Doctor's rampage

SAN ANGELO — A retired San Angelo physician went on a shooting rampage Sunday, killing his ill son, his seriously ill wife and the family's cat before killing himself, police said. Dr. Francis M. Spencer, 74, died around 10 p.m. Sunday, about 13 hours after he entered Shannon Medical Center, shot his wife twice in the head, then turned the gun on himself, said hospital officials and police.

Economy falters

NEW YORK — America's job growth stalled in March. Factory output slowed. Exports weakened. Anxious consumers grew so spendthrifty that the maker of the best-selling smoke slashed prices to battle cheap generics. Is the economy falling down again? Forecasters trying to interpret last week's statistics agreed the economy seems to be losing a burst of stamina that produced the best growth in four years in the final three months of 1992. Still, most regard the picture of weakness that emerged last week as a respite, not a relapse./7A

U.N. airlift resumes

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — About 1,500 worshipers risked sniper fire to hear a Palm Sunday appeal for peace in the war-scarred Sacred Heart Cathedral, as the U.N. airlift resumed after a 16-day suspension. Artillery shells fell on the capital early in the day and again in late afternoon, further straining a week-old truce./3A

No lotto winner

AUSTIN — No winning tickets were sold in the weekend Lotto Texas drawing and its estimated $3 million jackpot, the state comptroller's office said Sunday. The next Lotto Texas drawing will be Wednesday night. If sales continue as expected, the estimated jackpot for that drawing will be $8 million, State Comptroller John Sharp said. Winning numbers Saturday were 6, 10, 22, 27, 37 and 49. Seventy-five entries matched five of the six numbers, good for $2,304 each, state officials said.

Gulf protection

WASHINGTON — Members of Congress from Texas and other coastal states have long contended that the Gulf of Mexico is getting short shrift from the federal government. In an effort to protect the vital resource, which provides everything from oil to shellfish and tourism, they are again renewing their efforts to implement legislation protecting the gulf./8A

Tech 'Swoopes' to championship

ATLANTA (AP) — A championship game record for Sheryl Swoopes, a championship for her team. Texas Tech's wondrous season is complete.

Swoopes showed why she was the national player of the year, scoring 47 points to cap a record-breaking run through the NCAA tournament and lead Texas Tech to its first women's title with an 84-82 victory Sunday over Ohio State. Complete coverage/1C

Clinton cements 'new partnership'

■ President pledges review of Cold War restrictions on Russia.

Associated Press

VANCOUVER, British Columbia — President Clinton cemented a "new democratic partnership" with Boris Yeltsin on Sunday, extending $1.6 billion in aid and pledging a review of Cold War restrictions that inhibit trade and other ties between the United States and Russia.

Yeltsin pronounced himself "fully satisfied" with the results of a weekend summit that stressed economics rather than the thorny arms control issues of the past.

The two men seemed to get along well, striding side-by-side into the summit-ending news conference and shaking hands cordially afterwards. "We're both people's presidents," Clinton said. "We have a lot in common in that regard."

The president said he and congressional leaders already had agreed to make a thorough review of Cold War restrictions that apply to Russia "even though it is now a democratic state" and lift as many as possible.

Clinton lavishly praised Yeltsin and said it was the "high duty of all the world's democracies" to assist Russian reforms "in their new hour of challenge."

He said the $1.6 billion in U.S. aid would provide "immediate and tangible results for the Russian people," and benefit Americans as well. The package includes direct grants and credits for the purchase of

Cults' lawyers dispute details of gunfight

N.Y. Times News Service

■ Related story/8A

WACO — Lawyers for David Koresh and his deputy have made several assertions in interviews over the last few days that contradict the official version of the Feb. 28 gunfight at the Branch Davidian compound.

Among the assertions made by the religious sect's lawyers were: that four federal agents were captured in the raid and later released and that agents flying in helicopters over the main compound building fired shots. Those assertions have been denied by the authorities.

In addition, one lawyer said that details of a surrender had been worked out.

The lawyers, Dick DeGuerin, who represents Koresh, and Jack Zimmermann, who represents the cult's second-in-command, Steve Schneider, are the only people other than cult members to have been inside the compound since the shootout, other than two religious fanatics who have sneaked into the com-

Drinking bout, bartender's calm end 11-day manhunt

MARTINSBURG, W.Va. (AP) — A fugitive captured at a bar after an 11-day spree that police said included sexual assaults and abductions said Sunday he stopped for a drink because he was lonely after days in the woods.

"I just wanted to be around somebody," Randy Eugene McBee said at one of two arraignments.

McBee was arrested Saturday night at the Jolly Joker Tavern, where he had been drinking for three hours, after an unidentified man accompanying him told a waitress he was being held against his will.

Navy wants to put women in front-line combat jobs

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Navy wants to put women in all its front-line combat jobs — as fighter pilots, submariners and warship crew members — within the next four years, officials say.

In a tradition-breaking plan ready for action by Defense Secretary Les Aspin, the Navy suggests allowing women to serve on six classes of combat support ships within the next several months. It also would allow them to enter training for more advanced combat jobs, some of which take years to earn.

The sweeping plan is designed to repair the Navy's battered image in the wake of the Tailhook sex abuse scandal. It would also put the service in the forefront of revising attitudes toward women in the military.

Nation remembers King, his dream 25 years later

Associated Press

Twenty-five years after the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr.'s words were silenced by an assassin's bullet, civil rights leaders reminded a racially charged nation Sunday that King dreamed of a land where children will not be judged by the color of their skin.

"His dream lives on in the hearts of a growing community of dreamers in every nation," King's widow, Coretta Scott King, said at a memorial service at Ebenezer Baptist Church in Atlanta, where King was co-pastor.

Adjacent to the church is the Martin Luther King Jr. Center for Nonviolent Social Change, where King's tomb is located on a plaza. The Rev. Joseph Lowery, head of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, placed a wreath there Sunday.

In the past year, racial tensions have erupted into violence in Los Angeles, Las Vegas, San Francisco, Seattle, Atlanta and New York, and some have questioned whether progress toward civil rights has been halted since King's death.

"It seems sometimes that we take two steps forward and three back," said Elisa Gilham, 63, a trustee at Ebenezer Baptist Church.

King was shot April 4, 1968, at the Lorraine Motel in Memphis, Tenn., where he was staying while in town to organize a sanitation workers' strike. James Earl Ray is serving a 99-year prison sentence for the killing.

One of the largest of Sunday's tributes took place at Mason Temple in Memphis, where King gave his last speech the night before he was killed.

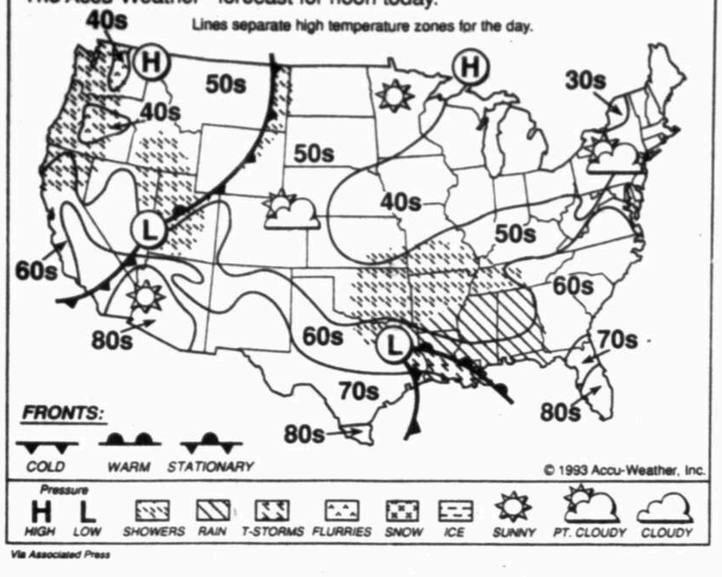

"We have not overcome," Mayor W.W.

Sunny skies, mid-70s ahead

Staff report

Today's forecast calls for sunny skies, a high in the mid-70s and south winds at 15-25 mph. Tonight should be mostly clear with a low near 50, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Tuesday should be mostly sunny with increasing afternoon cloudiness and a high in the mid-70s.

After an overnight low of 38, Sunday's high reached 67, compared to the record high for that date of 93 set in 1939. The record low was 28 set in 1970.

STATE

A low-pressure system helped push a cold front through Texas on Sunday, bringing scattered rainfall and mostly cloudy skies to the state.

The Pacific front moved into the Gulf of Mexico by Sunday evening, while the upper-level low remained in North Texas.

High temperatures reached only the upper 30s in the Panhandle, with 86 degrees at McAllen in South Texas.

The 57-degree reading at Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport Sunday afternoon was the lowest observed since March 20. The airport recorded .47 inch of rainfall.

Winds were mostly northerly to northwesterly at 10 to 20 mph statewide, with gusts east of the West Texas mountains. The far west had variable winds less than 10 mph.

A slight chance of rain was forecast through early today in North Texas, with clearing expected later from the west. Patchy fog was possible overnight over the southeastern Panhandle and northern sections of the South Plains.

Overnight lows should range from the 30s to 50s and 60s along the coast, with daytime highs from the 50s in the Panhandle to 80s in the south.

Forecasters predicted a chance of afternoon thunderstorms Tuesday and Tuesday night in western parts of North Texas, with highs in the 70s and lows from 58 to 64 degrees.

NATION

A new storm spread snow across the mountains of the West on Sunday, and rain fell across the southern Plains and into the South.

Rain and thundershowers were scattered over northern California and the northern Rockies throughout the day, with snow at higher elevations.

As much as 6 inches of snow fell overnight in California's Sierra Nevada near Lake Tahoe, and 2 inches of new snow accumulated at Donner Summit early in the day.

A winter storm watch was in effect for today over the mountains and foothills of Montana.

Rain extended across Oklahoma, Missouri, Arkansas, northern Mississippi and central Alabama.

Heaviest rainfall during the six hours up to 1 p.m. CDT was 0.75 of an inch at Fort Smith, Ark.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

food and other goods.

"We will expand exchanges between American farmers, business people, students and others with expertise working directly with the Russian people," he said.

Clinton said there would be a special effort to invest in Russia's oil and gas industries, an effort overseen by Vice President Al Gore.

The summit gave Yeltsin a sizable package of U.S. aid — though far less than Russia needs — before an April 25 referendum that will determine if Yeltsin's power and program have the support of the Russian people. His critics were sure to deride him as too beholden to Washington.

Clinton emphasized that the U.S. aid package — $1.6 billion in grants and credits — was only a first step. "We will not stand on the sidelines," he said.

The package was swollen by $700 million for grain sales to Moscow under extraordinarily easy terms, a boon both for Russia families and the American farmers who will send their crops to Moscow.

Yeltsin said flatly that Clinton had agreed to end the so-called Jackson-Vanik legislation that denies favorable trade terms to Russia as long as Moscow places restrictions on emigration.

But Clinton indicated discussions weren't that far along. He said he and congressional leaders had recently agreed to compile a list of "every one of the Cold War and other legislation restrictions that are still being applied to Russia, even though it is now a democratic state." He said they would "make as many changes as possible."

Clinton said Yeltsin had assured him there were no longer any individuals in Russia who were being blocked from leaving.

Sharing a podium that bore the Stars and Stripes and the Russian tricolor, the two men seemed eager to leave the Cold War behind. Clinton issued a remarkable public statement of regret that an American submarine had collided with a Russian sub in the Barents Sea several days earlier. Yeltsin said he was "now finalizing" a schedule for removal of the last Russian troops from Cuba.

Clinton said that for 45 years the two countries "pursued a deadly confrontation in nuclear arms. Now we can pursue a safe and steady cooperation."

Said Yeltsin, "We are struggling against Communism."

Clinton said he had asked America's allies "to come forth with their own individual initiatives" to aid Russia, and that he and Yeltsin had discussed a coordinated effort by the world's seven industrialized nations to help Russia stabilize its economy and its currency.

NAVY: Plan would allow women in combat

(From 1A)

The plan would also make it difficult for the military to bar any other group — such as homosexuals — from combat jobs, as some have proposed.

"The plan is to increase the role of women in the Navy. . . . it is something the Navy would very much like to have happen," said a senior Pentagon official knowledgeable about the plan who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Adm. Frank Kelso Jr, the Navy's top admiral, has approved the plan, the official said.

At present, women are barred from flying combat aircraft and serving on major warships, such as aircraft carriers, destroyers or cruisers and submarines.

However, they do serve on 64 of the Navy's 453 vessels — primarily supply ships, such as oilers or submarine tenders, or repair and salvage vessels.

Allowing women in the Navy's premier combat slots means they could seek out and destroy enemies as F/A-18 fighter pilots, for example, or as nuclear missile launchers on Trident submarines.

Congress has passed legislation to repeal the ban on women in certain Air Force aircraft and to allow women to fly Navy aircraft. However, the law does not require the armed services to change their policies.

Aspin has signaled that he's ready to approve placing women in some combat slots. Because of the new law, Aspin could simply sign a directive to the services, telling them to move on the issue.

"The Navy believes it must have the sign-off of the secretary before it can move forward on this," said a senior Navy officer, who also spoke on condition of anonymity.

The Navy's push for addressing the role of women in the service gained momentum under a former Navy assistant secretary for manpower, Barbara Spyridon Pope. She headed a panel set up after the 1991 Tailhook convention, where more than two dozen women — half of them naval officers — reported being groped and fondled by Navy and Marine Corps aviators.

KING: Nation pays tribute to man, dream

(From 1A)

Herenton, who became the city's first black elected mayor in 1991, told some 4,000 people. "We still have racism, bigotry, poverty, joblessness, homelessness and greed."

Later, about 300 people stood in a steady rain outside the National Civil Rights Museum (where the Lorraine once stood) for a candlelight prayer vigil and a moment of silence in King's honor.

The Rev. Jesse Jackson, who was with King at the Lorraine, said at All Saints Episcopal Church in Pasadena, Calif., that if the nation had learned the lessons of the 1960s civil rights movement, the Los Angeles riots wouldn't have occurred.

Americans still haven't learned the danger of "having large segments of society with no stake in it," he said.

Later, Jackson told a rally in nearby Los Angeles that President Clinton should have an aid program for U.S. cities like the one proposed for Russia.

Jackson also called on Clinton to hold a town hall meeting in South Central Los Angeles before the verdicts are reached in the city's racially charged federal trial of four white officers accused of beating black motorist Rodney King.

When the officers were acquitted of similar charges after a state trial last year the deadly Los Angeles riots followed, starting in South Central Los Angeles.

At another tribute to King on Sunday, children in New York City were asked to commemorate his call for nonviolence by turning in their toy guns at a rally near the United Nations.

"Those of us who love peace must organize as effectively as the war hawks," Mayor David Dinkins told the rally.

Tony Jackson of Atlanta, who took part in the King ceremonies in Memphis, complained that there has been little such organization since King's death.

"The soul of our people died when he died," said Jackson, 19. "The fight continued but not with the same spirit. I don't know if we'll ever be able to capture it again."

On Aug. 28, 1963, King told marchers in Washington, D.C., of his hopes for the future.

"I have a dream that my four little children will one day live in a nation where they will not be judged by the color of their skin but by the content of their character," he said.

But a poll published Sunday found 52 percent of black respondents believe race relations in the United States are the same or worse than they were in 1968.

that they would stay," the waitress, Beckie Cunningham, said of the two men.

Bartender Dennis Owens called police. Three undercover troopers surprised McBee from behind, slamming his head to the table and throwing him to the floor.

"We never let anybody know what was going on the whole time," Owens said.

McBee, 38, a convicted burglar from nearby Berkeley Springs, had been the subject of an exhaustive search in Maryland, Virginia and West Virginia's Eastern Panhandle after he escaped March 23 from a work-release center at Church Hill, Md.

Police suspect McBee of sexually assaulting three women, taking at least four people hostage and stealing cars, weapons and cash.

McBee was arraigned on charges of kidnapping, armed robbery, grand larceny and daytime burglary, in addition to a Maryland fugitive warrant. Other charges, including sexual assault, will be taken before a grand jury, prosecutors said.

At Berkeley County Magistrate Court, McBee told The Associated Press he spent most of his time on the run in the woods of West Virginia's hilly Eastern Panhandle, sleeping outside.

Asked why he went on a crime spree, he said: "I keep asking myself that, too. I don't know. Something snapped inside of me."

He said he "was ready to put my life down" and would attempt escape again "if the opportunity arises."

"If I did anybody wrong, I'm sorry," he said. "I don't want to spend the rest of my life in prison, but I didn't know which way to go."

He was later arraigned a second time in adjacent Morgan County, where the charges originated, then returned to jail in Martinsburg, where he was held without bail.

State police Sgt. Greg Stevens said McBee acted as if he was expecting to run into police. A .38-caliber revolver and knife were confiscated from him.

"So I think maybe he was going to one of these taverns to get some false courage and then he was going to confront us," Stevens said

The unidentified man with McBee at the bar was questioned by state police and released. Authorities would not say if he was held hostage but said they want to know what part he played.

On Friday, McBee allegedly broke into an elderly couple's home, held them hostage for 14 hours, raped the 79-year-old woman and robbed them, police said.

CULT: Attorneys dispute details of gunfight pound in the last two weeks.

(From 1A)

The lawyers generally declined to provide any of their own personal observations about the scene inside, saying they feared that such reports could jeopardize their status as lawyers in the case and force them to be witnesses at a future trial.

That was the reason why both lawyers refused to confirm or deny a report by a sect member who has been released, Rita Riddle, that six Branch Davidians were killed in the raid and its aftermath, five inside the compound and one outside.

Ms. Riddle also maintained that one woman had been killed in her bed. Until now, the deaths of only two cult members have been confirmed. Four agents for the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms also died in the gunfight.

A spokesman for the bureau, Jerry Singer, denied that ATF helicopters had flown over the cult's compound or fired into it.

"The helicopters did not overfly the compound on Feb. 28," Singer said, "and I have no information that anyone fired from the helicopters." In addition, the head of the bureau, Stephen Higgins, testified to Congress on Friday that ATF agents did not shoot through walls or roofs.

Singer also denied that agents of the bureau were captured then released. "No," he said. "It did not happen."

While DeGuerin was less forthcoming than Zimmermann, each confirmed the other's account of the Branch Davidian's description of the raid and its aftermath.

In separate interviews, Zimmermann, a former Marine combat officer decorated with two Bronze Stars and a Purple Heart, described tactical aspects of the assault and DeGuerin the legal and political implications. Both lawyers clearly believed that helicopters flying over the compound during the raid had fired into upper floors of the main building from above.

Zimmermann said: "An expert will be able to tell from the angle of the trajectory plus the pattern whether there are entry or exit holes. If it's in the ceiling and it's clearly an exit hole, it had to have come from above. How else could it have come in?"

Both lawyers said they had no knowledge of any children being killed or injured during the initial raid, contradicting statements Koresh made to a radio station in days following the shootout.

Both lawyers said that Koresh had indeed been injured in the wrist and side during the first gunfight. "I saw the wounds and he did not appear to be in great pain," Zimmermann said. "But he certainly had his movement restricted and had to shift positions carefully. The wound is a through-and-through flesh wound."

STAGE: A 'pretty original' Clinton makes world debut

(From 1A)

nor's strong suit — an easy command of facts and figures.

The early review from his summit partner, Boris Yeltsin: "Pretty original."

Not only was Clinton out to prove his foreign-policy prowess to Americans, but to other world leaders as well.

As usual, the two-day summit in this western Canadian seaport was carefully choreographed by both sides to put the two leaders in the best light for domestic consumption in their respective countries.

They went through all the ritual steps of summitry — praising each other, plunging into crowds, being seen about town, taking a reflective "walk in the woods," holding a final joint news conference.

Despite the best-laid plans, though, summits can go sour. Remember President Reagan's October 1986 summit with Mikhail Gorbachev in Reykjavik, Iceland — nuclear arms talks broke off abruptly in a major misunderstanding between the two leaders.

This one didn't.

And even though Yeltsin remains on extremely shaky political ground in his home and Clinton faces a daunting salesmanship job on the aid package in his, both leaders left the summit having achieved most of what each wanted.

For Clinton, that meant being viewed in the eyes of Americans and U.S. allies as a serious leader in the world arena.

"I think he's handled it extremely well," said Washington attorney Robert Strauss, an elder of Clinton's Democratic Party who was George Bush's ambassador to Moscow.

Both Clinton and Yeltsin "were two very impressive politicians," said the summit's host, Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney.

Clinton came to office with no foreign experience whatsoever and a penchant for criticizing Bush for spending too much time on foreign policy.

Yet from the very start Clinton has had to face issues in the U.S. relationship with Moscow far more intricate than those ever faced by Bush, an expert in foreign affairs.

Events occurred so quickly during Bush's presidency — the fall of the Berlin Wall, the breakup of the Soviet Union, the fall of communism and finally the ouster of Mikhail Gorbachev — that the United States could do little more than react.

Now, as some of the dust has settled, the New World Order turns out to a difficult economic puzzle. And deciding how to prop up Russia's economy is far more complicated — and far less dramatic — than signing agreements to limit nuclear warheads.

But this in an area in which Clinton — the master policy wonk — was clearly at home, rattling off economic facts and figures.

Those familiar with Saturday night's summit session focusing on economics said both presidents talked at length and in detail, without notes or briefing books, on the intricacies of economic problems within Russia.

And during a photo session on Saturday Clinton quickly segued from discussing the costs of German reunification to an expanded Japanese role in assisting Russia.

His argument that helping to support economic and political reforms in Russia now is far less costly than the alternative — having to rearm because Russia and its nuclear weapons fall back into the hands of reactionaries — sounds vaguely like his bitter-medicine domestic economic policies.

"'His (Clinton's) psychology is original. His psychology is such that he wants for the interests of the common man to become the interest of humanity. So for him, what is happening in Russia is just as important as the national interests of America," Yeltsin said when asked to size up the new U.S. president.

"You understand. That's very interesting and pretty original. Unusual."

U.N. airlift resumes into Sarajevo

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — About 1,500 worshipers risked sniper fire to hear a Palm Sunday appeal for peace in the war-scarred Sacred Heart Cathedral, as the U.N. airlift resumed after a 16-day suspension.

Artillery shells fell on the capital early in the day and again in late afternoon, further straining a week-old truce. Officials of Bosnia's Muslim-led government reported at least three deaths from the shelling and at least two from sniper bullets. Sarajevo radio reported 20 people wounded.

In eastern Bosnia, another aid mission reached the embattled Muslim enclave of Srebrenica by road to deliver 85 tons of food and medicine. But town officials blocked the planned evacuation of wounded and other refugees, apparently fearing it would support Serb efforts to clear the area of Muslims.

An international air operation dropped an additional 45 tons of food and nearly 1 ton of medicine overnight in the Srebrenica area.

Croatian radio, meanwhile, reported three people killed and seven wounded in fighting in the Srebrenica area Sunday.

In other developments:

■ Bosnia's Muslim president, Alija Izetbegovic, rejected a call from the Serbs for direct peace talks, spokesman Kemal Muftic said Sunday. A day earlier, Bosnian Serb leaders rejected an international plan for ending the year-old ethnic war.

■ In Vancouver, British Columbia, President Clinton's spokesman, George Stephanopoulos, said the American leader "deeply believes" Serbs must be punished for aggression in Bosnia.

The Security Council is expected to impose stiffer sanctions this week on Serb-dominated Yugoslavia for supporting the rebels in Bosnia.

■ Scattered clashes were reported across Bosnia, but there were no total figures on casualties. On Saturday, Bosnian news media said at least 23 people died in Serb attacks, a claim U.N. observers said they could not confirm.

Roman Catholics, mainly Croats, filled the cathedral in the center of the city, an area often raked with sniper fire from Serb militiamen holding the hills surrounding the capital. They carried sprigs of pine or leafy branches to be blessed for the holy day that ushers in the Holy Week before Easter.

"The gospel says that he who lives by the sword dies by the sword," said Archbishop Vinko Puljic, spiritual leader of 500,000 Roman Catholics of the Sarajevo archdiocese.

"No earthly force is eternal," he said in his sermon. "So if we are troubled now, we have to know in our hearts that God's justice always prevails."

He then offered a prayer for the mainly Orthodox Serbs whose bullets and artillery shells have torn holes in the cathedral's huge wooden doors, shattered stained-glass and gouged the walls.

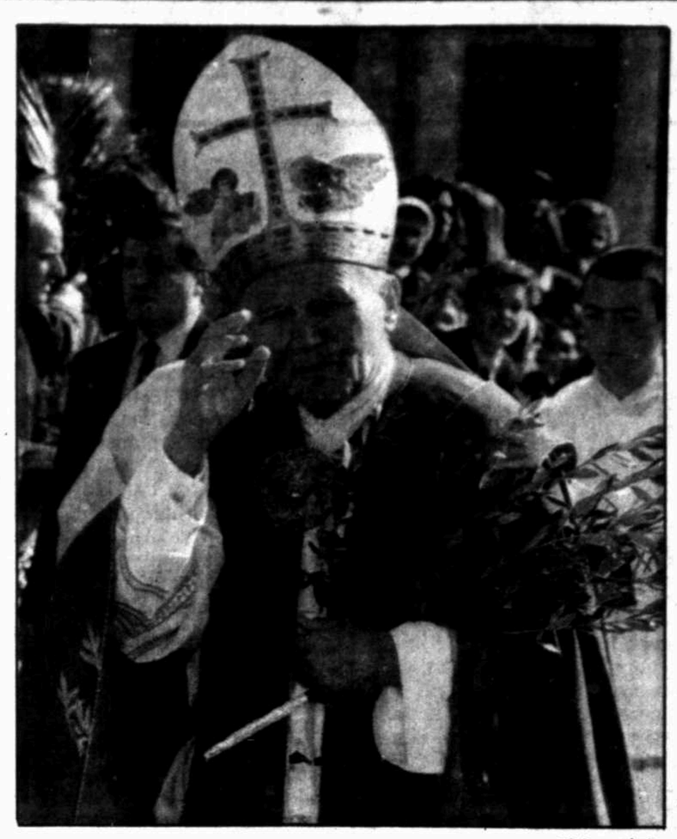

U.N. officials said 17 planes delivered 170 tons of food and medicine to Sarajevo on Sunday.

The Sarajevo relief operation had been suspended March 19 because of fighting around the airport.

Alemka Lisinski, a U.N. spokesman in Zagreb, Croatia, said an eight-truck convoy arrived in Srebrenica. Eight more empty trucks stood by in Bratunac, six miles to the north, to help evacuate people to Tuzla, another enclave held by government forces in eastern Bosnia.

But Judith Kumin, a U.N. spokeswoman in Belgrade, said the convoy left Srebrenica with only two women because authorities in Srebrenica would not allow other refugees to leave.

It appeared the officials saw further evacuations as an aid to the effort by Bosnian Serbs to force all Muslims from the eastern region. But the BH Press agency said a statement from Srebrenica's local government implied it was too dangerous for evacuations by truck and called for buses to be sent instead.

Celebrating Palm Sunday

Pope John Paul II holds a stem of dried olive branches as he leads a procession in St Peter's Square where he celebrated an outdoor mass to mark Palm Sunday. The Pope will visit the United States this summer for the 1993 World Youth Celebration in Denver.

Muslim underground tapes spread radical word

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — "No, no, no!" cried the seller of religious cassettes, holding up his arms as if handcuffed, when a customer asked for tapes of clerics damning the government.

The government campaign against Islamic militants who would make Egypt a strict Muslim state is driving the extremists from their mosques and other public forums, under threat of stiff jail sentences.

But an underground communication network keeps the radicals' message alive through recorded sermons, faxes and slogans spray-painted on walls.

"Muslims should fight the enemies of Allah inside the country before those outside, until these tongues that attack Allah, his prophet and religion are muted," prayer leader Ahmed el-Mahallawi declared in a speech circulating on cassette.

"We always need to defend Islam not only with the sword — and the sword is required — not only through jihad (holy war), but also through dialogue to wipe out the lies that the enemies of Islam are propagating about it," he said.

Tape vendors and experts on Islamic fundamentalism say Mahallawi, once jailed by the late President Anwar Sadat, and Abdul Hamid el-Kishk, banned from public speaking since 1981, are among the most popular underground prayer leaders.

But for followers of al-Gamaa al-Islamiya (The Islamic Group), the words of Sheik Omar Abdel-Rahman are the most prized. From his storefront mosque in Jersey City, N.J., the blind 54-year-old preacher serves as their spiritual and political guide.

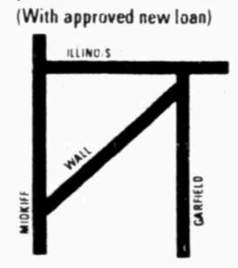

Four of five suspects detained in the Feb. 26 bombing of the World Trade Center in New York, which killed six people and wounded more than 1,000, have prayed in Abdel-Rahman's congregation.

Al-Gamaa's membership is estimated at 200,000 of Egypt's 58 million people, including 10,000 prone to violence. Their gunfights with police and other attacks have left more than 150 people dead and 230 injured in 15 months.

Abdel-Rahman's most recent missives to followers in Egypt have been letters distributed outside mosques or faxed to international news agencies.

New Disneyland attraction opens

By David Tobenkin
N.Y. Times News Service

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Mickey and Minnie Mouse have lived in side-by-side homes in blissful seclusion for decades now, but January, they threw open their doors to children worldwide.

Their homes are in Mickey's Toontown, Anaheim, Calif.—based Disneyland's first new land in 20 years. Toontown is a whimsical 3-acre city full of brightly colored cartoon-like buildings and homes with not a single straight wall.

Disney officials hope the new attraction will boost attendance that has been flat for the past five years. There were 11.6 million visitors in 1992, down slightly from 1991, according to Amusement Business magazine.

"I think Toontown proves that the park will never be finished," said Disney Chief Executive Michael Eisner at Toontown's opening ceremony. "As soon as we stop we will atrophy."

THE NEW attraction is directed toward young children, who have lacked an area of their own at the park, Eisner said.

"We needed to grow for young kids, kids under 6," he said. "Toontown will encourage people to come out because it will give more capacity for its youngest customers."

Some analysts agreed.

"This revitalizes the park's entertainment offerings for young children at the park," said Ray Braun, senior vice president at Economic Research Associates, a Los Angeles-based theme park consulting firm. "The park has never had a focus for young children."

Disney's Toontown is highly interactive, featuring fountains that speak when people walk on pavement nearby, and a pit full of plastic acorns for children to bury themselves in.

Highlights of the attraction are Mickey and Minnie's homes, where children can meet the stars. After seeing the pair in short films, guests are taken to the stars' dressing rooms, where Mickey and Minnie — dressed in period costumes from the clips — wait to greet them.

Eisner was asked whether two homes meant that something was amiss between the sweethearts.

"I suspect what is in your mind is more aggressive than in some (others) ...," Eisner said. "They have separate houses as well they should."

Disney officials refused to provide a cost estimate for the project, but Disneyland president Jack Lindquist said that it was comparable to Disney rides such as Splash Mountain.

"I think it's great, very colorful and Mickey and Minnie's houses were great," said Sara Seiniger, 8, of Beverly Hills, Calif.

YOUNGER CHILDREN also gave Toontown glowing reports.

"I liked Mickey's house ... the telephone ... the slide," said Jordan Allender, 4, of the Los Angeles area of Woodland Hills.

Disneyland is in Orange County, southeast of Los Angeles.

Disney also reported record quarterly earnings of $260.3 million (48 cents per share) for the first quarter that ended Dec. 31, 1992, up from $208.1 million (39 cents per share) for the like period a year earlier.

Revenue was $2.4 billion vs. $1.9 billion.

All three segments of the company's business reported increased earnings. The results included revenue from the theatrical and home video releases of films like "Beauty and the Beast" and "Aladdin," as well as licensing revenue from the two movies.

However, the company's 49-percent stake in the Euro Disney theme park near France resulted in a $43-million loss for the quarter from that operation. The park, which opened a year April 12, has been affected by lower-than-expected turnouts.

Fling for a short weekend in Texas this spring

By Elizabeth Campbell
N.Y. Times News Service

Put off those dull, boring plans to do spring cleaning. Take some road trips instead. Texas is blossoming with spring fun and festivals, so go to a folk festivial or Cinco de Mayo celebration. Here is some information that could help you make plans for that spring fling.

■ Huntsville: At the Gen. Sam Houston Folk Festival, April 16-18, you can listen to music and indulge in foods from many ethnic groups including Polish, Hispanic, Cajun and native American. Also, see demonstrations of quilting, spinning, weaving and other pioneer crafts.

Admission is $5 and $1 for children 6-12. For more details, call the Chamber of Commerce at (409) 295-8113.

■ San Antonio: Texas' largest party is Fiesta San Antonio, April 16-25. Covering both the historic downtown area and neighborhoods across the city, the celebration encompasses more than 150 events such as concerts, carnivals, sporting events and parades. Call the fiesta office for more information, (210) 227-5191.

■ Corpus Christi: Buccaneer Days, April 22-May 2, is a celebration of Gulf Coast heritage. In addition to parades, music and lots of food, there's the coronation of the Buccaneer Days king and queen. For more details, call (512) 882-3242.

■ Buffalo Gap: The Arts Festival, April 23-25, at the scenic, quiet Perini Ranch, benefits the museums of Abilene. You can view and buy works by some 100 artists and enjoy musical entertainment and children's activities. For more information, call (915) 673-4587.

■ Cinco de Mayo: Towns across Texas will celebrate Mexico's 1863 defeat of the French army in the Battle of Puebla de Los Angeles. You'll find a lot of Tejano and Mariachi music — and plenty of food, of course.

■ San Antonio's Market Square is where a lot of Cinco de Mayo celebrating takes place April 30-May 2. Come for the street dances, food, arts and crafts and lots of entertainment. Proceeds benefit the Mexican American Cultural Center. For more information, call (210) 299-8600.

■ Goliad is celebrating Cinco de Mayo April 30-May 1, on the Goliad Memorial Auditorium Grounds. Dance to Tejano and Mariachi music, see the coronation of the Cinco de Mayo queen and watch a reenactment of the battle of Puebla. For more details, call (512) 645-2144.

■ San Marcos' Cinco de Mayo fiesta is April 29-May 1, and things will be lively with a parade, menudo cook-off, concerts and ballet folklorico dancing. On April 30, listen to the sounds of Emilio Navaira and Grupo Rio along with Jimmy Gonzalez, Joe Lopez y Grupo Mazz. For more details, call (512) 353-8482.

■ Jefferson: This year's Historical Pilgrimage is April 30-May 2, and it's the perfect chance to tour some historic homes and buildings in Jefferson that aren't open otherwise. After the tour, listen to music at the First United Methodist Church and see a quilt show at the Ruth Lester Memorial. Other activities include an arts and crafts fair, city tours, boat rides and a parade. Tour tickets are $8. For more information, call (903) 665-2672.

Try to get tickets, too, to see the play, "The Diamond Bessie Murder Trial," telling the story of a Jefferson scandal. Tickets are $8 for seats on the main floor and $4 for balcony seating.

■ Bryan: Messina Hof Wine Cellars has its Springfest May 1. Grape stomping competitions, a fun run through vineyards, a Texas artists competition, chili cook-off, hayrides and winery tours are part of the fun. The next weekend, May 8-9, the winery holds a Mother's Day and antique rose event, with gourmet picnics offered. Call (409) 778-9463 for details.

■ Galveston: Head to the coast for the annual Tour of Historic Homes, May 1-2 and May 8-9. Nine historic homes and an apartment in a restored commercial building are on show, reflecting various architectural styles. One, built in 1838, is among the oldest homes on the island. Tickets are $13 in advance and $15 on tour days; the fee includes guided tours and shuttle service between homes. For more information, call (409) 765-7834.

■ Kerrville: The Kerrville Folk Festival, May 27-June 13, is a celebration of 20 years of folk music at Quiet Valley Ranch. Musicians from the United States, Canada and Austria are gathering to perform in evening concerts, folk song services, children's concerts and campfire sing-alongs.

Camping and parking are free when you purchase tickets, and several packages are available. For more information, call (512) 257-3600.

Gasparilla Island is Florida before glitz

By Suzy Patterson

BOCA GRANDE, Fla. (AP) — A quiet life has its special charm, especially when it's like a trip into the past.

Evenings, as the sun sets, and the breeze cools the beach, the sky turns unbelievable shades from blood-red edged in gold to turquoise and indigo.

But the exotic color splash is about all you'll see in night-life color at this low-keyed resort halfway between Fort Myers and Sarasota on the Gulf of Mexico. Boca Grande on Gasparilla Island is rather like Florida before the glitz set in.

They do have electric lights here, but they're for stylish dining and reading, maybe a little card-playing. One or two drinking establishments manage to keep their eyes propped open until about midnight or so in high season, roughly September to April.

In spite of recent development (perhaps 10,000 condominium units in the past 12 years), the island has managed to preserve a genuine flavor of old Florida, with a nostalgic air of the 1920s, when the place was in its heyday.

Reached by a causeway and toll bridge, with its sleepy town of Boca Grande, the island is seven miles long and one mile wide. It can be covered by bicycle in about an hour, if you keep up a steady pace.

ONCE A FAVORITE retreat of wealthy families like the Palmer Potters, the Duponts, and the Crowninshields, the island has a swashbuckling legend in its past.

It is supposedly named for Gaspar, a 17th-century pirate who liked it here and kept his mistresses on nearby Captiva.

In the late 19th century, it became a port for shipping phosphate. A railroad line was installed linking it up to the main east coast line, and it was soon "discovered" by the Frank Crowninshields, proper Bostonians with shipping money. Soon they and their friends were arriving in their own private railroad cars.

Finally, a hotel, the Gasparilla Inn, was built by an entrepreneur named Barron Collier.

Among the admirers of the resort were the family of Bayard Sharp, who had loved the place since he was a boy. He bought the inn in 1963.

Thanks to Sharp, the old-fashioned atmosphere lingers on in the inn with its cottages, where you can really get a big whiff of nostalgia.

The colonial-style main building with its columned entry, lobby of colorful chintz-covered chairs and old-fashioned "men's" lounge, the Pelican Club, has managed to preserve the traditional dignity of yesteryear.

But rooms done in bright designer colors don't lack for modern comforts.

And the spacious dining room offers service and charm as sleek and appealing as the best cruise ship's.

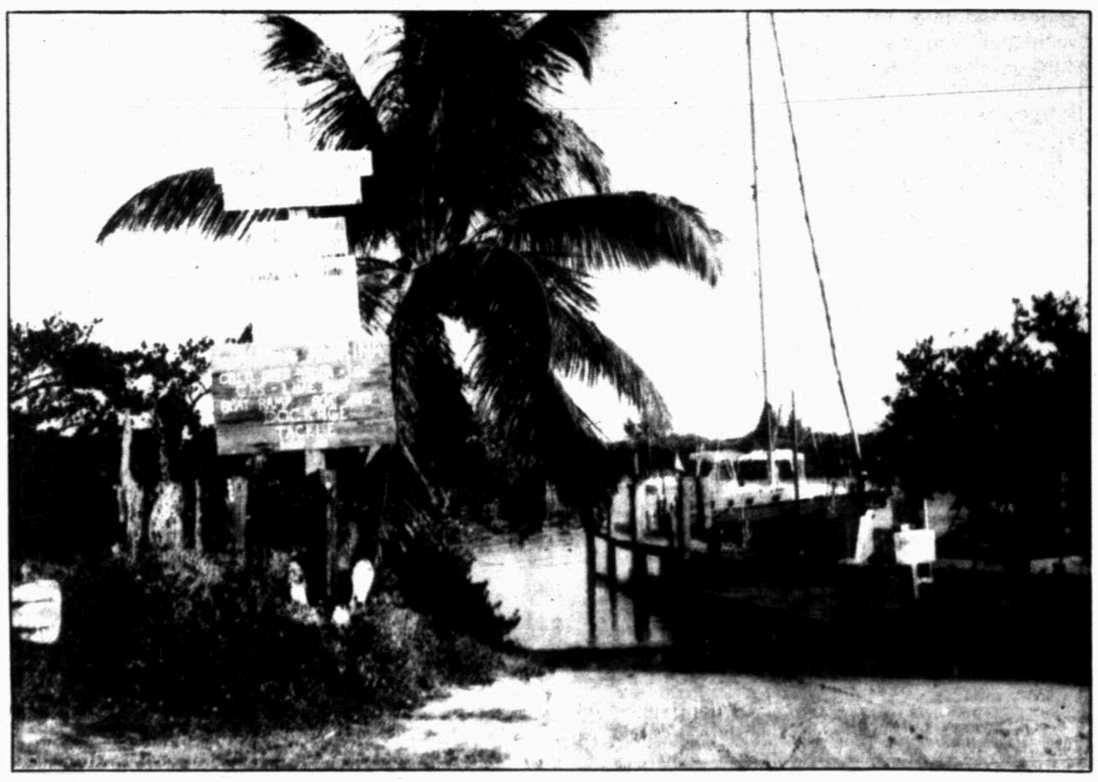

FROM THE TIME a family enters the dining room to the time they leave, they're looked after by a staff headed by Maitre d' Bob Witham, with his eastern accent, red linen jacket and courtly air.

The cuisine is classic intercontinental, and may feature anything from fresh oysters and shrimp cocktail to mussel gratin for starters. Main courses often include the best "catch of the day" fish, duck with cherry sauce, steak Diane.

The beachside-poolside restaurant buffet continues a decades-old tradition of fresh shrimp and crab salads, tempting entrees that range from fried crab cakes to an oriental-style stir-fry.

But old favorites are classics — hamburgers and what many claim to be the best hot dogs in the western hemisphere.

The sporting set works all this off in the pool or on the tennis courts or golf course, or more easily with a massage.

AP Laserphoto

This unpretentious marina is part of the laidback charm of Gasparilla Island off Florida's west coast.

What else do people do all day long? Besides all the sports, there are gentle pursuits like bird-watching or shell-collecting.

You can while away a morning checking out the yachts checking in at the marinas. The most colorful is Whidden's, with its jumble of snacks and baits and maybe an elderly dog or cat lounging around.

SHOPPERS REVEL IN the boutiques. A favorite hangout, Fugate's Drugstore is also known as a gift and clothes boutique.

The old railroad station where the swells once disembarked is now where everybody lurks around for gifts at Ariel's, other gift shops or the Loose Caboose — a friendly little delicatessen dispensing ice cream cones or gentle joke cards.

Besides the inn, there are other places to eat. The Pink, once the Pink Elephant, was a roistering sailors' hangout many years ago. It's now owned by the Inn, and though respectable with a modern decor, serves excellent food.

The Temptation attracts customers for its seafood.

A visit to the pink stucco Johann Fust library given by the Roger Amory family is recommended sightseeing, perhaps for its weekly "event" in season —a stereo concert in the garden.

A bicyle path covers the whole island, and a brisk ride up to the old phosphate plant is a scenic way to admire the gulls, the casuarinas and mangroves.

In May, the island attracts a slightly different clientele from the usual — a hard-drinking, hard-fishing group after the fighting tarpon found around Boca Grande pass in the spring.

But the usual pursuits and people are gentler: "This is just a place to come and do nothing special," in the words of Sue Welch, who's known the place for over sixty years.

"You play golf, windowshop in the boutiques and look forward to your marvelous salad lunches or a quiet dinner. That's enough."

History, histrionics figure in slogans boosting rural tourism

AUSTIN (AP) — They're part town pride and part promotion.

A bit of history, histrionics and a hook to bring people into town.

Whether they're in German or not quite germane, the city slogans of Central Texas help solve a town's identity crisis.

Traveling through Central Texas one finds oneself on the "Crossroads to Everywhere" (that's Luling): "Halfway to Everywhere" (that's Schulenburg): or on the "Crossroads of Texas" (in Hearne).

"Most of our little towns have begun to realize that we each have something unique," said Linda Moore, an economic development consultant and tourism advocate in Luling. "A lot of small towns have thought they don't have anything unique because they haven't thought about it."

But that thinking is changing.

Luling and Lockhart, with its "Step Above Texas Friendly" theme, recently have adopted their slogans to compete in the increasingly competitive rural tourism market.

Tourists "like to get out and have the rural experience," Moore said.

On the state and federal levels, rural tourism is considered an untapped resource.

Nationally, a Rural Tourism Development Foundation was established by Congress last fall to attract foreign visitors to the U.S. countryside as well as steer domestic dollars in that direction.

AP Laserphoto

Jan Hardin of the San Marcos Chamber of Commerce shows off the new city slogan.

Statewide, rural tourism is a priority, said Dianne McManigle of the Texas Department of Commerce's Tourism Division.

A slogan can be an integral part of marketing a rural town, she said.

Like towns around the state, Central Texas communities are jockeying for position.

If they have a slogan, they're making sure it still works. If one is not in place, they're working on it.

"It's definitely a time to get your name out there," said Susan Crowe, president of the Bastrop Chamber of Commerce, which is struggling to find a succinct slogan.

An early try, "Visit Historic Bastrop on the Banks of the Colorado River Nestled in the Lost Pines," was just too cumbersome, Crowe said.

Elsewhere:

Lago Vista leaders recently adopted the slogan "Lake Living, Texas Style," bought a billboard on Interstate 35 and secured a promise from the state for interstate highway signs directing people to Lake Travis.

San Marcos has shelved "A City for All Seasons" and adopted "A Texas Natural" to promote a new marketplace for Texas-made goods as well as the city's river and cave.

Smithville, which for decades raised people's curiosity by calling itself "Heart of the Megapolis," now uses "We Are Rolling," which refers to its railroad heritage and its economic development.

New Braunfels continues to project its Old Country heritage. For decades, the slogan "In New Braunfels ist das leben schoen (the living is great)" has graced businesses and bumper stickers.

Concierge tells tales

By Rob Hiaasen
N.Y. Times News Service

MANALAPAN, Fla. — In this ocean-side metropolis, the Ritz-Carlton offers presidential suites (with baby grand piano) at $2,850 for one night.

The clientele is the seaweed-wrap crowd — the need-a-Ferrari-for-the-day bunch. Please cater my yacht with kosher food only. Guests also want laser printers, balloon rides, or a $950 helicopter haul to Miami. Get me a 1950s dress for a costume ball this evening.

Even: "Where can I get a pair of Keds?" says Susanne Bevevino, the hotel's guest services director and a concierge. "The weirder the request, the more the challenge."

The concierge (Latin: conservus, fellow slave) can be a guest's best source and best friend for a weekend stay. At the Ritz-Carlton, seven concierges — working for $7 an hour plus tips — work the house phones.

"You have to know everything because you're in the firing line," says Bevevino, whose biggest tip was $100.

Guests want, want, want. They want reservations to the best restaurants in Palm Beach, they want to hide or be seen, they want Lion Country Safari. They want to go to the Bahamas tomorrow and need a ticket today. They want tailors and nannies and jewelers.

"We can't recommend a doctor for liability reasons," says Bevevino, a 25-year-old Buffalo, N.Y., native.

Guests want to see the concierge's informal list of area strip joints. Guests of the Ritz even want hotel-managed fantasies. Bevevino remembers setting up a 75-year-old man. His fantasy was to take a redhead out on a date in a Ferrari. The hotel got the car and gave the man's wife a dye job. The hotel called his room and told him to meet his wife downstairs.

"He stepped outside and didn't know who she was," Bevevino says. "They had a great weekend."

Of course, concierges face much greater challenges than Ferrari fantasies. One upset guest called the concierge desk one night.

"He had burned his private part in the shower," Bevevino says.

"I think we gave him a free weekend."

Espy confronts inspection laxity

The word "wholesome" doesn't leap to mind to describe the tainted hamburgers that killed three children and caused 500 illnesses from bacterial infection in the Seattle area in January. Yet the meat had passed a federal inspection and so bore the Agriculture Department's reassuring stamp, "Inspected for Wholesomeness."

These events have now led Agriculture Secretary Mike Espy to confront one of his department's dirty secrets: The nation's outmoded meat inspection system isn't geared to combat the invisible hazard of bacterial contamination. It relies primarily on the ability of inspectors to spot contaminated meat by sight or feel as carcasses move rapidly by on hooks. They have no ability to routinely check for dangerous microorganisms inside the carcasses. So Espy wisely pledges to establish a new system that emphasizes advanced microbiology and monitoring devices.

The plan — possibly the most ambitious updating of the nation's meat inspection program since it was established 87 years ago — calls for new research to determine whether modern mass-production techniques are tainting the meat supply with harmful bacteria, and to develop quicker tests that can be used easily by on-site inspectors in slaughterhouses. In the end, every aspect of the meat production and distribution system stands to be affected, from the farm to the kitchen.

Traditionally inclined to put meat and dairy interests before public health, the Agriculture Department has long abdicated its duty to minimize the risk from contaminated products. The recent deaths might have been avoided had the Department stirred itself to contain the bacterial infection problem after a 1982 outbreak disclosed it.

Other red flags also went unheeded. A 1985 report by the National Academy of Sciences warned that the old inspection system was geared to protect against hazards that no longer exist, like meat discolored by animal diseases, and suggested a modernization plan. It was largely ignored.

Meanwhile, the problem of bacterial food poisoning continues to grow. There's no cause for consumer panic; the nation's meat supply remains relatively safe. But it's not unreasonable to demand that all products be clean enough so that a cooking error doesn't result in serious illness.

Details of Espy's plan for revamping meat inspection still need to be spelled out. But developing scientific standards for safe bacteria levels and practical equipment for in-plant testing could take several years.

However, some improvements needn't wait. Espy has already notified inspectors that a zero tolerance level for fecal contamination in beef is to be strictly enforced; it should be extended to cover pork and poultry. And soon, he says, he will issue regulations to put safe handling instructions on all raw and cooked meat and poultry products. Yet he is unwilling to stop the misleading stamping of meat for wholesomeness.

Still, Espy's willingness to confront this long-standing problem in his first few weeks in office is a refreshing break from Agriculture's traditional laxity in consumer protection.

Congress ponders further RTC funding

WASHINGTON — As the final credits are about to roll on the savings and loan cleanup, Congress is adding another political twist to the plot.

Anderson

The Resolution Trust Corp., formed in 1989 to straighten out the savings and loan mess, says it needs $28 billion to finish the job. But the temporary agency has become a white elephant on Capitol Hill, as persistent revelations of fraud, waste and mismanagement have made many members of Congress reluctant to open the purse strings one last time. While Congress fidgets, ailing thrifts that stay open as a result are costing taxpayers an additional $3 million per day. Since RTC funding dried up last spring, overall cleanup costs have risen by an estimated $1 billion.

Last year, RTC funding died in Congress after a loose coalition of conservative Republicans joined with liberal Democrats to strike it down. This time, the coalition includes several members of the freshman class, who see little point in writing out a $28 billion blank check to an agency with a well-earned reputation for fraud and waste. For some Republicans, it's more a matter of getting even with Democrats who refused to honor Bush's request last year.

Sen. Carol Mosely Braun, D-Ill., called it the "vote from hell," though she reluctantly voted in favor of the funding as it passed the Senate Banking Committee two weeks ago. But Braun and fellow freshman Patty Murray, D-Wash., helped tie several strings to the money. Under this carrot-and-stick approach, Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen will be required to periodically report back to the committee with assurances that the money is being spent wisely. But even if the full Senate authorizes the new funds, several observers expect the biggest test to come when it hits the House.

In February, our associate Dean Boyd obtained a series of highly confidential reports on ongoing investigations by the RTC inspector general.

Since we published these embarrassing revelations of the ongoing IG probes, the agency has been looking hard for leakers, but to no avail. RTC spokesman Steve Katsanos would neither "confirm nor deny" reports from numerous sources that the FBI is investigating the source of the leaks. "Obviously, conducting a complete investigation of themselves (IG) would not be the most appropriate way to proceed."

In written responses to questions posed by the Senate Banking Committee, the IG recently added more horror stories to this long list of abuses at the agency.

■ One notable example involved a recent audit of an RTC office on the West Coast, which showed that the RTC has paid, or will pay, about $1.8 million in disposition fees to asset managers for assets that the managers didn't even sell. The IG cited another audit, in 1991, which revealed that the RTC once made a $149,000 duplicate payment to a contractor, and then waited almost eight months to recover the funds after the contractor reported the mistake.

■ The RTC has also discovered problems with loan servicers hired by the agency. One recent audit revealed that a loan servicer had received $28.9 million that had yet to be remitted to the RTC. Instead, auditors discovered some $18 million in uncashed checks stuffed in a file cabinet, and another $10.9 million deposited into a "suspense account."

Christians have right to seek political office

Dandy Dan Rather, the CBS anchor, announced the other night a big, important story: some Christians are running for the school board seats in their home towns.

Reese

The story has cropped up on TV several times. This is a good indication it originated with some special interest outfit — in this case, probably, the People for the American Way, an outfit with its own agenda that masquerades under the guise of civil liberties.

The tenor of the story, of course, is that some awful group is conspiring to seize the country — school board by school board to use the melodramatic hokum of the CBS report.

Whether one agrees with Christians — fundamentalist, loose-interpreters, rightwing, leftwing or whatever version — is entirely irrelevant. Sometimes I do and sometimes I don't. Still, there is nothing in our Constitution, our laws, or our traditions that denies citizenship to Christians.

As citizens, they are perfectly within their right to run for office, to organize political campaigns, and to contend in the marketplace of ideas. The absurd bias of the media and of those trying to make something sinister out of this is evident.

As it happens, there are 10 Jews in the U.S. Senate and only one black, even though there are far more African-Americans in America than Jews. Does this mean Jews are trying to take over the United States — Senate seat by Senate seat? Of course not. Yet Jews do run for office. Jews do organize to make sure their views are heard by public officials. African Americans run for office. African Americans organize to make sure their views are heard by public officials. Gays run for office. Gays organize, etc. and so forth on down a long list of people who, believe it or not, exercise their rights as citizens in the political arena.

What's the difference? Christians run for office. Christians organize to make sure their views are heard by public officials. Why are the same activities — legitimately practicing democracy, I might add — acceptable if done by one group and sinister if done by another?

But the double-standard these new Christian political activists are being subjected to doesn't stop there. One charge against them is that they don't announce ahead of time they are Christians. This is one of those heads-I-win, tails-you-lose dirty tactics. If they mention their Christian beliefs, they are slapped by their critics for injecting religion into a campaign; if they don't, they are accused of being sneaky and deceptive.

Presumably, of course, the overwhelming majority of American public officeholders are already Christian since that is the professed belief of a majority of Americans. I haven't gotten any notices from IRS that I have to tithe. I haven't seen any votes in House or Senate split along religious lines. I haven't seen Dandy Dan or People for the American Way report with horror that Christians have already taken over the country — public office by public office.

So what's going on with this orchestrated media campaign directed against these Christians seeking school board seats? The answer is that they are conservatives. Political types who disagree with these Christians on secular politica issues, such as the curriculum in schools, are using their religion to attack them, rather than fairly debate the issues.

There is no constitutionally mandated school curriculum. There never has been. There is not even a constitutional mandate for a public school system. What is taught in public schools is a matter of judgment arrived at collectively through the democratic process. Over the years, curriculums have changed as people's ideas have changed.

Every citizen has a right to put his two cents worth in on school curriculums or any other subject matter of government — without being vilified or subjected to well-financed character assassination campaigns.

Freedom is for everybody, not just the anointed.

ANOTHER VIEW

Clinton's crusaders must defeat 'dragon'

Here's something else for Bill Clinton's health care task force to chew on: The cost of the Medicaid health care program for the poor rose by an astonishing 25 percent last year.

According to the federal statistics, Medicaid spending went from $94 billion in fiscal year 1991 to $118 billion the last fiscal year. The state-federal program is the fastest-growing item in state budgets.

This is a worrisome development for Clinton's health care reformers. Medicaid costs are widening the federal budget deficit as the president searches for ways to reduce it. And he's trying to figure out how to pay for an overhaul of the health care system which would increase access to medical care, much as Medicaid has expanded access in recent years to include millions of new clients.

Over the past five years, Medicaid has provided incentives for all parts of the health care constituency — patients, doctors, hospitals, state governments — to use it freely at public expense. But, clearly, this open access comes at a cost, and cost is the dragon Clinton's medical crusaders will have to slay to achieve reform.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Monday, April 5, the 95th day of 1993. There are 270 days left in the year. The Jewish holiday Passover begins at sunset.

On this date:

In 1614, American Indian princess Pocahontas married English colonist John Rolfe in Virginia.

In 1621, the Mayflower sailed from Plymouth, Mass. on a return trip to England.

In 1976, reclusive billionaire Howard Hughes died in Houston at age 72.

RUSSELL BAKER

Experts speak in free verse with 4.2 Font/Pitch

Listening to experts on the health-care problem is like reading computer manuals. Their brilliance is obvious and indisputable, and I for one — I won't speak for you — can't understand a thing they say. This leaves a person feeling melancholy, as well as stupid.

Baker

There is a certain kind of modern poetry that's like this, too. You know it is magnificent; critics say so on the dust jacket; the poet who wrote it has been draped with medals, garlanded with laurel, and stuffed with onions by honorary-degree dispensers on five continents. Only an ox could fail to enjoy it.

Because I hate feeling dim-witted, I read such books methodically, doggedly, line by line, page by page, moving my lips silently. It is total-immersion poetry. Surely, with persistence, after I slog through a few hundred pages, light will spread through my skull, all will become clear and I, too, will marvel at what the poet has wrought.

Yet it does not. Neither does the computer manual. I happen to have one open here beside me. Listen to this:

"The Attribute On/Off command (AO and AF) in STANDARD.CRS represents WordPerfect 5.1 attribute codes (e.g., Italics, Small Caps). AO stands for 'attribute on' while AF stands for 'attribute off.' Attribute codes are converted to a 4.2 Font/Pitch code . . ."

It is awesome to think of the learning underlying this passage, of the engineering degrees it represents, of the sleepless nights its author must have spent in college mastering Boyle's law of gases, the principle of the torsion pendulum, e's amazing equality with mc squared . . .

Awesomely learned, yes. And I — what a dunce and oafish dolt am I who can make no more sense of it than I make of Babylonian chants or Chaldean hieroglyphs. (No letters, please, from professors of Chaldean explaining Chaldean hieroglyphs or pointing out that the Chaldeans didn't have to write in hieroglyphs because you could still find those wonderful old Royal desk-model typewriters in their days.)

The point is this: Certain modern poetry and computer manuals are products of such brilliance, such learning, such professional experience that the unbrilliant, those not spectacularly learned and those without professional experience of free verse and the 4.2 Font/Pitch code are reduced to feeling like dopes.

And now apparently we are to be kicked in the ego again by the health-care problem solvers. The MacNeil/Lehrer Newshour had several under interrogation Wednesday night. MacNeil has an uncanny ability to talk sensibly even to people who look certifiably batty, but when the health-care experts finished with him he looked as defeated as I felt.

What little I could grasp left me with the grim suspicion that the health-care program, if one is enacted, will make us all grateful for the simplicity of Internal Revenue's tax forms, instructions, regulations, audits and officially certified incomprehensibilities.

Experts talk of something called "managed competition." Does that make any sense? The term contradicts itself. If the government wants to manage competition, it has to regulate it, doesn't it? And the gospel according to Reagan held that regulation was death to competition.

Never mind, "managed competition" may be just a slogan to give the public something comforting to cling to. ("You won't have to worry anymore about paying the bill when little Jeff comes down with the shingles, Mother, because soon we're going to have managed competition.")

The "competition" half of the phrase seems to argue for a federal plan to rescue the insurance industry, which apparently will be positioned to regain its profitability despite its recent inclination to refuse medical insurance to anybody not disgustingly healthy.

I say "apparently" to keep things vague. Nothing is really apparent in this game yet, except that the secrecy in which the plan is being developed has left us at the mercy of experts.

A defect of experts is their tendency to leave us feeling hopelessly baffled and out of it when making decisions about our money and our fate. They give us computer manuals suffused with evidence of their excellence, and these make us realize how dumb we are.

The Nation in brief

■ Weather only concern for Discovery launch

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — While NASA kept an eye on the sky, space shuttle Discovery was given one last sweep Sunday before a mission to explore the Earth's atmosphere.

Discovery is scheduled to lift off at 1:32 a.m. EDT Tuesday.

Meteorologists predicted an 80 percent chance of good launch weather. However, they were concerned about possible thunderstorms Monday that could delay removal of the protective tower around Discovery as well as fueling.

The countdown was going well. "We feel like we're in good shape," said shuttle test director Mike Leinbach.

Discovery's eight-day mission will focus on the ozone layer, a stratospheric shield against harmful ultraviolet rays from the sun. That layer is in danger of being destroyed by, among other things, human-made pollutants.

It will be the second shuttle flight this year and the 54th since NASA started launching shuttles 12 years ago. It should have been the year's third mission, but a main engine shutdown of Columbia on March 22 is keeping that spaceship grounded until late April.

■ Officials search for poolside attacker

MARGATE, Fla. — Police are looking for a man who has attacked at least 17 women, ripping off their clothing outside their homes and at swimming pools.

Three incidents in March have police concerned a new series of attacks has begun.

"I think he'll strike again," police Lt. Norbert Kozlowski said. "It happened eight times (last year) and we're getting into warmer weather when more people will be utilizing the pools."

Five of the women attacked, while walking to cars, mailboxes or garbage cans, say the man grabbed their buttocks or breasts briefly before running away.

In the remaining cases, a man approached women lying by pools. The attacker usually succeeded in tearing the top or bottom of a bikini bathing suit off the women before running away.

■ Shanti Project execs turn in resignations

SAN FRANCISCO — The top two executives of the Shanti Project, the nation's largest provider of housing to people with AIDS, resigned amid charges the group failed to account for $2.7 million in government funds.

Executive director Eric Rofes and deputy director Melinda Paras submitted their resignations at the request of the board.

One board member, the Rev. Yvette Flunder, said patient services are not expected to be affected. Shanti provides 144 beds for people with AIDS along with support services for 1,000 people. It has an annual budget of $5.4 million.

The city AIDS office had been investigating Shanti and in March announced that sloppy accounting records could not explain where Shanti had spent $2.7 million in public funds from mid-1991 to early 1993. Shanti must repay the city by May 1 unless it can show how the money was spent.

■ Circus grandstand collapses, injures 47

BROOK PARK, Ohio — Three circus shows were canceled Sunday as officials investigated the collapse of a grandstand that left 47 people injured.

Most of the injuries involved cuts, bruises or broken bones, hospital nursing supervisors said.

The collapse occurred Saturday during a performance of the Circus Williams Althoff German National Circus at the International Exposition Center.

City Building Commissioner Bill Holtman said he had inspected the circus on Friday. Everything had looked fine, he said.

"It was an accident, but every safety precaution was taken," said Dick Wilson, tour director of the circus based in Sarasota, Fla. He said the circus had been touring the United States since 1972 without incid

■ 'Unforgiven' resurges at box office

LOS ANGELES — The children's films "Cop and a Half" and "The Adventures of Huck Finn" debuted strongly this weekend, while Oscar success fueled a box-office resurgence for "Unforgiven."

Clint Eastwood's haunting western epic, "Unforgiven," earned an estimated $2.7 million, more than tripling its previous week's receipts of $855,000, an industry source said Sunday.

Topping the weekend box office list was "Cop and a Half," starring Burt Reynolds as a police officer and Norman D. Golden Jr. as his pint-sized partner. It earned an estimated $5.9 million.

Following "Cop and a Half" were Disney's "The Adventures of Huck Finn" and "The Crush," featuring a teen-age girl who develops a deadly infatuation for an older man. Both had opening weekend takes of about $5.1 million.

Clinton uses computers to spread word

By Richard L. Berke
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Want a full transcript of President Clinton's latest speech on housing or welfare? Just tap in a command on your home compu! r.

Want the White House to know instantly what you think of Clinton's economic plan? Call the "White House comments line" and punch in a response on your touch-tone phone.

Have more to say? Just type a note on your computer and punch in the White House electronic-mail address. In seconds, your message will have reached 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue.

Clinton does not have a computer in the Oval Office (he prefers legal pads), but he has surrounded himself with a new generation of aides who are steeped in the latest technology. They are marketing Clinton (his computer name is Clinton Pz) in ways that a president has never been presented before.

While the grind of speeches and news conferences by the Clinton administration may be conventional, the president's messages — critics would say propaganda — are penetrating households and offices in far less traditional ways.

For the first time, even people with little knowledge of computers can send a message to the White House through electronic mail. One computer jockey recently began a note to Clinton with the greeting, "Hey Prez!" Another punched in, "To Waffle Willie."

Subscribers to major on-line computer services like America Online, Compuserve, Internet, MCI Mail and Prodigy can get information put out by the White House on their computers within hours after it is processed.

After punching the command "GO WHITEHOUSE," users of Compuserve see this greeting flash on their computer screens: "Welcome to the White House forum!" They can then retrieve speeches from the president, vice president or first lady on dozens of subjects.

They can also access photographs of the president striking any number of patriotic poses. In schools around the country, students and teachers can access by computer the daily White House news briefings, schedules and the president's speeches.

That is only the beginning: administration aides are tinkering with everything from digital photography, so the president's image could be almost instantaneously transmitted to people across the country, to building the president's own cable television network to show government at work. There is even talk of a live, on-line "town meeting" with the president.

"The advantage is you're getting information from the horse's mouth," said Randall Davis, a professor of computer science at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, who has advised the White House on computers. "You are hearing what the original source said. Not only has the message not been filtered before it arrives at your computer, it has not even been repackaged."

Others warn that the White House is simply using technology as another way to go over the head of a probing press corps.

"People are going to be taken in by the glamour of having a hot line of their own to the White House," said Jarol P. Manheim, a professor of political communication at George Washington University. "And the glamour is going to blind them potentially to the level of management of information that inevitably lies behind anything they put out. The danger is that people perceive it as unfiltered when in fact the filter is one step back so that it's being done by those who produce rather than gather the news."

Opening the White House to new ways of communicating, however, does not guarantee a positive response. One computer user named Anthony recently fired off a message to the White House, attacking Clinton's economic plan and saying he hoped the president would "stop dividing this country by economic class for crass political purposes." (Clinton probably never saw the message.)

Hundreds of computer messages, known as E-mail, are sent to the White House each day. A man named John Jackson recently sent an electronic message there and got a reply from a man named Alan Gore, who apparently does not work in the administration.

"You are not THE Al Gore ARE YOU?" he asked.

"No," chimed in a man named Marc Perkel, who was also on line, "he ain't the Veep."

March figures raise economic questions

NEW YORK (AP) — America's job growth stalled in March. Factory output slowed. Exports weakened. Anxious consumers grew so spendthrifty that the maker of the best-selling smoke slashed prices to battle cheap generics.

Is the economy falling down again?

Forecasters trying to interpret last week's statistics agreed the economy seems to be losing a burst of stamina that produced the best growth in four years in the final three months of 1992.

Still, most regard the picture of weakness that emerged last week as a respite, not a relapse. Many blamed it on the unusually harsh weather, particularly a mid-March storm that pummeled the Eastern Seaboard.

"There's kind of a giant question mark hanging over the March data," said Giulio Martini, an economist with the securities research firm of Sanford C. Bernstein & Co. in New York. "We know the weather was unseasonably bad. We know it had an impact on the numbers, but it's impossible to say how much."

The most pronounced impact appeared to be on the March unemployment figures released Friday by the Labor Department, which showed that job growth vanished in March after a large gain the month before. The drop came largely because of 59,000 lost construction jobs. The department blamed the weather.

That left the national unemployment rate stuck at 7.0 percent, or about 8.8 million Americans out of work.

Another disturbing sign was a slowdown among American manufacturing for the second straight month, as calculated in a widely followed monthly survey from the National Association of Purchasing Management, a corporate trade group.

Jurors slow to accept insanity defense tactics

BOSTON (AP) — If Kenneth Seguin wasn't mad, what other explanation could there be?

This computer executive — home in the suburbs, no apparent problems — suddenly killed his wife and two children. But a jury refused to find him innocent by reason of insanity, and convicted him of second-degree murder.

The presiding judge, Robert Barton, was unsurprised: "I've sat on four highly publicized cases over the years where the defense in front of a jury was not guilty by reason of insanity, and never has one of them prevailed."

Jurors everywhere, fearful of rising crime and worried that dangerous criminals will go free, are reluctant to find defendants not guilty because of insanity — even when the most bizarre crimes have been committed, experts say.

"Finding someone not guilty because of their mental state is being seen as akin to getting off scot-free," said Abbe Smith, deputy director of the Criminal Justice Institute at Harvard University Law School. "It's tied directly to the fear of crime."

Some say a backlash against leniency intensified when John Hinckley was acquitted after pleading insanity in the 1981 shooting of President Reagan.

A study of 49 counties in eight states — California, Georgia, Montana, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Washington and Wisconsin — showed that between 1976 and 1987, 1 percent of the pleas in felony cases were insanity defenses, according to the American Academy of Psychiatry & the Law.

Of those nearly 9,000 cases, 26 percent of the defendants who entered such pleas were acquitted, and only 7 percent of those acquittals were by a jury, the study found.

"It's a defense of desperation," said William Moffitt, an attorney in Alexandria, Va., known for his use of the insanity defense.

The insanity defense dates to 1843 in England, when Daniel M'Naghten was accused of fatally shooting Edward Drummond, the private secretary to Prime Minister Robert Peel.

M'Naghten testified that he believed Peel was the head of a conspiracy to kill him, and that this delusion prompted him to shoot Drummond. M'Naghten pleaded not guilty by reason of insanity, and, in an unpopular verdict, was acquitted.

The so-called M'Naghten rule, or variations on it, is still the legal definition of insanity in many courts. It says a defendant is legally insane if, because of a severe mental disease or defect, he cannot appreciate the consequences of his acts or tell right from wrong.

But after Hinckley was found not guilty by reason of insanity in the assassination attempt on Reagan, Congress responded in 1984 by passing the Insanity Defense Reform Act, which placed the burden of proving insanity on the defense rather than making the prosecution prove sanity.

It also banned expert witnesses, such as psychiatrists, from offering conclusions about the sanity or insanity of the defendant, allowing them to only describe a condition and let jurors decide.

Efforts to protect gulf resume

WASHINGTON (AP) — Members of Congress from Texas and other coastal states have long contended that the Gulf of Mexico is getting short shrift from the federal government.

In an effort to protect the vital resource, which provides everything from oil to shellfish and tourism, they are again renewing their efforts to implement legislation protecting the Gulf.

Some are also delivering to the Clinton administration the message that they're tired of seeing the government's attention — and dollars — focused on other bodies of water.

At a House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee hearing last week, Rep. Greg Laughlin informed Environmental Protection Agency Administrator Carol Browner that he was disconcerted by her agency's lack of attention to the Gulf.

He also expressed dissatisfaction with the fact the EPA has spent more money on cleanup of the Chesapeake Bay and the Great Lakes than on the Gulf.

"The EPA has done very little ... in the four years I've been in Congress dealing with the Gulf of Mexico," said Laughlin, D-West Columbia. "You can fit all the Great Lakes and the Chesapeake Bay in the Gulf of Mexico at least two times."

Browner reminded Laughlin that as a native and long-time resident of Florida she recognizes the importance of the Gulf. She also pledged to "make sure EPA will do everything it can to protect the Gulf of Mexico."

Previous legislative efforts have been derailed. Last session, Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, introduced legislation that would provide $200 million to preserve the Gulf and boost environmental research. The bill died in committee.

In the House, legislation pushed by the Congressional Sunbelt Caucus also failed. That bill would have made the Gulf program a permanent fixture within EPA. It sought $30 million for 1991 and $300 million for fiscal years 1994-1998.

This year, Sen. Bob Krueger, D-Texas, and Rep. Kika de la Garza, D-Mission, are pushing a new Gulf protection bill. Their measure also is being co-sponsored by Louisiana Democratic Sens. Bennett Johnston and John Breaux, as well as Sen. Bob Graham, D-Fla.

"The Gulf of Mexico is a vital economic and environmental resource for our nation," de la Garza said.

Their measure would establish an independent Gulf of Mexico Commission that would bring together state and federal officials in a bid to improve oversight and management of the Gulf's natural resources.

Carnival atmosphere surrounds Waco

WACO (AP) — They're calling it Mount Carnival.

Free food. Haircuts on the house. T-shirts. Sideshows.

A bizarre bazaar surrounds the Branch Davidian cult siege as hundreds of law enforcement officials and reporters search for ways to battle boredom, entrepreneurs make a quick buck and activists of all kinds plead their cases to anyone who will listen.

"You know what's happening here? A big circus," said Hector Artura, one of six vendors set up on a plateau about three miles south of the cult compound, also known as Mount Carmel.

They hawk shirts, hats, postcards and snapshots featuring sect leader David Koresh. Artura on Friday was selling $10 Koresh T-shirts, but bigger plans — namely a Monopoly-style "game shirt" featuring the compound — were in the works.

"All you've got to do is take off your shirt and start playing," he said. "You furnish your own dice, make your own rules. The object is to get in."

The miniature flea market along State Highway 340 has been a popular stop since the Feb. 28 raid on the compound the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms. Four agents and at least two cult members died.

With the help of 74-year-old Woodie Lambert, passersby take turns gazing at the cult's home three miles across wooded hills and green pasture.

Lambert, who lives just across the road, said he helped more than 5,100 people find the compound through his binoculars in one 19-day stretch.

"That could get me in the Guinness Book of World Records or (Ripley's) Believe It or Not," Lambert said. "You can believe it or not."

A long-haired and bearded man walking nearby along the highway with a two-foot wooden cross Friday was one of many eccentric figures swarming Waco.

After one press briefing, a man named Christ Didymus Thomas passed out handbills claiming he is the twin brother of Jesus Christ.

"As my father promised, I am here! The invisible Christ spirit is the truth spirit," the photocopied message said.

There are newspaper racks, pizza and mail deliveries and a Salvation Army post that provides free food and drinks. Shaggy reporters were even given free trims last week by a mobile hair salon.

Sound protection

This week, the recording industry will stop making those long, ecologically wasteful cardboard CD boxes and switch to packages barely larger than the disk.

Long boxes, introduced with the CD 10 years ago, were meant to protect the fragile plastic jewel boxes within and then be thrown away, but they caused an uproar with environmentalists.

The new containers, which came about as a result of a consensus within the industry, are made of a sturdier cardboard or plastic, or even metal.

The new packaging may provide a visual payoff for consumers as well. Making use of graphics on expandable containers and heavy, embossed paper, the designs could rival those elaborate 12-by-12-inch LP covers of old.

A recent example of the possibilities is Paul Simon's "Rhythm of the Saints" CD; with a cover affecting kente cloth, the box echoes the world-beat music inside.

Record companies and retailers have their reasons for encouraging design experimentation. It will be costly to retool display bins made to hold LPs so they can accommodate the new 5-by-5½-inch format; anything that catches the eye of record buyers is important to an industry that sells 300 million CDs annually.

Among the new approaches are fold-out cardboard boxes and flexible plastic envelopes. Packages for limited editions are being sold in some stores at prices ranging from $10 to $100 higher than the standard-issue CD.

Fresh ideas include a cardboard box that unfolds accordionlike to reveal pictures of eyes and other body parts (for the Bullet Boys' recent CD), a metal can emblazoned with the Batman logo (Prince), and a red cardboard box complete with a tiny pair of metal handcuffs (Jane's Addiction).

Says Spencer Drate, author of the new book "Designing for Music": "Music stores are going to be little toy stores."

Equity CDs make come back

■ Banks scramble to offer higher returns on low-risk investments.

By Chet Currier
Associated Press writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Echoes of the 1980s are reverberating in the banking world these days with the return of the equity certificate of deposit.

This brainchild of Wall Street's big bull market offers the allure of "stock returns with downside protection," in the words of William Brennan, editor of the Financial Planning Reporter newsletter at the accounting firm of Ernst & Young.

But Brennan and other advisers urge that savers and investors do some careful calculating before taking the plunge into equity CDs.

The idea enjoyed its first vogue in the spring and summer of 1987 as the stock market climbed to record highs. Enthusiasm for it cooled abruptly with the market crash in October of that year.

Now some institutions are bringing out new models, with stocks setting record highs again and interest rates on conventional bank products at their lowest levels in more than a generation.

New York's Citibank, for example, has just introduced a five-year deposit known as the stock index insured account, which it promotes as offering "potential stock market returns without stock market risk."

The bank is accepting deposits of $10,000 or more for the account, promising an interest rate of double the average percentage increase posted over the term of the account by Standard & Poor's 500-stock composite index.

And what if the stock market goes down instead of up? Citibank guarantees at minimum a return of the depositor's principal when the account reaches maturity.

Sky's-the-limit upside potential with no downside risk — and coverage by federal deposit insurance, to boot! How can they do that?

Well, say the experts, once you see the way a bank might construct such a product, you get an idea that the result isn't quite the miraculous proposition it might at first appear to be.

"The basic analysis of these hybrid securities involves breaking them down into their components," say Michael Edleson and Jeffrey Cohn, an assistant professor and research associate at the Harvard Business School, writing in the American Association of Individual Investors' AAII Journal.

The two basic building blocks are a zero-coupon bond and a call option on the stock index in question. The bond, bought at a discount from face value, rises over time like a U.S. savings bond to cover principal repayment at maturity.

The call option, meanwhile, will increase in value to reflect higher stock prices, or eventually settle to a low or no value if the stock market doesn't do

Cheer up, it could be worse

By Robert D. Hershey Jr.
N.Y. Times News Service

The tax season may be bleaker than usual this year, what with taxpayers getting smaller refunds or writing bigger checks as a result of George Bush's decision to withhold less tax — but not reduce the liability — during the 1992 campaign. And with the new president, Bill Clinton, likely to raise taxes not once, but twice, in coming months.

But there is at least a small bit of comfort. People in most other countries pay more, in some cases lots more. Like two-thirds of a $100,000 income in Egypt and two to five times the American price for a gallon of gasoline or a pack of cigarettes in most of Western Europe and in Canada.

For all the groaning and gallows humor, American tax bills do not seem excessively burdensome, on a comparative basis. Among 19 members of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, only Turkey taxes less in terms of government receipts as a percentage of total national output. And the United States would remain among the most lightly levied even if taxes were raised enough to balance the federal budget.

"The U.S. is on the low end, the better end, of the tax scale," said Bruce B. McLaughlin, partner for international executive tax at KPMG Peat Marwick, the accounting firm.

The burden becomes somewhat greater when you add state taxes —7.875 percent on higher incomes in New York — to federal ones but even then "the U.S. is still at or near the bottom of the advanced industrial countries," Laura D'Andrea Tyson, President Clinton's chief economic adviser, told Congress the other day.

Yet the national tax code, the product more of relative political clout than enlightened economics, is freighted with anomalies. The citadel of capitalism provides fewer and less generous incentives to savers than do most other industrialized countries, taxing long-term capital gains on portfolio securities higher than all but Australia and Britain among a dozen comparable countries. And unlike these two countries, the United States does not allow adjustment for inflation, which means it taxes phantom profits.

And America is only in the middle of the pack or worse on taxation of dividends and deductions for individual retirement accounts. Life insurance premiums and Social Security levies are deductible in many countries but not in the United States, according to the American Council for Capital Formation. On the other hand, the United States is one of only three OECD countries that have no value added tax or other national levy on consumption.

The overall lighter tax burden, of course, comes at a price. On average, Americans get from the government substantially less health care for their money than citizens of other countries. Adjusted for this, the OECD says, U.S. taxes would be only modestly less than taxes elsewhere.

"Europe generally has very high social benefits," said McLaughlin, the accountant. "They're paying more money but they're getting more for it."

While the total federal tax take has been fairly steady in recent years, the composition has shifted. Excise taxes on gasoline, tobacco and alcohol have slumped as revenue sources, as has the corporate profits tax. The offsetting increase is from Social Security and other payroll taxes, which have nearly doubled as a share of national output since the early 1960s to about match revenue from the income tax at just under 10 percent.

But even if international statistical comparisons do no more than prove the truism that you get no more than you pay for, there remains one big difference — for good or ill — between the American taxpayer and those abroad.

The American system of self-assessment, still the world's most efficient, tends to be a painful, time-consuming exercise. But at the same time, Americans are not the passive recipients — as are citizens of most other countries — of tax bills calculated by intimidating government agencies.

Paper chase may pay off

By Jan M. Rosen
N.Y. Times News Service

"Deduction is a very popular word between January and April," said Avery E. Neumark, a partner in Weber, Lipshie & Co., New York-based certified public acountants, commenting on Americans' search for ways to lighten their tax burdens.

About the only deduction that can be put in place retroactively for 1992, he said, is an IRA of up to $2,000 by April 15. But it is available only to people who are not covered by a qualified retirement plan, provided their spouses also are not covered, or whose incomes are low enough. The ceiling is $50,000 for married taxpayers filing jointly with phaseouts above $40,000 or

SMART MONEY

Switching from bonds

Q. My wife and I are retired. Two years ago we bought three-month Treasury bills when they were paying 6 percent. Currently they are paying 3 percent or less, and as they start to come due for reinvestment in the next two months we are considering switching to no-load fixed-income mutual funds that pay monthly dividends that average 6 percent. What are the risks?

Ben Neeland, Bergenfield, N.J.

A. A reasonable move with a different element of risk. "If interest rates rise, the value of the mutual fund shares fall," said John Markese, president of the American Association of Individual Investors in Chicago. "And you can't simply hold it to maturity and get your principal back. My opinion would be to look at an intermediate-term U.S. government mutual fund, which will produce higher returns with only a small amount of increased risk. An alternative is to simply go into U.S. government notes, perhaps three-and four-year maturities."

Global bond funds

Q. What is the current outlook on global bond mutual funds, especially short-term?

Paul Schwartz, Manhattan

A. The outlook is bullish, said Joseph V. Battipaglia, chief investment strategist at Gruntal & Co. He's been looking at these international bonds funds and is very bullish short-term for particularly Germany, France and Denmark, in part because he foresees a series of interest rate cuts in Europe. "However, I am less bullish on Japan and the U.S. In the U.S., it would appear that the bulk of the move in bond valuation has already been accomplished, while Japan has already cut its discount rate 2½ percentage points and is preparing to spend more than $100 billion to stimulate its economy. With all that, the country surprisingly continues to run a big surplus, suggesting that interest rates in Japan will not move much lower either."

Money-market mutual

Q. Does the IRS require that every check written on a money-market mutual fund be listed on Form 1040, Schedule D, for 1992?

Michael M. Meyers, Upper Montclair, N.J.

A. No, says Robert F. Lee, vice president for corporate taxes at Advest Inc., a securities dealer. "The fund is revalued daily; consequently redemptions are on a cost-basis price. It is not considered a sale as with other mutual funds. The interest you receive is considered a dividend and as a result is entered on Schedule B under dividend income."

Foreign tax credit

Q. I purchased shares of the Harbor International Fund in both my IRA and in a joint account with my wife. We received a 1099-DIV form at the end of the year for the joint account. It stated that part of our 1992 dividends was withheld as foreign taxes and explained that we could regain this portion of our dividends by claiming the withheld amount as either a deduction or credit on our 1992 tax return. My IRA shares paid dividends at the same rate as the joint account. Can I claim the IRA withholding on my 1992 tax return and why didn't the fund send me a notice?

Charles W. Edwards, Princeton, N.J.

A. David J. Mangefrida Jr., assistant counsel, taxes, for the Investment Company Institute, said: "What actually happens is that the mutual fund is investing in a foreign country which taxes your mutual fund's income." American tax rules generally permit a taxpayer to take either a deduction from gross income or a credit against American taxes for taxes paid to foreign countries. This deduction or credit is referred to as a "foreign tax credit." However, the foreign country that imposes the tax has nothing to do with this process; it is simply a way that the percent avoids imposing a double tax on income earned in a foreign country.

Besides being able to take the deduction or credit itself for the foreign tax credit, a mutual fund is allowed to pass the credit through to its shareholder. "Most funds pass through the credit rather than using it themselves, because the funds which have distributed all of their income to shareholders generally have neither income nor tax against which to apply credit," Mangefrida said. "The shareholder then can deduct the credit from taxable income, or fill out IRS Form 1116 and apply the amount of foreign taxes paid as a credit against tax liability. In the case of the IRA account, the IRA does not get a U.S. tax credit because it does not pay any U.S. taxes."

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Tax-deferred options plentiful for investor

By Bill Doyle

Q: I am a 21-year-old student who recently received a tax-free insurance settlement. I want to invest $10,000 in whatever will give me the most return in 30 to 35 years.

I work part-time to help put me through school. I hope you can recommend a tax-deferred program.

Doyle

A: For openers, no one can tell you what will provide the "most" return for any period of time. There are many tax-deferred investment options available to you that should work out well.

Your first move should be to open an individual retirement account. You can put up to $2,000 of the earnings from your part-time job into an IRA each year.

Assuming you are single and have no other tax-qualified retirement plan, and assuming your annual income is less than $25,000, you will get a deduction for your entire IRA contribution when you file your income tax return. That money and everything your IRA earns in interest, dividends and increase in value will be deferred from tax until you make withdrawals from the IRA.

Where to invest the IRA money? My recommendation would be in a no-load mutual fund with growth as its investment objective.

For the rest of the money you want to invest now, I suggest Series EE U.S. savings bonds. You can defer paying income tax on the interest that builds up on those bonds until you redeem them or until they reach final maturity in 30 years.

EE bonds issued since March 1 accumulate annual interest at a guaranteed 4 percent or a market-based rate, whichever is higher. The market-based rate changes every May 1 and Nov. 1; for the current six-month period, it is 5.04 percent.

Q: I have been making withdrawals from my IRA for several years. Is it permissible to stop withdrawing and start contributing to the account again, to build it back up to where it was?

A: It is, if you have earned "compensation," which is defined as salary, wages, tips, fees, bonuses and other amounts received for personal services, and if you have not reached age 70 1/2.

You no longer are permitted to make annual IRA contributions as of the year in which you become 70 1/2. Also, after you pass that point in life, you are required to begin making IRA withdrawals based on your life expectancy or the joint life expectancy of you and your IRA beneficiary.

Whether you will be able to rebuild your IRA to the size it was before you started making withdrawals will depend on how much you put into the account before you turn 70 1/2 and how much your IRA accumulates in earnings.

Q: My IRA at a brokerage firm is managed by a consultant. If I pay the management fee with money outside the IRA, is the management fee tax-deductible?

A: Yes. Internal Revenue Service Publication 590, "Individual Retirement Arrangements (IRAs)," explains that such fees are tax-deductible if they are billed separately and paid by you.

Publication 590 adds this caveat: "They are deductible (to the extent they are ordinary and necessary) as a miscellaneous deduction on Schedule A (Form 1040). The deduction is subject to the 2 percent adjusted gross income floor" -- meaning the expenses you itemize must exceed 2 percent of your AGI before you get a tax deduction.

That type of fee, variously called a "management," "trustee," administration" or "fiduciary" fee, is not subject to the IRA contribution limit.

DEDUCT: Credit debt item no longer allowed

(From 1B)

$35,000 for single taxpayers with phaseouts above $25,000.

Still, a paper chase through last year's records may turn up an unexpected deduction. "The medical deduction is creeping back slowly," Neumark said.

After Congress raised the threshhold for medical deductions in 1986, making unreimbursed medical expenses deductible only to the extent they exceed 7.5 percent of adjusted gross income, most taxpayers lost that deduction, and many stopped keeping track of such outlays, he said.

In the last year or so, however, many people have had to pay more of their own health insurance, policy deductibles have risen and many reimbursements cover only part of a doctor's bill. Thus many people once again qualify for medical deductions.

Conversely, some taxpayers still think they can deduct credit-card interest, Neumark said. They cannot. Deductible interest is generally limited to acquisition debt of up to $1 million on a first and second home, home equity debt of up to $100,000, business interest, investment interest to the extent it is matched by investment income and passive activity interest to the extent of passive activity income.

From a tax standpoint, Neumark said, it makes sense to take out a home-equity loan and pay off personal interest like that on credit cards or car loans. However, the same cannot be done by taking out a margin loan on brokerage accounts, because unlike home-equity loans, investment interest is subject to complex tracing rules.

Sidney Kess, a New York certified public accountant and lawyer, cautions that people cannot deduct mortgage interest unless it is their own obligation. Many parents in the last year paid bills for their adult children who lost their jobs, he said, assuming they could deduct the mortgage interest, but they cannot. On the other hand, Kess said, medical bills paid for someone like an adult child who would qualify as a dependent except that he or she earned more than $2,300 count toward the medical deduction.

While most people deduct their cash contributions to charities, Neumark said, many overlook related charitable deductions like the fair market value of clothing, toys or furniture donated to a charity; expenses incurred as a delegate to a charitable convention, or car costs of 12 cents a mile when using one's automobile for a charity. Form 8283 must be used for noncash contributions of more than $500, and appraisals must be attached for valuable items.

Miscellaneous deductions have a floor of 2 percent of adjusted gross income, but there are so many of them that more people may qualify than realize it, Neumark said. These include union and professional dues; job search expenses in the same field, even if unsuccessful; unreimbursed employee business expenses for travel (28 cents a mile for a car), education, equipment like a fax machine used at home or for business publications including the daily newspaper, investment and tax preparation fees.

A teen-ager can earn up to $3,600 tax-free, Kess noted, because he or she can take a standard deduction for that much, and the parents are still entitled to the personal exemption if they provide more than half their child's support. The limit would rise to $5,600 if the teen-ager contributed to a deductible IRA, he said, and if the parents employed the teen-ager in their own business it would not be necessary to pay Social Security taxes.

EQUITY: Care necessary in making decision

well.

In fact, in creating a typical equity CD, a bank may buy large quantities of exactly those types of investments, and then sell CDs representing an interest in them with a markup to cover its operating costs and a profit.

Thus, to make a precise evaluation of whether a given equity CD offering is a good deal or not, you may need to do some calculations of what its components would have cost the bank, which in effect bought them at wholesale.

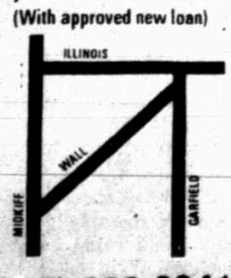

Ultimately, you may decide that the bank earns its markup by packaging the product conveniently for you, since buying the separate pieces yourself would be unwieldy at best, if not utterly impractical, using a small amount of capital.

Another point to consider: A CD package may give you access to market appreciation, but not to the dividends you would earn in something like a stock index mutual fund. Dividends often represent a significant part of stocks' total return.

"Given the fact that many investors are grossly underexposed to the risk and possible high returns of equity, this is one of many feasible alternatives for the risk-shy investor to investigate."

SEEDS FOR THOUGHT

Texas Gold columbine grown in Permian Basin

By Deborah A. Benge

Last week we took a good look at an outstanding flowering shade perennial, the "Texas Gold" columbine. You absolutely need this flowering perennial in your landscape.

Benge

Texas Gold columbine is native to the Big Bend and Davis Mountains of West Texas, and does great in the Permian Basin. It's been a well-kept secret for years. Now you too can have this gorgeous plant in your landscape.

I concentrated on the characteristics and outstanding features of this plant last week, so now let's look at growing it.

Texas Gold columbine is best grown in sun-dappled or partial shade, although I've seen it do very well in straight east Permian Basin sun. An ideal growing site would be under the canopy of a deciduous tree (one that drops its leaves in the fall); that way, it would get partial shade in the summer heat and more sun during the winter, which is exactly what it needs. It's important that columbine get some additional sun during the winter months so it will develop big healthy plants for a tremendous color show in the spring.

Columbine, especially the Texas Gold, need to be planted in well-drained, highly organic soils. Add a four- to six-inch layer of organic matter, such as tree leaves, spoiled hay, sphagnum peat moss or composted cotton gin trash on your planting site. This organic matter needs to be tilled or spaded thoroughly into the soil.

Prior to planting, incorporate slow-release fertilizer, one in which at least 50 percent of the nitrogen is in the slowly available form, at the rate of two pounds per 100 square feet of planting area. Each year, reapply a slow-release fertilizer high in nitrogen at the same rate in October, December and February to help stimulate foliage production.

Plants get large, so space two feet apart at planting to allow room for the foliar base or clump to enlarge as the plant matures. This foliar portion of Texas Gold will ultimately reach a height of 18 to 24 inches. Be sure to mulch with at least a three-inch layer of pine needles, shredded bark or straw to encourage root development and discourage weeds.

Established plants will need about one inch of water a week during the active growing season. Soak the root zone by slow flooding or, even better than that, use drip irrigation.

After the flowers finish blooming, clip out the faded flower stalks with hand pruners or a string trimmer used just above the foliage.

In the event you get some insect damage on the Texas Gold in late summer, simply cut the foliage down to just a few inches above the crown. Gather and destroy infested foliage to reduce pest problems without using pesticides. When the temperatures cool in the fall, new leaves would be produced and the plants will come on like gangbusters.

Columbines aren't considered to be long lived even in their native habitat. However, the Texas Gold columbine can live as long as seven years; meanwhile, they shed seed so there are always new seedlings available.

A warning on seedlings: Texas Gold will cross with other types of columbine, which will result in an inferior hybrid. You may want to avoid using other columbines or rouge out the resulting seedling crosses which will not be a vigorous as the parent, Texas Gold.

Texas Gold columbine looks great when it is placed in natural drifts in the partial shade areas of your landscape. Avoid regimented straight lines. Mass them in perennial borders, or tuck them into unused corners of flower beds or almost anywhere you need a bold splash of spring color.

Planting in front of evergreen shrubs as a backdrop to heighten the impact of the bloom display is a great way to go. Since this plant goes somewhat dormant in the heat of summer, plan to surround or incorporate your columbine bed with other shade-loving perennial or annual color. Use coleus, waxleaf begonias, impatiens or caladiums for the summer months. In the fall you may wish to replace the summer annuals with white flowered pansies, which have a butter yellow center. Plant pansies in sunny areas of the foreground of the planting bed. The yellow of the white pansies looks great with the yellow blossoms of the columbine.

When you go to your nursery to pick out your Texas Gold columbine, you may see more than one size. You should find one-gallon and four-inch pots of Texas Gold. The one-gallon size will bloom this year, but the four-inch size will not bloom profusely this year. But next year, stand back. There will be an abundance of blooms.

You shouldn't have any trouble finding this once rare Texas native columbine, Texas Gold. Don't miss out on this great columbine that will give you outstanding color in the landscape, especially in your shady areas.

Home Landscape School, an extension horticulture program, will be the evenings of April 20-22 at Chaparral Hall, Midland College. Included will be information about the best landscape plants for the Permian Basin, how to establish landscape plants, how to properly maintain a landscape, and how to develop a beautiful landscape design.

Cost is $20 per household and includes landscape kit, books and other materials. Pre-registration is required. Make checks payable to Permian Basin Master Gardeners and send to Home Landscape School, Midland County Extension Office, P.O. Box 1070, Midland, Texas 79702.

For more information call 335-3071.

Deborah Benge is the extension horticulture agent for the Texas Agricultural Extension Service in Midland and Ector counties.

DEAR ABBY

Forgive and forget is response to unintended insult

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I read your reply to "One of the Family," who was insulted by the "store-bought, printed thank-you card" she received from "the entire Jones family" after the funeral.

Van Buren

Abby, when you lose someone you dearly love, even if the loved one had been sick for a long time, you are grief-stricken and devastated.

My sister died after a lengthy battle with cancer. She was only 34. I honestly can't even remember who attended her funeral. There were many floral arrangements, but I was so numb, the last thing on my mind was reading the cards that came with flowers. My sister had left a 10-year-old son, and my greatest concern was looking after him.

If anyone held my actions on that day against me, I would be saddened because I wasn't my usual self.

I say, be forgiving and kind; it hurts no one, and to do so might lighten the load of the bereaved. — J.M.H., HOUSTON

DEAR J.M.H.: Your answer was better than mine. Please read on:

DEAR ABBY: I read your reply to "One of the Family," who was insulted by the thank-you card she received from the Jones family after the funeral. Abby, the poem was not inappropriate, as you suggested. It was a lovely poem — one I have received many times from the families of deceased friends and loved ones.

Perhaps the insulted lady did not realize that the funeral home often provides the family with a packet of thank-you cards that are included in the funeral costs.

Did the insulted lady attend the funeral and send flowers just to be recognized for her sacrifice? If so, she should have stayed home and sent flowers to herself. The Jones family will probably be relieved that they will not hear from her again.

You sympathized with the wrong injured party, Abby. — JEANNETTE GRAVES, CARL JUNCTION, MO.

DEAR ABBY: I had a mastectomy 17 years ago when I was in my early 40s. Only a few months later, I met an attractive man, a brilliant scientist years younger than me. He certainly had many choices, but he chose me! What impressed me was not that it clearly made no difference to him that I had only one breast; rather, I was moved by the fact that he wanted to make a commitment to me when my prognosis was still uncertain. He offered love of such depth I would have been silly to be self-conscious about the fact that I was a bit lopsided. We were married that spring.

Our marriage is one of the happiest I know. One of the lessons I learned from having been forced to confront the fact of my own mortality is to use what time I may have, and not to put off living. Any man worth loving will love "Inhibited and Embarrassed" just the way she is. Please tell her to drop both those adjectives and use "alive and well" instead. — ALICE IN MINNEAPOLIS

DEAR ALICE: Thanks for a real upper. Your letter will give hope and encouragement to many women who may have to face that kind of surgery.

AT WIT'S END

People steal darndest things

By Erma Bombeck

I read a story that said hotel thievery will cost the U.S. travel industry close to $85 million this year.

Bombeck

Tales of kleptomania abound: people with gold cards removing brass-covered doorknobs and hiding them in their luggage; travelers who pay $1,200 a night for a suite and then lift $200 worth of ivory figures locked in a cabinet.

In the hotel rooms I stay in, the temptation is not that great. Why would I rip off the wall a picture of an orange sun setting over a Chinese junk? What's the point in stealing a 1982 television set that probably hasn't worked in eight years?

I must admit it has always amazed me what people lay claim to. Every time I go by one of those roadside parks and see the ugliest picnic table in North America held in place by chains and sunk in cement, I have to ask myself, "Who in his right mind would slip out in the dead of night and drag this off on a flatbed truck?" The people who are caught should never serve time when they can cop an insanity plea.

The late comedian Jackie Vernon used to get big laughs with a skit where he stood on the corner of Broadway and 42nd Street in New York, raised both arms over his head and declared, "I'll beat you yet, New York." When he looked down, his luggage was gone.

People will steal anything these days — from cactus to cars, from lawn flamingos to pets.

I don't have an answer on how to turn things around, but maybe here's a great way to get rid of nuclear waste that no one wants and garbage with no place to go. Just put them in a TV box, put them on the back seat of a car and, trust me, they'll be gone within 30 seconds.

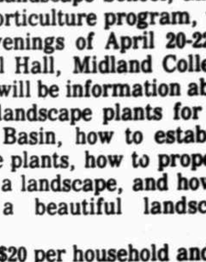

Erma Bombeck's column is distributed by Universal Press Syndicate.

Authorities battle oil well fire

LA GRANGE (AP) — For the third straight day, authorities on Sunday battled a blaze caused by an oilwell explosion.

Those working on the well at 4:40 a.m. Friday escaped without serious injury when sudden gas pressure pushed out a blowout preventer device and 39 joints of pipe became airborne, said Fayette County Sheriff Rick Vandel.

"All of it looked like macaroni," Vandel said, adding that flames shot up to 350 feet high.

But on 11:30 a.m. Saturday, in a separate incident at the site, Larry Jay Lavergne, 36, of Jennings, La. was killed when crushed while unloading pipe, Vandel said.

Lavergne worked for Big E Drilling Co., a subcontractor working on the Torch Energy of Houston well. Torch Energy is a 12-year old independent company.

Vandel said authorities would be at the site for days. He predicted the fire would continue burning through Tuesday.

Matt Ramsey, Torch Energy senior vice president, said Saturday that a well-control team from Red Adair's Houston company was building a line to pump water from the Colorado River. The water will be used to cool drilling equipment near the wellhead so the equipment can be cleared away, Ramsey said.

The firefighters eventually intend to cap the well.

No evacuations were called although people one mile north of the site were notified of the fire as a precaution.

Vandel said authorities did not fear another explosion. He said there was no immediate danger to nearby residents.

La Grange is about 60 miles southeast of Austin.

Official: Truce called on border war

HOUSTON (AP) — A human rights campaign in Mexico City and the change in Washington leadership could end Mexico's anti-drug campaign after four years, a newspaper has reported.

Citing unidentified U.S. officials and experts, the Houston Chronicle reported Sunday the undercutting of police force in Mexico — in the name of human rights — coupled with President Clinton's possible plans may end the four-year effort south of the U.S. border.

Although President Clinton's strategy to combat narcotics has not been detailed, he reportedly wants to change the focus of the drug war from enforcement against suppliers to treatment and education of users.

Some analysts said the Clinton administration likely will try to cut the Bush administration's $3 billion budget for overseas drug enforcement. Most of that budget supported military aid and economic programs in Latin America.

The Clinton administration already has sharply reduced the size of the White House drug policy office, which coordinates the drug war among the executive branch agencies. The size of the drug czar's office was reduced from 146 staffers to 25, but Clinton has promised to elevate a yet-to-be-hired drug policy coordinator to Cabinet level.

"We can expect a reduction in law enforcement across the board," said narcotics expert Rensselaer Lee, whose suburban Washington firm performs consulting work for the U.S. government.

One-car accident injures 4 Odessans

ODESSA — Four Odessa teenagers were treated and released at Medical Center Hospital after a a one-vehicle accident Sunday morning.

According to a police report, a 1988 Honda Accord, driven by 18-year-old Alfredo Rios, was southbound in the outside lane in the 800 block of North Grant Avenue at 6:11 a.m. The vehicle struck the west curb and the driver lost control. The vehicle went across traffic, over the northeast curb and drove into the Motorcycle Performance and Repair store at 820 N. Grant Ave.

Rios left the vehicle after the accident, but was located and brought back.

Rios and three passengers, Liza Valenzuela, 17, Joel Pineda, 19, and Jose Molina, 18, were all transported to the hospital.

Officials seek robbery suspect

Midland police are still looking for a man who committed an aggravated robbery early Sunday morning.

According to a police report, officers were dispatched at 6:20 a.m. to Kent Kwik, 3310 W. Wall St., in reference to an aggravated robbery. The store's cashier, Steve Peterson, 42, said the robber came behind the counter and demanded the money in the cash register and pulled out a 5-inch knife. After getting the money, the robber left the building and went around the store's west side. A canine unit tracked the robber to the Granada Club and then lost his trail.

The robber is described as Hispanic, 5-foot-10, 140 pounds, with a short beard and wearing a black cap, a gray jacket, dark pants and dark glasses.

Boyfriend confesses to death

HOUSTON (AP) — A 31-year-old man remained in jail Sunday on charges in the beating and choking death of a 17-month old girl at an East Harris County apartment.

Steven Lynn Beason, charged with serious injury with a child leading to death, remained without bond Sunday in the Harris County Jail, said Harris County Detective Ronnie Phillips.

Police discovered the dead child, Lauren Jandres, at about 9:25 p.m.

NOTICE TO AT&T LONG DISTANCE CUSTOMERS IN TEXAS

This notice is to advise Texas customers of the introduction of AT&T DIRECTory LINK Service by AT&T Communications of the Southwest Inc. (AT&T). Service will be available on a limited basis starting May 3, 1993. Service will be available throughout Texas by June 15, 1993.

AT&T DIRECTory LINK Service provides customers with the choice of having calls completed after receiving the requested number from AT&T Directory Assistance without having to hang up and redial the number.

There are two methods the customer can use to access AT&T DIRECTory LINK Service:

1. The customer dials 0+NPA-555-1212 or 10288-0+NPA-555-1212, followed by their calling card or 1-800-321-0ATT. They will hear an automated announcement from the AT&T 5ESS once their calling card is validated. A recording will offer them the option to have AT&T complete their call and prompt them to respond via a touchtone entry.
2. The customer needs operator assistance in placing the Directory Assistance call, either requesting assistance by dialing 00, 102880, or 0+NPA-555-1212 without a calling card entry or 1-800-321-0ATT using an operator. The AT&T operator will validate the billing and personally offer AT&T DIRECTory LINK Service.

If the call cannot be completed (i.e., busy, no answer or non-published number) then no AT&T DIRECTory LINK Service charge will be incurred. If the customer declines the call completion offer, no additional charge is incurred.

The rates for AT&T DIRECTory LINK Service are:

- for Customer Dialed and Automated Calling Card calls	$0.85
- for All Other Card and Operator - Assisted calls	$1.25

These rates are in addition to other applicable rates normally incurred in placing a Directory Assistance, Calling Card or Operator-Assisted call.

AT&T plans to file its application to offer this service with the Texas Public Utility Commission (PUC) on or about April 2, 1993. After that date, any person who wishes to comment on AT&T's application to offer this service, or who would like further information, should mail a request to the PUC, 7800 Shoal Creek Boulevard, Suite 400N, Austin, Texas 78757. Further information may also be obtained by calling the Public Information Office at (512) 458-0256, or (512) 458-0221, teletypewriter for the deaf.

$1 million miss

NEW ORLEANS — Actors call it stage fright. In golf it's called "the yips." There is no name for what happened to Bobby Shivar on Sunday.

The 45-year-old pipefitter from Beulaville, N.C., could have won $1 million for making a 3-point shot at halftime of a college all-star game, but he clanged his one shot off the rim.

Although Shivar has never played basketball at any level, he said it was probably the pressure and the unfamiliar surroundings that did him in more than any lack of skill.

After his name was drawn in the contest, Shivar installed a hoop in his driveway and since January he's tried about 200 shots — each one 19 feet, 9 inches from the basket. Under the tutelage of former Boston Celtics great Dave Cowens, he had improved to about 37 percent shooting.

"I didn't really get started until the first of the year because of hunting season," he said, smiling but a little wobbly after being presented with a consolation prize of $25,000. "I've got priorities."

It's Jankovich

DENTON (AP) — Tim Jankovich, an assistant at Oklahoma State, will be named Tuesday as the new head basketball coach at the University of North Texas, a newspaper has reported.

The Dallas Morning News quoted sources close to the search.

A decision was made Saturday, and a news conference has been scheduled for Tuesday sports information director Brian Briscoe said. Athletic director Steve Sloan has told the seven other candidates that a coach has been selected, Briscoe said.

Jankovich, 33, edged Tulsa assistant Jeff Schneider for the job, the newspaper said. Jankovich served as a graduate assistant coach at Pan American (1984) and as an assistant coach at both Texas (1987) and Baylor (1991-92).

He also was an assistant coach at Colorado State (1988-91), where he was part of three teams that went to post-season play. He was also an assistant at Kansas State.

As a player, he was a four-year starter at Kansas State, helping the Wildcats make three straight NCAA appearances.

Tech Swoopes to title

■ Lady Raiders win first national title for school behind the record setting 47-point performance of Brownfield's Sheryl Swoopes.

By Chuck Schoffner
AP Sports Writer

ATLANTA (AP) — A championship game record for Sheryl Swoopes, a championship for her team. Texas Tech's wondrous season is complete.

Swoopes showed why she was the national player of the year, scoring 47 points to cap a record-breaking run through the NCAA tournament and lead Texas Tech to its first women's title with an 84-82 victory Sunday over Ohio State.

It was the most points in an NCAA championship game by a man or woman and the second most in any NCAA game by a woman. The 6-foot senior also set a championship game record for points in one half (24) and tournament marks for total points (177 in five games) and free throws (57).

"There are no words to explain how great a player Sheryl Swoopes is," Texas Tech coach Marsha Sharp said. "We're pleased she was able to show the nation as a whole the great things she was capable of doing."

Swoopes, voted the Final Four's outstanding player, carried Tech to the title in its first Final Four appearance. The Lady Raiders finished with 19 straight victories and a 31-3 record and broke a 14-game winning streak for Ohio State (28-4).

"Our players did what we wanted all year long and they executed the game plan today," Sharp said. "These are great kids. They always seem to do whatever it takes. It is a great moment for Tech, for our fans, for our program and for our conference."

Tech became the second Southwest Conference school to win the women's title, following Texas in 1986.

Swoopes obliterated the record of 28 points in a women's title game by Dena Head of Tennessee and Dawn Staley of Virginia in the 1991 finals. The record in the men's finals was 44 by UCLA's Bill Walton against Memphis State in 1973.

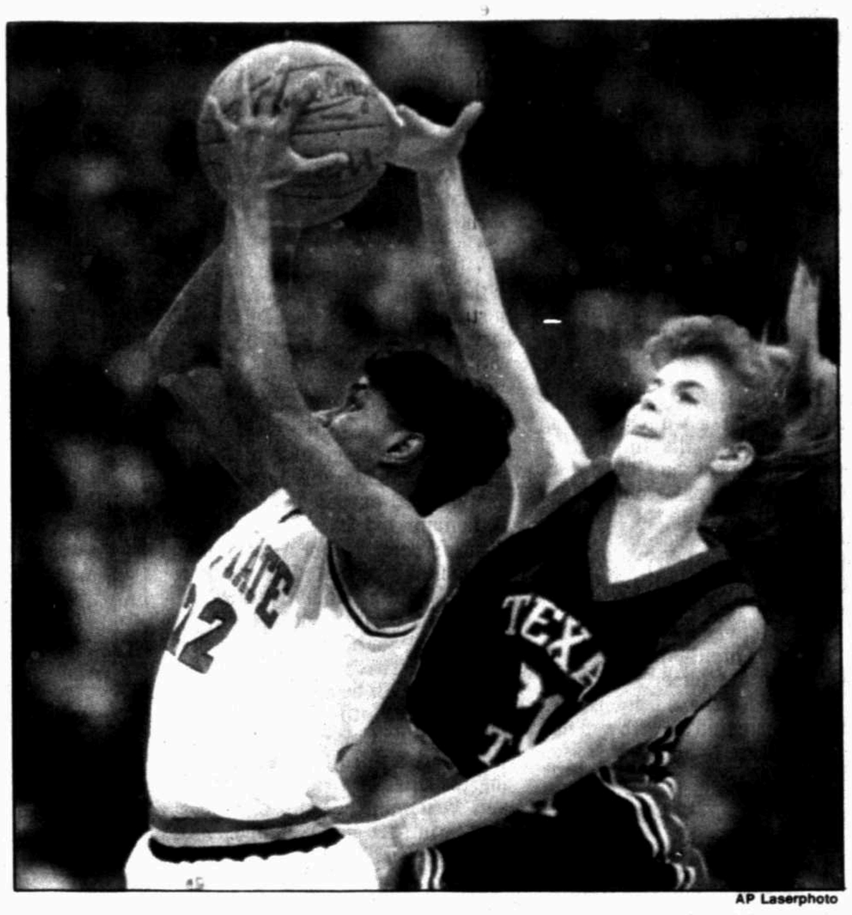

She fell short of the all-time women's NCAA mark of 50 points by Drake's Lorri Bauman against Maryland in the 1982 West Regional final. The mark for points in an entire tournament was 134 by Tennessee's Bridgette Gordon in 1989, and Auburn's Carolyn Jones held the free throw record of 41, set in 1990.

"At a point in the game, I felt I wanted to personally take control of the game," Swoopes said. "A couple of times down the floor, they did a good job getting the ball to me and I felt like I needed to score whenever I got it."

She didn't score every time she touched the ball, it only seemed that way.

"You don't really appreciate Sheryl

Mile High Stadium is just one of the stadiums across the country putting on the finishing touches prior to the 1993 baseball season, which opens today. The Rockies, alas, open in New York.

Nied set for historic start

By John Mossman
AP Sports Writer

NEW YORK — As the player who will throw the first pitch for the Colorado Rockies in the franchise's first game, David Nied can't imagine a better setting: Shea Stadium. Capacity crowd. Vigilant media attention.

When Nied takes the mound Monday as the Rockies' opening-day starter against the New York Mets, he will draw on a vivid experience last September during a late-season stint with the Atlanta Braves.

"I remember pitching in Shea Stadium so clearly last year," Nied said. "I came in from a minor-league game in Pawtucket. I got to Shea, it was a night game, and it seemed like I was on stage. It was like Broadway. The lights were so bright. I wasn't used to lights being that good, a stadium being that big, pitching in front of that many people. I got a little bit of stage fright right there in the first inning or two, just because I had never experienced anything like that. For me to have experienced that, I think it's going to help me this time."

Nied survived the initial terror quite nicely, going seven innings and allowing just four hits and one run to pick up the win. During the Braves' pennant drive, he compiled a 3-0 record and 1.17 ERA in six appearances, two of them starts.

Pitching-rich Atlanta decided not to protect Nied in the expansion draft in November, and the right-hander was the No. 1 pick in the draft.

Nied subsequently was the starter in the Rockies' first exhibition game, a 7-2 victory over the San Francisco Giants

Baseball arrives

By Ben Walker

All during his campaign, President Clinton pitched that it was time for change. When he throws out the first ball of the 1993 baseball season on Monday, he'll see it firsthand.

Clinton will be at Camden Yards in Baltimore, where the Orioles and Texas each feature several new players. Rangers starter Craig Lefferts, signed by Texas in the offseason, will face an Orioles' lineup that now has Harold Baines and Harold Reynolds.

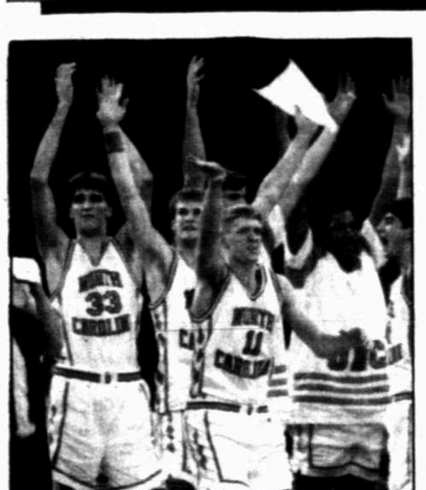

In all, about 250 players changed teams during the offseason in baseball's biggest turnover ever. Greg Maddux, Wade Boggs, Dale Murphy and Andre Dawson will be among the many stars in new places starting Monday.

The nine games on opening day also include the two new clubs. Charlie Hough will start for the Florida Marlins at home against Los Angeles. David Nied, the No. 1 pick in the expansion draft, will start for the Colorado Rockies in New York against the Mets.

But the usual festivities on opening day will not be found everywhere. Instead of bright colors and brass bands, the mood will be somber in Cleveland when the Indians play the New York Yankees. The Indians are still mourning the deaths of pitchers Steve Olin and Tim Crews in a boating accident at spring training, and have toned down the celebration for their first game of the final season at old Cleveland Stadium.

In Baltimore, meanwhile, the Rev. Jesse Jackson will be outside the ballpark early, leading a protest against the major leagues' lack

North Carolina bench ...cheerleaders all

National title time

By Jim O'Connell

NEW ORLEANS — It's the pinstripe suits against the warmups, IBM versus L.L. Cool J, the star program meeting the program of stars.

All these matchups will be under one roof — one very big dome — Monday night when North Carolina and Michigan meet for the national championship. It should be a great game played by two groups of players as different on every level as can be, except talent.

Sunday's Final Four news conferences were perfect examples.

North Carolina went first and coach Dean Smith went beyond the rules and brought eight players with him instead of the requested five starters.

"We have eight starters but the rules say three have to be on the bench," Smith said. That was about it for laughs as Smith and the players tended to business, always talking the team line or straying from the form answers.

Then came Michigan.

Coach Steve Fisher started the 45-minute mass interview alone because the five sophomore starters arrived late.

As Fisher was answering his third question, the five sophomores walked into the large ballroom yelling hello and waving to their coach. The rest of the interview was as relaxed as a team has been on the eve on the NCAA title game since Duke in 1986.

The topics ranged from Fisher's personality away from the court to shaved heads to imaginary conversations. The laughs were plenty and the answers off the cuff.

"Coach Fisher said he would shave his head if win the national championship," Chris Webber, said drawing a

Texas Rangers an afterthought in Baltimore

BALTIMORE (AP) — Outside, Jesse Jackson and some 1,000 demonstrators plan to launch a campaign to protest baseball's minority hiring practices. Inside, Bill Clinton will start the second season at Camden Yards by becoming the first Democratic president since Jimmy Carter to throw out the first ball.

Oh yes, there will be also be a baseball game Monday, as the Orioles open the 1993 season against the Texas Rangers.

Opening day is always a special occasion at any ballpark, but the event has taken on added significance in Baltimore recently. Two years ago, it was the final opener at Memorial Stadium. Last year's game between the Orioles and Cleveland Indians was merely a sideshow to the opening of Camden Yards, a sparkling new facility that dazzled fans and architects by offering modern amenities in an old-time setting.

This season's opener is also more than just a baseball game. Clinton will become only the second Democratic president to attend an Orioles' home game and could be the first to see Baltimore win one. Carter's only first pitch preceeded the Orioles' 4-1 loss to Pittsburgh in the seventh game of the 1979 World Series.

Jackson, meanwhile, plans to take advantage of Clinton's presence to kick off a series of demonstrations by the Rainbow Coalition for Fairness in Athletics. The organization is seeking to force major league baseball to revise its hiring practices to include more minorities in the front office. Jackson says picketing will continue at selected ballparks throughout the season.

The game itself should be worthy of the hoopla surrounding it. The Orioles will send 36-year-old Rick Sutcliffe to the mound, hoping the old man of the staff will be able to duplicate last year's opening day performance, a five-hit shutout of the Indians.

It won't be as easy against a potent Texas lineup that includes Jose Canseco, Rafael Palmeiro, Dean Palmer and Juan Gonzalez. Sutcliffe was 1-2 with a 5.89 ERA against the Rangers last season.

"They've got some guys who can hit," he said. "I don't know if we'll face a better offensive lineup this year."

Sutcliffe gave up nine hits, three walks and four runs in seven innings March 26 in an exhibition game against the Rangers. Although Sutcliffe said he was saving his best stuff for opening day, Texas first-year manager Kevin Kennedy was nevertheless glad that his team got an advance look.

"Some of the guys haven't seen him for a while, and I know I haven't seen him for a long time," Kennedy said. "I think it helps us."

This will be Sutcliffe's ninth opener; each seems to increase in value to him as the years go by.

"To me, it's even more exciting than last year," he said. "I guess the longer you play the game, the more you appreciate it. You don't know how many of them you have left."

It will be a stronger Sutcliffe this year. During the offseason he got serious about lifting weights for the first time, and as a result added a few inches to his upper body.

"My overall strength is a lot better," he said. "Over the winter I really worked on it, and I'm looking to be more consistent because of it."

The Rangers send left-hander Craig Lefferts out as a replacement for the injured Kevin Brown. Lefferts ended the 1992 season on the Orioles' staff.

The game is a sellout, Baltimore's 60th straight, matching the major league record for successive sellouts held by the Toronto Blue Jays. Toronto sold out its last 59 games of 1990 and opening day 1991.

Ripken Jr. set to nail numbers

BALTIMORE (AP) — Cal Ripken Jr. spent the winter building up his baseball skills and tearing down memories of the 1992 season.

Most shortstops would have loved to have put up the numbers Ripken did last season. Ripken, however, is no ordinary shortstop.

A .251 batting average, 14 homers and 72 RBIs just doesn't cut it for a player who is headed to the Hall of Fame. Bothered by contract talks and uncertainty over his future with the Baltimore Orioles, Ripken came up with a clunker of an encore to his MVP season of 1991.

"At a time when it was difficult to remain focused, I was still able to put numbers up on the board that a lot of people would be happy with," he said. "I wasn't particularly happy with them, though."

So Ripken went back to the basics this winter, eager to prove that his best years are not behind him.

"I changed my routine, working a little more on baseball skills," he said. "After last year, I had to work on my confidence during the offseason so I could come into spring training with a clean slate.

"I'm looking forward to this year. I've readied myself, and I'm in good shape. Best of all, I've eliminated a lot of the doubts associated with last year."

It's hard to gauge just yet, but it appears as if Ripken is on his way back. His batting average has been well over .300 all spring, and all his energy appears concentrated solely on baseball.

That's not how it was in '92. Playing in the last year of his contract, Ripken had no idea whether he would be staying or getting his first taste of the free agent market.

"In hindsight, my biggest regret of last year was that I wasn't able to keep an even keel over the course of the contract negotiations," he said. "I never got into a normal routine."

Finally, on his 32nd birthday in late August, he signed a five-year, $32.5 million contract that will likely keep him in Baltimore for the rest of his career.

By then, however, the damage for 1992 had been done. He got only six RBIs in September, when the Orioles fell out of contention after waging a season-long battle with the Toronto Blue Jays.

It was the first time in three years that Ripken had been involved in a pennant race. He contributed defensively, winning his second straight Gold Glove award, and was in the lineup for all 162 games, as usual. But he couldn't produce the numbers needed from the No. 3 spot — he went 73 straight games without a homer — and was subsequently dropped to fifth in the order.

"It was fun to contribute in any way to helping the team win. But it was frustrating for me, and I would have enjoyed it more by participating and contributing more," he said.

The Orioles probably would have found themselves in the playoffs had Ripken been able to come close to matching his numbers of 1991: a .323 batting average with 34 homers and 114 RBIs.

"The year before, everything went right," he said. "I don't know how it could get much better."

This year will be different from the other two, no matter how Ripken fares. That's because it is the first time he'll be on the field without either his father, Cal Sr., or his brother Bill. Cal Sr. was fired as Baltimore's third base coach during the offseason and Bill, a second baseman, wasn't offered a new contract and signed with Texas.

"It's part of the business and it's out of your control, so you have to accept it and you have to deal with it," Ripken said. "There are things that remind you of it, and it brings up some of your harder feelings sometimes. But that's counterproductive; you have to move on."

Orioles manager Johnny Oates said Ripken is dealing with the situation precisely as expected.

"Hey, it's blood. It's his father and his brother," Oates said. "If I were in that situation it would bother me. But I would also hope that I would be able to handle it as a professional, like he is."

That Ripken can deal with the departure of family is expected. But few can comprehend how he can maintain his consecutive games streak, which at 1,735 games is the second-longest string in baseball history behind Lou Gehrig's 2,130.

"Can you imagine how many headaches he's had, or colds or the flu? Some people wake up on the wrong side of the bed and they take a day off," Oates said.

"I've got a friend who calls me up sometimes and says, 'If Cal felt like I did today, the streak is over.' It's really amazing how he does it," Baltimore outfielder Brady Anderson said.

"The truth is, I just have a desire to play and help the team win," Ripken said. "It's not a goal of mine, but I am proud of the fact that I can play in every game."

And he's pleased with his accomplishments over his 11-year career.

"I'm content with what I've done," he said. "I could have never predicted this much success. I think I can look back years from now and say I don't have any regrets."

Wayne Bodley paints a Florida Marlins logo on top of the Marlins' dugout at Joe Robbie Stadium as the first game in Florida is against the Los Angeles Dodgers.

Marlins go with Hough

MIAMI (AP) — A capacity crowd, hundreds of reporters and a television audience stretching from Venezuela to Japan will witness history Monday when 45-year-old knuckleballer Charlie Hough delivers the Florida Marlins' first pitch.

So, Charlie, what will you throw?

"A strike," Hough said.

With that, the expansion Marlins' first season in the National League will be under way. Their opening day opponents are the Los Angeles Dodgers.

Floridians have waited a lifetime for this occasion. No longer are they being left behind by baseball at the end of spring training. Instead, as a new season begins, they'll pack Joe Robbie Stadium to root, root, root for the home team.

"History in the making," owner H. Wayne Huizenga said.

With $15 tickets selling for $250, a sellout crowd of 44,000 will savor the event. More than 600 press credentials were distributed, matching the allotment for an All-Star Game or League Championship Series.

The Marlins asked Joe DiMaggio to throw out the first ball, not because he lives in Miami Beach, but because he was the idol of team president Carl Barger, who died in December. The Hall of Fame in Cooperstown, N.Y., has already requested the bat or ball involved in the first hit by a Marlin.

Orel Hershiser wants to delay that moment. The Dodgers' right-hander, hoping to pitch this season as he did before undergoing reconstructive shoulder surgery three years ago, will make his first opening day start since 1989.

"This is the signature on my comeback," Hershiser said. "The day will be special in that it's a historic start for the Marlins, but also because it's a chance for our team to get a fresh start. I'm looking forward to pitching in front of our new and improved ballclub."

The Dodgers lost 99 games last season, and they've been playing baseball since 1890. How bad will the Marlins be in their first year?

Las Vegas oddsmakers made them a 300-1 longshot to win the pennant, in part because manager Rene Lachemann's team has little pitching and less speed. As for power, it's a good thing the scoreboard at Joe Robbie Stadium is manually operated.

Team camaraderie, on the other hand, appears excellent. Such veterans as Benito Santiago and Junior Felix, trying to shake reputations as malcontents, have embraced the opportunity for a fresh start with a new team — even if it's a bad one.

"It could be hell to come to the park when you're losing a lot," said shortstop Walt Weiss, who was part of a perennial pennant contender in Oakland. "You want to create the sense that we're all in this together. Most of the guys here probably feel like castoffs anyway, so there's already a sense of unity."

Perhaps the key is to keep goals modest. Florida needs 41 victories to top the 1962 New York Mets, the worst expansion team ever.

That objective is reachable. After all, if Charlie Brown can hit a game-winning home run, the Marlins might even win Monday.

"I never really played on a team that was just horrible," second baseman Bret Barberie said. "But the way the media are making us out to be, it sounds like we're going to have that year this year.

"It's unfair to make that assessment. Why does somebody have to say, 'They're going to lose 100 games'? It's not right. Give us a chance, man."

Barberie made those comments one morning during spring training. Later that day, the Marlins lost to the New York Yankees, 13-0.

Play ball.

First month is critical for improved Astros

HOUSTON (AP) — The Houston Astros start could be the most critical opening month in Art Howe's five seasons as club manager.

For starters, the Astros find themselves painted in a three-game home series corner with the National League's most potent offensive lineup, the Philadelphia Phillies.

Also, the Astros this week find themselves among four National League West teams that play their first 27 games against foes from a decidedly weaker NL East.

The last thing the Astros need is a slow start and Howe knows it.

"I've actually been thinking about them (the Phillies) for several days now," Howe said. "They have a heck of an offensive club.

The Phillies face Houston Monday night to open the regular season.

"The key to them is their center fielder (Lenny Dykstra). He's their catalyst," he said. "He's probably more important to their club than any other player is to any other club in the league."

As things are, Howe is pleased with way the newcomers, Doug Drabek, Greg Swindell, Jose Uribe, Chris James, Chris Donnels, Rick Parker and Eric Bell have reinforced the Astros roster.

But in a perfect world, Howe would have ended the 14-12-2 exhibition season with a quicker team and a second left-hander in his bullpen to join Bell.

For the Phillies, a worst-to-first scenario isn't out of the question.

Catcher Darren Daulton led the NL with 109 RBI last year and third baseman Dave Hollins returns after a 27-homer, 93-RBI season.

Astros' outfielder Chris James, who played for the Phillies from 1986-89 has watched Daulton's progress ever since.

"He has really started turning on the ball and that has made him a much better hitter," James said.

The Phillies have shuffled their starting rotation to throw two left-handers against the Astros.

Terry Mulholland will pitch the opener against Drabek and Danny Jackson will face Pete Harnisch in the final game of the series. Jackson was moved ahead of Ben Rivera. Swindell will oppose Curt Schilling in the middle game of the series.

Schilling was 1-1 with a 1.17 ERA in 23 innings against his former teammates a year ago. Pete Incaviglia, released after hitting .266 with 11 homers and 44 RBI for the Astros a year ago, will team up with Milt Thompson in left for the Phillies.

"I'd be more concerned if I didn't have as much confidence in our left-handed hitters," Howe said. "One thing's for sure, we'll find out in a hurry."

The Astros starting rotation will be Drabek, Swindell, Harnisch and Mark Portugal.

Darryl Kile, Brian Williams and Xavier Hernandez will be used as right-handers out of the bullpen. Doug Jones, who set a club record with 36 saves last season, will serve as the Astros' closer.

of minority hiring.

Jackson's complaints began to increase during baseball's investigation into the racial and ethnic slurs made by Cincinnati Reds owner Marge Schott. She's been banned for one year — her dog, Schottzie, won't be allowed on the field, either — and she will not be in the owner's box for Cincinnati's game against Montreal, the traditional National League opener.

The games in Baltimore and Cleveland are both scheduled to start at 12:35 p.m. CDT. It remains to be seen whether they will actually begin at that time, even with baseball's new speedup rules.

Other American League openers are Boston at Kansas City in the afternoon and Detroit at Oakland at night. In the NL, there's Atlanta at Chicago in the afternoon and Philadelphia at Houston at night.

ROCKIES: Finally here

(From 1C)

on March 6.

"It's probably going to be somewhat more nerve-racking in New York compared to any other start," Nied said, "because there's going to be a lot of people, a lot of attention there, and it is opening day. But pressure? Pitching in a pennant race, getting your first major-league start in Shea Stadium against the Mets the way I did last year — that's about as much pressure as you're going to encounter. I think I'm up to the challenge. It's not going to be a make-or-break game, but I'm very honored to take the ball and be the first pitcher in the history of the Colorado Rockies."

Rockies manager Don Baylor settled on Nied for the opener despite the 24-year-old's inexperience.

"You're asking a lot when you ask a guy with less than 40 days in the big leagues to open up the franchise," Baylor said. "My biggest fear was his youth, but after being around him a while, I realized he could handle it. And then I thought: How many other guys, even experienced pitchers, could do this, either? I was convinced the night (March 16) he came out against Oakland and really dazzled against a good lineup. I knew this guy was ready for a big-league game, opening day in Shea. He deserves it."

Are the rest of his Rockies ready? Baylor thinks so. Expansion teams have never won more than 70 games in their first season, but Baylor thinks the Rockies can better that total.

Hitting around the .280 mark for most of the spring and getting solid pitching from Nied, veteran Bryn Smith, ex-Houston lefthander Butch Henry.

Garland's Minier bowls over PBA Open field

By Bill Price
Staff writer

When Rick Minier got to the last game of Sunday's play in the Midland Merchants Regional PBA Open, there wasn't much drama to his taking first place in the professional bowlers' regional tournament at Cactus Lanes.

Minier entered that last of 12 finals games with a commanding 252-pin lead over second place Phil Prieto, and nothing short of disqualification or default would keep him from the first prize of $3,000 for a tournament that claimed a 120-pro field.

"That's the only way to travel. I've won some close tournaments and I've won some easy ones, but I think this was by far the easiest as far as having an insurmountable lead with three or four games to go," said Minier, a Garland native who claimed his 12th PBA victory with the win. "When I beat Phil in the 10th game I figured I pretty much had it wrapped up. It was a long drive but definitely worth it."

For Prieto, an El Pasoan who won the Midland tournament two years ago and spent his 50th birthday by taking the second-place check of $1,600, the Tall City is fast becoming one of his favorite tour stops.

"It's been a very good tournament to me. I love it out here. But when we got to that final game, he was so far ahead of me there was no catching him. I was just trying to hold onto second," Prieto said.

Joe Moore of Woodland Park, Colo., claimed third place and $1,265, while fourth went to Charles Falco of League City. Falco won $1,000.

Scott Pope, manager of Cactus Lanes, put up the best finish by a Midlander with fifth place and $900. Other Midlanders finishing in the money were Lonnie Truelove at 14th place ($295) and Ty Bowling at 30th ($215). Other Midlanders placing were Whitney Hillin (59th), Bill Theobald (a tie for 61st), Mike White (70th) and Steven Witte (tied for 84th).

Pope, who finished 11th in a national regional tournament conducted recently in Las Vegas, said he has seen his game improve over the last few years.

"The first two years we had this tournament I finished eighth both times. I feel like I improved this year by finishing fifth. I feel real confident in the way I'm bowling right now. I made a few mistakes, but correcting those will come with experience," Pope said.

Pope also posted his finish while also hosting the tournament in his center, a handicap he is glad to accept.

"There are a lot of distractions. You have to make sure the machines are running right and you have to make sure everything goes right for the bowlers. Bowling in your own center means you have to concentrate," he said.

The Midland stop on the tour was the fourth on the 20-event calendar. The next stop on the Southwestern Regional tour will be April 16-18 in Enid, Okla.

TECH: Swoops sets tourney on ear

(From 1C)

Swoopes until you have to stop her," Ohio State coach Nancy Darsch said. "She hurt us, and not just by the scoring. I saw us get a little down, a little dejected when she scored some tough shots against us. They attacked our heart."

Krista Kirkland added 14 points for Tech, which negated Ohio State's 41-24 rebounding advantage by shooting 54.7 percent. Freshman Katie Smith led Ohio State with 28 points and 11 rebounds. Nikki Keyton added 19 points, Averrill Roberts had 13 and Audrey Burcy 12.

Ohio State played less than 24 hours after winning in overtime against Iowa in Saturday's semifinals. Tech had played the first game Saturday, beating Vanderbilt by 14.

"I think we did look a bit flat," Darsch said. "It's hard to know what is jitters and what is fatigue. I think our players left what they had on the court."

As brilliant as Swoopes was, Ohio State kept it close until the final minute.

Ahead 40-31 at halftime, the Lady Raiders led by 11 early in the second half and were up 52-44 after Noel Johnson hit a baseline jumper with 13:21 remaining.

Ohio State then used its transition game and strong inside play to get back in it. Reserve Alysiah Bond made a 3-pointer and Smith completed a three-point play after scoring on a double-pump layup, starting an 11-2 run.

Keyton's three-point play capped the spree, which pulled the Buckeyes into a 55-54 lead with 10:53 to play. Tech regained the lead, only to see Ohio State go back up 62-61 on Smith's three-point play.

But Johnson hit a jumper in the lane and Stephanie Scott sailed in for a layup after a steal, giving Tech a 65-62 lead with eight minutes to go. The Lady Raiders led the rest the game, answering each Ohio State score down the stretch.

"We talked a great deal about weathering storms," Sharp said. "We know that teams at this level are going to have runs against you. I thought we did a good job of weathering those, maintaining our composure and making good things happen."

Ohio State drew to 70-69 on Roberts' 3-pointer with 4:14 left and trailed 75-73 on Keyton's hook with 2:16 remaining. But then Swoopes — who else? — stepped forward.

She made two free throws with two minutes left for a 77-73 lead, then scored on a drive, was fouled and hit the free throw to make it 80-73 with 58 seconds remaining.

"Coach Sharp called that play," Swoopes said. "Krista could have easily taken the ball and done the same thing, but I guess she just wanted to put the ball in my hands."

Johnson hit four free throws in the final 32 seconds to secure the victory, enabling Tech to withstand Burcy's two 3-pointers in the final last 12 seconds.

Ohio State, the first Big Ten team to play in the finals, tried switching defenses against Swoopes, alternating between man-to-man and zone, but nothing worked.

Swoopes, who made 10 of her first 11 shots, finished the first half with 23 points and added 24 in the second to break the championship game record of 18 in a half held by Head, Staley and Southern Cal's Cynthia Cooper.

For the game, Swoopes was 16 of 24 from the field and 11 of 11 from the line.

"This is really something special," Swoopes said. "This is our last year together and it is really something great for all of us."

Meanwhile, the Texas Tech campus erupted in a delirium of champagne spray, blaring horns and high-five slaps as hundreds of basketball fans celebrated the Lady Raiders' first NCAA championship.

Minutes after Texas Tech edged Ohio State, 84-82, students converged on Memorial Circle tossing each other in a campus fountain and dancing with their fingers pointed in Tech's "guns up" sign.

"Can we say national championship? I think so," screamed 23-year-old Jonathan White.

"It's great. It's the most incredible thing that's ever happened, ever," said J.D. Posey, who was hanging out a car window with a basketball.

Vehicles clogged the campus in a crazy traffic jam of non-stop horn blasting. Many drove with their lights on and streamers flapping.

Shaw fires Senior mark

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. (AP) — Tom Shaw posted his second victory on the Senior PGA Tour on Sunday, setting a record at The Tradition with a score of 19-under-par 269 to beat Mike Hill by a stroke.

Shaw, 54, won four PGA events from 1963 until he joined the 50-and-over circuit in 1989.

■ The Tradition

He won the Showdown Classic in Park City, Utah, as a rookie but then hit a 3½-year dry spell.

On Sunday, he was in luck on No. 18, where Hill sank a 12-foot eagle putt to finish at 270 and match Shaw's score at the time, 18-under.

Shaw faced a 3½-foot comeback putt for a birdie. He appeared headed for a playoff when the ball rolled close to the cup on the right side. However, the ball slowed, curved and dropped.

Shaw needed a final-day, 5-under 67 to claim the first prize of $127,500, more than four times the $29,880 he had won in six previous tournaments this year.

Hill, who won his 14th seniors event at The Challenge Feb. 14, also shot a 67 on the 6,869-yard Cochise Course at Desert Mountain.

Gibby Gilbert, who started the day tied with Shaw for the lead, finished at 274, along with Dale Douglass and Raymond Floyd.

Standly stands firmly

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Mike Standly shot a 5-under-par 67 on Sunday, then withstood final-hole challenges by Payne Stewart and Russ Cochran for a one-stroke victory in the Freeport-McMoRan Golf Classic.

Standly, who finished 72 holes at 7-under 281, missed a chance to close out his first PGA Tour title when a birdie putt stopped an inch short of the cup on the 18th hole of the 7,116-yard English Turn Golf and Country Club course. That left the door open for Stewart and Cochran to force a playoff with birdies on the final hole.

But Stewart had a 25-foot birdie putt come up an inch short, and Cochran missed from 40 feet. Each shot 69 on Sunday to finish at 282.

"I thought I had a good chance today," said Standly, who began play two strokes behind 54-hole leader Greg Kraft. "I started off good. I one-putted the first seven holes, so I thought I might do it if I kept it simple."

Standly had six birdies, five on the front nine despite rain and wind gusting to 25 mph. His only bogey of the day was on the 11th, but he birdied the 12th and then parred in.

Stewart, the 18- and 36-hole leader before falling a stroke behind on Saturday, threatened to play himself out of contention with bogeys on Nos. 4, 5 and 7. But he turned in even-par 36 and shot 33 coming home.

■ New Orleans Golf

"I was very pleased with my performance over the last nine holes," Stewart said. "I hit two balls in the water, but I still had a chance."

Cochran's round featured birdies on Nos. 4, 5, 6 and 15, with a lone birdie on No. 8.

"I had plenty of chances out there," Cochran said. "My game hasn't been tremendous this year, but I felt like I got some good pressure shots out there."

The $180,000 winner's check is Standly's largest payoff ever. His previous best was $88,000 for a second-place tie here last year.

"I was pleased with last year, but it was sure nice to finish one spot better," Standly said.

Greg Norman, who finished second in his three previous starts in this tournament, shot 68 Sunday and was alone at 284.

SAN ANTONIO — Patrick Ewing scored 27 points, Glenn "Doc" Rivers added a season-high 24 and John Starks had 21 as New York defeated the San Antonio Spurs 108-103 in overtime Sunday, extending the Knicks' winning streak to six games.

The victory kept New York one game ahead of Chicago in the race for the best record in Eastern Conference.

San Antonio got 28 points from David Robinson and 22 from Sean Elliott. But Robinson missed 12 of 18 free throws and Elliott didn't score a point in the final 17 minutes of the game.

Consecutive field goals by Ewing, Anthony Mason and Starks gave the Knicks a 102-97 lead with 3:22 left in overtime.

Clippers 119, Mavericks 115

LOS ANGELES — Ken Norman scored 26 points and Los Angeles had its best shooting game of the season in a victory over hapless Dallas.

The Clippers won their third straight game and returned to .500 for the first time since March 14. They shot 63 percent (48 of 76) from the floor without coach Larry Brown. Their previous best was 60 percent against Seattle on Jan. 15.

Brown missed the game because of a back and neck strain. He was given medication and remained in the lockerroom while assistant R.C. Buford took over.

76ers 112, Kings 102

PHILADELPHIA — Hersey Hawkins scored 33 points as Philadelphia beat Sacramento to snap a six-game losing streak.

It was Sacramento's ninth loss in its last 11 games. The Kings have lost eight straight at the Spectrum dating back to 1985.

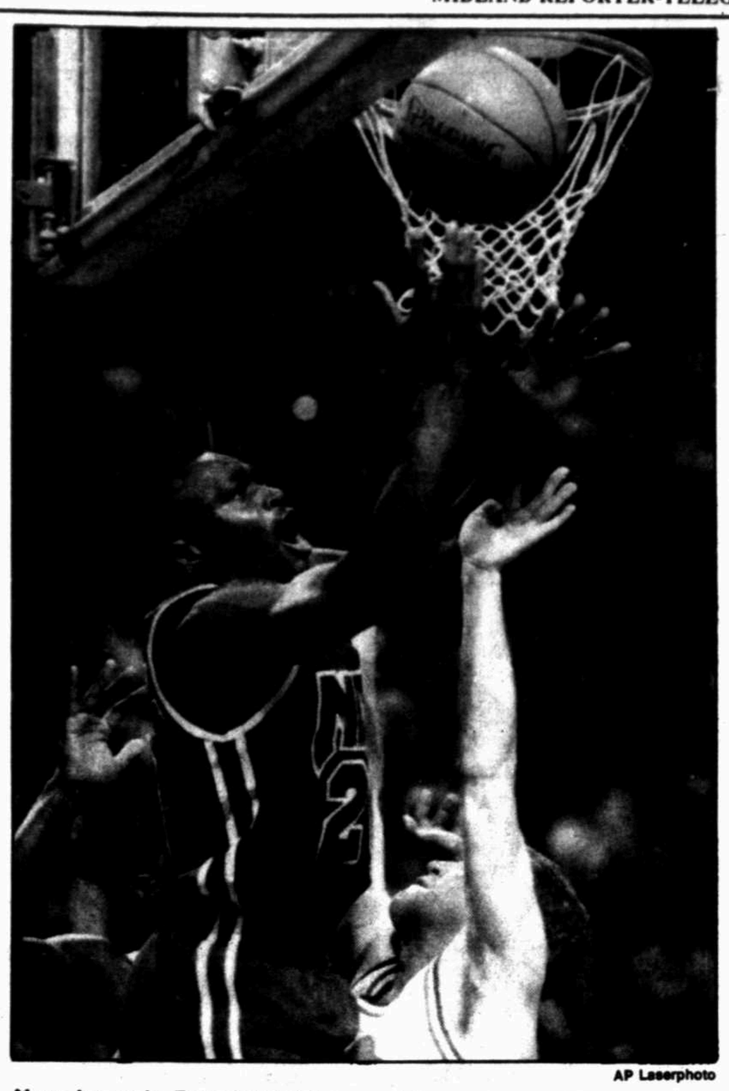

Armon Gilliam had 22 points and 13 rebounds for the 76ers, who also got 20 points from Jeff Hornacek.

Bulls 101, Celtics 89

BOSTON — Michael Jordan scored 32 points and led a 33-15 third-quarter surge that carried Chicago over Boston.

Jordan scored 11 points during the third period as the Bulls turned a one-point halftime deficit into an 83-66 lead.

New Jersey's Rumeal Robinson sinks a reverse layup against Mark Price of Cleveland during NBA action Sunday.

Scottie Pippen had 28 points and Horace Grant 13 for Chicago, which won for the eighth time in 10 games and is 10-2 in its last 12 road games. The Bulls began the day one game out of first place in the Eastern Conference behind New York, which played at San Antonio.

Cavaliers 105, Nets 99

RICHFIELD, Ohio — Mark Price had 27 points and 13 assists and Cleveland dug an early 13-point hole before beating the banged-up New Jersey.

Larry Nance scored 24 and Brad Daugherty had 20 points and 13 rebounds for Cleveland, which ended a three-game losing streak. The Nets, jockeying with Cleveland and Boston for the third-best record in the East, lost their sixth consecutive road game.

Nuggets 120, Timberwolves 94

DENVER — Dikembe Mutombo had 18 rebounds, 16 points and four blocks for Denver, which used a 14-0 run late in the third quarter to beat Minnesota.

It was Denver's sixth victory in its last eight games and 18th in the last 23.

Heat 124, Magic 106

MIAMI — Steve Smith scored a career-high 31 points and two reserve centers contained Shaquille O'Neal to help Miami beat Orlando.

Orlando fell to 0-7 at Miami Arena and lost for the 10th time in its past 11 road games.

Suns 110, Pacers 100

INDIANAPOLIS — Charles Barkley scored 32 points and rookie Oliver Miller had a season-high 16 rebounds as Phoenix defeated Indiana, snapping the Pacers' club-record homecourt winning streak at 11 games.

Andretti oldest winner

PHOENIX (AP) — Mario Andretti became the oldest man ever to win an Indy-car race, taking advantage of some wall-banging by other drivers to come up with his first victory in nearly five years in Sunday's Valvoline 200 at Phoenix International Raceway.

Andretti, 53, took the checkered flag for the first time since a victory in Cleveland in July 1988 and became the first driver to win races in four decades. The previous oldest Indy-car winner was Johnny Rutherford, who was 48 when he won the 1986 Michigan 500.

Paul Tracy of Canada appeared to have the 200-lap race in the bag, lapping the rest of the 25-car field by his 42nd trip around the one-mile oval, and extending the margin to more than two laps over teammate Emerson Fittipaldi just past the halfway point.

Tracy, trying for his first Indy-car victory, spun and hit the wall as he tried to pass the lapped car of Jimmy Vasser on lap 162, giving up the top spot to Fittipaldi, who then crashed moments after the green flag waved again on lap 172.

Andretti, who had been three laps behind before Tracy's sudden departure, found himself in front after Fittipaldi's mishap, with more than a lap lead on runnerup Raul Boesel of Brazil.

The last 17 laps were run under the green flag and Andretti cruised to the 51st victory of his illustrious career, second only to the record 67 of A.J. Foyt.

"I'll take 'em any way I can get 'em," the gleeful Andretti said. "All the credit goes to the team, though. They made great pit stops and the car was perfect all day.

"I'm absolutely elated. This was a long time coming."

Paul Newman, the actor and co-owner of Andretti's Newman-Haas Racing team, called it, "The best moment in racing I've ever had."

Andretti carried the Newman-Haas colors for new teammate Nigel Mansell, who was forced to miss Sunday's race after sustaining a concussion in an accident during practice on Saturday.

Vasser, a second-year driver, wound up third, three laps behind Andretti and just ahead of 1992 Indianapolis 500 winner Al Unser Jr. Teo Fabi of Italy, driving for the Midland based Hall/VDS team, was another lap down in fifth. Vasser's best previous finish was seventh a year ago in Long Beach, Calif.

Andretti started second, next to pole-winner Scott Goodyear of Canada, but took the lead at the start and led until the hard-charging Tracy drove past on lap 11.

Tracy then took complete charge, slicing through heavy traffic with seeming ease.

Behind the leader, Fittipaldi moved up to challenge Goodyear and the two of them took turns in second place before Goodyear pitted with a terminal transmission problem on lap 106.

Robby Gordon, driving for Foyt, had crashed in the morning warmup and barely made the start of the race. But he also charged through the field, grabbing third place from Roberto Guerrero on lap 133 before spinning and hitting the wall on lap 138.

The early pace of the race was very fast, with the first of four caution flags coming out on lap 97 when Stefan Johansson of Sweden stopped at the edge of the track.

Wallace captures one for Kulwicki

■ Food City 500

BRISTOL, Tenn. (AP) — Rusty Wallace started from the pole and stayed out front most of the day behind the strength of his Pontiac and pit crew to win the Food City 500 NASCAR race Sunday afternoon.

Afterward Wallace turned his car around and drove a clockwise lap in memory of Alan Kulwicki, the defending Winston Cup champion who was killed along with three other men in a plane crash Thursday night.

Kulwicki introduced the wrong-way lap, which he called a "Polish victory lap."

"It's a bigger deal to win this for my buddy Alan," Wallace said. "We miss him real bad and I want to dedicate this race to him. I don't want my good run to overshadow what happened to him."

Wallace led 376 of 500 laps, consistently leaving the pits first and pulling away from the pack in between the 17 cautions flags at Bristol's .533-mile, high banked oval. He won $107,610, including a $60,800 bonus for winning from the pole position, in posting his fifth consecutive top-five finish. He averaged 84.73 mph and had a margin of victory of .82 seconds.

The last 50 laps were a two-car contest between Wallace's Pontiac and Dale Earnhardt's Chevrolet. The two started nose to tail when the 17th caution of the day came out on lap 478, but Wallace pulled away on the restart and Earnhardt couldn't catch him.

"I congratulate Rusty and hope everybody will say a prayer for Alan and his family," Earnhardt said.

Dale Jarrett, who drives for former Washington Redskins coach Joe Gibbs, started 22nd and worked his way into the lead for 30 laps. He was running sixth in lap 208 when he hit the turn three wall, he felt with too much help from Midland's Bobby Hillin Jr., who finished 33rd after the accident.

Jarrett took off his Kansas City Chiefs hat — he wears a different NFL hat every week — and fired it at Hillin's car when Hillin drove back by his pit.

"It's a shame idiots like that are out there," Jarrett fumed. "You go from having a car that could finish in the top five, if not win the race, to nothing."

Graf wins fourth Family Circle title

HILTON HEAD ISLAND, S.C. (AP) — Steffi Graf overcame an injury and a determined Arantxa Sanchez Vicario to win her fourth Family Circle Cup title Sunday.

The top-seeded Graf outlasted No. 2 Sanchez Vicario 7-6 (10-8), 6-1 after falling behind 5-3 and sustaining a slightly sprained ligament in her left knee.

Remarkably, the 23-year-old German powered through Sanchez Vicario after getting her knee wrapped for support between sets following a lengthy tiebreaker.

"It's clay courts. That's what saved me. I could slide towards the ball, but I really couldn't twist very much," said Graf, who said she sustained the injury trailing 6-5 in the opening set. "I just kept the ball in play somehow. I got going a little bit more and went for my shots a little bit more."

Graf, who only entered last weekend after Monica Seles dropped out, earned $150,000 for the victory. She became the all-time leading money-winner in the 21-year history of the event with $316,575 in six appearances. Graf's other titles came in 1986, 1987 and 1989.

Sanchez Vicario got $60,000 for second.

Graf, ranked second in the world, was actually more effective after having the knee worked on. She cut down on her errors, from 23 in the first set to 6 the rest of the way. She was far more patient on each point, too, allowing Sanchez Vicario to force the play.

"I didn't make as many mistakes," Graf said. "In the second set, she got a bit impatient, she made a lot of errors and I played a lot smarter."

Neither player had more than a one-point lead in the tiebreaker.

Kings' Sport turns Sport of Clowns

LONDON (AP) — According to the media, it was the day the Sport of Kings became the Sport of Clowns.

The famous Grand National steeplechase, steeped in history and watched around the world by 350 million people, was ridiculed Sunday as the victim of a typically British anachronism.

Even though $150,000 was offered as prize money to the winner and $115 million was placed in bets, the prestigious race was reduced to a shambles because of an outdated starting procedure.

The system relies on officials waving flags to alert the riders to a false start. It broke down.

Because most of the jockeys were unaware a false start had been called, the majority of the 39-horse field continued the 4½-mile race even though nine stayed behind at the start line.

For the first time in its 157-year history, the race was declared void and Esha Ness, who crossed the line first, was never declared the winner. His jockey, John White, broke down in tears when he was told.

On Sunday, Aintree racecourse officials ruled out any possibility of a rerun.

"Trainers who have been consulted overwhelmingly say it would not be practical from the horse point of view to run it again this season," said Aintree chairman Peter Greenall.

Johnson has windy 67

■ LPGA Canyon Gate

LAS VEGAS (AP) — Trish Johnson of Wales shot a windblown 5-under-par 67 Sunday to run away from the field for a four-shot victory in the $450,000 Las Vegas LPGA at Canyon Gate.

"It was amazing," said Johnson, who said she took advantage of knowledge she gained while playing under windy conditions in her birthplace of Bristol, England, and home of Swansea, Wales. "I just hit the ball well and all of a sudden the putts started to drop."

Johnson, three shots behind second-round leader Brandie Burton when final-round play began, was one of just nine players to break par Sunday as wind gusts reached 40 mph. She completed 54 holes at 7-under 209 for her first victory in six seasons on the LPGA tour.

"I could tell as soon as I got here that it was going to blow all day, which was good with the way Brandie was playing," Johnson said. "For those of us who were two or three shots behind, that was the best thing that could happen because it at least gave us a chance."

Missie McGeorge, who was paired with Johnson, shot 71 to finish second at 3-under 213.

"It was pretty tough today," McGeorge said. "I don't know if it was the toughest wind I've ever played in, but it was one of the toughest, definitely."

Deb Richard matched par over the 6,114-yard layout and finished at 214 along with Burton.

Hollis Stacy, a three-time U.S. Women's Open champion, shot 70 to join Lauri Merten, who shot 74, and Judy Dickinson, who shot 75, as the only other players to break par in the 54-hole tournament.

Johnson birdied five holes and said four key saves of par for enabling her to collect her first winner's check. She said the key to her round was the confidence she gained after dropping a 30-foot birdie putt.

RHCC group wins golf title

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

MONDAY, APRIL 5, 1993

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Romance will move in a new direction. New employment avenues open up in June. Be persistent about following up on interviews. In the fall, a hobby or avocation could yield a substantial second income. Get busy and build a nest egg for the future! Bold investment moves look too risky in November. Prominent people will be impressed by your originality in December. A change of address or partner is possible early in 1994.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actor Gregory Peck, singer Eric Burdon, film director Roger Corman, educator Booker T. Washington.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Just by beginning, you start winning! A work or domestic adjustment goes more smoothly than expected. Your loving intentions send the romantic temperature soaring tonight.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Encouraging news is featured today. Share the glad tidings with your loved ones. Keep your financial goals firmly in mind. Sentiment can lead you astray if allowed to overrule your better judgment.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Your personal views regarding the management of cash and other assets are sound. Examine any problems in depth to avoid arriving at quick but faulty solutions.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Refuse to be thrown off track by criticism if you seem to be making headway. Keep adding to your assets. It may be a while longer before an overdue letter shows up.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Despite someone's assurances, a new investment could turn up in the loss column. Further research will yield hidden dangers. Learn from your mistakes and apply those lessons to the future.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Profitable dealings are possible if you bargain today. Others will follow your lead when you show them how to make something work. You can draw out almost anything from your bag of tricks!

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A long-awaited agreement may be sealed today; push hard for results if you want to close the deal. Be tactful tonight if you sense tension in the air. Become a better listener.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A business or career endeavor may falter due to insufficient research. Learn more to score big! A little finesse will help you get an important postponement.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You can jump-start a stalled financial project by consulting experts or VIPs. Put the past to rest. An electrical problem at work, home or in the auto should not be neglected.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): End an arrangement that is cluttering up your life. Your conservative practicality will impress VIPs. Recycling old projects is an excellent way to improve the bottom line.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You may have to weather a sudden storm on the work front; a cool head is your umbrella of protection. Gifts given or funds shared could backfire; save them for another day.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Be alert! You could be under fire personally or professionally. Move cautiously to win new status points. A conservative approach is your strong suit today.

GOREN BRIDGE

With Omar Sharif and Tannah Hirsch

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠KQ ♡74 ◇AK543 ♣A432
Partner opens the bidding with four hearts. What action do you take?
A.—At this vulnerability, partner must surely have a self-sufficient suit to preempt at the four-level. So slam should be merely a question of whether partner has an ace. Blackwood will provide the answer. Bid four no trump. As long as partner shows one, six hearts is unlikely to depend on more than a finesse.

Q.2—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠A105 ♡10983 ◇94 ♣Q953
Partner opens the bidding with one spade. What do you respond?
A.—With six high-card points including an ace, it's your duty to respond. It's simply a matter of whether you should raise to two spades or bid one no trump. With three-card support and a ruffing value, we prefer the single raise.

Q.3—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠K94 ♡A53 ◇A83 ♣J865
What is your opening bid?

A.—Sorry if we trapped you with this one, but we don't consider this an opening bid despite the 2 1/2 quick tricks. Our long suit is the weakest of the four, a bid of one club has no lead-directing value and it will be difficult to control the later auction. Pass.

Q.4—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AKQ103 ♡A742 ◇K5 ♣Q8
Your right-hand opponent opens the bidding with a weak two diamonds. What action do you take?
A.—Our spade suit, especially the 100 honors, is appealing. However, that doesn't mean we're prepared to give up on the possibility of a 4-4, or better, fit in hearts. Therefore, we would make a takeout double, intending to correct to spades over a three-club response by partner.

Q.5—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠QJ87 ♡94 ◇QJ962 ♣86
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ◇	1 ♠	?

What action do you take?
A.—There are three choices, each of which will have some adherents. The two we like least are one no trump (the hand isn't strong enough) and pass (we do have five-card support for partner's suit). That leaves two diamonds as this department's choice.

Q.6—East-West vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠KJ654 ♡Q2 ◇108 ♣8765
The bidding has proceeded:

West	North	East	South
1 ♡	Pass	Pass	?

Do you balance?
A.—If you have any excuse at all, don't let the opponents play at the one-level, but that doubleton queen in their suit is a warning. Pass. All too often an ill-advised reopening bid will allow the enemy to bounce into game and not necessarily in opener's suit.

Danson says leaving 'Cheers' as career move would be stupid

RADNOR, Pa. — Ted Danson says he's not sure what will happen when he tests the waters outside "Cheers."

"I don't know what's waiting for me, maybe a big old belly-flop," Danson, 45, says in the April 10 issue of TV Guide.

The last new episode of "Cheers" airs May 20. NBC canceled the top-rated sitcom after Danson decided not to come back for a 12th year.

The Emmy-winning actor, who was reported to have earned $450,000 a week playing bartender Sam Malone, said he wasn't lured away by the silver screen.

"I'm not leaving 'Cheers' as a career move. That'd be a stupid career move," said Danson, who starred in the movies "Three Men and a Baby" and "Three Men and a Little Lady."

Instead, "I want to jump into this void and scare the hell out of myself," he said.

LOS ANGELES — Geena Davis settled a lawsuit that claimed a journalist invented quotes in a profile of her.

Davis

Terms of last week's settlement with Frank Sanello weren't disclosed.

"Both sides are pleased with the settlement and I now hope to get back to work now that this nightmare is over," Sanello said.

The 36-year-old actress sued for $5 million for invasion of privacy after Sanello's article appeared in the December issue of Woman's World magazine.

The story, titled "Geena Davis — I Want to Have a Baby," discussed her relationship with Hollywood security consultant Gavin de Becker.

Miss Davis, who starred in "Thelma and Louise," "A League of their Own," and "The Fly," won an Academy Award in 1988 as supporting actress in "Accidental Tourist."

INDIANAPOLIS — Joe Clark, whose unorthodox approach to education was depicted in the film "Lean on Me," told students they shouldn't use society's problems as an excuse for dropping out.

"I know it's hard for black Americans, but it was harder for your great-great-grandmama and your great-great-grandpapa who worked from can't-see mornin' till can't-see night," the former principal told about 120 youngsters at an Arlington High School youth rally Saturday.

"If you can take a round ball and bounce it on a flat surface and shoot it at a right angle and bounce it off a rectangular backboard and through an oval hoop, then you can learn algebra, you can learn geometry," Clark said.

Clark gained national attention after he became principal of the crime-plagued East Side High School in Paterson, N.J. He shunned established rules and often took a hard line with students to clean up the school.

He has been on the speakers' circuit since leaving East Side two years ago.

LOS ANGELES — Clint Black and his wife, Lisa Hartman, denied a published report suggesting their marriage was on the rocks, saying in unison: "We're inseparable."

A Hollywood Reporter item published Friday said, "At the moment, and hopefully it's only a momentary thing, Clint Black and Lisa Hartman are no longer under the same roof."

That single sentence was quickly spread nationwide by entertainment reporters.

"That's one sentence too many. We're beyond upset," the country singer said by telephone from the Los Angeles home he and Miss Hartman share. "We're very much in love. We're very happily married."

Miss Hartman added, "We're madly in love." The couple were married in October.

Black's hits include "Killin' Time" and "A Better Man." Miss Hartman may be best known for her role on television's "Knots Landing."

ANCHORAGE, Alaska — The producers of "The Tonight Show" have dropped plans for host Jay Leno to drive a drive a team of sled dogs pulling a little red wagon through studio hallways.

NBC said it was canceling the stunt planned for Wednesday to go with the appearance of Iditarod champion Jeff King and six of his dogs because producers feared the animals could be injured running on the linoleum floor.

But King said the network had planned to cover the linoleum with carpeting, and he thinks producers were pressured by animal-rights activists into dropping his appearance.

NBC spokeswoman Pat Schultz said from Los Angeles that she couldn't comment on whether animal-rights groups influenced the decision or why King wasn't invited to appear without the mushing demonstration.

Six dogs among the 1,300 animals in this year's Iditarod died.

King, 37, won the 1,100-mile race in a record time of 10 days, 15 hours and 38 minutes.

School on the Range

Midland DARE officer Steve Skaggs, sitting atop a dummy horse, demonstrates the art of roping during Greenwood's Pioneer Day.

GREENWOOD — Greenwood fourth-graders recently got a real taste of Pioneer Day — mixed with some grit — when they battled dust storms to experience the Old West.

"Good thing I have this bandana," said one youngster as he covered his mouth with the red scarf and peered at Bob Ballard of Big Spring, known as the Mountain Man.

Ballard, a member of the historical reenactment group, the First West Texas Border Scouts, demonstrated everything from a playing a turkey bone whistle to loading a flintlock rifle. He brought along a covered wagon loaded with pioneer paraphernalia.

Inside the school, away from the blasts of dust, but still mindful of the weather, Odessan James Bledsoe transformed a smooth chunk of bass wood into a grizzled cowboy, with a beard blowing to one side.

"Why is his beard crooked?" one fourth-grader asked.

"The wind's blowing," Bledsoe said. "Besides, you don't see cowboys with every hair in place."

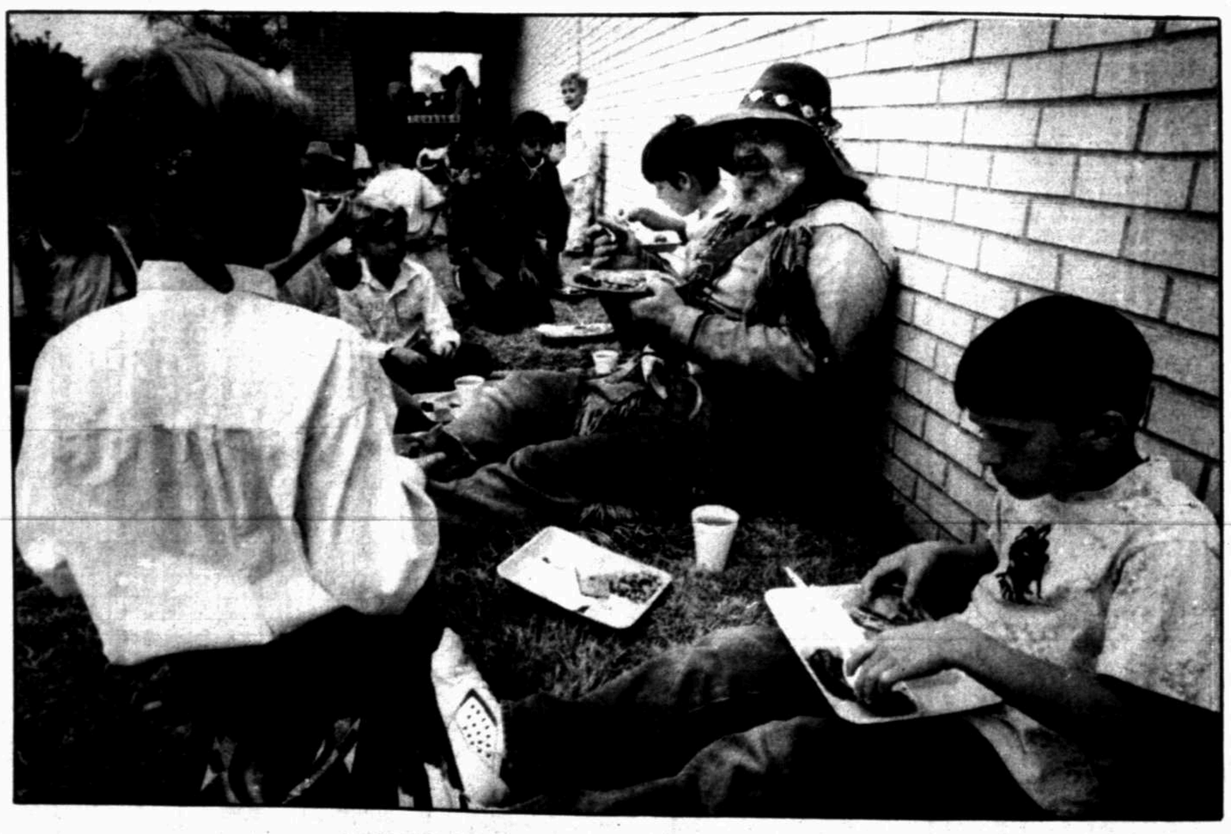

Bledsoe, a whittler all of his life, said he began taking up the art of wood carving seriously 12 years ago, "about a year before I retired," he said.

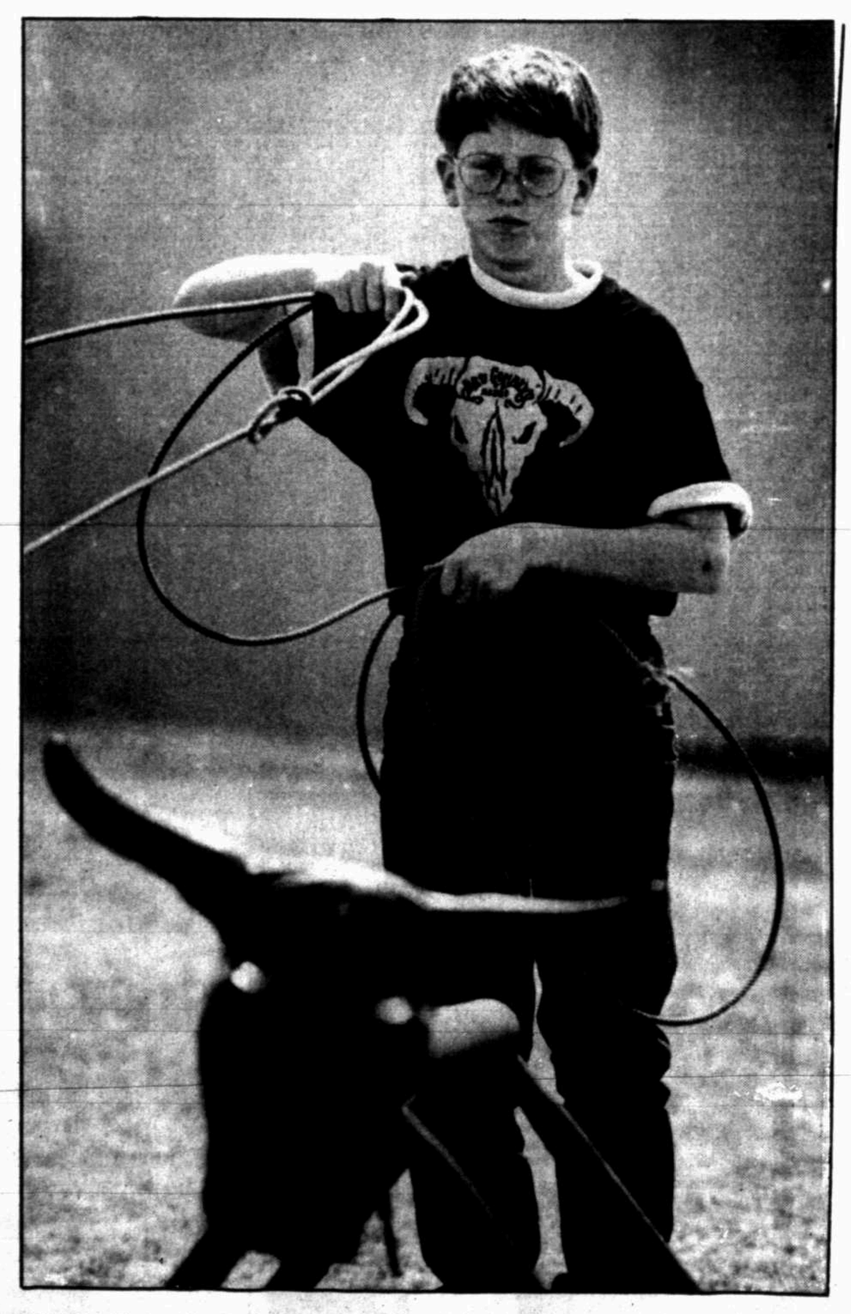

Youngsters tried lassoing, horseshoe tossing, mechanical calf roping and saw a horse being shod.

"It's a lot of fun," said one pony-tailed brunette, waiting for her turn to toss a horseshoe. Suddenly sticking out her tongue to wipe the dust off of it, she said, "You just have to keep your mouth closed."

Audra Cozart concentrates when tossing horseshoes.

Shelby Fietz attempts to lasso a metal 'calf.'

'Mountain Man' Bob Ballard chows down on some grub with little cowpokes, above, and then displays a handmade knife, right.
