TEXAS CROP VALUES LEAD

Lone Star State Wreathed First Honors
From State of Illinois in 1910
With $364,110,000.

Washington.—The value of wealth produced on farms of the United States was $3,926,000,000 during 1910, as estimated by the department of agriculture in a statement just issued.
This is an increase of $104,000,000
over 1909.

Texas, with her 10,000,000 acres of cotton, wrested from Illinois during 1910 the honor of being the first State of the Union in point of value of her principal farming crops, which aggregated $364,110,000, an increase of 14.9
per cent over 1909.

Illinois, with $290,255,000, dropped to second place, the decrease having been 13.9 per cent. Iowa held her place as third State, while Kansas, in 1909 fourth State, dropped to tenth.

Georgia made a rapid stride in crop production for the year and jumped from tenth to fourth State, with a total of $210,592,000, an increase of 26.5 per cent over 1909.

All the other Southern States made good increases except Louisiana and Kentucky. South Carolina made the largest, 28.4 per cent, or $140,909,000, jumping from twenty-first to thirteenth State.

Legislators Indicted.

Columbus, Ohio.—Senator Edgar T.
Crawford and Representative A. Clark
Lowrey, republicans, and Representative Owen J. Evans, democrat, were indicted Wednesday by the grand jury for bribe soliciting. Crawford is alleged to have asked $200 from W. H.
Cook, secretary of the Ohio Butchers and Grocers' Association, in connection with trading stamp legislation.
Lowrey, against whom an indictment had previously been returned on evidence of detectives, is now charged with soliciting $1,500 from Opha Moore, secretary of the Ohio Manufacturers' Association, for his vote on the nine-hour-day-for-women bill. Evans is alleged to have solicited a bribe of $650 from John F. Weiss, secretary of the Stark-Tuscarawas Brewery, for his vote on one of the city local option bills. All the indicted legislators entered their appearance and gave bond of $5,000 each.

Governor Names Delegates.

Austin, Tex.—At the request of the governor of Maryland, Governor Colquhitt Thursday named a large list of delegates to the convention to be held at Baltimore next January for the purpose of directing the attention of those seeking travel to the advantages of seeing this country before going abroad. The list follows: John H. Kirby, William D. Cleveland, R. M.
Johnston, H. Baldwin Rice, Houston;
B. F. Calhoun, Mayor Emmett Fletcher,
Beaumont; W. O. Connor, J. B.
Adoue, Royal A. Kuyler, J. B. Wilson,

Eagle Lake Potato Shipments.

Eagle Lake, Tex.—The potato men began shipping again Wednesday after a delay of four days caused by the heavy rain of last Friday. A train-load of spuds of from fifteen to thirty cars is now leaving every day and the potato men are hopeful for at least two weeks of dry weather until the crop can be harvested. Some of the fields are yielding bountifully. Messrs.
Burns and Terrell having dug five acres that averaged 200 bushels to the

1,000 SHEEP CREMATED

In Sheep Pens at Stock Yards in Kansas City—Mules Stampeded and Endanger Lives of People.

Kansas City, Mo.—Fire, which an hour Friday endangered the entire Kansas City Stock Yards and the Live Stock Exchange building, destroyed sheep pens covering an area of a block square, burned sheep estimated to number a thousand and partly destroyed two mule barns. The fire started in a fertilizer plant at the south end of the yards and was swept into the sheep pens before a high south wind. Many of the sheep were guided in lanes and driven in safety to other parts of the yards. One goat was seen leading seventy-five sheep to safety through an open gate.
Thirty goats which were used to lead the sheep to the packing houses preceded. From sheep pens the fire swept to a row of mule barns. Several thousand mules were turned out and saved.
Thousands of spectators who thronged the streets and the stock lanes and fences were in danger of their lives when the mules stampeded. The frightened animals were finally headed into a stock pen. Sparks from the burning pens set fire to a school building five blocks away. The pupils already had been dismissed. The school building was saved. The damage is estimated at less than $50,000.

Area Planted to Cotton.

Washington.—Revised figures of the department of agriculture's cotton report indicate the area planted to cotton in 1910 was about 33,418,000 acres, instead of 33,196,000 acres, as estimated last June. These figures will be used as a basis in making the estimate on June 2 of the acreage planted to cotton this year. The yield per acre in 1910 is estimated at 17.7
pounds and the area picked at 32,304, 000 acres.

"Tap Line" Case.

Washington.—The decision in the so-called "tap line" case, one of the most far-reaching before the interstate commerce commission, will not be rendered before late in the autumn. The commission announced Thursday that "it would be impossible satisfactorily to dispose of the case before the summer recess on July 1." Many of the tariffs cancelling allowances to tap lines were filed last year.

Fifteen Thousand Men Idle.

Chicago.—Fifteen thousand men are now idle in the busiest season of the year and buildings contracted for to cost $35,000,000 are practically tied up as the result of the petty jurisdictional war being waged between plumbers and steamfitters. Every trade in the building industry is paralyzed and work on 1,200 buildings is halted.

Cattle Are Drowned on Prairies.

Bay City, Tex.—Commissioner Mc-Nabb of the Matagorda precinct, in speaking of the last heavy rain, says the downpour was the heaviest in the experience of the oldest settler.
Water stood a foot deep on the streets of Matagorda and cattle were drowned on the prairies. The government gauge at that point registered 15.73 inches.

Katy Permitted to Issue Bonds.

Topeka, Kan.—The State railroad board has granted the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railroad Company permission to issue $24,000,000 in bonds, $5,000,000 to be spent in betterment of the road in Kansas. The board last week refused the application of the company to issue $107,869,000 in bonds.

COCONUTS in the AMERICAS

CHARLES MELVILLE BROWN

It has been commonly remarked that the uses of the coconut palm (Cocos Nucifera) are numerous as the days of the year. Found nearly everywhere within the tropics, almost the sole dependence for food of the palm-ventured inhabitants of many islands, this king of low tropical countries furnishes man with food, drink, medicines, domestic utensils, materials for boat and house building, oil for cooking, lighting, and painting, and innumerable other purposes, and is of all the palmaceae the one that yields the greatest variety of products. Tennant has truly said that of the coconut palm a ship can be built and laden, too.

De Candolle, in "Origin of Cultivated Plants," does not consider the coconut palm a native of the western hemisphere, but places its original habitat in the Eastern archipelago, somewhere in the neighborhood of Sumatra and Java, and surmises that nuts floated thence both east and west, eastward to the islands of the Pacific and the coast of Central America, and westward to Ceylon and the east coast of Africa. He places its introduction into Brazil, Venezuela and the West Indies by missionaries about three centuries ago. De Martius says that the Portuguese introduced it on the coast of Guiana about the same time. The navigators Dampier and Vancouver found it at the beginning of the seventeenth century in groves on the islands of Panama bay, as well as on Coes island, 500 miles off the Pacific coast of Costa Rica. At that time these islands were uninhabited. Later the coconut palm is reported on the west coast from Mexico to Ecuador, and Seaman reports having seen the palm both wild and cultivated on the Isthmus of Panama. In 1526 Oviedo wrote that the coconut palm was abundant on the Pacific coast in the province of the Cacique Chimán, now Darien, Panama.

Argument in favor of an American origin, as stated by De Candolle, is as follows: The trade winds of the Pacific, to the south and yet more to the north of the equator, drive floating bodies from America to Asia, a direction contrary to that of the general currents. It is known, moreover, from the unexpected arrival of bottles containing papers on different coasts, that chance has much to do with these transports.

His arguments contrary to an American origin of the coconut palm and in favor of an Asiatic are as follows:

First.—A current between the third and fifth parallel, north latitude, flows from the islands of the Indian archipelago to the Gulf of Panama. To the north and south of this are currents which take the opposite direction, but they originate in regions too cold for the coconut, and do not touch Central America, where it is supposed to have been long indigenous.

Second.—The inhabitants of Asiatic islands were far bolder navigators than the American Indians. It is very possible that canoes from the Asiatic Islands, containing provisions of coconuts, were carried by storms or false maneuvers to the islands of the west coast of America; the contrary is highly improbable.

Third.—The area for three centuries has been much vaster in Asia than in America, and the difference was yet more considerable before that epoch, for it is known that the coconut has not long existed in the east of tropical America.

Fourth.—The inhabitants of the islands of Asia possess an immense number of varieties of the palm, which indicates a very ancient cultivation. Blume enumerates eighteen varieties in Java and adjacent islands, and thirty-nine in the Philippines. Nothing of a similar nature has been observed in the Americas.

Fifth.—The uses of the coconut are more varied and more habitual in Asia.

Sixth.—It is not probable that the ancient Mexicans and inhabitants of Central America would have neglected to spread the coconut in several directions had it existed among them from a very remote epoch. The little breadth of the Isthmus of Panama would have facilitated its transportation from one coast to the other and the species would soon have been established in the West Indies, as it has since become naturalized there since the discovery of America.

Seventh.—If the coconut is America dated from a geological epoch anterior to the Pliocene or even Eocene deposits in Europe, it would probably have been found on both coasts and the eastern and western islands of tropical America equally.

Eighth.—No ancient data of the existence of the coconut in America have been found, but its presence in Asia three to four thousand years ago is proven by several Sanskrit names.

From these facts the most ancient habitation in Asia would be in the archipelago and in America in the islands west of Panama. Its introduction into Ceylon, India and China, De Candolle states, does not date further back than three thousand years, but the transport by sea to the coasts of America and Africa took place perhaps in a more remote epoch, although posterior to those epochs when the geographical and physical conditions were different from those of our day.

In early botanical works coconuts are mentioned, being derived from an East Indian word, coc or cocus, used to indicate the fruit of the cocos Nucifera, or coconut of a fancied resemblance of the three circular depressions to the face of a monkey, whose conversational powers are limited to uttering a sound like "coco."

At the present day, on the islands of the Bay of Panama, such as Coliba, Colibita, Jicarón, Montuosa, Ladrones, and along the southwestern coast of Chiriquí in Panama, and Punta Burica and Golfo Dulce in Costa Rica, are found dense groves of wild coconut palms, the fallen nuts piled up around their base, in many instances to a depth of two and three feet, washed back and forth by the swirl of the great tides of these coasts until hurled against some jagged rock the protecting husk is torn away and the tender kernel becomes the prey of the myriads of soldier crabs patrolling these great sandy stretches at low tide. Others are carried by swift currents to nearby coasts, where, thrown high on the beach at flood tide, they may germinate and take root; others come, as floating manna and becalmed pearl-fishing divers, supplying at once food and drink to the divers whose tides carry far from their base of supplies—an analogy to the aphorism of the ill-wind.

Accepting De Candolle's theory as correct, this same process of distribution from the lowly coasts of the eastern archipelago to these islands of the Bay of Panama, mentioned by Dampier and Vancouver in their explorings, might have been taking place a thousand years before the Christian era, or by Columbus' successors in the Dukedom of Veragua, off which coast they lie; thence carried by human agency to long, and millions of nuts are shipped annually from this country to the United States and Europe. Mexico reduces much of its product to oil and ships to the United States in this form, although a good trade in raw nuts is maintained. Of those exported from Cuba, Honduras, Nicaragua, Panama and Jamaica, the greater part is in the raw state.

Trinidad reduces much of its product to copra, for Europe, and oil principally for the local consumption of its large East Indian population. In 1905 the approximate estimate of area under cultivation in the coconut palm in all parts of the world was 3,140,000 acres.

Of this vast area there are probably 220,000,000 palm trees, fully 7,000,000,000 nuts annually, the majority of which are consumed for food purposes where produced.

The coconut palm flourishes near the equator and as far north as 30 degrees, especially along low coasts, although many are found in India at an elevation of 3,000 feet, and cases are known where the palm does well at an elevation of 4,500 feet above the sea.

As a rule a coconut tree throws out a spathe and a leaf every month, each flowering spike yielding from 10 to 25 ripened nuts. The product of a healthy tree properly tended may be from 50 to 120 and even 250 nuts annually.

The principal products of the coconut palm are raw nuts, from which the dehydrated meat is made; copra, or the dried kernel, from which in turn oil is expressed; ponac, or the residue after extracting the oil, and copra.

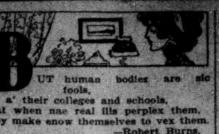

The uses of these products, as well as of every portion of the palm itself, are almost innumerable. Twenty-eight per cent. of all the coconuts raised in the world are grown in the Americas, where, however, they are scattered over a much greater area for each palm than is the case in the orient, thereby making the work of collecting and shipping more difficult and expensive. Due principally to this fact, the vast stretches of coconut groves of Brazil, Venezuela, Mexico and the western coast of Central America have never been extensively exploited for coconuts, increasing demand, higher prices than in former years, and the approaching completion of the Panama canal, which means new markets brought about by improved transportation facilities, are rapidly bringing these fields within the radius of profitable exploitation, in addition to stimulating the scientific culture of this palm throughout tropical America.

Further shores, north into Central America and Mexico, south into what is now Colombia and Ecuador, and across the Isthmus of Panama to the Mosquito coast, Venezuela and the West Indies, there to meet with those brought over from Africa by either ocean currents or early explorers.

In the Americas today the coconut is an important product of Mexico, Guatemala, Nicaragua, Honduras, San Salvador, Costa Rica, Panama, Colombia, Ecuador as far south as Guayaquil, Venezuela, Guiana and Brazil; and in the West Indies, Cuba, Santo Domingo, Haiti, Bahamas, Jamaica and Trinidad. "Coconuts are being planted more extensively every year in southern Florida, and within a few years will doubtless constitute an important product of that state. Pacific America sends coconuts to the San Francisco market from the Hawaiian Islands, while copra, or the dried kernel, and oil expressed therefrom, reach this market from the orient."

Along the coast of Brazil there are wild coconut groves over 200 miles

THE PROGRESSIVE DINNER

A VARIETY OF PUDDING SAUCES.

In the making of pudding sauces, our cooks are as apt to get into ruts and serve the same sauce day after day, as in serving other dishes. A new sauce will change the character of a pudding and make it seem like an entirely new dish.

Coconut Sauce.—To the milk of a coconut add a cupful of sugar, a half cup of grated coconut, two table-spoonfuls of butter, cooked together with a table-spoonful of flour. Mix all the ingredients together and serve hot.

The juices left from canned fruits are most delicious made into sauces, by adding a little cornstarch for thickening and a bit of butter for richness.

Duchess Sauce.—Roll two ounces of grated chocolate in one cupful of milk eggs well beaten with half a cup of sugar and a quarter of a cup of cream; strain and return to the fire. Stir until thick as honey, then take from the fire and add a teaspoonful of vanilla.

Maple Sugar Sauce.—Put into a double boiler a cup and a half of grated maple sugar, four table-spoonfuls of butter, beat to a cream. Then add four table-spoonfuls of sweet cream and the juice of a lemon, set into boiling water until melted to a thick creamy froth.

Peach Sauce.—To a cupful of peach juice saved from canned peaches add an equal amount of water, sugar to taste and a quarter of a cup of raisins. Boil together ten minutes and just before serving add a few drops oil-soluble extract. A little cornstarch may be added if liked with thickening and cooked well to remove the raw starch taste.

A nice hard sauce may be made by using a half cup each of butter and sugar, well creamed, and the yolks of two eggs added, with flavoring, and set on ice to become firm.

LET THE SUNSHINE IN.

"Clear the darkened windows, open wide the door, let the blessed sunshine in."

Did you ever notice a plant that had grown in a dark place? Was it beautiful, green and thrifty? New things that grow without sunshine are perfect or beautiful, and children as well as grown-ups need the purifying, life-giving and healing power of the sunlight.

The home that has the drawn curtains that exclude the light will be the home where nervousness, ill temper and general ill health are found. The sunlight is the best germicide known, and it should feed our homes. Keep the windows open in the day for the sun and at night for the pure sweet air. During the hot weather a house well aired in the morning and then closed through the heat of the day, will always be cool and comfortable.

Helpful Hints.
If you have occasion to use a very large roast, perhaps you don't know that it is a good idea to roast it rather rare the first day, then cut off what is wanted and roast it again.

When cooking bass, try this method—use one by a well-known chef. Thoroughly scrape and dry the fish, fill with several slices of bacon that have been dripped in chopped onion and parsley, then seasoned with pepper and salt. Wind the fish with a string, and fry or broil for 20 minutes. Serve with melted butter and lemon.

To keep greens fresh, wash and drain them and place in a large jar or kettle, which may be covered tightly, and if kept in a cool place until needed, the greens will keep crisp and fresh for several days.

Use white embroidery cotton to make buttonholes in thin white goods. They are much easier made, and wear as well as when made in blue.

White cotton crepe waists may be washed and dried over a clothes hanger and a fresh waist is always ready with no ironing.

A PROGRESSIVE DINNER PARTY.

Here is an idea which is not new, but which has been tried most successfully by many hostesses. This arrangement relieves the hostess of the strain of entertaining to a great extent, and does away with the usual stiffness which is the particular horror of one entertaining.

Have several small tables; each may have a distinctly different decoration. At one small table the hostess sits, and she selects one of her friends to preside at each of the other tables. To these falls the duty to promote the enjoyment of the guests.

As the groups change, between each course, a delightful feeling of sociability follows each change.

Beside being an easier way of entertaining one's friends, the smaller tables lend themselves to decoration and make a prettier general effect than one long one.

The colors may be arranged in harmony, as a white, pink and green table, with flowers in keeping with the color.

RECIPES WORTH TRYING.

When an emergency soup is wanted. Take a table-spoonful of peanut butter worked to a paste with milk. Scald a cup and a half of milk with a slice of onion. Melt a table-spoonful of butter, add two table-spoonfuls of flour. Pour the scalded milk slowly on this, and when smooth season with salt and pepper to taste. When serving soup, garnish with a table-spoonful of finely-chopped mint.

Breakfast Dish.—Toast six slices of bread in a slow oven until a golden brown. Butter and dip into a little hot cream or milk, just long enough to moisten. Peel half a dozen bananas and put them through a ricer. Place a generous table-spoonful on each slice. This makes a nice luncheon dish also.

Rhubarb Sponge.—Line a mold with pieces of sponge cake; pour over stewed rhubarb, then put another layer of cake. Put a plate with a weight on top, and after a few hours turn out on a plate and serve with custard.

CAKE is acceptable at every kind of luncheon. Cakes were invented for that meal, for five o'clock tea, weddings and for school boys only.

DIET FOR CONSUMPTION.

Doctor Oiler, the great medical authority says: "The cure for consumption or tuberculosis is a question of nutrition; make a person grow fat and the local disease may be left to take care of itself."

To force the body to take on fat is the great problem, then, as the weight is increased the strength and vitality is also increased.

A method tried and proven more than satisfactory is that of drinking the last milk or stripplings from the cow. Of course, choice of a cow is most important; one that gives milk rich in cream and wholly free from tuberculous taint.

The method of taking the milk is simple, but must be carefully followed in order to reap the reward. The last quart is milked into a dish which is surrounded by hot water in order to insure the milk from cooling. The froth is blown back and the milk drunk without straining, as that will cool it too much.

At first it is not easy to drink a quart, but after a week or two it is easily done, and patients after a short treatment gain nearly a pound a day. This milk taken warm into the empty stomach is absorbed in a very short time. The patient will then take the regular meals in addition to the milk, those foods which agree.

Such treatment may be taken at home. The price of a good cow is not to be mentioned with expensive trips to sanitariums or a change of climate. Those who object to milk will take it as a medicine, and later grow fond of it. The prescribed treatment is a quiet night and morning.

It is easy on a farm to take this treatment, but many have tried it and found it most satisfactory even in a city.

This same diet is equally efficacious in increasing the weight and strength when debilitated from other causes. It is well to remember that milk is not a beverage, but a food, and should be taken in sips, a little at a time, to avoid making hard indigestible curds in the stomach.

Nellie Marshall.

Too Few Elopements in England.

"What we want in England is more elopements. If people would only get married they would, in nine cases out of ten, live happily ever after, where as if they wait they end in parting."

"This unusual point of view is taken by Mrs. York Miller, the Anglo-American authoress.

She was discussing a recently decided case in which a girl sued a man for breach of promise after being engaged to him for six years. Nearly all that time they were happy and then came a breaking off of the engagement, with subsequent damages against the defendant.

"They should be close and get married," she said, "It is the way to be happy. And people should not have long engagements. The time of the engagement is a trying period that wears out the patience and results in boredom and separation. Yet, probably, and they married their union would have been happy."—London Mirror.

School Commencement.

Another volume of the Junction High School records is complete, and we come to the closing and crowning event of another year's study and perseverance. The commencement exercises were held at the Junction School building Friday evening, May 19th, and were enjoyed by a large and appreciative audience.

Nine graduates, the largest class that has ever received diplomas from the Junction High School, presented a pleasing picture of promise as they sat, a semicircle of bright young people, there to receive the honors of graduation conferred upon them.

The parts rendered by the graduates, from the standpoint of composition, thought and rendition would have been a credit to the graduates of any high school.

The high aspirations of the class are most fittingly expressed in their well-chosen motto. "We finish to begin." Finish the high school to begin a more advanced education; finishing education's introductory to begin higher learning; finishing the school of their earlier endeavors to begin preparation for the great school of life.

And one great truth expressed in the general sentiment of the exercises, one expressed in the moral of the play presented Saturday evening, and one which is self-evident in the course of life's experience is: The man with the education is the one who wins.

The first number on the program was "Motion Song," most beautifully presented by the seventh grade girls, and held the admiring attention of the audience.

Then came the Salutatory and Essay, "America of 1811 Compared with America of 1911" rendered by Miss Ivy Hodges. To say that the subject was well handled is expressing a slight appreciation of the bright intellect of this young lady.

Following this was an oration, "Swedenborg," by Weaver Baker and was most creditable number on the program.

Miss Bonnie Oliver had a well-composed essay, using for her subject, "The Leaders and the Led," most impressively presenting the difference between those who lead in life's work and those who for the lack of ambition and effort remain among the minor ranks among those who must be led.

Wyden Lawler is a promising orator, as demonstrated in his oration, "The Rise and Fall of Nations," a very excellent introduction.

An essay, "The Girl of the Period," by Miss Jennie Henderson was an interesting and creditably rendered number in the evening's exercises.

An excellent oration, "The Public Schools," was rendered by James Van Eman in a way that would lead one to predict a bright and successful future for this promising young gentleman.

Miss Ruth Maxwell's recitation, "The Telephone Romance," was the heartily enjoyed humor of the evening and she is certainly to be highly complimented on its rendition.

The Class Prophecy—always of keen interest to the class members, who stand with straining eyes in the effort to picture some outline of the events of future years—was the work of Miss Winnie Reid, and is deserving of the highest compliments. Julius Heyman had the honor of valedictorian, and it is safe to say that his production was as good as the best. His subject was, "What America Has Done for the World," and was handled in a way that called forth the highest praise from both class and audience.

Hon. J. B. Randolph favored the hearers with an address, full of wholesome advice and helpful encouragement for the class and much enjoyed by all. Pointing out the value of education, congratulating the graduates on their successful efforts, in the construction of the foundation of knowledge, he urged them to press forward to "room at the top" of the ladder of success and noble achievement.

H. E. Wilson then made a few appropriate remarks, paying high tribute to the Junction school, and presented the diplomas.

A very interesting feature of the evening's exercises was the opening of a box containing the written life's aims of the graduating class of 5 years ago. The reading of these was listened to with keenest interest and enjoyment.

The 1910-11 Junction school session was one of the most successful years in its history, and the untiring, intelligent and zealous effort on the part of faculty and students, assisted by the hearty co-operation of patrons and friends of the school—to this is due the success of the school; on this hinges the success of any school.

Roosevelt Ripples

Hello, Mr. Editor! As I haven't seen any news from this part of the country I thought I would write a few lines to represent our neighborhood.

We are needing rain badly. The people around Roosevelt are irrigating now.

Our merchant, E. B. Landrum has been building an addition to his store.

R. W. Allison has moved his house down on the river and is rebuilding it again.

Miss Ida Goodall is visiting her sister Mrs. Joe Logan near Sonora.

Miss Mary Ellen Tisdale of Eldorado is here visiting her grandfather J. F. Collier.

Willie Watkins and Carrol Collier were in our midst from Junction Sunday.

Henry Wilson and Ben Jones went to Menard the past week.

There is to be an ice cream supper at Mr. Dunbar's, Tuesday night, May 23.

It is whispered that there is to be a surprise wedding at Roosevelt next Sunday.

There was a large crowd at prayer meeting last Sunday night.

There will be preaching here next Sunday by Rev. McClinden.

There is talk of having a writing school here soon.

Bud Hodges has been farming in our community the past week.

The people around Roosevelt are enjoying eating vegetables now.

I am afraid of the waste basket, so will ring off.

HOLD FIRMLY TO ILLUSIONS

Writer in the Woman's Magazine Points Out One Method of Preservation of Youth.

So long as we find ourselves believing in the possibilities of the unexpected, so long do we preserve our youth. It is only when we begin to realize that experience is behind and not in front of us that we know that youth has fled. Wherefore, the most important things for a woman to cling to are her illusions. Nothing indeed, will keep her so young or so cheerful. So long as she believes that anything—anything delightful, of course—can happen to her, it will never occur to anybody to think of her age, while the boundless vitality and enthusiasm which of necessity are inseparable from such a nature will assist her in genuinely forgetting herself the years that have passed over her irresponsible head.

—The Ladies' Field.

LIVERY CLOTH.

Following an ancient city custom the corporation has recently made presents of what is called "livery cloth" to certain high officers of state and public officials. The custom is thus explained: In the early periods of history the retainers of great lords wearing their liveries were so numerous as to be dangerous both to the king and the laws, and the disorders in which they took part required all the vigor of the king and the legislature to restrain. Many statutes for that purpose were passed between 1377 and 1504. In these, prohibitions and exemptions were made in favor of the members of the creation of "liverymen" in the guilds and fraternities in cities and boroughs. This probably explains various companies, and is supposed to be the origin of this annual gift of "livery cloth."—London Daily News.

RABBIT'S REMARKABLE VOYAGE.

A strange ocean waif was brought into port at Galveston, Texas, recently by the fishing schooner Mendocino, which picked up a box containing a white rabbit while in mid-gulf, more than 400 miles from land. Marks on the wooden box indicated that the rabbit was shipped from some point in Pennsylvania to Liverpool and that it sailed from New York about October 1. Mariners calculated it followed the ocean currents along the Atlantic and, striking the gulf stream, had about completed the circuit and traversed about 2,000 miles before rescued by the mercantile. The rabbit was revived.

SAW HER OPPORTUNITY PASS

Lover of Mushrooms Would Have Train Stop That She Might Gather Favorite Delicacy.

Senator Depew, at a dinner in New York, praised a turkey's mushroom stuffing. "These mushrooms," he concluded, "remind me of an incident that occurred while I was abroad in the autumn."

"You know how, on an English train, the passengers are locked in small compartments, and there is an emergency signal for them to pull in case the train must be stopped."

"Well, the signal was pulled one autumn day, and the train, with a great grinding of brakes, came to a sudden stop, and guards and conductor, pale with horror, ran up and down the carriages to see what terrible thing could have happened."

"They found, in a rear-most carriage, an old woman leaning far out of the window, waving her arms and her umbrella excitedly."

"What's the matter, madam? Why did you stop the train?" they asked her.

"You fools," she answered, "why didn't you stop before? We've just passed two of the finest mushrooms I've seen this many a year."

HER THRUST.

"What plea can I offer for adorning her?"
"No special plea is required," suggested a rival belle. "The silly season is still open."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Saved Many From Death

W. L. Mock, of Mock, Ark., believes he has saved many lives in his 25 years of experience in the drug business. "What I always like to do," he writes, "is to recommend Dr. King's New Discovery for weak, sore lungs, hard colds, hoarseness, obstinate coughs, a large group, asthma or other bronchial affection, for I feel sure that a number of my neighbors are alive and well today because they took my advice to use it. I honestly believe it's the best throat and lung medicine that's made." Easy to prove he's right. Get a trial bottle free or regular 50c or $1.00 bottle. Guaranteed by J. A. Heyman.

Her Qualifications. Pat and his little brown mare were familiar sights to the people of the town of Gerry. The mare was lean, blind and lame, but by dint of much coaxing Pat kept her to the harness. One day while leading her to water he had to pass a corner where a crowd of would-be sports had congregated. Thinking to have some amusement at Pat's expense, one called out: "Hallo, there, Pat. I'm looking for the real goods. How much is that mare of yours able to draw?"

"Begorra," said Pat, "I can't say exactly, but she seems to be able to draw the attention of every fool in town."—The Housekeeper.

How He Did It. At the dinner Saturday of the Military Order of Foreign Wars, Captain Carlisle L. Burridge told of a man who, returning to his domicile at cockcrow, underwent an inspection by his wife, who desired to know how he came to have a large bump on his forehead.

"That, oh, that's where I hit myself," explained he of the night before. "But yourself," the lady repeated after him. "How could you hit yourself away up there?"

"Why, I stood of a chair," he said.—Cleveland Leader.

FEED YOUR MONEY

Feed Your Brain, and It Will Feed You Money and Fame.

"Ever since boyhood I have been especially fond of meats, and I am convinced I ate too rapidly, and failed to masticate my food properly. The result was that I found myself, some years ago, afflicted with indigestion of the stomach, and kidneys, which interfered seriously with my conduct."

"An esat last I took the advice of friends and began to eat Grape-Nuts instead of the heavy meats, etc., that had constituted my former diet. I found that I was at once benefited by the change, that I was soon relieved from the heartburn and indigestion that used to follow my meals, and that the pains in my back from my by Jamboney affection had ceased."

"My nerves, which used to be unsteady, and my brain, which was slow and lethargic from a heavy diet of meats and greasy foods, had, not in a moment, but gradually, and none the less surely, been restored to normal efficiency."

"Now every nerve is steady and my brain and thinking faculties are quicker and more acute than for years past. After my old style breakfasts I used to suffer during the forenoon from a feeling of weakness which hindered me seriously in my work, but since I began to use Grape-Nuts food I can work till dinner time with all ease and comfort." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

"This is a reason. Read the little book, 'The Road to Well-being,' in plain. Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest."

SYNOPSIS.

John Calhoun becomes secretary of state in Tyler's cabinet with the fixed determination to acquire both Texas and Oregon. Nicholas Treat, his secretary, is sent with a message to the Baroness von Ritz, a reputed mistress of the British ruler, to request her aid in securing from the British government the title of Calhoun, and as a pledge that she will tell him what she knows regarding the intentions of England toward the state which had been lost. Treat is ordered to Montreal on state business, and the Baroness is married to Elizabeth Churchhill before departing. The Baroness says she will try to prevent the marriage. A drunken congressman, who is assisting Treat in his wedding arrangements, blunderingly sends the Baroness's slipper to Elizabeth instead of the owner, and the marriage is declared off. Nicholas finds the Baroness in Montreal, she having succeeded where he failed in discovering England's intentions regarding Oregon. He tells her the slipper he had, contained a note from the Texas attaché to the British minister in London, Nicholas arriving in Oregon. Later the Baroness arrives on a British warship. She tells him she is a spy, and that she is to be sent to Mexico. The Baroness tells Treat that in return for a compromise of the Oregon boundary on the forty-ninth degree, she has sold herself to Calhoun. She tells him the story of her life, and how she has been used by Calhoun and his agents to bring about the annexation of Texas and Oregon. She tells him that she is now in the hands of a diplomatic hall at the White House.

Beautiful she surely was. Her hair was of light golden stuff, and there was a coral wreath upon her hair, and her dancing slippers were of coral lace. There was no more striking figure upon the floor than she. Jewels blazed at her throat and caught here and there the filmy folds of her gown. She was radiant, beautiful, apparently happy. She came mysteriously enough, but I knew that Mr. Calhoun's carriage had been sent for her. I learned also that he had waited for her arrival.

As I first saw Helena von Ritz, she stood by her side Dr. Samuel Ward, his square and stocky figure not undignified in his dancing dress, the gray mane of his hair wagging after its custom as he spoke emphatically over something with her. A gruff man, Dr. Ward, but under his gruff mane there was a clear brain, and in his broad breast there beat a large and kindly heart.

Even as I began to edge my way toward these two, I saw Mr. Calhoun himself approach, tall, gray and thin. He was very pale that night, and I knew well enough what effort it cost him to attend any of these functions. Yet he bowed with the grace of a younger man and offered the Baroness an arm. Then, methinks, all Washington gasped a bit. Not all Washington knew what had gone forward between these two. Not all Washington knew what that couple meant as they marched in the grand procession that night—what they meant for America. Of all those who saw, I alone understood.

So they danced; he with the dignity of his years, she with the grace which was the perfection of dancing, the perfection of courtesy and of dignity also, as though she knew and valued to the full what was offered to her now by John Calhoun. Gracious, sweet and Helen, the Baroness seemed to me that night. She was wholly unconscious of those who looked and whispered. Her face was pale and rapt as that of some devotee.

Mr. Polk himself stood apart, and plainly enough saw this little matter go forward. When Mr. Calhoun approached with the Baroness von Ritz upon his arm, Mr. Polk was too much politician to hesitate or to inquire. He knew that it was safe to follow where John Calhoun led! These two contrasted for a few moments. Thus, I fancy, Helena von Ritz had her first and last acquaintance with one of our politicians to whom fate gave far more than his deserts. It was the fortune of Mr. Polk to gain for this country Texas, California and Oregon out of one of them by desert of his own! My heart has often been bitter when I have recalled that little scene. Politics so unscrupulous can not always have a John Calhoun, a Helena von Ritz, to correct, guard and guide.

After this the card of Helena von Ritz might well enough indeed have been held she cared further to dance. She excused herself gracefully, saying that after the honor which had been done her she could not ask more. Still, Washington looked on with some of Europe as well. That night have been called the triumph of Helena von Ritz. She felt it not. But I could see that she gloried in some other thing.

I approached her as soon as possible. "I am about to go," she said. "Say good-bye to me now, here." "Say good-bye to me now, here." "We shall not meet again. Say good-bye to me now, quickly! My father and I are going to leave. The treaty for Oregon is prepared. Now I am done. You. Tell me good-bye."

"I will not say it," said I. "I can not."

She smiled at me. Others might see her lips, her smile. I saw what was in her eyes. "We must not be selfish," said she. "Come, I must go."

"Do not go," I insisted. "Wait."

She caught my meaning. "Surely," she said, "I will stay a little longer for that one thing. Yes, I wish to see her again, Miss Elizabeth Churchhill. I hated her. I wish that I might love her now, do you know? Would—would she let me—if she knew?"

"They say that love is not possible between women," said I. "For my own part, I wish with you."

She interrupted with a light pat of her fan upon my arm. "Look, is not that she?"

I turned. A little circle of people were bowing before Mr. Polk, who held a sort of levee at one side of the hall. I saw the tall young girl who at the moment swept a graceful courtesy to the president. My heart sprang to my mouth. Yes, it was Elizabeth! Ah, yes, there flamed up on the altar of my heart the one fire, it long ago for her. So we came now to meet silently, with small show, in such way as to thrill both but our two selves. She, too, had served, and that largely. And my constant altar fire had done its part also, strangely, in all this long coil of large events. Love—ah, true love wins and rules. It makes our maps. It makes our world.

Among all these distinguished men, these beautiful women, she had her own tribe of admiration. I felt rather than saw that she was in some pale filmy gown, some crepe of China, with gent speech. I turned to see Helena von Ritz gazing with wistful eyes at Elizabeth, and I saw the eyes of Elizabeth make some answer. So they spoke some language which I suppose men never will understand—the language of one woman to another.

I have known few happier moments in my life than that. Perhaps, after all, I caught something of the speech between their eyes. Perhaps not all cheap and cynical maxims are true at least when applied to noble women. Elizabeth regained her wonted color and more.

"I heard her whisper. For almost the first time I saw her perturbed. Helena von Ritz stopped close to her. Amid the crash of the reeds and brasses, amid all the broken conversation which swept around us, I knew what she said. Low down in the fountains of the wide embroidered silks, I saw their two hands meet silently, and cling. This made me happy.

Of course it was Jack Dandridge who broke in between us. "Ah!" said he, "you jealous beggar, could you not leave me to be happy for one minute? Have you come back, a more heathen and proceeded to monopolize all our ladies. I have been making the most of my time, you see. I have proposed half a dozen times more to Miss Elizabeth, have I not?"

"Has she given you any answer?" I asked him, smiling.

"The same answer!" "Jack," said I. "I ought to call you out."

"Don't," said he. "I don't want to be called out. I am getting found out. That's worse. Well—Miss Elizabeth, may I be the first to congratulate you?"

"I am glad," said I, with just a

"She is Beautiful!" I Heard the Lady At My Arm Whisper.

skirts and sleeves looped up with pearls. In her hair were green leaves, simple and sweet and cool. To me she seemed graver, sweeter, than when I last had seen her. I say, my heart came up into my throat. All I could think was that I wanted to take her into my arms. All I did was to stand and stare.

My companion was more expert in social maneuvers. She waited until the crowd had somewhat thinned about the young lady and her escort. I saw now with certain qualms that this latter was none other than my white friend Jack Dandridge. For a wonder, he was most unduly sober, and he made, as I have said, no bad figure in his fiery. He was very merry and just a trifle loud of speech, but, being very intimate in Mr. Polk's household, he was warmly welcomed by that gentleman and by all around him.

"She is beautiful!" I heard the lady at my arm whisper.

"Is she beautiful to you?" I asked.

"Very beautiful!" I heard her catch her breath. "She is good. I wish I could love her. I wish, I wish—"

I saw her hands beat together as they did when she was agitated. I turned then to look at her, and what I saw left me silent. "Come," said I at last, "let us go to her." We edged across the floor.

When Elizabeth saw me she straightened, a pallor came across her face. It was not her way to betray much of her emotions. If her head was a trifle more erect, if indeed she paled, she too lacked not in quiet self-possession. She waited, with wide straight eyes fixed upon me. I found myself unable to make much intellislight trace of severity. "That you have managed again to get into the good graces of Elmhurst. When I last saw you, I was not sure that either of us would ever be invited there again."

"Been there, every Sunday regularly since you went away," said Jack. "I am not one of the family in one way, and in another way I am. Honestly, I have tried my best to cut you out. Not that you have not played your game well enough, but there never was a game played so well that some other fellow could not win by copying it. So I copied everything you did—played it for just the reverse. No go—lost even that way. And I thought you were the most perennial fool of your age and generation."

I checked as gently as I could a joyalty which I thought unsuited to the time. "Mr. Dandridge," said I to him, "you know the Baroness von Ritz?"

"Certainly! The participants criminis of our bungled wedding—of course I know her!"

"I only want to say," I remarked, "that the Baroness von Ritz has that little shell case now all for her own, and that I have her slipper again, all my own. So now, we three, four—at last understand one another, do we not? Jack, will you do two things for me?"

"All of them but two."

"When the Baroness von Ritz insists on her intention of leaving us—just at the height of all our happiness—I want you to hand her to her carriage. In the second place, I may need you again—"

"Well, what would any one think of that?" said Jack Dandridge.

THE BEST DRESSED MAN

What Made Him So?

He was a mass of bandages, the result of a severe scalding, and when he claimed to be "the best dressed man in town," people wondered. The explanation was easy. A prompt application of a Resinol ointment dressing to the raw flesh had given instant comfort and relief from the pain and suffering. It is the best dressing for burns, scalds, cuts, wounds, feline, carbuncles, and all skin abrasions. It promptly allays irritation and inflammation and stops itching instantly. Resinol ointment cures eczema, psoriasis, barber's itch, rash of poison ivy, herpes, scald head and all skin eruptions. Resinol ointment is free from any injurious ingredient. It's as good for baby as for the older members of the family. Resinol ointment is put up in jars; price fifty cents and a dollar. At all druggists. Resinol Chemical Co., Baltimore, Md.

He Got It. "Won't you give me an order?" pleaded the too-persistent traveling salesman.

"Certainly. Get out!"

The hero latrine, Garfield T. T. promptly overcomes constipation, biliousness, sick-headache and insures better health.

MENARD, TEXAS. ON THE RIVER BANK

"Valley Farm"

—000—

The play, "Valley Farm" as interpreted by the graduating class of '11 and presented by Miss Alice Heyman and Mrs. Emma Burrows at the school-house Saturday evening, May 20th was a pronounced success from the first, if the sincere testimony of a big, appreciative audience counts for anything.

The story is a characteristic "down east" one, full of life, laughter, pathos and plot intermingled with that irresistible companion, love.

Under the limited circumstances the scenes were excellent, even to the minute details of the old well out in the orchard. Each of the players can flatter themselves that they were excellent and played something akin to professionals rather than amateurs.

Julius Heyman as Harold Rutledge, the New York banker, successfully played the part throughout, every inch a man, and the favored one for the hand of Hettie.

Kittrell Durst as Perry Dean was a pronounced success. Perry was a true son of the soil and a love that was persistent.

It is to be realized that he had been given and even then following Hettie to the city that he might sometime have a chance to get a glimpse of her. An unfortunate crawl on the bowery resulted in the turning point in his life. Posing that he had killed a man he fled to Betty for help, forgetting pride and everything else except the hope that she might still be his friend and for the first time learning of her unhappiness and afterwards the most ardent worker for a happy reconciliation between his playmate sweetheart and her husband.

Miss Ivy Hodges as Hettie Holcomb was the feature of the play. The simplest sweet faith of Hettie could not have been any better portrayed. Hettie was subjected to every kind of meanness and unkindness that could be heaped upon her by an ill wishing mother-in-law and her jealous friend. Though they succeeded in a degree to destroy her faith they could not break the proud spirit that prevailed to a happy finale.

Weaver Baker as Silas Holcomb, the father of Hettie, supported by Miss Jennie Henderson as his sister Alvira were the life of the play.

Silas and Alvira forever stood up for Hettie. Their characteristic "Rube's" visit to the city and the sights they saw there blinded them to the real happiness of their little girl.

James Van Eman as David Hildreth played his part "de luxe." Hildreth proved himself a friend in need more than once. It was he that was most instrumental in clearing a troubled atmosphere.

Miss Winnie Reid as Isabel Carney easily kept pace with the success of the others. Isabel, jealous of Hettie entered the plans of Mrs. Rutledge with a vim and vengeance.

Miss Bonnie Oliver as Mrs. Rutledge, the mother of Harold, interpreted that part. Mrs. Rutledge, highspirited and aristocratic was the last to acknowledge defeat of her cherished wishes.

Hayden Lawler as Azariah Keep "deaf as a post" and in love, supplied the real humor. For seven years he could not muster up courage to tell Alvira of his affection. Eyes for few and ears for none he finally "rit it down" and during the happy finale handed it to Alvira. "I couldn't trust the post office."

Without Miss Ruth Maxwell as Lizzy Ann Tucker something would have seemed greatly lacking. Lizzy Ann sometimes borrowed but never gossiped, but without her things would have been on a standstill. Even the audience listened for her next bit of news.

Conrad Holekamp as Jennings the butler was there every time to announce 'em, card or no card.

Miss Dora Martin as Verbena the hired girl was as characteristic as the others. Even Lay Ann could not get ahead of her on "seeing things" but Verbena never gossiped either.

All together the play was a success and the players to be complimented. In keeping with the essays of the night before, this moral may be pointed out: An educated person wins out in love, war, peace and business.

Another feature of the evening was Kittrell Durst in his songs. With a promising basso voice of wonderful volume his solo, "The Heart Bowed Down," made a hit, followed by a close second in "Any Old Port in a Storm." In the latter he was very ably assisted in the chorus by Lorenzo Skaggs, Olney Patterson and Julius Heyman.

Last, but not least, the climax of the evening's entertainment came when the 8th and 9th grade girls performed a classic drill of a fantastic nature, resplendent with both beauty and art.

The Texas Hog

The dinner bell of the nation rings out the praises of the Texas hog and he is diligently sought after by the consumers of both continents.

No domestic animal has ever made such sacrifices to meet the demands of progress as the hog. He has given half of his life and fifty-six pounds of flesh to meet the market demand for young stock. Certainly the human race has made no such sacrifice for success as this dumb brute. According to the census reports of the Federal department of agriculture the average weight of the hog has decreased from 275 pounds to 219 pounds during the past thirty years and he is now going to the market one year earlier than formerly.

1910 VALUE PER HEAD $7.70.

As a revenue producer he undoubtedly excels any other animal on the globe and enjoys the distinction of being the only animal that can swell a bank account by emptying a swill barrel. The hog is the most prolific of all domestic animals. As a rule the hog is not troubled with competitors, although King Cotton has made an effort to imitate his by-products by putting on the market a compound substitute for lard, but wherever the fat of the hog can supply the market his counterfeit quickly disappears.

The hog has thickly populated the rural districts of Texas and his rapid approach has so alarmed city councils that numerous ordinances have been passed prohibiting him from entering the city limits, but when properly dressed and cooked he quickly wins the favor of both aldermen and citizens.

The Texas swine is the most prosperous of all hogs in the United States. According to the census reports of the Federal department of agriculture, or Jan. 1, 1911, the average value of hogs of all ages in Texas was $7.70, which is an increase of 373 per cent since 1870. No state in the Union can compare with us in increase in value per head of hogs. The total value of all hogs of all ages at the present time is approximately $25,000,000. We have shown an increase of $35,000 in number and $17,500,000 in value during the past decade.

Texas is one of the best hog countries on the globe and the animal retains economically under natural conditions.
