Real bad eggs

NAPLES, Italy — An Italian cafe owner's Easter treats won't get delivered this year after police found guns in large chocolate eggs allegedly meant for his colleagues in organized crime, reports said Saturday. Acting on a tip, police on Friday raided the cafe of Giovanni Mastrobuono, allegedly a member of the Camorra, a Neopolitan organized crime group, said the Rome-based newspaper Il Messaggero. The eggs were wrapped in colored foil and ribbons and tagged "sold," so that unsuspecting customers wouldn't try to buy them, said L'Unita newspaper.

Flight 103 story

NEW YORK — The bomb on Pan Am Flight 103 was possibly aimed at six CIA employees and arranged by a Syrian terrorist, not the two Libyans accused in the 1988 blast that killed 270 people, Time magazine reports. A four-month investigation by the weekly newsmagazine says the bombing of the plane had two potential motivations: — Avenging the July 1988 shooting of an Iranian Air Bus by the USS Vincennes or protecting Syrian drug dealer Monzer al-Khassar, who was cooperating with the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration in a drug sting and with a CIA unit code-named COREA. The CIA operatives on the plane may have intended to reveal the ties between COREA and al-Khassar, Time said.

Merrick's fine

NEW YORK — A judge ruled David Merrick is competent to handle his affairs despite claims by the Broadway producer's estranged wife that a stroke has left him at the mercy of his live-in lover. Merrick, 80, is in the midst of a bitter divorce from his wife, Etan, who filed a petition demanding a conservator be named to manage the showman's estimated $10 million fortune. Merrick was left with slurred speech after a stroke in 1983.

Four seek mayor's post

Candidates agree on problems facing city

Two council issues also on ballot

By Debbie Lincecum

While choosing their representatives in the city election, voters can also mark their opinions on two issues — a 6-1 districting plan and elections for replacement council members.

Sparked by furor over Bill Morrow's January appointment to the at-large seat vacated by John Castro, both votes are non-binding. That is, the council is not required to follow through with changes.

In Proposition 1 on the ballot, voters can voice their opinion of the

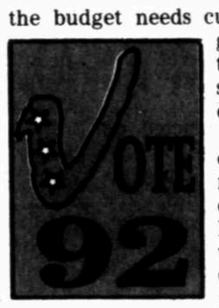
For the most part, the candidates for mayor of Midland seem to agree on the issues of the race.

They agree Midlanders need jobs, the city needs economic development and the budget needs cutting. They agree government needs to become more responsive to the electorate.



A field of four candidates in the mayoral contest includes Robynne Fuller, a founder of the Midland Black Chamber of Entrepreneurs; J.D. Faircloth, currently serving as council mem-

Millions of Christians around the world today celebrate the resurrection of Christ from the grave. Thousands of tourists flocked to Jerusalem for religious holidays, a boost after last year's small turnout following the Persian Gulf war. Jerusalem was also crowded with Jews marking Passover.

Minor rivalries mar Holy rites in Jerusalem

By Karin Laub
Associated Press writer

JERUSALEM — The purple-robed Roman Catholic patriarch of Jerusalem ushered in Easter services Saturday, leading a candlelight procession around the tomb where tradition says Christ was buried.

The ceremony in the Church of the Holy Sepulcher was often drowned out by services from Eastern rite churches marking the eve of Palm Sunday. Orthodox churches celebrate Easter on April 26.

An estimated 40,000 Christians came to Israel for Holy Week events this year, more than three times the number of visitors last year. Many pilgrims stayed away last year because of concerns about the Gulf War and Arab-Israeli clashes.

Jews also marked the first full day of the weeklong Passover holiday Saturday with trips to Israel's resorts and nature reserves. Passover began at sundown Friday with a seder, a ritual meal that recounts the Exodus of the ancient Israelites from slavery in Egypt.

Egg hunts fall victim to greed

That hoary rite of spring, the Easter egg hunt, seems to be degenerating into a combination rugby match and Oklahoma land rush. Little kids are pushed aside by big kids, who get pushed aside by adults, and losers leave with tears and bruises instead of eggs and candy.

Investigator shakes up quiet West Texas town

By Chip Brown
Associated Press writer

SONORA — When undercover drug investigator William Lonnie Hood completed his work in this lazy hamlet on the outskirts of the Hill Country, most thought the area was better off.

After all, Hood's investigation from October 1988 through March of 1989 brought 28 indictments against 14 reputed drug dealers.

Sutton County District Attorney J.W. Johnson and county sheriff Bill Webster, who hired Hood, pronounced it a minor victory in the war on drugs.

But three years later, Hood's investigation has residents fearing the worst as several people claiming to be wrongly accused by the drug snitch are threatening multi-million dollar litigation that if successful could bankrupt the county.

"There has been quite a bit of discussion lately about those drug cases," says Becky Covington, Sonora's interim city manager. "If the lawsuits are followed through, it would be a detriment to the county and city because of the expense. I don't know if we could afford it."

Dallas City Council member Domingo Garcia is representing seven men who claim they were innocent targets of Hood, a 40-year-old freelance investigator with no formal training.

"This was McCarthyism in the 1990s at work," says Garcia. "There was one man running around accusing people of selling drugs and the good citizens convicted their neighbors on the word of a drifter."

Hood was indicted last August by a Nolan County grand jury on two counts of tampering with government records and one count of aggravated perjury.

Authorities promptly dismissed 71 cases he made in Nolan County and pronounced his credibility destroyed.

Garcia says the fact that Hood, who has no police

DRUGS: Investigations in doubt

certification, has been in the undercover drug business in mostly small towns for over 20 years in at least six states should cause some alarm.

"Hood preyed on small towns where the budget was a lot more limited and where they could not hire a regular undercover police officer," Garcia said. "He found that soft underbelly of rural Texas to exploit. And he got away with it for too long."

Hood is working in Arkansas, and has not returned telephone messages left with his family in Texas. His attorney says Hood will not talk until his trial, scheduled later this year.

The doubt created from the Nolan County indictments caused Sutton County officials to reluctantly dismiss Hood's cases after four men had been tried, and two were sentenced to life and 90-year sentences.

"None of these people were innocent victims," Johnson said. "The only reason those cases were dismissed is because those of us in law enforcement have laws and rules we go by, and those were not totally complied with, in our opinion, by Mr. Hood."

Jose Alfredo Galindo, a 36-year-old sheep shearer, claims he is an innocent victim. Although Galindo readily admits to a criminal record, he says he has never used drugs, let alone sold methamphetamine.

So when he was indicted on charges of selling Hood about eight grams of methamphetamine, he refused to plead guilty and swallow a three-month sentence.

"If I sold the drugs I would have admitted it," Galindo said. "I would have taken the three months and probation. But I didn't do it."

His alibi against Hood's drug charges appeared to be airtight, as several witnesses corroborated Galindo's claim that he was in church the evening of Jan. 21, 1989, at the time Hood said their deal happened.

A jury didn't believe him, and District Judge Brock Jones sentenced him to life in prison.

"In Dallas that would be a probation case," says Garcia. "He is accused of selling eight grams of methamphetamine and he gets life. That's scary."

J.W. Johnson

The trials and stiff sentences drew allegations of racism from Hispanic city leaders who criticized Johnson for striking several Hispanics from Galindo's jury.

Some accused Johnson and Webster of covering up for Hood, moving ahead with prosecution even after questions about Hood's background began to surface.

During Galindo's trial, Sonora school board member Joe Garcia told Johnson, "I think what happened here — you are mostly the cause of it. This is an unfair trial."

Galindo served 22 months in prison before his conviction was overturned by the Fourth Court of Appeals in San Antonio in May 1991.

The appeals court said Johnson "improperly excluded Mexican-Americans from the jury" and "failed to disclose exculpatory material until the fifth day of the trial."

Johnson had started to appeal the ruling, but then Hood was indicted in Nolan County and Johnson decided to dismiss Hood's cases.

"Galindo's case was a real small-town sort of Watergate done by Keystone Cops," Garcia said.

Johnson retorted, "I am not going to respond to Mr. Garcia."

Garcia has notified Sutton County authorities he plans to sue the county, Johnson, Webster and Hood for $10 million.

The county's annual budget is only $2.75 million, and some county officials admit privately they are concerned and trying to figure out ways to head off the litigation.

"I think initially it was a con job by Mr. Hood of the small-town sheriff and the small-town DA," Garcia said. "But as they found out various information, in my opinion, they engaged in a coverup of Mr. Hood's very dubious past.

"Then it became a political decision rather than a decision based on justice."

Questions of a coverup surfaced after a private investigator sent Sutton County authorities a file on Hood revealing some discrepancies in the investigator's past.

Garcia claims Johnson tried to suppress the file. Johnson denies it.

"That kind of talk is totally untrue and unfounded," Johnson said.

But on the fifth day of Galindo's trial, Johnson turned the file over to the defense, which included inconsistencies in Hood's military record and trial testimony. It also had documentation that Hood frequently carried a gun without a police license, among other things.

"If any lawsuits are being entertained, they would be frivolous because we acted in good faith in everything we did from beginning to conclusion," Johnson said.

Several district attorneys, sheriffs and police officers have come forward in recent months saying Hood's work in their counties has turned out to be an embarrassment.

Despite his contention that all of Hood's suspects were guilty, Johnson said, "I am very displeased and it would be an exceptional instance when someone not certified worked in our district again in the future."

Seven West Texas counties have dismissed 164 of 169 drug cases made by Hood.

When Ochiltree County Sheriff Joe Hataway learned that Sutton County was facing threats of multi-million dollar litigation, he became thankful that Hood only turned in five cases in his county. They resulted in two guilty pleas and the others were dismissed.

Gorbachev still finds welcome in Japan

By Steven R. Weisman
N.Y. Times News Service

TOKYO — The face was familiar. At least some of the message was familiar.

And as Mikhail S. Gorbachev returned to Japan last week and appealed once more for financial aid for the former Soviet Union, the polite but basically cool Japanese reaction was certainly familiar.

Showing that he retains much of his old stature in Japan, however, the former Soviet president has been accorded a welcome approaching that of a head of state since his arrival for a 12-day visit last Saturday, despite the continuing lack of enthusiasm for aid to Russia.

Gorbachev is not believed to be carrying any official message from the government in Moscow, but his travels have been packed with speeches, interviews, factory tours and visits with dignitaries, including Emperor Akihito and Prime Minister Kiichi Miyazawa.

His words are also being carefully weighed for clues on the future stability of Russia and the other members of the Commonwealth of Independent States. The Japanese seemed relieved that he was relatively upbeat about the future of reforms carried out by President Boris N. Yeltsin.

"If the government adjusts somewhat the course of reforms, and if the West gives some support, I think the reforms can prevail," he said at a news conference Wednesday. "There has been a change in the public attitude and people are for reform."

Earlier in the week, Gorbachev said "it may take one and a half or two years to tide over the crisis" in Russia now.

Saturday, Gorbachev met with business leaders in Osaka, after laying a wreath at the memorial to the victims of the atomic bomb blast in Hiroshima on Friday. In Hiroshima, Gorbachev expressed hope that the republics in the former Soviet Union would eliminate their nuclear weapons.

If Gorbachev's visit is reminiscent of anything, it is former President Ronald Reagan's tour of Japan in 1989, which raised eyebrows when it was disclosed that his host, Fujisankei, a conservative newspaper company, had given him a $2 million honorarium.

This time, Gorbachev is principally the guest of two Japanese newspaper organizations, the Yomiuri and the Asahi, both of which are featuring his words prominently while other Japanese papers and television stations give them less play.

It was left to the Mainichi newspaper, a major rival, to report speculation in Russia that Gorbachev had received half a million dollars from each sponsor.

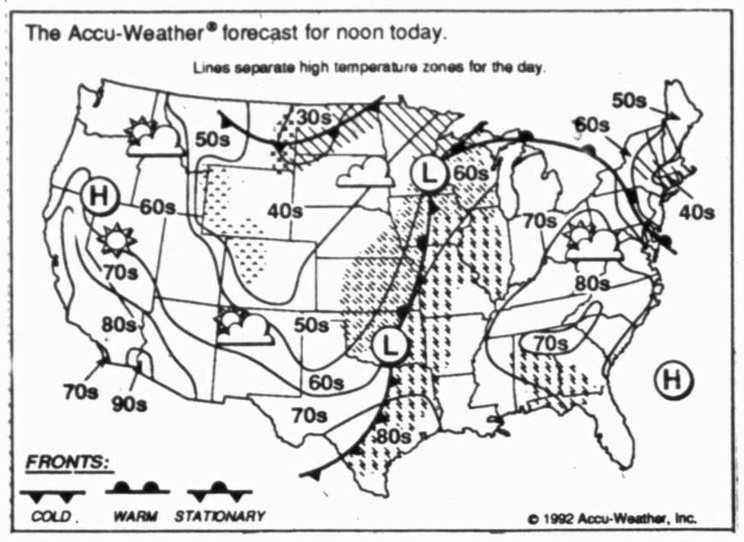
WEATHER SUMMARY



Cooler days forthcoming

Today's forecast is mostly cloudy and cool with a 30 percent chance of rain or thunderstorms, a high in the low 70s and northwest winds 10-20 mph and gusty, according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport.

Tonight is predicted to be mostly cloudy and cooler with a low in the mid 40s.

Monday's forecast is mostly cloudy with a high in the low 70s, the NWS said.

Yesterday's high was 86, compared to the record high of 96, set in 1948. The record low for today's date is 37, set in 1953.

STATE

Saturday was mostly cloudy and warm across Texas with gusty southerly winds and scattered showers and thunderstorms.

Forecasters said the convergence of a cold front and dry line in West Texas was responsible for the activity. A tornado watch was posted until 11 a.m. for much of North and Northwest Texas.

Temperatures rose into the 60s to 80s statewide and winds were from the south at 15 to 20 mph. Parts of West Texas and the Hill Country had sunshine, but it was cloudy elsewhere.

West Texas was to be mostly cloudy through Monday with a chance of showers or thunderstorms in all areas east of the mountains today and continuing over the Panhandle and South Plains tonight. It should be mostly fair over the Far West through Monday. Highs today were to range from the upper 50s in the Panhandle to upper 70s in the Concho Valley and Big Bend. Lows tonight were to range from the upper 30s in the Panhandle to upper 40s in the Big Bend. Highs Monday were to be from the mid-60s in the Panhandle to mid-70s in the Big Bend valleys.

The North Texas forecast was for rain and thunderstorms moving eastward today. Cloudy and cooler tonight and Monday. Highs today were to be 72 to 82 with lows tonight 51 to 62. Highs Monday were to be 68 to 77.

Forecasters said South Texas would have scattered to numerous strong thunderstorms spreading from the west to the east on today and tonight. The south was to be partly cloudy. Highs were to be in the 70s and 80s with readings near 90 in the southwest. Lows were to be in the 60s and 70s.

NATION

Winter-like storms pounded much of the nation Saturday, dumping heavy snow on the Rocky Mountains and parts of the northern Plains, and bringing rain to almost all of the central states.

Cloudy, cool weather prevailed over much of the Northeast, as the region dug out from a Good Friday storm that brought several inches of snow to New England and rain to much of the mid-Atlantic region.

Rain continued along much of the south Atlantic coast on Saturday.

Children in Concord, N.H., dug through the snow Saturday for Easter eggs, and thousands flocked to the slopes of Vermont for one last holiday weekend of skiing.

Meanwhile, parts of the Southwest were warm and sunny, but much of the region was buffeted by strong winds.

A cold front crossing the Rocky Mountains brought heavy snow and freezing temperatures to northern Colorado. Ten inches had fallen at Vail by dawn Saturday, and a winter storm warning was in effect.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

Motorist rams crowd, injures 10

DALLAS (AP) — A motorist irritated that he was unable to get out of a crowded parking lot plowed through an East Dallas crowd Saturday injuring 10 people, police say.

But unlike similar accidents, police say the crowd fought back, pulling the man from his car and beating him.

"Somebody assaulted him or restrained him ... it just depends who you talk to in the crowd," Police Sgt. M.A. Roberts said. "He was restrained physically and he was hurt."

Dallas police did not identify any of the victims or the motorist, although they said the motorist was in custody and expected that he would be charged.

The motorist became irate around 7 p.m. after being unable to get his car out of a liquor store parking lot where people were milling about and dancing, a police spokesman said. He rammed his car into a pole and also into another vehicle while driving through the crowd.

"He sat there for about five or 10 minutes and all of a sudden when everybody got on the floor to start dancing, he just took off," Michael Henry, who was at the scene, told WFAA-TV. "Then I saw this little girl up under his tire ... and then I saw this guy that was trapped in between the cars."

The 10 injured were taken to two hospitals in the area, police said.

MAYOR: Four enter race for city's top spot

ber at-large and mayor pro-tem; Michael Trost, a local restaurateur; and Don Kyser, an independent investor.

Kyser, who says he'll make the job a full-time endeavor, wants to improve citizen involvement.

He said he will focus on getting advice and asking questions of local residents, planning an advisory board of citizens to help him know how people feel about issues.

"I've made the decision to level with people about things," Kyser said. "I've pledged no backroom deals."

He thinks he's well-suited to the work.

"I've got the temperament for this job," Kyser said. "I don't get mad. I've got friends in all areas and I can get along with everybody."

Fuller, a senior administrative clerk specialist at Texas Instruments, said she'd like to see government become more accessible.

"I'm going on the idea that, 'We're the city government and we're working for you,'" Fuller said. "People should have equal access.

"I talk about partnership," she said. "People in the community need to feel they're sharing in the decision-making process. Partnership is going to be what's going to keep Midland alive."

She hopes to bolster the economy with job training and business incentives.

"We must have people who feel they can make a living," Fuller said. She cited tourism as another way to give the economy a boost.

"I'd like to see the city of Midland come together," Fuller said. "We need to create that type of atmosphere where people who live here will love it and people will want to come here."

Trost has a plan for what he calls "inter-governmental cooperation," that he expects to be a budgetary boon. It includes the idea that local communities could barter for products and services.

"You then increase your purchasing power and bring down your costs," he said. Among government entities, he said, "there's got to be some kind of cooperation."

A frequent actor in community theater productions, Trost said he has the confidence to excel as mayor.

"I'm not afraid, not worried of what anybody or anything could do to me," he said. A three-time business founder in the city of Midland, he calls economic development a major issue for coming years.

In his position paper, Trost says he would use the planning tool Objectives 2000 for a re-evaluation of the community's development needs. He said consolidation of some of the promotion agencies might be a way to save money without cutting those services.

Faircloth said his experience makes him the only viable candidate. He has also released a position paper with detailed ideas about how to improve city government.

Among his plans are: holding the budget to last year's numbers, reducing the number of workers and vehicles 3-5 percent, and forming citizen groups for budget and airport study.

"Anybody can run the city in good times, but it takes experience and leadership in hard times," said Faircloth, a financial consultant.

He plans to focus economic development activity on aircraft maintenance industry and high-volume users of petroleum products. But, Faircloth said, he wants to recruit non-competitive and environmentally safe businesses to the city.

Balancing fairness to city workers with loyalty to taxpayers is difficult, he admits, but necessary.

"There are difficult roles you have to assume," Faircloth said. "If every city employee loved me, I would not be doing a good job for the city of Midland."

On the issue of single-member districts — the subject of a citizen poll in the upcoming election — the candidates are split, most unwilling to commit pending the vote results.

Fuller supports the creation of six single-member districts, saying it's the only way citizens can get true representation. Kyser said he would accept the plan if voters wanted it, but believes 4-2-1 is better because citizens have the chance to vote for at-large council members as well as their own district representative.

Trost said he would work to avoid lawsuits about the issue, which he sees as divisive to the community. Faircloth said he's somewhat neutral on the idea, waiting for the results of the referendum.

Trost and Fuller support changing council meeting times to the evenings — he says at least one out of three, she says all of them.

Faircloth said he'd support a time change if citizens want it. Kyser said some evening meetings are a good idea, but attendance should warrant it.

The candidates talk about restructuring the work force, changing the face of city government. They talk about changing the community's overall attitude.

"We are never going to solve our financial problems if we don't create new jobs for Midlanders," Faircloth said.

"We've got to move into the 21st Century," Trost said. "It's time to move aside and let the new paradigm take over."

"Right now there's a lot of worry, families are being separated," Fuller said. "We've got to come together if we're going to survive."

"I'll be accessible. If there's something I need to know about, I want people to call me," Kyser said.

PLANS: Two issues on ballot

council's current district system, 4-2-1. In it, there are four single-member district representatives, while two members and the mayor are elected at large.

The alternative presented, a 6-1 plan, would mean all six council members elected from districts, only the mayor elected citywide.

Supporters call 6-1 the only way to true representation, and minority organizations have threatened to sue the city for it. Critics, however, say the current plan works well, and that drawing two minority districts — an assumed goal of 6-1 — would be very difficult.

Proposition 2 would change the method of filling vacancies on the council.

Currently, when a council member resigns before the term ends, remaining members appoint a replacement. Voters will be asked to decide if they prefer elections to choose all new members.

As an alternative to the current method, the proposition is very specific. It states "vacancies (would) be filled by election at the city's next general election."

While that plan eliminates the cost of holding a special election each time there is a council vacancy, it has also been criticized because it requires leaving a seat empty until the next vote is set — often several months.

According to city officials, a change to the city charter would be required for either provision. But a charter election could not legally occur until at least mid-1993.

A friendly lawsuit has been suggested as a solution to the single-member district issue. In that case, the city and minority groups would agree to a settlement in the suit, avoiding a legal battle and circumventing the charter amendment.

The current system, for example, was ordered by a federal judge, not a charter amendment, during the settlement of a lawsuit by several minority organizations.

HOLIDAY: Pilgrims mark holy day in many ways

like this when the major religions are celebrating. We are experiencing all the different Christian and Jewish rituals that we can," said Michael Sluszka, 44, of Fairfield, Iowa, a Christian who participated in a seder with his Jewish wife, Janet.

At the Vatican, pilgrims prepared to join Pope John Paul II in a midnight prayer service at St. Peter's Basilica to mark the biblical event of Jesus Christ's resurrection from the dead.

Ealier Saturday, the pontiff met with members of a Rome-based Catholic charity group that helps the poor. The church's main Easter celebration will be late Sunday morning, followed by the pope's blessing of the public at noon.

At the Church of the Holy Sepulcher, thousands of pilgrims from around the world bowed their heads in prayer while others pointed videocameras at the clergymen in golden, white and purple robes.

Worshipers knelt before the stone where tradition says Jesus was anointed after being removed from the cross. Some poured perfume and oils on the pink slab and others soaked up the liquid with cotton balls.

The head of Jerusalem's Roman Catholic church, Michel Sabah, wearing a white fur stole over a purple robe, held the first Easter Mass and led a procession of hundreds of Franciscan monks and pilgrims.

Meanwhile, the Armenian Orthodox and Greek Orthodox churches held processions at the church to mark the eve of Palm Sunday.

SEARCH: Egg hunts turn into disastrous events

snowdrifts, rain, mud, and, at least once, an angry moose.

This bunny trail of woe leads back to New York City, where in 1981 thousands of kids gathered in Central Park for the annual Easter Sunday egg hunt. Faced with an unexpectedly large crowd, organizers canceled the hunt and handed out prizes and plastic eggs.

Then distributors began flinging prizes into the crowd. In the ensuing melee, said Parks Commissioner Gordon Davis, "big kids were pushing small kids, parents were separated from their children. ... Kids were crying."

He characterized the event as "not very pleasant," a verdict with which the five children who needed hospital treatment for minor injuries would probably have agreed. For the policeman who suffered a hand injury, it was all in the line of duty.

The scramble for sweets got really nasty last Easter.

■ St. Louis' Riverfront park: Parents with children in tow broke through yellow police ribbon, brushed aside Boy Scout volunteers and snatched plastic eggs prematurely. Families just in time for the scheduled start found the field picked clean.

This year: No hunt.

"We saw parents' overactivity growing for a few years," said master of ceremonies Thomas Purcell. "We don't think that's what Easter egg hunts are all about."

■ South Portland, Maine: Rain forced organizers to move the community hunt to a field with no control area, such as bleachers, where hunters could be restrained until the start.

A few children broke from the sidelines, starting a stampede and adults bowled over the kids. In a second hunt for those shut out the first time, parents and older kids came back to scoop up candy as fast as it was "hidden" on the grass.

This year: No hunt.

Debi Smith of the Parks Department is still disgusted by parents who "scarfed up everything like vacuum cleaners."

■ New Fairview Mall, St. Catharines, Ontario: The egg hunt began and the parents were off, fighting each other and others' children for goodies, which they selflessly gave their own kids.

This year: The battle resumes.

Some communities try alternatives.

Fort Wayne, Ind., replaced its hunt with a jelly bean counting contest. In New York City's borough of Queens, a helicopter dropped 10,000 marshmallows to children in a park last week without incident.

Sometimes it just seems the Easter ritual is jinxed.

Two years ago Ted Gorman of Winterset, Iowa, staged an egg hunt for small children squeezed out at a larger hunt across town. As he spread eggs and candy around a park, a woman warned him, "They've sprayed chemicals on the ground." When the kids arrived, Gorman had to cancel the hunt.

Insurance could not redeem a hunt last year in Anchorage, Alaska, where 1,500 children turned out to find 15,000 eggs.

Kids wandered off the fields where eggs were hidden; some got stuck in the mud or the deep, crusty snow and panicked; at least eight others were reported missing.

A policeman responding to distress calls ran into an angry moose that butted him in the shoulder. When the moose charged a second time, the injured officer shot the animal in the head with his 9mm pistol.

European unification treaty faces resistance

By Alan Riding
N.Y. Times News Service

PARIS — Just four months after the European Community signed a landmark treaty on economic and political unity, the organization is suddenly being shaken by challenges to the agreement and new uncertainty over the region's future.

Although agreement on the Treaty on European Union was the result of tough bargaining before it was approved last December at a meeting of European leaders in Maastricht, the Netherlands, ratification by the community's 12 member nations was taken for granted once the compromise was reached.

Yet almost immediately, there were signs many Europeans were less enthusiastic over the treaty than their leaders and, with misgivings now turning into resistance, officials at the community headquarters in Brussels are for the first time acknowledging the agreement is threatened.

Under the treaty, which can only go into effect after ratification by all 12 members, the community will seek to establish common foreign and defense policies and will create a single currency and a regional central bank by 1999 at the latest.

But complaints are growing louder that this will require too great a surrender of sovereignty are now being heard in France and Germany, whose governments were the driving force behind the treaty.

In Denmark and Ireland, there are fears the treaty may be rejected in upcoming referendums.

Adding to the community's glum mood, less than nine months before it is transformed into the world's largest trading bloc, its cohesion is also being tested by disagreements over expansion of its budget to aid its so-called "poor four" members and over when and how it should add new members.

In part, its troubles are a reflection of the general mood of uncertainty gripping Western Europe, brought on as much by economic recession as by the pace of political change.

Further, in the last month, governing parties in France, Germany and Italy have all been rebuffed at the polls.

But the Maastricht treaty is also only now being challenged because, in its year-long negotiation, no country except Britain debated its contents.

Today, ratification by the British Parliament looks straightforward, but the debate about European union is only just beginning elsewhere.

In France, it began punctually last Sunday when President Francois Mitterrand announced he would seek ratification of the treaty by a joint session of the National Assembly and Senate rather than through a popular referendum. And since then, attacks on "Maastricht," as the treaty has become known, have increased.

Criticism in France has so far cut across traditional ideological lines, with not only the Communist Party and the extreme rightist National Front joining together in outright opposition, but also sectors of the main conservative coalition and even the governing Socialist Party rejecting it.

What unites such disparate political groups is simply the view that the treaty surrenders control over French destiny.

"No diplomatic instrument has ever had such an irreversible impact on our national sovereignty," said Alain Peyrefitte, the conservative writer. "We are not yet defeated."

Some critics object to certain articles in the treaty, including one allowing foreign residents to vote in local elections. But the problem is that the choice is "take it or leave it" because, once signed in Maastricht, the treaty cannot be amended.

Jacques Chirac, who heads the Gaullist Rally for the Republic, has not yet addressed the substance of the treaty, but he has described it as "abstruse, badly drafted, long, complex and ambiguous."

He also said that, since the treaty will require amendments to the French Constitution, these changes should be approved by referendum.

Peruvian government denies part in removing official from airplane

LIMA, Peru (AP) — The government told American Airlines it would refuse to allow one of its planes to land if an opposition leader were aboard, a legislator said Saturday. The official was removed from the flight in Miami.

The government later denied it was involved.

First Vice President Maximo San Roman was planning to return to Peru to lead the drive against President Alberto Fujimori, who dissolved Congress and shut down the courts April 5.

On Thursday Fujimori said San Roman was free to return to Peru "so long as he doesn't obstruct the acts of the Emergency Government of National Reconstruction."

San Roman and his wife Irene Guerra were seated aboard American Airlines Flight 987, ready to take off, when the plane was called back to adjust its weight and balance, said Tim Smith, an American Airlines spokesman in Fort Worth.

"When the plane was back at the gate, information became known to them (security) that involved the first vice president," Smith said, declining to elaborate. Airline security then escorted the couple off the plane along with with Pedro Cateriano, a member of Peru's suspended Congress.

Xavier Barron, a congressman for the Popular Christian Party, said the Peruvian government told the airline its flight would not be allowed to land if San Roman were aboard.

The Foreign Ministry denied government involvement. It said it was surprised at American Airlines' actions, and that San Roman "did not know how to defend his right to return to his homeland, where ... his rights and freedoms are totally guaranteed."

Lawmakers in Lima said they were awaiting San Roman's return to swear him.

Russian Congress OKs constitution that would trim Yeltsin's powers

MOSCOW (AP) — Russian lawmakers endorsed a new constitution Saturday that would reduce Boris Yeltsin's powers and could force the Russian president to seek a referendum on his role in government.

But the vote by the Congress of People's Deputies was only a minor setback for Yeltsin, who retains the authority to issue economic decrees and appoint ministers.

Yeltsin also still has time to propose changes in the draft constitution or call a referendum before the document comes up for a final vote at the next Congress session in the fall.

Yeltsin did not attend Saturday's debate. His supporters were openly scornful of the 1,046-member Congress, dominated by former Communists who have criticized his economic reforms and tried to trim his powers since the session began April 6.

"The Congress has improved substantially in the past few days. It has gone from being harmful to being merely useless," Vladimir Lukin, a lawmaker and Russia's new ambassador to the United States, told The Associated Press.

Yeltsin's supporters have been pushing to change the Communist-era constitution to create a strong executive branch of government, which they call a "presidential republic."

His opponents, an uneasy coalition of former Communists and reformist lawmakers, prefer a "legislative republic" with a weaker presidency.

Yeltsin's aides have threatened to call a popular referendum on his powers if the Congress and constitutional commission insist on reducing them.

The Congress voted 664-139 Saturday to endorse the "general concept" of a 70-page draft constitution that is tilted toward the legislature. But the document, written by a commission of more than 100 lawmakers and legal experts, also includes a hodge-podge of suggestions from many political groups.

Yeltsin wants a constitution based on the U.S. system and written by his legal adviser, Sergei Shakhrai. The parliament voted Friday not to consider Shakhrai's proposal.

Salvaging Buddha

The world's largest Buddha monolith is pulled out of the Hussain Sagar Lake in Hyderabad, in southern India, after a two-year long salvage operation. The 58-foot granite statue was carved from a single rock and weighs 350 tons. Eight people were killed when it slipped and fell into the lake during an attempt to erect it two years ago. A second attempt to rise the statue will be made in mid-March.

■ Shamir urges Egypt to release Israelis

JERUSALEM — Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir, in remarks broadcast Saturday, urged Egypt to release an Israeli held on suspicion of spying for the Jewish state.

The affair has strained Israeli-Egyptian relations already tense over slow progress in Mideast peace talks and Shamir's Jewish settlement drive in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip.

Four Israelis have been held by Egypt since January on suspicion of spying, but no charges have been filed.

Three detainees are members of the same family — Subhi Misrati, his son Majid and his daughter Faika. The fourth is David Ovitz, a Tel Aviv furniture dealer who reportedly employed a member of the Misrati family as a translator.

Israeli Foreign Minister David Levy has said Ovitz was being framed by the Misratis.

Shamir said on army radio: "Mr. Ovitz is sitting in prison although he is innocent, and we still hope that logic will win and that justice will come out and we will see Mr. Ovitz in Israel as soon as possible."

The four are the first Israelis accused of spying in Egypt since Israel and Egypt signed a peace treaty in 1979.

■ Opposition to Thai prime minister grows

BANGKOK, Thailand — In an uncharacteristically blunt display of opposition to military rule, dozens of Thai politicians say they will begin wearing black to sessions of Parliament to make clear their anger over the appointment as the new prime minister of the general who led a coup last year.

The politicians said Wednesday that they would wear black T-shirts stenciled with "Sacrifice your life, not your word," a reference to the broken promise by the officer, Gen. Suchinda Kraprayoon, who had said earlier that he would refuse the job of prime minister.

This protest is part of a larger, fast-growing crusade by pro-democracy forces in Thailand to end military rule and install true democracy.

Since his appointment April 7, Suchinda has come under siege by diverse opponents, including politicians, university students and Bangkok's influential and freewheeling newspapers. (The television and radio stations are under the government's thumb and report almost nothing controversial.)

Suchinda, who stepped down as Thailand's army chief after he was named prime minister, was a main architect of the February 1991 coup, which the military justified as necessary to end rampant corruption in the democratically elected civilian government.

■ Korean villagers suspect tunnel construction

SEOUL, South Korea — Residents of a border village have reported hearing explosions and drilling, a newspaper reported Saturday, saying the activity suggests North Korea is digging a tunnel.

South Korea has often accused the Communist North of digging secret tunnels under the heavily fortified border to use in an invasion.

North Korea has denied digging any tunnels, but several have been discovered in the past, the most recent in May 1990. Earlier tunnels were found in 1974, 1975 and 1978.

The Chosun Ilbo, a major South Korean newspaper, said villagers in Yonchon, about 24 miles north of Seoul, asked military authorities to investigate the suspicious noises. However, the newspaper said the military had found no tunnel.

The area has been closely watched by the military since it was used as an invasion route by the North during the 1950-53 Korean War.

■ Muslims protest sale of Italian sandals

LONDON — After protests from Muslims, a Nottingham boutique owner agreed to stop selling Italian-made women's sandals embroidered with a verse from the Koran.

"The people who designed the shoes . . . must have known what they were writing down would be offensive. But it's been brought to a settlement now. We're all happy," said local Muslim leader Ali Asmat.

Diana Lewis, owner of three boutiques, expressed regret that the $120 sandals had caused offense.

Before the agreement was reached, Mrs. Lewis said Muslim activists protested outside her shops, and she received threatening telephone calls.

U.N. sanctions against Libya face challenge

Syria prepares to break air embargo with flight, reports show

TRIPOLI, Libya (AP) — The first possible cracks appeared in the U.N. sanctions against Libya on Saturday, when Syria reportedly prepared to fly a jetliner to Tripoli in violation of the air embargo.

Meanwhile, a lawyer for the two Libyan suspects in the 1988 Pan Am bombing suggested Saturday they might be willing to stand trial in the United States or Britain — but only if they could be guaranteed a fair hearing.

The sanctions, meant to pressure Libya into handing over the suspects, were imposed last Wednesday. Under them, the international community is cutting arm sales and air links with Libya and ordering diplomatic staff reductions at Libyan embassies.

Although the sanctions have been widely criticized in the Arab world, so far only Iraq has said it will not honor the measures. If Syria goes ahead with the reported plan to fly into Libya, it would be a clear violation.

There was no immediate comment from Washington. There also was no official announcement or comment from the Damascus government, which has criticized the sanctions but not said outright it would refuse to honor them.

Sources at state-run Syrian Arab Airlines in Damascus, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the flight for Tripoli would take off Monday. They said the flights to Libya were never actually suspended in the first place, and a scheduled flight on Thursday had been canceled only for "technical reasons."

The U.N. sanctions do not affect land and sea routes, and crucial oil sales continue. They have caused no apparent disruptions to life in the Libyan capital, Tripoli. On Saturday, shops were open and traffic was normal. The United States has hinted it will apply more pressure if the current steps do not produce results.

The weekly newspaper Al-Jamahiriya (The People's Republic), featured a front-page cartoon showing the globe with a snake wound around it; the snake is wearing an Uncle Sam-style hat. But television and most newspapers have shown little invective in reporting on the sanctions.

Ibrahim Legwell, a lawyer for the Libyan suspects in the Pan Am bombing, had said Friday he would permit his clients to stand trial anywhere but the United States or Britain. Both nations have rejected that offer.

On Saturday, Legwell appeared to leave open the possibility of a trial in Britain or the United States.

"We have to work on that. We open all the doors to negotiate the conditions," he told journalists at his office in Tripoli. "I do trust the judicial system in the United States and Britain."

The United States has maintained the two could receive a fair trial despite extensive publicity

Afghans fear showdown between rival rebel groups

KABUL, Afghanistan (AP) — A key guerrilla commander called urgently Saturday for an interim council to replace the crumbling government before rival rebel forces turn the capital into a battleground.

But even as rebel leader Ahmed Shah Masood made his appeal, fighters allied with the rival Hezb-i-Islami faction tightened their noose around Kabul. A spokesman said thousands of the Muslim fundamentalist fighters were poised on the southern edge of the city, and columns of tanks were moving from the north, west and east.

The two rebel groups also reported gains elsewhere in the country.

The government in Afghanistan has been crumbling since Thursday, when President Najibullah tried to flee the country and was stripped of his power.

Sporadic gunfire echoed through parts of Kabul on Saturday, and shopkeepers in the busy central bazaars quickly closed their shutters.

The weakened government, seen now as having little leverage, is trying to reach an accord with Masood, whose fighters have been told to form a protective ring around the city.

In an apparent gesture of reconciliation, state-run Kabul Radio announced Saturday night that 610 political prisoners had been released.

Foreign Minister Abdul Wakil, the government's envoy in the talks with Masood, acknowledged Saturday the session a day earlier had produced no accord, although he said they would keep negotiating.

In Pakistan, Masood's spokesmen said the talks — the first publicly acknowledged negotiations by the government and the rebels — had centered on the "safety of government officials" — an apparent reference to Najibullah, who remained out of sight on Saturday.

He was believed to be in hiding in Kabul, and reportedly sought sanctuary at U.N. offices.

After he was caught trying to escape, Najibullah surrendered his presidential powers to a coalition of generals, civilian leaders and rebels.

But diplomatic and party sources say administrative power in Kabul now rests with two committees, one made up of military officers and the other of leading members of the Watan, or Homeland Party. They said the committees have been talking with the U.N. special envoy to Afghanistan, Benon Sevan, about safe passage out of the country for Najibullah.

Cuba initiates diplomatic ties with Georgia

MOSCOW (AP) — Georgia and Cuba on Saturday signed an agreement on establishing diplomatic relations and are expected to exchange ambassadors, the ITAR-Tass news agency reported.

Cuba is the second country after Germany to establish diplomatic ties with the newly independent southern republic.

"Today we are creating the foundation of a close cooperation between our nations," ITAR-Tass quoted Georgian leader Eduard Shevardnadze as telling a visiting Cuban delegation.

"An open dialogue will allow us — following the diplomatic bridge — to build economic, scientific and cultural bridges," said Shevardnadze, the former Soviet foreign minister who now heads Georgia's ruling State Council.

ITAR-Tass said the foreign ministries of the two countries have agreed on visa-free travel and have also discussed a project for trade and economic cooperation. It gave no further details.

Dear Fellow Midlanders,

With sincere gratitude and appreciation, thank you for electing me as your choice to be the next judge of the 142nd District Court. Both campaigns worked tirelessly on behalf of their candidate.

The support and energy which you poured into my campaign has been overwhelming:

- to the citizens who voted for me - thank you for having the faith and confidence to elect me.
- to the hundreds of volunteers and contributors who worked on my behalf - thank you for your faithful and diligent efforts, the time given up by you and your families, the sharing of your homes for campaign activities and the donations of funds to pay for all of the things necessary to run an effective campaign.
- to the legal community - thank you for your generous show of support.
- to those who served as mentors and advisors - thank you for sharing your ideas, acting as sounding boards and providing support when it was needed.
- to my family - thank you for letting the campaign disrupt your lives and schedules for the good of the cause.

Although there is no Democratic opponent, I need and would appreciate your continued support in the general election in November.

Thank you again,

George D. "Jody" Gilles

7.35% First 90 Days	Jump Rate CD	8.10% First 90 Days
Market Rate* the day CD was purchased for remainder of term.		Market Rate* the day CD was purchased for remainder of term.

All Rates Reflect A .10% Bonus For Team Account Customers

With Team Bank's three new investment choices, it's not hard to come out a winner.

With a Team Account, our 18 month CD pays 7.35% the first 90 days, then for the remaining term, goes to the rate that was in effect the day your account was opened. Our 36 month CD starts out with a bonus rate of 8.10% for 90 days then goes to the purchase day rate for its remainder.

Hurry! Offers End May 31st!

And then there's our Jump CD. With the Jump, your interest rate starts at the current market value. But, you have the option at any time during its 24 month term to make a one-time "jump" to a higher rate if the market rate happens to rise. When you decide to boost your rate, all you have to do is tell us.

Also, if you're looking for an IRA, no problem. All three of our CD packages are also available as tax-deferred IRA CDs.

So if you're interested in a wide range of investment opportunities offered by one of the strongest banks in the country, drop by Team Bank. After all, it's a win, win, win situation.

Study finds governmental data on nation's heroin use unreliable

WASHINGTON (AP) — Government methods for determining the scale of heroin use are unreliable and will uncover a dangerous level only "when it's too late to do anything about it," says an adviser to the nation's drug-control chief.

Mark Kleiman says his own assessment is that heroin has reached "pre-epidemic stage" and could overtake cocaine in a few years, although it probably will never be as prevalent as cocaine was in the mid-1980s.

"We're not going to have a heroin epidemic like the cocaine epidemic because it's a downer and because a smaller fraction of any given population group will like heroin a lot and get hooked on it," Kleiman said.

"If you give a whole bunch of people access to the two drugs, cocaine's going to be the more popular."

Kleiman, an associate professor at Harvard University's Kennedy School of Government, heads Botec Analysis Corp., which conducted a study of heroin use in America for the Office of National Drug Control Policy.

In an interview before the study's release Saturday, Kleiman suggested the government is groping in the dark in analyzing the threat of heroin.

The study faults much of the government data, even such seemingly straightforward information as heroin seizures, noting that federal agencies may be double-counting the same arrest.

The information on heroin use is of even less use, the authors say.

The National Institute on Drug Abuse's Household Survey of Drug Abuse misses many users, and even its showing of a recent upsurge is unreliable, Kleiman said. The same goes for the institute's Drug Abuse Warning Network, which collects information from hospital emergency rooms and coroners nationwide, he said.

Because of doubts about government data, many of the report's conclusions come from negative analyses.

For example, if traffickers are dumping huge amounts of cheap heroin here, why aren't more people arrested testing positive for the drug?

Because, says the report, the drug is so inexpensive that people don't need to commit crimes to pay for it. The cost dropped from about $2 per pure milligram for the decade ending in 1987 to about 90 cents last year, it says.

And because the purity has risen from under 10 percent to over 40 percent in many cities the last few years, why aren't overdose victims jamming the emergency rooms and morgues?

Several reasons, said Kleiman. The purities rose gradually and longtime users became accustomed to them. Meanwhile, newer users are snorting the drug while being careful with it because it's novel.

The report says opium cultivation is growing; seizures of heroin are increasing, reflecting a growth in trafficking; the price is decreasing and purity rising, reflecting larger supplies; street-level heroin markets are springing up; and there is evidence people are snorting the drug to avoid the danger of AIDS from sharing needles.

Bob Martinez, director of the drug control policy office, has said that his office is watching the heroin situation.

Non-wood pencils

Chris Wiedenmayer, chairman of the board of Faber-Castell, a pencil manufacturer based in Parsippany, N.J., holds up the company's new recycled pencil, American EcoWriter, in his office Thursday. The pencil is made from recycled newspaper and cardboard fibers instead of wood. Wiedenmayer holds a "slat" of rigid recycled fiber used to make the new pencils.

Chicago struggles to dry out after Monday's underground deluge

AP Laserphoto

T-shirt vendor Matthew Cooper is quick to capitalize on the flooding of Chicago's Loop, selling a shirt printed with "I survived the Chicago Flood," Friday in Chicago.

CHICAGO (AP) — The city that once virtually burned to the ground struggled to stay dry at week's end and plug a hole that left it awash in Chicago River water — and washed many millions of dollars down the drain.

"This is the Great Chicago Flood of 1992," said Greg Preston, harking to the Great Chicago Fire of 1871 that leveled much of the city, killing at least 300 people and leaving 90,000 homeless.

This time, no lives were lost. No injuries were reported either, nor any homes ruined. But the toll on businesses and the city's daily life remains heavy and still uncounted.

"Our fate is in the hands of the city," Preston, a building manager, said as he surveyed the basement of a downtown high-rise filled with murky water. "Until they drain the tunnel, we can't drain our building."

As of Saturday, most buildings and many businesses had reopened, while downtown subways, two major department stores and nine downtown buildings remained closed.

And finding a cause got as murky as the basement pools of water.

City officials, who said Saturday they were succeeding in plugging the oval tunnel hole, have faulted a company driving piles for a bridge. But the company said the city was wrong and, anyway, should have warned it about the tunnels.

The Great Flood began Monday, when the river rushed through a car-sized hole in a 50-mile network of aged freight tunnels, bringing much of the Loop business district to a halt.

Fear of electrical fire and damage to the power network blackened a 12-block area of the city for 24 hours when Commonwealth Edison cut off the electricity.

The Chicago Board of Trade closed. Some 200 buildings including the Sears Tower and City Hall went dark. Thousands of office workers evacuated in a rush.

Construction experts from around the country gathered to figure out how to patch the damaged tunnel and then drain the underground labyrinth.

President Bush declared the city a federal disaster area after Gov. James Edgar declared it a state disaster.

Even the Internal Revenue Service took pity, extending the April 15 tax filing deadline by a week for those who wrote "Chicago flood" on their returns.

United Way board members learn to be more skeptical, attentive

By Felicity Barringer
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — In the genteel world of charity boards, skepticism has often seemed a bit uncouth. Some polite questioning about an organization's strategy or its success in achieving its goals may be acceptable. But skepticism about day-to-day management has been resisted.

But the United Way of America scandal may have changed that.

Six members of that organization's 34-member board interviewed in the past two weeks had similar reactions to questions about how well they handled their oversight role at the nation's largest charity network.

First, the board members said, they would not fault themselves for failing to know the extent of the financial manipulations and opulent lifestyle of William Aramony, the organization's president for 22 years who resigned under fire in February.

But several members added they might have been "a little more quizzical," to use the words of Larry D. Horner, retired chairman of the board of the auditing firm KPMG Peat Marwick and head of the Audit Committee of the United Way board.

"You have a board at the United Way of America that has been taught a lesson or learned a lesson," said Ragan A. Henry, a partner in the Philadelphia law firm of Wolf, Block, Schorr & Solis-Cohen and a member of the United Way board.

"Certainly I have learned a lesson: I'm not going to take things at face value."

But Henry added, "When you deal with a trusted executive who's been around a long time, there is a tendency to take a lot of things that he says at face value, and not delve into it and look around a lot. If he's not conveying the reality, you're not going to know what the reality is."

If the comments of the six board members who returned a reporter's phone calls shed light on the dilemmas facing a charity board, the silence of the other 28 members was also eloquent.

It seemed to reflect not just the crowded schedules of corporate leaders but the increasing awkwardness of their position as stewards of "a story of excess and values lost," as Aramony's activities were described in an investigative report commissioned by the board.

The board, which is nearly twice the size of many corporate boards, is recruited from leaders of American corporations and labor groups. It meets twice a year, and divides itself into committees to deal with issues.

Veterans' group seeks to help Cambodians

WASHINGTON — While the U.S. government considers how much it can afford to contribute to the rebuilding of Cambodia, a Vietnam veterans' organization is already moving into the devastated country with a people-to-people aid project that is designed to restore mobility and productivity to some of the most tragic victims of war, the amputees.

The organization, the Vietnam Veterans of America Foundation, hopes to raise the money by selling T-shirts and greeting cards decorated with reproductions of paintings and graphics by Indochinese artists whose work has not been seen in the United States. The foundation calls the effort the Indochina Project.

In Cambodia, as many as 50,000 combatants, refugees and farmers lost limbs in the last two decades as they crisscrossed dense mine fields. Millions of unexploded mines and grenades still lurk below the ground, maiming Cambodians returning to their fields in peace.

"There just isn't a whole lot of concern for Indochina out there," said Robert O. Muller, executive director of the Vietnam Veterans of America Foundation.

After several visits to the Cambodian capital, Muller decided that helping people handicapped as a result of war might be something disabled American veterans could do best.

The veterans' foundation will sell the T-shirts for $16 and the cards for $12 a dozen by mail order or through galleries. A brochure is available from the Indochina Project, 2001 S St. N.W., Suite 470, Washington D.C. 20009.

■ New York City bill would limit car alarms

NEW YORK — A New York City Council committee will consider a bill Monday to protect New Yorkers from the midnight whine of automobile alarms.

"We want to let people sleep at night," said Councilman Sheldon S. Leffler, a Queens Democrat who is a sponsor of the legislation. "There are a lot of discontented people who are awakened in the middle of the night by car alarms and are grouchy and irritated the next day."

The bill would cut the permissible time for car alarms to ring, beep or shout from 10 to 3 minutes. It would also outlaw the sale and use of the alarms, similar to motion detectors, that can be activated even if the vehicle is not touched.

It would require that any vehicle with an audible alarm display the home and business telephone numbers of its owner or operator, or a number where that person could be reached should the alarm protest too much. The provisions would apply to alarms that are already installed.

The penalties for violations would be fines ranging from a minimum of $100 for a first offense to a maximum of $1,000 for a third and subsequent offenses.

The Police and Transportation Departments would have the authority to tow vehicles with alarms that sound for too long or are activated without the car's being touched.

■ Candidates court voters in Pennsylvania

PHILADELPHIA — Democrat Jerry Brown met with black leaders Saturday and called for jobs programs while front-runner Bill Clinton went out to the ballpark as the two candidates courted Pennsylvania primary voters.

"What we're seeking here is a coalition of those concerned about social and economic justice," Brown said after meeting with about 15 ministers and other black leaders convened by former Philadelphia Mayor Wilson Goode.

Clinton, his troubled throat still ailing, was heading back to Little Rock for Easter. He planned to be back in Pennsylvania on Tuesday to resume campaigning in advance of the state's April 28 presidential primary when 169 convention delegates will be at stake.

Brown spoke of spending Friday night in north Philadelphia at a Roman Catholic hospitality house and seeing open drug dealing outside on a street littered with bricks, bottles and abandoned automobiles.

In Pittsburgh, Clinton was escorted through the city's market district by Mayor Sophie Masloff. He shook hands, signed autographs and answered questions during a walk by bakeries, produce stands and food stores.

■ Gov. Wilder vetoes abortion notification bill

RICHMOND, Va. — Gov. L. Douglas Wilder on Saturday vetoed a bill that would have required minors to notify their parents before getting an abortion.

"On several occasions during the past two months, I made clear to the General Assembly my position on this bill," Wilder said.

The bill would require parents or a juvenile judge to be notified when an unmarried minor seeks an abortion.

The governor's office says recent calls, letters and petition signatures regarding the bill have been almost evenly split, with opponents slightly outnumbering those who favor parental notification.

Wilder has said he worried about confidentiality questions and whether girls might be unduly influenced to alter their choice.

In a failed attempt to pre-empt a veto, the House of Delegates tried to pass the bill into law without Wilder's signature on Wednesday.

Wilder, an abortion rights supporter, said during his 1989 campaign for governor that he could sign a parental notification bill. But he said the bill passed by the Assembly was poorly drafted.

■ Demonstrators rally against death penalty

SAN FRANCISCO — Demonstrators rallied against the death penalty Saturday as lawyers pressed last-ditch efforts on two legal fronts in an effort to save double murderer Robert Alton Harris from the gas chamber.

In San Diego, a federal court judge on Saturday rejected a request to block Harris' execution, scheduled for Tuesday.

The state Supreme Court had rejected a similar request the day before. Harris' lawyers were preparing to go to the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in San Francisco next.

The American Civil Liberties Union argued Saturday night in a Francisco federal court that executing Harris with cyanide gas would constitute cruel and unusual punishment. The class-action suit filed on behalf of Harris and other death row inmates seeks a ban on the use of cyanide gas.

The hearings were among the final avenues still open to Harris as he tries to avoid execution for the 1978 killings of two teen-age boys. His death would mark California's first execution in 25 years.

Harris, 39, has lost numerous appeals since he was convicted in February 1979 of shooting 16-year-old friends John Mayeski and Michael Baker so he could use their car for a bank robbery.

■ Police arrest 123 anti-nuclear activists

MERCURY, Nev. — One hundred twenty-three anti-nuclear demonstrators were arrested for trespassing Saturday after they walked onto the Nevada Test Site as part of an Easter weekend protest.

The protesters were cited and released, said Derek Scammell, spokesman for the U.S. Department of Energy.

They were among approximately 1,000 people who set up a campground next to the test site 65 miles north of Las Vegas.

"We have one here every year at Easter, it's an annual ritual," Scammell said.

Underground nuclear weapons tests are conducted at the 1,350-square mile facility.

Lawmakers not included on check list sigh with relief

WASHINGTON (AP) — There's a huge sigh of relief emanating from the Capitol, and it's coming from a group proud, for once, to be in a minority: those who DIDN'T write bad checks on the former House bank.

"You have to be mighty, mighty grateful," said House Republican Leader Robert Michel of Illinois, the highest-ranking member of the leadership in either party to have escaped unscathed. "It's certainly one less significant problem to have to deal with."

With the release last week of remaining bad-check writers, 269 current House members — three-fifths of the membership — were sent scrambling to apologize, defend, explain and mollify.

For the 171 lawmakers who got a clean bill of health, it was cause for quiet celebration. They are out of the darkest, widest political shadow to fall on Capitol Hill in decades.

"There was tremendous relief on the part of my staff," said Republican Rep. Jerry Lewis. Community leaders in his southern California district seem well aware he was not caught up in the scandal, he said.

"That means your message on the issues, the priorities more easily gets through. You can talk about other things," Lewis said.

He contrasted his situation to that of California GOP colleague Bill Lowery, who endured a constituent meeting in which for 30 minutes, all questions were about the House bank. Lowery, who wrote 300 bad checks, is retiring from Congress.

Some lawmakers were taking pains to make sure voters know of their official "clean" status.

Such overt pitches make good political sense, said Democratic pollster Alan Secrest, who handles races for many House candidates.

Being clean on the check issue "allows you to push off the image of the institution," Secrest said, something that is critical for incumbents when public disdain for government is running high.

A Wall Street Journal-NBC News poll gave new evidence of the alienation between voters and their government. Some 78 percent, surveyed April 11-14, said they disapprove of the job Congress is doing.

Two-thirds of the sample said 50 or more overdraft checks would be a strong reason to vote against a House incumbent.

Bush wants tighter embargo for Cuba

KENNEBUNKPORT, Maine (AP) — President Bush sought Saturday to tighten the U.S. trade embargo against Cuba by ordering restrictions on entry to American ports for ships that trade with Havana.

The ships would be barred from U.S. ports unless they obtain special licenses from the Treasury Department.

Bush, prodding Congress to change a pending bill that seeks to tighten the longstanding embargo against the communist island, also instructed Treasury to allow shipment of humanitarian package mail on air charters between Miami and Havana.

That's intended to "further limit Cuba's hard currency earnings," Bush said. Packages now are routed through Mexico at stiff rates.

Officials to review many disability benefit cases rejected in Reagan era

By Robert Pear
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Reversing one of the most widely criticized policies of the Reagan administration, federal officials have agreed to reopen tens of thousands of cases in which the government denied benefits to people who said they could not work because of mental or physical disabilities.

People who prove they were wrongly denied benefits could receive substantial back payments, anywhere from $3,000 a year to more than $6,000 a year, for up to four and a half years of missed benefits.

The new policy is set forth in the proposed settlement of a lawsuit involving more than 200,000 people in New York state. Although the settlement applies only to New York residents, lawyers said it should set a pattern for government conduct in other parts of the country.

The settlement affects those who were denied benefits at any point in the 11 years since the Reagan administration began a systematic campaign to purge the Social Security disability rolls. Benefits are supposed to be paid to people who cannot engage in any "substantial gainful activity."

The administration said its campaign was required under a 1980 law and was essential to control the cost of the rapidly growing disability program. The government contended many beneficiaries were able to work, even though courts later found thousands were helpless because of severe physical or mental problems.

The Reagan administration's efforts to purge the Social Security rolls produced a flood of lawsuits, and many judges ruled against the government.

For example, the U.S. District Court in Minnesota said in 1984: "Claimants who lose or are denied benefits face foreclosure proceedings on their homes, suffer utility cutoffs and find it difficult to purchase food. They go without medication and doctors' care; they lose their medical insurance. They even die from the very disabilities the agency denies they have."

Under the proposed settlement, the Social Security Administration will instruct its employees to follow any decisions issued in the past or in the future by the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 2nd Circuit, in New York, even if they disagree with them.

The circuit court has issued at least 75 opinions describing the standards and procedures to be used in deciding whether people are entitled to disability benefits. The government has disregarded many of those rulings.

If the settlement is approved, as lawyers on both sides are recommending, the government will send out letters offering to re-examine the claims of more than 200,000 people in New York state who have been denied disability benefits since Oct. 1, 1981.

People found to be disabled can get up to four and a half years of past benefits in addition to regular benefits in the future.

Monthly payments now average $590 for a disabled worker and $165 for a spouse or a child. Benefits are increased each year to reflect changes in the cost of living.

By making substantial concessions in the proposed settlement, federal officials will avoid a court order that could have been more burdensome and more embarrassing to the government in this election year. President Bush and the Social Security commissioner, Gwendolyn S. King, have repeatedly said their policies are "kinder and gentler" than those of the Reagan administration.

No other aspect of Reagan's social policy was so widely criticized by federal judges, governors and members of Congress as his effort to remove people from the disability rolls, often in defiance of court rulings. Judges, in particular, expressed exasperation because they had to decide case after case raising the same legal issues.

The Reagan administration announced in June 1985 it would follow appeals court rulings.

Man shoots ex-girlfriend, kills her fiance on wedding day

MONTICELLO, N.Y. (AP) — A groom-to-be was slain on his wedding day and his fiancee and brother were shot by the woman's ex-boyfriend in the house where the couple was to be married, authorities said.

The attacker was found dead later Saturday. Police say he killed himself.

Manuel Saldana, 36, was to marry Emily Rodriguez at Saldana's home in Monticello, about 75 miles northwest of New York City.

Saldana was shot to death about 3 a.m. after arguing with Rodriguez' ex-boyfriend, Eusebio Torres, said village Police Chief Walter Ramsay.

Rodriguez told police that Torres, 34, slipped into Saldana's yard and triggered an alarm. Saldana and his 34-year-old brother, Jose, went outside to talk to Torres, who was distraught over the upcoming marriage.

Torres shot the brothers with a .22 caliber rifle, killing Saldana and wounding his brother in the shoulder and back, police said. He then shot Rodriguez twice through a door before fleeing.

Torres committed suicide soon after the shootings, Ramsay said. Police found his body about 4 a.m. in his apartment.

Rodriguez was being treated for a gunshot wound to the right arm and was listed in stable condition Saturday afternoon.

Demonstrators drag anti-abortion minister away from clinic

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) — Abortion rights advocates punched and shoved a pastor opposed to abortion Saturday as activists from both sides of the issue staged protests outside a clinic.

Police interceded once but made no arrests as the Rev. Paul Schenck was roughed up as he kneeled to pray. He was not hurt.

The incident occurred as activists pro and con prepared to make Buffalo the focus of large demonstrations in an escalating conflict over abortion rights.

Starting Monday, the anti-abortion group Operation Rescue aims to close down abortion clinics in Buffalo, as it tried to do for 46 days last summer in Wichita, Kan., despite 2,600 arrests. Organizers have said they plan to wage their effort for two to four weeks.

In Topeka, Kan., 56 anti-abortion protesters were arrested Saturday in what they said was a one-day protest.

About 20 of those arrested were carried out of a clinic they had entered through a rear door. They were charged with criminal trespass, said police Officer Patti Kaeberle. Those arrested outside were charged with unlawful assembly or interference with lawful occupation, Kaeberle said.

In Buffalo, abortion rights advocates began practicing tactics Friday to keep clinics open. They rehearsed chants and formed human walls.

Schenck's interdenominational New Covenant Tabernacle church in suburban Tonawanda was targeted Friday by abortion rights protesters.

During a Good Friday service where Operation Rescue founder Randall Terry spoke, about 100 abortion rights proponents marched around outside, shouting obscenities and "Shame, shame, shame."

On Saturday, Schenck, 33, was sat upon twice as he knelt to pray before some 150 abortion rights rights activists forming a protective ring at the front door of Buffalo Gyn Womenservices.

About a dozen women and men punched and shoved Schenck, pushing him across the street where 25 abortion opponents stood in prayer. The minister, who never put up a fight, momentarily lost his glasses.

Some of the dozen police on the scene stepped in, but took no other action.

In the second incident, about 20 people approached Schenck, this time as he knelt at a yellow line marking the 15-foot perimeter U.S. District Judge Richard Arcara imposed in February to keep anyone from blocking clinic traffic.

The protesters knocked a Bible from Schenck's hands and dropped cigarette ashes on his head.

A man who identified himself only as Vic and said he was from Detroit, pointed a bullhorn in Schenck's face, screamed obscenities and spat in Schenck's Bible.

Military aims to specialize language skills

By Eric Schmitt
N.Y. Times News Service

MONTEREY, Calif. — With an ear to the future, the Pentagon is gearing up to teach military linguists the languages of the post-Cold-War world, from Azeri to Ukrainian.

The collapse of the Soviet Union and simmering political tensions in the Middle East are forcing the military to rethink its language needs.

For example, when Iraq invaded Kuwait in August 1990, the military could identify only 18 soldiers among the three million active-duty and reserve troops who were fluent in the Arabic dialect spoken in Iraq.

Now, the number of Arabic speakers at the Defense Department's huge language school in Monterey is expected to triple in the next few years.

The school, the Defense Language Institute, teaches 3,000 students a year from the four military services in 20 foreign languages.

Nearly 1,000 students study Russian, the most popular language. That number is expected to shrink, and the instruction will become more specialized to teach the arcane terminology of disarmament verification.

Several languages spoken in the former Soviet republics will be offered beginning next year. As the military steps up efforts to intercept drugs in Latin America, the number of those studying Spanish is expected to rise to about 530 next year, a 25 percent increase from 1991.

"There will be a greater commitment on the part of the Defense Department to keep working on requisite language skills," said the institute's commandant, Army Col. Donald C. Fischer Jr.

"We'll be developing capabilities in the Commonwealth of Independent States and Baltic languages and taking a hard look at other areas of the world, like Africa, and increasing the emphasis on the Middle East," said Fischer, whose own second language is German.

Since founding its first language school 50 years ago to develop Japanese speakers, the military has taught soldiers languages mainly to meet military intelligence needs: intercepting radio messages, interrogating prisoners and analyzing captured documents.

Listening and reading skills are still important for mastering translation and eavesdropping but the emphasis is shifting to speaking ability.

This is important because the U.S. military is increasingly involved in international relief operations, such as those in the former Soviet Union and in Kurdistan after the Persian Gulf War.

A growing number of scientific and military exchanges also demand linguists who can talk on a broad range of topics.

The Pentagon's school in Monterey is a barometer of hot spots and American interests around the world. Languages that were important during the Cold War, like Czech and Polish, will be taught to fewer students.

The demand for Chinese is growing, and as Washington's relations with Vietnam improve, so are the requirements for Vietnamese.

Some students change their plans as the world changes.

"With the breakup of the Soviet Union and all the concern in the Middle East, I thought I'd have a better future with Arabic than Russian," said Capt. James Johnson, 30, an Army captain who is training to be a military attache in an American embassy in the Middle East.

The gulf war posed the toughest test for the institute. When Iraqi forces rolled into Kuwait, the Pentagon had scores of linguists trained in the Arabic dialects spoken in Egypt and Syria but was woefully short on experts in the Iraqi dialect.

Angels embark on '92

Rookies, veterans hope to continue '91 second-half ways

■ 1992 Team Schedule/3B
■ Angels fall in El Paso/5B
■ Season Preview/6-8B

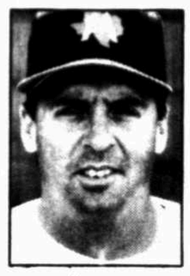
By Joe Wyatt
Staff Writer

Their roster includes a professional football player, a 20-year veteran of the Major Leagues and only a handful of stalwarts back from the franchise's inagural playoff appearance.

The 1992 Midland Angels, who open their home schedule tomorrow at 7 p.m. against visiting San Antonio, bear little resemblance to the 1991 team that brought a share of the Texas League's Western Division second-half regular-season title to the Tall City.



Long

Just nine players with Midland experience — six that finished out last season here — are back to wear Angel red, white and blue.

Among the newcomers is leadoff-hitting centerfielder John Jackson, who spends his autumns as a wide receiver for the Phoenix Cardinals. And 20-year Major League veteran curveballer Bert Blyleven, who should get at least four starts with Midland as he tries to come back from 1990 arm surgery, is in town to greet the Missions.

But while the shake-up in personnel gives them an altered look in uniform, the Angels will not lack for continuity at the helm, and perhaps, therefore, on the field.

Don Long, recipient of the TL's Manager of the Year award in '91 is back for his second stint as the Angels' field boss. Last year under Long, the Angels owned the cellar at the close of the first half of play, but rebounded to capture the second half crown and put Midland in the playoffs for the first time since Angels Stadium was called Cubs Stadium.

Naturally Long would like to see his present flock pick up where the last one left off, but he's cautious about placing too much pressure on his new charges to immediately play to the level of their predecessors.

"We have a lot of players that are new to the situation," Long said. "They realize the club did well the year before, and the people in the community are excited because the team finished well. I think there can be a carry-over.

"But there's such a turnover in personnel that I also think it's hard to have last year's finish affect this year's start."

Catcher Mick Billmeyer, infielder Walt McConnell and outfielder Bobby Jones are Midland's only returning position players from last season's playoff team, which fell two games to none at El Paso in the divisional playoffs. Relief pitchers Clemente Acosta, Marvin Cobb and Mark Zappelli are the others

Lee's Mills, Logan return to regional

■ Midland Lee girls Traci Logan and Tanisha Mills make return trips to regional after winning their events at the District 4-5A track meet.

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

ABILENE — Midland Lee senior Traci Logan put an exclamation mark on her District 4-5A track legacy here at Elmer Gray Stadium Saturday night while Lee junior Tanisha Mills is threatening to add a legacy of her own.

Logan won the 300 hurdles for the third year in a row with a 45.29, which is her third consecutive district record in the event. Logan is the only 300 hurdle champion the district has ever had since the event came into existence during her sophomore year.

Since then, she has been giving lessons.

"It's over," said Logan after the victory. "There's no more pressure. I was able to keep the streak intact. It was what I wanted."

ABILENE — George St. Clair and Bradlee Holland were all that stood in the way of a hometown sweep in the championship round of the District 4-5A tennis tournament here Saturday.

Moreover, Midland High's St. Clair and San Angelo's Holland each posed the final championship obstacle for the other.

Abilene High snatched up the girls singles and boys doubles crowns and Abilene Cooper captured the girls doubles title, leaving the top two boys singles seeds to battle it out for the the remaining automatic berth at the Region I tennis tournament in May.

'Game of inches' axiom rears its ugly head

■ Midland Lee digs itself a deep hole with an 11-10 loss to Odessa Permian Saturday afternoon.

By Bill Price
Staff Writer

Just a couple of more feet and Sean McIntosh would have sent Midland Lee's District 4-5A baseball game against Odessa Permian into extra innings with a two-run homer.

As it was, his seventh-inning double — just barely fair anyway — hit the middle of the right field fence at Johnson Field to drive in but one of the two runs Lee needed to tie the Panthers, as Permian hung on for an 11-10 win over the Rebels Saturday.

For the pragmatic Lee fan, the loss virtually eliminated the Rebels from the playoff race, as Lee (4-5 in district, 10-10 overall) fell 2½ games behind second-place Permian with three games remaining. The Panthers, with four games left on their schedule, are 6-2 in 4-5A play (10-12-1 overall) and just one game behind first-place Abilene Cooper.

"Just a little bit more," said Lee coach Jesse Benavidez of McIntosh's hit. "I was just happy it was fair, but I was yelling with those fans for the wind to push it a little bit more.

"This lose pretty much does us in. That's asking a lot, for Permian to lose three games. I'm not saying it can't happen; they've got four tough games ahead. But we had our chances."

■ Midland High defeats OHS/3B

As a matter of fact, Lee's chances for a win were looking pretty good after the fifth inning. After falling behind 2-0 in the top of the first inning, the Rebels answered with a pair of runs in the bottom of the first.

But the middle of the fifth, Permian again was on top by two runs at 4-2. Then sophomore center fielder David Galvan, after having a sure fire extra base hit called foul down the left field line, took the next pitch from Brian Bavousett over the fence in left for a three-run home run that gave Lee a 5-4 lead.

Then disaster struck Lee in the sixth, as it seems to have done all season in the late innings for the Rebels. Rebel pitcher Julian Urquidez developed a blister on his throwing hand, making him less effective than the Urquidez that had struck out nine in five innings.

Permian scored a pair of runs on a walk, two hits and a Lee error, and got three more on two passed balls, a hit and another error. By the time the top of the sixth was over, the Panthers were all of a sudden in control 10-5, and added another run in the seventh.

Still, Lee made a final run in the bottom of the seventh. Smily Hinojos hit a lead-off double to left

As Jordan's image goes, so goes the NBA's

Patterson

OK, now it's time for baseball ...

With the NCAA tournament safely put to bed and Christian Laettner cleared of any wrongdoing in that messy creative writing scandal, bring on spring, the boys of summer, the opening pitch, etc., etc. ...

After all, what's left on the hardwood except the finish of one of the most dismal, black-eyed NBA seasons in recent memory?

The list is long on why this 100th year of hoops is the worst in recent memory, but let's have a look.

■ The season starts with the retirement announcement of Earvin "Magic" Johnson after he discloses he has tested positive for the HIV virus. Magic's revelation sets the tone for what's to come.

■ Michael Jordan, former superstar, now just another athlete on a cereal box out to get as much almighty buck as he can stuff in his baggy shorts, announces he and Nike are now prohibiting the NBA from using his likeness on merchandise. His shoe company — and it is Jordan's shoe company — now has sole rights for putting Mike's mug on shirts, shoes, under shorts, whatever. And this slap in the face is directed at the league that nurtured Jordan into one of the biggest superstars the game has ever seen.

Forget that Jordan says he was trying to honor his contract with Nike, the perception here and everywhere boils down to nothing more than simple greed.

■ A few weeks ago it was discovered Jordan left checks totalling $170,000 to a convicted coke dealer, a bookie and a dead bail bondsman. One check Jordan referred to as a loan, the others, he said, were to pay off golf gambling debts.

■ Seems odd now, but one of the best things that happened to Jordan this season was the book "Jordan Rules." Once thought to be the work that would bring down the Bulls and tear apart their team unity, it has turned out to be the least of Jordan's woes this year.

Canseco blast dumps Rangers

Associated Press

ARLINGTON — Jose Canseco hit a long, two-run homer, capping a three-run rally in the eighth inning and lifting the Oakland Athletics over the Texas Rangers 5-3 Saturday.

Canseco's 436-foot shot to left field, his sixth of the season, came against reliever Terry Mathews. Jose Guzman (1-2) left after an RBI single by Mike Kingery with one out, and Canseco followed by connecting on a 2-2 pitch for a 4-3 lead.

Mike Moore (2-0) gave up eight hits in 7 1-3 innings. He struck out seven, walked two and extended his winning streak to seven over two seasons. Dennis Eckersley pitched the ninth for his fifth save.

Guzman shut out Oakland on three hits for six innings. He had faced only two batters above the minimum until the seventh, when the Athletics began to rally from a 3-0 deficit.

Harold Baines hit a one-out double and scored when when the wind knocked down Carney Lansford's fly ball in front of center fielder Juan Gonzalez for an RBI single.

Lance Blankenship began the Oakland eighth and later scored on Kingery's single. Blankenship added an RBI single in the ninth.

Blue Jays 2, Red Sox 1

BOSTON — Todd Stottlemyre pitched three-hit ball over seven innings to outduel Frank Viola as the Toronto Blue Jays beat the Boston Red Sox for their 10th victory in 12 games.

Stottlemyre (1-1) won with relief help from Duane Ward and Tom Henke, with Henke getting the last three outs for his second save.

Viola (0-2) allowed only six hits, but the Blue Jays had three of them in the second inning to take a 2-0 lead.

Yankees 14, Indians 0

NEW YORK — Mel Hall singled home two runs during a 10-run fourth inning and later added a two-run homer as the New York Yankees ended a four-game losing streak by routing the Cleveland Indians.

The Yankees combined seven singles, two walks, two errors and a hit batter for their big inning against pitchers Dave Otto and Ted Power. The first 11 batters reached base, nine of them scoring, in the Yankees' biggest burst since a 12-run inning on April 11, 1987, at Kansas City.

Orioles 6, Tigers 1

BALTIMORE — Mike Mussina allowed one run in eight innings and Leo Gomez singled home the go-ahead run in the sixth inning as the Baltimore Orioles beat the Detroit Tigers.

Mussina (1-0) gave up seven hits, walked three and struck out four. In his 14 major-league starts, the 23-year-old right-hander has allowed two runs or less on 10 occasions and has an ERA of 2.66. Yet his career record is only 5-5. Gregg Olson got the last three outs.

Mariners 5, Brewers 3

MILWAUKEE — Harold Reynolds squeezed home the go-ahead run in the seventh inning and Mike Schooler escaped a bases-loaded jam in the eighth, giving the Seattle Mariners a victory over the Milwaukee Brewers.

Seattle trailed 3-2 when Tino Martinez started the seventh against Dan Plesac (1-1) with a single, his third hit of the game. One-out singles by pinch hitters Dave Valle and Henry Cotto produced one run, and Reynolds bunted home another.

Angels 5, Royals 3

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Hubie Brooks and three rain delays totaling more than three hours dampened another day for Kansas City as the California Angels won 5-3 in 10 innings, sending the Royals to their 11th loss in 12 games.

About 100 fans from the original crowd of 20,129 were left when the game ended. The first pitch of the afternoon was at 1:34 p.m. CDT and, after 3 hours, 16 minutes of rain, it finished at 7:57 p.m.

White Sox 4, Twins 3

CHICAGO — Ozzie Guillen scored the tie-breaking run in the seventh inning on third baseman Mike Pagliarulo's error as the Chicago White Sox defeated the Minnesota Twins.

Winner Jack McDowell (3-0) got off to a shaky start when the Twins scored three runs in the first inning.

Give 'Babe' a double

Goodman 'Ruthian' in acting role

By Dave Anderson
N.Y. Times News Service

Babe Ruth

Analysis

NEW YORK — He's endured as unquestionably the best baseball player in history, not only a slugger with 714 home runs but a left-handed pitcher with 94 major league victories that included 23-12 and 24-13 seasons.

To anyone who has visited the Hall of Fame in Cooperstown, N.Y., it's as if Babe Ruth were the greeter. As you walk in, the first thing you see is a lifesize wooden statue of him in a Yankee uniform.

Now "The Babe" is at a theater near you. The movie is a little wooden too.

John Goodman looks like the Babe should look, sounds like the Babe should sound, dresses like the Babe should dress, acts like the Babe should act and trots around the bases after a home run like the Babe should trot.

But he doesn't swing a bat like the Babe should swing a bat. And the storyline doesn't let him enjoy himself as much as the Babe should enjoy himself.

Instead of being fun, "The Babe" is too often too sad, almost too depressing. Over its 115 minutes, it's not a home run, but at least it didn't strike out. If you're scoring, it's a double down the line.

To its credit, it portrays the Babe as he was: a carouser, a drinker, a crude challenger to authority. But once the Babe's youth as an "incorrigible" at the St. Mary's Industrial School in Baltimore and his undisciplined early years with the Red Sox and the Yankees are established, the movie focuses on his obsession to succeed the Yankee manager, Miller Huggins, who in one scene knocks on the Babe's hotel room door at curfew time.

"I want to knock on doors," the Babe tells Claire Hodgson, who would be his second wife, portrayed by Kelly McGillis. "I want to take care of the fellas."

Those words regarding the Babe's "dream" don't quite ring. Maybe the Babe wanted to be a manager to show how much he knew about baseball, but to take care of the fellas? Since he had never taken care of himself, how could he take care of the others? How could he think that Col. Jacob Ruppert, the Yankee co-owner, would consider him a future manager?

"How can you manage a team?" Ruppert tells him in the movie, "when you can't even manage yourself?"

In their conversations, Ruppert pronounces the Babe's last name as "Root," the way Ruppert did pronounce it. That's one of several thoughtful touches, along with the proper Yankee, Red Sox, Braves, Cubs and Pirates uniforms of the time, the Babe's clothes of the time, and the use of Wrigley Field for the Babe's still controversial "called" home run in the 1932 World Series.

In the opening, "The Babe" asserts that it is based on "true events from 1902 to 1935." But in its early scenes, the Babe was never abandoned by his parents at St. Mary's, he never hit a ludicrous pop-fly home run, and its final scene is a sorry stretch of Hollywood histrionics.

During his Yankee career, the Babe actually arrived at a New York hospital with an autographed ball for little Johnny Sylvester and promised to hit a home run. Which he did. According to Robert Creamer's classic biography, "Babe," at spring training the next year, a stranger introduced himself to the Babe as Johnny Sylvester's uncle and thanked him for visiting the boy.

"Glad to do it," the Babe said. "How is Johnny?"

"He's fine," the uncle said. "He's home now."

"That's good," the Babe said. "Give him my regards."

As the man walked away, the Babe turned to two sportswriters and said, "Who the hell is Johnny Sylvester?"

That was the Babe, but it's not "The Babe."

In real life, the Babe never saw Johnny Sylvester again. But in the movie, he's asked to hit two homers and he does. In the movie, after the Babe hits his last three homers in a 1935 game for the Boston Braves against the Pittsburgh Pirates, he's alone in the darkness of the runway to the clubhouse when a young man hops out of the grandstand, introduces himself as Johnny Sylvester and hands the Babe the autographed ball.

"I want to give you this ball," he says.

"I'm gone," the Babe says. "I'm gone."

And the Babe did say those words, but not to Johnny Sylvester and not after those three homers. When he was dying of throat cancer in 1948, he appeared at a Yankee Stadium old-timers day for the last time.

In the clubhouse later, he was talking to his longtime teammate, Joe Dugan, his voice raspy with pain. He was never told he had cancer, but apparently he knew.

"Joe, I'm gone," he said that day. "I'm gone, Joe."

In the movie, Johnny Sylvester adds: "You're the best. You're the best there ever was." And in baseball, the Babe is still the best. The movie "The Babe" is better than "The Babe Ruth Story," the 1948 sop with William Bendix in the title role, but it's not what it could've been and it's hardly the best baseball movie there ever was.

To do justice to the Babe's story, 115 minutes is only enough time to get thrown out trying to stretch that double into a triple.

Former Texas player helps Pittsburgh

Associated Press

PITTSBURGH — Cecil Espy raised his average to .800 with a three-run pinch triple and Barry Bonds added a two-run homer in a five-run fifth inning as Pittsburgh Pirates continued their best start in 19 years with a 9-2 victory over the Philadelphia Phillies on Saturday.

Espy, who still hasn't started a game, is 8-for-10 overall and 4-for-4 as a pinch-hitter and his seven RBIs are second on the Pirates to Bonds' nine.

The Pirates — the NL's worst-hitting team entering the game — have won five straight and six of their last seven and are 8-2 for the first time since 1973, the only year between 1970-75 that they didn't win the National League East.

Just as in Friday's 7-4 victory, the Pirates were helped by the Phillies' so-far suspect defense.

Phillies starter Tommy Greene (1-1) walked Jay Bell with one out in the first and Andy Van Slyke looped a single that fell between left fielder Ruben Amaro and shortstop Mariano Duncan. Duncan was replacing rookie Kim Batiste, who committed four errors Friday.

Cubs 5, Cardinals 4

ST. LOUIS — Dwight Smith doubled twice and drove in three runs and Andre Dawson added a two-run homer as the Chicago Cubs beat the St. Louis Cardinals.

With St. Louis leading 4-3 in the sixth, Ryne Sandberg and Dawson each singled with two outs before Smith doubled to put the Cubs ahead.

NL Roundup

Four relievers shut out St. Louis over the final five innings. Shawn Boskie (2-0) pitched 2 1-3 innings for the victory and Chuck McElroy worked 1 1-3 innings for his third save.

The Cubs took a 1-0 lead in the second inning when Dawson was hit by Omar Olivares' pitch and Smith, who had been 2 for 20, delivered a run-scoring double.

The Cardinals came back with three runs in the bottom of the second. Brian Jordan hit the first of his three doubles when Smith slipped and fell while running after his drive to left and Milt Thompson was then hit by a Frank Castillo pitch.

Astros 4, Padres 2

HOUSTON — Jeff Bagwell hit a two-run homer in the 10th inning, giving the Houston Astros a victory over the San Padres.

After Steve Finley led off the bottom of the 10th with a walk, Bagwell hit a 3-2 pitch from reliever Randy Myers over the centerfield wall for his second homer of the season.

It was the third straight win for Houston and the third consecutive loss for San Diego.

Houston tied it in the eighth. Craig Biggio greeted reliever Larry Andersen, a former Astro, with his fourth single of the game. Finley bunted to the pitcher and was credited with a hit when Andersen couldn't field the ball, moving Biggio to second.

Myers (1-1) relieved Andersen and struck out Bagwell, but pinch-hitter Chris Jones singled home Biggio to tie it. Pete Incaviglia and Scott Servais both flied out to end the threat.

Doug Jones (1-0) pitched two scoreless innings to pick up the win.

After stranding nine baserunners in the first six innings against Houston starter Daryl Kile, the Padres scored two runs in the seventh off the Astros bullpen.

Expos 8, Mets 6

MONTREAL — The Montreal Expos took advantage of two Mets' errors in the eighth inning, including one by center fielder Howard Johnson, to break a tie for an victory over New York.

With one out and the score tied 5-5 in the eighth, Larry Walker singled off loser Jeff Innis (1-1) and scored when Tim Wallach's single to left-center was booted by Johnson. Wallach went to second on the play and advanced to third on Marquis Grissom's single.

Giants 7, Reds 3

SAN FRANCISCO — Will Clark doubled for his 1,000th career hit in a six-run first inning that carried the San Francisco Giants over the Cincinnati Reds on Saturday.

Clark reached 1,000 hits in 895 games over seven seasons with San Francisco.

Dodgers 7, Braves 3

LOS ANGELES — Juan Samuel hit a tie-breaking, two-run single in the eighth inning and centerfielder Brett Butler threw out two runners at home plate as the Los Angeles Dodgers beat the Atlanta Braves.

Loser Mike Stanton (0-1) was greeted in the eighth by singles from pinch-hitters Mike Sharperson and Todd Benzinger, then loaded the bases with a one-out intentional walk to Stan Javier.

TRACK: Midland High's Anderson provides gutsy story in 3,200 and she, too, set a record for the second consecutive year with a 55.91, the second fastest time in the state this year which allowed her to win by a whopping 25 yards.

"I knew what I had to do, but I didn't think I would be that far in front," Mills said.

Logan will now take her act to the Region I meet in Lubbock in two weeks for the third consecutive time. She is the defending 300 hurdle champion and fifth place finisher at state. Mills placed third at the region meet last year, just missing a state berth.

Mills and Logan also ran key legs in Lee's 400 and 1,600 relays, which both won region berths with second place finishes behind powerful Abilene High.

Mills erased 20 yards of a 25-yard deficit in the 1,600 relay with a split time of 54.5.

Those were just some of the top performances in a record breaking day, giving the district a proud moment.

Seven girls records fell as Abilene High scored a district record 199 points to win the team title. Odessa Permian's boys scored a record 194 points while qualifying 12 individuals and two relays for the Region I meet. Odessa High won six events with some potent quality in relays and sprints.

Lee's Scott McLeod returned to the throne room in the boys' shot put with a career best 56-5, winning in a challenge from San Angelo's John Greene.

Greene ripped off a throw of over 55-feet early to become the first 4-5A tosser to crack that barrier, but McLeod came back to answer the challenge.

"I was worried at first," McLeod said, "but I went out and ran a lot to get hot, sweaty and loose. It worked. I knew Greene could beat me, but I wanted the championship real bad."

Midland High's Chris Anderson turned in one of the biggest surprises of the day by placing second in the 3,200 to win a region berth. Anderson is suffering from asthma and is running on about two-thirds lung capacity.

"This was great," Anderson said. "This is just one of those times when you have to give a lung for what you want."

MHS also got a mild surprise from junior Freddie Stricklin with a 2:01.07 in the 800 for second place, saying, "I knew I had a chance if I ran my best. Now I want to knock off five more seconds before regionals."

Lee's Tony Olivas saved his best for last to place second in the discus with a 153-4, naturally on his last shot, moving from fifth to second place.

TENNIS: MHS' Terrazas 3rd in girls singles

did not last long.

St. Clair, the No. 2 seed, dispatched top-seeded Holland 6-4, 6-2 to clinch a lone non-Abilene title and a trip to Lubbock for regionals.

"I kept my cool a lot better than he did," St. Clair said after beating his head-strong opponent. "If I start mouthing off I go everywhere so I knew I had to stay tight.

"I think that's what won it for me. I was going to go out and keep my mouth shut, focus on the game and see what happened."

While St. Clair put the finishing touches on the 4-5A title, MHS teammate Bonnie Terrazas was busy winning third place in girls singles by dropping Cooper's Diane Woodward 6-4, 6-2 in consolation play.

"I'm real pleased with the way I played," Terrazas said after completing her first district tournament with a 3-1 record here.

"This match (vs. Woodward) was my last shot this year and it was just do or die."

She didn't die, and only a singles championship by AHS' Camille Prather kept Terrazas out of a second-qualifier match. A new rule that allows the No. 3 finisher to play the No. 2 finisher for the second regional berth — only if the No. 2 winner had not already beaten the third-place finisher — was not needed in girls singles as Terrazas had already lost to No. 2 finisher Misty Meyers on Friday.

But Holland needed to defend his No 2 finish in boys singles and did it successfully, 6-3, 6-4 over Cooper's John Cole in the only second-qualifier match of the tournament. Holland will go to regionals as the No. 2 boy from 4-5A.

St. Clair fell behind Holland 3-2 in the first set of their championship tilt, but using the booming serve and air-tight net play that got him to the finals, the MHS senior overcame the deficit to win that set, then took a 4-0 lead in the second set and cruised to the title against an increasingly irritated Holland.

Holland will join San Angelo's boys doubles runner-up combo at regionals. Along with St. Clair, those four boys are the only non-Abilene players to earn berths at the Lubbock event.

Final results from the District 4-5A tennis tournament played Saturday at Abilene Cooper High School.

EXPERIENCED Leadership For Midland

"I'll hold the line on spending"

For the past three years J.D. Faircloth has devoted countless hours in learning about our local government and finding ways to improve it. During that time he consistently worked to hold the line on taxes, voted against two budgets, and voted against more spending items than anyone else on the Council. He voted against the half-million dollar parking lot purchase.

He's not against everything. But he's against unnecessary spending in these difficult times. Here's what he's for:

- Creating new jobs for Midlanders
- Focusing our economic development activities on high users of natural gas and other petroleum products
- No property tax increases while holding expenditures to zero growth for at least two years
- Reducing the size of City government, particularly in non-public safety areas
- Restructuring and reorganizing City government to reduce bureaucratic obstacles and delays.

We can't afford inexperienced leadership during these critical times.

Elect J.D. Faircloth your next Mayor.

Errors prove costly to Midland, Diablos come back for 14-13 win

Staff Report

EL PASO — Down by two runs with two outs in the bottom of the ninth inning, El Paso's Troy O'Leary hit a bases-loaded double to centerfield, clearing the bags and capping a wild 14-13 come-from-behind win over the Midland Angels in Texas League baseball play Saturday at Cohen Stadium.

The loss sends the Angels to 4-5 for the season, giving them two wins in four tries against the Diablos, who moved to 5-4.

O'Leary's heroics were set up by a two-out error by Midland third baseman Corey Kapano, who could have ended the game with the Angels ahead 13-11, but threw a ground ball away trying to force a runner at second. The error was the sixth in the game for Midland.

Jeff Kipila led the Angel offense, smashing a grand slam and a two-run homer for six RBI, and Terry Taylor stretched his hitting streak to four games. Kipila has 10 RBI in his last two games.

ANGELS: Pitching coach optimistic about '92 staff that made the El Paso trip.

Also back for another season is pitching coach Kernan Ronan, who guides a staff packed with veterans and sprinkled with three starters who are seeing action at the higest level of their young careers. Overall, he likes what he sees in the early going, knowing full well that Angels Stadium is notorious for being a pure hitter's park.

"Young pitchers have to learn that they can't control this park," Ronan said. "If they let the park affect them or let things they can't control affect them, then they're not going to have any success anywhere.

"But I'm very pleased with the way our pitching looks. We've got five solid starters and five solid relievers, three of those with previous experience in this league in Acosta, Cobb and Zappelli," Ronan said.

"Those three having experience in this league can only help the two new guys in the pen, Brett Merriman and Darryl Scott.

"And Bert (Blyleven) is a quality individual. I see where he can do nothing but help the youngsters by being with us. You're talking about a guy that's pitched 20 years in the big leagues. He has an abundance of knowledge that he can share."

Blyleven, owner of two World Series championship rings and the 26th spot on the all-time Major League win list, has been inserted as the third starter in the Midland rotation. Joe Kraemer is another Angel starter with experience in the Bigs. A seven-year veteran lefthander, Kraemer made his first big league appearance in 1989 with the Chicago Cubs. He was 8-7 with a 4.60 ERA last year with Triple A Iowa.

The other starters are 25-year-olds Dave Adams, Steve Peck and Paul Swingle. All three spent last year with one of the Angels' two Single A teams. Peck (6-4, 2.09 ERA) and Swingle (5-4, 4.42) were at Palm Springs. Adams (8-8, 3.53) played for Quad City.

All Midland Angels home and away games will be carried live on KCRS (550 AM) radio. Bob Hards replaces Russ Langer at the microphone.

NBA: Luster disappears

(From 1B)

The book's charges didn't hurt Jordan's image this season. Only Jordan hurt Jordan.

Be Like Mike? I don't think so.

■ The Boston Celtics have returned to prominence in the Eastern Conference, despite another injury plagued year from Larry Bird. Bird was phenomenal when he played, especially considering his injury, but it is painfully evident the end is near for this special athlete.

■ Charles Barkley simply continued to exist for another season. Reason enough in itself to consider 1991-92 less than successful. Call him outspoken if you like. But the word ignorant also comes to mind.

■ A boring Rookie of the Year contest. Will it be given to Larry Johnson, who finally began to play in the season's second half? Or do you give it to the injured Dikembe Mutombo, who was sensational in the first half but has fizzled since January? Since Johnson's shoe ads have surfaced recently and Mutombo is injured and out for the season, odds are the award will go to the former Odessa College star.

■ This year's NBA finals are bound to bring some of the lowest ratings ever. Cancel the playoffs and give the trophy to the Bulls. No one else is even close in talent, thanks to Scottie Pippen — who's bound to receive a load of MVP votes — and Jordan.

■ And, what are the playoffs without the Lakers? Not since 1976 has the league been without its hallmark team. Sure the Bulls and Celtics are in, and they'll bring in nationwide appeal. But then, when the Bulls win the Eastern Conference and play whomever from the West, people will turn off their sets en masse.

The NBA has suffered through an ugly year. It's future isn't nearly as bright as it was five years ago.

Bring on Shaquille O'Neal and Alonzo Mourning and Laettner. All have NBA futures and big shoe contracts waiting. Unfortunately, none of them has the charisma to resurrect the league's once bright image.

Sadly, it may indeed be a few years before the NBA again enjoys the popularity it once had in the '80s.

Can Magic and Bird be replaced? Certainly not.

Pre-'92 Jordan cannot be replaced, either. Jordan's failures this season have tarnished his image, as well as the image of a league that just 12 short months ago was a standard of excellence in the sports world.

Devil His Due wins Wood Memorial

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Devil His Due, who had to share the winner's circle in his previous start, got there all by himself Saturday after the Wood Memorial at Aqueduct.

The victory, the third straight stakes win of the day for trainer Allen Jerkens, probably earned Devil His Due a trip to the Kentucky Derby on May 2 at Churchill Downs.

Devil His Due, ridden by Mike Smith, took the lead on the final turn and won by a length over longshot West by West, with British-bred Rokeby finishing third in his American debut. The time for 1⅛ miles on a good track was 1:49 1-5.

1992 MIDLAND ANGELS PREVIEW

New season brings new faces

Seven Midland veterans join Angel newcomers for '92

By Joe Wyatt
Staff Writer

The turnstiles at Angels Staduim whirled at a record pace in 1991, but those are not the only revolving doors at Midland's Class AA baseball park, where the heros of yesteryear are regularly displaced by batches of new talent.

Yet even with 16 newcomers listed on the 1992 roster, the Midland Angels will not be without a small nucleus of returning veterans as they take the field for their home opener tomorrow night against the San Antonio Missions.

Seven players who played a complete or at least a partial role in the franchise's first excursion to the Texas League playoffs are back to anchor another run at the postseason.

"I think the people that are back are good people," Angel manager Don Long said. "They may relay some of their experiences to the new players we have."

Some of those experiences are good ones. Some are not.

Midland attracted a franchise record 180,616 fans in 1991. However, aside from the fact that the Angels played out the first half of the TL season eight games under .500 and mired in last place in the Western Division only to turn things around and claim the second half title with a .552 winning percentage, the good and bad news from 1991 — as in most years — can be divided right down the middle between hitting (good) and pitching (bad).

It's an annual occurrence and it comes with the Angels Stadium territory, where hitters preside over pitchers with frightening regularity. While the Angels had a second-best league batting average of .289 a year ago, including 100 home runs, Midland pitching produced a league-worst 4.90 ERA, even though three other teams walked more batters.

Bert Blyleven, on an injury rehabilitation stay with Midland, will likely start Wednesday at Angels Stadium.

Since the Angels' present starting rotation is an all-new one, the bullpen veterans, along with returning catcher Mick Billmeyer, may be called on to do the most important "relaying" of experiences in the early going.

"I read somewhere in the offseason how this park is rated the worst in all of baseball for pitching, but you have to look past that," said closer Mark Zappelli, who earned nine of his 11 saves on the road last year while posting a solid 2.48 ERA in 32 appearances.

Also back in the Angel bullpen are Clemente Acosta, who struggled to a 7.28 ERA, and Marvin Cobb, who had a 4.04 ERA and a 2-2 record in 42 outings. Brett Merriman, also a reliever, pitched in two games with Midland in 1990.

"I think the younger guys will have no problem adjusting to the town because the people here do a great job of making you feel welcome," Zappelli said. "But I think a lot of the young guys could have a hard time adjusting to playing in this ball park.

"My first year here (1990) I heard all the horror stories about how the wind blows the ball out of the park and I struggled because I let the park get the best of me. I'm going to do my best to help the pitchers that never pitched here before go out and be aggressive. They have to trust their stuff.

"Hey, it's a great challenge. If you conquer this park then you can pitch anywhere in the world,"

1992 MIDLAND ANGELS PREVIEW

Operator, do you have a number for a 'Stark'?

■ It wasn't until the last minute that Midland's first-year catcher Matt Stark new he was bound for the Permian Basin.

By Bill Price
Staff Writer

On April 8, Angel catcher Matt Stark was driving a moving van from Phoenix, Ariz., to Midland with his wife and two-year-old daughter in tow.

The Angels had broken spring training, and since Stark was informed rather late of his assignment to Class AA Midland instead of Class AAA Edmonton, his family and friends didn't know where to find him. Stark's mother finally called the Reporter-Telegram to find out if he was on the roster.

Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram
Angel catcher Matt Stark

"I was one of the guys that was told late about going to Midland, so I really didn't have that much time to call everybody and let them know where I was going. I've got the phone hooked up now, we'll give them a buzz," Stark said after reaching Midland the next day.

It was a situation that surely many a minor leaguer has found himself in, but also one that has so far epitomized Stark's baseball career.

Nobody knows where to find him.

At 6-4, 245 pounds, Stark was the Toronto Blue Jays' No. 1 draft pick (ninth overall) in 1983, and by the end of 1987 he had seen five major league games with the Jays. Then he blew out his arm and underwent rotator cuff surgery, a treatment most fans associate with pitchers.

He played 1988 at Knoxville, didn't play in 1989, and resurfaced in Birmingham in 1990. He hit .309 in 129 games there with 14 home runs and 109 RBI, and was called up for eight games with the Chicago White Sox. Still, his arm plagued him and he spent 1991 in AAA Vancouver, where 118 games yielded a .284 average with 10 homers and 68 RBI, mostly as a designated hitter/first baseman.

"I've got a little bit of a new life," Stark said. "I'm 27 and I'm catching again, which is a big positive for me. I've had arm problems in the past, but I'm going to get an opportunity to catch here, which is exactly what I wanted.

"I swung the bat well in previous years in the minor leagues, so I don't think that's a concern. I've proven I can swing the bat in the minor leagues, whatever the level may be. The catching is the point."

The real trick to pulling off his comeback as a catcher, though, lies in his arm. Though the job of stopping opposing runners from stealing bases lies largely with pitchers, catchers must bear the brunt of "SBs against" when fans and scouts look at the stat sheet.

And as of early April, Stark said his arm is still not all the way back.

"I know exactly what Bert Blyleven (who is also on rotator cuff rehab in Midland) is going through. Pitchers are a little bit different than a catcher, though. Catcher, I think, is a little more difficult because you're in so much demand working infield every day and catching in the bullpen.

"That's been my problem, going out every day and heating it up to maximum. But I'm nearly to that point."

But as long as he gets his at-bats, this hulk of a hitter can capture the fancy of Midland fans. Stark said the only reason his home run totals were not higher in past seasons was because of the parks he was playing in were too spacious.

He will now play half his games at Angels Stadium, widely known in baseball circles as a pitcher's bane — especially when the wind blows, which it usually does.

"I've heard stories about how it's a hitters ball park here, but I don't like coming in here thinking, 'Well, I'm going to hit 40 home runs,' " Starks said. "I just want to stay within myself and do what I'm capable of doing. If the ball happens to go out of the ball park, then it does.

"But I'm not going to get a big head because I'm in a hitters' ball park, because I was in Vancouver last year, and that's got to be the worst-hitting ball park in baseball. And I was in Birmingham the year before that, and that's another big ball park.

"So it's nice to get into a park where my offensive numbers can be boosted up a little bit, but if that's not the case, I'm not worried about it."

If the 1992 season goes like Stark hopes, though, pitchers visiting Midland should begin worrying about it.

he added. "I believe that."

Billmeyer hit .305 and drove in 25 runs after joining the Angels midway through '92. While he knows some of the incoming hurlers will look to tap his knowledge of TL hitters, the veteran backstop says putting too much pressure on himself to lead the club to another divisional top spot could be detrimental.

"I'm sure the newer pitchers will be counting on me to know something about the hitters I might have seen from other teams last year," said Billmeyer, who enters his eighth year of pro ball. "But I don't like to put a lot of pressure on myself. I've done that before, but when I relax and just be a part of the team I have more fun and play a little better."

Infielder Walt McConnell, who hit .284 and drove in 65 runs for the '91 Angels puts it this way: "Baseball is played by the team concept. I don't think there should be any more responsibility on one guy than on any other.

"It's going to take everybody on the team to get the job done. We're going to be very competitive and play hard. We've got good pitching, good defense, some speed and guys that can hit. It's just going to be a matter of putting it all together.

"Things usually take care of themselves when you go out and bust your tail."

Also back in Midland for another go-round are infielder Terry Taylor and outfielder Bobby Jones. Taylor, drafted out of Texas A&M, hit just .196 in 32 games with Midland, but tagged pitchers at a .278 clip while finishing out the season with the Angels' Class A Quad City club.

Jones led Quad City with 20 doubles in 1989 and lashed 12 more two-baggers in 82 games with Midland last year while contributing 35 RBI and hitting .221.

The veterans that have already spent time in Midland know the park, and the newest members of the Angels will soon share in that knowledge. It's a mix of talent that will make up this year's batch of heros and likely evolve into next year's memories as the revolving doors of the minor leagues spin on.

What sort of memories will they be?

"We've got to go out and keep our heads and play like we can," Zappelli said. "Donnie Long is good at keeping everybody focused and team oriented.

"I think we're going to challenge. We're going to win a lot of games."

Fields of Dream

Angels now have their own two-sport star

By Jimmy Patterson
Assistant Sports Editor

Bo Jackson. Deion Sanders. Dave DeBusschere. John Jackson.

All athletes who've experienced varying degrees of success in not one, but two professional team sports.

John Jackson?

Yes, John Jackson.

Midland Angel baseball fans will get ample opportunity to watch Jackson this year as the NFL wide receiver/minor league center-fielder makes his Class AA baseball debut.

Ever since he was just a young pup, Jackson has played two sports. He has seldom thought of giving one up for the other, although he'll admit his NFL employers with the Phoenix Cardinals wince everytime he takes a brush-back pitch.

"I really never thought I'd get to this situation," Jackson said. "But I've been playing two sports ever since I played Little Legue baseball and Pop Warner football. That's how it's been going since I was eight years old.

"They (Phoenix officials) don't want me to do both, and they're watching me carefully."

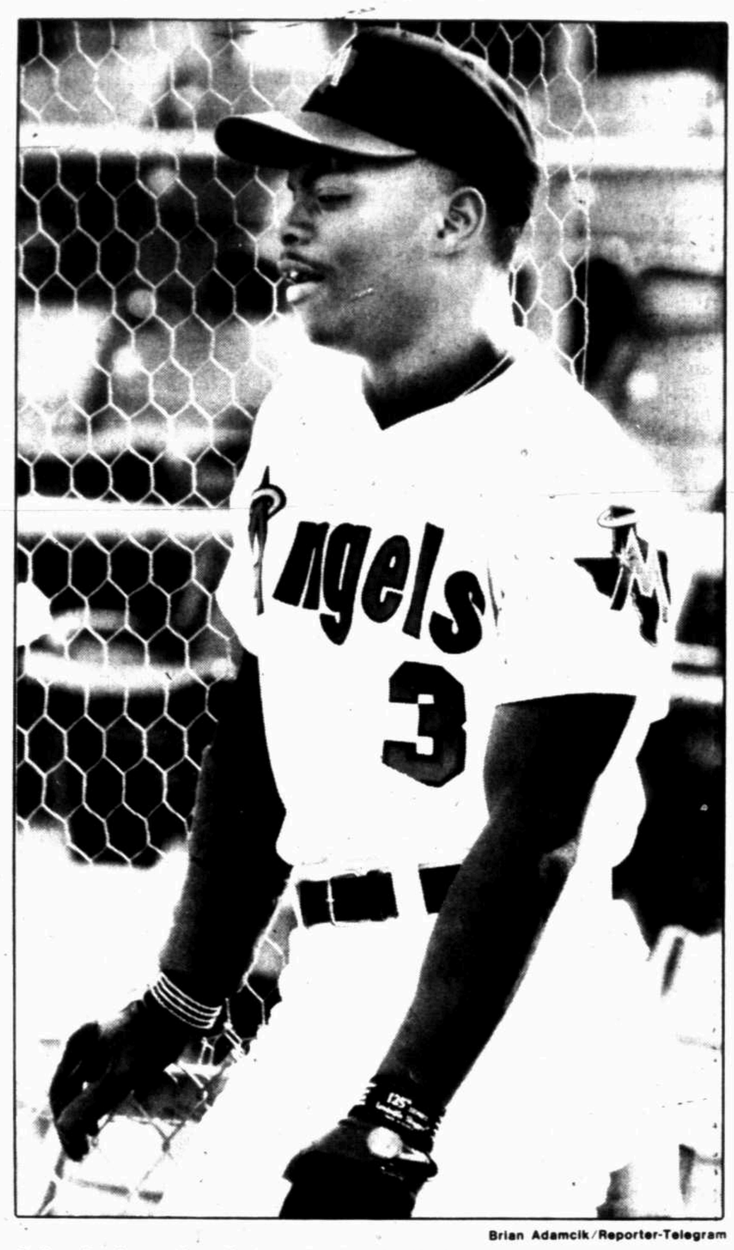
Culture shock was what was in store for Jackson upon his arrival in Midland. He grew up in Brooklyn, N.Y., and most recently called home the Los Angeles suburb of Diamond bar. When he got to Midland, he used the word "peaceful" to describe West Texas. And this description came on a day when all hail broke loose during one of the area's infamous late afternoon spring thunderstorms.

"I've been trying to go out and find some things to do," he admitted. "But this is a great town for baseball."

Jackson has played two NFL seasons for Phoenix, and prior to that established new pass-receiving marks in his career at Southern Cal. In 1989, he was named second team All-American for his pass catching abilities with the Trojans.

Jackson does have a clause in his minor league contract with the Angels that allows him to join the Cardinals when training camp begins in mid-July. He will also be allowed to attend a couple of mini-camps prior to his reporting date with Phoenix.

"The Angels understand this," Jackson said. "And the Cardinals have worked with me, as well."



Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram

John Jackson has been playing both football and baseball for 17 of his 25 years.

Brown gets his fill of pasta ball

By Bill Price
Staff Writer

All it took was one season of playing Italian baseball and the news of major league expansion for Tony Brown to say arrividerci to his teammates in Parma, Italy.

Baseball in Italy? Don't laugh. Brown, now an outfielder for the Midland Angels, said the level of play is not that bad, and that the pitchers are actually better than those in the Texas League.

"To me it was the same, there just weren't enough games," he said. "There were only two games a week, so I figured I'd come back over here and play every day instead of going back over there.

"The pitching may be a little better than Double A because most of the guys are ex-big league pitchers. They know what they're throwing."

But Brown wanted to give U.S. baseball one more chance to send him to the major leagues, so after nine professional seasons the 30-year-old North Carolina native signed on with the Angels.

Brown was drafted by the Philadelphia Phillies in 1982 and stayed in their system through early 1988, logging three seasons at Class AA Reading. He played 128 games for the New York Mets' AAA affiliate in Tidewater during 1989 and in 1990 he hit .290 for AA Huntsville (Athletics).

In Parma, the city from which Parmesan cheese derives its name, Brown hit .423.

Though he has been around the baseball block, the major leagues have so far eluded him and, at 30, he may feel the time is now or never. That's why he hopes to be out of Midland in the near future.

"I just want to play my game. Over the years I've played pretty good and hit good numbers, so all I've got to do it keep that up and play hard."

And what elements compile "his game?"

"Mostly hitting, stealing bases and playing good defense in the outfield," he said.

That's pretty much the whole package, so if he strikes out with the Angels, if the Colorado Rockies or Florida Marlins come calling, and, more importantly, if Brown can back up what he claims about his game, he may finally get a shot at the big leagues.

Lakers hanging in until the end

Associated Press

PORTLAND, Ore. — The Los Angeles Lakers, led by Vlade Divac's 25 points and a dominating rebound performance, kept their playoffs hopes alive Saturday with a 109-101 victory over the Portland Trail Blazers.

The Lakers, who haven't missed the playoffs in 16 years, advance to a first-round matchup with Portland if they beat the Los Angeles Clippers on Sunday and Houston loses at home to Phoenix.

Portland, which wrapped up the best record in the Western Conference last Sunday, played its last regular-season game without Clyde Drexler and Jerome Kersey because of injuries.

NBA

76ers 111, Bullets 104

PHILADELPHIA — Hersey Hawkins scored 24 points and Ron Anderson led a fourth-quarter rally as the Philadelphia 76ers defeated the Washington Bullets in the season finale for both teams.

Armon Gilliam added 23 points for the 76ers, who missed the playoffs for only the second time in 17 years. Philadelphia finished with a 35-47 record, compared with 44-48 last season.

Nets 127, Magic 111

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — The strife-ridden New Jersey Nets ended years of frustration by qualifying for the playoffs for the first time since 1986 with a victory over the Orlando Magic.

The win nailed down sixth place in the Eastern Conference for the Nets (40-42) and set up a first-round matchup with Cleveland (56-25).

Ironically, the catalysts in the Nets' biggest win in years were Derrick Coleman and Chris Morris, the moody front-line duo who earlier this week refused orders by embattled coach Bill Fitch to re-enter games.

Knicks 114, Bucks 103

MILWAUKEE — The New York Knicks kept alive their chances for an Atlanta Division title by holding off a late rally and beating the Milwaukee Bucks behind the scoring of Mark Jackson and John Starks.

Jackson scored a season-high 31 points and Starks added 27 for New York, which scored the last 11 points after the Bucks had tied it 103-103 with 3:50 left.

The Knicks finished the regular season 51-31 and are a half-game ahead of Boston.

Love takes over lead at Heritage

Associated Press

HILTON HEAD ISLAND, S.C. — Defending champ Davis Love III birdied four of the last six holes on Saturday to grab a 3-stroke lead after three rounds in the Heritage Classic.

Love, trying to become the first golfer to win the Heritage three times and the second to capture back-to-back titles, shot his third straight 4-under-par 67 for a 54-hole total of 12-under 201.

Love has now led or been tied for the lead in six of the last seven rounds at Harbour Town Golf Links. The one time he wasn't on top, he was one stroke behind.

Mark O'Meara, who birdied the first three holes to take a 3-stroke lead but played the back side in 1-over, was alone in second after a 70 that left him at 204.

Chip Beck, who was tied for first with Love and O'Meara going into Saturday's action, shot 71 and is in third at 205.

Wayne Levi was at 206 after a 69, followed by six players at 207.

DISTRICT: Strambler second in long jump; records fall

since the first meet of the season and then I do it in this stiff wind. This gives me my confidence back," Olivas said.

Two locals failed to repeat district championships, but held on to qualify for the region meet with second place finishes.

Lee junior Tekeira Strambler was second in the long jump with an 18-1 3/4, her best jump this year.

"I've had injuries this year and didn't know if I would make it out or not, but this is the event I wanted to do well in."

Midland High senior Cynthia Redic, the district shot put titlist last year, threw a career best 38-1, but lost to Mary Daniels of Odessa High.

"I had 37-feet last year, so I did better," Redic said.

Tarshina West and Strambler join Logan and Mills on the sprint relay while Tasha Franklin and Strambler run with Logan and Mills on the 1,600 relay.

Records went out the window in a furious attack by district runners. Boys marks to fall include OHS' Ryan Ledlow with a 7-0¾ in the high jump, OHS in the 400 relay with a 40.60, and Abilene High's Bobby Smith with a 47-6½ in the triple jump, an event that saw him and OHS' Brad Givens break the old mark five times.

Seven girl's records include Abilene Cooper's Ebony Serrano with a 133-7 in the discus, AHS' 400 relay with a 46.84, Cooper's Shemea Broom with a 14.27 in the 100 hurdles, AHS' 800 relay with a 138.12, and AHS' 1,600 relay with a 3:57.45. Of course Logan and Mills beat their own records.

It may have been the most impressive District 4-5A meet ever run.

Trevino leads Seniors

Associated Press

PALM BEACH GARDENS, Fla. — Two-thirds of a Hall of Fame threesome floundered and failed Saturday, opening the gate to a new set of challengers to Lee Trevino in the final round of the PGA Seniors Championship.

While Trevino was fighting his way to a third round 71, good enough to retain a three-shot lead, Jack Nicklaus and Gary Player drifted back into the pack, all but taking themselves out of title contention.

Nicklaus, the defending champion, shot 74 and Player, a three-time winner of this event, had a 3-over-par 75. They were tied at 215, a single stroke under par at PGA National and eight off the pace.

"I don't think Jack was feeling very good," Trevino said. "I think his back was bothering him. He was quitting on shots, spinning out.

"That's very unusual."

Arnold Palmer, who has been in similar situations himself, offered another theory.

"You get three guys like that together, they just get caught up in playing each other instead of the golf course. I've done it, too," Palmer said.

Nicklaus, however, declined to take refuge in either of the handy excuses.

"I just got caught up in making bogeys," he said.

Whatever the reason, the decline of Nicklaus and Player before the largest gallery of the day, provided an opening to last-round challenges by Mike Hill, Dave Stockton and Chi Chi Rodriguez, tied for second at 210, three behind Trevino's leading 207.

"Close enough to make it interesting," Stockton said after his 4-under-par 68.

Stockton, captain of the successful 1991 U.S. Ryder Cup team and a rookie on the over-50 circuit, found himself in title contention for the first time in more than a decade.

Mochrie closes in on Richard at LPGA SEGA

Associated Press

STOCKBRIDGE, Ga. — Deb Richard shot a 1-under-par 71 Saturday to lead the SEGA Women's Championship by two shots over fast-closing Dottie Mochrie.

Richard, who had only three bogeys in the first two rounds, appeared to be coasting to a comfortable lead when she had a double bogey-6 on the 17th.

Mochrie, winner of the Dinah Shore last month, surged into second place with an eagle-3 on the final hole for a 4-under-par 68.

Richard, seeking her fourth career victory, had a 54-hole score of 205 for three trips over the 6,177-yard Eagle's Landing Country Club course.

Mochrie's 207 was one shot better than Beth Daniel and Danielle Ammaccapane.

Daniel, winner of 27 events in her 14-year career, had a 69 and Ammaccapane had a 67 that included four birdies in a row.

Richard had put together two consecutive 67s to take a 4-shot lead at the halfway mark.

She had five pars to start Saturday's play, then scored birdies on the next two holes.

Mood sets stage for city election

Midlanders will choose a new mayor and two City Council members from contested races when they go to the polls May 2 in what is perceived as one of the most volatile political seasons in the city's history.

Voters in Midland, as elsewhere around the country, are angry because of what they view as an elitist attitude on the part of some elected officials and abuse of power by other officeholders. The growing anger has brought talk of term limits and other steps intended to strip those in office of some of their power.

While many local voters acknowledge little can be done by the electorate until the officials in Washington, D.C., or Austin come up for election again, they indicate a movement can be started at the local level that will get the message across.

Part of the anger stems from tax increases at all levels of government that, during this difficult economic period, have given voters the impression the attitude on the part of elected officials is to merely do business as usual and send the bill to the taxpayers. The voters, however, appear fed up with that attitude.

Over the past several months, a number of decisions by Midland City Council have fueled the voters' hostility. The hiring of outgoing Mayor Carroll Thomas as economic development officer for Midland International Airport resulted in major criticism for the city, as did the appointment of Bill Morrow as councilman to replace John Castro, who had resigned. Castro had suggested several Hispanic individuals as potential replacements, although his seat on the council was an at-large position rather than one from a single-member district. When the council appointed Morrow without interviewing the others suggested by Castro, many in the community were offended and said so.

These actions have caused Midlanders to closely scrutinize the candidates for mayor and the City Council seats.

In choosing whom to endorse for a particular elected position, a newspaper has the responsibility to make itself aware of the issues and how each particular candidate stands on each, and to recommend to voters — many of whom may not have the opportunity to talk with all the candidates — the ones we believe will best serve the interests of the community as a whole.

While the mood in regard to incumbents is not positive among the electorate, it would be foolish to simply toss out all incumbents. Their qualifications must be carefully weighed against those of others running for the positions.

In that regard, we believe J.D. Faircloth, who is now serving on the council as mayor pro-tem, is the best choice for mayor of the four running. He has the experience to represent the city fairly and effectively. As Faircloth has said, "Anybody can run the city in good times, but it takes experience and leadership in hard times. We've had seven years of hard times, and there's more ahead."

No doubt he is correct. Faircloth has set economic development of the city as his top priority, but hand-in-hand with that he wants to shrink the size of local government to make it leaner and less top-heavy, with a more efficient structure.

As a councilman, Faircloth has broken ranks with the council to oppose budgets that would have raised local taxes and included unnecessary spending, such as purchase of the parking lot the council approved buying for $500,000.

For the District 3 seat on the council, we support L.D. "Buddy" Sipes Jr., who was appointed to the council nine months ago and says he would remain in the position only two years if elected.

"I believe that new ideas generally come with new council members, and we need new ideas constantly," said Sipes.

Sipes also believes citizens have a responsibility to serve their local government although such service may not be convenient or enjoyable.

In the race for the District 4 seat, our choice is Tom Johnston, the incumbent. Just completing his first two-year term, Johnston has indicated he would serve only two such terms.

A fiscal conservative, Johnston's record on the council includes voting against the appointment of Bill Morrow because the council raised his name unexpectedly after calling for and receiving applications from several others, whom Johnston wanted to see in interview sessions. He opposed the Morrow appointment not on the basis of Morrow's qualifications but because of the way it was carried out.

Johnston said he attempts to listen to the people of his district and represent them on the council. We have no reason to believe he has not served well during his brief tenure on the council.

This city election is extremely important. Voters should make themselves aware of the issues and the candidates and vote their consciences. The above are our recommendations, but it's up to the individual voter to make his own determinations and cast his ballot.

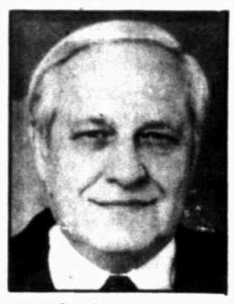
GOP views Gingrich as 'necessary evil'



Anderson

WASHINGTON — Newt Gingrich talks like a leader who should go by the title general and whose garb should be battle fatigues, not pinstripes. He wants everyone to know he is "launching the revolutionary wing" of the Republican Party that is seeking a political overthrow of the democratically controlled Congress.

"I walk down the hall knowing that a significant number of Democrats dislike me intensely because I represent a force that will end their careers," he said.

In his debate, Gingrich has said more about himself than the issue: "I think it (the deadlock) can only be broken by electing a Democrat and going Socialist or by electing a Republican Congress and really taking the risk of free enterprise and real reform."

Lately, Gingrich has been providing fresh proof that he is willing to employ every rhetorical weapon at his disposal in pursuit of what seemed just months ago like a quixotic quest of Republican control of the House.

The firey minority whip took to the House floor last month to smear the new sergeant-at-arms, Werner Brandt, as a man who "may have been involved in actions" blocking Capitol Police from investigating reports of cocaine selling in the House Post Office.

Rep. John Lewis, D-Ga., called Gingrich "the Joe McCarthy of the House." Rep. Vic Fazio, D-Calif., said Gingrich was suffering either from "fits of rage and paranoia or delusions of grandeur."

Gingrich, who had just impugned Brandt's reputation, brushed off his colleague's criticism with a shrug: "I think that Fazio and Lewis took it a little too sincerely."

But this time even Gingrich may have overstepped some lines within his own party. His rhetoric over the House Bank and Post Office scandals becomes more shrill in response to indications that there is a political opportunity to exploit. Never mind that Gingrich has 30 of his own bounced checks to explain.

"It was just a bonehead move," one House Republican strategist told us. "That's what Newt does. He gets so carried away that he loses his legitimacy in the froth of his furor."

Gingrich can fend off the slings and arrows from Democrats, whom he has kept on the defense for more than a decade. But if he someday dreams of becoming the first Republican Speaker of the House since 1954, he has to win over converts within his own camp.

A number of Republicans rationalize Gingrich as the kind of necessary evil a trampled minority needs.

Gingrich is quick to point out that the Democrats have had control of the House for 38 years, five years longer than Castro has held Cuba. Gingrich is now leading a well-funded offense to capture the 52 seats that could make the GOP a majority party.

If Gingrich and the GOP achieve victory, some party strategists predict a bloodbath — not Democrat vs. Republican, but conservative Republican vs. moderate Republican.

Gingrich was one reason why some Republicans were chagrined that Rep. Vin Weber, R-Minn., recently announced his retirement rather than face down attacks over his 125 overdrafts at the House Bank. Weber was seen as an antidote to Gingrich, a kinder, gentler version of a thoughtful conservative who was on speaking terms with most of his colleagues.

Weber, who ranks fifth in the GOP leadership, leaves the conservative field more to Gingrich. Weber's retirement hit Republican leader Bob Michel hard. Michel described himself as "crushed to hear" Weber's decision.

In a thinly veiled reference to Gingrich and his bounced checks, the venerable Michel said: "You better be doggone sure you are pure yourself before you take on all this aura of purity."

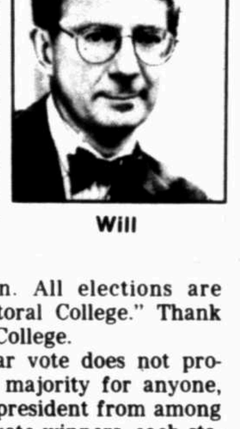
Perot's candidacy could be 'catastrophe'



Will

WASHINGTON — Ross Perot's embryonic presidential candidacy is rekindling interest in the election of 1825.

Rep. Dan Glickman, D-Kan., worries about a "constitutional catastrophe," his odd description of the constitutional procedure for coping with the remote possibility that no candidate will win an electoral vote majority. Glickman, his lucidity crippled by his apprehension, says, "The election could be thrown into the Electoral College and could be thrown into the House of Representatives thereafter."

Steady, congressman. All elections are "thrown into the Electoral College." Thank God for the Electoral College.

If November's popular vote does not produce an electoral vote majority for anyone, the House will select a president from among the top three electoral vote winners, each state's delegation casting one vote.

If that happens early in 1993, litigious liberals will ask the Supreme Court to declare the Constitution unconstitutional. They will say the Court's "one man, one vote" ideology — all votes must be of equal weight — forbids Wyoming's delegation of one having weight equal to California's 52. But the House can select a president constitutionally, as it did on February 9, 1825.

In 1824 there were four candidates: Gen. Andrew Jackson, Speaker Henry Clay, Secretary of State John Quincy Adams and Treasury Secretary William Crawford. But only five of the 24 states had all four on their ballots. Six states, including the most populous, New York, had no elections: Their legislatures selected the presidential electors. Of the 4 million white males eligible to vote, 365,863 (8 percent) did. Jackson got 38,149 more popular votes than runner-up Adams.

Clay finished fourth and so was out of contention in the House process. Then his presidential prospects were forever blighted by accusations of a "corrupt bargain" when he organized the House's selection of Adams and became Adams' Secretary of State. (Adams did not officially receive a single popular vote in Clay's Kentucky, where the Legislature favored Jackson.) The House process was not pretty. For example, the man who cast Missouri's vote sought Adams' reassurance that particular printers would get government business in Missouri.

Since 1825, there have been developments. Now there is a two-party system. And there is the winner-take-all allocation of states' electoral votes, a custom that bolsters the two-party system. Proportional allocation would incite multiple parties to splinter the electorate. Winner-take-all tends to shut out candidates like Perot whose support is not regionally concentrated. And regional concentration shuts a candidate out of the presidency.

Another Glickman anxiety concerns something that could happen even in any two-candidate contest. It is that one candidate might win an electoral vote majority while another is winning a majority or plurality of popular votes. That may have happened in three of the 42 elections for which we have popular vote totals, since 1824. One was in 1824. Perhaps two others were 1876 (Hayes with 47.95 percent beat Tilden with 50.97) and 1888 (Harrison with 47.82 percent beat Cleveland with 48.62). There is uncertainty because fraud on both sides probably involved more votes than the margins of victory.

But even when the electoral and popular vote winners are different, it is excessive to say the "national will" has been frustrated. On such occasions the nation's will is unemphatic.

If the Electoral College were abolished in favor of direct popular election, it would be theoretically possible for a candidate to win all of Alaska's 306,264 registered voters, lose all the other states by an average of 6,250 votes, and still win the popular vote by 14. But let's think about probabilities, not mere possibilities. The Electoral College system probably will remain the world's most successful method of picking a chief executive.

Nation yearns for businessman like Perot

Baker

We can have H. Ross Perot for president if we ask him. He is a businessman and a rare example of the species nowadays: He hasn't gone bankrupt.

This raises the question whether he is really a businessman or just another billionaire poseur, like the late J. Paul Getty, who parlayed his oil gold into an excuse for endlessly disgorging his philosophy of life.

Is Perot merely trying to parlay his billions into a mess of State of the Union bromides? If he succeeds will Perot's administration be as brain-numbing as J. Paul Getty's philosophy of life? Or is Perot the real thing, the businessman America yearns for?

Americans are always saying we should get rid of politicians and put businessmen in charge. They believe businessmen are masters of efficiency with the know-how to end waste.

If you are a Wall Street Journal junkie you know what to expect of a government led by an authentic businessman: first, dramatic cost-cutting techniques. The pioneer in the art was Frank Lorenzo, who took Continental Airlines into bankruptcy so he could break its labor contracts.

Lorenzo's is a tempting lesson for the White House business-type. See him face-to-face with Godzilla: the staggering costs created by various obligatory cash disbursements popularly called "Social Security." Remembering Lorenzo, he probably says, "Why not bankrupt the country and end this money hemorrhage once and for all?"

Congressional lint-pickers would say the Lorenzo strategy was unconstitutional, or unfair, or un-something-or-other. They'd say bankruptcy for the world's wealthiest nation was transparently phony. Until we purge Congress of politicians and fill it up with efficient, cost-cutting businessmen, such protest will be the norm, but it is easily crushed.

The winning riposte goes like this: "Yes, we are the world's wealthiest nation, and we can easily recover from bankruptcy and restore Social Security if Congress would like to raise taxes."

At this, hundreds of thousands of politicians will set up a coast-to-coast bray: "No new taxes, no new taxes, no new etcetera, etcetera . . ."

But people separated from their Social Security money will demand new taxes, won't they? Yes, and they will insist that somebody else pay them since they, bona fide Social Security recipients, have worked hard for the right to be tax-exempt. Why doesn't somebody make the Canadians chip in? Or the Japanese and Germans?

Meanwhile, having bankrupted the country and inflicted hardship on many in the national citizen-force, what does an authentic American businessman in the White House do next? Goes for a big pay raise.

He has probably read about Steven Ross of Time Warner paying himself $50 or $60 or $80 million after knocking several hundred cost-inefficient hands off Time's work force. Even if he hasn't he knows that after leading their companies to record losses, CEO's all over America are entitled to big pay increases.

A company on the edge of disaster needs the canniest CEO money can buy. The more money he gets, the theory goes, the cannier he must be. In the case of authentic businessmen, nothing succeeds like failure.

So the first thing an authentic businessman-president would do after achieving national bankruptcy? Ask Congress to double his pay. Will Congress take the opportunity in passing to double its own pay? Will the sun rise in the East? When America is in trouble it needs the best money can buy.

Now, war on inefficiency: The Pentagon and State Department have pretty sorry records here, but a businessman knows about offshore opportunities. Mexico, Singapore, Taiwan — you can get mighty good war-makers and diplomats over there, and a lot cheaper, too.

Bar's golf tournament raises some concerns

It has come to my attention that the "Crazy Horse Saloon," a topless bar in Odessa, will host a two-man scramble golf tournament at Hogan Park in Midland on Tuesday, April 21. As I understand it, the players will meet and register in Odessa on the day of the tournament and be transported by bus, accompanied by "Crazy Horse" employees, to the golf course where the "employees" will assist with the beverage carts. Upon completion of the tournament, the golfers will return to Odessa to the "Crazy Horse Saloon" for an "awards banquet."

Is this sliding pornography in our back door or what? Having been notified of the tournament, why would our mayor and parks director allow such a gathering? Is the bar owner hoping to soften Midland's view on obscenity in hopes of opening a topless bar in Midland?

If the "Crazy Horse" wants to host a golf tournament let them gather in their own pasture. As a concerned citizen of our great city, I must voice a resounding NO to this type of activity.

Bangor resident offers thanks for reception

Thank you so much for your hospitality and granting Bangor this distinctive award. We never dreamed that what we did which seemed so natural for us in meeting the troops, would some day lead to such honor.

I want to thank you for the great reception at the airport. We were put at ease and felt welcome immediately. Your mayor, Assistant City Manager Rick, Linda from Southwestern Bell and the folks from the Midland Chamber of Commerce were great.

I was honored to represent the Troops Greeters of Bangor and all Maine. I had a pleasant, enjoyable and knowledgeable time in Midland. Thank you on behalf of all the Gulf War Troop Greeters.

City provides many things to laugh at

What'cha got, Ralph.

It's a brochure from a Midland, Texas, touting their community and asking us to move our business there.

Say, Ralph, isn't that the place where the sheriff sued the county commissioners and cost the taxpayers a hundred grand?

(Mild chuckle.)

Yeah, Ed, and I believe it's the same town that actually thought they could attract business by raising their taxes.

Well, Ralph, I think Midland is the same place that gave the voters in the sheriff's race a choice between the "counter suer" and a "charter member of the Battered Bassett Association.

(Serious chuckling.)

And, Ed, isn't that the place where they funded the same Rio Wadley riverbed project on three separate occasions?

Yes, Ralph, and the same community that denuded an in-town tract right before the spring winds and covered the town with dirt, causing the state to cite them for air pollution. If it rains, they could name the town "Mudland."

(Sustained laughter.)

Well, Ed, I believe it's the same city that has to build a new airport terminal building every 15 years.

Yes, Ralph, and then they coronated the mayor to be king of that airport!

(Serious belly-laughing.)

Ed, the citizens out there must have a great sense of humor. Maybe they can attract an "Improv" or "Comedy Shop" franchise, but never a legitimate business like ours.

You said it, Ralph — gimme that brochure. I know just where to file it ... Look out, landfill!

(Cacophonous guffaw.)

Change in grammar frustrates reader

Should I get frustrated when I see rather flagrant violations of the old rules of grammar? Violations from the lips and pens of accomplished and educated persons, even Reporter-Telegram journalists!

I recognize that the rules of grammar change, as do all things, but how quickly should one capitulate to usages which seem wrong but occur more and more often?

An example — use of a plural pronoun in referring to a singular noun, as in "If a person (or someone) wants something, they should get it."

In earlier days the masculine pronouns he, him and his were accepted usages in statements which could apply to either gender. Perhaps in deference to increasing feminine sensitivities, many reached for the logical alternative and started using the applicable pronouns for both genders as "he or she" or "his or her" while preserving number integrity.

This satisfied the rule of grammar, but possibly because such dual-pronoun form seems clumsy, we see more frequent use of the plural they, them or their in referring to a single person. Or could it just be the result of sloppy teaching and learning?

Perhaps we need new gender-neutral pronouns to avoid any implied gender favoritism and at the same time to simplify the matter.

Maybe some teacher of English grammar or professional journalist who is knowledgeable in these matters can enlighten me on this.

City thanks those who volunteer time

Saying "THANK YOU" adequately isn't always that easy, but we would be sure to try. When I say WE, I mean all of the employees and management of The City of Midland. We wish to express our sincere gratitude to all of our citizens who are or who have been members of The Midland Volunteer Program (MVP).

When our local economy slumped and personnel cutbacks were necessary in our city offices, we called on the residents of Midland to "Come out and help us" and they certainly did. Since the inception of MVP, these interested and caring citizens have very generously contributed in excess of 16,000 hours of service to The City of Midland and its operation.

For your dedication and concern for the well being of our city and its services, we truly salute you and thank you for being Midland's Valued Performers.

'Parade of Homes' disappoints reader

I was very disappointed when I did not see one of the homes featured in this year's "Parade of Homes" on the front page of Sunday's paper. I finally found it inside and printed in plain old black and white, not in color.

It was nice to see the space given to a community event in years past. It appears that the community is not quite as important as the commercial dollar this year. Do you know that the funds raised by the Junior Women's Club's Annual Parade of Homes is given to various local charities? Looks like you could spare your commercial real estate ad for four Sundays each year in support of the community efforts of the Junior Women's Club.

I look forward to the "Parade of Homes" editions each year and I am sorry to see the parade of homes demoted to the inside of the paper.

Group sings gospel music every month

I, too, would enjoy having a Bluegrass Festival in Midland.

We do have "Gospel Singing" that meets the first Saturday night of each month (7:00 p.m.) at the Southside Lions Club Building on the corner of New York and Baird Street.

The singing has been great. It's non-denominational and several different churches and singers participate. For anyone who enjoys singing or listening to gospel music, it's great.

READERS' VIEWS on:

Candidate for May election, community politics

Voters should give Bush second chance

I am writing about the gossip around the area concerning the interest of electing Governor Clinton instead of re-electing President Bush.

These same people talking about the problems with the economy in America, mostly who are so greedy they aren't willing to give valued employees good pay NOR do they want taxes raised to have a means of clearing our national deficit, are willing to elect a different president. This would delay everything until the newly-elected president had time to train, adjust to the stress, be informed of ALL the things started by President Bush and select new advisers, etcetera. A new president wouldn't get things rolling for the American people right away if only because of the red tape. But President Bush has experience in the position and can improve or solve the problems at hand in America.

Perhaps these people should be made aware that President Bush has now been informed of the public demands and desires for this country and the people. He can cope with the stress of his office without further training and can solve the problems in the economy and foreign affairs if given this second chance.

Individuals and businesses have needed a second chance, especially in the West Texas area. Some of them got the opportunity by having the second chance and making the most of it for the benefits. They took that advantage whenever it was possible. Now is the time for these same people to do things for their country and the people by re-electing President Bush because he is worthy to be re-elected for a second term.

Electing another will postpone American needs for a longer period of time and delay American progress in the areas that would help our own situations both financially and in the job market.

I don't understand why people don't support the production of loyal servants (those in public office ARE the servants of the public aren't they?) because God said to not cut down a tree the year it didn't bear its fruit (in that year), but to wait until the next year to see if it would bear fruit the next year and if not, then to cut it down. Isn't that a second chance? Aren't we to use the example and give others a second chance?

Dobey has experience school board needs

I am writing to encourage all registered voters who live in District 7 to vote for Michael Dobey for their representative on the Midland Independent School District (MISD) Board of Trustees. This is an easy letter to write because I don't remember ever seeing a candidate for the school board with the qualifications and commitment to quality education that Mike has.

While some concerned citizens run for the school board with a lot of ideas and agendas, few offer a background of "hands on" involvement in the schools equal to Mike. Mike just doesn't talk good education, he has worked hard in the schools to make it more of a reality.

One look at Mike's background is enough: Member — Parent Communications Committee of the City Council PTA, MISD Computer Advisory Committee, Quanah Parker PTA, Sam Houston PTA, Goddard Junior High PTA, and MISD Cluster Advisory Committee; first vice-president of DeZavala PTA, and current president of Goddard Junior High PTA. Mike was recently honored by being granted the prestigious PTA Lifetime Membership.

This is the kind of board member you will get when you vote for Mike. Don't be swayed by single issue candidates with their own personal agendas. Mike has one agenda — making our schools work for every child. Vote for Michael Dobey on May 2nd.

Mark K. Leaverton

Dobey shows qualities needed for school board

As a parent of four children and longtime volunteer in Midland Independent School District (MISD) schools, I know first-hand the kind of leadership needed to insure a quality education for my children. I have come to see how important it is for those in places of leadership and decision-making within our schools to be knowledgeable in the appropriate areas, to have time to be available for all those many hours of service, to have a personality that enables one to work well with people, and to be willing to admit that one doesn't have all the solutions, but is ready to work to find them.

It has been a privilege for me for several years to have been the friend and co-volunteer within MISD of such a person. Michael Dobey, candidate for District 7 school board representative, more than qualifies in fulfilling the responsibilities required of a school board representative. I have worked alongside Michael on two schools' PTA executive boards and know the tremendous amount of knowledge, energy and time he has spent in whatever task he took on. I have been a member of a Sunday school class for several years with Michael and his wife, Katie, and have also seen first-hand the depth of commitment, love and attitude of service he has for those around him.

I am looking forward to seeing the results of the commitment and expertise Michael is capable of giving to MISD and would urge all eligible voters of District 7 to vote for Michael Dobey as school board representative on Saturday, May 2nd.

School board could benefit with Dobey

I have known Michael Dobey, candidate for Midland Independent School District (MISD) board from District 7 since 1986. Since that time, I have become aware of his strong commitment to MISD. The campuses of Parker Elementary, Sam Houston Elementary, DeZavala Elementary, and Goddard Junior High have benefited greatly due to his volunteer time.

How many people schedule their days so that they can attend PTA board meetings? Michael has done this for years. This year he has given 227 hours of volunteer time at Goddard Junior High. He always has a positive and a "can do" attitude.

We need strong, committed members on our school board who will listen to the concerns of parents and the community at large. I know that Michael Dobey is the person for this job. Please vote for Michael Dobey on May 2 for MISD board, District 7.

Citizens should be careful with votes

J.D. Faircloth's announced support of Mike McGregor to replace Fred Poe gives us another reason not to elect Faircloth as the next mayor. This must be a joke. In nine years with the city, what has McGregor done? Other than have started projects, then dropped them before completion or exhibit total ignorance as in the tarpit disclosures. McGregor will be a stooge and rubber stamp for Faircloth.

Morrow talks about morale. Among city employees the initials M.M. stand for Mickey Mouse. This person has the charisma of a pencil. He leads by intimidation. The man is lovey dovey with council, then looks at the floor to avoid facing city employees.

Let's learn from the mistake Odessa made in their choice of a city manager. The council should get in the real world and ask all around before appointing Fred Poe's replacement. They should be sure to hire someone worth $91,000 a year. And voters should be very careful unless they want a continuation of the Carroll Thomas and Ken Day shenanigans and $500,000 parking lots.

Economists gain confidence

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor in Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

NEW YORK — While the Christian world celebrates this Easter holy day, we are blessed with more encouraging news about the prospects for economic recovery.

Before the column is turned over to our national editor's report to me on the good economic news, I want to pay a loving tribute to the religious devotion of my beloved wife, Austine, who went to heaven last June following a long battle against lymphoma.

Hearst

Austine was a devoted Catholic. During the 43 years of our married life, she attended Mass regularly and received the sacrament of Holy Communion almost every Sunday even when we were traveling in Europe, Asia, the Middle East, Africa and Latin America.

During our last visit to London and Paris in 1990, Austine, suffering intense pain, insisted on walking a short distance to church and making her way through packed crowds to get to the alter rail and kneel for Communion. It makes me happy to think of her as a heroine of her religious faith. Now for Joe Kingsbury-Smith's report on why this should be a happier Easter for most Americans regardless of faith or creed.

There was growing confidence among some leading economists this past week that the economy is poised for a moderate recovery before the end of the year. This confidence was reflected on Wall Street where the Dow Jones industrial average established historic new highs three days in a row.

On Tuesday, the Dow surged 36.23 points. On Wednesday, the industrials leaped 47.63 points, and on Thursday, they rose 12.74 points. During this past week, shortened by the Good Friday holiday, the industrial average shot up 111 points.

A.C. Moore, chief strategist at Argus Investment Management in Santa Barbara, Calif., has predicted stocks will climb during the remainder of the year. "We're in a bull phase of the market cycle that presumes earnings are going to increase further," he added.

Roger Brinner, chief economist of DRI/McGraw Hill, a Lexington, Mass., economic consulting firm, told the highly reputable Boston-based Christian Science Monitor that the gross national product (GNP), or total output of goods and services, should be growing at an annual rate of around 3 percent for the rest of the year, with the jobless rate as low as 6.76 percent by election day, down from 7.3 percent in March. Brinner predicted that kind of economic pickup should ensure President Bush's re-election in November. He foresees Bush winning with 52 percent to 53 percent of the vote. Patrick Corcoran of Prudential Economics forecasts a 4.5 percent GNP growth in the second half of this year.

So let us pray that this Easter will mark the beginning of a happier year for all our people.

Group to fling food in name of nutrition

■ The American Cancer Society will sponsor a food fight in hopes of promoting nutritional awareness.

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

Teachers typically discourage food fights.

When the edibles start flying Thursday at the Midland Hilton, it will be an educational adventure — on nutrition.

"It is an American Cancer Society date that has been set aside to promote nutritional awareness," said Susan Courtright, chairman of the public education committee for the society.

To push smart eating for cancer prevention, the organization has organized a "Great American Food Fight," to publicize the affair.

Nine teams, — including folks from the newspaper, television news, radio, the Hilton, and Summer Mummers will be involved. Each team will have four participants.

The three-round, double-elimination tournament will begin with American Cancer Society "Jeopardy!" where each team will answer health-oriented questions. Correct answers buy time — time allowed to throw food at other teams.

"We are probably going to progress from neat food to messy food," Ms. Courtright said.

Round two will consists of seeing how much food — like jello or cottage cheese — can be thrown into a bowl on a team member's head.

The third and final round will be a race to pass food across a stage. Squirt guns filled with milk or the like will be used to distract opponents.

"That's one of the whole intents behind it: having fun by promoting nutrition awareness," Ms. Courtright said.

In addition to the food fight, the American Cancer Society will have a booth set up that will include a cancer-risk computer program test.

Ms. Courtright said people need to be more aware of their food intake as part of staying healthy. Not just what foods to avoid, but what foods may help decrease the Birth mark is 'kiss of angel' for woman

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

It was no curse that an angel "kissed" Tammy Brem 28 years ago and left an indelible birthmark on her face.

The reddish-purple stain became her trademark.

Today, due to laser technology, it is quickly fading.

And she is both glad and sad. While her skin is clearing up, part of her familiar, old self is disappearing.

However, to many people, particularly children, the birthmark called "port-wine stain" may be both physically and psychologically damaging.

The stain, which appears in about three out of 1,000 births, is caused by malformed blood vessels close to the skin's surface.

Lynda Krol was fearful of the emotional damage that the port-wine stain might cause her daughter, Stephanie, now 3½. And she was delighted that medical science had developed the means to rid the marking on the right arm and hand of the child.

But to Ms. Brem, a waitress at Carrows Restaurant, the birthmark, which covers much of the right side of her face, became a familiar and comfortable mark.

Recently, before the port-wine stain started fading following hour-long treatments by Lubbock dermatologist Dr. Michael Lehman, Ms. Brem recalled the candid curiosity of a little girl who "seemed kind of worried" about the birthmark.

Tammy Brem

"Are you OK?" the girl, about 4, asked Ms. Brem at the cafe. "What happened?"

"An angel kissed me," Ms. Brem kindly replied.

"Really?" said the girl, who, Ms. Brem said, "believed me wholeheartedly."

Ms. Brem said that she was "blessed" by not suffering pain and hurt due to the mark.

"It has been kind of like a trademark for me. It has just been there. It has always been me. I have met people that it was a handicap to. I think it will be great to have it gone. But, you know, I will still be me.'

— Tammy Brem

"It has been kind of like a trademark for me," she said. "It has just been there. It has always been me. I have met people that it was a handicap to."

Her parents said "They were glad, if I was glad" that she is getting the birthmark removed.

And Ms. Brem said that she is pleased that the mark is disappearing.

"I think it will be great to have it gone. But, you know, I will still be me."

Her children are delighted that the mark is fading.

"I think it (the stain) bothers them more than it bothers me," Ms. Brem said. "Their friends will say, 'Oh, what happened to your mom?' "

Today, her children are excited about the fading of the mark. "My little girl (Casey, 8) said, 'We are going to be twins.' "

Older treatments to erase the stain with radium, liquid nitrogen and tattoo dye have been far less effective than the new laser technology. And though effective in treating port-wine stains on adults, argon-laser therapy can cause scarring on children.

But the new tunable laser can be precisely adjusted to a hundred millionth of a centimeter to zero in on the malformed blood vessels and dry them up.

"It's risk-free now," Ms. Brem said. "I have good insurance. And if it can be done, why not?"

When her daughter Stephanie was born, Mrs. Krol was fearful that her daughter's birthmark, which soon turned from black to the color of port wine, would result in emotional scarring.

"You fear that somebody is going to tease her," Mrs. Krol said. "You don't want her to be different. You want her to be just like everybody else."

Club aspires to top flapjack fest record

By Darren J. Waggoner
Staff Writer

Members of the Downtown Lions' Club hope to serve pancakes in record-setting fashion Saturday at the club's 36th Annual Pancake Jamboree.

The goal is 10,000 served in 12 hours, and the number has never been attained in 35 previous flapjack fests.

To meet that goal, the 200 or so club members plan to mix up a whopping 1,750 pounds of pancakes, one ton of sausage and at least 10,000 cups of coffee.

According to Lions' Club president, Ike Fitzgerald, catering to 10,000 people is a long-time dream for the club. Last year's Jamboree drew a crowd of 9,600, slightly less than the

Alan Bryant to run for MC Board of Trustees

■ Alan Bryant has formally announced his candidacy for MC trustee.

Staff Report

Alan Bryant has formally announced his candidacy for Place 2 on the Midland College Board of Trustees. He is vying for the position with candidates Joann Foster and Norma Viney Burke in the May 2 election.

"If elected, my goal is to provide the best possible educational opportunities for the people of Midland," Bryant said. "To do this, the board must find out what the community needs and wants from its community college, and work to see that the college fills those needs."

Bryant, 25, has bachelor and masters of science degrees in electrical engineering from the University of Missouri in Rolla (formerly the Missouri School of Mines).

He is employed as a project engineer at Exxon Co., USA in Midland. He is active in the community as an offstage volunteer at Midland Community Theatre and also as a delivery volunteer for Meals on Wheels that delivers lunches weekdays to Midland's homebound.

GARY OTT

Using the middle-man approach to family news

When the telephone rang at my apartment late Tuesday night, the first thought was, "Oh, great, what's wrong at the office now?"

Prepared for the worst, I growled an unfriendly "hello" into the receiver.

A perky voice started chirping at me.

"What the . . .?" I yanked the phone from my ear and stared at it in disbelief. "Who is this person and why is she so happy?"

Ott

It was my sister. "Just wanted to see how you were doing," she said.

"Why?" I thought.

Before you get the wrong idea, allow me to explain.

I have three sisters, one older and two younger. We are a reasonably close family. No one, so far as I know, truly dislikes anyone else. Though we all live in different cities, we get together at least once a year. We exchange gifts at Christmas and usually acknowledge each other's birthdays.

But we don't, as a general rule, spend a great deal of time idly chatting on the telephone.

Let me back up one more time.

I should say I don't spend a great deal of time idly chatting with my sisters. They might talk daily for all I know. But as for me, I use the old "middle-man" theory. Once every two or three weeks I talk to my mother and she, in turn, fills me in on all the latest family happenings.

She explains in great detail everything that has occurred since our last visit — which often ranges from a great-aunt's broken hip to a nephew's good mark on a spelling quiz — and I, of course, respond with great enthusiasm, uttering such classic all-purpose phrases as, "Hmmm, that's too bad," or "How interesting," or "No kidding."

But the point is, these conversations serve as my eyes and ears. Since I now know everything about my sisters' lives, it is unnecessary for me to actually communicate with them via the telephone.

And that's why I was so surprised to hear my sister's perky voice on the phone the other night, especially since she didn't have anything of particular importance to tell me. "Just wanted to say hi," she repeated a couple of times.

When I discuss this lack of telephone communication with friends, they never cease to be amazed.

"That's terrible," they invariably say. "I talk to my brothers and sisters all the time."

"What about?"

"Everyday stuff," they reply. "I just like to know what's going on in their lives."

"Why?"

"Because it's important to keep up with your loved ones."

"Isn't that what mothers are for?"

The friends then shake their heads in disgust and walk away.

This, in turn, makes me feel guilty. So I immediately re-examine my relationship with my sisters. Perhaps these people are right. Maybe I should call occasionally, see how things are going, make small talk, act interested in what their kids are doing.

After all, I do like my sisters.

It's just that when we get older and have our own lives to lead, there is a tendency to gradually lose contact with those we are not around on a regular basis. It doesn't mean we love them any less, we just get absorbed in our own little world.

All that really matters is that next project at work, keeping the boss off our back, impressing the cute little blonde secretary down the hall.

We get tunnel vision, consumed by the day-to-day events that directly impact us. We have specific goals that must be accomplished and, quite naturally, they become the most important facets of our lives. Everything else takes a backseat.

And, unfortunately, that sometimes means we don't get the most up-to-the-minute report on a sister's recent business trip, a nephew's outstanding performance on the basketball court or a brother-in-law's latest financial success.

Those heroic accomplishments just zip on past.

Of course, if you're bound and determined to keep up with that sort of news, call your mom. She'll be more than happy to provide you with all the gory details.

Just be prepared to say, "Well, I'll be darned. That's great." Over and over and over.

Mothers expect that.

LASER: Recent technology is safe for children

(From 1C)

But after Stephanie was born in October 1988, Mrs. Krol said that the baby's pediatrician said the port-wine stain was permanent. "'There's nothing you can do about it.'"

But less than a year later, Mrs. Krol, a landman for a Midland oil company, read an article in "The Wall Street Journal" on the removal of benign birthmarks with the tunable laser. The tunable-dye laser is made by Candela Laser Corp. of Massachusetts.

JoAnn Millwee, Stephanie's grandmother and Mrs. Krol's mother, is pleased with the results of Stephanie's treatment.

"It's so devastating when you have a child" who is perceived as being different, Mrs. Millwee said. "Children can be very unkind if something is wrong with another."

Out of curiosity, Mrs. Mellwee sampled a zap from the tip of the laser's wand — about the size of a fountain pen.

"It feels like the snap of a rubber band," she said.

Several treatments, about six weeks apart, may be required to completely remove Stephanie's stain. Following each treatment, the treated area undergoes a temporary swelling in the healing process.

"Even if you don't have insurance," the grandmother said, "these doctors will work with you" on treatments and paying for them.

Mrs. Millwee, who described Ms. Brem as "such a pretty woman," said that the treatments have "done wonders for her."

The stain may or may not be hereditary.

"The blood is too close to the skin," Mrs. Millwee said. "It happens right at the start when nature puts the baby together. It has nothing to do with anything that happens to the mother. It's just there."

Lehman has been using the laser for three years to treat patients with benign vascular lesions, such as port-wine stains, hemangiomas and spider veins.

Children as "young as 3-days-old" and adults of every age can be treated for removal of the stain.

Laser treatment is more than 90 percent effective in fading the stain, Lehman said.

"Because it has increased selectivity for the blood vessels, it only clears the blood vessels and leaves the normal skin intact," Lehman said. "You don't have any risk of scarring. Now, you can treat children as young as 3 days old before they reach school age and before they begin to suffer any psychological trauma associated with these lesions."

The yellow-light laser is "highly specific" for the blood chemical oxyhemoglobin and attacks it, Lehman said. The laser's heat "literally destroys these blood vessels, which are not necessary for maintenance of life because they are very superficial to the skin surface."

Treatments, which may range from one to 20, hold "no side-effects at all," Lehman said. "It gives them (patients) an improvement both psychologically and cosmetically.

Aide used computer for own records, newspaper says

HOUSTON (AP) — A top aide to State Treasurer Kay Bailey Hutchison has used a state computer to keep fund-raising records and thank-you letters sent to major campaign contributors, The Houston Post reported Saturday.

In a copyright story, the Post reported that Hutchison said she will immediately investigate to see if the state should be reimbursed. She said she was unaware of any abuses.

The aide's computer includes letters from Hutchison to supporters and a memo to her describing nearly $100,000 in raised funds, the newspaper said.

"I am absolutely astounded that there would be anything in a state computer, because I've been so careful," said Hutchison, a Dallas Republican elected treasurer in 1990.

"I don't know why there would be anything (political) on a state computer, period," she said.

David Criss, the treasury's $52,000-a-year director of policy and planning since Sept. 1, told the Post that his use of the computer was "very, very poor judgment."

His computer holds statements on a series of Hutchison receptions and a February estimate that she has raised more than $77,000 through her Treasurer's Trust Fund, a group created in mid-January, which includes supporters who donate at least $1,000.

Criss first denied he kept fund-raising records on his state computer, but he acknowledged the files after the Post showed him a list of files, the newspaper said.

"They're files I've done. Some of them are files I may have done at home," Criss said. "I routinely move things back and forth from one computer to another."

Criss said he put the files on his state computer to give information to Hutchison or as reference material. But he said running files through the state computer was a mistake.

"Perhaps I should be reprimanded."

State to receive rare breed of rhinoceros

AUSTIN (AP) — Ten rare rhinoceroses captured in Africa will arrive in Houston this week and then be transported to sites in Texas and Florida where they will hopefully breed.

"It is a very big event," said Don Farst, director of the Gladys Porter Zoo in Brownsville and a board member of the International Black Rhino Foundation.

If the southern black rhinoceros fails to breed in captivity, Farst said, the endangered species could be wiped out with just one disease or natural catastrophe.

The rhinos have already been decimated by poachers, who kill the animals for their horns.

The horns, each like hundreds of layers of human fingernails, are ground into powder and used as an aphrodisiac, in medical potions, or as inlay to dagger handles.

About 3,500 such rhinos are left in the wild — down from 60,000 two decades ago.

The rhino foundation and the Zimbabwe government hope to relocate 40 of the massive mammals to Australia and North America.

The rhinos bound for Houston includes calves, young adults, and breeding animals under 10 years old. Southern black rhinos can live more than 40 years and weigh 5,000 pounds.

The 10 animals were captured during the past several months and quarantined in Zimbabwe.

After arriving in Houston on Tuesday, the rhinos will be inspected again, cleaned and transported by truck to conservation centers in Texas and Florida. The Texas sites include El Coyote Ranch and the James McAllen Ranch in Hidalgo County and the Fossil Rim Wildlife Center in Glen Rose.

So far, no southern black rhino has been conceived and born in captivity, said Bob Weekley of the wildlife center.

Texas already has 12 rhinos, including some at zoos in Dallas and Fort Worth. The Dallas Zoo received two adults in 1989. A female rhino was born in Dallas in 1990 but from a conception in the wild.

The rhinos eat twigs, leaves and other plants.

record of 9,700.

"We're holding out hope. We think we can reach it because we've come close pretty close the last few years," Fitzgerald said.

In addition, 5,000 pints of milk and 5,000 orange drinks are on the menu.

The event will take place at the Chaparral Center from 7 a.m. until 7 p.m. Organizers are hoping that the move from last year's Dellwood Mall location will help them reach their attendance goal.

The admission price is $2.50, which includes all the pancakes, sausages, orange drink and coffee one can consume.

Admission price for the first Pancake Jamboree in 1956, was fifty cents and the club raised $100. This year, profits from the extravaganza are expected to be considerably higher.

"We would hope we earn more than that figure, at least," Fitzgerald said with a laugh.

In addition to the breakfast food feed, the club will also host the third annual Health Fair at the location. More than 40 booths are expected.

The fair will provide medical information and testing booths around the entrance of the Chaparral Center. Some of the free medical services at the fair include blood pressure checks, cholesterol screenings and eye and dental care checks.

Also, an information booth explaining the Crippled Children's Camp at Kerrville sponsored by the Lions' Club will be set up at the location.

Several openings for the free camp are still available and parents can pick up applications that day. The camp accommodates children with a wide range of illnesses and disabilities, including muscular diseases, blindness and diabetic problems.

City crew junks student's art

FORT WORTH (AP) — What was outdoor art to a university student was trash to a work crew intent on doing its job.

Shinichi Kitahara arranged his work — about 180 little wooden triangles — on a grassy hill, for his senior project at Texas Christian University. But the abstract exhibit was rounded up and stacked beside a trash bin by two workers who wanted to mow the lawn across from the Health Department.

"The crews evidently didn't recognize that as art," said John Dial, supervisor of the Parks and Recreation Department crew. "If it had been one large sculpture, I'm sure that mistake would not have been made."

Kitahara set up the exhibit April 11. It was gone the next day.

So he went on the triangle trail, taking photographs and even making plaster casts of tire marks. The trail led him to a city parks vehicle and a suspicious wooden pile.

Permission had been given for the exhibit, said spokesman Johnny Humphreys. But no one had warned the parks department.

The triangles were back in place Friday.

Atheists march to Capitol

AUSTIN (AP) — About 200 hundred people Saturday marched to the Capitol and rallied in support of atheism while denouncing religion as the cause of many of the world's problems.

Prominent atheist Madalyn Murray O'Hair of Austin told the crowd, "As long as there is religious slavery, mental slavery, we're not going to get anywhere as a nation.

"So, we are calling for the total, complete and absolute elimination of religion in American culture."

Atheists from across the country gathered for the 22nd annual National American Atheists Convention. During the 11-block march to the Capitol, many waved signs that read, "Atheist and Proud," and "In God we Trust. Not." Some dressed in mock religious costumes, with the Crucifix replaced by dollar signs.

Ms. O'Hair, 73, founder of the American Atheists Inc., said this was the first parade by atheists to a state capitol, and that the group plans marches to a different state capitol each year in the future.

After the rally, she predicted that the United States would experience the same upheaval as the former Soviet Union because of this nation's debt and militarism.

"We would not be in difficulty, if we weren't being ruled by those classes of persons who believe in fantasy," she said.

Atheist organizers said the timing of the convention, during the Easter and Passover holidays, was not meant as an affront to those celebrations. But on Saturday, Ms. O'Hair said atheists want to "take back" Easter and make it a celebration of the start of spring.

"How dare they take a seasonal thing, the vernal equinox, and attempt to grab that for an idiotic, really crazy religion," she said.

Speakers called for removal of "under God" from the Pledge of Allegiance, and oath-taking in court proceedings.

They also blasted President Bush for anti-atheist comments, and called on Democratic presidential hopeful, Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton to support removal of a provision in his state's constitution that requires state employees to believe in God.

Ms. O'Hair initiated the lawsuit that removed Bible reading and group prayer from public school. She has an inner-ear problem that causes dizziness, and so uses a cane and sometimes a wheelchair. She was driven to the rally, but told the crowd not to worry about her health. "I'm going to hang in there. I'll be with you for the next 20 years," she said.

Statements were misreported, Perot says

DALLAS (AP) — As billionaire Ross Perot gets nearer to running for president as an independent, he's reportedly trying to get farther away from statements attributed to him.

During the past week, Perot has denied endorsing a state income tax, house-to-house sweeps for drugs and weapons in South Dallas or increased use of wiretapping in drug cases.

Perot says he never made some of those statements, or they were misreported.

Reporters involved have stood behind stories linking Perot to these positions and have said they never heard complaints from the computing tycoon.

Perot says the rehashing results from politics-as-usual and short-sighted reporters.

"Nothing ever comes up that's relevant to the issues," he said. "Pretty soon, people are going to want to know how many mosquitoes I have in my house."

"Sounds like what a politician does when he's under scrutiny ... doesn't it?" Ed Martin, executive director of the Texas Democratic Party, told The Dallas Morning News.

Jim Oberwetter, the Texas chairman of President Bush's reelection, said, "I for one am surprised to see him backing and filling on what I thought had been reports on where he stood on the issues."

An April 1991 story in The Beaumont Enterprise — cited frequently by Republican strategists — reported that Perot endorsed a state income tax,

The newspaper quoted Perot as saying, "We've lived on oil and gas forever. We're running out of oil and gas. It's the real world. We've got to pay our bills."

Perot said he never mentioned a state income tax in his conversation with the Beaumont reporter. "I said we're going to have to pay our bills and I walked away," he said.

David Bauerlein, the reporter, said Perot's comments came in response to a direct question on income taxes.

"The question was, specifically, did he support the idea of a state income tax," Bauerlein said. "Was he in favor of it or not?"

The idea of neighborhood searches was first attached to Perot in 1988 by Laura Miller, then a columnist at the Dallas Times Herald.

Perot said Ms. Miller brought up the idea of door-to-door searches and "I said, 'well, if you ever do anything like that, you'll need a very strong consensus in the community.' Then she ran that I was for it.'"

Ms. Miller, now a columnist for the Dallas Observer, said Perot's proposal was well known to police officers and other reporters. She said that before last week Perot never disputed her account.

"I wrote down everything the man said and I stand by what I wrote," Ms. Miller said. "Four years later, if he has a problem with it, it's news to me."

Peter Elkind, editor of the Observer, said when he asked Perot about the concept of house-to-house searches later in 1988, Perot defended the idea as a way to protect innocent people.

"He defended his position when we had our conversation in 1988," said Elkind, author of a December 1988 profile of Perot for Texas Monthly.

Perot's position on wiretapping is also under dispute. In the early 1980s, when he was heading up the Texas War on Drugs at the request of Gov. Bill Clements, The Dallas Morning News frequently quoted Perot and Clements as endorsing the use of wiretaps in drug cases.

When The Dallas Morning News referred to those statements in a report last week, a Perot spokesperson called and said the Dallas businessman did not recall supporting more wiretaps.

Judge gives tiger back to performer

AMARILLO (AP) — A 100-pound Siberian tiger has been returned to a Las Vegas nightclub performer because there was no case law covering rabies in such large cats.

Amarillo Animal Control agents seized 8-month-old Sheare Kahn on April 9 after a resident reported he had been bitten by the tiger. Law required that the animal be held for observation.

The cat's owner, Kelly Young of Las Vegas, Nev., sued the city to return the tiger, which she described as "playful, sweet and innocent."

Ms. Young also told State District Judge Don Emerson that the cat took bubble baths and sleeps with her.

Ms. Young said she travels throughout the country, entertaining nightclub patrons with her use of "exotic" animals. She said she has worked with a bear, a leopard and snakes.

Ms. Young said she bought the cat for several thousand dollars at a wildlife sanctuary near Orlando, Fla. She has a federal and state exotic animal license and five years' experience in raising and training the animals, she said.

The animals are not dangerous if raised in captivity and not abused, she added.

She was in Amarillo for a one-week engagement at the Wild Horse Saloon when the incident occurred, her lawsuit said.

Ms. Young said one of the hardest things was that she did not where her tiger was located. It's not used to being locked in a cage or around strangers, she said.

Emerson pored over case law during a Friday morning hearing, but was unable to find any reference to tigers.

"That only has to do with dogs and cats," Emerson said in regard to one legal citation.

Finally, after hearing from the complainant, the judge agreed to release the feline if Ms. Young would have it vaccinated for rabies.

The man bitten by the tiger, Eric George Krause, 31, said the feline was "playful" and "mouthed" his leg.

Explosions warn of hazards

TEXAS CITY — If four explosions in two days at Texas City petrochemical plants shook up residents, there were few outward signs of panic or apprehension in this heavily industrialized c[illegible]nity between Housto[illegible] Galveston.

"It's just part of life around h[illegible]e," explained real estate agent Terri Hadley. She seemed more concerned about fluctuating mortgage rates than the prospect of a Southeast Texas inferno. "Live in California and you have earthquakes. You don't get a warning on them either."

The blasts that rocked Texas City on April 5 and 6, leaving two men badly injured, haven't deterred Rebecca Simonson and her husband from buying their first home three-quarters of a mile from the sprawling Amoco refinery where two of the mishaps occurred.

"And it doesn't matter whether you live in front of the refinery or a mile away if there's an explosion," said Simonson, 20. "I'd rather be closer, though. You'd go faster."

However sanguine residents appear, the recent accidents — coupled with the three deaths in Brenham's April 7 pipeline explosion and another two killed Monday in an oilfield facility blast on the Louisiana coast — raise questions about risks surrounding the region's petrochemical facilities and miles of connecting pipe.

The greater Houston area, including Texas City, is capable of producing 45 percent of the nation's basic "building block" materials for the chemical industry. More than 200 major petrochemical processing facilities and refineries line the Texas Gulf Coast, a line of smokestacks along the Houston Ship Channel broken significantly only by the San Jacinto battleground where Sam Houston bested Mexican Gen. Antonio Lopez de Santa Anna to wrest independence for Texas in 1836.

No official findings have been made on the causes of the accidents in Texas City. For that matter, no cause was ever determined for the city's worst industrial accident, the April 16, 1947, blast aboard a fertilizer-laden ship. It set a nearby chemical plant and refinery ablaze. In all, 528 people were killed. Many were dismembered in the explosion or fatally burned, and others drowned in an explosion-triggered tidal swell.

After this month's incidents, firms affected say they haven't been lax on safety. Some representatives, like Amoco's Ray Thompson, maintain that the petrochemical field is safer than the construction and the food-processing industries.

"Considering the high concentration of plants, the millions of hours worked, the (refining) industry does a good job in a very complex, technical, and by definition, somewhat hazardous, environment," Thompson said. "While no accident is tolerable, the record overall is one (of which) we can be increasingly proud."

Nonetheless, Amoco has been buying up land just north of its Texas City refinery to create what company spokesman Tom Mueller said might be a "green-belt" buffer zone between residential areas and the refinery, which can handle 430,000 barrels of crude oil.

Wisconsin residents win cow chip contest

BEAVER, Okla. (AP) — Two Wisconsin residents walked away with the men's and women's titles in the 23rd annual World Champion Cow Chip Throw Saturday.

Starla Hill of Liberal, Kan., and Lisa Pettitt of Prague gave it their best shots, but Kay Hankins, of Prairie Du Sac, Wis., once again captured the women's title.

Ms. Hankins' 96 feet, 10 inches bested Ms. Hill's 61-foot, 5-inch throw and the 72-foot, 4-inch toss of Ms. Pettitt's.

In the men's division, Greg Neumaier of Sauk, Wis., overshot the throws of James Pratt of Beaver and Roy Kygar of Kismet, Kan., landing at 159 feet, 3 inches.

Pratt's toss stopped at 135 feet, 10 inches, more than 10 feet less than Kygar's 149 feet, 11 inches.

"We're going to have to inspect the cow chips of the Wisconsin contestants before they participate again," said Kirk Fisher, executive director of the Beaver County Chamber of Commerce. "It must be something about them that's making them win."

Fisher estimated some 4,000 people attended the event in Beaver, a town of about 1,900.

Availability of Dead Sea Scrolls stimulates biblical research

By John Noble Wilford
N.Y. Times News Service

Now that the complete Dead Sea Scrolls are widely available for study, for the first time since their discovery 45 years ago, a fresh wind is whipping through biblical scholarship, sweeping dust from corners of plodding research and rattling shutters with new findings. There has been no end to controversy.

Scholars long denied access to unpublished scrolls are eagerly poring over the 2,000-year-old documents in search of revelations about the history of Judaism and the origin of Christianity.

Some of these former outsiders are raising a furor with reports of finding firmer evidence of Christian themes, such as messianism and resurrection, running through Judaism at the time of Jesus, possibly even before.

Suddenly faced with competition, the editors who used to exercise tight control over translations and interpretations have invited many more scholars into their once exclusive circle and have established timetables for more prompt publication of the remaining texts.

Photographs of all the documents are already open to scholars at a number of repositories, and the editors plan the first authorized publication of the material later this year.

Approval for the edition of photographs on microfiche, announced last month by the publishing house of E.J. Brill in the Netherlands, amounted to a capitulation by the international team of editors and officials of the Israeli Antiquities Authority, who had long resisted any wide distribution of the unpublished texts.

The move was forced on them last fall after the Huntington Library in San Marino, Calif., opened its complete photographic record of the scrolls to all scholars, breaking the editors' monopoly.

The field of scrolls research has been radically changed, said Dr. Lawrence H. Schiffman, professor of Judaic studies at New York University. "We are truly in a new era," he said.

The scrolls consist of more than 800 manuscripts in Hebrew and Aramaic, written between the second century B.C. and A.D. 68. They were discovered, beginning in 1947, in caves east of Jerusalem near the ruins of Qumran on the Dead Sea.

All of the full-length scrolls have been published, including most of the biblical material. At issue have been hundreds of thousands of fragments from some 600 previously unpublished documents, mainly prayers, commentaries, prophecies and rules of conduct and worship.

The new openness, though, has not brought peace among all scholars. An Israeli professor has obtained an injunction against the distribution of a book of unpublished scrolls by three American editors.

Another book, "The Dead Sea Scrolls Deception" by two British journalists, Michael Baigent and Richard Leigh, has revived the conspiracy theory that the Roman Catholic authorities have suppressed some texts because they could undermine church doctrine.

Dr. James C. VanderKam, a scrolls researcher at Notre Dame University with close ties to the official team of editors, said, "This charge is just plain distortion."

Several researchers have also unsettled many scholars by drawing what the critics call questionable conclusions, based on a quick examination of newly released texts, and circulating them through the press.

The more conservative scholars said that, as they feared, wide access to the documents was attracting shoddy research that could jeopardize years of careful, tedious work.

Writing in a recent issue of the magazine Christian Century, Dr. James H. Charlesworth, professor of New Testament language and literature at the Princeton Theological Seminary in New Jersey, said, "It appears that some researchers, frustrated by decades of being barred from studying the unpublished documents, have rushed forth with conclusions based upon rather hasty reconstructions and interpretations of fragmentary and ambiguous data."

Much of this concern is prompted by the recent statements of scholars who believe that contrary to conventional wisdom, the unpublished scrolls do contain potentially upsetting ideas about early Christianity and pre-rabbinic Judaism.

Two such scholars are Dr. Robert H. Eisenman, professor of Middle East religions at California State University at Long Beach, and Dr. Michael Wise, assistant professor of Near Eastern languages and civilizations at the University of Chicago.

As one of the first outsiders to take advantage of the new access, Eisenman said he had discovered a Hebrew text that mentions the execution of a Messiah-like leader.

He said this showed that the scroll writers had the idea of a Messiah who would suffer and die, which had been thought to be a concept that arose only with Christianity.

The usual image of the Messiah in early Judaism had been of a glorious king who arrives triumphant.

Other scholars dispute Eisenman's translation, saying that parts of the script are virtually indecipherable, that the term "Messiah" and its cognates do not appear in the fragment and that it is not clear who is killed or if this is a description of something that actually happened.

"It's all picky," Eisenman responded in an interview. "They are trying to divert attention and make the public think there's nothing interesting in the remaining scrolls."

Eisenman, however, accepted the criticism of being hasty in publicizing the finding.

"Only by breaking the monopoly could you get away from official interpretations," he said. "Now let a thousand voices sing."

Wise has been publicizing his research because of "moral coercion," he said, against discussing any scrolls material in normal scholarly channels without the approval of the official editors.

Other scholars said there was no such rule, though researchers dealing with ancient documents generally wait to comment until the original scholars have published their assessment.

In a lecture this month, Wise disclosed the translation of another scroll fragment with writing in the same vein, appearing to show what he calls a "proto-Christianity" developing among mainstream Jewish thinkers at the time of Christ.

He said the text contained Messianic interpretations of passages from the Old Testament as well as passages that give new insights into Jewish thinking about resurrection.

In Wise's translation, the text says, "The heavens and the earth shall obey (God's) Messiah," and, "He shall heal the wounded, resurrect the dead, preach glad tiding to the poor."

Wise said in an interview that the text "underlines that early Christianity was a form of Judaism" and also calls into question the prevailing hypothesis that the scrolls were written by members of an ascetic Jewish sect, the Essenes, who lived in a monastery near the caves.

According to the first-century historian Josephus, the Essenes did not believe in resurrection of the body.

Dr. Norman Golb, another scrolls scholar at the University of Chicago, has contended that the scrolls represented a much broader collection of writings from the time, which had been placed in the caves for safe-keeping.

The controversy is central to the question of whether the roots of Christianity were in mainstream Judaism or only in a relatively minor Jewish sect.

The issue also has important theological implications because as some scholars suggest, the close relationship to Judaism could compromise Christain doctrine based on the uniqueness of Jesus and his messianic role.

Scholars praised Wise's linguistic abilities. But after examining the text, Charlesworth said he found parts of the translation "most likely unacceptable."

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

Schedule of MC events pick up after holiday

By H.A. Tuck

The college is closed Monday, but will make up for that with an excess of activities the remainder of the week.

Tuesday events start early, at 7:30 a.m. to be precise. That's when the monthly Minority and Small Business Breakfast meeting starts in the Chaparral Hall at the Student Center. Cost is $5, which may be paid at the door.

Tuck

At 11:45 a.m. Tuesday, Buf Slay of Texas Instruments will talk at the second of four "SIFE Success 2000 Lecture Series 1992."

He'll speak on "What's Quality?" as the entire lecture series is devoted to quality control. Cost of attending the luncheon meeting is $7, which may be paid at the door.

Other luncheons will be on May 19, with Odessa Bank One Vice President Edwin J. Stuart speaking on "Quality and the Current Economy"; and June 16, when a panel will talk about "Tech Prep for the Quality Work Force 2000".

Regular monthly meeting of the Midland College Board of Trustees is set for 4 p.m. Tuesday in the Administration Building.

Students, faculty, and staff can relax Tuesday evening with their own "MC Night at the Midland Angels". Tickets for the game and accompanying free food are available with a MC identification card from the Student Activities office.

The annual Midland College Latin American Student Society (MCLASS) Recognition Banquet takes place at 6:30 p.m. Thursday in the Chaparral Center.

Guest speakers are J. Guadalupe V. "Lupe" Garcia, a Dallas business owner and former president of the the Dallas and United State Hispanic Chambers of Commerce, and his wife, Yolanda Garcia, who owns her own business. Elvia Hernandez, president of the Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce, will serve as master of ceremonies.

Tickets are $7 each and may be purchased from MCLASS members or call 688-5761.

The MC men's tennis team ventures to Roswell Tuesday for a conference match with the New Mexico Military Institute Broncos.

Both of the Chaparral tennis teams have their last home appearances ever on Friday and Saturday at the MC courts. Midland College is hosting this year's Region V Tournament. In women's action, Midland College plays McLennan Community College at 9 a.m. Friday. The Chaparral men open at 2 p.m. against the winner of Thursday matches between Odessa College and Temple Junior College.

Men's finals will be played at 9 a.m. Saturday on the Midland Racquet Club courts. The women's finals start at 1 p.m. Saturday on the Midland College courts.

First and second place teams in both men's and women's competition advance to the national tournaments. The NJCAA women's event is being played at Tyler May 10-15, while the men's tourney is at Corpus Christi May 17-22.

Regional golf action also is in the Permian Basin this week. The two-day event is being played at Odessa Country Club, hosted by Odessa College. Teams will play 36 holes on Thursday and 18 holes on Friday. Top two teams from this tournament qualify for the NJCAA tournament in Scottsdale, Ariz., in June. The Chaparral team, which finished second last year in the national tournament, figures to be among the leaders for the regional crown this year.

Reception for the 1992 Spring Student Art Show takes place on Thursday in the McCormick Gallery, Allison Fine Arts Building, starting at 7 p.m. The show features work in oils, pencil, mixed media, ceramics, and photography. You're invited to attend the reception without charge.

The show may be seen daily through Sunday, May 3. Hours are 1-5 p.m. Sunday, 8 a.m.-10 p.m. Monday through Thursday, 8 a.m.-5 p.m. Friday, and 9 a.m.-5 p.m. Saturday.

If you'd like a treat, and would like to help set a record, plan to attend the annual Midland Downtown Lions Club Pancake Feed at Chaparral Center on Saturday. It starts at 7 a.m. and ends at 7 p.m.

Just $2.50 per person buys you pancakes, sausage, orange juice, and coffee ... plus entertainment and a health fair. This is the first time that the event has been held at Chap Center, where parking will not be a problem. If at least 10,000 of us come, it would set an all-time record.

Friday noon, all the college secretaries will be guests of their supervisors for a luncheon at the Student Center.

A lot of folks will have to change clothes during the afternoon, however, as the college's semi-annual clean-up of its part of Loop 250 is scheduled at 4 p.m. In the clean-up notice, Faculty Council President Kent Moss noted that those who come will be provided with trash bags and "the attractive orange vests from the Highway Department's Spring collection."

Course bulletins listing classes to be offered during the Spring Interim and the two Summer Sessions are available now in the Student Services area of the Student Center. The Spring Interim begins May 11 and ends May 28. Summer I is June 2-July 7 and Summer II is July 9-Aug. 13. Interim and Summer Session classes are four days each week. Visit the Student Services Office or call 685-4501 for more information.

For constant information about MC, use the Cityline number, 560-2400, extension 1835, to access nine lines of Midland College information.

Wilson earns honors as Academic All-American

Staff Report

Sharon Wilson, a Midland College sophomore accounting major, last Monday was honored as one of 20 first team Academic All-Americans by the American Association of Community and Junior Colleges and USA Today newspaper. Mrs. Wilson and the other 19 on the first team each received a $2,500 scholarship grant and trophy. Mrs. Wilson was nominated by the Midland College chapter of Phi Theta Kappa, the national community college scholastic honorary society.

On hand for the presentation in Phoenix, Arizona, was David E. Daniel, Midland College president, and Aline Collins, MC's PTK sponsor. It was an especially nice honor since Dr. Daniel was presiding as Chair of the AACJC, where the awards were presented.

Mrs. Wilson is to be one of the graduates in the 1992 MC Commencement on May 8, and will be making remarks at the ceremony.

Last year, one of the AACJC-USA Today third team Academic All-Americans was from Midland College. That person was Mary Michelle Brown.

MCI offers M.B.A program

NEW YORK (NYT) — On Mondays and Wednesdays, just after the workday ends, 35 managers at MCI Communications Corp. leave their offices, walk down the plush halls of the MCI office building and converge upon one small classroom where they find 12 tables, two blackboards and a Fordham professor.

'MCI and Fordham's Graduate School of Business Administration are running a fully accredited M.B.A. program, but with a twist.

The program has been customized to meet MCI's needs by incorporating telecommunications and other issues that concern MCI into Fordham's standard M.B.A. curriculum.

Some MCI managers, like Walter Recher, senior manager of applications development, said the convenient location and class schedule as well as the program's practical orientation prompted them to try for an M.B.A.

WEST TEXAS IN BRIEF

■ Volunteers bag trash

Midland volunteers managed to amass 16 tons of trash during the recent Glad-Bag-A-Thon.

Forty-four groups picked up roadway litter along the railroad right-of-way, but members of the Midland Boys & Girls Club outdid the competition by collecting the most trash. The club received the top prize of $100 cash for most litter collected. Glad Wrap and Bag provided the prize money.

Pack llamas hauled trash to the Union Pacific locomotive. The cleanup included a recycling event and Midlanders dropped off 4,000 pounds of paper, cardboard, plastic and aluminum in just three hours.

The event also featured local notables acting as "celebrity" llama wranglers and the cast of Summer Mummers filming its movieola.

The litter — all 33,730 pounds of it — was gathered by the following groups: Midland Self Advocates, Bethel Spanish Assembly of God, Cub Scout Pack 155, three groups of Campfire Girls, two groups from the Salvation Army, Brownie Girl Scout Troop 85, Texaco CO_2 Group, American Legion Auxiliary, Unit 19 and Sal, KGEE Radio, and the Permian Basin Roadrunner's Club.

Other groups participating were Physicians & Surgeons Hospital, Cowden Park Neighborhood Association, KODM Radio, Goddard Junior High School, Midland Restitution Center, Good Shepard Lutheran Church Youth Group, Boy Scout Troop 225, KTPX-TV Channel 9, Big Tootsie's Tennis Club, Exxon, Glenwood Hospital, Union Pacific Railroad, Keep Midland Beautiful Board and Recycling Committee, and Jacqueline Selbe's third graders from Parker Elementary School.

Other participants included Texaco Volunteers, Midland Suburban Lions Club, Wolf Morrison for the Protection of Endangered Species, American Society of Civil Engineers, Midland Downtown Kiwanis, Chevron Employees, Sons of Confederate Veterans, Taco Villa, Midland High School DECA, Midland Masonic Lodge, Electrical Maintenance and Construction, University of Texas of the Permian Basin Accounting Association, Western Temporary Services, and numerous individuals.

■ OC hosts jazz concert

ODESSA — An opportunity to take a sentimental journey back to the big band era will be given to the audience at the Odessa College Jazz Band concert at 8 p.m. Friday. The performance, entitled "Big Band at the Playhouse," will be held at the Permian Playhouse, 310 W. 42nd St.

A few familiar tunes the jazz band will play while performing a variety of big band music are "Send In The Clowns," "Night And Day," and "Jazz Man."

Guest vocalists will be Dana Ritter, singing "The Man Who Got Away," and Patsy Allen, singing "Cheatin' Heart."

The concert is one of the college's special activities scheduled for April in conjunction with Community College Month. Admission is $2 at the door or free with an OC identification card.

For more information contact Lonnie Clark, director of instrumental music, at 335-6623.

■ Skin cancer clinic set

Texas Tech Health Sciences Center in Odessa will offer a free skin cancer screening clinic 9 a.m.-noon May 2. Five area dermatologists will examine patients for skin cancer.

The clinic, located at 419 W. 4th Street, will be open to persons of any age and transportation may be provided by the American Cancer Society for those who need it. The clinic is being offered in conjunction with the American Academy of Dermatology's National Skin Cancer Campaign.

For more information call 332-0169.

■ 'Miracle Days' slated

Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. has declared Monday through May 3 as "Miracle Days." The days will be set aside for fundraising activities to benefit the Children's Miracle Network Telethon (CMNT).

The telethon airs annually the weekend following Memorial Day.

Wal-Mart and Sam's are corporate sponsors. Local Wal-Mart and Sam's stores will host fundraising activities at their stores. Funds raised will be matched by the Wal-Mart Foundation. All proceeds will remain in the Permian Basin.

In 1991, CMNT raised more than $100 million dollars for 160 CMN member hospitals for children throughout the 42-state trade territory.

Locally the event will be televised by KTPX from Permian Mall in Odessa.

■ Church donation made

ODESSA — The First United Methodist Church of Midland recently donated $2,195 from its foundation to the Permian Basin Chapter of the Alzheimer's Association.

The donation is being used to purchase a copying machine, according to Charlotte Lewis, executive director of the local Alzheimer's association.

"We need the machine to publish our newsletter and for our daily needs to provide educational materials to caregivers," Ms. Lewis said.

The local Alzheimer's association is located at 1603 N. Grandview. For more information call 363-9960.

■ Faulk conference set

Whether the context is the Pentagon's decision to restrict coverage of the Persian Gulf War or a reporter's efforts to investigate the personal life of a political candidate — questions of freedom of the press, the protections of the First Amendment, and the public's right to know are often at issue.

These topics will be the focus of the John Henry Faulk Conference on the First Amendment April 29 at the University of Au in.

Featured speakers and panelists will include Pulitzer Prize-winning journalist and correspondent Peter Arnett, former legislator and Democratic vice president nominee Frances Tarlton Farenthold, Fort Worth Star-Telegram columnist Molly Ivins, Pulitzer Prize-winning combat photographer and Emmy-nominated film producer David Kennerly and Pulitzer Prize-winning novelist James Michener.

Other panelists will include university professors, political newspaper reporters and television news anchors.

Discussion topics will include "Do Americans support First Amendment Freedoms for the Press?" "Should the Press be Free to Report on the Private Lives of Public Figures?" and "Should the Press be free of Governmental Restraints While Reporting on American Wars?"

Conference hours are 9:30 a.m.-4:45 p.m. in the university's Iden Payne Theatre. Microphones will be placed in the theater aisles and the audience will be encouraged to ask questions of the panelists and offer comments.

The conference is being offered in honor of the late John Henry Faulk who was committed to educating the public about the Bill of Rights, particularly the First Amendment.

Co-sponsors of the conference are the university's College of Communication and the School of Law.

The event is open to the public and no admission will be charged. Seating is limited, however. For more information call (512) 495-4515.

Museum plays racial peacemaker

Only a few months after tensions between blacks and Jews in Brooklyn's Crown Heights neighborhood exploded in violence, the Jewish Museum started a program in Manhattan to help students from predominantly black and Jewish schools bridge the gap that has often separated the two groups in cities nationwide.

Museum and school officials say they think the program can help dispel fears and stereotypes that Jews and blacks hold about each other.

She is a member of Peer Assistance Leadership, the National Honor Society, Business Professionals of America and secretary of Home Economics Cooperative Education. She has been active in the LHS Chorale and was a junior varsity cheerleader. She will pursue a degree in special education from Angelo State University.

Guest to hold booksigning

Staff Report

Dorothy Perkins and Billie Ross will host a get-acquainted reception and booksigning for author Dean Guest at Pages and Prints Book Store, 40 Plaza Center, Saturday from 2-4 p.m.

Guest

Mrs. Guest and her husband, John, moved to Midland when he became Church Business Administrator at the First United Methodist Church.

Together they have co-pastored a church in Arkansas and were co-administrators/pastors of a Christian boarding school for Navajo children. They have served as missionaries in Africa and Haiti and have visited and served in 32 countries. Their son, Mark, worked with them as a minister/missionary and their daughter, Kelly, is employed with the Billy Graham association in Minneapolis.

Mrs. Guest will be autographing her latest book, "Search for the Ark of the Covenant," a story about two young Jewish men and an American girl searching for the Ark, missing since 586 BC. The story takes the reader through the modern and ancient history of Israel along with a wedding and Bar Mitzvah.

In addition to authoring more than half a dozen books, Mrs. Guest is also a publisher and has promoted the works of several other Christian authors.

Coaches report alcohol abuse

N.Y. Times News Service

Alcohol abuse by student athletes is a major problem in American high schools, according to a recently released nationwide survey of high school coaches. Of the 1,200 coaches polled by the Gallup Youth Survey last year, 79 percent said that alcohol abuse was a "very big" or "fairly big" problem among student athletes in their schools; 69 percent of the coaches said they personally knew students who were abusing alcohol.

Boston University to open an unusual high school

Private preparatoy school will allow students to enter university as sophomore

BOSTON (NYT) — Boston University plans to open a four-year private preparatory school on its campus where students will finish their freshman year of college while still in high school.

While several universities have affiliated high schools, the new Boston University Academy will be unique in requiring its students to take more than a year's worth of college-level courses, said John Silber, the university's president, who announced plans for the school last week.

The academy will admit 60 9th- and 10th-graders for September of 1993. By 1995, enrollment is expected to be 135, with further growth planned, university officials said.

Admission will be based on an entrance examination, a secondary school aptitude test and academic records and recommendations.

Tuition for the academy, a day school, will be $12,500 a year, but scholarships will be available, university officials said.

Academy graduates can enter college as sophomores instead of freshman because their graduation requirements will earn them 48 college credits. To earn those credits, juniors and seniors at the academy will spend part of their school day taking courses at the university alongside college students.

Many high schools, public and private, offer college classes for credit, but few make them necessary for graduation.

"What makes this unique is that all students will be required to take these advanced courses," said Paula Brownlee, president of the Association of American Colleges.

Silber, a frequent critic of the nation's secondary school educational system, said, "Boston University Academy is hoping to provide the intellectual challenge students are missing today.

"Boredom is the most serious problem we face in schools. The children of America are just as intelligent today as they were at the turn of the century. But the nation's schools are badly in need of reform."

Boston University has some experience with secondary schools. In 1989, the school board in Chelsea, Mass., voted to have Boston University run its schools, making the college the first in the country to be given responsibility for managing a public school system.

Like other universities, Boston faces a shrinking applicant pool and the potential for declining enrollment, but Silber dismissed suggestions that the academy would serve as a "feeder system" to the university.

Nonetheless, officials at the university said the academy could eventually funnel as many as 120 students into its sophomore class every year.

Academy graduates would automatically be enrolled as sophomores at Boston University if they chose to continue their education there, but they could also apply their credits to other colleges, university officials said.

Students at the academy will also take two years of Greek or Latin, as well as four years of English, math and science, leaving little time for elective courses, which Silber suggested were wasteful.

They will be taught by full-time teachers and graduate teaching assistants in classrooms with no more than 15 students, officials said.

The academy's accelerated program also offers a financial incentive, said Peter Schweich, the university's vice president for publications and chairman of the academy's advisory committee.

"Parents will not only be saving a year of college tuition, they will be saving the difference between BU's tuition and the academy's," Schweich said.

'Boredom is the most serious problem we face in schools. The children of America are just as intelligent today as they were at the turn of the century. But the nation's schools are badly in need of reform.'

Heartland raises crop of mathematical whizzes

By Laura Mansnerus
N.Y. Times News Service

There are states not often heard from and not anywhere near Silicon Valley, Bell Labs or Route 128. But where do students do best on standardized math tests? In North Dakota, Montana, Iowa, Nebraska, Minnesota and Wisconsin.

It is in this belt that America's student performance comes closest to that of the rest of the industrialized world, at least as measured by the National Assessment of Educational Progress, a federal government project.

Last year, having tested a random sample in each participating state for the first time in any subject, the project published comparisons of mathematics proficiency among public school eighth-graders in 40 states.

Ever since, these six northern and rural states clustered at the top of the nation's map have been asked — repeatedly — what they are doing right.

Officials in the high-scoring states agree they are not achieving by spending. And though they speak highly of their teachers, their explanations for the math success, explanations supported by supplementary data students gave testers, have little to do with what schools can accomplish.

Wayne G. Sanstead, superintendent of public instruction in North Dakota, the highest-scoring state, said many envious inquiries from other states noted that his state ranks 49th in teacher salaries. "Yep," he confirmed, "we're 49th."

"The work ethic has to be at the front," he said. "When you're asked to do a job out here, and that includes going to school, you figure you have to get out there and do it.

"You just wouldn't think of leaving school here," he continued, "and if you did you'd have to explain it to a lot of people. It's parental involvement, but it's community involvement, too. The community feels they own all their youngsters. If you're standing on a street corner in any town in North Dakota, people are going to come up and want to know what you're doing there."

ALSO, HE ADDED, "It's no picnic standing out on a street corner here in the winter. You'd rather be in a building."

Nancy Keenan, Montana's superintendent of schools, struck a similar note. Montana students read a lot, she said, partly "because there's nothing else to do."

She noted, too, that except on Indian reservations, where family groups tend to be more mobile, people do not move or change schools much in Montana. That makes it easier for teachers to keep track of each student, relentlessly.

"I have classrooms with seven kids," Ms. Keenan said. "Those kids get individual attention."

And why do Iowa pupils do well on tests? "I have six reasons," said William L. Lepley, the state director of education, allowing that he is asked this question "well, no more than once a day."

First, he said, is the population's homogeneity. "It's easier to educate and to allocate resources when you have homogeneity both in sizes of schools and types of students," he said.

The Educational Testing Service, which wrote the National Assessment's math test and a report on it titled "The State of Mathematics Achievement," looked at some of the same factors by questioning students and teachers.

South Bronx school has beat

By Dennis Hevesi
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — Jermaine Dawson's attitude was, in his own words, "bad, terrible, horrible," when he first entered the hulking gray stone schoolhouse on Franklin Avenue in the South Bronx last fall.

"I didn't like nobody," said Jermaine, 13, who admits he was headed in the wrong direction.

"A criminal," he said, assessing himself a bit harshly when asked what he might have become had his mother not enrolled him at St. Augustine's School of the Arts.

"Fights, picking on girls," Jermaine said, running down his rather limited rap sheet.

But Jermaine liked drumming — "not the noise, but the beat," he said.

And if anything can be said of St. Augustine's School of the Arts it is that there is a beat to the place. On almost any given day, the rhythms of the bands — jazz, salsa, rock — or the fuller tones of the orchestra and chorale bounce off its 95-year-old walls.

"There's a difference between the din of disorder and the noise of progress," said Thomas J. Pilecki, the school's principal, conceding with a smile, "I don't think I made that up."

The din has fallen harmoniously on Jermaine Dawson, and on dozens of other youngsters from the tough streets of the Bronx. For beyond the melodies of the music program and the spectrum of arts classes, there is a sort of "tough love" that strikes a chord for children in need of structure.

"Do your work, period," science teacher Yvonne Rehm told one of her students recently. "When you make a commitment, you stick to it. That's what life is like."

JERMAINE SAID HE had "tried like having an attitude" during his first days at St. Augustine's. "But in this school, they'll be on your case."

In that firm, caring hand, youngsters often find renewed confidence.

And then there are the drums — as well as pianos, saxophones, flutes, guitars, paints, ceramics, sculpture classes, architecture classes, choreography exercises, readings from Shakespeare, all for children from kindergarten through eighth grade.

But St. Augustine's is a school of the arts, not for the arts — a Roman Catholic school foundering with only 180 students in 1985, when it restructured its curriculum and began attracting neighborhood children in droves.

Today there are 410 students, whose parents, many of them poor, manage to pay tuition of $1,500.

"We are not trying to create artists, we are trying to educate the total child," said Pilecki. "The arts are a way to a kid's heart, soul and mind, and the skills they learn in the arts are transferred and assist the children in their overall learning."

And often, he added, success in the arts "spills over" into academic areas.

In Joseph Vorgity's visual arts class one recent morning, students were sketching the front of their school, from memory.

"I was just telling them," Vorgity said, "that an architect is someone who must strike a balance between math and science as well as visual design."

Lawmaker's life not so wonderful

By Clifford Krauss
N.Y. Times News Service

MONTEREY, Calif. — Panetta has long been admired as a champion of fishermen and environmentalists against the oil companies wishing to drill offshore. He is also chairman of an important congressional committee, by all accounts a serious legislator and, at least by Washington power standards, an abstemious fellow.

Never mind. His constituents want to talk about something else.

"What I want to know," said Jeffrey Bartholomew, a 39-year-old bellhop at a Monterey wharfside hotel, "is how many checks has Leon bounced lately."

For Panetta and his colleagues in Congress, each trip home these days is a trial on charges of arrogance and sloth. And especially when it comes to the perquisites of office, the presumption of innocence does not seem to count.

"You get the feeling someone is robbing your integrity for no reason," said Panetta, a 53-year-old Democrat who prides himself on the simple ways he inherited from his Italian immigrant parents.

"And it hurts. I didn't come to Washington to get free office furniture, or discounted shoeshines and haircuts. It offends me when this kind of thing comes up."

And so it is that Panetta returned home for the congressional recess last weekend mindful of things he has taken for granted in his 16 years on Congress: the $129,500-a-year congressional salary (he voted for the most recent pay raise), the potted office plants supplied by the United States Botanical Garden, the congressional photography staff, the House gym, the fawning aides, the foreign trips, the three-day workweeks, the black-tie banquets.

BUT FOR EVERY privilege, there is a drawback or indignity. Panetta's existence is marked by regular absences from his wife and three sons. Meals often consist of a roll or a bunch of grapes on the run.

There is perpetual jet lag from a weekly transcontinental flight home, plus the expense of maintaining two households — one of which is a two-bedroom Capitol Hill townhouse he shares with three other lawmakers.

Panetta operates with unusual frugality, using his frequent-flyer mileage to finance much of his official travel and buying some of his own office furniture. He elicited snickering from some colleagues when he returned to the Treasury this year's 4.2 percent cost-of-living raise.

Still, in the current political climate, Panetta finds that he has some explaining to do. He says that as a result of sloppy bookkeeping he overdrew his account at the House bank twice over a 39-month period, but he adds that the bank, which has been shut down, owes him $2,500 for debiting his account twice for the same check last year.

He has admitted he was once listed as delinquent in paying $5,000 to the House restaurant because Greenpeace, the environmental group he was dining with, was slow to pay its bill.

When asked, Panetta also acknowledges traveling on a handful of junkets paid for by private foundations and philanthropic groups to Israel, Japan and Italy in his 16 years in Congress. Several times, he took his wife, Sylvia.

Nobody expects Panetta to have trouble winning re-election this year — his 16th District is solidly Democratic — but he finds himself in the uncomfortable position of forever having to explain his conduct.

LAST SATURDAY, DENNIS Law, a 38-year-old Navy computer programmer, visited Panetta in his office here to, as he said, "speak my mind."

"You should dump that Mercedes-Benz and buy an American car!" Law said, raising his voice.

Panetta giggled and then explained that he did not own a Mercedes. In fact, he said, he owns an Oldsmobile, which he leaves with his wife in Carmel Valley.

Panetta's workweek typically begins at Dulles International Airport outside Washington, where he lands after a long working weekend in California.

Last week, as is often the case, he landed at 6 a.m. Tuesday, having caught a couple of hours of sleep on the red-eye flight from San Francisco. "Welcome to the morning shift," he said in mock ebullience to the Budget Committee aide who picked him up.

Dropped at his townhouse, the congressman napped for an hour before walking to work.

When he arrived at his cramped office in the Cannon building, his press secretary, Barry Toiv, was waiting.

Simply 'Marbelous'

By Sonja Merrick

Light, open, spacious and free-flowing, this home encompasses all the features, amenities and gracious touches that speak of the good life.

Enter through double-wide leaded glass doors and let your eyes feast on a sweeping expanse of gleaming, salmon-hued marble. Straight ahead find a breathtaking formal living area, lushly carpeted to coordinate with the marble foyer and hallway floors. Walls are painted a soft ecru, trims are a crisp white. A wall of windows looks out to a quarry-tiled patio, which is separated from a pretty back yard by a row of shrubbery. Other exquisite touches include painted crown molding, a double-sided fireplace with marble hearth (nestled beside it is a wet bar) and a sea of built in bookcases.

To the left of the entry, separated by columns, is a gracious formal dining area. A large window and pan ceiling extend its height, increase the sense of space.

Continue walking to the left along the marble hallway and find a marvelously large kitchen and breakfast area. The kitchen boasts a center island with range and Jennaire grill, double oven, light oak stained cabinets and an extensive breakfast area that separates this room from the informal dining area.

The breakfast room is huge. On one wall brick rises from floor to ceiling to house the other side of the formal living area's see-through fireplace. Another wall boasts a huge expanse of glassed-in shelves and cabinets that serve as an enormous china cabinet. French doors open to a private patio.

A small hall, flanked by a large utility room and the other side of the wet bar, leads to a dramatic informal living area. Ceilings are vaulted and beamed. One wall is entirely brick and houses a large fireplace. An expanse of glass represents another wall -- French doors lead to the main patio. A delightfully decorated half bath is situated at the end of the hall.

A right turn from the entry leads to two large bedrooms connected by a sizeable bath. Farther back -- to the right and back of the formal living area -- is a huge sequestered master bedroom. Large enough to accommodate a sitting area, the room opens to the patio.

A "his and her" master bath lies to one side -- one that boasts two of everything, including skylights and large walk-in closets. "Hers" has a large, oval marble tub. "His" has an oversize shower.

Another sizeable bedroom, with its own full bath, is situated nearby.

This four-bedroom, four-bath home is simply splendid. The exterior is delightful with its pitched roof, flower beds and mature trees.

Other amenities include a two-car garage with workshop, sprinkler system and large parking pad.

The home is being offered by Don Harvey, Realtors for $174,500.

Kerri Muldrow recently completes ERA Sales System in-depth training

Kerri Muldrow, a sales associate for ERA John Muldrow, Realtors has successfully completed the ERA Sales System. It is an in-depth training program designed to help Electronic Realty Associated, Inc. (ERA) sales associates enhance their selling skills and other professional abilities.

"A home is typically the largest investment made by a family or individual," Ms. Muldrow said. "That's why buyers and sellers need help from a real estate professional who is knowledgeable and informed on all aspects of real estate.

"The ERA Sales System is a key part of the 'ERA, 1st IN SERVICE COMMITMENT'," she said. "It means I receive the tools and training I need be effective in serving the real estate needs of my customers and clients."

Kerri Muldrow

According to John Muldrow, member broker for ERA John Muldrow, Realtors, Kerri has also been trained to help consumers benefit from a variety of ERA Real Estate products and services, including:

■ ERA Home Warranty Plans that protect against unexpected mechanical repair expense. "These plans also offer another tremendous saving advantage to sellers," Ms. Muldrow said. "Our research shows that ERA Home Warranties help homes sell an average of 38 days faster."

■ ERA Seller Security Plan, a unique guaranteed sale and equity advance program.

■ ERA Electronic Integrated System, a central computer-managed network connecting all ERA member offices to a National Multiple Listing Service that allows sales associates to search photo listings by city, price and other features, and allowing customers to view color pictures of those listings in the member broker's office.

ERA John Muldrow, Realtors, founded in 1991, has six sales associates serving in the Midland area. The company is a member of ERA — the nation's second largest real estate franchise network.

How to enhance a home's curb appeal

Make a lasting first impression about your home with a healthy lawn and beautiful garden! When your home is on the market, landscaping (or the lack of it) can have a powerful impact on how prospective buyers view the "total package" of your home. Merchandising your lawn and garden enhances your home's curb appeal — and can increase its value and improve its marketability.

Scraggly shrubs and bushes and bare patches of grass detract from your home no matter how nicely decorated the interior. Simple, inexpensive planting projects are often all it takes to perk up a landscape.

If you feel your lawn is not well-landscaped, hire a professional landscape designer to prepare a customized plan that you can easily implement before putting your home on the market. Or, you might think about offering the buyer a gift certificate for professional landscaping.

Flowers for impact

Colorful flowers in your front yard also enhance your home's curb appeal. If you're short on garden space, brighten your exterior with pots of blooming plants or flowering annuals near your front entrance or along your drive, walkway or deck. In addition, a window box full of flowers is an inexpensive way to add an accent of color to your home's exterior.

Mow your lawn

A healthy lawn is an asset — for more lushness be sure to water, mow and fertilize it regularly. Remove dandelions and other weeds that are visible and now whenever your grass demands it. A good rule of thumb is to never cut off more than one-third of the blade at one time. For example, if the recommended height of cut is 2 inches, now when your grass is 3 inches high. If the height of cut is 1 inch, now when your grass is just under 2 inches. Keep crisp edging lines between your lawn, drive and walkways and be sure to pull grass from between the cracks.

Foliage adds color

Trees, shrubs or hedges add a finishing touch to your landscape with color and detail. Plants come in several different shades of green — add impact by combining different types. Keeping the foliage trimmed and pruned will also contribute to the overall well-maintained look of your home.

An investment that pays

Lawn and garden enhancements are worth the money because a well-kept exterior invites inspection of the interior. However, when merchandising your lawn and garden, be careful not to over-invest . . .and be sure to follow the trends in your neighborhood.

WHAT! NEWSPAPER ROUTES?

That's right...one of the best part-time income supplements around. Doesn't conflict with your 'day job.' Doesn't require day care. And it's dependable income.

Fact: 95% of our Distributors NOW are ADULTS supplementing their income with Route Distributorships!

Fact: Our Distributors make from $400-$800 monthly AFTER expenses, some even more!

The catch? You've gotta be able to handle early mornings and weekends! And when you take a few days off, you'll need to find a substitute for yourself.

So...are you serious about MOONLIGHTING, or what? If you are, and you have dependable transportation and can put up a $100 deposit...

Call 688-2700 and start making that extra car payment today!

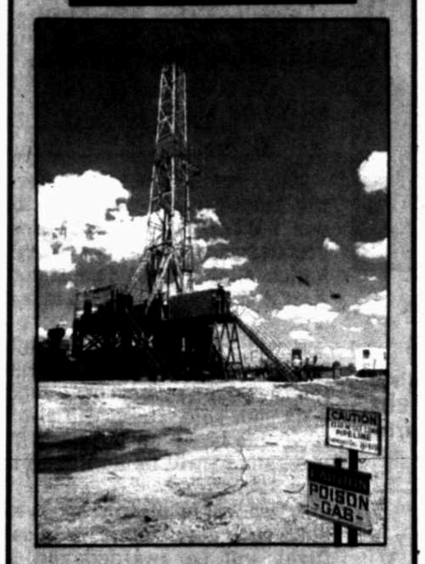
BRIEFING



Rigs decrease

An FWA rig drilling near Midland. The number of working rigs in the U.S. dropped 10 for the week of April 10, down from 658 the week before. The rig count in the Permian Basin accounted for 40 percent of the decrease, down four rigs from 96 the week before. The rig count in the Permian Basin a year ago was 111.

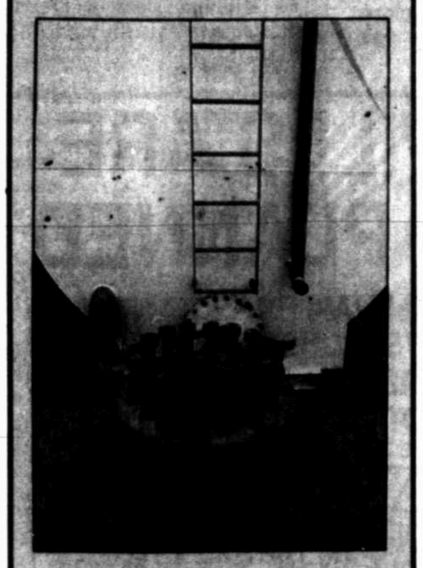
100 years old

Axelson Inc. is celebrating 100 years in the oil business.

In 1898, Axelson introduced the first metal-to-metal subsurface oilwell pump with a plunger and barrel seat for producing California's heavy crude. Several years later they introduced interchangable parts and the rest is history. The pumps became the standard for the industry literally. When the API was founded in 1920, it accepted in its entirety Axelson dimensions and specifications.

The other big contribution was a stronger sucker rod, made possible by making the root of the threads the same diameter as the sucker rod itself.

Axelson was founded in 1892 by brothers Gus and Charles Axelson, when they opened the Acme Iron Works for $1,200. The multi-million dollar company now operates worldwide.



Weekly prices

Soft oil prices continue to keep equipment (above) stacked. Oil prices, however, bounded back over the $20 mark, Thursday, strengthened by a buying spree prior to Easter. Prices had weakened mid-week due to an abundance of supplies and concern that Iraq could soon re-enter the crude oil market. Spot prices averaged between $20 and $19 for the week.

DiBona to visit Midland

■ API President Charles J. DiBona headlines the upcoming PBPA Energy Appreciation Week, set to begin April 26.

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

Charles J. Dibona, president of the American Petroleum Institute, will headline the upcoming Permian Basin Petroleum Association's Energy Appreciation week.

DiBona

DiBona will speak at the Energy Appreciation Week luncheon April 29 at the Holiday Inn Country Villa convention center.

The former Rhodes scholar and Navy man joined API, the nation's largest petroleum association, in 1974 as executive vice president and chief operating officer. He previously served as a special consultant to President Richard M. Nixon and was deputy director of the White House's Energy Policy office in 1973.

He was named president and chief executive officer in 1979, just as the Iranian Revolution sent shockwaves through the U.S. economy, with prices surging to the $40 level.

DiBona has also seen the industry suffer through the price collapse of 1986 and a decade-long slump that has seen the domestic industry lose over 300,000 jobs between 1982 and 1991 and drilling activity slump to record lows.

API has both national and international interests and its membership includes over 200 corporations and 5,000 individuals representing all segments of the industry.

In addition to serving as a spokesman for the industry to the public and public officals, the API performs studies that analyze the likely impact of proposed lawa and regulations affecting energy supplies and industry operations and reports its findings to federal and state

The Rotaflex 1200, seen here being made ready for shipment is the largest long stroke pumping unit made. The giant pumping unit will mean more jobs for Odessa and could impact Permian Basin production.

PRODUCTION

Largest pump is unveiled

■ World's largest pumping unit could have a profound impact both on Odessa and producers throughout the oilpatch.

By John Paul Pitts
Business/Oil Editor

ODESSA — Tallest, longest, strongest: Those are three words that best describe the largest pumping unit in the world, which debuted in Odessa last week.

Unveiled last week amid much speech-making, Highland Pump's Rotaflex Model 1200 stands over three stories tall, and with a peak polish load of 60,000 pounds and a 306 inch stroke is the largest capacity sucker rod oilfield pumping unit ever built.

The pumping unit which formerly held the "world's largest" title was a 2560 air-balanced unit with a 47,000 polish load capacity and a 240 inch stroke.

Warren Bradshaw, vice president of Highland Pump, said acceptance of the big units, which can produce 758 barrels of fluid per day from 10,615 feet with a 2¼ inch rod pump, would likely result in additional manufacturing at Highland's Odessa facility.

"Our initial production capacity for the Model 1200 is already sold," said Bradshaw."

Larry Simmers, senior vice president for production, said the company is investing $3 million in plant and equipment expansion and would hire an an additional 63 workers to manufacture the Rotaflex, which is marketed by the company's Sargent/Rotaflex divison.

The first Model 1200 is scheduled to be shipped to Coho Resources in

Coiled tubing drilling has oil industry watching

■ Cudd Pressure Control has received approximately 3,500 inquiries about the system it is developing that uses coiled tubing in the drilling of horizontal wells.

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

Horizontal drilling technology continues to advance and the Austin Chalk in south Texas is being used as a laboratory for different methods.

One new method that is showing great promise and has caught the attention of both majors and independents is the use of coiled tubing in drilling horizontal wells.

Cudd Pressure Control has been involved in the drilling with coiled tubing of three wells in the Chalk, one for Oryx Energy and one for Chevron. The third was not completed because of hole problems, according to Mike Smith, director of corporate research for Cudd.

To date, Cudd's system has gotten good reviews from the American Petroleum Institute and Society of Petroleum Engineers, and Smith said the company has received 3,500 inquiries about the process from various operators and energy organizations.

"We're kind of like the Wright brothers," he said in a phone interview from his office in Corpus Christi. "We've started this process and we've applied for a patent."

Smith said it remains to be seen if the coiled tubing method is more economical than using conventional methods, but he already sees the new process as meeting a big demand in two areas.

The first is in drilling wells that are underbalanced — that have pressure on the well.

The second best potential for the coiled tubing method is in reentering existing wells and turning them into horizontal wells or in deepening the wellbore vertically.

Where other wells are drilling by rotating the drill string, in Cudd's method, "we can't rotate the coiled tubing and positive displacement motors. We feel it's a great feat that we're able to steer 8,000 ft. of tubing in a horizontal section without rotating the pipe," Smith said.

"We think that, in the future, once we've worked the bugs out of the system, we'll be competitive on reentries," he said.

Another major market Smith sees for the method is in the utility market, running underground cables. "We can drill long stretches under high rise office buildings without tearing up the streets and ground, and we can leave the coiled tubing as casing in the hole. We can even drill with the cable already in place. We're working on that market now."

Still, Smith said, "the only way to know how big the market is is to know this method is more economical than conventional markets."

The coiled tubing drilling unit requires less room and thus has less impact on the environment. And the system has greater well control capabilities with personnel that are better trained to handle control situations.

This means, Smith said, operator liability can be reduced.

Cudd has spent $1.7 million on researching and developing the system and is about to complete the first coiled tubing drilling unit in its manufacturing facilities in Fort Worth. When the unit is put to use, most likely in May, it will be put to work drilling four wells for Chevron, Smith said. And "if it's as successful as I think it's going to be, before we finish drilling those wells I'll order another unit. We have quite a bit of work lined up." He went to predict that demand could require Cudd to build 60 coiled tubing drilling units in the next four to five years.

Pickens, partner plan puts push to CNG

Pitts

The natural gas vehicle industry has long been touted but slow in coming. But now T. Boone Pickens has come up with a bold financing plan that could push the CNG (compressed natural gas) industry over the hump and open a vast new market for natural gas producers in the Permian Basin.

"As a natural gas producer, I have been trapped in a very narrow corridor, where the markets do not grow fast enough to increase price. But now I want to break out," Pickens explained to me in an interview prior to his speech at the Alternative Fuels Symposium and Fair in Austin this week.

He explained: "I have been put into a corridor where I must sell a premium, clean-burning, 130 octane fuel (natural gas) only to industrial, residential and cogeneration customers. At the same time, I see that dirty-burning, 90 octane gasoline has a virtual monopoly on the transportation market. Now, I want in the transportation market where natural gas, which does not have to pass through a refinery, can command an $8 per Mcf price when sold on the same basis as $1 per gallon gasoline."

Pickens laments the fact that natural gas gets no credit for being a clean-burning, high octane fuel that does not need to be refined.

To get a fair share of the market Pickens wants to get on with the show, to move from the demonstration phase and convert 2 million vehicles in Texas to run on natural gas by 1995.

"This would create a new market for 500 billion cubic feet of natural gas and would create thousands of new jobs in the state," he said. "According to the Comptrollers office, every one trillion cubic feet of natural gas consumed creates up to 100,000 jobs and adds $3 billion in personal income."

To convert two million vehicles by 1995, Pickens says his company, Mesa Inc. will convert private and government fleets and install all necessasry refueling stations at no cost. To finance the conversion cost, Mesa will then sell natural gas to the fleets at the gasoline or diesel equivalent cost, until the surcharge pays off conversion costs. Then the surcharge will be dropped and the fleets will be able to buy natural gas at a price substantially lower than the price of diesel or gasoline.

It is a plan that appears to have a lot of merit. One of the major road blocks to getting more CNG vehicles on the road has been financing, both for conversions and refueling stations. At the same time, if natural gas is sold at the equivalent of $1 per gallon, it translates to about $8 per Mcf.

"What producer wouldn't want to sell his gas at $8 per Mcf," asks Pickens. "And what fleet operator wouldn't want to buy 130 octane fuel as opposed to 90 octane?"

Pickens says that since he first made his proposal to the City of Phoenix he has received inquiries from five other major U.S. cities, wanting to know if they could get the same deal.

"It's time to move out of the demonstration phase and into the implementation phase of CNG. We can no longer go on converting 10 cars here and 20 vehicles there," said Pickens. "It's time for Texas to consider a partnership with private industry that will take natural gas vehicles to the next level. It's time to accelerate our expectations and accelerate our progress."

PITTS: GNG plan unveiled

(From 1E)

He noted that such a move would make Texas the recognized leader in transportation and an economic leader well into the 21st century, but it would come at a cost. Pickens estimates that it will cost about $5 billion to convert two million vehicles and another $2 billion to build an infrastructure and said the state and private industry should split the cost.

The benefit to the state: "Just the conversion process would create a $1.5 billion payroll, and the sale of equipment would result in $455 million in sales tax revenue. Also, natural gas demand would increase 16 percent, resulting in approximately $180 million a year in increased severance tax."

With all the economic and health benefits added together, Pickens says the payback for the State of Texas portion of the plan would be about two years.

He said it would also be good for the nation. "About half our trade deficit goes for foreign oil, and transportation accounts for two-thirds of our total energy use. We could cut $44 billion from our trade deficit if we could switch to CNG," he said.

"If we are right on this one," Pickens said. "Our economy wins...our environment wins and the consumer wins."

He also noted that the increased natural gas market would be good for the producer, and said it was time something good happened for oil and gas producers. "In the 40 years that I have been in this business, I can count the good years on both hands."

TUBING: Is high tech

The Hague, Netherlands, have said this is the first new drilling process in 60 years, and Smith said officials with major producers around the world see a lot of potential in the application.

In a gas well recompletion in Pecos County Chevron was recently able to run coiled tubing to a record depth of 20,500 feet and measurably lower mechanical failure risk and costs. Other applications are bound to follow.

Still, "nobody really understands its full potential because it's so new. It'll be another three to five years before we realize the full potential of this process."

Once the potential of the process becomes apparent, Smith expects competition from other countries around the world.

Petroleum Museum sets Fuqua lecture

Well-known radio personality Tumbleweed Smith has been named lecturer for the Fuqua Distinguished Lecture Series, and will bring to the podium an amazing cast of Texas characters encountered on his journeys around the state.

Smith's program, "Sounds of Texas," is heard on radio stations throughout the state and features interviews with individuals from all walks of life.

His blending of interviews with commentary touches upon patriotism, humor, history and human warmth and has been described as, "pure Texas folk lore at its best."

The series will be presented at the Petroleum Museum, April 28 at 7:30 p.m. Tickets may be purchased by calling the Museum at 683-4403.

The Fuqua lecture series is made possible by a grant awarded by the Sid Richardson Foundation of Fort Worth, and is given in honor of the late H.B. "Babe" Fuqua, who enjoyed a distinguished career in oil and banking, and gave generously of himself to civic and charitable affairs.

Last year's Fuqua speaker was Jeana Yeager, who with partner Dick Rutan, flew non-stop around the world in December of 1986.

Energy Appreciation Week begins April 26 with visits to the church of choice. A golf tournament is scheduled for April 27. A symposium on cultural and natural resource preservation will be held April 28 and again April 30, providing insights on such subjects as rare and endangered plants and animals, wetlands, archaeological resources and the various alternatives available to the Permian Basin industry to preserve and protect such resources while maintaining domestic energy production capability.

The week ends on May 2 with the PBPA Blpw Out, to be held at the American Legion Post 19 grounds. The Blow Out includes a cook-off using brisket, fajitas and chili, with trophies for the first three places in all three categories and in showmanship. Other events set for the Blow Out include a variety of entertainment and the World's Ugliest Roughneck Contest.

Highland says the long, slow strokes of the large pumps and their ability to lift great volumes of fluid make them especially adaptable for deep and troublesome wells.

By reducing rod stress and limiting the number of strokes per barrel pumped, Highland claims that the larger pumps reduce downhole wear on pumps, rod strings and tubing. Additionally, a long-life heavy duty belt which links the powertrain to the rod-string, acts as a built-in shock absorber each time the rod string is reversed.

Occidental sheds Hammer legacy

N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — Occidental Petroleum Corp. casts a much smaller global shadow these days.

The energy and chemical conglomerate, once known for its far-flung and diverse operations, now ranks 43 on the latest Fortune 500 list of the largest U.S. industrial companies, a drop of 27 places from a year ago.

It is a fall engineered by chairman Ray R. Irani and one that he promised the company would take.

Irani likes the slimmed-down version of Occidental. "We think we were in the right position and now we've improved our financial structure so we think the future is very bright," the 57-year-old Irani said in an interview recently at the company's offices in the Westwood area of Los Angeles.

Irani, who took over Occidental's reins after former chairman Armand Hammer's death in December 1990, moved quickly to reshape the company and to enhance shareholder value. The speed with which Oxy has shed assets and the prices it is getting has earned Irani high marks from analysts and investors alike.

"I could care less (about) their shadow. My only interest is their earnings per share ... I still own stock in Oxy and I consider it to be more than a casual amount," said Robert Peterson, chairman of IBP Inc.

As part of its overhaul, Occidental sold its 51 percent stake in the Dakota, Neb.-based IBP, the nation's largest beef and pork producer.

One subtle but telling change is Occidental's emphasis on improving investor relations, which in the past were often rocky. The company began publishing a supplement to its annual reports and said it welcomed suggestions about how it could be improved to "better serve the investment community."

Irani simply says he felt the company "needed to do a face lift" when it came to getting along with shareholders.

Subtlety is a chief characteristic of Irani's management style, one that contrasts sharply from that of Hammer, the world-renowned industrialist. The difference can be seen in any number of ways.

Hammer committed the company to spend $85 million for a museum to house his extensive art collection, creating a considerable outcry among shareholders. Irani, by contrast, doesn't care to make over Occidental into his image.

"I want Occidental to be a professional company known for its good deeds and business accomplishments and not identified by who is chairman or president," said Irani, who joined Occidental in 1983 as chairman of its chemical unit.

Other trappings of Hammer's reign also have disappeared.

Hammer waged a years-long fight with the city of Los Angeles over permission to drill for oil in the Los Angeles area of Pacific Palisades. Six months after Hammer died, Irani gave up the fight.

"We had that long battle with Pacific Palisades which Dr. Hammer took personally. I felt if the people in Los Angeles (did not) wish us to explore, well, that was the end of it," Irani said.

In 1985, Hammer, through his close relationship with Chinese leader Deng Xiaoping, acquired a 25 percent interest in a Chinese coal mine in 1985. The deal was not profitable for Occidental, and when Irani came on, the company simply walked away.

Occidental also has sold North Sea oil fields for $1.35 billion, a natural gas liquids business for $700 million, a phosphate and phosphoric acid business for about $100 million, and a half-interest in a natural gas terminal for $38 million.

These deals in part enabled the company to reduce debt by $2.8 billion from 1990 levels, boost income by $350 million, improve cash flow by $800 million.

During 1991 a leaner Occidental earned $460 million, compared with a loss of $1.7 billion a year ago. Sales were $10.1 billion, down from $11.5 billion.

Irani said that he would like to trim debt by an additional $500 million over the next 18 months. To that end, management is sticking to Occidental's core businesses — worldwide oil and gas exploration, natural gas transmission and chemical production.

IBP's Peterson, for one, says that Occidental has made all the right moves. "I'm one who believes they were wise to go back to the things they know best how to do," he said. "There is no question in my mind Occidental would have been in awful shape today" had they not done them, he added.

But not all of Irani's moves have been so subtle. He eliminated 2,300 jobs at the corporate level, more than twice the number that was originally announced.

API group schedules tourney

■ The Permian Basin chapter of the American Petroleum Insitute has scheduled its annual "Sour Crude" golf tournment, held to raise funds for the chapter's scholarship program.

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

The Permian Basin chapter of the American Petroleum Institute will hold its annual Sour Crude golf tournament May 8-9 at Ratliff Ranch Golf Links. The shotgun start is at 7:30 a.m. and 2 p.m. each day.

It will be a four man scramble format, with flighting done after the first day's score. There will be a six shot rule. There will also be 10 flights based on 10 teams. The tournament will be limited to the first 120 teams.

Prizes will be offered on several holes each day. First place in each flight will be awarded and the awards banquet May 9 will feature a variety of door prizes.

Entry fee is $300 per team, which includes golf cart, green fee, shirt, lunch, refreshments and the awards dinner.

The tournament got its start apparently in the 1960s, according to API member Jack Fritts. It serves as a fundraiser for the chapter's scholarships. Presently, the chapter is giving out six $1,000 scholarships, $500 per semester, Fritts said.

Scholarship recipients are not necessarily limited to oil and gas-related majors. Fritts said the chapter may consider awarding scholarships to students who may not be studying a petroleum-related field but plan to return and offer their services to the Permian Basin.

Scholarships are also not limited to any particular schools. Fritts said qualifications for the scholarship was that the recipient carry a 2.5 point average out of 4.0; presently the recipients have been carrying a 4.5 out of 5.0 average. "We're proud of the caliber of students we're attracting," he said.

The scholarships are drawn off the interest from a $50,000 endowment established during the golf tournament's early days.

Fritts said the chapter hopes to attract 400 golfers, half of which will tee off in the morning, the other half in the afternoon. Anyone interested in signing up for the tournament can call 368-1869 or 368-GOLF.

The Midland Desk & Derrick Club is assisting with the tournament.

Energy producers given chance at tax change

By Evan Ramstad
AP Business Writer

DALLAS (AP) — Oil and gas producers have another chance to press Congress for changes of tax rules that inhibit domestic exploration, the president of the Independent Petroleum Association of America said.

Bode

The opportunity arose when House leaders recently assigned the tax-writing Ways and Means Committee to help create the energy bill, IPAA president Denise Bode said at the Dallas Petroleum Club.

"It's a long shot," Ms. Bode said. "Trying to get tax legislation included in a bill that is not a tax bill rarely happens."

The IPAA and other energy groups have lobbied for modifications to the alternative minimum tax, which requires producers to add back some business cost deductions such as for depletion of wells. The tax has forced some producers out of the business and deterred others from entering it.

Ms. Bode said modifying the alternative minimum tax "would be the biggest thing they could do to change the direction of the energy policy."

The Senate passed an energy bill in February that does not modify the tax.

However, the tax bill passed by Congress last month made changes sought by the energy industry. President Bush vetoed the bill for other reasons. But he recently expressed support for tax law changes that remove drilling disincentives.

"We've moved mountains on this issue in a very short period of time," Ms. Bode said.

The alternative minimum tax was created about 30 years ago to ensure that people who make a lot of money pay some federal tax despite having a lot of legitimate deductions. Energy producers blame modifications in 1986 for some of the current trouble in their industry.

The low prices of the past year, some at record levels for natural gas, have spurred a new shakeout of the domestic energy business. Many producers have cut back U.S. exploration dramatically and instead invested heavily overseas.

The House Energy and Commerce Committee moved the bill out last month. But eight other committees, including Ways and Means, are expected to put their hands on it before it reaches the floor.

Several energy groups, including IPAA and the American Petroleum Institute, object to the current bill because it requires companies to contribute 1 percent of production, or an in-kind cash contribution, to build the nation's emergency reserve.

"At a time when oil production is at its lowest level and prices are at the lowest level, people are not too enthused about giving it away to the government," Bode said.

Energy Secretary James Watkins, speaking in Toronto earlier this week, said he would ask Bush to veto an energy bill requiring donations to the Strategic Petroleum Reserve.

The government now buys oil to put in the reserve, which is stored in old salt mines in Texas and Louisiana. The reserve now contains 568.5 million barrels but leaders want it increased to 1 billion barrels.

Arco slashes capital spending plans

N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — Atlantic Richfield Co. said this week it had slashed its capital spending plans for the next five years by 20 percent and that it expected to post sharply lower earnings for the first quarter because of lower oil and gas prices and difficulties in its chemical business.

Speaking to securities analysts in New York, Lodwrick M. Cook, ARCO's chairman and chief executive, said earnings for the first quarter would be "disappointing and below the fourth quarter of 1991."

ARCO earned $268 million, or $1.67 a share, in the fourth quarter of last year and $351 million, or $2.17 a share, in the first quarter of 1991. First-quarter 1992 results are to be released later this month; analysts were already anticipating a decline.

ARCO said capital spending would fall to $14.7 billion over the next five years from a projected $18.6 billion. The reductions will be spread across ARCO's operations, with the only increase being budgeted for the international division, ARCO said.

"We see a changed environment and are directing our spending plans accordingly," Cook said.

Cook said ARCO, which is based in Los Angeles, was not changing its basic business strategies. But he said that both ARCO's energy and chemicals divisions were facing cyclical difficulties.

"Important industry variables, such as crude oil and domestic natural gas prices, are lower than the 1991 average," he said.

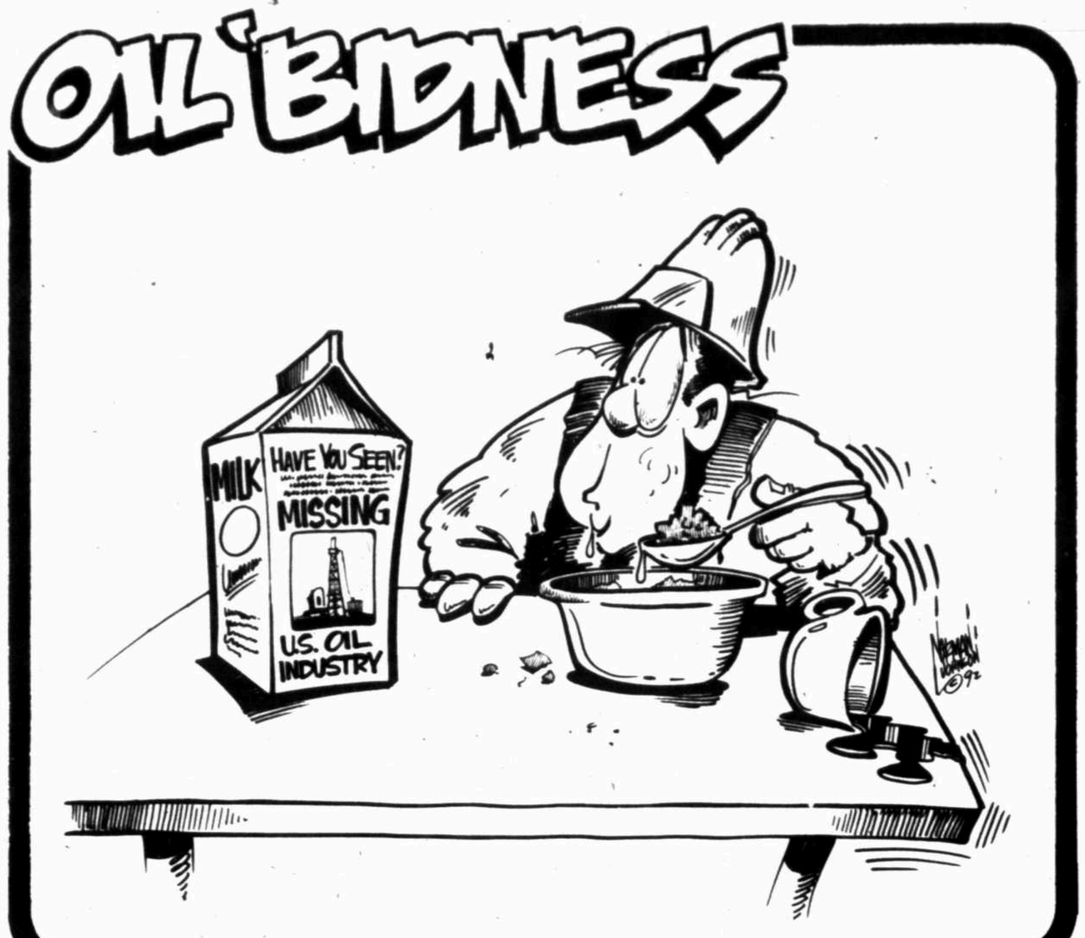
Hanover finals stock deal

Staff Report

Hanover Compressor Co. has closed a $15 million private placement of common stock by the company.

The company is owned by a group of investors, including GKH Investments L.P., and key members of management. GKH Investments is an investment partnership whose general partners are investment entities controlled by Chicago-based investors Jay and Tom Pritzker; Corpus Christi-based investor Mel Klein and Dan Lufkin, co-founder of the New York investment firm Donaldson, Lufkin & Jenrette.

"With the completion of this equity offering, the company has achieved its near-term goals of deleveraging and significant strengthening of its balance sheet," said Michael A. O'Connor, chairman of the board of Hanover. "Net proceeds of the transaction have been used to reduce our long-term debt by 18 percent, improve our capital structure and create an $8.5 million cash reserve to fund various corporate programs such as compressor fleet expansion."



ACTIVITY HIGHLIGHTS

Borden yields Ellenburger discovery

Staff Report

An Ellenburger discovery has been recorded in Borden County, two miles southwest of 7,900 ft. Strawn production in the Denny field, eight miles northeast of Gail.

PATOIL CORP., Midland, completed the No. 1 Rickner to pump 35 barrels of 40.6 gravity crude and 75 barrels of water. The well produced from perforations 8,450 to 8,455 ft., which had been acidized with 250 gallons of 15 percent HCL.

Permitted as an 8,700 ft. wildcat, the well was drilled to 8,469 ft., where 5 1/2 inch casing was set.

Formation tops, on ground elevation of 2,505 ft., include the San Andres at 2,710 ft., Spraberry at 5,100, Wolfcamp at 7,180, Strawn at 7,834, Mississippian at 8,246 and Ellenburger at 8,406 ft.

Location is 2,173 ft. from south and 660 ft. from west lines of Section 359, Block 97, H&TC survey, Abst. 1115.

Borden strike

Patoil Corp. has completed an Ellenburger discovery in Borden County, southwest of the Denny field.

Dickens discovery gets western offset

HOLLIS R. SULLIVAN, Wichita Falls, has completed a 1/8-mile west offset to the discovery well of the Getaway Canyon (Tannehill) field of Dickens County, 12 miles east of Spur.

On potential test, the No. 12-2 Pitchfork-Toreador "D" pumped 137 barrels of 38 gravity crude and 33 Mcfd from perforations 4,155 to 4,168 ft. The interval was acidized with 300 gallons of acid and fractured with 10,000 lbs. sand. Gas-oil ratio is 250:1.

Drilled to 4,460 ft., the well was plugged back to 4,383 ft. where 4 1/2 inch casing was set.

The well topped the Base Stockwether at 4,120 ft. and Tannehill at 4,155 ft. on ground elevation of 2,093 ft.

Location is 450 ft. from south and 100 ft. from west lines of Section 12, Block AB, R.M. Thomson survey, Abst. 547.

Sullivan completed the discovery well of the field, the No. 12-1 Pitchfork Toreador in December 1991 to flow 135 barrels of crude and 32 Mcfd from perforations 4,134 to 4,140 ft.

Fourth well added to Crockett field

The Block 38 (Ellenburger) field of Crockett County has gained its fourth producer as RK PETROLEUM CORP. completes activity in the area.

RK completed the No. 1 University "A" to flow 148 barrels of 45 gravity crude on a 10/64 inch choke. The well flowed from open hole interval 8,221 to 8,262 ft.

Total depth was 8,262 ft. with 5 1/2 inch casing set at 8,201 ft.

Location is 1,980 ft. from north and 1,500 ft. from east lines of Section 14, Block 38, ULS survey, 30 miles northeast of Ozona.

Yoakum field gets 12-barrel producer

The Barbara field of Yoakum County has gained a new San Andres producer, two miles northeast of Devonian producer in the Bronco Southwest field, 16 miles southwest of Plains.

MINERAL DEVELOPMENT CO., Dallas — amended from J.C. Williamson — completed the No. 1 Cox Estate to pump 12 barrels of 31.8 gravity crude and 28 barrels of water.The well produced from perforations 5,276 to 5,368 ft., which had been acidized with 1,000 gallons of 15 percent NeFe acid and fractured with 14,000 gallons of gel and 30,000 lbs. sand.

Permitted as a 12,500 ft. wildcat, the well was drilled to 12,361 ft. and plugged back to 5,980 ft. with 5 1/2 inch casing set at 12,331 ft.

Formation tops, on ground elevation of 3,776 ft., include the San Andres at 4,620 ft., Canyon at 10,630, Strawn at 11,010, Lower Mississippian at 11,580, Woodford at 12,210 and Devonian at 12,331 ft.

Location is 1,787 ft. from north and 1,980 ft. from east lines of Section 523, Block D, J.H. Gibson survey, Abst. 483.

TAB to conduct ADA workshop in Odessa

The Texas Association of Business will host a workshop on the Americans with Disabilities Act and the Civil Rights Act of 1991 on April 30 at the Holiday Inn Centre in Odessa.

The workshop will begin with registration at 8 a.m. and conclude at 4 p.m.

Fees of $125 per TAB member or $100 each for three or more from the same company include a resource manual, lunch and refreshments. Registration for non-TAB members is $175, $150 for three or more from the same company.

Registration can be made by calling 512/477-6721.

Property owner wins suit against Williams Pipeline

MITCHELL, S.D. (AP) — A jury here awarded a Sioux Falls property owner $400,000 in damages in his lawsuit against Williams Pipe Line Co. over a 1986 spill.

Bruce Wohlwend was asking for $650,000, saying the 20,000-gallon spill at Williams' Sioux Falls tank farm reduced the value of 4½ acres he owns across the street from the farm.

The spill caused a Sioux Falls elementary school to close and spawned other lawsuits. Wohlwend's suit is the first that was not settled out of court.

Wohlwend's lawyer, Scott Hoy of Sioux Falls, said the Davison County circuit court jury should have awarded Wohlwend more money.

"I regret more than anything that there isn't a message going to Tulsa, Okla., that South Dakota doesn't allow these kinds of environmental ignorances to go on," Hoy said.

Williams' lawyer, Mark Blongewicz of Tulsa, said, "Obviously we don't agree necessarily. Whether we'll appeal is yet to be decided."

Blongewicz said the spill did not affect Wohlwend's land.

Hoy told the jury in closing arguments that if the spill had not happened, Wohlwend's land would be worth $732,000, but now is valued at $84,000.

Wohlwend and his family live in the house on the land. He rents a part of the lot for a mobile-home sales business and a warehouse that he built.

The jury deliberated for eight hours before reaching a verdict.

Hoy tried to show Wohlwend's land was damaged by showing the court a letter from Bay West Geologists, the hydrologist Williams hired after the leak was discovered.

"Bay West found in 1987 there were soluble hydrocarbons — gasoline — in Bruce Wohlwend's well," Hoy said.

Blongewicz disputed the hydrologist's findings.

"There isn't now and there never was any contamination on Bruce Wohlwend's property," he said. "There's also never going to be any contamination in the future."

Panhandle explorer closely watched

By Kerry Campbell

PERRYTON, Texas (AP) — Many eyes in the Texas petroleum industry are on an oil derrick on a small patch of land in Ochiltree County.

Oil men and landowners alike are holding their breath with anticipation as Norcen Explorer Inc. drills the first horizontal well in the Marmaton formation.

The Marmaton has been compared to the Austin chalk of the Pearsall field in south Texas, which has provided many barrels of oil through horizontal drilling.

More than 50,000 acres of mineral leases atop the formation were snatched up from June to October 1991 by several large oil companies, including Oryx Energy Co., the pioneer of horizontal drilling.

Oryx, Norcen, Murfield Resources Co. and Mesa Inc. all purchased mineral leases on the formation.

Norcen began drilling its exploratory well last Thursday about four miles northeast of Perryton.

Richard Smith, land operations manager for Norcen, said it will be 30 to 45 days until anyone sees results from the horizontal well.

This is the first horizontal well drilled in the Marmaton formation, so even guessing the outcome is taboo.

"We really don't know what will happen," Smith said. "It is hard to tell until we drill the first one. We know the Marmaton is similar to the Austin chalk, where a lot of horizontal drilling has taken place. That is basically all we have to go on at this point."

Whether or not Norcen will drill any more of the 21,000 acres of mineral leases it owns is totally dependent upon the outcome of this exploratory well.

"We are doing one well to start with," Smith said. "We will have to drill this well, test it and evaluate it before we can make a firm decision on whether we will drill another one or how many more we will drill this year — or ever again for that matter."

Norcen's well will go about 7,500 feet vertically and then cut across about 2,000 feet horizontally, he said.

The exploratory well is set in an area where the Marmaton saw much production during the late 1950s and early 1960s, Smith said.

"From what I understand — and I am not a geologist — we don't want to drill too close to a well that has produced a huge amount of reserves because it would seem logical it would be harder for us to recover anything additional.

"The object is to stay in the area where the production was, but not get too close to an area that has been severely drained already."

Geologist Tom Cambridge, who is also the president of Parallel Petroleum Corp., said depletion is definitely a potential problem in the Marmaton formation.

Vertical wells were drilled into the formation during the late 1950s and 1960s. According to Cambridge, Ochiltree County wells had produced 19 million barrels of oil as of Jan. 1, 1969, and Beaver County, Okla., wells had produced 1.25 million barrels of oil through the same period.

Since a horizontal well goes down and then turns horizontally to cross several different fractures, drilling problems could occur if some of the fractures are depleted, he said.

Scott Gordon, a drilling engineer for Unit Drilling Co., which is drilling the well for Norcen, said he is very much aware of the difficulties with horizontal drilling.

"I think one concern we all share is lost circulation and stable formations," Gordon said. "Those would be the two most critical."

Because of depletion within fractures, Cambridge said, different pressures could be in different fractures, causing a loss of circulation in one zone and too much in another.

Smith said Norcen does not know what to expect from this exploratory well.

"Until we drill the well and test it, we will just have to wait and see," he said.

It appears the other oil companies that leased mineral rights on the Marmaton also are waiting to see what happens with Norcen's well.

Jay Rosser, a spokesman for Mesa Inc., said the company had "no definitive plans at this point" for the 5,000 acres in leases it possesses in the formation.

Smith said Norcen is currently negotiating with Murfield Resources Co. to combine the two companies' acreage, which together would total more than 32,000 acres.

Robert Hammond, a spokesman for Oryx, said the company had no immediate plans to drill a horizontal well on its 16,000 acres.

"We are in a wait-and-see mode," Hammond said.

Observers say Oryx must see some potential in the Marmaton since it announced shortly before purchasing its leases in Ochiltree and Beaver counties that it would be downsizing and selling almost all of its domestic on-shore operations.

"We are shifting away from the onshore U.S. basins, which represented the vast majority of our reserves three years ago," Oryx chairman Robert P. Hauptfuhrer told the Houston Post on Oct. 3.

ABB Vetco wellheads placed off New Zealand

Staff Report

HOUSTON — New technology by ABB Vetco Gray is a major part of a $1 billion project currently underway in the Tasman Sea off the coast of New Zealand.

Eight multibowl wellheads will be placed on the Maui B platform as Shell Todd Oil Services Ltd. develops an extension of the Maui gas field.

The wellheads will be installed through the blowout preventer and incorporate recent but field-proven technology, including the MS-1 Seal, the NT-2 Connector and the well established Grayloc Seal Ring, developed by ABB Vetco Gray.

The MS-1 Seal provides a pre-loaded, bi-directional metal-to-metal seal between casing hangers and the wellhead, and has the ability to seal on rough casing.

Rather than flanges for either the top or the bottom multibowl connection, the NT-2 Connector is used. The NT-2 Connector uses locking dogs which contact matching circumferential grooves for virtually 360 degrees and secure the wellhead to the 20 inch casing.

The Grayloc Seal Ring, used in conjection with the NT-2 Connector at the top connection, creates a pre-loaded metal-to-metal seal between the wellhead and the tubing bonnet.

The wellheads, designed to meet specifications to suit the demands of the gas/condensate field, were manufactured in ABB Vetco Gray's Singapore facility.

Oklahoma tax on oil drop to 13-year low

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — The slump in petroleum prices has hit Oklahoma where it hurts the worst, in the state's pocketbook.

State officials said that severance taxes on oil and gas production are expected to drop to the lowest level in 13 years this fiscal year and not be much better next year.

The Office of State Finance said income from the tax has declined dramatically from the high of $757.2 million recorded at the height of the oil boom in 1982.

But officials said the impact of lower gross production taxes on Oklahoma's General Fund will be less than in some previous years, however. That's because of a 1990 law that placed a $190 million cap on gross production tax that is apportioned to the General Fund.

That law was the outgrowth of the budget crunch that resulted from the oil bust after the boom in the early 1980s.

A mini-boom because of the Persian Gulf War raised the collections from this source in fiscal 1991 to the highest level in five years. The war's end helped bring on the current slump.

The Office of State Finance said Oklahoma collected $411.8 million in gross receipts from severance taxes on oil and natural gas in fiscal 1991. That was the highest since the $558 million collected in fiscal 1986.

After the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait, oil prices rose to as high as $34 a barrel in October 1990. The prices settled for a yearlong average of $23.46 per barrel for fiscal 1991, which ended June 30 of that year.

For budget purposes, the Office of State Finance originally estimated an average weighted price of $18 per barrel for fiscal 1992. This was raised to $19.75 per barrel in fiscal 1992 and $20.75 in fiscal 1993.

Officials said natural gas prices averaged $1.49 per thousand cubic feet, MCF, in fiscal 1991. That compared with $1.56 the previous year.

The Office of State Finance's latest forecast is for an average of $1.35 in fiscal 1992 and $1.40 in fiscal 1993.

A report said Oklahoma wells produced 111.1 million barrels of crude oil in fiscal 1991. The Office of State Finance forecast a drop of 7 percent a year for the next two years. That would be 103.2 million barrels in fiscal 1992 and 96 million barrels in fiscal 1993.

If the forecast comes true, that would be the lowest production in Oklahoma since 1919.

Senators defend gas limits

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Sens. David Boren and Don Nickles have written other members of the Senate to try to stave off congressional action against a new Oklahoma law limiting natural gas production.

The Oklahoma law "is not intended to establish cartels, restrict production below market demand or increase prices for natural gas," wrote Boren, D-Okla., and Nickles, R-Okla.

Interfering with the law "is not necessary or appropriate," the senators' letter says.

The state law curtailing natural gas production at periods of low demand went into effect April 1.

Several senators from natural-gas-consuming states have asked federal officials to see whether the moves toward more production limits violate anti-trust laws.

Sen. Phil Sharp, D-Ind., and chairman of the energy and power subcommittee of the House Committee on Energy and Commerce, has warned of an emerging natural gas OPEC.

But Boren and Nickles wrote that the new limits still are "in excess of market demand to ensure that ample Oklahoma gas is available."

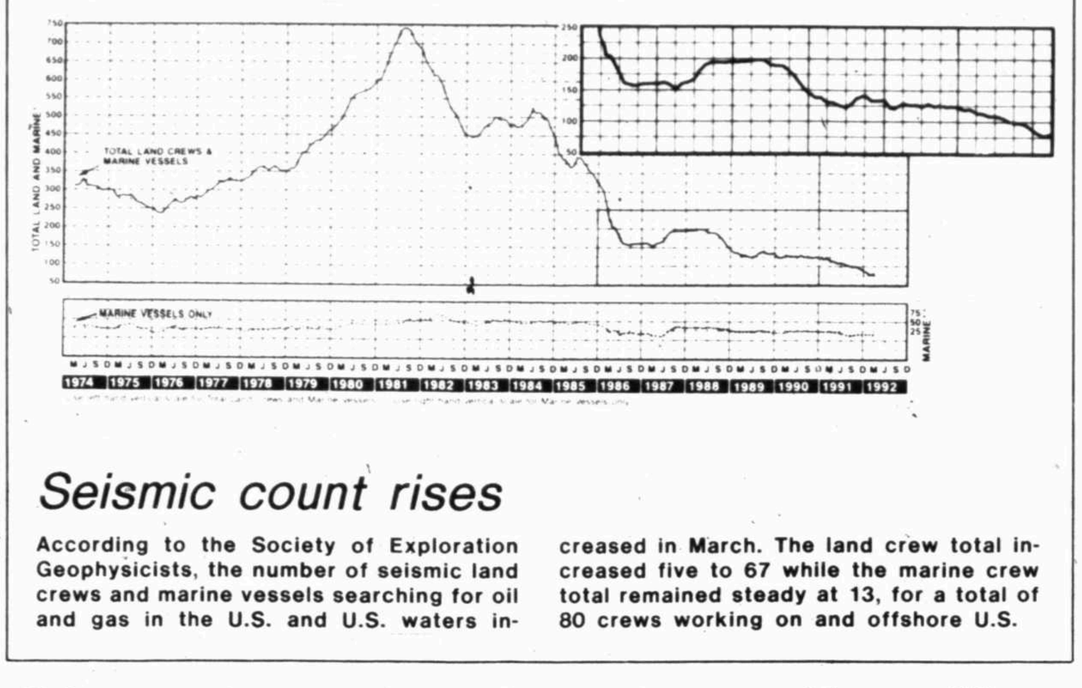
Oklahoma used to have production limits in place and enforced by the Oklahoma Corporation Commission. The commission's ability to adjust those limits was "inadvertently eliminated" by a 1981 law, Boren and Nickles said in their letter.

The new law simply restores the commission's authority to change production limits as market conditions change, and sets interim limits to apply when market conditions change before the commission has a chance to respond, the letter says.

Boren's and Nickles' letter follows a trip to Washington by Gov. David Walters and state natural gas producers seeking to rebut criticism of the new state law.

Since the trip, members of the Oklahoma delegation have heard of proposed amendments that would outlaw the kind of natural gas production limits Oklahoma now has, said H.G. Kleemeier, a Tulsa oil and gas businessman who made the trip.

SEISMIC CREW COUNT
(The leading indicator of oil and gas exploration activity.)



Seismic count rises

According to the Society of Exploration Geophysicists, the number of seismic land crews and marine vessels searching for oil and gas in the U.S. and U.S. waters increased in March. The land crew total increased five to 67 while the marine crew total remained steady at 13, for a total of 80 crews working on and offshore U.S.

Glass beads clean up oil spills

Staff Report

A small glass bead has been devised that could have cleaned up the Exxon Valdez spill in three days at 5 percent of the cost, two chemical engineers at the University of Texas, Austin, said at the American Chemical Society meeting in San Francisco this week.

According to Dr. Adam Heller and Dr. James R. Brock, the photoactive microbeads help bacteria in the water consume oil. Had the microbeads been available during the Exxon Valdez accident, the oil slick could have been eliminated for as little as $75 million, Heller said. By contract, the cleanup is reported to have cost $1.89 billion in 1989 and $2 billion in 1990.

Heller said that the diameter of the bead is similar to that of human hair. The sandlike beads are hollow so that they will float, and are partially coated with titanium dioxide, the same substance that has replaced lead in white latex paint.

When sunlight hits the beads, the beads partially oxidize oil and reduce oxygen to hydrogen peroxide, as expected from earlier results of Professor Allen J. Bard of the UT Austin chemistry department. The partially oxidized oil is then water-soluble and easily digested by oil-eating microbes.

'With the first type of beads, we expect to be able to dissolve in the ocean about 30 tons of oil floating on the water surface per ton of beads per week. The more catalyst you have, the faster the oil goes away.'

Dr. Adam Heller,
University of Texas researcher

"The net reaction is the one you would have in internal combusion, except that you do it at seawater temperature," said Heller.

Two types of beads are being developed. The first is for maximum spreading on oil so that the beads can best harvest sunlight; the second is for prompt stripping of the oil layer from the water surface.

"With the first type of beads, we expect to be able to dissolve in the ocean about 30 tons of oil floating on the water surface per ton of beads per week," he said. "The more catalyst you have, the faster the oil goes away."

The second type of bead that Heller and Brock have designed is aimed at treating oilslickes taht are an immediate threat to beaches or marine life. These beads soak up oil before oxidizing it, instantly cleaning the water surface so that life in the sea can continue. The oil is held in large, floating, semi-solid bead-and oil-containing clusters until it is oxidized.

Suitable uncoated beads are available commercially, but the novel approach of the UT Austin researchers has been activating these with titanium dioxide, Heller said. Everything considered, the approximate total cost of the beads will be around $3,000 per ton, including the cost of transporting the beads to an oil spill and dumping them in the ocean.

The research is partially funded by a $1 million grant from the U.S. Department of Energy.

California drivers pay more for gas

N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — Southern California motorists are paying more for gasoline than they were a few weeks ago because of seasonal requirements for cleaner fuel and tighter supplies.

The latest Lundberg Letter found that the average price at self-serve pumps for regular unleaded in Los Angeles was 112.11 cents in Los Angeles, up 2.37 cents locally from the previous poll. Nationally, it was 104.7 cents.

Meanwhile, a survey by the American Automobile Club found that the average national price of self-serve regular unleaded gasoline was 108.2 cents, an increase of 1.4 cents from the prior wee.. and its second consecutive climb.

Los Angeles consumers are paying higher gasoline prices because this is the time of year refiners cut back production in order to make annual repairs to their facilities.

Jim Huccaby, manager of pricing for Chevron USA Products Co., said that West Coast refiners have had more unscheduled repairs than in past years. While companies try to pass these costs onto consumers, the uptick in prices is typical for this time of year.

"I think if you look back history will show that this time of year the market (price) just increases. It's beginning to get into the driving season and the supply and demand factor comes into consideration," he said.

In addition, federal clean air regulations that took effect in 1989 mandate that each spring refiners modify their gasoline formulas to reduce smog, said Trilby Lundberg, publisher of the Lundberg Letter. Those rules get a little tighter each month as the weather begins to warm up, she said.

"Prices are up because the gasoline recipe is more costly," said Lundberg. Seasonal adjustments in federal clean air requirements mean that oil companies spend more money to purify gasoline, she said.

Mike Doyle, an analyst at Computer Petroleum Corp. in St. Paul, Minn., characterized fuel prices as normal despite the price hike.

"In the last month and a half wholesale prices have begun increasing and the retail prices reflect the increase," he said. "There is almost always a lag between the time wholesale prices go up and retail prices go up."

Enron earnings up 6.4 percent

HOUSTON (AP) — Despite weak natural gas prices, Enron Corp. has posted first quarter earnings of $115.8 million, or $1.08 per share, which represents a jump of 6.4 percent over last year.

Enron officials said Tuesday the earnings came on revenues of $3.3 billion for the quarter ending March 31, compared with revenues of $3.6 billion for the same quarter of 1991.

Earnings for the first quarter of 1991 amounted to $108.8 million, or $1.02 a share.

"Enron's earnings in the first quarter of 1992 were very strong in spite of lower natural gas and crude oil prices," Kenneth L. Lay, chairman and chief operating officer of Enron, said. "We remain on target to achieve a 20 percent earnings per share growth in 1992 and at least 15 percent growth rate in 1993."

Enron's interstate natural gas pipelines reported a drop in earnings of about $5 million, from $115.4 million a year ago to $110.6 million for the current quarter. The company attributed the decline to a warm winter season and the competitive effect of lower No. 6 fuel oil prices in the Florida market, which were largely offset by higher interest income.

The Gas Services Group, which includes results from Enron Gas Services and Houston Pipe Line's intrastate operations, reported earnings of $30.4 million in the first quarter of 1992, compared with $14.9 million a year ago for combined operations. The increase was credited to the group's long-term natural gas marketing and finance activities.

Enron Power Corp. reported a loss from $39.9 million for the first quarter of 1991 to $29 million this year.

Enron Corp. operates the nation's largest natural gas transmission system, markets natural gas, natural gas liquids, crude oil and refined products worldwide.

Between 1967 and 1973, DiBona was president and chief executive officer of the Center for Naval Analysis. He served in the Navy from 1956 to 1967, resigning with the rank of Lieutenant Commander.

Mr. DiBona graduated from the U.S. Naval Academy in 1956 with a B.S. in engineering. From 1957 to 1960, he was a Rhodes Scholar at Oxford University, England, where he earned B.A. and M.A. degrees in philosophy, politics and economics.

The American Petroleum Institute, the oil industry's largest association, has over 200 corporate and approximately 5,000 individual members representing all segments of the industry. In addition, the Institute undertakes studies that analyze the likely impact of proposed laws and regulations affecting energy supplies and industry operations, and then presents the industry's views on these matters at the federal and state levels. It also sponsors research on the environmental, safety and health effects of industry operations and products, and furnishes the research findings to appropriate governmental agencies.

Mesa setting up CNG operation

N.Y. Times News Service

FORT WORTH, Texas — MESA Environmental, a creation of Dallas oilman T. Boone Pickens, is establishing an operation in Fort Worth to convert fleet and individual vehicles to burn compressed natural gas.

The facility is expected to be operating by mid-May and will employ up to 100 people by the end of the year, said company spokesman Jay Rosser.

It will be located in a 60,000-square-foot warehouse and office building in south Fort Worth that MESA Environmental will lease, Rosser said.

MESA Environmental is a newly formed operating subsidiary of Dallas-based MESA Inc., a large independent oil and natural gas producer headed by Pickens.

Pickens is chairman of the Natural Gas Vehicle Coalition, an organization that is touting the growing use of compressed natural gas as a cheaper, cleaner-burning alternative to gasoline and diesel fuel.

The Fort Worth facility will not only convert gasoline-powered vehicles to burn compressed natural gas, but also will have a research team focusing on enhancing the development of natural gas powered-engines, Rosser said.

The facility will tailor conversions for the varying needs of specific vehicle fleets, Rosser said.

The Fort Worth facility also will help fleet customers obtain and install natural gas refueling centers, Rosser said.

Mechanics, automotive engineers and marketing, clerical and maintenance personnel will be among those hired to work at the facility.

MESA Environmental was established after MESA Inc. acquired a 70 percent interest last September in CleanFuels Inc., a Martinsburg, W.Va., company involved in the design and development of natural gas-powered engines and fuel systems.

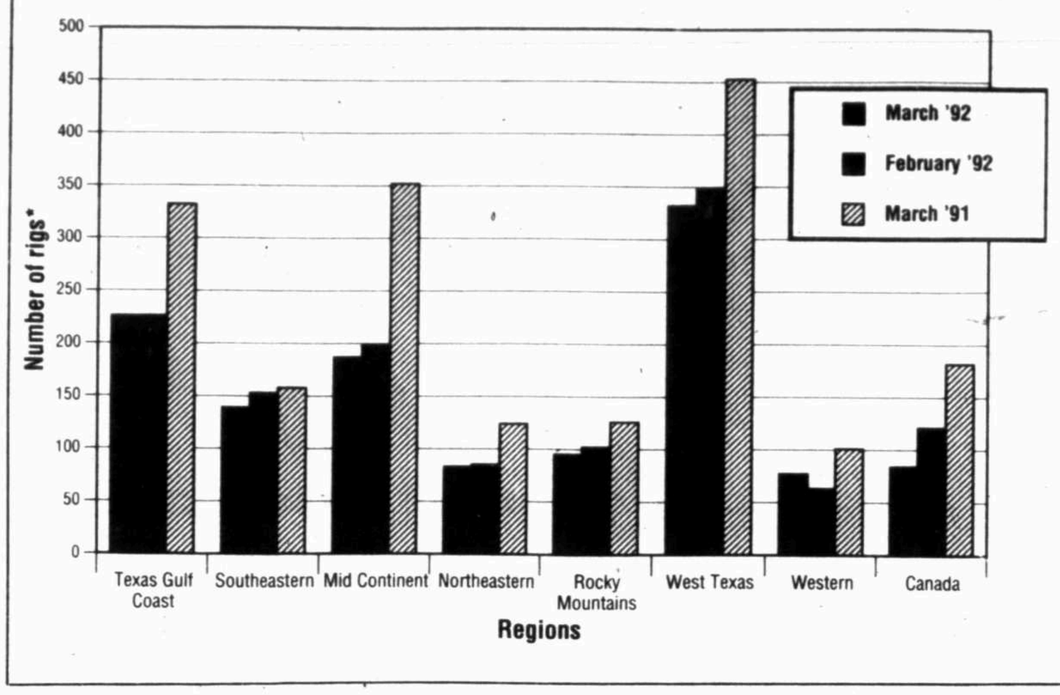
CleanFuels will shut down its West Virginia operations and move to Fort Worth in conjunction with the establishment of the new facility, Rosser said.

The president of MESA Environmental is John F. Sammons Jr., who served four terms as mayor of Temple, Texas, and was president of the food-service operations of McLane Company Inc., a Temple-based wholesale food distributor owned by Wal-Mart Stores Inc.

As president of MESA Environmental, Sammons will oversee the operations of CleanFuels.

Sammons left McLane in 1991 to become president of Entrepreneurial Properties Corp. in Fort Worth, which specializes in the acquisition of multifamily housing and commercial real estate.

In addition to their new business affiliation, Pickens and Sammons have past political ties. Both were active supporters of former Republican Gov. Bill Clements in his 1982 re-election campaign, in which he lost to Democrat Mark White.



Workovers slide

According to Baker Service Tools, the number of workover rigs at work in the U.S. was 1,139 in March, down 3 percent from February's total of 1,175, and down 31 percent from the March 1991 total of 1,646. In West Texas, the number was 332, down 5 percent from 348 in February and 27 percent from the 453 at work in March 1991.

Oil firms soak up Houston office space

N.Y. Times News Service

HOUSTON — Apache Corp., which signed a lease for 220,000 square feet of office space here last November — in the largest office lease transaction completed in Houston in 1991 — is now relocating its corporate headquarters here from Denver.

The move by Apache, the country's fourth-largest independent oil and gas producer, gave rise to optimism here. It came as part of the steady rebound of the Houston office market since 1987, when a drop in oil prices sent the city's office vacancy rate soaring to 30 percent. Today the vacancy rate is 22.5 percent.

Now, however, another shakeout in the energy industry is slowing that progress. Continued low oil and gas prices, as well as restrictive regulations, are forcing some major energy concerns to shut down domestic exploration and production and shift operations overseas.

That translates into vacant office space in Houston, where many of the companies have consolidated in recent years.

"There's no question that the office market is being affected by cutbacks in the energy industry and the national economy," said Edward H. Cappel, senior vice president of the CB Commercial Real Estate Group Inc.

During the first quarter of this year the amount of empty office space in Houston actually increased by 106,000 square feet, Cappel said.

Cutbacks at just two companies — Transco Energy Co. and Union Texas Petroleum — will soon add more than 700,000 square feet to the city's inventory of 30 million square feet of empty office space.

To compound the problem, several companies that are doing well have decided on new construction to fill their expansion needs.

Three high-rise office buildings with a total of nearly 1.4 million square feet are under construction for major tenants that will leave behind blocks of empty space in other buildings when they move.

Anadarko Petroleum Corp. will occupy 306,000 square feet of a 452,000-square-foot building being developed in North Houston by the Friendswood Development Company. The 19-story Anadarko Tower is scheduled for completion in June.

British Petroleum Exploration Inc., will occupy 430,000 square feet in the 20-story, 588,000-square-foot BP Plaza when it is completed late this year. That project is on Interstate 10 in West Houston. The Barker-Patrinely Group is the developer.

And BMC Software is building a 20-story, 475,000-square-foot headquarters building in West Houston. It is scheduled for completion in late 1993.

But, according to Cappel, the office market will pick up through the remainder of the year and end on a positive note with a net absorption of about 1.8 million square feet. Absorption is an increase in occupancy that reduces the city's total inventory of available office space.

When the major oil companies pull out, independent energy concerns like Apache will move in, Cappel predicted. "But that doesn't happen overnight," he said. "It takes time for companies to shut down their operations and sell off their oil and gas properties."

Apache decided to move its corporate headquarters to Houston last year after acquiring an Amoco subsidiary that owned a large amount of oil and gas properties in the Gulf Coast area, Jeanne Buchanan, Apache's director of corporate communications, said. The move is intended to get management closer to operations.

Apache will occupy 14 floors of the 20-story 1 Post Oak Central building in the Galleria area. Some tenants in the Post Oak building were relocated to open up the necessary space, but a large chunk of the building had been vacant for several years, said Tim D. Relyea, executive vice president of Cushman Realty, who handled the lease transaction, along with Scott Wegmann.

The space has been completely gutted, and Apache is moving employees in as floors are built out.

Apache will relocate 125 employees from Denver and hire additional staff in Houston for a total work force of 450, Ms. Buchanan said. Apache currently occupies 145,000 square feet of space in 1 United Bank Center in downtown Denver.

Relyea also recently leased 70,000 square feet of space in 1 Allen Center downtown to Phibro Energy Co., a large oil trader that is relocating its corporate offices to Houston from Greenwich, Conn.

But despite such positive signs, Relyea does not see the current problem in the oil patch as short term. He said office rents had already started to decline in the central business district and the Galleria area, the two areas with the greatest concentration of office space.

Panhandle Eastern says earnings up 49 percent

HOUSTON (AP) — Panhandle Eastern Corp. has reported earnings of $60.6 million, or 56 cents a share, for the first quarter, which represents roughly a 49 percent increase over the same period a year ago.

For the quarter ending March 31, 1991, Panhandle Eastern reported earnings of $40.7 million, or 45 cents a share.

The current earnings came on revenues of $681.1 million, compared with revenues of $839.3 million a year ago.

"Our efforts to revive the company's earnings are achieving steady, positive results," President and Chairman Dennis Hendrix said.

Panhandle Eastern reported TETCO and Algonquin had higher operating income primarily because of increased interruptible transportation volumes and TETCO's lower operating expenses.

DOE seeks gas strategy comments

Staff Report

The Secretary of Energy, James D. Watkins, has asked the nation's natural gas industry to review and comment on a "working draft" of the Department of Energy's proposed strategy for future, federally supported gas related programs.

Speaking to the National Petroleum Council in Washington, Watkins said the strategy describes a new "borehole to burnertip" approach for federal natural gas research and development and regulatory reform.

"We are presenting to the industry a new systems-oriented approach for federal natural gas programs. It is an approach that has grown out of the efforts called for in the National Energy Strategy," Watkins said. "The strategy emphasizes programs to improve the utilization, delivery and storage of natural gas, and it refocuses ongoing supply-related research and development to better reflect near and mid-term needs."

"Rather than several separate, and often disparate, natural gas-related activities proceeding in the department with little coordination, we are now proposing a single, cohesive approach,' Watkins said. "Also, we have identified several areas where federal research and development investment has been lacking, and we are proposing new initiatives to fill these gaps."

Delivery and storage research and development, for example, are new components of DOE's gas program, reflected for the first time in the agency's fiscal year 1993 budget request. The strategy outlines several potential areas where new technologies might improve the efficiency and reliability of local gas storage and delivery.

The strategy's resource and extraction programs include technologies for conventional gas formations as well as so-called "unconventional" formations such as tight sands and gas-bearing shales. Previous federal efforts concentrated almost solely on unconventional gas deposits.

The gas utilization area describes activities ranging from fundamental chemical research carried out by DOE's Office of Energy research, to natural gas heating and cooling research and development and vehicle research conducted by the Office of Conservation, to high efficiency gas turbine technology and gas-to-liquids conversion projects overseen by the Office of Fossil Energy.

The proposed strategy also calls for continued efforts to reform federal and state statutes and regulations that restrict market opportunities for natural gas. It outlines new efforts to provide industry with the technologies to comply with environmental requirements without a decrease in economic natural gas production.

Watkins said the strategy is intended to mesh closely with efforts funded by the Gas Research Institute, the research arm of the gas indsutry.

"The current lack of available capital, the downsizing of the petroleum industry, and limited research and development budgets all combine to increase the importance of cooperative gas-related efforts among industry, academia, state agencies and the federal government," Watkins said. "We have fashioned the strategy largely as a way to bring together these constituencies and focus their collective efforts on ways to expand the nation's use of natural gas."

Watkins said a key element of the gas plan is the attention it gives to technology transfer to consumers and industry. Where appropriate, the strategy calls for future projects to be carried out by consortia of companies, industry organizations, universities and state and federal agencies with technology transfer an inherent part of each effort.

DOE is asking for comments on the proposed strategy by June 9. The comments will be considered in preparing a final strategy later this summer.

ENERGY APPRECIATION WEEK '92

April 26 - May 2

Endangered Species Issues and Concerns Seminar

A decade ago our federal and most state governments had little to no programs for protection of the environment. Few if any oil and gas producers had environmental staffs and the public, while concerned about smog, wcs just becoming aware of the dangers of environmental neglect and contamination. Then a movement of public concern grew into a near rebellion and according to a poll by the New York Times and CBS, by 1989, eighty percent of all Americans believed that no standards were too high for protecting the environment.

Cultural and natural resources are a part of the environment – they are an important part of our "American Heritage". From native Indians to the wildcatters, to the ranchers and the farmers, all have had an impact on these resources. Our challenge and commitment is to protect and preserve!

Our Energy Appreciation Week seminar will address a balance between the "3-P's", protection, production and preservation. The seminar will provide an educational insight on such subjects as rare and endangered plants and animals, wetlands, archaeological resources and the various alternatives available to the Permian Basin petroleum industry to preserve and protect such resources while maintianing a viable domestic energy production capability.

Meet Our "Elite"

Vickey Banks, Manager of Temporary Resources, looks on as Paige Schmedemann receives her 'Elite Temp' pin from Lynda Boice, Coordinator.

Congratulations to Paige Schmedemann who has earned her 'Elite Temp' status at Temporary Resources. Paige is a highly motivated and extremely energetic individual who enjoys working temporary because of the challenges she encounters on each new assignment. She has a Masters Degree in Economics and Real Estate from Texas A&M University. Her spare time activities include travel, exercising and reading.

Temporary Resources salutes all of their temporaries during National Secretaries Week. Though not all of our employees are secretaries, they all deserve to be recognized for the great job that they do! Don't settle for less - call Temporary Resources for the best!

IPAA president praises new FERC gas rule

Denise Bode, president of the Independent Petroleum Association of America, has praised the issuance of Order 636, the restructuring rule issued by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commisson.

"The commission deserves great credit for timely and skilled execution of the most innovative rulemaking since Order No. 436, the open access transportation rule. Chairman Martin Allday, supported by his fellow commissioners, provided the leadership and inspiration necessary to construct a workable final rule which will permit the industry to move forward into a more competitive environment and promote development of new gas markets. In particular, Chairman Allday's stalwart support for the straight fixed variable rate design long sought by IPAA is gratefuly acknowledged and appreciated.

"During the next few weeks, IPAA will be evaluating the final rule to provide further comments to the commission, where warranted. We will also participate in the individual restructuring proceedings during the next year to protect the interests of independent producers and to maximize the benefits of competition to natural gas markets in general."

Oklahoma professor sees Middle East woes

Problems in the Arab Gulf region will continue indefinitely and may be in part the fault of such nations as the United States, says a University of Oklahoma researcher.

The major problem facing the Arab gulf countries is not oil prices, but the development of human resources, claims A.F. Alhajji, an OU doctoral student who has done many studies on the region.

However, solving this dilemma isn't in the best interest of countries such as the U.S., whose companies and employees dominate the economies of Arab Gulf countries, he says.

Although physical resources in the region are abundant, human resouces are scarce. Compounding this problem, Alhajji says, is the fact that Arab Gulf countries provide formal school training to citizens who would be better served by vocational/technical training.

In addition, such countries as Kuwait consider public administration jobs the right of every citizen, regardless of qualifications, he says.

He concluded that the continuous low productiviey of the region is not a result of tradition or nationality but rather a lack of commitment to national goals.

Alhajji will present the findings of this study May 15 to the World Bank in Washington D.C.

Arco environmental project given award

An independent panel has named Arco Oil & Gas Co. as the winner of the NOIA Award for Excellence in Environmental Conservation, presented during NOIA's 20th annual meeting.

Arco was selected for its Dauphin Island Project in state waters offshore Alabama. Arco developed two gas fields in shallow waters of the intercoastal waterway, which has been an important resource for natural oyster reefs. Arco developed a unique and innovative approach to develop the gas fields with minimum ecologic disturbance while remaining sensitive to the oyster beds and wetland characteristics of the area.

Stratamodel to hold technical symposium

Stratamodel Inc. will hold its second annual techical symposium on reservoir characterization and 3-D geological modeling.

This year's symposium is being hosted by Texaco Inc. Exploration and Production Department in Houston and is set for May 11-13.

The conference will focus on modeling case studies utilizing the latest 3-D technology and reservoir characterization techniques available to the oil and gas industry.

The event will be preceded by a field trip on May 10 to the Brazos River where classic point bar features will be examined. Reservoir Characterization Task Force members from around the globe were in attendance at last year's symposium, which was hosted by Mobil.

Union Pacific finals Wyoming horizontal well

Union Pacific Resources Co. of Fort Worth has announced the initial test results of its sixth horizontal well in the Niobrara trend in the Silo field, Laramie County, Wyoming.

The No. 1H McConnaughey 41-27, drilled from a surface location in the northeast quadrant of Section 27 T16N, R65W, flowed an average of 318 barrels of oil, 125,000 cubic feet of gas and 26 barrels of water per day through a 14/64 inch choke with a flowing tubing pressure of 500 to 550 pounds per square inch. The vertical depth of the well was 8,578 ft. with a horizontal displacement of 2,385 ft.

Conference set on future of international oil

Petroleum experts from four continents will meet at the University of Texas at Austin April 24-25 to discuss the future of the oil industry during a conference on "International Oil in the 1990s: Toward a New Regime?"

The conference wil consider the rise of new oil regimes as well as technology and strategy, new agendas of national oil companies, the politics of Middle Eastern oil and the future of Russian oil.

"Our conference will address the prospects for a reorganization of the international oil industry," said Dr. Kate Gillespie, an associate professor of marketing administration at the University and a conference organizer.

Maxus completes two Oklahoma producers

Maxus Energy Corp. has announced successful testing of two development wells in Roger Mills County, Oklahoma.

The Jacobs No. 4022 well had 80 net feet of pay from two intervals and tested at a combined rate of 4.2 million cubic feet of gas per day. The Prue formation was perforated between 11,251 and 11,311 ft. and tested at a rate of 3.6 Mmcfd. A Red Fork formation was also perforated, testing 600 Mcfd per day from a depth of 11,896 to 11,966 ft. Both intervals were tested using a 16/64 inch choke with flowing tubing pressure of 2,460 psi. Drilled to a depth of 12,400 ft., this is the fourth successful well completed on the Jacobs lease.

The Minnie Hayden Hay No. 3032 was tested in a lower Red Fork zone not previously encountered in surrounding wells. The well has 132 ft. of net pay and the lower zone was tested at a rate of 2.11 Mmcfd. Additional upper zones have not yet been tested. The lower zone was perforated between 12,725 and 12,773 ft. The interval was tested using a 9/64 inch choke with flowing tubing pressure of 6,159 psi.

Classical Glass

For centuries, churches and other places of worship have been graced with stained glass windows. As works of art and as religious scenes, these multi-colored windows have the ability to lift the spirit and soothe the soul.

But while church windows are perhaps the best-known place for stained glass, they aren't the only one. Many people have stained glass windows and other works of stained glass art in their homes.

Joyce Low is an artist with stained glass.

And she is teaching her art to others through courses at Midland College's Adult Continuing Education Department.

Although almost anyone can enjoy making pictures with stained glass and pre-designed patterns, designing and creating art from stained glass requires a certain amount of artistic ability, Ms. Low said.

"You can fabricate a window if you are just good with your hands — pattern books have patterns already made up. ... To be really creative, you have to have some kind of artistic talent, but if you are just good with your hands and like detail work, you can do it (stained glass art)."

Students in the stained glass art classes learn such skills as how to put pieces of stained glass together to make art; how different textures on the glass make different effects in the finished product; and how to solder the whole thing together.

But they don't actually learn how to cut the glass. "You 'score' the glass, you don't cut it," Ms. Low said. "You score it with a glass cutter and then break it," similar to the principle of a dotted line.

For herself, making art from stained glass has become a business. Ms. Low has custom-made many stained glass windows and other pieces for different individuals. "For 14 years now I've been doing glass.

"In all the years I've been doing this, I don't really run out of ideas, because everybody wants something different. That's why it's fun."

And yes, she said, "I cut myself all the time. You never get to the point where you aren't going to cut yourself."

Most of the stained glass work she does is architectural glass, she said, for homes.

For most people, stained glass means church windows, but Ms. Low said that isn't necessarily so. "I don't do very many churches because most churches use companies that that's all they do is religious windows."

Ms. Low earned a business degree with an art minor from Fort Lewis College in Durango, Colo. "I

Symbols such as this cross serve as reminders of the meaning of Easter. This work, cut and sand-blasted by Joyce Low, was designed by Neill Moore for Maggie Artley, lay director of Hi-Sky Emmaus Community Women's Walk to Emmaus No. 22, Aug. 2-5, 1990 at Christ the King, San Angelo.

Couple receive trip for anniversary

By Marilyn McKnight Harrison

Ethelyn and Leonard Howell were recently honored on their 50th wedding anniversary by their sons, Major Keith Howell of Germany and Benton Howell of Plainsboro, N.J., with a trip to Europe.

McKnight-Harrison

Arriving at Frankfurt, the couple were met by Keith, who is a commander of services at the Rhine Main Air Base; his wife, Brenda, and their grandson, Brian Christopher Howell. Brenda is the daughter of Midlanders Lucy and John Bourke.

Keith had arranged for a couple of weeks off from his duties to show his parents the sights of Germany and other parts of Europe.

The Midland couple enjoyed touring many of the beautiful castles along the Rhine River and numerous museums. Other points of interest were Heidelberg, where the men enjoyed a round of golf; Munich and many surrounding points of interest, and the infamous World War II Dachau concentration camp.

The family journeyed to Schloss Linderhof after crossing over into Austria and toured the castle and grounds of King Ludwig II. Maintained as the King's summer palace, it was a magnificent sight to behold in its luxurious setting in the mountains.

Nymphenburg Palace, where the rulers of Bavaria resided, also was visited and admired for its vast grounds and the many unique displays of the lavish possessions of those rulers.

Tired, but exhilarated from their two-week trip, the Howells returned home with many happy memories, agreeing it was a wonderful way to celebrate a milestone event in their lives.

TO CELEBRATE the engagement of Leslie Hendrix and Lee Wood Jr., Leslie's parents, Karolyn and John Hendrix, hosted a party last weekend at their home.

The formal announcement of the engagement by the father of the bride was followed by a champagne toast. The couple plan to be married Sept. 26 in the First Presbyterian Church.

Special guests included the prospective bridegroom's parents, Sally and Lee Wood; his grandparents, Thelma White and Mae and Robert Wood, and Leslie's grandparents, Martha and Clifford Lyle.

A "SPRING FIESTA" was the theme for the Coterie Club's recent dance at Midland Country Club.

A Mexican food buffet was served, and members enjoyed dancing to the music of Night Life.

Taking office were Orman Hubbard, president; Ralph Arrell, vice president; Penny (Mrs. Jerry) Hudgeons, secretary, and Elizabeth (Mrs. Byron) Greaves, treasurer.

Among those attending were Jeanie and Tom Johnson, Phyllis and Jon Short, Lynne and Charlie Ray, Kathy and David Childress, Jann and Vincent Bash and Phyllis and John Grimland.

CELEBRATING THE MARRIAGE of April Tindle and Jason Jones, a reception was held in late March at the Holiday Inn Country Villa. The event was hosted by the couple's parents, Mary Helen and Sam Jones and Melinda and Coy Willis.

Assisting in serving the wedding cake and other refreshments were Margaret (Mrs. Anthony) Jones, Kelli Jones, Christy Shocks and Natalie Buck.

Among the guests were the bride's maternal grandparents, Bennye and Gerald Hein of Arlington.

April and Jason exchanged vows on Valentine's Day in a family wedding at the home of the bride's parents. They honeymooned in San Antonio before returning to Midland to make their home.

Jeweler Andrei Ananov looks at works crafted in Faberge style in St. Petersburg recently. Ananov spent years working in secret, trying to figure out the methods of Faberge, the jeweler to the czars, whose art was wiped out by the Bolsheviks in 1917. Soviet citizens were forbidden to trade precious stones and metals.

Faberge-style Easter eggs are back

By Alan Cooperman

ST. PETERSBURG, Russia (AP) — The art of Faberge, jeweler to the czars, was wiped out by the Bolsheviks in 1917. Andrei Ananov, jeweler to the stars, is trying to revive it.

Because Soviet citizens were forbidden to trade precious stones and metals, Ananov spent years working in secret, trying to figure out Faberge's lost methods.

Now his workshop in St. Petersburg turns out Faberge-style pieces — not replicas, but one-of-a-kind originals — including intricate gold and enamel Easter eggs that sell for $10,000 to $30,000 each.

"All the old craftsmen either died or went abroad after 1917," he told a recent visitor. "I'm training a new generation from scratch."

Ananov embodies Russia's desire to reclaim its pre-revolutionary cultural heritage after 75 years of propagandistic art for the masses.

Fed up with shoddy workmanship and cheap materials, a small but growing number of artisans now unabashedly produce luxury goods for a tiny elite. They include furriers, dressmakers and portrait painters who work mainly or exclusively for "hard" Western currency.

FEW OF Ananov's countrymen can afford his work. His best customers are wealthy visitors from Hollywood, Paris, Rome and New York. Gregory Peck has one of his eggs. So does Luciano Pavarotti.

Ananov, 45, cuts a debonair figure in this former imperial city — playing billiards in the ritzy Hotel Evropa, escorting his third wife to expensive restaurants and driving a Mercedes with French license plates.

He points with pride to a French magazine's description of him as a playboy. "Making jewelry is a good hobby, because you spend less money on your wives and lovers," he said.

Ananov looks back to czarist days for inspiration. But he looks forward, too.

"I am a very vain person," he said. "I am working for a place in history. I know that the better I make things, the longer my name will live."

His model, of course, is Peter Carl Faberge, one of the most famous jewelers in history.

In 1870, at the age of 24, Faberge took over his family's jewelry business in St. Petersburg. He assembled hundreds of master craftsmen, opened branches in Moscow, Odessa, London and Paris, and began making jeweled flowers, miniature animals, cigarette cases and other "objects of fantasy."

In 1883, Faberge produced his first Imperial Easter Egg as a present from Czar Alexander III to his wife, Empress Marie. Inside the white enamel egg was a golden yolk, which opened to reveal a tiny chicken with a miniature imperial crown and tiny ruby egg.

THE EMPRESS was delighted, and Faberge made Easter eggs of growing complexity each year for Alexander III and his son, Nicholas II, the last of the Romanov czars. Among the surprises inside were a miniature train, horse-drawn carriage and peacock with moving feathers — all made of gold, silver, enamel and jewels.

In 1918, the Bolsheviks nationalized the House of Faberge and everything in it. Faberge moved to France and died there in 1920, a sad and lonely man.

"The Faberge workshops were the culmination of 500 years of inherited work and experience," historian Suzanne Massie noted in her 1980 history of Russian art, "Land of the Firebird."

"With him the careful craftsmanship in gold and stone, and the secret of the vibrant ruby and mauve, green and blue Russian enameling, disappeared ... forever," she wrote.

That, however, was before Ananov. While working as a theater director in St. Petersburg in the 1970s, he met an actor who was an amateur jeweler, learned some basic techniques and discovered a passion.

To maintain control over the country's riches, Communist authorities had prohibited individuals from owning, buying or selling precious metals, except for small personal items such as wedding rings.

So Ananov toiled clandestinely at a small lathe, workbench and enamel kiln in his apartment. He pored through old books, restored antiques and studied Faberge masterpieces in the Hermitage Museum.

IN 1987, he took advantage of economic reforms to open a cooperative business, and in 1989, it gained legal permission to make jewelry.

So far, the firm has produced about 50 large Easter eggs that open to reveal miniature flowers, perfume flasks and other fantasies — plus hundreds of smaller eggs, tie pins, earrings and the like.

GLASS: Designing panels part of creative process

wish I had done the opposite," she laughed.

She has been teaching the art of stained glass at MC for eight years. "That's fun," she said. "I really enjoying it (teaching the classes) because I meet lifelong friends. We're interested in the same things."

Howard Wilson is an optometrist who took Ms. Low's beginner stained glass class "basically as a hobby," he said.

Now he is a student in her intermediate class. "I've done several things already," he said, including a Southwest-style piece he has just completed.

"I recommend taking the course" to anyone interested in having stained glass art as a hobby, Wilson said. "I started out with no experience. It does take time and I don't have a lot of time to devote to this."

Brit Hartsell's current stained glass project is a scene showing cattails and their leaves on clear glass. She said the 24x12-inch project took about 25 hours to complete.

"Scoring the glass is the longest part," she said. "It's (also) the easy part, if you do it perfect. If you don't, you have to grind it down until it fits the pattern piece."

Ms. Hartsell, who has some experience creating jewelry — "mostly silver work" — plans to learn woodworking and then combine her skills in stained glass and wood to create art.

Diane and Dan Viers take the stained glass classes together, and do all their projects the same way.

"We do real good (together) because we do opposite steps," Mrs. Viers said. She likes to design the pieces and he likes to do the scoring.

"We have a lot of fun," Viers said.

"We like glass," his wife added. "We collect glass too. I stayed up until three in the morning (recently) drawing pictures (for their glass art). Dan would die before he would sit down and draw a picture. He likes technical things. I'm a starter and he's a finisher," which is another reason they work well together on projects, she said.

Their current projects are Mother's Day gifts for both their mothers — his mother is getting an underwater scene with a manatee, and her mom has chosen a piece featuring a hummingbird on a dogwood blossoms.

When those projects are finished, "we have windows around the front door (at their home) we want to make windows for," Viers said.

Michelle Daniels is a nurse by vocation, and a stained glass artist by desire. She also is making a project for her parents — a 32x34-inch Victorian-style panel for their living room. She said it "should take about three or four hours a day for about a week" to finish the project.

Ms. Daniels, who has done some painting and pottery making, became interested in stained glass through a friend. "She was hounding and hounding me to go (to class), and now I'm here more than she is," she laughed.

Stained glass is not just for windows anymore, she said. "It's used in sculpture, jewelry boxes, Christmas ornaments, frames, bookends — there's really no end to its uses.

"It's not just for windows — it is an art form in itself that you can apply how you want to use it," Ms. Daniels said.

"You're really only limited by your imagination."

Tools handy even for don't-it-yourselfers

NEW YORK (AP) — Even unhandymen — and women — need some tools around the house or apartment.

One home improvement expert recommends homeowners keep a small assortment of inexpensive tools for those annoying fix-it jobs common to most households.

A kit should include: a flexible steel tape measure; a claw hammer; two medium size screwdrivers (Phillips and flat-sided); an adjustable wrench, and long nose pliers.

Complete the kit with everyone's most essential and handy tool, a plumber's plunger.

'Real' First Thanksgiving celebration planned for next weekend in El Paso

Staff Report

EL PASO — The El Paso Mission Trail Association, originators of the "real" First Thanksgiving in America celebration, are seeking descendants of Don Juan de Onate and his expedition.

In 1598, Onate led the first major colonization into what is now the United States. The expedition party crossed the Rio Grande into El Paso after nearly perishing in the Chihuahuan desert of Mexico. They gave thanks for their salvation by celebrating with a feast of nuts, berries, fish and geese.

The last weekend in April, El Pasoans gather to reenact this historic journey and First Thanksgiving. This year a first-ever reunion is being planned for the descendants of the Onate expedition and later Spanish expeditions.

Scheduled for April 26 at Chamizal National Memorial in El Paso, the event will feature at least 12 fully costumed "Pilgrims" from Plymouth, Mass., challenging the El Paso "Conquistadors' " claim to the real First Thanksgiving; tours of El Paso's three Spanish Missions; and other traditional sightseeing activities. El Paso's sister city of Juarez, Mexico, will participate in the celebration.

For more information contact Sheldon Hall at the El Paso Mission Trail Association, (915) 592-5252.

If out on a leisurely Sunday drive looking at houses with the family, #5 Santa Anita Lane is not a home that would be easily passed by. It sits in the center of a cul-de-sac in Saddle Club North, where its size — 13,500 square feet — is somewhat camouflaged from the outside.

Yet once inside, what seems would be an enormous amount of space melts into a home with a warm, elegant atmosphere. It flows easily from one room to the next featuring four bedrooms and nine bathrooms. The 7-year-old home was built by Tabor's Construction of Dallas and the architect was Frank Welch.

The home was purchased in June 1991 by Dr. Sudhir Srivastava and his wife, Dr. Elizabeth Pascual. "But we didn't get to enjoy it much last summer," Dr. Pascual said. "We went to India shortly after we bought the house," and the family didn't return to Midland until it was almost time for school to start. "Then we started working with 'Taste of India,' " she said, which was in late August. Even their children, Deepti and Vishwa, were to busy with "Taste of India" and school starting to enjoy the house.

But to walk into their home today, and it looks as though it has been the family's home for years.

Upon entering the home, visitors are swepted into the spaciousness of the formal living area, with a high ceiling and sunken living area surrounded by a wood-floor walkway. White columns stately

ANNIVERSARIES

Couple observes golden anniversary

Coreta and D. Ray McCarthy of Midland celebrated their golden wedding anniversary with a reception April 11 at Bellview Baptist Church. Hosts were the couple's daughters, Rita Mauldin of Fort Worth, Kay Stephens of Little Rock, Ark., and Ginger Chick of Norwalk, Conn.

McCarthy and the former Coreta Holden were married April 18, 1942, in Odessa. In addition to their three children the couple has four grandchildren.

McCarthy was employed with the Civil Service at Midland Army Air Field before going into active duty with the Air Force in 1943. He flew P-47 Thunderbolt fighters over Germany during World War II.

After the war, the couple moved to Midland in 1945, and McCarthy became a general contractor. He was called to active duty in 1951, and the couple moved to San Angelo where he was a flight instructor during the Korean War. McCarthy remained in the reserves until he had completed 21 years with the Air Force.

The couple moved back to Midland in 1954, and McCarthy re-established his building business and continued in it until he retired in 1982.

The McCarthys are members of Bellview Baptist Church.

65th anniversary sparks celebration

Mr. and Mrs. James (Jack) Albert McClurg celebrated their 65th wedding anniversary with a family dinner party at their home Saturday. The party was hosted by their daughter Brenda Davidheiser and her family, Joseph L. Davidheiser III and Andrew and Lindsey Davidheiser of Thousand Oaks, Calif.

McClurg and the former Sally Oma Latta were married April 30, 1927, in Greenville. They moved to Midland in 1929. McClurg worked for the J.D. Adams Company and later owned his own business, Road Machinery Co., where he sold machinery to build some of the first highways in West Texas. They have supported many community and civic organizations during their marriage.

McClurg now raises horses and Mrs. McClurg is a homemaker.

Family dinner marks couple's 60th year

Mr. and Mrs. Clyde Kelley of Midland were guests of honor at a 60th wedding anniversary family dinner at the Midland Hilton. Hosts at the gathering were the couple's daughters, Weedon Hays of Brownfield and Sabra Hext of San Antonio.

Kelley and the former Cleta Morris were married April 14, 1932, in Lovington, N.M. In addition to their two children, the couple has four grandchildren.

The Kelleys farmed and ranched in the Pecos Valley near Roswell, N.M., and Hagerman, N.M., for several years. They have lived in Midland for 25 years.

HOME: Pool house is perfect for entertaining stand at each of the four corners to the sunken area. The focal point of the room is a massive rose-colored marble fireplace perfectly accented by burgundy carpeting and white upholstered furniture.

A sitting area behind the marble fireplace sports two pink suede-covered chairs that offer the perfect seat in the house to gaze out the large windows into the beautifully landscaped backyard where a pool, hot tub, pool house, gazebo and tennis court can be seen.

The pool house is designed with entertaining in mind. The living area and kitchen are separated only by a short counter, making conversation easy between to the two areas. The walls are of rough wood, the fireplace fashioned from large stones, and the room is filled with comfortable furniture and plants. The kitchen has all the basic necessities in pint-size form, and the area has built-in speakers for the sound system. The pool house also features a workout room, a dry sauna and a full bath with an entry from the pool area.

The dining room is a picture of elegance. The Georgian dining table comfortably seats 12 and the Strass crystal chandelier adds the perfect lighting for a dinner party, whether large or small.

A wool rug — custom-matched to the fabric of the dining chairs — covers the wood floor of the dining room and blends perfectly with the upholstered wall covering.

THE KITCHEN IS spacious and bright with bleached wood cabinets that contrast nicely with the black appliances. The island provides considerable work space and has a built-in range. Light streams in from the windows in the breakfast area as well as from the kitchen sky lights.

A two-sided fireplace is shared by the kitchen and an intimate sitting room which is the perfect size for smaller gatherings. In the sitting area, as well as throughout the doctors' home, the blending of contemporary furnishings with the couples' Indian heritage makes a beautiful setting.

A hallway — with a small, furnished nook — leads to the children's rooms and a "mother-in-law's" room.

The mother-in-law's room really is a basement room that features 5-foot cement walls and probably was originally built as a tornado shelter. Because it is very quiet, Dr. Srivastava uses the room to create his paintings and the family often uses it for a prayer room. (Because of a very narrow stairway, this room will probably not be open for the Parade of Homes tour.) There also is a wine cellar in the basement.

The girl's room is fit for a princess, with a princess-style canopy bed, a piano and wardrobe. Deepti's bath features marble counters and bath decorated in pinks and greens.

Vishwa's room features black lacquered furniture with a fabric upholstered wall that matches the pillows on his bed, and an adjoining bath.

AT THE END of the hallway is an entertainment room with a pool table, television, wet bar and private bath. Built-in shelves cover one wall of the room. A balcony overlooks the backyard.

The video room is the center for family living, featuring a large-screen television and comfortable furniture. It is decorated in warm earth tones and the walls are covered in tear paper applied in a paper-mache style. Something not to miss in this room is the stained glass in the wet bar which was custom-designed to match the design in the carpeting.

The master suite is an oasis. Decorated in a soft floral print of greens, purples and blues, the room offers a feeling of rich tranquility. The master bed is a brushed stainless steel four-poster bed. The green marble fireplace is accented in brass and is flanked by built-in book shelves. Double doors open to the backyard.

Doors on each side of the bed lead to "his and hers" bath areas. "His" features a green marble and glass shower and a private closet, while "hers" has a green marble bath, toilet and bidet, and a private closet.

Behind the bath areas is a private hot tub room filled with plants, green outdoor carpeting and rough wood walls. Skylights and four fans adorn the ceiling.

While the doctors' home provides numerous opportunities to rest and relax, Dr. Pascual said it seems they seldom get the chance to enjoy many of their home's ammenities:

"My husband was the first one to use the hot tub, and I saw him in there and I asked him, 'How do you find the time?' But I think it is the only time he has been in it," she said. The children enjoy the pool, but really have had very little time themselves. "Maybe this summer," she said.

Senior Girl Scouts win gold award

Staff Report

Four members of Senior Girl Scout Troop 67 in Midland have received the Gold Award, the highest award in Girl Scouting. The presentation was made to Janna Fulfer, Mendy McBride, Laura Prothro and Christine Gentry April 11 at the annual meeting of Permian Basin Girl Scout Council in Alpine. Advisor for Troop 67 is Susan Fulfer.

Achievements and recognitions required for this award include completing four or more interest related projects, achieving the Gold Leadership Award which includes a minimum of 30 hours of service, earning the Career Exploration Pin, and achieving the Girl Scout Challenge which includes many hours of community service. After completing this three-year process, the four girls completed their final Gold Award Project by planning and carrying out a weekend event for junior high and high school Girl Scouts from eight Girl Scout councils.

The girls also have been recognized by Colgate for community service project, by the Optimist Club's Youth Appreciation Awards for Outstanding Youth in the Community, and with their entire troop with a nomination for Outstanding Volunteer of the Year in Midland. Each of these four girls also earned the Silver Award, the second-highest award in Girl Scouting. They were active program aides in the council, formed a special drill team, completed their CIT training and are certified camp counselors.

The girls are:

■ Janna Fulfer, a senior at Midland High School. She has been a member of student council cabinet, Debate Team, chairman of the coordinating committee for Senior Girls, D-FY-IT, general committee ambassador to Washington D.C. for Model Organization of American States (MOAS), Spanish Club, two-time Regional Science Fair winner for Science Club, National Honor Society and listed in Who's Who Among American High Schools. She attends classes at Midland College, and also is a member of PBGSC board of directors and Outdoor Operating Unit, Young Life, Midland Teen Court and Youth and Government. She received the presidential Academic Fitness Award, the Academic Excellence Award and the Merit Award for Academic Achievement. She lettered academically four years and plans to major in pre-law at the University of Texas at Austin.

■ Mendy McBride, a senior at Lee High School, has attended Dee-Ann Studio of Dance for 12 years. She is a member of Yearbook Staff, PALS, Business Professionals of America, Chemistry Club, Drama Club, Senior Girls, LHS Batgirl, Spanish Honor Society, National Honor Society, and has lettered academically. She is a member of Young Life and secretary of St. Stephen's Youth Group. She plans to attend Texas A&M University and major in interdisciplinary studies.

■ Laura Prothro, a senior at MHS, has been involved with Symphony Belles and Midland Teen Court for four years. She is a member of church choir, youth group secretary, Young Life, Colorado Outward Bound School, Science Club, Junior Engineering Technical Society, Spanish Club, Yearbook Staff, Senior Girls, D-FY-IT, National Honor Society and Who's Who Among American High Schools. She received the Tandy Certificate of Merit Award and four academic letters. She plans to major in accounting at Southwestern University in Georgetown.

■ Christine Gentry, a senior at MHS, is president of Senior Girls, two-year letterman on MHS Varsity Aquadawg Swim Team, member of City of Midland swim team, Business Professionals of America, Spanish Club, MHS Baseball Batgirl, National Honor Society, church choir, and participated in her church's Mexico mission trip. Serger revolutionizes home sewing

N.Y. Times News Service

While manufacturers have wrought a revolution in sewing machines, it is the serger, or overlock, machine that has truly revolutionized home sewing.

Called the microwave of the business, a serger is used to give seams and other parts of a garment the same neat finish as commercially produced clothes.

The sewing machine makers introduced sergers at retail — with price tags of $400 to $1,000 — about seven years ago.

Complements to the basic machines, sergers weave stitches around an edge of fabric that might otherwise ravel. As they go along, they also trim away excess material.

In addition to giving homemade clothing a more finished look, overlock machines hit speeds of 1,500 stitches a minute, compared to between 800 and 1,000 stitches regular sewing machines are capable of. A pair of leggings can be completed in less than an hour.

Almost half of Sew News's 230,000 subscribers own a serger, according to Linda Turner Griepentrog, the magazine's editor.

In fact, PJS Publications Inc., which publishes her magazine, decided to launch Serger Update, a newsletter about the machine.

LIFESTYLE POLICIES

Policies for publication of announcements in the Lifestyle sections of the Reporter-Telegram are:

Information for Sunday pages must be in our office by 5 p.m. the preceding Monday. For publication in a weekday paper, we must receive the information by noon two days before the information is to be published. For example, an item for Wednesday's paper must be received by noon Monday.

Engagement announcements must appear at least two weeks before the wedding date. Wedding announcements must appear within one month of the event. Anniversary announcements — 25th or higher — must be published within one month of the anniversary date.

Announcements of pageant winners will only be published for teenage pageants and older. Photographs will be published only for winners, not runner-ups. These announcements are published Thursdays. Deadline is 5 p.m. Monday.

All articles must be submitted in writing. Forms for weddings, engagements and anniversaries, only published Sundays, are available in the Lifestyle office. All materials must include the signature and telephone number of the person submitting them.

We cannot mail forms to persons in Midland. Pictures must be picked up in the Lifestyle office within one month after publication. To have a photo returned by mail, include a self-addressed, stamped envelope. Unclaimed photos are discarded after a month.

Photographs may be submitted with wedding and engagement announcements, and anniversary announcements of 50 years or more, but are not required. A portrait of the bride-elect or of the future bride and bridegroom together may be submitted with engagement announcements. Portraits of the bride only or of the wedding couple may be submitted with wedding announcements. A different photo must be submitted for the engagement and wedding announcements.

Photos should be vertical, black and white, glossy finish, studio portraits. Studio color pictures may be submitted, but quality reproduction cannot be assured. Snapshots generally are not acceptable and Polaroid shots are not accepted. The MRT reserves the right to deny publication of any photo due to quality or content.

There is no charge for publication of photographs and stories.

Survey supports four-day work week

By Jim Barlow

Hearst News Service

Companies having trouble attracting the kinds of workers they need might consider changing their workweek.

Most Americans, surveys reveal, feel their leisure time is shrinking. This is despite the fact that time diaries kept by people in recognized national surveys reveal just the opposite — that people today enjoy several hours more a week in leisure time than they did two decades ago.

But since perception tends to be reality, there's a way businesses can take advantage of that attitude — by changing their workweek.

A Gallup Poll found that 54 percent of all adults would prefer a change from five, eight-hour days of work to a four-day workweek with 10-hour shifts.

Of course such a change might cause scheduling problems in businesses that must be open most hours of the day. Then there's the fatigue factor. Would productivity and quality slump in that last two hours of work? But a four-day week would bring other benefits. Business would spend less on utilities.

Exhibit shows war fought on "The Home Front"

AUSTIN — As part of "World War II: Personal Accounts — Pearl Harbor to V-J Day," a complementary exhibition, entitled "The Home Front" will open at the Lyndon B. Johnson Library and Museum in Austin Tuesday, and will remain on display through Aug. 23. The Johnson Library is one of nine Presidentional libraries operated and maintained by the National Archives.

Through photographs and music, "The Home Front" recreates a sense of what life was like for the millions of Americans who "fought the War" at home — in factories, war bond rallies, rationing programs and victory gardens.

Among the items on display is a 1939 Wurlitzer 600K jukebox playing a selection of popular 1940s melodies including "I'll Be Seeing You," "Boogie Woogie Bugle Boy" and "When the Lights Go On Again." The exhibit includes 20 photographs showing home front activities such as women at work in airplane factories, scrap rubber drives, dancing at a USO club, a soldier on leave, children turning in weekly collections of cooking grease and War Bond drives. Rationing books and blue and gold star banners which were displayed in windows of military households also are included in the exhibition.

This exhibition will be displayed at many of the other Presidental libraries and at the IBM Gallery in New York City. The exhibition was curated and designed by the Johnson Library and is part of the National Archives nationwide commemoration of the 50th anniversary of World War II. The exhibition was made possible by a grant from United Services Automobile Association Foundation, whose headquarters are in San Antonio.

For a travel schedule or information on other World War II commemorative activities, call (202) 501-5200. The Johnson Library is located at 2313 Red River Street, Austin, Texas, 78705. Admission is free and hours are 9 a.m.-5 p.m.

Dear Abby

Organ donation lets family turn their tragedy into joy

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: As I sit here writing to you, I am emotionally drained, yet at the same time, filled with peace, serenity and immense joy. Today I was finally able to meet one of my son's kidney recipients, Joan Walljasper, from West Point, Iowa. (Steve was able to give "the gift of life" to Joan and another recipient, David, on July 27, 1989.)

Van Buren

I cannot describe how it felt to meet, hug, talk and cry with this special woman who carries within her a part of my son. I will be forever grateful for the precious time we shared.

Steve, 19, had completed his first year at the University of Notre Dame when he was severely injured in an automobile accident on July 18, 1989. He died a week later of massive brain stem injuries. Steve had always wanted to be an organ donor, and our family was in complete agreement with his wishes. If Steve's untimely death could give others the "gift of life," we felt it would help us find meaning and peace in this tragedy. So, Joan (age 42) and David (age 15) each received one of Steve's kidneys, and a new chapter began in their lives, as well as ours.

As a donor family, we have been very fortunate to be in communication with both of Steve's kidney recipients and their families. This is possible only because all of us were willing and eager to communicate with each other. (If a donor family or recipient wishes complete privacy, those wishes are strictly respected.)

What a miracle organ donation is for recipients and their loved ones! It has been a source of great comfort and healing to know that each day David and Joan are growing stronger and healthier, and are able to lead happier, more fulfilling lives because of Steve's "gift of life."

David is now 18 and a senior in high school. He will attend college in the fall to study engineering and computers. David's mother and I have corresponded since Christmas of 1989; their family picture smiles at me from my refrigerator door. We have pictures of David before and after the transplant. The difference in this handsome young man is simply incredible.

Joan is a real survivor. She continues to battle her diabetes daily. It has caused circulation problems and pain in her legs, but her kidney works beautifully, and she has not experienced any rejection whatsoever. Joan is returning to college part-time this semester, hoping to pursue a career in writing. Her children are a great joy in her life, and she will have the added joy of becoming a grandmother in April — something she feared she would not live long enough to enjoy, until she received Steve's kidney.

As Joan left me today, we hugged each other and wept. I told her I loved her, and she said, "Thank you for my life." Those five powerful words are the true meaning of organ donation. — SUSAN WELCH SAUNDERS, FORT MADISON, IOWA

DEAR SUSAN: My heartfelt sympathy to you and your family on the loss of your beloved Steve.

I, too, have carried a donor card for more than 20 years, and feel there is nothing I can leave after my death that will be of greater value.

Donor registration forms are available by writing The Living Bank, P.O. Box 6725, Houston, Texas 77265. It is strictly non-profit, operating on a shoestring as a public service — so please be a sport and include a few dollars with your request if you can spare them. (It's tax-deductible.)

Ingram man admits he 'fiddles' around

By Michael Bowlin

INGRAM (AP) — Gordon Mills doesn't mind if you accuse him of fiddling around. Mills, 79, spends most of the day doing just that.

The former farmer-rancher, who retired to Kerrville 10 years ago after living here as a youth, makes fiddles. He also hand-carves guitars and mandolins.

"In the 10 years I've been doing it, I've made 36 fiddles, four mandolins and a couple of guitars," Mills said.

He also explained that "everything" except the strings and the metal on his instruments is handmade. "I make my own pegs, tail pieces, chin rests and finger boards," he said — without special tools. "I just hand carve them with a good, sharp knife."

Mills got interested in making violins, which he calls fiddles, while he and his wife were living at Buchanan Lake. He made friends with a violin collector there and started doing repair work for him.

One day, Mills was really struck by the fine craftsmanship of a violin he was working on and he "got the urge" to make one.

"I got started and I can't stop. It's just real enjoyable," he said.

Mills creates his instruments in a small prefabricated building at the rear of his home near Ingram.

He uses Stradivarius, a Guarneri and Stainer patterns to craft his works. Most violins have a spruce top and maple back, which Mills buys from a supply house in Oklahoma. "They get their wood from Western Europe," he explained.

Along with the traditional woods, Mills also has crafted his instruments out of curly maple, bird's eye maple, flamed maple and lacewood from Australia.

"I've also used several local woods including sycamore and mesquite. Right now, I'm making a violin out of heart cedar," Mills said.

He learned violin-making on his own, reading books and studying plans. He also plays the violin "by ear," explaining he played as a child but then dropped it for about 40 years. "I took it up again about 10 years ago and had to learn everything all over," he said.

It's hard for Mills to estimate how many hours it takes to build a violin. A month is a rough guess, including varnishing, rubbing it down and stringing it.

"I really never have kept track of the time. I just go to my shop and whittle until I get tired," he added.

Mills also does custom work. Costs for his violins range between $300 and $1,000 each, while a person can purchase a guitar for $850. A mandolin costs $500.

Women's job stress studied

NEW YORK (AP) — Being a wife or mother has its hassles, but a new study says it also protects a working woman from distress if her job becomes less satisfying.

She may still feel lousy after a bad day at work, but the study suggests that changes in her overall job satisfaction do not significantly affect her general level of distress.

This buffer effect appeared for women with husbands, other long-term partners or children. In contrast, childless and unattached working women did show job-related changes in distress.

Apparently, family roles offer satisfactions that can offset work troubles, the study's authors said.

"The presence of that other role, that family role ... protects them in terms of their distress from vicissitudes of the workplace," said psychologist Rosalind Barnett.

Working women without family roles might receive similar protection by getting involved in such things as community organizations, said Barnett, a senior research associate at Wellesley College's Center for Research on Women in Massachusetts.

Prior studies have shown that the more roles a woman occupies, the better her mental and physical health, Barnett and co-authors wrote in the April issue of the Journal of Personality and Social Psychology.

The study focused on 305 randomly chosen licensed practical nurses and social workers in Massachusetts. Barnett said she believes the results also would apply to women in other jobs, although she and co-authors called for further research.

Helen Farmer, a University of Illinois psychologist who studies women's conflicts between home and career, noted that the women in the study had jobs in which they help others.

So they might gain more fulfillment than other women do from the helping aspects of being a mother and partner, she said. She agreed that studies of women in other occupations are needed.

Sandra Tangri, a Howard University psychology professor who studies issues of working women, said she believes the findings would apply to traditionally female jobs. She said she is unsure about male-dominated occupations. "I think it's a great study," Tangri said.

Each woman in the study was interviewed three times, at intervals of about a year, to reveal changes in overall job satisfaction and in distress levels.

The women rated how rewarding or problematic their jobs were on 50 measures, such as job security, convenience of working hours, salary, work demands and support from supervisors.

Distress levels were monitored by standard measures of anxiety and depressive symptoms over the previous 30 days.

Analysis showed that for women without any family role, changes in job satisfaction were related to their distress levels. When job satisfaction declined, distress tended to go up, and when job satisfaction improved, distress tended to fall.

But women with one or both family roles showed no significant relationship between changes in job satisfaction and in distress levels.

Stress managed

By Jim Barlow
Hearst News Service

When it comes to relieving job stress, men and women managers differ. Both turn to things whose names start with a B, according to a survey by the American Management Association. But with men it's booze; with women, baths.

A survey by the AMA found two-thirds of the male managers looked to a stiff drink as their preferred way to unwind after a stressful day on the job. The favorite attitude adjustment method among women — favored by 41 percent — was sitting in a hot bath.

Hearty houseplants survive non-expert attention

By Deborah A. Benge

Everybody needs at least one houseplant — even if you have a brown thumb. There are some pretty tough foliage plants out there that can take all kinds of abuse and keep on growing.

Benge

What color your thumb is may not have anything to do with your success or failure with indoor plants, it may be the growing conditions. Inside our homes and offices is not always an ideal place to grow foliage plants. There are all kinds of limiting factors, such as low humidity, poor light, salty water and pests. If you are faced with less than ideal growing conditions, or if your thumb is a tad bit brown, try growing some of these tough foliage plants. They may not be as tough as plastic, but they are good risks when it comes to tough conditions.

- Heartleaf Philodendron: This plant is commonly known as "house ivy." Most philodendrons are easy to grow, and this is one of the easiest. Commercial buildings, shopping malls, hotels and office buildings frequently rely on heartleaf philodendron as a mainstay in their interior plantscapes. It grows best in a bright spot, but will also grow well under fluorescent lights in an office and can survive long periods under very low light conditions.
- Devil's Ivy: This plant looks a lot like a variegated heartleaf philodendron, and in fact is often called a philodendron. To further confuse matters, it is also called pothos ivy. Whatever it is called, it is easy to grow. Perhaps the most colorful variety of devil's ivy is "Marble Queen" with cream- and green-variegated foliage.
- Chinese Evergreen: This plant is becoming better known and is perhaps the easiest of all houseplants to grow. The standard Chinese evergreen is a bit dull with green, arrowhead-shaped leaves, but some of the new varieties like "Silver Queen" are quite striking. It will tolerate very low light conditions and low humidity. Most Chinese evergreen varieties reach 1 to 2 feet in height and have leaves 6 to 8 inches long and 2 to 3 inches wide.
- Dracaena: There are many dracaenas suitable for indoor use, but "Janet Craig" is one of the best. Dark green, strap-like leaves about 12 to 18 inches long and 2 to 3 inches wide are typical of this plant.
- Sansevieria or Snake Plant: This plant is almost indestructible. It tolerates low light and low humidity. Its thick, leathery leaves are capable of withstanding extended dry periods. There are generally two forms of snake plant — one that makes a compact rosette of leaves, and another with tall erect leaves. Some varieties have silvery, horizontal bands on the leaves, others are almost entirely green while still others have bright yellow margins.
- Spathiphyllum or Closet Plant: While this plant is very tolerant of indoor conditions, it will not grow in a closet. It tolerates low light and the dry air present in most homes. The basic color is green.

Other houseplants that are relatively easy to grow and deserve to be mentioned include the arrowhead plant with both green and variegated forms; the cast-iron plant with dark green strap-shaped leaves, ideal for dark locations indoors or outdoors; and dieffenbachia, a large-leafed, tall and exotic-looking plant with green and variegated foliage.

These are great plants for the office where care is minimal or in the home where growing conditions are less than perfect. Give them a try, because nothing can compare to plants inside the home.

Deborah Benge is the extension horticulture agent for the Texas Agricultural Extension Service in Midland and Ector counties.

AT WIT'S END

Prisoners wage different 'food fight'

By Erma Bombeck

During my lifetime, I've run across some interesting theories on how to lose weight. They've ranged from the "Messy Divorce/500 Calories a Day" plan to the "I Love to Fly and It Shows" diet, where you stay airborne for three months and eat nothing but airline food.

Bombeck

These diets may sound pretty dramatic. But Mike Tyson's motivation to "lose a few pounds" while serving time in prison gives new meaning to "Seize the day."

I know how he feels. He's got all this dead time on his hands and might as well have something to show for it. I used to feel the same way when my husband left town on business trips, and I had a rare opportunity to stay out of the kitchen and eat only enough to keep me from passing out.

We have always been taught that dieting is 90 percent motivation. We starve ourselves because we are inspired by a vision to see our hipbones before we die. Right? Wrong.

Losing weight is 90 percent opportunity. Why do you think Oprah starved herself into her early-closet jeans? She had an opportunity to increase ratings in a continuing saga of "Honey, I Just Shrunk a Talk Show Host."

I'm not suggesting that the new prison diet replace Jenny Craig, but it does offer a new option.

It used to be that a prison sentence for white-collar offenders prompted them to remark, "Forget the lawyer. Get me a literary agent." Then they proceeded to be sequestered in cells and write their novels or memoirs during their incarceration. The future battle cry could be, "Forget the lawyer. Get me a personal trainer."

I went to a spa once that had all the trappings of a penal institution. We dressed alike, the food was bad, and we all dreamed of escape. Like Tyson, we promised ourselves that as long as we were doing the time, we'd take the opportunity to improve our bodies and self-esteem.

One night, four of us broke out. When we were apprehended in a restaurant in town, we were stuffing tacos and enchiladas into every opening of our faces. We were counseled and told that we were incorrigible and could probably never be rehabilitated to live in a thin society.

The odds are against Mr. Tyson. Statistics show that dieters regain a third of the weight they lost after a year. Most regain all their lost weight in five years.

Me? Every day, I still pray, "Stop me before I eat again."

EuroDisneyland hotels are fantastic too

By John Rockwell
N.Y. Times News Service

MARNE-LA-VALLEE, France — Walt Disney Co. is known for Mickey Mouse and Magic Kingdoms. But in recent years it has also become an aggressive and, despite a reputation for fierce budgetary control, affluent patron of post-modern architecture. That policy has been pursued eagerly in the new Euro Disneyland here.

The actual theme park, as per custom, was designed by Walt Disney Imagineering, and looks like other Magic Kingdoms in Anaheim, Orlando and Tokyo. But with six gigantic hotels, a shopping and night-time entertainment complex and plans for two more theme parks, a European corporate headquarters, a tripling of hotel space, additional golf courses and a second conference center, building should continue to the year 2017.

This spring, 5,200 hotel rooms will open on this 5,000-acre site 20 miles east of Paris: five hotels are ready now, with the sixth due on May 1. All but one — the plush but kitschy Disneyland Hotel overlooking the park, which was done by Dana Aiken and the Disney Imagineers — have been designed by some of the world's best-known architects.

Mickey Mouse welcomes visitors to EuroDisneyland in Marne la Vallee, north of Paris, during its inauguration last November. The park, which opened last weekend, hopes to draw 11 million visitors from Europe and beyond during its first year.

FOLLOWING DISNEY custom, all the hotels are "themed." Surprisingly, given the sensitivity of the French to "cultural imperialism" and Disney's insistence on efforts to foster Franco-American amity, the architects chosen were mostly American and the themes strictly, even stridently, so. The use of French architectural firms to help execute the projects hardly seems to compensate. Then again, Disney knows marketing, and Europeans have shown every sign of lapping up all the Americanness they can get.

Robert A.M. Stern, referring to his fellow Euro Disneyland hotel architects, said: "We're all American except for Antoine Grumbach, and he's an honorary American: he's taught at Princeton. So naturally our themes are American themes."

Frank O. Gehry, of Los Angeles, was the only one not asked to observe a set theme. He is responsible for Festival Disney, the entertainment and shopping arcade linking the park and Disneyland Hotel with the other hotels. Stern, from New York City, did two hotels, the Newport Bay Club, a huge (1,100 rooms) inflation of a turn-of-the-century Northeastern resort hotel, and the Hotel Cheyenne, a moderate-price hotel cleverly laid out to resemble a Hollywood version of a Wild West town: all the Western-attired hotel employees are asked to greet guests by saying "Howdy," the word in Euro-accented American sounding something like "Audi."

MICHAEL GRAVES, of Princeton, N.J., was the architect for Hotel New York, which looks less like Manhattan than like a playful abstraction on that theme as realized in, say, Santa Monica, Calif.; apples are everywhere embedded in the interior decor.

Grumbach, who is from Paris, designed the Sequoia Lodge, which attempts to recreate the woodsy warmth and spaciousness of a Teddy Roosevelt-style mountain retreat.

And Antoine Predock of Albuquerqu, N.M., did the Hotel Santa Fe, an evocation of the Southwest shot through with conceptual notions both evocative and quirky.

Other well-known architects and firms involved in ancillary or future projects include Robert Venturi, Aldo Rossi, Gwathmey and Siegel and Arquitectonica.

All this corporate largesse owes something to a realization by Disney executives that the shift from cool modernism to today's playfully eclectic post-modernism suited the Disney image of family entertainment mixed with gentle history lessons. In addition, strikingly designed hotels offer solace to adults sated with theme-park cuteness.

The hotels may also help counter the philistine Disney image so bitterly resented by some European intellectuals.

BUT MOSTLY, Disney's newfound interest in architecture reflects the personal passions of Michael Eisner, Disney's chief executive officer. As he put it recently, "'Corporate vision' is always the result of a few people at the top. Here, what it took was somebody — in this case, it was me — to say that architecture is important. You can do something well as economically as you can do something badly."

Stern, who now has six Disney projects completed and more in the works, first met the Disney executive when he designed a New York apartment for Eisner's parents, and now he sits on the Disney board. He brushed aside suggestions that Disney pinched pennies and imposed too many creative restrictions.

"Disney pushes for architectural expressiveness, but at the same time they are trying to compete," Stern said. "Nobody works on an unlimited budget; there are always compromises."

At Euro Disneyland, those compromises express themselves largely in terms of predetermined (and quite small) room sizes and the sometimes overwhelming scale of the project, with elephantine structures bumping against one another around the modest-looking lake.

Stern's Newport Bay Club, despite legitimate precedents in similarly overwhelming mega-hotels in the American past, and despite some elegant interior touches, looks from certain angles like one of those cartoons of Art Deco gigantism, the kind in which entire nightclubs can be set up on one oversize airliner wing.

ON THE OTHER hand, what is fascinating about the Disney approach to architecture is the variety of styles and ideas and creative control. Disney coordinated landscaping, insisted on "themed" hotels and took a special interest in color schemes to relate to what Stern — speaking on a gorgeous sunny day — called "the terrible, cold, wet French weather." But otherwise, according to the architects, there was considerable latitude.

Gehry insisted that he had been given "complete freedom and a very ample budget" to build his Festival Disney, which he described as "basically a strip commercial shopping center" contained, on one side, in a single long structure bulging upward at the center. "My fish fetish came back here," Gehry remarked. "It's a big whale, I think."

He did express some regret, however, that he hadn't insisted on doing the sign-lettering and the interiors himself. Stern and Graves retained control over the interiors of their projects, while Grumbach and Predock — who seemed loath to show visitors the actual rooms of his Hotel Santa Fe — did not.

Stern's Hotel Cheyenne successfully combats the problem of scale by distributing its 1,000 rooms within a rambling Western town of funky charm, complete with false fronts and shoot-'em-ups and hanging trees. To judge from early reactions, the Europeans already love it.

Without question the strangest of the hotels is Predock's. "For me, the value of architecture is about something other than overt theming," he said, glaring at assembled Disney executives during a walking tour of the hotels. "If the architecture speaks for itself, it shouldn't have to be narrated."

THAT SAID, he has contributed the most conceptually complex project of the bunch; he sounded even more intellectually inspired than the sometimes convoluted Grumbach, who sees his Sequoia Lodge as an environmentally correct nature refuge. So complex is the Hotel Santa Fe that Predock has written a brochure for guests explaining his ideas.

The sprawling, stark, sometimes rather anonymous mesa-like structures that contain the guest rooms are bound together (conceptually more than visually) by various "trails": the Trail of Artifacts, which includes rusting old cars half-buried in sand; the Trail of Water, with striking and ingenious waterways cropping up unexpectedly; the Trail of Monuments; the Trail of Legends, and the Trail of Infinite Space — a Route 66-like yellow line running from beyond the entrance to a metallic something-or-other that looks like a crashed UFO crossed with a sombrero.

There is also a smoking volcano; a meteorite embedded in a roof; a glass-enclosed "cactus in bondage," as Predock nicknamed it, and, over the entrance, a giant drive-in movie screen.

Originally, Predock, who says he was partly inspired by Wim Wenders' film "Paris, Texas," hoped to keep the screen blank, symbolizing the emptiness of the West and the fact that so many drive-ins today have been abandoned. But Disney wanted an image, and what Disney wants Disney gets. Clint Eastwood is now painted on the screen, squinting ominously.

Sea World to open concert season

Staff Report

SAN ANTONIO — Sea World of Texas will showcase some of the biggest names in show business, including John Denver, Dolly Parton, Reba McEntire, James Taylor and George Strait, in concert throughout its 1992 season.

The park, which opened for its fifth season on March 7, has an expanded array of marine life entertainment and education for the whole family.

"We're commemorating our fifth anniversary by paying special tribute to families and children all season long, and what more festive way to celebrate than with music," said Robin D. Carson, executive vice president and general manager of Sea World of Texas. "By offering a concert series, we're enhancing the park's entertainment value and strengthening our position as a world-class showplace for some of music's biggest stars."

In keeping with Sea World's child and family-themed, season-long celebration, the park also will present child-oriented shows featuring stars such as Luis and Maria of "Sesame Street." With each paid one-day adult admission, a child aged 3-11 will be admitted free of charge.

Season pass holders will benefit from the added entertainment because no additional admission will be charged for the concerts. Sea World guests may upgrade one-day tickets to season passes on the day of their visit to the park.

All Sea World concerts are included in the regular price of admission, along with more than 25 shows, exhibits and attractions. However, seating for the concerts is limited and offered on a first-come, first-served basis.

Bob Griffiths, above, of Jazz Caribe will share the fun of learning about another culture through music. The show will be presented 6:30 p.m. April 30 at MC's Beal Plaza. Mercury Records recording artist Ronna Reeves, below, performs for Celebration of the Arts street dance downtown May 2.

Bob Griffiths brings Jazz Caribe to MC concert

The exotic lure of the West Indies opens Midland's Celebration of the Arts April 30 when Bob Griffiths brings Jazz Caribe to Midland College for an outdoor free concert. "It is a musical tour of the Caribbean and more times than not it's an amusing musical tour of the Caribbean," Griffiths said. "It features songs that are from the West Indies directly or originals of my own."

A Jamaican by birth, the 33-year-old Griffiths, who holds a chemistry degree from Loma Linda University, Riverside, is the creator of Jazz Caribe. He will be coming to Midland with his musical director, percussionist Ray McNamara, a faculty member at the University of California Riverside.

As is true of many performers, Griffiths has been performing since he was a child. Although he took piano lessons when he was around five, his real interest in music began with the guitar, which he taught himself to play when he was 12-years-old. His parents moved to the United States before he started school. Throughout his years in elementary and secondary school, he sang in church and in school choirs. He also played tuba in his high school band. Yet, he never imagined he would be able to pursue music as a livelihood.

"When I first started in college, I wanted to teach high school science. Finances got tight so I took some time off out of college and worked in audio visual instructional media for about three and a half years," said Griffiths, who was first exposed to audio visual instructional media in high school.

Money became scarce and Griffiths left college before graduating. "When I left college, I applied to supervise the media department of a community college and was successful in that,"he said, referring to Riverside Community College. A degree was not required for that job. I had four subordinate

Ronna Reeves finally knocks on the right door

After putting bands together and playing nightclubs all over Texas, 23-year-old Ronna Reeves finally knocked on the right door at the right time. While the possibility of a record contract appeared on the horizon, disaster nearly hit. "I had made the rounds to each record label at least once or twice a year taking them new material," said the West Texas native.

At Mercury Records they told her they liked her material but they weren't taking on any new clients at that moment. But a month later, Mercury executive Paul Lucks called Miss Reeves' management and requested additional copies of the demo tape. Less than 10 days later, Mercury called again requesting a performance schedule so Lucks and producer Harold Shedd could see her perform. At the time, she was in the middle of a series of club dates. They chose to fly to Albuquerque, N.M., to see her show.

"It was as quick as that. We were just really excited. That never had happened before . Usually, we were having to twist people's arms to come see us. This was all on their own." However, two days before the date, Miss Reeves' lead guitar player quit. The dream she had worked hard to achieve for so long seemed again be slipping away. She panicked.

"I called my management and said, 'No. We cannot do this. You're going to have to cancel this. I cannot find another player. They'll never sign me, if the band is horrible.' ' Her management, Ron and Joy Cotton with C&M Productions, had been backing Miss Reeves since she was a teenager. They told her what she didn't want to hear — she had to perform.

"It was probably the worst showcase you could possibly imagine as far as band wise. The band sounded really horrible. I just smiled and tried to sing as good as I possibly could, and the whole time I was thinking, 'They're not going to sign me. No way,'" she said recalling how bad her big break was.

But she was wrong. "After the show, Harold Shedd, my producer now, came up to me and said, 'Anybody that could get through a showcase with a band that horrible and do as well as you did deserves a record deal.'"

Although Miss Reeves was signed by Mercury Records almost immediately following her showcase, it's taken two years to get a song on the charts and an album to the public that she feel will be commercially successful.

"I feel like this album that I have out now is the best effort that I've ever put into something. I have a record label that is very much behind me, and it seems to be going real well. I'm just real excited."

In addition to her album, "The More I Learn," Miss Reeves, daughter of Carol and Ronnie Reeves of Odessa, has been nominated by the Academy of Country Music for the New Female Vocalist of the Year award. The awards will be held in Los Angeles April 29, just days before she will appear in Midland at the downtown outdoor dance held the Saturday night of Celebration of the Arts.

"I'm up against Trisha Yearwood and Paulette Carlson. It's very unlikely that I would win this award, but it's just kind of cool to be in the running with them. Both of them are very established and here I am, I've been working really hard to get established but as far as having as much commercial success as either one of them have had, I haven't."

Miss Reeves points out that overnight success stories usually mean "they've been working for about 10 years trying to make this happen. And it can take longer."

Her lack of commercial success to date is not due to a lack of effort. "I've been working professionally, singing professionally, making a living since I was 13 with a band. I'm 25 now. I think a lot of people don't realize what exactly goes into getting established. For me that meant getting out on the road at a very young age, putting a band together, working six days a week, five hours a night in night clubs, traveling all over everywhere, and going up to Nashville at least two times a year recording and knocking on doors and getting rejected, but just trying to stay as persistent as possible to make this dream come true that I've been trying to make come true for a long time. And I just happened to knock on the right door, finally."

She could not have taken the

years of expenses alone "It's very expensive. If I had been on my own, I never would have been able to do it. You have to record demo tapes, the trips back and forth to Nashville. There's no way. There's no possible way that I could have done it without my management. I owe them a lot."

Miss Reeves, who has opened for George Straight, The Judds, Ronnie Milsap and Reba McEntire, is a native of Big Spring. When she was around 12, her family moved to San Angelo. Then, they moved to Odessa. Miss Reeves is a graduate of Permian High School.

She can't recall a time when she wasn't interested in performing. "I remember singing with the jump rope as a microphone. Every time my family would have friends over, me and my brother had to put on a show for them. And I would do all the entertaining and my brother would be more the technical side. He'd be like holding the flashlight and putting the record back on," Miss Reeves said.

Although they are years from from their pre-teen days, Miss Reeves and brother Ronnie, now 30-years-old, still work together. He is her road manager. "We are both single and roommates here in Nashville. We're probably about the only brother and sister that could actually live together and get along. We have about the same living habits. We have a really good working relationship. We do have our brother and sister fights every once in a while."

Miss Reeves has had no doubts in her mind since she was 16 that music is what she wants to do with her life. At that time, she lived in Nashville for a year. "I learned about the business. I saw the reality of it, that I wasn't going to just be a star. I had a lot of work to do, but it was almost addicting to me. Every time I would go do a show, play in front of an audience and see people enjoy seeing me sing, catch the smiles that people gave me, just the whole feeling was almost addictive. It was almost like a drug to me. It was a natural high that I felt like I wanted the rest of my life."

Miss Reeves feels timing plays a major role in success in the music business. "I came to Nashville when I was 16 and knocked on plenty of doors trying to get a record deal. The timing wasn't right. I had a lot to learn. Nobody wanted to really even deal with a 16-year-old anyway. If I would have gotten a record deal then, I would have probably regretted it because I would not have been ready. I think timing is just everything. You have to be ready."

She would tell others who were interested in the music business to gain as much experience as possible and to be careful in choosing the people who help you. "You need help. You can't do it on your own, and there's so many people especially in this business that tell you they can do something for you, when they really can't. They mostly just want your money. And that's the hard part, finding the right people to work with that are going to be honest, and they are going to do a good job for you. Definitely finish school."

Her only regret is that she didn't take any college business courses. "Sometimes I wish that maybe just for my own sake that I would have attempted to at least go to a little bit of college to get a little more business sense under my belt. I think a lot of people think, 'Oh, I'm going to blow off college. I'm not going to do this because I want to just do this.' That's what I did. Luckily, I have good management that can help me understand."

Miss Reeves said the offers of help become especially persistent when an artist experiences some commercial success. "There's so many people that all of a sudden say they can do this and they can do that for you. When you start going down the ladder and you're not doing so well, those people will drop you in a second.

"The way I am, I stick with the people who brought me here. That's just the way I am. I'm very loyal with the people that I work with."

In addition to wanting to "be happy," Miss Reeves' heart's desire is to make people happy. "I think the way to do that is through my music. So many people solve problems or get away from reality by listening to music especially if they're having hard times. I just really want to make good records."

Today, with an album in the marketplace and a record label behind her, she said she feels "very fulfilled" and "so lucky to be doing what I love to do in my free time for a career."

full time staff and anywhere from half a dozen to a dozen and a half students at any particular point through my tenure there."

It was this job that opened the world of musical careers to Griffiths. "I began to do a lot more music. I never knew growing up what the different avenues were performing. I had liked it, but I didn't know you could just perform in schools or perform at cultural events. You didn't have to be a rock star to be in music, or you didn't have to be just in classical music." He returned to Loma Linda University, now called La Sierra University, and finished his science degree.

"That was the best thing for me to do. I still enjoy the sciences. I may not be able to sing forever. Something might happen tomorrow. It (teaching) is something that I would most definitely be willing to do again." For the past two years, Griffiths has been a substitute teacher in the Riverside United School District when he's not performing. His heart's desire today is, he said, "To be able to share with others. As I am learning about my own culture to share with them the culture. Unfortunately, I think the popular music doesn't always give support to the performing arts. I think the performing arts can be fun and just as interesting and worthwhile as taking the time to go see a very popular artist. I really would like to see that the arts and Caribbean music, of course, be kept active. I also am involved in contemporary Christian music as well. I hope the things I share, people are able to relate to, and I think they are."

Since Griffiths often finds himself performing Jazz Caribe in school settings, he uses computer assisted technology to provide some of the music. "The show is designed to be funny. And it's more a show than a band. Because I do programming for children in assembly type formats, it's cultural awareness. Most schools don't really have a large enough budget to bring in six or eight guys. Because I was already involved in computer assisted music it really fit in well to do that type of format for children. In fact, next year I'll be out about four or five months touring."

Griffiths, who is single, attributes his success to "a good family, good upbringing. I attribute it to the grace of the good Lord. Those are really the two main things."

In his Jazz Caribe show, Griffiths tells the audience about the history of the song he is about to sing or something about the island from where the song originated. When he performs for children in a school setting, he spends more time talking about the songs he is performing than he does when he presents his material to an out-of-school audience.

"I give them a quiz at the end," he said, referring to those who see his show in a classroom environment. "I give them a little prize if they are able to pay attention and answer the questions." For the Midland performance, he said, "I will still use some anecdotal introduction, but I won't spend time on reviewing and there's no test at the end."

However after pausing for a moment he added, "You never know. I may get to the point where I do a pop quiz or something."

Limousines bring dreams to life for Texas-born singer

By Carl Hoover
Associated Press

WACO — While pickups populate the honky tonk world that country singer B.B. Watson sings about, it's the limousines that capture his attention.

It was a limousine, Watson recalled during a phone interview, that led to his first big break in Nashville. He'd finished a Houston concert and was eyeing the rank of limousines parked outside when the occupant of one invited him in for a drink.

It turned out the occupant was a wealthy heart surgeon, Watson drawled. By the time the two had finished talking and drinking, Watson had sufficient financial backing to move to Nashville and try his luck there.

"It's a fairy tale," he admitted. "I'm still bangin' on those limos."

Then there's the time Watson was invited by RCA Records chief Joe Galante to audition live in his Nashville office. The young singer, caught without his guitar, bought one on the way and by the time he was into his second song, Galante offered him a recording contract with BNA Entertainment, an RCA subsidiary.

Born in Tyler, Watson was raised in Shreveport, La., where his mother lived, and Houston, where his father lived. His uncle Charlie Watson played bass in B.J. Thomas' band. When Watson as a boy saw Thomas sing in concert, he resolved immediately he wanted to be a singer.

Gibson set to portray western hero in picture

BURBANK, Calif. (AP) — Mel Gibson will star in a major motion picture about Bret Maverick, the smooth-talking Western hero of the hit television series of the 1950s. Warner Bros. will release the movie.

Icon Productions has obtained the rights to the character of Maverick, to be portrayed by Gibson. A supporting part will be filled by actor James Garner, who played the original TV Maverick.

Jim Jamison plays solo with determination, persistence

By Georgia Todd Temple
Staff Writer

He heard the ripping sound when it happened. He just didn't know what to do about it because his options were limited. After all, he was singing in front of at least 10,000 Survivor fans.

"I ripped my pants from the top of the back of my jeans to the bottom part of the zipper in the front," said singer Jim Jamison, formerly of the rock group Survivor.

"I was backing up everywhere I went. That was pretty funny. The band got a laugh out of it. We could barely play. Everybody was laughing so hard."

Jamison, who has left Survivor to pursue a solo career, comes to Midland April 30 for an appearance, sponsored by Foxy 100.3/KIOL at Celebration of the Arts' free outdoor family concert at Beal Plaza, Midland College campus. The 6:30 p.m. program begins with Jazz Caribe, a musical tour of the Caribbean.

Immediately following Jazz Caribe, Jamison will sing songs off his solo album on Scotti Bros. Records, "When Love Comes Down," as well as Survivor numbers.

The reason for his split with Survivor Jamison said had to do with his desire to follow his number one love.

"I love writing. That's my favorite part. When I grow up, I want to be a songwriter," said the 36-year-old singer and musician.

With Survivor, Jamison said, "I was not being involved in some of the songwriting, and some of the songwriting I was involved in, I didn't get a fair shake on. So I decided I was going to do a solo album along with the band, and the band decided I wasn't going to do a solo album."

Now that his album is out, Jamison has heard from Survivor.

"They're calling me back wanting to put the band back together again. I'm still at a loss right now. I don't know what to do about that situation."

One thing Jamison is sure of is that he will continue doing "solo albums." He also is involved in projects with other performers, such as Joe Walsh and ZZ Tops.

During his career, Jamison has had his share of disappointments and successes. He readily admits he's experienced the consequences of making poor decisions as well as the joy of getting it right. He recalls a decision he made that he calls "a big lesson."

"I signed this contract with this certain manager, and we had a deal on A & M Records when I was with a band called Target. We had a two album deal with A & M, and we did two albums.

"Our manager was a crook. The record deal fell apart for us because we were actually signed through him, and we didn't even realize that. And he made us sit out a five-year contract.

"So that was a big lesson, a big turning point in my career on the downward side and on the upward side because during that period of time I started singing jingles at William B. Tanner Co."

Jamison recalls how the opportunity to become a jingles singer came about.

"I went over there to sit with this vocal group one day, and they could all read music, and I stayed for four years. Then I sang solos just for another year and made real good money doing that."

During those five years, Jamison didn't consider a career in anything but music. Yet, he can't explain why he is in the music business in the first place.

"I wish I knew why music. I don't know. It just kind of happened. I didn't pick music as a career, I think music picked me.

"When I first started playing, I just was doing it for the fun of it, and we played anywhere and everywhere and didn't care. We never thought about getting paid.

"One time we played, I think, a horse show. We played out on this big piece of plywood — ran an extension cord out there and played. And when we got through, they took up a collection, and we got paid.

"And I said, 'Gee, we get paid for doing this?' So that kind of started the wheel rolling. I said, 'Let's play somewhere else, see if we can get paid.'

"It just sort of happened. I never really planned it as a career."

A native of Memphis, Tenn., Jamison was 15 at the time. He believes he received $5. He knows what they did with their pay.

"We all made it to the Crystal Hamburger place, split the money up and had a big dinner."

By the time he was paid for a performance, he had been singing in school choirs since junior high. Through the years, he has taught himself to play keyboards and guitar as well as other instruments.

After investing so much of his life and his energy into music, even having to sit out from recording for five years did not dissuade him from pursuing music. When his binding contract ran out and he was available to sign a record contract again, he did.

"I immediately got a deal with Epic with a band called Cobra," Jamison said. This band consisted of a "couple of guys" from Switzerland. After one album, the band broke up.

"We decided to get rid of the bass player when they went home for Christmas, and neither one of them ever came back," Jamison said.

He wasn't unemployed long.

"It worked out perfectly 'cause I was sitting around saying, 'OK. Now those guys aren't coming back so what am I going to do.'

Jim Jamison

And all of a sudden the phone rings, and it's Survivor's management."

Today, Jamison is hoping to achieve success as a solo artist. He feels that several of the songs on his solo album have the potential for single success.

"The new single is called, 'When Love Comes Down,' the title cut of the album. It's a ballad, and I think people are going to like it when they hear it. I hope so anyway.

"There are some other songs on there that I think are potential singles also. There's one called 'True Lovers,' which is a great song, and it's like an anthem. There's another song on there called, 'If You Walk Away,' that's probably one of my favorite songs on the album.

"There's another one. Let's see. What's the name of that song," Jamison said laughing. "I can't remember it."

When he quit laughing, he remembered the song — "Cry Alone." Of this song he said, "It starts out with an acoustic guitar, just really moody, I like that one a lot. It's got a lot of feeling in it."

Although Jamison cuts up frequently in an interview, underneath his laughter and lighthearted approach lies determination. If a talented young person asked him how to succeed he would say: "Go back to school.

"Naw. I would say, if he loved what he was doing and he believed in what he was doing, to go for it, go jump in with both feet.

"You've got to do what you have to do to make a living on the side sometimes, if you're not making enough money playing.

"Write songs, and write as many songs as much as you can all the time 'cause song writings a craft. It's something you learn. You're not born with it unless you just get really lucky on your first song you ever write.

"Be persistent, and don't be afraid to call people up out of the blue like record companies and stuff. When I was starting out, I was always afraid of what the record people were going to say to me, or if they were even going to take my phone calls.

"You've got to knock on as many doors and call as many people as you can. Mail tapes until people get tired of seeing those tapes coming in, and they starting listening to them."

ENTERTAINMENT IN BRIEF

■ Theatre hosts show

ODESSA — The Globe Theatre presents Shakespeare's "Twelth Night" 8 p.m. April 23 through 25.

The production is directed by Dr. Shawn Watson, professor of literature at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin. Watson, who is from Midland, directed the Globe presentation of 'A Winter's Tale" last fall.

The cast and crew of 18 consists of thespians from Midland and Odessa. A reception will be given following the April 25 performance. The reception will be held in the Anne Hathaway Cottage in the Globe courtyard.

Tickets, priced at $8 for adults, $6 for students and senior citizens and $5 for groups of 15 or more, may be purchased by calling the Globe, 1-332-1586. UTPB and Odessa College students are free with their student identification.

■ Music winners named

A total of 95 students entered the Junior Music Clubs' festival held recently at First Baptist Church.

Of those participating, 70 received superior ratings. Special certificates were issued to those students receiving superior ratings for three or more successive years.

Those receiving certificates were Melissa Bianchi, Kristen Loftis, Megan Kuenstler, Tina Wu, Jennifer Silverman, Missy Williams and Daniel Russett, three years; Melanie Mims, Misti Ray, Trena Ivy, Christy Schoolcraft, Justina Thiang, Christen Harshbarger, Tiffany Terrett, Dixie Brown, Charlie Renaud and Jessica Harvey, fourth year; Emily Conine and Jackie Chou, fifth year; Allison Mims, sixth year; Cathleen Wright, Reid Merritt and Christopher Wood, seventh year; and Andy Bianchi, ninth year.

Judges were Kathryn Beam, Ruth Ardis and Ronald Bennett, all of Odessa.

Participating clubs and their teachers include Alla Capricco, LouNelle George; Kinder Keyboard, Marh Frances Griffiths; Harmony, Marian Ailes; Chopin, Elizabeth Roweck; and Rhapsody, Richelle Gengler.

The Junior Music Clubs are members of the Texas Federation of Music Clubs. Chairman of the annual festival was Elizabeth Roweck.

■ Jazz Party slated

The 26th annual Odessa Jazz Party is set for May 19 through 24 at the Odessa Hilton.

Performers for this year's event include Carroll Dashiell, Bob Haggart and Jack Lesberg, bass; Dick Johnson and Ken Peplowski, clarinet; Joe Ascione, Jake Hanna and Jackie Williams, drums; Herb Ellis, guitar; John Bunch, Ralph Sutton and Johnny Varro, piano; Jim Galloway and Flip Phillips, saxophone; Dan Barrett and George Masso, trombone; Ed Polcer and Randy Sandke, trumpet; and Peter Appleyard, vibes.

For more information or to make reservations call Ernie Schur or Glenda Young, 1-332-7871. Last year's event was sold out.

■ Scholarship event set

The West Texas Jazz Society presents "Jazz Scholarship Sunday" beginning at 2 p.m. April 26 at Bayou Wadley, Plaza Shopping Center, Garfield at Wadley.

Young musicians are encouraged by the West Texas Jazz Society to compete for summer scholarships at this event.

Jazz society members and participating musicians are admitted free. Admission to non-members is $5 per person.

For more information call 682-2988 or 1-337-5507.

■ Family concert slated

The Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale presents a family concert at 10 a.m. April 25 at Lee High School Auditorium.

The program is called "The Blowing Winds," and is part of the complete program developed for Odessa's Child's Play "The Arts Blowing in the Wind."

The first section is called "Wind and the Instruments" and features the wind instruments — piccolo, flute, tuba, clarinet and horn. Soloists will be Martha Davis, piccolo; Alan Harvey, tuba; Kerry Walker, flute; Adan Norris, horn; and Sharon Hickox, percussion.

The second section of the program is called "Orchestral Storm Scenes" and includes Beethoven's Symphony No. 6, "Pastorale," Grofe's "Grand Canyon Suite" and Rossini's "William Tell Overture." The final section of the program is called "Wind and the Seasons" and features "Winter" from Vivaldi's "Four Seasons," "Autumn Leaves" and "Oklahoma."

For more information about the concert, which is sponsored by the Reporter-Telegram, call the symphony office, 563-0921.

■ Singers to perform

The Midland College Jazz singers will perform at 8 p.m. April 27 at Trinity Presbyterian Church during the free Midland College Chorale and Chamber Singers Concert.

The groups won first place in their division at the Florida Music Fantasy Competition held the first week in April in Orlando, Fla.

Nine MC students performed with the jazz singers in Florida. They were James Archie and Tony White, bass; Abel Rodriquez and Chris Reyes, tenor; Irma Morales, Patricia Wade and Patty Bullard, alto; and Maria Kinkade and Stephanie Swafford, soprano.

The public is invited to attend the Midland performance.

■ Club hosts art exhibit

The April exhibit at the Midland Woman's Club consists of a variety of paintings by members of the Midland Palette Club.

Exhibiting artists include Doris Brumble, Dorothy Blair, Marie Bond, Carolyn Drake, Ethel DesJardins, Margaret Earhart, Virginia Bynum, Nettie Garrett, Fay Grisett, Gene Howe, Madors Halcom, Dorothy Jobe, LuluBelle Klinger, Alyne Kelly, Audrey Larson, Mary Peterson, Eleanor Robertson, Linda Rupard, Wanda Steen, Bea Swails, Dora Wohlfeld, Edna Walger, Doris Welch, Gladys Davis and Jane McCarver.

The exhibit may be viewed from 9:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday through Friday at the Midland's Woman's Club, Hogan Park.

Opera in the Park to feature Mozart

Midland Opera Theater's "Opera in the Park" opens its doors 5:30 p.m. April 26 at Midland Center, Wall Avenue at Main Street.

The program, which features Mozart's "The Impresario," will be presented by the Texas Tech University Opera Department, beginning at 7 p.m. The opera will be sung in English.

"The Impresario" was written for a "revel" given by Emperor Joseph II of Austria on Feb. 7, 1786, in the Castle Schonbrunn. The librettist was Gottlieb Stephanie the Younger, with whom Mozart had collaborated four years earlier on "The Abduction from the Seraglio."

The plot revolves around a theater director's efforts to cajole two famous prima donnas into appearing together in a new opera.

Cocktails will be served at 5:30 p.m. Dinner is at 6 p.m. Free tap beer is available as is a cash bar. Admission is $15.

A season ticket, priced at $30 for adults and $28 for senior citizens and students, may be purchased at the annual event.

Included in the upcoming season will be a performance of "La Boheme" presented by Western Opera Theater, the touring company of the San Francisco Opera Center at 8 p.m. Oct. 14 at Midland High School; and a concert presented by New York City Opera Quartet at 8 p.m. Nov. 12 at Midland College. Puccini's "La Boheme" will be sung in English.

Texas Tech University's production of Mozart's "The Impresario" will be presented at Midland Opera Theatre's Opera in the Park April 26.

"Opera in the Park" is co-sponsored by the Reporter-Telegram and the Arts Assembly of Midland. For more information or to make reservations call 684-4101.

Paramount Pictures, Miramax Films signs multi-year agreement

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Paramount Pictures and Miramax Films have signed a multi-year agreement under which Paramount will distribute a number of Miramax movies to home video, cable and broadcast markets.

The arrangement, among the most innovative in the entertainment industry, will link Paramount, a worldwide leader in the production and distribution of film, video and television product, with Miramax, one of the most successful and respected independent film companies.

The deal creates a long-term relationship between the two companies that also envisions theatrical distribution by Paramount of some Miramax films.

The agreement initially encompasses distribution by Paramount of 17 Miramax titles to the home video market and 18 Miramax titles to cable and broadcast markets. These include: "High Heels" by Pedro Almodovar, "The Double Life of Veronique" and the new hit "Hear My Song." Also included are the upcoming Miramax releases "Spotswood" with Anthony Hopkins and "Enchanted April."

YOUR HOROSCOPE

SUNDAY, APRIL 19, 1992

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: A financial windfall could come your way this summer. Be frugal until then. Falling madly in love is a real possibility in September. You will be eager to form new business alliances in November. Taking advantage of family connections could lead to large monetary gains next winter. Do not be shy about using your contacts. Influential friends can play a key role in advancing your career. In early spring of 1993, your talents will attract the attention of those who know a lot about public relations. Heed their advice.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actor Dudley Moore, football coach Jack Pardee, actor Hugh O'Brian, actress Jayne Mansfield.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Your plans for today could change at the last minute. Be flexible and everything will turn out fine. Catch up on your correspondence. Others are eager to hear what you are doing.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A day when your charm is spellbinding. Good buys await you on household items. A fresh environment promises delightful news or discoveries. Tenderness gets a romantic relationship back on track.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): House-hunting and family discussions go exceptionally well. Visitors from afar could bring you good luck. Your world is expanding — let go of doubt and grow.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Sunday services take on deeper meaning for many today. Renewed hope makes a family celebration especially memorable. Small tots will delight in an egg roll or Easter basket.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Focus your attention on friends and family today. They need your encouragement. A holiday mood could tempt you to relax certain rules. Think again! Be careful not to overindulge in food or drink.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A special locale or enlightening spiritual experience helps make this Easter truly delightful. Kind words and deeds will help heal a rift. An older person needs your understanding.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A sermon really hits home. Attending a swanky social event could introduce you to someone who can help open important doors for you. Avoid coming on too strong.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A family celebration deserves top priority today. Be sociable. Large gatherings hold more appeal than smaller ones. Plan a trek to your favorite nature sanctuary.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Liberate yourself from self-imposed restrictions on this happy day. Attending church or a community meeting with your loved ones creates close rapport. Share the cooking chores.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Rash actions could turn the home fires into a bonfire; cool down. Your options remain wide open at this time. Choose wisely and you could get an exciting travel opportunity.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): It is time to make an important decision. Consult those who are directly involved before making up your mind. Show your children the same consideration you show adults.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Curb a tendency to be stubborn. Tolerance helps you keep peace at a family gathering. Older relatives may be in a nostalgic mood. Small children love their anecdotes.

When defending, don't tell partner where your high cards are when the course of the play is obvious. Your enemy, the declarer, also is tuned in to your wavelength and could use that information against you.

Four hearts was reached in quick time despite the intervention. West dutifully led a spade and East cashed three spade tricks. On the second trick West discarded the ten of diamonds, then followed with the deuce.

An obedient East shifted to a diamond. However, declarer was a far from disinterested spectator to these proceedings. After deciding West was an honest and upright citizen, South elected to spurn the diamond finesse in favor of a minor-suit squeeze. Declarer shot up with the ace of diamonds and ran all the trumps. With one round still to come, dummy was down to one diamond and four clubs, and West held the king of diamonds and four clubs. On the last trump, West, who had to keep four clubs to guard against dummy's suit, was forced to sluff the king of diamonds. That promoted declarer's queen of diamonds to the fulfilling trick.

East could do nothing other than shift to diamonds at trick four, so there was no reason for West to broadcast the news about the location of the diamond king. Given no help, declarer is virtually on a straight guess whether to try the squeeze or the finesse. With nothing else to go by, we think declarer would have been swayed by the overcall to finesse.

Harvey launches cartoon search

NEW YORK (AP) — Baby Huey, Casper — where are you???

Harvey Comics Entertaiment has launched a nationwide search for missing animation cel originals from 1940s and '50s cartoons. Because this artform has become so important today, Harvey is interested in assembling an exhibit.

"We're confident that there's a veritable treasure trove out there of original artwork containing the images of such classic characters as Casper the Friendly Ghost, Li'l Audrey, Baby Huey, Buzzy the Crow and Herman and Katnip. They're not only an important piece of Americana, they're fondly remembered by millions of Americans as images of innocence and childhood," says Barry Blumberg, a Harvey senior vice president.
