a barrel in early August, as members of the 13-nation Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries opened the floodgates in an effort to secure a "fair share" of the world petroleum market.

Coca-Cola Co. selling interests in South Africa

ATLANTA (AP) — The Coca-Cola Co. is selling its interests in South African companies, but an industry analyst says the move will have little financial impact on the company because Coke products still will be sold there.

The Atlanta-based company decided to withdraw its investments because it was dissatisfied with progress toward abolishing South Africa's official system of racial separation, Coke spokesman Randy Donaldson said Wednesday.

"We saw this move as one of the many weapons that can be effective against apartheid," Donaldson said. "We have chosen this route as a way that will allow the formation of a multi-racial canning system."

The soft-drink giant will sell its 30 percent interest in Amalgamated Beverage Industries, a bottling company employing about 3,800 people, and its 55 percent interest in a canning plant employing about 445.

At least part of the interest in the companies will be sold to black South African investors, Coca-Cola said.

Cooperative marketing strategy offers independents leverage

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Business/Oil Writer

Small and medium-sized independent gas producers are getting squeezed out of gas markets because they lack large enough reserves to be considered a reliable energy source by the 'new customers' producers must seek out.

J.C. (Jerry) Ingels, one of the founding directors of the Dallas-based Petroleum Independents' Cooperative (PIC), told members of the Permian Basin chapter of the Society of Professional Earth Scientists, that pooling resources and reserves is the best way to develop leverage as the gas market becomes more competitive.

"Few small independents can afford the time, money and effort needed to staff and support the type of gas marketing department needed to compete in the increasingly complex natural gas market," Ingels says.

"According to a study commissioned by TIPRO (the Texas Independent Producers & Royalty Owners Association), the larger base of reserves a producer has, the better price he is able to negotiate in the market," Ingels explained. "That does not bode well for medium and small independents — which make up 89 percent of the total number of companies in the domestic gas industry — but account for only 9 percent of total gas production."

Jerry Ingels

PIC's plan of operation is to combine production owned by members in localized areas and market gas packages through a regional cooperative framework.

The organization, which was incorporated as a Delaware corporation in March of this year, has an open membership structure, similar to farmers' and other marketing cooperatives. PIC accepts members who are actively engaged in the production business or royalty interest owners who have the right to take oil and gas in kind.

In addition to a $1,000 membership fee, a per-unit processing fee based on the volume of gas handled will be charged to cover operating costs.

Earnings in excess of cost and necessary cash reserves will be returned to members as patronage dividends according to their proportionate use of the co-op's services.

Ingels told the SIPES group that PIC has retained top legal counsel to ensure that any potential antitrust problems are overcome prior to start-up of actual marketing activities. "Our lawyers have approached the Justice Department to guarantee that our organization and planned operations are proper," he noted.

Developing marketing leverage and expertise is the only way independents can get 'justice' in today's gas market. "All we want is 'justice' — sell 'just as' much gas as possible, for 'just as' a high a price as we can get," Ingels joked.

Ingels anticipates that PIC will start making its first gas sales on behalf of members within six months.

Midland man interim head of Stanton bank

From Staff Reports

STANTON — J.D. Crawford, a Midland farmer, rancher, banker, and insurance executive, has been named interim president of the Stanton National Bank in the wake of the resignation of Claude Roper.

Roper, president of the bank since its formation on Feb. 4, 1985, resigned this week for "personal and family reasons." Previously, he was vice president and loan officer of Stanton's First National Bank.

Crawford, chairman of the board of the Stanton National Bank, was selected as interim president by the bank's board of directors. The bank has begun a search for a new president.

"We're in good shape," Crawford said of the bank, which has $11.3-million in assets. "We are actively looking for some loans like every bank in the area. We've got a pretty good mix (of loans) — agricultural, business and consumer" but not energy.

Crawford, who has lived in Midland since 1932, formerly operated an insurance agency in Stanton and was manager of the Martin County Texas Farm Bureau.

Leslie Wood, the bank's vice president and cashier, said that "The bank is in perfect standing — no problem at all."

J.D. Crawford

In addition to Crawford, serving on the bank's board of directors are James B. Lewis, Louie Koonce, M.C. Gist, J.P. Stroud, Charles Koonce, James E. Wheeler, and Dan Saunders.

Drug companies push to refine testing methods

An increasing number of local employers are responding to President Reagan's national crusade against drug use by making mandatory drug tests a part of their conditions for new and continuing employment.

More than 30 percent of the Fortune 500 companies — including most major oil companies — already administer some type of mandatory test for drugs, and the nation's biggest drug tester, the U.S. military, gives more than three million tests each year.

Because of the recent federal executive order for mandatory drug testing of all government employees in sensitive positions, the pharmaceutical industry is racing to develop easier and cheaper illicit drug screening tests.

Despite allegations made by government employees' unions and others that mandatory blanket testing violates the Fourth Amendment, manufacturers of the tests are gearing up for what analysts see as potentially explosive growth.

Some groups attack blanket use of the tests as an invasion of privacy, particularly when a test is given without notice. The accuracy of the screening tests has also been questioned, with critics noting that some tests register positive results for over-the-counter medicines.

"One of the big problems to overcome in screening tests, is to make them more effective," says Dr. Jack Wallace, University of Texas — San Antonio professor of pathology.

For example, marijuana tests may show false positives because other chemically similar compounds are detected by testing equipment.

While some companies have tried to use the results of the screening tests alone to discipline or discharge employees, this practice has become much less widespread now because of legal challenges, analysts note.

"The government is pushing its war on drugs, but very little of that goes into testing. We need funding for developing better test methods," says UTSA's Wallace.

Drug tests are already among the fastest-growing product lines for big pharmaceutical companies. Kits are made to test for such widely abused drugs as cocaine, morphine, marijuana, barbiturates, and hallucinogenics.

Although many companies are adopting either voluntary or mandatory testing, very few actually perform the tests themselves. Instead, the companies usually send urine samples to private laboratories.

These labs use both screening and confirmatory tests to detect abusive drugs. Screening tests, which identify those samples warranting further investigations, cost $2 to $5 each; the second-level tests run about $60 to $70 each.

To cash in on a rapidly expanding market, a number of companies are scrambling to develop and market new products. Previously these companies concentrated on tests for therapeutic drugs, used by hospitals to monitor medication levels of prescribed drugs.

The majority of the new kits under development are screening tests. Some of the new entrants in the drug testing derby are:

- The Diagnostic Products Corp. of Los Angeles, which has been marketing morphine and cocaine tests for the past year and a half and recently opened an overseas testing facility to develop new tests;
- Abbott Laboratories of North Chicago, Ill., which introduced tests in July to detect cocaine, PCP and barbiturates and are designed to run on that company's private testing system, used in two out of three hospitals;
- American Drug Screens Inc. of Dallas, which has developed a home-testing kit for parents who suspect their children of taking drugs. Parents mail urine samples to the company to be tested for marijuana, cocaine, PCP, amphetamines, barbiturates and Valium;
- National Patent Analytical Systems Inc. of Roslyn Heights, N.Y., which is marketing a machine to scan the brain for evidence of alcohol and drug intake. The device resembles a portable computer with electrodes which are placed on the temples; and,
- Medical Diagnostics Inc., which plans to market within a month a quick-screening test able to be used on-site by employers. The Quick Test Drug Screen takes only three minutes to screen for morphine, cocaine, amphetamines or PCP. A drop of urine is placed on a sheet of sensitized paper that changes color if one or more of the drugs is present. Positive results would still have to be confirmed by more sophisticated laboratory tests.

An increased reliance on confirmatory tests — together with the national concern over drug use — has made it less likely that legal questions about testing will slow the industry's growth in the future, say industry analysts.

The only way to be absolutely certain that an individual has tested positive for certain drugs is to run confirmatory tests. "Those companies that use drug testing must be willing to pay the cost of running such an elaborate test if they expect to use them as evidence against an employee," notes Dr. Arthur McBay, chief toxicologist for the state of North Carolina.

While more accurate tests reduce the potential for lawsuits by those who claim they were falsely accused of drug use, the knowledge that better testing is available will serve as a deterrent, he says.

The total market for the tests — estimated at $80 million a year in the United States and $115 million worldwide — is expected to more than double by 1990.

SEC files suit against former ambassador

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Securities and Exchange Commission filed suit Tuesday against former ambassador to Switzerland Marvin Warner and nine other people, alleging they violated antifraud provisions of federal securities laws.

Warner's attorney called the suit an effort to undermine the Cincinatti financier's opportunity for a fair trial on criminal charges in Ohio.

The suit, filed in U.S. District Court in Fort Lauderdale, Fla., stems from the March 1985 collapse of ESM Government Securities Inc., a Florida-based securities company.

The shutdown of ESM triggered the collapse of Home State Savings Bank of Cincinnati and resulted in the temporary shutdown of 69 savings and loan institutions in Ohio.

Named in the SEC suit were Warner, former owner of Home State; Ronnie R. Ewton, former chairman of the board of ESM; George G. Mead, a founder of ESM; Nicholas B. Wallace, former president of ESM; Charles B. Streicher, a shareholder of ESM Group Inc.; Thomas F. Saunders, former comptroller of ESM Group; and Timothy R. Murphy, former vice president of ESM Group.

The suit also named as defendants Burton M. Bongard, former president of Home State Financial, Inc.; David J. Schiebel, former chief executive officer of Home State Bank; Robert J. Weeder, the former chief financial officer of Home State Bank; and the American Savings and Loan Association of Florida.

The commission alleges that from 1977 until ESM collapsed, Ewton, Mead, Wallace, Streicher, Murphy and Saunders schemed to defraud ESM customers, and that ESM's books were falsified and false financial statements were issued.

The suit also alleges that in September 1983 Warner learned that ESM sustained losses that exceeded its net worth. Thereafter he "directly and indirectly violated the antifraud provisions" by misrepresenting and withholding facts about a $1 billion repurchase transaction between ESM and American Savings and Loan, a misleading letter ASLA issued to its stockholders, and Warner's sale of 1.9 million shares of ASLA stock to ASLA.

Although he knew that ESM had sustained losses of more than $250 million, Warner failed to disclose the information, the SEC said.

The commission asked the court to enjoin the defendants from further violations.

Warner has repeatedly denied any wrongdoing in the ESM case.

He faces trial on Nov. 17 in Cincinnati on criminal charges of misapplication of bank funds. He also is named along with Bongard in a $50 million lawsuit filed by Thomas Tew, ESM's court-appointed bankruptcy trustee.

"It's grossly unfair for the SEC to file its complaint on the virtual eve of Marvin Warner's criminal trial in state court," said Leonard Garment, an attorney for Warner in Washington. "The SEC staff attorneys know that Mr. Warner faces a criminal trial in Ohio in November on essentially the same charges."

Reducing acid rain

Mark Wagner, oilfield worker at Texaco's Kern River Field, Bakersfield, Calif., examines plastic Glitsch Grids made of General Electric's Noryl Resin, which withstands high temperatures and chemical attack. The fumes of oil-burning broilers used to produce steam to free thick crude oil not previously economical to use. Sulphur dioxide is said to be a cause of acid rain.

IMPORTS

At that time, OPEC announced a two-month joint production cutback agreement, beginnning Sept. 1, aimed at bolstering prices by reducing aggregate output by about 3 million barrels daily to 16.8 million barrels a day.

The market since responded with prices rising to levels between $14 and $16 a barrel.

In its latest report, the API said Americans used 3.2 percent more gasoline in August — or 7.5 million barrels a day — than they did in August 1985.

When other major refined products are included, the demand difference was 3.5 percent last month over the year-ago equivalent.

In the first eight months of 1986, the increased demand for major products totalled 2.2 percent, the report said.

The industry group also said that domestic crude oil production continued to decline in August, to about 8.7 million barrels daily. This was 1.7 percent less than the 8.8 million barrel-a-day output of August 1985.

In the eight-month period, U.S. domestic production averaged nearly 8.9 million barrels daily, down 1.1 percent from the comparable 1985 period, it said.

"Lower prices have greatly reduced the drilling of new wells and the maintenance and servicing of existing ones, with consequent results on crude production," the API report said.

With domestic output shrinking as imports rise, refineries were taking advantage of the recent "low" prices, which some believed could to head higher if OPEC manages to renew its production restraint agreement.

The refiners raised gasoline production in anticipation of heightened demand, since U.S. motorists were expected to stay home instead of taking trips abroad, because of the weakened dollar and fear of terrorism.

COKE

A wholly owned concentrate manufacturing operation, which employs about 20 people, will be moved out of South Africa, said Coke spokesman Carlton Curtis.

While Donaldson said it would be impossible to assess the financial impact of the move, Hugh Zurkuhlen, a beverage industry analyst for Salomon Brothers Inc., said the pullout should have little financial impact on the company.

"Coke products will still be sold in South Africa," he said. "They may see no financial difference at all."

The Rev. Joseph Lowery, president of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, said he was delighted with the announcement.

The SCLC announced in August it would call for a boycott of Coca-Cola and other American companies if they had not divested South African holdings by Jan. 15, 1987.

"Our labor has not been in vain," Lowery said. "I think they're making a strong moral statement and sound and sensitive business judgment."

Donaldson said the decision to pull out was completely an internal decision, not affected by pressure from the SCLC, or in hopes of leading other companies to the same action.

Coke's 1983 assets in South Africa totaled $60 million, which was 2.9 percent of its total worth.

SIPES

PIC management estimates that $1 million in initial capital will be needed to establish and staff an office for 12 to 24 months. Capitalization efforts are continuing, as the group is seeking additional founding members prior to hiring marketing and management staff.

The more than 30 founders already on board represent 10 of the major oil centers in the Southwest and Mid-Continent regions, including Joe Ward of Midland, Ingels says.

GNP

This time, the government said that the two biggest changes offset each other.

The largest upward revision was a $3.5 billion addition to business inventories, but that was canceled by a $3.4 billion increase in the trade deficit.

What little strength there was in the second quarter came from strong growth in sales, which rose at an annual rate of 3.4 percent.

Much of that strength came from personal consumption spending, which was rising at a 6.2 percent annual rate.

Housing construction, which has been a bright spot all year because of the dramatic plunge in mortgage rates, was rising at an annual rate of 14.5 percent in the second quarter following an 11 percent rise in the first quarter.

Subtracting from this strength was a huge rise in the country's trade deficit as imports soared at an annual rate of 15.8 percent while exports were declining at an annual rate of 9.8 percent.

Economists have been looking in vain all year for a turnaround in the trade numbers based on a belief that the weaker dollar will choke off demand for imports while making American goods more attrative on overseas markets.

The 0.6 percent GNP rise was the weakest since a similar 0.6 percent increase in the final three months of 1982, when the last recession was ending.

The various changes left the GNP at $3.66 trillion, after adjusting for inflation. Before removing the impact of inflation, the GNP rose at an annual rate of 2.6 percent in the second quarter to a total of $4.18 trillion.

The government said in a separate report that the after-tax profits of U.S. corporations rose 2.1 percent in the second quarter following a 3 percent decline in the first quarter. This was a revision from an estimate last month, which put the after-tax increase in profits at a stronger 4.1 percent.

Last year a team of young Canadians led by Michael Lorber of Montreal defeated the highly ranked team of George Rosenkranz, Mexico City, in an early round of the Spingold Knockout Team Championship. At this year's event, held in Toronto, they drew the second-seeded team of Edgar Kaplan, New York, in the second round of play, and sprang another upset.

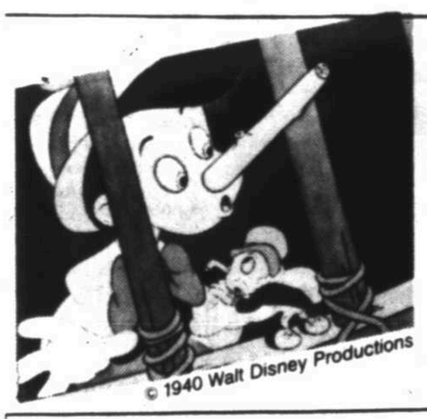

It is usually wrong to underlead an ace against a suit contract. On this hand from their match against Kaplan, the Canadians did it twice to defeat a seemingly impregnable game contract.

After West's light third-hand opening bid and North's double, East's one no trump response by agreement indicated spade support. South showed his good hand and heart suit with a jump, and North raised to game.

West, Nick Gartaganis of St. Laurent, PQ, underled his ace of spades. His partner, Zygmunt Marcinski of Dorval, PQ, won the king and posed an immediate problem for declarer by shifting to a low diamond. Since there was little enough missing, declarer not surprisingly played West for the ace of diamonds. His finesse of the jack lost to the queen, and a diamond to the ace and a diamond back, ruffed, sealed the fate of the contract early.

In the other room the contract was also four hearts, but this time North opened one heart after West passed, and he became the declarer at four hearts. There was no good reason for East to underlead his ace of diamonds at trick one, and so declarer sailed home, losing only one spade trick and two diamonds.

Newman's food companies to fund rural camp for seriously ill children

Newman

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP) — Paul Newman says a young friend's cancer may be the inspiration for a camp the actor is planning for seriously ill children.

Newman announced Wednesday that his food companies, which make salad dressing, spaghetti sauce and popcorn, will donate $4 million for the camp on 300 acres in rural northeastern Connecticut.

"The wonderful thing about this project is the only limitation will be our own imagination," Newman said at a news conference.

The actor was reluctant to talk about his motivation for creating the camp. He said several friends had suffered from cancer. "Maybe it was a loss of a friend of mine to cancer, a young man," he said, declining to elaborate.

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (AP) — Heather Thomas, co-star of the canceled ABC-TV series "The Fall Guy," underwent plastic surgery on her left leg to repair injuries she suffered in a traffic accident.

Miss Thomas was in stable condition after surgery Wednesday at Saint John's Hospital, said Mary Miler, a hospital spokeswoman. A decision was expected later in the week on whether to perform more surgery, she said.

The performer received fractures in both legs when a car hit her as she was crossing a street Tuesday.

Fitzgerald

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Ella Fitzgerald left the hospital in good spirits after receiving flowers and a telegram from President and Nancy Reagan.

The 68-year-old jazz singer underwent open-heart surgery at Cedars-Sinai Medical Center on Sept. 3. She was in fair condition on her release Wednesday.

"Her spirits were very, very good," said Ron Wise, spokesman for Cedars-Sinai. "She responded very well to the surgery and her prognosis is excellent."

Miss Fitzgerald, known for her improvisational "scat" singing, will be recovering at home for several weeks, Wise said.

NEW YORK (AP) — CBS News is bringing back three staffers who were laid off in July during company-wide budget cutbacks, one of several moves indicating Howard Stringer is acting decisively as interim news division president.

Stringer, 45, a 21-year veteran of CBS News, has been called a strong candidate to fill the post of news president by Laurence Tisch, the current CBS Inc. chief. Tisch said replacing the ousted news president, Van Gordon Sauter, "is on the front burner."

The three staffers, who were among 90 news positions and 700 jobs cut, are all producers, Stringer said Wednesday.

Stringer, CBS News' executive vice president, has been working to raise morale since Sauter and his corporate ally, chairman and chief executive officer Thomas H. Wyman, resigned under pressure last week.

James Clevenger, formerly a producer in the Paris bureau, will return to help cover increased terrorist activity there. "We saw an editorial weakness there and the bureau chief asked for him back," Stringer said in an interview.

Stringer said that E.S. (Bud) Lamoreaux, longtime executive producer on "Sunday Morning," is returning to work on an unspecified project and producer Shirley Wershba comes back to "60 Minutes" because executive producer Don Hewitt "wanted extra help."

Stringer also has moved to streamline his management staff, reassigning one vice president, according to sources in the news division.

One criticism of Sauter by CBS staffers, including commentator Andy Rooney, was that he hadn't fought hard enough to protect CBS News, and its product, from corporate budget-cutters. Some within CBS News consider Stringer tainted by his association with Sauter.

This week, Stringer met with former anchorman and board member Walter Cronkite, who reportedly had a significant behind-the-scenes role in ousting Sauter.

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — President Reagan and his wife, Nancy, apologized to a couple whose wedding was interrupted when the presidential helicopter landed in a city park.

Brett and Debbie Brumfield returned from their honeymoon last week to find a letter mailed from Rancho del Cielo, Reagan's Western White House in the Santa Ynez Mountains.

"Nancy and I were so sorry to learn that our helicopter trip and all the arrangements that went with it interfered with a most special occasion in your life, your wedding ceremony in Las Positas Park," the letter said. "We both want you to know how much we regret that — and how very much we wish you a happy, blessed, and loving married life together."

The newlyweds appreciated the gesture.

"It really was a nice thing to do," the bride said.

Heatherton

NEW YORK (AP) — Entertainer Joey Heatherton has been acquitted of charges stemming from a run-in with a passport clerk last year.

U.S. Magistrate Sharon Grubin, saying the government failed to prove Miss Heatherton intended to create a public disturbance or interfere with government operations, found Miss Heatherton innocent Wednesday of the two charges.

The government said the singer-dancer slapped and pulled the hair of a Passport Office clerk who had told her to come back with two new photos and exact change for the $35 passport renewal fee.

NEW YORK (AP) — Reports of the death of the network's dinnertime newscasts have been greatly exaggerated, NBC says after its study showed that viewers want helpings of Dan, Peter and Tom, along with their local anchors.

The NBC study of 1,600 respondents nationwide, released Wednesday, said if viewers could watch only one news program, more would choose local newscasts. The margin was 52 to 45 percent.

But, when asked whether they wanted local news to expand coverage and swallow up the network broadcasts, 84 percent said they favored the continuation of distinct local and network newscasts.

NBC News President Lawrence K. Grossman said the study rebuts some gloom-and-doom predictions that the evening newscasts of Peter Jennings on ABC, Dan Rather on CBS and Tom Brokaw on NBC were dinosaurs because satellite technology now enables local stations to report national and international news.

Honeywell to eliminate 4,000 jobs

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Honeywell Inc. said today it plans to eliminate about 4,000 jobs and launch other cost-cutting moves by the end of this year because of increasing competition and slower growth in capital spending.

The Minneapolis-based computer company also said its board of directors on Tuesday authorized management to consider the purchase of Sperry Corp.'s aerospace business.

Sperry was merged into Burroughs Corp., another mainframe computer maker, earlier this week.

Honeywell's stock price, which had risen sharply on speculation that the company would agree to be purchased or undergo some other major transaction, fell today. It was down $4.50 a share to $74 shortly after the opening of the New York Stock Exchange. Honeywell had risen $3.62½ a share to $78.50 on Wednesday.

Honeywell, with 94,000 employees worldwide, said the work force will be reduced through attrition, early retirements and layoffs. In addition, salary increases will be severely limited in 1987.

Honeywell also said it will "reorganize its controls businesses at year end into three units focusing on worldwide markets for automation and control in homes and buildings, in industry and in aerospace and defense."

Worst over for state economy, expert says

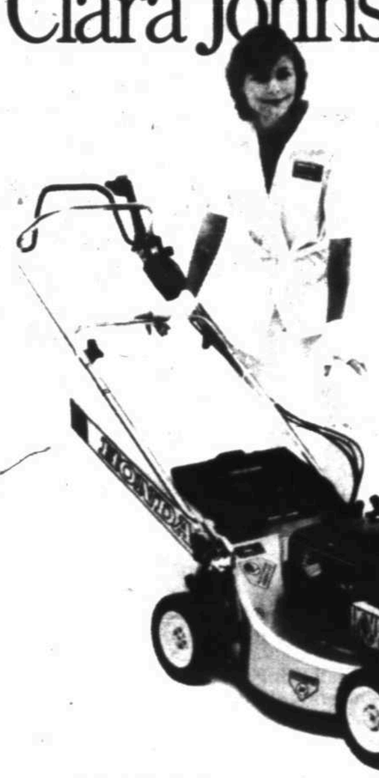

DALLAS (AP) — The worst of Texas' economic slide is over, and people should stop thinking the state is about to fall into the Gulf of Mexico, a Southwestern Bell Corp. executive says.

"We believe the worst of the economic decline is behind us," Michael Kaufman, Southwestern Bell vice president for finance, told a gathering of securities analysts Wednesday.

"That's not to say the economy will experience a rapid rebound in the near future, but I believe that it dealt its hardest blows in the first half of 1986," he said.

Southwestern Bell economists compile a business index — essentially a regional version of the gross national product — for its five main states of Texas, Oklahoma, Kansas, Missouri and Arkansas.

Witness testifies inventor feared big oil companies

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. (UPI) — Ronald Lasteed, who is standing trial on fraud charges, feared big oil companies would destroy an invention he claims could turn water into engine fuel, a prosecution witness testified.

"He was worried the oil companies would gang up against him," said Houston Bunker Hunt, the son of Texas oil tycoon Nelson Bunker Hunt.

So Lasteed, a self-styled inventor from Britain charged with fraud and conspiracy, told the younger Hunt he wanted to cooperate with the oil industry. He was afraid his invention would be bought and "discontinued," Hunt said Wednesday.

Lasteed's trial began Monday before U.S. District Judge James Paine. It is expected to last more than a week.

Testimony and court records refer to Lasteed's invention as the "Ionagen Process" — a alleged restructuring of water into fuel that could power an engine. Hunt testified that, as he understood the process, a water molecule's oxygen atom would be separated from its hydrogen atoms. Hydrogen itself is combustible.

A 1984 indictment naming Lasteed and two colleagues says the defendants represented their product as a "98 percent substitute for the petroleum fuel product." The Ionagen fuel substitute cost "pennies" a gallon to make, the indictment says.

"The defendants planned to get money by misrepresentation," Assistant U.S. Attorney David Lewis said.

But noted criminal lawyer F. Lee Bailey, defending Lasteed, told jurors that no one "pretended" the water-to-gasoline ratio was 98 percent to two percent. He said the claim was that a mixture of one gallon of water, four gallons of gas and some unidentified chemicals could run an engine.

Houston Hunt testified that Lasteed said he was afraid large oil firms would somehow acquire his invention and destroy it so he preferred to market a fuel substitute containing 75 percent gasoline, Hunt testified.

"So it wouldn't do away altogether with oil companies' (products)," said Hunt, of Dallas. He added that Lasteed claimed the product cost 5.7 cents per gallon to make.

Al Hill Jr., a Dallas businessman who said in court his uncle is Nelson Bunker Hunt, testified earlier that he considered investing $10 million in Lasteed's invention.

Texas Air, Continental revise agreement

HOUSTON (AP) — Texas Air Corp. and Continental Airlines officials say they have agreed to revised terms of Texas Air's proposed acquisition of the outstanding minority interest in Continental.

Continental common stock could be exchanged for $15.20 in cash per share under the proposed agreement, an increase of 45 cents from the previous proposal, officials said Wednesday.

The transaction would involve about 28 percent of Continental not owned by Texas Air, said Bruce Hicks, a spokesman for Texas Air and Continental.

Texas Air is a Houston-based holding company for Continental and New York Air.

According to a statement released Wednesday, the proposal needs the approval of a majority of Continental's common shareholders and the backing of a majority of stockholders who hold less than 5 percent of Continental's outstanding common stock.

"That assures the voice of minority shareholders is heard," Hicks said.

People who are stockholders as of Sept. 29 will vote on the merger Oct. 23. Texas Air's board of directors also has to ratify the proposal.

The plan, recommended by a special committee of outside director appointed to study the transaction, was unanimously approved by Continental directors.

Two investment banking firms evaluated the fairness of the proposed transaction. Written opinions will be delivered when the proxy statement is mailed to Continental stockholders, officials said.

Officers and employees of Continental who owned the carrier's common stock on Oct. 31, 1985, also will benefit from a new employee stock option plan, Texas Air officials said.

In addition to the $15.20 per share, those workers will be allowed to buy eight-tenths of a share of Texas Air common stock for each share of Continental stock, Hicks said. That selling price will be $19 per share.

PUBLIC NOTICE

BRIEF EXPLANATORY STATEMENTS OF PROPOSED

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS

GENERAL ELECTION

NOVEMBER 4, 1986

PROPOSITION NO. 1 ON THE BALLOT

Senate Joint Resolution 15 proposes a constitutional amendment that would permit the legislature to provide by general law for the apportionment of the value of railroad rolling stock among the counties in which the property of the railroad is located for purposes of property taxation, and would delete the requirement that the Comptroller participate in making the allocation. To comply with both statutory and constitutional law, the apportionment currently is being made by the State Property Tax Board in conjunction with the Comptroller.

The proposed amendment will appear on the ballot as follows:

"The constitutional amendment to allow the legislature to provide by general law for the apportionment of the value of railroad rolling stock among counties for purposes of property taxation."

PROPOSITION NO. 2 ON THE BALLOT

Senate Joint Resolution 33 proposes a constitutional amendment that would replace the constitutional requirement that the subject of a bill be expressed in its title with a mandate that each house of the legislature adopt rules of procedure that would require the subject of each bill to be expressed in its title in a manner that gives the legislature and the public reasonable notice of that subject. Determining compliance with the rule would be the responsibility of the legislature. Currently, a law is invalidated if a court finds its caption is defective. The amendment would provide that past and future enactments may not be held void on the basis of an insufficient title.

The amendment also would eliminate the suggestion that the state's laws be revised every ten years, and instead would provide for continuing revision of state laws.

The proposed amendment will appear on the ballot as follows:

"The constitutional amendment requiring each house to include in its rules of procedure a rule that each bill contain a title expressing the bill's subject, and providing for the continuing revision of state laws."

PROPOSITION NO. 3 ON THE BALLOT

House Joint Resolution 73 proposes a constitutional amendment that would permit the Legislature to authorize any county, city, town, or other political subdivision to use public funds or credit to pay insurance premiums on nonassessable life, health, or accident policies. Due to the prohibition in the constitution against the lending of credit and granting of public money, political subdivisions currently are prohibited from becoming shareholders in associations such as mutual-insurance companies, in which policyholders are shareholders. A nonassessable mutual insurance policy does not allow a company to raise capital by assessing the policyholder an extra amount on a premium. This amendment will allow mutual insurance companies and stock companies to bid for life and health group policies of political subdivisions. Public liability will be limited to the payment of premums specified in the contract.

The proposed amendment will appear on the ballot as follows:

"The constitutional amendment allowing political subdivisions the opportunity to engage in and transact business with authorized mutual insurance companies in the same manner as with other insurance companies."

PROPOSITION NO. 4 ON THE BALLOT

Senate Joint Resolution 4 proposes a constitutional amendment that would repeal the prohibition against branch banking by state banks and would allow state banks and national banks domiciled in this state to establish and operate banking facilities at locations within the county or city where they are domiciled. The amendment would also authorize the Legislature to permit a state bank or a national bank domiciled in this state to engage in business at more than one place if it acquires a failed state bank or national bank domiciled in this state.

The proposed amendment will appear on the ballot as follows:

"The constitutional amendment to provide that a bank may offer full service banking at more than one location within the city or county where its principal facility is located, subject to limitations and restrictions provided by law."

Craftsmen turn iron into works of art

WICHITA FALLS (AP) — Ronnie Hicks isn't certain whether he's a draftsman, craftsman or artist.

"I guess you have to be a little of all three," said Hicks, a partner in Hicks Ornamental Iron.

Hicks started the firm in October 1974. Mark Patterson joined him about six years ago.

The small business is a lot more than its name might imply — not only does it sell ornamental iron lawn and garden furniture, but it creates steel gates for decoration as well as security, window guards, spiral staircases and even curved fencing that follows the contour of the swimming pools it surrounds.

The firm also offers a steel and glass door with a deadbolt lock that replaces the traditional storm door.

Explaining the upsurge in ornamental ironwork's popularity, Hicks said, "People are more conscious of security today because of the rising crime rate. They will completely enclose a porch now, whereas they used to just have a railing and support posts. You see a lot more window and door work in this business today than you once did."

Hicks started welding when he was only 9 years old.

"My dad had a welding rig, and I just started tinkering around with it. We didn't have a lot of money, so anything I really wanted I had to make," he said.

Eventually, he learned ornamental iron work from another man who was in business here for many years. Today, Hicks' shop is the only ornamental iron works left in Wichita Falls, he says.

"I guess you could call us successful. At least, we're still in business while others aren't," he said.

Patterson

Hicks

The staff consists of three employees in addition to the two partners.

"I guess you'd have to call us employees, too, because when you're a small business like this, the boss has to pitch in and work like anyone else," Hicks said.

The two partners like to hunt, fish and play golf, but find little time to enjoy their hobbies because of their work.

"The secret to this work is being able to visualize in your mind what a customer wants — and if it's not feasible, then to sell him on something that will work. This is about as much art as it is craft. Whatever we make has to be functional as well as pretty. Our work has to enhance the decor of a home or building.

"We don't deal in inferior work, and what we do doesn't come cheap," he said.

He added that most of the firm's jobs take less than 15 days to complete.

"If you're doing a job that takes longer, you tend to lose your concentraton, and it gets boring," he said.

Hicks said more and more customers want ironwork in colors other than the traditional black or white, but he said such colors don't last as long.

"We tell all our customers they must maintain the finish on this work. Even if they didn't touch it, it will usually last about four years before they'll have to do something," he said.

That maintenance usually entails repainting with a rust inhibitor paint.

"This stuff lasts a long, long time when given the proper care," he said.

"People have gotten away from the iron knick-knacks you could find in almost any home years ago," he said, explaining that the trend in ornamental ironwork today is toward something functional as well as decorative.

This doesn't mean Hicks hasn't had requests for unusual objects.

"I've made everything from spurs for a fighting rooster to ball joints for a Model T," he said.

Expert wants people aware of Constitution

AUSTIN (AP) — A Texas expert on the U.S. Constitution says next year's bicentennial celebration of the document's signing should make Americans aware of their governmental blueprint.

By the end the celebrations, "We're all going to be very conscious of the Constitution, and I think the people are going to learn a lot about it," said Charles Alan Wright, a constitutional law expert at the University of Texas.

Wright also is a member of the presidential Commission on the Bicentennial of the Constitution, which is led by retiring U.S. Chief Justice Warren Burger.

Plans call for the bicentennial to be celebrated through March 1989, the 200th anniversary of the convening of the first Congress and the swearing in of President George Washington.

There are strong hopes that the celebration "will be not just fireworks, but something that would have lasting effect," Wright said.

Wright said the commission's work and the efforts of other groups should combine "to be a tremendous success."

Those groups include the American Bar Association, which is funding a public television program about the Constitution; a group called Project '87, which is publishing a journal, posters and other displays for school use; state and municipal commissions that are organizing parades, parties and symposiums, and universities that are planning special conferences.

One conference will be held at the University of Texas in February, Wright said.

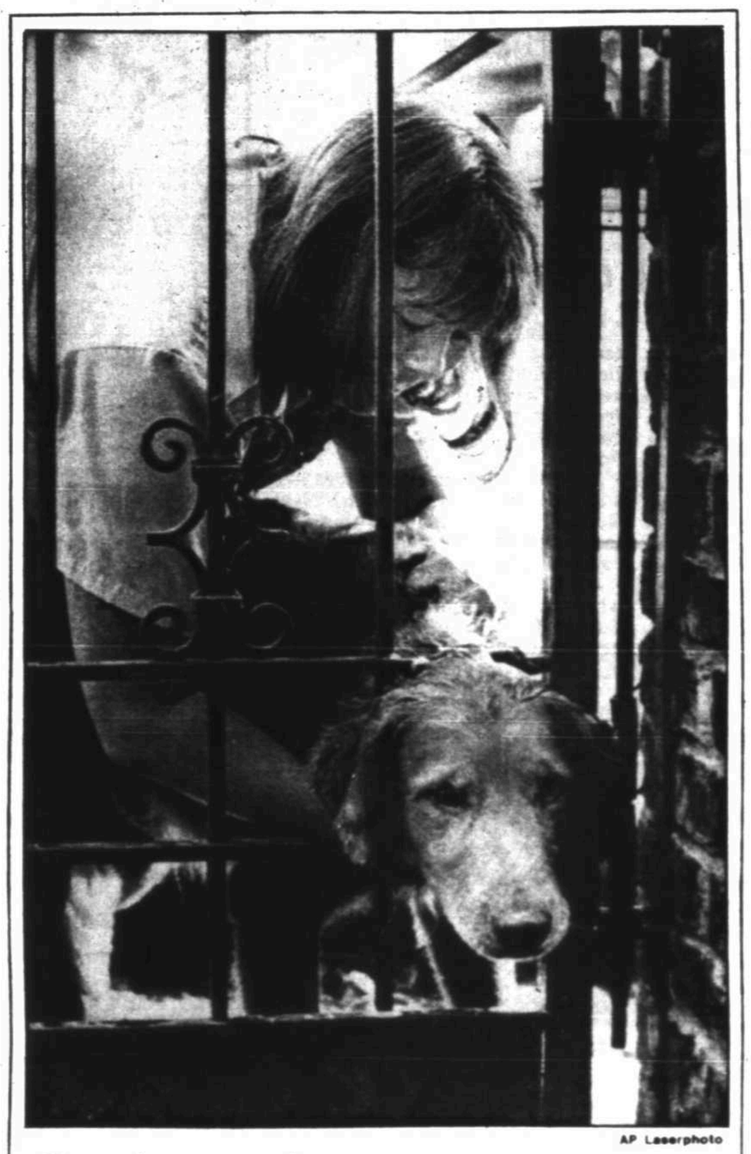

Wright said the commission also hopes to have the U.S. Constitution translated into "all the important languages of the world and put it in libraries in every country, but where we're going to get the money we don't know."

Other hopes are fellowships for study of the Constitution by public school teachers, printing pocket-sized editions of the document for distribution to the public, to establish Sept. 17, 1987, as a one-time national holiday and to coordinate a nationwide recital of the pledge of allegiance.

"The idea is that every schoolchild across the country would pledge alligence to the flag at the same time, all at one moment," Wright said.

He said increasing public awareness of the document is extremely important.

"Many public opinion polls have shown that people are terribly informed about the Constitution," Wright said.

Pregnant police officer fired for insubordination

KAUFMAN (AP) — A 24-year-old police sergeant was fired after asking to trade her patrol car for a desk.

Lisa Lytle, who is two months pregnant, says her uniform, bulletproof vest and gunbelt no longer fit properly. And she was afraid for the safety of her unborn baby.

"It's just not fair. A cop with a broken leg gets to sit behind a desk, but I have to keep going because I have what they call a 'condition.'"

— Lisa Lytle

"All I'm asking for is a desk job — maybe dispatcher," Mrs. Lytle said after being fired Sept. 11.

"It's just not fair," said Mrs. Lytle. "A cop with a broken leg gets to sit behind a desk, but I have to keep going because I have what they call a 'condition.'"

"I don't want to wait until I'm six or seven months pregnant because it could be too late then," she told the Dallas Morning News.

Police Chief Jack Lawley said he has only 10 officers, so it's not easy to move shifts around.

"We have a small police department and all I needed was a little time to rearrange schedules," he said in an interview published today.

Mrs. Lytle, who had been on the job one year, filed a complaint with the U.S. Equal Employment Opprtunity Commission on Sept. 5 — six days before she was fired.

City Administrator Norman Smith said Mrs. Lytle was fired for insubordination because she refused to wait for a transfer to a desk job.

"We didn't fire her because she was pregnant but because she refused to do her job," Smith said.

"As soon as she found out she was pregnant, she showed up for work in blue jeans and refused to drive her patrol car," he said.

Lawley said he didn't expect the sergeant to take any chances on her 6 p.m. to 6 a.m. shift.

"She is a good officer and I've told her that she is not expected to wade into the middle of a fight but to call for backup," the chief said.

"Every time I put that badge and gun on — day or night — I'm taking a risk of hurting my baby," she said.

STATE IN BRIEF

Group says Robertson 'outside mainline religious theology'

AUSTIN (AP) — A Texas group says the Rev. Pat Robertson, a potential presidential candidate, is "well outside mainline American religious theology."

Michael Hudson, Texas director of People for the American Way, told a news conference Wednesday that while his organization is taking no position on a Robertson candidacy, it believes the public should be informed about his views.

"His extremist views on the Constitution, the federal judiciary and on church-state separation should be fully understood by the American public," Hudson said.

At a Washington news conference Wednesday, Robertson said he will run for president if 3 million registered voters show their support for him during the next 12 months with their work, prayers and money.

Hudson said People for the American Way also has begun a national election year project to monitor the use of religious intolerance as a campaign tool.

"Robertson continuously indicates that somehow his political views — and even his candidacy — are ordained and blessed by God, and those who disagree with him are immoral or un-Godly," Hudson said.

Veteran police officer indicted

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A veteran San Antonio police detective has been indicted in connection with the alleged sexual assault of an illegal alien.

A Bexar County grand jury Wednesday indicted juvenile detective Abel M. Vasquez Jr., a 21-year veteran of the San Antonio police department. Vasquez was charged with official oppression, a Class A misdemeanor punishable by up to a year in prison and a $2,000 fine.

The indictment accuses Vasquez of using his office to attempt to kiss and fondle an 18-year-old Mexican national.

Assistant District Attorney Cynthia Bivins said Vasquez was off duty at the time but in uniform.

He has been suspended without pay pending the outcome of the case. The 18-year-old is being held under a $5,000 witness bond and for immigration authorities, Ms. Bivins said.

Ruling disappoints Guard

AUSTIN (AP) — The National Guard Association of Texas is disappointed that a federal court order keeps Fort Wolters from being used as a prison camp.

"We are extremely disappointed that a federal judge had decided that the facilities National Guard soldiers use every weekend at Fort Wolters are not satisfactory for use by state prison inmates," said Lewis D. King, associate director of the National Guard Association of Texas.

U.S. District Judge William Wayne Justice ruled earlier this week against the use of facilities near Mineral Wells as planned by the Texas Department of Corrections to ease prison overcrowding.

Lewis said the facilities house National Guard troops on weekend training exercises. The installation, once used to train helicopter pilots during the Vietnaam War, is leased from the U.S. Army to the Texas National Guard.

Texas sailor victim of fumes

ALAMEDA, Calif. (AP) — The Navy released the identities Wednesday of two crew members aboard the aircraft carrier USS Enterprise who died after being overcome by fumes in a chemical storeroom.

Bill Valente, assistant public information officer at the Alameda Naval Air Station, identified the victims as Storekeeper 3rd Class Kevin Dwayne Johnson, 22, of Brookshire, Texas, and Machinist Mate 2nd Class Eric Sauerborn, 23, of Lutherville, Md.

The men were discovered unconscious about 10:30 a.m. Tuesday while the Enterprise was off the Northern California coast, officials said. The cause of the accident was under investigation.

Plano photographer indicted

McKINNEY (AP) — Grand jurors have indicted a 49-year-old Plano photographer on five counts of aggravated sexual assault and 11 counts of sexual performance by a child.

Zoltan Balogh, held in lieu of $3 million bond since July 9, was arrested after police got a tip that he had engaged in sexual activities with several pre-teen-aged girls, Lt. Jerry Scott said after Wednesday's indictment.

Police confiscated about 150 pictures showing four 11-year-old girls committing sexual acts with each other and Balogh, he said, adding that one girl told police she had been sexually involved with Balogh since 1984.

The Hungary native owned a photo studio called Photography by Zoltan, which went out of business earlier this year. Police said the confiscated photographs were apparently for personal use and not for sale.

Aggravated sexual assault carries a penalty of up to 99 years in prison and a $10,000 fine. Sexual performance by a child — coercing or forcing a child to perform a sexual act — can be punished by up to 20 years in prison and a $10,000 fine, Collin County District Attorney H. Ownby said.

Senate favors bill delaying retirement fund payments

By DAVID PLESA
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Senate Wednesday gave tentative approval to a bill that would keep the state in the black by delaying upcoming payments to retirement trust funds.

The measure would take five months of payments to the Teacher Retirement System and Employees Retirement System — more than $358 million — and retain the money in the state's general revenue fund to pay day-to-day expenses.

The bill should return to the Senate floor today for final approval.

"The one thing people fail to recognize is you have to pass that bill," House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Stan Schlueter said at the beginning of his committee's first special session hearings on possible tax increases. "You can pass a tax bill...with 100-plus votes and still have checks bounce in December if you don't pass the retirement postponement bill."

The payment deferrals to the retirement funds would be contigent on the Legislature passing a tax increase, which most senators favor. The House's plan proposes delaying 12 months of payments to the retirement systems, no taxes and deeper spending cuts.

Treasurer Ann Richards says the state will begin writing hot checks by mid-December unless lawmakers approve measures such as borrowing from trust funds and delaying other payments.

Under the Senate's plan, the Treasury will repay the money with a minimum 8-percent interest over seven months beginning in February.

The Texas Public Employees Association says it can put up with five months of deferred payments, saying the measure is better than layoffs or pay cuts, but it won't support the House's plan to delay payments for 12 months.

But the Texas State Teachers Association says it will not endorse any delays in payments to the trust funds.

IRS files liens against Dallas college

DALLAS (AP) — The Internal Revenue Service has filed more than $1.5 million in liens against Bishop College for failing to pay income taxes withheld from employee paychecks, officials say.

The six liens — the first filed in 1984 and the last Aug. 11 — mean that the IRS could seize Bishop's property and sell it at auction or sue the college's officers to collect the taxes.

In some cases, criminal charges have been filed against an organization's officials for failure to pay withholding taxes. IRS regional spokeswoman Marlene Gaysek declined to say Wednesday whether the agency will take further action against Bishop to force payment.

The disclosure of Bishop's tax liability comes as a team of educators arrived on campus today to review Bishop's progress toward regaining full accreditation by the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools.

The college has been on probation for 21 months for failing to meet the regional accrediting group's standards for financial stability.

Bishop's president at the time the liens were filed — Wright Lassiter Jr., who left Bishop last month to beocme president of Dallas' El Centro College — declined comment on why the college has not paid its taxes.

Bishop has $3 million in short-term debts, including overdue utility bills, and $3 million in long-term debts. School officials have said they need $500,000 immediately to keep the school open.

Levi Watkins, Bishop's interm president, said the college is trying to pay back the money to the IRS in installments and that he was not aware of the tax liability until he accepted the job in August.

A Bishop board member said the first back payment was made this month, along with current IRS payments.
