Junk food supplier to fight ban

By Lisa Paikowski
Update staff writer

The government has waged another battle in its war against "junk foods" in schools, but the supplier of the food items for Lubbock public schools says it won't go down without a fight.

The Agriculture Department last week issued a proposed ban on candy, chewing gum and sodas in schools that serve federally subsidized lunches in an effort to offer more fruits, nuts and vegetables to school children.

Vending machine distributors, the food industry and the general public have 60 days to comment on the proposed ban before any regulations are established on Jan. 1.

The regulation was proposed after the Agriculturare Department offered the government's first official definition of "junk food."

Foods are considered "junk food" or food of minimum nutritional value if one serving or a portion with 100 calories contains less than five percent of the recommended daily allowance of any of eight basic nutrients.

The manager of one of the vending machine companies contracted with the Lubbock Independent School District said he is opposed to the proposed ban on the food items that he believes "are wholesome food like anything else."

Eugene Roberts, manager of B&M Vending, added that "this has come up before but they tabled it" because bottlers, vendors and some legislators would not back the removal of all the targeted food items from schools.

In fact, a ban was proposed last year, but an Agriculture Department official, was withdrawn because of complaints that the criteria for determining that a food had little nutritional value was vague.

Roberts said his company currently supplies candy bars, chips, nuts and soft drinks — both diet and regular — to the schools. The Coca-Cola-Sprite Bottling Co. is also contracted with the schools and supplies the syrups for soft drinks to the snack bars in the secondary schools.

Vending machines are in the secondary schools for student use, but are in elementary schools only in the teachers' lounges.

Roberts said his company stopped supplying sugared gum to the schools upon the district's request. Mints and chewy candy were also removed in 1976 at the school board's order and later some sugared soda pop was removed to make room for more diet drinks.

Roberts said, however, that the sugared pops are more popular in the schools. "Few diet drinks are accepted by the kids," he said.

"It is a sad situation when we're governed by one department and we're restrained from doing something that brings in revenue for the schools that they need so badly," said Roberts.

He said that the schools "would have a great loss" in revenue if such a ban were allowed and that his company would suffer losses as well. He said he could not guess at any figures, however.

Roberts said he does not know whether the students would accept fruits and nuts in place of the artificially sweetended snacks, but said if they want the candy and pop, they will find it outside the schools. "They'll still be able to get it," he said.

Roberts said he will probably comment on the ban to the government through the Texas Merchandising Association, the spokesman for the state's vending companies.

Representative will not identify prospective buyers of hospital

By Kim Cobb
Update staff writer

Those mysterious Dallas investors who might want to buy financially ailing Health Sciences Center Hospital still haven't identified themselves.

Their Lubbock representative won't identify the people he is supposed to be representing, but he says they are in no rush to make a pitch for the facility just yet.

Tommy Young, a commercial salesman for Associated Builders Realtors, approached Lubbock County Hospital District board chairman Jack Strong with a nebulous request after Thursday's board meeting. Young said he represented people who might want to buy the hospital.

The salesman said his clients want a letter from Strong indicating the district is interested in discussing a possible sale. But Strong said that neither is the hospital for sale nor is he interested in dealing with unamed parties.

But Strong told Young that the investors were welcome to speak to the board as a whole at any time. Strong said he would have to check with the district's legal counsel before he could actually talk to anybody about selling the hospital.

When contacted this week, Young told the Avalanche-Journal that nothing has developed on the alleged purchase offer since Thursday's meeting. He has been in contact with the investors, he said, adding that they are "looking at it from a few feet away."

The investors are still interested, he said, but probably won't appear at a board meeting any time soon.

The board is scheduled to meet again Monday.

"Right now, it's certainly not that big a deal," Young said of the investors' interest. Board member Joe Stanley said last week that Strong is "waiting for a letter from them stating their position."

Stanley also said Young indicated the investors own other hospitals across the country. He predicted that the board would "do its homework" before meeting with the investors, if they choose to make an appearance.

Most of Thursday's board meeting centered on finding a replacement for former LCHD executive director Gerald Bosworth, who was recently dismissed by the board. The job was offered to Methodist Hospital's administrator, George Brewer, who refused the position.

In other action, the board requested that George McGowan, associate director of operations, continue to run the hospital in his current capacity, acting as if Bosworth were on vacation.

"Officially, Jerry Bosworth is still on the payroll for the next three months," Strong said, explaining McGowan's status. Bosworth is to be paid for 90 days beyond his contract expiration date of June 30.

McGowan told reporters after the board meeting that he was interested in the permanent job of LCHD executive director. But he admitted later that his chances may be slim because of his close working relationship with Bosworth.

"At this point, I may not even be a candidate because of Mr. Bosworth," McGowan said.

McGowan has been with the medical school-teaching hospital organization since April 1973. He started work administering the clinic at Texas Tech's Thompson Hall, eventually moving into the administrative position at Health Sciences Center Hospital.

Minority plaintiffs to appeal ruling

Minority plaintiffs challenging Lubbock's at-large city council elections said last week they plan to appeal a district court ruling which said the city's government has been responsive to minority needs.

The group lost its original suit June 8 when U.S. District Court Judge Halbert O. Woodward ruled the city's at-large elections did not prohibit the election of minority city council members.

Separate violent incidents leave two Lubbock men dead

Violence in East Lubbock last weekend, left in separate incidents, two Lubbock men the city's thirteenth and fourteenth homicide victims.

The first, apartment manager Ben Guzman, 38, was beaten and stabbed to death Saturday when he reportedly attempted to end a disturbance at the apartment complex swimming pool.

An autopsy showed Guzman had been stabbed six times and beaten on the head in the incident at the Sunnyside Apartments, 1027 E. 29th St.

A "riot" ensued when police arrived to investigate, according to police reports. Approxiamtely 100 person reportedly gathered around the pool preventing police and ambulance attendants from reaching Guzman's body.

Military policeman, Victor T. Salazar, 19, was charged Monday with Guzman's death. A Slaton native, Salazar is stationed in North Carolina. A 16-year-old male from Waco is also in custody on the same charges.

In addition, two more persons were charged Monday with assaulting police officer Gary Thurman in the violence following the killing.

Another Lubbock man, Kenneth Lynn Ford, 21, of 500 E. Broadway Monday with the Sunday morning murder of Edward James Cooper, 21, of 3319 E. 14th St.

Cooper died Sunday night in a Lubbock hospital after being riddled with gunfire in the 800-block of Avenue C shortly after 2 a.m.

A witness told police he was talking to Cooper when a man approached from a nearby alley and shot Cooper. The gunfire hit Cooper in the chest, hand and hip.

Fire Department investigators gathered samples Monday from the remains of an early Sunday morning fire that gutted a downtown discotheque.

The samples, which Fire Marshall Robert Stokes says cause him to strongly suspect arson, are being analyzed by Department of Public Safety technicians.

The club — Studio 1 at 714 Broadway — was insured for $300,000 — $150,000 for the building and $150,000 for the contents, said owners Roger Freeman and Rodney Holloman.

No damage estimate is available.

Houston officials traveled to Lubbock Tuesday to transfer a Lubbock man charged with a June 13 murder in Houston. Lubbock police arrested the man, Aviana Neil Jester, 25, of 105 Ave. U, July 4.

Also last week, Lubbock police said they confiscated laboratory equipment and chemicals that might have produced $25,000 in amphetamines when they raided an abandoned building just outside the city.

It appeared the lab operator was in the process of moving the lab when police arrived, a detective said. But police still found the equipment and chemicals they suspect might be the ingredients for making amphetamines.

The same day drugs were stolen from the University Villa nursing home, 2400 Quaker Ave. when two "shabby looking" armed men held up the home.

The men fled with an undisclosed amount of narcotics.

Witnesses described the men as white, in their 20s, bearded, between 5'8" and 4'9" in height and shabbily dressed.

The suspects have not been found.

Police also have no suspects in the theft of a life-sized, Fiberglas horse stolen from atop the Bill Price Western Store, 2854 34th St.

The theives took the $395 figure sometime between Saturday afternoon and Monday morning, Price told police.

Monday night, two Lubbock women were arrested on suspicion of prostitution after they offered to perform sexual acts in the arresting officer's home.

One of the women hailed the officer's patrol car, according to police reports, and offered to accompany him to his house. The second woman later joined her in another car and was also arrested.

Stock price forecast

(c) 1979 Frederick G. Gahagan

For our survey this week, we interviewed 30 security analysts all of whom specialize in Service Industry stocks. The analysts are employed with such important firms and institutions as Northwestern University; Goldman, Sachs & Co; Herzfeld and Stern; First National Bank of Duluth; and Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. We asked each analyst how high as well as how low he or she thought the price of each stock would rise or fall during the next six months.

The analysts interviewed forecast that the price of Sysco Corp. would go up by an average of 72 percent. They said Sam P. Wallace Co. stock might rise by 69 percent, and John Blair & Co. might increase by 64 percent. Substantial gains were also forecast for Tetra Tech, 46 percent; and Planning Research, 43 percent over the next six months.

When asked how low these same issues might fall over the coming six months, the analysts forecast nothing in the downside column for two of the issues, Sysco Corp. and John Blair & Co. This means the analysts believe that both these issues might currently be selling at their lows for the entire period. For Sam P. Wallace Co., the specialists forecast a possible decline of 17 percent; and for Tetra Tech and Planning Research, possible losses of 15 and 26 percent respectively, were forecast. Thus, analysts see Sysco as having the best chance for a gain with the smallest chance for a loss.

Sysco, in only nine years since its formation, has grown rapidly principally through the acquistion of already-existing companies. It operates a foodstuff distribution network as well as selling advice and equipment to restaurants, supermarkets, hospitals, hotels and institutions in 41 states. Analysts mentioned its almost continuous growth in earnings since its inception as well as an expectation for gains in market share within the industry. Since the stock showed no forecast loss according to the analysts during the coming six months, it has a 72 percent net forecast gain.

Sam P. Wallace Co. is a mechanical contracting company which services construction projects both in the U.S.A. and abroad. It is involved with the installation of heating and plumbing (and other) systems in new construction, and also deals in public projects like waste disposal and water purificaiton. In spite of poor profitablility in the second quarter of this year and some predictions of an impending decline in orders, the analysts forecast a net rise for this stock of 52 percent.

John Blair & Co. is an advertising company with important connections throughout the country for selling radio and TV commercial time. The company operates several radio and TV stations of its own and is also engaged in printed advertising on a large scale. It was cited by analysts for its sizable gain in earnings last year as well as its prospects for a strong showing over the long term. As with Sysco (above) the analysts forecast no loss for Blair, leaving the issue with a much-higher-than-usual forecast net gain of 64 percent.

Tetra Tech is a small company (584 employees) engaged in highly technical underwater optical work necessary in the exploration for new off-shore oil and gas fields. It also provides certain specialized engineering services on underwater and other energy-development projects. Its primary customers are the U.S. government and large industrial companies. Some analysts felt the company is too heavily dependent on government contract work, however the average net gain forecast for the stock was 31 percent.

Planning Research is a consortium of 20 companies which provides consulting services to both government and industry in several fields such as computer systems, engineering, and construction management. However, despite constantly increasing earnings since the recession-affected year 1973, the company

It's time for a grand debate

SIX YEARS and seven months in the making, SALT II is now signed. But it's still a long way from being sealed and delivered.

That won't be accomplished until the U.S. Senate has had its lengthy say on this new arms limitation agreement with the Soviet Union.

And if we, the people of the United States, think we have already heard enough on the subject, just wait until the Senate cranks itself into high gear. Testimony began Monday before the Foreign Relations Committee amid suggestions that some "clarifications" might be acceptable to Moscow.

Formal ratification debate, considering the subject and the timing — on the eve of a presidential year — promises to be a talkathon to make Panama Canal confrontation pale by comparison.

AT THIS early point, SALT II would appear to stand about equal chances of being oversold by its supporters and underrated by its critics.

What it will not do is dismantle the arsenals of the two global powers and relieve the world of the threat of nuclear war.

What it will do, if ratified, is spell out limited rules for the composition of those arsenals and, as a hoped-for consequence, lengthen the odds against their ever being called into use.

In essence, Washington and Moscow are aiming at state of parity by Jan. 1, 1982, in the weapons with which they are able to hit each other from bases in their respective homelands.

To achieve it, both powers must reduce existing forces, the first such reversal of direction in arms competition in postwar history.

THERE IS no predicting at this point SALT II's eventual fate in the Senate. The best guesstimates put a full 70 percent of the Senate still on the fence. The administration's reading finds 52 senators inclined to vote for the treaty, but that may merely reflect wishful thinking.

Fifty-two is a majority, but not enough. Ratification requires two-thirds (67 votes) approval — and even the most optimistic treaty advocates acknowledge that they are not yet in sight.

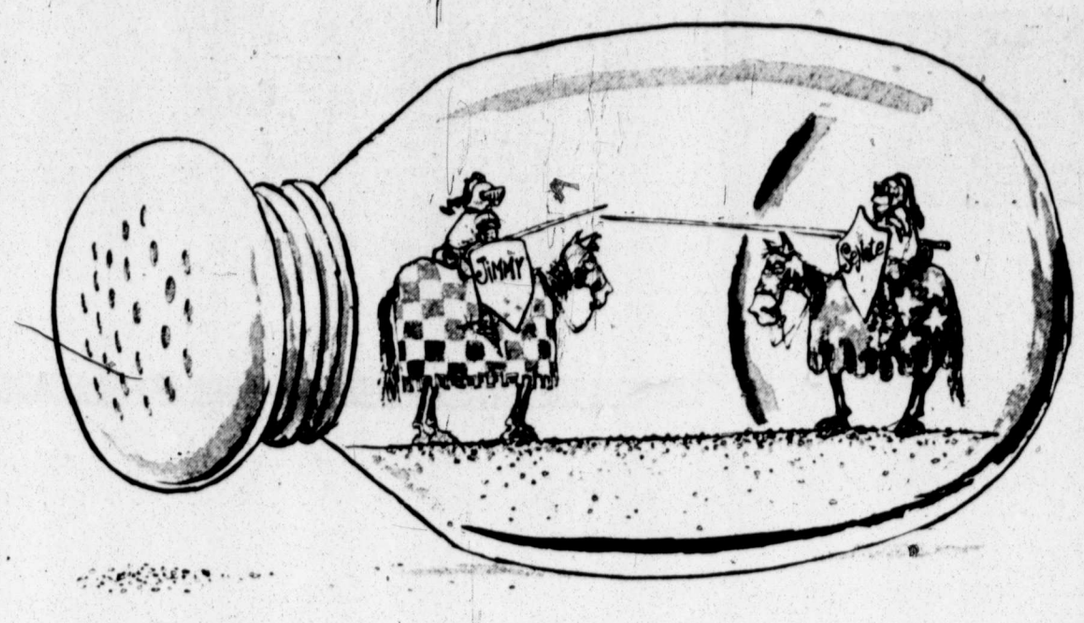

In the coming debate, the Senate has a responsibility to examine the arguments in minute detail, to air all arguments pro and con and to clarify for the public its strengths, weaknesses and significance for the future of national and world security.

But it also has an opportunity to perform a broader public service. If it rises to the occasion, it will go beyond the details of this specific issue to a grand debate on national defense policy.

FOR TOO MANY years now, the defense structure has been shaped on a budget-to-budget, issue-by-issue basis. The Senate is going to have the opportunity to examine the nation's strategic arms structure.

The SALT II debate can be expected to be lengthy and impassioned. But along with all the heat and pre-election year politics, we may emerge with a clearer idea as to where we stand on national defense and where we should be going.

We could certainly do worse.

Humane Society tries to help unwanted animals

By Nancy Allen
Update Staff Writer

What would you do if you stumbled upon a box of newborn kittens or puppies during a stroll through the neighborhood park? Or found that someone had added to your own backyard menagerie by slipping an unwanted pet or two over your fence?

If your answer is 'why take the animals in and give them a good home, of course,' then you are a member of a small minority, says Gretchen Scott, president of the Lubbock Humane Society. A minority so small, in fact, it may not even exist.

"I don't know of a single time someone has raised a litter of abandoned kittens or puppies," she said recently. "People who live around parks and in the country — where animals also are often left — already have all the animals they can handle."

According to Mrs. Scott, who has been a member of the Humane Society since its inception some seven years ago, "dumped" animals are an everyday occurrence in Lubbock.

While abandoning an unwanted pet may solve an immediate problem for its owner, she said, it cruelly exposes the animal to a world in which he cannot survive, and adds to the public's already high danger of rabies exposure.

"If people would only understand, nothing good happens to a pet when it is turned out," Mrs. Scott emphasizes. "There is nothing worse for an animal than not to be owned — it has no instincts to survive."

Tom Trombley, director of Lubbock's Animal Shelter, estimates 25 percent of the city pet population is vaccinated against rabies.

That leaves 75 percent vulnerable to exposure to the fatal disease which is reaching epidemic proportions in Texas, and abandoned pets, said Trombley, are a good way to spread the disease.

"They pose a problem because of where they're dumped," he said. Animals often are abandoned outside the city limits, where they come into contact with wildlife — such as skunks — which commonly transmit rabies, Trombley explained.

Trombley theorizes the reason people abandon their unwanted pets is "it's easier for a person's conscience to dump an animal than to bring it down here (to the Animal Shelter) where 80 percent of the animals we get are destroyed."

That line of thinking, Trombley said, is completely wrong. "When a person lets a dog loose on the street, it has only a 50-50 chance of surviving," he said.

Even if an animal does survive the rigors of independence, that life is not a good one. "Strays don't live long," said Mrs. Scott. "They get killed — shot or hit by cars."

Some 5,000 dead animals are picked up yearly by Animal Shelter wardens.

A pet is too easy to come by, agree Trombley and Mrs. Scott. The huge numbers of cats and dogs available only encourage people to mistreat and abandon their pets.

"It costs $17 to get an animal out of the shelter," Trombley said. "Rather than pay it, people just go out and get another free puppy. It's too easy."

Mrs. Scott thinks of the problem in harsher terms. "We pick up animals just like we do garbage, and we dispose of them like garbage. It seems rather permissible to throw an animal away," she said.

To combat the problem, Mrs. Scott said "The main thing is to reduce the pet population so that people who don't really want a pet won't have one."

Reluctant pet owners, she maintains, aren't likely to put up with much trouble from their animals.

"People love their puppies, but when they start to tear up custom-made drapes, dig up the back yard and knock over the children, they're not so loveable anymore," Mrs. Scott said. That is when a beloved puppy is likely to become an abandoned dog.

Both Trombley and Mrs. Scott would like to see prospective pet owners pay a higher up-front price for their animals on the grounds that it would help make them aware that keeping a pet isn't free.

"People just don't realize how much it costs to own a pet," Mrs. Scott says.

For an average-sized dog — a beagle or cocker spaniel — she would set the yearly maintenance cost at $150, based on licence, shots, worm checks, a sex "alteration" and a year's supply of dry dog food with "no treats."

Larger pets cost proportionately more to keep, she said, with costs ranging as high as $1,000 yearly for the care and feeding of a horse.

Altering — spaying or neutering a pet — is the single most important way to reduce the animal population, said Mrs. Scott. She stresses "there is no finer pet than an altered pet. It's interested in you and your family, not whining and tearing up the back yard and escaping to breed.

Ideally, said Mrs. Scott, every pet would be altered and given a good home. The other alternative — the only alternative — she said, is a humane death.

Disco-wear sales still steady

By Debbi Stalter
Update staff writer

Although one might expect that "disco-wear" had about outdone its stay in the fashion field, local retailers still are showing steady sales of the shiny, tight and slinky outfits.

Straight-legged stretch pants in every color imaginable are still hot items to the surprise of one mall store manager, who said she doesn't understand the popularity of such expensive clothing that usually cannot be worn to work.

"They're (the pants) selling like crazy, especially to the younger girls, like high school and junior high," she said.

The store has noticed a drop-off, as have others, in the clothing since hot summer weather hit West Texas. Many women seem to be turning more to the disco-style dress for comfort, rather than sweating underneath skintight slacks and bright-colored shirts that attract even more heat.

A store clerk interviewed said that she thought disco blouses were still selling well, not because of the Olivia Newton-John movies bringing in a new fad, but because the blouses her store carries are of good quality material.

Some of the local merchandisers recently have been trying to phase out their disco lines, buying only a minimum selection mostly of dresses made of silky Quiana or crepe. However, stores report that even their limited amount of the line is gone from the racks as soon as it arrives.

Another mall store manager expects disco-mania to hit again in the holiday season, saying this time of year has caused sales of the stuff to wane until cooler temperatures make the wearer more comfortable.

One item that probably will never make a splash in the Lubbock clothing market, said one of the managers, is the transparent plastic pants, usually worn over body suits or short pants.

The manager said not only did she find the pants unattractive, but at a market showing she attended, the pants tended to "fog up" from the models' body heat. She said the slacks have probably been more in the fashion scenes of Dallas and Houston.

A few calls for the plastic coverings were received by the local retailer's store, but she said she never felt there was a big enough demand to warrant ordering them for her store.

She said there is a possibility in the near future that manufacturers will stop giving so much attention to straight, narrow legs on slacks and begin putting more of a flare in upcoming styles. She said she feels the manufacturers may be tiring of dealing with slacks that must fit perfectly through the entire leg, and she thinks there are still plenty of women who would rather have a slightly flared leg.

Woman finds home-grown herbs add special touch to recipes

By Joanne Lively
Update Staff Writer

Herb-growers must be the most dedicated gardeners of all, and Mrs. W.G. Langley's special herbal green thumb provides a tantalizing example.

"It's just as much fun to cook with the herbs you've grown yourself," she said, "so I have a wonderful time both growing and cooking."

Mrs. Langley is a native of Stephenville, a city named after her mother's ancestors. She grew up on a farm and was the oldest of seven children.

"Some of my relatives had 16 or 18 kids," she said, "and back then it wasn't all that unusual. If you lived in a big family, however, you learned to do with what you had. I'm also of 'Dutch' ancestry — that may have something to do with my thriftiness and green thumb, if I do indeed have one."

The Langleys (her husband is employed by the L.C. Hill Fence Co.) have lived in Lubbock 22 years, and one portion of their property is set aside for the love of Mrs. Langley's life — herbs. She has more than 50 different varieties growing out-of-doors.

The herb-grower became interested in growing the plants when she was unable to find certain herbs at the particular time she needed it. She also found that at times it was nearly impossible to find very fresh herbs. In addition, herbs were expensive to buy. "So, one day," she said, "I just decided I would learn to grow my own herbs.

"When I began to gather and study information concerning the growing of herbs, I found a lot of variance in what the different books, magazine and newspaper articles would say. So, you might say I learned about growing herbs mostly by the trial-and-error method.

"If you have heard that herbs are difficult to grow, there's some truth to it. However, it isn't in the actual growing, but getting the seeds to germinate and get started. And some articles and books on the subject fail to mention that some of the herbs, such as rosemary and tarragon, are better purchased as plants.

"While I do have a greenhouse to 'start' my seeds, I still believe almost anyone can grow herbs by getting the proper information and doing whatever is needed to insure their growth. One of the things people sometimes do incorrectly is to plant the seeds in pots without a hole in the bottom. If there is one single tip I can give it that is most important, it is that herbs can tolerate almost anything, except poor drainage."

Mrs. Langley says she will give instructions about growing herbs to anyone who buys either seeds or plants from her.

"But the nice thing about herbs," she said, "is there are so many perennial ones, as most of mine are. The herbs come through the winter all right, come up, grow and multiply. We do have one problem in our area about the growing of herbs outdoors. Herbs, most of them, require really cold weather to germinate.

"This time of the year you can go ahead and plant herb seeds outdoors under these condition, however, your plants may come up 20 miles down the road."

Mrs. Langley uses the herbs she grows in almost everything the family eats. She said, "My vinegar is delicious on salads, and I use my herbs in making pickles and relishes. But I also prepare many dishes using spicy things, such as garlic and oregano, which my family eats and enjoys."

The homemaker-gardener is equally enthusiastic about canning. She believes she saves a great deal of money in canning produce from the family garden but thinks even those having to buy fruits and vegetables still can save by canning.

"I enjoy canning," she said, "and it isn't drudgery to me. Sometimes people make it that way — it is all a matter of attitude. If you think of canning as tiring and boring, then you probably shouldn't try it. I think many people would benefit, however, by canning only a small amount at a time, which is the way I do it. It's easier for me, though, since I can just go out and pick a small amount in the morning and have it canned by night." (Incidentally, Mrs. Langley also gives canning lessons.)

Several of Mrs. Langley's favorite recipes are:

DILL PICKLES KOSHER STYLE

Make a brine of 1 cup salt to 8 cups of water and soak medium-size cucumbers for 24 hours. Drain, rinse and dry. Make a vinegar solution of 2 cups of white vinegar and 3 cups water, adding 2 tblsps. mixed pickling spices and several bunches of dill (as much as you like). Bring to boil; add cucumbers and remove from heat. Pack cucumbers into jars with at least one small bunch of dill, 2 cloves of garlic and 2-3 small hot peppers. Put vinegar back on heat, bring to a boil and pour over cucumbers in jar. Be certain to have liquid covering cucumbers in jar. Seal at once. Allow to set for at least two weeks before using. Reminders: No one likes a mushy pickle, so follow instructions carefully!

SALAD DRESSINGS WITH HERBS

9-10 tblsps. olive oil or salad oil
1 tblsp. basil vinegar
2 tblsps. lemon juice
5 fresh mint leaves, chopped or 1/2 tsp. dried
2 tblsps. minced parsley
1 tblsp. onion (or chives) minced
1 tsp. salt
1/4 tsp. coarsely ground pepper
1/8 tsp. sugar

Shake all ingredients well in a jar or cruet.

From Home to Freezer

Raising Penguins in a Fridge

More than 280 penguins live in this freezer. Sea World is building a special exhibit where the public can see the penguins. But for now, this freezer is off limits to most visitors.

SAN DIEGO, CALIF. — Two years ago, Sea World (a sea-animal zoo, amusement park and research center) began a penguin experiment.

The scientists wanted to see if they could start a colony of small Adelie and larger Emperor penguins from the Antarctic.

They wanted these penguins to have babies so the colony could keep on growing.

The experiment has been a success. Last season, 14 baby Adelies were born. This is not many, but it proves that the scientists are doing the right things.

None of the Emperors have had babies, but the Sea World people hope that is just because they are not old enough.

A scientist feeds one of the baby penguins. Penguin eggs were brought back, too. The penguins hatched some. Others were placed in an incubator (a device used to hatch eggs) and carefully cared for by scientists and volunteers.

Getting there

The birds first traveled by helicopter from their homes at rookeries, or nesting places, along the Antarctic beaches. They were loaded on refrigerated planes and flown to San Diego. They were carried in a freezer truck from the airport to their freezer-home.

The freezer

The temperature is kept below freezing.

The lighting is turned on or off so it is like it would be at the Antarctic, where some days have 24 hours of darkness.

Over 8,000 pounds of crushed ice are added daily. The penguins eat it to get water.

They eat and swim in two salt-water pools.

Everything is done to make the penguins think they are back home.

The Adelie penguins . . . the most popular kind

An Adelie penguin.

There are 17 different kinds of penguins.

The one that most of us think of when we think of a penguin is the cute little Adelie.

These penguins have white feathers, white-rimmed eyes and a very comical walk. They stand about 18 inches tall.

They are very friendly and curious. Sometimes they walk right up to Antarctic explorers.

There are millions of them living in Antarctica.

They nest in colonies called rookeries. As many as 300,000 adults might form a single colony.

They are very noisy birds. They fight over space and the rocks they use in building their nests.

The mother and father take turns sitting on the eggs.

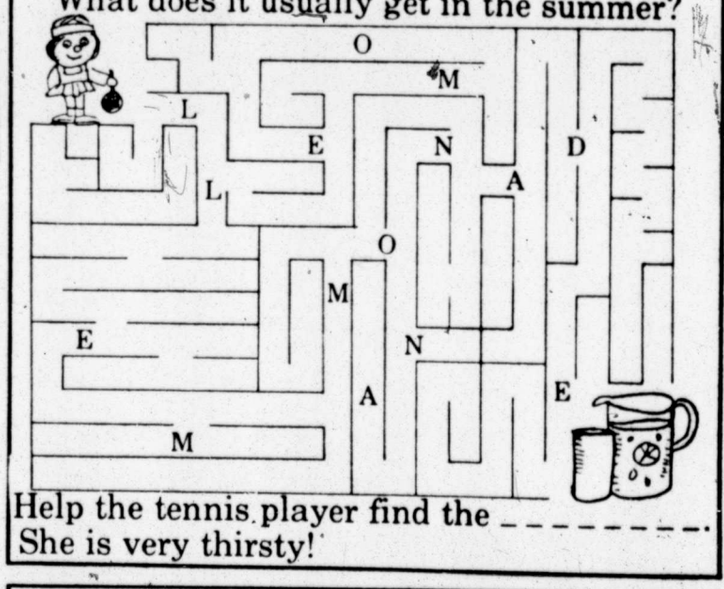

After the chicks hatch, parents also take turns collecting food for the gray babies.

Adelies can waddle very fast. They also travel by falling on their stomachs and "toboggan" by pushing themselves along the ice with flippers and legs.

has failed to pay a dividend to its shareholders. Analysts forecast a net gain of 17 percent for this stock.

For SCA Services, the analysts predicted a rise of 36 percent versus a drop of 23 percent. They said Federal Express, the airfreight company, might go up by 30 percent and go down by 10 percent for a net gain of 20 percent. Wyle Laboratories was expected to increase 29 percent and decrease 16 percent, and RLC Corp. in analysts' opinions will rise by 25 percent and fall by 15 percent.

Among the remaining issues, analysts forecast gains below 25 percent small when compared to the more favored issues in the Service Industry. Expected losses exceeded expected gains in 8 out of 13 stocks in this category. Some of the factors depressing the six-month outlook for these issues were higher fuel costs, general economic sluggishness and government regulation.

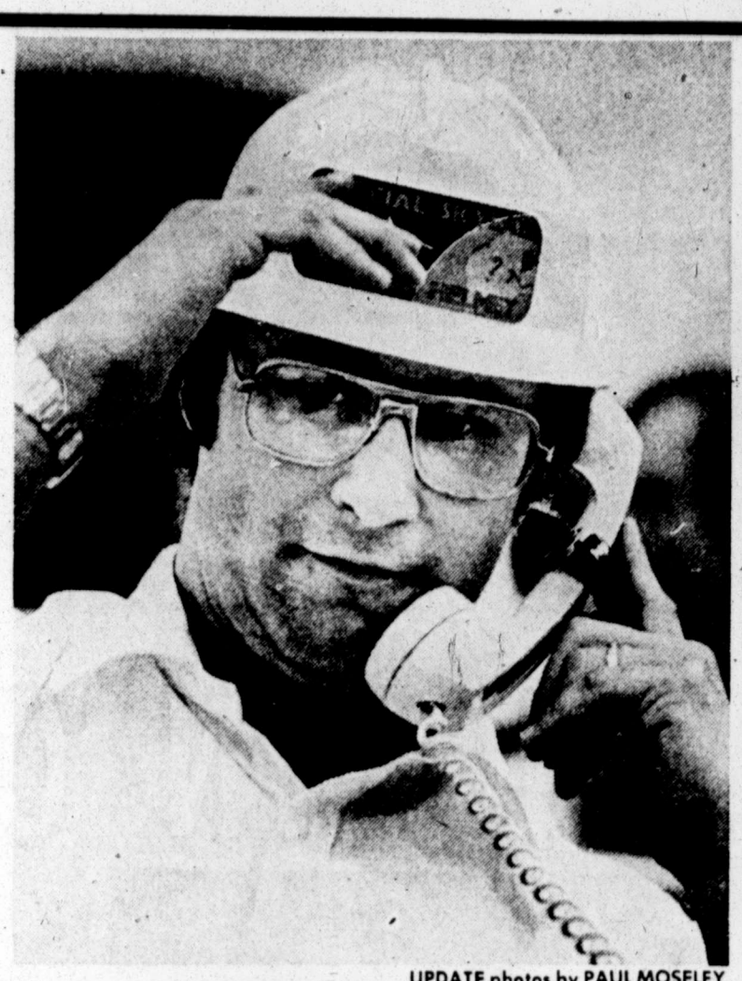

The "service industry is an umbrella which covers many companies whose services are highly diverse. In a sense, it is difficult to compare them with one another since they are collectively engaged in wildly varying aspects of American enterprise. Each faces specific as well as common problems in various degrees, depending upon the nature of its business. Notable in the upside column among the stocks surveyed are Sysco Corp., Wallace Co. and Blair & Co; with net forecast gains of 72 percent, 52 percent and 64 percent respectively.

Teacher's Guide ©UPS

For use by teachers and parents at home and at school.
For use with Issue: Raising Penguins in a Fridge

Main idea: Most children and adults are fascinated by penguins. This issue tells of an interesting experiment and acquaints kids with two kinds of penguins: the Emperor and the Adelie.

: Words to present: amusement, research, experiment, Antarctic, rookery, helicopter, incubator, volunteers. (Discuss how the word "fridge" is a colloquial version of the word "refrigerator.")

Reading: Comprehension: After the child has read the story or after you have read it to him, ask the following questions:

1. When did the penguin experiment begin?
2. How many baby Adelie penguins have been born?
3. What is a rookery?
4. The penguins traveled by three modes of transportation. What were they?

Social Studies: Find San Diego on a map. Also find Antarctica. Discuss what the penguins are going to mean to Sea World as far as attracting visitors.

Math: Ask the children to circle all the numbers in the story. Then ask them to tell why the numbers are important to the story.

Page 4: Art: Ask the children to make up a fun Father's Day card to the papa penguin.

Tech regents establish selection committees

Two subcommittees were established recently to aid the Texas Tech University and Health Sciences Center Boards of Regents, in finding a new president for Tech.

The Boards of Regents will serve as the selection committee.

Assisting the boards will be a search and an advisory committee. Regent Clint Formby of Hereford will chair the search committee and Regent Don Workman of Lubbock the advisory committee.

Serving with Formby on the search committee will be three other regents and three faculty members, who will screen all applications.

Workman's advisory committee will consist of one additional regent, eight university faculty members, two medical school faculty members, two university students and one medical student, and two members of the Ex-Students Association. This group will evaluate applications sent them by the search committee and return their assessments to the search committee for final recommendations to the Boards of Regents.

In other action the regents expressed strong support and reaffirmed high priority for the Tech School of Nursing, appropriations for which were recently vetoed by Governor Bill Clements. The boards urged that planning for the school be continued.

The boards also approved a caretaker operation for the Tech Center at Junction. The regents agreed that the Junction Center will be closed if funds are not forthcoming in the next legislative session. Funds from this year's sessions were vetoed by the Governor.

Circus to march through streets

Lions and tigers and maybe a bear, oh boy, and the entire Ringling Brothers and Barnum & Bailey Circus crew will march from the Santa Fe depot to the Lubbock Municipal Coliseum beginning at 9:30 a.m. today.

The animals first will be unloaded from their 38-car train and walk down Broadway, north on University and on to the A Coliseum.

The animal caravan will kick off the 108th edition of the circus, which will stage six performances tonight through Sunday.

Several Lubbock personalities, including Mayor Pro Tem Alan Henry and Criminal District Attorney John Montford, will lead the procession riding elephants.

The pachyderms will be followed by a herd of through-bred Arabian stallions, ponies, llamas and camels.

Tigers, leopards, panthers, pumas and chimpanzees will follow in their brightly colored cages.

Joining the animal caravan will be the Clown Corps, called the larges clown brigade in the world by the circus.

Tickets for the shows are available at both Hemphill-Wells stores and at the Coliseum box office.

Customer comes first at local Payless Cashways

By Ted Simon
Update staff writer

Payless Cashways Inc., which operates 68 building materials stores from corporate headquarters in Kansas City, Mo., has logged a net income of $5,395,680 during the first six months of this year.

That volume of profit was based on net sales plus other income of $132,521,253, an increase of $26,498,017 or 24.99 percent over the comparable period in 1978.

Similarly, the firm's Lubbock store, headed by Mike Epperson, appears to have developed into one of the leading home improvement stores in the city since its opening in December, 1976, at 102 E. 50th St.

Epperson, who said Payless Cashways originated in Iowa Falls, Iowa, indicated the company currently is concentrated in the Midwestern portion of the United States, with recent expansion trends resulting in new locations in California, and in Houston.

Epperson joined the firm 10 years ago as yard foreman at Mesquite. He later became floor supervisor, then transferred to Texarkana as assistant manager. He was appointed manager of the Lubbock store at its opening.

The Lubbock operation includes plumbing, electrical, millwork, lumber, paneling, hardware, paint and floor covering departments on its list of building supply areas.

Ron Scott of Lubbock, assistant store manager, believes the home remodeling business is on an upward trend at present.

"With the interest rates the way they are right now, this particular industry is going to skyrocket in the next few years, because people are able to do things themselves, and we feel that we have fairly well-trained personnel to help them with any ideas they have," Scott said.

The store, situated on a five-acre tract, also includes some ranch and farm items, such as fencing, livestock tanks, livestock gates and other supplies.

Scott said the firm's marketing philosophy entails buying at the lowest possible price, and selling at a reasonable markup.

"We are in a buying position where we can buy, instead of truckloads and carloads of merchandise, we can buy a whole trainload."

While the various retail outlets operate somewhat independently, the managers in a given district meet to decide what products will be put into the stores, and then all the stores handle that brand merchandise.

A possible slowdown in the economy is not expected to affect the home improvement business, according to Scott.

With the interest rate rising on all the new homes, "it is easier to get a loan for a remodeling of your present house, and for that reason people will be buying paneling, floor covering, kitchen cabinets, new appliances — anything and everything to spruce up their older home," Scott said.

He believes the company's position in Lubbock is strong. "We feel like we are the leaders in the community in this particular business, and feel like we are going to stay there."

He added, "We may be new and young to Lubbock, but we are totally convinced that this particular market is going to be good for us."

Payless Cashways keeps a list of reminders hanging in its office area which spells out its goal of exalting its business partner — the customer. The following points are included:

"A Payless Cashways customer is the most important person in our business.

"A customer is not an interruption of our work. He is the purpose of it.

"A customer does us a favor when he comes in. We aren't doing him a favor by waiting on him.

"A customer is part of our business — not an outsider.

"A customer deserves the most courteous attention we can give him. He is the lifeblood of this and every business."

Payless Cashways plans to be operating 100 building materials supermarts by the end of fiscal 1982, according to an annual company report to stockholders.

"As originally announced the 1979 expansion phase involved four new retail outlets in Indianapolis, Ind., and five in the Houston market areas," the report stated.

"Regardless of what is being said about economic prospects for 1979, the company expects advances in all areas: sales, earnings and number of stores in operation. Management believes this confidence is entirely justified by the increasing size of the do-it-yourself home repair and remodeling market," according to the report.

The company believes the home remodeling and improvement market "is quite separate and distinct from the credit-intensive new home construction market," and that a decline in new housing starts will have little if any effect on what the individual home owner spends to maintain his property.

"Everything the customer needs from a minor repair task to building a complete home is found at a typical Payless Cashways or Furrow Building Materials supermarket," the company report said.

The company says computerized data indicates that 122 million home improvement projects are undertaken every year by do-it-yourselfers, either working alone or with the help of professionals.

Segregated into the following classifications, the projects include: bathroom remodeling, 2,498,000; kitchen remodeling, 2,335,000; basement remodeling, 1,303,000; room additions, 1,112,000; porches, 932,000; new garages, 777,000; garage conversions into living space, 442,000; new carports, 287,000.

The company lists the following information in describing its operations:

"Payless Cashways basic business is serving the do-it-yourself customer. The company's entire sales and merchandising effort is devoted to this category of consumer.

"Most of the company's building materials supermarts are so located that they are equally convenient to urban-suburban and farm-ranch customers.

"Each Payless Cashways supermart is designed to be a one-stop shopping center for everything in building materials, hardware, and related lines.

"Basic sales policy is cash and carry, though credit card purchases are accepted.

"The company has a one price policy for all customers served regardless of merchandise volume purchased.

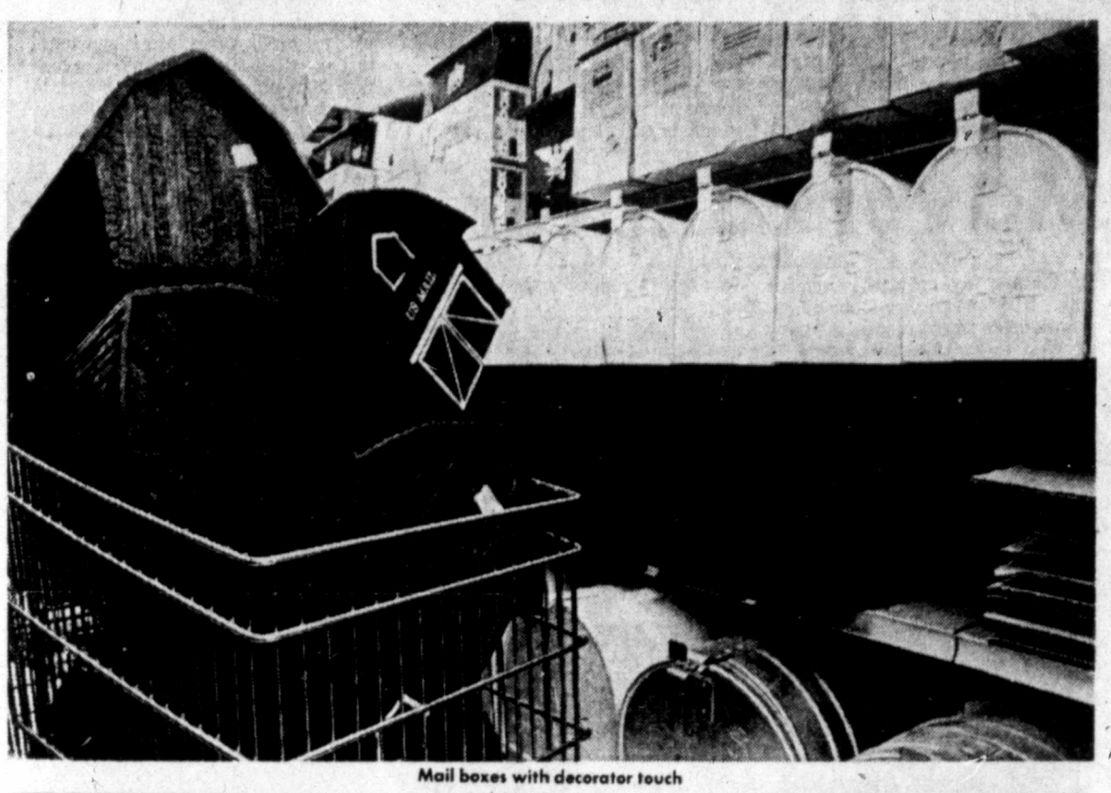

"Name brand merchandise is offered at fair and competitive prices.

"Each retail outlet has warehouse and other storage capacity to stock 'on sale' items in quantity, reducing to a minimum out-of-stock situations.

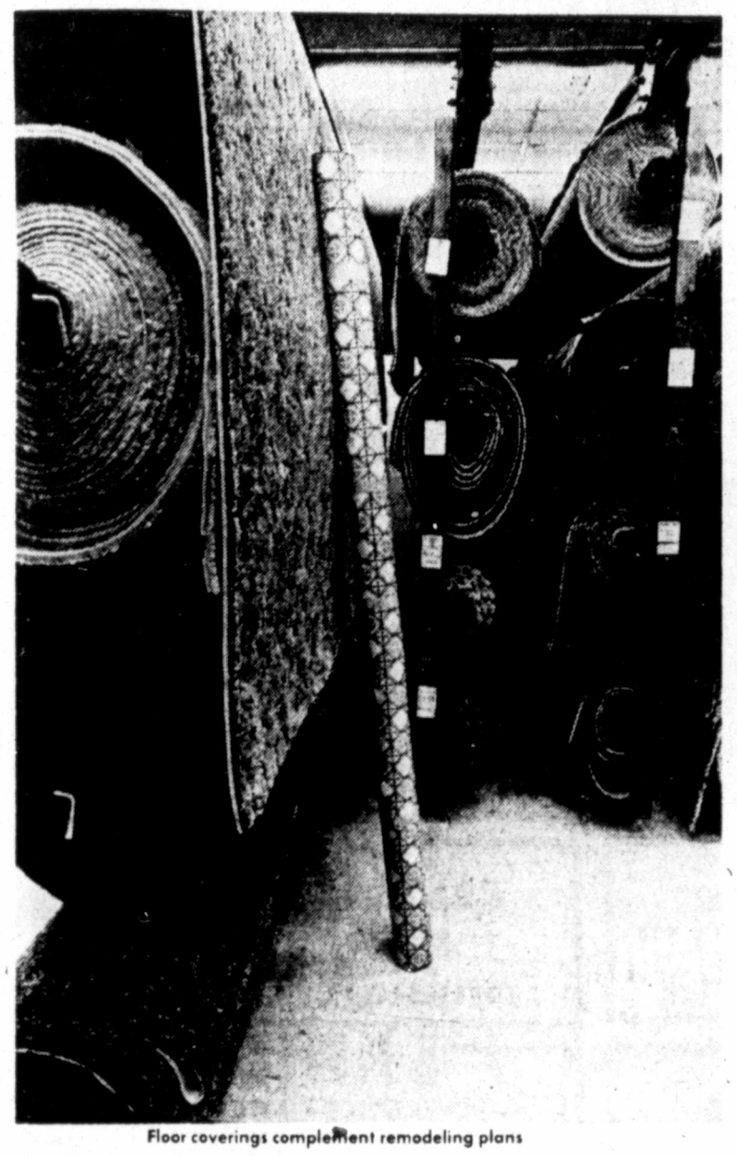

"The primary method of reaching present and potential customers is through sales tabloids which are inserted in local newspapers. They also are available in quantity at each retail store. More than 61 million sales tabloids were printed and distributed in fiscal 1978.

"All retail stores are wholly owned and operated by the company."

Payless Cashways currently has more than 3,000 employes at its various locations and distribution centers.

Pamphlet advises prospective investors to think

lubbock consumer update

By Tom Griess
Update staff writer

The 50th anniversary of an event catastrophe to past generations of Americans has arrived, but so changed is the country and so short the national memory that it is recalled only faintly.

In 1929 the Great Crash occurred, almost overnight stock investments plummented in value, and as the months passed without improvement, panicked citizens confronted financial ruin. A few contemplated suicide and the remainder became wary, in many cases cynical of investments promising sudden wealth.

While time has healed the wounds inflicted a half-century ago, the precautions important in preventing a recurrence of such woes are always worth remembering.

A U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) pamphlet entitled "Investigate Before You Invest" advises all prospective investors to think of the consequences before they plunge.

The pamphlet stresses the importance of resolving other financial considerations first. For instance, is there ample money to pay the home mortgage? Are spouse and children adequately covered by life insurance? And is there a sufficient balance in the savings account in the event of an emergency?

Gerald Shipley, an account executive with E.F. Hutton and Co., Inc., in Lubbock, speaks of a simple formula.

"A rule of thumb which a lot of people recommend is to have about two months of salary in savings," he says.

E.F. Hutton visualizes a triangle for customers, according to Shipley, which distinguishes between necessary money, safe money, growth money and risk capital. At the bottom of the triangle, occupying the largest area, is the necessary money, which encompasses food, shelter, clothing and other necessities. Above the necessary money the next largest area of the triangle is designated safe money, the insurance policies and savings accounts.

Towards the point of the triangle, where space becomes increasingly minimal, growth money is invested in securities that offer safety and moderate growth potential. In short, a usage of money to obtain a greater return than a savings account offers while requiring little more risk. Investments in government securities guaranteed by the federal government for payment come to mind, as do investments in "blue chip" stocks — shares of ownership of established corporations that have preeminent reputations and earnings histories to support them.

Finally there is risk capital, which to the informed investor might mean a try on a hunch or a rumor. To the uninformed investor, however, it is often foolhardy, like betting the races by the color of the horses, and sometimes it can be far worse.

Confidence men prey upon the uninformed prospective investors by promising them the "sure thing," the "pot at the end of the rainbow."

Unfortunately, by the time the victim learns of the con, the beneficiary is usually on to the next town.

The best means to protect against this threat is to use common sense. The pamphlet suggest the following tips:

—Do not deal with strange securities firms. Always consult a broker, banker or other experienced person with whom you are friendly before investing with a new firm.

—Request the saleman to put all advice in writing and mail it to you. Then save it.

—What information you do not understand consult an experienced person to find the answers.

Shipley says all stockbrokers in Texas must be licensed to operate, which requires a test certifying the competence of the broker. So if you have doubts, request the license of the salesman, and if you still possess doubts, Shipley recommends examining the license of the brokers in a well-known reputable firm for comparison.

Next investigate what stock exchange the firm is listed on. He says the exchanges can be written and will disclose whether the firm has passed their qualifying tests.

Also be wary of persons posing as investment experts who stop short of claiming to be professional brokers. "You can get in trouble with a person who calls himself an investment advisor," Shipley says, adding that the adviser may be little more than a flim-flam man.

Finally there is the common sense practice of noticing whether the firm advertises. A prominent display in the yellow pages is reassuring; an excuse that the firm is new in town is not.

Once the prospective investor is satisfied that he indeed does have extra savings to risk and has a list of reputable brokers from which to choose, the process is similar to that used when contemplating any purchase.

Find a broker with whom you have a rapport and a sense of trust; look for the firms offering the experience and variety of investment opportunities that you desire; and compare the commissions charged by the different firms.

Mayor calls for better results

In the past two months the number of city traffic fatalities has doubled from seven deaths to 14 and prompting Mayor Dirk West to call for stricter enforcement of the Selective Traffic Enforcement Program (STEP).

The purpose of the nine-month old program is to toughen the enforcement of city traffic laws and funding is being sought for a continuance of STEP.

While the program appears to be working somewhat — 14 city traffic deaths this year compared to 24 at the same time in 1978 — signs from the past two months show that motorists are once again becoming careless.

The death toll reached seven by May 11, but that figure has since doubled with two persons losing their lives on city streets this month.

West, speaking at a Citizens Traffic Commission meeting last week, said the results of STEP are "good, but not good enough."

The mayor said totals of traffic accidents, injuries and deaths within the city "at first looked great. But now they are beginning to inch back up again. People are becoming complacent."

West commended STEP and police patrolmen for their participation in the program. "We're happy with the job they're doing, but we're not happy at all with the statistics," he said.

As of the first of this week, the city had recorded 5,554 traffic accidents. In those accidents, 1,184 persons had been injured and 14 killed.

The accident toll was increased with a flurry of minor mishaps on icy streets during the first part of the year. At this same time in 1978, there had been 3,843 accidents, 1,271 persons were injured and 24 peole lost their lives.

Last February was the first month since December 1976 that no person was killed in a traffic mishap.

City public information officer Vaughn Hendrie said one way to step up the program might be to launch a more extensive publicity campaign, including radio time so motorists can be reminded of possible risks during heavy traffic concentration.

"We're trying to get people to voluntarily comply (with traffic ordinances) by letting them know the risk is there," Hendrie said. "We've been a little concerned with the number of fatalities the past few months."

West said last week the percentage of traffic-related deaths so far is down about 60 percent from 1978 but "the fact remains that Lubbock has the worst drivers in the state."

Drinking and speeding have been two of the main factors in major accidents and West warned that STEP and city police would be cracking down on those offenders.

"People who are drinking better start walking, catching rides or staying home because we're going to be leaning on them hard," the mayor said.

West also predicted that state funding of STEP is almost certain to be renewed for fiscal 1980, beginning Oct. 1.

If approved, the 1979-80 STEP program will be essentially the same, providing salaries for nine full-time officers in the traffic patrol and for additional patrolmen working overtime for special crackdowns on intoxicated drivers.

High court upholds ruling for damages

A-J Austin Bureau

The Texas Supreme Court has upheld a ruling to award damages to a Lubbock apartment resident whose property was seized for rent default.

Sherry Smith Walton sued Jay Fikes & Associates, owner of King's Park Apartments in Lubbock, after the apartment manager seized a stereo and vacuum cleaner from her apartment. The manager had claimed Walton had defaulted on her rent payment.

The trial court ruled in Miss Walton's favor, awarding her $1,299 in damages including $300 for attorney's fees.

Miss Kindle places high in pageant

Alice Jean Kindle, representing Lubbock in the Miss Texas pageant, was second runner-up in the televised competition Saturday night.

Miss Lubbock won the talent competition in the pageant with a classical piano arrangement.

Her manager, Jack Geddes of Lubbock, noted that it was not just beauty and talent which placed Miss Kindle in the finalists category. Judges also questioned the contestants on current events.

One of Miss Kindle's interview questions concerned the "boat people" — refugees from Vietnam.

Miss Kindle, 19, is a junior at Texas Tech University where she is majoring in applied piano. She plans to teach piano at the college level.

The daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Cecil Kindle of Rockwall visited her parents after the pageant to rest from the rigors of competition and to participate in her sister's upcoming wedding.

Before winning the Miss Lubbock title, Miss Kindle won the Miss Playmate contest at Tech where she is a member of the Alpha Phi sorority.

To again test the popularity of Gov. Clements' recent economy moves, especially those involving general funding for Texas Tech and the proposed school of Nursing, Update asked, "How do you feel about what Gov. Clements is doing? Did you vote for him in the last election, and would you vote for him in the future?"

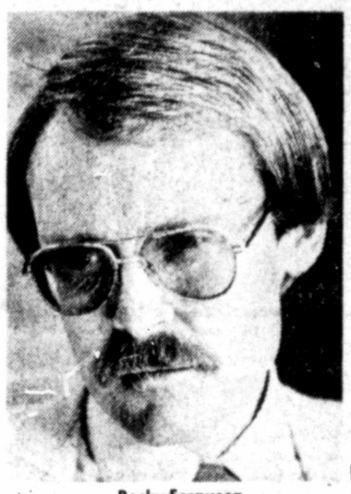

Pat Patenotte said, "I feel Gov. Clements got elected on a campaign promise to reduce taxes; and if we are citizens of Texas, we're going to have to help him. I, personally, don't see how the governor can give us everything we need in West Texas, unless he cuts somebody else.

"In my opinion, I think our primary interest now should be in reducing the cost of government and that's what he's trying to do. I have confidence in Gov. Clement's ability, his philosophy about government — that there should be an end to what government should provide. Also, I think the governor should have left Tech's funds in, if our taxes could still have been reduced. Nor do I think Gov. Clements is picking on Lubbock County. I think he did it all over the state, and I'm proud of him! In the last election, I voted for him and would vote for him in the future."

Randy Partain said, "I didn't vote for Gov. Clements and would not vote for him. It just seems to me Gov. Clements may not be getting the whole and complete story, otherwise he would not be vetoing so many things that are desperately needed in our area."

Rocky Ferguson said, "I talk to a lot of people in the course of my business, and people are expressing some rather heated feelings about everything that is not all right in government, both federal and state. I may be all wrong, but I think people are tired of footing the bills, unless things are straightened out. So, I can understand a little bit what Gov. Clements is doing. Whether or not he's taking the proper course of action, I don't know."

Ilene Mansker said, "I voted for Gov. Clements, but I wish Tech's funding could have been approved. However, I guess the governor had his reasons."

Manager of Hub Homes finds satisfaction in busy position

By Nancy Allen
Update staff writer

The office of the Lubbock Housing Authority at Hub Homes may be utterly devoid of elegance, but the lady who works there, "clerks" there as she puts it, lacks no class.

Frances Sherrod, who has managed the tiny office for the past five years, projects a certain grace. It may not be reflected in the dingy quarters, but nonetheless it is there.

Here compassionate eyes show the class, as does her manner — gentle, calm, yet absolutely steadfast. She is a woman of strong substance and self respect.

Though she's loath to admit it, her job is more than just clerking. From her desk behind the front counter at Hub Homes, Frances Sherrod does everything from placing tenants to handing out mailbox keys. "Whoever works behind the window does it all," she conceeds.

Her dealings with tenants, applicants, maintenance men and other staff members show an easy rapport, one which goes beyond the barriers of color and economic level.

"Housing is renting to people," said Mrs. Sherrod, with the emphasis clearly on people. "I can respond to each one individually here. There are so many needs."

Though she's not a native of Lubbock, Mrs. Sherrod has been here since she was a bride in 1940. After her husband's death some years ago, she enrolled in social work classes at Texas Tech University, with a long-range goal of becoming a welfare aide.

After nearly completing a degree at Tech, she found the only welfare positions open were out in the county. "With a 14 year-old son, I wanted to work in town," she said.

Mindful of her future in social work, however, Mrs. Sherrod said "I knew I needed experience, so I took this job." In retrospect, she said welfare wouldn't have been the right route to take anyway. "I wouldn't have lasted two weeks there, I'm too outspoken. Here I'm my own boss."

Entering the university and stepping out into a competitive job market were two huge steps for a woman who "had always had a husband standing behind me, protecting me," she said..

Nor were those particularly easy steps to take, but Mrs. Sherrod is glad she took them. The last five years have given her an inner strength and confidence to rely on. "You have to step on people's toes sometimes," she admits, and to do it " you have to have self confidence — and big shoulders."

In spite of what she calls the "stigma" attatched to working at Hub Homes, Mrs. Sherrod says she's "completely content" with her job, and to look at her you know it's true. Admittedly sensitive to others' opinions she said, "I can't say I work in civil service or at the First National Bank, it's the only battle I have to fight — what other people think."

Like everyone with a fulfilling job, her only complaint is how time flies. "The days just go by like they were an hour long," she said.

"I love the people. I wouldn't stay here if I didn't love the people." and to Frances Sherrod, that's the deepest satisfaction of all.

Chamber to sponsor economic conference

The research committee of the Lubbock Chamber of Commerce will sponsor a Mid Summer Economic Conference, according to chairman Jim Eppler.

"What we are attempting to accomplish is to provide the people of the Lubbock area with a status report for the first half of the year and to provide them with some insight so they develop an idea of what to expect for the last half of the year," Eppler said.

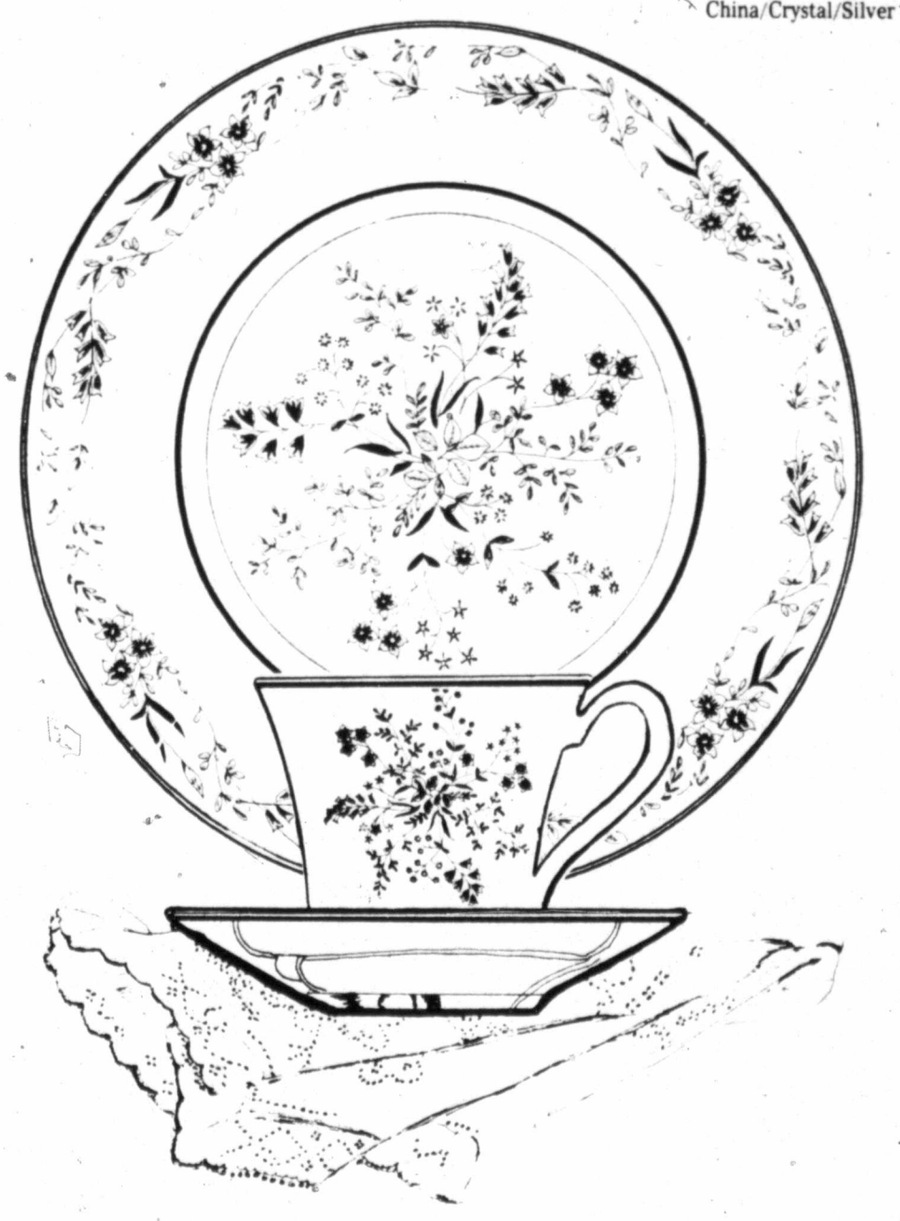

The keynote address is to be given by Dr. Lynn M. Daft, Associate Director for Agriculture and Rural Development on the Domestic Policy Staff of the White House. Dr. Daft's speech will be national in scope and will provide ideas of what is being considered in the top level of government. The speaker has a varied background and the credentials to lend expert advice in several areas that are of interest to all.

The conference will be held Thursday in the Lubbock Memorial Civic Center. The cost for the conference, including lunch, has been set at $10 per person and may be paid on the day of the meeting. Persons interested in attending may make reservations by calling 763-4666 no later than 4 p.m. Tuesday. The conference will begin with registration at 9 a.m. and will conclude by 2 p.m.

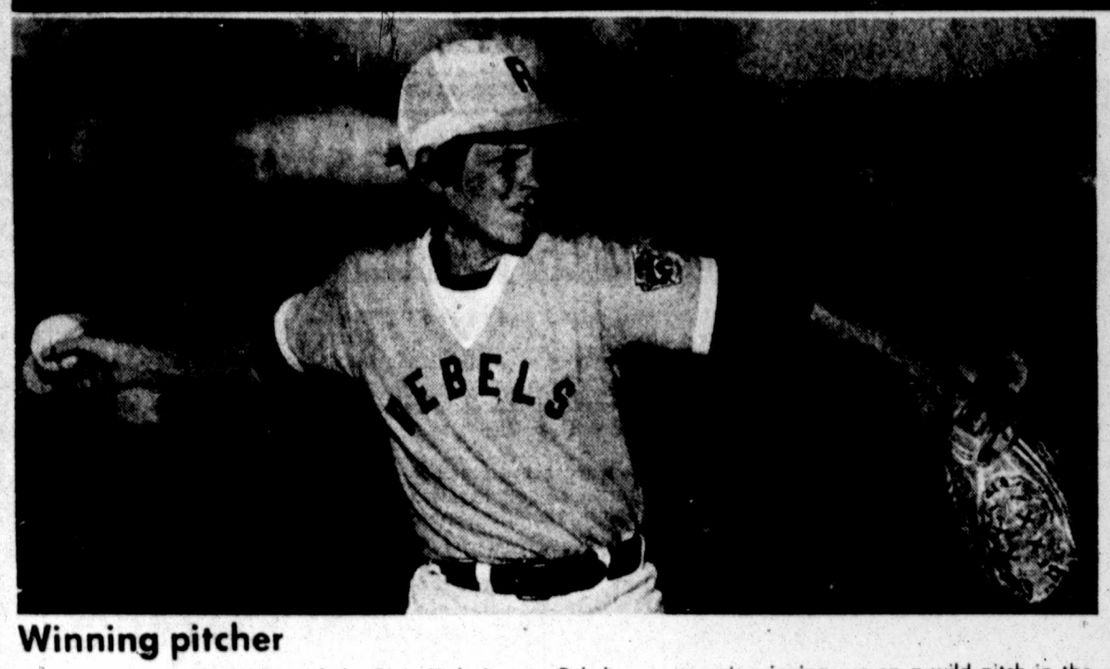

"We feel that the timing of the Mid Summer Economic Conference is important because of the rapid changes that have taken place during the previous six months. People at all levels, including producers, consumers, retailers and lenders, are concerned about what they can expect during the remainder of the year and even in the early part of next year. This is the primary reason that the Research Committee decided to hold the conference in July," Eppler said.

Rebels capture tournament

Dixie Little League champions, Continental Motors Rebels, captured the City Invitational Major League Tournament at Western Little League park last week.

The Rebels downed the Bears, champions of Southern Little League, 5-4 in the tournament's championship game.

Rebels' winning pitcher Brent Rice scored on a wild pitch in the bottom of the seventh inning to give the Dixie team the crown. Shortstop Chris Dobbs keyed the attack with two hits in four trips to the plate.

Northeast No. 2 took third place in the tournament with a 5-4 win over Western No. 1. Keith Thornton was the winning pitcher for Northeast.

Tournament attracts net stars

By Chuck McDonald
Update Tennis Writer

The Lubbock Highway 80 Tennis Tournament held recently attracted junior tennis players from all over the southwestern United States and even a few netters from Australia — as well as plenty of local net stars.

Although several Lubbockites did make it to the finals, not a single local netter could finish first. However, Midland's Jeff Bramlett, who will begin playing for Texas Tech (and living in Lubbock) in the fall did manage to give the local folks something to cheer about.

Bramlett defeated Houston's Fred Viancos in the boys 18 championship bracket title match Saturday morning 7-6, 6-3.

The match was close in the early going but with the first set even at 6-6, Bramlett won the tie-breaker by shutting out the Houstonian 5-0. After that, Bramlett broke Viancos' service early in the second set and coasted to victory.

After the match, Bramlett pointed to the tie-breaker as the turning point.

"I've never won a tie-breaker 5-0, before," he said. "It sort of surprised me that I was able to win it that easily."

But Bramlett also had some extra help in that final match. During the tournament he was staying at the Cliff Hopping residence in Lubbock and his hosts decided that a soon-to-be Red Raider athlete needed a Texas Tech cap.

So just before he took the court for the championship bout, Bramlett's old cap (a University of Texas hat) was snatched from his head and replaced with a red and black one.

"I guess this new hat brought me luck," he said afterwards.

Watching Bramlett during the Lubbock tourney was Tech coach Mark Hamilton and Abilene Cooper high school tennis coach Steve Buck. Both were pleased with what they saw — especially Buck.

Because earlier in the summer the Cooper net coach had picked Bramlett to represent the Southern region in the Olympic Development camp in Colorado Springs on July 20-Aug. 1. Bramlett was one of five boys chosen from the south to attend the camp that will feature 2,300 young athletes from around the country with Olympic aspirations.

"It should be a good experience for Jeff," said Buck. "He'll get a chance to play with the best 20 junior tennis players in the country."

Although the tournament didn't boast any winners from Lubbock, there were several Lubbock netters who clawed their way into the finals. And 14-year-old Jimmy Burkeholder managed to get into the finals twice — and was only points away from at least one title.

In the tournament division for the 14-year-old boys Burkeholder reached the championship match only to lose a heartbreaker to Shannon Livingston of Marfa. Burkeholder appeared in command, taking the first set 6-4. But Livingston won a hard-fought second set 7-5 and then rolled to a 6-3 victory in the final set.

The only other local netter to reach the finals in singles competition was Leigh Mires who dropped a straight sets decision to Renata Hasek of Midland in the tournament division girls 16 finals.

In the doubles competition, three Lubbock teams reached the finals but, again, all bit the dust.

Curt McFarlin and Beth Nickels, former Coronado High School standouts, came the closest of any of the Lubbock entries to bringing home a trophy. McFarlin and Miss Nickels managed to split sets with Amy Harris and Dwayne Petty of Brownwood in the mixed doubles competition before bowing out.

Jimmy Burkeholder got into the finals for the second time as he teamed with Mark Lehman, also of Lubbock, in the boys 14 division doubles. But the duo lost in straight sets to Tim Bargainer and Adam Dixon of Abilene in that match.

And sisters Kami and Kriss Ethridge reached the championship bout in the girls 16 doubles but Joni Brittian and Lisa Brollier a little too tough to handle. Miss Brollier, from Austin, had won the girls championship 16 singles title earlier in the tournament.

Plainview's Teresa Landry also reached the finals twice but like the Lubbock netters was unable to go the distance.

Miss Landry fell in the tournament division of the girls 18 singles title match to Kirsten McKeen of Richardson and then teamed with younger sister, Sharon, to reach the finals in the 18 girls doubles.

But the Plainview sisters were eliminated in the title match by Molly Mallory of Dallas and Lori Teal of Abilene.

Finishing second has been compared to a hot dog without mustard or kissing your sister — but there are plenty of Lubbock netters that will tell you it's a lot better than finishing third, fourth, fifth . . .

Track prospects sign with Tech

Joe Garrett, a hurdler from Dallas, and Bert Torres, a distance runner from Amarillo, have signed letters of intent to attend Texas Tech University. Tech track coach Corky Oglesby made the announcement Friday.

Garrett will run the high and intermediate hurdles and the mile relay for the Red Raiders. Garrett posted a personal best time of 13.9 seconds in the high hurdles and was clocked in 48.4 seconds in the 440-yard dash during his track career at Dallas' Madison High School.

Torres will compete in cross-country this fall and will run the 800-, 1,500-and 5,000-meter events for Tech during the track season. Torres qualified for national competition in the 800-and 1,500-meter events while attending South Plains College. His best times are 3:54.0 in the 1,500 and 14:40 in the 5,000.

"We're planning on Bert making a strong contribution to our cross-country team," said Oglesby of the 5-10, 145-pound graduate of Amarillo Caprock. "He should also blend in well with our distance runners in the spring."

Garrett and Torres are the sixth and seventh thinclads recruited by Oglesby this year.

Local artists show works

Lubbock Garden and Arts Center, Inc., is exhibiting works by artist of the West Texas Watercolor Association and South Plains Designer Craftsmen in the city-county library and foyer exhibit area.

A landscape in sepia and gold transparent watercolor by Betty Blevins is hanging in the library entry. Mary Kelly has a collage panel featuring flower forms of clay mounted on weathered wood.

Welded metal and cast bronze by John Queen of Idalou are shown in the foyer. Four studies, "Frogs, "The Apology", "The Call and "The Pro" are welded metal. Others titled "The Sooner" and "Sez Me" are in bronze.

These will be shown through July and may be seen any time the building is open to the public.

South Plains signs Dunbar trackster

Dunbar High School track standout Mike Baldwin has signed a letter of intent to attend South Plains College according to SPC track coach Clint Ramsey.

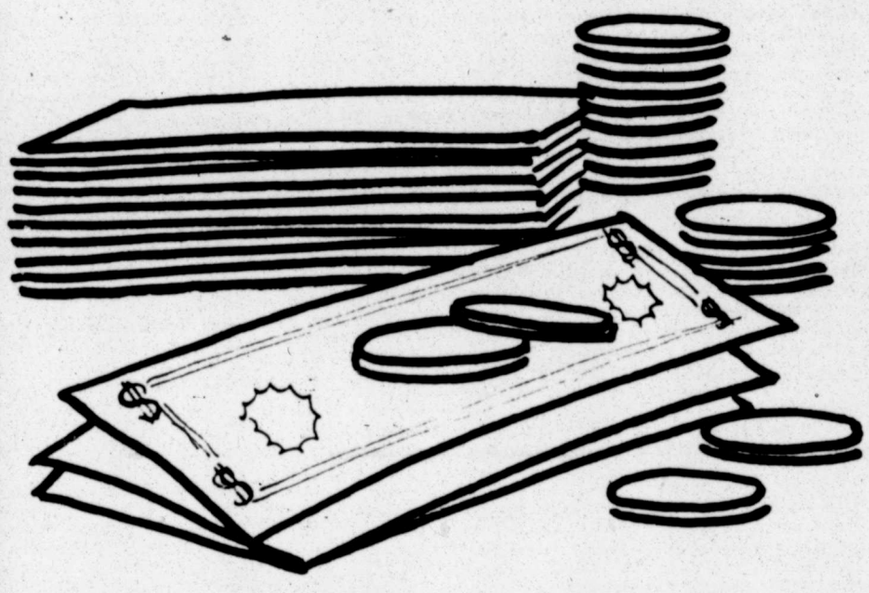

Baldwin was a member of the Dunbar 440-yard relay team which the the Region I championship this year. The 5-9, 160-pounder also placed fourth in both the 100-and 200-yard dashes at the district level.

on screen

Backstage I — "Circle Of Iron." Believe it or not, this is not a bad movie, especially if you're a fan of the Bruce Lee style and philosophy. Legitimately based on a story by Lee, the picture stars David Carradine and Jeff Cooper, with smaller parts filled by Roddy McDowell, Christopher Lee and Eli Wallach. There's enough martial arts for action fans, and enough Zen philosophy to give the picture a unique appeal.

Backstage II — "Hungry Young Women." X-rated material.

Cinema West — "The Apple Dumpling Gang Rides Again." A few years back, Tim Conway and Don Knotts proved to be a funny team in Disney's "The Apple Dumpling Gang." Everyone expected the popular duo to reunite for a second movie; in fact, the only question was when. The expected sequel has now arrived, with Conway and Knotts again portraying a couple inept outlaws. Not screened at press time.

Fine Arts Drive-In — "Calendar Girls" and "Sensuous Housewives." X-rated material.

Fox I — "Coming Home." No doubt one of the most important films releasd in 1978, this movie takes a look not at the politics of Vietnam, but at the physical and mental scars administered to the men and women caught up in the war fought there. Jon Voight gives the best, the most sensitive performance of his career, and very much deserved his Oscar for his portrayal of paraplegic war veteran Luke Martin. Bruce Dern offers his usual strong performance and, but for Christopher Walken's powerful appearance in "The Deer Hunter," might have come away with a supporting Oscar. And Jane Fonda is often moving as the Marine's wife caught up in love and the aftermath of the conflict.

Fox II — "The Main Event." Barbra Streisand and Ryan O'Neal, reunited for the first time since Peter Bogdanovich's "What's Up Doc?", never quite click in this rather boring new comedy. Miss Streisand struts about like a chicken with its head cut off, playing the same character (only the names change) she's played in her last several films. Indeed, it's been six years since she's come through with a decent movie. And O'Neal is little more than a granite-faced straight man. If you're a Streisand fanatic, if you're predjudiced to the point you think this personification of ego can do no wrong, then by all means trot on over and catch "The Main Event." Otherwise, forget it.

Fox III — "Prophecy." One of the biggest duds of the year, if only because we walk in expecting so much from screenwriter David Seltzer and director John Frankenheimer. An old fashioned monsters-created-by-man's-pollution story, this tale of a 15-feet-tall mutant killer in the Maine forests is predictable and often laughable. Subplots are not resolved and the special effects, with the exception of closeups of the baby monster, are ineffective. And if you're looking for good acting — look elsewhere. In short, if it's fear and suspense you're seeking, skip this one and run, don't walk, to "Alien" at the South Plains Cinema.

Fox IV — "Escape From Alcatraz." The problem with prison escape movies (as opposed to movies about prisoners-of-war escaping) is that the filmmakers too often adhere to the timeworn formula of making us root for crooks by making the warden and guards appear sadistic. Little has changed with Clint Eastwood's new film. Though director Don Siegel does his best and grants the film a small hint of suspense, the poor script and formula approach still offers very little in the way of excitement. In short, this one is much better than Eastwood's "Every Which Way But Loose" — but that's not saying much.

Golden Horseshoe Drive-In, Front Screen — "Love At First Bite" and "Jennifer." The former film is a spoof on the Dracula legend and really pretty funny, actually hilarious whenever Richard Benjamin is on the screen. The plot finds George Hamilton, as Count Dracula, evicted from his Transylvanian castle and traveling to the Big Apple in search of fashion model Susan Saint James (who dies her hair blonde for this film). Benjamin plays a psychiatrist descended from noted vampire hunter Dr. Van Helsing. The laughs come pretty much non-stop, with everyone involved keeping the mood tongue-in-cheek. Look for a lovable performance from Arte Johnson as the count's bug-eating loyal assistant.

As for "Jennifer," there's no spoof involved; it is a horror film and was not screened at press time.

Golden Horseshoe Drive-In, Back Screen — "The Champ" and "Corvette Summer." The former is the tearjerker to end all tearjerkers, Franco Zeffirelli's remake of the classic sob story which starred Wallace Beery and Jackie Cooper. The stars in this updated version are Jon Voight and Ricky Schroder, and the two work wonderfully together as they yank at our heartstrings. There's no denying director Zeffirelli is being manipulative; there's no denying the film is unbelievable at times and overly sentimental throughout. But the fact remains: It works. The film works. I haven't cried so much at a movie in years — and if it even got to this hard-hearted critic, think what it's going to do to all you romantics.

"Corvette Summer" is dandy summer entertainment, with Mark Hamill starring as a boy tracking down his stolen Corvette. He finds a lesson and we find laughs in Sin City (Las Vegas).

Home Box Office — This pay television station offers movies and specials usually not available on Lubbock's big screens. Premieres are held on HBO several times each week, and then repeated throughout the month. Tonight will see HBO premiere a special called "Rich Little And The Great Pretenders," which offers taped concerts by impressionists. Saturday's highlight will be "Bloodbrothers," a mildly acclaimed drama about family conflicts; it stars Richard Gere and Paul Sorvino. And on Sunday, fresh from the movie screens, the premiere will be the amusing "Buck Rogers In The 25th Century." Specials on major league baseball and circuses will follow on Monday and Tuesday, respectively; and Wednesday will offer "Airport 1975."

Looking ahead, HBO will also screen this month "Piranha," "The Exorcist," "Big Bad Mama" (complete with Angie Dickinson's nude scenes, no doubt) and — are you ready, kids? — film of the Kiss concerts in Japan.

Mann I — "The Muppet Movie." Kermit and Miss Piggie and the rest of the muppets may be the real stars, but a couple dozen highly respected human-types (comedian Steve Martin is but one example) also make appearances. This film has received nothing but rave reviews. Not screened at press time.

Mann II — "Sidney Sheldon's Bloodline." Not enjoying the same reviews as "The Muppet Movie," to put it mildly. This new feature-length soap opera is based on the book by Sheldon, who gave us "The Other Side Of Midnight," and stars Audrey Hepburn (only her second film in the past decade) and Ben Gazzarra. Music is by Ennio Morricone. Not screened at press time.

Mann III — "Golden Girl." Tall and lanky Susan Anton leaves the Muriel Cigars commercials and Mel Tillis' television specials for a career in the movies. Here, she has the title role, a beautiful sprinter who hopes to win gold medals as a member of the U.S. Olympic track team. Not screened at press time.

Mann IV — "Lost And Found." Glenda Jackson and George Segal, who found unexpected popularity as a team with "A Touch Of Class," are hoping lightning will strike twice in this new comedy. Not screened at press time.

Showplace I — "Rocky II." It is very easy for critics to dump on this new movie, since it resembles more closely a remake than a sequel to the Academy Award winning film which brought Sylvester Stallone stardom. But I must admit that the second picture about Rocky Balboa is also extremely entertaining. For all its flaws — and believe me me, flaws abound — Stallone has also managed to make us care about his dumb fighter again. Even better, he allows us more than a superficial glance at his opponent Apollo Creed, played well by Carl Weathers. In short, I'm all for "Rocky II." It has humor, warmth and a few surprises. But to call it better than its predecessor is outright foolishness.

Showplace II — "Grease" and "Saturday Night Fever." The soundtrack albums grossed more than the movies from which they derived, but John Travolta managed to push both films — and the performance of Donna Pescow aAcademy Award nomination in the latter. "Grease" is a very cornball look at the 1950s, not at all accurate and only occasionally enjoyable. Olivia Newton-John's performance is absolutely awful, but Travolta supplies an admirable energy on screen. And if you'll accept funny, talented Stockard Channing as a high school student, well, I guess you're willing to accept just about anything. The second feature is the new watered-down PG version of "Saturday Night Fever," released with new cuts so all the boppers can see it without having to sneak in the exits. What did I think of it? Well, the dancing — and the performance of Donna Pescow as the snubbed girlfriend — were impressive. But that's about it.

Showplace III — "A Little Romance." A very highly regardded new film about two youngsters in France who fall in love and defy the rules of society. Laurence Olivier is the elderly chaperone. Not screened at press time.

Showplace IV — "Meatballs." Comedian Bill Murray is refraining from giving Mrs. Lubner "noogies" on "NBC Saturday Night Live" long enough to come out with a feature film comedy of his own — no doubt hoping "Meatballs" will do for him what "National Lampoon's Animal House" did for his TV co-star, John Belushi. Not screened at press time.

Showplace V — "Butch And Sundance: The Early Days." The prequel stars Tom Berenger (who looks an awful lot like a young Paul Newman) and William Katt (who looks an awful lot like a young Robert Redford). But this film doesn't come close to resembling the wit and consistency of the original 1969 film "Butch Cassidy And The Sundance Kid." The confrontations are predictable and the pacing is S-L-O-W. The acting isn't bad, but the cast is hampered by the poor script.

Showplace VI — "The Deer Hunter." Winner of five Academy Awards (the most won by any 1978 film) for Best Picture, best supporting actor, best direction, best editing and best sound. One of the most devastating films ever put on the screen, "The Deer Hunter" is bound to leave every single viewer weak-kneed and slack-jawed as he leaves the theater. The picture deals with the friendship of three men (Robert DeNiro, Christopher Walken and John Savage) in a small steel town in Pennsylvania, and the effect Viet Nam had on each of these three individuals. Michael Cimino's direction is superb, and the film indeed earned each of its nine Oscar nominations. There was never any doubt that Walken, playing the disturbed Nick, would win for his dramatic supporting performance. Three hours long, "The Deer Hunter" is a flawed, but totally unforgettable, gem. The Russian roulette scenes alone will leave a lingering feeling of depression and heartache for many nights to come. Not to be missed.

South Plains Cinema I, Mall — "Alien." Without a doubt the most involving and terrifying outer space horror film ever released. Ridley Scott's direction is so meticulous, capitalizing on gruesome shock without exploiting it, surrounding his every scene with a hint of menace. Beautifully lit, photographed, edited and scored, "Alien" offers superb special effects and gut-wrenching pacing as it turns the old "us vs. it" formula into something which immediately fills the viewer with a sense of both excitement and impending doom. That we get a terrific performance from Sigourney Weaver as Ripley is just frosting on the cake, because this is undeniably a director's film. Certain to wind up the most popular film of the summer (deservedly so), and one of the most frightening films of all time.

South Plains Cinema II, Mall — "The In-Laws." An unexpected comedy hit. Arthur Hiller's erratic directing is saved by the pure and simple fact that Alan Arkin and Peter Falk make a terrific comedic team. Falk's low-key unexcitable boy is perfectly complemented by Arkin's high strung dentist. Together, they somehow manage to engage in running gun battles, encounter a crazy South American dictator (Richard Libertini is a hoot) and make a couple million bucks before their kids get married on the weekend. A film which must be seen to be believed — and I'm not sure you'll believe it even then. Just let yourself go and have a good time.

South Plains Cinema III, Mall — "Dracula." Frank Langella, who played the title role recently on Broadway, is reportedly dynamite on screen as the sexy vampire. Laurence Olivier co-stars in this newest version which treats the Bram Stoker novel seriously. Not screened at press time.

South Plains Cinema IV, Mall — "Nightwing." OK, shoot me, talk behind my back, point at me and laugh — but I have to admit I enjoyed this rather silly creature feature about plague-infested bats in Arizona. Arthur Hiller (yes, the same man responsible for "The In-Laws") has directed the picture as a serious subject and, despite his many sub-plots, still attains a degree of tension. The photography is noteworthy, and the set which serves as the bats' resting place is breathtaking.

Village — "The North Avenue Irregulars." For the most part, this picture offers little more than formula Disney gags and a predictable script. But it's worth seeing just for the wonderful performances offered by BarBara Harris, one of film's best and most underrated comediennes, and Cloris Leachman. The slapstick and car crashes should be enough to keep the kiddos entertained, and the wit of Miss Harris and Miss Leachman make sure the adults don't doze off, too.

Winchester — "Moonraker." Roger Moore returns once more as James Bond (secret agent 007) in this new adventure, one which certainly does not live up to the standards set by previous Bond flicks and yet manages to keep us entertained. The film is disappointing in that Moore looks older, leading lady Lois Chiles appears to come from the Olivia Newton-John school of (non)acting and the villain is not very colorful. But the gadgets and gimmicks and return of Richard Kiel as "Jaws," the 7'2" killer with steel teeth, keep our minds off the many faults. Location filming and super stunts reveal the high budget all too well.

washington update

By U.S. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen

Those involved in organized and drug trafficking have declared war against the American people. They seek to destroy the safety of our neighborhoods and the health of hundreds of thousands of our citizens.

The two bills I have introduced will help us combat and punish these heartless and deadly criminals by improving our ability to detect and apprehend those who would leave our country with large sums of unreported currency.

Our story of the smuggler's wife has a happy ending.

In spite of the tremendous odds in her favor, she was stopped at the border five days later on trying to re-enter the U.S. at a different port of entry.

A search of her car uncovered 15 pounds of heroin — with a street value of over $3 million — that she was trying to smuggle into this country.

But, Customs Agents say freely that her arrest was more luck than anything else and, in the war against a deadly drug like heroin, we can't afford to depend on luck.

Nov. 13, 1978, the Special Agent in charge of a border office of the U.S. Customs Service received a tip.

At the time the Customs Service and the Drug Enforcement Administration were jointly investigating a man they suspected was smuggling currency and heroin between Mexico and the United States.

This suspect's wife, an informant told the Customs Agent, was leaving that day for Mexico. She was taking with her a large amount of cash with which to purchase heroin.

In 1970 Congress passed a law, the Bank Secrecy Act, aimed at people like this woman. The law recognized that the surrepitious flow of large amounts of cash to foreign countries is a primary source of financing for criminal enterprise.

The Bank Secrecy Act requires that anyone taking over $5,000 in cash out of the country report it to the proper authorities.

The Customs Service estimates that 90 percent of the unreported money leaving the U.S. is used in criminal activity and that 80 percent of that amount is used in drug smuggling and dealing.

Unfortunately, though, law enforcement officials over the past nine years have discovered some glaring loopholes in the existing law.

Because of the loopholes and in spite of the tip. Customs Agents could do nothing to stop the suspect's wife as she got into her car, drove to the border and crossed into Mexico.

At this point the agents discontinued their surveillance and hoped that the woman would be apprehended when she tried to re-enter the U.S.

It was a slim hope, though, since the odds were better than 95 percent in the woman's favor that she would be able to slip back across the border undetected.

I have introduced two bills to help shut down the flow of cash abroad that finances drug smuggling and organized crime. My goal is to plug some of the loopholes in the 1970 Bank Secrecy Act that allows criminals to escape.

One of the Bentsen bills would permit the arrest of someone preparing to leave the country with more than $5,000 in unreported cash. The current law, as interpreted by the courts, allows the arrest of an individual only after he or she has left the country.

The second bill would provide a reward to individuals who give evidence of currency smuggling. The reward could be as much as 25 percent of the money seized as a result of the evidence, with a maximum of $250,000.

According to a conservative estimate by the U.S. Customs Service, every year over $2.5 billion-measured in foreign currency-leaves the United States for the purchase of heroin, cocaine, marijuana and other dangerous and illegal drugs.
